Rail Commission Refuses Oil Anti-Trust Investigation

POWER LACKING TO MAKE BROAD INVESTIGATION

Morgan Petition Rejected; Claim Jurisdiction Only Over Common Carriers

GULF OIL ATTACKED

Georgia and South Carolina Discrimination Charges Made

By The Associated Press.

AUSTIN, Aug. 25.—The state railroad commission today refused to investigate the oil business in Texas to ascertain whether certain big oil companies have violated the anti-trust laws of Texas.

Refusal was made when the commission rejected the petition of Representative W. C. Morgan of Liberty county requesting such an investigation and in which there were charges of violations of the anti-trust laws.

The commission held that it "has no jurisdiction over the enforcement of the anti-trust laws of the state nor any of the things complained of in the petition."

Defines Own Powers

The commission held that its powers include jurisdiction over the common carrier of oil and announced in its decision that it stands ready and willing to hear Morgan or any other petitioner in any complaint as to rates or services rendered by common carrier pipe lines or discrimination against any shipper of crude petroleum.

The Morgan petition requested a "sweeping" investigation of the oil business and charged specific instances of violations of the anti-trust laws.

Texas Company Sued By State of South Carolina

By The Associated Press.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Aug. 25.—Civil proceedings involving claims totaling $165,000 for alleged violations of state and anti-trust laws, have been instituted against the Texas company by Attorney General Samuel M. Wolfe for the state of South Carolina, it became known today.

Notices in 55 suits for $3,000 each have been served on local officials of the company, Attorney General Wolfe said. The complaint in each suit charges that the defendant sold gasoline at a lower rate than the prevailing market price "for destroying the business of a competitor."

By The Associated Press.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 25.—Charges that the larger oil companies operating in Georgia and using method which is in restrain of trade and block independent dealers from dealing with them, has been received by Attorney General George M. State Sues Gulf For $1 a Year Agreements

By The Associated Press.

AUSTIN, August 25.—Suit was filed by Attorney General W. A. Keeling today in the Travis county district court against the Gulf Refining company of Houston, alleging violation of anti-trust statutes in its agreement with 330 gasoline filling stations in Texas where the retailers are furnished equipment at $1 a year under condition that they will sell only Gulf gasoline.

The state in its petitions filed today, asked cancellation of the Gulf Refining company's charter, penalties for violations of Texas statutes and a perpetual injunction to restrain it from further doing the acts complained of. The arrangement "tends to lessen competition," the petition alleged.

Price Fixing Not Mentioned.

The 330 contracts with retailers have been entered into by the Gulf company since May 1, according to the attorney general's petition, which enumerated the filling stations in virtually every Texas town which had been given by the attorney generals dictered into the alleged illegal contracts.

Attorney General Keeling declined to say whether similar prosecutions will be made against other large oil concerns. No reference to price fixing or agreements to control prices was made in the petition.

Cattle Rustlers Work Near Vernon

Special to The Record News.

VERNON, Aug. 25.—Cattle rustlers are working again in this territory. W. P. Thomas, rancher man, reported to the sheriff's office today that early this week 19 head of fat cattle were driven off the range eight miles east of Vernon. Indications pointed to the cattle having been crossed into Oklahoma, it is said. Trucks made by horsemen were found where the cattle were driven out of the pasture.

Sheriff Frank Edmondson has received several complaints of cattle rustling on a small scale in the Vernon territory within the past two months, but the 19 head taken from the Thomas ranch is said to have been the biggest single steal.

Many Injured As Pistol Shots Ring Above Uproar; Big Force Of Deputies Rushed

By The Associated Press.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 25.—One man was killed, another was probably fatally wounded and an unknown number of others were injured at midnight tonight when citizens of Carnegie, a suburb, and 1000 robbed members of the ku klux klan clashed at the Glendale bridge over Chartiers Creek. Quiet had not been restored two hours later.

Two men were arrested early this morning. In their automobile when arrested was found a shotgun and pistol, the police said. Their names were withheld.

PITSBURG, Pa., Aug. 25.—A force of deputy sheriffs was rushed to Carnegie, a suburb, late tonight when a crowd of about 500 persons blocked a street and stopped a parade of ku klux klansmen. The parade was led by an automobile but the klansmen on foot were reported to extend back for more than a mile.

After a momentary pause the paraders broke through the crowd and continued through the town singing "Onward Christian Soldiers." A number of shots were fired and one man, dressed in white robes, is known to have been killed. He died in a physician's office, shot through the head.

Many Injured In Fight.

Many persons were injured in the fighting which was still in progress more than an hour after the first outbreak. The force of deputy sheriff's was reinforced by all available uniformed Pittsburg policemen and Allegheny county detectives who were given the right of way on city streets as they sped in automobiles to Carnegie, six miles away.

The streets of Carnegie are jammed with people shouting and yelling. Every few moments the sharp crack of a pistol sounds above the uproar. Car after car filled with heavily armed officers passed newspaper correspondents speeding to the scene of battle.

The klansmen had been gathering all afternoon and evening for what is understood to have been a state meeting on a hillside overlooking Carnegie. Early in the evening their leaders were told, police said, that a parade through Carnegie would not be permitted.

Autos Rolled Off Bridge.

About 11 o'clock, however, the parade was seen to appear over the hill and start toward the town. In order to enter it the klansmen had to cross the Glendale bridge which spanned a small creek. A crowd gathered at once at that bridge and automobiles were run on it and stopped, effectively blocking the structure.

When the automobile leading the parade reached the bridge it stopped. The Klansmen immediately made no attempt to proceed and paid no attention to the cries to lower the American flag which headed the parade. Neither did they make any move to turn back.

After the impasse had existed for perhaps a half hour the leaders of the marchers seized an opportune moment and made a wild dash forward. The automobiles were rolled off the bridge and the crowd stationed at the one end swept backwards.

New Assault Begins.

The parade continued for two blocks with only isolated instances of bricks and stones being hurled at the marchers. Then the opposing crowd seeming to have collected their forces rushed forward. Bedlam at once broke loose. All kinds of missles were hurled through the air and firing commenced. One white robed man was seen to fall. He was picked up and carried into a doctor's office where he died.

TULSA FLOGGING TERMS UPHELD

Statutes Cited By State Officials in Defense Of Charges

By The Associated Press.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Aug. 25.—C. W. King, assistant attorney general, expressed the opinion here tonight that no error had been committed in filing riot charges in Tulsa county against alleged whippers of Ben Wagner, Wagoner county farmer.

Wagner lives just over the Tulsa county line and it is alleged that his flogging took place in Wagoner county and not in Tulsa county. The men charged with whipping Wagoner are residents of Tulsa county.

Cites Statutes.

In support of his stand the assistant attorney general cited section 2420 of the compiled Oklahoma statutes, which is as follows: "When a public offense is committed partly in one county and partly in another county, or the acts or the effects thereof constituting a pre-requisite to the offense, occurred in two or more counties, the jurisdiction is in either county."

Wagonre county officials today filed charges against the nine men held in Tulsa county in connection with the assault on Wagner, despite the fact that charges already were pending in Tulsa county and that three of the men had plead guilty and were sentenced in Tulsa county.

Humphries Well Hits Salt Water At 2,080 Depth

Special to The Record News.

GRAHAM, Texas, Aug. 25.—Oil in Young county was very much underground the past week. No new developments have made their appearance. However, many see the beginning of development in about another month, though it will not be as heavy as before the shutdown.

Over near Finis, 14 miles southeast of Graham, the Humphries No. 1 being drilled by J. M. Dunn struck a flow of salt water and the hole is full. This was struck at a depth of 2080 feet. Six inch casing was being set last Friday and preparations are being made to drill to pay.

The Ranger Gas company is still fishing for the tools lost in the old Whitehead-Johnson No. 1 a mile east of Graham, which they took over a month ago. They have already gotten out two of the strings, leaving one more to get. They feel that they will eventuailly get the last one out. Then they undoubtedly will have an oil well, for before the strings were lost, the well made several good flows of a good grade oil.

Lewis Says Miners Will Not Recede From Ultimatum To Operators

By The Associated Press.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 25.—Union officials and operators' representatives accepted today the request of the governor of Pennsylvania for a conference at Harrisburg on Monday, in an endeavor to exhaust every means of preventing a suspension of anthracite mining next week.

At the same time the union machinery was steadily at work upon its object of making the shutdown effective and John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, took occasion to repeat in emphatic words that the union ultimatum that no arbitration offers now would serve to avert the consequences of a failure of the employers in the industry to grant wage increases and other demands.

Operators "Cordial"

Though the union leaders would meet with Governor Pinchot, Lewis said, their attitude would be unchanged.

For the operators, it was said their answer to the governor's request was "cordial" and practically all of the members of the policy committee which has conducted negotiations over the wage contract left town early in order to reach Harrisburg before the Monday session.

MYSTERY OVER TARRING PARTY

Sheriff Unable to Learn Anything in East Texas Assault

By The Associated Press.

HOUSTON, Texas, August 25.—Sheriff Nelson of Hardin county, told the Houston Chronicle over the telephone from Kountze this afternoon, that he had been unable to learn little of the reported tarring and feathering of a young man near Honey Island Thursday.

The sheriff went to Honey Island this morning, he said, after his office had heard a report of the occurence.

The man's name, he said, had been given him as Sammie Knap, but he did not know his occupation or his age. He said he was told this morning that Knap had left for Beaumont, Friday afternoon.

Claim Wife Mistreated.

Deputy Sheriff W. O. Williams, in a statement Saturday, said that in a talk to Knap, following the affair, the tar and feather victim had told him that in addition to being tarred, he had been given a number of lashes with a whip. The deputy said his statement was borne out by a number of welts on the man's back. He also told the deputy sheriff, according to his statement, that the men who kidnaped him were dressed in a "white robe with something on their head that they parted in the middle to see."

According to Knap's story, the men who beat and tarred him told him that it was for mistreatment of his 17-year-old wife and six months old baby; that this was "just a sample" of what he would get if he did not go to work and support them.

66 Gallons Corn Whiskey and Seven Stills Gathered in Raid About Glen Rose

By The Associated Press.

GLEN ROSE, Texas, Aug. 25.—Unheralded rate rangers and special officers, under command of Captain Shumate, swooped down on Glen Rose and Somervell county early today and at 6 o'clock tonight had taken 27 men into custody for investigation in connection with alleged liquor law violations. Among them, Captain Shumate, said, was T. Walter Davis, sheriff of Somervell county. So far as could be learned tonight no formal charges had been filed against any of those held.

Tonight the court house yard of Somervell county had a strange appearance. There were 66 gallons of corn whisky, 84 bottles of beer, eight gallons of wine, 550 pounds of sugar, and seven stills piled on the lawn.

Destroy Three Stills

In addition to the material brought to the courthouse the officers said they destroyed three stills and declared they found others already destroyed when they arrived at the hidden places. They said they destroyed 195 50-gallon barrels of mash.

Twenty of those taken into custody were sent to the Johnson county jail at Cleburne, as it was said there were no accomodations for them in Somervell county.

The first Somervell county knew of the raids was when a motor truck backed up at the courthouse yard and unloaded stills and other property. This was followed by other automobiles bringing in persons taken into custody. At intervals during the day the truck returned, unloaded more property confiscated by the raiders and was followed by the other automobiles bring more men.

Will Clean Up County

The raiding officers worked in three parties, each under command of a ranger. Captain Shumate said tonight that the work will continue until Somervell county is entirely free from liquor law violations. It will require more than 24 hours, he said.

At noon the officers were served with sandwiches and coffee on the courthouse lawn by Mrs. R. W. Nation, wife of the Methodist minister, here.

Coolidge Brings Back Use Of "I" In Conference

Special to The Record News.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—A president of the United States is never directly quoted on any information he reveals at the White House in his semi-weekly conference with newspaper men.

When you see a line in a news item saying that such and such information was "revealed by a spokesman for the president" you may know that the spokesman was the president himself, for the president of the United States is his own spokesman.

Newspaper men in Washington are wondering where President Coolidge acquired his "nose for news." He has a way of opening up a conference and passing out news that even his predecessor, a newspaper man, did not have.

WICHITAN BEATS OFF PANTHER!

Animal Attacks Him Near Holliday

Wallace Hill, 17, 911 Tenth street, was attacked by a panther at 7:30 last night on the Wichita river near Dead Man's bridge, 10 miles west of Wichita Falls on the Holliday road. The boy's shirt was torn off as the animal was clubbed off by Wallace. He used the butt end of a .22 caliber rifle.

Clyde Hill, wife and son, and Wallace, planned to spend the night camping out on the river. Young Wallace had taken the rifle and was hunting a rabbit to be used as fish bait. When the panther began screaming, Hill took his wife and baby to the Holliday road where he was joined by M. Holt, who works for a local express company.

Hear Wallace's Screams.

Holt and his wife and his month's-old child with him and the two men decided to take the women and children to the Morrison farm and come back after Wallace, who had not answered their calls.

The panther crossed the bridge in front of the cars the men were driving and entered a thicket along side of the road.

Returning a few minutes later, the men heard the screams of Wallace, who was calling for assistance. The two men were afraid to shoot for fear of hitting Wallace. Holt and Hill rushed to Wallace's assistance, the animal having disappeared in the woods.

Farmers in the vicinity said they had heard the screams of the panther for several hours before the Hill and Holt families arrived. The animal was described as being five or six feet in length and approximately three and one half feet in height.

30 AUTOMOBILES AND $60,000 OIL MATERIAL TAKEN

Vernon Confession Given By Alleged Ring Member Say Officers

FOUR HELD IN JAIL

Federal Agents Take Probe Into Another State With Arrests Expected

Theft of approximately $60,000 worth of oil field equipment and a total of 30 automobiles by a ring, four members of which are in jail in Vernon, has been revealed by the confession of one member of the ring, according to officers. Seven of the automobiles mentioned in the confession have been recovered, officers say, and the arrest of several other members of the ring in an adjoining state is expected within a few days. Federal agents have had the case in hand for several days. Charges are filed against all four.

Four Caught At Farmhouse

Officers handling the case in Wichita and Wilbarger counties are Charles Bebout, Tom Shook, Police Officer Macey of Electra and Cheriff Frank Edmondson of Wilbarger county with his deputies Boyd McClendon and R. J. Bailey. The first arrests came last week when Shook, Macey, McClendon and Bailey went to a farm house 12 miles south of Electra in Wilbarger county and hid in a barn until four men drove up with two Ford cars and tried to sell them to three farmers at the farmhouse. The four men were arrested and on their persons were said to have been found forged bills of sale for the two stolen cars and a complete set of tools for changing the number on the engines.

One of the men arrested was found to be under a suspended sentence at Childress in connection with an automobile theft case and the other three were well known to officers. One of the four arrested is alleged by officers to have made a complete confession as to the operations of the ring and to have revealed location of many cars, seven of which have been recovered and returned to their owners.

Oil Field Equipment

He is also said to have revealed how oil well casing and other supplies valued at approximately $60,000 had been stolen by members of the ring and sold. Some of this material has been located officers say, and so far everything the confessor has told has checked up.

In his confesion to officers of Wilbarger county the man is said to have told how the automobiles were hidden out until they could be transported to another state where in a large town the ring had an agent, a well known resident, who is said to have big plant for repainting and renumbering the cars.

Federal Agents At Work

This phase of the case has been turned over to government agents and officers say all parties involved have been located and are expected to be arrested momentarily.

According to officers, the confession of the ring member shows that the ring has been operating in Graham, Childress, Seymour, Electra, Wichita Falls and other towns and has been operating for more than a year. Officers say it is one of the biggest theft rings ever revealed in this section of the country.

Six Big League Teams Hot After New York-Penn Loop Rookie Leuder

Burney Griffin, a southerner who in his first year in professional baseball is leading the New York-Penn baseball league batters and base runners as a member of the Scranton team, is wanted by six teams in the major leagues. The Philadelphia, Cleveland and St. Louis teams of the American league, and St. Louis, Pittsburg and Boston of the National league have bid for Burney's services.

Griffin was signed by George Stallings, who with Walter Hapgood owns the Rochester Internationals and the Scranton teams, when he was graduated from Georgia Tech last spring, and he is undoubtedly the best ball player in the New York-Penn league.

Although not very tall, he is a well-built lad and has more speed than many major leaguers, being especially fast in getting down to first base. He bats from the left side of the plate, hits southpaw pitching well and throws with his left hand.

Before he sprained his ankle recently he had been in 85 games in which he was at bat 338 times and made 128 hits for an average of .379. Among his hits were 12 doubles, eight triples and three homers. He stole 38 bases and scored 71 runs.

Unless some major league team bids high enough to get him he will be sent to the Rochester Internationals at the close of the present New York-Penn season.

Paris is gently hinting that capes are to be less worn except for evening wear—the long ones at any rate. The short ones are popular and some of the coats and many of the suits have an attached short cape.

It is a good many years since capes were much worn. Remember the "mantles" of our grandmothers and the short, full capes of our mothers? Whatever may be said of the cape when seen in the extreme style effected by some women, it is a garment that appeals mightily to those of an artistic bent. It is graceful, and worn by those who appreciate its possibilities, it is a very smart garment.

The one illustrated is a stunning model. It is made of black satin which is pulled on to a yoke. The said yoke is trimmed with a metal thread brocade. Fashion delights in contradictions so just as she has announced that huge collars are the thing she insinuates this modest turnover—just by way of variety.

You too can have a Clear Skin!

WHY worry and fret—wish and hope? Why be jealous of those with clear, soft skin? It is within the reach of all.

A rich, ruddy, wholesome complexion is possible. It is not something that is just beyond our reach. Neither is it something that requires years and years of toil to acquire. That clear, soft skin is within the reach of each and every one of us. Not like precious stones available to but a chosen few—clear, soft skin—rich and pure—the sparkle and brightness of youth—is available to each and every one—rich and poor—young and old.

S. S. S., since 1826, has been casting impurities from the system and building red blood cells. Impurities make "that complexion you long for" impossible. Red blood cells send rich blood coursing through your veins. Clear, soft skin is simply the result of a healthy red blooded condition. Within the grasp of all—Yes S. S. S. will help you have the very skin you seek.

When the skin is hard and drawn—the cheeks sallow and withered—the figure listless and lifeless—the system is not on edge. Something is wrong. Right that wrong. Possess that clear, soft skin—bring the youthful glow back into the cheeks. S. S. S. will do it.

Miss Ethel Rose, 422 E. Water St., Painted Post, N. Y., writes: "All that has been said in favor of S. S. S. is true as applied to my case, as it has certainly purified my system and my complexion is now clear."

S. S. S. is made of carefully selected and scientifically prepared and proportioned herbs and barks. It is sold at all good drug stores. The large size bottle is more economical.

SIMMONS COLLEGE EXPECTS TO HAVE CAPACITY OPENING

ABILENE, Texas, Aug. 25.—All indications are that Simmons will have a capacity opening September 13, and that this session will be the best in the history of the college. E. T. Miller, Alumni Field secretary, has just returned to headquarters from a trip through the west, and reports scores of boys and girls planning to enter Simmons in the fall from all over the territory; several communities which have never been represented at the college before will have students to register when the doors open.

Mr. Miller made his report to the alumni at a special meeting recently. The president of the association, Mr. C. C. Rister offered his resignation because he will be absent from the state this year. Mrs. Roy Bradley as firse vice-president, was named as the new president of the organization of Simmons alumni and ex-students.

Plans were almost at this meeting for a big home-coming of former students graduates and friends of the school at Thanksgiving. At this time the annual turkey day clash on the gridiron between Simmons and Howard-Payne will be a big drawing card. Other elaborate features are being plagued for the entertainment of the home-comers.

Shortage of State Funds No Worry To Young County's School System

Special to The Record News.

GRAHAM, Texas, Aug. 25.—The present shortage of funds in the state school treasury is not worrying the schools of Young county. They are going right ahead just as they have been going on for the past few years, and possibly even better. All the districts of the county support their school in the form of a school tax, which is in addition to the money received from the state. Fifteen districts of the county at present have the dollar tax for the schools, with the average rate over the county of 55 cents, a much higher standard than in many counties.

Not only are the rural schools going ahead in their work but several are building new buildings and teacherages. Red Tap has a three-room building in process of erection. Flint Creek, Indian Mound and Shearer all are erecting new school buildings. The consolidated district of Colston is building a five-room teacherage. These buildings have a total cost of $12,000, with a total of 13 rooms. During a period of the past two years, 12 new buildings have been built in the rural districts of the county with a total expenditure of $100,000 for the buildings and equipment.

The average term of the rural districts is seven months. The minimum requirement of teachers for these schools is a first grade certificate. This and the length of the school term is due to the large amount of local support.

Pecos C. of C. Entertains With Barbecue Love Feast

PECOS, Texas, August 25.—Information at west Texas headquarters is to the effect that the Pecos chamber of commerce has just pulled off a splendid feed of barbecued chicken and rare trimmings which was something new and very much out of the ordinary to some of the members of the Pecos Valley water users of Texas. The Pecos river treaty commission and party, when they arrived Monday in Pecos in charge of J. G. Love, president of the former organization, after having made a careful survey of the Pecos river from Santa Fe to the Texas state line.

The barbecue was held that the Almo picnic grounds and the committee was treated to some large home grown watermelons and the address were by Senator Hanna of New Mexico, and R. E. Thomason, representative of Texas whose speeches were in a diplomatic strain, still there is hope that the matters of New Mexico and Texas along the Pecos river can be speedily adjusted so that the conservation of the flood waters of the river can be successfully used by the farmers of both states with entire satisfaction.

Stamford Comes To Front With A Prize Bee Story

STAMFORD, Texas, Aug. 25.—Early last spring a swarm of bees took up their abode in the house of Mr. J. P. Donaldson, west of Stamford and at the time no one took the matter seriously. In fact, the incident was almost forgotten unless perchance now and then a bee came in close contact with some of the family. But last week Mrs. Donalson discovered honey was leaking through the ceiling and on investigation found the bees had gotten in between the upper floor and the ceiling of the lower rooms and had stored in the inaccessible place their summer's crop of honey.

When a bee charmer, in the person of William Fuqua, was employed to dislodge the colony of honey gatherers, he had to destroy the entire tribe of bees before he was ably to safely remove the floor and then to his surprise and that of Mr. Donalson and family there was more than 100 pounds of the very finest honey hanging to the under side of the upper floor. Some two years ago lightning struck the house at the corner and at this point the bees made their entrance and began their industrious work of accumulating their next winters supply.

T. Donalson was in the West Texas chamber of commerce office today and verifies the above as true and adds that the fellow who said "A cow, sow and some hens were salvation of the farmer," left off something important, as the cow, sow or hen must be fed and watered as well as proper quarters to protect them from the weather while the bees only require three or four square feet of weather protection to make $25 or $30 per annum.

Waurika
NEWS AND PERSONALS

WAURIKA, Okla., Aug. 25.—Quite different from the swimming parties and summer picnics that have been enjoyed throughout the summer by the younger social set was the party given by Miss Helen Collins at her home in East Waurika last Tuesday night.

The young people met at her home and went to see "Goodbye Girls" at the Empress and then returned to the Collins home, which was beautifully decorated with baskets of garden flowers of various hues. Here the rest of the evening was spent in playing various games. In bunco, Lena Mae Yoder and James Wade won high score and were remembered with a prize. There were other guessing games and music which whiled away the time until a late hour, when lovely iced refreshments were served to Misses Eula Mitchell, Lena Mae Yoder, Merle Dorman, Lavelle Harrel, Florence Mitchell, Fairy Mitchell, and Leslie Stone, James Wade, Don Mitchell, Leon Weiss, Hill Dillard, Winfrey Dillard and Henry Carr Rose.

Sunday evening, in Addington, Miss Anna May Matthews of Waurika was united in marriage to Benjamin Forshee of McKinney, Texas, the ceremony being performed by Joe Huffer, justice of the peace.

Immediately after the ceremony the young people drove to Waurika, where they had their home ready for occupancy, having taken an apartment in the Howell building.

The bride, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Matthews, has spent practically all of her life in and near Waurika, for the past few years making her home with Mr. and Mrs. Carl Summers at the Summers hotel.

The groom is car inspector at the C. R. I. & P. shops.

Saturday afternoon at the lovely home of Mrs. N. L. Reed, Mrs. Carl Summers was hostess to a few friends, complimentary to Miss Anna Maye Matthews, the occasion being a prenuptial variety shower.

There was a guessing contest, in which various household articles were displayed, and in which Mrs. N. L. Reed proved to be the most clever. She was remembered with a lovely handkerchief. The game of gossip was played very effectively and proved an opportunity for some good advice to be given the bride-to-be. After these Mrs. C. A. Holding read an interesting love story about the bride and groom, blank places in the story to be filled in with the names of various flowers. Mrs. J. L. Morgan had more correct answers to this than any one else, and was given the prize.

Mrs. Elvie Bless Armstrong favored the guests with several piano selections and accompanied Mrs. Holding, who sang in her usual lovely voice "At Dawning," "I Love You," and "I've Grown So Used to You."

Later a lovely iced course was served and the gifts presented in verse by Mrs. J. L. Morgan, who made humorous reference to our lack of rain but our enjoyment of a "shower."

Those present who wished the honor guest much future happiness were Mesdames Fred Webb, Herbert Lang, Jim Reed, Eugene Brown, A. Holding, O. E. Heacock, Elvie Bless Armstrong, N. L. Reed and J. L. Morgan.

Complimentary to Judge and Mrs. Cham Jones of Oklahoma City, who spent a week in Waurika with friends, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Turnage gave a 6-o'clock dinner Sunday night.

The table was beautifully laid with a centerpiece of snow-white periwinkles, with their green leaves. Those who enjoyed the lovely three-course dinner, aside from the honor guests, were Mrs. J. W. Biffle, Raymond and Wilson Jones, and Master Billie Hollinger of Wichita Falls, who is a house guest in the Turnage home.

THE TEXAS-OKLAHOMA FAIR

It is not too early to be thinking about the Texas-Oklahoma fair.

In its second year the Texas-Oklahoma fair has become an established institution. Last year's fair, the first, was a great success, and gave assurance of making a yearly fair a reality. Not only that, but the encouragement received convinced the men behind the movement that it could be developed and built into a much larger proposition.

This year many features have been added. There will be horse racing, with the finest string of horses that has ever been seen in the southwest. The exhibits will be greater and better than last year. Among the livestock exhibits will be some of the finest cattle ever shown. They come from Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas and elsewhere.

It is going to be a big show, and it is not Wichita Falls show. It is a show the success of which depends, not alone on Wichita Falls, but on the co-operation of the good folks of this section and of Oklahoma. Yet every man in Wichita Falls can contribute toward its success, not so much in dollars but in doing his bit to make the Texas-Oklahoma fair the biggest event of its kind in the history of Northwest Texas.

WHEN FRANCE WAS DRY

France is one of the wettest of wet nations. France is the vineyard of the world. France abhors prohibition and prohibitionists and yet France was the first country to have prohibition and the dry regime lasted two hundred years.

This is the way the dry story goes: Way back in the first century, when France was under the domination of the Roman empire, Emperor Domitian noticed that the grape crop in the Bordeaux region was abundant but that the corn crop had been ruined by bad weather. So the Roman emperor ordered his army to tear up every vine in the country.

France and particularly Bordeaux, the greatest wine producing region in the world, was bone dry for two hundred years. Then along came Emperor Probus, an advocate of light wines and beer and ordered vines planted in abundance. France has been as wet as the North Sea ever since.

America became dry in the regime of President Wilson. If the spell is to last for two hundred years then why make it a campaign issue in the presidential rush of 1924? According to ancient history there were dry Romans in ancient times but wet Romans came after them.

Will history repeat itself in the United States say two hundred years hence? If so, it doesn't carry any consolation in it for the army of thirsty ones of the vintage of 1923! They are going to remain as dry as the Sahara desert.

BAGGED A BARON

Another of the Gould girls has captured a foreign nobleman. This time it is Miss Helen Gould, daughter of Frank J. Gould who is to become the wife of a Swiss baron. He is of the royal line as his family were masters of state in the thirteenth century. He hasn't wealth to speak of but the father of the bride to be was handed two or three railroads by the wizard of the rail when the aforesaid wizard passed on in the long ago.

Frank J. did not walk in the footsteps of his father. He boycotted Wall Street and ignored the rail world. He married three wives in tandem fashion, made Paris his home, became the owner of one of the show places of France "and lives like a gentleman." Now one of his daughters, whose mother was a Kelly, has captured a Swiss title, and paid the price. American money makes the world go round.

SOLDIER BONUS COMING

President Coolidge pledged the American people that he would walk in the footsteps of President Harding. President Harding vetoed the Soldier Bonus bill. American Legion officials assert that President Coolidge will not veto a bonus bill if passed on to him by the new congress this winter.

Senator Reed Smoot, the financier of the senate, who is to be the next chairman of the senate finance committee, asserts that the new congress will pass a soldier bonus bill and the gentlemen from Utah has already notified Secretary A. W. Mellon that bonus legislation is inevitable in view of the changed line-up in both houses, and that the treasury department must face the problem of financing it.

Senator Smoot has warned the people that tax reduction is impossible and that congress must provide some new levies such as a sales tax to meet the cost of the bonus. Official Washington says that in the long run President Coolidge's attitude will make no great difference because careful canvass has shown that the bonus can command ample votes in the new congress for passage over a presidential veto.

Jones should bump his back and bow his neck. It will be impossible for him to either dodge the burden or shift it. It means an additional five billion dollars for the property owners of America to pay. President Harding vetoed the bonus bill because the congress that enacted the legislation did not provide the money to carry on.

Secretary Mellon advised the president at the time that the legislative department of the government had passed the buck to the executive branch of the government when the necessary tax measure of measures had not been enacted to raise the sinews of war. La Follette and his followers wish to revive the excess profits tax and there is a block of democratic senators who are for the La Follette proposal.

Senator Smoot and those who think like him would provide for a sales tax and if a sales tax isn't a legitimate tax then some of the wise economists of the world are talking through their head-pieces.

But the bonus is coming; the new congress will put it over. The logic of the situation is that those who have anything taxable and are in a position to help to carry the load had best get ready to put their house in order and then to keep it in order

The Ball He Threw Away Two Years Ago.

The Letter Of The Contract

He was shocked, but he repeated the imprecation. He repeated it because it shocked him.

It struck at what he held to be most sacred. It was rifling his own sanctuary and trampling its treasures in the streets.

He had never had a sanctuary but in her. Edith had been the holiest thing he knew. She was both shrine and goddess.

There was fire laid in the fireplace and when he returned home he lighted it. When it was crackling sufficiently he drew Edith's photograph from its frame and, after gazing at it long and bitterly, tossed it into the blaze.

He watched it blister and writhe as though it had been a living thing. The flame seized on it slowly and unwillingly, biting at the edges in a curling wreath of blue, and eating its way inward only by degrees.

But it ate its way. It ate its way till the whole lovely person disappeared—first the hands, and then the bosom, and then the throat and the features. The sweet eyes still gazed up at him when everything else was gone.

CHAPTER XXII.
Seven Years.

Edith's marriage is what Chipman had been afraid of on and off for a long, long time. The wonder was that it hadn't happened before. But, since it had not happened, he had got out of the way of expecting it. The fear of it used to dog him whenever he went to the theatre or the opera or out to dine.

There had been minutes when, at the sight of a feather or a scarf or something familiar in a way of walking, his heart and brain seemed to stop their function.

He had known himself to stand stock-still, searching wildly for the easy, casual phrases he had prepared—for the purpose of carrying off such a meeting as this, if ever it occurred, only to find that he was mistaken—that it was some one else.

In the earlier months that had been a relief. He couldnt have seen her and kept his self-control.

Then had come another period in which he felt he could have committed infamies just to see her getting in or out of a carriage, or lunching in a restaurant, or buying something in a shop.

He knew he could have discovered her plans and followed her; but he wouldn't do that.

Then he married Lily Bland and afterward the fear of meeting Edith came back. It was fear as much for her sake as for his own. He began to understand that the embarrassment wouldn't be all on his side, nor the suffering. He picked that up from the children.

It was astonishing that in all those seven years of their separation the hazards should not have thrown them together.

And now, at the moment when he might reasonably have felt safest, there she was!

That is, she was on the steamer. For seven or eight days they were to be cooped up on the same boat. He could never go on deck or into the saloon without having to pass her. Worse still, she could never go outside her cabin door without the risk of being obliged to make him some sign of recognition. And a sign of recognition between them—why, the thing was absurd! Between them it must be all—or nothing.

He looked at the passenger list again. Yes; that was her name: Mrs. Theodore Lacon.

As far as he could gather from the list, she was traveling alone, without so much as the companionship of a maid. He, too, was alone; but it was conceivable that if she didn't actually see him she might not know that he was on the ship at all.

The thought suggested a line of action. He was in his cabin at the time. He could stay there. He could avoid the decks by day and take his exercise by night.

So the week passed, and they reached Liverpool. He was purposely among the last to go ashore.

CHAPTER XXIII.
The Meeting.

Later he scanned, as discreetly as he could, the occupants of the train that was to take them to London. He couldn't see that she was anywhere among them. He sighed, but whether from relief or disappointment he was not sure.

As it was one o'clock, he took his seat in the luncheon-car, making sure in advance that she wasn't there. He had come to the conclusion by this time that she was not on the train. He did not, however, regret his precautions, because—well, because the sense of her proximity had made him feel as he had felt in the days when the very streets of the city in which she lived were hallowed ground.

He had supposed that emotion dead. It must be dead. It was not a living thing, his renewed yearning for a sight of her. It was only the reflex of something past. It could be explained psychologically. It was a sort of evanescent sentiment.

Yes, that was it, he repeated to himself as he lunched. It was nothing to be afraid of, nothing incongruous with the fact that he had left a wife—and child—in New York. It was not an emotion; it was only the echo.

And then, suddenly, they were face to face! He was on his way from the luncheon-car to his compartment. She was standing in the corridor, looking out at the landscape.

"Chip!" There was a half-minute of incredulous gazing before she said anything more. "What are you doing here?"

He felt the necessity of explaining his presence. "I was on the boat. I didn't know—"

"That I was on it, too?"

"I—I did know that," he stammered, "after we sailed. Not before. It was the name in the list—"

"But I never saw you. I was always on deck."

Her distress betrayed itself in the trembling of her voice.

He felt his own confusion passing. It was so natural to be with her—so right! His voice grew steadier as he said:

"I didn't go about very much. I was afraid—"

She nodded, speaking hastily. "I understand. It was kind of you. And you're—alone."

He cursed himself for coloring, but he couldn't help it. He had a wife and child in New York!

He saw that she wanted to recognize that fact from the first. She wanted to put that boy and his mother between them. Her husband and child stood between them, too. He took that cue in answering.

"Yes; I've run over hurriedly on business. And are you alone, too?"

She glanced toward the empty compartment where her bags were stowed in the overhead racks. "I'm on my way to join my—" It was her turn to color.

He nodded quickly, to show that he understood.

"He's in Biarritz," she hurried on, for the sake of saying something. "I'm to meet him in Paris."

"How are the children?"

"Tom was all right; but Chipman has been having the same old trouble with his tonsils."

They were being pushed and jostled by guards and passengers. Between sentences it was necessary to make room for some one going or coming.

She was obliged to step back into her compartment. Having taken the seat in the corner by the window, she motioned with her hand toward that in the opposite corner by the door.

CHAPTER XXIV.
Danger.

She continued to talk of the children. Suddenly he risked a question:

"Do they—understand?"

She was plainly agitated that he should disturb the ashes that buried their past. Her eyes shot him one piteous glance. "Tom understands," she said, at last. "Chippie takes it for granted."

