Reagan's address seen as first step

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supporters and critics alike say President Reagan has taken only a first step along the comeback trail with his acceptance of full responsibility for the Iran arms deal that eroded faith in his leadership.

"This isn't behind him yet, but it's a start," Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said of Reagan's 12-minute, nationally broadcast address Wednesday night. The speech was part of a campaign to revitalize Reagan's presidency with new aides, an olive branch to Congress and a promise to pay closer attention to running the government.

In his first response to the Tower commission report on his management of the National Security Council, Reagan expressed anger, disappointment and distaste for the Iran-Contra affair but offered no new insights into how it happened. And he said others will have to find answers to the whereabouts of payments from the arms sale.

"As the Tower board reported, what began as a strategic opening to Iran deteriorated in its implementation into trading arms for hostages," Reagan said. "This runs counter to my own beliefs, to administration policy and to the original strategy we had in mind.

"There are reasons why it happened, but no excuses. It was a mistake," the president said.

Reagan acknowledged some of the harsh criticism the Tower commission leveled last week at his hands-off management style.

"Let's face it, my style didn't match its previous track record," Reagan said. "I have already begun correcting this."

Nonetheless, members of Congress said misgivings may linger about Reagan.

"The American people are forgiving, but I'm not sure they're going to change their perception of his ability to run the country," said Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark.

Others said this speech should have been delivered long ago.

Indeed, the address indicated how far Reagan's position has changed since last Nov. 6, when he declared that stories about secret arms sales to Iran had "no foundation."

Reagan still appeared unwilling to embrace the idea that there had been an arms-for-hostages deal.

"A few months ago, I told the American people I did not trade arms for hostages," Reagan said. "My heart and my best intentions still tell me that is true, but the facts and the evidence tell me it is not."

The president also had a message for the families of American hostages in Lebanon: "We have not given up. We never will. And I promise you we'll use every legitimate means to free your loved ones from captivity."

Local leaders glad Reagan 'came clean'

By RAMONA NYE

Several Midland County Democrat and Republican leaders agreed that President Ronald Reagan "came clean" in his 12-minute address to the nation Wednesday night, but some said the indirect apology could have come sooner.

"I feel the speech should have been made some time ago. It's a little bit late, but better late than never," said Midland County Democratic Chairman Janet Massey.

County Republican Chairman Dean Rucker said, "I won't say it came too late, but certainly I think most of us would like to have seen it maybe back around Thanksgiving."

However, Rucker said the president had a good explanation for not addressing the nation until he had all the facts and had read the Tower Commission report.

Former Republican County Chairman Bob Monaghan said the president was right in not addressing the nation until he had all the facts.

But Young Democrats President David Mandell said, "I still don't believe he's telling us the whole truth. I was very disappointed with the speech. There was nothing new in there that we hadn't already known."

Ms. Massey said that the president could have gone further than his indirect apology that he had made a mistake.

"He could have said I'm sorry," she said.

But Rucker said, "I don't know if we should worry so much about an apology, as we should about accountability. The president acknowledged he was responsible for any mistakes made."

The party officials disagreed about Reagan's effectiveness in his remaining two years in office.

Mandell said, "I think he's going to have trouble passing any legislation. The election in '86 showed his policy was not widely accepted with the loss of the Senate to the Democrats."

Will scandal hurt Clements?

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements predicts there won't be any political fallout from his acknowledged involvement in the Southern Methodist University football scandal, but some others aren't so sure.

"It's hard to see how it would enhance things. The only question is how much damage," said Dr. Richard Murray, a pollster and political scientist at the University of Houston.

"In a state where the governor has relatively weak formal powers, his public standing is important," Murray said Wednesday. "He does have to get along with legislators and so forth. If you lose credibility, you suffer."

Clements testily denied Wednesday that his administration would feel any effect.

"No, I'm not," Clements replied when asked if he was worried about possible political effects of the SMU affair.

Before taking office in January, Clements served as chairman of the SMU Board of Governors. On Tuesday, he told a news conference that he and other university officials decided to continue payments to some football players after the program was slapped with NCAA penalties in 1985.

"I think what he's done is really call into question more vividly than ever his judgment, his feel for what is and isn't proper," said Dr. Charles Elliott, an East Texas State University political scientist who admits to being no fan of the state's only 20th century Republican governor.

The governor's defenders, however, noted that Clements ordered the player payments "phased out." They say he was part of the solution, not part of the problem.

"Hindsight gives you a thousand opportunities to say you should have done it better, you should have done it differently. He could have grandstanded ... but I think the underlying main factor is that he started the cleanup," said George Strake, Texas Republican Party chairman.

"If you analyze the deal, it looks to me that when the governor went into that job as (SMU) chairman, he smelled something fishy and said ... the program is going to be phased out," Strake said.

Clements has refused to say much more about the SMU affair.

"I am not going to talk SMU today," he said Wednesday. "I've done all the talking about SMU I'm going to do."

Earthquake rocks Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — A strong earthquake rocked northern Chile today, damaging buildings, knocking out electricity and frightening residents.

Police said no injuries were reported from the 40-second quake, which affected a 650-mile stretch of territory that is home to more than 580,000 people.

Onemi, the government's national emergency office, said the quake struck at 6:17 a.m. and measured 5.5 on the Richter scale in the cities of Antofagasta, Calama and Chuquicamata.

Police said people took to the streets in panic in some places after the quake. An aftershock at 7:58 a.m. also frightened residents, police said. The aftershock registered 3 on the Richter scale.

Antofagasta is a port city 870 miles north of Santiago that is home to about 125,000 people. Chuquicamata, site of the world's largest open pit copper mine, and Calama are inland cities more than 100 miles northeast of Antofagasta.

Police in Antofagasta said two walls collapsed in the city, including one in a movie house that was being demolished.

The temblor damaged a small bridge in Calama and caused several minor landslides in the Chuquicamata mine, police said. However, mining operations were not affected, they said.

The quake cut off electricity in most places in the affected area. Power was being restored gradually.

In Washington, U.S. Geological Survey spokeswoman Gail Wendt said USGS instruments in Colorado measured a preliminary magnitude of 7.3 on the Richter scale, and said the quake was centered about 20 miles northeast of Antofagasta.

The last large earthquakes to occur in the same general area were a magnitude 6.3 temblor in 1975 and 6.7 quake in 1970.

Greenwood's plan as easy as 'one, two, three'

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth of a five-part series on special programs in education in Midland and Greenwood, commemorating Texas Public Schools Week.

PROGRAMS IN EDUCATION

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Ask teachers in the Greenwood Independent School District to cite the steps for educating able learners, and they'll say, "One, two, three."

That's music to the ears of Curriculum Director Jean Schwinow, who's been working since 1981 on programs for students with higher than normal abilities and special interests.

Her three-year plan, approved by the local school board in 1985, originally was drawn up to ensure continued staff development.

But the "1-2-3 Plan for Excellence" also contains long range goals to serve up to 20 percent of the entire GISD population.

During its first year, students in grades one through 12 identified as having math aptitude were served using three programs.

This year, however, students in grades one through six are placed in grade-level in-classroom cluster groups for the regulary scheduled academic day.

Students at the seventh and eighth grade level who have superior math aptitude, interest and advanced performance are placed in advanced math. In seventh grade, they also are provided a compacted mathematics curriculum to allow students in eighth grade to advance to Algebra I.

Students who demonstrate superior performance in the areas of research, reading and writing are placed in advanced language arts and history courses.

Honors courses with a differentiated curriculum for identified gifted and talented serve the students at the secondary level in the areas of language arts, mathematics and social sciences.

Mrs. Schwinow said the program curriculum uses an interdisciplinary approach to subject matter through teaching strategies which transfer information on a higher cognitive level.

Among the skills taught are research skills, creative and critical thinking skills, interpersonal skills and independent study skills involving product development.

Ms. Schwinow said teachers encourage active student learning as opposed to passive student learning while attending to idividual learning styles, abilities, aptitudes, special interests and goals.

"The need for achievement is within every student: the bright, the slow, the happy, the sad, the first-grader, the senior. With some it's a burning desire. With others, only a little achievement is needed to keep eagerness and motivation alive," she said.

PBPA president proclaims Energy Appreciation Week

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Perry

The current 800 nationwide rig count is statistically unjustified and is the result of overreaction, said Charles Perry, president Permian Basin Petroleum Association, at a press conference to officially proclaim Energy Appreciation Week in the Permian Basin.

Perry said that current oil prices could sustain a rig count of 1,400 rather than the 800, and that there were safe investments available in the oil industry that could show a 20 percent return.

He added that one energy bank had shown a willingness to once again make loans on $15 oil, and that other energy banks would probably follow.

"What I am saying," he noted, "is that we have a negative attitude problem. There is money to be made and wells to be drilled at $15, and we have to get people thinking about that again. We need to start looking up again."

He said Energy Appreciation Week could serve to restore confidence in the oilpatch and get the industry thinking about drilling again.

Reading from a proclamation which was signed by Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas and is expected to be signed by mayors throughout the Permian Basin of West Texas and Southeast New Mexico, Perry said energy was everyone's business in the Permian Basin and that personal success, community welfare and national security were dependent upon a sound self-sustained domestic petroleum industry.

In making the proclamation, Perry announced a week of petroleum-related activities beginning on Sunday, March 22, to be capped by a full day of festivities on Saturday, March 28. He said it would be the first area-wide event celebrating oil and gas since the Santa Rita No.1 blew in May 28, 1923, to make King Crude the reigning industry in the Permian Basin.

Perry, said the event was being planned as a gala turnaround observance. "It will be a coming out party for optimism, to get us looking in a new direction — up." The Odessa oilman warned that pessimists were not invited to the party.

He explained that the Blow Out and Energy Appreciation Week would serve as a means of expressing appreciation for the industry and people that continually battle booms and busts and government red tape to fuel the economy of the Permian Basin, adding that it would also forge bonds of unity among the oil communities of the Permian Basin and PBPA which represents them in Austin and Washington.

Perry noted that the petroleum celebration could become an event of great magnitude that would serve to remind Texas and the nation of the crucial role the Permian Basin plays in producing 40 percent of the oil in Texas and 20 percent of the oil in the U.S.

Activities planned for the Blow Out include: a barbecue brisket cookoff, battle of the bands, dancing exhibitions and World's Ugliest Roughneck competition. The day will finish with a concert and dance by country-western star Gene Watson.

Door prizes to be awarded at the concert include: a Lone Star flag which has flown over the capitol at Austin, two Southwest Airline tickets to Las Vegas for a new member, who has joined PBPA in 1987 and two tickets to Las Vegas for a continuing member in good standing as of March 28, 1987.

Some SMU board members deny part in payments

DALLAS (AP) — One investigation is leading to another at Southern Methodist University, where a football recruiting scandal has led all the way to the Texas governor's office.

SMU's board of governors called for a probe Wednesday into claims by former board chairman and current Gov. Bill Clements that he and other members knew about cash payments to athletes, but intended to phase them out.

Current board members flatly denied any knowledge of the payments and said anyone with knowledge of them should resign.

But a former board member has backed up Clements' statement, the Dallas Morning News reported today.

Dallas banker Robert H. Stewart II, a former member of the SMU board of governors, has backed up Clements' revelation that he told the board of governors in 1985 that some payments to athletes would continue, The News reported in a copyright story today.

The News said Stewart said Clements' comments to the board may have been made in such a way that some board members might have misunderstood him.

Stewart, chairman of InterFirst Corp., told the News that it was "approximately" April 1985 when Clements told the board "that he was dedicated to cleaning up the athletic program, but that it would take some unwinding and that the NCAA (National Collegiate Athletic Association) clearly understood this."

After his discussions with Clements on the decision to continue paying athletes, Stewart said he "had the clear feeling that the NCAA approved of this action."

NCAA officials have denied they had any knowledge of continued payments to SMU players as part of "unwinding" the payment program.

Stewart is the only 1985 board member to publicly confirm Clement's assertion Tuesday that board members knew of the decision to continue the payments. Several board members have said that Clements never told them that payments would continue.

Stewart was chairman of SMU's board of governors from 1976 to 1983, and resigned as a member last month.

"I regret very much that I didn't take more assertive action to eliminate any future problems" with athletics at SMU, Stewart said in a written statement that was his response to questions by The News.

SMU's administration must take the blame for the university's athletics scandal, Stewart said.

Meanwhile, local Methodist leaders demanded that Clements apologize for his role in the "fiasco" and that any school officials involved in it resign immediately, said Earl Carter, executive director of the United Methodist's eight-state South Central Jurisdiction.

Besides seeking the apology, the group of about 40 people led by the Rev. Williams J. Washington called for an expanded investigation into the matter, he said.

The SMU board members were anxious to comply. They asked the president of the Methodist church's College of Bishops to appoint an "external committee" to investigate the accuracy of their statements.

"Everyone unanimously said they were not aware of any continuing payments," board chairman William Hutchison said after the board meeting Wednesday.

Clements, who resigned from the board before his January inauguration, offered no explanation for the others' denials.

SMU Student Senate leader's challenge won't be put off by threats

DALLAS (AP) — The president of Southern Methodist University's Student Senate says anonymous telephone threats won't stop him from challenging some university leaders' roles in recruiting violations.

Trevor Pearlman, a naturalized U.S. citizen from South Africa, said Wednesday some of the callers questioned his right to speak for the university, and that's one reason he asked the Senate for a mandate to pursue legal action against people caught up in the burgeoning scandal.

"I had several calls last night...saying I should get...out of Dallas," Pearlman said. "Several mentioned that I'm not from Texas and I have no right speaking for the university."

In an emergency meeting Tuesday night, the senate approved a resolution to explore legal action "against all responsible parties and individuals."

The action came after Gov. Bill Clements said Tuesday that he and some members of the university Board of Governors knew of illegal payments to student athletes. The Board of Governors denied Clements' claim Wednesday.

The NCAA last week suspended the SMU football program for one year because of recruiting violations.

Pearlman said at a news conference Wednesday that he would consult attorneys this week and present his recommendations to the Senate for approval.

"I went to the Student Senate last night because I wanted a mandate from the students," Pearlman said, citing the harassing telephone calls.

He said free legal advice is being offered by lawyers who graduated from SMU and who "have a love for the school."

Pearlman, a law student, said he does not know who would be named in a lawsuit or what damages would be sought.

"The student body is so angry, so hurt, so torn," Pearlman said. "We feel we have been lied to again and again. We are exasperated by the leadership of this university."

Pearlman said he was not referring to William B. Stallcup, the interim university president.

"My heart goes out to President Stallcup," Pearlman said. "This thing has been dumped on him."

Lawyer blasts banning of humanist texts

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — A civil rights lawyer says a federal judge has "declared ideas unconstitutional" by virtually banning 36 books from Alabama public schools on the ground they promote secular humanism as a religion.

U.S. District Judge William Brevard Hand said Wednesday the use of the textbooks by the state violates the U.S. Constitution's prohibition against the establishment of a religion by the state.

"With these books, the state of Alabama has overstepped its mark, and must withdraw to perform its proper non-religious functions," Hand said in the 172-page ruling.

"Teaching that moral choices are purely personal and can only be based on some autonomous, as yet undiscovered and unfulfilled, inner self is a sweeping fundamental belief that must not be promoted by the public schools," Hand said.

Fundamentalists say secular humanism is the elevation of transient human values over eternal spiritual ones, and secular humanists believe humans can handle their own affairs without divine intervention.

The judge's decision immediately was attacked as a "judicial book-burner" by former Rep. John Buchanan, R-Ala., a Baptist minister and chairman of the Washington-based People for the American Way.

"Never before has a federal court so injected itself into the curriculum of the public schools," Buchanan told a news conference.

People for the American Way and the American Civil Liberties Union joined the state school board in defending against the lawsuit filed by a group of 600 parents and teachers.

"This is the first time to our knowledge that a federal judge has declared ideas unconstitutional," said state ACLU director Mary Weidler. "The decision confirms our worst fears of federal censorship over local public school matters."

In his ruling, Hand said, "This case is not an attempt by anyone to censor materials deemed undesirable, improper or immoral. What this case is about is the allegedly improper promotion of certain religious beliefs."

The conservative National Legal Foundation's director, Robert K. Skolrood, an attorney for TV evangelist Pat Robertson, said Hand's decision "exposes humanism for what it really is: a wolf in sheep's clothing, prowling through the corridors" of schools.

"I don't hink it is a ruling for conservatives. I look at it as a ruling for education in America," Skolrood told a news conference. "Humanism and its hidden agenda of indoctrination has been exposed to the light."

John Tyson Jr., presiding officer of the state Board of Education, said he was not prepared to comment on whether the books would be withdrawn immediately if they were in use in classrooms.

Gov. Guy Hunt, who heads the board, said in a statement, "We will continue to watch this very important litigation as it moves through the federal court system and of course, the state of Alabama will comply with all final orders of the court."

Terry Abbott, Hunt's press secretary, said the Republican governor, who is a Primitive Baptist minister, did not indicate his opinion on the ruling.

William Bradford, a Washington attorney for 12 parents who sided with the school board, said an appeal of Hand's ruling was expected.

Hand's decision came in a lawsuit by the parents and a teachers group that had financial backing from Robertson, a possible GOP presidential contender next year.

"Someone has always had to pay a price for freedom. Ours is minor compared to our forefathers, who died," said Judith Whorton, a Mobile nurse who was one of the plaintiffs.

The judge's ruling went against 22 social studies textbooks, nine history texts and five home economics books, for use in high school and elementary grades. The books are on the state-approved list, but use of the books in the classroom is left to local school districts. It could not immediately be determined how widely the books are used.

In his ruling, Hand cited the history books as "deplorable" not so much for what they contained but for what they omitted, such as the history of the Puritans and early revival movements.

"Colonial missionaries are either not mentioned or represented as oppressors of native Americans," he wrote.

Other events with religious aspects omitted, the judge said, include the religious influence on the abolitionist, women's suffrage, temperance, modern civil rights, and peace movements.

He banned the books as primary texts and said they only could be used as "a reference source in a comparative religion course that treats all religions equivalently."

A humanism advocate who testified during the trial last October disputed Hand's definition of secular humanism as a religion.

"No matter what he says, no matter how he traces it back ... secular humanism is not a religion because it has nothing sacred in it," said Delos McKown, a humanist counselor at Auburn University.

Congressmen's reactions to speech divided

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas' Republican congressmen say they think President Reagan did just fine in his nationally televised speech on the Iran tangle, but the state's Democrats weren't quite so satisfied.

"I think the American public is full of intelligent people who realize that a 15-minute speech is not going to change very much," said Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas. "We'll have to wait and see what he does in the coming weeks."

Sen. Phil Gramm, on the other hand, felt Reagan "answered all the questions" in his Wednesday night speech on the Iran scandal and that the president should move on and begin working on arms control, the budget deficit and other pressing issues.

■ Related stories — 6B, 4D

"The president's speech reached right to the heart of the matter," said the first-term Republican. "It was an important step for the president to rise above his mistakes and then to move ahead.

"I think he outlined how he got in the ditch over the sale of arms to Iran and how he plans to close the barn door behind him on the matter."

Bryant, meanwhile, praised the selection of former Sen. Howard Baker as Reagan's new chief of staff, and predicted Baker will take over a great deal of policy making responsibility in the White House.

"My prediction is that Howard Baker will run our country for the next two years. He is a skillful politician, not an ideologue like the one that just left," Bryant said, referring to outgoing Donald Regan.

Gramm said he believes the relationship between Baker and Reagan will be highly productive and that he looks forward to helping further the goals of the administration.

Sounding a similar theme, Rep. Dick Armey, R-Denton, called the speech "definitive," and said Reagan had taken a significant step past the problems of the Iran scandal.

"I think he made it clear that he has digested the Tower report and made the changes necessary," Armey said. "He has laid this to rest. I think he just shot the sharks out of the water."

This shows the people are not happy with what he is producing and are looking for a change."

But Rucker said, "I think he's regained public confidence. I believe the American public as a whole is now ready to put this issue behind them and get behind the president and make the last two years of his administration as good or better than the first six years."

The president still needs to account for the missing money in the Iran-Contra affair, Ms. Massey said.

Rucker said, "I don't know that there's anything further the president can do at this point. He's accounted for what happened and said let's put it to bed and go ahead."

However, Rucker did acknowledge that further investigations are needed into the diversion of funds from Iran arms sales to the Contras.

Monaghan said if the president comes up with some new facts on the Iran-Contra affair, he should divulge them to the public.

REAGAN

Reagan said he had intended his opening to Iran as a means of developing relations with those who might succeed the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

"I let my personal concern for the hostages spill over into the geopolitical strategy," Reagan said. "I asked so many questions about the hostages' welfare that I didn't ask enough about the specifics of the total Iran plan."

Dole, acknowledging that the speech came after months of damage to Reagan's credibility, said, "This would have been a great speech for, let's say, the night before Thanksgiving."

Reagan conceded, "I've paid a price for my silence in terms of your trust and confidence, but I have had to wait, as have you, for the complete story."

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said the speech "went part way" but that "the president should have recognized it was his orders that authorized arms sales to Iran."

Public opinion polls have shown the 76-year-old Reagan's credibility has suffered because of the admission he changed his testimony before the Tower commission about whether he gave advance approval for the arms sale, finally saying he couldn't remember.

"One thing still upsetting me, however, is that no one kept proper records of meetings or decisions," Reagan said. "This led to my failure to recollect whether I approved an arms shipment before or after the fact.

"I did approve it, I just can't say specifically when. Rest assured, there's plenty of record keeping now going on at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue."

The president said he was "angry" and "disappointed" with "some who served me." He added, "As personally distasteful as I find secret bank accounts and diverted funds, as the Navy would say, this happened on my watch."

But he reiterated he did not know about the diversion of proceeds from the arms sales to the Nicaraguan rebels although, "as president, I cannot escape responsibility."

