Workers' comp package rewritten

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Senate drastically rewrote Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's workers compensation reform package Monday night and stifled hopes for an early finish to the special session with substitute language that would increase benefits for injured workers and preserve their rights to appeal to juries in district courts.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, led the opposition that rejected key points of the bill Hobby wrote in an attempt to move toward the pro-business House position.

The Senate voted 18-13 Monday night to adopt Parker's section that would base benefits for injured workers on loss of wage-earning capacity and move away from more objective fixed schedules for determining benefits that Hobby had promoted.

"A fair system must judge the unique differences among us," said Parker. His version also would allow lump-sum settlements, with review by the new Texas Workers Compensation Commission, formerly the Industrial Accident Board, but it would eliminate cash settlements of medical benefits.

Five Democrats sided with the eight Senate Republicans for the Hobby plan on benefits, but the rest of the Democratic majority ignored Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, Hobby's floor leader, who said the Senate vote would continue "business as usual" instead of reform of a system that has seen insurance rates rise 203 percent over the past five years.

On a 17-14 vote the Senate adopted Caperton's section on dispute resolution, which would allow appeals of agency decisions to district courts, but would allow the juries to be told of the agency decision, a departure from current law. It also would provide arbitration as an alternative.

The Senate also voted 17-14 to tie the workers compensation reform to a companion Senate Bill 2 that would require all but the smallest businesses to insure their workers against injuries on the job.

Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, who represents Midland County, supported the Hobby plan.

Parker said the Hobby bill would have reduced overall weekly benefits for workers who make less than $9 an hour, or 77 percent of wage-earners in the state, but Montford said the Hobby plan would have increased benefits for workers with more serious injuries.

Parker said the vote was a victory for working people. "I haven't found a majority of working folks for SB1 (the Hobby version) and I've found a bunch that are for mine," he said.

CAF still targeted

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland, which got shot out of the sky in its bid to lure the Confederate Air Force (CAF) to West Texas, has re-grouped and renewed its strategy.

Midland, particularly its tenacious front-running CAF colonels, rancher Joe Mabee and banker Ed Jones, on Monday outlined another strategy to convince at least 75 percent of the CAF voting membership to move the CAF headquarters, museum and its World War II-vintage aircraft to Midland International Airport from Valley International Airport in Harlingen in far South Texas.

"We have just begun to fight," said Mabee, a pilot and aircraft collector-restorer who is a member of the CAF General Staff. "We have got the enemy surrounded. We are going to attack in all directions."

Part of the renewed strategy is for Midland to submit "a new proposal to the (CAF 11-member) General Staff."

Midland lost its first assault in its campaign to bring the CAF to West Texas by winning "only" 70.5 percent of the membership vote. The CAF bylaws require at least a 75-percent vote by CAF colonels to effect a location change in CAF headquarters.

Rebels storm luxury hotel in San Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Armed rebels today stormed a luxury hotel in the northern part of the capital and took over part of the building where American guests were staying.

Six government helicopters flew over the homes and tennis club around the Sheraton Hotel in the wealthy neighborhood of Escalon. Hundreds of soldiers moved into the area, frequently pinned down by guerrilla fire.

■ Related stories and photo — 1D

The army moved several tanks into the neighborhood to combat the attackers, who were renewing an urban offensive that had appeared to be dying out.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Jeff Brown said the guerrillas were in the hotel, the scene of the right-wing assassinations in 1981 of two U.S. labor advisers and a Salvadoran agrarian official.

The secretary-general of the Organization of American States, Joao Baena Soares, had been in the hotel during today's attack, said a U.S. official in Washington. The official said Baena Soares, who had been on a peace mission to El Salvador, was reported safe

There were a number of American citizens in the hotel, the Bush administration official said. "We are trying to determine the location of the Americans in the hotel," the official said.

"The objective is to take Escalon," said a guerrilla who gave his name as "Marlon." He was in charge of an insurgent position 80 yards from the four-star Sheraton Hotel.

A guerrilla interviewed on Cable News Network said the guests were not considered hostages and that they had been gathered on a single floor of the hotel for safety because of the fighting.

Communications with the hotel were cut.

"We're taking Escalon because here the armed forces are not going to bombard people's homes. This is where the oligarchy lives," Marlon told The Associated Press.

He said his Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front unit had been in Mejicanos, one of several poor suburbs and neighborhoods where the guerrillas dug in during their massive offensive last week.

The fighting ended several days of relative calm in San Salvador, one target of a rebel offensive launched Nov. 11.

The new attack comes one day after President Bush reaffirmed his administration's strong support for the right-wing government of President Alfredo Cristiani. The United States has provided about $3.5 billion in the past 10 years to help the government fight the insurgency.

A guerrilla official in Mexico City said Monday the offensive would continue because the fighting had not yet convinced the government that it cannot win the war.

Protesters fill streets of Prague fifth day

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Tens of thousands of protesters filled central Prague today in the fifth day of anti-government demonstrations, and opposition leaders met with the premier.

The state news agency said prosecutors have begun investigating police brutality at an anti-government rally on Friday in which hundreds of peaceful demonstrators were clubbed.

And in Moscow, Mikhail S. Gorbachev backed the rapid changes encompassing Eastern Europe, including the demands for reform in Czechoslovakia. "I think the changes under way now are consistent with the overall context of the changing world," he said.

A Communist-allied Czechoslovak newspaper, Lidova Demokrace, published an opposition call for the ouster of top Communists, a demand of the estimated 200,000 people who marched through Prague on Monday with chants of "Freedom!"

Demonstrators in the capital today were estimated in the tens of thousands. There were no reports of demonstrations in other cities.

On Monday, the country's major state media also broke with past practice by providing extensive coverage of the march in the capital — Communist Czechoslovakia's largest anti-government demonstration ever.

The coverage indicated the party leadership was increasingly shifting to the East German approach of tolerating massive public protests, but there were no signs the ruling Communists were willing to cede any power.

The CTK state news agency announced that the general prosecutor of the Czech republic had opened an investigation into the actions of security forces Friday. Scores of demonstrators were beaten by riot police to break up an anti-government rally.

The premier met with a 10-member delegation that included members of the newly formed Civic Forum opposition movement as well as representatives of the Communist Party youth movement, CTK reported

A government spokesman, Marcel Jansen, denied earlier reports that the group included Vaclav Havel, a playwright and Czechoslovakia's best-known dissident. There were no immediate details on the talks.

Civic Forum, formed Sunday, is comprised of a dozen opposition groups. It has demanded the resignation of officials who carried out purges following the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968 and those who ordered security forces to use violence to crush Friday's demonstrations.

Dick Dale displays a piece of the Berlin Wall and his firm's proposed packaging.

Get a piece of the wall?

CHICAGO (AP) — More than 11 tons of debris — reputed to be chunks of the Berlin Wall — has been shipped to O'Hare International Airport, officials said Monday.

"We guess it'll be sold as souvenirs," said supervisor Konstantin Prause of American Airlines, which flew in the rubble Sunday. "Maybe as paperweights or key tags."

Airline spokesman Tom Stack said the cargo was labeled "Pieces of the Berlin Wall."

Concord Express, a freight company in suburban Elk Grove, arranged to ship the debris from Hamburg, West Germany, spokeswoman Christie Stochl said Monday.

She declined to identify the owner.

East Germany's decision to knock holes in the Berlin Wall and let its people travel through freely had already prompted at least one other commercial endeavor in the region.

Panel probing Lincoln S&L scandal wonders why evidence 'ignored'

By DAN FREEDMAN
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Members of Congress probing the scandal-ridden Lincoln Savings and Loan Association want to know why federal officials twiddled their thumbs so long before seizing it, ignoring abundant evidence that Lincoln was teetering on insolvency.

The House Banking and Urban Affairs Committee, chaired by Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, may get some answers at a hearing Tuesday when the committee is scheduled to hear testimony from Lincoln's high-flying chief executive, Charles H. Keating Jr., and M. Danny Wall, former chairman of the now-defunct Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

A contributor of more than $1 million to the campaigns of five senators, Keating enlisted the lawmakers in April 1987 to meet with board officials on his behalf. Wall's predecessor as board chairman, Edwin Gray, attended one of the meetings.

However, congressional staff aides point out, it was not on Gray's watch that the bank board, then the chief regulator of S&Ls, ignored Lincoln's deteriorating financial health.

Rather, it was Wall, the next chairman, who cast the crucial vote in the board's 2-1 decision in May 1988 to go light on Lincoln. Within a year, however, Wall would be forced to reverse himself when the board ultimately seized Lincoln last April.

The FBI also is probing Keating's operation of the Irvine, Calif., thrift and is asking whether the senators improperly sought to influence the bank board on Keating's behalf. The senators are Alan Cranston, D-Calif., Don Riegle, D-Mich., John Glenn, D-Ohio, Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., and John McCain, R-Ariz.

Documents already introduced during the committee's probe of Lincoln show that on Oct. 16, 1987 — six months after Wall took over from Gray — Alvin W. Smuzynski, a bank board official, concluded that Lincoln was "operating in an unsafe and unsound manner."

Under Keating's control, Lincoln had papered over potential losses of $259 million through "misrepresentations, file stuffing and obstruction" of board examiners, Smuzynski wrote.

Based on a lengthy examination by the board's San Francisco office, Smuzynski recommended that the board force Lincoln to stop its questionable lending practices and restructure its board.

Yet, seven months later, the bank board mysteriously turned its back on Smuzynski and other staff members who had warned Lincoln was a "ticking time bomb."

The board voted 2-1 to accept a Lincoln-proposed agreement, allowing the S&L to keep operating while transferring regulatory supervision from the board's hard-nosed San Francisco office to its Washington, D.C. office and accepting the S&L's promises of reform.

Cloudy skies anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Mostly cloudy skies and a less than 20 percent chance of showers are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the lower 50s and winds will be from the southwest at 10-15 mph, becoming westerly by morning.

Wednesday is expected to be partly cloudy with the high in the middle 60s and winds from the north at 15-20 mph and gusty.

Monday's high of 76 was seven degrees cooler than the record high of 83 set for that date in 1942. The overnight low of 46 was 24 degrees warmer than the record low of 22 set for this date in 1988.

STATE

A chance of severe thunderstorms is forecast in parts of east and central Texas tonight. Skies over south and west Texas will be partly cloudy tonight with a chance for widely scattered showers or thunderstorms.

Skies will continue to be partly to mostly cloudy over the rest of the state through Wednesday.

Fog covered most of the southeastern half of the state this morning, lowering visibility to near zero in some locations across east and south Texas.

Meanwhile, patches of light rain and drizzle continued to dampen parts of northeast Texas. A trough of low pressure began moving in front of a weak cold front that stretched from the Red River near Childress to Lubbock. Clear to partly cloudy skies were common over the state.

NATION

Rain dampened parts of Seattle and Maine early today, hours after strong winds and thunderstorms knocked out power to tens of thousands of people from Ohio to New York.

A winter storm warning was posted for today in parts of Michigan, with up to a foot of snow possible over the snow belt of upper Michigan. Strong, gusty winds with cold temperatures were expected to bring wind chills down to 15 below zero over northern lower Michigan and to 20 below zero over upper Michigan.

A snow squall warning has been posted over extreme northeast Ohio. Up to 7 inches of snow could fall today east of Cleveland.

In northeast Ohio Monday night, more than 25,000 people were without electricity as winds gusting up to 54 mph downed power lines.

The Sixth Floor popular with visitors

By CHIP BROWN

DALLAS (AP) — About 1,000 people every day go to the sixth floor of the old Texas School Book Depository and share the assassin's view of the street where President John F. Kennedy was shot 26 years ago Wednesday.

During the nine months since President's Day 1989, visitors have been able to see the spot where it's believed Lee Harvey Oswald fired the shots that killed Kennedy.

The Sixth Floor Exhibit, a tribute to Kennedy's life and a shrine for his death, opened in February. The sixth floor of the building had been off-limits to the public since the Nov. 22, 1963, assassination.

While thousands of people visit the site in downtown Dallas each year, the creation of an exhibit or major memorial had been delayed, in part by fears that it would only extend any infamy attached to the city by Kennedy's death.

"It was a courageous thing for Dallasites to do," said Lyndalyn Adams, chairwoman of the Dallas County Historical Foundation, which led the drive to open The Sixth Floor. "This city had to go back to a time when Dallas meant assassination."

The reaction from most visitors is, "Thank you." They say it over and over again in the museum's guest book.

"Even though I did not live during his presidency, I feel like I know JFK after walking through the exhibit. Thanks for the memories," wrote Linda Brashear, a 16-year-old visitor from Santa Fe, N.M.

"I had been to Dallas before when there was nothing about JFK, and this does justice to what occurred here," wrote Joe DuBoyce, 25, a teacher from Newark, N.J.

For years, sightseers found little to mark the site of Kennedy's fatal motorcade through downtown Dallas.

Dallas lacked anything explaining Kennedy's death in its historic context, said Bob Hays, Sixth Floor director.

"The city has been linked with the assassination by the public throughout the world," Hays said. "The city needed to address it and this is what we have done."

Sen. Edward Kennedy, the president's brother, opposed the exhibit, saying the family would prefer the public remember the president's life rather than his death.

But Mrs. Adams hopes public approval of the exhibit may change his mind. She has sent him pages of the "memory book" signed by visitors.

He did not return several calls to his Washington office from The Associated Press.

About 1,000 people a day pay $4 to $6 to visit the Sixth Floor, with proceeds going to the county. Visitors walk through a maze of interpretive panels with more than 400 photographs.

Films include footage of Kennedy's motorcade rolling through Dealey Plaza and NBC's live broadcast of Jack Ruby fatally shooting Oswald in the basement of the Dallas Police Department.

Through glass panels, visitors can see where investigators say Oswald perched on boxes and fired his rifle out a corner window.

The exhibit mentions the controversies over the accuracy of the Warren Commission's report on the assassination and whether Oswald may have had conspirators.

Conspiracy theories are addressed more in-depth at the JFK Assassination Information Center, a three-room, privately run exhibit that opened in August a few blocks away.

The center is directed by J. Gary Shaw, whose 1976 book "Cover-Up," suggested the use of a second weapon and a government coverup of the assassination. The center supplements the Sixth Floor, Shaw said.

"We can say a lot of things they wouldn't," he said. "We take issue with a lot of the findings of the Warren Commission and the House Select Committee, and document them. The public can draw their own conclusions about what happened."

COMP

Parker also won a 17-14 victory over the size of the new commission on an amendment that would maintain three full-time members, as are currently on the Industrial Accident Board.

Hobby's bill would have expanded the board to six part-time members who would delegate more authority to an executive director.

Parker said organized labor had definite concerns about expanding the board, since the governor at the time the reforms went into effect would appoint a majority. "They feel very strongly that a six-member board is setting them up for a fall," he said.

Hobby was brusque in his remarks after the nine-hour session in which the Senate considered more than 50 amendments. "The Senate made some substantial changes in (the bill), but the legislative process isn't over," he said.

Asked why he expressed confidence earlier in the week, he said, "I was wrong." Asked if senators misled him about their votes, he replied, "Not very much."

House Speaker Gib Lewis said the House will not accept the Senate bill as amended.

"What my hope is that we will be able to make some kind of adjustment in the House that will be acceptable to the Senate and we won't have to go to the conference committee," Lewis said. "I'm not as optimistic as I was seven days ago, but I am still optimistic we will address workers compensation problems and we will work it out before the end of the session."

Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, the House sponsor who had embraced the Hobby bill, maintained the hope that Hobby would continue pushing for his version while the bill goes through the House.

The Senate likely will vote again when the bill returns with House amendments, and possibly after a conference committee works toward a compromise, Smith said.

Votes on individual amendments do not necessarily predict the way a senator would vote on an entire bill, Smith said, although he added, "Realistically, it certainly appears the Senate is moving away."

Montford said he was not sure what bill the Senate ended up with, after being repeatedly run over by the other side. "I was expecting that we would win some amendments 16-15, based on some statements, but this is a process and I would very much like to keep going until all fails," he said.

But many of the amendments contained compromises from the original Caperton-Parker bill, he said. "A lot of the stuff they had is frankly substantial movement from where we were at one point in the negotiation."

Montford said he was convinced all sides wanted to produce a bill, but they agreed to "slug it out" over amendments that ended up changing the tone of Hobby's version.

Parker said he believes a working majority of 17 senators will continue to support the bill as tentatively approved near midnight Monday. "If the House wants to dig their heels in and say it will be all or nothing, it will be the House that will be the obstructionists and we unfortunately will continue to labor under the current system," he said.

Montford unsuccessfully resisted the amendment that made Hobby's Senate Bill 2, which includes insurance reforms and contains several points objectionable to House leaders, contingent upon passage of Senate Bill 1, which reforms the system for determining benefits for injured workers.

"I think the issue of mandatory comp needs to be thoroughly debated in both houses," Montford said. The Hobby bill would require businesses with fewer than five employees to carry the insurance by 1994 but he doubts the House will go along with that provision. An estimated one-third of businesses do not carry insurance, with businesses blaming the high costs.

"We obviously can't guarantee that mandatory (compensation insurance) will pass in the House," he said. "I personally think mandatory is going to have tough going in the House."

Other possible alternatives include a requirement that businesses be required to show proof of financial responsibility if they do not cover their workers for injuries on the job, he said.

CAF

Midland will be submitting a "modified" bid to the CAF General Staff by Dec. 15, as will other CAF contenders, probably including Brownsville, Longview and San Antonio, among others. And on Jan. 28 in the CAF winter meeting in Phoenix, Ariz., the membership again will vote on relocating the CAF in a referendum.

"We could have a 100 (bidders)," said Mabee. But, he added, the General Staff "won't accept a 100. There will be frivolous ones."

As in the previous election, any winner must glean at least 75 percent of the vote. But if Midland fails in its renewed campaign, Jones said, Midland and the CAF "would not go through the aggravation and expense of another referendum."

The Rio Grande Valley's CAF colonels and civic leaders, including McAllen Mayor Othal Brand, campaigned as vigorously to keep the CAF in the Valley as Mabee and Jones campaigned to move it west.

"They (in the Valley) are very smug and very arrogant right now," Mabee said Monday in a news conference in which he and Jones outlined renewed plans to bring the CAF to Midland.

In West Texas, they claim, the dry climate, as opposed to the humid Gulf Coast, is ideal for aircraft preservation. In addition, Midland and West Texas are rich in aviation history, particularly in World War II training bases for pilots, bombardiers and air crews.

The Valley CAF colonels "think they are running 'the show,' and they are, for all practical purposes," Mabee said.

The Valley bloc stymied Midland's campaign. The CAF vote was 1,695 or 70.5 percent to move the CAF to Midland and 707 against the measure. Of that 2,402-vote total, 787 votes were cast Oct. 13 in a referendum in the CAF annual meeting in Harlingen. Of those, 394 or 50.1 percent voted to reject Midland's offer, and 393 voted to move the CAF to Midland.

"No place is going to get 75 percent of the vote without the Rio Grande Valley's agreement," McAllen Mayor Othal Brand said after the vote was released Saturday in Harlingen. He had accused Midland of trying to "railroad" its proposal. But that, said Jones, was hardly the case.

In the absentee balloting, where 1,615 of the 2,402 votes were cast, the vote was 80.6 percent for moving the CAF to Midland: 1,302 to 313. In the renewed campaigned, Midland will be "targeting" those CAF colonels who did not vote for Midland and those among the CAF's 6,500 members who did not vote at all. "There's more people (colonels) outside the Valley area. We are going to work harder on them," Mabee said.

Jones said that "the biggest bulk of the no-votes were the people who live in the Valley. If you take out the Valley, we had 85 percent of the membership say, 'Let's get out of there.' We think there's a resounding message from the membership to move" the CAF.

Jones said he would request an audit of the vote, which was counted by the Harlingen-based Long, Chilton, Payte & Hardin firm of certified public accountants.

Jones and Mabee said that the CAF General Staff just found out last weekend that Brownsville Mayor Ygnacio Garza, who was working to move the CAF to Brownsville, was a Brownsville-based partner in that CPA firm.

"We would be requesting an audit whether that conflict existed or not," Jones said. "When you've spent a year working on a deal, you have right to audit the books."

"I'm sure there's no conflict," said Mabee.

Wayne Beneke, a partner in Harlingen firm, said Monday that his CPA firm, would be "glad to assist" in the audit and to provide "whatever they need, however they want it." Beneke said he "would request of Mr. Jones" that the audit request be made through the CAF headquarters.

Beneke said that the CPA firm "took every precaution to retain the confidentiality of the results" and that Garza, who is a partner in the firm's Brownsville office, "had no access or no previous knowledge of any of the results."

Midland's first proposal in its bid to win the CAF to West Texas included a $6-million offer that included construction of the CAF Museum and headquarters at Midland International Airport, a 12-acre site, 175,000 square feet of hangar space, office space, and two 20-acre tracts adjacent to the proposed site for future expansion of the CAF.

Value of the offer did not include the worth of the 52 acres, which Mabee said would be "several" millions of dollars. Midland's offer was debt free.

Further, noted Mabee, the CAF's 11-member General Staff, which includes CAF co-founders Lefty Gardener and Lloyd Nolen, unanimously supported the move to Midland. The governing General Staff would negotiate any move following a 75-percent-vote approval on a relocation.

The CAF is being forced out of its niche in what it calls Rebel Field at Valley International Airport at Harlingen. The airport is running out of space. As a result, Harlingen, McAllen and Brownsville joined forces to try to locate the CAF in Brownsville at the southern-most tip of Texas.

The CAF, which was founded in the early 1960s to preserve in flying condition those increasingly-rare "warbirds" of the 1939-45 era, has been treated "shabbily in the Valley," Jones said.

"We have never had any public support," Jones said.

"They just took us for granted," said Mabee. "They wouldn't even paint our hangar for $7,500."

In the CAF's Oct. 13 vote, CAF members only were considering the move to Midland.

However, other other cities, such as Brownsville, San Antonio and Longview, had made bids for the CAF after Midland tendered its offer.

Brownsville, after reviewing Midland's $6-million offer, proposed a $13-million bid, which Jones and Mabee claimed was inflated and misleading.

"They claimed they had $3-million dollars," Mabee said. "They had not raised a penny — still don't have a penny. We called their hand on it, asked for a retraction and did not get it. The damage had already been done."

Further, Brownsville was offering $8 million of "free" electricity to which Mabee murmured: "big deal."

"We only use $3,500 a month in electricity," Mabee said. "We would have to run all of the air conditioners all the time and leave all the hangar doors open, and we would never live long enough to use it." Brownsville's offer came with a debt service, Jones said. Midland's offer comes without any indebtedness to the CAF.

What Jones called Midland's "problem" in the first referendum was that Midland "had to be first because no one else had any interest in the CAF until Midland came along.

"And everyone had four months to shoot at our proposal," Jones said. "And the way most of them shot at the Midland proposal was by lying about it."

In the second referendum, Jones said, "each proposal will have to stand on its own merits, which makes the Midland proposal far and away the best proposal.

"When we put the Midland proposal together," Jones said, "we put it together in the vane of having to live with everything we told the CAF we would do. The other proposals were submitted on just 'looking better' than what was already on the table. We are going to put our proposal less in a business vane and more in an economic value to the Confederate Air Force."

An earlier CAF long-range plan projected an $18-million cost for building the CAF a world-class interpretative museum-headquarters, Jones said.

The next Midland CAF offer, which Jones suggested would include land values, will be far more than the original and conservative $6 million.

"We don't know what the Midland offer is going to look like when we reevaluate it," Jones said, "and we really are not going to announce it until everyone opens their offers. We are the only real deal on the table. And we don't want them shooting at our deal."

LINCOLN

It took almost a year for the board to realize that "action should have been taken more promptly," Wall later admitted. With Lincoln's actual losses mounting beyond $29 million a quarter, the board seized it on April 14.

Because Lincoln deposits are federally insured, taxpayers ultimately may have to pay $2.5 billion in bail-out funds.

Congressional aides say Wall will be asked Tuesday why he was apparently unwilling to take a hard line against Keating.

Wall was a long-time aide and confidant to Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, serving as staff director of the Senate Banking Committee in the early 1980s when Garn was chairman.

In late April 1987, President Reagan appointed Wall chairman of the bank board in large measure because of his connections to Garn. Garn reportedly introduced Wall to Keating. And Wall has acknowledged that he met with Keating in September 1987 — a month before Smuzynski warned of Lincoln's demise.

WALL

B&P Imports in Munster, Ind., is taking orders for wall chunks, though the company has sold the 100 pounds it had.

Paul Wells, a partner in the venture, said the company is taking orders for golf-ball size chunks for $10, plus $2.50 to cover shipping and handling.

B&P sends along a copy of the customs certificate showing the country of origin as West Germany.

"That's about all you can do to prove" the debris is really from the wall, Wells said.

B&P started after a friend in West Germany sent a chunk of the wall to Wells' partner, William Bell.

"We figured everybody in the country was having the same idea as us, but we were just lucky enough to have a connection out there," Wells said.

Bell was in West Germany making arrangements to ship more of the wall back to the United States, Wells said, noting shipping costs are about $4 per pound.

"It should go pretty good ... a lot of people are buying it as a stocking stuffer," he said.

Pentagon considers cutting number of soldiers, ships, bases

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney is studying suggestions for "revolutionary changes" in America's military — including cutting 100,000 Army soldiers, getting rid of 100 Navy ships and closing at least a dozen Air Force bases, Pentagon sources say.

