LANDMARK TOTAL LOSS; ORIGIN IS NOT DETERMINED

THOUSANDS SEE FIREMEN WAGE SPLENDID FIGHT HERE LAST NIGHT

Another of Lubbock's landmarks has passed. The Jackson House, at the corner of Main and Ave. G, one of the first frame buildings erected on the square was almost completely destroyed by fire Saturday night despite efforts of the Lubbock fire department who played six streams of water on the burning structure for more than an hour. The flames were discovered shortly after 9 o'clock, and burned for more than an hour before brought under control.

The four walls of the building were left standing, but the entire inside, which was a seething mass of flames when the fire department arrived, was gutted and all contents of the two-story frame structure were destroyed.

No One In Building

Reports which were current around the scene for a time to the effect that a man was in the building during the fire were discounted by police officers and firemen, who after examination of the debris said that no trace could be found leading to any credence of the report. A man whose name could not be learned was said to have entered the burning building after the flames had gained considerable headway, and was not seen to emerge, but he evidently left the building before being trapped by the flames.

The blaze was one of the most stubborn ever encountered here, members of the first department said, the origin of which was not learned. The fire was first discovered in the rear toward the kitchen, spreading rapidly

First Guns Fired By Candidates In District Politics

With the first primary only a little more than a month off, the opening guns in the political campaign that is expected to be the hottest in many years were fired Saturday afternoon and night when the three candidates seeking the office of District Attorney each made their initial appearance on the speaking platform at various places throughout the district.

Owen W. McWhorter, County Attorney of Lubbock county, opened his campaign in the afternoon at Levelland, while Durwood H. Bradley, the last entry into this phase of the political program spoke at Lorenzo in the afternoon, and Walter C. Witcher, the present incumbent addressed a gathering Saturday night at Morton, county seat of Cochran county.

Mr. McWhorter, in a statement given the Journal Saturday in connection with his address at Levelland, said that he is going to wage a battle of clean politics throughout, and that he will avoid in every way possible the usual mud-slinging that accompanies such a campaign. He said he told the people of Levelland that he believed in absolute co-operation of all officers in law enforcement, and that if elected to the office which he seeks, he will do all in his power to see that such a condition exists and is maintained.

District Attorney Witcher was out of the city Saturday night, and could not be reached for a statement, and efforts to reach Mr. Bradley also proved unavailing.

The registration of candidates for district offices closed June 7 so far as the Democratic party is concerned and no further entries into the race can be made now. Registration for county or precinct offices may be made until June 19, R. J. Murray, Democratic chairman of Lubbock county said.

Lubbock's Special Train To West-Texas C. C. Convention Is Not Yet Made Up; Officials Plead For Aid

With twenty-five tickets yet unsold, Lubbock's special train to the West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention is still hanging in the balance according to G. P. Kuykendall, chairman of the ticket selling committee. The committee started the day's work Saturday with 29 tickets short and at the close of the day only four were sold which cut the deficiency to 25.

Saturday is always a busy day in Lubbock, however, according to the committee and the committees were not able to accomplish what had been hoped. The committees will take the field again Monday with the hopes of cinching the special train.

He Urges Cooperation

"It is up to every loyal Lubbock citizen to get in line and board the special train for the convention," Kuykendall stated. "The news has gone the rounds that Lubbock, the Hub of the Plains and the home of the Tech is going to throw 200 big Spanish sombreros into the magic ring for the biggest convention held in this section, the 1927 West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention.

"News dispatches from Amarillo have combed West Texas telling every town in the entire section that Lubbock is coming to Amarillo 200 strong, dressed in spectacular regalia with the usual Lubbock pep to lock horns with San Antonio, Wichita Falls, and El Paso for the 1927 convention.

Lubbock Is Expected

"West Texans are expecting to see Lubbock there strong battling on even terms with the other three West Texas cities for honors. A special train with an enthusiastic delegation giving their all for Lubbock is necessary to make the right showing and the ticket selling committee is expecting Lubbock citizens to come through and make the trip to the new oil center of the North Plains."

The convention could not be held at a more favorable time of the year or at a better location for Lubbock to make a strong fight for the convention. Round trip tickets, pullman service, and a set of the official Lubbock regalia can be had for the minimum sum of fifteen dollars and business men will only be away from their business three business days.

Postponement Again Faces French Debts

PARIS, June 12. BELL AND ALLISON WIN DOUBLES IN TENNIS MEET

FORT WORTH, June 12 (AP)—Berkley Bell, Austin and Wilmer Allison, Fort Worth, 17 and 19 respectively, won the Texas State double title at Meadowmere here Saturday by a straight set victory of B. I. C. Norton, St. Louis, and Frost Carvel, San Antonio. The score was 6-4, 6-2, 6-2. Norton will oppose John Barr of Dallas in the singles Sunday afternoon. The original schedule provided for playing the singles Sunday afternoon. The original schedule provided for playing the singles first, but conditions compelled playing the doubles.

The two youngsters were brilliant at times and after they overcame a 2-1 lead which the veterans had obtained in the opening set, the victors led all the way. Bell's service won every time and Norton's delivery was pierced thre times for games. Allisons work at the net was decisive.

French Star Retains Her Tennis Crown

PARIS, June 12. (AP)—Mary K. Browne, American finalist in the women's singles of abe hard court championship had her long deferred try today for Suzanne Lenglen's title, as many others have tried since 1919. Like all the others, except Mrs. Mallory, her efforts to wrest the championship from the French star, were in vain.

Miss Browne put up a different brand of tennis than Suzanne had been forced to contend with for many a day, but it could not stop the match winning progress of the mistress of all tennis courts, and Miss Browne only managed to win one game out of thirteen. The store stood 6-1, 6-0.

Yes, Maybe, They Would!

It seems the Brooklyn Dodgers missed a guess when they let Pitcher "Jumbo Jim" Elliott go to the Seattle Indians of the Pacific Coast League. Elliott got away to a sensational start, winning his first nine games. He's one of the biggest hurlers in baseball, standing "6-4" and weighing 242. Perhaps the Dodgers would like to have him on their payroll now.

Senators Hitting Near Top As Team But Remain In Second Division As Athletics Hit Low But Hold At Top

CHICAGO, June 12. (AP)—Hits may or may not mean runs and heavy chalking of the score board may or may not mean winning games.

Bucky Harris and his Senators have managed to get a .291 batting average out of this year's supposedly slow ball to attain third place in club hitting. Three Washington players are slugging in the upper .300 class and statistics show the team third in American league fielding percentage.

Yet the Senators at present are in the second division in the pennant chase while the Athletics, hitting next to last among the teams, although rating just above Washington in fielding, are right up next to the top.

Chicago is leading the National slugging with an average of .290 and rank third in fielding. Yet the McCarthymen, faltering in their climb for the flag, have watched the Pirates slip by them and go to the top—and Pittsburgh is hitting below the Cubs and fielding 'way down at the bottom.

The Tigers, with players scattered through the leading league hitters and averaging .288 as a club are down in the second division in the game battle and several other clubs are quite a distance away from where their hitting and fielding records would indicate they should be.

The Yankees, however, have made good use of consistently heavy slugging to walk away with the lead in the American race, completely overlooking the fact that they are, on paper, next to the worst club in the American in fielding and have made more errors than anybody else except the Browns. The Yanks have slumped a little in hitting but still set the pace for the majors with an average of .313 for the first two months of the season.

There have been some changes in the relative ranking of the leading hitters in both leagues but the battles are confined to veterans. Joe Dugan lost his stride during his absence from the Yankee lineup and has watched Forthergill of Detroit and Babe Ruth slug past him to lead the regular hitters in the order named, with averages of .90 and 3.86. Ruth has established himself as leading league batter, pounding out his twenty-first home run at the end of the eighth week and running up his most runs total for a wider lead, although his team mate, Gehrig, is but five behind.

Hargrave of the Reds has retained the honor of being the leading hitter among major regulars with a percentage of .407. Cuyler and Traynor continue to hammer the Pirates along in the win-lose column, but the veteran third-baseman has slumped a little to see Herman of Brooklyn go ahead. Rogers Hornsby is an old-timer who has apparently misplaced his slugging bats, the Cardinal manager having let his average slump despite the fact that the club fared well, as hitting goes, on their eastern invasion.

Meusel, having trailed Cuyler for some weeks in the matter of base stealing, finally pilfered his thirteenth for the Yankees and edged ahead. Cuyler's twelve continue to lead the National race.

Burns of the Indians is setting the pace for the majors in doubles driving, having collected a total of 26. The 21 made by Frisch of the Giants are the best record in the National. Bottomley of St. Louis is the leading home run hitter in the older circuit.

Meadows of Pittsburgh finished the first two months with a clean slate of seven victories for a remarkable record on the mound. Hoyt of the Yankees and Lyons of the White Sox, with ten-two and ten-three records, respectively, have the best flinging records in the American.

Leading hitters in 20 or more American games: Fothergill of Detroit, .390; Ruth of New York, .386; Dugan, New York, .378; Burns of Cleveland, .374; Mostil, of Chicago, .372; Heilman of Detroit, .368; Falk, of Chicago, .360; Goslin, Washington, .357; Meusel, New York, .354; Bassler of Detroit, .354.

Leading National hitters in 20 or more games: Hargrave of Brooklyn, .467; Cuyler of Pittsburgh, .377; Herman, Brooklyn, .371; Traynor, Pittsburgh, .362; J. Wilson, Philadelphia, .362; High of Boston, .357; Southworth of New York, .352; Brown of Boston, .349; Bressler, Cincinnati, .348; Dean of Philadelphia, .346.

SPEEDWAY, Altoona, Pa., June 12. (AP)—Dave Lewis, veteran of the roaring motors, won the 250 mile automobile race by a scant margin over Norman Batten on the Altoona Speedway this afternoon. The fortunes of the gruelling contest swung time and again as the sped wagons tore around the mile and a quarter board oval, but Lewis and Batten, driving a non-stop battle, won the prized positions.

CLEVELAND, June 12.—With Indians and Athletics battling as though the world's championship were at stake, Cleveland today defeated Philadelphia, 1 to 0, in eleven innings in one of the greatest pitching battles in the American League this season.

Sherwood Smith outpitched Lefty Grove, phenomenal pitching ace of the Athletics.

Neither team scored in the first innings. In fact, Simmons was the only Philadelphia player to reach second, and he turned the trick twice. On the other hand, Cleveland, gathered 11 hits off Grove, threatened to score often only to be turned back by virtue of Grove's work with men on bases. Prior to the 11th inning he did not issue a pass. In the 11th, however, he passed two, Speaker and Myatt, with two out and Speaker scored from second base while Jamieson was beating out an infield hit. Score:

The NUT CRACKER by Joe Williams

Whaddamean Volstead is the first enemy of the wets in this country... Wasn't it Ban Johnson who drove the spitters from the American league?

Medical statistics show more than 400 people lived to pass 100 years of age last year... We'll bet at least 399 of them used a different kind of putting stroke, too.

Philadelphia is celebrating old-home week or something and just to make everything look natural the Phillies have dropped back into the cellar.

The summer months are pleasant and all that but we do miss those headlines that carol, "Notre Dame Backs Run Wild in 80-0 Triumph."

In view of all the loose gab that has been spilled on the subject by the New York boxing commission, Dempsey's next fight can be appropriately entitled, "The Prattle of the Century."

We see where Harry K. Thaw and Evelyn are going to try to hit it off again together... And maybe there's still a chance that Dempsey and Kearns will kiss and make up.

Mr. O'Goofty is still wondering just how the case would have wound up if Mr. Carroll had decided to use a shower bath instead of a tub.

Boot to Boot sounds more like a double play by a couple of close relatives than the name of a race horse.

HUBBERS LOOK FOR HARD GAME AT LAMESA

Skipper Sled Allen's Lubbock Hubbers, last year South Plains champion and winner of the Denver Post tournament, will leave here this morning for Lamesa where this afternoon they expect to annex their thirteenth straight victory of the present season without a defeat.

They are all set for what is expected to be the hardest game of the season to date, for it is a known fact that Lamesa has recruited strength for the contest in addition to the already well oiled machine that is usually produced at the Dawson county capital. This will be the first time since the present season has gotten well under way that the two clubs have met.

Frank Hudspeth, Hubber ace, will in all probability be allotted mound duty by the Skipper, and Frank said Saturday that he is expecting a real tussle, but that he believes the Hubber machine will be equal to the occasion.

A good delegation of Lubbock fans is anticipating making the trip with the club.

DIAMOND DISPUTES DECIDED

By BILLY EVANS

When must the team in the field call the umpire's attention to a batting-out-of-order play?

For the team in the field to profit by a batting-out-of-order play, it should first permit the improper batsman to be retired or hit safely.

After the improper batsman has done so, the team in the field should call the attention of the umpire to the slip. This must be done before a ball is pitched to the succeeding batsman.

The umpire shall then inflict the correct penalty by calling the proper batsman out.

TEN RECORDS FALL IN ANNUAL MEET AT CHICAGO

SOLDIERS FIELD, CHICAGO, June 12. (AP)—A world's intercollegiate record in the running high jump, an unofficial record in the half mile run and eight records for the meet were smashed in the fifth championship track and field meet conducted under the auspices of the National Collegiate A. A. on Silders Field today.

Haggard, of the University of Texas, shattered the record for the running high jump, with a leap of six feet 7¼ inches; beating the former record of six feet, 6⅛ inches, made by George Horine, of Leland Stanford University in 1912.

Although points don't count in today's meet, staged to determine the intercollegiate champions of the various events, the University of Southern California team, winner of the Eastern Intercollegiate meet would have won it provided the point system counted.

In the unofficial table of points, the Trojans were credited with 27¼ with Michigan winner of the Big Ten outdoor championship, second with 25, and Nebraska, the Missouri Valley conference titleholders, third with 13.

Billy Evans Says

Pitching Supreme

Pitching is still paramount in major league baseball.

Speed is once more a prominent factor, due to the less lively ball, and accuracy in the field is most essential, but, after all, the most important feature of the game is pitching.

Washington has a great ball club, but it must get pitching to win. If the veteran members of the twirling staff fail to go the route, the Nationals are sunk.

When the American League champs get good pitching the club looks like the flashiest aggregation in the league.

The Yankees have a powerful punch at the bat. However, if you get six runs and the opposition manages to drag seven tallies across, the punch is wasted.

Ask any big league manager about his prospects and his opinion invariably will be that the club's chances rest with its pitching.

Pinch-Hitters

Not so many years ago little help at bat was expected from members of a pitching staff.

Times have changed, however, and now many of the best hitters in the major leagues are the pitchers.

Take three of the veteran members of the Washington staff, Walter Johnson, Dutch Reuther and Joe Bush. All are mighty dangerous when swinging the ash.

As a matter of fact, all three have won reputations as pinch-hitters aside from their twirling ability. When Washington needs a good right-hander in the crisis, Johnson and Bush often get the call. Reuther is often the choice when a left-handed hitter is desired.

For years Johnson has played pinch-hitting roles at Washington. The same with Joe Bush when he was with the New York Americans. Reuther first won prestige in that line as a National Leaguer. He has continued it in the American.

Drastic Action

Manager John McGraw of the New York Giants is one manager who refuses to stand pat when his club isn't winning.

McGraw has the courage of his convictions. If he feels a certain shift will help his team, he goes through with it, regardless of how drastic it may seem.

The Giants looked great in spring training. It seemed as if McGraw would get much better pitching. That was one thing he lacked last season.

His catching appeared a bit uncertain and the soundness of Shortstop Jackson's knee was of much concern to McGraw.

So far the club hasn't got the pitching McGraw expected. The catching has wobbled a bit. Jackson's knee has twice failed him; his injury looks to be very serious, perhaps permanent.

Laboring under those handicaps, the Giants have failed to show pennant form. Disposing of the two veterans, Groh and Nehf, makes it apparent there is going to be a house-cleaning in New York.

You may temporarily halt John McGraw and his ball club but there is no permanent stopping 'em.

Promising Rookies

During the last five years high-class ball players have been passing out faster than the recruits have been making good.

In the two major leagues there are a number of clubs that are becoming antiquated. There is a decided need of young blood to take the places of the passing stars.

Several clubs are experimenting this year, particularly with infielders.

To my way of thinking, the most improved young ball player in the majors is Fred Spurgeon of the Cleveland club. He is a year or two from being an outstanding star, but he certainly seems on the way. Every day he shows improvement in his play.

Detroit, by the way, has a classy looking youngster in Gehringer, and the Yankees have another in Lazzeri.

GENE SARAZEN
Practicing For Tournaments

There are various opinions as to the proper way of conditioning oneself for a tournament. Some say you shouldn't play much golf, or more than is necessary. Others believe that the more one plays, the better prepared one is for the conflict.

I believe that you cannot play too much golf; that it is a game which requires constant practice in order to retain the touch. However, there is such a thing as over-doing practice just preceding a tournament.

A champion fighter always watches his opponent in the ring if he can before he meets the challenger. Football coaches scout one another's teams all with the idea of getting an idea of the character of the opponent. A golfers opponent in medal play is the course.

If it were possible, one should visit the course where the championship is to be played at least a month in advance and put in a lot of practice. But the week preceding the tournament one should take things easy.

SECRETS of STARS on INSIDE BASEBALL

as told to BILLY EVANS

BY GROVER ALEXANDER

While baseball experts and opposing players have always been kind enough to say that I have plenty of stuff, yet I rate control as the greatest of my assets.

I attribute what success I have had as a pitcher more to control than any other feature of pitching.

Work for control should be the daily thought of every pitcher. No matter how good a fast ball a pitcher may have or how harply his curve breaks, it isn't going to get him anywhere unless he has control.

Please don't mistake what I mean when I speak of control. It isn't the mere getting the ball over the plate. Rather it is putting it where the batsman will have the greatest difficulty in hitting it.

If one considers control as getting the ball over the plate, cutting the heart of it with many of the pitches, he doesn't get the proper meaning of the word from the standpoint of the big leaguer.

There are in the majors quite a few pitchers who do not win consistently simply because they make too many of their pitches "too good." In other words, they get the ball in the batter's groove, often when the wise thing to do is waste a couple.

Control is scaling the corners of the plate inside and outside, making the ball just good enough to be rated a strike by the umpire. Control is pitching the ball to a batter's weakness. If he is unable to hit a low curve on the outside, the pitcher with real control can keep it there.

Control, after all, is pitching the ball to the spot you desire it, rather than merely throwing it over the plate between the shoulder and knee. One is brain control, the other simply mechanical accuracy.

Milk Is Recognized As One of Most Natural Media For The Growth And Transmission of Bacteria, Is Shown

(Editor's Note: This is the third of a series of articles concerning Lubbock's new milk ordinance prepared by A. B. Slagle, Journal staff writer. The Journal is presenting this series of explanations in an effort to aid the citizenship in becoming more familiar with the ordinance.)

Milk, the most widely used food of man or animal, control of the production and distribution of which is provided for under the city odinance recently adopted by the City Commission of Lubbock for protection of the consuming public, is recognized the world over as the most natural medium for the growth and transmission of bacteria, both beneficial and harmful.

It is also a recognized and admitted fact that milk is more commonly used by civilized peoples than by the uncivilized or barbaric, and this as civilization and education increases, the use of milk as a food increases proportionally. Especially in America is milk one of our most common foods, and through the control of production and distribution only can it be maintained at the high quality necessary for the prevention of infectuous diseases.

All Bacteria Not Harmful

All bacteria contained in milk is not harmful, but disease organisms frequently found in milk products are recognized as seriously detrimental to health. The factors affecting bacterial growth in milk are food temperature, moisture, and atmosphere, and from these three sources come largely all detrimental bacteria to the product.

Science has proved that bacteria will grow best at a temperature of from 70 to 100 degrees Farenheit, and milk when first drawn from the udder of the animal is of the same temperature as the body of the cow, which is an average of from 101 to 102 degrees. Unless immediately cooled after drawn, to a temperature of 50 or below, bacteria multiply very rapidly, scientists claiming that under best conditions, one organism can have 17,000,000 descendants over a 24 hour period.

Cooling the milk, however, does not destroy the bacteria, but these will multiply much more slowly at the lower temperature. It has been found necessary to heat milk for thirty minutes at a temperature of 145 degrees Farenheit to kill most of the bacteria. This is ordinarily termed pasteurizing. Ia is also known that bacteria requires considerable moisture for growth, and milk certainly fills this requirement.

Most Common Types

The most common types of bacteria are four in number as follows: Acid forming organisms, gas formers, liquifiers, and disease organisms.

The first, or acid forming organisms are present in milk when drawn sufficient to sour the product without additions, and these are recognized as beneficial to health, the only one of the four that is so recognized.

Gas forming organisms not only sour the milk, but cause gas formations, causing the milk to take on a rank taste, and are harmful to human beings, especially infants. They cause digestive disorders, and have their main source in barnlot filth that under the ordinance in effect here must be kept completely out of the way.

Liquifying bacteria cause milk to curdle without souring necessarily, and after the curd is formed it is gradually eaten away by bacteria and turned into a watery liquid. Although these bacteria are said to be present in the udder of some cows, they are associated also with filth in barn surroundings.

Disease Organisms

Disease organism, the most detrimental of the four, although not commonly found in milk causes serious results when present, and too much care cannot be exercised to prevent milk becoming contaminated with disease bacteria.

The main organisms under this head are: tuberculosis, typhoid fever scarlet fever, diphtheria, sore throat and intestinal troubles, and it may readily be seen that tuberculosis is the only one of these that can be traced to the cow. Others must have gotten into the milk through someone who handled it, or from utensils unsterilized or other outside sources.

To avoid this, the ordinance requires all cows must be tuberculin tested, that all utensils must be thoroughly clean and sterilized, and that all attendants who have regular contac with the production must be examined physically and must be free from disease of any nature.

Three phases in use of milk as a food deserve consideration as follows:

Milk is the most widely used as a food; it is the most easily contaminated; and is used as a food for infants and children in the critical stages of their life, in addition to being used extensively in the sick room where disease is being fought.

Only through such means as a restrictive measure of some kind, such as the ordinance now in effect here can infectuous diseases transmitted through the product be controlled, and it is considered a distinct step forward on the part of city officials in seeking protection for the consuming public.

MURDER CHARGE FILED ON PAIR

Four Others Placed In Jail At Caldwell Charged With Stealing Ballots

(By the Associated Press)

CALDWELL, Texas, June 12.—Two men charged with the murder of Otto Lange on July 2, 1922, and four men charged with the theft of ballot boxes were jailed here Saturday by Sheriff Clint B. Lewis and two State Rangers on indictments returned Friday by the Burleson county grand jury.

Kinch Shelburne and Charles Balks are held on the murder charge, accused of being members of the masked band of four who called Lange from his home and shot him when he resisted them.

The bullet that killed Lange struck his little daughter's finger as she tried to help her father.

J. M. Shelburne, brother of Kinch, Sam Gaines, Davis Lauderdale and Buck Tuttle were arrested on charges of having taken ballot boxes from the voting place at Merle, near Somerville, during the primary of 1922 while holding election, at the point of firearms.

'Dancer of Paris' Opens at Palace On Monday Night

More than the usual interest attending the coming of a feature picture is attached to the arrival of Robert T. Kane's latest First National production, "The Dancer of Paris," which will open at the Palace theatre next Monday.

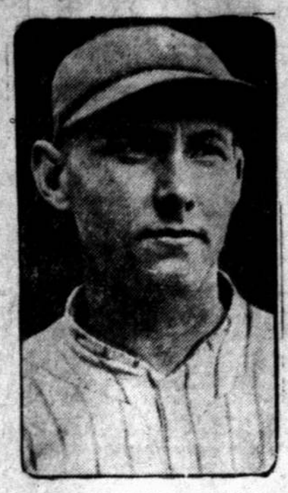

This is because "The Dancer of Paris" is the first story by Michael Arlen to reach the screen. Although the internationally popular author of "The Green Hat" and "These Charming People" has enjoyed no end of stage success, until the filming of "The Dancer of Paris" his work has not been done in pictures.

"The Dancer of Paris" is a typically Arlenesque tale, its central figure being an American girl, popular in the Montmartre of Paris. Her tragedies and romances form a screen story of unusual distinction and charm.