Former Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, who headed the panel that investigated the White House national security apparatus, said Reagan's remarks constituted an admission of error.

SCHOOL

"We must motivate children to give effort and learn in our classrooms. This can't be done, of course, unless we increase their need and desire to achieve academically".

Fifth-grade teacher Brenda Blackwell said a regular student may need to repeat a skill as many as eight times in order to maintain it.

But an able learner may maintain the same skill after repeating it only three times and, therefore, master the essential elements required by the Texas Education Agency and move on to a differentiated curriculum, she said.

In Ms. Blackwell's class, teaching strategies include the use of surveys, observations, inquiries, small groups, brinstorming, problem solving, decision makeing, simulations and deductive and inductive thinking.

"Teachers are provided staff development opportunities so that all students at GISD can benefit from varied teaching strategies.... Our goal is to develop the students cognitively, affectivey and physically," she said.

Ms. Schwisow said identifying children who have strong desires to achieve is done most easily and effectively by "correctly interpreting what children tell us and observing what they do as well as what gives them satisfaction."

"Success without recoghition makes the success less meaningful," she said.

Elderly man stranded five days

WELEETKA, Okla. (AP) — An 89-year-old man who spent five days stranded in his car on a muddy road says he owes his life to a rancher's curiosity about whether the Cadillac with Kansas plates had been stolen.

Dean Reitz, of Mission, Kan., drank water from a puddle and wrote daily notes to his wife before being found by Doyle Burden, 24.

Burden took Reitz to his parents' grocery store in Weleetka, where they gave him orange juice and a banana and called an ambulance.

"I started to go for help, but I thought if I had been there so long I would not want anyone to leave," Burden said. "I drove up to about 50 feet from the car and it took him about 15 minutes to walk to the truck."

"Brother, he saved my life," Reitz said Wednesday from his bed at Henryetta Medical Center. Hospital officials said he was expected to be released today.

Damage from spying 'beyond calculation'

Pollard

Israel responds, Page 6B

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Navy intelligence analyst Jonathan Jay Pollard, sentenced to life imprisonment for selling Israel enough classified documents to fill a walk-in closet, caused damage to national security that was "beyond calculation," the government says.

U.S. Attorney Joseph diGenova said it was "highly unlikely he will ever see the light of day" after Pollard, his arm around his sobbing wife, was sentenced Wednesday by U.S. District Judge Aubrey Robinson. Pollard, however, will be eligible for parole after serving 10 years.

DiGenova, who heads the investigation that led to the indictment earlier this week of a senior Israeli air force officer on espionage charges, said Pollard and his Israeli contacts "compromised the most significant amount of classified information that has ever been compromised in an espionage case."

Appearing later Wednesday on the "MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour," diGenova estimated the damage caused by Pollard's spying was "beyond calculation and well beyond what's been previously reported in the press."

Investigators said Pollard was paid more than $50,000 and promised $300,000 more by his Israeli contacts.

Pollard, 32, holding his distraught wife around the waist as he stood before Robinson, was sentenced on his June 4, 1986, guilty plea to conspiracy to commit espionage.

His wife, Anne Henderson-Pollard screamed, "No, no," and slumped to the floor when Robinson pronounced the sentence with the single word: "Life."

She again screamed and collapsed when Robinson sentenced her to five years for conspiracy to receive embezzled government property and being an accessory after the fact to possessing defense secrets.

Pollard, 32, told Robinson his resolve to help Israel was "an act of intellectual laziness. I broke trust ...brought disgrace upon my family. I inadvertently strained relations between two otherwise amicable nations."

Pleading with Robinson to show his wife mercy, Pollard said, "I sacrificed her, inadvertently...on the alter of political ideology."

Ms. Henderson-Pollard, 26, tearfully begged Robinson for a chance to be reunited someday with her husband. "That's all I live for."

"I love Jay very much and when he called me in his eleventh hour, I responded because I felt that it is what a wife should do," she said, referring to her attempt to destroy a suitcase filled with documents shortly before his arrest.

Robinson ordered Ms. Henderson-Pollard, who had been free on bond, to immediately begin serving her sentence.

The sentencing came a day after Aviem Sella, 41, the commander of a large Israeli air force base, was indicted on espionage charges that he recruited and directed Pollard's spying activities. The Justice Department is preparing to bring charges against three other Israelis, although they cannot be forced to stand trial in the United States unless they come voluntarily.

In requesting a lengthy sentence for Pollard, Assistant U.S. Attorney Charles Leeper urged Robinson to "consider what further unauthorized disclosure of classified information we can expect from Pollard."

He noted that Pollard had violated court procedures for granting press interviews and had disclosed government secrets in a recent interview with an Israeli journalist.

"It's clear that his perspective has been so skewed, his view so warped (that) at the first opportunity he is going to go about the business of telling everything he knows to Israel," Leeper told Robinson. "In combination with the breadth of this man's knowledge, the depth of his memory and his complete lack of honor, he is a very dangerous man."

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, in an affidavit filed before sentencing, also warned that "in light of the defendant's continued disclosures of sensitive information for publication by the press, there is ample cause to believe that Pollard will continue to divulge classified defense information without restraint."

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

EDITOR'S NOTE — This day-by-day account of 1787, the year that the U.S. Constitution was written, blends the significant with the small, personal details that bring history to life. The authors spent three years in research and writing, drawing on letters and personal diaries as well as the better-known historical documents. The writers are David D.C. Dutcher, David A. Kimball, Robert K. Sutton and Anna Coxe Toogood, all of the Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, where the Constitution was created 200 years ago.

Monday, March 5, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The Pennsylvania Assembly today granted a petition to the Seventh-Day Baptist Church to incorporate the Newtown and French Creek congregations in Chester County. This action was another step in the continuing dispute between these churches and the Piscataway and Cohansey, N.J., congregations over custody of that sect's burying ground at Fifth and Market streets in Philadelphia.

The courts last year awarded custody of the cemetery to the New Jersey congregations because those of Chester County were unincorporated. Now that the Pennsylvania churches were legitimate, they had a stronger claim to the cemetery.

The brig St. Croix Packet completed a successful voyage from the Virgin Islands via Charleston to Willing's Wharf in Philadelphia. Within hours after docking, the ship's master, James Josiah, walked to Charles Willson Peale's house to sit for a portrait. The ship returned to St. Croix on March 17, two days after Peale finished his initial sketches.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Congress convened today. But after a roll call it adjourned, since a quorum was not present.

James Madison and the other Virginia delegates to Congress reported to their governor that the Dutch ambassador continued to object to the recent legislation that gave favorable trade terms to the French for wine and brandy imports. Ambassador Van Berkel believed that the action violated Holland's most-favored nation status.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Newbold sent Gov. William Livingston a report on the state of New Jersey's militia: "On the whole there can be no great things said in favor of it." Yet, the report might "give information to the historian and amusement to (any other) reader."

Several individuals wrote to George Washington today on different topics.

Henry Knox brought the general up to date on a number of political topics. He described the aftermath of Shays' Rebellion, New York's appointment of delegates to the Constitutional Convention, and mentioned that Jeremiah Wadsworth asked to be remembered to him.

Alexander Spotswood informed his friend that he had sent several bushels of hominy, oats, barley, and white field pea seeds for planting at Mount Vernon. Spotswood also wanted to know the results of the experiments conducted at the general's plantation. He particularly was interested in the corn test patches; more precisely, he wondered if there was a perceptible difference in yield if the seeds were planted further apart.

Israel Shreve, from Burlington County, N.J., wrote to inquire if Washington was still interested in selling his land holdings in western Pennsylvania. He offered to pay full value for the property. He said he was not a speculator, but would farm the land himself.

LOOKING BACK
The Shreve Family

It is unclear whether Shreve purchased the land from George Washington. It is known, however, that Shreve moved to Fayette County, Pa., in the vicinity of the general's land in about 1788 and lived there until his death in 1799.

Shreve served as a colonel in the Revolution, although he was a Quaker and forbidden by his sect to bear arms. He was born and raised in Burlington, N.J.

Shreve's son, Henry Miller, who was only 3 when the family moved to Pennsylvania, made the family name famous. Young Henry left the farm shortly after his father's death and began a career of running river boats down the inland waterways. He started by piloting keelboats and barges on the Ohio River. Then in 1807 he began a fur trading route between St. Louis and Philadelphia. Gradually he expanded his business to include shipping lead from southern Illinois to New Orleans on 95-foot barges.

When Robert Fulton introduced the steamboat to the Mississippi River, Shreve recognized that this new technology was the wave of the future. He invested in the Enterprise, an 80-foot sternwheeler, and in 1814 carried a load of supplies down the Mississippi for Andrew Jackson and his army. His second steamboat, the Washington, which he helped to design, became the standard ship for the river trade.

Shreve later developed a steam work boat that was powerful enough to pull snags out of the river. His invention revolutionized river navigation by removing many of the hazards in the Mississippi. In the 1830s, Shreve took on the responsibility of removing the Red River raft, a huge log jam that had blocked the development of northern Louisiana. The project was complicated and time consuming, and a large camp was developed at the site for the workers.

The camp became a town, named Shreveport.

Cabinetmaker's tree house ordered moved

BRANFORD, Fla. (AP) — A cabinetmaker who since 1983 has lived in a tree house overlooking the Suwannee River has to move the structure under a judge's order because the tree's owner wants to sell the site.

Friends of John Kendall Thurston are trying to raise the $3,000 needed to hire a helicopter to lift the house by March 11, the deadline imposed by Suwannee County Judge Tom Kennon for the house to be moved.

"I've accepted it. I know it's going to happen. It's just a matter of how," said Thurston, 35.

Thurston built the 12-by-10 foot structure on a wood deck some 40 feet above the Suwannee River, south of this northern Florida community. Four branches of a huge live oak tree support the home, which features a glass loft.

Thurston told Kennon at a hearing in December that farmer Doyle Bradley gave him permission to build the tree house in 1980. Bradley, who leased the property from real estate developer James Pichowski, died last year.

Commuter plane crash kills nine, injures 20

ROMULUS, Mich. (AP) — Victims were in flames as they tried to escape from a burning commuter plane after it crashed at Detroit's airport, killing nine of the 19 people aboard and injuring up to 20, including 10 on the ground.

"I don't know how anybody got out," Leroy Garvey said after the twin-engine plane crashed on landing, flipped, caught fire and slammed into service vehicles Wednesday afternoon at Detroit Metropolitan Airport.

A National Transporation Safety Board team was to begin investigating the wreck today, said board chairman Jim Burnett.

The pilot, first officer and seven passengers were killed, officials said.

The crash was the worst in the 30-year history of the nation's 12th largest airport, said Richard Jamison, Wayne County director of airports.

The Fischer Brothers Aviation CASA 212-200 turboprop, operating as Northwest Airlink Flight 2268, had left Mansfield, Ohio, and stopped in Cleveland en route to Detroit.

The pilot may have lost power in an engine as it approached for landing, said Jamison.

"She lowered, she rose, it looked like something malfunctioned," said Thomas Moore, 34, of Dearborn Heights, who watched the crash from his car on Interstate 94 next to the airport.

"It banked real hard to the left, and she nosed in off the left of the runway," said Moore. "There was a huge fireball at the moment of impact. I hope God has pity on those poor people."

Garvey said he saw two passengers climb from the wreckage with their clothes afire.

"I saw those two guys rolling out with their arms on fire," said Garvey, 69, of Detroit. "Then there was a second flash...I don't know how anybody got out."

The plane's left wing slammed into the pavement. The craft bounced, turned over and the flaming wreckage slid about 1,000 feet before plowing into two catering trucks, baggage carts and other service vehicles 20 to 30 feet from a terminal.

Ten people on the plane and 10 ground workers were injured, said Jim Vollman, county Office of Public Services director. However, hospitals reported treating only 13, including six who were released.

Airport officials could not explain the discrepancy; but police officers and security guards said they believed some people with slight injuries may have refused treatment at hospitals.

Seven people were admitted in conditions ranging from guarded to good, hospital officials said.

Dozens saw the crash.

"Everybody started running toward the plane to try to help," said Ellie Heinrich, 52, of Rochester, a passenger awaiting her flight. "And the people on fire were bright red. I'll never forget it."

Some said they fled the terminal because they could feel the fire's heat.

One tough cookie

When the report from the President's Special Review Board on the Iran arms affair was released last week, it was heralded on Capitol Hill as thorough, tough and fair. Little else should have been expected from the three-member presidential panel commonly known as the "Tower commission." The commission obviously set out to perform a difficult, thankless task in the best interests of the nation. The panel was successful.

In no small measure, the success was the result of the quality of the three members — Edmund Muskie, former Secretary of State during the Carter presidency and former Democratic U.S. senator from Maine; Brent Scowcroft, career military officer who directed a 1983 presidential commission on the MX missile; and John G. Tower, U.S. negotiator on strategic nuclear arms and a former Republican U.S. senator from Texas for 24 years.

While the task was no doubt emotionally-straining for the panel members, that proved exceptionally accurate for Tower. Said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, who for 14 years sat across the aisle from Tower:

"One of the toughest jobs he has had was heading up this commission because he is a very strong Republican. To supervise and issue a tough report on the president of his own party wasn't easy for him."

But Tower's long years of public service have been marked by the same attention to detail, duty and dogged determination exhibited by the panel. During his Senate tenure, Tower became an expert in the field of defense and that led to his appointment in 1985 as a U.S. negotiator on strategic nuclear arms. His determination to get a job done fair and appropriately was well known in advance to President Reagan and other administration officials.

In picking Tower to head the presidential panel, Reagan was actually ensuring that the group would delve deeply into the National Security Council operations and reveal all the warts and blemishes that needed to be removed. In political circles Tower is known as one tough cookie — the kind of public official who will get the job done regardless of the political consequences. That's exactly what transpired when the report was released. The report let the chips fall where they would as it revealed a president out of touch and a National Security Council out of control. It was not a pretty picture, but an honest one.

The nation owes John Tower, Ed Muskie and Brent Scowcroft thanks for a job-well-done. They put the interests of the nation first and their report should point the way for meaningful change that should ensure this kind of activity isn't allowed to occur again.

FBI's suspicions of Cagney die hard

WASHINGTON — Was Yankee Doodle Dandy a dirty pinko rat?

The FBI's suspicions that the late James Cagney was a communist sympathizer dogged the Hollywood star for years, even though the government concluded as early as 1943 that there was no substance to doubts about Cagney's patriotism.

Jack Anderson

This decision, made the year after Cagney's Oscar-winning performance as song-and-dance man George M. Cohan in the superpatriotic wartime movie "Yankee Doodle Dandy" didn't keep the FBI from repeatedly dredging up its old suspicions, which dated back to unsubstantiated charges made by anonymous tipsters in 1938. Whenever the FBI had occasion to mention Cagney in memos and reports, the vague charge of communist sympathy was sure to be mentioned.

Indeed, this is a common theme in most of the FBI's files on celebrities; we have been reporting on them for more than a decade.

As late as 1968, when President Johnson asked the FBI for background information on dozens of celebrities who might be invited to the White House, the bureau reported that Cagney had been the subject of a security investigation. The report did not add that allegations against the movie tough guy had never been confirmed.

The G-men's dark suspicions about Cagney are difficult to fathom. W.C. Lyles, a Paramount producer for 50 years and a pallbearer at the star's funeral last year, was astonished when told about his lifelong friend's recently released FBI file by our associate Stewart Harris.

Lyles said Cagney was one of the most patriotic Americans he had ever known. Indeed, the producer recalled that Cagney, who rose from the sidewalks of New York to the top of the movie world, had been known to shed tears during the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The FBI's misgivings about Cagney may have begun in 1935, when he starred in Warner Brothers' "G-Men," playing an FBI agent. An internal memo indicates that the FBI declined to cooperate with Warners on the movie "because it was inappropriate." This may have been due to Cagney's previous roles as gangsters and hard-bitten convicts.

Cagney's acting ability apparently got him off the hook that time. The film was a critical success; an FBI agent summarized the San Francisco Chronicle's rave review in an internal memo: "The picture removed all pretense of glamour from the public enemy, but still managed to create hugely effective entertainment, all on the right side of the law. ... The picture gives Cagney, a former public enemy No. 1, a new role as a two-fisted government agent operating against criminals."

But these brownie points weren't enough to prevent an FBI investigation three years later, after unnamed tipsters claimed that Cagney was secretly contributing $100 a month to the Communist Party through an attorney. The charge was never confirmed.

The FBI did conclude that Cagney donated money to lettuce strikers in Salinas, Calif., and to the Loyalist side in the Spanish Civil War. Agents particularly questioned Cagney's efforts with another movie gangster, Edward G. Robinson, to buy the Loyalists two ambulances. The Loyalists were helped and eventually dominated by the Soviet Union in their fight against Gen. Francisco Franco, who was aided by Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini. Such Loyalist support was subsequently and euphemistically labeled by government Red-hunters as "premature anti-fascism."

In 1940, the first chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, Rep. Martin Dies, D-Texas, announced that Cagney (and Humphrey Bogart and Frederic March) had never been communist sympathizers.

Despite this public exoneration, and the FBI's own 1943 clearance, the old charges against Cagney were dusted off again in 1958, when Paramount wanted to do a TV series based on FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover's book, "Persons in Hiding." Cagney had expressed an interest in the project, and that was enough to chill the G-men.

An internal memo said Cagney had been "linked to numerous communist front organizations," and said: "Certainly with this background, we don't want to have anything to do with Cagney."

Opinion doesn't count

I am writing in regard to Georgia Temple's Feb. 15 critique of "The Sound of Music" at Theatre Midland. In the article of Feb. 8, she wrote that "The Sound of Music" is a good play, but the latest article seems to contradict this.

Midland Community Theatre is not one to be compared with Broadway, nor is a play to be compared to a movie. On Broadway and in Hollywood you are dealing with paid professionals. In Theatre Midland we do have some professional personnel behind the scenes, but most are not paid for their services; they volunteer. The theatre here is made so anyone can try their hand in show business. In the past she has seldom given Midland Community Theatre productions positive reviews. We wonder if Ms. Temple really understands theatre.

Midland Community Theatre has been here for many decades and will be here for many years after she has gone. We try to produce the best plays we can, and on most occasions we have done just that. We have put on some of the best performances an amateur theatre could without equaling a Broadway rehearsal schedule and without spending millions of dollars putting them together.

We don't understand how she can put down a production that has had eight standing ovations in eight performances. She also does not understand theatre painting. The background was painted for effect. What did she expect, a Picasso? Also you can not move the Swiss Alps to Midland Community Theatre. David Layman did his research into the time, so the sets are correct. We admit that we have had our share of bad performances, but "The Sound of Music" is one of our better shows.

As you can see, Georgia Temple, whatever your opinion is of Theatre Midland is not important to us. The only thing that counts is the opinion of Midland itself.

Sports 'discrepancies'

In a recent edition of the Reporter-Telegram, Ted Battles sports trivia answer had several discrepancies. Herman Wedmeyer did play for the St. Mary's, Calif., team that lost to Oklahoma A&M, but it was the Sugar Bowl and the year was 1946, not 1945! Oklahoma A&M did play in the Cotton Bowl in 1945, but their opponent was TCU.

I believe Ted Battles is too far from the Red River to know all the pertinent facts about Oklahoma A&M, now known as Oklahoma State University.

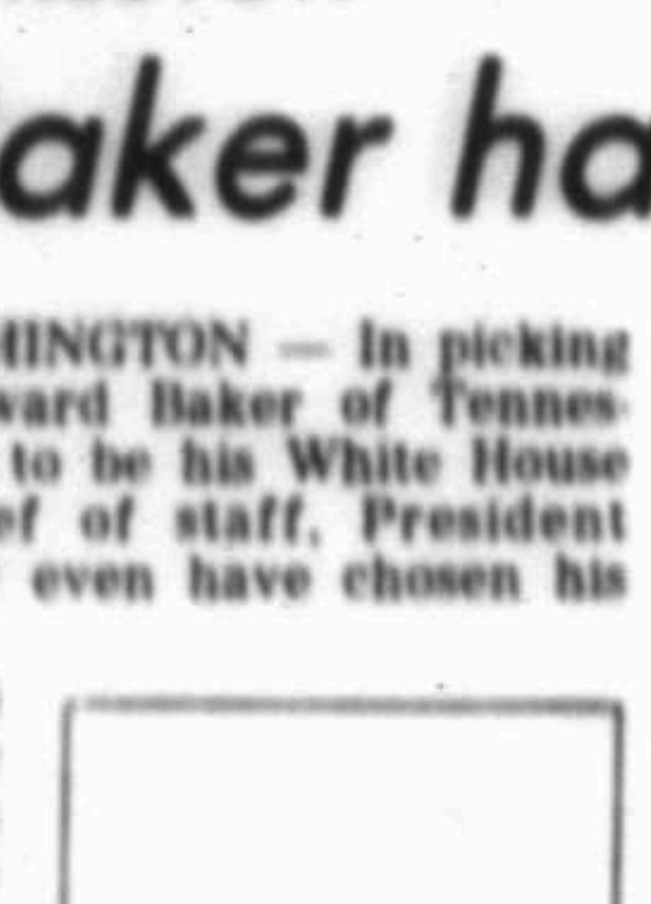
Baker has chance to fix Humpty Dumpty

WASHINGTON — In picking Howard Baker of Tennessee to be his White House chief of staff, President Reagan may even have chosen his successor.

For by this single stroke he has changed the atmosphere here, raised the prospect for bipartisan cooperation in both domestic and foreign policy, and transformed the presidential election of 1988.



James Reston

This may be saying too much for Howard Baker, since he says he is not a candidate, but as noted in this corner the other day, if members of the Congress had the power to appoint the politician best qualified to be the next president of the United States, they would probably choose the little man from Tennessee.

Much will depend, of course, on how Reagan himself reacts to the fair and judicious but severely critical report of the Tower Commission's findings on his misjudgments of the Iranian arms deal.

