MacFarlane to be named security chief

MacFarlane

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, bucking a strong lobbying campaign by conservative supporters, has decided to bring his special Middle East envoy, Robert C. McFarlane, back to the White House full time as the chief national security adviser, White House officials say.

McFarlane would move into the post of assistant to the president for national security affairs, which will be vacated when William P. Clark becomes secretary of the interior.

The officials, who spoke on the condition that they not be identified by name, said the president notified the top members of his national security and foreign policy team of his decision over the weekend.

When he returned from a weekend at Camp David, Md., on Sunday, the president replied "nope" to questions about whether he had spoken with McFarlane about the job.

The officials said they could see no snags developing, although Reagan has yet to actually offer the job to McFarlane, who is also Clark's deputy.

"All that remains is the president making it formal," said one official.

Conservatives allies of the president, both in and out of government, had conducted what White House officials said was a strenuous campaign on behalf of Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations. One White House official said Mrs. Kirkpatrick was in line for a new foreign policy job in Washington, although the details were not set.

There was also concern that McFarlane, a 45-year-old former Marine lieutenant colonel who has served Republican administrations since 1973, would not have the same access to Reagan as Clark. The current national security assistant has known Reagan for 16 years and is one of his closest advisers in Washington. Clark is leaving the White House to replace James G. Watt, who resigned on Oct. 9.

MC's I Street entrance remains a 'secondary' issue

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Well-worn tire tracks bypass the gates which block Midland College's I Street exit. They give mute testimony to the determination of some drivers who use a shorter, less congested route than the main MC entrance.

Virtually everyone who takes classes at MC, or occasionally goes to events at Chapparal Center, has been frustrated by slow-moving traffic in the college's single access off Garfield Street. According to city and college officials, the situation will not improve much in the years to come.

With ever-increasing enrollments, many had hoped that once the city installed a $20,000 traffic light and $300,000 bridge at the south exit it would become a permanent access to the college. But at present there are no plans to make it anything more than what it is now — a secondary exit used occasionally to alleviate the traffic jams which inevitably result after events at Chapparal Center.

Although everyone from the college president on down agrees there is an access problem, officials cite two reasons for not making I Street another entrance to the college. City officials contend it would hinder traffic on Wadley Avenue, and school officials fear it would result in outside traffic cutting across the campus to avoid the traffic light at Garfield Street and Wadley Avenue.

About five years ago the city built the I Street exit to ease persistent traffic problems after special events at the college. The road was barricaded by two gates which were only opened for a short time on those evenings.

But the solution turned into a problem when it became more and more difficult to find police officers willing to direct traffic at the south exit.

"They didn't want to take the chance of getting run over," college president Dr. Jess Parrish explained. "The traffic is pretty fast on Wadley and it's not lighted very well. A couple of policemen have almost been hit."

"It's really dangerous right now without a light there," MC board president Kenneth Peeler agreed. "It's hard to see. A traffic officer really takes his life into his own hands trying to direct traffic there."

Parrish said currently the exit is not being used at all.

In March school trustees had been told a traffic light would be installed by September. But the city had to advertise three times and change the specifications before a bid was accepted. Fred Baker, director of public works, now says the light will be operating in time for the college's first basketball game in early November. When in use, the light will be hand operated by an officer. All other times it will blink yellow, similar to the traffic lights at the fire station.

Parrish hopes that once the light is installed it can be used during other peak traffic times, such as early morning, noon and before evening classes. But city and school officials have not agreed on what times the exit will be open.

"I don't think anybody knows," Parrish said, adding that it would not be open 24 hours a day. "The whole idea was so it could be open at times of heavy traffic."

But Baker said the city has no plans now to increase use of the exit. The city, and not the college, decides when the gates will be open, and school officials don't have a key to the gates.

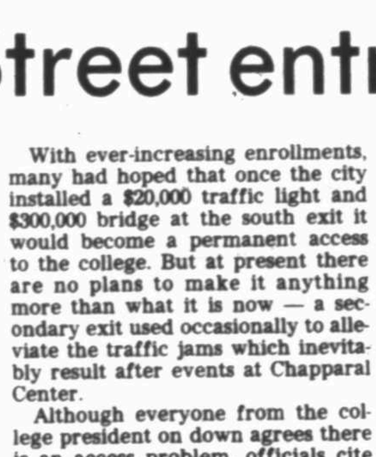

"The city is not very receptive to keeping that thing open constantly because of the slowdown of traffic on Wadley," Peeler said.

"We have 22,000 vehicles a day on Wadley," Baker explained. "If we dump heavy traffic there it'll only decrease the capacity of Wadley, which is our only east-west thoroughfare, to accommodate a small amount of traffic.

Decoy catalog elicits some ducky orders

The second spoof of L.L. Bean's merchandise is called "More Items from Our Catolog."

NEW YORK — L.L. Bean, purveyor of gear for outdoor lovers and sporty preppies, was a sitting duck for a spoof of its popular mail-order catalog.

But when people picked up the decoy volume, entitled "Items From Our Catalog," they couldn't resist the bargains. Adorable doggie brassieres — a steal at $7.75. Sheepskin-lined cases for canned tuna — $5. Edible moccasins — $41.75.

Several hundred readers got on the phone to Avon Books in New York, bank cards in hand. They mailed checks for the proper prepaid amounts, including the size and color of their choice.

The catalog, of course, was just a joke. The items did not exist.

But a real pair of Bean's hip waders might have come in handy at the publisher's office, where an extra person was assigned just to handle the calls.

"It clogged up our phone lines," says Richard Brenner, director of special markets for Avon. "We had to rearrange things and put other business on the back burner."

Lorraine Buckley, Brenner's assistant, was the bearer of the bad news. "We just had to tell people, 'Sorry, it's just a gag,'" she said. "Some people were very upset that they couldn't order the items."

"Our Catalog," written by Alfred Gingold and published last year, was a cockeyed look at the catalog of L.L. Bean, the store in Freeport, Maine, which sells everything from slacks to stoves and caters to the faithful night and day.

Bean sends out about 45 million real catalogs, for free, every year. Gingold's catalog was pretty successful, too, selling 800,000 copies at $4.95 each.

It was so successful that Gingold has tried it again. "More Items From Our Catalog," with a cat in snorkeling equipment on the cover, was released this month.

Of course, "More Items" is also just a joke. The items don't exist.

Reagan marks 1,000 days with election plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Today, 1,000 days into his first term, President Reagan is signing the legal documents that will make him a candidate for re-election.

Although Reagan has yet to state publicly that he is running for a second term in 1984, Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., one of his closest political advisers, was planning to meet with the president and establish a re-election committee today. Two other key advisers say they have no doubts about the president's intentions.

The papers, once signed by the president, will be deposited with the Federal Election Commission.

"He is going to run, and those who work with him on a day-to-day basis all feel that way," White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III said on Sunday.

"I'm 100 percent convinced the president will be a candidate for re-election," said Edward J. Rollins, the presidential assistant who has been chosen to run the campaign.

The president and his aides have said he is reluctant to announce his plans because, if he is running, each step he takes would be seen in a political light. If he is not running, he would become a lame duck, they say.

Although the president's own announcement is said by Laxalt to be at least one month away, an extensive campaign organization is in the works, with state chairmen already designated and a Washington office taking shape near the Capitol.

Laxalt will be general chairman of the Reagan-Bush '84 Committee, the official name of the organization to re-elect the president and Vice President George Bush. Rollins will leave his current job as assistant to the president for political affairs and take over as campaign director. His White House deputy, Lee Atwater, will join him at the committee.

Laxalt, Baker, consulting strategist Stuart Spencer, deputy White House Chief of Staff Michael K. Deaver, and pollster Richard Wirthlin will be given key policy-making roles.

Margaret Tutwiler, special assistant to the president and executive assistant to Baker, will be the White House liaison with the Reagan campaign organization, the Republican National Committee, and the House and Senate campaign committees.

Angela "Bay" Buchanan, former U.S. treasurer, will be the campaign treasurer.

United Way pleads for donations with four days, $400,000 remaining

"We have four days left in the campaign. We have over $400,000 still to raise. It is going to be an uphill struggle," Bob Cornelius, United Way executive director, said this morning in a last minute plea.

"When we set the goal at $1,712,000, up 6 percent from last year, we knew it would be tough," Cornelius said. "In fact, because of the downturn in the Midland economy, United Way volunteers are having to find new pledges to replace well over $100,000 in contributions lost as a result of business failures.

"That means the United Way goal is really 13 percent above the solid base of pledges left from last year."

Explaining why the goal was set so high given the circumstances, Cornelius said, "The community needs the United Way to raise $1.7 million and more."

Citing specific examples, he said, "The Palmer Drug Abuse Program is struggling financially. United Way has had to make a special grant of $20,000 to get them through this year. Alcohol and drug abuse are the most pressing social problems in Midland. We can't let PDAP fail for want of funding.

"The Salvation Army is serving more people in 1983 than it did in 1982. That trend will continue in 1984. The Permian Basin Center for Battered Women is full to overflowing.

"The Big Brothers/Big Sisters program is serving 135 children and has a waiting list," he said. "Their needs aren't even reflected in our goal. We will have to go beyond it to help Big Brothers/Big Sisters. There are 20 more agencies with the same story.

"When a community's economy gets in trouble, that makes for 'people problems.' Solving people problems is the business of United Way agencies. The goal is up, and had to be up, because of the increased pressure to deliver service," concluded Cornelius.

"The volunteer leadership of this campaign is dedicated to making and exceeding the goal. An all-out effort to raise the last $400,000 has been launched," Cornelius said.

He concluded with a plea. "If you want to make a pledge, and have not been contacted by a United Way volunteer, please call 682-4358. We need your support, whether it is one dollar or one thousand dollars."

I Street entrance 'secondary'

"From the word 'go' the college was designed for no access on Wadley," he added.

In addition to the traffic light, another improvement for the controversial exit is planned. After the last MC basketball game, when the heaviest demand for an additional exit is over, the city plans to demolish the road's existing bridge and build a new one at a cost of $300,000. City officials contend the bridge, which spans a drainage ditch separating the college from Wadley Avenue, has to be removed or replaced.

The city has widened and deepened the ditch, and says the bridge is a bottleneck. "The drainage channel was analyzed," Baker said. "For it to handle the amount of drainage we anticipate we need to remove that bridge. If it is not removed we'll have backup and run-off buildup."

Currently, land to the east of the bridge is completely dry, and only a trickle of water exists on the west side. "Nobody remembers when" the ditch has been full, Parrish said. "I've been here 2½ years and I haven't seen it."

Some commuters to Midland College defy the gates closing the college's I Street exit by driving around them, as evidenced by this well-worn path, rather than going to the Garfield Street entrance.

Man never got prison orders

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Frank Martinez, a former Teamsters Union business agent convicted of trying to influence a witness, has waited since 1976 for a letter ordering him to go to prison. But the letter never came.

"For 7½ years he has been waiting for the other shoe to drop," said Allan A. Sigel, Martinez' lawyer.

In August, the FBI discovered Martinez never served his four-year prison sentence after being convicted in the case with six other defendants, four of them Teamster officials.

"Believe it or not, I'm glad this came out so everybody knows I wasn't an informant," said Martinez. "I have been ostracized by a lot of people, but I could really understand why. Everybody else went to jail, but Frank didn't."

Because of suspicions that Martinez received leniency in exchange for testimony, "He has been ostracized by friends in the community," Sigel said. "He is no longer involved with anyone in the union in any way."

Texas Ranger unwilling confidant of accused killer Henry Lee Lucas

DECATUR, Texas (AP) — When Henry Lee Lucas began telling his tales of dozens of killings, it was Texas Ranger Phil Ryan who became the 47-year-old drifter's unwilling confidant.

"I tell you, I've been to two country fairs and a hog-calling, and I've never seen anything like this," Ryan told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Lucas claims to have murdered more than 150 women in 16 states. Since June, when Lucas was arrested in Montague, Ryan has spent most of his time in the jail listening to the slightly built former mental patient with whom he has formed a grudging bond.

"That first night, to sit there and listen to someone talk in detail about all those murders. ... We went until 4 in the morning. ... In one night, he goes through 40 murders, what they (the victims) said, what he said, where he stabbed them, how he stabbed them. ... I don't know. It can't help but affect you if you value human life at all," Ryan said.

"There have been times when, with the exception of eating and using the phone, I would stay with him for 12 hours. I went from being enthusiastic to where I had to force myself to go in and talk to him. I'd rather have done manual labor than talk to Henry another day."

Ryan said he often had to fight his own revulsion in order to do his job and take Lucas' statements.

"You have to reach back in your reserves sometimes just to be able to offer him a cup of coffee," he said. "You learn to shield your emotions, to be able to still treat them like human beings. I say, 'Henry, I hope God has mercy on your soul, but you have put him to the test.'"

Because of his hours of conversations with Lucas, it was Ryan who provided much of the information to about 80 law enforcement officials who met in Monroe, La., last week, hoping to link unsolved murder cases to Lucas and sometime traveling companion Ottis Toole, jailed in Florida.

Lucas has been indicted in eight slayings in Texas and one in Louisiana. He pleaded guilty in the death of Kate Rich, 80, of Ringgold, and received a 75-year prison sentence.

Ryan said he thinks Lucas changed his plea in the Rich case partly because "I don't think he liked the idea of being pitted against us. For a period there, he had more confidence in us than in his attorney."

Lucas was convicted in 1960 of killing his mother. He spent six years in a mental institution, was paroled and went back to prison on a kidnapping charge.

Lucas, Ryan says, is "a prime example of why the death penalty should be carried out."

Nevertheless, Ryan says, "You can't take his humanity away from him. There is still a likable trait to the sorry outfit."

Ryan said he, like others, at first assumed that Lucas was making up his admissions. Then Lucas' stories started checking out. Some didn't, though.

Lucas told Ryan that he killed his schoolteacher when he was 13.

"She's alive and well," Ryan said.

"You can't go to the bank on everything he said. I've tried. I've fed him stuff that I know he didn't do, and he took it (admitted to it)" Ryan said. "When he saw my interest start to wane, that's when he would start inventing things. He even admitted to some bank robberies when he thought I was interested in bank robberies. Anything other than being in a cell by himself."

Ryan said when other law enforcement entities began lining up to talk to Lucas, Lucas relished the attention.

Marines in Lebanon still on alert

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Lebanese army troops shelled hideouts of Shiite Moslem snipers today in south Beirut near the international airport where one U.S. Marine was killed and five wounded on Sunday.

The Marines remained on alert today against possible new attacks, and spokesmen said the U.S. peacekeepers have been unable to remove two of the Marines wounded in sniping and grenade attacks Sunday to a hospital ship off the Beirut coast.

The Marine commander, Col. Timothy Geraghty, 45, of St. Louis, told a news conference at his airport headquarters that all five wounded Marines were "in stable condition. The prognisis is good."

He accused "certain elements operating within the Beirut area" of attacking the American contingent in an effort to sabotage Lebanon's civil war cease-fire and a proposed peace conference among leaders of warring factions.

Sunday was the third consecutive day of attacks on the Marines and raised the toll of Marine combat deaths to six since the U.S. peacekeeping contingent arrived 13 months ago. A seventh Marine died when a mine he was trying to defuse exploded.

None of the Marines shot Sunday was immediately identified. A total of 56 have been wounded in the past 13 months.

Geraghty said he did not blame the dominant Amal militia of the Shiite sect for the attacks on his 1,600 Marines. He cited assurances from Amal leader Nabih Berri that "members of his community are not involved in this."

"We have some ideas" about the identity of the assailants, Geraghty said. "I believe Mr. Berri is doing everything in his power to get these elements under control."

Christian-controlled radio stations in Beirut blamed the attacks on an extremist Amal splinter group called the Party of God that is loyal to Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

A Lebanese army spokesman said soldiers fired an artillery barrage this morning to silence Shiite snipers shooting at positions near the airport, where the Marines serving with the multinational peacekeeping force are based.

Residents of the area said the 20-minute barrage followed nightlong sniping and bazooka attacks on army positions from the Shiite neighborhood of Sfeir.

Other army positions on the "green line" that divides Beirut into predominantly Christian and Moslem sectors came under sniper fire from Shiite strongholds at midmorning, Christian-controlled radio stations reported.

But no new casualties were reported in the latest violations of Lebanon's civil war cease-fire, which entered its fourth week with no agreement reached yet on a site for a "national reconciliation conference" to resolve differences between the warring factions.

Attacks were reported Sunday against Lebanese army positions on the ridge above the Marine camp. The government-run television said one Lebanese soldier was killed by artillery fire from positions held by Druse militiamen.

In southern Lebanon, Israeli occupation troops fired at a hostile crowd after a confrontation Sunday with Shiite Moslems at a religious festival in the city of Nabatiyeh.

Lebanese state radio said 15 people were wounded. The Israeli military command in Tel Aviv said none of its soldiers had wounded any Lebanese, and an investigation showed the injuries resulted from panic when the religious ceremony was interrupted.

An unconfirmed report said one of the injured Lebanese died later of his wounds.

Reporters in Nabatiyeh said Shiites threw rocks and set two Israeli vehicles ablaze when soldiers tried to clear a path to let a convoy pass. But the Israeli military command said a hand grenade was thrown at the convoy and soldiers fired in the direction from which it was thrown.

Nabatiyeh is part of Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon, which the Israelis have controlled since invading Lebanon June 1982 in a drive against Palestinian guerrillas.

The clash came as Lebanon's government attempted to stabilize the civil-war truce by formally requesting that Greece and Italy provide troops that would monitor the cease-fire.

Providing "neutral observers" is specified in the Sept. 26 cease-fire agreement that halted the civil war pitting the Lebanese army and rightist Christian militias against Druse and Shiite fighters.

Shamir facing no-confidence vote on economic situation

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's week-old government faced its first no-confidence motion today over its handling of an economic crisis that has shut down the stock market and doubled basic food prices.

The motion was presented by the opposition Labor Party and was expected to be debated on Tuesday or Wednesday, Parliament spokeswoman Dalia Asraf said.

Shamir's government was installed last Monday on a 60-53 vote, and that majority is expected to assure the defeat of Labor's motion.

A senior government official said he expected Shamir to announce a new finance minister today to replace Yoram Aridor, who resigned Thursday after his proposal to base Israel's economy on the U.S. dollar was rejected.

The official confirmed reports that the candidates for the post had narrowed down to three: Energy Minister Yitzhak Modai, Industry Minister Gideon Patt and Yigal Cohen-Orgad, a Member of Parliament who is not in the government. All three belong to Shamir's ruling Likud bloc.

Whoever Shamir chooses has a difficult task ahead — not only to choose successful economic policies but also to persuade the public that he will carry out promises without more unpleasant surprises like last Tuesday's devaluation.

The uncertain economic climate was heightened by newspaper reports today that the stock market would remain closed until next week, setting off a credit squeeze because businesses have a large amount of liquid assets tied up in bank shares.

The newspapers Yedioth Ahronoth and Maariv said leading bankers were negotiating with the Treasury for measures to prevent mass dumping of bank shares, which have been seriously weakened by the crisis.

On Sunday, an estimated 1 million workers — 70 percent of the workforce — rstaged a nationwide two-hour strike. The protest was viewed as a warning to the government by the Histadrut labor federation against tampering with cost-of-living increases now granted automatically to compensate for inflation.

The Histadrut acted after the government last week devalued the shekel by 23 percent, hiked the price of basic foodstuffs 50 percent and said it would not grant the full compensation that salaried workers are used to receiving for inflation. The changes are predicted to boost the average family's cost of living by 10 percent.

American wins economic prize for sixth year

Debreu

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Gerard Debreu of the University of California at Berkeley won the 1983 Nobel Memorial Prize in Economics today, the sixth consecutive year Americans have received the prize.

The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences said the 62-year-old professor was honored for his work on mathematical models that prove the theory of supply and demand, the basis of capitalist economy.

