Voters get fourth chance to fund jail

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Amid predictions of a below-average turnout, Midland County voters will decide Saturday whether to approve or strike down funding for a $3.8 million downtown jail — the fourth such election held in as many years.

Supporters of the plan believe a facility such as that proposed would provide adequate space for inmates through the year 2000 and operate at virtually no cost to taxpayers.

Opponents argue that the county does not need two separate jails both located in downtown Midland. They also worry that the county might not be able to fill the second jail even though it has informal agreements with other law enforcement agencies to lease space within the proposed complex.

At least three other jail proposals have evolved since the county fell under an April 1985 Texas Jail Standards Commission remedial order because it neglected to equip the fifth-floor courthouse jail with adequate cell lighting, exercise area, sunlight and sound-and-sight separation for male and female prisoners.

The commission limited the inmate population to 85 percent of capacity — 72 prisoners — to allow for the classification of prisoners in single and multi-occupancy cells according to sex, inmate temperaments, status as misdemeanor or felony offenders and seriousness of crimes charged against inmates or the seriousness of crimes for which they have been charged.

County commissioners begrudgingly followed through on the remedial order last year to correct the violations after voters in 1985 rejected a $10 million bond election to build a new jail east of town.

Instead, voters authorized the county to spend $1.5 million to renovate the existing jail, located on the fifth floor of the Midland County Courthouse.

Bubonic plague outbreak may cover half of Basin

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Bubonic plague — the "black death" of the Middle Ages — among West Texas rodents and rabbits is more common than previously suspected and covers virtually half the Permian Basin, a state health official said today.

To keep the disease from spreading to humans, TDH officials are warning both urban and rural residents of a nine-county area to keep their pets indoors and institute a twice weekly flea-powder sprinkling program.

Affected counties for the warning include Midland, Ector, Howard, Martin, Upton, Crane, Glasscock, Dawson, and Borden counties, said Dr. Evret C. Newman, TDH regional veterinarian.

Newman was particularly concerned that humans who may contract the plague won't seek prompt medical help because initial symptoms are similar to those of flu.

"If people come up with some flea bites and two to six days later start feeling bad, get to a physician," he advised.

After the disease reaches it's second stage of symptoms — when lymph glands at the groin, armpits and neck can swell to the size of oranges or grapefruits — death may follow within a week.

Since a press conference in Midland last Thursday, the TDH has received at least 200 calls reporting dead pack rats, cotton rats and rabbits in the counties, the veterinarian said.

Fat substitutes now must woo public's tastes

By PETER COY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Two companies have achieved scientific triumphs by creating appetizing substitutes for fat, but they still must win the battle for the hearts, minds and stomachs of the American public.

NutraSweet Co. on Wednesday unveiled the fat substitute Simplesse and emphasized that it was all-natural, made of ground-up protein from fresh egg whites or milk.

The biggest drawback of Simplesse is that it cannot be used in frying or most kinds of baking because it congeals the same way as egg whites when heated. Heating it is harmless, but unappetizing.

Simplesse would allow calorie reductions in food servings ranging from 28 percent for yogurt to 78 percent for butter, the company said.

For instance, four ounces of super premium ice cream traditionally has 283 calories, but only 130 with Simplesse, it said. One tablespoon of butter or margarine drops from 36 calories to eight when made with Simplesse, and an ounce of cream cheese containing 99 calories has 45 calories with the fat substitute, it said.

Products using Simplesse could reach the market within 12 to 18 months, Robert Shapiro, NutraSweet's chairman and chief executive, told Wednesday's crowded news conference.

Company executives faced questioning from reporters who wanted to know why it had not received approval of the Food and Drug Administration. Simplesse does not require FDA approval because it is ordinary protein, they replied. It has not been chemically altered, only changed in size and shape to give it the feeling of fat.

Procter & Gamble Co. has encountered the same difficulties in promoting olestra, its own fat substitute, which was announced last May. Olestra must clear the hurdle of FDA approval because it is a synthetic substance, made of ordinary sugar and fatty oils.

Polygamist injured, officer killed as standoff ends

MARION, Utah (AP) — A 13-day standoff between a polygamist clan and police ended today in gunfire, and one police officer was killed and the leader of the clan was seriously wounded, officials said.

None of the children inside the compound were wounded, officials said.

Addam Swapp, 27, the leader of the clan, was in critical condition with two gunshot wounds to the arm and chest, said Wayne Terry, administrator of the Warsatch County Hospital in Heber City, about 20 miles south of here.

One police officer was reported dead of a gunshot wound upon arrival at the University of Utah Medical Center in Salt Lake City, spokesman Ken Johnson said.

Swapp is the son-in-law of Vickie Singer, widow of slain polygamist John Singer, and married to two of her daughters.

The standoff came to an end after two Army armored personnel carriers drove into the group's compound and eight to 10 shots were heard.

"All the children are out of the house and they're all safe," said Deputy Director of Public Safety Doug Bodrero at the police command post. He declined to provide further details.

After two groups of about five people each left the main log house of the compound, a van belonging to the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms pulled into the driveway of the compound.

Three people entered the house, while two others waited outside. Earlier, police said they believed there were explosives inside the log house.

Shortly afterward, two groups of about five people each filed out of the house, with their arms raised. Both groups included children, and the second group included a man in a wheelchair, presumably the 21-year-old disabled son of Vickie Singer.

At the same time, two ambulances and a helicopter, carrying one person strapped to a gurney, raced from the compound.

The group of 15 people, including nine children, had been holed up in the compound since the Jan. 16 bombing of a Mormon chapel.

Earlier today, authorities had resumed blasting noise at the compound through loudspeakers. The equipment had replaced loudspeakers the clan destroyed Monday.

The noise marked the first resumption of the tactic which earlier had drawn criticism from child psychologists and others, who felt it was a hardship on the children in the compound.

Culver to take oath, join Texas Supreme Court

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Gov. Bill Clements' office of appointments confirmed Wednesday that Barbara Culver, the 318th Judicial District Judge tapped for a Texas Supreme Court Justice slot, will take the oath of office at 2 p.m. Monday in Austin.

Culver said this morning she plans to leave for Austin Friday after finishing final business in the court she currently holds jurisdiction over.

"It's been a hectic 2½ weeks here trying to vacate this office," she said.

After the Monday swearing in ceremony, Culver plans to take part in a Tuesday meeting of justices to discuss pending cases.

"I think there are many cases pending that need my attention," she said. "Normally, each justice takes on one-ninth of the cases for consideration.

"I'm sure I'll have to start up pretty rapidly," she added.

A large contingent of Midlanders is planning to attend the ceremony, which is scheduled for the Supreme Court building in Austin, she said.

Meanwhile, the governor's appointments office is paring down the list of possible candidates to fill the 318th District Court bench Culver is vacating.

A new judge for the seat could be appointed by the middle of next week, James Huffines, Clements' director of government appointments said Wednesday.

The governor is basing his decision on several criteria, including qualifications, track record, philosophy, and electability, said the appointment director.

"We're going to appoint a conservative," said Huffines. "The people of Midland will be very pleased with whoever the governor selects. I know who's on the short, short list, and they're very capable individuals.

"We at one time or another have considered about six names," he said, adding that releasing which Midlanders have made the short list "wouldn't be appropriate."

Several local attorneys have contacted the governor's office stating an interest in replacing Culver.

They include Dean Rucker, the head of the county Republican Party, Municipal Court Judge Robin Smith, former Midland District Attorney Vern Martin and Midland attorney Matt Blair.

Targets 'insulted' by FBI probe of policies' opponents

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government documents outline a six-year FBI campaign of domestic surveillance against opponents of the Reagan administration's Central America policies, and a theology professor who was among the targets says he is "insulted, offended and perplexed."

"I have grave reservations about the U.S. policy in Central America, but I am not a terrorist," said Paul Knitter, a professor at Xavier University in Cincinnati.

The Center for Constitutional Rights, a New York-based lawyers group, on Wednesday released copies of government documents it obtained through the Freedom of Information Act outlining the FBI's domestic surveillance campaign.

The center said the documents it received showed that the FBI investigated hundreds of organizations and individuals, such as Knitter, opposed to the U.S. policy in Central America.

The FBI issued a statement saying it investigated one group opposed to U.S. involvement in Central America, but it was looking for "alleged criminal activity" and was not harassing critics of administration policy.

■ Related stories — 7A

But Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., chairman of the House subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights, said that when the FBI found no evidence of criminal activity, the investigation "took on a life of its own."

"We want the FBI to catch spies, terrorists and crooks and put them in jail, not keep political groups under surveillance, even ones that disagree with the president," Edwards said.

The Center for Constitutional rights released a list of more than 150 organizations named in the FBI files. Among them were the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in Atlanta; the Maryknoll Sisters in Chicago; the United Steel Workers Union, the United Auto Workers Union and the National Education Association, all in Cleveland; Walker Methodist Community Church in Minneapolis; and the Women's Rape Crisis Center in Norfolk, Va.

One of the documents released indicated that the FBI began investigating Knitter, who has made three trips to Nicaragua and given numerous talks to church and civic groups, after his name appeared in a 1984 article in the Cincinnati Enquirer.

NATION

Florida temperatures plunged below freezing for the second day in a row today, triggering frost and freeze warnings but raising little concern among fruit and vegetable growers.

Scattered snow showers fell over the Great Lakes overnight, and snow squall advisories were in effect for the lower lakes.

Early today, Florida temperatures ranged from 26 degrees in Jacksonville to 48 in Miami Beach.

"We're still watching the thermometer, but everything looks good," said Bernie Hamel, a spokesman for the Florida Fruit & Vegetable Association in Orlando.

Experts said the low temperatures of the past two nights will add color to fruit and make it less susceptible to cold damage if temperatures dip into the 20s later.

"Most groves will probably benefit from the cold snap because it will further help put trees into a semi-dormant condition," said Bobby McKown, executive vice president for Florida Citrus Mutual in Lakeland.

Temperatures dipped to the single digits and below zero in much of New England, and below-zero temperatures were recorded in northern Minnesota and western Wisconsin.

Today's forecast called for rain over the Northwest and continued snow showers along the lower Great Lakes.

High temperatures were expected to reach the single digits and teens over northern New England, the lower Great Lakes and Upper Michigan; the teens and 20s from the rest of New England to New Jersey, Pennsylvania, the upper Great Lakes and the upper Mississippi Valley; the 30s and 40s from Maryland across the Carolinas, the Ohio Valley, the Tennessee Valley, the central Mississippi Valley, the northern Plains, Nevada and the southern Rockies; the 60s across southern Florida; the 60s and 70s across Texas; the 70s from the desert Southwest through Southern California and the 50s and 60s in the rest of the nation.

73 seconds of silence honors Challenger

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA workers tempered their enthusiasm for a new Aug. 4 space shuttle launch date with a silent tribute to the seven Challenger astronauts who died two years ago today.

Engineers, technicians, secretaries and others streamed out of buildings; cafeteria lines and tour buses halted, and flags were lowered to half-staff at 11:38 a.m., the moment Challenger roared off launch pad 39B on Jan. 28, 1986.

For 73 seconds, the length of the fatal flight, all activity at Kennedy Space Center came to a standstill as individuals entertained their own private thoughts about the worst disaster in the history of space exploration.

Over a television circuit and a loudspeaker system, center director Forrest S. McCartney said: "As we make preparations to return the space shuttles to flight this year, it is appropriate to remember the men and women of the Challenger crew.

"Dick Scobee, Mike Smith, Ron McNair, Judy Resnik, Ellison Onizuka, Greg Jarvis and Christa McAuliffe lost their lives in the difficult task of learning about and stretching the abilities of humankind to work in space.

"Let us remember that the greatest tribute we can pay them will be the successful launch of STS-26 and the resumption of a regular flight schedule."

STS-26 is the name for the next shuttle flight, the 26th, to be flown by Discovery.

Students at Concord High School in Concord, N.H., paused for 73 seconds at the beginning of classes this morning to remember McAuliffe, the social studies teacher who was to have been the first private citizen in space.

"Everybody has their own, very silent way to remember and to rebuild themselves and that's the way it's been going," school Superintendent Mark Beauvais said Wednesday.

He said the low-key observance reflects how the community has tried to heal from the shuttle tragedy, respecting the privacy of McAuliffe's husband, Steven, 39; and children, Scott, 11; and Caroline, 7, who live in Concord.

"What we are dealing with now is the respect for the living, the three people who were closest to Christa," said Beauvais, who was in the bleachers at Cape Canaveral when Challenger blew up.

Following the brief ceremony at Kennedy Space Center, some workers returned to preparing Discovery for launching on the new launch date announced Wednesday by Rear Adm. Richard Truly, NASA's associate administrator for space flight. Others are working on Atlantis and Columbia for later flights.

Setting the date lifted the spirits of workers here who had been without a firm target since Dec. 29.

Firm chosen to build space memorial

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — A San Francisco architectural firm won the design award Wednesday for a national monument to the 14 U.S. astronauts who have died in space program-related accidents.

The $25,000 design award was presented to the firm of Holt Hinshaw Pfau Jones on the 21st anniversary of the Apollo I fire, which took the lives of three astronauts in 1967, and one day before the second anniversary of the Challenger tragedy, which left seven others dead in 1986.

"I think what we found was a very poetic use of technology," said architect Ralph Johnson, a member of the Astronauts Memorial Foundation's jury that awarded the prize.

The proposed $4 million memorial, which is expected to be completed at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida in the early 1990s, was chosen because of its unique marriage of poetry and technology.

The design, titled "Space Mirror," will use a highly polished slab of dark-gray-flannel colored granite to reflect the sky above the space center, while small mirrors hidden behind the granite reflector illuminate the names of the 14 astronauts who have died during the U.S. space program.

Cut into the slab of granite will be the names of Challenger Seven Commander Francis "Dick" Scobee and crewmates Michael Smith, Judith Resnik, Ellison Onizuka, Robert McNair, Gregory Jarvis and Christa McAuliffe, who were killed Jan. 28, 1986.

Other astronauts to be honored by the memorial are Apollo I crew members Virgil "Gus" Grissom, Edward White and Roger Chafee, who died Jan. 27, 1967; and Theodore Freeman, Clifton Williams, Charles Bassett and Elliot See, who died in training accidents.

The "Space Mirror" monument will be constructed using satellite-tracking technology so that it can follow the sun's movement. The result will be a moving tableau of 14 glowing names written across a reflected sky.

"We were trying to make the memorial the sky by bringing the sky down so we could work with it," said the firm's Wesley Jones. "It kind of all clicked when we thought of using the sky as the memorial."

The award gives the architectural firm exclusive rights to negotiate the design commission with the foundation, subject to approval of the design by NASA, over 1,535 proposals from across the country.

The award was made by the Astronauts Memorial Foundation, a non-profit foundation formed in February 1986 by Rep. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., and a group of Florida businessmen in the aftermath of the space shuttle Challenger tragedy.

Democrats draft rival Contra aid proposal

■ Related story — 6B

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has begun a personal lobbying campaign for $36 million in new aid to the rebels fighting Nicaragua's leftist government, but House Democrats are drafting their own rival proposal that leaves out any money for weapons.

The opposing plans were being pushed hard with a showdown House vote on the Reagan proposal just a week away. The outcome is crucial to the existence of the rebels, known as Contras, who would get $3.6 million in lethal aid under the Reagan proposal.

"It's now or never," said Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., a leader of pro-Contra forces in the House. "We cannot afford a defeat on this aid package."

Reagan held a series of meetings with undecided lawmakers on Wednesday, and more meetings were scheduled for today. The House will vote on the president's aid proposal on Feb. 3 and if it passes, the Senate will vote the next day.

"I didn't come to Washington to preside over the communization of Central America," Reagan said in a speech announcing the proposal.

With the Contras and the Sandinistas beginning direct cease-fire talks today in Costa Rica, Reagan said only continued support for the rebels will keep the negotiations going.

The Reagan package would give a total of $36.2 million to the rebels to last them from March 1, when current aid runs out, until the end of June.

Of the total, roughly $20 million would go for transportation of supplies to Contra troops in the field inside Nicaragua, and another $12 million or so would buy supplies such as food, clothing, medicine and communications gear.

The most controversial part is $3.6 million for ammunition and Redeye anti-aircraft missiles. That money would be held in escrow until March 31, when it would be up to Reagan to decide whether to release it to the rebels.

The decision would be based on whether a cease-fire is in place between the Contras and the Sandinista government, and whether the president believes the two sides have bargained in good faith. Reagan also promised to consult personally with the presidents of the region's four democracies — Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala — before letting the lethal aid flow.

A proposal announced Wednesday by the Contras calls for putting the military portion of the request in escrow for 30 days, with an early March deadline for an end to the six years of fighting.

A group of centrist Democrats, apparently with some support from House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, began drafting an alternative aid plan designed to keep the Contras alive without escalating the fighting, as they charged Reagan's plan would do.

VOTE

Once renovation is completed later this spring, the county will be able to use all 104 bunks.

Meanwhile, commissioners have worked independently on a plan to ask the local electorate to authorize construction of a $3.8 million, 192-bunk downtown detention center — the bond issue up for consderation Saturday.

County Commissioner Durward Wright has said the construction of additional jail space would meet the county's incarceration needs for the next 50 years or more.

Should voters authorize issuing the general obligation bonds, the yearly price tag on building the proposed facility would amount to $643,000, based on the present tax rate.

But over the long term, financial analysts report that revenues generated by county prisoner housing contractual agreements could nearly cover the cost of construction and operation.

The county has in hand informal committments from the City of Midland, other counties, the U.S. Bureau of Prisons, the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service and the U.S. Marshall Service to help fill the jail.

However, experts agree that the total projected revenue shortfall in the first year of operation would range from $456,191 to $771,441.

That translates to an advalorem tax levy for 1989 of 0.011 cents to 0.018 cents per $100 valuation, using 1987's assessed valuation of $4.2 billion.

In other words, a property owner whose home is valued at $50,000 would pay about $5.50 extra in taxes in 1989. However, that same property owner would pay only 50 cents more in taxes in 1990, should the committments come to pass.

Sheriff Gary Painter has said the county during renovation houses about 50 jail inmates per day. Another 34 detainees are being housed in nearby counties for the duration of the project.

He reported that the average cost of transferring prisoners because of the renovation was $223,350 in 1987. In addition, because of the remedial order, the county paid $141,049 for other prisoner transfers and housing.

The county spent $135,232 and $186,052 in 1985 and 1986 respectively for that same purpose, the sheriff reported.

Inaccuracies which allegedly appeared in two recent Reporter-Telegram advertisements have sparked a new round of opposition from Commissioner Scott Welch — the lone Commissioners Court dissenter on the new jail idea since it was first proposed.

The advertisement stated in part that Midland County will spend an estimated $8 million over the next 10 years housing prisoners in other counties should new space not be added.

In reality, the county would spend about $5.2 million to transfer and house prisoners over a 10-year period, according to the county's financial report prepared by First RepublicBank.

"I don't want to make a political issue out of this," Welch said. "But when there's actually wrong numbers being presented, people can't make up their minds."

Commissioner Guy McCrary said, "The ad should've read 'the next 13 years' instead of the next decade. The point is that this community will spend several million dollars of local taxes in the coming years if we don't address this problem. I'm sorry if there are those who are not concerned about that."

Welch had disagreed with the court's decision to forge ahead with a new jail facility and voted against calling Saturday's bond election.

He had argued that the renovations now underway can meet the county's needs until the local economy recovers and taxpayers can afford the expense.

The commissioner also had proposed that the court consider building its jail on the present courthouse site — to ensure that prisoners who are awaiting trial remain a few feet from the district courtrooms.

McCrary told the Reporter-Telegram earlier this month that the cost of building a jail on the present courthouse site is "absolutely prohibitive."

PLAGUE

Newman at the press conference had said that the outbreak was confined to an area between Midland and Stanton in Martin County.

Health officials during the press conference suspected the outbreak covered a wider area, but "the reason I didn't bring it up was that we didn't have all these reports," said Newman.

While Newman acknowledged that "this type of thing doesn't confine itself to a small area," health officials last week also suspected the outbreak was at "the tail end," he said.

The TDH first started receiving plague reports for the current outbreak last November, he said.

From that time until last Thursday, the office had received about 20 black death calls, he said.

While none of the animal specimens gathered from latest reports have yet to lead to positive black death identifications, "I'll be real, real surprised if they don't come back positive for plague," Newman said.

Reports now are "primarily rural," the veterinarian said. The outbreak "probably won't spread into actual cities," he added, but "this doesn't mean that people that live there aren't at risk."

Persons at greatest risk of contracting the disease include hunters and oilfield employees who work in brushy areas, he said. The disease generally is spread by infected fleas that bite animals or humans.

One Midland hunter, Trey Robbins, 32, said today he first started seeing dead rats and mice on a Glasscock County ranch last October, when the quail season began.

On the Powell Ranch, about 28 miles east of Midland, "You could stand in a part and see three or four just lying there," Robbins said.

"Here recently we've noticed a lot fewer rabbits there than there were a few months ago," he said. "We've been hunting around there for the last 20 years, and it's unlike anything we've ever seen before."

Newman said the outbreak likely has worsened because of a rat and mice population explosion this year.

The health department's main strategy in combating the disease is providing public information on prevention while the outbreak runs its course.

"As a public health official, I hate like hell to admit that," he said. "As far as the outbreak itself, there's not a lot we can do."

The outbreak's widespread nature makes quarantining areas of animals difficult, he said.

The health department could start spraying wide areas of rangeland with insecticide and set food traps that would kill infected animals, but the cost to the state would be "tremendous," he said.

The last human death from plague recorded in the Permian Basin came in February 1982, Newman said. An Ector County man died after receiving flea bites while hunting rabbits in the west part of that county.

In January 1984, a Winkler County man contracted the disease, but recovered, he said.

Future cities won't have traffic, trash problems

EDITOR'S NOTE: In a special 10-part series for the Associated Press, John Diebold, an internationally acknowledged authority in technology and management, predicts the future in letters to his 2-year-old daughter who will be 25 in the year 2010.

Looking to the future
— Part Nine —

By JOHN DIEBOLD

Dear Emma:

Did you know that, at the end of the last century, futurists predicted the demise of cities? They believed that the noise and filth would make cities unbearable to live in, and that it would worsen every year. It was thought that horses would continue to dirty the streets, and that the human traffic would never let up.

Then, along came the horseless carriage, followed by motorized street cleaners and garbage trucks. And perhaps, Emma, the cities of your day will know none of the pollution and traffic that troubles the cities of my era.

I believe your streets and parks should be groomed by diligent robots, cleaning up after dogs and clearing human-made garbage. No trash barrels or dumpsters will mar the view. Your home will be connected to a vast underground trash removal system, with conveyor belts that carry refuse to treatment plants.

Computers will monitor the wear and stress on roads and bridges, so that maintenance is properly scheduled and prioritized. Streets will "tell" people about pot holes, and dispatch robot-assisted crews to do the repairs.

In fact, much of the quality of your life will depend on the quality of the services your community provides. The trend toward private-sector management of public services — from street cleaning to health services to the running of cities — will no doubt be a matter of continuing controversy, just as it is today.

On the one hand, privately operated bullet trains, commuter aircraft, and pollution-free city buses will have full public approval because they will be clean, quiet and prompt, while fares will be low: competition will keep transportation carriers on their toes.

Health care providers, a mix of public and private companies, will stress disease prevention and public awareness. Jails will be patrolled by robot guards, sparing humans from this dangerous task — private-sector management of public services will spur the use of technology.

But when public schools in some areas are run by corporations, serious ethical questions will be raised. To their credit, corporations will bring sophisticated technology to the school systems at a low cost. But critics will argue that children in these schools are being groomed to become "ideal employees" — conformists, rather than free thinkers.

Maintaining individualism will be a big issue for your generation, Emma.

On the one hand, the requirements of the community in a complex society will demand efficient, mass-production solutions.

At the same time, we wil be hard-pressed to preserve the unique character and flavor of regions and their people. Emma, you will have to work much harder than I did to be an individual.

Perhaps you will be a pioneer in the new frontiers of space. Private carriers will shuttle commuters to work in orbiting factories, where the clean and gravity-free environment is ideal for the manufacture of electronic components, drugs, and even new life forms. Biotechnology research, which involves changing and even inventing molecular structures, will be confined to orbital laboratories until the new organisms are deemed safe for release on Earth.

Perhaps, Emma, you will first experience these space stations as entertainment. Agencies that specialize in space travel will advertise charter tours of orbiting labs and factories. Some will establish their own amusement parks in space. A typical attraction in these parks might be "bumper car" rides, in which drivers collide with each other from every direction, in harmless weightlessness. Will you have your picure taken in such a place, Emma, with the earth whirling in the background? Will you remember the merry-go-rounds of childhood?

Charter flights will join regularly scheduled space shuttles to enrich the transportation mix. The technology will spill over into new forms of earth travel as well: speedy transatlantic hydroplane ships and one-half hour flights between New York and Tokyo via space gliders that would rocket into orbit and glide to their destination.

But not all technology will be aimed at increasing the speed of travel. Leisurely submarine cruises "to nowhere" will offer tourists peaceful views of the undersea world — much of which lies unexplored in the 1980s.

Such new technologies will only be made possible by partnerships between goverment and business. Government alone is too staid and slow to achieve dramatic commercial breakthroughs. But the private sector will need strong government support and funding for the "mega" projects that will improve the quality of life.

Friday: An end to the threat of nuclear destruction?

London motorists have hard time getting around

LONDON (AP) — London is geared for walking, cycling or staying at home. Just don't try getting around in a car.

Those who drive were reminded painfully of that just after 3 p.m. on one Monday last month.

A burst water main blocked Finchley Road in north London. An hour and a half later a truck, bus and car collided in an underpass by the River Thames near Blackfriars Bridge.

The two events five miles apart caused one of London's worst traffic jams.

It lasted seven hours. The four-lane road along the Thames Embankment was closed for 3½ hours while debris was removed. Finchley Road, one of the busiest northbound thoroughfares, was blocked for two hours until 5 p.m., the start of the rush hour.

Traffic did not move freely on either road until after 10 p.m.

Parliament Square, Trafalgar Square and Whitehall were packed with stationary vehicles. Some drivers reported sitting without moving for an hour and a half as the jam radiated up to 10 miles from Blackfriars, reaching as far as Wimbledon in the southern suburbs.

London lacks a cohesive highway system. It has no cross-town expressways or beltways. Village lanes frequently serve as arterial roads.

Its car population has grown 25 percent since 1970 to 2.7 million. Paris, with 3 million inhabitants compared with London's 7 million, has four times more miles of freeway, says Richard Diment, spokesman for the British Road Federation.

"It's so bad that sometimes one motorist stopping to buy a newspaper or a packet of cigarettes can cause a traffic jam," says William Thompson, a former traffic police director and now highway manager for the Royal Automobile Club.

The problem, most traffic experts agree, is London's cozy, easygoing way. The metropolis is, at heart, a series of villages that have grown together. Many streets are centuries old — and look it.

One-way systems and pedestrian malls funnel traffic into main roads and leave residential areas in peace. Dodging traffic by using side streets is called "rat-running," as though it was somehow unfair to other motorists sitting stiff-upper-lipped in their traffic jams.

And people power still rules in London. Borough councils are mostly left wing, strong on environmentalism and hostile to private cars. Residential committees can block moves to make their streets one-way, and parking on both sides of a street is often actively encouraged, on the theory that it slows traffic and makes streets safer.

"There is a sort of philosophical feeling in many boroughs that there is something fundamentally wrong with moving around London in a motor vehicle," says Diment.

Borough officials argue that people don't need to drive because London has an excellent bus and subway system. Motoring lobbyists counter that bus journeys are getting longer as congestion worsens, while the subway system is old, unreliable and expensive to ride.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through March 25. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

confetti — (noun) Partygoers sometimes throw "confetti" to celebrate the New Year. "Confetti" is little bits of colored paper or streamers. Another meaning for "confetti" is "bonbons or candies." The word is plural for the Italian word, "confetto," meaning "sweetmeat or candy." Italians used to throw candies at each other during carnivals or celebrations. Eventually, thrifty manufacturers made imitation candy out of plasterboard to toss about. Today, colored paper, still called "confetti," replaces the plasterboard and we still pelt each other with it at celebrations and parades.

