Blast Turns Gasser Into Torch

This gigantic torch, etching the steel skeleton of an oil derrick against the night sky, blazed 80 fet high after a blast that killed two and burned six others at Six Lakes, Mich., in bringing in a huge gasser. The spectacle, photographed just before the derrick's girders crumpled in the intense heat, attracted hundreds of spectators. Fire crews fought vainly to quell the flames.

First Ransom Bill Found, Gives Clue

By Associated Press

TACOMA, Wash., June 5.—Hot on the trail of George Weyerhaeuser's kidnapers after the telltale appearance of one of the 20,000 ransom bills in eastern Oregon, the nation's manhunters labored today to "break the case wide open" by tomorroy evening.

A former big time Portland bootlegger was reported by Captain Jack Keegan of Portland police detectives to be sought in the behief he possibly is the "potbellied man" the boy described as one of the kidnapers.

PORTLAND, Ore., June 5 — A Union Pacific station agent in eastern Oregon today told the Associated Press that a $20 bill bearing a serial number listed in the Weyerhaeuser ransom, was passed at the station last Sunday night by a man who purchased a ticket for Salt Lake City.

The railroad agent, T. C. Hunter in charge of the Huntington, Oregon station said the serial number was L-12129816-A.

It was taken, he said, by C. E. Hannon, telegraph operator, who was alone in the office.

Hunter said the man who purchased the ticket to Salt Lake City on train No. 1, leaving Huntington at 10:10 P. M. June 2, wore a tan suit, a brown hat, and was smooth shaven.

He was about 5 feet 11 inches tall and 30 years old, Hunter said. He talked in a low voice and appeared nervous.

Huntington, a town of about 800 population and a railroad junction point, is in the extreme eastern part of Oregon, about halfway between the city of Baker and the Oregon-Idaho line.

Long Range Program May Be Planned To Carry On Work

By Associated Press

WASHINGTON, June 5—Democrat congressional leaders said today that President Roosevelt is planning to submit additional legislation before the end of the present Congress to replace NRA's invalidated code structure. The form of the future legislation has not yet been determined.

By Associated Press

WASHINGTON, June 5.—The possibility that the Government's taxing power might be used to effectuate a new, long range NRA program was disclosed today by Chairman Doughton, North Carolina, of the House Ways and Means Committee, as administration leaders sought legislation for a temporary skeletonized recovery organization.

He is expected in conference today with Donald Richberg and representatives of the Senate Finance Committee to agree upon the temporary NRA measure.

President Roosevelt submitted all proposals for the future of NRA to Attorney General Cummings and Solicitor General Reed.

They thus far have failed to find any plan which meets legal requirements.

AMARILLO, June 5.—A Democratic convention — known throughout the world as the most colorful of conferences — will start in Amarillo tomorrow.

Toledo Industry Is Paralyzed by Electric Strike

TOLEDO, Ohio June 5.—The condition of virtual industrial paralysis fell upon this city of 300,000 population today as union electrical workers struck, causing a serious shortage in power.

Huge factories were closed, unable to operate without electricity, and city officials predicted that before the day is done more than 30,000 industrial workers will be idle.

The strike, which followed the breakdown of efforts to settle a wage controversy, was called by the Electrical Workers Union at the Toledo Edison Company, which supplies 95 per cent of Toledo's industries with power.

CCC Camp Site Will Be Chosen This Afternoon

Flood Snaps Like Small Toy

Flood waters that roared down without warning in the wake of a cloudburst ripped this steel and concrete bridge from its base, flung it aside, and swept on to spread death and devastation through Colorado, then, merging with torrents from other streams, poured through four more states to take a toll counted in millions. This span was on the Denver-Colorado Springs highway across Pine creek, nine miles south of Monument, Colo.

O. T. Williams, representing R. H. Finnell, director of soil erosion work in the Panhandle, and an army officer from the headquarters of the Oklahoma CCC district, are here today to select the site for the CCC soil erosion camp to be established here next month.

The government officials plan to select the camp site, secure options or leases and make other necessary preliminary arrangements preparatory to construction of camp buildings within the next few weeks.

Three Possible Sites

Local committeemen meeting with the government officials today are County Judge Jim Vallance, Mayor J. A. Whaley, Temple Deaver, Roy Fultz, Kennon Hillyer, Dr. W. C. Dickey, County Agent James A. Jackson, Lyman E. Robbins, Russell Clark, secretary of the Chambers of Commerce, T. M. McMurry, and others.