Amid the long-range budget planning, a senior Pentagon official said Monday that Cheney also is considering a budget plan for the 1991 fiscal year that could cut $20 billion from the projected $317 billion spending level.

"It could be that bad," the official said. "It could be that we have to cut that much."

Cheney planned to hold a second day of meetings today with Pentagon chiefs to pore over proposed wide-ranging cutbacks for 1992 to 1994, which some Pentagon insiders say could be the most sweeping since the end of the Vietnam war.

While much of the activity is driven by hints of change in the Soviet threat, the Pentagon also is trying to get ahead of Congress in planning for the nearly inevitable budget squeeze, officials say.

"Mr. Cheney has no intention of going up to Capitol Hill and having his budget thrown back in his face," Defense Department spokesman Pete Williams said Monday. "This is going to be a very painful process for everyone."

Some congressional sources, however, said they are wary about the Pentagon projections of major force cuts, suggesting the numbers may be overstated to grab the limelight from lawmakers who have been warning the Pentagon to tighten its belt.

The Pentagon expects to submit its 1991 spending projection to the Office of Management and Budget by Dec. 8, the official said.

Last week, Cheney ordered the military chiefs of the Army, Navy and Air Force to produce "worst-case" budget cuts designed to slash spending by $180 billion over the five-year period between 1992 to 1994.

"These are revolutionary changes," said one knowledgeable military source. "Mr. Cheney is really trying to shake the service chiefs out. He wants their backs pressed to the wall, telling him exactly what it is they can give up. He wants their grimmest scenarios."

Bush vows to 'keep my eyes open' in talks with Gorbachev

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, vowing to "keep my eyes wide open," is trying to downplay expectations for next week's Malta meeting with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev while barely able to constrain his own high hopes.

Bush was conferring today with visiting West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on the dramatic events of recent weeks in Eastern Europe. The president will meet with another ally, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, at Camp David on Friday.

Bush won loud applause from audiences in Rhode Island on Monday when he promised to "keep my eyes wide open" and approach the talks with caution.

"I sometimes get needled a little about being cautious and prudent, but somehow I think that's what a president of the United States ought to do when you go to meet ... a Soviet leader," Bush said.

Bush spent Monday in Chicago and Providence to boost the fortunes of two pro-choice Republican congresswomen, Reps. Lynn Martin and Claudine Schneider, who have their eyes on Senate races next year.

But immediately after singing Schneider's praises in Providence, he got aboard Air Force One and for a second time vetoed a District of Columbia appropriations bill because of abortion funding provisions he found "unacceptable."

Schneider, who has not yet declared her candidacy for the seat now occupied by Democratic Sen. Claiborne Pell, was a guest on the presidential aircraft and she told reporters, "I'm disappointed."

Schneider, Martin and two other pro-choice GOP congresswomen met with Bush last Tuesday to, in Schneider's words, ask him to make clear there was room within the GOP for abortion rights supporters.

Schneider said they asked him "to find a way where he could still maintain the integrity of his own position on abortion without becoming involved in the minutiae of legislation, making determinations of who does what with the money when."

"Clearly he has sent that message by coming up to Rhode Island on my behalf today," she said.

But his second D.C. appropriations veto — his fourth abortion-related veto in recent weeks — indicated that Bush is adamantly opposed to any public funding for abortion, except to save the life of the mother.

The District bill would have used federal Medicaid funds for abortions only in those circumstances, but would have allowed the district to pay for abortions on demand for poor women with local taxpayers' dollars.

But under the district's home rule law, even its locally generated tax dollars are subject to approval by Congress and the president, and Bush said he wanted no part of funding abortions "with no restriction whatsoever."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said House Speaker Thomas Foley had requested quick presidential action "so Congress could have time to act on it before the Thanksgiving recess."

Fitzwater announced earlier that Bush will stay over in Europe an extra day after the Dec. 2-3 meeting with Gorbachev to brief the NATO allies in Brussels.

At a fund-raising reception for Rhode Island Gov. Edward DiPrete in a tent outside his Cranston, R.I., mansion, Bush predicted, "It's going to be a historic meeting," but quickly added, "I don't want to see overpromises coming from it."

But he said, "We are living in times where the potential for peace and reduced tensions has never been better."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Seek out responsible, forward-looking associates. Joint endeavors promise fantastic results. Keep your personal and professional lives strictly separate during January. A raise or promotion is linked to improved technical skills. Renewing a childhood friendship in February could lead to a new partnership. A romantic relationship takes on deeper meaning in April. Vacationing in another country brings new spiritual insights. Moving to smaller quarters in the fall will reduce expenses and stress.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: composer Hoagie Carmichael, novelist George Eliot, actress Jamie Lee Curtis, tennis star Boris Becker.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Concentrate on your long-term goals. A foe becomes an ally. Tie up loose ends concerning a partnership. Talking shop tonight could pay off handsomely. Review current investments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Greater emphasis is placed on travel and distant contacts. A new contract will help you boost your earnings. A last-minute invitation pleases someone who would otherwise spend Thanksgiving alone.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Complete routine chores early in the day. It may be difficult to reach an authority figure. Write vital memos and letters before leaving the office so you can truly relax tomorrow!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be realistic about your schedule. Complete essential work but do not fret if others are focused on Thanksgiving. News from afar corroborates an idea you had. Give romance a second chance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take the lead in a moneymaking venture, but avoid incurring needless risks. Emotional fulfillment deepens in a current romance. Be wary of financial entanglements with friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Order flowers or buy a small gift for your Thanksgiving dinner hostess. Be patient when dealing with someone who is cranky; he may be ill or beset with stressful personal problems.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A visitor from afar could open the door to a brighter future. An authority figure's friendly advice is right on target. Listen closely. A relative or friend may want to play Cupid.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Get an early start if going out of town today. Public transportation could prove more reliable than traveling by car. Go ahead and mix business with pleasure tonight. Romance is on the right track.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Save your money; refuse to play a long shot. A newspaper article shows you the need for community volunteers. Follow up; your services will be in great demand. Pursue self-improvement activities.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Carelessness could result in a loss. Put valuables in a safe deposit box before leaving on a trip. Telephone family members if you will not be together for Thanksgiving.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Today gives you a chance to catch up on detail work and still have time for fun. Sharing secrets with children helps overcome a generation gap. Romance becomes more intense.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Homemakers should get a head start on preparing Thanksgiving dinner. Make that special dessert. An out-of-town visitor will enjoy getting into the cooking act. Entertain at home tonight.

Opening lead: Two of ♣

The value of a hand waxes and wanes as the bidding progresses. South's 11 high-card points grew to gigantic proportions and the final action was well judged.

Once North jump-raised diamonds, South could afford to cue-bid the ace of hearts en route to five diamonds. There was nothing to add after North's first club cue-bid, but when North repeated his action South took stock. To be interested in a grand slam without either of the two top trumps, North had to have the ace of spades as well as first and second-round control of clubs. Therefore, South's singleton spade represented a key control. Reasoning was translated into action with a jump to seven diamonds.

The accuracy of South's deductions was borne out in the play. Although West's club lead removed a key dummy entry, declarer was still able to manage his assets to yield the maximum return. After winning the ace of clubs, declarer cashed the ace of spades and ruffed a spade high. Two of dummy's trumps served as entries for two more spade ruffs, the first also high to prevent an overruff, which set up two long cards in the suit. Declarer was then able to ruff a club on the table and cash the good spades for two heart discards. In all, declarer scored three spade tricks, one heart, seven trumps in hand including three ruffs, one club and one club ruff in dummy for a total of 13 tricks.

Muhammed Ali scents profits from new venture as heavy-hitter of perfume world

DALLAS (AP) — Former heavyweight boxing champ Muhammad Ali believes he can make it to the top again — but this time he won't be throwing jabs and counterpunches to do it.

Rather, Ali is traveling to promote a new cologne that bears his name.

"It's the greatest," he said in an appearance here.

The 47-year-old Ali, who was known as much for his wagging tongue as his flying fists in his younger days, is pulling no punches as he promotes his new product.

"I predict I'll sell more cologne than anyone else in the world," he said. "Even Calvin Klein will back up.

"Women love it. Makes 'em chase men they don't even know."

About 200 people showed up at a Dallas department store to buy the cologne from Ali in person on Monday.

Promotional materials say the fragrance is a warm, spicy blend of scents with woody overtones and a hint of musk in the base that conveys Ali's sense of power, grace, mystery and allure.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lloyd Bridges of "Sea Hunt" fame surfaced in Washington to plug legislation that would ban oil drilling off much of the nation's coastline.

Bridges

After ducking out of the Capitol Hill hearing room Monday, Bridges met with editors of The Washington Post.

He may have been planning to take some notes of his own. Bridges is starring in a new network television series called "Capital News" in which he plays the Post's editor-in-chief.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Media magnate Ted Turner is offering a $500,000 prize for a novel that promotes solutions to the world's problems.

Turner

The winner of the Turner Tomorrow Award, to be given by Turner Broadcasting System Inc. and its subsidiary, Turner Publishing Inc., also will receive a hardcover publishing contract guaranteeing a minimum printing of 50,000 copies and a $50,000 promotion campaign. It also likely would become a TV movie, Turner said.

"The great minds of today need to focus on the problems of global significance if humanity is to see new tomorrows," Turner said Monday. "We're floundering around as a species right now with piecemeal solutions."

The award is larger than the $463,000 given this year for the Nobel Prize in literature. There aren't any plans to make it an annual award.

Winners of four awards of merit will receive $50,000, a hardcover publication contract and an option for film production.

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Socialite-actress Dina Merrill has married film executive Ted Hartley. Former baseball Commissioner Peter Uberroth served as best man.

The small ceremony was held Saturday at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin in San Francisco, said Esme Chandlee, the couple's Los Angeles publicist.

Miss Merrill — who appeared in the movies "Caddyshack II," and "Operation Petticoat," and the television miniseries "Roots II" — is the daughter of Edward F. Hutton, founder of the Wall Street brokerage firm that now is part of Shearson Lehman Hutton. Her mother was Marjorie Merriweather Post of the Post cereals empire.

Hartley, 59, is the chairman and chief executive officer of RKO-Pavilion and Miss Merrill, 63, serves as creative director for the film production company.

It is the third marriage for Miss Merrill, whose second marriage was to actor Cliff Robertson.

FORT WALTON BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Creditors of Dick Gregory's closed diet resort say they never would have let the business run up more than $30,000 in unpaid bills if they weren't dazzled by the former comedian's star status.

Gregory

The comic-turned-activist moved his Dick Gregory's Diet & Health Resort out of the Mariner of the Gulf motel Oct. 5, promising to pay his various bills within 48 hours. But some creditors say they still haven't seen any checks.

"We would not have allowed them to stay there if not for Dick Gregory," said Darlene Grim, who contends Gregory's company owes her husband's real estate agency $3,000 for rent on a condominium apartment. "We thought a savior was coming to Fort Walton Beach."

Gregory owes the Mariner on the Gulf more than $26,500 in rent, interest and penalties, said motel owner Ruth White.

Gregory spokesman Reginald Toran in Shreveport, La., said Gregory is trying to raise money to pay his creditors, but didn't give further details.

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — Tony Melendez, a man born without arms who impressed Pope John Paul II in 1987 by playing the guitar with his toes, joined an anti-abortion march attended by thousands.

"Life is so precious. Because of a drug, I was denied arms, but I still feel in my heart that my mother would have had me even if she had known," Melendez, 27, said at Sunday's protest.

Melendez, of Chino, suffered birth defects because his mother took thalidomide, a sedative once prescribed for pregnant women.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The so-called typical American family has just about disappeared, save for reruns of 1950s and 1960s TV shows like "Leave it to Beaver," Tipper Gore said.

"If 'Leave it to Beaver' were still on television today, Beaver would be a latchkey kid and Eddie Haskell would be dealing drugs," Mrs. Gore told the Tennessee School Board Association on Sunday.

"Let me tell you, it's not easy being a kid today," said Mrs. Gore, wife of Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn.

Mrs. Gore, a frequent critic of rock music lyrics who also is active in support of other conservative campaigns on social issues, said the modern family situation makes it hard for children to resist the temptations of drugs from their peers.

Cristiani leadership must be witnessed

The brutal murders of six Catholic priests and two others in San Salvador are generally believed to have been committed by the Salvadoran far right in retaliation for the latest leftist guerrilla attacks.

The National Republican Alliance of President Alfredo Cristiani is now more divided than ever — split between pragmatic business leaders who see peace as necessary for economic stability and the extremists of Roberto d'Aubuisson who are said to have used death squads to impose their own solution on the country.

Cristiani's reputation as a moderate leader, who can hold the far right in line, has been clearly damaged in the U.S. Congress and around the United States. The right-wing faction is believed to have made a martyr of Salvadoran Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero. The extremists seem to be willing to risk the loss of U.S. support for El Salvador by such brazen killings. The more cynical of them are convinced the United States has no choice but to support the democratically elected government of Cristiani.

They are wrong. A sufficient number of Republicans will join the Democrats in cutting off military and other aid to El Salvador if these human rights abuses continue. The reason is the fact that the American people will not support an undemocratic government engaged in such butchery.

The priests' political sin was that they preached ending the 10 years of strife. It is a well known fact that the far right repeatedly threatened them. Members of the Salvadoran army also called them subversive.

If he is to be credible, Cristiani must find and punish the killers. Should he fail, El Salvador may well see the cutting or extreme slashing of U.S. aid. The far right will then face the guerrillas at severe risk to their own lives and property.

El Salvador is headed toward chaos and many more martyrs unless Cristiani proves to be a genuine leader.

Escaping persecution

After perusing Glenn Jennings' letter regarding prayer group rights, I have begun to suspect that in certain people's minds the prayer groups conceived on the high school campuses were not promoted to prayer alone but for the progression of specific religious beliefs.

Jennings seems to support my suspicion as he insinuates that, based on the constitutional right to free speech, the prayer groups should have the right to "invite other students to attend" and "share their beliefs with their fellow students." In an attempt to further his viewpoint, he launches an attack on the Rev. Claire Petersberger, board president James Fuller, and Sam Manning because they opposed the prayer groups on the basis of separation of church and state. It appears that the primary interpretation of these attacks is that Jennings wants the schools to become a playground for religious intervention.

Thus, Jennings makes me wonder if some adults, like himself, have chosen to seize upon a group of young people to channel their own values and beliefs into the schools. Following, for Jennings, it is not enough that the prayer groups have obtained the right to meet together for prayer. He now wants to promote a misinterpreted right to evangelize.

In conclusion, I believe that Jennings needs to recall that, in part, our forefathers founded this country to escape religious persecution and the Constitution was established to protect the government and its agencies from specific religious interests and control.

AIDS confusion

Reading with interest the article of Nov. 7 concerning the conviction for attempted murder of the AIDS infected prisoner, I was left with some confusion.

There being strong political forces favoring mixing AIDS infected children with identities protected in schools indicates the inevitable third-grade spitting contests will not be considered attempted murder. Or, will monitors apprehend these criminals for prosecution?

With our police and doctors wearing spacesuits when handling HIV positive individuals, will then special classroom garb be required in our schools? Or should we just outlaw biting and spitting? Or was there an error in our courts, or is only "mature" saliva dangerous, or do we wonder why few people believe "government authorities" or other "experts," or ...

Baker's 'promotion'

Thousands of people believe that Jim Baker was the worst secretary of the treasury our country has ever seen, because of his abysmal ignorance of finance and economics, and many respected economists agree.

So what does he get for his failure? Promotion to secretary of state.

I predict that he will be the worst secretary of state this country has ever had, even worse than George Shultz, if possible.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Nov. 21, the 325th day of 1989. There are 40 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Two hundred years ago, on Nov. 21, 1789, North Carolina became the 12th state to ratify the U.S. Constitution.

On this date:

In 1877, inventor Thomas A. Edison announced the invention of his phonograph, which he dubbed a "talking machine."

In 1922, Rebecca L. Felton of Georgia was sworn in as the first woman in the U.S. Senate.

In 1934, the Cole Porter musical "Anything Goes," starring Ethel Merman as Reno Sweeney, opened at the Alvin Theater in New York.

In 1942, the Alaska highway across Canada was formally opened.

In 1963, President Kennedy and his wife, Jacqueline, arrived in San Antonio to begin a two-day tour of Texas.

In 1964, the Verrazano Narrows — at that time, the world's longest suspension bridge — opened to traffic, linking the New York City boroughs of Brooklyn and Staten Island.

In 1969, the Senate voted 55-45 against the nomination of Clement F. Haynsworth to the U.S. Supreme Court, the first time a candidate for the nation's highest court had been rejected since 1930.

In 1973, President Nixon's attorney, J. Fred Buzhardt, revealed the presence of an 18½-minute gap in one of the White House tape recordings related to Watergate.

In 1980, 87 people died in a fire at the MGM Grand hotel-casino in Las Vegas.

Finland may be Germany's role model

HELSINKI, Finland — Once the novelty of a permeable Berlin Wall wears off, East Germans will have to get serious about what kind of government they want and what kind of ties they will maintain with Big Brother, the Soviet Union.

Jack Anderson

In spite of talk about reunification, East Germans are more likely to look to Finland than West Germany as a role model. When Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev visited Finland last month, he dodged questions about creating more Finlands in the Eastern Bloc — more countries friendly to the Soviets yet neutral.

Gorbachev would only concede that Finland is "a model of relations between states with different social systems."

But then Gorbachev made a stunning declaration at the elegant Finlandia Concert Hall. He said Moscow "unreservedly recognizes Finland's neutral status and shall continue to do so in the future."

The Finns were elated. Never before had a Soviet premier acknowledged anything but Finland's "aspirations for neutrality." In light of developments in Eastern Europe, Gorbachev's admission is more than an exercise in semantics.

Finland is a robust, market-driven, Western-style, parliamentary democracy. Conversations with officials and ordinary people on our recent visit here confirmed just how independent the Finns feel they are from the Soviet Union. Instead of capitulation, one finds here a sense of "sisu," the Finnish word for "guts." It was guts that sustained them through 60 separate wars with the Soviets — the most recent being World War II.

The Soviet Union invaded Finland in 1939. In the 15-week war that followed, the desperate Finns fought back with homemade gasoline bombs, and called them "Molotov cocktails," after the Soviet Foreign Minister Vyacheslav Molotov, whom they believed started the war.

In the end, 24,000 Finns died and the Soviets lost more than a million, but the Finns also lost the war and had to cede territory to the Soviet Union. In 1941, Finland joined the Nazis in invading the Soviet Union. They lost that fight too, but the Soviets probably realized they could never subjugate the Finns. Finland was never forced to join the Warsaw Pact.

A careful and complicated co-existence was worked out by the legendary Finnish President Urho Kaleva Kekkonen, who served from 1956 to 1981. He kept the Soviets at bay as he built a modern economy and democracy.

Finns like to tell a story — probably apocryphal — of Kekkonen fishing with Leonid Brezhnev. Brezhnev suggested that the two countries should drop their borders. Kekkonen replied, "I am too old to govern such a large country." That was how Kekkonen handled the Soviets, at arms length with no fear.

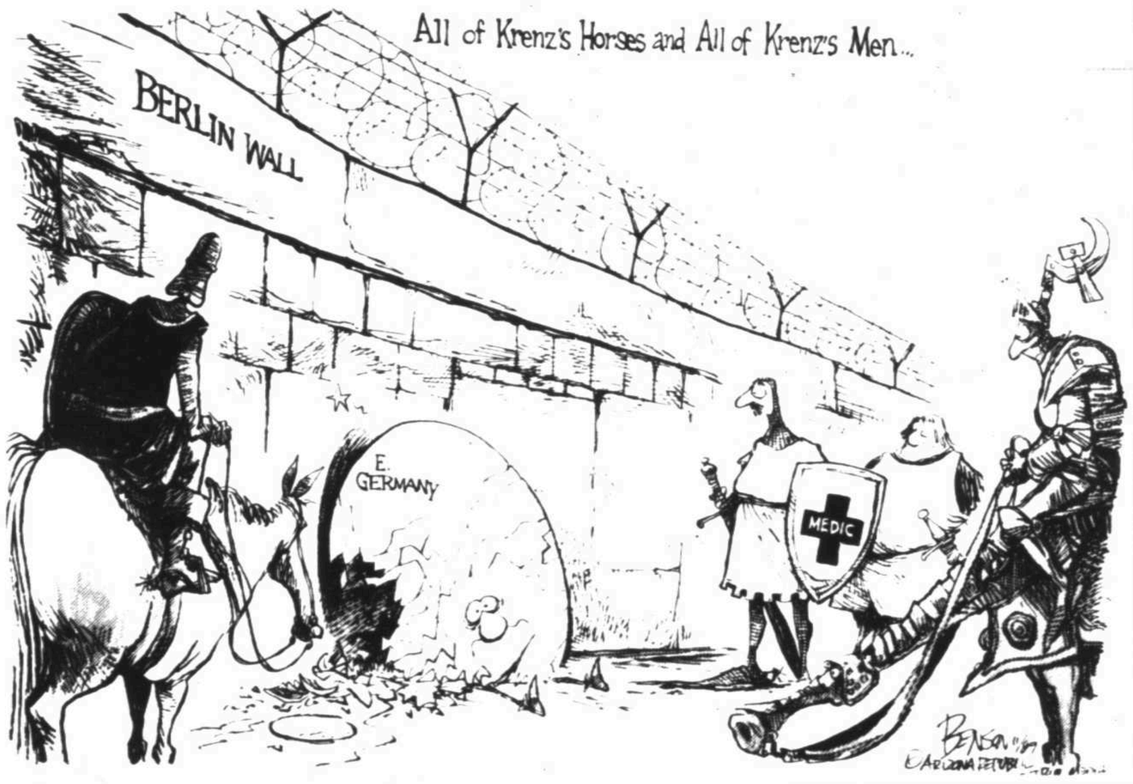

Gorbachev is clearly pleased with Soviet-Finland relations, but he does not want the idea to catch on. He fears other East European countries will shuck the Communist Party leadership that the Finns never had.

Gorbachev also knows, according to U.S. intelligence reports, that Hungary has already sent emissaries to study the Finnish model and that, secretly, some top East German officials are planning a visit soon to learn some lessons from the Finns.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Ronald Reagan apologized for his gaffe in Japan when he said it was a good thing that the Japanese were buying American film companies because they would clean up Hollywood. Reagan's apology hints that he is more chagrined about getting caught than he is about insulting Hollywood. "What a person says in one country is often misinterpreted in another country," he said. Here's our interpretation: "What a person says in one country, he doesn't expect to be heard in another country."

Fiscal policies hurt Americans' ability to save

Beware the bromides of almost any month. They are nearly always wrong and frequently are invoked to hide the truth.

A bromide is a commonplace saying. For example, Americans don't save enough money. You hear that one a lot. The Japanese supposedly save 15 percent of their national income while we Americans save only about 1.5 percent. This is often trotted out to explain why we buy Japanese cars or electronics. Well, in the first place, what is "enough" savings? How do you know what I ought to save and how can I know what you ought to save, much less how much Mr. Moto in Osaka ought to save?

Charley Reese

One sensible reason many Americans don't save a lot is because they recognize that the fiscal and monetary irresponsibility of their government makes savings a poor investment.

If you had buried $1,000 in the backyard in 1967, that $1,000 today would be worth only about $310. The rest of that purchasing power has been stolen by inflation caused by government policies. Just to have ended up with the same $1,000 you had in 1967, measured in purchasing power, you would have had to have found an investment that would yield nearly 66 percent. That's virtually impossible if you want to stay legal. It doesn't make sense to save if your savings earn 5 percent and inflation is running 6 percent. You're going in the hole.

This same inflationary pick-pocketing also discourages savings in a more direct fashion. Many Americans, by the time they buy the necessities for themselves and their children, don't have much paycheck left.

Don't be conned. Moaning about the lack of savings on the part of average Americans is a phony baloney ploy designed to shift the blame from the government to the people.

You want savings? Then give Americans a currency that has a stable value so that we can know that if we save a dollar today, you won't steal half of it with inflation tomorrow.

Put a cap on usurious interest charges. One reason people can't save is that they are paid 5 percent on their savings and charged 11 to 36 percent on anything they borrow. How can a young couple that has to pay $120,000 for a $40,000 house — $80,000 in interest — going to save?

We the people don't control our monetary system, our banking system, or our government's fiscal policy. All three of those play a role in determining the value of money. The elected officials, however, who should be regulating those in the best interest of the people too often regulate them in the best interest of people with fat wallets.

Look, for example, at how well they regulated the savings and loan industry. The savings and loan sharks and the politicians made money; the savers lost. And so did the taxpayers. Perhaps that's another reason Mr. Moto in Osaka saves more than Mr. Smith in Pasadena.

So, don't let the politicians blow smoke in your eyes and convince you that you cause the trade deficit because you don't save enough. They, the politicians, are the cause of the problem. They have not provided a sound dollar. They have not conducted a rational trade policy.

The maquilladoras program, for example, is a national disgrace. That's a program whereby our government encourages American business to put their manufacturing processes on the Mexican side of the border and their distribution process on the U.S. side. One million jobs have gone south of the border — most of them to low pay and in sweatshop conditions. Like it happens so often, the people do not benefit. Mexicans workers are exploited and American workers are unemployed. Fat wallets gain weight.

It is bad enough to be robbed or cheated but when the robber and the cheat try to convince you that you really lost your own money through your own negligence, then that is an insult that infringes on human dignity.

