Clinton admits notice

Opponents' charges raise questions

■ Candidate 'recalls' receiving induction notice while at Oxford.

Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Bill Clinton's presidential campaign said Saturday night the governor received a draft induction notice in 1969 before he joined the ROTC program at the University of Arkansas.

The disclosure came one day after a purported letter surfaced in which a Little Rock lawyer, who said he was a friend of Clinton's in the '60s, wrote to a dean at Auburn University saying Clinton had received a draft induction notice while a Rhodes Scholar in Oxford, England.

The lawyer now opposes Clinton politically and the university professor also said he opposed Clinton's presidential candidacy.

The Associated Press queried the Clinton campaign about the letter Friday evening.

"Gov. Clinton recalls receiving an induction notice while at Oxford, in late April 1969," said a statement

Female bishop

HAMBURG, Germany — A 47-year-old woman was elected Saturday as the Lutheran Church's first female bishop, church officials said. Maria Jepsen, a provost in the northwest region of the German Lutheran Church, was elected by a vote of 78-44 over opponent Helge Adolphsen, 51, the area's chief pastor. Ms. Jepsen was given a standing ovation after her election by the synod at a meeting at St. Michael's Church in Hamburg. She said she would work to overcome fears of a split in the church that her candidacy had prompted, and she invited critics to meet with her.

Hillary apologizes

In a newly published interview, Hillary Clinton says it "is apparently well known in Washington" that President Bush has had an extramarital affair. But Saturday, campaigning for her husband, Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas, she apologized for the remark. The interview, in the May issue of Vanity Fair magazine, characterizes Mrs. Clinton as furious at what she perceives as the media's double standard in investigating her husband's personal life and ignoring Bush's./9A

Trustees to decide on feeder system

■ Public reaction mixed on how the junior high schools should supply students to high schools.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

School board trustees will soon make a decision on an issue that has received a mixed reaction from the public.

Should the school district continue with the current feeder system or change it with the addition of the fourth junior high school?

George Abell Junior High School will be open in September 1993. Having a fourth junior high school gives the district the option of having two junior high schools supply students to Midland High School and the other two junior highs to send their students to Lee High School.

Currently students are mixed at each of the three junior high schools. For example, some of the students at Alamo Junior High School will attend LHS, while the rest will attend MHS.

School board trustees will have to make a decision fairly soon on how to feed students from the junior high schools to the high schools, according to Joe Cummins, executive director of planning for Midland Independent School

Brown says Clinton is 'prince of sleaze'

NEW YORK (AP) — Democrats Bill Clinton and Jerry Brown accused each other Saturday of offering "sleaze" to the voters and Mario Cuomo pleaded with them to lighten up on the final weekend of the New York primary campaign.

"This guy is becoming the prince of sleaze," Brown said in a name-calling fusillade aimed at Clinton while the Arkansas governor said Brown "has viciously, personally attacked me since day one of this election."

Clinton, elated after Cuomo said he would be a "superb" president, responded to Brown's broadside by saying a television spot his rival ran on a Buffalo station Friday "is the sleaziest ad I think I have ever seen run by anybody, anywhere, anytime since I've been in politics."

Clinton hopes on Tuesday to deliver a convincing enough blow to Brown in primaries here and in Wisconsin and Kansas to transform the former California into a marginal candidate.

Tower learns that Senate 'shoots the wounded'

EDITOR'S NOTE: He was a Bible-quoting, hymn-singing U.S. senator accused of being a hard-drinking, skirt-chasing Lothario. A Republican from a Democratic state, he was British in appearance but Texan at heart. John Tower was often contradictory and always controversial. But when he died a year ago, his remarkable legacy was all but lost in the plane crash that killed him. Part 1 of a five-part series.

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — A quarter of a century ago, a young Republican senator from Texas named John Tower was swept up in a Senate ethics battle over a Yankee Democrat.

Sen. Thomas Dodd of Connecticut stood accused of misusing campaign funds and faced certain censure by his colleagues. Tower, however, supported him.

On the eve of the showdown vote, one of the old Senate lions approached Tower. "Son," he said, "what you're doing is admirable. It's good that you realize we're a closely knit club."

"But," he reminded him, "we shoot the wounded."

Tower nonetheless cast a dissenting vote the next day when the Senate condemned Dodd by a vote of 92-5.

Some 22 years later, the Senate shot down Tower himself. Wounded by rumors of strong drink and a weakness for women, he was rejected by three votes as President Bush's Secretary of Defense.

"He got a taste of that early lesson," says former U.S. House Speaker Jim Wright, a Texas Democrat who likewise was banished by his colleagues. "They do indeed shoot the wounded.

"BUT I think he got a bum rap."

Wright's recollections preceded the anniversary of Tower's death April 5, 1991. Tower, 65, and a daughter, Marian Tower, 35, were among 23 killed when a commuter plane crashed in coastal Georgia.

Tower was en route to a party promoting his book, "Consequences," a ferociously defensive account of the Senate confirmation brawl.

BROWN: Cuomo asks candidates to temper nasty tone

er this week, is trying to revitalize his campaign in New York and cast fresh doubt on Clinton's viability as a candidate for November's general election.

The New York Times and The Daily News both endorsed Clinton in their Sunday editions. Newsday suggested a vote for Paul Tsongas, who suspended his campaign but has suggested he could be enticed back into the race.

The importance of the New York contest is magnified by its rich cache of 244 delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

"Mr. Clinton, I think your nose is getting a little too long," Brown shouted to thousands of New Yorkers at a rally on Manhattan's Upper West Side. He complained Clinton ads aired on radio stations aimed at black listeners falsely accused him of opposing a hot lunch program for children.

Brown said that as governor of California he had actually increased funding for the lunch program but that launching the ads on the last weekend of the campaign gave him little time to respond.

"He's always smiling and saying don't attack . . . then he unleashes a vicious attack," Brown said. He said called the ads "absolute lies."

Brown also lashed out at Clinton for questioning his commitment to abortion rights. Clinton aired briefly and then pulled Friday an ad that pointed to seeming discrepancies in comments from Brown on the abortion issue over the years.

Clinton aides said the ad was pulled because it might seem to be an attack not on Brown's position on the issue but on his private feelings on abortion.

But meeting with reporters outside a Harlem soul food restaurant, Brown claimed the ad showed that Clinton was "becoming the prince of sleaze."

"Clinton has no credibility," Brown said. "Whether it's a moral flaw or just a continuing pattern of political deceit, it really does disqualify him as a serious candidate of our party, much less a president of our country."

Referring to Clinton's negative ads, Brown said "this guy is like Dick Nixon. He's got his own little black book and his gumshoe operation, trying to come up with little statements and dirt on anybody he can find."

"We're not going to let some guy from an old-style, Arkansas political operation put one over on us and the people of New York."

"This man runs a very dishonest campaign. He bellyaches about anything said about him, about his sleazy politics, his conflicts of interest, the way he exempts himself from the law of ethics that applies to everybody else, the way he gives political supporters and his friends the right to contaminate the rivers of Arkansas," Brown said.

Once criticized, Brown said, Clinton "runs to Ron Brown and Jimmy Carter and the media," Brown said. Ron Brown is national Democratic chairman.

Clinton, Brown complained, was running the last-minute, weekend ads "with a smile and the hypocrisy that only a man of his questionable character could even conceive of."

In Albany, Cuomo urged the two candidates to clean up the campaign and temper the increasingly nasty tone. But his remarks were so favorable to Clinton and lukewarm to Brown that he all but abandoned his vow to stay neutral until after the primary.

"As a package, Bill Clinton will make in my opinion a superb president," Cuomo said. "Jerry Brown, I will support if he is the candidate, given the alternative."

Cuomo also dismissed the possibility that he could ultimately be the nominee if Democrats reject both current candidates and hold a brokered convention.

"Forget about it," Cuomo said. "There will be no brokered convention."

Attempting to court Jewish voters Saturday night at a synagogue in Brooklyn, Brown was hounded again by his pledge to name Jesse Jackson as his running mate.

SPELLING: Third time's the charm for city seventh-grader lugging a set of World Book Encyclopedias to the car. A 13-year-old seventh-grader at Goddard Junior High School, Jeremy was calm through nearly three hours of intense spelling competition.

"I don't get nervous," he said. "I just take a few deep breaths."

The fifth annual bee featured students from four counties — Midland, Glasscock, Upton and Martin, including all public, private and home schools.

Joining Jeremy in the winner's circle were Midland students Tarfia Faizullah of Trinity School, second place; Lauran Ashlee Kerr, a home-schooled student, third; Chad Keifer, of Burnett Elementary, fourth; and Elizabeth Terrill of San Jacinto Junior High, fifth place.

Bee officials said the spellers seem to be getting better each year.

In fact, Saturday's competition was so fierce that students went more than 20 rounds. With only four spellers left, officials dipped into the advanced words.

Still, spellers held on, breezing through words like "psalterer," "madrilene" and "horripilation." In the audience, parents and friends sat hushed, hanging on every letter.

There were prizes for all of them — books, cash and trophies. But the first-place winner got the plane tickets to Washington.

In the end, Jeremy's strategy worked.

The young champion said he had practiced writing words over and over, as many as 20 times each. He also listened to tapes that mimicked a bee — pronouncing and spelling, pronouncing and spelling.

Then again, the skill just may be in Jeremy's genes. His mother, Richelle Gengler, and grandparents Charlotte and Richard Popp are all good spellers. They say dad, Scott, is the math whiz in the family.

But it's Jeremy who during the last week of May will test his mettle against students from all over the country.

Until then, for the honor student who likes to sing and play the piano, it's practice, practice, practice.

Cholesterol Discovery Passes Mom's Test

WASHINGTON -- The mother of a research scientist recently lowered her cholesterol more than 20% without changing her eating habits.

After a visit to her doctor, a Florida woman learned that her cholesterol level was an elevated 308 and she was encouraged to change her eating habits. When she returned 10 weeks later, the doctor was astounded that her cholesterol level had dropped to 243. Asked if she achieved the amazing results just by dieting she replied, "No I didn't diet at all, in fact I ate the things I shouldn't eat like bacon, sausage and ice cream. The only thing I did different was take some tablets my son gave me."

The woman's son is Dr. William Morris, director of research and development at National Dietary Research, an organization that seeks nutritional solutions to health problems. Dr. Morris admits that the tablets called Vancol 5000 were designed as a dietary supplement to be used with a low fat diet plan. "She just wanted to put the tablets to the test," says Dr. Morris. "Of course I was pleased with the results she achieved, but now were working on reducing some of the fat in her diet to lower her cholesterol even further."

Vancol 5000 is a chewable food tablet that contains extracts from foods known to lower cholesterol. According to the exclusive distributor for Vancol 5000, inquiries about the new discovery are being received from all over the country and has peaked the interest of doctors used to prescribing expensive cholesterol lowering drugs. A 30 day supply of the Vancol 5000 Chloesterol Lowering Plan is only $29.98.

MISD: Decision expected on April 14

(From 1A)

District.

In fact, the decision on feeder systems is expected to appear as an action item on the April 14 school board agenda.

Cummins also recommended the decision be made April 14 on a suggested timelime he submitted to trustees at a recent school board meeting. The timeline has suggested dates to get the new junior high school's operations in place.

"Now that construction has started and the school's foundation is being laid, we are turning our attention to the school's operations," Cummins said. "Before we can come up with any kind of boundary, or move to other items of the timeline, we have to know how the feeder system is going to work."

School board trustee Gary Willis agreed.

"We kicked around whether to make the decision on the feeder system now or later," he said. "Too much of what comes later hangs on the decision. If we chose a pure feeder system, a lot of things will have to change district-wide. Nothing will be gained by deferring the decision."

The feeder system decision must be made in order to draw up boundaries, grandfather clauses (transfer policies), and staff selection prior to Abell registration slated for February 1993.

Community meetings will be scheduled in October and November for the public to respond to issues concerning the new junior high school.

Willis said public sentiment about feeder systems was expressed at previous community meetings.

Persons in favor of a pure feeder system have said it is ideal for students in band, choir or sports to compete at the level required in District 4-5A. It gives coaches and teachers an opportunity to reach down to the seventh grade to develop their programs.

Midland competes in a district that has pure feeder schools in Abilene, Odessa and San Angelo. Pure feeder proponents say those schools have a two-year head start on extracurricular programs.

Opponents of the pure feeder system have stated that it would intensify competition and create a rift between Midland's two high schools. Others opposing the concept have said that it would put the focus on athletics, rather than academics. Still others have said academics would benefit in a pure feeder system.

"This is one of those 50-50 split issues," said school board trustee Jack Hightower. "I suspect that those with more interest in band and football prefer the pure feeder system."

Hightower said the April 14 date to make a decision is not enough time. "We will probably need to talk to parents and get some input on this before making the decision."

Willis, however, said that trustees have heard plenty on the issue from the community.

"There have been newspaper articles on the subject, and it was discussed at each community meeting. I think we need to bite the bullet and make the decision and live with it," he said.

"As far as the meetings were concerned, reaction to the pure feeder system was mixed," Willis said. "There was not an overwhelming show of support for — or opposition — to it. If I had to predict, I would say that the board will not likely adopt a pure feeder system. The community reaction was just too mixed. People appear to be comfortable with the feeder system we've got now."

School board trustee Jackie Hamilton, said she isn't sure which way the board it going to vote on the issue.

"We felt like this is the time to go ahead and vote on the feeder system," she said. "People can still come to the board meeting if they want to express an opinion on it. We didn't want to wait until summer and vote on it when people are out of town and can't come to the meeting."

Ms. Hamilton said she kept a "running tally" of comments from persons at prior community meetings. "I was surprised," she said. "People speaking for and against (the pure feeder system) kind of equalized each other. And only two people in my district have commented on it, saying that they are for it."

Cummins said that one-fourth of the junior high school students in MISD will need to attend the new junior high school.

He said, 'With the new school we will have four sites for seventh- and eighth-graders instead of three. We predict we will have about 3,583 junior high students. Right now we have 3,315 students in the grades which will occupy seventh and eighth grade in 1993. Abell's enrollment will be about 800 students."

The staff proposed timeline for getting the new junior high school operating follows. Cummins notes that the dates are "suggested dates to begin projects."

APRIL 1992

■ Decision made for junior high school to high school feeder system.

MAY 1992

■ Staff selection and principal for Abell Junior High School.

■ Present a board report on the grade seven and eight enrollments for 1993-96.

■ Report the recommended optimum enrollment for each junior high school.

■ Begin staff work on changes for the junior high school boundaries.

JUNE 1992

■ Consideration of a transfer policy "grandfather clause" for students who want to continue on at their current school.

AUGUST 1992

TOWER: Senator inspiration for GOP

death, coming as it did on the heels of the Senate debacle, obscured Tower's unique contributions to his party, his state and his country.

As a member and later chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Tower was the architect of the American military buildup that Ronald Reagan used to end the Cold War with the Soviet Union.

Sen. Minority Leader Robert Dole of Kansas insists the U.S. victory in the Persian Gulf could also be traced to Tower's stewardship of the nation's defense.

The war showcased the weaponry of Tower's arsenal.

In times of national crisis, Reagan twice turned to Tower, first as a strategic arms negotiator and later as chairman of the Special Review Board on the Iran-Contra scandal.

ASSOCIATES SAY Tower hired the best and brightest young aides, including women and minorities, and hundreds are now sprinkled through all levels and branches of government.

"Washington is John Tower's town," former Texas congressman Tom Loeffler, himself a Tower alumnus, said when his mentor left the Senate in 1985.

At the time, another former aide, Republican Cyndi Krier of San Antonio, was the only woman in the Texas Senate.

Tower was of course the first Republican to win a statewide Texas race since Reconstruction, snatching Lyndon Johnson's old Senate seat in a 1961 special election.

Short and stiff with slicked-back hair, tailored suits, starched shirts and French cuffs, Tower seemed the least likely person to lead Texas Republicans out of the political wilderness.

But he did.

Tower helped mold the GOP into a competitive force from the courthouse to the statehouse, and even the White House if you consider his old friend George Bush.

Or the fact that Republicans carried Texas in the last three presidential elections.

AND EVEN today, Texas Republican Phil Gramm, who succeeded Tower in the U.S. Senate, is mentioned as a GOP presidential possibility in 1996.

But the nomination for secretary of defense, Tower's grandest ambition, ended in disgrace. And his book about the confirmation battle was dismissed by many as venomous and vindictive.

"An unscrupulous mudslinger," railed Tower about Georgia Democrat Sam Nunn, whom he blamed for his rejection. Democrats John Glenn of Ohio and Richard Shelby of Alabama double-crossed him, he charged.

He labeled Nebraska Democrat Jim Exon a "genuine boozer."

Never before had a member of the clubby Senate been so outspoken and harsh.

Tower's targets responded with silence, perhaps a final indignity.

"It's sad for a guy like Tower to leave on such a bitter note," said Mark Nelson, a former Texas political writer now living in Washington. "But he left a hell of a legacy."

For his first statewide race in 1960, Tower's opponent was Lyndon Johnson, who was running simultaneous campaigns for his Senate seat and the vice presidency.

A POLITICAL science professor at Midwestern University, Tower had little campaign experience, less money, a tiny staff and no hope of endorsement by even his hometown newspaper in devoutly Democratic Wichita Falls.

And when the Wichita Falls Times and Record-News did finally endorse him years later, it did so without identifying him as a Republican.

But Tower was a tough-minded campaigner, and his wife Lou, an organist at his father's church, would gather up their three young girls and barnstorm with him whenever possible.

Nicknamed "Honey," Mrs. Tower was a political dream and not totally unfamiliar to such madness. Her uncle Orville Bullington had once run for governor.

Adopting a chewing gum jingle to enhance his campaign slogan, Tower urged voters to "Double your pleasure . . . Scratch Lyndon twice."

And at 5-foot-5, Tower's trademark campaign quote became, "My name is Tower, but I don't."

He joked about his stature but he was always sensitive to it. When the Washington Post asked him 30 years later to pose for a photograph with his arms crossed, he refused.

"THAT'S A little Napoleonic," he said.

Although he had a professor's command of the language, Tower was not a professorial windbag. He spoke crisply and deliberately and rarely from a prepared text.

He collected 41 percent of the vote against Johnson, which surprised almost everyone, particularly LBJ.

When the Kennedy-Johnson ticket captured the White House, Tower won LBJ's Senate seat in a special election, upsetting ultraconservative Democrat Bill Blakely by 10,000 votes.

The GOP victory triggered the "damnedest election night celebration I've ever seen," Tower said.

Back home, his father, a Methodist minister and Democrat like the rest of the family, patted him on the back. "Son, we're real proud of you," he said. "And I think most of us voted for you."

His opponent was no heavyweight, but Tower benefited even more from a split in the Democratic Party. Many liberals voted for Tower or not at all.

FORMER CAMPAIGN manager Ken Towery of Austin recalls that some labeled Tower's election a "fluke," including former President Harry Truman.

"The so-called Democrat . . . ran just like a Republican and got just what was coming to him," Truman grumped.

Tower arrived in the Senate as an outspoken, unrepentant hawk. When he retired 24 years later, he said his "fundamental political philosophy remains the same."

Tower could go overboard on occasion, suggesting once the Americans should have "nuked" the Soviet Union in the 1940s.

"I'm sure the world would have hated us for it," he conceded, "but they'd have been able to sleep securely because of it."

From his rocky 1961 beginning, Tower would win re-election in 1966, 1972 and 1978, gaining power and prestige in the Senate and serving as a catalyst for Republican activity back home.

"John Tower was the cornerstone on which the Republican Party was built in Texas," says Dallas attorney Paul Eggers, Tower's longtime friend and twice a GOP candidate for governor.

"THERE WOULD be no Republican party in Texas without John Tower," maintains Larry Combest, a Texas congressman who trained as a Tower aide.

Tower was an inspiration for Republican hopefuls and did more than anyone to break the Texas Democrats' historic grip on Hispanic voters.

Recalling how Tower withstood the challenge of the Spanish-speaking Bob Krueger in the 1978 Senate race, Bob Estrada, a Dallas lawyer, said in a newspaper tribute last summer:

"This Tower phenomenon destroyed forever the presumption that Hispanics would always vote Democratic."

Without Tower's impact on Texas politics, one could argue that Bush might not be in the White House today.

In fact, a Washington reporter said Bush attended the Dallas memorial service to bid farewell to the friend who "ignited the political rocket" that propelled him to the presidency.

Monday: Tower's impact on defense.

Gadhafi seeks to rally people to Libya's defense

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi, defiantly rejecting United Nations demands to hand over suspects in the 1988 Pan Am bombing, sought Saturday in a fiery speech to rally Muslims worldwide to Libya's defense.

"Our stand is clear. We will not let go of our sovereignty. Libyan law cannot be violated without death," Gadhafi, dressed in a cream-colored suit and cape and waving his fists, told a crowd of about 3,000 people in Tripoli's main plaza. Some shouted "Jihad!" — holy war — in response.

But despite the heated rhetoric, Gadhafi left open the possibility Libya might still seek some compromise to head off the air, arms and diplomatic sanctions the U.N. Security Council has voted to impose on April 15 unless the suspects are handed over.

Underscoring the growing tensions, the State Department on Saturday reiterated its call for U.S. citizens to leave Libya immediately. About 500 to 1,000 Americans are in Libya, most working with oil companies or as consultants with construction projects. The United States, which has no diplomatic ties with Tripoli, had already advised its citizens to get out.

Also Saturday, Venezuela recalled its ambassador to Tripoli, two days after its embassy was sacked by a Libyan mob. Venezuela held the presidency of the Security Council at the time of the sanctions vote.

The two Libyans are wanted in the 1988 bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, which killed 270 people. Britain and the United States last year issued warrants for the pair, said to be Libyan government agents.

France is also seeking the trial of four other Libyan suspects, including Gadhafi's brother-in-law, in the 1989 bombing of a French UTA jetliner over Niger, which killed 171 people.

Gadhafi's speech, marking the end of the Muslim holy month of Ramadan, was his first public address since the Security Council approved the sanctions.

CLINTON: Letter prompts latest draft questions delivered to The Associated Press in Little Rock shortly after 9 p.m. CST Saturday.

"The notice had been sent by surface mail and arrived after the induction date. Gov. Clinton immediately sought guidance from his local draft board about the induction date that had passed. He asked whether he could finish his current term at Oxford," the statement continued.

"As was routine procedure, the request was granted and his induction was postponed. Gov. Clinton completed the spring term and returned to the United States in late June or early July."

The statement went on to say that Clinton then joined the ROTC program at the University of Arkansas.

Clinton has not denied receiving an induction notice, but did not volunteer that he received one in previous explanations about his draft status during the Vietnam war, which has been an issue in his campaign.

The letter that prompted the new questions about the way Clinton handled his draft status during the Vietnam was addressed to Dean Leslie Campbell, Arts and Science, Auburn University, dated May 8, 1969 and signed by Cliff Jackson.

The last paragraph of long letter, made available to the AP by Campbell reads in part: "Hopefully, I do not face military service, since I am now classified 1-Y (I think I'm mentally defective!), but other Rhodes and Fulbrights are being regularly drafted out of Oxford. Bill Clinton, friend and Rhodes from Hot Springs, Ark., received his induction notice last week."

Asked Saturday whether he gave any credibility to the letter, Campbell told the AP:

"Yes, you can think of the possibilities. Either Jackson misunderstood, or Clinton told him this and he wasn't sure. But you have to give a lot of credibility to contemporary evidence," Campbell said in an interview prior to the Clinton campaign announcement.

Campbell said this was "not just a casual reference, obviously."

"I doubt Gov. Clinton will be the candidate. One thing that began moving me away from him, then away from the party, his deceitful replies to the allegations," Campbell said

Jackson is head of the Alliance for the Rebirth of an Independent American Spirit, a conservative Arkansas group opposed to Clinton's candidacy.

A copy of the letter from Jackson to Campbell was sent to the AP bureau in Montgomery on Friday and Campbell subsequently was contacted.

Campbell said he taught Jackson one year at Arkansas College in Batesville, Ark., before Campbell went to Auburn.

Asked whether he was aware Jackson was leading an anti-Clinton effort, Campbell said he knew Jackson was a Republican but had "no information" on his political activity.

Jackson was at Oxford on a Fulbright Fellowship at the time he wrote the letter to his former professor. Clinton was a Rhodes scholar.

BBC poll shows Labor leads

By Maureen Johnson
Associated Press writer

LONDON — The Labor Party, best known for strikes and a Third World-style currency crisis when last in office, may be days away from regaining power after 13 years of Conservative Britain.

It would have been unthinkable even five years ago: Neil Kinnock, a fiery Welshman who marched to ban the bomb, as prime minister.

Stock markets still tremble at the thought — the Financial Times index of leading shares has sunk by 4 percent since the three-week campaign began. Three polls putting Labor 4-7 points ahead in the middle of last week slashed millions of dollars off share values.

Kinnock, 50, grumbled that the markets were swayed by "sentiment or, dare I say it, superstition."

The one-time socialist has turned centrist and taken Labor from the unelectable left to a leading edge in the opinion polls. It just may be enough to defeat Conservative Prime Minister John Major in Thursday's national election.

The British Broadcasting Corp. "poll of polls" released Saturday had Labor at 40 percent, the Conservatives at 37 percent, the centrist Liberal Democrats holding steady at 19 percent, and others at 4 percent.

The BBC poll was based on four of the latest opinion polls taken for today's newspapers. The margin of error was plus or minus 3 percent.

Labor has been clear about some of the changes in store: higher taxes on the rich; slightly more spending on health, schools and public facilities; a greater degree of self-government for Scotland and Wales.

Major calls it the "nightmare on Kinnock street," with state spending and union power let loose once more. But Kinnock has lost his image as a bogeyman.

"They (Labor) have so little room for maneuver economically that I don't think there would be a huge change," said Robert Harris, Kinnock's biographer and a columnist for The Sunday Times of London.

The big restraint on Labor, given its promise not to devalue the pound or raise the deficit above the Tories' $48.7 billion, is Britain's membership in the European Community's exchange rate mechanism.

It links the exchange rate of the major European currencies and limits budget deficits to 3 percent of gross domestic product.

Labor would boost taxes from 40 percent to 50 percent on people getting more than $69,600 a year — hitting 800,000 top earners, and raise health and welfare insurance contributions while ending tax on the 740,000 lowest paid.

U.N. talks on environment founder over funds

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Preparatory negotiations for a U.N. summit on global environmental problems ended Saturday with a broad statement of goals, but enmeshed in disagreement over funding and other issues.

Weary negotiators trying to organize a global war on pollution and environmental destruction met overnight, trying to salvage agreements ahead of the Earth Summit in Rio on June 3-14.

Delegates did settle early Saturday on a 27-point Rio Declaration on the Environment and Development — a statement of the Earth Summit's environmental goals.

However, it was the least specific of the agreements the delegates had sought and does not set up any means for implementing its goals.

Even that text may be changed before the summit because many nations had reservations about various points, said Jean-Claude Faby, spokesman for the summit's secretary-general, Maurice Strong.

For example, some Western nations — including the United States — objected to a clause that says "in view of the different contribution to global environmental degradation, states have common but differentiated responsibilities" for solving environmental problems, Faby said.

Faby said the United States objected to this clause in connection with its stance on global warming.

Canada's chief delegate, John Bell, called the Rio Declaration a breakthrough but wished the pedestrian language had been "more inspirational" and focused more on "integrating the environment with development.

The preparatory meeting deadlocked over limiting "greenhouse gases," mainly because the United States refused to accept any binding targets for limiting emissions of the gases that are believed to be the chief cause of global warming.

The chief U.S. delegate said Friday that the talks also were stalemated over how to foot the bill for cleaning up pollution. The United States and other industrialized nations refused to discuss creating a "Green Fund," as advocated by Third World nations.

"We've lost a great opportunity," said Assistant Secretary of State Curtis Bohlen in an interview. He said the summit would be held in Rio de Janeiro in June as planned.

Finnish government meets to avert economic fall

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — Prime Minister Esko Aho's year-old Cabinet called an emergency session on Saturday in an attempt to stabilize the economy and support the weakening currency.

Aho called the meeting after up to $2.2 billion flowed out of Finland on Friday. Currency dealers, lacking confidence in the weak Finnish economy and fearing a devaluation, traded markkaa for foreign currency from the central bank and deposited it abroad.

The transfers cut central bank reserves by a third and fed speculation that the currency would have to be devalued on Monday.

Industry, business and financial leaders say a second devaluation would seriously damage confidence in the center-right coalition's ability to handle the economy.

"We have no definite program yet, but we need the support of industry and the trade unions" in cutting social benefits and other government spending, Aho said.

But with unemployment at a record 12.6 percent in February, union leaders rejected cuts in wages and benefits during talks Friday night.

The four-party Cabinet, which regularly disagrees over policy, intended to work through the weekend toward a plan that would boost confidence when banks and financial markets open Monday morning.

The economy has steadily declined since Aho's government took office last April. It inherited rising inflation and reduced trade opportunities from the previous government.

Aside from the worldwide economic downturn, Finland's major economic problem came with the demise of the Soviet Union.

Finland had a favorable barter arrangement that guaranteed a market for Finnish exports in return for Soviet fuel.

■ Mexico revokes Tijuana incinerator license

MEXICO CITY — The license for an incinerator that would have started commercial operation in August has been revoked because the plant failed to meet government pollution standards in tests, an official said Saturday.

The incinerator was being operated by Chemical Waste Management Inc., a subsidiary of the garbage giant Waste Management Inc., in eastern Tijuana, Baja California.

Ecology Secretary Patricio Chirinos announced the revocation in Tijuana on Thursday.

"The city of Tijuana was growing very fast in very little time, and the plant was located close to the populace," federal Ecology Department spokesman Roberto Contreras told The Associated Press. "It didn't comply with the requirements, and furthermore, the populace was protesting plenty against this plant."

The government of former President Miguel de la Madrid in September 1988 granted a conditional license to the plant, which goes by the name TEESA. It was only good to make test burns of polychlorinated biphenyls, a cancer-causing chemical formerly used as a transformer in fluorescent light fixtures and electrical power stations.

■ French premier appoints 41 ministers

PARIS — Premier Pierre Beregovoy officially took over Saturday, moving into his new office and naming 41 junior ranking ministers to complete his government.

Beregovoy was welcomed at the Matignon offices by former Premier Edith Cresson, who resigned after dramatic defeats for the governing Socialists in regional elections last month.

Neither made comments to the press following their one-hour meeting. Cresson's departure was quickly followed by the announcement of the new secretaries of state. Cabinet-level ministers were named on Thursday.

Among the junior ministers was Martin Malvy, 56, who will have the highest profile as the government's new spokesman.

The new Cabinet is to hold its first meeting on Wednesday.

■ South African violence claims 20 lives

KATLEHONG, South Africa — A gang armed with guns and firebombs attacked a settlement of shacks in this black township, killing at least 20 people, police said Saturday.

A hospital official said two of the 23 people wounded in the attack Friday night also died, but police could not confirm the additional deaths.

It was among the worst bloodshed this year in the chronic violence that has wracked townships near Johannesburg.

Dozens of men "carrying firearms, petrol bombs and other sharpened objects" attacked a squatter camp in Katlehong, killing 20 people, police Lt. Wikus Weber said.

Douglas Madlala, who identified himself as the squatter camp secretary, said most residents belonged to the Inkatha Freedom Party, and that the attackers supported the rival African National Congress.

The ANC condemned the slaughter as "the work of the enemies of peace and democracy."

Japan's defense academy admits first women students

TOKYO (AP) — Thirty-nine blue-uniformed women on Saturday became the first female cadets in the 40-year history of Japan's military academy.

The women sat apart from 431 male cadets as the freshman class formally joined the National Defense Academy in Yokosuka, south of Tokyo. Japan's school year starts in April.

The academy trains officers for Japan's military.

Japan's post-World War II constitution renounces force as a means of settling international disputes, but the country maintains ground, air and maritime "self-defense forces" of 250,000 troops, along with 50,000 reservists.

Women were admitted to the academy — the only officers' training school for all self-defense forces — this year because the academy determined that "it is possible to maintain Japan's military strength with high-ranking female officers," said an academy official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

He said the example of growing numbers of women in the forces of other nations also inspired the change.

However, news reports said the decision was made chiefly to attract more male students.

The academy, which has about 1,600 students total, has had trouble finding recruits in recent years because many young Japanese have instead chosen better-paying civilian jobs.

Bombs injure 17 in Ethiopia

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Bombs exploded at two hotels in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa, and more than 17 people were injured, state-run radio reported Saturday.

The broadcast did not say whether anyone had been arrested in the attacks.

The blasts came amid increasing conflict between the two main parties in Ethiopia's interim government.

The first explosion occurred at the National Hotel on Friday night, injuring 13 people, according to the broadcast, monitored in Nairobi. The second came 10 minutes later at the Adam hotel. Four people were hurt; several others were slightly hurt by falling debris.

The hotels cater primarily to Ethiopians, and it was not known whether any foreigners were injured. Both were badly damaged, the radio reported.

It was not known whether the violence was linked to growing clashes between the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front and the Oromo tribe.

State media reported Tuesday that soldiers of the front had repulsed an attack on the city of Harrar earlier in the day by groups from the Oromo tribe.

Two bitter state elections in Germany focus on issue of immigration

By Larry Thorson
Associated Press writer

STUTTGART, Germany — Politicians in two German states Saturday wrapped up bitter parliamentary campaigns that focused on the issue of immigration.

Pollsters predicted a surge by far-rightist parties in today's elections in southern Baden-Wuerttemberg state, where extremists campaigned on anti-foreigner platforms. They also said Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Christian Democrats could lose their absolute majority — the only one they hold in former West Germany's 11 states.

The Social Democrats appeared secure in the election in the second state, northern Schleswig-Holstein, where national party leader Bjoern Engholm is the governor.

Meanwhile, Turkish and Kurdish immigrants clashed Saturday at a demonstration in Stuttgart, the state capital, and police said two officers were injured by stones.

The fights broke out as Turkish immigrants protested Bonn's alleged pro-Kurdish policies and its arms embargo against Turkey, enacted amid German outrage over attacks on Kurdish civilians.

The clash came just days after Kohl, in a speech to Parliament in Bonn, said Germany's streets would not become battlegrounds for the country's 1.7 million Turkish immigrants.

The confrontation was likely to fuel right-wing politicians' charges that Germany is losing control of its growing foreign population.

On the eve of the elections, the Bonner Rundschau newspaper said the Federal Criminal Office reported an average 200 attacks a month on foreigners — far below the 950 attacks in the peak month of October, but still a 400 percent increase over early 1991.

The opposition Social Democrats have accused Kohl's conservative party of pandering to the rightist sentiment and have criticized the growing debt load that has followed German unification.

The Stuttgarter Nachtrichten newspaper, published in heavily industrial Baden-Wuerttemberg, said polls found up to 25 percent of voters undecided. It predicted that far-right Republicans would pass the 5 percent threshold required to win seats in the state Parliament and that the Christian Democrats would lose their majority.

Italian premier warns of political chaos

By Mary Beth Sheridan
Associated Press writer

ROME — Italy's Christian Democrats, the longest continuously ruling party in Western Europe, wound up their campaign for today's national elections by warning of political and economic chaos if an expected protest vote materializes.

"This is not the time for experiments," warned seven-time Premier Giulio Andreotti.

He raised the specter of a return to the Fascist era of dictator Benito Mussolini if the vote is splintered among the 128 parties competing in the first national elections in five years.

"An excess of splintering could lead to positions of this type: 'Someone must maintain order, the trains must run on time,'" Andreotti said.

The voting today and Monday presents the greatest political uncertainty in Italy since 1976, when the West's largest Communist party came to the brink of power here.