Bush's position on Iran-Contra affair 'remains unclear'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the House Iran-Contra committee said today that Vice President George Bush's position on arms sales to Iran will continue to be an issue until Bush responds to unanswered questions.

"There are a long list of questions that I don't know the answers to," Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., said in an interview on "CBS This Morning."

"The position of the vice president remains unclear with respect to the sale of arms to Iran and until it is clear, I think it'll continue to be an issue," he said.

For months, Bush, a GOP presidential candidate, has sought to put the Iran-Contra episode behind him. "Mistakes were made. And now, let's go on about the nation's business," he said last November when the congressional Iran-Contra committees released a 690-page report about the affair.

The report concluded Bush was a minor player in the sale of U.S.-made weapons to Iran and diversion of the profits to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

"The vice president attended several meetings on the Iran initiative but none of the participants could recall his views," it said.

Hamilton said the committees did not ask Bush to testify because it was unclear whether Congress had the constitutional right to compel testimony from the vice president.

Congressional investigators also said Bush did not know about the diversion.

But Bush likely will continue to face questions about the Iran-Contra case in the 1988 election year. Interest in the matter will heighten when Lawrence Walsh, the independent counsel, concludes his investigation into the criminal aspects of the case. A federal grand jury is hearing evidence.

Here, then, are some of the questions Bush can expect to hear on the hustings:

— What advice did Bush give President Reagan about the program to sell U.S.-made weapons to Iran in an effort to free American hostages held by pro-Iranian groups in Lebanon?

The program began in August 1985 when the United States agreed to let Israel ship U.S.-made missiles to Iran. In January 1986, Washington began selling arms directly to the Islamic regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Bush has repeatedly said he will never divulge his private conversations with Reagan, but has said he expressed reservations.

— When did Bush realize that selling weapons to Iran was primarily an arms-for-hostages program instead of an overture to moderate elements in Tehran?

Vice President George Bush

"I have said over and over again that the original proposal was not presented as an arms-for-hostages swap," Bush said. He said he did not have "detailed information" until December 1986, a month after the Iran-Contra program was exposed.

But Bush met in July 1986 with Amiram Nir, an Israeli counterterrorism expert who served as Israel's liaison to members of the National Security Council staff involved in shipping weapons to Iran.

Nir discussed "whether we would continue to press for the release of the hostages prior to delivering the items in an amount agreed to previously," according to notes of the meeting written by Craig Fuller, Bush's chief of staff.

Bush told CBS Newsman Dan Rather Monday that if he erred, he did so "to get those hostages out of there." He specifically cited William Buckley, the former CIA station chief in Beirut. Kidnapped in March 1984, Buckley was reportedly tortured and then killed by his captors.

— Was Bush present at a Jan. 7, 1986, meeting at the White House when Secretary of State George Shultz and former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger voiced strong objections to the Iran arms sale?

Bush said he doesn't remember Shultz' forceful objections. "Maybe I wasn't there at that point," he said.

Shultz said he remembers Bush being at the meeting, but Reagan said of Bush, "He was not present."

Drug smuggler tells Senate Noriega helped launder funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — A convicted drug smuggler told Senate investigators today he gave Panama's military ruler, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, $300,000 in cash for his help in laundering drug profits through Panamanian banks, and that Noriega "became a full-scale co-conspirator in my drug operation."

In a televised Senate hearing, Steven Michael Kalish said he left a briefcase full of cash from illicit narcotics operations with Noriega after he was introduced to the general through two middlemen in September 1983.

Kalish testified that when the meeting ended at Noriega's home, "I left the briefcase and began to exit the room. General Noriega called me back and said I forgot my briefcase. I told him it was for him, and he smiled."

That night, Kalish said, he attended a party with Noriega at the Panama Canal offices. He said the general was "extremely friendly" and told him "he would do whatever he could for me. He also thanked me for the gift."

In the following months, Kalish said, he used Panama as the base for his drug-smuggling operations and, with Noriega's help, laundered hundreds of millions of dollars in drug profits through Panamanian banks.

"My relationship with General Noriega became closer until he became a full-scale co-conspirator in my drug operation," said Kalish.

Sen. William V. Roth Jr., R-Del., ranking Republican on the subcommittee, expressed shock at Kalish's allegations.

Federal grand juries in Miami and Tampa, Fla., have been conducting criminal investigations of Noriega.

The Reagan administration is pushing for Noriega to step down voluntarily and permit free elections and a transition to full democracy in Panama.

Noriega repeatedly has denied any role in drug trafficking and has charged that the recent allegations are part of a U.S. government campaign against him because he says the administration wants to renege on plans to turn the Panama Canal over to Panamanian control.

Rather's 'personal word' pacifies most affiliates

NEW YORK (AP) — The heat on Dan Rather in the wake of his combative interview with Vice President George Bush seemed to be dissipating, even as CBS affiliates were planning to confer on whether to formally complain.

"I think initially we had a group that was distressed, and that has lessened by several measures since yesterday," Phil Jones, immediately past chairman of the CBS affiliates board said Wednesday. "I think part of it was Rather's handling of the situation on the 'Evening News' (Tuesday) night...

"No one is that exercised at this point that they can't deal with it."

Benjamin Tucker, chairman of the 11-member board, did not expect an outcry from affiliates, but said the matter would be discussed in a conference call today.

The interview, broadcast live during Monday night's "CBS Evening News," prompted a flood of calls to CBS stations nationwide.

"I think in the context of a live interview, a lot of dynamics took place that focused more on style than on substance," Tucker said. "The style was very aggressive. And I think the vice president was very aggressive.

"I think Dan had an obligation to conduct the interview and ask tough questions like he did."

The affiliates did protest last September when the network feed went black for six minutes because Rather angrily left the set of the "CBS Evening News" when live coverage of a tennis match ran into news time.

"As far as what will happen at this point, I'm inclined to think the affiliates will split out, and after having a day or two to think about it, and also seeing what the reaction from viewers is, there won't be any consensus any way whatsoever," said Tucker.

Jones said he does not think affiliates should take formal action on issues that don't directly affect their stations, as the dead air did.

"When it's a personal style of reporting and content-oriented news, I don't think it's our place to question that," he said.

Administration exploring possibility of Palestinian self-rule

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, in behind-the-scenes contacts with Israel, is exploring prospects for new Mideast peace talks designed to carry out the Camp David promise of self-rule for Palestinian Arabs.

The administration also has begun sounding out Congress on a plan to sell missiles to Jordan for use on jet fighters the Arab kingdom intends to purchase from Britain.

The main aim of peace talks would be to quell the disturbances that have swept the West Bank and Gaza over the last seven weeks as Palestinians engaged in bloody battles with Israeli occupation troops. The violence has claimed at least 38 lives, according to U.N. figures.

A special emissary of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir held an unannounced meeting Wednesday with Secretary of State George P. Shultz. Diplomatic sources said the emissary, Eliakim Rubinstein, relayed the Israeli leader's interest in negotiations to provide Palestinian "autonomy."

As outlined in the Camp David agreements that produced peace in 1979 between Israel and Egypt, the 1.5 million Palestinians living on the West Bank and in Gaza would have self-rule but not control over security and foreign relations, two key attributes of statehood.

Rubinstein, who also met on Tuesday with M. Charles Hill, an aide to Shultz experienced in Middle Eastern diplomacy, flew home to report to Shamir. He is the Israeli Cabinet secretary and was a key figure in the Camp David talks in 1978.

According to the sources, who demanded anonymity, both the United States and Israel are warm to the idea of peace talks but Jordan, which controlled the West Bank from 1948 to 1967, is reluctant to enter negotiations.

The potential arms sale to Jordan, meanwhile, has the double aim of inducing King Hussein to enter peace talks and to deter him from seeking arms from the Soviet Union.

Shultz, apart from his unannounced meeting with Rubinstein, held an unusual 20-minute session with two Palestinians. They proposed establishment of a Palestinian state on land now held by Israel. It would be controlled by the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"We feel we got his attention to the situation in the territories," Hanna Siniora, a Jerusalem editor, said after the session in Shultz's office. "He informed us he is engaged for peace."

The Palestinians also suggested sending an international peace-keeping force to the West Bank and Gaza and then holding a Mideast peace conference.

Shultz, whose policies toward Israel have drawn praise in Jerusalem and from American Jewish groups, arranged the meeting to hear Palestinian viewpoints amid the unrelenting violence in the territories.

Siniora, who was accompanied by Fayez Abu Rahme, head of the Gaza bar association, told reporters that Shultz informed them "the PLO has an image and real problems in the United States."

The two Palestinians are believed to be on good terms with the PLO, which is committed to the dismantling of Israel as a Jewish state.

"We discussed the possibility of better relations, normalization of relations between the U.S. administration and the PLO," Siniora said.

The United States, like Israel, refuses to recognize Yasser Arafat's organization while accusing elements of the PLO of the murder of Americans and Israelis.

Siniora said Shultz briefly reiterated the "traditional formula" regarding U.S. policy toward the PLO. Adopted in 1975, it requires PLO acceptance of Israel's right to exist and of U.N. Security Council resolutions proposing security for all states in the area.

Jewish groups back Israel; Woody Allen 'appalled'

NEW YORK (AP) — A coalition of U.S. Jewish leaders accepted Israel's riot control policy in the occupied territories, but filmmaker Woody Allen declared he is "appalled beyond measure" by the beating of Palestinian protesters.

"The use of force is sometimes indispensable to restore order," Morris B. Abram, chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major Jewish Organizations, said at a news conference Wednesday.

"I stand exactly where the policy as stated by the prime minister stands," Abram said after consultations with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Separately, Allen took a rare public stand to speak against the tactics Israel is using to subdue riots in the occupied West Bank and Gaza, asking, "Are we talking about state-sanctioned brutality and even torture?"

Allen, writing on the op-ed page in today's editions of The New York Times, noted he generally supports Israel and is outraged by terrorist attacks against the Jewish state, but "I am appalled beyond measure by the treatment of the rioting Palestinians."

"I mean, fellas, are you kidding? Beatings of people by soldiers to make examples of them?" the Jewish filmmaker wrote.

The army's beating policy has sparked international and domestic criticism since Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin announced it last week, saying blows were more humane than bullets in quelling riots.

Israeli gunfire has killed at least 38 Arabs since Dec. 8. Palestinians protesting 20 years of military occupation started rioting in early December.

Abram said, "I do not, and would not, condone indiscriminate beatings."

He said Shamir had assured him "we have not and will not adopt any such policy" of random beatings. However, a member of the conference who returned from a 10-day visit to Israel disputed that statement.

"The impression of members of our group, and certainly my impression, was there were indeed beatings of people not involved in the riots," Henry Siegman, executive director of the American Jewish Congress, said Wednesday.

"If Shamir told Morris Abram that would be stopped, that is of course to be welcomed."

Abram said his statement was endorsed by Rabbi Alexander M. Schindler, head of the Reform movement's Union of American Hebrew Congregations, and other leaders in the group. Last weekend, Schindler sent a telegram to Israeli President Chaim Herzog calling the beatings "an offense to the Jewish spirit."

Following allegations of army brutality, Rabin emphasized that soldiers had orders to use force only when needed to restore calm. However, he acknowledged that some soldiers have violated the orders.

Siegman, speaking at Kennedy International Airport upon his return Tuesday, called Rabin's explanation of the beatings "simply unacceptable.

"There are certain lines that no civilized society can allow itself to cross even in the face of extreme provocation," Siegman said. "These ugly beatings are such a line."

Siegman's opinion differed because he was in the Middle East when the conference was called to form the statement, said AJC spokeswoman C.G. Grant. The conference represents 42 Jewish leaders.

Allen said Israel's supporters should "speak out and use every method of pressure — moral, financial and political — to bring this wrongheaded approach to a halt."

FBI probe smacks of 'Gestapo tactics,' SCLC leader says

ATLANTA (AP) — The Rev. Joseph Lowery is demanding an investigation of the FBI, saying its monitoring of his civil rights group's opposition to U.S. policy in Central America "smacks of Gestapo tactics."

"The whole thing is confusing. What do they expect to find?" the president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference asserted Wednesday night. "We've also opposed his (President Reagan's) policies on domestic matters. Does this mean we've been watched for that, too?"

"This smacks of Gestapo tactics, and the kind of behavior that we accuse the Kremlin of performing," Lowery said.

The SCLC was one of several organizations named in FBI documents obtained under the Freedom of Information Act by the Center for Constitutional Rights, a New York-based lawyers' group.

Lowery said he told his staff to contact the chairmen of the House and Senate judiciary committees about an investigation into the FBI's domestic activities.

"We had hoped that the J. Edgar Hoover era had ended," Lowery said, referring to the late FBI director's surveillance of civil rights leaders during the 1960s. "We had hoped that they had been sort of democratized, but obviously not.

"It's distressing that in the '80's we have the FBI wasting people's tax money trying to harass, intimidate or discredit organizations that have long histories of the highest patriotism," Lowery said.

2nd AIDS virus doesn't mean 'new epidemic'

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The nation's first diagnosis of AIDS from a second kind of virus does not signal a new AIDS epidemic, said a researcher who recommended against testing blood supplies for the strain.

Others, however, favored use of new tests for the virus, which medical authorities said was the first confirmed case in the Western Hemisphere.

The virus, discovered 2½ years ago in West Africa and later spread to Europe, was seen by researchers from the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey in a patient exposed to it in West Africa, the university reported Wednesday.

The state school would not disclose the patient's identity or location, and would not say when or where the diagnosis was made.

The virus is called HIV-2, for human immunodeficiency virus, type 2. That distinguishes it from the original AIDS virus, designated HIV-1.

But Dr. Myron Essex of Harvard University, a leading expert on HIV-2, said Wednesday it was "inevitable that we'd see a case here," and he does not believe it will lead to an epidemic.

"The evidence that this virus causes AIDS in the same way or degree that HIV-1 does is not very great," Essex said in a telephone interview from his hotel room in New York City, where he was attending a medical conference.

However, Luc Montagnier of the Pasteur Institute in Paris, who discovered HIV-2 and was a discoverer of the original AIDS virus, said illness caused by HIV-2 is exactly the same as the illness caused by HIV-1.

Essex said there is no cause for concern that HIV-2 could have infected the nation's blood supply, because the incidence of HIV-2 infection in this country is "so astronomically low."

As a result, there is little point in testing the blood supply for HIV-2, he said.

"The proportion of people picked up (as infected with HIV-2) would not be as high as the number of people missed with the HIV-1" test, which is 99 percent effective, he said.

But the American Foundation for AIDS Research noted that the two viruses are transmitted in the same ways, and the same prevention methods will protect people from either virus.

"There is still only one AIDS epidemic," said Dr. Mathilde Krim, founder of the New York City-based foundation.

She said discovery of HIV-2 in this country will hinder testing because the genetic makeup of the two viruses is different enough to demand different kinds of tests.

"Testing methods will, therefore, need to be adapted to detect both viruses," she said.

A test for HIV-2 has been developed and is awaiting approval by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

Essex said HIV-1 tests are 50 percent to 95 percent effective in catching HIV-2, depending upon the manufacturer of the test.

"The best ones are 90 to 95 percent effective in picking up infections of HIV-2 even though they're made for HIV-1," he said.

However, he said some physicians, particularly those in West Africa and other areas where incidence of HIV-2 is high, want more effective tests.

Gayle Lloyd of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta confirmed the Newark case is the first case of HIV-2 diagnosed in the Western Hemisphere.

Definition of 'old' needs to be revised

In the minds of many Americans, the dreaded 65th birthday is the point at which middle age ends and old age begins. Social Security and Medicare begin paying full benefits at age 65, and life-insurance actuaries routinely define "senior citizens" as people of that age and over.

The question that bothers a lot of Americans, ourselves included, is why a person's relationship to the government and an employer usually changes when he or she reaches 65. The answer is that New Deal social planners selected 65 as a chronological dividing line for determining who received federal old-age benefits, including Social Security. Over the years, 65 became — through force of custom and law — the official definition of old age.

The nation's demography has changed dramatically during the 53 years since the Social Security Act first mandated federal benefits for Americans over 65. The proportion of citizens who are 65 or older has risen from 6.8 percent in 1940 to 12 percent in 1984. As the ranks of older Americans drawing retirement checks grow, so does the burden on younger Americans whose payroll taxes finance the program.

Presently, 30 percent, or roughly $318 billion, of the federal budget is earmarked for programs benefiting the elderly. If Social Security benefits were to remain unchanged, 60 percent of the federal budget would be spent on the elderly by the year 2030.

One answer to the problem is to change the standard that determines old age. The vitality of many senior citizens and life-extending breakthroughs in medicine make 65 genuinely obsolete for determining who is old and who is not. Congress itself recognized this when, in 1983, it acted to raise to 67 the age at which Social Security would begin. That increase will be phased in gradually over the next four decades, but it is an important first step.

Congress also encouraged people to work as late as 70, now the earliest mandatory retirement age for federal employees and most workers in the private sector. And for good reason. Retiring at age 65 deprives many of the opportunity to remain productive and robs employers of their most experienced workers.

As the nation's demographic and health trends change, so too should the government's definition of old age. If old age were defined as the last quarter of an average adult's life, beginning at age 20, old age could by 2030 begin officially between the ages of 72 and 75.

Old age should be determined by present trends, not by the calculations of 1930s social planners.

Jail plan makes sense

The jail plan proposed in Saturday's election was condemned by Reagan Legg (Reporter-Telegram, Jan. 24). In his second paragraph, Legg states: "We are asked to approve $3,800,000 for a new jail to be built on land which will be bought for an undisclosed price." The land in question was transferred to Midland County by deed dated May 1, 1987, recorded on May 13, 1987 in Volume 928, page 665. The cost was approximately $170,000. Obviously Legg's letter reflects a serious lack of homework leading him to erroneous statements.

I intend to vote FOR the jail bond issue because when you look at all the facts the plan makes sense. It's time to solve this problem. Let's vote FOR the new jail on Saturday.

Joint jail better

In the past jail bond election, I did not support a new jail; however, the time has now come to support a new joint city-county jail.

I'm heartened to see the intended cooperation between the city and county governments on this issue in order to avoid duplication of jailing expenses. Midland County is a one-city county.

Its tax dollars should be spent as effectively as possible. The proposed jail is a large step in that direction.

Vote against crime

It's time to cast your vote against crime.

For anyone who has ever been victimized by crime, you don't need to be reminded of the pain, fear and frustration; for anyone who hasn't, we hope you never have to endure such a gut-wrenching experience.

We need more jail space to get the criminal off the streets. Fight crime; vote FOR the new jail

Let's solve flooding

We agree with your recent editorial on the Rio Wadley. Because the only access to our home is Wadley, our interest in a solution to the problem is strong. None of the proposals that were seriously considered by the street commission would prevent flooding between Midkiff and I streets.

Flooding on Wadley paralyzes a large part of north Midland. It seems to us that the problem must eventually be solved and any money spent that does not contribute to the solution will go wasted.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Thursday edit page

Today's highlight in history:

On this date:

In 1547, England's King Henry VIII died. He was succeeded by his 9-year-old son, Edward the VI.

In 1909, the United States ended direct control over Cuba.

In 1916, Louis D. Brandeis was appointed to the U.S. Supreme Court, becoming its first Jewish member.

In 1982, Italian anti-terrorism forces stormed an apartment in Padua and rescued U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier, 42 days after he had been kidnapped by the Red Brigades.

Engineer disputes Rogers findings

WASHINGTON — Two years ago today, the space shuttle Challenger exploded on national television. Since then, the 73 seconds of fatal flight have never left the microscope.

Jack Anderson

The report of a presidential commission was issued in June 1986, but it did not end the scrutiny, especially for a persistent Virginia engineering consultant who still argues that errors have been sewn into the fabric of the official record.

Ali AbuTaha is a self-employed consultant who has worked in aerospace, satellite, computer and video engineering for 20 years. Unlike most armchair Challenger troubleshooters, he has studied more than 3,000 pages generated by the Rogers Commission, which investigated the accident. His copy of the accident report is dog-eared, paper-clipped and tattooed with his notes.

AbuTaha contends the Rogers Commission investigators took the wrong tack when they concluded that tiny O-rings caused the fatal explosion. He believes a pre-existing crack near the aft joint of the right solid rocket booster led to the disaster.

By filtering away the glare of sunlight and rocket exhaust from his home video recording, AbuTaha saw fire striking the right wing and main engines of the Challenger seconds after it was launched into the Florida sky. He contends that the steadily growing leak of fire was obscured by the lighting and the shuttle's external tank, so the commission did not confirm the "first evidence of flame" until 58.7 seconds into the flight.

AbuTaha claims his continuous-leak theory helps explain other anomalies, including the inability of recovery teams to find missing shuttle pieces off the Florida coast.

His findings have been heralded by some aerospace officials and dismissed by others. David Acheson of the Rogers Commission called AbuTaha "ingenious," but his theories "not very persuasive."

After reviewing AbuTaha's preliminary findings early last year, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration wrote a three-page analysis of his work that ended by saying, "NASA finds no evidence in any of your analyses that could change the original sequence of events or the cause of the accident."

But the controversial engineer's work has recently prompted a Pentagon intelligence official to try to get him an audience at NASA.

AbuTaha differs from the commission investigators on several points:

■ Portions of the shuttle's failed rocket booster were never found. AbuTaha thinks that is because pieces began falling into the ocean before the major explosion. The commission concluded the booster broke up in the major explosion. AbuTaha believes the missing parts lie within three miles of the shore of Cape Canaveral in unsearched waters.

■ The shuttle's jerky ascent was a response to the continuous leak, according to AbuTaha. The commission credited the erratic path to the navigation and control system as it reacted to the wind. But AbuTaha notes that debris from the explosion fell in almost straight lines through the wind.

■ A home video taken of the flight by an observer in nearby New Smyrna Beach reveals an unusual plume of smoke spouting from the shuttle 40 seconds after the launch — another sign that the flames had burned a growing hole in the booster, AbuTaha says. NASA and the commission officials argue the plumes are normal.

■ Dialogue in the Challenger cockpit hints that the astronauts recognized a problem as early as 15 seconds into the flight. AbuTaha contends the commission did not use the cockpit recording in reaching their conclusions.

David Acheson, the only commissioner to review AbuTaha's video evidence, said his theories hinge on questionable glints of light.

Myron Uman, director of the National Research Project, which is overseeing the redesign of the next shuttle, said AbuTaha simply "doesn't understand much of the stuff he is doing."

RUSSELL BAKER

Who's running, you ask? Enough already!

NEW YORK — When they first started running, I could remember only four or five of the official presidential candidates. Nowadays I can often remember as many as 11. Considering that there are 13, 11 is probably good enough to put me in the 99th percentile, memory-wise.

Russell Baker

There are seven Democrats and six Republicans, and I can now usually name six of the Democrats and five of the Republicans. What's odd is that the two names I forget vary from time to time. Four weeks ago I always forgot to include Babbitt on the Democratic list and du Pont on the Republican.

Just this morning, however, I remembered Babbitt and du Pont without even trying, but despite deep concentration could not recall Gephardt, a Democrat, and Kemp, a Republican, both of whom I had remembered with no effort at all last week.

It's hard to say how my mind decides which candidates to forget when somebody springs out of the bushes crying, "Name the official presidential candidates of both parties at once."

Maybe Gephardt got forgotten this morning because I haven't seen him on television since last week. But if lack of TV display was the explanation, how could I have forgotten Kemp? Just last night I saw Kemp on television hugging a pair of Iowa tykes for reciting an incomprehensible litany that ended with the words "President Kemp."

A month ago when I was regularly forgetting Babbitt and du Pont I blamed it on overload in the brain's political memory bin. I fancied the old grouch in charge up there saying, "Just where do you think I'm going to put all these new names of people, almost all of whom are never going to be president anyhow."

He would have a good point. It is jam-packed up there. Is he to throw out precious memories of Sherman Adams's vicuna coat; of Estes Kefauver's Sen Sen; of the Georgia delegation endorsing Rep. James C. Davis for the Democratic nomination in 1956 with the slogan, "Lord Save Us With James C. Davis"? Throw out treasures like that to make room for the names of 13 people hardly anybody ever heard of?

No sir. So I agreed to hold down on new material. Forget Babbitt, I ordered. That was the name of a novel by Sinclair Lewis. If Americans elected a novel it would be by somebody like Stephen King, Sidney Sheldon or Barbara Cartland. Never Sinclair Lewis.

Forget du Pont, too. That was a chemistry outfit in Delaware. Too many Americans remembered failing high school chemistry. Except for people who liked potassium and nitrogen, du Pont would pull even fewer votes than Sinclair Lewis.

Then three weeks ago, my political antennae picked up vital information. The first item was a news article stating that Bush had attacked du Pont by calling him "Pierre."

Though Pierre was indeed du Pont's first name, the article said, du Pont was campaigning as "Pete," seemingly out of fear that if voters discovered he was really a "Pierre," his campaign was doomed. This conjured up a bizarre picture of du Pont drawing a cape over his head and cringing pathetically as Bush sprang at him crying "Pierre," rather like Dr. Van Helsing assailing Count Dracula with a crucifix.

Thus was du Pont permanently embedded in memory's Old Horror Movie Department, along with Bush, whom I now envision as a Van Helsing in J. Press tweeds stalking poor du Pont with a crucifix-shaped placard bearing the word "Pierre." Since then I can forget neither du Pont nor Bush.

Babbitt's name was restored to memory three weeks ago when my wife, looking up from the morning paper, said, "I could live with Babbitt," the way children who really want you to buy a Maserati say, "I could live with a Chevy."

In a field like this, it would be an obvious mistake to forget any candidate people could live with. Babbitt is now safely placed in memory's Auto Department (At-Least-It-Wasn't-a-Lemon Division), hence readily retrievable. That seemed a good place to keep Dole, too.

Hart's recent claim to be "a sinner" helped solve my early tendency to forget the parsons Jackson and Robertson. With Hart, they now formed a trio easily remembered with the mnemonic device, "two saints and a sinner."

Obviously, remembering these birds takes a little cunning, but look how readily the names come when you get the hang of it:

"I could live with that": Babbitt and Dole.

Van Helsing pouncing at poor Dracula: Bush and du Pont.

Two saints and a sinner: Jackson, Robertson and Hart.

The others — Dukakis, Haig and ... and ... Ah, sometimes the sharpest memory says, "Enough already."

GEORGE F. WILL

Jackson reaping benefit of double standard

WASHINGTON — In his crusade for national betterment, Jesse Jackson has many suggestions, including this: If you see George Will drowning, throw him an anvil. He does not say quite that, but that is his gist.

George F. Will

According to the Los Angeles Times, Jackson recently addressed in Sacramento a $500-a-plate luncheon which "was closed to the press, but some reporters listened to the remarks and tape-recorded them from an adjacent partitioned-off area." Jackson berated the media for portraying minorities in a way "designed to poison the minds of the common people." The Times reported that Jackson "singled out conservative columnist George Will for special criticism."

Jackson said, "He is more dangerous to us than Jimmy the Greek and Al Campanis." The Times reported that "Jackson did not elaborate."

I will elaborate. But first a point about the niceties of slander. Jackson has kissed Yasser Arafat and hailed Fidel Castro, so I am content to be excluded from the ambit of his affections. But if he wants to call me a racist, he should have the courage of his convictions and do it publicly. If he wants to smear people privately, he should rent rooms with thicker partitions.

Jackson spoke two days after appearing on ABC's "This Week," during which I asked him these three questions:

"You said in a recent debate that since 1973 we have lost 38 million jobs. In fact, today 27 million more Americans are working than were working in 1973. In what sense have we lost the jobs?"

"As President, would you support measures such as the G-7 measures in the Louvre accords?"

"Last month in the Kennedy Center debate, Mr. Jackson, you said that 58 cents out of every federal dollar is being spent on military buildup. Since the defense budget is about 28 cents out of the federal dollar, in what sense is your statement true?"

His answer to the first question was that some people are "working at lower wages" and "we've lost workers who once were driving trucks who are now driving (sic) hamburgers." Then he whipped up a verbal meringue, mostly air and references to "Wall Street analyses and these humongous numbers," and airline deregulation and the minimum wage.

His answer to the second question was, "Explain that." His answer to the third was slightly to fudge his falsehood, saying 55 cents of every federal tax dollar is spent on "military-related matters."