Pompous and arrogant politicians should remember that it is the theft of human dignity, not money, which drives people to bloody revolution.

PEGGY ROBERSON

Texan eyes, ears of Appropriations subcommitee

WASHINGTON — When he was 13, 71-year-old Aubrey A. "Tex" Gunnels left his family's farm in the East Texas county of San Augustine to seek a better life.

"I wasn't abused or anything like that. But I was often hungry," Gunnels recalled in an interview last week in his high-ceilinged office at the U.S. Capitol.

Peggy Roberson

One of six children, Gunnels sometimes went to bed early in the evening, he said, knowing that if he could drop off to sleep he wouldn't be hungry again until morning.

"I wished for two things — to be 1,000 miles away from there and to own a typewriter," said Gunnels.

Gunnels made his way to Plainview, about 1,000 miles to the west of his childhood home. There, he tried to go to school and work at the same time.

Then, an uncle in Lubbock took him in, with the understanding he would work at Draughon College, a now-defunct private business school that his uncle was managing at the time.

Gunnels became a whiz at shorthand and typing and taught the subjects. These skills, he said, were the foundation upon which he built his career.

He took an examination for a federal job and scored third highest of all the applicants in his test group.

It was 1938 when he was summoned to Washington to work for the Government Printing Office.

Upon arriving, however, Gunnels found he already had been transferred — to the Bureau of Public Debt. Instead of using his typing and shorthand, he was assigned to "manual labor," helping to load and unload trainloads of wornout currency that was to be accounted for and burned.

Soon, however, he worked his way up the job ladder.

For several years, he served as a clerk in the office of U.S. Regional Organizations, a foreign aid agency, in Paris, France.

He returned to the United States. Sometime later, with a family, he was preparing to go overseas again when a committee chairman chased him down and asked him to come to work for Congress. He agreed and unpacked.

Since 1951, he was been on the staff of the House Appropriations subcommittee on the treasury — postal service & general government.

The subcommittee chairman, Edward R. Roybal, D-Calif., has been quoted as calling Gunnels, now the panel's staff director, the subcommittee's eyes and ears.

In recognition of his unstinting government service, federal officials recently named a law-enforcement training facility in Glynco, Ga., for Gunnels.

A modest man who says he hates reporters only slightly less than he hates lawyers, Gunnels expresses annoyance with reports that he functions as the behind-the-scenes power on the panel that handles, among other things, appropriations for the White House.

He was incensed by a suggestion earlier this year in Congressional Quarterly, a nonpartisan policy journal, that he had written $200,000 into an appropriations bill to renovate and remodel the third floor of the vice president's residence after Vice President Quayle's wife, Marilyn, gave him a guided tour of the 1893 structure.

"He (the reporter) said she bypassed the committee," said Gunnels, still steaming about the article. He would never do that, he said.

Gunnels explained that a White House staff member asked him to look at the historic building, which served as the home for the chief of naval operations before it became the vice president's official residence in 1974. As a matter of courtesy, he said, he agreed.

President Bush had asked for $378,000 for the "care, maintenance and operation" of the vice president's residence, but the Appropriations Committee finally approved $578,000.

"None of the other vice presidents (since it became the official residence) have had young children," said Gunnels. "The Quayle children were sleeping in sleeping bags."

Gunnels also is vexed that the article resulted in his receiving several letters from people who mistakenly thought that the federal government was paying for renovation of the Quayles' private home.

Gunnels arrives at the Capitol each day shortly after 7 a.m. and heads for the cafeteria for breakfast. At 6 p.m. or a little after, he boards the underground subway that takes him to the garage where his car is parked. Occasionally, he jokingly demands of the subway operator that he take him "to the nearest bar."

Gunnels, who is divorced now, is the father of three children. He lives in the Washington suburb of Falls Church, Va., and has no intention of moving into an apartment.

"I'm a Texan, and we like elbow room," he said, noting that he has a live-in housekeeper who does the cooking, laundry and cleaning.

Despite the fact that he has 51 years of federal service behind him and is entitled to a handsome pension, Gunnels says he has no plan to retire.

"What would I do?" he asked. "I would go crazy."

Gunnels has not been called "Aubrey" for many years, not since a young woman friend back in 1938 insisted upon calling him "Tex." Today, he says, if a caller uses the name "Aubrey," he knows at once that it is a relative or a member of his Masonic lodge or a total stranger.

Prosecutor Paul Richwalsky holds a photograph of the church bus in which 27 people died as he delivers his opening statement to the jury in the murder trial of Larry Mahoney in Carrollton, Ky.

Defense blames safety defects in bus crash

CARROLLTON, Ky. (AP) — The driver of a truck blamed for the nation's deadliest alcohol-related accident is guilty of murdering 27 people who died aboard a church bus that exploded in flames, a prosecutor argued.

But lawyers for Larry Mahoney maintained in opening arguments Monday that he wasn't solely responsible for the deaths of the mostly youthful victims because unsafe design made the 1977 former school bus a death trap.

It was a "horrible tragedy, a senseless tragedy, one that didn't need to happen," said defense attorney Russell Baldani. "The truth will lead you to a very simple conclusion: Larry Mahoney is not a murderer."

Mahoney, 36, is charged with 82 crimes, including 27 counts of murder, in the crash that occurred the night of May 14, 1988.

His pickup truck was traveling the wrong way on Interstate 71 outside Carrollton when it slammed into the bus, which was taking 67 people home from an amusement park near Cincinnati. Most were members of a youth group at the First Assembly of God church in Radcliff, the post town for Fort Knox.

"Plain and simple, this is a murder case," Special Prosecutor Paul Richwalsky told the jury. "It's about who was involved and who was responsible. It's about the terrible cost of drunken driving."

The first prosecution witnesses in the Carroll Circuit Court trial testified that Mahoney was drinking the afternoon and evening of the crash — the nation's second-deadliest school bus crash and the worst involving alleged drunken driving.

Two bartenders, a liquor store clerk and two of Mahoney's friends testified that he drank at least five beers, but all of them said he didn't appear drunk. Prosecution testimony was to continue today in what is expected to be a two-week trial.

Jurors Monday were taken to the crash scene and to the warehouse where the wreckage of the bus and Mahoney's Toyota pickup truck are being held as evidence.

Town grieves children killed in tornado

NEWBURGH, N.Y. (AP) — So many funeral processions in one day. Five, and this stricken town's sorrow seemed even greater because the coffins were so small. One was covered with a teddy bear-shaped wreath of flowers.

A stuffed Garfield doll, a small dinosaur and baseball cards lay nearby.

It was apparent that the bells tolled for the children, not for the spirit of the town.

"It will take time, maybe a long time, but we will get through this," Bud Sharp was saying, standing on the lawn of the First Presbyterian Church where people gathered Monday for the last of the five funerals that gray and chilly afternoon.

"The tragedy was the worst we have ever had," Sharp said. "At least it shook us more than any I know of. But I believe it brought us closer together as a community, as neighbors, and I have a feeling that will last."

Sharp was in charge of the first unit of volunteer firefighters who responded Thursday to a call from the East Coldenham Elementary School. A tornado had smashed down a wall of brick and glass onto the children at lunch, killing seven youngsters and injuring 18 others.

The town's collective grief was manifest at the two funerals on Saturday and the five others Monday.

Three of the five families chose to keep the services private, to bear their sorrow alone. Others did not.

About 600 mourners crowded St. Francis of Assisi Church, a grand old brick edifice with twin bell towers and stained glass windows. Over the generations, it has been the site of hundreds of funerals but surely few as unsettling as the requiem for Adam Joseph Soltis, age 7.

"We remember today our little brother Adam and his schoolmates," said the pastor, the Rev. Howard Dalton.

The organ sounded joyful, and 600 voices found solace in ancient rites: "He will raise you up on eagles' wings, bear you on the breath of dawn, make you to shine like the sun, and hold you in the palm of his hand ... "

The music swelled within the church where 13 priests wore white and gold vestments. The priests surrounded the candles aglow with life, the white flowers, the little coffin draped in white, so tiny before the altar beneath the vault of the ceiling.

"We have our faith," said an elderly woman, turning, cheeks wet, to embrace the younger man next to her.

"And each other," he replied.

About 100 people went to a funeral home to mourn Charles "C.J." Scotto, 7, who lay in an eggshell-colored casket decorated with the teddy bear-shaped wreath of carnations and daisies. Nearby were his Garfield doll, a New York Jets pin and C.J.'s other treasures.

The service at First Presbyterian was for Maria Jean Stuhmer, 8. Also buried Monday were Joanna Teresa Lichtler, 7, and Amy Marie Innis, 8.

Peter Orsino and Larae Marie Litchhult, both 8, were buried Saturday.

Teri Potter, mother of four, is a nurse at one of the hospitals where injured children were taken.

She stood at the door of a room where Michael Holmes and George Marshall Jr., both age 7, lay in beds with their broken limbs encased in plaster suspended from traction slings. She watched the firefighters who rescued them drop by to touch them and bring them gifts.

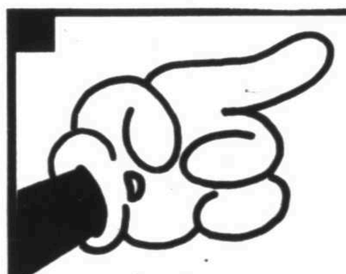

"They were stressed out," she said. "They wanted to come and see the children they saved rather than dwell on the children they could not. They certainly brought smiles to the faces of those two."

Mrs. Potter had another thought that seemed to reflect a feeling prevalent in this normally placid Hudson Valley town.

"The deaths, the injuries, made me step back and think of my own life and my values, think of the few things that I've been upset about recently.

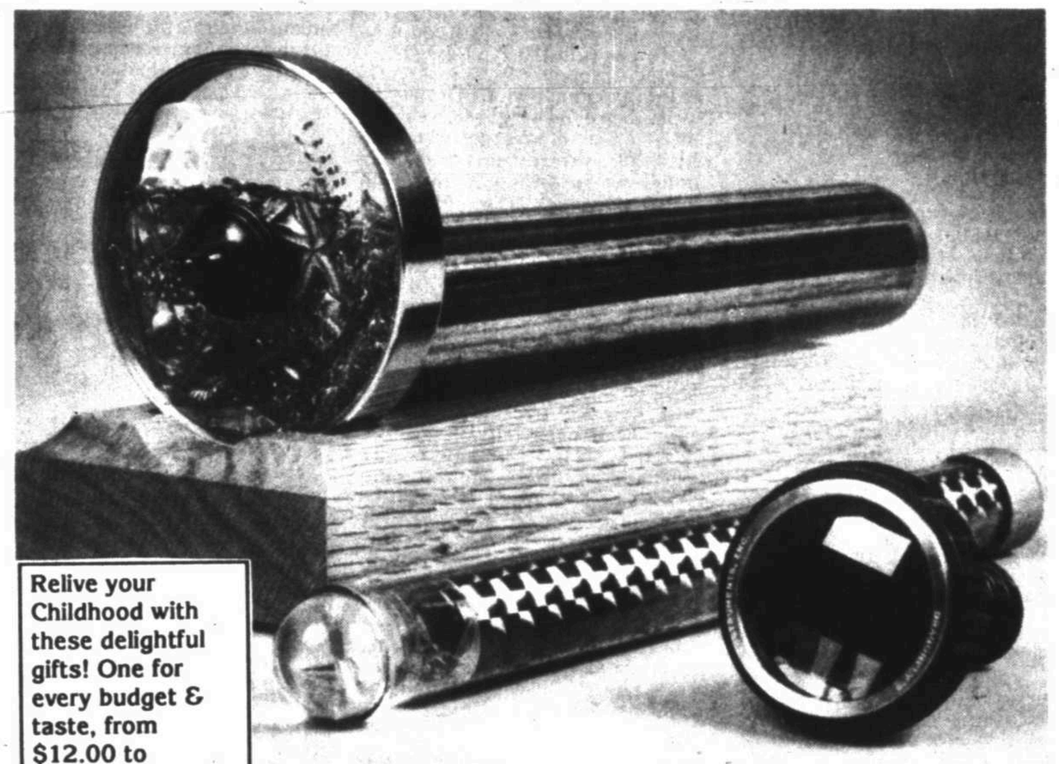

"All of them mean absolutely nothing in the perspective of one tragic afternoon."

NATION IN BRIEF

230 arrested in aid protests

Associated Press

Opponents of U.S. support of the government of El Salvador carried crosses and tied up traffic in Seattle, blocked the doors to San Francisco's Federal Building and heckled President Bush.

More than 2,000 people around the United States joined the demonstrations Monday and at least 230 were arrested.

The latest round of outrage focused on last week's slaying of six Jesuit priests, their housekeeper and her daughter in El Salvador.

The demonstrators blamed the killings on right-wing elements in the central American country's military. The slayings occurred amid heavy fighting as the government drove leftist rebels from the capital, San Salvador.

"It has become very clear over this decade that United States aid ... is that which is destroying the people of El Salvador," the Rev. William Wood, executive director of the California Catholic Conference, said during the San Francisco demonstration.

"There is no democracy in El Salvador as long as the army is in control. No one elects the army," Wood said.

Protests also were held in New York City, Spokane, Wash., and Newark and Camden, N.J.

The demonstrations came as the U.S. House of Representatives rejected, by 215-194, an attempt to restrict up to $85 million in military aid to the country.

The House approved, 409-3, a nonbinding resolution saying that bringing the priests' killers to justice would "be instrumental in determining continued U.S. support" for El Salvador.

Chrysler ranked at top

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five Asian carmakers rank at the bottom in providing and promoting air bags in their 1990 cars, a coalition of auto safety and consumer groups said today.

The groups ranked Chrysler Corp. at the top among 12 major manufacturers selling cars in the United States, followed by Mercedes Benz. Chrysler is putting air bags in the driver's side of 92 percent of its 1990 models.

Three million of the 10 million 1990 cars expected to be sold in the United States will have air bags under federal rules, according to a report compiled by Public Citizen, the Center for Auto Safety and Motor Voters.

But some drivers may not know what they've got, said Joan Claybrook, president of the Ralph Nader-founded Public Citizen and former head of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

"NHTSA's engine seems to be stuck in neutral on air bags," said Ms. Claybrook. She said the agency needs to promote air bags and closely monitor their use to perfect the various systems being installed in new cars.

The three safety groups were releasing data on air bag installation and promotion at a news conference today.

Hyundai and Subaru, which do not have air bags in any models, ranked at the bottom of the auto safety groups' "report card," followed by Honda.

Other low-ranking manufacturers included Mazda and Nissan, which placed 8th and 9th.

Volkswagen was 7th, preceded by Toyota in 6th place and General Motors in 5th. Ford and Volvo tied for 3rd place, behind Chrysler and Mercedes.

HUD indictment expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prosecutors expect a grand jury to indict a Maryland woman dubbed "Robin HUD" who admitted stealing $5.5 million from the Department of Housing and Urban Development, sources say.

Prosecutors had presented evidence to the panel in Baltimore allegedly showing Marilyn Harrell misused government funds on several occasions, sources at HUD and the Justice Department said on Monday.

Justice sources said they were confident the evidence was more than enough to secure an indictment, which they said prosecutors had asked for and which they expected to be returned.

Tuesday is the customary day for grand juries in the U.S. District Court in Baltimore to report to judges, and the sources said Monday they had been told the Harrell case was among those to be disposed of today.

All of the sources spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Harrell, a former private escrow agent hired by HUD, got her nickname following her testimony that she gave some of the $5.5 million to charity and the homeless.

U.S. Attorney Breckenridge Willcox, whose office scheduled the announcement and said HUD Secretary Jack Kemp and Attorney General Dick Thornburgh were scheduled to attend, declined to discuss the subject except to say it was a "major development" in a HUD case.

Approval expected for deficit-reduction deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional leaders hope their long-sought deal on a $14.8 billion budget-cutting package will spur a separate effort to eliminate some Medicare benefits and put an unusually early end to this year's session.

House and Senate leaders of both parties shook hands on their deficit-reduction plan for this year early today, and predicted quick approval by the full chambers and the signature of President Bush. The goal was to adjourn for 1989 by day's end.

"It will pass overwhelmingly, I think, in both bodies because it's a pretty good" savings measure, Rep. Bill Frenzel of Minnesota, ranking Republican on the House Budget Committee, told reporters.

"It is a very strong, effective deficit-reduction package," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, told his colleagues.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said White House Budget Director Richard Darman and Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady had told him that "the White House will support this package."

The agreement, forged after weeks of closed-door talks, puts to rest a budget year that has seen almost continual clashes between Bush and congressional Democrats. Despite a springtime budget agreement that both sides thought would smooth their work, ongoing battles — largely involving the president's unsuccessful quest to shrink capital gains tax rates — were the dominant theme.

Nonetheless, optimism reigned in the Capitol that this year's session would end today. By Monday evening, a telephone tape recording that normally provides scheduling information for Republicans was playing a song called "One More Day" from the musical "Les Miserables."

The budget-cutting compromise includes about $5.7 billion in new taxes, most of them on corporations. One levy likely to be felt by many people would expose deferred compensation — such as the earnings some employees place directly into 401k plans — to Social Security taxes. That item, agreed to toward the end of the bipartisan negotiations, would raise $400 million this year.

The bill also claims about $4.6 billion in savings by leaving the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law's cuts in most federal programs in effect through the first week in February. Those spending slashes took effect Oct. 1, when Bush and Congress failed to agree on reducing the federal shortfall, which congressional analysts project will surpass $140 billion this year.

The bill's across-the-board cuts would result in reductions of about 1.8 percent in domestic programs and 1.6 percent in defense spending, according to Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., ranking Republican on the Senate Budget Committee.

Other savings would come from other selected spending cutbacks and from a series of accounting shifts.

Negotiators agreed to add to the bill a provision dramatically revising the government's system of reimbursing doctors for services to Medicare patients.

Smith votes for abortion funding bill

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith surprised his Republican colleagues in the House last week, voting for a 1990 appropriations bill that allows the District of Columbia to use locally raised money to pay for abortions.

The bill, which passed the House by a vote of 229-191, bars the use of federal funds for abortion except to save the mother's life.

Smith, a San Antonio Republican who is Midland's representative in the House, supported the bill because it contained a significant amount of federal money for anti-drug programs, spokeswoman Sherri Burkholder said.

In addition, the congressman was assured that none of the federal money would go to perform abortions, she said.

President Bush vetoed an earlier spending bill because it would have allowed federal funding of abortions in cases of rape and incest and because of the lack of restrictions on local money.

Supporters argued that the abortion language was consistent with the recent Supreme Court decision giving states authority to write local regulations on abortion.

"The people who live in the District of Columbia deserve the same right as those who live in every other state," said Julian C. Dixon, D-Calif., in this week's edition of Congressional Quarterly.

Rep. Henry Gonzalez, a San Antonio Democrat, also voted for the measure.

Opponents like Rep. Robert Dornan, R-Calif., claimed the bill will permit subsidized abortion and risks a presidential veto. "This bill means abortion on demand for any reason," Dornan told Congressional Quarterly.

Rep. Larry Combest, a Lubbock Republican, also voted against the appropriations bill because the District "has all the money it can handle, despite what they say," spokesman Keith Williams said.

Williams said Combest was "surprised" by Smith's vote.

In another action, the House agreed 207-200 to accept a Senate amendment earmarking $15 million for a United Nations family planning program.

Smith and Combest, who voiced concerns that the money could support coerced abortions and sterilizations in the People's Republic of China, voted against the measure.

The vote was the House's second reversal in three days on the issue and came one day after the Senate refused to change its position on the foreign-aid appropriations amendment. The Senate amendment stipulates that none of the U.S. funds be used in China, but it is silent on the use of other U.N. family-planning funds.

The House originally agreed to the Senate amendment, and then voted to require the president to certify the U.N. program does not support the Chinese policies. The vote would have killed the funding because the president would not have made the certification.

Supporters insisted the money would not free other U.N. funds to support the Chinese policies. "The U.N. program does not fund abortions," Matthew F. McHugh, D-N.Y., told Congressional Quarterly.

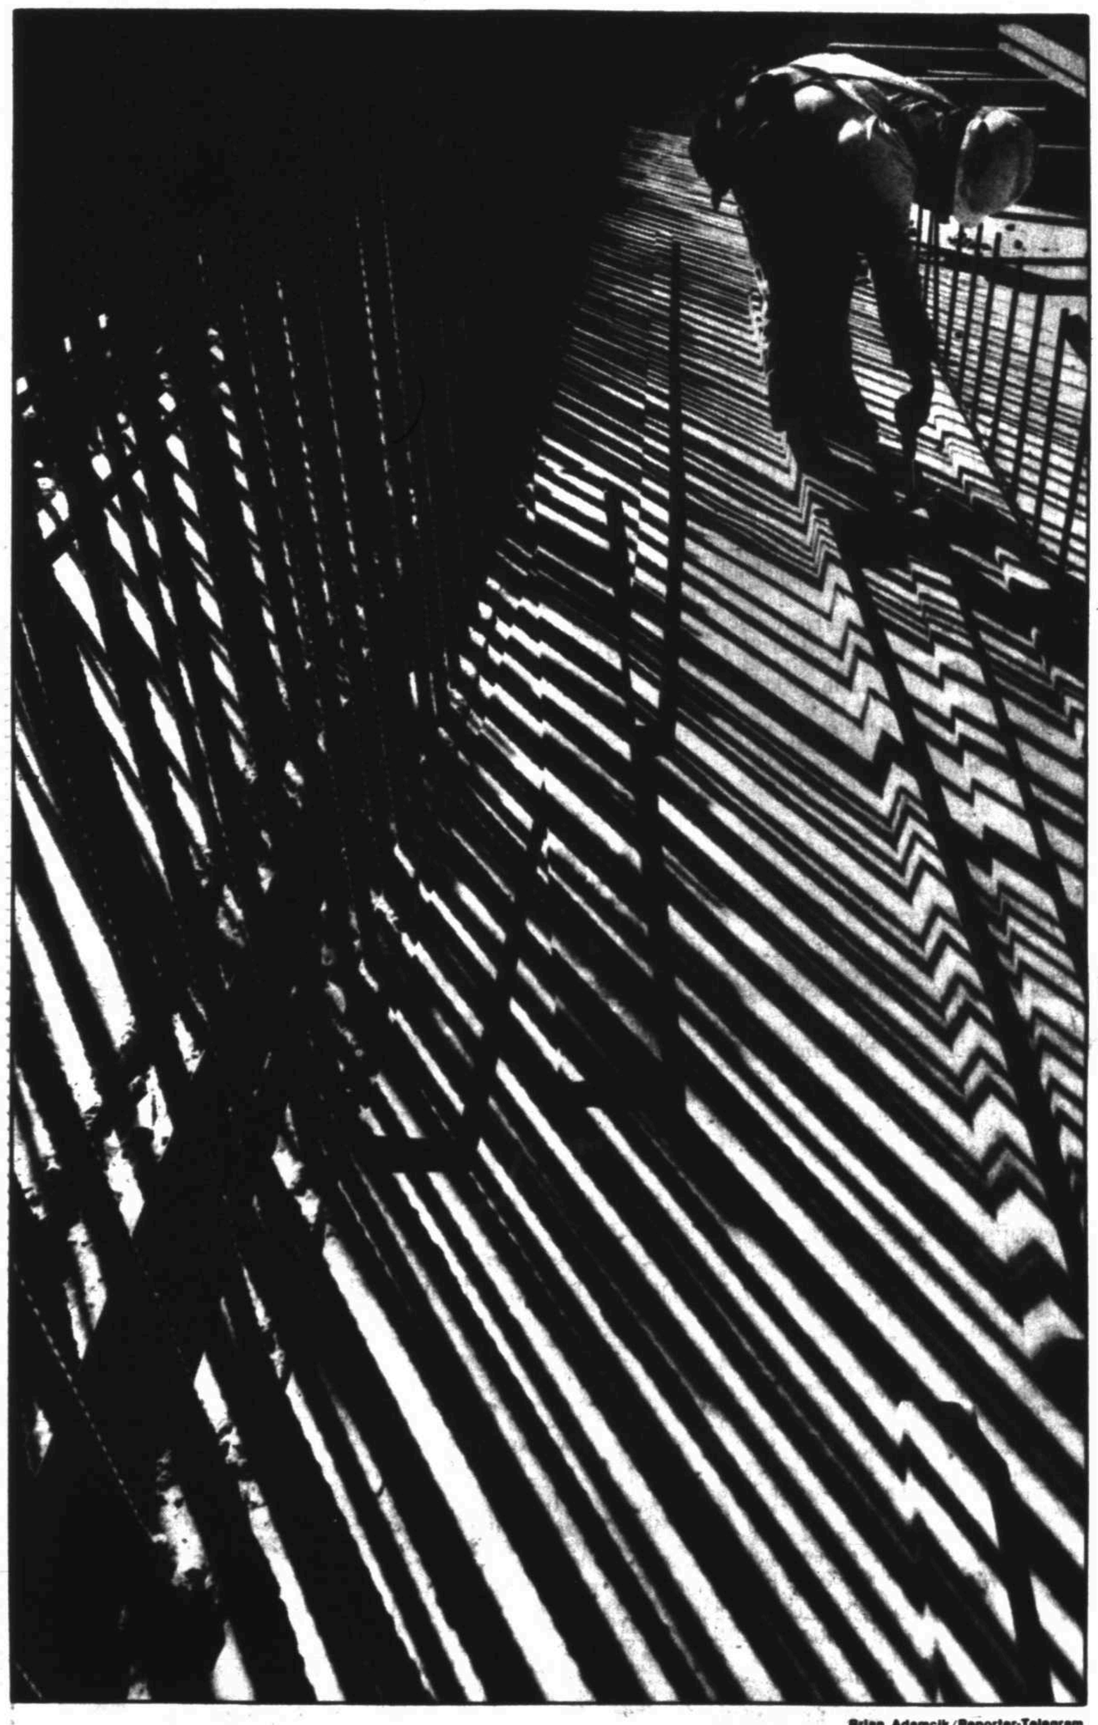

Combest disagreed and said the money would be better used by other family-planning organizations, according to Williams.