In truth, few Italians seriously believe in a return to Fascism or other doomsday scenarios raised during the campaign. But the end of the Cold War has redrawn the country's political landscape.

The Communists, formerly Italy's second-largest party, have split, with the main group renamed the Democratic Party of the Left. The anti-Communist vote that once buttressed the Christian Democrats has vanished.

Meanwhile, the governing coalition faces rising public disgust with political corruption, cronyism and shoddy state services associated with the Christian Democrat-dominated governments of the past four decades.

The result is expected to be a boost for small opposition parties, which can enter the 945-seat Parliament relatively easily because of Italy's proportional representation system.

Such an outcome could further weaken the ruling coalition in Italy, where governments have had an average life span of 11 months since 1946.

The Christian Democrats and their coalition partners — the Socialists, Liberals and Social Democrats — warn that Italy could miss out on the European Community's economic and monetary union unless there is a strong enough government to tackle ballooning government deficit and 6 percent inflation.

Opposition parties are taking the opposite tack — urging Italians not to be afraid of change.

Yeltsin faces fiercest attack since collapse of Soviet Union

By Bryan Brumley
Associated Press writer

MOSCOW — The billions of dollars Boris Yeltsin won in Western aid last week may prove a weak shield against a growing movement to whittle down his authority during a congress that opens Monday.

"I expect a strong attack on the president in order to take back powers given to him" a year ago to accelerate economic reforms, said one of his advisers, Galina Starovoitova.

The challenge is likely to be the strongest to Yeltsin since the Soviet Union collapsed last December, although it almost certainly will not topple him from power or end his reforms.

The 250-member Russian Supreme Soviet has endorsed a proposed constitution that would end Yeltsin's power to issue sweeping economic decrees and name Cabinet ministers without lawmakers' approval.

But the document will not take effect unless it is adopted in a referendum or passed by a two-thirds vote in the 1,048-member Congress of People's Deputies.

Yeltsin also is under pressure to "correct" his reforms, which have sent inflation soaring to 350 percent and his approval rating plunging to record lows.

He may be forced to surrender his two Cabinet jobs, prime minister and defense minister. But few lawmakers are demanding he resign as president.

"Even the most reckless critics realize clearly that the president is the only guarantee against loss of stability," said Sergei B. Stankevich, a presidential aide.

And while most of the lawmakers are former Communists, elected in March 1990, few publicly oppose the goal of Yeltsin's reforms, creation of a market economy.

Yeltsin had a mixed record in the week before the Congress, which is meeting for the first time since the Soviet collapse.

President Bush and other Western leaders pledged $24 billion to back reforms in the former Soviet republics. And 18 of 20 autonomous republics in the Russian Federation signed a treaty agreeing to remain intact as a nation.

But outcry over the price increases forced Yeltsin to shuffle his Cabinet, and parliamentary speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov on Thursday declared the body to be "in opposition" to the Yeltsin government. He demanded wage and price controls be reintroduced to soften the reforms.

Report: School boards must change

WASHINGTON (AP) — Local school boards must take charge of policy instead of being bogged down by routine, a task force report said Saturday.

"School boards are no longer providing the quality leadership needed to secure America's future," the Twentieth Century Fund Task Force said in its report.

The nation's 15,350 school boards employ 2.7 million people, including 1.5 million teachers and 917,000 service employees. They oversee the expenditure of $220 billion and the education of 47 million students.

Many boards have become bogged down in the minutiae of routine administration, while others are strangled by state regulations.

For example, West Virginia school boards are required to approve student field trips. Boards in Texas, North Carolina and California are involved in selecting textbooks. And the Tucson, Ariz., school board met 172 times in a single year.

"Talk about micro-management," William Kolberg, president of the National Alliance of Business, said of the Arizona board.

"To me, to meet 172 times a year, you can not only hire and fire the school superintendent, you can worry about who's serving the school lunches. This is not what school boards are suppose to be about," said Kolberg, a task force member.

Howard O'Cull, executive director of the West Virginia School Boards Association and a task force member, acknowledged that "many boards rarely get to the big picture issues facing their districts."

He said a recent West Virginia study of school board decision-making over a five-year period found policy was made only 3 percent of the time. The other 97 percent dealt with matters such as approving payment for team uniforms or hiring custodians and teachers.

The task force of 19 educators, business leaders, policy analysts and school board officials suggested that teachers and principals be allowed to make decisions affecting their schools.

Bills would triple spending, group says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite rhetoric about the need to cut the budget deficit, House members have introduced spending bills that could triple the red ink — to $3 billion a day, the National Taxpayers Union Foundation said Saturday.

If every House bill introduced since the 102nd Congress took office in January 1991 were enacted, federal spending would rise by $793 billion a year, according to the private research group.

Passage of every pending Senate bill would cost $443 billion.

But no member expects to see all his or her bills become law; only a small percentage are enacted.

Bills often are introduced just to fulfill a campaign promise, serve as the focal point of debate, or enhance the sponsor's chances of influencing whatever compromise bill finally emerges.

Nevertheless, the foundation insists the disparity between the number of spending-increase bills and spending-cut bills is so great that it has to affect the government's financial condition.

In this Congress, for example, there have been 713 bills to increase spending and 108 to cut spending. The dollar disparity is even greater, the group says. In the House, for example, spending increases would cost $815 billion; the spending reductions would save less than $23 billion.

All that would be on top of the $1.5 trillion in spending that President Bush has proposed for the budget year that begins Oct. 1. That budget would result in a record deficit projected at $399 billion.

"In the House, 75 members would like to increase spending by more than $200 billion," David Keating, president of the foundation, told reporters Friday. "The typical member proposes a $15-billion-a-year increase."

7. Team members must sign the Midland YMCA Corporate Cup waiver prior to competition; this must be submitted with the team roster.
8. Individuals not employed by a corporation, company or agency may enter the competition provided they form teams as representatives of their professional group(s). Examples are as follows: Midland Medical Society, Midland Bar Association, etc. Groups needing special assistance, may submit a written request.
9 The Midland YMCA Corporate Cup Registration Commitee reserves the right to review all team entries relative to eligibility.

A 1992 Corporate Cup Challenge t-shirt will be provided to team members prior to the event with the intention that teams will have the backs of these shirts screened with their own logos.
2. Team rosters are due by April 3, 1992. It is assumed that each team's roster is final as of that date. Rosters must be typed and all information included. Failure to do so may result in ineligibility for those events.
3. Each team member may participate in up to five events. The Banner and Spirit events will not be counted as part of these five events as we would like everyone to partcipate in these two.
4. Corporations that enter more than one team may not share or cross-enter members between teams. Each team scores its own points. No points will be shared or split.
5. Protests affecting the eligibility of any team member to compete or represent any agency, company or corporation in any event shall be made in writing to the Corporate Cup Registration Committee before the event is held.

All three of Team Bank's new Choice CDs are so good, you might have a tough time deciding which one you want.

Our 18 month CD pays 7% the first 90 days, then for the remaining term, goes to the rate that was in effect the day your account was opened. Our 36 month CD starts out with a bonus rate of 8% for 90 days then goes to the purchase day rate for its remainder.

Then there's our Jump CD. With the Jump, your interest rate starts at the current market value. But, you have the option at any time during its 24 month term to make a one-time "jump" to a higher rate if the market rate happens to rise. When you decide to boost your rate, all you have to do is tell us.

Hillary Clinton apologizes for remarks about Bush

By Deborah Sontag
N.Y. Times News Service

In a newly published interview, Hillary Clinton says it "is apparently well known in Washington" that President Bush has had an extramarital affair. But Saturday, campaigning for her husband, Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas, she apologized for the remark.

The interview, in the May issue of Vanity Fair magazine, characterizes Mrs. Clinton as furious at what she perceives as the media's double standard in investigating her husband's personal life and ignoring Bush's.

Mrs. Clinton refers in the interview to "Bush and his carrying on, all of which is apparently well known in Washington."

Saturday, after newspapers in New York City reported her remarks under headlines like "Hillary's Revenge," "Hillary Goes Tabloid," and "Bill's Wife Dishes the Dirt," Mrs. Clinton apologized.

Campaigning for her husband at the College of St. Rose in Albany, N.Y., for Tuesday's New York Democratic presidential primary, Mrs. Clinton said she regretted the comment.

"It was a mistake," she said. "People were asking me questions at the time and I responded, but nobody knows better than I the pain that can be caused by ever discussing rumors in private conversation."

The White House said Friday that it had no comment on Mrs. Clinton's published remarks and on Saturday would not respond to further questions.

In the Vanity Fair article, Mrs. Clinton refers to a conversation with Anne Cox Chambers, the chairwoman of the Cox Newspapers. Mrs. Clinton says: "She's sittin' there in her sun room saying, 'You know, I just don't understand why they think they can get away with this — everybody knows about George Bush,' and then launches into this long description of, you know, Bush and his carrying on, all of which is apparently well-known in Washington."

The author of the Vanity Fair article, Gail Sheehy, said Saturday that she spoke with Mrs. Clinton again last week about their interview and that Mrs. Clinton "didn't back away from it."

Ms. Sheehy originally interviewed Mrs. Clinton in January, just after Gennifer Flowers, a one-time cabaret singer, asserted that she had had a 12-year affair with Gov. Clinton.

Gov. Clinton said Saturday in Albany that his wife had been under a "not inconsiderable amount of stress."

Nation in brief

■ Abortion-rights advocates prepare for rally

WASHINGTON — Aboriion-rights advocates headed for the nation's capital in droves Saturday, seeking to show a conservative Supreme Court that there still is strong public sentiment for legalized abortion in the United States.

The National Organization for Women predicted that hundreds of thousands of people would attend today's abortion-rights march and rally, the first in the capital in three years.

The rally comes less than three weeks before the Supreme Court takes up a Pennsylvania case that anti-abortion and pro-choice advocates have said could undermine — if not overturn — Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 court decision that legalized abortion.

"I don't think there's any question that this Supreme Court is prepared to withdraw recognition of abortion rights as a fundamental constitutional right," said NOW president Patricia Ireland.

■ Court lifts stay for Arizona execution

PHOENIX — The U.S. Supreme Court on Saturday lifted a stay that had blocked the scheduled execution of a triple murderer, which would be Arizona's first execution in 29 years.

The Arizona Board of Pardons and Paroles will hold a clemency hearing today for Donald Eugene Harding. The hearing is the last step before he could be executed, said Assistant Attorney General Jack Roberts.

After the hearing, required by state law, the board could recommend a reprieve or that his sentence be commuted to life in prison, or it could do nothing. Gov. Fife Symington wouldn't be bound by the board's recommendation, but he can't intervene unless the board recommends that he do so.

Symington has said he supports the death penalty, but he hasn't commented on Harding's case.

The state attorney general's office asked the nation's high court Friday to lift the stay issued Thursday night by a three-judge panel of the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco.

The high court lifted the stay on a 7-2 vote, with Justices John Paul Stevens and Harry A. Blackmun dissenting.

Harding's execution is scheduled for early Monday.

■ Classic low-rider wins spot in Smithsonian

CHIMAYO, N.M. — The low-rider, a rolling art form of chrome, crushed velvet, hydraulics and horsepower, has gained official recognition as part of Americana.

"Dave's Dream," a 1969 Ford LTD lovingly customized in the style popular in many of the nation's Hispanic neighborhoods, will be loaded into a truck Monday and shipped to the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

"This is the first low-rider in the history of the world, to my knowledge, that's going into a museum," said Bill Withuhn, curator of the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History.

The story of how Dave's Dream ended up in the Smithsonian begins more than two years ago, when curators searching for items representing life and culture in the Rio Grande Valley bought it for an "American Encounters" exhibition.

Dennis Martinez helped restore the low-rider with the Los Bajitos car club. The car is named after Martinez's cousin, David Jaramillo, who customized it before his death in 1978.

Jury deliberates; Noriega recalls 'fire, blood and tears'

MIAMI (AP) — Deliberations got under way Saturday in Manuel Noriega's drug trial after the ousted Panamanian leader implored the judge to let them see the uncensored indictment that caused "blood and tears between two countries."

The defense discovered only Friday that prosecutors had deleted from jurors' copies sections of the 1988 indictment that contradicted evidence the government used during the six-month trial.

Jurors balked at starting their deliberations Saturday morning without the indictment, and U.S. District Judge William Hoeveler called a hearing.

Noriega asked to address the judge, telling him through an interpreter that Panama was invaded and he was captured on the basis of the original indictment.

"These very same charges — in the complete form — were publicized around the whole world," Noriega said in a controlled voice. "These were the same charges that in 1989, as the end result, brought fire, blood and tears between two countries."

Vatican authorities also cited the indictment when they expelled Noriega from their embassy in Panama City after U.S. troops blasted the building with rock 'n' roll for several days, he said.

"These were the same charges that then forced the papal nuncio to take me out and turn me over to the United States," Noriega said.

It was only the third time Noriega has spoken at length in the case. He did not testify in his own behalf.

The judge agreed to restore the disputed sections of the indictment.

Board reprimands doctor for fake positive AIDS test

BALTIMORE (AP) — A doctor has been reprimanded by a state board for trying to get revenge on an ex-girlfriend by arranging for her to be told falsely that she had tested positive for the AIDS virus.

Dr. Thomas A. DiGiovanna, 35, a former emergency room physician at Johns Hopkins Hospital, put the name of his ex-girlfriend, a nurse at the hospital, on a blood sample from a person with AIDS.

The woman, whose name wasn't disclosed, was told that her blood had tested positive for the AIDS virus, but didn't believe it because she hadn't submitted a sample for testing, DiGiovanna's lawyer, Patricia V. Fettman, said Friday.

DiGiovanna didn't contest the charges and agreed last month to write a letter of apology to the woman. He also was ordered by the state Board of Physician Quality Assurance to perform 100 hours of service in an AIDS treatment facility.

Fitzwater denies resignation rumors

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's chief spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, denied Saturday that he abruptly left on vacation in exasperation over turmoil in the White House leadership.

Fitzwater, on vacation in Bermuda, issued a statement through White House aide Michael Busch, saying his vacation "has nothing to do with the events described in The Washington Post article" about his frustration.

The article said Fitzwater had told associates he was frustrated enough to quit over White House inability to carry forward Bush's policies and themes.

"Marlin is not resigning and did not threaten to quit," said Busch.

However, Bush's longtime press secretary privately has expressed unhappiness with his new expanded role as White House communications director and said he wanted to divest himself of some of those duties.

Other staff members also are frustrated over what one senior official called a sense of "indecision at the top."

"Marlin feels as if he's been set up as communication czar with his title, but then he doesn't really have the authority to coordinate communications strategy," because there are "too many cooks" at the White House, said the official, who spoke only on condition his name not be used.

Another official said Fitzwater had indicated he would like to shed the communications job because "the lines were never drawn really clearly" on his responsibilities.

Fitzwater, responding to the Post assertions of unhappiness with the new leadership of Chief of Staff Samuel Skinner and his deputy Henson Moore, said in his statement: "The chief of staff and the deputy chief of staff are doing an excellent job.

"The White House has a strong management team in place and will continue to focus on what is important to the American people. We are pushing forward the president's agenda particularly as it relates to the economy, legal and governmental reform, health care and education."

Aides said Fitzwater's vacation departure last weekend had been discussed with his staff for a couple of weeks and that he had said he might be gone this week also.

Ousted chief of United Way rejects report

By Felicity Barringer
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The United Way of America scandal has taken on the trappings of a bitter divorce, with William Aramony, the ousted president, denouncing the critical report issued by his successors as "replete with lies" and vowing to fight to retain $4.4 million in pension benefits.

For those most vulnerable, the local United Way affiliates and their member charities that Aramony forged over 22 years into the nation's leading charity network, the prospect of a vituperative fight between the movement's now-tarnished former leader and a new leader struggling with an organization in crisis added one more worry to their already full plate.

Virtually all United Way campaigns for workplace donations begin in the fall, so local officials contacted said it was virtually impossible to gauge the effect that the disclosures would have on public trust. But several local leaders said they feared that the barrage of accusation and counter-accusation would only worsen the situation.

Aramony has retained one of the best-known lawyers in Washington, Thomas H. Boggs Jr., and the United Way of America has retained two large firms, Verner, Liipfert, Bernhard, MacPherson & Hand, which prepared the report, and Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering, which reviewed the final report.

"Fighting isn't going to be good for Bill, and it certainly isn't going to be good for the United Way movement," said David A. Paradine, president of the United Way of the Columbia-Wilamette Valley in Portland, Ore. "If there are issues relative to restitution, they should settle those through negotiation.

"Overall, the system is going to survive. But it's what happens in the short term that everyone is worried about."

Aramony's willingness to break what he described to Ted Koppel of ABC as a "gag order" imposed by John F. Akers, the former chairman of The United Way of America, came after the release of the report on Aramony's activities over the last five years.

The report showed a pattern of financial manipulation of hundreds of thousands of dollars for consulting fees, the creation of spinoff organizations and lavish expense accounts, all with vague or nonexistent documentation.

On the ABC program "Nightline," and in letters to Akers, who is also chairman of IBM, Aramony said he was denied due process by not being given a chance to see the report before it was made public.

The organization's finances, he said, had been audited by the firm of Arthur Andersen & Co., and the audits — along with his management decisions — had been approved by the organization's board of governors.

People familiar with the investigation indicated Saturday that Aramony had been interviewed by investigators on several occasions in January, but had not subsequently been consulted.

NHL strike: Day 4

NEW YORK (AP) — Amid a controversy over semantics, the NHL strike went into its fourth day on Saturday.

Rhetorically at least, the sides never seemed farther apart after NHL president John Ziegler met with union boss Bob Goodenow for talks in Toronto.

Out of those discussions came word from the NHL Players Association that a "new proposal" was handed to Ziegler to take back to the board of governors.

Ziegler didn't quite see it that way.

A statement issued by the NHL on Saturday declared:

"As of noon today, Mr. Ziegler has received no new proposals from the association."

Duke one step closer

Michigan's Fab Five join Blue Devils in final

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Once again, Duke flirted with defeat. Once again, however, the Blue Devils will play for the national championship.

The Blue Devils survived a subpar game by Christian Laettner and four Indiana 3-pointers in the final minute Saturday night to hang on for an 81-78 victory in the NCAA semifinals.

They did it with a 25-point turnaround keyed by stifling second-half defense and 18 straight points wrapped around a technical foul against Hoosiers coach Bob Knight.

■ Duke Blue Devils vs. Michigan Wolverines, 8:22 p.m., Monday, CBS.

Indiana had a chance to tie it with 15 seconds left, but Jamal Meeks missed a 3-pointer from the corner and Duke sealed it with three free throws.

Duke thus moved within 40 minutes of what no team has done since UCLA 19 years ago — win consecutive national titles. The Blue Devils will be an 8-point favorite to do just that Monday night against Michigan, a 76-72 semifinal winner over Cincinnati.

With Laettner scoring a career-low eight points, Bobby Hurley supplied the offense with six 3-pointers and a career-high 26 points — and Duke needed every one of them.

"Bobby really led us today," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "Indiana thoroughly outplayed us in the first half. At halftime, we knew we had to raise our game up. We played much better in the second half. Our defense was sensational."

It was pretty much standard fare Saturday at the Midland College tennis courts, where the Chaparral men and women sprang forward and the competition fell back, allowing both MC teams to easily reach the finals of the ITCA Western Team Tennis Championships.

The MC men and women used clean-sweep semifinal victories on their home courts to advance to today's finals at the Odessa College courts.

The Chaparral men, who dismantled Collin County 5-0 in a Saturday morning quarterfinal match, knocked off New Mexico Military Institute by the same score in the afternoon semifinals. The Chaps will meet Tyler, Temple or Foothill College at 1 p.m. today in the finals.

Cooper continues 4-5A rule

■ District front-running Abilene Cooper remains unbeaten with an 8-2 win over Midland High Saturday at Angels Stadium.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Midland High entered Saturday's District 4-5A game against Abilene Cooper hoping for a Cinderella-like win.

After Cooper's 8-2 victory at Angels Stadium, the clock may be about to strike midnight for the Bulldogs — and the rest of the 4-5A baseball contenders — as far as the district crown is concerned.

The fifth-ranked Cougars remain unbeaten in 4-5A with a 5-0 district record and are 14-3 overall. Meanwhile, the rest of the field continued to beat up on each other Saturday, as Abilene High downed Midland Lee 7-3 and San Angelo upended Odessa Permian 5-1. Odessa High was idle.

After Saturday's bloodletting, Permian and AHS are tied for second place with 3-2 loop marks, while MHS (7-12 overall) is 3-3 and Lee and San Angelo are 2-3. OHS is 0-5.

"By far, Cooper has the best team in the district," MHS head coach Rick Wood said. "They hit the ball well and they have lots of depth in their pitching. They're a good ball club, but we didn't pitch well enough, field well enough or hit well enough to win. Part of that was breaks, but they played a better ball game."

The Coogs got on the board in the top of the first inning with Carey Paige's double to left field that drove in Deric Neal from second base. But the Bulldogs answered in the bottom of the inning as Jeremy Burton hit a grounder between third and shortstop with runners on the corners, sending catcher Mike Melzer across the plate.

The score remained knotted at 1-1 through the second, and MHS pitcher Brian Rounding retired the first two batters of the third inning.

Then Paige drove his second hit of the game to right field and Eric Gibson followed with a double to left that scored him. On the same play, Gibson tried to take third base when the cut-off throw went to the plate, and was able to come home after Melzer's throw to third went wide and into the outfield.

Cooper added two more runs in the fourth, and first baseman Jay Pugh made the score 6-1 in the top of the fifth

Baseball's here: relax, enjoy while possible

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

It would be nice to believe that the start of the 1992 baseball season would mark the end of everything that drew the focus from the field during spring training.

Dwight Gooden and sex scandals, Ryne Sandberg and soaring salaries. The Seattle Mariners and their sale, George Steinbrenner and his suits, Bill Landrum and his sudden release, Gilberto Reyes and his drug suspension.

More and more, that seems to be the way the game is going these days, doesn't it? Kind of like none of the important stuff happens between the white lines anymore.

And that's why it's good that opening day is almost here. Because when Detroit's Bill Gullickson throws the first pitch of the year to Toronto's Devon White on Monday afternoon, it will serve notice that baseball, real baseball, is back.

Can Nolan Ryan do it again at age 45? Will the Minnesota Twins repeat as champions, and if not, which team will take their place? How will Eric Davis, Bobby Bonilla and Danny Tartabull do in their new homes?

The whole package begins to unfold just after 1 p.m. Monday on the fresh-cut grass at Tiger Stadium. A few minutes later, Jack Morris, the reigning World Series hero, will take the mound for the first time with his Blue Jays teammates to face Alan Trammell and his former club.

An hour after that, the Twins begin defense of their title when they play in Milwaukee. Moments later, the sparkling Oriole Park at Camden Yards opens for business in Baltimore with President Bush in attendance. On it goes into the night, when Ryan begins his 26th season when he starts for Texas in Seattle.

BASEBALL: Money rules this year

(From 1B)

"I've gotten my work in this spring," Ryan said after a final tuneup in Texas. "It's time to get going."

Certainly, though, the effects of what happened in Florida and Arizona will be felt for a long time.

In one of the most notable spring trainings in recent times, three key trades were made. George Bell went from the Chicago Cubs to the Chicago White Sox in a rare deal between the teams, Kirk Gibson was swapped from Kansas City to Pittsburgh and 20-game winner John Smiley went from Pittsburgh to Minnesota.

"You don't get many chances to repeat as World Series champions, and we had to take it," Twins general manager Andy MacPhail said.

The White Sox got Bell after finding out that Bo Jackson is probably finished for good. Jackson could hit, but not run, in a few tests in spring training, and elected for hip replacement surgery.

The White Sox were not the only team to lose players this spring. Texas' Julio Franco and Minnesota's Kent Hrbek will miss the first week of the season, Boston's Carlos Quintana will be out until the All-Star break after being hurt in a car crash in Venezuela and Philadelphia's Ken Howell will miss another season with arm trouble.

And the Pittsburgh Pirates may be forced to answer a grievance by Landrum, who was released last month. He was the team's save leader for the past three years, and claims he was cut because of his $1.7 million salary.

Landrum has since signed with Montreal, and fellow millionaires Kevin Seitzer and Les Lancaster also have found new teams.

Money is sure to become even a bigger topic as the next negotiations between owners and players approach. The current contract expires after the 1993 season, although either side can re-open talks after this year.

That means it won't be long before things like salary arbitration eligibility and free agency repeater rights become baseball's main issues, more than split-finger fastballs and suicide-squeeze bunts.

Until then, relax. It's time to play ball, at least for a day or two.

MEN: Michigan's freshmen led by upper classman against Cincinnati

(From 1B)

The team that had been No. 1 in the country all season looked like a team whose luck had run out when it trailed by 12 points with two minutes left in the first half — only the second time all year Duke had been down by 10 or more.

Less than 10 minutes into second half, the Atlantic Coast champions were ahead by 13, having outscored the Hoosiers 31-6.

But Indiana wasn't through, either.

Down 73-64 with 53 seconds left, the Hoosiers pulled to 80-78 with six seconds to go on three treys by reserve Todd Leary and one by Matt Nover.

The loss ended Knight's run of Final Four success after three national championships in as many trips. His only previous Final Four loss was to UCLA in 1973, the Bruins' last of seven straight titles.

. Knight would have been going for his fourth title, a mark reached only by John Wooden of UCLA (10) and Kentucky's Adolph Rupp (4).

Instead, his former player and assistant and probably his greatest admirer, Krzyzewski, will have a chance at a second straight title in his fifth straight Final Four.

This time, Duke did it without any miracle shots or perfect nights. Compared with the win that got the Blue Devils back to the Final Four, this one may have seemed easy.

Laettner caught a 75-foot pass with 2.1 seconds left in overtime and hit a turnaround jumper at the buzzer to beat Kentucky 104-103 in the East Regional final. Laettner made all 10 of his shots from the field and all 10 of his free throws that night.

But the national player of the year was just 2 for 8 from the field on Saturday and missed 3 of 7 free throws. Amazingly, he took only one shot from the field in the last 17½ minutes. He was fouled on the play, and made both free throws.

"Indiana really took Laettner out of the ballgame," Krzyzewski said. "They do the best job of help-and-recover defense of any team we play. I don't think Christian expected that."

Except for Hurley, whose 3-point barrage kept the Blue Devils close, Duke barely hit anything in the first half.

His fourth 3-pointer of the game started the 10-3 run that closed the first half and brought Duke to 42-37 at haltime. The second half for Indiana was what coaches all fear might happen to their team.

The Hoosiers missed their first seven shots of the half and didn't score for 6:14.

Wolverines 76, Bearcats 72

MINNEAPOLIS — Trash-talking and street savvy, Michigan's Fab Five stamped themselves as the finest freshman in NCAA history, thanks to a quick rescue job by a cool upper classman.

James Voskuil, a junior who lost his starting spot this season, settled down the young, talented but wild Wolverines on Saturday and put them into the NCAA championship game — the first to feature five freshman starters on one team.

Michigan, which won the title in 1989 with a veteran squad, overcame Cincinnati's fullcourt defensive pressure and swept the boards to win 76-72 and go into the final Monday against the winner of Duke-Indiana.

Michigan's players, in a show of youthfulness and delight, danced on the court after a fusillade of 3-point shots by Cincinnati bounced away in the final seconds.

But it wasn't just missed shots that brought down the Bearcats. It was Chris Webber's 16 points and 11 rebounds for Michigan, a pick up in play by all the Wolverines after a sloppy first half, and the calming influence of Voskuil.

"Turnovers in the first half were killing us — 12 — and they had eight more shots than we did," said Michigan coach Steve Fisher, whose first team won the NCAA title in his sixth game at the helm three years ago.

"Fisher looked down the bench, and Voskuil came in there and really got us settled down," Eric Riley, another displaced upper classman.

Voskuil, a forward who started last year, rescued his rattled mates with nine points, all in the second half and on big plays.

He hit a double-pump drive and a free throw to put Michigan ahead 61-58 after it trailed at halftime 41-38. Voskuil later added a big offensive rebound and a 3-pointer to keep the Bearcats (29-5) at bay.

"Those were plays that killed us," Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins lamented.

Fisher said Voskuil changed the "tenor and mindset" of the game, played before a crowd of 50,379.

"We were a little more poised and a little more under control. Plus, we put the rock in," Fisher said.

Voskuil said he was just waiting for an opportunity, as he has all season.

"The biggest adjustment is your mental approach to the game. You have to be consistent, whether you get the minutes or not," Voskuil said. "Before the game, you have to have a mental mindset that you can go in and be part of the game."

WOMEN: Lady Toppers in championship for first time champions, will play No. 15 Western Kentucky (27-7), which withstood the loss of four players to fouls and beat Southwest Missouri State 84-72 in the first semifinal. The championship game tips off Sunday at 3 p.m. CDT.

Dougherty's free throw gave Stanford the lead after Dawn Staley's basket had tied it with 56 seconds left. Kate Paye went to the line with seven seconds remaining but missed the front end of a 1-and-1. Virginia's Melanee Wagener came up with the loose ball and called for a timeout.

One official signaled the game was over and Stanford players streamed onto the floor in celebration. But the other official noticed the timeout call and called the teams back to replay the last eight-tenths of a second. It mattered little, however, as Staley was unable to get off a shot before the buzzer.

Virginia led 59-54 after two free throws by Smith with 4:26 remaining. The Cardinal got the next five points, tying it 59-59 with 3:28 to play on Val Whiting's putback of Molly Goodenbour's free throw miss.

The teams traded baskets before Stanford went ahead 65-63 with 1:42 left on Whiting's free throws. It was the Cardinal's first lead since 4-2.

Whiting scored 28 points, many coming inside against Virginia's 6-foot-5 twins, Heather and Heidi Burge, both of whom fouled out. Whiting made 10 of 12 free throws.

Goodenbour added 16 points for the Cardinal. The Cavaliers (32-2) were led by Staley's 19 points and Heather Burge had 10.

Leading 29-27 at halftime, Virginia increased its lead to 46-38 on a jumper by Dena Evans with 11:28 to play.

Goodenbour hit consecutive 3-pointers to make it 53-50 with 7:01 to play.

The teams last met in the semifinals of the 1990 Final Four, with Stanford winning 75-66 on the way to taking the national title.

No. 16 Western Kentucky 84, No. 10 SW Missouri St. 72

LOS ANGELES — Kim Pehlke scored 22 of her career-high 30 points in the second half, including 11 free throws, to lead Western Kentucky into the NCAA finals for the first time ever with a victory over Southwest Missouri State.

Coach Paul Sanderford led Western Kentucky into the Final Four in 1985 and '86, but the Lady Toppers lost both times.

Pehlke, who also had five steals in the game, was 11-13 from the free throw line in the second half.

Her free throws kept the Lady Toppers (27-7), who led 33-25 at halftime, in the game after four of her teammates fouled out.

Liesa Lang fouled out in the second half with 10:10 remaining with nine points for Western Kentucky.

Tina Robbins led Southwest Missouri State (31-3) with 22 points and Tonya Baucom added 17.

The loss ended Southwest Missouri State's winning streak at 21 games.

Western Kentucky went on a 11-3 run in which Pehlke scored seven points to give the Lady Toppers their biggest lead, 52-34, with 13:39 remaining.

Southwest scored 11 unanswered points to cut the lead to seven with 10:10 remaining.

But free throws kept the Lady Toppers, who made 81 percent from the line in the second half after hitting only 3 of 6 in the first, ahead and the Lady Bears got no closer than six points, 56-50, with 7:36 remaining.

MHS: Bulldogs idle Tuesday

on a solo home run to left. MHS scored its only other run in the bottom of the fifth, as Jimmy Stanton drove Justin Duffield home after Duffield reached on an error.

The Cougars added a pair of insurance runs in the sixth, as pitcher Jimmy Frush swatted a two-run single up the middle.

Both pitchers went the distance in the game, as Frush moved to 5-0 for the season while Rounding fell to 2-5.

Frush gave up one earned run while walking two and striking out four MHS batters. Rounding walked seven, threw three wild pitches and hit one batter.

"I though we got a real solid game out of Jimmy Frush, and we were pretty patient at the plate and got some two-out hits," said Cooper head coach Lee Driggers.

"I though we played real well. Their pitcher did a good job of mixing up his pitches, but we got some timely hits."

The Bulldogs will take their first-half open date Tuesday, then resume 4-5A play Saturday when they meet Lee at 2 p.m. on Johnson Field.

Lee dips to under .500 with loss to War Eagles

Staff Report

ABILENE — The Midland Lee Rebels saw their District 4-5A baseball record fall to 2-3 here Saturday, as the Abilene High Eagles defeated them 7-3.

Lee, 8-8 overall, fell to fifth place in the district standings with one round remaining in the first half, while the Eagles (3-2, 9-10) pulled into a second-place tie with Odessa Permian, which lost 5-1 at San Angelo Saturday.

The Rebels were ahead 3-1 in the third inning, but a pair of throwing errors allowed two runs to score and Brian Tolentino hit a bases-loaded double in the fourth to put AHS ahead for good.

Lee starter Jimmy Patton took the loss to send his record to 2-2, as he walked seven Eagle batters while striking out six. Eric Montelongo picked up the win for AHS, moving his season record to 5-3.

The Rebels return to action Tuesday, when they host San Angelo in a 4 p.m. game at Johnson Field.

Alcott closer to LPGA Hall

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Amy Alcott conquered whipping winds and difficult greens Saturday to move to the doorstep of the LPGA Hall of Fame.

Alcott shot a 2-under-par 70 to barge into a share of the lead in the Las Vegas International tournament. Alcott, who shares the lead at 3-under 141 with first-round co-leader Florence Descampe, Jane Geddes and Dana Lofland, will become eligible for the LPGA Hall with a victory Sunday in the $450,000 tournament.

"I played well. I feel good about my game right now," Alcott said.

NBA Roundup

HOUSTON — Vernon Maxwell scored 24 points and Hakeem Olajuwon scored 22 points and had 11 rebounds, leading the Houston Rockets to a 110-101 victory over the Orlando Magic Saturday night.

The Rockets won their second straight game after ending a six-game losing streak. After trailing 2-0 to start the game, the Rockets took the lead on a basket and a 3-point basket by Maxwell and never trailed again.

76ers 126, Hawks 121

ATLANTA — Ron Anderson scored a season-high 27 points to spark the Philadelphia 76ers to a victory over the Atlanta Hawks.

The 76ers moved within two games of the New Jersey Nets, who hold the eighth and final playoff spot in the NBA's Eastern Conference. The Hawks (35-40) maintained the seventh spot in the standings.

Philadelphia, which has won four of the last five games against the Hawks, ended a seven-game losing streak on the road. The game marked Atlanta's fourth loss in a row.

Hornets 118, Bullets 109

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Kenny Gattison scored 23 points and Johnny Newman, back in the lineup after missing 17 games with a broken finger, had 20 as the Charlotte Hornets defeated the Washington Bullets.

Larry Johnson and Dell Curry each scored 16 points for the Hornets, who shot 54 percent from the field compared to the Bullets' 43 percent.

Lake Ivie pipeline fulfills a dream

Now that the contract has been awarded for construction of a 156.3-mile water pipeline from Lake Ivie near Ballinger to Midland, by way of San Angelo, the dream of drought-choked West Texans for another water link to the Colorado River watershed appears nearly fulfilled.

The realization of that dream has taken two decades, but the planners, city officials and residents of West Texas have kept the goal alive. They were well aware of the importance of this water source.