He has acted wisely and quickly in replacing Don Regan with Baker as soon as the report was published, and we will know more when Reagan addresses the nation whether he intends to let Baker be Baker or expects him to follow Regan's policy of letting Reagan be Reagan.

If, however, the president really wants to get on to the problems of the future with nonpartisan support in his next two years, as he says, Baker can help him in what obviously will be a most difficult task. At least Baker will change the mood.

There has always been something fantastic and exaggerated about the Reagan-Regan White House. The president couldn't even have a normal "great fall" like any other Humpty Dumpty; it had to be a helluva crash.

For him everything seemed true but the facts, and Regan egged him on. There was something bizarre and even weird about all this, both unimaginable and inevitable. Reagan tried to balance the budget by cutting taxes, and bring peace on earth by invading the stars. Washington always knew he couldn't keep on floating along like this, without visible means of support, but it wasn't prepared for this free fall to disaster.

Given a chance, Baker is likely to change the question and open the doors.

For he is above all a practical man, more concerned with the public trust than with public opinion, with building coalitions across party lines than with ideology or even partisan advantage.

No doubt this will trouble the right-wing zealots in his party who concentrate on cutting taxes and bashing Communists. Ideology aside, however, Baker will want to know if the policies work; and on present evidence of the budget deficit, the trade deficit and the state of U.S. policy with the Russians and the allies, they are not working now.

It doesn't follow, of course, however well he does, that this will pitch Baker into the presidential race. In fact, it will take him right out of it for the foreseeable future, for he will have to scrap whatever political organization he now has, and concentrate on his White House job.

But if he does that job between now and the political nominating convention, much may change. Perhaps the most important function of a public servant in a free and democratic society is to preserve its oneness while he guides the battles that divide it.

Baker is obviously and intuitively qualified to do this without rancor, gathering trust because he gives it and working through the tangles of government because he believes in it.

He has been in eclipse since he resigned as Republican leader of the Senate, but he now will be as much in the limelight as he chooses to be.

He has good personal relations with Secretary of State Shultz, whose job he once coveted; and with the support of the president and the congressional leaders, he may even be able to put Humpty Dumpty back together again.

He has been summoned in this crisis because he can be a restorer of order and serenity after years of ideological turmoil and faction. If he succeeds in this assignment, or even if he makes a difference that is visible to the people, it is at least conceivable that he could be drafted for higher service as General Eisenhower was in 1952.

After all, the competition is not all that formidable in either party. Reagan will not be in the race, and maybe by then even Iran will be no more than a shameful memory.

Chicago politics: Just a game of chicken

CHICAGO — Donald Haider, 45, Republican candidate for mayor, is a burly former football player (Stanford), a professor (school of business, Northwestern) and a fine judge of a suitable venue for discussing the sweaty, bruising politics of this city. It is lunch at Mike Ditka's restaurant — no kiwi fruit on the menu — where the sports motif is maintained by television screens pumping taped sporting events into air thick with thunderous music by Dire Straits.

George F. Will

Straits are always dire for Republicans in a city that has not had a Republican mayor since the year Lou Gehrig got 184 RBIs (1931). But Haider is having fun and has a glimmer of hope, which is more than the usual Republican allotment.

Mayor Harold Washington and former Mayor Jane Byrne have just committed many months of assault on Chicagoans with a primary contest about whose four years were worse. Washington won the nomination 53 percent to 47 percent. The electorate is 44 percent black and about 99 percent of black voters heeded the black judge (herewith a sample of judiciousness, Chicago-style) who said that "any man south of Madison St." who didn't vote for Washington "ought to be hung."

Now, all that stands between Washington and victory in the general election April 7 are Haider and two other white candidates: Edward "Fast Eddie" Vrdolyak, Democratic alderman and Cook County Democratic chairman; and Thomas Hynes, a Democrat and Cook County assessor. If all three stay in the race, and Haider certainly will, Washington will win in a walk.

The anti-Washington strategy has been to get him one-on-one with a white candidate. Byrne jumped in the Democratic primary race early with both feet and a fistful of money. When it became clear she was in to stay, other Democrats looked for ways to duck the primary and still get a crack at Washington.

As his instrument for fracturing the Democratic vote, Vrdolyak fastened on the empty husk of the Solidarity Party, which Adlai Stevenson III invented last year when some zanies from Lyndon LaRouche's organization won places on the Democratic ticket. As Hynes says, with only some hyperbole, Vrdolyak has 100 percent name recognition and a five percent approval rating. Those are unpromising numbers, so why is he doing this? Animal spirits.

Hynes is a well-regarded former state legislator who probably is burning his bridges with the Democratic Party by running against Washington on his spanking-new Chicago First party. Why is he doing this? Ethnic atavism, perhaps.

Chicago politics is tribal. Hynes is Irish: He even got himself born there, which is a good career move for a Chicago politician. Until the recent black ascendancy, the Irish dominated Chicago politics. Hynes' candidacy is a last hurrah of the sort favored by Celtic romanticism.

Haider has two distinctions. First, he is the only one of the four candidates who is not a Democrat. Asked how long he has been a Republican, he laughingly replies, "Including this week?" He was Mayor Byrne's budget director, has been an adviser to Mayor Washington, was a White House fellow under Gerald Ford and has been a Republican for...months.

Second, Haider seems interested in governance as well as politics — although he knows the political necessity of theater. His favorite prop is a parking meter.

Most of Chicago's meters do not work. That, says Haider, is a result of political mismanagement in procurement. It costs the city $15 million a year in lost revenues, on top of the millions lost in the mismanagement of collections from meters that work. How, asks Haider, can a mayor who can not make parking meters work cope with a 50 percent dropout rate in a school system that is only 13 percent white?

Haider must be Mike Ditka's only customer who quotes Prof. James Q. Wilson of Harvard. Doing so, Haider explains that the task of mayor is to deliver services and resolve conflicts. Chicago conflicts come and go.

Of the late Mayor Daley, who Washington in 1983 remembered as a "racist," Washington now says: "He was a spiritual father to me." Washington has his own way with words, calling critics "antediluvian dodo heads" and saying that his new majority on the city council gives him "lebensraum."

Chicago was once the hog butcher of the world, broad shouldered and all that. Today Chicago is the crap shoot of the world: 80 percent of all futures are traded here. So it seems right that its politics is, as this is written, a game of chicken, with Washington's opponents warily watching to see who, if anyone, will drop out.

Perhaps all three will stay in. Election Day is April 7, opening day at Wrigley Field. There could be a lot of losing in Chicago that day.

Liberia to install financial managers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The debt-ridden African nation of Liberia, in a sweeping grant of power to the United States, has agreed to install 17 U.S. financial managers in key government offices and give them the right to approve spending.

The pact, which Liberian President Samuel K. Doe approved as the price of continued U.S. aid, amounts to the creation of what one U.S. official characterized as a shadow economic cabinet.

The program, announced Wednesday, follows sharp criticism of the way U.S. aid has been handled by Liberia, which has had close ties to the United States since the early 19th century when its government was founded by freed American slaves.

State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley described the arrangement as a "joint financial management program" in which the experts hired by the United States "will be working with their senior Liberian counterparts in key financial ministries and other government institutions."

Asked if the U.S. managers would have the right to co-sign all checks, Mrs. Oakley said, "It is my understanding that they do."

The department said there have been similar agreements involving isolated agencies in other countries, but the scope of the agreement with Liberia was "unique."

"It should be clear that the concept of co-signing and co-approving authority in a broad range of revenue and expenditure areas was one which General Doe deemed appropriate and which does not compromise his final authority or the sovereignty of Liberia," the department said.

A U.S. official, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said further negotiations will settle the details of what would happen if the Liberian and American partners disagree on a policy or expenditure.

"The purpose of this program is to help Liberia get back on its feet and to make sure that it is following economically sound policies to get there," another official said.

The U.S. managers, who are expected to be on the job beginning this summer, will enter the highest levels of departments controlling exports, imports, computer operations, procurement, tax collection, customs, budget and foreign exchange. A U.S. manager also will be placed in the country's central bank.

The U.S. ability to engineer such an agreement stems from its importance as the economic bulwark of Liberia, reportedly accounting for one-third of the African nation's revenues.

American assistance totaled $434 million between 1980 and 1986, making the country of 2 million people the highest U.S. assistance recipient, per capita, in sub-Saharan Africa.

Further aid — including $10.2 million that would have been sent last year — has been frozen because Liberia is more than a year behind in $3.25 million in loan repayments to the United States. U.S. law requires an automatic cutoff in aid to countries that fall far behind in payments.

The agreement was reached in early February during meetings between Doe and Peter McPherson, administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development. In one section of the pact, Liberia promised to halt "extra-budgetary expenses," which one U.S. official defined as "questionable expenses — things that don't show up in the budget document but seemed to get paid anyway."

"U.S. economic and food assistance to Liberia has faced a high risk of diversion and or misuse since 1980," according to a Feb. 13 report by the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress. 1980 is the year Doe, then a Liberian army master sergeant, took over in a coup in which 400 people were killed.

"The government of Liberia has not established a fiscal and economic policy environment favorable to donor assistance, nor has it established an adequate level of accountability for development programs," the GAO said.

It also said "U.S. controls over assistance were inadequate."

Concern about the human rights situation in Liberia also has been raised, notably by private U.S. groups that have questioned the legitimacy of the Doe government.

NATION IN BRIEF

Half of Navy's jets grounded

WASHINGTON (AP) — Half of the Navy's A-6E Intruder attack jets are on the ground or under flight restrictions because of concerns about fatigue cracks in the wings.

The precautionary moves were imposed on 186 of the Navy's 340 A-6E's in late February pending completion of a new inspection program, Lt. Cmdr. Robert Pritchard, a Navy spokesman, said Wednesday.

They were ordered in the wake of the crash of an A-6E on Jan. 14 near El Centro, Calif. Two aviators were killed. In sifting through the wreckage, the Navy discovered two small fatigue cracks in wing panels.

The service has not attributed the crash to those cracks, but said the size of the crack indicates that it would reduce wing strength more than had been originally anticipated.

NASA's Pioneer 9 'dead'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A last-ditch attempt to revive NASA's Pioneer 9 spacecraft, silent for nearly four years, has failed.

On Wednesday, the space agency declared the craft officially dead. It has helped scientists predict solar storms and measure solar winds since it was launched Nov. 8, 1968.

Pioneer 9 outlived all of NASA's expectations as it continued to provide a stream of data more than 15 years after its six-month design life ended. But scientists received its last signal on May 18, 1983.

On Wednesday, engineers at NASA's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, Calif., made a last-ditch attempt to revive the spacecraft, transmitting 270 commands, but even an especially sensitive receiver could not detect a response.

B-1B program behind schedule

WASHINGTON (AP) — The radar and weight problems of the B-1 bomber point to management failure on the part of the Air Force, a top Pentagon official says.

"The B-1B program is behind schedule and unfinished because of management deficiencies at all levels and spanning the life of the program," John E. Krings, director of the Pentagon's operational test and evaluation office, told two House Armed Services subcommittees on Wednesday.

In 1981, Congress approved 100 B-1s at a total cost of $20.5 billion. Thirty-five have been delivered so far.

But the Air Force says the bomber is too heavy and has serious deficiencies in its terrain-following radar, which is supposed to permit it to fly low under enemy defenses, and its defensive electronic system, which is supposed to permit it to hide from opponents' defenses.

The Air Force says all the problems in the Rockwell-built bomber can be fixed, although it will bring the total cost of the program to an estimated $28.1 billion.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Sunny skies and warmer daytime temperatures are in the forecast given by the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. The high is expected to be in the middle 70s. Winds will be out of the south at five to 15 mph.

Tonight will be much the same as the past several nights in the Midland area. The low should be in the middle to upper 30s. Skies will be fair with winds out of the southeast at five to 10 mph.

Wednesday's high of 65 was 20 degrees cooler than the record high set for that date in 1938. Today's low, recorded at 6 a.m., was 14 degrees warmer than the record low of 20 set for this date in 1966.

STATE

Pleasant weather was expected to continue through at least the first part of the weekend as forecasts called for continued mostly clear skies and pleasant temperatures.

A few scattered high level clouds over the Panhandle at dawn spoiled an otherwise cloud-free sky across the entire state.

The weather remained under the influence of a high pressure system.

Lows tonight will be in the mid 30s and 40s over West Texas except in the higher valleys of the Big Bend area where readings will be in the 20s, in the 40s in North Texas and in the 30s in the Hill Country and in the 40s over the rest of South Texas.

Highs Friday will be in the 70s statewide except in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas where readings be in the lower 80s.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 30s and 40s, ranging from the 20s in the mountains of Southwest Texas to the 50s along the gulf coast. Extremes ranged from 25 at Marfa to 55 at Corpus Christi.

NATION

Skies were clear over much of the nation east of the Rockies today and temperatures were unseasonably high in the West, where a Pacific storm was pushing inland.

The storm was spreading rain from western sections of Washington and Oregon across northern and central California. Rain was expected to increase across California, and up to 6 inches of rain were predicted for the higher mountains of southern California by Friday.

Although clear skies dominated east of the Rockies, clouds were widespread in south Florida and from the Great Lakes across the Ohio Valley.

Temperatures around the nation at 2 a.m. EST ranged from zero at St. Johnsbury, Vt., to 76 at Bakersfield, Calif.

Woman says concrete dust could kill son

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Dust from a proposed concrete plant could kill a Midland woman's 13-year-old son, she testified this morning, but her concerns were ruled irrelevant.

The action came in the third day of hearings on a concrete mixing plant proposed for construction on a 4¾-acre site near the intersection of State Highway 158 and Farm-To-Market 1246 by Troy Vines, Inc., a Midland concrete company.

"The doctors in Denver have assured me that this will have an adverse affect on him, and will threaten his life," said Glenda Hart, #7 Mesquitetree Lane, in reference to her son Toby, the victim of a severe respiratory ailment. Her house is about a quarter mile from the proposed plant.

"It's not just an illness situation," she said. "It could be fatal."

Texas Air Control Board Hearings Examiner John Worley sustained the objections of TACB attorney Bridget Bohac and Vines attorney Jim Matthews that Ms. Hart's testimony was not relevant to the specific issues being considered.

Worley has said that the proceedings will determine whether the proposed plant falls within TACB regulations and not if the plant is harmful to the health of nearby residents or detrimental to their property.

During Wednesday proceedings, Worley shocked attorneys representing opposition parties by informing them that testimony about Vines' past TACB compliance also was not germane to the case.

The determination stems from a Air Control Board decision last Friday in a case involving a concrete plant proposed for Conroe by the Pioneer Concrete Co. of Texas, Worley said during a recess.

The board's decision "seems to imply that all a company has to do is have the (emissions reducing) equipment to meet the conditions," Worley said. "Compliance history is no longer relevant."

While attorneys for the opposition said the determination does not substantially change their case, they bemoaned the ruling.

"Quite frankly, the Air Control Board has taken the position that there's nothing relevant you can introduce in these hearings," opposition attorney Stuart Henry said this morning.

In regard to the Vines case, "At issue is not whether he can operate the equipment and not whether he will operate the equipment, but whether he has the equipment," Henry said, adding, "which is ludicrous, really."

In other Wednesday testimony — that lasted until about 10 p.m. — Vines' attorneys finished presenting their case for allowing plant construction by calling expert witness Julian Levy Jr. of Austin to the stand.

Levy's very technical testimony centered around the plant's specifications and the amount of expected emissions from the facility.

He estimated those emissions would amount to about three tons yearly, a figure well within the 25 tons of cement dust and other "particulants" that TABC regulations allow.

Previously Wednesday, Jody Vines, son of Troy Vines and a vice president in the family corporation, finished his testimony as the main company representative in the hearings.

Among items Vines told the hearings examiner was that the company's plans to establish a pre-cast concrete manufacturing plant on the 4¾-acre site in addition to the concrete mixing plant.

Vines said the manufacturing plant would make such products as concrete septic tanks, concrete oil field "heater treater" bases and prefabricated concrete walls.

'Airplane' scheme lands in Midland

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A variation on the "pyramid" or "endless chain scheme" known as "Airplane" has settled into the Permian Basin, and authorities said participants should be prepared for a harrowing ride that will probably end in disaster.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said his office has received several "inquiries" about the scheme, and he said an investigation is under way.

Midland Police Chief Richard Czech said he has been contacted and "we have put out the word that people shouldn't be involved."

John K. Schmidt, president of the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, said the scheme has been in Midland since January, and has more recently moved into Odessa.

"It has spread around the country," he said. "We have had reports from Cleveland, Nashville, Houston, Dallas."

He said his office has been "inundated" with inquiries about the operation.

One woman, who did not want to be named, said she was approached to participate, but declined. The woman, 26, said "several hundred, maybe up to a thousand" people in Midland are involved, many of them downtown workers.

She said one man has made an estimated $50,000 on the scheme.

Several other people were contacted who said they had been approached. As one person put it, "it's all over town."

According to Schmidt, who has distributed a flyer on the scheme, participants are recruited to buy "tickets" on an imaginary airplane. The price of the tickets varies from $100 to $1,500 each. When eight passengers have been recruited, all become "crew members," as the number of "passengers" increases, new "airplanes" are created.

House panel OKs $10.4 billion education funding bill

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A $10.4 billion school finance plan, enough to maintain current programs for 1988 and 1989, took a limping first step forward Wednesday.

The House Public Education Budget Subcommittee approved the appropriation but added a provision that would reduce the total if Gov. Bill Clements holds to his pledge to veto any tax bill that raises more than $2.9 billion. The schools would take a percentage cut based on the difference between the total amount of money available and the $2.8 billion the Legislative Budget Board says the state must spend to maintain present services.

Subcommittee Chairman Paul Colbert, D-Houston, said that provision acknowledges the reality of Clements' veto pledge and helps avoid the prospect of passing a spending bill that falls short of available revenues.

"That doesn't get us anywhere," Colbert said. "It creates the impression among other (lawmakers) that will have a chance to vote on these budgets that we personally didn't care about the fact that we have money problems."

Rep. Bill Haley, D-Center and chairman of the full Public Education Committee, disagreed with Colbert's argument but voted for the plan. "We all have extenuating political pressures and circumstances," Haley said.

"What we need to talk about is a continuation of the commitment we have made to the programs."

For the Midland Independent School District, the plan would provide about $1,380 per student for the 1987-1988 school year. Greenwood ISD would receive about $1,590 per student and Ector County ISD would get about $1,530.

On two 3-1 votes, the subcommittee rejected Clements' call for a $125 million reduction in vocational education spending and a $165 million cut in funds available for the teacher career ladder. The panel, however, made provisions in the spending bill for the possible adoption of those and others of Clements' suggestions.

Education Commissioner William Kirby said he was pleased with the $10.4 billion proposal, which follows the Texas Education Agency recommendations. Kirby, however, said he is "very nervous" about where the cuts would come, particularly in light of the ongoing lawsuit poor school districts have filed challenging the constitutionality of the state's school finance system.

"Unless they make them in a way to take a lot less out of poor districts than they do other districts then we're going to be in real trouble," he said.

Some lawmakers have suggested that public education would have to take about an $872 million reduction to absorb its share of cuts necessary to fall within Clements' bottom line. The most equ'table formula, in Kirby's mind, for making a cut of that size, would reduce state aid to Midland ISD by 23 percent, to Greenwood ISD by 14.5 percent and Ector County ISD by 19 percent.

Free trip to be won by someone attending Pancake Jamboree

From Staff Reports

The Midland Downtown Lions will host its 31st annual all-day Pancake Jamboree Saturday at Dellwood Mall, located at the intersection of Midkiff and Illinois.

Serving hours will be 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

The meal includes pancakes, sausage and a drink. Cost is $2.50 per plate.

All proceeds will help fund Downtown Lions Club activities such as the Crippled and Diabetic Children's camps, eye glasses, sight and hearing conservation, the Lions Eye Bank and helping prevent drug abuse.

Those attending will also have an opportunity to watch members of the Eagle Nest Sky-Diving Club perform between 3 and 4 p.m.

In addition, everyone will be eligible to register for a round trip for two via American Airlines to any city served by the airline in the continental United States or Mexico. Persons don't have to be present to win.

According to a press release from the club, "Lions have helped over 10,000 people to see through the eye bank program nationwide. You are asked to donate your eyes at death so that another person may have the chance to see. Until you visit with a student who can now see to study, or a secretary now given the opportunity to earn her own living, or a housewife and mother able to see her children for the first time — it is hard to realize just what the gift of your eyes can mean to another."

Jury sentences man to five years for deadly assault on peace officer

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 358th District Court jury Wednesday deliberated more than nine hours to find a 29-year-old man guilty of deadly assault of a peace officer and sentenced him to five years in prison.

The charge against Eliseo Franco grew out of an incident Dec. 11, 1986, during which Ector County Deputy Sheriff Gary Lewis was shot in the right leg with his own gun.

Lewis had gone to a residence at 6602 Venita St. in West Odessa to arrest Franco on misdemeanor warrants from Hockley County, but Franco allegedly fled from Lewis during the arrest.

Franco was found about an hour later at the home of Frances Ybarra, about a block away. A struggle ensued between Lewis and Franco.

The jury of eight men and four women heard conflicting testimony concerning how Franco got Lewis's .357 magnum caliber revolver. Franco contended Lewis had the weapon in his hand when the deputy entered the Ybarra mobile home. Lewis said he didn't have his weapon out during the chase, and that he didn't know positively how Franco got his gun. At one point, the deputy stated, Franco had the gun pointed at his stomach. The shooting occurred, according to testimony, when Lewis entered the mobile home and confronted Franco.

Franco faced a maximum sentence of 99 years in prison, but jurors deliberated about 15 minutes to set his punishment at five years in prison. The jury spent about nine hours considering evidence before finding Franco guilty.