In Sacramento, Jackson told his mostly black audience that the media spread negative images of blacks, and that I am especially "dangerous" to "us." Actually, he is contributing to negative stereotypes by his implicit demand for exemption from standards to which white candidates are held.

People who say the reason Jackson can not be elected is that he is black should ask themselves this: How many candidates spout Third World rhetoric and fraternize with anti-American dictators and terrorists and then do well in presidential politics? Being black is his advantage as a professional campaigner: Suppose he were a white minister from Chicago attempting to make the presidency his first elective office.

Because he is black, his white rivals sit silently beside him, leaving his foolishness unremarked. The real racism in this campaign is the unspoken assumption that it is unreasonable to expect a black candidate to get rudimentary things right.

Jackson is doing something for which there are ample precedents. He is doing what Strom Thurmond, George Wallace, Norman Thomas, Henry Wallace, Robert La Follette and others have done. He is using the process of presidential politics to alter the nation's conversation, agenda and patterns of participation.

But because he is not going to be on the Democratic ticket, there is a journalistic question of what coverage of him is appropriate. The answer is: Lots of it.

Coverage should be proportional to his support measured in polls, which is considerable. Coverage is merited by his potential to influence events, which is substantial. He is saying things that many people like to hear and the fact that some of the things are silly just gives journalism the additional task of tidying up after him.

Before Jackson does too much more complaining about the treatment of him in the media, he should consider this. Jimmy the Greek got obliterated because he said dumb and offensive things, although they were said in a crude attempt to praise blacks. Jackson said dumb and malicious things about Jews and then collected matching funds for his nonstop campaigning. He should be thankful for double standards.

Communist Chinese press sets out to rewrite past wrongs

By JIM ABRAMS

BEIJING (AP) — The official Xinhua News Agency put out a flash only an hour after the announcement in Taiwan of the death Jan. 13 of President Chiang Ching-kuo, leader of the rival Nationalist Chinese.

In times past in Communist China, the news would have been delayed two or three days, if not completely withheld.

Although still locked into its role as the promulgator of the Communist Party line, the Chinese press has set out on a course of reform paralleling the economic reforms that have changed the face of the nation.

— Newspapers are pledging themselves to faster and more accurate reporting.

— Investigative reporting teams are homing in on vice and corruption, particularly among government officials.

Some liberalization has been noted as well in the Soviet press since Mikhail S. Gorbachev came to power in 1985.

But in China, a law is being drafted to define the responsibilities and rights of journalists, including the right to reveal official wrongdoing.

"We haven't done a very good job in the past so we have to try harder," Chief Editor Guan Zhihao of Legal Daily (Fazhi Ribao) said in an interview. "Papers should be brave and good."

Public misdoings — most recently a sex-embezzlement scandal involving a former governor of Jiangxi province — are regularly exposed in the press.

Natural disasters and airline crashes involving foreigners are reported quickly. Man-made disasters and crimes also make it into print, although sometimes weeks after.

The Communist Party has encouraged press reforms, promising more independence for publishers and urging the media to do a better job in getting information to the public.

Officials complained at a recent forum about the large number of Chinese who listen to foreign broadcasts, such as Voice of America and British Broadcasting Corp., for news about their own country.

Communist Party members have access to "Reference News," a publication not available on newsstands. It provides a frank look at what foreign journalists are saying about China.

By mid-1988 the government hopes to complete a draft of a press law that will guarantee rights on publishing and reporting.

"The press law will stipulate the right to criticize government officials," said Wang Qianghua, deputy director general of the Press and Publication Administration and head of the law drafting committee.

China has outgrown its leftist past "when we believed the only purpose of journalism was propaganda," Wang added in an interview. "But our first priority remains upholding the party's principles and policies."

The Communist Party leader, Zhao Ziyang, recently said reforms should give full play to "the role of mass media in educating and organizing the people, and implementing the line and tasks set by the Chinese Communist Party since 1979," the first full year of rule by China's economic reformists.

China's 100 daily newspapers, out of a total of about 1,500 newspapers, all have direct or indirect links with the party, and on major issues take their cue from Xinhua or the People's Daily (Renmin Ribao), the official voice of the party.

"We do receive directions from above," Legal Daily's Guan acknowledged. "We are the voice of the party and the government. Newspapers are the bridge."

Guan said his publication, known for its exposes of corruption and crime, publishes criticisms of individuals only after consulting with the involved parties.

"Our criticism is constructive," he added. "We want people to know these things are not allowed."

Hu Yaobang, the former Communist Party leader, once said newspapers should print 80 percent good and 20 percent bad news, and that ratio appears to stand today.

"In editing we give top priority to good things," Guan said. "Bad things come second."

Although the press in recent years has begun reporting on such negative events as pro-democracy student demonstrations and anti-Chinese unrest in Tibet, the aim always seems intended to educate rather than titillate. Unsolved crimes are almost never reported.

Somalia's past probed for clues to civilization

BUUR BARDAALE, Somalia (AP) — When and how did the camel arrive in Africa and revolutionize nomadic lifestyles? Why did man change from hunter to food-producer, an essentially more difficult way of life? How did early East Africans cope with the kinds of droughts that persist today?

Archaeologists are looking for the answers in the harsh land of Somalia and their probes are beginning to yield clues to the evolution of human civilization.

Archaeological research is relatively new to Somalia and one of the first foreign experts to start excavating here was the University of Georgia's Steven Brandt.

"One thing that drew me to Somalia was the enormous potential," Brandt, 37, said in an interview in this thriving center of commerce deep in the bush some 125 miles northwest of Mogadishu, Somalia's capital. "There's a lifetime's worth of work here. It's hard to know where to start."

No more than 25 sites have been excavated and much of Somalia's history is obscured because written records are so few.

"The fact that Somalia didn't have an official written language until 1972 gives you an idea of the importance of prehistory in tracing the origins of the Somali people and their culture," Brandt said.

In 1982, he began a series of explorations that have focused on this pottery-making region in the south, but also have taken in the fertile Jubba River Valley to the west and some of the hundreds of limestone caves and granite rock shelters in the rugged north.

THE NORTHERN caves, many of them covered with prehistoric paintings, hold a particular allure for Brandt. Some of them are inhabited today, as they have been for millenniums.

One orange-brown and red wall painting of camels could help solve the mystery of when that animal came to Africa.

The oldest discovered camel remains in Africa are 1,500 years old, but the cave paintings suggest they were introduced long before that, from the Middle East and perhaps from Asia. Nomads of those times probably got around on foot but paintings in the cave of humpless cattle suggests other beasts of burden, such as the ox, may have been used.

Although rock art can't yet be dated accurately, Brandt believes artifacts found in the cave, along with the paintings of humpless cattle, which came to Africa as early as 7,000 years ago, could eventually pinpoint the age of the camel drawings.

In other caves, Brandt found stone artifacts dating to Africa's Middle Stone Age, 30,000 to 200,000 years ago.

The Middle Stone Age was the period of evolution of recognizable human ancestors, and new scientific evidence increasingly points to Africa as the homeland of not just hominids — or humanlike forms — but of anatomically modern man.

SO FAR, the only Middle Stone Age human remains have been found in South Africa, Brandt said, but the potential is there for other finds in northern Somalia, with its cave paintings from the same era. Other evidence, he added, lies in the proximity to sites like Ethiopia's Awash Valley, where 4-million-year-old hominid remains were found, and the Hadar region of Ethiopia where "Lucy," the famous 3.6 million-year-old human-like fossil, was discovered.

"I think northern Somalia can really provide important finds (from that era), and that's exciting," said Brandt. "But of course we need to find the bones."

Brandt found some bones in 1983, not far from this oasis village nestled under a huge mass of red granite and earth called Buur Heybe, or "Hill of the Potter's Clay."

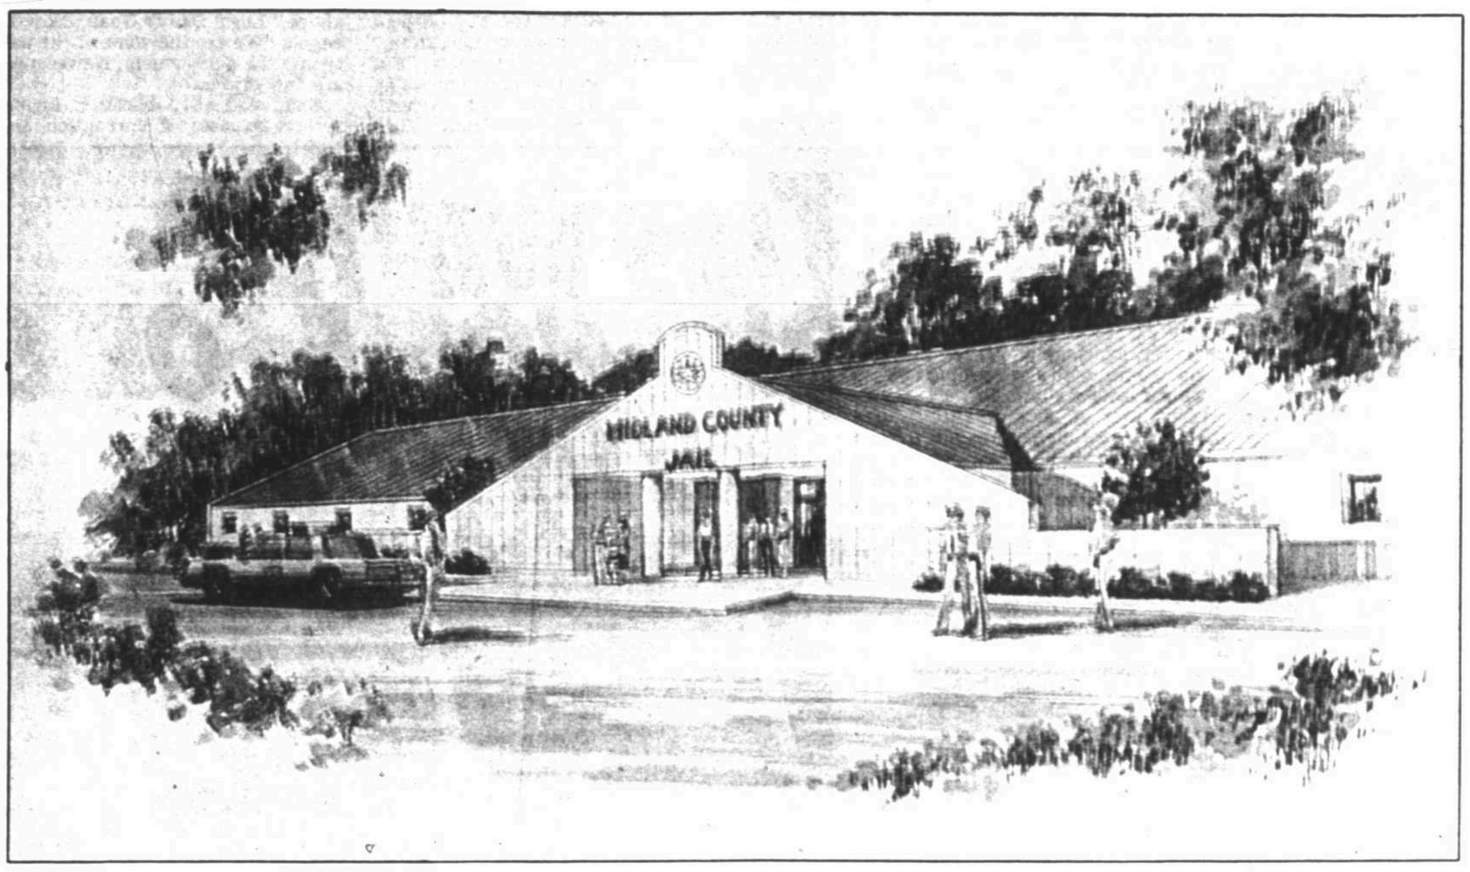
While digging under a large rock overhang that shelters a traditional meeting place for village elders, Brandt found the curiously arranged remains of 14 humans.

It was the earliest indisputable evidence of a human burial in this area of northeast Africa, dating to the early Holocene era, or 11,000 years ago.

The arrangement of the human bones, alongside 13 pairs of antelope horns, indicated a ritual burial. Some male skeletons had their hands covering their faces; a female clutched a set of child's teeth.

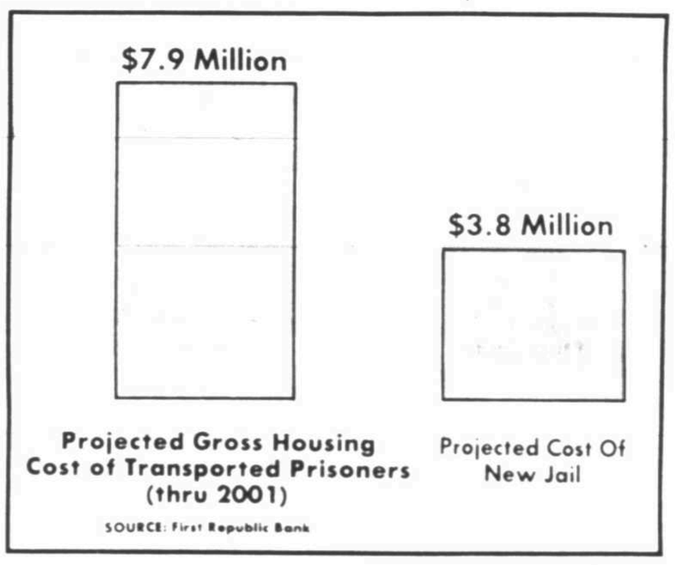
Burial may have been one part of settling down, Brandt said. Preliminary research suggests that because they lived during a period of great environmental change — from extremely dry to extremely lush within a matter a few hundred years — the people of that age became more sedentary.

Tired of Having Your Home or Auto Burglarized?



FACTS:

- 3400 Burglaries and thefts were committed in Midland in 1987—almost ten every day.
- Over the next decade Midland County will spend millions for housing prisoners in other counties if we don't build more jail space.
- The South Super-Block provides an excellent location for an all-purpose jail, and it's already owned by Midland County.
- The new jail should add only $5.50 in taxes to the average Midland household's tax bill in 1988. Thereafter it should reduce to 50¢ per year.
- This plan saves significant tax dollars by combining City and County Jail Operations.



"The greatest concern to me is not the cost of building this jail, but the cost of not building this jail,"

Charles W. Bro Seltzer

"The climbing costs of housing prisoners in other counties is significant — and I simply cannot see an end to it unless we build more jail space."

Law limits number of cats, ferrets

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

A new city rule limiting the number of pets Midlanders can own could mean giving away kitty to avoid an up to $500 fine, city animal control officials said Wednesday.

The city animal control ordinance has always limited the number of dogs residents can own to five, but was amended by the City Council this week to include cats and ferrets or a combination of the three species, said Animal Control Director Coy Willis.

The amendment, which becomes effective in mid-February, also strikes ferrets from a list of wild animals prohibited from city limits and allows owners to apply for a $4 license.

One Midlander, who didn't want to give his name because he is in violation of the new rule, said, "I appreciate the fact they don't want creatures with diseases, but if it gets to me putting my animals to sleep, I guess I'll move from Midland."

The man, who owns 10 cats and five dogs, added, "I'm not going to let the City Council dictate to me what I can do about the lives of my animals."

Veterinarian Greg Adkins, who is chairman of the city's Animal Control Advisory Commission explained the limit was placed on cats after several people complained about neighbors with 15 to 20 cats.

"When they have that many animals, they won't be taken care of," Adkins said.

"The committee felt like five was an adequate number. With five, people would be able to take care of them and see that they are properly vaccinated," he said.

Also wild cats have become a problem, Willis said.

"People have started complaining more about wild cats," he said.

He said the shelter's traps used to catch cats are always in demand.

Adkins said he believes Animal Control employees will be lenient and work with people who are properly caring for their animals, even if they own more than five.

"When they have that many animals, they won't be taken care of... With five, people would be able to take care of them..."
— Veterinarian Greg Adkins

Willis said, "We will work with them as long as possible for those not complying.

"But we won't continue to allow people to keep more than what the law allows for."

People with a litter of pups or kittens have until the offspring are four months old to find other homes for them, Willis said.

Willis acknowledged that unless a complaint is filed, officers probably won't know whether people are in violation of the new amendment.

"It's something more than likely that we're going to have to look at by complaint," he said.

One loophole in the new rule allows owners who live in commercially zoned areas to apply for a $25 kennel fee if they have more than five pets, Willis said.

President of the Midland Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Jeanette Probandt, said she didn't think the new limit will affect many people.

"Most people I know do not have over one or two cats," she said.

But, SPCA Director Dalton Byerly said he feared the rule may cause some people to avoid vaccinating those animals that exceed the limit.

However, Adkins said if people ask his office not to license animals with the city, their requests are honored.

"If people tell us not to give them one, we don't. We're not enforcers for the city," he said.

Along with dogs, the number of cats and ferrets will be limited to five per owner under an amendment passed by the City Council this week.

Court reverses attempted capital murder conviction

From Staff Reports

The state's highest criminal court has ordered a new trial for a Midland man who was convicted in 1984 of stabbing his financee's mother.

The Court of Criminal Appeals on Wednesday reversed the attempted capital murder conviction of Albert Sanchez, 23, because the court said Sanchez's testimony showed tne jury could have considered a lesser charge of aggravated assault.

The decision pleased Sanchez's court-appointed attorney, who argued the appeal before the nine-member Austin court more than a year ago, in November 1986.

"That is just wonderful news," Odessa attorney Bill Bowden said. "That (lesser included charge) was the point that was raised in the appeal to Austin.

"I'm not surprised with the decision — I thought the position I made was the correct one all along," Bowden said. "But it is always nice to hear the news."

Bowden said he would send a copy of the opinion to his client, who is serving a 20-year sentence for the crime at the Texas Department of Corrections Beto I unit near Palestine.

Sanchez was convicted after a three-day trial before 142nd State District Judge Pat Baskin.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre said late Wednesday his office would review the high court's opinion and case file before a decision is made on trying him again.

Sanchez in a statement said he intended to use the knife to persuade Arleen Mullin, also of Midland, to let him marry her daughter. Mullin had said Sanchez could not marry her 16-year-old daughter until she turned 18, testimony showed.

On Oct. 6, 1983 Sanchez blindfolded Mullin, telling her that he had a surprise for her, Sanchez said. He drove her to an isolated field and stabbed her once with a 10-inch butcher knife, he said.

Sanchez said he arranged to get Mullin to a hospital about an hour after he stabbed her.

The court reversed the El Paso Eighth Court of Appeals' decision that Sanchez's favorable testimony "amounted to a general denial of guilt and did not raise the issue of a less damaging intent."

The court on Wednesday said that although Sanchez admitted he stabbed Mullin, he did not intend to kill her, since he stabbed her only once and helped her get to the hospital.

"We find that the evidence raised the issue of aggravated assault to the degree that a jury could have found (Sanchez) guilty of that offense but not guilty of the charged offense of attempted capital murder," Judge Marvin Teague wrote for the unanimous court Wednesday.

"We hold that it was error for the trial judge to have refused (Sanchez') requested charge on aggravated assault."

Hopes, dreams and hard work bring 65 young musicians to Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Building Friday and Saturday to compete in the 26th annual National Young Artists Competition.

The competition, sponsored by the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale Inc., first began in 1962 when Dr. Lara Hoggard, then music director of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, envisioned a competition that would allow talented young musicians of high school and college age to compete for recognition and cash awards. Through his efforts and those of the symphony guilds in Midland and Odessa, the competition has experienced steady growth and is now one of the largest and most prestigious events of its kind in the United States.

Students representing 35 secondary schools, colleges, universities, conservatories and institutes of music from 17 states are registered for this year's competition. Piano, strings and winds categories are available for both secondary and college divisions, with a voice category also being offered at the college level.

"This competition is somewhat unique in that it offers recognition in a variety of musical disciplines rather than being limited to a single instrument or groups of musicians," says a news release from the Midland Symphony Guild.

Five distinguished musicians will serve as judges for this year's event. They are Robert Baustian, former conductor of the Santa Fe Opera; James Bonn, piano faculty of the University of Southern California and a recording artist; Erick Friedman, distinguished concert violinist and Artist-in-Residence at the Meadows School, Southern Methodist University, Dallas; Jerome Hines, world-renowned bass with the Metropolitan Opera; and Charles Webb, dean of the School of Music, Indiana University.

This year's prize money of $5,500 has been contributed through the interest and generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Anson, Mr. and Mrs. Earl R. Bruno, Dr. and Mrs. John E. Bauman, Mrs. Raiford H. Burton, Dr. and Mrs. Patrick Leung, Mrs. W.D. Noel, the Beal Foundation, the Davidson Family Charitable Foundation and the Midland Symphony Guild. Mr. and Mrs. Jerome M. Fullinwider are benefactors of the Lara Hoggard Performance Awards. The Performing Winners Transportation Fund is underwritten by Mr. and Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr.

Preliminaries in the various performing divisions will be held Friday and Saturday. The finals will be held at 8 p.m. Saturday in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium. No admission is charged. The public is invited to attend.

The performing winners will return in March to perform with the symphony.

Brenda Satelo, a fifth grader at Bowie Elememtary School, below, was among the students enjoying herself when the "Magnificent Music Machine" descended on the school during the Midland-Odessa Symphony's youth concert Wednesday.

Study shows plane's gyroscope malfunctioned

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Microscopic metallurgical study of the primary attitude gyroscope in the twin-engine aircraft that crashed in Midland on Jan. 4 indicates that the gyroscope was not "spun up" and was not working properly at the moment of impact, said Armond Edwards, senior aviation-safety investigator for the National Transportation Safety Board in Fort Worth.

"We have confirmed through metallurgical examination by microscope that the pilot's attitude gyro was not turning at impact," Edward said Wednesday.

The attitude gyroscope, which also is known as the artificial-horizon instrument, was one of several instrument-panel gyroscopes to indicate the aircraft's relation to the horizon. It was the pilot's primary instrument to indicate the aircraft position in the air.

"All of them were turning with the exception of that one," Edwards said.

The Cessna 414 aircraft, piloted by 49-year-old Melvin Leon Anderson of Midland and formerly of Fort Stockton, fell from the clouds in a spiral dive shortly after its take-off from Midland Airpark on the morning of Jan. 4. The aircraft had flown into clouds, which were at a 500-foot ceiling, said Edwards, who said he has not ascertained from other pilots airborne at that time how high the clouds rose into the sky.

Edwards said four of the aircraft's gyroscopes were located in the post-crash investigation. Another, a vacuum-powered gyroscope, was not found. The gyroscopes variously are powered by vacuum and by direct current (DC) and by alternating current (AC).

"Everything indicates that that one instrument was not working," he said, "and if his (the pilot's) transition (to other instruments) was not quick enough, he could have very well done just what he did — a spiral dive" as a result of vertigo or spatial disorientation. "And he would not be the first to do that."

Officers searching for man who left hospital

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 28-year-old Odessa man hospitalized at Medical Center Hospital after being wounded Jan. 18 during a gunfire exchange with a Monahans police officer continues to be sought by law enforcement agencies after he walked out of the intensive care unit Tuesday and disappeared.

Ector County Sheriff's Capt. Gene Kloss said his office was holding a warrant for Victor Garcia Dominguez charging him with attempted capital murder of a police officer.

Referring to the fact Dominguez was unguarded at the time he left the hospital, Kloss said, "Technically it's our fault, but that's what happens sometimes when you try to be a good samaritan."

Once the warrant was served, he said, an Ector County Sheriff's deputy would have been assigned to guard the wounded man.

Noting Dominguez was in ICU, in stable condition with a bullet wound in his chest, Kloss indicated no one believed he would be in any condition to leave the hospital.

Kloss said deputies have been trying, so far unsuccessfully, to locate relatives of Dominguez living in Odessa. Unconfirmed reports, he said, indicate someone driving a red vehicle was waiting for Dominguez when he left the hospital clothed only in a hospital gown. "He would have had to have some help and some clothes," Kloss said.

According to one police officer, Dominguez can't be charged with escape when, and if, he is located because he had not been formally charged with attempted murder, but was confined only as a patient at MCH.

According to Monahans police, Dominguez was wounded the morning of Jan. 18 after he allegedly pulled a .38 caliber pistol while being chased by Patrolman Kirk McFarlin, stopped and fired at the officer. McFarlin fired a sigle shot that struck Dominguez in the chest.

He was initially hospitalized at the Ward County Hospital and later transferred to Odessa.

A Monahans Police Department spokeswoman said on Jan. 18 that McFarlin had attempted to stop Dominguez because he resembled the description of a suspect sought in connection with three residential burglaries that had occurred earlier that day.

Students hear 'Peter and the Wolf'

The Midland-Odessa Symphony Chamber Orchestra kicked-off its annual series of in-school youth concerts for Midland Independent School District Wednesday with performances of Prokovief's "Peter and the Wolf."

Now in its fourth year, the program, titled the "Magnificent Music Machine," includes 36 performances by the symphony's Chamber Orchestra, Thouvenel String Quartet and the Lone Star Brass Quintet in Midland and Ector County schools. Targeted for fourth, fifth and sixth graders, the program is sponsored by both school districts and the Junior League of Odessa, with additional support from the Texas Commission on the Arts.

"These concerts are structured to teach students abotu symphonic music while also providing an entertaining experience," says Connie Linsler, general manager for the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc.

A video tape and teaching guide are provided to teachers prior to the concert so that the students can prepare for the live musical performance. Merrie Ann Woodward of Odessa is chairman for the youth concerts.

"Ms. Woodward has worked as chairman for the project for the past four years helping to bring quality music to elementary students in the Permian Basin," Ms. Linsler says.

This season's series began Jan. 19 in Odessa and Wednesday in Midland.

Two Midlanders remain jailed on drug charges

From Staff Reports

Police Roundup

Two Midlanders remained in custody this morning following their arrest by Midland County Sheriff's officers Wednesday afternoon.

The two, a 43-year-old man and 37-year-old woman, were expected to be charged later today with possession of heroin, reports said.

The two were arrested about 1:30 p.m. at a house in the 700 block of N. Terrell St., after officers obtained an arrest warrant from Justice of the Peace Robert Pine, reports said.

An undetermined amount of heroin was confiscated by officers, reports said.

In other reports, Midland police are investigating the burglary of a residence in the 1600 block of East Texas Avenue. A cable television converter box valued at $250 and a remote control valued at $50 were stolen, reports said.

Reports said the items were stolen between 1 p.m. Tuesday and 5 p.m. Wednesday from the living room after a side window was smashed.

Man killed in accident

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 22-year-old man thrown from his vehicle as it apparantly careened out of control into a parked car early Tuesday suffered severe multiple internal injuries that resulted in his death.

According to police spokesman John McAhon, Shelby Robert Marvin was headed west in the 3000 block of East University Blvd. about 2:20 a.m. Tuesday when his 1981 Chevrolet Silverado pickup apparently spun out of control, went up over a curb and struck a vehicle owned by James Autry Wiese, which was parked in the driveway of his home at 2405 Nabors Lane.

Officers continued to investigate the accident Wednesday, McAhon said.

Duplex damaged in fire

From Staff Reports

Two duplex units were damaged Wednesday afternoon in a fire which reportedly broke out in a kitchen, Midland fire officials said.

No injuries were reported, officials said.

Five units and nine firefighters responded to the 4:30 p.m. blaze at 1107-B Carrizo St. The fire was quickly brought under control, but the duplex sustained heavy damage, reports said.

The next door unit, 1107-A Carrizo St., sustained moderate smoke damage, reports said.

The cause of the blaze, which started in the kitchen, was undetermined, reports said.

PLANE

Edwards said that the pilot would have to realize that he was "looking at an inaccurate" instrument. "He's got to quit looking at that one and ignore it" and switch to other instruments. And the pilot has only "a few seconds to do that," Edwards said.

"Once you are in the clouds, you just have to ignore your senses and rely on the instruments," Edwards said. Spatial disorientation in the clouds "happens a lot," he said, "and it's what we call vertigo."

The aircraft's turn-and-bank and heading indicators were working," Edwards said.

The attitude gyroscope was AC powered, Edwards said.

Edwards acknowledged a theory among some pilots that after Anderson was airborne, he had placed the aircraft on automatic pilot so that he could leave the cockpit in order to secure an unlatched door. Meanwhile, the automatic pilot disengaged, the theory goes, and the out-of-control aircraft spiraled to Earth.