Kane sought far and wide for many days, it is said, before he finally selected Dorothy Mackaill for the title role. Her choice was determined because of her more nearly resembling the type of girl suggested in the Arlen story than any one of a score of other actresses considered for the part. Conway Tearle stars opposite Miss Mackaill. In the supporting cast are Robert Cain, Paul Ellis, Henry Vibart and Charles Craig.

Alfred A. Santell, who directed "Bluebeard Seven Wives," for Kane, was in charge of production.

DAVIDSON TELLS OF HIS ACTIONS OVER RAILROADS

SAVED TWO LINES IN THE STATE FROM BEING JUNKED, HE SAYS

HEMSTEAD, Texas, June 12. (AP)—The story of his part in the rescue of two Texas railroads was told here today by Lynch Davidson, candidate for governor, in a speech at a county-wide rally.

He referred to the to the state railroad in East Texas and the Kansas City, Mexico and Orient road in West Texas. The East Texas road was developed from "two streaks of rust" to a paying proposition, and the junking of the West Texas road war prevented through prompt action at Washington, Mr. Davidson said.

He told how the legislature had given him $25,000 and unlimited powers to "sell, junk, or rebuild the state road," and that by the time it was rebuilt it had $15,000 more in the bank than when the rebuilding started.

"This railroad was tied around my neck, either by my friends or by my enemies, I have never been able to decide which," said Mr. Davidson. "The road was losing $80,000 a year and rapidly going to junk. Two legislatures had been urged to get rid of it. But I had opposed the move because I knew something about the value of the road to the territory it served, if it were properly handled. So finally they turned it over to me.

"My friends predicted the road would ruin me politically, but I had been raised a poor boy, and among other things, I had learned to swap jack knives, and sometimes I got a better knife by the swap. So I had hopes of swapping the state into a better railroad."

Davidson told how he succeeded in obtaining almost $325,000 worth of equipment for the railroad with the $25,000 appropriation plus much credit.

The first thing the road needed, he explained, was rails, 5,000 tons of them.

"I heard the government had some rails that could be allotted to the state highway department, so I got a requisition from the state highway department. But the rails were in New Jersey and the freight on them to Rusk, Texas, the terminal of the road, was just $100,000 with a $2,500 loading charge in New Jersey."

Davidson related that he induced a tramp steamer to carry the rails to Galveston for $17,500, and after which the Southern Pacific railroad was induced to make a counter offer of hauling the rails all the way to Rusk for $35,000.

"They courted us like a boy courting a girl," he said, "and we stood them off the same way until they agreed to credit us for the freight. Then we traded, and the rails finally were landed at Rusk with no cash expense except the $2,500 loading charge in New Jersey.

"The new rails were laid, the old ones were sold for $100,000, new crossties were bought with the money, more junk was sold, and finally the road was completely rebuilt, all the debts were paid off, and we had $40,000 in the bank, $15,000 more than we started with.

That road today is worth a million dollars of any man's money and the difference between what it is earning today and what it was losing amounts to $100,000 a year.

"I tell this at the risk of being accused of bragging, because I just want to show what can be done by applying business to our state institutions, which are proving so expensive today."

In the case of the Orient, Davidson said this road was about to be junked by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, when he went to Washington at his own expense and succeeded in having a bill introduced in the Senate to take the Orient out of the commission's control. Mr. Davidson was then lieutenant-governor.

"This brought the junking plan to a halt, and the Interstate Commerce Commission approved plans for a loan of $3,000,000 which tided the road over until improving business and discovery of oil in its territory put it on a safe basis. Many West Texas towns are presperous today because of the fact that the Orient was saved to them."

ERRORS FREQUENT IN PAPERS, SAYS JUDGE

AUSTIN, June 12. (AP)—Errors are frequent in newspapers, the third court of civil appeals declared here in rendering an opinion reversing and remanding for a new trial the libel suit of Mrs. Gertrude Isense from Hays county, against the Express Publishing company, of San Antonio, publishers of the San Antonio Evening News.

Mrs. Isense sued the company for printing her picture under a caption "Held in Death" and over a story relative to a beauty specialist in Los Angeles, Mme. Electra Lynne, being held in connection with the reported death of Mrs. H. B. Gilchrist while undergoing a "face lifting."

"In the necessary haste and volume of detail required to issue the editions of large daily newspapers, mistakes in the placing and arrangement of type forms, captions or pictures are not infrequent," the opinion read. "Readers of large dailies are no longer surprised at seeing a caption or headline on one subject followed by an article entirely foreign to it; or to see an article on some person accompanied by the pictures of some one else, inserted by mistake."

The court reversed the judgment of $7,500 awarded Mrs. Isense saying that "the proof falls far short of establishing all the elements of damage alleged."

Poinsettia Wins In Annual Yacht Derby

SAN PEDRO, Calif., June 12. (AP)—After trailing in second place for five miles following the start here today of the 2,250 mile race to Honolulu, Walker Horne's yawl Poinsettia took the lead from the schooner Invader and as the six contenders for the Sir Thomas Lipton cup headed Northward was widening the breach.

Running in third place was John Barrymore's Mainer, looked upon by some experts as a likely winner, partly because of the craft's record in winning the Tahiti race last year.

AUDITORIUM IS TO BE SHIFTED

A contract was let to J. H. Murdock by the board of directors of the Panhandle South Plains Fair Association Saturday to wreck the city auditorium and move the lumber to the fair grounds. All the lumber and building material in the old building will be saved and used in buildings at the fair park.

Work will start Monday, according to Murdock, and the old auditorium will be moved to the fair grounds in a few days.

The Lubbock Chamber of Commerce voted to donate the building to the fair association recently if the fair officials would move the structure at once. The Chamber of Commerce took the standpoint that the auditorium was of little or no service to Lubbock in its present stage and that the old building could best be used by the fair association.

The fair association is in need of additional buildings and extensions to the buildings on the grounds are also needed. The board of directors have not decided the exact use to which the lumber will be put as yet.

Disabled Engineer Is Denied Damages

SAN ANTONIO, June 12. (AP) — Though his wild ride on what he testified was a dilapidated engine of the Southern Pacific railroad caused R. B. Ford "severe and permanent injuries to his back, head, spinal column, spinal cord and limbs; entire nervous system shoked, sustaining injuries and impairment to plaintiff's eyes, kidneys, bladder and heart, the use of both arms and legs" on October 21, 1922, he will not receive the money for which he sued the National Insurance company.

Since the insurance policy stated that the person suffering the accident should be "immediately, wholly and continuously" disabled and that Ford admitted making several runs after hi sride, Federal Judge Duval West instructed the jury to find a favorable verdict for the defendant in Federal District court.

For the disastrous ride in engine number 822 he was suing the insurance company for the total of $5 958.34 plus six percent interest and $3,000 attorney's fees.

It's better to cherish a comforting delusion than to brood over a painful truth.

TODAY'S MARKETS

Cotton Markets

NEW YORK REPORT

NEW YORK, June 12. (AP)—A further decline of 15 to 20 points in the cotton market today was followed by moderate rallies on covering by recent sellers. October contracts which had sold off to 16.16c on the early break, rallied to 16.38c and closed at 16.24c compared with 16.34c at the close yesterday. The general market closed barely steady at new declines of 2 to 16 points.

The opening was steady at an advance of 2 to 7 points in response to relatively steady Liverpool cables. Active months showed net gains of six to 9 points after the call on covering combined with a little trade buying of July. This early demand was soon supplied, however, and the forenoon market weakened under a renewal of the recent selling movement which was encouraged by reports of continued good weather and correspondingly favorable crop progress in the South.

July broke from 17.74c to 17.47c and December from 16.41c to 16.16c, net declines of 15 to 19 points and new low records for the season on all positions. These prices appeared to bring in more active covering or realizing by recent sellers and rallied carried the market 3 or 4 points above yesterday's closing figures, but there was no change in the general character of the news and a good part of the improvement was lost in later trading. Closing prices were within 7 or 10 points of the lowest on new crop positions.

A private review of the crop situation said the acreage would not show a decrease of over 2 per cent and while the crop was about 10 days late, it might make up for lost time with another three or four weeks of good weather.

Private cables reported liquidation and short selling had been absorbed by trade calling and covering at the decline in the Liverpool market and that the Manchester cloth market was unsettled with business restricted.

The amount of coton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 67,000 against 58,000 last year.

NEW ORLEANS REPORT

NEW ORLEANS, une 12 (AP)—The cotton market was active today and price fluctuations were wide enough to constitute a very respectable spread between the highs and lows. The general trend of values was again downward but there were period of resistance and fair rallies due to profit taking and covering by satisfied shorts. Nevertheless prices again made new low records for the season.

Following an early decline of 10 to 17 points, due to covering by shorts and better Liverpool cables than due, the market again weakened on a renewal of liquidation of short selling and before the decline was checked prices had eased off 24 to 31 points from the lows and 7 to 11 points from yesterday's close. There was a rally of 8 to 9 points in the last hour on shorts covering and the close showed net losses for the day of 3 points on July and 11 to 14 points on new crop months.

At the start Liverpool came in better thandue and first trades here showed gains of 8 to 14 points. Prices continued to improve after the opening until July traded at 16.99c, October at 16.14c and December 16.10c, or 10 to 17 points above the previous close. These proved to be the high points of the day.

As the weather continued favorable and crop reports were excellent, prices soon turned easy and the decline was not checked until October had dropped to 15.84c and December 15.79c, or 30 to 31 points zelow the early highs. The market then rallied about 8 to 9 points on shorts covering and closed steady. Exports for the day totaled 18,110 bales.

COTTON SEED OIL

NEW YORK, June 12 (AP)—After declining 11 to 15 points today under local selling on the early dip in lard, cotton seed oil rebounded on covering, for over the week-end and in view of oversold pickings. Sales 16,300 barrels. Prime crude nominal; prime summer yellow spot 15.90; July closed 15.10; September 15.05; October 13.54; December 11.58; January 11.48.

COTTON GOODS

NEW YORK, une 12. (AP)—Cotton goods markets were quieter today, due to weaker cotton markets and continued light demand. Raw silk was unchanged and silk goods trading remained quiet. Burlap markets held about steady with prices in Calcutta unchanged. There was no change in wool goods.

Livestock Prices

FORT WORTH REPORT

FORT WORTH, June 12 (AP)—The cattle and shep markets today were nominal while the hog trade looked 10 cents lower. Receipts included 550 grown cattle, 200 calves, 500 hogs and 100 sheep.

Stocks And Money

WALL STREET REPORT

NEW YORK, June 12 (AP)—The stock market, which has been steadily gathering momentum on the upgrade for several days, closed the week with a fresh burst of strength. Under the leadership of the so-called "Morgan stocks"—U. S. Steel and General Motors—buying activities broadened throughout the entire list, although interest centered chiefly in the heavy accumulation of the pivotal issues. Total sales in the two-hour session fell slightly below 800,000 shares.

Commission houses attributed the return of public certificate partly to the strength of the sponsorship for the market leaders. This incentive to constructive operations was augmented by additional trade reports of a reassuring nature, while technical conditions within the market were helped by forced short covering over the week end as bear traders recalled before the persistent advance of industrial favorites.

Grain Markets

CHICAGO REPORT

CHICAGO, June 12 (AP)—Fine weather for harvesting of wheat in the Southwest led to general selling here today and to lower prices for all grain. Wheat values closed weak, at 1 1-4c to 2c net decline, corn 1-2c to 1c down, oats 3-4c to 1 1-8c off, and provisions varying from unchanged figures to a setback of 30 cents.

Corn and oats declined with wheat. Besides, attention was given to the large stock of corn on hand in Chicago and to prospects of an increase of the rilted States visible supply total on Monday.

Commission house selling, partly on foreign account, weakened the provision market.

Author Sees Pola Negri and Writes Play to Fit Her

Drama to order!

This service in the matter of a screen story for Pola Negri was brought about by the desire of Paramount production officials to obtain a a suitable vehicle for her next picture.

The happy medium of screen plays for the star, since she has a flawless knowledge of continental drama with an American technique and viewpoint caused by her thre year residence in this country, appears to combine features of both America and Europe.

Then Ernest Vajda came to Hollywood to do a series of stories exclusive for Paramount. At his first meeting with Miss Negri he constructed a story which was built around an immigrant girl who wanted to become an actress.

Pola, as the slavey is the image of a vanquished Balkan queen. Persuaded by a group of exiled diplomts tht her preence in their kingdom will overthrow dictator and retore happiness to an oppressed populace, she accepts their offer.

So obsessed is she with the aspiration to play the part of a queen and relieve the burdened country that it becomes real to her. By a series of timely incidents, the peasantry is convinced that their queen has returned. The climax and ending are both masterpieces of dramatic surprise.

Very aptly, the film has been titled "The Crown of Lies." Dimitri Buchowetzki, chosen because of his European and American training, directed. Rbert Ames and Noah Beery head the cast of the picture which arrives at the Lindsay Theatre on Monday.

The first move for dry legislation in Germany has failed by a decisive committee vote in the Reichstag. But Berlin should not give up. Consistent effort may eventually make Berlin as dry as St. Louis.—Kansas Citl Star.

WOLFFARTH COMMUNITY, SPURRED ON BY CROP PROMISES, WILL BE HOST AT CELEBRATION JULY 3RD

CROPS LOOK FINE, COUNTY AGENT EATON SAYS AS HE RETURNS FROM VISIT TO GROWING AND PROSPERING SOUTHWEST COMMUNITY

Crops are looking good in the Wolffarth community and the people of that section are joining together to further the advantages of that section, according to D. F. Eaton, Lubbock county farm agent who was one of the speakers at Wolffarth Friday night when officers of the newly organized Wolffarth community club were elected.

Officers and committees for the new organization are; J. E. Carter, president; W. D. Leard, vice president; W. A. Fincher, secretary-treasurer. Agricultural committee: Mesdames H. W. Chase, H. A. Sullivan, M. H. McReynolds, J. E. Carter and Mr. H. B. Newton, Otto L. Sims and J. A. Hobgood. Program committee: J. H. Barnett Jr., and Misses Edna Tucker and Euva Harrison.

Celebration Is Scheduled.

The club voted to stage a big celebration July 3 when barbecue will be served, baseball, speaking and other amusements will be enjoyed. The following committee was appointed to make arrangements for the celebration: W. D. Leard, F. J. Stryker, H. A. Sullivan, W. A. Fincher, W. H. Meek, J. G. Cole and A. A. Barringer.

In addition to the good conditions of crops, poultry raising, hog raising and other diversification programs are receiving wide attention at Wolffarth. Ed Schroeder and William S. Hays are about the champion poultry raisers. Schroeder's Rhode Island White fowls took first place last fall at the Panhandle South Plains fair and second at the Dallas fair. Hays —a new comer to this section plans to put his Earred Rocks flock up for honors at the Panhandle South Plains fair, September 29, 30, October 1 and 2.

To Exhibit Hogs.

M. I. Caviness and Lee Jarvis have good swine herds which they plan to exhibit at the fair.

The agriculture committee will gather an exhibit from the community to show at the Panhandle South Plains fair and will encourage as many of the farmers there to enter the farm contest of the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce as possible. With crops in the Wolffarth community in the best of conditions at this time the committee believes Wolffarth will have a good chance to win some of the prizes in the farm contest and to make a good fight for honors in the community exhibit at the fair.

Paris Night Life Will Be Shown In Picture at Lyric

Modern Paris, gay, glittering, carefree, voluptuous—has been transplanted to the screen in Frances Marion's new Metropolitan picture which will be on view at the Lyric Theatre, next Monday-Tuesday. Not only did Frances Marion make the production, but she personally adapted the story of Balzac's "Pere Goriot."

Particularly colorful is the reproduction of the spectacular Beaux Arts Ball, which has long been the most famous annual event of its kind in the world. The largest setting ever built at the Metropolitan Studios was designed and erected for this brilliant scene.

Marion Morgan, internationally famous dancer, supervised and directed the presentation of the dances and ballets. Every sort of masquerade costume imaginable was used by the scores of actors participating in the ball, taxing the wardrobe department to the utmost in designing and executing the fanciful creations

Jetta oGudal, Lionel Barrymore, Mary Brian nad Edmund Burns have the featured roles, while in the supporting cast are Emile Chautard, Mathilde Comont, Jocelyn Lee, Brandon Hurst, Carrie Daumery, Fanny Yantis and Jean de Briac. SENATORIAL PROBERS SHOCKED BY TALES OF G. O. P. PRIMARY WHEN MUCH MONEY WAS SPENT

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS LAVISHED BY CANDIDATES, WITNESSES SAY DURING INVESTIGATION AT WASHINGTON

(By the Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, June 12.—Digging deeper into the recent Pennsylvania Republican primary campaign, the special Senate committee heard some startling stories today about conditions in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

Frederick C. Buetal, a supporter of Governor Pinchot in the Senatorial fight which Senator Vare won, said he was "thoroughly convinced" that the "balance of power" in Pittsburgh had been bought.

This was based, he said, on observations at headquarters on Vare.

Beutal estimated that approximately 20,000 men got money at the two headquarters and said that since many of these drew money for other workers, he thought the total of men paid might reach 50,000.

Watchers Are Hired

Stating that he knew of no outright case of vote buying, Beutal said that "instead they hire watchers." The Pepper watchers got $10, he added, but the Vare headquarters $5 bills were handed out indicating, he asserted, that "the Pepper people were better fixed for money."

C. Jay Goodnough, chairman of the Pinchot state campaign committee, told of frauds committed in a municipal election in Philadelphia last November and added he was of the opinion that "to a greater or lesser exent" the same conditions existed in the May primary.

Statements along a similar line were made by T. Henry Walnut, chairman of Pinchot, Philadelphia. He said that on primary he noticed a large number of Vare workers at the polls, but comparatively few Pepper watchers.

Details Are Received

More details as to expenditures for Pepper and Pinchot were received from other witnesses, but there was no change in the totals previously received into the committee record, showing known outlays of approximately $1,400,000, with more than $1,000,000 of that for the Pepper-Fisher-Smith-Woodward ticket.

Disclosures in the inquiry thus far have caused some concern to Republican Senate leaders and a movement to have Congress pass a law limiting the expenditures in primary campaigns for the Senate would meet test of the decision in the Newberry. The court held could not control primary expenditures.

Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, said he and other Senators were working on a bill which they believed would meet the situation.

Goodnaugh placed the total spent for Governor Pinchot at $175,000. Besides a state-wide committee, county committees were formed in every county and these took care of the precinct organizations.

Walnut, who headed the Philadelphia committee, presented a summary of expenditures by that committee amounting to $24,171 with receipts of $28,397, practically all of it from the State organization.

Of the money spent, $7,200 went for watchers, $3,680 for salaries of headquarters workers, $3,152 for printing and multigraphing and $1,000 for expenses of political meetings.

Beutal's story of "pay days" at the Pepper and Vare headquarters gripped the committee. His estimate was that 200 to 3000 men were paid off each hour in the first day.

"They were not given single bills," he added. "I saw one man come out with a roll, apparently of $10 bills, which was three inches in diameter."

BALDRIDGE TO LEAD EDITORS

Clifton Newspaperman Chosen Head of Texas Press Association

(By Associated Press.)

SAN ANTONIO, June 12.—Robert T. L. Baldridge, of Clifton, will head the Texas Press association for the year 1926-27. He was elected by acclamation at the closing session of the 1926 convention Saturday noon. El Paso was selected as the next meeting place, after a hot fight between Texarkana, Mineral Wells and Fairfurrias.

Resolutions adopted by the organization in its final business session, placed the T. P. A. on record as favoring enforcement of all laws and affirming the duty of the press in supporting this program; approving and voicing cooperation with the Texas weekly press; expressing strong disapproval of the government's printing of envelopes and expressing determination to voice this opposition before Congress; favoring a stable and adequate support of public educatiot at the special session of the 29th Legislature or the regular session of the 40th; endorsement of the conference of agricultural writers in connection with the A. & M. college short course every year; re-establishment of the School of Journalism and its staff; approval of the efforts of the State Park Board in obtaining 51 park sites for the state.

"Mystery Man" Found To Be West Virginian

TAYLOR, Texas, une 12. (AP)—The aged "mystery man," whose death occurred here several days ago was Walter McComs, son of former Lieutenant McComs of West Virginia, wso as judge signde the death warrant of ohn Brown. The identification, which was apparently confirmed, was mad through the efforts of Mrs. N. E. Reviere of Taylor.

Photographs in the possession of "Mystery Man," who was found dead in his room at a hotel here, were sent to Charleston, where the man had said he was born.

A Charleston newspaper reprinted one of them and Sarah Holderly, elderly Charleston woman, recognized the picture as being that of Judge Elisha W. McComs. A description of a son who had been missing in the West tallied with that of the man found dead here.

TEXAS AMERICAN LEGION GIVES DAN MOODY CLEAN BILL, DENYING CHARGES MADE BY JIM FERGUSON

LYNCH SCORES OIL COMPANIES AND FERGUSON IS RABID IN ATTACKS ON MOODY AS STATE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN WEARS ON

GONZALES, Texas, June 12. (AP)—The head of the American Legion of Texas semi-officially approved the war record of Dan Moody, candidate for Governor, which had been attacked, here tonight when Dr. W. T. Dunning, State commander, issued a special statement just prior to Moody's appearance before a Gonzales county audience.

"Charges have been made against a member of the American Legion who chances to be a candidate for Governor, that he has a tarnished war record, one unfitting him to be a member of the American Legion," Dr. Dunning's statement said. "These charges, made against this man, Dan Moody, of Taylor, Texas, are utterly false and without foundation. The records of the War Department show that Mr. Moody served in the recent war and was discharged at its close. His record is clear and the legion, requiring as a basis for membership, only this honorable discharge and that a man be of good moral character. The legion thus feels that it has not been mistaken in admitting this man to membership. His local post at Taylor saw fit to elect him as its first commander and in the interest of fair play and in order that the people of Texas may know the truth of the situation arising from these unfounded charges, this statement is made. The people of Texas are entitled to know the truth and the commander of the legion feels that it is his duty to give it to them.

"The American Legion of Texas heretofore having adopted a policy of non-participation in politics and now continuing to pursue that policy this statement is here first qualified with the distinct understanding that the legion as a whole endorses the candidacy of no man and the commander abides by that."

Major Texas gubernatorial candidates had a merry day and night Saturday, two of them harping on their pet claims to office Associated Press dispatches to the Journal disclosed. The following is a report on the vocal bombardments of the aspirants.

Jim "Pours It On Dan"

CORSICANA, Texas, June 12 (AP)—Devoting most of his address to an attack on Dan Moody, James E. Ferguson addressed a large audience on the courthouse lawn here Saturday night in behalf of the candidacy of his wife, Governor Miriam A. Ferguson.

Former District Judge A. P. Mays introduced the speaker, following a brief talk by the chairman of the evening, Judge Hawkins Scarborough. Both Scarborough and Mays defended the Ferguson administration, declaring it had placed the State on a cash basis had been responsible for improvement of rural educational conditions and had sponsored the anti-mask law.

Argues Second Term

Ferguson devoted the early part of his speech to argument that Mrs. Ferguson is entitled to a second term, in keeping with a tradition which he said had not been broken since the days of Sam Houston.

"The opposition is trying to do something that cant be done," Ferguson continued. "The only two men that ever went from the league's office to the governor's chair were Jim Hogg and Charles Culberson and neither made the pilgrimage direct."

Uses Same Tactics

His talk followed the general lines of that he has delivered throughout the campaign. He attacked Moody's war record, upheld Mrs. Ferguson's pardon record, and defended the administration's highway department policy.

He predicted Mrs. Ferguson's nomination by a plurality of "at least 24,000 votes."

Lynch Raps Oil Situation

BRENHAM, Texas, June 12 (AP)—Lynch Davidson charged here today that his two principle opponents had assisted "the Standard Oil Company in taking $25,000,000 out of Texas in the last few weeks."

He referred to the gasoline price advance which he said was the result of the combination of big oil companies which he charged was made possible by the governor's signature to a bill passed by the last legislature.

Goes to Hempstead

The Houston man addressed residents from all parts of Washington county on the courthouse square here today, and left this afternoon for Hempstead where he spoke tonight.