"He felt that agencies, such as Planned Parenthood, are better-equipped to handle reasonable population controls and to assist with counseling. Besides, the U.N. is not well-known for its ability to account for the money it spends," Williams said.

Burkholder said Smith had been assured that the funding would not go to support the Chinese policies, but could not support the legislation without presidential certification.

Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D-Texas, voted to provide the U.N. family-planning funding.

Others Texans voting against the measure were Reps. Charles Stenholm and Bill Sarpalius.

Club honors lawmen who rescued mother, children

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Seven Midland-area law enforcement officers were honored Monday at an appreciation dinner sponsored by 200 Club, a non-profit organization that supports police agencies and their officers.

Four Midland police officers were honored for rescuing a mother and her three children from the burning wreckage of two vehicles Oct. 28. Michele Demaray, 23, and her 6-year-old son Jeremy have been hospitalized at Midland Memorial since the accident. Two other children, Breann Demaray, 4, and 18-month-old Jesse Demaray were released from the hospital after treatment.

According to police, Ms. Demaray was traveling on Garfield Street when a pickup truck driven by Robert Steven Dudley of Midland slammed into her vehicle, rupturing a fuel tank and causing an explosion.

At the time, Dudley was driving the stolen truck the wrong way on Michigan Avenue and was attempting to outrun police, according to investigators. He remains in the Midland County Jail pending the results of a hearing.

Police Chief Richard Czech said he was pleased with the honors given Sgt. Terry Garner, 40, Officer Manuel Beltran, 29, Officer Jesse Robledo, 36, and Officer Franklin Rice, 33. All were on duty when the 2:45 a.m. accident occurred.

"I have written a commendation for each of them," Czech said. "And, we may try and get them nominated for some national honors as well."

All of the police officers work in the patrol division.

Two Midland County sheriff's investigators, Lt. Tim Rogers and Sgt. Jose Primera Jr. also were honored by the 200 Club, according to Sheriff Gary Painter.

"These two guys have done a tremendous amount of undercover work, and have coordinated investigations with other local, state, and federal authorities," said Painter, a 200 Club award recipient last year. "They have participated in investigations that have been able to seize $1.5 million cash, 50 defendants and numerous vehicles."

"I know from personal experience that a law officer's job does not end at shift change. The officers I know have dedicated their lives to their community and the people they serve. I want them to know that we recognize and appreciate their commitment."

— Clayton Williams

Rogers, 36, a former Midland police officer, oversees all investigations by the sheriff's office. The 29-year-old Primera primarily investigates narcotics cases.

Texas Ranger C.J. Havrda, 41, was also honored at the fete, which featured gubernatorial candidate and 200 Club founder Clayton Williams as speaker.

"C.J. was honored for his work in oil-related crimes, most recently the work he did on the string of ongoing engine thefts in the Permian Basin," said John Omohundro, 200 Club director.

Williams said he appreciated the work of Havrda and the other officers.

"I know from personal experience that a law officer's job does not end at shift change," Williams said. "The officers I know have dedicated their lives to their community and the people they serve. I want them to know that we recognize and appreciate their commitment."

In 1978, Williams organized the first law enforcement appreciation banquet, and in 1980 he chartered the 200 Club.

The organization provides funds to officers injured or disabled in the line of duty, provides equipment and traning to officers, and funds to educate children of officers killed or disabled in the line of duty.

The club also maintains a fund to donate up to $1,000 fo the family of any officer who loses his life.

Local unemployment figures improve over September rates

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

October unemployment figures for Midland and Odessa show some improvement over September, figures released today by the Texas Employment Commission show.

Midland's unemployment rate fell to 5.5 percent from 5.9 percent and was just above the 5.4 percent rate recorded in October 1988.

In Odessa, the rate fell to 7.1 percent in October, down from 7.8 percent in September, and from 7.4 percent in October 1988.

Even better news for the Tall City was a rise in the civilian labor force, which rose from 48,800 to 48,900 in October. The figure stood at 49,700 a year ago.

Odessa's labor force totaled 51,000 last month, down from 51,300 in September and from 52,900 in October a year ago.

Total employment rose to 46,200 from 45,900 but was under the year-ago figure of 47,000.

In Odessa, total employment rose to 47,400 from 47,300. Employment stood at 49,000 a year ago.

Total unemployment also showed improvement, falling to 2,700 from the September figure of 2,900. It was the same as October 1988.

Odessa's total unemployment dropped to 3,600 from 4,000 in September, and from 3,900 in October 1988.

"I think this shows the economy is leveling off and we're in for some better times," said Lorna Biar, labor market analyst in the TEC's Midland Regional office, pointing out that Midland's rate was about the same as May and as last year, while Odessa showed some improvement.

She added that she couldn't attribute the increase to seasonal Christmas hiring, saying that factor would probably show up in November employment figures.

The improvement in employment wasn't enough, however, to keep Midland from slipping in the state rankings. Midland ranked 13th in October; in September, it had tied for 11th with San Angelo and Victoria.

Odessa rose in the rankings, from 21st in September to 19th, along with Galveston and Texas City.

Bryan-College Station led the state in employment, posting a 3.9 percent rate, followed by Lubbock with 4.1 percent. Amarillo and Austin tied for third with 4.9 percent, followed by Dallas with 5 percent. McAllen-Edinburg-Mission had the highest rate in the state with 16.4 percent.

The state unemployment rate fell to 6 percent from 6.3 percent.

In surrounding counties, Andrews posted a 5.1 percent unemployment rate in October, while Glasscock County had a 1.4 percent rate and Martin County a 1.3 percent rate.

Almanac includes West Texas history

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Mary Crawford did not know much about West Texas before she started writing a history for the new edition of Texas Almanac.

"I knew a little bit about Stephens, Young, and Throckmorton counties during the Civil War," said Ms. Crawford, associate editor of the almanac and a trustee of the Historic Preservation League. "But I went into a study of West Texas like a new baby, with few pre-conceived notions. And I became absolutely fascinated."

The history, which Ms. Crawford wrote with the assistance of history professors throughout Texas, begins in prehistoric times and continues through settlements by the Indians and Spanish, the Civil War, cattle ranching, railroads, the discovery of oil, and a final chapter aptly titled "Boom and Bust."

While researching the history on trips to Abilene and Lubbock, the author gained an appreciation of the West Texas pioneer.

"The people who settled here must have been special people," she said.

Ms. Crawford visited Midland Monday as part of a statewide tour to promote the 608-page, 1990-91 edition of the almanac, which was published last month. The almanac, published every two years by the Dallas Morning News and distributed by Texas Monthly Press, has become a favorite source book for state agencies, schools, professionals, newspapers, and other Texans just curious about their state.

The almanac contains features not available anywhere else — including the complete text of the mammoth Texas Constitution, and all amendments to it. There is an entry titled "High School Football."

The almanac contains features not available anywhere else — including the complete text of the mammoth Texas Constitution, and all amendments to it. There is an entry titled "High School Football," which appears just before a new chapter titled "Culture" with photographs of authors Larry McMurtry and Katherine Anne Porter.

Readers can also find out what to do if they spot an unidentified flying object (UFO) in Texas (call the Mutual UFO Network, headquartered in Seguin); how many eclipses there will be in 1991 (answer: six); and what the "court backlog" is in Potter County (answer: 5,099 cases).

The almanac was first published in 1857 by the Galveston News, at the time the state's most sophisticated newspaper and forerunner of the Morning News. It was first published in Dallas in 1904, sometimes every year, sometimes every other year. It was not published during the first World War, according to Ms. Crawford.

In the 1950's, the Morning News began publishing it every two years, and it is produced by a staff of two, Ms. Crawford and her boss, almanac editor Mike Kingston.

At least 20,000 copies of the almanac are printed, and some editions sell 30,000 or more, Ms. Crawford said.

"Some years it makes money, some years it does not," she said. "It is a status item for the Dallas Morning News. It has a great tradition behind it."

Ms. Crawford was working as a free-lance writer in 1985 when she joined the staff as an editorial assistant. She was named associate editor in 1986.

Work has already begun on the next edition of the almanac, which will feature a history of central Texas and the latest amendments to the Texas Constitution. The tome will keep its smorgasbord of features, since editors are nervous about discontinuing anything.

"We never know what people are looking for in the almanac until we leave it out," she said.

Ms. Crawford also said her history of West Texas does not include any prediction on the future price of oil and gas. In the last paragraph of the "Boom and Bust" entry, she wrote: "As the petroleum industry suffered and loan payments could not be met, the lending institutions most heavily invested in oil and gas began closing their doors. The dominoes are still falling."

Said Ms. Crawford: "The Almanac does not predict. It just reports."

MISD students pass TEAMS test at higher rate than statewide

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

Midland students passed the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills graduation exam at a higher rate than the state average for the second year in a row, figures released this morning show.

Seventy-nine percent of Midland Independent School District juniors passed the October version of the exit-level TEAMS, compared with 77 percent statewide. Last year, 77 percent of MISD juniors passed, compared with 75 percent statewide.

"The school district is pleased that the high school juniors performed above the state average," MISD spokesman Ted Miller said. "We are hopeful that the class of 1991 will see 100 percent of its members eventually pass the test."

Students are allowed to take it until they pass. They must pass both the math and the English sections of the test to graduate.

Seniors who failed the test in October have one more chance to take it before commencement. The test will be given again in May.

Bobby Dunn, Lee High School senior principal, said 38 LHS seniors took the October test. Seventeen failed the math section and one failed the English section, for an overall 47.4 percent failure rate. Statewide, 41 percent of seniors failed at least one section of the test.

"We have remediation classes for all these kids who didn't pass in the particular subject area," Dunn said.

Midland poet wins MC contest

From Staff Reports

An image-filled poem about Baja California, "The Conquest," won the grand prize Monday for Joy G. Butts of Midland in the second annual Hilda Simmons Levitt Poetry Awards.

The award, made through Midland College, includes a plaque and $500 cash.

Priscilla Frake received second place plaque and $300 cash for her poem, "Autumnal Instincts." Third place, which earned a plaque and $100, was given to Patricia Peak for "Abandoned Barns Along the Interstates."

The awards were presented in a ceremony Monday. Stanley Levitt, who created the awards in memory of his late wife, made the presentations.

Judges for the contest, which drew 66 entries this year, were Dr. Troy Reeves and Dr. Terry Dalrymple, both faculty members at Angelo State University. The contest is open to present students at Midland College, along with those who had been students during the past two years.

Dr. Larry Griffin, instructor in English and poetry at Midland College, served as contest coordinator. He was assisted by Rebecca Watson, instructor in English and creative writing. Dr. Jack Schneider, chairman of the Communications Studies Division, and English instructor Billy Feeler served on the contest committee with Watson and Dr. Griffin.

The grand prize and second place poems will be published in The Tableau, Midland College's literary magazine.

Vehicle windows shot out

From Staff Reports

Midland police received at least 18 reports Monday of vehicle windows shot out by what appeared to be a BB gun, the first similar case since February when nearly 40 vehicles were damaged.

The new reports also are similar to a September 1988 incident, when more than 200 windows were shot out by BB rifles.

The latest incidents occurred Sunday night, according to police spokesman Cpl. Jim White.

"Most of them were reported Monday morning," White said. "They happeneed overnight Sunday. The windows were broken out probably by a BB gun. The damage range is between $200 and $500, from the reports we have received so far."

Most of the vehicles damaged were parked in the street near residences, and were in the west and northwest sections of Midland, according to reports.

At least two vehicles were reported damaged while parked on Boyd Avenue, reports said. One vehicle was damaged while parked on North Edwards Avenue in east Midland, White said.

"It just seems to be random damage," the spokesman said. "We have no suspects at this point."

Local man to aid Williams

From Staff Reports

Jim Lacy of Midland has been named Midland County coordinator of Clayton Williams' 1990 Republican gubernatorial campaign.

"In the four short months since we kicked off our campaign we have signed up supporters in all 254 Texas counties," said Williams in making the appointment.

"Jim joins other members of our statewide organization that are known for coming early and staying late," he said. "We've been called the working team and, thanks to the dedication of our county supporters, we're going to be the winning team.

Williams, who has recruited more than 18,000 campaign volunteers across Texas; has pledged to diversify the economy, improve education and win the war on drugs if elected governor.

The Midland oilman has started 26 companies in Texas and created 100,000 jobs in more than 50 Texas cities, according to his campaign material.

His chief rivals in the March primary are Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance, former Secretary of State Jack Rains and Dallas attorney Tom Luce.

Group plans service

From Staff Reports

Christian Scientists in Midland will host Thanksgiving services this Thursday.

Each year, the members of First Church of Christ, Scientists at 1001 W. Tennessee, offer a service of Thanksgiving to the community. The service will begin at 10:30 a.m.

Readings for this year's service will include several references to family life.

As an important part of the service, time will be given for spontaneous sharing from the congregation. These testimonies frequently include gratitude for spiritual healings that have occurred sometimes through four and five generations.

Local members of the Christian Science church invite the community to join them in giving thanks to God this Thursday. Care for children too young to attend the service will be available.

TEA says more students passing exit-level test

AUSTIN (AP) — More Texas high school students are passing the state's graduation exam, but the state's chief educator is concerned about those who failed.

Preliminary results of the latest state graduation exam showed that 77 percent of the 181,236 juniors who took the exit-level test in October passed all tests taken, up from 75 percent last year.

In addition, 59 percent of the 24,359 seniors who took it passed all tests, up from 55 percent in 1988, the Texas Education Agency reported Monday.

However, state Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby said he is concerned about the number of seniors who will have to take it again in May to get diplomas.

"Local school districts must ensure that these students get the remediation they need to enable them to master the minimum skill level," Kirby said.

"We must improve our instructional programs so that all students meet our current standards. In the future, our students will have to be better prepared and the emphasis will be on increasing these standards," he said.

Students who do not receive a high school diploma because they fail one or more sections of the TEAMS — Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills — test are eligible to retake that section each time the test is given.

Most seniors taking the exam were students who failed to pass one or both sections in two previous attempts last year. Sixty-two percent of these students passed the math section, up from 57 percent last year, while 68 percent passed English, the same as last year.

Among juniors, 80 percent passed the mathematics section of the test, up from 78 percent last year. Passing rates on the English language arts section remained at 90 percent, the same as 1988.

Kirby said he was pleased to see higher passing rates in math for juniors.

"Mastering mathematics skills is critical to the future success of our students," he said.

TEAMS

At Midland High School, 46 seniors took the exam and 23 failed at least one section, for a 50 percent failure rate.

A majority of seniors statewide who took the October exam failed at least one section in two attempts last year, Texas Education Agency reports show.

Statewide, 80 percent of juniors passed the math section, compared with 82 percent in Midland. On the English section, 90 percent passed statewide compared with 89 percent in Midland.

"I think overall the school results are pretty good," Dunn said. "If you're above the state average, you're in pretty good shape."

MISD computer services director Larry Lusby said there is room for improvement.

"I'm concerned still that we're below the state average in the language arts area," he said.

In Ector County Independent School District, 80 percent of 11th-graders and 57 percent of seniors passed both sections. Some 38 of 65 seniors who took the test must retake at least one section in May.

Some 84 percent of the 11th-graders passed the math, while 89 percent mastered the language arts. Seniors' math and language arts scores were unavailable.

Last year, 78.3 percent of those in ECISD who took the October 1988 exit-level TEAMS passed. This year showed a slight improvement, with 79.1 percent passing overall.

"We're always happy to see things improve," said Elayne Hunt, ECISD associate director for guidance and counseling. "It's continued hard work among the students, teacher and other staff.

"Everyone involved has worked very, very hard."

Staff writer Brian Pearson also contributed to this report.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

The holidays are right around the corner. Remember — the best present you can give is your assistance. Here are a few of the current opportunities available through the Volunteer Center:

■ Celebrate the arts with school children. If you are in an art club team up with a buddy and share your artistic abilities with youth in an agency's after-school program weekdays or Saturdays. A volunteer arts teacher is eager to expand the class. Days are flexible.

■ Get in the holiday spirit by helping senior citizens make Christmas crafts. Volunteers are needed on Wednesdays from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m. for three weeks.

■ Help drive down the toll taken by drunken drivers. An agency campaigning against drinking while driving needs your help in delivering red ribbons throughout the city.

■ Like to shop? Here's a perfect opportunity. Lend a hand by assisting mentally disabled citizens with their Christmas shopping. Special transportation will be provided if necessary and a staff person will accompany you.

■ Calling all youth! Be an elf at Santa's house. Costumes will be provided. Four elves for two hour shifts at the mall are needed now through December 16. This is a wonderful opportunity for junior and senior high school students looking to put a smile on a child's face.

For more information on how you can volunteer, please call the Volunteer Center of Midland at 697-8781.

Postmaster takes oath

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — After nine months of waiting, Odessa officially had its new postmaster today.

James E. Spence, former manager of an El Paso postal station, was sworn in during morning ceremonies. Spence, 57, has been overseeing Odessa's post offices since Nov. 4.

"I look forward to serving Odessa," Spence said. "The people here are used to good service.

"I'd like to see Odessa turn back around and grow. I'd like to grow with it."

Spence replaces Ron Pradon, who retired in January. The spot has been vacant since then.

Melvin Robison, superintendent of Odessa postal operations, said it hasn't been easy operating without a postmaster.

"We've had some problems, but it hasn't been too difficult," Robison said.

Robison said he looks forward to working with Spence.

"He brings a lot of experience to us," he said. "He ought to be able to help us accomplish goals."

State legislators say Brandley deserves appeals court ruling

AUSTIN (AP) — Death Row inmate Clarence Brandley, who remains in prison more than two years after a judge recommended a new trial for him, deserves a decision from the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, state lawmakers say.

A group of legislators on Monday asked the court to hand down a ruling quickly.

"Today we're going to ask them to forget their lunch hours, get to work on time, work beyond 5 o'clock, because we believe they can resolve this issue," said Rep. Harold Dutton, D-Houston.

"We're asking them to get off their rear ends and move and act and do their jobs," added Rep. Lloyd Criss, D-LaMarque.

Brandley, a black janitor at Conroe High School, was convicted in the 1980 rape-slaying of Cheryl Fergeson, a 16-year-old white girl, at the school. His first trial ended with a hung jury. An all-white jury found him guilty in a second trial.

On Oct. 9, 1987, after a 10-day evidentiary hearing moved from Conroe to Galveston, retired State District Judge Perry Pickett recommended that Brandley get a new trial because the previous two had been tainted with racism.

Brandley has said he believes that a third trial would clear him.

Defense attorney Paul Nugent of Houston argued before the Court of Criminal Appeals last January that the investigations and judicial proceedings leading to Brandley's capital murder conviction were tainted by racial discrimination.

Criss said he and other lawmakers are introducing a resolution in the Texas House this week calling on the Court of Criminal Appeals, the state's highest criminal court, to take prompt action.

"Clarence Lee Brandley, incarcerated in 1980, still languishes in prison, with his life in anguishing peril and his liberty denied," the resolution says.

The resolution also calls on the appeals court judges "to end their unconscionable delays and, instead, restore public confidence in the Texas judicial system ... "

Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, noted that several Texas cases in which someone was wrongly imprisoned have been featured in episodes of the CBS television program "60 Minutes."

"It seems to me a tragedy that the only time Texas gets to be on '60 Minutes' is over criminal justice," Ms. Delco said.

"I hate to abdicate our responsibility in our judicial branch of government to '60 Minutes,' as much as I enjoy watching it. So I'd like to ask these judges to consider this as quickly as possible if, for no other reason, to keep Texas off of '60 Minutes.' "

Rep. Dan Morales, chairman of the House Committee on Criminal Jurisprudence, said he would decide within a week whether to set a committee hearing on Brandley. "I can see no reason for the two-year delay," he said.

Lawmen break fake ID ring at Tech

Investigation expanded to SWTSU, A&M

LUBBOCK (AP) — Federal and state authorities say they are expanding an investigation to Southwest Texas State and Texas A&M universities after breaking a ring of Texas Tech freshmen who made dozens of counterfeit driver's licenses.

At least 48 underage students, mostly freshmen, agreed to pay $50 to $60 each for the fake IDs so they could enter nightclubs and buy alcohol at bars and package stores, officials said Monday. Police impounded about half the licenses before they were distributed.

Four male Tech freshmen, all from the same unidentified Dallas-area high school, made the high-quality fake licenses in their dormitory rooms, Secret Service resident agent David Freriks said.

The four are expected to be indicted on federal counterfeiting charges next month, Freriks said. He declined to identify the suspects pending the filing of formal charges.

"They were all in high school together, where they perfected their technique, and then they spread out across the land," Freriks said, naming Southwest Texas State and Texas A&M as schools where related rings are suspected of flourishing.

The makers face federal counterfeiting charges that carry a maximum penalty of 15 years imprisonment and a $250,000 fine. Possessors or users of fake licenses face state charges that carry a 2- to 5-year prison term and loss of their licenses from 90 days to a year.

The counterfeiters advertised by word of mouth, mostly in unidentified dormitories, Freriks said.

Through confiscated photographs and interviews with suspects and witnesses during a monthlong investigation, police identified 46 students who agreed to buy the licenses, Freriks said. Two other students have yet to be identified, he said.

Six students were arrested at nightclubs over the past couple of weekends as they tried to present fake licenses made by the ring, Department of Public Safety Sgt. Larry Hinojosa said.

After publicity surrounding the investigation, "We expect the trash cans to be full" of discarded, fake licenses, Freriks said.

The investigation began last month when an employee at an unidentified photo processing store in Lubbock called police after she saw a roll of film containing 22 photos of young people on prints containing license information, Freriks said.

Hinojosa said the fake licenses were well-made, and that the telltale signs were that the blue background in the students' snapshots was too dark, and the picture appeared too large on the bogus licenses.

Most of the students who ordered the fake IDs were freshman, Freriks said. Most did not receive their licenses and will not be prosecuted, Hinojosa said. Neither would speculate about how many licenses were sold or how much money the counterfeiters made.

The university will discipline the counterfeiters and their customers case by case, Tech spokeswoman Margaret Simon said. Punishments could vary from reprimands to expulsion, she said, adding: "Of course, if they're sent to prison, it's a moot point."

Authorities were vague on details, refusing to give names of suspects, their hometowns, the high school they went to, the two dormitories where they lived, or the photo processing lab where the pictures were developed. They said only that the fakes were made "through a photographic process."

"In spite of warnings, some of them (students using fake IDs) still don't think this is a serious offense," Freriks said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Texas selected for tourism program

AUSTIN (AP) — The National Trust for Historic Preservation has selected Texas as one of four states to participate in a three-year pilot program to help local communities develop their historic and cultural resources as tourism attractions.

Heritage Tourism is part of a $2.4 million national program to enhance awareness of the importance of history to tourism and to facilitate new visitor attractions that showcase historic and cultural traditions.

"Texas' rich historical heritage is one of our state's most valuable natural resources," said Texas first lady Rita Clements. "I am delighted to welcome this innovative program, which will assist Texas in sharing with the rest of the world our treasured historic legacy."

Up to four Texas communities and local areas will be chosen to participate in Heritage Tourism according to the governor's office.

Judge's retrial postponed

AUSTIN (AP) — The second trial for a Dallas County judge accused of assaulting a police officer has been postponed until December.

The first trial for Dallas Criminal Court Judge George Shepherd Jr. ended Nov. 10 with a hung jury. A second trial had been scheduled to begin Monday but was continued until Dec. 11, said County Court-at-Law Judge Wilfred Flowers, who is presiding in the case.

Shepherd is accused of assaulting an Austin policeman, Bill Thompson, who responded to calls of a dispute at an appliance store last March. The charge, a Class A misdemeanor, carries a maximum sentence of one year in prison and a $2,000 fine.

Shepherd has said he didn't intend to hit the police officer. He said he was only seeking to recover a badge the officer had taken from him.

Insurance to be reduced

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Insurance has approved a 20 percent statewide average reduction in commercial automobile insurance rates, effective Feb. 15.

The decision will reduce overall premiums by approximately $108 million, the board said, and will be the first change in commercial automobile insurance rates since May 1, 1988.

Commercial auto liability insurance rates will be reduced by 23.6 percent and physical damage coverages by 2.3 percent, the board said Monday.

Men spice up robbery of convenience store

DALLAS (AP) — Many convenience store clerks have received a taste of crime, but the one that Esayas Asfah got was a bit hot.

About 15 masked men came into his store over the weekend and one of them tried to disable him by dousing him with picante sauce.

But the extremely hot-tasting sauce, spiced with jalapeno peppers, hit him on the back of his head and shoulders.

"I'm OK," Asfah said. "But it got all over my clothes."

