THOMAS R. MILLS

Death came as a release from suffering to T. R. Mills, September 2, 1927, at Epworth Hospital at Liberal, Kansas, where he had been a patient for three weeks.

Mr. Mills was born in England, July 26, 1855, coming to America with his parents when he was two years old. He spent the early years of his life in Illinois, where he married Ida E. Bigsby about 1880, living near Harvard, Illinois, until 1907, when they moved to Beaver County, Oklahoma, homesteading a farm near Pronto, where they lived for nearly twenty years. Mrs. Mills died April 28, 1925, leaving him alone as there were no children to bless the home.

His oldest brother, Wm. Mills, of Marshfield, Wis., an invalid for a number of years, answered his Master's call "Come Home" on Tuesday before Thomas went on Friday. Mrs. Ada Mills and daughter, Della Mills, are left to mourn the death of husband and father, brother-in-law and uncle. An aged sister, Mrs. Anna Cone, lives at 3125 Lincoln Avenue, Toledo, Ohio; and a brother, George Mills, who is a resident of Illinois, survive.

Thomas R. Mills had been in failing health for some time. The last few months heart disease and dropsy caused him much suffering. He was brought to the hospital August 12, where doctors, nurses and friends did all they could to make his last days comfortable and happy. The body was taken to Blue Mound church, Beaver County, Oklahoma, September 4, where services were conducted by the Rev. Claude Bryan of Perryton, Texas. Old neighbors acted as pall bearers, others filled places in the choir, while another group prepared the last resting place in Mother Earth, beside his wife. Flowers spoke in their language a message of God's love, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

A well filled church attested the spirit of the pioneer settler to stand by thru joy and sorrow, as they followed the remains to the burial in the cemetery near the church.

PERRYTON DAY AT TRI-STATE

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, SET ASIDE AS PERRYTON DAY AT THE TRI-STATE FAIR

Monday, September 12, has been designated Perryton Day by the Amarillo Tri-State Exposition which opens September 11 and continues through September 17, a special day for Perryton and this section of the Panhandle to visit the fair en masse.

Many new features in the way of exhibits and entertainment are to be seen this year at the fair. The United States government through the navy department is sending seventeen exact models of different types of American warships. Through the agricultural department it is sending a dairy exhibit, the like of which has never been seen in this section. The postoffice department is sending a sample of all the stamps now in use, the treasury department is sending samples of the coinage work at the mint, and the interior department has delved into the bowels of the earth to get samples of the many minerals that it is exhibiting at the Tri-State fair, together with illustrated charts descriptive of the earth's strata formation.

These unusual features added to the already long list of exhibits from West Texas, combined with the races, fire works, musical review and other forms of amusement make the fair this year especially attractive.

Without doubt many Peryton people will visit the fair on Perryton Day next Monday.

TEACHERS HELD INSTITUTE HERE

TWO DAY INSTITUTE ON MONDAY AND TUESDAY WAS ATTENDED BY ALL TEACHERS

The teachers of Ochiltree County, some forty odd in number, met in Perryton last Monday and Tuesday for their first annual county institute. Many interesting and instructive lectures and addresses were delivered by the teachers of Perryton and the county. A number of problems of interest were discussed by Superintendent Irvin and others, all of which were very helpful.

The ministers of the town added much to the program by outlining in their devotionals the responsibilities of the teacher to the school and community and the opportunities for the teacher to do good. Rev. Pennington stressed the importance of getting the pupils to have high ideals and of the teacher being an ideal for the student. Judge Grigsby spoke along the same lines, also extending a cordial welcome to the new and old teachers of Perryton and Ochiltree County. The Judge pledged his co-operation, service and assistance to the teachers.

One of the high spots of the institute was the visit of D. M. Wiggins, Professor of Secondary Education in Simmons University at Abilene. He gave two very instructive lectures. "Extra Curricular Activities" stressed the activities that are closely allied to the regular school work such as clubs, literary societies, etc. The other, "Appreciative Education or Teaching" brought out the fact that a teacher must appreciate a thing himself and live it into the lives of the children if they are to be taught appreciation.