It was the vision of men like O.H. Ivie, the general manager of the Colorado River Municipal Water District (CRMWD) for whom the lake is named, that made the project worthy of pursuit in the first place. But during a meeting of the CRMWD board Thursday at Odessa Country Club, it was evident that it was a West Texas project. Mayors and city managers from a host of cities scattered throughout West Texas were on hand and obviously excited about the prospects that their cities will be receiving water from Lake Ivie within two years.

That prospect is indeed exciting. Perhaps to residents of regions with wetter climates, even the thought of piping water across 156 miles of dry terrain might approach the ludicrous. But to a land that has seen communities in past years literally "dry up and blow away" for lack of rainfall, the prospect of an ample and affordable supply of water is literally a dream come true.

West Texans have a long history of making their dreams come true. CRMWD President John Taylor noted as much when he said that West Texas has always come up with an individual who can accomplish what others cannot. That person in this instance was O.H. Ivie.

That fact was evident when the contract was let on the Lake Ivie pipeline.

Early voting to begin in run-off election

Early voting begins Monday for the April 14th run-off election in Midland County. It promises to be an interesting election, as voters will be choosing a judge for the 142nd Judicial District and a county commissioner for Precinct 1.

The district judge's race pits two qualified and effective attorneys — Robin Malone Sams, an assistant to District Attorney Al Schorre, and George D. "Jody" Gilles. Both are community-minded, aggressive and effective lawyers. Both are well versed in the law and would be capable jurists. Our choice, however, is Robin Malone Sams.

She has exhibited her concern for the public well-being by actively prosecuting criminals, including numerous individuals charged with drug offenses. Ms. Sams is dedicated, competent and committed. Voters should cast their ballots for her.

Meanwhile, residents of Precinct 1 will be choosing a county commissioner. Longtime Commissioner Durward Wright and self-employed businessman Henry Goulet were the two top vote-getters of in the three-man primary race.

Durward Wright has served as commissioner in Precinct 1 for 23 years and during that time has been effective and a stabilizing force on the court. Although the public mood now favors term limits, we believe there's still a valid argument for keeping in office those public servants who honestly and effectively serve the public's interests.

Wright should be elected for another term.

Bookstore bans 'Hill Rat'

The House bank, the House barber shop and the House cafeteria have all taken a beating as public attention focuses on the House perks.

Now the House bookstore has joined the act by banning "Hill Rat," by John Jackley, the former press aide to U.S. Rep. Ronald Coleman, D-El Paso.

Jackley wrote about the arrogance of the House leadership and some powerful senators as well in disregarding the public trust.

"Hill Rat" won't go on sale until May 6, but the House bookstore already has decided not to sell it.

The store's management must have felt there would be no market for such a book, since House members and employees are so familiar with the activities "Hill Rat" describes.

Mauro's calls shake confidence

It doesn't quite qualify to be called Garrygate, but it was still disturbing to hear that Land Commissioner Garry Mauro made more than 200 telephone calls from his state office to the presidential campaign headquarters for Gov. Bill Clinton.

Mauro labeled the calls inadvertent and stupid. That's a start. They also are improper, unethical and possibly illegal. Mauro said he has paid the state back for any expenses it may have incurred. It may not be Garrygate, but coming on the heels of Rubbergate and other scandalous activities by elected officials, Mauro's actions did little to boost public confidence in government.

Bush picks fight over pork-barrel projects

WASHINGTON — George Bush does not need to summon a Willie Horton in this election campaign. The political ad that wins votes in 1992 is more likely to be a takeoff on the pre-dawn hog prices on Midwestern radio — a litany of how the Democratically controlled Congress has squandered precious tax dollars on pork-barrel projects.

Anderson

This is worse than the Pentagon's $600 toilet seat. It is the $200,000 Vidalia onion project, the $100,000 blackbird preservation project, the $100,000 mechanical tomato harvester project, the $100,000 for swine disease research. In each congressional district, the tax money of the many has been spent on the needs of a few to satisfy the re-election lust of one.

President Bush has a list of 1,391 such pork-barrel projects that he intends to ask Congress to cancel one by one. Since Congress won't give Bush the line-item veto to excise pork projects before they are funded, his next tool is "rescission," or asking Congress to go back and rescind individual appropriations.

When Bush proposes a list of cuts that includes $100,000 for swine disease research, the clear message to Democrats is that pork-barrel projects will not stand. (Never mind that the swine project belonged to a Republican, Rep. Vin Weber of Minnesota.)

Since 1974, presidents have sent Congress 947 proposals for spending cuts adding up to $63.5 billion. Congress has agreed in 675 cases, with some adjustments. But seldom has a president used rescission as a campaign sledgehammer. Last month Bush sent his first 68 proposed cuts to Congress. They are worth $3.6 billion and range in size from $39,000 to $20 million. The word is, Bush will keep pelting Congress with requests for cuts until the lawmakers have been forced to vote on the entire list of 1,391.

"The longer (the list) the better for Bush," explained one Democratic Senate insider. "They're looking for metaphors for problems rather than root causes. They have 68 little Willie Hortons they've trooped up there — economic Willie Hortons."

Bush has picked this fight, but he may not be able to finish it. Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., who worked as a butcher in his youth, is about to carve a roast out of the Republicans' hide. As early as this week he may begin a counter-attack in the pork battle that some on Capitol Hill are calling "mutually assured destruction."

As soon as the White House unveiled its proposed cuts, Byrd, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, convened a meeting of his subcommittee chairmen to formulate a battle plan.

He is considering slicing the fat out of the White House budget — including sub-Cabinet level limo service and executive branch jet-setting. And, there are a slew of projects on the rescission list that are important to Republicans.

Senate insiders are not looking forward to the scene ahead — Byrd, on the Senate floor with a tally sheet of pork-barrel projects that his fellow senators want, forcing them to take "do-or-die" votes.

The pain will spread across party lines. But in sending his pork list to Congress with projects near and dear to both Republicans and Democrats, Bush has shown he isn't above chopping off his own coattails to eliminate the drag.

RUSSELL BAKER

America's VCRs take public as prisoners

I saw 42 movies in 1991, only eight of them in movie theaters. The others were seen at home, where Americans see most movies these days. We'll lament this sadness another day. Today we deal with post-Oscar tristesse.

Baker

That's the remorse experienced when, having sat up all night watching the Academy Awards, people wake next morning realizing they hadn't seen half the movies in the competition, hadn't heard of most of the actors, can't remember who won a single Oscar last year and don't give a hoot who won last night.

To counteract this letdown I review my own moviegoing year and pass judgment on movies I have at least taken the trouble to watch. And so, from my 1991 list I immediately strike off three on grounds of unforgivable silliness.

Silliest of all was "Green Card," which rested on the nutty proposition that being deported to Paris is a tragedy. Then "Henry and June," based on the lives of the writers Henry Miller and Anais Nin. This was about people already in Paris and made it amply clear why any healthy American boy would give his Eagle badges to get deported thereto.

"Cape Fear" had that silly ending up with which I am getting tired of having to put. This is the killing of a human monster who won't stay dead. Glenn Close recently played it in "Fatal Attraction." Robert DeNiro does it again in "Cape Fear." Hollywood should save it for "The Death of Rasputin."

Year's most annoying movie: "Doc Hollywood." Aside from being silly all over it was based on that patronizing Southern California idea that while small-town Southerners may look at first glance like nasty hicks, they are, deep down underneath, the salt of the earth.

Hear this, kid script writers of Los Angeles: Small-town Southerners are just like small-town people everywhere; to wit, reasonably civilized, but watch your wallet.

Worst movie of the year: "Home Alone." My records also list something called "Mortal Thoughts," after which appears the entry "Stinker," a word last applied in these files to "Dr. Fisher of Vienna" in April 1987. I remember nothing about either film.

Movies that might have been better if they hadn't been oversold by reviewers, friends or relatives: "Metropolitan," "The Crays."

Movies that may have been terrific only because I discovered them all by myself: "Mr. and Mrs. Bridge," "Soapdish," "Impromptu," "Mama, There's A Man in Your Bed."

Best Christmas movie since George C. Scott played Scrooge on CBS, even though a close relative insisted I'd love it: Jean Shepherd's "A Christmas Story."

Best performances in otherwise just OK flicks: Jack Nicholson in "The Last Detail," Linda Hunt in "The Year of Living Dangerously," John Malkovich in "Object of Beauty," Jeff Bridges in "The Fisher King," Anjelica Huston in "The Grifters."

Of the 42 movies judged, eight were films I'd seen before. They were "Moonstruck," "Hairspray," "Bolero," "Kind Hearts and Coronets," "Lawrence of Arabia," "Top Hat," "The Adventures of Robin Hood" (Errol Flynn) and "The Prisoner of Zenda" with Ronald Colman.

Except for "Bolero" and "Top Hat," all were worthy of Best of the Year Award. ("Bolero" is strictly for us George Raft fanatics and, despite Fred Astaire, "Top Hat" is just lovely fluff.) "Moonstruck" would have won (even though I'd crowned it when it was first released) if good luck hadn't guided me to Ronald Colman's "Zenda" at the video-rental den.

It is superb. Raymond Massey as sneering "Black Michael." Douglas Fairbanks Jr. as the most dashing Rupert of Hentzau ever to dash in Ruritania. Two stunning beauties in peril: blonde Madeleine Carroll, brunette Mary Astor. C. Aubrey Smith doing his famous C. Aubrey Smith number. And two — not one, but two — Ronald Colmans!

Castles with moats, swordplay, kidnapping. Makes you ashamed we now think "Terminator 2" is good fun.

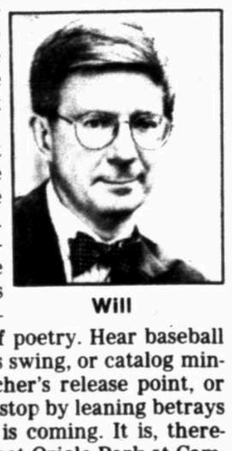
Designers of Oriole Park knock a home run

BALTIMORE — Recreation, as Bart Giamatti liked to say, is re-creation, an attempt to renew ourselves according to some standard, to make a vision palpable. Thus, paradoxically, recreation implies both leisure and what Giamatti called "a rage to get it right." The people responsible for the Orioles' new ballpark did.



Will

It was an architect who said God is in the details. Could have been a baseball person. "Baseball people," Giamatti said, "have the keenest eyes for details I have ever known" — this from a professor of poetry. Hear baseball people dissect a batter's swing, or catalog minute variations in a pitcher's release point, or deplore the way a shortstop by leaning betrays the kind of pitch that is coming. It is, therefore, splendidly right that Oriole Park at Camden Yards sets a new standard for detailed excellence.

Three related reasons why the park is receiving standing ovations from critics are its urban setting, its asymmetry and its intimacy. All these suit it to the ceremony of sport and especially to baseball.

The park speaks well of Maryland's governor William Donald Schaefer, who again has provided proof that government can do things right. One of the primary shapers of the park is Orioles owner Eli Jacobs, a carrier of the torch of baseball traditionalism. His tastes were shaped by quirky parks shoehorned into city neighborhoods — Brooklyn's Ebbets Field and Boston's Fenway Park. Another shaper is Orioles President Larry Lucchino, a baseball purist who hired a kindred spirit, Janet Marie Smith, 34.

Like Will Clark, Smith is one of Mississippi State University's great gifts to the national game. This willowy dynamo is an urban design specialist (she worked on development of New York's Battery Park City and Los Angeles' Pershing Square) who knit the new park into the fabric of this old city.

Baseball is, as Giamatti said, "strenuously nostalgic," but not for a pastoral past. Baseball's codification occurred not in farmer Phinney's pasture near Cooperstown but in a Manhattan meadow where in 1845 Alexander Cartwright — baseball's James Madison; its greatest constitutionalist — laid out a diamond with the bases 90 feet apart. Western philosophy is a series of footnotes to Plato, and baseball's evolution has been but footnotes to Cartwright.

The foul lines in Oriole Park are different lengths, the outfield wall is 25 feet high in one stretch, seven feet elsewhere. Good. Baseball has blithe disregard not only for the dictates of clocks but also for numerical or spatial symmetries. Even baseball's numbers are odd — three strikes and you're out, five ball-and-strike calls make a full count, nine players to a side, nine innings to a game, get 27 outs and you can go home — unless there is then the impermissible symmetry of a tie.

Bradd Shore, an anthropologist, notes baseball's social asymmetry: One team never confronts the other. Nine defenders confront one batter and at most three baserunners at a time. So Oriole Park, with eight angles in its outfield wall, is a suitable frame for an asymmetrical game.

Giamatti, who rose from Yale's presidency to the splendor of Baseball Commissioner, said that we associate leisure with happiness, and leisure at a sporting event with a shared absence of care. Giamatti hinted ballparks can be intimations, or echoes or remnants, of paradise.

A ballpark can be an active ingredient in transforming a crowd — a mere aggregation — into a community. A sporting event can be a moment of harmony, and a ballpark can be a setting for surcease from the competitive strivings of urban life. In an age when religious ceremonies are decreasingly central to most lives, and in a republic in which civic rituals are purposely few and spare, sport can satisfy a yearning for ceremony. Baltimore's jewel of a ballpark is worthy of such yearnings.

It already has been the scene of one small ceremony. Late one afternoon last August, before the sod was down, at the place where home plate now is, I proposed marriage to the Orioles fan who now is Mrs. Will. Hey, call me romantic, but I wanted Mari to know that in my heart she ranks right up there with baseball.

Resident reads between the lines in newspaper

Not that they don't deserve some, but we have bashed the school board, hospital board, city council, county commissioners, school bus drivers, Okies, Yankees, Bush, and maybe one or two more that I can't think of at this moment. But with all these options there is one more that occurred to me while reading the Saturday, March 21st Midland Reporter-Telegram — you guessed it, the newspaper.

Did you ever stop and take the time to analyze our local "news" paper, at least from the following point of view? It took me only about 10 minutes to go through the "news" part of the March 21st paper, excluding the sports and crossword, and I'm not a speed-reader. It takes my wife at least four times as long because she reads all the ads word for word. I hate coupons; the cashiers hate them — just forget them and reduce prices. Newspapers love them, and those that like to spend their time cutting out paper dolls, etcetera, love them.

To break it down, the March 21 paper contained 32 pages. At 50 cents, that's 1½ cents per page. Ten full pages are solid ads. Eight pages have three-fourths ads per page. Two pages contained half ads per page. If you deduct the sports (seven pages), Window on West Texas (one page), Religion (two pages), you have only five pages of "news," including Oil-Business. Just an observation on the side — excluding the Oil-Business section, the local T.V. stations gave more local news Friday evening and almost as many ads.

The paper only had one article of local news. I guess the reason T.V. doesn't give us the Oil-Business in the evening news is because some of us like to read it "first thing" so we'll know whether to get out of bed or not. My "bottom line" is this: At a rate of 1½ cents per page, give us the news (five pages), Sports, Comics, Crossword, Markets (seven pages), Window on West Texas (one page), and Religion (two pages). A total of 15 pages and charge us 22½ cents per paper. Oh what the heck, make it a quarter and keep the change! As far as the 17 pages of ads, let the ones who benefit the most from them, pay for them (totally). This means the paper and the advertiser.

Sipes, Faircloth voted against parking lot

Last year the Midland City Council voted to buy the parking lot next to Loraine Center. The inference in letters and news releases has been that the council, acting in executive session, was unanimous in approving that purchase. This is not true.

Two councilmen, Buddy Sipes and J.D. Faircloth, opposed purchasing the lot and voted in open session twice against issuing bonds for that purpose.

Citizen offers answer to 'dustbowl' problem

Wishful thinking is not a mature practice in prudent management. Thinking that the plowed areas of the Airpark will grow grass and correct itself before the Texas Air Control Board (TACB) "brings down the gavel" is wishful thinking.

It is neither the mandate nor the responsibility of the TACB or the FAA to fix the situation. Many successful managers believe that the amount of energy and time used to solve a problem is often less than the energy expended to defend a bad decision. In an effort to reverse a negative attitude the purpose of this letter is to propose a solution. The product is MS-1. It mixes with water to solidify or unite the soil preventing airborne dust. MS-1 is manufactured by Fina Petroleum in Big Spring specifically as a soil stabilizer and is distributed by the Elf Company in Lubbock.

Dilution is 10 parts water to one part MS-1. Grass seed can be applied prior to applications of MS-1.

The diluted liquid is spread by an ordinary controlled-spray watering truck. No outside contractor is required; it can be handled by city equipment and personnel.

MS-1 need only be applied to the area that was plowed. It is biodegradable and is acceptable by the state and federal governments as an environmentally-safe product.

One application should be enough to hold the top soil in place until the native grasses return or newly-seeded areas show growth.

MS-1 costs 70 cents per gallon. Cliff Balzer of Fina advises a 10-to-one dilution. The cost would, therefore, be 70 cents per each 11 gallons of fluid. Balzer believes the 10-to-one formula is sufficient to cover 10 square yards of soil. Application of MS-1 to 100 acres would cost less than $1,000 for the diluted product. Balzer can be contacted at 1-800-527-4205, Extension 226.

The entire situation can be concluded before the TACB deadline.

The dust scenes of the Airpark shown on television by Channel 2 were recorded with my video camera, and I will continue to monitor the progress, file complaints with the TACB and the FAA and to challenge the lack of adequate Airpark management.

Hospital not perfect, but aims to care for you

In response to Eleanor Morse's letter of March 17th, not one tax revenue dollar was paid for the purchase of Surgi-Care. All the money generated by property taxes is used 100 percent for the care of Midland County indigents. This amount is equal to only 7 percent of the total annual operating revenues of the hospital that are generated by paying patients and private donations. The actual indigent bill is $9 million so the hospital has to operate to cover the $2 million shortfall. The money used to purchase Surgi-Care came from hospital operating revenues, not the hospital district's property taxes.

Two of the partners in Surgi-Care, Drs. Wiesenfeld and Viney, also are on the board of the Midland County Hospital District. Because of this affiliation, both excused themselves from the board negotiations regarding the purchase. Such negotiations were carried on by a Memorial Hospital staff member and another partner as well as the attorneys.

Surgi-Care is a free-standing out-patient surgical center. Fifty percent of all surgery is now on an out-patient basis, up from 15 percent eight years ago and predicted to increase to 70 percent by the year 2000. Out-patient surgery, when appropriate, is more economical for the patient and the hospital, more convenient for the patient and the surgeon who is now not exposed to emergency interruptions and other delays inherent in more complicated procedures, and it also frees up the hospital suites for these procedures.

The hospital participates in the profitable sides of medical practice to offset losses inherent in providing the vast spectrum of health care for all its constituents. These not only include indigent patients, but also expensive equipment incumbent to a major hospital and its emergency facilities, as well as our Medicare patients. The Medicare shortfall was $24 million last year due to the insufficient level of government reimbursement, a cost the hospital must absorb.

We should all keep in mind that the "hospital" is 1,400 of your friends and neighbors, and a dedicated medical staff providing your county with excellent medical services. It is not perfect, but they are trying their very best to serve you and your family quality medical care in a very difficult climate.

We should all work to unite community

Praise the Lord for His goodness, kindness and love shown to His people in our community. The work the Altrusa Club has done at Windlands Park brings constant joy to my heart.

I remember seeing Lolita Guffy at the age of 80 cleaning her area of the park, Barbara Culver who was an inspiration to so many women when we had the opportunity to meet and my friend, Jane Ramsoure, when we were the first two minorities invited for Altrusa. I remember when Jean Ward first approached me about that area of the park after I was elected to Midland City Council.

Martin Luther King Park is another of my favorites. People faced with a challenge came up with a unique plan, headed by James Bradford, then-Mayor Thane Akins and myself. It fills my heart with joy when I see children playing in their own unique playground and adults walking in the park each day.

I look forward to seeing the development of the Clyde Reyes Park and the Lucy Mashburn Park, both in the city's master plan. I hope the council will bring them to fruition.

The Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and Clean Midland are to be congratulated for the area improvement along Lamesa Road. Elvia Hernandez and the board of directors worked hard to design this beautification project. I hope to drive by within the next year and see it in full bloom. We can look forward to it being a source of community pride.

The people of Midland have the community spirit to get things done and work together to achieve what is best for Midland. Why not put all the money that would be spent in litigation for all single-member districts into our parks, our city and truly show that we have come together as a community of caring people.

Our community needs healing. We have been given a hard blow in the city not accepting the minority representatives we deserve. The Hispanic population in our city is great. We have people with the capacity to make sound judgements and fair decisions. I believe another minority district is needed — one that would not pit Hispanics against our black friends and neighbors.

God bless each one of you and may He guide you to do that which is fair and right. Again, healing and coming together is the Midland spirit. Let's put it to work.

READERS' VIEWS on:

Runoff for 142nd District judge, Precinct 1 commissioner

We all should fight to elect Robin Sams

Any prosecutor, by the nature of their work, creates enemies. For the most part, families of those prosecuted have an enormous dislike for anyone involved in a family member's conviction of a crime.

As citizens, we are aware that Robin Sams will have to overcome that segment of society who will vote against her and who will do so with a vengeance.

Our reason for voting for Robin Sams is quite simple. If she was willing to fight for us and ours, then the least we can do is cast our votes in an effort to offset that segment of society who are voting against her because she did her job.

Research is needed before voting April 14

While reading the letters last Sunday about the judicial race, I had to laugh at the ignorance shown by Thomas Beall and James Blakemore.

It amazes me. All these gentlemen would have to do is pick up the phone, call Jody and ask him the questions. Then, they would have the FACTS!

Common sense should have told him that as a SOLO practioner, Jody has no one to go to court for him. He has to be there (solo — that means there are no other attorneys in his office). He is responsible for all aspects of case preparation.

Before Beall states, "None of his cases are practiced before the 142nd," shouldn't he check with that court? The folks who work at the courthouse are very helpful. He would have learned that Jody not only has cases and has presented cases to the 142nd, but also to every judge and courtroom at the county courthouse, as well as knowledge of the complicated nature of bankruptcy law.

As for Blakemore's statement regarding Jody's representation of "drug dealers," Gilles opts not to pay out of being court appointed to these cases. He believes in our Constitution, that all people are guaranteed the right to have an attorney to represent them, even if they cannot afford one. Would you have this right taken away? However, if some of these cases are plea bargained it must come out of our very own district attorney's office first. The defense attorney cannot initiate the plea bargain. Jody's duty is to do his very best for each of his clients.

George D. "Jody" Gilles IS qualified. He has experience in civil matters. You will not have to train him on civil cases. He has experience on criminal matters. He will not come to the bench with a verdict already in mind. I urge each voter to make an educated decision. Don't take my word for it. Do research of your own. Research both candidates. Then vote on April 14th, but vote with all the facts.

Gilles makes sacrifices for good of community

As the Midland Young Lawyers Association's representative to Midland Teen Court, I am responsible for finding local attorneys to volunteer one to two hours of their time to preside as judge over the court on Monday evenings. I would like to thank the Midland Bar for their willingness to volunteer their time and talents to help this worthwhile program.

I would personally like to thank one Midland lawyer in particular, George D. "Jody" Gilles. A few weeks ago I was slated to judge Teen Court and my voice gave out a few hours before the Monday night court. With only hours' notice, Gilles sacrificed a night of campaigning for the local district judge's race, at the height of the campaign season, to help out his community.

It is truly refreshing to encounter a candidate who has more concern for his community than for his own political career.

Sams' past position shows little diversity

Notwithstanding Robin Sams' implication that crime is the only major problem facing Midlanders, I would suggest that an area of similar concern is federal, state and even county intrusion into Midland's businesses.

As a seven-year government employee, having no experience in private practice or the private sector, I doubt that Ms. Sams has ever experienced the frustration and sometimes hopelessness that most attorneys, including me, have endured when representing just, well meaning but under-financed clients against a governmental agency, whether Texas Railroad, Water Quality, Employment and Alcoholic Beverage Commissions, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and County Taxing Authorities with their unlimited resources of attorneys, investigators and finances. In many cases the only person standing between the federal, state and/or county agency is the judge of the district court.

I do not believe, as I think a majority of the attorneys in Midland do not believe, that an individual trained as an advocate for the government is a better choice over an individual, as Gilles, who has worked on both sides of the docket and has experienced the "steam roller" effect of a governmental agency.

For this reason, do not succumb to Ms. Sams' rehashed "law and order" ploy on people's fear, but vote for Jody Gilles as the person who you would want as judge if you had to defend you or your business against a governmental agency or any other person for that matter.

James R. Leeton Jr.
Midland

Sams would be taking step back for judge role

As a supporter of George D. "Jody" Gilles, I have watched this campaign for 142nd District Court judge with great interest and perhaps a bit of personal bias. I do and will continue to support Gilles throughout his campaign.

I feel he has the broad spectrum of experience which will enable him to interpret and apply the law with the firmness and justice which is required of anyone who is placed in the seat of judgment over others. His even temperament and desire to get all the facts in whatever case he is involved with are, I believe, not just assets to an aspiring judge but required tools of the trade.

However, as I have read and learned more about Mrs. Sams, I have come to realize that the district attorney's office has a real asset of its own. Her record, according to her brochures, is excellent. The trial and conviction rates, the aggressive prosecutions of the criminal factions in Midland County cannot go unnoticed. When someone is that successful enforcing the law and working that hard with such dedication to sweep the streets and highways of Midland County clean of drug dealers, murderers and other criminals, I feel that person is too important to the well being of the county to leave that position for one in which he or she will be limited to interpreting the law as it is presented by prosecuting attorneys, perhaps less able. This would be a step backwards for an able district attorney and a step backwards for Midland County.

I urge you to consider these thoughts and then vote for George D. "Jody" Gilles for judge of the 142nd Judicial District. Let the candidates work as a team to protect Midland County.

Wright proves he can't get things done

County commissioner is an elected position that requires one to be both a good listener and a leader who can get things done under difficult circumstances. Durward Wright, commissioner of Precinct 1, has proven in recent times to be neither.

Case in point, during the recent unfortunate and costly controversy between Sheriff Painter and the Commissioners' Court, Wright's voice was silent. Perhaps if he had been a true leader, rather than one of County Judge "Bro" Seltzer's servants, the situation could have been diffused and saved taxpayer morale and dollars.

Instead, he meekly sat by and let a terrible situation develop. Afterwards, he said that he wanted better cooperation in the future. Or does he?

Now Judge Seltzer, the Earl of Midland, wants to start his own branch of law enforcement in the form of a courthouse security officer. Once again, Wright is silent when he could intercede and ensure that Sheriff Painter is allowed to do his job. 64.2% of the voters in the recent primary expressed satisfaction with the job Sheriff Painter is doing and Wright is not listening.

During the Republican Primary, 61.2% of the voters decided not to re-elect Wright. The task now is to ensure that the mandate is carried out. I urge you take time out of your busy schedule and return to the polls on April 14th and cast your vote for Henry Goulet and for the future of Midland County.

Randy Auburg
Midland

Voters should elect Goulet as watchdog

On Tuesday, March 10th, the citizens of Midland County issued the following mandates to County Judge Charles Seltzer and the "yes-man" Commissioners' Court.

- 64.2 percent said stop meddling in Sheriff Gary Painter's business and allow him to do the job he was elected to do.
- 70.2 percent said Tax Assessor-Collector-elect Kathy Reeves is to operate the tax office in accordance with the Texas Constitution.
- 61.2 percent voted for a new commissioner for Precinct 1.

However, this mandate apparently did not penetrate as the judge and commissioners are now in the process of adding yet another tax burden by establishing their own courthouse security force, a duty prescribed by law to the duly-elected sheriff.

The commissioners court has failed to reinstate the budget, so the tax assessor-collector can operate according to the Texas Constitution.

Lastly, the incumbent county commissioner from Precinct 1 has continued to ignore the voice of the people and say, "Yes, judge, whatever you want."

The voters in Precinct 1 can do all of Midland County a big service on Tuesday, April 14, by electing Henry E. Goulet in the primary runoff election as Precinct 1 commissioner to ensure a watchdog on the court to report future waste and undesirable practices to the taxpayer.

Elliott seeks record-tying win today at Bristol stop

Associated Press

NASCAR

BRISTOL, Tenn. — Bill Elliott will be trying for a record-tying fifth consecutive NASCAR victory Sunday at Bristol International Raceway, but he'll have to try from the 11th position.

Elliott has had one pole this season and three second-place starts, including Daytona, the only race he has lost this season. He started fourth in Atlanta.

Alan Kulwicki, who set a track qualifying record, has the pole position for the Food City on the .533 mile oval.

Brett Bodine has the outside pole. Rusty Wallace is third and Dale Jarrett is fourth.

"We'll give it our best shot and see what happens," Elliott said.

The pressure of tying the record set by NASCAR greats Richard Petty and Bobby Allison hasn't affected Elliott.

"Honestly it doesn't bother me," Elliott said. "We take the wins while we can, enjoy them, then go on to the next race."

Of Elliott's 38 career victories, all but two have been on superspeedways. His boss, Junior Johnson, has won at Bristol 21 times, 13 more times than any other owner.

In the points race, Elliott is second with 817 points to Davey Allison's 865. Allison won the Daytona 500 and has posted four top-five finishes. Elliott crashed at Daytona and ended up 27th.

Kulwicki won last fall's race at Bristol and will be trying to make it two in a row at the banked oval.

Mancini loses, then retires

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Greg Haugen's right hand pounded Ray Mancini into retirement Friday night by putting the former champion on the canvas moments before the referee stopped the fight.

"I didn't like the way his eyes focused. I didn't like the way his legs looked. I said, 'No, son. that's enough,'" referee Mills Lane said after halting the bout with 33 seconds remaining in the seventh round.

Mancini agreed that the fight and his career were over with a final record of 29-5. He said he would return to his home in Youngstown, Ohio, for some consolation from his family, then resume his fledgling acting career.

"I hope nobody's silly enough to ask me if this is it, because, yes, it is," he said. "I wanted to be one of the few, but instead I'm one of the many."

Haugen, 30-4-1, praised Mancini while holding the door open for one final world title fight.

"I think I proved I'm one of the best fighters out there. I'm ready to take on anybody," he said.

MC: Chaparrals in finals today

(From 1C)

The No. 1 ranked Lady Chaps, semifinal winners on Friday, posted a 5-0 quarterfinal win over Tyler Saturday and will meet either Cooke County or Odessa College at 8 a.m. today for the women's team title. It's an early match considering the clocks move forward an hour early this morning with the advent of Daylight Savings Time. But the two Chaparral contingents wasted little time getting their jobs done Saturday.

The tournament format calls for a match to end once a team gets ahead by five decisions. Therefore, neither MC team needed to delve into its doubles ranks to reach the finals.

That left MC's No. 1 men's singles player, David Draper, out of both the semis and quarters as Chaparral tennis coach Joe Williams juggled his lineup and had the nation's No. 2 ranked junior college player waiting in the wings to anchor the No. 1 doubles team should the need arise.

It never did.

But Williams' juggling set up a revenge match for Chap newcomer Cyril Buscaglione, who joined MC at the midterm break. Buscaglione made good on the opportunity, breezing through NMMI's Yann Auzoux, the No. 3 ranked JUCO singles player, who had edged both Buscaglione and Draper in a pair of previous meetings this season.

"I played this guy (Auzoux) two months ago on indoor courts and I lost 6-4 in the third set," Buscaglione said. "And a couple of weeks ago David (Draper) got a shot at him and lost a tough match. So when we found out we were going to play New Mexico Military today Coach (Williams) said I could have revenge against this guy.

"He's gotten some good wins against some good players, but I think he's up and down. And I think I played pretty well. I beat him pretty easily.

"I was expecting to play No. 2 singles," Buscaglione said. "Playing in the No. 1 spot you always get good matches and it's nice to do sometimes."

It was not that nice for Auzoux, who fell prey to Buscaglione's towering serves and sweeping baseline play.

Abilene's Standly jumps 26 spots at McMoRan

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Moving day found Jeff Maggert and Mike Standly in new neighborhoods and Chip Beck in all-too-familiar surroundings.

The pros call Saturdays "moving day" — make the cut on Friday, then move into position to make a run for the victory.

Maggert shot a 67 Saturday to surge into a two-stroke lead at 204 going into Sunday's final round of the $1 million Freeport McMoRan Golf Classic.

Beck, who had a four-stroke lead going into Saturday, shot a 74 and wound up two strokes behind Maggert at 206.

A week ago, at The Players Championship, Beck shot 81 on Saturday and took himself out of contention.

"I didn't really throw myself out today. I just made it a golf tournament," Beck said. "A day like today, just because I hung in there so good, I feel good about tomorrow."

Brad Bryant fell from second to third with a round of 71, giving him a 54-hole total of 207.

Standly was tied for 30th with six others at 142 after two rounds, then shot a 66, best round of the day, to move into a six-way tie for fourth.

Maggert's best tournament since turning pro in 1986 was a fourth-place finish at Milwaukee last year. Standly also turned pro in 1986, and his best finish was a tie for 18th at Phoenix last year.

Greg Norman was in the group tied at 208 with Standly.

Norman shot 38 over his first nine holes, then caught fire and had a 32 over the final nine holes.

Norman is playing himself back into shape after knee surgery.

"I feel great. I'm hitting the ball solid. I have a lot of composure about myself," Norman said. "My barometer's starting to go up."

Although he denied on Friday that he was thinking about the Masters next week, he volunteered Saturday that the 7,116-yard course at English Turn is a perfect tuneup for golf's prestigious event.

Trevino captures Tradition lead

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Lee Trevino, thriving on a Jack Nicklaus-designed course he claims was tailored for Nicklaus' lofty game, took charge of The Tradition on Saturday with a 4-under-par 68.

Trevino finished three rounds at 204, a 54-hole record on the 6,864-yard Cochise Course at Desert Mountain, and holding a two-shot lead over Nicklaus and Chi Chi Rodriguez.

Rodriguez, Trevino's playing partner, was the halfway leader, but just broke par with a 71 after a finishing with eight consecutive pars.

Nicklaus had a 69 on Saturday, rebounding from a 72 a day earlier.

Homero Blancas and J.C. Snead were three shots back at 207, Tommy Aaron and Dick Stockton were at 208, with Bruce Devlin and Jim Albus at 209.

Jim Ferree, Miller Barber, Jimmy Powell and Mike Hill were bunched at 210, six shots behind Trevino.

Ferree won the 54-hole Grand Tradition, a first-year sidelight of the main tournament for players 60 and older, in a playoff with Barber.

Consumers question TU's voltage levels

■ Voltage levels are within state agency standards, Texas Utilities says.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

A number of Midland electric consumers contend their power bills are too high because the power company's voltage is higher than it needs to be.

Not so, say Midland representatives of Texas Utilities Electric Co.

TU's standard voltage is 120 volts as set by the Texas Public Utility Commission (PUC). Ideally, 120 volts is the target, but TU aims for higher voltage out of its substations to assure adequate voltage throughout its lines.

"Electricity flowing through the line is kind of like water flowing through the pipe," said Jerry Lockhart, TU's Midland district manager. "The further down the line, your voltage drops. That's just a phenomenon of delivering the electricity."

And voltage drop in the line is the reason for TU's decision to run its voltage high — about 125 volts — at the inputy end of the line. That's to ensure that the customers at the end of the company's substation lines have enough voltage — 115 or 117 volts — to operate equipment and get the desired brightness from light bulbs.

Some TU customers, including Midland's Midge Erskine, claim incoming voltage that is higher than the nameplate voltage on a motor or the volt rating on a light bulb costs the consumer money.

"They (TU) are forcing us to take energy we don't need or want," Ms. Erskine said, "and it's running the bill up 20 to 30 percent per month plus the cost of all the blown-out bulbs."

Her contention is that TU purposefully is raising the voltage to the upper end of the legal limit to increase its profits.

"There's no conspiracy, and there's no agenda at all with TU Electric to run voltage high to try to increase the consumption on the customers' meters," Lockhart said.