"That's pure speculation," Edwards said of the theory. "But we would have no way of knowing that. We found the door in the unlatched position," he said, "but that could have been as a result of impact forces."

The post-crash investigation also revealed that the pilot's seat belt — the lap belt — was "hooked up" at time of impact and that the two shoulder harnesses were not hooked up.

In addition, Edwards said that there was nothing to indicate that the wrong fuel, such as jet fuel, was pumped into the airplane's fuel tanks prior to takeoff. The Cessna 414 piloted by Anderson was a propeller-driven, piston-powered executive-type aircraft whose engines ran on aviation gasoline.

"The engines were operating on impact," Edwards said.

Sports Medicine Seminar planned

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital will sponsor its third annual Sports Medicine Seminar Saturday with experts from the local medical community as well as the city's high schools, Texas Tech University and the Dallas Cowboys.

The one-day seminar — to be held at the Holiday Inn Country Villa — will focus on common athletic needs and injuries, a hospital spokeswoman said.

After the course, participants should be able recognize common athletic injuries; evaluate, diagnose and treat many common acute athletic problems; provide basic support for serious acute trauma; tape common sprains effectively and determine if an injured player can return to action.

Lockler will give a talk on the "rehabilitation of the Dallas Cowboys."

MMH has concentrated on sports medicine for the past several years, though 1987 was the first year a three-part sports medicine endeavor was implemented, said Harold Rubin, MMH senior vice president of operations.

This past football season, a sports medicine clinic was opened at the hospital on Saturday mornings from 8 a.m. until noon, Rubin said.

Anyone who had a sports-related injury could walk-in the clinic without an appointment and be treated by one of the four orthopedic surgeons who will speak at the seminar.

A special radiology staff was on duty to take X-rays and physical therapists were on hand to treat the patients as the physicians ordered, he said.

Last year, the hospital saw 70 patients in that clinic during the football season, Rubin said.

Secondly, the hospital used the "X-ray Express" during football season which provided to injured football players a quick ambulance ride to the hospital for X-rays to be taken.

X-rays were taken during the football game and coaches, trainers and physicians could make instant decisions on whether a player could return to the game.

The hospital also sponsors a "Sports-Med Line" — a phone number anyone can call and receive advice on treatment of an injury, Rubin said.

That number is 683-TEAM.

If medical assistance was needed, the Sports-Med Line acted as a referral system to one of the orthopedic surgeons at the hospital.

For those less active than a football player, the hospital offers its "mall-walking" program in which MMH nurses two days a week are at the mall to check the blood pressures of mall-walkers.

Rubin said the hospital offers several sports-medicine seminars throughout the year.

The vice president said he believed there was a need in the Midland community for a program of this nature.

The orthopedic surgeons are interested in specializing in the sports medicine area and Rubin said the hospital has devoted its assistance to helping them realize that goal.

The seminar is also sponsored by Midland College, the Region 18 Education Service Center and Tech's University Health Sciences Center.

Buzzell announces constable candidacy

From Staff Reports

Hugh L. "Buzz" Buzzell has announced his candidacy in the Midland County Constable's race. He is running on the March 8 Republican Primary ticket.

Buzzell has over 12 years of law enforcement experience and began his career as a reserve police officer in Nolanville, while stationed at Fort Hood. Upon retiring from the U.S. Army in 1978, Buzzell joined the Midland County Sheriff's Department as a patrol deputy and later went on to earn the rank of captain.

He joined the constable's office under the jurisdiction of Tom McGinnis in 1981 as a patrol officer. In this position Buzzell filled many roles including traffic enforcement officer, which resulted in multiple DWI arrests and convictions. He also assisted other law enforcement agencies as a backup officer, responded to complaints of animal bites and checked for rabid animals in the county.

"When I started working with Constable McGinnis there were only three of us — McGinnis, one other deputy and myself," said Buzzell, reflecting on the duties he performed.

"We worked long, hard hours to accomplish the things that had to be done," he said.

In 1982 Buzzell received an associate of applied science degree in law enforcement from Midland College and taught Civil Procedures and Process at the Permian Basin Law Enforcement Academy and Defensive Driving at MC.

During his 23-year military career, Buzzell earned several awards and decorations, including the Distinguished Flying Cross, three Purple Hearts and recognition for valor and meritorious service. He served as a helicopter crew chief, flight engineer, instructor and supervisor. Before leaving the military, he was the post aviation maintenance supervisor at Fort Hood.

Buzzell, who is a safety and security agent at Midland Memorial Hospital, says he enjoys working with people and believes his various leadership positions, education and background in law enforcement and the military will be an asset to the constable's office.

With schedule adjustments, the department will be able to have a deputy on duty more hours of the day, Monday through Saturday, without an increase in deputies or expense, he said.

"The Midland Constable's office is a very hard working, proud agency. It is one of the few active constable departments in Texas. If given the opportunity to work with the present staff, I feel that we can increase the production and pride of the department," Buzzell said.

Dallas officers to patrol in pairs

DALLAS (AP) — Police Chief Billy Prince has ordered officers to temporarily patrol in pairs as a safety move in response to two police slayings in the past two weeks.

The order Wednesday came a day before the funeral of 25-year-old John Glenn Chase, who was shot to death Saturday by a mentally disturbed homeless man. Scores of law officers from Texas traveled to Iowa to attend the funeral.

Prince said the pairing up of officers would reduce the number of patrols by 30 percent. But he said he didn't expect the move would decrease police response time on emergency calls.

He said the patrols would be evaluated after two weeks.

Assistant Chief John Driscoll said officers will continue to respond in person to major calls, but no longer will answer non-violent calls and other requests in which the only immediate action by police is to make a written report of the incident.

Meanwhile, Dallas city officials, under fire from police and citizens, sought a time of reconciliation.

The slaying prompted an outpouring of both grief and outrage by Dallas residents who rallied to the side of the embattled police department.

"Citizens on the street today think it's OK to shoot down an officer on the street in cold blood," said Bob Jenevein, one of several residents who addressed the council at its regular meeting Wednesday. "...There is an alarming percentage of the community that harbors hate for the police department. I believe some of you (council members) nurture that."

The police department has been under fire in recent months for police shootings of minority residents. A citizens' review board with limited investigative and subpoena powers was created a month ago to handle complaints against the police.

After a televised town meeting on the issue Wednesday evening, Dallas County Commissioner John Wiley Price said he would request a federal investigation of the mostly white police department for what he said were civil rights violations.

But Mayor Annette Strauss said a federal investigation would only increase tensions.

In Des Moines, Iowa, police spokesman Sgt. Thomas Van Baale estimated 130 police officers from Dallas would attend Chase's funeral there at 10 a.m. today.

The funeral was moved from the Westover Funeral Home to the larger First Assembly of God Church because of the large crowd that was expected. Besides police in Texas, hundreds of law officers from other states also were expected, Van Baale said.

A memorial service in Dallas on Tuesday drew about 3,000 people.

At Wednesday's City Council meeting, Mrs. Strauss sought to ease tensions between the city and its police and citizens by proclaiming a day of honor and reflection in memory of Chase and slain officer James Joe.

Joe, a black officer, was shot by a burglary suspect at a Dallas apartment complex less than two weeks ago.

The day also was a "tribute to their fellow officers whose continued exemplary performance of their duties is deeply appreciated," she said.

The City Council also adopted a resolution calling upon council members to ride on patrol with police and to support neighborhood Crime Watch programs.

The council delayed a vote on a five-year affirmative action plan for the police department to consider an amendment requiring that the selection criteria"continue to reflect the highest level of proficiency."

The plan calls for increasing the percentage of black police officers from 15 percent to 29 percent and the number of Hispanics from 7 percent to 12 percent by 1992. The goal is based on the racial breakdown of the city's 1980 population.

Council members unanimously approved spending $1.08 million to carry out other improvements in police department operations called for by a mayoral committee and two special reports.

But the council came under attack later from a string of citizens who said they support the police.

Billie Tyler, who said she is the mother of a police officer, complained that "every night we get a double dose of council members Diane Ragsdale and Al Lipscomb," two black council members who have often criticized police in cases in which minority residents were shot by police officers.

"Where are the rest of you?" she asked before Ms. Ragsdale complained.

A newspaper call-in poll attracted its largest ever response to the question: "Are the Dallas police getting the support they deserve?"

The Dallas Times Herald's Sound-Off Survey published Wednesday had 10,201 telephone calls, with almost 82 percent answering no and 18 percent saying yes.

Oklahoma City officers show support for slain Dallas officer

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — About a dozen Oklahoma City police cars lined Interstate 35 early Wednesday with their emergency lights flashing to show support for Dallas police as a convoy of cars bound for a slain officer's funeral in Iowa passed through the city.

Dallas officer John Glenn Chase was killed on a Dallas street with his own service revolver last week by a mentally disturbed homeless man.

Kent Harville, an Oklahoma City crime lab specialist, said city police dispatchers broadcast an alert to officers about 4 a.m. that the convoy from Dallas would pass through Oklahoma City on I-35.

"They alerted officers so that any who weren't on calls could go out there as a show of support for their fallen brother officer," Harville said.

He said a dozen officers parked their cars on both sides of I-35 and turned on emergency flashers as two Dallas police cruisers and two civilian cars sped through escorted by Oklahoma Highway Patrol troopers.

Michael Patterson, of the Dallas police public service office at the central division where Chase worked, said the convoy of Dallas patrol cars was escorting family friends to the officer's funeral in Des Moines. The mourners were driving the slain officer's cars and carrying his personal belongings to Iowa, Patterson said.

Chase is to be buried in Des Moines and Patterson said Chase's wife Joanne had already flown to Iowa where she intends to move.

Des Moines police Sgt. Thomas Van Baale, who said he was acting as a spokesman for Chase's family, said the Dallas patrol cars are to take part in a funeral motorcade in Des Moines expected to include up to 200 police vehicles from various departments.

"The family certainly appreciates all the law enforcement officers across the midwest and across the nation," Van Baale said. "It goes to show the solidarity and brotherhood among law enforcement officers."

FREE HEARING TESTS SET FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

MIDLAND - Hearing Centers of America, Inc., announces the grand opening of a new hearing aid facility in La Villita Office Building, 3325 W. Wadley, Suite 115. (Formerly Better Hearing Consultants). In celebration, Hearing Centers of America, Inc. will be providing FREE electronic hearing tests to senior citizens, for the next three Mondays, by appointment only.

The tests have been arranged for anyone who suspects they are losing their hearing. Such persons generally say they can hear but not understand conversation. Testing with the latest electronic equipment will indicate whether your hearing can be helped electronically.

Everyone, especially those over 60, should have an electronic hearing test at least once a year. If there is a hearing problem, a free hearing test may reveal that newly developed methods of correction will help, even for those who have been told in the past that a hearing aid will not help them.

Available for inspection on the test days will be features found in the Automated Hearing Systems. These aids are especially designed for nerve deafness. No standard batteries to buy, rechargeable. No need to adjust volume control wheel.

Call 699-3001 today to schedule your FREE hearing test by a state licensed Hearing Specialist.

Clements urges minority plan in schools

By JEANETTE ALLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements Wednesday urged the Higher Education Coordinating board to develop a statewide equal opportunity program for minorities in state-supported colleges and universities.

A federally mandated program, the Texas Equal Educational Opportunity Plan expires in August, but Clements said it must be replaced with an improved program since colleges and universites have continually failed to reach their minority retention and recruitment goals.

"We must do everything we can to lower the dropout rate, which now claims one in every three black students and close to half of our Hispanic students before high school graduation," Clements said.

Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, chairman of the Committee on Higher Education, said Texas must remain committed to meeting federal and legislative goals for equal opportunity programs.

"Unfortunately the statistics show the people we need the most have the highest dropout rate," Ms. Delco said in a committee meeting Wednesday.

She called on college and university administrators to make the program a priority since statistics show more than half of the state's population under 30 will likely be black or Hispanic within 10 years.

"I encourage you to look internally and externally to see how you can play a role in the economic development and success of Texas," Ms. Delco said.

Texas is no longer legally required to provide equal opportunity education since a U.S. district judge dismissed a case which named Texas as a state that had fallen short in providing equal opportunities to minorities.

Gerald Wright, director of the Coordinating Board's equal opportunity program, said the state should improve equal opportunity "through programs and approaches which would accomplish more than simply reducing statistical disparities, one of the current Texas plan's main objectives."

Wright said Texas higher education institutions missed their goal for black enrollment from 1978 to 1986 by 2,412 students and for Hispanic enrollment by 2,536.

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin missed its black enrollment goal by four students and its Hispanic goal by 18 students.

Wright presented seven recommendations to improve equal opportunity.

Couple's lives evolve around Railey

DALLAS (AP) — The parents of Peggy Railey say they haven't given up hope even though doctors say their daughter will probably never regain consciousness from a coma.

Bill and Billie Jo Nicolai say their lives now revolve around caring for their daughter. They are either at the Tyler nursing home where their daughter lies or driving the 14 miles to it. They say they eat when they can and sleep when they can.

Doctors say Mrs. Railey will probably never regain consciousness — that her body is alive, but her brain is dead.

"How do you stop hoping?" Nicolai said. "We can't. We will always hope that one day she'll come out of it. She'll just wake up."

Former Methodist minister Walker Railey has transfered guardianship of his 39-year-old wife to her parents and left his children in the care of a Dallas couple. He moved to California in November, saying he needed to escape the despair that has haunted him since the near-fatal choking attack on his wife at their home last April.

Despite doctors' explanations that Mrs. Railey's brain is dead, her family said that her eyes sometimes follow their movements through the room.

"Peggy wouldn't want to be living like this. I know it," her grandmother, 87-year-old Ella Renfro, said in an interview with Dallas Times Herald columnist Laura Miller last week. "I'm old enough to know that there are things worse than death, and this is one of them."

But there is no decision to be made about life support, because Mrs. Railey is not hooked up to any machines.

She wears a permanent plastic mouth guard, which her mother removes every day to brush her teeth. She is physically carried by nursing home attendants into a shower three times a week, and on other days she is given a sponge bath in bed.

STATE IN BRIEF

Person who hits police officer's horse could be jailed or fined

AUSTIN (AP) — Anyone who strikes or hits an Austin Police Department horse may be trotted off to jail or fined if the city adopts an ordinance proposed by police.

Protection of the horses, mounted officers and bystanders are the main reasons for the ordinance to be considered by the City Council today, said Senior Sgt. Harold Bilberry.

Currently, there is no city law that specifically addresses mistreatment of the animals.

The proposed ordinance makes it "unlawful for any person to intentionally, knowingly or recklessly strike, prod, torment, injure, or make any physical contact with a horse, whether mounted or unmounted, which is in use on official duties by an officer of the Austin Police Mounted Patrol."

The unit is made up of six officers and one senior sergeant who patrol the hike and bike trail, downtown and neighborhoods with high daytime burglary rates, Bilberry said.

Sea World's 1,000 jobs filled

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Sea World of Texas has stopped taking applications after being flooded with 80,000 telephone calls from people wanting to interview for 1,000 jobs, company officials said.

A two-day deluge of telephone calls forced marine park officials to cancel its third day of scheduling appointments, leaving many would-be applicants disappointed.

The company filled all 9,000 of its job interview slots by 4:30 p.m. Tuesday.

The 1,000 permanent employees will begin work in time to train for the park's April 15 opening.

The 250-acre, $140 million theme park is being built about 13 miles northwest of downtown. A grand opening event has been scheduled for May 28, Memorial Day.

Cheap fare to Paris canceled

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines canceled a $398 round-trip discount fare from New Jersey to Paris after the French government rejected the fare, company officials said.

"International flights are not deregulated like it is for flights in the United States. Some of it has to do with protecting the national carrier," said Continental spokesman Rick Scott on Wednesday.

Airlines can refile with countries if their fares are rejected, but Scott said he didn't know if Continental would do so.

Continental will honor Paris discount tickets already purchased by passengers. The lowest Continental rate to Paris is a $448 round trip, Scott said.

On other airlines such as Air France — France's national carrier — the regular round-trip coach fare between New York and Paris, without advance booking or other restrictions, is about $1,400 to $1,600.

The United Kingdom has yet to rule on Continental's $298 round-trip discount fare to London from Newark, N.J., Miami and Houston, offered two weeks ago.

Coast Guard to shut down office

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The Coast Guard's 11-member Brownsville detachment will be closed as part of a series of cutbacks, an official with the agency said.

The Brownsville office operates under the jurisdiction of the Coast Guard's Corpus Christi office to investigate pollution violations and check ships and facilities for compliance with U.S. regulations.

Although details of the closure are not yet available, Lt. Paul Zukunft, with the inspection department of the agency's Marine Safety Office in Corpus Christi, said it appears his personnel will absorb duties performed by the Brownsville detachment.

With the shutdown, the area handled by the 45-member Corpus Christi office will stretch from Palacios to the Mexican border, or about 300 miles of coastline.

Old cattle vaccine discarded

BEAUMONT (AP) — About 100 old bottles of a cattle vaccine found in a carriage house under restoration were disposed of by a waste management company because they posed a possible threat to humans, officials said.

Kenneth Sanderfer, supervisor of buildings and grounds at the McFaddin-Ward House museum, said an employee found the bottles, each dated 1919, about three months ago.

"One of my workers told me there were some old vaccines in the carriage house," Sanderfer said. "When I saw some of it was anthrax (vaccine), that's when I told him there was a possible danger and we should check into it. The crazy thing is, anthrax can live for decades," he said. "And in this vaccine they used the live spore."

The Texas Department of Health and Texas A&M University's School of Veterinary Medicine confirmed the slight possibility that the anthrax spores might remain active in the old cattle vaccine, but none of the state and federal agencies had safe disposal capabilities.

Finally on Friday, Bio Waste Management Inc. transported the bottles to its infectious waste incinerator in Baytown.

Anthrax, a disease that affects humans and animals, is caused by bacteria that form a hard shell, or spores, allowing it to survive longer than most pathogens.

The last recorded anthrax outbreak in Southeast Texas affected cattle in 1976, but human cases in the United States are rare.

AFL-CIO board split over court candidate

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The question of whether to endorse a conservative incumbent Democratic state Supreme Court justice or a young challenger who appears more sensitive to labor concerns split the Texas AFL-CIO Executive Board Wednesday.

President Harry Hubbard directed Willie Chapman, the group's political director, to research Justice Raul Gonzalez's voting record before the board submits its recommendations to the full labor convention Friday afternoon. At least one board member, Houston plumber Phillip Lord, promised a floor fight if the board backs Gonzalez.

Art Vega of San Antonio, a 35-year-old political newcomer and Gonzalez's primary opponent, seemed to pick up support as he recounted his 10 years of legal work on behalf of San Antonio unions. "You need a justice up there that is going to be for the people, the people being the working class," Vega said.

He accused Gonzalez of "aligning himself with the major corporations and the insurance companies" and read off a list of Gonzalez's votes he claimed justified that position.

"I know where I've been and I know where I'm coming from," Vega said as he held up a left hand that lost a ring finger to an industrial accident at age 19.

Gonzalez, who earned labor's endorsement in 1986 before becoming the first Hispanic to win statewide office in Texas, said he would "bring balance and name identification" to the Democratic ticket in the fall. "In the three years that I've been on the Supreme Court, I think I have a very proud record on the issues you are interested in," he told the board.

Dally Willis of the Communications Workers of America claimed that Vega lacked Gonzalez' experience and name ID to win a statewide race. "We're going to have to have some liberals and some conservatives in order to pull that ticket together," Willis said.

Other board members said labor should take more of an ideological stance. "We are looking at an incumbent Democratic candidate who has gored our ox," John O'Sullivan of the Texas Federation of Teachers said of Gonzalez. "This man is not your friend."

Added Gloria Parra of the San Antonio Central Labor Council, "He has not been voting on people issues the way we would like it."

Before the public disagreement, Hubbard emphasized the importance of the 1988 judicial races. "Whether you know it or not, they're going after them, 'they' being our enemy," he said.

In addition to Gonzalez and Vega, 11 other Democratic candidates for the Supreme Court, the Court of Criminal Appeals and the Railroad Commission asked for labor's endorsement Wednesday. Several candidates drew applause by promising to serve their full terms if elected, pointing out that Gov. Bill Clements has made three Republican appointments to statewide posts.

West Texas becoming crossroads in ongoing war against drugs

By HOLDEN LEWIS

FORT STOCKTON (AP) — Pecos County sheriff's deputies used to stand outside at twilight and watch private airplanes heading south over the mesas and mountains toward Mexico.

The deputies knew many of the planes would return loaded with marijuana and cocaine. They also knew they had virtually no chance of breaking the Mexican connection.

"We used to say, 'There's a convoy — I wonder if we'll see them tonight,'" deputy Lynn Holland said.

These days, however, the deputies don't joke about the drug smugglers anymore. It's hard to make light of a losing war.

"We're definitely seeing an increase — especially in cocaine — in drugs being transited through Mexico," said Jerry Padalino, tactical coordinator for Operation Alliance.

The 1½-year-old task force tries to combat drug-smuggling by sharing information among local, state and federal law enforcement agencies, coordinating undercover work, working with Mexican authorities and improving electronic surveillance of the border.

Padalino and other federal authorities say the increased drug traffic into West Texas and the rest of the U.S.-Mexico border is due to greater demand, plus law enforcement pressure on smugglers in south Florida.

"There's definitely more use of cocaine, and there's some movement into this area from Florida," said Ernest Perez, agent-in-charge with the DEA in El Paso.

But Jack Flynn, assistant director of U.S. Customs in El Paso, was quick to say that Florida smuggling routes are still being used, and he's wary of sweeping statements about drug operations shifting from Florida to the U.S.-Mexico border.

"I think everybody believes that's the case, but I'm not sure the basis for it has been proven statistically," he said.

Nevertheless, statistics have shown a phenomenal increase in drug traffic into Texas in the past three years. Until 1987, the largest cocaine seizures in West Texas were no bigger than 11 kilograms, or about 24 pounds, Perez said. A 55-pound seizure Sept. 18, 1986, near Las Cruces, N.M., was the largest cocaine bust in the region to that date.

But 1987 brought huge cocaine seizures: 663 pounds near Las Cruces on Feb. 2 and 1,997 pounds at the same checkpoint Aug. 12.

Then, on Sept. 14, 1987, U.S. Customs inspectors at an international bridge east of El Paso discovered that the inside and outside measurements of an empty tractor-trailer trying to cross did not match.

They found 3,589 pounds of rock cocaine hidden in a false wall in the front of the trailer. It was the largest overland cocaine seizure in Customs history.

In fiscal 1986, authorities seized 3,975 pounds of cocaine along the U.S.-Mexican border; in fiscal 1987, they seized 18,744 pounds of cocaine, according to Operation Alliance figures.

Seizures of marijuana rose from 132,900 pounds to 298,082 pounds. In 1987, more than half the marijuana seizures and about 40 percent of the cocaine seizures, were made along the Texas border.

But authorities say at least two-thirds of the shipments go undetected.

"Narcotics smugglers are very well organized and have a lot of money," Padalino said. "In many cases, I think the narcotics smugglers are better-equipped than the U.S. government."

Smugglers have been caught with exotic weaponry, and have even been known to use infrared night-vision devices and sophisticated scanners and radios.

They enter Texas by wading across the Rio Grande, by driving cars and trucks across bridges or by flying over the border. Authorities don't know which method is used most often.

"If we did, that's what we'd go after — this week," Padalino said.

Crossing by air is probably the best method to elude authorities, and the planes don't even need conventional landing strips, officials said.

"The thing about West Texas is on a moonlit night, you can land on any highway or farm-to-market road," said Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, who has said he cultivates drug informants in Mexico. "Usually, you don't know about it until the next day, and usually you find out when you see the skid marks where they landed."

WORLD

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — Nicaraguan officials and the Contra rebels said they will present specific proposals when they sit down together for the first time in an attempt to reach a cease-fire in their 6-year-old war.

But with their negotiating positions far apart and essentially unchanged since they were first announced in November, it seemed unlikely that either side was prepared to bend enough to satisfy the other.

President Oscar Arias of Costa Rica, whose efforts were largely responsible for bringing the two sides together, said he was not "too optimistic" about the talks, scheduled to begin today.

The outcome of the negotiations could influence the fate of President Reagan's new $36.25 million aid request for the Contras, all but $3.6 million of it for food, medicine and other non-military supplies.

Reagan submitted the request to Congress on Wednesday and asked that the $3.6 million in military aid be held in escrow until March 31 to give the two sides another chance to settle their differences.

Marlin Fitzwater, chief White House spokesman, acknowledged the aid request faced an uphill battle and said its defeat would end the Contra movement, upon which the administration has largely based its Nicaraguan policy for years.

The House will vote on Reagan's request on Feb. 3. If it passes, the Senate will consider it the next day.

"In the middle of the peace process going on in Central America now, we consider that this request, if approved, will be disastrous," Victor Hugo Tinoco, the Nicaraguan deputy foreign minister, told a news conference on Wednesday after he arrived for the talks in San Jose.

"We hope rationality will prevail in the U.S. Congress and they will opt for peace, and not for war, in Central America," said Tinoco, who heads his government's negotiating team.

Tinoco also said he wanted "to let it be known that we're bringing, obviously, some plans, some proposals" to the talks, but declined to reveal them until they were presented to the Contras.

He again rejected a Contra demand that the talks deal not only with the mechanics of a cease-fire, but with what the rebels say are the social and political causes of the war.

Tinoco said political talks between the government and internal opposition groups, which broke down in December, were likely to resume soon in Managua, obviating the need to expand the cease-fire negotiations.

Alfredo Cesar, a director of the Contra umbrella organization known as the Nicaraguan Resistance, spelled out his group's negotiating position in a news conference in San Jose last week.

"No cease-fire will take place in Nicaragua if ... simultaneously the democratic reforms have not been achieved," he said.

In a statement released Wednesday in Washington and San Jose, the Nicaraguan Resistance repeated that position and once again called for three-way talks including the internal opposition.

The internal opposition, represented by a coalition of business, political and labor groups known as the Democratic Coordinating Council, has called on the Sandinistas to step down and permit creation of a "provisional government of national unity."

Adolfo Calero, another director of the Nicaraguan Resistance and the head of its largest fighting force, said Contra leaders would not participate in the proposed provisional government. That appeared to be an attempt to deflect Sandinista criticism that the Contras seek a return to Nicaragua's past.

The leftist Sandinistas have tried to brand the Contras as followers of former Nicaraguan dictator Anastosio Somoza, whom the Sandinistas ousted in 1979. Several Contra leaders, however, are former Sandinistas.

Arias, referring to what he said were his experiences in a recent meeting of Central American presidents, told reporters he hoped the two sides would keep at their talks "for at least two or three days."

UFO tale blamed on meteortites

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — A woman who said a UFO chased her car, picked it up and tossed it to the ground on a lonely outback highway may have lost control of the vehicle during a meteorite shower, an expert said today.

"There is nothing known that could physically pick up a car and do what apparently happened," said Charles Morgan of the Sydney Observatory.

"Either they went into fright and went into a spin without realizing or it is an unexplained phenomenon," he said.

Police accepted Faye Knowles' account of what happened as she drove with her three sons from Perth across the desolate Nullabor Plain in Western Australia before dawn on Jan. 20.

At about the same time, the crew of a tuna fishing boat in the Great Australia Bight, about 50 miles from where Mrs. Knowles was, told police a bright object buzzed their boat and made their speech sound slurred.

Mrs. Knowles also reported her voice and those of her children became distorted while the car was airborne and that the encounter with the unidentified flying object had left their vehicle covered in ash.

Morgan said the car could have been hit by a large carbonous meterorite shower, which would explain the ash and the Knowles' claim of "the smell of dead bodies" inside the car.

"Carbonous meterorites give off a smell. If it is large enough they also can give off a sonic boom that could explain the hearing problems they experienced," Morgan said. "But there's no explanation for the car being picked up unless they drove off the road, hit a bump and went into the air."

Mrs. Knowles' story captured front-page headlines across Australia.

She claimed the glowing egg-shaped object chased her car after she spotted it through the rear window, and that she drove at 120 mph trying to escape.

"It apparently picked the car up off the road, shook it quite violently and forced the car back (down on the road) with such pressure that one of the tires was blown," said Sgt. Jim Furnell of South Australia state police.