"What makes you think Tom's discovered it to be unusual?"

"Because he's said so."

"In what way? Do you mind telling me?"

"You insist, at the risk of having your feelings hurt."

"Oh, that! Won't you tell me what it was? It would help me in my future dealing with the boy."

She gazed out at the park-like fields. "He asked me if you had done anything—bad."

"And you told him—?"

"I told him that I didn't understand—that perhaps I'd never understood."

"Thank you for putting it like that! But you did understand, you know—perfectly."

"I think I ought to tell you," she said, after long reflection, "that I understand sympathy better now than I did some years ago."

"Does that mean that if certain things were to do again—you wouldn't do them?"

She took on an air of dignity. "That's something I can't talk about."

"But I'm the very one with whom you could talk about it. Between us the conversation would be what lawyers call 'privilege.'"

"Is anything privileged between you and me?"

"Isn't everything? We've been man and wife—"

"That's the very reason. No two people seem to me so far apart as those who've been man and wife—and aren't so any longer."

The WATER'S FINE
Says William Bachrach
I.A.C. Coach Who Reveals How 20 Swimmers Trained to Become Champions

BACHRACH EXPLAINS PROBLEMS OF THE TRUDGEON
BY WILLIAM BACHRACH

As the single overarm stroke improves upon the elementary side stroke by bringing one arm out of the water in recovery, so the trudgeon improves upon the single overarm by bringing both arms out of the water. With this double overarm is introduced new problems in breath control and body balance.

In the side stroke the body remains in one position throughout the stroke. The single overarm bringing the top arm out of the water in recovery, makes no change in the position of the body. In the trudgeon, however, to get the bottom arm out of the water in recovery it is necessary to introduce a body roll.

This body roll brings the body on the stomach, face down in the water. With the face in the water you are confronted wit the problem of exhaling in the water.

Inhale as usual, through the mouth, taking a quick bite as the top arm is carried out of the water in recovery. As the top arm reaches the forward extended position, the body rolls into the face down position. Exhale through the nose under water, slowly.

Calculate the speed of the exhale by the length of time you expect your face to be under water so you will have a little air left for a final "snort" as your nose comes into the air.

This final snort is important. It blows out of the passages any drops of water remaining that might trickle down your throat and attack the windpipe while you are inhaling through the month. This would cause a strangling sensation such as you experience sometimes when drinking a glass of water.

How the Body Is Rolled

Some trudgeon stroke swimmers in order to get the final snort out vigorously hold their breath during the first part of the immersion of the face.

Coach of Illinois Athletic Club

They do not begin the exhale until the body starts to roll back to the side. This is a punishment that should not be endured. The best system is to breathe as nearly naturally as possible.

On land you do not hold your breath in or out even for the smallest fraction of a second. Inhaling starts instantly as exhaling ceases, and exhaling starts instantly as inhaling ceases. The same object should be aimed for in the water, with the exception that inhaling will be short, exhaling long. You can exhale slowly enough so you will always have something left for the final snort.

The body or stomach roll of the trudgeon changes the arm action as learned in the side stroke. In the side stroke the bottom arm makes only half a stroke and the elbow is bent. The sweep of the arm is horizontal. In the trudgeon the bottom arm makes a full stroke, is kept nearly straight, and the sweep is almost perpendicular.

The reason for this is that the body will not roll itself. You have to do something to make it roll. Therefore, you use the bottom arm as a lever.

To learn this stroke, t the starting position as in the side stroke, right arm extended forward under the head, left arm resting in the water near the hip. Start the bottom arm on its downward sweep. As it goes down, keep the arm full length, the body starts to roll to the stomach position.

Relax While You Coast

As the bottom arm reaches the forward extended position the top arm and the scissors kick have produced the greatest headway of the entire stroke. The body has again rolled back to the side position and you are making your finishing exhale short. For a couple of seconds you coast on your momentum, legs and arms in position but relaxed. Here is where you get the rest which is very necessary each and every stroke. During the coast you inhale through the mouth.

Unlike the crawl stroke, there is no connection between one complete revolution of the trudgeon stroke and the next. The coast breaks the continuity, giving a jerky effect to the progress. It is this feature of the trudgeon that makes it good for long distance swimming. You get more relaxation than in any other stroke.

Leg action in the trudgeon is the same as in the side and single overarm stroke. Some swimmers, however, introduce a flutter to the top leg. They feel that they must do something with their feet while they are floating face down and the bottom arm is making its pull. They make a couple of thrashes with the top foot, up and down, as in the crawl stroke. There is not much propulsion in the flutters, however, and I consider any motion that does not add to the progress a waste motion that can be dispensed with.

Which is the worst, a lounge lizard or a sidewalk shiek?

A newspaper man seeing a cowboy wearing a six gallon hat, a red handkerchief about his neck, chaps and spurs, noted that his skin was unfanned by the rays of the Texas sun. He wants to know how this could be. The answer is easy: He was a mail order cowboy.

Harry K. Thaw has been granted a vacation from the institution where he has resided since 1917. He may need a vacation but his brain doesn't need, any—it's been on one for several years.

We can not bring ourselves to envy the aviator who fell 3,000 feet and escaped death. If we fell 3,000 feet life wouldn't be worth anything after that.

The rule is that the tired business man who imagines he is going to raise hob when his wife goes on a vacation, usually puts in the first night walking the streets, finally goes to a movie, and after indulging in a "coke" goes home.

A Wichita Falls young man promised his girl a birthday present. He asked her what she wanted. She replied "Something for my neck." He gave her a bar of soap.

IRRIGATION

Consulting Engineer
Kahn Bldg., Eighth and Indiana

Into What Sized Farms Should the Surplus Lands On the Irrigation Project Be Divided?

THE SIZE OF THE ECONOMIC FARM UNIT FOR THE DIRECT MARKETING FARMER

As we indicated in the last article, we would sum up the acreage of the various money crops that have been discussed in this series and would try and determine as near as maybe the size of the economic irrigated farm unit for the average farmer. This summation will cover only the crops and acreages that should be planted by the farmer who does not expect to run livestock or dairy, except to a limited extent.

The size of the farm needed for dairying on a moderate scale will be discussed later.

We discouraged truck gardening because of the perishable nature of truck and the danger of over production, but said that every farm should have its own kitchen garden.

A good sized family can get all the garden truck they need from a plot of from one to two acres and even have truck to sell.

Cotton was found to be perhaps, the surest money corp and one man can raise from 30 to 60 acres of cotton without much additional help.

The various grains were shown to be poor money value crops compared to other crops, although useful for planting on new land and in rotation. It is hard to fix the acreage for grain, but probably 10 acres would be sufficient. In many cases no grain will be raised at all.

Hay was discussed, and it was shown that the hay acreage depended upon the tonnage per acre and the feeding value of the hay produced. If Alfalfa or some other legume could be raised for hay, then the acreage could be far less than if Johnson grass was grown. From 10 to 20 acres of hay land and pasture was found to be about what could be handled.

Corn was taken up with the understanding that many practical farmers believed that corn would not do well here, even under irrigation. Many others felt, however, that corn would do very well if it had sufficient water. We found that a man could raise from 25 to 40 acres of corn where it took the place of cotton as the main money crop or he could raise the full acreage of cotton and from five to 10 acres of corn besides.

Peaches and pears seem to be the tree fruits that promise the best with peaches in the ratio of about four, to one of pears. The total farm orchard area was found to be from five to 10 acres.

Berries and grapes do not seem to promise much money unless it is found that European grapes can be raised here. So only the home berry patch and vineyard was allowed. From one to two acres would be ample.

Then there must be an allowance of from one to two acres for farm buildings and corals.

Summing this all up, we find that the economic irrigated farm unit from the present evidence for the farmer, who does not dairy or raise livestock, is between 80 and 180 acres, depending upon soil and other conditions.

These figures may be entirely changed with the establishment of an experiment farm here. Such a farm may, and probably will, develop new and paying crops. Again as time goes on, the size of the farm unit on an irrigation project tends to decrease from a number of causes. No doubt in the course of years, the unit will be found to be about 60 acres. There has been a constant decrease of the size of the irrigated farm unit on the irrigation projects in the west, but at the beginning, the farm unit here should lie between 80 and 110 acres for the farmer who markets direct from the soil.

Carlson Defeats Exporters For Spuds 3-2

SPUDDER TWIRLER HAS EASY TIME WITH EXPORTERS TILL LATE INNING RALLIES SCORE

Spudders Make Hits Count For Runs in Early Part of Game; Errors Help Bergerites; Carlson Stops Threatened Rally in Ninth; Two Games Today.

BEAUMONT, Texas, Aug. 25.—A thrilling ninth inning rally fell just one run short of tieing the score, the Exporters losing the first game of the series to the Spudders, 3 to 2, in a great hurling duel between Hal Carlson, the Spudder pitching ace, and Lefty Caldera of the locals.

Carlson had a shutout until the eighth inning when the Exporters scored a run on a single and a double. One run more was added in the ninth on singles by Huber and Kitchens and sacrifice fly.

With two men on base Pop Jackson batting for Caldera, gave the Spudders a scare when he fouled one over the left field wall that needed only a few inches to have been good for four bases and consequently three scores. Jackson ended the misery by striking out.

Spuds Play Perfect

The Spudders played a great game both in the field and at bat. They played errorless ball on the field, while at bat they hit Lefty Caldera just hard enough to produce three runs, which grew large as the game progressed.

Hal Carlson secured four of the 10 hits made by the Spudder club. He slapped out a single in his first time at bat which resulted in a run, and in his second trip up rapped out a double.

Exporter errors helped the Spudders to score their second run in the third inning. Carlson had stationed himself on first and when Allen let Bescher's single to center get away from him and Carlson scored. Two more errors put Calder in bad situations.

Carlson Tight In Pinches

The Exporters hit Carlson for 10 safeties, five of them being doubles, but could not hit when runners were on bases. They came near scoring in the early innings more than once, but were thrown out on close plays at the plate or left stranded on third.

Bob Bescher started the first inning doubled to right scoring Allen. Strong ended the rally by flying out to Locker.

Huber started the ninth frame rally with a single to right. Kitchens also singled to right, landing Huber on third. Jackson batted for Caldera and after fouling one over the left field fence that needed but a few inches to have been a homer, he struck out. DeMaggio lifted a fly to Bescher that scored Huber.

WACO, Texas, Aug. 25.—Lewis Lloyd, 17, was killed Friday afternoon near Hearne while engaged with other workmen in digging a trench for the Humble Oil and Pipe Line company. The bank caved in, burying Lloyd up to his neck, crushing him so badly that he died within an hour after being extricated.

Take It Or Leave It

BY BILLIE SMITH

Spudders and Exporters again today at Beaumont. Earl Kunz and "Heinie" Meine will probably draw the pitching assignment in today's double bill.

Besides pitching a wonderful game Hal Carlson rapped out four hits in just that many times at bat. Hal always did swing a mean stick, yesterday he proved to doubting Exporters that he is well worth his salary. One of the Spudder pitcher's blows went for two bases and netted him one run, besides aiding in scoring others.

According to averages issued by Bill Ruggles, league statistician, Carlson is credited with 19 victories. Yesterday's game put him even with Rip Wheeler who has 20 to his credit.

Dallas Locker got back into the game yesterday playing second base, while Coombs went to center field in place of Art Weiss who was sent to right field. Locker didn't break into the hit column but did score one of the Spudders' three runs. The long boy did field his position at a thousand per cent.

Shortstop Turgeon, the player bought by the Chicago Cubs for a reported fancy price helped the Spudder cause yesterday by committing an error at a critical stage. He also failed to get one of the 10 bingles secured by his club.

Bob Bescher and Joe Berger connected for two safe blows each. One of Berger's blows went for two bases.

The Exporters rapped Carlson for 10 safe blows, five of them being for two bases. But considering the fact that the Exporter playing ground is surrounded on the right side by a very close in fence five blows is no feat at all.

The Spudder outfield was weakened greatly when the Chicago Cubs recalled Denver Grigsby. Grigsby was near the top in the matter of batting, while he played his position in a faultless manner. During the past two months Grigsby has fallen off a bit in batting, but not enough to keep him from being one of the most feared batters in the league.

The Spudders have Bob Bescher, Art Weiss, Red Williams, Cecil Coombs and Dallas Locker to play in the outfield, but none of this bunch can hit at the figure that Grigsby does.

Meanwhile Buddy Tanner is still out of the game, and it goes without saying that his hitting and fielding are being missed. Bob Barrett can play third base all right and Dallas Locker is no slouch at second, but the team will run much smoother when Tanner is holding down the hot corner.

Out of San Antonio comes a story with alibis for all the Spudder misplays made last Thursday. The Spudders made eleven errors that day which was a season record for one game. The alibi was that eight of the Spudder players had taken an airplane ride. They had been up in the air many times before but not that high and not for that long a time. They couldn't get rid of the dizzy sort of feeling before the game, and thus when it started many were still up in the air, which accounted for the way they kicked and threw the ball around.

Vic Keen won another game for Bill Killefer's Cub team yesterday, letting the Phillies down with one run and three hits. The former Spudder player has been going well here of late, and seems to be making the Cubs a valuable man.

GRIGSBY LEAVES FOR CHI-CUBS

Spudder Outfielder Here On Option Returns To Chicago

—SSPT—GRIGSBY ....

Denver Grigsby, Spudder outfielder, left Wichita Falls yesterday to join the Chicago Cubs, having been recalled to finish out the season at Chicago. Grigsby left the Spudders Friday at San Antonio and spent most of yesterday preparing to join the Cubs.

Grigsby has always been the property of the Cubs having gone to that club last year from a small league in Oklahoma. The Cubs sent Grigsby to the Spudders in the spring on an optional agreement. He has ranked around the top with the league leaders in batting, having an average of better than .350 for the season and up till the last two weeks which caught him in a slump he was clouting the apple for better than .370.

Grigsby has attracted the attention of many major league scouts this season with his good all round work as a member of the Spudder club. The Spudder outfielder can hit to any field and hits both left and right handed pitching. He is also a good fielder and possesses a strong throwing arm.

With the departure of Grigsby the Spudders are left with still a good sized bunch of outfielders, Weiss, Bescher, Williams, Coombs and Locker are gardeners, although Locker and Coombs can play any position.

He Owned One.

By The Associated Press.

GALVESTON, Aug. 25.—Eight Sand Crab misplays enabled the Steers to score all of their runs today to defeat the home club, 3 to 2. Slim Love added eight strikeouts to his total and was effective in the pinches except in the ninth when Whiteman tripled to left with Brown on base and scored on Segrist's miscue at third. Bill Tilden And Norton Of Africa Defeat Williams-Washburn For Title

By The Associated Press.

BROOKLINE, Mass., August 25.—The national tennis doubles championship today was won by William T. Tilden II of Philadelphia and his brilliant teammate, Brian I. C. Norton of South Africa. The mixed nation team defeated the American 1921 Davis cup team of R. H. Williams II, Bryn Mawr, Pa., and Watson Washburn, New York, in a five-set match, probably the most evenly contested of the tournament, which has been in progress at the Chestnut Hill courts of the Longwood Cricket club. The score was 3-6, 6-2, 5-7, 6-2.

It was a red letter day for Tilden, for as well as renewing his hold on half of the doubles title, with Mrs. Molla Mallory, he defended the mixed double championship. The champions defeated Miss Kathleen McKane, England, and John B. Hawkes, Australia, in a thrilling and hard fought encounter, 6-3, 2-6, 10-8.

Mrs. Mallory, too, had a big day, for in the first of today's championships, she had vanquished Miss McKane in 25 minutes in the final of the Longwood women's singles tournament by a score of 6-2, 6-1.

Ryan Bests Williamson; Byrd-Simmons Draw

RYAN OUTPOINTS K.O. WILLIAMSON

Byrd Does the Fighting But Referee Couldn't See Him

As a referee rules so it must be. After seemingly having outfought and outpointed his opponent in six rounds and getting a draw in two others Red Byrd, according to the referee, received a draw with Battling Simmons of Henrietta in ten rounds before 2000 people at the American Legion stadium last night.

Harry Ryan won a decision over "KO" Williamson in ten rounds of another final event by outpointing his opponent in every round of the ten. Ryan exhibited some clever ring work hitting his opponent just when he pleased and dodging any would be a knockout blow by Williamson.

Simmons Lost.

Simmons appeared to be lost and when without knowledge of just what he should do in his go with Red Byrd. During the first five rounds both boxers fought on the defense most of the time and mixed but little. However, all the fighting that was done was started and ended by Red Byrd. In fact in the entire ten rounds Simmons did inflict volleys of body blows on the red headed scrapper, but in so doing took several good blows to the head.

More than a month ago Simmons gained a technical knockout over Byrd in four rounds. Last night Byrd appeared to be a much better fighter, while Simmons was several degrees below his usual form. Simmons could hit Byrd but little, while the few blows he did get were harmless. While on the otherhand Byrd punched Simmons around the face and body whenever he chose to, and that was pretty often. Simmons was too busy trying to protect himself to get in any good blows.

Harry Ryan won every round of his bout with Williamson. The Oklahoma lad showed plenty of pluck and willingness to mix with his much cleverer opponent but couldn't land his blows, while Ryan took advantage of every opportunity and fed him with numberless kidney and face punches.

Morrisey Arrives.

Lee Morrisey, who is well known around Wichita Falls, arrived in town yesterday to prepare for his bout on Labor Day. The winner of the main event next Thursday night will fight Morrisey, who has been boxing in Utah for the past twelve months.

Stangler Hartwell of Iowa Park and Bull Dog Simmons of Amarillo wrestled for thirty minutes without either being able to get a fall out of the other. Neither grappler was able to get any good holds, and as a result of the draw the two will meet again Thursday night.

Levine Victor.

Jew Levine of Wichita Falls knocked out Kid Krautz of Burkburnett in the first round of their scheduled six round go. The Rattle Snake Kid of Wichita Falls knocked out Kid Harper of Breckenridge in three rounds. Both fighters are negroes.

The largest crowd of the season witnessed last night's Legion program the stadium being filled to capacity, which is estimated at better than 2000.

BLACK GHOST GIVES FIRPO BEST WORKOUT

By The Associated Press.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., August 25. 25.—All records for 880 yards free lin, Mo., stepped into the ring of Luis Angel Firpo's training camp today and gave the South American challenger for Jack Dempsey's title the stiffest and best workout he has had.

The space occupied by the engines and crew of an ocean steamship is not calculated in the "registered tonnage," as it has no real commercial value, and cannot be used either for passengers or cargo.

Mark Arie Wins Handicap After Trying 18 Years

By The Associated Press.

CHICAGO, August 25.—Mark Arie of Champaign, Ill., world champion trapshooter, today stood at 23 yards distance handicap and won the grand American handicap event with a score of 96 out of 100 targets, which ended the six-day shooting program here.

For the past 18 years the corn state sharpshooter has tried to win the grand American handicap event, but he never actually won the "sportsman's desire."

Probably Arie's most successful achievement was the taking of the world's championship at the Olympic games.

Mark Arie also won the all-around championship of North America for carrying the best average throughout six days of shooting in the grand American.

His score was 957 out of 1,000 targets. In taking this event he won the governor's cup from Phil R. Miller, runner-up this year, and the Dallas, Texas, shooter who won last year over the Atlanta City traps with a score of 939. Miller shot a 91 from 23 yards today.

DEMPSEY'S PUNCHES GIVE 'EM ENOUGH

By The Associated Press.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. W., August 25.—The power of Jack Dempsey's punches was revealed today when the heavyweight champion came dangerously near knocking out Jack Burke and George Godfrey, the two heavyweights, in one of the roughest workouts in which the titleholder has engaged since establishing camp on the shores of Saratoga lake two weeks ago. Falling into a clinch probably saved them from hitting the floor.

Women Breaks Water Mark

By The Associated Press.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., August 25.—All recors for 880 yards free style swimming for women, were shortened here today by Miss Gertrude Ederle of New York, when she negotiated the distance in 13:19, 11 seconds faster than the former world's mark. The remarkable exhibition by the eastern girl was given in a woman's senior national A. A. U. championship event. In the one mile junior event for men, Richard L. Wheeler of Tulsa, Oklahoma, was an easy winner.

Bowie Youth Dies As Mother Finds Him Unconscious

BOWIE, Texas, Aug. 25.—Fred Green, 14 years of age, son of F. C. Green, local agent for the Fort Worth and Denver railroad, met death here today under rather unusual circumstances. The boy, who had been carrying messages for his mother, who is manager for the Western Union telegraph company, started out at 9 o'clock this morning with a message. When he did not return his mother began a search for him and found him at noon in an unconscious condition under a cotton shed near the Denver station. He was removed to the home of his parents and died at 5:30 o'clock this afternoon. The attending physician declared death to have been due to diabetes.

A seven year old boy, one of Fred's little friends, is reported to have found young Creen earlier this morning. Thinking him asleep, the lad, after endeavoring to rouse him, left him, not realizing his condition. Besides his parents, the dead boy is survived by three sisters. Funeral arrangements have not been made.

LONGHORN COACH READY FOR WORK

Doc Stewart Arrives In Austin and Prepares For Season

BY H. G. STILWELL

AUSTIN, Texas, Aug. 25.—Coach E. J. "Doc" Stewart has arrived in Austin from Clemson College, South Carolina, and is looking over the situation in preparation for the opening of the University of Texas football training, on Sept. 10.

Being unfamiliar with the material with which he must rely to bring honors to Texas on the grid field, Coach Stewart made little comment in this respect, but he declared that it was his fondest hope to take the somewhat disorganized Texas team and weld it into a fighting eleven which will tread the colors of the South's largest universities in the dust.

Dozen Veterans Back

He will have as the basis of his team a dozen veterans of the tragic 1922 season, and a plentiful supply of promising material from the freshmen and shorthorn squads of last year. Into this aggregation the new coach will try to instill a fighting spirit which will make the Orange and White invincible on the field.

Coach Stewart held a conference with Line Coach Charles Seddon of the university, now in Columbus, Ohio, on his trip down from New York. He expressed himself as being highly pleased with Coach Seddon, and said that he would be able to work in entire harmony with the varsity line coach.

Prospects Good

"Seddon seemed to think that prospects for Texas are not bad," Coach Stewart said. "He is going into the game this season with the same enthusiasm that I am, and with the same hope of instilling that enthusiasm into the team, which, along with plenty of training and instruction, should produce wonders before the season is over."

In the lineup of the Texas team this fall there will be only one man, Capt. Tynes, who has tasted the joy of defeating A. & M. College. Tynes was on the wonder team of 1920, which took the Farmers in to the tune of 7 to 3. The other men will go into the field with this as their supreme aim. Many of them will play their last season for varsity, and will fight harder than ever to win for Texas once before leaving the Orange and White. Coach Stewart will certainly have a group of willing men to handle.

Curing Your Golf Troubles

By Jim Barnes

By JIM BARNES

Dear Sir:

Will you be good enough to explain the pronating of the wrists and forearm on the backswing, and how they are used in getting a snap to the stroke, in hitting the ball? About when should one begin to apply this snap motion of the wrists?

V. F.

Answer:

Possibly the best way for me to answer your question is to describe what should take place in taking the club back and bringing it down to the ball. The club should be started back low along the ground from the ball inside an imaginary line from the hole to the ball and prolonged on back through the latter, and then brought up until the hands are about the level with the shoulder and five or six inches out from it.

Now to do this, assuming that you are gripping the club properly, it is necessary, as the club goes back the left wrist turn over toward the right somewhat. This is the pronation of the left wrist on the backswing. As you begin to raise the club, the wrists lift up toward the head, just as though in the address you tried to lift the club straight up toward you by wrist action along without moving the rest of the arms.

If you take a full swing, that is go back far enough to let the club attain a horizontal postion, the wrists are thus bent in perceptibly.

Then when you start the club down, the hands ought to maintain approximately this same position with reference to the arms, until they are down to about level with the wrist. Here the hitting force begins to be applied. To get the club face back square with the ball, the left wrist is turned back toward the left to counteract the turning in the backswing.

As the club is brought against the ball, the wrists are given a quick flick forward along the path the hands are travelling, but without any stopping of the hands and arms. This is what is frequently described as getting the wrists into the stroke.

(Jim Barnes will suggest a remedy for your golf faults. Write him care of the sport editor, enclosing stamped envelope, if you want a personal reply.)

SPORTS THROUGH EDGREN'S EYES

—By Robert Edgren

Dempsey Best Against Big Man.

Dempsey and Firpo, biggest heavyweight attraction seen or near New York since Jim Jeffries and Bob Fitzsimmons fought for the world's championship at Coney Island a quarter of a century ago, will draw as big a crowd as seats and standing room can accomodate. If Rickard could provide an arena to seat half a million people, at popular prices, it would be filled.

The crowd won't draw the biggest gate, because prices are now limited by the state boxing commission rule. It wouldn't draw as much money as Carpentier and Dempsey in New Jersey for the same reason. New Jersey also limits prices now. The gate of over $1,000,000 drawn by Dempsey and the Frenchman will be a world's record for a long time to come.

In one way the Dempsey-Carpentier fight had more features to attract a big gate. Carpentier was a war hero, a romantic figure in world events as well as in the ring. Firpo is simply a man bigger than Dempsey, a hairy, husky giant with a beetling brow, no sentiment, no romance, but a right hand wallop that may possibly tip over a champion.

Dempsey Best Against Big Men.

Many people who went to see Carpentier and Dempsey, hoping that the gallant Frenchman might win because of the kind of man he was. The public is indifferent to what kind of a man Firpo is. Firpo never flew an airplane over German batteries and came back to be mentioned in the order of the day as a hero. He's a former blacksmith and drug clerk with big hands, a thick neck, a square jaw, bristling black hair and a great yearning to succeed Dempsey as a money maker.

Most of the people who go to see Firpo and Dempsey fight will be attracted by Curiosity. There's a chance that Firpo may knock Dempsey out. Almost everybody likes to have a ringside seat, or at least a bleacher seat, when a championship changes hands. It's something to talk about afterward.

It will be interesting in less degree if Dempsey knocks out Firpo. Dempsey, knocking out a giant, is always interesting. You see the twisting swaying body of Dempsey moving swiftly in, avoiding hard driven fists. There is a swift forward movement, a pause like a simulous grac

...mpsey is swaying under a load. then he come up with two or three tremendous lifting blows, and the giant is thrown back as if he'd been torpedoed. The rest—the finishing—is a mere detail. Usually the fight is half over when Dempsey gets in his first crushing punch.

Dempsey is at his best against big men. He dosen't do so well when fighting clever boxers who can match him in speed—as Tom Gibbons did at Shelby. Firpo is in the giant class, a couple of inches taller than Dempsey, 25 pounds heavier. Dempsey isn't a big man among heavyweights.

Crowd Cheers "Under Dog."

There is the international feature too, but it isn't like the international feature of the Carpentier-Dempsey fight. Firpo is from a country little heard of here. The crowd will be more a Dempsey crowd this time, merely because few Americans would like to see any American champion beaten.

Firpo, suspicious, thinks the crowd will be violently against him. He wanted to make Dempsey go to the Argentine to fight him.

He couldn't understand it when the crowd at his fight with Willard rose up and cheered big Jess at the end of the fourth round. He thought that was caused by prejudice against a foreigner. It wasn't. The cheering was for an old champion trying to fight his way back and showing unexpected agressiveness and determination in spite of heavy punishment. The crowd was with the "under dog." It was showing appreciation of gameness.

Bob Fitzsimmons, a naturalized American, was foreign born and began his fighting career in New Zealand. When Bob was knocked down by young Jim Jeffries, native born, with a tremendous left jab in the second round, and came back in later rounds fighting like a wild man in defense of his slipping crown, the crowd yelled its head off for Fitzsimmons.

When Carpentier staggered Dempsey with a right hand punch on the chin the crowd yelled itself hoarse for Carpentier.

When little Charlie Mitchell upset the great John L. Sullivan in Madison Square Garden, and then danced all over the ring before Sullivan's infuriated rushes, the crowd yelled for Mitchell.

We like to see Americans win. But Americans crowds are unique in one way. They give visitors every chance in the world.

Coffroth Plans Tia Juana Bouts.

Jim Coffroth one of the best fight promoter in the west, and more recently connected with racing at Tia Juana, is thinking of taking a whirl at the old game. Coffroth had made offers for a heavyweight championship match between Dempsey and Wills, to be held at Tia Juana in Mexico, just across the border line from San Diego, if Dempsey wins from Firpo. He wanted to get the Dempsey-Firpo match, but was unable to figure in the bidding for that event because Rickard had an agreement with Firpo for three matches this year, the third to be with the champion.

Tia Juana is the only place on the continent just now where boxing championships could be held under old conditions, for 20, 25 or 45 rounds to a decision, or to a finish.

If Coffroth runs one championship match successfully he may come back as the most popular of all boxing impressarios. People would travel from all over the world to see real championship matches under real championship conditions. Tia Juana is easy to reach. A match held in Tia Juana would have all the interesting setting of bouts held in the good old days in the far west. Tia Juana is a wide open town.

STOCK DECLINE FAILS TO HOLD

Speculators Attack Oil Issues But Make Little Headway

FINANCIAL FEATURES.

Total stock sales 276,000 shares.

Twenty Industrials averaged 91.50; net loss .33.

High 1923, 105.38; low 86.91.

Twenty railroads averaged 86.75; net loss .27.

By The Associated Press.

NEW YORK, August 25.—Stock prices drifted downward in today's relatively quiet session. Speculators for the decline resumed their attacks on the oil shares, using the recent cuts in dividends as an excuse, but they made litle headway. Prices were pointed upward toward the close as as a result of buying by shorts who did not wish to remain uncovered over the wek-end.

Marland oil closed nearly a point lower and Houston dropped two points. Other active issues showed only minor changes.

United States steel common closed at 92 1-2, up 1-4 but Baldwin and American Locomotive, American Can, Studebaker, and other so-called pivotal stocks showed small fractional losses one of the features of the session was a sharp run up in chemicals, which spurted seven points to 41, a new high for the year, but dropped back to 39 3-4 at the close.

Rails were again sluggish and with fractional recessions the rule. Strength of the French francs, which advanced 8 1-4 points to 5.71 1-2 cents, was the feature of the foreign exchange market. Demand sterling held fairly steady around 4.55 3-8. Greek drachmas advanced 21 points to 2.05 cents on limited trading.

The weekly clearing house statement showed increases of $8,338,000 in loans, discounts and investments; $2,750,000 in cash in own vaults; $16,902,000 in net demand deposits and $1,728,000 in time deposits. Aggregate reserve totaled $501,785,000, leaving excess reserve of $22,484,370, an increase of $9,802,060 over the week before.

GRAIN BREAKS IN LAST HOUR

General Selling Caused By Late Weakness Shown At Winnipeg

By The Associated Press.

CHICAGO, August 25—Heavy realizing, the result of more general selling induced by the late weakness at Winnipeg, brought about a break in grain prices in the final half hour today, but wheat managed to hold most of its advance. At the finish, wheat here was 1-4 to 3-4 higher, with December 1.07 to 1.07 1-4 and May 1.13 3-8 to 1.12 1-4; con was off 1-4; con was off 1-4 to 5-8c, oats a shade to 5-8c lower, while provisions gained 10 to 22 cents.

Corn and oats were largely affected by the action of wheat and closed easy. Buying of lard by brokers, thought to be acting for packers, gave firmness to privisions.

QUIET MARKS COTTON MARKET

Narrow Fluctuations in Half Day Session Show Slight Decline

By The Associated Press.

NEW YORK, August 25.—The cotton market was very quiet this morning and fluctuations correspondingly narrow. After selling at 24.25 at the opening, October eased of to 24.08, and closed at 24.11 with the general market closing steady at a net decline of 4 to 10 points on all months except September, which was 15 points higher.

The market opened steady at an advance of 2 to 8 points on re-iteraten reports of increasing cotton goods trade activity and further rains in the eastern belt.

December sold at 24.18 and January at 23.90 during the first few minutes, but the advances evidently met scattered southern selling or liquidation for over th week-end. This led to reactions of several points during the middle of the morning, with December selling down to 24.04, and January to 23.72, or 11 to 12 points net lower. Two more of the private end August reports on the crop were issued, one of them making the condition 55.9 and the indicated yields 10,926,000 bales.

The amount of cotton on shipboard, awaiting clearance at the end of the week, was about 47,000 bales last year, and while the amount was small, there was some comment on the fact that it exceeded last year's figure for the first time in a long while.

OIL PICK-UP BY OCT. 1 EXPECTED

Few Completions Recorded As Wildcatting Slump Continues

Few oil completions were recorded during the week in the Wichita Falls district. Few tests are being drilled. Wildcatting has slumped decidely during the past two weeks and only a few permits have been applied for, according to T. L. Coplin, superintendent of the railroad commission for this district.

Relief of present conditions is expected in the next 30 days. Many operators who have experienced these slumps, are of the opinion that a change for the better will be noticed by Oct. 1.

Gasoline Sold Readily.

Representatives of refineries in this district are of the opinion that they will continue to dispose of the gasoline output. Jobbing sales are very heavy and much gasoline is being shipped out of this district to other points. Retailers say they are now having the largest business of the year and that gasoline is being sold readily.

The Sunshine State Oil and Refining company, the Texhoma Oil and Refining company, the Griswold Oil company and Chenault and Lee have applied for permits to drill offset wells in various pools in this district. There is some offsetting being done by many companies and there is little likelihood that the curtailment will ever reach the state where absolute stagnation will prevail.

Wilson No. 1 Completed.

During the week J. V. Hanley's Wilson No. 1, Verschoyle district was brought in making 150 barrels from sand found at 1,584 feet.

Bruce Greenwood, et al completed their Wilson No. 1, Verschoyle district in Archer county for 75 barrels from sand encountered at 1,388 feet. The well is being put on the pump.

Texhoma Oil and Refining company's L. F. Wilson No. 3, G. H. & H. company, R. R. survey, Archer county, east of the Peterson pool, has been completed with initial production of 75 barrels.

The same company is building a derrick for their Waggoner No. 1, Gibson survey, south Electra field.

Shappel Sets Casing.

The T. O. Shappel test offsetting the Lone Star Investment company's Kemp and Kempner No. 2, block 42, Kemp-Munger-Allen district, Archer county, has set casing and will test out a likely looking sand found at 1,614 feet.

In the Swastika field there is little activity and no completions are reported from that district during the week.

PIPE LINE RUNS GO LOWEST YET

1,300 Barrel Slump Sets Total at 68,955, But Archer Increases

Special to The Record News.

ELECTRA, Aug. 25.—Pipe line runs for this district show a decline for the week of 1,300 barrels daily with a total of 68,955. This is the lowest average for the year. With the entire field practically devoid of drilling, resulting in an absence of flush production, Electra shows a decrease of more than 2,500 barrels in daily runs. Because of some good runs from the Sunshine pool, Archer county made a gain of 1,000 barrels over the figures of the previous week.

Sunshine Gets Best Well

The Sunshine State Refining company brought in the best well of the week, being its No. 3 on the Carter land, block 170 in the Sunshine pool, which is swabbing and flowing by heads at the rate of 450 barrels from the 1,578-foot pay. The well is an offset to the east of the J. I. Staley producer. This company is also making preparations to complete its No. 2 in block 68 Carter, and will begin drilling into the sand Monday afternoon. Carter No 4 in block 62 is drilling at 1,200 feet, and No. 5 is drilling at 1,520 feet. This activity in drilling by the Sunshine company with the unsettled condition of the market is due to the necessity of offsetting the other producers in the vicinity of the company's properties.