Dallas police say the large group of robbers brazenly walked into Asfah's North Dallas convenience store about 2 a.m. Saturday, then proceeded to run off with merchandise and the store's cash register after the clerk was assaulted.

"I don't know if it's a record for most robbers, but it is unusual," said Dallas police robbery Sgt. D. Courte.

"We have a lot of deals where six kids run in, all pick up Twinkies, then leave," he continued. "But this is highly unusual, especially because they took the cash register."

The broken register was recovered about a block away, police said. About $30 was taken as well as an undetermined amount of merchandise, including soft drinks.

Asfah said the store has been hit several times by the group, only this was the first time a clerk was attacked and the register taken.

"The last time before, there were about 20 of them," he said. "They wear stocking caps so you can't tell who they are."

Courte said Dallas robbery detectives are investigating the condiment crime.

And thinking about it
Just makes me feel queasy!

As I arrived and walked through the store
There were savings and bargains
Like never before.

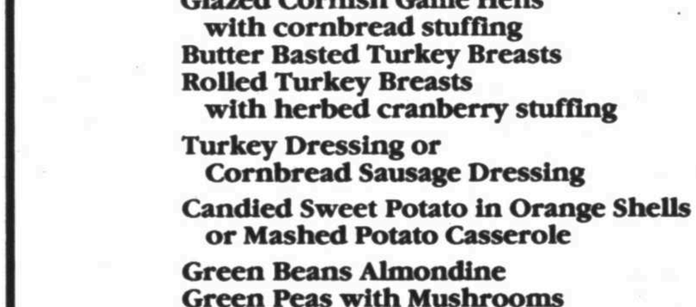

The Lights, the trees, the wreaths
Oh, what a selection!
The ribbon, the ornaments, the garland!
Never before had I seen such a collection!

So I spoke to the salesgirl
She said "your order is tall"
But don't fret and don't worry-
We've got something for all.

Baryshnikov's shape-hugging dancewear designed for comfort

By GLENDA WINDERS
Copley News Service

Mikhail Baryshnikov's life story sounds more like a fairy tale than reality, and the fact is the 41-year-old dancing star has just about done it all. He is a ballet dancer nonpareil, a courageous defector from the Soviet Union, a movie star with such credits as "The Turning Point" and "White Nights" and a Broadway star in Franz Kafka's "Metamorphosis."

That's not all. In the past few years he has brought out his own "Misha" cologne and teamed up with the Weekend Exercise Co. to manufacture dancewear that has his own special touch.

"Dancers create their own fantasies about how a leotard should look and fit the body," he said in a recent interview. "Should it be cut lower in back? Have thinner shoulders? Everybody is an individual, everyone has his own ideas. Instead of buying leotards, it should be developed that way, fabricated that way."

He should know since he works out seven to eight hours per day.

"I spend all my life in tights and leotards and leg warmers," he said. "For two hours of warm-up, I wear lots of clothes for perspiration. Then I put the wet clothes away and put on cotton and light wool to keep the same body temperature for two, three or four hours. The clothes are like a thermometer; they don't allow me to cool down or overheat. It also depends on the room temperature and the available oxygen. I prefer natural fabrics."

He said his travels around the world have allowed him to seek out the best fabrics.

"We found a terrific French cotton," he said. And this cotton/poly-/spandex blend is the basis for most of the Baryshnikov collection, which includes leotards, unitards, trunks, tank tops, thongs, biking shorts — comfortable clothes for every physical activity.

BARYSHNIKOV WORKS closely with the people who turn out the creations that bear his name.

"I'm not a designer myself," he said, "but the designers come to me with sketches. I work with them to tell my point of view. It's a collaboration."

Together they put out four to five collections per year, usually two in the fall and one each in winter, spring and summer.

Designs for this season include:

Golden Fusion, black and turquoise color blocks with gold foil graphics.

Ultra Moderne, gloss-tech nylon/spandex in futuristic stripes.

Matisse's Palette, multicolored prints with gold foil accents.

Primitif, black yarn-dyed stripes on rose with white geometrics.

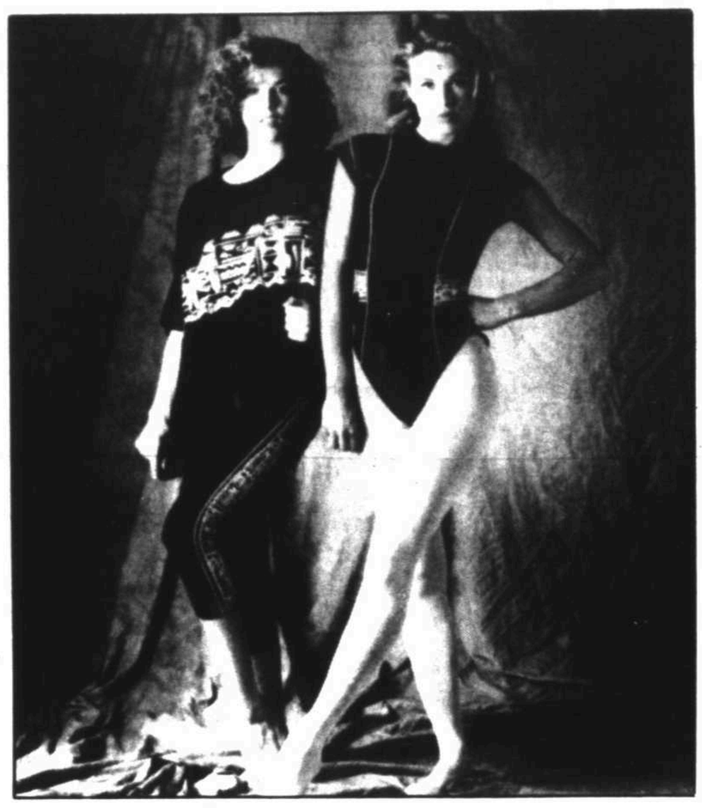

Sport Active, black and bright red with white piping.

Eurotech, black with white puff inserts and white stitching.

The Crescendo group features sculpted trunks and boatneck tops in gray, red and teal embroidered with a "B" crest.

Geometric Intrigue pairs bright geometric printed leotards and shirts with black-and-white textured tights.

Chameleon is a reptilelike print on a pewter background with gold foil accents.

Details make the difference in Baryshnikov Bodywear's black-and-white Eurotech design.

Crystal Gold spangles black French cotton with gold foil stars.

Brocade provides a two-dimensional lace texture look in pants and jackets as well as dancewear.

PUCKER PLISSE is a seersucker look in red, black and royal blue.

For dancers who prefer more classic attire, the Baryshnikov French Cotton line offers long- and raglan-sleeve leotards with scoop necks, footless unitards, bra tops, camisole leotards and drawstring dance pants. Cool cotton tights are available in colors to match and complement the dancewear, both footless and with full foot.

"We're trying to reach a wide audience with wide horizons," Baryshnikov said, "every person who is doing activities such as biking, jazz and ballet classes."

Collections also include T-shirts and sweatshirts in cotton jersey and cotton/poly fleece. The Premiere Nouvelle group includes long- and short-sleeve shimmels, oversize T-shirts and mock turtleneck fleece sweatshirts imprinted with psychedelic graphics. The Signature Series features just that — Baryshnikov's signature and logo on loose-fitting shirts to wear over workout clothes.

"Whether a person is a dancer or is exercising in a gym or doing aerobics or a jazz class, it will probably last for one and a half to two hours," he said. "The material should absorb perspiration and dry the body, not sit like a wet lump. It should support the body well and also give you necessary heat."

He added that all clothes should be designed for comfort.

"For Christmas we're bringing out a beautiful collection of black-and-white French cotton in elegant designs," he said. "The spring B Sport collection will be pants and tops, simple but elegant and comfortable." Included in the B Sport line are a cocoon jacket, crop jacket and three-quarter sleeve crew-neck tunic.

ALSO JUST OUT for the holidays is the Baryshnikov for Kids collection. These pieces duplicate their grown-up counterparts with pastel Ballerina Basics, bold graphics in Nutcracker, subtle prints in Waltz of the Flowers and pastel graphics over black-and-white strips in Jardin de Paris.

Baryshnikov says none of the collections was particularly inspired by parts he has danced.

"Patterns and colors may have been suggested by costumes I wore," he said, "but costumes are created for effect, not comfort. The dancer doesn't have the luxury of comfort onstage."

Baryshnikov recently stepped down from his position as artistic director for the American Ballet Theater, but he still has plenty of plans for the future that include more dance, films and theater.

"The stage is not less satisfying (than ballet)," he said. "The Broadway stage is a more challenging, mysterious, frightening experience. I love the theater, every aspect."

Will he follow his "Misha" cologne with one for men?

"You never know," he laughed. "The cologne is doing well, and we are pleased. It's a beautiful fragrance. It could stand alone and be just as popular if it had another name."

He said writing a book is not part of his future plans.

"There have been so many bad books written about the ballet and about me," he said. "It is an embarrassment. We don't need any more."

Perhaps his greatest hope for the future is to get some control over the demands made on his time.

"I want time off for living a life," he said.

Bare-breasted runway models offensive

By PATI LOWELL
Associated Press

PARIS — First of all, I am not a prude. No one who works in a sex-driven business like the fashion industry could be.

But there is a limit to just how much voyeurism a woman can take without climbing on her soapbox and screaming "exploitation."

It all started at the Armani spring debut in Milan. After reams of baggy linen, respectable skirt lengths and lots of opaque layering, Giorgio Armani introduced his jeans collection for men by sending a parade of shirtless models down the runway.

No problem.

Except that one of the models, sporting a new short haircut and a pair of breasts obviously untouched by a surgeon's knife, happened to be a woman.

After years of watching this sort of attention-grabbing "statement" walk down the runway, nary a gasp or embarrassed chuckle was heard from the audience. We all sat there staring at hemlines and silhouettes, happily taking notes as if we see women dressed on the streets like this every day.

The only people who looked a bit ruffled were the male models who escorted her down the runway.

If this had been an isolated incident, or a trick to grab the attention of jet-lagged fashion editors, there would be no cause for concern. But the appearance (and abundance) of naked or thinly veiled breasts at almost every major fashion show in Paris has managed to work this not-so-modest-dresser into a fury.

Even Yves Saint Laurent, the designer that everyone turns to for a little sanity, made his nipple statement with one-shoulder toga dresses that fully exposed one breast, mini bolero jackets worn sans shirt and deep, U-neck cocktail suits that act almost as underwires.

I know, I know. Women in the States will put blouses with the suits and camisoles under the chiffon tops, and that nifty little toga number will either sport an $800 bandeau top underneath or be recut with a higher drape.

So what's the point of this "statement of femininity" if it's adjusted, covered or re-created the morning after the show? Fashion is confusing enough without the erotic theatrics to cloud the message.

Right now women need clothes that have style, make sense, provide us with a number of options, express our individuality and personal flair and above all work for us, not against us. We don't need clothes that will get us arrested.

Even though the presentation of these garments may be light years away from the much more conservative form they take in "real life," the idea of designers putting a naked woman on the runway as a "fantasy," thrills me about as much as the idea of men strolling down the sidewalk with their backsides hanging out of their pants.

Obviously these designers never had to suffer the humiliation of weaving through a sea of catcalls and wolf-whistles just to get to your car and drive home at the end of the day. Sure, it's nice when people think you look attractive, but not if attractiveness is solely based on sexuality.

Come on boys (and girls). I was hoping we had evolved beyond that.

Revealing clothes fashioned for young party set

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Big-name designers may set the broad fashion trends that the majority of fashionable women follow, but some up-and-coming designers have equally valid points of view for women who want to look different.

Last Friday afternoon, after the big collections were over, four of these young designers showed winning collections.

Laura Marolakos paraded evening clothes that were ladylike and sexy at the same time. Keni Valenti concentrated on stretch materials that revealed every curve of the body, and Isabel Toledo continued her experimentation with unusual cuts.

The Angel Estrada collection, completed by the designer's sister Virginia after his death this summer, continued his tradition of tight-fitting, low-cut clothes for the young partying set.

The Marolakos repertory includes slip dresses.

One of her more daring styles had a trompe l'oeil bra over dotted lace, and several long dresses had chiffon skirts over short slips so the legs showed through.

The Estrada clothes are still geared to young women who want to show off their curves in frankly sexy suits and dresses that leave little to the imagination.

Ultrasuede suits with draped collars that bare most of the bosom will never see the inside of an office.

DEAR ABBY

Man registers complaint against alleged nurses

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column, a woman wrote to say that she objected to being examined by a doctor without a nurse present. I have no objection to that. What I do object to is calling someone a nurse when she is not really a nurse.

I venture to say that 75 percent of the "nurses" in doctors' offices have no more than a high school diploma and are not registered nurses. Some of the procedures these so-called nurses are called upon to perform are extremely critical and should be performed only by someone who is properly trained. It is illegal to practice medicine without a license, yet these same doctors see nothing wrong with hiring women off the street, giving them minimal training and turning them loose on unsuspecting patients. Just because a woman puts on a white uniform and nurse's cap does not make her a nurse. (Those items can be bought in a uniform shop.)

Please don't use my name or city, as my wife is a registered nurse working in the office of a doctor who uses "nurses" who aren't really nurses. — REQUESTING ANONYMITY

DEAR REQUESTING: Thanks for an interesting letter. To stick all physicians with the same needle would be unfair, but I'm sure there are some so-called "nurses" with minimal training who are passing for registered nurses.

Physicians proudly frame and hang their diplomas on their office walls. I think all registered nurses who work in doctors' offices should frame and hang their diplomas alongside the doctor's.

DEAR ABBY: I just had to write when I read the letter from the woman whose doctor noticed a scar on her wrist and asked her if she had tried to commit suicide, which made her angry! Instead of getting angry, she should have been grateful for the doctor's concern. I wish I had a doctor like that.

Not long ago, I went to a health clinic because I was very depressed and had a sore throat. When the doctor came in to examine me, I was crying. He just looked in my throat and my ears and never asked me why I was crying. He just said, "Drink lots of liquids and get some rest — you look very tired." With that, he hurried out of the examining room. Please comment. — LET DOWN

DEAR LET DOWN: I suggest that you go back to that clinic and tell them that you are depressed and need to see someone who specializes in emotional problems. You desperately need someone to talk to — preferably someone who not only listens but "hears" what you are saying.

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the letter you printed from the reader who objected to receiving heavily perfumed bills from department stores, here's how my wife and I handled that situation:

We cut up that store's credit card in several pieces and mailed it back with a note stating we objected to the store stinking up our mailbox to advertise a perfume that it was promoting. It worked like a charm!

Within days, we received a telephone call from the store's credit manager wanting to restore our credit card and assuring us that it would be no problem to flag our account and send us regular bills that wouldn't stink up our mailbox. — SENSITIVE NOSES IN ATLANTA

DEAR SENSITIVE: Smart move on your part, and theirs — a matter of eliminating scents for dollars

DEAR ABBY: If you have a cross with a figure of Christ on it and it breaks, what are you supposed to do with it? The arm on mine broke off, and I hate to throw it in the trash because I think that would be disrespectful. Should I bury it? — ONLY 14 AND ALREADY A FAN IN WAUKEGAN

DEAR ONLY 14: Yes, bury it. And bless you for asking.

The facts about drugs, AIDS, and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Shoulder pads are the bane of wide-shouldered women

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

When will the shoulder-pad madness stop? I have ripped enough of them out of garments to pad my own cell. Mounds of them spill from my drawers and sewing basket. They line my shelves and pop up in unlikely places, by the kitchen phone and in the glove compartment of my car.

I know what designers were trying to do. They were attempting to create an optical illusion. If they gave women shoulders like running backs, their waists would look smaller. It's a play on the old bridesmaid theory: Get ugly ones and the bride will look good.

I tried wearing shoulder pads. I really did. When every garment came out with them a few seasons ago, I stood in front of the mirror and thought, "If God had given me shoulders like this, I would scrub floors at night to get them surgically corrected." Not only did these lumps give my movements a Frankenstein quality, they traveled. I never got over the shock of seeing four mounds dotting my chest (two moving). In fact, I developed a tic just juggling the pads into position.

It became really ludicrous one day when I pulled on a coat with shoulder pads over a jacket with shoulder pads that covered a blouse with another set of shoulder pads. The pads shifted and slipped down my back, causing my friend to observe, "Quasimodo lives!"

I don't wear shoulder pads anymore. That's quite obvious. Sleeves swirl around my fingernails and my chest looks like it hasn't eaten in two years. That's not the problem. The problem is that I can't seem to be able to throw a pair of shoulder pads away. Don't ask me what I'm saving them for. I just know the minute I toss them out, someone will come up with a use for them and I will have gotten rid of a gold mine. I have lived too long around women who make planters out of bleach bottles and Christmas ornaments out of dryer lint.

Until then, what do you think? Too big for earrings? Too small for a bleacher pillow? Too light for badminton? Eye shades when you want to sleep late? Knee pads for scrubbing the bathroom? Earmuffs? Mitts to polish the car? Pot holders?

I wonder what the NFL does with its old ones.

Erma Bombeck is columnist for Universal Press Syndicate.

Hair Fitness offers complete hair care

Customer-oriented service is the backbone of Hair Fitness, a professional full-service hair salon located at The Midlander, 225 Corporate Drive.

C.J. Meeks, hairstylist, was recently promoted to salon manager, and it is her goal to make Hair Fitness a home-like place where clients feel comfortable walking in with or without an appointment. Complimentary soft drinks, coffee, hot tea and cookies are a Hair Fitness plus, and are served to create a pleasant atmosphere.

After all, Hair Fitness customers are friends, and C.J., Scarlette Butler and Nancy Holmes suggest you drop in any time for a service or to look through hair styling books.

At Hair Fitness, in addition to professional hair care, Boyd's of Madison Avenue makeup products are available.

The knowledgeable stylists offer a variety of services, including perms, cuts, coloring, facials and makeup applications.

Owners/hair stylists Nancy and Scarlette and manager/stylist C.J. have a total of 58 years of experience in their profession. "We have spent these years keeping up with the latest styles and building on that knowledge," said Scarlette. "Our styles aren't taken from 20 years ago. We've been doing hair a long time with a young attitude."

Stylist Nancy Holmes is very good at client communication. She takes a lot of time discussing what her clients want and need.

With 23 years of experience, Nancy offers full service hair care for men and women, including perms, cuts and colors.

C.J. has 18 years of experience, and in addition to offering cuts, coloring and perms, she is a specialist at skin care and makeup application. She has attended Boyd's of Madison Avenue training schools.

She specializes in facials, which are supplemented with professional steaming and deep cleansing equipment. A one hour facial, which costs $30, includes cleansing, deep cleansing, pore vacuuming and conditioning.

C.J.'s mini-facial includes a cleansing and conditioning treatment. It takes just three to four minutes and the procedure can be repeated on a regular basis exactly at home.

The makeup application, with Boyd's of Madison Avenue products, is a full face daytime look, and costs $15.

Scarlette Butler, with 17 years of experience, specializes in hair coloring, in addition to styling and perming. She has had extensive training from European and New York experts, and she studied under the late Paul Mitchell.

Scarlette is well known for her expert sparkling technique of hair coloring. She also does something many places do not offer — brow and lash dyeing.

You can count on the three stylists at Hair Fitness for variety in perms and hair styling. A new perm available is the Sine-Wave by Joico, designed for smoother looks. The newer styles require body waves, not tight curls. Curls with the Sine-Wave can be smoothed out with a brush and a blowdryer for a very soft, updated look.

Hair Fitness also offers sunglitzing — a highlighting procedure gaining popularity in Midland. The average processing time is from six to ten minutes with no hair damage as with conventional bleaching. Choose from minimal to heavy color lift. You can get your hair done on your lunch hour! Sunglitzing is easier on hair than conventional bleaching and you can perm over it.

Prices for various Hair Fitness services include women's hair cut only, $20; women's hair cut and style, $30; men's cut, $20; sunglitzing, $40; lash and brow dye, $12; spiral perm, starting at $55, average hair cut, style and perm, $70.

Also, another Hair Fitness plus is its speakers program. For no charge, Scarlette, Nancy and C.J. offer programs for clubs and organizations. They will select two people out of the audience for a hair and makeup makeover and they will make individual suggestions to the rest of the group.

Hair Fitness hours are 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays, with late appointments by Scarlette on Tuesdays and Thursdays available. Call 687-1916 for more information or to schedule an appointment. Walk-ins are accepted.

Prepare for holiday driving at Chaparral Wash & Lube

Now is a good time to come in before the holidays and get a professional oil change for your vehicle from the friendly staff of Chaparral Wash and Lube Center. From left are Chaparral lube center technician C.C. Banks, customer Charles O. Semple and Chaparral owner Leon Jeffcoat.

With cool weather on hand, it's time to check your oil and antifreeze levels before it's too late. Adventure Travel describes advantages of all-inclusive vacation

The all-inclusive vacation is becoming more and more popular, according to the professional travel consultants at Adventure Travel. Located in Oakridge Square, at the corner of Wadley and Garfield, Adventure Travel has all the details on the convenience of a cruise, Club Med, Barbachano or Jack Tar Village dream vacation.

Why not give someone this dream trip for Christmas or a special honeymoon sendoff? Just ask for an Adventure Travel gift certificate — it's that easy!

Paying for all expenses up front is appealing to a great many vacationers. For this reason, cruises have always been a favorite. One price includes airfare, ports of call, all meals, shipboard activities and soft drinks. Some cruise lines have now dispensed with tipping. Alcoholic beverages are inexpensive and kept on a tab until the end of your trip.

In addition to cruises, Club Med, Barbachano and Jack Tar Village vacations also include all activities, airfare and watersports, as well as all beverages (soft drinks, wine, beer and cocktails).

The newest Jack Tar Village is north of Puerto Vallarta, at Nuevo Vallarta. Club Med has also added a new resort to its Mexico retreats. Huatulco is located south of Acapulco, and is known as the "the undiscovered Riviera." You'll enjoy three beautiful beaches, and will be immersed in exotic, tropical culture.

Mexico Sea 'n' Sun packages from Barbachano Tours include Club Aventuras at Akumal and Club Cozumel Caribe. Both are specially priced through December 15.

Not only will you find relief from the stresses of everyday life, but you will discover a totally different, unique way of vacationing, since everything is paid for in advance with an all inclusive vacation. You can forget about money, and concentrate on fun, fun, fun.

Each day will bring new adventures and experiences. You'll meet new friends who all have the same goal — fun, sun and relaxation. Every Jack Tar Village, for example, can bring you new experiences, and each offers a character of its own.

Stroll down to the beach for a relaxing sail or an adventure in windsurfing. And remember it will only cost you your time, since the all-inclusive vacation includes free activities.

You can join in the fun of a barbeque beach party, or you can try many of the other activities. Some villages have golfing, bicycling and tennis. Most villages even offer unlimited cigarettes — you don't have to worry about anything.

If you are in the mood for excitement, try river rafting or walking up a waterfall in Jamaica; or test your luck in the casinos of the Bahamas and the Dominican Republic. Local markets in all the Jack Tar Villages offer interesting native crafts, and duty-free goods imported from Europe are most attractive.

Basic features, such as meals, transfers, round trip airfare from Dallas, cocktails and watersports such as sailing, water skiing, snorkeling, scuba lessons and windsurfing are offered at each location (every Jack Tar Village varies in the exact watersport events available).

Call 683-4211 and get set for a wonderful time! Three to four week reservations for these vacations are recommended, but spur of the moment bookings are sometimes available.

Hairstyles of '90s more natural, with less gel

By VALLI HERMAN
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — For three days this week, hundreds of stylists met at the Los Angeles Convention Center for the 1989 International Beauty Show West, learning the newest techniques in hair and makeup design and treatment.

For the man or woman of drama, or of easygoing simplicity, the 1990s have a trend to match.

Throughout the event, stylists watched teams of international designers demonstrate new techniques. Among them were award-winning designers Suzanne Chadwick, who has salons in New York and London, and Rob De Wilde, who has salons in Amsterdam and Santa Monica, Calif.

Both agreed that, as the '90s progress, the beauty industry will have to cater more to lifestyles. Men and women of the next decade will be more concerned about their appearance but will have less time to devote to it.

As a result, hair and makeup products will be faster-acting, less complex and more natural.

"What we all want is to look good," said De Wilde. That may mean less severe makeup accents, more natural cheek and lip colors and a slight bronzing powder for men.

Hair fashions also are more free.

"Hair is cleaner, shinier and more touchable. We will be using less spray," said Chadwick. As semi-permanent hair dyes become perfected, more women may opt for warmer tints. Some will be achieved by "naturalizing," a process of weaving several tints of color through hair to give it more life and dimension.

One look will not predominate.

"Just like designer clothes, women will never be led like lemmings again. Not everyone is going to wear a wedge," Chadwick said.

Hair styles will become more versatile.

"Most women are like their wardrobes — they want to be one person during the day and another person at night," Chadwick said. As a result, stylists and clients alike will be pressed to learn techniques to dress the hair, using mousse, spray and other products.

Nails won't escape the revolution toward natural looks. Claws are gone, and so are the all-over synthetic nails. Healthier nail tips, which don't allow nail atrophy, take their place.

Consultants will play a more important role in the overall look of clients. Chadwick said clients may expect to have advice on hair, makeup, clothing and cleansing regimens from a single beauty expert.

Fashions for '90s feature 'very revealing' designs

By SUSAN PHINNEY
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — It could be tough to conceal a less than perfect body in the 1990s. Many of the clothes designers here have created for spring are either transparent or fit like a second skin.