Medical testimony during the two-day trial indicated Lewis's leg will only be partially functional when he has recuperated from his wound.

Town of Mentone lacks people and drinkable water

Todd

MENTONE — Mentone has more of West Texas than most towns.

It's got fewer people and more wide-open space than just about any place in Texas.

And yet, in at least one respect, it's a fairly progressive town despite the cyclic "bellying up" of ranching and the oil business. It's got a disappearing flag.

"I don't like it in town here," said John Walters, an oil-field pumper, who was spoiled from living on range land on the east bank of the Pecos River. "Too many people."

By his count, there are 14 people living in town, which ranks as Texas' No. 1 county seat in terms of the fewest folks. About five times that number live in Loving County — a peaceful land of rolling prairies and that charming wide-open space that affords West Texas much of its charm and its unobstructed sunrises and sunsets.

"I like it," he said of the countryside, "but you go where the money is."

Walters' wife, Monique, is the town's postmaster. She works out of an old adobe house.

"The government doesn't pay you enough to be postmistress or anybody's mistress," she smiled.

The post office has 88 boxes. Of those, 51 are rented.

And it's a town of kind-hearted folks.

"People around here might not talk to each other," she said, "but they help everybody."

Mentone has all that is required to be a town: cafe, service station, church, post office, courthouse, a smattering of houses, and friendly people. Children are bused the 32 miles to school in Wink. For shopping, many folks drive to Kermit or Pecos. Mrs. Walters does her Christmas shopping, as you might expect, by mail.

The town's cafe, operated by old-time cowboy Newt Keen and his young-time wife, Sissy, is the town's assembly hall, where tales are told. "It's a pity I robbed the cradle," Mrs. Keen, 28, said of her husband, 66. "He may be old, but he'll never grow up."

Mentone lacks water, potable water, so drinking water is hauled into town. "It (the underground water) has got anything and everything in it," said Mrs. Keen. "It will either kill you or give you diarrhea."

She moved to West Texas from Alabama 4½ years ago. "I love Mentone," she said. "I wouldn't move."

The cafe is the town's watering hole.

"There was a time you couldn't mention Ed's name (in Keen's Cafe) unless you brought a round of beer," said the postmaster. It was a game born out of affection for Edward "Ed" Knappe.

Knappe is a 64-year-old eccentric goat rancher who, with his goats, roams 520 acres 19 miles west of here on the Trans-Pecos side of the Pecos River. Knappe and Keen cowboyed together.

"Oh, he's a good old fellow," Keen said of his friend. "He use to be quite a lady's man."

Knappe, an amiable loner, is content to roam the prairie by foot or horse.

"I'll guarantee you," said Walters. "He'll amaze you about what he knows."

Walters and the goat rancher were across-the-river neighbors for about three years — until Walters and his wife, the postmaster, moved into town.

"He's kind of strange," Walters said of Knappe. "If he has little goats that are sickly, he takes them in and sleeps with them. He's extremely intelligent and reads all of the time. No, sir, he's no dummy, and he's a good shot."

The Loving County prairie land is far more conducive to coyotes than city cats. Walters lost a roaming cat, he figures, to a hungry coyote.

"Cats don't last long out here," he said. "Coyotes love them."

Typical of West Texas, Loving County — named after an old-time trail driver — is susceptible to occasional flooding, baseball-size hail, and tornadoes.

It's also susceptible to attention — not just due to its dearth of people.

Directly in front of the Loving County Courthouse is the disappearing flag — Old Glory.

"We've got a lot of press about it," Jeri Ann Blair, former Loving County commissioner, said of the automatic system that's triggered by the sun's rays.

A few years ago, when the 1935 courthouse was renovated, the commissioners checked out an innovative idea: a disappearing flag.

When the sun comes up, the flag emerges from the flagpole. At dusk, when the sun sets, the flag returns to inside the pole.

"It's real fascinating to watch it," said Mrs. Blair. "It just curls down in the pole (at sunset). It's kind of hard on the flag."

This lonesome but peaceful country pleases and soothes her.

"I love it," Mrs. Blair said. "It grows on you. I couldn't live in one of those big towns."

And if there is a need to drive to a larger settlement — Wink, Kermit, Pecos, Odessa or even Midland, which is about 100 miles to the east — "It's no big deal."

Ed Todd is a Reporter-Telegram staff writer.

Lawmakers say rivalries shouldn't stand in way of SSC

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interstate rivalries shouldn't be allowed to snare the proposed $4.4 billion superconducting supercollider project in a bureaucratic tangle that could doom it, a group of congressmen says.

Virtually every state has expressed interest in housing the nuclear particle accelerator because of the financial rewards — such as thousands of construction jobs and long-term work for 2,500 scientists and technicians.

But lawmakers from several states actively seeking the project — Illinois, Texas, California, Colorado and Ohio — said Wednesday that interstate rivalry must be put aside to ensure the supercollider is built at home, not abroad.

"This project will enable us all to learn more about energy, medicine, information management and transportation, which will benefit future generations," said Texas Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont.

"While I firmly believe the project should be awarded to a site in Texas, preferably in my district — which is ideally suited for it — I think that this kind of advanced technology provided by the double-SC should be supported wherever it's located because it will increase the strength, the security and the economy of our entire nation," he said.

Brooks was among nine members of Congress voicing support for the project at a "special orders" session requested by Rep. Terry Bruce, an Illinois Democrat and member of the House Space, Science and Technology Committee which must decide on funding for the facility.

Like Brooks, Bruce said his own state hopes to house the supercollider. He also agreed that fighting over its location should not interfere with the fight to win its approval.

Scientists say the supercollider, a racetrack-shaped tube about 52 miles around and buried 20 to 30 feet below ground, would be capable of boosting the speed of two proton beams so that their collision would create sub-atomic particles that can be detected and analyzed.

"The SSC will be able to push back the bounds of theory and knowledge and open up whole vistas for exploration," said Rep. Harris Fawell, R-Ill.

"This will be to physics what the telescope has been to astronomy or the microscope to biology," added Rep. Hank Brown, a Colorado Republican. "This is a way, one of many ways, in which America can lead the world towards scientific progress and toward the advancement of all mankind."

The Department of Energy has set a timetable calling for final selection of the project site in January 1989.

But the site-selection process outlined recently by Energy Secretary John Herrington came under criticism at the session from Rep. Tim Valentine, D-N.C., who said he feared some states might not be considered for the project.

"Why the rush?" Valentine asked. "This is an expensive, long-term project with long-term benefits. It is imperative that we make every effort to ensure that the strongest possible proposals are submitted."

Colorblind man says U.S. Air Force broke contract to train him as pilot

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A colorblind man who figured he'd be an Air Force pilot by now has instead been charged with desertion and confined to a 7-foot by 12-foot residential room at Lackland Air Force.

The battle between Andrew Jackson Woodrick and the Air Force has spanned four years, with Woodrick claiming he is a civilian because the Air Force reneged on a contract to train him as a pilot.

The Air Force, however, contends that although Woodrick was disqualified from pilot training because he is slightly colorblind, he must nevertheless serve two years' active duty.

"I don't think they are interested in me as personnel for the military. I think they're strictly interested in protecting a contract law and punishing me," Woodrick said Wednesday. "I think there are others who have similar problems like me, but can't do anything about it."

Woodrick, 27, has been at Lackland, a Air Force's training center, since Dec. 1 after the latest round of a battle that began at Memphis State University, where he was in the Reserve Officer Training Corps program.

His case has been appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, and he has filed a $10 million lawsuit against certain military officials. Meanwhile, his court-martial on desertion charges has been postponed indefinitely.

Military officials declined to discuss the case because it is in litigation, said Lackland spokesman Lt. Col. Robert A. Gibson.

Woodrick's case began in April 1980, when he passed a colorblindness test at Memphis State. In 1981, he signed a six-year ROTC contract after being assured he was medically qualified for pilot training.

But in 1982, he failed another colorblindness test and was declared unfit to receive pilot training.

In 1983, he stopped attending his ROTC classes, saying the contract called for him to be trained as a pilot and he didn't want to do anything else in the military. He claimed he was a civilian.

The Air Force declared him an enlisted man in May 1984, but Woodrick refused an order to report for two years of active duty. In March 1985, he was arrested at his Nashville home, brought to Lackland and charged with desertion.

He hired San Antonio lawyer John Economidy, a former military prosecutor who had represented other officers and enlisted men in similar circumstances.

On June 6, 1985, U.S. District Judge Edward C. Prado granted Woodrick's request that the military no longer had a jurisdiction in the matter.

In October 1986, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans reversed Prado's ruling and Economidy filed an appeal with the U.S. Supreme Court.

Woodrick returned voluntarily to Lackland in December, hoping the matter would be cleared up quickly.

"I think they are digging in their heels for two reasons," Economidy said. "No. 1, to get some law on the books in their favor. No 2, this $10 million lawsuit is not against the United States or the Air Force. It is against the military officers individually."

These days, Woodrick's only activity is reading. He keeps up with current events and has gone through several James Michener and Stephen King novels. He has never been on active duty and refuses to receive military pay.

"Right now I live in such a day-to-day existence where each day I hope something will change," Woodrick said. "Other people have similar problems like this and probably can't do anything."

Still a senior business management student at Memphis State, he said his parents have helped him with his finances and he hopes to be able to return to school soon.

SCHEME

When all of the tickets are sold on a new airplane, whoever has moved up to become the "pilot" by recruiting new members takes all of the money, and those who invested last lose all, Schmidt said.

The woman said she heard about the scheme from a friend.

"I was asked to go to a meeting last week," she said. "They have the meetings on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, and nobody knows about the meeting until late in the afternoon."

She said the meetings are held at different times, at different places.

Recruiters admit to prospective "passengers" at the meetings that the operation is illegal, and liken it to gambling, she said.

"There are two planes downtown, and they are $5,000 planes (tickets cost $5,000 each)," she said. "There are several $1,500 planes, $500, $300, and $100 planes.

"You can even get insurance on this thing," she said.

The organizer of the "Airplane" is a Midlander, she said she had been told.

She said organizers of the scheme prefer they be paid in cash, and she said to protect identities, nicknames are assigned to everyone who participates.

"That's why I decided not to do it, because they were acting so evasive," she said.

The "Airplane" is classified as an endless chain scheme under state law, and is a class B misdemeanor, punishable by up to six months in jail and a $1,000 fine.

County Attorney Mark Dettman said he has not been presented with any complaints so far.

Painter said he had heard that information about "Airplane" had been sent through the mail, but Gary Gammage with the U.S. Postal Service in Midland said no complaints have been received.

The sheriff said pyramid-type schemes "go around every year. Someone tries to rip someone else off, and only the first few that get into it can make any money.

"I would heartily discourage anyone who is thinking about getting involved."

According to information in Schmidt's flyer, Attorney General Jim Mattox is keenly interested in ending the scheme.

"This type of scam...always fails," Mattox said. "It fails because it is selling nothing but air — no goods or services are offered, just the chance to round up enough suckers so you can get your money back before the bubble bursts."

Hazardous materials truck catches fire

From Staff Reports

No injuries were reported after a tractor-trailer containing several barrels of hazardous materials caught fire early this morning, according to the Department of Public Safety.

According to DPS and Midland Fire Department reports, the fire broke out shortly after 1 a.m. on State Highway 349, 10 miles north of Midland in Martin County, perhaps caused by a dragging brake. Damage to the trailer was "heavy."

Officials from Central Freight in Lubbock, owners of the truck, and the Texas Railroad Commission were called to the scene. The material, described only as "corrosive," was not leaking at the time the fire was extinguished, reports said.

A DPS dispatcher said he did not know when or how the material would be removed from the trailer.

Breakfast to start AHA campaign

From Staff Reports

American Heart Association volunteers in the Midland area will kick off the 1987 Business Campaign with a Kick-Off Breakfast in the Pay Zone room of the Plaza Club on March 10.

Dr. Rick Black, vice-chairman of the AHA Board — Texas Affiliate, will be the guest speaker at the program which starts at 7:30 a.m.

Black has been involved with the AHA for numerous years and has served at state and local levels. Additional information will be supplied at the breakfast regarding the details of the campaign and of the Midland chapter's efforts to provide heart education to the local community.

The 1987 campaign will be directed by Grant Swartzwelder and Randall Foster.

"This year's Business Campaign goal is $15,000. While this may seem like a high figure when considering the present economic conditions, we feel certain that the Midland area will join in this very important cause, ensuring another successful campaign," said Foster.

"Each year, heart disease and stroke kill nearly one million Americans — more deaths than from all other causes combined," Swartzwelder added.

AHA Business Campaign volunteers will distribute information on how each dollar is spent to support research, education and community service activities.

For more information about the AHA in Midland, call Rita Nell Diffie at 563-2008.

House expected to pass two-year extension of sales, gasoline taxes

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House this morning will debate — and is expected to pass — a two-year extension of the "temporary" taxes enacted last summer, even though House Speaker Gib Lewis told the governor the increase will not be enough.

Gov. Bill Clements met with the speaker Wednesday morning and reiterated his plans to veto any tax increase above what the state collects under the current 5.25 percent sales tax and 15-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax. Those taxes would revert Aug. 31 to the old sales tax rate of 4.125 percent and gasoline tax of 10 cents a gallon without the extension.

Lewis, who thinks he has the votes to pass the tax measures, said he told Clements that simply extending the temporary taxes will leave the state short of what it needs and suggested another tax bill will be necessary. Clements supports deep budget cuts in most areas — but a large increase in prison spending — to balance the budget.

"I think we have been in the process of making cuts for the last four years," Lewis said. "This is nothing brand new. It has gone on for quite some time, and I assure you if there's been any fluff or surplus in any state agency's budget, we'd have found those."

The House Conservative Coaltion, a bipartisan group of 59 representatives, met Wednesday and agreed to push for dedicating three-eights of 1 percent of the sales tax to pay for prison construction and operation. Under the plan, that percentage of the sales tax would go into a special prison fund until the total reached $520 million.

"I think if we can get those dollars commited, we'll solve some of our court problems and certainly we'll solve our prison problem in the years to come," said Rep. Sam Johnson, R-Plano and the sponsor of the prison dedication tax.

"We sat around and ignored the prison problem for so long," Johnson said, "that I think somewhere we got to just stop, put our foot down and say these dollars are for (prisons)."

The prison tax would add about 10,000 new prison beds in the next four or five years, Johnson said, noting that the spending is in line with what Clements proposed in his budget. But he acknowledged that House members generally oppose dedicating any new revenues and could not say whether he had the votes to pass the prison-dedication tax.

About three-fourths of the state budget is dedicated to one program or another, meaning lawmakers cannot touch that money. Lewis and other have tried to avoid dedicating more funds and further tying the Legislature's hands.

While Clements wants to raise taxes by $2.9 billion — the amount of the temporary taxes — the Senate and many House members favor an increase of about twice that much. Extending the temporary taxes will force an average 17-percent cut from current state services, according to the Legislative Budget Board.

"We're not talking about cutting 17 percent out of current services," said Rep. Gerald Geistweidt, R-Mason and chairman of the Conservative Coalition.

Senate set to vote on drinking bill

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A renewed effort to outlaw drinking while driving in Texas gained committee approval Wednesday and headed for the full Senate with strong backing.

The Senate State Affairs Committee unanimously approved the measure that would make drinking while driving on public roads a Class C misdemeanor, carrying a possible fine of up to $200.

But there will be no roadblocks to harass motorists, said Senate sponsor Bill Sarpalius, because the measure would require a law enforcement officer to spot a driver actually consuming an alcoholic beverage while driving.

"In Texas, it's legal to drink and drive so long as you have your seatbelt on," said Sarpalius, D-Canyon.

"I continue to say that this state will never get serious about drunk driving if we continue drinking and driving," he said.

Only four other states allow motorists to drink while driving, he said.

Numerous efforts to pass a so-called "open-container bill" have failed in past legislative sessions, but Sarpalius said he is confident he has the needed votes if the measure can get committee approval in the House.

"The biggest thing about this is that it will be on the books that it is illegal to drink while driving, which will act as a strong deterrent and save lives," Sarpalius said.

A long line of organizations and agencies testified in support of the bill, including Texas Mothers Against Drunk Driving, the Texas Police Association, the Texas PTA, the Department of Public Safety, the Texas Council on Drug and Alcohol Abuse and the Christian Life Commission, the lobbying arm of the Southern Baptist General Convention. No one testified against the proposal.

The proposed law would be difficult to enforce, but not impossible, said Capt. Billy Melton of the Texas Police Assocation.

"This would be one more in an arsenal of tools a policeman could use," Melton said. "We could address the problem somewhat more significantly with this bill."

Milo Kirk of Texas MADD called the proposal a "much-needed piece of legislation." Lt. Travis Moore of the Arlington Police Department said the passage of the bill "would send a message that Texans will not accept the consequences of drinking and driving."

Former A&M researcher wins Japan Prize

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — A Texas scientist known for his work in genetic improvements to rice was named recipient of the 1987 Japan Prize, an award that includes 50 million yen, or about $160,000, Texas A&M University officials say.

Dr. Henry "Hank" Beachell, former researcher for the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, part of the A&M system, won the award for his role in revolutionizing rice production by developing varieties with shorter, stiffer straw that enabled mechanical harvesting.

The improvements doubled rice harvests to more than 30 barrels per acre.

"The advances have had a far-reaching impact on worldwide rice improvements and its future direction," said Perry L. Adkisson, A&M system chancellor.

Beachell's rice has improved cooking quality and even had a shorter growing period to beat the hurricane season, Adkisson said. Not only does this variety mature before hurricane season, but after harvest it can be fertilized to produce a second crop, he added.

The Japan Prize is presented by the Science and Technology Foundation of Japan, a non-profit organization established in 1983 under the direction of the Japanese government to promote peace and prosperity.

The days of the egregious psychic bid, when you opened the bidding with few or no points in a suit where you didn't have any length, have all but passed. Today, there is a far subtler use of the psychic bid: to deflect an opening lead that you think might prove unwelcome.

From the moment his partner opened the bidding, South was determined to play a slam in spades—and who can blame him? He started off with a jump shift to make sure the bidding would not be dropped at an "inconvenient" point. When North showed a balanced minimum with his two no trump rebid, South decided no harm, and perhaps a lot of good, could come if he muddied the waters a trifle. So he chose to rebid three diamonds.

When North confirmed a minimum with no particular fit for either of South's suits, South wasted no more time in getting to his desired goal. Everything now hinged on West's opening lead.

Imagine that poor defender's quandary. He had been around long enough to realize that South might have been pulling a fast one in the auction, but what if the auction was legitimate? In that case, leading the ace of diamonds could easily have presented declarer with an otherwise unmakable contract.

West stewed for a considerable time over his opening lead, but he decided he would be better off if he treated the auction as geniune. So after great travail he selected the seven of hearts as his opening lead, to declarer's great delight. South could have made 15 tricks had the rules of the game permitted. It was unnecessary to point out to poor West that ace of diamonds and another would have been the winning defense.

Will Fawn Hall bare more than NSC secrets for Penthouse's $500,000?

Associated Press

Fawn Hall, the former White House secretary catapulted to celebrity status in the Iran-Contra affair, can make $500,000 by posing nude for Penthouse magazine, its publisher says.

Playboy magazine said it also wants to make a deal for a "celebrity pictorial" featuring Ms. Hall, who worked for former National Security Council aide Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, the Los Angeles Times reported today.

Meanwhile, the 27-year-old part-time model is upset about a picture taken by her modeling agency that wound up on the cover of a brochure for an escort service, the New York Post and Daily News said today.

Last month, it was learned that Ms. Hall had been granted immunity from prosecution in exchange for testimony about her work with North, including allegations they falsified and shredded key documents after the crisis broke last fall.

Offers for television, film and modeling jobs have been pouring in from talent scouts and advertising agencies, her friends told the Los Angeles newspaper.

"She thought the (Penthouse) offer was disgusting," said one, F. Andrew Messing Jr.

Messing said Ms. Hall told him that Penthouse offered $50,000.

However, Penthouse publisher Robert Guccione said Wednesday, "There is an offer in the mail to her agent now. The amount is not $50,000. It is for $500,000."

"Fawn knows we're interested in having her in the magazine," said Playboy publicity manager Elizabeth Norris. "But that's about it. At this point, she is not in a position to consider anyone's offer because she is involved in the Iran affair and she wants to clear that up before she considers anything."

Ms. Norris said a celebrity pictorial involves a layout of "sexy pictures."

"They don't have to be nude to be sexy," she added. Ms. Norris declined to say how much the magazine was offering Ms. Hall.

Godunov

NEW YORK (AP) — Ballet star Alexander Godunov, who has played an Amish farmer and a symphony conductor in the movies, says his new U.S. citizenship means "I can play an American, officially."

Godunov, 37, who defected from the Soviet Union in 1979 while touring the United States, took the oath of allegiance Wednesday in a federal courtroom packed with 189 others taking the oath.

He portrayed a farmer in the 1985 film "Witness" and an eccentric conductor in last year's "The Money Pit."

"It's important to be a citizen because I like this country. It's a great country," Godunov said, adding that he'd celebrate with "a hamburger stuffed with caviar and of course, some champagne — and a little scotch, too."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Morgan Fairchild's sports car was stolen from her in one of a string of "bump-and-run" highway robberies, and later used in another robbery, police say.

Miss Fairchild is one of at least 20 women victimized recently by a purse-snatching team that targets women driving high-priced cars around classy Ventura Boulevard, Detective Bud Mehringer said Tuesday.

Several well-dressed men in their 20s use stolen cars to cause a minor accident and, while the women are inspecting damage, the men jump into the women's cars and take off. The cars are later found abandoned, with the women's purses emptied of cash, police said.

Police said a man driving a Cadillac struck Miss Fairchild's Jaguar several weeks ago, left the Cadillac and used her Jaguar to nail a Mercedes soon after that. Police didn't say how much was taken.