Three possible sites for the camp will be presented for approval of the officials this afternoon. The Hall County Fair Park grounds, a tract of land adjacent to the Memphis Compress and property in the west part of the city between Main and Noel Streets will be presented.

To Inspect Sites

The sites were selected recently by local officials as the most desirable locations for the camp, which will employ approximately 240 CCC workers.

Following the meeting this afternon in the county commissioners' court room, the officials will be taken on an inspection tour of the possible camp sites, according to local plans.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

KATHARINE STRYKHURST, beautiful, 20, is in love with MICHAEL HEATHEROE, who runs a riding school, Katharine's father is rich and her stepmother, BERTINE, is snobbish.

ZOE PARKER, Katharine's friend, has an unhappy love affair and is saved from suicide by young DR. JOHN KAYE.

SALLY MOON, local coquette, tricks Michael into an engagement and, when he tries to wriggle out, tightens her hold. Katharine hears Michael is to marry Sally and is broken-hearted.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXII

Katharine brought her car to a stop before the drug store, the windows of which were emblazoned and placarded with picturesque endorsements. A life-sized cardboard figure of a blond girl ornamented the left-hand corner. Issuing from her mouth was a balloon explaining that daily use of some sort of patented product gave her that rose and gold complexion.

Two or three shabbily-dressed men loafed in the shade of the bank building. A child on roller skates came coasting dizzily down the incline and took the corner on high, both arms spreadeagled for balance. Katharine, nodding to Mrs. Endance who ran the lending library, disappeared into the drug store. She had a great many small errands to do for Bertine; there was soap and witch-hazel and mending tape and black ink on the list. The cut-rate drug store represented one of Bertine's pet economies. She could have telephoned to Caplan's, just around the corner, and had all the purchases delivered, as most of the people down on the Point did. But, while she could be wildly extravagant in larger matters, she drew the line here.

Katharine gave her order abstractedly to the clerk behind the counter. She was not thinking of her errands. She was reflecting, with some surprise, that it was really easier than she had thought to forget the tall, slate-eyed young man who sat his horse so easily and who had ridden quite suddenly and unexpectedly into her life last year. Michael Heatheroe.

She had learned to control leaping pulses when his name was spoken. She had learned to accept, with a sick plunging of the heart, the incredible news that he was going to marry the coquettish Sally Moon.

Well, and so what? she asked herself. He's nothing to you, never was—and never will be. You have a life to live—20, 30, perhaps 40 years more. After all, she was not 21 yet, and she was strong, vigorous, full of an energy not to be denied.

The answer was this; you didn't sit around sighing for a man who cared nothing about you and never did. That was only done in the days of your Victorian great-grandmother. You found something to do, and you did it as best you could.

Other girls did it. Every day in the week. The shops, the settlement houses, the Junior League classes were full of them. Eager faces, curved, rosy lips, bright eyes. Not all of them carried broken hearts about with them. Few—very few. A broken heart was hopelessly out of date. Like a hoop skirt.

Only she wished she might not ever catch a glimpse of either one of them—Michael or Sally—again. She hoped they might go out to California or Hawaii—anywhere that was definitely far and removed from Innicock. Then she could take up her sketching, her delicate, definite water colors that Evelyn Vincent said were actually salable; she could make something of her life.

Some day, perhaps years and years in the future, some shadowy, dark, tall man would come along. She would tell him it wasn't in her to care, really, any more; but he would persuade her, against her will and her better judgment, to marry him . . .

"Black ink, did you say, miss?" The gangling clerk was staring at her frankly.

"Yes." She came out of her day dream to look at him abstractedly.

She had her purchases now, in a neat package wrapped in white paper and tied round with green cord. The library next, to return the Angela Thirkell book, "Wild Strawberries." What a delightful book it had been! So light and gay and easy, and with the love affair resolving itself so simply into happiness. If only life were a little more like that!

She sighed, turning to go. Two rather bulky men, in stiff city clothes, stood aside to let her pass. They were frankly strangers in Innicock, where you knew everyone, from the man who swept the streets and rejoiced in the simple name of "Christmas," to the boys who sold the daily paper.

Katharine was aware of them now only as figures blocking her path. But as one of them spoke to the boy behind the soda counter, a name broke into her consciousness. Michael's name.