F. H. Cohlke has finished a nice pumper on his lease between the minchew-Verschoyle wells on the Wilmot land and the Riner-Bailey producer on the Luke Wilson, which is reported to be good for 75 barrels. It has also added some new territory to that part of the field.

Henley Well In Oil

A good sand was encountered by J. H. Henley and associates at 1,577 feet, 1,300 feet north of the Chenault well, which set casing and shut down after penetrating the sand a few feet. The hole is standing 400 feet in oil. This company has another well on the sand in block 636, about a mile south and east of the Chenault-Lea producers and the same distance south of the Wilmot wells. This is on the Wilson land in the extreme southeast part of the Petersen pool. It picked up the pay at 1,601 feet. Operations were stopped on account of leaky casing, which may have to be reset before bailing can be resumed.

Location has been made by the McCarty Oil company and Chenault-Lea in block 343 Wilson in the northeast extension of the Petersen pool. They will start drilling in the near future. A location has also been made by Petersen-Staley and Wynee on their 45-acre lease near the Chenault well.

Finley 40-Barrel Well

Mahlstedt-Mook company's No. 1 Wilson promises another well, offsetting the Riner-Bailey producer to the east. Top of the sand was picked up at 1,609 feet, and casing was set with oil standing 800 feet deep.

In Wichita county the curtailment program has reached a stage where drilling is absolutely at a standstill with the exception of some tests in the semi-wildcat district. On the older leases considerable work is being done cleaning out when things in oil have reached a basis which will warrant operations.

The Finley test on the Ancel ranch, seven miles southwest of the South Electra pool, has finally been completed in the sand at 1,748 feet, and is good for 40 barrels. On section 1, H. & T. C. Ry., Wirt Franklin lost the hole in his initial test and is starting another well. This is located on the Womack land north of No. 1 in Wilbarger county. Some tests which were shut down on account of lack of water will again start up since heavy rains this week filled the ponds.

North of Clara the Texas company is drilling its No. 1 Poter around 1,10 feet. A derrick is up for the Hammond test to the west of the Adams-Brown-McAlister test, but actual drilling will not begin at this time. The test of Cooper et al on the Hines tract, two miles south of the Clara producing area, was forced to shut down for lack of water. This has now been remedied.

Northeast of Iowa Park on the Lindsay farm, the deep test of the Humble Oil company is making rapid progress. Drilling is in progress around 1,950 feet. The Knox-Finlay company encountered a showing of oil in their No. 3 test at 285 feet. This is eight miles north of Wichita Falls on the Saner brothers' land, and may be tested out with the hope of getting a small producer. No. 2 Saner of the same company is drilling east of 1 at 1,760 feet.

Goehler Opens New Field

South of the Finley lease, on the Brunnenburg farm, Varner and others have started up after a shutdown to make water connections. They are drilling around 300 feet.

Near Grandfield, preparations have been made to place the Oklahoma-Texas Refining company's No. 1 well on the pump. This is on the Goehler tract in the river bed. The well was brought in last week and is still flowing by heads from the 1,640-foot pay at the rate of 200 barrels a day, opening up a new pool.

This company has spudded in its No. 2 Goehler, about 400 feet north and east of No. 1 near the Grandfield bridge. Casing was set on top of the sand at 1,504 feet, and will be standardized. This well is 600 feet east of the Continental Oil company's No. 3 300-barrel producer. The other wells of the Continental are producing in the neighborhood of 250 barrels daily.

12 Corporations In Wilbarger On Search For Oil

Special to The Record News.

VERNON, Texas, Aug. 25—Twelve corporations are drilling wildcat wells in Wilbarger county. The Tidal Oil Company is drilling on the McCaleb farm 16 miles north of this city. The South Vernon Oil and Gas Company is drilling on the Stephenson lease 8 miles south of Vernon.

Murchison and Pigg are drilling on the Staley farm 8 miles east of this city. The Texas Pacific Coal and Oil Company is starting a deep test near Harrold. The Number Nine Oil Company is drilling several wells in the county.

The South Vernon Oil Company has two excellent showings in shrdlunuuu two excellent showing in its test south of Vernon. At approximately 1,100 feet they encountered a strong gas flow that was ignited, burning up the rig and tools. The company has built another rig and is installing new equipment.

Oil Production Stationary Except For Big Powell-Corsicana Increase

Production of crude oil in the United States as a whole during the week was at a standstill with the exception of the Powell-Corsicana district which increased more than 20,000 barrels, which absorbed declines in other fields.

Almost simultaneous completions at Corsicana added a heavy production to that field and offsets any declines in the other fields of Texas. A number of the completions were on the Humphreys Oil company's lease in the Powell district, where completion has been delayed waiting pipe line facilities, which hav now entered the field.

The Humble Oil company is the leading company of Texas so far as production is concerned. The company is rated as having a daily production of more than 40,000 barrel. The Humphreys Oil company is second, with approximately 34,000 barrels This includes the flush production from the recently completed wells in the Powell-Corsicana district.

MUSES HAUNT CITY HOOSEGOW

Confinement Brings Forth Literary Talents Of Prisoners

Cells at the city jail do not talk, but on their walls are messages left by inmates who expressed themselves in various ways.

Being lodged in jail seems to have varied effects on those caught in the toils of the law. It would seem the seclusion of a jail cell has an uncanny inspiration on those confined. To some a cell is an incentive for the sleeping muses to come to the luckless prisoner for companionship and cause them to burst forth in lilting prose or allegory.

To those who taught John Bunyan, who wrote his "Pilgrims Progress" in old Bedford jail, had monopolized the distinction of jail birds as literary characters, there is a rude surprise. Others have waxed literary behind the bars and unlike Bunyan did not have to remain in jail ten years to give birth to their literary offerings.

Everybody's Been There.

Women, men, boys and girls have been in the city jail. Every crime from murder to putting dynamite caps on the car tracks Halloween night, has had its representative there. The hobo picked up asleep on a cold winter night in a box car at the freight yard; the hanker and the oil magnate who got drunk at a poker game tried to get home and ran their $6,000 car into a down town show window; the street woman caught in a raid; high school boy and girl joyriders drunk on a pint of emu liquor; these and others have been in the city jail. Most of them have written their sentiments on the jail house wall.

For instance some cosmopolite who evidently thought an inspection of every city jail in the United States was a distinct honor put up at the cell hall his inscription was "22 states, 170 times in jail for vagrancy; just a young man yet."

Civic Pride.

An evidence of civic pride is the following rhymed review which was the sentiment left by an inmate on the wall:

"Here's to old Wichita Falls, land of blue skies
Where the sun always shines and the dirt always flies
Where we eat, drink and footrace, the whole year round
Where we blink up our money and sleep on the ground
Long may she prosper the story to tell
There's no place like Wichita this side of Hell."

A juvenile wrote with a piece of chalk at the very top of a 12-foot high cell—how he ever got so high is still a mystery to the jailer—the following: "I got put in jail for shooting a pen in a baloon at Kresses and I hope this place burns down."

"Just a good girl gone wrong," some female inmate scrawled with a pencil on the wall just above her cot in the jail.

"Have done everything in the world but get in jail; this makes it unanimous" another feminine handwriting reveals.

"Girls I got put in here for the best man on earth and I'm sorry—I stood it and never weakened," some women wrote as encouragement to others she knew would occupy the same cell.

"Last Quart Did It"

"That last quart did it but it was worth it," someone wrote while probably feeling the effects of the last quart.

The following is a typical example of the poetry on the walls:

"Here's to the well that bubbles and flows
Here's to the boy with the dirty close
Here's to the girl who laughs with joy,
When she sees the check of her grocery boy."

There have evidently been a few bolsheviks in the jail for there are columns devoted to picking out flaws in the governmental system. The officers are scored with vituperation which rhyme and some that don't but conveying the same meaning.

The track will be in excellent shape for the races and is being dragged daily. The track is new and requires a vast amount of work A sprinkler is being used and the dragging follows.

MARRIAGE QUOTATIONS SHORT!

Young Daniel Waiting For T-O Fair

The marriage market has been off about 50 point in Wichita Falls the last week.

Quotations have been few and indications are that Dame, Cupid, the crafty plunger who has given the matrimonial market so many fluctuations, is laying low and will show his hand soon.

The psychology of the purchase of marriage certificates is interesting. Of course June is the month mostly chosen by the matrimonians for their venture. Other months and times are guided by circumstances.

"We will issue a large number of marriage licenses during the fair. There will be more than usual issued next Labor day. Every time a circus comes to town, we have a run on licenses," one of the deputies who issues licenses in the county clerk's office said Saturday

When asked why holidays and festive occasions caused the Darbys and Joans to decide to begin their descent down the marriage hill together, the clerk said such occasions gave life to the marriage idea.

"They run around together at a fair, or circus and everybody seems happy and then they get reckless. They decide there is no need of waiting any longer and the next thing they are in here looking for a license and a minister or justice of the peace," he said.

GWINN DRAWS FEMME FLARE

Bobbed Haired Women May Frequent His Court But They're Not Divorcees

Hear ye! Another brief for the bobbed hair cult!

Though the bobbed haired lassie may get in trouble more often than those who still think barber shops are "for men only," the former have the edge on the latter in one important respect.

When Judge Gwinn said that nearly all the women offenders who came before him in justice court had bobbed hair, a rebuttal argument was at once sought by the bobbed hair femmes to meet the judge's assertion.

They found it.

Not Divorcees.

One of the women deputies at the courthouse who has lined up on the infield of the bobbed hair nine discovered Saturday that the women who get divorces are NOT those with trimmed trellises.

"I have been in the courts of Judge Wilson, Judge Napier and Judge Martin the last six months and I do not recall a single instance of a woman with bobbed hair being in a divorce suit. Neither have I heard a single bobbed hair woman named as a co-respondent in divorce," the bobbed hair advocate observed.

Wichitans Will Enjoy Good Run Of Winter Plays

Patrons of the legitimate stage will be glad to know that Wichita Falls has secured a splendid run of bookings for the winter season. Big New York stage plays will make five Texas towns—Fort Worth, Dallas, San Antonio, Houston and Wichita Falls. Majestic vaudeville houses in these cities are booking these plays this season, and H. S. Ford of this city has grasped the opportunity to book Wichita Falls along with the other cities.

Ford says prices here will be no higher than in Dallas or Fort Worth, and big shows booked there will make Wichita Falls before going back to Oklahoma City or Denver and northern points.

"Irene," a musical show, will open the season Wednesday, September 12, with Thomas Jefferson and Bessie Bacon following on September 25 in "Lightnin'." Other winter bookings are "The First Year," "The Bat," "The Clingin' Vine," "Kempy," "Lassies White and His Minstrels," "The Fool," "The Gingham Girl," "Tangerine," "Up She Goes," "Wild Flower," "The Passing Show," "Irene Castle," "The Cat and the Canary," "Blossom Time," Nora Bayes and her concert company and others to follow.

The rule governing the advance seat sale will be similar to that in other Texas cities—that is, no seats will be put away and held unless paid for.

When a Bank Account Looks Good

When you have come to the end of your earning capacity—when your working days are over, then is when a bank account looks good. It is then too late to wish for the money you spent foolishly in early life.

The mill will never grind with water that is past, and the money you spend foolishly is gone beyond recall.

Camp Fire Girls Foster Blue Bird Movement.

Now that the Camp Fire Girls are an established organization in Wichita Falls, they are turning their attention to their little sisters and their friends and are establishing a Junior organization, the Blue Birds, for little girls between the ages of six and 11 years.

Four nests will be organized at once under the leadership of Misses Zona Bachman, Nell Warman, Ruth Frank and Therressa Kaufman.

The Blue Birds have aims and ideals similar to those of their older sisters, the Camp Fire Girls, but they are expressed and presented in a different way. Their watchword is "Si-he-gro" from the words sing, help, and grow. Their program provides play, interest in helpful tasks, training in kindergarten work, organized games, and leads to sound and happy minds and bodies.

When a girl first joins, she works to fulfill requirements and little tasks for which she is awarded feathers of brown and gray. When she has received 10, she becomes a Nestling. As she learns more, and earns 10 more feathers, which she puts on her little gray Blue Bird dress, she becomes a Fledgeling and receives her little blue cap. With 10 more feathers, she est rank, and becomes a Flier. The receives her little blue wings, her high-feather system teaches little girls to form good habits and to do tasks around their homes cheerfully and well. Blue Birds learn to live busy happy lives and learn how to play unselfishly with other children.

The organization will grow rapidly in Wichita Falls and will be fostered by Camp Fires, churches, and kindergartens.

Today's Poem

IF YOU AND I

"If you would smile a little more
And I would kinder be;
If you would stop to think before
You speak of faults you see;
If I would show more patience, too,
With all with whom I'm hurled,
Then I would help—and so would you—
To make a better world."

If you would cheer your neighbor more
And I'd encourage mine.
If you would linger at his door
To say his work is fine.
And I would stop to help him when
His lips in frowns are curled,
Both you and I'd be helping them
To make a better world—Guest.

On That Age-Old Subject Of Tolerance

By ALTA HEACOCK

It's a strange and very interesting business—this living! When you have gotten about half way down the long trail and stop to look back over the road—and then to peer interestedly into the future—you are convinced that there are an awful lot of things about it that you do not understand. And you needn't be gifted with an energetic imagination to come to that conclusion either!

Take this matter in which most of us are whole-heartedly engaged at the present time—that of making people over. At least that is what we are trying to do. Th efact that our suggestions are not followed with any degree of enthusiasm, is not our fault. We have put enough time and thought and energy into them, that they should have borne wonderful results. Queer about the whole thing, isn't it? We wouldn't be very happy in a world that has known individualism, to have folk turned out just like nail files, all copied from the same pattern! Yet this making over of people, trying to make their thoughts and acts follow the same channel as do ours, if it were a success, would amount to just that!

Mark Twain said at one time, "To be good is noble, but to make somebody else good is nobler—and easier." Perhaps that is where we get the kick out of all this reform business, only we will have to be prepared for the kick that is surely coming back, if we indulge in this kind of thing too much.

The worst of the whole matter is that the people we want to make over the most, are the ones th t are nearest and dearest to us. I suppose because the personal element is always present with us, in our dealings with them. With other folks we can be placid generous, and tolerant, for our lives and theirs are not so closely interwoven, but where there is a degree of intimacy among the most of us, there is present the desire to change the other person, maybe one way, but more than likely in several. And we are so complacent about it!

I often wonder why Paul didn't come right out and mention intolerance as one of the seven cardinal sins, instead of having it in the back of his mind when he wrote so beautifully to the church at Corinth that thirteenth chapter on charity.

The intolerance of the older generation has more justice in it than some of the other intolerance we meet with. They have had more experience than the rest of us have had in meeting life. And while their experience may not have been just the same as ours, still they will hold! If they could only point the way kindly, and then philosophically let the youngsters go ahead, if they insist on it, and if they would only not insist on being so very personal about it, every one would be saved a great deal of resentment.

They can not expect to keep their children prisoners in the house of love, shielding them from all experiences that make for growth. So often parents are intolerent of just that. I know a woman who will not attend church services with her married daughter, because the daughter has joined a different church since she has grown to maturity than the one to which the mother adheres. The fact that it was a matter of growth and happiness to the daughter makes no difference. And yet I am very sure that the mother plans for cooperation in worship when they are among the unnumbered throng that will surround the throne.

The young people pride themselves on being generous and broad-minded and they are working just as hard as

Graham
NEWS AND PERSONALS

GRAHAM, Texas, Aug. 25.—The past week in Graham society was a dull one compared with the preceding one when there were a score of parties one after the other. The present week however, is not lacking in interest. The time for the opening of school has been officially set for September the third, a little earlier than usual. All the teachers have wired that they will be here on time, but, so far, the students have not been heard from yet. Maybe they do not even want to think about the possibility.

The chief event of the week from a quanity standpoint, was the Lion's club banquet in Victory park last Thursday evening, August 16th, 1923. The occasion was the presence of Col. Louis C. Perry, district governor for Texas. About 100 Lions, Lionesses and cubs were present to enjoy the eats, the music and the address of Col. Perry.

The menu was as follows: Sliced tomatoes, olives, potato salad, fried spring chicken, potato chips, ice cream, tea and water. Dr. H. E. Griffin acted as toastmaster. Invocation was said by Dr. W. A. Morris.

After the banquet, the following program was enjoyed: music by the Graham Harmonizers; reading, Master Jack Faunt Le Roy; quartette, Messrs Humphreys, Hampton, Faunt Le Roy and Thornton; reading, Miss Avis Calvin; music, Graham Harmonizers; address of welcome, John B. Rhea; address on Lionism, Col. Louis C. Perry; music, Graham Harmonizers; music, Misses Elizabeth and Tella Bell Touchstone.

Col. Perry in his address spoke on the general subject of Lionism. He stressed the point of service, the service to the home town, to mankind, and service to the boys and girls. Service is 90 per cent Lionism.

The top of the mountain, where the banquet was held, is known as Victory park. This place is being attractively fixed up with a drinking fountain, benches, lights and other comforts and when completed, will be turned over to the city for a public park. About $250 has already been expended on the improvements and when completed public park, tsehmrdluaoihrdludwlu will represent an investment of around $1,000. A pathway has been built to the top.

The Les Hibeaux held its regular session at the home of Mrs. Henry Criswell last Tuesday afternoon. The club high score, a lustre vase, was won by Mrs. C. E. Beavers. The guest high score, an embroidered guest towel went to Mrs. Frank Parrish. Mrs. W. Z. Allen won the cut, a bottle of toilet water. Delicious refreshments were served of tuna sandwiches, fruit salad, potato chips, olives and ice tea.

The following were present: Mesdames, Frank Forbes, Frank Parrish, C. E. Beavers, W. Z. Allen, Finley Scruggs, W. D. Norman, C. P. Hutchison, O. Faunt Le Roy, John B. Rhea, Misses Elaine Morrison, Zella Allen, and Bladen Garrett.

Honoring Miss Lela Calvin of Markley, the guest of the T. O. Calvins, Misses Lillie Mae Calvin and Mildred Tidwell entertained with a sunrise breakfast in Victory park on top of the mountain Tuesday morning. It was a merry bunch of girls that cooked the bacon over hot coals. Alongside of this was served the following menu: Ham, pickles, cake, bread, potato chips, and coca cola. A good many kodak pictures were taken of the party and surrounding scenery. Those who went up the mountain were: Misses Martha Mae Morris, Frances Bell, Frances Bowron, Ruby Lee Edens, Raye Thomas, Mildred Tidwell, Mary Thomas, Dale Dowdle, Lillie Mae Calvin and Lela Calvin.

Something out of the usual was the party given by the E. C. Reeds on their lawn last Tuesday evening. The spacious lawn was decorated with Japanese lanterns enclosing the electric lights. Chairs in bunches of fours and fives were scattered about. It was a regular stunt party for the married people who attended and their ebullient manner was convincing proof of an enjoyable occasion. Outdoor games were played, those of three deep, riding the aeroplane, spoon race, snake dance, giving instruction in the Siamese language, passing the dollar, meeting the president and his wife, and other such foolish games calculated to create the greatest merriment for the energy expended. Punch was served throughout the evening. At the close, refreshments of fruit jello and angel food cake were served. A quartette made up of Messrs Jess Warren, O. Faunt Le Roy, Joe Wooten and C. P. Hutchison sang the old time songs of Carry Me Back to Old Virginny, etc. Everybody concerned contributed jokes during the evening. Those present were: Messrs and Mesdames Frank Forbes, Charles Hinson, C. P. Hutchison, H. Hubbard, I. K. Parker, W. E. Simpson, W. Z. Allen, C. E. Beavers, Finley Scruggs, Jess Warren, J. J. Akin, O. Faunt Le Roy, A. A. Morrison, Henry Criswell, John B. Rhea, Joe Wooten, Misses Mary and Raye Thomas.

A merry family group met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joe T. Carter Tuesday evening, honoring the 58th birthday of Mrs. J. E. Parsons. A general good time was held on the lawn. Ice cream and cake were served to Dan Cusenbary and family, Charles Parsons and family, Mr. and Mrs. George Parsons, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Hawkins, Edgar Steele, E. S. Cusenbary and the J. T. Carters.

Under the direction of Mrs. Fred Mbellendick, several young people of the city who possess talent are rehearsing daily for the entertainment to be given for the benefit of the library to be built in the near future by the Chautauqua club. The plays will be given on the nights of September 7 and 10 at the Liberty theater, in connection with the regular pictures. Two one-act plays will be given, a different one on each night, and in addition there will be special musical numbers. The management of the Liberty theater has agreed to give half of the proceeds of each night to the Chautauqua club.

Quarrels of Arabia Fought Out in Cardiff

By The Associated Press.

CARDIFF, Wales, Aug. 25.—London may shelter this summer white collared visitors from all over the world, but Cardiff often finds her streets littered with rough-neck sailormen from the Seven seas. This was the case recently when 800 Arabian stokers made the dockfront the scene of an attempt to settle tribal differences finding their origin on the shores of the Red sea. White dockers and sailors took their hands out of their pockets, spat on them, and leaned into the thick of it without asking whether it was a private battle or a free-for-all.

Four policemen came at a run and dutifully attacked the 800. Their truncheons made no impression on the mass, but they went on with their task. Knives began to flash, and brown-skinned Orientals went dashing through the dockyards seeking reinforcements of their clansmen. The Chamari tribesmen were settling an old grudge with the Adenese.

At the note of a whistle the four bobbies fell back to join 20 others who had come up in a motor lorry. The 24 charged.

The Arabs then scattered, the police close on their heels picking up stragglers. The sad and battered company that rode away in the police van was composed of many tribes but there was no fight left in them.

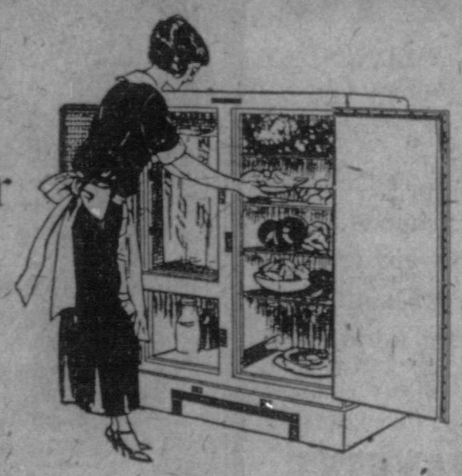

Many ships come into Cardiff with Arabs serving in their crews as stokers an ddeckhands.

Coats for Women
Autumn
Nineteen Twenty-Three

Some of the loveliest days of the year come after the heat of the summer is done and colors come to brighten the trees; days cool and invigorating that bring out as many new coats as there are motors on the road and crowds at the football games. Because the new Fall Coat is the most important purchase to be made right now, we take pleasure in presenting this early showing of Hart Schaffner & Marx models. Many lovely Sport Coats with a spirited style and distinction that make the Sport Coats of other seasons appear drab and uninteresting. Many of them have the becoming flares that commence from an inverted plait just a little below the shoulder. Many models are belted and have pockets that are frankly flapped and lapels that are clearly cut and have fine lines; apparently trivial details but of importance when imperfect tailoring would mar the hang and style of a coat.
These coats will furnish any woman with a legitimate excuse for spending much of her time out doors this season.

IBANEZ TELLS INSIDE STORY

How "Enemies of Women" Spectacular Picture Was Filmed

By VICENTE BLASCO IBANEZ

(Author of the novel, "Enemies of Women," which has been made into a great motion picture by Cosmopolitan Productions, starring Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens, and which will be the attraction at the Strand theater all week, starting September 3. It is distributed by Goldwyn.)

Eleven o'clock of an autumn night—and autumn is a second springtime on the Blue Coast! Though it is mid-November, I am walking about my garden for a breath of the cool night air, fragrant with the perfume of fruits and flowers. Only one sign of spring is missing: the blue flash of the fireflies, as they dance in and out through the shrubbery against the black curtain of night.

Suddenly a strange uproar breaks in upon the silence of my sleeping garden.

My house is situated on the outskirts of Menton, on an avenue that winds from the shore of the Mediterranean, across a maze of foliage and garden walls, up along the southern slope of the Maritime Alps. At night time this street, shut in between two lines of trees, which are so thick that they cut off all view of the buildings, becomes as silent as a path through the forest. Only the panting breath of nature can be heard, while the slightest sound of human origin seems important enough to require the whole of one's attention.

I confess that I was not only surprised, but somewhat alarmed, when I saw the vegetation in my garden suddenly brighten to a violent glow, while the deep peace of the night was broken by a hubbub of voices and horns. A number of automobiles had stopped in front of my gate, flooding my whole villa with the glare of their headlights, and rending the air with their sirens. The bell on my garden gate began to ring. Who could be calling at such an hour? And why were they making so much noise about it? I wondered whether some band of Fascisti might not be invading my abode from the neighboring frontier of Italy, in pursuit perhaps of some luckless communist. I stepped to the gate and peered out.

But now a youthful voice began calling to me in Spanish, with just a trace of English accent:

"Mr. Ibanez—Mr. Ibanez—we have just arrived from New York! We are the Cosmopolitan people, working on the film of your novel, 'Enemies of Women'!"

American enough, this visit, surely! Eleven o'clock at night and no introduction! The maids in our house, and our gardeners, came running up, awakened from a sound sleep by all this noise. I turned on the lights in the garden, while the servants did the same inside the buildings. Through the gate came the automobiles, one by one, and from them stepped a number of gentlemen in smoking jackets, and beautiful women in lowcut evening gowns.

The man who had addressed me in Spanish now began to explain the reasons for this extraordinary visit. He was a handsome young fellow, an actor, born in the United States, but of Spanish parentage—Pedro de Cordoba—a name well known to all lovers of American films. They had supposed I was traveling in Spain, he said, but they had learned an hour before that I was back in Menton. They had arrived from Paris on an evening train, and had at once donned their evening clothes for dinner and dancing at the Cafe de Paris in Monte Carlo.

"On our learning that you were here," Cordoba continued, "someone suggested that we pay you a visit. We all liked the notion—so here we are."

We ordered refreshments at once for this troupe of invaders. Meantime, the ladies were running about my garden, like so many girls, looking at the trees and flowers and laughing and joking at each of their discoveries. The men in the party remained in conference with me. Their spokesman-general proved to be Alan Crosland, the famous director, a smiling young man of few words, but with the bearing of a leader, accustomed to managing things.

As I thought of these people who had come all the tiresome way from Paris, and had come from the train to a restaurant, where they had danced all evening between courses, I wondered how long they intended to rest before beginning work.

"I suppose you will be ready in a week or so?"

Alan Crosland glanced at me in surprise, and replied simply:

"We are beginning at half past six tomorrow morning, at the Casino in Monte Carlo."

I looked at my watch. It was a quarter to 12. I had just learned that most of the American actors were stopping at Nice, while a few were at Monte Carlo. Agents of Mr. Crosland and film men from Paris were busy in Nice, recruiting the hundreds of men and women necessary for the big scenes. There was also a question of getting an orchestra, since the musicians at Monte Carlo, who play till midnight every evening had refused this early morning job! Crosland noticed the incredulity in my face, and replied quietly:

"We are beginning at half past six tomorrow morning."

Pedro de Cordoba who, as a Latin, understood what was going on in my mind, explained with a shrewd smile:

"When you have plenty of money, Mr. Ibanez, nothing is impossible."

The next morning I got up shortly before 6 o'clock. I was sure there could me no hurry. The Blue Coast, I reflected, was a long way from the United States, and there was little danger of any miracles of American energy and promptness occurring there. I fully expected to be the first person on hand at the hour scheduled.

On arriving at Monte Carlo I noticed a strange animation in its streets, which are normally deserted at such an hour. The inhabitants of the great metropolis of gambling normally rise very late. People stay at the tables in the Casino until midnight, and business does not begin again until 10 in the morning. But on this occasion everybody seemed excited over something unusual that was going on. Many people were hurrying home to give their families a piece of news which would be sure to bring everybody out of bed with a start.

As my automobile drove up to the square in front of the Casino, I could not contain my astonishment. The normal order of things seemed suddenly to have been turned upside down. Half past six by the Casino clock! No doubt of that! The rising sun was just topping the palm trees which stand out from the terraces like black shafts against the sea. And yet—there must have been some mistake. Surely it was half past five in the afternoon—tea-time, in short. The square was full of people, hundreds and hundreds, perhaps thousands of them. Men and women, all dressed with a certain stylishness, like people of money, able to spend their lives on the Blue Coast. They were going in and out through the doors of the Casino, promenading around the central garden of the square—the Cheese Box, as it is called. The tables of the Cafe de Paris were all occupied, and an orchestra was playing on the porch. All natural enough to be there, if only it had been sunset instead of sunrise, and 6 o'clock in the evening instead of half past six in the morning.

And then, as I looked more closely, it seemed as though the clock on the Casino must have turned back several years as well. For the Casino square was much as I had observed it during the war. Officers and soldiers convalescing from their wounds, were walking or standing about in groups. A number of cripples in uniform were sunning themselves on the benches here and there. Lined up along the Grand Hotel de Paris were dozens of automobile buses, such as are used for excursionists along the Blue Coast. This train of vehicles had brought from Nice the avalanche of human beings that was now crowding the square to move and talk and live for a short time under the orders of Alan Crosland.

I walked toward the Casino. And who, if you please, were these people coming out to meet me? The leading characters in "Enemies of Women." Here was a beautiful lady, magnificently dressed, coming down the steps. It was Alicia, the Duchess, impersonated by the attractive California actress, Alma Rubens. Here was a gentlemen in evening dress, coming to offer me his hand—throwing back the flaps of his black and white cloak, as he approached. He could be no other than the Prince Lubimoff. And yet there was no mistaking the deep, mysterious eyes of the great American actor, Lionel Barrymore. So, one after another, I was able to identify many faces famous in America, though I had known before that time only from having seen them on the screen.

The crippled soldiers were really victims of the war. They were actors who had gone to the front, and now, after losing an arm or a leg, are able to appear only in plays that contain some reminder of the great struggle. Among the officers some individuals could wear their uniforms with a certain martial naturalness. But most of them were obviously actor-soldiers, who had been promoted for this occasion only.

Certainly the city of Monte Carlo led a very unusual kind of life for many days. Many ladies of fashionable society began going to bed at sunset, in order to be up at sunrise to see the fun. This was a routine which I can assure you was unheard of in Monte Carlo.

With his army of actors and "supes," Mr. Crosland first completed all the open-air scenes in "Enemies of Women." It was necessary to work at these early hours, because the management of the Casino could not tolerate too much interference with tradition. The Casino was put at the disposal of the actors only between 6 and 9 o'clock in the forenoon. That left an hour for the work of cleaning up, since play had to begin again promptly at 10 o'clock.

My particular contribution to the work was to smooth the path of the actors in their dealings with the government of the principality.

Mrs. Wallace Reid's "Human Wreckage" Coming Here.

Mrs. Wallace Reid's film, "Human Wreckage," showing the extent of dope ravages in the United States, comes to the Empress for a solid week opening September 3.

All Angles Of Appeal Appear In "Three Wise Fools" Strand Film

A photoplay that has angles of appeal for every picture-goer is King Vidor's First Goldwyn production, "Three Wise Fools," adapted by the director from Austin Strong's successful stage play produced by John Golden and Winchell Smith. It will be the attraction at the Strand theater for four days, beginning Monday. The picture is a blending of charming comedy, romance, reality and spectacle. It retains in full the quaint comedy of the play, but develops and strengthens the dramatic story and depicts in detail some episodes that were but hinted at, or which took place off the stage, in the original.

King Vidor was the one director to make this picture, as he has shown in his past work the ability to combine charm and quaint comedy in characters and incidents which are at the same time very realistic. The persons in the present picture, "Three Wise Fools," are very human, very homely, but yet possess that peculiar charm that is characteristic of whimsical characters and situations.

The production is one of the most entertaining and artistic of the season's photoplays. It is a picture which can be counted upon to prove satisfactory to every person who sees it because of the variety of its moods and action.

Goldwyn gave Director Vidor one of the super-casts for which it is famous. Eleanor Boardman, fresh from her triumph in "Souls for Sale," is featured in the feminine lead. Claude Gillingwater acts the role of Findley, which he played with such conspicuous success on the stage. William H. Crane is cast as Judge Trumbull and Alec Francis as Dr. Gaunt. John Sainpolis acts the role of Sydney's father, William Haines that of her lover, while Brinsley Shaw lends a sinister quality to Benny the Duck. Martha Mattox, Fred Esmelton, Fred J. Butler, Zazu Pitts, Lucien Littlefield and Charles Hickman have minor roles. The flash-back sequence showing the three wise fools as youths has Craig Biddle Jr., in Gillingwater's part; Creighton Hale in that of William H. Crane, and Raymond Hatton in Alex Francis' part.

The cameraman, Charles Van Enger, has done some of his finest work in this production. The photography is clear and beautiful. The settings were by Cedric Gibbons, Goldwyn's art director, and are all what picture settings should be. Taking all in all, "Three Wise Fools" is a picture that will not disappoint and one that many fans will want to see again and again.

'TRILBY' OPENS OLYMPIC WEEK

Best Seller of Decade Now Immortalized on Silver Sheet

"Trilby," as a novel, has captured the hearts of millions of readers. A decade or two ago, it was easily the most popular piece of current fiction. Written by George Du Maurier, himself an inhabitant of the Latin quarter of Paris, which he describes so well, and with it a score of interesting characters so well drawn, "Trilby" struck a chord in the popular imagination and its title became a household word.

This interest was heightened by the launching of several stage productions of the unusual romance, all of them meeting with tremendous success. Particularly notable was the cast which had the honor of first presenting "Trilby" behind the footlights. Virginia Harned played the title role. Wilton Lackaye is remembered as a fine Svengali; Albert Hickman played "Little Billee"; Burr McIntosh was Taffy; Richard Ganthony appeared as "The Laird"; Gecko was played by Robert Payton Gibbs; Leo Deitrichstein was Zouzou, and Agnes Evans (Mrs. Wilton Lackaye) was one of the can-can girls in the frolic. Quite a star cast, that!

But these were not the only celebrities to essay "Trilby," as note Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in London, making one of the triumphs of his spectacular career as Svengali, in a production in which Lady Tree, his wife, appeared as Trilby. And Blanche Walsh, in still another company, playing the title role opposite Ruben Fox's Svengali. And yet again, Tyrone Power portraying the role of Svengali in a company which toured Australia, his wife playing Trilby. A. M. Palmer, one of the most successful producers of his day, staged the first American production of the play.

And then last year, Richard Walton Tully, leading playwright-producer, determined to immortalize "Trilby" on the screen. With this in view, he spent several months in research work in Europe, also in production of portions of several sequences which he staged in actual spots described in the novel. And then, saturated with the atmosphere of the story and visualizing its every character and its every scene, he spent weeks in the selection of his cast, with the result that in his finished production will be seen an array of notable players who will seem to have stepped into life from the pages of the famous novel.

It was in Paris that Mr. Tully found his ideal for "Trilby" in the person of Andree Lafayette, a young French actress who is in every particular as the author described his heroine. Her portrayal has been classed as consummate art by critics; and the same have acclaimed Arthur Edmund Carewe's characterization of Svengali the acme of excellence. Carewe entered into the part fully cognizant that he had never before had such a splendid opportunity.

Creighton Hale seems to have been made for the role of "Little Billee"; and the rounding out of the trinity of friends with such artists as Philo McCullough as "Taffy," and Wilfred Lucas as "The Laird," is no less than an inspiration. And so it goes on down the list, proving Richard Walton Tully's genius for casting.

Wilfred Buckland, art director, whose achievements heightened the charm of previous Tully productions, and George Benoit, gifted cinematographer, who also contributed to their artistic success, were associated with Mr. Tully in the production of "Trilby," which, as a First National attraction, will be presented at the Olympic theater Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Score Another For Tourneur In "The Brass Bottle" At Empress

With "The Brass Bottle," presented by M. C. Levee as a First National picture, showing at the Empire theater Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Maurice Tourneur has set up another milestone on the path of motion picture progress. A farce comedy, it is unique in that it does not depend on action or slap-stick effects for its laughs, but on its situations. Fantastic and with many intensely dramatic moments, it nevertheless is primarily a farce.

As with Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," with "Prunella," with "Treasure Island," with "The Isle of Lost Ships," Tourneur marked development in motion picture art, so with "The Brass Bottle" he has made radical changes.

Tourneur, with Marshall Neilan, Rex Ingram, D. W. Griffith, Eric von Stroheim and Ernst Lubitsch, is one of the men who have brought the motion picture director into the spotlight of public esteem during the last year or two. With a fame perhaps older than any of the others, except Griffith, he has impressed himself on the public consciousness even more firmly than have the actors of his companies.

More and more, the motion picture public is realizing that it is the director who makes the picture; that the few producers who are really great can be relied upon to put nothing on the market under their names that is not a work of art. And more and more it is realizing that the directors, such as Tourneur, who are guiding the destinies of the motion picture art, have an individuality as pronounced as that of the masters who have led in the development of the other great arts—an individuality as great as that of Rodin, under whom Tourneur studied when an art student, for instance.

Tourneur's forte is the fantistic, the mysterious, the complexities of life rather than the so-called "human interest" theme. Individuals, not types, he seeks. He shuns the stencilled plot, the obvious sequence. He steers the course of his plots close to life itself and away from the stereotyped beauty of the old days on the screen. Life has another side as well as the beautiful, he believes.

In "The Brass Bottle" Mr. Tourneur has turned his talent for the mysterious, the fantastic, the weird, to unusual channels. He has made the weird provoke laughs, the eerie to bring forth chuckles. And through it all runs a note of seriousness that ends in an intense dramatic climax.

Mr. Tourneur spared nothing in selecting for this latest production a cast that would interpret the Anstey story with fidelity to its magic-mirth and mystery. Harry Myers, Ernest Torrence, Tully Marshall, Barbara La Marr, Charlotte Merriam and Otis Harlan were the people picked to enact the leading roles.

Modern Jazz Is Spirit Of Gem's "Nice People"

William de Mille has struck the keynote of today most happily in "Nice People," which comes to the Gem theater Monday only. The modern jazz spirit which pervades our times as well as the possible remedy therefor, are clearly and most entertainingly depicted.

Without preaching in the least, the picture demonstrates that the girls and boys of today have too much leisure for indulgence in what may be easily developed into harmful social relationships. The theme back of it stands out clearly throughout without intruding itself to the detriment of the story.

Wallace Reid's role presents him in the light of a good Samaritan, his mental outlook cleansed of its possible previous acceptance of such things as the public accepts, as a result of the great war. Bebe Daniels expresses the product of the jazz age flawlessly and her experience proves that those who accept freedom up to a given point will turn upon anyone who oversteps that point.

Conrad Nagel is a man of the same type who, once befuddled with liquor, becames a menace to the woman in his company. It is an almost perfect portrayal.

EMPRESS SHOWS DOPE RAVAGES

Mrs. Wallace Reid's Great Picture "Human Wreckage" Here Next Week

That 5,000 innocent children have already become confirmed dope addicts in Chicago alone, and that child addiction is spreading throughout the nation at an alarming pace, should be sufficient to jar thousands of men and women into a full realization of what the drug menace means to society at large.

While the country goes unthinkingly about its daily work, while wealthy men and women endow many charities that do not require funds, while others seldom give a thought to the menace of narcotics because they think it "too revolting" and regard it as something to be "covered up" and not discussed, the very flower of American youth is confronting a far more deadly foe than war in dope.

In "Human Wreckage," Mrs. Wallace Reid's great anti-narcotic photoplay, the distribution of dope among school children is revealed in all its terrifying aspects. The scenes are not revolting; they are not calculated to horrify beholders. But they are designed to drive home with powerful blows the real inside story of dope in this country—the story of a dread enemy that menaces not only the pitiful slaves already addicted to the use of opiates, but also hundreds of thousands of children and young men and women who are, together with many others, living at a faster pace today than ever before.

"Human Wreckage," which opens a week's engagement at the Empress September 3, shows how unsuspecting school children are met outside a high school by a pasty-faced dope peddler and how the usual capsules filled with the deadly white powder are slipped into their hands. These scenes are not exaggerated. They are developed in all the truth of stark realism. Conditions are revealed on the screen just as they exist in real life.

Report Shows City Babies Have Best Chance to Live

CHICAGO, Aug. 25.—Some urban communities, in spite of the crowds are healthier places for babies than many rural districts, according to the Infant Welfare Society of Chicago. A study of the mortality charts for cities and for the country shows that babies born in crowded cities have a better start in life than children in the country, the society reports. "This of course is not because of the crowds, but in spite of them," says the report, "and is a condition made possible through the education of the mothers even before the babies are born.

"It is owing to the fact that we find organizations such as the Infant Welfare Society fighting a battle against ignorance, which has cost a heavy toll in infant lives in cities such as Chicago, and that we find health departments carrying on the work of instruction, that in spite of tenements crowds and hot waves, through education, lives are being saved each year. We must replace the old idea that the country is a healthier place with the idea that education may make almost any community a healthy place."

ENCAMPMENT BIG SUCCESS

The boys and girls club encampment which recently closed was much better in many respects than was expected. This was due to the efforts of County Agents R. E. L. Parillo of Hardeman county and W. O. Logan of Cottle county. In the face of a severe drouth these two have worked hard to keep interest going in both counties.

The place was ideal, being just four miles from Quanah on the Groesbeck creek where shade and water were in abundance. The club members were entertained with games, swims, picture shows, and instructive talks. The outstanding feature of the entire encampment was the fact that not one time did the men and women in charge have to call any one for infraction of "rules."

C. E. ENJOYS OUTING

The Junior Christian Endeavor society of the Presbyterian church enjoyed a most pleasant outing, swim and picnic lunch Tuesday afternoon on Groesbeck creek.

Mae Busch Of Australia Plays In "Only a Shop Girl" At Strand

Mae Busch, who is "Only a Shop Girl" in the screen production of Charles E. Blaney's popular stage success, has not always been a shop girl.

Although she was educated in New Jersey, she was born in Melbourne, Australia, and in that pleasant land of the kangaroo and other sports she learned to throw the boomerang.

The boomerang, "when properly trained (according to Miss Busch) will leave the hand of the thrower, describe a wide semi-circle, kill the animal at which it has been hurled, and return to the thrower. It is a difficult weapon to control, and only a native of Australia ever masters it completely.

Miss Busch, in an interview on the subject of the boomerang, divulged an interesting item of the making of "Only a Shop Girl."

"In one scene," said she, 'the rent collector comes into my flat when I am out shopping for vegetables for dinner and finds my little sister (played by Baby Josephine Adair) alone in the room.

"He demands the $5 that we owe him for rent and calls in his men to evict us.

"I come in with my arms full of garden truck, a large cabbage being prominent in the collection.

"After some argument I throw the cabbage at his head just as he ducks out the door. The cabbage hits the door and breaks all to pieces. I thought it would be a great idea if he would stand his ground, let the cabbage hit him in the face and return to me, as my native boomerangs used to do, but he could never be induced to let me try it, even with a very soft cabbage.

"The scene is funny as it is, but that would have made it much better."

"Only a Shop Girl" will open at the Strand theater on Friday, showing the two days of Friday and Saturday. The cast, announced as "the best ever," will include Estelle Taylor, Mae Busch, James Morrison, Baby Josephine Adair, Tully Marshall, Willard Louis and other stars of the screen world.

ON THAT AGE

ever they can to convert their parents to the same plan of thinking. If they were really as generous as they claim they are, they wouldn't worry so much about that lack in others' mental makeup. They could at least be friendly and impersonal about it, and not blurt out all the froth on the slightest provocation. They might find out that the older folk are quietly making room for them, without the necessity of their making such a fuss, and without half the animosity that a lot of them imagine.

And children will persist in trying to outline the life of their parents. Only last summer a 63-year-old mother of three grown and married daughters met the only one of them who lives far from home at the train, and on the drive to the old home she said: "I only hope that you have not come home very determined to make your father and myself all over. The other girls have been very busy doing that for the past year, and I wonder if we really are getting to our dotage, or if they just think we are. They don't want us to drive the car on the crowded streets, they don't want us to go gadding around to things all by ourselves as we have been doing since the last one of you married, and they insist on making so many plans for us, and so many of the things that we have always done they object to. It's all meant in love, but when we have lived together for 40 years and have reared a family, it does look as though we might just be left to jog along down the rest of the road in peace." She smiled, but there was pathos behind it? Some of these managing children might think a little bit before they plan too many changes in the lives of their parents.

Husbands and wives may love each other very devotedly, and yet be so intolerant of one another's pet views and mannerisms. Wise is the mother who is asked for her daughter in marriage, that replies as did one mother I know: "Are you very sure that you know something of her faults? And do you think you can live happily with them? If so, you may have her for your wife, but you are not to break her heart by trying to make her all over to suit you. I have tried to teach her to be tolerant, and I am demanding that you will be the same with her."

Wives fret and worry themselves and their husbands with the desire to change these men into kind of people that they foolishly think that they can be happier with. If it were lax morals they were making such a consistent fuss about, that would be a different matter, but usually it is just the little irritating things that people do when they are in close companionship and living in intimate proximity. I have known women that succeeded remarkably well in making the changes, only to find that happiness was still not an abiding guest with them. And both hearts showed scars that were livid and bleeding, and that would never be healed over. I wondered of the balance sheet of experience would show such a very great credit on the wife's pages, in spite of the effort that had been expended.

A minister comes into a church, and the first thing that he wants to do is make the members of his flock all over! If they are placidly living a life that suits them and the community he wants to tow them out into deeper water; if they object, he gets behind and pushes! Often he does this before he is even familiar with community conditions. He is like the woman who wrote to Dr. Frank Crane and asked him how in the world she could make the six other members of her family all over, so that she could be happy in living with them!

On the other hand, as soon as the first sermon is preached, part of the congregation decides wherein the minister needs to be changed and they begin to zealously plan for it. They can't see that if the good Lord had wanted several folk in the world just like them that he could have duplicated the gifts, the talents, the temperament, and the environment that has made their life. He could so easily have done it.

Teachers are intolerant with the ignorance and egotism of youth. They are prone to grade papers on their ideas of lift, rather than on the merits of the individual. And the pupils hotly contest each step of the way, fighting against the settled and the conventional in life, of which they know so little, counting the teachers as failures if they fall short of the measure and stature expected of them; both teachers and pupils engaged in a battle to make each other over into what each thinks the other should be.

Business men criticize each other, each seeing the other's weakness and demanding changes. They, too, want certain vices taken out of their partner's lives, and certain virtues substituted, whether or no.

When it comes to friendship, how many terrible deeds are committed in its name. Often we are so conscious of our friends' shortcoming, so jealous of what we think is prostitution of their wonderful talents, when they fail to accomplish what we expect of them, that much of the real beauty of friendship is lost. Some one has said that when our friends are alive and with us we are very conscious of their faults; when they are dead and gone from us, we can remember only their great virtues, which is a very true thing to be said about the most of us and our friends. If we could only learn to say: "Your way in life is not my way, and yet I love you and wish you well," how wonderful it would be. If we would accept the gift of the gods without question and cavail, when they lay friendship at our feet, it would be in itself a richening experience.

This is such a wonderful time in the history of the world in which to be alive. The world is more nearly kin than it ever was before. We can not know people's hearts by peering into them. We must accept the fact that we are our brother's keeper, but we must give him the opportunity and the privilege to think and act for himself. Even if we have been along the road and can spare him some things of our experience, we ought not to feel hurt if he fails to accept it. Chances are that we didn't let folk tell us anything, either, when we came to that rough bit of going.

It's also some help for us to remember that God's handiwork can not be improved upon, very much, by us. Had the creation of other people rested in our hands, the finished product would not have been nearly so pleasing as it now is. When the material that you work with is human, there is no finality.

What does the world need? Tolerance and the ability to be broad-minded.

What is everyone most interested in doing just now. Making other people over. We have enjoyed doing it in this article.

Women are just like that.

PAIN

Pain is caused by pressure o. nerves. Where there are no nerves there is no pain. Nerves carry life o nerve force.

Pressure on nerves stops or retards that power which governs the action of every organ and tissue cell in the body.

Chiropractic has proven that nearly all diseases and pains are caused by misalignment of the joints of the backbone, (such as you see in the cut above) which closes the openings through the large nerves pass, thereby cutting off the life or nerve force from some part of the body, and causing that part to become diseased.

We use the X-Ray to take pictures of the spine with which to verify our analysis of each case. Showing the kinks in the spine which cause disease. You are free to examine them and see for yourself the cause of pain and disease, and why you stay sick and how—

Many Swimming Stars Enter National Meet

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 25.—Several of the world's greatest swimmers will compete in the national A. A. U. senior and junior outdoor meet here tomorrow, Friday and Saturday, according to the Indianapolis chamber of commerce, which is sponsoring the championships.

Both men and women stars will participate in the events, the most important of which are men's senior national championship at 100 yards free style, and men's junior national one mile swim, women's senior national 880 yards free style and 220 yards breast stroke, and women's junior national one mile.

Johnny Weismuller, Chicago, strained heart muscleemfdlthaoinoin world's greatest swimmer, will not take part because of a strained heart muscle. Duke Kahanamoku, Hawaii, is expected to be an entry.

Kahanamoku, veteran and holder of many world's records, is swimming in splendid form this year, according to reports received in Indianapolis. Robert Skelton, Chicago, breast stroke champion; Harold Krueger, Chicago, formerly of Hawaii, and several others of note, probably will participate.

Gertrude Ederle, New York City, declared by many to be the world's greatest woman swimmer of all times, has assured the chamber of commerce she will be here in search of more honors. Miss Ederle is world's woman champion of 220 yards and 440 yards free style.

Aileen Riggin, New York City, a former winner of the diving championship at the Olympic games; Minnie DeVry, Sybil Bauer, and Edna O'Connell, all of Chicago, also have entered. Miss Bauer holds the records from 100 yards to 200 metres.

In addition to the national events, Indiana-Kentucky A. A. U. championships also will be determined.

Modern Tramways Menace

PEKING, Aug. 25.—The "pailous," ornamental archlike affairs of wooden beams with carvings and scrolls painted in blues, greens and reds and which lend an added quaintness to Peking's streets, are threatened with destruction through construction of street railways in the capital.

The "pailous" span the principal streets at intervals. Their rhaust restrict the roadway and would interfere with the proposed surface lines. The municipal authorities are putting up a fight for their preservation or rebuilding where it is absolutely essential that they be pulled down, but the tramway company opposes this idea on the ground of expense.

Thirty-five Girls Studying Art Of Teaching Children

Special to The Record News.

DENTON, Texas, Aug. 25.—Training for responsible positions in which they will materially assist in fashioning the ideals of study, work and play of the coming generation, more than 35 girls are devoting a major portion of their time and interest at the College of Industrial Arts to equipping themselves for kindergarten work.

Each pleasant morning, when the weather is sufficiently warm, little tots of Denton, under the instruction of students in kindergarten, can be seen on the college campus, playing their games and receiving instruction in childish codes of honor and sportsmanship. In addition to this activity, instructional work is carried on in the well-equipped class rooms.

Miniature buildings of varied architecture are constructed by kindergarten classes working out projects at the College of Industrial Arts. They illustrate clearly how imagination and skill can transform heaps of blocks into wonderful bits of creative work.

Building materials, which consist of blocks cut in the shape of cubes, bricks, pillars, caps and triangular prisms, have been a source of delightful experimental work for the first-year girls at the college. Problems to be worked out have required time and thought in planning and organization, and those who solve them have put into concrete form principles necessary in all art and architecture, namely, good arrangement, good balance and good proportion. The development of handwork through the project method is used extensively in the kindergarten training school of the college, as well as with the little ones who come there daily for their hours of play and instruction.

The kindergarten department of the College of Industrial Arts proceeds on the theory that to work intelligently with children, one must know the mental, moral and physical value of play of games and of rythm. The girls learn that before they can achieve success as kindergarten teachers, they must possess not only natural sympathy with little ones, but must acquire trained sympathy and interest.

Training in story-telling and various phases of art constitute additional work in the kindergarten department. A love for children is only one of the requirements necessary for one who would specialize in kindergarten work, students at the college are discovering. Valuable principles that underlie various phases of educational work are just as essential, they find, if the lisping tots of today are to become efficient men and women of tomorrow.

Scientists Coming Home With Riches for Museum

CHICAGO, Aug. 25.—Four expeditions of curators in the service of science, who have been exploring uncharted wildernesses in several parts of the world, are expected to return soon to their home institution here, the Field Museum of Natural History. The Museum has seven parties in the field at present.

Dr. E. S. Riggs is penerating the unknown interior of Argentina in search of prehistoric animals, declared by scientists to be a most perilous task. The investigator has to face hostile tribes, irresponsible workmen and the danger of climbing precipitous cliffs in search of specimens. Sometimes he must employ a small army to bring back his finds.

Dr. Berthold Laufer, curator of the department of anthropology, is penetrating southern China in an effort to discover the century-old secrets of that land. He will make a study of the language and culture of strange aboriginal tribes said to have lived in China long before the Chinese came.

Dr. O. C. Farrington and a party is studying the diamond mines of Brazil. Dr. F. C. Cole is in Java, where he has been studying the customs and culture of the people. Contrary to the usual lot of the explorer, Dr. Cole is said by the curators to have been able to travel into the island's fastnesses by automobile with the greatest ease.

Dr. J. Allen Mason is in Colombia, where he has been studying the ancient civilization of that land, thought to have been destroyed centuries before the coming of the Spaniards. Another party is headed by Dr. W. H. Osgood, who will return soon from Peru and Chile, where he has been collecting rare tropical birds.

Australia to Inaugurate New Federal Capital

By The Associated Press.

MELBOURNE, Aug. 25. — The next session of the Australian parliament will be in Canberra, the new federal capital, which, like Washington, D. C., is a city located and planned for the special purpose of being a national capital. The Australian capital was laid out by an American architect, Walter Burley Griffin, of Chicago.

Canberra is situated on a splendid undulating plateau about 2,000 feet above sea level, a little to the north of the highest peaks of the Australian Alps. The city site is divided by three large sheets of water, supplied by the sluggish Molonglo river, and adorned by parks and boulevards.

SOLD WITH A SERVICE

Natural gas is a commodity—but is sold with a service. The gas itself is obtained from nature—without the service it would be only a waste product.

That service requires a huge investment. This investment differs from other services in that it cannot be made a permanent investment. The source of supply is too uncertain for that. Some day it will fail entirely.

LOOK INTO OUR EFFORTS

But until then each year compels increasing expense to maintain the service to you, and each year sees more difficulty in obtaining gas.

That the necessary money may be obtained to continue the supply, this company must have the good will of the public it serves. We are sure of that good will when you understand the problems we face.

Hence we like to have you investigate the natural gas question—to see what the natural gas problems are. Then you will work with us in our efforts to maintain the excellent services Texas communities have enjoyed from this company.

PLAN FOR NEW REO MODEL OUT

New Features Appear in Description Received Here By Fritz Co.

Complete specifications and a full description of a new Reo high-powered six-cylinder touring car have just been received by Mr. D. L. Fritz of the Fritz Motor Co., local Reo dealer.

"The first thing that is noticed wherever this new model is shown," says Mr. Fritz, "is the lowered chassis. Through an increased offset in the frames Reo engineers have been able to effect a two-inch reduction in the height of the car, giving it an appearance of fleetness, which together with its road-hugging ability greatly enhances the beauty and usefulness of the car, at the same time allowing ample clearance for any driving conditions. This reduction in height is to be shared with all other passenger models in the Reo line, since they are all mounted on the same standard chassis with its suspension of power units in the Reo double frame.

"Equally important, however, is the newly designed rear axle, combining the advantages of the full-floating and the old semi-floating types. This new axle provides among other things, greatly increased braking facilities and a particularly great safety factor for Reo owners.

"In the general body style, the use of the new windshield with integral side wings, the trim of nickel and aluminum, and the use of the cowl ventilator, this latest addition to the Reo line resembles in appearance the Phaeton Reo. It has been built to supply a demand for a car equally good mechanically which can be sold at a lower price. All of the inherent qualities which have come to be linked with the Reo name are included in this mbodel, the cost of which is still less."

A resume of the specifications for the new Reo discloses a number of other features, one of the most interesting of which is the transmission lock. With this lock protection from theft is assured, as is attested to by the fact that in underwriters' laboratories where it was tested, it was given a Class "A" rating.

There is yet another way in which this lock serves the car owner. With it, it is impossible to operate the starter while the car is in gear. The number of accidents in recent weeks due to the driver stepping on the starter while the car is in gear has made this feature of the lock for checking up on the memory one of inestimable value.

Provisions for gaining entrance to the tool compartment under the front seat without lifting the seat or disturbing passengers is also an unusual feature. Panel doors opening at either side make this possible. In this way a secure place for storing small packages while the car is parked is provided.

Wide doors each hung on two heavy hinges, are made rattle-proof by adjustable rubber bumpers. Full pockets are provided in each door and small tools are arranged in a carrier in the pocket of the left front door. The doors are controlled by T-handles on the outside and handles of the pull-to type on the inside, all of them being nickel-plated.

The body itself is exceptionally roomy, so much so in fact that it can be equipped with two auxiliary seats with no discomfort for the passengers in the rear seat. These seats are supplied at a slight additional cost.

A carpet provided with concealed fasteners covers the tonneau floor, and the foot rail of steel tubing with a pyramid aluminum scuff plate turns back to allow removal of the carpet for cleaning. The long robe rail, fitted behind the front seat, is of blue enameled steel tubing with nickel-plated brass end pieces.

Upholstering throughout the car is of genuine leather, buffed, long grained, and bearing a semi-bright black curtain cut gypsy-style extending to the rear bow on either side. The large, oblong, plate glass window with beveled edges in the rear curtain give exceptionally clear vision behind the car.

Two standard finishes are supplied with the new Reo touring car. One is Reo blue with white pencil striping running parallel with the trim rail; the other is Crane Simplex gray with the same striping.

Tells How to Align Wheels of Automobile

To true wire wheels, always true the diameter first; this is controlled by the center and back spokes; at the same time bring up the tension of the front spokes, or they will loosen up while you are working on the center and back spokes. The front spokes control the side of the rim as well as the position of the hub shell from the back of the rim, and can be used to bring the hub shell down to proper position. The front spokes should be as tight as the center and the back spokes. If they are tighter they will throw the wheel out and have a tendency to spring the shell out of true. Do not put too much tension on the spokes until the wheel is true.

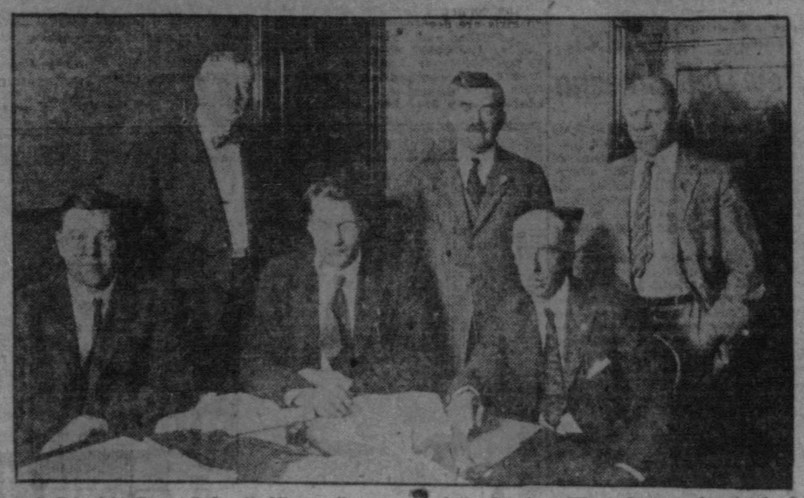

Should the spokes in a wheel to be trued up be badly rusted, drop some kerosene oil or rust remover on each spoke by the nipple and also on the head of the nipple where it goes into the rim and leave over night. In the morning adjust the wrench on the nipple and while moving it tap the spoke; this will usually loosen the nipple. If too tight cut out the old spoke and lace in a new spoke and nipple.—Automobile Digest.

Farmer's Committee to Limit Wheat Production

Left to right, George C. Jewett, Minneapolis, manager of the American Wheat Growers, Associated; O. E. Bradfute, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation; Sidney Anderson, congressman from Minnesota and president of the Wheat Council of the United States and temporary chairman of the committee; A. J. Brosseau, New York; W. I. Drummond, Kansas City, Mo., and H. D. Irwon of Philadelphia.

A meeting of the joint committee of wheat research of the Wheat Council of the United States was held in Chicago with a view of formulating plans to reduce wheat production. Representatives of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the American Wheat Growers, Associated, and the American Farm Bureau Federation were in attendance, and it is expected that this committee will formulate plans for a regular program of stabilization of the wheat growing industry. This was the first meeting.

WEALTH IS NOT NEEDED FACTOR

Things a Buyer Should Keep in Mind About Automobiles

To own an automobile is not necessarily any indication that the proud possessor is a person of wealth. This might have been the situation a few years ago, but not today. In thousands of cases cars have passed out of the luxury class into the real of necessity. Improvements in the mechanism which manufacturers have been able to make and the reasonable prices at which cars can be bought lead one to classify the automobile at least as a convenience.

Because the average citizen who has a motor car has not reached such a stage of economic independence as to warrant a reckless spending of his resources, he is interested in conserving the contents of his pocketbook at all possible points in his automotive experience.

There are two kinds of car owners who would be thrifty. One fellow goes in for parsimonious economy at the expense of comfort, safety and efficiency. The other individual desires reasonable comfort, safety first and effective operation at a fair price. The latter person is in my consideration primarily in discussing this subject.

For instance, the man who contemplates owning a car, which includes practically every one who does not possess one, approaches a salesman who says his particular brand of automobile will go so many miles on a gallon of gas. This prospective owner may infer that therefore this make is an economical machine to purchase. Yet this particular car may be the hardest riding car on the market. However, if there is any economic value in comfortable riding this automobile may not represent a thrifty purchase at all.

The wheel base of a car is a factor that enters into its comfortable riding qualities. The springs represent another factor that make for or against easy transportation. The upholstery of one car may be more comfortable than that of another. The size and kind of tires make a difference in the ease with which one rides. The way a car is balanced affects comfort. So does the balance of the engine, which has to do with the vibration. Whether a car is of the closed or open type has a great deal to do with comfort, especially in the cold weather months and during the spring and fall rainy seasons.

The main idea for the prospective or actual owner of an automobile is to spend sensibly and undertake to get good value for whatever cost is laid out on a car. Those factors which make for comfort and efficiency should be carefully considered. Those which make for safety should be given one's best thought. Nothing should be neglected which tends to insure human life. The most valuable thing in the world is held altogether too cheaply by some automobilists, with many unfortunate deaths being reported as a result.

TAIL-LIGHTS TO BE REGULATED

Massachusetts Leads the Way in Fixing Specifications

BOSTON, Mass., Aug 25.—Headlights having come under general supervision by the various states, motorists now are in for a series of tail-light regulations.

The first state to open a campaign for proper rear lamps is Massachusetts. Beginning January 1 motorists of this state will have to comply with certain specifications laid down by the legislators here.

These specifications are:

The rear lamp and license plate must be together, and in the center of the car.

The lamp must be directly above the center of the tag.

The slot from the lamp must be of sufficient size to allow for illumination of the whole tag and must be covered with glass.

The lamp must be of two candle power and must be such that it will make the number plate visible at a distance of 60 feet.

These rules were formulated by Alfred W. Devine, of the Illuminating Engineering Society and approved by Frank A. Goodwin, state registrar of motor vehicles. They were composed after an investigation of tail-light efficiency in several cities.

Out of the 205 cars whose rear lights were tested, only one conformed to the new regulations. In 176 cases the lamp was improperly located, in 124 cases the lamp had defective celluloid or no covering of the lamp slot and in 97 instances the slot was too small.

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce has taken up the Massachusetts tail-lamp and has advised manufacturers to adopt its proposals even before the law goes into effect. If this advice is followed the law will have its effect not only with in the state, but throughout the country.

Individual states, however, have interested themselves in this law and are contemplating following the example of Massachusetts. This is one of the 10 states comprising the Interstate Conference of Motor Vehicle Commissioners, which includes the six New England states, besides New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Maryland.

It is presumed that this interstate conference will fall in line with Massachusetts and that, later on other states will follow.

When Brakes Lock Car Is Far More Likely to Skid

Tires, wheels, spokes, differential gears and universal joints; these are parts of an automobile which suffer most from sudden and severe brake applications, according to tests just completed.

These tests revealed why it is possible for a car to skid on a perfectly dry pavement. It was found that locked wheels slid along asphalt on a firm or soft rubber, melted from the tread of the tire by frictioned heat. In such cases, it was found, the car will travel farther before stopping then when the brakes are so adjusted and applied by the operator that they cannot lock the wheels.

"In the interest of greater safety," it was announced, "car owners should see to it that their brakes are more frequently inspected; certainly, no less often than once a month, or better, every 500 miles. A simple road test, moreover, can be made by determining within what distances a car can be stopped, at various speeds. When this has been determined, with any particular car, a liberal margin of safety should be added for actual conditions of service.

"It should be remembered that the ability to stop a car is greatly influenced by the conditions of the road surface. When roads are very wet as in heavy rain storms there is less tendency for a car to skid than when the roads are partially dried or what is known as a 'greasy state.' Should a car start to skid when applying the brakes, it is usually due to the wheels locking.

"A dangerous skidding can usually be stopped if a driver has presence of mind to release the brakes and apply them a second time with less force. This gives the wheels a chance to again grip the road. If the road is very slippery, as is an icy road with light snow on the surface, best results are obtained by slowing the car carefully with the engine and helping with the brake. Lightly loaded cars as with the driver only are more difficult to stop than loaded ones.

"With these points in mind a driver can quickly learn the tricks, but above all, do not have too much confidence in your ability, as it is better to be safe than sorry."

MUCH CAR GRIEF PASSING AWAY

Much Advanced in Improvement Says Willard Battery Man

Only one who has watched the automobile or been connected in some way with the industry since its youth can appreciate the marvelous advance in improvements and refinements over a few short years ago.

There are few automobile owners today who realibe what changes have been made in recent years to make the automobile the most convenient vehicle of transportation.

"The battery, for instance," says Kindell Paulk, local Willard dealer, is one part of the car's equipment which now gives little trouble over a considerable period if given proper care. The discovery of threaded rubber insulation has eliminated a lot of former battery troubles. This sort of insulation has greatly reduced the national bill for repairing and recharging batteries and has given the battery unusual durability, greater force to spin the engine and a higher resistance to summer heat and winter cold.

"Other troubles which have been elliminated in the auto of today may be remembered by some:

"Pumping tires by hand."

"Cranking the car from the side.

"Using a handle instead of a steering wheel.

"Filling the headlights with kerosene.

"Paying extra for headlights, top windshield and battery.

"Putting up the car for the winter.

"Hiring a team of horses to haul the car home after a breakdown.

"Entering the car from the rear.

"Having all the neighbors come to the windows when you started out for a ride.

"Stopping several times on the road and shutting off the engine to allow horses to pass without running away.

"The autoist and everyone else is glad those days are no more."

Side Rails of Old Car Make Good Crane

The side rails of an old frame may be used to advantage in making a service car crane. The front spring hangers are joined together by means of a short rod and spacer which serves as a hanger for the chain hoist or block and tackle. The cross members of the crane are made of pipe and of such length as to properly space the side rails. Rods, threaded at each end are inserted through these and retained by nuts on the outside of the side walls. The crane is attached to the car body by means of a wooden support which slips fiting over the lower tubular provides the necessary angle and box spacer and into the floor of the body.—Automobile Digest.

Local Auto Notes

E. G. Wilson, special representative of the Studebaker corporation, spent the week with the Keim Motor company of Wichita Falls and subdealers in this territory. He reports that Studebaker sales are holding up exceptionally well for the summer season. Dealers generally are reported to be handicapped because of shortage of certain models, owing to the demand for the 1924 series.

Frank Queisser of the Overland Motor company is in receipt of a letter from the Willys-Overland Motor company in which the July production of the factory at Toledo is announced as 23,053 cars. In his letter Mr. Willys calls attention to the fact that the June production was the greatest in the history of the concern, despite the fact that there always has been "a lessening in the demand for cars in July." Willys gives the dealers credit for the extra production, and thanks the workers who made it possible. The letter says the greatest day's record was July 31, when 1,109 cars were produced.

Joseph Dyer, manager of the Wichita Brick and Tile company, has just purchased a new country club model Willys-Knight.

H. C. Nott, superintendent of the parts department of the Fritz Motor company, has returned from an extended trip over Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri and Arkansas. He made the trip in his trusty Reo.

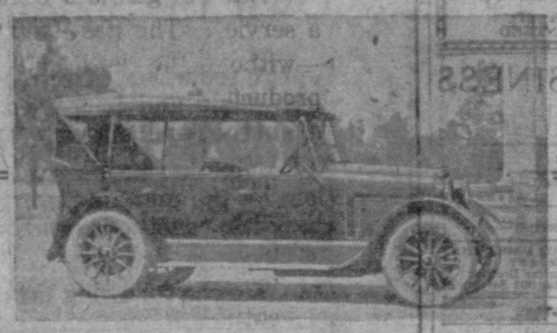

Mrs. H. C. English, bookkeeper for the Fritz Motor company, is spending a two weeks' vacation at Medicine Park.

A. G. Speegle of the Exide Battery station is not complaining about business. "Business is good, and is showing a steady increase," says Speegle.

J. M. McFall, L. M. Cregar and B. W. Duncan of McFall Brothers auto dealers, have returned from a trip to the Ozarks in Missouri. Mr. Cregar had some great fish stories to relate. He says trout as long as (supply your own measurement) were plentiful and he and his vacation partners had a lot of sport pulling them in.

With its 4-bearing crankshaft (balanced dynamically and statically), intake valves in head, large ports, aluminum alloy pistons and ground cylinders, it truly typifies Reo reliability.

Cradled in an inner-frame, and more nearly on a plane with the rear axle, major power units drive with remarkable smoothness. A 13-plate clutch, separately-mounted transmission with large-faced gears, and a sturdy, quietly operating rear axle are further examples of chassis dependability.

"THIS IS A STUDEBAKER YEAR"

FORD BREAKS SALES RECORD

July Retail Deliveries and Sales Hit a New High Mark

DETROIT, Aug. 25.—July brought two new sales records to the Ford Motor company. In addition to bringing retail deliveries of Ford cars and trucks into the mid-summer season with a new high record for the month, July also carried the sales figures for the year past the million mark.

Increasing popularity of the Ford is most srtikingly illustrated in the figures just announced show just what from January 1st to August 1st of this year, sales of cars and t icks by the Ford Motor company totaled 1,050,986 in the United States alone. And the rapidity of the iherease in demand is further emphasized by the fact that sales for the first seven months of the year, during which the million mark was passed, were 391,75 greater than for the same period last year when they totaled 659,190.

July sales mounted to 156,908, an increase of 36,821 over the same month a year ago.