Transparent fabrics range from lace and cotton eyelet embroidery to a glistening sheer of rayon, silk and Lurex.

Take the Rebecca Moses collection, for example. She used lace for skirts and pants meant for day wear. She made tops of rayon knit that were fluid and semitransparent. Sweaters came in a clingy silk jersey. Even a practical windbreaker had a transparent panel in the back.

Sarah Davies, corporate fashion director for Nordstrom, said she liked the use of lace and Lurex for day. It is pretty, and novel, but it's not likely to be a hit with the 9-to-5 set.

Clingy cotton knits are another designer favorite for spring 1990. Norma Kamali, the woman who made nice baggy sweat-shirt fashions into streetwear, used a cotton-Lycra blend for black dresses and bodysuits. These ranged from a short dress with one shoulder to something that looked like a cat suit for Halloween. She created rayon jersey halter dresses that showed every curve.

Things are more ladylike in the collection of designer Carolina Herrera. Her daytime dresses are highly constructed, with lots of seams, darts and zippers to get a body-close silhouette. There were several styles of what used to be called sheath dresses, and which reminded the audience of Audrey Hepburn, Jacqueline Kennedy and some of the fashions they made famous in the 1960s. They were spare and elegant.

There were other '60s flashbacks as designers showed their wares.

Models at the Frank Fiore show had beehive hairstyles. These were worn with very narrow pants and leather thong sandals.

Fiore used a knit lace — the kind we are accustomed to seeing in lacy pantyhose — as a fabric for wide, flowing pants.

At the other end of his fashion spectrum was something called a "jumper." This looked more like a suit of long underwear with arms and legs cropped, or a man's bathing costume from another fashion era. With a skirt layered over, it could become daytime apparel. Alone, it had better stay on the beach.

Bill Blass showed strapless gabardine sheaths under jackets for day. Like Herrera's, his clothes are beautifully constructed. His lacy late-day dresses are almost like lingerie.

Designer Charlotte Neuville calls her transparent fabric "screen," and it does look sort of like something that should go over an open window, but it's much more supple. She used it for little shells she called "undershirts" or for big flowing coats and jackets.

Models usually wear only panty-hose when they are on the runway, so if the clothing is transparent the audience sees a lot of model. It was something of a shock, therefore, to see a model wearing a bra with a demure white cotton blouse in the Neuville show.

These fashion previews for spring 1990 have their strange moments. Kamali staged her show in a corner of Central Park. A man stood under a tree playing a saxophone as guests descended the stairs into the park and autumn leaves drifted down.

The show opened with a group of models wearing black "cowgirl" costumes and closed with another group of models wearing fashions apparently inspired by American Indians. Kamali should leave both fashion categories to their originators.

Chaps rebound into win column

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

The Midland College Chaparrals emerged from a grueling tournament schedule to breeze past Hill County Junior College, 71-45, Monday at the Chaparral Center.

The Chaps, 6-4, jumped out to a 18-9 lead in the first 10 minutes of the game and never looked back. MC used the combination of tough perimeter defense and Hill's penchant for taking off-balance shots to hold the Rebels to 15 first-half points on six-for-31 field goal shooting and 2-for-9 free throw accuracy.

The Rebels poured in a rousing 30 second-half points, causing Franklin to downgrade MC's intensity for a full 40 minutes.

"If we hold them to 15 points in the first half, why can't we hold them that well in the second half," Franklin said. Still, the Chap mentor liked the way his defenders looked — at times.

Or it is that Hill did such a bad job? Even though the hosts were hardly tearing up the nets in the first half, the Rebels couldn't take advantage, going almost eight points without a point late in the first half.

The Chaps reeled off 15 unanswered points during that stretch to put the game away. Sophomore Randy Williams came off the bench to net two quick baskets in a 30-second interval and classmate Tim Owens cashed in on a couple of follow shots to continue the run.

But Owens really didn't catch fire until the second half. The Bellaire resident made all four of his field goal attempts in the second half and added four free throws for 12 of his team-high 17 points. Hill's Eddie Jones, a 6-3 forward, led all scorers with 18 points.

Owens said it was nice to get a breather from the killer schedule that included MC's own Chap Classic, the Quarterback Classic in Hutchinson, Kans., and the McDonald's Classic in Levelland.

"This was kind of a relief," Owens said. "We've been playing some real tough teams, so we needed an easy one."

Hill coach Ray Roberts said this one wasn't supposed to be so easy for the Chaps.

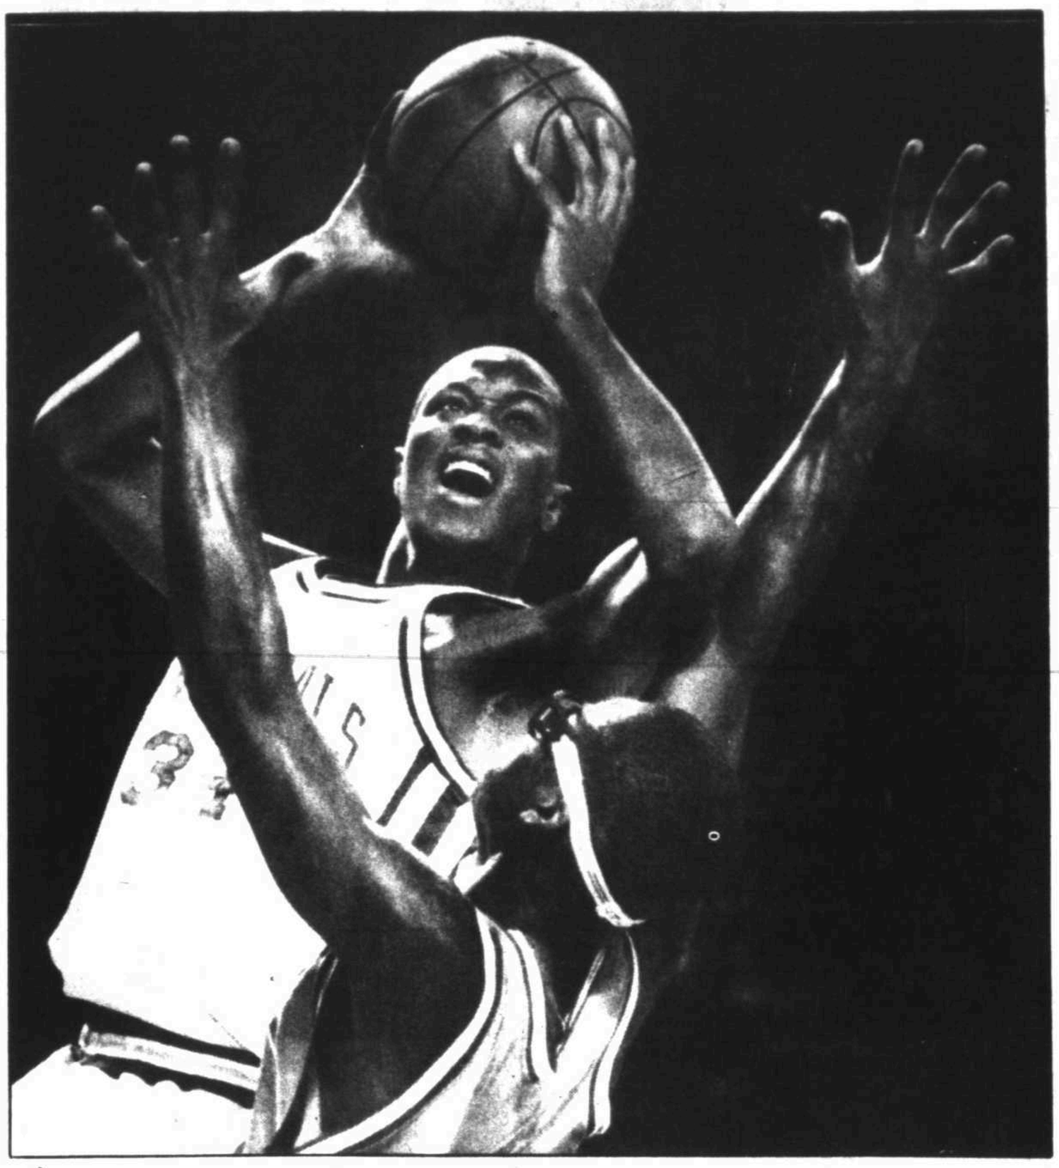

"I felt like we were real non-competitive once we got down," Roberts said. "Midland got ahead because we did some bad things around the basket, then we had kids who wanted to go home with 15 minutes left."

Lady Rebs fall 57-43

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Editor

The Lubbock Coronado Lady Mustangs are off to a fast start in the young basketball season despite a murderous schedule, and they made Midland Lee's girls their fifth consecutive victim, 57-43, Monday night at the Lee gym.

"This was our fourth game in five days. We just got through with a trip to Big Spring Saturday, so we are a little tired," said Coronado coach Bob Jama. "Still, I feel we are where we should be right now. We had a couple of kids hurt who didn't suit up and we still need to get more kids involved on the court."

Lee battled Coronado to the limit in the first half, holding the Coronado lead to 26-23 at the break. But Coronado came out and ran off 14 unanswered points for a 40-23 margin and the decision had been made.

"We hit a dry spell at the opening of the third quarter and I don't think we got a rebound during that entire stretch," said Lee coach Shirley Stephenson, who saw her team fall to 2-3 after winning the consolation title in the Del Rio tournament over the weekend.

Coronado used the outside gun of Brenda Tobias and the paint work of Julie Baker to spill the Rebels. Tobias hit for 15 points while Baker countered with 16 inside. Coronado also got nine points from Vikee Clark, despite receiving four early fouls.

Lee failed to place a player in double figures as Sheena Parker and Mary Ann Isom each came up with nine points in the loss. Parker scored six of her nine in the first half to keep the Rebels close. Marsha del Llano had seven points, five in the second period when Lee forced a 20-20 tie to challenge.

Andress undefeated since losing to Rebels

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Editor

El Paso Andress will carry an eight-game winning streak into its area playoff battle with Midland Lee at 2 p.m. Saturday at Memorial Stadium, hoping there is a little more powder in its gun than when they got beat earlier in the year in Midland, 17-0.

The two teams met Sept. 23 with both owning 1-1 records with Lee recording the second of its three defensive shutouts of the year.

In that game, Lee's Farris Strambler had 236 yards rushing while cornerback Scott Luckie came up with a key interception that halted the Eagles' only real scoring threat.

Since then, the Eagles have cruised on undefeated auto drive and head coach Allan Sepkowitz believes it was the Lee game that turned his troops into a good team.

"We feel that Lee is a great team," said Sepkowitz. "That's why we play them and we feel we have narrowed the margin against them every year.

"We're still not a great offensive team, but we have gotten better. We've been a pretty good defensive team all year."

In fact, Andress ranked second in overall defense in El Paso, giving up only 194.6 yards per game to its opponents, including the 307 allowed against Lee.

But offensively the Eagles averaged 291.2 yards per game and that ranked seventh among 16 El Paso teams through its first 10 games. They gave up only 9.3 points per game in regular season play.

After beating El Paso Hanks Friday, 41-18, in the bi-district round of the state playoffs, it may not look like the Eagles had trouble starting the engine. But in fact, Andress trailed in that game 10-7 before finding the offensive fuel.

"It was tougher than it looked for us," said Sepkowitz, "but the kids did a good job despite a poor first half."

5A Playoffs

Quarterback Sal Sanchez has been the Eagle sparkplug this season. He ranked eighth among El Paso quarterbacks in passing, hitting 54 of 115 efforts for 651 yards. However, he has thrown eight interceptions and has tossed for only two TDs this year. His longest throw of the year is 43 yards.

Sanchez' favorite target is wide receiver Ray Belvin, who has caught 18 passes for 261 yards and a touchdown. His longest catch of the year was for 30 yards.

It has been lack of production from the Eagle running backs that has been the major problem for Andress. None of their runners rank in El Paso. Against Lee, Andress used nine backs for a meager 49 yards rushing, the top mark of the year for the Lee defense.

One major problem experienced by Andress is the early season injury to Tyrus Doctor, who was expected to be one of the top backs in El Paso this year.

"We just haven't gotten any production from the Doctor kid all season long," says Sepkowitz. "You might say he hasn't been a factor for us at all. We've used him some in recent games, but haven't gotten much out of him. I guess you could say he is running about 80 percent now."

Doctor didn't play at all against Lee, so he could be an added threat for Lee to worry about come Saturday.

Playoff Notes: You couldn't blame the Andress coaching staff if they were pulling for Palo Duro last Saturday against Lee. Andress had the Sun Bowl waiting for the Dons, but knew they would have to travel back to Midland if Lee won.

"We know this town pretty well by now," said Sepkowitz.

Lee has had very good luck against Andress in the playoffs. Lee met the Eagles twice in consecutive seasons (1984-85). Lee won the first game 41-6 in a game played in the Sun Bowl and then got a 45-7 win the following year at Memorial Stadium. In the 1984 game, Lee had three 100-yard rushers in Walter Jones, Tyrone Thurman and Reggie Ellis.

Rockin' Robin Yount...1989 American League MVP

Milwaukee outfielder brews up another award-winning season

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Robin Yount's 16 years with the Milwaukee Brewers have been ones of quiet efficiency. He's a hitter and a leader, not a talker.

So when Yount won his second American League Most Valuable Player award of the decade on Monday, it was no surprise that he had little to say. Humility and consistency have long been his trademarks.

"I appreciate the award and thank the baseball writers for their votes," the publicity-shy Yount said from Hawaii, where he was vacationing.

"It's always nice to be recognized, but I want everyone to realize that this award is also for my teammates, the organization and the great fans of Wisconsin."

Those great fans of Wisconsin got a jolt earlier this month when Yount, who broke in with the Brewers as a long-haired, 18-year-old shortstop in 1974, filed for free agency.

What would the Milwaukee Brewers be without Yount, who led the team to the World Series in 1982 when he won his first MVP award?

Yount, never one to stir up controversy, hinted at the end of last season that he wanted to return to the Brewers, but only if the team made some changes to increase its chances of returning to the World Series. At age 34, getting back to the World Series is Yount's one remaining goal in baseball, not 3,000 hits and not awards. Yount, the major league's hit leader of the 1980s with 1,731, enters the 1990 season with 2,602 career hits. He also led baseball with 337 doubles in the 1980s.

"His accomplishments speak for themselves. But I don't think individual awards mean anything to Robin," Brewers manager Tom Trebelhorn said.

"What means most to him is the fact he can play this game at the high level that he sets for himself and at a level that will help the ball club win. He puts everything in a team perspective."

Yount, the Brewers' centerfielder, joined Stan Musial and Hank Greenberg as players to be MVPs at two positions and also became the first AL winner to play for a team that didn't have a winning record. The Brewers were 81-81 in 1989.

Greenberg, with Detroit, and Musial, with the St. Louis Cardinals, each won their MVP awards as first basemen and outfielders.

Yount, who switched to the outfield in 1985 because of shoulder problems, is the second Brewer to win the MVP award. Reliever Rollie Fingers won in 1981.

Yount batted .318, hit 21 homers, drove in 103 runs and scored 101 this season. He had 38 doubles, nine triples, 19 stolen bases and committed but seven errors.

"He's the guy we look to to carry the ball club," teammate Greg Brock said. "Without his bat and his leadership, we're hurting."

Jim Gantner, one of Yount's closest friends on the team, said last week that he expects Yount to be back in Milwaukee, although California is one of several teams reportedly interested in stealing him away.

"My gut feeling is he'd like to come back," Gantner said. "Milwaukee is still No. 1 with him. I haven't talked with him lately, but that's the way I think he feels.

"I don't think money is the top priority. He won't go to another team just for the big bucks. I know that for a fact."

Yount received eight first-place votes and accumulated 256 points.

Dallas owner denies money trouble, admits bills paid late

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones denied a published report on Monday that the team is in financial trouble.

"That's just not true," Jones said Monday night in a telephone interview wih KRLD Radio.

The Dallas Times Herald reported in a banner story on Page 1 of its Monday editions that the Cowboys, who have the worst record in the NFL, have not been faring much better on the business side since Jones bought the franchise for $130 million last February.

Jones confirmed that some bills are not paid within 30 days and that he is providing money to the club on almost a weekly basis to help with cash flow — but said the paper made the erroneous assumption that the team is in dire financial straits.

It is commonplace for the owner of a business to loan money to the company from time to time and be paid back as its revenues come in, Jones said.

The reason payment of some bills is delayed beyond 30 days, he said, is because the Cowboys instituted a policy requiring all bills to be reviewed by the department involved before payment is authorized, and that sometimes takes time.

"The Cowboys are absolutely able to pay any of their bills that they are incurring or might have incurred. ... Any business or any family or any company from time to time ... may have bills to pay and may not have the money on hand to pay it. When they do get the money on hand, they pay me back," Jones said.

"The only person or entity that the Dallas Cowboys owe any money to is me, and that is not done because they are having shortfalls or any problems paying their bills. It's just doing business."

Quoting "Cowboys sources," the Times Herald also reported that the team held a check for a $1.5 million lump sum payment due rookie quarterback Troy Aikman until after banking hours.

Fumbles decisive in Bronco victory

WASHINGTON (AP) — All season, Denver coach Dan Reeves has been calling Dennis Smith the key to the Broncos' vastly improved defense.

Smith proved Reeves' point Monday night, literally taking a 14-10 victory over Washington with his own hands.

The 30-year-old Smith, one of the few holdovers on the revamped Denver defense, pried two fumbles from the hands of Jamie Morris. The first was picked up and returned 35 yards to the Washinigton 5 by Tyrone Braxton, setting up Denver's first touchdown. The second stopped Washington's longest drive of the game.

Smith's first big play came less than five minutes into the game after Washington had taken a 7-0 lead on its own turnover — a sack and fumble recovery by Fred Stokes at the Denver 8 that preceded Morris' 8-yard TD run.

Morris ran left, was hit at the line of scrimmage and went into a pile. As he was falling, Smith got his hand in and yanked at the ball, prying it loose.

"That's how we play it," Smith said. "They had him tied up. Whoever who has the opportunity to strip the ball is going to try to do it. I didn't even realize I had pulled it out."

"I got careless with the ball," Morris said. "I should have had two hands on it. I was reaching for extra yards when it happened."

Whatever, it bounced right to Braxton, who raced down the sideline to the 5. Two plays later, Gary Kubiak, subbing for the ailing John Elway, hit Melvin Bratton with a 1-yard touchdown pass to tie the game.

The second strip came on the first series of the second half, with Denver holding a 14-7 lead and Washington on what turned out to be its only sustained drive of the night, one that carried from its own 26 to the Denver 13 in just five plays.

On a second and two, Morris went right, reaching the 10 and again went into the pile. Again Smith reached in and knocked the ball loose and Michael Brooks fell on it.

"The second one was harder," Smith said. "I had to get my hand in pretty good. He was holding the ball in there better, but I got my hand in there all the way and ripped it out."

Washington coach Joe Gibbs questioned whether the officials should have blown their whistles before the ball came loose.

"I think on both of them he was held up and stopped," Gibbs said. "But evidently, they didn't call it that way."

But Smith didn't worry about those things.

He said part of the inspiration for the plays was the absence of Elway, which Reeves used as a motivational tool.

"Dan told us before the game that we can may excuses or make the plays," he said. "We made the plays."

Cardinals ax Stallings

PHOENIX (AP) — Phoenix Cardinals coach Gene Stallings kept hearing rumors that he was, in his words, "more of a lame duck than a dead duck."

On Monday, when he announced he would become the former, the Cardinals stepped in to say he was the latter.

Two hours after Stallings announced that he would honor the last five games of his four-year contract but would not seek to renew it, the Cardinals fired him and named running backs coach Hank Kuhlmann as interim coach for the last five games.

"He indicated he didn't want to be here. To me, if you don't want to be a Cardinal, find another line of work," General Manager Larry Wilson said during a news conference. "I don't want to take away the focus of what we're doing right now.

"Five weeks might make the difference of making the playoffs or not. Last year, we lost the last five games. I think we are very capable of winning the last five games. But I think it would be disruptive if Gene was here as a part of it."

"I want the team to do well and win games. I don't think they can do that if I'm the center of controversy," Stallings said. "I believed that continued speculation about my future was a distraction, so I did what I thought was right for the organization and the team."

Phoenix (5-6) still has slim hopes of a wild-card playoff berth heading into Sunday's game against Tampa Bay.

The Cardinals, who moved to Phoenix from St. Louis in 1988, have had three consecutive losing seasons under the 54-year-old Stallings and were 23-34-1 during his tenure.

Stallings' contract, worth a reported $250,000 this season, was due to expire Feb. 1 and the Cardinals said they will honor it.

There has been speculation throughout the season that the Cardinals would fire Stallings. He said "nobody told me anything to the contrary" and he never received a vote of confidence from Wilson or team owner Bill Bidwill.

The situation came to a head late last week after the St. Louis Post-Dispatch published a Wilson interview critical of Stallings.

CHAPS

Midland's Kethus Hanks and Hill's Kevin Madden were the only other double figure scorers Monday, with 10 points each.

The Chaps have a 10-day break from competition going into their Western Junior College Athletic Conference opener at home next Thursday against Western Texas College.

While Franklin is generally pleased with the Chap defense, he would like to see some offensive improvement developed during the Thanksgiving hiatus.

"We're definitely not where I want to be offensively," the head Chap said. "We have to get our inside people scoring better."

On the plus side, Franklin has been pleased with the play of point guards Ron Johnson, Kiki Stanley and Gym Bice.

U.S. wins at World Cup

PORT OF SPAIN, Trinidad (AP) — They scattered to various parts of the United States, basking in their success. All of a sudden, the U.S. soccer team has a future.

With Sunday's 1-0 victory over Trinidad and Tobago, the United States advanced to its first World Cup finals since 1950. Now it has to plan for the next six months.

"We will have 15 to 20 games against international opponents," Sunil Gulati, the team's scheduler, said. "Then, we'll probably go over to Europe the third week of May."

The World Cup begins at Milan, Italy, on June 8. The final is July 8 at Rome. All 24 teams in the tournament play three first-round games and 16 advance to the second round. The draw that will divide the teams into six four-teams groups will be held Dec. 9 at Rome.

But that's in the future. The Americans looked relieved as they left on Monday and headed back to Miami. Trinidad was in a state of shock.

Monday was a national holiday in honor of the Trinidad and Tobago team and almost all shops and businesses in Port of Spain were closed. The headline in the Daily Express was "River of Tears." The Evening Sun's headline was "A Fever Turned to Ice."

"We have to get over the terrible shock of our defeat," Trinidad coach Everald "Gally" Cummings said.

Michael Maurice, the Trinidad goalkeeper, said he had no chance to stop Paul Caligiuri's 30th-minute goal.

"As he kicked, I found myself leaning to the side to see around the body of my own defender," Maurice said. "By the time I got sight of the ball, which also had gone into the sun, it was too late."

Chap golfers win third

PENSACOLA, Fla. — Midland College finished a strong third in the Florida Junior College Invitational, which concluded 54 holes of play Saturday at the Stonebrook Village Resorts course.

MC's Dean Robertson was one of seven players named to the All-Tournament team. New Mexico Junior College, the only team to post two rounds of less than 300, took the team title. Western Florida Community College slipped into second ahead of Chaps with a final round 292, the lowest round of the tournament.

The tourney was played on the tough 7100-yard Stonebrook course, which had strong winds and cold temperatures to add to the problems. This was the final event on the fall schedule for the Chaparrals.

Tomas Ryd of New Mexico Junior College, one of four players tied for medalist honors with 220 totals, won the playoff for medalist. Also at 220 were David Farmer, Odessa College; Andy Bell, Grayson College, Texas; and Crister Galvestad, New Mexico Junior College. Those four were on the All-Tournament squad along with Robertson, Mike Henderson and Rene Rangel, both of Lon Morris College, Texas.

Faldo resigns PGA card

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — The rift between European and American golf appeared to widen with Nick Faldo's resignation of membership in the U.S. PGA Tour.

Faldo, the Englishman who holds the Masters championship, became the fourth major European star to declare himself in favor of greater participation on his home circuit and less on the American tour.

Previously, former Masters champion Bernhard Langer of West Germany resigned his American tour membership. Ian Woosnam of Wales and Seve Ballesteros of Spain had earlier declined offers to join the American circuit in 1990.

Of the leading European players, only Sandy Lyle of Scotland, a former Masters and British Open titleholder, has indicated he would retain membership on the American tour next year, a PGA Tour source told The Associated Press.

Because they are no longer members of the American Tour, Faldo, Langer, Ballesteros and Woosnam will be eligible for a maximum of only nine American events — the Masters, U.S. Open, PGA and five others on the basis of sponsor exemptions. They would also be able to play in the World Series of Golf, if they qualify by winning another Tour event.

The actions of Ballesteros, Woosnam, Faldo and Langer came on the heels of a PGA Tour Policy Board decision last month not to reduce from 15 to 12 the minimum number of American tournament appearances required of foreign members.

"It's too much," Langer, a member of the American Tour since 1985, said. "If I play 15 tournaments in America, that means I have to be here five or six months a year. That is too much.

Sierra saddened by vote

ARLINGTON (AP) — Ruben Sierra, who took second in the American League most valuable player award balloting said from his home in San Juan, Puerto Rico, that not winning will just make him better next year.

