Council may make another run at Cuthbert

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

The issue of which way to send traffic on Cuthbert Avenue between Ward and Garfield Streets once again may plague the Midland City Council when the item comes up for a vote Tuesday.

Persons interested in seeing the outcome have been advised to show up in City Hall Council Chambers after 4 p.m. when the two-part item should be taken up for consideration. Residents along that street have been planning their strategy for almost two weeks.

The first half of the proposed change reads that the council will consider an ordinance repealing one-way traffic on Cuthbert and prohibiting left turns from Cuthbert onto Garfield. The second part reads that the council will consider an ordinance establishing four-way stop signs on Cuthbert at Lanham and on Storey Avenue at Lanham Street.

Traffic on that section of Cuthbert street is routed one-way westbound. The change from two-way traffic was made in November 1979 by the council after residents along that segment of the street complained of high traffic volumes, speeding vehicles and cars crashing into houses and parked vehicles.

At the Sept. 26 meeting, the council decided to change the traffic flow, although residents requested that the street be left alone. First, the council voted to switch it to one-way eastbound. Later in the meeting, the council decided to re-instate a two-way traffic pattern, and instructed the city staff to draw up the necessary ordinances to accomplish this. It is those ordinances which the council will vote on Tuesday.

The ordinance also requires a stop sign on Cuthbert at Lanham and prohibits motorists from turning left off Cuthbert onto Garfield.

Mrs. Donald Smith of 2312 W. Cuthbert Ave. said she and other residents drew up some petitions that requested the street be left one-way westbound and these will be presented to the council on Tuesday.

"We have 16 or 20 copies of the petitions, and I have 50 names on my petition," she said, adding that signatures were coming from people in the area. "I know other (Cuthbert Street residents) have more names. And we are going to try and pack the Council Chambers."

She added that another resident had talked to some business people at Western Park Plaza and was told they support keeping Cuthbert the way it is.

If the council approves the ordinance for two-way traffic, it will become effective Nov. 1.

"The issue is not just Cuthbert; the issue also is that people drive by habit rather than by sign," said Mrs. Smith. "To retrain the public is a major expense and dangerous."

In looking back at the vote by the council two weeks ago, Mrs. Smith added, "It's almost an outrage that our needs were not remembered." And what the residents are objecting to is "the City Council making a decision without considering us. They never made a positive motion in our favor."

Mrs. Smith pointed out that she appreciates "city council members; they have a long, boring and rather thankless job. But I don't appreciate this."

West German waves

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.

NEW YORK — With all the din reverberating around the world from the massacres inside Beirut Palestinian refugee camps, a key event lost out to becoming a major occurrence: West Germany unseated feisty Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and replaced him with towering Helmut Kohl, his conservative Christian Democratic adversary. But it was more than a change of parties from 13 years of Social Democratic government to majority Christian Democrat. Defection of the small "Free Democrats" from Schmidt's coalition to new Chancellor Kohl made the deal possible and national elections may be held next spring.

From that point on, it's a political minefield. In the past, the two major parties have run the show. On occasion,

A sad Sabbath

Receiving emergency medical aid at a Rome hospital is 4-year-old Marco Tache, seriously injured as terrorists Saturday tossed grenades into the Synagogue of Rome. His 2-year-old brother, Stefano, died soon after the attack.

Syrian Embassy, Rome synagogue attacked

ROME (AP) — Five elegantly dressed men hurled grenades into a crowd of Jews leaving holiday celebrations at Rome's main synagogue Saturday, killing a 2-year-old boy and wounding 34 people before escaping in a hail of submachine gunfire, police and witnesses said.

Enraged Jews, some in blood-stained prayer shawls, gathered outside the domed, yellowish stone Central Synagogue after the attack, some screaming abuse at Pope John Paul II for meeting last month with PLO chief Yasser Arafat, others wailing, sobbing and fainting when victims' names were read.

NEARLY 10 HOURS later, a bomb exploded a few blocks away outside the unoccupied Syrian Embassy, causing slight damage but no injuries, police said. There were no arrests and no claim of responsibility.

The synagogue attack was the latest in a series of anti-Semitic assaults in Europe that have left nearly 20 dead and more than 200 wounded in two years. No group claimed responsibility, but previous attacks have been claimed by the radical Palestinian group Black June and the French leftist gang Direct Action.

Although the Roman Catholic pontiff and the Palestine Liberation Organization condemned the synagogue assault, more than 1,500 angry people marched on the PLO headquarters in the Italian capital, shouting "Assassins!" and "Hangman Arafat!"

"This is an Arab terrorist attack with the blessings of the pope!" a man shouted.

POLICE EASED the crowd away from the PLO building, then scuffled with demonstrators as they tried to march on the Quirinale Palace, official residence of President Sandro Pertini. Police blocked the crowd just off the central Piazza Venezia. Protesters damaged two police cars but no arrests were reported.

The boy killed in the synagogue attack was identified as Stefano Tache. His father Joseph, his mother Daniela and his 4-year-old brother Marco were wounded. Marco was listed in serious condition with head wounds, while his parents were in satisfactory condition.

Witnesses and police gave the following description of what happened:

FIVE ELEGANTLY DRESSED, swarthy young men, who appeared to be of Middle Eastern origin, walked calmly up to the back entrance of the 108-year-old, two-story synagogue in the ancient ghetto where Jews were once forced to live by medieval popes.

Initial reports said the terrorists overpowered a police officer standing guard outside the synagogue, but officials later said no police were protecting the building.

Inside, about 300 people, mostly teenagers, were attending the Shimat Torah, a celebration of the yearly cycle of the reading of the Torah, the Jewish holy scriptures. They were also witnessing a bar mitzvah, the Jewish celebration of a boy's 13th birthday and religious maturity.

When the celebrants emerged, the terrorists hurled four hand grenades and fired at least 30 shots from submachine guns to cover their escape, police said. The grenades bounced off the steps and exploded in the street.

POLICE SAID the wounded were all hit by grenade fragments. At least four people were hospitalized in serious condition.

"I was leaving with the others when it happened," said Dr. Marco Zarzati. "We took refuge inside. The explosions and shooting lasted at least two minutes. When it was quiet, I went outside. The sight was terrible."

Antoninesca Giovanoni, a porter at an apartment building across from the synagogue, said she opened her door and saw "two women, one man and a months-old baby bleeding ...screaming for help.

"They stayed here for about 10 minutes before an ambulance came," she said, showing her blood-stained apartment.

The terrorists apparently fled on foot and then escaped in a red Volkswagen and a white Austin, police said.

More than 300 bereaved Jews, sobbing and waving bloody clothing, gathered after the attack inside the iron fence surrounding the synagogue overlooking the Tiber River.

The crowd screamed at journalists and accused them of anti-Semitism. Two television crews were harassed and a reporter for the Communist Party daily L'Unita was forced to flee from angry Jews pushing him and screaming, "You all (journalists) should be happy now."

"This is the product of the anti-Semitic campaign in the press and it speaks for itself," said worshiper Leo Terracina.

CETA's 'resurrection' could last into 1983

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Funeral services for the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act, a massive job training and employment program inaugurated in 1973 by the Nixon administration, were to be held at midnight on Sept. 30.

In theory, funding for the CETA program expired along with the federal goverment's fiscal year. But in practice, according to CETA officials, flowers and eulogies won't be necessary.

Willie Taylor, director of employment and training programs for the Permian Basin Regional CETA Consortium, explained that CETA programs will continue to function with "carryover" funds and additional money expected from Congress in the form of a continuing resolution, a budgetary patch often used to keep the wheels of government inflated.

"Even though the law is officially dead," said Taylor, "it's not like we can just clean sweep everything. You just can't do that."

Instead, Taylor said CETA programs will likely continue operating into 1983. He said President Reagan is expected to sign the Job Training Partnership Act, a replacement program which embodies the president's "New Federalism" philosophy that will commence Oct. 1, 1983.

THE NEW LEGISLATION would provide federal block grants for job training, but administration of the program would largely shift away from Washington, D.C., and toward state governments.

Reagan entered office determined to whittle the federal bureaucracy and thrust more responsibility onto the states. In the case of CETA, Taylor said Reagan has delivered on his promises.

Taylor said CETA funding has dwindled from $11 billion to $2.8 billion since Reagan assumed office.

Loron Bolen, associate regional administrator in Dallas for a five-state CETA region, said a large chunk of CETA funds were lost when the public service job portion of the program was allowed to die on Sept. 30, 1981. Locally, summer youth programs also were curtailed for lack of funds.

But Bolen said despite funding cuts, the Reagan administration has properly continued to emphasize training while de-emphasizing subsidized work

Judges rule on view from office windows

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — It didn't take the wisdom of a King Solomon, but a dispute over office space in the Travis County Courthouse put to an early test the decision-making abilities of two new state district judges.

They had to decide which one got the office with the view of the state Capitol with its tree-lined streets and monuments, and which one got the less desirable office overlooking the county jail.

They could not use seniority to decide, as is the tradition in such matters, because they both assumed office the same day, Sept. 1.

"I suggested we flip a coin," said District Judge Bob Perkins. "That would have been the fairest way."

But District Judge Jon Wisser disagreed, saying he should get the Capitol view because he was a county judge longer than Perkins and was sworn in as a district judge first, five minutes ahead of Perkins.

"The whole thing is childish," said Wisser. "It reminds me of two kids fighting over a toy. I hate even to discuss it."

The dispute appeared headed to county commissioners court, where County Judge Mike Renfro said he wanted no part of it. "They are judges. I would hope they can make a decision," he said.

Finally, Perkins agreed this week to take the county jail view with the privilige of moving into a more desirable office as soon as a vacancy occurs.

TWC OKs water application

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Water Commission has approved an application by Michael O'Connor and Caroline R. Moore to use 11 acre-feet of water annually from the Rio Grande in Presidio County.

The TWC reports the use is authorized under a certificate on a 3.428-acre tract acquired from Mexico by treaty signed Nov. 23, 1970.

The tract is west of the Francisco U. de Leaton Survey No. 75, A-2486. one-half mile southwest of Presidio.

Houston paper says extortionists threatened to blow up two plants

HOUSTON (AP) — Extortionists who closed Gulf Oil Chemical Co.'s largest plant with a bomb threat two weeks ago also threatened to blow up a second Gulf facility, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday.

The newspaper quoted from a letter sent to the company's president, William Roher, but did not say how it obtained the communication. The other Gulf plant was not identified.

Gulf began shutting down its Cedar Bayou plant Sept. 28 after receiving a series of threats to blow up the facility unless the company paid $15 million ransom. Four suspects are being held on $1 million bond in Durango, Colo., and Phoenix in connection with the threats.

Five bombs were found and one exploded harmlessly while being disarmed, FBI officials said.

"Attention. The Gulf Cedar Bayou plant and one other Gulf facility have been sabotaged," the six-page letter began, according to the Chronicle.

The newspaper's summary of the letter said the extortionists demanded $15 million as the "purchase price" of the plant. They warned that if the money were not paid, the facility would explode and it would cost the company $30 million to save the other plant, the newspaper said.

Gulf Chemical Co. has 15 such plants.

"Gentlemen, the clock is ticking," the letter concluded.

Employees began returning to the Cedar Bayou plant, located about 30 miles east of Houston, Oct. 6.

John M. McBride, 46, and Timothy K. Justice, 30, are being held in Durango, Colo. Jailed in Phoenix are Durango residents Theodore Duane McKinney, 45, and Michael Allen Worth, 34. McBride's common-law wife, Jill Renee Bird, 36, was arrested in Durango, then released.

A U.S. magistrate said Friday that the four will stand trial in Texas. FBI agents arrested Worth and McKinney as they allegedly phoned instructions to Gulf about how to deliver the ransom money.

Ms. Bird was released and charges against her were dropped last week when McBride agreed to lead authorities to more explosives. Five bombs were found in a mine shaft near Silverton, Colo., leased in McKinney's name.

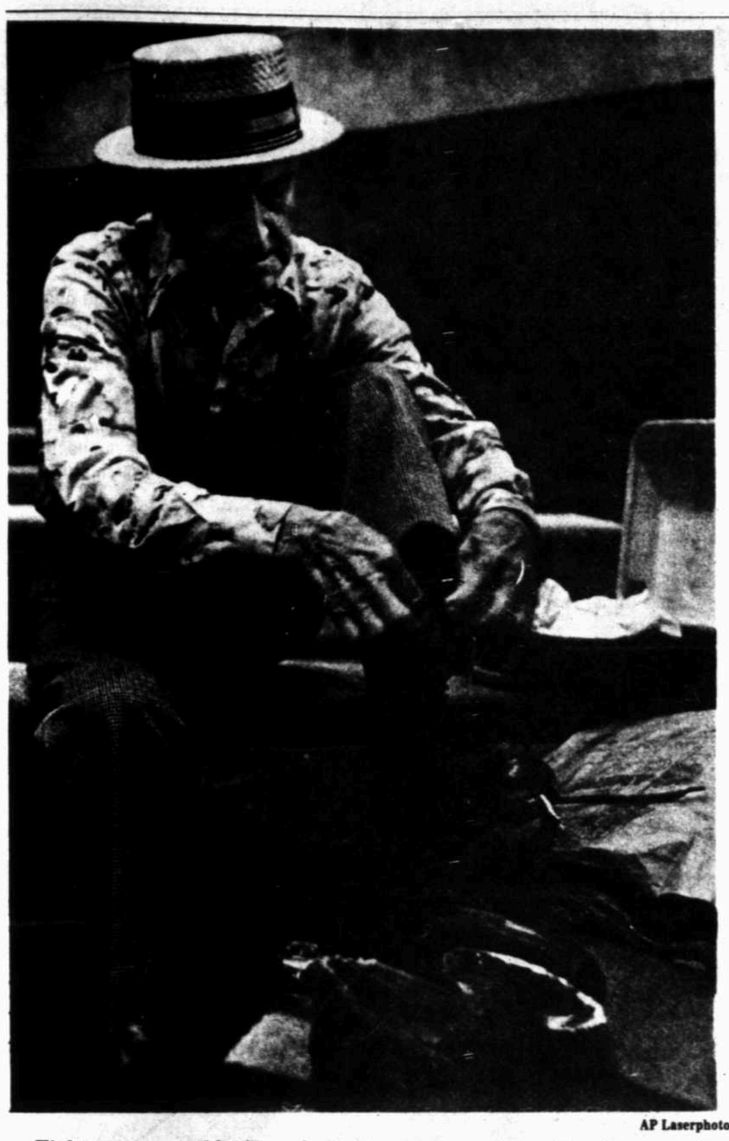
'Shanghai Jimmy' glides through life



AP Laserphoto

Eighty-one-year-old "Shanghai" Jimmy James laces his skates, as he prepares to head for the ice in a Dallas skating rink. Jimmy comes to the downtown rink most days around noon for pleasure and exercies, offering skating tips, and his views on life, to anyone who asks.

By CAM ROSSIE

DALLAS (AP) — Lunchtime shoppers and hungry office workers who crowd the eateries and stores surrounding the Plaza of the Americas' indoor ice-skating rink often marvel at the frail gentleman in the weathered straw hat gliding across the ice.

Those who get close enough to the ice can hear some younger women shout "Jimmy's here!" or "There's our teacher!"

"She feels like 19," quips the savvy 81-year-old.

Jimmy comes to the ice most days around noon for pleasure and exercise, offering skating tips — and his views on life — to anyone who asks.

"To be so strong that nothing can disturb your peace of mind," is his motto.

A former war prisoner with a riches-to-rags past, "Shanghai Jimmy James" has encountered plenty to disturb him.

YET, HE SAYS, "I have no such a thing as animosity."

The man who brought "chili rice" to Dallas, Shanghai Jimmy was once the wealthy owner of the exotic Mandarin Club restaurant in Shanghai, China. He acquired his nickname from an American journalist after his 28-year residency in the Orient.

Jimmy was in his hometown of Jackson, Minn., celebrating his parents' golden wedding anniversary, when his fortune, worth perhaps half a million dollars, suddenly was swept away.

"I left Shanghai in October 1948 with just one suitcase," says Jimmy. "When I got ready to go back in January, the communists had taken over China and everything I owned."

Had it not been for the communists, Dallas may never have been introduced to Jimmy's chili rice, his own concoction of Texas chili over rice.

AFTER HIS ARMY discharge in 1922, Jimmy planned to finish his global tour by working his way home on a ship.

"I intended to go to Shanghai and get a job on an American boat and go west some more to complete the trip around the world," he says.

When he discovered the American steamship companies hired only Chinese crews, Jimmy drifted awhile — working as a jailer in Shanghai and with an engineering firm assigned the task of rechanneling the Yellow River.

Although as a boy he had worked mopping floors in a restaurant, Jimmy says, "I had no inkling I would ever be in the food business some day."

But the opportunity arose and Jimmy snatched it. Over the next 28 years he would marry a Canadian woman and raise two daughters while his restaurant interests would grow from a sandwich stand in Chefoo, North China, to diners known as "Jimmy's Kitchen" to the posh Shanghai Mandarin Club, which he decorated with Oriental rugs woven with real gold threads, fine wood furniture and ornate ivory and jade carvings typical of an upper-crust Chinese home.

DURING THOSE YEARS, he also tried his luck at operating an amusement park, dancing school and radio station. Those later folded, as did his marriage.

By 1930, Jimmy had made enough money to take a nine-month cruise around the world. But instead of sailing home to the United States, Jimmy returned to Shanghai.

Galveston high school bus crash kills two

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Seven members of a high school pep squad remained hospitalized Saturday, injured in a wreck that killed two people and sent a school bus crashing through a bridge barrier and falling onto highway traffic lanes 20 feet below.

Michelle Johnson, 14, was admitted to John Sealy Hospital in serious condition Saturday morning, spokesman Irvin Power said. He would not discuss the nature of her injuries.

The school bus, carrying pep squad members and football fans back from Galveston Ball's game with Clear Creek, was crossing a causeway bridge about 11 p.m. when a car weaving through heavy traffic slammed into the side of the bus, witnesses said.

Pep squad member Josephine Temple, 14, died at the scene from head injuries, said Craig Hall, assistant to the Galveston County medical examiner.

Three hours later the car, containing the body of 25-year-old Elvis Montemayor of Galveston, was pulled from the murky waters of Galveston Bay by a mobile crane, Coast Guard Petty Officer Matthew Walter said.

"There wasn't much left of it. The impact really flattened it. I'd bet it was only about 1½ feet thick," he said.

Hall said Montemayor died in the accident.

Wayne Blevins, superintendent of Galveston schools, was called to the scene. He said the car apparently went under the bus, shearing off its roof, then fell into the water. The southbound bus plunged to the northbound lanes about 20 feet below, police said.

Officials said Montemayor's car carried no passengers.

DPS spokesman David Wells said 40 people were taken to nearby hospitals.

Galveston Police Capt. Leon Lewis, who suffered broken teeth and minor injuries in the crash, said the wreck took him and the bus driver by surprise.

"The next thing I know, someone swerves into the side of the bus on the driver's side. She (bus driver Marlene Canton) lost control. We hit the rail and started lunging down," Lewis told the Galveston Daily News.

The bus rammed through the concrete-and-steel barrier, vaulted about three feet over water and then dropped 20 feet onto the northbound lanes.

"The kids were pretty calm, about as calm as you can expect from young people," said Lewis, who was treated and released.

The bus was part of a 10-vehicle caravan.

Power said the hospital had first mistakenly reported Miss Johnson in fair condition. He said she was the only one of four patients transferred from Galveston County Memorial Hospital early Saturday who was actually admitted at John Sealy, contrary to reports that all four were hospitalized.

Faculty told to abstain

DALLAS (AP) — Faculty members at Southern Methodist University have been ordered to do their drinking out of students' view.

SMU President L. Donald Shields said students see professors as "role models" and the teachers should not set a bad example by drinking at university functions.

Shields, 46, said students are not allowed to drink on campus except in their dormitory rooms or in fraternity houses, while professors are allowed to consume alcohol in several campus buildings that are open to students. He said a year-long study found that policy inconsistent.

Faculty members may still purchase alcoholic beverages at the Faculty Club, an on-campus restaurant restricted to professors and administrators.

"If the faculty wants to have a social drink, they can walk two blocks to the Faculty Club, where students won't be milling around the halls to see them," Shields said Friday.

The policy is a reflection of his personal habits, Shields said, and was not influenced by the school's affiliation with the Methodist Church.

Several deans said banning alcohol at school functions won't hamper cultural activities.

"People don't come to art openings for the wine and cheese, but for the paintings," said Eugene Bonelli, dean of the SMU art school.

Joe Dooley, student body president, said he agreed with Shields that the new policy will encourage faculty members to set a good example for students.

The National Weather Service forecasts rain from Colorado to Wyoming to the Great Lakes, from Louisiana to Ohio, Michigan and Indiana.

Cool weather expected to continue

The initial cold snap of autumn sent Midlanders scurrying for long sleeves Friday night and early Saturday, as the temperature plummeted to 42 degrees.

The mark was still six degrees off the record low for the date, however.

Continued cool temperatures will reign throughout the weekend and on Monday, with afternoon highs in the mid-70s and overnight lows in the low 40s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Winds should be north to northwest at 5 to 15 miles per hour today.

The high Saturday of 74 was well below the record 92 set in 1965.

No precipitation was recorded in the 24-hour period ending at 11 p.m. Saturday, leaving the monthly total at 0.80 inch and the yearly at 12.62 inches.

Accident victim in critical condition

Jo Nell Corder of 2611 Hughes St. was listed in critical condition in Odessa Medical Center late Friday after being involved in a two-car traffic accident Thursday.

She sustained head injuries when the car in which she was a passenger was in collision with one driven by Bryant Mook of 4911 Concho Drive.

Mook sustained minor injuries as did the driver of the Corder vehicle, 54-year-old Kenneth Corder of 2611 Hughes. Corder was southbound on Midland Drive and attempting a left turn onto Wadley Avenue when his car collided with the Mook vehicle, northbound on Midland Drive.

DEATHS

Louise P. Sawyer

BROWNSVILLE — Services for Louise P. Sawyer, 85, of Brownsville, mother of Mrs. George E. Ulvestad Jr. of Midland, will be at 2 p.m. Monday in the Church of the Advent, Episcopal, with the Rev. J. Rufus Stewart officiating. Burial will be in Buena Vista Burial Park, directed by Darling-Mouser Funeral Home of Brownsville.

Mrs. Sawyer died Thursday in a Brownsville hospital following an illness.

She was born in Brownsville on Oct. 1, 1897. She lived in Tulsa, Okla., from 1934 to 1957 and returned to Brownsville upon retirement. She was a member of the Church of the Advent, Episcopal, and of the church's Altar Guild.

Her husband, Gregg Sawyer, died in 1960. A daughter, Frances Sawyer Conry, died in 1975.

Others survivors include a sister, eight grandchildren, eight great-grandchildren and a nephew.

Memorials may be sent to the Church of the Advent Memorial Fund or to the Brownsville Society for Crippled Children.

Jayne Green

Jayne Green, 57, of 308 Tanglewood, died Saturday in a Midland hospital.

Services will be at 10 a.m. Tuesday in Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Lennol Hester of the First Methodist Church of Stanton officiating. Burial will be in Fairview Cemetery.

Mrs. Green was born Aug. 5, 1925, in Brookfield, Mo. When she was 12, the family moved to the Los Angeles, Calif., area where she lived until 1953 when she moved to Midland with her husband, Grover B. "Mutt" Green. The couple had been married in 1945 at Las Vegas, Nev. Green died in 1981.

Mrs. Green worked for several oil companies before going to work for Shell Oil Co., from which she had retired.

Survivors include two sons, John Edwin Green and David Anderson Green, both of Midland; a daughter, Patricia Ruth Green of Stanton.

The family has asked that memorials be directed to the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center or Hospice of Midland.

Daughter of Sigmund Freud dies in London at age 86

LONDON (AP) — Anna Freud, the last surviving child of Sigmund Freud and a prominent psychoanalyst in her own right, died Friday night at her London home, her associates said Saturday. She was 86.

Miss Freud, a leading authority on the mental disorders of children, had been in poor health since suffering a stroke last year.

Miss Freud was founder and director of the Hampstead Child Therapy Course and Clinic in north London, a major center for the training of child analysts and the treatment of mentally disturbed children.

She remained active in running the clinic up to her death, but shunned personal publicity, wary of attempts to popularize her work. She preferred to stake her reputation on her books exploring the way children think, beginning with "Introduction to the Technique of Child Analysis" in the late 1920s and continuing for nearly a half century to "Beyond the Best Interests of the Child" in 1973.

Miss Freud was born in Vienna, Austria, on Dec. 3, 1895. She was the youngest daughter of Sigmund and Martha Freud. The couple had two other daughters and three sons, all deceased.

Reagan moves to reduce Polish exports

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan called the Polish leadership "a bunch of lousy bums" for banning the Solidarity trade union and then moved Saturday to reduce Poland's exports to the United States.

"I am...today directing steps to bring about the suspension of Poland's most favored nation tariff status as quickly as possible," the president said.

U.S. officials said the step which would "not necessarily" require legislation, would be taken after consultation with Congress and would affect primarily Polish export of textiles, frozen fish and canned ham to the United States.

Reagan made his comments in his weekly radio address to the nation, delivered Saturday from the grounds of his ranch in the Santa Ynez Mountains northwest of Santa Barbara.

Just before the broadcast began, he said in a test of the microphone: "The Polish leadership, a bunch of lousy bums." But the language in his actual live broadcast was more diplomatic.

THE MOST favored nation status is accorded to the United States' best trading partners. It reduces the tariffs charged on their goods shipped to this country.

Thus, by increasing the price of those goods here, the president would hamper that trade as well as Poland's ability to earn dollars.

In Washington, one official, who asked not to be identified, said it is his "ballpark estimate" that the projected $200 million total volume of Polish exports to the United States this year could be cut by as much as one half or more.

The president had intended to talk about unemployment in the wake of the announcement Friday that the September jobless rate had hit 10.1 percent. But the subject was shifted to Poland after the Warsaw government banned existing labor organizations and said they would be replaced by new unions with sharply curtailed powers.

Reagan will address the nation on the economy in a speech from the Oval Office on Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. CDT, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said.

In his radio address Saturday, Reagan called Poland's decision to ban Solidarity and other trade organizations "another far reaching step" in the persecution of the Polish people by the military government there.

HE SAID the Polish leaders "have made it clear that they never had any intention of restoring one of the most elemental human rights, the right to belong to a free trade union," after the imposition of martial law on Dec. 13, 1981.

Of the promise to establish a new union structure, the president said: "The free world can see this is only a sham. It is clear that such unions, if formed, will be mere extensions of the Polish communist party."

"America cannot stand idly by in the face of these latest threats of repression and acts of repression by the Polish government," Reagan said.

He said he did not believe the Polish parliament's decision Friday would mark the death of Solidarity and stated that he was prepared to take further steps. He did not elaborate.

Speakes said there was no plan to call in Poland's debt to U.S. banks and put Poland into default.

But Sen. Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., said, "If the president were serious about bringing economic pressure to bear on the Polish military government, he would have long since ceased paying Poland's debts to western banks. Since the declartion of martial law last Dec. 13, the Reagan administration has paid $250 million in Polish debts with American taxpayer dollars."

SEN. ROBERT Dole, R-Kan., endorsed Reagan's call to suspend favored nation status to Poland and said the Senate Finance Committee he chairs will hold hearings on it as soon as possible.

Reagan's initial reaction to the martial law crackdown in Poland came on Dec. 23, when he:

—Halted renewal of the export-import bank's export credit insurance to the Polish government.

—Suspended Polish air transportation to the United States.

—Restricted the shipment of high technology items to Poland.

Six days later, Reagan imposed sanctions against the Soviet Union, moving to cut off the shipment of equipment for a natural gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe. That action has caused severe strains in U.S. ties with European allies.

REAGAN AIDES said the administration consulted with Western European leaders before taking the latest step.

Jobless still go to Texas

HOUSTON (AP) — While Texas' rosy economy is fading, many job-hungry Northerners still flock to the heart of the Sunbelt where prospects of work still are brighter, an economist says.

The news may be disheartening to officials who announced Friday the state's unemployment rate climbed to 8.4 percent in September, still below the national average of 10.1 but the highest ever recorded.

Statistics indicate between 200,000 and 300,000 people a year move to the Lone Star state, many from the economically-stagnant Northeast and Midwest, said Donald L. Huddle, a Rice University professor who had studied the economic impact of internal immigration.

Recently state officials have been warning out-of-state job seekers not to move the Texas unless they already have work lined up.

"The bloom is gone from the boom," Huddle said. "But even when you live in an area with double-digit unemployment and have bills to pay, mortages to meet and families to feed, 8 percent unemployment doesn't look so bad."

A decade ago analysts nationwide predicted Texas, buoyed by its healty oil and energy-related industries, would offer almost limitless employment opportunities.

When other parts of the country were experiencing hard times, Texas flourished "because the energy industry was strong," Huddle said.

But economists and government leaders later learned that Texas' economy was completely independent, Huddle said.

Joll, a four-legged member of the Midland Police Department's K-9 unit, may be getting an addition to the corps through a special fund that has been set up at Midland National Bank for purchasing K-9 dogs as needed. Giving special attention to Joll are, from left, Capt. Victor Kuykendall; Bill Franklin, president of Midland National Bank which contributed the largest amount to the fund; and Sgt. Ed Nicks. The specially-trained dogs cost from $1,200 to $5,000 and can work a maximum of about eight years because of the stress involved. Casper, a 9½-year-old dog, has been retired and the fund will go to replace other dogs as they are retired.

"The program is very much alive, but it's moving towards a training program," said Bolen, who also expressed optimism about shifting administration of training programs from the federal level to state governments.

Under the new program, Bolen said local CETA agencies will cooperate with private industry advisory councils to tailor training programs to the employment needs of a particular area.

"IT IS A GOOD program from that standpoint in that the majority of the decisions that impact on a local area are made by local people," Bolen said.

Taylor said his agency has already contacted several local personnel directors and union representatives and will hold an initial advisory council meeting Oct. 12.

But unlike Bolen, Taylor said he is less than optimistic about transferring administrative duties to the states. Because some states may not have the expertise or the funds to manage such a program, Taylor said management responsibilities should have been streamlined and left at the federal level.

Taylor also estimated that the local CETA consortium's annual budget may be cut from $2.5 million annually to about $1.8 million under the new program. He said if such a funding reduction comes about, curtailments in programs and staff may be necessary.

Taylor did agree with Bolen that training has been, and will continue to be, the most important function performed by CETA agencies.

He said about 95 participants in local training programs, mostly economically disadvantaged individuals, are now learning the skills required of diesel mechanics, licensed vocational nurses, auto mechanics, secretaries and nurses aides. About 15-20 future carpenters are studying their craft in a program jointly conducted by CETA and United Brotherhood of Carpenters Union Local 1428. Several people also work in private industry through on-the-job training contracts arranged by CETA.

TAYLOR ESTIMATED that about 210 people participate in CETA programs in the 17-county Permian Basin Consortium and about another 300 applicants are awaiting entry into the program.

But as an indication of CETA's trimmed down operations, Taylor said the Permian Basin agency once supported 300 youths in summer job programs alone.

At June's end, Bolen said 16,108 people were enrolled in CETA job training and employment programs in Arkansas, Louisiana, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas.

Bolen praised the Permian Basin CETA agency and others that shun "make-work" job programs and instead emphasize training. He said training — and re-training — will grow in importance because the country's labor force needs continue to change.

"A lot of jobs are being created while others are going by the board," he said. Bolen noted that while economic hardship has befallen some heavy industries, the auto and steel industries for example, high-technology computer and electronics industries are growing. The changing complexion of industrial America necessitates work force changes and underscores the need for job training programs, Bolen said.

Taylor said soaring unemployment and inflation also accentuate the need for job training programs that remove people from welfare lines and instead put them on the Internal Revenue Service's income tax ledgers.

"What the Reagan administration is saying is that a redirection is needed," Taylor said. "All we can do is change with the administration."

But he said that if government support and funding for job training programs continue to wane, "it's going to be tough."

EDITOR'S REPORT

arists and Marxists-Leninists joined forces as a political party known simply as "The Greens." They are young, well educated and demand a super-welfare state which would abandon NATO and the Common Market. In a couple of provincial elections, they whittled away at "Free Democrat" support. Only a couple of weeks ago, in a big regional poll, "The Greens" won 8.8 percent; Free Democrats, 2.3 percent.

That was a major numbers' game for the Free Democrats. They began taking stock of the party's future, concluding that a deal with the Crhistian Democrats was essential. In other words, they bolted their old coalition partners for new ones which the Free Democrats have done before to survive. There's one big impediment to this gambit now: The rise of "The Greens."

One of the leaders of "The Greens" has an interesting name as well as an organizational role. She is 34-year-old Petra Kelly, step-daughter of a retired U.S. Army officer. In her cluttered offices, she sounds like a political power broker rather than some wide-eyed ideological zealot. Miss Kelly's party came in third in Hesse, of which Frankfurt is the capital. It also ran close to the two big parties in Hamburg, former Chancellor Schmidt's home town and power base.

So, Miss Kelly seems prepared to also look for satisfactory coalitions. The obvious one, with the Social Democrats — particularly its left wing — she tends to scorn unless they're prepared to jettison NATO now and the West European Common Market later. As an original card-carrying member of "The Greens," Miss Kelly really hankers to eliminate the Free Democrats. Then she can wheel and deal as the balance-of-power party to win her way.

Of course, the Free Democrats will have something to say now that they've been steered into a coalition with the Christian Democrats. Their responsibility for the Foreign Ministry carries right over from Social Democrat days. They can be counted on to bolster the Christian Democrats by rallying all possible support to NATO. For West Germany, this is a key issue. The Federal Republic is the heart of the European contribution to the alliance. But any West German government remembers that 200,000 Americans are stationed thre.

Any reckless politician in West Germany can demand that "Yankee, Go Home" — as the left-wing slogan went 30-odd years ago. His responsible colleagues would probably immediately rebuke him and vote supporting legislation for U.S. troops. West Germany would be stripped naked of major defenses should Americans withdraw. As it is, they're having a hard time anyway making ends meet. Most recently, ugly scenes occurred when cafes refused to serve some black GIs. Their white buddies, aroused, tore down "no admittance" signs and went off arm-in-arm with their black soldier friends.

Ex-Chancellor Schmidt brooked no discriminatory nonsense when he ran the government and there's no reason to believe that Chancellor Kohl will tolerate this garbage, either. Both Schmidt and Kohl have superb records when it comes to all-out support for NATO whether it's with people or in manning defenses.

With his vast experience as a former economic minister and defense minister, Helmut Schmidt also searched for new initiatives so that late-model U.S. missiles could be installed in West Germany. What he has on Chancellor Kohl is years of experience and fluent English. But Chancellor Kohl can overcome linguistic shortcomings. He has long been faithful to NATO, which is what counts.

Being faithful to a mission or objective can obviously cause lots of grief. It's in this context that Israel can ignore all the irrational and racial slurs against her for the invasion of Lebanon and the Beirut massacres. The state of Israel is investigating itself; in short, turning itself inside-out and fixing blame. That's democratic. Critics ought to examine their causes — or just shut up.

High unemployment rate bad news for Republican candidates

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan used to say a recession was when your neighbor lost his job and a depression was when you lost your own. By that definition, this is a depression for 11.3 million Americans.

And by any definition, that is trouble for Republican candidates in the elections three weeks from Tuesday.

The president is, after all, the one minding the store, and in election times of economic hardship, his party's ticket usually suffers for it.

An Analysis

The increase in the unemployment rate, to 10.1 percent in September, came as no surprise. Since they expected it, Republicans were bracing and Democrats blaming even before the Labor Department reported that unemployment had hit double digits for the first time since 1940.

The announcement on Friday produced a mimeographed deluge in Washington. Organized labor staged a rally across the street from the White House. A handful of protesters chained themselves to an entrance at the Labor Department. Democrats called it a national tragedy, and blamed Reagan. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce called it a national tragedy and blamed Democrats.

Reagan blamed them, too. In politics as in football, the best defense is a good offense.

The president, in Long Beach, Calif., signed a bill to promote exports and said it would create hundreds of thousands of new jobs. The administration hadn't shown much interest in the measure until lately, when it was embraced as a step toward economic recovery. The signing was rescheduled so as to come a few hours after the unemployment report.

None of these exercises was long on spontaneity. Both sides knew what was coming. A .3 percent increase in the unemployment rate, representing an additional 450,000 people without jobs, edged the index into double figures. The difference between 9.8 percent unemployed and 10.1 percent isn't much unless you happened to be one of the people who lost a job since in September. The big difference was symbolic: the first double digit unemployment since the days just before World War II. The jobless rate in 1940 was 14.6 percent.

It introduces a frightening word into the campaign debate over Reaganomics. The word is depression. Reagan doesn't use it any more, but he did frequently during the campaign that won him the White House.

He stirred controversy by saying that what then-President Carter called a recession was in fact a depression. Campaigning in the industrial Midwest two years ago, he said unemployment there was "comparable to the Great Depression of the 1930s. That's not the recession he (Carter) speaks of, that's depression."

The unemployment rate is much worse now.

Reagan's 1982 campaign argument is that the problem was, and is, the fault of the Democrats and their spending habits. He said Friday that today's unemployment stems from "the tragic excesses of the past." Campaigning in Reno, Nev., on the eve of the unemployment report, Reagan said the Democrats who would be lambasting the administration over it were the people in charge "when the economy started going haywire."

"What are they offering now except their failed policies of the past?" he asked, "spend and spend, tax and tax, and if that isn't enough, borrow and borrow."

He complained on Friday about "those who would make a political football of this cruel fate for so many people." Since he used the unemployment issue himself in his 1980 campaign, the acceptibility of the tactic would seem to depend on who is kicking the football.

For all the problems, the public opinion polls still indicate that Americans are willing to wait a while longer for Reaganomics to work, and that many of them agree with the president's contention that current problems are the legacy of past Democratic policies.

Democrats have been figuring that 10 percent unemployment might change that. They'll find out in little more than three weeks.

Reagan, de la Madrid talk helps relations

Hearst Feature Service

SAN DIEGO — The four-hour, face-to-face, "get to know each other" meeting of the leaders of the U.S. and Mexico did more to improve the frosty relations between the two neighboring nations than even the biggest optimists ever dreamed of.

When President Reagan and Mexico's President-elect de la Madrid sat down Friday the two leaders seemed stiff and uncomfortable and chattered about such innocuous subjects as the merits of beaches on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

But by the time the two toasted each other after a sumptuous lunch at the historic del Coronado Hotel, they seemed like the best of friends.

Reagan said that after their brief meeting he knows that de la Madrid "is a man I can confide in as a friend."

Responding in kind, de la Madrid expressed his intent to provide "a positive tone" to the presently strained U.S.-Mexican relations.

"We have had a personal and friendly conversation," de la Madrid said, "a free exchange of views without any formalities."

With Mexico in the midst of a major crisis which threatens the stability of the world monetary system, Mexican officials had hoped the meeting would bring about an increase in America's already massive aid program to bail out the country.

Mexico owes $81 billion, $22 billion to U.S. banks alone, more money than any other third-world nation. Most economists attribute Mexico's problems to the fall in oil prices.

Crewel embroidery...a signed and copyrighted original, new version of a much loved art form, which contains the lines and legends of many early cultures. Throughout the ages, the Tree of Life design has changed with the hand thatdesigned it, and this new and original Tree has grown from the secure roots of its past. This chair is the most outstanding of Wood mark's many superb values. And Woodmark is famous countrywide, for both quality and value. The design was planned to fit the cutting patterns of this particular chair, also a Woodmark original, so that no precious and expensive embroidery would be wasted. These patterns have been sent to the Vale of Kashmir, where they are hand embroidered on hand loom cotton.

An added bonus is the free and gracious sharing of the results of long research, which is unusual in this industry A booklet is available to those who buy this warm symbolism which surrounds the major motifs of this new "Tree." This is truly an historic chair, and Knorr's is one of the select and limited number of stores who will be able to offer it.

Palm Beach, Belle Glade contrasts noted

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Two Americas collide in a Rhode Island-sized county in the Florida sun.

There is a life of ease in the millionaires' seaside spa of Palm Beach, with its Gucci shoes and Rolls-Royces. Forty miles inland, at the laborers' colony at Belle Glade, many who cut sugar and harvest celery are finding themselves out of work for the first time in years.

Palm Beach has an "infinitesimal" unemployment rate, officials say. In the shacks of Belle Glade near Lake Okeechobee, a new misfortune has joined older, more familiar companions like poverty and illiteracy — joblessness.

"We used to have trouble finding people to work on the farms," says Ken Shuler, county agricultural extension agent. "Now we've got people who've been working, but aren't able to find jobs."

The stark contrasts between Palm Beach and Belle Glade — between the land of plenty and the land of too little — were underscored Friday by the Labor Department's announcement that the unemployment rate had reached 10.1 percent in September, its highest mark since 1940.

Among Palm Beach County's 600,000 residents, the jobless rate is 8.5 percent, and has been on the rise since May. But the figures mask the gulf that separates 30,000 of America's richest citizens from 30,000 of its poorest.

The county's unemployment rate is fed by growing numbers of willing but unskilled immigrants, who have moved into its western reaches in search of field work. In the past, there were Bahamians and Jamaicans, but now there are Mexicans and Haitians as well.

Another sort of immigrant, the idled assembly-line worker who once spent vacations in Florida, now comes to Palm Beach County looking for a job, officials say.

"They come down here for jobs when the leaves start to turn, and end up drawing their unemployment here," says Steve Hoffacker, director of research for the Area Planning Board of Palm Beach County.

High-technology companies, like IBM, whose work force has swelled in the past year from 4,500 to 6,000, have kept the jobless rate here below the national average. That's also one reason the average household income for the county hovers around $25,000.

Tourism "has been stronger in the past," concedes Hugo Unruh, of the Economic Council of Palm Beach County. It still remains the county's No. 3 industry, behind agriculture and services.

As a contrast between the haves and the have-nots, no county surpasses Palm Beach. On the east is some 60 miles of sand and ocean — and the monied haven of Palm Beach.

On the west lie Lake Okeechobee, Belle Glade, and other migrant farmworkers' camps.

The isle of Palm Beach is gilded and swank. Belle Glade, and the towns that surround it, are dusty and dirt-poor.

Twenty years ago, Edward R. Murrow's "Harvest of Shame" documentary exposed the squalid living conditions in and around Belle Glade. A few years ago, an NBC-TV crew returned and found little had changed.

Large families still squeeze into one- and two-room apartments. By hand, they pick celery and sweet corn, and cut sugarcane.

Until last year, the Lake Okeechobee region had jobs for those willing to work. First, a few growers left, and then an influx of Haitians and other migrants flooded the labor pool.

No unemployment figures for the area exist. But Shuler says joblessness has now become a genuine problem in Belle Glade and environs.

By contrast, the biggest problem in Palm Beach is burglary. But the town's police force, whose 76 officers give it the densest police protection in the nation, have the advantage of three drawbridges which they've raised to stop more than one would-be thief.

Those who cook the meals, clean the pools, trim the hedges and care for the children travel west over those bridges at nightfall. Few of them can afford to live in Palm Beach. There, unemployment is "infinitesimal," says Chamber of Commerce President Jesse Newman.

With an average age of 57, many in Palm Beach are retired and living on hefty incomes from stock portfolios and trusts. Though they don't work now, Palm Beach residents and their ancestors have created plenty of jobs themselves. Their names include Vanderbilt, Singer, Pillsbury, Phipps, Mellon, Kennedy, Firestone and Pulitzer.

Palm Beach butlers and cooks shop at a supermarket that sells caviar and posts "No Tipping" signs. Two-laned Worth Avenue, with its Spanish-style shops, is a miniature Fifth Avenue, with a Saks, Gucci, Hermes and FAO Schwarz, and dozens more.

A local real estate agent has "several" homes with prices tags as high as $6 million. The average Palm Beach home he sells costs $450,000.

On the east is the monied haven of Palm Beach...On the west lie(s)...migrant farmworkers' camps... Palm Beach is gilded and swank; Belle Glade, and the towns that surround it, are dusty and dirt-poor.

Judge uncomfortable with trial attention

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A burly family man who grew up worlds away from Palm Beach high society is deciding whether twin 5-year-old heirs to a fortune made of newspapers, hotels and orange groves will be raised by their white-haired father or their young mother.

Judge Carl Harper, 55, left criminal court for civil court to escape the limelight. But for three weeks he has refereed the country's ranking sex-and-drug trial — Peter and Roxanne Pulitzer's divorce battle.

Carl Harper

The non-jury trial, which recessed Friday, will resume Nov. 1 with more testimony and ultimately a decision on custody of kindergarteners Mack and Zack Pulitzer as well as a division of their father's multimillion-dollar fortune.

Pulitzer, 52, claims his wife had affairs with four men, engaged in lesbian sex with another Palm Beach socialite and conducted seances in their bedroom. His estranged wife, a 31-year-old former secretary, claims Pulitzer has smuggled marijuana in his twin-engine plane and had an incestuous relationship with his daughter by an earlier marriage.

Both deny the allegations by the other, but admit to abusing cocaine in the two years before Pulitzer moved out in 1981.

Harper makes no secret of his distaste of the proceedings.

"This trial has really made me appreciate my wife," he said during a break in the hearing. "I go home every night and give her a big hug."

In recessing court early one day for a dentist appointment Harper said in his Southern drawl: "Ordinarily I don't like going to dentists, but today I'd much rather be there than here."

The Palm Beach County circuit judge hasn't hidden his naivete as he hears witnesses describe a life of trips to Europe and Aspen, Colo., summers on the yacht, weekends at the ranch and afternoons at the pool.

When a witness was asked to name stores the Pulitzers frequented in Paris, the judge suggested another topic. "The names of the stores where they shop would be totally meaningless to me unless it was Sears, Roebuck or J.C. Penney."

Pulitzer, a tanned sportsman and international hotelier, is the grandson of Joseph Pulitzer, who launched a publishing empire, and son of Herbert Pulitzer, who published the New York World.

Harper's grandfather and father were Pensacola policemen.

Pulitzer earns $850,000 a year on his $25 million fortune, his wife's attorneys say, although Pulitzer says it's only a tenth of that.

"Both of them claim a minus income, but they're living better than I do," Harper, who earns $53,00 a year, said during pre-trial proceedings. "I don't think either one of these people is in danger of going to the poorhouse anytime soon."

Harper grew up in the Florida Panhandle, served in the Navy and earned an undergraduate degree at Florida State University. He received his law degree from Stetson University, and was a prosecutor before his judicial appointment.

Clearly uncomfortable with the Pulitzer trial attention, Harper ordered court personnel to turn away spectators seeking access to the small hearing room.

"I know there's a great deal of interest in this case, but I'm offended by the publicity that's attended this trial," he said last week.

"I probably shouldn't say that, but that's my true feeling."

Last week's court action opened with an emotional appeal from Pulitzer for "my little kiddies." In a day and a half of testimony, he spoke softly in a clipped accent, saying he had loved his wife but that her alleged affairs and the couple's cocaine abuse "ruined my marriage and devastated my life."

Mrs. Pulitzer's attorneys opened their case Tuesday, promptly calling Palm Beach socialite Jacqueline Kimberly into court. She called allegations that she had a lesbian affair with her friend, Mrs. Pulitzer, "unfair, cruel and malicious."

"Have you ever been in the first floor bedroom, in the bed, naked, with Mrs. (Roxanne) Pulitzer also in the bed naked at the same time?" Pulitzer's attorney asked the 32-year-old wife of Kleenex fortune heir James Kimberly.

"You're disgusting," she replied.

Dade County crime rate down

MIAMI (AP) — The crime rate for Dade County was down 12 percent in the first seven months of 1982 compared with the same period a year ago, Miami Police Chief Kenneth Harms says.

The new figures, compiled by the city, should help fight some of the bad publicity generated about crime in the area a year ago, Harms said Thursday.

Many news stories about Dade County's crime rate cited the 1981 FBI Uniform Crime Reports, which listed the county first in murder and second in overall crime compared with other U.S. cities.

But the FBI warns against using its uniform crime reports to compare crime rates in different cities, Harm said.

School cafeteria money stolen

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Police are looking for a man who made off with $328 in receipts from an elementary school cafeteria after hitting a worker with a club.

Ottia Browning suffered cuts and bruises in Friday's holdup at the Ceasar Cone Elementary School, authorities said. The woman was in her office when the man walked in and hit her on the head, officers said.

Court rules firing unjustified

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — A prison guard fired two years ago after showing racist literature to fellow officers should not have been dismissed, the state's intermediate appellate court has ruled.

Guard John T. Sealing died in August at age 29. Friday's decision by the Court of Special Appeals requires the state personnel system to determine how much back pay and interest should be awarded his estate.

Although the leaflet, which exorted whites to hunt blacks, "certainly is offensive," it was not distributed to inmates with Sealing's knowledge, the court said. Dismissal therefore wasn't justified because his conduct did not meet the legal standards of being "wantonly offensive," the court said.

Investors' refund to be appealed

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Defense lawyers said they will appeal a judge's order that three securities firms offer $39 million in refunds to investors who bought limited partnerships in a 1976 coal-mining venture.

Superior Court Judge Roberta Ralph ruled Friday that the 3,770 investors be given refunds following a seven-month trial in the civil case brought by the state against Cal-Am Corp. of Encino, its president, Joseph R. Laird Jr., and two related securities firms, Dixie Natural Resources Inc. and Allstate Securities Inc.

"It is clear to me there was never any intention to mine any coal," the judge said. "I find the entire program to be absolutely fraudulent."

Bank robber released on bond

DANVILLE, W.Va. (AP) — A woman accused of robbing a bank of $2,000 and returning to make it appear she had been forced to commit the crime was released from jail after posting $20,000 bond, authorities said Saturday.

Sandra Mae Holstine, 33, of Ridgeview, was released on bond Friday night after being charged with unaggravated robbery, said Cpl. Phyllis Cook of the Boone County Sheriff's Department.

Ms. Holstine walked into the main branch of the Bank of Danville on Friday and gave a teller a note demanding $2,000 dollars, said Lt. Randy West of the Boone County Sheriff's Department. She hid the money in her car, then returned to the bank to make it look as though someone had forced her to commit the robbery, he said.

Harvard Medical School has 200th birthday

BOSTON (AP) — Harvard Medical School is celebrating 200 years of enriching the art of healing, a legacy that ranges from the first public use of anesthesia to the discovery of artificial skin.

From its shaky start at the close of the Revolution, the school has grown to be one of the world's foremost research and teaching centers.

Harvard looks back on it all this week with a series of talks by medical scholars, a convocation of academics from 100 medical schools and a one-man play highlighting the life of Dr. Oliver Wendall Holmes.

"Harvard is clearly one of the two or three or four great medical schools of the world," said Dr. Kenneth M. Ludmerer, a medical historian and physician at Washington University in St. Louis.

The medical school began in 1782 with three professors in the basement of Harvard Hall in Cambridge. It was not the first American medical school; New York and Philadelphia had them first. But it has been in continuous operation longer than any other.

Now Harvard Medical School has 3,000 full- and part-time faculty members, 660 students and a sprawling Boston campus surrounded by hospitals.

In 1799, Dr. Benjamin Waterhouse, one of Harvard's original teachers, introduced America to the use of cowpox material to vaccinate against smallpox. He tried it out on his own family, and the idea caught on.

Forty-seven years later, Dr. John Collins Warren, another Harvard professor, performed the first public operation using ether at Massachusetts General Hospital. "Gentlemen," he told the gathered medical luminaries, "this is no humbug."

The list of firsts fills pages.

"Harvard was a pioneer in cultivating research at the medical school," said Ludmerer, "the concept that it is the duty of the medical school to advance knowledge as well as to merely disseminate it."

Among the most notable achievements:

—Dr. Theobold Smith discovered the role of insects in transmitting disease in the 1890s.

—Dr. Paul Dudley White introduced the electrocardiograph to the United States in 1914.

—The iron lung was developed by Dr. Philip Drinker in 1927.

—In 1938, the first successful open-heart surgery to correct a congenital heart defect was performed on a child by Dr. Robert Gross.

—The first artificial kidney machine was perfected for use in the United States by Harvard doctors at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital in 1947.

—In 1954, Harvard surgeons performed the first successful kidney transplant.

—A team led by Dr. Ronald Malt conducted the first successful reattachment of a severed arm in 1962 at Massachusetts General.

—Last year, artificial skin developed by Dr. John Burke and colleagues from Massachusetts Institute of Technology was used to treat burn victims.

Despite a few early successes, Harvard Medical School was nothing special in its first century. Admission was open to anyone who could pay the fees. Only one in five students had a college degree. There were no written exams, and the teachers split up the school's profits.

Then Charles Eliot became president of Harvard in 1869, and he started a series of reforms that changed the way medicine was taught in American schools. His greatest innovation was requiring students to perform laboratory work in their science courses. He believed that students learn best by actually doing what they are studying.

Eliot also raised admission standards, required written exams and expanded instruction in basic science.

Man holding hostages on train wants to end standoff

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Vowing to "fight with you to the end," a gunman holding a woman and two children hostage for a second day Saturday in a railroad sleeper car broke a long silence with police and said it was time to end the standoff.

The man asked for an attorney. On another occasion, he threatened to kill himself after letting the two children go.

"He's wanting to get out. He just wants to work it out," said police Sgt. Mike Longmeyer.

The man, identified only as W. Rodriquez, boarded the train in Jacksonville, Fla., Thursday night with a woman and two children, believed to be his family.

The standoff began Friday morning after Raleigh police received reports of a shooting on the Amtrak Silver Star. The sleeper car where the gunman was holding the hostages was disconnected from the rest of the train at the Raleigh Amtrak station.

The man had been silent for almost 29 hours, except for one brief statement to tell police everything was all right, before police set up communications and negotiations began in ernest about noon.

Police said they were afraid the mother may have been harmed, because they had not heard her moving around in the car since Friday afternoon.

Longmeyer produced a police radio to allow reporters to hear negotiations with the gunman. After one exchange, a translator said, "If you're the police, he said he'll fight with you to the end."

The talks, in English and Spanish, were broken off occasionally while the man tried to quiet a crying child.

Police tightened security at the Amtrak train station at about 11 a.m. Saturday after police eavesdroppers heard the man using the slang Spanish word for machine gun and saying he was holding it on one of the children. However, police said they thought the man was armed only with a .45-caliber pistol.

About a half hour later, police heard a burst of gunfire from inside the train. Police said the shots apparently went through the roof.

Officers armed with high-powered rifles took up positions overlooking the train and ordered reporters to clear the station. Policemen with rifles pointed at the train replaced news cameramen at the station's windows. Officers using stethoscopes and other listening devices were planted around the car.

Before Rodriguez began talking with police, Police Chief Fred Heineman said his officers were having difficulty conducting negotiations.

"This whole case is strange. He is a very unusual individual. We can't gauge him, because he won't talk to us," he said.

The standoff began early Friday after Raleigh police received a call about a shooting on train. When police arrived, they ordered passengers off the train and began a car-to-car search.

Officer D.W. Proffer said police did not know why the man began firing as the train traveled north from Miami to New York.

He said the man "apparently went berserk and pulled a gun."

Passengers on the train told police they heard arguments and shots coming from a sleeping compartment. Police disconnected the sleeping car, and the rest of the train continued its run to New York about three hours late. There were no injuries to other passengers.

Dr. Susanne White of the Wake County Medical Center, brought in to monitor the health of the two children inside the railroad car, listened to police tape recordings of events inside the sleeper and said she heard what sounded like a baby less than 9 months old crying.

She said she also heard a child "crying for her mother, asking her mother to wake up."

Early Saturday, police appealed to the man to think of his children, and not keep them cooped up inside the cabin.

"Whatever happens, you are responsible as a parent," said Jorge Oliva, an emergency medical services employee who was working as an interpreter for police, through a bullhorn. "How long do you think you can keep this up?"

Heineman said there was water in the railroad car, and that police believed the man took food on the trip.

The man spoke with police only once during the first 29 hours, to tell them everything was all right.

Genetic screening could help in artificial insemination

WASHINGTON (AP) — Genetic screening could reduce birth defects and disease and should be conducted routinely for women who conceive babies through artificial insemination, a presidential commission says.

While advocating genetic screening and counseling, the President's Commission for the Study of Ethical Problems in Medicine and Biomedical and Behavioral Research said legal and ethical guidelines should be established and constantly monitored and updated to assure proper use of such procedures.

In a report issued at a meeting ending Saturday, the commission said the confidentiality of genetic information must be guaranteed unless withholding such information would cause suffering.

Obtaining genetic information affecting potential offspring can reduce chances of birth defects and disease, as in the case of artificial insemination, said the report.

This information includes a family disease history and perhaps results of specific tests looking for a genetic predisposition to some diseases.

If a woman carries genes for certain conditions — such as Tay-Sachs Disease or sickle cell disease — and uses sperm from a man with similar genetic tendencies, the resulting child is at high risk of developing the disease.

"Accordingly, a woman considering artificial insemination should be apprised of the risks of conceiving a child with a donor sample," said the report.

Currently, the genetic history of sperm donors is kept from women who are inseminated by the thousands each year.

After conception, techniques such as amniocentesis can sample fluids around a fetus in the womb and determine such things as abnormal genetic characteristics or gender.

However, amniocentesis can be used for more questionable purposes, such as disclosing the gender of fetuses for the purpose of aborting healthy ones who happen to be considered the "wrong sex" by the parents.

Doctors should consider and protect their patients' wishes in doing genetic screening and counseling, the commission said.

Weekly newspaper editor's job nothing like that of Lou Grant

EDITOR'S NOTE: There's a special satisfaction in chronicling the life and times of a small community. Though the news is seldom spectacular, it's close to the heart of what journalism is about. In the following article, the editor of a suburban weekly offers a quiet celebration of her job, her readers, and her town.

By AMY PETT

PORT WASHINGTON, N.Y. (AP) — I am the managing editor, the society editor, the business editor, the entertainment editor, the editorial page editor, the obituary editor, the sports editor, and the club news editor.

I write editorials, fix the high school sports columnist's grammar, report on our festering landfill, rewerite bridge club news, cover school board meetings, and call up mourners to get information for obituaries.

I also take out the garbage, answer the phone, cope with the visiting fanatics, open the mail, and take money for classified ads and subscriptions.

I am a suburban weekly newspaper editor, and for 12 years I have been chronicling the joys and sorrows of my community.

I HAVE followed children in their journey from Little League to the junior high school team to glory as high school letter winners and often to greater glory on their college teams.

I have observed careers that began with a minor post in an elementary school PTA and culuminated with election to the local school board.

I have followed women in my community as they married, had children, sent them to first grade, did volunteer work, and then landed jobs and began getting promotions.

I have followed men through college and ROTC, through military stints, and then up the corporate ladder.

I have also documented our community's pile of garbage as it mounted higher and higher in a landfill which now may be polluting the ground water we drink; observed our school board in its liberal swing in the early 1970s and its turn back to some of the old ways in the early 1980s; and followed the inexorable rise of local taxes.

My job is nothing like Lou Grant's, and almost everything like that of a country newspaper editor at a rolltop desk in the last century.

I LIVE IN the community I cover: When I urge approval of a library budget, I too will be paying the tax increase; my children attended the schools I write about; my family and I drink the water about whose purity the experts and politicians argue, and the people I write about are my friends and neighbors.

My suburb of about 35,000 is like a small town.