The Parent-Teachers Association honored the institute with a delightful program on Monday afternoon followed by delicious refreshments.

To the Sheriff or Any Constable of Ochiltree County—Greeting:—
You are herby commanded to summon George R. Richardson by making publication of this citation once in each week for four consecutive weeks previous to the return day hereof, in some newspaper published in your county, if there be a newspaper published therein, but if not, then in the nearest county where a newspaper is published, to appear at the next regular term of the District Court of Ochiltree County, of the Thirty-first District Court, to be holden at the courthouse thereof in Perryton, on the fifth Monday in October 1927, the same being the 31st day of October 1927, then and there to answer a petition filed in said court on the 2nd day of September A. D. 1927, in a suit, numbered on the docket of said court Number 661, wherein Bertha Pearl Richardson is plaintiff and George R. Richardson is defendant, said petition alleging that the plaintiff has been an actual bona fide inhabitant of the State of Texas for more than twelve months prior to exhibiting the petition herein and has resided in Ochiltree County, Texas, for more than six months next preceeding the filing of this suit; that on or about the 31st day of August A. D. 1922, at Dodge City, Kansas, plaintiff was legally married to defendant, that they continued to live together as husband and wife until on or about the 31st day of August A. D. 1926 when, by reason of the cruel and harsh treatment and improper conduct of defendant toward plaintiff, she was forced and compelled to permanently abondon him, since which time they have not lived together as husband and wife. Plaintiff prays for decree of court dissolving said marriage relations, for costs of suit and for such other and further relief, special and general, in law and in equity, that she may be justly entitled to.
Herein Fail Not, but have you before said court on the said first day of the next term thereof, this writ, with your return thereon, showing how you have executed the same.
Witness Dave Shanks, Clerk of the District Court of Ochiltree County, Texas.

the scene—around the wn altar in the vast court he Temple doors, the sacri- surrounded by this magnifi- er arrayed in white linen! e himself took his place on platform, and there, crowd- the spacious court beyond, e thousands upon thousands Israelites. Where could we dy for a religious event of ound interest?

It was fitting that the ceremonies should begin with the burnt offerings, typical of Him Who on Calvary's Cross should later offer Himself in perfect devotion to the Father's will. Then there was the bringing in of the ark of the covenant, which was the formal recognition of God in His new and appropriate dwelling place.

As the ark, borne by Levites advanced through the open portals of the Temple, it may be that the 24th Psalm was sung by the choir. We may well imagine, also, the joining of all those voices and instruments in the chanting of such Psalms as the 47th, 97th, 98th and 107th.

Into the holy place (oracle—v.6) the priests bore the ark, depositing it beneath the wings of the cherubim, the place of rest. "They drew out the staves" (v. 8), a sign that it was no more to go out. These were the long handles by which the ark had been borne to and fro in the many journeys of the Israelites.

All that was in the ark were the tables of stone (v. 9). Here we see for the last time these venerable fragments of the rock of Sinai. They disappeared, as did the ark, when Nebuhadnezzar captured Jerusalem. The covenant which these stones recorded, was, according to Jeremiah (31:32-33), only to be superseded by the law written on the heart. The great moral principles of these commandments could not be lost, and by the Spirit of God they are to this day embedded in the hearts of all true believers under Grace.

Complete and beautiful stood the Temple. Priests and King had performed their parts. In its place within the veil, the ark rested, with the cherubim's outspreading wings above. Priests and people, in unison with many instruments, had lifted up their voices in praise and thanksgiving to God. It only remained for God to give some token that He accepted His house.

"And it came to pass when the priests were come out of the holy place that the cloud filled the house of the Lord. . . . for the golry of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord" (v. 11).

What a thrill must have gone through every heart as the shekinah cloud was seen descending and then entering the Temple! As it rested over the ark, the priests saw it brighten into such a concentrated glow that they were forced to retire.

This, since the days of the Tabernacle, had been the symobl of God's manifest, personal presence. In the days of wilderness journeyings, the pillar of cloud and fire had given the Israelites assurance by day and night that God Himself was with them. This visible token again assured the people that God had accepted and consecrated the Temple.