"When the Standard Oil Company of Texas are already paying 40 per cent dividends the gasoline advance is a direct holdup," he charged. "They can juggle statistics all they please to show that the advance is justified but the enormous and increasing profits and the advancing value of Standard oil stock shows too plainly where our money goes."

He referred to the statement of C. M. Proctor, president of the Dallas County Independent Stations Association, who said Friday that the "unions olled" gasoline dealers expect gasoline to go to 25 to 30 cents a gallon if action is not taken to save the indecpnlent dealers.

Says More oGing Out

"This would mean another twenty-five or fifty million dollars lifted from the pockets of Texas gasoline users into those of the Standard to swell that 40 per cent profit to 50 or 60 per cent," he said.

"The wors is yet to come, for when the Standard gets its grip firmly on the State in the years to come and has finally wiped ou every remnant of competition, nothing can shake it loose.

"While this is transpiring by leading opponents, Ferguson and Moody, make faces at each other, call each other names, and say nothing about the big issues which every Texan should discuss and study."

throughout the wooden structure, and due to the intense heat, water seemed to have little effect on the flames.

Four Hoses Used

Four pressure streams from two of the trucks were played onto the structure, and two more streams from the plug were used, but due to the inability of firemen to reach the inside of the building where the flames and here were so intense, it was practically impossible to do more than save adjoining buildings.

The flames were confined to the hotel except for slight damage to the frame annex that was used as a dining room. This was slightly damaged, a portion of the roof and attic being burned away.

John J. Chauncey, well known Lubbock man who owned the property could not be reached last night for a statement, and firemen would not make an estimate on the loss. The building was under lease to a Mr. Ellis, reports said, but these could not be confirmed. It could not be learned whether the lass was covered by insurance, either the building or furniture.

Thousands of interested citizens milled about, and practically every avenue of approach to the scene was blocked, but firemen experienced no serious difficulty in their valiant efforts to save the building.

Special Train To Amarillo Not Yet Sure—Kuykendall

bock men to come to the aid of the ticket selling committee," Kuykendall says in urging that Lubbock citizens come to the rescue of the special train to Amarillo.

Other cities in West Texas including the cities making the fight for the next convention have already secured the necessary number for their train and are sending over twice the number that have signed up for Lubbock. These cities are located all the way from two to four times the distance from Amarillo that Lubbock is.

Having absolute confidence in the boosting spirit of Lubbock citizens, Kuykendall, chairman of the ticket selling committee stated Saturday that he believed that the necessary number of tickets would be sold Monday to assure the special train. "Lubbock never failed to do the necessary in past years and I do not believe that Lubbock will fail this time when it is realized what is at stake."

LUBBOCK MEN TO GO TO AMARILLO TO GAIN ADVICE

Hankins are opposing this move, Mayor Parrish told the mass meeting yesterday that he would cast the deciding vote and when he did "will have no apologies to make."

$10,000 Bond Arranged

The commission has told the McMahan interests that a forfeit fund of $10,000 must be arranged if the contract is signed and the capitalists have already agreed to this improviso. They plan to begin construction of the line by September 15, have it completed by December first frim the field to Slaton, and give fuel service along the line by January 1, 1927." To do this they must have laid slightly more than 150 miles of pipe and make an expenditure of between four and four and one-half million dollars, the money to be furnished by Pittsburgh and Boston bankers. All data in connection with the line has been compiled by the capitalists and a uniform rate of 67½ cents per million cubic feet has been arranged for all of the towns on the line. Canyon, Happy, Tulia, Kress, Plainview, Hale Center, Abernathy and Slaton will be served in addition to Lubbock.

At the called meeting Saturday afternoon Mayor Pink L. Parrish presided and sketched the proposition facing the city. Senator Bledsoe then addressed the men, telling McMahan's plans. Other men who voiced their opinions included O. L. Slaton, Sydney Webb, of Slaton and Fort Worth; C. E. Maedgen, Robert F. Higgins, W. C. Rylander, Felix O. Kelly, J. W. Gamel, Fred Spikes, T. W. Sawyer, George R. Bean, J. H. Hankins and J. L. Dow. Of this group only Messrs Dow and Slaton opposed the McMahan contract. Others, however, expressed a desire to go slowly before signing it or any other franchise.

Arnett To Aid City

It was stated before the meeting that Sam C. Arnett, who with a number of associates now has a gas franchise, would relinquish his franchise whenever anyone else could and would give the city a better one. Mr. Arnett was quoted as saying that he was holding the franchise in trust for the city of Lubbock and would do all in his power to aid the city along this line.

The meeting was called by Mayor Parrish in order to lay the proposition before what he considered a representative group of business men, he said. A number who were invited were unable to attend.

Parrish Leaves Sunday

Mayor and Mrs. Parrish will leave Sunday to visit in Amarillo and Mr. Parrish will meet the other Lubbock men in the North Plains city Monday. It is probable that others will join the party, Senator W. H. Bledsoe told the Journal late last night.

One fact which was stressed by all present at the meeting on Saturday was that every man on the city commission and every member of the Board of City Development wanted gas and knew that it would be the best for Lubbock. It was also pointed out however, that there may be other and better opportunities for the city than the present one and to investigate the matter fully is a necessity.

The best evidence of character and culture is recognition of the merits of others, Conscious Inferiority, with a little admixture of envy, and a sprinkling of malice, constitutes a knocker.

Gomorrah 'A Nine O'Clock Town' And Babylon Over-rated When Compared With Borger, Boom Town Of The Panhandle Oil Field, Hall Says

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is another article by Charles M. Hall, special correspondent for NEA Service and The Journal, describing boom conditions in what is expected to become the world's largest oil field—the newly developed Panhandle field in Texas.

BY CHARLES M. HALL
Special Correspondent for NEA Service

AMARILLO, Texas, June 12.—Gomorrah was a nine o'clock town, and Babylon's wickedness was overrated: the newest candidates for the rain of blazing brimstone are the newly born boom towns, sprawling under the hot sun on the broad plains of the Texas Panhandle.

These towns weren't in existence six months ago. They grew up overnight when oil men discovered that the Panhandle contained potentially the greatest oil field in the world. And into its short compass are jammied all the vices of the bad old western frontier.

Let it be said at the start that several of the oil boom towns in the Panhandle are highly respectable, peopled by working men who came to work. But in others the old west lives again. Take the boom town of Borger, for example.

Old Time Dance Halls

In it you may see dance halls exactly like those lawless things that flowered in the California and Nevada mining camps generations ago, mining camps that are now pictured luridly on the screen but are seen nowhere else. You can find typical moving-picture gambling halls, regular old time wild west saloons, ferocious bad men who go about with six-shooters strapped to their hips.

If you go there to see the sights you won't get hurt if you keep quiet and don't look for trouble; always provided you remember one thing—

You mustn't wear a white hat.

The white hat is the symbol of the Texas Rangers, and the Texas Rangers are as popular there as Trotzky at a Chamber of Commerce convention. If you wear a white hat someone is apt to take a pot shot at you from behind a hitching post. But otherwise you'll be all right.

As the sun goes down the big business starts. The workers start coming into town in droves, and soon the thump of unskilled feet shuffling on rough planks to the tune of wheezy ragtime mingles with the hum of voices, loud laughter, a few curses and—occasionally—a shot or two.

You can go to "Ma's or to "Mattie's" dance hall, where there are 200 ladies of the kind known as "dance hall girls." If you do the girls will challenge you to dance, at 25 cents a dance. Of this sum each girl gets a dime.

Or you can go into any one of a dozen saloons and buy anything to drink except water. If your taste runs that way you can risk your money—though risk is hardly the word—at anything from three-card monte to stud poker, played at a table that is surrounded by barbed wire to keep the kibitzers from peeking over the shoulders of the players.

There are fights in plenty in these places. Usually there are ordinary fist fights, with feet and teeth used as a secondary line of defense; but gun fights are not infrequent. The majority of the bad men are poor shots, however, for in all the shootings to date no one has been killed.

Three home-made policemen with pearl-handled pistols strut about the streets, but they see no evil and hear no evil. They are decorative but that's about all.

The whole thing is like nothing so much as a lurid movie of the old west. It is true to type if not true to life. Swaggerers with revolvers, short-skirted dancing girls, cold-eyed gamblers—they're all there.

Genuine bad men are scarce, however. There were a few attempts at highway robbery and the like, but the Texas plainsmen and cowboys are too well used to handling weapons themselves. Most of the would-be holdup men get shot up rather badly. Life and limb arent in any real danger if one doesn't look for trouble.

Above is shown the main street of Borger, Texas, where you can still find the old wild west. Five months ago this site was nothing but a barren plain. Below is an artists conception of a scene in one of its dance halls.

YOUNG HOPPER TO TELL OF CITY AT AMARILLO

Hubert Hopper will represent Lubbock in the "My Town," speaking contest held at the West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention at Amarillo, June 21, 22 and 23½ according to an announcement from M. H. Duncan, superintendent of the high school. Hopper is one of the most able speakers of the Lubbock high school and already has his talk regarding Lubbock prepared for delivery at the convention.

Hopper will compete with other speakers from all parts of West Texas in the gigantic contest. He won fourth honors at the interscholastic league contest at Austin recently and is expected to make a good showing at Amarillo.

Several worthy prizes are being offered to the winning speaker including a silver loving cup, offered by Thomas Etheridge Jr., of San Antonio; one hundred dollars in gold, offered by Leon Shield, of Coleman; a scholarship in the Texas Technological college, and probably other prizes to first place, and cash prizes to winners of second and third places.

Hopper will tell the thousands of West Texas business men in attendance at the convention why Lubbock is the best town in West Texas.

His appearance here will be outdoors at the location of the chautauqua tent, the seats that are being used for the chautauqua to be left after removal of the tent the night of the 17th, and other seats will be added if deemed necessary by the committee in charge to handle the crowds that are expected.

The itenerary of Mr. Moody for next week as given out here Saturday is as follows: June 14, Bowie and Wichita Falls; June 15, Vernon and Quanah; June 16, Childress, Memphis and Clarendon; June 17, Amarillo; June 18, Canyon, Tulia and Plainview; June 19, Snyder, Post and Lubbock.

GASSOWAY DIES ON SATURDAY AFTER LONG ILLNESS

D. J. Gassoway, who for nearly 3 years has been confined to his home following a stroke of paralysis, died about 6:15 Saturday evening at his home at the corner of 17th street and Avenue N. He had been in ill health for six or seven years.

Funeral services will be held Monday afternon from the Church of Christ, of which Mr. Gassoway was a devoted member, with Rev. R. R Brooks, pastor, officiating, and funeral will be made in the Lubbock cemetery. Mr. Gassoway is survived by his wife, and one son, Jimmy, who lives in Dinuba, California.

The son has advised his mother that he and his family will arrive here Sunday night, the quickest that the trip can be made by train.

Mr. Gassoway came to Lubbock county from central Texas about ter years ago, living for three or four years near Idalou where he engaged in farming. Since coming to Lubbock his health prevented him from actively engaging in business or civic activity, and his efforts have been confined entirely to his church, which he loved dearly. Funeral services will be hel at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Veteran Texas Newspaperman Visits Lubbock on Coast-to-Coast Journey Started by Wager in N. Y. Press Club

Working his way by selling his poems to editors between New York and San Francisco, Oliver Allstorm, veteran Texas newspaperman and one of the nation's outstanding poets of the present day, visited in Lubbock the latter part of the week.

According to Mr. Allstrom, while at a recent meeting of the New York Press club, he made a wager of $1,000 the money to go to a New York orphanage, that he could work his way from New York to San Francisco, sell a poem in every town and to every editor, and make the jaunt entirely on the proceeds of his verses. Up to the time Mr. Allstorm reached Lubbock he had seen 122 editors and had sold each of them a poem—had paid all of his expenses and lived comfortably.

Has Published 11 Volumes

The veteran Texas journalist, who has served in numerous capacities on the larger papers and who for years was an editorial executive of the Houston Chronicle, has written eleven volume of verse and will make his twelfth from the series he is selling. In the book he will mention the name of each paper in each city, carrying his verses sold during the trip.

In addition to his writing Mr. Allstorm does daily syndicate work for a Chicago newspaper concern.

The following is the poem purchased by the Journal to keep Mr. Allstrom's string unbroken:

THE RICH POOR MAN
By Oliver Allstorm
(Copyrighted)

The richest man I ever knew
Was very rich indeed,
He had so many, many friends
He never was in need.

His clothes were shabby and his hat
Was green and blue withage;
And all the wrinkles in his face
Proved why he was a sage.

He lived within a lowly cot
Where vines clung to the wall;
And friends and strangers came to him
Because he welcomed all.

One day we missed him on the street
Where little children play,
And knocking at his door we found
His soul had flown away.

At peace he lay with empty hands,
He had no more to give,
For all he ever had he gave
Before he ceased to live.

And so I say, that he was rich,
In stock of love and grace;
For in the hearts of those he loved
He left an empty place.

The old-fashioned father and mother are just ready to turn in for the night when son and daughter are starting for the dance.—Lafayette Journal and Courier.

The wedding of Miss Frances Hoffman and Richard L. Douglas in Slaton at 4:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon is expected to draw a large group of friends from here for the ceremony, which is to be in the First Methodist church.

Miss Hoffman has long been considered a member of Lubbock society. During her high school and college career she came here often to attend functions and upon her graduation from State university last spring she accepted a place here in the office of R. J. Murray, working until this spring.

Miss Josephine McHugh, of Austin and Slaton, a graduate of the State university, is to be the other brides maid. Miss Jeanette Ramsey, of Slaton is to be pianist and Miss Edith Carter, of Lubbock, is to be soloist. Little Kathryn Whitehead, Slaton, is to be flower girl.

Charles Keffir, a lawyer of Amarillo, is to attend Mr. Douglas as best man and Carl George and C. C. Hoffman Jr., of Slaton, will be the groomsmen. Howard Hoffman is to be violinist. Rev. B. W. Dodson, of Snyder, formerly pastor of the Methodist church, Slaton, is to perform the ceremony.

Miss Hoffman is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hoffman, of Slaton, and Mr. Douglas is a Lubbock attorney. They will be at home after July 15 at 2128 16th street, Lubbock.

Nancy Ruth Leaverton And Ann Dohoney Are Honored

Little Misses Nancy Ruth Leaverton and Ann Dohoney were honorees at a reception given Thursday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Weaver with Miss Kathryn Weaver, their daughter, as hostess. The reception was given with the formality of an adult function except that virtually every guest took part on the program during the afternoon.

Guests were met at the door by Miss Peggy Leland and presented to the hostess who presented them to the members of the receiving line. Ann Dohoney, Nancy Ruth Leaverton, Janice Hartberger, Johann Boyd, Nell Boyd, Betty Alice Gordon. Other members of the house party were La Nell and Janice Hurlburt, Margaret Cosby, Mary Ross Edwards, Martha Dean Cosby, Caroline Spencer and Maurice Hunter.

Among the other guests who called during the afternoon were Ophelia Mae Beall, Nell Ruth Arnett, Betty Jean Smith, Dorothy Frances Allen, Katherine Barr, Virginia Lee Barr, Mary and Frances Wilson, Bunny Dow, and Mesdames J. L. Ratliff, Percy Spencer, C. J. Leland, Floyd Beall, Clark Smith, Claude Hurlburt, D. N. Leaverton.

The Woman's Day

By ALLENE SUMNER

O Beautiful Lady!

Some gushing traveler in our midst opines that never, never have American women been so beautiful as now. Which strikes my listing ears as a copious and undiluted measure of applesauce. Women may look more comfortable, healthier, than ever before. But if you come right down to those aesthetic qualities known sa feminine beauty which knocks one for a loop, they're not in it at all compared with the girls who once made personal beauty their life time's interest and full working day job!

Gotta Longa Haira Club

Fourteen long-tressed maidens in Milton College, Wisconsin, have joined together in amicable fellowship in a club yclept Gotta Longa Haira for the laudable purpose of furthering and abetting long hair. Which is what ails this country most, this spirit of converting everybody to your own ways and opinions. If gals want long hair let 'em have it, but for goodness sake why need they insist that everybody else have it? A bad spirit for humans so young!

They Want to Work

The housewives of America want to drudge. They don't know what to do with their time if they don't. They must be educated out of drudgery, pulled out. All this from Mrs. Mary King Sherman, president of the General Federation of Women's clubs. Which is a very smart observation and only what every woman knows who has ever tried to foist a new labor-saving method upon a woman who has been accustomed all her life to do it the hard way.

Yellow Luncheon

Many yellow and white luncheons are given in the spring for brides and graduates. For an original dish, make lobster eggs. Cut hard-boiled eggs in halves lengthwise, remove yolk and mix with chopped lobster meat moistened with mayonnaise. Serve upon lettuce leaves with cress or parsley for garnish.

Beauty and Sitting

With so much agitation about the havoc wrought by drastic dieting for reduction, something else had to be done. Now they tell us that sitting and standing just so, achieving a certain line, will take away 20 pounds, or add as many. If your arms are short, sit, they say, with body inclined a bit forward, hnd upon knee. If you would look tiler, stad relaxed with knee and foot extended towards the onlooker, rather than away from him. If you are too tall, sit with limbs crossed at the knee and drawn backward.

Not Correct!

It is not good for a man and his wife to register at a hotel as "John B. Smith, New York, and wife." The wife is as much of an individual as John B. Smith. The correct registering should read. "John B. Smith, New York, Mrs. John B. Smith, New York." Children under 16 are not registered by name, but just "two children.

Ensemble Bathing Suits

Now there are even ensemble bathing suits for the deep cold sea waves. Very few one-pieces in the bathing suit kingdom are seen this year. Sort of two-piece dresses in silk prints, with wool jersey tights in solid color to harmonize with one of the print colors inthe frock, are very nifty.

Fashion Sets Color Vogue; Reds and Blues Seen at Race Tracks

Mrs. William Dangley, left, and Mrs. Thomas Robinson, of New York society, snapped at Belmont Park wearing fashion's latest for sport

Mrs. Fifi Widener Leidy in attractive velveteen coat and wide hat.

BY BETSY SCHUYLER
NEA Service Writer.

NEW YORK, June 12.—A daily fashion show is being staged these days at Belmont Park during the racing season. To study the latest styles, I know of no better, or more comfortable place than in the paddock between races.

Here the very smartest society women come. Against an ideal setting of green trees and velvet lawn, and a back drop of blue sky, the social mannequins strut in new costumes every afternoon.

The vogue for color is thoroughly established. Aside from the navy blue and Chanel red, which lead, I notice that the clear, bright blues—that very bold blue we used to call royal blue—and Pervenche blue are exceedingly smart.

Greens In Eclipse

Greens have suffered aneclipse. Yellow is undoubtedly smart for accent. A yellow scarf with the navy or oxford gray suit, and occasionally a yellow ballybuntle hat and yellow bag add charm to the picture.

As a fashion chronicler, I must record the progress of the sleeve. It possesses infinite variety and has achieved a subtlety of cut and a trick of being wide at one part, but narrow at the shoulder line and fitted at the cuff that is baffling. The long, plain sleeve is still good, of course, but not omnipotent.

Whereas the silver fox fur is undoubtedly the leader in furs, I have seen a number of small sable or martin scarfs as well as the white cocon or gray fox, and other furs dyed exactly to match a fabric.

In vain, albeit earnestly, I looked for something new in handbags. That particular accessory is at a standstill. There are envelopes or pouinches of all sizes in leather or tapestry or embroidered fabric—occasionally of lizard or alligator to match the shoes, but nothing we haven't all seen before.

Regarding gloves, too, I have nothing new to report. The unanimous choice is for the champagne colored or light grey kid pull-on variety.

I must say, however, I have never seen more charming buttonnieres than this season. The smartest ones are very small, worn in the lapel of the coat or suit—a rose, daisy and sprig of mignonette, a few spears of some fine "filler" posies, tied with a tiny bow of ribbon.

On fray frocks, the French combination of pink rose and blue forget-me-nots is very charming on the dark suit a bit of red and deep blue, or a helping of highly colored field flowers is more peppy.

Biege continues to be extremely smart. The Countess Salm wore it one day last week in a crepe roma frock, with wide bertha and elaborate cuffs of white crepe.

Mrs. Widener Leidy, as she is officially listed, though everyone calls her Fifi Widener again, wore an attractive velveteen coat with loose sleeves and a wide brimmed hat. We should be thankful that no brim can completely hide her gay, spontaneous smile.

The photographs of Mrs. William Dangley and Mrs. Thomas Robinson illustrate what I consider extremely snappy sport frocks. I like the little frock of gingham checked silk that peeps from Mrs. Dangley's biege coat, and I like the dull plaids in Mrs. Robinson's wrap. Personally, I favor their small, tailored hats.

While skirts for day continue to show a preference for stopping at the knee rather than at the ankle, I notice that for evening the lonk skirt is gaining ground. When the Stagers gave their party at Ezra Winter's studio, to wind up their season's activities, I thought I had never seen a more lovely costume than the one worn by Mrs. John Barrymore, whom I consider a flawless type.

Summer Styles Near

She was not in evening attire, though practically everyone else was. Her gown was of white georgette crepe frock, with long sleeves and a skirt almost to her ankles. It was finely pleated and held into a low waistline, and with it she wore a marvelously draped scarf of purple—royal purple.

At the same affair where the social and theatrical set were both represented, I noticed that most of the frocks were long—many, of course, bouffant taffetas that have to be long. Anna Duncan was bewitching in a white velvet affair with plain bodice and full long skirt, and Violet Kemble Cooper was as regal as she is on the stage in a white frock with fringe—a Vionnet model, I believe.

Several women in short dance frocks whispered to me they saw the error of their ways and were going back to longer skirts for evening, if not for the street.

It is only a matter of days now, until Newport, Southampton and the fashionable watering places call the smart set out of New York, and I can have reports from these points of what is really new in summer attire.

Lubbock Delegation Returns From Northwest Texas Epworth Leaguers Convention; Reports Pleasant Trip

Rev. E. E. White, Richard Cavett, Evelyn Wilson, Mrs. C. J. Felty, Misses Eva and Ola May, Mary Lois Thompson, R. S. Pritchard of this city and Miss Evelyn Sowell, who has been in school at T. W. C., Fort Worth, during the past year, returned yesterday afternoon from Abilene where they have been attending the Northwest Texas Epworth league conference assembly, in session the past week, at McMurry college.

Misses Alice and Sallie Bean, also delegates from First Methodist church here, will return to Lubbock later, as they are visiting with relatives in that city.

Wesley Doak, Intermediate league delegate to the convention, went from Abilene to Stamford, and will return to Lubbock about the middle of the week.

The conference was a decided success. Attendance was not so large as it has been in previous years, but the standard of the work done for Epworth league credit was somewhat higher than it has been. One hundred forty delegates took credit work during the assembly, and were awarded certificates.

Features Are Outstanding.

Some of the outstanding features of the meet were the registration on Monday evening, when Leagues from all Northwest Texas were rpresented, beginning of classes in Bible, Missions and League Methods, and in General Methods, on Tuesday morning appointment of committees on Wednesday; the Huges-Capterton memorial service on Thursday, with the report of the Standards of Efficiency committee as to the standing of Leagues represented, and the election of officers; the awarding of the loving cup for the inter-district contest and the awarding of certificates of Friday, and the closing of the assembly on Friday night, to meet next year at Clarendon college.

For class wrok, such courses as "The Christian Life," "The Gospel of Mark," "The Story of Missions," "Looking Ahead with Latin America," "Builders of the Kingdom," "Methods: First, Second, Third and Fourth departments," and Junior and Intermediate leadership," with a course for the whole assembly of "General Methods."

Miss Evelyn Wilson, of Lubbock, was appointed Commissioner for the Lubbock district of the Huges-Caperton Memorial project, and was installed in the office Thursday.

Contest Is Close.

The Loving Cup contest was one of the closest races that has been brought out any time recently. For the third consecutive year, the Plainview District, under the leadership of Mr. Royce Oxford, carried away honors and the cup; but their victory this year was not easily won, by any means. Clarendon District came next to them with a score only two tenths of one point less than that of Plainview.

