Mild weather helps opening of Amarillo's Tri-State Fair

Staff Writer

AMARILLO — An estimated crowd of 35,000 people were on hand Monday for the opening day of the Tri-State Fair.

In addition to near perfect weather, opening day fair-goers were treated to a free concert by the Bellamy Brothers, courtesy of KWAS radio.

As the country duo opened their first show at 6:30 p.m., the sounds of hits like "Let Your Love Flow" wafted out over the expansive midway.

Ray Bernard of Hereford enjoyed the music from a nearby cattle barn where he was bathing his son's grand champion reserve steer.

"It's my son's animal, I just get to do all the fun stuff like wash him," Bernard said. He noted that the music made a nice diversion from the task at hand.

Like most events of its kind, the fair offered food as the main event. Along with a host of regulars like cotton candy and hot dogs, this year's festivities include such exotic offerings as fried ice cream and elephant ears.

Evangelistic Church of Amarillo was set to feed the body and soul. Their booth offered stuffed potatoes, pizza pockets and the Roman Road to Heaven. Next door the Shriners had bingo.

Bob Hicks was selling calf and turkey fries at the Corral.

"One year we sold 1,100 pounds of calf fries. At about a half pound per calf, that's a lot of bull, huh?" Hicks said, laughing.

For Jennifer Jones, 5, of Amarillo the day's big event was the Ball Walk. For three tickets ($1.20 in grown-up talk) her parents set her free in an ocean of small plastic balls.

"So far we've had about 800 kids," said Jim Adams, who manages the Ball Walk. "They get 3-4 minutes. I keep a real close eye on 'em so it stays real safe."

Prior to bathing in the sea of plastic balls, Jennifer had that midway favorite, a corny dog.

"She said she wanted one," Jennifer said, pointing to her sister. "So I wanted one too."

Nearby, 11-year-old Micheal Burk was holding three giant stuffed animals.

"We've been here about four hours. I won these for about three dollars," Burk said.

Another fair-goer, Terry Easterling, didn't do so well. He said he had spent $10-$15 in two hours. See FAIR, Page 2

Reagan welcomes OK for Canada trade pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan welcomed Senate approval of a free-trade agreement with Canada as a prelude to a new surge of economic growth in both countries, but the accord's future is clouded by political conflict in Ottawa.

"It will benefit our people for generations to come," Reagan said Monday following 83-9 Senate approval of the agreement with America's top trading partner.

"The agreement will create jobs and stimulate economic growth on both sides of the border and create the largest open market in the world," he said.

The Senate approved not only the agreement signed Jan. 2 by Reagan and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney but also a bill that would set the stage for the 10-year phaseout of tariffs called for under the pact.

In Canada, final approval of the agreement remains blocked by political wrangling.

Plans to phase out tariffs have been passed by the Canadian House of Commons but are bottled up in the Senate, where the controlling Liberal Party says action must await new parliamentary elections.

Mulroney is expected to call elections within a few weeks, and defeat for his Conservative Party could doom the agreement.

U.S. officials said little about the political wrangling north of the border. Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee which largely shaped the legislation, said Canadian political disputes should be left to Canadians.

U.S. Trade Representative Clayton K. Yeutter told reporters following the Senate's action that it "puts us one step closer to the culmination of a century-long dream on both sides of the border."

On the roll call, 43 Democrats joined 40 Republicans in voting for the measure, which never had any partisan coloring, while seven Democrats and two Republicans opposed it.

Israel is the only country that currently has a free-trade agreement with the United States. But the volume is small compared with the $131 billion in goods a year that make Canada this country's top trading partner.

There has been talk of free-trade agreements with Japan, No. 2 in volume of trade with the United States, and Mexico. But no such deals are on the horizon.

Senators with home-state industries that might suffer under the Canadian agreement waged a largely symbolic rear guard fight against it.

Some lawmakers from wheat producing states objected to a lingering Canadian subsidy for rail transportation of grain from Saskatchewan and Alberta to the big eastern port at Thunder Bay, Ontario. Under the agreement, however, current subsidies for sending wheat to Vancouver would be dropped.

Transportation costs represent a substantial portion of the price of grain, and American wheat producers have complained that farmers north of the border will be able to undercut them because of the continued subsidies.

American energy companies have complained that lower-priced Canadian products are likely to undercut them.

And fearing that Hollywood and American publishers would overshadow Canada's home-grown culture, Canadians also insisted on curbs affecting U.S. cultural exports.

Bentsen urged approval of the measure although he was gone from the Senate by the time of the vote, as was GOP vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle.

Grand jury hands down indictments

By DEE DEE LARAMORE

Richard Gonzales remained in Gray County Jail early today on a combined bond of $80,000 after he was indicted by the Gray County grand jury on one count of first degree murder and three counts of attempted murder Monday.

Grand jurors met in 223rd District Court Monday. After a day of deliberating evidence from the district attorney's office, they handed down 11 indictments against six persons.

Most of the morning was spent hearing evidence in the murder and attempted murder cases, said Assistant District Attorney Harold Comer.

District Judge Don Cain set bond for Gonzales at $50,000 for the murder charge and $10,000 for each count of attempted murder.

The charges stem from the April 14 shooting that left one man dead and two others seriously injured.

Humberto Castillo Granillo, 19, died instantly when he was shot between the eyes by a gunman who walked up to him and three others as they sat in a car behind a mobile home at 310 S. Houston in the early morning hours of Aug. 14. The gunman reportedly leaned in the window of the vehicle, asked "Are you Miguel?" and then sprayed the occupants with bullets.

Comer identified those injured in the shooting as a 16-year-old female and Miguel Angel Castillo, 24, 310 S. Houston. A fourth passenger, San Juana Carmina Cortez, 19, 925 E. Murphy, escaped the gunman's bullets.

Santa Fe Railway to repair intersection at Starkweather

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Motorists who routinely cross the railroad tracks at Starkweather and Atchison will find their routine disturbed for the next couple of weeks beginning Sept. 26.

Starting at 8 a.m. Monday, the crossing will be closed while Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway workers repair the track bed. Ralph C. Chilelli, roadmaster, said his men will be re-doing the subgrade of the track, digging out mud that had accumulated and installing drain pipes to improve the drainage.

Chilelli said the subgrade was filled with mud because of the recent rains, with the added problem of inadequate drainage.

The engineer said he expects the initial work to be completed in five days. After a waiting period of about a week to allow the dirt to settle, a local contractor will then come in and repave the crossing, he said.

Cost of the repair work was not available. Repair of the railroad crossing will require the combined efforts of the railroad company and the city of Pampa, said Forrest Cloyd, traffic engineer for the city of Pampa. After the railroad's repair work is completed, he said, city workers, supervised by Street Superintendent Gene Winegeart, will repave the grade leading up to the railroad tracks.

Cloyd estimated the resurfacing would be approximately $3,000, based on the cost to repave the area in 1984.

Six railroad tracks run through the area where the repair work is to be done, Chilelli said. Approximately 35 trains pass the crossing each day, he said.

City and railroad officials are asking motorists to use Cuyler Street underpass while the repair work is being done.

Those detouring to Cuyler Street will see that city workers are busy with curb renovation at the Cuyler and Atchison and Cuyler and Tyng intersections, Cloyd said.

"We're replacing broken curbs and putting in handicap ramps at both those intersections," Cloyd said. Charles Smith, utilities supervisor, had the fire hydrants replaced in those areas also, he said.

Other areas where curb and sidewalk renovation are planned include the 100 block of South Russell Street in front of the Trailways Bus station and the curbs at Frost and Foster streets, Kingsmill and Somerville streets and at the Combs-Worley Building, he said. The Russell Street renovation will be a joint project between the city and Trailways, Cloyd said.

"We had wanted to do these areas when we put in the new curb and handicapped ramps downtown, but we ran out of money before we got it done," the city engineer said. "Now we have some extra to put into it and get more of this out of the way."

Cloyd estimated that renovation of curbs at each intersection costs approximately $2,500. He expects the work to be completed on the Cuyler Street intersections within the next two or three weeks.

The renovation does not appear to be affecting traffic except when the city crew is tearing out a curb, he said. "I would ask (motorists) to use caution around a barricade," he added.

Flat SAT scores provide ammunition for many viewpoints

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Average SAT scores were virtually unchanged for the fourth straight year, but that won't stop educators and interest groups from quarreling about the significance of those numbers.

Scores on the verbal section of the Scholastic Aptitude Test fell two points, to an average 428, while the national average on the math section was unchanged at 476, according to the College Board's annual report released Monday.

Both portions of the multiple-choice exam taken each year by 1.1 million college-bound students are scored on a scale of 200-800, with a combined 1600 being perfect.

The combined math-verbal average of 904 marked the first decline in eight years, and followed three years of no change at 906.

Minority students, however, continued a decade-long pattern of impressive gains.

National averages on the ACT, the predominant college entrance exam in 28 states mostly in the West and Midwest, also were little changed. The approximately 1 million students who took the ACT last school year averaged 18.8 on a scale of 1-36, up slightly from the 18.7 average the year before, according to the American College Testing Program, the Iowa City, Iowa-based organization that administers the test.

The College Board painted the "stability" of test scores as good news of a sort. Board president Donald Stewart said scores are holding up well despite a 13 percent increase in the number of test-takers in the last two years alone. More test-takers usually bring down the averages.

But to a nation that's heard much talk for five years from politicians and educators about how reform would transform school life, the latest SAT news was bound to be disappointing.

In a statement Monday, Education Secretary William J. Bennett blamed the school establishment for the falloff in scores: "No medals for America in this news. I said in April that 'the absolute level at which our improvements are taking place is unacceptably low.' Today it's a bit lower, and still not acceptable. C'mon, team! Back into training."

Added Scott Thomson, executive director of the National Association of Secondary School Principals: "We are always disappointed when the scores don't improve each year, because secondary schools are more rigorous than they were five years ago."

"If the impact doesn't show in the next year or two, then we really have to go back and seriously reexamine the problems," Thomson said.

The flat SAT scores may, in fact, be evidence of what American Federation of Teachers leader Albert Shanker and others have said recently: that reform has only nipped at the margins of classroom life in all but a few school districts.

Black students in the class of '88 averaged 353 on the verbal portion, up two points, and math scores rose seven points to 384 — especially heartening since the number of black test-takers rose 39 percent in three years from 70,156 in 1985 to 97,483 last year.

Scores by blacks have risen 51 points since 1976, as the scores of all test-takers gained only one point.

But the gulf between blacks and whites remains 198 points. And recent gains have not stilled standardized test critics who accuse the SAT of cultural and racial bias.

Nonetheless, higher SATs by minority students provide arguments for those in favor of continuing and expanding Head Start and other federal education programs started in the 1960s and 1970s that the College Board and others now credit with helping boost scores in the 1980s.

A more subtle issue is the persistent gap between males and females. Males scored an average 498 math and 435 verbal; females scored 455 math, 422 verbal.

County clerk's office getting busy for November elections

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Preparations for the November elections have begun, even though the big day is still 2 1/2 months away.

Gray County Clerk Wanda Carter said Monday she expects the ballots she ordered to arrive "well within" the necessary 45 days before the election.