LONDON (AP) — Princess Anne, who has been president of the Save the Children Fund for 17 years, is to receive an award for her "outstanding contribution to young people," says the Variety Club.

The only daughter of Queen Elizabeth II will be presented the club's International Humanitarian Award at a dinner in London on May 7.

Past recipients of the award include Albert Schweitzer, Winston Churchill, actor Danny Kaye and Prince Philip, Princess Anne's father.

Belafonte

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Harry Belafonte plans to travel to Senegal this month in his first assignment as a goodwill ambassador for the United Nations Children's Fund.

The 60-year-old singer-actor was selected Wednesday to take a post held by Danny Kaye, who died Tuesday.

"I can kind of step in here and lend of myself and use my influences and energies to carry on much of the very good work he started," said Belafonte, who added that he and Kaye were friends and had discussed the work of UNICEF.

He said he would help African countries complete immunization of children against diseases like polio and measles, a goal he hopes to meet by 1995, and will meet with African artists and educators at a symposium in Senegal.

Wonder

NEW YORK (AP) — Stevie Wonder and Nile Rodgers got together to make a record even though they were on opposite coasts, demonstrating technology that producers said could unite musicians worldwide.

Their studio Wednesday stretched from the boroughs of Queens to Staten Island via fiber optics, then across thousands of miles of space to a GTE satellite and back down to Los Angeles, where Wonder performed.

The technology will allow recording artists to work together from virtually any major city in the world, said Ben Rizzi, co-owner of Master Sound Astoria, which sponsored the session.

Just as important, Rizzi said, is the quality of the recordings the sessions produce. Through use of computers, fiber optics and digital technology the music played at a remote studio can be recorded thousands of miles away with absolute clarity.

"This is not a copy, but a clone," Rizzi said.

The demonstration relied on a hookup of four satellite channels and provided audio and video connection between the two locations.

"It's very personal and it's very comfortable," said Rodgers. "It's an aural experience. We have to hear this stuff, and it works great."

U.S. arms negotiator meets with NATO allies

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Chief U.S. arms negotiator Max Kampelman met today with NATO allies about a draft treaty to eliminate medium-range nuclear weapons from Europe, and expressed concern before the meeting about short-range Soviet weapons.

America's allies generally have welcomed a proposed treaty presented to Soviet negotiators Wednesday that would eliminate mid-range missiles in Europe. But they have expressed worry that an accord would leave the Soviets with an advantage because of its short-range missiles.

A report in The New York Times today said the Soviets have agreed to include language on short-range missiles in the treaty and have also agreed to on-site inspections to verify the dismantling of missiles under the accord.

Kampelman and the top U.S. negotiator on medium-range missiles, Maynard Glitman, flew to Brussels from Geneva for the meeting at NATO headquarters of the outskirts of Brussels.

The negotiators later planned to fly to Washington before returning to Geneva early next week to resume talks.

Kampelman, asked before the North Atlantic Treaty Organization meeting to specify how the issue of shorter-range Soviet nuclear missiles would be incorporated in the treaty, said only, "We have a very important concern about those short-range systems."

He said the United States also considered "very vital" the question of verifying Soviet compliance with the proposed agreement. He declined to be more specific but indicated this would be discussed with NATO representatives at a meeting of the North Atlantic Council, the alliance's highest political body.

Officials at the U.S. Mission said Kampelman planned no public comments after the meeting.

The seventh round of Geneva arms talks originally were to end Wednesday. But negotiations got new life last weekend when Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev announced a new willingness to sign a treaty on medium-range missiles separately from an accord on "Star Wars," the U.S. plan for a space-based defense system which Moscow vehemently opposes.

Both sides agreed Monday to extend indefinitely talks on medium-range missiles.

U.S. spokesman Terry Shroeder said negotiating groups on long-range missiles and space and defense would continue meeting in Geneva through Friday. He declined to provide further details.

Glitman said the detailed draft text on medium-range missiles formally presented Wednesday to the Soviets embodied tentative agreements made at last October's U.S.-Soviet summit in Iceland.

This includes a call for both sides to eliminate their mid-range missiles in Europe and maintain 100 warheads each on their own territory, with the Soviet missiles based in Asia.

He said the United States would also be willing to scrap the extra 100 warheads if the Soviets agreed to reciprocate, but said this was not part of the treaty proposal.

Glitman said the questions of verification and what to do about Soviet shorter-range missiles based in Europe could be a difficult, but he said broad areas of agreement exist on both questions.

West European media says Reagan admitted blunders

LONDON (AP) — West European media today portrayed President Reagan's speech as an admission he blundered over Iran arms sales, and the official Soviet news agency Tass said the address was full of contradictions.

Most foreign ministries refused immediate comment. British and French officials said they would not comment on what they regarded as an American domestic matter.

The Wednesday night speech came too late for many European newspapers, but it dominated morning radio and television news.

Tass said Reagan's speech "abounded in contradictory statements."

"For instance, he said that he was silent over Irangate for which he has 'paid a price'...(but) everybody remembers well that Reagan has made a special statement on Irangate, in which developments were spelled out, to put it mildly, inaccurately," Tass said.

State-run Radio Moscow said Reagan's speech was an attempt to restore Americans' "weakened trust" in their leader, adding he admitted a mistake that "boiled down to an arms for hostages deal."

The radio noted without comment that Reagan denied knowing about the transfer of arms sales proceeds to Contra rebels fighting the leftist government of Nicaragua.

French court delays hearing in Haiti case

GRASSE, France (AP) — A court today postponed hearing a Haitian government attempt to recover $120 million from former President-For-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier, after his lawyers argued they needed more time to prepare a defense.

Haiti contends Duvalier embezzled the money over a 15-year period before his flight from the impoverished Caribbean nation last year. After meeting briefly today, the court delayed the hearing until May 7.

Duvalier's French lawyer, Sauveur Vaisse, said the court accepted his argument that "major items of the case" were only made known recently and he needed more time to prepare. Jacques Sales, representing the Haitian government, said he had expected the postponement.

Haiti last month submitted 5,000 bank drafts and copies of U.S. customs documents as evidence in support of allegations that Duvalier illegally transferred the funds.

Because the court must first decide if it has jurisdiction, and that decision is subject to appeal, lawyers on both sides say it may be a year before there is any hearing on the actual merits of the claim.

Duvalier, 35, fled to France on a U.S. military plane Feb. 7, 1986, after months of violent demonstrations in Haiti, the Western hemisphere's poorest nation. He now lives in exile with his wife and two children in a large villa in the Riviera town of Mougins near Cannes.

Duvalier became ruler of Haiti in 1971, succeeding his father, Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier who was elected president in 1957. He was not expected to appear at today's proceedings and French law does not require him to be present.

Peres says Israel made mistake in Pollard case

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said today Israel made a mistake in the way it handled the Pollard spy case and President Chaim Herzog urged the government to learn a lesson from the affair.

Abba Eban, chairman of parliament's Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, said top officials showed serious irresponsibility and hurt the most vital Israeli interests.

The comments came after Jonathan J. Pollard received a life sentence in Washington on Wednesday. Pollard, a 32-year-old former U.S. Navy intelligence analyst, had pleaded guilty to spying for Israel. Pollard's wife, Anne Henderson-Pollard, was given a five-year prison term.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir declined comment on the sentencing which was the lead story in all seven of the nation's major newspapers.

"Israel was not on trial, an individual was on trial," Peres told The Associated Press.

"I don't think it was a collective verdict, or collective punishment. Israel has admitted that she made a mistake, a regretful mistake. And I hope she will not face a repeated situation of this nature in the future," Peres said.

Herzog said during a speech to school children in a Tel Aviv suburb that, "I only hope that we will learn lessons from what happened, and investigations will be carried out so that rules will be established to make sure such things don't happen again."

"Everything that happened was against the Israeli government's policy, against the principles by which we operate," Herzog said in the speech, broadcast on Israel radio.

"We don't operate against a friendly country like the United States," said Herzog, a former director of military intelligence.

Eban criticized the government for the way it handled the affair after it became public.

"I don't detect any effort in this to make amends," said Eban, a liberal and a leading figure in Peres' Labor Party. "The ministers involved must appear publicly and explain why this disturbing decision was taken."

"In my opinion, this is the most difficult moment in the history of Israel's international relations, especially because the wrongdoing was done here," Eban told Israel radio.

Eban also criticized Israeli defense officials for angering the United States by promoting Aviem Sella, the man who was charged in a U.S. indictment on Tuesday with recruiting Pollard and his wife to spy for Israel.

Sella, 41, on Sunday was named commander of Israel's Tel Nof air force base in the Negev desert, according to U.S. officials. The indictment identified Sella as a brigadier general, indicating he had also been promoted in rank, but Israeli officials said he was still a colonel.

The Reagan administration has told Israel that U.S. officials will shun Stella, according to sources. Stella will probably never appear in court on the U.S. spy charges because a U.S.-Israeli extradition treaty does not cover espionage suspects.

Meir Rosenne, Israel's ambassador to the United States, reiterated the government position that Pollard's activities were not known to Israeli leaders.

Turkish warplanes raid Kurdish rebel bases in Iraq

ANKARA, Turkey (NYT) — Turkish warplanes raided bases of Kurdish separatist guerrillas in Iraqi territory Wednesday, the minister of Defense announced.

The planes bombed nine Kurdish bases in retaliation for a raid by Kurdish guerrillas on a border village 10 days ago that left 14 people dead, according to Defense Minister Zeki Yavuzturk, who announced the action to Parliament. He added that Iraq had been informed before the operation.

Kurdish guerrillas have been conducting hit-and-run raids on Turkish territory since August 1984.

Under a 1984 agreement between Turkey and Iraq, Turkey is permitted to carry out anti-guerrilla operations on Iraqi territory. Turkey has conducted two previous raids on Kurdish camps in Iraq, once with ground forces and once with aircraft.

"The decision for the raid was made on Feb. 25 by the government, but it was postponed because of weather conditions," Yavuzturk said in Parliament. He said that all of the targets of the air raid had been destroyed but that technical evaluation of the operation would await analysis of aerial photographs.

Another government spokesman, Hasan Celal Guzel, said the operation "would not affect the Iran-Iraq war." In response to a question, he added that he did not believe it would damage relations with Iran.

WORLD in brief

Iran claims forces continue advance into Kurdistan

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran today claimed its forces thrust deeper into Iraq on the second day of a new offensive in the Haj Omran region of Iraqi Kurdistan.

The Iranian advance continued during the night and 200 Iraqi troops were killed or wounded in a battle northwest of Haj Omran, reported Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency.

A series of heavy Iraqi counterattacks were repulsed by the Iranians who captured 208 Iraqi soldiers "as well as a remarkable quantity of munitions," added the agency, which is monitored in Nicosia.

"Fighting is continuing in the area with the Moslem (Iranian) forces holding the upper hand and continuing to advance," IRNA said.

Iraq did not immediately comment on the Iranian claims.

The new offensive, code-named Karbala-7, was launched Tuesday to open a new front in Iraq's northeast corner.

Demjanjuk cites orders

JERUSALEM (AP) — John Demjanjuk told Israeli police even if he had been a Nazi guard at Treblinka it would have been wrong to put him on trial because he would only have been following orders, the head of a unit investigating the case said today.

Alex Ish-Shalom, reading from a document written after an interrogation with the Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk last year, quoted him as saying: "Even if I had been there, I would not have stood a chance, and therefore it is not justified to bring me to trial."

"He told us repeatedly, 'We couldn't act any differently from the way we did, we were prisoners of war,'" Ish-Shalom said of the March 3, 1986, interrogation.

"But then he added, 'I wasn't at Treblinka, I wasn't at Treblinka. But even those who were there really had no choice.' This is the sort of motif that ran through the whole investigation," Ish-Shalom said.

Ish-Shalom said he was part of a team of six investigators who questioned Demjanjuk repeatedly at Ayalon Prison, where the defendant has been held in an isolated, maximum security cell since his extradition from the United States in February 1986.

Inquests begun on blacks

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Inquests were under way today into the deaths of a trade union official and a journalist, both black, who died shortly after their arrest by police.

The trade unionist, senior shop steward Andries Raditsela of the Chemcial Workers' Industrial Union, died of a head injury at a hospital on May 6, 1985, two days after he was arrested in a township east of Johannesburg.

The journalist, Lucky Kutumela, died in police custody less than 24 hours after his arrest on April 5, 1986, in the black homeland of Lebowa, northeast of Pretoria.

On Wednesday, when the inquest into Raditsela's death resumed in Johannesburg after a two-month break, friends and relatives of the dead man testified that he had been assaulted by security force officers, knocked to the ground, hit with a helmet and thrown into an armored personnel carrier.

Witnesses said that when they went to visit Raditsela at a police station after the arrest, they found him lying unconscious on a concrete floor, his clothes smelling of urine and flies buzzing around him.

Arabs fight rights group

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (NYT) — In a rare show of unity, representatives of traditionally hostile Arab nations have joined to fight the recognition of an Arab human-rights group.

The group, the Arab Organization for Human Rights, has applied for consultative status with the United Nations Economic and Social Council. The group was set up in 1983 in Cyprus because its founders were not sure they would be welcome in the Arab world.

Consultative status, of the second category, would give the group the right to submit written statements to the council and be granted hearings.

On Friday, the council's Committee on Nongovernmental Organizations decided to put off the candidacy until 1989, for lack of consensus.

The problem is that some Arab countries consider any charges of rights violations as interference.

Myers a coach, not a groveler

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

LUBBOCK — By his own admission, Gerald Myers is a coach, not a recruiter.

When it comes to practice, preparation and bench coaching, Myers' peers around the Southwest Conference put the Texas Tech boss in a class by himself. By pulling out two consecutive conference tournament crowns, Myers has earned the reputation around the league as a "tournament coach."

But the plea bargaining, some might call it groveling, that is inherent in today's recruiting wars, leaves Myers in an uncomfortable spot.

"I don't believe in the frills of recruiting. I believe in a kid seeing what we've got, what the program has got and the coach," Myers said. "If the kid is interested in being wined and dined, getting all the attention some people give them, well, I just can't see that.

"Recruiting is just part of the job, it's our life blood. I have to do it whether I like it or not. But I don't recruit during the season, I let my assistants do it. I coach."

Needless to say, Myers is not a groveler. And that has made "keeping up with the Jones's" in the SWC and the country that much more difficult for Myers. In his 16 years in Lubbock, Myers has seldom snared the prep All America, the "aircraft carrier," or the P.T.P'er (Prime Time Player, in Vitalian, the energetic sportscaster's lingo) to put his program on the national map.

INSTEAD, MYERS makes do with the talent on hand, needling, cajoling and bleeding the most from each and every player on the roster. His methods have produced consecutive appearances in the NCAA tournament, last year it was the only bid awarded the downtrodden SWC.

No one prepares his team for the three-day marathon, circus of a conference tournament like Myers can. His teams have compiled a 21-8 record in 11 seasons of tournament play and Tech has never lost a first round game.

SWC Pairings

(Reunion Arena in Dallas)
Friday's Games
Texas Tech vs. Arkansas, 12 p.m.
Texas A&M vs. TCU, 2:30 p.m.
SMU vs. Baylor, 6 p.m.
Texas vs. Houston, 8:30 p.m.
Saturdays Semifinals
Tech-Arkansas winner vs. TCU-A&M winner, 1 p.m.
SMU-Baylor winner vs. Houston-Texas winner, 3:30 p.m.
Sunday's Finals
Saturday's winners, 1 p.m.

And when the SWC basketball tourney tips off Friday in Dallas' Reunion Arena, the Red Raiders will be trying to add another notch on Myers' tournament belt, a third straight title. Fourth seed Tech, 9-7 in conference, 14-13 overall, tackles fifth-seed Arkansas, in a game beginning at noon that will be carried live on KCRS-radio (550).

Other first round games pit top seed and 15th-ranked TCU against Texas A&M at 2:30 p.m., Baylor and SMU at 6 p.m. and Houston and Texas in the nightcap at 8 p.m.

The Horned Frogs zipped through the conference schedule with a 14-2 mark and are heavily favored to take their first tournament title ever. If the Red Raiders pull this one out, the low-key Myers may even start believing what the rest of the conference says about him.

"THE FACT that we've won the tournament two years in a row doesn't mean a thing," Myers said last week while preparing his team. "We went into each of those tournaments playing well and with senior ballclubs. History is what happened, it doesn't mean it will happen again."

Does that mean the Frogs are

Brawny T of C field set to flex muscles

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The 1987 version of the Tournament of Champions has an impressive field of teams coming into Midland for three days of baseball at Angel Stadium beginning with a pair of games tonight with two teams ranked in the Top 10 and two with unbeaten records.

Among the unbeatens is No. 1 rated Lubbock Monterey at 7-0 and unranked El Paso Hanks at 5-0. Dallas Thomas Jefferson is rated No. 3, but split a doubleheader with DeSoto and is 1-1 on the year.

El Paso Eastwood, 1986 West Texas area playoff champion over Midland High, has an impressive mark of 4-1.

Host teams Midland Lee, 1-3, and Midland High, 0-2, have gotten off to shaky starts and both head coaches feel their teams could possibly be the weakest of the six.

"Beyond a doubt. We'll even be playing in that toilet bowl game at 3 p.m. Saturday (loser's bracket fifth place game) if things don't pick up," said Midland High head coach Tim Whalen, whose Bulldogs lost to Thomas Jefferson last year for the title.

"You've got people who have talent and who know how to win coming in," continued Whalen. "When they bloody your nose and smell that blood, they come out and get you. Each team has pitching, hitting, speed plus confidence."

And, from Whalen's counterpart at Midland Lee, 26-year head coach Ernie Johnson, "I just hope Tim and I can compete a little better than we have been. I saw some improvement in Lubbock (in a doubleheader loss to Monterey Tuesday). I saw some light at the end of the tunnel."

And, who do they look to as the top seeded team?

"Thomas Jefferson then Monterey and then the two El Paso schools, but I don't know much about them," said Johnson.

"It's got to be Monterey or TJ," said Whalen. "They're both ranked in the Top 10, have pitching and have a lot of kids back. They've been down that road before."

SO FAR, this year has had a rough beginning for the Bulldogs and Rebels. Midland High lost a season-opening doubleheader Tuesday to Lubbock Coronado, 8-2, 9-6. For Lee, after splitting with Pecos on Thursday, the Rebels lost both games to Monterey Tuesday, 9-6, 6-5.

Midland High was 17-10 in 1986 but managed its best play in District 4-5A when the Bulldogs took Abilene Cooper to an extra game to decide the title. The 'Dogs went on to post a bi-district victory over Lubbock Monterey before being eliminated in the area game by Eastwood.

Whalen looks at pitching depth as a possible strength this year but none of it is proven at the varsity level and only one is a senior. However, in a tournament format, pitching depth can be a big plus.

He also looks at the outfield as a strong point along with returning infielders Tommy Yorkman behind the plate at Jim Werner at second base.

For Midland Lee, '86 was an off year at 13-12 but is providing a lot of returning lettermen to this year's team, including four starters: Jason Logi at catcher, Danny Jordan at first, Joe Eldridge in left field and Durian Jenkins on the mound.

Johnson sees one of Lee's main strengths this year as the quality of players up from the junior varsity which was 15-3 last year.

THOMAS JEFFERSON was 29-6 last year and, for the third consecutive year, won the district championship along with bi-district and area titles. After winning the tournament of champions in '86, the Patriots went on to claim the DeSoto Invitational.

Not surprisingly, TJ coach Gerald Turner lists "good pitching" as a major strength with three returning from last year, Morris Moss, Jamin Castleman and Monty Jones. He also has four infielders and two outfielders back in Jones at first, Albert Vasquez at third, Garry LaMoyne at short and Tim Galvin catching. Moss and Castleman in the outfield.

Monterey, an early season No. 1 in the polls and off to another fast start, was 25-4 in '86 and won the District 3-5A title, again. Off that team, Coach Bobby Moegle, a 769-179

Chaps open Region V with visions of Hutchinson

From Staff Reports

Starting from the second seed position in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference, the Midland College basketball team heads for Waco today and a shot at its fifth Region V title and third in a row.

The Chaps face Weatherford Junior College, third place finisher in the North Texas Conference, in a first-round game at 5 p.m. McLennan County Community College is this year's host of the Region V shoot-out and is the top finisher in the North conference.

McLennan faces surging Odessa College, which took fourth in the Western loop, in a 9 p.m. game, with the winner facing the MC-Weatherford victor Friday at 9 p.m. All Chap games can be heard on KCRS-AM (550).

The other half of the bracket has New Mexico Junior College, champion in the Western, going against Texas State Technical Institute-Waco, fourth in the North, at noon and South Plains College, second in the West, against North's third place Ranger at 2 p.m. The Region V women's championship game is set for 7 p.m. today. The NMJC-TSTI winner meets the winner of the SPC-Ranger contest at 7 p.m. Friday. Championship game is at 7:30 p.m. Saturday.

This year's regional champion gets a berth in the National Junior College Athletic Association championships at Hutchinson, Kan., March 17-21. This only happens every third year. The other two years, the Region V titlist meets the Region XIV winner to determine who goes to Kansas.

"This should be a dandy tournament and almost anyone can win it, at least on paper," said MC coach Jerry Stone. "We beat South Plains four times and Odessa College three times and each of those teams got a win over NMJC, which beat us twice by a total of three points. McLennan had a battle to take that conference. We haven't played any of those teams, which is rare."

THE CHAPS turned in their highest score of the year in defeating Frank Phillips 122-83 in their final conference game and seemed to be tuning up for the tournament.

"Frank Phillips was out of the running, but I was impressed with our heads-up play and reduction of turn-overs," Stone said. "We won the regional title last year and four of our players were there. Those sophomores are going to have to provide the leadership on the floor. It's just a question of being ready for each game."