Mr. Royce Oxford, of Plainview, was elected to the office of Conference President, to succeed A. G. Waugh, of Lamesa, who has held the office for the past two years. A. C. Robinson, Stamford, was elected vice president; Miss Llewellyn Deacon, Amarillo, secretary; Miss Alma McNeal, Monroe, Everitt Dison, Canyon, Era Agent. These officers were installed Friday.

The District Secretary of the Lubbock District, Mr. J. M. Collins, of Lamesa, was reappointed to his office for the ensuing year.

Menus for the Family

By Sister Mary

Breakfast—Orange juice, asparagus omolet, graham muffins, milk, coffee.

Luncheon—Baked hominy, crisp broiled bacon, cress and mint sandwiches, caramel cookies, rhubarb sauce, milk, tea.

Since no cereal is served for breakfast a cereal main dish is suggested for luncheon. The rhubarb sauce should be served with the hominy, bacon and sandwiches and the cookies finish the meal to help make the milk "go down."

Asparagus Omelet

One bunch asparagus, 4 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons flour, 1 cup water in which asparagus was cooked, ½ cup cream, 5 eggs, 1 teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper.

Wash and scrape asparagus and cut all but four fine stalks into inch pieces, discarding the tough ends. Cook all in boiling water until tender adding the heads after the first ten minutes of cooking. Salt slightly when heads are added. Drain and reserve water. Melt 2 tablespoons butter in a smooth sauce pan. Stir in flour and when perfectly blended lowly add asparagus water, stirring constantly. Add cream or milk and 1 more tablespoon butter. Cook and stir until thick and smooth and add the asparagus cut in pieces. Keep hot over boiling water. Separate yolks from whites of eggs and beat yolks with 4 tablespoons water in which asparagus was cooked until thick and lemon colored. Season with salt and pepper and fold in whites of eggs beaten until stiff and dry. Melt remaining tablespoons of butter in hot spider or omelet pan. Turn in egg mixture and cook over a low fire until omelet is well puffed and "set" on the bottom. Finish cooking in the oven. Cover half the omelet with half of the asparagus mixture. Fold and turn whole stalks of asparagus on the top of the omelet and pour remaining asparagus and sauce around it. Serve at once.

Heart To Heart Talks With Cynthia Grey

CAREFUL MOTHERS ARE RARE, APPRECIATE THEE—CYNTHIA

By CYNTHIA GREY

In these days of emancipated youth, it is a rare thing to se a mother questioning the amusements of her daughter to such an extent as to confer with the chaperon of school parties.

But if we saw more of this kind of thing, there would be fewer sad little girls repenting at leisure the mistakes made in haste.

Anna Mary, writing me of her mother's strictnses, has the usual attitude of youth toward its elders—that of bitter rebellion mixed with scorn.

"Why, Miss Grey," she writes, "I'm seventeen, and all the girls I go with are allowed to take care of themselves. My mother is so strict that the boys are almost afraid to ask me to go anywhere.

'I don't think it's fair for her to spoil my fun like that, do you? My senior hay ride will take place next week and mother even insists on knowing who the chaperons are, and in talking to them herself.

"Its making me look silly to my friends and I wont stand it much longer.

After all, looking silly to ones friends isnt the worst thing in the world. If your mother can protect you from unpleasant experiences or from real danger, at the cost of some slight embarrassment to you, I should say "well done."

However, I cannot see why your mother's solicitude should make you "look silly." There is no reason why your friends should know about it at all, if you do not choose to tell them. There are always other reasons to give for refusing invitations.

If you have nothing to conceal, it cannot hurt you for your mother to talk with the woman who is to chaperon the hay ride. You may be sure that the chaperon will only have a higher regard for you and your family if your mother does do this.

I'm sorry to seem unsympathetic, Anna Mary, but I think you should be a very grateful little girl, instead of a rebellious one.

The kind of mother you have is the best safety insurance I know of.

British Government Sends Note To Russian Soviet Rapping Its Stand During Strike; Tampering Charged

(By Associated Press.)

LONDON, June 12. — The British government has sent a sharp note to Moscow protesting against the endeavors of the Soviet to send money to Great Britain during the recent general strike.

The note set forth the belief that this money was intended to foster a movement to bring about a change of government in Great Britain.

Britain Has Proof.

The note declares that definite proof now is in the hands of the British government that a share of the money offered the trades union congress from Moscow during the general strike came from the Soviet government itself. This action, the note states, is regarded as unjustifiable interference in the internal affairs of the country and a violation of the Anglo-Russian trade agreement.

A second note, dealing with money the soviet is sending to the British Miners Federation, is being considered by the cabinet and will probably be forwarded to Moscow soon. The British government in this case also contends that part of the money is contributed by the Soviet government and not, as claimed, by Russian miners.

$2,000,000 Is Sent.

At the height of Great Britain's 9-day general strike, called in support of the miners, a check for 4,000,000 rubles, or about $2,000,000, was reported to have been received from Moscow by the British Trades Union Congress. The money purpotly had been raised by Russian laborers as a mark of their solidity with the British workers. The Trades Union Congress declined to accept the money, and returned it to the All-Russian Central Council of Trades Unions in Moscow.

The money was then offered by the Russians to the British miners, who continued out after the general strike was called off, and it was accepted. A. J. Cook, the miners secretary, in referring to the contribution was quoted as exclaiming: "Thank God for Russia!"

Accuses Soviet Government.

Lord Birkenhead, speaking in London on Wednesday of this week, declared that the money was not contributed by the Russian workers but by the Moscow government which, he charged, sought to foment revolution in Great Britain and "filch as much as possible of the British coal trade in the interest of the Russian coal trade."

The Soviet embassy, through the charge ad interim, issued a statement this afternoon reiterating its former denials that the Soviet government had sent money to Great Britain to support the general strike. The charge added:

"I categorically declare that no money whatever has been contributed to any British strike fund at any time by the Soviet Government.

Tragedy Steps In To Halt Activity Of Insurance Men

GALVESTON, Texas, June 12. (AP)—Tragedy stopped the activities of the 29th annual convention of the Texas Association of Insurance Agents here Friday when Fred W. All social activities of the association were called off. A short business session will be held this afternoon. Mr. Offenhauser made the opening address in splendid form at the opening session of the convention Thursday. He was a former president of the National Association of Insurance Agents and of the Texas Association.

Mrs. Offenhauser, his wife, left for Texarkana this morning. The body will be shipped to Texarkana this evening accompanied by a committee from the association.

Heard On Prohibition

(By the Associated Press)

HAVRE, France, June 11.—Champagne can be obtained anywhere in the United States if enough money is planked down, said Count Chandon Moet, and M. Henri Moet, representatives of the famous champagne family, on their return from a trip to America.

"Of course not so much champagne is being exported to America as formerly," they said, "but a large quantity gets there just the same and we neither know nor care how."

"We get orders to ship so many cases from Havre and some one else does the rest. Our brand is supposed to be sold in the United States only by druggists for medicinal purposes and it is immaterial to use whether or not it is used for bathing."

Henri Moet expressed the conviction that prohibition will not be a permanent institution in the United States.

QUEER QUIRKS of NATURE

EMPEROR PENGUIN RAISES ITS YOUNG AT SOUTH POLE

By ARTHUR N. PACK

President, The American Nature Association.

Most birds, even the hardiest, nest in the warmer months, for then only can they bring up their penguin chooses midwinter as its nesting time. Its chosen home is an ice field near the south pole.

The Emperor is the largest and handsomest of its group, and in many ways the most remarkable. It weighs as much as 90 pounds, it never visits land, and it nests in the bitter cold of the Antarctic.

Such a bird may well challenge admiration. We may wonder why the great bird abhors the land, but since it has chosen to nest on the ice, surely it does well to choose the time when the floe is not likely to break up beneath it.

So in the cold and darkness of the winter, the female lays her single egg. There being no material with which to build a nest, she places the egg on the small platform formed by her legs as she stands on the ice.

A fold of thick, warm feathers covers it, and the two-month incubation period begins. But the mother must seek the open water for her food, fishes and crustaceans. Now, it is so ordered in penguin economy that every member of the colony has the mother instinct highly developed, though only a small portion have eggs.

So when she is hungry, the brooding bird hag merely to hand the egg over to someone in the waiting line, sure that it will be taken care of.

When the chick finally hatches, it is treated for several months much as the egg has been. Unfortunately for some of the youngsters, they are in such demand b ytheir foster parents that they are roughly handled in the frequent exchanges, and sometimes one dies neglected in an ice crack, while two old birds quarrel over its possession.

After such an infancy the bird surely deserves the long life which is the lot of the Emperor penguin.

Army Trucks And Motorcycles Easy Says Fireman Who Sues Texas Rail Line For Injuries In Line Of Duty

(By The Associated Press)

SAN ANGELO, June 12.—After riding army trucks and motorcycles over shell torn France for a year, R. B. Ford came back intact physically, only to be permanently disabled by the jolting and jarring received while riding Southern Pacific engine number 822 between San Antonio and Del Rio, October 21, 1922, he told a jury in Federal District Court.

Ford, fireman on the locomotive which he says was totalled unfit for service, seeks to recover $100 a month from the National Life Insurance Company for a five-year period, claiming permanent disability from the wild rides of number 822. He is suing for a total of $5,598.54, plus six percent interest, and $3,000 attorneys' fees.

Talk About Casey Jones

Casey Jones' wild ride West with the overdue mail was mild to the ride described by Ford.

"Some times the tool box, weighing more than 100 pounds would jump a foot from the floor and dance all over the cabin," Ford said. "The engineer stayed in his seat until we reached a speed of 14 miles an hour just outside San Antonio, then he would set his throttle and crawl back on the tank for a little period of relief.

"I couldn't leave my post because I had to hold the oil control lever. Ordinarily this lever can be set in its rachet and then left, but the minute I would take my hand off it would jump from its moorings and either cut off the oil or else flood the fire box.

Engine In Bad Shape

"What was the matter with the engine? Everything. When we stopped to examine it we found that we could plunge our hand between the end of the driving axles and the boxings—this play gave it the jazzy side motion. The springs were completely relaxed and the boiler rested squarely on the axles."

He sustained "sever and permanent injuries to his head, back, spinal column, spinal cord and limbs; entire nervous system shocked, sustaining injury and impairment to plaintiff's eyes, ears, kidneys, bladder and heart, and the use of both arms and legs," the petition alleges.

FARM RELIEF IS GIVEN BOOST BY BROOKHART WIN

EQUALIZATION FEE PLAN GAINS, LEADERS IN CONGRESS SAY

(By the Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, June 12.—The equalization fee plan of farm relief has been given a big boost, in the opinion of insurgent Republicans and some Democratic members of Congress, by the victory of former Senator Brookhart in the Republican Senatorial primary in Iowa.

Western Senators have been working for some time trying to round up votes for the principle, as incorporated in an amendment to the administration cooperative marketing bill now before the Senate and Brookhart himself plans to come to Washington to join forces with the corn belt committee, which advocated it before House members prior to its defeat in that chamber, when the Haugen bill was voted down.

Brookhart's pluality over Senator Cummins, administration supporter, in the Iwoa primary placed close to 70,000 provided ample opportunity for Senators opposed to administration policies to air their views, not only on farm relief, but on the tariff, the chances of Republicans who voted to seat Truman H. Newberry to retain their own seats and what some regarded as evidence that President Coolidge's popularity was waning.

Disagreement Talked

Talk of a disagreement between President Coolidge and Vice President Dawes over farm relief also got into discussion, and some Insurgents looked upon the result as an expression of resentment at the unseating of Brookhart two months ago in favor of Daniel F. Steck, his Democratic opponent in the 1924 election.

Most of the discussion was confined to administration opponents, titular leaders of the Republicans refraining from comment. A number of the rank and file, however, expressed regret over the defeat of the veteran, Senator Cummins, and Senator Fess, Republican, of Ohio, told the Senate he could not speak of the outcome of the primary "without a tang."

Senator Fess was one of those who brought into the open the whisperings of disagreement between the President and the Vice President, which have engaged the attention of little groups about the Capitol ever since Senator Watson, Republican of Indiana, read an outline of General Dawes' views in favor of equalization fee principle. Senator Fess, who represents the Vice President's native state in the Senate, dubbed the equalization fee proposal before the Senate the "Dawes-McNary-Haugen plan" and asserted that its enactment would "ruin the country." Senator Harrison, Democrat of Mississippi, also took a shot at the Coolidge-Dawes talk in a characteristic fling at Republican candidates for re-election and the administration generally with the Iowa primary as his text.

Watson Assailed

Turning on Senator Watson, who was interrupting his analysis of the recent defeats suffered by administration supporters in Iowa, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Oregon, he said the Indiana Senator had "been able to squeeze through" the recent Republican primary in that state, but not "by clinging to Cal and standing by Andy."

"The only reason" the others—Cummins, McKinley, Pepper and Stanfield—were defeated, Senator Harrison held, "was that they clung to Cal and stood by Andy too long." He said he didn't know which one is to the other's candidate for the presidency," and "it may be that they will swap around, and the one who can't be president will be Vice President."

Representative Olfield, Arkansas, chairman of the Democrat Senatorial and Congressional campaign committees, also took occassion to comment on the primary, saying "this administration has not and will not enact real farm relief legislation" and suggesting that "Western farmers and their representatives in Congress join with the Democrats in bringing about a downward revision of the tariff on the things the farmer has to buy."

NEW G. O. P. BODY IS CRITICIZED BY DEMOCRATS

JOHN ERICSSON LEAGUE IS MADE CENTER OF NEW OUTBREAK

WASHINGTON, June 12. (AP)—Organization of the John Ericsson Republican League of America was criticized by the Democratic national committee in a statement yesterday as an effort to make political capital of the Crown Prince and Princess of Sweden.

The league was formed here shortly after the dedication of the memorial to the creator of the iron-clad Monitor of Civil War fame, with President Coolidge and Crown Prince taking part in the ceremonies.

"Administration forces must have been still upset by recent primary results when the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Sweden came to take part in the unveiling of a memorial to John Ericsson," said the statement from the Democratic committee. "Otherwise, surely, good taste would have vetoed the effort to capitalize their presence by organizing, on partisan lines, voters of Swedish descent. It is a great pity that the distinguished visitors to whom the nation is host were so embarrassed that it became advisable to publish the following in the Washington Star:

"'Members of the Crown Prince's official entourage disclaimed knowledge of the league's creation or motives and declared that it was the firm intention of the Prince to evade everything of political nature throughout his stay in this country.'

"The job appears to have been set up as deliberately as disturbance over primary elections would permit. Colonel Oscar N. Solbert, who had been aid to President Coolidge, was chosen to manage the tour of the royal couple in this country, and was then 'unanimously' chosen head of the 'John Ericsson Republican League of America.'

Representative Carl R. Chindblom, of Illinois, amiable administration, attended the meeting at which the organization was effected, christened with a speech, and presumably conveyed a blessing.

"At the unveiling of the Ericsson memorial, the President found the number of American citizens of Swedish descent to be about 2,000,000, and next day the organizers gathered to form a Republican League.

"In view of the President's particular indorsement in his Ericsson memorial address of Senator Irvine L. Lenroot as a candidate 'endowed with the old Norse spirit' it is evidently expected of Col. Solbert, the aid-de-camp to the Prince and the G. O. P. that he will do all in his broad powers to save the Wisconsin Senator from the fate that has been visited upon other administration men this year."

BEGIN HERE TODAY

JOHN and FAY MILBURN buy a home of their own shortly after their baby girl is born and the advertising agency in which John is a partner and copy writer lands a new contract.

Previous chapters told how John, a romantic individual, was fascinated on meeting NELL ORME, of whom PAT FORBES, one of John's best friends, hints that she is having trouble with her husband.

DR. DICK MENEFEE marries MARGARET WAYNE and John is best man. Margaret's younger sister, CLARA, runs away and marries CLIFTON LANE, whom John cordially dislikes.

A party is given by NOEL and VERA BOYD, and Vera shows an interest in John which he does not return. Nevertheless, Fay Milburn notices it and there is a quarrel between her and John.

During a poker game in a hotel, Noel Boyd, who is playing with PAUL DAVIDSON, Menefee, John and Pat Forbes, gets drunk and makes the statement that most married men are liars and inclined to be untrue to their wives, and brags of an arrangement between him and his wife, Vera, whereby each has the other's permission to do as he chooses. The others, excepting Davidson, who is a bachelor and something of a roue are a little shocked and Noel calls them hypocrites.

John and Fay and their baby, JUDITH, go to Houton, their old home, for a visit, and John leaves after a week and returns to Dallas.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

(The names and situations in this story are fictitious.)

CHAPTER XXIV

It was a new John Milburn that returned to Dallas and threw himself into his work. A little rest, a little change, had done wonders for him, and even Nat Graham, his uncommunicative partner, noticed his enthusiasm and made some terse comment on it.

There were a couple of new accounts—small ones, it is true, but good business, nevertheless. John found himself swamped with work, but feeling as he was, he rather enjoyed it.

He remarked one afternoon to Nat Graham, "Well, things seem to be coming our way pretty nicely."

Graham grunted. "Uh-huh."

John, pulling his battered pipe out of its place in his desk drawer, busied himself for a minute with a can of tobacco and a match.

"Nat," he said, leaning back in his chair and expelling a huge cloud of smoke, "don't you think its time we began expanding a little?"

Graham looked up with an expression of annoyance. "What do you mean?"

"You know—here we are growing right along now. We really ought to have another artist. Briggs is full up now, and some of our art work has to be done on the outside as it is. Why not take on someone else—someone for a small salary? We could keep him busy, between our work and the stuff we could throw his way."

Graham considered this. "Well," and he pursed his lips and gazed with his hooded eyes at the pencil he was fondling, "we might consider it. But not just yet. Wait a little while."

"I don't see whats to prevent us from doing it right away," said John, a little nettled. "We've got a lot more business than we had when we took on Briggs—and we're making that much more money. We're growing, Nat, cant you see it? Why be pikers all our lives? Why not show the world that we're getting along?"

"Well, I'll tell you," Nat answered. "Of course, we've been getting new business, but how do we know some of that business isn't going to slip away from us? We want to consolidate our position first. See what I mean?"

"Yes, I see what you mean," retorted John, "and I think you're arguing like an old woman."

"Of course," Graham said coldly, "if you're going to get nasty about it—"

"Oh, hang it, Nat,' John burst forth, "I dont mean to be nasty. It just seems to me, though, that every suggestion I make you disapprove. We need a new artist and we ought to have one. If you think we ought to wait—all right. If Briggs can stand it we can. But we need somebody to give me a lift with copy, too. I've got more on my hands now than I want to carry after Fay gets back. While she's away I don't mind working nights, but it's not fair to her to keep it up."

Graham seemed concerned. He looked at John with a positively pained expression, and his heavy eyelids fluttered as he said, "I'm sorry, John, I really didn't realize you were working so hard."

"Well," and John was a little mollified by the others conciliatory tone, "I don't mean to say that I'm breaking my back." He was a little annoyed at this partner of his, who refused to fight back when the challenge was thrown at him.

"I can stand it for a while, I guess," he went on, "but it's just in line with my general contention that the business should expand. Why, we're not in a position to go after more business. With our present set-up, we have about all we can handle."

"Never fear," put in Graham, "we're not apt to be bothered by too much business." He said nothing further to John's suggestion for another copy writer, and John brought forth the idea in his mind.

"This Eleanor Mason," he said—a little hesitantly, for he knew of the other's prejudice against her—"is a pretty clever woman. She writes well and she's indicated to me that she wouldn't object to doing a little ad writing on the side." He waited, to observe the effect on Nat.

Graham pursed his lips again. "Nothing doing." And for once he seemed absolutely determined.

"Why not?" John questioned.

"In the first place, it's not a woman's job. In the second place, I don't like her."

"Just because she drinks?" John got to his feet. "I don't know of any other reason why you should dislike her."

Graham shrugged and said nothing more, and John walked away, raising his arms and letting them drop, to indicate his disgust. . . . He would let the topic go for the present, he thought, and bring it up later.

Several mornings later John as he was leaving his house, encountered Henry Blodgett, the funeral looking mate of the woman whom Fay termed the guardian of the neighborhood's morals.

"Good morning," he called to John—pleasantly enough, the other thought. I understand Mrs. Milburn and the baby are away."

"Yep," John smiled, "enjoying a much needed vacation. Hop in the bus and I'll take you downtown."

"And you're keeping bachelor's hall?"

"Call it that if you want to," said John.

"I've often had to do it myself," Blodgett stated pompously. "Frankly, Mr. Milburn, I don't fancy it very much."

"Oh, I don't mind it, Mr. Blodgett. That is, if the wife doesn't stay away too long. This bachelor business is all right for a while but after a while it begins to get monotonous."

"Do you cook your own meals?" Blodgett asked, and John thought, "Well, you're curious aren't you?" But he answered, laughing, "Not on your life. I take all my meals out."

Blodgett frowned. "Well," he said, "I certainly couldn't do that."

John, a little uncomfortable, said, "Oh, I can cook an egg and get some bacon in shape and brew a pot of coffee, but frankly I don't like the idea of a lot of dirty dishes piled up in the sink. I can't bear the sight of them."

"They don't bother me," Blodgett declared. "I wash them."

John felt there was nothing more to be said, and a little later he was glad to drop Blodgett off at his destination.

"What a killjoy you are," he grumbled to himself as he watched the other turn in at the door of the bank where he worked.

Pat Forbes called him up at noon. "Hear you're baching it," he laughed. "I'm in the same fix. Marian and the kids are away on a visit. What do you say we get together and share our sorrows—or drown 'em?"

"Fine, Pat," John felt heartened at the prospect of company—nights were getting lonely for him.

"Well, I'll see you after work and we'll have dinner together and maybe take in a show."

"I'm on." John hung up and turned back to his work. And that evening he and Forbes went to a burlesque show—the first time either had been to one in years—and wound up, drinking, at a roadhouse, where both of them felt that their evening was incomplete, for nearly everyone was dancing and none of the girls they fancied responded to their silent invitations.

Once Pat got to his feet, a little unsteadily, and was for going over to a table where several women and men sat, and asking for a dance. John had considerable difficulty persuading him to stay where he was.

"Looking for trouble?" he asked Forbes. "Well, you'll get it if you don't mind your own business."

"I want to dance, darn it," Pat grubled. "What's the good of listening to this music if we have to sit at this table and do nothing but drink ginger ale highballs?"

"You ought to be thankful its not plain ginger ale," John told him. "Sit down, I tell you. Those guys over there are beginning to look you over. First thing you know you'll be nursing a bump."

"I don't care—bring 'em on," Pat mumbled, but when John pushed him back in his seat he remained there and was quiet thereafter.

They stayed until the place was nearly ready to close, and when they left Pat was so unsteady that John decided not to let him go home alone.

"Better come home with me," he urged, and Pat was so argumentative about it, insisting that the other come over to his house, that John finally took him by the arm and dragged him.

"Don't wanna go over to your house," Forbes kept repeating all the way home. "I've got engagement tomorrow for dinner."

"You can keep it, Pat. I can give you a clean shirt and collar."

"Don't want your shirt."

"All right, I'll take you home tomorrow and let you wear your own. Tomorrow's Sunday, ain't it?"

They climbed out of bed very late Sunday morning, both of them with headaches that caused them to complain to each other very loudly.

They went downtown for breakfast, the main course of which consisted of several cups of black coffee, and then to the Forbes home where Pat changed his linen.

The telephone rang while Pat was dressing and John answered it. It was Howard Orme, wanting to speak to Pat.

John summoned him, and when Forbes was through talking he turned to John and said, "That was Howard calling to remind me of my dinner engagement at his house. They've taken pity on the poor bachelor—and you're invited along, John. What say?"

John started to protest, but Pat silenced him. "No, Nell was very insistent, and so was Howard. They're expecting you."

John was vedy glad, somehow, to say yes. Two hours later they were being admitted to the Ormes' home, and he was being greeted by Nell Orme, and thrilling to the sound of her voice and the touch of her hand.

AMERICAN LEGION TO ENTERTAIN AUXILIARY

Allen Bros. Post of the American Legion will be host to the Legion Auxiliary at the regular bi-monthly meeting of the Post Monday night in the basement of the Leader building in the first joint social session that has been held since organization of the Auxiliary several months ago.