Early in the week, before the paper has even been written, people call me to find out what their neighbor died of, who was hurt in the car crash on Shore Road their cleaning woman told them about and was the driver drunk, what were the sirens for on Saturday morning, and did I notice that the bay is frozen over already and it isn't even January.

The morning after a local election I can count on getting about three words of my election story written between phone calls from people who want to know who won. I try to sound like my answering service so I don't have to argue with those whose candidates were beaten.

I get tips for hot stories in the gas station, the beauty parlor, the book store, and the supermarket.

Some of the tips are not so hot. An old high school friend home for a brief visit told me on the street one day to write about a duck starving to death near her house. The next day her father called to say it had been a false alarm.

A LADY told me about a cat killing birds in her neighborhood, and was irate when I didn't take notes. I sent her to an even more local news outlet — her neighborhood civic association's newsletter.

One of my favorite long-running stories began with a touching piece by a local mailman about a stray dog trying to feed her puppies during a cold snap. I followed that one until mother and children had all been adopted.

I've written exciting exposes and daring editorials that have gotten no comment at all, but if I leave out the high school football news one week I can count on at least a dozen angry phone calls.

As I write my editorials I not only consider the pros and cons of the issue, but also the arguments I am likely to get after the paper comes out.

The editor of a large daily newspaper may hear from presidents and senators who don't like their editorials, but I get it from the woman pinching tomatoes next to me in the greengrocer's on Saturday morning, the retiree who stops into my office 10 minutes before my deadline with two file folders full of documentation for his point of view, the school superintendent who has to hand my daughter her high school diploma in two weeks, and my best friend's father, who I was about to ask to help me hang towel bars in my bathroom.

The perils of being a small town weekly newspaper are very intimate: Even my dentist has commented on my editorial policy with the drill hovering above my throbbing tooth; my daughter has complained at the dinner table that I printed the name of one of her friends in that week's police story; I had to limit my conversation to recipes with a close friend for almost a year to avoid an issue we totally disagreed about, and I'm the last one to hear the juicy gossip because no one wants it in the paper.

THE JOYS of being a small town weekly newspaper editor can be equally intimate, and worth it all.

Readers go out of their way to tell me when they like what I am doing.

I get an announcement from the publisher and a reviewer's copy of a local woman's first book.

After several years of seeing a kid's name on the police reports, I print an announcement that he has made the dean's list at a nearby community college.

After months of writing complicated stories about the town's attempt to dump incinerator refuse into our harbor, hours of meetings on the situation, long off-the-record conversations with environmental scientists, and carefully-written editorials against the plan, it is finally defeated.

I write an editorial asking readers whether or not I should print the names of older teen-agers who are arrested in our community, and at every party I go to for the next two months people are discussing that question, thoughtfully and helpfully.

In my dozen years at the editor's desk, I've found that many stories recur regularly, like the season: the school board election, the zoning fights, people suing one another.

BUT EVERY few years the issues change a little. Now it's our community, like many others, struggling with the need to close schools because of dropping enrollment. Everyone wants to save money, but people don't want their own neighborhood school to get the axe. And like other communities, we, too, are trapped by our own garbage, by a technology that knows how to make things but not how to dispose of them.

My office has a big plate-glass window on Main Street. The seasons are presaged by the display in the hardware store across the way. Even if it is still 42 degrees, I know spring is coming when the rakes and spreaders are lined up on the sidewalk. The calendar may say November, but if snow shovels have been put out across the street, I know the first winter storm is on the way.

In summer, I look out and see children walking gleefully down the hill toward the town dock with their fishing poles. In the winter, I see them out my window walking glumly up the hill to school.

In all seasons, the people I write for and about pass by my window. I look out at them. They look in at me. If we know each other, we wave. If they have something to say to me, they stop in.

We don't always like each other, my readers and I, and we often disagree. But I make their newspaper and they make my news. I write about the Joneses, not the Reagans; a neighborhood trying to keep its single-family zoning, not the Cabinet trying to keep the lid on in the Mideast.

But the news I cover is the stuff of my readers' lives, and, to me, the very heart of journalism.

Abscam methods hurt civil rights, says report

NEW YORK (AP) — The rights of innocent citizens were endangered by the methods of the FBI's undercover Abscam investigation, and those methods should be restricted by Congress, an American Civil Liberties report said Saturday.

Current standards should be changed to require, among other things, that the FBI determine an ongoing pattern of criminal activity before targeting individuals, said the 69-page report, entitled "The Lessons of Abscam."

Additional controls should be developed to ensure proper supervision of undercover sting operations, and an innocent person who suffers an invasion of privacy or injury to reputation during such an inquiry should be allowed to sue the government, the report said.

The Abscam inquiry led to the convictions of 12 political figures, including seven congressmen, for accepting bribes from undercover agents. During the inquiry, FBI representives posed as representatives of a wealthy Arab sheik.

"Twenty meetings were held but only 12 convictions resulted," the ACLU report said. "To be sure, this is a 60 percent success rate, but it is also a 40 percent failure rate using a highly intrusive technique with damaging consequences."

The report said the FBI in some cases violated its own undercover guidelines, which require it to make "the corrupt nature of the activity...reasonably clear to potential subjects," and to offer illegal inducements "not unjustifiable in view of the character of the illegal transaction in which...individuals...(are) invited to engage."

Those guidelines, even if followed, do not adequately protect the innocent from being investigation targets, the report said.

Jaruzelski pledges to free internees

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — In an apparent effort to head off riots over the outlawing of Solidarity, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski pledged Saturday to free a "large number" of interned unionists held under martial law.

He also vowed, in a speech before Parliament, to ease travel restrictions, limit the practice of internment and lift martial law eventually, but only on condition that "social peace" is achieved.

President Reagan, reacting angrily to the outlawing of Solidarity by the Polish Parliament Friday, said he will move as quickly as possible to suspend most-favored-nation trading status given to the Soviet bloc nation.

This will hamper Poland's ability to earn dollars and export food and manufactured goods to the United States. Tariffs on Polish goods imported by the United States will rise considerably with the loss of the trading status.

Reagan called the outlawing of Solidarity "another far-reaching step in the persecution of the Polish people," and declared: "America cannot stand idly by in the face of these threats."

Reagan first took action against Poland on Dec. 24, shortly after the imposition of martial law, and also announced sanctions against the Soviet Union for their complicity in the military crackdown.

He suspended talks for a new grain agreement with the Soviet Union, and blocked shipments of high-technology items to the Soviets and Poland. He also limited other commerce between the United States and Poland such as suspending Polish airline flights to the United States and Polish fishing rights in U.S. waters.

Jaruzelski did not say how many of the estmated 700 to 1,000 internees still held would be freed, or when their release would come. But Poland has been rocked by protests over the last 10 months, and it was believed freedom for internees might help blunt any new riots.

Reagan will 'consider anything' to bring about Mideast peace

TORONTO (AP) — President Reagan said in an interview published Saturday by the Toronto Star that he will "consider anything" to bring about peace in the Mideast — including a Camp David-style summit or visiting the troubled region himself.

Asked whether he plans a summit with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and King Hussein of Jordan, Reagan was quoted as saying: "I don't know whether that will be necessary, but I will do whatever I can to help solve the problems...I'll consider anything to bring this (Middle East crisis) to a peaceful solution."

"So far, I haven't given thought to whether the White House or Camp David is the place to do it, or, there, in their own land is the place to do it. But whatever offers the best opportunity to be of help, that will be my course."

He added, "All we want to do, if that's possible, is to be a mediator, a catalyst, a friend to all. We want to be able to serve that purpose and help bring a lasting peace to the people of the Mideast."

In Washington, Assistant White House Press Secretary Morton Allin said Saturday that Reagan's statements did not imply the president was actively preparing either a summit or a visit to the Middle East. Instead, he said Reagan was trying to indicate his willingness to do whatever could promote peace in the region.

Referring to the recent slaughter of hundreds of Palestinian civilians in Beirut refugee camps — a massacre blamed on Israeli-allied Lebanese Christian militiamen — Reagan was quoted as saying: "I suppose what the tragedy did was simply make me feel that the time had come to go for broke — to not try to resolve just one problem as we were, but to straighten out Lebanon and then take immediate steps to get back on the peace process."

U.S. nuclear missiles won't be deployed soon in Europe

By DAVID MASON

LONDON (AP) — Construction delays by some West European nations could hamper the stationing of U.S. nuclear weapons in the area next year.

The missiles have been a mainstream military-political subject for the past two years in Western Europe and massive street demonstrations have periodically resulted. Governments are now faced with hard decisions as a deadline approaches for deploying 572 American missiles in five West European countries.

An Analysis

About five years ago, European fears arose over the appearance of a new Soviet surface-to-surface SS-20 missile that can reach all of Western Europe.

Largely at the urging of the now-ousted Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization decided to place 108 Pershing 2 and 464 Tomahawk Cruise missiles in West Germany, Britain, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands.

Deployment is to begin by the end of 1983 in a program extending through 1988. If the missile modernization is to go ahead on schedule, preparation of the sites must be advanced or completed in the coming months.

Such work has been under way in Britain and Italy, but Belgium and the Netherlands are dragging their feet. In West Germany, there has been no official word on any site preparation. But a new conservative government, which is on record as favoring the missiles, took over last week in Bonn and some movement now is likely.

THE OTHER "TRACK" OF the 1979 NATO decision was to propose negotiations with the Soviet Union to reduce missile forces.

The talks proposal remained largely a dead letter for months, first because of Soviet reluctance and then because of the change in the U.S. administration in 1981.

Finally, last November, U.S. and Soviet negotiators sat down in Geneva, Switzerland, where President Reagan's "zero option" proposal was put forth. Reagan said the United States, with NATO support, would scrap the $5-billion Pershing and Cruise program if the Soviets dismantled their SS-20s and two other types of missiles.

The Geneva talks resumed Sept. 30 after a recess with chief Soviet negotiator Yuli A. Kvitsinsky calling on the United States to "act now" to reduce "the level of nuclear confrontation."

His U.S. counterpart, Paul H. Nitze, criticized what he called the "buildup" of Soviet missiles forces. U.S. officials claim the Soviets have steadily increased to at least 324 their triple-tipped SS-20s for a total warhead strength of 972, compared with a total of 572 when the single-headed Pershings and Cruises are eventually in place.

EUGENE ROSTOW, DIRECTOR of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, has said he does not expect the Soviets to come forth with "constructive" proposals until shortly before the new American missiles are due to be deployed.

U.S. and other NATO officials contend the only way the Soviets will agree to cut back on their missiles is if the five NATO countries make good on their plans to accept the Pershings and Cruises.

An Associated Press survey shows the prospects are patchy at best.

For example, in Britain Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has firmly embraced the NATO missile decision. The Defense Ministry says by the end of 1983, the first 96 of the Cruise missiles destined for Europe will be deployed at a Royal Air Force base at Greenham Common, near Reading, England. Sixty-four more missiles, the last of the overall European total, will be in placed at another British air base at Molesworth, near Cambridge.

But the opposition Labor Party has decided that any future Labor government should scrap Britain's nuclear weapons and halt the planned deployment of the 160 Cruises.

U.S. sanctions would apply to proposed Occidental pipeline

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The State Department said Friday that President Reagan's ban on the export of U.S. technology to the Soviet Union would prohibit Occidental Petroleum Corp. from obtaining export licenses to build a proposed 3,000-mile Soviet coal slurry pipeline.

Although the Los Angeles-based company has not yet asked the U.S. government for permission to use American technology on the proposed Siberia-to-Moscow pipeline project, Occidental Chairman Armand Hammer announced in Moscow this week that he would soon do so.

"The slurry pipeline is covered by existing sanctions," a State Department spokesman said, referring to President Reagan's earlier ban on U.S. equipment and technology for a natural-gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe.

Occidental had no immediate comment on the State Department's position. But Jack King, a Washington-based executive vice president for Occidental, noted that the project "would involve only Russian (liquefied) coal, and the coal would never leave the Soviet Union."

The president imposed a ban on U.S. know-how being used for the natural gas pipeline in response to the Soviet Union's role in the imposition of martial law Dec. 13 in Poland.

Mexico will pay debts

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President-elect Miguel de la Madrid, referring to difficulties in meeting payments on the country's huge foreign debt, says Mexico will comply with its obligations but needs cooperation to do it.

In a televised message, de la Madrid said he told President Reagan during their meeting Friday that "in the interdependent world in which we live, understanding and foreign support is needed, especially in the financial area, to let Mexicans arrange the service of our foreign debt in the kind of terms that let us pay our obligations."

De la Madrid's message included some of his most outspoken statements on the Mexican economic crisis since his election July 4.

Although the situation has worsened since the election, with rising unemployment and inflation and the second devaluation of the peso this year, the president-elect has taken a low profile in apparent deference to President Jose Lopez Portillo.

De la Madrid takes office on Dec. 1.

"We Mexicans know how to comply with our obligations, if we are given the realistic conditions to be able to do it," he said in the message delivered on his return to Tijuana from his meeting with Reagan in Coronado, Calif.

The official El Nacional newspaper carried the text of the message in its Saturday edition.

"We are going to recover our prestige abroad; we are not going to stop complying with that to which we are obligated, but we also need more facilities in the commercial area," de la Madrid said.

"We want to have access to the U.S. market for our exports, freedom from hindrances that still come up from time to time, a diminishing of the protectionist attitude and, accordingly, to be able to make the necessary imports to continue growing.

"Our economy cannot be closed to the world; this is an obsolete and naive attitude. We have to keep importing, but to do so we need to finance our purchases abroad, with more exports. International commerce cannot be a one-way relationship, to purchase. It is necessary to sell and, certainly, to sell it is necessary to produce," the president-elect said.

De la Madrid noted that Mexico can no longer rely on increasing its foreign debt to finance imports.

Jose Portillo to leave for Caribbean

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Jose Lopez Portillo prepared Saturday for an official visit to the Dominican Republic, where he planned to meet with the Caribbean nation's new president and dedicate a monument to human rights donated by Mexico.

His schedule called for him to leave the capital Sunday evening for Mexico's Caribbean resort of Cancun and fly early Monday to Santo Domingo, the Dominican capital, for a 28-hour visit.

Dominican government sources have said they view the visit with optimism, as a chance to negotiate sales of the main Dominican product — sugar — to Mexico in exchange for purchase of Mexican oil.

The main stumbling block in the past has been the inability of the Dominican Republic to produce refined sugar, which is the only form of the product Mexico needs, for export.

The Dominican government has asked Mexico to delay receipt of $60 million in oil bills that came due last month. Both nations are in the grips of economic crises.

Egyptian denies illegality

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — In the first official comment on recent published reports on the transport of billions of dollars worth of U.S. military equipment to Egypt, Kamal Hassan Ali, Egypt's foreign minister, said Friday that Egyptian officials engaged in no wrongdoing.

Describing himself as "deeply dismayed by what has been reported in the press about Egyptian officials, including myself," Ali, in a formal statement issued by the Egyptian Embassy here, challenged "any person or party to bring forward any documents that would prove any of these malicious lies."

Ali said that about a year ago, "the Egyptian government carried out a thorough investigation that proved that no wrongdoing or improper action was committed by any Egyptian official or authority," he said.

The U.S. Justice Department is investigating the use of $51 million in U.S. funds paid to the Egyptian American Transportation Service Co. (EATSCo) of Falls Church to transport more than $3 billion in military equipment that the United State agreed to sell Egypt after the signing of the 1979 peace treaty between Egypt and Israel.

Investigators are focusing on $30 million in bills submitted by the firm as fees owed to a middleman company that arranged for the ships to carry the equipment overseas. These fees as well as other transportation costs were paid from grants and loans provided by the United States to Egypt for arms purchases.

Prosecutors are trying to determine whether the use of the middleman served to inflate the bills submitted to Egypt by EATSCo and if so, who profited.

A source close to EATSCo has said some of the money listed on bills as due the middleman actually went to EATSCo. Egyptian officials were aware of this, the source said, and did not object to it, and therefore the firm's procedures were proper.

Sources close to the investigation have said that federal prosecutors have no allegations against Egyptian officials. They are, however, attempting to ascertain how EATSCo, which had no previous shipping experience, secured a lucrative and exclusive contract to handle all U.S. arms shipments to Egypt.

Saudis send 71 Iranians back to Iran

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AFP) — Seventy Iranian pilgrims and their leader, Imam Mohamed Hussein Mussavi Khomeiny, were deported from Saudi Arabia to Iran Friday after the iman led thousands of Iranian pilgrims in a demonstration in the Moslem holy city of Medina Thursday night, a source at the Saudi Interior Ministry said Friday.

The source, who was quoted in Saudi press reports, said the iman had continued to incite the Iranian pilgrims to commit acts against the security of the state and fellow pilgrims that were "contrary to Islamic principles" and against the security of the state.

Earlier Friday, an Interior Ministry communique quoted by Radio Riyadh said that the demonstrators had shouted political slogans under the imam's leadership, and that 69 had been arrested and sent home.

ELeven other Iranian pilgrims and two members of the Saudi security forces were slightly injured in the incidents, the radio had said.

Cuban attacks policy

UNITED NATIONS — Cuba attacked the Reagan administration on Friday as "blinded by stupidity" and accused it of preparing armed intervention in Central America to "drown the Nicaraguan revolution in blood."

Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca, in a speech to the U.N. General Assembly, denounced the U.S. role in the Mideast and Africa. He also accused Washington of instigating the arms race and of blocking Third World efforts to improve its economic lot.

U.S. delegate Kenneth L. Adelman, who spoke after Malmierca concluded, called the remarks outrageous. "Cuba is a totalitarian Marxist-Leninist state where the citizenry has been deprived of the exercise of elementary and basic political rights," he said.

Adelman took particular issue with Malmierca's charge that so-called U.S. imperialist rule in Latin America has subjected millions there to dreadful poverty.

Of Central America, Malmierca said: "Blinded by stupidity and lack of realism, Mr. Reagan's administration has rejected dialogue and a negotiated political solution...."

He accused Washington of "using the armed forces of Honduras as a spearhead against Nicaragua and the Salvadoran patriots, with the aim of legalizing a possible direct intervention by U.S. forces."

The Cuban foreign minister also denounced U.S. opposition to Third World attempts to install a new world economic order and eliminate the "abysmal differences between the poor and rich countries."

Although Malmierca did not say that he spoke for the nonaligned movement, which now includes more than 100 member countries, he referred to the group's positions. Adelman, in his reply accused the Cuban of posturing as the movement's spokesman and called Malmierca's comments the "ultimate Cuban lie."

Cuba remains chairman of the nonaligned movement because Iraq, which was to have taken the post last month, was barred by its war with Iran. A meeting here this week designated India to host a summit meeting of the movement in New Delhi next April and to assume the leadership thereafter.

Red Cross booted from Afghanistan

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Afghanistan has ordered the expulsion of International Red Cross delegates there, the agency announced Saturday.

The regime previously ordered the Red Cross out of Afghanistan in June 1980, six months after an estimated 85,000 Soviet troops entered the country, but a team was allowed back in two months ago.

The all-Swiss humanitarian agency said in a tersely worded communique that it had "no clear idea" as to why the delegates were being ordered out and said it "expects the Afghan government to make clear within the shortest possible time its intentions as to the application of (an) agreement" allowing access to prisoners taken in the war between anti-Marxist guerrillas and the government troops aided by the Soviets.

Red Cross delegates arrived in Kabul Aug. 14 and visited inmates at Puli Charki prison, the communique said.

The Red Cross had sent four representatives, including a doctor, to Afghanistan and they visited 338 prisoners, Sommer said.

Battle rages between Israeli army, Ariel Sharon

By MARCUS ELIASON

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — A battle between the army and Defense Minister Ariel Sharon over the handling of Israel's invasion of Lebanon is raising concern about the future of Israel's increasingly outspoken armed forces.

Until now, Israelis scoffed at the suggestion that the army might ever muscle into political affairs. They still think it unlikely, but they don't laugh so readily anymore.

Maj. Gen. (Res.) Haim Herzog, a former intelligence chief now serving in Parliament for the opposition Labor Party, says the growing political debate within the army "is a development that could endanger the very basis of Israeli society."

This army now poses a grave threat to Sharon's career. His conduct during Israel's invasion of Lebanon and the Beirut massacre of hundreds of civilians in two Palestinian refugee camps have provoked calls by senior officers for his resignation. The army officers are quoted as calling him a liar, an irresponsible man willing to blame the army for his own shortcomings.

THE JUDICIAL INQUIRY starting last week into the conduct of the army and government during the massacre is widely expected to lead to high-level dismissals. Thus distrust and suspicions of scapegoat-hunting pervade the defense community.

The massacre of hundreds of Palestinians by Israeli-backed Christian militias in Chatilla and Sabra camps last month brought the confrontation out of military secrecy and onto TV screens and front pages.

But the rift was there in the early days of Israel's invasion of Lebanon June 6, and it grew bigger as the war outgrew Israel's originally stated intention to crush Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon's south. Military censors at first tried to prevent publication of the controversy, but the issue became too big to be kept secret.

The danger of a politicized army has existed ever since Israel's founders, confronted with the prospect of prolonged Arab hostility, forged a citizens' army which could mobilize and arm every able-bodied person in the country in a matter of days whenever national survival was threatened. Women, like men, are required to serve in the military.

THE ARMY BECAME the most cherished national institution, and a military career was considered a good ticket to high political office. The late Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, former Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Sharon are prime examples.

To shield itself against coups and juntas, Israel set up strict laws, traditions and censorship rules barring uniformed men from expressing political opinions in public. These principles were carefully drilled into a generation of officers.

Sharon's critics say they predicted the custom would break down as soon as the 54-year-old retired general became defense minister in August 1981. They say Sharon's career is too volatile a mixture of brilliance in battle, insubordination and a chronic inability to work harmoniously with colleagues.

Even before the war, Sharon's sometimes cavalier way of setting policy, his choices for promotion in the officer corps and his authoritarian manners alienated him from many officers and Cabinet ministers, critics say.

Now that Sharon is in trouble, the critics are coming into the open. Deputy Prime Minister Simcha Ehrlich, a longtime Sharon foe, says the controversy proves that military men should not be made defense ministers because they "disrupt" the army's workings.

SHARON RAN THE Lebanon war more as a combat general than a Cabinet minister. Constantly dashing between battlefields and Cabinet rooms, he dealt out orders and stepped on military toes, pushing the war forward while his colleagues in Jerusalem tried to hold it back.

When he failed to win Cabinet approval for an all-out campaign to capture the strategically valuable Beirut-Damascus highway, he did it piecemeal. He would nudge his forces forward day by day, each time explaining to the Cabinet that today's advance was needed to secure yesterday's.

According to Dr. Nimrod Novick of Tel Aviv University's Shiloah Mideast research center, the army suffered more losses than it would have if it had been told from the outset to take the highway, and this heightened the rancor toward Sharon. Moreover, he says, the troops were often told they were retaliating for cease-fire violations — violations they believed had not occurred — and this damaged Sharon's credibility in their eyes.

The prospect of possibly having to invade Beirut further divided the army. As a large anti-war movement took root in Israel under the leadership of recently discharged combat troops, a top officer, Col. Eli Geva, resigned as commander of an armored brigade rather than have to lead it into the Lebanese capital.

Iranian students on hunger strike in India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Twenty-eight dissident Iranian students on Saturday entered the fourth day of a hunger strike to demand government protection from supporters of Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

A spokesman for the hunger strikers said one member of their group was killed last week in a clash between pro and anti-regime Iranians in Bangalore, capital of southern Indian state of Karnataka. He said a second member of the group was killed about three months ago in a similar battle in Aligarh, 75 miles southeast of New Delhi.

The hunger strikers demand protection and that the Indian government formally protest the alleged attacks by pro-government Iranians in India.

Hundreds pray at burned Baptist church

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Hundreds of people participated Saturday in a prayer service at Jerusalem's burned-out Baptist church, Israel radio said.

The radio said speakers at the service did not blame Israel for the fire and stressed that the incident would not diminish the affection of Baptists for Israel and its people.

Dr. Robert Lindsey, the Oklahoma-born church pastor, was quoted by the radio as saying that services at the site would continue until a new location was found.

The church was destroyed Friday and officials said they suspected arson after traces of kerosene were found in the chapel.

Soviets return from Czechoslovakia

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet military delegation headed by Defense Minister Dmitri Ustinov returned to Moscow on Saturday following a three-day official visit to Czechoslovakia, the Soviet news agency Tass reported.

The Soviet delegation visited Prague at the invitation of Czech Defense Minister Martin Dzur after the conclusion of the biggest-ever Warsaw Pact military exercises held in late September in Bulgaria.

Soviet spy plane trying to signal sub, sources say

BERGA NAVAL BASE, Sweden (AP) — A Soviet spy plane is criss-crossing the Baltic trying to make contact with a submarine trapped near Stockholm, and the Swedes have set up a jamming station to prevent communication between the two, informed sources said Saturday.

The sources, who requested anonymity, said the spy plane was an Ilyushin-38, and that it has displayed "unusual interest" in the Hors Bay area near the top secret Musko naval base, where the intruder was first sighted Oct. 1.

Lt. Col. Jan Ake Berg of the Swedish Defense Staff declined to comment on the report, saying only: "We are continuing as before. We receive many tips from the public and are following up some of them." He refused to give details of the search tactics.

However, the Swedish navy is known to have at least two remote-controlled minisubs that can carry TV cameras or explosives. The navy also has a new type of acoustic signal device that can attach itself magnetically to its undersea quarry.

More than 1,000 Swedes defied the chilly autumn weather and rainy skies to follow the search from the coast. Authorities, worrying that the influx of spectators may interfere with the navy's operation, sent soldiers to close off a main road leading to the area.

During the first week of the search, patrol boats and helicopters dropped more than 30 depth charges, some containing 220 pounds of TNT, around the sub in an attempt to force it to surface.

The Soviet news agency Tass has denied that any submarine in Hors Bay is Soviet. The United States and other NATO countries with subs in the Baltic Sea have denied their subs are involved.

Berg said the entire Stockholm Archipelago was being searched for foreign submarines but that the closed-off area of Hors Bay was "exceptionally interesting."

He also said naval authorities confirmed they have had "definite indications" from a second submarine outside Hors Bay, but he declined to say if any further contact with the second submarine was made Saturday.

Naval authorities said three powerful mines were detonated Thursday in Hors Bay.

Lebanese army postpones plans to disarm militias

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Plans to disarm right-wing Christian militias in east Beirut were postponed Saturday after the Lebanese army requested more time to complete its massive sweep of Moslem west Beirut, government sources said.

Israeli forces meanwhile consolidated their positions in southeastern Lebanon and were moving in prefabricated houses in preparation for winter.

A U.S. official touring the Palestinian refugee camp of Ain El-Helweh in southern Lebanon on Saturday asked Israel to keep Christian militiamen out of the camp following the killing of a Palestinian man there last month.

M. Peter McPherson, head of the U.S. Agency for International Development, said he told Israeli officials that "the camps need to be free of militias."

Lebanese newspapers and government sources who did not want to be quoted by name said the plan to disarm Christian militias in east Beirut initially was scheduled to start Sunday, but the Lebanese army requested an extension of its sweep for arms in west Beirut.

The sources said Christian President Amin Gemayel wanted to begin demilitarizing east Beirut before heading to Washington and talks with President Reagan Oct. 19. He was also reported wanting to declare Beirut a demilitarized city before trying to extend army control over separate areas outside Beirut now controlled by Israeli, Syrian and Palestine Liberation Organization forces.

More than 1,000 illegal aliens, suspected criminals, escaped convicts and people carrying false papers and expired visas have been rounded up since the Lebanese army launched its sweep of west Beirut Tuesday.

A Lebanese army spokesman said army troops raided a building containing a printing press and arrested 10 people on forgery counts. He said 3,385 false identity cards and 1,145 forged passports were confiscated in the operation.

Lebanese newspapers said Gemayel may request that the 3,500-man multinational force made up of U.S. Marines and French and Italian troops be increased to 15,000. They said Gemayel may also ask that the multinational force, now stationed in Beirut, be expanded to northern, eastern and southern Lebanon.

The Associated Press correspondent Edmond Chedid reported from southern Lebanon that the Israelis moved trucks and heavy equipment to Wadi El-Khou near the village of Marjeyoun, five miles north of the Israeli border.

He said the Israelis were moving prefabricated houses into the same area at night over the past two days, apparently in preparation for the rainy season that begins in a few weeks.

U.S. special envoy Philip C. Habib has been trying to negotiate an agreement for a step-by-step withdrawal of Israeli troops, Syrian forces and Palestinian guerrillas from Lebanon. Habib is now in Washington.

Nazi sympathizer probably won't be allowed in Switzerland

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Swiss officials said Friday that Valerian Trifa, the Romanian Orthodox archbishop accused of being a Nazi sympathizer who incited bloody rioting during World War II, likely will be refused permission to settle in Switzerland when he is deported from the United States.

Trifa, 68, agreed Thursday to be deported after admitting that he lied to immigration authorities, covering up his pro-Nazi activities, when he entered the United States 32 years ago. He said he wanted to resettle in Switzerland.

Peter Vogler, the press officer for the Swiss Embassy here, said Friday that Trifa has not made a formal request for asylum or a residence visa. Swiss officials, who asked not to be identified, said any request to live in Switzerland would involve a background check and that it was very unlikely that Switzerland would admit a former Nazi collaborator.

Allan A. Ryan Jr., head of the Office of Special Investigations at the Justice Department, said that if the Swiss refuse to admit Trifa the government will find another country to accept him.

At a Detroit news conference Friday, Trifa denied all the government charges and called himself a victim.

"I had to acknowledge it (the charges) to sign the agreement with the government," he said. "It was part of a way to come to an end to this...I feel victimized by the fact that things are picked up and enlarged in such a way as to mean completely different things."

Trifa, who heads the 35,000-member Romanian Orthodox Episcopate based in Grass Lake, Mich., said he decided to accept deportation for the good of the church.

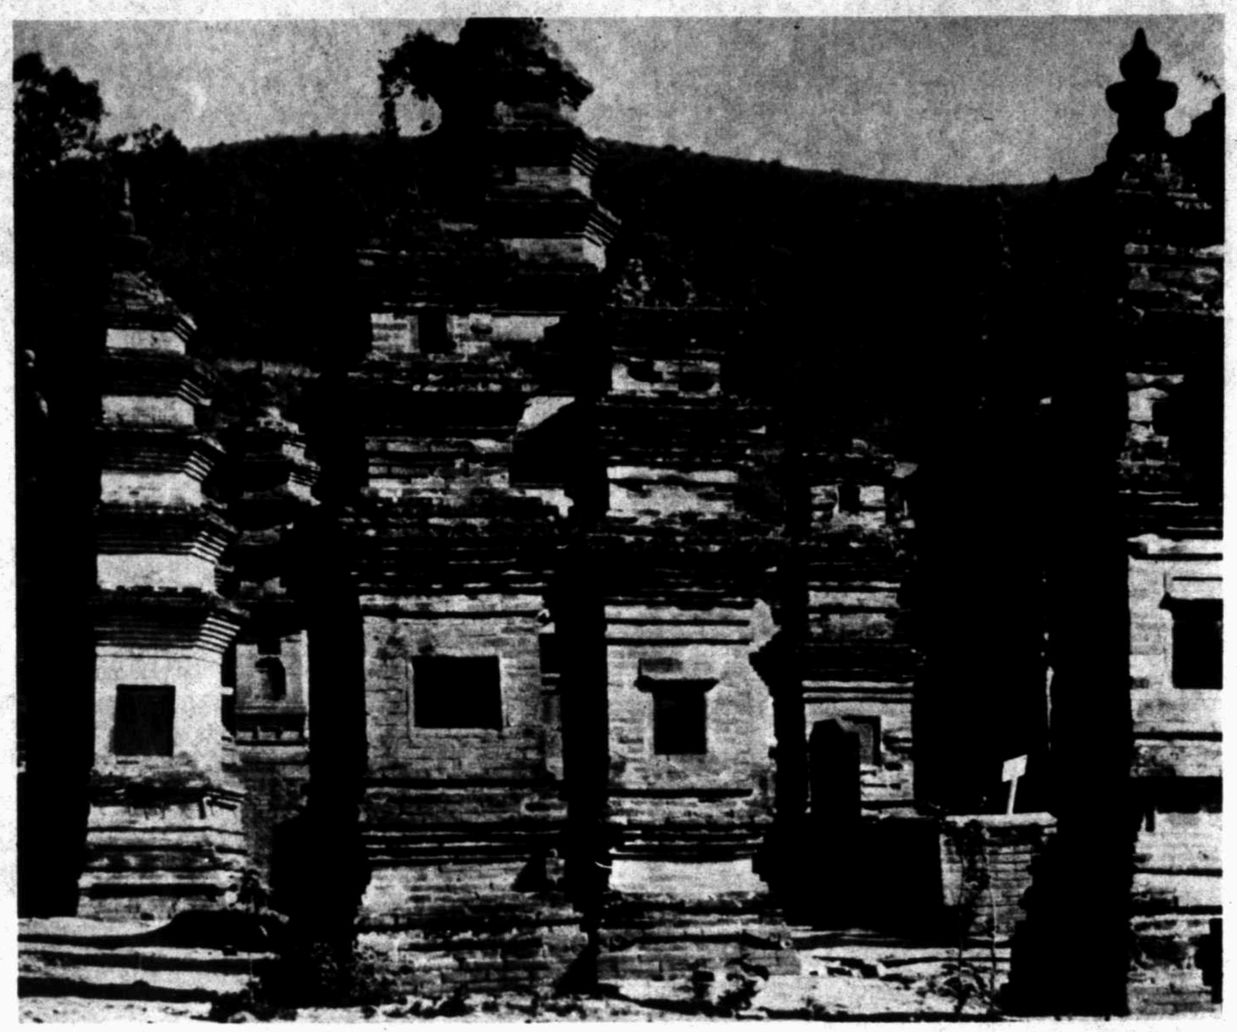
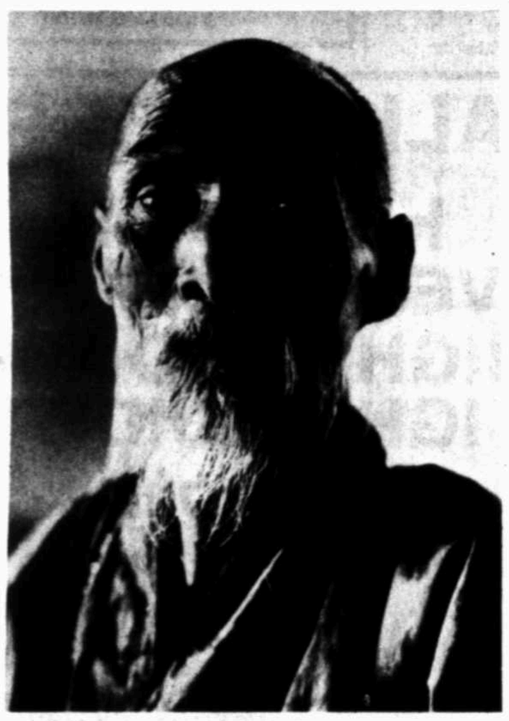
Mystic monastic moves



A "forest of tombs" stands at Shaolin Monastery in China where prominent monks have been buried over the centuries at the site where Zen Buddhism began 1,400 years ago and where Shaolin-style boxing — the original kung fu — was developed by Zen mystics.



De Chan is the abbot of Shaolin Monastery. Recently a martial-arts school was established near the monastery, reflecting the growing interest of the Chinese in the Shaolin style of boxing.

SHAOLIN MONASTERY, China — Nestled in the green woods of China's sacred Song Mountain, the Shaolin Monastery still exudes the peace and serenity of Zen Buddhism, the sect that began here 1,400 years ago.

But fists and feet are flying fast in one of the red-walled monastery's courtyards as an elderly monk coaches a group of youths in Shaolin-style boxing — the original kung fu — which the Zen mystics developed along with their intensive meditation.

"Kung fu boxing and Zen meditation do seem like a contradiction — violence versus tranquility," Shaolin's abbot, the Venerable De Chan, commented, "but each was meant to bring a different sort of peace. They were born together, they developed together over the centuries and, I think, they will become popular again together."

China already is gripped by a kung fu craze, if not by a revival of Zen mysticism. Hundreds of thousands of new students have enrolled in Chinese martial-arts schools in past months, wanting to learn Shaolin-style boxing.

"The whole country seems to want to learn kung fu," said Jiao Baocheng, director of the Dengfeng County Sports commission, which recently established a martial-arts school near the 15-century-old monastery. "We have applications from every province in China and from as far away as Mississippi in the United States, from people who want to come to study Shaolin-style boxing at Shaolin. Some people even show up on our doorstep after traveling across half the country."

WITHIN THREE MONTHS, the Dengfeng school received more than 5,700 applications, some from young men planning to leave their jobs to enroll, others from parents wanting their children to learn kung fu, but it had room for only 145, most of them paying their own way.

"Now that armies have tanks and airplanes, Shaolin boxing may seem very outdated as a fighting style," Liang Mingchuan, the school's chief coach, said, "but in fact there is a tremendous amount of interest in it again as a sport and a way of keeping physically fit. We are training a whole new generation of kung fu fighters."

Much of the interest stems from new kung fu movies reminiscent of Hong Kong's swashbuckling films starring the late Bruce Lee a decade ago. The latest, "Shaolin Temple," a joint Chinese-Hong Kong production filmed here at the monastery, is now showing to packed theaters. Its hero, Li Lianjie, 19, who plays Zhang the Tiger Cub, a soldier-monk championing the oppressed, has become the idol of China's kung fu craze.

The growing craze worries some Chinese, who see it as dangerous or decadent.

"These kung fu novels and movies give our people the wrong values," a newspaper editor complained in Peking. "They glorify feudal society, they praise Shaolin's knight-monks for defending the emperor against the peasants and generally they give youth the feeling that it would have been far better to live 1,000 years ago than to be working to build the country today. We don't have time for such daydreams."

THE PROLIFERATION OF highly popular martial arts romances, many of them based on old legends about Shaolin and the feats of its kung fu masters, has been criticized as "feudal trash," and bookstores have been told to review all such novels carefully and discard those that fail to meet the ideological test.

When youths began to practice "tiger-slaying blows" and "ox-killing kicks" in the parks of several northeastern Chinese cities after an action-packed Japanese television series shown here, local sports commissions sent their coaches to get them into "safe sports — safe for them and safe for others."

Noting that some youths were trying to break stone tablets with their heads, split rocks with their bare hands and were practicing many of the potentially fatal Shaolin-style blows, the paper Sports Daily commented, "All they have succeeded in doing is hurting themselves."

The martial arts, it said, require careful training under experienced coaches.

But for some youths that takes the fun out of kung fu. Striking a stone bench repeatedly to harden his hands after half an hour of vigorous practice in Peking's Sun Altar Park, Li Zhixian, 20, an electrician who took up kung fu after seeing "Shaolin Temple," said, "Shaolin-style boxing builds strength and power — that's its attraction."

At the Dengfeng County martial arts school, Jiao commented,"The first thing we do with people who enroll here is to make sure of their motivation. There is a history and a philosophy behind Shaolin boxing as a form of self-defense, and this must be properly understood before one can master the techniques.

"I KNOW SOME PEOPLE are worried about the bad effects of the tremendous new interest in Shaolin boxing and the other martial arts, but here at Shaolin itself we do not feel this way. Those who are naive or have romantic or wild ideas, we educate. Besides, seven hours of hard training a day matures a person very quickly."

Under Liang, 53, and the school's 13 other coaches, including two former monks from the monastery, students are drilled rigorously in the basic movement of Shaolin boxing, which is considered here to be the first but no longer the only form of kung fu. The movements, numbering more than 100, are practiced up to six hours a day until they are almost a blur. Then comes training with spears, cudgels and swords and a drilling in the traditional practice of one man fighting off two or three.

"Shaolin boxing is a traditional Chinese sport," Liang, whose great-grandfather was trained by the monks at the monastery, said, "and just because some Hong Kong or foreign films have used it does not make it alien or decadent. When I train my own children, the fifth generation of Shaolin boxers in our family, I emphasize its Chineseness as well as its role in strengthening physical fitness."

Like most traditions in China, kung fu has split into several schools, according to coach Liang. In the north, use of the hands is emphasized, and vise-like grips and sledge-hammer punches are developed. In southern China, a kung fu fighter uses his feet more, and six different kicks are said to be lethal.

"True Shaolin boxing is directed solely at the intended effect — every move has its purpose, and nothing is for show," Liang said. "There is no attempt as such to 'psyche' an opponent, just to beat him. The intention is to leave an opponent flat on the ground.

"OF COURSE, AS a sport, Shaolin boxing has been refined, and it is practiced within defined limits, but there is still the same economy of action, direct strikes, very rapid, very deft movements. Also, you can appreciate these movements for their beauty, but actually you should see nothing but a blur."

Liang's course is tough, even for those who already know one of the other kung fu styles and have spent as much as 20 years learning what Shaolin's monks used to go through.

To increase their agility they exercised and ran with 20-pound bags of sand tied to their arms and legs. To develop their famous "fist of iron," they thrust their fingers into pails of flint shards and pounded their hands against the monastery's stone walls.

"To master Shaolin boxing, you had to be determined," the abbot, De Chan, 67, said in an interview. "The stories about each of the soldier-monks of Shaolin being able to fight off 100 or 1,000 persons, to leap from the ground to the roof of a house or the top of the city wall, to kick a wooden door to splinters are not legends, not at all, but true. Absolutely true. It took much hard practice, however, and a lot of determination."

The abbot, who came to the monastery as a youth paused to explain how determination is measured at Shaolin. The 6th-Century Indian monk Boddhidarma, who founded Buddhism's Zen sect, once meditated for nine years straight, facing a monastery wall glancing up only once to acknowledge a disciple who had cut off his arm to demonstrate his own determination.

"Meditation and boxing — the key to both is determination and total concentration, the abbot said.

A kung fu student wielding a cudgel wards off two others at the monastery. Many parents send their children to martial-arts school to learn this ancient style of fighting.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram

A crucifix thrusts skyward, and beyond, a monolith marks the location of the explosion of the world's first atomic bomb on July 16, 1945. In a 90-minute tour of Trinity Site in White Sands Missile Range last week, the public and press were allowed to trod the historic site and view an unarmed atomic bomb.

A damned site

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. — It was a site fated to be both glorified and damned.

It lay in the northernmost reaches of the creosote-ruled Jornada del Meurto, a lonely stretch of wasteland surrounded by evidences of cataclysm — the upheaved Oscura Mountains sentineling the desolation along a north-south line; the black, tornadic-like lava flow of the Malpais splashed across 50 miles of New Mexico desert on the east; dunes of gleaming gypsum rolling wavelike along the southern horizon; the peaks of the San Andres Mountains thrusting against the sky to the southwest.

But all were to pale by comparison to what happened at Ground Zero at 5:30 on the morning of July 16, 1945.

It began with the sudden flaming of an ineffably bright orb at the apex of a 100-foot tower, and as the structure collapsed the fireball fell and began to grow. For a fraction of a second its light transcended anything ever spawned before by man and would have been visible from the outer reaches of the Solar System.

The temperature of the sun's surface is only one-fourth that of the fiery mass which sent a molten black dust storm boiling and billowing outward. The crevices of every peak and ridge of the Oscura Mountains above glinted golden, purple, violet, grey, and the shock wave that wrenched land and sky would shatter windows 120 miles away in Silver City.

On that moment, an eyewitness said later, hung eternity. Time stood still. It was as though the earth had opened and the sky had split. It was like being present at the moment of creation.

Or doomsday.

One scientist watching the birth of the atom bomb and the nuclear age that morning wept. "My God," he cried, "we have created hell."

It was to bring peace to the world within a month — at the expense of tens of thousands in Hiroshima and Nagasaki — but today its genesis marks the very foundation on which the future of mankind wavers so precariously.

One week ago they returned to the site: the scientific minds who spawned the weapon; men and women who remembered the flash of light and shock wave of 37 years' past; the infants who must forever live in the shadow of that moment; and the peacemakers, who could not comprehend how man could give birth to such horror and blaspheme God by calling the site Trinity.

Blow a mountain into the heavens at St. Helens and vegetation returns within a few weeks. Detonate a nuclear bomb and even after 37 years a marked difference in vegetation exists. Only a few miles distant from Trinity, the creosote and chaparral of the desert flourishes; approach the radiation and jade-like melted sand where man meted out to himself a future of gloom and morbidity and only grasses reign.

"I know how deeply some feel about this powerful weapon," one speaker told the crowd which swarmed to this mecca-like place. "But remember also the paradox: Yes, it was a (devastating device), but the technology that produced it is also responsible for medical research and treatment that leads to longer life for each of us."

Dr. J.J. Wechster lay on a ridge eight miles distant and watched that fateful day unfold in 1945, and this scientist who as a member of the Manhattan Project help create that terrifying and unprecedented moment returned to Trinity for the first time last week.

"We recognize that this was the culmination of an unbelievable scientific endeavor because of the diversified efforts of many people from many countries," said Wechster, who still serves as a consultant to the Los Alamos Laboratory.

Even today, that culmination blazes vividly in his mind, and the emotions which overwhelmed him at the moment of the atomic bomb's birth remain unchallenged except by those forged with the mushrooming of the hydrogen bomb.

"We all lay down on the ground, facing away with our arms on our eyes," said Wechster, recounting the pre-dawn hours, July 16, 1945. "When it exploded it was so bright I felt as if I could see it. As I looked, I was completely overwhelmed by the fact the fireball seemed to be continuing to grow."

The ball exploded in scintillation, hurling the world into conflagration. Even though scientists later bulldozed-in the 400-yard-wide, eight-foot-deep crater, they could not hide the scars it slashed into mankind's future.

An Episcopalian priest made a pilgrimage to Trinity during the annual tour, and his mood was a sepulchral one, as though he stood in the midst of the most ghastly wake of all. Beneath the monolithic tower of rock which serves as a monument to the splitting of the atom, he and his fellow worshippers held a peace mass, a seven-foot crucifix binding them spiritually.

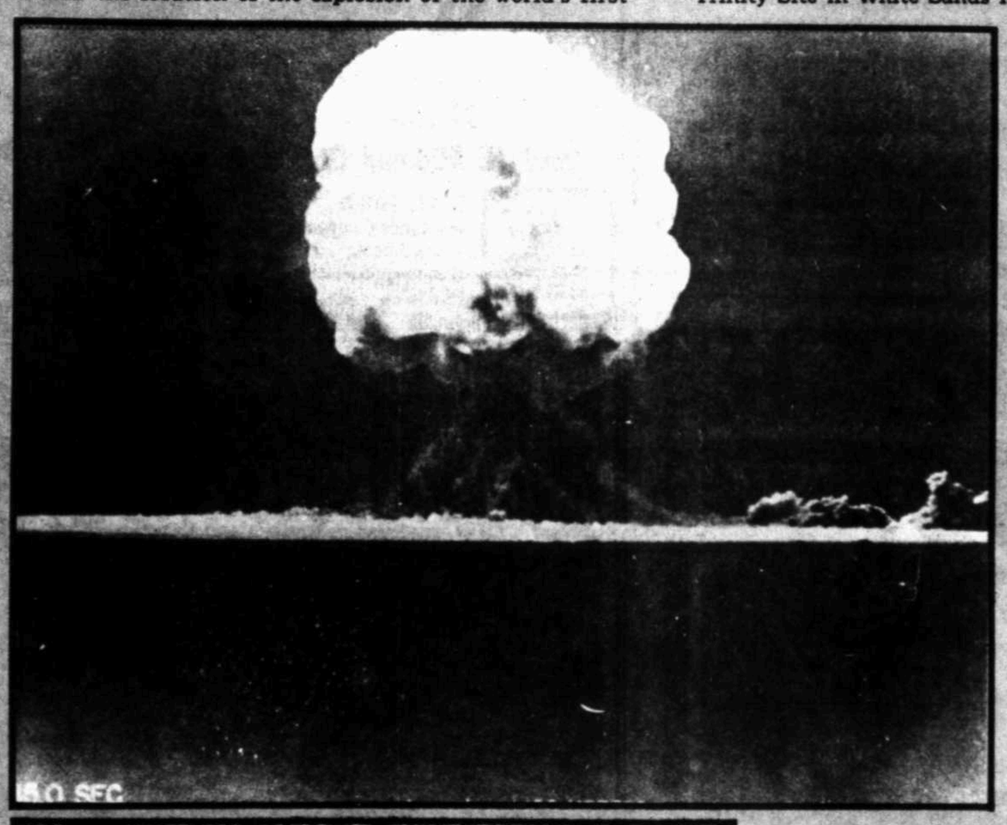
"We offered a peace mass here because we're concerned about the misuse of God's creation," said Henry Bird, a priest in an Episcopal church in Socorro, N.M.

"Man is attempting to blow the world apart...and we just want to offer this as a witness to our concern. I feel we have a responsibility to God's creation as He's given it to us, and as a Christian I think we have a responsibility to be a peacemaker and not a warmaker. We tend to trust too much in the world's power."

The chaplain of White Sands Missile Range called upon a greater power to oversee mankind's actions during the invocation, and the irreverence of Ground Zero Day left all heads bowed in somberness.

"We must confess," he prayed, "that we too often turn away from You. We have thwarted and wasted your treasures. Help us. We pray for your peace."

And as the winds of a helicopter rotor swept the dust of Doomsday against their backs, a thousand persons filed quietly through the fortified gates of Trinity to seek tomorrow.



At this moment in 1945, above, a paradox occurred. Peace was assured, but the world was plunged into decades of horror and fear. Upon detonation, the Trinity fireball raced toward the horizon and grew, until at the 15-second mark it mushroomed and forever altered the New Mexican desert.

Candidates for county, precinct offices report expenses

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Candidates running for public office in the Nov. 2 general election are priming for the final assault wave in their campaign for votes.

And they're spending money to get exposure and name recognition at that crucial moment on the first Tuesday in November when the voter flips the levers and yanks the big stick across the breadth of the voting machine.

Eight incumbents in Midland County are unopposed for election and are secure in their posts. Three other incumbents are being threatened with unemployment, and they and their opponents are the ones taking in campaign contributions and spending money on advertising and person-to-person encounters.

IN ONE OF SIX contested candidates for Midland County and precinct offices, veteran Peace Justice Robert H. "Bob" Pine, 66, has spent $3,754.06 in his bid for re-election, according to campaign revenue and expenditures reported to Midland County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry.

Pine, a Democrat who has been justice of the peace since 1964, is being challenged by the Republican Party's nominee, heavy-equipment operator Bob Coonce, 45. Through the last campaign reporting period, Coonce had spent $1,152.17.

Democrat Madge Wallis, the 58-year-old district clerk who is campaigning under the catch phrase "proven performance," so far has expended $3,493.91 to keep the job.

Seeking to oust Ms. Wallis, who has been in slot since 1975, is Vivian Wood, 43, a former lead deputy clerk under her opponent. Ms. Wood, an assistant purchasing agent for a major oil company, has reported $917.10 in campaign expenses.

Republican C. Wallace "Wally" Craig, a 58-year-old real estate broker and former public school trustee, so far has shelled out $4,892.92 in his bid to defeat veteran Midland County Commissioner Charlie Welch, 56. Welch, who has been Precinct 2 commissioner since 1969, has reported $739.98 in expenditures.

SO FAR, PINE has led his opponent in campaign contributions and expenses.

Pine's contributions totaled $5,227.31, and his expenditures added up to $3,754.06. His campaign treasurer is R.H. Gifford.

Coonce has reported $1,570 in contributions, which include $1,200 which he loaned to his own campaign, and $1,152.17 in expenditures.

Pine's contributors and the amounts they gave toward his re-election include: Mrs. and Mrs. J.T. Seago, $50; Frank B. Essex, $200; Jimmie Oglesby, $100; Al Boyd, $200; Leslie Acker, $100; Maurice R. Bullock, $100; Hal Brockett and Michael Cunningham, $50; Joel Dow Starnes Jr., $100; J.K. "Rusty" Wall, $100; Eddie Garza, $50; A.C. Wheat, $50; Randall Lundy, $100; Word B. Sherrill Jr., $100; Dr. Martha Madsen, $100; Mike Ochotorena, $100; Newnie W. Ellis, $274.56; Bill C. Thomas, $200; Edgar Brown and Charles Eiland, $100; Joe Carr and Henry Culp, use of sign boards, estimated value at $1,400; Glenn Pine, use of truck and help, estimated value at $1,000; R.H. Pine, $332.75.

Pine's expenditures have included $434.75 to Quality Printing; $565.76 to Screen Process Specialty; $4.73 to Energy Plus; $16.07 to Ken Arp; $332.75 to R.H. Pine for postage, photographs and filing fee.

COONCE'S campaign income is fairly close to his expenditures. As his own treasurer, he reported $1,570 in revenue, including $1,200 which he loaned to his own cause, and $100 from Johnnie Ryan, $100 from Charles Hyde and $100 from the Republican Women's Club.

His expenditures, which totaled $1,152.17, were credited to Qualified Printers, $475.50; Midland County Republican Party, $125 for pro rata share of printing brochure; $234 to U.S. Postal Services; $200 to Midland County Republican Party.

In an effort to retain her position, Ms. Wallis has taken in $3,996.42 in contributions. Of that amount, $2,616.42 are loans from her to her campaign fund. Her campaign expenditures totaled $3,493.91.

Contributors to her campaign and amount given include: Madge B. Wallis, $2,616.42 in loans; Gene Shelburne Jr. $60; Henry Sara-nec, $20; Gayle Newman, $75; Tom Scott, $200; Maurice R. Bullock, $250; Jack D. Ladd, $25; Hal Brockett and Michael Cunningham, $100; Perry D. Pickett, $25; Stubbeman, McRae, et al., $500; Martin C. Meissner, $25; Mark Hoover, $100; Ed Darnell, use of 16 metal signs.

Ms. Wallis's expenditures include $18.90 to Rubin's Studio of Photography; $102.21 to Penny-Quick Printing; $384.10 to Qualified Printers; $100 to the U.S. Postal Service; $4.25 to Albertson's supermarket; $2.08 to M-System; $15.75 to A-1 Floral; $370.48 to The Midland Reporter-Telegram; $594.33 to Western Data Services for address labels of registered voters; $25 to Dellwood Mall; $555.25 to DuPriest Sign of Dallas; $610.58 to Shedd Brown; $110.48 to Handy Dan's; $113.09 to Home Lumber Co.; $8.41 to Palmer Pipe; $180 to "The Midlander" magazine..

Ms. Wallis is her own treasurer.

MS. WOOD'S contributions from about 30 sources totaled $3,063.78. Expenditures added up to $917.10.

Contributors included Ford Chapman, $100; J.O. Slaton, $50; Johnny Hill, $100; Texas Federation of Republican Women, $100; Loraine Hill, $50; B.M. Hanson, $50; Wm. B. Smith, $100; John Hendrix, $500; L.R. French Jr., $100; Ron York, $250; Gordon Schrank, $200; W.A. Thomason, $150; Republican Women's Club, $400; Ivey Motor Co. of Robert Lee, $50; The Company Store, $198.25 in donated lumber; Johnny Hill, $51.54; Dan Dalton, $100 for use of truck and trailer; Marvin Wood, $200 for use of equipment.

Expenditures reported by Ms. Wood were $12 for service charges at Commercial Bank & Trust Co.; $267.83 to B.W. Specialty Co.; $347.92 to Qualified Printers; $40 to All American Trophy; $69.35 to Kelly-Moore Paint Co.; $180 to "The Midlander" magazine; $244 in contributions from $15 to $49.

Ms. Wood's campaign treasurer is Barbara Dalton.

IM THE CAMPAIGN for commissioner, Craig has taken in $6,650.10 in contributions and has spent $4,892.92.

Craig's contributors in the most recent reporting period include Roy L. Allen of Odessa, $100; Julius O. Blake Jr., $300; Midland County Republican Women's Club, $100, and C.W. Craig, $500.

His expenditures included $125 to the Midland County Republican Party for his pro rata share of printing cost for Grand Old Party brochure; $572 to Screen Process Specialty for yard signs; $205.18 to Western Data Services for address labels. Most of Craig's campaign income and outgo were reported in an earlier statement. His campaign treasurer is L. Decker Dawson.

Expenditures included $300 to the Midland County Democratic Party for filing fee; $309.98 to The Midland Reporter-Telegram; $80 to the U.S. Postal Service.

UNOPPOSED LOCAL candidates by party affiliation include:

Democratic Party: 238th State District Court Judge Vann Culp, who has been on the bench since 1977; Midland County Court-at-Law Judge Willie DuBose, judge since 1978; County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry, who has been county clerk since 1951; County Treasurer Dee Thompson, who has held that post since 1959.

Republican candidates who are shoo-ins in the general election are 318th State District Court Judge Barbara Culver, who has been on the state bench since 1978; County Commissioner Win Brown, Precinct 4 commissioner since 1971; County Judge William B. "Bill" Ahders, judge since 1978; County Attorney J. Scott Henderson, who was appointed to the job late last year when then-County Attorney Robert V. Rendall resigned.

Could you tell me where we could take a sampling of our foam insulation to see if it is harmful? It is the spray foam that hardens inside the walls. — G.W.S.

ANSWER: Gerald Stautzenberger with Midland Insulation Co. says that from your description of the insulation, it could be harmful. The white foam-type insulation could contain urea formaldehyde, which can produce a toxic fume believed to cause cancer.

Stautzenberger suggests you contact Rockwell Industries in Belton, Texas. According to him they have a well-equipped department to test products. Rockwell's toll free number is 1-800-792-3002.

Would like to know if there is a doctor in the Permian Basin area who gives Chelation therapy (EDTA)?

Houston, Dallas and Amarillo are the only towns that I have been able to locate doctors who give this type of therapy. All are too far from Midland for me to take the therapy. Thank you. — P.M. King

ANSWER: Dr. T.A. Reddy, Midland physician, says that this form of treatment is not recognized by the American Medical Society at this time, because it has not been proven scientifically. He also is not aware of any doctor in the Permian Basin administering the therapy.

Note: Answer Line has been informed there is another chimney sweep "in the woodpile" requesting equal time in the column. Midlanders wishing to have their chimneys checked and possibly cleaned can contact Midland Chimney Sweep, 206 Oakridge Square, telephone 687-4045.

I have a number of years of old National Geographic magazines in good condition that I would like to give away. Do you know of anyone who can use them? Also, some Readers Digests and Wildlife magazines. They are certainly too good to throw away, but must be disposed of. — J.M.

ANSWER: Answer Line checked with Barbara Tillman, periodicals librarian with the Midland County Public Library, and she says the library has bound editions of National Geographic from the year 1907 to current issues and has copies of the other magazines you mention. Therefore, Ms. Tillman says the library does not need duplicates of these particular publications.

However, she recommends you call Mary Mann, 697-5463, who is with the Friends of the Library. The "Friends" collect magazines and books throughout the year and, of course, for their book sale. Proceeds from the sale of magazines, etc., by the "Friends" provides money to assist the public library. Ms. Tillman also notes that "good prices are received at the sales for National Geographics."

Texas Tech gets engineering grant

LUBBOCK — A $25,000 grant has been given to the Texas Tech University College of Engineering by the Halliburton Foundation for faculty enhancement.

Dr. Jimmy H. Smith, interim dean of engineering, accepted a check from David G. Turner, corporate personnel manager for Brown & Root Inc., an operating unit of the Halliburton Co.

The grant may be used to supplement the salaries of faculty members, to make incentive awards or to provide assistance in professional development activities.

Trinity faculty members attend meeting

Six faculty members from Trinity School were in Houston for the annual conference of the Southwestern Association of Episcopal Schools Thursday through Saturday.

Participants in the conference, which had the theme "Education Without Walls," took excursions into Metropolitan Houston to examine a variety of educational areas, including Texas and American history, learning through play, art and performing arts, natural science, life science, biology, math, business, communication arts, counseling, administration and N.A.S.A.

The Rt. Rev. Gordon Charlton, Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of Texas, spoke and celebrated at the opening service at the Church of the Holy Spirit. Astronaut Major Charles Bolden spoke at the Adam's Mark Hotel, conference headquarters Saturday.

Lee High graduate given scholarship

James Allen Moseley, a 1982 graduate of Lee High School, is the recipient of a $1,000 Clark Foundation scholarship from the Texas Interscholastic League Foundation. The Clark Foundation provided funds for 60 grants, given by TILF on the basis of participation in UIL extracurricular activities and other classroom achievements.

Moseley earned eligibility for the grant by placing second at the 1982 UIL State Meet persuasive speaking contest. He was a member of the National Forensics League, the National Honor Society and the National Thespian Society.

An honor graduate, he is attending Austin College in Sherman.

Gift boosts UTPB endowment fund

ODESSA — A $1,000 gift from Perry Gas Companies, Inc., to the University of Texas of the Permian Basin's College of Management Advisory Council brings the council's new endowment excellence fund to about $3,500 in gifts and pledges.

Ken Martin, advisory council chairman and general manager of Clark Engineering Company of Odessa, said endowment fund goal is $100,000. He noted the purpose of the advisory council is to maximize the role of the College of Management to the mutual benefit of the college and businesses throughout the Permian Basin and Texas.

Martin pointed out that gifts to the fund will be invested and the income will be used to help the College of Management improve its benefits to the area's business community. Plans call for using the excellence endowment fund for student and faculty recruitment and for recognition of student, faculty and business leaders in the community.

PBHS establishes Student Council

Four students at Permian Basin High School have been elected by the student body in establishing a Student Council.

Elected officers of the Constitution and By-laws Committee were Drue Thomas, chairman; Jeb Montgomery, vice chairman; Adriane Hillin, secretary; and Elliott Barron, treasurer.

The group will be responsible for directing the writing of the organization's constitution and by-laws, according to Dick Smith, social studies instructor and Student Council adviser.

OSHA investigators find no violation in electrocution death of carpenter

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A federal investigation did not produce any safety violation citations in the death of Michael Barry Manning, a 20-year-old California carpenter electrocuted Aug. 2 at the Polo Park Apartment complex under construction at Loop 250 and North A Street.

"We did not allege a violation," Jerry Bailey, director of OSHA's job safety division office in Lubbock, said Friday, adding that "there was nothing really conclusive."

Manning was pronounced dead at Midland Memorial Hospital at 5:18 p.m. — about an hour after he picked up his father's metal-cased handsaw, the cord of which had been repaired with duct tape. An insurance company investigator concluded that the splice had retained moisture after rain showers the night before and again that morning.

"If the splice in the cord had been properly made...this accident would not have happened," said the insurance investigator's report.

OSHA restricted its investigation to the death itself, and not to any other safety violations that may have existed on the site.

Because the death was not immediately reported by Manning's employer, OSHA investigators did not look into the fatality until a month after it occurred. Although the J.T. Pass Construction Co. of Dallas was the contractor, it had sub-contracted the carpentry work Manning was doing to Manning's father, 45-year-old Patrick Manning of Desert Hot Springs, Calif., according to Bailey.

In effect, he said, Manning's employer was his father, and even if a safety violation had caused or been a factor in the death: "Really, Mr. Manning would be responsible for the incident. It was his equipment. His tools. And he actually supervised, I guess, his son and the other individuals.

"If we found a violation, we'd almost have to cite him. And there's no sense in doing that. It's not our normal policy to cite family members."

Asked why investigators did not do a formal inspection of the site itself while they were out there, Bailey said, "There's a lot of construction activity. It's a day-by-day, case-by-case situation. We've made several inspections in that area (Midland-Odessa) and we have alleged certain violations, but we didn't find any excessive violations."

"Besides El Paso, we've probably done more construction (inspections) in Midland-Odessa than anywhere else in our area."

In a recent statement, Midland Carpenter's Local 1428 Business Agent Jim Purcell took OSHA to task for allegedly ignoring what he termed are "gross violations of safety occurring daily on building construction sites," where the preponderance of help is non-union.

Purcell said safety complaints generally have to be handled by mail to Lubbock and noted "a minimum 10-day response time. (And) building contractors are forewarned of an OSHA investigation and will correct safety violations before the inspector arrives.

"When the inspector has gone, the contractor will return to lax enforcement of safety laws."

Bailey said while there are cases where OSHA is required to obtain a warrant before being allowed on a job site, contractors normally should not know an inspection is coming. He also said his nine-member "compliance staff" has 79 counties to cover.

"If he (Purcell) has any complaints on jobs that he's representing, we'll be glad to respond to any (specific) complaints."

About 75 bicyclists join Davis Mountains ride

FORT DAVIS — Seventy-five bicyclists from Austin to El Paso rode in the recent fifth annual Davis Mountains Cycle-Fest & Mountain Climb and through "some of the most beautiful...and breathtaking scenery in Texas," according to Midland cyclist David Ham.

Of the 75 riders who set their own pace, 34 completed the 75-mile loop. Riders ranged in age from 8 to 72 and rode from 10 to 75 miles.

Among the riders were 19 Midlanders. And among the top finishers were Lubbock's Tommy Hutchinson, who rode the loop in 4½ hours, and Becky Durham, Randy Kissling, David Eggleston and David Ridley, all of Midland; Mark Mathis and Greg Moll, both of Lubbock; Richard Brown and Carl Murdock, both of Odessa.

Finishing first in another event, the two-mile, 17-to-19-degree grade up to the McDonald Observatory on Mount Locke, was Kissling, who pedaled the climb in seven minutes and seven seconds. Runners-up were Mark Mathis, Mark Miter, Becky Durham, Dave Donnell, Richard Brown, Doug Benoit, Tom Seikman, Carl Murdock, Martin Waggoner and Devin Durham.

Among youngsters who participated in a bicycle rodeo of barrel racing, goat sacking and ribbon pulling were Herve and Mathew LeBoeuf, BreAnn Percell, Andy Hutchinson and Zack Ham.

The weekend event was sponsored by Peyton's Bikes of Midland, Prude Ranch of Fort Davis and Hutchinson Cycles of Lubbock.

Ranch names new marketing director

Joe Hill

FORT WORTH — Joe E. "Skipper" Hill, who represents the third generation of a Midland ranching family, has been named marketing director of the Cleburne-based Georges Creek Ranch, which is a full-blood Simmental cattle operation.

Hill was former executive secretary of the Texas Simmental Association.

"Skipper brings a wealth of expertise to our organization in the area of sales, marketing and breed promotional ability," said Bradley Mann, general manager of Georges Creek Ranch.

During his four years as TSA executive director, Hill developed TSA's highly successful Approved Sales Program, organized fund-raising events and coordinated breed promotion and sales management efforts for the association.

"I am very excited about the future of these cattle," Hill said of the Simmental breed. "Nowhere do I know of a herd of fullblood Simmental with more genetic power, depth and numbers than here at the Georges Creek Ranch. The potential for producing superior Simmental seedstock, herd bulls and commercial range bulls is almost unlimited." Georges Creek Ranch is one of the largest supliers of fullblood Simmental cattle in the United States."

Hill, a 1970 graduate of Texas Tech University, managed his family' 450-head commercial cattle operation in the early 1970s. He and his brother were among the first West Texas ranchers to use Simmental bulls on their commercial herd.

Symposium to focus on mesquite uses

LUBBOCK — Ranchers who want to rid their rangeland of mesquite and making money at the same time may learn how in a Mesquite Utilization Symposium at The Museum of Texas Tech University Oct. 29 and 30.

"This symposium culminates five years of Texas Tech research specifically on uses for mesquite," according to Dr. Robert C. Albin, associate dean of the Texas Tech College of Agricultural Sciences. "In no way do we advocate growing mesquite for beneficial use. Rather, the symposium will show ways to defray the costs of cleanup and control of mesquite.

Registration for the symposium will begin at 7:45 a.m. Oct. 29. Cost of participating in the symposium is $30 and includes meals.

Agriculture aide to address CIAGA

C.W. McMillan

HOUSTON — C.W. "Bill" McMillan, U.S. Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, will be the keynote speaker at the Confederacion Interamericana de Ganaderos (CIAGA —InterAmerican Cattleman's Association) convention in the Grand Hotel in Houston on Nov. 2-5.

The convention will focus on livestock production methods. Technical presentations will be on "The World Meat Situation," "Ranch Management in the Tropics" and "Beef Cattle Production."

In addition to McMillan, speakers will include Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown and CIAGA President Arturo de la Garza of Mexico City.

Texans ship 15,618 head of livestock

AUSTIN — Texas exporters shipped 15,618 head of livestock from Texas exporting facilities in August, according to Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown.

"The total number of livestock exported from the state during August of this year is substantially higher than the 8,170 head shipped from the state during August of last year," he said.

Accumulated export figures for 1982 include 6,722 head of cattle, 20,107 goats, 2,336 hogs, 104,638 sheep and 318 horses. Exporters reported a value of $15.9 million on the exported livestock. Value of livestock exported in 1981 was estimated at $19.2 million.

Two Midland County 4-H'ers earn club's highest honor

Jason Collier, 17, and Andrea Graham, 15, are winners of the 1982 Midland County 4-H Club Gold Star award, the highest honor given 4-H'ers at the county level. The two were honored in the recent Midland County 4-H Club Appreciation and Awards Banquet.

Midland County 4-H leaders Jason Collier of Midland and Andrea Graham of Greenwood recently were bestowed with the Gold Star award, which is the high honor given 4-H'ers at the county level.

Collier, 17, has been president of the Golden Rainbows and Green Acres 4-H Clubs for the past four years and has served as secretary, treasurer and reporter for the Midland County 4-H Council. He has been a representative to the Texas State 4-H Congress and has attended the 4-H Roundup for two years.

In his 4-H work, Collier has displayed interests in such projects as sheep, steers, rabbits, breeding cattle, veterinary science, health, safety, recreation, foods, clothing and agriculture. He has excelled in such projects as breeding cattle, through which he is financing his college education.

The youth, son of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Collier of Midland, is a freshman at Midland College. He his working toward a degree in agricultural education.

Miss Graham, 15, has been active in 4-H for six years. Her favorite project is beef. She has attended major livestock shows throughout Texas.

Miss Graham has delved into such 4-H projects such as sewing, foods and nutrition, safety, dairy, agronomy, electric energy and method demonstration. She represented Midland County in the 1981 district 4-H dress revue and represented the county in two district food shows. She has served as a junior leader in foods and nutrition.

Miss Graham has won five first-place awards at district in her method demonstrations. This year, she placed second in the Texas State 4-H Roundup with her electric energy demonstration.

She has served her 4-H Club as president, secretary, reporter, recreational leader and 4-H Council representative.

She is daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy H. Graham of Greenwood and is a sophomore at Greenwood High School. Her father earned the Gold Star award in 1956.

Commissioners to again consider construction

Midland County commissioners again will probe into plans for a new county jail and courthouse addition in their 9 a.m. Monday meeting in the Midland County Courthouse.

The commissioners will:

—Consider disposition of generator, horse leasing and security lights for the since-rejected stockade.

—Consider architect Walter Pate's report on the status of the schematic design of the jail and courthouse addition.

—Listen to John Deats, librarian for the Midland County Public Library, and Joan Baskin, chairman of the Library's Advisory Board, discuss the fixture fund for the proposed new library.

—Consider approving corrected plat of Batesville Subdivision.

—Consider approving road dedication from Willis Brinson.

—Consider approving dedication of County Road 56-West.

—Discuss with Roberta Johnson of the Texas Agricultural Extension Services the hiring of a Midland County agent to succeed Charlie Green, who has retired.

—Consider placing stop signs on Younger Drive at Carter Drive and at Younger Drive and Farm-to-Market Road 1788.

—Consider a request by Dr. Patrick Leung, the jail physician, for a registered nurse for the jail.

—Listen to Jerrie Westmoreland, county personnel director, give an update on operations of the personnel department.

Midland City Council

Midland City Council will be faced with the decision of granting a temporary permit for an asphalt plant outside the city limits on the east side of town in light of organized opposition from nearby residents when the item comes up for a public hearing Tuesday.

The issue will be taken up at 3:30 p.m. when the council meets in regular session in City Hall Council Chambers. The council will start on the rest of the 47-item agenda at 10 a.m. that day.

Request for the temporary permit has been filed by Clyde C. White and Richard Moise. The plant would be located on a 160.41 acre tract east of County Road 1160 North at the extension of Wadley Avenue.

Work on constructing the plant had started, but it was stopped upon the request of city inspectors. The council had passed an ordinance which stopped all construction in the area that is being considered for annexation, except for single family residences. The asphalt plant falls within that area.

In other action, the council will hear a report from Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, an engineering firm, on the sewer collection system.

At 1:35 p.m., the council will hold a public hearing on levying assessments on the drainage program.

Proposed fare increases for MidTran, the public transportation system, will be discussed. At the last meeting, a public hearing was held on the proposed increases and no one showed up to protest.

A lease agreement with Al McGuire to set up a fixed base operation at Midland Air Park will be reviewed.

Also to be considered is replacement of dogs in the police department and scheduling training sessions for the dogs and their handlers.

MISD Board of Trustees

Action is expected to be taken on the addition of classrooms and a portable building at two elementary schools during the regular meeting of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the administration building, 702 N. N St.

The addition of six classrooms at Rusk Elementary School is expected to be approved, as is the purchase of an additional portable building for Travis Elementary, to be added on to bids submitted April 8 for 10 other portable buildings.

Trustees also are expected to approve a recommendation for the purchase of five 71-passenger and six 35-passenger school buses for replacements and to serve the new school cluster.

The approval of underground easements for electrical services at De Zavala and Quannah Parker elementary schools is expected to be approved.

Also on the agenda for approval are a MISD philosophy statement for Southern Association of Colleges and Schools accreditation, a request by the Lee High School choir director for permission for the choir to attend the America International Music Festival in Washington, D.C. in April, a gift from Crockett Elementary School PTA and a request from a church for continued use of a school for services.

Bids on mini-blinds for San Jacinto Junior High and custodial equipment also are expected to be approved.

The board will meet in executive session for discussion on real estate and personnel matters.

Salvation Army offers assistance

By the time Frankie King and Frank Porter arrived in Midland last July, they needed all kinds of help. Both teen-agers, they had left Midwest City, Okla., several weeks earlier. "My parents had split up," Frank explained, "and it just seemed like time for me to be on my own." Frankie, too, had family problems and decided to come along.

The two had piled clothes and an old TV set in the back seat of Frank's car and set out for Dallas. Before they left Oklahoma, though, the car broke down and they left it and all its contents beside the road and decided to hitchhike the rest of the way.

In Dallas, the plan changed and the boys set their sights on Las Vegas, where a friend of Frankie's family lived. They headed west on the Interstate, expecting to pick up some long rides toward their destination. Things just didn't seem to work out that way, though.

United Way of Midland

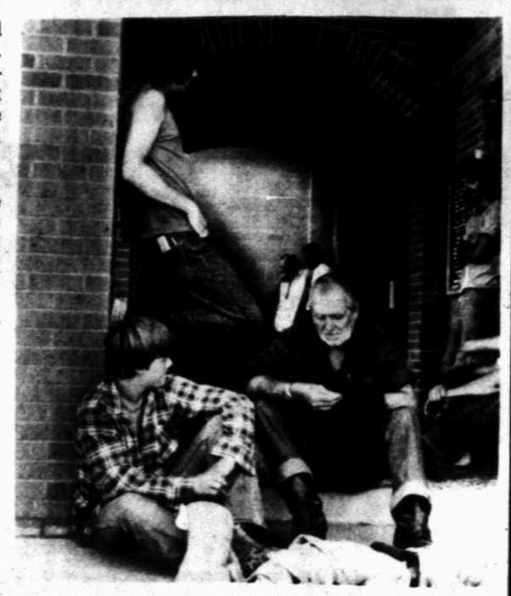
Their rides totaled less than 50 miles of the road from Dallas to Midland, and on the way they slept in culverts and under bridges. At one point, Frank persuaded Frankie to trade his digital watch to the owner of a roadside cafe in exchange for hamburgers and french fries.

Several days after leaving Dallas, the pair — wearing shorts and tank tops — arrived in Midland — feet blistered, severely sunburned, tired and hungry. They approached a minister for help, and he took them to the Salvation Army, a United Way agency.

As part of the TEAM program, many Midland churches turn over to the Salvation Army their budgets for emergency relief of non-members of their congregations. In return, the Salvation Army's caseworker screens the requests for assistance and determines which kinds of help are appropriate.

In addition to the assistance it provides to transients, the Salvation Army helps in disaster relief. On Sept. 24, shortly following the airplane crash at the Warwick Apartments, the Salvation Army joined the Red Cross in serving food and cold drinks to disaster relief workers and victims. Since that time, household items have been available to fire victims.

Like the two teen-agers, all the residents at the Salvation Army seem to have stories. One man had worked all week as a carpenter only to have his employer disappear on payday. Another man had left his wife and children behind in Houston hoping to save enough money by working in Midland to have them join him. A third complained that you know times are hard when a sign painter can't find steady work in Midland.



Thinking they could hitchhike from Dallas to Las Vegas, Nev., Frank Porter, standing, and his friend, Frankie King, sitting left, found themselves sunburned and blistered in Midland. They were sent to the Salvation Army where they found help with clothing, food and lodging, as did many others, including John Litchford.

In Frank and Frankie's case, the Salvation Army provided them with clothing from the thrift store as well as food and lodging. The boys were requested to participate in the Salvation Army's work program to compensate for the clothing and to help earn the bus tickets to Las Vegas the Salvation Army provided them after verifying that they would have a place to stay when they arrived.

The stories are different, but the people at the Salvation Army share common needs — a roof over their heads, food in their stomachs, a chance to get their lives together. Without passing judgment, the Salvation Army tries to meet those needs.

Story by Georgia Temple
Photos by Bill Hunter

His manner is intense. He leans forward when he speaks, locking the listener's concentration with his. His words fall over themselves, as they pour out of his mouth in their eagerness to find expression. But words are not enough.

Everything is gesture. Hands, arms, head, all move in time with the rising and falling sound of his voice. The heavy accent is unmistakably European; and yet he has lived in this country for more than 50 years. Is it carefully cultivated? Perhaps, but it doesn't matter; its effectiveness is felt as well as heard. Deep, vibrant and decidedly masculine, it moves rapidly, spilling words out in the manner of its own choosing. The word order denotes one who does not think in English; perhaps even one who does not think in any language but whose mind exists instead in a world of images and sensation, light and dark, a world of now and yesterday.

William A. Brigl, artist, teacher and personality extraordinaire, has lived through two world wars, three marriages, one which ended in divorce after 24 years and another which ended in death, and has financially run the gamut from poor to rich to poor to comfortable. The one consistent thread in his life has been his work. He has supported himself since the age of 19 by painting.

Of his most recent birthday Brigl said, "The years of past evening have gone and I am already 10 years above three scores and 10. I don't know how it happened, and I warn everybody to enjoy his life as much as possible because yesterday I was young."

Which is precisely when this story begins, when Bill Brigl was a youth surviving on the streets in his native state of Bavaria. At that time, Bavaria was one of five kingdoms incorporated into the German Empire in 1871 as relatively autonomous states. The second largest member state in the empire, Bavaria retained jurisdiction over most of its internal affairs. The Bavarian king kept his title, and his people retained their strong sense of identity as Bavarians, while adding to it a sense of identity as citizens of the German Empire. Times were not easy; a world war loomed just over the horizon.

"My youth was very, very severe. A street Arab is an Arabian kid which grows up on the street. That's where I grew up as my father had a very small salary working for the king of Bavaria as an artist. Food was always scarce, so I had to look for the daily bread somewhere else.

"When I was 10, I worked in a baker's shop, a fine baker who made cakes and cookies and he had a big box full of crumbs and I could eat as much cake crumbs as I wanted.

"When I was 14 years old, the Bavarian government put me into medicine. There was a war going on (World War I). I did not get any high school education, but I got a higher education that was past the high school education. So I got my high school and my medicinal education in eight semesters of medicine.

"My youth was very, very severe. A street Arab is an Arabian kid which grows up on the street. That's where I grew up."

"We used candles and kerosene lamps. I installed as a 15-year-old kid the electric light in the apartment my father had. I stole the electricity from the landlord by connecting it out in the light of the stairway because he (the father) couldn't afford it.

"After I had a very serious infection from a wounded soldier, I had to get out of medicine. For a serious infection at that time there was no antibiotics except alcohol, lye soap and iodine. So I shifted, as I knew the human body so well, to art.

"I was, when I was 19 years old, appointed to be the master student in Professor Sailer's studio at the Royal Academy in Munich. You had to think, 'How can you nourish yourself as a painter?' What I sold, I had to pay the Royal Academy as my fees. So I went to the baker's shop where I asked them for stale bread, and this was for quite a while my nourishment.

"I decided I wanted an oriental rug. I took three paintings and I went to a rug dealer. I asked him if he would trade a rug for my paintings. And he brought a rug out, brought a blue rug, and I liked that rug; it was a tapestry. I said, 'Gee, I'll take that.' And he said, 'Fine, now let me look at the paintings.' He said, 'I'll take this one.' And I would have given him all three. I wanted that rug. I had no pay; and I slept on the oriental rug.

"I needed suits. So I decided as you are an artist and you are 19 years old, you have to have hand tailored suits. How do you get them? And that's a simple thing if all you have to do is think a problem out. And you get what you want. I thought, 'Go to the hand tailor's, take some paintings, just like I did it with the rug.'

"I had the finest hand tailored suits. But the other students said, 'Hey! Who is your girl friend who buys you these suits?'"

I had the finest hand tailored suits. But the other students said, 'Hey, wait a minute! Who is your girl friend who buys you these suits?' I couldn't tell them. I had to accept from my friends I had a wealthy woman. I couldn't tell them because they would have done the same thing."

And that was the way Brigl survived. At that time Bavaria wasn't an easy place in which to live. The war had ended in November of 1918, leaving a collapsing German Empire in its wake. Revolutions broke out all over the remains of the empire, and Bavaria was no exception. From the summer of 1918 to the winter of 1923-1924, madness existed on both sides of the political spectrum. During the winter of 1918-1919, local communists took over power. Although they didn't remain in power long, it was enough time for Brigl to witness certain acts of violence.

"After the war was over, to my sadness, the communists took over. I saw with my own eyes as they mowed people down in the streets. I saw with my own eyes as the communists threw the furniture out of the windows of the better clientele of the city and made a huge pile outside and burned it up."

He also witnessed the senseless killing of a neighbor's son.

When he was 21, after two years at the Royal Academy, Brigl left Bavaria. His first stop was Italy where he restored old paintings and studied Renaissance art. After a little over a year, he moved to France to study the Impressionist artists.

"I moved to Paris where I got a studio at the Rue de Montparness No. 106. That's on the Left Bank of Paris.

"This art gallery in Paris asked me they'd like to buy my paintings, but I'd have to put French names on it. So as an artist, especially young, who's always hungry and he also looks at the females, he needs the money for that purpose and I accepted it. And lots of American tourists bought my paintings from a young artist of France."

The Impressionist movement had been named such in 1874 after a hostile critic had viewed a picture "Impression: Sunrise" by Claude Monet. Born in 1840, Monet was one of the most famous Impressionist painters, and the only one among the movement's major figures who remained faithful to the Impressionist view of nature.

"But at the same time, I met a painter. One day at the Cafe de la Paix, which is at the Place de l'Opera, I saw an old man coming in with a great beard and a slouch hat. And I asked the garcon, the waiter, 'Who is this artist?' 'What? You don't know Monsieur Claude Monet?' My eyes of course bulged, such a great man as him, I had to meet him. And I got up from my little iron chair and rushed over to him and told him in French, 'Monsieur Monet, my name is Mr. Brigl and I am an artist from Bavaria and it is a great honor for me to meet you.' He said a few words, but he did not ask me to sit down which was a tremendous disappointment. About a week later I came to the same cafe on account of the feminine expression which paraded past so I saw Monsieur Monet again. This time I was a little bit smarter. I said, 'Bonjour Monsieur Monet,' and I pulled up a chair and I sat down. And this is really hard to say get up and beat it. So we started to talk. So I slowly met, different times, Monsieur Monet.

"One day I had the smart idea to ask him if he wouldn't sell me a painting and how much he would charge for it. And he said, 'Un mil francs (less than $1,000).' I had the money and I thought, 'Gee, I guess I'll buy one.' He (Monet) lived outside of Paris in Giverny and he had a lily pond and he painted that lily pond about 40 times, in rain, in fog and in sunshine; he painted this lily pond over and over with a little bridge. And a thought struck me. 'No, don't buy it, he gives you one of these lily ponds and it will never get valuable.'

"Well, a lily pond today, if it isn't worth much, it's worth between $400,000 and $700,000. But, I was smarter, I cut my own nose off in this direction. He died in 1926 and I never had the chance to acquire a Monet."

It was at this time in his life that Brigl met someone who was to alter his life — his first wife.

"She was extremely good looking, highly cultured and spoke five languages fluently. Five languages and I never knew which language she would speak the whole day.

"One day we were walked outside of Paris through a grass field. She asked me if she would rent a house in Bordeaux and I should teach her two little sons to paint. And as I'm quite conservative in my way of thinking, I told her I am not the type who would make a gigolo to any woman. And she asked me, 'Do you want to tell me I have to marry you?' and I said, 'Well, I didn't ask you.' She said, 'All right, if you will give me a four-leaf clover now, I will marry you.' And believe or don't believe it, but there was a four leaf clover in about a foot and a half of grass standing in front of me. This was the end of bachelorhood. And as she was an American with lots of property in the United States, she wanted to go back to the United States, so I came as a war bride to the United States."

June 26, 1952, Brigl walked out of a court house with $70 in his pockets. He was single again. And after 24 years in this country, he was still a resident, not a citizen. During these years, besides spending his time painting, he had lectured in universities on two subjects, art and democracy.

"In 1946, the United States government sent a man from Washington, D.C., to my place where I lived in northern Wisconsin on a huge estate and asked me to go for two years to Germany to lecture on democracy. During my art lectures in universities, I talked about the value of free society, because it is impossible, absolutely impossible, to develop your brain in a controlled society; you are nothing but a stamp or a number. And the American government knew of my lectures; they knew it by word; they had somebody in it.

"My wife said, 'No. If you go over there for two years, I won't go and you have to go alone.' So I declined."

It was in 1946 that Brigl began giving weekly art lessons. So when he was divorced in 1952 and remarried shortly thereafter, he had an income. He found a nice studio in Chicago and began to rebuild his life.

"This studio was one of the outstanding studios in Illinois. And the Chicago Tribune made a movie in my studio and brought it out on television. And of course it helped to make me as one of the four outstanding painters of the state of Illinois when they made it. And of course it helped the sale of paintings considerably."

But Brigl lost his studio when the entire city block was sold, and he couldn't find another one in Chicago. Once again he relocated, this time to Texas and Highland Park, where, during his years there, he won one battle and lost another. He became a citizen of the United States in 1966, and lost his wife to cancer in 1969 after a nine-year illness.

"And then came the hounds of Baskervilles in the form of women. It's true. One woman, worth $300 million, offered me $1 million when I signed the marriage certificate, if I married her. But I said, 'No.' I didn't want it because I was married to one before."

It was then that Brigl's third wife, Jane, walked back into his life. The two had known each other since 1959 when she was a student of his. Two years ago, they moved to Midland. Neither is a stranger to this area. Mrs. Brigl is a native Midlander and Brigl has known Midland since the early 1930s.

"I knew Midland since 1933, when the hospital was out in the boon docks, far out, when everything was grass when you went past this place (Brigl's home at the corner of Garfield Street and Golf Course Road). The roads were mostly dirt roads and the dirt was flying all over."

On one trip Brigl made to Midland from Dallas, he outsmarted himself again, as he had done in Paris. He was offered a monetary gift by a man he didn't know. The offer was in cash and Brigl wasn't aware he could legally claim the gift by paying a gift tax to IRS.

The amount was sizeable.

"I walked out and left it; and I made a deadly mistake, I should have taken it. And take the money and go to the IRS office and say, 'Mr. So-and-So gave me this money as a present. Can I pay the gift tax on it?' The tax would have been maybe $30,000, I still would have had $130,000 left. It was when I was back in Dallas, that I found out I made a mistake, but it was too late."

Laughing his deep, chuckling laugh, he said, "You know, once in a while, you make mistakes."

Art: Portrait by the artist at 80

Photos by Bill Hunter

— William A. Brigl

Art is a part of William A. Brigl; the creation of it has occupied his mind for most of his 80 years. Works by him hang in six U.S. museums, 15 U.S. banks and numerous private collections in the United States, Europe and Australia. And Brigl has been, since 1950, a state appointed judge of fine arts for the state of Wisconsin, an appointment recognized in all of the 50 states.

"The art in France was at a revolutionary stage (during the 1920s when Brigl was working and studying in Paris). There was a period, well you still have it today in the United States, but there was (then in France) a period of modern painters. Picasso started that and these painters who followed him were called the Fauves - the wild beasts. They were ostracized. And slowly the so-called cultured nations picked up this style of painting because it doesn't require knowledge.

are born with two languages; the language of your eye ...and the movement of your limbs. The third language you have to learn, the language of the larynx.

"As we grow, all of a sudden our language is too poor to tell everything. You cannot say, 'I'm too cold;' 'I'm too hot.' You say it but nobody knows; you have to use your limbs again. You cannot say what you hear. You can repeat it in one of the forms of art; in music you can repeat it. You cannot say how red a flower is. You need the painter.

"Art is nothing in all its five forms but an expression of things you cannot say. The touch is one of your senses ...that goes into art. Take a blind person to one of the modern metal sculptures; he's cutting his fingers to pieces. It is art? It surely is a form of expression, but definitely not art.

"The word art comes from a Gallic word created in the 12th century when the cave paintings in the Pyrenees were found. It means 'to produce with your hands after nature pleasant to the senses.'

"You take the paintings of a child which is used in schools; you take the paintings of an insane person which is used in insane asylums; take the paintings of a modern painter; take three studies and mix them up. Line them up and you have a hard time to pick the child, the insane person and the modern painter. Why? very simple.

"Your storage cabinet as a child is hardly used, it's nothing but a computer, your storage cabinet in the brain. In an insane person, it's partly switched off so it cannot give what it should give. And then comes the modern painter, who is lying."

A direct descendent of the Flemish painters, Peter and John Breughel, William A. Brigl was born in Bavaria near the turn of the century. At 16, he studied with marine painter Eric Mercker; At 18, he was accepted at the Academy of Fine Arts of Munich. He was briefly guided by the French Impressionist painter Claude Monet before Monet's death in 1926.

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Carolyn Shultz wants to be a doctor.

She knows it will be expensive, so she is enrolled in a respiratory therapy course at Midland College that will allow her to work in the health field while earning her medical degree.

"Most people think a respiratory therapist is someone who administers oxygen, but there's a lot more to it," Ms. Shultz said. "And I'm beginning to realize this through this course."

THE PROGRAM'S enrollment has increased since its beginning in 1969, as more individuals have started to recognize the occupation as a career.

There are, for example, four students who are asthmatic and say they understand what it's like to be without air and would like to help others.

Two others are employed — in Big Spring and Seminole hospitals — but want to become board certified after completing the course.

And with contracts established between the college and area hospitals, the program is able to offer clinical, or on-the-job, training to produce prospective certified respiratory therapists for West Texas.

THE FULL-TIME, one-year program which is approved by the American Medical Association offers lecture, laboratory and clinical hospital experience courses.

Upon completion, students receive a certificate of completion and are eligible to take the certification examination by the National Board for Respiratory Therapy.

THE NBRT certification opens new doors — the credentials are accepted in every state and Canada.

"Most hospitals don't want to train respiratory therapists, Mervil Cross, MC respiratory therapy instructor, said. "They like the therapists to be (board) certified."

He said the MC class has increased from a mere four or five students in 1979 to the current enrollment of 15.

RESPIRATORY therapy often is misunderstood by the public, who closely link it with life support equipment, such as the ventilator. In fact, respiratory therapy encompasses all areas of breathing.

Bill Van Steenburg, administrative director of cardiopulmonary and rehabilitation services at Midand Memorial Hospital, said job opportunities for a respiratory therapist include not only operating the life support equipment, but also treating patients with pulmonary diseases and teaching patients to care for themselves at home.

Van Steenburg said MMH is the primary affiliate of the MC program.

"This is the first sizeable group," he said, referring to the MC class. "They're a good bunch."

The students will divide their time among the emergency room, recovery and surgery, Van Steenburg said, adding that "they help us out immensely and when they're graduated, they'll be very marketable.

"Everybody knows what a doctor, nurse or a radiologist does," he said. "Respiratory therapists administer topical drugs to the airways of patients — if you've got problems with the lungs, you've got big prob.ems.

"They (respiratory therapists) work with patients having asthma, emphysema and cystic fibrosis and other diseases of the lungs."

HE SAID therapists are in high demand, adding that "any hospital with 50 beds or more would not turn away a certified respiratory therapist."

Cross said the course includes five weeks of classroom instruction and then the students begin their clinical practicum at Midland Memorial Hospital, Odessa's Medical Center Hospital or Women's and Children's Hospital.

"We have a clinical simulation in the classroom during the first five weeks," he said. "Then they are under direct medical supervision and are never left alone at the hospital until they've reached proficiency."

Cross has furnished equipment valued at $75,000 on a $50,000 start-up budget for the classroom lab.

A NEW VENTILATOR can cost $20,000, but the used one cost $9,200 on sale, he said, pointing to the life support apparatus attached with tubes.

"In fact, this is how I purchased all the equipment — used and on sale," he added.

With this equipment, an instructor and the contract with hospitals, MC respiratory therapy students can learn to provide the high-qualifed respiratory therapy assistance needed by hospital patients and out-patients.

Odessans for Decency gain both petition, check signers

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Support for Odessans for Decency, the anti-pornography organization seeking to "clean up" the adult bookstores and topless bars of Odessa, is continuing to grow, President John Cope said during an appearance this week in Midland.

Cope, an Odessa realtor, said 100-150 persons are offering financial support while 10,000 have signed petitions calling on officials to see that the law pertaining to such is enforced.

"I hope by the end of the year we'll see some things happen," he said.

Cope said in the past few months Odessans for Decency has been instrumental in the City Council's denial of the proposed addition of Escapade to Odessa's cable television service and has influenced Colonial Stores into placing their adult magazines behind the counter.

"By putting them behind the counter we've effectively removed the minors from viewing them," he said.

Cope added that Odessans for Decency also is in negotiation with Furr's Handy Hut stores to place their adult magazines behind the counter.

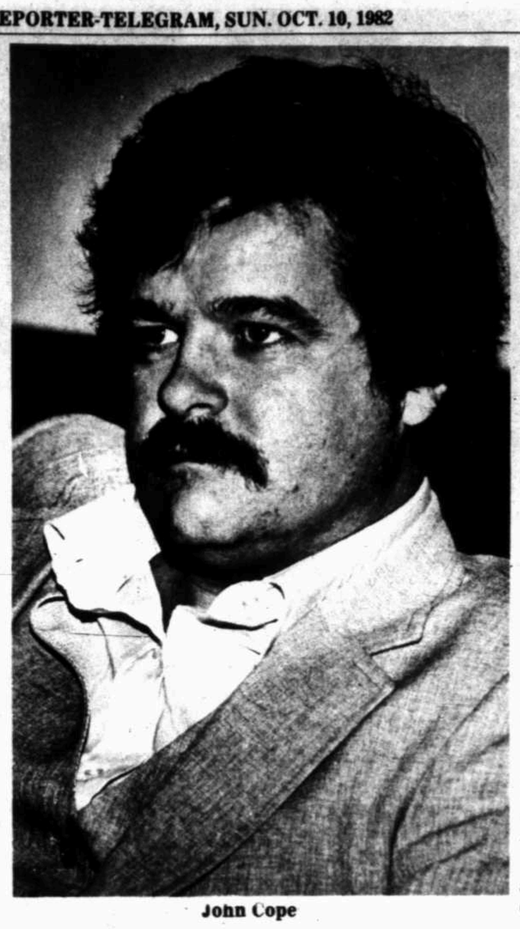
In a brief address to the Midland Downtown Lions Club, Cope discussed the dangers of pornography and charged that "the Colonial Stores and other convenience stores here in Midland sell some things that are just as rank as anything in Odessa."

In a study conducted over a 20-year span in Michigan, said Cope, investigators discovered that in 43 percent of the 38,000 sex crimes committed, pornography was used just prior to or during the crime.

"Seventy-seven per cent of child molesters of boys and 87 per cent of child molestors of girls imitate what they see in pornography," he said. "The sexual revolution that's occurred around the world the last 20 years is not as healthy as social scientists would lead us to believe. When you break the laws of nature or if you break higher laws, the laws of God, there are consequences that have to be paid."

Cope said additional studies have shown that viewing pornography increases the likelihood of marital infidelity, child abuse and deviate sexual acts. He added that four things generally occur when a person gets involved in porno: He becomes addicted; he has a desire to see more and more; he becomes desensitized; and he urges his sex partner or wife to participate in acts he has viewed.

"We intend to raise the public awareness as to what the dangers are," said Cope. "Most societies fall from within.... I'd saw we're well on our way to becoming corrupt."



John Cope

Alamo YMCA registering for second fall session

—Tadpole, ages 3 to 5 years, designed to introduce children to water. The back float, back glide, free-style crawl stroke, winging, sculling and breathing are taught.

—Polliwog, ages 6 and up, is for the beginner swimmer, teaching the child many of the same skills taught in tadpole.

—Minnow, ages 6 and up, designed to teach front crawl with correct breathing, back crawl and build endurance.

—Fish, ages 6 and up, reviews strokes previously learned as well as building endurance and the back stroke.

—Shark, ages 6 and up, is designed to learn surface dive, life saving techniques and endurance.

—Parents and tots, ages 3 months to 3 years, designed for parents and tots who would like to teach their children basic water skills and safety. One or both parents may participate with the child. A qualified instructor will be on hand to instruct parents and to work with children.

—Ladies swim class, offers adult ladies swimming and water exercise. Sessions are Monday, Tuesday and Thursday from 10 to 11 a.m. This class is designed to teach basic swimming skills, improve stroke techniques, build endurance or just enjoy an hour of exercise and relaxation. YMCA membership is not required. There will be a $12 per person pool fee. The nursery will be available.

Gymnastic classes offered for the second session are:

—Progressive gymnastics, ages 6 and up, are designed for beginners through intermediate beginners. Fundamental gymnastic skills are taught on balance beam, bars, mats and trampoline. Awards are given at the end of each session.

—Junior high and above tumbling, designed for all girls who would like to get in shape for cheerleading. The class will cover the use of the mini-tramp and tumbling. It will be held Fridays from 4:45 to 5:45 p.m.

—Karate, the art of self defense and martial arts are used to describe the Oriental form of hand and foot fighting that is taught by Curtis Abernathy at the Y. It is an ongoing class and you may join anytime.

The Alamo Y swimming pool and gym is available for party rentals, church groups, companies and other organizations. YMCA membership is not required. Call the Alamo Y, 901 N. Midland Drive, 694-2528 for further information.

YMCA adding features

The Midland YMCA is announcing the addition of two new features in the Parent/Child program.

These include Y-Trail Mates, a program for mothers and their kindergarten through third grade children and Trail Blazers, a program designed for fathers and their fourth through sixth grade children.

Y-Trail Mates provide mothers the opportunity to have well-planned, quality time with their children through supervision of YMCA professional staff. The program was developed because of the need for recognition and participation for fathers, mothers and their children. Events include day trips, bowling, picnics and YMCA overnights.

Trail Blazers is a carry-over program of the existing YMCA programs, Indian Guides and Princesses. The activities are advanced and include areas such as camping, rocketry, bowling tournaments, canoeing and hiking.

Each group meets monthly. For more information and registration, call the Y at 694-2528.

Conley's life has turned around

BY GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

One of eight children born to a railroad worker whose career came to a halt when steam engines replaced diesels in the 1940s, Earl Thomas Conley left home at an early age. It wasn't until after he'd worked a variety of jobs, including a hitch in the military, that he tried Nashville.

Unable to crack Music City, he moved on again, this time to Huntsville, Ala., where a family friend, Nelson Larkin, was involved with a recording studio.

When Mel Street recorded "Smoky Mountain Memories," written by Conley, he was finally on his way, but it wasn't going to be a smooth path.

Earl T. Conley

Conley called to talk about his upcoming concert at Chaparral Center. He will be performing on the bill with Hank Williams Jr. Tuesday night. Tickets, which may be purchased at Chaparral Center, are still available for the 8 p.m. show.

His voice was barely audible; he had a terrible chest cold.

LAUGHING, CONLEY replied, "Not easy. It's not easy. I'm just wore out," pausing he added, "Almost completely wore out. I like to do interviews, but usually I'm a lot more alert than I am today."

Conley is in the midst of a long road tour, one which has lasted three months and has kept him away from home for the last six weeks. He was calling from Los Angeles, just before he went to the studio to cut a segment for the television series "Solid Gold."

"I've never felt better about my career in my whole life," Conley said of where he is today (excluding the chest cold, of course).

"I've just completely reorganized my whole organization; I've changed booking agencies; I've got myself a new manager; I've got myself a new band; and my whole life's just completely turned around." Then he added, laughing softly again, "And I've got myself a new album."

"The title of my new album is 'Somewhere Between Right and Wrong.' And the first release from the album was called 'Heavenly Bodies.'

"A couple of girls from New York; a couple of school teachers wrote the song ('Heavely Bodies'). It's the first outside song that I've recorded in ages. 'Somewhere Between Right and Wrong' is the new single and it's doing real good," he added.

Conley's song writing goes back to 1968.

"I STARTED WRITING songs in 1968. I was still holding down a regular job. I tried that for a couple of years and decided that I had to devote all my time to music if I was going to be successful at it. So in 1970 I moved to Huntsville, Ala., so I could be closer to Nashville and work clubs.

"I worked the clubs for about three years down there and ended up getting in another lost direction, not getting any songs written. In early 1974, I wrote 'Smoky Mountain Memories;' and during this period of time I moved to Nashville.

"I wrote a few songs for some lesser known artists. Then in 1976, Conway recorded 'This Time I Hurt Her More Than She Loves Me.'"

But still Conley felt his career was without direction.

"Shortly after that I decided to get off to myself and try to develop my own style as far as singing and recording goes. I wrote songs strictly for myself for a couple of years. I accumulated a number of songs, took them to Warner Brothers and put three singles out.

"I couldn't get an album together, so I moved over to Sunbird Records and got my first album out, 'Blue Pearl.' The first release off the 'Blue Pearl' album was a song called 'Silent Treatment,' and it went to seven in the nation for a couple of weeks. And the second release was a song called 'Fire and Smoke,' and it went to No. 1 and became the Billboard single of the year."

IT WAS THEN that he changed to the recording label he has today.

"During this period of time RCA became interested and I moved to RCA and put the 'Fire and Smoke' album out and now I've got my new album."

Conley loves what he is doing, even when he feels bad.

"Sometimes you get so tired of trying to be perfect that you just have to tell yourself, 'To heck with it,' even though you can only do this for about half a day," he said, laughing. "I can't go any longer than that without thinking about it."

It's hard for Conley to know what he enjoys the most — writing, producing albums or performing.

"I used to think, and I still do when I'm doing it, that writing was my favorite because I could go to the very depts of everything that you feel, good or bad, or whatever, and just expressing it was just such a relief and such a spiritual thing and so fulfilling.

"But, from there it (song) goes to the studio and I've got a big hand in the production. That's a whole new fulfillment.

"And then you go to the stage, after the record's been released. The feeling that you get for pulling that off is just the icing on the cake. Sometimes you don't pull it off near as well. Sometimes you're too critical and too stiff, not happy enough, not cheerful enough, onstage. This is all new. The performing end of it is relatively new — two years. I like the challenge, and I'm really caught up into that end of it right now, so maybe that's what I like the most."

Cole's mother seeks conservatorship

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The mother of Grammy Award-winning singer Natalie Cole is seeking conservatorship powers over her daughter and her estate, saying Miss Cole is too ill to take care of herself.

Without specifying the nature of Miss Cole's illness, Maria Cole said in the Superior Court petition that her daughter is "unable to properly provide for her personal needs for physical health, food, clothing or shelter."

Miss Cole herself signed a document with the court on Oct. 2 asking that her mother be granted conservatorship powers.

Mrs. Cole's petition also asked the court to find the pop singer lacking the ability to provide informed consent for medical treatment, according to a report in the Los Angeles Herald Examiner's Saturday editions.

The petition said that Miss Cole has been canceling engagements and has "numerous contracts and other business interests, which need immediate attention."

T.R. (Bob Fennell) and Emma (Paula Butts) establish a shaky friendship in the musical number "What Makes Me Love You," from the musical revue, "Tintypes," closing Saturday at Theatre Midland. The production is being staged in Theatre II. Reservations may be made by calling Midland Community Theatre's box office at 682-4111.

Levin's 'Deathtrap' to open Friday

This comedy-thriller will be onstage in Theatre I for a nine performance run. The cast includes Charles Dixon, Mary Lou Cassidy, Penny Taulman, Gary Swisher and Jerry Green. This production is being directed by Midland Community Theatre's assistant director, Ted Strickland. Jack Fox, Ruth Price and Jan Matthews are stage managers.

MCT has been attempting to get the rights to this play for the past three years. The long wait was caused by the play's phenomenal success on Broadway, on multiple national tours and in regional professional theaters across the country. MCT is the first community theater in Texas to have the right to stage "Deathtrap."

Film chronicles 'golden age' of TV

The good ol' days. Remember them? Those are the days just far enough removed that only the "sweetness and light," or at worst, bittersweet memories remain.

Well, if your ruminations can take you back to when a gallon of gasoline was 26 cents (it was ?) then you will be very much at home and in love with "My Favorite Year," starring the irrepressible Peter O'Toole.

"My Favorite Year," paints a broad stroke of the year 1954 and some of the actors take their cue from director Richard Benjamin when it comes to interpretation, but there is room for everyone in this fond and funny look back.

It is the story of alcoholic matinee idol Alan Swann (Peter O'Toole) who decides to guest appear on a live television comedy show called, "Comedy Calvalcade." But just to thicken the plot a bit, Swann shows up drunk for his first meeting with the show's star (Joseph Bologna) and is commended into the custody of freshman writer Benjy Stone (Mark Linn-Baker).

Stone (he changed his name from Steinberg) shadows Swann until air time, taking him home to meet his nice Jewish mother (Lanie Kazan) and inevitably half the neighborhood. This scene and several others work independently, much like individual comedy sketches, but not until the end does each bit blend into a hilarious finale, which has O'Toole parody Swann's "swashbuckling" career.

"My Favorite Year," reportedly based in fact — the young writer modeled on Mel Brooks, and "Comedy Calvalcade" on "Your Show Of Shows," with its star Sid Caesar — chronicles the "golden age of television."

It was a time of tremendous creativity and risk-taking and makes for a mad-cap movie with an ending that covers for the inconsistencies that go before. Rated PG, "My Favorite Year," is about a time when people wore plenty of clothes (matching sweater sets and narrow jackets with padded shoulders) and didn't take them off.

"Mother Lode," starring Charlton Heston (three times saint, three times President and two times genius) is a contemporary adventure film set in the vast and breath-taking beauty of British Columbia. The photography of this pristine wilderness by documentary-turned-movie photographer Richard Leiterman — as well some fairly hairy stunt piloting — is the highlight of the film.

There is a plot, however, that goes something like this: A young man (Rick Mancuso) and woman (Kim Basinger) head off to the north to find a mutual friend who has gone in search of gold. On the way, they meet a wise old Indian fisherman (John Marley) who warns them about unspoken evils, but they venture on, eventually setting up camp near their friend's probable location.

There they find hermit-miner Heston, an unkempt Scot who has spent 30 years searching for the "mother lode," (a pure strain of gold, by gosh) and begin an uneasy friendship. But all is not what it seems.

There is a resolution to the plot, complete with enough dark hole scenes to make anyone claustrophobic, and there is plenty of action, but there is prescious little motivation for the actors. Gold fever is treated like a rampant viral strain with no known cause, no known cure. Even one young boy behind me whispered incredulously, "I wouldn't want gold that bad!"

Nevertheless, there is one scene worth the price of admission alone. As the couple try to land their float plane on a crystal clear mountain lake, it goes out of control and in balletic motion touches wing tip to wing tip on the water before flipping over. It wasn't planned that way in the actual filming, but no one was hurt in the crash and as they say it makes "great film."

Rated PG, "Mother Lode," is a story of gold and greed — written and produced by Heston's son, Fraser Clark Heston and directed by Heston senior — that has some violent moments but not even so much as one kiss.

Heston believes film is art by committee

y GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

His voice is easy to recognize on the phone. His distinguished tone and fluent delivery are exactly what a fan would expect of one of the most commanding actors of the 20th century.

Charlton Heston — the man who played Andrew Jackson in "The President's Lady," Moses in the "Ten Commandments," John the Baptist in "The Greatest Story Ever Told," Michelangelo in "The Agony and the Ecstasy," and on and on and on well past 50. And that's just the movies. It doesn't include his stage performances, which are too numerous to count.

Heston

When he began the telephone interview by saying, "I'm all yours," the temptation was too great, I couldn't resist. I had to say it — "I can think of so many women who would just love to hear that."

His response was that low, rolling laugh that must come from someone who enjoys life.

The reason for his call was his new movie, "Mother Lode," which opened Friday at Midland Park Mall.

In this film Heston is the director as well as one of the major characters. The movie was written and produced by his son, Fraser Clarke Heston.

This is by no means Heston's first directing endeavor, nor his first time to direct and act in a movie. When asked about the dual role he played in this particular film, he replied, "I've directed on stage, of course, but this is the second film I've directed. And it's a very challenging undertaking. I've had offers to direct films where I wasn't acting, but I don't want to do that. I'm an actor. I love it and I wouldn't want to spend the year and a half that it takes to direct a film, with post production and everything, on a project where I couldn't act.

"AND THE PROBLEM, of course, with doing both at the same time is considerable. To direct yourself, to take the double work load of directing and acting is very tough.

"But in "Mother Lode,' of course Fraser had an important role that he could play. He could sort of be my eye and watch me. And tell me how the scenes were going that I was acting in. It worked very well. It was a very rewarding responsibility."

The other movie in which Heston took on this challenge was the first film version of Shakespeare's "Anthony and Cleopatra," produced by Peter Snell in 1971.

"I think Anthony was in many ways the most important project of my career. It's a play that's fascinated me all my life. I made my Broadway debut in it and to direct it was an enormously significant undertaking. Of course, it now has served another purpose.

"I was a better director when I did 'Mother Lode' because of having directed 'Anthony.' So you never know what your life experience will give you to provide you for the next chapter," he added, laughing.

One of the difficulties in adapting the written language to film is that it may not translate well. Just such an incident happened with Heston in "The Call of the Wild."

"WE CERTAINLY GOT a flat movie out of it. And it's too bad because 'Call of the Wild,' of course, is a great novel (Heston is an avid reader who admits he will read cereal labels if there is nothing else available) and a highly cinematic one.

"Original material as a novel may not for some reason translate into a script, or a good script may not translate into a film. With 'Mother Lode,' we had a good script, marvelous character, I thought, and the task of translating into film still is strewn with pitfalls. You're dealing with a constant series of communications problems.

"Film is art by committee," said Heston said, who has more than a passing knowledge with art. His pen and ink sketches have been exhibited in galleries in New York, London and Glasgow, Scotland.

"In art, the painter, the writer, the sculptor has to deal with the difference between your capacity and your vision. It only comes as close to your vision as you can make it.

"But when you're making a movie it's a collaboration between the director, the writer, the actors, the designer, the cameraman, the editors, the second unit director; all these people and their capacity varies.

"What the weather is like has an enormous effect on how the film is shot and how it turns out. If someone gets sick, you shoot around them for several days. Or if someone is injured, you have to rewrite the script."

HESTON CITED as an example of the multitude of difficulties that might arise an incident which occurred in filming "Mother Lode."

"In 'Mother Lode' we crashed a plane. Fortunately, no one was injured, and it's an enormously spectacular crash. It's one of the most effective shots in the film; certainly the most effective plane crash ever in a movie. But, it was an accident. So all these things have to do with this necessary collaboration and why a film is art by committee."

"To take the script we had in 'Mother Lode' and turn it into a rewarding movie, as happily we have done, is an unpredictable equation. The necessary communications between the company and the director is something you can never count on. You need God a little, too."

"I really play two parts in Mother Lode. One is a steely, kind of crafty, Scot miner who is obsessed by gold. "Mother Lode" is about the search for the mother lode of the old Cassiar Gold Rush, which was never found. This is a modern story about looking for it, and this miner I play has spent 30 years looking for it.

"McGee is a very different sort of type for me. It's a very challenging sort of part and to do it and direct at the same time was fascinating."

About the other role he plays in "Mother Lode," Heston said, "The other character is a character I'm not going to tell you about. You've got to go see the movie to find out."

Art ehibition winners announced

Judging by a juror was done from the 269 entries submitted by 100 artists. The actual show, on display in the McCormick Gallery at the Allison Fine Building, consists of 65 pieces by 51 artists.

Those receiving $250 cash awards were Patricia Aycock, fiber; Travis Beckham, acrylic; Mike Kheir, pastel oil; Ken Draim, watercolor; Warren Taylor, watercolor; Patricia Metts Netherland, oil; Thom Luce, photography; and Claude Neeley, ceramics.

Juror for the show was Harry Nadler, art professor at the University of New Mexico.

Nadler said of the show in his juror's statement: "We are living in a period of art which historians are beginning to define as 'post-modernist.' One of the significant characteristics of this period is a pluralistic attitude toward style.

"It is no surprise to find then that the works submitted to the MAA Fall Art Exhibition reflect this wide diversity of styles. For the juror, the problem becomes how to identify quality within this diversity that goes beyond personal preference.

"An art object is a complex symbol of information. It gives information about the world — the element of representation — and it gives information about itself — how it was made. The work selected for the exhibition, and the works that were awarded prizes, seemed to integrate these two kinds of information to communicate an expression of feeling, each in their own personal way.

"Artists who are working far from urban centers find it difficult to survive. Distances are great, and it becomes difficult to know what other artists are doing. It is to the credit of the MAA that they are providing space for artists to exhibit their work in a rigorous, professional environment," he commented.

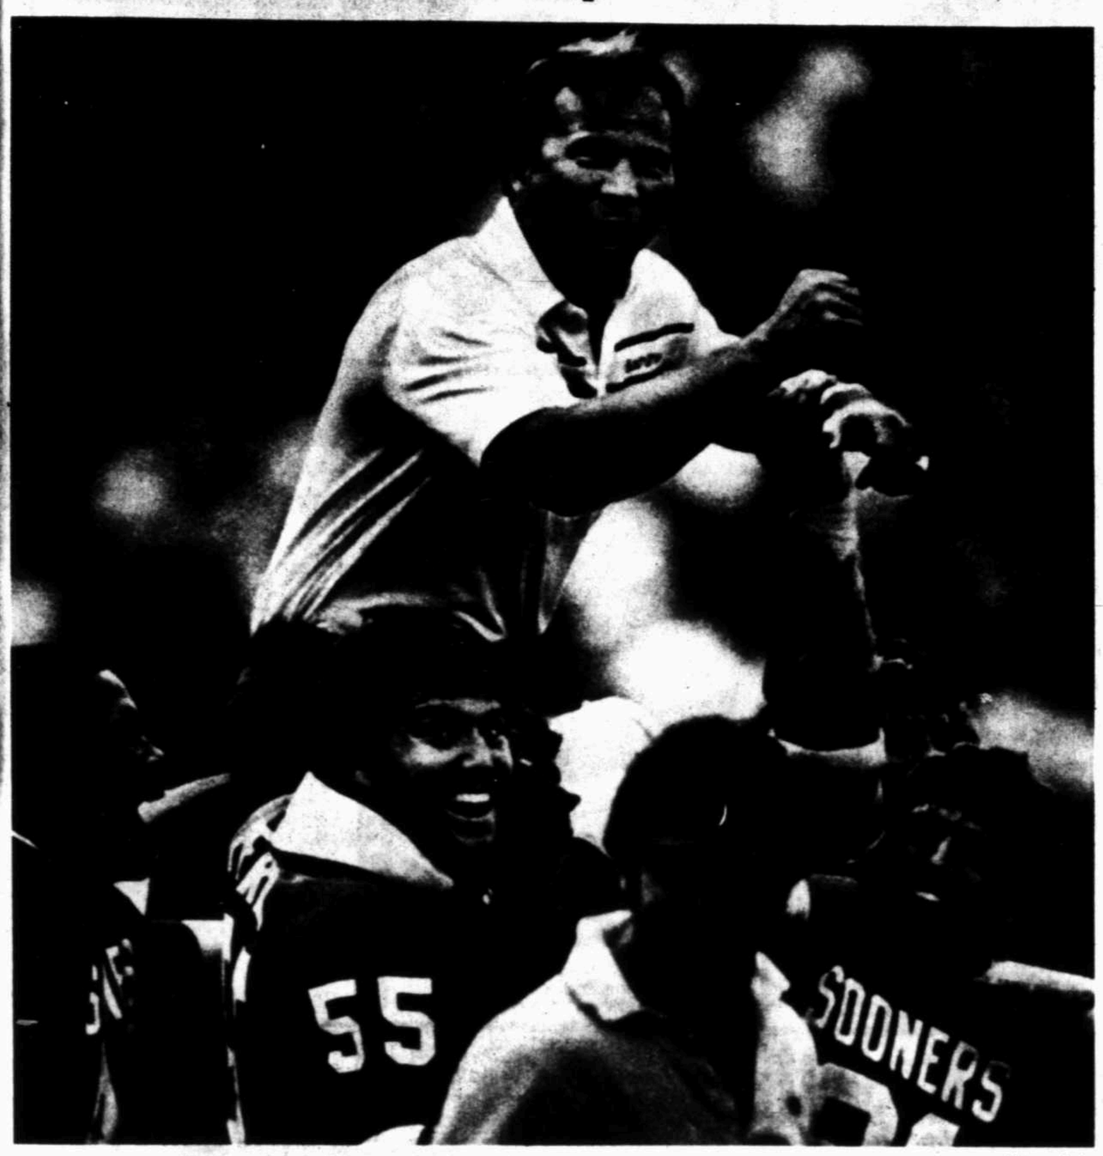
Sooners win one for Gaylord



AP Laserphoto

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

DALLAS — No one was more delighted with underdog Oklahoma's stunning 28-22 victory over previously unbeaten Texas in Dallas' "Bedlam Bowl" than Coach Barry Switzer, who can leave the phone off the hook this week.

It was the kind of game that just proves yesterday's villian can be today's hero in the vagaries of college football.

While a lynch mob allegedley lurked near the Cotton Bowl runway as they played the Star Spangled Banner, a banner appeared in the East stands urging, "Win One for Gaylord," perhaps sponsored by Switzer's family and friends.

Anyone not from Oklahoma might have been perplexed over the Sooners' dedication of the game to a major league pitcher from North Carolina. However, the Gaylord referred to was not Perry but the owner of the Oklahoma City paper that suggested following the Sooners' second defeat a couple of weeks ago that it might be time for Switzer to move on.

THE WORLD'S foremost exponent of the Wishbone, a mode of attack employed with monotonous success since the days of Jack Mildren, Oklahoma's lightning was bottled in the "I" this time.

Freshman Marcus DuPree delivered the first bolt, a 63-yard dash with 1:20 left in the first quarter, a play the 6-3, 210 back from Philadelphia, Miss., said was a "fake reverse, just like the one Texas had run just a few days before. Only one tackler had a shot at me."

After Texas tied the score on a 6-yard pass from quarterback Robert Brewer, hero of last year's Cotton Bowl win over Alabama, to Herkie Walls with 11:08 left in the half, the Sooners proved they meant business, retaliating from the kickoff with an 18 play drive that saw fullback Stanley Wilson go in from three yards out 80 yards later.

TEXAS FANS were cognizant that things looked even worse for the Steers at halftime a year ago when they trailed 14-3 before coming back to win 34-14.

But this was today, not yesterday, and if the I Formation, adopted because OU coultdn't get outside, wasn't enough of a surprise, the Sooners sprung Wayne Ledbetter, a spear carrying senior fullback behind Wilson the last two seasons, on the Horns in the second half. Ledbetter bolted 59 yards less than five minutes into the second half to leave the Longhorns in arrears, 21-10. And after Texas drew within catchup range, 21-16, on tailback John Walker's three-yard run at the end of a 65 yard drive as the final quarter opened, Ledbetter scored again on a 15-yard run just 2:27 later. The big play on this 80-yarder was a 51-yard run by halfback Fred Sims that put the Sooners on the Texas 27.

But Ledbetter, who gained 144 yards in 20 carries, supplied the telling second half licks against the Horns.

"It was 34-Base," he said in describing his 59-yard shocker. "The offensive line just opened the hole and I ran for daylight as hard as I could. We had run the same play five or six times before. Something was always happening. One time I caught my foot, but we knew it was there. Coach (Scott) Hill said we were going to break it and we did. No one layed a hand on me."

LIKE MOST of the other Sooners, Ledbetter called it the greatest win he had experienced at Oklahoma.

"I have probably had better football teams, but none played as hard or gave a better effort. I am especially proud of them," said a beaming Switzer, "because this group had never won a big game."

Perhaps most of all, Switzer said, "The tension is off. I'm relieved. When you beat Texas you have a chance to play with anybody on your schedule."

Texas pulled within reach of victory with 11:04 left when Brewer hit Walls with a 27-yard touchdown pass. On its next possession, Texas got a first down, but Brewer fumbled at the Sooner 46 and John Blake, a noseguard from Tulsa, recovered with 6:10 left. Texas handled the ball only four more offensive downs after that.

"Oklahoma was hungry," said Texas coach Fred Akers, suffering only his second defeat to Oklahoma since coming to Texas in 1977. "They came after us. We could have withstood their moving the ball steadily, but we did not stop their big plays. The fans got a heckva show."

Defensive end Eric Holle said, "I don't know what was happening on the big gainers. They were cutting back and we weren't wrapping up. They have so much speed that once they were in the secondary, there wasn't a lot we could do. They can break the big play anytime with that speed."

No. 6 SMU rallies to defeat Baylor

WACO, Texas (AP) — Quarterback Lance McIlhenny tossed three second-half touchdown passes over a bunched-up Baylor defense Saturday night as No. 6-ranked Southern Methodist held off the Bears 22-19 in Southwest Conference football.

The victory was the fifth this season without a loss for Southern Methodist, which won the SWC last year but was ineligible to play in the Cotton Bowl. The loss dropped Baylor to 2-2-1.

Baylor led 13-0 at halftime Ben Perry's two field goals and on a one-yard run by Allen Rice after Baylor's Ron Francis recovered a fumbled punt at the SMU 12-yard line.

At the end of two periods Baylor had held SMU tailbacks Eric Dickerson and Craig James to a total of 11 yards rushing on 13 carries. Dickerson, the nation's second leading rusher, had been averaging just under 172 yards a game and James was averaging almost 104 yards a game rushing.

With Baylor in what amounted to an eight man defensive line, McIlhenny scrambled away from a hard rush and lofted a short pass to tight end Ricky Bolden for a 15-yard touchdown with 5:34 left in the third quarter.

With 1:23 left in the period McIlhenny heaved the ball 55 yards in the air to Jackie Wilson, who caught it over Preston Davis at the Baylor 30 and raced into the end zone on a 78-yard scoring play.

On the first play of the fourth quarter, SMU freshman Keith Brooks fumbled his second punt of the game, and Francis again recovered the ball — at midfield.

Baylor quarterback David Mangrum, subbing for the injured Mike Brannan, threw to tight end Sam Houston at the SMU 18 and he pulled away from Wes Hopkins on a 38-yard scoring pass.

Southern Methodist scored its winning touchdown after a 76-yard drive, which featured the running of Dickerson and James. On third and three at the Baylor three, McIlhenny faked a handoff and lofted a short pass to Bolden for the touchdown with 2:58 left in the game. The same pass-catch combination worked on a two-point extra point play.

Although James had difficulty penetrating the Baylor defense, he boomed a 75-yard punt that hung in the air for 5.8 seconds to the Baylor seven, which set up Southern Methodist's first big break.

Perry's first half field goals of 33 yards and 47 yards were the first of his college career. The sophomore kicked the 47-yarder as time ran out in the first half.

Brewers beat Angels 9-5 to tie series

Baylor's grand slam doesn't help

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Moose Haas pitched a no-hitter for 5⅔ innings and Milwaukee survived an eighth-inning grand slam home run by Don Baylor to tie the American League Championship Series at two games apiece with a 9-5 victory Saturday over the error-prone California Angels.

Mark Brouhard, a late replacement for injured left fielder Ben Oglivie and starting his first game in the Milwaukee outfield since Sept. 5, drove in three runs, two with a homer in the eighth, and scored four times to break an AL Championship Series record and tie a major league playoff record. Steve Garvey of Los Angeles and Bob Robertson of Pittsburgh each had scored four times in a game in the National League, but the most runs ever scored in the AL series was three, which was done four times previously.

The right-handed Haas, making his first start since Sept. 13, helped the Brewers overcome an 0-2 playoff deficit in a rain-drenched outing. The Brewers benefitted from the unraveling of nearly every aspect of California's game.

Only one other team in the 13 years of league championship play has come back after being down 0-2 to tie the series and none has won a league playoff after starting with that large a handicap. The 1972 Detroit Tigers tied Oakland at two games apiece, only to lose Game 5.

GAME 5 of this series was scheduled for Sunday afternoon, if the weather permits. Game 4 was delayed by one hour and 44 minutes at the start and twice delayed briefly during play.

Haas struck out seven and wlked five, losing his no-hitter and shutout with two out in the sixth inning on a Fred Lynn double. Haas finally left the game after throwing 136 pitches, the final one to Baylor — who set a playoff record with his grand slam homer that gave him 10 RBI in the series. The previous RBI record was nine, set by the New York Yankees' Graig Nettles in three games last year.

Haas left in favor of Jim Slaton with one out in the eighth after giving up five hits and crowning a roller-coaster season that saw him lose four of six in May, win four in a row in July and lose three of four in August before being dropped from the regular rotation for Don Sutton. Slaton retired the last five batters for the save.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Quarterback Tom Jones had a big hand in all three Arkansas touchdowns, but the two coaches pointed to the Razorback defense after Arkansas' 21-3 victory of Texas Tech Saturday.

"If we continue to play defense like we have, we can compete on any level," Arkansas coach Lou Holtz said.

"They're about as good defensively as any team I've seen in a long time," said Tech Coach Jerry Moore. "Our offense did not move the football. Arkansas is a possible Southwest Conference champion and who knows, maybe a national championship team."

Jones threw two touchdown passes and made the two big plays in the other touchdown drive for the ninth-ranked Razorbacks. He was injured in the second half and did not return to the game but should be okay, UA trainer Dean Weber said.

The Arkansas defense held Texas Christian University without a first down for three quarters last week and Tech had only four after the first 45 minutes Saturday.

The Raiders netted 36 yards on 37 running plays and made 235 total offense, but 113 of that came in the final quarter. Tech had only three first downs and 83 yards total offense in the first half, as Arkansas took a 21-3 lead that held up the rest of the way.

Tech's Leonard Harris returned the opening kickoff 83 yards to the Arkansas 10, but the Red Raiders lost five yards in three plays and settled for Ricky Gann's 33-yard field goal.

But the Razorbacks fought back. Jones, who completed seven of nine passes for 145 yards in the first half, connected with Gary Anderson for a 74-yard touchdown pass on Arkansas' second possession.

Jones dropped back, dumped the ball to Anderson, who got a big block from Jessie Clark, emerged from a group of players and was clear by midfield.

The next time the Razorbacks got the ball, they covered 83 yards in seven plays. On third and seven from the Arkansas 30, Jones rolled left away from pressure by Gabe Rivera and hit Mark Mistler for 29 yards.

One play later, Jones kept on the option play, cut through a seam and manuevered 36 yards to the Tech 5. Then on the next play, Clark followed Steve Kort and Alfred Mohammed into the end zone standing up.

Arkansas wrapped up the scoring with Jones' 2-yard pass to tight end Luther Franklin in the second quarter.

The Raiders shocked Arkansas with the long return on the game's first play. But on first-and-goal at the 10, Earl Buckingham dropped Anthony Hutchison for no gain, then teamed with Bert Zinamon to drop Jim Hart for a five-yard loss. Billy Ray Smith and Richard Richardson pressured Hart into an incomplete pass and the Raiders had to settle for a 3-0 lead.

Levi leads LaJet by four strokes

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Front-running Wayne Levi, quietly establishing himself as one of golf's finer young players, compiled a solid, 4-under-par 69 and pulled away to a commanding, 4-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the $350,000 LaJet Classic.

Levi, who has collected his fourth career title, more than $200,000 in winnings and very little attention this season, finished three trips over the 7,077-yard Fairway Oaks Golf and Racquet Club course in 203, 13 shots under par.

"With this big a lead, I don't want to blow it," Levi said. "I want to win this thing pretty bad."

FLOYD, THE PGA titleholder and No. 2 on the money list and the only man with any real chance to catch Stadler, left the tournament and returned to his home in Miami after his second round Friday. His score of 146 was, however, good enough to make it. He was unable to obtain airline connections to meet his Saturday morning tee time and was forced to withdraw.

"Well, I guess I did it again, didn't I?" Floyd said by telephone from his home. A similar situation developed in the Tournament Players Championship in Florida this spring, but Floyd was able to return in time for that tournament.

Floyd's withdrawal left Stadler with a lead of more than $57,000 with only two more tournaments to play this season. Floyd is not expected to compete in either.

Levi, who has led or shared the lead all the way, once held a 6-stroke advantage before making his lone bogey of the day on the 15th, where he put his second shot in a bunker.

SOUTH AFRICAN Bobby Cole scored a two-putt birdie-4 on the final hole to finish off a 69 and take second alone at 207.

"I hadn't planned on playing here, but Laura (his wife, former LPGA pro Laura Baugh) convinced me I should give it a try and here I am in good position," Cole said.

Gary Koch, currently holding the 125th spot on the money list — the last qualifying position for next year's all-exempt tour — scrambled to a 70 in the mild, sunny weather and was next at 208.

"He's way ahead," Koch said, looking ahead to his chance of catching Levi in Sunday's final round."He's already won this year. He's putting well. I know him well. When he gets in front, he's a very hard man to beat."

Howard Twitty, with a 69 in gentle breezes that offered a welcome contrast to Friday's howling gales, was tied with veteran Bruce Devlin at 207, a distant six shots back. Devlin matched par 72.

Stadler, seeking a fifth title of the season, was seven strokes away at 210 and was tied with Thomas Gray, Andy Bean, D.A. Weibring, Ed Fiori and Mark McCumber. Gray had the best round of the day, a 66. Bean, Weibring, Fiori and McCumber shot 69s, Stadler 70.

Tickets for the Odessa Permian-Midland Lee football game, which is Friday at 8 p.m. at Memorial Stadium, will go on sale to the general public at 8 a.m. Wednesday at the Memorial Stadium ticket office, according to Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director.

Since the contest figures to be a key game in the District 4-5A race, the game could be a complete sellout. In a similar matchup in 1978 between the two teams, all tickets were sold within the first 30 minutes the ticket windows were open. Some fans spent all night at Memorial Stadium waiting in line for tickets in 1978.

Bartosh has not decided if there will be a limit on the number of tickets each individual may buy Wednesday, but that decision will be made Monday morning.

University Interscholastic League rules require the home team to make available to the visitors half the tickets available after season ticket holders and students (band members, pep squads, etc.) have been taken care of.

Permian is expected to ask for and sellout their allotment also.

Permian will enter the game with a perfect 6-0 mark while Lee is 5-1. The winner will have the definite edge in winning the 4-5A race.

Owners consider inviting players back to camp

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — National Football League owners, increasingly restive about the strike that has scrapped three weekends of games, are considering inviting players to return to camp then calling off the season if not enough show up, management sources said Saturday.

Chuck Sullivan of the New England Patriots, chairman of the NFL Management Council's executive committee, said in an interview here that the refusal of the NFL Players Association to drop its demand for a wage scale, had many owners — he did not specify how many — talking about two alternatives.

"One," he said, "is to open the camps. Two, is to call off the season."

Another management source, who asked not to be identified, was more specific. He said the owners were considering announcing about Oct. 18 that the camps would be opened. And he said that if the players had not returned in sufficient number by the following weekend, the owners would seriously consider calling off the season.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle has said that many owners believe a season of less than 13 games would be impractical. And that weekend — Oct. 24-25 — would be the point at which 13 would be the maximum number of games that could be played. (Two games of the 16-game season have been played, two could be made up, and three have been called off.)

The owners' move seemed partially confirmed Saturday when members of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers accused the Bucs coaching staff of calling players to determine if they would return to camp. A Bucs spokesman would neither confirm nor deny the report but David Stalls, the team's alternate player representative said: "They're trying to break the union."

For the third straight day Saturday, the players asked for the resumption of negotiations, which broke off a week ago. But the owners are insisting that there is no point in resuming talks as long as the players stick to their wage scale demand.

In a telegram signed by Ed Garvey, executive director of the players association and Gene Upshaw, the union's president, the players said they would not budge from the demand for the scale, with a league-wide fund from which the money would come.

"You have a legal duty to bargain with us on wages and we suggest you get started," the telegram said. "When you threaten to end the season if settlement is not achieved by Oct. 25, you must understand that we have only 14 days to meet your deadline. We stand ready for round-the-clock negotiations starting immediately."

In fact, one owner said that both sides had scheduled a meeting in Boston Friday night with Roger Fisher, a Harvard law professor who had called Rozelle and offered to mediate the strike. However, Garvey was said to have backed out at the last minute — after the management negotiators had left for Boston.

But despite that, the owners' position seemed to be hardening.

"Look at the unemployment figures," Sullivan said. "Ten percent of the people in this country are out of work. And we're offering $1.6 billion over five years to 1,500 young men to continue to work."

Once source said that some owners believed that as long as Garvey continued as executive director of the players union, it was unlikely there could be a settlement. Thus the reasoning that it would be better to open the camps and hope that if some players came in, the rest of the team would follow.

Sullivan said that most of the owners had little inside information on how many players might be willing to return. Asked how many players it would take to put on an NFL-caliber game, he replied:

"That depends. If you got 22 players in who played 22 different positions you'd be all right. But if you got something like 25 players in who all played defense, you couldn't do much."

The union, meanwhile, has taken steps to insure that players won't bolt just because of financial problems. It announced Friday that it had secured assurances from five banks around the nation that would allow players to borrow up to $20,000 to meet household expenses.

Nimitz, Ector remain unbeaten with 21-21 tie

The only two undefeated freshman football teams had their show down this week and they both remained undefeated. Nimitz and Ector had 3-0 records before they played to a 21-21 tie yesterday.

The story was the same when Bowie and Hood, both 0-4 before their game, squared off in hopes of winning their first contest. But the effort was fruitless as they fought to an 8-8 tie.

Lee Maroon (4-1) stayed within striking distance with a 34-8 win over winless Bonham (0-5). Lee White beat Crocket (1-4) 14-6 and Midland Gold defeated Midland Purple (3-2) 18-6 to keep their records at 3-1-1.

Goddard and Nimitz kept their records spotless and remained atop the eighth grade Midland-Odessa Conference with 4-0 records. Goddard had the week off and Nimitz beat Crocket 27-6.

In a pair of shoutouts San Jacinto (3-1) beat Alamo (2-3) 6-0 and Ector (3-2) defeated Hood (1-3) 22-0. In a battle of the winless, Bonham (1-3) beat Bowie (0-4) 26-14 for their first victory.

In the Midland Conference Goddard Red (2-2) shutout San Jacinto (1-3) and Alamo (3-1) beat Midland Christian (0-4) 14-8.

In the Seventh Grade American Conference San Jacinto White blanked Alamo Scarlet 6-0 while Goddard White and San Jacinto Green fought to a 14-14 tie.

The National Conference saw two shutouts as San Jacinto White beat Alamo 26-0 and Goddard White defeated San Jacinto 34-0.

Walton needs stitches, catches elbow in cheek

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Bill Walton, back with the San Diego Clippers, was cut on the left cheekbone in practice Friday night and got seven stitches for it.

The 6-foot-11 center caught forward Tom Chambers' elbow on his face. Walton, sidelined with foot problems since 1979-80, is expected to play in a San Diego exhibition Friday.

Waltrip charges to easy victory

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip charged to an easy victory in the Miller High Life 300 late model sportsman auto race Saturday at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Waltrip, the defending NAS-CAR Grand National stock car champion, picked up his third sportsman victory on the 1.5-mile, high-banked Charlotte oval, equalling Bobby Allison for the most victories in the 10-year-old event.

Waltrip started third on the 40-car race grid and moved up to take the lead for the first time on the 11th of 200 laps.

Waltrip then began to dominate. However, he fell from first all the way to fourth during a long pit stop on lap 133, during which the crew on his Mountain Dew-sponsored Pontiac Venturi took on four new tires.

Allison, who currently leads Waltrip by 15 points in the Grand National season championship race, took over the lead at that point. But Waltrip roared back, quickly pulling up to Allison's rear bumper and retaking the lead on lap 146.

The 35-year-old resident of Franklin, Tenn., was in charge the rest of the way, finishing well ahead of second-place Sam Ard's Oldsmobile. Allison's Pontiac wound up third, followed by Glenn Jarrett in a Ford and Jack Ingram in a Pontiac. Those were the only cars remaining in the lead lap at the end.

There only were six lead changes among four drivers, with Waltrip leading four times for 142 laps.

The winner averaged 123.485 mph.

Waltrip, who will start from the third spot in Sunday's National 500 Grand National race, won $19,000 for his sportsman victory.

There were saven caution flags, most of them brought out by blown engines. There were a couple of spins and accidents, but no injuries were reported.

Harry Gant and Geoff Bodine, who were disqualified for using illegal carburetors Thursday after winning the top two starting positioNs in the Miller race, did not take part in the 300-miler. Rain washed out Friday's scheduled qualifying session and neither had an opportunity to requalify.

The Wonder Workout Is Coming To The YMCA It's Co-ed

by Bob Howle

The hacksaw is a safe and effective tool when properly used. All the safety rules must be followed for tools in general, with added precautions to keep the blade from breaking. Most accidents that occur with a hacksaw are hand injuries resulting from a blade that has snapped. This can happen if you apply too much pressure when using the saw. When cutting be sure that the saw does not become twisted in any way. If working with an adjustable hacksaw as most are, be sure that the blade is attached firmly to the frame.

At BOB'S RENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy., 685-1271, & 2909 N. Big Spring, 684-8294, we never "cut any corners" when thinking of your safety. You are always assured of equipment, tools and items property maintained and serviced and the availability of instruction in use if necessary. Come in today to BOB's RENTAL CENTER INC. Where our staff is here to offer you the attention and service you desire and deserve. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

HANDY HINT
Do Not exceed a cutting speed of 40-50 strokes per minute to prevent the blade from breaking.

Lewis leads No. 4 Bama past Penn State, 42-21

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Quarterback Walter Lewis scored one touchdown, passed for another and set up a third with three key runs and a tricky shovel pass, leading fourth-ranked Alabama to a 42-21 victory Saturday over No. 3 Penn State.

Lewis ran Alabama's Wishbone to near-perfection in the first half and froze Penn State's defense with his slick fakes and cuts. The 6-foot-1 junior carried 13 times in the first half for 61 yards, including a 4-yard touchdown run with less than three minutes gone in the game, and completed 7 of 10 passes for 74 yards, throwing six yards to Joe Carter for a TD on the second play of the second quarter that snapped a 7-7 deadlock.

He completed his brilliant first-half performance by running five times for 40 yards and shoveling an underhand pass to fullback Don Horstead behind the line for 13 more to set up Lenny Patrick's 11-yard run with 2:24 left in the half that gave the Crimson Tide a 21-7 lead.

Vanderbilt 31 Florida 29

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Vanderbilt offensive tackle Rob Monaco recovered a fumble for a touchdown and quarterback Whit Taylor shredded the defense of No. 14 Florida for 287 aerial yards as the Commodores stunned the Gators 31-29 Saturday night.

The Commodores broke a 21-21 deadlock with a 30-yard field goal by Ricky Anderson in the third quarter and then scored the game-winner when Monaco fell on Vanderbilt split end Phil Roach's fumble in the end zone.

The Southeastern Conference victory gives Vanderbilt a 1-1 league mark and a 3-2 overall record — the Commodores best start since 1975. The win was only Vanderbilt's second in its last 40 SEC outings.

Florida, which suffered its second straight loss after three season-opening wins, is 1-2 in the SEC.

W Virginia 20, Boston College 13

Hostetler's two-yard bootleg was set up when, with 1:26 remaining, Boston College's George Radachowsky fumbled a punt at his own 19-yard line and West Virginia's Tom Bowman recovered.

The victory improved the Mountaineers' record to 4-1-0. Boston College drops to 3-1-1 with the loss.

Georgia Tech 19, Tulane 14

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Sophomore fullback Robert Levette ran for 150 yards and a clinching fourth-quarter touchdown to lead Georgia Tech to a 19-14 upset victory over Tulane in a college football game Saturday.

North Carolina 24, Wake Forest 7

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Scott Stankavage threw two second-half touchdown passes to lead 12th-ranked North Carolina past stubborn Wake Forest 24-7 in Atlantic Coast Conference football Saturday.

Mark Smith caught both scoring passes, the first a 26-yarder following a fumble by Wake quarterback Gary Schofield to snap a 7-7 tie.

North Carolina, 4-1, 1-0 in the ACC, marched 73 yards at the start of the fourth quarter with Kelvin Bryant doing most of the work. When Bryant was stopped at the Wake Forest 2, Brooks Barwick kicked a 24-yard field goal with 11:50 left to extend the Tar Heel lead to 17-7.

After Walter Black blocked a Phil Denfeld field goal attempt, the Tar Heels marched 80 yards with Smith scoring on a 14-yard pass with 1:40 remaining.

The Demon Deacon defense forced three turnovers, two by Bryant. In the second quarter, Wake Forest converted one of those fumbles into a touchdown on Michael Ramseur's 1-yard run to tie it at 7.

Georgia 33, Mississippi 10

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — All-American Herschel Walker rambled for three touchdowns and 149 yards to smash the Southeastern Conference career rushing record as fifth-ranked Georgia overpowered Mississippi 33-10 Saturday.

The Georgia defense frustrated a potent Ole Miss offense that punched out almost 400 yards in the first three quarters by coming up with eight turnovers, including seven pass interceptions.

Walker, a 221-pound junior, lifted his career total to 4,158 yards, breaking the former SEC standard set at 4,035 by former Louisiana State star Charles Alexander in four seasons beginning in 1975.

The victory lifted Georgia to 5-0 for the year and 2-0 in the SEC, and it was its 14th consecutive conference victory.

Ole Miss, which fell to 2-3 overall and 0-2 in the conference, scored its points in the second period on Todd Gatlin's 27-yard field goal and a 9-yard pass from Kent Austin to Michael Harmon.

Clemson 48, Virginia 0

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Clemson's Tigers, using a devastating rushing attack led by Cliff Austin, Jeff McCall and Chuck McSwain, crushed Virginia's winless Cavaliers 48-0 Saturday night in a nationally televised Atlantic Coast Conference football game.

Austin, McCall and McSwain all rushed for more than 100 yards and each scored as the Tigers, 1-0 in the ACC and 3-1-1 overall, continued their mastery over the Cavaliers, playing their first-ever home game at night. Clemson is now 22-0 against Virginia since the series began in 1955.

Clemson's virtually impenetrable defense bottled up Virginia, which didn't manage a first down until the 13:31 mark of the second quarter. Virginia, 0-5, has lost eight in a row 18 of its last 19 games. The Cavaliers are 0-3 in the ACC.

Florida St. 59, S. Illinois 8

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Quarterback Kelly Lowrey ran for one touchdown and passed for two more as Florida State demolished Southern Illinois 59-8 in college football action Saturday night.

Lowrey, who scored Florida State's first touchdown on a one-yard sneak, was one of seven Seminoles who scored TDs as Coach Bobby Bowden emptied his bench against the underdog Salukis.

Florida State, an independent, improved its record to 4-1 in front of a Doak Campbell Stadium homecoming crowd of 51,232, while the Division I-AA Salukis of the Missouri Valley Conference dropped to 3-3.

Va. Tech 22, Duke 21

Virginia Tech trailed the Blue Devils throughout until Greenwood sparked an 87-yard drive to the final touchdown.

In the final seconds, Duke drove to the Gobblers' 35 behind the passing of quarterback Ben Bennett, but Kenneth Harper's 51-yard field goal attempt was wide.

The Blue Devils, 3-2, built a 21-0 lead early in the second period as Bennett found split end Chris Castor for two touchdowns. Bennett completed 20 of 29 passes for 290 yards.

So Mississippi 20, Mississippi St 14

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Tailback Sam Dejarnette scored two touchdowns and Steve Clark kicked two field goals Saturday to lift the Southern Mississippi Golden Eagles to a 20-14 football victory over archrival Mississippi State.

Dejarnette, who gained 108 yards on 31 carries, scored on a fourth-down, 1-yard dive in the first quarter and a 5-yard sprint in the third while Clark booted field goals of 40 and 17 yards.

Mississippi Val. 23, Alabama St. 6

ITTA BENA, Miss. (AP) — Quarterback Willie Totten hurled two touchdown passes Saturday as Mississippi Valley State stalled Alabama State 23-6 in college football.

Totten connected on a second-quarter, 5-yard scoring pass to Jerry Rice, and then tossed a 30-yarder to Joe Thomas in the third period.

Alabama State scored first in the game when Walter Shelly plunged 2 yards to score. But Valley State's defense held Alabama State pointless the rest of the game.

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Sophomore Faud Reveiz kicked a 52-yard field goal with 2:07 to play Saturday night as Tennesse tied 18th-ranked Louisiana State 24-24 in a Southeastern Conference football game studded with big plays.

Reveiz missed on another 52-yard field goal attempt with two seconds to play. On the final play of the game, Carlton Peoples intercepted a desperation LSU pass at the Tennessee 20-yard line.

The tie left LSU to 3-0-1 overall and 1-0-0 in the SEC. Tennessee, a two-touchdown underdog, is 2-2-1 overall and 0-1-1 in the conference.

Freshman Dalton Hillyard ran three yards for a touchdown to give LSU a 24-14 lead with 13:15 to play, but the Vols capitalized on a fumble for a touchdown midway in the final quarter, and then drove 40 yards to set up the tying field goal.

Cougars strike quickly to sneak past Aggies, 24-20 in SWC play

HOUSTON (AP) - Houston's Greg Harmon returned a fumble 20 yards for a touchdown and Mike Clendenen kicked a 27-yard field goal in a 14-second span of the fourth quarter Saturday night as the Cougars overcame their own mistakes to nip Texas A&M 24-20 in a pulsating Southwest Conference football game.

The Cougars, trailing 17-7 early in the second quarter, tied the score with 11:55 to play on Clendenen's field goal following a crucial fourth down run of 20 yards by Dallas Wiggins.

Fourteen seconds later, A&M quarterback Gary Kubiak tried to scramble out of the grasp of UH defenders T.J. Turner and Craig McGallion. Kubiak fumbled the ball into the air, Harmon picked it off and ran untouched into the end zone. Clendenen's extra point made it 24-17 with 11:41 to play

The Aggies recovered Houston quarterback Lionel Wilson's third fumble of the game and added a 43-yard field goal and added a 43-yard field goal by David Harty with 2:57 to play.

Gilbert, with over 100 yards rushing, scored on runs of 1 and 2 yards and Ozee's field goal enabled the Frogs to take a 17-16 fourth quarter lead.

Following Shawn Thomas' interception of Calhoun, Jones guided the Frogs 66 yards in 9 plays and capped the victory by snaking the final 9 yards himself.

Calhoun dove 2 yards for the first Rice TD and rifled an 8-yard toss to Vince Courville for a second.

TCU 24, Rice 16

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) - Marcus Gilbert banged in for two touchdowns and Ken Ozee drilled a clutch 27-yard field goal as Texas Christian rode its gutsy defense to a 24-16 Southwest Conference victory over the winless Rice Owls Saturday night.

The Horned Frogs stole four passes from Rice quarterback Michael Calhoun and the final interception preceded Reuben Jones' insurance touchdown with 5:11 remaining.

The verdict was TCU's first SWC triumph in three games and hiked its season mark to 2-3. Rice is 0-5.

INTRODUCING

FIRST RATE CHECKING

"Works like a regular checking account & pays interest just like a money market fund."

Now you can get the same high yielding rates that money market funds offer, combined with the conveniences of a local checking account right here at home from First Savings. It's called FIRST RATE CHECKING and it's the ultimate for those looking for flexibility, liquidity and high interest rates.

When you open a FIRST RATE CHECKING account you'll find that it allows you to do exactly what you want to do with your money. There are no restrictions on check writing. There is no red tape. No penalties. FIRST RATE CHECKING pays interest like current money market funds on your deposits over $2,500.

Here's how it works:

1. A FIRST RATE CHECKING ACCOUNT can be opened at any one of our four First Savings offices with a minimum deposit of $2,500. (If you already have an account with us, you only need tell us you want FIRST RATE CHECKING and bring your balance to $2,500 or more.)

2. When your balance rises above $2,600, all funds over $2,500 are automatically transferred into a special repurchase agreement which earns interest equal to the most recent 13-week Treasury Bill Rate. While the first $2,500 in the account still earns interest at our regular 5¼% rate.

3. Write checks as usual . . . any number for any amount. There are no restrictions here. It's one of our attractive features. Pay all your bills out of this account if you like. As you write checks and make deposits, your funds are automatically transferred back and forth between your interest bearing checking account and the higher yielding repurchase agreement.

4. There are no penalties, no fuss, no red tape. You deal with local people that you know. And your funds earn you high interest while staying in our own area, helping your community.

5. You'll receive a complete monthly statement that itemizes all checks, deposits, transfers, balances and interest earned.

6. Call now 683-5681 for more information or stop by any one of our branch offices: San Miguel Square—Stanton—Claydesta Towers West or our main office at 500 West Wall Avenue in Midland.

IMPORTANT:
Your checking balance is insured by FSLIC. However, the repurchase agreement is not a savings account or a deposit and is not insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

"Make your own financial history."

FIRST RATE CHECKING is just another way that First Savings is helping you carve out a better financial future. Whatever your financial position — remember our commitment is to help you reach your financial goals as an individual or as a business — offering you alternatives that will help you make financial history today. Come in or call — we'll give you more detailed information that will show you exactly how to carve out your own future with the new FIRST RATE CHECKING.

Cards defeat Braves 4-3 to take 2-0 playoff lead

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Ken Obkerfell drove a line drive single to deep center in the ninth inning, scoring rookie David Green from second with the winning run as the St. Louis Cardinals rallied for a 4-3 victory over the Atlanta Braves to take a 2-0 lead in the National League championship series.

Green, who had entered the game as a defensive replacement at third base in the eighth inning, opened the Cardinals ninth with a single to left. Tommy Herr sacrificed the runner to second, bringing up Obkerfell.

With Bruce Sutter, ace of the Cardinals' bullpen on deck, the Braves decided to pitch to the third baseman rather than walk him and face a possible pinch-hitter. Obkerfell spoiled the strategy with a drive over center fielder Brett Butler's head that brought Green tearing home and left the Cardinals one victory away from their first World Series appearance since 1968.

They will try for that spot Sunday night in Atlanta with Joaquin Andujar facing Rick Camp of the Braves in the third game of the series.

Sutter had rescued the Cardinals from a two-out, no out jam in the eighth and then St. Louis rallied to tie the score against Gene Garber in the bottom of the inning.

Atlanta starter Phil Niekro, who was pitching with just two days' rest after working 4 1-3 innings in Wednesday's rained-out opener, turned in six gritty innings for the Braves.

THE CARDINALS, who struggled in the early going against Niekro's dancing knuckleball, came from two runs behind to tie the score 3-3.

They nicked Niekro for a run in the sixth on a single by Keith Hernandez and Darrell Porter's RBI double. After Atlanta pinch-hit for Niekro in the seventh, Garber came out of the Braves' bullpen.

He set the Cardinals down in order in their half of the seventh, and then Atlanta wasted a golden opportunity to add to its lead in the eighth. The Braves had runners at first and second with none out when Sutter relieved for St. Louis and pitched out of the jam, keeping the Cardinals just one run behind.

St. Louis tied the score against Garber in the bottom of the eighth when Porter walked with one out and raced to third on a single by George Hendrick. Rookie Willie McGee, who had struck out three times and made a costly three-base error which gave the Braves an early run, came through with a bouncer up the middle that forced Hendrick but allowed Porter to score the tying run.

One of Niekro's darting knucklers gave St. Louis a run in the first inning, when the Braves twice missed double plays that would have gotten them out of the inning. Tommy Herr opened with a walk and was forced at second by Oberkfell on what seemed a routine double play that the Braves simply failed to turn over fast enough.

Lonnie Smith singled Oberkfell to third. On a hit-and-run play, Hernandez lined a shot to shortstop that looked like another DP. But Rafael Ramirez trapped the ball and could only get the batter, keeping the inning alive. Then Porter walked and when the fourth ball bounced away from catcher Bruce Benedict for a wild pitch, Oberkfell scored.

The Braves bounced back in the third. Benedict opened with a walk and Niekro sacrificed him to second. After Claudell Washington struck out, Ramirez singled to center, scoring Benedict. The ball, acting like one of Niekro's knucklers, darted under the glove of McGee and rolled to the fence, allowing Ramirez to circle the bases as well.

The Cardinals tried to come back in the fourth when Porter opened with a double and took third on a passed ball. But Niekro shut the door, striking out Hendrick and McGee before walking Ozzie Smith and then getting pitcher John Stuper to end the inning.

In the Atlanta fifth, Glenn Hubbard opened with a single and dashed to third on Benedict's double. Then Niekro contributed a sacrifice fly, making it 3-1.

The Cards came at Niekro in the sixth when Hernandez opened with a single and Porter doubled into the right field corner. Hernandez scored on the hit but Porter was out trying to stretch it into a triple. That meant followup hits by Hendrick and Ozzie Smith were wasted.

In the eighth, the Braves had runners had at first and second with none out, hoping to add to their lead. But Sutter, ace of the Cardinal bullpen, came on to strike out Bob Horner. Dale Murphy was out trying to steal and Jerry Royster bounced back to the mound.

Fourth inning wild pitches help Brewers to victory

by a 16 mile-per-hour wind that transformed a Reggie Jackson shot in the fourth inning into a flyout at the warning track. It was the only well-hit ball off Haas until Lynn clubbed his run-scoring double on Haas' 99th pitch of the game.

THE MILWAUKEE victories in Games 3 and 4 represented a dramatic reversal of the first two games, which the Angels won behind the pitching of Tommy John and Bruce Kison.

John, meanwhile, lasted only 3⅓ innings as the Angel starter Saturday as his finely-tuned control abandoned him and the Angels defense weakened.

The Brewers scored three runs in the second inning, two of them unearned, with the help of two errors and a wild pitch by John.

Ted Simmons led off the Milwaukee second by walking and one out later, John wild-pitched Simmons to second. John then walked Don Money, bringing up Brouhard.

Brouhard's single to center drove in Simmons, and when Lynn's throw to third hit Money for an error, another run scored. Angels third baseman Doug DeCinces, who sustained a broken nose in Game 3 when he fouled the ball off the plate and into his face, chased Lynn's throw down near the photographers's stand at the end of the Angels' dugout and his wild throw took one hop into the right field stands, allowing Brouhard to score.

IN THE fourth, Milwaukee added three more with the help of two more John wild pitches, tying a league Championship Series record for the number of wild pitches in a game. John again walked the leadoff batter, Gorman Thomas. Don Money followed with a single that sent Thomas to third. Brouhard then grounded to shortstop Foli, whose throw home nailed Thomas but left runners at first and second.

John's wild-pitch advanced the runners and Charlie Moore was walked to load the bases. John then threw a third wild pitch that scored Money and Jim Gantner followed with a single that scored Brouhard and chased John. The third run of the inning scored on a grounder by Paul Molitor off reliever Dave Goltz.

Brouhard doubled off the glove of DeCinces at third that started the Milwaukee sixth, was sacrificed to third and scored on a single by Gantner.

The Brewers chased Goltz in the eighth when Money singled and pinch-runner Marshall Edwards stole second before Brouhard homered.

Still clinging to his no-hitter, Haas walked Downing, the leadoff batter in the sixth, then sat through the second of the midgame rain delays. When play was resumed, Haas got Rod Carew to fly to shallow center for the first out, and Jackson then hit a sharp grounder to first baseman Cecil Cooper. Cooper's throw to second forced Downing, but shortstop Robin Yount's return throw was wild, allowing Jackson to take second.

How's Your Hearing? Advertisement

Chicago, Ill.—A free offer of special interest to those who hear but do not understand words has been announced by Beltone. A non-operating model of one of the smallest Beltone aids of its kind will be given absolutely free to anyone requesting it.

Send for this model, put it on and wear it in the privacy of your own home. While many people with a hearing loss will not receive any significant benefit from any hearing aid, this free model will show you how tiny hearing help can be. It is not a real hearing aid, and it's yours to keep free. The actual aid weighs less than a fourth of an ounce, and it's all at ear level, in one unit.

These models are free, so we suggest you write for yours now. Again, we repeat, there is no cost, and certainly no obligation. Thousands have already been mailed, so write today to Department 28344 Beltone Electronics Corporation, 4201 West Victoria Street, Chicago, Illinois 60646.

Lee's field goal in final seconds lifts UCLA to 24-24 tie with Arizona

Arizona freshman Max Zendejas had booted a 43-yard field goal with 33 seconds to go, apparently giving the Wildcats an upset victory, but Tom Ramsey, who completed 29 of 43 passes for 345 yards, quickly moved the Bruins into position for Lee's game-tying three-pointer.

Both Ramsey and Arizona quarterback Tom Tunnicliffe fired two touchdown passes apiece in the wild game, played before a crowd of 50,133. Ramsey's 29 completions and 345 yards in passing are both single-game UCLA records.

Washington 50, California 7

SEATTLE (AP) — Tim Cowan came off the bench to replace an injured Steve Pelluer and fired three touchdown passes Saturday as No.1-ranked Washington crushed California's Golden Bears 50-7 in a Pacific-10 Conference football game.

San Diego St. 24, Wyoming 21

The start of the game was delayed 1½ hours because Interstate 80 was closed by bad weather and the Aztec team had to take a detour to Laramie from Cheyenne.

Fullback Derrick Harvey carried 40 times for 135 yards to set a new San Diego record for rushing attempts. His running set up Morales' field goal and all three of San Diego's touchdowns, although Harvey never scored himself.

Brigham Young 40, New Mexico 12

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Fullback Casey Tiumalu scored two touchdowns as Brigham Young parlayed four New Mexico turnovers into a 26-point third quarter en route to a crucial 40-12 Western Athletic Conference victory Saturday.

BYU, which moved into a tie with New Mexico for the WAC lead at 2-1, also got an 18-yard touchdown run by junior quarterback Steve Young, a 30-yard field goal by Kurt Gunther and a safety in the third period. The scores were set up by three New Mexico fumbles and an interception. BYU is 3-2 overall.

Air Force 24, Navy 21

Pavlich's kick came after the Midshipmen, behind the passing of quarterback Marco Pagnanelli, had come from behind to deadlock the score 21-21 with 3:37 remaining.

Utah St. 30, Idaho St. 3

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — Willie Beecher kicked three field goals and Eric Adams and Andre Bynum each rushed for two touchdowns Saturday as Utah State thumped Idaho State 30-3 in a nonconference football game Saturday.

Beecher nailed a career-best field goal of 52 yards and ones of 44 and 31 yards as Utah State, 3-2 overall, rolled up 517 yards in total offense.

Idaho State, of the Big Sky Conference, scored its only points on a 28-yard field goal by Perry Larson in the fourth period. Idaho State now is 2-3 overall.

Oregon St 14, Washington St 14

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — Chris Mangold hit a 36-yard field goal with 31 seconds to play Saturday as Oregon State snapped a 14-game losing streak by tying Washington State, 14-14, in a Pacific-10 Conference football game.

Lee runners have best outing of year in Big Spring Invite

BIG SPRING — The Midland Lee cross country team had its best outing of the year here Saturday in the Big Spring Invitational Cross Country meet.

Lee's varsity placed fourth with 137 points behind San Angelo, 54; Brownfield, 66; and Abilene High, 136.

Carl Piccolo led the charge with a fifth place time of 16:48. Other Lee varsity runners were Steve Taylor, 30th, 18:05; Jim Chauncey, 32nd, 18:18; Tim Chauncey, 36th, 18:29; and Craig Velasquez, 39th, 18:33.

The Lee junior varsity placed second with 68 points to Odessa High's 30 and that was one of the best finishes by Lee in several years. Van Tolar's third place 18:24 and Lupe Reyes' fifth place 18:54 led the way. Others were Scott Orson, 13th, 19:37; Danny Smith, 22nd, 20:34; and Patrick Isom, 25th, 20:49.

The Lee JV girls were Debbie King, 13th, 16:03; Diane Evans, 19th, 16:39; and Mona Lisa Enrique, 26th; 16:53.

Lee travels to Lubbock next week and will join with Midland High the following Friday to host the annual Tall City Invitational Cross Country meet at Hogan Park.

IT'S PEOPLE THAT MAKE NEWSPAPERS GO!

National Newspaper Week October 10th- 16th

The Midland Reporter-Telegram

Computerization hasn't replaced people

The beginning of a story

A reporter "inputs" the first paragraphs of a story into a video display terminal. From this point the story will be transmitted, via computer, to the city desk for editing and, later, to the copy desk where it will be headlined and its placement in the newspaper determined.

Communication is vital

More expertise required of staff

In today's modern newspaper, actually is seven departments reporters, typewriters and editors' black pencils are virtually a unison. that function separately but in thing of the past.

From the reporter to the composing room where stories are placed on pages, news today moves silently via computers. Video terminals, such as the one at left, are in the newsroom to stay, at least until replaced by even more efficient technological devices.

But offset printing, sophisticated typesetting equipment and computers haven't taken the place of people in the newsroom. Far from it. They only increased the expertise which today's newspaper men and women must have.

It is people, just as it always has been, who gather data, conduct interviews and cover events. It is people who write the stories, edit, improve and polish them, write the headlines and then determine where and when it all will appear.

While modern technology can move stories quickly from reporter to editor to composing areas and new equipment has the capacity to utilize a wide variety of type styles and sizes, final decisions still are made by the men and women who gather the news and package the day's report.

At The Reporter-Telegram, the department responsible for that Sports, Lifestyle and Energy-Business departments spotlight special areas of interest.

The city staff covers general news of Midland and the area.

The photo department fills the photographic needs of all of these and the copy desk staff has the responsibility of putting the package together in a timely and attractive fashion.

The Editorial Department determines which syndicated columns will be published, perpares the editorial and op-editorial pages and originates the newspaper's opinion on both local and non-local issues of public interest.

Four writers make up the Sports Department while three are employed in Lifestyle and nine constitute the city Staff. Five are employed in the Energy-Business Department; three in photography and four on the copy desk staff. Editorial adds another three while filing of pictures and stories is handled by a librarian.

These 32 men and women, with a variety of abilities, specialties and talents, join together each day to do their part in producing what you are reading now and what is published seven days a week... a totally new and different Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Professional staff

From oil scouts to editors, thirty-two professional news people make up the editorial department of The Reporter-Telegram and most of them are shown above. The staff recently was enlarged in order to improve the quality and increase the scope of daily news coverage.

...And at The Reporter-Telegram that means people working in a dozen different departments with one common goal: To produce and deliver to you the best daily newspaper possible.

To help us do a better job we're taking a close look at ourselves, how we do things and how we could do them better. We're examining all the possiblities and looking at all the angles that could result in a better Midland Reporter-Telegram for you.

And our people are deeply involved in helping us make those changes. This week we'll be letting you know who some of them are and the role they play in producing your daily paper.

While a newspaper's task is to keep citizens informed on what's happening throughout the world, and The Reporter-Telegram utilizes five national news services to do that, we believe you also want thorough, timely, comprehensive local coverage...news and features about people, places and events here at home.

To obtain and produce that news we have enlarged our staff to its present size... 32 editors, reporters and photographers. We're proud of them because we know "It's PEOPLE that make newspapers go!"

LaPrarie's passing leads Rutgers to victory over Army, 24-3

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Sophomore quarterback Jacque LaPrarie threw for 129 yards, including an 11-yard touchdown pass to split end Eric Johnson, to lead Rutgers to a 24-3 victory over Army Saturday at Giants Stadium.

Rutgers built a 14-0 halftime lead on cornerback Carl Howard's 12-yard return of a blocked punt and the scoring pass from LaPrarie to Johnson. Peter Konczylo kicked both extra points.

Army placekicker Craig Stopa closed the lead to 14-3 with a 35-yard field goal at 2:58 of the third quarter.

But six minutes later, tailback Joe Burke ran 17 yards for the Rutgers' third touchdown. Konczylo kicked the extra point to boost Knights' lead to 21-3.

Penn 24, Brown 21

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — John Waterfield rambled 53 yards with a freak fumble recovery Saturday for a third quarter touchdown to give unbeaten Pennsylvania a 24-21 football victory over Brown and sole possession of of first place in the Ivy League.

Waterfield, who set up Penn's first touchdown with another fumble recovery, plucked a loose ball out of the air when teammate Tim Chambers was hit after returning a punt 12 yards.

Columb 35, Prince 14

NEW YORK (AP) — John Witkowski triggered a 28-point third quarter explosion that carried Columbia to a 35-14 victory over Princeton in an Ivy League Saturday, stopping the Lions' 10-game losing streak.

Whitkowski, who completed 24 of 40 passes for 316 yards, threw for four touchdowns in the game and three of them in the third quarter. Flanker Bill Reggio caught 3 of the touchdown passes.

Colgate 21, Holy Cross 17

The regionally televised game between nationally ranked Division I-AA opponents left Colgate 5-0 for the season and increased its winning streak to seven games. Holy Cross dropped to 4-1.

Harvard 25, Cornell 13

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Senior quarterback Don Allard ran for one touchdown and passed for two others Saturday before retiring with a shoulder injury at halftime Saturday, as Harvard took a 25-13 Ivy League football victory over winless Cornell.

Allard connected on 11 of 16 passes for 104 yards, and carried nine times for 24 yards before heading for the hospital and examination of his right shoulder.

Senior Jack Riordan, who had played in only one series of downs for the varsity, replaced Allard and led the Crimson to another touchdown in the second half.

The victory came in a driving rain with wind gusts to 40 mph, boosting Harvard's record to 3-1, including 2-0 in the Ivy League. Cornell slipped to 0-4 overall, including two losses in the league.

Marylnd 38, Indana St 0

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Boomer Esiason completed 13 of 15 passes for 203 yards and two touchdowns, and ran for another score as Maryland walloped Indiana State 38-0 Saturday.

Esiason tossed TD aerials of eight yards to Greg Hill and 38 yards to Darryl Emerson, and almost impeccible passing set up two more scores during a 35-0 first half.

N Hamp 3, Bucknell 0

DURHAM, N.H. (AP) — A 21-yard field goal by Rusty Foster was the only score of the game Saturday, as the University of New Hampshire knocked off Bucknell 3-0.

Bucknell, now 1-3 for the season, had 296 yards of total offense, but had four costly turnovers, including three fumbles deep in UNH territory. A pair of missed field goals by Al Yuknus also hurt the Bisons.

New Hampshire, now 3-2, won its third straight homecoming game as a crowd of 6,248 braved the cold and rain. The Wildcats managed only 248 total yards of offense.

Austin College 28, Tarleton St. 18

SHERMAN, Texas (AP) — Matt Hill threw for one touchdown and ran for another and Blake Hyde returned an interception for a score late in the game to secure Austin College's 28-18 Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association win over Tarleton State Saturday.

Austin College is now 3-1 for the season and Tarleton is 2-2.

Hill passed seven yards to Russ Roden for the first touchdown and ran two yards for another. Greg Garrison added a touchdown for Austin College on a two-yard run.

Tarleton's first score came on a 10-yard run by Ricky Bush. Kevin Petty then tossed scoring passes of 31-yards to Wade Wilson and 75-yarads to Barren Pisle.

Angelo State 30, SF Austin 24

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Quarterback Slade Sherrod threw for 244 yards and three touchdowns in his first start as a collegian to lead Angelo State to a 30-24 victory over Stephen F. Austin in the two teams' Lone Star Conference opener.

Sherrod tossed scoring strikes of 53 nad 23 yards to split end Michael Elarms and 32 yards to tight end Todd Boales. The scoring pass to Boales came with 11:03 left in the game and gave Angelo a 30-21 lead.

Abilene Christian 34, Texas A&I 18

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Fullback Anthony Thomas ran for 203 yards and scored three touchdowns to lead Abilene Christian to a 34-18 victory over Texas A&I here Saturday night in Lone Star Conference play.

Abilene Christian jumped to a quick 14-0 lead in the first five minutes of the game on two short touchdown runs by Thomas and the Wildcats never trailed. The win raised ACU's record to 3-1-1.

It was the LSC opener for both teams. Texas A&I, which was ranked sixth in that latest NCAA Division Two poll, falls to 3-2 for the season.

Sul Ross 21, Lubbock Chrstian 7

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Andrew Hill ran for three touchdowns and Larry Hill completed a conference record 31 passes for a record 381 yards Saturday as Sul Ross rolled to an easy 21-7 Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association victory over Lubbock Christian.

SWTS 31, Howard Payne 3

SAN MARCOS, Texas — Eric Cobble tied a school record by running for four first-half touchdowns Saturday night that paced Southwest Texas State to a 31-3 victory over Howard Payne in the Lone Star Conference opener for both schools.

Cobble scored on runs of eight, one, 19 and one yard as Southwest Texas, the top-ranked NCAA Division II team, won its fifth consecutive game without a loss. Howard Payne is now 1-3 for the season.

Alcorn St. 15, Texas Southern 12

LORMAN, Miss. (AP) — George Green's fourth-period field goal provided the winning margin Saturday when Alcorn State nipped Texas Southern 15-12 in Southwestern Athletic Conference football.

The final field goal was one of two from Green's toe in Alcorn's victory. He booted a 25-yarder in the second quarter to give Alcorn a 10-0 halftime advantage after Richard Myles connected with Karl Hampton for a 16-yard scoring pass mid-way through the first period.

Sam Houston 21, E. Texas St. 13

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Roger Wiley and Tony January each rambled for more than 100 yards and a touchdown Saturday night to lift Sam Houston State to a come-from-behind 21-13 win over East Texas State in the Lone Star Conference opener for both teams.

Sam Houston State is now 3-2 for the year, while East Texas State fell to 2-2.

There's nothing better than learning about a new bass fishing lake. Better yet, this is a new lake that will open around Feb., 1 in Mexico.

Long time hunting and fishing outfitter Bill Chapman, who has fished Hidlago, Buelna and Dominguez Lakes in Mexico, will be opening a new fishing service on a new lake situated nar Culican, Sinaloa, Mexico. Now, as far as we know, there's not a name for the lake at present, but I'm sure the governemt-labeled reservoir will be named shortly.

I talked with Joe Don Scott, Chapman's American booking agent the other day and he said "I am very happy about this new lake because it's about five times the size of Lake Dominguez and should provide excellent bass fishing in the very near future.

"A group of mine fished the lake not long ago on a test basis," he continued. "Chapman stocked the lake with bass from Lake Dominguez about a year and a half ago and today, the alke is already producing quanities of three-plus pounders."

Those of you who have fished with Chapman's services before know he runs a first class operation. He has a lodge and camp already construction at this new lake and hopefully he will be able to begin taking fishermen around Feb., 1.

The lake is a huge man-made lake which was built to serve Mexico farmers in the State of Sinaloa for irrigation purposes. It is situated about 60 miles out of Culiacan in the Sierra Madre foothills. According to Scott, the lake, when full, will be approximately the same size as Amistad Reservoir near Del Rio. And for those of you who have fished Amistad, you know it's no little West Texas mudhole.

Nothing excites me more than to learn of a new lake in Mexico. Whether the climate makes the difference or those mean Mexican largemouths just grow larger and faster, I don't know, but Mexico bass fishing in most lakes is the greatest in the world.

If this new lake holds up to the reputation of Dominguez, it should last much longer for excellent bass fishing since it's so large. We don't know what the name of it is yet, but Scott suggested the Mexican government name it Scott Lake, since he has fished the many Mecico lakes so many times.

WATERFOWL UPGRADE — Wildlife agencies in many nations are beginning to realize that management of migratory game birds must be conducted on a continental or even global scale, according to the director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Addressing a session of the USA—Mexico Joint Committee on wildlife conservation in Laredo recently, Robert A Jantzen said he hopes the discussions at the Laredo meeting with Canadian and Mexican officials will be a starting point for developing an international waterfowl management plan.

"Waterfowl don't observe international boundaries, so it makes sense that countries which share a resource should coordinate their management programs as closely as possible," Jantzen said.

He said that discussions will be held by U.S. and Canadian officials within a year on a program which would deal with all aspects of waterfowl management, including habitat protections, regulations, law enforcement and research. Later, Mexico will be included in the discussions after completion of a comprehensive national enviromental policy statement now being prepared.

Seaver leaving Cincinnati

CINCINNATI (AP) — Three-time Cy Young Award winning pitcher Tom Seaver says he won't play for the Cincinnati Reds after his 1983 contract runs out.

"There's no way that I would sign another contract with the Reds," said Seaver, whose 1982 performance was hampered by a series of injuries.

He has one year remaining on his contract.

"Dick (Wagner, Reds president) talked in spring training about signing me to a new contract. I was willing to listen. But he wasn't talking the kind of numbers that I wanted to hear," Seaver said.

"It was a possibility at the time. It was something I was thinking about. I thought, like a lot of people, that we'd be a lot more competitive than we were," Seaver said, referring to the Reds' last-place finish in the National League West.

NOW SEAVER sees the Reds, who had a 61-101 record, in a rebuilding program. He does not see himself as part of it. Wagner, however, indicated earlier this week that Seaver could play a big role with the 1983 Reds.

"He feels that I can still pitch again. I really feel like I can still pitch again or I wouldn't come back ... I don't know what his thoughts are. He hasn't had time to be able to get back to me. One way or another, I'll see him at the World Series. I'll be talking to him about it," said Seaver.

UNDER HIS conract, Seaver can't demand a trade, but he can veto one. He said geography was his most important consideration. His family lives in Greenwich, Conn.

Seaver said he would not approve a trade to a West Coast team — regardless of its competitiveness — and was uncertain whether he would go to a contending Midwest team such as Milwaukee or Kansas City.

"I spend enough time away from my family and I'm getting very tired of it," said Seaver, who was traded by the New York Mets to Cincinnati in 1977.

Updegraff wins USGA amateur title

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Alton Duhon of Los Angeles, a retired postal worker, defeated defending champion Ed Updegraff of Tucson Saturday to win the 28th U.S. Senior Amateur Championships 2-up.

Duhon, a public-course player, thus became the first black to ever win the event. He said while working he requested night duty so he could play golf during the day.

Both opened with birdies on No. 1 but Duhon's par on Nos. 2 and 6 gave him a 2-up lead. Updegraff, a physician playing his home course, won No. 7 with a par and squared it with a birdie on No. 8. Duhon birdied No. 14 after a beautiful 9-iron to the green and they halved until No. 18, when Duhon canned a 35-foot putt for a birdie and the winning margin.

DUHON, 56, won in his second try. Last year he lost in the first round. Saturday he played almost flawless golf, featuring a great short game, and carded a medal score of 37-34—71 for the par-72, 6,601-yard Tucson Country Club course.

Updegraff, 60, was trying to become only the third man to win successive titles in this event and the second to do so on his home course.

Nebraska routs Colorado, 40-14

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Junior Mike Rozier ran for 212 yards and scored two crucial fourth-quarter touchdowns as seventh-ranked Nebraska held off pesky Colorado 40-14 Saturday in Big Eight Conference football.

Colorado, trailing 20-0, rallied for two touchdowns in the third quarter to cut the deficit to 20-14. Randy Essington flipped a 37-yard pass to running back Richard Johnson for the first score, and Johnson ran 24 yards for the other.

But Nebraska responded to the challenge, scoring two touchdowns just 17 seconds apart in the final period to clinch its fourth victory in five outings. The Cornhuskers first put together a 16-play, 91-yard drive, with Rozier catching a 6-yard pass from quarterback Turner Gill for the score with 8:26 left in the game.

On Colorado's next play from scrimmage, Essington's pass was tipped by linebacker Mike Knox and intercepted by Steve Damkroger, who returned 25 yards to the Colorado 11-yard line. Rozier scored on the ensuing play, ripping 11 yards off the right side, and the Huskers suddenly had a comfortable 33-14 lead with 8:09 remaining.

Kansas 24, Oklahoma St. 24

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Ernest Anderson rushed 270 yards for Oklahoma State, but Kansas quarterback Frank Seurer's passing forced the Cowboys to settle for a 24-24 tie in a Big Eight Conference football opener Saturday.

After Anderson broke open the scoring with a 58-yard touchdown run in the first quarter, Cowboy quarterback Ike Jackson launched the Oklahoma State passing game with a pair of touchdown strikes that gave the Cowboys a 24-10 halftime lead.

But Seurer's aerial attack, including the game-tying 80-yard touchdown pass to Bob Johnson, buoyed the Kansas offense and gave the Jayhawks a 1-2-2 season record.

Anderson's yardage in 36 carries broke the single-game rushing record for Oklahoma State, now 1-2-1, and was the best ever against Kansas by any player. The junior tailback leads the nation with an average of 189 yards per game.

Missouri 7, Kansas St. 7

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) - Mike Wallace, on 4th and 32, made a juggling fourth-quarter catch of a Doug Bogue pass in the end zone Saturday as Kansas State fought Missouri to a 7-7 tie in a regionally televised Big Eight football game.