Mrs. Knowles drove 400 miles to the Ceduna police station in neighboring South Australia state to report the incident.

Furnell said the roof of the car was dented and covered in a blackish-grey ash and that the Knowles family was visibly shaken. He said forensic scientists had yet to examine the car and probably would report next week.

He said police were taking both UFO sightings seriously.

Four still missing after Mexican mine explosion

LAS ESPERANZAS, Mexico (AP) — Rescuers recovered three more bodies Wednesday, raising to 33 the toll from a mine explosion and fire, as grieving friends and relatives gathered at churches in northern Coahuila state to mourn their dead.

Four additional bodies were still being sought. Thirty-seven men were believed killed.

Joaquin Vazquez, a spokesman for the mine owner, said two bodies were brought to the surface Wednesday afternoon and one that morning.

The company held out no hope for survivors.

Some families, waiting since Monday for news, kept a vigil outside the mine gates.

"Have you heard anything about my son?" one weeping woman asked all those who passed.

In this town of around 10,000 about six miles from the mine, a Roman Catholic Mass was held for the 16 local residents who died in Monday's explosion at "Mine 4½," operated by Hullera Mexicana.

Church bells rang, the miners union flag flew at half mast and school was canceled as the community mourned.

"The bells are ringing sadly," said schoolteacher Rose Irene Campos. "Almost everybody is touched by this. So many people died."

Maria Herrera, whose cousin, Enrique Ramirez Herrera, died in the blast, said, "It affects us all because we're all like brothers here."

The 33-year-old Ramirez left behind a pregnant wife and two children. His body was recovered late Tuesday.

"The community lost a responsible man and an affectionate father," Ramirez's brother said at his funeral.

Hipolito Chavez Vaquera, a mechanical engineer at another mine, said his father was one of the 17 men hospitalized after Monday's blast.

"Every job has its risks and here there's not anything but the mines. What else can you expect?" he said.

Still, Chavez said the explosion was "not just an accident," as mine officials said. Authorities said a transformer in the mine short-circuited, causing an explosion and fire that burned throughout the day Monday.

Chavez said it was not uncommon for a transformer to short-circuit in a mine.

But he added: "The person in charge of security should have checked to make sure there was no carbon monoxide gas. If there's enough ventilation you can even solder in a mine. If the area would have been well-ventilated, nothing would have happened."

"This really was an accident," said Hugo Garcia Beanda, spokesman for the government steel company Sidermex, which owns Hullera. "It didn't have anything to do with neglect or lack of prudence."

Garcia said the mine company planned to establish an independent commision to investigate the explosion.

Relatives who waited outside the gates of the mine pleaded with authorities for news of the missing.

"It's my brother who's inside. We're family. We want to know what's happening," said Augustin Aredondo Alfaro, who was asking about his missing brother Juan Hilario. Aredondo said the explosion has made him think twice about his own job in the mine.

"Now I'm afraid. The money they pay us isn't sufficient to risk ourselves for this," said Aredondo, who said he earned about 10,000 pesos, or just over $4.50 a day in another mine.

"For me, mining was the best. Now I feel very undecided."

Francisco Chavez, 26, who escaped the blast without injury, said he is considering looking for other work. "It's a miracle that I got out," he said.

U.S., South Korea deploy troops despite North Korean warnings

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — South Korea and the United States today said they will deploy 200,000 troops with warships and jets in major military exercises, despite North Korean warnings that the region faces war.

A joint statement announcing the annual Team Spirit exercises said North Korea was informed today of the plans and told there was no hostile intention. The communist north was invited to send observers to check on the exercises.

"The purpose of this prior notification and invitation is to ensure that there is no misunderstanding about the nature of this recurring, annual defensive training event," the statement said.

South Korean and American press reports had speculated the exercises might be canceled this year to avoid antagonizing North Korea while Seoul is hosting the 1988 Olympic Games.

But U.S. officials said today that as far as they knew there had been no plans to cancel the exercises. The officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said planning had been underway for 18 months and the announcement was made at the normal time.

"We've been planning this for a long time," said one U.S. official.

The exercises will involve 60,000 U.S. military personnel and 140,000 South Korean troops, officials said. About 40,000 American troops from bases in the Pacific and the United States will be brought in to boost American forces based in South Korea, they said.

New blood test may identify people with alcoholic tendencies

BOSTON (AP) — A new blood test that can identify alcoholics even when they haven't had a drink for years may someday enable doctors to spot children likely to become afflicted with the disease, researchers said.

The test's developers say it could also help physicians identify alcoholics early so they can be treated before their disease causes permanent damage.

In their study published last week, the researchers said they're uncertain whether the differences they found are the result of years of alcohol abuse or whether they reflect some inherited difference in the biological makeup of alcoholics.

"The study may simply provide a means for distinguishing individuals who drink a lot," said Dr. Boris Tabakoff, a researcher at the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. "For physicians, it is imperative to know whether problems may be alcohol related. It's awfully difficult to get a very accurate consumption history from individuals...

"On the other hand," he said, "it may be more profound. It may indicate individuals who have an inherent predisposition to have problems with alcohol."

Alcoholism is sometimes passed from generation to generation. Tabakoff has begun studying children of alcoholics to see if they are more likely to have the abnormalities measured by the blood test. If so, the test could be used to identify these children early so they could be taught to avoid alcohol.

The researchers said their test, which measures two blood chemicals, was about 75 percent accurate in distinguishing alcoholics from people who don't have drinking problems.

Tabakoff developed the test with colleagues from the University of Illinois at Chicago and the Westside Veterans Administration Medical Center in Chicago. A report on the work was published in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Between 8 percent and 10 percent of all men and 1 percent and 2 percent of all women in the United States are estimated to abuse alcohol. Alcohol contributed to about 69,000 deaths in 1980.

The new test measures the activity of two chemicals produced by platelets, the blood cells responsible for clotting. The substances are enzymes called monoamine oxidase and adenylate cyclase.

Based on tests of the blood of 95 male alcoholics and a comparison group of 33 people who did not have drinking problems, the researchers found that the activity of the two enzymes was significantly reduced in alcoholics.

The differences were even apparent in 10 alcoholics who had not taken a drink for periods ranging from one to four years.

In an editorial in the journal, Dr. Theodore Reich of Jewish Hospital of St. Louis said that the measurements "hold great promise."

Childbirth costs in the U.S.

The average costs for a natural childbirth (excluding physician costs) total $1,730 and the average hospital stay is 2.6 days. For Cesarean births, the stay is 4.6 days and average costs are more than $3,000. Room and board costs accounted for about 30 percent of the total expenditures for both types of delivery.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. infant death rate stopped improving in 1985 while the health of many infants, children and mothers worsened, says an analysis released Monday.

"If the infant mortality rate is a barometer of the health and conscience of a nation, the state of the union is in jeopardy," said Marion Wright Edelman, president of the Children's Defense Fund.

The fund released a report entitled "The Health of America's Children: Maternal and Child Health Data Book."

"Saving our babies' lives is not a budget issue. It is not a deficit issue. It is not a political issue. It is a moral issue," Edelman said in a statement timed to coincide with President Reagan's State of the Union address.

The 250-page CDF book, based on federal statistics, says the rate of infant deaths in the first year of life went from 10.8 per 1,000 in 1984 to 10.6 per 1,000 in 1985. The National Center for Health Statistics said the drop could have been the result of random chance and was not statistically significant, the analysis noted.

The overall U.S. infant mortality rate put it at 19th in the world for 1985. But CDF said the rate for black infants alone would put the United States in 28th place — below Cuba, Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria, among others.

While the U.S. mortality rate for all infants stayed flat, "virtually every crucial indicator of maternal and infant health deteriorated in 1985," said Sara Rosenbaum, an author of the CDF book. She cited the following erosion from 1984 to 1985:

— Neonatal mortality — death within the first 28 days of life — rose nationally for black infants for the first time in more than 20 years, from 11.8 per 1,000 to 12.1 per 1,000.

— The low birthweight rate — babies born under 5.5 pounds — increased for the first time in more than two decades, from 6.7 percent to 6.8 percent.

— The rate of premature babies increased, from 9.4 percent to 9.8 percent of all births.

— The rate of maternal mortality — death during pregnancy or within 42 days of its termination — rose from 16.9 to 18.1 deaths per 100,000 live births among black and nonwhite women.

— The percentage of infants born to women who received late, inadequate or no prenatal care increased from 1984 to 1985. Nearly one-quarter of all babies in 1985 were born to mothers who did not receive medical care during the critical first trimester.

While some of these changes were small, CDF's Dana Hughes said the National Center for Health Statistics considers them statistically significant because they could not be attributed to chance.

Rosenbaum called the worsening indicators "the inevitable consequence of a number of years of extreme poverty coupled with erosion in virtually all social welfare programs."

Genital herpes common, less serious than once thought

EDITOR'S NOTE: Nobody talks much about herpes anymore, but health experts generally agree that at least one in four Americans is now infected with the disease. The good news is that most people who have it don't know it and a drug that became available in the early 1980s has proven to be an effective treatment.

By DANIEL Q. HANEY

BOSTON (AP) — In the early 1980s, fear of herpes approached hysteria. Then that fear seemed to evaporate, replaced in the headlines by a sexually transmitted disease that kills — acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

But even though AIDS is immeasurably worse, genital herpes is still very much with us — more so than health officials even recently imagined. The news, though, is actually good. General agreement has emerged among the experts that genital herpes is a common disease, but not a very serious one.

How common? Consider these facts, which coalesce from recent surveys:

— Probably one-quarter to one-third of all adult Americans are infected with the genital herpes virus.

— Most of them caught their herpes from a sexual partner who showed no obvious signs of the disease.

— Most people who have it don't know it.

— Those with sores that come back regularly are a small, unlucky minority of all the people with herpes.

"The important thing to realize is that these viruses have evolved with the human species over many thousands of years," says Dr. Stephen Straus of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

"Clever infectious agents are not ones that kill their hosts," he continues. "They're ones that find mechanisms for spreading and persisting without causing much damage. As with most infections, the damage that we recognize is the tip of the iceberg. Most of it goes on below levels of detection. Therefore we really have very little to fear."

The herpes simplex viruses are among the most ubiquitous of all the parasites that find a home inside the human body. An estimated 170 million Americans have them. Once the herpes virus gets established, it stays for life.

The virus actually stitches its genetic material into the genes of nerve cells. It may lie there dormant forever. Or it may snap to life from time to time, making new copies of itself and perhaps causing some herpes sores on the skin.

The virus comes in two varieties — herpes simplex virus Type 1, which causes cold sores, and Type 2, which causes genital herpes. They are about 50 percent alike.

Perhaps the greatest concern a few years ago was that mothers with herpes would pass it to their babies at birth. Dr. Charles G. Prober of Stanford University says many still worry about this.

"We see a lot of women who are paralyzed because they know they've got herpes, and they think it means the baby is going to die," he says. "And it's just not the case."

Generally, doctors deliver babies through Caesarean section if the mother has obvious herpes sores during labor. Babies can become seriously ill or even die if they catch herpes during birth. A Caesarean is not an absolute guarantee that the virus won't be transmitted, but infants rarely catch it from their mothers.

Studies show that when an infected mother shows no signs of an obvious herpes flare-up, there is still a 1 percent chance that she is shedding the virus in her birth canal. But even when the virus is present, there is only a 5 percent chance that she will give it to her baby.

Experts once estimated that perhaps 5 percent to 10 percent of Americans had genital herpes.

Recently, however, a test has become available that can distinguish between the two forms of the herpes simplex virus. Dr. Robert Johnson of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control says researchers used it to analyze blood drawn in a nationwide survey in 1978. It showed that between 20 percent and 25 percent of adult Americans then had genital herpes.

Experts believe that the infection rate now is somewhere around 25 percent or 30 percent. For instance, tests showed that 35 percent of women who attended a gynecology clinic at a health maintenance organization in Atlanta were infected.

Such figures were a surprise, because the infection is not obvious in most people.

"It appears that at least two-thirds of the people do not know that they have genital herpes," says Dr. Lawrence Corey of the University of Washington. "That's not to say that they never have a symptomatic episode, but the episodes may be so mild that they are never recognized."

In these people, herpes may show up — if at all — as nothing more than a minor itch or pimple.

Blacks' high blood pressure legacy of slavery, scientist says

Copley News Service

NEW ORLEANS — Today's epidemic of high blood pressure among black Americans may be a genetic legacy of three harsh centuries of slavery, says an inner-city scientist.

Brutally packed into the holds of slave ships, with limited food and water and constant seasickness, the Africans destined for slavery died in appalling numbers, mostly from diarrhea and fevers, Dr. Clarence E. Grim of Los Angeles said in a recent interview.

The steaming, sweaty holds, the vomiting of seasickness and the illnesses would all have stripped the body of the sodium that's essential for life.

Thus, Grim theorizes, "the ones who survived were (because of some inherited trait) better at holding on to salt."

As the centuries passed and many millions of Africans were hurled into "one of the most extensive forced migrations in human history," this genetic ability, still critical for overworked and undernourished slave laborers, would be preserved and concentrated in the 11 million who lived through it and in the children they bore, he said.

For those blacks from the 16th century to the middle of the 19th century, "it was a beneficial trait because it improved their chances of surviving," Grim told an American Heart Association science writers' forum.

But in the United States today, with its excessively salty diet, "that happens to be a disadvantage," he said.

Unusual salt retention combined with salty foods, Grim said, is a prescription for high blood pressure and problems with the kidneys, which process sodium and where he suspects the possible salt-holding trait is active.

Grim is director of the Hypertension Research Center of the Charles R. Drew University of Medicine and Science in the Watts area of Los Angeles. He also is a professor of medicine at the University of California at Los Angeles.

He based his slave-gene hypothesis on a study of both recent and contemporary accounts of conditions during the era of slavery and on comparisons of blood pressure of blacks and whites in the U.S. and between blacks in America and Africa.

In America, he said, high blood pressure "is the major health problem in the black community. It affects one-third of all black adults and two-thirds of blacks over the age of 50."

Also called hypertension, it is the main reason blacks are more likely than whites to die of cardiovascular diseases and kidney failure, he said. It is the leading cause of mothers' deaths during pregnancy and a major contributor to blacks' high rate of death at birth and in infancy.

"We have to get the message out that high blood pressure is bad," he said. It can be controlled with medications and changes in diet and weight and "blacks benefit just as much as the white population from having their blood pressure lowered."

Grim seeks the roots of hypertension by studying blood-pressure differences in twins. Drew University, he said, "has the world's largest registry of black twins," with more than 400 sets.

The idea is to determine the relative influence of heredity and environment on such things as blood pressure by examining the variation in pairs of identical twins.

SOUND ADVICE
By Orland Purcell, M.S., Audiologist

A SMALL WONDER

For the hearing-impaired person who is concerned with the attractiveness of a hearing aid, modern technology has made available the canal aid. With their miniaturized circuits, canal aids are so small that they can be placed within the external ear canal. This has proved to be a boon for people with a mild to moderate hearing loss. These patients may wear the canal aid takes a higher degree of manual the advantages of listening frely over the telephone or even while exercising. These advantages alone should attract the notice of younger hearing-impaired people.

Science has provided numerous options for assistance to the hearing impaired. Technology has achieved a balance of need with cosmetic preference to provide the hearing instruments you need and prefer. For assistance with the selection and fit of the device you require, we invite you to come to AUDIO ACOUSTICS HEARING CENTERS, INC., 32 Village Court. Tel. 682-5033. Open 9-5 Mon.-Fri.

A WEIGHTY MATTER

How much medicine a person takes is directly related to his size and age. The dosage for an adult is calculated to act on a body weighing approximately 155 pounds. Therefore, adults who weight only 100 pounds should take their petite size into account when taking medicine. This means, in this case, reducing the dosage of an over-the-counter medicine by about one-third. If the medicine to be ingested is prescribed by a doctor, he should take his patient's weight into account. As for children, those of average size between the ages of 5 and 12 can be expected to take approximately one-third of an adult dosage of over-the-counter medicine. A person over the age of 65 should also adjust his dosage, based on the recommendation of the pharmacist or his doctor.

HINT:
Any drug that affects the central nervous system should not be given to a child without doctor's consent.

A SOUND APPROACH

A patient should not be alarmed by a clicking sound that might be heard during a spinal adjustment. When a vertebra is adjusted with chiropractic thrust, it makes a sight gliding movement along the joint surfaces which part slightly. There are no empty spaces in any body tissues. The gentle separation of the two surfaces creates a momentary vacuum pop that is comparable to the sound one might hear when knuckles are "cracked". When adjusted, vertebrae often move without a sound. The noise does not indicate correction, nor does it help or hinder it. It is just an interesting yet inconsequential feature of a chiropractic adjustment.

Such chiropractic adjustment serves to remove points of interference along the spinal column so that the transmission of healing signals may take place. In this fashion a natural healing process ensues and is carried to every organ and extremity of the body. ANKLE SWELLING

The symptom known as edema involves abnormal fluid retention in the tissues of the body, most notably about the lower legs and ankles. This condition is fairly common among people who are on their feet most of the day. For them, edema occurs because the veins in the lower extremities cannot return blood to the heart as fast as the arteries can deliver it. Edema may also result from a menstrual period, pregnancy, or taking of birth control pills. However, edema may also stem from more serious problems. Excessive leg or ankle swelling may be an initial sign of heart, liver, or kidney disease. For this reason, repeated episodes or edema that last for more than a day or so should be reported to a physician.

WORLD in brief

AIDS screening set at American university

LONDON (AP) — Health officials are planning to screen every student at a major American university this spring to determine the incidence of AIDS among young adults, U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said today.

Such tests might also be done at high schools, Koop told reporters on the last day of the world's first global AIDS summit in London.

Meanwhile, delegates from nearly 150 countries at the summit pledged to launch a massive global assault on the fatal virus to slow its spread.

Koop's proposal is likely to spur controversy. Civil libertarians have argued that anonymous screening is an invasion of privacy and that screening of a limited population could be the forerunner of mandatory nationwide testing.

The surgeon general said health officials had yet to choose a university, but it would likely be one in a large city with a student body of around 25,000. Plans call for the screening to take place some time this spring, Koop said, and it would likely be part of a one-day open-air campus "gala" on AIDS prevention.

"The goal would be to test everybody in that university in such a way that it's done out in the open, aboveboard; everyone knows that the blood specimen is not in any way tagged," Koop said.

"That would give you a pretty good idea of the prevalence of (AIDS) in the age group in an urban setting," he added.

The incidence of AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is highest among 20- to 24-year-olds, with male homosexuals most at risk.

Israel soldiers studied

JERUSALEM (AP) — A top military legal adviser ordered several soldiers investigated on charges of using excessive force, and the army released new figures saying 1,754 Palestinians were arrested in seven weeks of violence.

The army said today that of those Arabs arrested in the occupied territories, 129 were imprisoned for six months without trial and 438 were tried and sentenced to jail terms of various lengths on riot-related charges.

In another development, a political source said Wednesday that Israel will delay for several days deporting five Arabs who allegedly incited riots.

Israel's handling of the unrest in the occupied lands has drawn criticism from the United States and the United Nations.

After Israeli gunfire killed at least 38 Arabs, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin announced a policy of using beatings instead of bullets against Arab protesters in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Hamadi releases urged

DUESSELDORF, West Germany (AP) — The kidnapping of another West German in Beirut and a warning of possible suicide terrorist missions increased pressure on West Germany to free two Lebanese brothers accused of terrorism.

Gunmen in Beirut seized Ralph Rudolf Schray, a 30-year-old West German citizen, on Wednesday. The abduction appeared to be a new attempt to force this nation to release Mohammed Ali Hamadi, a Shiite Moslem accused in a TWA hijacking, and his brother, Abbas Hamadi.

Abbas Hamadi is on trial in Dusseldorf, charged with kidnapping two West Germans in Beirut in a bid to secure his brother's freedom.

In Beirut today, Syrian troops intensified a search for Schray. They searched cars and frisked pedestrians, including uniformed policemen.

A radio report said the Syrians had warned the kidnappers to release the hostage by midnight Friday. Syria deployed 7,500 troops in Moslem west Beirut 11 months ago to end militia anarchy.

Prayers for peace sought

NEW YORK (AP) — Heads of churches in Jerusalem have urged Christians to fast and pray Friday for peace in the Holy Land, identifying "with our brothers and sisters in the camps on the West Bank in the Gaza strip."

In an appeal for such intercessions received Wednesday by the National Council of Churches here, the Jerusalem churchmen said recent arrests and killings show the "grievous suffering" of Palestinians in those areas.

"They also are visible expression of our people's aspiration to achieve their legal rights and the realization of their hopes," the church heads said, adding that real peace can't come until "every persons rights are fully respected."

Prayer request denied

JERUSALEM (AP) — John Demjanjuk stood up at his Nazi war crimes trial today and his attorney asked that the defendant be allowed to say a prayer aloud in court to seek strength from God to face what he called false accusations.

Presiding Judge Dov Levine denied the request, saying: "If the defendant would like to pray, he can do it in his cell."

It was the first time Demjanjuk, a devout Ukrainian Orthodox Christian, has made such a request. It came during the prosecution's closing arguments in his 11-month trial.

The official BTA news agency said 3,196 Communist party delegates and 472 guests and non-party members are taking part in the conference.

Politburo member Yordan Yotov told reporters Wednesday that delegates are expected to debate and later approve reform proposals first outlined by Zhivkov at a Central Committee meeting last July. Zhivkov has been in power since 1954.

Western diplomats say they expect further measures adopted at the two-day conference to streamline centralized economic management and possibly to redefine the function of the Communist Party.

But they say there is no sign of a major personnel reshuffle and that the 76-year-old Zhivkov, an ally of every Kremlin leader from Nikita S. Khrushchev to the reform-minded Mikhail S. Gorbachev, seems firmly entrenched in power.

Zhivkov gave several reformist speeches early last year. They culminated in a 94-page address to a Central Committee meeting last July that Premier Georgy Atanassov later said took five Politburo sessions to agree on.

That speech outlined plans for reshuffling or scrapping senior government organs, streamlining bureaucracy and loosening government control of the economy. Zhivkov denounced "the high, sometimes absurd centralization of power" in the Communist Party and management of the economy.

The speech was followed by the third shuffling of economic ministries in the past two years, local government reorganization and an August decree limiting state ceremonial functions and ordering public portraits of living politicians to be taken down.

But some of the reforms appeared to confuse Bulgarians and Zhivkov sounded more cautious at a November Central Committee meeting following a sudden one-day meeting with Gorbachev in Moscow on Oct. 15.

Yotov denied a suggestion from a Western reporter that Gorbachev had ordered Zhivkov to slow his reforms, which have particularly trumpeted the so-called "self-management" of factories by workers and plant managers.

The Soviets and Bulgarians are "in complete agreement" over the pace of change.

Soviets cancel construction of questioned power plant

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet newspaper said a nuclear power plant being built near the Black Sea was scrapped because of public opposition generated by the Chernobyl disaster and that many other plants face bitter opposition.

AP

The article in Komsomolskaya Pravda said $42 million was wasted by canceling the project late last year in the southern Russian city of Krasnodar. Krasnodar, which was not directly affected by the 1986 Chernobyl accident, lies 600 miles southeast of the accident site.

Local fears were the result of an irresponsible campaign against the project launched by local officials after the Chernobyl disaster and general ignorance about nuclear power safety, the newspaper said.

But the report in Wednesday's edition also excused the attitude of the local population, blaming the reaction on a shortage of information about the project and incomplete reporting on nuclear issues.

The paper said the Soviet Atomic Energy Ministry is now receiving letters from throughout the country expressing concern over nuclear power plant safety. "Twenty operating nuclear plants and almost all of those under construction are the subject of bitter disputes among local residents," it said.

"This situation is not so amazing," the writer commented. "We have read about 'anti-nuclear demonstrations' in other countries, and about the referendum in Austria where it was decided that nuclear plant construction wasn't necessary at all, and about nuclear dangers in the United States."

Nuclear power plants previously lent prestige to a city, the newspaper said, "but that was before Chernobyl."

The April 26, 1986, accident at the four-reactor power station north of Kiev killed at least 31 workers and spread radioactive contamination over much of the northern Ukraine and southern Byelorussia. About 135,000 residents were evacuated from a danger zone delineated around the accident site and their health will have to be monitored for the rest of their lives.

The newspaper said the "unprecedented" decision to halt construction of the power plant in Krasnodar, 50 miles north of the Black Sea, was taken after review of complaints that the station would be located in an earthquake-prone area and too close to a nature preserve in the Caucasus mountains and health resorts scattered throughout the region.

Komsomolskaya Pravda said the government's decision to stop work on the nuclear plant and build a hydro-electric station in its place was a result of the Kremlin's campaign for "democratization," or broadening the public's role in decision-making.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has encouraged more outspokenness about social and economic problems as part of his reform program.

"Atomic power stations in normal circumstances are practically harmless," the newspaper said. "Everyone needs to know that."

It suggested that Soviet school children should be taught more about nuclear power and pointed to the French education system as a positive model, noting that students there take field trips to nuclear plants to learn how energy is produced.

The lesson to be learned from the Krasnodar closure is not that nuclear power poses a threat, but that full and open discussion of such projects is necessary before building begins, the newspaper said.

"And not just about nuclear plants, but any major project that influences the environment," Komsomolskaya Pravda said. "We have to learn to discuss these things — broadly, democratically, but correctly and argumentatively."

Bull's death accidental

LOCHMADDY, Scotland (AP) — A court acquitted three men on charges they drowned a valuable stud bull as they moved it in traditional fashion among islands in the Scottish Hebrides.

The black Aberdeen Angus named Barney was tied by a rope to the back of a rowboat while being moved among the islands of Castlebray, Barra and Vatersay.

The men told Lochmaddy Sheriff's Court in North Uist on Wednesday that strong undercurrents pushed the bull's head below water.

The Department of Agriculture owned the one-ton bull, which was valued at $2,460. It accused the three men of causing the bull's death.

Greenwood shuffled east in UIL realignment

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

For the third time in five years, the Greenwood Rangers will pick up stakes and try to get comfortable in a new district. Well, make that two districts.

In the new district alignments released by the UIL Wednesday, Greenwood won't be making the step up in classification as they did in the 1986 and 1984 re-alignments.

But the Rangers will have new and different rivals in basketball and football, and different districts for the two sports.

After spending two years in District 4-3A, Greenwood moves over to District 5-3A with Coahoma, Colorado City, Merkel, Post and newly dropped Lamesa for football.

In basketball, Greenwood's new district, also called 5-3A, is composed of Crane, Coahoma, Colorado City, Kermit and Greenwood.

It marked the first time since 1982 that Greenwood did not step up in classification. The Rangers moved from Class 1A to 2A in 1984, and from Class 2A to 3A in 1986.

Greenwood's re-districting wasn't the only area school to face changes for the 1988-89 school years. Lamesa and Rankin were both dropped a notch, the Tors to 3A and the Red Devils back to Class 1A, and Stanton was moved to the east with McCamey and Iraan in District 5-2A.

THE GREENWOOD shuffling was not greeted with the greatest enthusiasm by school athletic officials, despite the elimination of some long road swings to El Paso to the west.

"I had no idea we would ever be moving east like that," said Greenwood football coach and Athletic Director Bob Purser. "I'm as shocked as I can be. I don't know why they switched up the districts for basketball and football.

"It's going to be pretty tough. Lamesa will be huge, enrollment-wise, and Post has a great tradition," Purser continued. "I'm concerned because we've been trying to develop a rivalry with some people and then we have the carpet jerked out on us again. These kids haven't ever played somebody more than two years in a row.

"The traveling doesn't bother me, I'd go to California if I thought we had a chance to win a ballgame."

In Stanton, football coach and Athletic Director Dale Ruth was also concerned about the move west. The Buffaloe's new football district, 5-2A, includes McCamey, Iraan, Marfa, Van Horn and Presidio and will necessitate one or two extended road trips a season.

"It was a big surprise for us, I don't know exactly how it happened," Ruth said. "We had heard of maybe going north or east, but the last thing on our minds was to go west.

But I feel like, other than the travel, it will be a good competitive district."

In basketball, the Buffs and Badgers will stay with Reagan County, Forsan, Eldorado and Ozona, essentially the same district as they play now.

From Staff Reports

While many of the smaller classifications will undergo some serious revamping in the coming year, most of the area Class 5A districts, including District 4-5A, will remain the same for the next two years.