A good program has been arranged for the occasion, and every ex-service man of the city is urged to bring his wife, mother, sister, or other member of the family eligible to membership in the Auxiliary, regardless of whether or not they are at the present affiliated with the organization.

A special fed is being prepared, and the usual Legion custom of offering this fee free will be discarded for this occasion, and a nominal fee of 25 cents per plate will be charged to partially defray expenses.

The meeting will begin about 8 o'clock, and a good representation, both from the Legion and the Auxiliary is expected to attend.

The program will include an oratorical outburst from W. T. (Tanlac) Strange, one of the very valued members of the Post, on a subject to be selected by the speaker, and the mention of the name is considered sufficient to assure attendance that something good is in store. Other members include selections by the Brooks quartet and the Pepehouse stringed orchestra.

WOODMEN BAND TO RENDER CONCERT THIS AFTERNOON

The Concert band of the Modern Woodmen of America will render a public concert at the bandstand in the county park east of the city Sunday afternoon between 6 and 7 o'clock, it was said here Saturday.

Traffic Commissioners Favor Light Car Built Along European Lines As Agitation For New Lines Continues

A questionnaire investigation just completed among the traffic commissioners in the fifty leading cities in the United States to determine the attitude of these men toward the European type of light car as possible solution of traffic hazards shows a 70 per cent attitude in favor of such a car.

These questionnaires coveerd all parts of the United States and seven questions were asked, all shaped to get opinions regarding the service features of the light, low car of European trend and with the acceleration, efficient braking and short parking length of these cars, as they relate to the adily problem of city driving.

Eighty per cent of the replies favored the quick acceleration of the European light car as being of distinct benefit to the rapid handling of traffic. It is a well known fact that one of the problems of the traffic forces on our busiest streets is to keep the cars in line from getting into jams through the inability of some automobile in the lead to get away quickly at the signal to go.

Opinions as to the value of the lower type of body used on European cars were about divided, the majority of the traffic commissioners not being familiar with this type of body construcion. The favorable answers cited the advantages to the traffic control officer of being able to see over the tops of the cars from a slightly elevated platform such as is commonly used today.

Eighty-five per cent of the replies attributed more accidents to the users of the present type of light car than to the larger cars and gave as their reason the lack of proper control facilities or the use of controls which could not always be depended upon to function in cases of emergency.

Seventy-five per cent felt that four wheel brakes of approved design would aid materially in reducing the accidents caused by the lighter cars and the only ones to question the advantages of four wheel brakes as a safety factor in traffic based their question on the personal element of the driver himself. It was agreed almost unanimously that four wheel brakes in the hands of drivers who did not use them for stunt stopping would be advisable especially since practically all of the larger cars are now equipped with such brakes and the lighter cars must be equipped to keep in step with the short stopping of the larger cars ahead in the traffic line.

Ninety-five per cent stated that the use of a lighter car would materially lessen the wear on streets and high ways and result in better driving conditions with less expense to the road maintenance departments of the country.

Ninety per cent considered that the shorter overall length of the European type light car would result in a decided improvement in parking conditions since these cars would require far less room at the curb, could be handled easier and with less jockeying when backing into a parking space and more cars could be accommodated in the same parking length. The only replies which showed a disinclination to feel that shorter length would help the parking problem were based on the statement that it was in he long run, largely a matter of the temper of the driver in the matter of taking as little room as possible for his car.

Included in the replies were letters from Traffic commissioners or from the Chief of Police in San Francisco, Oakland, Memphis, Buffalo, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Salt Lake City, Detroit, Minneapolis, Louisville and many other representative cities all facing different and intricate traffic problems.

The advantages of the European type of light car in acceleration would probably come from an acceleration ability of from 5 to 25 miles an hour in 10 seconds. This would be considerably faster than the acceleration in our average light car of the present day and would be in line with the acceleration capacity of the majority of our six-cylinder cars.

The low body construction would permit traffic officers to see farther down the traffic line. Four-wheel brakes of the European type would enable the driver of the light car to stop in safety back of the quicker stopping cars ahead and would serve to eliminate much of the trouble from rear-end collisions.

The shorter overall length would easily permit from 25 per cent to 30 per cent more cars to be praked in a given street length, would eliminate much of the delay, accidents and congestion due to drivers jockeying in and out against fast moving traffic in an attempt to pull in to the curb.

An item not covered in the questionnaire, but one of supreme importance to the car driver, is the ability of the European light car to maintain a good average road speed. It would be a relatively easy matter for an American built light car following European principles of construction, to maintain averages of 35 miles an hour over the usual highway even in traffic lines.

IRISH PRELATE GREETED

NEW YORK, June 12. (AP)—Thousands of spectators lined Broadway and other streets from the Batery to the Hotel Vanderbilt today to welcome Cardinal Patrick O'Donnell, primate of Ireland, who arrived on the President Roosevelt on his way to the eucharistic congress at Chicago. The Cardinal was met by city officials and delegates of numerous Catholic Irish organizations.

Prince Praises West Point Cadets

"They're the finest marchers I ever saw," Crown Prince Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden commented after viewing the formal parade of the cadet corps at the U. S. Military Academy, West Point. Photo shows him, center of the walking group, in the uniform of a Swedish major genera, inspecting the corps.

CHEVROLET MAKES IDEAL CAR FOR SHOW MEN

Described by veteran circus men as "the most novel advance car ever sent out by a traveling show," a replica of a railroad locomotive on a one-tone Chevrolet truck chassis, hauling a miniature railroad coach is on a tour of 12 states with the Morris and Castle circus.

The passenger coach also serves as a ticket and band wagon and is a feature of the parades in every town where the circus exhibits

Traversing country roads and city streets, the strange looking 'trackless train' has been the center of curious crowds of spectators wherevre it has appeared.

Plans supplied by the Kansas City Southern railroad enabled Brownlee Wells Motors, Inc., Chevrolet dealers in Shreveport, La., headquarters of the circus, to build the locomotive over the Chevrolet truck chassis. It is an exact duplicate of one of the big road's 'Moguls' and is strikingly realistic. The locomotive was christened "Shreveport" by the request of the Shreveport Chamber of Commerce.

The advance man of the show, press representative, contract man and a band of sixteen men find accommodations in the passenger cocah during their travels. Ample room, assuring riding comfort on the long tour, has been provided. After leading the parade preceding exhibitions, the train is set up as the official ticket office at the circus grounds.

Members of the party assert no circus ever sent out a more economical 'railroad' car. They have found their tour can be arranged with more convenience, as their schedules can be altered to suit varying conditions, and no delays result from awaiting train orders.

Due to the weight of 12 tons carried and drawn by the one-ton truck, careful tests were made previous to the start of the trip. It was found the truck had ample power to handle the load efficiently Economy of operation was the determining fatcor in selecting the Chevrolet as the power unit. Chevrolet service stations cat as 'round houses' for the locomotive in each city vdeisit.

"Ma" and "Zim" Say They Have Managers

AUSTIN, June 12. (AP)—Two democratic gubernatorial candidates, Governor Miriam A. Ferguson, and the Rev. O. F. Zimmerman, have certified to the Secretary of State the name of their campaign manager, as required by law.

Guy Holcomb of Wichita Falls is the Ferguson manager, and J. C. Martin of Naples, Zimmerman's manager.

"Said Martin is to be in active control of the headquarters at Naples, and is supposed to use his head, hands, feet, heart and other faculties to put me into Austin, Texas, as governor of said state, without fail, so may be it, amen," Zimmerman wrote in his letter of certification.

American Light Car Is Impending, Noted Writer On Automotive Subjects Says After Survey Of Present Day Trend

By GEORGE W. SUTTON, JR.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: George W. Sutton, Jr., is one of the best known writers on automotive subjects in the country. His articles appear in the leading automobile and technical papers and in many magazines. The following article is submitted by him after a recent and exhaustive study of general automotive conditions.)

Something new and radically different is impending in the automotive field and the general opinion of those who are closest to the situation is that we shall soon see an entirely new type of light motor car, built in quantity production, which will incorporate many of the features of the European built light cars with radical American adaptations and changes to suit them for our requirements.

It is known that certain tire manufacturers are equipped to turn out balloon tires of a smaller diameter than any which are at present in use in this country. These tire builders do not go to the expense of developing new tire sizes unless they see a demand for them looming up in the near future.

There is a distinct impression that the Peugeot Brothers left something more than casual interest back of them in their recent invasion of our shores with a diminutive open car. Flat is reputed to have been negotiating with manufacturers in this country for the building of the small 5 h. p. Italian car.

Several American manufacturers are accredited with having light cars already on the road for testing and experimental laboratories are reputed to be working feverishly on a type of car which will bring us an entirely new range of performance in automobiles of somewhat the dimensions of our present light cars but with far greater speed, greater climbing ability, vastly increased fuel economy, and materially improved body lines.

The market for light cars is shifting. General Motors with the Chevrolet, and Willys-Overland with the Overland, have made substantial production gains in the past two years in the low low priced car field.

Today these cars occupy a high percentage in the fifty per cent of our total motor car output which is held by the light automobile. They have offered material and fundamental improvements in the light car field but so far they have not gone very deep into the new type of light car which the American car buying public is expecting.

From Europe we are getting definite daily proof that the light car can be made to give thirty miles to the gallon of gasoline. We have no light cars in this country which can be depended upon for this mileage at the present time. But our engineers can utilize those principles of design which have made this mileage possible and still retain the performance possibilities which we demand. European light cars can travel up to sixty miles an hour. It is unusual for any of our light cars to attain any such speed with standard equipment.

They have only to utilize the European principles of small bore and long stroke, to get a far greater power development than we are getting at present with our typically square, light-car power plants. Such motors will give greatly increased fuel mileage. But with the use of such motors will come necessity for more advanced construction than is being used at present. The motor in our present day small car, taken as an average, has seen very little real improvement in the past several years. We shall ex-

OLDS STOCK MODEL SMASHES NEW ROAD RECORD

Another road record has ben smashed by a stock Oldsmobile. Floyd Clymer drove his Oldsmobile touring car from St. Louis, Mo., to Denver, Colorado in 25 hours and 51 minutes. The total distance, with detours was 1,024 miles and the time includes stopping for gasoline, oil, food and to change a tire.

This is the fastest time ever made and is one hour faster than the best between the two cities bu automobile passenger train service. It also is the made in the United States between two second longest automobile road record cities.

With this exceptional run, Clymer and his Oldsmobile have broken four important road records for stock cars within the past ten months.

The fact that this race against time was announced in newspaper advertisements before the start is a tribute to the confidence Clymer has in the ability of his Oldsmobile tq accomplish the feat. The car used by Clymer is a stock Oldsmobile five passenger touring car. It is the same car Clymer has driven for months.

Accompanied by his wife, Clymer registered at the Western Union office in St. Louis at 5 o'clock on the afternoon of May fourth and started his 1,024 mile run. He was heralded by crowds at various places along the route where he stopped to have his by a parade of automobiles when he arrival officially checked. He was met checked into the Western Union office in Denver at 5:51 o'clock on the afternoon of May fifth.

Running conditions were favorable the better part of the distance, but twice, for distances of several hundred miles, the Clymers and their Oldsmobile ran into a strong head wind which, with the dust cloud it raised, retarded their speed considerably. A puncture also delayed them. The Oldsmobile's performance was faultless throughout the trip, Clymer reported.

The first record made by the Oldsmobile with Clymer driving in recent months was the circle trip from Denver, up Lookout mountain, through the mountains and down Bear Creek canyon. This spectacular trip contains 417 sharp turns, some of them hairpins and switchbacks, steep grades and winding descents. The course of 57 miles was made in one hour, 15 minutes and 9 seconds.

The second record was for stock cars up Pike's Peak. This 12½ mile trip was made in 28 minutes and 49 seconds. The third record was between Detroit and Chicago where all previous automobile or fast express train times were beaten. The 301 miles was made in 5 hours and 58 minutes.

623 Carloads Of Frigidaires Sent Out During May

All records in the electric refrigeration industry were broken in May by the Delco-Light company, maker of Frigidaires, when it shipped 623 carloads of its products with a retail value of $11,250,000. Seven thousand men, working double shifts, with overtime equivalent to the labor of 900 men for one month were required to turn out this tremendous amount of refrigerating equipment.

The two Frigidaire plants will be operated on this new production basis for an extended period, according to E. G. Biechler, president and general manager of the company. "We have a supply of orders on hand and others in the making which will be sufficient to keep both plants operating at their maximum capacity," he said. "Shipments to date indicate that we will far exceed the $80,000,000 retail mark set as our goal for 1926."

The company has noted a great increase in its sales on the deferred payment basis, which is taken to indicate that the average householder prefers to buy in this way. Two years ago less than ten per cent of Delco-Light sales were made on this basis. Last year deferred payment sales comprised forty per cent of the total. The percentage for 1926 is expected to be even larger

Slaton Boy Is Near Death In Sanitarium

Edmund Sone, 15-year-old son of C. L. Sone, superintendent of the public schools at Slaton, who has been critically ill in the Lubbock sanitarium for several days, showed no improvement Friday, Dr. M. C. Overton, of the Sanitarium told the Daily Journal.

The illness of the young man grew out of an infection from a bruise on his hip that was sustained when he accidentally fell and presumably struck a rock. Infection set in, and Edmund was brought here for treatment, but is growing constantly weaker. Very slight hopes are held for his recovery.

DISTRIBUTION OF WEIGHT KEY TO OVERLAND "6"

The unusual balanced units of the Overland Six Standard sedan are responsible for its roadability while traveling at high rates of speed according to announcements recently made by engineers of the Willys-Overland company at Toledo.

Designers of this car have so evenly balanced every important unit and the car itself is so low hung that there is very little "top motion" and "side sway" when the sedan is being driven at speeds which usually hamper cars of other design in rough driving.

The low center of gravity and the direct drive from the motor to the rear axle are important factors in attaining the maximum speed with great handling ease.

In a recent test the Overland Six Standard was operated around a hair pin turn at 55 miles per hour with a side sway on only two inches as indicatted by the tracks in loose sand especially scattered over the pavement to make the test. Another car with body of higher clearance was then driven at 45 miles per hour around the same turn with wheel displacement of more than 13 inches proving the tendency to "top motion."

The lining up of the Overland motor with the rear axle also affords quicker and more efficient response in acceleration.

OAKLAND TO BOOST PRODUCTION ON TWO LINES

The Oakland Motor Car Company will increase its production on both the Oakland Six and the Pontaic Six for the next thre months, it was announced at the meeting of District Managers held at the factory the last week in May.

This increase in production is planned to meet the increasing call from dealers for more cars to supply their orders on hand. At no time this year has Oakland ben able to supply dealers with sufficient cars to meet their requirements.

Pontiac Six sales for the first five previous records for a new make of consecutive months have broken all car. The sale of more than 10,000 Pontiac Sixes, the first three months established a new record, which has been maintained by production and sales of more than 25,000 Pontiac Sixes during the first five months.

During the first month that the Pontiac Six was introduced, January of this year, the average daily pro- During February, 145 cars a day were duction was approximately 60 cars produced and this was increased to 230 a day during March. During April a daily schedule of more than 300 Pontiacs was maintained, and throughout May, 340 of these cars were produced daily.

The sweeping increase of Oakland Six sales for the same period over the year 1925 is equally as spectacular. The combined production of Oakland and Pontiac Sixes has placed the Oakland Motor Car Company in volume as one of the ten leading automobile manufacturers."

Man Who Refused To Get Doctor For His Wife To Go To Jail

HAMMOND, La., June 12. (AP)—Dave White, convicted of manslaughter in connection with a charge that he did not provide medical attention for his dying wife, will be sentenced by Judge Columbus Reid June 19. The jury, in convicting White yesterday, qualified its findings by passing to the presiding judge the responsibility of imposing sentence.

The defendant testified that he would have been willing to provide "a dozen doctors" but the religious belief of his wife prevented. Preachers of the religious belief to which Mrs. White subscribed were placed on the witness stand to testify that their cult does not believe in medicine. Mrs. White died last December, following the birth of a child, without medical assistance, it was testified. White was indicted on a charge of manslaughter by a Livingston Parish grand jury.

Good character, good habits, honest principles and persistent industry seldom have to complain of bad luck.

The wisdom of humanity has hardly yet reached the stage when it fully realizes that education and the inculcation of good morals is a better preventative of crime than punishment.

Low gravity center
High torque motor and Unit-design

only these 3 combined can give such amazing performance

THE Overland Six is not just a modern body on a chassis that's 5 or 10 years old. But a new and revolutionary type of car, modernly engineered and designed as a unit to give a new kind of performance, comfort and driving ease.

The motor is a new-type "high-torque" power plant—hung low in the chassis to give a straight line drive—with more usable power delivered to the rear axle than you find in other sixes of its price or class.

The center of gravity is lower—keeping the weight of the car down close to the ground—you get an entirely new feeling of security when you drive this car.

Only these 3 factors combined can give you such amazing power, speed and pick-up. Won't you come in, and let us demonstrate the remarkable performance of this new-type Overland Six?

GLAD TIDINGS, GENTS!

Good news for husbands who strip gears with all the celerity of younger blades who Charleston!

"Back seat driving" on the part of a wife is true and just cause for divorce. Precedent is established by the Supreme Court of California in the case of Harman versus Harman.

Claud Harmon, doughty locomotive engineer of San Francisco, stated that his wife Jessie did constantly opine from her back seat roost just how and when and why he should negotiate curves, the pasing of other vehicles, and that she screamed when there was no due cause for said screaming.

The lower court laughed and disposed of irate husband Harman's ples but the state supreme court gave him his divorce with a judicial nerve and flair, to say nothing of flip, which seemed to commend Harman highly as a benefactor to the race with his precedent.

WHEREIN LIES THE PLAINS' APPEAL?

"Why will a fellow pine for a land of dry ditches and no hills or native trees," a Plainview cotton buyer writes a friend here, "when he is in the wonderful scenic Ozarks, with a fine swimming hole to dive into each morning and quicken his senses and make him fit for a day's work. In a land where the song birds twitter and where people come from hundreds of miles to enjoy the scenery why will a man long for the Plains?"

Just why?

What it is that makes the South Plains appeal so strongly to its residents? What is it that makes those who go away always want to come back? What is it that makes one once a Plainsman always a Plainsman?

Is it the vastness of the Plains? For years there was little but grass and space here.

Is it the people? Men loved the Plains before there was little but grass and space here.

Is it the people? Men loved the Plains before there were many people here. When neighbors lived fifty miles away there was the same appeal.

IN NEW YORK SEE-SAWING up and down BROADWAY

NEW YORK, June 12.—Soldiers of fortune who drift into New York seem almost invaribly, to become taxi-cab drivers.

There is something about the diversity of adventure, the variety of experiences, the hazards of zig-zagging through the traffic jams, the whirl of life in the Broadway belt that appeals to adventurous and jaded natures.

Perhaps no occupation in all Manhattan attracts such varied types.

Time was when taxi-cabbing offered a flat field for the ex-convict, stick up man and blackjacker. What could be more simply than driving a fare to a dark street, pulling a gun ahd staging a robbery?

Most metropolitan cities have now minimized the danger by causing the driver to be photographed by the police license bureau and displaying his picture and name in a prominent place within the cab.

It's pretty hard to tell just who is driving your taxi in Manhattan and this comes about largely because taxi driving is an easy line to drift into while "waiting for something better to turn up."

During vacation time college boys, many of whom have jazz cars of their own, prefer it to waiting tables at summer resorts.

The other day I learned that the sun-tanned man who was careening me about was the hero of a famous "desert island" shipwreck of some half dozen years back.

Since that time he has ben too restless to enter upon any sedentary occupation.

But the prize tale concerns a young lady lives in the exclusive Park Avenue belt.

Hailing a taxi the other day she was just getting settled in her seat when she noticed a snake coiled on the bottom of the car.

At her scream the driver stopped and hastily opened the door. The young lady leaped out, pointing to the snake.

"Must have crawled out of the box my last customer had," commented the driver, explaining that he had just come from moving a vaudeville entertainer, snakes and all, to a Broadway theatre.

After the explanation the young lady was horrified to see the driver reach in and pick up the reptile, petting the snake caressingly and talking to it softly.

"You see, ma'am," the driver ventured, "I was a keeper at the Bronx zoo snake house before I took this job."

Motoring

Says I to myself, well, today is the day to get a real rest in a sensible way. I'll tune up the car and I'll take all my gang, an' I'll let all the worry and such things so hang.

Course the kids and the wife in the bus in a hurry, an' gee, the are all glad to agree, so they pile thought of a trip in the out-of-doors bright is the sort of an outing that just hits me right.

We ramble along on a wonderful street and I'm dogin' the millions of autos we meet. The traffic is wild and it shortly appears that the buzzing and honking will deafen m years.

We seek for a roadway where traffic is tame, but, shucks, all the others are doin' the same. An untraveled highway? Fate laughs in my face, and I find, like all drivers, there is no such place.

We finally get home and I smile when I think how the plans for a rest-up have gone on the blink. My nerves are on edge and my eyesight is spent. I'm a blamed sight more tired than I was when I went.

The largest room in the world is the one for improvement.

Stewart's WASHINGTON LETTER

CROSSER WOULD SOOTHE FEVERED BROWS OF LANDLORD OR MORTGAGED FOLK

By CHARLES P. STEWART
NEA Service Writer

WASHINGTON, June 12. — Every family that ever wondered how it was going to pay the rent or shivered at the word mortgage will be interested in the proposal of Congressman Rebert Crosser of Cleveland, O.

He would have the government do for the struggling householder what it already has done successfully for the farmer. His national home loan bill would help people buy homes just as the farm loan act helps them buy farms. And he would put out of their jobs a lot of business boosters for whom he has no more respectful name than shylocks.

"I began thinking about this question as a result of some law cases I have handled," Crosser tells you. "People have come to me for help after having made several years' payments on their homes.

"For some reason they have to sell and they can't even get back their original payment. Well, they have been charged interest at the full legal rate, whatever that is. Sometimes it is 8 per cent, sometimes 11 per cent. Then they have been charged a bonus or commission, which goes up to 30 or 40 per cent additional. It is plain usury, but it is being done.

24 Million Families

"Now if the government helps the farmers as it should, why not the average family also? There are about six and a half million farms in the United States, but there are more than 24 million families that have to have homes."

The size of the group to whom appeal and promise is made by this bill is indicated by statistics of the census bureau. Of all the families in the United States, about 54 per cent live in rented houses, and of the others, 38 per cent have mortgages on their homes.

Those whose homes are mortgaged would be eager, Crosser figures, to exchange their present obligations for the more reasonable rates of loans by the proposed national home loan bank.

One effect would be to force down the mortgage rates of private financial institutions. And presumably a vast army of folk who are struggling under the yoke of the rent collector would jump at the chance to own their own homes under conditions that place dthem within reach.

The maximum interest charge from one of the proposed home loan banks would be 6 per cent. The total amount borrowed could be anywhere from $200 ernment does not set up this means of help, which is needed, the people will go without the relief.

"England has attempted to solve the problem by housing a law under which the government built homes and rented them to the people. That would not be acceptable here. This proposal is brand new. It has aroused such favorable attention that I think I am going to get a committee hearing on it, and you can be sure that some day it will go through."

To operate the project there would be a national home loan commision consisting of the secretary of the treasury and two other members. They would set up home loan banks in each state, with the government putting up what capital stock was not subscribed privately. Borrowers would organize themselves into home loan associations, through which the loans would be negotiated.

"The plan is as nearly the same as that of the farm loan banks as it could be made," says representative Crosser.

"It worked for the farms, and I am convinced it will work for homes. There is no validity in an objection

ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS by Olive Roberts Barton

"We forgot to ask those queer creatures if they had seen anything of Inco and Flops,' said Nancy when she and Nick had gotten their breath.

"Oh well!" said Nick. "I'm sure they were not there anyway. Inco never, never would make up with rubber bathtub toys or Christmastree ducks."

At this both the pink tickets stretched up out of the pockets and said, "They weren't there anyway. We told you not to go there."

"But the goats butted us over the wall and we couldnt help it," said Nancy. "Were you going to take us?"

But before either of the pink tickets had time to say a word, Nick grabbed Nancy's arm. "Look!" he cried. "Some body has lost a lot of pennies."