It was the first tie for both teams since 1966, when Missouri fought Iowa State to a 10-10 deadlock and Kansas Statee struggled to a 3-3 standoff with Kansas.

Missouri grabbed a 7-0 lead in the first quarter on a 2-yard touchdown plunge by Tracey Mack. Kansas State, out-played statistically most of the day, stayed alive with an intense defensive effort.

Northwestern 31, Minnesota 21

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) — Northwestern University broke a 38-game Big Ten losing streak Saturday as freshman quarterback Sandy Schwab ran for one touchdown and passed for another to lead the Wildcats to a 31-21 victory over error-prone Minnesota.

Just two weeks ago the Wildcats snapped a 34-game losing streak, a major college record. The last time they won a Big Ten game was Nov. 19, 1977, when they defeated Illinois 21-7.

Ricky Edwards rambled 147 yards in 28 carries through a porous Gopher defense and scored one touchdown for Northwestern, which raised its record to 1-3 in the conference and 2-4 overall.

The Wildcats came from a 21-3 deficit by scoring three touchdowns within a six minute span midway through the game.

With a comfortable lead and 1:01 left in the half, Minnesota chose to punt at its own 44. But center Steve Mulholland's snap sailed over punter Paul Blanchard's head for a 38-yard loss to the Minnesota six. On the next play, Schwab tossed a scoring pass to John Harvey. Rick Salvino's kick made it 21-10.

Wisconsin 6, Ohio St 0

"This is probably my biggest win," said McClain amid the pandemonium in the Badgers' dressing room.

It marked the first time in 64 seasons that Wisconsin had won in Columbus and the first time ever they had posted a victory in 60-year-old Ohio Stadium.

Tailback John Williams' 1-yard touchdown run on Wisconsin's opening series was all the scoring the Badgers needed to crack their hex. Wisconsin's last victory in Columbus was a 14-3 decision in 1918.

Illinois 38, Purdue 34

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Tony Eason hurled four touchdown passes, one a 50-yard bomb in the fourth quarter, as Big 10 leader Illinois rallied to defeat winless Purdue, 38-34, Saturday.

In a sizzling aerial duel with Purdue's Scott Campbell, Eason connected on 27 of 39 passes for 354 yards. Campbell completed 20 of 49 passes, three for touchdowns.

Three of Purdues touchdowns stemmed from Illinois fumbles and a fourth was set up in the final quarter on a pass interference infraction that gave the Boilermakers the ball on the one yard line. From there, Rod Carter scored his second touchdown and Purdue took a 34-31 lead.

Iowa 24, Indiana 20

Indiana appeared finished when Ron Hawley intercepted a pass by Indiana's Babe Laufenberg at the Hawkeyes' 3-yard line with just over two minutes to go. But the Hoosiers got the ball back when Iowa punted and started their final drive from their own 29-yard line.

Laufenberg, who set an Indiana single-game record with 390 yards passing, completed passes of 24 yards to John Boyd, 8 yards to Johnnie Salters, 14 yards to Duane Gunn and 17 yards to Terry Smith for a first-down at the Iowa 8 with 20 seconds to go. The Hoosiers, out of time-outs, managed only one more play, and a 6-yard completion to Scott McNabb left the ball at the 2-yard line as the game ended.

Iowa, now 2-0 in the Big Ten and 3-2 overall, trailed 17-14 at the intermission after Laufenberg threw a 52-yard scoring pass to Gunn on the opening play of the second quarter and later thew a 12-yard touchdown pass to Boyd.

The Hoosiers dropped to 1-2 in the Big Ten and 2-3 for all games.

Wichita St 48, Illinois St 14

NORMAL, Ill. (AP) — Prince McJunkins passed for three touchdowns and ran for another to lead Wichita State to a 48-14 Missouri Valley Conference football victory over Illinois State Saturday.

McJunkins passed for 243 yards and collected 108 yards on the ground as Wichita State overcame a 14-7 deficit early in the game for a 2-0 league mark and a 5-1 season record. Illinois State dropped to 0-3 and 1-4.

Drake 31, Western Illinois 12

MACOMB, Ill. (AP) — Senior fullback Amero Ware rushed for 128 yards and scored once to lead Drake to a 31-12 non-conference football victory Saturday over Western Illinois.

Ware's 128 yards moved him into second place on Drake's all-time rushing list with 3,020 yards. Johnny Bright has been on top since 1951 with 3,134 yards.

Western opened scoring with a 36-yard field goal by Mike Fogle and a 30-yard touchdown toss from Tom Pence to Jerome Stelly. But the Leathernecks, 1-4, didn't score again until the fourth quarter, when they tackled Bulldog running back Carlos Foster in the end zone for a safety.

Western's Dan Jenkins rushed for 98 yards.

Drake quarterback Gary Yagesiki scored twice on runs of 3 and 9 yards and tossed 61 yards to Mike Williams for a third touchdown. Ron Damen added a field goal.

Miami (Ohio) 17, Bowling Green 12

OXFORD, Ohio (AP) — Miami (Ohio) University picked off five passes by freshman quarterback Brian McClure, including a 7-yard interception return for a touchdown by tackle Wafik Elsanada, to edge Bowling Green 17-12 in a Mid-American Conference college football game Saturday.

Miami stayed undefeated with its fifth victory and fourth in the conference, while Bowling Green slipped to 3-1 in the conference and overall.

McClure completed 29 of 41 tosses for 312 yards, setting BG records for passing yards and completions. One of his tosses with 8:12 left in the third quarter was deflected to Elsanada, who sprinted seven yards to give Miami a 14-6 lead.

McClure rallied BG on a 59-yard, 8-play drive in the fourth quarter, with running back Chip Otten sneaking into the corner of the end zone for a 5-yard TD run that cut Miami's lead to 14-12. Bowling Green attemped a two-point conversion, but Otten's pass to quarterback Dayne Palsgrove was batted down in the end zone.

Michigan 31, Michigan St. 17

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — All-American wide receiver Anthony Carter set up two of Michigan's three first-half touchdowns and scored one himself in the third quarter as the Wolverines rolled to a 31-17 Big Ten football victory over winless Michigan State Saturday.

Carter's 14-yard TD grab gave him 31 for his career, breaking the Big Ten record formerly held by Indiana's Jade Butcher.

The victory left Michigan 3-2 for the season, 3-0 in the Big Ten. Three of the Spartans' five defeats have been against conference foes.

Iowa State 44, Kent State 7

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Harold Brown rushed for 242 yards, the second best single game total in school history, and scored three touchdowns to power Iowa State to a 44-7 non-conference football victory over winless Kent State Saturday.

Brown, who did not start, scored two of his touchdowns in a 52 second span in the second quarter as the Cyclones built a 24-7 halftime lead en route to their third victory in five outings.

Brown, who carried 37 times, scored on a 1-yard run with 11:18 left in the second quarter and circled left end from 4 yards out with 10:26 remaining in the half on the first play after an interception by teammate George Jessen.

A senior from Kent, Ohio, the hometown of Kent State, Brown also scored on a 2-yard run in the first quarter. He was removed from the game early in the fourth quarter after falling 29 yards short of Dave Hoppmann's school record of 271 yards set in 1961.

02 Public Notices

Notice is hereby given to all approved savings and loan associations operating in Texas that Petroplex Savings Association (Midland) has filed with the Savings and Loan Commissioner of Texas the following application for a branch office (to purchase an existing and operating branch office from Gibraltar Savings Association). This application is filed pursuant to authority and jurisdiction granted by Article 852a, Texas Revised Civil Statutes Annotated. The particular sections of the statutes involved are 2.13 and 11.11. The particular rules involved are 1.1 (51.1) through 1.11 (51.11), 2.3 (53.3) and 2.4 (53.4). Such rules are on file with the Secretary of State, Texas Register Division, or may be seen at the Department offices.
Notice is further given that hearing on this application is scheduled for Monday, November 1, 1982 at 10:00 A.M. at the offices of the Savings and Loan Department, 1004 Lavaca, Austin, Texas.
The applicant association asserts that operation of the proposed branch office will not unduly harm any other association operating in the vicinity; that there is a public need for the proposed branch office; that the volume of business in the community in which the proposed branch office will operate is such as to yield a profit to the association in a reasonable time and certain other assertions per Rules 2.3 (53.3) and 2.4 (53.4).
Anyone desiring to protest this application may do so by writing the Commissioner at P. O. Box 1089, Austin, Texas, and so indicating and by appearing at 10:00 A.M. Monday, November 1, 1982 in the Department's offices and voicing protest when the application is called; however, it is requested and advisable that if you plan to oppose this application you so notify the Commissioner at P. O. Box 1089, Austin, Texas 78767 prior to the scheduled hearing. If no protest is registered prior to or at the time the application is called, hearing on the application may be dispensed with. If protest is registered and existing when the application is called, hearing on the application will be continued to a later date for the purpose of receiving testimony and evidence from the protest and to accumulate a record of pertinent information and data in support of the application an in protest to the application.
Application to establish a branch office at the corner of Wadley and Garfield, Midland, Midland County, Texas is issued this 7th day of September, 1982, Austin, Travis County, Texas.
L. Alvis Vandygriff,
Commissioner
Savings and Loan Department of Texas

Ed A. Wilson, Inc. General Contractors, will have a representative at the La Quinta Motor Inn, Odessa, Texas, on Monday and Tuesday, October 11 and 12, to accept bids on the Odessa Police and Municipal facility. Phone 915-332-6441 or 915-333-2820.

Just what is the difference between a 2 wheel and 4 wheel drive sport utility. Unless all terrain travel is important to you, consider these advantages in a 2 wheel drive. Less machinery in the 2 wheel Ramcharger means less on the sticker price and the cost of repair. 2 wheel drive uses normal highway tires for less cost and for a more comfortable ride. And the 2 wheel drive tows your boat, camper or trailer with as much ease as the 4 wheeler. Over all the 2 wheeler is a practical choice. But we of course, stock 4 wheel drive Ramchargers.

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 9⅞% for 95% loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 14¾% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 16⅞%.

GAS, CLEAN ENERGY FOR TODAY AND TOMORROW. FHA/VA financing availble.

QUAIL GLENN

OPEN 7 DAYS A WEEK 9-8

* The first three years payment and buyers qualifications will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 10 7/8% on a 95% loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 14 3/4% for the first year of the loan. After the first year of the loan, interest will be charged at the average annual Treasury Bill rate plus 2 1/2% with no change in the loan payment. In the 4th and 5th years there will be an increase of 10% of the principal and interest payment. The 6th through 30th years of the loan will have a principal and interest payment corresponding to the percentage rate as outlined above. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY .86%.

RENT—TO—OWN

It's true. We've made owning a beautiful luxury condominium at Town Plaza as easy as a dip in the pool.

All you do is qualify and move in. All rent except homeowners fee will be credited to you at time of closing. After just a few months you'll be owning, not renting.

And oh, will you like what your owning— your own 1 or 2 bedroom condominium home with spacious living areas, private patios and assigned parking.

The lovely landscaped grounds offer a unique peaceful setting for you to enjoy without ever lifting a finger!

You'll feel secluded from your work-day world, yet be only minutes from downtown and Midland Park Mall.

Drive out to 3000 West Illinois and find out how you can stop renting and start owning today!

Models are open Saturday and Sunday, 1:00-6:00 P.M. or call 683-6701 for a private showing.

Unmistakable elegance...

No matter what the style or what the particular fur used, the elegance and luxury of fine furs cannot be mistaken. Whether the wrap is a coat or a cape, full length or jacket, the quality is always evident. Above, Patricia Daury, left, and Deborah Baily model two jacket-length furs, which are complemented by pants in leather and suede, and boots. Patricia is wearing a jacket made of dark natural oppossom fron: New Zealand, while Deborah models a red fox jacket from Canada. Right, the warmth and feel of the red fox jacket Deborah is wearing are very evident. Deborah is standing on the porch of Hill House. Below, the fine lines of this coat of natural mink and natural fitch are shown to their best advantage by Patricia as she stands on the staircase of Hill House. The elegance in the coat and the elegance of the old Midland house cannot be duplicated or mistaken.

Text by LINDA ANDERSON Photos by CODY BELL

Old or new, elegance can always be recognized and appreciated. For many, the height of elegance can be seen in a fur coat, whether a full length of dark mink, a jacket of red fox or a cape of gray fox. The softness, richness and sheer luxury of a natural fur coat cannot be duplicated.

Patricia Daury and Deborah Baily model these furs, furnished by Bea McGrath and Pappagallo. On Nov. 1 — 2, a fur show will be held at Pappagallo, located at No. 6, Oak Ridge Square.

Also impossible to duplicate is the history of an area, represented here by Hill House, one of Midland's oldest surviving homes. The house, which is now located about eight miles south of Midland after being moved from its original location on Illinois Street, was built around 1902.

"(The Illinois street location) was still 'out at the ranch' in those days," said Bill Heard, project manager at Hill House. Heard and his wife Lee are in the process of renovating the house and festoring its original architectural features as much as possible. Heard is a member of National Trust for Historic Preservation, an organization that seeks to reserve old buildings and homes, and is experienced in renovation and restoration of old houses and other buildings. Hill House will possibly be an elegant restaurant sometime in the future.

"The architectural style is 'Prairie Craftsman,' according to 'Texas Homes'," Heard said.

The home still retains some of its original features, such as parquet floors and some stained glass in the windows. "The parquet floor is natural wood," said Heard. "Most of it is oak."

"The interesting thing (about the floors) is the use of patterns," said Mrs. Heard. "The interesting fact is that in 1902, the stained glass and other features got all the way out here."

The Heards have included in their renovations other pieces of Midland's history. They said the bricks forming the walk leading up to the porch came from the Scharbauer Hotel, and some of the beaded ceiling on the porch is from the old Petroluem Club.

WATER FACTS AND FANCIES

Computers Irrigate Crops

A communal farm known as Kibbutz Saad in Israel's arid south is an example of the country's continuing search to wring the maximum from the precious water supply. Israel currently uses from 95 to 100 percent of all available water.

Israel-developed drip irrigation is fast appearing as the farmer's best friend in all parts of the globe. It was originally developed in Israel in the 1960s to confine water application to individual plant roots—where it was needed most. By the end of that decade, horticulturists knew that the system had revolutionized the growing of grapes, bananas, cotton and some vegetables.

Lifestyle guidelines

The following are suggested guidelines for publication of stories in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday; or two days before publication in a daily paper.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within a week of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for engagement and wedding announcement stories.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Only the bride's picture will be used with both the engagement and wedding announcement.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of pictures and stories.

Stereo system designed for use in cars

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

The high fidelity industry presents a paradox. Over the past 30 years — its period of greatest growth — technical excellence has reached a high level of development.

At least one industry leader says that nothing introduced in the near future is likely to greatly improve on the best home equipment already being marketed. Despite this achievement, stereo components are owned by only an estimated 20 to 30 percent of Americans.

Reasons sometimes suggested for the apparent disparity n the worth of the products and their consumer appeal have included the difficulty of understanding the technical data necessary to select components wisely and the higher cost of stereo in comparison with other home entertainment products such as television sets.

The industry's apparent inability to present its case persuasively to the buying public is also a part of the problem, say some observers.

According to Dr. Amar G. Bose, president of Bose Corp., a component maker specializing in speakers and amplifiers, the industry is pursuing a self-defeating course by marketing components with ever more complicated controls — which few consumers can or wish to figure out.

"Enthusiasts — for example those who read the high fidelity specialty magazines — represent less than one half of 1 percent of the market," he said. Yet much of the manufacturer advertising and salesmanship in audio specialty stores is geared to this tiny portion of the public.

Bose said simpler-to-operate components preassembled in a system at the retail or manufacturing level would find broader consumer acceptance and were, therefore, a likely future development.

Providing a highly accessible, superior listening experience on fine equipment would also lead to more consumer interest in high fidelity, he said.

Furthermore, Bose thinks he has found the ideal place to provide that listening experience — in the family car.

Recently Bose Corp. and Delco Electronics Division of General Motors held a news conference in New York to introduce such a car stereo system which will be offered as a $900 option in GM's most costly 1983 models — the Cadillac Seville and Eldorado, the Buick Riviera and the Oldsmobile Toronado.

Automobiles are generally downgraded as concert quality listening areas. The difficulties of providing a strong and unwavering signal in a vehicle moving at 50 mph through a variety of interference zones is enough to give an audio engineer a headache.

However, Bose said, once the signal difficulty is overcome (and today's best receivers and antennas eliminate the problem, in his opinion) the car has one factor going for it. It is an environment in which every variable important in the design of a perfect sound system can be known.

The variables are: size and description of listening environment; position of the sound source, and position of the listener. A designer of home stereos has no access to such data. But a designer of a sound system for a specific automobile does.

Bose and Delco say they spent three years and over $12 million to develop the system which is engineered specifically for each car and has four separate speaker-amplifers — one for each sitting position. The AM-FM clock radio-casette players have both Dolby and Dynamic Noise Reduction and automatic fast forward and rewind buttons. Though the sound is high tech, the controls are very simple, so no one will feel overwhelmed by them.

One reason the two companies were willing to spend the time and money to develop what is, after all, an automotive accessory is that changes in living patterns have made such amenities desirable to Americans. Commuting by car may occupy several hours a day, during which an individual may rely on the car radio for companionship and emotional gratification.

WALDORF SALAD CUPCAKES

1½ cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
1 large egg
¾ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
1-3rd cup real mayonnaise
1 cup coarsely chopped unpeeled red apple
½ cup coarsely chopped walnuts
¼ cup finely chopped celery

Put a paper baking cup into each of 12 muffin-pan cups that are 2½ inches across the top and 2 inches deep. Stir together flour, soda, salt and cinnamon. In the large bowl of an electric mixer at medium speed beat egg, sugar and vanilla until blended. At low speed beat in mayonnaise until blended; add flour mixture and beat until smooth. With a spoon, stir in apple, walnuts and celery. Spoon into baking cups. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 30 to 35 minutes.

Cobb rice salad from California

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

MAKE-AHEAD COBB RICE SALAD

1 cup converted-style rice
1-3rd cup corn oil
¼ cup red wine vinegar
1 garlic clove, minced
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon dry mustard
1 teaspoon sugar
Worcestershire sauce to taste
2 cups diced (½ inch) cooked chicken
4 to 6 slices bacon
1 or 2 large eggs
2 medium tomatoes
Salad greens
1 medium avocado
Minced fresh chives to taste
2 to 4 ounces blue cheese (¼ to ½ cup), crumbled
Mayonnaise, preferably homemade

Cook rice according to package directions, using the amount of water given for a soft texture; fluff with a fork; cover and let stand until luke-warm.

Whisk or shake together oil, vinegar, garlic, salt, pepper, mustard, sugar and Worcestershire sauce. Toss with rice and chicken; cover and refrigerate — overnight, if you like.

At serving time, shred salad greens and arrange on a large platter or in a shallow salad bowl. Top with rice mixture.

FABRIC SECRETS

By Betty Martin

Woolens are fabrics that have been made from yarns that have been spun using short wool fibers. They have soft surface and are noted for their casual look. Blanket materials, sweaters, homespuns and tweeds are all woolens. Fabrics made from yarn that has been spun from long wool fibers are known as worsteds. They have a hard, smooth surface. Gabardine and serge are examples of worsteds. Individual yarns can be distinctly seen in worsted fabrics. As opposed to woolens, worsteds usually hold their shape very well. In either case, nothing can match wool's fine qualities.

If you were to look anywhere but in the United states, you might come to the conclusion that the closet is an American invention. Elsewhere, free-standing cabinets have always held linen, blankets and books. Armoires were originally intended to hold armor. They later were outfitted with rods, shelves and drawers to hold clothes. Today, you can use these highly flexible pieces of furniture to hold anything from a stereo to a wardrobe. An armoire's size need not be a limiting factor. Indeed, it could become the focus of a room or hallway. The decorative detailing may make it preferable to an austere wall unit.

We make it easy for you to decorate with the unusual at BEVERLY HILLS INTERIORS INC., No. 3 Oakride Square, 686-9607. As a custom design establishment we can make your dreams become a reality. Wall landscaping utilizing natural stone and wood for interiors is one of our specialties. We'll custom design and make cabinets of all kinds to display your collections.

DECORATING TIP:
An armoire can be placed in any room of the house.

Community Day Nursery has two additions

Community Day Nursery opened its doors in 1949, serving the Southeast section of Midland with a variety of programs for children ages 2 through 9 years. Presently, the Agency is located at 815 S. Carver Street, and receives funds from the United Way of Midland, the Department of Human Resources, Providers Agreement to serve the children on AFDC Program, and Protective Services; the Department of Human Resources, Food Division, where the Center is able to serve its participants a nutritious breakfast, lunch and afternoon supplement daily, according to Norma Lewis, director of the Center.

The Agency is now announcing two new additions to the Center. One is the replacement for Mrs. S.M. Marshall, who had been with the Center for approximately 15 years as the kindergarten teacher and advisor to the director, and who retired last spring. Her replacement is Mrs. Alice Rash.

Mrs. Rash is a native of Cleveland, Miss. She has one son, Anthony Maurice Rash, who also attends the Community Day Nursery. She is formerly a school teacher with 12 1-2 years of experience. Mrs. Rash received her undergraduate degree, a B.S. in English, from Mississippi Valley State University in Itta Bena, Miss. Her Master's degree, in the area of secondary supervision, was received from Delta State University in Cleveland, Miss.

Mrs. Rash is also the former director of the Delta Pace Pre-school Day Care Center in Pace, Miss., where she worked for 10 months. Her duties as Head Teacher of the Center will be to supervise a staff of approximately eight caregivers; to be teacher of the Pre-readiness programs and to assist the Director of the Center.

The second addition is the Infant program for babies three months through 24 months of age. At present, the Agency is opened for approximately 12 infants in age grouping. Also, the Agency is looking for infant care materials such as baby beds, bottle warmers, high chairs, soft toys, etc. The Infant program will add to the present programs offered at the center, said Mrs. Lewis. These programs are Toddler care — 1—2 years, Pre-readiness — 3—4 years, Pre-kindergarten — 4 and 5 years, Afterschool care — 5—9 years, transportation for school-age children, Food Program Provider's Program and day care for all children three months to nine years.

The agency is licensed by the Department of Human Resources to serve approximately 120 children daily. The Center is open from 7 a.m. — 5:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, with planned activities year round. Thanks to you, the United Way of Midland does work for Community Day Nursery.

PPPB expands services

Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin has recently expanded services at the Midland Clinic, 307 E. Texas. Waiting time for a physical exam appointment is now two days or less, and clinics are offered daily. The hiring of three additional nurse practitioners has made the increase in services possible, a spokesman stated.

The Miland Clinic is the second largest of the nine clinic sites in the region and handles more than 400 patient visits per month. Services offered include physical examinations and Pap smear tests for women, birth control methods, VD testing, counseling and education. Charges vary according to the patient's income. Appointments can be made by calling 683-3691 or 683-4900 Monday through Friday 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Nutritious carrot soup also low in sodium

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

A year or so ago my wise doctor suggested that I would be doing cooks, including myself, a favor if I cut down on the salt in the recipes I tested and published. When I began to do so, I found that many dishes had an unnecessary amount of salt in them.

For example, for years and years cookbook recipes for hamburgers have been calling for 1 teaspoon salt per pound of beef. I discovered the salt could be lessened by at least ¼-teaspoon and tasters rarely knew the difference.

Since then, I've experimented with good results in cutting salt and I'm always on the lookout for interesting low-sodium flavorings and seasonings to take the place of salt.

Recently the following recipe, calling for aromatic bitters (to replace salt) in carrot soup, came across my desk. When it was made in my kitchen, my tasters found it excellent. I hope, if you try the recipe, you like the soup as much as they did.

LOW SODIUM CARROT SOUP

1½ cups clear fat-free unsalted chicken broth
2 tablespoons sweet butter or unsalted margarine
¼ cup chopped (medium fine) onion
2 tablespoons flour
1½ cups regular or low-fat milk
¼ teaspoon aromatic bitters
⅛ teaspoon pepper

In a medium saucepan, covered, gently boil the carrot in the chicken broth until the carrot is soft. In an electric blender puree the carrot and broth; reserve.

In the medium saucepan heat the butter; add the onion and cook gently, stirring often, until golden. Stir in the flour until blended. Add the milk and cook over moderately low heat, stirring constantly, until thickened and boiling. Stir in the reserved carrot puree, bitters and pepper; reheat. If soup is thicker than you like, add chicken broth or milk and adjust the seasonings.

Makes 3 to 4 cups.

Note: We used homemade chicken broth; as a substitute, chicken bouillon made from low sodium chicken bouillon powder or cubes may be used.

Delicious cake makes easy snack

Homemade cake, fresh from the oven, and a tall glass of milk are hard to resist. Whether they appear after school, during a lazy weekend TV day or after an invigorating afternoon of yard work, they are an ever welcome sight.

"Fruit Punch Snack Cake," with its rich, spicy batter flecked with moist bits of fruit cocktail and topped with crunchy walnuts and coconut has a mouth-watering aroma that is hard to resist. Moist in texture, with the addition of the fruit, it is best eaten fresh from the oven, or within a day or two of baking. If you have any left after it's first served, tuck a piece or two into the lunch boxes. It's a treat everyone will appreciate.

1/2 cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
2 cups flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon nutmeg
1/4 teaspoon allspice
1/2 cup chopped walnuts
1/3 cup shredded coconut

Heat oven to 350 degrees Fahrenheit. Drain fruit cocktail well. In a large bowl, cream butter. Gradually beat in sugar until light and fluffy. Beat in eggs one at a time. Mix together flour, soda, salt and spices. Stir fruit cocktail into flour mixture; fold into butter-sugar mixture. Pour into a greased and floured 9 x 12 x 1 1-2-inch baking pan. Sprinkle with walnuts and coconut. Bake 30 to 40 minutes until toothpick inserted in center comes out clean. Makes 12 servings.

Making 'perfect' tortillas takes time

By BARBARA HANSEN

"Come on, Mama, mas pronto."(Come on, Mama, faster). This was the sort of bilingual cheering that urged on participants in the First Tortilla Roll-Off held at the Bowers Museum in the Los Angeles suburb of Santa Ana.

"Mama" was Ysidra Gutierrez of Santa Ana, one of five competitors who patted, rolled and baked flour tortillas in hopes of winning a trophy. Since there were five trophies, it was inevitable that each contestant win one, particularly since categories such as "crookedest" tortilla and "showmanship" allowed for attributes other than skill.

Experienced tortilla makers mix their dough by feel rather than by measure. However, the following recipe should serve as a guide. The only missing ingredient, to be supplied by the user, is practice.

FLOUR TORTILLAS

2 cups flour
1 tablespoon baking powder
1 1-2 teaspoons salt
Warm water
2 tablespoons lard, shortening or oil

Mix flour, baking powder and salt. Gradually add just enough water to hold dry ingredients together. Add lard, shortening or oil and knead 2 to 3 minutes. Add more water if needed to make soft dough. Dough should not be sticky. Form dough into small balls. Press out each with palm of hand and roll with floured rolling pin into circle as thin as desired. Flour board only if needed. Bake tortillas on very hot griddle or in hot skillet 5 to 10 seconds on each side, or until flecked with brown and thoroughly cooked.

Stereo system designed for use in cars

AP Newsfeatures

The high fidelity industry presents a paradox. Over the past 30 years — its period of greatest growth — technical excellence has reached a high level of development.

At least one industry leader says that nothing introduced in the near future is likely to greatly improve on the best home equipment already being marketed. Despite this achievement, stereo components are owned by only an estimated 20 to 30 percent of Americans.

Reasons sometimes suggested for the apparent disparity n the worth of the products and their consumer appeal have included the difficulty of understanding the technical data necessary to select components wisely and the higher cost of stereo in comparison with other home entertainment products such as television sets.

The industry's apparent inability to present its case persuasively to the buying public is also a part of the problem, say some observers.

According to Dr. Amar G. Bose, president of Bose Corp., a component maker specializing in speakers and amplifiers, the industry is pursuing a self-defeating course by marketing components with ever more complicated controls — which few consumers can or wish to figure out.

"Enthusiasts — for example those who read the high fidelity specialty magazines — represent less than one half of 1 percent of the market," he said. Yet much of the manufacturer advertising and salesmanship in audio specialty stores is geared to this tiny portion of the public.

Bose said simpler-to-operate components preassembled in a system at the retail or manufacturing level would find broader consumer acceptance and were, therefore, a likely future development.

Providing a highly accessible, superior listening experience on fine equipment would also lead to more consumer interest in high fidelity, he said.

Furthermore, Bose thinks he has found the ideal place to provide that listening experience — in the family car.

Recently Bose Corp. and Delco Electronics Division of General Motors held a news conference in New York to introduce such a car stereo system which will be offered as a $900 option in GM's most costly 1983 models — the Cadillac Seville and Eldorado, the Buick Riviera and the Oldsmobile Toronado.

Automobiles are generally downgraded as concert quality listening areas. The difficulties of providing a strong and unwavering signal in a vehicle moving at 50 mph through a variety of interference zones is enough to give an audio engineer a headache.

However, Bose said, once the signal difficulty is overcome (and today's best receivers and antennas eliminate the problem, in his opinion) the car has one factor going for it. It is an environment in which every variable important in the design of a perfect sound system can be known.

The variables are: size and description of listening environment; position of the sound source, and position of the listener. A designer of home stereos has no access to such data. But a designer of a sound system for a specific automobile does.

Bose and Delco say they spent three years and over $12 million to develop the system which is engineered specifically for each car and has four separate speaker-amplifers — one for each sitting position. The AM-FM clock radio-casette players have both Dolby and Dynamic Noise Reduction and automatic fast forward and rewind buttons. Though the sound is high tech, the controls are very simple, so no one will feel overwhelmed by them.

One reason the two companies were willing to spend the time and money to develop what is, after all, an automotive accessory is that changes in living patterns have made such amenities desirable to Americans. Commuting by car may occupy several hours a day, during which an individual may rely on the car radio for companionship and emotional gratification.

WALDORF SALAD CUPCAKES

1½ cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
1 large egg
¾ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
1-3rd cup real mayonnaise
1 cup coarsely chopped unpeeled red apple
½ cup coarsely chopped walnuts
¼ cup finely chopped celery

Put a paper baking cup into each of 12 muffin-pan cups that are 2½ inches across the top and 2 inches deep. Stir together flour, soda, salt and cinnamon. In the large bowl of an electric mixer at medium speed beat egg, sugar and vanilla until blended. At low speed beat in mayonnaise until blended; add flour mixture and beat until smooth. With a spoon, stir in apple, walnuts and celery. Spoon into baking cups. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 30 to 35 minutes.

Cobb rice salad from California

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

MAKE-AHEAD COBB RICE SALAD

1 cup converted-style rice
1-3rd cup corn oil
¼ cup red wine vinegar
1 garlic clove, minced
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon dry mustard
1 teaspoon sugar
Worcestershire sauce to taste
2 cups diced (½ inch) cooked chicken
4 to 6 slices bacon
1 or 2 large eggs
2 medium tomatoes
Salad greens
1 medium avocado
Minced fresh chives to taste
2 to 4 ounces blue cheese (¼ to ½ cup), crumbled
Mayonnaise, preferably homemade

Cook rice according to package directions, using the amount of water given for a soft texture; fluff with a fork; cover and let stand until luke-warm.

Whisk or shake together oil, vinegar, garlic, salt, pepper, mustard, sugar and Worcestershire sauce. Toss with rice and chicken; cover and refrigerate — overnight, if you like.

At serving time, shred salad greens and arrange on a large platter or in a shallow salad bowl. Top with rice mixture.

FABRIC SECRETS

By Betty Martin

Woolens are fabrics that have been made from yarns that have been spun using short wool fibers. They have soft surface and are noted for their casual look. Blanket materials, sweaters, homespuns and tweeds are all woolens. Fabrics made from yarn that has been spun from long wool fibers are known as worsteds. They have a hard, smooth surface. Gabardine and serge are examples of worsteds. Individual yarns can be distinctly seen in worsted fabrics. As opposed to woolens, worsteds usually hold their shape very well. In either case, nothing can match wool's fine qualities.

If you were to look anywhere but in the United states, you might come to the conclusion that the closet is an American invention. Elsewhere, free-standing cabinets have always held linen, blankets and books. Armoires were originally intended to hold armor. They later were outfitted with rods, shelves and drawers to hold clothes. Today, you can use these highly flexible pieces of furniture to hold anything from a stereo to a wardrobe. An armoire's size need not be a limiting factor. Indeed, it could become the focus of a room or hallway. The decorative detailing may make it preferable to an austere wall unit.

We make it easy for you to decorate with the unusual at BEVERLY HILLS INTERIORS INC., No. 3 Oakride Square, 686-9607. As a custom desing establishment we can make your dreams become a reality. Wall landscaping utilizing natural stone and wood for interiors is one of our specialties. We'll custom design and make cabinets of all kinds to display your collections.

DECORATING TIP:
An armoire can be placed in any room of the house.

Community Day Nursery has two additions

Community Day Nursery opened its doors in 1949, serving the Southeast section of Midland with a variety of programs for children ages 2 through 9 years. Presently, the Agency is located at 815 S. Carver Street, and receives funds from the United Way of Midland, the Department of Human Resources, Providers Agreement to serve the children on AFDC Program, and Protective Services; the Department of Human Resources, Food Division, where the Center is able to serve its participants a nutritious breakfast, lunch and afternoon supplement daily, according to Norma Lewis, director of the Center.

The Agency is now announcing two new additions to the Center. One is the replacement for Mrs. S.M. Marshall, who had been with the Center for approximately 15 years as the kindergarten teacher and advisor to the director, and who retired last spring. Her replacement is Mrs. Alice Rash.

Mrs. Rash is a native of Cleveland, Miss. She has one son, Anthony Maurice Rash, who also attends the Community Day Nursery. She is formerly a school teacher with 12 1-2 years of experience. Mrs. Rash received her undergraduate degree, a B.S. in English, from Mississippi Valley State University in Itta Bena, Miss. Her Master's degree, in the area of secondary supervision, was received from Delta State University in Cleveland, Miss.

United Way

Mrs. Rash is also the former director of the Delta Pace Pre-school Day Care Center in Pace, Miss., where she worked for 10 months. Her duties as Head Teacher of the Center will be to supervise a staff of approximately eight caregivers; to be teacher of the Pre-readiness programs and to assist the Director of the Center.

The second addition is the Infant program for babies three months through 24 months of age. At present, the Agency is opened for approximately 12 infants in age grouping. Also, the Agency is looking for infant care materials such as baby beds, bottle warmers, high chairs, soft toys, etc. The Infant program will add to the present programs offered at the center, said Mrs. Lewis. These programs are Toddler care — 1—2 years, Pre-readiness — 3—4 years, Pre-kindergarten — 4 and 5 years, Afterschool care — 5—9 years, transportation for school-age children, Food Program Provider's Program and day care for all children three months to nine years.

The agency is licensed by the Department of Human Resources to serve approximately 120 children daily. The Center is open from 7 a.m. — 5:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, with planned activities year round. Thanks to you, the United Way of Midland does work for Community Day Nursery.

PPPB expands services

Planned Parenthood of the Permian Basin has recently expanded services at the Midland Clinic, 307 E. Texas. Waiting time for a physical exam appointment is now two days or less, and clinics are offered daily. The hiring of three additional nurse practitioners has made the increase in services possible, a spokesman stated.

The Miland Clinic is the second largest of the nine clinic sites in the region and handles more than 400 patient visits per month. Services offered include physical examinations and Pap smear tests for women, birth control methods, VD testing, counseling and education. Charges vary according to the patient's income. Appointments can be made by calling 683-3691 or 683-4900 Monday through Friday 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Nutritious carrot soup also low in sodium

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

A year or so ago my wise doctor suggested that I would be doing cooks, including myself, a favor if I cut down on the salt in the recipes I tested and published. When I began to do so, I found that many dishes had an unnecessary amount of salt in them.

For example, for years and years cookbook recipes for hamburgers have been calling for 1 teaspoon salt per pound of beef. I discovered the salt could be lessened by at least ¼ teaspoon and tasters rarely knew the difference.

Since then, I've experimented with good results in cutting salt and I'm always on the lookout for interesting low-sodium flavorings and seasonings to take the place of salt.

Recently the following recipe, calling for aromatic bitters (to replace salt) in carrot soup, came across my desk. When it was made in my kitchen, my tasters found it excellent. I hope, if you try the recipe, you like the soup as much as they did.

LOW SODIUM CARROT SOUP

1½ cups clear fat-free unsalted chicken broth
2 tablespoons sweet butter or unsalted margarine
¼ cup chopped (medium fine) onion
2 tablespoons flour
1½ cups regular or low-fat milk
¼ teaspoon aromatic bitters
⅛ teaspoon pepper

In a medium saucepan, covered, gently boil the carrot in the chicken broth until the carrot is soft. In an electric blender puree the carrot and broth; reserve.

In the medium saucepan heat the butter; add the onion and cook gently, stirring often, until golden. Stir in the flour until blended. Add the milk and cook over moderately low heat, stirring constantly, until thickened and boiling. Stir in the reserved carrot puree, bitters and pepper; reheat. If soup is thicker than you like, add chicken broth or milk and adjust the seasonings.

Makes 3 to 4 cups.

Note: We used homemade chicken broth; as a substitute, chicken bouillon made from low sodium chicken bouillon powder or cubes may be used.

Delicious cake makes easy snack

Homemade cake, fresh from the oven, and a tall glass of milk are hard to resist. Whether they appear after school, during a lazy weekend TV day or after an invigorating afternoon of yard work, they are an ever welcome sight.

"Fruit Punch Snack Cake," with its rich, spicy batter flecked with moist bits of fruit cocktail and topped with crunchy walnuts and coconut has a mouth-watering aroma that is hard to resist. Moist in texture, with the addition of the fruit, it is best eaten fresh from the oven, or within a day or two of baking. If you have any left after it's first served, tuck a piece or two into the lunch boxes. It's a treat everyone will appreciate.

1/2 cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
2 cups flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon nutmeg
1/4 teaspoon allspice
1/2 cup chopped walnuts
1/3 cup shredded coconut

Heat oven to 350 degrees Fahrenheit. Drain fruit cocktail well. In a large bowl, cream butter. Gradually beat in sugar until light and fluffy. Beat in eggs one at a time. Mix together flour, soda, salt and spices. Stir fruit cocktail into flour mixture; fold into butter-sugar mixture. Pour into a greased and floured 9 x 12 x 1 1-2-inch baking pan. Sprinkle with walnuts and coconut. Bake 30 to 40 minutes until toothpick inserted in center comes out clean. Makes 12 servings.

Making 'perfect' tortillas takes time

By BARBARA HANSEN

"Come on, Mama, mas pronto."(Come on, Mama, faster). This was the sort of bilingual cheering that urged on participants in the First Tortilla Roll-Off held at the Bowers Museum in the Los Angeles suburb of Santa Ana.

"Mama" was Ysidra Gutierrez of Santa Ana, one of five competitors who patted, rolled and baked flour tortillas in hopes of winning a trophy. Since there were five trophies, it was inevitable that each contestant win one, particularly since categories such as "crookedest" tortilla and "showmanship" allowed for attributes other than skill.

Experienced tortilla makers mix their dough by feel rather than by measure. However, the following recipe should serve as a guide. The only missing ingredient, to be supplied by the user, is practice.

FLOUR TORTILLAS

2 cups flour
1 tablespoon baking powder
1 1-2 teaspoons salt
Warm water
2 tablespoons lard, shortening or oil

Mix flour, baking powder and salt. Gradually add just enough water to hold dry ingredients together. Add lard, shortening or oil and knead 2 to 3 minutes. Add more water if needed to make soft dough. Dough should not be sticky. Form dough into small balls. Press out each with palm of hand and roll with floured rolling pin into circle as thin as desired. Flour board only if needed. Bake tortillas on very hot griddle or in hot skillet 5 to 10 seconds on each side, or until flecked with brown and thoroughly cooked.

Ship-building frenzy occurs

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The greatest ship-building frenzy since the United States rebuilt the Pacific fleet in World War II is now in costly progress. Hundreds of millions of dollars are being thrown around like Rockefeller dimes as cruise lines build what they hope will be the most popular and financially rewarding ships on the sea.

In order to fill these new ships, the Cruise Lines International Association estimates that it will be necessary to generate $1 million in new business each day. In a recession, they will have their work cut out for them.

Whatever the outcome, the fact remains that more new ships are going to be plowing their bows through the waters of the Caribbean, the Atlantic and the Mediterranean than at any time in recent history. There will be so many ships we may have to hire marine traffic controllers just to handle the flow. Sir Francis Drake should have had such an armada.

The two new ships which have already entered service this year — the Atlantic, Home Lines' sparkling $100 million entry in this waterlogged race for control of the seas (and the tourists' wallets) and the similarly priced Tropicale of Carnival Cruise Lines — are typical of the new ships. Both are portly matrons, large and broad-hulled to get in as many cabins as possible. The graceful lines of ships of old are, alas, gone with the tide.

THE TROPICALE represents a complete break with tradition and has the look and feel of a Hyatt Hotel afloat. Externally, there is not an old-fashioned line on her. Internally, the designers have accepted few of the traditional ship limitations: most outside cabins have large windows, not portholes; the use of interior space is extremely fluid and untraditional. Most staterooms are alike, just as they are in a Hyatt.

The Atlantic is a much more traditional ship once you get past her shape and her space-age technology used to conserve fuel. There are 180 cabins deluxe, and two other, smaller, basic cabin sizes. You have the choice, at a similar fare, of a deluxe room low in the ship or a standard cabin more conveniently located higher up.

The Tropicale began service in January and since then she has sailed to the western Caribbean and, this past summer, to Alaska. From now on, she will be based in Los Angeles most of the year, sailing to the Mexican Riviera, with the exception of summer Alaska excursions. The Atlantic, which has been cruising from New York to Bermuda since April, will begin Caribbean service out of Port Everglades, near Fort Lauderdale, Fla., on Oct. 26.

Two new hundred-million-dollar ships competing for passengers in one season would make most accountants reach for the red ink. But, dear friends, the Atlantic and the Tropicale are just the beginning.

In October we will be seeing a concept in ship travel new to North America: the European-style ferry. Scandinavian World Cruises will introduce the $100 million (that magic figure again) Scandinavia on Oct. 2. She will carry passengers and their cars between New York and the Bahamas, where travelers will connect with either Miami or Port Canaveral on smaller ferrys. One of this winter's genuine bargains is the rate of only $918 plus $64 to $104 in port taxes for a family of four traveling with their car between New York and Florida on the Scandinavia.

THE PARADE continues on Dec. 5 when the new $140 million Song of Norway begins sailing from Miami to Nassau, San Juan and St. Thomas. Then late next spring the $150 million Nieuw Amsterdam of Holland America Lines will enter service, sailing from San Francisco to Mexico and from Vancouver to Alaska in the summer. Next winter Sitmar's new Fairsky, another $100 million entry, will sail out of Los Angeles.

Further down the line: Princess Cruises will introduce its yet unnamed $150 million ship in late 1984, Carnival Cruise Lines will christen three new ships, costing $150 million each, in 1984, 1986 and 1988 and Norske Cruises, a new firm headed by a former president of Norwegian Caribbean Lines, will give us two ships, costing $34 million each, in 1984 and 1985. The Norske ships are small and luxurious, with a construction cost of $300,000 per room compared with the $95,000 to $125,000 for conventional ships.

If that were not enough, Royal Viking Line's Royal Viking Sky is now being "stretched" in a German shipyard, receiving a new 93-foot midsection. Next spring, the company will give the same treatment to the Royal Viking Sea. And, of course, we have the world's largest passenger ship, the Norway (the old France) back in service after a $15 million refit.

Industry observers say that some of the new ships will be replacements for older, uneconomic ships, but companies have been loath to retire their present vessels. And, when one company announced it would retire a ship, as Holland America did with the Statendam, another company snaps it up. Instead of retiring gracefully, the Statendam will sail as Paquet's Rhapsody on Nov. 21.

Publisher to re-release travel classics of 1800s

By JAMES T. YENCKEL
Los Angeles Times- Washington Post News Service

A Los Angeles book publisher whose firm has focused primarily on journeys into the self has begun to explore the world at large, recently inaugurating a series of re-releases of important out-of-print travel accounts.

"Intrepid" and "articulate" is how Jeremy Tarcher of J.P. Tarcher Inc. describes the authors he has chosen to include in his Library of Travel Classics, most of which first appeared from the mid-1800s through the first half of this century.

The first two in the series (paperbacks) reached the bookstores last summer, and the authors aptly match Tarcher's description:

—In "Seven Years in Tibet" ($8.95), Austrian mountaineer Heinrich Harrer recounts his 21-month trek from India through the Himalayas to Tibet after escaping from an internment camp during World War II.

—BRITISH WRITER Peter Fleming set out in 1935 on a seven-month, 3,500-mile overland trip from Peking to India, often passing through hostile regions. He tells his story in "News From Tartary" ($9.50), written the following year.

Tarcher, whose firm is a subsidiary of Houghton Mifflin, sees a resurgence of interest in travel literature of the past, before jet flight, when simply getting to a remote place became an often-dangerous challenge. He anticipates bringing out four books a year — printing between 5,000 and 7,000 of each — and he currently is negotiating for reprint rights to about 15. He anticipates the series as a "long-term" effort.

"The market's not as large as for 'Princess Daisy' (a bestseller by his sister, Judith Krantz), but it is large enough to make it worthwhile for a publisher to offer these books to an audience that's there."

Tarcher caught the travel bug after graduating in 1953 from the "100 Great Books" curriculum of St. John's College in Annapolis, Md. He spent the first year out of school on a jaunt through Europe, the Middle East and Asia. It was a "wonderful" second education "for which I'm extremely grateful."

Among his upcoming titles: Fleming's "Brazilian Adventure" and two by Freya Stark, a British woman now in her 90s, "Valley of the Assassins" and "The Southern Gates of Arabia."

NEW THIS FALL: A three-hour cruise on the history-rich James River from Richmond, Va., the capital of the Confederacy, to Shirley Plantation, an 800-acre estate owned by the same family for nine generations. Fall foliage for daytime sailors aboard the 150-passenger American Patriot, or starlight by night.

The fare is $10; $5 for children 2 to 12, and reservations are recommended. The ship departs from Richmond Intermediate Terminal on Dock Street, 5 minutes east of Shockoe Slip — a redeveloped area of shops, restaurants and bars.

The trip proved so popular one weekend early last summer that the Richmond-on-the-James organization decided to offer additional outings again this month, Oct. 7-14 and Oct. 18-30. Mondays through Wednesdays, the cruises are limited to charters, but two trips daily are scheduled for the general public: Thursdays through Sundays at 9:30 a.m. and 1 p.m., starlight cruises Thursdays and Sundays at 5 p.m.

Rockefeller Center is city unto itself

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — On Dec. 6, the lights will be sparkling along Fifth Avenue, lights so white and glittering that the country's most famous street takes on the aura of an urban fairyland. At Rockefeller Center, wire sculpture angels — a dozen elegant figures holding slender eight-foot trumpets — will be bathed in light and huge wire snowflake clusters will sparkle and twist in the early December breeze.

At the end of this special walk heralded by the angels' trumpets, you will come to the skating rink, where bundled children swirl at the foot of a great Christmas tree rising 85 feet above the plaza, sending its message of joy and peace throughout America's most maligned, and most magnificent, city.

Rockefeller Center, which attracts more tourists than the Statue of Liberty and the Empire State Building combined, a city unto itself housing 65,000 people on its 22 acres and in its 19 buildings, is a half century old dhis year.

In those 50 years, Rockefeller Center has become the most visited, and the most loved, of our planned urban environments.

This is a place where you can sit by a waterfall, dine on a pate or a ham sandwich and forget, if only for a moment, that you are sitting in the midst of the largest city in North America. Gardens peek around corners here, offering refuge from the honking of taxi horns only yards away. Fountains rush gallons of water to the sky and waterfalls pound down artificial mountain walls. The soft smell of mums fills the air in the fall, while Easter lilies curl their strong perfume through the concrete canyons in the spring, mystically transporting Fifth Avenue strollers to Bermuda, and the great waving lily fields that nudge the Atlantic's surf.

"ROCKEFELLER CENTER is perhaps the most successful use of open space in the United States, maybe in the world, for that matter," says noted architect I.M. Pei. "Spaces are for people and people like to come to Rockefeller Center."

Adds Douglas Haskell, architecture critic and former editor of Architectural Forum: "Rockefeller Center is the only piece of urban renewal done in business terms that the people of the United States really love."

Today, that love is generated by the open space (20 percent of the total) spread throughout the center — little rooftop gardens and benches where you can picnic, skating rinks where you can spin over the ice, and open air restaurants where you can dine. Tourists love the more than 200 shops and restaurants where you can buy goods and foods from throughout the world.

The love for Rockefeller Center is also generated by the trip to the top of the RCA building where, 850 feet above the streets below, you get a fascinating vista of this great city. From river to river and from New Jersey to Connecticut, you can look with awe at the urban sprawl and begin to grasp the immensity of this city. It was from the RCA observation deck that Gen. Charles de Gaulle turned away from the stunning sight and asked his guide: "Where is Coney Island?"

People also love Rockefeller Center for the Radio City Music Hall, which has been renovated and once again presents a live stage show daily, rather than the tawdry movies it used to show after its fall from fortune. And, yes, the Rockettes still kick high and with perfect precision.

PEOPLE IN THE 1930s loved Rockefeller Center for what it represented: the effort by a single determined (and rich) man, John D. Rockefeller Jr., to realize an urban dream, the blending of money-making office space with an environment that provided people with comfort and beauty. Before the Rockefeller plans, office buildings were built without any thought to people. Rockefeller Center changed all that.

"It is the finest reminder that the whole is greater than the sum of its parts," New York Times architecture critic Paul Goldberger has written.

People also loved the Rockefeller Center in the 1930s for the statement it made to the country in a time when there was not much optimism in the Depression-ravaged United States. When men were standing in breadlines and college graduates were selling apples on street corners, Rockefeller Center was a mighty vote of confidence in the strength of America.

It was the country's most massive real estate development, taking employees of the New York City Building Department nearly two years just to file all the blueprints.

Recession causes divorce rate drop

By MARK SAUER
Copley News Service

For the first time in 20 years, the nation's divorce rate has dropped.

And while romantics would call that a triumph for love that bodes well for the venerable institution of marriage, some analysts contend the figures simply reflect the cold dollars-and-sense reality of hard times.

Like so many things in this time of recession, divorce is the sort of expensive proposition that many families are putting off for a while.

"There are no statistics on this sort of thing, but I know from my own patients that this is absolutely true," said Steven Bucky, a psychologist and director of the professional training program at the California School of Professional Psychology in San Diego.

"And not only are couples choosing not to separate and divorce because of finances, but we have far more multiple-family situations where adult children and their kids are living with their own parents to make ends meet. This creates a great deal of stress," he said.

The drop in divorces doesn't seem dramatic: In the 12 months ending in June, the national divorce rate went from 5.3 divorces per 1,000 Americans (married or unmarried) to 5.2 per 1,000, according to the National Center of Health Statistics. There were nearly 1.2 million divorces in the United States in 1981.

But considering that it is the first time since 1962 (when the rate dipped from 2.3 per thousand to 2.2) that divorce has not increased, the numbers are significant.

The national marriage rate has remained steady at 10.2 per thousand for the past three years. But it has steadily increased locally. There were 12,521 marriages in 1977 and 13,747 in 1981. And that could be evidence of faith in the adage that "two can live more cheaply than one."

Aside from the higher cost of living separately and losing benefit of a spouse's income, the expense of a divorce itself may be encouraging many incompatible couples to tough it out until times get better.

"Divorces are getting more expensive because all the numbers that go into it have gone up considerably," said Edward B. "Ned" Huntington, a lawyer. "It used to be with a middle-class divorce you were dealing with assets of $20,000 to $40,000. Now these same people are working with $100,000 to $200,000. Where you once had $2,000 in equity (in a house) you now have $40,000, $50,000 or $60,000."

And with a stagnant real-estate market, disposing of the house — selling it outright or buying a spouse out — is a critical concern.

"With the rapid increases in property values and tax problems resulting from more money in property, lawyers have to take much more time with divorce cases, so fees have gone up," continued Huntington. "I used to charge $40 per hour for divorce cases in 1969, now I charge $100 per hour.

"All of this tends to influence the decision to get divorced at all," he said.

Bucky said alternatives to divorce, like couples moving in and sharing expenses with their parents, presents additional stress.

"Often, it's an unhealthy situation," he said. "Grandparents are expected to baby-sit and that creates resentment. And sometimes there is further financial pressure when the grandparents are just squeaking by on fixed incomes," he said. "Also, the relationship between children and their parents and children and the grandparents is strained. The roles become confused.

"Living together in name only because of finances, perhaps with one parent sleeping on the couch, may produce such stress on children that the next generation may have problems with interpersonal relationships," he continued.

"I see a lot of young kids these days whose own relationships are distorted after seeing their mothers and fathers relating to one another in a highly stressful way."

Ozzie Gontang, a marriage counselor, said he knows of one case where a couple sought to solve the financial and emotional fallout of divorce by trying a unique arrangement.

"Like so many people, for them to have two separate households would have been too difficult financially," Gontang said. "So they kept the house and the kids live there permanently. The parents move in and out separately for equal periods of time, living cheaply in sparse quarters in the meantime.

"They wanted to have the kids benefit from the stability of their own home and to avoid the economic reality of complete separate households. It's a creative way of solving tough problems."

Make fabulous fruit molds

FRUIT MOLDS

Leftover fruit juice from a 16-ounce can mixed fruits packed without sugar
Orange juice
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
Membrane-free sections from 2 medium oranges

In a 2-cup measure stir together leftover fruit juice from apricots and mixed fruits; add enough orange juice to make 2 cups. In a medium bowl sprinkle gelatin over ½ cup of the juice mixture and let stand to soften for about 5 minutes. Heat remaining juice mixture to boiling; add to gelatin mixture; stir vigorously until gelatin dissolves. Add orange sections. Chill until partly thickened. Stir to distribute orange sections; turn into individual molds (1-3rd or ½ cup size). Chill to set. Unmold before serving and garnish as desired. Makes 6 servings.

Two women prove they can cut the mustard

By TONI GRIFFIN
Copley News Service

Have a recipe which your friends keep suggesting you sell?

Peggy Goldwater had just such an old family favorite which she and her friend Jane Wedmore have transformed into an active, solvent business.

By combining their talents to create and manufacture PeggyJane's honey mustard, they have moved from that winning recipe to partnership in PeggyJane's Special Products Co., which markets and manufactures gourmet food products, headquartered in Laguna Beach, Calif.

They also have gained notoriety as successful women in the food world, which is historically difficult for females. According to a 1978 food-marketing survey, there were only 19 women who owned and operated their own food businesses.

"The food business is male-dominated," says the 38-year-old Goldwater. "It took a long time to prove our credibility."

After five years of balancing long hours establishing the business with raising their families (Goldwater has three children and Wedmore two), they have a solid answer to the inevitable, "Is this a hobby?" question. That answer is, "Absolutely not!"

Peggy is the daughter of Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona.

How does he like his daughter's products? "He loves them. He also appreciates the fact that I make him buy his own," his daughter says with a smile. "I consider myself a businesswoman, and so does he."

In 1977, Wedmore, 36, and Goldwater sampled a Scottsdale, Ariz., gourmet shop's leading brand of sweet mustard while on a weekend trip. By the time they had returned to their respective homes, Goldwater had decided that her grandmother's mustard recipe was superior to the marketed one, and she wanted to try selling the product.

Not knowing how to go about marketing a product, Goldwater spoke to her attorney. He suggested contacting a restaurateur, who in turn introduced her to Jim Hagerty, the food chemist who has been working with the PeggyJane recipes ever since.

Each woman paid a $500 investment to start the business. Neither regrets the decision. Their original goal, to see if they could market Grandma Jojo's mustard recipe, has changed to one aimed at distributing their products nationwide.

Wedmore's college home economics background, blended with solid business experience, acted as the financial backbone of the venture. Goldwater, an active cook, supplied the original recipe and has since taken on the developmental and manufacturing aspects of the blossoming business.

The women now sell the original mustard, four flavors of salad dressing and other food products, constantly insisting on high-quality ingredients with no preservatives. Their aim is to place their salad dressings ($2.29 for 8 ounces) on the main shelves of supermarkets, as opposed to the gourmet area.

Puzzling photos win prizes

They have been judged the winners of the National Jigsaw Design Contest held here to find the most interesting and challenging jigsaw puzzle designs in America.

The third-place winner was 14-year-old Jason A. Cohn, an amateur photographer who submitted his unusual shot of a Washington, D.C. subway station. The youngster, who lives here, took the photograph in Washington while his father was working for the National Science Foundation.

The field of almost 200 designs was judged first by a panel of Ohio University art professors and finally by design directors at Hallmark Cards, whose Springbok division will market research the winning photos to determine their possible "pull" as jigsaw puzzles.

Hysterectomy still can be traumatic

By JO TUBB
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — When Susanne Morgan faced the prospect of a hysterectomy seven years ago, she read everything about the subject she could get her hands on. Problem was, that wasn't much.

And what little information she did find, she found disturbing. The overriding message, delivered mostly by male doctors and writers, was that hysterectomy is no big deal, that it has no effect on a woman's sexual response.

Even before her surgery, Susanne Morgan didn't believe that. After it, she was more convinced it wasn't so.

"I knew from my own experience that the uterus was physiologically tied to sexuality," she says from her apartment in Manhattan Beach. "When the books said there were no sexual changes, I knew it couldn't be true."

So Morgan, armed with a Ph.D. in medical sociology and an appetite for research, decided to write her own book about hysterectomy. The result, "Coping with a Hysterectomy" (The Dial Press, 1982), is the first on the subject that is based on the related experiences of women who have undergone the surgery. Its overriding message: Hysterectomy is a big deal and it does indeed affect a woman's sexual response.

The operation may not seem important or traumatic, Morgan concedes, because hysterectomy is so very common. The most recent data from the National Center for Health Statistics show that in 1979 more than 640,000 American women had hysterectomies.

"It's the most common major operation performed in the United States," says Morgan. "It's more common than tonsillectomy, if you can believe that."

But it is that commonness which concerns her. She believes hysterectomy is too common, that it is sometimes performed when it is not needed.

"Sometimes it's unnecessary," she says, although she is satisfied that her own hysterectomy — the result of a pelvic infection caused by an IUD — was justified.

"I had very good, conservative care, but many women don't. Too many doctors perform hysterectomies when they're not really needed."

One reason for unnecessary surgery, she believes, is money.

"I think they just want the money!" one woman is quoted in "Coping," while a nurse reports, "Once I heard a doctor say this hysterectomy was going to buy his Porsche."

Says Morgan, "I don't believe doctors think it consciously — that surgery means making more money — but I do think it's an influence."

More influential, she believes, is rampant sexism.

"Sexism in society leads everyone to devalue women's bodies, and for many doctors the uterus is seen to be only for childbearing," she says. "Doctors use more caution (about whether or not to perform surgery) when it comes to men. With women, they go ahead and do it."

The upshot, says Morgan, is that women who are recommended for hysterectomy should carefully consider that recommendation.

"Mainly, a woman should take time," she says. "She should get a second opinion. She should try to get well on her own."