Stone's three sophomore guards are providing much of the scoring, but some of the freshmen are beginning to assert themselves. Mookie Blaylock, a 6-1 guard from Garland, is leading the scoring with a 19.1 average. He also has 58 three-point goals, leads in steals with 108 and assists with 136.

Lincoln Minor, a 6-3 guard from Houston Westfield, is hitting 15.9 points per game, with 84 steals, 111 assists, and 4.3 rebounds. Todd Duncan, 6-1 guard from Lubbock Coronado, is averaging 14.8 points, with 36 steals, 106 assists and only 58 turn-overs as the point guard. Duncan has 81 three-pointers, which is more than half of his 146 field goals.

Duncan leads the guards in field goal percentage with 55.1 and has a chance to set a team record from the line, where he's hitting 85.7 percent. Freshman Billy Ray Smith, a 6-5 post player from South Garland, has been a mainstay inside. He's averaging 13 points and 7.4 rebounds.

SMITH IS third in steals with 71 and fourth in assists with 95. His 64.6 percent from the field is best on the team and second all-time.

A pair of slim freshmen, 6-7 Alex Stanwood from New Orleans' Booker T. Washington High, and 6-7 Herman "Skeeter" Henry of South Grand Prairie, average about 10 points per game and more than four rebounds per game.

Still learning the MC system is 5-7 freshman Stewart Barnett from New York City, who's only played in 15 games. He can leap and is learning to lead the team as a reserve point guard. Sophomore Bruce Nix, 6-8 from Leakesville, Mississippi, helps out inside with lots of size and had his best scoring in the FPC game with 12 points.

The Chaps currently average 95.7 points and have set a school record with 13 games of 100 points or more. Stone points out the team is hitting about five three-pointers a game and that's raised the scoring just above the previous years' averages of about 88-89 points.

Midland College ended the regular season with a sparkling 23-3 mark, 13-3 in conference play, the ninth consecutive 20-win season for MC. It is also the Chaps' ninth appearance in the Region V tourney, which they won in 1982, 1983, 1985, and 1986.

Chicago Cubs outfielder Dave Martinez dives back into first base as the Cubs opened the exhibition season with a 10-4 shellacking of Arizona State Wednesday in Mesa, Arizona.

Spring fever hits Raines, Parrish

Associated Press

Free agents Tim Raines and Lance Parrish have spring fever, but still no cure for their contract problems.

Raines visited the Chicago White Sox training camp in Sarasota, Fla., Wednesday, but he wasn't there to negotiate. Raines' agent, Tom Reigh, has an office in Sarasota, and the former Montreal Expos outfielder decided to stop by and visit with White Sox players.

"I asked him what he's doing, and he said, 'Just hanging out,' " White Sox outfielder Ken Williams said.

While Parrish's future is being discussed in Clearwater, Fla., he has been working out in the California sun with another free agent catcher, Bob Boone.

Philadelphia President Bill Giles said Wednesday that March 12 is the potential date for arbitration of a players association grievance in the club's contract negotiations with Parrish.

Spring Roundup

The association charges the Phillies and Parrish negotiated a one year, $1 million contract for 1987, and that the Phillies later refused to conclude the agreement without insertion of a clause objectionable to Parrish.

Giles insisted on a clause guaranteeing that Parrish would not sue baseball for alleged collusion against high-price free agents.

Parrish, who played with Detroit last season, said in California Tuesday that he wanted to join the Phillies.

"I am confident I am going to Philadelphia," Parrish said. "I'm fairly close to coming to terms. I want to go to Philadelphia now."

Both Raines and Parrish have been offered less money than offered by their former teams in January.

Money Matters

— Roger Clemens, the American League's Cy Young winner and Most Valuable Player last season, is threatening to boycott the start of the exhibition season if he cannot come to a contract agreement with the Boston Red Sox within the next two or three days.

— California pitcher Kirk McCaskill said his agent, Marv Demoff, will be in camp today for talks with California General Manager Mike Port. The two sides are more than $100,000 apart and Port intends to renew any contract not signed by today.

— Texas pitcher Jeff Russell on Wednesday underwent successful surgery for the removal of two bone chips and a bone spur from his right elbow. Rangers Manager Bobby Valentine said it would be four weeks before Russell could start throwing and six to eight weeks before he could pitch, which means the right hander will start the season on the disabled list.

Area viewers must pay to see Rangers

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Despite reports to the contrary, Permian Basin Texas Rangers fans will not be treated to an extended free TV package of Rangers games this summer, at least not according to cable's Home Sports Entertainment, originator of local broadcast of Rangers games.

HSE, a pay-TV outlet originating from Dallas and Houston, owns local television rights to Texas Rangers and Houston Astros games. A report out of Dallas said HSE was going to syndicate the rights to free stations in some outlying markets, including Midland-Odessa, but that's not the case, according to Tom Garnier, HSE affiliate marketing manager.

"There was a mistake made in the article, I don't know if it was by the reporter or on our end, let's just say it was a mistake," Garnier said. "We are a cable service first and a syndicator second. Our policy is to protect our cable operators and we wouldn't want to put them in jeopardy by giving out the same service for free that their customers are paying for."

Local station KPEJ-TV, which carries syndicated coverage of Houston Rockets NBA basketball, was contacted about carrying Rangers games, had rejected the offer, a KPEJ programming official said.

KPEJ, HSE and local cable operators have received a number of calls inquiring about local syndication after the article appeared in Sunday's editions of The Dallas Morning News.

"We do want to reach cities that we're not available in, but with the recent addition of HSE to the Midland-Odessa area, we're not going to cut off our nose to spite our face," Garnier said.

HSE is available locally and will carry Houston Astro home games and selected away games, and Texas Rangers home games this summer.

Shockers outduel 'Canes for title

Associated Press

Tulsa wanted the Missouri Valley conference championship — but Wichita State apparently wanted it more.

"Our kids gave a great effort and showed great determination," Wichita State Coach Eddie Fogler said after Wednesday night's thrilling 79-74 overtime victory over Tulsa for the MVC tournament title. "We couldn't stop them and they couldn't stop us."

The victory gave Wichita State an automatic bid to the NCAA post-season tournament and spoiled Tulsa's effort to win its second consecutive MVC championship. The last tournament title for Wichita State came in 1984 when the Shockers defeated Tulsa.

Tulsa Coach J.D. Barnett said his team tried to make something great happen on every trip down the court in the overtime period. But the Shockers made greater things happen for themselves.

Guard Gary Cundiff scored 17 points, including two key free throws in overtime, to lead Wichita State. The game was sent into overtime when Tulsa forward Don Royster made an off-balance shot with six seconds left to tie the game at 70-70.

after his poor start and finished with 14 points. Todd Mitchell topped Purdue with 20 points, while Melvin McCants added 18 and Doug Lee 12.

The victory gave the Boilermakers a 15-2 record in the Big Ten, good for at least a tie for the Big Ten title.

Illinois 89, Michigan 75

Ken Norman scored 19 points to lead five Illinois players in double figures as the Illini crushed Michigan.

The Illini were in control from the outset. Illinois converted 11 of its first 14 field goal attempts while the Wolverines hit only three of their first 15. The Illini opened a 14-2 lead 4:17 and led 46-27 at intermission.

David Gately scored 25 points to lead the Greyhounds to an opening-round win over the Red Flash.

Mavs, Rockets tack up wins

Associated Press

Mark Aguirre was the main sharpshooter in Dallas with 38 points, while Denve's Alex English had 37. The Mavericks trailed just once, 2-0.

The victory boosted Dallas, which has the third best record in the NBA, to 26-5 at home. The Mavs 39-20, also went 19 games over .500 for the first time in club history.

Denver lost its fourth consecutive game. The Nuggets, who are 5-25 on the road, have lost 11 out of their last 13.

Rockets 108, Kings 102, OT

Another big personal scoring performance was turned in by Jim Petersen with a career-high 28 points as Houston moved into a tie with Utah for second place in the Midwest. But it took Allen Leavell's three free throws in the final eight seconds of overtime to assure the win.

Forward Otis Thorpe led Sacramento with 30 points and 15 rebounds. Point guard Reggie Theus added 24 points.

"This is my big game, so it made it pretty sweet for me to score the 28 points and help the team win," Petersen said.

MYERS—

the runaway choice to wrest the SWC's automatic berth from the Raiders? Well, not exactly.

"I'm surprised they didn't get beat one or two more times," Myers says. "But they played well enough to win the close games, but I think we're all catching up to them a bit."

So Myers leaves the door open, though he stops far short of touting the Red Raiders as one of the favorites.

"This year we haven't been as consistent at the end of the season as we would have liked. We've been playing better, but we all (the SWC) have improved."

career record, has 14 lettermen back, including seven returning starters.

Pitchers Randy Robbins, 12-2 in '86, and Frank Torres, 4-0, lead the mound corps while Hunter Lanceford returns behind the plate. Returning infielders include Kyle Guerry at first, Randy Payne at second and Max Stephenson at short. All three outfielders are back, Chad Pierce, Brian Pierce and Troy Jones.

COMING EAST for the weekend are the two El Paso schools, Eastwood and Hanks, and both were successful in '86. Eastwood was 22-8 and reached the regional playoffs before being eliminated while Hanks was 23-7 and was eliminated in the area game.

Hanks coach Mike Williams lists four returning players that have impressive '86 statistics. Leading the way is outfielder/pitcher David Perez who was in the Top 10 in the nation with a .696 average. The Knights also have catcher-shortstop Darrin Glenn, pitcher outfielder Danny Parada and outfielder-designated hitter Danny Perez back. All three hit for power as well as average.

For Eastwood, Coach Ray Saenz looks to "Two blue chippers in pitchers Frank Castillo and Butch Henry." Among the nine returning players, he also tabs Brett Wagner, Matt Charske and Mike Krahn as players to keep an eye on.

THE TOURNAMENT begins today instead of Friday because of the extra team in the field this year. El Paso Hanks will open play at 5:30 p.m. against Midland High while Thomas Jefferson takes on Lee at 8 p.m. Monterey will take on the winner of the EPH-MHS game at 10 a.m. Friday while Eastwood tackles the survivor of TJ-Lee at 12:30 p.m.

Games are scheduled throughout Friday and Saturday with the championship slated for 5:30 p.m. If the loser of the title game has only one loss, a second championship game will be played.

Another Brit wins a title

BASILDON, England (AP) — On his wedding anniversary and his daughter's birthday, Terry Marsh usually is out fighting fires. But this year he did something different.

He won a world boxing title.

Britain's fighting fireman took the International Boxing Federation junior welterweight title from American Joe Louis Manley before a hometown crowd of 6,000 in a giant circus tent in this southeast English town.

The unbeaten 29-year-old Briton stopped Manley in the 10th round of a scheduled 15-round fight, flooring the American twice.

It was Manley's first defense of the title he won last October and the 27-year-old from Detroit wound up in a hospital "dazed and exhausted," according to his co-manager, Bob Mittleman.

Manley was discharged from the hospital Thursday morning and planned to return to the United States later in the day.

"Joe was put under so much pressure throughout the fight. Although he was been beaten like that before, it was something we never expected from Marsh," Mittleman said.

Rice narrows list to four

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice University officials have trimmed to four the number of candidates being considered for the vacant head basketball coach position.

Athletic Director Jerry Berndt hopes to name the new coach by next week.

The four finalists reportedly are Rick Majerus, an assistant coach with the Milwaukee Bucks; Scott Thompson, an assistant at Arizona; Chuck Swenson, assistant at Duke and Rice interim coach Greg Walcavich.

"Greg did a good job with the team," Berndt said. "They were playing well at the end of the season. Obviously one of the drawbacks is that he's been here three years working in a program that's finished last in the conference.

MONEY

Dollary mostly up

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose against all major currencies except the British pound in early trading today.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose to a closing 153.75 yen from Wednesday's 153.47. Later, in London, the dollar was quoted at 153.85 yen.

—1.8395 West German marks, up from 1.8350

—1.5510 Swiss francs, up from 1.5435

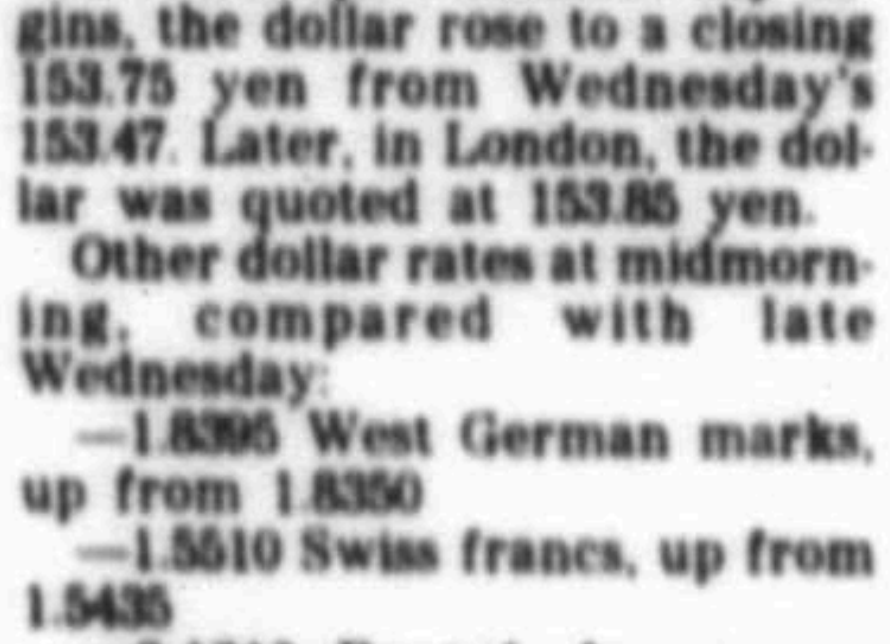
—6.1215 French francs, up from 6.0975

—2.0763 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0685

—1,309.00 Italian lire, up from 1,302.50

—1.3340 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3323.

In London, however, the dollar eased, and the British pound was quoted at $1.5670, more expensive than $1.5665 late Wednesday.



Gold prices also jumped following an overnight rise in New York.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $409.50 a troy ounce, compared with late Wednesday's $406.30. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $411.45.

In Zurich, the bid price was $411.35 at noon, compared with $406.50 late Wednesday.

"People are just beginning to get a little bit bullish about gold," said one London dealer. "It looks as though we've broken out of the downward trend."

In New York late Wednesday, gold was at $410.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $2.93 to close at a bid $410.26.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.49 a troy ounce, up from late Wednesday's $5.48.

NSC director to urge action on oil imports

WASHINGTON (AP) — National security adviser Frank Carlucci says the swelling sea of imported oil threatens national security and that he will urge President Reagan to create a national energy policy to deal with the problem.

Rep. Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo, said Wednesday that Carlucci told him last week that he will ask the president to issue a national security directive to examine ways to deal with the problem, including an oil import fee.

"What we were told by Carlucci is that he would see to it that there is a formal order signed by the president directing the NSC (National Security Council) to develop proposals and a national energy policy to deal with the national security threat posed by the high levels of imported oil," Boulter said.

Such an action would be the first formal recognition that the White House views rising imports as a serious security threat.

Last week, Energy Secretary John Herrington told Boulter and Texas Gov. Bill Clements he was reviewing an 800-page Department of Energy draft report outlining options available to stem imports of foreign oil.

Severance, EOR incentives in plan

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — To treat the sickly petroleum industry and encourage new exploration, Railroad Commissioner Jim Nugent asked lawmakers Wednesday to exempt new wells and some existing stripper wells from state severance taxes.

Speaking to the House of Representatives, Nugent also called for incentives to encourage continued pumping of depleting wells that require more expensive techniques to get oil out of the ground. Although the moves would cost the state needed tax dollars, the commissioner said the long-term benefit to the state — and its coffers — would be worth the short-term sacrifice.

"The oil and gas industry has always been a very prolific tax cow for government," Nugent said. "It is now sick, it is now hurt, it is now bankruptcy prone, and we need to give them some relief so they can get back on their feet and be productive citizens again."

"It's sort of like a milk cow that's sick and isn't properly fed," he said. "She's going to dry up and there's not going to be as much milk as there's going to be otherwise."

Specifically, Nugent proposed a five-year abatement of severance taxes for new wildcat wells and a three-year exemption for wells in existing fields and for wells that produce three barrels a day or less. The state could lose more than $300 million in lost taxes, he predicted, but some money would be made up by increased sales tax receipts stemming from new jobs.

While the average Texas well produces less than 10 barrels a day, the average Saudi Arabian well produces 7,000 barrels daily, said Nugent, who was chairman of the three-man commission until January when commissioners Mack Wallace and John Sharp ousted him in favor of Wallace.

Hughes calls off merger, Baker sues

HOUSTON (AP) — The Hughes Tool Co. board of directors voted to end a merger agreement with rival oilfield service company Baker International, prompting Baker to file suit to enforce the agreement.

The flurry of activity came after Hughes directors adjourned a special stockholders meeting for a second time Wednesday and after the two sides could not work out alternatives to comply with Justice Department guidelines.

Baker then filed suit in state district court in Houston against Hughes and five outside directors, asking that Hughes be required to proceed with the merger agreement.

"As a result of Hughes' breach of its obligation, Baker had no choice but to go to court to force Hughes to live up to its deal," Baker Chief Executive Officer James D. Woods said in a statement.

The oil-field service companies agreed last October to merge, but the U.S. Justice Department intervened, saying the combination of the two companies would lessen competition.

The consent decree called for Orange, Calif.-based Baker to divest its drill bit and electric pump businesses. The consent decree says the divestitures by Baker, which has smaller market shares than Hughes in these particular products, could be completed after the merger.

The proposal for Baker surrounded domestic oilfield tricone rock bit assets, its Singapore plant and domestic electric pump business that would be approved by the Department of Justice by April 22, the last date the merger could take place under the agreement and plan or reorganization, a Hughes statement released late Wednesday said.

The proposal also said that Hughes not be required to license the purchaser with any Hughes technology and that no other materially adverse term be imposed by the Justice Department on the transaction as negotiated between Baker and the purchaser.

The Hughes statement said it did not understand why Baker had not proceeded in this fashion, instead insisting that it would go ahead with the merger only if Hughes signed the consent decree.

"Accordingly, Hughes will adjourn the stockholders meeting without voting its proxies and will terminate the agreement with Baker," the statement said.

Hughes spokesman Don King said the company directors named a committee to seek a chief operating officer "to beef up the company's management so we can be as aggressive as possible." The post currently is vacant.

Hughes, in its statement, said it found the terms of the consent decree to be unreasonable, among other reasons, because certain unusual terms in the decree posed a substantial risk.

The decision to propose the solution to Baker, but to terminate the agreement if it rejected this approach, was reached by outside directors of the company, the company statement said.

The merger would be the biggest in the oil field service sector and would make Baker and Hughes the third-largest firm in oil-field revenues, behind Schlumberger and Halliburton.

The combined companies would have had a 54 percent share of the tricone rock bit market and 46 percent of the market for electric submersible pumps, which are placed at the bottom of a well to lift oil to the surface.

Mall shoppers, merchants get an electronic helper

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Merchants have long used traditional channels such as to television, radio, newspapers, magazines or billboards to sell their products. In today's age of technological advancement time, there is a new way to tout a product to consumers.

American Telemedia Network, a three-year-old Provo, Utah company, has installed two electronic directories in Midland Park Mall. Wally O'Rear, area manager for ATN, was on hand earlier this week to discuss with mall merchants ways to fully utilize the new medium.

He said that there are directories in approximately 200 malls, with an average of three per mall. He said that, to his knowledge, the closest mall with ATN directories is in Amarillo, and there are several malls in the Dallas-Fort Worth area with electronic directories.

The network is the first designed exlusively for malls, and is intended to help mall merchants better reach the shopper, and to give the shopper more information about happenings in the mall, according to Carol Joyce, mall manager.

Mall stores can use the directories to advertise new products, specific brands, and/or special sales. Customers can press a button on the directory and find a listing of all the stores that carry shoes, for example. Push another button, and a brightly colored map appears, pointing the way to a specirfic store. According to O'Rear, an ad can be changed every two weeks, but the capability to change ads weekly will soon be available.

Gramm to offer thrift stabilization bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A six-point plan designed to bail out the nation's troubled thrifts by changing the way they are regulated should face Senate debate next week, says the Texas senator who proposed it.

"Considering that there are more than 50 savings and loans in Texas that have a negative net worth in Texas alone," changes are obviously needed in the way the industry is being overseen, Phil Gramm said Wednesday.

The Republican senator's plan is similar to one from Rep. Steve Bartlett, R-Dallas, in that it provides for some form of "forbearance," or an easing of the rules enforced by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

But it differs in the way that forbearance would be applied. Gramm wants to create a capital certificate program to provide enough capital to help keep afloat those S&Ls judged by the bank board to be well-managed but victimized by a sour economy.

Once those thrifts stabilize, they would redeem the certificates and pay back interest to the bank board.

Bartlett's forbearance takes the form of broadened assessments of real property to reflect a multi-year cycle rather than current market value.

William O'Connell, president of the United States Leauge of Savings Institutions, said an easing of regulations would relieve pressure on the industry and require less money for recapitalizating the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.

FSLIC is the fund that insures S&L deposits. A General Accounting Office report released Tuesday said the fund is technically insolvent and estimated that at least $25 billion is needed to avert a disaster in the industry.

Gramm and O'Connell support a proposal calling for $5 billion over the next two years. The Treasury Department has asked for $15 billion over the next five years.

"All we want to do is stretch out the time that the savings and loans have to deal with the economy until an upturn in real estate values," O'Connell said.

The Gramm plan would also establish a new appraisal standard through joint agreement of the bank board, the thrift industry and the appraisal industry "to require more realistic appraisals."

A review board would be set up to hear any appeals on appraisals.

Tough appraisal rules and loan classification rules implemented about a year ago have brought about many of the problems in the thrift industry, O'Connell said.

