FNB shareholders called to meeting

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

A special meeting of 1,500 shareholders of The First National Bank of Midland has been called for 10 a.m. Oct. 14 at Theatre Midland to decide how the bank will raise $40-100 million in badly-needed capital.

FNB is being investigated by two federal agencies — the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Comptroller of the Currency — a proxy statement said. That statement also confirmed that The First Boston Corporation has been retained to locate a merger for FNB, since its equity has dwindled to less than $1 million.

The SEC's investigation involves the bank's statements of condition — and questions as to the statements' accuracy. The Comptroller of the Currency has not designated the nature of its investigation.

Several banking violations — which have not all been corrected — have been identified at FNB through the past few months, according to the proxy statement. These include exceeding its loan limits, loaning money to executive officers on favorable terms, noncompliance with securities laws and recordkeeping requirements, and failing to file reports on loans from correspondent banks.

As part of management changes, the bank brought in new president Thomas Wageman from Chicago's LaSalle Bank in August. Wageman's compensation is arranged with a special escrow account of $725,000 at InterFirst Bank Dallas N.A. If FNB is liquidated or acquired he will receive the $600,000 remaining, since he has already been paid $125,000, the proxy statement said.

That statement continued: "The Bank has explored a number of alternatives for a capital infusion or the acquisition of the Bank. No offers were received and there can be no assurance that any acquisition or merger proposal can be obtained or that a suitable investor can be found to provide needed capital to the Bank. Even if any such offer is received, there can be no assurance that holders of shares of common stock would receive any substantial consideration for their shares."

Autry's execution halted

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Convicted killer James David Autry was strapped to a death house gurney with a needle in his arm today when he was told — four minutes after his execution was to have begun — that a Supreme Court justice had granted a reprieve.

Autry, a 29-year-old drifter condemned for killing a store clerk over a six-pack of beer, was awaiting a lethal dose of chemicals when Justice Byron White granted a stay of execution at 11:32 p.m. CDT Tuesday. The state failed in an attempt to overturn the stay.

When Autry was told at 11:39 that there would be a delay, "He did not say one word or have any response," prison spokesman Rick Hartley said.

At 12:05 the inmate, still bound by leather straps in the Texas death chamber, was told of the stay, Hartley said. "Once again there was no reaction." Three minutes later he was off the gurney and at 12:13 he was back in a cell adjacent to the death chamber, the spokesman said.

■ Reprieve may block other executions; Related stories — Page 2A

Autry's execution had been scheduled for just after midnight.

When the stay was announced, "there was clapping and cheering just like the Dallas Cowboys scoring a touchdown," said death row inmate Thomas Andy Barefoot, who himself came within 12 hours of execution earlier this year.

Autry was taken back to his cell on death row at 7:30 a.m. today. He said nothing as he was taken back to his cell, but he was smiling, said Billy Hughes, who is housed in a cell adjacent to Autry.

"We thought we would never see him alive again," said Hughes, who is on death row for killing a state trooper. "He carried himself through this ordeal with a lot of dignity, even though he was lying there with that monster needle in his arm."

Ann Arnold, press secretary to Gov. Mark White, said the stay was granted on the basis of a California case which Texas Attorney General Mattox said "deals with the question of proportionality of the sentence — whether or not the sentence granted one person given the death penalty is the same or comparable to a sentence given someone else for an equal crime."

She said she understood that Justice White stayed Autry's case until the high court could rule on the California case scheduled to be heard Nov. 7.

Nobel committee names Lech Walesa

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Lech Walesa, founder of the now-outlawed Solidarity labor union, today won the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize for his struggle on behalf of workers' rights in Communist-ruled Poland.

The Norwegian Nobel Committee said it honored Walesa "as an exponent of the active longing for peace and freedom which exists, in spite of unequal conditions, unconquered in all the peoples of the world."

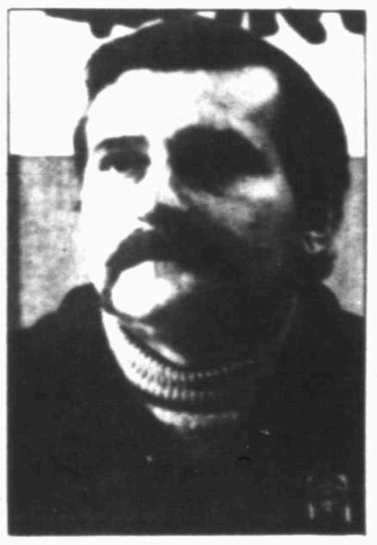

Walesa, the first Pole to win the coveted prize, was chosen for his "contribution, made with considerable personal sacrifice, to ensure the workers' right to establish their own organizations," the committee said.

It said the 40-year-old former head of Solidarity, the first independent trade union in the Soviet bloc, had worked with "a determination to solve his country's problems through negotiation and cooperation without resorting to violence."

Walesa had left his apartment this morning to hunt for mushrooms in the woods and was not at home when the prize was announced, said his wife Danuta.

"Oh god, I am very happy, very, very happy," she said when reached by telephone at their home in the Baltic port of Gdansk, where Walesa helped create Solidarity at the Lenin shipyard.

U.S. needs to strengthen defense, economy, Ford tells Midlanders

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

With all the world's eyes turned to the United States for leadership, this country must strengthen its economic position and its national defense to retain its position of power, former President Gerald R. Ford told a crowded Midland Center audience Tuesday night.

As featured guest at the 60th annual Midland Chamber of Commerce banquet, Ford told the 750 persons of the two components that will keep the U.S. strong. During a press conference that afternoon after he finished 18 holes of golf at Mission Country Club, the former president answered questions on the downed Korean airliner, Lebanon and the 1984 election.

Last summer Ford, 70, sponsored at Vail, Colo., a forum which featured world leaders who no longer hold the high office in their country, such as Helmut Schmidt from Germany, Jack Callahan of Great Britain and Giscard D'Estaing of France.

Over three days their conversation centered on two topics: Economic conditions of the U.S. and the world and the military challenge by the Soviet Union.

"THE CONSENSUS among world leaders was that the free world looks to and is dependent on the leadership of the U.S. in the decade ahead," related Ford.

"As an American, I was very proud of the recognition our country was accorded...that the knowledgeable world leaders recognize the failure of the communist ideology."

But the leaders' attitude also caused Ford to wonder if this nation and its people are ready to continue that leadership role. Some citizens want government given entirely back to the people while others want to depend on the government for everything, he said.

Ford, who was a Michigan congressman for 25 years before ascending to the presidency upon Richard Nixon's resignation in August 1974, views the U.S. government as "tilting more toward the welfare philosophy." That has turned the priority of the government around from defense as being number one to putting assistance programs in the top spot.

In the 1960s, he said, defense received about 40 percent of the budget while programs to individuals totaled about 28 percent. Now, entitlement programs eat up 48 percent of the budget while defense is left holding 25 percent.

Man held in poisoning of infant

ODESSA — A 19-year-old Odessa man remains jailed today in connection with the poisoning of his infant stepson.

In the city jail under $15,000 bond set by Municipal Court Judge Otis Moore was Gerardo G. Aparicio of 421 E. 45th St. He is charged with injury to a child, a first-degree felony.

Police said their investigation disclosed that a herbicide or pesticide was placed in a bottle of milk and fed to 5-month-old Rickey Ray Riverra of the same address.

The boy was taken to Medical Center Hospital about 8:30 p.m. Tuesday and was later transferred to Women's and Children's Hospital, where he was listed in critical condition this morning.

The boy's 12-year-old mother, Lisa Riverra, is not a suspect in the case, according to police. She and Aparaicio, an Odessa motel employee, apparently were common law man and wife. A motive has yet to be established.

Teens survive plunge from cliff

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Four teen-agers in a car sailed 300 feet off an ocean cliff but lived to recall their stunned silence during the fall, which knocked three of them unconcious.

"We were so shocked, we all went kind of silent as we went over the cliff," Dora Doody, 15, said Tuesday about the accident near Daly City, adjacent to San Francisco. "I looked around at everybody but couldn't say anything."

Miss Doody and the three others were rescued Monday night by a Coast Guard helicopter after the car spun out of control, skidded about 25 feet along the cliff and hurtled down the cliff face.

Miss Doody's 17-year-old boyfriend, Lee Langley, who was driving the vehicle, was thrown unconcious into the surf. The three passengers were trapped momentarily inside the car, which filled with sand on impact.

"I couldn't breathe, there was so much sand inside," said Miss Doody, who suffered a broken collarbone, chipped teeth and severe bruises.

Autry never had chance to be anything but bad, lawyers say

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — James David Autry, a two-time loser condemned to death for the 1980 murder of a convenience store clerk, never had a chance to be anything but bad, his attorneys say.

James Autry

Autry, the product of a broken home, spent much of his boyhood in reform schools. At 18, he was sent to prison for armed robbery and was later convicted of burglary.

Autry had been out of prison less than three months when he casually walked into the Sak-N-Pak convenience store, picked up a six-pack of beer and then killed the clerk with a single shot between the eyes when she asked for $2.70, said the prosecutor who convinced jurors that the 29-year-old drifter from Amarillo deserved to die.

"I've never seen anybody more cold blooded. He's a dangerous man who doesn't care for life," said Assistant Jefferson County District Attorney David Moore.

But Autry, a tall, slender man who seems almost shy, might have been a better man had his family life been better, according to affidavits filed in a state appeals court.

Autry's older sister, Pamela Cook Lynn, described their childhood home as a battleground between the parents.

"Our father stayed drunk almost all the time. He was sometimes violent with us kids and often he was violent with my mother. Because of my father's violent nature and heavy drinking, he and James never got along," she said.

"My father was constantly telling James that he was good for nothing, a bum and a criminal," Ms. Lynn said.

"I just feel that if he had been brought up better by my father and if he had had just a few more breaks in life and if he had had a little more oppourtunity to see what life in the free world was like, none of this would have happened," she said.

Stefan Presser, an attorney for the Texas Civil Liberties Union, argued jurors never would have imposed the death sentence had they known about Autry's troubled childhood.

Instead, the 29-year-old Autry, known as "Cowboy" to other inmates, spent the past three years waiting in a 5-foot-by-9-foot cell for his punishment to be carried out. Some of Texas' 170 condemned inmates have been on death row for more than nine years.

Autry believes his case has moved faster through the courts because one of his two brothers threatened State District Judge Leonard Giblin.

Court officials were notified by Amarillo police that threats had been made against Giblin last year. Giblin said he was taking precautions but said the threat had no bearing on the case.

Autry has denied killing Shirley Drouet, a 43-year-old mother of five who took the job as clerk at the store to earn some extra money. He also denied killing Joseph Broussard, 43, and a former Catholic priest who discovered the bloody body, and denied injuring Athanasios Svarhas, 30, a Greek sailor who suffered permanent brain damage.

Crime called something out of Western

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — James David Autry committed a crime that was "like something out of a Western movie," recalled the prosecutor who persuaded a jury to condemn the 29-year-old drifter to death by lethal injection.

Autry was convicted of fatally shooting Shirley Drouet on April 20, 1980. He killed her, said Assistant District Attorney David Moore, rather than pay for a six-pack of beer.

Of the fatal gunshot, Moore said: "It was like something out of a Western movie — perfectly centered between the eyes."

Prosecutors said Autry and a companion, John Alton Sandifer, a man he met in prison, were charged with capital murder in Mrs. Drouet's death. But the indictment against Sandifer, 31, was dismissed for lack of evidence. He accepted a seven-year prison sentence for an unrelated burglary.

According to testimony, the shooting occurred only six hours after Sandifer had bailed Autry out of jail on an auto theft charge.

The pair spent most hours drinking beer, smoking marijuana and popping pills, investigators said, before deciding to rob the store using pistols owned by Sandifer's father.

The two men entered the store, got the beer and strolled to the counter.

"Mrs. Drouet stated the price and James was quoted as saying, 'I'm paying for it with this.' He pulled a pistol and shot her between the eyes," Moore said.

Shortly after the shooting, Sandifer's brother, Mark, and his wife were driving by the store when they recognized the car they had lent to John. The couple drove into the parking lot.

"John came running out of the store, jumped into the borrowed car and drove away. Autry then leaves the store, sees Mark in the car and goes over and sits in the car. He looks back into the store and sees two customers," Moore said.

Autry went back into the store and found John Broussard, a former priest working as an oil company clerk, talking on the telephone. He shot Broussard twice. As he was leaving the store, Autry encountered Anthanasios Syarnas, 30, a sailor from Lithohoron, Greece. The gunman fired once, striking Syarnas in the mouth. Syarnas survived but suffered permanent brain damage, Moore said.

Autry's stay may block all executions

AUSTIN (AP) — A stay of execution that spared James David Autry will stop Texas from putting any condemned convict to death until the legal question is decided by the U.S. Supreme Court, the director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union said today.

"We've got another block on all Texas executions," an elated John Duncan said about an hour after Supreme Court Justice Byron White issued a stay of execution.

Elna Christopher, press secretary for Attorney General Jim Mattox, said lawyers would be studying the question today to determine if the stay could block all Texas executions until the high court rules on a California case it will hear next month.

Duncan also said the stay means Autry's lawyers will be allowed to present their case to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. The stay was based on the argument that all crimes of a certain nature should be punished alike.

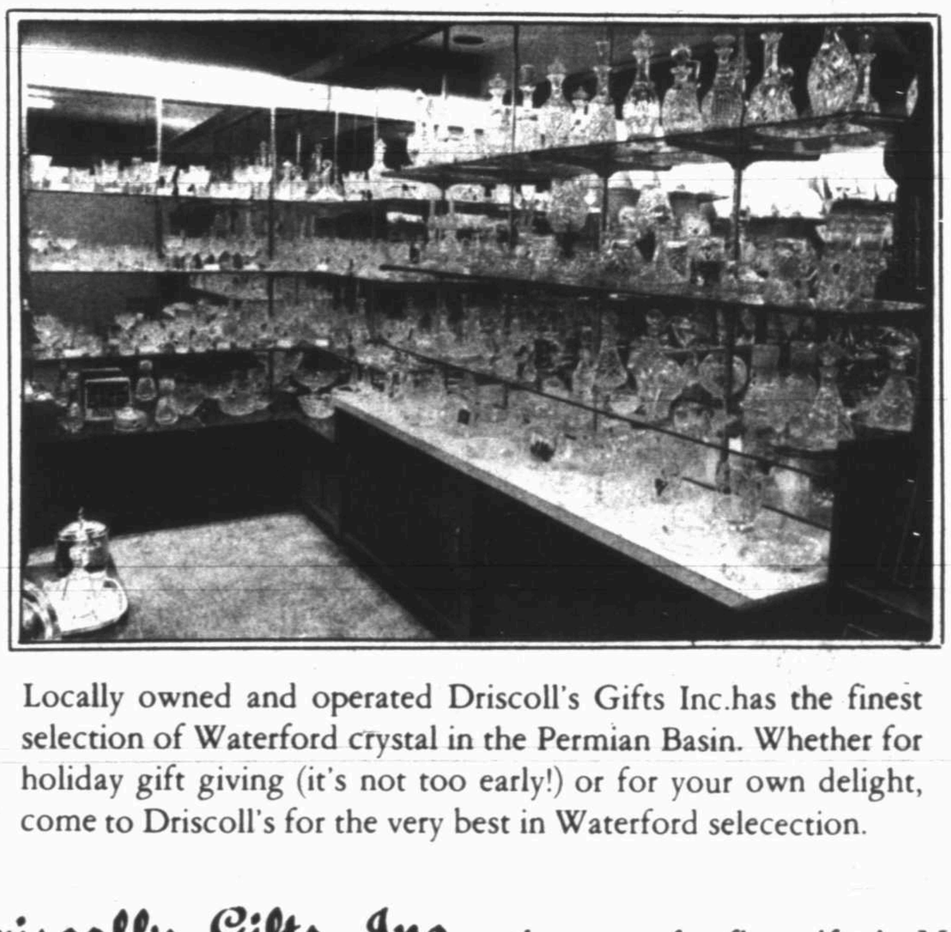

Duncan said armed robbers who kill convenience store clerks..."should be dealt with in the same fashion in all jurisdictions, and only those which have the grossest of facts should wind up as capital cases."

The concept of proportionality was argued successfully before the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in California, which held that it was constitutionally required that California's highest court conduct a proportionality review.

California appealed that decision to the U.S. Supreme Court, and White said late Tuesday in his three-page stay of execution that "we will hear arguments in that case in November, and if we affirm...there will be a substantial question whether the views of the (5th Ciruit Court in New Orleans) were correct" in denying Autry a stay.

Texas town will introduce fire ants to the world

MARSHALL, Texas (AP) — In keeping with the Texas penchant for celebrating nature's critters, there is now a festival for the fire ant.

This weekend in this pine- and oak-shaded community barely in Texas on Interstate 20 west of Shreveport, La., the fire ant will join the rattlesnake, the mosquito, the turkey and others as an excuse for a Texan to throw a party.

A Texas A&M entomologist thinks it's kind of cute. A detractor or two may question whether it promotes — quote "Historic Marshall." Second graders in Doris Lattimore's class here only know that fire ants burn, make bumps and should be gotten rid of.

"The purpose of this festival is durn sure not to honor the fire ant," says George Smith, one of the Chamber of Commerce organizers and publisher of the Marshall News-Messenger. "We are using it as a hook."

Smith is wise in these matters. He helped arrange a mosquito festival in Stuttgart, Ark., not to be confused with the mosquito festival in Clute, Texas, which Smith claims is a pretender because Stuttgart copyrighted the idea first.

It doesn't take an extended visit to Marshall to realize the indefatigable Smith, 38, is "Mr. Fire Ant," although he concedes, "I never have been bitten by one. I have never had a close encounter with a fire ant of any kind."

Whatever, the colonial house that serves as Marshall Chamber of Commerce headquarters has been crowded with fire ant street banners, fire ant street crossing signs, fire ant T-shirts of modest and immodest design, fire ant bumper stickers and brochures and, of course, fire ant visors and baseball-style caps.

Patti Harris, acting chamber director, said amid the paraphenalia, "I don't like fire ants but I just love fire ant festivals."

The Oct. 8-9 FireAnt Festival may attract 20,000, not bad for a town with double-digit unemployment and related economic problems. If visitors are so inclined, they are welcome to the pantyhose grapefruit roll, beer coaster-tossing competition, swim fin running and beer drinking contest, fire ant round-up and the virtually requisite Texas chili cookoff.

Fire ants AP Laserphoto

Chili Cookoff contestants must swear there is a fire ant somewhere in the chili, leading Dr. Brad Vinson of Texas A&M, a fire ant specialist, to comment in a phone interview, "Watch the chili very carefully. I wouldn't taste any chili with fire ants."

Smith says he has heard ants are 90 per cent protein but adds he couldn't imagine more than one per chili pot anyway.

The festival concept, Vinson approves of. "I think it's kind of cute. I'd send up some of my students if it wasn't so far."

It takes front money to introduce the world to fire ant festivals and, besides local sponsors, Smith went to the corporation that makes a fire ant killer. A public relations man with American Cyanamid in Trenton, N.J., responded to Smith's letter although he admitted he never heard of Marshall, Texas.

Smith, with bargaining acumen, said, "How about two thousand and he offered four thousand and then I said, okay, how about six thousand and he said, 'How about four,' and that is the figure we stuck with."

The company is sending representatives to view its investments and anyone from New Jersey could be seeing a fire ant for the first time, since Texas A&M reports indicate the pest has not yet wandered that far north.

Aggie researchers know it as Solenopsis invicta or the "red imported fire ant," so named because it was introduced by accident into the United States about 1918 in Mobile, Alabama, from Brazil or Argentina.

It spread rapidly throughout the lower Southern states and entered Texas in 1957. By now, it is in 100 Texas counties and eight other states, although its migration is limited by its displeasure with colder weather.

Fire ant mounds can stand 18 inches high and wide and render a pasture or park useless. When the mound hardens, it can wreck farm equipment. Not docile, the fire ant colonies will swarm on an intruder and sting until that truly unfortunate victim retreats.

That would make a fire ant round-up challenging for Texans, although perhaps less so than round-ups for the unimported rattlesnakes in Sweetwater and Taylor.

Aviation program successful

RICHMOND, Ky. (AP) — Dr. Wilma Walker dates her interest in aviation to her high school days in the late 1950s.

She was serious enough then to write all the commercial airlines about becoming a pilot. "I got one letter from TWA, who said, 'We don't have any policy against women pilots, but ...'

"I was a couple of years ahead of my time," concedes the coordinator of Eastern Kentucky University's newly launched aviation program.

Ms. Walker, an associate professor of geography, eventually earned a private pilot's license and this semester is shepherding 23 students through the university's pilot ground-school course.

Sixteen of the students are simultaneously enrolled in flight training to obtain private licenses.

The ground program, through which the students will earn four hours of academic credit, costs $120 for full-time students. The price covers the cost of books, supplies and the Federal Aviation Administration's written test.

The flight course carries no academic credit and costs $1,430 per student for lessons in a two-seat Piper Tomahawk from contracted instructors at Madison Airport.

If the cost seems steep, Ms. Walker said, consider that the going rate for private lessons is about $1,000 more.

Preflight briefings, for example, are included in the ground program. "What the student pays for is actual flight time," she said.

Flight time includes a kind of cross-country final examination, a five-hour solo flight that requires three takeoffs and landings.

The aviation program was established in the College of Applied Arts and Technology at the urging of Joseph Schwendeman, dean for undergraduate studies.

Schwendeman "was the first individual who thought there was interest or a demand for this type of program," Ms. Walker said.

The program took off in June with eight students, including three who learned to fly.The eight students attended ground classes 2½ hours a day, Monday through Thursday. Flying time for the three pilot trainees was tailored to their schedules.

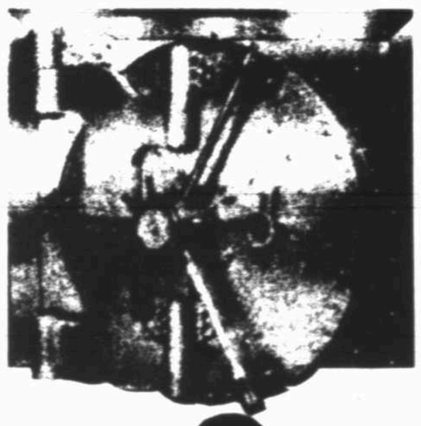

One of the latter group was Keith Gunter, a senior police-administration major from Versailles who will graduate in December and will receive an Army commission. He had been branched into infantry-aviation as a Reserve Officer Training Corps cadet and the program gave him "a few hours' head start" on active duty training, he said.

Besides being practical, it was fun.

"I would probably have done it even if I hadn't been going into the Army," said Gunter. "It was time-consuming, but it's never boring."

Flying in a small plane was "pretty scary," he said.

Soviets call for worldwide freeze

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Soviet Union is inviting the United States to join in a worldwide freeze on nuclear weapons, just two months before the planned deployment of new U.S. missiles in Western Europe.

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, in a proposal made Tuesday, urged the 158-nation General Assembly to adopt a resolution calling on all countries to agree to a freeze "under appropriate verification."

Moscow "considers it possible for the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. to be the first to implement it on a bilateral basis by way of example to the other nuclear powers," Gromyko wrote to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

The foreign minister decided not to attend the assembly session after the governors of New York and New Jersey decreed that his plane could not land at Kennedy or Newark airports in protest of the Soviet downing of a Korean airliner Sept. 1.

Previous Soviet proposals for a nuclear weapons freeze have been rejected by the Reagan administration, which said such action would allow the Soviets to maintain an existing edge in nuclear strength.

Gromyko said his freeze resolution included a ban on deployment of new nuclear arms — an apparent reference to the 572 Pershing 2 and cruise missiles the United States plans to deploy in Western Europe beginning in December unless a superpower accord is reached.

Gromyko proposed in a second letter to Perez de Cuellar that the General Assembly adopt a resolution condemning nuclear war as "the most hideous crime against the peoples."

In Gromyko's absense, Soviet Ambassador Oleg A. Troyanovsky outlined the proposal in a speech to the assembly.

"The implementation of that initiative would markedly raise the degree of trust among the nuclear-weapon countries and would make it possible to move decisively towards breaking the vicious cycle of the arms race," he said. "Moreover, this would also promote the reduction and, eventually, complete elimination of nuclear weapons."

Reagan's new arms proposal aimed in several directions

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Reagan had an eye on Capitol Hill when he called on the Soviet Union to join the United States in a mutual pledge to destroy at least 5 percent of their strategic nuclear warheads a year.

There, Reagan is trying to nail down a $2.6 billion appropriation to buy 27 MX missiles — the first of 100 he wants to see deployed at Warren Air Force Base in Wyoming.

By embracing the idea of a weapons "build-down" — destroying a certain number of weapons before new ones can be deployed — Reagan apparently improved the outlook for the MX program.

But in the House, where Democrats outnumber Republicans by 267 to 167, a White House victory is not considered a cinch.

Nor is it clear if Reagan's move will help break the deadlock in the negotiations with the Soviet Union, which resume Thursday in Geneva, Switzerland.

"It would be stunning if there were anything but a very cold reaction," said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., one of the key arms control moderates won over by Reagan.

The proposed build-down calls for "variable ratios" in the various categories of long-range nuclear weapons. If the Soviets accept it, two warheads might be scrapped for each new one that is deployed, a senior U.S. official explained Tuesday.

Similarly, he said, three submarine missiles might be destroyed for every two added to the U.S. and Soviet fleets.

Reagan and other administration officials did not spell out how many years Soviet and American strategic warhead totals would be sliced by 5 percent if the president's proposal was adopted.

However, the administration is known to be aiming at a treaty that would run for about eight years. A 5 percent annual reduction in the 7,900 warheads now in the Soviet arsenal would reduce the total to slightly less than 5,000 over that span.

Setting a ceiling of 5,000 on U.S. and Soviet strategic warheads remains a central U.S. goal. The United States has about 7,200 warheads.

Unquestionably, the president has made headway with a group of House members that includes Aspin and Rep. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., a leading arms control theoretician.

But he said deployment of the new U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe would provoke Soviet "countermeasures to preserve the balance of forces on both European and global scale."

Troyanovsky also condemned the United States for its military policies, its stance at the arms reduction talks in Geneva and its reaction to the downing of the Korean jumbo jet.

He accused the Reagan administration of taking a "one-sided approach" at the Geneva talks and of "promoting, rather than halting, the strategic arms race."

Troyanovsky said the U.S. arms buildup had added "a qualitatively new dimension to the threat to peace." He denounced U.S. plans to develop the MX and Midgetman intercontinental nuclear missiles, the B-1 bomber and the neutron bomb.

"Given the situation which exists now, the task of preventing war has acquired particular urgency," Troyanovsky said.

He accused Washington of pursuing a policy that "runs counter to the age-old yearnings for a peaceful life...and is at variance with the interests of the peace-loving majority of states."

The Soviet diplomat charged that the United States was seeking "military superiority from which they wish to domineer and issue orders" while spreading the "myth" of Soviet dominance in nuclear weapons. He insisted there was "rough equality between the two sides."

Soviet bloc states do not seek military superiority, Troyanovsky said, "but they will not allow anyone to acquire military superiority over them."

Regarding the airliner incident, Troyanovsky accused the United States of "deliberately whipping up war hysteria."

Walesa entered the international spotlight in August 1980 when, after a summer of strikes and labor turmoil, Solidarity for ..d Poland's government to allow the right to strike and organize independent unions. Those gains were negated later by the banning of Solidarity and the imposition of martial law.

The Nobel Committee, in a statement explaining its award, said Walesa "has attempted to establish a dialogue between the organization he represents — Solidarity — and the authorities."

The statement, read by Nobel Committee chairman Egil Aarvik, did not speculate on whether Walesa will travel to Oslo to receive his award and Nobel Prize check on Dec. 10.

The awards always are given on that date, the anniversary of the death in 1896 of Swedish dynamite inventor Alfred Nobel, whose will established the Nobel Prizes. This year's stipend for each winner is a record 1.5 million Swedish kronor — almost $190,000.

Walesa is only the second peace prize winner from the Soviet bloc, and his selection likely will prompt a similar response there as the 1975 award to Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov. East bloc governments claimed the award to Sakharov was motivated by politics, despite the Nobel Committee's avowed apolitical goals.

Jakob Sverdrup, the Nobel Committee's secretary and head of the Norwegian Nobel Institute, said Walesa's name was proposed by several groups of parliamentarians, including West Germans, French and Norwegians.

Between August 1980 and December 1981, when Polish authorities suspended Solidarity by declaring martial law, Walesa was transformed from an unemployed electrician into one of the world's most familiar faces.

Even after the military crackdown, Walesa remained the leading symbol of the struggle for workers' rights in Poland, a cause to which he had dedicated himself more than a decade.

Interned along with thousands of other Solidarity leaders and supporters under the martial law declaration of Dec. 13, 1981, Walesa was released in November 1982 after eleven months in isolated internment.

The mention in the Nobel Committee's statement of Walesa's "considerable personal sacrifice" runs counter to recent attacks on him by Poland's official media.

They have claimed that the main reason for Walesa's union efforts was to enrich himself.

Authorities in Warsaw recently broadcast a tape recording, which Walesa said was forged, in which a voice purported to be Walesa's told his brother how to invest in accounts abroad $1 million in proceeds from previous prizes he has won.

In the tape, the voice said to be Walesa's decried the Nobel Committee's failure to give him the 1982 peace prize.

Last year's prize, for which Walesa was nominated, went to Alva Myrdal of Sweden and former Mexican Foreign Minister Alfonso Garcia Robles, both veteran campaigners for disarmament.

In its statement, the Nobel Committee said the right to organize is a basic human right as defined by the United Nations.

"The committee has on several occasions when awarding the peace prize emphasized that a campaign for human rights is a campaign for peace," the statement said.

"Furthermore, the committee believes that Walesa's attempt to find a peaceful solution to his country's problems will coontribute to a relaxation of international tension.

"In an age when detente and the peaceful resolution of conflicts are more necessary than ever before. Lech Walesa's contribution is both an inspiration and an example."

In an unusual step, Sverdrup and Aarvik answered questions after Aarvik read the committee's citation.

Winner began as electrician

OSLO, Norway (AP) — The Norwegian Nobel Committee today provided the following brief sketch on the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize winner, Lech Walesa of Poland:

Lech Walesa was born on the 29th of September, 1943, in Popowo, Poland. He trained as an electrician and began work at the Lenin shipyards in Gdansk in 1966. He married in 1969 and has seven children.

In 1970, during the disturbances which led to (Wladyslaw) Gomulka's replacement by (Edward) Gierek as party secretary, Walesa was a member of the 27-strong action committee at the Lenin yards. As a result of his activities as shop steward he was dismissed in 1976 and therefore obliged to earn a living by taking temporary jobs.

During the summer of 1980 there were further disturbances among the shipyard workers. Walesa was helped into a protest meeting and seized the leadership by proposing that the workers occupy the shipyards. Walesa was thereafter seen as leader of the wave of strikes which soon covered large parts of the country. The authorities were finally forced to capitulate and negotiate with Walesa.

The result of these negotiations was the Gdansk agreement of aug. 31, 1980, which gave the workers the right to strike and to organize their own independent trade unions. Solidarity was now regarded as such an independent union, though there were frequent disagreements with the authorities as to its real status.

FNB shareholders to meet as agencies probe bank

FNB spokesman Guy McCrary said, "I can't make any comment. I think there's sufficient information in the proxy statement itself." The statement says the bank must either sell new stock to replace lost equity capital, or the bank must sell itself to an outside buyer — which it has tried to do from the end of 1982 until Oct. 4 of this year with no success.

FNB's lost equity involves the $122 million in equity (assets minus liabilities) that shareholders could claim in FNB as of December 1982. Now, that equity has dwindled sharply to $7 million on June 30 and $862,000 on Aug. 31, the statement said.

If the bank can't come up with sufficient capital, its expected further loan losses, which it is working to minimize, could put it in a negative equity position.

Negative equity would mean that the bank, after liquidation, would still owe more money to creditors than it could raise — after assets are sold and liabilities paid off. They could not cover the losses, if more occur, even by selling everything they own.

Delinquent energy loans have plagued FNB since the close of 1982's fourth quarter. Delinquent loans at FNB have doubled during 1983 from $150.4 million to $314 million on June 30.

Currently, the First National Bank has borrowed $535 million from the Federal Reserve Bank.

Bob Walters of Sheshunoff and Company Inc., Austin, a banking research firm, said that FNB has essentially "lost all of its capital" through the dwindling equity caused by loan losses.

"The question becomes, can they sell additional stock? Can they raise $100 million if need be? They already sold their building in a favorable deal for more than $30 million and issued more than $20 million in common stock. Is there a market for the new stock, and will it sell at the price the bank sets; or will the directors fund the bank if not?"

Walters said that since the directors of FNB are financially strong themselves, "It becomes a question of ego and pride more than dollars and cents."