If she can't, Morgan notes, she should be aware that a hysterectomy will have a physical effect on her sexual functioning.

"The idea that a hysterectomy affects a woman only psychologically when it comes to sex just isn't true," she says. "The uterus is involved in all stages of a woman's sexual arousal, so that is affected by hysterectomy. And women who have their ovaries removed, too, will also see the physical effects of reduced estrogen. Women should be aware of the physical effects."

Those effects are varied and are described candidly by different women quoted in "Coping." Morgan met them at workshops and lectures she presented on the subject and found that they benefitted from talking together about their hysterectomies.

As a result, she now recommends that all women who have faced hysterectomies assume an advocacy role.

"You have had your hysterectomy, or you have decided not to have one. Do something with that experience!" she urges. "Share your thinking and your information with other women. You never know when something you say about your decision-making process will make an enormous difference to someone else."

Employees shave while on job

BOSTON (AP) — While most American companies frown on male employees who show up for work unshaven, there is one firm that encourages a large number of its employees to arrive every day with a "5 o'clock shadow."

About 300 of the male employees at Gillette come at different intervals during the day to the company's Boston Shave Test Center.

"There, in 32 cubicles, they shave under controlled and monitored conditions," explains Richard Dahlquist, director of corporate product evaluation for the company's Safety Razor Division. "The results of these tests are fed into a computer and analyzed by sophisticated statistical programs."

Similar shave testing is conducted at Gillette facilities in Andover, Mass., and Rockville, Md. There are also shave test centers in Reading and Isleworth in the United Kingdom.

'Consumer education group' is misleading title

By STERLING NOEL
Hearst Feature Service

The widely-held notion that science and scientists can be relied upon to protect us from many perils of the modern world is true only under some conditions.

It's certainly not true when scientists are employed by the very businesses alleged to be responsible for the perils. That is a clear, above-board arrangement. Scientist works for corporation; hence he defends corporate activities and products.

But suppose the scientist did not let on that he was a corporate employee?

That's pretty much the situation with the American Council on Science and Health, an organization directed by epidemiologist Elizabeth M. Whelan of Harvard University.

The ACSH reports were widely published by the press. But a certain amount of suspicion was aroused because these studies, with impressive consistency, contradicted the findings of other scientific researchers.

Some people began to wonder why a consumer health group would defend junk foods in school cafeterias, dismiss diet as a factor in hyperactive children, exonerate the controversial herbicide 2,4,5-T, favor the relaxation of clean air standards and generally downplay cancer as an overrated threat.

Even so, most newspapers accepted the group's claim of independence and accorded ACSH space and credibility. Columbia Journalism Review reports, for example, that Newsweek, in a piece on the caffeine controversy on July 19, quoted Dr. Whelan and described ACSH as "a consumer-education group."

The Washington-based Center for Science in the Public Interest was not so taken-in. Peter Harnik, a science writer was assigned to look into ACSH and the result is a 67-page report which tells all anyone would want to know, if not more, about ACSH.

As of May 1, 1981, says this report, all but a few of the council's 111 contributors were corporations or company foundations. All but 27 had a potential interest in food, drugs, chemicals, or pollution-causing fuels. Such companies as Coca-Cola, Frito-Lay, Abbott and Upjohn, Dow and Monsanto, Cities Service and Exxon typify the blue-chip list.

There were, however, no tobacco companies. Much ACSH activity focuses upon the perils of smoking.

Further, many of the 62 experts who make up the council's scientific board, primarily academics in toxicology, biochemistry, nutrition and medical physics who are affiliated with land-grant universities, have a history of "meaningful financial" relationships with chemical, food and drug corporations.

These corporate connections could be termed compromising but do not establish a quid pro quo, as both Harnik and Whelan point out. The true test of honesty would lie in the council's scientific reports.

Thus, several ACSH reports on caffeine, saccharin, air pollution, diet in heart disease, incidence of cancer, were submitted to experts for outside peer review.

Their unanimous verdict was that the reports were filled with errors, omissions and misrepresentations of fact, plus judgments, conclusions and policy statements that do not accurately reflect the content of the reports themselves.

A rebuttal of all this is scheduled to appear in the ACSH newsletter.

The principal harm done by ACSH, in Harnik's view, is the news spread by the media that scientific studies demonstrating product hazards are more open to question than is actually the case.

Farmhand dies while climbing silo chute

ATLANTA (AP) — A farmhand died after apparently being overcome by nitrogen oxides while trying to climb up the chute of a silo, the national Centers for Disease Control said.

In September 1981, a 39-year-old worker at a Mohawk, N.Y., farm was overcome while climbing up the chute of a silo recently filled with Sudex grass and chopped corn silage, the CDC reported.

He tried to climb again, but was overcome and taken to a hospital were doctors noted he was having breathing problems and turning blue, the CDC said in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report. Five hours after admission, he died.

Dangerous exposure to nitrogen oxides has been associated with silos, arc and acetylene welding, burning cellulose nitrate and dynamite blasting, the CDC said.

Palette Club has new home

The Midland Palette Club has recently moved into its new club, located on Wadley just west of A Street, and the members wish to invite all residents of the area interested in painting or in being a patron of the arts to participate in membership of the club.

For working people or mothers of small children who cannot participate in the daytime activities of the organization, a program is being initiated to determine if there is enough interest to institute an evening program of activity. These evening painters would meet as often as they decide, to share knowledge, learn from each other and have periodically scheduled workshop sessions conducted by other artists invited to come for that purpose.

Anyone interest in finding out more about the Midland Palette Club and the possiblity of evening programs, call Jo Price at 682-4979. Any suggestions will be appreciated.

An open house is scheduled for Nov. 21, which will be an opportunity for interested persons to sign up for membership, to ask further questions about the proposed new group or to just come and see the sparkling, bright new home of the Midland Palette Club.

Sharma to speak at meeting

The American Association of University Women World Affairs Group will hold its first fall meeting on Oct. 13 at 7:30 p.m. in the Mezzanine Room of the First National Bank.

Speaker for the evening will be Niranjan K. Sharma. Sharma was born in Kathmandu, Nepal, went to high school in Banaras, India, and received his bachelor's degree from Tribhuwan University in Nepal in 1963, with a major in vocational ariculture and a minor in health education.

Niranjan K. Sharma

In 1964 and 1965 he was employed by His Majesty's Government of Nepal. In this capacity he worked in the development of the present curriculum in health, agriculture and community services for secondary schools. He also did research in the educational aspects of health, and established direct contact with isolated communities, helping to educate the residents and to establish public health clinics.

In 1966 Sharma came to the United States on a Fulbright Scholarship, did one year of graduate work at Texas Christian University and received his Master's degree in 1967.

He has worked for four years at the Big Spring State Hospital and nine years for the Texas Rehabilitation Commission, primarily in the fields of rehabilitation, psychiatric counseling and vocational guidance.

Throughout his life Sharma has had an extensive background in religion. The subject of his talk will be "A Comparative Study of the Religions of the Indian Sub-Continent." The public is invited to attend.

This year's officers of the World Affairs Group are Mona Lewis, chairman; Dottie Merrit and Victoria Chapple, co-chairmen, and Enid Davis, publicity. Hostesses for the evening are Victoria Chapple and Minnie German.

AMA backs instruction sheets for several drugs

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
AP Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the blessing of the Reagan administration, the American Medical Association is urging physicians to give patients new, easy-to-read instruction sheets with 20 widely used prescription drugs.

The AMA unveiled its $2.7 million, voluntary "Patient Medication Information" program recently. By 1984, it hopes to expand it to cover 100 drugs.

The sheets will list the drugs' major side effects, advise patients how to take the drugs, advise patients whether not to take the drugs during pregnancy or certain illnesses and caution patients about effects on driving and other activities.

The organization of 240,000 physicians waged a successful battle to thwart a Carter administration attempt to require warning leaflets with many prescription drugs. The Reagan administration suspended that program in early 1981 before it started and formally scuttled it last month.

Dr. Arthur Hull Hayes Jr., the commissioner of food and drugs, called the AMA initiative "terribly exciting."

"The information comes from impeccable sources, peer-reviewed sources ... All of us will want to monitor what in fact happens in physicians' offices, clinics and hospitals around the country," he told a news conference. "But I believe such a strong start bodes well."

Dr. James H. Sammons, the AMA's executive vice president, said the Carter administration's warning leaflets would have unnecessarily frightened patients.

The AMA's sheets — much less technical versions of information now provided physicians — are "honest, accurate, reflective of fact and yet not frightening," said Sammons.

Dr. Joseph F. Boyle, a Los Angeles internist who is chairman of the AMA's board of trustees, said, "Up until now (patients) have had available only information that was either inaccurate, incomplete or too complex for them to understand."

The AMA cooperated with a standard-setting group called the U.S. Pharmacopeial Convention in preparing the instruction sheets on such drugs as insulin, oral penicillin, beta-blockers and nitroglycerin.

Drug firms donated $1.8 million for the program and the AMA the rest. The AMA will provide the sheets to physicians at no cost except for postage and handling.

The AMA sheets cover the following drugs or drug classes: furosemide, a diuretic; thiazide diuretics; oral penicillins; digitalis preparations; coumarin-type anticoagulants; oral antidiabetics; tetracyclines; cephalosporins; erythromycin; nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory agents; benzodiazepines (such as Valium); sublingual nitroglycerin; methyldopa; insulin; oral cortcosteroids; cimetidine; belladonna and barbiturates; phenytoin; sulfonamides, and beta blockers.

During the Carter administration, the FDA initially sought to require "patient package inserts" with 375 prescription drugs. Faced with an industry uproar, it scaled the plans back to a pilot program involving 10 drugs: propoxyphene (Darvon); cimetidine; clofibrate; ampicillin; phenytoin; benzodiazepines; digoxin; methoxsalen; thiazides and Bendectin. Some of those are on the AMA's list.

Consumers get leaflets or detailed labels on all non-prescription drugs, but the FDA requires leaflets with only a few prescription drugs, including birth control pills and estrogens.

In a letter to all 400,000 practicing U.S. physicians, Sammons said it will be up to them to decide whether to give patients the instruction sheets. "Only you can best decide when, how and to whom you will distribute this information ... " Sammons said. "You can ... recognize those situations in which take-home written instructions will be most useful."

Divorced mother happy with life as Catholic nun

By CLARK MORPHEW
St. Paul Dispatch

MAPLEWOOD, Minn. (AP) — Faye Buck is a divorced mother with two grown children. She's also a Roman Catholic nun.

The 57-year-old mother became Sister Faye Buck this past summer, 13 years after she was divorced, and wants other women in similar circumstances to know about the opportunity to live a life of fulfilling service.

"I'm the only nun — at least the only one I know about — who's been divorced and raised two children," Sister Faye said.

"I feel there are so many people who are wishing they had more meaning in their life. There must be people who wish they could be in a full-time vocation and feel their past will keep them out of it. But I think they should seek it out, check with some convents and find out details," she said.

"When you're up against something difficult — a thing you can't change — learn to accept it and turn that disappointment into something constructive and useful," Sister Faye said. "Don't give up. There is some positive way out of every problem. The Lord never gives you more trouble than you're able to handle."

That philosophy is one of the reasons Sister Faye has achieved the dream she nurtured in the back of her mind for more than 40 years.

"When I was a young girl just out of high school, I told my mother I wanted to become a nun," Sister Faye recalled. But her older brother told her she had a responsibility to get a job and help out their mother. So she stayed home and helped out until World War II broke out and she felt the call to join the Army.

After the war ended, things happened quickly. She fell in love, married and had two children, Andrew and Yvonne. Her life was busy, full and happy. Twenty years slipped by. Her children were growing up and she knew her marriage was shaky.

"I saw it coming for a long time," said Sister Faye. "It was difficult, but through prayer and perseverance, I made it. I took one day at a time and sometimes I had to be satisfied with taking an hour at a time.

"Rather than crying myself to sleep and making myself sick," she recalled, "I decided to pray. I really believe praying and the rosary helped me keep my sanity."

She went to work as a file clerk for the State of Minnesota, spent as much time as possible with her children and wondered how her life would eventually turn out.

After her daughter was married and her son had established a home of his own, she decided it was time to carefully evaluate her life.

"I lived alone for a year, and I kept thinking, 'What do I need this big house for? Where have I been? Where am I going? What do I want out of life?'

"I was up for a big promotion at work — supervising people — and I finally said, 'No! the Lord has been really good to me, and now I'm going to give something back.'"

She visited several convents, inquired about the entrance requirements and was surprised to find that the barriers she feared could be overcome. So she entered the Order of St. Benedict and now lives and works at the St. Paul Priory in Maplewood.

"My children totally support me in my new vocation," she said.

Pink peppercorns loaded with distinctive flavor, controversy

By ANITA HISLEY
Hearst Feature Service

Pink peppercorns, the darlings of French nouvelle cuisine, have arrived in the United States, bringing with them controversy as well as distinctive taste. They are pink, pretty, potentially poisonous and not really pepper, some botanical experts say.

The peppercorns, prized by some for their sweet, peppery flavor and pinkish-red color, also are found in vinegar and mustards. They are popular in nouvelle cuisine, according to University of Miami botanist Julia Morton, who refers to the plant as a "noxious weed" and believes it can cause adverse reactions in some people.

Emil Corwin of the federal Food and Drug Administration said that the FDA banned the importation of pink peppercorns last year, although it did not recall those already in the country because it lacked the manpower. The same type, known as Florida holly or Brazilian pepper, grows in Florida.

Pink peppercorns are being distributed by two Baltimore women under the Vanns Spices label as "pink peppercorns" or "poivre irise." (rainbow pepper). But Ann Wilder, co-owner of Vanns Spices, said that if she got a negative reaction from the FDA, she would stop selling it. "I contacted them and have received no response to my letter, which I sent three weeks ago," she said.

The French claim their peppercorns are grown in different soil under different conditions than the Florida type and do not produce adverse reactions.

But Morton said both French and Florida pink peppercorns are members of the Anacardol family, which includes poison ivy, poison sumac and cashew nuts.

Fruit cobbler dessert for delicious treat

FRUIT COBBLER

16-ounce can unpeeled apricot halves packed in fruit juice
¼-pound stick (½ cup) butter
¾ cup all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 cup sugar
¾ cup milk

Turn mixed fruit and apricots into a strainer to drain — there should be a generous 1½ cups juice. (Use juice in some other dish or in a drink.) Quarter each apricot half. In a 2-quart round casserole (8 by 2 inches) melt butter in a 350-degree oven. Remove from oven leaving temperature control set. In a small bowl stir together well the flour, baking powder and sugar; gradually stir in milk until smooth. Without stirring, pour batter over melted butter in baking dish. Spoon fruits over top. Bake in the preheated 350-degree oven until top is golden brown — 50 minutes. Serve warm with unsweetened whipped cream. Makes 6 servings.

Maybe Mrs. Consumer is driving 'drunks' home

Copley News Service

A dear friend of distant days was a winebibber and abbeylubber named McNulty who, working his way toward the bottom of a gallon of liquid truth serum, would suddenly stand up, lift his arms heavenward and declare, "McNulty, your Moment of Truth has arrived. McNulty, you're drunk."

Most of us would laugh uproariously and hoist another round to our besotted friend — but the sobersided Smithstone would shake his head and say, "Somebody has to drive you guys home."

Now, as Treasury Secretary Donald Regan says that all the economy needs is some more borrowing, it strikes me that the American consumer — bless her heart — is playing the Smithstone role.

Verily, economists can't figure why consumers won't extend their debts. In the last three years, consumers have put their houses in order: Installment credit outstanding as a percentage of disposable personal income has dropped to a relatively manageable 15.1 percent from a high of 18.1 in December. The personal savings rate averaged 8.1 percent in July and 7.2 percent over the four months ended in July — up from an average of 6.4 percent in June of last year, noted Jack W. Lavery of Wall Street's Merrill Lynch Economics.

If the savings rate drops to a still-strong 7.4 percent in the fourth quarter from 7.7 in the third, a whopping $6 billion would be added to personal consumption spending — maybe giving the economy the fillerup ... er, fillip it needs, hypothesized Lavery.

Yes, for the short pull, it would be good for the economy, but don't be surprised if it doesn't happen — right away, anyway.

For Mrs. Consumer may be saying, "No thanks. I'm driving." Since government and corporate debt are wildly out of control, consumers are frightened. It's difficult enough to help one drunk across the street. But two?

Look what has come out recently. The National Commission on Social Security Reform, which will report its findings after the election, has already stated that it will take an immediate 14 percent boost in the Social Security payroll tax to make the system solvent. Think about it — 14 percent in one year. And that won't be enough if the economy stays weak. To consumers who can read between the lines, it's an official and long overdue admission that Social Security is insolvent — something many people have known for years.

Government economists also readily admit that the borrowing needs of the federal government alone will suck up 50 to 60 percent of the total U.S. capital pool in 1982 and 1983, and a stunning 65 to 75 percent over the following several years unless federal spending is trimmed — and the political stalemate may prevent any significant budget-cutting from taking place. In the 1960s, the government absorbed just 5 percent of total savings.

Although even the century's most pernicious liberal economist, the late Lord John Maynard Keynes, believed that government spending could not exceed 25 percent of total national output without inflation surging, spending is 35 percent of output in the United States and Japan and almost 50 percent, on average, in the major nations of Europe. But politicians cannot significantly cut spending or raise taxes — hence deficits and government debts balloon.

Total federal debt in the United States is headed for $1.3 trillion — but corporations aren't laughing. Corporate debt is even higher, and because corporations can't print money, their debt ratios are even more devastating.

In the 1960s, U.S. industrial companies added $1 of equity to their balance sheets for each $1 of debt they had. Now it's $3 of debt for each $1 of equity. In 1950, the average U.S. corporation had $43 of operating income after depreciation for each dollar of interest payments. Since then, it's fallen from $43 to less than $4, according to Forbes Magazine.

Interest expenses alone soak up almost 45 percent of corporate cash flow. Ah, liquidity. Consumers are much better off: Debt service takes around 20 percent of their buying power.

AT WIT'S END

Dealing with 'real world'

By ERMA BOMBECK

Every parent at one time or another has threatened his child with the "real world."

It has been described as a "jungle," a "place where you can count your friends on one hand" and "a future existence where you won't have your parents to kick around anymore."

Some parents are even concerned that their children are so pampered and spoiled, they won't be able to handle the pressures of the "real world" when they enter it.

Not to worry.

When Sheila was six, her mother left one day in the car to "think things out." She never came home again and Sheila was raised by a father who drank and a grandmother who prayed.

Mark was four years old when another child called him "nigger" and said he couldn't slide down the same slide as the other children. It was to be his first, but not his last, encounter with prejudice.

Kevin was seven when his bicycle which he bought with his own money was stolen and the policeman shrugged and said, "There's nothing we can do about it."

At age 10, Barbara was told baseball was a boy's game and what would a girl want to be on the team for. She couldn't even spell discrimination.

Rick was nine years old when a group of boys shoved his head into a paper towel dispenser in a restroom of a movie house and demanded his money. It was a Disney movie because his mother said she didn't want him to see all that violence and get ideas.

Michelle was 16 when the car in which she was driving was hit broadside by a drunk driver. Her best friend died instantly.

At 17, Kenny was invited to a war he did not want to attend and had to make a decision to either fight it or leave his country.

The "real world" is a myth, children. You entered it slippery and warm and complacent. When you chose to ignore it, you were smacked on the behind to fill your lungs with cries of annoyance, shock and rage. How much more real can it get than that!

The economy may be bad, but people still have to eat. They may give up buying houses, but they aren't going to give up eating chocolate-chip cookies, says Elaine Carlson, above.

Woman's business from family recipe

By LINDA DUDLEY
Copley News Service

Elaine Carlson appears to be beating the odds in the business world and taking a bite out of the $250 million annual chocolate chip cookie sales.

At a time when women are fleeing the kitchen in droves, Carlson has returned to make her fortune wearing an apron.

As inflation is dealing large corporations a pummeling, the 31-year-old has built a profit-making company with a six-figure gross in only one year.

Carlson was armed with only a popular family recipe and the labor of her parents and 13 brothers and sisters when she formed Carlson's Cookies, which is based in Seal Beach, Calif. Most of the family members are shareholders and only one — 23-year-old brother Tim Murphy — draws a salary at this point. He is both the chief baker and deliveryman.

Although the company appears headed down the road to success, there is a lot of corner-cutting necessary to get a fledgling business off the ground.

Instead of hiring a fancy graphics firm, Carlson's husband Arvin designed the logo for the cookie bag. It is a silhouette of a youthful Elaine wearing an apron and carrying a plate of cookies.

No business major with an advanced degree, Carlson learned her skills working in several different departments at Mattel Inc., where she started work three days out of high school, and as a real estate salesperson. She never went to college.

It all started innocently enough.

"These cookies are better than anything on the market. You should sell them," the friends prompted.

With the friends as partners, they researched the market, including conducting a test survey in West Los Angeles, and secured a loan.

Backed by $200,000 in capital, Carlson's Cookies, Inc., was launched in August 1981.

Carlson says she expects 1982 sales of about $200,000, primarily in Southern California and a few outlets in San Francisco.

At first, the family made the cookies by hand, carefully spooning out each one. Now a mechanized cookie depositor does it and production is up to 15,000 cookies a day, which is not yet capacity.

"During the year we've been in business, cookie companies have come and gone," Carlson said. "It wasn't the best time to start a business in this economy, but who knew? But I'm so wrapped up in the daily operation I don't have time to be scared."

Carlson puts in a six-day week. She is also expecting her first child in October.

Chocolate chip is the best-selling variety of cookie sold in the United States, according to industry statistics, and Carlson's has challenged the gourmet line, such as Famous Amos, King's Hawaiian and Neiman-Marcus' Creme de la Creme.

Carlson proudly pointed to the list of ingredients on her cookie bag: "But we're the only one that lists chocolate chips first instead of flour, and we have nothing artificial added."

Those chips, she says, are the biggest available in the business and an office taste test seemed to bear out that claim.

Inequality between sexes seen in behavior patterns

By MARIAN J. MEYERS
Hearst Feature Service

It's in the way men and women talk, touch and act toward each other. Sometimes, the inequality bursts forth as physical abuse; more often, it is cloaked in more subtle forms.

Either way, says Skidmore College Professor Frances Hoffman, the inequality between the sexes reinforces male dominance in both business and private life which, in its most extreme state, appears as violence against women.

According to Hoffmann, these subtle, unconscious behaviors take many forms. For example, she says, slang words used to describe women — shrew, chick, broad, cow and hag — are derogatory. In contrast, the slang terms used to refer to men — such as stud or hunk — are not generally considered derogatory.

"What they connote," she says, "is power."

Similarly, Hoffman argues, studies of "touching behavior" — who touches whom, who gives way on a crowded sidewalk — show that men tend to touch women and will bump into them on a sidewalk if they don't give way.

"They're non-reciprocal behaviors," she says. "Men have those behaviors toward women. That, I argue, signifies dominance — in very subtle ways."

Research on conversation also indicate that men interrupt and determine the topic more often than women. In one study, men controlled the topic about 80 percent of the time, and interrupted twice as often as women, she said.

"The basic argument is that all these little, subtle behaviors reinforce the situation in which violence against women is not surprising," explains Hoffmann.

Joan Douglas, an associate professor of psychology, also is part of the on-campus program sponsored by the Women's Studies Committee.

Douglas agrees that these traditional, sex-typed behaviors can lead to a violence. In those cases, she says the woman tries to please and accommodate the man through self-sacrifice, while he is typically stoic, non-verbal about his feelings and uses money to gain control. "His way of dealing with anger is to act out, to become violent," she says, "whereas the woman in that situation will withdraw, cry, turn the anger inward upon herself."

Women frequently stay with men who abuse them because they fear the unknown and being abandoned, they've learned to be helpless, and they don't have the economic resources to be independent, Douglas adds. Often, battered women were abused as children.

Both Douglas and Hoffmann maintain that behavior must be changed to eliminate both violent and non-visible forms of inequality.

Hoffmann recommends eliminating the use of derogatory slang references to women, as well as masculine generic terms that include women, such as chairman and mankind. She also says that men should become more aware of how they touch women so as not to be patronizing and use "strength and size to dominate."

Chivalrous gestures men use toward women, such as opening doors and pulling out chairs she adds, should be reciprocal gestures of kindness, for both women and men.

Hoffman also says men should develop listening skills, rather than continuing to dominate and interrupt conversations, and women should develop assertiveness in that area.

Dorothy Molter, 75, is the only person the U.S. Forest Service permits to live in the Boundary Waters Canoe Area, a pristine 1.1-million-acre section of trees, rocks and lakes in Minnesota.

Minnesota woman alone, not lonely

By THOMAS C. COTHRAN
AP Writer

BOUNDARY WATERS CANOE AREA, Minn. (AP) — "Just don't say I'm the loneliest woman in America," pleads Dorothy Molter, the only person the U.S. Forest Service allows to live in this northern Minnesota wilderness.

How can she be lonely, she reasons, with more than 6,000 visitors a year? Still, on the wall of her olive drab kitchen tent is a framed copy of an old magazine article calling her the loneliest woman in the nation.

If not lonely, she is certainly alone in the winter, when the steady flow of grinning, T-shirt clad, unbathed canoe trekkers drops off sharply.

In 1981, about 7,000 visitors signed her guest book. She expects several hundred fewer to come by the end of this year, a decline she attributes to bad weather, the economy and a smaller number of permits being issued to visitors to Superior National Forest.

The Forest Service bought all private land in the Boundary Waters Canoe Area — known to Minnesotans as the BWCA — when it took over the 1.1 million acres of pristine lakes, trees and rocks in the 1950s.

A few residents were allowed to continue living there. One of them, Benny Ambrose, died recently. That left Ms. Molter, 75, as the only resident — a distinction she sees as nothing special.

"I'm no different from everybody else," she said. "They come here and they like it and they'd like to stay here or they don't. I'm just used to it. I wouldn't know how to live in the city. This is the only place I've had that I could call home."

She didn't come seeking refuge from cities or people, she said. "I never felt that way. I didn't come up to get away from everybody."

There are old boats with marigolds growing out of them, a garden fenced with brightly painted broken paddles, a wooden Indian smoking a cigar and an ancient Coca-Cola cooler.

Primitive sheds cover saws and other tools, many of them rusted. Two huge logs and rocks make a crude wharf where boats may be docked.

In summer she lives in a tent by the shore. But in winter, Ms. Molter moves to a three-room cabin. The site is just an island away from the Canadian border.

Ms. Molter has been here for 52 years. A nurse working in Chicago in the 1930s, she came to care for her father and never left. He died in 1962, leaving the small islands in Knife Lake to her.

She sells homemade root beer to passers-by. It's the only iced drink to be found in the boundary waters, where an act of Congress gives the Forest Service wide authority to bar such items as cans, bottles and motorboats.

The ice comes from Knife Lake, and she cuts it herself with a chain saw in winter. It keeps during the summer months in an ice house on one of the little islands she occupies.

"I get outside everyday," she said. "I've got snowshoes. I can get out on them. I cut wood everyday whether I need to or not, just for the exercise. I stay in on colder days."

DEAR ABBY

She deals with suicide

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Today would have been my mother's 53rd birthday. I say "would have been" because five years ago she checked into a local motel, hung out the "Do Not Disturb" sign and took an overdose of sleeping pills.

I cannot begin to describe the hell that I, her oldest daughter, have gone through since. I kept asking myself, "Why would a beautiful, respected, successful businesswoman do such a thing? Why didn't I see, hear or feel it coming? What could I have done to stop her? Why didn't she tell me how much she was hurting? And worst of all, if she really loved me, how could she leave me like this?"

Those questions haunted me. Ending one's own life is a tragedy, but the guilt borne by the survivors is also tragic.

After a loved one has committed suicide, counseling for the survivors is very helpful, but it is also important to keep busy. They should try new experiences and new challenges in order to build their self-confidence and self-esteem. Some suggestions:

1) Volunteer to work with children in hospitals, preschools and public schools, Boy/Girl Scouts, YMCA and other social organizations.

2) Work with foreign adults and students who are struggling to learn English.

3) Become a homemaker aide through your state family and child service agency.

4) Join a small church and learn about its various services and activities.

5) Take adult education classes; everything from shorthand to cake decorating is offered. Or join a service club like the Red Cross.

6) Join the Peace Corps. It has people starting at 43, 62 and 77. There is no age limit.

I know, because I have done ALL the above. That's what it took to pick up the pieces after my mother committed suicide. Sign this ... MAKING IT

DEAR MAKING IT: Thank you for an inspiring letter that may help others to make it, too.

DEAR ABBY: I see nothing wrong with asking my son or his wife what his salary is. After all, I am only interested in their well-being.

My husband disagrees, and we've decided to abide by your opinion. — LOVING MOTHER

Hearing aid trends attract more wearers

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Designer glasses, move over. Two Purdue University professors, David Goldstein and Carl Binnie, predict designer hearing aids may be next to enjoy a sales boom.

"We're in the earliest stage of a new trend in hearing aids," says Goldstein, who with Binnie directs the hearing clinic at Purdue. Both are professors of audiology and speech sciences, and provide professional training in audiology in the clinic.

The stigma attached to hearing aids is rapidly fading, they say, and sales of the devices have risen by 15-20 percent annually in the past few years.

"People are beginning to accept hearing aids much like glasses," notes Goldstein. "People used to associate hearing aids with the old or handicapped — they don't do that any more."

One result is that the age of the typical hearing-aid candidate is getting lower every year.

"These individuals may not have a severe hearing impairment, but it's enough to make them uncomfortable — or to affect the people around them, who find they are talking louder or repeating themselves," Goldstein says.

One reason for the current popularity of hearing aids, he suggests, is their updated style. "The day of the bulky hearing aid is nearly gone — everything you need you can fit into your ear."

Today's hearing aids, he points out, even come in vibrant colors. And the latest innovation — not yet available in America — is the designer hearing aid — made to resemble a chic accessory such as an earring or necklace.

Another reason for surging sales, according to Binnie, may be the change in hearing-aid marketing and service — from a store-front delivery system to assistance by university-trained professional audiologists.

"It used to be you could only go to the dealer to purchase the hearing aid, even if you visited an audiologist for the fitting," Binnie says.

Today, he explains, more and more professional audiologists are fitting and selling aids, eliminating the need to visit two separate locations in seeking help.

"People don't realize how many factors can contribute to hearing impairment," Goldstein notes. These include poor diet, stress and even some drugs, he says. Aspirin taken in large quantities, for instance, is considered one of several drugs that can contribute to hearing impairment.

Another factor is noise pollution, which is virtually everywhere there are peple, he adds.

"The culprit used to be a noisy industrial job, but today a person can incur some degree of hearing loss simply from daily living," he says.

While some of the biggest contributors to hearing loss are loud music and industrial noise, Binnie points out that other abrasives to hearing are lawn mowers, subways and even attending sports events.

"And then there's the factor of aging itself," Goldstein says. "Hearing simply tends to decline with age; every year after age 50, we lose one-half of 1 percent of our hearing."

Cucumbers give molds delicate flavor

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

CUCUMBER MOLDS

The cucumber gives delicate flavor.

Two cucumbers (each about 4 ounces)
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
¼ cup cold water
½ cup sour cream
⅓ cup mayonnaise
½ to 1 teaspoon salt
White pepper to taste
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

Pare cucumbers; halve lengthwise; scoop out seeds and discard. Coarsely grate cucumbers — there should be 1½ cups packed down. In the top of a double boiler, sprinkle gelatin over water to soften — about 5 minutes; over boiling water heat, without stirring, until gelatin dissolves — several minutes. Off heat, whisk in sour cream. In a small bowl gently whisk together until blended the mayonnaise, salt, pepper and Worcestershire; whisk into gelatin mixture. Stir in cucumber. Turn into 6-ounce custard cups or individual molds. Chill to set. At serving time, unmold.

Biologist: Many types of behavior can indicate homosexual tendencies in boys

By JOANN RODGERS, Science Writer
Hearst Feature Service

Studies confirm that "sissy" behavior in boys is an accurate tip-off to adult male homosexuality. But now a Johns Hopkins University biologist says that having loads of male childhood chums and being "one of the boys" may be, too.

"My guess," says Dr. James Weinrich, "is that there are many ways to become gay and many childhood signals of homosexual destiny besides sissiness. We just haven't studied them much," he adds, because unlike so-called sissy activity, other signals don't involve behaviors "that prompt a parent to bring a boy to a psychiatrist."

Weinrich, an instructor in the department of psychiatry and behavioral sciences at Hopkins School of Medicine, works with Dr. John Money, an internationally recognized and controversial authority on childhood gender identity problems. He explained his views following a meeting of the American Psychological Association in Washington earlier this month, where new theories of homosexual origins were debated.

Over the years, homosexuality has been traced to everything from overbearing mothers and passive fathers to one-sex schools, boredom (born of excessive heterosexual experiences), divorce and genetics. But no single theory has stood the test of time or experience.

"IF WE'VE LEARNED anything at all, it's that homosexuals are not a single group of people," Weinrich claims. Attempts to link all or most homosexuality to a single type of behavior or cause is neither accurate nor helpful, he said.

The latest theory to receive star treatment in the media comes from a University of Kansas social scientist, Michael D. Storms. It states that adult sexual orientation depends on what social stage a person happens to be in when puberty and the sex drive first begin.

According to Storms, children attach erotic significance to whatever experiences are available to them when adolescent hormones begin pumping. Thus, kids who mature early while still playing in largely same-sex social groups learn to erotically love the same sex. Those who mature late, when boys and girls operate in mixed-sex groups, become sexually attuned to the opposite sex and develop "straight" sexual preferences.

Storms' views are based on studies of 97 male and 62 female college students who were asked about the intensity and frequency of their sexual fantasies and their age at sexual maturity.

But Weinrich, among others, disputes Storms' views.

"It's not that the theory fails totally," he said, "as much as that for some gay men, the model does not work." In particular, Weinrich says it doesn't work for men who, as boys, were known as sissies, who consistently preferred to play with girls, assumed female roles, liked to dress up like girls and avoided such male activities as sports.

"AT LEAST FIVE studies now confirm that sissy behavior is so far the most accurate predictor of adult male homosexuality," he says. One study has confirmed that lesbianism is similarly linked to tomboy behavior in girls. Most important of all, these studies show that while sissy behavior does not exlain all homosexuality, a "significant minority" — 20 to 30 percent — of all homosexuals are in this category.

Psychologists call this behavior "childhood gender non-conformity." The five studies Weinrich cited include two that followed boys for up to 20 years, from early childhood to young adulthood.

One, by Hopkins' Dr. Money and a co-worker, kept track of 11 boys brought to a therapist because of girlish behavior. Two are unaccounted for at present, but of the remaining nine, all are gay.

"It's possible that the other two are also gay," he noted, "which would give this variable a 100 percent predictability rate."

For this group of male homosexuals, Weinrich concludes, Storms' theory is a bad fit, since their childhood experiences, from an early age through adolescence, involved preference for the opposite sex. Moreover, a report from the Alfred C. Kinsey Institute for Sex Research, based on interviews with almost 1,400 people, found that childhood sexual feelings are already in place by the time of puberty, and may be biologically rooted.

IF WEINRICH IS right — that there are a variety of paths to homosexality — Storms' theory may explain another sub-group of gay males. These are the men Weinrich describes as people who, as boys, had "loads of chums and spent lots of time as one of the boys with groups of pals."

A New York City sex therapist, Dr. Charles Silverstein, first applied the label "comrades" to describe such boys, one of four categories he said predicted male homosexuality. The other types are sissies, romantics and outsiders (those who desperately want to be one of the boys, but never make it.) The four categories, he noted, are represented in the different types of gay bars visited by male homosexuals.

"Those that cater to sissies are those with the drag shows," he says, "while those that appeal to comrades are the leather bars. In between are those that draw in-between types — the mirrored discos and the jeans-and-plaid-shirt macho places." It may be, Weinrich suspects, that the comrade type of male homosexual is the one that fits Storms' theory of early puberty.

FOCUS: Lee Fisher

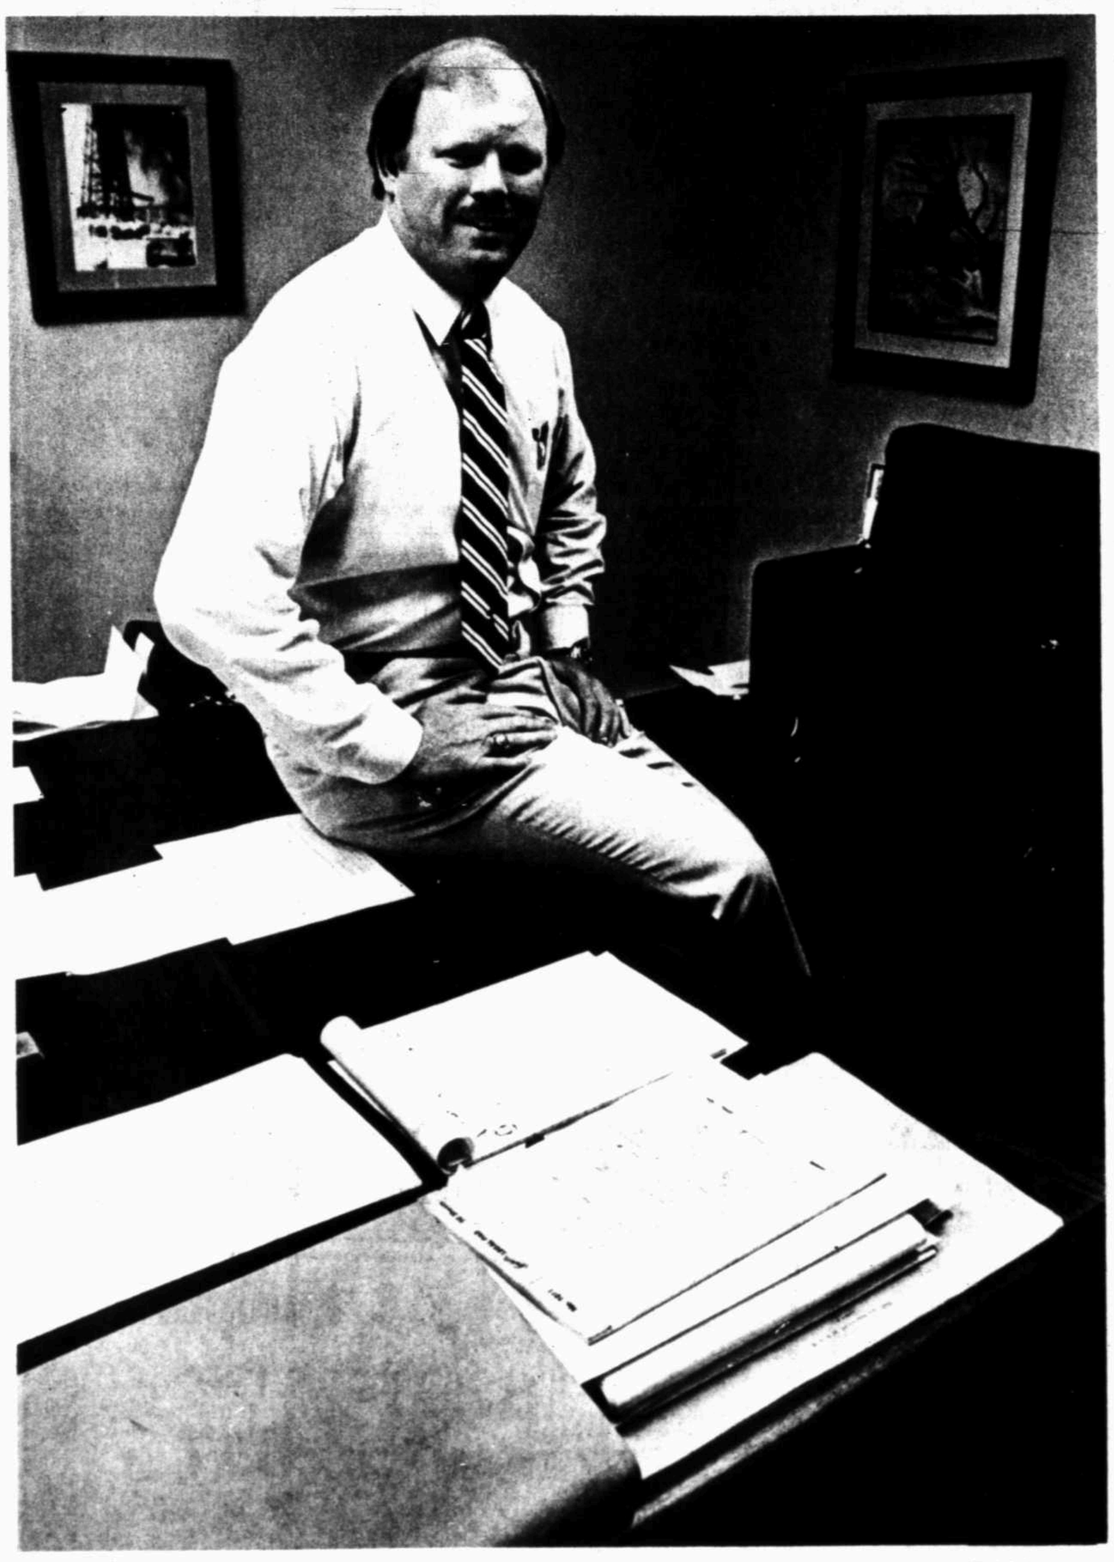
Playing to win in the well servicing business

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

If the well stimulation business can be compared to a football game, then as far as Stimwell Services Company is concerned, it's right after halftime. The team — well trained, experienced and eager to knock heads — is running onto the field after a promising first half.

It's the condition of the field that's the problem — where once it was in top shape, now it's become muddy, wet and cold, and there's a stiff breeze blowing from the wrong direction.

But for "coach" Lee Fisher, president of Stimwell Services Company, conditions mean he'll have to alter the game plan some, but on the whole, he's still planning to win.



Lee Fisher

Why in the world would a man start an acidizing and fracturing company now, of all times?

"It's tough on us," admits Fisher. "Most companies are trying to retain their market share, and we are trying to obtain it, and there's been a collision there. Nobody said it would be a bed of roses, but we believe in us, and what we are dedicated to do."

FISHER TOOK THE kick-off back in August, 1981. He was approached with the information that a major Pennsylvania utility/energy conglomerate which owned some oil-related companies, wanted to move into the Permian Basin with well stimulation. It was perfect timing — then.

Fisher felt he was at the height of his career and had reached the potential in his job with one of the major servicing companies, and was ready to move out on his own, a long-time goal. The industry itself was also at its height. "At the time, they were drilling and completing so many wells, that you practically had to take a number and stand in line (for well servicing)," Fisher recalls.

"I had worked nine years for a major service company. I had nothing against them, but my style is such that I had reached a point where I would have to be fairly polished socially and politically (as far as office politics goes)," Fisher explained. "It's a price you have to pay, family-wise, once you reach a certain level."

Fisher also says he saw what effect the frantic boom had on the quality of service provided by all the major well servicing companies. He felt that quality was suffering as they expanded their services and their geographical range of operations, and that a small company which concentrated on just the basics, but performed them well, and consistently, would do very well in the Permian Basin.

A FRIEND IN DALLAS told Fisher about UGI Corporation, a company listed on the New York Stock Exchange. UGI is celebrating its 100th anniversary in 1982. The corporation already owned stimulation companies working the Appalachians, and Cryotex Inc., a Houston firm which designs and assembles nitrogen pumping equipment used in servicing and completion work. UGI was ready to move into the Permian Basin, an area of stabilized, established production.

"I stumbled onto an opportunity," Fisher admits. "I had some entrepreneurial tendencies, and I had a yearning to get out on my own and be more directly involved in the business.

"I was at the prime time of my life, (age 35) and the industry was at its peak of health. I don't know of anyone at the time who had predicted the downturn would be this sharp."

He and UGI entered into an arrangement whereby UGI is a majority owner of Stimwell and Fisher and his associates are the minority owners.

With the backing of UGI, which in 1981 had net income of $31.3 million on revenues of $657.3 million, Fisher began the planning and coordination necessary for Stimwell.

STIMWELL WAS incorporated in October 1981, and things went "pretty fast" from there, Fisher says. He concentrated first on acquiring new equipment and experienced people. Each Stimwell employee has several years under his belt with a major service company. Stimwell didn't reach full staffing until September, 1982.

"I have a philosophy — here's what I told UGI: I didn't believe there was room for a company to start with less than state-of-the-art equipment and experienced people.

"You have to have blue chip players in the uniforms to play it the right way. The net result is that the quality of the equipment can't run by itself. You have to have people who can maintain it, operate it, know its capabilities and limitations."

The acid-frac business is very capital intensive. Some of Stimwell's specialized trucks cost almost half a million dollars each.

Fisher says his idea was to crawl well before he walked, and to walk well before he ran with Stimwell. Original plans called for the company to open two yards, one in Andrews and one in Crane, to serve the central Midland Basin. Those two yards have been established; the one in Crane opened just a few weeks ago.

FISHER HAS NATURALLY had to make adjustments since the recession hit the Permian Basin.

"We were looking at Southeast New Mexico for our second location, but those gas plays up there have softened, so I opened a yard in Crane. We had put more acid equipment in Andrews than we could utilize, so another alteration we made at halftime was to move some equipment out of Andrews to Crane."

Response to what Fisher calls a "market test" in Crane has been good. Before Stimwell, operators usually had to call in stimulation services from Odessa or Rankin.

The Stimwell team has a game plan for 1983, but it's contingent on many things — the general state of the American economy, the price of crude oil, and decontrol of natural gas prices, for example.

"We'll make our next move when we can determine what the market is doing. I don't expect the market increase to be as dynamic as it was," Fisher says. "There were fortunes made in two years that were lost in six months, and you don't forget that easily."

After Stimwell's first year, Fisher says he is not satisfied because the company hasn't accomplished all it set out to do, even given the affects of the recession, although it has serviced at least 250 wells since January.

BUT ON THE OTHER hand, the company was not fully equipped for acidizing until this past April, and didn't have all its frac equipment in place until Aug. 15.

"We made our projections based on a levelling off of activty," Fisher explains, "not on a continued climb. So, we went into this with a conservative idea. We were not so bold as to put everything into the first splash.

"We felt like we would have to earn our share of the market, not just buy some equipment and hire a few people and make an instantaneous splash."

Maybe in 1983, if the indicators are right, Stimwell will add nitrogen stimulation services to its package, by tieing in with Cryotex, its sister subsidiary in Houston.

Fisher says he will wait until he is confident Stimwell has been performing at its best consistently over a long period of time, that it is meeting or exceeding industry standards every time, and that it is recognized by the company man at the well site, before expanding any further.

HE SAYS GAS stimulation requires special handling. "I think a lot of companies take it too lightly. Not so much that it's difficult from a field operations point of view, but that it takes specialized marketing. Even though it's not mystical, or a technological beast, it's been a little difficult for people to accept it."

Fisher is hoping that Stimwell Services will be easy for people to accept, although all service companies, major and minor, are competing heavily now in a down market.

"I've been eating, sleeping, living and drinking the formation of this company, but it hasn't crossed my mind to go back to security. Having the opportunity to try to take something from the very beginning is a challenge."

SBA policies increase bankruptcies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Small Business Administration loan policies are unjustly enriching lenders and are contributing to the nation's soaring bankruptcy rate, a House subcommittee says.

"Interest payments on loans have increased so dramatically and unforeseeably that in many cases small businessmen-borrowers have been forced into or close to bankruptcy," the House Government Operations subcommittee on commerce, consumer and monetary affairs said in a report issued Thursday.

"Present SBA policies and procedures have contributed to the problem," the panel said, pointing to a policy permitting lenders to add up to 2.75 percent to the prime interest rate on agency-guaranteed loans.

This practice, the report said, "can unjustly enrich lenders, particularly those which sell the 90 percent guaranteed portion of the loan in the secondary market."

In a statement accompanying the report, subcommittee member Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., said the SBA has been "seriously negligent in allowing bank lenders to dictate interest rates far higher than justified for a 90 percent government-guaranteed loan."

Rosenthal also criticized the SBA for "not establishing interest rate caps in variable rate loans, as the Comptroller of the Currency has required on variable rate mortgage loans to home owners."

He cited testimony that for some small businessmen, interest rates on SBA-guaranteed loans rose from 12 percent to 23.5 percent in one quarter.

The subcommittee, controlled by Democrats, said the SBA should stop using the prime rate as the benchmark for guaranteed loans.

Instead, a formula placing loan rates somewhere between the rate for Treasury securities of the same term and the prime rate should be created to prevent "a windfall to lenders," the report said.

Variable interest rates also should be limited to a 2 percent increase in a single year, it added.

While saying they agreed with "the need to develop an improved pricing mechanism for SBA loans," the panel's Republican members said the recommendations "are inappropriate at this time."

"The concept of the prime rate is so central to the practice of banking and the money-lending function we are reluctant to recommend its abolition in the absence of any consensus on what sort of mechanism should be used to replace it," the Republicans said.

They also questioned whether a new formula could be established outside the marketplace and without regard to supply and demand.

They said that while the 2 percent increase limitation had a commendable aim, it would have "the practical effect of literally driving lenders from SBA programs during periods when interest rates are volatile."

Sounds like a job for Super Land Man!

HOUSTON — A serious territorial dispute has broken out between the Dubai and Sharjah governments that threatens the continuing development of promising oil and gas acreage in the Middle East sheikhdoms, according to Petroleum Information International.

In an exclusive report in its October 4 issue, the weekly oil and gas publication notes that minor border disputes have been endemic among the seven sheikhdoms comprising the decade-old Unied Arab Emirates. It quotes a Washington source as saying that "this latest one could get out of hand."

The dispute came to a head after an Arco-Dubai, Inc. gas-condensate discovery in southeastern Dubai last May, which tested 34.4 million cubic feet of gas and 2,330 barrels of condensate a day. The Atlantic Richfield affiliate signed its original concession agreement covering 80 percent of Dubai's onshsore acreage in February 1980, with Britoil as a one-third partner.

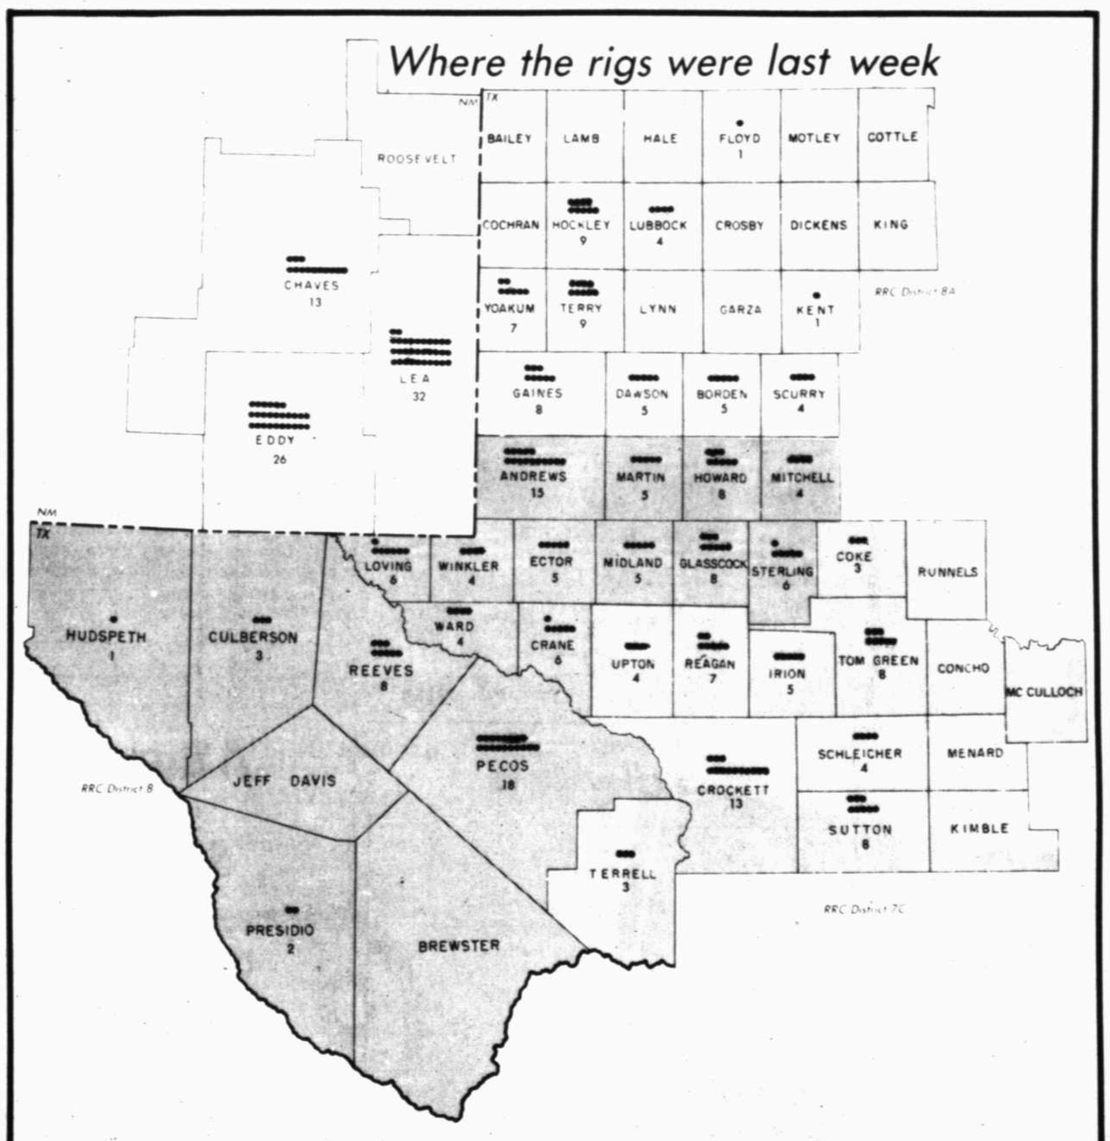
PI International reports that Arco-Dubai has let an engineering and procurement services contract to Fluor for the first phase of oil and gas processing facilities which Arco says could cost as much as $200 million. Ultimately, the prospect, which is the most important ever for onshore Dubai, could have an output of 75,000 to 100,000 barrels daily of condensate plus one billion cubic feet of gas a day, PI International says.

Although Arco's discovery well was clearly within Dubai's recognized territory, the particular geological structure seems to extend into what the Sharjah government considers southwestern Sharjah. Arco-Dubai, however, is drilling a delineation well in this area and plans another one shortly. PI International quotes an Arco Source as saying that "the Dubai rulers assure us that this is almost definitely within Dubai territory."

The Sharjah government and Amoco Sharjah, Inc., which holds a concession for all onshore Sharjah, think otherwise, PI International says. It reports that even though Sharjah officials will not comment on the dispute, some independent experts familiar with the region contend that Dubai is making a grab for Sharjah. "What's at stake is an oil field," PI International quotes an official of Amoco, a unit of Standard Oil Company (Indiana), as saying.

To underscore Dubai's claim to the disputed area where Arco is drilling, the Dubai government has built a road and put up a military outpost, according to PI International.

Where the rigs were last week



Local, national rig counts stable

The Permian Basin rig count was fairly stable in the last seven days, and decreased by just one rig, from 287 to 286 as of Oct. 7, according to data tallied by Reed Rock Bit Company. This compares with 267 rigs working Sept. 24, 273 working on Sept. 16, and 265 spotted on Sept.10.

There were 486 rigs working the area shown in our map a year ago at this time.

The total number of rigs working throughout Texas also was stable, with 771 rigs making hole both this week and last. Texas Railroad Commission District 3, the Upper Texas Coast, again showed the m rigs working with 105, an increase of three from last veek. In the area shown on the map, RRC District 8, Far West Texas, had the most activity, with 96 rigs making hole.

A slight increase in offshore activity in Texas is good news — there were 81 rigs spotted in the Lone Star State's offshore and inland water areas last week, versus 78 at this time a year ago.

According to data supplied by the International Association of Drilling Contractors, the total number of rigs reported as of Oct. 4 was 2,429 for the United States, 380 for Oklahoma, 288 for Louisiana, and 112 each in Kansas and California.

Eighty rigs were spotted in New Mexico.

Last year at this time, those numbers looked like this: U.S. — 4,338; Oklahoma — 805; Louisiana — 473; Kansas — 214; California — 164, and New Mexico — 137.

Executives expecting business upturn

DALLAS — Seventy-five percent of business executives in companies with $25 to 300 million in sales predict an upturn in business for their companies in the next 12 months.

These are among the findings of The Centerre Middle Market Economic Poll conducted in 10 mid-America states by Centerre Bancorporation, a Midwestern bank holding company headquartered in St. Louis.

Executives from middle market companies in Texas were included in the survey.

These findings contrast with more pessimistic expectations of corporate executives of larger Fortune 500 companies who, according to recent polls, have grave doubts about any upturn in the near future.

Clarence C. Barksdale, chairman of Centerre Bancorporation, said that the $5.3 billion bank holding company had chosen to survey middle market companies in lieu of large corporation executives. "Middle market companies have become recognized as a new and important emerging growth segment in America," he said.

"We believe that they provide a good barometer of business conditions for the greater majority of companies in America and are in fact on the leading edge of a revitalized economy."

Despite the fact that 40 percent of those surveyed said that last year's business recession has had a great effect on their business, the majority were optimistic because of changes they see in the next 12 months: an inflation rate below 10 percent, a decrease in unemployment and a general feeling that the recession has bottomed-out.

Middle market businessmen agree by 78 percent with their large counterparts that the American economy will improve only if inflation drops. However, they express confidence that such change will occur. Eighty-five percent expect that the rate of inflation will be below 10 percent at this time next year, "as a result of President Reagan's economic program."

Centerre vice president and chief economist Rachel Balbach said that the sentiments of middle market businessmen contrast with the apparent concerns of some members of Congress who have urged the Federal Reserve to concentrate its efforts on reducing interest rates.

"While they are certainly aware of the impact of high interest rates on their profits, these middle market executives appear to recognize the crucial importance of controlling inflation to achieve a sound recovery. Proposed legislation, which would require the Federal Reserve to accelerate money growth in an attempt to lower interest rates, would be self-defeating. The increased inflation which would result would be anticipated in higher interest rates," she said.

Seventy-three percent of business executives surveyed predict that unemployment will be reduced as a result of the president's economic programs; 62 percent feel that business bankruptcies would not be increasing a year from now, also as a result of the president's economic programs.

The group was split when asked if high unemployment is necessary to help reduce inflation, but more than three-fourths of those surveyed said that tax cuts will help economic recovery. The Centerre Poll was conducted just prior to Congress' passage of the president's new tax bill.

A plurality of these businessmen are tying their hopes on changes in the national marketplace but a significant percentage cite other criteria as important to any upturn.

Forty-five percent said that the condition of the national economy was the most important factor influencing their outlook for the future while 21 percent indicated that factors affecting their local economy were most important and 29 percent cited developments in their industry as having the most impact on their outlook.

While these businessmen tend to be optimistic about the foreseeable future, they doubt that the Reagan administration has been entirely realistic concerning the course the economy will take.

Less than half of those surveyed said the Reagan administration's outlook on the economy has been realistic. This compares to 61 percent who believe the administration has been optimistic in its outlook.

Forty-eight percent of those surveyed said that they had more faith in Wall Street's predictions about the economy than they had in predictions made by economists in Reagan administration. A mere 12 percent said that they confidently followed the administration's economists while 36 percent expressed faith in neither.

Balbach noted that the predictions of the Reagan administration were not only unrealistic but also inconsistent with its own policies.

Questioned as to their source for economic information, 73 percent indicated that they frequently or occasionally used general press coverage of economic events as the basis of their opinions on economic events. This compares to 59 percent who indicated that their opinions were based on press editorial page commentary and analysis.

A total of 312 businessmen in Colorado, Georgis, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Ohio, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and Texas were surveyed by telephone during mid-August 1982.

Tidewater moving offices

Tidewater Inc. has announced that it is relocating the headquarters offices and staff functions of its oil and gas exploration and production subsidiary, Hilliard Oil & Gas, Inc., from Menlo Park, California to New Orleans, Louisiana effective in January, 1983.

According to an announcement by John P. Laborde, chairman and chief executive officer of Tidewater Inc., considerable savings and greater efficiency in operations are expected to be achieved when the relocation is complete.

"The best amalgamation of Tidewater and Hilliard staffs will be made to meet the future financial and administrative needs of the company. Tidewater has every intention of continuing to support and encourage the growth and improved profitability of Hilliard Oil & Gas," Laborde said.

Hilliard Oil & Gas was acquired by Tidewater Inc. in 1977 and maintains eight exploration and production offices in or near the major oil and gas producing areas of the United States. "Those offices and staffs will not be affected by the headquarters office relocation," Laborde said.

Lovelady finishes another one

Ike Lovelady Inc. announced recently the completion of the Sam Snoddy Federal Well No. 1 in Lea County, New Mexico as a producer from the Morrow formation. The discovery well was tested at a daily rate of 2,125,000 cubic feet through a 14/64 choke with 2,778 pounds flowing tubing pressure from perforations from 13,002 to 13,110 feet. Calculated absolute open flow potential was 4,369,000 cubic feet of gas per day with a gas cobndensate ratio of 16.4 barrels per million cubic feet.

Ike Lovelady, Inc. has a 34.375 percent working interest in the well and the 640 acre tract on which the well is situated. Other participants are Dow Chemical Company, Lario Oil and Gas Company, Spectrum 7 Energy Corporation, Dico 82-1, Ltd., Willbros Energy, and Mustang Mud Company.

The Company also announced that significant shows of hydrocarbons were present in the lower Bone Springs zone at a depth of 10,500 feet but the zone has not been tested.

Ike Lovelady, Inc. headquartered in Midland, Texas is engaged in the exploration, development and production of natural resources, primarily oil and gas in the Permian Basin of West texas and Eastern New Mexico. Additional exploration and production activities are located in South Texas, Louisiana, Montana, North Dakota, and Wyoming. The Company's common stock is traded in the Over-The-Counter Market with the NASDAQ symbol IKEL.

IADC elects new president

Chester B. Benge, Jr., president of Houston-based Big "6" Drilling Company, will be the 1983 President of the International Association of Drilling Contractors.

Benge and other officers were elected October 1 during the Association's Annual Meeting held at the Hyatt Regency Hotel, Washington, D. C.

An accounting graduate of the University of Houston, Benge was recently appointed by Governor Clements of Texas to a seat on the Board of Regents of that University. He has been active in the oil industry from the outset of his professional career.

After working for Humble Oil Refining Co. and Grey Wolf Drilling Co., he joined Big "6" Drilling in 1955. Benge held in his firm the posts of accountant, secretary-treasurer, vice president and general manager before being promoted to the presidency in 1979.

A staunch supporter of IADC, Benge was the association's secretary-treasurer for several years and currently holds the position of first vice president. As the 1983 leader of IADC, he will replace C. R. Palmer, president and CEO of Rowan Companies Incorporated, Houston, Texas, effective January 1, 1983.

B. E. Burton, Warton Drilling Company, Odessa, was elected vice president for West Texas-East New Mexico Region.

Bonray Energy opens Midland office

Bonray Energy of Oklahoma City announces the opening of its Midland Exploration Office located at 606 W. Tennessee.

Paul J. Marko has been retained as Exploration Consultant. His function will be to both screen and generate drilling prospects in the Permian Basin of West Texas and Southeast New Mexico. He previously was retained as an Exploration Consultant for American Public Energy Co. of Midland for four years and prior to that was employed by Terramar Consultants of Dallas and Exxon Company of Midland as a geologist. He has a total of 18 years of petroleum exploration experience.

C. Clyde Hamblin, an Independent Landman and Operator in Midland for the past twenty years has been an exploration and land consultant to Bonray for the past four years. He will continue as a consultant to Bonray in its Permian Basin Division Office.

In addition to its Midland Office Bonray Energy has Exploration Offices in Oklahoma City, Houston and Denver.

Bonray Energy is a subsidiary of ANTA Corporation a diversified company engaged in contract drilling, health care services and the manufacture of aluminum building products. ANTA is a public company listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Permian Basin Petroleum Association secretary Mary Willifor supplies PBPA booster C.H. Brockett with recruiting materials, while Robert Anderson signs up for duty. The PBPA kicked off the first Midland recruiting drive in three years last week with a reception at the Petroleum club.

PBPA kicks off big membership drive

The first Midland membership drive in three years was kicked-off Wednesday afternoon by the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. Campaign workers heard PBPA president Ken McPeters, president of Bravo Energy in Hobbs, N.M., stress the need to increase membership because of economic developments in Washington and in the industry.

"The recent news about the so-called Windfall Profits Tax being 54 percent below projections, combined with the huge federal deficits, make the oil industry a prime target for more taxes," he said.

McPeters added, "that same report stated the Windfall Tax collections would be between 50 and 100 billion dollars short of original estimates." He continued, "I can foresee a strong move in the next Congress to increase the Windfall Tax on oil, enact a Windfall Tax on natural gas and repeal some of the industry gains made in 1981 in order to lower the deficit."

He continued, "that means less money in the basin for drilling, retail goods and services and fewer jobs.

"It's imperative that the Permian Basin make it's lobbying voice stronger than ever in Washington and the way to do that is by having as many members as possible in the Petroleum Association." Paul Erdman, with Rankin Oil, is chairing the Midland effort.

McPeters used the occasion to quote two area Congressmen about their feelings toward PBPA. Congressman Kent Hance said, "in my work to exempt the independent producer from the Windfall Profit Tax, the Permian Basin Petroleum Association was the most active group, and the only one, to get involved in the early stage of my efforts.

"It is my belief there would have been a 60 percent across-the-board tax on all oil produced by the domestic independents, rather than the 30 percent adopted, had it not been for the efforts of the PBPA," Hance said.

"That amounts to approximately $3.00 to $4.00 per barrel that the PBPA saved every independent oil operator in this country."

Congressman Tom Loeffler commented, "You have an organization (PBPA) that has credibility far beyond any other association that I've had the privilege of working with in the area of oil and gas."

The last PBPA membership campaign doubled the number of Midland members (350 to 700) and that was before the recent boom, according to Erdman. Permian Basin membership chairman John E. Reid of Midland, Texas Operations manager of DA&S Well Servicing in Hobbs, said this year's goal is at least 300 new members in Midland and 600 for the entire Permian Basin.

PBPA executive vice-president Ed Thompson pointed out that prizes would be awarded in the drive at different levels of achievement. The membership campaign runs through October 20th. For more information, contact the office of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association at 684-6345.

Muse flys more miles

DALLAS (SWN) — Muse Air Corporation announced today that revenue passenger miles in September increased 204 percent over the levels experienced in September 1981, with available seat miles increasing 139 percent. The company noted that September 1981 traffic was severely impacted by the PATCO strike.

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

For the proprietor, it's a great way to do business — very little overhead, no property taxes, no employees, probably no advertising. For Midland shoppers, it's the local version of the Yankee peddlar at the fair, or the open air markets in Europe. Prices are often up to 40 or 50 percent of what they would be in regular stores.

No matter how you slice it, selling merchandise from otherwise empty parking lots is called free enterprise, in one of it's most basic forms.

And the merchandise is quite variable — everything from tools, stuffed toys, flowers and furniture to wicker, brass and other gift items.

Ron Jones and W.E. King exemplify just two of the parking lot vendors. They have different backgrounds and are selling merchandise parking-lot style for different reasons.

Jones is a man in his thirties from Colorado who sells water beds, handmade wooden wine and magazine racks, cheese boards and bread boxes. He's been a parking lot vendor for about 18 months, following the closing of an apparel business he owned.

"It's impossible for me to make the kind of income I'd like to on an hourly basis," Jones says as a couple scrutinize his wares on the hot pavement of a parking lot on Andrews Highway.

"I come to Midland once every month or so. One of the most important reasons I do this is because I like to be self-employed."

King is a retired Midland businessman who sells stuffed toys, tools and tool boxes, and handmade wooden items made by a retired couple of his acquaintance.

"I was in the restaurant business in Midland for 40 years. I owned King Bee, Kingburgers, and Plantation House," King explains as the wind whips the American flag he always flies in front of his display on Front Street.

"I sold out and retired, and that lasted about 12 months. I had to get back into something before I went crazy."

Jones travels a route from Wyoming to Texas to New Mexico selling from the back of a rental truck. He often alternates between Midland and Odessa, both cities which he says are very attractive to itinerant salesmen because of the traditionally favorable Permian Basin economy. "When the oil business was better, we did a lot better last spring and last year. This parallels the rest of the economy."

Jones says he knows of parking lot vendors who come here from as far away as Wyoming and San Francisco.

After about 10 days on the road, he returns to his wife and children in Colorado to count his money, or recoup his losses, and relax for a few days before stocking up the truck and heading out again.

King, on the other hand, usually sells only in Midland. He has agreements with the owners of different locations on Front Street, the South side of town, North Big Spring, and West Wall to display his merchandise in their parking lots.

Both men agreed parking lot business is good, especially in Midland and Odessa, but they wouldn't say exactly how good. "You can't say how much it averages in a day," Jones explains. "In one day, you can either be discouraged or ecstatic. It depends on your location, the town, the weather, the time of the week.

He did admit that his gross has ranged from as little as $100 a day to a high of $5,000. Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and the days before a major holiday, are the best, he says.

Every town has a different policy regarding itinerant vendors. Some cities, like Odessa, have no ordinances concerning parking lot vendors, while others, like Midland, require the vendor to apply for a permit, which is good for three days before it must be renewed. Fees range from zero to as high as $50 in some areas of the country.

In Midland, a vendor pays $17 for the first three-day permit, and $7 for each salesman with him. He must wait 30 days before re-applying.

Parking lot vending, or selling from a fixed location in the open, rather than from a building, is not allowed in residential neighborhoods, but is allowed in certain commercial and retail zones.

Kelly Services back where it started

The company that introduced Midland to temporary help is marking its 24th anniversary here this month. And despite the span of years, Kelly Services Inc. finds the present situation much the same as the one it entered 24 years ago.

For one thing, Marie Bennett Munson is branch manager over the Midland and Odessa offices, as she was then. For another, economic conditions in Midland in 1982 are very similar to those of 1958,.

"When I opened the Kelly office in 1958, we were in a recession, and full-time employment was hard to find," recalls Munson. "I took on the Kelly business as a service to my community."

Russell Kelly, founder, warned her "that Midland and Odessa were the smallest cities to ever have Kelly Girl Service (the trade name then). This is a penny business so don't expect to make a lot of money...but it will be a great service to your community in giving mothers, students, teachers and anyone a chance to supplement their income." This has proven to be true in the last 24 years. Munson says employees, especially college students coming back each year to work for Kelly Services, were able to return to college to complete their education. Housewives and mothers bored with housework welcomed the service.

Advertising for both the customer and the employee enabled Musnon to break all records for first week openings. The home office in Detroit, Michigan, notified her by telegram of breaking the record for first week openings. She credits the newspapers in Midland and Odessa for the front page headline announcements of a new industry being brought to West Texas.

Many companies, independents as well as the major oil companies, learned the advantages of controlling their payroll costs using the 100 percent guaranteed Kelly Services. While the need for temporary help services locally is as strong today as it was then, the variety of employment available from Kelly is much greater now.

"In 1958, our business was almost totally of an office support nature," Munson says. "Since then, we've added marketing and light industrial assignments to our list of more than 100 job classifications. In early 1981, we introduced a word processing training program, and now there's a strong demand for our word processing operators."

In 1958, Kelly Services, Inc. was just 12 years old with 77 offices in 32 states. Today, the company has over 500 offices in all 50 states and Canada, Puerto Rico, England and France. International sales in 1981 surpassed $460 million.

Munson started in 1958 with no temporary help on the rolls. Today, more than 300 "temps" are listed in Midland and Odessa.

U.S Department of Labor studies show temporary help is a growing industry which will play an even greater role in the future. One reason is the increasing amount of work to be done in offices, as opposed to factories, and the trend toward office automation. Especially in a time of recession, companies find this service an economic tool. Most temporary help is assigned to an office setting.

To learn how temporary secretarial employees view the coming changes in the office, Kelly Services surveyed over 500 Kelly secretarial employees in 20 major markets across the country. A majority of employees said they are "not at all worried" about the technological changes occurring in the office. Eighty-seven percent said word processing skills will be an extremely important skill for secretaries in the future, and 99 percent rated on-the-job training the most valuable benefit employers of the future can provide their secretaries.

Kelly Services invites all customers and friends to come by its offices at 3211 W. Wadley, where Donna Pollard is the local Manager.

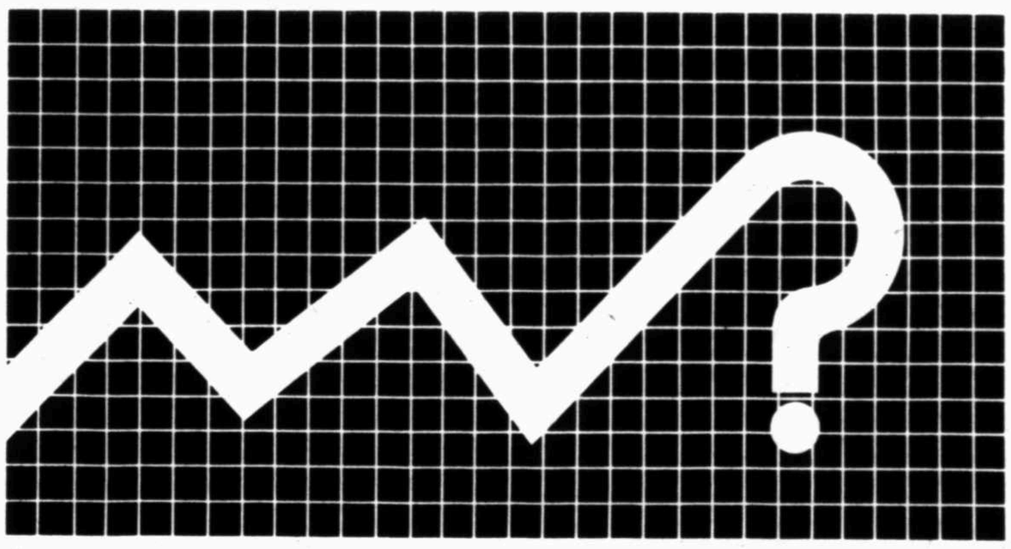
Investment Uncertainty?



WITH A FIRST NATIONAL 6-MONTH CERTIFICATE, YOU CAN BE CERTAIN OF YOUR INVESTMENT.

The interest rates on money funds may appear higher going in, but there is no way to be certain what the rate may be at the end of the month, or even the next week!

At The First National Bank of Midland, the interest rate on a 6-Month Money Market Certificate of Deposit is assured for the entire 182 day term, as long as you maintain your deposit.

Current Rate
9.643%

This is an annual rate and is subject to change at renewal. Federal regulations prohibit compounding of interest during the 182 day term and require that the penalty for early withdrawal be collected from the principal if the prescribed penalty period has not been met. The interest rate changes weekly and the current rate is in effect through October 11,1982.

Texas S&Ls appear to be winning battle for profitablity

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Savings and Loan Commissioner Alvis Vandygriff says Texas savings and loan associations appear to be winning the battle to return to profitable operations, thanks to recent decreases in interest rates.

Vandygriff reports that at the end of August, approximately half the associations in Texas "were operating in a profitable manner," according to Texas Savings and Loan Department calculations.

That, he notes, "is quite contrary to what it was for a while."

"I think," Vandygriff adds, "this is largely due to the fact that interest rates have been reduced and keep coming down. Further reductions would be a tremendous help...We think it's a pretty good trend."

The Air Control Board has delayed until Nov. 5 consideration of a permit fee schedule for new industrial sources of air contaminants, and plans to hold another hearing on the proposed fee regulation prior to its meeting.

Adoption of the new regulation had been set for the ACB's Oct. 3 meeting, but the matter was delayed upon the recommendation of a board committee.

The proposal continues to draw opposition from industry representatives, and there are indications the board may delay the matter again after the Nov. 5 session.

The Savings and Loan Section of the State Finance Commission met to review its rule regarding the sale of branch offices, with a view towards possible changes, but decided the present rule is adequate and complies with statutory requirements.

The section also adopted an emergency rule regarding relocations of home offices, due to an appeals court decision in reversing the move of Bexar County Savings Association, San Antonio's home office.

Commissioner Vandygriff notes that there has been an increase recently in sales of branch offices by associations.

The associations have been selling a number of branches "pretty far away from the home office," he says, and "are pulling in operations closer to their home base, which gives others an opportunity to expand."

Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority is in the process of seeking proposals for estimating types and volumes of low-level radioactive wastes to be disposed of in Texas.

TLLRWDA notes that "numerous studies" are available which "to one degree or another" make such estimates, with ranges from 20,000 to nearly 80,000 cubic feet per year.

"The most reliable estimate is generally agreed to come from the Texas Department of Health, which places the amount at about 44,000 cubic feet per year," TLLRWDA says.

The authority is seeking proposals on estimates of wastes for the 1980-2010 period, in order to determine what the required size should be for a disposal facility (which it estimates at 250-400 acres.).

The request also assumes that only Texas-generated wastes will be buried in such a size, but the authority also wants, estimates on waste volume which would be generated in Arkansas, Arizona, Kansas, Louisiana, New Mexico and Oklahoma.

In a somewhat related matter, Commissioner of Health Dr. Robert Bernstein has asked Attorney General Mark White to rule on whether State law prohibits a commercial low-level waste processing facility in Texas from accepting wastes produced out-of-state for processing, but not disposal.

If the law does make such a prohibition, Bernstein asks, is that ban "violative of the Commerce and Supreme Clauses of the U.S. Constitution?"

Both the Texas Department of Water Resources and Texas Department of Health are looking at changes in requirements relating to land use in selection of hazardous waste disposal sites.

TDH expects to present some proposed revisions to the State Board of Health in November, with the changes to be published as proposed regulations.

TDWR also expects to have some new guidelines ready for consideration by the Water Development Board this fall.

The issue also is under review by an interim committee chaired by Rep. Jim Turner, D-Crockett, who has said he expects the panel will recommend changes to increase citizen participation in site selection, but isn't likely to recommend an independent siting agency.

The committee is to make its recommendations to the 1983 Legislature, which convenes in January.

'God-father' says professionals may dislike recent tax law

By PAMELA MORELAND
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

H. Bradley Jones, the Beverly Hills, Calif., attorney some call the "Godfather of professional corporations," believes mannentertainers and small businessmen will find "something to dislike" in the recent tax increase measure.

Jones and many others believe that provisions in the $98.3 billion taxnente tainers and small businessmen will find "something to dislike" in the recent tax increase measure.

Jones and many others believe that provisions in the $98.3 billion tax hike legislation will turn out to be a devastating blow to private pension and health plans. They say that without incentives to set up private pension plans, professionals who are already incorporated will dissolve their corporations thereby stranding their employees, who under federal regulations, must also have pension and health plans provided for them.

With the incentive for setting up professional corporations for the most part gone, many detractors of the new legislation say that there will be fewer professional corporations established in the future. This, they add, will mean fewer private benefit plans for the nurses, sales clerks and other nonprofessional employees of these corporations.

"This law could have a chilling effect on what may happen in the future," says David Franasiak, manager of tax policy for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, one of the groups that opposed the tax hike. "At a time when there is so much doubt about the future of some of our public pension systems, to put private pension systems in jeopardy is a shame."

Adds attorney Jones: "This legislation was overkill. This blunting of the professional service corporation by making it less attractive will entice many professionals to invest in all sorts of tax shelters and other investment schemes instead of investing wisely and setting up pension plans."

The passage of the recent tax legislation is only one battle in the war between professionals who wanted to incorporate and the Internal Revenue Service, which at one time took the stand that these professional corporations were purely schemes to avoid paying taxes.

The first into the professional incorporation fray were stars from Hollywood's golden age. Charles Laughton in the late 1930s took the IRS to court — and won — for legal recognition of his professional corporation.

For almost 20 years after that, the tug-of-war between the IRS and incorporating professionals went on. During the height of the fight, Jones wrote an article for the Autumn 1958 Fordham Law Rview that later became the rallying call for the incorporation movement.

Jones and a number of nationally prominent tax lawyers got together to share their knowledge of courtroom tactics in the professional incorporation battle. Between 1958 and 1969, "The Group," as the attorneys called themselves, won 14 Circuit Court of Appeal cases that upheld the right of professionals to incorporate.

In 1969, the IRS threw in the towel, issuing a memo approving professional corporations and setting up tax guidelines for them to follow. By the mid-1970s, all 50 states had passed enabling legislation allowing professionals to incorporate and the "Inc." boom started.

A 1981 Medical Economics magazine survey showed that 64 percent of the nation's physicians have incorporated.

Prominent individuals who have incorporated include tennis stars Billy Jean King, Jimmy Connors and Vitas Gerulaitas; well known entertainers; and many players in the National Basketball Association and on professional hockey teams. Professional football and baseball players have not rushed to incorporate because their pension plans are negotiated by unions representing them.

Under an amended Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) plan, professionals who incorporate — until the recent tax law changes — enjoyed many benefits that unincorporated professionals did not.

For example, professionals who incorporated were allowed annual tax deductible contributions to their pension plans large enough to yield post-retirement benefits of $75,000 a year. And because the orignal $75,000 figure was tied to the Consumer Price Index, incorporated professionals could sock away enough money each year to have annual retirement benefits of $136,425 a year.

An unincorporated, self-employed professional, using the same ERISA standards, could only contribute $15,000, or 15 percent of their income, whichever was less, to a Keogh retirement account each year.

Professional corporations were also allowed to set up defined contribution or profit sharing plans with an annual ERISA-set limit of $25,000, or 25 percent of the professional's income, whichever was less. This limit was also linked to the Consumer Price Index and the adjusted limit had grown to $45,475 before the new law was enacted. Unincorporated professionals did not have such options.

ERISA also required incorporated professionals to provide pension and health plans for their employees.

Moreover, incorporated professionals could not make a contribution proportionately more generous for themselves than to their employees' plans.

Under the new tax act, the differences between incorporated and unincorporated professionals have virtually been eliminated.

Now both unincorporated and incorporated professionals will be able to set aside a maximum of $90,000 for retirement benefits. This ceiling is no longer attached to any kind of cost-of-living adjustment.

Those professionals who were involved with corporate defined plans will now have a lifetime limit of $30,000. This ceiling is no longer linked to any cost-of-living adjustment.

The new tax law also puts new definitions and restrictions on what are called "top heavy" companies. These companies are more than likely family-run busineses such as grocery stores, machine shops and small garment manufacturers.

Under the new law, these closely held firms, where 60 percent of the benefits or the account balances go to key employees (that is the owners of the business family members or stockholders with more than a 5 percent stake in the firm), must now speed up the benefit payment schedules for employees. This, according to worried professionals, will increase their costs.

"Most of the top-heavy companies will have to reduce the retirement benefits for the key employees in order to meet the increased costs for benefits for non-key employees," said Russel Lippman, tax partner for the Los Angeles office of Arthur Andersen & Co. "This could mean the demise of many closely held businesses. Only time will tell."

There are other parts of the wide-ranging tax law that worry professionals. One section Jones calls "ominous" increases the power the IRS has to take professional corporations to court.

"Under the new law the IRS has the power to disregard the professional corporation (and sue it for unpaid back taxes) if it can prove the principal purpose for setting up the corporation was only to take advantage of tax breaks and not for retirement reasons," he said.

Another part of the new tax package affects the ability of professionals to borrow money from the corporation's pension fund. Before the new tax act was signed into law, there were no limits on how much a professional could borrow from the fund. Now there is a $50,000 limit, and if the money is used for the purchase of a home it must be the "principal" residence of the professional. This part of the legislation is retroactive to this past August.

"One of the great inducements for incorporating was the ability to create your own private bank from which you could borrow at the prevailing interest rates," Jones said. "It seems immoral that the beneficiaries of this new law will be the banks and savings and loans at a time when public trust in these institutions has deteriorated."

Jones is somewhat philosophiacl about how the new tax legislation will change professional corporations.

On one hand he is glad that parity between professionals who do incorporate and those who don't incorporate has been established. Jones said his only purpose in advocating incorporation for professionals was to allow those self-employed persons the same benefits they could enjoy if they had worked for some large institution.

On the other hand, Jones fears that some of the positive aspects of professional corporations such as establishment of private benefit plans for employees of sole practitioners and small business — will be wiped away since it may now be monetarily beneficial for these professionals to think only of themselves and not of their employees.

PDC report ready

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. — Improvements in polycrystalline diamond compact bits used in hard formations will increase efficiency, says a new DOE report.

"Improvement of Drilling capabilities of PDC Cutters in hard Formation" (DOE/BC/10364-24) was prepared by DOWDCO of Midland, Tex., as the result of a DOE contract. For free copies: Bartlesville Energy Technology Center, Attention: Bill Linville, P. O. Box 1398, Bartlesville, OK 74005.

Oil price up

Pride Refining Inc. and Pride Pipeline Company of Abilene announced Wednesday, that as of Oct. 1, 1982, their posted price for crude oil was increased by one dollar per barrel for all types of crude.

This represents the first price policy change, up or down, since March 19, 1982, according to Bill Schumacher, Pride crude oil representative.

The Permian Corporation announced last week that it has increased the price it will pay for all West Texas and New Mexico crude oil by one dollar per barrel, effective retroactively to Oct. 1, 1982.

Business leaders predicting slow recovery

HOT SPRINGS, Va. (AP) — Leaders of the nation's largest corporations predicted last week progress in lowering unemployment will be painfully slow in the future, with the jobless rate likely to cling near 9 percent even by the end of 1983.

An economic forecast prepared for the Business Council, composed of heads of 200 major companies, also predicted that a slow recovery from the recession would be getting underway before the end of this year.

However, many of the corporate chieftains gathered at the elegant Homestead resort here, said they personally were less optimistic about propects for recovery, adding they do not see signs of an upturn.

"I feel very uncomfortable about an economic situation that is out of control," said W. Michael Blumenthal, who was Treasury Secretary under former President Carter and is now chairman of the Burroughs Corp. "I keep hearing about an economic upturn but I don't see it. I as yet do not see any evidence other than expressions of hope."

The corporate chairmen convened here for their semi-annual two-day meeting at the same time the Labor Department announced that unemployment in September rose to 10.1 percent, the highest level since 1940.

The unemployment rate in August was 9.8 percent. The new figures translate into 11.3 million people out of work but actively seeking jobs last month.

The new figures, according to the Business Council's economic forecast, probably would represent a peak and the jobless rate should start to decline in later months but at a very slow rate.

"The combined impact of the 1980 and 1981-82 recessions has pushed joblessness to a post-war high," the business council said in its economic forecast, prepared by 20 corporate economists.

"Therefore, the consultants believe, that — even with the improvement expected next year — the unemployment rate will be in the 8.5 to 9 percent range at the end of 1983."

The economic forecast also predicted that a recovery would begin in the fourth quater of this year, that interest rates would continue declining and that consumer spending would soon pick up to spark the upturn.

In a meeting with reporters Thursday, several of the businessmen noted that a number of industries remain very depressed — mainly housing, autos, steel, mining and other heavy industries — while other industries continued to perform very strongly — such as financial services, high-technology industries, telecommunications and data processing.

"You have the anomaly in this country where you really have two Americas," said Walter B. Wriston, chairman of Citicorp and chairman of the Business Council. "There's the part that's doing fairly well ... and you have sections of the country — autos, steel, homebuilding, timber — where you have very serious problems."

Wriston and Rubin F. Mettler, chairman of TRW Inc., said their companies are hiring new people, but a number of other executives said their firms are continuing to lay off workers and reduce capital spending.

Edmund W. Littlefield, chairman of Utah International Inc., an international mining company, said: "For the first time in 30 years, all of the markets that we serve are really soft at the same time ... whether Japan, Europe or the United States."

And, Donald V. Seibert, chairman of J.C. Penney Co., said his giant retail chain is still waiting for consumers to start spending again. "The consumer has a big bag of money and is waiting for some magic signal to release some of that," he said, contending that people have been saving money rather than spending it because of fears about the drift of the economy.

The group's economic forecast also predicted that short-term interest rates by mid-1983 would fall somewhere in a range between 9 percent and 14.5 percent and long-term bond rates would be down to somewhere between 10.5 percent and 15 percent.

Asked to explain the stock market boom, Wriston said that investors were now convinced that interest rates can come down despite high federal budget deficits. As a result, he said, "people began to believe there were bargains out there and began to buy."

July results up slightly

This compares with reported June production totaling 71,358,946 barrels and July 1981 production of 75,475,024.

Texas oil production averaged 2,366,858 barrels daily in July, down from 2,378,632 barrels daily in June and down from 2,434,678 barrels daily in July 1981.

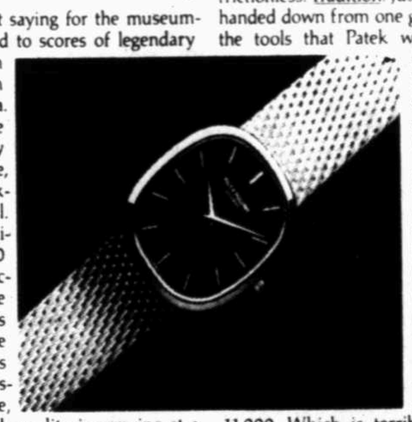
WHY THE VALUE OF A GOLD PATEK PHILIPPE GOES UP

There are, throughout the world, thousands of Patek Philippe timepieces still ticking silently (and accurately) in tribute to the hands that made them over a century ago.

Occasionally one is offered at auction by one of the world's distinguished salons. Like any other work of art by the acknowledged master, a Patek Philippe appreciates in value.

This would go without saying for the museum-worthy Pateks that belonged to scores of legendary 19th century figures-from Tolstoy to Tchaikovsky, from Wagner to Queen Victoria. Any antique Patek Philippe is a collector's item, simply because it is a Patek Philippe, a unique example of workmanship at its highest level.



But what of a Patek Philippe that was bought 10 years ago? Can it be a collector's item today? The price one paid for it reflected its value as the finest available timepiece of its kind-and as a work of art that was destined to increase in value, because the scarcity of such quality is growing at a disheartening rate.

Everything about a gold Patek Philippe that can be gold is gold-18 kt gold-right down to the winding crown, the strap buckle, even the spring bars that hold the strap to the watch. In automatic Pateks, for greater technical efficiency, the rotor is 18 kt gold (22 kt in one model). But gold has never represented more than 25% of the cost of a Patek Philippe watch. The real cost is in the time and patience and tradition and absolute dedication to flawlessness that make it a Patek Philippe.

Time: It takes eight to nine months to complete a single Patek. And once the watch is finally assembled and working perfectly, it is taken apart again to be further refined. Patience. Every element is microscopically hand-finished to a tolerance of no more than one one-hundredth of a millimeter. Every wheel, gear, pinion and cog is polished by hand until it is virtually frictionless. Tradition: Just as most Patek Philippes are handed down from one generation to the next, so are the tools that Patek watchmakers use to perfect them-heirlooms that have become as precious as they are indispensable. Flawlessness: After testing and regulating and refining to as near absolute perfection as human hands and minds can achieve, each Patek is lubricated-so delicately that it takes less than a cupful of oil for an entire year's production. A fact you may appreciate most in the silkiness you feel as you wind a Patek.

This year's production at Patek Philippe will reach a grand total of approximately 11,000. Which is terribly few compared with the numbers of appreciative people with the means to own one.

But not so few when you consider that most of them will be ticking silently (and accurately) a century from now. And when you take into account that Patek Philippe has been at this, undeviatingly, since 1839.

EVEN WHEN THE PRICE OF GOLD GOES DOWN.

Crook to tell bankers how to cheat

On Monday, October 18, 1982, The Midland Chapter of the American Institute of Banking Inc. is presenting a seminar on "Fraud" featuring Frank Abagnale. Abagnale knows customer fraud firsthand, as he is one of the world's leading former con artists. During a five-year crime spree he became a millionaire — and did so by stealing every dollar.

Abagnale has appeared on major television shows, including the Tonight Show, and is a popular speaker at more than 200 seminars throughout the United States each year.

The purpose of this presentation is not to glorify or condone the con artist, but to help all people who deal with the public to understand the mentality of, and methods used by rip-off artists to cheat businesses.

With the Christmas season approaching, now is the ideal time to safeguard your business against theft, fraudulent checks, counterfeiting, and credit card losses.

The program is scheduled at 7:30 — 9:30 p.m., on Monday, October 18, 1982 at the Midland Community Theatre, 2,000 W. Wadley.

The cost is $15.00 per person. Reservations may be made by contacting Lea Hunt at 683-5281.

The Midland office of Cities Service held its annual Service Awards Dinner September 30 at the Midland Petroleum Club. Thirty-two employees were recognized and received gifts for five to 40 years of service with the company.

Irmalee Ingrham and Beverly Philbeck were recognized for 10 years' service.

Fernando Esqueda and Stanley Redwine received awards for 15 years of service.

The 30-year service award winners were Lou Bevacqua, Marvin Brewster, Ernest Cearley, Charlie Coffman, John Laney, August Roden, George Stephens, and Bill Whisenant. The wife of each honoree was presented with a dozen roses.

Recipients of awards for 35 years of employment with Cities Service were Wallace "Spud" Cox, Floyd Fields, and Jake Gideon.

Henry Thompson, who started with Cities Service in 1942, received an award for 40 years with the company. He is currently a vibrator operator.

Wives of the 35-year and 40 year honorees received a dozen roses.

Gladys Penn, executive vice president of the Midland Board of Realtors, was honored recently by 150 realtors and friends. She has been a board executive officer longer than any other person in Texas.

Among the celebrants were past Board officers and members and James T. Sawyer, Austin, Texas Association of Realtors executive vice president.

Penn has served two terms as chairman of TAR's Board executive officers committee and was a member of NAR's executive officers council, 1971-73.

Henry Carl Steckelberg of Midland, attorney, and Judge Barbara G. Culver of the 318th District Court in Midland, were elected Fellows and inducted into the Fellows of the Texas Bar Foundation recently.

Steckelberg received his law degree from The University of Chicago in 1955. He was admitted to membership in the Texas Bar in 1955.

Judge Culver received her law degree from Southern Methodist University Law School in 1951. She was admitted to membership in the Texas bar in 1951.

Active in bar affairs, Judge Culver is a member of Altrusa Club of Midland and National Association of Women Judges.

TMBR Drilling, Inc. of Midland (the newly-formed, wholly-owned subsidiary of Tom Brown, Inc.), has awarded to James F. Richey, Sr. a Rolex watch for rig safety. Richey, a Driller on TMBR Rig P3, has completed 1,092 days of work without a disabling injury to himself or any member of his crew.

Richey, a native of Gladewater, Texas, has been employed by the company since 1975. He is presently a driller for the Permian Basin District.

Joe D. Watson, Midland businessman, has been elected to the Board of Directors of Texas Retailers Association at The Annual Meeting held in Austin, September 23rd.

Watson and his wife, Gloria, own Margaret's Infant, Children and Maternity Shop in the Imperial Shopping Center. He is a lifelong resident of West Texas and a citizen of Midland for 28 years.

Texas Retailers membership is made up of representatives of more than 3,000 retail stores in Texas. The group has taken an active role as an advocate for retailers in issues confronting the State Legislature and regulatory agencies. It is affiliated with the American Retail Federation.

Mark W. Winn has been promoted to Manager, Financial Analysis of the Elcor Corp. In his new position, Winn will be responsible for management of the corporate financial analysis programs, including forecasting.

Prior to joining Elcor in August of 1981, Winn was employed by Texas Instruments in Dallas, Texas as a corporate financial analyst. He received both his B. A. and M.B.A. from Brigham Young University, graduating in 1975.

Loyd W. Browne has been appointed to The Ortloff Corporation's Corporate Marketing Group.

In his new position as Director of Market Development, he will be responsible for the assessment of future market needs and target market identification, coordination of new technology/services capabilities development, and target market business development. He will also serve as the Program Manager for the Corporation's enhanced oil recovery activities.

Browne has over 13 years of marketing experience related to natural gas processing, refineries and thermal power plants.

Harlow William Hollingshead, Jr., has been elected vice president of Exploration for the Tipperary Corporation. He will oversee the oil and gas exploration, development, and land activities of the Company.

Hollingshead received his Bachelor of Science degree from the University of Texas in 1957. He was employed 10 years with Marathon Oil Company as an exploration geologist and then with H. J. Gruy & Associates as a geologist. He came to Tipperary from NRM where he served as Vice President of Exploration.

Joseph E. Canon, formerly of Midland, and executive director of the Dodge Jones Foundation, has been named a director of First National Bank, Abilene.

He was executive vice president and senior trust officer of the bank when he resigned in July to take the Dodge Jones position.

Burke C. LeMay has been elected president of X-Pert Directional Drilling Services of Odessa by the Board of Directors. LeMay formerly was associated with Wilson Downhole Services as directional drilling supervisor and district manager. His work in the oilfield began in 1967 and has included jobs throughout the United States, Guatemala and Mexico.

Jerry Stump has been named field supervisor for the Odessa based X-Pert Directional Drilling Company.

Stump worked with Whipstock Inc. for several years before it merged with Eastman. He continued in their employment until he formed his own directional drilling service and contracted overseas for a number of years.

PBGC announces nine new courses

The Permian Basin Graduate Center announces nine courses to be held at the PBGC Building, 105 W. Illinois.

"Leadership Skills" held Tuesdays, Oct. 12 — Nov. 9, from 7-10 p.m. Bob Avary, Bob Avary & Associates, Management Consultants, will instruct the course. This workshop is for administrators, personnel directors, office managers, teachers, and others who need to improve communication skills and decision-making techniques. Fee is $250.

"Facies Models of Carbonate Rocks" will meet Tuesday, Oct. 12, from 1-5 p.m. Dr. Peter A. Scholle, Branch Chief, Oil and Gas Resources, U.S. Geological Survey, Denver, will instruct. This course describes basic models of carbonate deposition which have apparently been operative through much of geologic history and which are applicable to subsurface exploration problems. Fee is $80.

"Diagenesis, A Key to the Exploration for Oil and Gas in Carbonate Rocks" meets Wednesday, Oct. 13, from 8 a.m. to 12 noon. Dr. Peter Scholle will instruct. Fee is $80.

"Introduction to Oil Well Drilling & Completions" will meet Wednesdays, Oct. 13 — Nov. 17, from 7-10 p.m. It will be a team-taught course presented by industry experts and coordinated by Ralph H. Viney. The first session "Drilling and Leasing" will be taught by Tom Barr, Gra-Bar Petroleum and Bill Meyers, HNG Oil Company. Registration fee for the complete course is $160, $30 individual sessions.

The sixth session of Oil & Gas Fields in the Permian Basin "Carbonate Eastern Shelf" will meet Wednesday, Oct. 13, from 7-10 p.m. Gary Dawson, Independent Geologist and Al Reid, Consulting Geologist, will instruct. Registration closed.

The fifth session "Deals, farmouts, options, dry hole contributions" in Principles of Land & Leasing will be held Thursday, Oct. 14, from 7-10 p.m. Harry W. Hugly, Unit & Joint Operations Supervisor, Exxon Company, U.S.A. will instruct. Fee is $30.

"Basic Fundamentals of the Petroleum Industry" will meet Thursday and Friday, Oct. 14-15, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Dr. Raymond Bass, Jr., Petroleum Education Services, Inc., will instruct. Although this course is designed for non-technical support personnel, content is also of value to those in related technical fields. This seminar will give the participants a comprehensive overview of the many facets of the modern petroleum industry. Fee is $275.

"Legal Aspects of Petroleum Land Management" meets Thursday, Oct. 14, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Douglas G. McNabb, Attorney, Houston, will instruct. This course is designed for land secretaries, lease analysts as well as beginning landmen. Fee is $130.

"Well Control Refresher" meets Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 16-17, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Harris LaFleur, Associate of Prentice & Records Enterprises, Inc., Lafeyette, Louisiana, will instruct. This school is designed as a two-day review course for those students that have completed an approved Well Control School. Fee is $225.

All Minerals Corp. reports Pecos plant producing

PECOS — All Minerals Corporation of Utah announced that the first of three Raymond roller mills at its new Pecos, Texas, barite grinding plant went on stream August 31, 1982, producing sacked and bulk API-quality barite. The plant is situated south of Pecos on the Balmorhea highway, on the Pecos valley Southern Railroad.

This is the first barite grinding plant in the Delaware-Permian Basin of west Texas and Southeast New Mexico.

A 70-foot truck scale with an overhead bulk storage tank will facilitate loading and dispatch of trucks. The company is stocking its 33,000 square feet warehouse and bulk storage tanks and commenced delivery September first.

All Minerals has produced barite for the oil and gas industry for more than ten years. Its reputation for quality and service, backed up by some of the largest known U. S. barite reserves in its Nevada Deposits, has been solidly established throughout the American petroleum industry.

In addition to the new Pecos plant, All Minerals owns barite grinding plants at Rosamond, California; Salt Lake City, (Murray) Utah, and Clinton, Oklahoma, serving the Southern California, Rocky Mountain and Oklahoma - North Texas markets. It also has custom grinding and tradeout arrangements for barite supplies at Florin (South Sacramento) California; Amelia, Louisiana; Houston and Brownsville, Texas to serve Northern California and Gulf Coast customers.

All Minerals is a private independently-owned company, with a supplier-customer relationship with all independent and major retail mud companies. It is a strictly wholesale producer of barite and bentonite for these companies. It is a supplier of these basic commodities in all the active oil and gas areas of the United States, Canada and Mexico, with the ability to serve foreign off-shore areas as well.

All Minerals has acquired extensive sodium bentonite reserves in Wyoming, which they are presently mining and stockpiling for shipment to their regional grinding plants. These deposits are similar to those being mined by other large producers of Wyoming bentonite in the same areas. In addition to their long-standing API certification as a supplier of barite, it has been certified as supplier of API-quality bentonite for drilling mud. It has the services of one of the industry's leading bentonite experts who is directing the quality control program, to assure that the same reputation for bentonite quality will be established for All Minerals as the company enjoys in the barite industry. Extensive laboratory facilities and trained personnel will be available at each grinding and blending location.

All Minerals Corporation President is Stanford R. Mahoney of Murray, Utah. Directing the construction and preparation of the Pecos plant was Jay Erekson, of Salt Lake City. John Dobson supervised fabrication and erection.

Dan Speakman is the permanent Project Manager, and Wayne Brown is the Mill Superintendent. Joe Bradley is area sales representative. The plant will employ about 10 local people, including truck drivers, and expects to employ larger numbers as required.

"All Minerals requested that we thank all the local merchants, service and supply companies for their excellent cooperation in construction of the first phase of the plant," said Bradley.

The company plans an open-house in the near future.

Washington's mad too Eddie

WASHINGTON (AP) — Radio advertisements featuring Fort Worth oilman Eddie Chiles' verbal crusade against liberals, government spending and federal regulations have received an overwhelmingly negative response since hitting the air waves here, spokesmen at two radio stations say.

One station has added a disclaimer since the ads began a month ago and the other is considering doing the same.

"I was extremely upset and dismayed to find that a radio station with a high moral caliber would stoop so low to air such political trash as this," one listener wrote WPKX, a country-western station in Alexandria, Va.

Bob Cole, WPKX program director, said the station added a disclaimer at the end of the commercials to disassociate the station from Chiles' views.

Cole said there are two rules radio stations in the Washington area follow.

"One is you don't take sides in terms of the military," he said. "And the second is you don't talk about politics. It alienates too many people."

WASH-FM, a station owned by Metromedia Inc., also is considering adding a disclaimer because of complaints.

"There are apparently a lot of people who don't like them," said William Kunkel, station manager. "I think it's probably not only the political viewpoint of this particular person but the area of the country (Washington)."

In one ad, Chiles said he is "mad" about the "liberal news media" for attacking retired U.S. Army Gen. William Westmoreland, who has filed a $120 million libel suit against CBS.

In other ads, Chiles attacks liberal Democrats for opposing President Reagan's budget programs. He also claims the news media is guilty of covering national issues with a liberal bias.

Cole, who formerly worked in radio in Austin, said he had no problems with Chiles' ads in Texas. But the negative response to the ads in the Washington area has shown up in the station's weekly survey of radio listeners, he said.

Chiles' ads, which do not promote any particular political outcome, are scheduled to run through the Nov. 2 general election.

Guarding your freedom

Theme for this year's celebration of National Newspaper Week, which begins today and continues through Saturday, is "A Free Press — Your Key To Freedom." That's the kind of theme that makes newspaper people push out their chests and feel a bit prouder as they go about their often-boringly routine jobs.

But what does freedom of the press really mean to someone living in Midland, Texas, on Oct. 10, 1982? To answer that question for yourself, you need to consider what your life would be like if press freedom was not practiced here.

Under such circumstances, chances are newspapers would become primarily propaganda organs for either the government or other special-interest groups wishing to control the minds and bodies of the masses. In such an environment you likely would not have the opportunity to be aware of the actions of the city council, the county commission or the school board unless those bodies particularly wanted you to know of their actions. You would be spoon-fed bits and pieces of information, most probably after-the-fact, thus effectively eliminating the possibility of protest. You would be expected to function in a virtual news vacuum.

There are complaints from time to time that, for all practical purposes, news is censored now and some events are fully reported while others are totally overlooked. That assessment is incorrect, but contains an element of truth. To understand, you need to comprehend how newspapers work and realize that there are limitations to their operation.

Newspapers are not all-knowing institutions. They receive their information from a variety of sources and then must ascertain which news items are of the most interest to the general public. Due to limitations of space and the time factor involved, some items cannot be printed; they are "bumped" by items of more importance to the general public.

Of those items that reach print, what is printed are the facts and the interpretation of those facts that are known at that particular time. What is printed is the truth only as it is known at that time, subject to the limitations of libel laws. It can be said that the art of reading a newspaper is learning to "read between the lines."

You may not always agree with what information is contained in those articles printed, but you enjoy the right to disagree. At least you had the benefit of the information printed, even if you were displeased with what it told you.

Newspaper people are people just like you whether they work in the newsroom, composing room where type is pasted on the pages, pressroom where the paper is printed, advertising department where ads are sold and prepared, circulation department where the paper is routed to your home or one of several other departments. Newspaper people merely want to continue to provide you with the news you need for making your daily decision.

But, in the end, freedom of the press is your responsibility because you are the true judge of what information is important to you. Guard that freedom jealously because once lost it might never be regained.

Shultz meets Gromyko

A State Department official was asked whether George P. Shultz and Andrei A. Gromyko had resolved any of their major differences after two marathon rounds of talks. The answer was quick and clear:

"No."

One reason our secretary of state and the Soviet Union's foreign minister found it difficult to agree on anything is that they represent governments that are poles apart in their treatment of human beings.

The U.S. is dedicated to human rights and the dignity of the individual. In the country of Mr. Gromyko the people are puppets of a Kremlin whose leaders are contemptuous of human rights, and to whom individual dignity is a foreign phrase.

A Soviet Union that sends its tanks and infantry into neighboring Afghanistan does not exactly have a lot in common with a United States that historically has opposed aggression. A government that denies the people of Poland even basic freedoms is quite the opposite of a government that is traditionally of, by and for the people.

If these meetings lead to further meetings, that will be one small step in the right direction. But until the Soviets abandon their disdain for human rights, the resolving of major issues will be difficult.

Another View:

Is this tank a turkey?

The Army's new main battle tank, the M-1 Abrams, is the finest thing since bottled beer, the Pentagon contends. The Abrams may not be a turkey, critics retort, but it does gobble from time to time.

One area of agreement is that the Abrams is fiendishly expensive — $2.8 million a copy now. The Army plans to buy 7,058 of them. That totals in the high-rent neighborhood of $20 billion.

As disagreements continue over the performance of the tank, the first 585 of which have been delivered to the Army, we think it is urgent that an exhaustive congressional inquiry be made into the armored behemoth. There have been dozens of studies in the past decade as the M-1 was being developed, but criticism of the tank has not been adequately rebutted. Though reports from the NATO exercises now going on give the tank high marks, there is suspicion that the Army may be fudging some pertinent figures.

The latest criticism comes from a private group, the Project on Military Procurement. It released two internal Army reports that suggest, among other things, that the Abrams is not nearly as reliable as its champions maintain. The Army replies that the discrepancies are largely a matter of interpreting test results.

The Army might be right. However, there is so much money and so much tactical importance riding on the tank that it would be a travesty of congressional oversight if these allegations are not thoroughly plumbed.

For example, the Army claims that the 60-ton tank meets a goal of 101 miles of operation between mechanical failures. The Project on Military Procurement's analysis of the Army documents finds that the Abrams travels an average of less than 45 miles before something snaps, cracks or pops.

The M-1 is a fearsome weapon, fast and powerful, but it also has less range, consuming more fuel, than the current M-60 and — according to critics — has a dismally low "operational availability." That is, it's in the shop 44 percent of the time.

Any major weapon system represents an immensely complex meshing of design, development, testing and deployment — especially in the high-tech environment of modern warfare. Invariably there are glitches.

But let's find out about the Abrams — now. Are the deficiencies of a low enough order that they can be remedied as the assembly line runs? Or are there flaws so intrinsic that delivery to the troops should be slowed or even halted? Before the United States ventures further down this $20 billion patch, it is imperative that a close, careful and conclusive study be conducted.

ART BUCHWALD

'Filling' TV time won't test Howard!

A bunch of the sports executives at Zenith Network were sitting around the conference table trying to come up with some programming to replace the NFL football games. It was the eighth week of the strike and they had tried everything from la crosse to ladies' mud wrestling, but for some reason they just couldn't attract the audiences to warrant the $250,000 a minute they were charging for the time.

Art Buchwald

"I think I've got it," said Dexter. "The Girl's Latin School of Boston is playing Our Lady of Victory's field hockey team on Sunday. It's a grudge match that goes back 50 years. With proper promos I think we could get people to tune in."

"Who knows anything about women's field hockey?"

"I'll bet you Howard does. Let's call him in."

Five minutes later — "Howard, we're thinking of putting on the Girl's Latin-Our Lady of Victory field hockey match this Sunday, to keep the crowd that likes pro football. Could you handle the color?"

Howard smirked. "That is a silly question. Girl's Latin of Boston has a lifetime record of 345 wins against 165 losses. Under the famed, but very underrated Mary McGrory, they had four undefeated years, a record that has never been surpassed in the New England Regional Conference. Regrettably, and I must be candid about it, the team has not been living up to the high expectations we all had for it at the beginning of the year.

"Nikki Harris, probably one of the most astute and skilled field hockey coaches since Carry "The Stick" Renfrew, who led Katherine Gibbs to a 10 and 0 record in 1924, told me that the locker room problems earlier this year between Roz Rogers and Hilda Marton had been sorted out, and she believed the team was up for an Our Lady of Victory defeat.

"Which brings me to a story about Francie Barnard. Francie, as you know, had been offered a scholarship to Georgetown Visitation, and Dumbarton Oaks. Her mother had played for Visitation in 1956 and made All-American. But Francie had developed a knee injury on a skateboard and doctors had told her she would never play field hockey again. She went to an orthopedic specialist named Alice McKelvie who put in an artificial knee. Alice McKelvie was a friend of Nikki Harris and told her Francie could play. Nikki arranged for a full scholarship for Francie and that is why Francie is now playing for Girls Latin instead of Georgetown Visitation.

"Our Lady of Victory had its greatest years under Sister Mary Therese Bottecelli, between 1941 and '53. Sister Mary used to smash a player's wrist with a hockey stick every time the player hit the ball over crossbars. In 1965 Victory's Mother Superior, Dorothy Tuberty, decided to de-emphasize field hockey after Eunice Shriver bought her daughter Maria a Mustang convertible for scoring three goals against Madeira.

"Fortunately the alumni rebelled, as field hockey was the only reason most parents sent their daughters to Our Lady of Victory, and now they are back in the big time. If I may interject a personal note, I remember the afternoon on October 6, 1971, when Mary Healy in the classic contest with Potomac Normal..."

"That's enough, Howard, you've convinced us."

"Well, are you going to go with the Girls Latin game next week or not?" Howard asked.

"Either that or a horseshoe pitching match between the Flatbush Odd Fellows Home and the Sun City Bulldogs."

"I'll never forget watching the Flatbush Odd Fellows defeat the Calgary Nursing Home in an overtime, in that memorable series in Anchorage, Alaska, on Jan. 4, 1947. Flatbush had a one-armed thrower named Skippy Danzinger and Skippy had left his favorite horseshoe on the train. So he saw this Canadian Mounted Policeman and he..."

"Okay, Howard, we'll get back to you as soon as we make our decision."

"I'm sorry, gentlemen, but I have to tell it the way it is."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Marines could stay in Lebanon a year

WASHINGTON — U.S. Marines may be in Lebanon for a lot longer than the American public has been led to believe. Their stay could stretch to a year, maybe as long as two years. Here's why:

Jack Anderson

After the disaster that followed the first, brief tour of the international peacekeeping force, President Reagan promised that the Marines would remain on the scene until the Lebanese army was able to maintain control. And there's the rub.

Top-secret intelligence reports have warned the president that the Lebanese army is in far worse shape than anyone had imagined. Years of buffeting by the Palestine Liberation Organization and the various warring militia groups have reduced it to a shambles. It will have to be reconstituted from top to bottom.

The question is: Who will whip the Lebanese army into shape? The late president-elect of Lebanon, Bashir Gemayel, was privately counting on the Israelis to do it. His brother, Lebanese President Amin Gemayel, is counting on a serious and continuing commitment from the United States.

But this may be more than Reagan can deliver. He is already being challenged by powerful members of Congress in his contention that the Marines are not involved in hostilities — a condition that would allow them to remain almost indefinitely. If the president does have to concede that the Marines are indeed "involved in hostilities" — and a few snipers could accomplish this — the Marines cannot stay more than 60 days without explicit congressional approval under the War Powers Act. And getting that permission won't be easy.

Even letting the Marines stay on in their present, neutral status is dangerous. Sooner or later during an extended peacekeeping mission, Marines are going to be shot at by one faction or another. This will bring pressure on Reagan to pull them out.

Expanding the Marines' role to that of training the shattered Lebanese army would be even more risky politically. The very term "military advisers" raises the specter of Vietnam to many Americans — as witness the furor over U.S. advisers in El Salvador, a situation much less explosive than that in Lebanon.

Yet it is clear that someone has to do the job. If the United States won't, the Soviet Union would be delighted to step into the vacuum. This would be a strategic disaster for U.S. policy.

So Reagan finds himself in an intolerable position. He can't let Lebanon slide back into chaos and by default become a Soviet satellite. But he will have the devil's own time convincing Congress and the American people that a deeper commitment to Lebanon, such as training the Lebanese army, won't eventually turn into another Vietnam nightmare.

If the American president is in a tough situation, it's nothing compared to the Lebanese president's predicament. He can't hope to reunite his fractious countrymen without a dependable army under his control. In fact, as his brother's assassination demonstrated, he may well pay for failure with his life. Yet the Lebanese army can't magically reconstitute itself.

And there is widespread feeling in U.S. military and intelligence circles that Amin Gemayel is not half the man his slain younger brother was. The administration made no secret of the fact that it had pinned its hopes on Bashir to bring order out of the Lebanese chaos. With his death, the United States transferred these hopes to Amin, but he is considered a poor second-best.

Little is known about Amin Gemayel in Washington, but he is regarded as a private, low-key person — not like his ruthless, flamboyant brother. While Bashir was following the warrior's road to political power, Amin concentrated on building the family fortune.

Close friends of the Gemayel family describe Amin as something of a snob who has spent his entire life mingling with the Lebanese upper class. He is accustomed to chauffeur-driven limousines and other accoutrements of the good life. By contrast, Bashir was regarded as a "man of the people," whose friends were mostly among the middle and lower classes.

As the elder son, Amin has always been close to his father, Pierre — a "papa's boy," one source called him. But this may be one of his strongest points; the old man is politically astute and well-connected. Already, Amin has turned to his father for help, consolidating his own shaky political position by putting old family friends in key jobs.

Despite his reputation as a weaker personality than his brother — or because of it — Amin Gemayel is reportedly determined to "emerge from his brother's shadow," as one intelligence source put it.

Politically, Amin is also significantly different from his late brother, according to intelligence reports. For example, he is believed to have personal contacts in the PLO, including a top official named Abu Iyad. Bashir would have nothing to do with the PLO.

Sources told my associate Lucette Lagnado that Amin is also contemplating some accommodation with the Syrians, whom Bashir hated and who returned the favor. There is evidence that the Syrians recognize that, if Amin is not exactly a friend, he is not the implacable enemy his brother was.

Intelligence sources further believe that Amin does not share Bashir's close affinity with the Israelis. This, of course, does Amin no harm as he undertakes the formidable task of trying to reunite his countrymen.

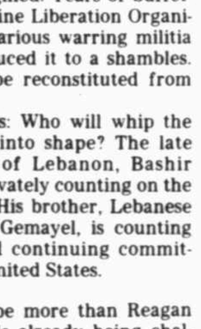
GEORGE F. WILL

Reagan's budget needs help from Caesar

WASHINGTON — Julius Caesar was, I grant, a bit bossy. Not at all the sort approved by the League of Women Voters, he had a Caesar complex, and when he was not hounding Vercingetorix, he was trying to solder together Gaul's three parts. But Ronald Reagan's budgetary problems would vanish if he would do what Caesar did. That, however, would first require undoing what Pope Gregory XIII did exactly (if one can say "exactly" of anything connected with the calendar) 400 years ago.



George F. Will

The day after Oct. 5, 1582, was Oct. 15, 1582. Why? Because Gregory said so. He was a toughie (the Saint Bartholomew's Day massacre made him so merry he accepted the severed head of the Huguenot leader), so when he said Caesar's calendar must go, it went.

Before Caesar, Rome's calendar had a 355-day year, which meant that the months and seasons slipped out of synch. A Roman mother would say to little Flavius, "It's Ianuarius, so wear your mittens," and little Flavius would remonstrate, citing the unseasonable warmth of Ianuarius.

To slide things back where they belonged, Caesar packed extra days into 46 B.C. It wound up 445 days long — about as long as a U.S. election year seems. Then to keep the seasons from again swimming around in the calendar, Caesar decreed that the calendar year would be 365.25 days long.

But Caesar was a silly goose. Everyone with a wristwatch knows that the average year is only 365.242199 days long. Many's the New Year's Eve I have felt thankful that the year is 11 minutes and 14 seconds shorter than Caesar thought.

Under Caesar's calendar the seasons slipped 1.5 days every century, or about a week every millennium. Gregory XIII reasoned that, in time, this slippage would mean that religious festivals (Easter, the World Series) would crop up at odd moments. So Gregory said: Henceforth the calendar shall be for a year of 365.2422 days.