"I feel sad but there is nothing I can do about it," Sierra said by telephone Monday. "It will make me work harder next year."

Milwaukee's Robin Yount won the award. He batted .318, hit 21 homers and drove in 103 runs. Texas' Sierra batted .306 with 29 home runs and a league-leading 119 RBIs.

Yount received eight first-place votes for a total of 256 points, and was the only player named on all 28 ballots by members of the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Sierra was second with six first-place votes and a total of 228 points. Sierra, whose team finished fourth — as did Milwaukee — also led the league with a .543 slugging percentage, 78 extra-base hits and 344 total bases.

Rangers manager Bobby Valentine was in Tokyo but said before he left: "Ruben was more into the game and less into himself this year. I had been trying to tell him that now that people look to him to do special things with his bat, glove and one the bases. He started to realize that and started to come out of his shell.

"He is motivated by acknowledgement and rewards. And one of the great things is he has learned over the last few years is that for all the rewards and recognition he is getting, that winning is still the thing you strike for."

"We are improving," said Stephenson. "We're gaining a little more poise each time out. We just have to rebound a little better."

However, Lee was outrebounded by only one, 38-37, by the much taller Mustangs. Parker led Lee with 12 rebounds.

Jama said, "The Midland girls are much improved from when I saw them last week against (Lubbock) Monterey (a 100-38 loss by Lee). Shirley has done a good job with these girls in a short period of time. They played us hard and it helped us."

Lee travels to Hobbs, N.M., tonight before taking a Thanksgiving break.

In junior varsity action, Coronado won a 66-43 decision. Ranee Franklin had 10 points for Lee and Colleen added eight.

Peace threat dents defense stocks

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Defense stocks have dropped sharply, with several losing about 10 percent of their value as investors reacted to news of further Pentagon cuts caused by tighter budgets and warmer East-West relations.

This past weekend, Defense Secretary Richard Cheney proposed $180 billion in defense cuts over six years, starting in fiscal 1992. Defense Department officials already are considering cuts of as much as $15 billion out of next year's $310 billion budget.

Wall Street's reaction on Monday drove down defense stocks.

Some of the biggest losers were E-Systems Inc. of Dallas, which closed Monday at 29-3/4 down 4 or 11.9 percent; Martin Marietta Corp. of Bethesda, Md., down 4-1/2 or 10.2 percent; General Dynamics Corp. of St. Louis, down 4-7/8 or 9.9 percent; and Litton Industries Inc. of Beverly Hills, down 8-1/8 or 9.6 percent.

"I would certainly term it a gross overreaction," said Paul Nisbet, an analyst with Prudential Bache Securities Inc. "These stocks are being priced according to a utopia situation. The outlook for defense has certainly not changed as much as the market would indicate."

But the market's action will serve to make life even harder for defense firms, analysts said.

"They imperil the financial health of some of the weaker companies," said Thomas Lloyd-Butler, an analyst for Montgomery Securities Inc. in San Francisco. "Grumman and McDonnell Douglas both have highly leveraged balance sheets. Those balance sheets could become more leveraged and we might see a bankruptcy or two."

The analysts said that if Cheney gets the cuts he wants, fewer new programs will be started and existing programs will take longer. The result will be numerous layoffs in the defense industry and a dangerously super aggressive stance in bidding for new defense work, they added.

"Adjusting to lower budgets is inevitably a very painful process," said Wolfgang Demisch, research director of UBS Securities Inc. in New York. "With fewer programs, the level of hunger rises and attempts to stretch painfully to get a contract will increase."

Several analysts said an example of trying too desperately for a contract was Lockheed Corp.'s $600 million bid for the development of the P-7A maritime patrol aircraft. On Friday the aerospace firm — based in the Los Angeles suburb of Calabasas — announced a $300 million write-off on the program.

Defense contractors said the market had treated the industry as a group on Monday, possibly expecting that cuts would come across the board. But companies said it's too early to tell where the cuts will come and how deep they will be.

"We don't know what's going to be in the budget," said Tony Cantafio, a spokesman for Los Angeles-based Northrop Corp., prime contractor for the B-2 stealth bomber. "We'll just have to wait and see."

Jim Ramsey, a spokesman for St. Louis-based McDonnell Douglas, said it was going to be a while before specific programs are marked for cuts.

But company officials and analysts noted that Cheney's cuts might be thwarted by politicians trying to protect businesses in their home districts. They added that Monday's reaction by the market was excessive.

Said Demisch: "It's as if someone had declared that peace is about to break out."

INFLATION

Fuel, food push index higher

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices shot up 0.5 percent last month as higher gasoline and food costs gave the country its biggest inflation spurt since May, the government said today.

The October increase in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index, which translated into an annual inflation rate of 5.9 percent, followed four months in which the index recorded modest monthly gains of 0.2 percent or less.

The price spurt was slightly worse than analysts had been expecting. The government blamed the rise on a jump in gasoline costs, higher prices for new cars and a sharp turnaround in fruit and vegetable prices.

Through the first 10 months of this year, consumer prices have risen at an annual rate of 4.6 percent, up only slightly from the 4.4 percent price gains recorded in both 1987 and 1988.

Many economists are predicting that the best news on inflation has passed and that coming months will show higher inflationary pressures. Still, few analysts are concerned that the price increases will worsen beyond annual rates of around 5 percent.

Leading the October advance was a 0.9 percent seasonally adjusted jump in gasoline costs, the biggest increase since a 3.9 percent surge in May. Gasoline prices have been on a roller coaster this year, soaring by 21.2 percent in the first five months of the year and then falling by 9.3 percent from June through September.

The price that consumers actually paid at the pump was unchanged in October. However, gasoline prices normally fall in October, so the frozen prices translated into an increase after the Labor Department made its adjustments to take seasonal factors into account.

Food costs were up 0.4 percent in October, the biggest advance since a 0.6 percent rise in May.

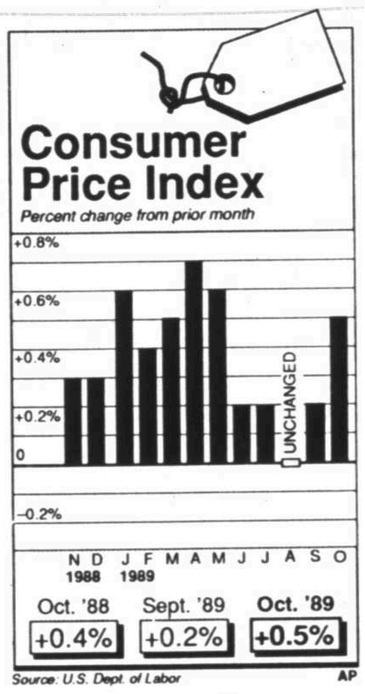

Fruit and vegetable prices jumped 1.2 percent, reflecting higher costs for apples and bananas. Dairy products posted a huge gain for the second straight month, rising 1.8 percent for the biggest advance since May 1980.

New car prices were also up in October, rising by 0.6 percent after having fallen for five consecutive months. The jump reflected higher costs for the 1990 models and a big 1.3 percent rise in auto financing costs. Used-car prices, however, continued to decline, edging down 0.1 percent after a 0.7 percent drop in September.

Other forms of energy also posted increases in October, with heating-oil prices jumping by 2.5 percent and natural gas and electricity costs rising by 0.3 percent.

Consumer prices, after discounting food and energy, also rose by 0.5 percent. Many analysts consider this to be a better indication of the underlying inflation rate because it re-

Midland cost of living dips in October

Midland's cost of living declined by a slight 0.1 percent in October, according to figures released today by ClayDesta National Bank. Annualized, the Tall City's rate of deflation would be 1.1 percent.

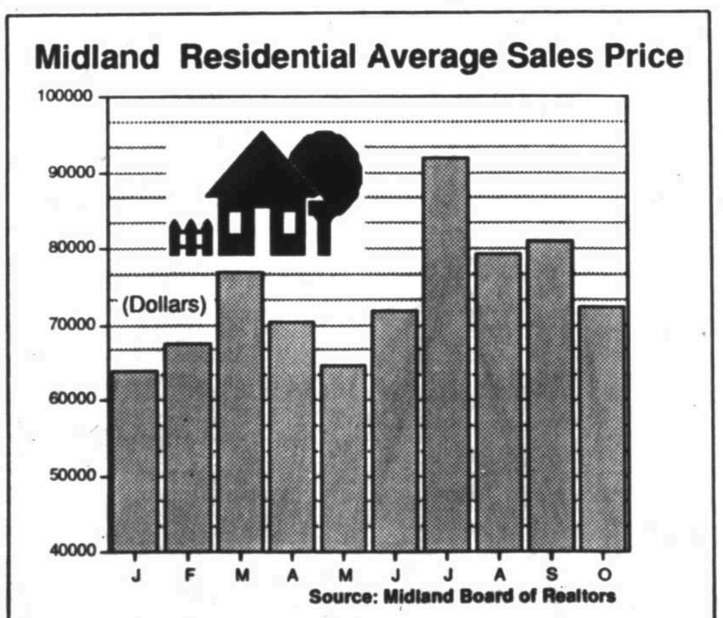

Odessa's cost of living rose for a second month, the survey found, with October costs rising by 0.2 percent.

Still, the increases were lower than the national level. The government reports that the consumer price index rose 0.5 percent in October. This translates to a six-month annualized inflation rate of 3.3 percent and 12-month annualized rate of 4.5 percent.

Transportation costs showed the steepest decline and reversed a September increase by falling 4.3 percent in October as lower gasoline prices and a second month of lower maintenance costs offset higher automobile insurance rates. Transportation costs have risen 6.5 per-

Midland home sales reverse decline trend

Midland residential sales reversed a downward trend in October as 127 houses were sold valued at more than $9.17 million, according to the Midland Board of Realors.

Average sale price for an existing house in Midland in October was $72,269.

October units sold reveal an increase of 1.6 percent over the September total of 125 units. The number of units sold is up 15.4 percent from the October 1988 figure of 110 units.

However, dollar volume of the residences sold was down 10.1 percent from the September total of $10.1 million. In October 1988, volume of residences sold totaled $7.59 million.

TI cuts not expected to hit Midland plant

From Staff and Wire Reports

A pre-tax charge against profits for the fourth quarter is expected to affect operating income and result in cost-cutting measures for Texas Instruments, but such measures are not expected to affect military semiconducter operations in Midland.

The Dallas-based firm announced the pre-tax charge for the fourth quarter on Monday, explaining it was necessary for cost adjustments in several fixed-price development contracts and to implement cost-cutting measures. Among the measures will be a reduction in its workforce by 1,500 employees.

Roger Guess, personnel director at the Midland TI facility, noted that a Dallas wafer lab would be closed and that employees would be offered voluntary retirement plans. "We will offer the same voluntary retirement plans here, but operations here will not be affected by the cost-cutting measures," said Guess.

In October the Midland facility joined in cost-cutting measures by releasing 15-20 temporary contract employees.

Daniel L. Klesken, semiconductor industry analyst with Prudential Bache Research in San Francisco, said the chip and electronics giant's charges will essentially wipe out earnings that he projected.

"It takes it to a break-even quarter," he told The Dallas Morning News.

John Joseph, an analyst at Montgomery Securities in San Francisco, was moderately more optimistic. He had projected TI would have about $82 million in operating profits for the fourth quarter, he told The Morning News.

The company had reported operating profits of $39.6 million in the quarter that ended Sept. 30, but those profits were rolled back $10 million for cutbacks in the defense group.

The company still is expected to have a net profit in its last quarter, the newspaper reported. The firms' net income includes non-operating income such as royalties on technology patents it holds.

Monday's announcement came hours after the company announced in Japan that it will hire several hundred Japanese scientists and engineers for a new $40 million research and development center in Tsukuba, about 40 miles northeast of Tokyo.

Texas Instruments spokeswoman Terri West said the company plans to seek the reduction through voluntary means, such as retirements, early retirements (at age 55), voluntary terminations and "bridged early retirements" (for those younger than 55).

Two similar reduction efforts earlier this year resulted in about 2,000 jobs being trimmed from the firm's corporate and defense systems groups.

The company has about 75,000 employees worldwide, with about 51,000 of those in the United States. About 80 percent of the U.S. workforce is concentrated in Texas.

Ms. West said $15 million is required to adjust costs associated with fixed-price development contracts held by the defense systems and electronics group.

MARKETS

Oil prices on upward trend

From Staff and Wire Reports

Even though 1990 is a month away, the year has begun on a high note for oil prices.

January contracts for West Texas Intermediate opened higher, gaining 6 cents to stand at $20.05 at midmorning on the New York Mercantile Exchange. It had gained 16 cents Monday to close at $19.99.

December contracts for WTI expired Monday on a high note, gaining 16 cents on its last day of trading to close at $20.07 a barrel. Analysts said late buyers helped boost the contract's prices.

In addition, local crude buyers such as Permian Corp. have raised their posted prices from $18.75 a barrel to $19 a barrel.

Moderate trading dominated the market as futures prices were boosted by colder weather and technical factors.

Among refined products traded on the exchange, No. 2 heating oil for December delivery rose 0.81 cent to 60.08 cents a gallon. The January contract gained 0.78 cent to 59.88 cents and February increased 0.70 cent to 58.73 cents a gallon.

Wholesale unleaded gasoline rose 0.27 cent to 52.22 cents a gallon, while the January contract climbed 0.38 cent to 52.98 cents a gallon.

Analysts attributed Monday's gains partly to technical factors after last week's technical losses.

Cold weather in some parts of the nation also helped boost heating oil prices, they said, while reports of possible supply disruptions stemming from this weekend's fire at a Chevron refinery gave gasoline futures a lift.

A petroleum distillation unit was damaged during the blaze at the El Segundo, Calif., plant, but no damage estimates were released.

Energy analysts said underlying optimism ahead of Saturday's meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is helping support prices, although it is difficult to say how much of a factor it is in actual buying and selling.

OPEC is scheduled to meet in Vienna, Austria, starting Saturday to set strategy for 1990, including production allocations for each of the 13 member countries.

Falling interest rates lower dollar

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell early today against all major currencies in thin European trading. Gold bullion jumped above $400 an ounce in London for the first time in 10 months.

Foreign exchange dealers said falling U.S. interest rates brought renewed pressure on the dollar, while the West German mark benefited from expectations that West German interest rates will rise.

"The dollar looks on the way down," said Derek Saville, foreign exchange manager at Standard Chartered Bank in London.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.24 Japanese yen to a closing 144.43 yen. Later, in London, it fell further to 144.16 yen.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.5632 from $1.5595 late Monday.

Gold bullion opened in London at a bid price of $397.60 a troy ounce, up from $396.50 bid late Monday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $400.30.

In Zurich, the bid price was $399.55, up from $396.65 late Monday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $2.21 to close at a bid $398.61.

Silver bullion fell in London to a bid price of $5.70 a troy ounce, down from $5.74 bid late Monday.

Stock market drops 20 points

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined broadly Monday in selling that hit defense contractors especially hard.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had risen 27.05 points last week, dropped 20.62 to 2,632.04.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by more than 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 473 up, 1,015 down and 484 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 128.17 million shares, down from 151.02 million in the previous session.

Aerospace issues tumbled after Richard Cheney, secretary of Defense, called over the weekend for a $180 billion reduction in military spending over the next six years.

The possibility of long-term reductions in defense spending has been widely discussed on Wall Street with the recent opening up of many East-West political barriers in Europe

Otherwise, analysts said traders found little reason to chase after stocks.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Hunts, creditors avert court liquidation

DALLAS — After two weeks of tense negotiations, attorneys handling the personal bankruptcy lawsuits of William Herbert Hunt and Nelson Bunker Hunt and their creditors Monday averted the scheduled liquidation of one of the former billionaire's estates and paved the way for both to be reorganized.

Under pressure from Federal Bankruptcy Judge Harold C. Abramson, who has presided over the 14-month-long bankruptcy proceedings, the Hunts and their primary creditors said they had reached an acceptable compromise.

The details were still being worked out Monday.

Blue Cross, Eckerd Drugs settle litigation

DALLAS (SWN) — Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Texas, Inc. and Eckerd Drugs of Texas, Inc. have settled the litigation between the companies and reached agreement on the 1989 prescription drug program contract. Because of the terms of the settlement agreement, Blue Cross and Blue Shield and Eckerd cannot comment on any aspect of that litigation.

Avon vows to fight Mary Kay takeover

DALLAS (AP) — Continuing a public fight against unsolicited takeover attempts, Avon Products Inc. bought full-pages in both Dallas newspapers Monday for open letters to shareholders.

Last week, the New York-based direct-sales cosmetic company paid for similar ads in the Los Angeles Times, the Wall Street Journal and the New York Times.

Oryx reports find on Texas-Louisiana border

DALLAS (SWN) — Oryx Energy Co. has announced an onshore gas discovery on the Louisiana-Texas border, in Calcasieu Parish, LA, that flowed nearly 2 million cubic feet of gas per day (MMcf/D) and more than 200 barrels of condensate (BC/D).

The Hankamer No. A-1 well was drilled in the Cockfield/Yegua formation and tested 1.95 MMcf/D and 237 BC/D through a 10/64-inch choke at a flowing tubing pressure of 4,455 pounds per square inch from perforations between 10,498 and 10,508 feet. The well reached a total depth of 12,000 feet. The Hankamer No. A-1 is located near the Sabine River about six miles west of Starks, LA, and one mile east of Deweyville, Texas.

Oryx Energy holds a 50-percent working interest in the discovery and has additional acreage in the area. Prairie Producing Co. of Houston is operator and has the remaining 50-percent working interest. Prairie Producing is a wholly owned subsidiary of Placer Dome, Inc.

Dallas-based Oryx Energy conducts its domestic operations through Sun Energy Partners, L.P. Oryx Energy, which is managing general partner and owns 98 percent of the partnership, has assets of almost $4 billion and proved oil and gas reserves of nearly one billion equivalent barrels. Oryx Energy trades on the New York Stock Exchange with the symbol "ORX" and the partnership with the symbol "SLP."

In October there were 1,154 active residential listings, down 1.1 percent from the 1,167 listings in October 1988. A house stays on the market in Midland approximately 146 days, compared to 147 days on the market in October 1988.

Of the October 1989 listings, 156 residences have two or fewer bedrooms; 667 residences have three bedrooms; 293 residences have four bedrooms; and 38 residences have five or more bedrooms.

The listings carry a dollar volume of $102.8 million for an average list price of $89,107.

In Odessa, Realtors sold 84 residential units in October, up 13.5 percent from the September total, according to the Odessa Board of Realtors. In October 1988, Realtors sold 85 residences.

The residences sold carried a total volume of $3.76 million in October, up 3.8 percent from September's total of $3.62 million. In October 1988, Odessa reported sales volume of $3.56 million.

Average sale price of a house in Odessa in October was $50,739, compared to September's average of $53,372.

According to the National Association of Realtors (NAR), regional home price differences grew wider in the third quarter of 1989, forcing buyers to face "very different affordability conditions across the country."

The association's third-quarter survey of median home prices showed a range of $48,700 to $275,000. The U.S. median price for the third quarter was $95,000. In the South, the median price was $85,800 for the third quarter, rising 3.1 percent from the third quarter of 1988.

Houston's median price of $70,900 rose 8.2 percent from the third quarter of 1988, according to the NAR. Fort Worth/Arlington recorded a median price of $81,800, up 10.7 percent from one year ago.

In addition, the nation's sales of previously-owned houses showed an increase of 2.7 percent, according to NAR. The association's quarterly survey of sales revealed a seasonally-adjusted resale rate of 3.81 million units for the third quarter. The NAR attributed the rise to lower mortgage rates.

The South's resale pace of 1.43 million units rose 5.9 percent from the second quarter. Texas, the state in the region with the highest volume of sales, recorded an 8.1 percent increase to a rate of 226,500 units, according to the NAR.

In new construction in Midland, permits were issued for 19 new houses totaling in estimated construction value of $1.89 million, according to the city of Midland. New commercial construction totaled $1.03 million in October, with a permit for the new Midland County Jail taking up most of the new commercial construction.

This compares to 17 new residential building permits in September totaling in construction value of $2.04 million, and no new commercial construction.

INFLATION

Clothing costs were up 1 percent in October, reflecting a second month of rising costs with the introduction of new fall and winter clothing lines.

Before taking into account normal seasonal changes, the Consumer Price Index stood at 125.6 in October, meaning that a hypothetical selection of goods and services costing $100 in the 1982-84 base period would have cost $125.60 last month, up from $120.20 a year ago.

While October spurt in prices was slightly higher than many economists had been expecting, they said it confirmed their view that inflationary pressures are on the rise.

"Inflation is creeping upwards," said Frank McCormick, senior economist at Bank of America in San Francisco. "We see the underlying rate of inflation going to around 5 percent a year."

As the year began, the Federal Reserve was fighting inflationary pressures by pushing interest rates higher in an effort to dampen economic demand. But since late May, the central bank has been gradually lowering rates in response to fears that the credit-tightening threatened to push the economy into a recession.

McCormick predicted the central bank would cut interest rates one more time, probably in December. But he said by May of next year, the central bank will begin raising interest rates again and would continue tightening through the rest of the year.

But Lawrence Chimerine, senior adviser to the WEFA Group, an economic consulting firm in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., said he believed the Fed was making a mistake by moving so cautiously in cutting interest rates.

He predicted inflation would stay in a moderate range with annual increases under 4.5 percent, leaving the Fed with enough room to do more to lower interest rates. He said such moves were needed to keep the economy from stagnating.

"I don't see any risk of a major speed-up in inflation," Chimerine said. "We are not getting the wage-price spiral that people had expected."

The Labor Department reported earlier that wholesale prices rose 0.4 percent in October.

Navy may suspend IBM bids

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Navy Department is reviewing allegations of procurement irregularities involving the International Business Machines Corp. to determine whether the giant computer company should be temporarily suspended from Navy contracts, a spokesman said Monday in a telephone interview.

The disclosure came hours after an appearance before a congressional subcommittee by Navy Secretary H. Lawrence Garrett III, who played down charges from other computer companies that the Navy's procurement procedures favored IBM.

But he acknowledged that there were systemic problems with the Navy's handling of its contract bidding process in general and announced a number of steps to insure that those problems did not recur.

Garrett said that although an internal investigation found that Navy officials had not followed some regulations and rules in the IBM matter, he was not aware of violations of federal civil or criminal law by Navy officials.

"Where facts are brought forward that civil law or criminal law or the military code of justice has been violated, those issues will be addressed within the system," he added.

IBM has admitted that it sold the government used equipment that was billed as new and mislabeled equipment made in foreign countries as American.

These contracts involved sales to the General Services Administration, the government's purchasing agency, and did not involve the Navy.

IBM has maintained that the violations in its GSA contracts were inadvertent, and has said that it is cooperating with the government.

COSTS

cent in the last year, but have fallen 7.8 percent in the past six months.

The sharpest increase was seen in clothing, which climbed 3.1 percent and broke a two-month decrease. The rise due to a second month of higher price tags for men's and women's apparel. Clothing costs have fallen 1.3 percent in the last year, but posted a 1.7 percent increase in the past six months.

It cost 4.2 percent less to eat out in Midland in October, the second consecutive decline. Lower prices for main dishes made with fish helped lower the cost of eating out, assisted by a second month of lower prices for chicken main dishes and non-alcoholic beverages. The cost of eating out has dropped 1.9 percent in the last year, with a 3.4 percent drop coming in the past six months.

Grocery shopping cost 1.9 percent more in October, ending two months of decreases. Increases were measured across the board for shelf items, produce, meat and alcoholic beverages. Food costs have risen 5.2 percent in Midland over the past 12 months, with 1.9 percent coming in the last six months.

Reversing a September increase, Midland utility bills fell 3.2 percent in October, despite a 0.4 percent rise in electric bills. Water bills fell 9.4 percent after two months of stability and gas bills, after rising in September, fell 0.3 percent. Utilities in Midland have fallen 6.8 percent in the last year, with a drop of 3 percent coming in the last six months.

Health care costs rose a fourth consecutive month, with a 1.2 percent rise coming in October. Lower costs for dental care and non-prescription medicine were offset by a fourth month of higher costs for a doctor's care and a hospital stay. Health care costs have gone up 4.6 percent, with 3.4 percent of that coming in the past six months.

Housing costs ended two months of stability and slipped 0.5 percent in October, due to lower rental costs. Midland housing costs have fallen 3.6 percent in the last year, with a 0.7 percent drop coming in the past six months.

Bankers unhappy with accounting rules being considered

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Bankers and their regulators are distressed by proposed accounting rules being considered by a committee of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants.

Bankers say the rules, if adopted, could cause bank earnings to fluctuate more widely with changes in interest rates and thus disrupt the bond market.

The proposed changes would require that banks, along with savings associations, credit unions, insurance companies and finance companies, measure the value of their note and bond investments at the lower of cost or market value, unless they have the ability and intention to hold the securities to maturity.

At present those institutions report note and bond investments at cost, even if prices have fallen. Because price changes in the securities are reported only when the notes and bonds are sold, analysts say, many banks and other firms tend to sit on paper losses and sell only those issues that show a profit.

Securities held by banks in trading accounts are already valued at market prices, and their fluctuations are part of a bank's earnings.

"There needs to be more disclosure about investments which have declined in value, and the accounting standards need to be more uniform among companies," said Edmund Coulson, chief accountant at the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The SEC has encouraged accountants to develop new rules to make it more difficult for companies to keep bad investments out of sight. Coulson warned that the commission could impose its own rules, if new rules were not forthcoming.