Drawn by a curiosity she could not explain or deny, Katharine loitered at the weighing machine, apparently intent only on the black numerals which slid into sight as she stepped upon it and dropped a penny into the slot. But her eyes sought out the face of the elder man, a smooth-shaven, ruddy face under the stiff straw hat.

"Feller who calls himself Michael Heatheroe," drawled this individual. "Where's the post-office, buddy? Maybe we can get the information there." The soda boy was shaking his head in the negative. No, he hadn't heard of Michael Heatheroe . . .

Katharine, biting her lips, shifting her package from one hand to another, was conscious of a queer lightness in her head. The gray-haired man shoved his detective's badge out of sight again.

Detectives—after Michael!

She was never certain afterward how she got there—she did not remember pushing open the swinging door and emerging from the coolness of the drug store's interior to the oven that was the pavement. But she was in her car, her foot on the starter, before the lantern-jawed man, the younger of the pair, came out into the street, staring up and down, and finally gesturing to his companion toward the post-office half a block away.

Then she was in traffic, her small brown shoe pressing down hard, hard on the accelerator. Out the River Road, library and English novel and rolls for luncheon completely forgotten. Bertine had said, rather querulously, to hurry back. But Katharine could not bother about Bertine now. If you had a friend and he was in trouble, you did something about it, didn't you?

She did not argue it out; she was not aware of any [illegible] needing to be decided. It was as simple as this. If Michael were in danger, and she knew of it, why then she must warn him.

She had always known, in the back of her brain, that there was some mystery about Michael. But whatever he had been or done, he wasn't to be caught like a rat in a trap. Those hard-faced men with the badges should have nothing to do with him.

She raced past the Merser house without turning her head. There were two white flashes on the lawn that she assumed to be Sybil and Diana, but Katharine dared not take her eyes off the road even to wave. Any moment the men would be turning out of Innicock's main street to find the winding roads that ran back of the hills to the riding school. Any minute . . .

A [illegible]-ing, black car passed like a streak and for a moment Katherine's heart plunged again in fear. But the driver was only a slip of a girl in checked red gingham, with her wild curls flying in the breeze.

Katharine turned into the lane; there were already one or two cars parked there. Tips came out of the stable, with a look of surprise for her.

"Mr. Heatheroe about?"

"I think so. If you'll wait just a minute, miss . . ."

Her relief was so great that her knees began to tremble. If he had been out on the bridle path however would she have got the news to him?

Tips disappeared. Katharine got out of the car, straining nervously for of a following motor o The post-office might oh, dear God, make very busy.

"Hello, there."

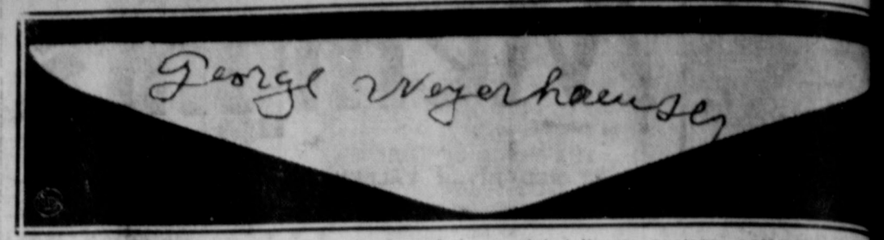

His gay voice, his And the well remembe ter lines about his eye

"Michael, can we place? Away from her Quickly."

Where Bullets Thudded Knell of Filipino Uprising

This row of bullet-riddled bodies back of a churchyard wall in Cabuyao symbolizes the end of another Philippine uprising, in which the Sakdalistas, a left wing political group, were routed with heavy losses after they had attempted to storm several island towns. Hemmed in by the constabulary, this band fell fighting behind the barricade to which they fled for their last stand, preferring death to surrender.

Gilpin Hurls No Hit-No Run Game While Thompson Chases in 38 Runs

There's no need for a circus to come to town if City Leauge softball games continue to be as freakish as those of last night.

The first game was undoubtedly the most unusual one ever seen by local fans. While the representatives of Thompson Brothers were stepping into 37 hits and taking advantage of 16 errors to shove in 38 runs, the Tarver Pillpushers were completely mastered by Gilpin, who turned in the first no hit-no run game of the season.