He said now is not the time for a bank holding company to buy FNB. Because of its problems and current investigations, the markets would react negatively to a large public bank company buying FNB "until it reaches bottom — its maximum loss — and effects a turnaround. Otherwise, the buyer's stock value would drop for some time."

Walters noted that FNB is tied to the fate of Midland inexorably. "FNB is part of the entire community. They are into everything, and suffered with the community. What happened to Midland happened to FNB" when the oil industry slump hit this city in 1982.

The bank has proposed amendments to its articles of association involving a two-for-one stock split, a $60 million increase in common stock and a new $10 million issue of preferred stock.

Currently, five million shares of common stock are authorized, and 3.2 million have been issued. The stock has a $5 par value, and its price is fluctuating between a $20 high and a $10 low.

The bank wants to get permission from shareholders to deny them preemptive rights to buy the new stock, because it does not want to miss any financing opportunity, reported the 45-page proxy statement.

Ford addresses chamber banquet

THIS SHIFT "worries me greatly," confessed Ford. "I warn my liberal friends that when they push and push for more transfer payments, it makes individuals more dependent on government.

"They must listen to this word of caution: That when a government is big enough to give us everything we want it is big enough to take from us everything we have."

The economy is recovering, he said at the news conference. And at the dinner he cited the Republican Party figures that included a declining inflation rate from 13.5 percent 2½ years ago to about 3 percent, more employment and increased productivity.

Operating a government budget on a $200 billion deficit means "Uncle Sam borrowed 25 percent of every dollar spent. That's a serious fiscal situation. I do believe it's manageable for one year. But you can't have a healthy economy with back-to-back-to-back deficits."

In the last three to four years, Ford charged, the country's deficits have "hemorrhaged."

In fiscal year 1981, the federal government spent $660 billion, which was $80 billion over the previous year. In 1982, spending went up to $720 billion and the debt was pushed up by $70 billion.

However, Ford predicted the country is starting to turn the corner on deficit spending. Although the Reagan administration hasn't reduced the budget, he said, it has cut the rate of growth.

A constitutional amendment, which several congressmen attempted to get passed last year, won't solve the problem. Ford, who disagrees with the idea of such an amendment, said it would be five years before it could be enacted.

"IF YOU READ IT, it's full of loopholes. After 25 years in Congress, I know the Congress will find those loopholes. Don't be misled," he said, lowering his voice on the last sentence.

With these ballooning deficits, the nation is facing a crisis. "We have to find ways to meet those needs of highest national priority," while eliminating items at the bottom of the list.

And a powerful national defense can never be attained without a strong economy, said Ford. He recommended the same military proposals that were lined up in Ronald Reagan's presidential campaign 2½ years ago. These included replacing the aging B-52 bombers with the modern B-1, building the navy up to 600 capital ships from its 450, designing an MX system to take over from the aging Minuteman and upgrading the army.

The stronger a country's defense is, the easier it is in dealing for peace, according to Ford. He recalled a meeting in Vladovostok with the Soviet Union's Leonid Brezhnev on strategic arms limitations. "You can get a better argument if you're strong. Strengthen the military," he urged, "but negotiate from strength.

"Sometimes, we forget what the goal is of the military. Its purpose is to make peace and deter aggression," he added.

His hair still reflecting a sandy-color, Ford backed President Reagan's actions against the Soviet Union after the Korean airliner was destroyed. "He was tough and spoke out. On the other hand, he kept the door open for negotiations on strategic arms limitations talks."

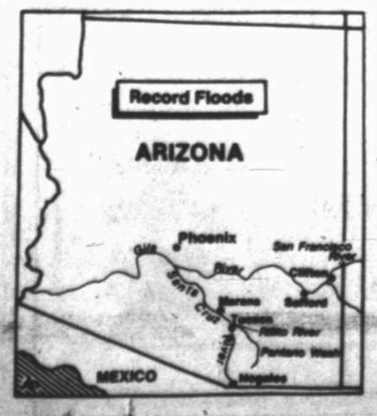

LEBANON IS A tough call, he said concerning the U.S. troops stationed there. But for the United States to pull out suddenly would be "catastrophic. It would be very wrong for the United States to pull up stakes and quit. We would lose all credibility not only in the Middle East, but also throughout the world. Nobody would respect us. On the other hand, I don't think we ought to go in there with a division of Marines and take an active offensive part. But, yes, the United States Marines should be there as a peacekeeping force."

Looking to next year, Ford expects Reagan to run for re-election and to win. The Democratic opponent should be Walter Mondale, vice president to Jimmy Carter. But Mondale will be defeated because he's carrying Carter's baggage "and it's awful heavy."

Ford, who recalled he went through some dark times in his three years as president, sees the country coming out of its bleak recession. There are times the public has lost faith in its economic system and high government officials. But, reminded the speech-making, golf-playing former politician, "things that unite our country are far more than those that divide us.

"Let's work to banish war from our shrinking world and hate from our expanding hearts."

Arizonans dig out, face prospect of more downpours

By ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

TUCSON, Ariz. — Flood-weary Arizonans dug through mud-caked debris and riot police guarded a mining town ravaged both by rains and strike violence as a forecaster warned the "same song, second verse" could renew downpours tonight.

The fierce flooding, which left 15 people dead or missing and hundreds of millions of dollars in damage in Arizona's worst disaster of the century, receded Tuesday as the sun came out.

But swollen rivers continued to rage out of control in some areas, forcing evacuations and inundating previously untouched communities southwest of Phoenix.

Added to the desert state's troubles, the National Weather Service said a mjor storm from a Pacific hurricane could hit tonight, bringing more heavy rains to devastated southern Arizona.

"We're talking large-scale," said meteorologist Brenda Graham in Phoenix. "It's the same sort of song, second verse."

Emergency-service workers began moving heavy equipment to likely flood sites ahead of the storm, while

In the copper mining town of Clifton, where floods swept away half the community, looters preyed on wrecked homes and businesses and striking copper workers threw rocks at non-striking employees of Phelps Dodge Corp., authorities said.

In response, police cordoned off the business district, imposed a 10 p.m. curfew for the town's 4,200 residents and called in 25 riot-helmeted reinforcements from the Department of Public Safety.

In Phoenix, Phelps Dodge broke off contract negotiations in the 3-month-old strike Tuesday after company officials said a crowd of strikers threw rocks and bottles and threatened workers who were trying to repair roadways. However, union negotiators charged that the company had been looking for an excuse to end the talks.

Some residents who had ridden out layoffs and strikes in Clifton, 100 miles northeast of Tucson on the San Francisco River, declared the flooding the final straw and packed up to move out.

"Goodbye to all this," said Jack Wright, as he loaded a mud-covered mattress onto his pickup truck.

Former Mattox staffer pleads guilty to charges

FORT WORTH (AP) — A Fort Worth-area lawyer and insurance agent indicted last year on federal charges alleging conspiracy and mail fraud was on the staff of Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox until the middle of last month.

Donald T. McDevitt, of Bedford, was the attorney general's "chief of staff services" and was paid $2,737 a month between January and September, according to the state comptroller's office.

McDevitt pleaded guilty to the conspiracy charge Monday in federal court here — about three weeks after leaving the attorney general's office, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today.

Hal Monk, an executive assistant to Mattox, said the attorney general was aware of McDevitt's legal problems.

McDevitt's job did not require him to do any legal work for the state, according to Monk and Elna Christopher, a spokeswoman for Mattox. McDevitt was indicted six months before he joined the attorney general's staff.

McDevitt, 46, and two other insurance agents — Michael A. Carr, 35, and Keith D. Kantor, 29 — pleaded guilty to conspiring to defraud the Internal Revenue Service. In exchange for their guilty pleas on the conspiracy charge, the government agreed to seek the dismissal of mail fraud charges.

The government claims the three men "manufactured false and fradulent tax deductions" for themselves and others through a consulting business in the Bahama Islands.

The mail fraud indictments, which the government has agreed to drop, accused the men of defrauding the Great National Life Insurance Co. of Dallas by using commissions that they earned to make premium payments on behalf of their clients.

The men are scheduled to be sentenced Oct. 28 by U.S. District Judge Eldon Mahon. Each faces up to five years in prison and a fine of up to $10,000.

Mattox was not available Tuesday for comment about McDevitt's employment, the Star-Telegram said.

Monk said an indictment against a prospective employee in the attorney general's office would not necessarily mean disqualification.

McDevitt, who declined to comment on the federal case, said he understood that Mattox was aware of the charges against him.

Manhunt for bankers' killers ends in Texas

PADUCAH (AP) — Three Minnesota officers were taking a prisoner off his hands today, and Cottle County Sheriff Frank Taylor was happy about it.

"As soon as they get the boy and the evidence and get on their way back to Minnesota, I'll be tickled to death. We have something like this every once in a while, but never anything that's got national attention like this one has," Taylor said Tuesday night.

The body of James L. Jenkins, 46, was found four miles north of this quiet West Texas community Sunday night shortly after his son, Steven Jenkins, 18, gave himself up to a police dispatcher. Jenkins shot himself in the head with a shotgun, Taylor said.

Thus ended a nationwide manhunt for the father and son who were named in warrants for the murder of two bankers last Thursday in southwestern Minnesota.

Abe Thompson, sheriff of Lincoln County, Minn., arrived Monday night in a small plane with two investigators from the Minnesota Bureau of Criminal Apprehension.

They spent Tuesday interviewing the teen-ager and gathering various evidence — including a cache of weapons found in Jenkins' pickup truck.

"We had to mark and label everything, and by the time they got through with that, it was getting on toward dark," Taylor said. Jenkins and the Minnesota officers were scheduled to leave Paducah about 8 a.m. for Childress, about 30 miles to the north, where their plane was waiting.

Jenkins told investigators he saw his father kill Rudy Blythe, 42, owner and president of Buffalo Ridge State Bank, and Deems "Toby" Thulin, 37, a vice president and loan officer, Taylor said.

The youth told investigators his father held a grudge because the bank foreclosed on Jenkins' Minnesota dairy farm four years ago, Taylor said.

"He gave a statement. He waived his rights to a lawyer or anything. I'm sure when they get back to Minnesota they're going to appoint him one. They were very professional about warning him his rights. He talked freely about it, but what he did, he did on his own," the sheriff added.

El Paso Democrat questions Reagan's border aid program

WASHINGTON (AP) — Though under fire for the way it is tallying its assistance to Southwest border areas, the Reagan administration is continuing to include in its total $94.8 million in financial guarantees most of which were not actually targeted for the border.

The $94.8 million was included in $137 million in assistance the administration announced Tuesday had been awarded so far to Southwest border communities whose economies are suffering from last year's devaluations of the Mexican peso.

Alixe Reed, an assistant press secretary to Vice President George Bush, said she had "no quarrel" with published accounts that only about $11 million raised through the guarantees actually had been allocated to the border — for a drill rig construction project in Brownsville, Texas.

But she said the $94.8 million in guarantees had been granted to a Houston company as a single award and "the decision was made we were just going to leave it at that," with the whole amount considered as border aid.

Texas Rep. Ron Coleman, an El Paso Democrat, has accused the administration of using the $94.8 million in guarantees to inflate its border aid figures, saying the move "calls into question the credibility of their whole program of border assistance."

That program was launched in August by a special multi-agency task force appointed by President Reagan to accelerate federal assistance to the border areas. The task force is chaired by Bush.

The vice president's office announced the $94.8 million in financial guarantees for a subsidiary of Global Marine Inc. last month, included the entire amount in its border aid tallies and said it would "keep 500 workers on the job in (a) Brownsville, Texas shipyard."

But The El Paso Times later reported that the company actually had only an $11 million share of a $55 million rig being built at the shipyard.

Ms. Reed said the company had "not indicated what they are going to do" with the rest of the $94.8 million so "we're not going to change the status of it."

Ms. Reed also defended the inclusion in border aid tallies last month of a $4.2 million low interest loan for a housing project in Cathedral City, Calif., which a local offical told the Times was basically a community "tied to the resort economy, not the peso."

Ms. Reed described the community as a "pocket of poverty" and said it was in "definite need."

Included in the $137 million in aid tally was $20.8 million which the task force said had been awarded in the past week.

Among that was $1.3 million described as contracts from the Small Business Administration "for firms in affected border counties." However, Ms. Reed could not name the counties.

Raises called 'insubordination'

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Ray Keller said Tuesday merit pay raises apparently authorized by state prison director Jim Estelle reflect "nothing but insubordination" and "cannot go unanswered."

Keller, chairman of the House Law Enforcement Committee, said personnel director Bobby Maggard of the Texas Department of Corrections told a member of Keller's staff that Estelle had authorized 3.4 percent raises, effective last August.

Keller quoted Maggard as saying the raises would offset payments prison employees now have to make for state-furnished utilities. The raises would cost about $800,000 over two years.

Land sale raises $38 million

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro says oil and gas lease sales conducted by the General Land Office on Tuesday raised the Permanent School Fund to over $3.9 billion.

Mauro said in a statement the sale grossed more than $38.5 million in bonuses, with over 500 bids submitted on approximately 260,700 acres of public school land.

Final results of the sale will be tabulated by the land office and released on Friday.

Ex-lawmaker files for bankruptcy

PAMPA (AP) — Former U.S. Rep. Bob Price has filed for protection from creditors under federal bankrupcy laws, avoiding a foreclosure auction Tuesday that would have sold his 9,600-acre ranch to pay off federal loans.

Federal officials say Price owes a total of $2.3 million to two federal agencies, including $1.8 million to the Farmers Home Administration and about $500,000 to the Small Business Administration.

Price's attorney, Don Patterson, said Price would have 120 days to submit a plan for reorganization to federal bankrupcy Judge Bill Brister in Amarillo, for approval by Price's creditors and the court.

Price attempted to sell the ranch, which stretches over four counties north of Pampa, in a voluntary auction last April. Pampa oilman Leonard Hudson bid over $3 million for the ranch, but the deal never went through.

Hightower: Family farm hurting

URBANDALE (AP) — Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said Tuesday that the family farm could disappear by 1999 if its defenders don't get involved in politics.

He said the government's farm policies have helped large corporations gain control of the nation's food industry and have hurt the family farm. "Somebody's making some money," but it's not the American farmer, he said. "We need a whole new policy to keep the farmer, the person who produces so abundantly, prosperous."

Hightower spoke at Living History Farms as part of the National Catholic Rural Life Conference's celebration of the Pope's 1979 visit to the farms.

White appoints new judge

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White on Tuesday appointed former Beaumont Mayor James McNicholas to the state's Ninth Court of Appeals.

The new judge will serve until the next general election.

Bus driver shoots at students

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas school bus driver was arrested after she fired several shots at a group of high school students waiting at a bus stop, police said.

Police said a 37-year-old woman was arrested shortly after the Tuesday morning incident and was being held for investigation of attempted murder.

Investigators said witnesses told them that several students were waiting for a school bus in a Dallas suburb when a school van pulled up and a woman and a mangot out.

Operation PUSH threatens suit if Chicago dispute continues

By The Associated Press

Operation PUSH threatened to sue if a 3-day-old teachers walkout that has idled 436,000 students in Chicago isn't settled by Friday as officials in Oakland, Calif., pledged to reopen classes for 48,000 pupils despite a job action today.

Teachers strikes in three Michigan districts kept another 27,500 out of school and about 900 students got a strike-sparked recess in a tiny Pennsylvania district, as about 500,000 students were affected around the nation on Tuesday.

In the strike in Chicago, the nation's third-largest school district, talks broke up without a settlement just before 8 p.m. Tuesday, 20 minutes after Jackie Vaughn, vice president of the 27,000-member Chicago Teachers Union, accused board negotiators of lacking authority to make new offers. The talks were to resume at noon today.

"It sounds to me like the union broke it up," said board spokeswoman Elaine Soloway. She said it "shows good faith, that we are continuing to negotiate."

Operation PUSH spokesman Thomas N. Todd announced at a parent-teacher rally that the minority-advancement group will file a class-action suit against the school board, based on children's right to an education, demanding that schools be opened.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who founded PUSH — People United to Serve Humanity — has taken a leave of absence as president of the group to consider running for the Democratic presidental nomination.

The teachers union seeks a 10 percent salary increase, according to the Chicago Tribune, which quoted unnamed sources as saying that union president Robert Healey privately has said the bottom line is a 5.5 percent increase.

School superintendent Ruth Love said she was "not willing to mortgage the future" of school children to resolve the strike.

Reagan insists trip postponed due to congressional business

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, criticizing news reports suggesting that security concerns forced him to delay his visit to the Philippines, Indonesia and Thailand, insists the postponement was caused by the need to handle congressional business.

The president told reporters late Tuesday evening that he had been waiting all day to get the complaint about the news reports off his chest.

He said as soon as he had heard that Congress would be in session while he would be traveling, he raised questions about how he could continue with his plans to be out of the country in early November.

Last week, he said in an interview with The New York Post that the need to work with Congress over key appropriations measures might force him to stay home when he had been scheduled to be in the Philippines.

The decision to delay the visit was announced Monday by Larry Speakes, the chief White House spokesman, whose statement made no mention of the security concerns raised by recent riots in the Philippines. Some of the rioting has been directed at U.S. support for the government of President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

"In view of the fact that Congress will be in session, that key appropriations bills have not yet been enacted, and that a continuing resolution has been enacted but will expire Nov. 10, it is clear that the first two weeks in November will be particularly demanding legislative weeks," Speakes said on Monday.

The president's comments on the postponement came in a conversation with several reporters at the end of a state dinner in honor of West German President Karl Carstens.

One reporter asked if Reagan was sorry that he was not going to the Philippines as planned. The trip had been scheduled to take Reagan to the Philippines, Indonesia, Thailand, Japan and South Korea. The final two countries are now the only ones left on his agenda.

Turning to answer the question, the president said "I was most disappointed with the press this morning. We made a very honest decision and an honest statement. We didn't cancel anything. We postponed it."

Senator ends King filibuster

WASHINGTON (AP) — With Senate leaders poised to crush his filibuster, Sen. Jesse Helms is dropping his stall and permitting an Oct. 18 vote that is expected to be overwhelmingly in favor of a national holiday honoring Martin Luther King Jr.

Tom Griscom, chief spokesman for Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker Jr., confirmed that Helms, R-N.C., told Baker Tuesday he would drop the filibuster.

The spokesman added that Baker, on Helms' request, agreed to have the Senate consider this week an agriculture bill that includes target price supports for crops, including North Carolina's main crop of tobacco.

Griscom said Helms has been "asking us for two weeks" to bring up the bill, but the spokesman said Baker did not consider the two issues a tradeoff.

"He wanted the agriculture bill before the recess," Griscom said, referring to the week-long Columbus Day break that begins Monday.

The Baker aide said he did not know whether the two issues were linked by Helms, who was not available for comment.

If Helms had not agreed to drop the tactics that prevented a vote on the King holiday, senators were prepared to vote today on a cloture petition to limit debate.

The resolution had bipartisan sponsorship including Baker, Minority Leader Robert Byrd, and Sens. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. and Robert Dole, R-Kan. Griscom predicted it would have received the required 60 votes.

Both Baker and Dole have said they expect the vote to establish the holiday to pass by a wide margin.

The agreement came as supporters began a 24-hour vigil Tuesday outside the Capitol to pressure the Senate to pass the bill, and colleagues of the North Carolina senator rose in waves to attack him. They spoke at the vigil, on the House floor, in interviews and news conferences.

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass, speaking at the vigil, called Helms one of "the spokesmen for racial hate and intolerance."

Helms' comments that King preached "action-oriented Marxism" prompted Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, to say in an interview, "The remarks were ugly, a throwback to an era that I certainly thought we outlived. It has to be an embarrassment to the president who endorsed the legislation."

He said he was referring to the early 1950s, when former Sen. Joseph McCarthy went on an anti-communist crusade, smearing innocent Americans.

Sen. William S. Cohen, R-Maine, told reporters he thought Helms' remarks "tend to poison the well for legitimate debate."

The bill would observe the holiday on the third Monday of January, beginning in 1986 if the measure becomes law this year. King's birthday was Jan. 15.

President Reagan said this week he would sign the bill, which already passed the House 338-90 two months ago.

'Inattentive' juror forces mistrial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The lone juror who forced a mistrial in the case of a woman accused of running the nation's biggest child pornography ring was inattentive and favored the defendant even before he joined deliberations, angry prosecutors charged.

The trial of Catherine Stubblefield Wilson ended in an 11-1 deadlock Tuesday after the juror sent the judge a note saying there was "no chance" he would ever vote to convict.

U.S. District Judge Richard Gadbois Jr. scheduled a new trial Jan. 17 for Ms. Wilson on 15 counts of distributing obscene material and exploiting children. The charges carry a maximum penalty of 85 years in prison and an $85,000 fine.

Investigators say the 43-year-old mother of five drove a Rolls-Royce and received food stamps while earning $500,000 a year from an empire that controlled 80 percent of the U.S. child pornography market.

Gadbois said it became apparent the jury was on the verge of a deadlock Monday when juror Sanford A. Ross sent him a note saying his mind was set.

"There is no chance of a unanimous decision on this jury," Ross wrote in his note, released by the court following the mistrial. "Nothing will change my mind to convict the defendant Wilson."

He added, "Please don't waste any more time. I shall not vote for anything but acquittal on all 15 counts."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Joyce Karlin said Ross "apparently made up his mind before he joined the deliberations." She charged he "did not hear the tapes, would not review the evidence and was consistently late to court, and he referred to witnesses who never testified."

"He said he didn't believe law enforcement officers. He made up his mind he wasn't going to vote guilty, no matter what," Ms. Karlin added.

John De Lorean's trial to start Nov. 1

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The much-delayed trial of John De Lorean has a new starting date of Nov. 1, and defense attorneys have given up trying to move the cocaine-trafficking case out of the city.

Attorney Howard Weitzman said Tuesday that a survey he commissioned showed that De Lorean is equally well-known throughout California and moving the trial would not alter his chances of finding fair jurors.

The survey, taken in August, showed that 92 percent of the state's residents are familiar with the charges against De Lorean. Of those questioned, about 70 percent said they thought De Lorean was guilty, the attorney said.

He noted that 51 percent of some 400 people surveyed said they thought most persons charged with crimes are usually guilty.

"Whatever trial Mr. De Lorean has, wherever he has it, the hoopla is going to be the same," Weitzman told U.S. District Judge Robert Takasugi as he withdrew his motion for a change of venue.

The judge, hearing pretrial motions on the day originally set as the trial kickoff, chose the Nov. 1 date after hearing defense requests for a major pretrial proceeding which could turn into a "mini-trial."

Weitzman and his co-counsel, Donald Re, asked for a chance to call witnesses on their claim of "outrageous government conduct" leading to De Lorean's arrest.

"We would like this hearing because we feel that at the conclusion, there won't be a trial," Weitzman told the judge.

De Lorean, 58, a former General Motors executive, was arrested Oct. 19 and charged with conspiring to distribute $24 million worth of cocaine.

Travelers treated first-rate when staying at Asian hotels

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Once upon a time Westerners would gripe about hotels in Asia — mosquito nets strung up over soiled bedding, brownish water from rusty pipes and little furry things scurrying around the rooms at night.

But today many hoteliers and globe-hopping business executives are convinced that Asia's hotels are now the best in the world, having acquired the latest in conveniences while retaining old-time personal services which some say have faded in the West.

Over the past three years the New York-based magazine Institutional Investor queried more than 100 prominent, much-traveled bankers and found that each year they picked five Asian hotels among the top 10 in the world.

Bangkok's venerable, riverside Oriental has been ranked at the top each year, while the latest survey shows the Okura of Tokyo in second place, Hong Kong's Mandarin in third, the Shangri-La of Singapore in fifth and the Peninsula of Hong Kong in eighth.

The British magazine Executive Travel put Asian hotels in the top eight places in a survey last June of international luxury hotels. The Oriental was again ranked first.

"There is a dedication to service in Asia," said Alain Mahillon, French general manager of the newly opened Bangkok Hilton. "Asians get a sense of fulfillment in serving others that one doesn't find in Europe or the United States."

Lower labor costs are cited as a key factor in the Asian hotel industry.

They enable many top Asian hotels to maintain an employee-to-room ratio of 2-1, whereas Europeans and Americans are pleased if they can sustain a 3-1 ratio.

The 406-room Oriental has a staff of 900. The Bangkok Hilton has 600 employees for 400 rooms and Mahillon notes that in Paris an equivalent-sized hotel could muster 450 people at best. Hong Kong's 340-room Peninsula has nearly 800.

But the basic salary of a waiter at the Bankok Hilton is about $130 a month as compared to $500 to $625 at the chain's Paris hotel.

More staff can mean better, more individual service.

At the Peninsula, says the Institutional Investor, guests return to their rooms to find fresh sheets even after a nap and a disposable raincoat if the sky gets cloudy. At the Okura, a computer records guest preferences for such things as type of room, food and newspapers. Those staying at the Mandarin but traveling on to China get a special "China Kit" of basic supplies not available there.

The century-old Oriental Hotel pampers its guests with flowers, baskets of fruit, personalized stationery, in-house movies and a tropical garden overlooking the Chao Phaya River.

Hoteliers also say that lower labor, food and other costs in many Asian countries also allow hotels to operate more restaurants, recreational facilities and other outlets than in the developed world.

A boom in tourism and high economic growth rates in many Asian countries over the past decade have also spurred the hotel industry. Local and international enterprises are flourishing in Asia.

Big names gather to ogle covers

Diana Rigg

LONDON (AP) — It was the name-droppers' party of the year.

Elton John wore diamonds and actress Diana Rigg was in slacks.

Patrick Steptoe, who pioneered test-tube baby techniques, discussed the next generation with author Joseph Conrad's grandson, Philip.

And Lord Lloyd George, grandson of the former prime minister, traded political gossip with Lord Avon, son of former Prime Minister Anthony Eden.

More than 400 of Britain's best-known names gathered last week at Royal Festival Hall for the opening of an exhibition featuring 240 British personalities who have appeared on the cover of Time magazine from 1923 to 1983.

"What a buzz!," said Ringo Starr, who was pursued by photographers and autograph-hunters.

"It's wall-to-wall persons," said television show host David Frost, as he sipped a drink in front of six different covers of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Lady Mountbatten agreed. She's the daughter of the late Lord Louis Mountbatten, the World War II hero and cousin of Queen Elizabeth II who was killed by an Irish Republican Army bomb in August 1979.

After surveying the crowd and the covers, she said: "It's a terribly good cross-section of politicians, artists, journalists, the establishment and the breakaways — or whatever they're called."

Mrs. Thatcher reportedly wanted to attend but she was in the United States so she sent her journalist daughter, Carol. Queen Elizabeth, who holds the record among the British with nine Time covers, sent her cousin, Princess Alexandra, to the exhibition, which Time is sponsoring.

As Elton John posed under a somewhat psychedelic orange and yellow 1975 cover featuring him, he said: "I think it's dreadful.

O'Neill: Immigration bill ploy by GOP to woo Hispanics

WASHINGTON (AP) — A tug of war between President Reagan and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. has begun over immigration legislation that Reagan favors but O'Neill insists could be vetoed simply as part of the president's drive for Hispanic votes.

O'Neill, D-Mass., declared Tuesday that pending immigration legislation, opposed by Hispanic groups, "won't go to the (House) floor this year."

That came after O'Neill said Hispanic legislators had told him they indirectly had been given "a promise of veto" from the White House, despite previous indications of Reagan administration support for such a measure.

O'Neill responded bluntly when asked if he thought the president would veto the measure: "Do I think the president is political enough to veto the bill to get more votes for his party? Yes."

That brought a response from White House spokesman Larry Speakes, who said Reagan first proposed an immigration bill more than two years ago.

"He (Reagan) supported it then. He supports it today," Speakes said in a written statement. "This is not a political issue. It is not a partisan issue. It is an issue that concerns all Americans — and it is in the best interests of all Americans to have the nation regain control of its borders."

Speakes added that Reagan hoped the speaker would reconsider.

Speakes had acknowledged earlier, however, that the administration opposed the pending House version of the legislation, chiefly because it was more costly than a version the Senate passed in May.

But politics is clearly at the center of the current dispute.

At issue is a provision of the legislation that would levy fines and criminal penalties on employers who hire illegal aliens.

Various Hispanic groups and Hispanic members of Congress have bitterly opposed the bill. They claim it could become an excuse for job discrimination by employers who would refrain from hiring Hispanics saying they were trying to avoid the proposed sanctions.

Democrats and Republicans, meanwhile, are actively courting Hispanic voters in anticipation of next year's elections. Reagan himself has addressed several Hispanic groups.

House approves bill requiring study of threats to park system

WASHINGTON (AP) — With a slap at Interior Secretary James G. Watt, the House has approved legislation ordering him to formally consider the impact of federal activities that might threaten the national park system.

The House passed 321-82 and sent to the Senate on Tuesday a bill giving Watt a voice in activities on federal lands adjacent to the parks. The bill would require him to make findings on possible damage to park resources.

Rep. John Seiberling, D-Ohio, the bill's sponsor and a constant Watt adversary, said the measure does not increase the secretary's authority. He said it provides a formal requirement that Watt concern himself with such activities, a requirement not now included in federal law.

"I think after 2½ years of James Watt, the country has a pretty good idea of what is uppermost in his mind, and it is not protecting the natural values found in the national parks," Seiberling charged. "So, it does seem to me that it is not unreasonable to make him focus on that by statute and say what he has concluded."

The bill was opposed by the Reagan administration, which said the measure was "unnecessary, duplicates existing laws and administrative programs, creates more red tape and imposes inflexible requirements on resource management efforts."

The bill requires federal agencies to notify the interior secretary of their activities on federal lands adjacent to parks that might affect the parks. It gives him the right to make recommendations on proposed actions, such as mining and logging. The recommendations would not be binding.

The legislation also forbids Watt from approving activities within the parks if they have a "significant adverse effect" on park values. It allows such activities on adjacent land under his control only with a public finding that the activities are more important than the park values.

Dead film tycoon may be put on trial as father, alleged killer's lawyer says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Slain film tycoon Henry Harrison Kyle, whose son Rick is charged with his murder, "may be put on trial" as a father, an attorney says of his defense strategy.

Kyle, 60, was shot to death July 22 at the Bel-Air mansion he and his sons were renovating. Henry Harrison "Rick" Kyle Jr., 20, was wounded in the elbow in an exchange of gunfire.

Police and prosecutors contend the motive for murder was a fear that Kyle would write the defendant out of his $60 million will, but Dallas attorney Michael Gibson said the defense will explore other possible motives. Kyle Jr. told the grand jury that his father beat him.

Gibson said Tuesday his defense will include "a full exploration of Henry Kyle (Sr.) and his lifestyle...

"Henry Kyle may be on trial at some time in the proceeding," he said.

However, Gibson would not comment directly on Kyle Jr.'s testimony about being beaten by his father.

The defendant delayed entering a plea Tuesday, the second delay in a month. Kyle Jr., free on $100,000 bail, is attending college in Texas and did not appear in Superior Court Tuesday.

Judge Ronald George ordered Kyle to return Nov. 10 to enter his plea and set a tentative preliminary hearing date of Dec. 12.

Bank doesn't give a nickel for steelworkers' penny protest

HOMESTEAD, Pa. (AP) — Angry steelworkers "shut Mellon Bank down pretty good" with a penny-throwing protest over the bank's overseas investments, an organizer said.

Two men were arrested during Tuesday's protest at a Mellon branch office. About 120 people asked bank tellers to exchange $5 bills for pennies and made the tellers count the coins. The protesters then "threw the pennies on the floor to slow down business," said organizer Ron Weisen, president of United Steelworkers Local 1397.

The steelworkers say Mellon has invested 26 percent of its funds abroad and has not sufficiently supported businesses in the Monongahela valley, where steel mills and other plants have closed.

Spent nuclear fuel cell moved

WEST VALLEY, N.Y. (AP) — One of 750 spent but highly radioactive nuclear fuel cells stored in southwestern New York since 1972 is being trucked to Wisconsin, in the start of a court-ordered project to clear out its original storage site.

A 25-ton cask containing the cell was placed Tuesday on an 18-wheel truck which began the trip over Interstate 90 to Point Beach, Wis., the site of a Wisconsin Electric Power Co. storage facility.

A federal judge earlier this year ordered the cells removed from the West Valley Demonstration Project so that West Valley Nuclear Services could use the storage area to convert more than 560,000 gallons of radioactive liquid waste into glass-like logs.

Man bribes boss to play horses

NEW YORK (AP) — A city supervisor has been charged with grand larceny in the "pathetic" case of a subordinate who paid the boss to let him leave work and play the horses, authorities say.

Victor Guidotti, 32, was charged Tuesday with taking thousands of dollars — in amounts of $20 to $50 at a time — from Joel Shapiro, a 37-year-old worker in the Employees Retirement System office, said investigation commissioner Patrick McGinley. The total was not known.

Shapiro, described by McGinley as a "victim" addicted to gambling in a "pathetic case," has not been charged. City officials said Shapiro spent as much time at racetracks as he did at work.