The PUC allows utilities to maintain voltage at plus or minus 5 percent of the standard.

"In the first place," Lockhart said, "I think the PUC would take a dim view of any utility that was trying to gouge customers by doing some kind of voltage manipulation. From management's standpoint, there's no effort on our part to hold voltage up in an effort to try to increase customers' bills."

Tom Lawrence, a 60-year-old Midland electrician who operates a water-well service, disagreed.

Further, he contends that the incoming voltage higher than the voltage printed the nameplate will damage the motor.

"It's definitely going to shorten the life span of the motor," Lawrence said, "and it's going to cost you more to operate the motor. It's to the power company's benefit. It certainly is not to the customers' benefit."

The higher voltage causes a motor to use more current, makes it "work harder," and creates "more heat," causing the motor to burn out sooner by creating a short in the motor's coil, he said.

Lawrence claimed that the kilowatt-hour meter "is running about 20 percent faster than it should because of the high voltage" and is costing the customer that much more money to operate the motor.

The higher voltage benefits his busi-

'Just Say No' family fair draws hundreds

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Kids of all ages spent Saturday tossing bean bags, throwing footballs, jousting and munching popcorn — all in the name of drug education.

"It's getting the message out," said eighth-grade Goddard cheerleader Andrea Neal. She joined hundreds of local students, parents and educators at Pappagallo's "Just Say No" Family Fun Fair.

"It means a lot," said Andy Maier, a Goddard seventh-grader playing tic-tac-toe. "People can really relate to 'Just say no.' It's just something easy you can say, like 'no thanks' if someone tries to give you drugs."

Bob Rimal, president of Anson Jones PTA, manned his school's booth, where kids, looking for prizes, plucked pencils from a bale of hay.

"This is great for the younger kids especially," Rimal said. "Anything we can do to get the message across, we want to do. With this, we're showing there are ways of having a good time without doing drugs."

Indeed, the kids tossing rolls of toilet paper several feet into a corner commode seemed to be having fun. So did those tossing rings toward the horns of a huge elk's head.

Amy Hicks staffed her Alamo Junior High science class' booth, soliciting money for the Costa Rican rain forest.

"You'd be surprised, even the little ones have heard not do to drugs, through their teachers," she said. Across the Claydesta Atrium, the young members of a school choir were singing about their choice for a drug-free life.

Bands, singers and performers saluted the message, joined by law enforcement personnel, firefighters and members of D-FY-IT and DARE — drug-free groups for students.

"We're going to show Midland that we want drugs off our streets," said John Joiner, president of Pease Elementary PTA. He called the fair "fantastic."

"We're going to say to the world that Midland says no to drugs," Joiner said.

Midland Lee sophomore Carolyn Bryant, manning a basketball and football booth, said Saturday's event had an important difference than most anti-drug message.

"This shows there are other things to do, other ways to have fun, besides doing drugs," she said. "You can sing, play sports, lots of things. We've got the older kids here showing the younger kids."

But even with all the help, a local ninth-grader said the final decision is up to the kids themselves.

"I know taking drugs is stupid," said Robby Phillips. "I don't want to screw up my life. But it depends on what group you hang around with — some people don't listen to that."

City evaluates greater training

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

It may be time for a new slogan at City Hall.

City leaders are looking into expanding a training program for supervisors — hoped to eventually change the organization's mission. Developed by Arco Oil & Gas Co., the course promotes leadership and listening, teamwork and self-esteem.

Ken Thompson, senior vice president of Arco's western district, said his company's training is a new way of motivating employees. Using feedback from workers, the course was designed by Thompson and Dale Dunn, manager of human resources for the company.

"The world has changed dramatically," Thompson said. "The people you're hiring right now do not respond to the management styles of the '60s, '70s and '80s." He said their program is designed for the needs of a 1990s workforce.

Dunn said a large part of the course redefines old concepts like "success."

"An individual with a positive attitude and high self-esteem can be very successful," he said. "We've found a successful person is one who achieves a balance between work and family."

Already about 70 city employees — department and division heads — have finished Arco supervisory training. If the council approves, management would like to add 125 more. Arco provides the course free to the city.

But, if leaders dump the old supervisory style, the city's slogan may have to go as well, Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said. Now in eight wordy parts, the city's "statement of organizational philosophy" is posted between the elevators on the first floor.

Employees need to know what the city's mission is — an idea best expressed in a short, clear slogan, McGregor said.

"We need to change it so that someone in the field in a pickup truck can know what they're trying to do," he said.

Within a few weeks the council is expected to decide if they want to use more Arco training.

GARY OTT

Football injury comes in handy in wee hours of morning

I glanced over my shoulder at the big clock on the wall before flipping off the office lights.

It was 1:25 a.m.

In the words of newspaper people, we had just "put the paper to bed." Now it was time to go home. Those of us who had remained behind to check the early edition as it rolled off the press exchanged our final farewells and headed for our cars.

Ott

One by one, people climbed in, started their engines and slowly faded into the night's darkness. It was peaceful, though a lone siren could be heard faintly in the distance. As I approached my car in the parking lot, I noticed an old man walking down the street. He was wearing a tattered overcoat, and for a fleeting moment I contemplated his life story.

I felt good. A day's work had been completed and now I was free to entertain myself as I wished.

The plan was simple: I would go home, have two club sodas with lime, watch an old movie on TV, nibble at a light dinner and be safely tucked away under the sheets by no later than 3 a.m.

Sometimes the simple life is the best life.

It was with that frame of mind that I got into my car and prepared for the short drive home. With no traffic, we're talking five minutes, tops.

I slammed the door shut, fastened my seatbelt, toyed with the radio, glanced at the mirror and started the ignition.

It purred like a kitten.

Slipping the car into reverse, I looked over my right shoulder and slowly eased backwards.

Ka-thump. Ka-thump.

What the . . . ? A sick feeling began to creep through my body as I looked around for someone who could explain this strange noise to me.

Realizing I was alone, I slipped the car into drive and slowly moved it forward.

Ka-thump. Ka-thump.

"Why me, Lord?" It is a question I pose often, usually with my eyes cast in an upward direction. There is never an answer.

A quick check of the vehicle confirmed my worst fears.

Right rear tire. Flatter than a pancake.

One more time, with feeling. "Why me, Lord?"

There are certain things I don't do. Changing flat tires is one of them. That's why God created mechanics and other people who don't mind getting grease under their fingernails.

As for me, I stand on the sidelines and occasionally offer words of support.

Unfortunately, at 1:30 in the morning mechanics are few and far between. So are people with dirty fingernails. Even the old man in the ragged coat had disappeared.

During daylight hours, when people are milling about, it is relatively easy to get assistance. You merely stand next to your car and look helpless. Sometimes it is effective to walk with a limp, as if to say, "I've just been injured and now this!" If you can rent a couple of snotty-nosed children to gaze up at you and cry, that's even better.

No one, not even life's most hardened redneck, can turn the other way when confronted with a helpless-looking crippled man with crying children.

Someone will stop and help. I guarantee it.

But at 1:30 in the morning? It is every man for himself.

I immediately weighed my options.

No. 1. I could change the flat myself. Surely, you jest.

No. 2. I could weep loudly in hopes someone would hear me. Possible, but let's examine our other choices first.

No. 3. I could walk home. Yeah, you're right. I'm losing my mind.

No. 4. I could beg for help. Now, we're getting somewhere.

First priority? Finding someone to beg.

Sometimes the Lord takes pity on the those in need. He looks down from heaven and says, "This poor man requires my help."

Ed Todd, a fellow newspaperman, wandered by. God does indeed work in mysterious ways.

"Ed!" I exclaimed. "Help."

He did. Within minutes he had jacked up my car, removed the tire, put the spare on and lowered the car.

I, having convinced him my back was acting up, had been limited to performing flashlight duties.

"It's that darn football injury," I explained, adding just the proper amount of pain to my voice.

"No problem," he replied, brushing sweat away from his brow. "Happy to help."

As he walked away, he cleaned the grease from beneath his fingernails.

Better him than me.

POWER: TU's volt level in question

ness, which includes replacing burned-out motors, he said.

Manufacturers of electric motors are required to design their alternating-current motors to "operate successfully under running conditions at rated load" within 10 percent above or below the nameplate voltage, according to the Washington, D.C.-based National Electrical Manufacturers Association (NEMA).

While citing the 10-percent tolerance, Lawrence noted that motors are designed to operate most efficiently at the nameplate rated voltage.

"They (TU customers) are not going to have to pay a higher bill on a (115-or a 120-volt) motor if you put 125 volts on it," TU electrical engineer Kenzel May said. "That's not going to cause the bill to go up."

When motors are running at a voltage lower than the nameplate voltage, the motors "are going to run a little hotter because you have increased the current. They will run hotter, and it will reduce the efficiency," May said.

A 115-volt motor on a 125-volt line is within the 10-percent tolerance — 8.7 percent, May said.

"The PUC wouldn't allow our range to be big enough that we would damage equipment," he said.

Sixty-five to 70 percent of the load on the TU system is motor load, May said.

Paul Caudle, a 43-year-old Midland electrician, said that "anytime voltage goes up (beyond nameplate voltage), it costs more. That's a constant, because you are charged for watts, and watts equals amps times volts."

A 115-volt motor operates most efficiently at 115 volts and not on higher voltage, Caudle said.

Caudle said that TU needs to "lower their voltage. They've got taps on their transformers. They can do a city-wide drop to 115 (volts), and that's where it needs to be."

Bruce Plumbee, division manager of Oklahoma City-based Southwest Electric Co., which designs, repairs and builds motors and transformers, said that the effect of high voltage on a motor "has a great deal to do with the characteristics of the motor.

"If you put too much voltage in, you are going to have high current — over-exciting everything," Plumbee said. "If you've got too low of voltage, your current goes up. There is a happy medium in there (dictated by the PUC)."

Plumbee, whose company does repair work on TU transformers, said that TU's reasons for running voltage higher than the 120-volt standard is to get "adequate power" to its customers, including those at the end of the line.

But, he said, TU could install expensive "mid-stream" regulators to keep the voltage at 120 volts throughout a line instead of starting out at 125 volts to ensure that the customers at the end of the line have adequate power.

The effect of higher voltage on a light bulb is more readily apparent than that on a motor.

David Lowry, manager of Sylvania Lighting Division's technical services in Carrollton, said that 125 volts powering a 120-volt light bulb "will effectively cut the (bulb's) life approximately in one-half.

"The electricity is now pushing that brightness up, but it's heating up the lamp sufficiently to shorten the life of the filament," Lowry said. "A 750-hour light bulb becomes a 375-hour light bulb. It's amazing how a small voltage change can really affect the performance of a tungsten filament," he said.

Lowry supposed that "as voltage goes up, wattage goes up a little bit." As a result, customers "may be buying a few more watts for that (overpowered) light bulb."

To get the most life out of a light bulb, Lowry recommended the use of a 130-volt bulb on TU's 120-volt line that legally may surge to 126 volts.

James "Larry" Nichols, president of Blackhawk Electrical Supply Company in Midland, said that his company sells the 130-volt rated bulb since it "gives a longer life (than the 120-volt bulb on a 125-volt line), and it keeps the customers happy."

Bulbs typically sold in grocery stores are rated at 120 volts.

But in defense of the power companies running high voltage, Nichols said that the companies have "got their (voltage) geared to where, at peak load, you're still going to get a 120 volts. When it's not peak load, you are going to get more."

AFFIDAVIT OF MARIA LOURDES MANRIQUEZ

BEFORE ME, the undersigned official, on this day personally appeared Maria Lourdes Manriquez, who, being duly sworn by me, stated under oath as follows:

1. My name is Maria Lourdes ("Marilou") Manriquez, I am twenty-eight (28) years of age, am of sound mind, have never been convicted of any crime, and am otherwise competent to testify to the matters contained in this AFFIDAVIT. I am a citizen of and reside in The Philippines. My entire family, except for my older sister, live in the Philippines.
2. My older sister is married to an American citizen. She, her husband and their one-year old daughter live in Midland, Texas. I have never seen my niece in person.
3. Over the course of the last year, I have applied and interviewed several times for a tourist visa to the United States so that I could visit my sister, my brother-in-law and my niece at their home in Midland, Texas. All of my interviews for the tourist visa have been conducted at the American Consulate Office in the city of Cebu, Philippines.
4. Each of my applications and interviews for a tourist visa has been denied by the Consular Officer(s) because they deemed I was unable to sustain the burden of proof placed upon me by law to demonstrate that I was not "an intending immigrant." I was told that I had failed to prove sufficient "permanent ties" to my country which would compel me to return to The Philippines after a trip to the United States.
5. Reasons given by Consular officials for my failure to establish proof of sufficient "ties" to insure my return to the Philippines were:
   (a). I was twenty-seven (27) years old;
   (b). I was not married and had no children;
   (c). I did not have a long-term employment history in The Philippines;
   (d). I did not own property in The Philippines;
   (e). I had no meaningful business or financial connections in The Philippines;
   (f). I had no strong social ties to my country.
   I admit to all of the above listed findings except 5. (f). Indeed, I am not married and I have no children. I am not rich and have not had the benefit of a long-term job. I do not own any substantial property in The Philippines. However, my social ties are very strong. My family-father, mother, brothers and younger sister-all reside in The Philippines. My life revolves around my family members and I have absolutely no intention whatsoever of leaving them.
6. Therefore, I, Maria Lourdes Manriquez, by this AFFIDAVIT, do hereby solemnly swear, before my God, that if issued a tourist visa to visit my sister and her family in the United States that I will:
   (a). Abide fully by the terms and conditions of the visa and that I will return to my country, The Philippines, on or before the expiration date of the visa;
   (b). I will not make any claim for political asylum;
   (c). I irrevocably waive any right(s) which I might have concerning due process of law or the need for any type of deportation hearings;
   (d). I will fully obey all laws of the United States, the individual States, counties and cities;
   (e). I will not pose any financial burden on the governments of the United States, the individual States, counties, cities or any other governmental entity or agency;
   (f). I will not seek employment in the United States and will not take the job of any person in the United States;
   (g). If deemed appropriate by the United States Department of State, I will gladly report or "check-in" with local authorities during my visit;
   (h). I will not "change my mind" or seek to revoke, modify or alter any of the sworn declarations made by me set forth above and within this AFFIDAVIT.
7. In hopes of reconsideration concerning the previous denials of a tourist visa to me, and as an offer of "new evidence" concerning my qualification for a tourist visa to visit my family in the United States, I hereby submit this AFFIDAVIT, via Certified Mail, air courier-service or hand-delivery, to the following persons:
   (a). Vice Consul
   American Consulate
   Third floor, PCI Bank Building
   Lahug, Cebu
   Philippines
   (b). Deputy Assistant Secretary for Visa Services

SWORN TO AND SUBSCRIBED before me on this seventh day of March, 1992 to which witness my hand and seal.
VICTOR ELIOT LEPITEN, JR.
Notary Public - The Philippines

Dear Reader:

My name is Chris Holmquest and I am the brother-in-law referred to in the above AFFIDAVIT. My wife and I live in Midland, Texas and have been trying for a year now to assist Marilou in obtaining a tourist visa to visit us. We are not seeking permanent immigrant status for Marilou-only a temporary (up to six months) tourist visa. Listed below are some of the steps that I have taken to obtain the visa for Marilou:

1. I have written seven letters to Consular Officers in the Philippines, State Department officials in Washington, D.C., President George Bush and his staff members and also my U.S. Congressman. I have also made countless telephone calls to all of these people except for President Bush.
2. I have furnished AFFIDAVITS OF SUPPORT to the Consulate Office demonstrating my financial ability to support Marilou during her visit.
3. I have made sworn statements to Consular Officers and State Department Officials that Marilou was only going to visit us and not seek permanent residency.
4. To insure Marilou's departure, I have offered to post a cash performance and departure bond, and the deed and title to our home (which is fully paid for). Marilou and I have also offered to have her whereabouts monitored.

In spite of all the above listed efforts and Marilou's protestations that she will indeed return to her country after her visit, denial of the tourist visa has continued.

During the whole year-long process of trying to obtain the tourist visa, it has become abundantly clear that blatant discriminatory practices are being applied to certain visa applicants, such as Marilou, by the Department of State and its Consular Officers. It all boils down to this situation: If a person seeking a tourist visa to visit America is rich, owns property, is married with children or has significant business or financial interests in their country, a good chance exists that a visa will be granted; if, however, a person is not rich, does not own property, is single without children and does not have significantly demonstrable business or financial interests, such person is automatically branded, with neon-pink paint, a "visa jumper" and a tourist visa is out of the question. That is simply not right.

The sworn AFFIDAVIT submitted by Marilou is the latest, and probably the last-we're out of ideas-effort to persuade the Consular Officers and State Department that Marilou harbors no intentions of not returning to her family and home country.

I realize that in the whole scheme of things our problem is a small one. Nonetheless, I feel compelled to try and correct such a basic wrong. If you agree that a very large inequity and injustice is occurring concerning the tourist visa issue, please clip this article or write a letter and mail it to your elected officials, the State Department, President Bush, make a telephone call, or take whatever other action you feel is appropriate. The law which the Department of State cites in denying Marilou, and I'm sure many, many others a simple tourist visa, is a bad one and needs to be changed to remove the patently discriminatory aspects of such law.

Thank you.

Sincerely,
Chris Holmquest

Reception set for Samponaro

Staff Report

Marguerite Crain and Max and Wanda Perry will host a reception and booksigning for Dr. Frank N. Samponaro at Pages and Prints Bookstore, 40 Plaza Center, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday.

Samponaro will be autographing his latest book, "War Scare on the Rio Grande." Between 1911 and 1926 Robert Runyon lived and worked as a professional photographer in Brownsville. His pictures document thw growth and development of the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Samponaro

His photographic coverage of the "Mexican Bandit" raids, the tumultuous revolution that raged in northeastern Mexico and the massive buildup of American military forces are considered spectacular. Making imaginative use of Runyon's photographs, in conjunction with more conventional source material, Samponaro and his coauthor, Paul Vanderwood, shed new light on the history of both the U.S. and Mexico at a pivotal moment in the development of both nations.

"War Scare" is the first in the Texas State Historical Association's publication series with the Barker Texas History Center at the University of Texas.

Samponaro teaches history at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin and is the author of several other books including, "Border Fury."

He and his wife, Marsha, also an educator, live in Midland.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC focuses on 'Week of the Young Child'

By H.A. Tuck

Monday starts the "Week of the Young Child" to focus attention on quality early childhood programs.

Tuck

That means the annual Campus Sidewalk Tricycle Parade Wednesday at 10:45 a.m. for all the youngsters who attend the Midland College Child Development Center ... and more videocameras per capita than you'll see anywhere else.

This year's parade theme is "Their Future In Our Hands." Parents get to stay for a wonderful peanut butter and jelly sandwich lunch that features luscious "Dirt Cake With Worms" for dessert.

Each child in the center also will have a picture displayed in the Allison Fine Arts Building during the week. A "Children's Fair" is scheduled Friday at Odessa's Permian Mall from 10 a.m.-2 p.m. The MC Child Development Center's teachers will be there.

If you don't like basketball, don't go anywhere near Chaparral Center this week. The roundball season wraps up ends this week with two spectacular events. First is the appearance Wednesday of The Harlem Globetrotters. Tickets for the 7:30 p.m. show are $15 courtside, $11.50 general admission for adults, and $9.50 general admission for children.

Although their show is familiar and predictable, their court skills and showmanship make this an event to see time and again.

Saturday is the 7th annual Texas vs. USA Junior College All-Star Game that's staged by the Midland Jaycees. Reserved seats for the 7 p.m. game are $6 and general admission tickets are $4.

This game matches ten of the best junior college players from Texas colleges against 10 of the best from the rest of the country. MC's Chris McKinney will be on the Texas squad, along with Covington Cormier from Clarendon, Bill Burnett of San Jacinto, Walter Pitts of Tyler, Terry Alexander of South Plains, Eric Jones of Temple, Robert Shannon of Odessa, John Strickland of Jacksonville, Joe Hooks of Trinity Valley and Anthony Snowden of Ranger.

On the USA team are such stars as Greg Brown of New Mexico Junior College, Greg Watkins from the 1991 NJCAA champions Aquinas and Shon Peck-Love of the 1992 championship squad from Three Rivers, Mo.

Head coach for the Texas squad will be Roy Thomas, head coach from Tyler. Directing the USA team will be the 1991 NJCAA coach of the year Charles Anderson from Aquinas Junior College of Nashville, Tenn.

Tickets for the Globetrotters are on sale at Chap Center and at Endless Horizons in either Midland or Odessa. The All-Star game tickets are on sale at Chap Center.

Oh, we'd best not forget to mention that the speaker for the All-Star banquet Friday will be James Dickey, head coach of the revitalized Texas Tech Red Raiders men's squad. Tickets are $15 per person or $25 couple. Call 682-2525 for reserve tickets for that event, which starts at 6:30 p.m. in the Ramada Inn.

Final session of the four-week series of seminars for Small Business Owners/Operators will be 7 p.m. Tuesday, in Room 115, Occupational-Technical Building.

The 90-minute session will cover the Workers' Compensation Law. Cost is $5, payable at the door. Call 685-4656 for more information.

Midland College does have a Summer Interim Session on its schedule for this year. The interim is a three-week total immersion effort for students to take and earn credit in one course. As usual, there will be two summer sessions.

The interim is scheduled to start May 11 and end May 28.

Registration and first day of classes are May 11. Summer I is slated June 2-July 7, with Summer II starting July 9 and ending Aug. 13.

"There Is Life After High School" is the topic for a show-and-tell effort by Midland College faculty, students, and counselors at Midland High and Midland Lee.

It's scheduled Tuesday and Thursday as a way to help high school students understand the options which are available to them, the courses of study, financial aid, and what happens in college.

The program is being coordinated by Student Activities Director Jan Reed and the MC Student Services staff. Additional assistance is being provided by bankers, former Midland Chamber President Joan Baskin, and the League of Women Voter. Three tracks will allow students to find out about their options. One group of sessions is for those who are undecided, another group for those pretty sure they will attend MC, and a third group for those who are planning on leaving home.

Winners of their last five tournaments, which is an MC record, the Chaparral golf team heads to a tough test today through Tuesday. They'll be playing at the Scottsdale Community College Invitational, competing on the same courses where the 1992 NJCAA Division I tourney will be played in June. Coach Delnor Poss will be feeling right on top of the world if the Chaps can take this one.

Unless the wheels fell off, the Chap tennis teams were expected to be in today's ITCA Western Regional finals at Odessa. The women's team championship matches begin at 8 a.m. and the men's finals at 1 p.m.

The women's team heads west later this week for the New Mexico State University Invitational at Las Cruces. The Chaps are scheduled to play UT-El Paso on Friday, NMSU at 9 a.m. Saturday, Grand Canyon University at 2 p.m. Saturday, and Odessa College at 9 a.m. next Sunday.

Continuing Education classes starting this week are Assertiveness Training (Mondays, 7-9 p.m., for four weeks) and Easter Panoramic Eggs (Monday and Wednesday, 7-9 p.m. this week only).

Session III of College Classics, the special four-week afternoon classes for those at least 55 years of age, begins the week of April 13, so register now.

Besides regular classes conducted at the college, the Continuing Education Department provides customized training for local businesses and organizations. Call 685-4519 and ask for a college representative to visit your firm to have classes designed to your needs.

To register for Continuing Education classes, visit the department's office in the Administration Building. You may call 685-4518 for more details.

And Midland College's Cityline, 560-2400, extension 1835, provides you with 24-hour information.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

Surrounded by the expansive greenery of a lovely golf course, this beautifully landscaped home is graced with a New Orleans-reminiscent bricked courtyard and two separate covered patios. All spell gracious outdoor living.

The leaded-glass front door opens to a delightful foyer, boasting gleaming ceramic tile floors, rich wallpaper with coordinated window treatment and a view of the charming courtyard — where a fountain gurgles.

Straight ahead lies the formal living area, which was professionally decorated. Its large expanse of windows overlooks the golf course, a white brick fireplace wall rises 30 feet — to the edge of the shed ceiling. Built-in bookcases and cabinets add warmth, practicality. A large, walk-in wet bar leads to the family room.

To the right of the living area lies a formal dining area. Window present a view of the brick courtyard. Ceilings are elevated; window treatment is customized.

The hallway next leads to a spacious, attractively wallpapered breakfast area. Windows, which look out to one of the two covered patios, boast coordinated treatment. The cathedral ceiling is wainscoated, a china cabinet is built-in.

The breakfast area spills into a huge country kitchen that boasts a sea of counter space. A large center island, which doubles as a snack bar, dominates the center of the room. Conveniently, it has its own drawers and cabinets. Custom window covering and wallpaper coordinate with those in the breakfast area. Appliances include built-in, self-cleaning double oven, range with grill, dishwasher, trash compactor and disposal.

Another left leads to the informal living area, which could double as an additional bedroom. Windows overlook the golf course. A glass door leads to a covered patio. Another door opens to the wet bar.

Back in the foyer — a left turn leads to two generously proportioned bedrooms. Both have oversized closets with double doors and cathedral ceilings. A full bath, with skylight, lies between them.

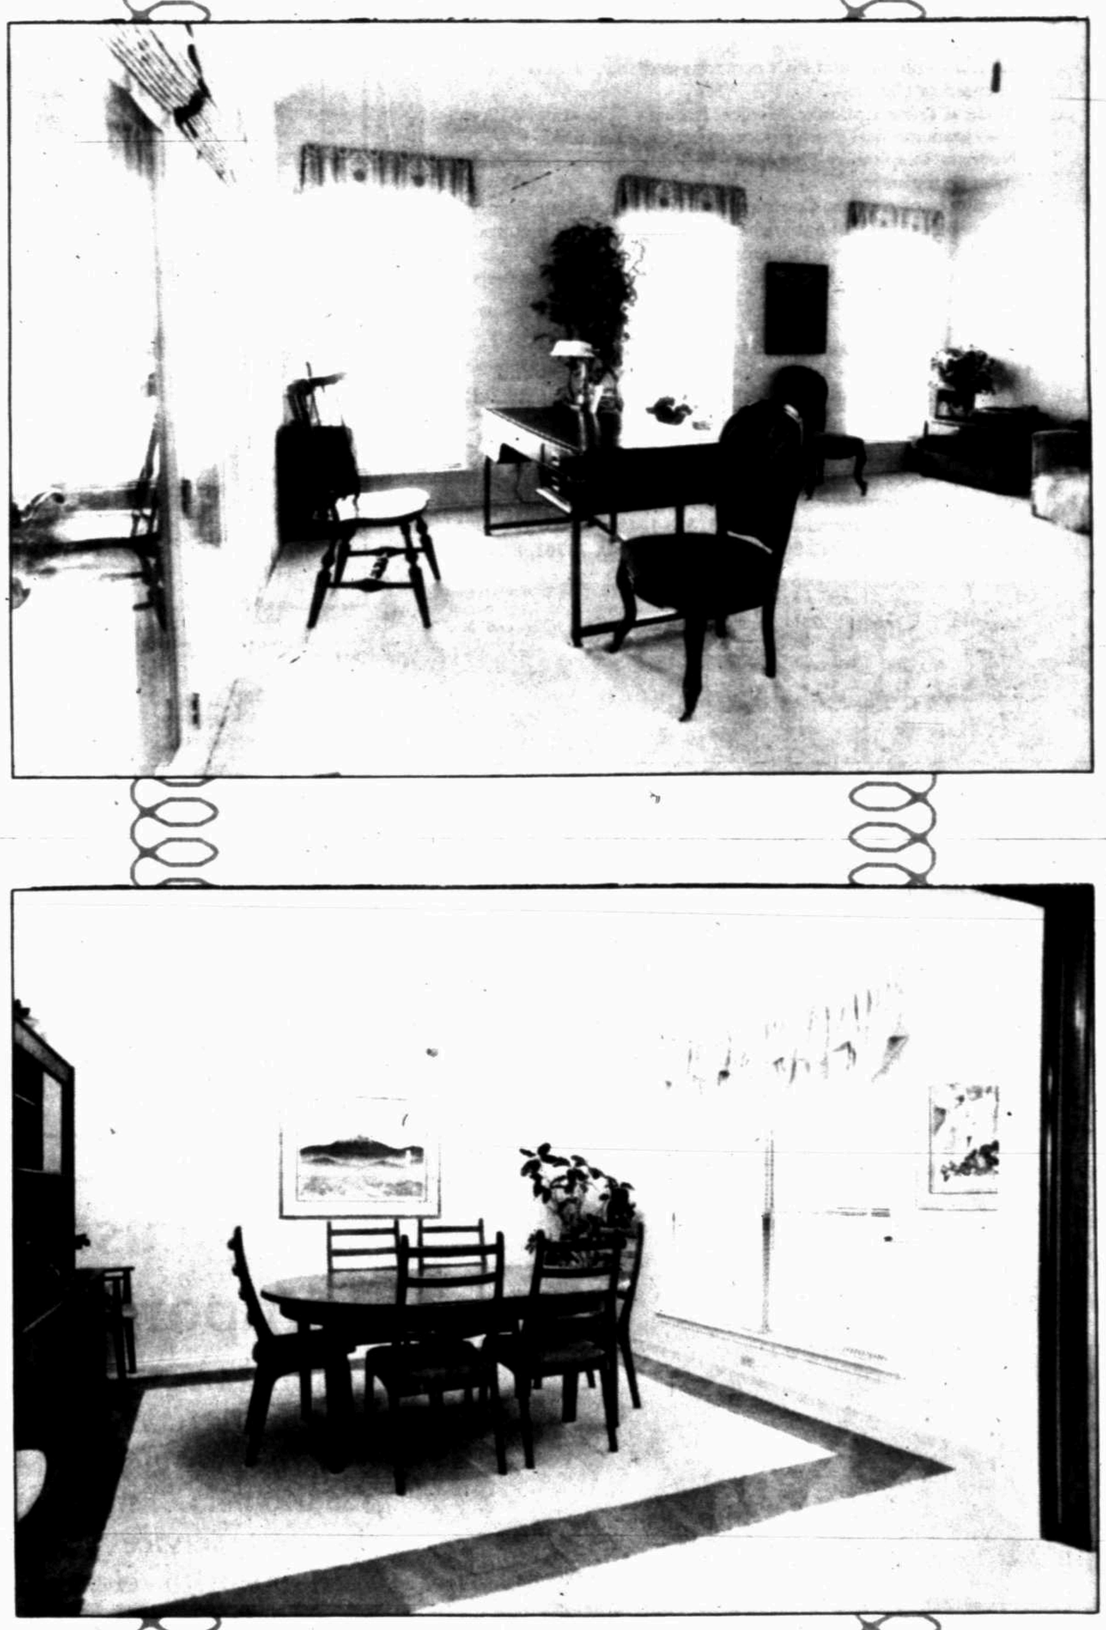
Sequestered on the course side of the home, there's a master bedroom so large it provides plenty of space for a sitting area. Windows on the west side overlook the golf course, those on the north provide entry to one of the covered patios. Wallpaper coordinates to custom window coverings. A hall leads to large his and hers walk-in closets with built-in cabinets and drawers.

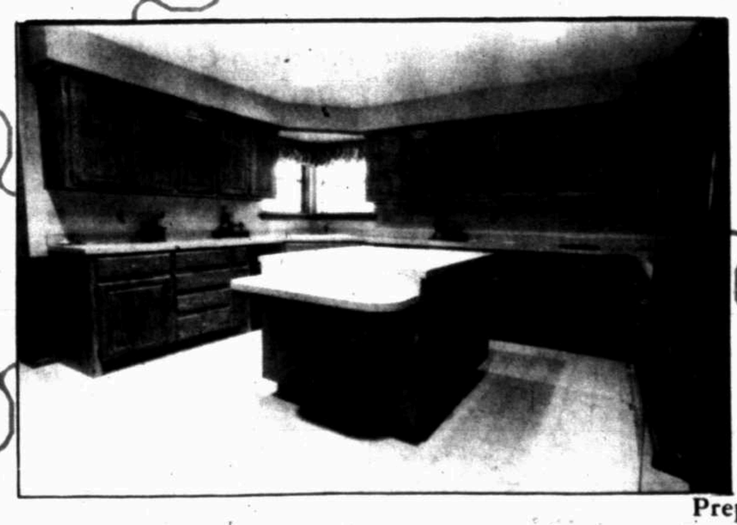
Attached to the master suite are two separate baths. Hers has a marble sink, tub and makeup area. His also has a marble sink, lighted shower and more cabinets. Each has its own skylight.

The fourth bedroom has a cathedral ceiling, large double closet and a window that provides a lovely view of the golf course. A full bath is situated next to it.

Other amenities include a separate laundry area with storage cabinets and plenty of extra space, ceiling fans throughout and double-car garage with work area.

The home is being offered by Langston Realtors for $169,000.





This home will be open between 2 and 4 p.m. today. Call 682-9495 or 683-0888 for information.

First-time buyers should look to future

Prospective home buyers, in particular those looking to purchase their first homes, need to consider their housing needs for the present and future before making a purchase.

"Flexibility is the key issue as far as selecting the size and style of a home. First-time purchasers, in particular, will want to be sure that their new home choice will allow for the family to grow," says Dene Kelly, president of Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors.

She said that some first-time buyers purchase a two- or three-bedroom home only to discover they need more space in a couple of years. "Small homes can still be a good, affordable purchase for the first-time buyers, but buyers should investigate what it might cost to expand the home with a future addition while making sure that zoning and land allowances are adequate," Ms. Kelly said.

Dene Kelly realtors is a member of RELO/The International Relocation Network, headquartered in Chicago. The RELO network has approximately 1,400-member companies and provides transfer-related real estate services, including rental and commercial real estate services, to meet the relocation needs of transferees and their corporations in the U.S., Canada and other countries. RELO is the largest independent real estate network in the country.

"Families with children will want to take into account their present age and balance that against how long the family is planning on staying in that home. This will greatly determine the number of bedrooms or potential bedrooms required, whether a family room is desired and the size of the back or side yard," Ms. Kelly said.

She also said that features such as a back yard can be important to families. "Back yards have traditionally provided a safe haven for small children. However, families with young children will want to make sure the property can easily be fenced. As the children grow older, having extra room in the back or side yard can be an asset for family recreation," Ms. Kelly said.

"Before young families start their first house hunting trip, they need to seriously discuss what type of home will best suit their changing needs — and make sure those desires are conveyed to their real estate agent," Ms. Kelly said. "This will ensure that time is not wasted looking at homes that do not fit the family's needs.

Purchasing a first home is one of the most important milestones in a young couple's life. It is important that careful consideration is taken in making the selection so that the home will still provide comfortable accommodations as the family expands. An experienced real estate agent can help first-time buyers make the proper home selection, as well as assist in guiding the family through the home purchase process.

Realtor association supports mandatory continuing education

Committed to promoting professionalism in the real estate industry, the Midland Association of Realtors, Inc. supports new laws requiring mandatory continuing education (MCE) for real estate agents in Texas.

In 1989, the 71st Texas legislature added a requirement to the Real Estate License Act requiring MCE for real estate license renewals.

"Mandatory continuing education for real estate agents will assure clients and customers knowledgeable, professional assistance when buying or selling real estate," says Pat Paxton, president of the Midland Association of Realtors, Inc. "Realtors have always promoted professional standards within our membership but MCE now requires licensees to keep abreast of changes in the industry."

The Midland Association, a member of the Texas Association of Realtors (TAR), is working closely with the state organization to provide quality courses for agents trying to meet MCE requirements. TAR was the first organization to become a provider of MCE in Texas and offers its courses to both members and non-members.

The Midland Association will provide the location for a TAR sponsored course on Tuesday, April 28. For more information, call the Association office at 682-9725.