Pitcher Gilpin was in rare form. He fanned ten, issued only one walk, and contributed to the offensive work of his team by scoring thrice and collecting four singles.

Extra-base knocks were the order of the day in the first contest. Ed Gilliam, who had a perfect day at bat, clouted a double and a home run; homers were made by McCool and Stewart also, and two and three-baggers were plentiful.

Manager Ed Hutcherson of Salisbury led his Marines to a thrilling 9-7 victory over Harrison's lads in the final. "Hutch" initiated the sixth-inning rally which brought his men from behind to win by a couple of scores.

The second game brought to light the excellent fielding of Alvin "Fat" Yarbrough made three snares that were sensational.

Two men were on base in the first of the seventh and hard-hitting young Wilton Walls came up. Walls leaned into one of Collins' fast balls and slapped it far into center for what looked like a certain homer. But Yarbrough had his eye on it, and he took it in his stride.

Owls Getting Set for Clash With Amarillo Saturday

SPORTSMAN'S SCRAPBOOK

LIVE BAIT ANGLER MUST KNOW NATURAL FOOD LIFE OF STREAM

BY JIMMY DONAHUE
NEA Service Sports Writer

Successful fishing trips are the fruit of observation. First you have to observe what kind of food is native to the water. Second you must know to some degree of accuracy the periods of the day when fish are active.

Bass ready to devour a helgramite.

It is folly to fish in any bass stream with helgramites in which the bottom is muddy and weedy. The reason is that the helgramite, vicious-looking larva of the dobson fly, makes his home under stones at this stage of his life. And fish found in muddy or weedy streams and lakes never recognize this live bait.

On the other hand, when used in rivers strewn with rocks and boulders, it is an excellent lure for small and large mouth bass.

The crawfish is an excellent lure for rocky water. It makes its home under slabs of stone, and is part of the regular diet of fish found in such stretches.

The minnow and the worm are native to both types of water, and, as a rule, are better all-round live baits than the helgramite or crawfish.

Getting set for their first big non-title clash of the year, the Memphis Owls are continuing preparations this week to get into first class condition.

The battle will be with the Amarillo Shamrocks at Fair Park Stadium here Saturday afternoon, beginning at 2 o'clock.

When the Owls stopped Wellington in both ends of a doubleheader Sunday afternoon, hope was reborn in the hearts of the fans.

They know the club is capable of playing with the best in this section, although ruggedness in play gave indication of the need of additional preparedness.

While the Owls were moving into third place in the Western Division of the Red River Valley League, the Childress Electrics were demonstrating that the leaders could be stopped by splitting a doubleheader at Paducah.

The Electrics took the first game, 3 to 1, on a wave of five-hit pitching by Hall, who all but completely silenced the big guns of the pace-setters.

Paducah came back in the nightcap, however, to hit Hall, who attempted to iron-man his way to a pair of victories, and collect an 8-4 decision.

Splitting the session left Paducah at the top of the heap, but moved both clubs down a notch closer to the Owls.

Memphis invades Shamrock Sunday for a tilt with the trailers of the loop, and on the following week-end entertains Hollis, Okla., and her southpaw twirler, before renewing its bid against the top clubs.

Continued work should have the Owls ready to smash its way closer to the top by the time they get back to the clubs that stand between them and the head of the ladder.

But before all this is done, the Owls are going to entertain the club that has put baseball back on its feet in Amarillo, capping its performance by splitting with the famed Phillips 66 of Borger and Pampa's Dancinger Roadrunners.

Because this game has no bearing on the league race is no indication that the Owls will take it lightly. The club has a reputation to build up here, after letting the fans down, and a real contest with Amarillo would do just as much toward regain fan interest as such a game against any loop member.

Star's Dad Is Pro, but Never Gave Son Lesson

BATTLE CREEK, Mich, May 5.—Although the father of Chick Harcourt, 20-year-old local golfer who qualified for the National Open in Detroit, is a professional at a local country club, the youngster never has taken a lesson from his dad.

Young Harcourt, who uses a base ball bat grip on a golf club, received some advice from Chick Evans, from whom he gets his nickname.

COLUMBUS, June 5.—Jesse Owens, hero of the greatest track achievement in history, is confident that he will break a fourth world record within the next six weeks by lowering the time for 100 yards to 9.3 seconds.

Larry Snyder, the Ohio State coach, goes even further.