Americans have won the prize outright since 1978, except for the 1979 prize, which was shared by Briton Sir Arthur Lewis and American Theodore W. Schultz of the University of Chicago.

"I am very pleased," Debreu said in an interview from his home in Oakland, Calif. "It is, as a scientist, the highest recognition he or she can receive. I am also pleased because it is the recognition of the work I have been doing, namely the application of serious mathematics to economic theory."

Debreu, in explaining his work, said: "An economic system is composed of a very large number of agents, consumers and producers who make their decisions independent of each other. My goal is to explain how those agents make those decisions, how their decisions are compatible with each other and how they form an equilibrium for the economic system. To do that in a rigorous way, one has to build a mathematical theory, which has been the work of many of my colleagues and myself."

Professor Assar Lindback, chairman of the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences committee that chooses winners of the economics prize, said Debreu dealt in basic research on equilibrium in a market economy.

Debreu devised "new mathematical methods that are more advanced and yet more simple than previous ones," Lindback said.

He said Debreu's mathematical models led to the findings of both James Tobin of Yale University and George Stigler of the University of Chicago, winners of the 1981 and 1982 economics prizes.

Bardot resumes activities after bout of depression

Brigite Bardot

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Brigitte Bardot has resumed her normal activities in St. Tropez after fighting a bout of depression, the latest issue of People magazine reports.

"Lately she has not been in good shape," her sister, Mijanou Bardot, a former actress, told the magazine. "I sense that she is disturbed, tormented and unhappy. I know that she was going through a bad period — that of age and an unhappy love."

Miss Bardot, billed as a "sex kitten" in the mid 1950s and '60s, recently broke off a relationship with Allain Bougrain-duBourgh, 35, a French TV producer. Several newspapers reported she was extremely depressed over the failure of the relationship.

Two newspapers had reported Miss Bardot tried to commit suicide on her 49th birthday Sept. 28, but her lawyer, Giles Dreyfus, denied it.

Her agent, Olga Orstig, said the actress hadn't been feeling to well and had checked into a clinic.

Miss Bardot has resumed regular activities but several of her friends still are concerned about her, People magazine reported in its Oct. 24 issue.

Thomas Noguchi

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Former Los Angeles County Coroner Thomas T. Noguchi already is finding criticism along the trail leading from his as-yet-unpublished book, "Coroner," including a charge that he's just trying to make "a fast buck."

That charge comes from county Board of Supervisors Chairman Mike Antonovich, who calls the book detailing investigations of the deaths of prominent people "ghoulish." And Antonovich has requested a review of Noguchi's work patterns during the 1½ years he was writing "Coroner" to determine whether any county time, personnel or unauthorized materials were used to prepare the manuscript.

Noguchi, demoted to autopsy physician in April 1982, declines to comment on the probe, but his agent, Arthur Pine, says he's certain that the book, co-authored with New York writer Joseph DiMona, was done strictly on Noguchi's own time.

The book deals with the deaths of prominent people, including actresses Natalie Wood, Marilyn Monroe and Sharon Tate, actor William Holden, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, rock star Janis Joplin and comedian John Belushi, won't be published until next month, but excerpts already have been made public.

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (AP) — Admiral Hyman G. Rickover, who retired last year after 64 years of U.S. Navy service, warns that if America is to survive, it must fight against mediocrity.

"A free society can survive only through men and women of integrity," the 83-year-old retiree told the Fort Wayne Jewish Federation's community dinner Saturday night.

"Mediocrity can destroy us, just as surely as perils far more famous," Rickover warned. "In a society that is willing to accept mediocrity, the opportunities for failure are boundless.

"I believe it is the duty of each of us to act as if the fate of the world depended on him," said Rickover, the recipient of 15 military honors, 16 honorary college degrees and 61 citations from various groups, including the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian honor.

WHEELING, W.Va. (AP) — Country music singer Dick Curless, whose hits include "Hard Time Travelin' Man," was in stable condition after being rushed to the hospital for treatment of an abdominal problem.

A spokeswoman at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Pittsburgh on Sunday declined to disclose the exact nature of his illness.

The 51-year-old Curless, whose other hits include "Drag 'Em Off the Interstate and Sock It to 'Em" and "A Tombstone Every Mile," was taken to Wheeling Hospital on Friday night, and from there to Pittsburgh.

Curless had been was scheduled to appear at a ceremony dedicating a bronze star in his honor on a sidewalk outside Wheeling radio station WWVA on Saturday, said station spokeswoman Debby Wieser.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Pat O'Brien, 83, one of the last of the "Irish Mafia" actors who played tough guys and priests, died Saturday in a Santa Monica, Calif., hospital of a heart attack three days after undergoing prostate surgery.

O'Brien appeared in 110 movies over six decades, including his famous role of the Notre Dame football coach in the film, "Knute Rockne, All American," a film that co-starred Ronald Reagan as "The Gipper."

• • •

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Veteran character actor Paul Fix, 81, who began his career in silent films but became known for the role of marshal Micah Torrance in the "Rifleman" television series, died Friday of kidney failure in Santa Monica.

He had appeared in nearly 400 motion pictures and 200 television productions in a career that spanned more than half a century.

Although typed as a heavy for many years, many of his most memorable roles were heroes: the dying businessman whose quiet strength sustains others in "The High and the Mighty," Elizabeth Taylor's aristocratic doctor-father in "Giant."

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — T. Coleman Andrews Sr., 84, a co-founder of the John Birch Society and a former Internal Revenue Service commissioner who ironically crusaded against federal taxes, died Saturday after a long illness.

Andrews, an accountant who ran for president in 1956 on an independent states' rights ticket, championed the causes of the political right. Andrews was credited with saving millions of dollars for federal, state and city governments with tight-fisted reform programs.

O'Brien not too different from roles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Off-screen and on, Pat O'Brien was always the quintessential Irish-American, imbued with a love of family, church, country and rollicking good times in male company.

He played the role with consummate ease through dozens of Warner Bros. movies in the 1930s and 1940s. Often he was the Irish priest, using native wisdom to straighten out the delinquent Dead End Kids or giving last rites to the condemned killer, his boyhood pal, James Cagney.

He could exhort soldiers to battle in "The Fighting 69th" or command the Fighting Irish to "win one for the Gipper" in "Knute Rockne, All-American."

O'Brien's personal life seemed little different from his roles on the screen. He was devoted to his wife Eloise, who sacrificed her own acting career to raise their family. He never swerved from his belief in the Roman Catholic church and American ideals.

He was ever-loyal to his fellow members of the "Irish Mafia" who included Spencer Tracy, James Cagney and Frank McHugh. They met regularly for evenings of booze and story-telling.

The friendship with Cagney dated back more than 50 years, to when both were struggling actors on Broadway. O'Brien once termed his friend "the far-away fella" because of Cagney's sometimes distant moods. They always kept in touch, and they delighted in their 1981 screen reunion in "Ragtime."

O'Brien retained his Irish luck throughout his career. Even his introduction to movies came by chance.

Lee Tracy had created the role of Hildy Johnson in "The Front Page," but Howard Hughes saw the play with Tracy's successor, O'Brien. Hughes hired O'Brien for the 1930 movie version.

Through the 1950s, O'Brien continued to be active in films. When a new generation of stars took over, he moved into television, then returned to the theater, which he loved most.

When I saw him in San Clemente a summer ago, he was playing "On Golden Pond" with Eloise and their daughter, Brigid.

O'Brien was unconcerned that he was playing the role that had won Henry Fonda an Oscar in the movie version.

"I give the role my own interpretation, having done it before the movie was made. You can't stop to worry about comparisons. Other actors besides John Barrymore played Hamlet. Others besides Henry Fonda can play Norman Thayer Jr."

O'Brien exhibited utterly no bitterness that producers weren't calling him for movie jobs.

"Movies made me a rich man," he remarked, "but I've always gotten enjoyment from the stage.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Antidepressant medication isn't risky in exercising

Solomon

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband is one person who you would not expect to be depressed. He is very active physically and can go out and run 10 miles easier than I can take a walk around the block. But he is taking antidepressant medication and I would like to know if all that running is good for him when he's on medication. — Mrs. E.L., Santa Rosa, Calif.

Dear Mrs. L.: The results of one study have shown that antidepressant medication does not increase risks in exercising provided the individual is otherwise in good health to begin with. However, if your husband has not already done so, he should see his physician for a complete checkup. There are exceptions to every rule and it is always advisable for the patient to have an individual evaluatin of his condition and the possible interaction of drugs and exercise.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine started taking estrogen because she says her bones are getting thinner and her doctor told her that estrogen could help her. My doctor told me pretty much the same thing, but he told me to drink more milk. Which is better? — Mrs. Y.G., Tucson, Ariz.

Dear Mrs. G.: There are different opinions about the value of estrogen therapy for osteoporosis (bone loss). Some physicians recommend estrogen after a woman has had her ovaries removed or after natural menopause. Others, however, recommend calcium and vitamin D supplementation before they resort to the use of estrogens.

Some experiments that have been conducted seem to suggest that fluoride is effective in replacing lost bone, but this is debatable. In addition, fluoride's toxicity is high and the drug may cause significant side effects.

If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208.

Coins good for Christmas giving

WASHINGTON (AP) — The letter accompanying the full-color brochure is pure Madison Avenue: "...Avoid the last minute indecision and the holiday crowds."

But the letter comes not from Madison Avenue in New York but from Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington and it is signed by Donna Pope, the director of the U.S. Mint.

The government wants you to buy commemorative Olympic coins for Christmas giving, and its agressive new marketing material is as slick as catalogs from any mail order house, complete with a big red bow printed on the high-gloss envelope.

Under orders from Congress to generate money to support the Olympic Games in Los Angeles and the American team, the U.S. Mint has already sold enough coins to turn over $21 million to the Olympics.

With the advertising campaign, there are hopes of selling many millions more coins this year and next, with profits running to the hundreds of millions more dollars.

The Olympic dollars show a discus thrower and the Olympic symbol on one side and an American eagle on the other. So far, 1.4 million orders have come in.

Carl D'Alessandro, executive assistant to the mint director, said the program has been "moderately successful."

Wife of ex-bureau chief dies

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Funeral services are scheduled Wednesday for Mary Frances Haule Arrowsmith, 71, who died at St. Vincent Hospital after a series of heart attacks, a family spokesman said.

She was the wife of Marvin L. Arrowsmith, former chief of bureau of The Associated Press in Washington, D.C. Mrs. Arrowsmith died Sunday.

Survivors include her husband; a daughter, Kathryn A. Rabiega of Chicago; five sons, Lawrence J. Arrowsmith of Derwood, Md., David F. Arrowsmith of Gaithersburg, Md., John M. Arrowsmith of Atlanta, Ga., Thomas G. Arrowsmith of Falls Church, Va., and Xavierian Brother Robert E. Arrowsmith of Louisville, Ky.

Actor Paul Fix of 'Rifleman' dies

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Veteran character actor Paul Fix, who began his career in silent films but became known for the role of marshal Micah Torrance in the "Rifleman" television series, has died at the age of 81.

Fix died Friday of kidney failure at St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica.

He had appeared in nearly 400 motion pictures and 200 television productions in a career that spanned more than half a century.

Paul Fix Morrison was born March 13, 1902, at Dobbs Ferry, N.Y., lied about his age to enter the Army in World War I, and later told friends he had based his choice of a postwar career on the flip of a coin.

Arriving in Los Angeles in the early 1920s, he began working almost at once.

"I had a face that could be an Indian ... in one scene, and you'd never recognize me playing one of the sheriff's posse or one of the bad guys in the next scene," he said. "So they got double work out of me — for a single paycheck!"

But if movie work occupied his days, the stage kept him busy at night. He was in 20 plays with a movie hopeful named Clark Gable.

Fix appeared in such films as "The First Kiss" with Gary Cooper.

Although typed as a heavy for many years, many of his most memorable roles were heroes: the dying businessman whose quiet strength sustains others in "The High and the Mighty," Elizabeth Taylor's aristocratic doctor-father in "Giant."

THE BETTER HALF

"Let me get this straight . . . you hate Monday mornings and you were trying to make a noose out of dental floss?"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, October 18, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, St. Louis Cardinals slugging star George Hendrick, U.S. Senator Jesse Helms (R-N.C.), and actor George C. Scott share your birthday. Also born on this date: Greek actress-politician Melina Mercouri and tennis great Martina Navratilova. Something you thought to be a lost cause gains new popularity. You reap fresh career and financial gains. Be persistent. Defend your beliefs even in the face of strong opposition. The absence of a satisfying romance in your life reveals a lot about your priorities. Try to get out and socialize more. A parent-child separation comes to an end. Count your blessings!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Others continue to make excuses for you, but it is time you get control of yourself. You are more capable than your recent work reflects. A project's successful completion boosts your confidence.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be more flexible. An employer sees you as the answer to a leadership problem but wants to be sure you are a team player. Mate is highly supportive. Share your concerns.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Timing works in your favor at place of employment. You could be in the right place at the right moment. If so, you will earn big bucks. Learn from your romantic mistakes.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A phone call lifts your spirits. Do not take a college roommate's criticism too seriously. Put your energies into projects that appeal to you. Keeping up with the Joneses is pointless.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not tease a romantic partner too much or you could lose out to a more gracious competitor. Give money but not a job to a family member. The risk is less.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your knowledge of the market and various products puts you in great demand today. Approach someone influential through a mutual friend. A romance gives you hope for the future. Preserve family traditions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Someone erratic has designs on your money. A loved one seems to be out of step. Proceed cautiously until you can find out why. Contact a powerful figure about a pet project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not count on your family or business associates to be supportive of your career decisions. A special course will help you keep abreast of new technological developments.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Influential person will make you a handsome offer today. You could hit the jackpot where finance or romance is concerned. Someone you have admired from afar makes the first move.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your flexibility helps you weather ticklish situations. Technological expertise also gives you a leg up the ladder of success. Register or copyright your ideas to protect them. A personal relationship shows improvement.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Curiosity and imagination are your biggest assets today. Channel your energies toward realistic goals, not fantasies. A romantic encounter is startling! Perhaps you should cool things for a while.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your ideas are right on target. Approach influential people in person. Your enthusiasm is a big plus. Domestic problems respond quickly to a low-key, positive approach. Show more affection.

Grannies, you are never to old to be television stars

LOS ANGELES (AP) — At 94, Merle Earle still gets a thrill when fans recognize her from TV commercials and shows such as "Whiz Kids," "The Tonight Show" and "The Waltons."

"Most of the letters I get are from young boys," she says. "They tell me how beautiful I am. ...I guess they have a grandma complex."

Mrs. Earle is part of a new breed of television grannies, whose late-blooming ranks also include Bartine Zane, 85. Theodocia Goodrich, 79, is an elderly Hollywood neophyte who hopes to get into the talk show circuit.

All three women started acting on television when they were at least 75.

Mrs. Earle and Mrs. Zane entered show biz as widows; Mrs. Goodrich got the TV bug after her divorce. All were prodded by friends with show business connections; all were accepted by the first agents they sought out.

Their TV earnings average about $12,000 a year, a nice supplement to Social Security but hardly in Hollywood's big leagues.

While it's tough for middle-aged women to break into show business, older women "don't have problems getting started because there are so few people in the upper age group doing it," says Dennis Gallegos, a casting director who's "always looking for the new older person."

Older women have an advantage over older men "because women are just so darn cute," says Shelly Schoenberger of Tepper-Gallegos Casting. "You get a lot of grannies, and you don't have grandpas."

As a teen-ager, Mrs. Zane appeared as Buster Keaton's first leading lady. She worked with other greats of the silent screen era, then opened a dressmaking business. When she got married, she quit working for 50 years.

Her recent commercials included one for Boone's Farm wines that required her to learn how to ride a motorcycle.

'Macbeth' to air on PBS

NEW YORK (AP) — To Nicol Williamson, "Macbeth" is no musty classic full of highflown poetry best left to scholars, but a "black, bloodthirsty, completely thrilling adventure tale, rich in images and insights, all of which are quite easily understandable."

So it's no surprise that his performance emphasizes the brutality and psychological deterioration of the title character, sometimes even at the expense of the grandeur and nobility that are also part of Macbeth's nature.

Shakespeare's shortest tragedy opens the sixth season of the complete cycle of his plays produced jointly by the British Broadcasting Corp. and Time-Life Television. It will be broadcast Monday night on public TV in a production that may annoy purists but will hold the interest of most audiences.

"Macbeth" is generally counted among Shakespeare's two or three greatest tragedies, although many critics find more meat in "Hamlet" and "King Lear," because of their greater variety of character and complexity of plot.

But what "Macbeth" may lack in diversity, it makes up in intensity. In a lightning sequence of short scenes, the play traces the title character's moral degeneration as, goaded by the three witches and his wife, he succumbs to his tragic flaw of ambition, murders Duncan the king to gain the throne, and then kills again and again to maintain his power.

In the current production, director Jack Gold does his best to heighten the intensity, shooting most of the soliloquies and conversations in closeup and graphically underscoring the violence. The murder of Macduff's young son is especially harrowing — he is literally tossed through the air onto the outstretched sword of one of Macbeth's thugs.

Williamson, in making Macbeth an introvert, deliberately sacrifices the oratorical qualities of some of Shakespeare's verse in favor of a more personal, at times idiosyncratic, reading. The famous "Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow" speech, for example, begins "And tomorrow" as Williamson delivers it.

"The poetry is there, you can't kill it," the actor said recently. "... But you can't dwell on it as an actor; you have to attend to the meaning. If an actor speaks the meaning of the verse, and if he understands thoroughly what is happening in the scene, the meter will take care of itself."

Jane Lapotaire, who won a Tony award on Broadway as the French singer Edith Piaf a few seasons back, makes a memorable Lady Macbeth.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A9852 ♡Q1063 ◇A72 ♣6
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Dble	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. — Opposite a partner who could make a takeout double, you have a very fine hand — the equivalent of an opening bid. You have a guaranteed eight-card fit in at least one major, but it is not incumbent on you to guess which one. Cue-bid two clubs to ask partner to choose the suit, then raise that major to game. Of course, if partner responds in diamonds, you can then show your spades.

Q.2 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQJ98 ♡83 ◇AKQ ♣Q104
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?

A. — You have a very strong hand which has been improved by a fit in partner's suit. A jump bid to show your strength is appealing, but you can't leap to three spades on a five-card suit, nor four clubs with only three-card support. We suggest you temporize by bidding two diamonds — a new suit by opener after a two-over-one response is forcing. Partner's rebid should leave you perfectly placed to decide on the final contract.

Q.3 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ104 ♡984 ◇K97 ♣A85
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. — If you are looking for game with your balanced 13 points opposite a partner who passed originally, you qualify for an "Optimist of the Year" award. You are in a playable spot and there is no guarantee that you have any better contract. Pass. This might be your last opportunity for a plus score.

Q.4 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠987532 ♡82 ◇AJ3 ♣A6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. — Bury the book on point count. You have a hand with two aces, one of which is in partner's suit. Now that partner has announced a fit for your six-card suit, anything less than four spades is a gross underbid.

Q.5 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠94 ♡63 ◇Q8762 ♣AKQ10
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
4 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. — You have the values for an opening bid facing a partner who has opened and then jumped in support of your suit. In other words, you are in slam territory. Despite your weak trump suit, you should be happy to investigate slam. Cue-bid five clubs. If partner simply returns to five diamonds, you can then bow out of the auction gracefully.

Q.6 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q83 ♡95 ◇AQ6 ♣AJ762
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. — You have the values for game and an almost sure eight-card fit in spades. Nevertheless, we would suggest a jump to three no trump. The spade suit should provide a source of tricks and your minor-suit tenaces could be more valuable at no trump with the lead coming up to your hand.

Tanaka's impact

On the face of it, the conviction on bribery charges of former Japanese Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka should hardly matter much to Americans. After all, Mr. Tanaka resigned the prime ministership nine years ago, although he remains a powerful member of the Japanese parliament.

His current disgrace for taking up to $2 million in bribes from the Lockheed Corp. a decade ago should not unseat Japan's ruling Liberal Democratic Party or discredit its support for a close partnership with the United States.

And yet, Mr. Tanaka's conviction is more than just the biggest political story of the year in Japan. It could be the cause of political turmoil that may well weaken the government of Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone. Mr. Nakasone, Japan's most overtly pro-American leader in more than 20 years, is almost a protege of Kakuei Tanaka. Whatever diminishes Mr. Tanaka's immense power in the Diet (Japan's parliament) diminishes as well his ability to support Mr. Nakasone.

That is important because Yasuhiro Nakasone has taken some controversial positions in an effort to strengthen Tokyo's ties with Washington. Heeding Washington's appeals for higher defense spending and lower trade barriers are not especially popular moves in Japan. But Prime Minister Nakasone has pushed through such policies with the help of the largest single voting bloc in the Diet — the 119 Liberal Democratic Party members who follow Mr. Tanaka's lead.

After his conviction, Kakuei Tanaka once again proclaimed his innocence and vowed to fight on in the courts until he wins. The appeal process could take years. In the meantime, Mr. Tanaka may be able to resist calls for his resignation from the Diet. He may also be successful in delaying imposition of the four-year jail sentence meted out to him this week.

But even if Mr. Tanaka manages all this, he still cannot hope to retain the power he wields today. And if he is forced to resign, or if he goes to jail, his bloc in the Diet will likely melt away. To Prime Minister Nakasone, and to American policymakers in Washington, the fall of Mr. Tanaka could have decidedly unpleasant repercussions.

A great American

It was somehow typical of Dr. Barbara McClintock that when she was informed the press wanted to see her in connection with her winning the 1983 Nobel Prize for medicine, her answer was: "I will do what I have to do."

Doing what she felt she had to do has been a precept that this totally dedicated 81-year-old scientist has followed all her life. Accepting acclaim as only the seventh woman laureat in science in the 82-year history of the Nobel Prize was, for this modest lady with the impish countenance, just another day in a remarkable career.

Dr. McClintock could have been forgiven a surge of triumph on being announced as a Nobel winner. She exhibited none of this, however, just as she showed no rancor when her discovery of mobile genetic elements in plant life — the feat for which she is at last being rewarded — was ignored by the rest of the scientific community as incomprehensible and heretical nearly 40 years ago.

This diminutive "loner" in the world of science still follows a man-killing schedule of laboratory work, dawn to dusk, seven days a week, because, she explains, the genes and chromosomes she charts obsess and become part of one.

And as for the rewards: "You don't need the public recognition. You just need the respect of your colleagues."

Dr. McClintock now has that, in full measure, along with the admiration and gratitude of all Americans for the honor she has brought their country.

Another View:

Filipino presumption

"The eyes of the world are on us," Felimon L. Fernandez said in Manila last Monday in resigning — with all other members — from the commission investigating the assassination on Aug. 21 of Benigno Aquino Jr., "to see if the Filipino people are capable of self criticism ... To see whether the Filipino people are capable of asserting the supremacy of the law."

The ugly truth is that in the Philippines today the law is Ferdinand E. Marcos. The mass resignation — an act of great courage — re-emphasizes that in the Philippines supremacy belongs to one force alone: not the law, not truth, but President Marcos.

To his credit, President Reagan canceled his scheduled trip to the Philippines. Whatever his diplomatically stated reasons, for him to have carried through with it would have been de facto endorsement by Mr. Reagan and thus the government of the United States of the regime of Marcos — its cynicism, its brutality, its arrogance, its contempt for universal principles of law and for the truth.

Now, dramatically re-emphasized by the resignation of the commission — composed of Filipino political and judicial figures largely sympathetic to Marcos — the world and the U.S. government face a moral and political challenge.

Unless a convincing determination of the facts of the Aquino assassination is put before the world — and the Filipino government's suppression or ignoring of massive elements of potent evidence, including videotapes and witnesses' potential testimony, does not offer much hope of that — the presumption must be clear: That the assassination was planned and carried out under the single supreme power today in the Philippines. That Marcos is responsible.

And, absent persuasive, objective evidence to the contrary, for any government or individual — Filipino or otherwise — to fail to recognize and to act on that presumption would be to endorse the use of cold homicide and colder hypocrisy for political convenience.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Thatcher 'blackmail' irked Reagan

WASHINGTON — Margaret Thatcher tried a bit of diplomatic blackmail on President Reagan during her recent visit to Washington. It was the best-kept secret of a supposedly chummy confab.

Jack Anderson

Thatcher's little power play was confided to my associate Dale Van Atta by sources familiar with the incident. They said she succeeded only in getting Reagan's Irish dander up. Here's the story:

The British occupy a strategic, little piece of earth that straddles the smuggling routes into southern Mexico. It's called Belize, and it's tucked under Mexico's big toe.

The toe is heavily infected with Marxist revolutionaries who are biding their time until Mexico becomes ripe for revolution. Given the raging inflation and rampant corruption that afflicts Mexico, this could be all too soon.

However determined President Reagan may be to stop a Marxist takeover in El Salvador, he is 10 times more concerned about Mexico. He does not want the lurking revolutionaries, therefore, to get arms from Cuba. Happily, the most convenient smuggling routes through Belize have been effectively blocked by the British.

Thatcher was aware of all this as she enplaned for Washington. But she also had a worry of her own: She feared that Argentina still has designs on the Falkland Islands. So she tried to persuade Reagan not to resume sales of U.S. arms to the Argentines, whose arsenal was badly depleted by their disastrous attempt to seize the Falklands last year.

So under Thatcher's tutelage, British officials coyly informed their U.S. hosts that Britain was "willing to keep troops in Belize" as long as the arms embargo on Argentina stayed in effect. The implication was that the British might pull out if Thatcher didn't get her way.

White House sources reported that the president was infuriated by this "obvious blackmail."

Though the British garrison in Belize is small, it has been essential in limiting the flow of Cuban arms through Belize to the Marxist rebels in the Mexican toe. "As long as the British stay in Belize, they and the United States will be able to prevent large shipments of arms from Cuba reaching the rebels in Mexico," an intelligence source explained.

There's also another reason Reagan wants the British troops to stay: Their presence will discourage the neighboring Guatemalans from invading Belize, which they claim belongs to them.

A top secret CIA report warns that Guatemala would invade shortly after the British pulled out. The result would be carnage on an appalling scale. Guatemala's rulers are notoriously anti-black, and a large percentage of Belize's 143,000 inhabitants is either black, creole or Garifuna, a black-Indian mixture.

Reagan doesn't want to risk the slaughter of the black population. But he also doesn't want to offend Guatemala, whose good will is essential to his efforts to subdue the Marxist revolution in Central America.

It was this situation that Thatcher tried to exploit. The attempt failed, but it left a sour taste. As one source explained, the United States sent the British millions of dollars worth of arms during the Falklands war and had to redeploy NATO forces to cover the loss of British ships.

"And now they threaten to pull out of Belize, which would risk another war," the source said. "It's damned ungrateful."

BLUNDER OF THE WEEK: The Reagan administration doesn't trust the press with its secrets. But sometimes the government's own guardians of classified material are careless.

One slip-up was discovered recently by an enterprising West German reporter, Uwe Zimmer of Stern magazine, as he was combing through the publicly released transcript of a spring hearing by the House Military Installations and Facilities subcommittee.

Because of anti-nuclear fervor in West Germany, the Bonn government has asked the United States to keep secret the site of the base where new ground-launched cruise missiles — GLCMs — will be delivered in December. The three other European allies have publicly announced where their GLCMs will be put.

So the hearing transcript was supposed to delete any reference to Germany, referring only to "the fourth country." But on page 609 of the transcript, the fourth country is not only referred to as "FRG" (Federal Republic of Germany), but it is stated that "detailed design work for the (GLCM) operations facilities at Wueschheim ... has started."

• • •

POLYGRAPH PUZZLE: The administration seems determined to ferret out leakers — or intimidate potential leakers — by giving polygraph tests to more than 4 million government employees who have access to classified information.

In addition to the Orwellian implications, there's serious doubt that the admittedly imperfect lie detectors would do the expected job. The proposal has been bitterly opposed by high officials in the Pentagon, which generally is the most gung-ho for the project.

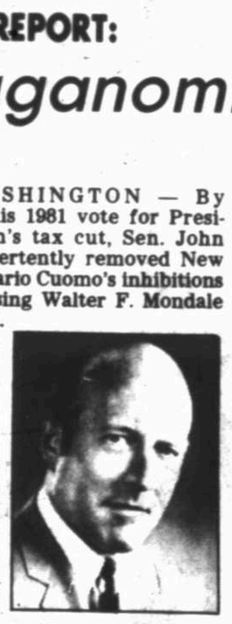

A still-secret review prepared for Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Tex., by the Office of Technology Assessment has found little evidence that polygraphs would be useful for plugging leaks. One point raised was that the Pentagon might become too dependent on the polygraphs, forgetting that trained spies can be taught to beat the machines. This leaves only Richard Nixon's justification: "I don't know how accurate they are, but I do know they scare the hell out of people."

INSIDE REPORT:

Reaganomics support costs Glenn

WASHINGTON — By defending his 1981 vote for President Reagan's tax cut, Sen. John Glenn inadvertently removed New York Gov. Mario Cuomo's inhibitions about endorsing Walter F. Mondale for president.

Rowland Evans

In the opinion of close associates, Cuomo had backed away from Mondale following the former vice president's lackluster performance in the New York City presidential debate Oct. 6. But the governor, an unreconstructed supporter of Jimmy Carter, was offended when Glenn counterattacked against Mondale by trashing Carter administration economic policy. "It's one thing to have voted for Reaganomics," Cuomo told a friend, "but it's another to defend it."

Robert Novak

A footnote: The Glenn camp hoped until the last minute that Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan would endorse Glenn on grounds of common national security policy. But New York's Democratic senator had no intention of threatening the state's party unity by breaking with Cuomo.

TEAMSTER LOCKOUT

White House counsel Fred Fielding has finally imposed his will on President Reagan's political aides in getting them to stay away from Teamsters President Jackie Presser.

Ed Rollins, chairman of Reagan's re-election committee, has led a fight against Fielding's effort to lock Presser out of the Reagan White House. But Fielding recently informed such political advisers that it is only a matter of time before Presser is indicted by a federal grand jury and that anybody remotely connected with the president should have nothing do with the Teamsters chief.

Rollins and other political aides have reluctantly succumbed to Fielding's edict. But the locking of the White House door against Presser confirms predictions inside the Democratic-dominated labor movement that Republicans would turn their backs on the labor leader most loyal to Reagan.

KEMP IS READY

Rep. Jack Kemp's closest associates are convinced that if President Reagan shocks the world by deciding not to run, the upstate New York congressman would be on the first plane to New Hamsphire to fight for the 1984 Republican presidential nomination.

Sens. Howard Baker and Robert Dole have made clear they would challenge Vice President George Bush for the nomination should Reagan not run. There has been doubt whether Kemp, who has passed up several earlier chances at higher office, would be the conservative challenger. However, he has informed friends that there is no doubt whatever he would make the race.

A footnote: Republican political operatives who travel the country believe that if indeed Reagan does not run Bush has an immense head start whether or not he receives Reagan's blessing. Bush has been far more active at the party's grass roots than Kemp, Baker or Dole.

PENTAGON FEUDING

The heat from the hot Pentagon feud between Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Thayer and Navy Secretary John Lehman is burning Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger more than either of his battling underlings.

In siding with Thayer against Lehman's struggle to increase naval spending, Weinberger has incurred the wrath of New York's Democratic Rep. Joe Addabbo, chairman of the House Defense Appropriations Subcommittee. Addabbo backs Lehman's demand to continue the A-6 Navy fighter plane.

Although Addabbo normally is parsimonious with defense dollars, the A-6 is built by Grumman, whose plants on Long Island employ his constituents. Addabbo's commitment to the A-6, and therefore to Lehman, is strong. Weinberger's abrupt command to Lehman to follow Thayer's orders and kill the A-6 is turning the chairman against Weinberger on other issues across the board.

DOUBLE GOP BOOST

The appointment of former governor Dan Evans to fill the Senate vacancy from Washington state caused by the death of Democrat Henry M. Jackson may give the Republicans not just one but two seats in the 1984 battle for control of the Senate.

Besides being an odds-on favorite to win next month's special election, Evans may have succeeded in talking Sen. Mark Hatfield of Oregon into seeking another term. Hatfield had seriously considered quitting, opening the way for a possible Democratic pickup. But Hatfield and Evans became close friends in the mid-1960s as liberal Republican governors, and the chance to serve with his old friend probably will keep Hatfield in the Senate.

A footnote: Pleas by Senate GOP campaign managers for ex-governor Arch Moore to run for the Senate in West Virginia have encountered trouble with the state's party leaders who want him to seek the governorship instead. Republican polls show Moore ahead of Democratic governor Jay Rockefeller in the race for the Senate seat of retiring Democrat Jennings Randolph.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak write for Field Newspaper Syndicate.

CHARLEY REESE

Man's acts determine his future

When the world does not seem to make sense, which is frequently, it is time to remind ourselves of a few axioms.

Charley Reese

1. Except for possibly some subatomic particles, everything in the world operates on a cause and effect basis.

2. Nothing important happens by accident. Exceptions would be rare.

3. There are no mysterious, inanimate forces which cause such things as inflation or deflation, deficits or surpluses. These things are caused by specific decisions made by specific human beings sitting in specific positions of institutional power.

4. There are no such things as "history," "historical forces," "fate," or "destiny," which propel nations, against their will, in one direction or another. Again, the direction a nation travels is in effect caused by specific decisions made by specific human beings. If different decisions are made, the effects will be different.

In short, the world is rational, understandable, and manageable. When it seems not to be, it is because we either have not thought it through or we lack all of the information necessary to understand what information we do have. In other words, the fact that we may be missing some pieces of a puzzle does not mean there are no pieces or that there is no picture.

Certain people, however, for their own selfish reasons want you to think the world is incomprehensible. In some cases, it is because they are the human beings who made the wrong decisions and they don't want you to hold them accountable for their dumb mistakes. In other instances, people want power over your life and so they try to convince you that the world is frightening and beyond your ability to understand so that in your fear, you will turn to them for the answers.

Do not fall for these rotten tricks.

We are rational human beings living in a rational, predictable universe. God gave us a brain as our principal means of physical survival. He certainly intends us to use it to its maximum capacity.

There are no problems which we cannot understand and solve. That is not to say all of them are easily understandable or easily solved. That's why life is never boring.

I am also not saying that there are no limits within which we as humans are forced to operate. There is no black magic trying to trip us up, but there is also no white magic by which we break the laws of Nature or change the reality of our universe. The law of gravity exists; we can learn to understand it and to work with it, but it is beyond our capacity to repeal it.

There is no worse crime against a child than to deprive that child of the data and the methodology necessary to use his or her brain effectively. Unfortunately, many of our educational institutions have become in fact anti-educational institutions and the sooner we face this truth, the sooner we will begin the task of regaining our preeminence in the world.

The North American continent was rich in only two resources: human minds and the freedom to use them. The only genuine crises we face today are those of a weak education system and an erosion of freedom. With trained minds and the freedom to use them, we can do anything; without those two things, we will simply decline and perish.

If we allow our nation to retreat into the superstition and ignorance of the Dark Age, we will live like the people of the Dark Age — incredibly impoverished and oppressed by brutish war lords.

Whether the future is bleak or bright is up to us. We have everything we need. We have only to use it.

Charley Reese writes for Sun Belt Syndicate.

Thatcher names new trade secretary

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has named another Conservative hardliner to replace Cecil Parkinson, who resigned as trade secretary after his pregnant ex-lover detailed their affair in a newspaper statement.

Mrs. Thatcher on Sunday named Employment Secretary Norman Tebbit, 52, as Parkinson's successor and appointed another Tory right-winger, Transport Secretary Tom King, 50, as Tebbit's replacement. The financial secretary in the Treasury, Nicholas Ridley, was promoted to the 21-member Cabinet to succeed King.

Observers said the changes maintained the right-wing's dominance of the Cabinet.

The moves were announced by Mrs. Thatcher's Downing Street office after a weekend of pondering her Cabinet line-up following the resignation of Parkinson on Friday.

Parkinson, 52, was one of Mrs. Thatcher's closest aides and masterminded her re-election victory in June. She praised his work in the government during a keynote speech delivered at the Conservative party's annual convention a few hours after he stepped down.

His ex-lover, Sara Keays, 36, said in a statement appearing on the front page of the Times of London's Friday editions that Parkinson had twice asked to marry her and reneged on his promises.

U.S. not ready for acid-rain accord

HALIFAX, Nova Scotia (AP) — Canada is pressing the United States to fight against acid raid, but U.S. officials say it is too soon to agree on a strategy because the issue is politically divisive.

"We are ready to move, we are anxious to move, we have a plan," Environment Minister Charles L. Caccia told reporters Sunday after a meeting with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, U.S. Environmental Protection Administration chief William P. Ruckelshaus and Canadian Foreign Minister Allan J. MacEachen.

"We're urging our American friends and Mr. Ruckelshaus to take to Washington the impressions he has gotten today of the growing and intense desire to come to grips with the acid rain issue and to resolve it once and for all," Caccia said.

Ruckelshaus, speaking at the same news conference, said EPA proposals on acid rain are being reviewed by a Cabinet council in an effort to settle on a recommendation for President Reagan. He said he didn't know when a recommendation would be made.

"It is a very controversial issue in our country" with the "potential for dividing the country along sectional lines," Ruckelshaus said. Acid rain damage to lakes and forests is concentrated in the Northeast and in Canada, while a clean-up campaign would be waged mostly in industrial sectors of the Midwest.

Ruckleshaus said some proposals for fighting acid rain could cause "social disruption," citing a possible 150,000 jobs lost in the coal industry if high-sulfur coal is abandoned.

Canada has proposed a 50 percent reduction in emissions of sulfur dioxide, which is carried long distances in the atmosphere and converted to sulfuric acid before falling to earth in rain, snow or particles.

The EPA administrator displayed a ski cap with the slogan, "Stop Acid Snow, Eh?" given to him by Canadian officials, but declined to put it on for photographers.

"I'll try it on as soon as I come back with a firm position," he said.

The meeting between Shultz and MacEachen, which concludes today, is a regular quarterly review of bilateral and world issues. The environmental chiefs from both governments were invited to join Sunday's session to focus attention on acid rain and other environmental issues.

Shultz and MacEachen signed an agreement limiting phosphorus pollution in the Great Lakes, especially runoff from city streets and fertilized farmland.

Bush visits Jamaica

MONTEGO BAY, Jamaica (AP) — Vice President George Bush will lay wreaths today at a monument to Jamaica's national heroes, among them a pioneering black nationalist who left the United States in disgrace 56 years ago.

Bush arrived at this north-coast city Sunday for a three-day visit and was scheduled to fly today to the capital, Kingston, where he will help observe this Caribbean island's Heritage Week.

Among the Jamaicans being honored is Marcus Garvey, a proponent of black nationalism whose "Back to Africa" movement drew millions of followers in the 1920s. The Jamaican-born Garvey was convicted of mail fraud in 1925 in connection with funds intended to establish a black-owned steamship company, the Black Star Line, and was deported two years later.

Prime Minister Edward Seaga, at the dedication of a statue of Sam Sharpe, a Jamaican slave hanged after an 1832 rebellion, called for a full presidential pardon of Garvey.

"The judicial records of the United States show that Marcus Garvey was convicted during the course of a campaign of persecution against him which caused him to leave America with a broken heart and a criminal record," Seaga said.

"It cannot befit the memory of this great man, whom the world acknowledges as the father of black nationalism, that the record of his life continues to be tainted with this stain of dishonor," Seaga told Bush.

"It would give immense joy to Jamaicans and millions of others in the Caribbean, Africa and your own country, among others, Mr. Vice President, if the president of the United States found it possible to grant full pardon to Marcus Garvey, wiping the slate of his memory clean and clear for posterity and enhancing the consciousness, pride and dignity of black people throughout the world," Seaga added.

Earlier, Bush roused the nearly 10,000 people at the public square here with a fist-pounding finish to his speech in honor of Sharpe.

"I think of Sam Sharpe as a hero like many in my country, including Nat Turner, Harriet Tubman and, in our own day, Martin Luther King," Bush told the crowd.

After delivering his prepared speech, he drew cheers when he pounded the podium and shouted: "Long live the United States, long live Jamaica, long live freedom, freedom, freedom."

As the crowd cheered, a grinning Bush flashed thumbs-up and V-for-victory signs.

Bush's visit is widely seen here as a boost to Seaga, a Reagan administration ally whose popularity has slipped recently under his austere economic policy. Seaga, elected in 1980 after eight years of leftist government, helped plan President Reagan's recently signed Caribbean Basin Initiative.

Know what you're getting in a used car

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Used-car buyer beware!

The Federal Trade Commission — which has been trying unsuccesfully for a decade to regulate the used-car business — has launched a campaign to help consumers protect themselves when they buy used cars.

The FTC is urging people to make sure they know exactly what they are getting — and what they aren't — with a used car. It is recommending inspections by independent mechanics. And it has prepared a checklist of 14 possible problem areas.

Knowing what you are getting is important because many used cars as sold "as is." Once you complete the deal and drive off the lot, you're stuck. (There are a few states that ban "as is" sales, but the dealer's obligation is still very limited.)

Ask about a warranty with any car you consider and find out what it covers. Don't accept the dealer's spoken promise. If it's not in writing, it doesn't count.

If possible, take the car to an independent mechanic for an inspection. If the dealer won't let you take the car away — for insurance reasons, for example — find out if you can have a mechanic come to the lot.

There are several key systems to check for a trouble. Here's what you or your mechanic should look for:

—Frame and body. Is the frame straight and solid?

—Engine. Is there excessive oil leakage? Are the belts in place? Is the block or head cracked? Is the exhaust normal?

—Transmission and drive shaft. Is the transmission fluid level proper and seepage normal? Is the transmission solid? Is the drive shaft in good shape?

—Differential. Does the differential operate quietly without excessive seepage? Is it solid?

—Cooling system. Does the water pump function properly? Is there any leakage, including from the radiator?

—Electrical system. Does the battery leak? Do the alternator, battery, generator and starter work properly?

—Fuel system. Is there any visible leak?

—Accessories. Do gauges and warning devices work? Do the air conditioner, heater and defroster work?

—Brake system. Do the warning lights work? Is the brake pedal firm under pressure? Does the car stop in a straight line? Are the hoses, drum and lining sound? Are structural and mechanical parts solid?

'The Right Stuff' arrives in Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fusing the hoopla of Hollywood with the politics of the Potomac, "The Right Stuff" blazed across the screen at the Kennedy Center, the making of a movie promoted by some as the making of a president.

But above, sometimes literally above, all the hype for the motion picture premiere Sunday were the real test pilots and astronauts and thundering planes that formed the real stuff of America's space program, the right stuff of Hollywood's latest hoped-for blockbuster.

Chuck Yeager, the sometimes testy pioneer test pilot, set the stage for promotions to come, leading a midday air show featuring squadrons of World War II-vintage fighter planes flying above the Potomac River.

Yeager and the astronauts who in later years followed his lead into space then joined with the actors who portrayed them and countless politicians for the movie itself. John Glenn, the astronaut who became a senator and is now a Democratic presidential candidate, wasn't there.

But did the movie itself have The Right Stuff?

Walter Cronkite, the newsman who covered the space program from the beginning, was at the premiere, but sounded afterwards like he wished he hadn't been.

After the three-hour, $20 million film, Cronkite told a television interviewer:

"I wasn't all that entertained by it. I think that it unfortunately savaged the press...It savaged the bureaucracy, it savaged Lyndon Johnson and I think it savaged the astronauts by making them appear to be inmates of an animal house."

AP Laserphoto

Former astronaut Chuch Yeager arrives at the Kennedy Center in Washington Sunday evening for the premiere of the movie "The Right Stuff."

He apparently referred to film depictions of overzealous reporters, a publicity-hungry vice president and off-the-launch pad antics of astronauts themselves.

Earlier, Cronkite, along with actors Charlton Heston and Donald Sutherland, had officiated at the showing and said, "there was no greater thrill...than to cover the first flight of an American to orbit the Earth. There was great trepidation, a sense of awe, and finally the excitement when they achieved success."

The movie's flattering portrait of Glenn, as a God-fearing, steel-willed patriot has led politicians to speculate that the senator from Ohio and Democratic presidential candidate could garner a political boost comparable to a Mercury liftoff if the film does well at the box office.

Glenn, who has not commented on the film publicly, was busy campaigning in California. White House Chief of Staff James Baker didn't attend either, but he used an appearance CBS' "Face the Nation" earlier in the day to say, "I can't believe the voters are going to be basing their voting decision on a movie."

"I hope they like him," commented actor Ed Harris, who portrays Glenn.

The event brought together the film's actors and their real-life counterparts. All the principal actors in the film attended, and four of the seven original Mercury astronauts — Scott Carpenter, Gordon Cooper, Walter Shirra and Donald Slayton — were present.

Cooper said after an earlier screening that there were some technical inaccuracies, and "there is some literary license. But it's a very good movie, and I feel it accurately captures the spirit of those exciting times and of the lives and trials of the test pilots, the early astronauts and their wives."

As they entered the Kennedy Center, the astronauts, actors and other VIPs were greeted by the Air Force Honor Guard and hosts from the American Film Institute attired in the familiar jump suits worn by space technicians.

Similar attire was suggested for guests, but pin-stripes predominated. Zbigniew Brzezinski, the former national security adviser, said he wished he had worn his "aviation suit."

Earlier in the day, Yeager, the man who broke the sound barrier and whose daring in the skies exemplified "The Right Stuff," flew at the head of a set of three P-51s skimming 700 feet above the city. Close behind were formations of P-47s, T-6s, and other classic propeller-driven war planes.

"What a beautiful day," Yeager said.

Astronauts: Film made up of 'the right stuff'

WASHINGTON (AP) — There is a scene in "The Right Stuff" when astronaut Gus Grissom is struggling in his Mercury capsule as it bobs in the Atlantic at the end of America's second man-in-space flight. He seems on the verge of panic as he tries to release his restraints.

Suddenly, with a recovery helicopter overhead, the capsule hatch blows out and the craft begins filling with water. Grissom, played by actor Fred Ward, dives through the opening and almost drowns before being lifted to safety. The capsule sinks.

NASA believes he is responsible for losing the capsule and its vital data. There is no ticker tape parade, no visit to the White House.

One of Grissom's fellow Mercury astronauts, Gordon Cooper, says the movie scene is wrong. Grissom died in 1967 with two other astronauts when an Apollo spacecraft burst into flames during a launch pad test.

"I take exception to the treatment of Gus in the movie — and the way the incident was handled by NASA at the time," Cooper said about the film version of Tom Wolfe's epic book about test pilots and America's seven original astronauts — those who had the "right stuff" to climb above the crowd.

"The public always had the feeling that Gus screwed up," Cooper said. "I blame that on poor communications and public relations by NASA when it was determined much later that the hatch blew because of a mechanical malfunction. Gus always resented that, too."

Cooper was one of two main characters in the film who saw an advance screening. The other was Chuck Yeager, the legendary Air Force test pilot who Tom Wolfe said was at the top of the ziggurat, the "extraordinarily high and steep" pyramid that can be scaled only by those with the right stuff.

Senate set to pass national holiday for King

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is set to pass a national holiday honoring Nobel laureate Martin Luther King Jr., but not before conservative Republican Jesse Helms makes one final attempt to block the bill.

While Helms is planning to battle the proposed holiday on the Senate floor and in a federal courtroom, leaders of both parties say when the roll is called Wednesday, approval will be overwhelming.

King's widow, Coretta, who waited 15 years for the moment, plans to attend the Senate session. Similar bills have been introduced each year since the civil rights leader was assassinated on a Memphis, Tenn., hotel balcony April 4, 1968, but until this year, the votes were missing.

The legislation, which breezed through the House 338-90 on Aug. 2, would set the holiday observance for the third Monday in January to honor King's Jan. 15 birthday. The holiday would begin in 1986.

White House spokesmen said President Reagan, who once opposed another paid holiday for federal workers, now is committed to signing the first bill honoring the achievements of a black American with a national holiday.

Congress returns today from a week-long Columbus Day recess.

Helms filibustered against the bill two weeks ago, but dropped the stalling tactics and agreed to a schedule proposed by Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn.

The North Carolina senator will try Tuesday to send the bill to the Judiciary Committee. If that move fails, as expected, Helms and others are likely to introduce amendments that sponsors will oppose.

The proposals could include replacing the King holiday with a "civil rights" day, making Lincoln's birthday a national holiday or celebrating King's birthday on a Sunday.

At the same time, Helms' lawyers have a date in U.S. District Court on Tuesday, where they'll try to convince a judge to unseal tapes and transcripts that came from the FBI's electronic surveillance of King.

Helms said on the Senate floor that King advocated "action-oriented Marxism" and associated with communists. The documents were sealed by U.S. District Judge John Lewis Smith in 1977 for 50 years, but Helms contended he and other senators need the information to cast an informed vote.

In the House this week, President Reagan's Central America policies face another test with a vote on efforts to cut off all covert aid to anti-communist rebels in Nicaragua.

The vote will measure whether attitudes toward U.S. support for opponents of the Sandinista government in Nicaragua have changed since Korean Air Lines Flight 007 was shot down by the Soviet Union last month.

James Lewis

Man to face trial in Tylenol case

CHICAGO (AP) — Publicity about the "horrible details" of seven deaths from cyanide-spiked Tylenol will make it hard to find unbiased jurors for James Lewis's attempted extortion trial starting today, his lawyer says.

Lewis, 37, is accused in a federal indictment of writing a letter demanding $1 million from Johnson & Johnson, parent company of the firm that makes the pain reliever, to "stop the killing."

Police arrested him in a New York City library in December 1982, about two months after seven Chicago-area people died after taking cyanide-tainted capsules of Extra-Strength Tylenol.

No one has been charged in the deaths. But Lewis's arrest was the most widely publicized of three made during the investigation.

Lewis' name also made headlines in July, when he was sentenced to 10 years in prison for mail fraud in an unrelated case in Kansas City, Mo.

Defense lawyer Michael Monico said he would seek today to delay the Chicago trial because of the government's request Friday for more handwriting samples. He predicted jury selection would be difficult because of Lewis' notoriety.

"The concern is (that) because of all the pretrial publicity during the (Tylenol) investigation and all of the attention focused on Mr. Lewis...people just have a general recollection of his involvement in the case," Monico said.

"Since no other person has been as strongly implicated in the case...the fear is people will associate Mr. Lewis with the investigation and all of the horrible details associated with it," according to Monico.

Orioles take care of business, win Series

Murray homers pace 5-0 clincher

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA — Business is booming at the firm of Baltimore Orioles Inc. Their field is baseball, and they are the champions.

Sunday's 5-0 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies, wrapping up Baltimore's third World Series championship, was a victory for an organization-oriented team that doesn't rely on any one person, be he manager or player.

It ushered in a new era as first-year Manager Joe Altobelli completed his ascension to the throne vacated by Earl Weaver, who had guided the team to its last Series championship in 1970.

And it was company men who did it.

Men like Most Valuable Player Rick Dempsey, who homered and doubled and directed Baltimore's overwhelming pitching from his catcher's crouch.

Men like Eddie Murray, who broke a miserable slump with two home runs in the deciding game Sunday, and Scott McGregor, whose five-hit shutout capped a masterful postseason pitching performance by the entire Orioles staff.

"We proved what we've been saying all along," Murray said. "We have a ballclub that isn't made up of just two ballplayers."

McGregor, who led a staff that gave up just 10 earned runs and compiled a 1.11 ERA in nine postseason games, echoed the company line.

"We proved that you have to have 25 guys to win a championship," McGregor said. "You can't do it with just one or two stars."

Dempsey, who set a record for a five-game series with five extra-base hits, four doubles and a homer, was the leader, at the heart of nearly every Baltimore scoring chance.

"I've been here for 11 years and I've never been this hot," said Dempsey, who had only four homers and 32 RBI in the regular season. "I don't think anyone ever thought of my hitting a home run today or any other day in the World Series."

And he was enjoying it.

In a jubilant Orioles locker room, Dempsey took a congratulatory telephone call from President Reagan.

"Thany you, sir. You can tell the Russians we're having an awfully good time over here playing baseball," Dempsey said.

For Altobelli, getting the job at Baltimore was a homecoming of sorts, since he spent 14 years in the Orioles organization. It also was a supreme test of his ability to manage without the designated hitter, which is used in the American League but only allowed in even-numbered years in the World Series.

Altobelli said he believed that comparisons with Weaver would never end, but it really didn't matter. You see, Altobelli is a company man, too.

Weaver, Altobelli said, "really set the tone of the club. When I came in here it wasn't the type of job where I had to take over and turn the club around. I just wanted to keep it pointed in the same direction, and fortunately I did."

Altobelli continued Weaver's platoon system, using six outfielders and making the quick, complicated changes without a hitch, and guided the Orioles to a comeback matched by only three other Series winners — sweeping four games after losing the first.

He had used a Series-record four consecutive pinch-hitters as well as a pinch-runner in Saturday's fourth game. "I was in awe of the man," said Dempsey of his manger.

"Earl was a tremendous winner and now Joe is," added Dempsey, who finished with a .385 batting average, two RBI and four runs scored. "Joe is intelligent enough to know that he didn't have to yell at us or kick us."

Altobelli managed for three seasons at San Francisco in the National League, and the absence of the DH in the World Series didn't seem to bother him.

"He put the right nine on the field every day," Murray said. "I can't say enough about him. He stepped in and he did the job."

Murray, too, finally did the job after struggling with just two hits in his first 16 series at-bats. Before that, it was the hitting of Dempsey and others and the magnificent pitching that carried the Orioles.

"It was a battle of the little guys," Dempsey said. "We came through and took the pressure off of Eddie, and he came through today."

The World Series' ring was the first for the Orioles since 1970 and the first for Edwin Bennett Williams, who purchased a controlling share of the club in November 1979.

"I'm so proud of this band of brothers called the Orioles," Williams said. "They came back all year, overcame adversity and showed their character. This is the happiest moment in my life in sports."

One month before Williams bought the club, the Orioles also had a chance to win. They led the Pittsburgh Pirates 3-1 but lost the next three and the Series.

There were no such bad fortunes this year. They lost Game One and then won four in a row, the final three on the road, at Veterans Stadium, where the Phillies had compiled baseball's best home record during the season.

It was not a new experience for the Orioles, since they clinched the AL East on Sept. 25 in Milwaukee and won the AL playoffs by winning two in a row at Chicago. It was not coincidence; the Orioles had the best road record in the AL this year, 48-33.

"We did what we've been doing all year," Murray said, "winning on the road. You've got to win on the road to do it and we did it."

There were few bright spots in this series for the Phillies. John Denny, who pitched 7 2-3 innings to win Game One, was one of them. Pete Rose, although angered at being benched in Game Three, was another, getting two hits Sunday to give him five for the series and providing what little spark the team had.

Rose was one of the Phillies' "Wheeze Kids," along with Joe Morgan and Tony Perez. At 42, Rose finished his contract this season, and he may have played his final game for the Phillies Sunday.

"It's been fun at times, frustrating at times, depressing at times," Rose said. "But it was OK for us because only two of 26 teams get to the World Series. We were one of them. We just lost."

On this night, McGregor, who had lost three straight postseason games dating to Game Seven of the 1979 Series, was the quintenessential Orioles pitcher, a member of a staff that turned in a postseason ERA of 1.11 — 10 earned runs in nine games.

Never overpowering, the crafty left-hander was a 2-1 loser in Baltimore's opening games of both the American League playoffs and the Series, compiling a postseason ERA of 1.84.

He had five quick runs in support Sunday, and that was more than enough.

Murray roared out of his slump with a vengeance. He hit a 2-2 pitch from rookie right-hander Charles Hudson, who lost for the second time in the Series, into the right-field seats to start the second inning for the first of his three hits in the game.

Dempsey, who drove in the winning run with a double in Game Two and started the winning rally with another double in Game Three, led off the third inning with a homer to left. He hit a 1-0 pitch from Hudson, who had lasted only 4 1-3 innings in Game Two and went just four Sunday.

To that point, there had been nine home runs in the series, five by Baltimore, and they were all solo. But Murray, who had 33 homers and 111 runs batted in during the season, changed that in the fourth.

Hudson started his last inning by issuing his only walk, to Cal Ripken Jr., after running the count to 3-2. Hudson got one strike on Murray before the switch-hitting first baseman launched another missile, this one bouncing off the scoreboard in right-center, just above his own name.

The Orioles led 4-0, and the 67,064 at Veterans Stadium were shocked into silence. The next time they raised their voices was in anger, over the performance of tarnished hero Mike Schmidt, who led the major leagues with 40 homers in 1983.

But Schmidt's only hit in 20 World Series at-bats was a broken-bat single — hardly the stuff of champions — and his futility was never more obvious than Sunday, when he struck out once, flied out once and grounded out once.

There were a few bright spots for the Phillies, who won the series in 1980. They were 40-year-old Joe Morgan, who had five hits, including two homers and a triple, and 42-year-old Pete Rose, who had five hits despite being benched in Game Three.

But their futility also was epitomized by a play involving Morgan and Rose. Morgan tripled to right field with one out in the eighth, and tagged up when Rose lofted a fly ball to left. But one step out of the bag, Morgan stumbled, and had to return to third. He never scored, as Schmidt grounded out to end the inning.

Rose played Sunday in right field because Sixto Lescano had a broken right index finger.

Rose's benching pointed out a vital difference between these two clubs. While Rose protested, Altobelli moved his players around like chess pieces without rebuttal. They were happy and loose and there also were winning.

And Dempsey was their leader. Ken Singleton, Baltimore's designated hitter during the regular season, had dubbed the Orioles' sixth, seventh and eighth hitters — Rich Dauer, Todd Cruz and Dempsey — the Three Stooges because they always left him stranded on base.

Dauer was Larry. He had three RBI and three hits in the Orioles' 5-4 victory in Game Four Saturday.

Cruz was Curly. He had a pair of hits and helped continue a couple of rallies.

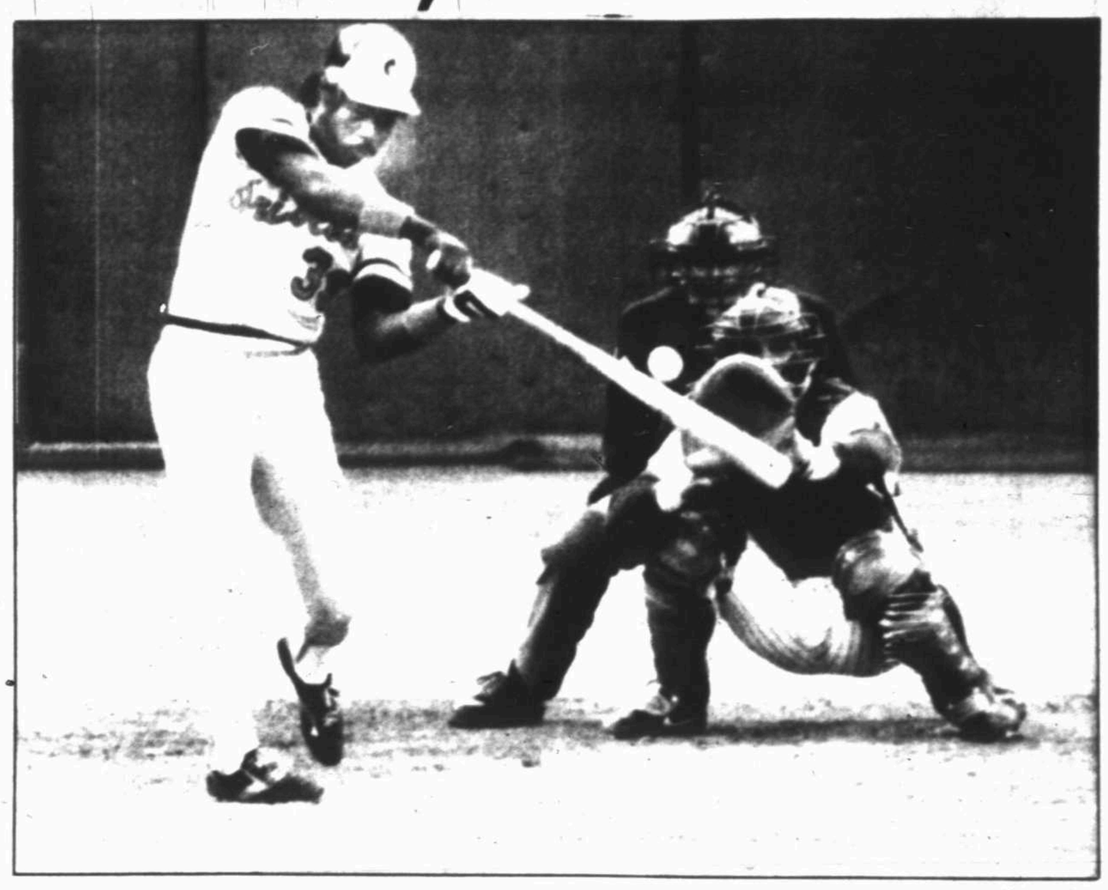

And Dempsey was Moe.

He started the Orioles' fifth inning Sunday with his fifth extra-base hit, a double that short-hopped the wall in left-center and chased Hudson in favor of Marty Bystrom. McGregor bunted, and Phillies catcher Bo Diaz let the ball slip through his fingers for an error while trying to throw to first. McGregor was safe, and Dempsey stayed at second.

The Orioles thus became the first American League team to win the World Series since the New York Yankees won consecutive championships in 1977 and 1978.

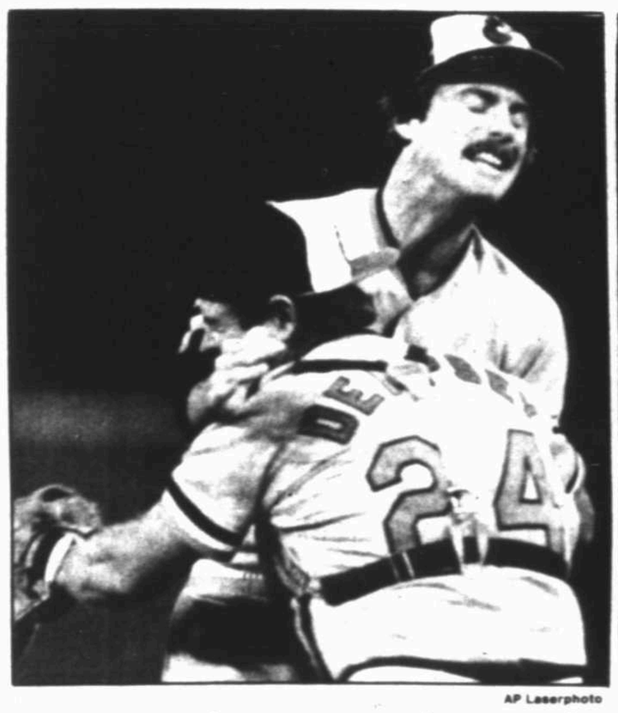

It capped a season in which the Orioles won a record seventh AL East title and a sixth pennant since 1966.

It was another good year for all those company men at the Baltimore Orioles Inc.

Triumph...and tribulation

World Series MVP Rick Dempsey and Game 5 winning pitcher Scott McGregor celebrate Baltimore's 4-1 Series win (left); at right, a dejeected Mike Schmidt, who went 1-20 in the Series, ponders what went wrong for the Phillies.

Murray ends slump to key O win

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Eddie Murray finally broke loose.

The Orioles' first baseman, after an outstanding regular season, suffered through the first four World Series games with only two hits in 16 at bats.

His bat came alive again Sunday though. He belted two home runs, drove in three runs and had three of the Orioles' five hits as Baltimore won the Series with a 5-0 victory.

Murray said both of his home runs came on fastballs from Phillies' starter Charles Hudson.

"The first time I think he threw it a little higher than he wanted it," Murray said. "The thing I wanted to do was get on top right away and it does something for the team when you score the first run of the game."

Of his earlier problems, Murray said, "I had the pitches to hit. I just wasn't swinging well.

"You seldom see a National League team during the season and you try to jump on the pitches a little at first. But in the last couple of games, I just decided to wait on a good one."

Murray said he felt little pressure from the fans, who had seen him hit 33 homers and drive in 111 runs during the regular season when he hit .306. But he had some sympathy for Phillies slugger Mike Schmidt, who was 0-for-4 Sunday and finished 1-for-20 for the Series.

"I don't think the pressure got to him," Murray said. "It's just a thing where he wasn't swinging well. I'm just glad I got hit before he did.

"When you're on a good streak you can't wait to bat. There's just no way to explain it any better."

Bad day for Philly: Cowboys smash Eagles, 37-7

Bills bomb Colts, take AFC East lead

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The unbeaten Dallas Cowboys abandoned their Twilight Zone-Alfred Hitchcock storybook thriller scripts Sunday for a dramaless thrashing of the Philadelphia Eagles.

Dallas quarterback Danny White, tiring of stomach-churning last-second miracle victories, directed the Cowboys to a 37-7 triumph that left them as the National Football League's only unbeaten team.

"We finally showed some killer instinct," said White who displayed a considerable amount himself as he passed for two touchdowns and 266 yards.

It was Dallas' biggest victory over Philadelphia since 1971 and was the Eagles' worst loss since 1975 when Cincinnati beat them 31-0.

However, Dallas did have to come from behind for the seventh consecutive week.

The Cowboys are now off to their second best start in their 23-year history.

Taking a cue from previous Dallas opponents, the 4-3 Eagles seized a 7-3 lead on Ron Jaworski's 83-yard touchdown pass to Mike Quick. The Dallas defense slammed the door rudely from that point.

The Eagles finished the day with only nine first downs.

"It was our best game this year," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry.

"We tried to determine what we needed to do to get into a better performance level and the players just concentrated and did it. I enjoyed this one because we were doing our jobs out there."

Eagle Coach Marion Campbell agreed, saying, "They were at their best, we were at our worst. I don't know anything that Dallas didn't try that wasn't successful."

Dallas running back Tony Dorsett said the Cowboys couldn't have been much better.

"Today was the complete game we've been looking for the previous six weeks," Dorsett said. "Maybe we were in a six week slump but a 6-0 slump is a good one to be in."

Tight end Doug Cosbie, who caught a 14-yard scoring pass, said the big victory got a monkey off the Cowboys' backs.

"The last few weeks everybody has been on us," he said. "The press has been on us, and we've been on ourselves. But everything finally fell into place."

White's passing to Cosbie setup Ron Springs' one-yard scoring run and Cosbie escaped to catch a 14-yard touchdown pass.

Rafael Septien hit field goals of 31, 46, and 34 yards.

Tony Dorsett scored his first touchdown of the season from seven yards and Dallas put it away on White's 2-yard scoring toss to Timmy Newsome.

"It's not time to jump up and down," White said. "This was step in the right direction for us but we've still got a tough road ahead.

"It was as fine a game as we've played in a long, long time."

Quick said the Eagles made the mistake of getting too pumped up after his big touchdown catch.

"You can't just ride on one play," said Quick.

Jaworski said, "I had felt we would have a good week against Dallas, but we didn't seem to have the emotion like we normally do. Anyone who says they are lucky doesn't know a heckuva lot about football."

The Cowboys' next test will come next Sunday night when the Los Angeles Raiders come calling in one of ABC's nationally televised specials.

Joe Ferguson passed for three touchdowns and Joe Danelo kicked three field goals Sunday as the Buffalo Bills tromped the upstart Baltimore Colts 30-7 in a key National Football League game Sunday.

Battling for first place in the American Conference East with the Colts, who entered this season with only two wins in the past two years, the Bills broke the game open with 24 points in the last 17 minutes of the first half.

Baltimore, which fell to 4-3, had taken a 7-0 lead with 5:06 left in the first period on a 52-yard Mike Pagel-to-Ray Butler flea-flicker.

But Ferguson hit Joe Cribbs on a 14-yard TD strike with 2:17 left in the quarter, then hit TD passes of four yards to Mark Brammer and 20 yards to Frank Lewis just 3:06 apart in the second. Danelo added a 23-yard field goal with five seconds left in the half and 30- and 40-yarders in the second half as the Bills improved to 5-2.

In other games Sunday:

Dallas remained unbeaten by rolling over the Philadelphia Eagles 37-7, Pittsburgh took over the AFC Central lead from Cleveland with a 44-17 rout of Pittsburgh, San Francisco topped New Orleans 32-13 on Ray Wersching's six field goals, and Seattle upset the Los Angeles Raiders 38-36.

Two teams remain winless — the Houston Oilers lost to Minnesota 34-14 to ruin new Coach Chuck Studley's debut and Tampa Bay lost to St. Louis 34-27.

In other games, it was Detroit 31, Chicago 17; New England 37, San Diego 21; Miami 32, the New York Jets 14; Denver 24, Cincinnati 17; Kansas City 38, the New York Giants 17; and the Los Angeles Rams 27, Atlanta 21.

Pittsburgh's offensive defense continued as the Steelers picked off six Brian Sipe passes, including a 31-yard TD return by Mike Merriweather with three minutes gone in the game. Rookie defensive back Doug Best returned a fumble 94 yards for a touchdown in the final minute, giving the Steelers, 5-2, five defensive touchdowns in two games.

The victory was Pittsburgh's 14th straight over Cleveland, 4-3, in Three Rivers Stadium, going back to 1970.

Wersching hit a San Franciso team-record six field goals, including a 52-yarder, the longest of his career. The 49ers, 5-2, scored 16 points in just over five minutes of the third quarter, capped by Dwight Hicks' 62-yard touchdown with an interception.

Vince Ferragamo threw a two-yard touchdown pass to Mike Guman with 17 seconds remaining as the Rams, 5-2, stayed even with the 49ers in the NFC West and the Falcons dropped to 2-5. The score climaxed a 47-yard drive that started with 2:15 left.

Seattle, 4-3, forced eight Raider turnovers, including a fumble returned nine yards for a touchdown by linebacker Shelton Robinson. Robinson's score, and one by Curt Warner after Jacob Green's fumble recovery 14 seconds later, broke open a close came and offset two TD passes in the last 4:32 by Marc Wilson, who relieved Jim Plunkett for the Raiders, 6-2.

Rick Sanford carried a San Diego fumble 26 yards to the one to set up the go-ahead score as New England ran its record to 3-4. The Chargers, also 3-4, had a 21-10 halftime lead and still led 21-13 entering the final period.

Dolphin rookie Dan Marino tossed three touchdown passes, including a 66-yarder to Nat Moore against the Jets, 3-4. They also picked off six passes — three by William Judson — including Kim Bokamper's 24-yard touchdown return with a tipped pass.

Defensive end Neil Elshire led a defense that forced six Houston fumbles as the NFC Central-leading Vikings improved their mark to 5-2. Elshire's jolting tackle of quarterback Gifford Neilsen in the first quarter forced a fumble that Charlie Johnson ran back 50 yards for a touchdown.

Bill Kenney threw for a career-high 342 yards and Durwood Roquemore returned an interception 42 yards for the go-ahead score for the Chiefs, 4-3. The Giants, 2-5, led 17-10 late in the third quarter when Kenney threw 46 yards for a touchdown to Henry Marshall. Roquemore intercepted on the next series.

Steve DeBerg flipped a seven-yard touchdown pass to Rick Parros with 6:57 remaining as Denver, 4-3, snapped a five-game home losing streak. Cincinnati fell to 1-6.

Billy Sims scored his first touchdown of the year and Eric Hipple and Gary Danielson each threw a touchdown pass to lead Detroit, 3-4, to its win over Chicago, 2-5.

Neil Lomax threw for three touchdowns as the Cardinals, 2-5, extended the Bucs' winless streak to seven games.

Series MVP Dempsey goes from Stooge to Hulk

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It was a case of Moe the Stooge turning into the Incredible Hulk.

Rick Dempsey poled a home run over the 371 foot mark in left-center-field for the blow that ultimately helped bury the Philadelphia Phillies 5-0 in the fifth and clinching game before 67,064 stunned Veterans Stadium fans.

It was just one of five hits, including four doubles, in 13 at-bats in the Series for a .385 average that won him unanimous honors as the Most Valuable Player.

For once in his life he didn't have a quip on the end of his tongue — not for the president of the United States nor for the army of reporters who had enjoyed his free-spirited style and humor in his 11 years in the majors.

"The biggest day of my life," he said. "I am not a prankster and I am not a flake. It's just that I like to have a little fun and inject some levity into the game. Baseball can be a pressure situation and sometimes you have to let off steam."

Dempsey, a slim, mustachioed 6-footer born in Fayetteville, Tenn., but reared in Southern California, was the unlikeliest of heroes.

Except in short stints when called up from the minors first by Minnesota and later by the New York Yankees, he had never hit better than .262. His average ranged from .215 to .259.

The past season he batted .231 with four home runs and 32 runs batted in.

That's the reason Ken Singleton, the towering outfielder-designated hitter of the Orioles, dubbed him and light-hitting teammates Todd Cruz (.208) and Rich Dauer (.235) "The Three Stooges."

Cruz was Curly, Dauer was Larry and Dempsey — much to his chagrin — was Moe.

The designation caught on so well that news of it even reached Hollywood, inducing Columbia Pictures to send the three Orioles small replicas of the movies' mapcap trio.

The package came to Dempsey, who delivered the small statues to Cruz and Dauer but parked his own somewhere that nobody could see it. A funny guy himself, he wasn't amused.

That's because another name for the fiery receiver is "Mr. Intensity." They say he is the scrappiest, most dedicated player on the club.

"Rick is not the most spectacular player, but he's the guy you want on your team," said pitcher Scott McGregor, who shut out the Phillies in the clinching game.

"He's not afraid to jump on a player who dogs it. He has some Yogi Berra-isms, but he deserves something like this."

It was Dempsey behind the plate who called the pitches which turned the normally potent bats of National League home run king Mike Schmidt, Sixto Lezcano and Garry Maddox into slabs of cold ash.

Also it was Dempsey who intimidated tUcliec'TxR'owingp%e Morgan out at second base and who, "the marshmallow hitter," took over the Orioles' offense when the club's power tanden of Eddie Murray and Cal Ripken Jr. scraped out only five hits in 31 at-bats through the first four games.

The switch-hitting Murray snapped out of it with a pair of homers and a single in the final game — just icing on Dempsey's victory cake and fizz on his champagne.

"The guy doesn't get much credit," said Phillies' pilot Paul Owens, "but he's always there. He's a gamer. He is everything we were told about him."

Dempsey took over from Boog Powell as the clubhouse release valve — the man able to break the heaviest tension with his jokes and his theatrics.

Twice in Boston, during a rainout delay, he padded himself and, with the aid of pitcher Sammy Stewart, took the field and entertained fans with a Babe Ruth pantomine — even pointing to the outfield before racing around the bases with the Babe's mincing steps.

"The second time the guys pushed me out on the tarp," he said, apologetically. "I had no other choice."

The ebullient Oriole catcher, now 34, said he was disappointed at first in the 10-player deal that brought him, along with McGregor and Tippy Martinez, to the Orioles from the New York Yankees on June 15, 1976.

"I didn't like it," he said. "The Yankees were 7½ games ahead and I was looking foward to being on a championship team.

"I didn't realize then how lucky I would be."

Altobelli: 'Earl was with me' Phils look for answers

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Manager Joe Altobelli had praise for his predecessor, Earl Weaver, after the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Philadelphia Phillies 5-0 Sunday and won the 1983 World Series.

"I'm sure he's happy for us because he's still part of it," Altobelli said of Weaver, who was in the ABC television crew covering the Series. "He helped to mold and shape this club and I'm just here in my first year."

Altobelli, who spent 14 years in the Baltimore organization including 11 as a minor league manager, replaced Weaver at the start of the 1983 season and directed the Orioles to a world championship on his first try.

"Earl was with me every day prior to the games, except for the first one," Altobelli said. "He was nice to have around. We chatted and had coffee together. I remember in spring training, he told me to go out and do it my way —that I had to do it for myself."

Altobelli said despite his success on the job in his first season, "It wasn't easy. Nothing that is good comes easy. It's a super feeling but I won't have a chance to absorb it until we get on the bus going home.

"We did everything we set out to do in spring training, but now we've got to start all over again next year. I wanted to win it today because I didn't want to have a workout tomorrow."

Altobelli received the traditional winning manager's telephone call from President Ronald Reagan and said it was difficult to hear above the din of the clubhouse celebration.

Altobelli reminded the president that they had met at the White House last May when Reagan proclaimed National Amateur Baseball Month, and thanked him for calling "on such a big day for us."

"We really appreciated it," Altobelli told the president. "After we met, I would never miss a Ronald Reagan movie on television."

Commenting on Eddie Murray's two home\runs for Baltimore, which accounted for three runs, Reagan noted that he wore Murray's No. 33 when he played football. "I just knew it was going to be his day," Reagan said.

General Manager Hank Peters lauded Altobelli for making a smooth transition after taking over for Weaver, who came to be known as a managerial genius in his 14½ seasons with the Orioles.

"He picked up the club as it was put together," Peters said, "and continued to use the players the way Earl had used them. He was familiar with the organization, but he still had to experience being on the job.

"He did not make changes just for changes' sake. He put his own stamp on how things were done and did not succumb to the temptation of making changes. He's pretty smart."

Altobelli, in a brief review of the regular season, said he especially remembered how the club reacted while going through two seven-game losing streaks. "The club could've fallen apart, but they held together and did not point fingers," he said. "That's the way a sound baseball team is."

Altobelli credited scouts Bill Werle and John Stokoe for their reports on the Chicago White Sox and the Phillies, which helped produce an outstanding 1.10 ERA for the nine post-season games.

The Orioles lost the first game of the American League playoffs against Chicago and the first game of the World Series by 2-1 scores, each time with Scott McGregor the losing pitcher, and then swept the remaining games. "That's the hard way," Altobelli said.

Altobelli said one of his first concerns after the final out was to run to McGregor as he came off the mound after pitching a five-hitter, and ask him the condition of his father, who underwent an abdominal operation in a Philadelphia hospital early Saturday morning.

"I have a policy not to talk to my starting pitcher before the game, so I waited until after the game to ask Scotty," Altobelli said. "He told me his father was fine."

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Phillies sat stunned in their dugout for some five minutes Sunday after they had lost the 1983 World Series.

Finally, they filed into a somber dressing room where players discussed in almost hushed voices their elimination by the Baltimore Orioles in just five games.

"We were outplayed and we lost," said relief pitcher Al Holland.

Mike Schmidt, who had just one Series hit in 20 at bats, pondered the reasons.

"Maybe I wanted to do good too bad," said Schmidt.

But he added, "Give the Orioles all the credit. They pitched well. They won and they deserved it."

Schmidt was booed incessantly by the crowd of 67,064 at Sunday's game.

"I'd be booing me too, if I was sitting in the stands and was from Philadelphia," he said. "But I'm used to it.

"This is a different crowd in Philadelphia. In Baltimore, if Eddie Murray went 0-for-20, they'd be cheering, 'Eddie, Eddie.'"

Schmidt insisted the Series slump was not the worst experience of his career.

"It was early in the season when I struck out four times on 12 pitches," he said.

Schmidt added, however, "It is disappointing to lose four straight to anyone. I wish we could have been more exciting, speaking as an offensive player who didn't do anything."

Schmidt said the Phillies had confidence before their 5-0 loss in Sunday's clincher.

"We were sure we would win today and then win two in Baltimore."

Second baseman Joe Morgan said there were two differences between the teams.

"Number one, they used their whole lineup to beat us. The first few days it was the bottom of the lineup and today the big fellow (Murray) did it. And second, their pitchers stayed out of big innings. And that hurt us."

Morgan said the Phillies appeared to be thinking, "big swing. And that hurt. Their staff made the right pitches at the right time."

Pete Rose, who has played in six World Series and lost for the third time, said, "There are always ups and downs in baseball. For us this is a down. For the other club it's an up."

Rose was asked what was most disappointing about the Series.

"Not playing in one game," he replied. "My little boy told me that and I said, 'you're right.' He also said he never saw a game in which I didn't start. But then he hasn't been around here that much this season has he?"

Rose, 42, did not start Friday night and was confined to a pinch hitter's role in that game.

Rose's future undetermined

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pete Rose, who went 5-for-16 in Philadelphia's World Series loss to Baltimore, will know within a month whether he will be back with the Phillies next season.

The 42-year-old Rose, who is 201 hits behind Ty Cobb's all-time record of 4,191, has a year-by-year contract with the team through 1986. The Phillies have until Nov. 15 to decide whether they will keep him.

Rose entered the year with a .308 lifetime average for 20 seasons but hit just .245, the lowest of his career.

He did not start Game Three of the World Series after going 1-for-8 in the first two games. After grounding out as a pinch-hitter in the third game, Rose returned to go 2-for-3 in the fourth game and 2-for-4 in Game Five on Sunday, which the Orioles won 5-0 to win the Series.

Rose has played in six World Series and has won three of them.

Asked whether he would be back with the Phillies next season, Rose said: "I can't tell you that now. But all I can say is I'll be playing some place in 1984."

"Besides losing, what I'll probably remember most about this Series is the game I didn't start."

ABC Series coverage heavy on audio

An AP Sports Analysis
By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

NBC learned in last year's World Series that three men in the broacast booth was one too many. So ABC did them one better this year, using three all of the time and four some of the time.

The result was often no more than chatter, chatter, chatter, chatter.

And more chatter.

Much of this was due to the presence of Howard Cosell, whose voice and personality so dominate important ABC sports telecasts. It's too bad — not only is ABC hurt by the intrusive and grating impression he leaves, so is Cosell, whose important contributions to sports journalism are being overshadowed.

Forgetting Cosell for a minute, it is true that baseball done best is baseball done simply.

Let Al Michaels describe the play; let Earl Weaver tell us why it happened and what the participants might be thinking; let the cameras show us the key plays in slow motion from different angles. Let the commentators do their "Oh Boy!" at the appropriate places.

Instead ABC gave us sequences like this one, in the bottom of the sixth inning of Friday night's third game.

With two out, Bo Diaz got an infield hit off Jim Palmer, then Palmer threw a wild pitch and Diaz went to second. After Baltimore Manager Joe Altobelli went to the mound, Palmer walked Ivan DeJesus and pitcher Steve Carlton came to the plate.

"An unintentional intentional pass," said Michaels. "Exactly," said Weaver and Cosell uttered this blessing: "The wild pitch was the key." Two comments too many.

Technically, there was less overkill. At times, there were a few too many replays — Gary Matthews' fourth-game leaping catch was shown a couple of times too often and once in Philadelphia, director Chet Forte became enamored of the rooftop camera that was fine as a novelty shot but really didn't add much to the coverage.

But overall, the technical effects were good. The camera caught some striking moments, ABC used for the first time the box insert within the play — and it caught Joe Morgan perfectly stumbling off third base in the eighth inning of Sunday night's game.

Finally, Cosell.

The man has taken a beating for his nonstop talking. But the fact is, Cosell is the most incisive and socially-concious commentator in sports — in fact, he invented the genre.

But he does not belong in the play-by-play booth — he adds little, he is abrasive, and he has become banal — "this game isn't over by a long shot," he said Saturday with the Orioles leading 5-3 in the seventh inning. "This is their chance and Owens is going for it," he said in the eighth, with two men on and one out.

It would be delightful to see Cosell if he were limited to "Sports Beat" and to commentary at major events. He can get to people for interviews — Pete Rose at first would speak only to him when he was benched — and he asks the right questions.

But as it is, Cosell is too often the one person too many in the booth.

Baltimore braces for celebration

BALTIMORE (AP) — Thousands of Oriole fans joyously celebrated Baltimore's third World Series championship Sunday night, crowding the city's streets and bars to cheer their ballclub.

Police said they expected as many as 40,000 fans to be on hand to greet the Orioles when they arrived at Memorial Stadium by bus late Sunday night or early Monday.

Hundreds of fans had already arrived at the ballpark minutes after the Orioles beat the Phillies 5-0 to win the Series in five games.

"There is one hell of a crowd forming at the stadium," said police officer William Furlong. A four-block area around the ballpark was closed to traffic.

Furlong said extra officers — "as many as we can get our hands on" — were being called in from districts around the city to help keep order.

In downtown Baltimore, hundreds of fans lined the major intersections, waving banners and urging passing motorists to honk their horns. Most of the drivers cooperated, creating a deafening roar near the Inner Harbor.

At one of the city's major intersections, Craig Shuba, 22, of Fairfax, Va., stood atop a Chevrolet van waving an orange shirt, shouting at the top of his lungs.

A parade to celebrate the Orioles victory was scheduled for noon Monday.

Owens decision soon

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The future of Paul Owens, who took over as Phillies manager from Pat Corrales during the season, remained uncertain Sunday night after Philadelphia had lost the World Series.

There have been reports that Owens, 59, would return to his front office responsibilities as vice presdient and general manager.

SAVE ON THE NEW MINOLTA BETA. THE COPIER OF THE FUTURE.
You don't have to spend a lot to get a lot of copier. Not if you buy Minolta's Beta 450Z. It comes with features that are so advanced it can do some extraordinary things.
- The unique variable magnification zooming lens gives the 450Z a virtually limitless range of copy sizes. From almost a 50% enlargement to a 50% reduction.
- Auto magnification enables the 450Z to take different size originals and enlarge or reduce them to a uniform size.
- Auto paper selection enables the 450Z to copy different size originals on different size paper, selecting the correct paper size for you automatically.
- If you need to expand capacity with an automatic document feeder or sorter, the 450Z has a full system of design-integrated accessories. And because they're made only for Beta, they give you smoother, significantly more trouble-free operation.

To see the 450Z, the copier of the future, come in for a demonstration today.

Rangers knock off Flyers, 5-4

NEW YORK (AP) — Pierre Larouche scored two goals for the second straight game and Peter Sundstrom scored the game-winner early in the third period as the New York Rangers beat the previously unbeaten Philadelphia Flyers 5-4 Sunday night in a National Hockey League game.

The loss snapped the Flyers' club-record five consecutive wins at the beginning of the season.

Brian Propp's goal for Philadelphia at 2:09 of the third period knotted the score at 4-4, the fourth time the game was tied. But Sundstrom deflected in a shot by Don Maloney at 3:57 and the Rangers held on.

Defenseman Ron Greschner, who also assisted on the play, scored his 400th career point for the Rangers who rebounded from their first loss Saturday night.

Thomas Eriksson opened the scoring at 32 seconds of the first period as he fired a 45-foot shot between the legs of Rangers goaltender Steve Weeks. Maloney tied it 1-1 when he tipped Greschner's shot past the stick of Flyers goaltender Bob Froese at 6:40.

Larouche scored his first goal, with the help of the first of three assists from Reijo Ruotsalainen, at 13:14, but defenseman Doug Crossman tied the score at 1:49 of the second period.

Larouche, who scored two goals in New York's 6-5 loss to St. Louis Saturday, gave the Rangers the lead again on a power-play goal. But 38 seconds later, Philadelphia re-tied it when Rick MacLeish put in a rebound.

The Rangers converted another power play at 18:41 as Dave Maloney scored on a loose puck to make it 4-3.

Quebec 4, Caps 2

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Goalie Dan Bouchard turned aside 34 shots to lead the Quebec Nordiques to a 4-2 National Hockey League victory over the winless Washington Capitals Sunday night.

Quebec, 4-2-1, built a 2-0 first-period lead as Louis Sleigher jammed the puck into the net through a crowd at 4:55 and Dale Hunter connected at 7:13.

Hunter took the puck from Washington defenseman Darren Veitch along the boards and centered to Michel Goulet in the slot. Goulet, the league's second leading scorer, passed back to Randy Moller at the point and his low shot into the pads of Capitals' goaltender Pat Riggin rebounded to Hunter, who scored.

Quebec also got third-period goals from Wally Weir and Wilf Paiement, each of which rebuilt the Nordiques' two-goal margin.

Both of Washington's goals came on power plays, with Mike Gartner scoring late in the second period to make it 2-1 and Bobby Carpenter scoring another in the third for a 3-2 deficit.

Washington has not scored a goal against a full-strength opponent in over seven periods. Its 0-6 record marks the worst start in the club's 10-year history.

Isles 3, Buffalo 2

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — New York center Brent Sutter scored during a scramble with 3:37 left to give the Islanders a 3-2 National Hockey League victory over the Buffalo Sabres Sunday.

Stefan Persson and Butch Goring also scored for New York, while Dave Andreychuk and Gil Perreault tallied for Buffalo.

Sutter dug the puck out from underneath Buffalo goaltender Bob Sauve's pads and poked it into the net to give the Islanders the lead, and they held on down the stretch as Buffalo pulled Sauve in favor of an extra attacker in the final minute.

Edmonton 5, Calgary 1

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Edmonton's Andy Moog kicked out 36 shots Sunday night to lead the unbeaten Oilers to a 5-1 National Hockey League victory over the Calgary Flames.

Moog had at least three brilliant saves off shots from Lanny McDonald to help the Oilers win their sixth game against no losses and no ties.

But Edmonton needed Moog's brilliance because Don Edwards was robbing the Oilers, including Wayne Gretzky, at the other end of the rink. Gretzky was particularly bothered by Edwards as the Calgary goaltender constantly left the security of his net to poke the puck away from the league's top player last year.

Toronto 4, New Jersey 1

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Peter Ihnacak scored two goals and assisted on another Sunday night to spark the Toronto Maple Leafs to a 4-1 National Hockey League victory over the New Jersey Devils.

Ihnacak helped break a scoreless tie at 1:46 of the second period. Walt Poddubny took a pass from Ihnacak on the left side and attempted a 15-foot shot on goal which was cleared away by Devil goalie Glenn Resch.

But Podubbny collected his own rebound and drilled a 12-foot backhander into the left corner of the Devils' net for his second goal of the season.

The Leafs, now 3-2-1, made it 2-0 at 9:45 of the second period when Stewart Gavin skated behind the Devils' net, then came back to slip the puck just inside the right post.

Chicago 4, Minnesota 2

CHICAGO (AP) — Denis Savard, Behn Wilson and Billy Gardner notched second-period goals and goalie Murray Bannerman repulsed a barrage of shots in the closing minutes as the Chicago Black Hawks nipped the Minnesota North Stars 4-3 in National Hockey League play Sunday night.

The Hawks, now 4-2, had taken a 4-1 lead into the third period. But Dino Ciccarelli and Craig Levie scored in a three-minute span to pull the North Stars to within one.

After Wilson was sent to the penalty box with less than nine minutes to play, Bannerman came up with saves on four Minnesota power-play shots from point-blank range to preserve the victory.

NHL

Celtics-Sixers stage slugfest

BOSTON (AP) — Three brawls — with Moses Malone, Larry Bird, Cedric Maxwell, Gerald Henderson and Marc Iavaroni involved in separate incidents — marred Boston's 99-86 National Basketball Association exhibition victory over the Philadelphia 76ers Sunday night.

Bird, Iavaroni and Henderson were ejected in the contest that saw Celtics president and General Manager Red Auerbach raced from his seat in the stands onto the court and Philadelphia Coach Bill Cunningham have his sport coat ripped apart.

Malone, the 76ers' center and the NBA's Most Valuable Player last year, and Maxwell tangled with the game less than 2½ minutes old. Maxwell, the veteran Boston forward, took away a rebound from Malone and threw the ball at close range, hitting Malone on the side of the head.

The Philadelphia center charged Maxwell and the two players, along with Philadelphia guard Andrew Toney, went crashing to the floor under the Boston basket. The players were separated quickly and Maxwell was given a technical foul for unsportsmanlike conduct. Malone was given a loose-ball foul.

A couple of minutes later, Bird, the Celtics' all-NBA forward, and Iavaroni exchanged punches and both were ejected.

The fight started after center Robert Parish of the Celtics sank the second of two free throws just 3:40 into the game. Bird went after the Philadelphia forward before he was restrained.

Cunningham, who raced onto the floor, initially acted as a peacemaker but then erupted in anger and had to be restrained from going after Bird. Cunningham's sport jacket was ripped down the middle in the back in the fracas.

Both benches emptied before things settled down. Then, Auerbach left his seat some 12 rows up in the stands and argued with the official, Ralph Lembo, to no avail.

Midway through the third period, Boston's Henderson and Philadelphia rookie Sedale Threatt engaged in another melee. Henderson was thrown out of the game for fighting but Threatt escaped any penalty.

The third fight started after Henderson fouled Threatt. Henderson then whacked Threatt, who retaliated with a wild swing.

When order was restored, Henderson was charged with a foul, a technical foul and was ejected for fighting.

Cunningham also was assessed a technical foul for running onto the court.

Navratilova wins Florida Federal

TARPON SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — Wimbeldon and U.S. Open winner Martina Navratilova defeated Pam Shriver 6-3, 6-2 Sunday to run away with the title of the $150,000 Florida Federal Tennis Open.

Then, Navratilova teamed up with Shriver to win the doubles championship, defeating Bonnie Gadusek and Wendy White 6-0, 6-1.

The singles victory extended Navratilova's winning streak to 36 matches since she lost to Kathy Horvath at the French Open. First prize here was worth $28,000.

"It's not that easy" to beat Navratilova, said Shriver, who did just that in the 1982 U.S. Open. "I had some great opportunities in the second set and had six straight game points, but I lost it. That's crucial stuff, and I have to pull those points out to win. I know I can play better."

Navratilova beat Shriver by beating her to the net.

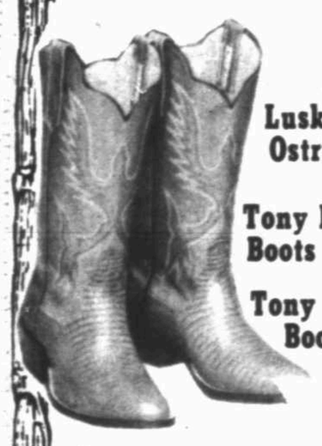

"I can't attack her backhand any more," Shriver said. "I used to chip it to her backhand and come in, but she hits it so hard now. It's a heavy-duty shot now."

Navratilova, who turned 27 Tuesday, said the court helped, too.

Dallas' suburbs competing for business

DALLAS (AP) — Suburbs are generally known as residential communities, but Dallas' suburbs are aggressively entering the competition for industry and the jobs, taxes and growth that go along with economic development.

"In northeastern cities, the primary political reason for living in the suburbs is an alternative to the cities," says Paul Geisel, professor of urban affairs at the Institute of Urban Affairs of the University of Texas at Arlington.

"There, city councils tend to be different from the corresponding central cities," he said. "Here, with the exception of the Park Cities (suburbs within Dallas), every community thinks like a city. They're all trying to get a balanced land use to attract industry."

The Dallas area sells itself with many companies — it has an international airport, relatively low taxes, right-to-work laws and lots of available space. But suburbs are finding that slick marketing techniques can bring them a bigger share of the economic pie.

"It's called competitive edge," said Farmers Branch Mayor John Dodd. "After all, you win a football game by inches."

ORGANIZATIONS HAVE sprung up in recent years to tout groups of cooperating suburbs.

The Metrocrest Chamber of Commerce was created in 1982 to help attract business and industry to the suburban cities of Farmers Branch, Addison, Carrollton and Coppell, all north of Dallas.

"A company might be looking at the area and might be deciding what area of Dallas to move to," said Mike Arrington, vice president of the economic development division of the Metrocrest chamber. "We say, 'Why not the Metrocrest?' Now we have this area we can promote."

The suburbs southwest of Dallas have been slower to develop, but they, too, are entering the fray, not without success.

Quest Southwest Alliance, established in 1980, pushes the suburbs of Cedar Hill, DeSoto, Duncanville and Oak Cliff.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR Dick Mathis says in three years, the organization has attracted business that will create 2,000 basic jobs and 4,000 secondary jobs. He said about 7,000 acres are being developed and the area will have 7,000 new home within a year.

"I can remember when Dick begged a developer to speak to him. Now they're calling him," says Quest board member Tricia Smith.

"We're not a golden corridor, but economically we're in a position that 99.9 percent of the cities in the country would give their eye teeth for," says Mathis. "In 12 months, the rest of the cities are going to realize the southwest sector not only is in the game, but they're here to play"

Although the suburbs are competing against Dallas and each other to attract business, community leaders say the competition is engrained with a sense of cooperation as well.

"It's very statesmanlike," says Fred Ferguson, president of Town North National Bank and chairman of the Metrocrest chamber's economic development tour.

"We have the attitude that what's good for one city is good for the other," he said. "A company might locate in Farmers Branch, live in Carrollton and shop in Addison."

ALONG WITH ATTRACTING industry comes growth planning, prompting some suburbs to create industrial development zones.

Garland director of planning Bob Mitchell says the city revised its zoning ordinance in 1981 to "discourage non-industrial activity in industrial areas." He said at one time, the city had a gymnasium in a furniture warehouse.

"Imagine an 18-wheeler coming down the street just as a kid is out there looking for mommy," Mitchell said.

Arlington's interim planning director, Rose Jacobsen, says Arlington has established an industrial zone along Interstate 20.

"It's not uncommon for a lower density residential subdivision to go up," she said. "Then a business park comes in, which is an appropriate use, but they run into opposition from homeowners protecting their homes and property values. We've precluded that from occurring."

WHILE NOT discouraging any industries that meet environmental and density codes, most of the suburbs have targeted specific industry they want to attract: Farmers Branch would like to attract the hotel industry, Richardson wants more of the electronics industry, Desoto officials say they are aiming for "mid-tech" industries that use semiskilled labor.

Many of the suburbs have also taken advantage of a 1979 state law that allows cities to create industrial development corporations. The corporations can issue tax-exempt industrial revenue bonds at a lower interest rate than conventional financing.

Since 1979, 97 bonds have been issued in Dallas-area suburbs, according to the Texas Economic Development Commission. Garland has issued 14, Arlington 12, Grand Prairie nine, Farmers Branch and Irving eight each.

The suburbs' promoters say all these efforts have paid off, citing statistics from the 1982 Director of Texas Manufacturers, which says that 56 percent of the 1,005 plants that opened in Dallas and Tarrant Counties between 1970 and 1982 were in the suburbs.

Charles McIlvain, director of marketing for Farmers Branch says his department has fielded 281 calls from industrial and business prospects this year. In the department's first year, 1979, it received only 10 calls, McIlvain said.

Amoco announces major project near Odessa

ODESSA — Amoco Production Company has announced major drilling activity has begun in the South Cowden Field west of Odessa. Jim York, Odessa district superintendent, said Amoco will spend over $40 million in a 43-well program to begin a full scale waterflood recovery project.

York said the extensive project will involve drilling 27 new producing wells, 16 new water injection wells, and converting 20 existing producing wells to injectors in the west Ector County field.

The program is the result of a successful waterflood pilot test begun about five years ago, said York. Amoco expects to recover an additional 20 per cent of the original oil in place from the planned waterflood, which will produce from the Lower Wolfcamp formation.

York identified the lcation for the project as four square mile area bounded by 42nd Street on the north, FM 1963 on the east, Redondo Street on the west and Interstate Highway 20 on the south. He said local contractors will be hired where possible to drill new wells, install about 40 miles of producing and water injection flowlines, substantially modify producing facilities, and add water injection pumping equipment at three locations. Work began this month and is expected to be completed by year-end 1984.

Initial drilling contracts for three wells each have been awarded to TMBR Drilling Company, MGF Drilling Company both from Midland, and Johnn Drilling Company of Odessa. TMBR began work last week and the other two companies will begin drilling next week.

York noted a project as large as this could create inconveniences for some of Odessa's west side residents due to additional noise and traffic congestion, and activities associated with the drilling and construction programs.

Other work to be done includes installing production and injection lines, modifying production batteries and building additional water injection stations.

York said Amoco acquired the acreage during the 1930s and 1940s when production from the area was begun. "This was prior to residential and industrial development of the area," he said, but "we recognize a responsibility to conduct operations safely while minimizing impositions on residents."

Residents may call (915) 381—2754 should they need additional information about the project. York said, "We and our contractors will do our best to minimize disruptions and inconveniences, and will try to handle inquiries in a timely manner."

Amoco Production Company is the exploration and production subsidiary of Standard Oil Company (Indiana)

Pilots say arbitrator may be only way

HOUSTON (AP) — Striking Continental Airlines pilots say an arbitrator may be the only way to get the financially troubled carrier back to the bargaining table.

The pilots and flight attendants walked off the job Oct. 1, one week after Continental filed for reorganization Sept. 24 under federal bankruptcy laws. The pilots presented their first written contract proposal to Continental last week.

The proposal calls for pilots temporarily to work longer hours for lower wages. However, they would receive raises in October 1984 and June 1985.

"We intended for our proposal to be a starting point for serious negotiations. But Continental has stopped the process short. They've derailed the negotiations," Gary Thomas, spokesman for the Continental chapter of the Air Line Pilots Association, said Sunday.

Just whittle while you work

If you must brag,
Brag on the Lord.

Bill Cook does that. Generously.

"I give Him credit for everything I have been, am doing, and will be because He is the main source of my strength. Absolutely."

Outside of bragging on the Lord, Cook, 61, does comment, matter of factly and with kindness, on things and people in his life.

He's a wood-whittling cowboy artist, leather worker, saddle re-builder, horse trainer, author and a slim 6-foot-4 cowboy who has worked on ranches in West Texas and elsewhere.

He carries his faith with him indoors and out and, a couple of years ago, into the hospital where surgeons opened him up to remove "nerve tumors."

"Why don't you just make the incisions," he told the surgeons, "and let the Good Lord make the decisions...Just go a'whittling."

"OK," the surgeons agreed. "You can't go wrong."

He didn't.

"The Good Lord can do a lot of things people can't do," the old cowhand reflected.

Sitting tall in the saddle, 6-foot-4 Bill Cook breaks in his son's strawberry roan Quarter Horse, Contessa.

With the talents blessed him, Cook does works other people can't do or just haven't.

He has whittled hundreds of ranch and rodeo scenes — a bloodhound baying at a mountain lion, a cowboy riding a bull, a cowboy tying down a calf, a cowhand breaking up camp, a paunchy trail boss, a range hand in the bunk house, a chuck wagon and Flop Roberts, the Scharbauer ranch foreman, sitting on a bedroll and eating a cowboy dinner.

Once he carved and whittled a pump jack — "the hardest thing I ever whittled."

He singled out the bull rider. "When you get into whittling, this is really when you get into whittling."

Cook whittles his images with his worn but sharp Schrade-Walden pocketknife and shuns sanding.

"I want it to be authentic. I want them whittle marks to be all over." His wood of choice is basswood. "You can whittle it coming and going."

On his workbench in his country place east of Midland, Cook works leather: from making belts to shotguns and other leggings (chaps) to making gun slings to re-building saddles.

He leaves made-from-scratch custom saddles to his 25-year-old son, Billy Tom Cook.

"He's got so many talents, it scares me," Cook said of his son, who now lives in Durango, Colo. "He paints and draws. He's a carpenter. I'm his biggest fan. He builds the best saddles you can put on a horse. He's so particular. He's perfection. Everything has to fit; everything has to be tight."

HIS SON does work for cowboys and princes.

"He made Prince Charles (of England) a pair of leggings when he was over here playing polo with Willie B. Wilson," Cook said. "He's got chaps scattered from Canada to Australia to all over the United States.

"Billy Tom is 25 going on 80 when he builds saddles," he said. "If everything is not perfect — a little tiny mistake — he'll throw it away. Somebody once said, 'Nobody will ever notice (the flaw),' " Cook recalled. "Billy Tom said, 'No...not until you pass by me.'"

For years, Bill Cook has been writing — in longhand — a yet unpublished book, "From the Ground Up." His manuscript imparts "The dos and don'ts about horses — (such as) how to get them to drink water" and, among other bits of wisdom and advice, "the dos and don'ts and safety tips around the barn."

"I just wrote it out in longhand and wrote it how it sounds. Like windmill. I spell it like it sounds. I leave out the 'd'. My sentences may be four miles long."

His "From the Ground Up" reflects much of his life.

Cook started breaking colts when he was a schoolboy, rode race horses and won calf roping in the old Midland Rodeo. His father, a strong influence on his life, was a rancher, teamster and farmer.

"I broke horses for everybody in the country," said Cook. "I never got to the big time, but I started breaking horses that got to the big time."

He has worked for West Texas ranchers such as Clarence Scharbauer Jr., Foy Proctor, Marion Flynt and Frank and Courtney Cowden. "I was raised with all them kids...I've rode horses and cowboyed with all the ranchers."

He broke horses — still does — and hauled cattle in his ranch work.

"I castrated, branded, dehorned, flanked calves. I've been run over, kicked down, horned — everything you can think of."

Whether it's working leather, whittling out Western cowboy scenes or breaking horses, "I don't like to do rinky-dink type work," Cook said. He doesn't charge a rich man any more for his whittlings or leather work than he does a poor fellow. "You get what you pay for and pay for what you get."

Cook's life has been beset by affliction, the hard times of ranch life, a near-fatal illness that struck Billy Tom and by the death of his eldest son, Turney Mack, a New Mexico chief fire ranger, in an accident in 1969. "I was grieved," he said.

"We had a bunch of tough knocks and tough times. The Good Lord said it won't be easy."

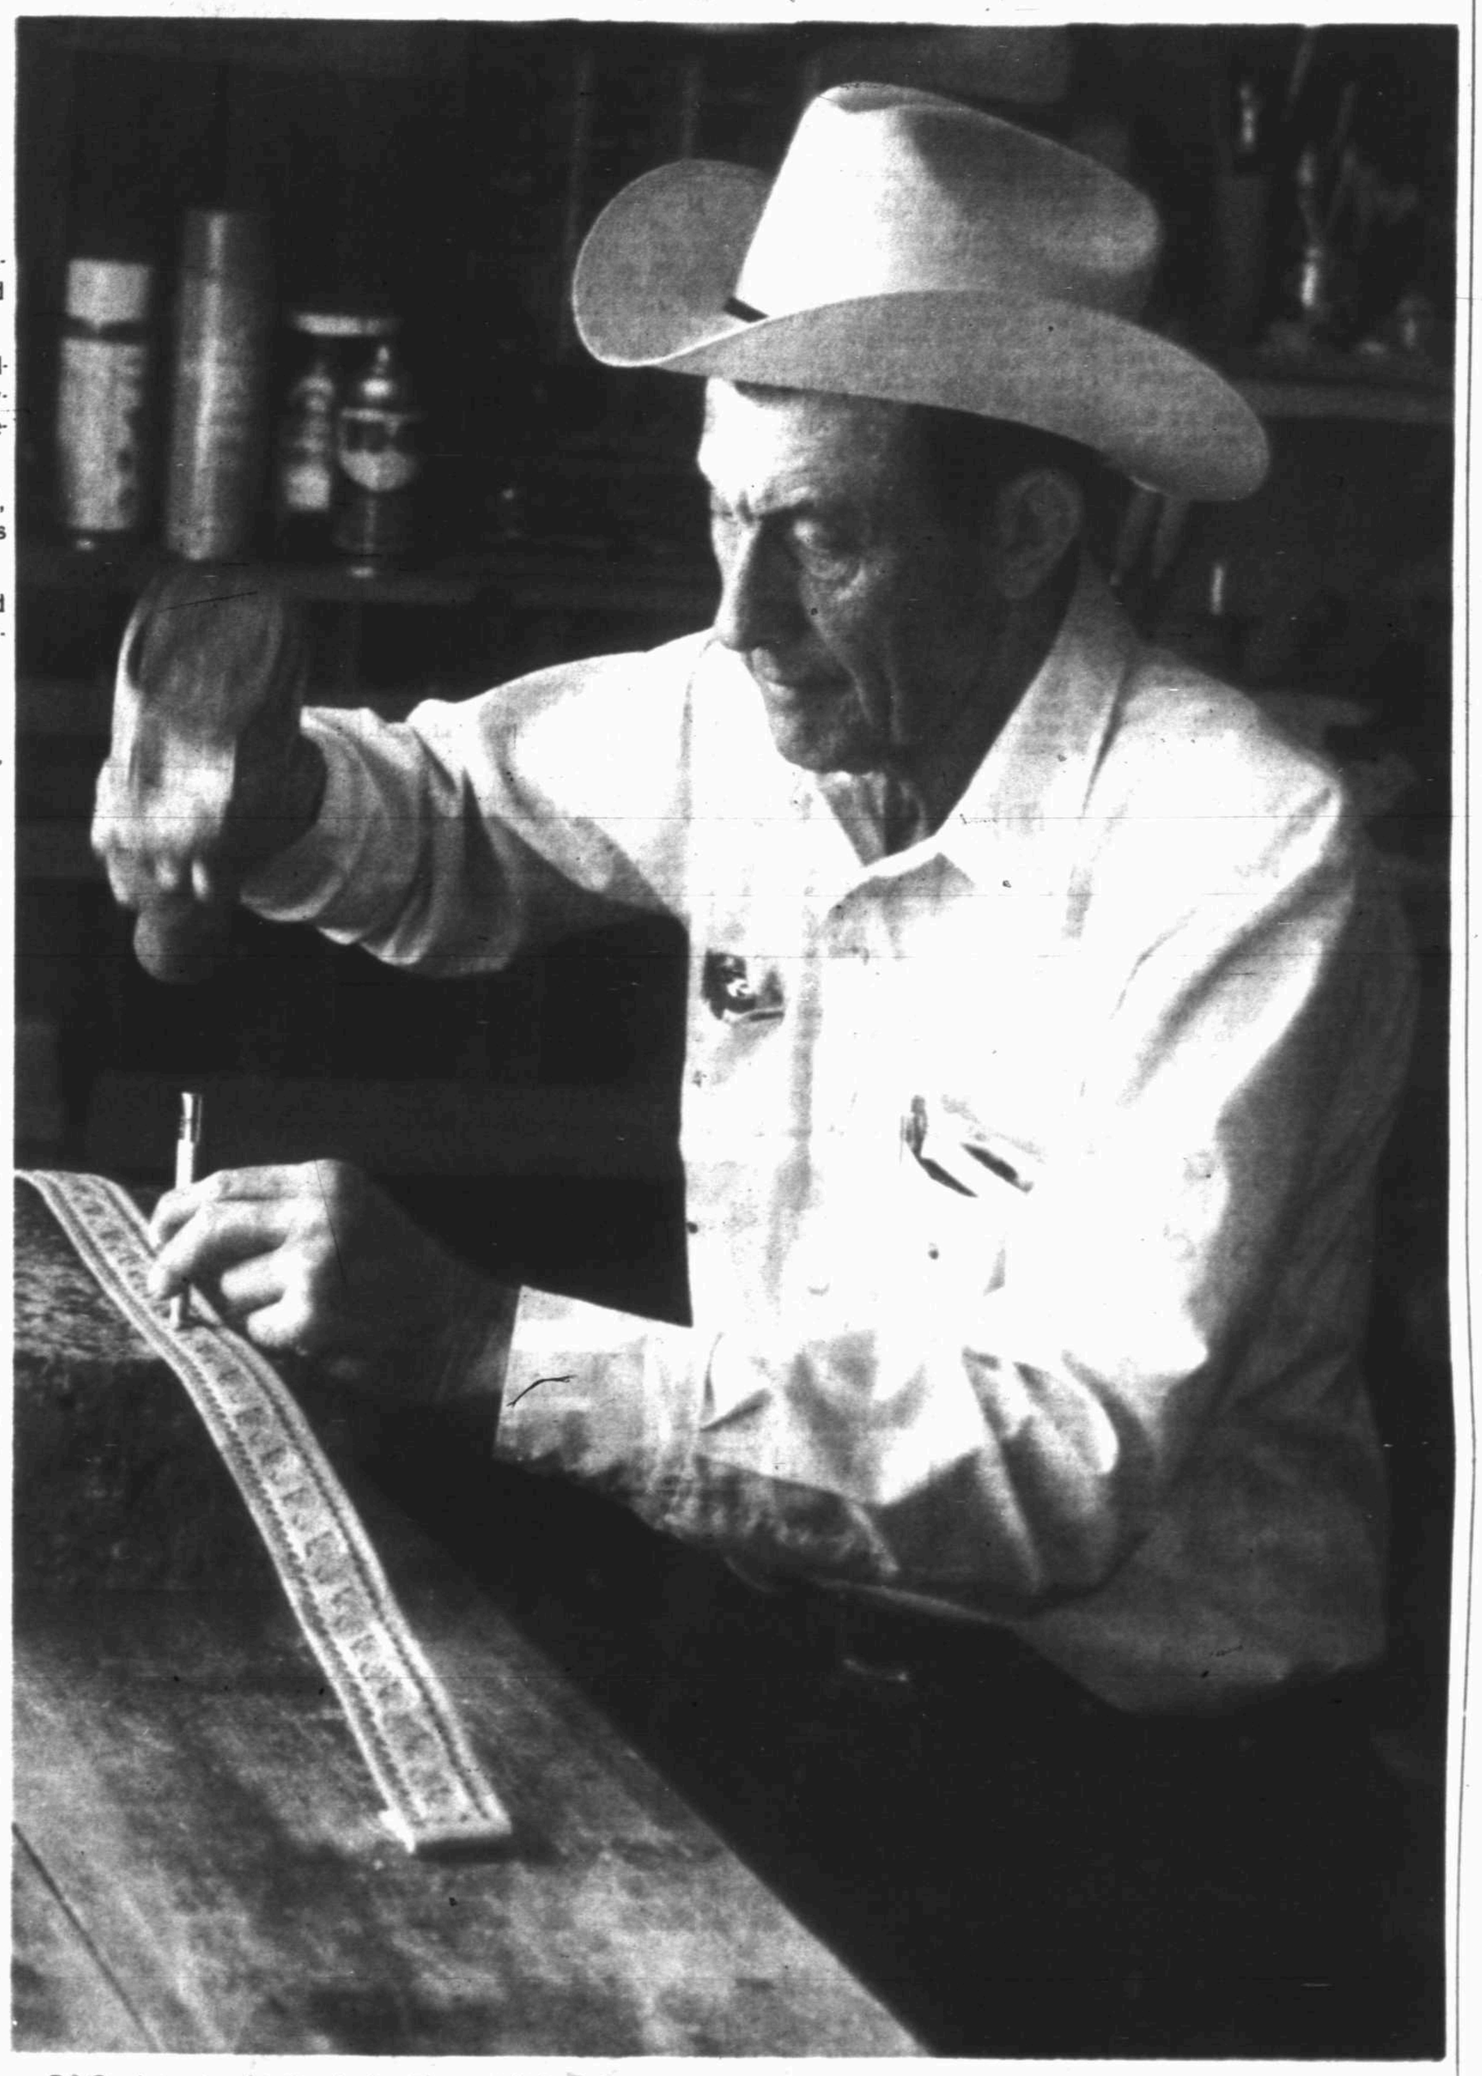

Even after the surgery, other tumors still afflict his body.

"That's just things you live with. The Good Lord will take care of it in the long run, anyway."

"God is my refuge and strength," Cook said. "I give Him the credit for everything."

In the modest ranch house where Cook and his wife, Syble, live, there is this saying which reflects the seasoned cowboy artist and horse trainer:

As for myself,
I want to do my work well...
And to die well.

Bill Cook tools a leather belt with an oak-leaf design, as he raps the tooling instrument with a rawhide-covered mallet.

Using his old, worn pocketknife, above, Bill Cook whittles basswood into the shape of a cowboy boot. Hours of such whittling nets scenes like the one at left, a cowboy breaking camp.

Burglaries, attempted assault reported

House burglaries and an attempted sexual assault were reported to Midland police Sunday.

Remigio Segura of 3906 Pleasant Drive reported the theft of two television sets, a TV converter, a .22-caliber rifle, a clock radio and personalized bank checks. Entry into the house was gained via an unlocked bedroom window. The house was reported in disarray.

Lawrence Fuller of 2828 Fannin Ave. told police the house was ransacked in a burglary during which a microwave oven was taken. A deadbolt on a door through which the burglar entered the house was not locked.

Guy Carroll of 3614 Roosevelt Ave. reported that a microwave oven was taken in the burglary of a storage unit at 2217 Rhode Island Ave.

A 12-gauge shotgun, a .22-caliber rifle and a television set were taken in a burglary at 4609 Leisure Drive, Phillip Babcock told police.

A 22-year-old Midland waitress, who appeared "upset and intoxicated," told police that two men tried to sexually assault her early Sunday morning in a southside Midland residence. A male companion had taken her there and left her with the alleged assailants, she said.

Automatic banking

AT'M, short for Automatic Teller machine, tries its hand at the new FirstNet Banking Center which opened Saturday at Midland Park Mall. FirstNet is part of the system set up by First City National Bank which allows persons with Pulse cards to conduct banking business 24 hours a day. The mall location is the first machine opened outside the bank's downtown center.

Hinckleys upset by vendetta claim

DALLAS (AP) — The father of John W. Hinckley Jr. says he is embarrassed that the oil company he runs with another of his sons has filed a $5 million administrative claim alleging the government has maliciously harassed the firm because of the assassination attempt on President Reagan.

The Dallas Times Herald, in a story published Sunday, said the claim filed in Washington on Oct. 7 contends what should have been an ordinary price audit mushroomed into a case of harassment and overzealous and prejudicial treatment after Hinckley Jr. shot Reagan outside a Washington hotel.

But John Hinckley Sr. said in Denver Sunday night that he and his wife first learned about the claim that morning when they saw the story in a newspaper.

"It was done completely without our knowledge and our consent," said the elder Hinckley.

"We still haven't seen it. We're upset and very embarrassed about it.

"We're going to check into it thoroughly tomorrow. At the very least, we will have our names withdrawn from the suit (claim) and very likely we will have the entire suit (claim) dropped," said Hinckley Sr.

The DOE is trying to collect $372,666 in alleged overcharges on oil produced by several Texas wells operated by the company, Vanderbilt Energy Corp. of Denver.

DOE officials say they have handled the case no differently from any other overcharge case. Since 1975, more than 4,000 oil price settlements have resulted in payment of about $4 billion by energy companies.

"There is no doubt in my mind that these charges by the Vanderbilt attorneys are totally baseless," said Rayburn Hanzlik, the government's chief oil price enforcer. "Essentially, all companies of that size were subject to audits. It's not a big case. It's not a priority case."

But Craig Dodd, an attorney for the Hinckleys in Enid, Okla., told the Times Herald that he disagreed that the government was not treating this case any differently.

Estranged wife of accused killer tells about fears

DONNA, Texas (AP) — The estranged wife of a man accused of killing her brother, sister-in-law and three other people says she feels responsible for the shooting spree.

Blanco Moreno said her husband, Eliseo Moreno, repeatedly threatened to kill her family and rape her 4-year-old daughter by a previous marriage if she left him.

Mrs. Moreno, 26, tearfully recalled the stormy relationship upon returning to her Rio Grande Valley home Saturday for the funeral of her brother, Juan Garza, 30, and his wife, Esther, 31.

The Garzas were the first victims of a 5½-hour crime spree Tuesday night that authorities believe was touched off when Mrs. Moreno left her husband.

"He killed my brother, and somehow I feel I am to blame," Mrs. Moreno said in a story in Sunday's editions of the Houston Chronicle.

A state highway patrolman and two other people also were killed before authorities captured Moreno at a Wharton County roadblock.

Moreno has been charged with capital murder in the death of Russell Lynn Boyd, 25, a rookie Texas Department of Public Safety trooper.

"From the day we were married, he was always lying and stealing from his employers and threatening to kill me. I knew he could do it. At times he was an animal," Mrs. Moreno said.

Mrs. Moreno met her husband in 1981 while he was working at a lawn mower repair shop. Moreno started threatening her and lying shortly after they started dating, she said.

Fed up with Moreno and eager to get away from her first husband, Mrs. Moreno said she moved to College Station in October 1982 to live with her brother and sister-in-law.

When Moreno heard she was seeing another man, she said, he went to College Station and proposed.

"He kept after me all the time until I finally married him. But after we were married he really began to change. He never forgave me for seeing someone else. He said I was his and no one would ever touch me."

Once, she said, he put a knife to her throat and tried to choke her. He also threatened to tie her to a bed and rape her daughter from a previous marriage.

Mrs. Moreno said she left her husband in August, one month after they were married, and stayed at a women's shelter in College Station. But he convinced her to take him back.

CAP appeals for help in search

BISHOP, Texas (AP) — A student pilot who apparently crashed his twin-engine plane during a stormy flight from Harlingen to Houston has been missing for a week and the Civil Air Patrol has issued an appeal for help.

CAP spokesman Craig Fitzsimmons said Jimmy Edwards, 28, of Houston, was last heard from as he flew over Baffin Bay. But he said the student pilot may have flown the twin-engine Piper Seneca over the Gulf of Mexico or inland to the west of his route to avoid thunderstorms to the north.

Fitzsimmons said Edwards made his last contact with an instructor in another plane about 6:30 p.m. Oct. 9. At the time, the student pilot was flying over Baffin Bay and did not indicate he was in trouble.

The CAP spokesman said the instructor advised Edwards that it was clear to the Gulf and to the west, but that thunderstorms were north of their position.

Fitzsimmons said the Civil Air Patrol is asking that anyone who heard a low flying aircraft between 6:30 and 7 p.m. on that Sunday to notify the CAP at the Bishop airport.

The Coast Guard has been searching the bay and the Gulf for the aircraft and Fitzsimmons said the CAP has logged 350 to 400 flight hours in the search without developing any new leads.

Ocean House survives as remnant of bygone days

By WILLIAM COCKERHAM
By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

WATCH HILL, R.I. — The 19th century Ocean House hotel looms above this cliffside town like a great yellow beacon, a wondrous reminder of this area's past splendor as a Gilded Age seaside resort.

There used to be six of these grand, wood-framed hotels on the hill overlooking the Atlantic Ocean, but the others succumbed to nature or the changing times. Two burned to the ground, one was blown to smithereens by a hurricane and the others were leveled by a Cincinnati syndicate that divided the land into lots for immense Tudor-style mansions their owners would later arrogantly call "cottages."

But the Ocean House survived, because of the determination of the family that has owned it since 1938 as well as a loyal clientele, some of whom have spent summers there for a half-century or more.

LAT Photo

Watch Hill, R.I. beach-goers sun themselves on the sands within sight of the Ocean House hotel on the hilltop above. Unlike other grand, wood-frame hotels in the area, Ocean House has survived because of the determination of the family that has owned it since 1938 as well as a loyal clientele, some of whom have spent summers there for a a half-century or more.

IT IS NOT as glamorous as it was at the turn of the century, when Rolls-Royces lined up out front and orchestras played in the once crystal-chandeliered ballroom, but few of the old-timers seem to care. After a while, they say, you do not even notice the cracked ceilings and rusting pipes, or the mismatched oriental rugs and eclectic furnishings.

"It was really a grand, luxurious hotel, but time has chipped away at it over the years," said John Warner, a retired record company executive. "The hotel is settling. There is a crack under my door a midget could actually crawl under."

Warner, in his early 70s, first came to Watch Hill as a child. Now living in New Orleans, he has returned every summer, occupying the same room at the Ocean House for more than a decade, at least until this year.

"I just got married in November so they had to give me a new room," he said.

THE TALL, LEAN man with a senatorial air said there is a kind of magic about the 59-room hotel that grabs you after a few days.

"When you've been here awhile, it begins to look like the Ritz Carlton. It grows on you to a point where you don't notice the warped floors," he said.

The Ocean House was built just before the Civil War, on the exact spot where, two centuries before, Chief Ninigret sold out to Rhode Island's first white settlers for a jug of rum. It was the last of the six hotels to be constructed at Watch Hill.

But it was not until the turn of the century that the Ocean House became a favorite summer retreat for the East Coast's wealthy families. Then, they came by steamer and train with servants and trunks in tow, staying for the whole season, which began in June and ended in October.

IN 1916, THE Ocean House was selected by Douglas Fairbanks Sr. as the locale for one of his first silent movies, "American Aristocracy." In the film, the dashing young actor is shown leaping off the sprawling Ocean House porch, which encircles the front wing of the hotel.

Up until 1968, the Ocean House was staffed entirely with black workers recruited from the Deep South.

"They used to wear white uniforms. They kind of looked like the Mexican army, with insignias on the shoulders and everything," Warner said.

But times changed. Today, most of the jobs are held by area teen-agers to earn money for college tuition.

MANY TIMES DURING during the past decade, when the economy turned sour, Ocean House regulars worried that the hotel might go under. Several years ago, the entire third floor of the hotel had to be closed off to guests for fire safety and other reasons, occupancy fell off and the season was shortened, mostly because the college students had to return to school earlier and earlier each fall. Today, the hotel opens in late June and closes on Labor Day.

"There were a few times over the last years when a group of us would sit in the bar and muse about where we would be next summer," Warner said.

But the owners of the hotel were adamant about keeping it afloat.

Carol Lacey, assistant hotel manager, said her family never has thought seriously about selling the Ocean House, regardless of high maintenance costs.

"I hate to even think of us not owning the hotel," said Mrs. Lacey, whose grandparents bought the Ocean House just before the 1938 hurricane.

MRS. LACEY SAID the Ocean House has succeeded financially mainly because of its nostalgic appeal, which is why no real efforts have been made to modernize it.

"Our customers either hate it or they come back time after time. We don't have televisions or anything like that, but the regulars who come here like the hotel for what it is. After all, you can go to the Ramada Inn anytime. At night, the regulars sit around in the lobby and just talk. I love to see it," she said.

Although many of the hotel guests are older people who have been coming to Watch Hill since they were children, Mrs. Lacey said they are getting more and more young married couples.

"I don't think there is a hotel anywhere on the East Coast with the ocean view that you have here," a young New York City woman said.

Besides Mrs. Lacey, who started work at the hotel as a switchboard operator, a half-dozen other family members form the core of the staff.

LACEY'S FATHER, EARL Brankert, is the manager, and her two brothers, Steven and Michael, do everything from roofing to plumbing.

Brankert said maintaining the hotel is an endless task.

It takes four years, for example, to paint the outside of the sprawling hotel. And by the time it is finished, 400 gallons of paint later, it is time to start all over again.

For the past decade, the job of painting the hotel has gone to James and Jack Allen, a father-son 2rom Warwick, R.I.

Jack Allen said he and his father use swing stages to paint the outside of the hotel.

"WE JUST PAINT in the spring, doing as much as we can do. My father's painted around that hotel twice now," he said.

Mrs. Lacey said maintenance work on the hotel starts the day after it closes on Labor Day, including varnishing the thousands of square feet of floors, cleaning the rugs and painting the walls.

DEAR ABBY

Youngsters' advice leads to good payoff

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: It all began when I published "10 Tips on How to Be a Good Wife," followed by "10 Tips on How to Be a Good Husband." Then a reader signed "Old-Timer" suggested that I invite the younger generation to submit its "10 Tips on How to Be a Good Kid."

I did, and the response was heartening. (Many elementary school teachers made it a class assignment.)

This list, from a 16-year-old Dallas girl, is one of the best:

1. Show appreciation. Most parents give more than they can afford.
2. Take responsibility for your own actions. If you want to be treated like an adult, act like one.
3. Remember, parents are human; they get tired, have their bad days and make mistakes, too, so forgive them like they forgive you.
4. Don't lie and sneak around, then expect your parents to trust you.
5. Do your homework and chores without having to be reminded.
6. If you have a change in plans or know you're going to be late, call and let your parents know.
7. Say "Please," "Thank you" and "Excuse me" at home, and you will do so automatically everywhere else.
8. Be willing to work for what you want.
9. Take pride in the way you look.
10. Let your parents know that you love and appreciate them. Tomorrow may be too late.

10 TIPS ON HOW TO BE A GOOD KID FROM AN 8-YEAR-OLD

1. Help with chores.
2. Say, "Yes, ma'am" and "Yes, sir."
3. Do what your parents say.
4. If you hurt someone, or hurt their feelings, say you are sorry.
5. Be nice to guests.
6. Don't say bad words.
7. Use good manners everywhere.
8. Be nice to your brother or sister if you have one.
9. Say your prayers every night.
10. Love everybody, especially your parents. - JEFF PURINTON, PALATKA, FLA.

A COLLECTION FROM OTHER LISTS SUBMITTED

1. Don't swear, drink or smoke. It makes parents wonder where they went wrong.
2. Don't ask your parents if they had lovers before they were married. It's none of your business, and you probably won't get a straight answer anyway.
3. Don't complain when you're served spaghetti three times in a row. It beats going to bed hungry.
4. Always be totally honest in what you say or do, even if it means getting busted.
5. When you're wrong, admit it, and take the consequences.
6. Pick up after yourself. Your mother is not your maid.
7. If your parents' marriage breaks up, don't act like they've ruined your life. They may have improved it.
8. Take good care of the body your parents (and God) gave you.
9. Do your best in school. Your future depends on it.
10. Include your parents in your prayers. You are always in theirs.

Junior League director to speak

Mrs. Patty Wilkinson of Lubbock will speak to the Junior League of Midland at 9:30 a.m. tomorrow at Theatre Midland on "Having It All," a humorous approach to balancing families, career and volunteer work.

Mrs. Wilkinson serves as an Area V director of the Junior League. She was also president of the Junior League of Lubbock for 1980-81, Area V council member in 1981-82 and Area V council chairman/director in 1982-83.

In addition to her Junior League involvement, she serves on the boards of the Lubbock Civic Ballet and the South Plains Perinatal Association. Mrs. Wilkinson is president of the Sorority House Corporation Board, secretary of the vestry of St. Paul's Episcopal Church and is a Girl Scout leader.

The public is invited to attend the talk.

A NEW "SPECIAL COLLECTION" FROM PEPPERIDGE FARM!

Among the items considered worthy of being called "special collections" are some of the finer things in life - porcelain, jewels, paintings. Now joining that elite group is a new line of Special Collection Cookies from Pepperidge Farm. Chocolate Chunk Pecan and Almond Supreme Cookies are made especially for people who crave a bit of extra indulgence in their life.

Almond Supreme are extra-special because they are made with rich, creamy butter, bits of almonds and a second helping of slivered almonds on top just before baking. Chocolate Chunk Pecan are filled generously with chocolate chunks (not just ordinary chocolate chips) and pecans sprinkled on top for extra flavor and crunch in every bite. Both varieties can proudly claim to contain no artificial colors, flavors or preservatives.

Pepperidge Farm's new Special Collection Cookies not only make one of the finer things in life more accessible, but more delicious too!!

Fire stations under siege

FORT WORTH (AP) — Years ago, Fort Worth fire halls were neighborhood gathering points. Residents would crowd around and discuss politics, the fire chief, the mayor or just about anything.

But as the years passed, so did that congenial attitude toward fire stations.

Firefighters now are subjected to the jeers of their neighbors when they sit in the yard outside the station; sometimes the neighbors shoot at them.

Recurring vandalism and burglaries have led city officials to include security fences in the specifications for all new fire stations. At older stations, some firefighters have volunteered to build fences themselves to protect their property while they are out on call.

DEPUTY FIRE CHIEF S.L. Williams said the theft of money from the sale of garbage bags at stations has lessened since the department installed safes and provided for an armored ar to pick up the money at every fire station that sells bags.

But despite the crime, only half a dozen of the city's 30 stations have fences, Williams said.

Firefighters asked the City Council to have fences built around existing stations, but when the city staff was forced to cut costs, the $2,000-per-station budget item for fences was cut.

"It's on hold at present until we can find the funds to do it," Williams said.

FIRE STATIONS, HE SAID, "are just vulnerable because they are out in the open. They often don't have other businesses right next to them. The cars sit there for 24 hours at a time and are more vulnerable than cars that are in and out.

"There have been some firefighters who have gone out in the morning to go home and their battery was gone, and there have been some who've gone out and their car was gone," he said.

Williams said several firefighters have volunteered to install the fencing. By using off-duty firefighters and paying them overtime, he said, the city could install the fencing for two-thirds what private companies have bid.

Firefighters at the city's 30 stations spend 24 hours on duty and 48 hours off. Many times, returning from saving someone's home, they have found that thieves helped themselves to personal radios, fire equipment, money, walkie-talkies, clothes and even food.

Recently, while firefighters at a southside station were out, a thief broke into the station and took the rubber boots and fire-resistant coats of the station's two off-duty crews.

AT SEVERAL STATIONS, firefighters park their cars inside the station next to the fire trucks because of vandalism.

Recently, one thief was brazen enough to break into a station and drive off with a district chief's car while a half-dozen firefighters slept nearby.

The necessity to take such precautions marks a turnaround from years past, when the fire station was a central feature in community life.

"(The stations) were called fire halls years ago because they were a community hall," said District Fire Chief Jim Noah, the department's historian. "Unfortunately, due to the times, instead of being wide open, we have to put chains and locks on the doors to protect them from vandals and thieves.

"When I was a kid, usually the only telephone was in the fire station. It was considered a public phone, even though the firefighters paid for it themselves," Noah said.

NOW THE PHONE NUMBERS of fire stations are unlisted — a central operator uses radio to dispatch firefighters.

"Many years ago the firemen would even have an ice cream social. Although it was mainly for their families, a lot of neighborhood people would come," Noah said.

Under Fort Worth's old alderman form of city government, each council member was assigned to oversee specific departments. The city had a police commissioner, a fire commissioner and a water and sewer commissioner.

Noah said the fire and police commissioners developed much of their political power base from each deparrtment, with considerable arm-twisting going on at fire stations.

"In the old days, when a new fire station was occupied, the neighbors would furnish the silverware and cooking utensils, because the city didn't provide much," he said.

AN ARRANGEMENT between two elderly southside women and their firefighter neighbors was indicative of the relationships that once existed between firefighters and the community.

"These two elderly women used to live across from old Station 10. If they were out late, they'd come over and get us to check out their house and make sure no men were hiding in it," Noah said.

Now, said Capt. Johnny Jones, some residents fire guns at the station. If firefighters are sitting outside, they often hear threats that include racial slurs.

Texans unite with money

AUSTIN (AP) — Employees of the state treasurer's office found themselves in an enjoyable position — they were giving money away.

Actually, they were trying to give money back — more than $7 million belonging to about 20,000 Texans who have never gotten utility deposits, forgotten about bank accounts or left stock dividends unclaimed.

Wearing white and green T-shirts bearing the signature of state Treasurer Ann Richards, 10 employees spent Sunday fielding more than 400 calls from people who had found their names in lists published in supplements in Sunday editions of 35 newspapers across the state.

The ads were placed by the treasurer's office in an attempt to reunite the funds with their rightful owners.

If callers could provide preliminary identification matching information stored in the agency's computer, treasury office employees began filling out claim forms for them.

One call came from a South Texas couple who filed a claim for a forgotten bank account containing $14,000.

Paula Smith, director of the unclaimed property division of the treasurer's office, said the unclaimed money ranges from $50 to $37,000 and that some of the funds date back to 1925.

Those who found their names on the list responded with "disbelief, then delight — like finding money in the street," said Ms. Smith.

The claim forms will be sent to the callers to complete. Additional proof of identity — such as account numbers or copies of probated wills for heirs claiming property — is required in some instances.

Cisneros downplays reports he was upset

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros returned from his five-nation tour with the Bipartisan Commission on Central America saying he did not consider his protests of a meeting with an anti-Sandinisti guerrilla leader a major issue.

Cisneros, who held a news conference after he returned Sunday night, downplayed his earlier protest of the meeting in Costa Rica between Nicaraguan rebel leader Alfonso Robelo and members of the commission, including commission leader Henry Kissinger.

He told reporters that neither he nor Kissinger treated the matter as a major issue and said it got more media attention than it deserved.

Cisneros said he believes social and economic reform, not military action, are the best solutions to the problems of Central America.

Staggering debt, poverty and security are major problems in all of the countries, he said.

He said the United States should provide major financial assistance in such a way that it reaches the poor.

The debt makes social reform difficult, he said, because massive spending only increases the debt while too little spending invites revolution.

But he also said the United States must maintain a presence in the region.

"It is not possible or practical to withdraw," Cisneros said Sunday.

He said Costa Rica, which has democratic civilian rule and no army, is worried about attacks from the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

He described El Salvador as "a nation at war" and one where human rights violations are rampant.

Guatemala, he said, has quelled insurgency with stern military tactics and is receiving no U.S. aid because of it. However, he said, the country has an opportunity now to move ahead with social reform.

He said Honduras is trying to work toward reform but has severe security problems because of its long common border with Nicaragua.

Residents incensed about burnings

PORT LAVACA (AP) — A long-simmering standoff over where to dispose of the toxic wastes produced by industry may soon be focused on the Gulf of Mexico, where some Texas coastal residents are battling a plan to burn the chemicals offshore.

Earlier this month, a flotilla of almost 50 shrimp boats staged a demonstration against the waste burnings, which were tested in 1981 and 1982.

The battle is symbolic of the larger issue of toxic waste management, says an official at the Environmental Protection Agency, which is responsible for policing the PCBs and dioxins and other dangerous chemical byproducts.

"This is a problem that is manifesting itself in the Gulf of Mexico," the EPA official, who asked that his name not be used, told the Dallas Morning News. "The issue of siting is the most difficult part in trying to solve the hazardous waste issue. And it's so emotional."

Illinois-based Chemical Waste Management Inc. conducted test burnings of toxic waste on two specially equipped ships positioned 170 miles off the Texas coast, east of Port Isabel.

EPA reported that the ships destroyed 99.9 percent of of the 800,000 gallons of toxic chemical waste aboard.

But the data from the test burns has been criticized amid charges of conflict of interest because TRW Inc., the firm hired by EPA to monitor the tests, was under contract to Chemical Waste Management to study the burns.

Critics contend the waste disposal method threatens a multi-million dollar seafood industry while chemical company officials say the incineration is the safest, most efficient way to get rid of the toxic wastes.

"When you've got a $500 million seafood industry that depends upon the Gulf, it's not worth the risk," says Tony Reisinger, a Texas A&M University marine extension agent in San Benito. "We don't know what's going to happen."

"Unless the public allows safe efficient and cost-effective means of disposal of our hazardous wastes, we can count on the fact that they're going to be improperly disposed of," argues Frank Krohn, an official with Chemical Waste Management.