PERMIAN BASIN OIL REPORT

Meetings Notices/3E
Activity Indicators/4E
Oil & Gas Activity/5-6E

Serving 54 counties in West Texas and New Mexico

BRIEFING

Rig count up

The Permian Basin rig count increased six for the week of March 22, up from 89 the previous week. The count a year ago was 117.

Meanwhile the U.S. rig count set a record low for the third week in a row, falling four rigs to 639. The state of Texas gained five rigs. A year ago the national rig count was 910. Baker-Hughes which tracks the rig count says the bottom has not been hit yet.

Prices improve

Oil prices improved substantially this week, increasing to near the $20 mark. Fear that U.N. sanctions against Libya would impact crude supplies was reported as the reason for the increase. Buying momentum was also listed as a factor. The posted price at mid-week averaged $18.50.

Please see PRICES/4E

Arkoma buy

Tom Brown Inc. has purchased Arkoma Basin properties of Santa Fe Energy Partners for $1.7 million, in an effort to consolidate its resources. The Arkansas properties, in which Tom Brown owns an interest, were bought in Sept. 1991.

Paper search

The WTGS has issued a call for papers for its 1992 Fall Symposium, which will deal with Permian Basin exploration and production strategies, and is set for November 5-6.

The deadline for abstracts is June 1 and August 15 for manuscripts. Abstracts should not exceed 500 words.

Adobe merger

The stockholders of Santa Fe Energy Resources and Adobe Resources Corp. have voted overwhelmingly to approve the merger of the two companies.

In December, Santa Fe agreed to buy Adobe in a $500 million stock swap, in anticipation of higher natural gas prices. Two Adobe shareholders sued to stop the merger.

AAPG Southwest meeting planned

■ Geologists plan seminars, short courses and field trip.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

The West Texas Geological Society is hosting the 1992 meeting of the Southwest section, American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

Michael Party of Wagner and Brown, general chairman of the meeting, said its general theme is "Something Old, Something New: New Concepts for Exploration and Exploitation."

He explained: "We take the old concepts in hand, looking for oil in new places using the old ways, and we also look for oil in old places using the new ways."

The meeting gets underway at the Midland Hilton April 12 with two short courses. Both are free to pre-registered conference attendees.

The first short course is "Carbonate Reservoir Geology" and will be presented by F. Jerry Lucia. It is intended as an introduction to geological methods for developing producing properties by reviewing petrophysical properties.

The second course will be presented by George B. Asquith and is on "How to Evaluate Carbonate Reservoirs From Well Logs."

The section meeting itself gets underway Monday, April 13 at the Hilton with an opening address and slide presentation by Danny Clayton of Red Adair Co., who wil speak on "The Hellfires of Kuwait."

Attendance is expected to be around 700, according to Party, with a majority of those attending working in exploration of the Permian Basin. But, he said, attendees from as far away as Saint Petersburg, Florida and California, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Colorado are also expected.

"We're seeing a lot of people work the Permian Basin from places other than Midland — from Houston, Dallas, Tulsa, Oklahoma City. Even small companies are becoming centralized, working large areas out of one location."

Paul Pause', program chairman, said approximately 55 technical papers and 14 poster sessions are to be presented in day-long sessions Monday and Tuesday and a half-day Wednesday. He said that is approximately twice the normal number of presentations at a section meeting.

A majority of the presentations will focus on sequence stratigraphy and seis-

Approximately 330,000 oil industry jobs have been lost in the past 10 years, according to the American Petroleum Institute.

Petroleum industry leads U.S. in number of jobs lost

■ The downturn in the oil industry over the past 10 years has taken a large human toll in jobs.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

According to Texas Employment Commission statistics, the number of Midlanders employed in the mining segment — which includes oil and gas exploration and production — was 2,400 in February, up from 2,200 in February 1991.

However, according to the TEC, in 1980 the annual average was 10,950, and in 1981 — the peak of the last oil boom — the annual average was 12,750.

In 1991, Arco cut 80 jobs from the Midland office, though it brought in 80 other jobs from Bakersfield, Calif. and Dallas. And Mobil, Phillips, Kerr-McGee and Chevron have all announced restructuring plans, leaving Midland employees wondering how their jobs will be impacted.

The claim that the oil industry is in a state of "melt down" takes on true meaning when one looks at the loss of jobs.

The latest wave of oil company restructurings last year and so far this year has helped send Midland's unemployment rate to 7.1 percent, a level not seen since 1986-87 when oil prices collapsed

HORIZONTAL DRILLING UPDATE

A Norton rig drilling a short radius well near Pennwell. Horizontal drilling is alive and well, and spreading across Texas.

Horizontal spreads out

■ As it cools in South Texas, horizontal drilling is spreading around the state.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

Horizontal drilling may have lost some of its early South Texas "boom-making" glamor, but it is a play that is far from being played out in the state, and in some ways may be just getting underway.

Texas continues to lead the nation in horizontal drilling, according to Texas Railroad Commission statistics, and still accounts for a good percentage of the state and national rig count.

Since the horizontal play kicked off in 1984, over 2,311 horizontal permits have been filed, and 1,611 well have been completed. For a time both rigs and roughnecks were in short supply and operators such as Clayton Williams, Oryx and Union Pacific Resources would keep rigs on contract to drill one well after another.

"There has been some decline in the original hot spots of Pearsall and Giddings," said Tom Moore, who

The Chalk play: then and now

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

No longer the play it once was, what has happened to the Austin Chalk, horizontal drilling play the bloom of boom has gone.

Once a bonefide boom fueled by reports of wells making thousands of barrels of oil daily, the Chalk attracted "boiler room" operators, get-rich-quick speculators, and just about every independent and major oil company in the U.S. that could get a good position.

Now a mature play, the majority of those still in it are deep pocket operators, who are watching expenses very closely. When the fever faded so did the operators who relied on small investments from school teachers, widows and salaried employees for funds.

Lower costs are the most obvious result when demand declines, and the Austin Chalk has seen

Proration may cause end of the world

Pitts

The sky is falling! The sky is falling! That's the impression one gets, reading opposition arguments to Texas proposed proration rules.

In signing the Oklahoma Proration Bill into law last week, Governor David Walters remarked: "The natural gas industry is in a state of melt down. This is our attempt to bring some stability to an industry reeling from the lack of a coherent national energy policy."

Oklahoma is convinced its gas proration plan, which will reduce production by about 10 percent, will not only improve price but also prevent waste resulting from the selling of a natural resource for less than its replacement cost.

But getting the Texas oil industry to agree on something so critical to the well-being of the state apparently is proving to be a shameful disappointment.

Said Governor Walters: "Both producers and consumers are best served by proration because it tends to stabilize the market and thereby re-stimulate exploration which is at an all time low. If drilling for new gas is not encouraged, there will be severe shortages and a sudden price increase which will hurt both producer and consumer."

The Texas Railroad Commission agrees that old proration rules no longer work because of the spot market and has proposed that Texas also adapt a proration plan that, like Oklahoma's, would prevent waste, improve prices and revitalize the natural gas market.

With an industry, suffering from the flight of major oil companies and their dollars overseas, a lack of investment capital, soft oil prices and in-the-toilet gas prices. With over 300,000 jobs lost in the past decade and the promise of more cuts to come, one would think the Texas oil industry would be zealously united to enact any kind of new proration rules that promised to stabilize the industry, prevent waste and stimulate drilling.

Wrong! The industry is deeply divided. The plan is being met with loud opposition, and it is clear that there are some in Texas who do not want natural gas proration to succeed under any terms. Others, such as the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, just do not agree with some of the provisions of the proposed proration rules.

In the past weeks I have been bombarded with reams of very polished and very hostile public relations materials from a high-priced Dallas PR firm in Dallas. The proposed gas rationing plan is "doomed to failure," harmful to oil industry and the State of Texas," reads one headline. If I had not known better I would have thought that the end of the world would come with new proration rules.

I am not smart enough to understand all the finer points of law involved in the proposed plan, which would prorate natural gas on a reservoir by reservoir basis. I know there are legitimate concerns for drainage problems and other points of contention.

But I am smart enough to know that unless the industry does something to prevent the waste of gas reserses, which are being sold for less than replacement cost, nothing will be done. It cannot expect any help from Washington. Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana and New Mexico must seize the initiative to improve gas prices.

BACK THEN

Home Sweet Mentone

Midland engineer Steve Scott provides a glimpse of what it was like "Back Then," growing up in Mentone in the 1940s.

The county seat of Loving County, Mentone was then and still is Texas' most sparsely populated county. The house with the bicycle on the porch was the family home of Steve Scott. The wooden derrick in the background, now a historical display at Kermit, was part of the Mentone field in which Scott's father worked.

The row of white frame houses depicts the lonesome oil camp setting and the heart of Mentone. There was no fresh water in Mentone and all drinking water had to be hauled. Students were bussed to school in Pecos, 23 miles to the South.

Plains Resources reports reserves

Plains Resources has reported year-end 1991 oil and gas reserves of 13.7 million net equivalent barrels. The company said its 1991 reserves were up about 2% from the 13.4 million net equivalent barrels reported a year ago despite the April 1991 sale of substantially all its Mid-Continent properties. The Mid-Continent properties constituted about 3.5 million net equivalent barrels or 26% of the company's 1990 reserve vase, Plains said.

Oil and natural gas liquid reserves were was up about 32% to 6.6 million barrels from 5 million barrels at year-end 1990. Natural gas reserves declined by about 15% to 42.9 billion cubic feet from 50.2 billion cubic feet a year ago as the result of the Mid-Continent sale, the company said.

HORIZONTAL: Spreading

heads petroleum operations for Clayton Williams, one of the most prolific horizontal drillers in the Austin Chalk trend. "There has been a lot of over-drilling, but basically those that made money during the last Austin Chalk boom will make money in the horizontal drilling play."

But, despite the lack of "boom talk" and the thinning of competition, the Austin Chalk remains a viable play and certain operators continue to drill wells, find oil and make money.

So far this year, operators around the state have applied for 115 horizontal permits. Of the 56 horizontal permits issued in February, 22 were in the Giddings area and 4 in the Pearsall area of the Austin Chalk. While it is a far cry from the early days when permits for the Chalk was recorded in the hundreds, it is an indication that the pay is still on and for the most part is stable. For the past six months the number of permits filed have been around 60, except for the Month of October 1991 when 80 were filed.

It is also an indication that the horizontal trend is spreading out around the state. Once upon a time, the Austin Chalk would have accounted for 90-100 percent of the horizontal permits in the state, now it is only half.

From the original South Texas hot spots in the Pearsall and Gidding areas, the horizontal technique, has now spread to every corner of the state. Since 1984, horizontal permits have been issued in 74 counties, as operators continue to look for a horizontal niche or application for their areas of operation.

With the search for horizontal potential spreading out and horizontal drilling costs coming down, operators predict it is just a matter of time before the drilling technique opens some "serious" development drilling.

North Texas is becoming an area of possibility for horizontal drilling, but the area that promises the most is the Permian Basin which produces over 60 percent of the oil in Texas from dozens of shallow and deep formations. Horizontal drilling is yet to take off in the Permian Basin, but there has been significant activity to indicate that it is a viable option for recovering more oil.

"It is a given that when you increase exposure of the well bore in a producing formation it will result in more oil," said Joe Neal, a petroleum engineer and consultant in Midland. "The trick is making it economical."

He said that horizontal drilling could become wide spread in the Basin if costs come down enough. He expressed hope that some of the short radius drilling techniques now being tried could bring the cost down.

"It has been tried in a number of formations around the Basin, including the Spraberry and resulted in incremental oil, but the drilling costs made it uneconomical."

No record was available for the New Mexico counties, but to date 70 horizontal permits have been logged on the Texas side of the Permian Basin. Following Mobil's initial four wells in the Spraberrys the areas to see the most action are the following:

- Pecos county was the most active with 21 permits. This was mostly the result of Marathon's infill program in the Yates field.
- Hockley had 14 permits, which were mostly the result of Amoco's experimentation with its short-radius Sidewinder system.
- Gaines had 8 permits, with Meridian being the most active operator.
- Nolan noted 6 permits, resulting from Oryx's Ellenburger tests.
- Winkler had 5 permits, mainly because of Unocal's work in the Dollarhide field.

Other counties which have had horizontal permits include: Andrews, Coke, Crane, Crockett, Dawson, Ector, Gaines, Glasscock, Howard, Midland, Runnels, Terry, Tom Green, and Yoakum.

PITTS: Caution: proration

(From 1E)

To try and crush a plan that offers hope for natural gas prices, is not smart. If there is something wrong with the TRC plan, it needs to be fixed, not destroyed. If statewide proration is the better option, it should be pursued.

The Commission makes some good points, if not for its plan, for some kind of new proration that stops waste.

The Commission report states: "The specter of a future natural gas shortage again looms over the industry and Texas. Serious questions are now being raised as to the reliability of natural gas as a fuel with a long-term future. One thing is clear, the industry needs reform and needs it now."

The report points out the following about its proposed proration plan

- Purchaser nominations no longer work.
- The TRC's proposed action is lawful and necessary.
- The proposed rules are fair and accurately determine demand.
- The proposed rules will instill order in the industry and foster expanded gas markets.

Opponents, however, have painted such an apocalyptic view of TRC's gas proration plan.

After reading an inch-thick study produced by a Texas A&M professor of economics, I was convinced that gas proration would surely bring the end of the world to Texas and the natural gas industry.

The "econometric" study, written by Dr. James Griffin, a distinguished author and energy economist, was loaded with graphs and charts, clearly demonstrating that, indeed, the world will end tomorrow if gas proration rules in Texas restrict gas production to restore market value to natural gas.

Entitled, "Prospects For Cartelization of the Natural Gas Market" the very academic study informed me that a plan to cut natural gas production in Texas would result in: Lost severance taxes of $370 million, reduced ad valorem taxes for Texas schools of $125 million; a loss of $880 million to royalty owners; the loss of 4,535 jobs; a statewide loss in economic activity of $14.2 billion from 1992 to 2010.

All of this doom, destruction and devastation simply because somebody tried to stabilize natural gas prices and prevent the waste of a natural resource? I did not know whether to laugh or cry at this "academic" report which on the surface is openly hostile and biased. The very choice of words (cartelization) for the heading smelled of bias and high-powered PR. Commissoned by TransAmerica Natural Gas Corp., ARCO Oil & Gas Co. and Shell Western E&P the exaggeration of the report were too obvious. Only subtle PR is effective; overkill becomes obvious and destroys credibility

But propaganda is not the central issue here. The real issue is that the oil industry "can't get it together" because they can't get together. Pipelines, majors, independents — it is an industry of fractionalized interests. There is hardly a consensus on any issue. Not only does the industry have to fight the liberal yankee politicians, it has to fight itself.

CHALK: Then and now

some dramatic lowering of costs. Vertical drilling costs remain about the same, but the cost for horizontal drilling tools has dropped from $13,500 per day to approximately $5,500.

Lease costs and royalty costs have also declined, acreage in the thick of the play that once leased for $750 an acre, can now be had for $150, according to Midland oilman Richard Gaddy who has participated in 18 Austin Chalk wells.

Acreage on the fringe of the play that would have gone for $100 in 1988, has decreased to $25.

"Royalty," says Gaddy, "has dropped from as high as 25 percent to around 3/16 or 1/5th."

The cost of pumpjacks and other surface equipment that once were in short supply has also made the drilling of an Austin Chalk well less expensive. But, still remaining is a transportation penalty on oil produced in the trend.

Also the same is the luck of the draw in the play. When the play opened it was possible to drill offset duds next to barnburners, and that has not changed. Still being changed downward, however, are reserve estimates in the Austin Chalk.

One active operator in the trend started out estimating 500,000 barrels per well and has now changed it to 150,000 barrels. Some say reserve estimates could go even lower.

"It has become increasingly difficult to sell an Austin Chalk deal in Midland because of the reserve estimates," said Gaddy. "There is a feeling that in the long run, Permian Basin reserves may be better."

Great progress has been made, but horizontal completions remain a problem. There are still many unresolved questions about isolating zones, knowing which zones to treat and how to treat.

JOBS: Oilpatch hit hard

and the shake-out in the industry began.

Much has been written over the last decade about falling domestic production and the impact of increased reliance on imported crude.

Little, however, has been said about the impact of falling domestic production and drilling activity on petroleum industry employment.

According to the American Petroleum Institute, the industry has lost 330,000 jobs in the past 10 years, a drop of 17 percent since 1981. In 1991, the industry lost 51,000 jobs. At the same time, the API pointed out, economy-wide employment has risen over 15 percent during the same time period.

The petroleum industry segment hardest hit by the decline in activity and prices has been exploration and production, which saw 300,000 jobs disappear between 1981 and 1991, a drop of 40 percent.

Refining has lost over 50,000 jobs or 30 percent over the same period. And the wholesale sector lost 35,000 jobs.

API also noted that the loss of jobs has had a ripple effect, spreading to the rest of the nation's economy through its supplying industries.

API cited statistics based on Department of Commerce data that shows the drop in petroleum activity would be expected to have been magnified by a factor of 50 to 100 percent when the effect on sales in the non-petroleum sector is taken into account.

If the effect on sales is translated one-for-one into employment, the API said, the economy-wide effect of the petroleum industry's decline over the past year would amount to a loss of from about 75,000 to 100,000 jobs for petroleum and non-petroleum sectors combined.

Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, compared the loss of jobs in oil and gas to the loss of jobs in automobile manufacturing. Citing data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Spannaus said while oil and gas lost 317,000 jobs between 1982 and 1991, automobile manufacturing lost 108,000 jobs between 1985 and 1991.

Recalling President Bush's recent trip to Japan with the leaders of the Big Three automobile manufacturers to discuss the problems of the auto industry, Spannaus asked, "What about oil and gas extraction, which has lost three times as many jobs as the automobile manufacturing industry? Are not out-of-work oil and gas people just as important as out-of-work automobile manufacturing people? Why aren't we a like concern for the administration, and why aren't we receiving the same treatment from our nation's lawmakers?"

Gene Ames, chairman of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, compared the current state of the industry to the 1930s, when oil prices fell to 10 cents a barrel and Texas had to declare martial law and send soldiers into the East Texas field to halt production. But back then, he said, the government acted to save the energy industry, which helped fuel Allied efforts in World War II.

"We can jump start the U.S. economy today with natural gas like we did with oil in the 1930s," he said. "But we must first preserve and then revive the domestic petroleum industry to be able to do this.

"The domestic industry means independent producers, mostly small family businesses — geologists, petroleum engineers, oil field crews, roughnecks, roustabouts, truck drivers — about 200,000 people ready to go to work to stabilize domestic oil and gas production and make a substantial reduction in future oil imports."

Oil field jobs have even become a campaign issue in the Texas Railroad Commission race between current RRC Chairman Lena Guerrero and challenger Barry Williamson. Guerrero said she did not believe opening the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil exploration would be of interest to Texans, while Williamson said opening the refuge would create 60,000 jobs in Texas.

Data room open for Argentina basin

William B. Cline of Gaffney, Cline & Associates, on behalf of YPF S.A., the state owned oil company of Argentina, has opened a data room in Dallas, to facilitate the review of technical information on the Northwest Basin of Argentina. YPF S.A. has offered certain upstream and downstream assets in the Northwest Basin for association contracts with the international oil and gas industry as a part of its ongoing and far-reaching privatization process.

The initial phase of the data room in Dallas will be open through May 15 with a view to inviting duly qualified companies to submit bid in September 1992.

The properties comprise three discrete units in the Northwest Basin: the first, a 60 MMBbl of condensate and 2.1 Tcf of gas (proved) unit with approximately 3.9 million exploration acres; the second, a 21 MMBbl complex with approximately 4.2 million exploration acres; and the third, a 30,000 BOPD refinery/gas processing complex and an associated clean products pipeline.

Efforts to cut gas supplies advance

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Campaigns by hundreds of independent drillers to curb bulging supplies of natural gas in the Southwest scored one victory in Oklahoma last week and appear to be headed for others soon in Texas and Louisiana.

Oklahoma Gov. David Walters, a Democrat, signed a bill last week that is expected to reduce annual gas output there by about 5 percent.

The Texas Railroad Commission on Monday scheduled a vote on April 27 on a narrower plan for production cutbacks, and Louisiana is considering a similar measure.

The three states produce nearly half of the nation's natural gas supply, but the production limits approved or under consideration in the three states are weaker than some drillers had sought and will probably have little impact on depressed gas prices.

The Federal Trade Commission has said that blanket restrictions on gas output to raise prices are illegal, but that states can impose some narrower limits. The Oklahoma measure attempts to comply with federal law, but federal agencies are examining it.

At the urging of powerful members of Congress from gas-consuming regions, primarily the Northeast, the Midwest and California, federal regulators are monitoring the states' actions for signs of illegal attempts to rig the gas markets.

But economists and other analysts say supplies are too abundant in areas outside the Southwest for producers here to have any lasting control over prices.

Battered by several years of gluts and depressed prices, the region's gas producers are in turmoil. Gas prices over the last few months have been the lowest of any winter since the 1970s.

Thousands of smaller producers have been driven out of business, many large independent companies are losing money, layoffs have accelerated and drilling has plunged to its lowest level in 50 years.

Giant companies like Mobil, Amoco and ARCO, as well as large independents like Oryx Energy and Maxus Energy, have turned more to foreign drilling, where costs are lower and prospects more appealing.

But many of the nation's independent companies, which produce about 60 percent of the domestic gas supply, are too weak financially to consider foreign operations.

Many of them have pressured state officials for help. Regulators in Texas are considering changes, based on historical trends and other factors, in how they calculate monthly production limits for each well.

Drillers in Texas, which produced 27 percent of the nation's gas in 1990, have complained for years that pipeline companies abuse the current system by overestimating how much gas they can sell each month.

Production limits are based on the pipelines' monthly demand forecasts; when forecasts were too high, markets were glutted with gas.

"That process was difficult to follow and was not accurate," Lena Guerrero, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission, said in an interview.

Appointed last year by Gov. Ann Richards, a Democrat, to the three-member panel that regulates the state's oil and gas industry, Ms. Guerrero will be on the ballot for the first time in November.

"You want to make sure the fuel is around for a very long time, so you want to conserve it when it is not being demanded," Ms. Guerrero said.

In Oklahoma, which produced 12 percent of the nation's gas in 1990, Walters signed a bill last week that will modestly lower output limits on 1,100 high-volume gas wells, out of 24,000 producing wells in the state.

The Oklahoma Independent Petroleum Association estimates that annual production will fall by 5 percent.

In Texas and Oklahoma, most high-volume wells are owned by major companies. ARCO estimated that the new Oklahoma limits would pare $9 million from its yearly gas sales.

The debate over tighter controls on gas output in the Southwest has bitterly divided the industry. Many of the giants have produced gas at high volumes to generate cash needed for foreign exploration, even though the production has flooded gas markets and depressed prices.

Many independent producers without foreign operations are desperate for higher prices. Financially strong ones, like Anadarko Petroleum and Apache Corp., have shut many gas wells voluntarily. But they complain that other drillers with wells nearby are unlawfully drawing away their gas.

In testimony before the Texas Railroad Commission on March 18, Forrest E. Hoglund, chairman and chief executive of Enron Oil & Gas Co., a large independent controlled by Enron Corp., said that major producers were ruining the business by overproducing.

"The macho producers have taken the gas back into their hands, and they are trying to sell it wherever and to whomever they can," he said. "They are trying to force gas into a market that won't hold it nine months out of 12, with all of the destructive problems being the result."

Kathleen E. Magruder, a government affairs manager at ARCO Oil and Gas, said the drillers who favored tighter production limits were actually scheming to put a floor under gas prices.

She said the attempt would fail to bolster prices, and might backfire by raising fears among potential buyers of gas that supplies might become unreliable.

In letters last month to several federal agencies, four members of Congress including Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, suggested a need to counter "the prospect of a domestic natural gas OPEC."

Officials of the Federal Trade Commission and Federal Energy Regulatory Commission replied earlier this month that states could restrict output to keep drillers from unlawfully drawing gas from each others' production areas and to prevent gas from being wasted. But blanket restrictions on gas output to bolster prices is illegal, they said.

Bob Krueger, a former Democratic congressman who is one of the three Texas regulators, agreed.

"We simply cannot constrict production in order to raise price," he said in an interview. "That would be illegal. It is also bad policy and the wrong message to send to potential purchasers."

Unocal chief lashes out at electric vehicles

N.Y. Times News Service

Unocal Corp. chairman Richard J. Stegemeier lashed out at electric vehicles and criticized California's clean air law that is helping fuel research on the cars.

"Who wants to be cruising around our roads and highways in an oversized golf cart?" said Stegemeier, in remarks delivered recently at the National Conference on Octane Quality and Reformulated Gasoline in New Orleans.

It represented one of the sharpest attacks to date on the new technology and illustrated the divisions concerning alternative energy sources. Critics have charged that electric cars have limited range and require the installation of costly and bulky battery chargers.

Stegemeier said that electric cars are not totally pollution free and that cleaner burning fuels, such as ethanol and natural gas, cannot compete effectively with gasoline because of their limited availability.

The Unocal head specifically criticized General Motors Corp.'s Impact, a two-seat electric car that is expected to be marketed in the mid-1990s. He said that the car would be expensive to operate and have limited range.

"The full cost of owning and operating an electric car like the Impact, including sticker price, electricity and maintenance, would be about 70 percent higher than a conventional car getting 30 miles per gallon," Stegemeier said.

But Bob Wragg, market development manager for GM's electric vehicle program, disputed Stegemeier's comments.

"It's unfortunate that he felt that way. Some of the things he points out are perhaps some things he doesn't understand," Wragg said. "We believe there is a desire on the part of the public to see a car like this introduced, and it's not simply a matter of government forcing technology."

He said that he does not know how much the car will cost but said its sticker price will be slightly higher than a comparable internal combustion vehicle.

Stegemeier also criticized California's tough new clean air law, saying that it will place a financial burden on the oil industry and consumers alike. It mandates that refiners produce cleaner gasoline by 1996, something that will cost billions of dollars in facility improvements.

The regulations also require that 2 percent of the cars sold in the state by 1998 be emission-free, a requirement that has stimulated electric car research.

"These cost burdens," he charged, "have hit California refiners, large and small, particularly hard. Some have already pulled the plug on their operations (in) California entirely."

Meeting the new standard will raise the price of gasoline by about 23 cents a gallon and cost area consumers nearly $1 billion a year, he said, reiterating past projections.

Claudia Keith, spokeswoman for the South Coast Air Quality Management District, declined comment on Stegemeier's speech, but acknowledged that electric vehicle technology still needs to be refined if the vehicles are to become popular with consumers. The agency enforces smog regulations in the Los Angeles area.

"My feeling is that we're going to have electric vehicles down the line. The technology is not there yet but it's certainly on the horizon," she said.

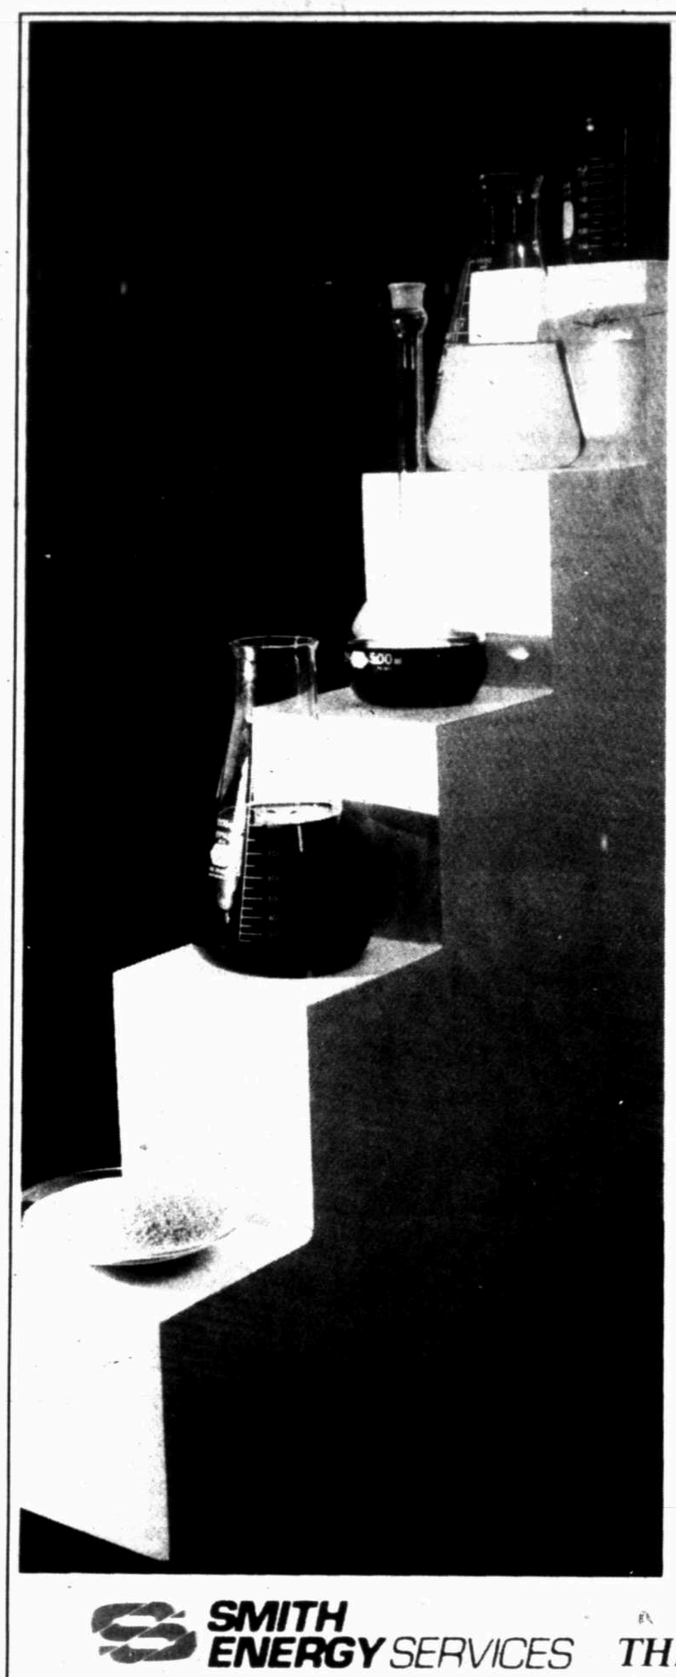
Harken has $11.4 million quarterly loss

DALLAS (AP) — Harken Energy Corp. said it lost $11.4 million in the fourth quarter, nearly double its loss from a year earlier.

Revenue plummeted after Harken suspended unprofitable horizontal drilling operations in South Texas last spring.

The loss in the three months that ended Dec. 31 translated to 27 cents a share. A year earlier, Harken lost $6.0 million, 22 cents a share.

For the year, Harken lost $12.6 million, 31 cents a share, on revenue of $6.8 million. In 1990, the company lost $8.3 million, 37 cents a share.



The next step in ramp blending.

We offer total blending control with the most complete microprocessor-based ramp blending system in the industry.

Smith Energy Services developed the APAC/ALAC (Automated Proppant/Liquid Additive Control) Blender in conjunction with Stewart & Stevenson Services, Inc., to not only deliver the most precise proppant addition, but also complete liquid additive control and monitoring.

Precisely. As scheduled. Even during rapid proppant stage or rate changes. So our fluid is fully crosslinked and buffered and the correct amount of breaker is added.

Which ensures that you will receive the cleanest fluid and highest conductivity fracture. And optimum well performance.

Otherwise, we wouldn't be the choice of some of the country's finest oil and gas operators.

So if you're concerned about how your well performs and the next step for unearthing your profits, take the first step.

Smith Energy Services. We work best under pressure.

DOE rejects all bids for Elk Hills oil

The Department of Energy (DOE) has rejected all bids submitted earlier this month in the semi-annual sale of crude oil from the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve in California.

DOE said today that none of the 19 bidders offered acceptable prices of the 53,740 barrels per day of crude oil the agency tendered for sale. The bids ranged from $11.71 per barrel to $14.06 per barrel, with the top bid for the highest quality of oil - the so-called "Stevens Zone" crude - averaging $13.25.

As a result, the department will exercise its unilateral right to extend current oil purchase contracts through April while it issues a second solicitation for new bids.

We have buyers for W. Texas and E. New Mexico gas or crude. To receive a bid, please send legal description of production location to Larson-McBrine, Inc., Box 5455, Midland, TX 79704-5455.

JAMES K. ANDERSON INC. has added a second Gardner producer to the Sykes West field of Runnels County.

The No. 1 W.W. White was tested for a calculated absolute open flow of 220 Mcfd from perforations 4,001 to 4,004 ft.

Drilled to 4,060 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 4,030 ft.

Runnels completion extends field south

A second producer was also added to the T.W.P. field of Runnels County, this a Cross Cut producer that extended the field south.

TKP PETROLEUM INC. potentialed the No. 1 Dusek to flow 140 barrels of 38.4 gravity crude from perforations 3,876 to 3,882 ft. The interval was acidized with 250 gallons of acid and fractured with 25 sacks sand. Gas-oil ratio is 500:1.

Permitted as a 4,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 4,224 ft. and plugged back to 4,053 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

Location is 902 ft. from south and 467 ft. from west lines of T.T. Williamson survey 12, Abst. 681, eight miles northwest of Ballinger.

Menard County field gets sixth producer

QUINTX EXPLORATION INC. has added the sixth Bunger producer to the Branch South field of Menard County.

On potential test, the No. 82 G. Whitehead pumped five barrels of 32 gravity crude from perforations 1,674 to 1,678 ft. The interval was acidized with 100 gallons of acid and fractured with 5,000 lbs. sand. Gas-oil ratio is 200:1.

Permitted as an 1,800 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 1,753 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 1,751 ft.

Location is 2,700 ft. from north and 2,300 ft. from east lines of Section 33, AB&M survey, Abst. 37, 10 miles north of Menard.

Lea reentry nets Delaware producer

The reentry of an abandoned well in Lea County, N.M. has resulted in a new Delaware producer in the East Lusk field, a half-mile southwest of Morrow gas production in a recently discovered field, 19 miles southwest of Buckeye.

YATES PETROLEUM CORP. tested the No. 3 Lusk "AHB" Federal to pump 140 barrels of 40 gravity crude, 70 Mcfd and 222 barrels of water. The well produced from perforations 5,210 to 7,533 ft., which had been acidized with 3,750 gallons of 7.5 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 57,250 gallons of gel and 120,000 lbs. 20/40 sand. Gas-oil ratio is 500:1.

Permitted as an 8,600 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 7,900 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,558 ft., include the Rustler at 1,061 ft., Yates at 2,940, Seven Rivers at 3,340, Delaware at 4,644, Brushy Canyon at 6,224, and Bone Spring at 7,782 ft. Pay was topped at 5,210 ft.

Location is 2,310 ft. from south and 1,650 ft. from east lines of Section 35, T19s, R32e.

Offshore drillers cope with depressed prices, activity

■ Offshore drillers are trying to weather a sharp drop in activity that has hit the Gulf of Mexico and threatens to spread to other "hot spots" throughout the world.

Hearst News Service

OFF THE COAST OF LOUISIANA – Teddy Reed, perched on a catwalk three stories above the Gulf of Mexico, squints through an ocean breeze and looks out on an offshore drilling industry that is slowly crumbling.

Gone are the swirl of helicopters that once hopped from one oil rig to the next, the platoon of supply boats loaded with people and equipment, and the crush of roughnecks who flocked to the Gulf to cash in on the hottest offshore drilling province in the world.

"It hurts to find ourselves in this kind of shape," said Reed, a foreman who started his own career as a roughneck on Gulf drilling rigs. "People are wondering how long we're going to be able to hang on around here. Sooner or later, I guess we're all going to have to pay the piper."