"Next year Owens will do the century in 9.2," predicts Snyder. "He'll do the 220-yard dash in 20 flat, and the 220-yard hurdles in 22 flat. What he'll do in the broad jump—not even your wildest guess would be near it. I would say 27 feet easily."

Owens' softest touch is the broad jump. He has no flaws. He's so perfect that he never practices. There may be some slight room for improvement in the dashes and hurdles. Each improvement may cut off a tenth of a second. Since an athlete practically broad jumps the hurdles, Snyder points out that Owens has the perfect combination.

In explaining why he believes he can better the 100-yard standard of 9.4, Owens reveals that he was worried about his right leg just prior to his amazing performance in the Western Conference meet in which he established new world marks by broad jumping 26 feet 8¼ inches, negotiating the 220 in 20.3 seconds, and the low hurdles in 2.6, and tied the century figure.

Wrecks Records on One Good Leg

Owens injured the leg three weeks before in falling down a flight of stairs while wrestling with a fraternity brother. Stabs of pain shot down the sciatic nerve in the lower part of the leg as the Ohio State immortal came out for his first event—the broad jump—at Ann Arbor. After that, the brown bullet asserts that he forgot about the leg. It takes more than a leg injury to handicap a competitor like Jesse Owens.

"I broke slowly in the 100," elucidates Owens. "That's always been my fault in the sprints.

"I believe that all I have to do to hit 9.3 is get away quicker and turn on the juice a bit sooner."

Owens has stopped the low hurdles for this year to concentrate on the 100. Four events made it a hard day even for such a remarkable athlete as the Cleveland Negro.

And from now on he intends to cut down practice in the 100, and confine himself to perfecting the start.

New Comet to Be Seen in West

Owens will make his next appearance in the Central Intercollegiate meet in Milwaukee on June 7.

If Owens cracks the 100-yard mark he is quite likely to do it over the hallowed and lightning-fast cinders of the Olympic Stadium in Los Angeles or at the Edwards Track Stadium of the University of California at Berkely, where the composition of the strips is conducive to blazing speed.

Owens will appear in the Olympic Stadium, where so many records were shattered in 1932, on June 15, when Southern California and Ohio State, two of the finest track and field teams in the universe, collide in a dual meet.

Southern California has sprinters capable of urging Owens, but competition will be much more robust in the National Intercollegiate meet at Berkeley on June 21 and 22. There the Buckeye flyer will tackle, among others, George Anderson, the unbeaten California star who has equaled the 100-yard record.

After that, Owens will compete in the National A. A. U. championships at Lincoln, Neb., on July 3 and 4, and will call it a season after running in a meet at Buffalo on July 6.

Star Ascended in High School Days

Owens, a sophomore in college, is 21, and stands 5 feet 11 inches. The bulk of the power in his 158-pound body is situated in the lower part of his legs.

The first training grounds of the streamlined Owens were those of the Fairmount junior high school, which are the sidewalks of East 107th street in Cleveland. He broke all the high school records, and commenced tying college marks while a student of Cleveland's East Tech High.

Like those of many athletic heroes, Owens' family is poor. Jesse helps to support 12 persons with what little he makes as a page in the Ohio House of Representatives. His father, Cleveland Owens, a former Alabama cotton picker, has just obtained work in Cleveland after having been idle for two months.

Having a famous son kept the family off relief, Owens' mother explains.

"I applied for it, but they told me, 'As long as you can keep Jesse in college, you can't have relief,'" says timid little Mrs. Emma Owens. "Of course, we don't give Jesse a penny. He has a scholarship at Ohio State and works as a page for his room and board. Sometimes he sends us a little money, but he has a hard time getting by himself."

So having broken world records, Jesse Owens, the most highly geared athlete of all time, will quit running shortly after the end of his present term, and spend the summer trying to break the depression.

Owens May Beat Record In Centu

By NEA Service

MILWAUKEE, June 5.—There'll be other athletes running here during the Central Intercollegiate track and field meet, on Marguette Stadium field June 7, but most of the eyes will be sentered on the black flash from Ohio State, Jesse Owens.

It is said that Owens may run against Ralph Metcalfe, Marquette star known as the world's fastest human. Metcalfe, however, having been graduated, is hardly expected to be in suitable shape. If he is, the 9.4 second record in the century may fall; if he isn't Owens' competition is likely to come from another Marquette star.

This lad is Paul Phillips, a Negro sophomore who already has century. With Owens to compete against, he is capable of a faster mark.

Originally a program for three or four schools which banded together after the Western Conference made its championships exclusively for member teams, the Centrals this year will attract a crack field of approximately 40 schools from the Alleghenies to the Rockies.

Ooutstanding among these competitors are Pitt, Iowa, Ohio State, Wisconsin, Notre Dame, Miami, Purdue, Marquette, Northwestern, Michigan State, Drake, Missouri, and Indiana, the defending champion.

Several of the greatest varsity track men in the country will participate in the meet, seeking new records and a free trip to the N. C. A. A. at Berkeley, Calif., two weeks later. The intercollegiates' track and field rules committee will assemble in Milwaukee at the time of the Centrals, and the following day will announce its complete selection of those whose expenses are to be defrayed to the west coast.

The meet will be staged at night, which, although new to some of the competitors, will in no way hinder their performances.

SALISBURY, June 5.—The Salisbury Marines continued their winning ways Sunday afternon at the expense of the Carey nine, 7 to 6.

Coy Davis pitched the entire game for the winners, while the Weatherly brothers shared the mound duties of the home club.

The Marines muffled almost every play for the first three innings, but thereafter settled down and played errorless ball.

Carey returns the game next Sunday, and a large crowd is expected to witness the clash.

When the streets are almost deserted at this time of year one can readily guess the reason—the farmers are busy in the fields. Only the business men, clerks, other workers and shoppers, and those out of jobs may be seen during the day.

June 10 is International Flower Shut-In Day, and the florists deliver flowers to shut-ins. Hightower Greenhouse will deliver flowers free to all shut-ins in the Memphis area, if the names of all bone fide shut-ins are furnished today. This is an altruistic movement on the part of the florists and they are to be highly commended. Why not the people of the area join in such a movement and make it a shut-in visit day? Shut-ins would appreciate receiving visits of their friends, and would cherish such visits like they do flowers, giving them sunshine and happiness for many days to come.

Shut-In Visit Day could be continued daily throughout the year to good advantage.

Dividend Declared By Farmers Union; Officers Renamed

A five per cent cash dividend was declared by the Farmers Union Supply Company, and a two per cent dividend declared by the Farmers Union Gin Company at annual stockholder meetings here Saturday.

T. M. McMurry, who has served as president of both companies for the past year, and T. J. Thomson, vice-president, were both re-elected for the new year. John T. Bishop was re-elected secretary treasurer of the gin company and general manager of the supply company.

The Farmers Union Gin Company has paid a total of $238,500 in dividends to stockholders of the company since its organization 15 years ago and capital stock of the company has been increased from $25,000 to $150,000, Mr. Bishop reported.

"In spite of the short crop of the past year, the company has enjoyed a good run and the three gins operated during the past season ginned about one fourth of the county's cotton crop." Mr. Bishop said. The company maintains four gins, two in Memphis, one at Eli and one at Plaska.

The board of directors of the gin company is composed of Mr. McMurry, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Bishop, E. M. Ewen and R. A. Hutcherson.

Manager

John T. Bishop was re-elected secretary-treasurer of the Farmers Union Gin Company, along with other officials, and general manager of the Memphis Supply Company.

"The Farmers Union Supply Company during 1934 enjoyed the best business since its organization in 1907, with sales totaling $206,000," Mr. Bishop reported. Sales for 1934 showed a gain of more than $16,000 over the previous year, he said. Capital stock of the company has been increased from $3,000 with 30 stockholders to $75,000 with 165 stockholders, he said.

Mr. Bishop is manager of the general warehouse and store in Memphis, W. B. Landis is manager of the store at Eli and Ernest McMurry is manager of the store at Plaska.

Directors of the supply company re-elected Saturday are Mr. McMurry, Mr. Thompson, E. M. Ewen, Jim Webster and R. A. Hutcherson.

THE VOICE OF THE UPPER RED RIVER VALLEY

A RARE OCCASION

THE Keys sisters of Hollis, Okla., well known in Memphis, yesterday celebrated their 20th birthday anniversary—the first quadruplets in medical history to reach maturity.

Strangely, a period of two weeks covered the birthdays of these four sisters, the fifth of the Morlok quadruplets of Lansing, Mich., and of the Dionne quintuplets, all of whom are girls.