(That still is longer than the solar year by 0.0003 days, or 3 days every 10,000 years. If you have library books due in 11,982 A.D., make a note. But because of tidal friction, the Earth's rotation is slowing, so the length of the year is diminishing — good news for all who dislike the hurly-burly of modern life.)

To get Easter back from where it had wandered, to its proper relation to the vernal equinox, Gregory lopped 10 days out of October, 1582. This caused a frightful row, and some riots, in Protestant countries, where feeling ran high against allowing a Pope to shorten everyone's life by 10 days. England and its colonies did not adopt the Gregorian calendar until 1752. Russia did not conform until 1918, when Lenin made Feb. 1 become Feb. 13.

Lenin probably would have rejected a calendar so tainted with religious associations, but for the mess made by the French Revolution. France's revolutionaries (including those little old ladies who sat knitting at the foot of the guillotine) called 1792 the "first year of liberty.' They decided that there should be 12 months of 30 days each. The leftover five days would be used in September for five festivals: for genius, labor, actions, rewards, opinions (the Feast of St. Gallup?). Every fourth year there would be a sixth, the Festival of the Revolution. Fortunately, the French found their system inconvenient because the world found it unintelligible. The Gregorian calendar survived even in Gaul.

But now is the time for a little creative Caesarism. Ronald Reagan should do as Julius Caesar did, and stuff, say, three extra months into 1983 — before Sept. 30, when the fiscal year ends. One result would be something for which Americans clamor: a balanced budget. At least, it would be if Congress would appropriate for a 12-month Gregorian year, and Americans would work and earn — and pay taxes — for a 15-month Reagan year. This would generate an extra 25 percent in revenues, which would mean a balanced budget, a plunge in interest rates, and bliss ever after.

There are, of course, other ways of balancing the budget. Congress could cut the large (because benefiting primarily the middle class) benefit programs. Or Congress could raise taxes paid by the class that has the lion's share of American wealth: the middle class. Since neither of those alternatives is politically palatable, there is a continuing campaign to amend the Constitution to proscribe unbalanced deficits.

No need to rake up the dead past, you say? I say, rake away, all the way back to Caesar. It is better to fiddle with the calendar than with the U.S. Constitution. If we get the calendar out of whack, we may have the World Series in Ianuarius (sorry, I mean January), which is not good. But if we bollix up the Constitution, we can have chaos from one end of the year to the other.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On Oct. 10, 1911, revolutionaries under Sun Yat-Sen overthrew the Manchu dynasty in China.

On this date:

—In 1963, a dam collapsed near Belluno, Italy, with the resulting flood killing 1,800 people.

Supreme court justice's retirement has political implications

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Supreme Court Justice Joe Greenhill's decision to retire from the court, after 25 years (10 as chief justice), has been rumored around the Capitol for a while.

But lots of things are rumored — and it still came as a surprise when Greenhill announced he's leaving the court Oct. 20 to join the Houston law firm of Baker & Botts, which is opening an Austin office.

Greenhill, 68, said his decision was economic; his new salary will be "substantially higher" than the $71,900 he now makes.

But speculation quickly began on the political implications of Greenhill's decision.

That may have been somewhat irritating to Greenhill, who has voiced complaints over the years about the fact that Texas judges also must be politicians.

Greenhill himself has been one of the more successful judicial politicians, and has been active in seeking changes in the state's judicial system.

Greenhill helped in efforts to expand the courts of civil appeals to include criminal appeals as well — and lately has turned his attention to non-partisan election of judges, and judicial redistricting.

"My view," Greenhill said earlier this year, "is that we should come, ultimately, to a merit selection of judges, with the right of the people to remove them."

He doesn't favor, he said, life tenure for judges, as in the case with Federal judges, nor requiring judges to run for election as Republicans or Democrats.

Picking judges by party, Greenhill says, "is the wrong way to pick them. They should be picked on their qualifications, their ability and diligence..."

There's some irony in the fact that Greenhill's resignation at this point means it's too late to get a replacement for him on the general election ballot.

So Gov. Bill Clements will name a replacement for Greenhill, with that replacement serving until the next general election.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Democratic Party officials expressed disappointment with Greenhill's timing, saying the resignation at this point "effectively denies the people of Texas the opportunity to make their choice as to who should be the chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court."

Former Attorney General John Hill had talked about running to succeed Greenhill if Greenhill decided to retire at the end of his term in 1984.

But Hill, who ran unsuccessfully against Clements, admits it's unlikely that he'll be picked by the governor to replace Greenhill.

Another minor irony is that just minutes after Greenhill's announcement, the House Select Committee on Judicial Selection, chaired by Rep. Bob Bush, D-Sherman, was distributing its staff recommendations on a variety of changes it's suggesting in how Texas picks its judges.

Those recommendations (which are to be considered at a hearing in Austin Monday) include creation of a blue-ribbon commission to screen candidates for gubenatorial appointments and to issue public reports on the qualifications of all candidates seeking judicial office.

The proposals also call for election of all appellate court judges on non-partisan ballots, election of Supreme Court and Court of Criminal Appeals judges from single-member districts, and election of district court judges in Harris, Dallas, Tarrant and Bexar counties on non-partisan ballots on a local-option basis.

And the recommendations call for extending the terms of trial judges to six years, and extending the terms of appellate judges to eight years.

The single-member district plan for the highest appellate courts has been adopted in eight states (including Oklahoma and Louisiana), and the staff report argues the idea is "particularly adaptable to Texas because of our size and diversity."

"Although concerns of regionalism would be real under this system, it is recommended because of the numerous benefits that it offers," the report comments, adding, "The most compelling reason for adoption is the resultant decrease in funds needed to finance a campaign."

In 1980, the four Supreme Court candidates raised $1.8 million, and a like amount is expected to be raised this year.

"We have to run," Greenhill has noted, "just like the governor but without the money" for statewide campaign.

Proponents of changing the system have argued that voters too often have no notion of the qualifications of the judicial candidates they're voting for — and end up voting for a familiar, or catchy name.

Lawmakers, however, have been reluctant in the past to change the system, noting it has, overall, worked well — and "if it ain't broke, don't fix it."

United Way shows city's enduring strengths

By HARRELL FELDT

Harrell Feldt, president-elect of the United Way of Midland for 1981-82, is an attorney by profession, having received his law degree from the University of Texas School of Law in 1963. He is president of the Midland County Bar Association for 1982-83.

Most people I talk to seem to agree 1981 was a landmark year for Midland and that there will never be another like it. Profits were easy to come by, jobs were plentiful — whatever success we as a city sought seemed to be waiting for us to claim it.

Now that 1982 is nearing its end, I see it emerging as a landmark of a different kind. Profits may not match 1981's, jobs seekers are more plentiful than jobs, and overall we have had to work harder for our goals this year. But in applying ourselves to that task, we are being reminded of one of Midland's enduring strengths. We are seeing that Midland does not dry up and blow away when the rig count drops — that Midland is not a haphazard collection of profit-seekers passing through town, but a community of citizens who understand the benefits of working together for common goals.

Two recent events underscore this sense of community. On Sept. 24, we were jolted by the airplane crash at the Warwick Apartments, a disaster potentially much more destructive than the destroyed apartment building and five burn victims that resulted.

And on Sept. 22, the United Way of Midland's annual fund-raising campaign was kicked off by a record-breaking crowd of almost 500 supporters. In both instances, diverse elements of our community worked together in a smoothly coordinated effort to assist those in need of help.

Immediately after the plane crash, the Red Cross — a United Way agency — implemented its disaster response plan. From 3:15 p.m. until after midnight on the day of the crash, Red Cross volunteers served more than 500 emergency workers and victims. And when the Red Cross left, The Salvation Army — also a United Way agency — took over the task of providing food and beverages to those remaining at the scene.

Besides these voluntary groups, Midland's police and fire departments and other governmental bodies such as the Department of Public Safety and the sheriff's department worked together as if they had carefully rehearsed their roles in the relief operation.

Fortunately, Midland's emergency relief resources have not been tested so intensely before, but the performance we saw that weekend illustrates clearly the value of being prepared to respond in a coordinated manner to such emergencies.

As president-elect of the United Way of Midland, I was pleased to see two of our agencies go into action so effectively. In addition, I have been especially pleased to see the support these agencies and the United Way campaign as a whole have been receiving.

When the Red Cross put out its call to area businesses to help in providing food and other supplies to feed workers and victims, the response was overwhelming. The Hilton Hotel not only prepared coffee as it was asked to do, but had sandwiches ready as well when the Red Cross came to pick up the coffee. Albertson's grocery store, where burn victim Randy Sellars is employed, sent two employees to assist in serving sandwiches and drinks. McDonald's provided hamburgers, Tall City Ice Co. donated ice, and both Dr. Pepper and Coca-Cola Bottling Companies provided soft drinks.

Further evidence of Midland's commitment to support voluntary services already is surfacing in this year's United Way campaign results. Despite talk of the slowdown in the oil industry this year, 25 major oil companies with offices in Midland began their campaign early this year, and are expected to report significant increases this year. Figures tallied recently indicated that with more than half the campaigns complete, an average increase of approximately 30 percent is being maintained.

People who can work together to offer support on the level we have seen in the past few weeks are what will make 1982 a landmark year for Midland and 1983 a year to look forward to.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thanks and praise

To The Editor:

Praise the Lord for all the wonderful people of Midland. Gilbert Martinez passed from this life on Tuesday, Sept. 28. His love for Christ and the many people who shared in our pain and joy will be remembered in our prayers.

Everyone who knew Gilbert and his tremendous courage during his battle with cancer for eight years will remember his courage and total commitment to Christ.

We, his family, will also remember your love and generosity. We are specially grateful to Hospice of Midland and feel so very fortunate that Midland has such a tremendous group of loving people who care for those who are sick. To the people of Our Lady of Guadalupe, our parish, for all they have done for us and to Fr. Russell Nickerson, O.M.I., who really got to know Gilbert and shared so much love with him. To Jesse Guajardo and the wonderful people of The Reporter-Telegram, Ed Todd and many others who were so kind to Gilbert, also to the personnel of Midland Independent School District. God bless each one of you.

Amazing attitude

To The Editor:

I continue to be amazed at the attitude of the Midland City Council regarding the current Cuthbert Street controversy. The council, especially Tom Sloan and Jesse Hatfield, have a "public be damned" attitude that cannot be tolerated in an elected official.

In Hatfield's recent letter to The Reporter-Telegram, he claimed that he had not made any proposals, regarding Cuthbert Street traffic in order to benefit his business on that street. In Lana Cunningham's article in The Reporter-Telegram on Sept. 29, she said, "Hatfield contended during the meeting in City Hall Council Chambers that since the council had changed the Cuthbert segment to one-way going west he had lost a lot of business." Obviously one of them is telling a lie and I don't believe that it is Miss Cunningham.

Most of the issues have been covered very well by The Reporter-Telegram both in Miss Cunningham's articles and in an excellent editorial on the subject. I would like to add only two more comments that have not been previously mentioned.

When the issue of one-way streets was originally discussed by the council, I attended the meeting. At that time Missouri Street was under consideration as a possible one-way street. At that time Tom Sloan said that a one-way Missouri would destroy the integrity of the neighborhood. In one of Miss Cunningham's aritcles, he said, "It's 20 to 1 on the people who don't want Cuthbert one-way." Obviously, it's okay with Sloan if the integrity of the Cuthbert Street neighborhood is destroyed. When it was his own street in question he had quite a different attitude.

Finally, I want to say that it is because of the actions of politicians, at all levels, acting behind closed doors and against the wishes and best interest of the public that causes people not to vote. The attitude is "why vote — they will do as they please anyhow."

Our only defense against such actions is an alert, active free press and The Reporter-Telegram is to be congratulated on their excellent work in this regard.

French funding

To The Editor:

If you like to send your money to France, a country that sent arms to Argentina, pulled out of NATO, and is putting extreme pressure on the U.S. companies to supply the turbines for the USSR pipeline which undoubtedly would be a major factor for Russia to control Europe, then send your money to banks such as Chase, Citibank, Chemical Bank, Continental Illinois and Morgan Guarantee Trust.

An approximate $1.8 billion loan to France was underwritten by these American(?) banks. This action naturally takes money out of the U.S. and undoubtedly could be a contributing factor for increasing costs of borrowing money in the United States. Some of those "international money changers" also made very high-risk loans to Poland, Mexico and several Latin American countries. These loans were guaranteed by the U.S. government. How do you taxpayers like paying to guarantee their profits?

Keep your money in the United States, preferably in Texas and better in Midland.

O, beautiful

To The Editor:

This letter is in reply to approximately 85 percent of all the "Letters to the Editor." I have lived in Midland for eight years and of these eight years I have noticed that a majority of all the letters appearing on the editorial page are constantly criticizing or putting down the city of Midland, the state of Texas, and/or the entire United States.

We live in one of the best places in the whole world, yet it seems that a lot of people could care less. America is a free country and a very beautiful one, too. Democracy is a great form of government. It sure beats dictatorship, don't you agree? Every man and woman has a equal chance to do anything that he or she could ever dream of pursuing. You can't do that in a communist country!

You've got to take the good with the bad. I personally disagree about all the taxes the American public is obligated to pay but I agree very strongly with the fact that I, or anyone else, can live their own life, eat what they wish, pray how they want to, rise their children the way they see fit, come and go as you wish, speak when you want to, and a number of other things that people in other parts of the world have never and will never be able to do!

This is a great country, a great state, and a great city! We need to all work together and keep it this way. Unemployment is at a very high point right now. We can work this problem out together if we try. Work America and keep your pride flying high!

Bless the beasts

To The Editor:

First let me thank The Reporter-Telegram for covering our recent "dog fighting" situation in Midland County.

When you try to follow the proceedings following an arrest such as this, you find out how slow the legal wheels turn. We, as concerned individuals, will continue to follow this dog fighting story until some final decision is made.

Walking through Animal Control and actually seeing the dogs that were picked up the night of Aug. 29, when the sheriff's department arrested the eight persons and charged them with dog fighting, makes you realize what a vicious sport, if you can call it sport, that dog fighting really is! These poor animals are scarred all over their heads and bodies. Some of these animals will come up to you, others crouch back, fearful of what will happen next. They, the ones at animal control, must be kept in individual cages — their conduct is not predictable. These dogs at one time were sweet loving animals. Some vile person has changed them into vicious fighters.

Let us hope justice is done and someday Texas will make dog fighting a felony!

Knew it was there

To The Editor:

My family and I have lived in Midland since 1943. Prior to WW II, Sloan Field (now MAF) was the civilian airport for the area. During the war, it was taken over by the government, leaving what is now called Midland Air Park for the civilians, although the Army Air Force used it as a refueling base for new planes being delivered from the factories to Honolulu. We lived in a two-story house on North D in line with one of the runways. Occasionally, the Air Force ferry planes had to go around that house to avoid hitting it!

The "Air Park" at that time was way out in the boon-docks. You could get to it from the Patricia road which did not then go to Lamesa; however, it was usually easier to drive up a dirt road which was an extension of D.

Over the objections of Col. Banks, Hillander School was built on the north side of Wadley. He felt that this was too close to the airfield. Subsequent building brought the town closer and closer to the airport — not vice-versa!

Now the people in the area of the airport feel it is unsafe and that the airport should be moved. Why should my tax dollars be spent on the foolishness of those who all along knew that the airport was there and could be a hazard?

Was their motive only foolish or was it greed? Let them take their profits and move the airport if they wish but not expect the others of us to help them out.

Positive thinking

To The Editor:

Gail Burke's write-up of St. Ann's Family Fair was a refreshing contrast to a Georgia Temple review of a Community Theater production. The two writers must have vastly different outlooks on life.

Ms. Burke wrote: "The music of children's laughter could be heard through the screaming engines and clanging bells of the carnival rides..." And, "Young and old alike stood in long twisting lines to ride on the open swing seats (of the ferris wheel).... Atop, one could feel as though it was the top of the world."

Ms. Temple would have written those same two sentences as follows: "The obnoxious clatter of unsupervised children somehow managed to rise above the billowing dust and incessant racket of the carnival rides." And, "The interminable line for the ferris wheel grew ever longer as mannerless children butted in the front of the line. Once aboard, one could only regret the excessive price the ticket had cost."

Would it be possible for you to find someone to review our theatrical productions who can approach the job with the positive attitude of Gail Burke?

Letters Policy

Readers are invited to submit letters to be considered for publication. They may be on any subject, but should not be slanderous or defamatory. They must be signed by the writer and must include the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

No letter will be published anonymously and names will appear. Addresses and phone numbers are for verification only and will not be published.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved. They will be published as soon as possible after being received.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702 or brought to the newspaper's editorial department.

Go west, Cuthbert

To The Editor:

Regarding the changing of the one-way direction of Cuthbert Street from west to east, or returning it to two-way traffic, taxpayers might be interested in the following observations.

We have resided on Garfield since 1965. North-south traffic was minimal. The development of Gibson-Albertson shopping centers increased traffic at the Cuthbert-Garfield intersection. Commercial development at Wadley-Garfield and also the college area also increased the flow past Cuthbert-Garfield intersection. But when Garfield was paved up to the farm-to-market road, then the Indianapolis speedway began.

Truckers with their 18-wheelers discovered they could make it out-of-town easier from the Gibson-Albertson area by the Cuthbert-Garfield route than they could by the circuitous route of departing by Andrews Highway. The paving base on these two residential streets was not standing up and was deteriorating due to the heavy truck traffic resulting in more and more paving crews working to repair Garfield.

Several years ago by letter and phone, I contacted the city council members pointing out that prohibiting heavy trucks from Garfield would save tax money in excessive repairs. The chairman told me they were aware of the situation; there were no city ordinances at the time to prevent this heavy usage; and, a recommendation had been made for the city attorney to investigate a legal stand. No action was taken and the paving repairs continued.

When Cuthbert street was made a west-going one-way street, the 18-wheeler traffic fell off rapidly, because they couldn't follow that route to turn north on Garfield on their way out-of-town. The action of making Cuthbert a westerly one-way street is more effective than passing a new ordinance, which probably would be hard to enforce anyway. Consequently, the decrease of the 18-wheeler traffic has lessened the frequency of paving repair crews, and undoubtedly lessened excessive repair costs.

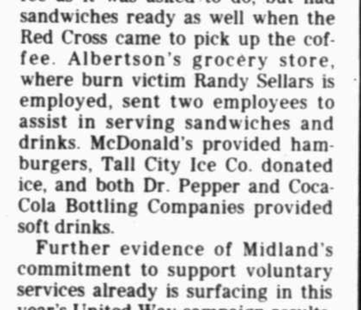
And, as a final comment, parents would be interested to know that on innumerable occasions, I observed the speed of these big vans as they pass through the San Jacinto and Hillander slow school zones. They churned right on through with little regard for the slow posted zones.

Now, if Cuthbert once again becomes a traffic lane to the east, Garfield, which is already a speedway, will become a heavy-truck expressway, with greater street maintenance costs to the taxpayer. Let's keep Cuthbert a westerly one-way street.

Mary Louise Meyer
Midland

P.S. — Having just read the Thursday afternoon, Sept. 30, Reporter-Telegram article on this subject, I would say the proposal to remove the traffic signal at this intersection is not the answer either.

Wall Street or weather: It will always change



While the uncertainty of the stockmarket may disturb the investor, he probably views the flux about the same way the farmer beholds the weather: It'll always change.

And with the change comes the fruit of the investor's sense of timing and how much to invest in any particular stock. But, there's a little bit of luck which influences this feast-to-famine or famine-to-feast venture. It's akin to the farmer's outlook on the weather, the soil and the marketplace. If he's half awake, he'll put his noggin to work and will put reason to all the variables and probabilities before he sinks his plough into the sod.

The fellow who invests on Wall Street or some other avenue should do the same. He should be aware of the marketplace's sine waves and reckon his moves, just as does the chess player who's playing against a sly fox. The investor often consults with his broker on which and how much stock to buy at any hour and when to sell. He can get out from under a burden or walk right into a hail storm and get his wallet stripped and his easy chair taken away if he's more of an all-or-nothing gambler than a sage investor.

Like the farmer who seeks omens, the stockmarket investor searches for world and national signs to guide his next play. He naturally wants a good deal from the dealer.

If the investor wins, he celebrates, collects his wealth, spends some and hoards some, and seeks out another deal. If the farmer makes a good crop, he pays off his creditors, gives thanks, and goes to work on next year's crop.

But if the timing is off and the investor goes broke in one area of his life, he somehow can renew the challenge and find — if he's got any cash — another investment to stimulate his interest and to entertain him. That's far better than giving up the ghost and plunging out the window in a flight to oblivion.

Due to the wiles of the weather and the marketplace, the optimistic farmer looks to "next year" for his windfall crop and ploughs ahead. Should he make it big one year, he might look to the stockmarket to place a bet. Then again, one big gamble ought to be enough. How many investors plunge headlong into farming?

Treasury secretary reassures Senate

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY SMITH
National Editor
The Hearst Corportation

WASHINGTON — While there is "widespread and well-founded concern" over the "serious" debt situation of the developing (poorer) countries, the world is not on the verge of a major financial crisis.

These assurances were given to a Senate committee this week by Deputy Treasury Secretary R.T. McNamar, who said a "nascent worldwide economic recovery," lower interest and inflation rates, and "adjustment" by third world governments of "mismanaged" economies "should" help mitigate the debt burden "over the next few years."

The Treasury official's reference to a "nascent worldwide economic recovery" reflected the Reagan administration's confidence that recovery has already begun, at least in this country, although few economists agree. As for recovery being "nascent" worldwide, the President of Brazil told the U.N. General Assembly Monday that the world was facing a depression of 1930's magnitude.

Testifying before the Senate International Economic Policy committee on the problem of third world debts to the west, now estimated to exceed $500 billion, the former Los Angeles business executive discounted the fears of some prominent analysts that the debt problem is creating a crisis that could lead to an international financial disaster.

"We do not regard the present situation as an actual or imminent crisis," Mr. McNamar said. "It is our judgement that the sky is not falling, nor is it likely to — despite pundits who say it is. It is important that we do not underestimate the nature of the problem, but we should also not be panicked into precipitous conclusions or actions."

Lord Harold Lever, former economic and financial adviser to British labor party Prime Ministers James Callaghan and Harold Wilson, said earlier this week that the enormous debt problem, coupled with a curtailment of Western loans to the poor countries and reluctance of bankers to keep postponing re-payment of old ones, was a "time bomb" of world economic and financial disaster whose fuse was "sputtering out." He urged quick joint action by the major western governments.

Robert's Copper Pot, at 3211 W. Wadley in Midland, is Midland's once-in-a-lifetime delicatessan. Come by Robert's and visit old friends or make new ones. Orders may be called in at 694-2422.

Special Dining for Special People

Every now and then, you will find something so special, so wonderful, that you consider it to be a once-in-a-lifetime find. Everything about it will seem to stand out from others similar to it. It will comfort you, soothe you, excite you, astound you, overwhelm you. It will be so enchanting that it will seem to cast an unbreakable spell over you. Now, if you have not yet found this place in your lifetime, you owe it to yourself to go to 3211 W. Wadley in Midland. Midland has found its once-in-a-lifetime delicatessan in Robert's Copper Pot.

According to Bob Conklin, his wife Bettye created Robert's Copper Pot with her own thoughts and ideas. Bettye, an interior designer and chef, created many of the delicious recipes used. Her background in cuisine comes from her French-Louisiana heritage and the years that she and Bob lived throughout the Caribbean Islands. Bob comes from a long line of short Sicilians and began his cooking at the age of 5 with, amazingly enough, an omelette. Last year, Bettye and Bob put out the first edition of their cookbook, and it met with tremendous success, selling out almost immediately. Now they are proud to announce that the second edition has been recently published and promises to be just as popular. The cookbook reflects Bettye's background in the Caribbean and Louisiana, plus almost every part of America. You can pick yours up at Robert's.

The menu at Robert's includes at least nineteen different types of sandwiches, varying from the all-American grilled cheese, ham or roast, to Bettye's own delicious creations; Turcado and Russian are just a couple. Some of the specialties at Robert's include muffeleto (a New Orleans specialty), shrimp or oyster Rockefeller, crepes, egg rolls, escargots, and Tom's brie. Vegetarians will love Robert's deep fried provolone cheese (with salad), famous fried cheese balls, stuufed tomato, pate, or stuffed avocado (also with salad). These are only a few of the specialties that make Robert's well known throughout the state. Robert's is mentioned in the Texas Monthly, Southwest Aorlines magazine, Towns West, and Petroplex.

But Robert's is not only synonomous with delicious specialty sandwiches, they have many other specialties as well. They serve only one steak; a delightful marinated top steak. Robert's has a different soup of the day every day. Some of these include conch chowder, beef mushroom, cheddar cheese, french onion, potato, shrimp gumbo, clam chowder, plus many other delicious homemade soups. Beef stew is served every day, and "hot as Hades" chili will become a daily feature when the weather turns cooler.

To complement your meal, Robert's offers the largest selection of imported beer in West Texas. They also offer cocktails, four types of house wine, and bottled wine. Desserts include four types of melt-in-your-mouth cheesecake or homemade bakalava.

Orders may be carried out or eaten in the cozy little restaurant. Inside, Bettye mastered a pleasant, relaxed atmosphere. You might see a couple of lions on the telephone booth, Superman's costume inside the phone booth just waiting for a chance to be used, a Rolls Royce or Mercedes poster directly overhead, a turquoise elephant, a 3-foot orange and white armadillo (sorry, Claytie), or even the big rattlesnake skin that Billy Butts caught, cured, and mounted. Numerous other items will amaze or amuse you as you glance around the walls and ceilings. The dual guitar group known as "Puzzle" provides a variety of folk music, pop, and vocals on Friday evenings to further enhance your dining pleasure.

Bob says,"Our customers are the 'Creme de la Creme,' the top, the best. We love them all. If you have ever visited Robert's Copper Pot, you know what he issaying, and you feel the same about them. If you have never been, you owe it to yourself to come down and see what you have been missing. They are open from 11:30 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, and 11:30 to 2:30 on Monday. They are closed on Sunday. Carry-out orders may be phoned in any time after abou 9:30 a.m. for pick up when they open. And as you are leaving, don't forget those JALAPENO lollypops and Texas care packs for special gifts. Gift certificates are also available.

Continental Covers Texas

Now that winter is beginning to get the stage ready for a spectacular appearance, one that authorities tend to believe will be the worst to hit Midland in years, you should be making preparations for the upcoming months in every way possible. There are many things that need to be done in order to be prepared, one of the most important of which is to make a complete and thorough check of your house and make sure that it is as thoroughly prepared as you are. When you inspect your house, do not forget to check your roof and see that it will withstand the long, snowy winter months ahead. If your roof leaks, now is the perfect time to have it repaired or re-roofed. And in the event that you are building a new home, you want to be sure that your roof is going to last and last. A roof needs to be something that you can depend on to keep you safe and warm. If you have a need for roofing of any sort, contact Larry Neverkovec at Continental Roofing.

Continental Roofing is a family-owned and operated business, with over 10 years roofing experience. They have over 45 full-time, experienced employees working together to give you the best job possible at a reasonable price. They know that a roof is a significant investment, and it is extremely important that the job is done right the first time.

Continental Roofing does a complete roofing job, leaving nothing to sub-contractors. This assures the customer of a better job, more closely supervised. They even do their own sheet metal work to give the customer exactly what is needed for his specific job, without the expensive cost of a sub-contractor included in the price. Dan Marcisz oversees the sheet metal shop, while Duke Sutter is the labor foreman. A. Greg Ybarra does the overall supervision when Larry and his wife Cindy are not there. The complete job is personally supervised from start to finish by the highly skilled supervisory crew to assure you of the highest quality possible and a job well-done that you can depend on every time.

And if you have a large project either underway currently or coming up in the near future, don't sweat it! Continental Roofing can handle any size job. They have either currently under contract or recently completed Sagewood Condominiums, Willowtree Condominiums, Wildflower Apartments, and La Quinta Inn, as well as 4 major office buildings under construction in Odessa. In addition, they are just finishing LBJ construction at Wadley and Midland Dr. At any of the above locations, prospective customers may see the high quality work Continental Roofing puts out.

Continental has also recently completed several substantial residential roofing jobs. They are definitely not limited to any size or style. They will do residential, commercial, or industrial jobs. They also do any style of roofing, from the ordinary to unique. Continental Roofing is a Manufacturer's Approved Applicator for Lifetile. Continental also specializes in hot tar roofing as well as Monterrey Roofing Tile.

If you need a new roof, you know the importance of having it done correctly by an experienced roofer you can trust. Continental Roofing has not only done work throughout Texas, but is branching out into every area of West Texas, with branches currently opening in Amarillo and Lubbock. They offer a two year warranty on workmanship, as well as a conditional guarantee on materials. For experience you can trust at a price you can afford, call Larry or Cindy Neverkovec at 685-1274 for a free estimate. Continental Roofing. We cover Texas.

Quality & Service at A-Quick Signs Tops All

Paid Advertisement

Is your business getting the kind of exposure it deserves? Are you wasting money needlessly on advertising that never seems to do any good? When your competitors have more business than they can handle, are your employees playing checkers to pass the time? Does it seem that nobody even knows that your business is there? Perhaps what you need is an eye-catching, attention grabbing sign to let eveyone know that you are there and to draw the customers in.

J.A. (Monty) Coldwell, owner of A-Quick Signs, is proud of the fine staff of professional sign writers he has gathered to work for him. Monty feels that service and quality are the key aspects of a successful business, and he is willing to go to extreme lengths to keep his customers satisfied. Monty has assembled perhaps the finest sign writers in the state under one roof for the quality aspect, with extra care taken to maintain the high standard of service he so firmly believes in. A-Quick Signs is willing to work 24 hours/day, seven days/week if that is necessary to keep your company trucks on the road.

The professionals at A-Quick Signs firmly believe that each business is as individual as the people in it. Yet most businesses try to make do with a plain sign that states only the name and location of the business. What you need is a custom sign to express the personality of your business and draw public attention towards it. This would include not only a sign in front of your building, but also a logo or sign painted on the side of all company vehicles.

Now think about this one. How many people see your sign every day as it sits now? An eye-catching sign that relays the personality of your business would bring you more business. Many "smart" businessmen just don't realize the importance of having the company logo or sign painted on the side of the company vehicles. They spend thousands of dollars on the vehicle itself, but can't seem to justify the extra couple of hundred dollars (or less) needed to paint the sign on the vehicle. But the really smart businessmen realize that their vehicle not only advertises when it is out on the road, but in the parking lot as well. A vehicle is a 24 hour/day advertisement. And if only 10,000 people see the vehicle each day, that advertising will reach over 50 million people in a short 5-year time span. That makes good business sense. It is one of the best forms of advertising money can buy.

Another form of advertising that ranks close to the top as far as effectivness is billboards. Billboards seem to be more effective nowadays than almost anything else. Apartment complexes, condominium developments, and new housing additions seem to have gone almost completely to billboard advertising. Many of these billboards are handled by A-Quick Signs because of the quality and service they give each and every customer.

A-Quick Signs also does stop signs and speed limit signs for various things such as trailer park and oil lease roads, etc. No job is too large or too small for the qualified professionals at A-Quick Signs.

With the economy slowed down and inflation still rising, it pays to advertise with your own sign. The amount of business you get depends on how your customers see your sign. Gambling not recession proof

By AL DELUGACH
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Wall Street securities analysts Thursday gave no comfort to this bastion of legalized casino gambling, which is suffering its worst slump in decades.

By contrast, Atlantic City, which has become a fordmidable competitor for the business of high-rolling customers who formerly went only to Las Vegas, was pictured as looking better all the time.

While Southern California visitors are the mainstay of the economy here, Atlantic city is close to the huge New York-Philadelphia population center.

The annual growth rate of Las Vegas casino operating profits appears "permanently reduced," in the view of Harold Vogel of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, one of four New York-based casino and entertainment industry analysts who spoke at a gaming industry conference here sponsored by the Laventhal & Horwath accounting concern.

And Daniel Lee of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. observed that the casino industry here not only is not "recession proof," as has been often stated, but in fact is "recession prone." The evidence, he said, is in the drop in the growth rates to 5 percent from the 16 percent average over the years and 20 percent in the best years.

While saying his overall view of Atlantic City's outlook is "positive," Steven Eisenberg of Bear Stearns & Co. said he is "not particularly optimistic" about Las Vegas in the "near and intermediate" outlook.

Lee Isgur of Paine Webber Inc. criticized what he characterized as the "problem of attitude" of casino management.

"They grew very fat and happy for a period of over 30 years," said Isgur, adding that "everyone thought it was automatic."

But the casino industry has "lost some of its mystique," Isgur said. He blamed it for becoming "too professional, too institutionalized," and also for an attitude that "the players should just come and give the casinos their money."

Isgur said the industry must realize that it is competing with other leisure activities and "people don't have to come here."

He suggested that casino owners make gaming more attractive — even to strive for "more of a Disneyland atmosphere" to entertain customers.

Lee added, however, that Las Vegas was an "unfortunate victim of a series of events," including the national recession, Atlantic City, and devaluation of the Mexican peso.

"If anything is surprising," Lee added, "it is that Las Vegas is as healthy as it is." But its growth rate probably will "never go back to its heyday," he said.

Atlantic City casinos "no doubt will soon pass Las Vegas" in operating profits, Lee predicted.

The common stocks of public companies in casino gambling in either Las Vegas or Atlantic City, the analysts agreed, are not likely to soar in value in the near future.

"Casino stocks will not be the barn-burners of the past," observed Vogel.

Eisenberg said Wall Street would be highly selective in recommending stocks only of proven operators, in contrast to the "high leverage, inexperienced" ventures that have come to grief in the recession.

Public's acceptance of gaming gaining

By ANDREW JAFFE
Hearst Feature Service

LAS VEGAS — The American public's acceptance of legalized gambling appears to be gaining in the U.S., according to the results of a national Gallup Poll released by the sponsors of the 4th annual Laventhol & Horwath gaming conference.

The poll of 1,564 telephone interviewees, ages 18 and over, showed that 51 percent approved of casino gambling to raise state revenues, according to Gallup vice president Robert Bezilla. This compares to only 40 percent of the population which approved of legalized gambling in a poll conducted by the University of Michigan for a federal commission on gambling in 1975.

Bezilla's figures showed that those in favor of legalizing casino gambling were mostly Easterners (63 precent) without a high school diploma (58 percent) and with an annual income of under $25,000. Bezilla said that those opposing greater exposure to legalized gambling were mostly women (64 percent), college-educated people (70 percent), or people from the South (73 percent).

Howard Klein, editor of Gaming Business magazine and a co-sponsor of the conference, theorized that the change in attitudes was due to the proliferation of successful lotteries in 17 states, the recent success of casinos in Atlantic City and "the cruel burden of economics. The public perception is that casino gambling is an acceptable form of leisure entertainment," Klein said. He noted that the Louisiana legislature has approved casinos to be run in New Orleans at the 1984 World's Fair.

However much the organizers of this gaming summit of casino and hotel owners, financial analysts and the accounting firm of Laventhol & Horwath might take heart from the polling of Gallup and other organizations, recent political developments show that legalized gambling is losing ground.

In Massachusetts this spring, the issue surfaced in a gubernatorial primary in which gambling opponent Michael Dukakis defeated incumbent Gov. Edward J. King.

In New York, Mayor Ed Koch came out in favor of gambling, but was upset in the Democratic gubernatorial primary by Lt. Gov. Mario Cuomo, who opposed legalized gambling in New York. In addition, the New York legislature defeated a proposal to legalize casinos in the Catskill mountains and six other areas around the state, despite industry polls that showed 58 percent of the people in favor of legalization.

In Florida three years ago, a proposal to save Miami Beach with casinos was soundly defeated by an upstate coalition of anti-gambling Baptists and the elderly.

Klein agreed that for the present the casino issue is dead in New York and Florida and has only a slender chance of passing the legislature this session in Massachusetts. However, he noted than two weeks ago the Bible-thumping Oklahoma legislature legalized parimutuel betting on horses, "the first time ever we have had that kind of breakthrough in the Bible Belt." And Colorado and Arizona, two normally anti-gambling states, recently approved state operated lotteries.

Klein said that he personally would oppose putting casinos in major cities or places with present "sociological problems," where sufficient controls to keep the industry "clean" would be difficult.

Ford chief calls for lower federal deficit

Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — Defense spending reductions and government actions to stimulate the economy are necessary if the auto industry is to overcome a "lousy market" for cars and help lead the nation out of its deep recession, Donald E. Petersen, president of Ford Motor Co., said Thursday.

He called for government policies to lower the federal deficit and bring interest rates down, and urged President Reagan to change his policy of refusing to reduce defense spending.

Reagan repeatedly has said he would remain firm in refusing to reduce the huge increases he has approved in defense spending. The president also has said he will not approve further tax increases to try to reduce the federal budget deficits.

But Petersen said, "It seems to me that when something like defense spending is such an enormous percentage of our total undertaking, it has to be part of what we cut back on some to try to help things."

Noting that Reagan finally approved the $98.3 billion tax bill that Congress had passed Aug. 19, Petersen said "some of us would hope he will continue to adjust and make changes as he sees how things unfold."

Petersen, interviewed at a breakfast session with the Los Angeles Times' Washington bureau, said that despite improvements in quality and efficiency and "dramatic progress' in competing with foreign imports, the U.S. auto industry faces a bleak future unless the economy rebounds.

"It's really a terrible thing we're going through," he said. "The unemployment in the city of Detroit must be past 25 percent, so throughout the auto sector as long as this economy stays as low as it is, it is really very, very difficult."

In prior recessions, the auto industry has helped the economy rebound. "As we are introducing our '83 models," Petersen said, "I do think we're in great shape to try to help."

Auto loan rates generally are still as high as 16 percent or 17 percent, but Petersen said he hoped that the Federal Reserve Board would continue its recent policy of letting the money supply grow, which has gradually helped lower interest rates. A moderate reduction in interest rates alone would not get people "buying cars again," Petersen said, but demand would be stimulated if interest rates fell to about 10 percent.

If the rates dropped to the 12 percent range and stay there, he said, "I personally doubt if that's good enough."

Petersen, who joined Ford in 1949 after graduating from Stanford University, said he thought management was primarily to blame for the U.S. auto industry's loss of its competitive edge to foreign car manufacturers.

Declaring that management erred seriously in its reaction to government regulations, he said "the U.S. auto industry went from a totally unregulated enterprise when I joined it to now one of the industries that is the most regulated and should be because it has such an impact on our society.

"But we didn't handle it very well," he continued, "and I think as things like emissions control requirements came on and the requirement legally to meet CAFE — corporate average fuel economy — there was a mindset, must have been a mindset, that said, 'well, that's the end of the enjoyable car. Apparently, society wants a dull, drab car that emits pure air out the back ... it won't get out of its own way, but has fabulous fuel economy, and so there we are.'"

But Petersen, who unveiled several new Fords at a press conference later Thursday, said the industry has come a long way in quality controls and innovative designs in recent years.

The new Fords included a Mustang convertible, a smaller Ford LTD and Marquis, and a redesigned Thunderbird.

With inflation significantly lowered by the Reagan administration's government spending reductions, Petersen said, Ford will go into its second consecutive new model year with relatively little price increases.

Ford has invested $3 billion preparing the new models, he said.

"We are nervous about when the economy will recover," he said, "but not about our array of new products."

Often dreamed of standard of living devoured by inflation

By ROBERT RENO
Los Angeles Times-Washsington Post News Service

To the extent that they still have vague feelings of economic deprivation and unrealized expectations, they are correct in assuming the living standards of which they so ardently dreamed have been devoured by inflation.

Few American households are as rich today as they had planned to be in 1972. Most of them, in fact, are worse off than they were in 1972.

While nominal incomes have exploded at an unprecedented rate, real incomes have stagnated or declined. This has led people to a state of hopeless confusion about where the really stand.

Economic events that have dominated the first two years of the Reagan administration have tended to affect real, inflation-adjusted incomes both negatively and positively. The sharply reduced inflation rate of the past year has tended to boost real earnings of individual workers still employed. And the income-tax cut, which took effect in July, will boost disposable income.

Yet per-capita and family incomes have been severely depressed by the fact that many workers, because they are unemployed, have no income, real or otherwise. Still others have suffered reduced work weeks, which mean curtailed straight and overtime earnings. The severe recession has, for many families, wiped out or reduced the gains in buying power resulting from lower inflation rates.

Although President Reagan says real incomes are rising again, this is not really statistically clear. What is clear is that between 1945 and 1970 real incomes rose faster than at any time in history.

The pattern of ever-rising living standards halted abruptly in the 1970s. Young middle-class families who were brought up to assume they would be better off than their elders found their expectations of mansions packed with consumer durables exchanged for the realities of cramped apartments and vastly reduced consumption patterns.

Social scientists are convinced trends in the level of real incomes are a crucial factor in society's progress. Scientific studies, for instance, have showed a close correlation between stress-related diseases and the level of real economic growth.

Andrew Cherline, a sociologist at Johns Hopkins University, suggests the uncertainties of the 1970s, when real incomes not only stopped growing but sometimes fluctuated unexpectedly, put a heavy strain on American families.

"We know that it is easier for families to adjust to a low but steady income than it is to a wildy fluctuating income," he says. "An income that fluctuates wildly is more harmful to marriages than one that is merely low."

A study by M. Harvey Brenner, of Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health, concludes "rapid income growth might on the surface be thought of as inherently desirable. It involves new jobs, promotions, increased real incomes and is associated with higher marriage and birth rates. However, since nearly all of these changes involve potential anxieties over fulfillment of new responsibilities, for a certain proportion of persons who are anxious or who actually fail, they may be extremely undesirable."

But the study did find that rapid economic growth accompanied by rising real incomes generally lead to reduced rates of "total mortality and morbidity due to suicide, homicide, cardiovascular diseases and cirrhosis of the liver."

Polls tend to show Americans are thoroughly confused about what is happening to the inflation rate. It is down. The president takes great satisfaction in proclaiming this. But many people don't believe it.

"It is not clear, however, to what extent this (inflation) improvement is clearly perceived by the public," says Edgar R. Feidler, writing for the Conference Board magazine. "By one measure — the public's expectations of future inflation as derived from surveys made by the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center — the American people appear to have recognized the slowdown in inflation very much in line with the behavior of the consumer price index.

"However, several other polls — those that ask directly whether or not inflation has slowed — have reported widespread belief that prices continue to rise as fast as ever."

Some economists have suggested the failure of the public to perceive lower inflation rates is a key factor holding back the consumer spending boom that is critical to economic recovery. Because so many families fail to realize their real incomes are being enriched by lower inflation rates, they are still reluctant to use their buying power.

Real incomes may soon begin rising again, economists say, but in the remainder of this century they are unlikely to match the growth levels that were standard during the postwar boom.

Thre is no easy way to say the president is right or wrong about real income rising because there are different ways of charting real earnings and income. While individual paychecks of many workers have declined sharply in real terms, the real incomes of families have declined less steeply, or in many cases increased, because hugh numbers of working wives have made up the difference.

The average weekly real earnings of American nonsupervisory workers were, in August, lower than a year ago, lower than when Reagan took office and vastly lower than they were 10 years ago. But they are, by a bare 60 cents, higher than they were in July.

Median family real income, which is measured annually, was lower in 1981 than it was in the year before Reagan took office. It was also lower than it had been in 10 years.

Real per-capita disposable income, measured quarterly, is another statistical series that adjusts incomes for inflation and federal taxes. It rose significantly in the second quarter of this year but was still lower than when the president took office.

"There are some real pitfalls in discussing real incomes because it depends on whose incomes you're talking about," says Sandra Shaber, director of consumer economics for Chase Econometrics. "Blue-collar workers, minorities, the less skilled have been worse off in recent months. But I think there are c lear signs that some people's incomes — white-color and upper-income groups — have held up fairly well."

But the outlook for overall improvement, she says, is reasonably good if Americans are able to adjust to the idea they can never, in the foreseeable future, go back to levels of real income growth that characterized the 1960s.

Michael K. Evans, a Washington forecaster, argues that the near-term improvements in real incomes that Reagan has been talking about are purely illusionary for most Americans.

"Real disposable per-capita income looks like it's going up," he says. "But the only reason it is going up is the huge increases we have had in interrest income, which reflects high interest rates we have had. This is hardly something that helps the working man. He's not likely have any interest income."

Charles Schultze, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under president Carter and budget director under president Johnson, says the outlook for a resumption of real-income growth has improved, but he doubts there will be any dramatic rises any time soon.

"Everything else being equal we should begin to do better soon," he says. "But this outlook is partially offset by the fact that we are going to get a very slow econmic recovery from the current recession."

Group pension plan investments given little thought

By SUSAN WARFEL
Hearst Feature Service

Although Individual Retirement Accounts and the solvency of the Social Security System seem to be on the minds of many these days, pension fund managers and consultants say most people give little thought to the investments of their group pension plans.

And although these experts say funds generally are well invested, most believe that individuals can benefit by taking the time to investigate their employers' programs. The problem often is that workers don't know where to get details on their pension funds and don't know what to look for once they have the information.

"Individuals should obtain information on how the their pension funds investments are being handled, if only to allay suspicions they othrwise might have," said Thomas M. Dant, a Los Angeles employee benefit specialist at a large public accounting firm. He estimated that 40 percent to 50 percent of the U.S. work force is covered by employer pension plans.

Sant said that the first source an employee should consult is the fund's summary annual report, a required disclosure of general investment information. Many plans also are audited annually by a public accounting firm, and specific information on all investments contained in such audits is available on request, he said.

In addition, companies must report to the U.S. Department of Labor a number of statistics, Dant continued. These include total assets of the fund; percentage of assets in common stocks; U.S. government securities; real estate, mortgages and other investments; dividends and interest received; dollars paid in by the employer; and dollars paid out to employees.

Then it's up to the employee as to what he or she does with the data. Said Dant: "The individual employee can see where the pension fund is going, but he has no legal right to direct its investments."

Revy said that there have been two recent changes of direction in pension fund investments. Immediately following the collapse of Oklahoma's Penn Square Bank in July, pension funds rushed to the safety of short-term government securities, he said. Then interest rates began declining, so the funds began moving toward higher yielding, long-term investments, he said.

A New York pension fund manager, who asked that his name not be used, suggested that workers examine the company's annual report to compare the fund's assets and the benefits earned to date by employees.

"Are there enough assets today to cover the benefits earned?" he asked. "The government requires that corporations fund pensions so that assets are set aside to cover benefits as they are earned, not as they are paid."

Still, the manager said, "People don't necessarily have to panic if assets don't cover accrued benefits. It only becomes critical if you think the company itself is having a problem" and won't eventually be able to make up the difference.

Even then, he said, there is a safeguard in the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corp., which all pension funds are required to pay into. If a pension fund can't meet its obligations and the company can't compensate or has gone bankrupt, the corporation will step in and pay retirees their earned benefits.

Employees also can check out the investment manager's background and reputation and find out who the pension fund's fiduciary is. The fiduciary is the corporate official who must insure that the fund is well managed, and is probably the best person to direct any questions or complaints, the pension fund manger said.

But no matter how well a pension fund is run, experts still advise that people set aside money on their own.

H2S safety society formed

C.S. Pendleton

A Society of H2S Safety Contractors has been established in the Permian Basin. This Society was formed to deal with safety problems of Hydrogen Sulfide (a very toxic gas), especially in the areas of the oil, gas and drilling industries.

The objectives of the Society are:

1. To provide a means of communication among industries, government and hydrogen sulfide safety contractors in matters of H2S safety.

2. To further the education and knowledge of those in the H2S safety industry and to establish suggested standards for the H2S safety industry.

3. To distribute information concerning new products, research and development, events and improvements relative to the H2S safety industry.

Any company associated with the H2S industry, which, as one of its major functions, provides H2S services and/or equipment to industry or government, shall be eligible to apply to become a member. Also, any employee of a contractor member or any person or company not associated with the industry, but whose interests are in agreement with the objectives of the Society, may apply to become and affiliate member.

Hydrogen sulfide gas (H2S) is a toxic, poisonous gas that is a growing concern in the oil patch. New fields are being developed and old fields are being treated in areas where H2S can be expected to increase the probability of exposure. Miners, sewer maintenance crews and blasters also fear the gas. The principal hazard is death by inhalation. However, with proper equipment, training, techniques and procedures this toxic gas can be worked safely. H2S, in lesser parts, has an offensive odor which is often described as smelling like rotten eggs.

Interest rate drop should help housing industry

WASHINGTON (AP) — Economists and government officials say that a continued decline in mortgage interest rates should help the depressed housing industry, but they forsee only a slight recovery.

"Although these projected reductions in mortgage rates are expected to improve housing activity," Congressional Budget Office Director Alice Rivlin said, "CBO does not foresee an easing of credit conditions sufficient to permit a full recovery in residential construction."

She said her agency sees mortgage rates dropping to around 15 percent by the end of this year and to about 13 percent next year before rising slightly as the overall economy strengthens.

Testifying Thursday at the same House Agriculture hearing, Richard Pratt, Federal Home Loan Bank Board chairman, said basic changes in the housing industry indicate that it will never regain the strength that it had during the 1970s.

Pratt said the substantial decline in inflation has eliminated much of the incentive to buy a home as a hedge against rising prices.

But almost more important, Pratt said, the number of Americans under 35, considered prime homebuyers, will increase by only 1.8 million during the next few years and will actually decline by 1.1 million during the last half of the decade. Numbers in that age group skyrocketed by more than 17 million during the 1970s.

Michael Sumichrast, chief economist for the National Association of Homebuilders, told the hearing that housing demand begins picking up once mortgage rates drop to 14 percent but doesn't really begin to explode until they fall to 12 percent.

The trend, he said, should produce 1.2 million or more housing starts in 1983, up from this year's less-than 1 million. Four years ago, they exceeded 2 million.

The average interest rate for a 25-year fixed-payment mortgage on a new single-family home was 17.02 percent in August. Rates peaked at 18.17 percent about a year ago.

Lawrence Chimerine, chief economist for the consulting firm of Chase Econometrics, testified that "the numbers still suggest highly depressed levels of housing activity during the next several years relative to prior performance."

Rivlin and Federal Reserve System Governor Lyle Gramley said they believed the recession has bottomed out. But they also said there is little evidence that the overall economy has begun to rebound.

A robust recovery for the housing industry can only by spurred by a federal policy to "back the government out of the credit market," Gramley said. He said the U.S. treasury could take up to half the credit funds available in the nonfinancial sector of the economy during the last half of this year.

Meanwhile Thursday, the National Association of Realtors said that house sales in some states apparently are being hurt by a U.S. Supreme Court ruling on assumable home loans.

The ruling last June "curtailing the assumability of mortgages from federally chartered savings and loans has had a detrimental effect in the 18 states to which it applies," the group said in a statement.

Early reports on August resales of existing houses showed sales off 5 percent to 7 percent at an annual rate in 32 unaffected states but off 10 percent to 15 percent in the 18 states that were affected, the statement said.

Many houses have been sold in recent years through assumable loans, an arrangement in which the buyer takes over the long-term loan that the seller had been paying off. Lenders oppose this process because it keeps them from calling in the old loans and starting over with the new buyer at higher rates.

Tax a possible surprise

By Phillip R. Lehmberg

Many individuals may be surprised at the size of their tax bill for 1983 because of the passage of the new alternative minimum tax (AMT). The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 has replaced the existing "add-on minimum tax" and "alternative minimum tax" with the new AMT. The AMT will be paid if it is higher than the "regular tax." Even though the general reductions in individual tax rates adopted under the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 have not been repealed, the new AMT may increase tax burdens beyond the regular income tax liability despite the fact that the new AMT applies at a straight 20 percent rate.

The new AMT is a levy upon most of the same tax preference items as are taxed under current law (e.g., intangible drilling costs (IDCs), certain amounts of depletion, and capital gain exclusions, plus some new tax preference items).

The rate is 20 percent of the alternative minimum taxable income that exceeds $30,000 in the case of the single taxpayers or $40,000 in the case of married taxpayers filing a joint return. The individual starts with adjusted gross income, adds any tax preference items and subtracts certain limited itemized deductions and allowable net operating losses. The resulting balance is the alternative minimum taxable income and the following example demonstrates the significant effect the AMT can have on unsuspecting taxpayers.

Mr. Smith has a $50,000 salary. He and Mrs. Smith have a $150,000 long-term capital gain for 1983. They also have a $20,000 loss from oil and gas working interests, all attributable to IDC, and they will file a joint tax return. They have as itemized deductions, $10,000 of home mortgage interest, $10,000 investment interest and $5,000 of property taxes.

	Capitalize IDC	Write-off IDC
Adjusted gross income	107,150*	90,000
Deductions and exemptions	(23,600)	(23,600)
Taxable income	$88,550	$66,400
A) Regular tax - 1983 (net of ITC)	$24,376	$18,830
Adjusted gross income	107,150	90,000
Plus: Capital gain exclusion	90,000	90,000
IDC	—	20,000
Less: Housing interest	(10,000)	(10,000)
Less: Exemption	(40,000)	(40,000)
Amount subject to AMT	$147,150	$150,000
B) Alternative minimum tax	29,430	$30,000
C) Tax owed for 1983 (greater of A or B)	29,430	$30,000

*IDC not expensed in year incurred will be written off over next four years.

As the example shows, the AMT income can easily rise to a large amount because of the capital gains exclusion and other preferences not included in, or allowed as reductions of adjusted gross income.

These preference items, and the law change as of January 1, 1983, require effective planning for 1982 and 1983. Substantial reductions in tax liabilities could result from the proper timing of asset sales and exercise of options. Additionally, planning opportunities exist for taxpayers with intangible drilling costs. Such costs can be either currently expensed and treated as preference items or they may be amortized over a period of years and not treated as preferences.

For an individual, other than in his capacity as a limited partner, the election to capitalize IDC, subject to amortization over 5 years, also allows investment tax credit (ITC) on the amount capitalized. The example demonstrates the potential benefits of not expensing intangible drilling costs in the year incurred.

While the complexities of the new AMT are less than the existing taxes on preference items, the application will likely affect a wider range of taxpayers. Without comprehensive tax planning for 1982 and 1983, the old minimum taxes and the new AMT can result in a rather unpleasant and expensive surprise for many taxpayers.

Mexico's boom days gone, economic ruin possible

By DAVID DIETZ
Hearst Feature Service

MEXICO CITY — As the tourist traffic dwindles along the sizzling beaches of La Paz and as factories shut down in the smoggy industrial city of Monterrey, Mexico's economy wheezes and sags. The boom days gone.

With the oil market in the dumps, Mexico has run out of gas.

Within months, the country has been forced to devalue its currency twice, nationalize its banks and impose exchange controls while inflation and unemployment have leaped.

The collapse, reversing a four-year boom, has stirred fear of domestic turmoil and sent political and economic shocks into the United States.

Gravely short of foreign cash, Mexico already has received a 90-day postponement of principal payments on its foreign debt.

The question on lenders' minds is whether Mexico, in the midst of its worst economic collapse in 50 years, can continue making interest payments as well, or whether there will be defaults.

Unemployment in Mexico is soaring, suggesting that the surge of illegal immigrants already crossing the border into the U.S. will explode into an unstoppable flood.

By government estimate, the current unemployment rate is about 9 percent, although it may be far higher. In Monterrey, with a work force of about 700,000, one government source said 32,000 people have been tossed out of work since March.

With a million Mexicans already crossing its border illegally each year and an unemployment rate of its own close to 10 percent, the U.S. can ill afford new waves from the south.

Immigration problems notwithstanding, U.S. border communities already are reeling from peso devaluations in February and August, from exchange controls imposed by the Mexican government and from the "freezing" of bank accounts in Mexico held in dollars.

The measures have virtually shut off the flow of Mexican shoppers and pushed some U.S. concerns close to bankruptcy.

The official exchange rate is currently 70 pesos to the dollar, although far higher amounts can be obtained in black markets that have sprouted in U.S. border towns. Since the beginning of the year, the peso has lost about two-thirds of its value.

Despite the higher exchange rate for pesos, U.S. tourism in Mexico hasn't spurted, although tourist traffic is normally heaviest in winter.

Oil – more specifically, its sagging price – is widely blamed for Mexico's economic nosedive, although many observers insist the country was spending way beyond its means in any case.

The plunge developed suddenly.

In mid-1981, oil prices began to collapse. For a country that relies on petroleum for about 75 percent of its export revenue, it was a devastating turnabout.

Spending heavily on social and economic needs, Mexico turned increasingly to foreign lenders to make up for the slumping oil gusher, as well as for the sag in prices for the country's other exports, primarily silver.

Bankers, with Mexico's oil as collateral, lined up to make loans. Total borrowings rose 34 percent last year.

Even with soaring interest costs and slumping business conditions worldwide, Mexico slowed down but little, and granted big salary hikes to workers earlier this year.

The boom, accompanied by surges in Mexico's money supply, boosted inflation. Prices of basic goods – tortillas, bread, gasoline – jumped.

Their currency weakened, Mexicans sought a hedge, opening accounts in dollars in Mexican banks and traveling and buying goods and real estate in the United States.

Short of foreign reserves, the government has twice been forced this year to devalue the peso in an effort to make it more attractive to hold. Still, its value has dipped by about two-thirds.

With oil prices still slumping, the pressure on Mexico to diversify its exports is growing.

In a bid to bridge its cash gap, Mexico is seeking a $4.5 billion loan from the International Monetary Fund. If the IMF has its way, however, there is likely to be a curtailed federal role in social-welfare spending and subsidy programs.

Since such cutbacks would lead to reduced living standards and higher unemployment, however, the political hazards are substantial.

But few think Mexico has any choice but to end high-spending ways that led to a 1981 federal budget deficit of $27.2 billion, equal to 12.5 percent of the country's total output.

Mutual funds report most successful month

Washington, D.C. - In August the mutual fund industry had the most successful month in its history. Sales of funds other than short term funds, total assets and the growth of assets were all larger than ever before.

David Silver, president of the Investment Company Institute, said, "Mutual funds advanced on all fronts, almost reaching $300 billion in assets, a clear confirmation that whatever the economic conditions and whatever investors desire, there are now mutual funds to fill their needs.

"In these uncertain times investors are particularly attracted by the way mutual funds diversify to seek the best returns and by the fact that their money is in the hands of professional managers. On top of that they are becoming increasingly aware of the superior investment performance achieved by mutual funds over the long and short run."

The institute, the national association of mutual funds, says sales of funds other than short term funds were $1.46 billion, paralleling the sharp improvement in stock and bond prices. The previous record was set more than two years ago, in July 1980, when sales were $1.17 billion.

Redemptions rose slightly in August to $594 million. The result was that net sales were also the highest ever at $867 million. Once again the previous record was set in July 1980.

Increased sales in every category of fund contributed to the overall record in August. Sales of common stock funds were the highest since January, 1969, corporate bond funds more than doubled from July and income funds, long term municipal bond and option/income funds all rose more than 50 percent.

Exchanges into stock and bond funds and between these funds also reached a new height in August at $1.2 billion compared with the previous record of $897 million in October last year. Exchanges measure the sifting by investors from one fund to another in the same management group as their financial outlook changes. During August they moved $575 million on balance from money market funds into stock and bond funds to take advantage of rising security prices.

At the same time money market funds had very substantial new sales which greatly exceeded transfers into other types of funds. The upshot was that as prviously reported assets of money market funds grew substantially during August.