Drilling in the Gulf last year fell to its lowest level since the bust of the 1980s. During the first three months of this year, the percentage of drilling rigs in use fell an additional 20 percentage points, meaning that fewer than half of the rigs available in the Gulf are actually drilling.

And the slump is spreading. Industry experts say the downturn in the Gulf, which sent people and equipment off on a mad dash to more lucrative spots overseas, now threatens the entire world offshore drilling market.

Already, rig activity in the North Sea, Australia and South Asia has fallen sharply over the past year, thanks largely to the slump off the Texas and Louisiana coasts.

Most of the action that is left in the United States – like the drilling work on Reed's Amoco Corp. platform 20 miles south of New Orleans – is focused on salvaging old equipment or coaxing the last, stingy drops of energy out of fields that have been heavily drilled for nearly half a century.

"I have suggested to both of my boys to find other careers," Reed said.

Thirty miles east of where Reed is standing, on a rig just off the swamps of Venice, La., drilling executive Russ Luigs is watching the collapse from a different angle.

Luigs, chief executive of Houston's Global Marine, has moved all but three of his 26 rigs out of the Gulf of Mexico, forcing five out of every six Global employees in the Gulf out of their jobs.

"This industry has been through an incredible wringer," Luigs said.

After soaring to a high of nearly 200 working rigs in 1984, the active rig count in the Gulf this year fell below 70 rigs for the first time in a decade, according to Offshore Data Services, an industry consulting company in Houston.

Some of the rigs in the Gulf have been scrapped – owners are junking an average of one a month – and about a quarter of the fleet now sits in dry storage.

The rest of the rigs, though, have accompanied Global Marine to hot spots overseas, where rig owners have been able to charge oil companies rental rates that are often double the Gulf of Mexico average.

"You follow the money," said David Herasimchuk, Global's vice president of market development. "If there's nothing happening in the Gulf, you go somewhere else."

The problem in the Gulf is natural gas.

The offshore drilling industry is coping with record low drilling activity worldwide.

Five idle rigs are visible from the Galveston beachfront as two fishermen cast their lines.

Because the Gulf primarily is a gas field – most of the oil was siphoned off years ago – the stunning drop in gas prices over the past year has hammered the drilling market.

With prices so low, oil companies simply can't generate enough money to justify the cost of hiring a drilling rig. As a result, demand has fallen into the tank.

The plunge in rig usage has been accompanied by a similar drop in the rates paid to the drilling companies.

Luigs said his midsized, shallow-water rigs in the Gulf generate about $8,000 a day in revenue, down sharply from $18,000 a day this time last year. The same rigs in 1982, Luigs said, fetched about $42,000.

At those rates, industry executives say, it is nearly impossible to make money. Many companies have opted to put their equipment to work at money-losing prices to avoid either laying off their crews or shelling out the $2,000 a day needed to "stack" their rigs in storage.

Obviously, this can't last forever. Industry analysts say that if drilling companies continue to work in the Gulf for money-losing rates, they eventually will go broke.

Their only hope, then, is to go elsewhere.

"There is only so much you can slash your capital spending, cut back on people and close plants," said Jeffrey R. Freedman, an energy analyst for Smith Barney Harris Upham in New York. "There is simply no basis for any kind of optimism in the United States."

Since the mass exodus from the Gulf began a year and a half ago, though, most of yesterday's international hot spots have cooled dramatically.

According to Oceandril Data Services in Houston, the rig count and the percentage of available rigs that are working have dropped in nearly every major drilling region in the world.

In the North Sea, for example, Oceandril said the number of rigs has dropped from 105 this time last year to 87 today. The percentage of available rigs in use has dropped from 90 percent to 74 percent.

That decline has been matched by similar drops in South Asia, where the active rig count has fallen from 36 to 31, in the Far East, 23 to 18, and in Australia, where the number of working rigs has fallen from seven to four in the past year.

As in the Gulf of Mexico, the widening gap between supply and demand has hammered rig rental rates. Industry executives say rates in most parts of the world have fallen by as much as 25 percent in the past three months, largely as a result of bidding wars among U.S. drillers desperate for work.

Analysts fear that unless world oil prices stabilize and the pace of rigs being scrapped picks up steam, rig rates throughout the world could flop like those in the Gulf of Mexico, leaving desperate U.S. drillers without a healthy market to pull them through the domestic slump.

Federal judge upholds oil exploration project

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A federal court judge has refused to halt a Texas oil company's exploration project in the Wah Wah Mountains of southwestern Utah.

In denying the Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance request for a temporary restraining order Wednesday, U.S. District Judge David Sam upheld the federal Bureau of Land Management's interpretation of new regulations on appeals.

The BLM gave Hunt Oil Co. of Dallas the go-ahead in January to test for deposits of oil and gas in the mountains about 35 miles northwest of Cedar City. The environmental group filed a lawsuit Tuesday and requested the order at the same time.

SUWA attorney Stephen Koteff argued that the restraining order was needed because the BLM changed the appeals regulations in the middle of his group's appeal.

Under previous rules, a project could be delayed for at least 30 days after an appeal. Now, a project can proceed during the appeal process.

"It's quite appropriate this is April Fool's Day because the BLM played a cruel April Fool's joke on the public," Koteff said after the hearing.

Even though the exploration may be complete by the time the appeal is resolved, Koteff said he intends to pursue the matter until the new regulation is clarified.

"There is real harm here," Koteff said. "The harm is to the process that has been set up. By violating that process, the BLM is prohibiting the appeal's process from taking place."

Koteff said the oil exploration project, which uses dynamite for seismic tests, also may harm the nesting area of hawks and eagles.

"The harm is admittedly speculative," he said. "But there could be impact to raptors. There also could be harm to cultural resources. It would probably be better to wait until July, after the nesting season is over."

Koteff also said a study indicating the project was safe was conducted by Hunt Oil.

But Hunt attorney Scott Hardt said the company hired a geologist from Brigham Young University to do the study.

Hardt said delaying the project would financially hurt the company because the Wah Wah Mountains tests are a precursor to a $2 million seismic project in Utah and Nevada.

IPAA committee issues supply, demand forecast

Staff Report

The Independant Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) has issued its annual Supply and Demand Committee report and long-term forecast to the year 2000 in a special presentation before the New York Society of Security Analysis.

The Supply and Demand Committee reached the following conclusions concerning the domestic economy and the oil and natural has industry for the years 1992, 1995, and 2000:

■ U.S. natural gas production is predicted to decline by 0.4 percent in 1992 to 17.8 trillion cubic feet (Tcf). It is forecast to increase to 20.3 Tcf by the year 2000, growing annually by an average rate of almost 2 percent.

■ Natural gas consumption is projected to increase by 0.8 percent in 1992, with a total annual demand of 19.6 Tcf. It is projected to reach more than 21.0 Tcf by 2000, reflecting a rapidly growing demand for electric generation and strong gains in industrial demand.

■ Natural gas imports are anticipated to rise this year to an annual average of 1.8 Tcf, representing a 10 percent gain from 1991.

■ U.S. crude oil production is forecasted to decline by 2.9 percent to less than 7.2 million barrels per day (MM b/d) in 1992, the lowest level in 30 years. It should continue falling, reaching 5.8 MM b/d by the year 2000.

■ Domestic petroleum demand should increase by 1.4 percent in 1992 to 16.9 MM b/d by the year 2000. The annual growth rate is predicted to increase more than five percent from 1992 to 1995, and then slow to 2.8 percent from 1995 to 2000.

■ Total imports are forecast to reach 7.8 MM b/d in 1992, and 10.3 MM b/d by the year 2000. The annual growth rate is predicated to increase more than five percent from 1992 to 1995, and then slow to 2.8 percent from 1995 to 2000.

■ U.S. demand is expected to rise by 1.5 percent in 1992, and will continue to grow in the 1990s, but only at one-half the rate of economic growth. From 1992 to 2000, oil demand is expected to keep pace with coal and nuclear power, while natural gas should grow at an even faster rate than all other energy sources.

■ The U.S. economy should continue its sluggish recovery in 1992, with real growth of only 1.5 percent. Economic activity is expected to increase by an average annual rate of 2.5 percent during the period 1992-2000. The inflation rate is expected to decline to 2.7 percent in 1992 and then will accelerate during the 1990s, with an average rate of four percent.

George Mitchell continues to believe in natural gas

■ As natural gas producers suffer through one of the industry's most dismal seasons, George Mitchell keeps the faith in the gas patch and the domestic oil industry.

N.Y. Times News Service

THE WOODLANDS, Texas — This is a cruel season for drillers of natural gas. Depressed prices and revenues have driven hundreds of small, family-owned companies out of business and pushed giants like Mobil, Chevron and ARCO to explore overseas, where costs are lower and big discoveries more likely.

But George P. Mitchell, an iconoclast in the gas patch for more than 40 years, is still at it. Creator of one of the nation's biggest independent producers and processors of natural gas, the Mitchell Energy and Development Corp., Mitchell, 71, is laying plans to drill for more gas, not less, near home.

He sees the swarming by rivals into South America, Russia and the Middle East as charged with political risks. Computer-enhanced techniques will so bolster the efforts of exploration geologists over the next 10 years, he says, that a dry hole in North America will prove rare in the next century.

"We'll give a one-way airline ticket to anybody who wants to go overseas — to Russia, to Venezuela, or anywhere else," the bald-pated Mitchell said with a grin. "Leave this country to us. I think the potential of the next 10 years is excellent."

Mitchell has often taken a divergent path. While other independent gas producers forage in the gas-rich Gulf of Mexico, Mitchell Energy still gets more than 90 percent of gas output from wells in the Southwest.

A GAS field in Wise County, Texas, northwest of Fort Worth, has been the backbone of his business since he discovered it in 1953. His experimentation with new and unproven technologies has over time allowed Mitchell Energy to tap reserves in these areas that have stymied others — and at a low cost.

And because he has kept control of 63 percent of Mitchell Energy's common shares, valued at about $450 million, he has been able to diversify into areas that might be considered strange by some.

For instance, Mitchell Energy owns the 25,000-acre Woodlands development here, 27 miles north of Houston, headquarters to several companies, including Mitchell's.

Now, he plans to take advantage of the depressed market by snapping up domestic reserves that bigger companies have put on the auction block. Last year, Mitchell Energy paid the Houston-based Enron Corp. more than $11 million to increase its sizable drilling prospects in southeast New Mexico, where it now has 75,000 acres under lease, up from 14,000 in 1989.

Mitchell's optimism about gas is pegged partly to the hope that the nation will burn more gas as clean-air standards mandated by Congress tighten through the 1990s. Natural gas is cleaner burning than either coal or oil, and cheaper and more abundant in North America than oil.

THEN TOO, Auto plants, steel mills and other fuel-gulping manufacturers have substituted natural gas for fuel oil in the last few years because gas has been cheaper. The biggest potential demand is in the dozens of new electric power plants that the nation will build this decade.

Studies by the National Petroleum Council, a group of oil-industry executives, and the Gas Supply Committee, an industry association, put the nation's potential gas supplies at about 50 years at current consumption rates. And many industry executives and analysts agree with Mitchell that if prices were to double, to $2.50 or more per 1,000 cubic feet, drilling activity in the United States could triple, multiplying production from existing fields and the finding of new ones.

Prices have remained depressed, and the number of rigs drilling for natural gas is at a 50-year low partly because of a supply glut created by federal policies that overstimulated gas drilling in the late 70s in hopes of reducing the country's reliance on foreign oil.

Other contributors to the glut include improvements in technology that raised drilling success rates, and big companies that produced gas rapidly and regardless of price to generate cash for investing in what they considered brighter foreign projects.

THE LAST decade has been especially brutal for producers in North America, with its aging fields. Even Mitchell pared his employee count when prices collapsed in 1986. "We thought the gas bubble would be gone three or four years ago, but we were wrong," he said.

The son of a Greek immigrant railroad worker named Sava Paraskivoupolis who later adopted the name of a Midwestern paymaster called Mike Mitchell, Mitchell is one of a handful of independent oil-and-gas operators who can afford to be patient.

"George is a very sharp individual," said Carol Freedenthal, president of the Jofree Corp., a consulting firm for natural gas producers based in Houston. "He doesn't get caught in a bureaucratic mess like a lot of bigger companies. He can turn around relatively fast when things get tough."

In a year when most energy companies posted lower profits and plummeting stock values because of weak prices, Mitchell Energy's earnings held almost firm, slipping to $44.3 million in the fiscal year ended Jan. 31 from $47.3 million the previous year. Unlike many of its competitors, Mitchell never recorded a loss during the industry's roller-coaster ride through the 1980s. The closely held stock, meanwhile, has been trading in a narrow range around $15 a share.

ITS RELATIVE health is partly due to Mitchell's long-term supply contracts —at an average price last year of a healthy $2.80 per thousand cubic feet. More than half of its output is pledged in a contract with the Natural Gas Pipeline, a unit of Occidental Petroleum, which is paying $3.25 per 1,000 cubic feet for gas this year and more in later years.

Mitchell revised terms three years ago on the deal, originally signed in 1977 when gas supplies were tight and prices for long-term contracts exceeded $7.

George Mitchell

'We'll give a one-way airline ticket to anybody who wants to go overseas — to Russia, to Venezuela, or anywhere else. Leave this country to us. I think the potential of the next 10 years is excellent.'

George Mitchell, head, Mitchell Energy

Mitchell Energy has also been insulated from falling gas prices by its gas liquids processing business, which accounted for more than half of its operating profits, or $64.9 million, in the year ended Jan. 31.

The liquids business prospers when gas prices are low because gas is the basic raw material, and petrochemical plants use gas liquids like ethane and propane as fuel when they are cheaper than crude oil. Mitchell Energy, the nation's 12th-largest producer of liquids, figures it earns 14 cents of profit on a 35-cent gallon of gas liquids when gas sells for $1.50.

Even Wall Street likes gas liquids at the moment. The nation's leader, Phillips Petroleum, plans to sell 51 percent of its gas liquids unit, GPM Gas, to the public.

THE BIG gas processing company that Occidental Petroleum sold last year, Trident NGL Inc., just announced plans to raise about $300 million in an initial public offering.

The third leg of Mitchell Energy's operations, land development near Houston, is also doing well. The Woodlands, Mitchell's visionary planned community that Wall Street said was a costly extravagance in its 1960s infancy, is Houston's hottest housing development.

Its operating income rose to $22.7 million for the 1992 fiscal year, from $15.9 million a year earlier before a one-time charge of $11.6 million. About 10,000 people work in the area, and 33,000 live there, numbers Mitchell expects will multiply in another 30 or 40 years.

Mitchell has used his huge wealth — which briefly topped $1 billion and now is estimated at half that, mostly in his company's stock — to follow his convictions about energy as well as his broader interests in Houston and Galveston real estate, biotechnology ventures, scientific research and politics. (Paid $871,000 by Mitchell Energy in fiscal 1991, the most recent figure available, he also gets nearly $12 million a year in company dividends.)

IN GAS fields, Mitchell, a geologist trained at Texas A&M University, has backed untested technology, such as mobile gas processing stations, that has helped cut costs. Mitchell Energy has 57 gas processing plants, most of which can be hauled to other wells when aging wells are shut.

He is experimenting with a technique to free potentially large gas supplies from very hard, or "tight," rock formations by drilling horizontally through cracks in layers of shale.

Mitchell is one of the only natural-gas producers building its own gas storage site, in an underground coastal salt dome. It is also a partner with Conoco Inc. in a new plant to produce a component for cleaner-burning gasoline called methyl-tertiary butyl ether.

Mitchell, said a Houston energy consultant who has known him since the 1950s, "analyzes an opportunity, and then continues to chip away for five, 10, 15 or 20 years. He is very, very persistent and tenacious. Everything he does is related to building the value of his company."

Mitchell plans to have virtually all of his Mitchell Energy stock transferred to a foundation after his death. In addition to his holdings, his wife, Cynthia Woods Mitchell, owns more than a million shares. But only one of their 10 children has any role at Mitchell Energy. M. Kent Mitchell, a 38-year-old real estate developer in North Carolina, has been a director since 1988. Mitchell's other children pursue careers ranging from archeology to marine science to film directing.

MANY COMPANY employees wonder privately whether, foundation or no foundation, Mitchell Energy will be broken up after Mitchell departs. For the record, Mitchell says the growing Woodlands should not be sold for at least another 10 years and he maintains that natural gas — now supplying 24 percent of American needs — will become the nation's preferred energy source for the first half of the next century.

"It's a tough market out there now," he said. "Everybody is trimming back. But we will not find enough oil in this country to offset the declines in production. Natural gas is the fuel for the next 35 years."

Mitchell has Texas-sized view of energy future

N.Y. Times News Service

George P. Mitchell of Mitchell Energy says he has put millions of the company's money into nonenergy deals to spur Houston's depressed economy, help make it less dependent on energy and perhaps lure what he hopes will be growing companies into his Manhattan-sized development, the Woodlands.

A series of investments that Mitchell organized in small, new biotechnology companies in Houston in the early 1980s apparently is about to bear fruit, he said.

Stock in five of 18 companies spawned mostly from research at medical schools and hospitals in the Houston area either has been sold or will soon be sold for the first time this year, he said, with perhaps another three to follow.

He also organized and is a major financial supporter of the Houston Advanced Research Center, a consortium that started with Rice University, the University of Houston, Texas A&M and the University of Texas at Austin and now has nine members.

One of the center's biggest successes was research on magnets and site geology that played a role in Texas's winning of the contract for the superconducting super collider, the $8.4 billion atom smasher being built south of Dallas.

Mitchell personally contributes $3.5 million a year to the research center's $14 million annual budget.

A self-described political independent and an outspoken advocate of fees on cheap oil imports, in 1988 he supported the Democratic presidential nominee, Michael Dukakis, and his running mate, Lloyd Bentsen, the Texas senator and long-time Washington ally of Mitchell's on energy issues.

But this year, Mitchell says, he will be in George Bush's camp. One reason is that the president wants to continue federal funding for the superconducting super collider.

Domenici announces IRS sets EOR guidelines

Staff Report

Senator Pete Domenici, R-N.m., has announced that the head of the Internal Revenue Service has indicated that her agency should publish by this summer the final guidelines for the Enhanced Oil Recovery Tax Credit.

IRS Commissioner Shirley Peterson told Domenici that the Enhanced Oil Recovery regulations should be available to the public, in final form, by this summer. The testimony came during Peterson's appearance before the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Treasury, Postal Service and General Government, on which Domenici is the ranking Republican.

The Enhanced Oil Recovery credit, made law through a Domenici - authored bill in 1990, will enable the oil industry to begin receiving tax incentives for using enhanced oil recovery techniques. Although the IRS, under the umbrella of its parent regulations, a lack of final guidelines is limiting the intended effects of the tax credit.

"I am encouraged by the fact that these regulation will finally be issued in a conclusive form," Domenici said. "I am extremely concerned that foot dragging on the federal level is adding to the alarming decline of our domestic energy industry."

"When issued, the regulations will basically serve as a road map for companies on how to reach the credits," he said.

Low profits change Chevron plans

N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A year ago, Chevron Corp. Chairman Ken Derr recalls with a hint of nostalgia, his biggest problem was explaining to critics that high profits brought on by Iraq's invasion of Kuwait were only temporary.

Today, Derr finds himself in another predicament — explaining low profits to Chevron's shareholders. These include Pennzoil Co., the company's largest stockholder, whose paper losses currently total about $110 million from investing $2.2 billion in Chevron nearly three years ago.

"The oil business has fallen off a cliff," said Derr, 55, in his fourth year as Chevron's chief executive. "Oil and natural gas prices are down, and U.S. refining and marketing margins have been lousy."

Last year, San Francisco-based Chevron's net profits skidded 40 percent to $1.3 billion, largely due to the recession and low oil and natural gas prices. The company's annual revenues also declined — to $40.1 billion from $41.5 billion.

The short-term outlook isn't too bright, either. "I don't think anybody expects that the first quarter of 1992 is going to be anywhere near what the first quarter of 1991 was," Derr said.

To cope with the current slump, the nation's fourth-largest oil company is shedding less-profitable assets, shutting down some gas production until prices rebound and cutting operating costs, while looking abroad for new drilling projects to secure future supplies and profits. Wall Street analysts predict that Chevron will earn between 60 and 70 per share for the quarter ending Tuesday less than half the $1.59 earned a year earlier. This will mark the fourth straight year-over-year drop in Chevron's quarterly profits. Derr, citing company policy, declined to discuss specifics.

Industry watchers expect sluggish oil prices to continue to pressure earnings, although major cutbacks announced by Chevron two months ago — including eliminating at least 2,700 jobs and scaling back an inefficient Texas refinery — should improve results by year-end. By mid-1993, these and other steps could help boost annual after-tax profits by about $1 a share, analysts estimate.

Chevron economists forecast that oil prices will average only $19 a barrel this year, down from $21.50 last year. They also estimate that natural gas prices — already at their lowest point in a decade — will average $1.35 per thousand cubic feet, down from $1.65 last year.

As a result, most Wall Street analysts expect only a slim increase in this year's dividend payment toward yearend — if any. Chevron has raised its dividend for four straight years, to $3.25 per share from $2.55 a share. Pennzoil's share is now $107 million annually, up 16 percent from 1989.

The industry downturn has hit Chevron particularly hard.

One reason is its strong refining and marketing position on the West Coast, where gasoline-pricing competition has been the fiercest in the country and environmental requirements are stiff. Chevron, the nation's largest oil refiner, must spend $1.5 billion during the next five years to meet new state and federal clean-air laws.

At the other end of its domestic business — the wellhead — the company is not doing that well either. Chevron became the nation's largest producer of natural gas when it bought Tenneco's gas reserves in the Gulf of Mexico for nearly $2.6 billion in 1988. But with gas prices so low, this has not ignited earnings.

The company also is one of the largest oil producers in the contiguous 48 states. But much of the crude is lower grade than many other regions, particularly the Middle East. Last year, the price of heavy crude dropped faster than the price of lighter petroleum.

Making production even less attractive is the fact that much of the oil has already been extracted from domestic fields and getting the rest out is quite costly. In central California, for example, Chevron regularly injects steam into fields to drive oil to the surface.

Not surprisingly, Chevron is one of the highest-cost domestic producers among its competitors.

In 1990 — the latest available figures — the company spent $6.21 to produce a barrel of oil, compared with $5.99 for Shell, $5.56 for Amoco and Mobil, and $5.04 for Texaco, according to Mike Mayer, who follows the industry for Wertheim Schroeder in Burlingame.

Chevron may be a victim of circumstance, but some analysts contend it could have done a better job making, and hedging, its bets.

"Chevron spent more heavily on essentially domestic reserves in the 1980s than any major petroleum firm," noted Bernie Picchi, an oil analyst with Kidder Peabody, in a recent report. "The company spent $15.8 billion to purchase Gulf and Tenneco — more than twice the entire amount that they spent on non-U.S. upstream activities over the entire 1983-1990 period.

"It has been obvious for about the last 10 years that the future of American oil companies lies almost everywhere in the world except the United States," Picchi added. "Yet Chevron, by its spending pattern, seems to have been less conscious of this than most."

Chevron executives have heard the criticism before. "The ultimate value of the (Tenneco) acquisition remains to be seen," said Ray Galvin, president of Chevron's U.S. production company. "I'm extremely disappointed in the price we've been receiving for all of our gas."

At the time of its purchase, Chevron — along with its competitors — predicted that gas would be selling in the range of $2 to $2.25 per thousand cubic feet — at least 25 percent above the current price.

Chevron is taking a wait-it-out stance, recently shutting down a "substantial" portion of its gas production — as much as a third of its normal production, according to analysts.

The company also is accelerating a 2-year-old plan to dispose of marginally profitable or money-losing oil and gas fields in the United States, many of them former Gulf properties. In 1990 and 1991, the company sold or traded its interests in about 800 of its 1,800 domestic fields, generating proceeds of $628 million. Now its goal is to shrink to about 400 U.S. fields, concentrated in California, Louisiana and Texas.

In addition, Chevron is striving to slash total operating costs by about $600 million, or 50 a barrel of sales, by mid-1993. California's biggest company plans to trim its 55,000-member workforce by at least 5 percent this year.

These are not the first such cutbacks at Chevron. The company's workforce peaked at 80,000 in 1984 after the Gulf acquisition. "There's clearly a high level of anxiety on the part of people," Derr said of the current restructuring. "It's a difficult situation because a number of people have been through this before."

Chevron also is deferring pay raises to all its employees, including Derr, and has reduced hiring. This year's proxy shows that Derr's base pay rose to $810,602 in 1991 from $682,488 a year earlier. But his bonus fell to $575,000 from $675,000.

The company also may eventually relocate more workers from San Francisco to San Ramon. "Whether we'll continue to have three downtown office buildings full of company employees for the long term, I don't know," Derr said. "The quality of life (in San Ramon) is better and the cost is better."

Chevron has 11,000 workers in Contra Costa County, including 4,000 at its San Ramon office complex, compared with 2,800 in San Francisco. "If we were starting from scratch, we wouldn't be in San Francisco," Derr said, but he added that the cost of relocating to a state like Texas — as Exxon did from New York City a few years ago — was too high to justify.

Where Chevron is spending money, it is emphasizing its international operations, where it is among the lowest-cost producers. About 61 percent of the planned $2.8 billion exploration and production budget for 1992 is earmarked for international projects. In 1985, the percentage was closer to 32 percent.

The company plans to boost foreign oil production by more than 20 percent during the next five years, in areas such as Indonesia, Australia, the North Sea, Papua New Guinea and West Africa — some of them former Gulf reserves. It also is waiting for federal approval to pursue oil-exploration deals in Vietnam.

One key foreign project — to tap the 525-million barrel Hibernia oilfield in eastern Canada — has been delayed until 1997 because of the withdrawal of Gulf Canada, one of the four partners.

Negotiations continue with officials of Kazakhstan to develop the multibillion-barrel Tengiz field near the Caspian Sea, a long-stalled project that would sharply boost the company's foreign reserves.

"We're just beginning to pick up the discussions again," said Vice Chairman Dennis Bonney. "It's a big, complex project that has been greatly slowed down by all the political changes that took place in the former Soviet Union last year, and in effect put new people in charge of the negotiations."

Kazakhstan officials recently brought on New York-based J.P. Morgan & Co. to help assess the fairness of the deal, along with officials from Oman, an Islamic country well-versed in negotiating with Western oil producers. An oil-production proposal from Kazakhstan is currently on the table at Chevron, which declines to disclose the details.

However, unless an agreement is reached soon, Kazakhstan has threatened to open the oilfield to other bidders.

BEG plans course on infield gas reserves

Staff Report

A short course on the potential for infield gas reserve growth is being presented in Midland by the Bureau of Economic Geology on May 12.

The course is being co-sponsored by the Midland office of Oxy U.S.A. Inc. and will be held at their offices in the Texas National Bank building, 6 Desta Drive.

The course will present successful examples of infield reserve growth from onshore Texas gas fields as well as key concepts and techniques that operators can employ to identify and develop infield resources in their own fields or in properties under consideration.

This short course is designed for geologists and engineers responsible for gas field development and exploitation for maximizing recovery from gas reservoirs. The concepts presented are also of importance for production and exploration geoscientists, petrophysicists and geophysicists interested in advanced gas reservoir evaluation.

The course, presented by staff members of the BEG and consultants, will use a combination of presentations, sample data sets and posters.

It will be held from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Cost is $55, which includes bound course notes and lunch.

Registration is available by calling the BEG at (512)471-1534 or writing the BEG at The University of Texas at Austin, University Station, Box X, Austin Texas 78713-7508.

Shell Chemical to acquire Goodyear resins business

HOUSTON (AP) — Shell Chemical Co. has signed a letter of intent to buy Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.'s polyester resins business, company officials said Friday.

The Goodyear operation includes a 700-employee plant in Point Pleasant, W.Va., and a technical center in Akron, Ohio, along with sales activities, Shell said.

The major product of the Goodyear business is polyethylene terephthalate, a component used in the manufacture of plastic beverage bottles, food containers and other packaging. It also produces a resin that uses recycled bottles in the manufacture of new food containers.

"We are interested in acquiring the business because it holds a strong competitive position in a rapidly growing area," Michael Grasley, Shell Chemical president, said. "Also it will complement Shell's existing technology and feedstock capabilities."

No terms of the deal were announced. A definitive sales agreement still needs to be negotiated and be approved by both companies.

Bush chairman says U.S. hooked on oil

■ Nation will not be able to shake its addiction to foreign crude oil says former Commerce Secretary.

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Former U.S. Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, now serving as chairman of President Bush's re-election bid, says the nation won't be able to break its addiction to foreign oil.

"We can't make the country less dependent on foreign oil," Mosbacher said. "We should be doing more drilling for more oil and gas, but we're never going to get the dependence on oil down a great deal."

With economic incentives from the government, the domestic oil industry could continue to meet half the nation's oil demands for a while, Mosbacher said.

But eventually Arab nations and other oil producers will supply most of the country's oil because domestic resources are dwindling, he asserted.

"This is a very mature oil province, which means we've been drilling up the big ones for a long, long time," Mosbacher said.

As the founder of Houston-based Mosbacher Energy Corp., Mosbacher voluntarily removed himself from oil industry policy discussions while serving as the nation's commerce chief from 1989 until this month. He plans to return to the oil business after Bush's campaign ends in November.

Mosbacher's comments about the global oil trade mirror dire predictions by industry analysts, who say the U.S. energy sector is dwindling in favor of exploration and production in other parts of the world.

The United States gets about 42 percent of its oil from foreign sources, contributing about $50 billion to the nation's annual trade deficit. The congressional Office of Technology Assessment predicts that 73 percent of the nation's annual crude consumption will come from imports by 2020.

Mosbacher said the nation could help reduce dependence on imports by switching more to natural gas.

"There's every reason to use more gas, which helps not only the U.S. gas producer, but it also helps clean up the environment, it's less expensive than oil, and it's here," he said.

However, the natural gas industry has been suffering from a production glut that has sent prices into a nose-dive.

Mosbacher is on tour promoting the economic revitalization proposals in Bush's State of the Union address.

Mosbacher said passage of Bush's new proposals and his energy package would help the oil industry by providing tax breaks and encouraging domestic production.

For instance, Bush proposed this week a "tax investment allowance" for 1992 for purchase of industrial equipment, including oil and gas rigs.

Bush's energy proposals have been stalled in Congress in part because of concerns about the environmental impact of increased offshore drilling and exploration in Alaska.

Mosbacher said Bush's supporters "have obviously not done a very good job of making people realize that the Congress is sitting on this energy package."

Bush was once a Texas oil executive himself, and he has been a co-investor with Mosbacher in Hollywood Marine, a Houston barge company.

'There's every reason to use more gas, which helps not only the U.S. gas producer, but it also helps clean up the environment, it's less expensive than oil, and it's here.'

Robert Mosbacher

Mosbacher predicted a return to economic growth – and a resurgence in Bush's popularity – toward the November presidential election.

"I think he's reached the nadir, the low point in his political career," Mosbacher said of Bush's standing in the polls.

Gasoline prices cheaper than a decade ago

WASHINGTON — Gasoline prices, adjusted for inflation and assuming 1991 taxes, were 94 cents a gallon cheaper last year than they were a decade ago, an analysis by the American Petroleum Institute reveals.

According to API, the retail price of gasoline that consumers paid in 1991 averaged $1.196 a gallon. In 1981, by contrast, the retail price averaged $1.353 per gallon.

However, if adjustment is made for inflation and taxes, the price of a gallon of gasoline in 1991 would have been $2.138 - or 94 cents above the 1991 price.

The analysis provides historical comparisons of gasoline prices back to 1920. It shows that in 1991 gasoline prices were at their lowest level in four years and were two cents per gallon lower than in 1990.

Comparing the price of gasoline with other consumer products, API noted that at the end of 1991 all consumer items measured in the Consumer Price Index stood at 412.7 compared to the base year of 1967. This means that an item which cost $1.00 in 1967, cost $4.127 last year. The analysis pointed out that gasoline stood at 373.7 last year.

Among other goods and services whose prices have risen more than gasoline, API listed physicians services (613); newspapers (450.0); postage (490.4); and dry cleaning (446.1).

API reported that in 1991 the average cost of gasoline per mile traveled was 5.7 cents. The Institute said that this was the second lowest cost since 1947. According to API, the only time it was lower was in 1988, when the per mile cost averaged 5.6 cents.

Marathon seals exploration deal with Russians

HOUSTON (AP) — Marathon Oil Co. has reached an agreement with Russian officials to do a feasibility study concerning oil and gas exploration off Sakhalin Island.

Although the agreement covers only a study of the area, the companies involved expect the pact will lead to an exploration program. A letter of intent for the deal was announced in January.

Houston-based Marathon, McDermott International and Mitsui & Co. Ltd. signed what they called a definitive agreement Monday with the Russian ministry of fuel and energy.

Marathon previously has estimated Sakhalin exploration would cost $10 billion, making it the biggest deal ever for Marathon.

Arch eyes marketing to raise stock prices

INDUSTRY IN REVIEW

N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH, Texas — Arch Petroleum said it has employed Capital Development Associates, a marketing and investment relations firm, to tout the Fort Worth-based oil and gas company to investors.

Arch said the "major awareness campaign," designed to boost its stock price, is "aimed at shareholders, potential investors, market makers and brokers throughout the United States."

Arch President Larry Kalas said Capital Development Associates will publicize Arch to "hundreds of thousands of potential investors" through a full-color newsletter, Insider's Preview, and a companion publication, Broker's Advantage, sent to 5,000 brokers.

"We do not believe that market makers are recognizing the present values and potential of the company," Kalas said Wednesday in a company announcement.

Market makers are securities dealers who maintain firm bid and offer prices in a given stock by standing ready to buy and sell blocks of shares at publicly quoted prices.

Kalas said the result of the Arch publicity campaign "should be increased awareness and fuller recognition by market makers and the investing public of our substantial oil and gas reserves and prospects for the future."

Mike Breard, vice president of the Dominick & Dominick securities firm in Dallas, said the awareness campaign should help boost Arch's visibility among potential investors. He said the stock is "definitely undervalued."

Because oil prices are at moderate levels and natural gas prices are deeply depressed, "oil and gas stocks, big and small, are not doing too well," Breard said.

He said Arch, an exploration and production company, "has a very good record" of acquiring oil and gas fields, boosting their production and milking healthy profits from them.

Arch could see "a very substantial" beneficial impact on its future earnings if it receives permission from the Texas Railroad Commission, which regulates the oil and gas industry in the state, to increase natural gas production from existing wells in the Keystone Field in Winkler County in West Texas, Breard said.

Arch's net production from the wells could total 20 million to 30 million cubic feet of gas per day if it receives a favorable ruling from the commission, he said.

Presently, gas from the wells is reinjected into underground formations to maintain pressure that boosts oil production from the wells, Breard said.

Arch maintains that oil output from the wells is declining and that it would be more beneficial now to produce gas from the wells, Breard said.

Bass Enterprises Production Co., the oil and gas arm of the billionaire Bass family of Fort Worth, is opposing Arch's request, Breard said.

The Bass firm, which has ownership interests in wells in the Keystone Field, apparently wants to continue oil production from the wells and produce gas from them in future years, Breard said.

Even if Arch were to be turned down by the railroad commission, "the gas is going to be produced sooner or later" from the wells, Breard said.

For its fiscal year that ended Oct. 31, Arch reported a net income of $7 million, or 83 cents per common share, on revenues of $16 million. The company reported record revenues, earnings and cash flow.