For sixteen consecutive months now, Ford sales have been well over 100,000 each month.

Production, which, by the way, is set at a higher schedule for August than for any month so far, apparently continues to be the only factor limiting sales of Ford cars and trucks.

Only One Paid His Way To See City League Ball Game

AUSTIN,Texas, August 25.—Managers of baseball leagues in Austin have had a hard year, according to manager of one of the teams.

He thought it would be a good idea to charge for entrance to the games and accordingly announced one day that the game between his team and another would not be free, as usual.

Only one man showed up and paid to get into the game, the manager said. He sat alone in the grandstand.

Then it was found that the umpire had not showed up and the managers agreed to get the lone spectator to umpire. Then they had to refund his price of admission.

Then they quit charging for city league games.

FOREIGN WORDS BARRED FROM ITALIAN SIGNS

ROME, Aug. 25.—American and Englishmen visiting in Italy soon will lose the aid of the many shop signs and notices hitherto worded in the lingua franca which passes for English in this land. The Italian shopkeeper must now nationalize all his signs and word them in Italian, or pay a heavy tax.

Milan was the first city to adopt the new ruling, and the tax rate is set at the equivalent of one dollar for every letter in an English, French or German sign.

Now the thrifty hotel keeper who used to plaster his house with notices in all languages will have to pay five dollars just to let the American know his place is an "Hotel." A tailor will have to disburse thirty dollars to put out his favorite "Ladies' and Gentlemen's Confections."

The new law is part of a national effort to do away with all foreign words, which Italians claim are ruining their language.

The law has been taken so seriously that an English family was recently refused permission to inscribe an epitaph on a tombstone in English unless the tax was paid.

RABBITS FOR FOOD AND FUR

The breeding, rearing, feeding and housing of stock, also the production of pelts, together with their treatment. These subjects will be dealt with each week in this column, and the writer invites inquiries from those wanting information but cannot undertake to answer inquiries by letter.

By WILLIAM L. SMITH, 103 Waco Street, WICHITA FALLS, TEXAS

No doubt some of you readers have noticed what several cases of rash—a form of skin poisoning—were reported in the last year, which some have alleged to be the cause of wearing foreign dyed furs. Dealers in furs were up in arms. The suggestion was false, impossible!

The dyed furs could not be the cause from the rash from which ladies suffered. This was an impossibility, say the fur trades and papers, and the doctors must look elsewhere to find the cause. They did look elsewhere, but they were not successful, and as no fresh cases were then reported, the matter was dropped, and those who make and those who sell dyed garments felt the menace to their trade had gone. However, this was not so. The daily press recently published further accounts of the disease, and the result was many more cases of skin poisoning have been reported. The beaver coney, from which most of the garments are made, are worn by the ladies, and to the foreign-dyed fur of this type most of the trouble has been traced. It is stated that the dye which was used, causing the rash was manufactured in Germany. The symptoms of the disease are similar to eczema. I am informed that the evidence against dyed furs being the cause is stronger now than at this time last year, when it was first brought to light. Now, whether the allegation be true or not, those who wear garments made from natural undyed rabbit furs, the reduction of which is developing into an important home industry, run no risk whatever of skin poisoning. Therefore, ladies should demand from their furriers garments made from the beautiful undyed pelts of the new fur breeds—American blues, chinchillas, white New Zealands, red New Zealands.

Having quite a few inquiries as to the possibilities of breeding rabbits for fur, and my opinion as to such, I will endeavor to answer them in this article. One of the correspondents states that she has to "do something to earn her living," "feeling like that rabbit breeding might suit as well as anything else. She also at the same time thinks if she can't make $300 a year it would not be worth while. Others desire to know the possibilities of the various fur breeds, and seek information as to where they can sell their product, and so on. That fur production appeals to a great many people who have herebefore not taken any interest in rabbit keeping is an undoubted fact, and the industry can welcome all the newcomers it can attract.

In the first place, it is essential that these beginners start right. Every breeder who makes a success of a undertaking is an advertisement for the industry, while every faluure does much harm. There is one thing I notice as I go along with rabbit keeping, and from the correspondence I receive, and that it that so very small a proportion of the inquirers think there is anything to learn. Now and then one comes across a individual who realizes that exeprience is necessary, and will have to be bought; but the majority are prepared to spend enough capital to start out on a large scale without the least practical knowledge whatever. There seems to be the opinion of some that rabbit raising is a kid's job which can be undertaken without any previous training by one who has had the experience. But keeping rabbits as children keep them and making a commercial success of the fur production are two propositions as far apart as the world and sun. It is quite shocking to realize to know how many little habits, manners and customs, treated as at matter of course, and acquired during a lifetime of association with the fancy, are new or, at any rate unknown, to the beginner.

The want of knowledge sometimes leads to some very absurd mistakes, which if taken for granted that everybody knew. To make a financial success of the fur breeds it is important to keep a good class of stock and aim for the show pen. A great many people do not like to go to the trouble and expense of exhibiting, and figure that they do better by avoiding this part of the business. It is very hard to convince them, considering the time taken to enter the stock, write up the labels and the trouble of shipping to and from the shows, time lost in drayage; stock lost at shows; uncertainity of time of return take into consideration. But this is not any resson why every breeder should not aim at producing winners. Every time he meets with success the breeder has no trouble to sell his rabbits for two or three times its pelt value. A show rabbit is or ought to be only a super-pelt rabbit. It is, or ought to be judged, not only for the color and character of its coat, but for those points, such as type, feet matching body, size, etc. For instance, there is or ought to be, a lot of difference between an American blue pelt, which may come from a blue rabbit of any type, and an exhibition American blue rabbit, which is a blue rabbit with a distinct type and characteristics. And the same may be said of all the other fur breeds. From this it may be seen that I have no sympathy for one point judging, even if that point is the pelt. Here let me advise the beginner to start with typical specimens of the best strains of the breed he selets, and aim at turning out show rabbits. He will get all the pelt rabbits he wants during the process. A liking for the business and some business training are as necessary in fur production as in any other undertaking.

There is money to be made in the rabbit business, but it is my belief that, as is the case in every other business, it will only be accomplished by hard and steady work. As experience has to be bought in one way or other, these novices who are without previous experience in any branch of livestock breeding, and who are not within reach of an experienced fancier to whom they can run and consult every time an emergency or a new situation arises are advised to start in a small way, say a buck and two does. A few rabbits like this can easily be managed in the spare time at the beginning and end of the day. Experience in the management of both sexes of mating, breeding, feeding, rearing, killing, buying, selling and exhibiting, can be gained at a cost of, say $10 to $25, and at the end of the year the beginner will be in a fair position to judge whether he is adapted to rabbit keeping—and rabbit keeping suited to his circumstances.

The prices offered for pelts at present afford one of the only indications of value upon which we can base the prices to be asked for living specimens of the fur breeds. Those prices combined with an inteligent study of the sums asked by advertisers for rabbits of various ages, are the chief things we have to go on. When selling a rabbit it is better to charge too little than too much—that is to say, give very good value for the money, because a satisfied customer is for more worth to a breeder than a disgruntled one.

This is the time of the year when many beginners are joining the fancy and the question of whether close relating is a wise method to follow. I am constantly asked for "unrelated pairs," and this often calls for quite a bit of correspondence, for, in American blues at least, I have to point out that neither I nor anybody ese can supply pairs which are comparatively unrelated, for the simple reason that all blues have sprung, within the last eight years or so, from a cross between the blue Vienna and Flemish giant. It is quite possible to supply American blues (or any other rabbits) which are descended from some more or less recent outcross, but here is where the rub comes in. Beginners usually want "pedigree" stock, and if pedigree means anything at all it surely applies to close relationship. All stockraisers know that "pedigree" and "purebred" stock seem to be much the same thing, and now can a rabbit be a "purebred" if it has the outcross on its escutcheon?

Take anyone that has studied Mendelism; he knows that it makes an outcross, and in the second generation gets back to the animal started from, but after proper tests guarantee the new animal to breed true as to certain characters, but this he can not do without inbreeding, and to explain this here would take up too much space. As far as I am aware there is no evidence to show that in rabbits at least, the very closest inbreeding—even a long series of brother and sister matings—tends to weakness of any kind. Inbreeding only seems to bring to the surface any character of any kind which may be lying dormant in the productive cells. Say you mate a weak doe to a strong, healthy buck, it may be the outcome will be strong and healthy rabbtis; but if you mate these together, then the chances are you will get both strong and weak ones in the next generation. If you should continue the experiment by selecting the strong ones in each generation, and the weak ones in each generation, and mating them together, then the chances are that in a course of a generation or two you will get out a strong race from the strong and a weak race from the weak. This represents the view of most practical breeders, for whatever anybody may think these to be worth.

PRINCELY JAPANESE FAMILY EXTINGUISHED BY DEATH

TOKIO, Aug. 25.—The family most closely related to the imperial clan became extinct with the recent death of Dowager Princess Yasuko Arisugawa.

The late princess, who died early in July, was the widow of Admiral Prince Takehito Arisugawa, who enjoyed the most profound trust of the late Emperor Meiji and was the advisor of the present emperor when the latter was crown prince. Arisugawa was one of the heroes of the Russo-Japanese war. Their only son died when 15 years of age.

There is a daughter who married into the family of Prince Tokugawa, but in accordance with the provisions of the Imperial House law a princely family becomes extinct when there is no male issue.

Irish Free State Ready To Elect New Dail Eireann

DUBLIN, Aug. 25.—The Irish Free State will on Monday, August 27, hold a general election to return members to the dail eireann. The day everywhere will be a public holiday, all banks being closed and business suspended. All Irish men and women over 21 years of age are entitled to the franchise.

The election promises to be comparatively quiet. Except for the intervention of Mr. DeValera, no political issue is raised, and various groups of farmers, labor and independents, besides individuals unconnected with any group, will put forward candidates aimed at the promotion of sectional interests. None of them is planning a displacement of the existing government. It is calculated that no party can return a majority of the house, and that the ministry must therefore rely on support from a combination of groups, though all are agreed in repudiating the name of a coalition.

The seats of all the principal ministers are regarded as safe. Labor hopes to return 40 members, double its present strength, and the farmers hope for as many. It is not known whether Mr. DeValera can find the 30 candidates he contemplates. In perhaps half a dozen constituencies his candidate is expected to receive a quota of votes, but the success of the others will depend on how the transferable votes of labor, farmer and independent candidates are distributed. In any event no forecast puts the number of republican successes higher than 70.

These would all refuse the oath of allegiance and boycott the new parliament.

Mr. De Valera himself is standing for Clare, his old constituency. He is still "on the run," and a leading minister has declared that while this government hole office he will be "kept on the run."

There has been a slight agitation as to the unfairness of disfranchising the 12,000 prisoners, but Mr. De Valera has attached little importance to that, provided an unimpeded appeal is allowed to the people throughout the country willing to vee republican. The imprisonment is more serious than the mere loss in votes, for the prisoners held include all the best known organizers and electioneers of the republican party.

The enormous extension of the voters registered bewilders all attempts at forecasting the election results. The chances of labor as an organized party have been lessened by the intervention of James Larkin, who is at war with the established labor leaders. It is calculated the all Larkinite voters would give their second preferences to a republican candidate.

ENGLAND HOPING TO WIN OLYMPIAD

LONDON.—Britain has set out to win the next Olympiad and, if the trick is not pulled off, it will not be the fault of the English public in general which is giving its money to send a crack team to the games in 1924. It has been generally admitted that England has lost much of her athletic supremacy during the last decade, and to regain this a leading London newspaper has started a campaign for $200,000, the sum estimated as necessary to get together a team and send it to the Paris games next year.

The campaign has been on only three weeks, but the flood of small checks has been continuous, and many of the large English firms have sent in donations. Efforts already are being made to form the Olympic team, the training of which is to begin at once under the supervision of the best English coaches.

The first recruit to the team is Harold Abrahams, the Cambridge captain and star athlete, who has signed a contract to appear at the Olympiad.

WANTS U. S. A. TO BUY A PALACE

Congressman Would Have Berlin Departments Under One Roof

By The Associated Press.

BERLIN, Aug. 25.—A suggestion that the American government purchase one of the Berlin palaces of former days for use as an American embassy, is made by United States Senator Kenneth McKellar, of Tennessee, who recommends various branches of the United States departments be housed under one roof for convenience and economy.

"The interests of the United States government in Berlin," declared Senator McKellar, "are many and at present scattered over various parts of the city, making it difficult to obtain information. These interests constitute diplomatic, consular, military, naval, commercial, and agricultural, the agencies, tariff commission and the treasury, and perhaps others, all working separately with virtually no connection or co-ordination.

"As all information must come through our foreign office here, these various activities or services should be consolidated under the direction and supervision of our ambassador and transmitted to whatever department in America such service may report. This would give infinitely greater efficiency, prevent duplication of work and above all, greatly lessen expenses.

"We should buy or build an office building in all European capitals sufficient for every service. This building should be large enough to house all branches of the American government; from the embassy down. It should be surrounded with a purely American atmosphere, equipped with American furniture and conducted in American fashion.

"Such a building should be of easy access to American business men and travelers and a place where they always would receive information and protection. The personnel of every service as far as possible, should be American. In other words, our offices, agencies and official activities in Berlin, London, Paris, Rome and other capitals should be distinctly representative of government and people and not fashioned after the ways and customs of the old world.

"I am not criticizing, I am merely pointing out how each foreign activity may vastly be improved and the expenses reduced."

Regarding the embassy for Berlin, Senator McKellar suggests buying a palace because they are so numerous.

"As Germany is a debtor of the U. S.," the senator added, "and now has a great number of houses and palaces of royalty on hand, which have been taken over by the government, she would, no doubt, be willing to sell us a centrally located house or palace sufficient for our needs, and have us credit whatever the building might be worth to her account."

Establish Gold Mark Tariff

Berlin's theatrical managers announce the adoption of a golf mark tariff effective with the opening of the fall season. The prices of seats will be based on about one third their pre-war cost, the cheapest being 50 gold pfennigs, while the charge for boxes will be at the rate of 6.30 marks. These prices will be multiplied by an index figure to be posted at the box office each day before the performance.

Several dozen well known actors and actresses, who accepted jobs with a summer stock company operating the Deutsches theater in Berlin, are now drawing unemployment pensions as the venture failed and there is no prospect of a new management taking it over.

Under the circumstances, these jobless thespians are lucky in being able to qualify for municipal unemployment, as numerous colleges, unable to find summer employment because of the surplus of musical shows and reviews now holding Berlin stages, were forced to engage in various pursuits pending the opening of the fall season.

Homesteaders Reclaim 23,000,000 Acres of Land

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—Public lands totalling 23,022,630 acres have been transferred to homesteaders during the past two years. A department of interior summary shows that the number of patents issued for this area was 110,330.

Were all of these tracts gathered into one district it would have an area as great as Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maryland and Connecticut combined.

Receipts of the general land office during the two years amounted to $24,843,809. More than half, $12,981,609, came from royalties on mineral leases on public lands. Sale of public lands realized $2,453,250, while fees and commissions totalled $2,840,738. Receipts from naval petroleum reserves brought in $5,543,835.

The receipts were disposed of by paying $8,762,014 into the general fund of the treasury, $12,154,506 to the reclamation fund, and $3,927,287 to the various states containing the public lands.

QUEEN MARIE A GO-GETTER

Rumanian Ruler Gets Recognition of Greece By France

By The Associated Press.

PARIS, Aug. 25.—Court intrigues and the influence of beautiful women on the fate of nations usually are accepted as common only to the good old days, but Queen Marie of Rumania is looked upon here as a thoroughly up-to-date power behind the throne. She is credited now with hastening, if not actually accomplishing recognition of the present Greek government by France.

Queen Marie came to Paris two weeks ago, en route to the seaside for a vacation, but incidentally saw Premier Poincare, and a week later it was announced that the French minister at Athens would be fully accredited to the government headed by King George II. She is going to London soon, with the intention, it is said, of trying to get British recognition. The queen's interest in Greece is due to the fact that her daughter, Elizabeth, is queen in that country.

Marie, who is 48 years of age, and described by those who know her as still wonderfully fascinating, has been busy since the armistice in making the Rumanian court attractive, and finding opportunities for her children to meet rulers and prospective rulers of other countries. She is credited with having arranged three marriages—those of Elizabeth and George of Greece; Carol, the Rumanian crown prince, and Princess Helen of Greece; and of her second daughter, Marie, and King Alexander of Jugoslavia.

Short Skirts Cause Stir

The recent shortening of skirts by Parisian dressmakers is being generally followed by fashion leaders, but the rank and file of women—those whose gowns are bought with hard-earned money—are beating the game in two ways. Many of them have resurrected their year-before-last knee-length skirts; others have simply slashed their skirts, giving a sort of directoire effect, while those who have draped, overlapping panelled skirts have loosened the panel so that walking motion or friendly breeze gives an excellent display of hosiery.

Poincare Gets Week-End Habit

Premier Poincare has acquired the "week-end" habit. Like most Frenchmen, he has yet to get into the British way of leaving work Thursday afternoon to return to duty the next Tuesday or Wednesday morning, but he is to be found in the country every Sunday. He does no shooting and no fishing, except in diplomatic waters, and is not known to indulge in any athletic sport. His weekly outings are oratorical exercises, chiefly speeches inaugurating monuments to war dead, or commemorating incidents of the great war.

For several weeks the premier has not missed a Sunday, and he declares he does not intend to miss one unless the invitations give out. He has been somewhat piqued by the pleasantries on the subject, as one paper phrased it, of his "dominical oratorical bouts," and says he is determined to keep up the game until the press gets tired of talking about it.

When the premier travels, he uses a special car in which he often continues his daily labors. Frequently he is accompanied by Mme. Poincare.

Cane Gets Setback

The cane, without which the old-time European feels quite as undressed as if he forgot to put on his spats, is suffering its first setback in France through the tremendous increase in the popularity of sports.

Far North Electric Road Opens Vast Iron Fields

STOCKHOLM.—The electrification of the most northerly railroad in the world has just been completed and inaugurated. This electric railway has a length of 285 miles, and is the second longest in the world, being surpassed only by an electrified stretch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad in the United States.

The Swedish road links the iron ore mining districts of Lappland with the Svartoen and Narvik ports in the north, and, before being completely electrified, had carried 75,000,000 tons of iron ore, valued at nearly $260,000,000.

Immigration Plan

James J. Davis, secretary of labor, just returned from Europe, plans radical changes in immigration regulations as a result of his study of conditions there. Davis will ask congress to extend the consular service abroad so that immigrants can be picked before their arrival in the United States.

Counterfeit Gang Found In Hawaii; Nine Under Arrest

By The Associated Press.

HONOLULU, Aug. 25.—An international counterfeiting ring, centering in the underworld of Honolulu and with ramifications into the Orient, which is being unearthed slowly by federal officials here, is expected to prove one of the largest conspiracies of the kind ever brought to light in American territory, according to the authorities.

Nine persons, eight Japanese and one Spanish-Hawaiian, are under arrest and the federal officials have $250,000 in counterfeit money and two plates designed for the manufacture of the bills. The operations have been in progress for approximately two years and began, apparently, among persons engaged in the opium traffic.

The authorities said that the smugglers of opium into the territory were the victims of a grim little joke and "the double-cross supreme"—in return into the territory they received large sums of counterfeit money. The fact that they were engaged in an illegal operation was counted on to prevent them from notifying the authorities.

The persons in custody constitute only a par tof the conspirators and the bills are believed to be spread all over the Islands. It is known that large amounts have been taken to the Orient for distribution there. Many of the bills here were passed on Orient shopkeepers.

The authorities said the conspiracy was unrolled like a popular fiction fantasy. Most of the persons in the alleged ring are not known to each other and probably not more than one man knows all the other members of the ring. He is a Japanese master engraver, now in custody, who was employed on a local Japanese language newspaper until the discovery of the plot, the authorities said. He is charged with having manufactured a number of plates for the printing of the bills.

Instead of using the plates himself he sold them to other persons throughout the islands. The results is that the counterfeit money is appearing from many different places, each place producing them being unknown to the other plants. One printing press was found working on a sampan anchored in a bay off the Island of Hawaii. The bills are in $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100 denominations and are an exceptionally good imitation, the only noticeable difference between the spurious and genuine currency being in the quality of the paper.

Although federal authorities have knowledge that many of the participants in the plot have escaped to Japan and China, carrying with them large sums in counterfeit money, more arrests are expected, as the officials say they have merely scratched the surface.

FRATERNAL CONGRESS PLANS BROADER SCOPE

By The Associated Press.

FRENCH LICK, Ind., Aug. 25.—Greater expansion of the fraternal congress' activities and legal problems concerning the regulation of fraternal insurance readjustments, rates, field work and additions to the privileges of insured members, will be discussed at the 25th annual convention of the National Fraternal congress, to be held here August 27-30.

Delegates representing virtually every fraternal society in the United States, with an aggregate membership of more than 8,000,000 and insurance benefits of $50,000,000,000, will attend according to W. R. Shirley of Muskogee, Okla., national vice-president.

James J. Davis, secretary of labor, will be the principal speaker, according to the program, his address being "Fraternalism, Immigration, Naturalization and Labor." Other prominent speakers announced are Gov. Warren T. McCrae of Indiana, Harry Arthur Hopf of New York, S. S. Senators Ralston and Watson of Indiana, and Barney Pearson of St. Louis.

"Our expansion program will include co-operation with the community, state and nation for the promotion of better citizenship, extension of philanthropic work to care for the aged, sick, indigent and orphaned, more attention to the social features of local lodge work and encouragement of a greater spirit of co-operation and fraternity among the organizations comprising the congress," Mr. Shirley said.

The congress was organized 25 years ago and is the central representative body of nearly all the fraternal insurance societies in the country, it is said.

American Praises Quiet Efficiency of London People

LONDON, Aug. 25.—London newspapers have contained many articles of late about things that are better done in America, and especially in New York, than they are here. Englishmen have been told in effect by the writers of these articles that they should not consider themselves properly educated until they have been to America and found out how much they don't know.

And now, by way of contrast, it would seem, an American business man, W. S. Ashby, tells in the Daily Chronicle of various things he has seen here which are much better done than in New York. Especially does he commend the handling of the street traffic in London as compared with New York's way of doing it.

"The first thing to impress one on arriving from New York," he said, "is the quiet and absence of hurry. Of first thought one might surmise that the English are slow, and we have had enough reports to that effect to warrant our thinking so.

"But first impressions, while vivid, are wrong.

"There is an absence of bustle and noise, but no appreciable sacrifice of speed.

"At the crossings there is no shrilling of traffic officer's whistles, no banking of pedestrians on the curb, no stopping of vehicular traffic for blocks.

"The traffic officer is in the midst of it all and is busy every moment. He stands there, calm, deliberate, almost in a detached sort of way, but there is precious little that misses his eye.

"Instead of holding up traffic at long intervals, the officer seems to keep it moving along in all directions at once, and at many of London's corners the 'all directions' is well used. He directs traffic, rather than stops it and starts it.

"And here is another thing about the English—their courtesy. They are anxious to help and 'please' and 'thank you' are frequently used words in the language.

"The bus conductor thanks you for your fare, the waiter thanks you for your tip, the lift man thanks you when you give him the number of your door.

"The London policeman knows all London and directs you promptly, politely, and accurately, without waste of words.

"The Londoner does not push crowd or hustle, but he knows where he is going, and will gladly help you get where you are going in an orderly, comfortable and quick way.

"So if one were to check up on the question, I would say that for all the Londoner's apparent deliberation, he is moving towards his destination as quickly as any New Yorker, and making far less hubbub about it.

"It is this quiet efficiency that is misleading, and is so often mistaken for slowness."

DODGE BROTHERS ANNOUNCE IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENTS

Dodge Brothers have not simply brought out a complete new line of motor cars. They have done something infinitely wiser and better than that.

They have brought new beauty, new riding ease and new mechanical perfection to the product on which their reputation as builders has been founded.

They have built a better and a more desirable line of motor cars—yet basically and fundamentally the identity of their product remains the same.

The same sturdy engine is under the hood; the same dependable chassis, improved in numberless details, underlies the body.

But the rear springs—now underslung—have been materially lengthened. The wheelbase, too, is longer, and the combined result is a notable improvement in riding qualities.

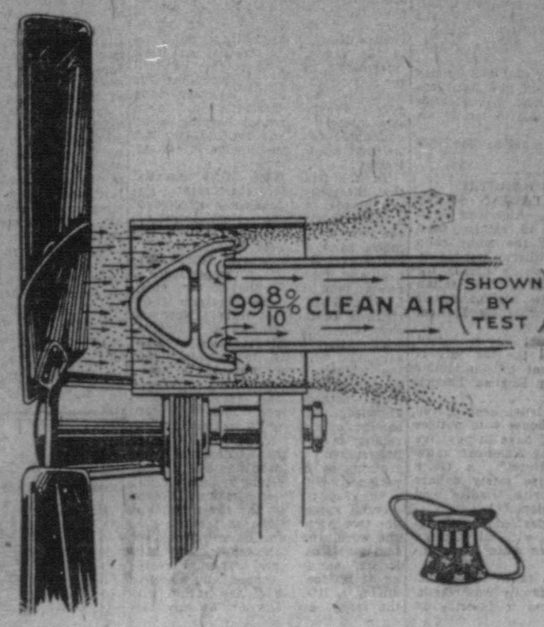

Bodies of all types have been designed to give improved appearance, and greater comfort. Lower, longer, with deeper seats and more leg room, the lines of these new cars are low-swung and graceful—the interiors are comfortable and roomy.

New head lamps and fenders, especially designed by Dodge Brothers to conform with the general lines of the car—a long straight hood and cowl effect—longer and wider running boards—unusually wide doors—combination stop signal and tail lamp—and instruments attractively grouped on raised panel—are a few of the numerous body innovations common to all types.

Combining these features with important mechanical improvements too numerous and technical to enumerate here, it is not extravagant to predict a reception for these cars unprecedented in automotive annals.

One of the Many Differences in Motors!

Are you one of those unfortunate persons holding to the fallacy that all automobiles of a given price are more or less mechanically alike?

You might just as well say that all women's hats are identical.

For the difference in each car is exactly equivalent to the difference in engineering brains back of each car.

If you will let us have your ear for a second, we will proceed to show you, on at least one fundamental point, how motors differ. A very important one, too.

On the Rickenbacker motor is what is known as an air cleaner. The above illustration shows you what this ingenious invention does.

It cleans the air before it enters the cylinder walls, and as the air is full of impurities, bacteria, etc., all of this foreign matter is kept out of the cylinders and thus, excessive carbon deposits are impossible.

Inasmuch as carbon deposits lessen the life of any motor, you can readily see that its elimination means a livelier motor for a longer time to come. This air cleaner is found on no other motor but the Rickenbacker. True, one other car has a similar device, but that car costs twice as much as the Rickenbacker.

We would like to show you the Rickenbacker air cleaner, as well as some of the other numerous Rickenbacker engineering refinements. And there are many!

Stop in and we will give you a demonstration. Ten minutes at the wheel of a Rickenbacker will be a revelation.

PRINCE READY TO SEE CANADA

Traveling Incognito Will Seek Rest At Alberta Ranch

By The Associated Press.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—The Prince of Wales has completed plans for his visit to Canada. He will be away from London about six weeks, leaving Southampton on the Steamship Empress of France for Quebec on September 5 and upon his arrival will go direct to his ranch in Alberta.

The prince will travel incognito as the Duke of Cornwall, and while in Canada will accept no official engagements of any kind, as the trip is intended to be in the nature of a complete rest after his trying series of engagements of the last six months.

The prince will live at the ranch with the members of his suite in the simplest way, giving himself up entirely to rest and recreation. The visit will give him the first view of the ranch, which was purchased in his behalf after his visit to Canada in 1919. The ranch is situated at Pekisko, near Calgary, in the foothills of the Rocky mountains and is more than 2,000 acres in extent.

No Pheasants on Hats

Sportive Englishmen can shoot pheasants without stint or limit during the season opening in October, but their wives and daughters will not be permitted to adorn their hats with the gorgeous plumage of these birds, as the board of trade has just issued a ukase prohibiting the use of pheasant feathers on millinery creations after January 1 next. The feather merchants and their feminine clientele are concerned over the edict, as since the egret and bird of paradise plumes were barred from hat trimmings, the milliners have depended much upon the plumage of the pheasants to replace the bright coloring taken away from them by the previous law. The swan has been added to the list of birds, including the jay and sparrow, which may be used for millinery purposes.

Secretary Davis Makes Record

Of the several hundred thousand Americans touring Europe this summer, Secretary of Labor Davis, who investigated immigration conditions at their source, probably holds the record for speed and efficiency in covering the continent.

In a few days less than a month he whirled through the principal countries, getting first-hand knowledge of the human materials that are continually being cast in large quantities into the American melting pot.

His trip was anything but a holiday. He put aside the dignities of his cabinet position and passed up opportunities of dining in state unless certain he would meet somebody at these affairs who could add something to his stock of information about immigration. He spent long days at work in each country and then travelled at night to the next.

Secretary Davis said he used the repertoire method of gathering his information. That is, he visited the crowded districts where the prospective immigrants live, talked to the people themselves and saw something of their living conditions; then went to the government departments and got the official views of how that particular government intended to handle its surplus population problem.

An example of the manner in which Mr. Davis ferretted out the real authorities on immigration from among the numerous members of American officialdom abroad occurred in London. He arrived at midnight on a Saturday. As the Sabbath is a day of almost quietude in the British capital the American reporters did not disturb the secretary until Monday morning. One of his first inquiries of the newspapermen was as to what American officials were the best authorities on the immigration problem. One correspondent suggested Consul General Skinner, adding: "He is said to be one of the best informed officials in all Europe."

"Yes," replied Secretary Davis, "I spent all of Sunday afternoon talking to Mr. Skinner about the problem."

Collecting Stamps
El Paso Man's Hobby

EL PASO, Aug. 25.—J. D. Bartless, El Paso, a carpenter, has a hobby of collecting stamps for amusement and curiosity. He is president of the El Paso Stamp club, which is planning a stamp exposition here this fall. His collection is valued at $40,000.

"I'm not collecting stamps for money, but for pleasure," he said. "If I should begin to collect stamps for money, most of the pleasure would be lost."

On Mr. Bartless' table are stacks of letters from various countries all over the world from men who want to exchange stamps with him. Recently, two stamp collectors, one from France and one from Hawaii, stopped in El Paso, and made stamp trades with the carpenter.

Bartless has stamps in 75 books, and if all his stamps were in books it would take 135 books to hold them in he says. In his stock from which he trades are 7,000,00 stamps. The stamps run in value from a few cents to $200.

"I have no very valuable stamps," he said. "At a stamp sale in Paris recently a 5-cent stamp issued at Roscowen, N. H., said to be the only one in existence, was sold to an American named Hines for $12,000. The stamp was one of a collection belonging to an Austrian who lived in Paris. He died during the war and willed his collection to a Berlin museum. The allies confiscated the collection, and decided to sell the stamps. Already, there has been $1,500,000 worth of stamps sold from this collection.

Mr. Bartless begnn collecting stamps 41 years ago, in St. Louis, when he was a boy. At the same time he began collecting tobacco tags. He has also collected various coins and old documents he has come across from time to time in his search for stamps.

In the exhibit the local Stamp club is preparing to show this fall is a collection of Mexican stamps used from Maximilian's time to the present, including some issued by the late Francisco, "Pancho" Villa.

EXPECT NUMBER OF TEXAS U. STUDENTS TO SHOW BIG GAIN

Special to The Record News.

AUSTIN, Texas, Aug. 25.—If the number of inquiries from prospective students is any indication, registration figures for the coming long session of the University of Texas are due to take a decided jump, according to E. J. Mathews, registrar.

The registrar's office is swamped daily with incoming mail from prospective students from all parts of the United States and from foreign countries. From all indications, approximately 4,800 students will register on September 21 and 22, the days designated for registration.

Playgrounds and Beaches Lessen Delinquency Ther

SIOUX CITY, Aug. 25.—Juvenil delinquency in Sioux City is showing a decided decrease over the records of previous years, C. H. Orpin, juvenile officer, declares. He estimated that misdemeanors among children have been cut down 20 per cent in the last two years.

Municipal bathing places, parks and playground activities are responsible for the better moral fibre of children, Mr. Opin says.

"Tax payers seldom realize the good investment that is being made by providing facilities for recreational activities which furnish an outlet for the energy of the young," said Mr. Opin. "Good, healthy exercise and amusement leave the minds of the children clear, and there is very little energy left for crime, plots, or inclinations toward misdemeanors."

Article 10

For a long time, since my earliest childhood, I had dreamed about Canada. I had always heard my godfather regret, with considerable fury, the surrender of that territory by France to England.

It was in the midst of a formidable "Hurrah! Long Live France!" shouted by 10,000 throats, strengthened by an orchestra playing the "Marseillaise" with a frenzied fury, that we made our entry into Montreal.

Standing on the small step of my carriage, I looked with emotion upon the strange spectacle I had before me. The bank was pack with bearers holding lanterns. There were hundreds and hundreds of them.

Jarrett and Abbey caused the crowd to make way and I got out.

We were obliged, however, to stay further progress. A hundred lanterns, held aloft by a hundred students' hands, suddenly lit up the place.

A tall young man separated himself from the group and came straight toward me holding a wide unrolled piece of paper, and in a loud voice exclaimed: "To Sarah Bernhardt...."

He read me a lengthy poem very well, it is true, but those lines, read to a poor woman numb with cold, and dumbfounded through listening to frenzied "Marseillaise," were more than my strength could sea made me feel dizzy, and caused my head to reel.

I made superhuman efforts at resistance, but was overwhelmed with fatigue. Everything appeared to be turning round in a mad farandole. Then I felt nothing further and only recovered my senses in my room at the Hotel Windsor.

Later I learned that a man of enormous size who had followed up for a long time had worked his elbows and hips to make the mob give way and had placed himself before me just in time to prevent me from falling.

The day following a card was sent up to me on which were written these words: "He who had the joy of saving you, madame, begs that your kindness will grant him a moment's interview." On opening the door I was struck with the beauty of the man who was before me. He was very tall, with wide shoulders, small head, a hard look, hair thick and curly, tanned complexion. He blushed slightly on seeing me. I received joyfully the bouquet of violets he handed me. On taking leave he said in a low tone: "If ever you hear who I am, swear that you will only think of the slight service I have rendered you."

At that moment Jarrett entered with white face. He went up to the stranger and spoke to him in English. I could, however, catch the words: "detective...door...assassination.....impossibility.....New Orleans...."

His sunburnt complexion became chalky, his nostrils quivered as he looked toward the door. My hands, which had opened under the stupor, let fall his bouquet which he picked up, looking at me with a supplicating and appealing air. I understood and said to him in a loud tone of voice, "I swear to it, monsieur." I heard the uproar of people behind the door, and of the crowd in the street. I did not wish to listen to anything further.

Four months afterwards, when an attempt was made to read aloud to me an account of his death by hanging I refused to hear anything about it. And now after 26 years have passed and I know, I only wish to remember the service rendered and my pledged word.

The anger of the Bishop of Montreal was necessary to enable me to regain my good humor. That prelate, after holding forth in the pulpit against the immorality of French literature, forbade his flock to go to the theater. Finally he pronounced an anathema against me, and against all my company. The result was that crowds came from everywhere, and our four presentations had a colossal success and brought in fabulous receipts.

In Chicago, too, the bishop denounced my art and French literature. By the violence of his sermons he as a matter of fact advertised us so well that Mr. Abbey, the manager, wrote the following letter to him:

His grace: Whenever I visited your city I am accustomed to spend $400 in advertising. But as you have done the advertising for me, I send you $200 for your poor.