What means all this to us? John tells us (John 12:41) that Isaiah in his references to this same glory of the Lord (ch. 6) had in mind our Lord Jesus Christ. Thus he distinctly affirms that Christ is the Jehovah of the Israelites, the manifest Glory of God.

What light does this throw upon the transcendant spectacles of the transfiguration on the mount, and the ascension, where our Lord was manifested in the midst of inscrutable light? The New Testament is filled with the glory of God in Jesus Christ, and closes with the vision of the Son of man, the Lamb that was slain, as the center and source of all divine glory, dominion and blessedness.

Was God enthroned upon the mercy seat, dwelling among His people? He came later and dwelt among His people in the person of His glorious Son. "We beheld His glory," says John, "the glory as of the only begotten of the Father." The church that gives Him His Scriptural place, never lacks for tokens of te divine presence. If a church is cold, formal and dead, it is because it has pushed Christ outside. The glory of the house has departed.

All the outward glory of the old dispensation is nothing in comparison with the glory of this dispensation of Grace. "For if that which was done away with was glorious," wrote Paul, "much more that which remaineth is glorious" (2 Cor. 3:11). We need not seek now the Temple of Jerusalem to find His glory for in Christ, all who from the heart believe, may have the Spirit dwelling within, wherever they may be, and by the Spirit may be changed into His image "from glory to glory" (2 Cor. 3:18).

The chapter proceeds with the account of Solomon's fitting words of dedication and his prayer of unexampled sublimity, which should be carefully read. This prayer begins with adoration and is saturated with those other essential elements of Spirit-taught prayer:—meditation, thanksgiving, petition, intercession, confession and pleading of the promises. Study this prayer and mark these different elements.

The character of the dedication brings before us the main purpose, not only of the Temple, but of the church of today, which has succeeded to its place. It is its internal use that counts, not its external costliness. The church is to be essentially a house of prayer, for the worship and praise of God, who has made Himself known to us through Jesus Christ.

As the Temple was then the resting place of the ark, so the church today must be the sacred depository of God's Word, or utterly fail of its mission. They who would grow in grace and in the knowledge of Him, must love the habitation of God's house. Those are indeed to be pitied who cannot find a church where the pure gospel is preached and where God's presence is manifest.

PITH AND POINT

Many a church that has all the paraphernalia, has never brought up the ark (v. 4).

All cost and pains are lost on stately structures unless God owns them by His presence.

It is a great thing when a nation's ruler can lead in prayer (v. 22).

The divine presence beautifies the church more than the gold of its decorations or the softness of its stained windows.

Men may dedicate, but God alone can consecrate.

Unless the divine Word finds its home in the holiest place of the church, the church is little more than a second-rate club house.

The ruler who ignores religious principle, has ignored the mightiest force for gobd in a nation.

SUGGESTIVE QUESTIONS

Who is the great Antitype of the Temple? (Jn. 1:14; 2:19-21; Matt. 12:6).

What other New Testament antitype do we have for the temple? (Eph. 2:20-22.)

Where was the first appearance of the glory cloud? (V. 10; cp. Ex. 13:20-22.)

What had happened to the tabernacle when it was finished according to God's Word? (Ex. 40:34-35.)

What abiding and surpassing privilege does every New Testament believer have? (2 Cor. 3:18; 4:6; Jn. 1:14.)

What visible and transcending manifestation of glory will be the next in God's order? (Rev. 2:11, 23, 24.)

Was Solomon's prayer on the ground of the sacrificial blood? (V. 22; cp. Heb. 9:22; 10:19-20.)

What is the longest recorded prayer in the Bible?

GOLDEN TEXT ILLUSTRATION

"I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord" (Psa. 122:1).

Some time ago "The Sunday School Times" told how one day a serious fire broke out in Moody Church in Chicago. A student in the Bible Institute building nearby attempted to awaken her roommate. "Get up," she said, "the Moody Church is on fire!" The drowsy student only replied: "That's nothing: it's always on fire." That is a great testimony for a church, and it is to the services of such a church that God's child always looks forward. Can we say of a church from which God's presence has apparently departed—"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord?"