The Keys sisters—Mona, Roberta, Mary and Leota — have just completed their sophomore year at Baylor University. They are able students, talented musicians and fond of outdoor sports. They dress alike although there is little more resemblance than in ordinary sisters.

After a round of entertainments yesterday, they plan to spend the next month in rest and normal life at home and then to tour North Carolina, singing and playing under the auspices of civic clubs and churches.

Here is one group that has found the unusualness of their birth profitable and pleasant.

VALUE OF CONFIDENCE

WHEN you get through chuckling about the story of the bogus oil promotor who came to grief in Tulsa after a short but active career as a big shot, you might find it worth while to take a second look at the affair. There is something rather instructive about it all.

This man, as you have probably read, blew into Tulsa announcing that he was the head of a big new oil company.

He rented the entire floor of a bank building and established offices there. He bought a home and established a couple of servants in it. He arranged with a contracting firm to build a $1,000,000 refinery near Fort Smith, Ark.

Then, through a bank, he got in touch with a New York brokerage outfit which agreed to market $500,000 worth of bonds in this project. Next he summoned a railroad representative and arranged for construction of a spur line to his new factory.

And all the while his actual assets amounted to nothing more than a pleasant smile and three cents in cash.

Eventually, of course, his balloon exploded from sheer excess of hot air, and he went smiling off to jail.

But his whole venture is a beautiful illustration of the way in which we are compelled to take each other's word for things in this modern world.

The only difference between this man's activities and those of a bona fide business man seeking to establish a new plant was that this man had no backing. He was able to build a beautiful framework on the mere fact that people trusted him.

Not once did he lay a cent of cash on the line. Nobody asked him to. People just took it for granted that a man doing the things he was doing was operating in good faith.

There could hardly be a stronger example of the way in which modern business is founded on the level, that he is what he says he is, and will do what he says he will do.

Once in a blue moon someone comes along and abuses this confidence. In this Oklahoma case, the result was something to chuckle at; in the Kreuger case, it was a financial holocaust.

Meanwhile, in the overwhelming majority of cases, the confidence is deserved. Vast projects are undertaken simply because men trust one another.

This trust takes the place of money, in a very real sense. In itself, it is riches; and in the long run it is probably the business world's most precious possession.

WORTH WHILE PLAY

IF you sometimes suspect that states and cities are inclined to spend too much money on public playgrounds and other recreational projects, consider these figures, compiled by the National Recreation Association.

Last year attendance at outdoor playgrounds in the United States was 300,000,000—a gain of 66,000,000 over 1933. At indoor centers, attendance increased 15,000,000 to a total of 75,000,000.

Meanwhile, the number of cities reporting organized public recreation activities rose from 1036 to 2190, and expenditures shot up from $27,000,000 to $41,000,000.

Tremendous increase in public use of such facilities can only mean that they meet a very real need. Money sepnt for playgrounds seems to be money very well spent.

THE GREATER ISSUE

HEALTH

BY DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN

When you feel distressed after eating, if you're an average person, you'll probably attribute the pain to "something you ate," an expression that has passed into the language as the common explanation of most of the things that are wrong with us.

During the last 10 years, however, evidence has been developed to show that you may be especially sensitive to certain foods and that you respond to the eating of such substances by reactions that are far from pleasant.

Of course, there are ways to prove whether distress after eating is due to food sensitivity or some other cause.

In the first place, distress after eating when due to food sensitivity comes on suddenly and leaves suddenly. You probably will be able to tell that the attack is associated with the food that has just been eaten.

It is fairly simple to try out this kind of sensitivity by beginning with a few substances and gradually adding new ones, one at a time, until an attack is provoked. Such tests prove that it is not the amount of food, nor the time or manner of eating, which brings on the disturbance, but that it is a specific food substance.

For example, you may become severely sick from a single spoonful of one food substance, and yet will be able to eat 20 times the amount of another food substance without having a symptom.

Of course, the attack may be due not only to the original food itself, but to certain products that are formed when the food is acted on by the acids of the stomach or by the digestive juices. Naturally the condition can be overcome by avoiding those foods to which you are sensitive, but it is necessary to find out exactly what foods are concerned.

If, for instance, you find yourself sensitive to wheat, you may substitute rye, but you must be certain that the rye bread you purchase is not a mixture of rye and wheat; and if you buy buckwheat, you must be certain that it is all buckwheat.