Amoco to produce offshore Malta

Amoco Corp. announced that officials of Amoco Mediterranean Petroleum Co., AGIP International B.V. and the Republic of Malta have signed a production sharing contract for 837,700 offshore acres located about 60 miles south of Malta.

Amoco Mediterreanean has agreed to operate an exploration program that includes a commitment for acquiring seismic data and drilling at least one well in the next three years.

Energy industry fights energy proposals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Officials from a broad range of energy industries and other business groups this past week joined in opposing congressional proposals that they said would cripple offshore oil and gas and nuclear power development.

"It should not be up to Congress to choose which fuels businesses should use," Jeffrey H. Joseph, vice president of domestic policy for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said at a news conference.

Joseph was joined by officials of the American Nuclear Energy Council, American Gas Association, Edison Electric Institute and other industry groups.

The Senate approved wide-ranging energy legislation in February and the House Commerce Committee approved its version March 12. The House Interior and Merchant Marine committees, which also have jurisdiction, have scheduled action for April 8.

The House bill would expand the nation's Strategic Petroleum Reserve of 570 million barrels to 1 billion barrels by requiring refiners to earmark 1 percent of their output or the cash equivalent.

Laz Financial arranges merger of Faco-Sterling

Laz Financial Corp., a former Midland company, has arranged for the merger between Faco Energy Inc., a private Texas oil and gas producer, and Sterling Investments Ltd., a public company.

Laz Financial, which was formerly Natura Energy of Midland, is a shareholder in Faco, and will receive common stock in Sterling equal to 13.7 percent of the total post transaction outstanding shares of Sterling and a $500,000 fee for arranging the merger, at the closing.

Faco received a $250,000 secured line of credit for a subsidiary from Laz and a $9,487,500 drilling fund was arranged through Penrod Oil Co. of Denver, for drilling on leases in Milam County, Texas. Drilling started under the program on March 22 and will continue throughout the year.

Faco will be drilling up to 600 wells under the program. The first well was completed on March 24 and initial production was 144 barrels per day. The well was drilled to a depth of 800 ft. and is producing out of the Olmos Sand formation. The lease covered by the drilling program covers 3,500 acres with the 600 wells covering approximately 1,500 acres of the total lease.

Phillips head sees growth in oil imports

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The head of one of the nation's largest oil companies warned that the country is headed toward importing virtually all its oil.

Restrictive environmental policies are forcing companies to look at other countries for new prospects, said C.J. "Pete" Silas, chairman of Phillips Petroleum of Bartlesville, Okla.

When the best exploration areas in the country are off limits, Silas said, Phillips will do what others have done: drill wells somewhere else.

Silas' statements Tuesday echoed those of Allen Murray, Mobil Corp.'s chairman, who told a news conference in Houston last year that the industry "is being thrown out of the U.S." because drilling is restricted and too costly.

American oil companies are expected to spend 25 percent less in the United States this year and increase spending abroad by 10 percent, the investment house of Salomon Brothers reported in its annual study of oil company spending.

Silas spoke at the Junior Achievement breakfast honoring its 1992 Hall of Fame inductees.

Current laws restrict access to leases the companies have acquired and make other areas, such as the Alaskan National Wildlife Refuge, off-limits to drilling, Silas said.

For Phillips Petroleum this means there will be more activity in China, the North Sea, Africa, Indonesia and South America.

Phillips was a partner with Chevron in developing the Point Arguello field off California, now producing at half its capacity of 100,000 barrels per day and years later than it was scheduled to go on line. Silas said the company has written off its $244 million investment in the project.

As a result of hard times in the industry, Phillips is now cutting costs. That includes trimming its work force by 1,100 companywide. The goal is to increase the company's cash flow by $150 million in the first year and to $200 million a year within three years.

In Bartlesville, a city of 35,000, Phillips will reduce its work force of 5,200 by 850 this month.

What is happening at Phillips is a microcosm typical of the cutbacks now going on throughout the oil industry. Companies are slimming down, and independents are going out of business. In Louisiana, the job loss this year is expected to be at least 2,500 jobs.

And Silas predicted it will continue.

"In extreme cases, we may have to leave the country to stay in business at all," he said.

Refinery jobs are being shed too. Chevron plans to close part of its old refinery at Port Arthur, Texas.

The result will be more crude oil and refined products, such as gasoline, being imported into the United States this decade.

"Americans think we can have a zero-risk society," Silas said. "If we try, we will all go broke."

Environment losing support of oil industry

HOUSTON – Two years ago, the oil industry was trumpeting the "decade of the environment" with Earth Day extravaganzas, slick ads touting its good works for furry creatures and gentle words for environmentalists.

But the glossy rhetoric is start ing to wear off.

Today, oil executives giving after-dinner speeches are likely to be firing back at environmentalists who persuaded Congress to slam the door on the most promising spots left for drilling in America.

Oil executives are denouncing as outright foolish parts of the new Clean Air Act they say will cost them billions and do little to clean up the air.

It's not hard to understand why oil executives are irked.

Natural gas prices have collapsed, crude prices are back in the doldrums and oil producers are struggling to stay in the black. Although refining profits are improving, they were lousy for a couple of years. Falling petrochemical prices also have taken a toll.

Nowhere was the anger and frustration more evident than in the corridors and meeting rooms of the American Petroleum Institute's convention here in November.

The message oil executiyes were sending at that meeting "is that they feel like they're literally being thrown out of the United States," said institute President Charles J. DiBona.

"They see increasingly large areas being cut off to them" for exploration and production, he said. Practically the only places left to drill, he added, are the western Gulf of Mexico and private land.

Sen. Malcolm Wallop of Wyoming, who co-authored the federal energy bill, told oil producers at that meeting they were nuts to keep giving money to organizations like the Audubon Society that work against them.

The industry backlash has been largely verbal – companies haven't scuttled corporate giving to environmental groups or canceled "green" programs.

To the contrary, officials with environmental groups say they've noticed green marketing programs by oil companies are still on the upswing, particularly in California, where the public is especially sensitive to environmental affronts.

Greenpeace spokesman Bill Walker said oil companies are trying to convince the public they're working in lockstep with environmental groups.

"They're still trying to position themselves as being kinder and gentler," he said.

Top oil executives admit they're losing their cool more often over what they call dirty dealing by environmental groups waging misinformation campaigns.

"These groups need conflict to raise money. You don't raise money on compromise," said C.J. "Pete" Silas, API chairman and chief executive of Phillips Petroleum.

"The dishonesty of the other side is discouraging," agreed DiBona of the petroleum institute.

Yes, it's true — chicken soup really does help those suffering from colds, "bugs" and other minor illnesses. So do tea, lemon and honey, and other home remedies. See, Grandma was right...

You know the symptoms — you wake up with a scratchy throat, upset stomach, chills and fever, and realize that you have just come down with another one of those infamous "bugs" that seem to plague everyone from time to time. And while you feel too miserable to go to work or school, you really aren't sick enough to go to the doctor.

So now what? Do you drag yourself out of your sick bed, get dressed and go to the supermarket (where you expose innocent strangers to your germs) to get some over-the-counter medication, or do you try to get some relief with remedies you already have at home?

People have "doctored" themselves with home remedies for generations. These remedies can range from the strange and mysterious to the just plain comforting, but the most accepted and beloved home remedy is, of course, chicken soup.

Dr. Henry Page, health and safety consultant to Midland Presbyterian Homes, said that chicken soup can be of benefit during a minor illness, since it can help replace fluids, electrolytes and other nutrients lost through vomiting or diarrhea. "It can't hurt anything, and can be of certain value," he said.

"Chicken soup will do it every time," said Joe Ann Murphy, mother of five and grandmother of 14. However, she said her mother had a different remedy. "My mother used to make me potato soup when I was a kid" and was sick.

Doctors advise rest and fluids for those patients who are suffering from minor illnesses and other "bugs," and many people follow that advice.

But grown-ups who don't usually go to the doctor themselves are more likely to seek a doctor's advice when dealing with a sick child.

"You don't want to chance it with your kids," said Paula Howbert, mother of two elementary school-aged children, "because you know how you feel but you don't know how your kids feel. I rarely go to the doctor myself (but) I heard that if a kid has a fever of 101 degrees or more, that means an infection and you go to the doctor."

For more minor illnesses, she said, her family relies on Gatorade. "We go get a ton of it and that's what we drink the whole day. I hear it gives the body back what it has gotten rid of."

Ray Martinez of Midland said his mother was a curandera, or curer, when he was growing up in Houston, and used a lot of home remedies to help him and his brothers and sisters over the bumps and "bugs" of childhood.

Today, when he has a minor illness, his routine is "rest and drink fluids — that's the whole routine." His fluid of choice is "whatever sounds good."

Fruit juice is the drink of choice at the Murphy home — orange juice, apple juice, pineapple juice and just about any other flavor of fruit juice — because "it's good for you," Ms. Murphy said. "Or 7-Up if they (children) are throwing up — or broth."

Fluid replacement is extremely important during a minor illness, Dr. Page said, because "when you have a cold, you are a sitting duck for any stray germ that comes around. You can become a whole lot sicker."

Another fluid that Dr. Page believes can be helpful during a minor illness is tea. "Tea per se is quite good because it's not anywhere near as irritating as coffee, and there's just enough caffeine in it to give you a lift." Tea also can be brewed to be very strong, very weak or any strength in between — whatever suits the patient.

As a home remedy, tea can be useful in other ways, he said. "Strong tea can be used on skin for burns — minor burns." The tannic acid in the tea can help soothe and heal minor burns that are so common in everyday life, but the tea needs to be very strong, Page said. "Let it steep for a long, long time" and make sure the tea has cooled thoroughly before applying to a burn.

Honey is another common food that many people use in home remedies. Martinez said if he has a cough, he takes honey and lemon as a cough syrup.

In fact, wrote Jean Carper in her book, "The Food Pharmacy," honey has been used as a folk medicine for many years. (However, Ms. Carper wrote that the Centers for Disease Control warn that honey can be dangerous for infants less than one year old.)

"Vermont folk physician D.C. Jarvis in his best-selling book, 'Folk Medicine' (1958), recommends honey for coughs, muscle cramps, burns, stuffy nose, sinusitis, hay fever, bed wetting in children and insomnia," she wrote.

Dr. Page disagrees, at least in part. "Nutritionists ascribe all kinds of properties to honey that it doesn't have," he said.

But one property that honey does have is the possibility of helping with pressure sores, such as bed sores, he said.

"Honey could be used for (as a dressing) a deep sloughing wound. It changes the bacterium in the wound so it doesn't smell so bad. Sugar and honey change the flora and fauna inside (pressure) wounds. I don't think it

Ladies association has March luncheon

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Columnist-author Frances Weaver of Pueblo, Colo., and Lake George, N.Y., was the featured speaker for the Midland Country Club Ladies Association's March luncheon meeting.

McKnight-Harrison

Choosing the topic, "I'm Not As Old As I Used To Be," Frances delighted her audience with her talk, filled with humor, mixed with messages, urging older women to look for the opportunities and options available to them.

Her main message to the assemblage was to get out and try new things, citing how her new found interest in kite flying led to a writing career that began in her 50s. A piece on her leisure time pursuit was accepted by Vogue magazine. Since then, she has written other articles for Vogue, authored several books, and writes a column for newspapers in Colorado and Upstate New York. In addition, she has a syndicated radio show.

Frances shared the charming story of how her first book, "The Girls with the Grandmother Faces," got its title. Her granddaughter, Miss Sarah, now 15 but a mere 3 at the time, was watching as her grandmother tidied up the house.

"What're are you doin', Grandma?"

"I'm straightening the living room. The girls are coming for bridge this afternoon."

"What girls, Grandma?" asked the little girl.

"You know, Sarah. The girls I play bridge with on Wednesdays. My friends..."

"Yeah, yeah, I know," she crowed. "You mean, the girls with the grandmother faces."

Frances says that when she first began watching older women about the time she was turning 40, she observed that many were whining, instead of enjoying the time and the freedom they had never had before. "Avoiding those pitfalls of boredom and stagnation became a crusade with me," says Frances. "No way would I let myself get into a rut or lose my enthusiasm for the world around me. Too much is at stake — the rest of our lives."

Of course, she says it all boils down to attitude and the sincere desire to lead an interesting and productive life.

Frances is mother of four, grandmother of eight, and a widow since 1980, who had shared a 34-year-old marriage with a surgeon. She chose a return to college as a way of changing her lifestyle by enrolling in courses at Adirondack Community College in Glens Falls, N.Y., and participating in writers' workshops and conferences to develop her writing skills.

Frances left us with the thought: "Behind the eyes is the girl that's been there all these years. She needs to hold on to the rapture of being alive."

This columnist particularly enjoyed visiting with Frances over lunch. I had heard her speak once beore, at the 75th anniversary celebration of our Pi Beta Phi chapter at Kansas State University, and was eager to hear more from this writer, whose "style is a cross between Andy Rooney and Erma Bombeck," according to one book editor. We reminisced about our Kansas heritage and our years at the same Pi Phi house.

The luncheon featured Shamrock Salad, Irish Crepes and Key Lime Pie. Hostess for the social hour in the foyer beforehand were Sue (Mrs. Dan) Secker, Sandra (Mrs. George) Staley and Nadine (Mrs. Tom) Craddick.

Among those enjoying the afternoon at the club were Shirley (Mrs. Randall) Johnston, Virginia (Mrs. Bill) Rutter, Glenda Pearce, Babs (Mrs. Richard) Sevier, Kathy (Mrs. Tom) Holland, Megan (Mrs. Richard) Booth and Marianne (Mrs. Will) Green with her guest, Kathryn (Mrs. Jim) Bennett of Houston.

SUE (MRS. BILL) BABER of Willows, Calif., joined her mother, Laulie LaForce, and her brother, Watson LaForce, and his wife, Patti, for a long weekend in Santa Fe recently. She returned with them to her hometown for a week of activities with old friends.

Due to an injury caused by a fall in icy weather, Laulie's other daughter, Nancy Keyes of Philadelphia, Pa., was unable to join the group, as originally planned.

CHESLEE MILLER, bride-elect of Michael Lemen, was honored recently with a shower at the home of Wyvonne (Mrs. Keith) Spradlin. Co-hostesses were Kristin (Mrs. George) Bennett, Janet Foster, Patti Sinkin, Marie (Mrs. Mike) Marinovich and Jamie (Mrs. Bob) Todor.

Plans are being made for an April 25 wedding at Horseshoe Bay.

Parents of the couple are former Midlanders Caroline and Marty Miller of Lafayette, La., and Doris and Robert Lemen of Corpus Christi and formerly of Abilene.

Out-of-town guests attended from Austin, Houston, Abilene and Odessa.

A BANANA SPLIT PARTY recently honored Tiffany Grafa, a graduating senior at Lee High School. The event was hosted by her grandmothers, Angie Grafa and Elizabeth Blankinship, in the Grafa home.

Guests built their own banana splits amid balloon bouquets and Texas Tech memorabilia, which included the freshman beanie worn by Tiffany's dad, Trey, while at Tech.

Tiffany plans to attend Texas Tech, where she has been named a McFadden Leader Scholarship recipient. She is the daughter of Barbra and Trey Grafa and the granddaughter of Angie and Carroll Grafa and Elizabeth and Herbert Blankinship.

Become steeped in basics of tea

By Cecelia Goodnow
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — Peter Goggi slurps more than 1,000 blends of tea a day on his overseas buying trips for the Thomas J. Lipton Co.

Taste buds at attention, Goggi sizes up subtleties of color, aroma and flavor. With a swish and a slurp, experienced tasters can tell where the tea was grown, what the growing conditions were and whether it was harvested properly.

"We always add a teaspoon of skim milk," Goggi said. "It helps to bring out color differences. Tea should be a nice, bright, cheery color."

Goggi, son of a wine taster and grandson of a champagne maker, may have a keener palate than the rest of us. But even the average tea-bag dunker can learn to appreciate the distinctions among some 3,000 varieties of tea grown from Sri Lanka to Kenya to South Carolina.

"Transferring from coffee to tea is really not that difficult," said Miranda Pirzada, co-owner of the Teahouse Kuan Yin in Wallingford, Wash. "It's really more interesting because there's a great difference in flavors."

Want something aromatic but mild, like a rich sherry? Try Keemun. Perhaps you're seeking a tea that is aged in caves for 12 years, evoking a cool forest floor in taste and aroma. Aha! The menu lists just the thing — Pu-erh tea.

IF IT WEREN'T for the Boston Tea Party, you would already know these things. Tea was a chic drink in the Colonies until the Brits taxed it and created a nation of Diet Coke drinkers. Now 80 percent of the domestic tea market is iced tea — a beverage that is uniquely American.

So low is the general level of sophistication that Lipton, probably the nation's best-known brand, markets itself as a sort of Holiday Inn of tea — comfortable and predictable.

"Our goal," said Goggi, Lipton's director of tea buying, "is to make sure the person in Washington and the person in Texas and the person in Maine always gets the same blend wherever they buy it."

"The people that are interested in great coffee are the same people who are going to be interested in great tea," said Mary Noeshe, owner of Teacup, a Queen Anne shop that opened about a year ago.

'Transferring from coffee to tea is really not that difficult. It's really more interesting because there's a great difference in flavors.'

— Miranda Pirzada
co-owner, Teahouse Kuan Yin

Exactly what makes great tea is a topic of heated debate. Serious tea drinkers agree on nothing more than that the water should be boiling and you must never, never use the microwave. (The molecules don't release oxygen the way kettle-boiled water does.)

"It should have flavor," Pirzada said. "You shouldn't put up with brown water."

Tea can be boiled down to a few basics. Like wine, it often takes its name from its place of origin. Darjeeling, considered the champagne of teas, comes from a mountainous region of northern India. The same bush, transplanted to southern India, would produce a distinctly different flavor.

"It's the climate and the soil, just like grapes," said Pirzada, a direct importer who samples dozens of teas on overseas buying trips.

THE TEA PLANT, camellia sinensis, is a cousin of our own ever-present camellia. Left wild, it grows taller than a house, but commercial plants are kept waist-high for easier harvesting by the laborers who handpick the tender new shoots.

Tea leaves are so heat-sensitive that one variety, Hunan Gu Zhang Mao Jian, is harvested only at 4 a.m. for 10 days in the spring, said Frederic Burleigh of Teacup.

Although tea thrives in tropical and subtropical climates, it will grow almost anywhere — even in Seattle. When World War II dried up Seattle's pipeline for Japanese green tea, pharmacists at the University of Washington grew their own brew.

"Yes, we harvested a tea crop this fall and it made excellent tea, too," pharmacy dean Forest Goodrich told reporters in November 1942. The only catch, Goodrich said, is that it takes eight to 10 years for the plants to mature and no one could afford the labor cost to harvest the tea.

"It is definitely established, however, that the Northwest climate and soil are perfectly capable of growing tea," he said.

Green, black and oolong tea all come from the same plant. The only difference is how they are processed. Leaves that are steamed and then baked to preserve the natural color become green tea — the type sold in Japanese restaurants.

Black tea, which makes up the bulk of the American market, results from leaves that are dried on withering racks, crushed and baked. Oxidation — what the trade calls fermentation — turns the leaves black. Oolong tea is partially fermented and has greenish brown leaves.

ORANGE PEKOE (pronounced pecko) isn't a flavor, it's a grade of black-leaf tea — a common point of confusion, even among some self-appointed experts.

"Generally the tea snobs don't know what they're talking about," Goggi said. "They usually start the conversation by saying, 'Orange pekoe is my favorite tea.' Right away I know they don't know what they're talking about."

Tea labeled b.o.p. consists of broken orange pekoe leaves, about the size of cracked wheat. Teas may have smaller particles, called fannings, or powdery bits called dust.

Most teas are blends of whole and broken leaves, and preferences vary by region, Goggi said. In Iraq, one of the world's biggest consumers of tea, aficionados care more about the size of the leaf than the "liquor" that ends up in the teacup.

"Generally," Pirzada said, "a whole-leaf grade will give more aroma, less color."

In her opinion, broken orange pekoe yields the best balance of color, aroma and flavor.

Even in dried form, there are obvious distinctions between blends. Genmaicha, a Japanese green tea, is dotted with specks of puffed rice, inspiring the nickname "Popcorn Tea." Shou-Mei, also known as "Old Man's Eyebrows," has soft young leaves with a white cast.

Flavors continue to evolve after the tea is steeped.

"The top of the pot is different from the middle and the bottom," Pirzada said.

IN CHINA, elders spend hours savoring the subtle fluctuations of Kung Fu Cha, or Old Man's Tea. "Ah, the floweriness is coming out in the fourth steep," they might note, "but the depth is greater in the seventh steep."

The arcane nature of tea, with its abundant varieties and rich history, can be overwhelming to novices.

"A lot of customers are very put off," Noe said. "They're intimidated."

To ease the culture shock, she includes the familiar Twinings brand among the 100 or so varieties on her shelves.

With so many blends available, purists shudder at the popularity of flavored and scented teas. The only naturally scented tea, Miller said, is Chinese jasmine. Silver-tipped jasmine is the finest grade, with a delicate scent. Lesser varieties, like cheap perfume, will bowl you over.

One of Teacup's best sellers is apricot tea, a flavored concoction that contains a lower grade of tea than unadorned varieties.

"I have quite a few customers that are connoisseurs that absolutely turn their noses up," Noe said.

Even the venerable Earl Grey has come under fire because it is scented with oil of bergamot, a Mediterranean citrus.

"I always hate it when people go for the Earl Grey," Pirzada said with a shudder. Bowing to market pressures, the teahouse reluctantly added it to the menu.

"It's kind of like having a flavored wine," Pirzada said. "They don't know that tea itself can be a wonderful experience."

would hurt — I'm talking about huge gangrenous wounds like bed sores or pressure sores." In treating any normal wound, honey "is not indicated," he warned.

Some experts advise using juice and honey to recover from more exotic illnesses. According to Ms. Carper, the World Health Organization's recipe for Traveler's Diarrhea is: "Fill one glass with eight ounces orange juice, a pinch of table salt and ½ teaspoon honey. Fill another glass with eight ounces distilled water and ¼ teaspoon baking soda. Alternate drinking from each glass."

In getting over a minor but uncomfortable illness, sometimes the simplest actions are the best.

When he has a cold, Dr. Page said, "I take extra vitamin C." The idea that vitamin C can cure a cold is "very controversial," he said, but "it makes you feel better because you are doing something for it."

Elvia Hernandez of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, said, "I can't afford to get sick. (When I get sick) I work out of my home. Before I had a secretary, I used to transfer the phones to my house" when she had a minor illness.

One thing that helps in her recovery is to "stay in my pajamas all day," she laughed.

"If I have a cold, I have lemon and honey and (use) Vicks rub. It's an old-fashioned remedy that my mom passed down to me and I passed down to my kids."

Ms. Murphy agreed. After all, she said, "Nothing really works like TLC (tender loving care)."

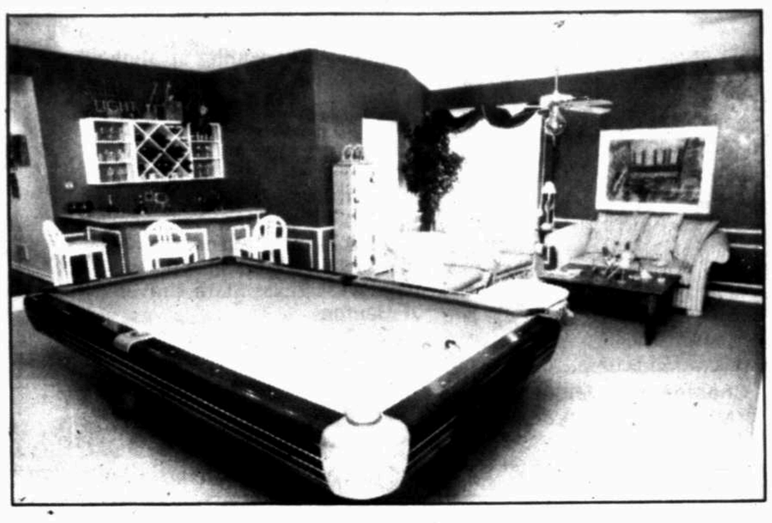
PARADE OF HOMES



The Coles' game room, with its pool table and bar with neon signs as decorations, was made from what used to be two bedrooms.

The den in the Coles' home features a zebra-print rug, floor-to-ceiling bookshelves and natural wood floor.

Dominating the Coles' master bedroom is the massive bed that Stephen Cole made.

"Elegant" and "contemporary" are the two words Laree Cole used to describe the home where she, her husband Stephen and their two children live.

"I like elegance but I also like a touch of contemporary," Mrs. Cole said. "The home is traditional but decorated in contemporary because that's my taste. We do as much contemporary as we can with a traditional home."

The Coles' 4,850-square-foot home, at 2010 Harvard, was built 41 years ago in what is now considered "Old Midland." The Coles have lived there five or six years, and have done a lot of remodeling throughout the house. "My husband did a lot of the remodeling himself," Mrs. Cole said.

The home has four bedrooms (or three bedrooms and a work-out room, Mrs. Cole said) and three-and-a-half baths. The builder was Oscar Chambers of Dallas; decorators were Gina McKim and Nancy Coleman.

What used to be two other bedrooms has been remodeled into a very large game room, complete with pool table and bar. The room, decorated in teal blue, purple and pink, is one of the favorite rooms in the house.

In the kitchen are the original St. Charles cabinets, highly prized by Mrs. Cole. "They were built into old homes years ago," she said. The walls are done in forest green with leopard print paper. An antique island in the kitchen is from the Hill Country.

Near the kitchen is the formal dining area, which also has natural wood floors. Its burgundy walls provide an air of quiet elegance. Nagle prints grace the walls in this room, and throughout the home.

Colors in the formal living area complement those in the dining room next door. Vibrant colors of pink, purple, green, black and fushia highlight the room. Its also has the original wooden floors. Perhaps the most memorable feature of the formal living room is its comforting fireplace, which is located in the middle of a mirrored wall.

In the master bedroom, a massive bed dominates the furnishings. "My husband built the bed," Mrs. Cole said. Other furnishings in the room include a custom-built snakeskin dresser.

The master bath, just off the bedroom, has a slate floor, double sink, shower and tub — all done in black. "The bath was remodeled," said Mrs. Cole. "It was a 6x6 bathroom and a closet." Her husband also did much of the remodeling work in the bathroom, she said.

The children's rooms reflect their ages and their sexes. The Coles' daughter, who is not quite 2 years old, has a canopied baby bed, a brass day bed and a tiny table with zebra-striped chairs just her size in her room.

For their 4-year-old son's room, the Coles hung an enormous chalk board on the wall, built bookshelves, hung Batman posters and covered his twin beds with black and white spreads, reminiscent of the checkered flags used at auto races.

Outside in the backyard, the Coles have sectioned it off into three areas — the children's play area, which has a basketball court, swing set and fort; the swimming pool area, which may be the first in Midland; and the gameroom.

As one of Midland's older homes, the house is surrounded by large, shady trees.

The comfortable home has just the right atmosphere for both entertaining sophisticated company and for raising a young family — contemporary and elegant are the perfect words to describe it.

Customer satisfaction brings business

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Clever ads may get you to try a product for the first time, but they can't fool you into buying again if you weren't happy with the purchase, says a marketing professor at the University of Rochester's Simon School of Business Administration.

According to Profesor Dan Horsky, advertising's role in creating brand loyalty may have been oversold.

Having confirmed that the happy customer is the repeat customer, Horsky says his findings from a recent study may indicate that in weighing how much to invest in advertising versus product quality, "producers may need to tilt the scale more in favor of product quality."

Downscaling can be taxing

N.Y. Times News Service

It may not be financially advisable to downscale if the cozy home you want to buy costs much less than the grand one you're selling.

Tim Kochis, a personal financial consultant in San Francisco, explained how the capital gains tax could work against you in this situation.

A couple — the Joneses, let's say — who wanted to move from a $500,000 house for which they had paid $200,000 into a condo that cost $275,000 would have a gain of $225,000. In a 35 percent tax bracket, they would have to pay taxes of $85,000.

However, there is a one-time break for people over age 55. They can exclude $125,000 of a gain. This would mean that the Joneses would only have to pay taxes on $100,000, which would come to $35,000.

People thinking about downscaling should also be aware of the tax laws governing write-offs on furniture they give away.

"The tax law will permit you to deduct the fair market value of the pieces you give away, which is generally much less than you paid for it because it is used furniture," Kochis said.

The Joneses would make a good faith estimate of the worth of what they are giving away. If it comes to more than $500, they are required to file a special form on which they list every item and say what they paid for it and what they estimate it is now worth.

If the Joneses appear to be overestimating the value, Kochis says, it will almost surely raise a red flag to the IRS. This would be one time when you wouldn't want to keep up with the Joneses.

Health fraud victimizes many Americans

ATLANTA (AP) — Americans are being bilked of more than $40 billion each year by unscrupulous promoters of unproven health remedies, reports the Atlanta-based Arthritis Foundation.

People with arthritis are among those most often targeted, and federal regulators seem helpless to stop the problem, according to foundation officials.

However, the growing problem is drawing increased scrutiny from Congress, specifically the House Aging Subcommittee on Health and Long Term Care. says a spokesman for the foundation who adds that stemming the flow of fraudulent remedies may take time.

Meanwhile, people with arthritis should proceed with caution in evaluating potential remedies, warns Dr. Arthur I. Grayzel, the foundation's senior vice president for medical affairs.

"People should never take any health product, regardless of how innocuous it seems, without at least mentioning it to their physician first," he says.

This cookbook is for the birds

By Mary MacVean

EAST HAMPTON, N.Y. (AP) — Making dinner can be a drag: One person won't eat meat, another hates spinach, somebody else is allergic to milk. And everybody complains.

This is for the birds.

Now, there's a thought.

And Helen Witty, an award-winning cookbook author, took it to heart. She and her husband, Dick, have written "Feed the Birds" (Workman Publishing, $8.95), a book of recipes, tips and personal observations about providing for their feathered friends.

"I don't get any complaints from the birds," says Mrs. Witty. "And there is no canon of recipes. No classical canon against which you have to measure yourself. If they eat it, it's good."

Not only that, birds consider leftovers first-rate. So the Wittys preach making do with what's at hand, for food and for feeders.

Some birds, blue jays among them, even eat cat food. That doesn't mean the birds are utterly without preferences.

IT PAYS TO be observant, the Wittys say. Milo, for instance, is included in many commercial seed mixes. Birds in the Southwest seem to like it, but those in the Northeast leave it littering the lawn, they say.

"I like using things that would otherwise go to waste," says Mrs. Witty, pointing to a cast-iron pan on her stove holding a cake of corn, raisins, eggshells and sugar ("Birds love sugar," she says.).

Also on the stove is an old coffee can to collect fat from bacon, ham and other meats.

"They're just bananas for bacon fat," says Mrs. Witty, but birds like it plain. They'll turn their beaks up at fat from meat cooked with onions, garlic or hot spices, she says.

Speaking of bananas, birds go nuts for overripe ones. And they're simply mad for nuts. Stale bread or potato chips, eggshells, acorns, bones, elderberries and other foraged foods all will entice birds to backyard feeders.

The Wittys' book has a chart of more than 100 ingredients their "freeloaders" fancy, as well as plenty of suggestions about setting an alluring spread.

"There are recipes in here, but you don't need a recipe. If you don't have something, you can use something else, stuff you might find around the place or buy for nothing," Mrs. Witty said one sunny winter morning as birds ate from the dozen or so feeders in her yard.

On this morning, she also made a pudding of apples, oatmeal, crumbs, peanut butter, brown sugar and melted suet ("This is very popular with woodpeckers, especially," she says.).

THE FEEDERS, TOO, are often made of recycled stuff. Witty, a retired educational publisher, made one from a two-foot piece of log, drilled with holes to hold a mixture of melted suet, peanut butter, seeds and nuts. Another is an upside down two-liter plastic soda bottle, fitted with a stopper and a perch.

In the Wittys' house on Long Island, on a north-south migration route, a round table sits just off the kitchen, with a dozen bird-watching books nearby as well as a bird-watching journal and two pairs of binoculars.

There are windows on two walls — "We threw out the curtains because we couldn't see through them," Mrs. Witty says — overlooking the yard, with a picnic table covered with seeds and branches for perching. Two small tubs hold water.

For all this, the Wittys don't even consider themselves serious birders. They don't, they say by way of explanation, take bird-watching trips. They do, however, take seriously the idea of providing for birds whose natural food sources have been overrun by developers.

The Wittys have plenty of company. Tens of millions of Americans feed wild birds; they spend more than $1 billion on bird food each year, according to U.S. Fish and Wildlife officials. Only gardening is a more popular hobby.

And, the Wittys say, they have fun.

IN SUMMERS, for example, there are young birds learning to fly and to take food from feeders. And there are rare sightings — a young bald eagle and an albino pheasant — beyond the 50 or so species the Wittys attract.

Cookbook's recipes please feathered friends' palates

NEW YORK (AP) — An apple pudding is pleasing to birds because it's sweet, and is good for them because it's rich in fat, Helen and Dick Witty say in their book "Feed the Birds."

APPLE PUDDING

- Season: Cool or cold weather, but acceptable all year.
- Feeder: Bag, basket or suet holder, can or pans.
- Method and Time: No cooking except to warm fat; 10 to 15 minutes.
- Yield: About 2¼ pounds.

2 cups rendered suet, bacon fat or lard
3 cups chopped apples, including cores and seeds
1 cup brown sugar
1 cup chopped raisins
3 cups dry crumbs (bread, cake or cookie)
1 cup rolled oats
1 cup peanut butter

In a skillet or saucepan, warm the fat until pourable. Meanwhile, stir together the remaining ingredients. Gradually add the fat to the fruit mixture until a sample just holds its shape when squeezed.

Press into muffin cups fitted with paper liners, or pack into a loaf pan or square baking pan lined with plastic or foil. Clean tuna or cat-food cans can also be used (no need for liners). Chill until firm.

TO SERVE: Hang one or two muffins, without the liners, in a mesh bag, or put in a suet holder. Or tack cans to a post or tree.

TO STORE: Refrigerate, wrapped, up to three days. Freeze up to a month.

PUTTING-ON-THE-DOG SUET MUFFINS

- Season: Cool or cold weather. Place in shade if days are warm.
- Feeder: Bag, basket or suet holder, milk carton, feeder log.
- Method and time: Stovetop; 15 minutes.
- Yield: 1½ pounds.

1 pound (2 cups) rendered suet
1 can (14 ounces) high-quality canned dog food

In a skillet, heat the suet until pourable; stir in the dog food (hard bubbling will follow). Cooked over medium-low heat, stirring occasionally, for 10 minutes to get rid of surplus moisture.

Cool until semiliquid, then stir to distribute the meatbits. Mold as "muffins" or as a loaf. Chill.

TO SERVE: Hang muffins or chunks in mesh bag, or put in a suet holder. Softened, the mixture is fine for packing into the holes in a log feeder or for filling a milk-carton feeder.

TO STORE: Refrigerate, wrapped, up to a week. Freeze up to two months.

DEAR ABBY

OA helps overeaters

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My heart just broke for "Long Islander," the woman who was overweight, desperately unhappy and ashamed. You suggested she try Overeaters Anonymous.

Van Buren

Thank you! I pray she takes your suggestion. OA has saved my life and the lives of countless other compulsive overeaters. "Long Islander" needs to understand that she has a disease, and she cannot fight the disease alone. By joining OA and working through the Twelve Steps, along with the fellowship of other OAs who understand exactly what she is going through, she can recover and lead a normal, happy, healthy life.

OA asks only that you contribute what you can. OA does not give you a diet, but gives you the tools to understand what food is doing to you and your life so that you WANT to become "abstinent" (OA's term for not overeating and not eating your personal "binge" foods). The program holds meetings across the country. There is an 800 number to call that will give you times and locations of these meetings: (800) 743-8703.