According to the UIL re-districting released Wednesday, 4-5A will include the same seven teams from the past two years. Midland High, Midland Lee, Odessa Permian, Odessa High, Abilene High, Abilene Cooper and San Angelo comprise District 4-5A.

Big Spring was dropped from 4-5A to District 2-4A in the 1986 realignment.

Elsewhere, District 3-5A also remained the same, despite rumors that Plainview was to drop down to Class 4A.

MC game postponed

From Staff Reports

Tonight's scheduled Western Junior College Athletic Conference basketball game between Midland College and Clarendon College has been postponed, Midland College officials said Wednesday.

The game, slated for 7:30 p.m. at the Chaparral Center, should be rescheduled sometime in February, but no date was announced.

The postponement came because of a serious case of pneumonia to Clarendon Coach Joe Mondragon's young son. Mondragon plans to spend the next few days at the boys' bedside at a hospital in Amarillo, according to sources in Clarendon.

Mondragon has no assistant coach to bring the team in for tonight's game so MC Coach Reggie Franklin agreed to the postponement.

The Chaparrals are 5-3, 16-5, and looking for some momentum going into next week's road games against New Mexico Military on Monday and Odessa College on Thursday.

Clarendon, 7-12, 1-7, is scheduled to resume play on Monday to host Howard College.

Associated Press

Texas Tech Coach Gerald Myers says it was one of the best team efforts all season as the Red Raiders kept their home victory streak alive with a 72-61 upset of Texas A&M in Southwest Conference basketball action Wednesday.

Wes Lowe scored a career-high 28 points to lead Texas Tech to the victory over Texas A&M and keep the Red Raiders home victory streak alive. The Raiders have not lost a game at Lubbock this season.

SWC

"We had a lot of guys play well tonight," Myers said. "We executed our offense, and our defense was effective. It's the first time all year that our defense has been able to pick us up when our offense bogged down."

High scoring Darryl McDonald scored only 13 points and hit only four of 12 field goal attempts and turned the ball over six times.

A&M head Coach Shelby Metcalf was blunt in discussing the loss.

"This was our worst game defensively in a long time," Metcalfe said. "We don't have the depth on this team for a couple of our players to have off nights. We've got to have the entire team playing hard and playing well each night out."

The Aggies, who fell to 4-2 in conference play and 12-8 overall, dropped out of the SWC lead with the loss. The Raiders are now 8-9 and 3-3.

Arkansas 80, Rice 61

The Razorbacks regained sole possession of the SWC lead with a 5-1 record.

Willie kept the Owls in the game in the first half, hitting his team's first 18 points and finishing the half with 22 points, including five 3-pointers.

Lang threw in 12 first half points and controlled the inside and the Razorbacks solved Rice's full court press and rolled to a 43-31 halftime lead.

Rice, which dropped to a 5-12 season record and 2-5 in SWC games, ralied from a 72-49 deficit in the final two minutes, outscoring the Hogs, 14-8.

SMU 75, Texas 70

Kato Armstrong scored 17 points to lead SMU to a victory over the Texas Longhorns.

Southern Methodist had lost three previous meetings with the Longhorns by a total of four points.

The Mustangs, 5-2 in the SWC and 16-4 overall, were also helped by 14 points from Todd Alexander, who keyed a second-half surge with three three-point shots.

Texas, 2-4 in the conference and 8-10 in all games, was paced by center Jose Nassar's 16 points.

Fennell, Daniels to Big Eight

From Staff Reports

Midland Lee defensive back Jimmy Fennell and offensive lineman Jason Daniel have committed to play football at Oklahoma and Nebraska, respectively.

Neither player may officially sign a letter of intent with either school before Feb. 10, the official signing date for the colleges of high school athletes. A verbal committment is not binding on either player.

Fennell was District 4-5A's defensive player of the year and a second team All-State choice. He was also recently named as Lee's best defensive back. He is a three-year starter for Lee. Fennell has decided to go with Oklahoma despite a late bid by Texas A&M.

Daniel didn't win All-District honors, but was a valuable member of Lee's offensive line that helped crash school rushing records this year, including a school record 574 yards rushing against El Paso Eastwood in the area playoffs. He has been heavily recruited by Nebraska.

Ferdinand takes honor, but it was Alysheba's year

By ED SCHUYLER JR.

Ferdinand is the Horse of the Year for 1987, but it was the Year of Alysheba.

Alysheba, owned by Dorothy and Pamela Scharbauer of Midland, won only three of 10 starts, but he was the big newsmaker for a sport too often confined to the agate lists of entries and results in many newspapers.

A thoroughbred horse race can often can be high drama. Alysheba helped provide that in several races, especially the Kentucky Derby in which he went to his knees in the stretch, then was checked twice more, but still won by three-quarters of a length over Bet Twice.

"I really believed he caught the public eye in that race and from then on he was the public choice," Jack Van Berg, Alysheba's trainer, said before the Horse of the Year vote was announced Wednesday.

Perhaps the public would have voted for Alysheba. He really was a public horse.

Alysheba raced from March 8 to Nov. 21 at nine different tracks in six states. He raced hard in all of them, with the exception of the Travers in which he finished sixth on sloppy track at Saratoga.

Ferdinand, who won his last four races and beat Alysheba by a nose in the $3 Breeders' Cup Classic, made all 10 of his starts in California.

BESIDES EXCITEMENT, Alysheba also injected racing with a badly needed shot of human interest. In March, a little more than five weeks before the Derby, he underwent surgery to correct a breathing problem.

Alysheba also is a son of Alydar, who became part of racing legend when he became the only horse ever to finish second in the Derby, Preakness and Belmont in 1978, the year Affirmed won the Triple Crown.

Like many public figures, Alysheba also was touched by controversy.

It grew out of the fact that in six of his 10 starts, he raced on Lasix, a diuretic given to curb respiratory bleeding.

Critics, who claimed medication enhances a horse's performance, pointed out that Alysheba only won when he raced on Lasix. His defeats in the Belmont and Travers were tied to the absence of the medication, they said. New York does not allow horses to race on any type of medication.

However, Alysheba raced well without Lasix in the Haskell Invitational at Monmouth Park in New Jersey, finishing second by a neck behind Bet Twice. It seems questionable judgment by jockey Chris McCarron was more costly to Alysheba than was the absence of Lasix.

Van Berg tired of questions about medication to the point that he quit answering them. He kept pointing out that he had to consider the best interests of the horse and that if medication wasn't legal anywhere, Alysheba wouldn't have raced on it anywhere.

ALTHOUGH ALYSHEBA earlier was named 3-year-old champion, the medication issue apparently hurt him when it came time to name racing's overall champion. Alysheba finished a distant third in the voting by the Thoroughbred Racing Associations, Daily Racing Form and National Turf Writers Association. Ferdinand narrowly beat grass specialist Theatrical.

It seems here that the medication controversy was so strong that Theatrical would have won Horse of the Year had Alysheba beaten Ferdinand in the Breeders' Cup Classic.

"Alysheba is very good horse," said Charlie Whittingham, who trained Ferdinand, the Horse of the Year in the Year of Alysheba.

Just don't ask Bishop about last year

By MARK KREIDLER
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — All is well in Keith Bishop's universe, a place filled with recent successes and the hope for more, until he is asked about what happened in Super Bowl XXI a year ago.

"That really has nothing to do with this year. I mean, it's buried," Bishop replied, his voice quiet but firm. "That was last year. If you want to talk about this year, I'll be happy to talk about it."

Among the many things you cannot do with a 6-foot-3, 265-pound offensive lineman is make him relive the past, and Bishop has his reasons for wanting to forget. In the year that culminated in the Denver Broncos' 39-20 loss to the New York Giants last January in Pasadena, he learned the peculiar truth about the best of times and the worst of times: they can happen at once.

It should have been his finest hour, 1986. Bishop, a seven-year veteran and a graduate of Midland Lee, became the first offensive lineman in Denver's history to be named to the Pro Bowl. His team won the American Football Conference championship with a thrilling 23-20 victory over Cleveland in overtime.

THAT GAME was saved for the Broncos by a fourth-quarter drive that started at their own 1½-yard line. It began in the huddle with the tension-breaking sentence from Bishop that now is famous in Colorado: "We've got 'em right where we want 'em."

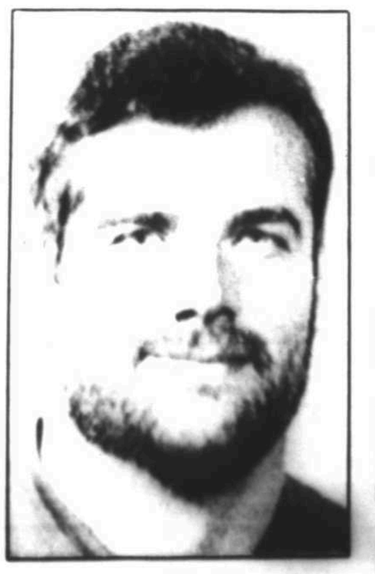
He believed that The Drive was possible because he believed in the team. He believed in the team because in 1986 he came to know what it meant to truly need the support such a unit could offer.

On March 6 of that year, Bishop, who was born in San Diego, was summoned to his home in Midland, Texas. There he received the shocking news: his father, George, was in a hospital with a brain tumor.

Bishop's mother, Wanda, had long been suffering with cancer of the bone and spine, but his father's tumor struck suddenly and fatally. Less than a month after the diagnosis, George died at home in Keith's arms.

Seventy days later, Wanda Bishop passed away. She had tried a radical chemotherapy treatment in an effort to stay alive to see the birth of her grandchild, whom Keith and his wife, Mary, were expecting in November. The treatment failed.

STRICKEN, BISHOP returned to his home in Englewood, Colo., and began the long process of putting his life together again. Broncos quarterback John Elway was his rock, taking long, conversation-filled trips with Bishop into the mountains near Vail.



Bishop

"I've got great respect for him just because of the type of person he is," Elway said. "He's a guy you can depend on. He'll do anything for you. He's been through a whole lot."

On Nov. 12, 1986, the Bishops had a son. His first name: John.

As the year wore on, Bishop turned to other members of the team for support. He never forgot their unified response.

"All the times I'd call somebody and say, 'Hey, let's talk,' or, 'Let's get a beer,' I never once got turned down," he later said.

The dramatic events of the year were not lost on him, either. By the time he arrived at the Super Bowl last year, Bishop had developed a workable life theory from all that had happened.

"I know now that some things are going to happen, and there's not a dadgum thing you can do about it," he said. "I know now you have to make the most of what you've got. I know you can't delay things, say you're going to do things later. Sometimes, you run out of time. You lose the opportunity."

Cyclone's Orr defends OU defense in another rout

Associated Press

Everybody talks about Oklahoma's high-scoring offense. But Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr says it's the defense that propels the 10th-ranked Sooners.

"You hear all about how many points they score, but I haven't heard anything about how good their defense is," Orr said after Oklahoma defeated his Cyclones 109-86 in a Big Eight Conference game Wednesday night.

"Oklahoma is as good as anybody in the country. There is not really any weakness in their team," Orr said. "They're unselfish and work ... on defense."

Yeah, but how good are they, coach?

"Every one of their players played well, and they had some players come off the bench and play well, also," Orr said. "We would make one step and they would make two. Oklahoma was extremely quick ... quicker in every aspect."

The Sooners' pressing defense forced the Cyclones to make 25 turnovers and limited 12th-ranked Iowa State to 40 percent shooting.

Topping the 100-point mark for the 12th time this season, Oklahoma raised its record to 17-2 overall and 3-1 in the Big Eight with its convincing victory over Iowa State, 16-4 and 2-2.

The Sooners held Jeff Grayer, the Big Eight's top scorer, to just six points, 19 below his average. Grayer was slowed by a bad big toe and played only 23 minutes. The Cyclones also played without starting guard Gary Thompkins, who was ill with the flu.

Vanderbilt 83, Kentucky 66

Vanderbilt used long-range shooting to give Commodores Coach C.M. Newton his first victory over his alma mater, No. 9 Kentucky, since taking the Vanderbilt reins seven years ago.

"I could just say this was another day at the office, but it wasn't," Newton said. "This was a big win for us. To beat a team like Kentucky at this stage is very meaningful to our program."

The Commodores hit 13 of 20 3-point shots with reserve guard Scott Draud leading the way with six 3-pointers and 22 points.

Top 20 Roundup

The victory snapped a 13-game Vanderbilt losing streak to Kentucky and allowed the Commodores to improve to 12-4 for the season and 5-3 in SEC. Kentucky, which last lost to Vandy at Nashville, Tenn., in 1979, fell to 13-3 and 6-3.

Georgetown 58, Boston College 36

The Eagles got off just 15 shots in the first half and turned the ball over 12 times in the first 20 minutes.

Charles Smith and Bobby Winston scored 12 points apiece as Georgetown improved its record to 13-4 and 3-3 with its second straight conference victory. Boston College is now 11-7 and 3-5.

Florida 61, LSU 50

Vernon Maxwell hit five 3-point shots and finished with 20 points to lead No. 14 Florida over Louisiana State. Dwayne Schintzius had 16 points as the Gators, 15-4, improved their SEC-leading record to 6-1 and gave Coach Norm Sloan his 598th career victory.

Syracuse 87, Seton Hall 76

Steve Thompson scored a season-high 26 points and Sherman Douglas sparked a late 15-2 surge that carried No. 17 Syracuse to its 14th consecutive victory over Seton Hall. Trailing 63-62 with 4:59 to play, Syracuse, 14-5 overall and 4-3 in the Big East, took the lead for good on a 15-foot jumper by Matt Roe.

St. John's 60, Villanova 55

Boo Harvey scored 16 points, including four free throws in the final minute, as St. John's beat No. 19 Villanova for its fifth straight victory. Shelton Jones led the Redmen with 19 points.

Villanova, ranked this week for the first time this season, fell to 14-5 overall and 6-2 in the Big East. St. John's is 13-3 and 4-2.

"It really helps that we'll stay in the same district for basketball, it cuts down on the travel time," Ruth said. "Everything will be close by during basketball season and in spring sports."

THE ONLY enthusiastic reactions seem to come from the two schools dropped into a smaller classification.

Lamesa crossed well under the 730 student limit to make the switch from 4A into 3A as expected.

"We're pretty pleased with it, though it's different than we expected it would be," said Lamesa football coach and Athletic Director Clyde Noonkester. "We feel like we can go out and be competitive every week in Class 3A. We just didn't have the coaching staff or the kids to keep up in District 2-4A."

Lamesa is in District 4-3A for football with Greenwood, but in basketball, the Tors, already a state power in Class 4A, will vie with Seminole, Post, Brownfield, Denver City, Slaton, Lubbock Roosevelt and Lubbock Cooper.

Rankin spent just two years in Class 2A and will now rejoin 1A where they have had abundant playoff success in past seasons. The Red Devils join Garden City, Irion County, Robert Lee, Sterling City and Water Valley in District 8-A.

In other changes, District 6-2A's Reagan County will now play in a football district of Eldorado, Forsan, Wall, Ozona and Winters, and a basketball district of Eldorado, Forsan, Ozona, McCamey and Stanton.

Crane will stay in the western Class 3A district, 4-3A, for football with Kermit, Alpine, Clint, Fabens and San Elizario. In basketball, the Cranes will move to 5-3A with Greenwood, Coahoma, Colorado City and Kermit.

Scouts question Ironhead's move

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Several pro sports agents are questioning All-American running back Craig "Ironhead" Heyward's decision to skip his senior season at the University of Pittsburgh and turn pro.

"I think he needs another year of college football," said John Wooten, a Dallas Cowboys scout. "He needs to lose another 40 pounds. I don't think he's ready to play professional football."

But a Pittsburgh sports agent doubts if the NFL would fight the case in court if Heyward sues to be included in the regular phase of the league's April college draft.

Heyward, who ran for 1,655 yards last season, said Monday he will forego his senior season and petition the National Football League for a supplemental draft. He will lose his college eligibility as soon as he retains an agent.

Heyward's case is unique in that he will turn pro before he has graduated or his eligibility has expired. Bernie Kosar of the Cleveland Browns and Brian Bosworth of the Seattle Seahawks also requested supplemental drafts, but both had graduated ahead of schedule.

"I think that was the best all-around game we have played this year," SMU Coach Dave Bliss said. "We got great help off the bench and every substitute worked out for us. It took that kind of performence to win."

"It was important for us to keep pace with the other teams in the league," Bliss said. "Texas is a very difficult team for us to play is evidenced by the scores the past three games."

Baylor 77, Houston 59

Baylor guard Michael Williams scored 34 points, 24 in the second half, to lead the Bears over the Houston Cougars.

Baylor, 12-7 and 3-3 in league play, led 33-27 at halftime. The Cougars, 8-7 and 3-3, cut the score to 50-45 with 9:12 remaining in the game. The Bears went on an 18-4 run, extending their lead to 68-49.

Baylor Coach Gene Iba said the victory helps keep the Bears in the conference race.

"We really played a good second half. We took control and played a hard 20 minutes," Iba said.

Soccer

From Staff Reports

Victory is indeed fleeting, as both local high school soccer teams discovered the hard way Tuesday night.

Coming off impressive weekend victories, both Midland High and Midland Lee stumbled badly Tuesday.

Lee took a 3-0 record and 17-2 goal differential into Abilene only to fall to the Cooper Cougars, 5-0. MHS, fresh from a road upset over Cooper, was a more than gracious host to San Angelo, falling 4-0.

For the Rebels, it was over early as Cooper scored twice in the first 10 minutes and four times in the first half. Lee back-up goalie Justin Scharf did play well in the second half, and halftime moves of Scott Johnson from stoper to forward and Mark Ferguson from midfield to fullback did seem to spark the Rebels into a better effort.

It was, however, a case of too little, too late as the Cougar defense, able to stay in its own end with a big lead, covered any mistakes before Lee could take advantage.

The Bulldogs allowed their first goal only three minutes into the game. Although the goal did seem to light a fire under the Bulldogs, frequent Bobcat fouls prevented a young Bulldog team from mounting any sustained offensive pressure.

by the time San Angelo drew its second caution and had to ease up on its physical play, MHS was no longer looking to make supported attacks. As play more and more stayed in the MHS end, the Bobcats were able to finish the game with three late goals. San Angelo is now 6-1 on the season while MHS fell to 1-2-1.

Saturday, Midland High hits the road to San Angelo for a rematch before returning home next Tuesday for a night game with Midland Lee at 7:30 p.m. at the Hogan Park Soccer Complex.

However Tall City soccer enthusiasts will not have to do without local action this weekend as all city junior high teams have games this Saturday at the Windlands Park Soccer fields. Games start at 10 a.m., noon and 2 p.m.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 29, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Success will be linked to large-scale financial dealings in the fall. Improve communication with partners. You will need their wholehearted support. You could find yourself attracted to an older person. The spotlight will fall on your community efforts, making your star shine brighter than ever. Keep asking for what you need. The public's response could astound you. Travel clears the cobwebs from your brain and makes you a tougher competitor.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Tom Selleck, TV host Oprah Winfrey, actor John Forsythe, author Germaine Greer, 25th U.S. President William McKinley, philosopher Thomas Paine, actress Katharine Ross, golfer Donna Caponi Young, comedian W.C. Fields.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You make real progress on the work front. A personal relationship could be harder to deal with. Get back in shape by going to a gym. New friendships add excitement to your life.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): In your keen desire to succeed, do not neglect a close relationship. Mate or partner needs reassurance. An inside tip could bring large financial gains. Be discreet about your "good luck."

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Someone close to you could let you down. Do not fret about it. Domestic chores pile up. Partner may not want to share in a big clean-up. Go ahead and party tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone you met on a business trip could play a major role in your future. If shopping, try on clothes that are stylish and flattering. Your image is important in your work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Expect new challenges in the work sector. Some of you may be thinking of expanding a business. A social gathering provides you with an opportunity to mix with influential people. Romance heats up.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your expectations regarding a business project could be unrealistic. Keep your work habits up to par. A change of lifestyle will prove very welcome. Do not be afraid to end a relationship.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do not get upset if you must shoulder extra work. Just be certain you get extra money for your efforts. Make peace with a partner and enjoy a fun evening. Romance sizzles.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A partnership could get off to a rocky start. Financial problems could be a contributing factor. Listen carefully to an older person's opinions, then make up your own mind. Defend your beliefs.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Behind-the-scenes wheeling and dealing will have an immediate impact on your career. The results will be rewarding in terms of money and prestige. Romance may have its ups and downs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Use the utmost discretion with a legal settlement or business transaction. Postpone making important decisions. Wearing a daring outfit to work will not get you the right kind of attention.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A fortunate gamble begins to pay off for you. A newcomer showers you with attention. You are flattered but may also feel a bit overwhelmed. Slow things down. Ask more questions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Give a project enough time to get off the ground before you give up on it. You may be too quick to pass judgment. A surprising message from afar boosts your spirits.

Opening lead: King of

There are many situations where you can take a finesse either way. If, when the time arrives to take it and it is still a pure guess, you probably went wrong somewhere in the play.

North had an awkward hand. It was certainly strong enough to act, but it was square and had only three cards, albeit choice ones, in the unbid major. He elected to act, and before he knew it he found himself being dummy while partner played six spades.

Because of the unfortunate duplication in diamonds, declarer found that his slam depended on finding the queen of clubs. He could take the finesse either way, and that would have complicated the situation had declarer found it essential to rely on the finesse. Instead, he made the contract iron-clad, as the cards lay.

Declarer ruffed the second round of hearts, drew trumps ending in dummy and ruffed the last heart as East showed out. Then came three rounds of diamonds, and when West followed to the first two of these, declarer could claim his contract. West had shown up with three spades, seven hearts and two diamonds, so he could hold at most one club. Declarer led a club to the ace and ran the jack of clubs to score his slam.

Note that if North did not have the ten of clubs, the only chance for the contract would have been to find West with a singleton honor in the suit. Far from being a hindrance, the two-way finesse actually made the slam a laydown.

Jackson

CHICAGO (AP) — A $150 million paternity lawsuit filed against pop superstar singer Michael Jackson by a woman who called herself "Billie Jean" has been dismissed by a judge.

Lavon Powlis, a 39-year-old unemployed legal secretary who calls herself Billie Jean Jackson and claimed Jackson once proposed marriage to her, filed the lawsuit in August in Cook County Circuit Court.

The woman said Jackson fathered her three children but had refused to pay child support. "Billie Jean" is the title of a hit song by Jackson about a man denying paternity. "The kid is not my son," is one of the song's lyrics.

Judge Adolphus Rivers dismissed the lawsuit Wednesday without comment.

Jackson, who grew up in nearby Gary, Ind., has an unlisted telephone number in California, and could not be reached for comment. He begins a U.S. tour Feb. 23 in Kansas City, Mo.

Dave Schneidman, a spokesman for the state Department of Children and Family Services, has said the woman has named other celebrities as the children's father but had never gone so far as to file a paternity suit.

BERKELEY, Calif. (HNS) — The two-bedroom town house from which Patricia Hearst was kidnapped in 1974 is being offered for sale by an owner who says its historic value should bring extra cash.

The owner, who paid $63,000 for the property in 1981, is asking for $163,000.

Rob Gibbons, a 26-year-old Berkeley real-estate agent, is handling the sale for his parents, John and Alma Gibbons of Alamo, Calif. He and his brother Christopher lived there while attending UC-Berkeley, he said. Gibbons' parents bought the town house for that reason.

They weren't familiar with the history of the town house until a neighbor pointed out the bullet holes that have been there since Feb. 4, 1974, when members of the Symbionese Liberation Army took Hearst from the home she shared with Steven Weed, another UC-Berkeley student.

Gibbons and his brother were familiar with the story of the newspaper heiress, who was a kidnap victim, fugitive, federal prisoner and a recipient of a presidential pardon.

They liked the idea of living so close to history.

"It was something to brag about," he said. "One of my professors referred to us as the priests of the Patty Hearst shrine. And it was a great way to lure girls over. So hopefully it's a great way to lure buyers over."

Gibbons says he knows some people will be interested.

"Recently someone advertised the original Patty Hearst FBI wanted poster in the Chronicle," Gibbons said. "She wanted $3,500."

If someone will pay that for a piece of paper, Gibbons wonders what people might pay to live in the famous house.

At least once a month, some stranger knocks on the door of the modern brown-shingled home and asks the same question, Gibbons said.

"It's what they all want to know: Is this the place she was kidnapped from?"

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — "Revenge of the Nerds" actor Robert Carradine, a sometime race car driver, pleaded guilty to speeding off the track but said he hadn't realized that a state trooper had been pursuing him.

Carradine, 33, entered the plea Wednesday in District Court to the misdemeanor speeding charge, admitting that he had been driving 72 mph in a 55 mph zone near the Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport in July.

The incident occurred as Carradine was en route to the airport after a day of competing at the Brainerd International Raceway in northern Minnesota. He also was cited for fleeing an officer and reckless driving.

"At no time was I aware a police officer was in pursuit until I entered a 35 mph zone and I heard the siren," he said. "When I heard the siren, I pulled to the right and stopped immediately."

The charges were reduced under a plea bargain, and Carradine agreed to pay a $100 fine and $100 court costs.

Liddy

HASTINGS, Neb. (AP) — Writer, lecturer and convicted Watergate burglar G. Gordon Liddy says there was a key difference between the Iran-Contra affair and the Watergate scandal.

The difference, Liddy told an audience at the Hastings Area Chamber of Commerce annual meeting Tuesday, was that he and his associates "did what we did deliberately. Oliver North tried not to violate the law."

Liddy served five years in prison after being convicted in connection with the June 1972 Watergate break-in.

Liddy, who owns an industrial security company and has written two books, called Watergate "the greatest failure of my life" — not because it was wrong, but because he was caught.

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Entertainer Robert Goulet's donation of land has enabled the state to acquire a youth camp from the U.S. Forest Service, state officials said.

Goulet's donation, valued at about $250,000, was one of two parcels of steep, wooded land in the Lake Tahoe area that the state traded for the 120-acre Clear Creek campsite in a wooded canyon just south of Carson City.

Gov. Dick Bryan said Wednesday the Tahoe land, totaling 15 acres, will be kept as open space. The Clear Creek youth camp, built in the mid-1960s as a Job Corps center, has been managed by the state since 1970.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Salvatore J. "Sal" Ponti, an actor, writer and composer who wrote songs as a teen-ager for fellow Philadelphians Fabian and Frankie Avalon, died Jan 15. He was 53.

In 1970, Ponti opened the Sal Ponti Theater in Hollywood with "The Air Sweetener," a two-act comedy he wrote.

LONDON (AP) — Freddie Wolff, who collected a gold medal from Adolf Hitler at the 1936 Berlin Olympics after helping Britain to victory in the 1,600-meter relay race, died Tuesday at age 77.

Wolff, who later earned renown as a metal dealer and was a racehorse owner, was born in Hong Kong. He ran the 1936 race with Godrey Rampling, Bill Roberts and Godfrey Brown.

'Skins an edge at QB?

Back-up Schroeder will be ready

By DAVID GINSBURG

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Washington Redskins have an advantage at quarterback over the Denver Broncos in this Sunday's Super Bowl.

On the bench, that is.

Redskins' backup Jay Schroeder, a Pro Bowl selection last season, has better credentials than Denver's Gary Kubiak. Yet it is likely both will get into the game only as holders on placekicks, because Doug Williams is the Redskins' starter and John Elway will direct the Broncos' attack.

Schroeder entered the season coming off a glorious year in which he threw for 4,109 yards, the 10th-highest total in NFL history. He was given a new three-year contract that, with bonuses, earns him $1 million a season.

But after he injured his shoulder in the season opener against Philadelphia, Schroeder never really showed the consistency of 1986. Finally, Williams replaced Schroeder in the midst of the regular-season finale against Minnesota and kept the job.

SITTING ON the bench has not been easy for Schroeder, who possesses a fierce competitive spirit.

"It's tough to deal with because you've been out there playing," he said. "I'm just going to have to make the best of the situation and deal with it.

"The guy on the other side (Williams) went through it for a year and a half," Schroeder noted. "No one's immune to it."

Although he's now No. 2, Schroeder played an important role in helping the Redskins move to within a game of the world championship. Washington won eight of the 10 games he started.