"And nickels and dimes," declared Nancy dropping on her knees and starting to pick them up as fast as she could.

"And quarters!" shouted Nick. And half dolars! And here's a whole dollar! This must be Captain Kidd's treasure."

"I can't hold any more," said Nancy "My pockets are full and both my hands. I wish I had a basket.

She began to look around for something to hold her money, and what should she spy but a tree full of tencent baskets.

Without a word she walked over and handed one to Nick.

"Hurrah!" shouted Nick. "Won't we be rich, Nancy! I'm going to buy the candy store, and the toy store and the movies. And maybe I'll buy an automobile apiece for everybody in the family. How should you like that?"

"If you're going to buy everything said Nancy. "I'll get that blue parasol, though and about ninety picture books and a cute little tennis racket like Anna Jane Snow's. And mebbe I'll buy a canoe and go fishing in the creek, and mebbe I'll buy an aeroplane—"

"You don't need to talk about me being greedy," said Nick crossly, picking up pieces of money and dropping them into his basket like blackberies, or apples, or plums. Indeed his basket was almost full, and the money wasn't half gone yet. "You know I've ben wanting a tennis racket and a canoe for a long time. And an aeroplane too, when I'm big enough. And now you've gone and taken everything!"

"I have not," said Nancy. "You gobbled up the toy store and the candy store and the movies without even asking me. And automobiles too. You might have let me buy my own!"

"Children! Children!" said one of the pink tickets sternly, stretching up out of Nancy's pocket and looking at her accusingly with its round pink eyes. "Remember you are in droway. Land on the moon. Helpful Health Hints

By DR. HUGH S. CUMMING
Director General U. S. Public Health Survey

swimming, one of the most popular sumer smports, has been greatly abused by the careless and unthinking. It is obvious that so useful a diversion should be surrounded with adequate safeguards.

Ability to swim and knowledge of rescue methods are prime requisites for entering the water. Water used for bathing should be free from pollution, lest disease be widely spread.

By refraining from bathing immediately after eating and by remaining in the water for only a short periods, this excellent and diverting exercise may be enjoyed without its being abused.

A coat of tan should be acquired gradually. Otherwise, one may suffer unnecesarily and even intensely from sunburn. The bronzed skin of the lifeguard may well be envied but it should be remembered that a healthy tan is the result of weeks of gradual exposure rather than an intensive burn acquired during a 24-hour trip to a bathing beach.

Comfort during hot weather is due in no smal part to the mental attitude. A philosophical state of mind, freedom from worry and inclination to benefit as much as posible by the outdoor life are all conclusive to health and happiness.

When a pleasant state of mind is coupled with reasonable observance of hygienic principles, a winning combination results.

If the summer vacation has been properly spent, one may resume the more arduous duties of fall and winter with confident knowledge that the mind and body are better prepared to meet the legimate demands of our daily tasks.

IT DOESN'T PAY

Henry Burnett must go to the penitentiary.

He plead guilty on Wednesday to forging the warrants of his office and the judge, after a deliberation, set the punishment at seven years in the state prison.

Henry Burnett, before he was found out, occupied a prominent position in Childress county. He was elected as his county's clerk and occupied a post of honor in the official circles of that county.

Then he chose the broad, smooth, beckoning roadway which leads to questiable ease and comfort instead of sticking to the straight and narrow path of honesty—made thorny, perhaps, by occasional financial worries yet the only pathway to certain and complete success.

Henry Burnett, $23,000 short they say, fled from Childress—left his home and friends and for a time disappeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed him.

Then, out in Oregon, he was discovered, arrested and brought back to trial. Ignominious defeat stared him in the face—he was guilty—beaten—marked with that scar of infidelity to honor.

It doesn't pay to be dishonest. That fact is proven every day. Henry Burnett wishes today that he hadn't forged those warrants. He wishes today that he had "shot square" with his friends and supporters and had chosen to live within his income and be able to look any man in the eye.

But, Henry Burnett, like many others, has found out too late—at least too late to save himself an awful experience. It's best to recognize from the start that dishonesty does not pay.

Accept it as an axiom—and hew to the line.

The month the car was introduced there were more than 1,000 orders re ceived. At that time production wa merely getting under way. FIRESTONE TIRES POPULAR WITH RACERS

Firestone Full-Size Gum-Dipped Balloon tires again made a remarka ble showing in the Indianapolis Speed way Classic on Decoration Day, when all ten winners participating " in the money' rode on these dependable tires.

This is the second time balloon tires were used in the great Speedway event the first being last year when Peter DePaolo on Firestone Full-size Gum-Dipped Balloons made a new world's record at an average speed of 101.13 miles per hour.

Smaller motors of 91½ cubic inch displacement, compared to 122 cubic inches in 1925, combined with rainy weather and a slippery track, slowed up the time of the 1926 winner, Frank Lockhart, who won this year's race at 95.88 miles per hour.

This year's gruelling battle of tires was called at the end of 402½ miles because of the downpour of rain. Lock hart, who captured the grand prize, drove the full distance without a single tire change and was all set to go the entire 500 miles on the same set of tires.

It is a noteworthy fact, too, that the 1926 Indianapolis race was the ninth on the Hoosier Speedway in which Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires carried the winners to victory.

COUNTRY PAPERS HIGHLY PRAISED

SAN ANGELO, Texas, June 12.(AP)—The hope of democratic government and the foe of despotism in the country press, Dick McCarty of the Albany Texas, News, declared Friday in the annual oration at the Texas Press association meeting.

Paying high tribute to the rural weekly newspaper, McCarty brought applause from his audience as he set forth that when the country press went out of existence, the nation would fall. He said the country press was the champion of the people's liberties, and the enemy of political "crooks" and demagogues.

A strong plea to the editors to aid the campaign for "more cotton on fewer acres" was made by Victor Shofflemeyer of Dallas. He stressed the importance of cutting down cotton acreage and increasing the yield, and said he was apprehensive of next fall if 10 and 12 cent cotton should prevail, as had been predicted in some quarters.

New earnings of the company for May are expected to be in the vicinity of $2,500,000 and all departments are working at capacity. A new record in Willys-Knight production was

New Air Group May Go To Ft. Crockett

WASHINGTON, June 12.(AP)—Transfer of the third attack group from Kelly Field, San Antonio, Texas, to Fort Crockett, Galveston, is contemplated by army air service headquarters as one of the principal changes to be made in the air service if Congress enacts the air corps bill, now in conference between the House and Senate.

The reorganization to take place has not as yet been submitted to the War Department for approval of Secretary Davis and the general staff. Failure of the bill in the present Congress would leave the existing air service organization unaffected and, in that contingency, the plans of the air service would be preserved until the legislation is enacted.

MAY SETS ANOTHER HUPP RECORD FOR SALES

The Hupp Motor Car Corporation did the largest volume of business in its entire history during the month of May. Its shipments of cars during that period surpassed those for its largest previous month—March 1926—by more than $500,000. May 24 was the biggest single day in the 18 years the company has been producing motor cars.

Shipments of Hupmobiles for the first five months of 1926 were 44 per cent larger than those for the corresponding period in 1925, reports O. C. Hutchinson, general sales manager. Retail sales throughout the world to date this year are estimated as being between 45 and 50 per cent greater than a year ago. May shipments were 89 per cent higher than those for May 1925.

"Hupmobile demand has not only been considerably greater this year than ever before," said Mr. Hutchinson, "but it is continuing to grow substantially. There is every evidence that June will exceed May, and set still another record. Strong growth in sales volume is being made both in our six and eight cylinder cars."

Indicative of the overwhelming buying trend, the company released figures showing that 92 per cent of its entire six cylinder production to May 1, and 83 per cent of its output of Hupmobile Eights, was in closed cars. Ninety-eight per cent of its United States and Canadian output of sixes was in closed models, and 91 per cent of its eights.

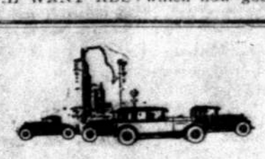

"Outstanding success has greeted both our cars throughotu the world," continued Mr. Hutchinson. "Hupmobiles today are being bought at the fastest rate we have ever known. Both ourselves and our distributors and dealers see the greatest success for Hupmobile throughout 1926 that we have ever enjoyed. The addition of the new coupe to our six cylinder line of cars has given us an added demand in that division. The new Hupmobile Eight roadster, just announced, has also brought us a large number of additional orders for eights."

Despite its record business, the company, on June 1, carried unfilled orders for more than $2,800,000 worth of cars.

American Light Car Looming To Forefront, Said

pect forced feed lubrication, better carburetion, and improved cooling systems.

Our users will never be satisfied with the frequent shifting of gears which is accepted by the European drivers. If there is to be a new type light car it will have to incorporate excellent hill climbing ability. Here our engineers have been working to develop greater torque in their motors for this means less gear-shifting on grades and in heavy pulling.

We shall require other motor changes as well. At the preesnt time, American engineers, working to get a low, compact, light motor, have been content to let the lower end of the piston skirt slide down past the lower end of the cylinder walls at the end of the down stroke. This has resulted in piston slaps and in a far too rapid deterioration in the power plant. Longer cylinder walls, higher motors which will be compact in end to end dimensions rather than in top to bottom figures, are likely. In this we shall be following acceptable points in European manufacture.

Lower bodies are also a certainty if the new American built light car follows European lines. With increased power and speed capacity, it will be necessary to keep the car weight down and this will make lower bodies a necessity for safety and road balance.

Already one American manufacturer, in a special model, has achieved a total height from ground to the top of the body of but 64 inches. We will probably not go this far, because it will be necessary to maintain proper head room, but from 66 to 68 inches may be expected and this means a car that the man of ordinary height can easily look over while it is standing at the curb. Such a car will be materially lower than any light car we have on the market at the present time.

Piecing together the requirements of a tpyical American light car built after European lines, we should get a car of about the same wheel base as our present light cars, with standard tread, wherein it will materially differ from European light cars, a motor of considerably less piston displacement than any of our present stock models but with considerably greater maximum power development, tire sizes perhaps as small as 27 inch diameter and a body of around 68 inches total height from the ground to the top of the roof.

This car should seat five people with comfort. It should be able to travel 55 miles an hour in a sedan type, should go 30 miles to the gallon of fuel under ordinary driving conditions, and should be able to materially outclimb any of our preesnt light cars.

It will not be the lowest price car built by any manner of means and yet it will not be disproportionately high in cost. It will have four wheel brakes to take care of its increased perfbrmance range. It will have an irreversible steering device and it will be quite different in the essentials of lubrication, cooling, igniton and carburetor from our present standard models.

What manufacturer will build it? This is a question which everyone in the industry is asking everyone else at the present time.

FRANCE BOWS TO FINANCIAL WOES

"Sackcloth and Ashes" Era Is Upon Nation; Business Is Slowing Down

(By the Associated Press)

PARIS, June 12.—The period of "sackcloth and ashes" predicted some time ago by Joseph Caillaux, former minister of finance, is upon France, and the public accepts it with resignation, but reluctance. It is connected with the battle to save the franc and it anticipates restrictions in the consumption of bread, meat and other necessities.

A committee of four ministers, which will manage the regime of restrictions, started its work today. The ministers will tread their way warily, for they realize they are on delicate ground and that increased tariff barriers will provoke reprisals abroad to the detriment of France's export trade; that restrictions carried to far will have a bad effect on home industrials and frighten away tourists.

Bakeshops, it is expected, will be closed one day each week. Fancy bread and rolls will be prohibited and flour for cakes and pastry severely rationed. Butcher shops will close once, and perhaps twice weekly.

There are to be no bread cards, which it would take time and money to print and distribute. There may, however, be cards for articles imported in large quantities, such as gasoline, coffee, sugar, wool, cotton and coal, notably British hard coal.

Clemency By Attorney

(By The Associated Press)

ST. LOUIS, June 12.—John Rutherford, who spent $1,500 "to arrange matters" so his brother, Allen, could escape a second degree murder indictment by paying a $500 fine, promised Attorney General Gentry of Missouri at Pine Bluff, Ark., last night to appear as a witness against the five men indicted with him for conspiracy to pervert and obstruct justice.

The Attorney General made this announcement upon his return here today.

In return, the Attorney General said he had agreed to quash the two indictments charging John Rutherford with conspiracy and bribery, also to dismiss the indictments against William Allen Scott Rutherford, former army reserve officer, charging second degree murder and felonicsly carried a concealed weapon.

Allen Rutherford, while alleged to have been intoxicated, shot Jack Tucker, a hotel bell-boy here, to death last October 10.

Trial Of Boys On Slaying Count Opened At Laredo

(By the Associated Press)

LAREDO, June 12.—Twelve days after the finding of the body of Sterling Huntley, geologist of San Antonio, murder victim of highwaymen, two youths, alleged confessors of the crime, went to trial in District Court here Friday.

Selection of a jury from a special venire of 50 men got under way this morning to try Herminio G. Williams, 22, and Cruz Martinez, 19, whom officers say confessed they killed Huntley after stopping him on the road in Zapata county, and asking him for a tire patch for a truck they had stolen in Hidalgo county.

Huntley's body was taken from his sedan and thrown into a creek after he had been shot to death without warning, the confession said.

Boys Claimed Burglars

Huntley was killed May 26. The next day Williams and Martinez, wanted in Willacy county on a charge of burglarizing a drug store in Raymondsville May 25, were arrested here.

While being searched at the jail a bank book made out to Huntley was found, but at the time it was given no attention. May 30, the body of Huntley was found. Finding of the bank book then was recalled, and officers went to Raymondsville and secured a written confession from the men.

Roads almost unbelievably bad exist in the Lisbon oil field area, in southern Arkansas. Richard C. This picture shows one team bogged in the soft mud of the roadway. Craven declares he saw 30 scenes like this in a short time.

He Broke Her Heart — Then He Broke Her Nose

The Hectic Romance of the Lovely Movie Star and the Heir to the Salad-Dressing Millions.

Ora Carew Howard, the Pretty Movie Star Wife of the Young Multi-Millionaire Salad Dressing Heir, Who Recently Won a Divorce From Him Because, She Says, He Beat Her and Broke Her Nose.

Above: An Intimate Picture of Ora Carew and John C. Howard, Taken Shortly After Their Return to Hollywood From Their Honeymoon and Before Their Hectic "Doings" Began to Make the Movie Colony Sit Up and Take Notice.

Another Photograph of Ora Carew Taken When She First Charmed the Hollywood Movie Colony With Her Beauty as One of the Gayest and Prettiest Habitues of the Night Clubs.

Below: Young John C. Howard, Son of the Multi-Millionaire Salad-Dressing King, Who Not Only Punched His Wife's Admirer in the Nose But Likewise Broke Hers, According to Court Records.

"JOHNNY knew too much about the salad-dressing business. He took to 'dressing me down' whenever we met. Beating may be good for mayonnaise but not for movie careers. How do I know? My nose knows, for one thing, seeing as he broke it for me."

Such is the opinion of Ora Carew, film favorite, who has just won a divorce from John C. Howard, son of the multi-millionaire salad-dressing king of Haverhill, Mass.

The seven super-thrilling reels that make up this society-screenland romance open with a background of millions and movie sets, and a turbulent wooing too passionate for most censors.

It unwinds its hectic way through scenes of matrimonial jealousy, threats of instant death, a wholesale war on Miss Carew's admiring public, a punch on the nose for the theatrical magnate Anthony Pantages, the craziest ride that Hollywood has ever witnessed, attempts at suicide, attempts on the part of the salad-dressing father-in-law to collect his $20,000 stake in Miss Carew's career, attempts on the part of her husband to crab her acts by making faces at her and a final fade-out in the divorce courts among the bandied names of a dozen prominent men and actresses.

Three years ago John C. Howard, heir to the salad-dressing throne, invaded California. He had thousands to play with, an eye for feminine beauty and a temperament as green as the salads on which the family fortune was founded. And it was inevitable that he should meet Ora Carew, then a temperamental actress, hovering on the verge of stardom and a reigning beauty of the movie colony's social life.

A turbulent wooing followed, setting even blase Hollywood agape with its hectic ups and downs. Caveman nights would be followed with a morning-after chill and for weeks neither movie colony's social life.

Ora Carew seemed to know just what the outcome of the romance would be. But at last love found a way. Perhaps Miss Carew's professional ambitions may have influenced her heart to a certain extent. At any rate, the two were married and at once the salad-dressing king lent his new daughter-in-law $20,000 for the furtherance of her professional career, on the joint note of her new husband and herself.

Like all good movie thrillers, the dramatic action of this one did not lag. For a time Hollywood nicknamed the romance its "ideal marriage." Then rumors began to float about of wild parties in which only half of the matrimonial pair took part, of still wilder scenes of recrimination with only a milkman or the dawn for witnesses, and finally passionate and tearful scenes of reconciliation that lasted till nightfall or the next unchaperoned good time.

What really made filmland sit up with a jerk was the sight of Alexander Pantages, vaudeville magnate of the Pacific Coast, hurrying down one of the principal streets of Los Angeles with blood streaming from his nose and a fast-swelling eye.

As witnesses later described the affair, Howard had been trailing his wife for some time. Late one night he found her being escorted home by Pantages. He took exception to the moonlight night and his wife's attitude on the world in general. He walked up to her escort, made a few blunt accusations and then slammed the great vaudeville producer in the nose. It takes two to make a fight and when there seemed no signs of one materializing, Howard walked off threatening to sue Pantages for a hundred thousand dollars for alienating his wife's affections.

While Mrs. Carew overlooked this incident in filing her suit for divorce, she made it the basis, the following day, for a visit to the District Attorney's office where the actress made a pretty appeal to Burton R. Fitts to protect her against her husband's violent outbursts of temper.

"The brute," she is reported to have sobbed. "I always was true to him. He had no foundation for his insane jealousy. He never worked a day or gave me a dime all the time we have been married. I have had to support him with the money I earned in pictures—and he isn't worth it. I saw him punch Mr. Pantages in the nose."

Mr. Fitts ordered the salad-dressing Crown Prince to drop around to his office and talk the matter over. Howard promptly came and explained:

"I began to grow suspicious of her attentions to other men shortly after our marriage. I spent a fortune on her, gratifying her every extravagant whim, and in return she took every opportunity when my back was turned to run around on wild parties.

"I loved her and wanted to protect her, but she preferred the society of Mr. Pantages and her manager. Well, when I am through with an old shoe I throw it away," snapped Mr. Howard as he left the District Attorney's office after promising not to molest his wife further.

A few weeks passed without further trouble and Hollywood began to hope that sufficient oil had been poured on the Howards' matrimonial salad to insure peace. But again the actress and her husband made the town sit up and take notice.

One afternoon Howard's great, gray touring car was seen rocking along the Los Angeles main streets and boulevards with a grinning, drawn-faced man at the wheel urging it on to still greater speed. In the rear of the car, clinging to the seat and shouting for help, was Miss Carew.

A half dozen motorists took up the chase, one of the most memorable in the history of Western motoring. Through and around the town they raced, bouncing against curbs, skidding around corners and barely diving through traffic holes. But at last Howard's car was penned in by two others and forced to a jolting stop. The hysterical Miss Carew was helped out, and with a muttered, incoherent explanation Howard was allowed to drive on.

A little later and Miss Carew was again in trouble. It seems that she had been headlining in vaudeville at Hoyt's Theatre at Long Beach, Cal. One evening coming upon the stage to do her turn, she chanced to glance down into the orchestra seats. Right in the middle of the second row was her husband, leering up at her.

In vain Miss Carew tried to avoid his eyes and keep her attention on her act. His mocking features and sardonic grimace seemed to follow her in every movement she made. Those sneering eyes seemed to urge her on to stumble in her part, they seemed to snicker at every false movement. His looks set up an emotional atmosphere incompatible with good acting, and she claims that his mockery had its effect on his neighbors. She left the stage practically in hysterics and complained bitterly to her friends.

Shortly before Miss Carew filed her divorce papers a man was brought into the Los Angeles Receiving Hospital suffering from an overdose of veronal. He was questioned as to why he had attempted suicide by a police surgeon who thought he recognized the patient as John C. Howard. The unidentified man denied that he had tried to take his life, blaming the veronal, saying he tried to use it as a sleeping draught. Later he was taken away from the hospital by a heavily veiled woman in a car which was supposed to have been Miss Carew's.

At about the same time that the courts were considering Miss Carew's demand for a divorce on the grounds of a broken nose and a broken heart, John C. Howard's father filed suit against the couple for $20,000 which he claimed he had loaned Miss Carew to "aid her in her career" on the strength of a note signed by both his son and daughter-in-law.

During the course of the now famous divorce trial Howard stated that he had seen Pantages' car in front of his wife's home for several hours on a number of nights, and he also added a millionaire rancher and a famous clubman to the list of those who, he claims, were too friendly with his wife.

Miss Carew, however, finally won her decree when she showed the marks of her husband's violence to her, recited the details of his long campaign of jealously, and unwound the closing reels of the movie queen's romance with the heir to the salad dressing millions.

"Through and around the town they raced, bouncing against curbs, skidding around corners and barely diving through traffic holes"

As time goes on and they are ... longer able to attend to their household duties, and life becomes a burden to them, they grow almost frantic, and try all sorts of hit-or-miss methods which promise relief from their pain and suffering, only to be disappointed time and time again.

There is no longer any real reason for women to resort to these hit-or-miss methods, when so many thousands of them, hundreds right here in West Texas, are getting such quick, sure relief from their pain and suffering, using St. Joseph's G. F. P.

The success this medicine is enjoying over other medicines and treatments for the relief of so-called "female troubles" is undoubtedly due to its well-known power and reliability in overcoming Catarrh of the Female Organs, which we now know is the real cause of fully ninety per cent of the pain and suffering among women and girls from these embarrassing troubles peculiar to their sex.

In many instances where the same symptoms are indicated as mentioned above, St. Joseph's Antiseptic Powder used externally in connection with St. Joseph's G. F. P. will be found very soothing.

If your dealer is out of it, send his name to the St. Joseph's Laboratories, Memphis, Tenn., along with $1.50, or $1.00 if you only want G. F. P. and they will send your order by return mail to your dealer who will deliver it to you, thus saving you postage

THE PUGILISTIC QUALITIES OF THE OLD SPANISH BULL

(A reprint from the files in the History Department of McMurry College.)

Perhaps the most distinguishing characteristics of the old Spanish bull was his readiness to match a fight with anything that came along, his ungovernable temper and lack of discretion. Some one has said that the old Spanish bull was fair and honorable in his fights and that a contest between them was a measure of Herculean strength, the victory going to the strongest. The old Spanish bull was nothing of the kind. He was the most tyrannical ingrate that ever went unhung, and nothing was too contemptible for him to do, so far as taking advantage was concerned. He would lord it around over all creation until some bull gave him a good thrashing, and then he would sneak into some other range and try the bad bull act there. True he was always ready to get into trouble, but he rarely ever had the courage to tackle his conqueror a second time.

The older a bull got the meaner he became, and reaching that age where he was worthless on the range he was generally shipped out of the country; but to give a more realistic account of the old reprobate, I will chronicle a few of his doings, as witnessed by myself.

The grandest bull fight I ever saw was on the Big Sandy in Stephens county, and was between two powerful, well matched fellows, each of which had for sometime been boss of the range on his respective side of the creek. One of them was a dark red or brindle and the other was a color blended between smallpox flag and an electric headlight; in other words, he was a bright yellow. For several days these fellows had paraded through the valleys, pouring forth their thunderous tones, but apparently each was mystified by his own disturbance and unable to locate the other. One day the yellow bull figured out the whereabouts of the other, and then he proceeded to invade the enemy's territory. He didn't do so with stealth and cunning, but with a bluster and boasting probably calculated to scatter consternation everywhere. The brindle bull was somewhat a consternationist himself, however, and added his gigantic voice to the chimes of the grand military march. He had taken up a position in an open space covering perhaps three acres on either side of which there was a heavy growth of mesquite trees and bushes, and was taking a dirt bath by pawing up great clouds of dust which settled for the most part on his back. When within about fifty yards of his hated being the yellow bull stopped for a moment, sized up his antagonist, who was evidently trying to make a grand showing of his ferocious disposition and general adaptability to lick any two bulls on earth. After making these observations the yellow bull applied a few shovels full of dirt to the atmosphere, and then the two giants began to cautiously approach each other, bellowing, pawing and slobbering. They were probably about thirty minutes reducing this fifty yards to about ten feet, when both came to a standstill. Their necks were bowed, their eyes gleamed and every breath was an angry snort; their bodies seemed rigid, their backs slightly humped and they seemed to be marshaling every muscle in their bodies for the supreme moment. Like a flash they hurled their heads together and the battle began. In the first clash the brindle bull gained a slight advantage, and for the first few seconds it looked as if he would make short work of the invader, who luckily gained a footing and changed the tide of affairs. For fully two hours these monsters scrambled and struggled for mastery. First one and then the other would be shoved and almost hurled down, but would regain his lost vantage and turn the tables. There was scarcely a foot of open space that had not been plowed and torn by the hoofs of these warriors when the yellow was rushed backwards into the brush. Trees cracked and snapped and bushes went down like toys before the wind. Finally the brindle bull was rushed backwards and his hind feet slipped into a ditch, his neck was twisted and before he could escape two keen horns were thrust into his side and shoulder, and before he could struggle to his feet the same keen horns were thrust into his flank, leaving a mighty gash which exposed his wounded entrails. Not satisfied with a victory more his by chance than might the yellow villian continued to gore and maim his vanquished foe, until life was extinct, and then with the blood dripping from his horns, went about the range introducing himself as the new champion.

Except in case of an accident as above the whipped bull seldom gets gored, as he realizes when he is done for and dashes away before the other has time to gore him. It was at round-ups that the old Spanish bulls did most of their fighting and they were tough customers too. When once they locked horns, the only thing to do was to let them fight it out, and when one of them broke away they went through or over any object that chanced to be in the road of retreat and pursuit. A whipped bull generally quit that particular range, if the fight was on the commons, but if in a herd he generally quit the herd, and, if he so decided, he would gore man or beast that tried to intercept him.

The modern high-toned boss of the range is a moral coward and a self lauding boaster. He will bellow and paw and play bad, and make life a burden for all the little bulls in his community; but when it comes to a fight, he is afraid of hurting himself and the other fellow, too. So he clumsies around for a few minutes and calls it a fight. If he gets the worst of the shoving match he may take umbrage and quit the herd or even that particular part of the range, but as a fighter this mou..tain of flesh is an over..rown failure.

RADIO IS HOUSEWIVES' WASHDAY GUIDE

THOMAS A. BLAIR, RADIO FORECASTER

LINCOLN, Neb., June 12.—Monday isn't always washday in Nebraska.

Now it's the first day in the week that shows promise of fair weather.

Heretofore, housewives took their chances at getting fair weather on Monday and found they had to postpone the drying to late in the week.

Radio has changed this. Radio tells the housewife exactly what sort of weather to expect and permits them to make their plans accordingly.

Thomas A. Blair, U. S. weather forecaster for this district, has inaugurated a system of washday forecasting and has gained a wide following through the state. He knows women are following his talks because he has received letters of praise and reproval from many women. Some berate him at times for missing a good day, but most thank him for his services.

Blair is one of the few weather forecasters who do their own broadcasting. He talks into the microphone by means of a relay wire from his office.

He's good to farmers also. One farmer does his wood-chopping by radio, planning his stock of wood for cold days and resting when warmer weather is predicted.

Another farmer cares for his cattle in accordance with Blair's reports and has found he has been saved many a worry over the care of his stock.

in motion, a galloping horse, street traffic, automobile effects and so on.

Wetzel has more than 300 records of sounds for radio productions. When he calls for a definite sound, the property man puts the record on a phonograph, and turns it on at the proper time, to be broadcast through the microphone and mixing panel.

All this Wetzel "observes" from his little studio, through glass partitions. He sees the musicians and characters in their separate studios, while he keeps in close touch with the acoustic laboratory by phone.

During each daily period, eminent authorities discuss agricultural problems.

Department of Agriculture Farm Program

Pickard Will Give First-Hand Study

WASHINGTON, June 12.—Sam Pickard, chief of the radio farm service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, will crank his automobile and head southward around the first of June to visit in practically every state east of the Rockies. He expects to travel about 10,000 miles on this trip which will require about three months.

The first Monday of October will mark the introduction of the "U. S. Farm Radio School," sponsored by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, under the direction of Pickard.

"I plan to talk to at least 1000 farmers before I return to Washington," Pickard says, "so I can receive first-hand impressions of what they are thinking about, what information they need, and how the Department of Agriculture can best serve them."

Personal Talks—

For three months Pickard will devote his time to the farmers, stopping his car alongside fields of cotton, corn or other grain and visit with farmers, learning their problems and all the time registering impressions of how he can effectively reach 1,000,000 farmers by radio, broadcasting the latest and most useful agricultural information.

"Heartened by the enthusiastic response from farmers as a result of our three months' experiment in broadcasting a government farm service this spring," declares Pickard, "we have tentatively outlined a comprehensive program for the fall and winter months. It includes a dozen special features, each designed to interest and help the farmer help himself.

"The achievement of almost instantaneous dissemination of pertinent information to the farmer is one of the most effective accomplishments of the modern century. Yet only the fringe of the real possibilities has been touched.

Farm Programs

"Today about 60 per cent of the nation's population is on farms and in towns of less than 5000 inhabitants. This group, while primarily interested in radio programs of entertainment, has expressed its eagerness for information which will be of practical use. Radio stations could well afford to devote at least 10 per cent of their programs to broadcasting important farm information.

"The first organized effort on the part of the United States Department of Agriculture to reach every corner of this country by radio with general farming information was made on February 15, 1926, when a few experimental features were sent to numerous broadcasting stations. This effort was so successful that the department is now launching a more comprehensive program for all persons interested in agriculture."

Sounds Are Blended Three Months To To Aid Realism

BY ISRAEL KLEIN
Science Editor

SQUAWKY, unmusical sounds, gathered together on phonograph records, make your radio entertainment realistic and harmonious when you listen in on station WOOD, at Grand Rapids, Mich.

This is part of a unique system by which Maurice Wetzel, WOOD program director, has been able to put over musical comedies that might have been lacking in harmony and realism.

By means of a mixing panel, well known to broadcasters, Wetzel combines orchestral music, voices and accompanying sounds coming from three different studios at the same time into one harmonious whole.

Sitting before a fourth microphone, in a separate compartment, he has the job of directing each studio, co-ordinating their sounds and interposing his announcements at the right time.

In one studio is the orchestra. In another are the "voices." In a third is a collection of sound-producing instruments operated by a "property man," and in the fourth is Wetzel with another man listening in on all studios and blending them harmoniously by means of the mixing panle.

Confusion Is Avoided—

Wetzel's purpose in separating the orchestra from the voices and both from the accompanying noises is to avoid distraction and confusion among the performers.

"The musicians can't keep their undivided attention on the score, while listening to the story unfolding," says Wetzel. "The characters miss their cues, listening to the musicians. And, worse, there are some effects, such as the rumbling of trunks being put aboard an ocean liner, that aren't practical to reproduce in the studio."

The most interesting part of Wetzel's method is his "acoustic laboratory," as he calls the sound-producing studio. In it he has not only the everyday cowbells and such that every broadcasting station has ecquired, but he has built up a library of sounds that couldn't be produced in a studio.

Outdoor Sounds Recorded—

This library consists of phonograph records on which Wetzel has recorded all possible sounds that might be called for at times, but have to be obtained outdoors.

Preparing for such calls, Wetzel has had recorded sounds of rustling leaves, water falls, swish of the turf, animal roars, bird calls, machinery

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

A Child's Laxative which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach.

All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

Newest Plan to Raise Tiberius' Treasure Barge

American Skyscraper Methods Now Considered in Project to Reclaim the Fabulous Wealth of the Caesars

Below: Diagram Showing from Above the Concave Crib Dam, Pumping Station and Inclined Railway Lines. Traveling Derricks Will Run On Top of the Dam as Well as Across a Trestle Which Supports the Dam at Its Center.

AMERICAN skyscraper construction methods have solved the riddle to the world's greatest treasure hunt! Through their application, the recovery of the barge of the Emperor Tiberius, buried with its fabulous wealth in the mud at the bottom of Lake Nemi, in Italy, becomes a certainty. The bullion galley of Caligula, the successor of Tiberius, which lies a hundred and fifty feet away, is also expected to be raised at the same time.

One of New York's largest contracting firms recently submitted to Premier Mussolini the solution of the problem, a problem which has always been one of expense. It is based on their long experience in building with cheap structural steel, a science developed in the last decade by American engineers alone, and their plan embraces the novel idea of dumping the top of a mountain down into Lake Nemi.

Premier Mussolini has instructed the Minister of Public Instruction to appoint a commission to study the project of raising the barge and the galley, and ordered that immediate steps be taken in that direction. He hopes that the millions in gold which may be recovered will exercise a bracing effect on Italy's finances, while the statues, art objects and archaeological specimens which are known to rest in the sunken ships will afford the finest collection of Roman antiquities that the world has ever possessed.

Hundreds of plans for the recovery of the treasure ships have been made since the Fifteenth Century, and Leonardo da Vinci is among the famous engineers who have worked on the problem. But it remained for the twentieth century developments of engineering science and the experience of American builders to work out a practical plan for the raising of the ships at a reasonable expense.

Mr. George Backer, of the George Backer Construction Company, which has built many of New York City's largest buildings, following a season in Europe, became interested in the project. Upon his return to this country he had one of America's most prominent consulting engineers draw up, in conjunction with his own staff, a practical plan for raising the barges, based on recently developed skyscraper construction practice. This plan was submitted to Premier Mussolini, and as it embraces an expenditure of less than two million dollars, it is said to be the first plan really considered feasible for the project.

Mr. Backer, while he admits that he is sailing for Europe this Summer, remains non-committal as to what arrangements the Italian Government is making for the raising of the barges. Prominent American engineers, however, familiar with the classic problem, have admitted that the American plan is the first that promises complete success at a comparatively small financial outlay, an expense which Premier Mussolini has indicated will be raised by popular subscription.

As Mr. Backer explains the plan, it consists of dumping the top of one of the surrounding hills, which are also the top of an extinct volcano in which Lake Nemi rests, down into the lake and so penning off the section which contains the barges. This section could then easily be pumped dry and the barges dug out of the mud in which they have lain for two thousand years.

"We first," Mr. Backer explains, "would have to throw up a cheap structural steel frame around the section. Then what is known as a crib dam would be constructed in a semicircle, embracing the two ships and connected with the shore at each end. The water in this section could then be pumped out in less than a month, the steel work would hold the temporary dam in place, and would also serve to carry the derricks and winches necessary for raising the barges out of the mud.

"A crib dam is a cheap matter to construct. It is made of great wooden frames that are filled with stone and rubble and sunk into place. An incline railway would carry this mass of broken stone down from the hilltops by gravity, out along the steel work, and it could then be emptied into the frames. It would not be an elaborate affair as such matters are rated today.

"Offhand, I would say that only about a million cubic yards of stone would have to be moved. Call that six hundred thousand dollars. Say another four hundred thousand for the timber work and a million for steel work, pumping station and equipment, and the barges are accessible."

The amount of treasure that lies buried in the mud can only be surmised, but historians claim it to be one of the greatest ever gathered together in ancient times. Tiberius Caesar ruled over the Roman Empire at the height of its luxury and power. He pillaged the whole of the then civilized world—Greece, Asia and Egypt—for works of art and treasure.

Bored with building palaces to house his art treasures, he planned a great floating palace that would be the eighth wonder of the world and a safe retreat for himself, his gold and his statues. He chose Lake Nemi to float it on, as it is only some nineteen miles from Rome, and he gathered together nearly fifty thousand artists and artisans to construct the royal barge, which was to be four hundred feet long and a hundred feet wide.

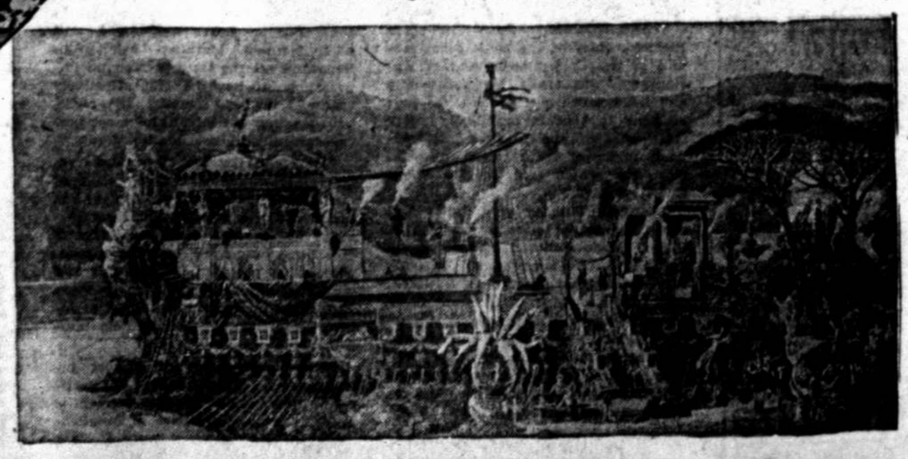

So magnificent was this floating palace that historians have left ample accounts of its construction. These are borne out by the divers who in modern times have recovered fragments of bronze grill work, bits of exquisite ivory carving, sections of alabaster from the elaborate baths on board and sheets of the thin lead sheathing that covered the sides and decks.

Once completed, Tiberius moved his gold and jewels, his finest statuary and works of art on board. He had immense gardens constructed on one deck, a great temple built high up on the stern, and on a platform at the prow a vast golden throne under a magnificent canopy of precious woods inlaid with jewels. On this throne the Roman despot would recline and witness spectacles in the floating gardens so licentious that even the pagan historians called them scenes which could not be described.

For Tiberius Caesar was a connoisseur of sensations. He collected gold, jewels, art and power. But above all he was a collector of beautiful women. In every corner of the Empire he had agents searching for girls lovely enough to stir the jaded senses of Caesar. They were ruthlessly torn from their homes and shipped to Rome in the same fashion as the wild beasts for the great circuses. At all times the Emperor was surrounded by flower-clad dancing girls, and often while he lolled on his great throne, drinking himself into a frenzy, girls of the noblest Roman families, princesses and queens of conquered countries were forced through indescribable scenes to inflame the Emperor's satiated fancies.

Whether it was the tremendous weight of precious metal on board Tiberius' barge and that built by Caligula, that finally sank the two, or whether some great storm wrecked them, there is no historical record, and it remains for American engineers to solve the treasure riddle.

Below: A Reconstruction Drawing by Professor Mancini of Caligula's Floating Pleasure Palace with Its Magnificent Throne, Pavilions and Gardens. Tiberius' Royal Barge Was Much Larger and More Elaborate Than This.

NEW PARK IS AN UNKNOWN WILDERNESS

"Great Smoky" Range Near Big Cities

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., June 12.—A range of mist-veiled mountains still uncut timber, as wild and as it was before Columbus America, lies hidden a miles from Knoxville and a day's ride from the populated centers of the east.

In it are towering mountain crags that never have been scaled by white men, deep whispering forests that have no trails save the traditional paths made by the feet of the black bear and the red fox.

There are wild mountain streams teeming with trout, that have never been whipped by a fisherman's line. There are tall, rocky pinnacles there, higher than any other peaks east of the Rockies, but so little known that many of them have not been named.

It is a land of unspoiled beauty; a paradise for the sportsman and camper.

Nation Must Buy It—

This wilderness is the Great Smoky Mountain region, lying on the borderland between Tennessee and North Carolina. It will be preserved forever in its primeval state for the people of the United States—

If the people will donate the money to buy it.

Congress has passed a bill to make a national park out of the Great Smoky Mountain. But national park territories are never bought by the government. The land must belong to the government originally or it must be donated. Hence the appeal for funds.

The people of Virginia, Tennessee and North Carolina already have given $2,460,000, but many millions more must be donated if the project is to be successful.

The very existence of this track of virgin wilderness is unknown to most people. Seventy miles long by a dozen or more wide, it is, much of it, totally unknown territory. Even the Tennessee and North Carolina people know little about its interior. It is as fresh and unspoiled as it was when Daniel Boone led his pioneers westward along the old trail a few score miles to the northward.

Veils of Mist—

Its name connotes its beauty. "Great Smoky" mountain they truly are; majestic peaks veiled in clouds, hidden in drifting vapor, rising above the storms of the wooded valleys, serene and peaceful.

Aside from the Great Smoky region, there is only one peak in eastern North America more than 6000 feet high—Mount Washington. In the Great Smoky district there are a dozen, and seven of them tower even above Mount Washington. Clingman's Dome, tallest peak east of the Rockies, is 6680 feet above sea level. And the district is so little known that seven peaks more than 6000 feet high have never been named.

The woodman's ax has never rung out in this territory. There are towering trees that were standing when the continent had never seen a white man. In their shade there are small shrubs and leafy plants that can exist only where the upper growth has not been cut away.

There is an abundance of wild life here. Black bears, amiable and inquisitive, prowl about the mountain slopes. The covers teem with grouse, wild turkey and other birds. An angler who cast a fly in the mountain streams would think he was in Izaac Walton's paradise. If the land becomes a national park, government officials have promised to stock the ranges with elk and deer.

Many of the mountain crags in this wonderland have never been climbed by man. There is room for a whole army of vacationists to camp and tramp and fish, secure in the knowledge that no man has been there ahead of them.

This is the unknown wilderness that will perish if left to itself, but that will be preserved forever if the people of America will furnish the money.

It is within easy reach of the great cities of the east and middle west.

The city man, all unknowing, has a wilderness at his back door.

There are scores of hidden waterfalls like this in the Great Smoky mountains. These are the Rainbow Falls on the Mill Creek trail to Mount Leconte.

Thought Malaria Still in System

Until Dodson's Liver Tone Drove Out Quarts of Sour Bile and Other Poisons

There are entire sections where everybody seems to think they have malaria. I believe they never fully got the malarial poisons out of their systems. Mrs. Whiteson says: "For years I used calomel for the aches, biliousness, dizziness, constipation and the deathly feeling associated with what we believed was malaria.

"A year I heard about Dodson's Liver Tone and bought a bottle for a few cents. Oh man, what a Godsend. In the morning drove out quarts of black, sour bile. I got back my appetite for food, got right up and haven't had a sick day since. Whenever I feel a little biliousness or the stomach gets sour, one dose of Dodson's Liver Tone is all I need. It is truly a blessing."

Hundreds of others tell the same experience.

A spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone tonight and you will wake up feeling great. No more biliousness, constipation, sluggishness, headache, coated tongue or sour stomach. Your druggist guarantees if you don't find Dodson's Liver Tone a better than horrible calomel your money is waiting for you.—advertisement.

Charming, Athletic, Young—That's Pennsylvania's Next First Lady

INDIANA, Pa., June 12.—The next "first lady" of Pennsylvania is not only going to be the youngest woman ever to occupy that exalted position; she is going to be one of the most charming.

This, of course, is provided that Pennsylvania does as it always does and elects a Republican governor. It would be a political miracle if it did not, and miracles don't happen in this state.

The future first lady, is Miss Mary Miller Fisher, 26-year-old daughter of John S. Fisher, Republican gubernatorial nominee. Since Mrs. Fisher has been dead for five years, this girl will preside in the executive mansion at Harrisburg during her father's term of office.

Mary Fisher is a girl of culture and tact, and it is safe to say right now that the job wont be too big for her. She is used to being mistress of her father's household, entertaining his friends and presiding at his dinner table with grace and ease.

In addition—

There won't be any executive mansion romance during John S. Fisher's term, despite the fact that the new first lady is undeniably one of the most "eligible," to say nothing of attractive, girls in the state. She says, in response to a question:

"Married? I? Nothing doing."

Mary Fisher is distinctly of the athletic type. There are fine vigor and vitality in her movements, the easy grace of the girl who is used to the outdoors.

Since she was a little girl she has been an excellent horsewoman. Horse back riding is her father's favorite diversion, and she has been accustomed for years to accompany him on his jaunts. Both father and daughter are active members of the Indiana Hunt Club.

She is also an enthusiastic golfer—and not only enthusiastic, but talented. She herself says, "When I hit 'em they travel."

She was graduated from Goucher College, in Baltimore, in 1922. For a number of years she has been prominent in the affairs of the United Presbyterian church here, and is now superintendent of the Junior Missionary Society of that church.

Making a home for her father, being a comrade to him and looking after him generally are her chief interests in life.

'WHY I ELOPED WITH FRENCH BARON AND HOW I MET DISILLUSIONMENT'

"Drunken Kiss Killed New Romance," Says Countess Olga Orloff

IN the first installment of her amazing confessions, published in this newspaper last week, Countess Olga Orloff, one time beauty at the court of Czar Nicholas of Russia and toast of European capitals, told of her loveless marriage to Count Alexis Orloff, commander of one of the Czar's regiments, and how, determined to experience real love, she began an intrigue with the handsome French diplomat, Baron Georges d'Iver. In today's installment she tells how her husband, by his despicable affairs with other women and his insane jealousy, hastened her elopement with D'Iver. How she became disillusioned after her madcap flight is one of the dramatic features of the sensational romances into which her first misstep plunged her.

By Countess Olga Orloff

One-Time Beauty at the Court of the Czar.

GRADUALLY the winter months of gay social functions drew to a close. Every one in the Russian nobility was retreating to the mountains and the shore. I was expecting a child in a few months and I was restless and ill at ease.

Baron Georges d'Iver had made several trips to Moscow, and we had become great friends. He stimulated my mind and made me eager to be in the midst of diplomatic circles, but I also wanted the lover, and that he had made no attempt to be.

My husband was becoming fairly unbearable. I felt smothered and stifled. He demanded to know every thought, every secret, every act of my life, and to me he gave of his life only that which he thought would please me at times; at other times he would taunt and humiliate me.

My Husband's Falseness

An enemy of mine, Ilaska Ivaneff, a court declasse, was seen nightly at cafes with my husband, and after spending an evening with her he would come home raving jealously and making wild, untrue statements. Yes, for him it was quite all right to be seen with women, but his wife must be the caged bird. Little did he know of my plans!

Beautiful Countess Olga Orloff, as she appeared at the Czar's palace in one of her long, sweeping court gowns

In truth, I was biding my time until my child would come; then I knew I would leave him. But in the meantime, the days and weeks seemed endless, with only books and letters from the baron as companions.

Then one day a note came from the baron. He would come to see me that afternoon and asked that I be alone. After reading this note, I determined that today he must speak of his love and plan for our future.

I Captivate the Baron

That afternoon, as I entered the quiet living room, I saw the baron standing by the fireplace. He seemed imbedded in thought. It infuriated me and words rashly flew to my lips.

"Baron, you are eternally meditating, for all the world like some ancient philosopher! Haven't you a spark of fire? At your time in life you should be flirting and falling in love."

He did not speak and I went on, "Still silent? Now, be a man smile, at least! You are not an Arctic seal."

Then quite suddenly I felt his hand upon my shoulders and he swept me into his arms. I thrilled as he exclaimed:—

"I love you, that's the worst of it! Women like you are always loved and the damnable part of it is that no man will ever possess you completely! There's something about you that is elusive. You are the kind that inspires confidence in a man, then—just as he thinks he possesses you—you disappear like a soap bubble."

Yes, he had spoken the truth!

"Ah, mon ami, be gay, live and love—one can always be the philosopher," I whispered, and my smile made him mine.

In hurried phrases, clinging together, we planned. Two months later I was to join him in Paris. I was to be the center of diplomatic circles and soirees. I was to meet and confer with the world's financiers. For the first time, a woman was wringing from Georges d'Iver diplomatic secrets which he had sworn woman would never know. Rash promises were made, and in my mad caprice I likened myself to a second Madame de Sevigne.

Several weeks later everything was in readiness for me to elope and join the baron. I was waiting for my husband's departure on a business trip. He was thoroughly unhappy and dissatisfied. I had given him a daughter instead of a son. He was making it public talk that he was a martyr to a whimsical wife, who had taken to books and papers, deserting her child for days at a time.

Yes, the last was true. I was fond of my little Ilia, but a mother's love, I must confess, was not awakened. I was only seventeen and, like my grandmother, I was searching for life and experience.