Many of the patented proprietary breakfast foods contain wheat. Most of the better ones now contain on the label a list of the substances that are included.

If you are sensitive to cotton seed, you must remember that cotton seed is the base of many prepared lards, and many oils, and that there are records of attacks from drinking cotton seed gin.

If you are sensitive to cocoa, you must avoid not only chocolate and cake and ice cream, but even chocolate coated pills. If you are sensitive to any member of a certain food group, you must study the effects not only of that one, but of all of the other foods, in the same group.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

Messier and Messier Grows This Virgin Isles Fiasco . . . Investigator Reynolds Is Glad to Quit . . . One More Fishy Idea Comes Out of Fish Committee.

WASHINGTON, June 6. — Those Virgin Islands, forever providing amusement for the innocent bystander, but usually managing to fret half of official Washington, just get funnier and funnier.

Herewith, for instance, is the inside story of the comic opera fiasco which was to have been the investigation of the administration of the governor of the Virgins, Dr. Paul Pearson.

You may recall that patronage-minded politicians here have sought removal of Pearson, a Hoover appointee, and appointment of some such person as his enemy, T. Webber Wilson, lame duck Democratic congressman and present federal judge for the islands.

This squabble has arrayed Secretary Ickes and many liberal non-partisans behind Pearson against fellows like Jim Farley, Attorney General Cummings, and Senator Pat Harrison.

Senator Tydings of Maryland, one of whose political proteges lost a job in the islands because of anti-Pearsonism, obtained $12,000 for the investigation by a committee of which he was made chairman.

Tydings announced the committee would proceed to the islands in May and investigate.

It's a Sad Mess

Amazingly enough, the committee members, one by one, refused to leave an important congressional session for a junket into the Caribbean. Tydings was the last to give up.

The Pearsonites had carefully planted propaganda, ridiculing the junket and the thing became hard to explain to constituents who wanted to know why their senators didn't stay on the job.

But Tydings persuaded Senator "Happy Bob" Reynolds, playboy and inveterate globe-trotter, to join the committee and go down on a one-man investigation. He sent ahead two Baltimore lawyer-politicians to serve as counsel. The two at once went into huddles with the anti-Pearson natives.

Ickes also sent two lawyers and they demanded the right to cross-examine witnesses against Pearson. Reynolds overruled them, over objections of the dings lawyers. Thereupon the anti-Pearson section of the black populace turned on Reynolds.

Turn Fire on Reynolds

Agitators began to heckle the senator in the streets of St. Thomas and made ing charges against him.

All of which would have gone well with any gentleman but Reynolds, although a considerable moil (the anti-Pearson people having parades for days) wouldn't have known about it if the Baltimore lawyers, having observed the more unsavory sections of one especially odorous speech by a coal-baron—hadn't placed a tray in his hands just to show him the awful conditions which existed in Pearson.

Learning their mistake, they tried to retrieve the situation, but Reynolds already was packing his trunks.

Someone else might have investigated the islands personally, wasn't having it. He paused long enough in Puerto Rico to issue a statement.

"I wish there were some way we could pay the Danes to take those islands back."

(Tydings now has withdrawn the committee down there. The islands are still there, and Ickes and Pearson charged with administration are tearing their hair.)

Another Fishy Idea

Secretary Roper's Fisheries visory Committee, chaired by Bernard MacFadden, asked to develop plans for promotion of the fish industry, last reported.

It recommends that the government spend a lot more money to teach housewives how to cook fish and that "beginning with the presidential proclamation Thanksgiving Day be moved from last Tuesday in November instead of on the last Thursday.

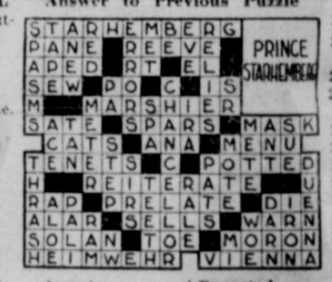

The committee forgot that Thanksgiving falling on Thursday, people hit the fish market a hard blow next day by taking up left-over turkey instead of the traditional Friday fish.

Last fall Mr. Higgins hit on a peach of an idea to boost sales. It called for advertising in the daily paper and so he worked out his plan, bought his space, let go with both barrels and cashed in handsomely. But Meyer Both (the advertising service people in Chicago) read a good many hundred newspapers every day. Mr. Higgins' home town daily is among them.