"Jay has meant an awful lot to this team," Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs said. "He won a lot of the games that put us in the Super Bowl. It just so happens that Doug was playing at the end of the year."

This week Schroeder has been playing the role of Elway, directing the scout team against the Washington defense. To his credit, he is making the best of the situation.

"I enjoy doing that," he said. "It makes me a better player, and it's a big help for the defense."

IT'S NOT the first time Schroeder has been a backup. He had only one start in college, and languished on the bench in Washington until inheriting the starting role in November 1985 when Joe Theismann broke his leg.

The job remained his until the Philadelphia game, but he regained his starting spot after the 24-day players' strike. He lost it Nov. 15, got it back two weeks later, then hit the bench for good in the final game before the playoffs.

Williams struggled against the Vikings in the NFC title game, completing only nine of 26 passes. Schroeder said he was ready — and well prepared — to play if called upon.

"I've done that every game I haven't been playing and every game I started," he said. "You never know when the opportunity is going to come around, so you'd better be ready because if you're not, you may not get another chance."

Schroeder and Kubiak would prefer more extensive roles, but both find consolation in the fact that they are in the Super Bowl.

"It's kind of flattering being on a team that has a chance to be world champions," said Kubiak, who has thrown only seven passes this season. "Not many people get that chance, so I've got to draw as much excitement from that as I can."

Said Schroeder: "Anytime you get a chance to be in the Super Bowl, that's the goal of any player."

SCHROEDER SAID he is studying the game plan for the Broncos intently, just in case he gets a chance. And he is not taking for granted his job as the holder.

"I take pride in that," he said. "The game could come down to a field goal and everybody's got to be in sync. It's about two seconds worth of work, but it might be the most important two seconds of the whole game."

At the outset of the season, Williams was often mentioned in trade rumors. Now Schroeder is being named as a potential candidate to be shipped elsewhere.

"I'm not worried about it," he said. "Right now I have a three-year contract with Washington. I've got two more years to go and I don't plan on going anywhere.

Mavs Donaldson an All-Star sub

NEW YORK (AP) — Center James Donaldson of the Dallas Mavericks was named to the Western Conference roster for the NBA All-Star Game Wednesday as a replacement for Steve Johnson of the Portland Trail Blazers.

The 7-foot-2 Donaldson will be making his first All-Star appearance. He leads the Mavericks in rebounding with a 9.7 per-game average.

Bird leads Celts over Bullets

Associated Press

It was a question of who was flying higher — Larry Bird or the Boston Celtics.

Usually, as Bird goes, so go the Celtics, and Wednesday night was no exception. Bird played 43 minutes and scored a season high 49 points — 20-of-30 from the floor, 9-of-9 from the foul line — to go with eight rebounds, six assists and four steals as Boston defeated the Washington Bullets 106-100.

It was the Celtics' ninth victory in their last 10 games, 19th in their last 22 and their 64th consecutive Boston Garden victory over Eastern Conference teams since a loss to the New Jersey Nets on April 14, 1985.

NBA Roundup

Mavericks 121, Suns 102

Derek Harper and Mark Aguirre combined for 23 points in the fourth quarter as Dallas tied a club record with its fifth consecutive road victory. Dallas has won six games in a row and is 3-0 against Phoenix, which has dropped six straight and is 2-14 against the Mavericks since March 4, 1985.

Pistons 103, Pacers 86

Adrian Dantley scored 23 points and Detroit held Indiana scoreless during a 6:46 stretch in the fourth quarter. The cold-shooting Pacers also went without a basket for a 5:52 stretch of the third quarter, although they managed four free throws during that dry spell.

Bulls 119, 76ers 109

Michael Jordan scored 37 points, including four in a 6-0 overtime burst, as Chicago snapped a nine-game road losing streak as well as a nine-game period of futility in Philadelphia where it hadn't won since Feb. 10, 1984.

Cavaliers 112, Spurs 102

Tyrone Corbin scored 21 points and Ron Harper had eight in a 14-4 spurt down the stretch as Cleveland pulled away from a 98-98 tie. Walter Berry, who led San Antonio with 27 points, fouled Harper, who sank two free throws to start an 8-0 run.

On the Cavaliers' next possession, Berry fouled Corbin, who also made two free throws. Brad Daugherty and Harper added two more each.

Warriors 115, Trail Blazers 110

Terry Teagle scored 12 of his 25 points in the final quarter, lifting Golden State over Portland to pass idle New Jersey in the race to avoid the worst record in the NBA. The Warriors, whose record is 8-30 to 8-31 for the Nets, avenged a 45-point loss to Portland earlier this season.

He carried that philosophy with him through the 1987 season, when the offensive line endured the retirement of veteran guard Paul Howard and a season-ending knee injury to center Billy Bryan. Though in earlier years he had been regarded as something of a team leader, Bishop now had to step to the fore.

WITH VETERANS Bishop and tackle Dave Studdard, among others, offering advice, Denver patched together a line that has performed generally well. Mike Freeman filled in admirably for Bryan, Stefan Humphries took over at Howard's old position and Larry Lee substituted all across the line.

"We had some rough times earlier in the year when all the changes were being made," Bishop said. "But we've had great coaching from Alex Gibbs and we've been working hard together to get things accomplished. It's been a total effort in that direction, and it's paid off.

"As a veteran, you try to help the young guys all you can. It gets to a point, though, where you start hurting yourself by trying to do too much, and then it breaks down the protection even more. You've got to have a happy medium, and really rely on the coach to point things out."

As for his role as a leader, Bishop shrugged. He does not like to claim too much on a team from which he has drawn so much for himself.

"I don't know," he said. "I just think we have a very close team — we all get along very well. I consider that my teammates probably respect what I say, but I respect what they say, too. It's a mutual thing. To go around and claim you're a team leader — that's not too smart.

"To be in the Super Bowl means a lot because of the injuries we've had on this team. It's just been fun to be a part of it. I think our coaching staff has done an unbelievable job coping with all that has happened physically with the team. Being in this situation, and kind of peaking at the right time — it's fun to be involved in it."

If the Broncos lose to Washington on Sunday, it won't be the end of Keith Bishop's world. He has family — some of his relatives have lived in San Diego for 48 years — and he has friends. He has support of a team when he needs it, and the continuing urge to ponder future possibilities, not past tragedies.

He will gladly talk about this year.

"It's not, 'Well, we can't believe we're here.' It's, 'We still have another game to play,'" he said. "Last year, at least we were there. Now, hopefully, we can go a step forward."

US Olympians edge Canada

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — United States Olympic hockey Coach Dave Peterson was pleased with his team's defense against Team Canada — not ecstatic — but pleased.

"We got a little careless on the short-handed goal and Canada made a great play to score," Peterson said Wednesday night after the U.S. beat Canada 3-2 in an exhibition game. "But then we settled down and played well defensively. In the final 10 minutes, with the lead, we were very solid defensively.

"And that's how you have to win in the Olympics. You're not going to win too many games when you give five or six goals, especially come Olympic time."

Craig Janney scored at 9:42 of the third period for the victory after picking up a turnover from Jim Johannson. Lane McDonald had tied the score for the U.S. 50 seconds into the final period.

The U.S. team scored the only two third-period goals and once it had the lead tightened up defensively. Canada had only five shots on goal in the final period.

The result left Canada with a 6-3-1 record in 10 games against the U.S. The Canadians now head to Lake Placid, N.Y., for a week of training before playing its final two pre-Olympic games.

Analysts: Price weakness prevails

HOUSTON (AP) — Weak oil prices should prevail in the coming decade unless key producers take steps to drive the price up, an oil analyst says.

Oil prices during the next couple of years are expectd to range between $12 and $18 per barrel, and the 1990s may even see periods of $12-per-barrel oil, Joseph Stanislaw, managing director and coordinator of internatinal economics at Cambridge Energy Research Associates, said Wednesday.

The market will take the lead for 1988, and lower prices are predicted for the first half of the year, Stanislaw told about 400 people attending a conference on oil and gas strategies for the future.

The Cambridge Energy Research Associates' annual executive conference continues today in Houston.

Bill Hopper, chairman and chief executive officer of Petro-Canada, agreed that prices are likely to remain weak for several years.

"I just see the oversupply continuing for a long time in the future," Hopper said Wednesday.

During the first half of 1988, oil prices will average around $15 per barrel, Stanislaw said, and the last half of the year should see a slight increase with the average being $16 to $17.

Economic and political problems could drive the price up or down, but anything below $12 could be risky for some oil-producing countries because it might prompt the United States to try and implement an oil tariff, he said.

Members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, especially Saudi Arabia, could play a key role in major price changes, he added.

But in strict economic terms, there is nothing that points to prices above $18 a barrel soon. The only thing that could get prices higher for a sustained period would be a decision by key producer to support such an increase, he said.

Juan Chacin, president of Petroleos de Venezuela, said the price collapse of 1986 set the stage for oil prices in the 1990s. And it is probable, he said, that the buyer's market will continue into the next decade and regionalization will be a key word in formulating strategies.

Chacin said Petroleos de Venezuela's strategy is aimed at improving their presence in the Atlantic Basin market, which it regards as its natural market.

Neither Chacin, Hopper or Stanislaw advocated a U.S. oil tariff.

"It's not going to help much and I think it's going to hurt (the U.S.) more," Chacin said.

Stanislaw said that if a U.S. oil tariff excluded Canada, questions would be raised as whether to also exclude Mexico and then Venezuela. If all three of those major countries were excluded, then what good would an oil tariff do, he asked.

Hopper said if prices drop to $15 or $16 per barrel, he sees "a better than 50-50 chance the U.S. will move to protect." But if oil prices increased to $18, he did not expect any tariff to be passed.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange on Wednesday, futures contracts for March delivery of West Texas Intermediate, finished at $16.71 per 42-gallon barrel, down 33 cents from Tuesday's close.

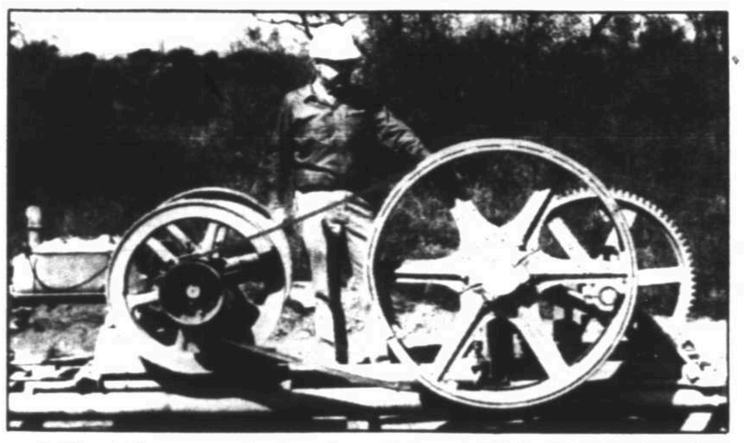
PETROLEUM MUSEUM



Arthur Dinsmoor, who has been instrumental in bringing together the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum's newest exhibit, "Development of the Pumping Unit," was one of four museum volunteers awarded "For Service" citations at Wednesday's annual meeting. Other honorees were Fran Schneider, Helen Lydecker and Tom Welch.

Petroleum Museum ends '87 strong, elects leaders

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND

About 57 percent of the 43,405 visitors to the museum last year were from more than 100 miles from Midland, Carey Behrends, deputy director of the museum, reported during the museum boards' annual meeting Wednesday. Attendance was off slightly compared to 1986, he said, and the total number of visitors to the museum in the 15 years since its opening topped 570,000.

Four museum volunteers were honored with service citations by the Board of Executors during the annual meeting.

Honored were were Santa Rita Club members and docents Helen Lydecker and Fran Schneider; retiring executive committee member Tom Welch; and Arthur Dinsmoor, coordinator of the nearly completed pumping unit exhibit.

Vera Powers was recognized with a plaque for having contributed more than 5,000 hours of volunteer time to the museum.

Chamber hopes to draw national EOR institute

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A National Enhanced Oil Recovery Institute may be in the offering if a plan by Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen gets the congressional nod, and the Midland Chamber of Commerce has a strong opinion about where it should be located.

"Such a facility would compliment our Center for Energy and Economic Diversification," said Grant Billingsley, chairman of the chamber's Economic Development Committee. "And if such an institute becomes a reality we are going to try and land it for the Permian Basin."

In December 1987, Bentsen sent letters to the chairmen of the Senate and House energy appropriations subcommittees asking that such an institute, where industry, academia and government could pool resources, be considered.

No price tag has been put on the recovery institute, but the Texas Democrat says he thinks the facility should be located somewhere in Texas.

"We intend to work closely with Sen. Bentsen's office to try and land such a facility for the Permian Basin," said Charles Spence, chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

In other chamber business, a financial plan to eliminate slightly over $500,000 in indebtedness on the chamber building was introduced by capital

Texaco loss nears $5 billion

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (NYT) — Texaco Inc. said Wednesday that it would report a loss of more than $4.9 billion for 1987 as a result of its restructuring and the settlement of its legal dispute with the Pennzoil Co.

In a document filed with the bankruptcy court here last month, Texaco had estimated a 1987 loss of $2.79 billion. The revised figure reflects a $2.1 billion write-down of the value of certain assets.

The company also said it faces $2.1 billion in claims from the Department of Energy, which has accused Texaco of overcharging for crude oil from 1973 to 1981, when price controls were in effect. Earlier this month Texaco disclosed that the Internal Revenue Service might seek $6.5 billion in back taxes.

The company's lawyers have contended that the claims by the Energy Department and the IRS are highly inflated. Texaco insiders said Wednesday that even if the government prevails, the company has adequate financing to cover most of the claims. The claims are not expected to hold up the bankruptcy proceedings. The company hopes to emerge from bankruptcy this spring.

The stock market did not react strongly to Wednesday's disclosures. In composite trading on the New York Stock Exchange, shares of Texaco closed at $37.875, down 87.5 cents.

Worker: Shutdown 'another Pearl Harbor'

KENOSHA, Wis. (AP) — Chrysler Corp. turned from hero to villain in the eyes of officials and autoworkers shocked by the news that the Kenosha auto assembly and stamping plants will close, making 5,500 people jobless.

"This is a sneak attack, another Pearl Harbor," said Billy Kittles, 51, who began working at the former American Motors Corp. plant in 1958. "It's a surprise. Everybody thought when Chrysler took over it was going to be go, go go."

At the tavern operated by Fred Kauzrich Jr., a sign that had read "Lee Iacocca for president," was changed to read "Lee Iacocca lied to us."

"I tell you what, if I didn't take down 'Lee Iacocca for president' they'd probably blow this place up," Kauzrich said. Iacocca is Chrysler Corp.'s chairman.

Dennis Meo, 35, a 14-year plant veteran and second vice president of United Auto Workers Local 72, noted that just two weeks ago, workers were told the assembly plant had broken a 15-year Chrysler record for quality car production.

Tavern operator Fred Kauzrich Jr. changes his sign which had read "Iacocca for president" to better reflect the attitude of Kenosha, Wis. after Chrysler announced it is closing a local plant.

"We were the best. Now two weeks later all the commitments to us and the state are broken," Meo said.

Chrysler, praised as the city's economic savior when it bought the aging plants last August, announced Wednesday it would close them by Sept. 30 to reduce capacity. The No. 3 automaker plans to continue operating a Kenosha engine plant that employs 1,000.

Gov. Tommy G. Thompson threatened legal action against the company for breaking a commitment to manufacture in Kenosha for five years.

"I am shocked, I am disgusted," Thompson said. "Some further legal research has got to be done, but we are looking at that possibility (of a lawsuit) very strongly."

In Washington, Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., called an emergency meeting of the state's congressional delegation for this afternoon to discuss a response.

Thompson said a suit could seek reimbursement for state and local costs involved in helping Chrysler expand operations at Kenosha, recovery of a $3 million grant that

Consumers, not investors, big winners from aspirin report

NEW YORK (AP) — At least one major aspirin maker plans to capitalize on a study that promotes the drug as an aid in preventing heart attacks, although the report isn't likely to mean big profit gains for major drug companies.

Stock prices of major aspirin makers rose briefly Wednesday after the release of the study, which indicated healthy men who take aspirin every other day could cut their risk of heart attack almost in half.

Glenbrook Laboratories, which makes Bayer aspirin, said that in coming months it planned to aim its new Bayer "Calendar Pak" — containing a month's worth of aspirin labeled by day and week — at people who undertake an aspirin regimen.

The company, which already features an earlier series of similar studies in its advertising, also stated it was close to unveiling a public education program about heart-attack prevention.

"We think this (new study) is just the next logical development in the commitment we have in this therapy," said Robin Mills, Glenbrook's president.

Mobil, Shell post earnings gains; Hess registers loss

NEW YORK (NYT) — Aided by production and exploration gains, the Mobil Corp., the nation's second-largest oil refiner, Wednesday reported a 91.6 percent rise in its fourth-quarter net income.

The Shell Oil company reported a 71.7 percent increase in earnings, while the Amerada Hess Corp. suffered a big loss.

Mobil's income in the quarter was $389 million, or 95 cents a share, compared with $203 million, or 50 cents a share, in the period a year ago. The company took a $140 million foreign inventory write-down in the 1986 quarter.

Revenues rose 25.6 percent, to $15.7 billion from $12.5 billion. But for the full year, net income was down 10 percent, to $1.26 billion from $1.4 billion. That drop, Mobil said, was caused by excess industry supplies and extreme pressure on consumer sales margins.

Revenues for the year were up 13.2 percent, to $56.4 billion from $49.9 billion.

Allen E. Murray, Mobil's chairman, said that the quarter's improvement came from higher crude-oil prices, increased natural-gas sales and favorable natural-gas contract settlements. He said refining and marketing earnings had improved over the previous quarters, before taking the writedown of foreign inventories to local currency market values.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Oil Show nearly sold out, officials report

From Staff Reports

Officials with the Permian Basin Oil Show say that, as of the final week of January, the show is 83 percent sold out, and a number of contracts are pending. The show is scheduled for October 19-22.

"As of Jan. 21, we had only 17 outside spaces available or left to be sold," stated Jay Alvey, executive director of the Odessa exhibition. "From the indications we're now getting, I would predict we'll be sold out in the very near future." Of the approximately 750 exhibit spaces already sold, some 460 companies are represented.

Clarence Cardwell, president of the 1988 Oil Show, commented that "This year looks super for the Permian Basin Oil Show. While the economic condition of the petroleum industry continues on the down side, things are so much better than they were prior to the 1986 oil show, when oil was $10 a barrel and drilling rigs were selling by the pound."

Many people had predicted that the 1986 oil show would not be staged because of the dramatic oil slump, but the show had more exhibitors than any previous exposition — a complete sellout with some 594 exhibitors.

Petroleum personnel from all industry levels are expected to attend the Ector County Coliseum event.

Show attendance for the first two days is reserved for petroleum industry representatives. The remaining two days of exhibition are open to the public.

State economic growth 'unspectacular' 2%

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas economy still has a difficult path ahead, but a Baylor University economist says it is a path toward recovery.

Ray Perryman, of the university's forecasting service, says that failures in the state banking and savings and loan industry, the record number of bankruptcies and the collapse of the construction industry are means toward curing economic ills.

"It's painful, but it's part of the economic workout of the state," Perryman told a conference of economists, bankers and business executives.

Perryman said that Texans this year will continue to see a transformation from an economy fueled by energy and real estate to one driven by manufacturing, services, exports and other industries.

He also predicted that the continued change will bring slow and unspectacular growth, which he expects will be at a rate of 2 percent.

Southland to sell manufacturing subsidiary

DALLAS (AP) — Southland Corp. officials said Wednesday the Dallas-based company has agreed to sell its Tidel Systems operation to DHM Corp, a privately held investment firm.

Southland did not disclose the sale price of Tidel Systems, a Carrollton manufacturer of cash dispensing machines, underground gasoline tank monitoring systems and other products.

AT&T reaps benefits of '86 belt-tightening

Associated Press

American Telephone & Telegraph Co. reported a profit in the fourth quarter and sharply higher earnings for 1987 as the phone giant continued to benefit from a major cost-cutting program begun in the previous year.

Analysts said Wednesday's results were in line with general expectations, although some warned that AT&T could face some rough times this year as it fights to maintain market share.

AT&T said it earned $498 million for the three months ended Dec. 31, vs. a loss of $1.17 billion in the 1986 quarter. For 1987, the company netted $2.04 billion, compared with earnings of $139 million in the previous year.

Allegis stockholder urges reneging on deal

CHICAGO (AP) — Allegis Corp.'s largest stock owner says the company's new management wants to renege on a promised $3 billion payout to shareholders.

However, some experts said Wednesday they believe Allegis will fulfill its pledge.

Coniston Partners, a New York investment firm with a 14 percent stake in the Chicago-based parent of United Airlines, threatened in a letter to Allegis' board of directors to renew a proxy battle for control of the company if the directors reduce the size of the previously announced payout.

CHAMBER

fund chairman Doug Henson. Henson said foundations would be contacted to assist with the debt reduction plan. A second phase of the financial plan would include raising funds for economic development and membership development.

A detailed report by Jane Meredith Wolf, chairman of the Convention & Visitor's Bureau Advisory Council, listed tourism and convention business as a viable option for economic development in Midland.

Wolf called tourism, producing $17 billion a year in revenues for the state, the second leading industry in Texas, and said Midland received more from tourism than might be expected.

"Tourism accounts for about $136 million and 2,400 jobs in the Midland economy," said Wolf, "And we hope to develop strategic marketing plans to attract even more visitors and conventions to Midland."

She said the Convention & Visitors Bureau would target religious, regional and association groups which have conventions of 500 and under. "We can handle those size conventions very well," she added.

Wolf would also like to see more events and attractions to draw regional visitors from a 200-mile radius and a national event or attraction to draw visitors to Midland from across the nation."

In other reports: Robin Jackson of the Arts Assembly reported that the group's annual Celebration of the Arts will be expanded this year to include more activities for children including an animator from Disneyland, a NASA display and computer art, sponsored by Texas Instruments. Children's activities will also move to the Court House lawn this year.

Hank Henry, president of the Permian Basin Bid Center, reported that the center had assisted in landing $5.6 million in federal contracts since it opened in 1986.

Membership Chairman Joanne Langston reported that a commission-only sales person would be added to the chamber staff to sell chamber memberships, and a new insurance policy for businesses would be instituted to attract and retain members.

Sharla Hotchkiss, reporting for Clean Midland, announced that the organization would change its name to Keep Midland Beautiful, to better reflect the nature of the organization.

Darrell McDonald, newly elected president of the Midland Board of Realtors, told the Chamber Board that the housing inventory in Midland was on the decline, and that it was good news for Midland.

Monthly economic indicators compiled by the Economic Development Committee of the Chamber of Commerce also indicate a substatial increase in building permits for new residential construction.

ASPIRIN

"We know that a significant part of the aspirin business is now beginning to go into heart attack prevention."

The company may not begin using the new study in ads until the Food and Drug Administration approves the results, which is expected to take three to six months.

Mills said Bayer has had double-digit sales growth since the FDA approved doctor-supervised aspirin regimens for certain heart attack and angina patients in 1985, but declined to comment on what the latest report would mean for sales.

However, industry watchers said that while the new study could boost aspirin use, the impact would amount to no more than a ripple in earnings for the big drug companies.

Sales of aspirin and similar analgesics account for a relatively small portion of drug company revenues, so rises in aspirin use would have to be huge to make more than a minor overall gain.

EARNINGS

Earnings also benefited, he said, from a strong performance in chemicals and a record quarter at Montgomery Ward, Mobil's retailing subsidiary.

Montgomery Ward had record fourth-quarter earnings of $82 million, compared with $78 million in the quarter a year ago. "The improvement came from the core merchandising business, particularly in the Home Ideas, Electric Avenue, and Auto Express categories, where the specialty store strategy continues to strengthen margins and improve operating efficiences," Murray said.

For the full year, Mobil's earnings from petroleum operations were $522 million lower, reflecting a large decline in refining and marketing results. But chemical operations had a record year, with earnings of $300 million, or $160 million above 1986, reflecting improvements in petrochemicals and plastics volume and margins.

The Shell Oil Co., the wholly owned subsidiary of Royal Dutch-Shell, reported Wednesday that stronger oil prices had resulted in a 71 percent increase in the company's fourth-quarter net income.

Shell said it had earned $436 million, in the fourth quarter, compared with $254 million in the comparable 1986 quarter. Earnings for the year increased 39 percent, to $1.2 billion from $883 million.

Revenues were $5.9 billion for the quarter, up from $4.5 billion. Yearly revenues were $21.2 billion, compared with $17.4 billion in 1986.

"Last year was the first since 1981 in which our average crude oil prices were higher than the year before," said John F. Bookout, president of Shell. He said domestic crude oil prices had averaged $15.33 a barrel for the quarter, which was $3.73 higher than during the comparable quarter last year.

Those prices, however, were still substantially lower than prices before the collapse in 1986.

Amerada Hess, the nation's 15th-largest oil company, said it had lost $79.57 million in the three months ended Dec. 31, compared with revised earnings of $78.06 million, or 93 cents a share, for the period a year earlier. The company attributed the loss primarily to devaluations of its crude oil and refined-product inventories.

Museums learn to see the beauty of retailing

By LAURIE ITOW
Hearst News Service

The nation's largest museum merchant, New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art, rang up $52.9 million in the sales of books, baubles and memorabilia last year. The Smithsonian Institution ranks No. 2, drawing shopping crowds that would make Bloomingdale's proud. Sales from its catalogs and 16 gallery stores, all in Washington, D.C., grew to $44 million last year.

One of the reasons for the store boom, museums say, is that public funds and private donations are falling short of rising expenses. Proceeds from stores provide small, but valuable income, they say.

Though museum stores have been evolving for a decade, they really blossomed about five years ago, store directors say. Since then, they've been spruced up, expanded and stocked with new enticing gifts.

The MMA even operates a concession in Macy's flagship store on Herald Square and another in the mid-Manhattan branch of the New York Public Library. Under its own roof, the Met has about a half-dozen shops, including a two-story, 12,500-square-foot main store.

In total, the Met's retailing division, including its $19 million mail order group, contributed $9.2 million to the museum's $115 million operating budget last year.

As part of that effort, museums are turning to industry professionals, rather than volunteers, to run the stores. At the Smithsonian, for instance, John Giesecke, a former manager of the prominent Neiman-Marcus catalog, heads its $20 million mail order business. Stores are managed by Samuel Greenberg, a veteran of retailers Filene's and Zayre Corp., both in Massachusetts.

Museums aren't alone in realizing that nonprofit and income are exclusive terms.

Greenpeace USA, the environmental advocate, operates stores in San Francisco, Santa Cruz, Calif., Key West, Fla., and Provincetown, Mass. Greenpeace sells environmentally correct books, toys, posters, videos and T-shirts, as well as a $22 "I support Greenpeace" umbrella that comes with information on acid rain.

The Sierra Club also operates a half-dozen bookstores. The environmental group's 4-year-old mail order operation generated about $3 million in sales. A "small" profit was applied to the club's $28 million operating budget, says Leonard Levit, vice president of finance.

Books, videos, records, cassettes and compact discs are the mainstay of the San Francisco Opera's shop. This year, the store will begin renting videos, says Meigs Ingham, the shop's general merchandise manager. The store last year contributed its $40,000 profit, on $600,000 in sales, to the opera's $22 million budget.

Nonprofit stores have attracted not only the attention of shoppers; they've also caught the eye of tax collectors. The Internal Revenue Service randomly audits the shops and in some cases has ordered income taxes paid on sales deemed unrelated to education. Among goods excluded have been T-shirts, wind chimes and some postcards.

The Lawrence Hall of Science, an affiliate of the University of California-Berkeley, has created several products for its Discovery Corner store which have been sold to other museums. One is called the Sky Challenger, an astronomy game that sells for $6.95. Retail sales of about $450,000 from its store and catalog netted about $45,000 for the museum's $14 million 1987 operating budget.

Museum store revenue is also benefiting from higher attendance. Some officials say the turnstiles are turning more often because the public is better educated. Others cite blockbuster shows as museums' magnet.

The Impressionists collection called "The New Painting" that exhibited for three months at San Francisco's de Young museum in 1986, for example, boosted store sales to $3.7 million that fiscal year, compared with about $800,000 the previous year. Last year, sales were about $2 million, resulting in income of $509,880, about half the $1.2 million the previous year when the Impressionists exhibit was there.