HENRY ABBEY.

We left Chicago to go to St. Louis, where we arrived after having covered two hundred and eighty-three miles in 14 hours.

I was bored to death at St. Louis, and I wanted to leave the place at once, but Jarrett, the upright man, the stern man of duty, said to me, holding the contract in his hand: "No, madame, you must stay; you can die of ennui here, if you like, but stay you must."

One day, returning to the hotel, I was informed that a jeweler had been waiting for me more than two hours. "A jeweler!" I exclaimed; "but I have no intention of buying any jewelry; I have too much as it is." Jarrett, however, winked at Abbey, who was there as we entered. I was told that my ornaments needed cleaning, that the jeweler would undertake to make them look like new, repair them if they required it and, in a word.. ....exhibit them. I rebelled, but it was of no use.

Two days later the ladies of St. Louis went to admire my ornaments in this jeweler's showcases under a blaze of light. Poor Mme. Guerard, who wanted to see them, came back horrified:

"They have added to your things," she said, "a gold cigarette holder set with turquoise, a small pipe, the amber mouthpiece of which is encircled with diamond stars, a toothpick studded with sapphires, and a pair of spectacles with gold mounts ending with small scorns of pearls." I was horrified but Jarrett forbade my doing anything about it.

On Sunday, the 30th of January, we left St. Louis at eight o'clock in the morning for Cincinnati.

We had scarcely been more than 10 minutes en route when the guard came to me, his face pale. Seizing my hand, he said in a very anxious tone, in English, "Please go inside, madame,"—for I was sitting on the observation platform. I understood that we were in danger of some kind, and, before the train had quite come to a standstill, the two men sprank down and disappeared under the train. The guard had fired a revolver in order to attract everyone's attention, and Jarrett, Abbey, and the artistes hurried out into the narrow corridor.

I found myself in the midst of them, and to our stupefaction, we saw two guards dragging out from underneath my compartment a man armed to the teeth. With a revolver held to his temple on either side he decided to confess the truth of the matter. The jeweler's exhibition had excited the envy of all the tribes of thieves, and this man had been dispatched by an organized band of St. Louis to relieve me of my jewelry. The man was firmly bound and taken in charge by the two guards, and the train was then backed to St. Louis.

Our giant was handed over to the police authorities, but I was promised that he should be dealt with mercifully on account of the confession he had made.

As to the guard who had discovered the giant hidden under the train, Abbey and I had rewarded him so lavishly that he was intoxicated, and kept coming on every occasion to kiss my hand and weep his drunkard's tears, repeating all the time: "I saved the French lady, I'm a gentleman."

After a complete tour of the southern cities, and a dizzy round of the smaller towns, we journeyed towards Canada again.

We arrived in Buffalo at 10 minutes past 6 in the morning. The carriages met our train and took us to the Hotel d'Angleterre which had been kept open for us. There were flowers everywhere and any number of small tables upon which were coffee, chocolates, or tea. Every table was surrounded with guests. The meal was of short duration and very gay and animated. We then went to the Falls.

When we arrived on the Canadian shore, we went down the flight of steps cut in the block of ice in order to get underneath the Canadian Falls.

In front of us were small steeples of ice and on the right a cascade was rushing down noisily. On the other side there was a small block which looked like a rhinoceros entering the water.

"I should love to mount on that," I exclaimed.

"Yes, but it is impossible," replied one of my freinds.

"Oh, as to that, nothing is impossible!" I said. "There is only the risk, the crevasse to be covered is not a yard long."

"No, but it is deep," remarked an artiste who was with us.

"Well," I said, "my dog is just dead. We will bet a dog of my choice that I go."

Abbey was fetched immediately, but he arrived only in time to see me there, I came very near falling into the crevasse, and when I was on the back of the rhinoceros I could not stand up. It was as smooth and transparent as artificial ice. I sat down on its back holding on to the little stump, and I declared that if no one came to fetch me I should stay where I was, as I had not the courage to move a step on this slippery back. I began to lose my self-possession. I felt dizzy, but I had won my dog. My excitement was over and I was seized with fright. Everyone gazed at me in a bewildered way and that increased my terror. Abbey besought me to return; poor Jarrett besought me. But I felt dizzy and I could not and would not cross again. Angelo, the guide, then sprang across the crevasse and remaining there called for a plank of wood and a hatchet.

"Bravo! Bravo!" I exclaimed from the back of my rhinoceros.

The plank was brought. I let myself slide over the crupper of my rhinoceros and I then started, not without terror, along the rotten plank of wood which was so narrow that I was frightened to death. I returned in a very feverish state to the hotel.

From Buffalo we went to Rochester, Utica, Syracuse, Albany, Troy, Worcester, Providence, Newark, making a short stay in Washington, an admirable city, but which at that time had a sadness about it that affected one's nerves. It was the last large city I visited.

After two admirable performances and a supper at the embassy we left for Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York, where our tour was to come to a close.

Then I had a moment's stupefaction, for in the tempest of cries and bravos, I heard a shrill cry shouted by thousands of mouths and which I did not in the least understand. Jarrett appeared and enlightened me. "They are calling for speech." "Ah, no!" I exclaimed, as I again went on the stage to make a bow. "No." And in making my bow to the public I murmured: "I cannot speak. But I can tell you, thank you, with all my heart!" It was in the midst of a thunder of applause, underscored with "Hip! hip! hurrah! Vive la France!" that I left the theater.

On Wednesday, the 4th of May, I embarked on the same trans-Atlantic steamer, L'Amerique, the phantom vessel to which my journey had brought good luck.

What was my horror to discover, standing at the door of my cabin, Henry Smith, the showman of whales. I gave a cry like that of a wild beast. He kept his joyful smile and held out a jewel casket which I took with the object of throwing it into the sea through the open porthole. But Jarrett caught hold of my arm and took possession of the casket which he opened. "It is magnificent!" he exclaimed, but I had closed my eyes. I stopped up my ears and cried out to the man: "Go away! you knave! you brute! go away. I hope you will die under atrocious suffering! Go away!"

I halp opened my eyes. He had gone. Jarrett wanted to talk to me about the present. I would not hear anything about it.

"Ah, for God's sake, Mr. Jarrett, leave me alone! Since this jewel is so fine, give it to your daughter and do not speak to me about it any more." And this was done.

The voyage home seemed interminable. I thought we should never arrive and I wept those tears that were like a brook that runs on and on without ceasing.

The commander did what he could to bring me to a rational state of mind, but I was over-wrought and miserable.

Finally there came a day when I was told we would land in two hours. I rushed to the deck, where, leaning on the bulwark, I scanned the distance. A small steamer appeared on the horizon. I saw it without looking at it, expecting every minute to hear the cry "Over there! Over there!" All at once I noticed masses of small white flags being waved on the small steamer. I got hold of my glasses.... and let it fall with a joyous cry that left me without any strength, without breath.

The Diamond (the vessel's name) came near. Then came the reaction that takes place in our tears when the young being that one worships is pressed to one's bosom under the spell of an undefinable emotion.

The big ship is invaded. Everyone is there, my dear and faithful friends. They have accompanied my young son Maurice. Ah, what a delicious time! During this time, our boat is moving. The Diamond has disappeared carrying away the mails. The farther we advance, the more small boats are met with, decked with flags, plowing the sea. There are a hundred at least. Here are others.

"Is it a public holiday?" I asked George Boyer, the correspondent of the Figaro, who with friends had come to meet me.

"Oh, yes, madame, a great fete day today at Havre, for they are expecting the return of a queen who left seven months ago!"

"Is it really in my honor that all these pretty boats have spread their wings and beflagged their masts. Ah, how happy I am!" At this moment we go alongside the jetty. There are perhaps twenty thousand people there who cry out: "Vive Sarah Bernhardt!"

I feel my pulse....It is I..... I am not dreaming.....

This triumphant reception, that I was far from expecting after what had happened just before my departure, after having been so badly treated by the Paris press, after the incidents of my journey that had been always badly interpreted by several French papers—all these coincidences were of such different proportions that they seemed hardly credible. I preferred to remain in the dream that was so flattering to me.

That night left me without sleep, for I wished to catch a glimpse in the darkness of the small star in which I had faith. I saw it as dawn was breaking, and fell asleep thinking over the new era that it was going to lighten up.

I conclude these memories of mine here, for this si really the first halting place in my life; the real evolution of my physical and moral being.

I had run away from the Comedie Francaise, from Paris, from France, from my family, and from my friends.

I had thought of having a wild ride across mountains, seas, and space, and I came back in love with the vast horizon, but calmed down by the feeling of responsibility which for seven months had been weighing on my shoulders.

My life, which I thought at first was to be so short, seemed now likely to be very, very long, and that gave me a great mischievous delight whenever I thought of the infernal displeasure of my enemies.

I resolved to live, I resolved to be the great artiste that I longed to be.

And from the time of this return I gave myself entirely up to my life.

Relieving the Intolerable Situation at Ypres—How Rain Interfered with Plan.

BY GEORGE A. B. DEWAR

ARTICLE VI

The facts as to the condition of the French army during the summer of 1917 have been referred to in the previous chapter. As a result of that condition, the British armies bore the whole burden of the struggle on the western front during the remainder of the year. Indeed, after the collapse of Russia and the arrest of the Italian offensive it is scarcely too much to say that Gen. Haig's men sustained single-handed the contest against Germany.

The fighting record for the year of the British divisions are quite extraordinary. Only troops of the highest quality could stood so severe and prolonged a strain.

The British started fighting on the Ancre in the first week of January. From that date until the middle of December there was practically continuous fighting on some part or other of the British front, and the fighting around Lens as a single operation—of which one was a wearing-out battle lasting three and a half months under extraordinarily trying conditions. The French offensive operations started on April 16 and ended in the first week of May—except for the support of Anthoine's army on a two-division front in the flooded country on the left of the British Ypres attacks, and the isolated operations at Verdun and Malmaison in August and October.

The British commander-in-chief considered that the Arras front was not a favorable locality for a continued offensive, once the French offensive had definitely broken down.

The Flanders sector was clearly indicated by process of exclusion; but in addition it had positive advantages which admitted of no doubt that, if the British were to undertake any further offensive, it would have to be delivered on the Ypres front.

Our position at Ypres was tactically about as bad as it could be, and only the strongest political and moral factors had induced us to remain in it so long. Overlooked from the north, east, and south, no part of the salient was safe from the enemy's guns.

When the Fifth army took over the salient at the end of June 1917, its weekly casualties for the three weeks prior to the opening of its preparatory bombardment averaged over 2100. A selection of normal quiet weeks in 1916 prior to the opening of the Somme offensive gives over 1800 as the average weekly casualties of the Second army in ordinary quiet times!

The capture of the semi-circle of high ground that from Wytschaete to Pilckem, backed by the main line of ridge beyond at Paschendaele, dominated the Ypres plain would effect an immense tactical improvement in the Flanders situation.

This very fact involved another advantage of a more general character—namely, that the enemy would unquestionably fight for these positions; whereas on the Arras front, if not elsewhere, there was always the possibility that he might seek to evade our prepared attack by a timely withdrawal to the new line.

The first step was obviously the capture of the German salient formed by the Messines—Wytschaete ridge, so as to deny the enemy observation into those few slight irregularities of ground in the Ypres salient which afforded cover from view from the east and would be required as battery positions for our main attack east of Ypres.

The attack of June 7, delivered exactly one month—the scheduled time—after the decision to undertake the northern offensive, afforded another and entirely successful example of the leap-frogging of divisions. Three divisions, the Fourth Australian, 11th and 24th Divisions, which did not take part in the opening assault, were passed through the assaulting divisions for the attack on our final objectives.

There was no idea of "breaking through" and opening up a field for exploitation. The limits of our advance were fixed, and consequently within those limits every detail could be provided for. For the first time in a major operation, every yard of ground comprised in our objectives was captured in accordance with the pre-arranged time-tables.

Towards the end of this month, the First army front about Lens became very active. On the 25th and 26th, the 3rd and 4th Canadian Divisions and the 46th Division all made progress in this sector. On the night of the 27th-28th the 6th Division had another successful dummy raid west of Hulluch.

Thermit, smoke, gas, and dummies were used to simulate attack at different points on the whole front between the Scarpe and La Bassee, and south of Lens Canadian patrols reached Avion. Next night in conjunction with other demonstrations the 31st and 5th Divisions delivered a real attack on a front of 2000 yards opposite Oppy, capturing all their objectives and 200 prisoners.

Troops of the 3rd and 4th Canadian Divisions and of the 46th Division carried out smaller but equally successful attacks southwest and west of Lens, the total number of prisoners taken in these different attacks and in the raids carried out in conjunction with them exceeding 330.

Meanwhile, on the 3rd army front, constant activity prevailed on both sides of the line, sharp local attacks being made by the enemy as well as by our own troops; but the more considerable operations which we had hoped to undertake on this front with the troops to be set free by the extension of the French left from the Omignon river to Havrincourt had necessarily to be abandoned when it was found that the French were unable to carry out this relief.

One of the reasons put forward by our allies to explain their unwillingness to carry out the desired extension of their front was that French troops were going to take part in the Flanders offensive. The reason was not altogether a satisfactory one.

In the first place, French participation in the Flanders offensive had not been sought and was not in fact desired by the British. On the contrary, it was forced upon the British by the French, in order to satisfy the national pride of our allies and also, it may be in part, in order that the French armies might be heartened by the knowledge that French troops were taking part in a successful offensive.

But now the enemy in the north was fully awake. On June 27 the big 15-inch naval gun at Leugenboom had started firing at Dunkirk, seeking to supplement the efforts of the German bombing planes to interrupt our use of the port.

The gun caused much excitement. People with maps got compasses and drew circles centered on Leugenboom to show how many interesting places on our side to the line were included in its extreme range. Advanced G. H. Q. was one of them, but in fact the nearest shell fell some four miles away.

At Dunkirk, a telephone message was received from the line whenever the gun was fired, and the inhabitants of the town then hastened to dugouts and cellars, while the huge shell was still speeding toward them!

A more unpleasant novelty was in store for us. Ypres was heavily bombarded with mustard gas. On the night of July 21-22 great numbers of the new gas shell were fired into Nieuport, causing 2000 casualties.

Mustard gas was an undoubted triumph of German perception and imagination.

Our chemists had been seeking, and seeking very successfully, for gases that would kill, and they had paid no attention to a gas that could only occasionally prove fatal. The fact was lost sight of that the power to put large numbers of one's enemies out of action at a critical moment, and keep them out of action for some weeks, was nearly as valuable.

It is a curious thing that throughout the war there were people who spent a large portion of their time in crying out for the exercise of "greater imagination" in our military leadership. They seemed utterly regardless of this very quality of imagination, uncontrolled by any proper appreciation of commonplace realities which plunged us into the Antwerp expedition, hurried us into the Dardanelles affair by the road least likely to achieve success, led to the surrender of General Townshend's gallant but inadequate force at Kut, was responsible in March, 1918, for the absence (in Palestine and elsewhere) of troops that, had they been in France, would have saved Gough's army, and finally wasted men and money—to no possible useful purpose—at Archangel and Murmansk! One might have thought that even prior to 1918 these examples of riotously imaginative strategy would have satisfied the most enthusiastic for such methods, but the critics concentrated upon France.

They wanted to see imaginative strategy on the western front. Yet all the while in France collective imagination was working at high pressure, right through the army, constantly devising better methods and new ways both in small things and in great.

It was fruitful in tactics and was never absent from strategy. Only, in France imagination was subject to control, and the control was exercised in accordance with a wise experience of military affairs and a just appreciation of what was possible and what was not.

The coastal operation that was to form a part of the later states of the Flanders operations is a striking example of this.

Some time before the opening of the offensive, the 1st Division suddenly developed an acute "attack of cerebrospipal meningitis" in a highly contagious form, and retired behind barbwire fencing in an unfrequented area of sand and dune behind Dunkirk.

There the division strove manfully against the disease by novel methods—consisting of prolonged exercise under a hot sun! It became highly skilled in the art of embarking and disembarking from flat-bottomed boats or pontoons and negotiating sea-walls, and land intersected with embankments and dykes.

Its officers developed an extraordinarily interest in the subject of inundations and a thirst for a detailed knowledge of the configuration of the ground in the coastal sector west of Ostende.

The strange cure appeared to be an entirely successful one for, visited a few weeks after their compulsory isolation, all ranks appeared to be as fine and as healthy a lot of men as one might wish to see.

It need scarcely be explained that the "meningitis" was of a purely official or rather semi-official character, invented for the benefit of any inquisitive person who might wonder what had become of the 1st Division, and why its sudden disappearance had been made the subject of so much secrecy. Naturally, the authorities would not want it generally known that a virulent disease in a highly contagious form had broken out in the ranks of the army! Camouflage in war takes many forms. The fact that a combined operation on the coast by British military and naval forces formed part of the general scheme of the Flanders offensive is now public property and the method of operation has been fully described by Admiral Sir R. Bacon. The secret was well kept at the time.

Had the scheme been put into effect and by its daring and forethought succeeded, in combination with the northward thrust of the Fifth army from across the Ypres front and the eastward attack of Rawlinson's Fourth army across the Yser at Lombartzyde, the southward stroke of the 1st Division behind the German lines could scarcely have failed to lead to a great capture of men and guns, to the turning of the seaward flank of the German armies and the clearing of a great part of the sea coast.

Boldness and imagination, however, were in this case controlled by knowledge and common sense. The blow could only be effective as part of a larger and more powerful operation, and accordingly was not to be struck till the general situation was ripe for it.

At 5:50 a. m, on July 31 the infantry battle in Flanders opened.

In the face of such powerful resistance as the enemy was able to oppose to us, it would have been remarkable indeed if our objectivcs had been everywhere completely attained. Over a wide aren of the battle front they had not merely been attaind but had been exceeded, and even in the sector of least success we had made deep and important progress. The enemy had lost heavily and we had taken 6000 prisoners. We were fully prepared to encounter fierce opposition, and were prepared beforehand to stop the advance at any of the intermediate objectives if the development of the battle should make that course more advisable. The check on the right, therefore, did not seriously disturb our plans. It merely meant that the different steps of our general advance would have to proceed somewhat more slowly in this sector.

But our plans were seriously disarranged by the steady downpour of rain which continued without sensible intermission for four days from the afternoon of July 31, and heralded the wettest August known in Flanders for many years!

After October 12, the object of the fighting, so far as the Flanders theatre was concerned, was nothing more than the attainment of a satisfactory winter line.

The attack which gave us Passchendaele itself (as the mark of the line) on November 6 was undertaken by twe Canadian divisions only, the 2nd and the 1st, and the final assault of the battle, that of November 10, by three divisions, the 1st Division, finally recovered from its "meningitis," taking part with the Canadians.

The vastness of the drama in the west is well illustrated by contrasting it with the Napoleonic era. The Napoleonic struggle, though it lasted much longer than the war of 1914-1918, was almost a puny affair compared with a year's conflict on the western front.

Had St. Eloi and The Bluff been fought during the wars of Marlborough, Frederick, or Napoleon and Wellington, they would have ranked as considerable battles. They come within the period discussed in this book, but could at most be dealt with here as local activity on the western front in the winter of 1915-1916. Yet would Creasy writing today have cared to leave them out of a work on the "decisive battle" of the world? Doing so, he would have had to face some ridicule.

Writing of the final offensive by the Russians starting on July 11, 1917, when Brussilov and Kornilov had considerable success, Ludendroff remarks that if it had occurred in April and May when the British and French were still engaged in the spring offensive), "I do not see, as I look back, how our leadership could have mastered the situation."

Exactly! It was the joint blow, the simultaneous offensive by the allies, which the Germans dreaded. Haig consistently pressed for it in 1917, as he had in 1916, but he got little support from allied leadership. Joffre had been removed; Nivell would not support him; Petain could not support him.

In this general campaign the struggle between Bourlon and Moeuvres is worth recalling often and dwelling on. This ground was held against an almost overwhelming superiority in numbers by technical skill and good leading. But it was held also by the grit and character of hard-fighting men. The men and officers who held out in advanced or isolated posts, and fought with rifle and bayonet and bomb till they were all killed or until they had—as happened in some instances—actually forced back their massed opponents; the position could not have been saved or, later, restored except for them. And that, after all, because of the character it proves, is the greatest asset a nation in arms can have. It is worthiness, that counts first. That is as true of war in its modern, scientific methods as of the battles of past centuries.

How Haig warned that Ludendroff was massing for the world's greatest battle is told by Mr. Dewar in the seventh of his articles which is to appear in next Sunday's Record-News. Bonar Law, he says, took a "Roseate View" of the prospects in 1918 when all else in Great Britain were convinced of the big drive coming—Bolsheviki not solely responsible for release of German troops in the east, writer declares.

The Fable Of The Two Benefactors

By GEORGE ADE.

Two Boys sallied forth from a straggling Settlement in the Sticks for the purpose of getting a strangle hold on Dame Fortune and becoming known as hated Capitalists.

They had read the Works describing how the Yokel with ill-fitting hand-me-downs who moves into the Bright Lights always becomes President of a Bank and grows Side Whiskers.

Statistics show that many of the most promising Amateurs who migrate from the Whistling Posts gradually work their way up to carrying Advertising Banners or waiting for a Blizzard so they can shovel Snow.

In fact a good many of the wisest Crackers in the old Burg predicted that Ezra and Bill would land back some day and go to work in the Brick Yard, so they were a little jolted when they learned that both of the Native Sons were making good in the Big Town, slamming the Ball right over the Plate and batting above .400.

Nearly everyone was surprised and hoped the Boys were getting it honestly.

Ezra and Bill, up among the inflammatory Posters and the nervous Electric Signs, kept on playing Tag with the Market until they had it in Oodles and Bundles and Bales and Stacks.

Finally, when they became so prosperous that they had to wear Shoes specially made, they began to be troubled with tender Recollections of th Humble Associations of Youth.

The Dream of Every Financial Second Story Worker.

Through the Haze of Intervening Years they saw the Game of Two-Old-Cat in the Vacant Lot back of the M. E. Church and forgot all about sleeping in the refrigerated Attic and going down in the morning to thaw out the Wooden Pump.

They yearned to elbow out from the Congested Traffic of the cold and heartless Metropolis and renew Sweet Associations with Buddies and Pals of their Boyhood Days.

They wanted to wander once more down the Avenues of Rhubarb and clasp hands with Old Friends whose simple Hearts averaged about 14 Throbs to the Minute.

It is the regulation Dream of every Financial Second-Story Worker to go back to his Birthplace wearing a Laurel Wreath and have the School Children throw Moss Roses in his Pathway.

Humble Associates of Youth.

There is no other Joy in Life comparable to that of flinging the Ha Ha at Relatives who predicted that you would finish on the Gallows.

Also there is a lot of dirty Satisfaction in going back and permitting the local Luminaries who sneered at you because you were patched in the Rear to crawl up and touch the Hem of your Garment.

And could anything be more dramatic, as a Sequel, than to have the Boy who went away penniless come back with a truck load of Kale and do the Carnegie Stuff?

Ezra figured out that he could be a Big Hero among the Home Folks, so he sent on a Proposition.

He wanted to build a Library at the corner of Fifth and Main, thereby making it easy for his old Neighbors to read the Six Best Sellers without plugging the Author's Game.

He offered to give 75,000 bucks if the Citizens would raise 25,000 more and maintain the Thing.

Ezra had not been in the Habit of reading anything except the Tape and he cared about as much for Ibaues as Ibanez cared for him.

Nevertheless, he wanted to be remembered, 50 years hence, as the Man who built the Library and not as the Guy who dealt from the Bottom of the Deck, utilizing the Sleeve Device and the Bosom Hold-Out.

By the use of Anaesthetics and Forceps the $25,000 was raised.

Then the Building was erected and the only Criticism made was that the Location was poor and the dodblasted Concern looked like a Barn and it was arranged wrong inside and nobody didn't want no Library nohow.

When Ezra came down to the Dedication to face an outraged and taxburdened People, he was just as Popular as Sciatica ever dared to be.

How Bill Became the Big Hero.

Bill came back also.

He floated into Town one day and appeared in Jimison's General Store and called for a Good Cigar.

He told Mr. Jimison to take one and called up the Boys around the Stove.

When the Word got out that Bill was buying over at the Bee Hive, representative Citizens came on the jump from the Harness Shop and the Undertaking Parlors and the Elite Bowling Alley.

Evry aftr that the Word was freely passed around that Bill was a Prince.

New and Interesting Facts of Science and Life

How the VIOLET RAY Is Used to BANISH ILLS of the TEETH

GERMS that swarm in the mouth by the millions and cause pyorrhea and other ills of the teeth are now to be banished by means of a lamp of simple construction which can focus violet rays to the merest speck of intense light and be used with telling effect against the invading bacteria, which die off under the treatment in little more than four minutes. The violet ray is said to be especially effective in treating pyorrhea, which is a most prevalent and destructive disease.

The device is known as the Pashler tungsten lamp. It tis the invention of F. Forbes, of West Kensington, London, England. Already it has been installed in the surgeries of a number of prominent English dentists, one of whom is Dr. R. Hodgson, a dental consultant at the Royal Waterloo Hospital.

"I cannot yet state that the lamp can cure pyorrhoea in all stages," says Dr. Hodgson, "but it is certainly the most effective deterrent I know. One patient, aged fifty, was suffering from pyorrhea, and I regarded him as a hopeless case. The patient was anxious to retain his teeth, so I decided to try the lamp.

"In two days he returned. The teeth were much firmer and the gums in an infinitely healthier condition. It has still to be shown whether the treatment can cure advanced pyorrhea, but I think there is no doubt that with accurate technique it can cure the earlier stages of pyorrhea."

The vital parts of the lamp are two short rods of tungsten metal, about the thickness of a lead pencil, and a quartz lens. Electric current is conveyed to the rods, and the violet rays are collected and concentrated. They are focused on the part to be treated until the sphere of light becomes a mere speck.

Germs that attack the teeth and gums are so stealthy in their action that they often have done great damage before their presence is made known by that common malady called "toothache." A favorite lodging place of bacteria is between two teeth, down out of sight below the grinding faces. They look fuzzy when seen through a microscope.

No pain is felt. The attackers are too stealthy for even the delicate nerves to feel. But six months later the hole is visibly larger. Fresh scavengers have come to feast upon the tooth and the particles of food that stick in the wedged-together place. After another six months millions of germs swarm in the cavity, which has now become a veritable excavation.

Then, all of a sudden, there comes an ache. The germs have broken through the dentine and into the soft tissue about the nerve. They are a long way from the latter yet, but it feels them. Air, heat, cold, food, touch, everything is now registered in the unprotected spot as pain.

Once a tooth nerve is really injured or exposed the pain from it is incessant and feels many times more powerful than you would expect from such a small thread of living tissue.

Each tooth consists of a crown(the portion of the tooth above the gum), a root or fang (the portion located in the jaw bone), an intermediate part called the neck, which is the narrow section covered by the gum.

A tooth is composed of phosphate and fluoride salts of calcium. The fluorspar or enamel on the outside is supposed by nature to be highly resistant to all forms of chemical action, and hence able to resist decay. This is not the case to-day as it was when man's evolution was lower than it is now. For the teeth have become wedged together as man's jaws have shrunk, that there are many contact points. It is at these contact points that germs obtain a foothold. It is for this reason, as dentists point out, that the teeth should be carefully brushed after each meal, and twice a year should be given a thorough inspection.

This enamel is the hardest substance in the human body. It varies in thickness, being thickest at the cutting surface, and diminishing as it approaches the root of the tooth. The enamel consists of 97 per cent of inorganic matter, the remainder being organic. In structure the enamel of the tooth is composed of hexagonal enamel prisms arranged perpendicularly to the surface of the dentine. Each enamel prism of fibre has a wavy tortuous course with its inner end fitted into a slight depression in the dentine. The prism maintains the same diameter throughout its length, much the same as the shaft of a hair, but is quite wavy. As a result, near the surface of the tooth, shorter additional prisms are found, which are called supplementary prisms. These prisms are seemingly held together by an inorganic transparent cement. If a tooth is sectioned, that is, cut into thin slices and examined under a microscope, some brown striations will be seen running parallel with the surface of the tooth. Their cause is still in doubt, but according to a writer in Science and Invention, it is believed that they represent the successive positions of the enamel cap. Other lines visible, if the tooth is examined by reflected light, are apparently due to the various directions taken by the different bundles of enamel, well marked near the surface of the dentine, and becoming fainter as one approaches the surface of the enamel.

The dentine forms the bulk of the tooth and gives it its shape. It represents ivory to a very great extent, and is yellowish white in color, quite a bit harder than bone. It is covered throughout either by ivory or cementum (the latter is the covering surrounding the dentine of the root or fang). Dentine contains about 72 per cent of inorganic matter. Looking upon this part of the tooth in greater detail, it is found that it contains dental sheaths, matrix and dental fibres. The dental sheaths, which extend in a curve or spiral course from the pulp cavity to the enamel above, or cementum below, diminish in diameter as they pass outward from the center. They are delicate tube-like masses, which are practically indestructible, existing long after the matrix has been destroyed. The spaces in these tubes are called dental canaliculi, likewise terminating at the enamel or cementum, by either joining with each other, ending bluntly, or opening into interglobular spaces.

The dental fibres are still in discussion. Some investigators claim that the fibres are processes of flat shaped cells, called odontoblasts, which are the cells from which dentine is originally derived. Others claim that they represent connective tissue, surrounding nerves.

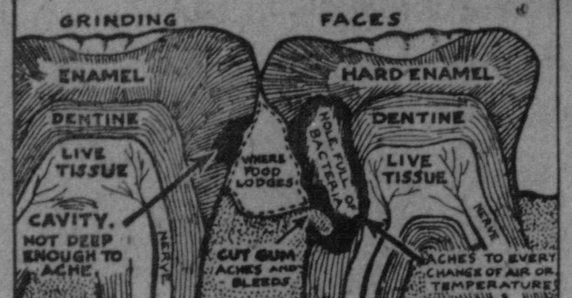

The matrix, not so hard as the dental sheaths, surrounds them. It is not so abundant near the pulp cavity, where the sheaths are packed closely together, but further out, as the sheaths decrease in diameter, the matrix increases. Here irregular spaces may be found, which are the interglobular spaces alluded to heretofore.

There is a bonelike substance that covers the root of the teeth called cementum, containing 66 per cent inorganic matter and 34 per cent organic matter. It is thickest at the very end of the root, and becomes gradually thinner as it approaches the enamel.

The dental pulp occupies the pulp cavities chamber and root canals. It is rich in blood and nerve supply. There are different types of cells found in every tooth, the odontoblosts being only one of the varieties. The arteries and nerves enter the tooth through the root.

The peridental membrane serves a very important function in the tooth, or rather immediately outside of it. It holds the tooth in place, rotates it, returning it to normal position if it has been slightly displaced, and on one side forms the cementum and on the other the bone. This membrane covers the roots of the teeth and lines the sockets in the jaw. It is thickest at the root and gum and thinner in the middle.

Romances in Weaving of Rugs

THE Turks and Persians are the most celebrated rugmakers in the world, and many wonderful specimens also come from India. Formerly Persians and Turks were nomads, and they first used the rugs they made to hang over the openings of their tents.

In parts of Turkey and Persia rugmaking is still carried on in a very primitive way with a loom made by driving two poles into the ground parallel to each other, the distance between the two determining the width of the rug. Each family has its own design, and the weaving is done by many hands.

Oriental makers use a knife, a pair of scissors and a comb-like instrument to batten down the pile. "Tying" is done with the same primitive cleverness of native fingers at present as it was in olden days with the village women sitting astride looms stretched between pegs in the ground.

The most famous rug in the world, which a writer in Pearson's Weekly estimates is worth about $250,000, is in the South Kensington Museum in London. It is known as the Arbadil rug, as it was made in a little town of that name. This wonderful carpet measures thirty-four feet by seventeen feet, and contains 30,000,000 knots. It took sixteen years to make.

This rug was ordered in memory of a Shah of Persia who died in 1524, and was presented to the mosque most closely associated with his ancestors. The making of it took the full time of the most famous rugmaker of the age for sixteen years, and even then he had apprentices to help him with the simpler parts.

Is is signed, "The work of the slave of the threshold, Mahqud of Kashan."

The making of rugs as an industry grew apace in the East owing to the glut of cheap labor natural in a country where it is customary for each son to bring his wife to reside in the house of his father.

The duty of the mother-in-law is to keep the many daughters employed. Hence, rugmaking! Women, and even little children of five and six, weave at the primitive looms, which are merely a couple of posts driven into the ground with a crosspiece to which the warp threads are fastened. Each tribe or family makes its rugs to a distinctive design, which is as much theirs as is the tartan of the Scotsman.

A Senna rug may have from 400 to 600 knots to the square inch; a Turkish as few as 30. As an Eastern weaver makes three knots a minute, a rug measuring eight inches by five inches, with 400 knots to the square inch, would be the result of four years of work!

When a girl begins to approach marriageable age she is allowed to make a rug unaided, and the money for which it is sold is set aside for her dowry.

The dyeing of the wools and hair used in the rugs is treated as a fine art, and the head dyer is considered one of the most important people in the tribe.

Sometimes work is arranged on a communistic principle, and villages agree to specialize in some particular color. One boils onion skins and produces all the yellow wool required; another treats green walnut skins, and a third worm-red bugs.

A rich deep red is rarely used for commercial rugs, however, since many hours' boiling is necessary before a good tint can be secured, and in a country where fuel has to be bought by the pound this is a serious consideration.

After the dyer, in importance comes the tribal clipper, who cuts the pile of the rugs. In factories that is done by a machine on the principle of the lawn mower.

In certain parts of India, notably Gwalior, carpets famous for their beauty are the result of prison labor.

Long-term men are invariably sent to the looms. Between each two of these sits a pattern maker, who chants the colors and number of knots to be made. Some of the designs are so intricate that a gang of six men will barely complete two inches in a working day.

In rugs made with the Turkish knot the yarn is tied in such a way that the two ends which make the pile of the rug alternate, necessitating a long pile in order that they may overlap and cover the warp threads.

In Persian rugs the knot is tied so that between every strand of the warp a strand of yarn obtrudes.

The Phenomenon of Nature's ICE HOUSE in the SKY

THAT nature has a real ice house in the sky is witnessed by the striking phenomenon of a sudden bombardment of the earth in the midst of a summer storm by bullets of ice in the form of hail. These pellets are sometimes as small as bird-shot, but occasionally as big as hen's eggs or apples, and there are even tales of sky-born lumps of ice weighing many pounds. Because of the destructiveness to growing crops, and even to livestock and fruit trees, scientists have devoted much study to hailstones, their nature, their origin, and possible means of prevention. Quite recently, however, a brand-new theory has been evolved in Germany connecting the phenomenon with cosmic conditions. This startling proposition, which has been elaborated in a work called "Hail from the Cosmos," by Professor Halbfass, of Jena, is also explained by Professor Hanns Fisher in "Reclams Universum."

"The science of meteorology to-day," says this authority, "explains hail as a phenomenon having its origin in the higher, colder strata of the air, and assumes that the larger lumps consist of smaller particles frozen into a single mass. . . .

"We must go far back—some ten billion years—in order to gain a definite viewpoint of the matter. It was in the constellation of the Dove, far, far outside the Milky Way as visible to-day, that our sun and planets were formed through a tremendous explosion of a mother-star. Through causes which we cannot go into here, a double ring was formed about this new world-island; a wreath of still luminous stars moving remotely among the fixed stars (the outer Milky Way). These are visible only with the telescope, together with a spiral cloud much nearer to the sun composed of pieces of ice as big as wagons, houses or mountains, and consisting of separate pieces or else of several pieces frozen together, and forming altogether that wonderful, softly luminous streak of light which stretches across the sky on clear nights, and which we know as the Milky Way, and one of whose constituents, oxygen, came from the mother-star.