All those who cannot control their eating are welcome. OAs might be anorexic or bulimic — anywhere from 10 pounds underweight to 200 pounds overweight. We are all there for the same reason.

Thank you for alerting "Long Islander," and others, to OA. Compulsive eaters don't have to isolate themselves any more — they can recover. It can be done. I did it!

I am giving you my name so that you can verify this letter. But since OA is an "anonymous" program, just sign me ... GRATEFULLY RECOVERING

DEAR RECOVERING: Thank you for thanking me. May I toot my own horn a little?

In my office stands a 24-inch-tall statuette of a skinny person holding a large OA insignia. On the base of this statuette is inscribed: "Who cared enough? Who sent the suffering multitudes to recover in Overeaters Anonymous? Dear Abby did! 1973"

DEAR ABBY: Recently, two teen-age sisters in our community were killed in a tragic car accident. Apparently neither speed nor alcohol was a factor — the prime factor was unfamiliarity with the road.

It seems there had been a sign to warn motorists of the approaching dead end, but apparently someone decided it was more important to decorate his or her bedroom with that sign than to warn drivers of impending danger.

Abby, please alert parents that by allowing their children to display stolen street signs in their rooms, those parents are condoning behavior that is costing us taxpayers money — but more important, it may also cost us precious lives. — JEANNE M. MURPHY, ST. JOSEPH, MO.

DEAR JEANNE: I've been writing this column since Jan. 9, 1956, and yours is the first letter I have received containing this important message. Thank you for a letter that can make the difference between life and death.

Abigail Van Buren's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Program has 'healers' teaching doctors

By Sylvia Rubin
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The massage room at the California Pacific Medical Center is open only a few hours each day, but demand is high from rattled doctors and anxious patients.

"Physicians have asked us to increase our hours so they could come in after their shifts, or after long hours of surgery," says Marian Williams, program coordinator of the massage therapy service.

Back rubs are only one element of a model program at the hospital aimed at putting doctors in touch with alternative healers and with their own bodies. Through informal lectures and an annual symposium, physicians are brought together with Buddhist monks, acupuncturists, Chinese herbalists, theologians, philosophers, psychologists, even interior designers.

"The idea is to heal the healer," says the Rev. Barbara St. Andrews, an Episcopalian priest who created the program along with Dr. William Stewart, an ophthalmic surgeon.

According to St. Andrews, the program is the first of its kind in the country, and a model for others that are sure to spring up.

"Imagine 40 physicians sitting around in a circle in somebody's living room, while a saffron-robed contemplative, accompanied by Indian musicians, speaks about the deeper matters of the heart," she says. "That particular meeting was held in the home of an interior designer who brings her aesthetic understanding of colors, architecture and design to healing. For example, how the color of the walls can affect a patient's mood."

Patients have always known that support, comfort and nurturing by doctors, family and friends can help speed recovery. But it can also prolong life, as a 1990 Stanford University study with a group of breast cancer survivors showed.

Women with advanced breast cancer who were in support groups lived twice as long as other women with equivalent illness and medication, the study found.

The "Program in Medicine and Philosophy," which began 18 months ago, was set up to "bridge the gap between the latest in scientific care and other mediums of healing," says Dr. George Lee, chairman of the obstetrics and gynecology department at the hospital.

The program was inspired in part by Planetree, the innovative consumer health care organization at the hospital.

Lawman Bugs Bunny deputizes Six Flags Over Texas visitors for a fun-filled chase through the theme park's new $5 million ride, "Yosemite Sam and the Gold River Adventure." The animated attraction will open in early June.

Six Flags Over Texas opens new ride

Staff Report

ARLINGTON — Bugs Bunny and his Looney Tunes cartoon pals are brought to animated life in a new ride under construction at Six Flags Over Texas.

Called "Yosemite Sam and the Gold River Adventure," the ride will take park guests in boats along a winding river housed in a 20,000 square foot building.

Six Flags Entertainment chairman and CEO Bob Pittman described the attraction as "a cartoon which comes to life around you."

He siad the ride's story line begins with the robbery of gold vaults guarded by Elmer Fudd. Riders are "deputized" by a state-of-the-art animated figure of Bugs Bunny, and they join in the hunt for suspect Yosemite Sam.

The pursuit continues through 24 scenes featuring such Looney Tunes stars as the Roadrunner, Wile E. Coyote, Daffy Duck, Porky Pig, Sylvester, Tweety and Speedy Gonzales.

More than 125 special effects and fully animated characters are seen during the ride. Geysers spew, cannons boom, dynamite blasts and "Acme Anvils and Bird Traps" pop into action during the adventure.

Pittman commented, "This ride with its cast of fully animated character figures is exciting evidence of the new relationship between Six Flags and the Time Warner organization. It's a great combination." The Six Flags theme parks became affiliates of Time Warner earlier this year.

The $5 million ride is expected to open in early June.

Travel books open world of adventure

"Discover America: San Francisco and the Bay Area (Second Edition)" by Barry Parr (Compass American Guides, $14.95 paperback).

San Francisco was rated the top tourist destination in the United States by Conde Nast Traveler in October, and there are plenty of reasons why that might be true. There also are plenty of reasons why this guide and others in the "Discover America" series are worth a look. Among them are literate writing with a sense of history and an understanding of the local culture, exceptional color photos (in this case by National Geographic Society photographer Michael Yamashita) and even some apt excerpts from famous writers (Mark Twain, Ambrose Bierce, Allen Ginsberg). Not just a San Francisco guide, this one tells you about the whole Bay area. If you're simply looking for hotel and restaurant ideas, however, you'd do better to look elsewhere.

"Barcelonawalks" by George Semler (Holt, $12.95 paperback).

George Semler, a Barcelona-based journalist who writes for the International Herald Tribune and the Spanish daily El Pais, packs a lot of easily absorbed history into this guide to the city hosting this summer's Olympics. He suggests five walks covering the Barri Gotic (Gothic Quarter, the oldest part of the city): the Barri de Sant Pere (the early textile district) and the Barri de la Ribera (the old waterfront neighborhood); El Raval, a rough-and-tumble area with an eclectic mix of cultures; Gracia, a bustling area of markets, theaters and clubs; and the Eixample, the 19th- century area that is "virtually a living museum of art and architecture."

"Jerusalemwalks" by Nitza Rosovsky (Holt, $14.95 paperback).

Jerusalem's compactness makes it ideal for walking, according to Nitza Rosovsky, who was born and raised there. She proposes six walking tours, divided between the Old City and modern Jerusalem and all within a two-square-mile area. Her principal interests are history and architecture.

"Le Guide de L'Espresso Guide to Italy" edited by Giorgio Lindo (GMG Publishing, $14.95 paperback, order at 725 Arizona Ave., Suite 100, Santa Monica, Calif. 90401).

Primarily a restaurant guide, this book describes and evaluates 500 Italian restaurants. Listings for each region of the country also cover "Other Good Places to Go" for cappuccino and pastry or good hotels.

Mountain lion study has surprises

By Martin Frentzel

SAN ANDRES NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE, N.M. (AP) — It was an epic journey.

He left Feb. 5, 1991, and was back home June 16 that year. He traveled 296 airline miles, straight as the crow flies, from the wooded canyons near Cimarron to the desert mountains on the San Andres National Wildlife Refuge.

Male No. 88, a 3-year-old mountain lion, made history when he became the first North American mountain lion known to have traveled that distance after being plucked from his home range and released a state's length away.

The lion is a subject in two of the most intensive studies of mountain lions ever conducted. Both are being done in New Mexico.

No. 88 was first involved in a 10-year New Mexico Department of Game and Fish-financed project to look at the lions of the San Andres range, within the U.S. Army's White Sands Missile Range in southern New Mexico. That study is in its seventh year.

The lion also is part of a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service study intended to learn what happens to mountain lions when they are "translocated," or moved from their home ranges to other areas. All Western states move "problem" mountain lions but the study is the first to document what actually happens to relocated animals.

AP Laserphoto

Mountain lions have been under study at the San Andres National Wildlife Refuge of southern New Mexico for years, and as part of the research, some of the animals were moved near Cimarron.

"NOBODY KNOWS how effective translocation is in dealing with nuisance mountain lions," said Ken Logan, a research biologist for the Wildlife Research Institute of Idaho, the company performing both studies.

"The beautiful thing about this is we had already documented their history," Logan said. "We knew their social status. It was a perfect experiment."

The opportunity to study relocated lions developed out of the original San Andres project. On the San Andres, Logan and his wife, Linda Sweanor, and other researchers spent five years documenting the way an unhunted population of lions lives.

Then the researchers needed to simulate an "overharvest" of the predators, essentially creating a vacuum within the study area that would allow them to study the effects of excessive killing of these predators.

"We created a totally exploited population," said Maurice Hornocker, founder and director of the institute. "We wanted to know if it would rebuild. How long would it take to rebuild? And, secondly, what would happen to the mule deer population?

"This project is already recognized as the definitive study of mountain lions, and it will be recognized as the most intensive study of a predator-prey relationship."

IN ADDITION to the 100 mountain lions captured during the study, mule deer and desert bighorn sheep have been trapped and collared to allow researchers to learn about the predators and their prey.

Creating the totally exploited population, however, was tricky. The biologists never considered killing them. Instead, an agreement was worked out to move lions to northeastern New Mexico. Thirteen were trapped and flown to Game and Fish wildlife areas and private lands between Raton and Cimarron.

Relocations began in December 1990 and right from the beginning the results were startling. An 18-month-old female lion was trampled to death by a hooved animal 12 days after her release on the Colin Neblett Wildlife Area near Cimarron. Biologists who investigated said the lion probably jumped a buck deer in rut and was killed. Breeding buck deer are known to be dangerous.

Of the 13 lions moved, seven remain in the new area. One has produced a litter of kittens.

Of the other six, No. 88 returned to the missile range; another moved south as far as Clines Corners; one moved to Conchas Lake; the deer killed one; and two were killed by other mountain lions believed to have been residents.

Lions killing lions may sound unnatural to some, but not to Logan, who has been working with the San Andres' population since the project's inception.

"The most significant thing we've learned is mountain lion populations tend to regulate their own densities through intraspecies aggression — lions fighting other mountain lions. Their greatest cause of mortality is lions killing other mountain lions."

EAGLE NEST bicycle shop owner Michael Horan has been researching the lion studies, and several aspects concern him.

"My argument is the mountain lion population in the San Andres was unnecessarily disturbed," he said. "This unnecessarily threatening the remaining population (in the San Andres). And the lions that have been released are trying to make their way home, which I think is pitiful."

And, he said, all the areas where the lions have been released "are declared trophy-hunting areas."

None of the study lions has been killed by hunters.

"Before we turned the lions loose, we asked the ranchers, outfitters and hunters to not harvest them if they happened to tree one," Logan said. (Lions are hunted with hounds.) "They have been very cooperative."

Relocated lions also were freeze-branded to discolor their fur. Logan said that would make hunters think twice about killing one.

The lions were released on private lands in the northeast part of the state partly because releasing them on Carson National Forest was opposed by people who graze their livestock on the public lands. The U.S. Forest Service also would have had to complete an analysis of the proposed release before authorizing it.

THE DELAY was more than the Department of Game and Fish could accommodate at that time because the Army was pressuring researchers to remove some lions. The Army was concerned the cats were a threat to endangered bighorn sheep also found in the San Andres.

Wain Evans, assistant director of Game and Fish, said the information being developed by the projects is crucial.

"You have to do experimental manipulation to get the answers you have to have, so you won't be speculating," Evans said.

"If we're going to properly manage lions, unless we do experimental research we will not get definitive answers," he said.

This campaign is worth watching

By Erma Bombeck

Sometimes when I've had it up to here with American politics, I allow myself the luxury of reading about the campaign of Imelda Marcos to try to reclaim the throne now occupied by Corazon Aquino in the Philippines.

Bombeck

Those two are the dark side of Lucy Ricardo and Ethel Mertz.

Here we have the wives of two deceased leaders with little love for each other haggling over closet space. Unlike American candidates, Imelda has not focused on the issues of infidelity or war service. It's shoes. She can't run without her shoes.

Imelda accuses Corazon of holding her 3,000 pairs of shoes hostage in the palace and is quoted as saying, "Do you think she's (Corazon) using them? Perhaps she wears the same size I do. I thought she was a size 6½. I want to make an auction and donate the money to the poor, but she doesn't let me have my shoes."

This is a major issue. We're not talking Hush Puppies here. We're talking about 3,000 pairs of shoes, which do not come easy to women. I daresay Imelda devoted her life to amassing them. Ask any shoe salesman. He will tell you how long it takes a woman to make up her mind before buying.

Although Corazon isn't running for office, she is the brunt of Imelda's attacks. I'm waiting any day now for her to retaliate: "What does Imelda need shoes for? She never walks anywhere. The woman was born in a limo. She won't go to the bathroom unless there is valet parking."

The deposed first lady is running on the principle that "If you're going to be poor — you should be able to afford it."

If this whole scenario doesn't have the makings of a mini-series, I'll be surprised. There's a little of the "All About Eve" quality to it, where Bette Davis eyeballs Anne Baxter and announces, "Fasten your seat belts; it's going to be a bumpy night." It has a flavor of the rivalry between Elizabeth and Mary Queen of Scots. For sure there's a strong hint of "Evita," with Imelda warbling from a balcony, "Don't Cry for Me, Ferragamo."

You have to admit that watching two women arguing over who gets the keys to the closet is a lot more interesting than Clinton and Bush haggling over the deficit.

Can't you see it? Corazon charging, "Don't judge me, Imelda, until you've walked in my shoes."

And Imelda screaming, "Those aren't YOUR shoes, sweetie, they're mine!"

I love it.

Seeds for Thought

Summer plants reward gardeners with color

By Deborah A. Benge

With the heat of the summer, the gardener and many plants tend to go on summer vacation, often leaving the garden unattended and void of care and color. There are some oustanding, colorful summer annuals and perennials which are truly children of the sun and will reward the hot days of summer with color and beauty with a minimum of care.

Benge

Vinca or Periwinkle thrives where many flowers would perish. This robust, summer annual demands little attention, yet is sure to provide an abundant mass of cheerful color all summer long. Sad but true, this once dependable annual now has some very serious soil borne diseases that will limit it's continued use in the landscape. But unitl it does become a problem for you; use it, it's great.

Zinnias have a sure summer heat tolerance and ability to grow in adverse conditions. The summer garden is not complete without a colorful mass of this old favorite. Even though Zinnias have been around for many summers, there are many new and improved varities of vivid colors and durability. Zinnia blooms now range in size from tiny border hybrids to giant Dahlia-flowered types. Keep it in the sun, it is powdery mildew and rust susceptible.

Gloriosa Daisy and Black-eyed Susans are summer perennials, returning each summer to provide its typical summer daisy blooms of rich orange, yellow, pink and mahogany. The large, graceful heads of blooms are supported on strong stems which are excellent for cutting. This popular and colorful perennial demands little attention other than a sunny and prominent location in the summer garden.

Portulaca is unsurpassed as a summer border or rock garden plant. Often called "Moss Rose," this summer annual prefers the sun and will tolerate dry, hot conditions to produce warm, vivid blankets of gay colors. Sow Portulaca seed at six-week intervals during the summer for continual summer production.

Salvia is a persistent summer annual, producing bright scarlet or blue spikes of bloom throughout the hot summer until cut down by frost. The rich red varieties are most showy when displayed against a background of green or white. The faded bloom of this persistant annual should be cut often to encourage more and abundant color.

Summer or Late Cosmos produces rich yellow or orange blooms in midsummer up until late fall. Its success often spreads to abandoned gardens and sometimes escapes cultivation, demanding little or no care. "Sunset" and "Goldrest" varieties produce brilliant colored blooms which will brighten any garden bed until winter.

Marigolds may be planted from early spring well into summer. The numerous and improved varieties provide a wide range in size of plants and blooms, as well as color. No other summer annual will provide the rich, clear, vivid yellows and oranges of the French or large Marigold. Few plants will out-produce this carefree summer annual.

Plant "Merimume" this August to get a fantastic color show from August until frost that can't be rivaled by any other flower blooming at that time. "Marimums" are hybrid marigolds that have large showy blossoms that will out shine other flowers if planted in August. Planting "Marimums" in August will garantee you with a goregous flower minus the spidermite problems that are usually associated with marigolds in late summer.

And while you are out there making the Permian Basin a better looking place with fantastic summer color, don't forget to plant the newest, hottest annual summer color on the market. I'll reveal the name of this annual in May when it will be available at local nurseries.

HOME FIRES

By Georgia Todd Temple

Linda Bond will travel to New York April 24 with friends and family from Midland to see "Home Fires." Ms. Bond, not only inspired by the arrival of the Confederate Air Force but also by her parent's WW II stories, wrote the musical for Gourmet Midland in 1991.

For Midlander Linda Bond, her parents' experience during World War II became more than the stories she's heard them tell.

Her mother, Peggy Thorsen, was in the American Red Cross Canteen Corps. Her father, Bill Thorsen, was a corporal in the U.S. Army Air Corps.

Their experience, particularly Mrs. Thorsen's, formed the nucleus around which Ms. Bond wrote a musical that will be produced off-Broadway this month.

"Kathy Schorr at the Arts Assembly and I talked about the fact that they wanted to do something really different for Gourmet Midland in 1991 because the Confederate Air Force was coming to town," Ms. Bond said, recalling how the project, which was sponsored by Texaco, began.

"I wrote about the women who were left at home when all the men went off to World War II. How they felt, and how they tried to help, and how they were supportive and did everything they could do while not getting to go overseas to fight.

"My parents supplied photographs — all the documents from the 1940s. My mom had their original correspondence. She had things like V-Mail and her blood drive card, things that you wouldn't know about unless somebody was there to guide you through the war years.

"I did lots of research, not only on the facts about the war and the home front, but the music and created a musical for five women and one man."

When it came time to present "Home Fires," Ms. Bond called 10 producers. Bill Repicci of the Performing Arts Preservation Association decided to produce the show.

"What he liked most about the show was the integrity of the characters, and the fact that he felt that the people were really true to people, not just of that era, but of today — the hopes and dreams, the characteristics that people have."

Last summer, Ms. Bond said she spent a month in New York City working with Robert Stewart, the director, and Repicci "tightening the script and honing the action."

The musical includes 16 "vintage songs from the 1940s," Ms. Bond said. When the production was presented at Gourmet Midland, it included some songs Ms. Bond had written. Those have lost out to the songs which have survived through the years. "That didn't bother me at all," Ms. Bond said. "Those are great songs. I'm delighted to have them in the show."

The hardest task came in selecting the cast in New York.

"When I was writing the show originally, the people who were my friends in Midland

City playwright thinks of herself mainly as writer

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Many long-time area residents remember Linda Bond as the host and producer of KOSA television's High Noon program from 1976 to 1981.

Others think of her as the owner of The Producers, a local production company that worked on "Karate Kid," "Waltz Across Texas," "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" as well as national and local commercials and video tape productions from 1980 to 1985.

Still others think of her as the director of development and marketing at Midland Community Theatre, a position she held from 1987 until this year.

Ms. Bond, whose full name is Linda Thorsen Bond, thinks of herself in different terms.

"I'm a writer," she said.

Most recently she's worked on a musical comedy called "Home Fires." First produced here in 1991 at the Arts Assembly of Midland's Gourmet Midland, a revised version of the show opens April 13 at New York City's Actors' Playhouse, 100 Seventh Ave. South.

Producer for the workshop performances of "Home Fires" is Bill Repicci of the Performing Arts Preservation Association.

"People have seemed real surprised that I have written this, but I've written all my life," said Ms. Bond, who was born in Minneapolis, but grew up in Midland.

Ms. Bond's first job following her college graduation was as a writer for Look magazine.

"I got my divorce and my college degree at the same time," Ms. Bond said. "I moved all my worldly possessions and my year-and-a-half-old son, Shelby, to New York to work for Look Magazine. They folded six months after I got there.

"Look kept their offices open till every person on the staff had been placed with some magazine or newspaper. They placed me at Woman's Wear Daily. I became a fashion editor, which really was a switch for me. I was a journalist, and I had had nothing to do with fashion up to that point."

Her musical comedy "Home Fires" has afforded her the opportunity to be in New York again. This time she was able to see the city with her husband Bruce Partain, who is director of communications for the Midland Chamber of Commerce, and their 10-year-old son, Danny Partain.

"It was fun to take the two of them to the old places that Shelby and I used to go," she said. "Of course, Danny just wanted to go visit the largest Toys 'R Us in the world."

Ms. Bond will return to New York City April 24 to see "Home Fires." Joining her and others from Midland will be her son, Shelby Bond, an actor who now lives in Los Angeles.

"I always thought New York was the worst of places and the best of places because it does some things like theater incredibly well, and yet living conditions are horrible. And here I am going back to New York to open a play off Broadway. Everybody asks me if I am going to move up there. I've lived up there. A person can write anywhere in the world, why not Midland?"

Through the years, many of which she spent in Midland, Ms. Bond has been a free-lance photographer and writer whose photos have appeared in, among others, Newsweek and Ms. Magazine, and whose stories have appeared in Texas Monthly, W, Family Circle, USA Today, The Associates, Southwest Airlines' magazine, trade journals and local newspapers and magazines.

In 1986, Ms. Bond and her husband lived in Australia, where she was again able to write full time.

"That was a great, great time," she said. "Australia is wonderful because the whole society is real reinforcing of writers. They have a reverence for writing that it is an important art and not necessarily a way to make big bucks.

"I spent my time as a full-time writer. Not only did I do the projects that I had to do, but I became much more creative and my outpouring of writing was much more prolific than I had done ever because at that point, I was a writer and that was the definition of who I was."

She hopes to acquire that definition again. During this year, Ms. Bond will be responsible for stories, photographs and the layout in special "We Print" sections coming up in the Reporter-Telegram. Of this job, Ms. Bond said, "I'm excited about taking this opportunity to get back to writing."

BOND: Show undergoes major change

who were going to be in the show, each one inspired me. The characters became more and more like some of the most interesting characteristics of those people.

"For instance, Jami Owen played Ruthie in the original cast. Jami is very earthy and very grounded, so the character of Ruthie became more and more the earth mother, the stable center who holds everyone together and is always there to comfort and nurture."

Stewart, the director, who had not seen "Home Fires" performed live, had a video tape of the Midland performances.

"He said one of the hardest things for him was seeing a character who had already been established, like Patty Loftis who played Jo, and then not finding a character who looked like Patti to play Jo.

"He'd always thought that Jo would be a little tiny person, but the woman who got the part of Jo is probably six inches taller and has bright red hair. In all our minds the people who played these roles in the original cast were very much the characters."

The original cast included Ms. Owen, Ms. Loftis, Junanne Brock, Jayne Houghton, Jane Burgess,

W. Thorsen

P. Thorsen

Ken Dixon, Steve Owen, Mark Owen and Bobby Marshall.

When the production was performed in Ireland at the Dundalk International Theatre Festival, three of the original cast members could not attend. Taking the place of Ms. Brock, Ms. Houghton and Mark Owen were Karen Weidmann, Pam Crawford and David Hunt, respectively.

Ms. Bond has been asked which character represents the playwright.

"I think they are all five sides of me. Each of us has a little bit of the loneliness and the loss of a Peggy, the brashness of a Lilly, the absolute silliness of Jo and the joy of being in the spotlight like Margo."

The lone male in the production represents Ms. Bond's attempt to not have her play typecast.

"I hate it when people sometimes dismiss a show because it's a woman's show. Some people talked that way about 'Steel Magnolias' and a 'My Name is Alice.' I deliberately put a man in the cast so people wouldn't say, 'It's just a woman's show.' "

The workshop performance of "Home Fires" opens April 13 at The Actors Playhouse, 100 Seventh Ave, South. Ms. Bond recalled the night she attended a production at this off-Broadway theater.

"The place was packed, and it seemed to me it was one of the off Broadway theaters you would show up at if you weren't a tourist who only went to 'Phantom of the Opera' or 'Cats.' "

She said she's "really looking forward" to seeing her musical April 24, when she goes to New York with some of the original cast members and friends from Midland.

The Midland cast members will recognize the show's logo as the same one used here. It was designed by Gail Darmstetter of Admarc, Inc.

"I talked them into letting Admarc here in town do the advertising because I think they are as good as they would find anywhere," Ms. Bond said.

However, the play has experienced a major change in its format since it played Midland.

"Each character has to play his or her own instrument because we don't have a pit band, so the women play trumpet, saxophone, clarinet, drums and big standing bass. The man plays piano," Ms. Bond said.

She was impressed by the speed with which Darren Cohen, the musical director/arranger, conducted auditions.

"It was exciting to watch him in auditions because he knew by the first four notes people would sing or play, if he wanted them in the show or not. They would play four notes, and he would say, 'Thank you.' "

Those associated with "Home Fires" are plotting a future course for the musical along the lines of "Nunsense," one of the big success stories in New York.

"They are attempting very sensibly to follow the pattern 'Nunsense' took, which is starting small and growing very gradually, not making the jump to Broadway, but making investors money by staying off Broadway for seven years and showing all around the United States in road shows and community theaters," Ms. Bond said. "They are hoping to stay around long enough that it gets a good reputation and people want to see it and be a part of it."

Songs from her Mexican heritage remain Linda Ronstadt's favorite

By Elisabeth Dunham
Associated Press writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Linda Ronstadt trusts her memory to deliver the next challenge.

"I've been going further and further back," said Ronstadt, whose latest work, "Mas Canciones" ("More Songs") is a polished follow up to her 1987 album of Mexican folk music, "Canciones de mi Padre" ("Songs of My Father").

Like "Padre," the new collection draws inspiration from Ronstadt's childhood on an Arizona ranch, where her Mexican-born father taught his children the rural music of his past.

Ronstadt has tackled style after style since her first hit, "Different Drum," with the folk rock band Stone Poneys, in 1967. In the last decade alone, she's recorded Gilbert and Sullivan, Gershwin and Mexican folk. All was music she heard around the house growing up, she said.

The Mexican material is still her favorite.

"This music has been the one constant in my life," the 45-year-old singer said during a recent telephone interview from her San Francisco home. "It was my very earliest memory of music, literally. When I could pull myself up and see where the music was coming from, it was the (Mexican) trios."

Producer Peter Asher has been another constant in Ronstadt's life, lending his expertise to her varied ventures. He produced most of her rock albums, the cast album of the Broadway show "The Pirates of Penzance" and her recordings with the Nelson Riddle Orchestra.

But he stepped aside to allow someone with a deeper knowledge of the genre to handle Ronstadt's Mexican recordings.

"Mas Canciones" was co-produced by engineer George Massenburg and the great Mexican band leader Ruben Fuentes, who came out of retirement to produce the 1987 album and apparently decided to keep working.

"He's the king down there," Ronstadt said of Fuentes. "People bow and scrape to him."

The recording was made at the Skywalker Sound studio on the Marin County ranch owned by Ronstadt's frequent companion, filmmaker George Lucas. Through Fuentes' arrangements, the rural folk music expands to a grand orchestral sound "without compromising its original authenticity," Ronstadt said.

While "Canciones de mi Padre" were favorites from Ronstadt's childhood, "Mas Canciones" is music she came across later in life.

"The material demands to be addressed. I couldn't leave them behind," said Ronstadt, whose brothers, Mike and Pete, back her up on four trios. They also sang on the earlier album, which is nearing platinum status and scored a No. 1 hit in Mexico.

Unlike simpler folk music from other parts of the world, Mexican music can be quite complex, musically and lyrically, Ronstadt said.

"It has an exquisite poetic quality in the lyrics. The folk music has a tendency to go into rich imagery, especially (about) reproduction and the fertility of the land. Man over nature, man over man kind of stuff.

"I've been doing this since I was 17 years old and I've never come across a body of song that's better. It's more sophisticated, more musically satisfying than most (types of music). It ranks up there with Gershwin and Puccini."

She traces her Hispanic roots to Jose Francisco de Ortega, a Spanish army sergeant in the 1769 Alta California expedition of explorer Gaspar de Portola. Ortega was the first Spaniard to see San Francisco Bay. Her surname comes from German ancestors who settled in Mexico.

Ronstadt's primary influence in Mexican folk music was the singer Lola Beltran, whom she saw as a child and with whom she has performed as an adult.

"Mas Canciones" won't be her last Spanish-language album, Ronstadt said, adding that she's worked hard to improve her Spanish singing.

Meantime, fans who miss Ronstadt's rock 'n' roll days may have to wait.

"Current pop music is geared more to rhythm and not with addressing the capabilities of a singer," Ronstadt said. "I'm too impatient at this point to be some background music for a guitarist."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, APRIL 5, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Show more concern for your health. Pushing your body too hard would be a mistake. Although business and financial opportunities look best in early fall, your sex appeal works for you full strength all year long. An alliance you form next December means greater financial and emotional security. Refuse to settle for less than the best in romance! Early 1993 could find you changing residences.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Gregory Peck, director Roger Corman, novelist Arthur Hailey, educator Booker T. Washington.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are sure to dazzle everyone who sets eyes on you today. Deal with domestic tension before it erupts like a volcano. Entertain at home. Great things happen when friends join forces.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Social doings at your home or a relative's can be tops. Teamwork gets you what you want quickly. You will need to watch your spending this evening. Learn more about art.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The emphasis now is on protecting your freedom. Steer clear of bossy types. Travel enjoys highly favorable influences. Have fun. Do not lose your cool.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A quarrel, detour or delay could upset you early today. You have more options than you realize. Link up with a favorite companion and take a journey.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You will come off like a champ in your personal relationships now. Chats bring you closer to family and friends. Light the flame of romance tonight. You and mate draw closer together.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Stick to familiar surroundings today. Peace of mind comes slowly but will be long-lasting. Seek to curb your impatient nature. Home life is very pleasant.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Travel is favored. You make a sale without really trying. Be patient with an older person who now makes increased demands on your time. Replace bad eating habits with good ones.

Opening lead: Two of ♡

The Roman playwright Terence wrote that there is a demand for the man who can make wrong appear right. The scribe would have been proud to claim East as such a person.

With 13 points in support of partner's no-trump opening bid, North expected South to have little trouble at a contract of three no trump. However, duplication of values and excellent defense by East proved otherwise.

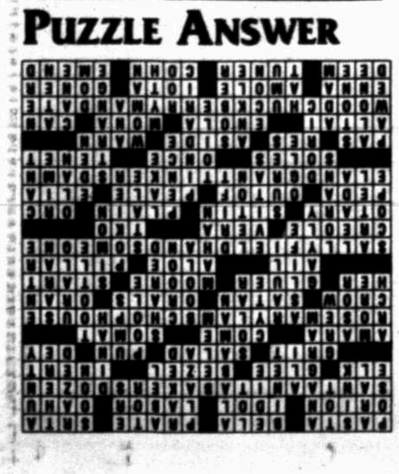
With a near yarborough, West led a low heart against three no trump in an effort to hit partner's suit, and scored a bull's-eye. It was obvious to East that West was broke and that, left in peace, declarer would fulfill the contract by picking up the queen of clubs.

In an effort to paint a false picture of the distribution, East developed a pretty plan to create the illusion West was the danger hand. East took the first trick with the queen of hearts, cashed the ace and king of the suit and then, instead of banking the 13th heart to complete the defenders' book, shifted to a spade. South was now convinced it was West who held the remaining heart.

For a brief moment declarer mentally patted himself on the back when East won the ten. That quickly changed when East produced the last heart for a one-trick set.

Declarer had eight fast tricks, and could develop the game-going trick just in clubs. Needing only one more trick from clubs, and wanting to keep West off lead, declarer spurned the finesse in favor of an avoidance play. After winning the spade in hand, South led a low club and inserted the eight.

PUZZLE ANSWER



Ford: 'JFK' distorts history

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Former President Ford says that Oliver Stone is a pretty good filmmaker, but his movie version of the John F. Kennedy assassination distorts history.

Ford, who sat on the Warren Commission which investigated the assassination, said during a lecture at Louisiana State University that it was his "duty as the only surviving member of the Warren Commission, to defend our conclusions."

Stone's Academy Award-nominated movie has been criticized for distorting events that occurred before, during and after the 1963 assassination and presenting as fact various conspiracy theories.

Ford said the commission reached two "unimpeachable" conclusions based on actual evidence.

"The first," he said, "was that Lee Harvey Oswald was the assassin. The second was that we found no evidence of a conspiracy, foreign or domestic. Since 1964, there has been no new, credible evidence that would change that.

"Mr. Stone's film was a very successful commercial movie. Even Mr. Stone admits that it was not a documentary. All of these conspiratorial ideas are not based on fact.

Group concerned about world peace

By Jennifer Bowles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Color Me Badd didn't sing the blues after losing the best new artist Grammy to singer-songwriter Marc Cohn.

After all, the doo-wop, hip-hop quartet's debut album has gone double platinum. They picked up an American Music Awards trophy for their sizzling single, "I Wanna Sex You Up," and they'll appear on the April 23 episode of the Fox network's "Beverly Hills 90210."

But these four Oklahoma City lads have bigger concerns.

"World peace — a lot of people take that lightly, we're very serious about it," said 22-year-old Kevin Thornton. "It's more than saying 'just say no,' you have to teach people to live it. We won't tell anybody anything that we're not willing to apply to our lives as well."

In a recent interview, Thornton and Sam Watters talked about their aspirations to spearhead a noble effort one day like Irish rocker Bob Geldof, who rounded up big-name acts in the mid-'80s to record a Christmas song during his Band-Aid fund raising for African famine relief.

"We feel that we have a ministry or a service that we can be doing right now," Watters said, "because we believe in love and we believe in God. And we want to do our part to spread it around the world."

The God part there is not quite what one would expect from a band which croons, "I Wanna Sex You Up."

"First of all, it's important to understand that song was written for 'New Jack City,'" the 21-year-old Watters said. "You're not going to go and write a goody, goody song for a movie that's about drugs and all that.

"And also, it had to be something from the street. And 'I Wanna Sex You Up' is basically street slang."

The song comes from their debut album, "C.M.B," which has spawned the other Top 10 hits, "All 4 Love," and "I Adore Mi Amor."

Like other young acts — Boyz II Men, En Vogue and Wilson Phillips — Color Me Badd emphasizes harmonized vocals, with a blend of danceable pop and soul.

"We kind of do the Temptations' thing, but kind of updated," Watters said.

Despite its title and risque lyrics, Watters insists "I Wanna Sex You Up," which won the group the AMA trophy for best soul-rhythm and blues song, retains an element of class.

"If you listen to the lyrics it never degrades a woman, it even asks her to be a wife. It's very classy," Watters said. "And when we finished it we felt comfortable because we felt we approached sex from a positive side. We weren't promoting promiscuity, we didn't want people to take it like that."

Back home in Oklahoma City, Watters, Thornton, and the other group members, Bryan Abrams and Mark Calderon, promoted themselves to get noticed.

Virtually every major band that passed through, Bon Jovi, Huey Lewis and the News, and Kool and the Gang, was subject to an a cappella onslaught by the then-high schoolers.

"When we got the fever to make it big, there were no record companies or anyone to get you started," Watters said. "All we could do is wait for the big groups to come into town. We knew that they had somebody.

"So we'd wait for them to come into town, and we'd try to chase their bus down, find out what hotel they're staying at and sing a cappella for them."

They finally got noticed by Myles Sanders, their current manager, who took the boys under his wing and brought them to his small one-bedroom apartment in New York.

"We feel that if we could have lasted a year and a half in that one-bedroom apartment, we can definitely stick together," Watters said.

But ah, the fruits of success — a lavish six-bedroom house on New York's Long Island.