Little Ilia was left in the care of capable nurses, and at last my fourteen trunks, two maids and I were installed on the train bound for Paris.

I was as content as I had ever been, and for a few moments I took stock of myself. How long would I be happy with Georges? The thought that he was to be the great lover of my life never entered my head.

He stimulated my mind, my wits; but he did not inflame my erotic imagination. He was only to be the man who would open the door of experience for me.

In Paris everything was waiting for me. Georges had secured a town house of exquisite elegance; a country chateau with bridle path, fine racing stables, swimming pools and golf course. And I was given carte blanche to the finest modistes and jewelers.

The first evening we dined at home informally, as Georges called it.

There were forty guests of the sporting class, the women particularly of the demi-mondaine class. Worst of all, they were murderers of the French language. The party was a success as far as service, food, exquisite gowns and jewels were concerned, but I was bitterly disappointed.

I found none of the intellectual men and women, the clever repartee and political discussions that I had expected. In reality, there seemed only wild love scenes between drunken men and vulgar women.

As a surprise of the evening the Baron presented me with a priceless gem, an emerald of five carats. As he fastened the necklace with its wonderful pendant about my neck he seemed to gloat over me with an air of possession that made me cringe. Had he so soon forgotten his own remark, that no man should ever utterly possess me?

I Begin to Loathe Georges

Georges drank entirely too much, told stories a little too vulgar, and offered 5,000 francs to the most beautiful woman who would kiss him publicly.

In those days 5,000 francs meant something, and, needless to say, he had plenty of applicants. But he scorned them all and turned in my direction and shouted:—

"There is only one woman who can win the 5,000, and in her veins runs the blood of old Russia."

Oh, I cringed back in my chair as I heard those words. The vulgarity and coarseness of the whole affair made me ill. And as he neared my side I fairly hissed under my breath:—

"Is this a slave market, where women are bartered and sold?"

Liquor had the upper hand of him. I saw this immediately, and as he roughly caught my arm I determined to go through with the scene as though I liked it. I couldn't bear the pity of these ill-bred people.

How I Evaded His Kisses

As he dragged me by the arm before the throng of guests, I laughed and gallantly swallowed my tears of wounded pride. Ah, yes, my hollow laughter fairly rang through the room. He kissed me once and as he was about to embrace me a second time, I exclaimed:—

"But monsieur forgets that he bartered for one kiss only."

A clamorous applause went up among the guests and Georges, drunk as he was, must have sensed something from the tone of my words, for he loosened his hold upon me and whispered:—

"You are far too clever for a woman. You have a man's grit and daring."

As an answer I laughed bitterly and walked away.

It was 5 o'clock when our guests departed. I hastened to my room and locked my door. I was a bit too overwrought and fatigued to listen to George's intoxicated love making.

The memory of that humiliation I had endured before our vulgar guests haunted and tortured me. Yes, I wanted life and experience, but I did not mean to suffer such insults. It is granted that we of the nobility were doing the same things as these women of the demi-mondaine class, but we congratulated ourselves on the fact that we did them to amuse ourselves, not as a means of livelihood.

The next day the baron came to me and asked my pardon. It was done so cleverly that I really thought he meant it. As a reward for his repentance—for you know it usually takes a big character to humiliate itself and ask forgiveness, though with him, I later learned, it was only a matter of rhetoric—I agreed to go to Mademoiselle Carret's midnight party.

(Next week I shall tell of my meeting Jacques, the "Champagne King," and of my mad, consuming love for Henri D'Orleans, to whom Jacques introduced me.)

MILLION GOLFERS FOR NEW YORK IN FIVE YEARS, SAYS BARROW

Game's Popularity Is Very Largely Due to President of 'Mets'

By Archie MacMillan

New York, Saturday

WITH the new golf season about to burst forth in full bloom, it is estimated by H. Y. Barrow, president of the Metropolitan Golf Association, that the links in this district, public and private, will draw one-quarter of a million players before the chilly winds of October curtail activities. The charm of this game has become so widespread and its popularity among all classes has increased so rapidly that a total of one million adherents will probably be reached before five years have elapsed.

Mr. Barrow, a devotee of the game since he was ten years old, today, at 40, still plays whenever an opportunity presents itself, and also holds more executive positions in golfdom than any other man connected with the sport. At least fifteen major and minor posts are held by this indefatigable worker, who is also the vice-president of the Standard Statistics Company, Inc., of 47 West St.

Busy Organizer

Having a natural gift for systematizing things, the chain of responsibilities lies more lightly on his shoulders than one would at first imagine. The more paramount of his avocations, aside from the Metropolitan Golf presidency, are the chairmanship of the Metropolitan Golf Service Bureau, captaincy of the Leslie Cup team, secretaryship of the Baltusrol Golf Club, chairmanship of the greens committee of the Morris County Golf Club and memberships in the United States Golf Association Championship Committee and the executive committee of the United States Golf Association's greens section. A membership in the executive committee of the New Jersey State Golf Association also requires considerable work.

This being his second term as Metropolitan Golf president, Barrow has been careful to obtain the services of the most competent people obtainable to increase the efficiency of his administration, and attributes much of his success to their cooperation.

His Favorite Sport

In his younger days Barrow participated in most of the other sports. He tried boxing, football and running at different intervals, but always reverted to the old Scotch game as the most pleasant and satisfying of all. In amateur boxing he was far from ordinary, and reached the semi-final round of the national championship tournament of the A. A. U. at Mechanics Hall, Boston, in 1906, while competing in the 115-pound division.

"Golf is more of an obsession than a game," said Barrow. "The fascination first caught hold of me at the Madison Golf Club in New Jersey in 1895. My grandfather, Judge Yeaman, one of the founders of the club, like myself, found the game irresistible." Judge Yeaman, by the way, was American ambassador to Denmark under the Lincoln administration and well known in the diplomatic circles of his time.

Recovering from Typhoid

A chat with Barrow carries with it the conviction that golf is one of our greatest health-building sports. This winter he was laid low with typhoid fever, but will soon regain his lost strength, activity on the links being both physically and mentally stimulating.

As a promoter of good fellowship, golf has but few equals. This, Barrow avers, is one of the main allurements of the pastime. Unlike tennis, where opponents are separated by a net, the golf players are in communication virtually all the way round the course and good-natured rivalry is much more apt to ensue than deep-seated hostility.

Barrow modestly admits that he is merely a scrub golfer and has no fancy notions of becoming an expert. Quite a few trophies and medals have been awarded the local leader, but the possession of these baubles does not in any way engender a belief that he stands out head and shoulders above his contemporaries.

"To be an expert," Barrow commented, "you have to practice continually. The slightest lapse in inactivity will cause loss of form, hence it is hard for any one but a professional, or an amateur with a great deal of time on his hands, to attain perfection.

Benefits of Golf

"But golf is not one of those games in which anything but extraordinary skill precludes enjoyment. The scrub enjoys his friendly tilt just as keenly as the most exalted champion. One does not have to look shamefaced if his neighbor or grocer trims him on the links. It's all in fun and a display of resentment or chagrin is distinctly unethical. Perhaps one reason for that is that the game does not call for great speed, and the fiery, high-strung individual who is always bubbling over will find it of invaluable aid in enabling him to control that headlong tendency to rush madly around in circles."

Since being born in New York city on May 12, 1885, Barrow has moved around quite a bit, the golf mania generally going with him. He almost lost it when engaged in a five year Western ranching venture. On purchasing the broncho-busting ranch in question Barrow decided that he had shaken the effete East and its attendant golf shackles off his feet for good, but ranching he finally decided was a "strong-back, weak-headed game" and quit. The pleasant illusion of heroic cowboys and courageous cowgirls created by motion pictures proved, in reality, to be barely more spine-shattering than golf and far less intriguing.

Barrow subsequently romped back East and decided to be an inveterate golfer to the bitter end.

The Metropolitan district has one powerful representative on the Walker cup team which sailed for England on April 5th in Jesse Sweetser of Mount Vernon, a former national champion. In the past Walter J. Travis of Long Island did much to uphold Father Knickerbocker's prestige in the golf world. He won the British amateur championship in 1904. Although born in Australia, Travis was fully entitled to carry the colors of this city in international competition as he was initiated into the game here when 35 years old.

Although Bobby Jones of Atlanta, Ga., is expected to accomplish more than any other member of the Walker team, local enthusiasts are pulling hard for Sweetser and confidently expect him to come through with colors flying.

WILL ROGERS: IF YOU CAN'T CHARLESTON YOUR TEETH MAY BE BAD

e two big medical problems that country nowadays is Face re- ing and Teeth Removing. Both e adornments in the old days thought to have been put there ently. tell you, ... Jury is about to find you guilty of Murder and you are to be hung Tuesday."

Finally you say, "What's the matter, Doctor, does she need filling pretty bad?"

"Filling? Oh that one is nothing! It just needs a couple of fillings, and a hanging bridge and a little interior riveting. It's nothing at all. It's those others. You have got some bad Babies in there. I think though by proper work and by getting them in time like this I can save around, Oh about 60 per cent of them. My but you are lucky coming here to me when you did."

"Why Doc, there is nothing the matter with any of the others. That is the only one has hurt me in years. It started a long time ago with just a little hole, and I kept feeling in there with my tongue and have just gradually wore it bigger and bigger. Funny how your tongue can wear out your teeth ain't it?"

"Well, I wouldn't advise you wrong. Here is a mirror. Look at them yourself."

Well of course they look queer to you because you never saw them in your life before with all this series of mirrors. Even if all of them are in their right places they look sorter out of joint to you.

"I will just take out a couple of these big ones and that will give me more room to work around that little one. There is some little gold fillings in there that will have to be taken out. They are not wearing that any more. Then the work is beginning to show bad anyway."

"I know, Doc, but they never have caused me any trouble. They was put in there years ago by a little small town Dentist, and I thought they were fine."

"Why, you won't go a week. They are just liable to start bothering you tonight. It's getting teeth in time that is the big thing today. Now I can get these all fixed up and you come in here say about every other Thursday and you will see that you will have very little trouble with your teeth."

"But I haven't had any up to this one. But if you think it's best, why go ahead."

And he starts in. That is the start, not only of him digging into you, but you digging into the little monthly saving account that you had been trying to lay by for a larger tube set. But this is just the start of it. Now they have the regular Doctors working with them. Maybe you have had rheumatism or a bowed tendon, or the black leg, or something, and your Doctor has been working on you for perhaps years. Why he will say, "Let me have a look at those teeth."

"Yes I have thought so a long time, but I wanted to wait to be sure. They have got to come out of there."

"What's got to come out Doc?"

"Why, those teeth. They are what is causing you to have dandruff. But I am going to do it slowly. At first I am only going to have you take out the first row in the upper balcony. I will give you a card to the man who will do it. Then you come back to me and I will be able to start to curing you of that Asthma that has been bothering you so long. I am going to have those Ex-Rayed first, and see just which ones are the worst."

Well, you go then to an Ex-Ray Guy. The Doctor sends over a Blue print of the ones he wants "stills" made of. He has a thing that shoots right through you and shows any bad spots. It should be compulsory before marriage and not before teeth pulling. Then you could tell if either of you had a kind of a faulty heart, and it was maybe going to give out caring for the other. Well, they get the Scenics of the Bi-cuspids and if it shows a dark spot away at the back! (It may be the brass collar button on the back of your shirt, or it may be a fly speck on the film). But at any rate it's too late to call for a change of venue. Those teeth that were unfortunate enough not to photograph well are coming out of there. Just think, we have had, and have, Presidents that don't photograph well. But we don't pull 'em out of office for it. But a tooth, if it's just some Corn Likker lodged down in there and happens to photograph like bran mash, why out the tooth comes. He explains to you, "See that small dark speck. Well, that is on a nerve that goes directly to the Madull Oblong Gotto, and it has a side line that runs right through the Appendix." So the Ex-Ray bird gets his cut out of the savings. The man that's sent you there gets his. The fellow that pulled 'em out gets his. No dentist pulls your teeth any more. That's a separate branch altogether. All he requires is a strong arm, two nurses, no conscience, some gas, or a hammer. Then the Apendix Guy gets his. That is also a side line or assesory, to the medical highwaymen's profession. In other words, they are making four fees where only one grew before. There is four Industrys flourishing off the one dark spot.

A Broken leg is generally traceable to a cloudy molar. Gunshot wound from an unreasonable husband is traceable to a faulty wisdom tooth. Water on the knee? They take out a tooth and drain that off. They remove the eye teeth to prevent blindness, and if you are blind they remove them to restore sight. Another great gag with them now is, "I don't know that it is your teeth that is causing you trouble, but we will just take them out, and if that don't cure it, why of course you will be out nothing but your teeth. It's worth the trial. That might just be accidentally what is the matter with you."

The best joke I know of that you could play on a modern Doctor would be to go to a Dentist first and have every tooth pulled out, and then go to the Doctor and say "Doctor those fallen arches of mine are killing me. What can I do?"

He would say, "Let me see those teeth of yours, that is just about what is causing the trouble. Then when he looked there wouldn't be any teeth. You would have a big laugh on him. It's funny. Babies without teeth at all are sick, and old people that haven't got any at all die. So I don't know how these Doctors get away with this laying everything onto the teeth.

There are two things that seem like got started wrong in life. One was the Constitution of the United States. The men that layed that out didn't seem to know what we needed, and so these modern smarter men have been all these years trying to improve it and get it fixed up properly. And the other thing was teeth. 'It seems the Lord when He layed out our original teeth didn't know much about teeth, so He just put those we have in temporarily till the Doctors could come along and get 'em out or get 'em remodeled so they amounted to something.

If you can't Charleston, I know it's your teeth, so get 'em out of there at once.

In his appearance there is something of the languidness which frequently infilters his writings. He is but 31 and already has achieved nine volumes, the best known of which are "Chrome Yellow," "Antic Hay" and "Mortal Coils."

His latest work, "Two of Three Graces," (Doran), concern one Grace Peddle and her metamorphoses. It is a gently satirical study of a number of bores, done with a considerable amount of pity.

There is, in Ben Hecht's "Count Bruga," (Boni, Liveright) only high comedy. Although Hecht takes great pains to set forth that Bruga is a purely fictional creation, the caricature is patently that of a certain young ex-Chicago poet, now come to New York where he sits sneering in a corner of Poetry Club meetings puffing at a corncob pipe.

And such astounding characters as Hecht has placed in this rollicking, bawdy book! A suave magician who is a veritable devil, another worker of magic, the vagabond poet with his acid commentaries, the alluring assistant to the magician—Amelia by name—and any number of the strangest people and the most amusing ever brought together between covers. The plot runs the gamut of weird events from catalepsy to cabala. As is the custom with Hecht it is impudent and mildly propographic.

Floyd Dell

Floyd Dell, surrounded by his family and the hills back of Croton-on-the-Hudson wistfully recalls the "days when" in his book, 'Love in Greenwich Village' (Doran). But why the misleading title? This suggests another of the gosh-awful "free love, artists-and-models" things of which there have been so many. No place has been more maligned than Greenwich Village, and no one has tinted at least one phase of its romantic history better than Dell in his series of sketches and tales and verses.

Dell's Village is the Village of "just before the war" when Polly ruled as queen of the poet's kitchen and a certain schoolma'am started an influx of writers, painters, radicals and whatnot into the garrets and stables. But Dell, having gone away, married, grown up and had children, sings a sad swan song. He tells of "the passing of the village." The Dell period did not spell the end of the Village. Dell has grown older and new youngsters have come in to live their romance and write and paint. Times have changed—and conditions; that's all.

Author Sees New Day's Dawn In Southern States

BY THE BOOK SURVEY

The sun is certainly shining bright on "the old Kentucky home" these days.

And its uncompromising glare

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle

seems slowly to lift the fog long lying over that section south of the Mason-Dixon line.

It seems that the "old home ain't what it used to be."

A great liberal wave sweeps over it; economic changes occur with each tearing off of a calendar leaf: its literature no longer tastes of mint juleps and its "colonels, sah" are buried with James Lane Allen and his particular school.

Briefly, the country doesn't know what's been going on down there. So up steps one Edwin Mims, born in Arkansas, but educated in Tennessee, who has spent some 30 years studying the South, and presents a book entitled, "The Advancing South" (Doubleday, Page). It is a memorandum of the status of Southern culture at the present moment.

The Northerner, even though he seems to prefer discovering quaint places in Southern France to surveying his own soil, must have indeed been blind did he not realize that the old order is changing.

Just about a year ago Susan Glaspell brought forth a vividly realistic novel, "Barren Ground," in which "realism crossed the Mason-Dixie." More recently came T. S. Stribling's "Teeftallow," and Edith Kelley's "Weeds," and other striking examples of how the literary folk of the Southland were mercilessly making the worm to turn. In such books have been exposed the drabnesses, but Mims reveals the actual developments.

In any such volume one of the chief points of stress must be the emmigration of vast hordes of negroes from the south to the north.

The effect of such a migration has been to force a readjustment. It left the South facing a labor problem and in this situation may lie the "salvation"—we leave to individual debate just what constitutes a section's salvation.

At any rate this is what seems to have prompted the Mims' opus.

He deals, largely, with industrial expansion and gives considerable space to individual "success tales." He recites fincidents of bold newspaper crusades against Ku Kluxism; he shows how liberal thought in church and college have been under way; he tells of the rise of liberalism in wide areas. In brief, it is the other side of the picture.

It challenges one to "go South, young man," and find out what's coming off in the land of cotton.

Conan Doyle returns to fiction after a long absence.

But this is not the Doyle of "The White Company," or the engaging "Sherlock Holmes." It is the Doyle of the spiritualistic seances, trailing astral clouds behind him. His book is "The Land of Mist" (Doran), and it should prove of particular interest to those who follow the psychic paths.

No writing so tinctured with personal beliefs and mysticisms can be classified as a good novel. It can be interesting—which, somehow, this didn't seem to us to be at times—but it can rarely, if ever, be art.

Don't underestimate this Doyle—he wrote one of the fine romances when he penned "The White Company," but it seems to us he has done little since. And so long as his mind lies in a hazy mid-world he is not likely to do anything of importance. If Doyle wishes to put forth his mystical beliefs, it would be far better did he stick to straight treatise.

LOOKING LIKE A BILLION DOLLARS

Why did John D. Rockefeller, Sr., and Henry Ford grow up to be two of the world's successful business men instead of thugs, crooks or bandits?

Dr. Carleton Simon finds the answer in their faces, basing the diagnosis on his long experience in the New York police department.

The innate mental forces which go far toward molding men's careers almost unfailingly develop their impress on the facial appearance.

BY DR. CARLETON SIMON
Noted New York Criminologist

New York, June 12.—There are marked resemblances in the faces of Henry Ford and John D. Rockefeller, Sr., extending to nearly all features.

In this, and the fact they are two of the world's most successful business men there is more than mere coincidence. The accuracy with which the facial features reflect character and mentality clearly is shown.

The resemblances between the two faces are apparent to even the casual observer. Each man has a high forehead. The set and contour of the ears are similar. The eyes are akin in several respects. Each man has ridges between the eyes, and frontal nasal wrinkles angling to the corners of the mouth.

Their chins, measuring from the lower lip, are of practically the same length. The jaws and cheekbones are of closely related patterns.

And why didn't Ford and Rockefeller turn to burglary or bank robbery as a profession?

In each case the two sides of the face are almost perfectly symmetrical. This characteristic is conspicuously lacking in the usual criminal types. The eyes of each are on an exact plane with each other. Seldom is this true of the instinctive crook—the crook whose criminal traits are inborn.

Here lies the broadest departure of the Ford and Rockefeller faces from those which mark the thief and the bandit.

The symmetry of feature and of muscular distribution in both countenances is indicative in very unusual degree that both lobes of the brain are active.

It is a peculiar fact that the average individual uses only one lobe of the brain for his thinking. The other is kept in reserve, as it were. It is my theory that geniuses have the ability unconsciously to use both lobes. They develop a sort of stereoscopic brain, in which the two lobes are perfectly harnessed and act in harmony.

Accurate thought is the result.

In the physiognomy of the instinctive criminal we almost invariably find the muscles of one side of the face more flaccid and less active than the other, as the direct result of nervous influences which emanate from an improperly functioning brain.

The criminal's face, in other words, is unbalanced. The balance of the Ford and Rockefeller faces scarcely could be improved upon.

To one "fed up" on studying the physiognomy of criminal types, these faces are a treat. In neither is there to be found a single mark of lack of self-control or dishonesty of purpose.

Their high foreheads denote intellect of superior caliber.

Ridges and wrinkles between the eyes reveal concentration of purpose.

The frontal nasal wrinkles help identify the man who is brilliantly successful.

Determination is evinced by compressed lips.

Both countenances show in their texture an extreme sensitiveness to mental impressions.

The Rockefeller face is sympathetic and benign to a greater degree than that of Ford. Somewhat more emotional control also is indicated for Rockefeller. From both faces, all signs of coarseness are lacking.

Their features dovetail strikingly with their careers.

Radio Waves Split Engineers Discover

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., June 12.—More definite information as to how radio waves travel has been gained from a series of observations made at the laboratories of station WGY here.

From statics collected by the radio wave splits up into a ground wave and another that passes into their air about 100 miles up.

Fans listening in to WGY within a distance of 200 miles, hear the station by means of the ground wave. Father than this fans tune in on the air wave, say the engineers.

WIDE hats have usually been of the "garden" variety. But now, with the pendulum of fashion swinging back to the mode of the wide-brimmed hat, the new models are introduced with tailored trimming.

A wide milan hat, in bright color, is adorned with a band of silver ribbon and a rhinestone buckle as illustrated above. The graceful line of the brim is its beauty and the excellence of its quality makes this hat a perfect accessory to a simple, tailored silk frock.

Crepe silk is used effectively to trim another of the wide tailored hats. The original model is done in black and white although any number of decorative color schemes can be followed. The crown was of white straw with a brim of black bengaline and a rhinestone ornament lending its lustre to the conservative color combination. Here too, it is the graceful sloping of the dark crepe silk over the back of the crown and its joining of the silk-covered brim which makes for the effectiveness of this model.

Feather trimming sounds frilly. But feather trimming this season is tailored to a severity in keeping with the trim lines of the new hats and frocks. A charming hat proves the attractiveness of this sort of adornment when the feathers are chosen of various colors. Like the small feathers which perked at the sides of sports hats earlier in the season, a military row of these colorful little feathers stand erect around the side of the crown. Two tucks are taken in the straw crown at the rear and these lend a more becoming line affording a gentle slope. Worn with a tailored suit or with a tailored silk frock, this type of hat is ideal for summer wear in town or for travel.

A more elaborate feather trimming is seen when flat heckle pads are posed around the crown. Two colors are combined to emphasize the outline of these feather motifs and the edge of the brim is slightly rolled over.

A band of velvet ribbon and a spray of glycerin ostrich makes the trimming at the side of a wide-brimmed hemp hat. This model, a little more formal, is appropriate with a printed chiffon frock.

The return of the wide hat has brought about all sorts of interesting fashion features. Polished ribbon, long forgotten by smart designers, is seen again. A particularly attractive wide hat of black milan has a band of polished black ribbon around the crown and four tabs of the ribbon on one side. Worn with any summer frock this hat forms a charming frame for the features. Dark hats are being worn with light frocks, and they are very becoming when one can boast a clear, fine complexion.

Navy blue has had an unprecedented popularity this season. It began its new vogue by being combined with bright red, grosgrain ribbon, then taking white as its color affinity when red seemed a bit warm. Navy blue, trimmed with navy blue, is a very smart combination.

Grey and tan are two popular shades. Horsehair, in a deep shade of tan, is a splendid choice for a summer hat. This color can be worn with almost any other shade, and the transparent brim reflects the tint to make it appear like a neutral sunlight. Grey, where this color is becoming, is another excellent selection. Keep all trimmings tailored for daytime wear. Colorful verdure in silk and velvet should be reserved for the hat worn to more formal affairs such as the restaurant dinner.

Select Your Wide Hat With Care

Wide-brimmed hats come back to vogue with a new interest. They, too, have fallen victims to the lure of tailored beauty and show trimmings in various tailored styles. There is a simplicity of line to these new large hats which makes them generally becoming. One should be careful not to select a hat too wide for one's height or else the grace of the costume will be lost!