"This inner Milky Way consists of ice. From the front side of this, the side turned toward the Lyre, pieces of ice of the different sizes come into the sphere of attraction of the sun, and are likewise captured at almost definitely determinable times by all the other planets as well as the earth. When such an ice meteor nears our home star, it sweeps royally about the earth at cosmic speed until it strikes the condensed or hydrogen layer of the atmospheric envelope. But here the furious speed of this ghostly guest from remote cosmic space is suddenly checked, as if it were received upon a cushion. Violent friction phenomena occur and stratum after stratum of the block of ice is explosively torn off and crumbled to bits. At the same time the outer surface of the whole is considerably enlarged. The aforesaid 'cushion' increases in breadth, and at the same time a wave of air, an impulsive storm wind, such as accompanies nearly all hail storms, rushes forth.

"Lower and lower sinks the ice meteor, which has, perhaps, by this time been reduced to the size of hazel nuts; at the same time it suffers a loss of rapidity, which, however, usually remains greater than that of ordinary terrestrial clouds. As a result of the friction which has taken place, even in the upper strata, tremendous electrical tensions have been formed which are discharged in the well-known manner.

"All these things explain why a hail storm usually lays waste only a narrow strip of land. This helps us to understand, likewise, the origin of those larger blocks of ice, which are sometimes hurled downward to the earth—ice blocks so cold even when splintered into fragments that on chancing to crash through the branches of a tree they become coated with a mantle of frozen leaves.

STORMS That HELP Raise CROPS

ONE result of the furious storms that so frequently rage off sea coasts is to give coast farmers an extra supply of good fertilizer for their fields. Masses of seaweed are thrown up and the shore is the scene of lively activity.

But the thing has to be done quickly, since one tide might bring up quantities of weed and the next sweep the beach clear. Wise farmers collect as much weed as they can and pile it beyond the water line.

Seaweed, as a rule, makes an excellent fertilizer. Some farmers increase its natural qualities by adding ordinary fertilizer. Most, however, simply strew their land to a depth of from three to six inches and plow it into the earth. As the weed decays a strong odor of iodine and ammonia is given off.

The fields generally selected for seaweed fertilizing are those devoted to corn or grass. Some farmers say that grass grown where seaweed has been strewn mows better than ordinarily, and that their stock graze from it or feed on the hay with more zest.

Sometimes the weed is plowed to a depth of a foot or more in a field intended for kale. The result is that the plants are remarkable for their growth and flavor. The natural gases in the seaweed seem to have a peculiarly beneficial effect on this plant, which cannot be grown easily in some parts.

Nor is it only seaweed that is washed ashore after a storm. Very often good-sized fish are hurled on the beach. The offal from these is excellent for fields, and market gardeners use it for cultivating grapes and tomatoes.

VOLCANOES Used as LIFE-SAVERS

THE recent eruption of Etna, Italy's "burning mountain," brings to mind the fact that the time may be not far distant when the largest and most active volcanoes, instead of being a dreaded menace to the safety of man, will contribute materially to his happiness and comfort.

In Italy and in some of the volcanic islands of the Pacific the steam power issuing from volcanoes has been harnessed for engineering purposes. The people of the Tuscan town of Lardello light their streets, heat their homes, and do their cooking by means of volcanic steam pressure, which generates enough heat to cook a joint in less than half an hour.

In another district in Italy volcanic energy is exploited for the purpose of making electricity, which is supplied to many towns, some of them more than fifty miles distant. The steam is carried through pipes to huge boilers, where its heat converts water into still more steam which drives the dynamos and provides central heating in many houses. Similar installations are being erected in other parts of Italy, and the future may see that country become a vast electric power station, supplying electricity to half of Europe.

The great spectacular volcano of Kilauea, in Hawaii, is to be made to justify its existence in the same way. The crater of Kilauea is a vast lake of molten lava, and this will be harnessed to supply the Hawaiian community with light, heat, and power.

Although volcanoes are often referred to as burning mountains, in reality they do not burn at all. Neither are they mountains in the true sense of th term. The scientific definition of a volcano is "an opening in the earth's crust, through which heated matter is thrown up from the earth's interior to the surface, where it usually forms a hill, more or less conical in shape, and generally with a hollow or crater at the top."

Where eruptions frequently occur, the heated materials forced upwards pile themselves to heights which cause them to be classed as mountains.

What looks like fire belching forth is merely the reflection of the molten lava on the clouds of steam which hang over the crater. The steam itself is often wrongly spoken of as smoke.

The cause of volcanic action is not known. The most popular theory is that it is brought about by water getting into the white furnace below the earth's crust. In support of this the fact is cited that nearly all the most active volcanoes are close to the sea.

WHY Your LUNGS Have to WORK Much HARDER in WINTER Than in SUMMER

YOUR lungs contain no fewer than six hundred millions of cells, and always retain a certain portion of air however deeply you may respire or expire. They work much harder in winter than they do in summer, for in cold weather you require more food, and so have to take in more oxygen in order to burn it up. That the lungs are one of the hardest working organs of the human body is shown by the accompanying drawing, indicating the combined bulk of all the lungs of the human race.

People who live in cold countries breathe more rapidly than residents of the tropics; so, as a rule, they have deeper chests.

When you go down the scale of evolution from the warm-blooded to the cold-blooded creatures, and thence to the Insects, you find all sorts of odd arrangements for breathing. For instance, observe the frog, when young, it has gills, and, later in its life, lungs. But, like other soft-skinned reptiles, the frog breathes also through its skin. In hot weather, when the water of its native pond gets warm, the frog is forced to come to the surface, to get oxygen; but so long as the water is cold, it can remain below for very long periods.

The so-called "hell-bender," a large American salamander, has, even more so than the frog, the power of breathing through its skin.

Jellyfish have only one organ, combining the functions of breathing, digestion and circulation. The leech and the common earthworm have no regular lungs, but imbibe air through a network of tiny blood vessels.

The little sandhopper, which you may see on sandy beaches, has bladders attached to its legs, through which it gets the necessary supply of oxygen from the air.

Clams and mussels possess gills made by foldings of the so-called "mantle." These rudimentary arrangements enable them to breathe. Land crabs have gills which more or less resemble lungs, and which are always moist.

But breathing apparatus may exist in or on almost any part of the body. The dragon fly grub, a voracious creature which may be found in almost any pond, holds the odd record of carrying its breathing organs in its tail.

What Is the SPEED of a THOUGHT?

UNTIL recently it was generally considered that a thought occurred with the speed of lightning. But modern methods of measurement have shown that the speed of thought is not by any means exceptional.

The time taken for a nervous impulse to travel from the elbow to the brain and thence to the wrist proved that it did so at about 180 feet a second.

Similarly a frog thinks at the rate of about 90 feet a second, and it takes two seconds for a whale 150 feet long to realize that he has been harpooned in the tail and to lash out with it.

In some peculiar way, however, the speed of thought seems to depend upon the temperature of the body. If a man's body is warm he is able to think quicker than if he is cold; and if his nerves are frozen they will not conduct impulses.

A frog at seventeen degrees will think only half as quickly as another at thirty-five, while if the frog be warmed to the temperature of a man the animal will think equally as quickly.

A cold-blooded creature like the fresh-water mussel thinks only at about two and a half inches a second. One of the cuttlefishes thinks at the rate of three feet a second in Winter, and the octopus in Summer three to five times as quickly.

Many drugs, as well as cold, will decrease the speed of thought—chloroform obviously and ether and alcohol less obviously.

The ability to think quickly seems to vary, too, with temperament. A melancholic or lethargic man thinks more slowly than a choleric individual. In all cases, however, it is practically impossible to tire out the nerves.

Can Plants See?

BOTANISTS know that plants are sensitive to light and dark. Many of them move during the day in order to turn the faces of their flowers always to the sun. Others open only when the daylight is dying, and when the moths on whom they rely to carry their pollen are abroad.

Climbing plants, such as sweet peas, seem to fling their tendrils in an almost uncanny way in the direction of anything that will serve as a support.

A scientist engaged recently in taking photographs of leaves through the microscope was surprised to discover that some of them showed hundreds of little round patches, each of which reflected the image of some object, just as do the facets of the compound eye of an insect. Closer examination proved that each of these patches consisted of a cell whose rounded outer wall formed a lens. Each cell was a perfect eye.

You Can't Always Trust a Trained Caterpillar

BY JAMES J. MONTAGUE

You may not altogether believe this story. Sometimes I have misgivings about parts of it myself. But it was told to me by a serious old gentleman who raises wonderful vegetables in a garden just down the street from my house. He is highly respected in the neighborhood and it would be hard to think, as one looked into his honest gray eyes, that he would exaggerate. Still, this story does contain statements—but you can judge for yourself.

"I see," he said one afternoon last week as I was returning a special kind of hoe I had borrowed from him—a hoe invented and made by himself—"that there is a story in the papers about little flies attacking locusts out west, and destroying them by thousands. But they won't last."

"What won't last?" I inquired; "the locusts?"

"No, the little flies. They'll destroy the locusts all right, for a while. If there was any way to keep them doing it, there would be no more locust pests and the $83,268,045.63 damage that these pests do would be avoided. But you can't trust insects to do any useful work for long. They are temperamentally unsuited to it—with the exception of bees, of course."

"Indeed!" I said. I could think of nothing else to say.

"No," he continued. "I was the originator of the idea of setting bugs to war on other bugs. I began with flies, like these people out west did. But the flies proved worthless in a very short time. No stability. Always flitting about. And lacking in nerve. The housefly has plenty of nerve, but he is like a cat. He is too selfish to take training. He wants to have his own way all the time. The flies that I used were smaller flies. I could give you their scientific name if I had my entomology at hand. If you care to wait I will go into the house and look it up."

"No," I said, "I would far rather you would go on with the story."

"Well, as I said before the flies wouldn't do the work. Flibbertygibbets they were, with no idea of sticking at anything. So I decided to train caterpillars."

"To train caterpillars!" I exclaimed.

"Certainly," said the old gentleman looking a little nettled. "Why not? You've heard of trained fleas, haven't you?"

"Yes," I admitted; "I have."

"Well that was what gave me the idea. I was raising cantaloupes in Colorado that year, and I read in the newspapers that the seventeen year locusts were coming down from Canada, and would be due to arrive about the latter part of the month. I knew if they ever got here they would destroy my cantaloupes, blossom, fruit and stem. They eat everything clean. You'd think nothing had ever grown in the path they cut across the country.

"I had all the little money that my dear old grandmother had left me tied up in those cantaloupes, and naturally didn't want to feed them to a lot of locusts who were nothing whatever to me.

"Every means of fighting the pests that had been employed against them had failed. They flew over land from which the vegetation had been burned. They ate arsenate of lead and Paris green and begged for more. Men with flails couldn't beat them down fast enough to stop them. I knew that unless some force as powerful as they were could be turned against them all my capital and all my summer's work would go for nothing. I lay awake for the greater part of three nights, and finally I hit on the counter pest idea.

"I hit on it because, the night before, I had been reading an article about the training of fleas, an occupation I mean to take up in my old age. 'If fleas can be trained,' I asked myself that night, 'why not flies?' And flies are as plentiful as locusts, and if properly drilled and inspired with sufficient hatred of them could at least put up a stiff fight against them.'

Flies Lack Gameness

"The next morning I went out with a net and caught a quantity of the little flies that were hovering about my garden. I took them into the house fed them regularly and treated them kindly until they had confidence in me. Then I set about training them.

"In the training I used ordinary locusts that are always to be found in every season everywhere, and which sufficiently resemble the seventeen year locusts to serve my purpose.

"I would annoy the flies by prodding them with a locust I held in my hand. Then when they were sufficiently infuriated I would put the locust, which I had rendered noncombatant by pulling its teeth down on the table and—"

"By pulling its teeth!" I exclaimed. "Do insects have teeth?"

"What do you suppose they eat vegetables down to the ground with?" inquired the old gentleman, impatiently. I subsided.

"The flies, violently angry at the experimental locusts, and find that he could not resist them would fall on him and slay him. Soon they got to hate all locusts, and when liberated they not only cleared my garden of these creatures, but also drove out the crickets and katydids.

"But the love of the game pelled on them after a while. One of them got into trouble by attacking a beetle, and though his companions came to his assistance, as they did when the locusts showed fight, the beetle shook them all off. After that they were useless. They were not game enough to take a licking and come back to return it.

Caterpillars Becomes Demons

"So I tried caterpillars, which, by nature of their means of locomotion, are much steadier.

"It was necessary to train the caterpillars to work at night, which is the time of day when they are most active. The seventeen-year locusts sleeps at night and works by day. When he slumbers it is easy for the caterpillars to sneak up on him and do him to death. The caterpillars were gentle and affectionate to me, put perfect demons when loosed on the locusts. The loving are the daring.

When I had trained a colony I turned them loose in a small patch of ground where the ordinary locusts were still numerous, and they did their work so well that they roused the emulation of other caterpillars, and soon every caterpiller in the place was a confirmed locust eater.

At the end of a week I was able to collect several million of them and take them on the train to a point north where the frantic farmers were vainly striving to stem the tide of seventeen-year locusts.

"They would have done it too. They went for those locusts in a way that betided victory. But the victory was short lived. It was so easy to lick the locusts that the caterpillars got their heads swelled and thought they were meant for bigger game. Somehow they learned that a whole district near by was infested he wasps and eager to try their mettle on a more formidable enemy they crawled over there.

"That of course was the end. The best trained caterpillar is no match for a wasp. My army was turned back shattered and broken after the first night's fight, and only a few of the survivors ever crawled the 80 odd miles back to my place to tell the tale.

"The locusts came in their appointed time and ate all my cantaloupes. I would have been out there yet if it hadn't been for that."

The old gentleman took the hoe, thanked me politely for returning it, and began to hack some weeds near his feet.

I walked past him, lost in thought. The story was hard to believe, but still—flies are destroying beetles in the middle west. The papers say so. And after all, if you can train a flea, why can't you train a caterpillar?

Ring Reels Rhymes to Rout Rats

Comes To Dept. of Agriculture's Aid With Story of Pie-Eyed Piper of Hammond, Ind.
By RING LARDNER

To the editor:

Am in receipt of a letter from the U. S. dept. of Agriculture at Washington, D.C., which I will copy down a part of it as follows:

"Dear Sir: Among the various problems allotted to this Bureau is included that of rat control. There is a constantly growing demand for relief from the depredations of rats which indicates an awakened realization of the great economic importance of controlling these pests.'

Then the letter goes on to say that the dept. is conducting a publicity campaign to try and get anti-rat movements started all over the country and then the letter winds up like the following:

"This campaign is proving successful, but additional posters and press material are greatly needed and we feel that one of your rhymes would prove a valuable addition to this work and should you feel inclined to contribute it would be very much appreciated."

Well friends I ain't wrote one of my rhymes in many a moon and further and more I don't know what kind of a rhyme would kill any rats unless you wrote them with a poison pen and then left them lay around where the rats might read them peacably but still and all the dept. must know there business and any way when I get a call for help from the old U. S. I am the kind of a man that won't turn them down provided they ain't fighting Germans or something.

But would like to state first off that some of my best friends has been rats and lived right in the house with me and I never heard a squeek out of them that was not justified and you might say that we have always had our rats under pretty good control and they have staid in there place and very seldom come upstairs, but at the same time I know a good many families where the rats done a lot of damage and eat up a great deal of food including cheese which I might say at this pt. that as far as I am concerned the rodent tribe can have all the cheese in the world.

Gibbs Imitates the Pie-Eyed Piper

But what I started to say was I know places where rats has acted very annoying and had to be either got rid of or controlled so I may as well give the dept. and the public the benefit of my neighbors experience in handling the situation.

Well, there was one neighbor who we will call Gibbs, who the rats around his house got to be absolutely impossible. They would not do nothing he said, and was running wild all over the house and even using his bathtub.

This man and his wife entertained a good deal of Co. that wanted to take baths and it kind of worred them to go in the bath rm. and find the tub occupied by a couple of dirty rats. So Mr. Gibbs got mad at his rats and made it up in his mind that he would give them the air but how to go about it was the next question.

Well, when he was a boy he had read a story about a Pie-eyed Piper in Hammond, Ind., that bought himself a pipe and played tunes on it and walked out of town and all the rats followed him on acct. of how they could not resist music.

Mr. Gibbs was kind of puzzled as to how the Piper had got any music out of a pipe, as he did not realize that they was a musical instrument called a pipe but all the pipe he knowed about was the kind you smoke but he thought if the Piper had learned to play on one why he could, too, so he went on and bought himself a tobacco pipe and he tried to learn to play it but could not, so he smoked it instead and in about 3 wks. of steady smoking the pipe was in such a condition that they couldn't no rats live in the same house with it and they all ducked.

This Was a Mean Trick

The other neighbor is a man we will call Buck and a great cheese

In about 2 wks. of steady smoking the pipe was in such a condition that they couldn't no rats live in the same house with it and they all ducked.

fancier but could not keep no cheese in the house over night without the rats making a bum out of it. He bought himself a iron safe and tried locking the cheese up in that but in some way or another the rats got a hold of the combination and it was goodby cheese.

Then he had a great idear namely he instructed his wife and son and the servants to go around to different parts of the house where they knowed the rats could overhear them and keep making remarks like "The Schwobs have got a whole lot better cheese than we ever had around here," and "I wonder where the Schwobs gets there wonderful cheese" and etc.

Well it was not more than 2 or 3 days when all the rats had left the Bucks house and went looking all over Kinsington for the Schwobs house and the rats had no sooner went when Mr. Buck put screens on all his windows and kept his doors all shut and locked, and now he is in the envable position of being able to sing "Yes we have no rats today."

These couple of incidence may be of service to the dept. of Agriculture and to individuals who is anxious to get rid of rats and now in regards to the rhyme, why I feel like they might be a slight possibility that a rhyme appealing to the rats sence of shame might have a effect on the situation if the rhyme was printed in large type and copies of it was posted in places where rats is want to congregate like the basement, the pantry, the bath rm. and in barns and silos and etc. And here is the rhyme I would suggest:

Rats, rats, you animal pests!
Have you gotten no hearts in your breasts?
Know ye full well that you're unwelcome guests
In barns or in houses or flats!
Have ye no pride that you won't go away
From places where nobody wants you to stay?
No wonder the people speak of you today
As rats, Rats, RATS!

POTASH & PERLMUTTER

Discuss—Not Not Knowing Famous People Too Intimately

"I met yesterday for th first time Adolph Rinckheimer what gave two million dollars to the Home for Chronic Odd Fellows, Mawruss," Abe Potash remarked to his partner, Morris Perlmutter.

"He must be a prince, that feller!" Morris said.

"Except in looks and conversation," Abe continued, "and also he wore a kind of a college boy suit with a cloth strap in the back, Mawruss, and in some other respects he reminded me of that bookkeeper by the name of Joe Something-or-other who we fired for pinching our stamps on us."

"Well, I ain't surprised at that," Morris observed, "which only last Sunday in a brown illustrated supplement, there was side by side two pictures, Abe. One of them was a likenes of Dr. J. Gastunsky, the great scientist who has kept a chicken gizard alive up at Columbia university for over two years, and the other was a portrait of Eddie Mason, the well-known Yonkers, N. Y., wife murderer, and I give you my word, Abe, if the printer would have switched the names by mistake, y'understand, you couldn't blame anybody for saying that they was never mistaken in reading character from the human face, and that you could tell from Dr. Gastunsky's eyes he was one of them married men who couldn't be trusted with so much as a butter knife if his wife was anywheres around. Also, Mawruss, the same face expert would say that Eddie Mason had that characteristical studious look which we associate with such people as Edison, Pasteur and Einstein."

"Sure, I know," Abe said, "but it wasn't so much in his looks that this here Rinckheimer disappointed me, Mawruss. It was up at Charles Lickman's house that I got introduced to him, and while Lickman ain't exactly what you would call exsetly a 'melammed' when he gets off of the dress business as a topic of conversation, y'understand, he was a regular philosopher compared to this here Dinckheimer. Would you believe me, Mawruss, that Rinckheimer actually thought Magnus Johnson was a United States senator from California who had just come back from Europe and was dead against the world court and league of nations, and the only remarks he passed during the entire evening was to the effect that Dempsey would probably knock the block off of Firpo."

The Great and Their Weakness

"Say!" Morris protested, "just because a millionaire gives two million dollars to a Home for Chronic Odd Fellows, Abe, ain't no reason why he shouldn't be a human being with wrong ideas about what kind of clothes to wear and thoughts to think.

"Which you are like about 99 per cent of the rest of the country, Abe. So soon as you read in the papers that a man has out of the goodness of his heart given away a few million dollars to charity, right away you make a mind, portrait of him as an old gentleman with long white whiskers and gold spectacles who doesn't know a club from a spade and never reads the papers except on Saturday night for the purpose of finding out what's on the carpet in church circles the following day.

"Philanthronists has got to have occasionally like anybody else, and if they don't shoot craps and take once in a while a flyer on a few hundred shares of Transpacific Oil and Refining preferred quoted on the Curb at a quarter bid, three-eighths asked, it's only because they feel they've got better use for their money in founding hospitals and orphan asylums.

"Furthermore, Abe, if famous people looked and acted in private like what is expected from them by 100 per cent of their admirers, y'understand, authors would be terribly up against it to make a marketable biography," Morris continued, "which if I would be (Gott soll huten) a famous man, Abe, I would leave all my property, real and personal, to the firm of Brandeis, Hughes, Daugherty & Steuer—supposing there was such a law firm, upon condition that they bring actions for a combination of injunction and libel against any author who wrote a biography of me. Honestly, Abe, it's a shame and a disgrace the way authors write lives of great people nowadays. Take, for instance, a sweet and lovely woman like Victoria Polav Hasholm, and I read the other day a biography of her which instead of making her out to be a model for ladies t. follow which she was, she was practically shown to be in some respects a horrible example."

Disracio and His Fancy Vests

"But how could an author be such a 'lowlife?'" Abe asked.

"Only by telling the truth," Morris replied. "He went to work and showed that she had practically no chin to speak about, that she was short and fat when she got old, that she had once in a while a hot temper, and that taking her by and large, beside being a great queen, she was also as huban being subject to indigestion, and troubles with her family and her friends, and could also be jollied along like any other lady, by compliments from good looking prime ministers.'

"I suppose authors could practically do the same thing with even Abraham Lincoln," Abe said.

"Some of them have," Morris continued, "and also with such great men as Disraeli, Kitchener, Julius Caesar and Napoleon. Take for instance Disraeli, y'understand, and he was quite meshuggs about wearing fancy vests, Abe, so that by simply calling attention to the vest and not mentioning the big heart underneath it, Abe, the author akes 80 per cent from Disraeli's post mortem reputation and a 10 per cent royalty on the retail price o fthe biography."

"There should ought to be a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Great Men, which could take up such matters and prosecute a miserable author like that," Abe observed.

"Not if he's trying for a post-mortem reputation with biography authors," Morris said, "but famous lectureers and famous actors should ought to be awful particular that their private lives don't differ from their public lives to such an extent that their reputation gets killed in the newspapers instead of their biographies.

"Only a short time ago, Abe, I seen a world famous actor in a play where him and his stage wife was models for the entire audience, on the very same night when his real wife give out an interview to the evening papers that he hadn't paid her a cent of allmony for nearly two years!

"Also, Abe, it's quite possible that a famous actress could beat any other living actress in playing a scene where she tells the leading man that no matter what comes, whether for better or worse, she would be faithful to him even unto death, and yet at the same time, Abe, she ain't got much of a bulge on the worst performer her admirers ever seen, if they should happen to know that she threw over her first husband for a multi-millionaire, the divorce being granted upon the grounds of desertion, cruelty and lack of support because he was earning a mean little $500/a week."

"And even a great statesman or a great philanthropist," Morris added, "has got to be careful not to let it leak out in his lifetime that he smokes cigarettes, enjoys an occasional cocktail and ain't got no objections to once in a while a game of auction pinochle."

"Well, in that case," Abe said, "I should certainly hate to be a famous man."

"In any case," Morris concluded, "I don't think you've got a whole lot of reason to worry about it."

PLAYING BOTH ENDS

An Underworld Story
By Joe Taylor

Mr. Taylor is best known as a writer of his personal experiences as member of a bold gang of rough-and-ready men.

Morton Howden's two dinner guests that winter evening at Tintolini's were John and Alfred Trotter, the middle-aged brothers who headed the old established Wall Street house of Trotter & Company, stocks and bonds.

Tucked away in a quietly remote section of Greenwich Village, a few doors of Washington Square with never an outward sign to distinguish the smart-looking three-story house as being other than a private dwelling of the better class, Tintolini's had for years been an epicurean paradise for discriminating diners-out. One never ate at Tintolini's—one dined there!

Then, as now, to be sure, its being so far downtown, in the midst of a more or less vulgar Bohemia, a really up-and-up chap seldom got around to taking his own wife there. Enough, of course, someone else may have conferred that innocent pleasure upon her. For it was belief in innocent, in spite of the fact that anyone sensitive to such influences was apt to find the atmosphere rather wickedly foreign.

The daintiness of the food, the soft radiance of the artistically shaded lights, the stimulation of good wines, the sweet tinkling of mandolins with the throbbing undertones of guitars—these combined and often conspired to stir strange gypsylike dreams and fancies in those who ordinarily considered themselves blase.

And yet, while the patrons might become enthused with a degree of joyous freedom there, liberty had never yet been allowed to spell license in Tintolini's.

Morton Howden, still a bachelor at 35, was the only son of The Howdens of Newport and Lenox. Internationally famous as a polo player and big-game hunter, his little six feet of muscular manhood was a delight to his tailor, and many a fair head had turned his way with glowing glances of wistful admiration that had nothing to do with knowledge of his wealth and high social standing.

He had always been a man's man and being essentially an out-of-doors sportsman, it is not surprising that his experiences with women had been comparatively few and superficial. One naturally thought of him as young, for with his sun-bronzed face, close-cropped curly brown hair, clear eyes that proclaimed vigorous health, he looked not a day older than 30.

Early that afternoon he had started for Trotter and Company's offices, where his presence and signature was required to close an important financial transaction, but on his way had chanced to meet a former college classmate on Wall Street. They had not seen each other for several years and his friend had insisted on their drinking a few Scotches in a well-hidden cafe for old times' sake. That was fine!

But it had made him very late at the Trotter offices and it was after six when the business there was finished. To repair his fault of detaining them downtown beyond their usual hour, he had cordially invited the two elderly bankers to taxi up to Tintolini's for dinner and they had accepted with real pleasure.

It was always a mark of distinction to dine with the polished young heir-apparent of the house of Howden, even if he were a bit extra bright of eye and beaming of countenance from imbibing good old Scotch.

Howden's spirits were high and something of his joyousness appeared to be reflected in the close attention the two older men accorded their happily entertaining young host.

The two were very glad they had come—until they noticed a peculiar abstraction come over him—and following the direction of his frequent, errant glances, they discovered it was caused by the presence of an arresting attractive woman dining alone at a small table about 20 feet diagonally across the room, facing their host. The fine edge of his comradely hospitality became increasingly dull toward his guests as his interest in her grew obviously deeper.

It had been the extra-eager deference of Jean, the generally imperturbable headwaiter, ushering her to her table that had first drawn the casual attention of Morton Howden and held it with a flavor of appreciative pleasure. He liked women to be gallantly attended.

There arose in him a wild curiosity to see the face of the lady thus winning such unusually courtly service from Jean, who swiftly preceded her to a chair and stood waiting to receive from her shoulders the long, dark cape with broad mink collar, whose enveloping folds ended at her slim, silken-clad ankles.

She reached the table with her back toward Howden. Then, swinging out of the modish cloak with an easy grace, she turned around, facing him squarely, and their eyes met across the intervening space for a long second that made his heart beat with a strange excitement.

Intensely thrilled, he looked away with a feeling of having too boldly presume, yet not with a desire to look again.

Momentarily he forgot his guests, inwardly ravelling in the lingering allure of her wide, sparkling black eyes that had so magnetically held his own with an oddly provocative challenge that seemed to flash a fascinating daring and at the same time retain a contradictory reserve. And was there not an interweaving quality of mystical sadness? Howden thought—so almost hoped so.

And when he ventured to glance her way again he flushed with keen pleasure to find that she had taken a seat directly facing him. The sight of her stirred her anew.

She was scarcely five feet tall, and the clinging black gown revealed a wonderfully made body that was boyishly slender although its lines were maturely feminine.

But it was the exotic charm of her face which attracted most strongly. Small, pale features that were delicately chisled with cameo-like immobility, framed with a shining profusion of hair dark as jet, were a wonderous setting for her flashing black eyes.

He wondered who she might be; wondered if she were Spanish, Russian, Egyptian. Hoped she spoke English—and—suddenly asked himself why! Almost at the same instant he decided he must know her—would.

In the age-old language of the eyes he tried to tell her this across the room and was secretly overjoyed in the belief that she understood, and was smiling.

"That is nice," she said, with a peculiar slowness, as if not easily finding each right word, "but, I live not far. Only you go so far as this corner with me."

She was indicating the direction of the Square.

"Come."

She stepped to his side and they moved off together.

"Only to this corner? Oh, but that's too bad."

There was eager pleading in his voice, a warm urge in his eyes down into hers.

"Am I to lose you just when I've found you?"

"You liked me?" she teased.

A bare five minutes later, officer Mahoney, slowly sauntering west through the dimness of Washington Square park toward the corner, noticed a tall man standing beside a much shorter woman in a dark cape trimmed with a broad mink collar.

The patrolman was mildly amused to see the chap steal a kiss from her before bidding the woman goodnight. He saw them separate at the corner immediately.

She walked north rather slowly for a few steps, turning to look behind her as if to make sure her escort had not followed, and then quickened her pace as if in a great hurry. The man walked straight west toward Sixth avenue buttoning his overcoat as he went.

The trifling incident was passing out of Mahoney's mind when he became alertly aware that the man was sprinting back to the corner at top speed. The policeman ran across and met him there.

"What's the matter with you?" demanded the cop.

"I've just been robbed," panted Morton Howden.

"Who by? The woman?"

"Yes."

"There she goes, 'round the next corner. C'mon, buddy, we'll get her," exclaimed Mahoney.

The two raced after her, and the chase was short.

III

Between Metropolitan police stations and various district headquarters of powerful political organizations, news sometimes travels with a rapidity that is both astonishing and mysterious but was no novelty to young Jim Adams, underworld "fixer."

At 9:30 that night, idling at Rudolph's cafe, he had promptly responded to a telephone summons to hurry to Senator Mark Todd's office in the "Club," and soon had the whole story from the senator himself.

A rich swell named Howden, he learned, had just been "touched" on the street by a well-dressed woman for a wallet containing six new 500-dollar bills, three negotiable bonds valued at $25,000 each, and an important letter. The woman was arrested a couple of minutes later, before she met anyone, and taken to the 91st Precinct stationhouse, where the matron searched her. They couldn't find the wallet on her.

The officer who made the arrest was positive she hadn't slung it away. He had gone over every foot of her short trail with a flashlight and watched her like a hawk all the way to the stationhouse. They had put her in a cell and Howden was "on the air," half sorry he had made the complaint, but sore as the devil over his loss.

Jim Adams, tall, blond, gracefully slim in tasteful, well-cut clothes, had been sitting quietly listening to the district leader's recital; and now asked:

"That's a big touch, Boss—$78,000. But, where do I come in?"

"Wait a minute, Jim," said Mark Todd, "this Morton Howden s a distant relative of our congressman. We want that stuff returned to its owner if it can be got."

"Sure you do."

Adam's level blue eyes held a curious light.

"I hope," he added, "you don't think I've got it."

"No, no, I don't. But I think you can get it, if anyone can!"

The senator was smiling enigmatically.

"Why?" asked Jim.

"Because all the girl would say to anyone at the police station was, 'I want to see Jim Adams.'"

"Oh, that's different! Can you fix it so's I can talk to her alone now?"

"Certainly. You hurry right down to the stationhouse and they'll let you in to see her. You know Charlie Bent. He's on the desk tonight. He'll be expecting you."

"Fine," said Adams, arising to go. "I'll be bac in an hour or so and let you know."

"Remember, Jim, there'll be a good stake in this for you, if you deliver the goods," were the politician's parting words.

Half an hour later Adams entered the police station.

"Hello, Jim," hailed Sargeant Bent, from behind the stationhouse desk. "Say, young fella," he bantered, "youre getting pretty popular with the ladies."

"Who is she, Sarge?"

"I don't know. Never saw her before. Cold out, isn't it?"

He touched a button to summon the doorman.

"John," he ordered the brass-buttoned attendant who appeared at a read door, "tell the matron to let this gentleman talk with that little dark dame wih the swell rags on. Go on in that back room, Jim. They'll bring her right out."

"Thanks, Sarge," erplied Jim, and back he went.

The dark little beauty, pale and very nervous, soon joined him there under the eyes of a portly police matron who took up a stand in the doorway of the back room. She far away enough away to be out of hearing of their low voiced conversation.

Instead of showing the genuine amazement he felt at the sight of the prisoner, he had greeted her as calmly as if this was merely a pleasant social call.

She seemed greatly set at ease by his cheerful "How do you do?" and by the engaging friendliness of his wide blue eyes. It was singular, how most people, when in serious trouble, seemed to draw confident courage from Jim Adams—especially women.

And, it was easy to trust him. This one did—to the limit.

She told him that she had stolen the wallet—told him precisely where and when she had hidden it, without disturbing its contents. His versatile imagination raced ahead of her whispered words. He was listening and planning.

Finally he had made her promise to do exactly as he advised.

"Stand pat," he whispered, "and in court tomorrow morning you take Nolan, the lawyer I'll send to you. He'l insist on delaying your hearing and the magistrate will give you a postponement for 48 hours. Then we'll take you out on bail from the courtroom. Now sit tight and don't worry!"

As he spoke he had been feeling cautiously in his pockets for small change and was secretly pleased to find he had quite a few silver coins; dimes, quarters and nickels.

He gathered these together and dropped them in his overcoat pocket with a handkerchief.

Neither the watchful matron nor the prisoner noticed the trifling operation.

"All right then," he concluded, getting up to leave her, "I'll see you in court. Take good care of her, Matron," he smiled, passing out into the big front room where Sargeant Bent was the only one in sight, busily writing in his police ledger behind the high desk.

"Funny case, Sarge," he remarked. "She says you've got her wrong."

"Aw, that's what they all say," laughed the sargeant.

"I spose they do, at that," agreed Adams.

Then, strolling leisurely toward a radiator by the wall at the far end of the desk railing:

"How's the steam coming on? Bitter cold outside. This weather gives me the sniffles, Sarge."

So saying, he pulled his bankerchief out and a small shower of silver dropped to the floor, rolling in several directions. A couple of the coins clinked against the radiator in falling.

"Heck!" he exclaimed, "what a mess to pick up."

The Sargeant glanced up at the sound, grinned in enjoyment at Adam's evident ill-humor over a mishap, and went on writing.

The fixer stooped and began picking up the coins at the base of the radiator. A swiftly exploring hand thrust under its middle came in contact with what he sought, and when he straightened up Morton Howden's stolen wallet was in his grasp. He slipped it safely into an overcoat pocket.

When the prisoner was first brought into the police station she had cunningly managed to drop it behind the radiator while waiting for the matron to be summoned to search her.