Once the ballots arrive, she said, more than 100 will be mailed to qualified voters who live overseas. At present, Carter has 83 military and 21 civilian applications to vote in the upcoming election, she said. "I didn't realize we had so many over there."

Absentee voting begins at 8 a.m. Oct. 19 and will continue through 5 p.m. Nov. 4, Carter added. The county clerk's office will be closed during the lunch hour except for the last week of absentee voting, she added.

"Anyone can vote absentee. They've changed that now. You don't have to have a reason," the county clerk said.

Anyone who wishes to vote by mail must be 65 years old or older or be disabled, she explained. Those who want to vote by mail must contact Carter by an application from the county clerk's office or by a letter explaining why the voter cannot go to a voting place.

"If a husband and wife are both applying, they both have to sign and explain why they need to vote by mail," Carter added.

Overseas voters also have to be in an application, she said. Nov. 1 is the last day the county clerk can accept applications by mail, she said.

Ballots by mail will be accepted until the polls close at 7 p.m. the day of election, she said. "I always go by the box at 7 p.m.

to be sure not any more ballots have come in," she said.

An elevator is available at the County Courthouse for absentee voters who need it, Carter said. Also, she said that a recent survey of the polling places in Gray County showed that all but one were accessible to the handicapped. Horace Mann Elementary School has a sloped curb for the handicapped, but does not yet have a ramp into the building. Horace Mann Principal Tommy Lindsey said there were no definite plans for building a ramp at the present time.

A school for the 28 election judges and their assistants is set for 7 p.m. Oct. 25, Carter said. Elections judges will be given the ballots at that time.

Carter plans to test the ballot-counting machines as soon as possible. A public testing of the machines will be announced at a later date, she said.

U.N. General Assembly convenes

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United Nations opens its 43rd General Assembly with enhanced prestige due to the Iran-Iraq truce and Afghan accords, a reputation that may tarnish once debate begins.

Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar wryly observed that the world body, convening today, has high expectations to live up to.

"If the United Nations is treated as an angel, then we must remember that the halo that slips 10 inches is a noose," he said at a luncheon of the U.N. Correspondents Association on Monday.

The session opens with the election of the president of the General Assembly after a behind-the-scenes fight that has revived some lingering enmity from the 1982 Falkland Islands War between Britain and Argentina.

Foreign Minister Dante Caputo of Argentina has campaigned hard against Barbados' U.N. ambassador, Dame Ruth Nita Barrow, who Britain has backed.

Diplomatic sources said the race was too close to call, and there could be several secret ballots before one candidate wins a simple majority of the assembly's 159 voting member states. The outgoing president is Peter Florin, from East Germany's Foreign Ministry.

The United Nations has won progress and praise with its Iran-Iraq truce, Afghan accord, and other looming peace initiatives in southern Africa, Cambodia and the Western Sahara. But the general debate that begins Monday may generate more heat than light.

One fight is expected over a proposed address by South Korea on the 40th anniversary of its founding. Both it and communist North Korea have non-voting observer status and cannot speak before the assembly without an invitation.

The United States, Japan and other nations back South Korea's speech. But the Soviet bloc has opposed the move and sponsored a resolution Monday inviting North Korea to deliver an address.

China has not sponsored either resolution but opposes a South Korean speech.

On Monday, President Reagan is to deliver his final speech to the world body, which his administration has criticized over the years for bureaucracy, waste and an anti-Western bias.

The Soviet foreign minister, Eduard A. Shevardnadze, and President Francois Mitterrand of France also are to address the assembly. The session will hear 13 heads of state, six prime ministers and numerous foreign ministers.

The assembly will again take up intransigent issues such as peace in the Middle East and the Palestinian uprising in Israel's occupied lands.

All he had to show for it was a giant inflatable crayon.

"It's going in our 2-year-old's room," he said.

As an assortment of cowboys and punk rockers roamed up and down the midway, the second Bellamy Brothers show in the Coliseum was getting under way. Like the first, it was standing room only.

The duo, in their 16th year of chart life, opened with "Let Your Love Flow," a pop-country hit from 1976.

They then moved into renditions of "Crazy From the Heart," "Sugar Daddy," "Old Hippie" and "Lie to You for Your Love." Each song was a number one on the country music charts.

During "Old Hippie" the crowd sprang to life, clapping wildly. On the front row three teen-age girls in midrifts and tight jeans waved wildly at their heroes on stage and mouthed the song's lyrics.

They were not even born when the Vietnam war, the song's central theme, was raging. That didn't seem to matter.

The title track to the Brother's new album, Rebel Without a Clue, was the next song. By this time they had the crowd in the palm of their hands.

Other concert numbers included "Santa Fe," "If I Said You Had a Beautiful Body," "Kids of the Baby Boom" and their final number, "Redneck Girl."

For many of the women and young girls in the crowd, the last number was just too much to hold back on.

said the indictment was enhanced because of a prior felony conviction.

Last month, police responded to a report of burglary-in-progress at 1060 Prairie Dr., the residence of Mrs. Fay Coleman. A man was seen leaving the house carrying a portable television set.

Police chased the burglar east through the Prairie Village area to the 500 block of Harlem. Bailey was arrested by Cpl. Wayne Williams at 532 Harlem. The television set was recovered in an unrelated vehicle two blocks east of the site of the burglary.

Two indictments, one alleging forgery and a second alleging attempted forgery, were handed down against Scott Allen Frith, 625 N. Wynne. The charges result from the passing of a forged check for $45 to Randy's Food Store and an attempt to cash a second forged check for $110, both on July 9, Comer said.

Jackie Lee Young, 29, 1121 Var-non Dr., was indicted on a charge of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle. The indictment concerns the alleged theft of a 1977 Ford LTD from Bill Allison Auto Sales on Aug. 31, Comer said.

Two counts of driving while intoxicated, subsequent offense, was alleged in an indictment naming Clifton Duane Norris, 24, 1920 N. Banks. Norris was arrested at the same place on Aug. 10 and Aug. 12 on charges of driving while intoxicated.

Jimmy Lynn Jones, 24, of 1601

N. Somerville, #1002, was also indicted by the grand jury Monday on felony driving while intoxicated charges.

Judge Cain set 10 a.m. Oct. 24 as the time and date he will hear arraignments on these felony charges, Comer said.

Evidence in the drug and weapons raid at 906 E. Browning, Aug. 26, was not submitted to the grand jury during Monday's proceedings, Comer said. "We haven't received the laboratory report about the suspected controlled substances (found in the raid)," he said.

Pam Spangler and Danny White, both of the Browning Street address, were arrested in connection with the raid and charged with possession of a controlled substance. Both are free on bond.

The Lebanese Shiite Moslem lived in West Germany from 1982 to 1984 and speaks German, but very little English.

Shortly after the airliner was seized and Stethem singled out because of his military identification card, Derickson said she was called upon to translate for Hamadi.

"Mr. Stethem was taken to the last row of first class. He was asked where he was from and what he did. He said he was a navy diver. I tried to translate the word navy for Hamadi," Derickson said.

Derickson said Hamadi was confused because the German word for navy is "marine."

"I tried to convince him that Stethem was not a U.S. Marine, that his job was underwater welding," she said.

Derickson also described the moments just before Stethem was killed after the plane landed for the second time in Beirut.

More testimony goes against Hamadi

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Flight attendant Uli Derickson testified today that a U.S. Navy diver bravely endured savage beatings at the hands of the hijackers of a TWA jetliner before he was murdered.

Her statements came as the murder and piracy trial of Mohammed Ali Hamadi continued in a heavily-guarded courtroom in Frankfurt.

The hijackers "took him up to the cockpit and started to brutally beat him. They beat on him as long as he stood," Derickson told the court of Navy diver Robert Stethem's ordeal.

"When Mr. Stethem collapsed, one of the hijackers took the armrest of a seat — it still had the screws sticking out of it — and beat on him."

She said that when Stethem collapsed, one hijacker "jumped on his ribs with his full weight."

Fighting back sobs, Derickson added: "Mr. Stethem was a very courageous man. He never made a sound."

The German-born flight attendant said that after the beating, Hamadi turned to her and said: "Look at him now, he thinks he's so strong."

Hamadi has admitted taking part in the hijacking, but has denied killing Stethem.

Thirty-nine Americans were held hostage for 17 days in the 1985 ordeal.

In earlier testimony today, Derickson recalled the harrowing moments just after the airliner was seized after takeoff from Athens airport.

She said the hijackers threatened to blow up the airplane if they were not allowed into the cockpit.

"They said they had come to die. They said it didn't make any difference to them," Derickson said.

Derickson, a 44-year-old U.S. citizen, said Hamadi held a gun to her head shortly after the Athens to Rome flight took off on June 14, 1985.

She said another hijacker kicked her and swore at her.

Derickson, the purser aboard TWA flight 847, is credited with shielding passengers whose names sounded Jewish by hiding their passports, court records indicate.

Former hostages said Derickson also helped to calm the tense situation by acting as a translator for Hamadi during the hostage ordeal.

Dukakis proposes energy summit to be chaired by Bentsen

By RUTH RENDON
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP)—Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis told an energy forum that he would form a bipartisan energy summit after the election to address the nation's energy policy.

The summit, he said, would be chaired by his running mate, U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

"I'm going to ask them to design a comprehensive energy policy; a policy that gives producers a fair price; and consumers a fair deal," Dukakis told about 1,000 gathered Monday afternoon at a national energy forum at the Houston Club.

Dukakis was joined by Bentsen, both of which lashed at the Reagan administration for not implementing an effective national energy policy.

"And I'm sorry he's (Bush) not here today to discuss oil and gas," Dukakis said. "But he couldn't make it, because he had a scheduling problem. A former Texas oilman and he has no time to engage in a discussion of energy, one of the fundamental challenges facing this nation."

The Massachusetts governor said Bush changes his stand on energy policy depending on which state he's visiting.

"George Bush is like a coin. They just flip him: sometimes he lands on his head, sometimes on his tail," he said to a loud roar and applause from the partisan crowd at the national energy forum sponsored by a group called "People For An Energy Policy."

The group was formed by oil industry executives specifically to address what they termed a need for a national energy policy.

"We want nothing more than to hear the candidates' views on an energy policy," said A.H. Wadsworth, chairman of Wadsworth Oil Co. of Houston and chairman of People For An Energy Policy, adding the group is non-partisan.

Bentsen, a three-time Texas senator and former Houston insurance executive, also lashed at Bush's stand on energy and for choosing Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle as his running mate. Bentsen called Quayle an enemy to the energy industry.

"George Bush will tell you he's an oilman. But when it comes to energy policy this administration has drilled a dry hole," Bentsen said to cheers and loud applause.

Bentsen conceded that many energy businessmen tend to vote Republican, but challenged them to ask what the Reagan administration has done for the industry.

"What have they done to help Texas? What have they done to deserve your support?"

Bentsen said the Democratic ticket supports tax incentives for drilling and to opening new markets for natural gas.

After the forum appearance, Dukakis and Bentsen attended a $1,000-a-plate reception and dinner that was expected to raise $1 million for the Democratic campaign.

The event was at Houston's Hyatt Regency Hotel, where Bush officially began his GOP campaign for the White House last year.

Bush was invited to the energy forum but declined to participate, Wadsworth said. Bush and President Reagan are planning to campaign in Texas and Houston later in the week.

Instead, former U.S. Sen. John Tower of Texas appeared at a Houston press conference Monday on behalf of the Bush campaign, describing Bush as a knowledgeable oilman and Dukakis as a candidate speaking on a crucial Texas issue he knows little about.

"Mr. Dukakis has a new-found interest in the oil and gas industry in Texas," Tower said.

"But I find that a little hard to believe for a man who opposed the repeal of the windfall profits tax, who continually opposed the deregulation of the price of oil and gas, a man who represents a state that's been getting drunk on cheap, imported oil."

Outlining Bush's support of tax breaks for enhanced recovery efforts and for independent exploration, Tower described Bentsen as a Texan who was being exploited for campaign purposes, only to be shut out of his own administration later.

"If we value the economy of this state, if we want to see the creation of a climate in this country in which economic recovery in Texas is possible, we have to elect a man who is sympathetic to our situation," Tower said.

Gov. Clements tours areas struck by hurricane, tornadoes

By DAVID SEDENO
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO (AP)—Gov. Bill Clements, touring an area ravaged by tornadoes spawned by Hurricane Gilbert, expressed shock that the casualty toll was low and said federal emergency assistance is virtually assured.

While San Antonio officials worked to get a disaster designation, officials on the southern Texas coast, already declared a disaster area, say the designation may have been premature.

At least 41 tornadoes struck Texas in the aftermath of Hurricane Gilbert, but only two San Antonio residents were killed, including a man whose house was crushed by a utility pole and a woman whose mobile was ripped apart by a twister.

The hurricane caused minimal damage to the Texas coast, but about a dozen tornadoes struck San Antonio, causing more than $35 million damage.

Clements declared Brownsville a disaster area on Saturday and toured the Rio Grande Valley and San Antonio on Monday.

Clements said he would wait for information from Bexar County officials before declaring it a disaster area. The declaration would pave the way for the county to receive assistance from the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

The designation would enable businesses to receive low-interest loans from the Small Business Administration and could ultimately help homeless residents with temporary housing for a certain period, officials said.

"It's amazing to me that no one was killed," Clements said as he climbed over bricks on a tour of The Lodge Apartments in San Antonio.

A twister that hit the complex early Saturday overturned cars, destroyed 120 residential units, damaged 260 units and left 300 people homeless.

"This is far worse than anything in Brownsville. There is no place anywhere that suffered this kind of damage," Clements said.

Clements was escorted on the tour by San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros and Bexar County Judge Tom Vickers.

Vickers said city and county officials are assessing the damage and would try to get a report to Clements later this week.

"The approval and certification of it being declared a disaster area can happen very quickly, but the individual payment will be slower than that," Clements said. "But the first step is to have it declared an emergency, and I don't think we'll have any problem doing that."

While San Antonio-area officials are discussing the disaster designation, their counterparts in the Rio Grande Valley say they may not need federal aid.

Harlingen Mayor Bill Card said his city suffered up to $800,000 in damage to mostly private property and said the federal assistance might not be needed.

A city-owned hangar leased to the Confederate Air Force suffered about $100,000 damage, Card said.

Brownsville Mayor Ygnacio Garza said the city spent thousands of dollars preparing and cleaning up after the storm.

"Whether it will meet the criteria for a true disaster, I don't think so, or I'm not sure and really we're not too upset about that," Garza said.

South Padre Island City Manager Eduardo Campriano said the storm caused about $100,000 in damage to city property, mostly road damage.

In Corpus Christi, Nueces County Commissioner J.P. Luby said two beach parks suffered about $100,000 damage and he was considering a request for federal aid.

But most of the damage was in San Antonio, which had set up shelters for Gulf Coast residents fleeing their homes.

The storm system spawned a tornado early Saturday, killing the woman at the mobile home.

Another tornado cut through Kelly Air Force Base, causing $3 million damage to 12 buildings and another $25 million to aircraft parts.

Another tornado destroyed the air-conditioning system at the Veterans Administration Hospital, causing $2 million.

Another tornado struck the apartment buildings and several residential neighborhoods, causing at least $5 million damage.

"You can imagine it could have been 50 and 100 deaths," Cisneros told Clements. "We are just very fortunate, and we're grateful to you for your help."

American family happy after defecting to the Soviet Union

HOUSTON (AP)—An American family who fled to the Soviet Union almost two years ago to get away from what they said was harassment from the FBI say they miss the United States but are happy in the communist country.

Arnold and Lauren Lockshin and their three children fled Houston Oct. 8, 1986, and turned up in Moscow two days later, claiming that they were endangered by the FBI because of their past association with the Communist Party.

They left suddenly, leaving behind food in the refrigerator and a porch light burning.

"We're very angry that we had to flee our country," Mrs. Lockshin told the Houston Chronicle. "Angry that the FBI forced us to leave. They threatened our lives. They threatened our livelihood. They destroyed our livelihoods."

U.S. officials have denied the Lockshins were the object of government-organized harassment.

"The statements attributed to Mr. Lockshin, alleging that the U.S. government harassed him and threatened his life because of his political opinions, are patently absurd," said State Department spokesman Pete Hernandez.

The defection came after the family visited the Russian mission at the United Nations in New York in August 1986 and later the Soviet Embassy in Washington seeking political asylum.

At the same time, Lockshin lost his $50,000-a-year job as a cancer researcher at the Stehlin Foundation at St. Joseph Hospital in Houston.

He is doing cancer research at the All-Union Cancer Research Center of the Soviet Academy of Medical Sciences. Mrs. Lockshin has co-authored a book they claim is being barred from publication in the United States.

"We're happy here. No one harasses us," said Mrs. Lockshin, whose children are in schools and speaking Russian. "We're able to lead normal lives."

Lockshin, once a full-time, paid organizer of the Communist Party in America, now receives 500 rubles per month, well above an average Soviet citizen's salary, and pays 50 rubles per month for rent.

He said there are some Soviets who do not agree with his anti-American attitudes, including Jewish dissidents who resent his criticism of the United States.

"They're not particularly pleased that a Jewish family comes here and says life in America is not so good," Lockshin said.

The Lockshins lost almost all of their belongings when they fled, but provided no details about their sudden defection except to say their lives were endangered by the FBI.

"Sure, we miss the United States. We're Americans," said

Mrs. Lockshin. "We're not coming back for more of the same, and we're not coming back to be killed by the FBI."

They have written a book about their experiences, titled Silent Terror, which is expected to be published in the Soviet Union.

However, the couple claims the FBI has blocked efforts to have the book published in the United States.

"We're unique," she said, when asked whether Americans would be interested in their story. "How many American families defect to the Soviet Union?"

Merger won't aid Hispanic education much

AUSTIN (AP)—The proposed merger of the University of Texas and Pan American University will not significantly improve educational opportunities for Hispanics, an official of a national Hispanic organization says.

Jose Garcia De Lara, national president of the League of United Latin American Citizens, says the merger would only be a positive step if the UT system equally distributes programs, degrees and tax dollars.

"The UT System has demonstrated in the past that they haven't done that," De Lara said. "UT-El Paso and UT-San Antonio don't have equal distribution of money or programs."

Although San Antonio is among the largest cities in Texas, UT-San Antonio, which is within the UT System, has no doctoral programs, he said.

Laurny Gayle White, a member of the Pan American board of regents, told the Daily Texan newspaper Monday that six of the nine board members will vote for the merger.

"People can change their mind at the last minute, but right now we've got at least six votes, and that is excluding the chairman," White said. "Voting for it would be the best thing for the whole state of Texas."

LULAC, the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund and other organizations have brought a lawsuit against the state of Texas that calls for equal education opportunities for Hispanic students.

Shan Rankin, vice president of the Pan American Board of Regents, said "many people" have speculated that the UT System's motive for the merger is to meet demands of the lawsuit, which calls for an increase in Hispanic enrollment.

But, she said, the idea for the merger was conceived in 1978, 10 years before the lawsuit was filed.

Hans Mark, UT System chancellor, said the speculation is "nonsense" because the merger would raise the percentage of UT System Hispanic students only slightly.

Bruce Erickson, public information director at Pan American University in Edinburg, said new programs in nursing, business and engineering would be made available there and would increase Hispanic opportunities if the merger is approved.

"The UT System and Dr. Mark have already demonstrated through past actions that they are seriously interested and committed to doing this," Erickson said.

Members of the Pan American Board of Regents hope the merger would encourage LULAC and the other organizations to settle out of court because of subsequent programs on the Pan American campus and its extension in Brownsville.

But De Lara said the merger only would comply with a small portion of the lawsuit's proposals.

"It could be that they will start a few programs, but that is only a drop in the bucket as far as the suit," De Lara said. "There still is a deficiency (of Hispanics), and they still would have failed to retain and recruit Hispanic students."

Computer analyst convicted on 'virus' charge

FORT WORTH (AP)—A former systems analyst has become the first Texan convicted on a charge accusing him of planting a computer "virus" to destroy records in revenge for his firing from an insurance firm.

Donald Gene Burleson, 40, convicted Monday, is believed to be the first Texas defendant to be tried and convicted of charges of harmful access to a computer, a third-degree felony that carries up to 10 years in prison and up to $5,000 in fines.

A Tarrant County jury will return to State District Judge John Bradshaw's courtroom today to consider punishment for Burleson.

Jurors were told during a technical and sometimes-complicated trial that spanned three weeks that Burleson deliberately planted a rogue program in the computer system used to store records at USPA and IRA Co., a Fort Worth-based insurance and brokerage firm.

Prosecutor Davis McCown said the so-called virus was programmed like a time bomb and was activated on Sept. 21, 1985, two days after Burleson was fired from his post as a computer programmer because of alleged personality conflicts with other employees.

"There were a series of programs built into the system as early as Labor Day (of 1985)," McCown said. "Once he got fired, those programs went off."

The destructive programs were entered into the firm's computer system via Burleson's terminal by someone who used Burleson's personal access code, expert witnesses testified.

The virus could have caused hundreds of thousands of dollars in damage to the system, but was caught and expunged after it destroyed a series of payroll records, holding up paychecks to company employees for more than a month, McCown said.

Burleson was "set up" by someone else using his terminal and code, defense lawyers contended. They attempted to prove that Burleson was vacationing in another part of the state with his son on the dates in early September when the rogue programs were entered into the computer system.

But prosecutors were able to present records that Burleson was at work and his son was attending school on those dates.

Burleson, who has been free on bond since his arrest, already has lost a civil case waged against him by USPA in connection with the incident.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Forget personality; let's have issues!!

The presidential campaign so far seems like a marathon version of Queen for a Day. Personality is everything, issues nothing. In the age of TV, a smile is worth a thousand syllogisms, a wisecrack a hundred policy statements. Alas, when the TV cameras turn off, issues remain the heart of political reality. Here are some issues George Bush and Michael Dukakis need to start talking about and the media should start covering.

IRS rapacity. During Bush's tenure as vice president, the Reagan administration has increased the powers and resources of the IRS to harass and persecute every American taxpayer. Dukakis is no better. He has proposed further expansion of IRS powers to assault alleged "delinquent" taxpayers. Yet a recent survey disclosed that the IRS is the real incompetent because it goofs 39 percent of the time when people call in for answers to simple tax questions.

The candidates need to talk about ways to reduce, not increase, this berserk agency's control over our lives. We need a Taxpayers' Bill of Rights, such one advocated by Sen. David Pryor of Arkansas. It would guarantee that each taxpayer is innocent until the IRS proves him guilty in a court of law. Under current IRS edicts, you're guilty until you can prove yourself innocent, often at great expense.

Sky-high taxes. The average American taxpayer is being choked by his profligate, incompetent government. President Reagan's two major tax cuts have helped loosen the noose around taxpayers' necks, but his four major tax boosts have retightened it. Government has become a massive burden on middle-class families. Dukakis wants to make that burden even worse. Bush has called, commendably, for a tax reduction in the capital-gains tax, which would stimulate the economy. But Bush almost certainly will boost other taxes.

Protectionism. Both candidates talk free trade. They need to make proposals to reduce protectionism. The quotas on Japanese car imports, which have jacked up costs on all cars by about $2,000, should be dropped. Detroit has been coddled enough and now needs the discipline of the free market.

Defense policy. Both candidates placidly support America's continuing subsidy of our rich allies' defense. The reality is that the next administration will have to shift some of the burden to them. Where will the cuts be made?

The defense budget has become a vast pork barrel for favored interest groups in Congress. This means our GIs are getting weapons that are wrong for the job or don't work. The next president must clamp down on this abuse of power. If this isn't stopped, the military will be unable to field a force able to defeat the Girl Scouts, let alone the Red Army.

What do our candidates think about these issues? Anyone?

Abortion's still a real issue

The presidential campaign has boiled down to a clear choice on the issues, between a candidate who bravely endorses "good jobs at good wages" and a candidate who fearlessly supports the Pledge of Allegiance.

Spoilsports say those aren't real issues posing real choices. But when a group of demonstrators disrupted a rally for Michael Dukakis in suburban Chicago last week, they reminded voters that there is one controversial and important subject on which the candidates strongly disagree: abortion.

This also an issue on which the next president will almost certainly have a decisive effect. The Supreme Court is closely divided on its 1973 ruling in Roe v. Wade mandating abortion on request, and its three staunchest defenders of abortion rights will be 80 or older by Inauguration Day. If one or more leave the court, the balance could shift overnight.

So, barring something unlikely, it's safe to make this prediction: Under a President Dukakis, abortion will remain available almost without restraint; under a President Bush, it will be restricted considerably.

The Democrats claim to have the public on their side, but if that were true they would be more eager to talk about this issue. Bush's convention address attacked legal abortion; Dukakis didn't mention it.

The GOP platform proposes to ban all abortions. The Democratic platform coyly defends "the fundamental right of reproductive freedom," which to an ear untutored in political deceit sounds numbingly innocuous. You wanna reproduce? Feel free.

Dukakis' Democratic party portrays itself as the soul of moderation, interested in competence rather than ideology. But on abortion, it's Dukakis who takes an inflexibly extreme position and Bush who offers a reasonable compromise.

The governor is one of those pious "personally opposed" advocates of legal abortion. "I happen to think, though I do not favor abortion or think it's a good thing, that in the final analysis it is up to a woman to make that decision according to her own conscience and religious beliefs," he says. "I think that's what most Americans believe, what the Supreme Court has said, and that's my position."

But Dukakis goes further than the generous limits established by the court. He also endorses federal funding of abortion for poor women, which the court says is not a constitutional right and which Congress has rejected. When his legislature tried to pass a ban on state funding in 1977, the governor vetoed it.

On federally funded abortions, polls have consistently shown, the public opinion Dukakis claims to have on his side is arrayed against him. Whatever their feelings about permitting abortions, most Americans don't think society at large should have to pay for them.

Dukakis' record explains why he draws anti-abortion demonstrators. The National Right to Life Committee calls this "the most pro-abortion presidential ticket in history." Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro might quibble, but the basic point is right.

By contrast, Bush declines to go along entirely with his party's platform or with the pro-life movement. He endorses a constitutional amendment to overturn the Roe decision, but thinks a ban on abortion should include exceptions for cases of rape, incest and danger to the mother's life.

Bush's position is important because getting his way with the Supreme Court is only half the battle. All a more conservative court is likely to do is overturn the 1973 ruling, which would only return the matter to the discretion of each state, as it was before. A national ban requires a constitutional amendment.

So far, such amendments have gone nowhere. One reason is that although most Americans are uncomfortable with abortion, they are even more uncomfortable with forbidding it in these extreme cases. Rape and incest victims are the "pro-choice" movement's strongest argument for preserving the status quo.

Bush's compromise deprives them of that convenient, dishonest ploy. It also accommodates public sentiment: A 1985 Gallup poll found that 58 percent of Americans favor banning all abortions when these three exceptions are made, with just 36 opposed.

Anti-abortion advocates will object that this approach fizzes the crucial moral issue of the humanity of the fetus. That's true. But by insisting on everything, they have gotten almost nothing. Bush's proposal, by contrast, would eliminate the vast majority of abortions — between 95 and 99 percent, depending on whose estimate you use.

In most respects, Dukakis and Bush have fought a sterile campaign over phony issues. But when it comes to abortion, this election is for real.

It's no longer much of a joke

All of us who fly — even the bravest and most experienced — had to share some of the same feelings when we heard the sickening news a Delta 727 had crashed and burned and killed some people as it tried to take off at the Dallas-Fort Worth airport.

I flew out of DFW a few weeks ago. On a Delta 727.

We remembered all our own takeoffs and landings and we wondered if one day, on some airplane, at some airport, it might happen to us.

I joke about this sometimes — only now it doesn't seem like so much of a joke.

Ever notice how everybody reads on an airplane? They're looking down at either a newspaper, a book or a magazine. But you know what? I've never seen anybody turn a page during takeoff.

The plane's nose is pointed toward the runway. There's the sound of the engine being revved.

And that sound becomes a whine, gets louder and louder, and the increasing speed pushes you back into your seat.

There's that enormous sense of power, and then the nose of the airplane pulls upward and, please, God, let the rest of us follow.

We have all had to wonder if we're actually going to get airborne or is something going to happen.

Will all that power and speed and lift suddenly vanish and will the ground come up and slam us all to a fiery death?

Lewis Grizzard

I heard one of the crash survivors on television:

"We were going down the runway, like usual," she said, "and then you just knew something bad was going to happen."

I also heard the Delta public relations guy talking to reporters. He was talking about Delta's overall outstanding safety record. I wanted to tell him to sit down and shut up. People were dead.

I fly more than 90 percent of the rest of the flying public. I lost count of my frequent flier points years ago.

But from 1970 until 1978, I would not — under any circumstances — get into an airplane. I was terrified of flying.

In the late 1940s, my mother, who was critically ill, was flown from Fort Smith, Ark., to Washington on an Army hospital plane. It was her first — and only — flight, and it took 12 hours and she was strapped on a stretcher and she was terrified.

She passed that terror on to me, and in 1970 I decided I no longer could stand the fear I felt in an airplane.

But there came a time in 1978, when I was 32 years old, I had to make a decision. Either I had to start flying or I had to get into another line of work.

The world is geared to air travel. It runs on jet time.

With a little help — from very good friends at Delta, I might add — I began to fly again. But I still don't like it. I'm no longer terrified, but I'm always uncomfortable. I drink on airplanes. That's one way I cope.

I believe air travel is basically safe. But I also believe crashing in an airliner would be an experience more horrible than almost any other I can imagine.

I understand what the statistics say. But I also understand there is no such thing and there never will be such a thing as a fail-safe airplane.

I'd like to stop flying.

But I can't and neither can you. We never will know another time when there will be a mode of transportation faster or more convenient than some sort of air travel.

So, in the wake of the late August crash and all the others before it, what do we do?

We continue to play the odds, and the odds are in our favor. After the Delta crash, a business associate said to me, "You want to fly to Birmingham next week or drive?"

"Let's drive," I said. "It'll be just one less flight I'll ever have to take."

Berry's World

"And ANOTHER thing — smoking is fast becoming socially unacceptable."

Beware of open season for the givers

By SARAH OVERSTREET

A few weeks ago I was going into a grocery store, and a man outside the door was taking a dollar from a cute little blond boy named Brian. The man was standing near a table with a sign taped to it that read, "Church. Help clean up ghettos and give youth a future."

The man was making Brian feel like king for a day. "It's people like you who make life worth living for all of us, Brian," he said. Next it was my turn. "Want to help out Christian missions and give our ghetto youth a future?"

The answer was, "Yes, I'd like to help give ghetto youth a future. But how do I know any of my money is going to any ghetto youth? By the looks of you, I'd get better odds giving it to the man behind the meat counter. I've never heard of your church, and I don't have time to check you out."

Of course, I didn't say anything like that. Instead, I said, "Not today." The man looked at me like I was unfit to shop in the same store with a Christian patriot like Brian.

Not that he was the first fellow to make me feel like a goddess communist that week. The telephone solicitor from a local charitable organization beat him to it. He seemed downright disgusted I wouldn't pay $15 for a pack of six little jars of jelly. I figured jelly that expensive would probably be wasted on a Smucker's palate, and declined.

Instead, I called the president of the local charitable organization, a nice man I'd once interviewed when I was a newspaper reporter. He admitted he didn't know much about the jelly-selling campaign, only that his organization had turned it over to a professional telephone soliciting company. He didn't know how much the jellies cost to buy wholesale, nor did he know what percentage of the profit his organization would receive. And he didn't have an arrangement to look at the soliciting company's books after the campaign was over.

He was embarrassed. "I guess this sounds pretty silly," he said, and it did. "But all groups do it this way. It's just too much trouble to make all those calls ourselves, and we seem to make enough money doing it like this."

An unfortunate assumption. First, he didn't realize how many prospective donors his group was losing — now and forever — by allowing these calls to be made by professional solicitors who don't care what kind of image they're giving his organization. "You mean you couldn't buy four tickets to send disabled children to the circus? They don't get to go many places, and you ought to see their eyes light up. Well, how about two tickets?"

And second, he didn't know what a disgraceful racket a lot of those solicitations are. Recently The Kansas City (Mo.) Star investigated 23 fund-raising campaigns in the Kansas City area. On the average, only 11 percent of the money collected by the soliciting company actually went to the sponsoring charity. Some charities received as little as 4 percent of the profits.

In addition, many charities contacted by The Star said they made little or no attempt to verify expenses claimed by the solicitors. Some had no idea how much money was raised in their names — and how little they received — until The Star reporters told them.

How much of our donated money should we reasonably expect to be spent on fund raising? Well, the Council of Better Business Bureaus says in most cases fund-raising costs should be 35 percent or less.

We all know many of these charities are worthwhile, and we want to donate. But it's open season on the giver. If enough of us ask for accounting before donating money to charities, the organizations will be forced to clean up their fund-raising campaigns. And we won't have to wonder if we've helped fund some crook's new Mercedes instead of medical research or ghetto youth.

Man who killed snowball thrower gets 5 to 10 years in jail

By TED DUNCOMBE
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Edward Smith could spend at least five years in jail, separated from the family he tried to protect, for fatally shooting a youth who was among neighborhood troublemakers pelting his house with snowballs.

Youths had harassed the family repeatedly for six years. They had broken into a basement radio repair shop and scrawled graffiti on the walls.

Smith finally cracked when a snowball smashed a window and cut one of his daughters on Jan. 16, 1987.

Later that night, more snowballs hit the house and Smith went out on his porch with a .357-caliber Magnum revolver. He fired two shots toward a group of boys. He intended them as warnings, he told police.

But one shot hit Peter McGettigan in the spine and exited through his chest. The 16-year-old high school sophomore died, leaving his parents, six siblings, Smith's family and their neighborhood in agony.

Smith, 49, was convicted Monday of third-degree murder and sentenced to five to 10 years in prison.

Common Pleas Judge Eugene H. Clarke Jr. also found Smith guilty of weapons possession and reckless endangerment in the non-jury trial.

Smith received the mandatory minimum term for third-degree murder while using a gun. He could receive up to seven more years when sentenced on the other charges Nov. 29.

But one positive outcome of all of the anguish was the formation of a neighborhood group, Citizens for Community Aid, which Edward Williams, a crime prevention officer with the Philadelphia Police Department, said has helped defuse tension.

Williams said the circumstances that pushed Smith over the brink were common in the city's Olney section, a blue-collar neighborhood.

"The kids actually controlled their community in the sense that the adults feared coming out of their houses because of harassment," Williams said.

But with the new community organization, he added: "Some of the kids that I saw that were responsible for some of the tensions have changed completely. We probably saved a few lives. The tension at that time was such that it could have exploded again."

Drugs, alcohol and the lack of places for teenagers to gather were major problems, he said.

Myra Fesi, the group's executive director, said it has helped six to eight youths enter education programs or obtain drug or alcohol treatment through the juvenile justice system.

"The community has to take ownership of the community," Mrs. Fesi said. "You can't have cops in your community 24 hours a day. We've got to do it, the people who live there."

After Monday's verdict, Smith's attorney, Stanley W. Bluestine, said, "It's just a very tragic situation all the way around."

"I feel bad for the family," said Smith, who remained free on $15,000 bail. "I feel bad for the boy. I feel bad for the sorrow and grief I've brought my own family."

The dead youth's mother, Julie McGettigan, said: "My son is dead 18 months. Mr. Smith's family has been through God knows what in those 18 months and they have more to go through. It's been lousy all the way through, and I'm sorry it happened."

The group formed in the wake of the killing has suffered setbacks in its efforts to raise money for a community center, Mrs. Fesi said.

A woman who took a public role in forming the group moved after she was harassed. "We could never prove who did it," Mrs. Fesi said. "They even threatened to bomb her house, so she had to move."

500 flee wind-fanned brush fire

VACAVILLE, Calif. (AP) — Firefighters working double shifts today battled a wind-fanned arson blaze to the edge of this city as flames destroyed nine homes, scorched more than 17,000 acres and forced 500 people to flee.

But in Montana and Wyoming, firefighters were sent home Monday as cool, moist fall weather helped them get a handle on the blazes that have blackened hundreds of thousands of acres.

Fifteen fires burning Monday had charred 1.39 million acres in Wyoming, Montana, Washington, Oregon, Idaho and California, said Arnold Hartigan of the Interagency Fire Center in Boise, Idaho, where the firefighting is coordinated. In all this season, 69,099 fires have blackened 4,140,000 acres, including about 2 million acres in Alaska, he said.

In Northern California, gusty winds combined with higher temperatures to stir up two major blazes. The arson fire grew to 17,000 acres and jumped a containment line late Monday outside Vacaville, about 55 miles northeast of San Francisco. It reached within a third of a mile of town, said fire captain Ken Thomas.

Authorities established a new line today along a 10-mile stretch of road, along which the 500 residents were ordered to evacuate, said fire captain John Ferreira.

"We're leaving," said David Foster, 33, one of Vacaville's 61,000 residents. "Staying around would be stupid."

Ferreira said the amount of acreage burned would "greatly increase by morning. We've still got a lot of fire out there and a lot of tired crews."

Almost 700 firefighters, aided by 80 percent humidity that was forecast for this morning, hoped to keep the fire behind the road at the western edge of town, he said.

Along Interstate 80, the glow from the fire could be seen from Cordelia, 13 miles away. Thick smoke drifted through the streets of downtown Vacaville.

The fire started Saturday at the head of Miller Canyon Road, north of Vacaville, is one of two major California blazes that has destroyed a total of 15 homes as they roared across 26,000 acres of wildland, brush and timber.

The Vacaville fire destroyed nine homes, 10 outbuildings and $7 million worth of telecommunications equipment, officials said.

At the 8,000-acre fire near Redding in Shasta County, two men clearing burned timber were seriously injured Monday when a tree fell on them, officials said. Both men suffered head and back injuries and were hospitalized in critical condition, officials said.

Officials said that fire was caused when someone apparently target shooting shot out an insulator from a powerline about 20 miles east of Redding, 220 miles northeast of San Francisco, and the sparks ignited the drought-dry brush.

In Montana, about 80 firefighters were to be on the lines today in Glacier National Park to mop up the remnants of a 35,400 acre blaze, Montana's only remaining major active forest fire.

U.S. economy shows expansion again

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy, fueled by an export-driven manufacturing boom but held back by losses from the drought, expanded at a strong 3.0 percent in the April-June quarter, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said the gross national product, the broadest measure of economic health, grew to a seasonally adjusted annual level of $3.99 trillion in the second quarter, a $29.1 billion increase from the January-March quarter.

It was an unexpected downward revision from a preliminary estimate a month ago of 3.3 percent growth last quarter. The economy had grown at a 3.4 percent annual rate in the first quarter.

If not for the drought, second quarter growth would have been a more robust 3.9 percent. Crop losses for the year are estimated at $13.9 billion and will be even more of a drag on the economy in the third and fourth quarters.

The government attributed the downward revision in the second quarter to slightly less growth than first thought in the two strongest sectors in the economy: export sales and investment spending by business.

Exports of goods and services expanded at a 9.1 percent annual rate, compared with the previous estimate of 11.6 percent.

Business investment spending shot up 15.0 percent, compared with last month's estimate of 16.3 percent.

However, consumer spending, which represents about two-thirds of all economic activity, was up 3.0 percent at an annual rate, compared with a slightly weaker 2.7 percent previously announced.

The linchpins of growth during the first half of this year have been a boom in manufacturing triggered by the export surge and the consequent spending spree by manufacturers to modernize and expand their factories.

But the strong growth has been accompanied by faster inflation. The government said a price measure tied to the GNP rose at the fastest rate in nearly six years.

The GNP deflator, which reflects changes in buying patterns as well as prices, rose at an annual rate of 5.5 percent in the second quarter, compared with 1.7 percent in the first quarter. It was the biggest jump since the third quarter of 1982.

Flood survivors in Mexico trying to salvage what they can

By CAM ROSSIE
Associated Press Writer

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP)—Scores of people returned to salvage possessions from the Santa Catarina riverbed, where a flash flood spawned by Hurricane Gilbert devastated their homes, but most came up empty.

People lined the banks Monday, digging with their hands in the muck. What was for decades a dry riverbed with thousands of homes had become a mangled landscape of twisted metal and crumbled concrete.

Maria Costa, her husband and their six children had lived on the riverbed in a two-room home made of concrete blocks and tin. Their clothing, furniture and new school books were washed away. "We went yesterday to see it, but there wasn't a thing to save," Mrs. Costa said as she washed her 10-month-old son's diapers in a bucket of water. "Even the blocks were gone. Now where do we go?" she asked.

More than 100 people were killed in the sudden, storm-whipped rebirth Saturday of the Santa Catarina, which became a savage torrent 10 feet deep and 450 feet wide as Hurricane Gilbert dumped 12 inches of rain on the city.

"We just got three blankets out and lost everything else," said Ramona Carrizales Lopez, sitting outside a shelter for the homeless.

Mrs. Lopez was among thousands of people who had built meager homes in the riverbed that cuts through this industrial city in northern Mexico's most populated region.

The riverbed suddenly swelled with water, sweeping away entire ramshackle communities, miles of roads and a sprawling sports complex with miles of tennis and basketball courts, soccer and baseball fields and jogging tracks.

Four buses and other vehicles were dragged into the torrent.

The bus passengers are presumed to comprise most of the 100 people confirmed dead.

The Nuevo Leon state government said a "considerable number" of people were missing and 30,000 people were lodged in shelters around the state.

Alejandro Chapa, mayor of San Pedro-Garza Garcia, the suburb of Monterrey hit hardest by the disaster, said Monday that his first priority is to find better lodgings for the 7,000 homeless people in his community.

He said those people with homes on the riverbed that escaped ruin would be allowed to return there only provisionally.

"We're asking for a place to put them," Chapa said. "Houses can be built pretty fast, but not in a month."

Burma capital's streets deserted

RANGOON, Burma (AP)—Protesters and soldiers retreated today from Rangoon's streets, where troops shot to death at least 100 people during demonstrations against a military coup.

The two sides fought sporadic clashes late Monday, with some protesters hurling gasoline bombs at troops, who responded with gunfire. Automatic weapons fire was heard from Seikkyi, across the Rangoon River from the capital, and smoke could be seen billowing from the village.

At least 150 people were killed in the capital during protests against Sunday's coup, which was led by armed forces commander Gen. Saw Maung. No casualty figures were available from other cities, where clashes were also reported.

Today, downtown streets appeared deserted, peopled only with some soldiers clearing roadblocks demonstrators had erected and residents hurrying home after buying food at a few small shops.

Most troops remained inside government buildings.

Opposition leaders said they called off street protests to avoid further bloodshed. They said government workers would protest by continuing their strikes past Sept. 26, the new military regime's deadline for returning to work on threat of dismissal.

It was the first day without street demonstrations in the capital since a round of rallies and strikes called to press for an end to 26 years of repressive one-party rule began on Aug. 8 and toppled hard-line President Sein Lwin four days later.

Saw Maung said he ousted President Maung Maung on Sunday in a bid to halt economic and social chaos and ensure democratic elections — which Maung had promised.

Maung Maung, who took over Aug. 19 as Burma's first civilian leader since 1962, had ended martial law and withdrawn soldiers from the streets in the start of a series of concessions to protesters.

Reporters who witnessed the confrontations said at least 100 people were killed on Monday, some of them shot by soldiers perched on rooftops.

Clashes reported in Soviet Union

MOSCOW (AP)—Azerbaijanis and Armenians shot at each other in a disputed region of the southern Soviet Union, wounding 25 people, Tass and activists reported Monday.

It was one the most violent clashes reported in the months-long campaign for control of Nagorno-Karabakh, a mostly Armenian area that has been part of the republic of Azerbaijan since 1923.

The official news agency said demonstrators left a rally Sunday in the main city of Nagorno-Karabakh, Stepanakert, for the nearby village of Khadzhal, and when they arrived violence broke out.

"Firearms and sidearms were used in mass-scale fights on both sides," Tass said in a dispatch datelined Stepanakert. "As a result, 25 people received injuries of various degrees of gravity and 17 were hospitalized. Both Armenians and Azerbaijanis applied for medical assistance."

An editor for the Tass affiliate in the Armenian capital of Yerevan, however, said by telephone that Azerbaijanis were the only ones carrying firearms and that 19 of those injured were Armenians. He said four of the Armenians were seriously hurt.

The editor, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the clashes were a result of reports of earlier disturbances in the village between Armenians and Azerbaijanis.

Demonstrators were holding a rally in Stepanakert when Armenians arrived from Khadzhal with reports that Azerbaijanis had stoned a busload of Armenians on Saturday, the editor said.

The Armenians in Stepanakert stoned Azerbaijani houses, breaking windows, he said.

In Yerevan, Alisa Gorgisyan, mother of activist Mofses Gorgisyan, said there were rumors of some deaths and some 60 to 70 injuries in Stepanakert.

Former Pampan helps provide braille menus

Former Pampan Gena Walls, author of "Gena on Genealogy," a genealogical column that is published each Friday in the Lifestyles section of The Pampa News, has been instrumental in providing braille menus for the blind at Pizza Hut restaurants in Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina and Kentucky.

Walls, project chairman for Personalized Braille Services, and St. Marys, Ga. Pizza Hut manager Chuck Prahst spearheaded the drive to place the braille menus in the Piedmont and Coastal regions of Pizza Hut's Southern Division. The 3½-inch-square red and beige checkerboard menus contain 10 brailled pages with the same selections offered in the regular menu.

Announcement of the new menus was made at the Tennessee Council of the Blind's annual convention Sept. 2-4 in Knoxville, Tenn.

"My interest (in braille) actually started when I lived in Pampa. Lois Strong was learning braille and spent one morning showing me the braille writer, alphabet, etc.," Walls said. She then enrolled in a nine-month braille class, and qualified as a certified braille teacher at the Library of Congress approved a 35-page manuscript she had done in braille.

Strong said she had become interested in braille when her father's eyesight became poor enough that he could no longer read printed type. She said that braille would be welcome at any place involved in routine day-to-day living, such as grocery stores. Some places in Pampa provide braille information, including the elevators at Coronado Hospital, she said.

"From my restaurant, the menu project grew to the North Florida district and then to areas of the Southern Division. It's my hope that it will become a national project," Prahst said. A Vietnam veteran, he is sensitive to the needs of the handicapped and the greater need of public awareness to their needs. The braille menu will accomplish both those things in that the display will draw attention to their needs and the menu will allow them independence in dining out.

"Although the project is not in Texas at the moment, we hope it will be expanded to that area and nationwide," Walls said.

The braille system was developed in 1824 in Paris, France by a 15-year-old student, Louis Braille. The braille cell, containing six raised dots, was the greatest single step accomplished enabling blind persons to read and is still the only literary means available. The system received much opposition and was not introduced in this country until 1860.

Walls explained that all braille provided by Personalized Braille Services is done by certified braille teachers and is usually of a more personal nature than the Pizza Hut menu project. Items include bank statements, recipes, greeting cards, telephone rosters and all sorts of labels from canned goods to stove knobs. All braille work is free, and materials and supplies are purchased with donations, with 100 percent of all donations going into the projects.

All requests for braille services are confidential, and usually the work can be completed and returned within two weeks.

"Our top priority is to provide braille for the individual, but we will braille for businesses. When Chuck approached us for menus for his restaurant, we never dreamed it would snowball into 632 menus and now, maybe, national. It's really exciting," Walls said.

More than 250 volunteer hours were involved in completing the project. Personalized Braille Services anticipates other restaurants will provide braille menus now that Pizza Hut has paved the way. The organization recommends three menus for each establishment and can usually use the existing menu by simply inserting the braille pages and enclosing the entire menu in a spiral binder.

"The fact that a restaurant does not have to order a lot of menus and that we do not charge for the braille, but do rely on donations, makes it affordable for every business," explained Walls. "It's just a matter of getting the word out that it can be done."

For more information on Personalized Braille Services or the braille menu project, or to make a donation, write to Gena Walls, P.O. Box 1787, Kingsland, Ga. 31548.

Walls and Prahst compare the Pizza Hut print menu with the new braille version.

Technology is catching up with needs of the disabled

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

If you're making do with a chair you can't get out of, a faucet you can't turn on or any number of home products that don't make allowances for an aging body, hang on.

American industry may be coming to the rescue in the foreseeable future, and 1988 may eventually be known as the year attitudes began to change towards physical disability.

Several recent examples indicate growing interest in harnessing technology to permit an active lifestyle, even for those with disabilities. Products such as sports equipment, wheelchairs, crutches and ingenious utensils were shown this year in a museum exhibition and a product catalog.

While the current beneficiaries of specialized products are those with disabilities, ultimately there can be substantial benefits for the nondisabled population, says Cara McCarty, curator of "Designs for Independent Living," a recent exhibition at the Museum of Modern Art.

In the meantime, indications are that there is a growing acceptance of an active lifestyle for those with physical impairments.

The IBM Corp., for example, reports increasing use of a toll-free telephone number offering information on new technology for those with impairments.

IBM received more than 19,000 phone inquiries in 1987, after setting up the clearinghouse at the end of 1985, said Rita Black, a spokesman who added that an estimated 36 million Americans suffer some form of disability.

While the gradual aging of the American population may be one factor in what some authorities see as a greater acceptance of disabilities, another motive is that "businesses have become aware they are losing a tremendous resource by not accommodating themselves to people with disabilities," Black said.

According to Jordan Bienstock, co-founder of Maneuverability, a Brooklyn-based retailer of "self-help" housewares, the number of special home products available for those with disabilities appears to be on the increase.

Some of the 90 or so products featured in the company's mail-order catalog include a voice activator which works off household current to turn on and off lamps and home entertainment components, easy-grasp cutlery and a variable-height sink.

Peter Axelson, a designer of wheelchairs and ski equipment, said that many new products and techniques make it possible for even a severely disabled person to live an active life.

A little over a decade ago when he wanted to renew an active life after an accident resulted in amputation of his limbs, he found he had to design the equipment he wanted.

"In the past 12 years there have been substantial improvements: lightweight wheelchairs made mobility easier; health care techniques made us healthier; computers have enhanced the ability to work and sports equipment has made recreation possible. We are now at the point where the technologies are available, but we need rehabilitation services to assist people," he said.

"The biggest problem of many individuals who want to be more active is gaining access to information and training in the use of the new products and in finding the money to pay for them," added Axelson.

One indication that this issue is about to enter the mainstream is the recent exhibition mounted at the Museum of Modern Art, "Designs for Independent Living."

Instead of thinking of disabled individuals as people who must lead a sedentary life, the emphasis now is on designing environments to help them be as active and independent as possible, according to curator McCarty.

Approximately 45 products for use in the home were shown including mobility equipment such as wheelchairs and walkers, communication aids, clothing and household items, including sculpted cane handles and eating utensils and gadgets for people with limited hand strength.

McCarty said the exhibit was a natural outgrowth of the increase in aids for the disabled. "There has been a definite change since the early 1980s when products tended to be makeshift and unsuited to mass production."

Today, by contrast, professional industrial designers are getting involved in new-product development for this growing market segment, she said.

One of the most dramatic changes in thinking about disabilities is in the area of mobility, according to McCarty. "Instead of thinking of the wheelchair as a seat, we think of it as a means of transportation."

The change began in the 1970s when the rules for wheelchair sports were modified to permit greater design latitude in the chairs. Using bicycle technology in some cases and spurred on by athletes who wanted a more competitive vehicle, designers were able to produce faster, lighter-weight and more portable and maneuverable wheelchairs which in turn influenced the design of everyday wheelchairs, added the curator.

McCarty sees it as a hopeful sign for everyone that designers are now studying human needs before they formulate product prototypes.

Tips seen as much-needed income supplement

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for that great column on tipping. Many people don't know how much to tip a waitress and are so embarrassed, they don't tip at all. I've been a waitress for 11 years. In Ohio, waitresses are usually paid a minimum wage of $2.10 an hour. Some get even less. The government takes 8 percent right away. My paycheck nets me about $1 an hour take-home, so you can see, we don't do nearly as well as most people think we do.

JEANNIE IN OHIO

DEAR JEANNIE: Not everyone thought my column on tipping was so "great." A Spokane nurse spoke thusly:

DEAR ABBY: I can't believe I'm writing to you after all these years of reading your column. But I've earned the right as a devoted reader to say, Where do you get off telling us how much to tip people for their services?

I resent that the consumer is expected to make up the difference between a living wage and the minimum wage paid by cheap employers. As for your suggestion to "do unto others," I've worked as a nurse for 30 years, and nobody has ever tipped me.

We tip according to the quality of the service given, within the limits of what we can afford, so please don't make us out miserly with percentages! There, I feel better already!

RUTH B.

DEAR ABBY: People who neglect to tip are uneducated, uncivilized, socially inept, selfish and irresponsible plagues on society who should not be allowed to dine at decent restaurants.

Waitressing is one of the most thankless and stressful jobs imaginable. Servers must be alert and organized constantly as they cater to the demands of the diner. Daily they are faced with the incredible task of too much to do and not enough time to do it. No sane person would work so hard unmercifully if it weren't for the psychological incentive of tips.

Anytime you are seated, brought your food and handed a bill, you are obligated to tip. Since the government taxes 8 percent of a server's total sales out of his or her paycheck, the server's main source of income is the tip money. After the government is finished with my paycheck, they have received more than I have; my net pay is nowhere near the minimum wage.

When you forget to tip your waitress, you are making it a little more difficult for her to support her family, put herself through college or simply to pay for the rent.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Neglecting to tip a waitress is a loathsome practice the educated person finds unacceptable. Tip your server!

OREGON WAITRESS

DEAR OREGON WAITRESS: Let's allow a Pittsburgh bartender to have the last word:

DEAR ABBY: About your "tips" on tipping: How do you figure a bartender should get only 10 percent? A bartender not only must serve the drink, but concoct it. A bartender is supposed to listen to people's problems, entertain them and be aware of who's had "enough."

In between mopping up spills, cleaning ashtrays and slicing up fresh fruit, the bartender is expected to remember each customer's drink, and what garnish he or she prefers. (The gentleman likes two olives in his martini; the lady wants one onion in hers.)

I hardly think 10 percent is enough, but I'd gladly settle for that, as about half the customers "forget" to tip us.

My advice: Tip the bartender at least 10 percent for excellent service. Also, if you can't afford to tip, you really can't afford to go out, so do us both a favor and stay home.

Harvester harriers fourth at Plainview

Pampa High's cross-country teams continue to improve, placing fourth out of 10 teams in the varsity boys' division during the Plainview meet.

For the Harvesters, Robert Perez was ninth, Chris Roden, 22nd; Mark Aderholt, 26th; Brandon Knutson, 31st, and Gus Carrillo, 35th.

"They ran well. Most of them knocked a lot off their previous times," said Pampa coach Mark Elms.

Pampa's varsity girls were sixth out of nine teams. Michelle Whitson was 15th.

Pampa finished seventh out of ten teams entered in the JV boys' division.

Alberto Carrillo was 22nd for Pampa. The Pampa teams compete in a meet at Hereford on Saturday.

A's clinch American League West title

By The Associated Press

Oakland had plenty of time to clinch the American League West, but the Athletics didn't want to use it.

"We didn't want to wait around to clinch it, and we didn't want to let the Twins get an idea there was still a possibility of them winning it," Dave Parker said Monday night after hitting a two-run homer that led Oakland to a 5-3 victory over Minnesota, clinching the division title and eliminating the defending World Series champions.

"It was just a coincidence that we were playing the Twins tonight," Parker said.

"The fans tonight saw a great ballgame," Oakland manager Tony La Russa said. The Twins were playing for a pennant, too, and that's a tribute to them."

Dave Stewart, 19-12, gave up eight hits and all three runs in 6 1-3 innings, striking out six. He allowed two hits after the third inning.

"The home run was inspiration to me," said Stewart, who is trying to win 20 games for the second straight season. "I struggled early, so it was great to see that. It was great to do it here in Oakland in front of people who appreciate where I've come from."

"We never relaxed," Parker said. "But Tony La Russa won't let anyone relax."

In other games, Toronto beat Boston 5-4, Milwaukee defeated California 5-2, New York beat Baltimore 3-2, Cleveland beat Detroit 4-3, Chicago beat Texas 7-3 and Seattle beat Kansas City 4-0.

Rick Honeycutt relieved Stewart and Dennis Eckersley finished with two perfect innings for his major-league leading 42nd save.

Fred Toliver, 7-5, gave up eight hits and five runs in 2-3 innings.

Blue Jays 5, Red Sox 4
Tony Fernandez hit a two-run single to cap a five-run seventh-inning rally.

Boston led 3-0 on a two-run single by Todd Benzing and an RBI single by Jim Rice in the first. Then Rance Mulliniks hit a sacrifice fly, Kelly Gruber hit an RBI single and Manny Lee hit a routine grounder to Marty Barrett's left.

Yankees 3, Orioles 2
Jack Clark hit a two-run double and Willie Randolph hit a run-scoring single as New York ended a three-game losing streak.

Richard Dotson, 11-9, gave up six hits and both runs in 5 1-3 innings. Dave Righetti struck out the side in the ninth for his 23rd save.

Dodgers magic number at five

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Orel Hershiser isn't getting many runs to work with these days. But the way he's pitching, he doesn't need many.

"Tonight, the key was to keep the ball down," the Los Angeles Dodger pitching ace said Monday night after extending his shutout string to 40 innings with a 1-0 victory over the Houston Astros. "I had a sharp breaking ball and I made no mistakes up."

It was the second straight 1-0 win for Hershiser, who beat the Atlanta Braves last time out. Monday night's four-hitter gave him four straight shutouts and a shot at Don Drysdale's record shutout string of 58 2-3 innings.

"Two more shutouts would be tough," Hershiser said. "I don't think it can be done. That's the record I thought couldn't be broken."

The victory reduced the Dodgers' magic number for clinching the National League West to five games.

Elsewhere Monday, it was Cincinnati 7, San Diego 2; Atlanta 4, San Francisco 3, and Pittsburgh 5, St. Louis 4. The Montreal-Chicago game was rained out.

Hershiser's shutout overshadowed an outstanding relief performance by Danny Darwin, who came on in the third inning when Houston starter Nolan Ryan suffered a leg injury.

"You have to feel good about the way you pitched, but you also must feel bad about losing the game," Darwin said. "I made one bad pitch and it cost us the game."

Darwin referred to John Shelby's seventh-inning leadoff homer that provided Hershiser with all the scoring he needed.

Hershiser, 22-8, struck out five batters and didn't walk any as he tied Cincinnati's Danny Jackson for the National League and major league lead in victories. Frank Viola of the Minnesota Twins also has won 22 games.

Reds 7, Padres 2
Danny Jackson scattered seven hits in 7 1-3 innings to gain his 22nd victory for the Reds. Jackson, 22-7, walked three and struck out two in gaining his fourth victory in his last five decisions.

Paul O'Neill drove in three runs, including two with his first homer since Aug. 11, to highlight the Reds' attack against Ed Whitson, 12-11. O'Neill also singled home a run off reliever Dave Leiper in the seventh.

Ron Oester went 4-for-4 to lead a 14-hit attack.

Braves 4, Giants 3
Ozzie Virgil's bases-loaded bloop single in the 10th inning lifted Atlanta over San Francisco, ending the Giants' six-game winning streak.

Virgil's single landed just inside the right field line, giving him the game-winning hit in the 10th inning for the second straight day. Virgil's hit gave the Braves a 6-5 victory over San Diego in 10 innings Sunday.

Jose Alvarez, 5-6, picked up the victory, pitching a perfect 10th. Joe Price, 1-6, was the loser.

Courageous Louganis dives for gold medal

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — On a day when Olympic officials scolded the American team for being too American — stepping a little out of line at the opening ceremonies — Greg Louganis showed another side of the national spirit.

In a magnificent display of artistry and courage, Louganis overcame pain, self-doubt and a sleepless night to stamp the Games with one of its most stirring performances when he captured the springboard diving gold medal.

He didn't quit and he got the job done, just as the U.S. boxing team came back with a victory Tuesday after stinging defeats inside the ring and out, and as the men's basketball team did against a surprisingly tough Canadian squad.

Eleven times Louganis knifed smoothly into the water, twisting and flipping in midair, each time slicing away the memory of the sickening thud when his head struck the board in the preliminary round Monday.

His head pounded and his pride was hurt after hitting the board. Five stitches closed the wound, ice soothed the pain, but his confidence and concentration were shattered when they were most needed.

"I couldn't be down psychologically or physically," said Louganis, 28, of Boca Raton, Fla.

And yet he was, with little time to recover before a pressure-filled final round for the first of the two golds he's seeking to match the pair he won in 1984 in the springboard and platform.

He lay awake most of the night, afraid, nervous, filled with doubt. In the morning, he took extra dives at practice and got a pep talk from his coach, Ron O'Brien.

He wasn't perfect but he was far better than anyone else through the first eight dives. Then came the ninth, the reverse 2½ somersault in the pike position that nearly brought disaster the day before.

Louganis clenched his fists, slapped his thighs and leaped out safely, spinning about a yard from the flapping board.

Louganis says it with flowers.

Schramm: Cowboys should have called time

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Tex Schramm said the Dallas Cowboys might have given the replay official "time to wake up" if they had signaled time out after Sunday's incorrect safety call that helped the New York Giants to a 12-10 NFL victory.

"We should have called time out so we could call the referee (Pat Haggerty) over and get an explanation," the Cowboys' club president said. "By then, maybe the replay official (Armen Terzian) would have come to his senses."

Haggerty's safety ruling on the game's opening kickoff went without debate at the time from the stunned Cowboys' coaches.

The Giants went on to win the game with the margin of victory coming on Mark Collins' tackle of Darryl Clack, who had muffed the kickoff into his own end zone and tried unsuccessfully to run it out.

Clack said he wasn't certain of the bobbled kickoff rule. "The thought ran through my head that since the ball hit me when I was out of the end zone that it was a live ball," Clack said. "I tried to take it out of the end zone. From what I hear, it wasn't really necessary."

Terzian later admitted: "The play should have gone as a touchback with the Cowboys taking the ball on the 20. The rule states that if the return man muffs the ball and it goes into the end zone, he must recover the ball but he has no responsibility to take it out."

"I was remiss in not reviewing the play at the time, but I felt there was an interpretation on the field which I was unaware of and would have allowed the safety."

Dallas coach Tom Landry said he didn't raise a ruckus and admitted "we should have argued about it. But I don't know why the officials didn't replay it. It was really a bad call. We talk about those plays all the time. I thought it was a muff."

Schramm, chairman of the NFL competition committee, said he thought at the time that there must be something he was missing.

"I thought there was some interpretation on the field I wasn't aware of," said Schramm.

Schramm, who helped refine the instant replay system, said: "Instant replay is designed to prevent this type of mistake. That's his (Terzian's) job, and he failed at it. It's also inconceivable to me that seven officials on the field wouldn't know the rule and recognize it. It was a muff. It wasn't even close to being possession."

Schramm said the Cowboys' loss should not be blamed on the call, however.

"We still had 59 minutes and 50 seconds to win the game after that happened."

Schramm said the NFL "is quite upset about this. I didn't have to call them. They heard about it."

Asked if he would call for Terzian's dismissal, Schramm said "It's not my style."

Canadian Wildcats have momentum on their side

By SONNY BOHANAN

BOYS RANCH at CANADIAN
Friday, 8 p.m.

The Canadian Wildcats enter the fourth week of high school football with great momentum following two convincing back-to-back wins.

The 'Cats rolled over Sanford-Fritch 28-18 two weeks ago and handed the powerful Spearman Lynx their first loss of the season last Friday.

Boys Ranch, which dropped from 3A to 2A ball for the '88 campaign, has been unsuccessful in three outings, falling to Dalhart, Spearman and Vega. Thus far, the Roughriders have been outscored 81-7 by their opponents.

That's not to say that Boys Ranch doesn't have a chance. In fact, Canadian coach Paul Wilson will tell you just the opposite.

"We've got to be up as much for Boys Ranch as we were for Spearman and Fritch," he said. "We're sure not taking them lightly. "If they know they're in the ball game, they'll jump on you. We cannot play a flat game."

The passing game has developed into Canadian's most dangerous weapon. In the past two games, quarterback Shane Lloyd has completed 17 of 40 for 177 yards and four touchdowns, including an 89-yarder to Colby Butcher, the longest in the area this season.

Lloyd also likes to go to split end Scott Walker, who has hauled in almost 200 yards worth of passes, including three six-pointers, in the first three games.

And with Butcher and Larry Smith in the backfield, the Wildcats have a well-rounded offense that has proven it can strike from anywhere.

Although the Roughriders are not short on talent, they've had trouble proving it so far. But Wilson is a believer.

"Their backs have good quickness," he said, "and they've got good quickness to the football on Warriors' only win thus far came on a forfeit over Texline.

Like Miami, the Goodwell Eagles, 2-1, are trying to rebound from a disappointing defeat on Friday, their first of the season.

The Eagles boast a squad loaded with talent, beginning with full back Lee Mason (6-1, 210), entering his fourth season for Goodwell.

All-District center Mike Oblander (6-6, 195) and guard Chad Martinez (170) are the powerhouses of the front line, while sophomore quarterback Steve Riley (5-10, 150) and four top sprinters from the track team round out an explosive offense.

"We're going in cold, playing a team we don't know anything about," Miami coach Bob Loy said, "and we're starting from scratch with the eight-man game."

"We do know they have a wealth of experience in eight-man, and their 210-pound full back and 6-6 center will definitely present problems for us."

For the Warriors, running back Shane Fields should be the greatest threat out of the backfield. In two games he has scored three touchdowns and rushed for close to 200 yards, gaining 77 yards on 15 totes against McLean to lead the Miami ground troops.

The ability of the Warriors to adjust to eight-man ball will go a long way towards determining the outcome of Friday's contest. Unlike in six-man, the interior linemen are stationary and the quarterback is permitted to run the ball without making an exchange.

Miami will also have to keep its mistakes to a minimum, something it has been unable to do previously.

"We've gotta see how we develop on our blocking, our executing and reading our keys," Loy said. "We're just gonna have to play sound football. We've got the capability to do it if we'll just quit making mistakes."

Browns win over Colts

By CHUCK MELVIN
AP Sports Writer

CLEVELAND — Cleveland quarterback Mike Pagel couldn't have picked a better opponent for his first start since 1985.

It wasn't that Pagel held any particular resentment toward the Indianapolis Colts, the team that gave up on him three years ago. It was much more practical than that.

"They've been running the same style of defense since I was there. It's basically a very vanilla defense," Pagel said Monday night after he passed for 255 yards and two touchdowns in the Browns' 23-17 victory over the Colts.

The unexpectedly smooth performance from Pagel helped ease some of the concerns about the Browns' immediate future in the absence of starting quarterback Bernie Kosar and backup Gary Danielson.

Pagel, showing no jitters, completed 23 of 38 passes, including a 14-yard touchdown to Ozzie Newsome and a controversial 17-yard scoring pass to Webster Slaughter. Matt Bahr added three field goals.

"I was fearful of Pagel," said Colts coach Ron Meyer. "I've seen him before and he's an extremely solid, competitive quarterback."

Pagel, a former Indianapolis starter who was traded to Cleveland in 1986, was forced into action because Kosar suffered a sprained right elbow two weeks ago and Danielson broke his left ankle last week.

"Mike was very calm," said offensive lineman Paul Farren. "When he came into the huddle tonight, he said, 'We're going to move the ball. We're going to move the sticks.' That rubbed off on all of us. There's no question we had to put the injuries behind us and accept it."

The Browns' offensive line had easily its best performance of the season, keeping Pagel free from sacks all night. Pagel said the Colts' defense cooperated by sticking to its basic philosophy.

The Browns' defense, meanwhile, managed to shut down Colts' running back Eric Dickerson in the second half after he ran for 104 yards on 14 carries in the first half, including a 41-yard touchdown in the second quarter.

Dickerson finished with 117 yards on 22 carries. "We didn't get the ball a whole lot in the second half," Dickerson said. Dean Biasucci put Indianapolis ahead 3-0 with a 30-yard field goal on the game's opening drive, but Cleveland came back on its first possession to score on Pagel's 14-yarder to Newsome — Newsome's first touchdown since 1986.

The reception extended Newsome's pass-catching streak to 130 games, and it gave the Browns their first touchdown of 1988.

A Dickerson fumble at his own 30 set up Bahr's first field goal, a 21-yarder early in the second quarter. But Dickerson broke loose for a 41-yard run that tied the game 10-10 about six minutes later.

Pagel broke the tie on Cleveland's next possession, lofting a 17-yard pass that Slaughter and Colts cornerback Eugene Daniel both grabbed as they fell into the end zone. Though Daniel had the stronger grip, Slaughter was awarded a touchdown because a simultaneous catch goes to the offensive player.

Cleveland, 2-1, led the rest of the way, getting Bahr field goals of 29 and 40 yards before Indianapolis' Clarence Verdin went 73 yards with a punt return for a touchdown to make it close with six minutes to play.

Turkish weightlifter wins gold

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Naim Suleymanoglu of Turkey set three world records Tuesday on his way to winning the Olympic gold medal in the 60-kilogram weightlifting division.

Suleymanoglu bettered his own world marks in the snatch with 152.5 kilos (336 pounds), the clean and jerk with 190 kilos (419 pounds) and the overall total with 342.5 kilos (755 pounds). The previous records were 150, 188 and 335, respectively.

Suleymanoglu defected in 1986 from Bulgaria because of what he called oppression of Turks in Bulgaria. He set numerous world records under the name of Naum Shalamanov when he was competing for Bulgaria.

Stefan Topourov of Bulgaria won the silver with 312.5 kilos total and Ye Huanming of China won the bronze with 287.5.

FREE IMAGE IMPROVEMENT SEMINAR
"We'll show you how easy it is to look your very best."
What colors bring out the best in you?
Do you know whether you look best in warm or cool colors? What your predominant undertones are?
How color "seasons" affect your look?
What is your body shape?
Do you know what body type you are? What kind of clothes enhance your shape? How to downplay less flattering features?
Do you feel like you never have anything to wear?
Do you try to reflect a wide range of moods and personalities in the styles you wear? Would you like to mix and match more easily? Avoid costly mistakes?
Are you wearing the right accessories?
Do you know how to use jewelry, scarves and belts to create different "outfits"? To change the way you look? Would you like to know how to update it inexpensively?
BeautiControl has the answers.

JOINT PROBLEM, MUSCLE PAIN

If you've developed symptoms that make you think you have arthritis, it would be wise to have an examination to see if the muscles in the affected area are out of balance.

Muscles help keep a joint stable and assist it through its normal range of motion. But if the muscles on one side of the joint are weak, this puts a strain on the joint. It may also cause arthritic-like symptoms.

The doctor of Chiropractic will test the muscles to determine their balance and strength. He will also evaluate nerve patterns and may take an x-ray to study the joint structure involved. Perhaps some laboratory procedures will also be needed.

If the problem is in the muscles around the joint, treatment can be given to strengthen and return them to proper balance. Once this is achieved, the arthritic-like pain and discomfort may be greatly relieved or eliminated.

Bush

Demos may take over governor's spot in three states

By PETE BROWN
Associated Press Writer

A former governor, the wife of another, and sons of a former senator and a former governor are on the ballots as 12 states hold elections for their top office in November.

In three of those states — Utah, West Virginia and Indiana — Democrats are favored to retake the governor's mansion from Republicans; in a fourth — North Carolina — a Democrat is giving the GOP incumbent a hard time.

Currently, 27 Democrats and 23 Republicans serve as governors.

Nine incumbents — six Republicans and three Democrats — will be on the ballot. Republican Robert Orr of Indiana is barred by law from a third term; Montana Democrat Ted Schwinden and New Hampshire Republican John Sununu are retiring.

If Massachusetts' Michael

Dukakis is elected president, Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy, also a Democrat, will serve out his term, which expires in 1990.

In Nevada, Lt. Gov. Bob Miller will complete the two years remaining in fellow Democrat Dick Bryan's term if Bryan is elected to the U.S. Senate.

Other states electing governors this fall are Delaware, Missouri, North Dakota, Rhode Island, Vermont and Washington.

In Missouri, Democratic state Rep. Betty Hearnes, wife of former Gov. Warren Hearnes, who served in 1965-73, lags behind Republican Gov. John Ashcroft in fund raising and in polls. Ashcroft is seeking his second term.

Democrat Thomas Judge, Montana's governor from 1972-80, is seeking a comeback against former state Sen. Stan Stephens in a race seen as a tossup.

New Hampshire's lineup was determined Tuesday when Rep. Judd Gregg, whose father, Hugh, was governor in 1953-55, ran away with a three-way GOP primary. He faces lawyer Paul McEachern, who nearly beat Sununu two years ago.

And in Indiana, Secretary of State Evan Bayh, 32-year-old son of former Sen. Birch E. Bayh, hopes to capitalize on his famous name in a race against Republican Lt. Gov. John M. Mutz.

Republican Gov. Norm Bangerter's bid for a second term is in danger in Utah, where a weak economy, a record $166 million tax increase, several bank failures and the drought have eroded his popularity.

Polls this month by the Deseret News and KSL-TV and by The Salt Lake Tribune had Democrat Ted Wilson, former mayor of Salt Lake City, ahead by 13 and 23 points respectively.

In West Virginia, Republican

Gov. Arch Moore is in trouble against Democrat Gaston Caperton, a political novice who spent more than $2 million, most of it his own, to win a seven-way primary.

A poll this month by The Associated Press, Charleston Daily Mail and WSAZ-TV gave Caperton a 60-31 percent lead.

Moore, seeking an unprecedented fourth term, said the poll gave him "one heck of a heartburn," but called the results "an aberration" that would shift before the election.

Bayh is leading in his bid to break the GOP's 20-year grip on Indiana's governor's office. His father lost in 1980 to Dan Quayle, now the Republican vice presidential candidate.

An Indianapolis Star poll in late August gave Bayh 45 percent support and Mutz 39 percent, with 16 percent undecided.

Gov. Jim Martin and Democratic Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan are locked in a spirited race in North Carolina.

Vermont's first woman governor, Democrat Madeleine Kunin, is favored to win a third term against state Rep. Michael Bernhardt.

Bernhardt has sought to capitalize on opposition to Vermont's "growth bill," a measure to control development. The law brought out the independent, anti-government streak in hunters, trappers, farmers and others.

Houston area firms facing divided loyalty

HOUSTON (AP)—Many major corporations in the Houston area faced with a choice between Vice President George Bush and U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen have solved the dilemma by supporting both, political insiders say.

Both Bush, the GOP presidential nominee, and Bentsen, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, have Houston ties.

Bush was in the oil business in Houston for many years and represented Houston's 7th Congressional District for two terms. Bentsen is a former Houston insurance executive and three-term Texas senator who heads the powerful Finance Committee.

"The Houston business community is torn and therefore they are giving to both," political consultant George Strong told the Houston Chronicle.

The benefits of supporting both parties, Strong said, are "first, you help someone you know personally get elected, and No. 2, you get access to them."

Two months ago, Texas Commerce Bancshares Chairman Ben Love said the political choice "will produce probably more ulcers than the plunge to $10 per barrel in the price of oil."

But as the Nov. 8 election nears, many are starting to publicly voice their support and money to the candidates.

During both the Democratic and Republican national conventions, Enron Corp. underwrote social events. This week, the energy corporation's president is helping to host a Democratic fund-raising event while the company chairman is heading a Republican gathering.

At Enron, president John Seidl is supporting the Democratic ticket of Michael Dukakis and Bentsen while chairman Kenneth Lay is giving his support to Bush and Dan Quayle.

Seidl is listed as a host of a $1,000-a-person Democratic Party fund-raiser held Monday night with Dukakis and Bentsen as the featured speakers.

Lay is keeping himself busy this week as Harris County chairman for Thursday's $1,000-a-person Republican fund-raiser featuring President Reagan and Bush.

Like Enron, many energy corporations, law firms, banks, investors and important individuals in Houston are split.

Like Seidl and Lay, other Houston businessmen have started taking sides.

Love has decided to support the Democratic ticket and is another host of the Democratic fund-raiser.

Oilman George Mitchell, a Bush acquaintance for 30 years who donated money to the Dukakis candidacy before Bentsen was picked, said two months ago that he might make his decision at the last minute. He's also listed as a supporter of the Democratic function.

Rob Mosbacher, GOP fund-raiser and party activist, charged that several key contributors in Houston "had their arms twisted off" by Bentsen to contribute money but will vote for Bush and are doing nothing to interfere with contributions to the Bush campaign by their top assistants, their law firms and their friends.

"Under different circumstances, they could have convinced all their major players to go one way, and they are not willing to do that this time," Mosbacher said.

But Charles Duncan, chairman of Monday's Democratic gathering, rejected Mosbacher's theory.

He said Love and Mitchell and others "use their name carefully" and would have not publicly supported the Dukakis-Bentsen ticket if they were actually pulling for Bush.

For the week, the Republicans have won the fund-raising contest.