Second firm interested in Bell

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

A second company has expressed interest in merging with Midland-based Bell Petroleum Services Inc., according to Bell president E.E. Runyan.

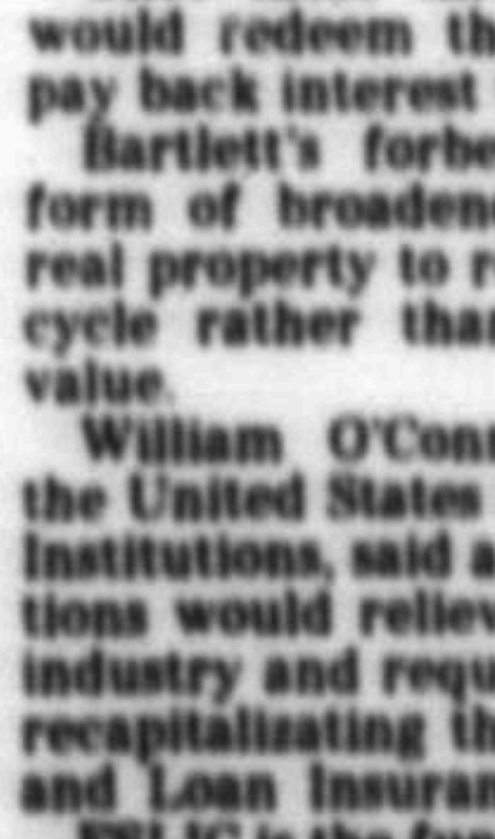
Runyan could not name the Fortune 500 company, but said that officials would arrive in Midland sometime this week to talk with Bell management. He added that he has been in touch with members Bell's board and that a board meeting would be held to discuss negotiations with the new suitor.

The new offer comes on the heels of an acquisition offer from Houston-based Regal International, which recently acquired an option to purchase secured notes on Bell from First City National Bank of Midland. Regal on Tuesday doubled its original offer for Bell, offering current Bell stockholders one share of Regal stock for each share of Bell stock, as opposed to the half-share of Regal stock originally offered.

Regal has proposed a reorganization plan that would pay all of Bell's creditors in full upon confirmation. Bell Petroleum filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code on Nov. 17, 1986.

USAir snubs Icahn offer as disruption of Piedmont plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — USAir Group Inc. today rejected a takeover attempt by Trans World Airlines an said the bid was "nothing more than an attempt ... to disrupt" USAir's offer to purchase Piedmont Airlines.



Icahn

USAir spokesman David Shipley said in a strongly worded statement that the airline will proceed with its attempt to purchase Piedmont despite the offer by TWA Chairman Carl Icahn on Wednesday to buy USAir for $1.4 billion in cash.

USAir is based in suburban Arlington, Va.

TWA's takeover offer reflected the intense pressure on airlines to expand in order to remain competitive in the deregulated industry, which has become increasingly consolidated by mergers during the last year.

The offer appeared to throw into doubt USAir's aggressive $1.65 billion cash-and-stock bid for Piedmont. It also called into question USAir's $400 million acquisition of Pacific Southwest Airlines, which was announced three months ago but has not met final government approval.

USAir spokesman Shipley said TWA's proposal was "nothing more than an attempt by Carl Icahn to disrupt at the 11th hour USAir Group's acquisition of Piedmont, a transaction which the USAir Group board of directors views as most beneficial to shareholders, employees and passengers, and which Mr. Icahn obviously regards as contrary to his personal interests."

In announcing his bid for USAir, Icahn, the takeover strategist who won control of TWA last year, said he also would be interested in a combination of TWA, USAir and Piedmont, but did not elaborate. Such a merger would create the third-largest U.S. airline.

Icahn also disclosed that TWA owned a substantial but unspecified chunk of USAir's stock and would take its $52-a-share takeover offer to the airline's shareholders if USAir management balked. At the same time, he said TWA had not yet secured the financing for such a deal but was confident of obtaining it.

Icahn has been credited with turning TWA into a leaner, more profitable carrier, although the airline still relies heavily on summer travel to Europe. Analysts said a merger with USAir, predominantly a business-traveler's airline operating in the Northeast, could greatly benefit TWA.

The announcement came while Piedmont executives were conferring on USAir's offer. They recessed the meeting without action and there was no immediate indication when they would reconvene.

"We don't know what the ramifications are," said Piedmont spokesman Donald McGuire. "It's going to take awhile to sort this out. It's a most peculiar situation."

Icahn has previously said he was looking for another airline to bolster TWA. He bought Ozark Air Lines last year for $250 million.

Nevertheless, Icahn's announcement surprised analysts. Some had even speculated that TWA itself was a takeover target.

"This was sort of an 11th hour movement into the situation," said John Diffendal, who follows the airline business for the J.C. Bradford & Co. investment firm in Nashville, Tenn. "I do think it at least throws open whether the USAir bid for Piedmont will remain in effect."

NPC hopeful of nailing together reorganization

AUSTIN (AP) — The lawyer for Nash Phillips-Copus Inc., Austin's largest homebuilder, says the company plans to be building houses again in two weeks if motions filed in U.S. Bankruptcy Court are approved.

NPC and two subsidiaries based in Houston and San Antonio filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy laws Monday and laid off 600 workers.

NPC lawyer W. Garney Griggs said two emergency motions filed in the Houston court would allow the company to use cash collateral for mechanic's and materialmen's liens filed by suppliers and subcontractors.

That would allow NPC to continue business without the difficulties caused by the liens, which cloud title to the property, he said. In the past two weeks, about 1,000 liens have been filed in Travis County by various suppliers because of unpaid debts.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Unlike E, EE bonds, H, HHs pay interest by check biannually

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I have some old Series E U.S. Savings Bonds and some U.S. Savings Notes, a.k.a. "Freedom Shares." I would like to roll them over into something else, as it is my understanding they are no longer accumulating interest.

I get different answers at my banks about whether or not I will have to pay income tax on the interest from my old bonds and savings notes, even though I roll them over. What is the correct answer?

Doyle

A. You can exchange most E bonds and all savings notes for Series HH U.S. Savings Bonds without paying income tax on the accumulated interest. You postpone that tax bite until you redeem the HH bonds received in the exchange or those HHs reach maturity.

Unlike E and EE bonds and savings notes on which interest accrues, H and HH bonds pay current interest by check twice a year. The annual interest rate on HH bonds now being issued is 6 percent.

Your understanding that your Es and savings notes no longer are accumulating interest is wrong. All savings notes still are earning interest and will continue to do so until at least November 1991. E bonds more than 40 years old have stopped accruing interest, but newer Es, as well as all EE bonds, continue to accumulate interest.

Once your E bonds are 40 years old and have reached "final maturity," you have two choices. You can redeem them and pay tax on the accumulated interest. Or you can exchange them for HH bonds. You must make the exchange within one year of the E's final maturity.

However, as has been stressed in this space, do not make the exchange until Nov. 1, 1987, or the next semiannual interest accrual date of your E bonds and savings notes following that date. By holding off that long, your E bonds and savings notes will accumulate more interest.

* * *

Q. In 1979, I exchanged my E bonds for H bonds. The interest rates on the Hs was raised several times and now is 8.5 percent. How long will it remain that high?

A. Until 1989. At that point, your H bonds will reach the end of their 10-year original maturity period and enter an extended maturity.

The interest on your H bonds then will drop to whatever is being paid on HH bonds being issued at that time. Because newly issued HHs now pay only 6 percent, many owners of old Hs entering extended maturities are shocked to find their semiannual interest checks reduced to that rate.

* * *

Q. Our Series H bonds, which we received in exchange for old E bonds, are registered in my name, payable on death to my wife. Can we have these bonds reissued, naming our children as co-owners — without losing the current high interest? If so, what procedure would I have to follow?

A. It can be done by filling out Form PD 4000. You should be able to get the form from your local bank. That form and your bonds then go to your district Federal Reserve Bank, were bonds will be reissued as you request.

But, and this is a mighty big BUT, if you remove your name from the bonds and have them reissued in your children's names, that will be a "taxable event." Federal income tax will be due on the accrued E bond interest.

Any time ownership of a U.S. Savings Bond is changed from one living person to other living persons, a taxable event takes place and the Internal Revenue Service gets its bite.

Assuming you are like most savings bond owners and want to postpone paying tax on the interest as long as possible, you'll probably rethink the notion of transferring your bonds to your children.

* * *

Q. Please answer "yes" or "no." Is U.S. Savings Bond interest subject to state and city income tax?

A. No. Interest paid by our federal government is exempt from state and local income tax.

NUGENT

House Speaker Gib Lewis said he supported Nugent's plan and would be willing to raise other taxes to offset the loss from oil and gas severance taxes.

"Oil and gas has been the backbone of this state's economy for many many years, and I think if we turn our back on it now while they are having problems, we're neglecting a major industry," Lewis said. "I think we should do everything we can to protect the integrity of that industry and to make sure they are viable 10 years from now and 20 years from now."

But Rep. Stan Schlueter, chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, said he doubted whether the state could afford to make drastic tax cuts during the state's current fiscal crisis.

"We need to look at the fiscal implications to state revenues before we start talking about abatements," said Schlueter, D-Killeen. "Obviously there are long-term positive implications for doing some of those things, but you also have to weigh the short-term negatives."

"The general concept is great," he said, "as long as it doesn't break the state."

CARLUCCI

"The indication is that Carlucci will start to work on the issue right after the DOE study is completed," Boulter said. The study is 95 percent complete, he said.

In his meeting with Carlucci, which was also attended by Reps. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., and Dick Cheney, R-Wyo., Boulter said the national security adviser did not say whether he favored an oil import fee, tax credits or any other specific solution.

"We all pushed for an import fee by executive order. What he did say is that he is awash with studies and that now is the time to take action," Boulter said.

The level of Persian Gulf oil being imported into the United States grew from 6 percent of total consumption in 1985 to 15 percent last year, the highest percentage since 1981. Overall, foreign oil imports accounted for 36 percent of U.S. consumption last year.

MALL

The directory also carries national or local ads, and one panel on the directory is a large television screen that shows special news, entertainment, sports and faashion briefs. There are also eye-level 30 x 40 inch panels that hold advertising posters. Shoppers can also find the latest calender of events on the directories as well.

O'Rear noted that, starting in May, there will be racks on the directories holding envelopes containing coupons from mall merchants. These coupons, which will be free and will be changed monthly. He said 10,000 sets of coupons will be printed.

Joyce commented that the two directories will develop into a "focal point in the mall for promotions, to help enhance the shopping experience and increase traffic." But for now, she acknowledged, "it's more of a toy. Everyone's having fun pushing the buttons."

Police officer fired after indictment declined in shooting

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas police officer involved in the mistaken shooting death of an elderly woman has been fired one day after a grand jury declined to indict him.

Acting Police Chief Harold Warren said Wednesday he fired officer M.E. Kraus because Kraus did not take proper action when Etta Collins, 70, was shot to death by an officer responding to the woman's report that a burglary was in progress.

The shooting of Mrs. Collins has prompted demands for a congressional investigation into the department's use of deadly force.

Investigators said Mrs. Collins, who had called police, was shot after she pointed a gun at officers and did not heed their orders to drop the weapon.

"I think there were better options available than to stand or crouch in the middle of the yard," Warren said of the officer's action. "One step to the left would have put him out of any line of fire there might have been."

The acting chief, who said he made the decision after reviewing a police internal affairs investigation report, questioned the officer's actions and "felt he should have taken cover" rather than fire.

Police spokesman Ed Spencer said investigators initially said Mrs. Collins was on her front porch during at least part of the incident, but now believe she was at least partially behind her glass front door when the shots were fired.

Two Dallas City Council members called for a congressional probe of police practices after Mrs. Collins' death. They claimed that Dallas officers are more likely to shoot first and ask questions later in black parts of town. Mrs. Collins was black and Kraus is white.

Police officials have denied the claims.

Police spokesman Bob Shaw said congressional hearings have been scheduled for this spring in Dallas but no date has been set.

The shooting of (Etta) Collins has prompted demánds for a congressional investigation into the department's use of deadly force.

Kraus, 35, was still in the 6-month probationary period officers must complete after training with the Dallas Police Department, Warren said.

Kraus' last police job before joining the Dallas department was in Sarasota, Fla., which he left in July 1982, according to police records.

The officer, who met with the chief for about 10 minutes Wednesday morning, was fired because his performance during the incident "did not comply with departmental rules and regulations," according to a department statement.

Kraus could not be reached for comment. Directory assistance had no telephone listing for him.

Warren said during a news conference his decision had nothing to do with criticism of the police department, and that he waited to fire the officer in order not to have an effect on the grand jury's investigation.

"I've been under no political pressure and no one has told me to fire Officer Krauss," Warren said.

The FBI has completed an inquiry into Mrs. Collins' death and turned its findings over to the Department of Justice, Warren said.

STATE in brief

Perot acknowledged for humanitarian service

NEW YORK (AP) — Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot was presented the Raoul Wallenberg Award, an acknowledgement of humanitarian service, at a Wednesday night dinner hosted by ABC newswoman Barabara Walters.

Perot received the award, named for the Swedish diplomat who saved more than 100,000 Hungarian Jews from the Nazi's in World War II, for his spirit, courage and dedication, a statement said.

"Like Wallenberg, Ross Perot is a man of action," Ms. Walters said. "Perot's life and career have been dedicated to the same principles of courage and humanitarianism that Wallenberg exemplified."

More than 1,000 international business and diplomatic officials attended the event at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. The theme of the event was "children are our future" and included appearances by several young performers.

Proceeds from the event go to the Pediatric Day Hospital of Shaare Zedek Hospital in Jerusalem and a scholarship program to be administered by the Raoul Wallenberg Committee.

Police probe bomb blast

AUSTIN (AP) — Austin Police are searching for clues in a bomb blast that killed a man who had recently moved here from Minnesota.

Police theorize that others may have known he was making an explosive device at the time the bomb exploded.

"We have some leads, and we have some loose ends we are trying to tie up," homicide Lt. Jerry Slatton said of the investigation into the death of Allen Schmitt, 23.

"We think we'll be able to sort it all out and clear everything up, but until we do, I can't comment further," Slatton said.

An autopsy indicated Schmitt may have been holding the powerful bomb when it detonated inside his apartment, killing him instantly.

"He may have been arming the bomb" at the time of the explosion, said Dr. Robert Bayardo, the Travis County Medical Examiner. "At this point, it looks like an accidental death. There is no evidence of foul play, no evidence of a suicide or homicide."

Guns, drug lab seized

BROWNWOOD (AP) — Authorities seized machine guns, eight stolen vehicles and an unassembled drug laboratory capable of producing more than $400,000 worth of methamphetamine per week, officers said Wednesday.

A Lake Brownwood woman was arrested on a warrant charging her with delivery of a controlled substance, Brown County Chief Deputy Glen Smith said.

The woman was being held in the Brown County Jail in lieu of a $545,000 bond. Jail records show the woman was arrested for investigation of aggravated possession of a controlled substance, unauthorized use of a motor vehicle and receiving and concealing stolen property.

Formal charges had not been filed Wednesday night.

Authorities discovered the drug paraphernalia after the woman gave permission for deputies to search her trailer house, Smith said. Eight vehicles stolen from the Dallas area were also seized, Smith said.

He said pistols and rifles were also taken from the woman's home.

PCBs discovered in ditch

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Water Commission warned San Patricio County residents on Wednesday to stay away from soils in a ditch contaminated with low level PCBs.

The commission said it discovered the plycholorynated biphenyls in a drainage ditch in a rural area northwest of Portland after collecting soil samples from the ditch.

Officials said there is no immediate health threat, but warned residents to stay away from the ditch until it is cleaned.

The commission said Coastal Chemical, Inc. of Portland, an oil field chemicals distributors, should begin cleaning the ditch within a few weeks.

Students to clean up

AUSTIN (AP) — State officials asked Texas college students planning trips to the Gulf coast for spring break fun to aid in a beach cleanup as well.

State Land Commissioner Gary Mauro and Mary Jo Peterman, president of the Texas State Student Association, launched the 1987 Texas Collegiate Challenge Beach Cleanup on Wednesday.

The two are asking students to help clean up beaches on South Padre Island and at Port Aransas while on spring break.

Consumers quest to avoid rip-off, fraud

By SHARON BENOIT
Copley News Service

No one enjoys being duped. In fact, deceit is the most frustrating, helpless, upsetting and inconvenient situation if a rip-off, fraud or swindle has occurred. But, it doesn't have to be that way. There are several ways to avoid being a target for such offensive actions.

Problem is, most people don't realize how easy it is to be ripped off. For instance, take the prominent carpet company that requires its customers to sign a delivery receipt. The statement "received the above in good condition" appears on the carbon copy of the form — but not on the top page, which the consumer signs.

Then there's the gift shop that caters to tourists. An elderly woman browses among the trinkets, ornamental plates and assorted curios.

A SALESMAN falsely identifies himself as the owner of the store and tells her a long, involved story ending with the sad fact that the store will have to go out of business unless the "owner" can raise money quickly. The sympathetic woman is talked into lending the store her life savings, more than $5,000. As collateral, she receives merchandise worth $200. When she later tries to get her money back, she is told that the store regards the transaction as a sale — and that all sales are final.

Frightening, isn't it? Then again, it's really just as easy to become protective and more aware of these deceitful characters.

Perhaps the most important point to remember is anyone can become a victim. No one is shielded from ripoffs, frauds or swindles.

THIS OCCURS because most consumers tend to be trustworthy of others. They don't realize that there are times when there is a need to be more protective and cautious for their own sake and the sake of their families.

For instance, how many times has someone knocked at your front door with a sales pitch, and you've been lured into buying a product or tickets to a charity because the salesperson has a kind face or is well dressed? Or, how frequently have you purchased a product that is later found to be either worthless or full of flaws?

ON THE brighter side, most salesmen are legitimate and there are ways to single out the good guys from the rip-off artists. Here are just a few of the most obvious tips to remember the next time a salesperson comes to your door:

If you are interested in whatever the salesperson has to sell and a substantial sum of money is involved, don't be afraid to ask this person to return later. If he/she tries to pressure you into making a decision on the spot, be suspicious. An honest business person will not try to rush you.

Always ask for identification. Get the name and address of the company for whom the salesperson is a representative. Then, take the time to check out this person's (company's) record with the Better Business Bureau.

Don't sign any contract without studying it first. If you don't understand something you've read, ask someone — an attorney, a friend in the know — to explain it. Keep the contract for one day to go over the particulars. Then ask questions if you still don't understand the contents.

EVERY PROMISE the salesperson makes to you verbally should be written down and both of you should sign it and date it.

Another major problem is consumer innocence. For instance, sometimes crafty salespeople will give the impression that the consumer is getting a special deal for a lower cost. When the salesperson says the words "low monthly payments," don't be fooled. This is not always the case. Ask the salesperson to clearly explain all of the financing arrangements and put them into writing. If you don't understand the payment schedule, don't sign anything before you figure out how much your total payments will add up to at the end of the period of time the contract stipulates.

There are times when a consumer can be fooled into believing products, goods or services will cost less if they're put on credit. However, this is not so. The cost of an item could double or triple by not paying for it with cash.

Suppose you go ahead and sign the contract for that great item the salesperson has convinced you to buy. Are you tied to the contract by law? Yes and no. No because of the "three-day cooling-off rule" geared to protect a consumer's right to change his or her mind.

THIS RULE simply says you have three business days to change your mind about any purchase of $25 or more. It applies to sales made in your home and to sales made anywhere other than the seller's normal place of business.

This rule does not apply if the sale was made at the seller's place of business, or if the sale was made by telephone or mail, for under $25, for real estate, insurance or securities, or for emergency home repairs.

Also, according to this rule, salespeople must tell customers of their cancellation rights and the contract must include their right to cancel. After a sale is made, don't forget to get a sales receipt. It is your proof of sale. If you have any questions about anyone trying to sell you anything, call the Better Business Bureau in your community. They are in business to help you.

There are many resources available to help consumers avoid ripoffs, frauds and swindles. One publication, "Getting What You Deserve," written by Stephen A. Newman and Nancy Kramer, is an excellent reference handbook. It even comes equipped with noted consumer activist Ralph Nader's seal of approval.

HE SAYS this book "not only helps you as a consumer fight inflation, but also helps you as a citizen to prevent inflation." Inside, there are tips on everything from how to read the fine print in a contract to modern sales tricks to avoid. It is available at most major book stores.

In addition, the Better Business Bureau publishes a "Consumer Resource Book" that is equally informative. It's an open invitation for consumers to gain knowledge, protect themselves from bad investments. For information on how to receive a copy of this publication, write 101 Howard St., San Francisco, CA 94105, or call (415) 543-1600.

Discover work styles

NEW YORK (AP) — There is no one right way to get organized, but the key to saving time at work is to know your work style — whether you're a right-brain or a left-brain person.

"Left-brain people establish priorities, adhere to a plan and work in a sequential orderly fashion," says time management expert Ann McGee-Cooper in Family Circle magazine. "They love structure and predictable routine, strict deadlines, working alone and they hate interruptions and clutter."

Right-brain people crave variety, visual stimuli, flexibility, innovation, and work best with many things going at once.

McGee-Cooper says the secret of working efficiently is to develop personalized habits that fit your own way of thinking and working. "Brain dominance or work method is not the point," she says. "What really matters is which work style is most comfortable, effective and timesaving."

The diamond engagement ring tradition.

The engagement, or betrothal, ring is one of man's oldest expressions of love. The ancient Egyptians developed the tradition. But until a century ago, diamonds were so hard to come by that only the wealthiest of men could afford to give their fiancees engagement rings set with diamonds.

Fortunately, since the discovery of further deposits of diamonds, they are now available in a variety of sizes, shapes, and qualities that are within reach of us all. In fact, today, the diamond is our culture's most widely accepted symbol of love and romance.