State may get first black senator

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The Rev. I. DeQuincy Newman says support from Gov. Dick Riley and other top Democrats will make him the state's "first black state senator of the party of Jefferson Davis."

Virtually the entire state Democratic establishment came out Tuesday for Newman, who is seeking to become South Carolina's first black state senator since the Reconstruction era, after the Civil War.

Newman, long active in civil rights, faces Republican John Camp in an Oct. 25 election for the unexpired Richland County seat of Alex Sanders, who received a judgeship.

Scouts can't discriminate against homosexuals, appeals court rules

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Boy Scouts of America cannot discriminate against homosexuals, an appeals court said in reinstating a $330,000 lawsuit filed by a former Scout leader who says he was expelled because of his sexual preference.

The 2nd District Court of Appeal, overturning a 1981 ruling by Los Angeles Superior Court, said it found that using homosexuality as the basis of expulsion was "substantively arbitrary" and violated the man's right to a fair trial.

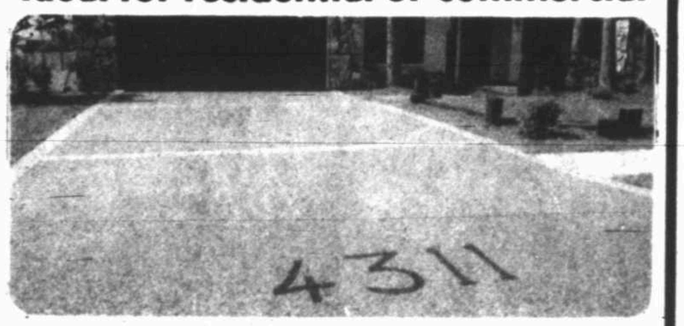

"It's going to have to go back for a trial," appeals court Deputy Clerk Robert Wilson said Tuesday.

The suit was filed by Timothy Curran, 21, an Eagle Scout who had become a Scouter — or assistant Scout leader — in 1979 for Troop 37 in Berkeley near San Francisco.

Curran sued the Mount Diablo Council of the Boy Scouts after his Scouter status was revoked following a June 1981 newspaper article in which he admitted being homosexual. He alleged that the Council told him he was being expelled because his homosexuality was not a good moral example for younger Scouts.

French historian discovers peasants prayed to greyhound

NEW YORK (AP) — Guinefort, healer of children, became a martyr and a saint by mistake.

A model of humility, he slept on the floor, ate scraps and obeyed orders with a cheerful wag of his tail.

He was murdered by his master, who mistakenly thought Guinefort had killed his child. The saintly cult was the error of French peasants, who saw nothing unorthodox in praying to a greyhound.

To an inquisitor, however, it was heresy, and his 13th-century report is the starting point for "The Holy Greyhound" by French historian Jean-Claude Schmitt, who discovered that the cult survived into the twentieth century.

Schmitt's study was published this spring in English by Cambridge University Press.

Europe was well past the Dark Ages when the cult of St. Guinefort arose, and the learned citizens of the 13th century included St. Francis of Assisi, Thomas Aquinas, Dante and Marco Polo.

The century saw the founding of the Dominican order — the "Domini Canes" or "hounds of God" — who became the shock troops of the Inquisition. And it was one of Dominic's order, Stephen of Bourbon, who encountered the cult of Guinefort in Dombes, about 25 miles north of Lyon.

The dog, the peasants told Stephen, belonged to the Lord of Villars. One day, the lord and his lady had gone out, leaving their infant in the care of the dog. A huge serpent entered the house and slithered toward the cradle, but was killed by the faithful Guinefort.

The lord, returning to find the cradle overturned and the dog covered in blood, drew his sword and killed the dog. Stricken with regret when the child was found safe, the lord buried the dog with honor. Yet the manor was destroyed and the estates laid waste, the peasants said, by divine will.

Stephen learned that peasant women would bring sick children to the woods surrounding Guinefort's grave. They would make offerings of precious salt; they would hang children's clothing in the bushes; they would pass naked babies nine times between the trunks of two trees; they would plunge sick children nine times into the fast-flowing waters of the nearby river.

Stephen reports that he had the dog disinterred and the sacred woods cut down and burned. But when Stephen's report was rediscovered in the 19th century, folklorists found that peasants remembered the dog, and were still visiting the regrown woods to pray for sick children. Later reports said the cult persisted until 1940.

What fascinates Schmitt about the tale is the voice of the peasantry. In a society divided among those who prayed, those who fought and those who toiled, the toilers were mute before history unless they caught the attention of the literate. In many cases, that meant being hauled before an inquisition.

"Efficiency and precision in the instruments of repression go together, which, as I would be the first to admit, presents a golden opportunity for the historian," Schmitt writes.

Italian historian Carlo Ginzburg likewise dipped into the careful records of the Roman Inquisition to write of Domenico Scandella, who was burned at the stake in the 16th century. In "The Cheese and the Worms," Ginzburg explored how a common man's acquaintance with the first printed books spawned his odd revision of Genesis: "All was chaos, that is earth, air, water and fire were mixed together, and out of that bulk a mass formed — just as cheese is made out of milk — and worms appeared in it, and these were the angels."

An inquisition in southern France in the early 14th century was the basis for Emmanuel Le Roy Ladurie's "Montaillou, The Promised Land of Error," an extensive survey of peasant life in one village late in the Middle Ages.

In the story of Guinefort, Schmitt detects a long-running class struggle.

"Stephen of Bourbon was a representative of a church that was as powerful on the spiritual as on the temporal plane, and yet he failed," Schmitt writes. "He thought that he had suppressed the pilgrimage to St. Guinefort's wood, but this was not the case...

"The cult was quite impervious to such attacks, and in fact lasted as long as the folk culture itself...

"The clerical and folk culture thus disappeared together...God had just died."

Heimo van Elsenbergen, chief forester of Sieburg Forest near Bonn, West Germany, points to the tops of sick fir trees which are ailing from acid rain.

Acid rain, pollution killing German forests

BONN, West Germany (AP) — From the Black Forest in the south to the tall pines outside Hamburg and the spruces along the Rhine, many of West Germany's trees are dropping their needles and leaves for good this autumn.

An estimated one-fourth of West Germany's forests are seriously ill, the probable victims of decades of air pollution and acid rain, the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry says. It is a problem similar to one afflicting some forests in the northeastern United States and Canada.

Most of the damage in West Germany has appeared in the last 12 to 18 months, shocking the public with its suddenness.

But experts say the trees may have been sick for a long time, like cancer victims who go for years without showing any symptoms of the tumors that subsequently kill them.

"One speaks of a few weeks, practically a few days, in which this all happened," said Heimo van Elsbergen, a forester at Siegburg, near Bonn, where 31 percent of the pine trees suddenly started turning brown and shedding needles last spring.

"Before, it was all full and green here...Now for some of these trees there isn't any hope left."

The dramatic appearance of much damage this year has spurred the government to launch a "Save the Forest" program, encouraging people and industry to cut back air pollution.

Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann has warned against national hysteria over the problem.

Nevertheless, many West Germans are afraid they are losing one of their greatest natural resources. The 18 million acres of forest cover 30 percent of the country and have been a part of national life far longer than the century-old song "Oh, Tannenbaum" (Oh, Fir Tree) has been sung.

"What is fact and what is fiction? It is certain that soon we will no longer have fir trees," Bild der Wissenschaft, a Stuttgart-based scientific magazine, said in an article last December.

Every year, West Germany's trees produce 3.5 billion marks ($1.3 billion) worth of lumber, Erwin Reuss, spokesman for the the Forests Ministry, said.

About 40 percent of all West Germans go to the woods for their annual vacations — not to mention foreign tourists, who flock especially to the Black Forest.

The Black Forest is perhaps the hardest-hit area.

"One can say that in the higher areas of the Black Forest, 100 percent of the spruces and pines are sick," said Rudi Kynasp, a spokesman for the Agriculture Ministry of the state of Baden-Wuerttemberg.

After World War II, West Germans replaced about 1.73 million acres of forest that had been torn up by the fighting.

But they also launched the "Economic Miracle," a boom in production and consumption that the government now fears has brought the forests an environmental curse.

Between 1950 and 1981, West Germans almost tripled their energy consumption, the Bonn Economics Ministry says. This caused a doubling of emissions of sulfur dioxide from new power plants. An estimated 3.5 million tons of sulfur dioxide are now dumped into the air each year here.

Although many industrialists disagree, the Bonn government decided this year to operate on the assumptions of scientists who say the sulfur dioxide, along with nitric oxide from automobiles, are major causes of the forest damage.

The trees absorb the sulfur through their leaves, or from "acid rain" that has fallen through the polluted air to the ground, van Elsbergen said.

This spring and summer, laws went into effect forcing power plants here to either burn low-sulfur fuel or build "scrubbers" in smokestacks to remove the sulfur.

The law requires that the 1,500 older power plants build "scrubbers" within the next five years, but allows some "exceptional cases" to wait until 1993.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An athlete finally gets a chance to shine. Projects developed with a new association could make big money. Consult tax experts. Be assertive and romance will become more satisfying.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Cancel an appointment if you are unprepared. A new approach may get you an okay for an old idea. Show your loyalty and refuse to make assumptions about things you know nothing about.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You have the talent to win a contest. Do not let self-doubt defeat you. An introverted friend may be helping you more than you know. Keep your temper under control.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be sure to get a financial guarantee in writing. Otherwise, promises may not be kept. A false assumption could lead you to spend unnecessary money. Consult an expert.

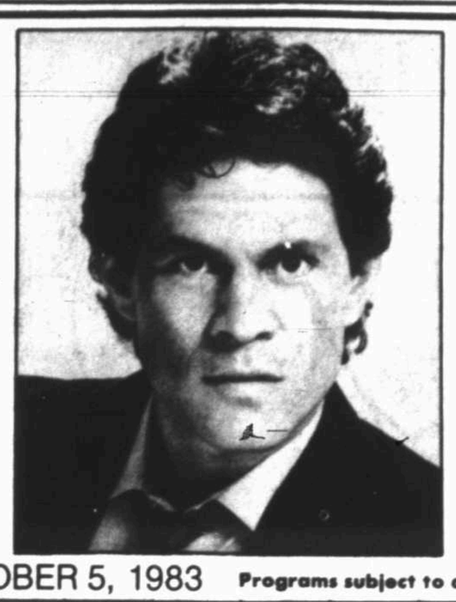

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be a good listener. A giant windfall is possible if a company buys your idea. Celebrate any good news with loved one. A phone call saves you a bundle.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Give yourself a mid-day boost by lunching with a cheerful pal. Someone who made a promise should not be let off the hook. Keep an open mind about any changes taking place.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be careful not to confide in anyone who might work against you later. A unhappy employment situation will soon turn around. Give a prospective romantic partner a second chance.

'Castle' debuts on PBS

NEW YORK (AP) — "Castle," on public TV Wednesday night, is an estimable small-screen adaptation of David Macaulay's wonderful picture book.

The hour-long show, combining animated and filmed sequences, is, indeed, visually enthralling, and Macaulay — an illustrator by profession — proves a gracious and informative host.

His running dialogue with British actress Susan Bullen — "Hello, David." "Hello, Susan." — is at times annoying, but that shouldn't detract from an otherwise appealing production.

Macaulay, who has used his distinctive, cross-hatch illustrative style in seven books, including "Cathedral," "City," "Pyramid" and "Underground," to demonstrate in detail how various projects were planned and built, created the fictional, 13th-century Aberwyvern in Wales for the book "Castle" and the subsequent TV production.

Filmed segments were shot in and near several standing castles, including Caenarvon and Conway.

Macaulay, though born in England, came to this country as a child. He studied at the Rhode Island School of Design, and later was chairman of the school's illustration department.

"Cathedral: The Story of Its Construction" was his first book, published in 1973. "Castle," winner of the Caldecott Honor Medal, followed four years later.

Though drawn from the author's imagination, the Aberwyvern story is historically accurate, and Macaulay's tale is designed to illuminate the life and culture of the time. How was the castle built, he says, and why?

Macaulay and his companion, Miss Bullen, begin with a brief description of life in medieval England. "For everyone, rich and poor," the actress says, "survival was the all-consuming effort."

King Edward I wants to bring Wales into the English empire. He installs Kevin le Strange as lord of Aberwyvern, and commissions him to build a castle there. Lord Kevin hires an architect, Master James of Babbington, to oversee the project.

"It is important to remember," Macaulay says, "that the medieval castle is really a military machine." Master James' primary objective is to construct a fortress impenetrable by hostile forces, though Lord Kevin advises his architect that Aberwyvern — to be situated on a promontory subject to nature's extremes — must be livable, too.

Often, Macaulay says, such structures took a generation to build, for economic as well as physical reasons. Labor and materials often had to be transported long distances before work could even begin.

The bidding:

1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	2 ♡
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♡.

We would like a 1 percent override on all the money that is blown each year by hasty play to the first trick. Given this edge, we would never have to work another day in our lives.

North did not have quite enough to jump to three spades over his partner's one spade opening bid. So he temporized with two clubs and then raised spades at his next turn. South had more than enough to proceed to game.

South decided to get the hand over quickly — much to the defenders' delight. He won the ace of hearts, drew trumps in two rounds and then took the club finesse. East won the king, got to his partner by leading a low heart to the queen, and West had no difficulty in finding the diamond shift. Two tricks to the defense in that suit spelled down one.

The winning line is simple — it merely requires that declarer take a moment to study the hand before playing to the first trick. Obviously, East is a strong candidate to hold both the ace and queen of diamonds, because of his vulnerable two-level overcall. However, the contract is safe as long as West can be kept off lead.

If West has the king of clubs, that card can be neutralized by successive club finesses. His only other possible entry is the queen of hearts, and he may well have that card in view of East's play of the king to the first trick. To assure his contract, declarer simply must allow East to hold the first trick!

Declarer can win any return, draw trumps and take the club finesse. Now East has to cash the ace of diamonds to hold declarer to his contract; otherwise declarer will make an over trick by sluffing two diamonds on dummy's long clubs.

Words of wisdom

Americans really shouldn't have been all that surprised when Soviet fighter planes shot down a Korean Air Lines jet in Soviet airspace and, in so doing, sent 269 innocent people to their deaths. After all, we've been taught through the years that there really is a difference in the value American leaders and Soviet leaders attach to human life.

It's hard to accept that fact because typically we visualize the nations of the world in our perspective rather from theirs. That can be dangerous, as we've now witnessed. That emphasizes the importance of dealing with the Soviets with your eyes wide open.

Andrei Sakharov, the Soviet physicist, Nobel Prize winner and dissident currently sentenced to internal exile, took another bold step in an open letter this summer to Foreign Affairs magazine. In that letter Sakharov warned of Soviet expansionism which "has today assumed proportions dangerously harmful to international equilibrium."

Sakharov said the avoidance of nuclear war will require U.S. parity in all types of weapons — conventional and nuclear from both the tactical and strategic levels.

On nuclear arms limitation, Sakharov says: "For these talks to be successful the West should have something that it can give up!"

And on the goal of a world free of nuclear weapons, the dissident is particularly insightful, saying: "If the probability of such an outcome could be reached at the cost of 10 or 15 years of the arms race, then perhaps that price must be paid ...."

Those are words of wisdom about dealing with the Soviets from someone who has seen their ruthfulness first hand.

Now, that's tacky!

Laugh, if you can. We did. The free-spending Democrats now claim to be the party of fiscal responsibility.

Well, political rhetoric, like poetry, must be given some degree of license. But the Democrats, in a new radio advertising campaign, are blaming President Reagan and the Republicans for the federal deficit. Now, besides being a wild misrepresentation, that's tacky. And, it's almost as outrageous as Yuri Andropov's blaming the United States for destruction of the Korean airliner.

Even a cursory examination of modern American history tells us that no deficit ever has dampened the Democrats' insatiable appetite for federal spending. In fact, right now, the Democrats are trying to push a completely unnecessary $3.5 billion jobs bill through Congress.

You may ask, as we did, what the Democrats are doing to reduce the deficit. The answer, of course, is predictable. And, it isn't to cut spending. The Democrats want to increase your taxes. No matter that such a course could abort the economic recovery. Or, that it could then bring on even more federal spending for unemployment benefits and other social welfare programs.

We suspect that few, if any, Americans will be taken in by fraudulent Democratic claims to fiscal responsibility.

Another View:

Power bargaining

The Civil Rights Commission, born in 1957, went out of business Friday at midnight. Technically, it has ceased to exist, but in fact the statute allows for a 60-day windup period, and that clock is now running.

We are reasonably sure there will be a last-minute save before the packers arrive and the staff moves on to other jobs. No group of Democrats or Republicans will want to take the blame if it folds.

Congress has not acted on legislation to reauthorize the commission — a procedure that had become almost automatic every five years — because of a dispute over the president's attempt to replace three commission members with nominees of his own.

Initially, some members of Congress questioned the quality of the nominees, raising objections because all three were white males who opposed affirmative action and busing.

Civil rights lobbyists focused on another issue: Does the president have the right to replace commissioners at all, or didn't Congress intend to preserve the commission's independence by authorizing indefinite appointments?

Since Congress returned after Labor Day, however, both arguments seem to have faded into the background, and on the Sept. 30 deadline the White House and the Senate were embroiled in negotiations to work out a solution that would allocate Washington's favorite commodity, power.

It now appears that most, and perhaps all, the present commissioners will keep their seats, and the size of the commission will be expanded to allow the president some new nominations.

Civil-rights groups will agree to change one commissioner. Sens. Dole, Specter and Biden suggest the administration be allowed two new seats, but the White House is holding out for three.

Of the six commissioners now serving, President Reagan has appointed two, President Carter three and President Ford one. In holding out for three additional seats, the administration wants a guaranteed five-member majority. If the commission were a regulatory body with rule-making power, this would make sense.

Its function, however, is to investigate, advise and issue reports. It now seems inevitable that two distinct viewpoints will be represented in most commission reports in the future, and it will be the substance and persuasiveness of those viewpoints, not the votes of individual commissioners, that will matter.

It is not necessary to hold out for a slim majority to establish some kind of control. The Senate moderates have proposed a workable compromise, and the White House should take it.

ART BUCHWALD

Say 'I do' to marital contract!

The prenuptial contract is getting more and more prevalent, as the divorce rate rises in the country. Since getting married in many cases is not one of those things you do forever, lawyers are advising their clients to make out a contract, specifying who gets what, when love flies out the window and recrimination knocks down the door.

Art Buchwald

I was the best man at a prenuptial legal contract ceremony the other day. The groom to be, Horace Pipeline, was attended by the famed divorce lawyer Roy Bone, and the bride-to-be, the lovely Grace Willowy, was being given away by Stephanie Tuff of the firm Rock, Sock & Needham.

The bride and groom sat in the love seat in Mr. Bone's palatial office, which, for the occasion, had been decorated with magnolias and white roses.

Mr. Bone, reading from a yellow legal pad, said, "Dearly beloved, we are gathered here today to bring this man and this woman together in a happy prenuptial contract, spelling out the property claims of both parties in case, for reasons we shall not go into here, this marriage is broken asunder. Do you, Horace Pipeline, agree that, in case you do not choose to continue in wedlock, you will bestow on your lovely bride a lump sum equal to 5 percent of your present assets, excluding your boat, your penthouse, and your house in Southampton?"

"Wait a minute," said Miss Tuff. "Who said anything about a lump sum, and who said anything about excluding Mr. Pipeline's boat, penthouse and home in Southampton? My client, under law, is entitled to 50 percent of all of her husband's property. But we don't want to be greedy about this. We'll settle for $10,000 a month until she gets married again."

"Alimony is out of the question," Mr. Bone said. "I cannot permit my client to enter the sacred institution of matrimony unless he can get out of it by paying off a lump sum at the dissolution of the marriage. How can we be sure when and if Miss Willowy will get married again?"

"How do you feel about it, Grace?" Miss Tuff asked.

"I love Horace very much and if he wants to provide me with a lump sum, I don't have any objection. But I want to know what numbers we're talking about before I say 'I do.'"

Mr. Bone smiled, "You're a very reasonable young lady. Would $500,000 satisfy you?"

Miss Tuff said, "No, it wouldn't, Roy, and you know before we came here we researched Horace's assets down to the last nickel. Now let's be serious or call off this prenuptial legal contract ceremony right now."

Mr. Bone scowled, "As Horace's lawyer I can't go over $500,000, but if he wants to be more generous I'll leave it to him. Horace, what do you think?"

"Grace is the only woman I've ever loved," Horace said. "I can't imagine anything but death parting us. But just in case something did happen, I'm willing to give her a cool million — the same as I gave my second wife."

Miss Tuff said, "Horace's second wife was much older than Grace, and the million he settled on her was before inflation set in. We want one million five and the house in Southampton."

"Out of the question," Mr. Bone said angrily. "These people hope to live happily ever after. My client would not have a day of happiness if he knew it would cost him a million five plus the house in Southampton to get out of the marriage."

Miss Tuff said, "How do you think my client would feel if she knew she could be tossed out in the street for a lousy million dollars?"

Grace became upset. "This talk is so sordid it's destroying our love for each other. I'll take a million, two hundred thousand, and the penthouse in New York. But that's the bottom line."

Horace said, "Don't be angry, darling. You're asking for more than I planned to give you, but I want you to be happy. Give it to her, Roy, providing we have it in writing she doesn't go to court and try to sock it to me for anything more."

"All right, Horace, it's your money. I'll have this typed up while we open a bottle of champagne and drink a toast to the happy couple. Please excuse my tears. Prenuptial marriage contract ceremonies always make me cry."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Price of peace just too high

WASHINGTON — It's easy to get billions of dollars from Congress to wage war or prepare for it. But it is almost impossible to squeeze a few pennies out for peace.

Jack Anderson

For 28 years in the House and Senate, Democratic Sen. Jennings Randolph, a gentle soul from Elkins, W. Va., has been trying to establish a Peace Academy. It would train young Americans to promote peace, just as the three military academies prepare young Americans to fight when war breaks out.

It's an idea whose time has come — from sheer necessity. War has become unthinkable in the nuclear age, but it may become inevitable — unless we have the kind of skilled negotiators who can protect national interests without resort to military force.

As envisioned by Randolph and co-sponsor Sen. Spark Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, one-fourth of the Peace Academy's budget would go for grants to universities and other institutions for historical research on successful and unsuccessful peace negotiations of the past. This information would be gathered in a central clearinghouse.

There is no such facility available now. For example, anyone examining President Carter's successful negotiations of the Camp David accords between Israel and Egypt must dig through the National Archives and the personal memoirs of the people involved. The Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, which might be expected to keep such background information, has none.

The Peace Academy's budget would be modest indeed by government standards: $7.5 million for the academy's site, a $6 million operating budget for fiscal 1984 and a $10 million budget for 1985. The Pentagon spends more than this on a tank or airplane that often doesn't even work.

Critics of the Peace Academy proposal offered my associate Kathy McDonald some strangely contradictory arguments. They complain that establishment of such an academy would be viewed by the Soviet Union and other nations as a sign of pacifist weakness.

They also argue that foreign governments would cynically regard the academy as nothing more than a front for the CIA. Yet they also insist that the CIA should be involved in the academy by law — or at least be permitted to be involved.

Meanwhile, the idea has acquired some dedicated supporters. They argue that a Peace Academy would show a dubious world that the United States is serious about resolving international conflicts without resort to military might.

"Peacemaking is an instrument of power," former Assistant Secretary of State Harold Saunders told Congress, "because ... it puts the United States on the side of the highest aspirations of mankind — and not just the pursuit of its own self-interest."

Caught between liberal supporters of the Peace Academy bill and its conservative opponents is Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, chairman of the committee that will handle the bill. His conservative credentials are beyond cavil. But he was persuaded, in part, to support the bill by Mike Pillsbury, a former disarmament agency chief who is now a Senate Republican aide.

The White House, citing "severe budgetary constraints," has refused to support the Randolph-Matsunaga legislation. Yet it has 53 co-sponsors in the Senate and more than 100 in the House.

BOONDOGGLE OF THE WEEK — Never underestimate the power of a comic strip. A defense contractor cited "Ripley's Believe It or Not" to justify a $412,000 charge in a Pentagon food contract. Ripley had noted the loss a company could expect from employee theft. So the defense contractor negotiated $412,000 for theft loss, even though its actual loss was only $58,000. The difference was a whopping overestimate of $354,000.

The boondoggle didn't stop there. Overruns on the $28 million contract to assemble combat-ration packages totaled more than $3.5 million. To make matters worse, the Pentagon could have bought the same amount of battle rations from another company for $10 million less. The overcharging contractor was Right Away Foods Corp. of Texas. Another Texan, Rep. Jack Brooks, has asked Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger for an explanation.

CIA SNAILS — The CIA has been criticized for being trigger-happy in some of its covert operations. But when it comes to Freedom of Information Act requests, the spy agency is s-l-o-w and c-a-r-e-f-u-l.

Last year, the CIA logged in 2,278 FOIA requests. It sent back 1,268 for further information. That left 1,010 that were handled, by 75.52 employees at a cost of $2.2 million.

Disregarding the 0.52 of an employee, this means that each employee handled an average of just over 13 requests in 1982, or roughly one a month. A CIA spokesman explained that the agency's files are deliberately decentralized, and that a single request could require a search of more than 100 separate records systems and hundreds of individual files.

The agency complains that honoring the FOIA requests means a "diversion of expertise from our primary mission."

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Central America still confusing

WASHINGTON — Americans are "woefully uninformed" about the specifics in Central America, but, nevertheless, most believe that a pro-Communist government in El Salvador would be a threat to U.S. security.

William Giandoni

Everett Carl Ladd, senior editor of the magazine Public Opinion, says that polls over the last four decades show that the American public "is anything but a band of crusaders."

"It is cautious and restrained," Ladd wrote in the latest issue of the bimonthly publication.

Yet "the idea that the United States has 'big power' interests and responsibilities that need to be served — and that this requires a major ongoing military commitment — has been strongly supported since World War II and is so today," Ladd said.

In analyzing the results of several opinion polls on Central America this year, and earlier polls going back before the entry of the United States into World War II, Ladd noted both "an aversion to war ... and the judgment that failure to employ American military might would produce costs even greater than its use would entail."

But what to do in Central America? elicits no unequivocal response.

Ladd said the body of survey data on U.S. policy in Central America shows little support for either the "Charge!" or "Forget it!" alternatives in the troubled region.

"There is American opinion on El Salvador and other aspects of Central American policy," Ladd said nevertheless. "It is coherent, and it is informed by a set of enduring commitments — although it is woefully uninformed at the level of specific policy detail.

"Americans approach the question of U.S. involvement in El Salvador in much the same way, in all basic regards, as they have approached other issues in foreign affairs over the last four decades."

Ladd pointed out that since World War II, never has a majority of the populace favored actual commitment of troops.

In 1953, only 9 percent of those polled by Gallup approved sending U.S. troops to assist the French in their struggle with Communist insurgents in Indochina.

During the U.S.-supported Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba in 1961, and again during the Soviet missile crisis in Cuba in 1962, "two-thirds of the public opposed sending American armed forces into Cuba."

After Iran's seizure of the U.S. Embassy and its personnel in Tehran in November 1979, "the public remained opposed to any direct military reprisals."

In the case of El Salvador in 1982 and 1983, "large majorities have indicated their opposition to sending (U.S.) troops to fight," Ladd said.

However, Ladd, who is also professor of political science at the University of Connecticut, noted "contradictory impulses, along with a striking lack of specific information on the situation in Central America, make it stand to reason that the public gives sharply contrasting signals when asked to assess specific proposals for U.S. actions."

He cited national polls taken by ABC News and the Washington Post this spring and summer that "found large majorities fearful that the United States would eventually send troops to El Salvador.... They unambiguously oppose this development."

But the polls showed that most Americans also believe "that Cuba and Nicaragua are interfering in El Salvador much more than the United States ... and that the establishment of a pro-Communist government in El Salvador would be a threat to U.S. security."

In May the ABC News-Washington Post poll indicated that 70 percent disapproved when asked their opinion on "the Reagan administration (proposal) to send an increased amount of military equipment and weapons to the government of El Salvador." Only 19 percent approved, and 11 percent had no opinion.

However, Ladd pointed out that "a CBS News-New York Times poll at about the same time found 49 percent of the public in favor of tripling U.S. military aid if necessary to prevent a communist overthrow of the government of El Salvador." Opposed were 33 percent, and 18 percent had no opinion.

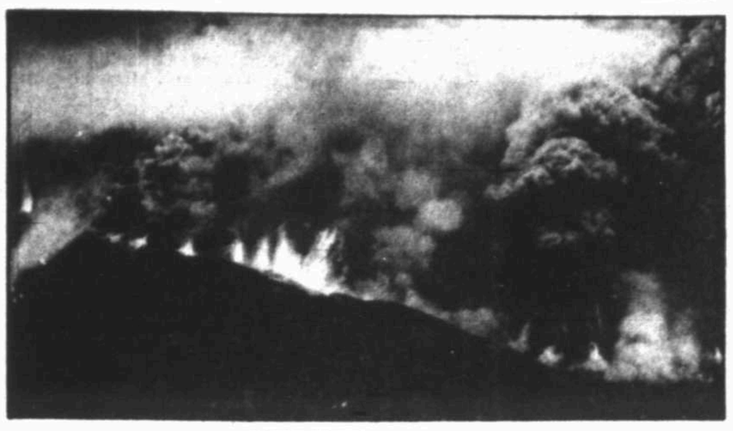

That shows "even modest differences in question working trigger highly dissimilar responses," Ladd said.

Molten lava, smoke and ash jet into the skies of Miyakejima, an island 120 miles north of Tokyo, Monday afternoon following an unexpected volcanic eruption. The eruption set forests aflame and forced evacuation of some residents.

Rain cools moving lava as residents flee island

MIYAKEJIMA, Japan (AP) — Steady rain during the night cooled a still-moving block of lava as an exodus continued today from this Pacific island hit by destructive volcanic eruptions.

Scores of people left homeless by the eruptions or scared that the Mt. Oyama will erupt again left Miyakejima for a nine-hour ferry ride for Tokyo.

They left behind more than 500 people crammed into schools and other emergency relief centers and living on supplies rushed in from Tokyo, 120 miles to the north.

Tokyo Governor Shunichi Suzuki made an inspection tour of Ako, a now abandoned community of 1,300, and told refugees at an elementary school that the metropolitan government would build 150 two-room housing units for them by the end of this month.

Suzuki also presented Miyakejima Vice Mayor Yoshinobu Hasegawa with the equivalent of $42,000 in relief funds.

Germany will bear 'fair share' of defense costs

WASHINGTON (AP) — West German President Karl Carstens told a joint session of the House and Senate today that his nation will "contribute its fair share to the common defense" of the West.

The president, on a tour of the United States to mark the 300th anniversary of German emigration to this country, also said that the approximately 250,000 U.S. soldiers stationed in Germany "are welcome in our country as our friends and as allies."

"We know that we owe to their presence our security, our freedom and peace, and in saying this, I speak for the great majority of our people," he said, in remarks prepared for delivery before the Congress.

Saluting the German-American ties, Carstens said:

"For us Germans there can only be partnership with the United States in the alliance of free nations or dependence on the Soviet Union. We have made our choice."

The West German president echoed remarks he made in a toast at a state dinner given in his honor at the White House Tuesday evening. Freedom and peace, he said, "would be endangered if the other side were to attain military superiority."

"We Germans shall stand by your side as your allies and partners," he said.

IN A TOAST to Carstens, President Reagan said the United States and West Germany "stand firmly together in the search for peace and freedom," and have "an enduring partnership."

In his speech to Congress and his toast at the White House, Carstens made no direct reference to a key issue in the U.S.-German relationship, the scheduled deployment of Pershing 2 missiles in Europe beginning in December.

But, in words directed as much at opponents of the deployment in his own country as at his U.S. audience, he observed that the policy of maintaining a balance of power between the West and Soviet forces "has come under criticism in our countries," and stated:

"In view of the terrifying effects of nuclear weapons, many of our citizens demand their abolition, and some demand, if need be, their unilateral abolition. Although I can understand such feelings, I do not share the conclusions."

"My experience has taught me that good intentions alone are not enough to preserve peace," he said. "We are dealing with a highly armed superpower which is making great efforts in order to increase its influence in many parts of the world."

As German president, Carstens holds the largely ceremonial post of head of state. Day-to-day operations of the government are the responsibility of the chancellor, Helmut Kohl.

CARSTENS SAID the United States "expects partnership and a reasonable distribution of burdens" in Europe.

"The Federal Republic of Germany has proven in the past that it is prepared to meet these expectations and will continue to contribute its fair share to the common defense," he said.

He pointed out that West Germany maintains 500,000 soldiers, and added:

"Let me say a few words about the American soldiers in Germany. Within an area which in size corresponds approximately to the state of Oregon, there are, in addition to half a million German soldiers, 350,000 soldiers from six NATO countries; 250,000 of these are Americans."

He said it was "unavoidable that such a concentration also creates difficulties for the soldiers and for the population. Life in an environment which is foreign to them is not always easy for American servicemen and their families."

On Tuesday morning, Carstens conferred with Reagan in a brief meeting in the Oval Office.

A senior administration official, speaking on condition that he not be identified by name, said the German leader assured Reagan that the deployment of the Pershing 2 missiles, capable of reaching the Soviet Union 12 minutes after launch, would proceed on schedule despite opposition from the peace movement and political factions in his country.

In addition to the Pershings, the United States would begin deploying 464 cruise missiles in Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Britain, as well as in West Germany, if no agreement is reached with the Soviet Union to limit them.

Filipinos cheer Reagan's decision

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Throngs of cheering people rallied in Manila's financial district today to thank President Reagan for canceling his November trip to the Philippines.

"Bases can stay, Marcos must go," read a 15-foot banner carried through the streets of Makati by a crowd of young people as confetti floated down from high-rise buildings in the modern suburb.

A few hundred demonstrators marched through the streets, but an estimated 20,000 people, clogging intersections, waving from office buildings or cruising the streets in ribbon-bedecked cars, were caught up in the spectacle.

The pro-American sentiment marked a dramatic shift from earlier demonstrations which had accused the United States of bolstering President Ferdinand E. Marcos in his 18-year rule. It was the fifth tickertape rally in the business district since the Aug. 21 assassination of chief opposition leader Benigno Aquino.

The slaying touched off a series of anti-Marcos demonstrations and calls for his resignation.

While a festive atmosphere prevailed in the financial district, more than 200 police, armed with truncheons, riot shields and some pistols, moved into the square in front of the Central Post Office, and Manila Police Superintendent Narciso Cabrera said a planned demonstration there would be dispersed because protesters had not been granted a permit.

The opposition group "Justice for Aquino, Justice for All" called off its protest, saying it would hold another demonstration soon whether a permit was secured or not.

Police said the permit was denied because of "persistent intelligence reports" the demonstration would be infiltrated by criminals and communists.

Marcos announced earlier this week he would allow demonstrations in Makati without permits and said police would not interfere. Not even traffic police were seen in the financial district today.

Signs carried through the crowded streets read, "Thank you Mr. Reagan for supporting Democracy" and "Mr. Reagan, we love your adherence to democratic principles," the latter a takeoff on Vice President George Bush's praise of Marcos during a 1981 visit.

A teller from one bank carried a placard reading "One dollar equals 14 pesos," a reference to a 21.4 percent currency devaluation announced by the Central Bank today.

The pro-American reaction in Makati came a day after Reagan announced he was canceling the Philippines, Thailand and Indonesia from his November Asian tour. He said he still would go to Japan and Korea.

While Reagan gave pressing congressional business as his reason, the cancellation was widely interpreted here as a signal that Washington was apprehensive about recent events in the Philippines.

Philippines devalues its peso

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The central bank devalued the peso by 21.4 percent Wednesday, setting the new rate at 14 to the dollar, Manila bankers reported.

The official rate had been 11 to the dollar since the last devaluation of 7.3 percent on June 23. Prior to that, the central bank had allowed the peso to float.

Foreign exchange traders at the Bank of the Philippine Islands, Citibank and Far East Bank and Trust Co. said the rate was set at 14 when banks opened Monday.

Central Bank Senior Deputy Governor Gabriel C. Singson officially announced the peso devaluation, saying it was necessary in the face of the balance of payments deficit.

"The continued strength of the dollar, increased speculation against the peso and the need to prevent further erosion in international reserves" were other reasons given.

Since January, the peso has depreciated by about 34 percent including the present adjustment, Singson said.

The government had warned Filipinos of possible "stiff economic measures" because of negotiation with the International Monetary Fund for new loans.

Such measures were necessary to convince the IMF that the country "is willing and strong enough to undergo financial discipline," the government statement said. It said measures could include further credit curbs, higher interest rates and restrictions on imports, travel and other "dollar-draining activities."

Japan leads world in machine tool industry

WASHINGTON (AP) — Japan took over world leadership from the United States last year in the $22 billion machine tool industry — a standard for measuring a country's wealth, according to a new U.S. government report.

The U.S. International Trade Commission says the Japanese have some better and more efficiently made products, improved service, quicker delivery and lower prices.

It reports that in 1981 the average Japanese worker produced $114,000 dollars worth of machine tools, while the average American employee produced only $53,000 worth. The Japanese and other foreign producers also had advantages in lower labor costs and the high price of the dollar on international markets, it says.

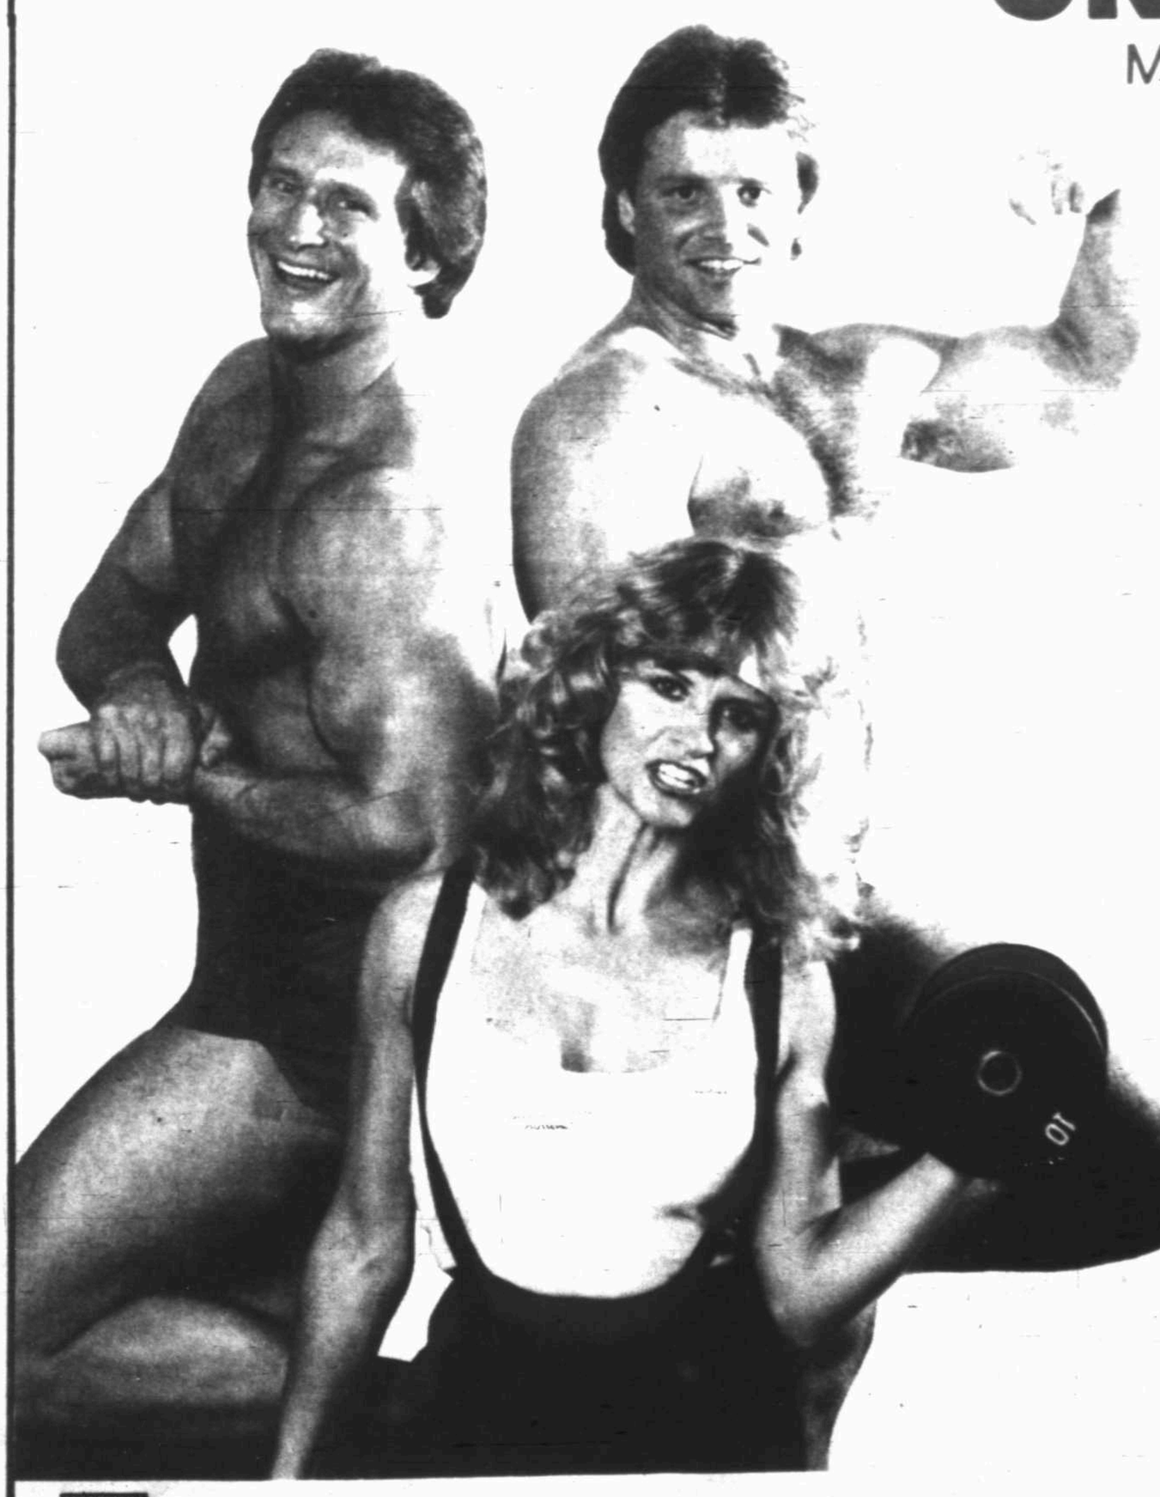

Lathes, drills, grinders and other tools for working metal are responsible for almost every manufactured product, the report points out.

"Machine tools are the only machines capable of producing other machines, including other machine tools," it says. "Thus, machine tools are responsible for almost any rise in productivity and are the standard by which a nation's industrial development and wealth are measured."

Until 1981, the United States and West Germany were the top countries in the industry. The United States took over the leadership from the Germans in 1979. That year, Japan's production surge carried it past the Soviet Union. Two years later it out-produced West Germany and last year the United States fell behind.

Japan produced $3.89 billion worth of machine tools, compared with $3.62 billion in this country.

Just how safe is the food you eat?

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The federal government spends more than $400 million a year policing the U.S. food supply, but the inspection system already has serious problems and a government agency says the public may be less well protected in the future.

A recent report from the General Accounting Office said foods that violate safety standards wound up on market shelves despite inspections, that regulation was fragmented and that safety laws had gaps.

It also said spending cutbacks and changes in the food supply from staples to processed products meant that the "ability of food regulation programs to efficiently and effectively protect the U.S. public may be diminished in the future."

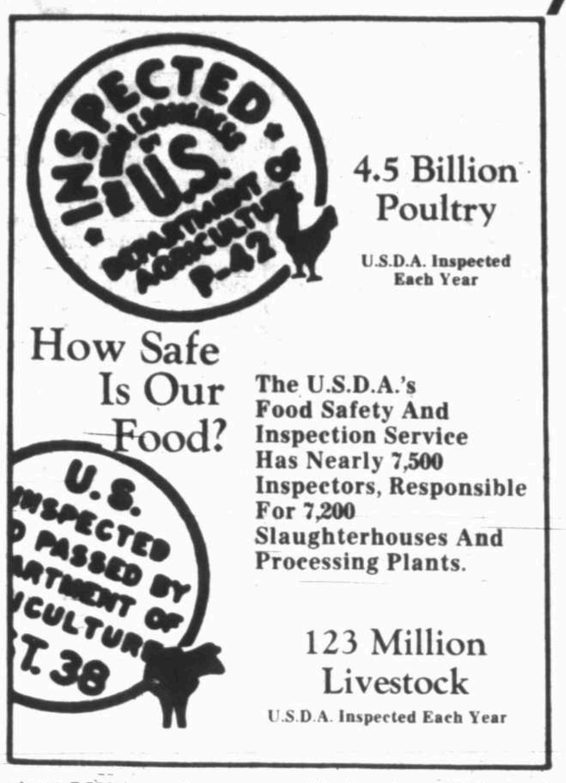

"It is generally believed," the GAO report said, "that federal food safety regulation provides adequate protection for the U.S. public, although we believe that comprehensive information to support that belief does not exist."

THE GOVERNMENT WATCHDOG agency said a review of past studies showed basic problems had not been corrected, and it said change was not likely "as long as major food-related disasters do not occur."

The U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Food and Drug Administration in the Department of Health and Human Services have most of the responsibility for enforcing laws on food safety.

In general, the USDA oversees meat and poultry; the FDA looks after everything else. Specifically, however, the two agencies operate very differently.

The USDA, for example, inspects virtually all the livestock and poultry we eat. Inspectors are on duty continuously in slaughter and processing plants.

"WE INSPECT 123 MILLION head of livestock in this country every year," said John McClung, head of information for the USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service.

"We inspect 4½ billion poultry. ... Every one of those animals has to be inspected before it's killed (and) after it's killed. ... If they're processed further into hamburger or bologna or chicken hot dogs or cans of soup, then we have to inspect the processing function as well."

The FDA, by contrast, makes only periodic inspections. Plants processing foods where there is a high risk of trouble may be inspected once a year; others are visited less frequently. The GAO report said that as of 1982, the FDA planned to inspect processing plants on the average of once every five or six years.

Are the inspections frequent enough? "Probably not," said an FDA spokesman who agreed to be interviewed only if he were not identified by name. "But it's all the manpower we've got. We've got only the manpower Congress gives us."

THE FDA'S BUREAU OF FOODS has about 900 field investigators. According to the GAO report, they are responsible for about 64,000 processors, storage facilities and repacking and relabeling plants.

The USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service has about 7,500 inspectors, responsible for about 7,200 slaughterhouses and processing plants, McClung said.

Can the periodic inspections by the FDA insure absolute safety? And are the continuous inspections by the USDA really necessary?

THE ANSWER TO BOTH questions is the same: Probably not.

"There's no such thing as an absolute guarantee," said the FDA spokesman. "Even if we had an inspector in the plant every day all the time, violative products would still get on the market. ... We're doing pretty good because the instance of violations is fairly low."

The GAO said the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee found in 1977 that the FDA's periodic inspections "could not assure that the food processing industry performed within legal requirements."

THE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDED additional funds for FDA inspections. But the GAO later found that the FDA's real spending for food sanitation — after adjustment for inflation — dropped almost 27 percent from 1977 to 1982.

The GAO also said it recommended in 1977 that "efficiencies could be achieved in meat and poultry processing plant inspections if (USDA) inspection frequency was tailored to the inspection needs of individual plants." McClung said the USDA agreed, but lawmakers did not.

"The way we are doing inspections is antiquated and is badly in need of modernization and streamlining," he said. "You can't afford to look at every chicken you slaughter in this country. ... The costs are just too high and technologically, there's not a need to do that anymore. ... We have tried to promote that sort of concept (non-continuous inspections) and it did not sell very well with a large number of the members of Congress."

THE GAO SAID PAST studies have found that "adulterated products continued to reach consumers ..." despite the efforts of the USDA and the FDA. But officials say the GAO statistics didn't always tell the whole story.

A 1981 GAO report, for example, "found that 24.9 percent of meat and poultry slaughtered under USDA inspection at plants within six states reviewed came from plants not meeting one or more USDA inspection program requirements."

McClung replied: "Maybe you have one incidence of an inspector in a plant seeing flies ... on one line on a temporary basis. That plant would then be written up and become part of that 24.9 percent. That does not by any stretch of the imagination mean that 24.9 percent of the product is somehow substandard."

BOTH THE USDA AND THE FDA emphasize food safety programs go beyond inspections.

James Greene, of the public affairs office of the FDA's Bureau of Foods, explained the agency's Total Diet Program. "Twice a year we buy 234 foods that represent 90 percent of the food consumed in this country," he said. "We analyze them for nutrient content, for pesticide residues, for heavy metal residues such as lead or cadmium and for overall cleanliness."

The GAO says the FDA and the USDA "pursue the mildest enforcement actions" against violators and, increasingly, are emphasizing voluntary compliance by industry "because of the reality of declining federal food safety resources and changing regulatory philosophies."

The FDA spokesman denied the charge. "I personally would disagree," he said. "We do prosecute people. We do enjoin people."

MCCLUNG, AT THE USDA, said: "We are becoming more hard-nosed ... in no small part because we have long recognized that there is a certain very small percentage of the meat and poultry trade that is consistently not responsive to government regulation."

Is our food safe?

"Absolutely," said McClung. "The supply of meat in this country is phenomenally safe and phenomenally wholesome."

Could it be safer?

"I suppose it could," said the FDA spokesman. "But I don't think it would be materially safer. Even if you put 10 times as many people on the street as we have now, you probably couldn't make it a whole lot safer."

Patrons make theater 'batty'

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Some non-paying customers at the Theater for the Performing Arts are driving the building's management "batty" by zooming over the stage and startling performers.

The uninvited patrons? Flying, furry bats.

"This past week, we've had reports of the bats flying around during performances, so we called in the exterminators," said Albert Merrill, the theater's building operations supervisor.

"We've always had some problems, but the numbers had been decreasing," he said.

The theater has been fogged and tracking powder has been set out in attempts to either kill the bats or drive them away, Merrill said.

Dancers of the Martha Graham Dance Company, performing here Tuesday and Wednesday, reportedly were started by bats flapping around in the backstage area.

Some members of the audience said they saw the furry mammals sailing over the stage.

"One of the problems we have is finding a time for the exterminators to come in," Merrill said. "You can't just stop everything to let them work. They were fogging one night after 10:30 because they had to wait for the end of the performances."

Music therapy aids many

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — Five years ago, Bill, a blind patient in his 40s at Allentown State Hospital, would do nothing more than sit silently in his room on the geriatric floor. He spoke with no one, refused to participate in any activities and ignored those around him.

Now he is in an open unit at the hospital, capable of moving around in the building by himself, excited about joining workshops and able to talk with others.

The change came about not because of any radical form of psychological treatment, but because of music therapy, said Susan Williams, one of two music therapists at the hospital.

"Bill used to sit in the unit, involved in nothing. But then we began working with him on the piano and he began to open up," Ms. Williams said. "He got into choruses, and later he was referred to mobility training to get around on his own.

"We started with a musical approach and everything else just grew out of it, but I could see the potential," she said.

Ms. Williams and her partner, Betsy Zimmerman, who say they are part of the only music therapy program in the Lehigh Valley, pointed out that their discipline is only recently being recognized for its tremendous potential to treat mentally disturbed patients.

They laugh at a stereotyped image of music therapy — patients lying on couches, headphones on and Brahms gently numbing their brains.

Music therapy, they said, is a much more active form of treatment. It includes teaching patients to play instruments and to write songs, to dance and to exercise to music.

"We're using music as a primary means to accomplish behavioral goals like social interaction, frustration tolerance, reducing fear of failure and increasing self-esteem for patients," Ms. Williams said.

Using different kinds of music, from recent popular tunes to older, classical works, the therapists adapt the style to the patient.

Rebs rally to triumph

The Midland Lee Rebels dropped the first game in their three-game volleyball match against Midland High Tuesday night but came back in the final two games to post a 12-15, 15-12, 15-7 District 4-5A victory over the Bulldogs.

The Rebels came out smoking in the second game to build up a 7-1 lead before the Bulldogs could get their game plan untracked and rally for an 8-8 tie. The game was tied twice more, 10-10 and 11-11. Lee took the lead for good at 12-11 and went on for the victory at 15-12 to set up the rubber game.

As the second game became more in jepordy for the Bulldogs, the spiking game faded away. Midland High started relying on finesse while the Rebels kept with a power game. It was a form of play for both teams that continued through the third game.

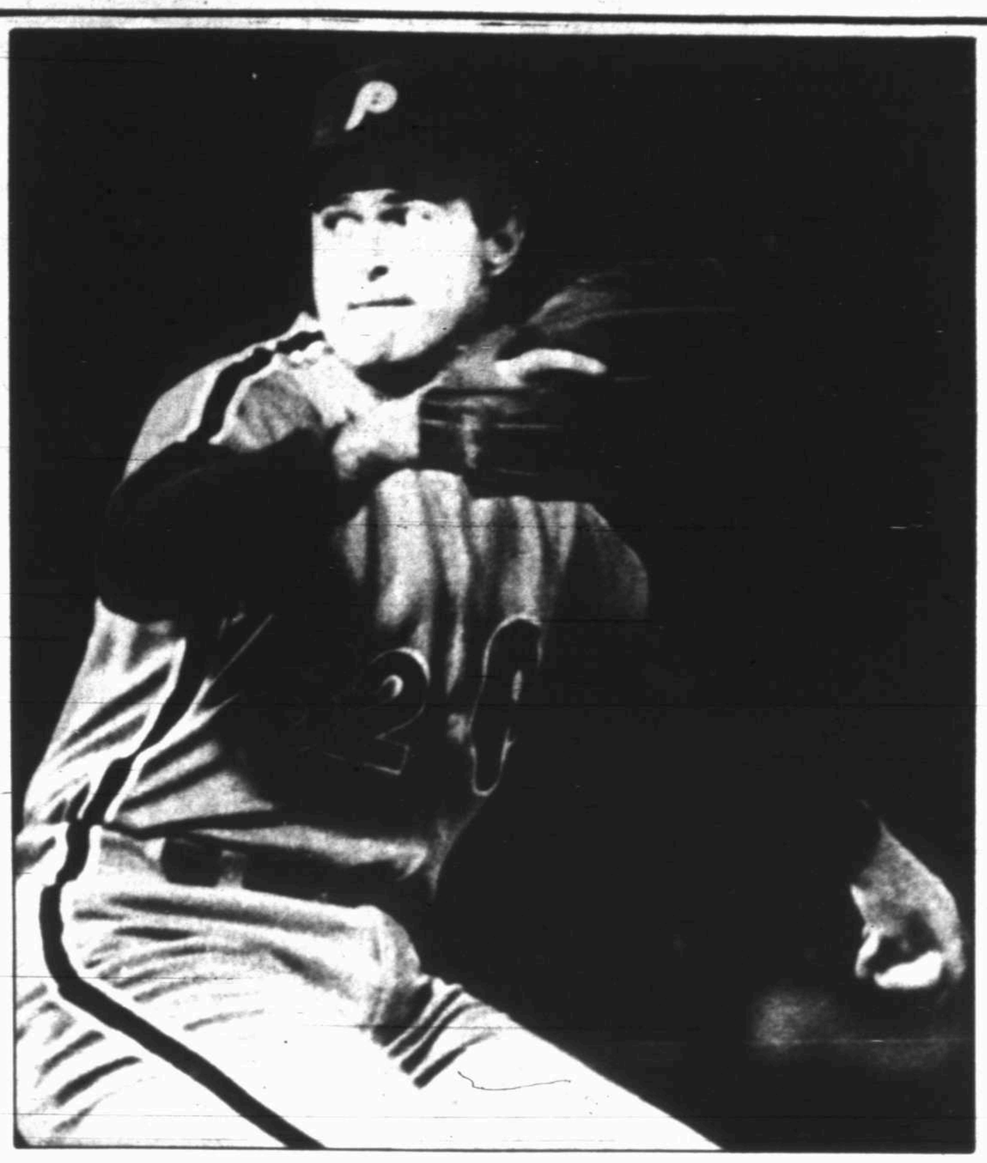

Lee looked like it was going to replay the start of the second game by jumping out to a 3-0 lead, but the Bulldogs rallied to tie the game at 3-3 and went up 6-3 before the Rebel attack proved to be too tough to overcome. Lee tied the game at 6-6 and never looked back.

"These kids played harder tonight than in any other game this year," said Rebel coach Janice Baulch whose Rebels pulled into a tie for third with Midland High at 4-3. "If they would play just that way every night, they could beat any team in the district. Everybody played a great game. They're a great bunch of kids."

On the other side of the court, Midland High's Linda Jolly was not as pleased.

"We didn't play well," said Jolly. "We played real cautious ball and when you play cautious ball you're going to get beat. We couldn't serve very well either. I know we're inexperienced, but there was no reason for this tonight."

Steve Carlton...does job on Dodgers

Orioles' Rick on the spot

BALTIMORE (AP) — He does one heck of a Carlton Fisk imitation, but at this stage of his career, he might be just as happy to be Rick Dempsey.

Dempsey, catcher for the Baltimore Orioles, was a man on the spot as the American League playoffs began. Considered one of baseball's best-throwing catchers, Dempsey will have to contend with the fleet feet of the Chicago White Sox.

As a team this season, the White Sox stole 165 bases, 77 by Rudy Law and 57 by Julio Cruz.

The way Dempsey was talking on Tuesday, he was relishing the limelight. He's never been too shy.

OVER THE LAST several seasons, Orioles fans have gotten used to Dempsey's antics, especially during rain delays when he comes onto the tarp and imitates, among others, former Manager Earl Weaver, his teammates and, most memorably, Fisk. The object of Dempsey's Fisk caricature was the 1975 World Series when, as the Boston catcher, Fisk homered to win the sixth game against Cincinnati. Fisk's homer was down the left-field line, and, as he danced sideways toward first, Fisk waved the ball into fair territory.

Now, Dempsey and Fisk are opposing catchers in the AL playoffs, which begin today. Fisk, signed by the White Sox as a free agent in 1981, probably won't have to worry too much about Orioles baserunners. They stole only 61 bases this season.

But Dempsey already has taken note of the White Sox's baserunning threat.

"SURE THEY'RE going to try to run — with guys like Cruz and Law," Dempsey said. "They're going to try to run us off the field, but we're ready."

Left-hander Scott McGregor, 18-7, and 1-0 this season against Chicago, was picked by Manager Joe Altobelli to start the opener, who were favored 13-10 to win the playoffs by Nevada oddsmakers.

"You don't want to pay so much attention to Cruz or Law that the guy up at the plate hits one off the clock," McGregor said after Tuesday's workout. "I've seen that happen so many times. You try a couple of trick moves to first, and then you throw one right down the middle.

"If they get on base, to tell you the truth, I'd just as soon tell them to steal second, third and home, take the run and go sit down in the dugout," McGregor said.

McGregor will be followed in the playoff rotation by rookie right-hander Mike Boddicker, 16-8, left-hander Mike Flanagan, 12-4, and right-hander Storm Davis, 13-7. Jim Palmer will be in the bullpen.

The winningest pitcher in baseball this year, right-hander LaMarr Hoyt, 24-10, was Manager Tony LaRussa's choice to start for Chicago. Following Hoyt, who was 2-1 against Baltimore, will be left-hander Floyd Bannister, 16-10, right-hander Rich Dotson, 22-7, and left-hander Britt Burns, 10-11. Since the All-Star break, Chicago's first three starters have a combined record of 42-5.

"So much has been said about Chicago's hitting," Dempsey said. "But I don't think any team can put up three starters like Chicago. I don't fear their hitting like their pitching. Over a short series when you can throw Hoyt, Dotson and Bannister, you have, more or less, three legitimate 20-game winners."

BETWEEN THE two clubs, they should come away with their share of postseason awards. Hoyt and Dotson both are Cy Young candidates. Ron Kittle of the White Sox, with 35 homers, 100 RBI and a .254 average, is a Rookie of the Year contender. Baltimore has two Most Valuable Player candidates in Eddie Murray, 33 homers and 111 RBI, and Cal Ripken Jr., 27 homers, 102 RBI and a .318 batting average. And the White Sox would be disappointed if Fisk — 26 homers and 86 RBI — were overlooked entirely in the MVP vote.

"Figure-wise, we're the top two teams in the league," Kittle said. "They beat us seven out of 12 times, but in three of those losses, we played them neck-and-neck. We have the power pitchers, and they have the finesse pitchers."

Besides speed, pitching offered another vast difference between the two clubs, although both came away with considerable success. McGregor was the perfect example of the difference. He had only 86 strikeouts to Hoyt's 148, but McGregor's earned run average was 3.18 to Hoyt's 3.66.

"He gets the ball over the plate, he changes speeds, and he changes rhythm," Dempsey said of McGregor. "And, he's knowledgeable, he knows the hitters. He tries to make them hit the ball where it will do the least harm, to take away their strengths."

Much also has been made of the Orioles' edge in experience. Besides Fisk, designated hitter Greg Luzinski was the only other White Sox player in the starting lineup with World Series experience. Luzinski was with the 1980 World Series champion Philadelphia Phillies. On the other hand, the Orioles have many returning players from their 1979 World Series club, including McGregor.

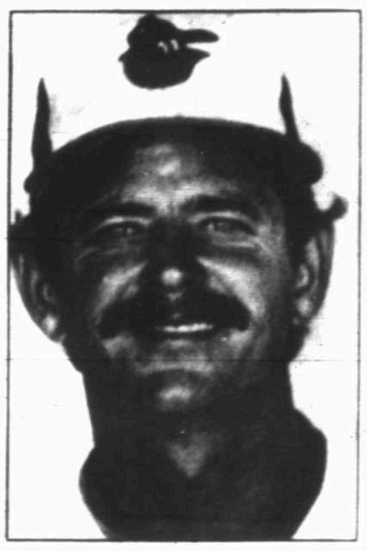

"Four years later, four years older and wiser, maybe there is a little less pressure," McGregor said, "but I'm still excited."

LARUSSA DID not want to downplay the importance of experience, but he refused to concede the edge to the Orioles because of it.

"Experience is a benefit. I never underestimate it, except we have guys with experience. As a team, they have more, but it didn't bother us in the pennant race," LaRussa said.

And, what about his own inexperience in championship play?

"It's been our strategy all year long," LaRussa said, "that we get so far ahead I can't mess it up."

First game history

Schmidt unimpressed by win

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mike Schmidt says the opening game of the 1983 National League Championships is merely history now, but the Philadelphia Phillies slugger played the major role in its making.

"The game means nothing now except that guys will write about it for tomorrow and we'll think about it for a couple of hours before starting to think about the next one," Schmidt said Tuesday night after he homered in the first inning for the only run in Philadelphia's 1-0 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"I remember we won the first game against the Dodgers in the 1977 Championship Series, but they came back to win the next three," he said. "Of course, being up by one game is more fun that being down by one.

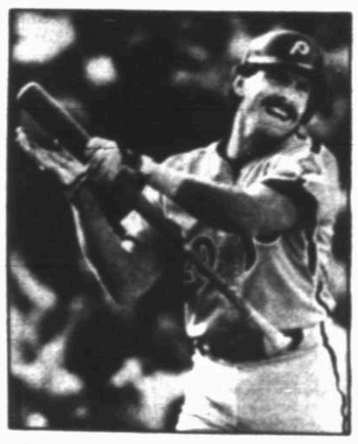

"I know the Dodgers are a great ball club, and there's going to be some hitting before this series is through."

THERE WAS little hitting in the first game of the best-of-five series, which resumes tonight in Dodger Stadium with Los Angeles' Fernando Valenzuela, 15-10 during the regular season, going against Philadelphia's John Denny, 19-6.

Steve Carlton blanked the Dodgers on seven hits for 7 2-3 innings before giving way to ace reliever Al Holland with the bases loaded and two away in the bottom of the eighth. Holland got Mike Marshall to fly out to right to end the Dodgers' strongest threat of the game.

Jerry Reuss was the loser in the pitchers' duel, allowing five hits before going out for a pinch-hitter in the bottom of the eighth. His performance was flawed only by the fastball in the first inning that he threw in Schmidt's preferred hitting area, low and across the plate.

"The game was one pitch the way it turned out," said Reuss. "It was a good pitch to a good hitter."

Mike Schmidt
....homer the difference

Schmidt said he wasn't certain the ball was going to clear the centerfield fence.

"HE HAD thrown me a couple high and inside and I was just trying to find the ball to tell the truth," recalled Schmidt, who led the majors with 40 homers this season but never before had hit one in the league championships. "It just so happened the pitch was down and over the plate ... I just sort of threw the bat at it.

"I thought it had a chance to go out, but when (Ken) Landreaux kept his arm up in the air at the fence, I thought he'd caught it."

Both the winners and the losers agreed it was a well-played contest.

"Carlton pitched a super game," said Dodger Manager Tom Lasorda. "We had our chances to score a couple of times and we didn't. Who would have thought that Schmidt's home run in the first inning would have been all they needed to win.

"Reuss pitched a great game, but just came up short," Lasorda continued. "We hope our turn comes tomorrow."

"That homer didn't look like much in the first inning, but it looked monumental by the fifth or sixth," said Phillies Manager Paul Owens. "It was a classic game.

"I thought there would be good pitching and not a lot of hitting," he said. "In fact, we were going to play for a run early. It was a tough game for the Dodgers to lose and a good game for us to win."

AFTER HOLLAND turned the Dodgers away in the eighth, they had one final chance for a comeback, when Derrel Thomas reached first as Schmidt booted his grounder with two away in the bottom of the ninth. Thomas stole second, but Holland then got Greg Brock to ground out and end it.

Although Schmidt and many of the players on each side predicted heavy hitting in the games ahead, Owens said, "With the pitchers the two clubs have, there could be more games like this coming up."

Game 2 could provide another such pitchers' showcase, considering the talents of the opposing hurlers.

Valenzuela has not been as consistent as in the past, including his 1981 Cy Young and Rookie of the Year campaign, but he has pitched brilliantly at times. Denny, with the league's best record and second-best earned run average (2.37), is the leading candidate for this year's Cy Young Award.

One playoff veteran, Philadelphia second baseman Joe Morgan, sees the second game as the potential clincher for the Phillies.

"If we win it, with our pitching there's no way they're going back to Philadelphia and sweep us in three games," said Morgan, a longtime Dodger nemesis. "Of course, beating them in Game 2 isn't going to be easy."

Sparky back with Detroit

DETROIT (AP) — Sparky Anderson, already the "dean" of American League managers, has signed a two-year contract extension that will keep him on the Detroit Tigers' bench through the 1986 season.

"This will have a stabilizing effect on a club that should contend for the pennant for the next several years," Tigers' General Manager Bill Lajoie said Tuesday.

The extension, announced just before Anderson, Lajoie and the rest of the Tiger contingent boarded an airplane for the AL Championship Series in Baltimore, was seen as a reward for guiding the club to its best record in 15 years.

The 1968 Tigers won 103 games, then defeated the St. Louis Cardinals in the World Series. his year's team went 92-70 and finished second in the AL East.

TED BATTLES

Fight On for Old SC

Everybody can relax now. It looks like the University of Southern California is for real.

No one could be sure in the early weeks of the season.

Sure, there was that tie with Florida, a real last second gasper, but then Troy won big over one of those teams from the Pacific northwest, Oregon or Oregon State.

The Trojans bounced back against Kansas University, losing 26-20. The Jayhawks' credentials included a 16-16 tie with Texas Christian and a 37-34 loss to Northern Illinois. That should have been proof enough, but some people are hard to convince.

IT WASN'T until Saturday that the evidence became conclusive. South Carolina-USC was one of those games you never think twice about on the pick 'em sheet. The only thing you have to be wary of is being city-slicked. You know, "Who do you like, USC?" And then later they come back to collect their loot and respond to the protest, "But you picked USC...University of South Carolina."

South Carolina, not regarded as one of the powers in the Atlantic Coast Conference, whipped the Trojans, 38-14.

Instead, of the super dreadnaught with the linemen who could crack any NFL line right now and the automatic Heisman Trophy tailback, USC is so for real one guy claims they are using students.

USC has a new coach this year, Ted Tollner, a former assistant, who took over for Johnny Robinson.

When he announced his retirement last fall, Robinson said he'd had it with coaching and wanted to do something else.

Then, as soon as the LA Rams job opened up, Johnny jumped in with both feet.

Could it be that Robinson saw the handwriting on the wall?

TAILBACK U. just hasn't been the same since the inquiry two or three years ago, the one in which it was discovered that some of the Trojans' top athletes, and not all football players, not only weren't attending classes, but some question was left as to whether some were even legitimately enrolled as bona fide students.

All of a sudden, the NFL's No. 1 farm team has become surprisingly and unexpectedly mortal.

One has to wonder whether it's simply a case of the changing of the guard, or is it something more sinister?

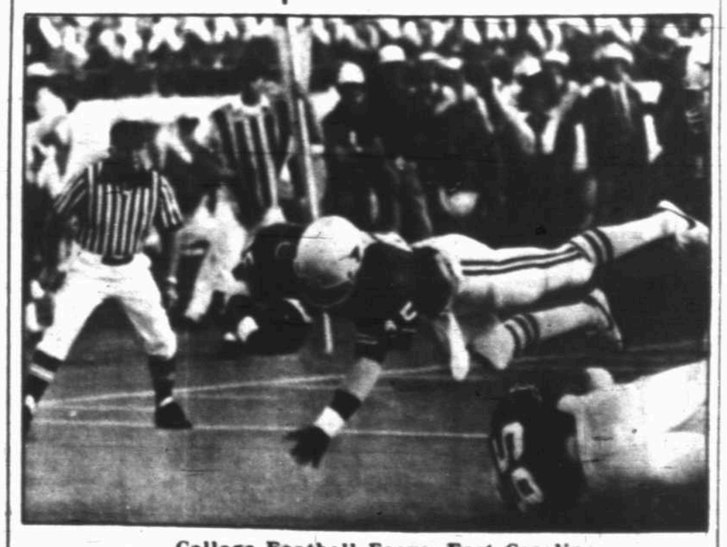

THE FOOTBALL program is not the only one to feel the effects of whatever malady seems to be afflicting Trojan athletics. Rod Dedeaux once produced NCAA championship baseball team and major league ball players like cars used to come off Detroit assembly lines. But USC is seldom a Pac-10 contender any more and attendance at games has suffered. Not that many scouts show up any more.

One explanation of the USC decline in baseball is that so many good prospects were attracted to the campus, it was easy to get lost among the Tom Seavers, Dave Kingmans, and Steve Kemps. Kids wanted to go someplace where they'd be noticed, not lost in the shuffle.

As for the football team, only those close enough to the campus to count the Sports Cars in the Coliseum parking lot on practice days know for sure what's happening in Smoggy-Bottom.

One arm no handicap for kicker

LIBERTY, Ind. (AP) — Graduating from Union High School with 11 of a possible 12 varsity monograms is a goal that seems well within Darin Schaeffer's grasp, even though he can reach for his dream with just one hand.

Schaeffer was born without the arm, but he doesn't consider it a handicap.

As a sophomore, he compiled a 3-5 record at No. 1 singles for Union County's varsity tennis team. He led the reserve basketball team in scoring with a 16.7 average before being promoted to varsity part way through the season. In baseball, he was 5-2 as a pitcher and hit .276 with a home run as an outfielder. His fielding percentage was .969.

He's a good swimmer, and although he only recently began playing golf, he's recorded scores in the mid-40s for nine holes.

A former teacher describes Schaeffer as a model student who is attentive in class and eager to learn.

THIS FALL, he decided to try football. It wasn't his first experience with the game. He was a linebacker on the school's eighth-grade team.

He's also had considerable success in punt, pass and kick competitions, including a second-place finish in the state finals when he was 12.

When he joined the Patriot football team, he expected to be a punter and a place kicker. Then Coach Bill Oler asked him to try playing safety.

"He's a great athlete. We worked him into the defensive backfield drills," Oler says. "Pretty soon, he didn't have any qualms about it."

Since then, Schaeffer has been in the Patriots' defensive backfield in passing situations. As a kicker he has hit 9 of 10 extra point kicks and one of two field goal tries.

Schaeffer's athletic career began at age 6 when his father and some friends started him playing baseball. He says it never occurred to him that someone with one arm shouldn't be playing the game.

HIS FATHER, Max Schaeffer, said, "You don't tell him he can't do anything. He just loves the competition."

Mike Pavloff, the Union County athletic director, said, "He never, ever complains about his handicap or says he can't do anything. He's a super kid. I can't say anything more about him."

Schaeffer says the only football drill that gives him trouble is the bear crawl, where players move around on their hands and feet.

With five varsity letters already in his possession, Schaeffer feels he can finish his high school career with 11. "I wish I could have gotten 12."

He doesn't use his handicap as an excuse for not getting that 12th letter. He doesn't use it as an excuse for anything.

"It won't stop me from doing anything. I took typing last year," Schaeffer said. "It was easy. I got 60 words a minute."

American Fishing Institute to emphasize developing 'area' fishing

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Bass Fishing Institute, America's premier fishing school, has changed its name, is expanding into new fisheries and is looking for a spot on land.

"There will be more emphasis on area species," said Cliff Paulin, director of what is now known as the American Fishing Institute. "In North Carolina, for example, we will lean heavily on striper fishing. In Chicago it would be on Great Lakes species, Coho salmon, lake trout, etc.

There also will be more specialized courses, aimed at men, women and youth, he said.

"As it is, men are starting to complain," said Chuck Roberts, an institute consultant. "Women get specialized instruction and the men find out their wives know more about fishing than they do. They want to be taught, too, but not in a way that will show their wives how stupid they are."

According to Paulin, this generation of adults is the first with a large minority that grew up in single parent households or in households where nobody took children fishing.

"Now those adults with children would like to take their children fishing, but they are embarrassed that they don't know how to fish," he said. "The American Fishing Tackle Manufacturers Association has a study which shows if a child is not started fishing by age 8 he will not continue fishing into his adult life.

"When you go fishing, it's just a little more fun when there's something wiggling on the other end of the line," he said. "If something isn't wiggling in 2½ trips, that person is going to take up golf or tennis."

A single institute will attract students, parents and children, whole families, from as many as 12 states. Institutes are spotted around the country, Paulin said, a week or two ahead of prime fishing time in that area.

Current plans, Paulin said, call for creating new institutes specializing in particular forms of fishing, such as fishing for salmon, striped bass, Great Lakes fishing.

"In four or five years, we're looking at moving into hunting, turkey, whitetail deer, upland game, duck hunting, hunting with black powder weapons," he said.

These are big plans for what began as an adult-education course requested by Terre Haute residents in fishing in 1973.

To turn the plans into reality, the institute is seeking funds and sponsors from the fishing industry.

"We're looking for a major benefactor, interested in youth, conservation and the environment," Paulin said. "We could substantially increase our fees ($40 for an adult, $20 for a spouse, no fee for children with each adult), but that would defeat the purpose of making it a family affair by making it too expensive for families."

WEST TEXAS OUTDOORS

Safety 1st for hunters

BY RODNEY RIEHLE

As more and more hunters move into the fields, safety should be the foremost concern in using a firearm, according to the Texas Medical Association.

This applies particularly to hunters under age 21, a group which causes almost 60 percent of the gun casualties. Persons in this age group also make up about 40 percent of all accident victims.

Some guidelines for handling guns from the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept.

1. Treat every gun as if it were loaded.
2. Be able to control the direction of the gun's muzzle, even if you should stumble.
3. Be sure the barrel is clear of obstructions. Use only ammunition of the proper size for the gun you are carrying.
4. Unload guns when not in use. They should be carried in cases to the shooting area.
5. Never point a gun at anything you do not want to shoot. Avoid all horseplay with a firearm.
6. Never climb a fence or tree or jump a ditch with a loaded gun. And never pull a gun toward you by the muzzle.
7. Be sure of your target before pulling the trigger.
8. Never shoot a bullet at a flat, hard survace or at water. During target practice, be sure your backstop is adequate.
9. Store guns and ammunition separately beyond the reach of children and careless adults.
10. Avoid alchoholic beverages before or during shooting.

The TMA and TPWD recommend hunters wear a brightly colored outer garment or cap for identity protection. The best color is "hunter orange."

Hunter waits until it's time to shoot before loading up for the hunt, for his safety as well as the safety of his favorite hunting companion.

October is the month

...for exploring the Sierra

By ROLLA WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Packers are suggesting October to schedule exploratory trips into the wilderness of the Sierra and December for the ski slopes of Colorado and New Mexico.

The heavy snowcap held back the start of the hike-in, ride-in season in the backcountry to late July, and the fishing, untapped since last fall, should be magnificent.

The annual fall arguments with deer, elk and antelope is upon us.

And not longer after, out of shape skiers will be battling the steep slopes and high altitudes of their favorite ski resort, stopping to gasp for breath after brief exertion. Even a skier in shape, needs a few days to adjust to 12,000 feet. The poorly conditioned skier is running a serious risk of cardiac arrest.

The correct way to approach such exertion is to stay in shape rather than go on an emergency program. That means eating properly, drinking moderately, exercising regularly.

"Little things help," said Dr. E. Lee Rice of the San Diego Sports Medical Center. "Park your car that extra block away from the office, so you'll walk a bit more. Take the stairs rather than the elevator. Hike, walk, jog three or four times a week.

"It's difficult for your body to undergo these periodic stresses of losing weight and tightening up muscles. It's much better to watch what you eat all the time, and I say that if it swims or flies, it's OK. That means chicken and fish. Don't give up red meat, of course, but eat it sparingly, as a special treat.

"Go easy on the starches, the sweets and the deserts. Eat more vegetables and salads."

NO ARGUMENT there, but humans — being human — fall off the wagon easily. Back from a successful invasion of the mountains, eggs and bacon, instead of granola, start to occupy the breakfast niche. Hamburgers become a quick and easy staple for lunch. Strawberry shortcake garnished with ice cream seems the ideal dessert.

It is so much easier to press an elevator button than to open a door and climb some stairs. Suddenly, the shirts can't be buttoned all the way down, and no room is secret enough to risk stepping upon a scale. C'est la vie!

Rice's idea of a proper approach to the mountains is to start by purchasing some modern, lightweight backpacking shoes that don't require three or four years to break in.

"Walk around in the shoes, just a few minutes at first, gradually lengthening your hikes till you're up to a 60 minute walk, packing a full rucksack, moving easily up and down hills, not just tackling the flatlands.

"The whole idea," he says, "is to get your heart and your lungs in shape for the high altitudes of the Sierra.

"START OUT slowly at some activity you enjoy. Perhaps walking or hiking or jogging. Maybe bike riding, swimming, the trampoline, jumping rope, even some sports like racquet ball."

He knows this firsthand, for he, too, has to work at staying fit. He's 38, but he knows backpacking and fishing in the Sierra, and his world includes skiing, surfing, scuba diving and playing fly-half on a rugby team.

Slow, static stretching exercises, Rice says, should be part of the exercise program both before and after practice backpacking (or bike-riding or swimming or whatever).

One technique is to sit on the floor and reach — slowly — for your toes. Another is a half-squat from a standing position, feet remaining flat on the ground. Stand with the toes on the edge of a thick book and lift with the leg muscles.

LIE BELLY-DOWN on the floor, arch the body by raising head and feet. Repeat several times. Do some push-ups. The last exercises strengthen the arms and upper body so the pack can be muscled more easily. The others are to condition the feet, ankles and legs.

"Do the exercises before and after your conditioning workouts to prevent muscle injury," he said. "But do them slowly; avoid leaping and jerking."

That rules out the herky-jerky calisthenics most of us learned and remember from the service. Ah, but we were younger then.

Some, myself included, find walking downhill more injurious than hiking up the side of a mountain. Once I jammed my toenails against the boot with such repeated force that they became bloodied. I lost three toenails. They've grown back since, but the discomfort is remembered.

"Cut your toenails square, not curved," Rice advised. "That way they're less likely to get jammed and cause a hematoma. Wear a thin, inner pair of socks, and a second, heavier wool sock over it. The idea is to cushion the foot and wick off the buildup of moisture."

He notes that overweight persons carry a particular burden down a hill.

"EVERY STEP," he said, "puts 2½ times the stress on your body. If you're 10 pounds overweight, that's 25 pounds going downhill."

Rice has a figure that out-of-shape outdoor folk, which includes most of us, should mark and remember: 220 minus one's age.

"That equals your maximum predicted heart rate," he said. "You exercise at 80 percent of your (maximum predicted) heart rate. Check your pulse for 10 seconds in the middle of a workout. If your heart's beating too fast, there's too much stress — slow down."

If you're 40, and you subtract your age from 220 you get 180. Take 80 percent of 180, which is 144. That's your heartbeat figure. Remember it. It's the key to a healthy cardiovascular system.

JIM MURRAY

Kuechenberg butt of jokes

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

He played at Notre Dame on some historic teams, but not as historic as his teammates think. Bob Kuechenberg has been in pro ball so long that some people think he's his own son, and the younger Miami Dolphins can be pardoned for ragging their resident Ponce de Leon.

"Hey, Kooch. Did Rockne really talk that funny?" "Hey, Kooch, which one of the Four Horsemen was easier to block for?" "Hey, Kooch, did Gipp really smoke on the bench during games?" "Hey, Kooch, how come Ronald Reagan didn't play you in the movies?" "Hey, Kooch, how come Grantland Rice didn't give you a nickname?" "Hey, Kooch, how many games did you win for the Gipper?"

Actually, Robert John Kuechenberg never won any games for the Gipper. But he did play on the team that tied one for the old Gipper, in the 1966 Michigan State game. That was the Great Mistake Team of Notre Dame, the one that was careless enough to beat USC 51-0.

THE BEARD is silvered now and the blond hair is thinning but Bob Kuechenberg is still anchoring the middle of the Miami Dolphins offensive line — which is the last place in the world you'd expect to find an art connoisseur.

Guys who knock people down for a living might be expected to fulfill all their art needs in the centerfold of a girlie magazine. Their idea of interior decorating would be two different poses of Cheryl Tiegs and a lamp made out of a helmet. The art world is not inundated with 6-2, 260-pound ruffians who spend their Sundays ramming their heads into peoples' chests. Bob Kuechenberg doesn't look a thing like Clifton Webb.

Still, he's one of the few National Football Leaguers as at home in the Louvre as on the Chicago Bears' 10-yard line. He is the owner of a business called Interior Arts, Inc., and most people who walk in the door would figure him not for the owner but the bouncer.

KUECHENBERG'S unusual avocation evolved when he and his wife, Marilyn, hit upon a hobby of buying run-down but picturesque properties and renovating them into showplaces. His wife, an actress with a flair for design, who in the words of a Miami publicist "could turn a cow shed into Pickfair," supplies the nuances. But Kuechenberg, not one of the jocks whose idea of the good life is an ermine rug and mirrors on the ceiling, would not hang his hat on the Venus de Milo.

"Most people consider it unusual for a football player to be interested in something as unphysical as fine arts," he says. And he even excuses. "Football is so demanding of your time and concentration that many of us come out of it retarded. There have been sacrifices and limitations placed on you. But you're not locked in. And you can't stereotype football players any more than you can Frenchmen or even people from Detroit."

Kuechenberg makes it clear he's not going to go from right guard to curator of the British Museum. "What we're really into is affordable art, not investment art. The average American enjoys art but is embarrassed by his lack of knowledge. They are not confident enough for gallery showings. Naturally, not everybody can hang the Mona Lisa in his living room, but art is a personal matter. Not everyone can turn his home into a gallery but we try to bring original oils into homes. You must remember they sneered at Western painting in this country. 'Calendar art,' they called it. Now, some of it is priceless.

"When you go into the Louvre or the museum in Amsterdam, you know everything there is priceless, but if you didn't know what it was and you covered the artist's name or title, you might not even want it. Art appreciation is a conditioned reflex. The function of art is to give pleasure."

AND THE function of a Miami Dolphins guard is to inflict pain. Bob Kuechenberg has inflicted – and accepted – enough in his 20 years on football fields (he played in Super Bowl VIII with a broken arm, and despite a broken back missed only two regular-season games in 1977) to hang in the Louvre himself: "American Gladiator, Circa 1900s, Artist Unknown, In the Reign of Emperor Ronald I."

Anyway the kids will have something new to twit The Old Guard about. "Hey, Kooch, was Rembrandt any fun on a double date?" "Hey, Kooch, did Michelangelo only do ceilings?" Or, "Hey, Kooch, did you ever ask Van Gogh whatever happened to his other ear?"

Arkansas quarterback Brad Taylor is all smiles after being named SWC Offensive player of the week for performance against TCU.

Dallas' Landry dreads the Bucs

DALLAS (AP) - Dallas Coach Tom Landry said Tuesday he dreaded playing winless Tampa Bay Sunday.

"I hate games like this, it's very unusual," said Landry.

The Cowboys, the National Football League's only unbeaten team, tackle the Buccaneers Sunday and are rated whopping 13 point favorites by the oddsmakers.

The Bucs are fresh off a 55-14 walloping by the Green Bay Packers.

"Tampa Bay will be playing with their pride hurt," said Landry. "They are going to come to town to play. They are a team that has been stung and those are the ones who play the hardest."

The Cowboys have beaten Tampa Bay five times with all the victories coming in Texas Stadium.

"This game will be tough," promised Landry. "We've kept Tampa Bay out of the championship quite a few times and they haven't forgotten it.

"We've been in a few runaway games ourselves. We got beat by the Vikings like that once."

Dallas came from behind for the fifth time this year Sunday with a 37-24 victory over Minnesota.

"We'll need the big plays to win Sunday and that's what we've been doing for five weeks and what we have to keep on doing," Landry said.

The Cowboy pattern has been to barely show up for the first half then turn it on in the second half.

"We just don't make the plays early," Landry said. "We just can't seem to get going until we get behind. We've been very fortunate that we have come from behind like we have."

The 3 p.m. game which will feature a halftime induction of Roger Staubach into Dallas' "Ring of Honor," was soldout and will be televised locally.

Landry said the Cowboys were basically in good condition although center Tom Rafferty and wide receiver Tony Hill were questionable.

Hill, who severely sprained an arch in his foot, has missed the last two weeks.

"The Viking game was the best game we've played as a team so far this year," Landry said. "Our kicking game also improved."

Cincinnati Reds name Vern Rapp manager

From wire reports

BASEBALL—Vern Rapp was named manager of the Cincinnati Reds, succeeding Russ Nixon. Rapp said, "There's no place to go but up. We've got a tremendous future ahead of us. I've got the experience. I've got the knowledge. I hope I can put the two of them together and have a good season."

Rapp managed St. Louis in 1977 and part of 1978. He took over a team that had finished fifth, 18 games under .500, and guided it to an 83-79 record in 1977, for third place....

FOOTBALL—Texas A&I-Abilene Christian will be carred on CBS-TV at 11:35 a.m. Saturday, marking the first regular season Lone Star Conference game to be carried nationally on network tv....

Freshman quarterback Kevin Murray will start for Texas A&M against Houston, replacing John Mazur. "Kevin makes things happen. He came into the Texas Tech game and gave us some spark, just like he did for Oklahoma State," Coach Jackie Sherrill said....

The University of South Carolina's stadium is structurally sound despite complaints from fans that a new upper deck swayed during a game Saturday. Fans had reported similar motion in a deck on the west side of the stadium in past years....

Dwayne Dixon, Florida's top wide receiver with 23 catches for 294 yards, will be out four weeks with knee and rib injuries....

Arkansas quarterback Brad Taylor won the SWC Offensive Player of the Week award with his head, not his passing arm. TCU led 7-0 as the Hogs reached the Frogs' 23. Coach Lou Holtz sent in "57," a play to the split end side of the field. "They had brought everybody up on the line," Taylor said. "I checked to a trap play. I knew if he got past the line of scrimmage, there wouldn't be anybody there to stop him." There wasn't and Derrick Thomas tied the score.

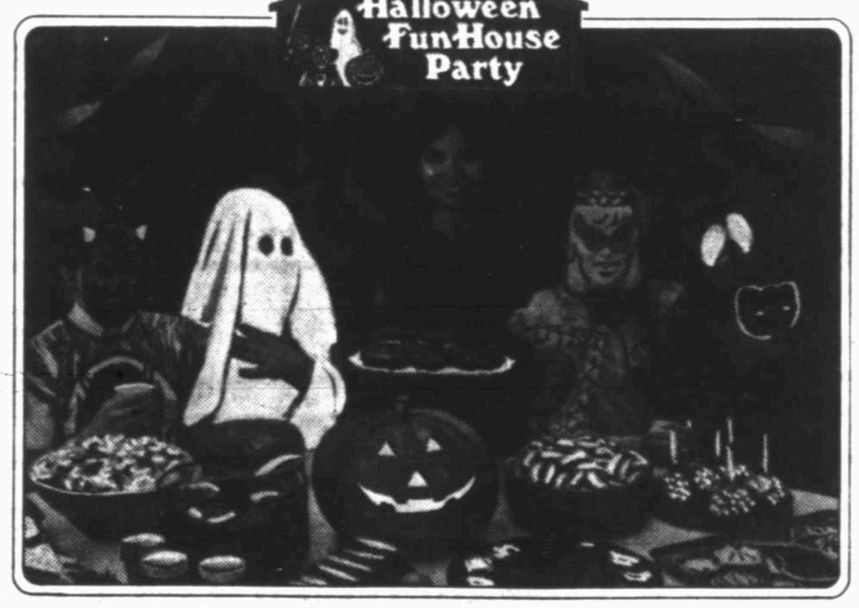

Holtz said the play he had called would have been into the teeth of a blitz. "There I am still waiting for '57' and there's Derrick Thomas running into the end zone. Brad has got to be able to audible because he can see things a lot better than I can."...

Oklahoma's Barry Switzer says Texas' Fred Akers has the better team this year — but that's not necessarily bad news. "In this series, it isn't always the better team that wins... A lot of people thought Texas was the better team last year, too." But a trio of cross-country runs by Oklahoma backs — including a 63-yard touchdown by Marcus Dupree — paved the way for the Sooners' 28-22 victory, their first in three years against Texas. "The Oklahoma-Texas game usually determines what kind of team you're going to have for the rest of the year... And, so far this season, we've done nothing to indicate we can beat Texas."

A flu epidemic has hit at least 20 University of Miami players, including linebacker Jay Brophy and defensive end Danny Brown, but Hurricanes Coach Howard Schnellenberger says it won't affect Miami's performance in Saturday's home game against Louisville. "It's a lot less of a setback than if the kids got it on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday."...

BASKETBALL—San Diego State University officials have asked the NCAA to clarify some confusing statements in its report on the Aztec men's basketball program before releasing its report and proposed penalties. Aztec coach Smokey Gaines told the San Diego Union, "You're talking about minor infractions." He indicated that the investigation concerned NBA star Moses Malone helping in a recruitment by buying dinner for a prospect, Leonard Allen, and charges by 1982 player David Bradley, who was thrown off the team, that he received credit for two classes that he never attended....

Torre blames relief pitching

Braves watch from sidelines

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Braves Manager Joe Torre says the improved play of the Los Angeles Dodgers and his team's failure to get strong relief pitching helped prevent the Braves from repeating as National League West champions.

"The Dodgers winning 12 out of 13 (in August) didn't help," Torre said in a post-season interview published Tuesday in The Atlanta Journal. "They got hot, and we didn't get hot."

Torre, who piloted the Braves to the Western Division title in 1982, said his team didn't get good relief pitching when needed.

"Going into that game in San Francisco (on June 18, when the Braves relinquished a 4-1 lead), the one where Gene Garber got hit, our record was something like 26-0 in games we were leading going into the seventh inning. That, needless to say, certainly didn't hold up," he said.

Torre said the August loss of home run hitter Bob Horner also hurt the Braves, but he added that the Dodgers had physical problems of their own.

"We had some physical problems, but so did the Dodgers," he said. "They lost Steve Howe three different times. Every ballclub has problems — that's baseball."

The most pleasant surprise for Torre was the development of rookie right-hander Craig McMurtry.

"If you had told me in spring training we'd get 15 victories from McMurtry, I'd have said we'd be a cinch," Torre said. "(Pascual) Perez won 15, but you could see that coming last year. McMurtry really was a pleasant surprise."

When asked to point to a crucial game, Torre was hard-pressed. The finale of a three-game August series between the Braves and Dodgers in Atlanta was his choice.

"That Sunday game (Aug. 14) at home, after (Bob) Watson's big homer the night before. We're 6½ going into that day, and we had the Dodgers running scared," he said.

"Then they come out and take a lead right away and it holds up (5-4). I honestly think, if we had gone out there and put something together early — on top of what happened the night before — we'd have been able to put them away."

Torre said he worked harder at managing the Braves in 1983.

"Individually, I'd have to say I put more hours and time in this year," he said. "Put it this way: I don't think I was caught off guard — that whatever you might think about the decisions I made, I made them knowing both sides of the situation."

Steak 'n' eggs myth persists in athletic nutrition

By Associated Press

Steak and eggs are the best training-table meal for football players. Loading up on carbohydrates gives wrestlers extra clout and bee pollen gives them more stamina. Vitamin B is a quick-energy builder for cyclists.

Wrong, wrong, wrong — and wrong again, says Ann Grandjean, nutrition consultant to the Chicago White Sox and the U.S. Olympic Committee's Sports Medicine Division.

She says those myths are a few of those perpetuated by athletes, pro and amateur, in the drive to be stronger, faster, bigger, better.

"One thing we run into is that most athletes at the Olympic level don't tend to have as many misconceptions as other athletes," says Grandjean. "I don't know if it's because the right kind of information is being provided at that level or if it's because the performers who do the wacky things just don't make it that far."

She says some trends seem to develop gradually at the high school and college level, while others emerge full blown as fads followed by both everyday and weekend athletes.

"We run into football players who still believe extremely high protein diets are necessary to maintain their strength," she says. "Not true. We now know it's just the amount of training that determines it.

"STEAK 'n' EGGS? Listen, there's no magic to any food eaten as a pre-competition meal. There's not a single food or diet or vitamin or combination of them that's going to make a major difference in immediate athletic performance."

But the psychological effects of a pre-game meal, or of loading up on one food or vitamin, are quite a different matter, she admits.

"There's a lot of magic in having a team eat together before a game. The players can get psyched up or calmed down or whatever is necessary. If the kind of food is something they hate, they may think it'll effect them adversely and they won't do well. If it's something they like, they may believe it helps them. But the properties of the food itself are the least significant thing.

"For instance, the concept of carbohydrate loading for wrestlers and football players and the like, in order to do better in a hurry, got blown out of proportion. It started as an interesting laboratory experiment that showed maybe athletes can go a little longer — and that only applies in something that goes perhaps two hours or more."

For some athletes, she adds, pouring on the carbohydrates can even be detrimental. For every molecule of glycogen deposited into the muscle, 2½ molecules of water are deposited, too. What has been reported as stiffness is due to excessive water in the muscles — and in wrestling, where flexibility is a must, that can be a hindrance. Besides, water can add unnecessary weight.

And what of those weekend runners who load up on the carbohydrates in the form of spaghetti? "It's just in vogue," said Grandjean , associate for the Swanson Center of Nutriation at Omaha, Neb.

BEE POLLEN for college wrestlers? "It's one supplement being sold now to the general public," she says. "Depending on what product you're into, it's bought either for stamina and strength or for endurance or to help you live longer or to prevent disease ... There's no proof that any of the properties in bee pollen are going to be in any way beneficial to athletic performance."

CANDY BARS in general and chocolate in particular are believed by many to give a quick energy boost. "Again, misleading," says Grandjean, who also serves as consultant to M&M and Snickers, the official snack foods of the 1984 Los Angeles Summer Olympic Games.

"What people think is that within minutes of ingesting sugar in any form, it goes right to the muscle and gives it a burst of energy. That's not true. The energy we use comes for the most part from the glycogen deposited in that muscle and it takes anywhere from many hours to several days to convert it to energy."

What it all comes down to, Grandjean says, is this: "If you really believe what you're doing before you compete is the right thing for you, and if it hasn't been shown to be harmful, do it."

COLLEGE FOOTBALL FOCUS

Biggest stadium biggest disgrace

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Michigan Stadium. Seats 101,701. Largest college-owned structure of its kind designed solely for football. No posts or other obstructions.

Sounds great ... except for the visiting team's dressing room.

"It's a pig sty," Indiana Coach Sam Wyche griped after Saturday's game. "It's a disgrace for a big-time football team to put the visiting team in a facility like that. The defense had two nails, the offense one and the coaches none. All they had were rusted chairs."

IF YOU'RE planning a dinner, don't seat Memphis State Coach Rex Dockery next to Alabama's Ray Perkins or Stanford's Paul Wiggin next to Arizona State's Darryl Rogers.

Alabama trounced Memphis State 44-13 and Dockery was miffed that Bama quarterback Walter Lewis took every snap and that Van Tiffin kicked a 51-yard field goal late in the fourth quarter.

"Lewis is a great player," Dockery said. "It looks like Coach Perkins tried to use him to make sure he could do well. I hope they got enough points. As I say, there'll be other days down the road. They've got to come to Memphis in two years."

Meanwhile, Arizona State's Luis Zendejas kicked five field goals, one short of the NCAA single-game record, in a 29-11 victory over Stanford. But he missed two relative chip-shots from 25 and 37 yards out in the final 11 seconds.

"I'm sorry he didn't get it, but at the same time I apologize to Stanford," said Rogers. "But I shouldn't worry about what everybody else thinks or wants."

Said Wiggin, "If he is proud of it, then so be it."

MISSOURI FANS greeted East Carolina last weekend with buttons reading, "Where in the hell is East Carolina?" They found out when East Carolina upset Mizzou 13-6.

"It's a great win for us," said Coach Ed Emory. "It will help us down the road and those people won't have to wear buttons that say, 'Where the hell is East Carolina?' They know now. To go into Big Eight country and play the only Division I-A team in the State of Missouri and come out a winner speaks for the program. The win means so much in terms of recruiting because it gets the players' attention. We weren't intimidated by coming into the Big Eight. Little old East Carolina has a pretty good team."

The Pirates are 3-1, their only setback a 47-46 loss to Florida State, which was ranked seventh in the nation at the time. When they returned from Missouri, they were met at the Kinston, N.C., airport by several hundred fans.

"The crowd was tremendous," said Emory. "The only problem was that our team buses left without me. Luckily, someone took me home. It's a good thing we won or I'd still be walking."

COLORADO'S DEFENSE has gone to the dogs. Lou Tepper, the new defensive coordinator, nicknamed the Buffs' defense "The Dog Patrol." Individually, there are "Sly Dog" (DB Victor Scott), "Shy Dog" (DB Jeff Donaldson), "Red Dog" (DB Tony Rettig), "Dirty Dog" (DB Kent Davis), "Bad Dog" (DT George Smith), "Crazy Dog" (MG Chuck Hill), "Junkyard Dog" (LB Sandy Armstrong), "Law Dog" (DB Clyde Riggins, because he maintains law and order in the secondary), "Boogie Dog" (LB Terry Irvin), "Ram Dog" (LB Barry Remington), "Mad Dog" (DT Vince Rafferty) and "Vicious Dog" (MG Don Muncie).

ST. JOHN'S (N.Y.) Coach Bob Ricca tried to impress his players last week on how important it was to be on time for Friday's bus to Altoona, Pa., where the Redmen were to play St. Francis.

"I told them if anyone was late, the bus would leave without them," Ricca said.

Guess who was an hour late?

In rainy weather and rush-hour traffic, it took Ricca almost three hours to make the normal one-hour drive from his home to St. John's on the Long Island Expressway, known by those who use it as the world's longest parking lot. And four blocks from his destination, he got a flat tire.

The team bus, however, did not leave without him.

TCU PLACEKICKER Ken Ozee flirted with tragedy during his summer job as a mine worker. Ozee was blindsided in the face by the end of a free-swinging boom chain, which missed his left eye by less than an inch. Quick medical attention resulted in plastic surgery and a few days in the hospital.

Teammate Bill Harp, an offensive lineman, saw his weight drop from 270 to 248 pounds last fall. So during the summer, Harp worked at a Fort Worth eatery and downed four medium-sized pizzas daily. He reported back at 282 pounds.

SEVERAL SMU players have fathers who were professional athletes. Four were pro football players. Blake Bernet's father (Ed) played for the Pittsburgh Steelers and Dallas Texans, Forrest Gregg Jr.'s father was a long-time star with the Green Bay Packers and Dallas Cowboys and now coaches the Cincinnati Bengals, Andrew Livingston's father (Andy) played with the Chicago Bears (Uncle Warren played with the Cowboys) and Lance McIlhenny's father (Don) played with the Packers, San Francisco 49ers and the Cowboys.

In addition, Mike Eidson's brother (Jim) played with the Cowboys, Peter Johanssen's father (Kurt) played for the Swedish junior hockey and soccer teams and Doug Hollie's stepfather did something few men have ever done — Alvin "Blue" Lewis stepped into the ring against heavyweight champ Muhammad Ali in 1972 and was dispatched in the 11th round.

SWC not ready for 'lame-brains'

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice University President Norman Hackerman says the academically rugged Southwest Conference school isn't ready to open its doors to "lame-brains" but it is willing to expand its curriculum to help athletes stay in school.

Hackerman said the schools Board of Governors plans to expand the school's tutorial staff and will add business courses that would assist athletes but would be open for all students.

"I'm not looking on it as a program designed to make it easier on athletes to finish school," Hackerman said Tuesday. "It's a program which I believe is useful to music majors, engineers who don't want ot take full business course, architects who want to know something about business and humanists.

"That's why I described these progams the way I did as academic programs. It's not to get lame brains in and out. We don't want any lame brains. It's designed for athlete as a student and that's the way a university ought to do it."

Hackerman conceded there was some opposition to the plan. "We are in the early stages of trying to develop something," Hackerman said. "There is a belief that some of the courses are not appropriate academics."

In the decisive third game, the Rebels overcame the Bulldogs on 10 hard-to-handle serves by Felicia Farias and picked up two key spike winners and a blocked shot for a winner by Stacy Harmon.

"Felicia was a terror when serving," said Baulch, "and Pat (Sanchez) and Megan (Pace) did a super job of setting. Lesa (Burnett), Stacy, Felicia and Donna (Holmes) did a good job hitting the ball. Everybody did a good job."

Lee was also a winner in junior varsity play Tuesday with a 15-10, 14-10 victory over Midland High.

The Rebels and Lee start the second half of the 4-5A season Thursday night with Lee traveling to Odessa High and Midland High hosting Odessa Permian. Varsity action is scheduled to start at 7 p.m. for both games.

Conservation center of new energy plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, acknowledging that the United States will be dependent on OPEC oil another 20 years, is looking more toward conservation as part of a national energy policy.

But, according to the latest National Energy Policy Plan unveiled Tuesday by President Reagan, Americans should enjoy relatively stable gasoline prices for the rest of this decade.

"Real" oil prices — discounting for inflation — are not expected to hit their 1982 peak of $34 a barrel until 1990, the administration said.

"The U.S. energy situation today is significantly better than it was in 1981 when my administration took office," Reagan said Tuesday.

The president said the hallmark of his policy is to "foster an adequate supply of energy at reasonable costs, minimize federal control and involvement in energy markets and promote a balanced and mixed energy resource system."

THE LATEST PLAN, which is required every two years by Congress, calls conservation a "significantly important energy resource" that the government should help develop through research and development programs.

While advocating minimum federal involvement, the administration plan says policymakers should at least look at conservation as "cost-effective alternatives to new supply development."

But it says the administration will continue to rely on "unrestricted energy markets" and the Strategic Petroleum Reserve rather than price controls or allocations if shortages occur through a repeat of the 1973 Arab oil embargo or the 1979 Iranian crisis.

"This plan does not contemplate total self-sufficiency," Energy Secretary Donald Hodel told reporters. "This contemplates working toward what I would call energy non-dependence, in which we continue to import where that makes economic sense, but not to the extent that an interruption drastically undercuts our economy or our military capability."

Observers said that despite its rhetoric, the plan reflects a new recognition on the part of the administration that energy policy is too complicated, with too much at stake, to be left to the market alone.

"WE'RE ENCOURAGED that the administration has revived energy as an issue after trying to bury it the two previous years," said Elihu Bergman of Americans for Energy Independence, an energy policy think tank.

"We disagree with their heady expectations that a free market will get us there," Bergman said. "But they at least now recognize that the government has a major role in conservation technologies, breeder reactors and synthethic fuels."

Rep. Richard Ottinger, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Energy conservation and power subcommittee, called the plan "nothing more than a good PR (public relations) document."

"For the past three years the administration has done everything within its power to destroy the most cost effective and productive energy programs," including government-subsidized weatherization and assistance programs for the poor, Ottinger said.

Hodel said the nation's vulnerability to another Arab embargo "has been reduced markedly" by the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, in which 360 million barrels of oil — the equivalent to 90 days of imports — are now stored in underground salt formations in Louisiana.

THE PLAN CREDITS Reagan's decision in January 1981 to lift all price controls on oil for helping reduce the price of gasoline from $1.39 a gallon that year to $1.27 a gallon this summer, despite a 5-cents-per-gallon increase in federal excise taxes.

But it blamed Congress' reluctance to remove similar controls on natural gas for allowing its price to rise 20 percent last year despite surpluses and falling demand.

The plan also endorses Reagan's proposal to decrease regulations on nuclear power and reaffirms Interior Secretary James Watt's programs to accelerate oil and gas development on the Outer Continental Shelf and coal leasing on federal lands in the West.

"Long-term prospects and uncertainties, rather than short-term considerations, should determine leasing policy," it said. "Although future oil prices are uncertain, we know that reserves of potentially competing energy supplies will help restrain future oil price increases."

The Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition, an organization of unions and consumer groups which fought oil decontrol and is now leading the charge against removing federal price ceilings on natural gas, disputed the report's conclusions.

"Decontrol has hurt the economy by allowing domestic prices to rise to OPEC cartel levels," said Ed Rothschild, a coalition spokesman. "To claim that their policy is a success is to claim that Sherman's march through Georgia helped renew the state's agriculture."

THE PLAN SAID oil imports will continue to supply about 12 percent of the nation's energy through the year 2000. It also projects that:

—World oil prices will stabilize at $23 to $30 per barrel this year and next, but might fall if the Iran-Iraq war ends or if world economic recovery slows. World oil prices are now averaging $29.

—Oil prices in 1990 are likely to be between $26 and $40 a barrel in 1982 dollars, about the same in spending power as the $34 price in 1982.

—The cost of synthetic fuels from coal and shale will be in the range of $50 to $80 a barrel compared with the $35 to $50 predicted in 1979, when Congress approved a $15 billion program to develop a synfuels industry.

Bullion-aires sue chairman's estate

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bullion Reserve of North America has sued the estate of its chairman, who committed suicide, and others for $23 million in an effort to recover some of millions of dollars in customer deposits authorities say are missing.

The precious metals firm also has filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of federal bankruptcy law, an attorney representing the firm said Tuesday.

Bullion Reserve sold gold, silver and other precious metals to 30,000 to 35,000 clients, Beverly Hills attorney Richard Osborn told a news conference.

Alan David Saxon, 39, who owned 89.5 percent of the 2-year-old firm's outstanding common stock and was its chairman and chief executive, committed suicide a week ago at his Venice area-home by piping motorcyle exhaust fumes into a sauna, the coroner's office said.

That same day, investigators for New York State Attorney General Robert Abrams had ordered the firm to turn over financial records within 24 hours.

Bullion Reserve sold precious metals to investors, who either accepted delivery of bullion or received certificates and paid the company to store the metal. Osborn did not know how many clients had accepted certificates and how many took delivery of the metals.

The company suspended trading last Thursday.

Osborn said his firm was hired by Bullion Reserve to look into the impact of Saxon's death on the company. The bankruptcy court petition and the lawsuits were filed Monday.

The lawsuits contend the assets Bullion Reserve seeks to recover were either on deposit with the defendants or that Bullion Reserve had never received adequate compensation for them.

The largest of the suits names Saxon, his estate and his wife as defendants. It seeks compensation for three luxury cars, two Marina Del Rey condominiums, various business holdings and cash for a total of more than $16.4 million.

Other lawsuits name firms in Texas, Illinois, and Hong Kong as defendants as well as a variety of individuals, and Osborn said more lawsuits will be filed.

Osborn said his law firm hired the accounting firm Touche Ross & Co. to perform an audit, and Abrams spokesman David Fishlow said that audit revealed that "somewhere between $55 and $60 million of precious metals supposedly in their (Bullion Reserve's) repository was not there."

Osborn said his firm was still investigating the discrepancy between Bullion Reserve assets and customer deposits. But when pressed about the $60 million figure, he admitted "numbers of that order magnitude are possible."

The Los Angeles County coroner's office said it has a tape-recorded message Saxon left before his death.

Smith asks API to fight theft

"Money talks," said Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith. And until the oil field industry is willing to spend more, there will not be any significant reduction in oilfield crime. Speaking before the Permian Basin Chapter of the American Petroleum Institute (API) Tuesday eveing, Smith said that companies need to identify and inventory every piece of equipment.

Smith also urged companies to report all thefts, "We recover thousands of dollars worth of property each year and don't know who it belongs to. That's why it is so important to report thefts."

Smith also said his department has created a crime prevention unit to assist area industry in crime prevention. Smith said that this new unit will be able to advise companies on how to lessen theft rate. Companies that have hired their own security personnel have taken the biggest steps towards reducing their risk, Smith added.

Smith emphasized that the main thing area industry can do is mark their equipment. "The value of that piece of equipmet drops significantly if it is marked. Potential buyers will be reluctant to buy if they know the equipment can be identified."

Fed probably won't change its ways

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the economy still growing and inflation still down, Federal Reserve policymakers probably are voting this week to stick with the same policies they have followed in steering the nation's money supply in recent months, economists say.

Tuesday's meetings of those policymakers, the 12-member Federal Open Market Committee, were held in secret, with a public report on what they may have decided due in about six weeks.

One private analyst, Kathleen Cooper, senior financial economist with Security Pacific National Bank in Los Angeles, said on Tuesday, "When I look at the same things the Federal Reserve is looking at — the economy, inflation, the foreign debt situation — I come to the conclusion that they really should not do much of anything."

She acknowledged that would mean interest rates likely would decline little — if any — in the near future. "But the economy has done very well in the last six months with those high rates," she said.

The Open Market Committee has the subtle and important job of feeding just enough new money into the economy to keep a healthy recovery going but not so much as to reignite high inflation.

After the money supply surged last winter, the committee voted in May to restrain monetary growth. And since then most measures of the money supply have indeed come down to within the Fed's target ranges.

That could give the policymaking arm the leeway to ease restraints. And some economists and congressmen have been urging just such a move, arguing that the availability of more money would pull interest rates down.

However, others say pumping much new money into the economy would only make a return of high inflation more likely.

One analyst, Roger Brinner, of Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass., said in that firm's new October forecast: "Since there are no justifications for a policy adjustment, it would be imprudent to presume the Federal Reserve is now pursuing much easier credit objectives."

And Michael K. Evans of Evans Economics in Washington said the Fed has already eased enough that by 1985 "tightening will begin in earnest and the party will be over."

If the committee is making no move to bring interest rates lower in the near term, and if rates remain relatively high — 11 percent for banks' prime rates and about 13 percent for home loans — "the economy will keep growing but it just won't be growing as fast as it was," Ms. Cooper said.

Minutes covering Tuesday's meeting of the Open Market Committee won't be released until after the next meeting, about six weeks from now.

The Federal Reserve manipulates the money supply — thus affecting interest rates — by buying and selling government securities. When the Fed sells securities to a bank, the bank's payment diminishes the amount of money in the banking system. When the Fed buys securities, its payments add to the amount.

Ford speaks

President Gerald Ford, who took over the nation's top elected position after Richard Nixon resigned in the aftermath of Watergate, describes the rising budget deficits. After a forum with former world leaders last summer, Ford said the United States is regarded as a leader, but must have a strong economy and staunch national defense. Presiding at the 60th annual Midland Chamber of Commerce banquet Tuesday night is outgoing president Larry Bell, standing left. With him are his wife, Ellen, and President Ford.

Men who violate wildlife laws get probation

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Two Midlanders who expressed remorse for violating the U.S. Airborne Hunting Act were placed on probation for five years Tuesday by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Sentenced were Midland farmer Lee Milton Bell, 29, and Wesley Michael Nickell, 23.

Nickell had pleaded guilty to shooting a Barbado sheep and Bell had pleaded guilty to killing an eagle, mule deer and a javelina. The incident occurred while in a helicopter piloted by J.C. Short Jr. in January 1982 south of Fort Stockton.

Short, 35, and Midland-Odessa sport-hunting dealer Larry Todd, 30, also have been found guilty by a jury of violating the U.S. wildlife hunting laws. They will be sentenced at noon Thursday in the courtroom of the George Mahon Federal Building.

Prior to the Tuesday sentencing, Bunton admonished Nickell for entering the courtroom without a tie. He was wearing blue jeans and a jacket.

"Anytime you come to this court," the judge told Nickell, "you ought to be looking like you want to come to court."

Nickell admitted that his airborne hunting "was wrong" and told the judge that "I guess that (punishment) is up to you." Bunton asked Nickell what he thought the penalty should be. His attorney, Benny Lowe, noted that Nickell had "cooperated" with the government's investigation into the airborne hunting violation and that Nickell's "involvement in the situation was of no personal gain to him."

"He is an avid sportsman and an avid hunter," said Lowe, who noted that his client "did something" — riding in a helicopter — he "always wanted to do...I do not feel there is any culpability on his part."

Bunton zeroed in on the airborne sport, saying he failed to see any sportsmanship in that form of hunting.

"I cannot condone for a minute what you did." The judge suggested Nickell could have taken a helicopter ride and foregone the hunting. In addition to the five-year probation which Bunton meted Nickell, he fined him $2,000.

"I think you have learned your lesson," the judge told Nickell. "I certainly hope so."

Bell, who was fined $3,000 in addition to the probated sentenced given him, told the judge he realizes "the seriousness of this predicament I've gotten my self into — acting without thinking...In the past two years, I've grown up...and... I've gotten wiser.

"I think it's the stupidest thing I ever did," Bell said of the airborne hunting. The farmer said he was not "just sorry" for his deed but that he was "remorseful."

Since the case against him gained publicity, Bell said he and his family have been subjected to cruel jokes, pranks and ridicule. He has lost friendships which were 20 years in developing.

As did Nickell, Bell cooperated with federal and state investigators who probed airborne-hunting violations and testified for the governments in the Todd-Short trial in mid-September.

Bell's attorney, Reagan Legg, said his client has been "a hard-working farmer," realizes he had done "a stupid thing," noted the Bell clan is "a prominent, well-respected family in Midland County" and that Bell "is a Christian person."

Legg said Bell's father is undergoing emotional trauma.

"I believe that Mr. Bell (if granted probation) will live up to the terms of probation and will never be in this court again or in any court," Legg said.

Bunton considered the pleadings of Bell and Legg.

"I'm going to agree that what you did was stupid," the judge told Bell. "You weren't thinking...Obviously, you weren't thinking."

Bunton said he recognized that it was "pretty difficult" for Bell "to testify against what you thought were your friends; they weren't."

Prior to pronouncing the sentence, Bunton said he found it hard to understand why anyone with any "sporting blood" could hunt while airborne.

Cancer victim says she's happier with electronic voice box

Marie Dillistone

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

When Marie Dillistone had a laryngectomy following the discovery of a tumor on her larynx, she worried about how it would affect her grandson.

She approached the 9-year-old in writing, explaining she could no longer talk because she had no voice box.

For a long time, the boy carefully studied the note. Looking up at her in disbelief, he asked, "Good grief, am I going to have to read your writing all of my life?"

"Right then, I knew I'd have to find another way to communicate," Mrs. Dillistone said.

She felt like a robot when she began using her electronic voice box. Her grandson told the kids in the neighborhood he had a bionic grandmother.

Her way of speech, difficult at first to grow accustomed to, has since become a source of amusement, said Mrs. Dillistone, president of the Lost Chord Club, a support group for laryngectomy patients.

There was the new maintenance man her husband Vern had hired before she scared him away when she tapped him on the shoulder with a "Pardon me," in a dark warehouse. There was the man that called the house asking for her husband, and was amazed to know a recorded answering service could ask questions.

There was the new nurse attending Vern after his surgery. As Mrs. Dillistone walked in the room, her husband woke up asking, "Well, was it a boy or a girl?"

When his wife answered in her robot voice with, "A boy," the nurse fled.

Although the frustration, confusion and therapy that began seven years ago were difficult to overcome, Mrs. Dillistone said she believes she is happier than she was before the discovery of cancer in her body.

"I am not a handicapped person," Mrs. Dillistone said Tuesday night at the fifth of the I CAN COPE educational series at the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center. "I am a person with a handicap. And I am very determined to prove I can go on with my life.

"Remember, usually with cancer, people think of dying and we get sad, worried and depressed. As far as we know, we're no closer to dying than we were before. We can die with a heart attack tonight."

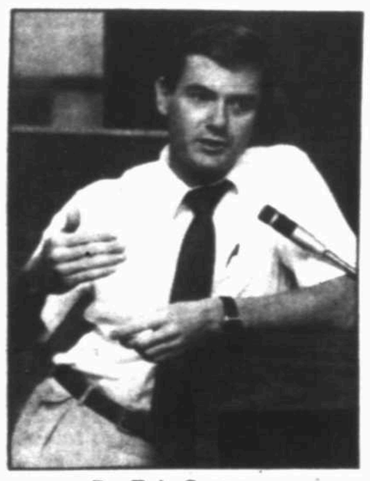

Cancer patients are aware of dying — but they are more aware of living, she said.

"It's not the quantity that's important," she said. "It's the quality. If you can have one day and make it count, why worry about tomorrow?"

Some misconceptions about the treatment of cancer with radiation were alleviated by Dr. Eric Svenson, Allison cancer center radiation oncologist, during the program.

"With radiation, most people think about atom bombs and things of that nature," Svenson said, explaining the radiation used to control cancer involves X-rays and electrons. Neutrons make objects radioactive, he said.

Andrews ambulance controversy back to where it started

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

ANDREWS — The year-long controversy over the police department's operation of the city ambulance and the search by a citizen's group for an alternative operation has gone around and around and returned to the starting mark.

"It's just back to zero point, back to where we stood," lamented Ellen Hoffman, who was instrumental in the formation of Citizens for a Safe Andrews after she was robbed Sept. 3, 1982 at her home. Police officers were unable to respond immediately because they had to give a medical run priority. "I have real bitter feelings. (The city and county) laid it on the hospital board at a time the hospital was having financial trouble. They picked the right time and the right place to do their job."

The board of Permian General Hospital decided against assuming operation of the ambulance service in its August meeting.

"They gave two reasons," said County Judge Les Brown, who attended the meeting. "They felt that it would cost them, that it would be an expense to them that they wouldn't be able to pay from the funds they generate at the hospital. And the second reason, given by one board member, (was that) it was just a dirty, messy job that nobody wanted to do."

Now, it appears, that job still will be the responsibility of Andrews Police Department.

"We are making arrangements to continue operating the service," said city manager Len Wilson.

"It looks like they're in the ambulance business," said Brown of the police department. "As far as I know, they're gearing up to meet the new state law as far as training is concerned."

The Texas Legislature this year passed a new law requiring a minimum of 40 hours of training for ambulance personnel, he explained.

Andrews Police Department assumed the responsibility of handling ambulance runs when Singleton Funeral Home halted its service in 1970. Since then, medical calls by necessity have been given preeminence over crime calls, a situation which led last year to the creation of three different study groups: Citizens for a Safe Andrews, a commission appointed by the city council and county commissioners, and a committee appointed by the county judge.

The consensus was that Permian General Hospital should operate the service, but Mrs. Hoffman does not believe the hospital's inability at present to do such should close the issue.

She indicated that she believes it should be the responsibility of the city and county to find a suitable alternative, but that Citizens for a Safe Andrews would continue its study.

"We're waiting on some legal things, response from letters to different people in the state, to see how we can handle it," she said. "You've got to have a whole town respond, and for some reason there's a lack of interest when it comes to the city council. But we'll continue...We have not given up."

Archaeologist will discuss ancient Indian artifacts

Dr. Thomas Hester

Pretrial hearing has been set in Lucas case

DENTON (AP) — A pretrial hearing has been set for Friday for Henry Lee Lucas, a drifter who claims to have killed 150 women in 16 states, and is charged with murder here in the slaying of a Florida teen-ager.

Lucas was transferred Monday from the Clay County Jail in Henrietta to Denton County Jail pending his trial Oct. 17 in the slaying of Freida Powell, 15, of Jacksonville, Fla.

Denton County Sheriff Kenneth George said Tuesday a pretrial hearing is set for Friday before State District Judge Sam Houston.

Miss Powell's skeletal remains were found in Denton County in September 1982. Lucas said the girl, whom he called Becky, was his common-law wife.

Lucas, 47, was sentenced to 75 years in prison last week after pleading guilty to the murder of 80-year-old Kate Rich of Ringgold in North Texas.

He also is charged in the slayings of four other women in Texas and one in Louisiana.

Lucas had been scheduled to attend a pretrial hearing in Georgetown Tuesday in another case, but Williamson County District Attorney Ed Walsh said that hearing was postponed. He said another date would be set after he conferred with Denton County officials.

Lucas is charged in Williamson County with the strangulation of an unidentified female hitchhiker whose body was found near Interstate 35 Oct. 31, 1979.

Whale rescued from shallow water

GALVESTON (AP) — A 400-pound whale was breathing but not eating after being rescued from shallow waters, and veterinarians were considering whether to force feed it.

The creature, which scientists have named Tootsie, was found in the shallows near Port Aransas on Monday. It was transported that evening to Sea-Arama Marineworld park in Galveston.

Believed to be a pygmy killer whale, the mammal was swabbed down with zinc oxide and sprayed with water to keep her sensitive skin moist, said Sea-Arama spokeswoman Sandra Alexander on Tuesday.

Park scientists were uncertain whether the animal was a pygmy killer whale, since the species is rare in the Gulf of Mexico off Texas, said Ms. Alexander.

A final determination — to be made by counting the whale's teeth — could not be made until the whale opened its mouth, she said.

The 7-foot-9-inch whale was breathing without assistance in a holding tank, and except for a small cut near a fin it did not appear to be injured, the spokeswoman said.

The whale was being given antibiotics to fight infections. Once it is past the stress of being stranded and hauled overland, veterinarians probably will draw blood and attempt to find out why it beached itself, Ms. Alexander said. It may also be force-fed if it doesn't begin eating soon, she said.

Whether Sea-Arama keeps the whale will be up to the government, said Ms. Alexander. None of the beached whales that Sea-Arama has tried to save has lived, she said.

Odessan pleads for mercy in drug case

An Odessa carpenter who said he is shunning drugs, is no longer associating "with my past cohorts," and is reading the Bible pleaded for mercy, as he stood before U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton for sentencing Tuesday.

"I know I've done wrong in the the past," said the 29-year-old carpenter, Bryce Aldon Frazier, "and I'll try to do right in the future."

Frazier pleaded guilty Sept. 12 to selling amphetamines to an undercover agent last May 12. He could have been sentenced up to five years in prison and fined $15,000.

Instead, Bunton sentenced Frazier to one year in prison, ordered him to undergo treatment for drug abuse while in the federal corrections institution in Fort Worth and said he would be on special parole for five years following the serving of the sentence.

Bunton noted that Frazier has had some "pretty serious" drug-related problems.

"Anybody who uses drugs has to be completely selfish — not thinking of his wife, parents or anything else...I do think you need treatment," the judge said. "You're reading the Bible — no better direction is to be found." To help him recover from his drug dependency, Bunton nevertheless ordered Frazier to undergo drug treatments.

"This time next year, you'll be building houses around here," Bunton said. "I certainly hope so."

His court-appointed attorney, Tom McCall, had noted that Frazier "has the love and support of his wife.

"He has taken an interest in reading the Bible," McCall said. "I think he has taken an interest in the Lord. He wants to do what is right...and doesn't want to continue being a burden to society."

At the 8:30-11:30 a.m. workshop he will demonstrate clog dancing, story-telling techniques and teach students how to do hambone rhythms and play "instruments" such as spoons, bones and paper bags.

Holt will perform in concert at 7:30 p.m. in UTPB's new performance hall. The performance is free and open to the public. It offers tales, ballads and tunes told and played on instruments such as the banjo, hammered dulcimer, autoharp, squeeze box, guitar, harmonica, bones, spoons and jews harp.

The program, sponsored by student music organization Midessa Musica, is part of a district event for the Texas Music Educators Association.

Cancer victim happier with electronic voice box

(Contiued from Page 1C)

"We don't have neutrons, so we don't make things radioactive," he said. "We don't make the patient radioactive, or the patient's room radioactive. We still have side effects, but they aren't as intense."

In treating skin cancer, which usually is treated with surgery unless a deformity would result, Svenson said redness of the skin, or a "sunburn affect" occurs with radiation. Diarrhea also is common following radiation.

Dryness of the mouth is a permanent side effect of treatments for cancer of the vocal chords. Excessive radiation on the back of the neck can cause paralysis, to the bones can cause them to slow in growth, to muscles and tissues can cause them to break down and excessive amounts of radiation to certain organs, such as the liver and kidney, can cause them to fail.

The line is drawn at 20 percent, meaning if there is a one out of five chance cancer will return, the patient is treated with radiation, he said.

Surgery and cellular implants, which are inserted in the body for a period of a few days, sometimes are combined with radiation treatments for cancers of certain parts of the body.

Although a cancer may be arrested with radiation, the effects to the patient may outweigh the dangers of cancer, according to Svenson.

"If improvement starts to raise complications, we have to ask if it's really worthwhile," Svenson said. "We try to treat the patient, rather than the X-ray.

"Radiation is between the two (surgery and chemotherapy, which is the treating of cancer with drugs). The philosophy is we cover larger areas than a surgeon would want to remove but we normally don't treat the whole body like chemotherapy would do.

"In a way, it becomes a game of chance," Svenson said. "But that's basically what cancer is."

Midland police officer dies from apparent heart attack

L.H. Burney

"He was an exceptional patrol sergeant, a leader who was highly regarded by everyone," Chief of Police Wayne Gideon said today in commenting on the unexpected death of police officer and former city fireman L.H. Burney.

Burney, 48, died of an apparent heart attack about 7:45 p.m. Tuesday. He was traveling alone in his pickup truck 30 miles north of Big Spring on Texas Highway 350 at the time.

The vehicle left the road, went through a fence and came to rest in a pasture. He had no known history of heart trouble, according to Gideon. An autopsy is scheduled for today.

Burney began his employment with the city as a fireman in 1958. He joined the police force in November 1964 and was named Officer of the Year by the Midland Optimist Club in 1968.

"His file is full of commendatory letters from the public," said Gideon. "He was an excellent leader and a positive influence on the younger officers. His superiors consistently rated him outstanding in his job performance."

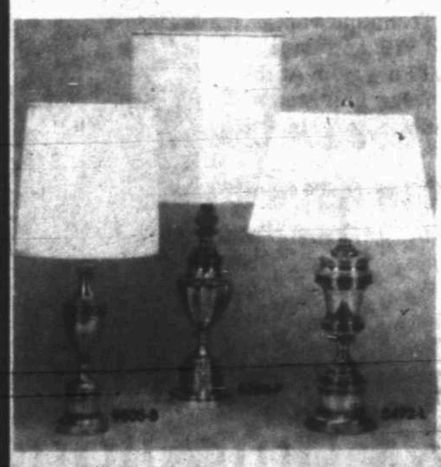

Burney was originally from Snyder and was a 1953 graduate of Ira High School, where he starred in baseball, basketball and football.

"He was a quiet, very private type person," said Gideon. "He will be missed."

Herb bread made in food processor

Sour Cream Herb Ring bread can be made quickly and easily in a food processor.

Most food processors make a single loaf of bread, which is fine for small households. The accompanying recipe for Sour Cream Herb Ring is an example of how little effort it takes to prepare distinctive yeast rolls and bread.

HERB SOUR CREAM RING
(Makes one loaf)

2¾ cups flour
5 tablespoons margarine
3 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon dried marjoram leaves
¼ teaspoon dried thyme leaves
¼ teaspoon dried oregano leaves
1 package active dry yeast
¼ cup warm water (105 degrees — 115 degrees)
½ cup dairy sour cream
¼ cup milk

With metal blade in place combine flour, three tablespoons margarine, sugar, marjoram, thyme and oregano in bowl; process five to 10 seconds to combine. Dissolve yeast in warm water; pour through feed tube. Add sour cream and begin processing. Pour milk through feed tube in a fast stream until ball forms, about 10 to 15 seconds. Continue processing for 60 seconds to knead dough.

Carefully remove dough from processor bowl. Shape into a ball and place in a greased bowl, turning to grease top. Cover; let rise in a warm place, free from draft, until doubled in bulk, about one hour.

Punch dough down. Divide into 10 pieces and shape each into a ball. Arrange balls in a circle in a grased 6-1/2 cup ring mold. Cover; let rise in a warm place, free from draft, until doubled in bulk, about one hour and 10 minutes.

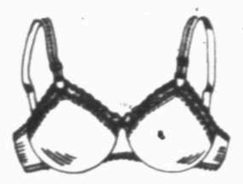

Melt remaining margarine; pour over dough. Bake at 375 degrees for 20 to 25 minutes or until done. Remove from pan and cool on wire rack.

Meat sauce non-traditional

2 tablespoons olive oil
1 large onion, chopped medium fine
½ cup green pepper, finely chopped
1 pound ground chuck beef
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
29-ounce can tomato puree
1½ teaspoons dried crushed oregano
½ teaspoon dried crushed basil
2 tablespoons soy sauce

In a large saucepot heat oil; add onion, green pepper and beef; over medium heat, with a fork, mash beef until it loses its red color. Add garlic, tomato puree, oregano, basil and soy sauce. Cover and simmer, stirring often, until rather thick — 20 to 30 minutes. Stir in salt and pepper. Serve hot with spaghetti. —(AP)

Elegant Chicken Kiev is the Russian gour met version of stuffed chicken breasts.

Chicken Kiev can be made ahead

Of all the forms of hospitality a dinner party is perhaps the most rewarding for both hostess and guests. So invite a few friends over, buy a bottle of your favorite wine and serve elegant Chicken Kiev.

Chicken Kiev is stuffed chicken breasts containing a savory blend of light margarine, chopped chives, salt and pepper. It is coated with saltine crackers for crunch and deep fried in oil for added flavor.

Much of the preparation can be done ahead of time so more time can be spent with guests. The chicken breasts can be stuffed, coated and refrigerated up to six hours before serving.

CHICKEN KIEV
(Makes four servings)

2 large whole breasts of chicken
1/3 cup light margarine
2 tablespoons chopped chives
1/2 teaspoon salt
Dash black pepper
1 egg
1 tablespoon milk
20 saltine crackers, finely crumbed (about 2/3 cup crumbs)
Oil

Cut chicken breasts in half along ridges of breast bone. Carefully skin and bone each half without cutting through flesh. Place each piece between sheets of plastic wrap. Pound very thin with smooth surfaced meat hammer or rolling pin; do not tear flesh. Remove plastic wrap.

Place 1-1/2 tablespoons light margarine in the center of each breast. Combine chives, salt and pepper; sprinkle over spread. Roll each breast and overlap sides so that spread mixture is completely enclosed; flesh will adhere without toothpicks or skewers.

Beat egg and milk together. Roll chicken in saltine crumbs, then in beaten egg mixture and again in saltine crumbs; coat well. Refrigerate at least 20 minutes.

Deep fry chicken rolls in hot oil at 375 degrees until well browned on all sides, about eight minutes. Drain on paper towels. Serve hot.

PARSLIED RICE

3 cups water
1-1/2 cups white rice
1/2 cup finely chopped onion
1/4 cup light margarine
1 teaspoon salt
3/4 cup chopped parsley

Combine water, rice, onion, light margarine and salt in saucepan; stir once. Cover and bring to a boil over high heat. Reduce heat and simmer until all the liquid is absorbed (see rice package for cooking time). Stir in parsley; serve.

Pig makes luau authentic

By Merle Ellis

When you're married to a Hawaiian princess, as I have been for the past 22 years, and when the weather is still warm, you know you've got a decision to make. Either you're going to have to take the lady home to bask in the balmy breezes and sip mai tais, or you're going to have to have a luau.

A real Hawaiian luau isn't really real without Kalua Pig baked for hours in a hole in the ground called an imu, along with poi, lomi salmon, laulaus, and other good stuff stuffed into ti leaves. But for a fun party this time of year, and for something of a vicarious trip to paradise, there are few more effective themes from which to borrow than an Hawaiian luau.

Such a party here on the mainland is a fun theatrical event rather than an authentic gastronomic experience.

The setting, lighting, costumes and props – all have as much to do with the success of a luau as the food itself.

Invite your guests to come colorfully and comfortably dressed for the occasion: muumuus, shifts, aloha shirts, grass skirts – whatever – but no ties and, if you really want to get into the mood, no shoes.

For sets and lights, find a few tiki torches and put out some grass mats for your guests to sit on. The lamps and mats are available or may be ordered from almost any houseware, garden, import or well-stocked hardware store.

Fill large wooden bowls or baskets with fruit: Oranges, pineapples, coconuts, bananas, papayas, and mangoes.

Get flower leis for your guests at your local florist for much less than you think. If they're too expensive, check your local party favors store – you probably can get the same thing in plastic for a lot less.

And, finally, the food. There are thousands of great dishes that fit the theme.

Some recipes call for ingredients you may think you can't find. But most of them you can, and for those that you can't, there are substitutes.

Orange Colada brunch delight

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

It's always gratifying to pass along a recipe that isn't timeworn. One new enough to hold surprise and that pleases a wide number of tasters. One that might "catch on."

I'm talking about Orange Colada. I dreamed it up, and with a helping hand from a friend, worked out the recipe in the handiest way possible. You can make a quart of it in an electric blender at one time. And you don't have to crack ice for the drink. We specify the number and size of ice cubes to add.

Almost any of the popular main dishes served for brunch taste good after Orange Colada. For example, eggs with bacon or ham and hominy grits. Or eggs with chicken livers and mushrooms plus toasted English muffins. Or a classic Quiche Lorraine — made with an unsweetened egg custard, Swiss cheese and ham.

To nibble with those last cups of coffee after the main dish, you might like to serve petite Danish Pastries or slices of Hungarian Nut Roll made with yeast-risen coffee-cake dough. All this, of course, for a weekend company brunch.

FRESH ORANGE COLADA

3 to 4 medium oranges
2-3rds cup white rum
1-3rd cup orange-flavor liqueur
1-3rd cup cream of coconut, at room temperature and stirred before measuring 18 ice cubes (3 cups), from trays whose sections each hold 2 tablespoons Orange slices, halved
Fresh mint sprig

Squeeze enough juice from the oranges to make 1 cup; turn into an electric blender with the rum, liqueur, cream of coconut and ice cubes. Whirl rapidly until ice melts and mixture foams. Pour into cocktail glasses, garnish with orange slices and, if used, mint sprigs. Serve at once. Makes 4 cups.

Note: Valencia oranges, abundant now, are excellent to use in this Colada.

Salmon added to cucumber salad

CUCUMBER SALAD

Great partner for fresh or canned salmon.
1 medium-sized cucumber
1 small sweet onion
¼ cup white vinegar
¼ cup water
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon sugar

Pare cucumber and slice thin. Peel onion and slice into thin rounds; separate into rings. Thoroughly stir together the vinegar, water, salt and sugar; add cucumber and onion; cover and chill at least 1 hour. Drain and serve. Makes 2 to 3 servings. —(AP)

Brewer's art covers many different beers

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

I have talked to many wine makers and liquor distillers over the years, but I had never met a beer brewer, until I lunched with Jim Steer a few weeks ago.

Steer, master brewer at a major Canadian brewery, America's oldest brewery, where he has worked for 20 years, looked more like a Wall Street stockbroker than the image I had pictured of a beer brewer.

His knowledge of brews soon became clear as he proceeded to shoot down some myths about them. For instance, Canadian beers are not higher in alcohol than American brews. Beer is best served not ice-cold but at about 40 degrees. And some of the so-called "light" brews have more calories than the regular ones.

I also learned that Americans quaffed more than 5.5 billion gallons of "suds" in 1982 alone.

Steer began his career as a microbiologist working with the yeast used in brew. He then progressed to assistant brewer, brew master and, finally, master brewer. In the process, he learned virtually every aspect of brewing, from producing the brew to bottling or canning it.

Among the types of beer and ale that Steer has worked with are:

— Light Beer: brewed in a special way aimed at reducing calories.

— Lager: the proper name for most beers brewed in America.

— Stout: an intense, bitter brew, with underlying sweetness. Very dark and almost syrupy.

— Ale: ranges from pale to deep amber. Sightly heavier, with a fuller body than regular beers.

— Bock: dark brown with a sharp aroma. Originally made for use in May, it is now produced the year around.

— Malt Liquor: slightly more bitter than lager and more robust.
It also has more alcohol.

Beer has been used in cooking for centuries. The Belgians are believed the first Europeans to have made culinary specialties with the brew.

LIVING TODAY

TV causes concern

By SHARON A. HILLIS

It has been brought to my attention that many parents are concerned about the negative effects of television on their families.

But because television also informs and entertains, parents are not willing to throw away the set either.

According to many educators, television critics and organizations such as Action for Children's Television, many good strategies can be used by parents to change family viewing habits.

Where the television is located in the home, for example, influences its use by children. By locating the set in a room where other activity occurs, such as piano practicing, there will be competition for air time. Parents can also keep the set out of the children's bedrooms where they have less control, and away from the dining area, where it interferes with conversation.

Also, providing alternative activities in the TV room, such as craft materials, puzzles, books and games may distract children from the set.

How families watch television is also important. "Watching television" usually means turning on the set and keeping it on, taking potluck from among the shows — good or bad, new or reruns — that happen to be on the air at the time.

But "watching planned programs" means making a decision to turn on the set for a specific broadcast and then to turn it off when the program ends.

As children learn to review the weekly TV listings, discuss and decide with their parents which programs to watch, they will become more discriminating viewers.

Used wisely, television can even stimulate family interaction. For example, parents can choose to have only one television set so the family must watch TV together. They can also watch TV with their children whenever possible and make a conscious choice to not let it become a "babysitter."

BETTER BUSINESS

Mail-order shopping requires caution

By LINDA TRUITT

Each year hundreds of thousands of consumers shop by mail. They find mail-order shopping to be the most convenient way to satisfy their shopping needs.

To meet the demand, more than six thousand firms share the U.S. mail-order market with total annual sales estimated to be more than $40 billion.

Mail-order companies were responsible for the largest number of complaints handled by Better Business Bureaus in 1982.

The most frequent complaint received from consumers is failure to deliver ordered merchandise. To help alleviate the problem, in 1976 the Federal Trade Commission put into effect a trade regulation rule for the mail-order industry.

Briefly, the rule requires: A mail-order company must ship ordered merchandise within 30 days from the time it receives an order, unless the offer clearly and conspicuously states some other time frame for shipment. If the company cannot ship within a 30-day period, or within the time it advertised, it must notify the customer of the delay.

This notice of delay must be accompanied by a free means of reply, such as a postage-paid postcard, by which the customer has the right to cancel the order or agree to the delay.

If a customer chooses to cancel rather than wait longer for the merchandise, the company is required to give a full refund of any money paid within seven business days from the date it received the cancellation notice. If the money has been charged, the company must provide a copy of a credit memorandum which shows the customer's account cleared of all related charges within one billing period.

If the customer does not respond to the notice the company has the right to assume that he agrees to a delay of up to 30 days.

The FTC's rule does not apply to all of the mail-order industry. A few of those products which are excluded are photofinishing, seeds and growing plants and magazine subscriptions. The rule also does not apply to C.O.D. (cash on delivery) orders, orders with which are not paid for in advance or which are not billed nor charged until shipment is made.

The only problem with this regulation is that it is almost impossible to enforce. The Postal Service estimates 500,000 million dollars is stolen each year from businesses and individuals through mail fraud.

It has been the experience of the BBB of the Permian Basin, Inc. that many companies fail to send the required delay notice, which means it is up to the consumer to protect himself. The following guidelines are offered for consumers ordering by mail for the approaching holiday season:

— The consumer should beware of exaggerated claims for products or unrealistically low prices for merchandise.

— Catalog descriptions should be read carefully. A copy of the ad or brochure ordered from should be kept.

— Before ordering, consumers should know if the merchandise is offered on a satisfaction guaranteed or moneyback basis.

— All forms should be completely filled out, including name and address and, when appropriate, where the gift should be delivered.

— Cash should never be sent through the mail. Checks or money orders should be used for payment.

— A record of orders including the company's name, address and the date the order was placed should be kept.

— When the order arrives, it should be checked promptly to make sure the merchandise received is correct and in satisfactory condition. The company should be notified immediately if there is a problem.

Linda Truitt is president of the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

Blueberry cake popular

BLUEBERRY KUCHEN

One of our most popular coffee cakes.

2 cups unbleached all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup (½ of a quarter-pound stick) butter
¾ cup sugar
1 large egg
½ cup milk
2 cups fresh blueberries
Streusel Topping, see recipe

On wax paper thoroughly stir together flour, baking powder and salt. In a large bowl cream butter and sugar; beat in egg until blended. Add flour mixture and milk; stir just until dry ingredients are moistened. Fold in blueberries. Turn into a buttered and floured 9-inch springform pan; sprinkle with Streusel Topping. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in center comes out without any batter adhering to it — 45 to 50 minutes. (If Topping begins to get very brown towards end of baking, cover loosely with foil.) Cool on a wire rack for 5 minutes. Loosen edges; remove springform band. Serve warm.

STREUSEL TOPPING: In a medium bowl stir together 1-3rd to ½ cup firmly packed light brown sugar, 3 tablespoons unbleached all-purpose flour and 2 teaspoons cinnamon. With a pastry blender cut in 3 tablespoons butter until in fine particles; stir in ½ cup finely chopped walnuts. —(AP)

Ice cream southern-style

SOUTHERN ICE CREAM

1 large egg
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 pints vanilla ice cream

In an electric blender whirl together until smooth the cheese, sugar, egg and vanilla. In the large bowl of an electric mixer at low speed, beat ice cream with cheese mixture just until blended. Turn into a 9 by 5 by 3-inch loaf pan; tightly cover top of pan with saran. Freeze to firm. Makes eight ½ cup servings. —(AP)

DEAR ABBY

Mother keeps affairs in family

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago when I found out that my husband was having an affair with my mother, I practically went into shock! My husband said he loved me and wanted another chance. We'd been married for eight years and had three children, so I forgave him and my mother, too. Things were better for a little while, then a week ago he confessed that he had never stopped seeing my mother.

I told my two sisters about it, and they both said Mom had slept with their husbands, too. (Our father doesn't know this, but he's caught her with other men.)

I want to leave my husband but I hate to break up my family. My parents come over often and my mom flirts openly with my husband, which tears me apart. (She says if she acts "cold" to him, Dad would wonder why.)

I think I'm losing my mind, Abby. I'm so depressed, I cry all the time. Please help me. I don't want to be a 26-year-old divorced mother of three. - GOING TO PIECES

DEAR GOING: There are worse things than being a 26-year-old divorced mother of three. And living as you are is one of them.

Run, do not walk, to the nearest shelter for abused women in your area. You need emotional support and counseling in order to get your head together, bolster your self-esteem and learn how to make it on your own. Your husband desperately needs counseling - and so does your mother -- but for the moment, look out for yourself.

DEAR ABBY: I am a student on a limited budget. What should I say when a stranger accosts me on the street and asks for money? I am entirely dependent on my parents for financial support, and I simply cannot afford to give away money.

Instead of just walking away and feeling guilty, would it be all right to say, "I'm sorry I have no money to spare, but I will say a prayer for you"? - VANCOUVER, B.C.

DEAR VAN: I wouldn't recommend apologizing, explaining or offering to say a prayer for a stranger who accosts you on the street and asks for money. Just say "No" and keep walking. And if you want to pray for him, go ahead and pray. You don't need a person's permission to pray for him.

(If you put off writing letters because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Ice cream undergoes renaissance

Hearst Feature Service

Right up there with baseball, apple pie and motherhood, ice cream is another national institution that's more popular now than ever before. For that matter, the entire world is in the grip of what has been called an "ice cream renaissance."

What marks this recent phenomenon is the trend toward bringing back the refreshing, old-fashioned treat of yesteryear — ice cream with less air and more butterfat and egg yolk. And the ice cream that can most closely reflect those preferences is the homemade, hand-cranked kind that fits deftly into the leisure-time, family-oriented activity category.

Just the business of stirring up the mixture — easy enough for beginner cooks — and assembling the freezer, ice and salt builds anticipation. Then the actual cranking part of it becomes the piece de resistance, so to speak, of togetherness.

Cones can be purchased, but for a special treat, scoop homemade ice cream into homemade cones baked between the smooth grill plates of a waffle iron or a krumkake iron. Those appliances will provide thin, crisp, easily-shaped cones.

For a gala event, providea selection of toppings, fruits, nuts and whipped cream to build a sundae to suit the wildest fancy.

HOMEMADE VANILLA ICE CREAM

1½ cups sugar
1 tablespoon cornstarch
½ teaspoon salt
3 cups whole milk
1 whole egg
1 egg yolk
1 can (5.33 ounces) evaporated milk
1 cup whipping cream
1 tablespoon vanilla

1. In saucepan, combine sugar, cornstarch and salt. Stir in whole milk and stir over medium heat until mixture begins to simmer. Simmer one minute over low heat.

2. In heat-proof bowl, lightly beat egg and egg yolk. Stir in about 1 cup of hot milk mixture, stirring constantly. Stir egg-milk mixture back into hot milk mixture and return to heat. Cook and stir over low heat 2 minutes or until slightly thickened. Cool.

3. Pour evaporated milk, whipping cream and vanilla into egg mixture and chill.

4. Pour into ice cream canister. Freeze according to manufacturer's directions. Makes 2 quarts.

COOKIE CONES

3 eggs
⅔ cup melted butter
⅔ cup sugar
2 teaspoons vanilla
1 cup all-purpose flour

1. In mixing bowl, beat together eggs, sugar, melted butter and vanilla. Stir in flour until smoothly blended.

2. Fit flat griddle plates on electric waffle iron and preheat to medium-hot.

3. For each 5-inch cone, use 1 1/2 tablespoons of the batter for 7- to 8-inch cone, use 3 to 4 tablespoons.

4. Pour batter onto center of hot griddle; close tightly to flatten. Let bake until golden, about 1 1/2 to 2 minutes.

5. Quickly lift off cookie with a fork and place on a flat surface. Immediately wrap around cone form. Hold firmly at tip to make a sharp point. Let cone cool, seam side down, on a rack until firm about 2 minutes. Remove cone form to use again. Makes about nine large cones.

Beef can be purchased more conveniently

Hearst Feature Service

Although nobody seems to want to admit that he or she eats eats beef any more, the supermarket meat case devotes more space to beef than anything else. Somebody, obviously, is buying it.

Nutritionists who warn against the dangers of cholesterol and too much fat in the diet seldom suggest that we should give up beef altogether. It wouldn't work, anyway. A nation that makes a chain of hamburger stands its No.1 restaurant business is never going to give it up completely.

On the other hand, we do seem to be eating less beef. Aside from nutritional considerations, part of the reason is that it has gotten more expensive. This year, meat prices have gone down a few percentage notches. Still, many families consider it a luxury.

THERE ARE WAYS to buy beef to make it more convenient and less of a luxury. It helps to have enough freezer space to store more than five pounds, although some of the following ideas can be useful with only a refrigerator. The secret is to know what you're buying and to be willing to do some of the work you might ordinarily pay the butcher to do. The reward is to have exactly the meat you want at substantially less cost than if you had paid somebody else for the convenience.

Moreover, many cuts of meats are not one single muscle but several different ones tied together with cartilage, fat or bone. Theoretically, for optimum eating, each of those muscles should be cooked a different way.

The most expensive cuts of meat are these single tender muscles — a tenderloin or a rib-eye, for example. These highly desirable single muscles appear in many of combination cuts, which are much less expensive to buy. Take a chuck steak, for example. The oval-shaped muscle is actually part of the rib-eye. You can tear it out of the cut, hardly using a knife at all.

Buy a few chuck roasts and pull a few rib-eyes from them and you can make yourself a stack of boneless rib steaks for the price of chuck roasts. And you still have the rest of the roast to pot roast or cut into stew meat.

IT NOT ONLY makes economic sense, it also makes culinary sense. The rib-eye is a tender muscle and should be broiled, grilled or sauteed. The rest of the chuck roast is made up of tougher muscles that should be braised or stewed. If you braise the whole piece to make a pot roast without taking out the rib-eye, the tender meat would get dry long before the rest of the cut cooked to the point where it was tender. On the other hand, if you tried to barbecue the whole chuck steak, the rib eye would be tender while the rest would be tough.

The same sort of thing can be done with round steaks, which are actually three pieces of meat tied together with thin cartilage. The top round — the small, rectangular muscle at the top of the formation — is the tender one, suitable for grilling. The bottom round — the large rectangular muscle — is too tough to barbecue, but it makes a good Swiss steak. The eye — the disc-shaped muscle — is actually the driest. It makes fair Swiss steak, too. Sometimes, the square muscle next to the top round is left attached. It is the sirloin tip, a tough cut best suited to braising. These muscles on the round can just be pulled apart — no knife work necessary.

The more expensive cuts lend themselves to this way of thinking, too. Despite its high price, porterhouse steak can sometimes be the best value in the meat case. On one side of the T-bone in a porterhouse is the small, round filet, as in filet mignon. On the other is the rectangular New York strip.

EACH ONE OF those steaks, sold boneless, costs a small fortune. As a porterhouse, the price is almost always less, and all you have to do is run a knife along the T-bone.

If you have a freezer, you can buy 10 or 15 pounds of beef when it is on sale, spend an hour or so cutting and wrapping and have an imposing stack of packages ready to be thawed and cooked appropriately.

If you do not have a freezer, there is still a way to take advantage of this information. For instance:

Buy two chuck roasts, three-and-a-half to four pounds each. Look for roasts with the largest visible rib-eye. When you get them home, first lift out the rib-eye. To simplify matters, it is OK to leave the bone attached. (Technically, you then have a club steak.) You should have about one-and-a-half to two pounds of steak, the cost of which if bought separately would be close to the total cost of the roast.

Now, cut the remaining meat off the bones and into one-and-a-half-inch cubes. You should have about four pounds of stewing beef, virtually a bonus. Make it into beef stew or chili. Or divide it up and grind or chop some in a food processor or grinder to make hamburgers or meat loaf. Cook steaks for that night's supper, and while you're at it, prepare beef stew. It can be served the next day — it can only get better upon heating.

THE BONES CAN be browned and simmered with carrots, onions, celery and bay leaf to make stock for soup. Total savings on two chuck roasts over buying the same meat cut into its component parts — about $8.

Of course, if you do have a freezer, any of the pieces in the above scenario can be wrapped and frozen separately at any stage. If possible, however, cook the stew or any braised dish first and then freeze it. The meat comes out juicier than if it is frozen first.

Carrot soup creamy

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

CARROT SOUP

It's the creamy variety.

2 tablespoons butter
½ cup chopped onion
4 cups clear fat-free chicken broth
3 cups thinly sliced pared carrots
½ cup diced (¼ inch) pared potato
½ teaspoon sugar
½ teaspoon grated orange rind
¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup half-and-half

In a medium saucepan melt butter; add onion and cook gently until transparent — about 5 minutes. Add chicken broth, carrots, potato, sugar, orange peel, nutmeg and salt and bring to a boil. Cover and simmer until vegetables are very soft — about 10 minutes. In an electric blender whirl mixture, ½ at a time, return to saucepan, stir in cream and heat. Makes 6 cups.

The Sherwood Point Lighthouse near Sturgeon Bay, Wis., is one ofthe last two manned lighthouses on the Great Lakes, according to the U.S. Coast Guard. Sherwood Point is 100 years old.

Last of the lighthouses will become automated

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Lonely watches for lighthouse keepers are already a thing of the past at the 100 beacons that dot the shores of the stormy Great Lakes, and soon the last two of them will become fully automated.

This fall, the lighthouse at Sherwood Point near Sturgeon Bay, Wis., will be fully mechanized. Other than regular visits for maintenance, it is already unmanned.

About the same time, the Coast Guard lighthouse at Point Betsie north of Frankfort, Mich., also will be fully automated, Capt. David Freeborn, chief of navigation services at the Coast Guard's 9th District headquarters in Cleveland, said.

The Sherwood Point light, sweeping its beam across Green Bay and Sturgeon Bay from a narrow peninsula about 140 miles north of Milwaukee, is a century old this year.

"When we opened it up this April, we had a 500-watt light, a fog signal and a radio beacon," Petty Officer Dennis Cleary of Sturgeon Bay said.

But since then, he said, "the automated fog signal was put on a lighted buoy (offshore). They took the radio beacon completely out.

"The 500-watt bulb is still in there. If we have a report that it's out, we'll go out and fix it. We still go out there and check the place out and make sure there are no vandals."

The daily job of turning the light on and off is handled now by an electronic light detector.

The last step in automating the 35-foot tower — installation of a mechanical bulb changer — will come within two months, Cleary said. He likened the six-bulb changer to a Ferris wheel. When one bulb burns out, the mechanism rotates and the next bulb turns on.

The Coast Guard began automating its Great Lakes lighthouses in 1960, largely to cut down on personnel costs, said Lt. Brian Tousley of the Coast Guard in Cleveland. He is head of the Ocean Engineering Section for the Great Lakes and oversees the Lighthouse Automation and Maintenance Program.

Tousley said another reason for automating was that the lighthouse keeper's job was a dreary one done equally well by machines.

"It's usually unpleasant duty," he said. "Contrary to the romantic idea people have, it's isolated, it's lonely."

His sentiments were echoed by Raymond G. Ellithorpe, who manned Sherwood Point for more than 20 years, until he retired in 1965, and still lives in a home he built almost in its shadow.

"I've always been of the bent of creating automatic equipment that will do a job, save money and relieve personnel," Ellithorpe said. "I made a few pieces of equipment that did just that."

He said the automated lighthouse, except possibly in extreme weather, should safely guide ships, especially since the larger ones are equipped with such aids as radar.

"For the people that are running large craft, such as tankers and freighters, I don't think it matters," he said. "I think for the little guys, they should be able to find their way if they're a little bit careful and have enough reasoning power to use common sense."

William O'Hern, 84, who worked with Ellithorpe at Sherwood Point for 18 months before retiring in the mid 1950s, said the timing for the move to automation was appropriate.

"The old keepers were retiring," he said, "and the new fellows didn't like to stay up as long as we did."

Tousley said the Coast Guard also wants to automate many of the lakes' 540 other lights, ranging from steel skeleton towers to simple light-and-pole arrangments.

Last month members of the Great Lakes Lighthouse Keepers Association gathered at Presque Isle, off Michigan's Saginaw Bay, to swap stories and make plans to preserve lighthouses.

The year-old association, in conjunction with local historical societies, is restoring lighthouses because "too many are in danger of sliding into the lakes," said Darla VanHoey, of Southfield, Mich. Its plans include converting some lighthouses into museums.

Nicaragua: U.S.-registered plane downed

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Defense Ministry says Nicaraguan soldiers shot down a U.S.-registered transport plane carrying supplies to CIA-backed rebels in the northern mountains.

A ministry statement issued late Tuesday said a DC-3 transport plane registered in Oklahoma was shot down 90 miles north of Managua, the Nicaraguan capital, after taking off from Honduras.

The ministry said two Nicaraguan rebel pilots and a mechanic were captured by soldiers of the leftist government, while two men died in the crash and two escaped after parachuting from the plane.

Elsewhere in Central America, leftist Salvadoran rebels said they overran four army posts, killing 16 soldiers, and Guatemala's army said it killed 23 leftist rebels in an ambush.

In Tegucigalpa, capital of Honduras, a spokesman for the U.S.-backed Democratic Nicaraguan Force rebel group said the transport plane was on a "special mission" when it was forced to land because of "mechanical difficulties."

The three men captured were identified by officials in Managua as Roberto Amador Alvarez, a former major of the National Guard of late Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza, former National Guard Capt. Hugo Reinaldo Aguilar, and Jaime Lau Ramirez, a mechanic.

The Honduran-based rebels, led mostly by former officers of the National Guard, receive aid from the CIA. They and a separate guerrilla force fighting in southern Nicaragua are trying to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government.

The Democratic Nicaraguan Force announced that Adolfo Calero Portocarrero, a Nicaraguan businessman, has been named president of the group, replacing a seven-man directorate composed of former guardsmen and businessmen.

The Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry said armed rebels riding in speed boats destroyed two fuel tanks at Benjamin Zeledon, a port on Nicaragua's Atlantic coast.

The ministry said the attacks Sunday destroyed 380,000 gallons of gasoline and diesel fuel.

Nicaraguan infantry commander Capt. Francisco Leon Picado told reporters that rebel attacks on four northern towns were turned back, with 60 insurgents and 16 government troops killed over the past four days.

Late Tuesday, Costa Rica and Honduras warned they would use force to block Nicaraguan moves against rebel groups in their territory.

Responding to remarks by Nicaraguan Junta Coordinator Daniel Ortega, who last week said his troops would enter Costa Rica and Honduras to chase rebels, a Honduran presidential press release said such moves would be met by "all the resources of the armed forces."

Costa Rica, which has no army, condemned Ortega's comments as a "serious threat to the integrity and sovereignty of our country."

The remarks came after four Latin American nations announced they had obtained regional approval of a non-aggression pact.

Businessmen, workers protest bill

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — More than 75,000 businessmen and white-collar workers staged the largest protest march in Sweden's history to denounce a bill that would aid trade unions at the expense of private companies.

The demonstrators, led by Sweden's top industrialists and accompanied by marching bands, marched Tuesday to the Riksdag building as Parliament reconvened after a summer recess.

The Social Democratic government has proposed setting up "wage-earner funds" aimed at giving workers more control in companies and promoting a more equitable distribution of wealth.

The government would collect about $250 million a year from taxes on company profits and turn the money over to regional boards of trade union officials. The boards would use the money to buy stocks in private companies.

Fifteen killed in Pakistani rioting

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — Eight civilians and seven soldiers were killed in a new round of gun battles between anti-government demonstrators and troops in Sind province, dissident sources said.

However, a government statement said only one "miscreant" was killed Tuesday in the latest clashes in Sind, where the dissident Movement for the Restoration of Democracy has been campaigning for the resignation of Pakistan's military regime.

Rioting and violence intensified over the weekend during local elections in Sind. Dissidents urged voters to boycott the elections, claiming they were a farce because candidates were banned from membership in any political party.

Dane goes to jail over buried taxes

SVENDBORG, Denmark (AP) — A 56-year-old well driller has gone to jail rather than tell authorities where he buried some $21,000 in back taxes.

For 15 years, Ejnar Christensen refused to pay income taxes, maintaining he was "robbed and cheated" when his house was sold at auction in 1968 because of taxes he owed.

Christensen argued the $2,600 his house fetched was only a tenth of its market value and vowed not to pay income taxes until the house was returned.

Instead, Christensen said he buried money each year that corresponded to his income tax due, plus interest.

Each year, legal officials told Christensen he would have to deliver the money or reveal its hiding place. After Christensen refused for the 15th time, the court ordered him to jail.

Israeli jets intercept private plane

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Israeli air force jets intercepted a small Swiss-registered private plane flying from Cyprus to Lebanon and forced it to land in Israel, Cypriot airport sources report.

Israeli authorities permitted the Piper-28 aircraft to fly back to the Larnaca airport in Cyprus on Tuesday after questioning the pilot and co-pilot, the only two people aboard, the sources said.

The pilot reported he lost his way in fog, the sources said. He later found himself flying over some warships and the Israeli air force jets intercepted him and asked him to land at Haifa airport.

The office of the Israeli military spokesman told The Associated Press in Tel Aviv that the plane requested help from the Israeli side and then asked to land at Haifa.

Labor Party debates nuclear arms stance

BRIGHTON, England (AP) — The opposition Labor Party today debates its commitment to unilaterally scrap Britain's nuclear weapons, a stance which cost votes in the June election and is contested by the party's new leader.

An uncompromising resolution introduced at the socialist party's annual conference — despite leader Neil Kinnock's opposition — calls for the dismantling of Britain's Polaris nuclear missiles.

If accepted by a two-thirds majority, the resolution would again tie Labor to a key plank of the radical platform which contributed to the party's worst defeat in 65 years in last June's general election.

Kinnock had tried to get the resolution removed from the conference agenda, advocating a new, less controversial proposal that Britain's nuclear arsenal be included in U.S.-Soviet arms reduction talks in Geneva, Switzerland.

Kinnock, elected leader on Sunday, is a left-winger and longtime peace movement member. But in the aftermath of defeat at the hands of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative Party, he wants room to maneuver on Labor's unconditional disarmament stance, a stance which has split the party.

The resolution is flatly rejected by moderates, now headed by the new deputy leader, Roy Hattersley. But the proposal's sponsor, the 1.25 million-membzr Transport Workers' union, has refused to back off.

The proposal to use the submarine-launched Polaris missile as a bargaining chip also was being put to the conference, as was a radical recommendation calling for the expulsion of all U.S. bases from Britain, where 25,500 American military personnel are stationed. That proposal also rejected British membership of "any Pentagon-dominated military pact based on the first use of nuclear weapons."

Labor's election commitment was confined to expelling the 150 U.S. F-111 nuclear-capable fighter-bombers, based at two airfields in England, and Poseidon missile submarines.

Lebanese tanks blast militia's Beirut positions

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Lebanese army tanks blasted militia positions in southern Beirut today and six people died in heavy fighting in Tripoli as diplomats worried that increasing cease-fire violations could rekindle Lebanon's civil war.

In Tripoli, 50 miles north of Beirut, police said six people were killed as pro- and anti-Syrian militias battled throughout the night with mortars, rockets and machine guns in the port city's seaside slums.

In Beirut, residents said Lebanese troops fired a 30-minute barrage from tanks at sandbagged Shiite Moslem militia positions before dawn after nightlong sniping and rocket-propelled grenade attacks on nearby army positions.

The violations of the 10-day-old cease-fire also were reported in army and police communiques, which provided no details.

A pair of Israeli jets crashed the sound barrier over Tripoli at midmorning in an apparent reconnaissance flight following Palestinian guerrilla charges the Syrian army was preparing to attack their last remaining Middle East stronghold on the city's outskirts.

A Saudi government statement broadcast in Riyadh said the cease-fire violations had created "a very grave and intolerable situation" that could "dismember" Lebanon.

King Fahd's government, with U.S. support, mediated the truce that halted three weeks of civil warfare pitting the Lebanese army and rightist Christian militiamen against a Syrian-backed alliance of Druse and Shiite militias.

The cease-fire calls for the bickering Lebanese factions to mediate their differences at a national reconciliation conference, but Arab diplomatic sources in Suadi Arabia said today the conference was unlikely to begin soon.

The independent Beirut newspaper An-Nahar said the opening session would probably be held next week in Saudi Arabia, then move to an unspecified site in Lebanon, while the leftist newspaper As-Safir said the most likely site was Beirut's international airport because of its accessibility to opposition and pro-government participants.

The airport, on the city's southern outskirts, is the base of the 1,600 U.S. Marines serving with the multinational peacekeeping force.

In Soviet Union, problem isn't snow, rain or 'gloom of night'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet authorities try to isolate citizens by making sure they cannot get mail from outside their country, a House investigation has found.

Rep. Benjamin A. Gilman, D-N.Y., said Tuesday, "There is a regular pattern of interference and this interference appears to be something much more serious than another 'crackdown.'" He said the goal of the Soviets appears to be "isolating people in their own communities."

Gilman said the evidence he has obtained shows such interference as:

-Regular obstruction of mail coming into Soviet-controlled countries.

-Return of U.S. mail to senders without adequate explanation for non-delivery.

-Excessive surcharges on parcels returned to U.S. senders.

He charged that the Soviets violate the international postal convention, the spirit of the Helsinki accords and Russia's own constitution. "There is a great deal of evidence that mail is missing and stolen," Gilman said.

Appearing before Gilman's Post Office and Civil Service subcommittee, the head of the Ukrainian Human Rights Committee said the victims usually are families without any political involvement.

Ulana Bauch Mazurevich, chairwoman of the committee, said many people in the Soviet Union "are denied their basic right, freedom of communication."

She told the panel, "The fragile lifeline between U.S. citizens who wish to correspond with friends or relatives in the Soviet Union is very tenuous because of the Soviet policy of isolating individuals from the outside world."

Olaf Tammark, chairman of the Estonian American National Council, told of a receipt that was sent to the sender of a letter in the West as though the letter had been received. "The intended recipient had in fact died three years before the Soviets stamped and receipted the letter," he said.

Walter E. Duka, assistant postmaster general for international postal affairs, said the U.S. Postal Service frequently receives inquiries or complaints, most frequently about mail reported by the Soviet Union as delivered. "The mailer questions the delivery claim of the Soviet postal official or the authenticity of the addressee's signature," he said.

Soviets lose jobs over plane

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several senior officers in the Soviet military command have been removed from their jobs for failing to prevent a Korean jetliner from flying over the Kamchatka Peninsula, The Washington Post reported today.

Korean Air Lines Flight 007, with 269 passengers aboard, was shot down by a Soviet fighter in Russian air space on Sept. 1.

Quoting unnamed Soviet sources, the newspaper said the senior military officers were held responsible for the inability of the air defense command to locate the plane over the Kamchatka Peninsula before it left Soviet airspace.

According to this account, Soviet fighter pilots did not establish radar and visual contact with the Korean jetliner until it had reentered Soviet airspace above Sakhalin Island.

The identities of the military commanders were not disclosed. There was also no word on the fate of the officers beyond their removal.

The Far East command was in direct telephone contact with top military officials in Moscow several times before the plane was shot down, the Soviet sources told the Post. These sources suggested the political leadership had not been consulted.

Bill would channel in more educational programs

By NORMAN BLACK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Commercial television stations are devoting more than twice as much time to cartoons as to educational programs for children, according to a congressional survey being released today.

As a result, legislation was to be introduced in Congress today that would force every commercial TV station in the country to air at least one hour per weekday of "programming designed to enhance the education of children."

The survey, being released by Rep. Timothy E. Wirth, D-Colo., the chairman of the House communications subcommittee, concludes commercial TV stations are providing an average of 61 minutes of educational programming per week, less than half the amount of cartoons they air.

Wirth confirmed his intentions Tuesday night to introduce the bill, but declined to discuss the specific results of the new survey. A copy obtained by The Associated Press, however, shows the subcommittee has learned:

—On average, a commercial TV station airs 61 minutes of educational or informational programming per week, 152 minutes of cartoons per week, and 52 minutes of "other" children's programming, defined as non-cartoon entertainment, talk or religious shows.

—Affiliates of ABC, CBS and NBC, however, tend to air much less children's programming than independent stations, even though they are generally more profitable. In fact, independent stations outpace network affiliates by a 2-to-1 margin.

—The total of 61 minutes per week of educational or informational programming translates to less than 1 percent — 0.77 percent — of total commercial TV air time each week.

The survey was based on responses from 326 commercial TV stations out of 850 polled. It was prepared with the aid of the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress and the House Information System.

"Broadcasters, under the law as upheld by the Supreme Court, have a public interest responsibility," Wirth said Tuesday. "And given this track record, the free market obviously is not responding to that responsibility as it relates to children.

"Television has enormous potential to help solve our educational problems and it's not doing it," he added. "And if the problem is not being addressed by the free market, then obviously it becomes a concern of government."

Wirth intended to unveil the survey results at a hearing called to examine "television's potential role as a positive factor in educating children."

The survey, however, is part of a much broader study being conducted by Wirth's subcommittee on various proposals to deregulate broadcasting. Most of the bills would make it easier for broadcasters to retain their licenses, something Wirth argues should not be done unless standards are set for minimum amounts of certain programming, such as news and public affairs.

By adding children's programming to that list, Wirth is moving Congress into a debate that has so far been fought at the Federal Communications Commission. The FCC during the Carter administration considered a mandatory rule on children's programming, but failed to take any action. The current chairman, Mark S. Fowler, contends such a rule is unnecessary and improper.

Fowler maintains such a requirement would violate the First Amendment rights of broadcasters; that studies of commercial broadcasters fail to take account of the programming available to children through other outlets such as cable television; and that public TV stations should be provided with additional money if more educational programming is needed.

Wirth countered Tuesday his bill would not infringe on the First Amendment, because it would provide broadcasters discretion to determine when they aired children's programming during the day.

Band leader Waring honored by boyhood friends

TYRONE, Pa. (AP) — Band leader Fred Waring has been praised as "still down to earth" by a boyhood friend as his hometown honored him with a plaque and a banquet.

Waring, 83, who with his "Pennsylvanians" has recorded more than 2,000 songs, was honored here Tuesday with the dedication of a plaque at the site of the former Waring home.

Residents had been searching through their attics and closets for recordings, old photos and articles involving the town's favorite son. The memorabilia was used in an exhibit that included a copy of "Sleep," a record backed with "The West, a Nest and You."

Over the years Waring has maintained close ties with his hometown by visiting and playing benefit concerts.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, and Mexico's President Miguel de la Madrid have conferred on ways to bring about better cooperation between moviemakers in Hollywood and Mexico.

Valenti, 62, said at the meeting Tuesday the president asked for help in rebuilding Mexico's film archives, destroyed in a fire last year. Valente said U.S. filmmakers would help restore the archives.

"I pointed out that 15 to 17 films have been made in Mexico in the last year, probably leaving in this country a minimum of $100 million," said Valenti. "It's a tidy sum and the president wasn't aware of those figures."

Valenti also said that low prices for movie admissions in Mexico are hindering growth of the film market. Most of the nation's 3,500 movie theaters charge little more than 50 U.S. cents.

Familiar faces put CBS at top as season opens

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — Drawing on favorite shows and familiar faces, from the lovable Sherman Potter to the evil J.R. Ewing, CBS zipped to the top of the Nielsen ratings in the first week of the fall television season.

The network's showing abruptly halted the momentum of ABC, which had won the A.C. Nielsen ratings the past three weeks on a strategy of early premieres. It also shattered, temporarily at least, the aspirations of third-place NBC, which had enjoyed a summer ratings revival and a sweep at the Emmys.

"AfterMASH," a new comedy in the footsteps of "M-A-S-H," won a resounding first-place rating. The special one-hour debut of the comedy, starring "M-A-S-H" regulars Harry Morgan, Jamie Farr and William Christopher, was the highest-rated premiere of a new show since ABC's "Laverne and Shirley" in 1976.

Only two other new series — ABC's "Hotel" at fourth and a two-hour premiere of CBS' "Emerald Point N.A.S.," at 17th — finished in the top 20.

CBS won the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings for the week ended Oct. 2 with a network average of 18.1. ABC was second with 17.2 and NBC was third with 14.6. The networks say this means that in an average prime-time minute 18.1 percent of the television homes were tuned to CBS.

Bud Grant, president of CBS Entertainment, cautioned that "one week a season does not make. But I'd like to call the season over right now. We are pleased with the ratings."

Close behind CBS in second place was ABC, with four shows in the top 10 to CBS' five. NBC was in its familiar position in third place with one show in the top 10, but the network has been showing more ratings strength than it has in years.

"There was less than a terrific sampling for some of our new shows, but they were up against some incredible stunts," said Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment. "You had three serials climaxing, 'The Love Boat' was in China. We're discouraged by the levels of the premieres but I'm encouraged by the quality of the subsequent episodes. I think they'll build."

Jeff Duclos, a spokesman for ABC, said the network would withhold comment until the season was further under way.

'Whiz Kids' to debut tonight

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — "Whiz Kids," a new CBS program debuting tonight, does not make a whimper on the sex-and-violence scale, yet it may be more dangerous to children than anything on television this season.

The series, about four high-tech kids, their pet computer, RALF, and their life of crime-solving, offers a warped view of the world, even for the TV's distorted sense of reality. Everybody over the age of 12 is evil or dumb. Every businessman is crooked. Every parent is irresponsible.

Philip DeGuere, executive producer of this show and of "Simon & Simon," acknowledges his tendency to treat businessmen as cardboard cutthroats. "I ~~tried~~ to stop doing it, but I like doing it," he says. "I have every intention to keep doing it."

Conversely, our adolescent heros — sort of Hardy Boys high on silicon chips — engage, willy-nilly, in assorted illegal activities: computer tampering, driving without licenses and grave-robbing. Even though some of this law-breaking may be construed as adolescent pranks, and all of it is done in the name of crime-fighting, none of it serves well as TV role-model behavior.

Harvey Shephard, CBS vice president for programming, says the network is aware of TV's influence on adolescent values and conduct.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Pneumonia... most severe complication of whooping cough especially in infants

Dear Dr. Solomon: I understand your reasoning when you say that the whooping cough vaccine is valuable even though there is some risk in taking it. But what harm does whooping cough do if a child gets it? Lots of children used to get whooping cough and then they got better. — Mrs. S.A., Chicago

Dear Mrs. A.: The most common complication of whooping cough (pertussis) as well as the most severe is pneumonia; this can be particularly serious in infants. Convulsions and death due to obstruction of the airways are other possible complications.

It would not be accurate to say that the pertussis vaccine is completely free of side effects. But the risk of complications from getting vaccinated is less than the risk of complications if a child gets the disease.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am scheduled for a hysterectomy and my doctor has told me that it will be done vaginally. Is this the preferred method? — Mrs. N.C., Detroit

Dear Mrs. C.: Where either an abdominal or a vaginal approach is possible, a vaginal hysterectomy for women of reproductive age is considered preferable.

The findings from a review of 1,851 women showed that those who had a vaginal hysterectomy had significantly fewer complications than did women who had an abdominal hysterectomy. Vaginal hysterectomy was associated with more unintended major surgical procedures; however, there was less morbidity related to fever, less bleeding that required transfusion, less need for rehospitalization and a shorter period of convalescence than for women who underwent abdominal hysterectomy.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If a person has cancer of the vocal cords and needs an operation, does that mean that he won't be able to talk any more? Is there any other way this can be treated? — Mr. K.D., Dallas, Texas

Dear Mr. D.: Surgery for vocal cord cancer often does mean sacrificing the voice. That is one reason that Dr. Bharat Mittal, of the University of Pittsburgh, recommends radiation therapy as the treatment of choice.

Dr. Mittal has reported of 177 patients who had radiation therapy for vocal cord carcinoma. An average follow up of 10 years showed that 95 percent of the patients survived and 90 percent were able to keep their voice.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A neighbor of mine gave birth to a baby and the baby had a cleft lip. Can you explain what causes this to happen? — Mrs. J.T., Albuquerque, N.M.

Dear Mrs. T.: The cause of cleft lip or cleft palate is not known, although both hereditary and environmental factors are believed to play a role. Race is considered an important factor; for example, the incidence of cleft palate in blacks is very low compared with that in Caucasians.

For Donald, San Deigo, Calif.: Coronary atherosclerosis, the deposit of fatty material on the inner lining of the artery, does occur earlier in men than in women.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Dear Dr. Solomon: I like to make certain that my children have a healthy diet, but I don't like to go to extremes. I have three teenagers, they are all active, and none of them has a weight problem. Would sugar do them any harm? They like cake and ice cream for dessert and I don't see any harm in it. Would you agree? — Mrs. D.G., Tallahassee, Fla.

Dear Mrs. G.: According to the Food and Drug Administration, sugar may contribute to the development of cavities, but moderate consumption is otherwise safe. From your description of your children, I would see no point in depriving them of their dessert.

Dear Dr. Solomon: At the age of 75, my mother has decided to change her diet. As far as I can tell, she has no meat and very little fish. In fact it seems as if she eats mostly fruits and vegetables and cereal. Do you have any advice about what I should do about this situation, if anything? — Mildred, Morganton, N.C.

Dear Mildred: Obviously I cannot evaluate the adequacy of your mother's diet from a distance, but from what you write in your letter, she at least appears to be depriving herself of protein. For various reasons, many elderly people do not get enough of this nutrient.

You do not indicate whether there was a specific event that prompted your mother to alter her diet. Nevertheless, she may be jeopardizing her health. I suggest you urge her to discuss her change of diet with her physician so that he or she can determine if her dietary needs are being met.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was told that I have a high cholesterol level and I really want to do something about it so that I can stay healthy. I'm not one of those people who say it can't happen to me. I have had eggs for breakfast as far back as I can remember. If I were to cut them out, would that help lower my cholesterol level? — John, Gulfport, Miss.

Dear John: The answer to your question requires some knowledge of your overall diet. If you are in the habit of consuming large amounts of fat and cholesterol from other foods, merely cutting down on the number of eggs you eat may not have the desired effect. On the other hand, if you were to reduce your consumption of fat and cholesterol from other sources, you might not have to eliminate all eggs from you diet.

What you have to do, as I advise my patients, is to learn the composition of all of the foods you ordinarily eat, and limit your intake of those that are high in saturated fat and cholesterol.

For Phyllis, Grand Rapids, Mich.: Most of the fresh meat and poultry purchased by consumers do not contain added sodium; however, cured meats do. Overall, it has been estimated that meats, fish and poultry provide about 14 percent of all the sodium in the adult diet.

Refurbished building revitalizes Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — With its gigantic skylight, marble floors, boutiques and restaurants, the Pavilion at the Old Post Office could be one of the elegant, indoor shopping malls that have sprung up in downtown areas across the country.

But the Washington project is different, not just because its address is four blocks from the White House on Pennsylvania Avenue, nor because it's housed in an 1898, Romanesque-style structure, nor because it's important to the capital's downtown revitalization effort.

Indeed, the project has a historical significance all its own, according to Jack Finberg, director of planning for the General Services Administration, the government's landlord.

The 10-story Old Post Office structure is the first major project completed under the Public Buildings Cooperative Use Act, which Congress passed in 1976 to permit commercial activities in federal buildings.

It was passed at the urging of the late Nancy Hanks, former head of the National Endowment for the Arts, so that the Old Post Office could be spared the wrecker's ball.

Finberg said similiar projects are planned for aging Postal Service buildings in St. Louis and Dallas, and for a federal building in El Paso, Texas.

The government has leased the lower levels of the Old Post Office to a private developer, the Evans Development Co., for 55 years.

In mid-September the developer opened the Pavilion, with 50 restaurants, boutiques and speciality stores in a two-tier, 60,000-square foot area.

On the ground floor spanning the size of a football field, one section has tables overlooking a stage, named in honor of Ms. Hanks.

Since April, seven floors of the building have housed the offices of the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities, which pays rent to GSA.

Finberg said the government poured about $30 million in "elegantly gutting," the Old Post Office. But he expects the project will make money for Uncle Sam in tax revenues and rent.

The centerpiece of the project is a 315-foot clock tower, the second-tallest structure in the capital behind the Washington Monument.

The National Park Service next spring will begin operating an elevator to the tower's observation deck, where visitors will get a panoramic view of the city.

"The view is absolutely spectacular because you are right out on Pennsylvania Avenue," said Finberg. That famous street, which links the White House with the Capitol, is peppered with federal buildings, including the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Commerce Department, the National Archives and the National Gallery of Art's East Wing.

The Old Post Office is an important part of the rebirth of Pennsylvania Avenue, an area that former Labor Secretary Arthur Goldberg described in 1961 as "unsightly by day and empty by night." Today, older buildings are being retooled and modern structures are being built.

The Old Post Office building was last used in 1934. Although slated for destruction on several occasions, fate — and lobbying by preservationists — spared the building. In the 1970s, a group calling itself "Don't Tear It Down" was instrumental in saving the building.

Companies want computer insurance

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After the celebrated computer raids by a group of youthful "hackers," American companies are turning to a new breed of insurance for protection against pranksters as well as sophisticated criminals — but the trend has been slow to catch on.

"The insurance industry until recently has been a sleeping giant on this whole subject," says Don Parker, a computer security specialist at SRI International in Menlo Park, Calif.

The number of companies taking out insurance against unauthorized access to their computers by outsiders is running at between 15 and 20 percent of expectations, says E.L. "Mac" Calhoun, president of Shand, Morahan & Co. underwriters of Evanston, Ill.

"Insurance companies in the past have addressed the more traditional concept of insuring tangible property," says Parker. "But in the information age, banks and other large companies have become information factories, and the value of the information far exceeds the value of equipment and facilities."

Lloyds of London was the first to offer such insurance in late 1981, but that policy insured only against people with criminal intent. Six months later, Shand, Morahan began writing a policy that insured against pranksters as well.

Parker explained that the policies offered by Lloyds, Shand, Morahan and others "are attempting to fill the gap" between fidelity insurance, which protects companies against their employees, and standard theft insurance, which protects against someone entering the premises to steal.

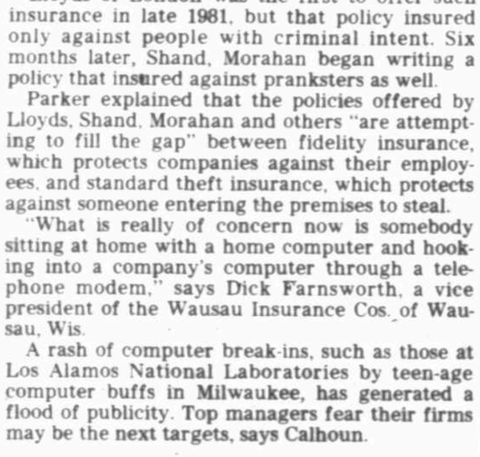

"What is really of concern now is somebody sitting at home with a home computer and hooking into a company's computer through a telephone modem," says Dick Farnsworth, a vice president of the Wausau Insurance Cos. of Wausau, Wis.

A rash of computer break-ins, such as those at Los Alamos National Laboratories by teen-age computer buffs in Milwaukee, has generated a flood of publicity. Top managers fear their firms may be the next targets, says Calhoun.

Charles Kirkwood, owner of the Shawnee Inn in Pennsylvania's Poconos resort area and the chairman of Concerned Citizens Against Gambling in Pennsylvia's northeast corner, stands with the Rev. Thomas Richard, right, and Monroe County Commissioner Nancy Shukaitias during a meeting in Norristown, Pa. The Trio were meeting to discuss their opposition to a proposal to allow slot machine gambling in area resorts. Says Richard, co-founder of the anti-gambling group, "We're taling about life or death for the Poconos."

Watt: Department has undergone change

WASHINGTON (AP) — James Watt likes to say he's brought "dramatic change" to the Interior Department. Of all Watt's claims over the last 2½ years, that is one nobody is arguing with.

From Alaska's frozen tundra to the mountains of Wyoming to the seashore of Massachusetts, the interior secretary has brought change.

It was often Watt's words — about liberals and Americans, about the Beach Boys and recently about a "cripple" — that brought the headlines and the controversy. But in terms of lasting impact, it is Watt's actions that will truly speak louder.

Those actions began the first day Watt was in office when he fired 22 top Interior Department employees — not by telling them personally, but by announcing the fact to them and hundreds of other department employees at a mass meeting.

THE SPEECH WAS JUST HIS way to hit the ground running, to seize control of the bureaucracy.

In short order, Watt began putting in place policies fundamentally changing the way Americans will use their federal resources for decades to come. Consider:

—Watt, in his first weeks in office, imposed a virtual moratorium on the purchase of new park land. Instead of expanding the system, Watt zeroed in on what he declared the "shameful" condition in existing national parks. He instituted a park restoration program to pour $200 million annually into building new roads and sewer systems and correcting safety problems. But the critics says Watt is merely deferring the costs of necessary park expansion to future generations when the land will be more expensive.

DISSATISFIED WITH THE PACE of oil and gas drilling off America's coasts, Watt put into effect the biggest expansion ever in that leasing program. Over the next five years, Watt's plan will offer virtually the entire coastline — 1 billion acres — for oil and gas exploration. The program has already resulted in posting a record for a single offshore sale — $3.5 billion bid by oil companies for 3.2 million acres in the Gulf of Mexico last May.

Watt also conducted the largest coal lease sale in history in the Powder River Coal Region in Montana and Wyoming, auctioning off 16,554 acres containing 1.1 billion tons of coal in 1982. The sale was part of a push which resulted in auctioning off eight times as much federal coal as had been sold during the Carter administration.

Watt has tripled the amount of onshore land being leased for oil and gas exploration and doubled the acreage leased for geothermal resources over the Carter years.

Attacking what he called "obsolete" federal restrictions, Watt has freed 107 million acres of federal land for mining and other development — 100 times above the amount freed up during the Carter years.

"We have brought dramatic change," Watt has said more than once. "We came with an agenda and we're fulfilling it."

BUT NOT ALL OF WATT'S ACTIONS have been successful. His coal leasing program has now been shut down by Congress until an independent commission investigates charges that the leasing has cost taxpayers $100 million by dumping massive amounts of coal onto an already glutted market.

Slot machine proposal stirs heated debate at resort areas

STROUDSBURG, Pa. (AP) — The turning leaves signal a change of seasons in the Poconos, but bigger changes may be in store for one of the Northeast's biggest resort areas if a proposal to legalize slot machines wins approval.

"We're talking about life or death for the Poconos," said the Rev. Thomas Richards, a gambling foe and co-founder of the Concerned Citizens Against Gambling in Pennsylvania's northeast corner.

Some resort owners in the four-county region argue that gambling is needed to keep Atlantic City's gambling palaces from siphoning off tourists. But opponents fear the change will disrupt their idyllic region and lead to greater evils.

"This is a quality place to live and raise a family. Some people are willing to give that up to make a few bucks, but we're not going to let them do that without a fight," said Richards, pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Tannersville.

HOWEVER, SOME RESORT owners are alarmed at an erosion in their hotel occupancy and bus tours over the past 30 months, while Atlantic City, 170 miles away, lures away their customers.

"It's purely economic. People want something we don't have," said Dario Belardi, manager of four Pocono resorts acquired over the past several years by Caesars World, which owns casinos in Nevada and New Jersey.

"I don't want to see our area change either," Belardi said. "But it's a question of growth and progress."

Battle lines formed in August when the latest and most serious plan to bring slot machines to the Poconos was unveiled.

UNTIL NOW, ALL gambling proposals had been opposed by the Pocono Mountain Vacation Bureau, a 700-member umbrella group of resorts, restaurants and businesses.

But the bureau supports a measure proposed Aug. 16 by state representatives David Sweet, a Democrat from Washington County near Pittsburgh, and Joseph Lashinger, a Republican from Montgomery County, which borders Philadelphia.

The bill would allow slots and video poker games in resorts with at least 50 acres and at least 100 rooms, but would keep a ban on casino gambling, which the vacation bureau opposes. Approximately 30 resorts would be eligible for the slot machines under the measure.

Pennsylvania would welcome extra revenue after being forced to raise taxes during a summer budget crisis. The state already runs a lottery, has legalized bingo and allows betting on horse races.

THE STATE WOULD EARN $12 million a year in gambling taxes and $36 million in related hotel, sales and business taxes from the additional 4.3 million visitors the slots would attract each year, according to a study done for the vacation bureau.

It's a tempting payoff for an area where the tour bus trade is off as much as 15 percent and hotel occupancy last fiscal year was down 10 percent.

"Slot machines would be just another phase of entertainment for our guests, like another bar or swimming pool," said Stewart Waters, general manager of Wayne Newton's Tamiment Resort.

Newton, the Las Vegas singer who has a Nevada casino license, bought the resort last September. His presence here, along with Caesers World, has fueled speculation that gambling is coming.

OPPONENTS POINT OUT that Atlantic City's lucrative take is tainted by a soaring crime rate, loan sharking, drug trafficking and the influence of organized crime in some small businesses such as hot dog vending.

"I think gambling will bring nothing but problems. But the pro-gambling people don't want to hear about that. All they hear is the cash register," said Donald Biles, president of the Skytop Resort.

"It's totally incompatible with a family resort area. Gamblers don't need a resort. They don't golf, swim, ski or play tennis. Gamblers sleep all day and play all night," said Biles.

Charles Kirkwood, owner of the Shawnee Inn and chairman of the anti-gambling civic group, argues that Monroe County had the fastest growth rate — 50 percent — of any county in Pennsylvania in the past decade.

"WE SURVIVED WARS, the Depression and other bad economic times without gambling. Why do we need it now?" said Kirkwood, chairman of the Monroe County Republican Party.

On Sept. 18, the Concerned Citizens mounted an organized protest and bused 50 people from the Poconos into Lashinger's legislative district. They urged voters there to help persuade Lashinger and Sweet to change their minds about the bill, which is due to be introduced soon in the legislature.

"It's rather unfortunate they targeted the Poconos where they want to do their dirty work. Why don't they propose it for their own backyards?" said Richards.

Monroe County voters twice rejected gambling in non-binding votes, the last time in May by a 4-to-1 margin.

Commissioners in the four Pocono counties say the influx of gamblers would crowd their country roads, overload their sewerage plants, overtax their social services and stretch their police forces.

"It would change the entire social environment of the community," said Monroe County commissioner Nancy Shukaitis. "It's like striking a match next to a haystack and saying, 'We'll only have a little fire.'"

Artist leaves subway for pop art

NEW YORK (AP) — After three years, several handcuffings and nearly 40 tickets for defacing property in New York's grimy subway system, Keith Haring has arrived at his station: atop the pop art world.

The 25-year-old art-school dropout got there with a mix of drawing skill and street savvy, parlaying a yen for chalking up blank subway advertising panels into fame — and considerable fortune.

"The first time I saw a black panel in Times Square station, it was like it was there for me," said Haring, open-faced and boyish behind wire-rimmed glasses. "I immediately went upstairs, got some chalk, came back down and did a drawing."

He liked the effect: a stark black-and-white line drawing of cartoonlike images. He drew another, and another.

"I began doing it regularly, as a hobby on my way to work," said Haring, then a floor manager in a nightclub. People started gathering on the littered platforms to watch him draw, even warning him when police approached.

"That was what made me keep doing it, when I realized the number of people who were looking," he said. "After the first month or two it became more of a responsibility than a hobby. One thing led to another — it just sort of grew by itself."

Not exactly by itself. Haring, with an eye for marketing even better than his eye for the cops, made up buttons bearing some of the figures from his drawings: a crawling baby, a barking dog, a twisted man.

Subway riders who stopped and watched got buttons. Officers who ticketed him got buttons. Haring had a studio show — visitors got buttons. There was another show. More buttons.

"The drawings needed to be in the public and the subway was the perfect place to do it," he said. "Then the buttons made people a part of the whole thing, made a real connection."

At his last count, Haring has handed out 80,000 buttons at shows on four continents. They're free, but his studio works sell for as much as $10,000 each, and Haring says he's making about $250,000 a year.

"A lot of people are talking about his work," said Richard Marshall, curator of exhibitions at the Whitney Museum of American Art, where Haring has been in two shows. "He's in a lot of exhibits now, and he makes a lot of work that sells to a lot of people."

Much of Haring's success stems from the accessibility of his art. His drawings read like billboards, shooting messages to rushing commuters. Dancing, pregnant women are bombarded by radiation. A huge, grinning robot eats a hot dog as two figures flee. Spaceships zap a pyramid. A fearsome technology bears down on humanity.

"They seem to allude to some other meaning. I intend that, but I don't intend a specific interpretation," Haring said. "I don't want to tell people what to think. The things they are about are really on people's minds anyway."

Also on their T-shirts and posters — Haring has produced thousands. At the Whitney, where his T-shirts sell for $6.50, "They are a smash," said Doris Placa, head of publications and sales. "He's got the magic touch at the moment."

Haring's touch stems from two chief sources: the television cartoons he watched while growing up in Kutztown, Pa., and the spray-painted graffiti that confronted him when he moved to New York to study in 1978.

His ideas jelled when he studied semiotics, the philosophy of signs and symbols, at the School of Visual Arts.

The Transit Police are reading from another book. They're at war with the graffiti — chalked and otherwise — that adorn the trains and train stations in the world's biggest subway system.

Prices retreat in September

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prices farmers get for their raw products retreated in September after posting a significant gain in August, the Agriculture Department reported Friday. But even with the 1.4 percent decline posted over the month, farm prices remained an average of 0.7 percent higher than a year ago.

The decline was the third in the last four months, but the August increase of 4.6 percent was the highest single-month rise in more than three years. Until June, there had been five straight months of rising farm prices.

Historically, the indicator has been erratic, reacting to weather, economic trends and the crop situation in general.

The drop in September was caused mainly by falling prices for cattle and hogs as ranchers continue liquidating their herds in the wake of drought-bolstered grain prices and scorched pastures. The USDA's Crop Reporting Board said lower prices for oranges and potatoes also contributed to the September downturn.

Partially offsetting those lower prices were higher prices for soybeans, lettuce and apples, the board said. The preliminary September price for soybeans, a crop hard-hit by the drought, was $8.46 a bushel, the highest since the price hit $9.24 in May, 1977. The board also revised its August estimate for corn prices, dropping it from a record-tying $3.45 a bushel to $3.35 a bushel. The September estimate put the price at $3.37.

The economic situation in the livestock sector was reflected in the prices farmers must pay to meet their expenses. They rose 0.6 percent through September, primarily on the strength of higher feed costs. Lower prices for feeder cattle and pigs, a result of increased marketing, were not enough to offset that.

Overall, farm expenses stood 2.5 percent higher than in September 1982, the board said.

USDA analysts said the drought and its overall impact on the farm sector will have little effect on agricultural income this year.

"Higher prices will offset smaller harvests," they said. "However, with sharp drawdowns in crop stocks, farmers' income after inventory adjustment will be near the low end of the $25 billion to $29 billion forecast before the drought."

They said higher crop prices will more than offset reduced marketing for farmers, leaving receipts this year higher than in 1982, while livestock producers can expect little or no change in their receipts this year. Net farm income in 1982 was $22.1 billion.

The rising crop prices and the anticipated tightening of meat supplies beginning next spring should boost retail food prices 4 to 7 percent next year, the analysts said in their latest outlook for the agricultural economy.

Agriculture Secretary John Block had previously said food prices would rise no more than 6.5 percent. The increase this year is expected to range between 2 and 4 percent, the lowest annual rise since 1967.

In the preliminary September figures, which are based mostly on mid-month averages, the index for oil crops, mostly soybeans, was up 9.6 percent from August. Prices stood 58 percent higher than a year ago.

The index was 34 percent lower than a month earlier for fruit but 8.4 percent higher for vegetables. It stood 14 percent below the August index for potatoes, sweetpotatoes and dried beans.

Meat animals dropped another 3.5 percent from August and stood 13 percent lower than a year ago.

The feed-and-hay index rose another 1.9 percent from the previous month, averaging 44 percent above a year earlier. All components posted increases in price from August.

Farm prices in September averaged 137 percent of a 1977 base-price average used for comparison, according to the preliminary figures. The revised index for August was 139 percent.

The September parity ratio fell to 56 percent, a point below the August level. Last winter, the indicator sagged to 54 percent, the lowest since it also averaged 54 percent in April 1933, one of the worst years of the Depression.

Under the parity formula, prices farmers get for commodities are compared with prices they pay for production and living expenses. It then stacks them up against a 1910-1914 yardstick.

At 100 percent, the indicator would theoretically mean that farmers have the same buying power they had in 1910-1914.

For example, the average price of corn in September was $3.37 a bushel, according to the preliminary figures. That was 65 percent of the September parity price of $5.17 a bushel.

The report also said:

—Cattle averaged $52.30 per 100 pounds of live weight nationally compared with $54.20 in August and $55.60 a year earlier. These are averages for all types of cattle sold as beef.

—Hogs averaged $44.40 per 100 pounds compared with $46.70 in August and $61.30 a year ago.

—Corn, at $3.37 a bushel, compared with $3.35 in August and $2.15 a bushel a year ago.

—Wheat prices at the farm, according to the preliminary figures, averaged $3.60 a bushel, compared with $3.61 in August and $3.38 year ago.

Here is a comparison of September parity values with the preliminary average prices received by farmers in September and the final figures for August for some commodities. Prices in wheat, corn, oats and soybeans are dollars per bushel. Rice, sorghum grain, beef cattle, hogs and lambs are dollars per 100 pounds. Wholesale milk, live broilers and upland cotton are dollars per pound. Baled hay is dollars per ton and oranges are dollars per box.