At the Smithsonian, museums schedule shopping nights where members are fed free wine and cheese and then herded into the shops, says Greenberg. The stores have been such a hit that he is regularly courted to open outlets in shopping havens such as Boston's Faneuil Hall. So far he has declined.

One of the Smithsonian's hottest products is freeze-dried "astronaut" ice cream that sells for $1.50, Greenberg says.

Goods sold by the stores and catalogs — ranging from an $1,875 love seat to a $6 Slinky — contributed more than $5 million to the Smithsonian's $278.4 million annual budget last year. About 80 percent of the budget was funded by Congress, while the rest was financed with donations, membership fees and income from the Smithsonian magazine and its restaurants.

"We heard they bought a boat for tropical research and a $1 million painting" with store income, Greenberg says. "That's what motivates us."

MUSEUM

Per-visitor sales at the museum's gift shop were the highest in the seven years that such records have been kept, Behrends said. Sales averaged $1.69 per visitor last year, compared to $1.44 in 1982, the next highest total.

Proceeds from gift shop sales in excess of expenses go toward helping defray the operating budget of the museum, which is set at $612,000 for 1988. Last year self-generated funds — admissions, sales, etc. — accounted for 19 percent of the $616,600 spent on operations, including replacing most of the original roof on the museum building.

Development director Joyce Montgomery reported to the museum's directors that there was an 8 percent increase in funds from the annual fall membership campaign during 1987. Along with $245,000 in grant monies, the $126,000 from memberships provided more than half the total funds.

The museum's education and other outreach programs had a successful year as well, reaching more than 3,000 kindergarten through 6th grade students during the fall school semester. Girl scout overnight "camp-ins" brought an additional 350 visitors to the museum and double that number are planned for 1988.

Thirteen summer classes for preschool and elementary student and five Saturday programs with the Midland Association of Retarded Citizens were also completed last year.

The museum's library and archives added 35 individual and corporate collections to its store of documents, which archivist Betty Orbeck called "second to none in the region or within the industry."

Re-elected to five-year terms on the Board of Executors of the museum were: James Boldrick, Rufe Bynum Jr., Tevis Herd, Fred Hogan, William Malone, Colin McMillan, R.E. Throckmorton Jr. and Ralph Way. New to the Board of Executors are Glenn Brant and Marvin Schiebout, who will fill the unexpired term of Matthew Murphy.

Officers of the executors' group were elected for another year as well as each being selected for an additional five years on the board. They are: Ted Kerr, chairman; William Marshall, vice chairman; and John McGuigan, secretary.

Eight members of the museum's board of trustees were re-elected to three-year terms. They are Mrs. George Abell, Martin Allday, Ford Chapman, Conrad Coffield, Joe Dominey, Richard Donnelly, Jack Hightower and Charles Perry. Herbert Boles is the only newly elected trustee and was also voted to the post of assistant treasurer.

The other members of the executive committee were are relected to their respective posts: Ted Kerr, chairman of the Board of Executors; Nancy Anguish, president; W.H. Collyns, first vice president; Conrad Coffield, second vice president; H.W. Davidson, treasurer; Joe McShane Jr., secretary; and Robert Holt, assistant secretary.

CHRYSLER

went to AMC to retrain workers for Chrysler production and unspecified damages.

After Chrysler bought AMC last year, the state agreed to provide an additional $5 million in job-training money to retrain workers to produce Omni and Horizon cars, Thompson said.

Chrysler, he said, balked at signing a written contract that was sent two or three weeks ago with a provision for five years of auto manufacturing in Kenosha. But there were letters exchanged earlier in which Chrysler "made a commitment to the state of Wisconsin for five years," Thompson said.

"It's a very sad day for Kenosha. It's an even sadder day for Chrysler, a major corporation that had given their oral and their written word," Thompson said. "They did not even keep it for six months."

But Chrysler spokesman Douglas Nicoll said the company made no such commitment. He contended Chrysler had said it probably would build the Omni-Horizon for five years — but not necessarily at Kenosha.

Industry analysts said Chrysler's decision to close the assembly plant was logical.

CONSUMING INTERESTS

More CPSC and FDA warnings, recalls

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

Here's a continuation of last week's list of warnings and recalls. These are from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and the Consumer Product Safety Commission:

■ The Food and Drug Administration warns that 4-ounce bottles labeled as non-prescription cold medicine may, in fact, contain a potent tranquilizer that may be fatal if taken by children. The manufacturer, My-K Laboratories of Morton Grove, Ill., is recalling its lot number 15718, expiration date 12/88, which is marketed under the names Myfed Syrup (distributed to military and civilian stores), Life-Line Trifed Syrup (distribted by Life-Line Pharmaceuticals), URL Uni-Fed Syrup (United Research Laboratories), Walgreen Wal-Act Syrup (Walgreen Co.) and Osco Aphedrid Syrup (Osco Drug Inc.)

Cold medicines purchased within this past year should be checked and those with the number 15718 should be returned. Do not take them.

■ A Canadian advisory against eating raw or cooked mussels, oysters or clams from Atlantic Canada was publicized by the FDA. The shellfish, most often the mussels, reportedly caused nausea and mental confusion in several people, and caused a fatal coma in a 71-year-old man. Although the shellfish is from Prince Edward Island and Magdalen Islands north of Nova Scotia, it is distributed widely in the U.S., and consumers are advised to ask about the origin of any shellfish they purchase.

■ Armour Pharmaceutical of Blue Bell, Pa., is voluntarily withdrawing its H.T. Factorate Antihemophilic Factor (Human) distributed to hemophilia patients and their doctors. Six patients receiving the product have tested positive for antibody to HIV, virus which causes AIDS.

Although health officials do not know if the product caused this positive reaction, the lots are being withdrawn as a precautionary measure (distributed only in Canada — lots numbered B71308, B71408 and B71508). In the U.S., products being withdrawn have six-digit code starting with A or B, and expiration dates up to December 1988 (although not all products with these expiration dates are involved). For more information call (on a touch-tone telephone) 1-800-533-6165 during EST working hours, then use extensions 7070, 7074 or 7077. (On rotary telephones, call (215) 540-8109 collect.)

■ United Furniture Manufacturing Inc., in cooperation with CPSC, and in order to prevent injuries caused by collapse of mattress and foundation, is providing a free safety modification kit for use in bunk beds they produced. Models affected are No. 500, 600 and 700. Consumers are advised to examine their bunk beds. If ledges attached to the side rail of the beds provide the only support for the mattress and foundation (on either bed), call United Furniture at (803) 879-7373 for a free modification kit.

■ Fisher-Price, in cooperation with CPSC, is providing a free modification kit for its Model 9110 combination carriage/stroller made before July 1, 1986. Models made after that date are not affected. Strollers in question can be identified by the manufacture date (between April 1985 and May 1986) printed on a label on the back of the seat.

For a free kit call 1-800-334-5439 between 8:30 a.m.-5 p.m. EST or write Fisher-Price Consumer Affairs, P.O. Box 16, East Aurora, N.Y. 14052. The strollers should not be used in the seat back reclined position until the kit has been installed.

■ Hedstrom Probe VI battery-powered riding toys made before June 1985 and without fuses, are being repaired by the manufacturer, in voluntary cooperation with the CPSC. In at least eight instances, these toys have caught on fire (instances occured while vehicles were being ridden and while they were stored). The toy is a six-wheeled, two-speed toy all-terrain vehicle powered by two motors with two six-volt gel-type lead acid batteries. Each toy has a separate charger. Model identification numbers (located under the front of the plastic body) are 67-3890, 67-3891, 67-3892, 67-38921, 67-3893 and 67-38931 with manufacturer dates before June 1985 as shown on the same label. Toys should have the batteries removed until the fuse protector kit is installed. Hedstrom's toll free number is 1-800-233-3271; address is Hedstrom Corporation, Department 100, P.O. Box 432, Bedford, Pa. 15522-0432.

For more information on these or any CPSC warnings or recalls, call toll-free hotline 1-800-638-CPSC. Teletypewriter number for hearing impaired is 800-638-8270.

Reducing risks of heart disease examined

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

February is the month for hearts — red paper hearts, candy hearts and real flesh and blood hearts. It's the month that the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute tries to draw attention to the risks of heart disease.

How much do you know about having a healthy heart? Here are some true or false questions that will test your knowledge of heart disease and how to reduce the risk of developing it:

1. True or false: A heart attack or stroke is often the first symptom of high blood pressure and/or elevated blood cholesterol.

True. There are often no signs at all that might signal these conditions. To find out if you have elevated blood cholesterol or high blood pressure, you should be tested by a doctor. The blood cholesterol test requires a laboratory analysis of a sample of your blood.

2. True or false: A food product labeled "no cholesterol" is a safe choice for people with elevated cholesterol levels.

False. A food product can contain no cholesterol and still be high in saturated fat, which will raise your blood cholesterol. Examples are commercially baked foods made with coconut oil, palm oil or a heavily hydrogenated vegetable oil.

As you shop, check labels for a listing of the amounts of saturated and polyunsaturatead fats.

Your best choice is a product that contains more polyunsaturated fat than saturated fat, since polyunsaturated fat will lower blood cholesterol.

3. True of false: Cigarette smoking by itself will increase your risk of heart attack.

True. Smoking is a definite and strong risk factor for heart disease. The heart disease death rate among smokers is 70 percent greater than that of nonsmokers.

Heavy smokers are at even greater risk, and smokers with elevated blood cholesterol or high blood pressure increase their chances of heart disease dramatically.

Comparison shop for cellular telephones

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

As the result of new technologies, portable telephones are no longer a luxury available only to the wealthy or privileged business executive.

Cellular mobile telephones, available in most major urban areas of the United States, use a network of small areas, called cells, which have their own low power transmitter and receiver.

Calls from one cell to another are switched automatically by a computerized switching system without any disruption of service.

The Better Business Bureau notes that while the quality of reception and transmission from these new cellular phone systems is comparable to that of home phones, consumers should shop around and compare equipment and costs before they buy.

All cellular phones must meet Federal Communications Commission requirements; however, quality and features can differ greatly.

Test the quality and features of phones available in your area and try a road demonstration.

Consider a system that allows the use of a headset or loudspeaker, free both hands to drive instead of holding a receiver. Also consider an electronic lock that prevents others from using the phone without your knowledge.

The BBB recommends that the equipment be installed by a professional who offers operational warranties.

Whether you decide to buy, lease or rent the equipment, you still must pay the monthly access fee and a per-minute fee. The cost of long-distance calls is usually added on top of the local per-minute fee.

Service costs will vary, with different rates for peak and off-peak hours. Some suppliers offer a flat rate for monthly services, which may be preferable if you make many calls.

Ask friends and colleagues who have cellular phone systems for recommendations. Check with the BBB for additional advice.

Hotel industry still selling fitness to travelers

The Associated Press

Does fitness still sell?

The hotel industry apparently feels it does, offering fitness-minded travelers everything from the traditional swimming pool to aerobic dancing and ultramodern exercise rooms with stationary bicycles, treadmills, rowing machines and pneumatic weight equipment.

For travelers who prefer to exercise in the privacy of their own room, some hotels offer "room service" — guests can rent a rowing machine, exercise bike and workout videotape for room delivery.

Some Inter-Continental hotels, for example, cater to the fitness-minded with a health club, swimming pool, trails for jogging and biking — and rooms and suites reserved for non-smokers.

In addition to offering a pool and health club to its guests, the Westin Hotel, Copley Place, Boston, provides jogging maps for a route around the Charles River.

Survive hard times with planned budget

By CHRIS BARNETT
and MIKE GARCIA
Copley News Service

It's belt-tightening time, the declining dollar, sinking stock market and bloated budget and trade deficits are just some of the red flags signaling a possible recession next year, but don't wait until the eleventh hour to brace yourself for tough times.

Take a hard look at every dollar you make or spend and ask yourself these questions: "Am I getting the most mileage out of this money? How can I make it work harder?"

We've surveyed investment and personal finance specialists across the country and compiled a list of smart ideas. Clip it and tape it on the front door of your refrigerator and you'll be reminded to nourish yourself financially as well as nutritionally every day.

■ BUILD A CASH RESERVE. In tight times — or anytime — it's absolutely essential to have enough cash on hand to carry you through three weeks to six months of unemployment without having to go into your savings or liquidate investments. Add up what you need to live on for at least 90 days and stock it away in a special passbook account at your bank, savings and loan or credit union. Sure, you may get unemployment benefits from the state or your union, but don't depend on it.

■ PAY DOWN CREDIT BALANCES. Interst paid on consumer loans, credit cards and charge account balances is no longer tax deductible in '88. Plus, if there's an economic slowdown next year and you lose your job, you don't want to face big payments.

■ POSTPONE BIG PURCHASES. Of course, it would be nice to buy that camper or ski boat or new car next year but is it absolutely critical? Wait until the storm clouds pass before signing on the dotted line on anything that's not vitally important. Does the family budget need the strain if things get tight?

■ BUY IN BULK AND SAVE. Real shrewdies know how to save their after-tax dollars and hang onto pure profit. When money gets scarce in your household, you want to be able to cut back without feeling the pinch. Buying food and merchandise you need and use at a bulk discount or, when it's on sale, is an investment that pays immediate tax-free dividends. Andrew Tobias, author of "The Only Other Investment Guide You'll Ever Need" buys groceries and pretends he's playing the commodities market. Not long ago, he was "long" or owned four giant-sized tubes of toothpaste bought at distress prices, two cases of sale-priced soup, two kegs of ketchup — you get the idea. Warehouse discount stores like Price Club and Cosco stores may not look pretty but prices and cash discounts are attractive. Get in the habit.

■ CONTROL THE URGE TO SPLURGE. Ever have a garage sale and wonder why you bought things in the first place? It was probably an impulse purchase that felt good at the time. The Atari home computer you used once and found the games boring. The on-sale sportcoat you snapped up but now hate because the colors and pattern make you look like a buffoon. That third wristwatch you never wear. Company marketing and advertising wizards spend millions of dollars to get you to buy without even thinking about it; to act on impulse. And it costs you plenty over 12 months. So fight back. Ask yourself every time you open your purse or wallet real wide: "Do you really need this?"

Drowning in bills, sinking in debts?

Grab a lifeline of self-discipline

By CHRIS BARNETT
and ART GARCIA
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

If you're sinking deeper in debt because the bills from your Christmas shopping are coming in, along with the spectre of paying taxes, throw yourself a lifeline — some new self-discipline.

You do not have to radically change your lifestyle from tenderloin of beef to TV dinners, yet scaling back on spending helps. You must take action by contacting creditors and working out repayment programs that fit your budget.

"You may be tempted to ignore overdue notices on your bills and calls from collection agencies, hoping things will eventually work out," says Jack Houseman, a vice president with the giant Bank of America.

"But if you don't act now to get your finances back in order, you may be jeopardizing your peace of mind as well as your credit rating," he says.

How do you know if you need to toss yourself a life preserver? The bank's newly published Consumer Information Report says there are some "clear danger signals" when you're getting overextended but you can't shut your eyes to them.

ARE YOU JUGGLING payments — stalling one creditor to pay another? Getting past due notices in monthly statements? Failing to save a little money each month or, worse yet, dipping into savings for normal living expenses?

Do you find yourself running out of money before payday or taking cash advances on your credit cards to cover everyday living expenses? But the fire alarm should really sound off if you are charging more to your credit accounts than you're paying off each month.

That is a serious problem, he says.

Where do you start? "The first step in taking charge of your debts is to know exactly where you stand," counsels Houseman. Sit down at the kitchen table and make a "personal financial statement" — then update it every three months.

List your total monthly income after taxes and other deductions. Spell out your everyday living expenses — mortgage or rent, food, utilities, transportation and child care. Separate out periodic expenses such as property taxes, insurance, tuition and other substantial sums so you won't be surprised when they come due. Then list your monthly credit card and charge account payments.

NEXT, WHAT can be trimmed? For starters, put your credit cards in a drawer, recommends Houseman. That alone should curb some impulse spending. Close the charge accounts you really don't need; keep one department store charge and close those three others. Are you going out to dinner on whims, because you're tired at the end of the day and don't want to cook, make each dining out experience special — and plan them.

But if your debts have ballooned to the point that simply cutting back isn't going to relieve the pressure, it's time to take action. Swallow your pride and contact your creditors.

"If you've paid your bills regularly in the past, most creditors will appreciate your taking the initiative," says the Bank of America vice president. "They will want to help."

Creditors have no set formula for dealing with delinquencies. So it's up to you to explain — don't plead — your case.

You may be in a temporary cash squeeze. You had to pay a tuition or a large medical bill and you don't have the money in your checking account right now. Ask for a 30-day or a 60-day extension. Large corporations do it all the time when they owe millions.

CHANCES ARE you won't have to shell out a dime for those two months, but some companies may want a small partial payment as a good faith gesture. Or you may have to pay the monthly interest charge but not the principal.

If you're granted this courtesy, Houseman suggests confirming it with a letter and sending a copy to your local credit reporting agency — TRW, Equifax — so the creditor's computer doesn't inadvertantly tell the agency's computer you are delinquent. Your credit history should be kept pristine at all times.

Perhaps you simply cannot make the installment loan payments you agreed to at the outset. Ask the lender to revise the terms — a lower amount for a longer time. It's a life preserver because it also takes some of the pressure off you. You may have to pay a fee or the loan could be revised at a slightly higher interest rate, says the banker. "But the lower installments should help you make your payments on time."

Other avenues for help: Refinancing the loan, which is an entirely new credit with new application, fees, closing costs; a debt consolidation loan, which means borrowing a large sum to pay off existing debts leaving you with one smaller loan payment.

DON'T THINK you have more spendable cash though; you're still in the hole and you are paying pretty hefty finance charges.

A more drastic measure is taking out a home equity loan or credit loan secured by your house. This can be dangerous because if you don't repay this loan, you could lose the roof over your head. This, like the debt consolidation loan, is a last resort move.

Far wiser is to contact the Consumer Credit Counselors office near you. This respected, nonprofit organization will help you work out your credit problems and set up a debt management program. DEAR ABBY

Tooth-grinding problem not easy to grin, bear

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is for "No Sleeping Beauty," married three months but getting no sleep because her husband, "Frank," grinds his teeth in his sleep. You suggested that Frank wear a teeth guard at night — but you weren't firm enough. "Bruxism" (teeth grinding) places a tremendous amount of stress on one's jaw and can damage the disc in the joint. This results in a condition known as "temporomandibular joint" (TMJ) syndrome.

I should know — I was a tooth grinder, and it nearly ruined my life. It's an incredibly painful condition. I couldn't chew. I had severe headaches and muscle spasms in my face, neck and back. I lost my job and nearly lost my husband. For two years the doctors didn't know what was wrong with me. I was suicidal because of the pain and was even sent to a mental health facility!

Eventually the condition was correctly diagnosed. I had three surgeries and spent four years undergoing various treatments.

So, if Frank thinks all he has to worry about is his teeth, he is sorely mistaken. He should make an appointment immediately with a dentist or oral surgeon trained in the treatment of TMJ. And as for not being able to sleep with an appliance in his mouth, consider the alternatives: three operations, $250,000 in medical bills and six years in hell! — BEEN THERE IN ARIZONA

DEAR BEEN THERE: Your valuable testimonial should be enough to alert "No Sleeping Beauty" to the seriousness of her husband's teeth grinding. But here are some first-hand kudos for a "night guard" from a lady who is a user and a pusher:

DEAR ABBY: "No Sleeping Beauty" should get her husband to a dentist now if she has to hog-tie him to do it! People who grind their teeth in their sleep are in for serious dental and jaw problems.

I know. I wear a night guard every night to keep me from clenching my teeth and giving me more dental/jaw problems than I already have. A night guard is easy to wear. Since it is custom-made by a dentist, one can hardly feel it when it is in. I can even talk coherently with it in my mouth. Taking the impression to make one takes less than two minutes. It's completely painless, and a plastic guard cost me a little less than $50.

"Frank" is going to ruin his jaw if he doesn't get a night guard. He could develop arthritis of the jaw, earaches, facial pain, nerve damage and a host of other problems, not to mention losing his natural teeth. And don't kid yourself — false teeth are no substitute for the real thing. My friends with false teeth have told me so. — VIVIAN ONKEN-POLSON, OMAHA

Mecham seeks to address House before testifying

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Gov. Evan Mecham, called to testify before the House committee considering his impeachment, has asked to address the full House before answering any questions.

The Republican governor, who also faces a recall election and a criminal trial on charges he concealed a campaign loan, was asked Wednesday to testify before the House select committee.

Mecham, who said last week he would appear before the committee "with no conditions," sent a letter to committee chairman Jim Skelly requesting permission to make a one-hour, 15-minute speech to the full House before answering the committee's questions Monday.

"He's trying to set up pre-conditions. That's not right," said House Speaker Joe Lane, a Republican.

"If, at the end of my presentation, you prefer to recess and move to the hearing room for questioning from the committee, that would be your choice," the governor said.

Ken Smith, a Mecham spokesman, said Wednesday night Mecham would appear before the select committee even if he is not allowed to address the full House.

Earlier, the governor's lawyer, Murray Miller, said Mecham will answer "all the questions that are appropriate" and will not seek Fifth Amendment protection. "We have nothing to hide," Miller said.

Lane said a decision on whether to impeach Mecham could be made by the middle of next week.

Former Mecham inaugural committee chairman Bill Long testified Wednesday on the allegation that the governor improperly borrowed $80,000 from the governor's protocol fund for his auto dealership, Mecham Pontiac.

Long testified that the loan "violated good taste" and did not comply with an agreement with the Maricopa County Attorney's Office that the money be used to aid the governor in the performance of his official duties.

The hearing was scheduled to resume this afternoon with testimony from Mecham's chief of staff, Richard Burke, on an allegation that Mecham tried to thwart an investigation of an alleged death threat to a former aide who testified before the grand jury investigating Mecham.

Arizona Gov. Evan Mecham

Tuesday, Mecham was formally notified that he has until Saturday to either resign or run in a recall election, which probably will be scheduled for May 17. He has repeatedly said he will not quit.

The governor also faces a March 9 trial on six felony counts of fraud, perjury and filing false documents for failing to report the $350,000 campaign loan. His brother and 1986 campaign treasurer, Willard Mecham, faces three similar counts.

Mecham has denied any wrongdoing in connection with the loan, contending the failure to report it was an "honest mistake."

A majority of the 60 House votes are required to impeach Mecham, while two-thirds of the 30 Senate votes are needed to convict him at trial.

If Mecham resigned or were removed from office, he would be replaced by Secretary of State Rose Mofford, a Democrat. She also would take over as acting governor if Mecham were ordered to face an impeachment trial.

Senate debates abortion, agrees on civil rights bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators wrangled for six hours over abortion before reaching a delicate agreement to proceed with consideration of a far-reaching civil rights bill that doesn't even mention the word.

The Senate today was facing two amendments on abortion plus others on discrimination against AIDS patients and expansion of religious exemptions in the Civil Rights Restoration Act.

The agreement to proceed with work on the act itself came after a six-hour negotiating session that started Wednesday afternoon and involved more than a dozen lawmakers and their aides.

Much of it took place on the Senate floor during a break that lasted hours, with visitors in the galleries able to see heated gestures and hear snippets of irritable discussion as the maneuvering progressed.

Conflict has dogged the restoration act since it was introduced in 1984 to reverse a Supreme Court decision that severely limited the reach of the civil rights laws protecting women, minorities, the aged and the disabled from discrimination.

In the case of Grove City (Pa.) College, the court said those protections only applied to specific programs or activities receiving federal aid — and not to entire institutions. At Grove City, that meant only the financial aid office, since the school's only federal aid was in the form of student grants and loan subsidies. Discrimination in the athletic department, for example, could not be prosecuted.

The ruling provoked an uproar in the civil rights community and among lawmakers who said Congress had always intended broader protections.

Proponents of this year's bill are trying to keep it free of restrictive amendments and easily defeated two such provisions Wednesday before Sen. John Danforth abruptly introduced his "abortion-neutral" amendment.

Danforth, R-Mo., said he feared the combined consequences of the restoration act, the existing law barring sex discrimination in education and a federal regulation requiring colleges to treat abortion like any other disability.

He said his amendment would make sure no teaching hospital or college ever was forced to perform or pay for abortions. "Right now, the law is in flux," he said. "The law has not yet been interpreted to require hospitals to perform abortions. We don't want the law to be construed that way."

NATION IN BRIEF

NATO defenses discussed

WASHINGTON (AP) — NATO needs to improve its non-nuclear defenses to cope with the military threat that will remain after a new treaty eliminates medium-range atomic weapons, supporters and opponents of the pact agree.

"NATO is not as well off as some people are saying it is," Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., said in criticism of a Senate Armed Services Committee report that he argued painted too rosy a picture of the Western alliance's capabilities.

Meantime, the Reagan administration told Congress in a report from the Pentagon that "we still have the pressing need to revitalize and strengthen our military capabilities for the 1990s, as was the case prior to the INF agreement."

The report and Quayle's comments Wednesday focused new attention on the impact of the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces treaty on the military balance in Western Europe.

The treaty requires the United States and the Soviet Union to get rid of their medium- and shorter-range atomic-tipped missiles within three years. The U.S. missiles are in Europe and aimed at Soviet targets. The Soviet missiles are aimed at U.S. allies and China.

Amish block planned road

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Pennsylvania's largest Amish community has won a fight to keep one more modern intrusion from their rural haven.

Gov. Robert P. Casey's administration announced Wednesday that a new highway will not be built through the Amish farmlands east of Lancaster, which is 66 miles west of Philadelphia.

"He has determined that we will not build a new highway in any corridor that will bisect the Amish farming community or cause a major disruption to the Amish lifestyle," said Transportation Secretary Howard Yerusalim.

"We're glad to hear that," said John Goeke, secretary of Lancaster Alliance for New Directions, or LAND, a group formed to fight the highway. "We're happy they're not going to destroy one of our main resources."

Panel endorses Kennedy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Anthony M. Kennedy's nomination to the Supreme Court is only days away from winning what may become unanimous Senate confirmation.

Minutes before the Senate Judiciary Committee endorsed Kennedy by a 14-0 vote Wednesday, committee member Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, predicted a "unanimous or near-unanimous" favorable vote by the full Senate.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said there was a possibility the final confirmation vote could be conducted Friday but said a Monday vote was more likely.

AMENDED NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR WASTE DISCHARGE PERMIT RENEWAL

CITY OF MIDLAND, P.O. Box 1152, Midland, Texas 79701 has applied to the Texas Water Commission for renewal of Permit No. 10223-02 which authorizes a discharge of treated domestic wastewater effluent at a volume not to exceed an average flow of 1,000,000 gallons per day from the Air Terminal Wastewater Treatment Plant which is located at the Midland Regional Airport, at the intersection of Interstate Highway 20 and Farm to Market Road 1788 in Midland County, Texas. The effluent is discharged into an unnamed draw; thence to Monahans Draw; thence to Midland Draw; thence to Johnson Draw; thence to Mustang Draw; thence to Beals Creek; thence to the Colorado River in Segment No. 1412 of the Colorado River Basin.

The Executive Director of the Texas Water Commission has prepared a draft permit which, if approved by the Commission, will specify conditions and limitations generally the same as those currently enforced by the existing permit except that the flow has been decreased to 600,000 gallons per day average and monitoring requirements for minimum dissolved oxygen concentration have been added. The expiration date of the existing permit was July 16, 1984. It is proposed that the expiration date be specified as midnight, five years after date of Commission approval.

Legal Authority:
Section 26.028 of the Texas Water Code, as amended, and 31 TAC Chapter 305 of the Rules of the Texas Water Commission.

No public hearing will be held on this application unless an affected person who has received notice of the application has requested a public hearing. Any such request for a public hearing shall be in writing and contain (1) the name, mailing address and phone number of the person making the request; and (2) a brief description of how the requester, or persons represented by the requester, would be adversely affected by the granting of the application. If the Commission determines that the request sets out an issue which is relevant to the permit decision, or that a public hearing, would serve the public interest, the Commission shall conduct a public hearing, after the issuance of proper and timely notice of the hearing. If no sufficient request for hearing is received within 30 days of the date of publication of the notice concerning the application, the permit will be submitted to the Commission for final decision on the application.