How much should you spend on a diamond engagement ring?

Today, a diamond that you will cherish for a lifetime should cost you at least one to two months' salary. Now at first, that may sound like an awful lot of money, especially if you don't know the first thing about diamonds. But in a way, buying an engagement ring is no different from buying a car, a stereo, or any other significant item. You have to do a little research before you can truly understand what makes one diamond worth so much more than another.

Unlike just about anything else you buy, your diamond engagement ring is a once-in-a-lifetime purchase. And when you consider how much money you constantly spend on things that just don't last, you'll realize how important it is to buy the biggest and best diamond ring you can afford.

What makes a diamond so valuable?

DIAMOND CUTTING

For maximum brilliance and beauty man must fashion nature's rough product with exact proportions and precise polishing. To deviate in any way is to rob the diamond of its inherent beauty and value. The layman may examine the diamond's fire and sparkle by eye, but it takes a skilled jeweler using a modern binocular instrument, such as the Diamondscope®, to accurately judge the cutting proportions, the thickness of the girdle of the stone, the spread of the diamond's table, and the depth of the pavilion. These are the factors among others, that you must rely upon your jeweler to grade. His personal knowledge of gemology is your protection when selecting a fine diamond.

DIAMOND COLOR

Nearly all gem diamonds have some slight yellowish body color. The degree of this color, as it varies from colorless (the best grade), to yellowish, affects the price you pay. Occasionally diamonds termed "fancy" do appear with a definite body color of canary yellow, pink, brown, or sapphire blue. These, due to their rarity, command a high price and are only occasionally seen in jewelry stores.

DIAMOND CLARITY

Clarity is the third of the "4C's" in determining diamond value. Minute inclusions seen only with difficulty under 10 power magnification do not mar the beauty of the gem, nor endanger durability, but will reduce the cost. Flaws which are visible to the eye obviously mar the beauty of the stone and may make the diamond fragile.

CARAT WEIGHT

Of the "4C's" carat weight is the least important in determining diamond value. A fine one carat diamond may cost more than an inferior diamond of greater size. It is the Cutting, Color, and Clarity factors that determine the per carat price of each stone. If all factors are equal, a 50 point stone will cost more than two 25 point stones, a two carat stone more than two one carat stones, etc. There are 100 points in each carat.

Manufacturers reintroduce products — with changes

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

Where do you go from up? Food manufacturers who find themselves on top of the heap often resort to "same song, second verse" — making small changes in their already-successful products and reintroducing them as something new.

For instance (by the way, all prices quoted are from local supermarkets. Prices at other locations may vary.):

■ Ruffles potato chips, one of the Frito-Lay brands, has been a favorite of consumers for years — decades, even. The famous "R-r-ruffles has r-r-ridges" commercials are still being quoted at cocktail parties, even though they haven't been seen on television for years.

For continued success, the company keeps introducing new flavors of Ruffles. Most recently, "Cajun Spice" Ruffles have found a home on supermarket shelves and — the company hopes — in the grocery sacks and kitchen shelves of consumers.

Like most other Ruffles, a 6½-ounce of Cajun Spice cost $1.39 at a local supermarket. The testers were divided as to its taste — some said it tasted like barbecue potato chips, some like that Christmas snack made from Chex cereals, peanuts, pretzels and seasonings (I never can remember what it's called). Some liked Cajun Spice, but my personal favorite remains Cheddar and Sour Cream.

■ Oreos have been "America's favorite sandwich cookie" for generations. How do you improve on that? Well, Nabisco has introduced Oreos with "double stuff" in the middle and Oreos with flavored stuff in the middle. And now they have come up with Oreo Big Stuff — Oreos which are exactly the same as ordinary Oreos, except that they are almost three inches across.

Big Stuff come eight to a box, which costs $2.19 at a local supermarket. That averages out to about 27 cents each — quite a bit for a cookie. Tasters all loved them, however, and the eight cookies disappeared in record time.

And yes, even with Big Stuff you unscrew the cookies before you eat them.

■ Chef Boy-Ar-Dee canned pasta products are a staple in homes where children live. Some kids don't like them, that's true, but those kids are in the minority around my house. And the company doesn't seem to be satisfied with their old tried-and-true products, they keep introducing "new" ones — that turn out to be the same pasta in just another shape.

Examples are Zoo-Roni (animal-shaped pasta in tomato sauce, with or without meatballs), ABC's and 123s (letter- and number-shaped ditto), Spaghetti-Os (famous old circle-shaped pasta in tomato sauce, with or without meatballs or sliced franks), spaceship-shaped pasta, Pac-Man-shaped pasta and most recently, Tic-Tac-Toe-shaped pasta. All cost about 93 cents for a 15-ounce (or so) can, depending on if they have meatballs, franks or just sauce.

According to the experts I live with, the shapes may be fun, but the products all taste the same. Somehow, that doesn't surprise me. After all, why mess with success?

Question advice others offer

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

Almost every day a "new" and "better" diet or exercise plan is publicized in the media. As if we don't get enough from television and magazines, relatives and friends are always willing to offer advice about losing that extra 10 pounds or getting in shape.

When you're serious about losing weight and becoming fit, you need all the help you can get. Following bad advice not only sets back your diet and fitness plans, but can also leave you discouraged at your failure.

There are three simple questions that can help you distinguish good from bad dietary and fitness advice:

■ Who is the source? Is the person who wrote the book or the person being interviewed on television qualified? Descriptions such as "famous" or "leading authority" can be misleading.

A degree in one field does not automatically qualify a person to write about a different field. For instance, "Dr. Jane Doe" may have a degree in child psychology. If "Dr. Jane Doe" is a physician, she may not have ever had a course in exercise physiology or nutrition.

■ Why was it written? Will the author or publisher gain by presenting biased information? Some diet plans may recommend massive doses of vitamins or special food supplements as a means of selling those products.

■ What do other experts say? Diet and exercise plans are often sold to the public on the basis of personal opinions or testimonials alone. Even if you believe that the person who made the testimonial lost weight, that doesn't mean the plan would work for you. Especially suspect information that conflicts with that coming from other sources.

Diet and exercise information based on university or hospital research is most likely to help you be successful because it has been tested scientifically.

'Free' motorcycle costs $297.88

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

Area residents have reported receiving letters advising them they have been selected to receive a "revolutionary new Kamasura 250 VRX motorcycle."

Those who called the telephone number in the letter were told that the motorcycle is "free," but they have to pay $297.88 in shipping, title and registration charges. Recipients are also told that they will have to state in writing their opinion as to how the motorcycle handles and performs.

The company, Continental Marketing, Inc. of Marina Del Ray, California states that the cycle comes from the "Orient" and is a 39cc 2-stroke 1 cylinder 2-cycle engine that gets 150 miles to the gallon.

A spokesman for the company stated it was "like a mo-ped."

One Better Business Bureau checked with several area motorcycle dealers and two national motorcycle magazines. Nobody had ever heard of the Kamasura motorcycle. In fact, nobody had ever heard of a motorcycle with an engine under 50cc.

Exercise caution about any item considered to be "free." Thoroughly check out the offer and check with your BBB before your "free" item empties your pockets.

Search beyond razzmatazz, exercise consumer caution

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

"User friendly" is the operative term; high-tech gadgetry that can interface your body needs with the latest in home-gym conditioning. But before you succumb to all the hype that surrounds a sale, exercise a little consumer caution.

What do you and your family really want? Something to decorate the house? Or a piece of durable, practical, physiologically sound equipment that may temporarily put you in oxygen — not financial — debt?

The choices are staggering and confusing, especially to the unsophisticated shopper, who doesn't know a computer-matched gas-assisted cylinder (the latest in rowing machine technology) from a digital data pack (a treadmill innovation).

On the other hand, the state of the art in home gym equipment is of rapidly advancing quality. And the competitive marketplace is such, say industry experts, that prices are barely keeping pace with the technology.

"You can get much more sophisticated equipment today for the same price you would have paid 10 years ago," insists Steve Flesser, who operates a health specialty store in San Diego. "The equipment is more comfortable with more motivational features."

At the same time, however, Flesser says that equipment that conditions the cardiovascular system and involves large muscle mass is the best investment; anything else is a bonus. And the bells and whistles? If you don't mind the extra expense and you need them as a motivational tool, why not?

According to Dr. Steven Van Camp, a cardiologist and a spokesman for the American College of Sports Medicine, "A purchase must be appropriate for that person. The equipment should be substantial enough and adjustable to allow for various levels of fitness and, hopefully, be useable by multiple members of the family.

"The beauty of exercise is that it can grab people and get them hooked so long as it is a good experience and done properly. If it is a positive experience, a person is more likely to add fitness to his or her life."

Flesser and Van Camp agree that high-tech features such as digital readouts of calories burned, pulse meters or visual aids are superfluous for some, entertaining and motivational for others.

If you're planning on spending less than $500 and you want one piece of equipment that will tone the upper body as well as tax you aerobically without jarring or pounding the joints or stressing the knees, consider a rowing machine. Flesser's recommendation: the Avita 950 SL, which retails for about $350.

"It's the most advanced rowing machine in the world," said Flesser, "and it's simple to use. The rowing motion is the easiest modality to master for the untrained individual. ... You push with the legs, pull with the arms and keep your shoulders and head in a straight line.

"Because of the different muscles used, you can get a much harder workout than on a stationary bike. Your heart rate goes up faster and it feels easier, given similar resistance, because the load is being shared.

"The beauty of the rower is that it doesn't seem like work. You're in a recumbent position, using all the major muscle groups. You can set the resistance at one of six levels and control the resistance by varying your speed."

By locking the seat, the rower can be used, explained Flesser, for sit-ups, abdominal crunches, deltoid and back pulls, chest presses and bicep curls.

If money is no object and visual motivation is paramount, the Bally Liferower, which retails for about $2,800 and weighs 180 pounds, may be more your style. A 13-inch color video screen simulates a race between two boats: a computer-driven pace boat and you.

Feedback is provided on the screen telling your recommended stroke rate, actual stroke rate, distance ahead or behind the pace boat, total distance traveled, total time remaining and total calories burned. You can even hear the sound of your oars as you slice through the water and the voice of your coach admonishing you to keep your back straight and use your legs.

Regardless of its features, the rowing machine is attracting many people bored with bikes and traumatized by the jarring of jogging or aerobic dance, noted Flesser.

"It's a question of what people are willing to do for 15 minutes to an hour at a time," said Van Camp. "But the jury's still out as to whether you can develop a higher oxygen uptake from a rowing machine or a treadmill or cross-country ski simulator."

The opposite of a rower in terms of perceived exertion may well be a stair climber, which appeals to the more serious fitness buff. Flesser frequently works out on Stair Climber by F.M. Engineering which, equipped with a seat, heart-rate monitor and microprocessor — retails for about $2,200.

"You can climb stairs while sitting down — in a recumbent position, which takes a lot of strain off the knees," said Flesser.

But at 205 pounds it may be a bit cumbersome for the average home fitness center. Similar machines are the Versa-Climber by Heart-Rate Inc. and StairMaster by Tri-Tech Inc. All provide various climbing speeds and digital readouts.

At the opposite end of the exertion spectrum is the rebounder, or mini-trampoline, designed for a less-fit individual. Studies show it does little to enhance the aerobic condition of a fit person, pointed out Van Camp.

"I'd rather see someone use a rebounder to music as as fun way to exercise than to pound a cement or wood floor in an aerobics dance class," said Flesser. "But the quality of rebounders varies tremendously."

Flesser recommends spending about $175 for a quality rebounder with a polypropylene mat that can withstand the resistance of a 350-pound person.

As for non-electronic exercise bikes, the Norwegian-built Bodyguard 955 Ergocycle — which retails for under $400 — gets the nod.

"There are about 300 stationary bikes on the market," said Flesser, "including some recumbent bikes. We sell 50 of the Bodyguard 955 to every one of the rest. This is the battleship of the industry."

A more basic version of the Bodyguard 955 without its built-in calibration feature and toe clips (essential for maximal quadricep conditioning) retails for about $325, said Flesser.

Of course, you can always go the electronic route, budget permitting. In this case you might consider the $2,195 Lifecycle 9000 with built-it interval training programs, 12 work-load intensities and three exercise modes.

For $700 less, accomplished runners can whisk six-minute miles on the Avita 350 Whisper, an electric treadmill that is adjustable up to 10 mph and comes equipped with a 1.5 horsepower motor. Gradual belt response prevents sudden jerks and stops.

"You should expect to pay at least $1,000 for a quality treadmill," said Flesser. "Some go as high as $16,000 with speed up to 15 mph."

Regardless of the price, however, none provides any more cushion than the outdoor pavement. Yet there are no potholes or curbs to trip over and the machine helps develop a comfortable rhythm. "Another advantage," said Flesser, "is that you can monitor your form in front of a mirror." For an extra $120, he added, you can add a quality pulse monitor.

Whatever you choose in the way of equipment, you must ask questions, said Flesser.

"You want to know if it does what it professes to do. You want to know how to use it correctly. And you want to know if it is right for your temperament — which is one of the main things to be considered."

Added Van Camp: "Anyone should double-check with an exercise-oriented physician before making any purchase if he has certain orthopedic or physical limitations. That's as important as input from an expert salesperson.

"You want to make sure you can still get a workout despite any limitations."

DEAR ABBY

Scandinavian likes others at arm's length

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The person signed "Touch-Me-Not" would fit into my family very well. Being Scandinavian, we are not as demonstrative in public as people of other nationalities. Unless we haven't seen each other for a long period of time, even family members do not like to be hugged or kissed. That goes for hugging and kissing children, too. And then we do it only in private.

I have an excellent relationship with my grown children and their spouses, but we seldom touch each other. Being grabbed, clutched or jabbed would be unbearable for us. Luckily most of our friends are of Scandinavian descent, and wouldn't think of doing something like that. — ANOTHER UNTOUCHABLE

DEAR UNTOUCHABLE: Touch-me-not behavior is not a problem, unless, of course, a cool, immovable Scandinavian encounters an irresistible, affectionate, Latin, Semite or European type.

However, conversions have been known to occur, and I'd dare say it would be easier to warm up a Scandinavian than to cool off a hot-blooded Hungarian.

DEAR ABBY: The letter about "Touch-Me-Nots" touched me where I live. However, your answer was too gentle. You should advise everyone who is grabbed, clutched or jabbed to punch the jerk in the mouth and knock out his two front teeth, and here is why: A fellow worker playfully jabbed me in the stomach with his thumb with such force that three days later I had to see a doctor, who informed me that I was bleeding internally! It took four pints of blood and a 20-day stay in the hospital, not to mention the hospital bill and a loss of work for a month!

My stupid brother-in-law, when greeting me, punches me so hard on the upper arms, I suffer black-and-blue marks that last for three weeks. If he is behind me, he jabs me in the kidney area and I am in terrific pain for a week.

So, Dear Abby, please encourage victims of these idiots who grab, clutch and jab to fight back by kicking them in the shins and punching them in the mouth and see how they like it.

If, by printing this letter, you save just one person from the torment I have endured, you will have taken a giant step forward for mankind. — EDWARD D., SPRINGDALE, PA.

DEAR ABBY: I appreciated your column on the responsibilities of godparents to their godchildren. I totally agree with your explanation, and would like to add that a special relationship usually develops between godchild and godparents, but greeting cards and gifts should become reciprocal after the child matures.

However, when the child becomes an adult and merely expects these thoughtful gestures, we (our family) feel it's time to call a halt to that one-way street. Godparents also have birthdays and anniversaries, and they celebrate Christmas too, so a card or small gift acknowledging those occasions is not too much to expect of a godchild who has been on the receiving end for many, many years.

Please publish this for godchildren who have the "gimmies." — TIRED OF ONE-WAY STREETS

DEAR TIRED: Not all godchildren have the "gimmies," but those who do may experience a rude awakening if they read this and realize their thoughtlessness. However, people who continue to give gifts when there is no reciprocation — or worse yet, without thanks — should either quit giving or quit complaining.

CONFIDENTIAL TO C.O.W., WATERLOO, IOWA: Heed the words of the wise philosopher Schopenhauer: "It is easy to let the adulation of the Deity make amends for the lack of proper behavior toward men. And so we see that in all times and in all countries, the great majority of mankind find it easier to beg their way into heaven by prayers than to deserve to go there by their actions."

(To get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

Year's salary increases predicted to be smallest in 13 years

Copley News Service

Your salary increase at the end of this year may be terribly small.

A report issued by The Conference Board predicts salary hikes for executives and other white-collar workers will average 5.5 percent.

That's the smallest average salary increase in 13 years.

In fact, analysts Laura Ayers and Charles Peck say more companies will be trying to base overall pay on individual performance this year.

There is good news in all of this. The report suggests that bonuses and long-term incentives will move down the corporate ladder this year.

Catch-22 found in credit circle

By DEBORAH RANKIN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — It seems ironic. While some deeply indebted credit card customers find their mailboxes stuffed with new loan offers, other solid citizens find themselves unable to borrow because they lack that all-important passkey to obtaining credit — a credit history. Individuals who have never borrowed, or who have paid all their debts without a blemish or who have been living abroad sometimes discover they are "non-persons" in the world of credit.

While such cases are the exception rather than the norm, they create more than their share of problems. The rejected borrowers often complain, and the banks are not happy about losing the business. Kenneth H. Thorn, a senior vice president at Chemical Bank, estimates that applications from potential borrowers with backgrounds that vary from the standard profiles crop up "5 to 10 percent of the time, but account for a much larger percentage" of the bank's rejections.

Many institutions would just as soon ignore the touchy issue of credit rejections. Some bankers questioned for this story asked that they not be identified, and some institutions failed to make executives available for interviews.

But rejected borrowers need not be reticent. Lenders are required to tell you why you were turned down. If you feel the rejection was unwarranted, ask to have the decision reviewed by a more senior officer. "Sometimes, you have to shout a little bit to get your case looked at," said John Y. Coffman, president of Management Decision Systems, Inc., which designs credit scoring systems for lenders. "But creditors will respond if a consumer comes back to them, and almost every one will give a consumer a fair hearing."

A lender evaluates your credit history by examining the information filed by banks, consumer finance companies, retailers and other organizations with various credit bureaus. The bureaus compile information on your bill-paying habits, noting whether you were prompt or tardy and whether lenders encountered any problems with you.

But some organizations, such as American Express, do not provide credit bureaus with any information on their card holders, maintaining that to do so would violate their customers' privacy. Other lenders report only negative information. And because most creditors are interested only in your recent credit history — that is, repayments within the last 12 to 24 months — many credit bureaus purge any information older than that. Furthermore, information on how you repaid debts abroad is generally not available in the United States.

If you fall into one of those categories, Coffman said, it is vital to present a lender with evidence of stable employment in a skilled occupation, and stable income — either by having held the same job for a number of years or by having moved up in the same line of work.

Employment at an established company can count for a lot. One banker, for example, said his institution might be willing to write a mortgage for an executive returning to the United States to work for the same company for which he had worked overseas. "But if he had bounced around for 15 years in different jobs in Japan, China and London and was returning to start up his own consulting business, it would be a much more difficult decision," the banker added.

Reagan 'goes public,' changes strategy

WASHINGTON (AP) — After staying almost totally out of public view for weeks, President Reagan is going public, offering snippets of news to reporters' shouted questions and responding to the strong criticisms of the Tower report.

Reagan acknowledged in Wednesday's nationally broadcast speech that many people were thinking, "What's he doing hiding out in the White House?"

And he noted that his low profile had eroded faith in his presidency. "I've paid a price for my silence in terms of your trust and confidence," he said.

While the president attempted to offer his side of the story in his 12-minute address, he did not say when or if he plans to submit to questioning in a formal news conference about his policies and their consequences.

It has been more than three months since he held such a meeting with journalists.

At one point, his silence was so deafening that first lady Nancy Reagan stepped in to say her husband was "very anxious" to have former National Security Council aides John M. Poindexter and Oliver L. North testify about their roles in the affair but that he had to withhold comment until the outside investigators submitted their findings.

"Sometimes, you know, it's harder to say nothing, when you really want to say something," Mrs. Reagan said.

When the reports of the secret dealings with Iran first came to light in early November, Reagan flat out denied it.

"The speculation, the commenting and all, on a story that came out of the Middle East...has no foundation," the president said at a bill-signing ceremony.

Such "photo opportunities" — a chance for reporters to question Reagan — became rare as the controversy developed. In time, they stopped altogether.

The president attempted to offer his explanation of events in a broadcast address Nov. 13, and when that did not quell the uproar, he held a news conference six davs later.

Following the explosive disclosure on Nov. 25 that payments from the arms sales to Iran appeared to have been diverted by NSC officials to the Nicaraguan Contras, Reagan appeared in the White House briefing room with Attorney General Edwin Meese III, but he left the questions for Meese to answer.

Reagan failed to address many questions that continued to arise in connection with the affair in a brief broadcast address Dec. 2 and for weeks thereafter either remained silent or offered comment through his press secretary or in a brief radio address.

Then came the president's hospitalization for prostate surgery Jan. 5, and a doctor-ordered six-week recuperation period.

Although this was one of the major factors given by White House officials for Reagan's reduced public profile, the president did not cite it in his speech.

He said he had delayed speaking out because he was waiting investigators' reports on the Iran-Contra affair.

Reagan says Nancy not 'dragon lady'

WASHINGTON (AP) — An irate President Reagan is rising to his wife's defense, denouncing assertions she is running the government or acts like "a dragon lady."

"That is fiction and I think it is despicable fiction," Reagan told reporters, a look of anger darkening his expression. "And a lot of people ought to be ashamed of themselves."

The subject arose at a Wednesday Oval Office photo session, during which Reagan was quizzed about Nancy Reagan's role. A spate of reports in recent days described Mrs. Reagan as power-hungry and likened her to a dragon. The reports suggested she overstepped her bounds by pushing Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan from his job.