IX

In a few minutes Jim Adams was in a taxi returning to the political leader's club. There, instead of going directly to the private office, he first paid an unobserved visit to a roomy hall closet and carefully hid the wallet.

Presently he was coolly assuring the senator he thought there was an excellent chance of recovering the wallet and its contents but that he would have to see Morton Howden personally as soon as possible.

"Do you mean tonight?" queried the senator.

"Every minute counts," was the reply.

"That ought to be easy enough. He's at the congressman's house. They called me up from there only a few minutes ago. Wait'll I see," and he reached for his desk telephone.

"To him I must see him alone, Boss," insisted Jim.

The senator, it proved, was right. A speedy interview was satisfactorily arranged. And thus it happened that shortly after midnight Jim Adams and Morton Howden were sitting together in the privacy of the Congressman's library.

During the initial exchange of surprising glances, when these tall strangers met, each had found the other likeable.

"Mr. Howden," Jim was saying, smoothly serious, "let's get down to brass tacks right from the start. I had absolutely nothing to do with your losing your stuff. The senator called me into the case afterwards."

He paused, and there came into his level gaze a compelling quality that was boldly sincere.

"But, now," he went on, slowly, "I, and I alone, know where your stuff is—all of it. And no matter what you do you cannot get a dime's worth of it back unless I say so."

"Well, this is the limit," he managed to ejaculate.

He was seized with a strong impulse to answer this brazen declaration with his fists. But something in the other's easy fearlessness restrained and puzzled him.

"All right, let's say it is the limit," there was no offense in Jim Adams' calm defiance until he suddenly leaned forward and shot out an accusing finger—"but what about the poor innocent girl you've had arrested?"

"Innocent? By George, is that right? Didn't she take it at all?" burst from the bewildered aristocrat.

"Nobody stole it at all, and if you had been in your sober senses you might have felt the wallet when it fell out of your pocket in the washroom at Tintolini's where I found it," the adroitly fixer was sternly convincing.

It was his element and he thrilled with a peculiar sense of superiority over this favored son of fortune.

"You found it?" Howden demanded, somewhat weakly.

"Certainly I did. After I got the story and I had a hunch and rushed to Tintolini's. It was on the floor, just underneath the what-you-may-call it, the steam radiator in the washroom. And no one saw me find it either. No one but you knows I've got it."

"Well, what you think can be done?" All thought of resentment was gone from Howden's mind.

He somehow felt that this confident young chap was both capable and well disposed toward him. Distracting thoughts of cutting a sorry figure in the courts and the sensational press were gradually soothed as he listened to Adams rapidly unfolding his proposition.

Jim insisted that the only sensible and honorable course for Howden to take was to quietly get aboard the next train for Philadelphia or Boston, anywhere out of the state and stay away for a few days.

The innocent young woman would be bailed out immediately and would positively be discharged when Howden failed to appear in the magistrate's court.

Adams said he had a long talk with her and she was due to sail next week to rejoin a husband in Russia. She was naturally deeply hurt but would be satisfied to take $2,000 in cold cash to sign a quit claim against Howden for false arrest.

She had been stopping with friends not far from Tintolini's and was absolutely respectable. She would certainly have an easy time recovering big damages from any jury if she stayed in New York to sue.

If Howden now gave Adams his solemn promise to go away and stay away for a short time Adams would meet him at the station and hand him his wallet back with everything in it except the six $500 bills in cash.

This money would have to be used for the woman's quit claim and the expense of bail, etc. All of which would be expertly and reliably attended to by Jim Adams, for whom Senator Mark Todd would vouch.

Hardly had Howden heard all the details enumerated when he agreed to follow this advice to the letter and Jim Adams saw him off as agreed just as day was tinting the roofs of the city with the pink of winter's dawn.

Three nights later, in the senator's private office, Mark Todd was sayinz to Adams, "So they turned her loose in court this morning because the complainant failed to appear against her. Who is she, Jim?"

"Oh, she's a Russian from Chicago. The officers here don't know her yet. There they call her the Gypsy Kid."

As Jim Adams coolly lied about the identity of the prisoner, he was inwardly marvelling over the strangeness of life, as he thus concealed the fact that the girl was Senator Todd's own niece.

THE MARRIED LIFE of HELEN and WARREN

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

Warren's Reckless Purchases Enliven the Auction at a Charity Bazaar.

"Dear, don't look so cross! You're fairly glowering," Helen, trying to keep up with his irate stride.

"Dragging me out to this fool bazaar!" Warren's walking cane prodded the sidewalk at every step. "Why the Sam Hill can't you go alone?"

"What's that number? 1197" scowling at an unlighted doorway.

"No, it's 219; on the next block," consulting the card from her purse.

Buffet Supper, $1.00
COME AND BRING YOUR FRIENDS.

But Warren only grunted as she read aloud the list of attractions.

In the next block, several autos before an old-fashioned house proclaimed it the scene of festivities.

A burr of feminine voices as they entered the hallway, where a bulbous, green-plummed woman collected the 50 cents admission.

"Refreshments in the garden—right straight back," she directed. "Fortune and auction upstairs."

"We'll go upstairs first," suggested Helen, her hand on the balustrade.

"Let's see what they've got to eat," Warren's interest always gravitated to food.

"There's a buffet supper, but you don't want it now. We just had dinner."

"Mighty slim dessert that was. How about some ice cream?"

Japanese lanterns and red and white bunting gave a festive air to the brick-paved backyard.

A pretty girl in a fantastic paper cap seated them at one end of the long rough-board tables and waited for their order.

"Guess that'll do for us," Warren nooded at the sign that hung from one of the lanterns, "Fresh Peach Ice Cream and Home-made Cake. 50c."

"Dear, isn't it attractive here? Oh, look at that cunning cat!"

A black cat perched on the high brick wall was viewing with blinking disapproval and backyard encroachment.

The ice cream, served on paper plates, and the flaky cocoanut cake was delicious and really home-made.

"Not bad—what there was of it," when Warren had disposed of his portion and part of Helen's. "I'll wait down here," drawing out a cigar "while you snoop around upstairs."

"Now, dear, you promised me you would go with me," reproachfully.

Grumblingly, he thrust back his cigar and followed her through the hall, up the stairs, into the long drawing room.

Palm reading and fortune telling stalls seemed popular, but the sale booths were not so generously patronized.

"Oh Mrs. Curtis, I'm so glad you've come—and Mr. Curtis."

A Mrs. Greeley whom Helen knew slightly, had flagged them.

"I'm sure you want one of these good-luck charms," picking up a rabbit's foot from her table. "Sterling silver tip. Genuine left hind-leg of a graveyard rabbit," she laughed. "Only a dollar."

"We'll have a look around first," evaded Helen.

"Oh, but you must buy this to give you luck for the rest of your purchases. I'm sure Mr. Curtis wants one."

"Couldn't get along without it," Warren good-naturedly gave her a dollar.

"Why did you buy that?" Helen drew him on. "Such a useless thing!"

"It's all useless!" with a contemptuous glance at the cluttering inanities always donated to bazaars. "But now we're here—got to buy some of this junk!"

"We'll wait for the auction—that's why I came the last night. It's been running three days and now they're to auction off everything that's left."

"Have you had your fortune told? Your palm read?" one of the committee sensing Warren's spending possibilities, pounced upon them. "Come right over here. Miss Grendon will tell your fortune for 50 cents."

A young woman in a quasi Oriental-gypsy costume greeted Warren smilingly.

"No, you'll have to let me out of this. Mrs. Curtis'll take my place."

"I'll tell Mrs. Curtis' afterward. Gentlemen first in fortune telling. Cut three, please," placing the deck of cards before him.

There was no escape. Warren sat astride the frail gilt chair, unable to get his long legs under the tiny table.

Dealing the cards in six piles, she crooningly called:

"Your house—yourself—your wish, what you do expect—what you don't expect—what's bound to come true!"

The first pile, "your house," held two queen and a jack.

"Full house," she exclaimed. ""Company—lots of company!"

"Relatives camping on us," grinned Warren.

"Now 'yourself,'" she ran through the second pile. "Business, lots of business! And money! Everything good—but an accident. I see some accident here."

"You're a bit too late," bantered Warren. "Busted my arm two months ago. How about that money? Can't you hustle it along?"

"It'll come soon. And here's a blond lady," tapping the queen of hearts.

"Is she a good looker?" winking at Helen perched on the window sill back of the fortune teller.

"Aren't all blondes? Now make your wish," her hand on the third pile. Then turning it up. "You get your wish—but I'm afraid not right away."

"Rotten luck," chuckled Warren, "so I must wait for that gin-ricky?"

Attention! Attention!"

A young woman was beating a hand-painted tray.

"Ladies and gentlemen. I'm sorry there's so few gentlemen. Our three days' sale has been a great success, but we still have a few choice things which we're going to auction off. Every cent goes to our neighborhood Day Nursury—you'll all bid generously I'm sure."

Then holding up the tray:

"We'll start with this. Hand-painted beautiful poppy design. Marked to sell for two dollars. What am I offered?"

"A quarter," called a woman from the rear with an apologetic laugh.

"Who'll make it 50?" Very useful—make a nice present."

The tray, after much effort, was finally sold for 80 cents.

"Now this little duster—a charming bit of color," twirling gilt-handled, red-feathered trinket. Nice to dust bric-a-brac—or trim a hat! How much? Only 10 cents? 15! 20? 25. Sold to Mrs. Dupson for a quarter."

"Now this lovely silk bag—for your opera glasses or evening slippers! Only 30 cents? You couldn't get the silk it's lined with for that. Forty? Forty-five!"

Slowly she got the bidding up to 60 cents, where it hung until Warren called an impatient "Dollar!"

"One dollar," gleefully. "He's going to give it to his best girl!"

"That's right," grinned Warren tossing it to Helen.

Elated at a generous bidder, the auctioneer now directed much of her efforts at Warren, cajoling him with facetious personal remarks.

His masculine egotism flattered, he ignored Helen's restraining nudges, and bought a dust-collecting cupid pincushion, a hairpin holder, a pink satin suit hanger and a beribboned satchel bag.

He should have anticipated his careless extravagance. Why had she not coached him in advance?

"Now, this beautiful lamp shade!" holding up a clumsy near-silk shade. "Most effective! Can be used a shade or hat," clamping it on her bennsed hair with a coquettish glance at Warren. How much? One dollar! One twenty! One twenty-five!"

"Two!" Warren disregarding Helen's frantic signals.

Among the things still to be auctioned were a few packages of soap, backing powder and talcum that Helen coveted. But the auctioneer's determination to work off first all the useless trumpery, and Warren's indiscriminate bidding, urged her to a hasty exit.

"Dear it's almost 10 and Nora didn't take her key. I'm afraid we must go."

"Oh, don't leave yet!" protested the auctioneer, dismayed at the departure of her best bidder. "We've some lovely things coming. Can't you stay?"

But Helen laughingly shook her head and dragged Warren away.

"Have you tried the grab bag? Only 25 cents! Do try your luck," wheedled a committee woman by the door.

"I'm sorry, but we haven't time," eluded Helen. "No, we've about all we can carry as they were urged to buy some home-made fudge. "It's all been very interesting; we've enjoyed it so much. Good night!"

Out in the sheltering darkness of the street, Helen's fixed smile relaxed.

"All those foolish, useless things! Why DID you? I kept nudging you not to."

"Couldn't set there like a dead one and not bid," growled Warren. "Got to cough up at a thing like that."

"But if you'd only waited! There were a few things fairly good—that old gold lamp shade. I wanted that—if it were cheap."

"Got a lamp shade," punching the one under his arm.

"That awful thing? I'll give it away Christmas. And those other senseless things you bought! They had some soap, talcum and baking powder, but I didn't dare wait, you bid so recklessly! Every one else raised only five or 10 cents at a time. But you'd call out a dollar when a thing was going at 50 cents."

"For charity, wasn't it? That's why you dragged me there," whacking a lamp post with his cane. "You could've had that lamp shade for $1.30; you needn't have bid two!"

"Of all the tightwads! And you put up such a howl about doing something for the day nursury! But lot you care about the day nursury! All you wanted was to get about $10 worth of stuff for about $2.49. You'd play the lady bountiful by grabbing off a lot of standard goods at less'n wholesale cost! Charity?" with a snort. "You've a helluva an idea of charity!"

MR. DOOLEY ON HEROES AND HISTORY

By FINLEY PETER DUNNE

"There's on'y wan thing that wud make me allow mesilf to be a hero to th' American people, an' that is it don't last long," said Mr. Dooley. "A few columns in th' newspapers, a speech in congress, assault an' batt'ry be a mob in th' sthreet, a flattherin' offer fr'm th' movvies, an' thin ye sink back into th' discard an' are not mintioned again unles ye get into jail, whin ye have a more extinded notice thin ye're crime entitles ye to.

"Oh, as Hogan says, why shud th' spirit iv mortal be proud? Manny's th' hero I've known in me day—gin'rals, admirals, polismen, firemen, prize-fighters, bedsthreens, actors, authors and marathon dancers, an' where are they now, I'll ask ye? Down in th' coal cellar iv th' hall iv Fame with th' rest iv us polthroons.

"Histhry will do thim justice, say ye? Ye needn't be so sure about that. Don't make any foolish bets on histhry.

"Like a good many people that I know, th' Muse iv Histhry, as Hogan wud say, has a long mim'ry, but 'tis inaccrate. 'Tis like a cousin iv mine that cud remember things that happened 40 years ago, but they were niver so.

"A little while ago there was a fellow come over here that wrote th' Histhry iv Rome. This counthry, they tell me, is like Rome, an''is goin' to have th' same ending because iv th' large Eyetalyan popylation in both.

"Anyhow, all I know about Rome is what Hogan has told me, an' he's always boostin' up Joolyus Cayzar to me. I got an idee fr'm Hogan's talk that Joolyus Cayzer was a fine man; a little guy, mind ye, with th' ladies, but a fine man.

"An' Hogan cud almost make me cry tellin' me about his death. It see smthat he was warned iv what was comin'. Th' night before, a comet appeared in th' sky, but he cud not believe it had annything to do with him. An' no more wud I.

"A plasther iv Paris bust fell off th' mantel, an' instead iv takin' it as a tip he discharged th' hired girl. A ragged man stopped him in th' dure an' warned him not to go to th' sinit. 'Ye are addhressin' th' wrong party,' says Cayzer.

Imperial Caesar's Last Day

"So he went to th' sinit, an' th' sinitors gathered around him pretindin' to ask him fr jobs. 'I have a pettyshun here,' says wan iv thim, 'fr'm th' boord iv thrade f'r Michael J. Mulroom to be collictor iv intarnal rivnoo,' he says, stickin' Cayzar with a knife. 'I wil file it f'r refrence,' says Cayzer.

"'This is th' little mather I mintioned last week,' says th' invious Cassius, jabbin' him in th' ribs. 'I'm afraid ye'er man is not illegible,' says Cayzer.

"This wint on f'r some time, wan sinitor afther another takin' part in th' debate while Cayzar continued to glance through his corryspondence. But fin'ally a young fellow that Cayzar adopted stepped forward an' dhrove a sword into him. To say that Cayzar was surprised is to express it mildly. He was deeply chagrined. No wan expicts to be murdhered be an adopted child, an' Cayzar almost lost his temper.

"What he said, Hogan doesn't exactly remember, but 'twas ayther 'An ye, Brutus,' or 'Brutus, ye too,' or 'Well, what d'ye think iv that?'

"Anyhow, he folded his robe around him an' passed away. An' th' Roman poplace broke into the sinit an' gathered up chairs, desks, stationery, flasks, seeds, an' letters, an' made a bon fire iv thim an' burned Cayzar's body in it. An' whin Cayzar's will was opened 'twas found that he'd left all his money to give free movies an' parks to th' people instead iv givin' it to thim while he was alivg.

"An if he'd spint it on th' sinit he might've bee nalive to this day!

"There's th' story as Hogan tells it fr'm readin' it in books an' segin' it acted in th' Hobsted Sthreet opry house. But this profissor iv histhry, says Hogan, is all wrong.

"'Joolyus Cayzar was by no means th' tulip he is pitchered be historyans nearer his time thin mesilf,' says he. 'Th' further ye get away fr'm anny peeryod th' bether ye can write about it. Ye are not subject to interruptions be people that were there. I wud not undertake to write a histhry iv Peoryа in nineteen hundhred an' twinty-two, but if ye want th' latest news from Rome 2,00 years ago, hand me that fountain pen.

Nero Was the Hero

"'Far fr'm bein' a gr-eat man, Joolyus Cayzar was a prety ordhinry charackter. He was always out f'r th' money. All iv his alleged wars were carrid on to help th' grocery business iv Rome that he was a sicret pardner in.

"'He was a mean, close-fisted man. He done Cicero out of his house be threaten'n' to build a liv'ry stable next dure to it, an' thin buyin' it cheap, an' his throuble with Pompey come fr'm sellin' his old chum a horse that he swore anny child cud durive. an' that run away with Mrs. Pompey in Central Park, an' smashed Pompey's best two-seated chariot. He was killed in a bar room be Brutus, a worthless fellow that he adopted to get hold iv his money.

"He uppercut th' jook to th' pint iv th' jaw, sendin' him through a bank iv palms."

"'The real hero iv th' peeryod was Marcus Mephitus Jenks. It was Jenks that th' glory an' grandeur iv Rome is due to. It was Jenks that won th' battles, Jenks that reformed th' almanac, Jenks that modeled th' laws. But Jenks was a modest hero. He had no pres agent. Sthrange to say, I can find no contimpry riference to Jenks. But a few vulgar jokes. Now that th' clouds iv calumny has rolled away, it gives me great picasure to hay that Jenks, not Cayzar, was th' boy.

"'In me estimation, th' next greatest man iv thim days was Nero. A coorse prejudice has grown up against Nero. No wan names children afther him anny more, which I think is a gr-eat mistake. Far fr'm bein' th' monsther he is supposed to be, Nero was a quite, cultivated young fellow, who like manny another with th' same tastes has had his mim'ry condimned to loathing an' horror because he played th' violin. Except f'r this he was not a detistable charackter.

A Bachelor Occasionally

"'It is not thrue that he set fire to Rome. Rome was like wan iv our modhren cities, an' undaubtedly it caught fire fr'm cinders fr'm a passin' locomotive. Nawthin' cud be more unjust to this amiable charackter than to suggist that he was an innimy iv religion. Th' throth is that he praciased wan of th' first principles iv religion, which is that th' good are better dead.

"'I view with contempt th' fable that he pisoned his mother. Th' discoveries in modhren science show that it's far more likely she perished iv apuendiceytis. Besides, th' fam'ly ties were much looser in those days. Moreover, let us be just an' acknowledge that in th' coorst iv nature, th' old lady had not much longer to live, anyhow, an' she may have been an exactin' housekeeper, while her illusthrees son had th' habits iv a bachelor, which he was fr'm time to time.'

"'An' there ye are, Hinnisy. How do you know what histhry is goin' to say about these here stirin' times that we're livin' in? A few thousands iv years fr'm now a visitor fr'm New Zealand, as Hogan says, surveyin' th' roons iv the Fort Wayne freight house fr'm a broken arch iv Jackson sthreet bridge, may run across a copy iv th' Daily Bazoo, an' write a story iv th' state iv America in nineteen hundhred an' twinty-two: "Th' prinepal occypations iv th' people were murdher, divorce, prize-fightin' lynching, abduction, burglary an' baiconadin.'

"'Th' most prominent citizens iv th' decayin' raypublic besides Jack Dempsey were Aidrew Volstead and Peggy Joyce. Ivrywhere was public an' private corruption, low ambitions an' base amusements. But amidst th' riot iv corruption a few points stand out in contemporary lithry. Th' men an' women makin' th' brave battle f'r th' human race.'

Who Isn't a Hero?

"No, sir, I'll not attimpt to follow all th' heroes that comes up. They move too fast f'r me. To my way iv thinkin', th' wurruld is full iv thim. Orville Wright wud be scared to death if he was in my place with big Olson com in on a tear, but I am cin'm because I know where I can lay me hands on a few argyments that Olson undherstands. But I wudden't feel safe in anny circumstances in Wright's aeroplane. Take me in a place I know, an' I'm as brave a man as ever got his pitcher in th' paper. Take me where I don't know th' names iv th' cross sthreets, an' th' creek iv a leaf will sind a chill up me back.

"As Hogan says, ivry man is a hero excipt thim that have vallays. If ye shine ye're own shoes, shave ye'ersilf, an' turn on th' water in ye'er own bath, ye're a hero, ex-officio, as th' sayin' goes. I niver yet knew a man that hired another man to help him on with his shirt.

"Faith, who ain't a hero amongst us all, all us inexpeeryenced sailors on a ship that's sinkin' slowly undher our feet, day be day an' year be year? Some ships gets stove in arly an' some late, but they all go down. An' here we are on boord laughin', an' atin', an' quarrlin', an' schemin', an' layin' out a new course ivry hour with ne'er a thought iv sendin' an S. O. S."

"Be th' way," said Mr. Hennessy, "ye spoke of vallays. What is a vallay, annyhow? What does he do?"

"A valley," said Mr. Dooley, "as I undherstand it, is an English gintlemen who has nose be conscientious wurruk, to th' position iv a bootjack."

SEA-MONSTER CAPTURED

LONDON, August 22.—A sea monster 30 feet long and weighing 10 tons has been captured by fishermen off Cahireiveen, County Kerry, says the Daily Chronicle. The monster has several fins and a large tail and was only captured after a six hour struggle, during which several of the boats were unset and all the nets badly damaged.

Experts who have seen the animal say that it is impossible to classify it but suggest it is allied to the tunny.

Miss Gladys Ditmars Shows That Feminine Fear of Serpents May Be Overcome.

*"And the Lord God said unto the Serpent, Because thou hast done this * * * I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise its heel."*

THUS was the curse of creation laid upon the serpent and so was decreed the strange and terrible antipathy that goes out from the very nature of woman toward the thing that crawls.

Was it this antipathy, growing to a power overwhelming her personality and freezing her judgment that drove Mrs. Nellie Adele Lowen Browning away from her husband and foster children and out of the most spectacular home in New York City to brave the hazards and loneliness of a strange city in a foreign land?

Was it the impact, repeated many times each day through a period of eight long years, upon sensitive nerves and brain centers of the nearness of one of the deadliest creatures known to herptologists that caused the wife of Edward W. Browning, New York millionaire, to step out of her Arabian Night's romance into the merciless glare of question, criticism, condemnation?

Perhaps some savant, skilled in the psychology of feminine inhibitions and complexes shall say one day. Perhaps deep in his heart the middle-aged husband of the youthful Mrs. Browning is giving a thought to the reiteration of the snake-motif in the decoration of his astonishing home, with its twenty-four rooms and private roof gardens, rivaling in beauty and wonder even the hanging gardens of ancient Babylon, and is wondering if the Dresden china beauty he married is altogether to blame for having earned the title of the "most capricious woman in the East."

Perhaps he is beginning to understand the terror which might be struck deep into a woman's heart by the sight of phosphorescent eyes gleaming at her in the dark and red fangs seeming to dart hither and yon.

But if Browning, the man, does understand, there is no forgiveness in the heart of Browning, the husband. He sees only his home disrupted by a wife who fled to Paris with—as he believes—a member of the shiny-haired, slender-waisted, pink-manicured brotherhood; the now famous "Sheik of the Dentist Chair," Dr. Charles Henry Wilen. And against the wife Browning's suit for divorce still stands, while he brands as "atrocious" charges she is said to have made concerning his "violent temper" and liking for "very young girls."

* * * * * * *

However stoutly it may be maintained that the story of the Garden of Eden is but a symbolic account of development of the race, it is certain that the enmity toward snakes, which has existed in the heart of woman for sixty centuries, has in no way abated, but persists in many instances to rise to a pathological phobia bordering insanity.

Many theories are offered to explain this state of the feminine mind. Perhaps the most logical is the one advanced by the strange new science which delves below consciousness and searches the dim corners of the subconscious mind to find what fear or superstition—heritage of generations of women gone—lurks there to inhibit or compel thought and conduct.

The serpent, says this science, has stood for immortality almost since time began. The ancients believed that the creature never died, but merely shed its skin year after year, emerging refreshed and always young. Therefore, goes on the supposition, the symbolic serpent in the symbolic garden where the fabled first of the race lived, signifies procreation—a thing that ever must mean terror and pain to womankind. It easily may be understood how certain quirks of mentality or physique, whether sane or abnormal, might increase or diminish the woman's antipathy toward the crawling creature.

It is interesting to note that the Brownings had no children. Not long after their marriage Browning adopted a little girl, once Marjorie Herbst, and Mrs. Browning adopted another girl, then Dorothy Lane. They now are seven and eight years old, and when the foster-mother left her home she took with her the daughter she had adopted, giving her into the custody of friends.

It was nearly eight years ago that not only New York, but the entire country, was set a-gasping by the story of the splendors of the home and gardens the wealthy son of the late Franklin Browning, one of the founders of Browning, King & Co., was building his bride for a wedding present.

At the top of an apartment building near Central Park and overlooking the rolling grounds of the American Museum of Natural History, he leased for ten years two apartments. Immediately began the work of knocking out partitions and installing decorations and furnishings. Friezes were lifted bodily from ancient walls in Europe and the Orient and installed. Electrically lighted fountains were made to play in every room, each different in conception, but all marvelous. Gold and silver dishes were used in the dining-room and a portion of the music-room was filled with rare birds imprisoned by a network of piano-wire so fine as to be invisible.

A large portion of the dwelling was Japanese and Chinese. And the dominant figure of decoration in these rooms, scattered midst the winged dogs, lotos-blooms and so on, was the serpent. It appeared as dragon often, with wings and twisted tongue. Sometimes it stared venomously at whoever might be near. Sometimes it slept. But it was there in the frieze, snuggling through the tapestry, forming the arms of pearl-inlay anciently carven chairs.

"Ere Tempted," Celebrated Painting by the French Artist, Lucien Levy-Dhurmer, Sets Forth History's Explanation of the Origin of Woman's Fear and Hatred of Serpents.

The incredible feature of the Browning home was the garden on the roof, with its lake big enough to permit of rowing a boat over the surface, surrounded by pergolas, gazing-globes, marble figures, ten thousand plants in thirty-three flowerbeds and a glass sky set with stars that twinkled with light at night.

But the weird thing about the garden was the stairway which led to it from the drawing-room below—and the terrible thing the hand-rail of the stairway.

Each tread was glass, and with setting the foot upon it a colored light glowed and a note of music sounded. Each tread operated a different note and a different colored light, so something of a solo of light and sound was executed merely by running upstairs. The newel-post was a hollowed marble globe holding twined orchids made of glass.

And twisted round this post in a manner more realistic than life itself was the tail of a boa-constrictor. The sinuous, diamond-marked body stretched upward for a hand-rail, and at the top was the hideous head, with a ruby tongue and green eyes, lighting and flashing with the opening of the door into the garden.

A terrifying conceit, the serpent, and one never to be ignored nor avoided, since the constantly used way to the garden lay up the glass stairs.

One fancies the little lady of the garden slowly approaching the stairway, shrinking against the wall opposite the menace of the rail, scurrying past the darting red tongue and the green eyes, horror winding her heart.

Was it indeed the ancient "enmity" decreed by destiny to rule her emotions that drove her away from the lofty palace of her dreams?

It must be remembered that not even in her fasings abroad was Mrs. Browning free of the suggestion of the snake. For, true to his love of the original touch, Browning had specially made for his motor a horn twisted in the replica of a viper. One pressed the tail and the noise came from the gaping jaws.

According to the story told by Browning, his wife first met Wilen in his dental office on Fifth Avenue when he did some bridgework for her. According to rumor, Wilen is prominent in the scrambled night life of Greenwich Village, figuring among the emancipationists who make their headquarters in the dingy streets and dingier tea rooms as a fascinator of women.

The short-haired clientele of a Washington Square tea room still talks of a visit he paid to their purlieus last winter in company with a "slender, pretty woman in a mink coat." He confided to his friends that she was a wealthy sweetheart he had captured.

Of Wilen's Greenwich Village night life it is understood that Mrs. Browning knew little. He carefully paid court to her, the gossips say, between bouts with his untamed friends.

Browning states that he went down to Long Island to open his Summer home there and found his wife and all her possessions gone when he returned to his uptown home. Among these possessions were $10,000 worth of jewels which he had given her. He indicated that he will take measures to cut off her income—with which he believes she is paying the expenses of the Paris trip—from a trust fund of $100,000 he settled upon her two years ago.

Meantime, Dorothy, one of the little adopted daughters, is living with Mr. Browning in his Summer home on Long Island. And from the walls of the Arabian Night's palace the serpents look down on empty rooms—perhaps with a gleam of triumph.

Just How To Dance The Prince of Wales Fox Trot

Its Long, Swift Movements Are Easy to Learn and Give Poise to the Dancers, Say the Creators of the Newest Steps Designed for the Prince

Wanda Hoff, the Beautiful American Dancer, and Wife of Paul Whiteman, Who Shared His Success at Wales's Parties in London.

Mimi Palmeri and Arthur Murray Illustrate the Sixth Count in the First Step of the Prince of Wales Fox Trot.

The first week Whiteman was in London he played at four gay parties at which the Prince was conspicuous for his fox-trotting! At this time Grafton Galleries never had been of a character to attract royalty. But when Whiteman began to play there after the theatre the Prince likewise appeared nightly, always growing more expert in the hesitations and ankle gyrations and syncopated beats that make up the performance of the modern jazz dancer.

Now that the orchestra leader and his company have returned, it is announced that Edward Albert is planning a trip to Canada. Certain members of British society declare he is about to visit the "Lady of the Snows" on a wife hunt. But others, smiling discreetly, predict that he will not long remain north of the frontier line. In fancy, they see him about New York and other American cities tripping the "Prince of Wales Fox Trot" as only an expert can.

If he were not English and royal and surrounded by all the pomp and panoply of Britain's hope and pride—if he were just a "nice boy," as he is anyway, but an American "nice boy," who could do as he liked and no questions asked at all times, there's grave suspicion that he sometimes might be described as a "kibbo."

Right here it is best to explain that a "kibbo" is in no wise an objectionable creature, but merely a young man who loves to dance. He so well loves to dance that he counts that day lost whose low-descending sun holds no memory of three or four hundred turns round some well-waxed floor. He'd a little rather fox trot or waltz or tango—but fox trot 'specially—than eat or marry.

And doesn't this rather well describe His Charming Highness, the Prince of Wales?

America's dictators of the dance appear to believe so, since at a meeting of the dancing masters of the National Institute of Social Dancing, held in New York recently, the newest and perhaps most delightful of fox trots was called "Prince of Wales Fox Trot," in honor of the heir to the British throne. Even now, as the dancing season is barely on the verge of beginning, the steps and figures are being gracefully done by devotees of dancing. It is predicted that before the Winter is over the dance named for the agile-ankled Prince will be more popular than any ever introduced here, and possibly in England as well, where the young man who inherited leadership of the "young court set" is maintaining his reputation as a tripper.

That he is maintaining his reputation and adding to it, perhaps, is the assurance brought by Paul Whiteman, the American orchestra leader, who, with his band, has spent the Summer in England.

The Whiteman outfit invaded London to appear in a review at the Hippodrome. But immediately afterward any seasoned American at large in the English metropolis would have thought, from the nightly itinerary of the Prince, that the orchestra members were his own private personnel, royal musicians—a "fiddlers three" of sorts to a modern King Cole. For everywhere that Whiteman went the Prince was sure to go.

First of all, the Prince was rather responsible for Whiteman and his orchestra landing at Southampton. Immediately a protest was registered by the English Musicians' Union against the importation of rival Americans. Then the Prince of Wales exerted himself, and a permit was issued allowing the band to land—and this was the first time in his royal life that the Prince ever had exercised this royal prerogative.

Almost as soon as Whiteman landed British society began to invite him into the most exclusive and fashionable homes of the nation.

COMBINATION No. 1.

Man's Part.

Begin with the left foot, going forward, and take three slow walking steps, l. f. 1, r. f. 2, l. f. 3. On the fourth count extend the right foot in front, lifting it two inches off the floor, pointing toes downward. On the fifth count take a long step backward on the right foot. On count six extend the left foot as far backward as it will go, lifting it slightly off the floor. Take two slow walking steps forward, l. f. 7, r. f. 8. Repeat entire movement.

Lady's Part.

The lady's part is opposite to that of the man's. She begins with her right foot and takes three long, slow walking steps backward, r. f. 1, l. f. 2, r. f. 3. 4. Extend backward, r. f. 1, l. f. 2, r. f. 3. 4. Extend left foot as far back as it will go, lifting it two inches off the floor, toes pointing downward. 5. Take a long step forward on left foot. 6. Extend right foot as far forward as possible, lifting it slightly off the floor. 7 and 8. Take two long steps backward, r. f. 7, l. f. 8. Repeat entire movement.

COMBINATION No. 2.

This movement is one of the most delightful in the Fox Trot and is extremely popular.

Man's Part.

Begin with the left foot and take a long, slow walking step directly forward. 2. Take a long, quick step forward on right foot. 3. Quickly draw left foot up to right, heels together. (So far you have taken three steps. The first one is a slow step while the second and third are done quickly. 4. Take a long step forward on right foot and hold the weight on this foot for two counts while you extend left foot in front.

Lady's Part.

1. Begin with right foot and take a long, slow step directly backward. 2. Quickly step backward on left foot. 3. Draw right foot up to left quickly, with weight on right and heels together. 4. Take a long, slow step backward on left foot and hold weight there for two counts while you extend right foot backward, lifting it about two inches off floor. Repeat entire movement.

COMBINATION No. 3.

Man's Part.

This turn, which is one of the most effective steps in the Fox Trot, consists of a waltz step (used in making the left turn) and one slow step backward with the right foot. Beginning with left foot, step forward, turning to left (waltz turn to left). This waltz movement takes three steps, and during these three steps you should make a half turn. Count 1, 2, 3. 4. Take a long step backward on right foot, holding the weight on this foot for two counts while you lift the foot slightly off the floor. Repeat entire movement.

Note—In order to make a half turn on one waltz step of three counts it is necessary to turn very sharply on each step. At the completion of the third step your back should be toward the line of direction.

Note that in all waltz steps done to Fox Trot music the first step of the waltz is a slow one while the second and third steps are done quickly.

Lady's Part.

Stand with your heels together, your back toward line of direction. Beginning with the right foot, step backward and do one waltz step of three counts. Then step forward on the left, and as you hold weight on this foot for two full counts raise the right foot slightly up at the back. Repeat the entire movement. Note that in all waltz steps done to Fox Trot music the first step of the waltz is a slow one while the second and third steps are done quickly. It is not necessary for the girl to practice the waltz turns. She need only practice the waltz steps going backward. If she can waltz backward with ease she will have no difficulty in following her partner in waltz turns.

COMBINATION No. 4.

Man's Part.

1. Take a long, slow step forward on left foot and hold weight on this foot for two full counts, at the same time, extend the right foot in front, lifting it about two inches from floor. 2. Step forward quickly on right foot. 3. Take a long, quick step forward on left foot. 4. Quickly draw right foot up to left, heels together, and pause a half second with weight on right foot. Repeat the entire movement.

Lady's Part.

1. Begin with right foot and take a long, slow step directly backward, holding weight on right foot two full counts, at the same time lift left foot up at back about two inches off the floor. 2. Step backward quickly on left foot. 3. Step backward quickly on right foot. 4. Quickly draw left foot up to right, heels together, and pause a half second with weight on left foot. Repeat the entire movement.