If interest rates rise and bond prices fall, under the new accounting institute proposals banks would have to include their portfolio losses in their quarterly earnings reports. At present, declining prices on securities held as investments are not reflected in financial statements or quarterly earnings.

William O'Halloran, comptroller at Suntrust Banks Inc., in Atlanta, said the proposal "creates potential for violent fluctuations in earnings" as interest rates change.

He added that the proposal "could lead to some poor decision-making by banks" by encouraging them to hold only very short-term securities on which there is little price fluctuation.

"In the Treasury market, bank demand for securities much longer than six months would fall sharply," said Louis V.B. Crandall, an economist at R.H. Wrightson & Associates.

Banks, which normally hold 15 to 20 percent of all Treasury notes due in one to five years, would be much less willing to buy those securities if their price fluctuations could affect profit and loss statements, he noted.

Bank investments in mortgage securities, which have increased sharply — by more than $10 billion in the last six months — would also be affected.

The strong demand for mortgage securities, particularly those issued or guaranteed by government agencies, has benefited savings and loan associations, which have been forced to sell many other holdings to meet new financial standards.

"There is a real public policy issue to be considered, namely the effect on the ability of the Treasury to issue securities and finance the deficit, and the ability of American companies to raise capital by issuing bonds," said one Washington-based bank regulator who asked not to be identified.

John L. Kreischer, managing director of Kreischer, Miller & Company, an accounting firm in Horsham, Pa., said, "Practices in the financial industry are not necessarily aligned" with the new standards being developed by the Accounting Standards Executive Committee of the accounting institute.

Some of the estimated 40,000 Salvadorans forced from their homes by fighting between government and FMLN forces wait in a food line Monday in San Salvador, El Salvador. Although rebel forces have retreated from most parts of the capital, fighting continues in outlying areas of the city and the death toll is now more than 800 people.

Violence forces religious workers out

Priest worries about any who stay in El Salvador

By PHIL BRONSTEIN
Hearst News Service

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — The Rev. Jim Barnett had tears in his eyes. The U.S. priest was being forced to leave El Salvador after nearly five years of doing what he thought was God's work.

He is the latest victim of an intensified civil war that has heightened historical tensions between government and church into open confrontation.

"I wanted to stay, but there is just too much fear," Barnett said Sunday night after the funeral for six Jesuit priests slain last week.

"It's so crazy. I tried hard to avoid politics. But the way things are now, I predict every (foreign) humanitarian and church worker will be forced out of here. And I worry about the safety of anyone who stays."

Barnett, 50, a native of South Dakota, is part of a network of foreign missionaries who work in the country's poorest neighborhoods, setting up schools, clinics and community programs.

He and many of his fellow priests, nuns and lay workers are used to a certain hostility from El Salvador's armed forces and political conservatives, some of whose members view such activities as subversive and secretly supportive of the country's leftist guerrillas.

The progressive notion of liberation theology or "the church of the poor" — that Roman Catholic clergy should tend to the social as well as spiritual needs of society's most disadvantaged — has created such problems in many countries.

But after rebels of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front (FMLN) began a major military offensive Nov. 11, seizing areas — like Barnett's — where they have the most civilian sympathy, the Catholic Church and other denominations became a direct target for official frustration and rage.

"Large sectors of the population have attributed a great part of the blame for El Salvador's violence, culminating in rebel actions this week, to a tendency called the popular church," Attorney General Mauricio Colorado wrote in a letter Saturday to Pope John Paul II.

Colorado asked that unnamed bishops be removed from the country for their own "security and well-being."

Religious workers have been targeted repeatedly since the offensive began. The Roman Catholic archdiocesan headquarters in San Salvador was raked with machine-gun fire last week. Some 30 church workers, foreign and local, have been arrested, and more than a dozen clergy-run centers for refugees have been raided by the military or security forces.

Early Monday morning, troops from the National Guard searched San Salvador's Episcopalian Church headquarters, where 400 refugees were being housed. At least seven foreign religious workers were arrested, according to an eyewitness inside the compound.

But nothing stunned the religious community more than the slayings Thursday of six leaders of the Jesuits' Central American University.

A witness reportedly saw 30 men in uniforms entering the priests' residence before the killings.

Archbishop Arturo Rivera y Damas said Sunday: "Our vehement presumption" is that the killings were committed "by soldiers of the armed forces or people in intimate connivance with them."

Sunday's funeral at the university chapel was filled with an atmosphere of defiance. Leftist leader Reuben Zamora, who had been in hiding since the current guerrilla offensive began, made a surprise appearance to act as a pallbearer for the Rev. Ignacio Ellacuria, university rector.

President Alfredo Cristiani attended the services and has promised a full investigation.

Barnett, the U.S. missionary, had special reason to be concerned. Last Tuesday, he said, he was pinned down by heavy crossfire outside his house when "someone called and left a message, in perfect, unaccented English," telling him and another American priest who lives with him that if they didn't leave the country, they would be killed.

"There is no government policy to harass (missionaries) per se," U.S. Ambassador William Walker said last week.

"But the government is facing a tough situation with all the battles being fought out there" against the FMLN. "And they have reason to believe there are foreigners involved" with the rebels.

Current offensive far from over, leftist urban guerrilla says

By PHIL BRONSTEIN
Hearst News Service

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Leftist guerrillas have finally begun to pull out of neighborhood strongholds where they have battled government troops since beginning a major offensive over a week ago.

But rebel sources insist that their retreat is only a withdrawal to catch their breath in preparation for a larger and final assault on the capital that could take place within the next week.

"We are just waiting for orders from our high command to tell us whether we should go to the mountains and recuperate briefly or stay on the periphery of the city to meet up with reinforcements," said one urban guerrilla leader, who has been recovering at a secret San Salvador location from wounds he received in battle last Tuesday.

The leader was interviewed at a neutral site.

"It's possible that there will be an effort to reopen" peace dialogue with the government, which was suspended earlier this month, he said.

"But that will just be a political component of the larger plan to continue the war. Only this next time, we will hit harder, stay longer and paralyze the city by cutting off electricity, phones and water."

Salvadoran government and Western military observers have predicted that when the current fighting ends, the rebels of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front (FMLN) will have lost enough combatants and used up enough ammunition that it will take several years to build up their strength for another major attack.

But the rebel leader contends the FMLN, which held the country's armed forces at bay until the civilian neighborhoods they had seized were attacked heavily from the air, has "more than enough" men and arms left for a renewed siege.

Rocket and machine gun runs by the Salvadoran Air Force continued in two sections of the capital Sunday with sporadic street fighting. However, many areas held by the FMLN since Nov. 11 have been abandoned by the rebels.

Civilians who fled their homes during the heavy fighting are returning — in some cases to find their houses reduced to rubble — and those trapped in zones where the battle was at its peak have begun to emerge, after eight days without food or water supplies, taking reactivated buses to markets and stores.

President Alfredo Cristiani, in a television address Sunday night, said the situation was under control and that the FMLN had been reduced to two zones, Soyapango and Cuidad Delgado.

"Very soon," he said, appearing more relaxed than he has throughout the crisis, "the city will be returning to normal."

But the FMLN leader, a commander of some 120 guerrillas who had seized a portion of a barrio called Santa Carlotta, insisted that the expanding calm was "part of a very well-calculated plan" and that the combat of the last week "will be nothing compared to what is coming."

Many analysts believed the offensive, which surprised the government with its intensity and tenacity, was intended to improve the rebels' hand at the bargaining table in any future peace talks, refuting armed forces' claims that the FMLN was no longer a potent military force.

"The FMLN has lost a lot of people," said a Western diplomatic source, "but obviously they've been able to create a command and control center. And even assuming the exaggerated casualty figures are correct and they've lost 20 percent of their fighters, that still leaves a lot."

After bringing the 10-year civil war forcefully into the capital, "The FMLN has also proved they are a military force to be reckoned with," the diplomat said. "The only thing they got wrong was thinking there'd be some major popular uprising."

Honduran policeman killed in attack

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — One policeman was killed and two others were seriously wounded in San Pedro Sula when they were attacked by four men with grenades and pistols, the military said Monday.

The unidentified assailants, hiding behind a parked bus, fired Sunday on six policemen outside an office of the Public Security Force, said Col. Lazaro Avila Soleno, chief of the force. San Pedro Sula is 125 miles northwest of Tegucigalpa.

The commander said the attackers fled in a car after the attack.

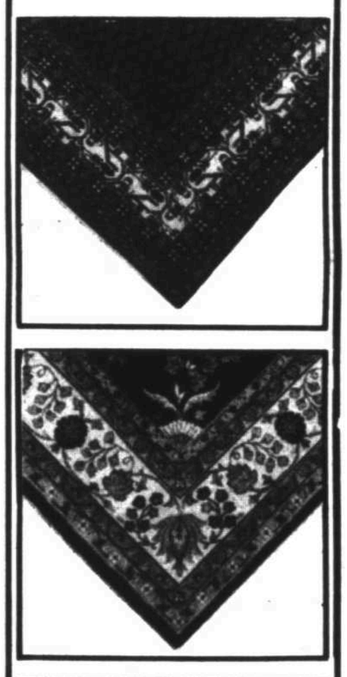

The grenade, which tore a hole in a fence when it exploded just outside the wooden office, killed policeman Miguel Angel Alvarado Alfaro, 34, said Avila Soleno.

No one claimed responsibility for the attack. Armed forces chief Gen. Humberto Regalado Hernandez has accused leftists of three bombings last week.

East German opposition not coherent movement

By STEWART M. POWELL
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

BERLIN — The revolution sweeping East Germany is rooted in a spontaneous uprising of popular dissatisfaction rather than a disciplined opposition movement combating one of Eastern Europe's most iron-willed regimes.

The breadth of the upheaval coupled with the absence of structured opposition make events harder to control and impossible to predict in the critical weeks that lie ahead, according to East Germans, Berlin-based diplomats and specialists tracking developments here.

"The German tribe has risen in anger," says a Western diplomat monitoring developments here in East Germany. "I don't know where it will lead."

The regime's relaxation of travel restrictions, openings in the Berlin Wall and freedom to emigrate are not easing demands for change. More than 100,000 protesters staged a candle-lit demonstration in Leipzig Monday night on the heels of protests by a total of 100,000 East Germans in a variety of other cities on Sunday.

Despite concessions by the regime of Communist Party chief Egon Krenz, East Germany's once tranquil political landscape remains ablaze.

The Communist Party itself, known as the Socialist Unity Party or SED for its German acronym, is beset by jockeying among "reformers" trying to survive an upcoming emergency meeting of the party's 163-seat central committee in mid-December. The session is expected to oust most of the central committee and revamp the month-old Politburo, as well as abolish the communist party's constitutionally-guaranteed "leading role" in government.

Four non-communist parties long affiliated with the ruling regime are simultaneously trying to distinguish themselves from the failures of the 2.3 million member SED. The four parties, which have only 470,000 members, last week gained 11 of the 27 ministerial posts in a new coalition government.

Manfred Gerlach, leader of the Liberal Democrats, one of the four non-communist parties, is leading efforts to remove constitutional provisions giving the SED its dominant role.

The nonstop innovations and concessions by the government, including the sudden opening of the Berlin Wall, confront the East German opposition with unprecedented challenges.

The popular protest movement, following its emergence from the protection of the country's predominant Evangelical Protestant Church, has gathered force even though it lacks leaders, headquarters, telephones, newspapers or a shared vision of life after communism.

"There is no Solidarity here in East Germany and no Lech Walesa like in Poland," explains a western diplomat.

"The opposition may not be fond of the government, but if you think it has a general staff meeting in the basement of a church in Leipzig to plot the next move, you're wrong."

In many ways East Germany's opposition recalls the eclectic politics of American college campuses in the 1960s, where idealism outranked pragmatism and eccentric personalities commanded personal followings.

The largest group, New Forum with an estimated 500,000 members, is deeply divided over whether to serve as a forum for discussions or to become a full-fledged political party ready to compromise with a loathsome regime.

A second faction within the opposition, Democratic Awakening, is eager to become a political party but is having trouble distinguishing itself from Democracy Now, which shares its goals but does not want to become a party.

In yet another permutation, the two-month old Social Democratic Party is forging ties with a left-wing counterpart in West Germany in hopes of fostering a mixed economy of private and state-owned enterprises that could lead to the East-West reunification opposed by Democratic Awakening and New Forum.

Finally, none of the opposition groups has forged links with the powerful working class, where frustration runs high due to added hours to meet quotas missed because workmates have fled to the West.

The opposition, made up for the most part of intellectuals, artists and professional people, has not bridged the gap between the intelligensia and the workers that enabled Solidarity to prevail in Poland.

"These are not power-minded political people for the most part," says David Hamilton, deputy director of the Aspen Institute, an international think tank specializing in East-West affairs that has a branch in West Berlin.

"And they're not economists — a fact that hurts the opposition in the eyes of many East Germans who know solutions to the problems are economic."

A survey of 2,180 East Germans conducted for West Germany's Stern magazine found New Forum had the support of only 22 percent of those questioned, compared with 14 percent who supported the Communist Party.

Perhaps the most troubling issue for the future of the opposition, however, is the demise of the Berlin Wall. The opening of the wall has ignited jubilation in East Germany but stirred fears within the opposition that East Germans now may lose their determination to forge a "third way" between the conspicuous consumption of West Germany and the inefficiencies of East Germany.

Grumbles Baerbel Bohley, 44, a chain-smoking, abstract artist and oft-imprisoned human rights activist who helped found New Forum: "The people we need are gone — they went West."

Echoes Walther Bindemann, a leader in Democratic Awakening who directs the Evangelical Academy in East Berlin: "We must be glad that people have a smell of freedom but we feel that the pressure is lost for real change."

Many in the opposition want to create "an idealistic, socialist paradise of their own" without regard to the wants of the working class, observes Hamilton.

"They're pictured as the democratic-minded opposition but they don't talk much about democracy."

Will TV bring order to House of Commons?

LONDON (AP) — Television cameras focused on the House of Commons today to give Britons their first live screen view of the venerable, if sometimes raucous mother of parliaments.

The first image they saw in the live broadcast was the gowned, bewigged speaker, Bernard Weatherill, bellowing "Order! Order!" to bring chattering, excited lawmakers into line for the TV debut of the Mother of Parliaments.

The unelected House of Lords has permitted television broadcasts of its proceedings since 1985, and Queen Elizabeth II's ceremonial opening of Parliament was seen nationwide earlier this morning.

But the House of Commons, the often rowdy elected chamber down the hallway, resisted the cameras until now, sticking only with live radio broadcasts that began in 1978.

Former Conservative Cabinet minister Ian Gow delivered the traditional message of thanks to the queen for outlining the government's legislative program earlier today in the House of Lords.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, leader of the governing Conservative Party, and Neil Kinnock, leader of the opposition Laborites, then prepared to joust with each other about the contents of the queen's speech.

Any other lawmaker could join in, providing he or she can catch the Speaker's eye by standing up and waving an order paper — a printed copy of the day's agenda — and be called.

The chamber can be a noisy place with much booing and braying and it's Weatherill who can be heard repeatedly shouting "Order, order" in a bid to restore calm at times of tension.

But TV viewers are not going to see it all.

To prevent anything unseemly being shown, such as campaign buttons, outrageous dress or bored legislators asleep on their green leather benches, the televisors have been ordered to show only the head and shoulders of whoever is speaking.

"I think it's terrible that head shots will only be used. I could be wearing a tutu, and nobody would notice," said Laborite Austin Mitchell.

Debates in the 650-member chamber go on for hours and hours, sometimes all night. Eight remote control cameras have been installed in the ornate chamber. Britain's four national channels and the Sky satellite network will be able to broadcast as much as they like of the daily proceedings, live or recorded.

C-SPAN, the American cable-satellite public affairs network, planned to offer portions of the debates to its subscribers.

It has taken 30 years of debate to get cameras into the Commons.

A 318-264 vote in February 1988 agreed to them for an experimental six months, although the House of Lords — where the peers, most of them hereditary, sit on scarlet benches — have been on live TV since 1985.

The U.S. House of Representatives has allowed television since 1979.

The 21-month delay in getting the cameras into the Commons included the dispatch of a delegation to Canada to see how Parliament is televised there.

"Planning the invasion of Normandy in World War II took only 12 months," grumbled lawmaker Frank Dobson.

It has taken 30 years of debate to get cameras into the Commons.

A 318-264 vote in February 1988 allowed them for a six-month experiment. Later, a delegation went to Canada to see how Parliament is televised there.

The partisan shouts and jeers of the Commons have made it a byword for unruly behavior. This week's comments in the media centered on whether the cameras will make the chamber better behaved — or possibly worse.

State-run paper sharply criticizes leader Krenz

EAST BERLIN (AP) — A state-run newspaper today sharply criticized Communist Party chief Egon Krenz, saying he has not won popular trust.

In West Germany, the mass-circulation Bild newspaper said Krenz could be ousted as the nation's top leader within four weeks. Krenz himself acknowledged in a television interview Sunday he could lose his power during a party congress scheduled for Dec. 15-17.

Monday, Chancellor Helmut Kohl's visiting chief of staff, Rudolf Seiters, predicted East Germany will hold free elections as soon as next fall. He also said he expects the Communists' constitutional guarantee of government control to be eliminated next year.

Also today, the European Community said an envoy would visit East Berlin Dec. 4 and 5 to discuss East Germany's request for a broad trade and economic cooperation accord.

There has been intense speculation about Krenz's future over the past week. Major changes are expected soon in East Germany's leadership, which includes both reformers as well as holdovers from the era of hard-liner Erich Honecker.

The state-run National-Zeitung daily newspaper reminded its readers that Krenz belonged to the "leadership body that is now in the crossfire of criticism."

In its commentary today, the newspaper also emphasized Krenz's praise for the Chinese leadership after it crushed the student pro-democracy movement in June, and brought up Krenz's alleged role in massive election fraud in May.

"Egon Krenz cannot make up lost ground," the commentary said.

East Germany's state-run press, which used to reflect the party leadership's line without fail, has been reporting a greater variety of views in recent weeks.

In Hamburg, the conservative Bild newspaper said in a front-page headline: "Experts Agree: Krenz Has Only Four Weeks."

Bild did not name the experts. The newspaper is published by the giant Springer group, which long has been critical of East Germany's leadership.

The official ADN news agency said more than 400,000 took to the streets of Leipzig, Dresden, Halle, and Karl-Marx-Stadt in what has become a Monday night ritual of challenge to Communist rule.

Street protests that began last month and a mass emigration of young skilled workers have prompted a shakeup in country's leadership, exacting from it promises of fundamental reform and the opening of the country's borders to free travel on Nov. 9.

In Leipzig, demonstrators denounced government errors that have ruined the economy.

Most of East Germany's organized opposition groups are believed to oppose German reunification, but there were calls for German unity among some at the Leipzig rally.

Ethiopian factions pledge to reach peace quickly

N.Y. Times News Service

NAIROBI, KENYA — Warring parties from Ethiopia pledged Monday to move quickly through preliminary peace talks being mediated here by former President Jimmy Carter and on to substantive negotiations.

"All of us know that conflict is an impediment to the delivery of food," said Carter, who will be spending Thanksgiving at the talks. "The shortages might equal the level of 1984, when the world's eyes focused on starving women and children."

But in statements at the opening of a second round of talks to end 28 years of war, the Ethiopian government and the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) warned that intense fighting in northern Ethiopia could affect the negotiations. They also accused each other of trying to impede the peace process.

While a de-facto cease-fire is in place between the government and the EPLF, another rebel group, the Tigre People's Liberation Front (TPLF), has made dramatic military advances since August. The TPLF, which has been trying to overthrow President Mengistu Haile Mariam's Marxist government for 15 years, now controls nearly all of northern Tigre province. Sunday, small TPLF guerrilla units were sighted 30 to 40 miles from the capital, Addis Ababa.

Ashegre Yigletu, secretary of the Workers Party of Ethiopia and chairman of the Ethiopian government delegation, said the rebels have posed "a grave and orchestrated challenge" to the government since peace talks recessed.

Namibian party offers democracy as a guideline

WINDHOEK, Namibia (AP) — Namibia's newly elected assembly broke into applause today at its opening session when the dominant party proposed democratic principles as guidelines for the territory's government.

The assembly is working on a constitution that will cement the territory's independence after 74 years of South African rule.

The South-West Africa People's Organization, or SWAPO, which waged a 23-year war against South African rule, won 41 of the 72 seats in elections earlier this month. However, the constitution must be approved by at least 48, or two-thirds, of the members.

The 72 assembly members gathered at the Tintenpalast, Namibia's seat of government since it was built by German colonial rulers in 1910.

Theo-Ben Gurirab, foreign affairs secretary for SWAPO, proposed that: the constitution be the supreme law of the land;, the government consist of an elected executive responsible to the legislative branch and an independent judicial branch; a declaration of fundamental rights be written including freedom of movement, speech and a free press.

SWAPO has been known as Marxist throughout most of its history, and its stand has been vague and contradictory regarding the democratic principles outlined in a 1982 U.N. document calling for Namibia's independence.

Gurirab's proposal was unanimously applauded but could not be adopted because the constitutional assembly does not yet have rules of order.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Are Palestinians losing initiative?

JERUSALEM (AP) — A pro-PLO activist says Palestinians have "lost the initiative" in the nearly two-year-old uprising and is proposing a new strategy based on creating a provisional government.

Sari Nusseibah said in an interview with The Associated Press Monday that if "positive energy" were focused on building the institutions of Palestinian statehood, there would be less violence, both among Palestinians and with Israelis.

"I believe over the last few months we have lost the initiative and there has been a vacuum of strategy," he said. "We haven't had any renewed strategic plan to put into the intefadeh (uprising).

"In my opinion, these two things have helped in creating some of the disorders ... the friction and fighting and some tendencies towards violence."

By focusing on building infrastructure for the state, he said, "you get rid of the diversions of energy that have taken place over the past few months."

The remarks, unusually candid for a senior Palestinian activists, in part appeared to grow out of rising frustration over the killing or intimidation of Palestinians by other Palestinians.

Greeks agree to government

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Political leaders agreed today on a short-term government of the country's widely divided major parties, ending a stalemate produced by inconclusive elections this month.

"The three parties agreed to support a government whose life-term will last until mid-April," conservative leader Constantine Mitsotakis told a news conference.

The decision to hold general elections in April follows four rounds of talks between President Christos Sartzetakis and conservative, socialist and Communist leaders.

Mitsotakis said the interim administration will be headed by a respected former Bank of Greece governor, Xenophon Zolotas, who is not a member of Parliament.

Walesa in Venezuela

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa arrived Monday after a U.S. tour and said Eastern Europe and Latin America must work together in improving their debt-ridden economies.

Walesa was in Venezuela for the 22nd congress of the World Confederation of Labor.

Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez told the conference that the changes in Eastern Europe concern Third World leaders.

"It worries us that today, when Europe's cooperation in our development seems distant, and we feel ourselves falling behind in our standards of living, that perhaps the significance of the moment in Eastern Europe could make that cooperation even more distant," Perez said.

But Perez praised Walesa's role in bringing about democratic reforms in Poland, saying Venezuela "celebrated the democratic changes sweeping Eastern Europe."

WE NEED YOUR HELP: VA welcomes comments concerning the condition of our properties. Any improprieties should be reported to the VA Regional Office at 817-757-6869.

The offer which best serves the interest of VA will be processed for acceptance. The name of the successful offeror and sales broker will appear in subsequent publications. VA will accept cash offers up to 10 percent below the advertised term sales price. VA also will pay reasonable loan discount points and buyers' closing costs on cash offers when requested on the Cash Sale Addendum to Offer to Purchase. However, the combined loan discount points, buyers' closing costs to be paid by VA and the discount for cash may not exceed 10 percent of the term list price. Offers must be submitted at term listed price when buyers request a new GI loan with $1.00 move-in. Interest rate of available financing is 9.5 percent (APR 9.6 percent).

Purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing (Term Sales) must have VA Form 26-6705B, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Verification of Employment/Income, as outlined in Sales of VA-Acquired Properties Manual, attached to their VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale. Effective June 8, 1988, all credit underwriting for purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing is being referred to Miller and Davis PC. All brokers are reminded to refer to PM letter #17-88 dated May 25, 1988, outlining these new procedures. Purchase offers not accompanied by the required employment/income verification WILL RESULT IN REJECTION OF THE PURCHASE OFFER.

Prior approval will be required by VA for the transfer of a property secured by a vendee loan if the loan is not paid in full as part of the transfer. Public Law 100-689 also permits VA to charge a one-half of 1 percent funding fee for the transfer as well as a fee for processing the approval of the transfer.

VA has properties for sale statewide. If you desire to purchase properties in other areas, please contact any sales broker located in the area in which you are interested.

FORFEITURE OF EARNEST MONEY DEPOSIT

Prior to signing the offer, broker must deposit in broker's trust account the $500 earnest money deposit. The Earnest Money Agreement (Exhibit "H") must be signed by the purchaser(s) and submitted along with the VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on all offers. The $500 earnest money deposit will be remitted to Miller and Davis PC upon acceptance of the offer. Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the earnest money deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the purchaser will be required to forfeit the earnest money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property prior to submission of an offer to purchase. VA pays 6% sales commission. Offers are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on which all offers must be submitted. VA Form 26-6705 must be submitted in duplicate to:
