TRUSTEES CHOSEN IN ELECTION

J. L. Burt, B. W. Boorman And L. C. Jones Are New Members

The school election which was held last Saturday resulted in the election of J. L. Burt, B. W. Boorman and L. C. Jones. The other members of the board who are holdovers are H. E. Singley, M. M. Kern and Harris Brantley.

When asked to give a resume of the work of the school board, S. A. McCarroll said that the outgoing board took over the school system of Wellington at a time when it was in debt $7,000. He stated that the Wellington School system was out of debt up until the time the East Ward school burned. A debt had to be incurred to rebuild this structure and complete the high school building, this indebtedness has been reduced so that it can be taken care of in the next year or so. During the administration of the old trustees the East Side building was rebuilt and the present high school building was erected. In addition over $3,000 has been expended in installing an up to date Home Economics department in the Wellington High School.

MAIL POUCH MAY BE SUBSTITUTED FOR CLERK ON KATY

The Katy Railway plans to take off the mail clerk between Wellington and Altus. If this is done, a mail pouch will be used between Wellington and Altus. It means according to Postmaster Arnold, that mail sent to Dodsonville from Wellington will be sent to Altus and then back to Dodsonville. In this way it will take two days for a letter to go from here to Dodsonville. A petition bearing the names of practically every business man in Wellington has been sent to the Katy officials asking that the clerk be retained on the line between Altus and Wellington.

LEADER WANT ADS SELL, FIND AND GET

Mr. Hiett who advertised for a red top Fisk tire in The Leader says that he is awfully glad that he did for he now has his tire back. T. C. Fuller sold all the eggs that he could spare from a want ad. J. M. Stowell found a pair of glasses indirectly through a want ad. There are many other results which are not reported each week.

Starting this week The Leader want ad section will be on a cash in advance basis. Don't consider it a reflection on your credit when we ask for the money in advance. The book-keeping on this section is so much trouble and the section is operated on such a narrow margin of profit that it will not pay for itself if it is not on a cash in advance basis.

BOXES OF MONEY TO BE GIVEN AWAY

Money Will Be Thrown From Court House Next Saturday Afternoon

Next Saturday afternoon thirty dollars will be thrown from the top of the court house in boxes containing sums of money ranging from $5 to $25. The three banks of Wellington have donated this money which will be given away. W. H. Goforth who is in charge of the trades day campaign that is being conducted in Wellington at the present time also has charge of the money.

Mr. Goforth says that the money will be wrapped in tissue paper and placed in pasteboard boxes, which will be thrown from the top of the court house at 4:30 Saturday afternoon. This is only one of the attractions that will be offered in Wellington between now and trades day. Mr. Goforth intends to offer special attractions every Saturday similar to the one that will be held this coming Saturday.

He is planning on having each merchant make a contribution of some article and this will be wrapped in a package and given away in the same manner as the money. In addition to these specials each merchant is offering some article at a special price. In this manner the Wellington trades day is proving an economy to the consuming public as well as a money making proposition to the merchants of Wellington.

POTTS BUYS BIG HORN TO PLAY IN BAND

Earl Potts who is a member of the Wellington band has purchased one of the largest base horns made at the present time. Not long ago Mart Adams of Hollis bought a horn which is called a Conn Sousaphone Grand Eb base. E. M. Lindsay says that Potts is one of the best base horn players that he has ever had in one of his bands.

Wellington Leader Becomes Semi-Weekly With This Issue

Starting this week The Wellington Leader will be published twice a week—on Wednesday and Saturday. This change in the frequency of publication is more of an experiment than anything else. The only way to tell whether or not Wellington will support a semi-weekly is to give it a trial. If this trial is a success, Wellington and Collingsworth County will be benefited for the following reasons:

1. The readers of the paper will get the news while it is still live news and will not have to wait a week to read the accounts of happenings in which they are interested.
2. The merchants of Wellington will be able to advertise for special trade the first part of the week as well as during the latter part.
3. A Semi-Weekly newspaper brands a town and county as a live and growing community, for no dead town ever supported a semi-weekly.

As a weekly publication, The Leader has received the hearty support of its readers and advertisers and for this support it is truly grateful. It solicits future advertising and new subscriptions on the basis of the service that it will be able to render as a semi-weekly publication.

The subscription price will remain the same—$2.00 per year. All display advertising rates will also remain the same for each insertion. The only change is that the readers on the local page and in other parts of the paper will be run for two issues at the same price that they are now run one issue, and that the want ad section will be placed on cash in advance basis. By making these changes The Leader hopes to render even better service to its patrons. Co-operation in this enterprise will be appreciated.

BAPTIST WILL HOLD RALLY WEDNESDAY

Three Noted Speakers Will Speak At Meeting In Wellington

One of the biggest Baptist rallies ever held in the Southeast section of the Panhandle will be conducted at the First Baptist Church of Wellington, Wednesday, April 8 when Dr. R. L. Powell of San Marcos, Dr. A. E. Ingram of Brazil and Dr. F. S. Groner, general secretary of the Baptist General Convention of Texas will be in Wellington to speak on the denominational work. Addresses will also be made by representatives of the churches in this section.

Each of the speakers will outline the denominational program and explain fully the needs of the Baptist work at this time. It is expected that every church in this section will be represented in the meeting by its pastor and members.

Dr. Ingram is president of the school for girls and young women at Sao Paulo Brazil and is in Texas on a furlough from his work in South America. He will return to Brazil in June to resume his work in the school. Dr. Ingram has many interesting experiences to relate regarding his work in Brazil.

CHECKER PLAYERS WILL GO TO AMARILLO NEXT WEEK FOR MEET

E. M. Lindsey, Fatty Watkins, Ross Wilkerson and L. H. Bellah will attend the meeting of the Panhandle Checker players which will be held in Amarillo April 15 and 16 and which is being sponsored by the Amarillo Globe.

Some of the best checker players in Texas and Oklahoma will attend this meeting. Although Mr. Lindsey is the only book player in Wellington, this town has some extra good players and it is believed that they will make a good showing in Amarillo.

C. C. SMALL CHOSEN AS CITY HEAD

Judge C. C. Small was elected Mayor of Wellington to succeed J. E. Leggett in the election held Tuesday. E. D. Clay succeeded himself on the City Council and Webb Moore was chosen to fill the expired term of J. W. Keithley.

Judge Small intends to put four plans into effect as soon as possible. He intends to install the machinery already purchased by the City in the light and power plant economically and at the same time correctly. He intends to increase the water system of the city, and after that make plans for the installment of a sewerage system. He intends to put the City Power and Light plant on a paying basis.

Judge Small said that he could not make any further statement regarding his plans and that other issues would have to be decided upon as they became pressing.

Rambles

Over the County
With J. W. L. Cook, the Leader Rambling Editor

As we did not finish our weekly ramble last week, will start this communication commencing Friday, the 27th.

Our first visit for that day was at the home of W. W. Vernon, nine miles east of Wellington. Mr. Vernon has been in this county nine years. He came here from Lamar county, Texas. He is a native of Tennessee. He is living on the Charlie Glenn farm. He has a good farm to cultivate, good house and is well up with his work, having most of his land prepared for another crop.

Mr. Vernon made a fine crop last year. He had 110 acres in cotton last year and gathered 65 bales, also he made plenty of feed to run him another year. He is well pleased with this paper, as he gave us an order for The Leader for twelve months.

F. L. Fuson, near the Grassburr school house was our next victim. He was very busy, hauling some sand that had blown into the yard.

Mr. Fuson has been in the county for thirty years, which means that there were but few people here when he arrived. And judging from his appearance, he was a small boy at the time he came here. He has a fine place one of the Pete Stewart farms. It is fine land, well improved and nicely kept up. Mr. Fuson had in 95 acres of cotton last year and gathered 55 bales of the fleecy staple. He has at this time, one hundred acres listed for another crop. He gave us an order for The Leader, and wishing him goodbye and good luck, we parted in perfect good humor.

The W. J. Jackson home was our next place. Mr. Jackson came here 7 years ago from Clay County, Texas, was born in Missouri and raised in Wise County, Texas. The Jacksons have a nice, well improved home and one hundred acres of land. A good house and outbuildings. They are raising chickens as well as farming. They have 270 White Leghorn hens, and are raising quite a lot of chicks. He had fifty acres of cotton last year from which he gathered 35 bales of cotton. They are old subscribers to The Leader and gave an order to set him forward one more year.

We headed our tin wagon south after leaving the Jackson home and went to the R. L. Wood farm. Mr. Wood has been in this county eight years. He was born in old Alabama, came to Oklahoma and then on to this county. Mr. Wood owns one of the finest farms that I have found in the County. His home place comprises 140 acres of land, most of it as level as one could wish. A fine house, a good barn, garage, and necessary outbuildings. He says he has had only two short crops since he has been in the county. He owns quite a lot more land, near his home place. He had 250 acres in cotton last year and gathered 208 bales from it. Mr. Wood takes the blue ribbon for a big crop, as I have found. Others have gathered a little more per acre, but Mr. Wood produced the most bales of cotton of any one man I have found in the county. He has taken The Leader all the time he has been in the county and gave us a renewal for 1925.

On the R. L. Wood farm lives W. M. Moore, known as Bill Moore. He is a colored man and was recommended by Mr. Wood as being a good farmer and citizen. He came here from Dawson, Texas, and says he likes this county better than Navarra. Bill also likes The Leader and gave us a check on a Wellington bank for two dollars for the paper for this year, for which we gave Bill our thanks and good will.

Our next man to interrogate was Mr. J. L. Needham, who lives west of Wellington on the Vaughan farm. Mr. Needham is a new man in the county, having been here only five months. He came here from Young County, was born in Missouri but he came to Texas when only 14 years of age. He likes here better than other places and likes The Leader, as he gave us an order to send it to his address.

Mr. Creed Little was our next man. He is a son-in-law of Needham and came here with him from Young county. He says he likes this country and also had The Leader sent to his home.

W. L. Copeland, who lives one and one half miles northeast of Wellington on the Armontrout farm came here from Wilbarger county, Texas. He has been here four years, was reared in Hill County, Texas. He thinks this a fine country and likes everything except the sandstorms.

J. B. Long, route four, one mile south of Wellington has lived in the county nine years but had been here 33 years ago. He came from Fannin County, Texas. He is a native Texan. He has a nice home, his farm consists of 152 acres of good land. He also owns a section out six miles west of Wellington. He had 24 acres in cotton last year and gathered eleven bales. He has a good, well planned barn and other useful outbuildings. He says he likes the sand storms of this country better than the chiggers of the black land.

V. L. Long lives four miles south of Wellington. He is also a Fannin county man. He is well pleased with Collingsworth County. He planted 42 acres in cotton last year and gathered twenty bales. Mr. Long owns a nice bunch of Hampshire hogs, the only hogs of that breed we have found in our rambles so far.

Our next place to visit was the home of H. L. McCormick. He has lived in the County only 15 months. He came from Hardeman County, in Texas. He is a native of Missouri, but got water bound in Arkansas for several years and then came to Texas. He has been in Texas 40 years. Mr. McCormick is 71 years of age, hale and hearty for one of his age.

Lee H. Roy, came to this county in 1920, from Tennessee. Mr. Roy is ahead of all the cotton planters we have talked to so far, as to the number of pounds of seed cotton per acre, having raised thirty-six bales of cotton on 55 acres of land. The Roys are readers of The Leader and like it fine.

We made a special trip to the home of A. Rodgers, one and one half miles east of Wellington. Mr. Rodgers is known over this county by two different names, some call him Watermelon Rodgers, while others call him Peach Orchard Rodgers, either name fits him alright, as he is noted for raising both melons and peaches. Mr. Rodgers was born in Arkansas, he came from there to Montague County, Texas, then moved to the Indian territory near Cornish, now Ringling, Oklahoma, and from Cornish to Collingsworth. He has been here 10 years. He bought the land on which he now lives. He has a nice home of 75 acres of land on which is the largest orchard in the county that we have visited so far. His place is well situated, being on the O. T. Highway. He has six acres of bearing peach trees, mostly early Wheeler, but has several varieties, such as, Elbertas, Mamie Ross and others, also other fruits and berries. He has just set three acres of early Wheeler young trees. The early Wheeler being his favorite for the market. Mr. Rodgers has a mulberry hedge, or wind break, nearly all around his orchard. Mr. Rodgers spends all his time with his orchard and truck patch renting out his main farm. His truck patch consists of several acres of sub-irrigated land, watered from a spring creek, which runs through his place. He has the best watered place we know of. The creek runs all the time, wet or dry, and is pure and soft.

The reason Mr. Rodgers is known as Watermelon Rodgers is because he has the best place in the county to raise them. He showed the writer where he would plant his melons this year, but made him swear by the Holy paper to keep it a secret, so boys don't ask me to tell. Mr. Rodgers is a long time subscriber to the Leader and is a booster for the paper and Collingsworth county, and says when he leaves here, he will be carried feet foremost.

BANKER HAS FAITH IN COUNTY AND SEES NO HARD TIMES

C. J. Glenn, president of the First National Bank who has lived in this county thirty five years, has faith in Collingsworth County. He says that he has never seen a failure in this county during the time that he has been living here. He believes that 1920 was the hardest year that this county has ever had. In that year the hardships were due more to low prices than to the dearth of feed and cotton crops. He thinks that low prices are more to be dreaded this year than scarcity of crops and he believes that both of these will hold up alright.

Mr. Glenn does not agree with his banker friend, J. G. Nesbit of Dodsonville, who says this is going to be the hardest year this County has ever had. Mr. Nesbit basis his belief on a prediction that Foster made several years ago.

Mr. Glenn was a resident of this section when Wellington was only a Post Office. He has seen the County change from barren plains to a cattle country and from a cattle country to one of the richest farming sections in the state. He says that some men called the early days the good old days, he believes that Wellington is a more desirable place in which to live than it has ever been.

DR. HUDSON LEAVES TO TAKE COURSE IN SUGGESTOTHERAPY

Dr. T. A. Hudson left last week for Dallas where he will take a special course in suggestotherapy. Dr. Hudson has been studying this work for some time and intends to finish out his work in Dallas.

HOW MUCH DOES MY CRIB HOLD?

"Please tell me how I can find out how many bushels of corn I can store in my crib."

If you store your corn in the ear, then multiply together the length, breadth and depth of the crib in feet and divide by 2.5. To find out how much shelled corn it will hold, divide by 1.244. A bushel of ear corn occupies 2.5 cubic feet of space and a bushel of shelled corn 1.244 cubic feet. This rule is quite accurate for shelled corn but varies somewhat for corn in the ear and is not reliable if the ear has poorly filled ears or an appreciable proportion of nubbins.

If you are troubled with corn weevils or if there is danger of their getting in your corn, your crib should be made air-tight so that the weevils may be destroyed by fumigating with disulphide of carbon. Cribbs or bins that are not air-tight can be made practically so by lining them with heavy wrapping paper such as is in hardware stores.—The Progressive Farmer.

QUALITY LIVESTOCK PAY

Quality livestock is of the greatest importance in stimulating meat consumption. There is some truth in the statement that consumers cannot expect quality production when the price level will not meet the cost of production, but experience has shown that well bred cattle cost so little more to produce than common cattle that the margin for quality cattle over inferior ones will ordinarily more than take care of the increased cost of production. Today there is a spread of about 5 or 6 cents a pound between the best and the poorest grades of hogs. The margin will certainly take care of the increased cost of producing high quality animals.

And as stated above, one of the main benefits to be derived from producing high quality animals, other than the increased money return, is the stimulation of increased meat consumption.—Tait Butler, in The Progressive Farmer.

D. 1925, the same being the 27th day of April A. D. 1925, then and there to answer a petition filed in said Court on the 16th day of March A. D. 1925, in a suit, numbered on the docket of said Court as No. 996, wherein A. E. Cox is plaintiff, and Susie Cox is defendant, and said petition alleging that plaintiff is and has been for a period of twelve months prior to exhibiting the petition herein an actual bona fide inhabitant of the State of Texas, and has resided in the said County of Collingsworth for at least six months next preceding the filing of this suit.

That on or about the 15th day of September A. D. 1912, in Union County, Tennessee, plaintiff was lawfully married to defendant, then a single woman by the name of Susie Haynes; that they continued to live together as husband and wife until on or about the 23rd day of May, A. D. 1921, when the defendant left and abandoned plaintiff, without any cause or provocation on the part of plaintiff, since which time plaintiff has not seen nor heard from the defendant, and does not now know where defendant is.

But there were no children born to the union of plaintiff and defendant and that there are no property rights to be adjudicated in this suit.

Plaintiff alleges that defendant's actions and conduct toward him generally are such as to render their further living together as husband and wife insupportable, the premises considered.

Wherefore plaintiff prays the court that defendant be cited to appear and answer herein and for judgment dissolving said marriage relations, for costs of suit, and for such other and further relief, special and general, in law and in equity, that he may be entitled to under the evidence.

Herein fail not, and have before said Court, at its aforesaid next term, this writ with your return thereon, showing how you have executed the same.

Given under my hand and the Seal of said Court, at office in Wellington this 16th day of March A. D. 1925.
LENORA SHERWOOD, Clerk
District Court, Collingsworth County.

False Economy

GOVERNOR MIRIAM A. FERGUSON, the friend of education, has done a foolish thing. She has reduced the educational appropriation bill nearly a million and a half dollars. Claiming that she had to observe her economy program, she killed the summer school of the University of Texas and eliminated the Journalism and Music departments. She did damage equally as blighting to the Agricultural and Mechanical College and she injured the College of Industrial Arts and four of the Teachers Colleges.

When Governor Ferguson was elected upon an economy program, it was believed that she would practice true economy. To deprive thousands of hard working teachers who struggle through the year to earn enough money to improve their education the privilege of obtaining this education during the summer months is not economy. Most of the teachers who attend the University of Texas in the summer are teachers in rural schools and small towns. When Miriam A. Ferguson eliminated the summer session, she made many of these teachers lose a year's work. She struck, whether intentionally or not, a direct blow at every child who will attend school in the rural districts and in the small towns of Texas during the next term or even twenty years. She guaranteed that they will have teachers inferior to those that they would have had if the summer school had been continued.

When she killed the Journalism Department of the University of Texas, she practiced economy that is also false. The Department of Journalism has been built up until it ranked as one of the leading schools of Journalism in the United States. It will be able to run another year and then it will die unless Governor Ferguson changes her action. If that school is killed, it will be re-installed just as soon as Governor Ferguson's term of office is over if not before. The service that it renders to the State is too real to be lost. It is a service that has already been recognized by the daily papers and which will be more fully recognized by the daily papers and which will be more fully recognized by the weekly papers as time passes. The school of journalism will be replaced, but the lamentable thing is that it will have to make another start. Much of the prestige that it has gained through the sacrifices and devotion of the loyal gentlemen who conduct the school will be lost. It will take years to bring it back.

To injure this school which is the most public spirited department of the University of Texas is not economy. Students of this school are taught newspaper principles and ethics with the view of rendering service to the public as a first consideration and the making of money as a means to realizing the major goal. The press of Texas does more than any other institution to protect the public from corrupt officials, to direct their thought along constructive lines, and to give them the information that is required for good citizenship. Conscientious editors and reporters are more needed than well trained teachers and both are necessary to the welfare of any state.

Similar proofs of false economy could be shown in the reduction of appropriations at other institutions, but these are enough to show that Governor Ferguson has not practiced true economy. She may have been sincere in her action, but if she was, she was penny wise and pound foolish.

The Semi-Weekly

THE LEADER HAS been admonishing its readers to have faith in Collingsworth County and Wellington. It now has a chance to take a little of its own medicine. The publication of a semi-weekly newspaper requires faith in Wellington and Collingsworth County, but the Leader has plenty of faith in both of these.

It is a faith based upon the knowledge that Collingsworth County has never made a complete failure. It is a faith supported by the desire of every human being to acquire information about incidents pertaining to them as soon after they have happened as possible. It is a faith backed up by the proven fact that greater and more frequent advertising is required by retail business concerns during dull times than in prosperous time.

With this faith as an inspiring cause, The Leader embarks on its semi-weekly voyage at the beginning of what is generally regarded as the dull season of the year. It starts out with no hope of a greatly increased business, but with the determination to give every reader and every advertiser service that will be equal to that rendered in any town the size of Wellington or thrice the size for that matter. It does start out with the hope of developing more business in the future. Wellington can profitably afford to spend twice the amount to money that is spent for advertising, and it will be a glad day for each individual merchant and for the town as a whole when this truth is demonstrated by practice.

Give This a Thought

IF YOUR BUSINESS is getting dull, it is time for more advertising.

Mail order houses and department stores that use proved methods instead of the hit and miss plan increase their advertising appropriations when business begins to slacken. Some of them spend between 5 and 10 per cent of their gross sales on advertising. Although it may seem that the merchants of Wellington are liberal in their use of advertising, there is not one firm in this town that spends as much as 2 per cent of their gross yearly sales on advertising. If times get tight the only thing that will save your business is advertising. But remember this: Collingsworth County has never made a complete failure and she will not make one this year. Business may be slightly dull for a few weeks this spring, but there is money and profit ahead of the merchant who gets out and pushes his business.

The Wellington Leader offers you a medium through which you can reach a quality list of people numbering over 1250 who live in the Wellington Trade territory. These people have money or else they would not pay $2 a year for the Leader. Show these people that you have the stuff and your business will prosper.

If your business is getting dull, it is time for more advertising.

Plant That Spring Garden.

An east Texas editor writes that some of his subscribers have requested him to ask me to write something about spring gardens. He did not say so, but I have a suspicion that the subscribers are overstocked on garden seeds for which they are finding poor sales because of the continued dry weather. East Texans have so little dry weather that, when it fails to rain for a few weeks, they are inclined to think "It Aint Gonna to Rain No Mo'." Therefore they sit down and wait to see what is going to happen. West Texans, having gone through repeated drouths, know that a rain is sure to follow every dry spell, and they plant crops just as though they are expecting rain the next day. There is no drag in the garden seed market in West Texas, I am guessing, and there should not be any where else.

Plant Now and Plant Often.

I am not an authority on gardening. Like most city gardeners, of the backyard variety, I plant nearly as much as I harvest. The spring gardening fever usually hits me hard with the first mild spring days and dies in the heat of the early summer. The vegetables die along with my garden fever. Often there is a race to see which will die first. I have a farmer friend, though, who used to sell me vegetables, and he gave me the rule for his success that he began planting his garden early, planted in small quantities, and at intervals of about two weeks. He pays no attention to the weather or the moon when he plants it is the time of year to begin planting certain things. The frost gets his vegetables sometimes and occasionally the ground is too dry to bring them up, but he soon has more on the way. The seed cost might be in proportion to the returns, and by planting often he keeps supplied with fresh crisp vegetables.

Prepare to Live at Home.

Even a town man of average business ability knows one thing with enough certainty to give practical advice in regard to it. He knows that the less he has to pay out of his income for living expenses, the more his profits will be and the more cash he will have to show for his work. He also knows that if he spends more than his receipts he will soon be broke. That is so simple that it really sounds foolish, yet some people do not appear to have learned the lesson. The farmer who can produce meat and vegetables and corn and hay and syrup and honey and milk and butter and turkeys and chickens and eggs and fruit and berries and many other things on his place, while also growing cotton, is more than foolish to grow nothing but cotton, leaving the other things to be bought with his cotton money. The farmer who follows the one crop method lives poorly because he has to pay for all he eats, and an occasional crop failure wipes out the little profit he makes.

Advertise Your Surplus Products.

Most farmers are poor salesmen and do not know how to dispose of perishable products and other things for which they have no need, leaving them to go to waste. Why not profit by the example of the most successful business men and place a small advertisement in the local newspaper? If you have an extra horse, cow, hive of bees, machinery that is not needed, there is sure to be some one who would like to have it, if only he knew about it. A small advertisement will help to sell surplus fruit, butter, chickens, eggs, and dozens of other things about the place that you do not need. It has been said that there is somebody wanting and ready to pay for everything we can find to sell, if only the seller and the buyer can get together. The small newspaper reading notice is the best way to get them together that has ever been found, and the cost is small, not usually more than a quarter or half dollar. The farmer who uses this selling plan regularly will find that it pays well. In many states a large part of the country papers is filled with such advertisements, but the advertising idea does not seem to be used much by Texas farmers.

Automobiles and Good Roads a Boon.

A few years ago the farmer who lived as much as eight or ten miles from his trading point was at a great disadvantage, because it took a day to get anything to market. Good roads and automobiles are changing that. A ten mile trip is now a half hour's delightful drive instead of two or three hours of hard toil. A telephone call from a merchant or a neighbor a dozen miles away may close a trade in a few minutes and delivery can be made almost as quickly as a merchant can deliver goods in his town. The world is fast putting away its former-day methods, and the farmer who would succeed must keep abreast of the times. He must use the methods of the modern successful business man and not trust to chance, as so many have been doing. What would you think of the merchant who would say: "I sold more overalls than anything else last year, so I will handle nothing but overalls this year, and will go down and wait for the people to come and buy them?"

COUNTY FEDERATION MEETS

The County Federation of Women's Clubs was entertained in regular session in the basement of the Methodist Church Saturday by the Domestic Science Club. Pot plants and Lilacs in tall vases made the room especially attractive.

The house was called to order at 3 o'clock by Mrs. S. P. Buser, our president, Mrs. Boverie being out of town. The minutes of last meeting were read by the secretary, Mrs. S. A. McCarroll, and approved by the Federation. A motion was carried to remunerate the Methodist Church for the use of its building. The treasurer, Mrs. Ernest Lewis, gave her report showing a nice balance on the books. However, only one club in the county has paid its Federation dues for this year. It is expected that all clubs pay their dues soon to the treasurer, Mrs. Lewis.

Farming and Finance

The Agricultural Outlook. In making plans for 1925 farmers in each section should consider the outlook of each commodity that they produce or can produce. It is very possible that each farmer can add to his net income for the year by modifying the acreage of his crops or the numbers of his livestock in the light of the outlook for each of the products he can grow. This year's outlook for some of the principal crops we give below and they should serve as indications on which to judge the outlook of other crops.

The economic conditions of this country during the remainder of this year should run about normal. The recent side stepping of business activity indicates that we are not headed for any boom period, while we are well above the conditions of depression. Normal crops should find a normal market. Even though there has been a recent firming of interest rates, from present indications ample credit for farming purposes should be available in most regions of the country. Farm labor will be in demand thus resulting in probable competition with higher wages. However, the increasing use of farm tractors and farm machinery in general may overcome this condition.

A cotton crop as large as last year should be absorbed at sustained prices. From present indications stocks at the end of the current season will not be large and the improved foreign demand should be maintained. The indication winter wheat acreage is somewhat larger than last year, and it is probable that the total world acreage will be at least as large as last year. If the yield in 1925 is normal the high prices cannot be expected for the 1925 crop. The production of FLAX, on the other hand, is still somewhat under domestic consumption and flax prices for the 1925 crop will probably be relatively higher than wheat. Some slight shift from wheat to flax may be profitable. The raising of Market Hay should be adjusted to the decreasing demand. Production of alfalfa and other legumes might be profitable where the local supply is not equal to the consumption. CORN supplies are so short that it has put a sharp brake upon live stock production, and supplies of the old grain are almost exhausted. Sufficient corn should be planted for one's own feeding requirements. The present low price of potatoes, which is due to the unusually heavy yield of last year, is likely to result in too small an acreage this year. Such an exceptionally heavy yield as produced in 1924 is not probable and an acreage equal to last year is advisable. Tobacco stocks on hand are larger. Although the price outlook is favorable an increased acreage is inadvisable. Higher prices for sugar and sugar feeds during this year are unlikely, due to the large carry over from last year.

The hog and sheep industries appear favorable for the next 16 months and there appears to be no immediate danger of over production. Prices should continue high. Immediate prospects for the cattle industry look favorable. Prices for 1925 should average somewhat higher than for 1924. All conditions indicate the industry is gradually working into a stronger position. Continued expansion in the DAIRY industry has depressed the prices of dairy products, and with a growing foreign competition a further increase in the number of dairy cows would probably retard recovery of prices. The outlook for poultry from the standpoint of market egg prices is favorable, but from the standpoint of immediate poultry prices is not so encouraging. Higher prices for other meats, and possibly reduced feed costs, should increase poultry profits during the latter part of 1925 and early 1926.

The outlook for the agricultural industry is probably the best in five years. However, this is no time for expansions programs. Intensive agriculture should be the rule rather than increased acreage. Conservatism, rigid economy, and cautious management are what will bring profits to the American farmer in 1925.

Wheat has suffered during the last fortnight. The market has demonstrated its ability to move suddenly in either direction. Fundamentally wheat is sound and there is no basic reason for such extensive and sudden drops. Part of the weakness is due to a large speculative element in the market which is nervous and ready to take profits and get out at the moment things look uncertain. Certain bear traders have also turned their attention from the stock market for the present and are selling wheat short for speculative breaks. Imports from Argentina seem to be the only tangible excuse for such weakness and they will probably continue in normal volume. The speculative element in any market may win or lose and drive prices up or down to the extent of speculative holdings. The future fluctuations in wheat should result largely from such an element and the extent of price movements will be determined by the size of such interest in the market at any given time.

Cottonseed which clogged the waterways near the cotton gins was a problem not many years ago. Today the production of cottonseed oil in the South is valued at $275,000,000 annually. Another instance of the immense value derived from by-products once considered waste.

A world cotton conference is being arranged to take place in London during April or early May to agree on problems affecting certain cotton standards. It is proposed among other things that the standards by which cotton is graded the world over be set for two years instead of one. This would enable the manufacturer to know further in advance as to the cotton he will receive on any set specification. Our own Department of Agriculture is doing much to establish sound standards and to accomplish their general acceptance. Such developments tend to facilitate trade in cotton on an international basis and should benefit both grower and manufacturer.

BALL FILLING STATION INSTALLS NEW TANK

A 1,600 gallon capacity gasoline tank has been installed in the Ball Filling Station. B. F. Ball says that this addition to his plant fills a need that has been felt for several years. Mr. Ball has had to turn business away because his storage facilities were not large enough to accommodate his patronage. He says that he will be able to take care of his business with greater ease.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING AND UTILITIES

All forms of advertising have been used successfully by utilities, but the one that has proved indispensable is the newspaper, says the Texas Public Service Information Bureau. First of all it has circulation. A single newspaper will frequently cover from 60 to 80 per cent of homes in its territory. Advertising space in the paper will give a much greater return per dollar spent than will any other form of advertising on which postage is spent.

Secondly, people are accustomed to reading the newspaper. It is not difficult to get their attention, as in the case of the circular letter, the booklet and other forms of direct by mail advertising. Third, and best of all, it is timely. The advertiser is able to appeal to his audience by frequent advertisements.

By all means use the different forms of advertising, but use them to round out your advertising program, the principal item of which should be the daily or weekly newspapers. But the newspaper is the one that is indispensable.—Utility News.

IRRIGATION HAS BEEN SUCCESS; WILL INCREASE THE ACREAGE

W. D. Durfee, living near the Buck Creek garage on the Childress-Wellington road, put a small irrigation plant in effect at his farm last year. There were eight acres under the ditch, the land being sown to alfalfa. Off this land enough feed was raised to feed 10 head of work animals and five cows, besides selling hay to the amount of $500.

Mr. Durfee was so well pleased with the result that he has decided to increase the acreage under ditch to 60 acres. Mr. Reedy, representing the water conservation engineers of Texas, being located at this place, is at the farm today for the purpose of running lines for the ditches and to locate the site for a dam across Buck Creek, which flows through the farm. It is believed that enough water can be stored to irrigate more than 60 acres, but that amount of acreage will be placed under the ditch as soon as possible.

No doubt Mr. Durfee will make a success of the venture and will add to his crop enough to more than pay for the expense of the plant.—Childress Index.

PAINT REQUIRED FOR BUILDINGS

While the quantity of paint required varies somewhat with the nature of the surface to be covered, and the conditions under which it is applied, yet the following method of measurement will serve as an approximate guide.

A good grade of prepared paint will cover 200 to 250 square feet to the gallon, two coats.

First, measure the distance around the house and multiply by the average height; then divide by 250 and the result will be approximately the number of gallons to buy. Of this quantity one-fifth will represent the paint required for trimmings, cornices, etc.—Progressive Farmer.

VALUE OF A BLACKSMITH SHOP

I think every farmer should have his own blacksmith shop. I find I can't get along without one. I sharpen all my tools and plows and also sharpen tools for other people. I make lots of things that would cost a pretty good sum if I had to buy them, and by making them I save the money.—O. A. Greene in The Progressive Farmer.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Out of uniform, at the end of the World war, with the rank of major, Peter DeWolfe, young American of wealth and family, is urged by an English comrade in arms, Eversby Benham, to visit the Benham home and meet the Englishman's mother and sister, and, incidentally, Brena Selcoss, young woman about whom there is an air of mystery.

CHAPTER II.—Muriel Benham, Eversby's sister, becomes infatuated with Peter, but he is interested only in the mysterious Brena Selcoss, of whom he has had only a glimpse. Muriel urges him to forget her, warning him that if she (Brena) should like him he is in danger of "vanishing" like the others.

CHAPTER III.—At his London hotel Peter gets a message from Brena, asking him to meet her. He does so, and the meeting results in the formation of a strong bond of friendship.

CHAPTER IV.—After a few days' companionship the feeling between Peter and Brena ripens into love. He asks her to marry him, and she confesses that she is married and that her husband has "vanished."

CHAPTER V

Brena Selcoss had been born on American soil.

One of her most vivid memories was that of her father, an austere man, who all his life long had carried about in the great and muscular body with its slow movements and its suggestion of latent giant power, a restless soul, ever seeking to find its way hither and thither like a strong giant ant of unceasing activity looking for new work.

She could remember dimly that her mother, whose hair never lost the red-gold Celtic glory until she and her second child died together when she was forty-two, had referred with whispered awe to the turbulent career of her husband, Demetrius. There were vague recollections of the mother's pride in the fact that he had risked and lost his career, begun so early in life and so brilliantly in chemical research and in a professorship in Athens, that he had tossed aside all consideration for himself to labor for a constitutional Greece and to risk his life in a conspiracy for freedom.

Mary Vaughn, as her name had been before her marriage, knew something of insurrection herself; she had had the ill fortune to be the daughter of the famous Tom Vaughn who was forced to flee Ireland with his family after the unsuccessful and forgotten "Secession Plot" of the '50s. Mary, from the time she was a child, sang like a bird. She might have become a famous contralto, for her voice had that same warm, rich quality inherited by her bewitched daughter, but like a bird her true home was upon the open moors with their free spaces and the shadows of the clouds passing over the grass; New York, of adamant and rectangles, was as good for the joy of her voice as it would have been for that of a wild nightingale. She never spoke harshly of that "terrible Babylon," however, without adding, "But 'twas there I met your father, Brena, and I'll speak no ill of it."

So, with some of her sparkling self dimmed, she gave all her expression of loyalty to her husband; her flight upon gauzy, unsubstantial wings was always a circle about his head, as if she were a brilliant moth hovering about the top of a grim mountain which always quivered, threatening volcanic disasters. Something had died within her when they took her from the moors and the open places, and that which was left was an Irish beauty and a bottomless well of affection for her man and her Brena.

"It is from her that I have a legacy," said Brena. "It is a storehouse of unspent passion and tenderness. And it is still mine—to do with as I please."

She did not go on to say that those to whom it would be opened might enter to be destroyed.

Brena could not recall the details of her mother's accounts of the part her father had played in the disturbed period of Greece. There were vague impressions of a secret organization under the "Council of Twelve," to which he had sworn devotion, of a problem of honor which he had decided by following a course of conduct that had brought down upon him the penalty of assassination. A sharply defined portrait of this young patriot, a member of the Salamis deputation of 1862 informing King Otto, the last of the Bavarian alien monarchs, that the throne of Greece was vacant, remained in Brena's mind. She confessed to a thrill of pride that upon an occasion, historic and momentous, her father, then only twenty-eight, had been present in a major role. This had been the top moment of his life; those whom he had aided turned upon him. The strength of a powerful secret organization, gradually falling into unscrupulous hands after its true functions were over, had been turned against him. His name became a traditional center of oaths of vengeance, with knife wounds upon his great arms and thighs and an unremoved bullet in his shoulder, he came to America. He was a man who had lived one life, and expected the world to recognize him as an important being. It saw in him only a silent, learned man, inventing a thousand ambitions and from them choosing no fixed purpose, disregarding money in a land where money, for the time, was the fetish, careless of poverty but humiliated periodically by debt, discous-ing upon biological chemistry years before the scientific world had the magnation to listen—a giant, with dark haunting eyes, long Homeric hair and beard, always brushed back as if he were eternally facing a hurricane, and a voice and presence as mysteriously impressive as that of some Elijah. Even Brena remembered his affection for her, profound as it was, as being like the affection of some god of mythology directed down upon a beautiful but mortal child.

Between the frivolous sunlight of her mother and the magnificent shadow of her father, Brena grew, acquiring from one a whimsical humor and from the other a calm of high cliffs and of a Parthenon.

According to Brena's own phrase, she "had no childhood and all childhood." She had none because her father, after a month or two of concentrated application of his mind upon studies of similarities in the architecture of ancient Mexico and prehistoric Greece, would find the butcher, landlord and grocer at his door, and then, as if awakened, he would take his little family and board the train for some minor university where he would teach himself out of debt and into a period of bitterness of heart because neither his learning nor his important place in history were given recognition.

With a great sigh from his expansive chest, he would move on again in pursuit of some inquiry, some research, some new application of his heroic, impractical head. In consequence, the little girl, red of cheeks, with spindling legs and great wondering brown eyes, never stayed long enough anywhere for acquaintance with children and for play. Tutored by her mother and by the booming, terrifying voice of Demetrius Selcoss when he, as he said, could spare time for it, she learned a taste for books and consumed them, according to her own story, "like a hungry little pig regardless of the wisdom of a diet and eating all that was within reach." The books served to give her a fake veneer of experience and maturity.

This outer covering was fake because it failed to represent the truth that Brena had reached sixteen, with physical attributes which made men turn as she passed out without any consciousness of having approached womanhood. Without contacts with childhood, ever on the move, living in hotels, in boarding houses, in suburban cottages, ever dependent upon one rickety patched old trunk and her two parents, she had acquired the habits of childlike dependence. Like a child she found that life was shaped without intervention of her own. She allowed herself to be dragged along with her mixed load of conceptions drawn from a helter-skelter reading. Among other conceptions was that eternal fiction of the gallant and perfect fairy story prince whose bride she would one day be. To be a bride meant little more in terms of real life than to become an angel.

"If I ever have a daughter," said Brena Selcoss, "I will never allow her to have this dangerous dream of a Prince Charming. It is the common foundation upon which girls throw sensible judgment to the four winds and come to critical moments without a thought of the flowing years of real life which are to come. It might have wrecked me when I was seventeen."

While Brena was seventeen, indeed, many landmarks had been set up in her development. Her mother had died quietly in bed the year before without a gasp of warning, without a murmur, a smile upon her engaging lips. Brena had been asleep in the next room, and Demetrius, having one of his spells of insomnia, sat almost all night long on the porch of their cottage in Dallas, Texas, in a rocker which squeaked a little as his bulk moved. He had come up at dawn to find his wife, with the first rays of summer sun thrown through the shutters and onto the happy, lifeless figure in bars of gold. It shimmered on her lovely hair; in all the red-gold mass there was not one strand of gray.

"This is the time for great calm," he had said to Brena, as he woke her with his giant's hand upon her shoulder. "The life has gone from your mother's beautiful body, my daughter, but she will live always with us because she was a brave and tender soul which endures forever."

"I thought that she had endless life," he said after a pause, burying his bearded face in his sun-browned hands. "It is the way with me always—I am unprepared—always unprepared."

This was the only flinching brought out in him by the death of the Irish girl he had adored so completely, to whose songs he had listened while his life went askew and in whose smiles he had warmed the chills of bitterness and whose arms had stilled the restlessness behind his great dark glowing eyes. He went on his way unchanged, but no doubt making new attempts to reach across the chasm which separated him from the yearning heart of his daughter.

These attempts were failures. Beside each other, when he was home, they were as persons alone; the one reminiscent, living in a past where great figures of history stalked majestically; the other expectant, with the eyes of youth turned away from the shadows and toward the glints of the future.

For three or more years before Mary Vaughn Selcoss had died, she had been alarmed by a new characteristic of her husband. In Dallas when he, who once had known the tang of great deeds done in a setting of romantic grandeur, came out through the hot streets on a common electric car and walked up a suburban avenue with its cheap bungalows and its phonographs, its lawn sprinklers trying to raise the sun-baked grass from the dead, and its concrete sidewalks, Brena's mother had noticed a look in his eyes of a haunting fear.

"I wonder what would become of you and Brena if anything happened to me," he had said in explanation.

"Nothing will happen to you," Brena's mother had gayly answered. "Come into the house. I've something to show you."

"To show me?"

"Yes—a happy little home with the rent all paid up till last February. Nothing will happen to you."

But the fear was written upon his countenance deeper and deeper, like a tracing often repeated. He said to his wife on one occasion, "You say this fear is new. No, dearest, I have carried it about for many, many years."

Long after her mother had gone Brena had seen that look in her father's eyes.

"Perhaps he is afraid he will lose his place with the oil company," she had said to herself many times.

Opportunity enough was given her in those days to speak for herself. She had gone beyond any school training not only in independence but in learning; nevertheless she remained a child—a lonely, sensitive child in the heart of her ripening womanhood. Her father's austerity and her own peculiar shyness made the pair appear to the Texan neighbors aloof, strange, like persons over whom some shadow hung. And her father considered alone? He too, even to her, was in spite of all his giant desire for tenderness, also aloof, strange, and over him some shadow also cast its menacing shape.

Perhaps this shadow was when Demetrius, the learr practical, the heroic and the humbled exiled gentleman of Athens, stepped in front of a moving train one evening as he was trying to cross the tracks which run through the Dallas streets, and then lay staring up at the sky, his hair and beard brushed back as if he faced a tempest.

It was the doctor who carried the news to Brena. He stood beside the engraving of the Acropolis in its frame battered with many packings and unpackings and many hangings and removals and many journeys in the bottoms of trunks.

"You do not weep?" he inquired.

"No," said Brena, looking at him with her blanched face.

The doctor was a little dried up southerner, whose manner straddled between his Kentucky birthright and the Prussian medical schools where he had acquired his education.

"He was a noble man," he said, "He was a haunted man, as well."

The Rewards of Thrift

The rewards of thrift are measured in terms of Security, Comfort, Influence, Prestige, Power, Character, Independence,

There is scarcely an ambition desired of man, that cannot find fulfillment through the exercise of Thrift.

Spend a little less than you earn; work diligently, live simple, spend judiciously, borrow wisely, save consistently, and the rewards of Thrift will eventually be yours.

DENVER TO BUILD TO PLAINVIEW

Other Lines Also Casting Future Glances Toward Rich Territory

PLAINVIEW, Texas, April 4.—What appears to be a railroad building war between the Burlington system (Fort Worth & Denver City) and the Santa Fe has broken out on the South Plains of West Texas and is now raging.

The South Plains, long regarded as exclusively Santa Fe territory and zealously protected by that system, is threatened with invasion by the Denver, which proposes to construct feeders for its main line into some of the most productive countries above the cap rock in Santa Fe territory, and incidentally give to the Plainview and Lubbock sections a direct east and west line into Dallas and neighboring cities, shortening the haul and increasing tonnage. The Santa Fe, with an eye to its own welfare, it is claimed by many citizens, has endeavored by every legitimate means to "block the Denver's game" and as an offset has formulated a building program of its own, the complete extent of which has not yet been discovered.

Joy in Plainview

Announcement Wednesday that Denver officials had entered into an agreement with Plainview citizens to complete a main line from near Estelline through Plainview to the center of Castro County within eighteen months caused many here to experience transports of joy, and it is safe to say that there has been no such general rejoicing manifest at any town in the wheatgrowing section since the Technological College was awarded to Lubbock.

Conditions exacted by the Denver for extending the road are regarded as light and were readily accepted, although a few details are yet to be worked out before they can be complied with. The conditions were that a right of way be furnished through the city and county and a tract of land containing 20 acres at the edge of the city limits be donated for shops and a roundhouse and a few other minor matters arranged. Simultaneously it was announced that Plainview would be the division point and that extensive shops and roundhouses would be installed here.—Dallas News

HOLLIS TO HAVE GOOD WATER IN FEW WEEKS

It is expected that by the first of the next month, Hollis will have its new water supply in operation. Pipe line has been practically finished from Hollis to the flowing spring, fifteen miles north, near the river, where the water is to come from.

This spring of good water, flowing something like a five-inch stream at present and capable of producing more, is expected to be sufficient to furnish the entire city of Hollis with good, soft water. A large reservoir has been constructed at the spring, and foundations laid for two large pumps which will force the water to a standpipe or reservoir about two miles south, and high enough for the water to be carried on into Hollis by gravity.

A nice residence is being constructed for the engineer who will keep the pumps running as much as is necessary.

When this system is complete, Hollis will be a much better place in which to live. Heretofore, the water supplied by the city has been so hard as to be unfit for most purposes.

J. F. Bauldin and family motored over to Memphis and on to Lelia Lake last Sunday. Mr. Bauldin says the Memphis road is in worse condition than he has ever seen it.

RIP BLAKE WINS FROM ARMSTRONG

Referee Gives Shamrock Boy Decision In Fight

In what for a few minutes threatened to be a slam-bang affair Rip Blake of Shamrock was accorded the referee's decision over Duke Armstrong of Mangum, Okla., at the Le-go-in Hall last Friday night.

From the first gong both battlers demonstrated a willingness to mix things, but both were slightly wild and few, if any points were scored in the initial round. Blake won the second round by a wide margin, scoring heavily with his powerful left. Armstrong came out strong at the beginning of the third round, but was stopped by a flock of stinging blows to the body and head. As the round was drawing to a close, the fighters clinched. Referee Bill Walker stepped between them and as he did so Blake planted a hard left in the solar plexus and Armstrong crawled under the ropes as the gong sounded. He claimed that he had been fouled and refused to re-enter the ring. The referee then awarded the fight to Blake.

In a furious semi-windup, Bill Higdon of Wellington and Archie Stout of Brinkman, Okla., fought an eight-round draw. The local boy put up the greatest fight of his career, and many are of the opinion that he should have been given the decision.

LOCAL BOYS MEET HOLLIS TEAM FRIDAY

Good Crowd Expected At First Game On Home Grounds

The Wellington baseball team will play the High School team of Hollis next Friday afternoon. Coach McCullough has his men in good shape and he believes that his team will win if they show their customary form.

Wellington has one of the best high school teams of any of the neighboring towns. They were defeated by Clarendon last week by a narrow score, but that happened in a ninth inning rally. Coach McCullough did not accompany his boys to Clarendon and they say that the team did not work as it usually does when McCullough is present to direct them.

It is believed that a good crowd will turn out to see the first game played on the local diamond.

RULES FOR SUCCESS WITH ALFALFA

1. Success with alfalfa requires: Rich land, well drained. If you haven't rich land make some rich with manure, green manure crops plowed under, and fertilizers.
2. Thorough preparation of the land. Break the land deep from one to six months before seeding. With disk and drag harrows pulverize the surface just before seeding.
3. Phosphate. Apply 400 or 500 pounds of acid phosphate broadcast just ahead of the final disking or harrowing.
4. Lime. Unless the soil already contains enough lime more must be applied. The average soil needs two tons of ground lime stone or one ton of burned lime. Apply the lime broadcast before the final disking.
5. Inoculation. Unless alfalfa has been grown successfully on the land the seed must be inoculated. Secure soil from a successful alfalfa field. Mix equal quantities of soil and seed and sow the mixture. If inoculated soil is not available artificial culture can be secured from the United States Department of Agriculture by application to the county agent.

6. Spring seeding should be done in March, fall seeding in September.

7. Sow 20 pounds of seed per acre

8. Use the best grade of seed that can be had of the variety known as common alfalfa.

9. Sow alfalfa alone. Do not use a nurse crop.

10. Cover the seed very lightly with light section narrow weeder, or with a brush.—The Progressive Farmer.