SCIENCE AND RELIGION GASOLINE AND RUBBER CANCER NOT CONTAGIOUS VANISHING BOB

The Rev. Dr. Shailer Mathews, Dean of the Divinity School in Chicago University, says philosophy is of no use in religion, because we cannot analize our religion, "the greatest moments are felt, you cannot define them in words. There is not a philosophical term in the language or the intellectual processes by which we seek to grasp the meaing of religion."

Philosophy has nothing to do with religion, and religion has nothing to do with philosophy. Philosophy deals with problems that can be solved, or may be solved, by proof, argument, thought. Religion deals with questions entirely beyond our reach, that can be answered only by faith.

Two kinds of good news for automobile owners:

First, you are told that if and when the natural supply of gasoline gives out, synthetic gasoline will be made to take its place.

Second, scientists have discovered a system of bud grafting on rubber trees which should increase the yield of a tree 400 per cent.

It is predicted that the cost of rubber delivered in this country will drop from twenty--five cents to less than ten cents a pound.

Scientists say they can make synthetic rubber as well as gasoline, but that probably will be postponed like artificial gasoline making, until natural supplies diminish.

A French scientist proves by careful observation that cancer is NOT contagious. To do away with the false, persistent suspicion is a great blessing. Married couples, living together, one the victim of cancer, do not contract the disease from each other, and cannot contract it. That is proved by reliable statistics.

Paris dressers, realizing that long hair is "coming in" are buying stocks of "transformations" long hair arrangements for women to wear while waiting for bobbed hair to grow.

Short hair is common sense, of course, and, in time, long hair will be as obsolete as a veil over the face.

Long after men had cut their hair, primitive women let their hair grow long, because, matted with grease, it was a good thing in cold weather.

Long hair seems "feminine" to men. Women do what men want, and the long hair comes back. It will go away again.

At San Toy, a mining town in Ohio, Ray Wiggins, annoyed, bit off the ear of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Amanda Taylor.

A mob around the courtroom wanted the man lashed, and the Mayor of San Toy told Wiggins he would quash the charge of "maining and disfiguring" if he would take the lashing.

Wiggins said "yes." His back was stripped, he was lashed twenty-one times and everybody apparently was happy, including the mother-in-law. What is the difference between a man that bites off his mother-in-law's ear and a mob that insists on a public lashing?

BUICK for 1928

Body by Fisher

WHEN BETTER AUTOMOBILES ARE BUILT, BUICK WILL BUILD THEM

When Buick improves upon Buick —the standard for the year is set

Buick for 1928 introduces a higher standard of beauty and luxury than the world has ever known. Buick interiors are as modish as exquisite drawing-rooms—as harmoniously colored—and as comfortable. Buick's new Fisher bodies are low-swung without any loss of head-room or road-clearance.

And so, down to the smallest detail of construction, wherever refinements could be made, Buick made them. Again Buick has improved upon Buick. Again the standard for the year is set.

THE LEADING CHARACTERS

EDISON FORBES, a young resident of Scottdale, with an inherent craving for liquor is held for the death of a woman who has been killed by a bootlegging truck. Circumstantial evidence points to Forbes and rather than tell the truth of the episode, he stands trial, which results in a long prison sentence. He is soon pardoned, however, but back in Scottdale he and

PATSY JANE, his trusting wife, agree that public sentiment against him is too strong so they migrate up north to some land that has been in the family for years. While there they form the acquaintance of ISAIAH SEALMAN, a shifty neighbor who is anxious to buy their land. Eddie learns that the back taxes amount to over eight hundred dollars but as he has five months to pay he decides to refuse Sealman's offer of $1200 and try and get final title to his property—Sealman's offer having led him to think it very valuable. But things do not go on very well. Eddie drinks heavily from some bootlegger's potions, is forgiven by Patsy, but soon after falls in with the same gang, gets drunk, and wakes up in a freight car in Chicago—many miles away. Stricken with remorse he returns to his cabin but finds his wife has left and in her place a ruffian, who orders him out. A fight ensues in which Edddie finally knocks his opponent stone cold.

After ejecting the intruder finding that he seems to be in league with Sealman, Eddie goes to Long Portage and sees Patsy who is working for Kinnane, a lawyer. She announces that she will not join him until he definitely quits drinking. Determining to comply, he finds a job with Davenant, a rancher, and for several weeks abstains from the bottle that cheers. But one Sunday, Eddie walks on the lake trail, and encounters a series of truck smugglers. Among them he recognizes his "friends" who shanghaied him to Chicago—notwithstanding, Forbes hails them in greeting.

CHAPTER XV

Demon Rum Again

Culley and Jake, confused, took his proffered hand with mumbled greetings. The third man was introduced as Oscar. "Say," Eddie went on, his smile taking a tinge of humorous ruefulness, "there was an awful kick in that last bottle. Do you know where I was when I came out of it with a head like a haystack?"

The driver and Culley exchanged glances. "No, where?" asked the guard.

"Coming into Chicago in a freight car."

"You don't say," ejaculated the driver.

"Surest thing you know. Where'd you leave me?"

Again the exchange of puzzled looks. "Long Portage," returned Jake.

"Well," went on Eddie, easily. "I don't remember a thing after that third drink, although it seems to me I had a dream about a boxcar. I must have wandered to the yards and laid down in the car to sleep it off. They didn't see me and locked the door. Boy. That booze had a kick!"

He had convinced them, and there was a decided increase of cordiality in their manner. Oscar and Jake smiled sympathetically. "I know," explained Jake, "it wasn't very good stuff. We were all sick next day. You can't always be sure of the quality. But we've changed wholesalers since then. We're getting the real Canadian Scotch now."

Eddie sat on a log by the roadside and the three returned to their task. They regarded him, evidently, as one of them—a man dependent upon liquor who would not dream of betraying the illicit traffic which almost daily crawled across the state like a stain.

"Ship's just in, I take it" he said carelessly. "Passed the other four trucks down the road a ways"

"She got in at dawn," replied Oscar. "We work up there all night. Maybe you think it wasn't cold, sleepin' on the deck of that truck with only one blanket."

The tire was bolted, and the truck was ready to take up its journey. While the other two clambered to their places, Culley went to the box under the seat and drew forth a bottle of golden brown liquor. "Needn't be afraid of this stuff, kid," he said. "It's the real goods. I think it's the best we've hauled this season. Hey, Jake?"

"Uh huh," agreed the driver.

"So have a real one on us," concluded Culley, waving his hand. He knew that he could partake of this liquor. Though they had drugged and shanghaied him before, it was not because of personal enmity. They did it for some mysterious reason which he had not been able to solve, and at the persuasion of some unknown adversary. This was a peace offering of booze, at least reasonably pure. They were making amends for shabby treatment. Which shabby treatment they would repeat, however, if inducements were offered.

He had fooled them and put himself up against one of the gravest crises of his life. Craving for liquor was scratching at every nerve. The kick of the alcohol—how he yearned for it. Alcohol was in his hand. He could almost smell its fumes. And he knew that, if the actual odor came to his nostrils, he was gone.

Cold perspiration came out on his forehead. His mouth went dry. His teeth were clenched as though the tetanus germ had locked them. Ridges of muscle appeared on cheeks which had grown haggard. The fight was on, and it was going to a finish.

The tension eased. "I don't have to settle it right this minute," he told himself speciously. "Let's go and see about that ship."

He wore no coat, for the day was bright and warm. He thrust the bottle inside his flannel shirt where it gurgled against his body with every step. He was marvelously relieved that a reprieve had been granted, even on terms so shabby.

The cove was deserted. Far out on the lake he discerned the dumpy outlines of a good sized fishing-tug, headed for Canadian waters again. There were few marks of the unloading. The beach had been raked over, probably, and there was no one in sight. But a stroll up the shore revealed behind masking undergrowth a log house built partially below the lake level. A channel ran to its strongly-padlocked door. Part of the overhanging bank had been tunneled to receive the rear of the house.

"They keep their skiffs in there," he mused. "I suppose if all the trucks aren't here when they need them, the stuff is locked up until they come."

The possibilities of the cove were exhausted and his own problem pressed. The longing for liquor lay in wait so that when mind and body were unoccupied, it seized on them. "While I'm busy it isn't so bad," he thought. "Well, let's try keeping busy."

Below the cove the shoreline turned abruptly to the east, taking in many square miles. He plunged into this wilderness which was to him virgin. It was pleasant walking. The soil was more than mere sand and firm underfoot. There was hardwood among the jackpines and an occasional great white pine tree which had evaded the axe and saw.

He drove steadily eastward, holding the appetite at bay by physical exertion. Not for a moment did he forget it, like a tiger it lay in wait, ready to spring. The gurgle-gurgle against his side was its hunting cry.

He had started on a faint trail, but this had long since disappeared. The silence was profound, except for the subdued twitter of birds and his own faint footsteps. A crash in the undergrowth ahead startled him. A magnificent buck crossed a little clearing and zoomed like an airplane over the top of a fallen tree. Two does followed taking the same prodigious leap in graceful fashion.

There was no breath of air stirring. He wiped the sweat from his face with his sleeve. At a little riverlet which was one of the headwater streams of Portage creek he stopped to drink deeply. The cold water was gratefully refreshing. He plunged straight east bearing a little to the south.

Somehow he did not dare sit down to rest. He was afraid of the bottle. If he could only keep going he had a chance to win. A blister formed on his right heel and his shoe rasped painfully at every step. His clothing was quite wet. An unnoted blackberry briar had drawn itself across his face, leaving a red trail that smarted and stung.

Noon came and passed. He was walking automatically now, obsessed with one idea only—to keep going on and on and on. The earth became soggy. His feet stumbled on slippery, regularly recurring humps, and he stopped.

The underbrush had become very thick and high. He was following a green tunnel through it. The bumps under foot were the remains of a corduroy road, built to facilitate the taking out of logs years ago. He followed the road. Within a little time it ended on the edge of a cedar swamp.

A devil's cradle was ahead of him. Dead cedars with white trunks and short, spiky branches lay, stood and leaned in the stagnant black water. In places the trunks were five deep in inextricable tangles. Here and there was long and brilliantly-green grass, but he knew there was no solid footing where such tufts grew. It was a cunning trap to ensnare the trusting. A foot upon such a tuft meant instant descent into sucking black ooze. Crows cawed dismally on some of the trees which still stood upright.

CHAUTER XVI

A Victory

It was impossible to determine the area of the swamp. The stiff and hostile trunks melted away against a line of blue hills on the horizon. Not far ahead, though, there was an oasis, an island which rose a few feet above the black water and was crowded with vigorous trees. It was perhaps an acre in extent. There was a breeze over there, the trees swayed.

"This seemes to be a sort of—well, a symbol," he thought. "It's infernally hard going. It's dangerous. I don't know how far across. It would be easier to sidestep it, to go around. But it's in my path. It blocks the way I am going. Why should I let a cedar swamp buffalo me? I wonder if this booze question wouldn't have been easier if I'd fought it in the past instead of sidestepping? Of course there isn't any answer for that. But I know I couldn't think so much of myself hereafter if I ducked this. So here goes."

Before many yards had been covered he regretted his decision to cross the swamp. It seemed useless and foolhardy to battle this grim and treacherous area. The labor was appallingly hard. He crawled on hands and knees along the slanting logs, their spikes bruising him and tearing the skin.

Sometimes he slipped on the trunks which had gathered moss that made as smooth as ice. Then he barely escaped dropping into wells of black water, paved far below with muck in solution. He knew the mixture had the clinging power of quicksand. The sun beat down viciously.

At last he won the oasis and flung himself down to rest in the shade of a good sized tree. His chest heaved. He closed his eyes and fought the vivid outline of an action which his appetite painted over and over again on his brain.

In this action he saw himself withdrawing the bottle from his shirt, removing the cork and tilting his head so that the fiery liquid might run down his throat. He could sniff the beguiling bequest of the raw liquor and feel the filliped nerves tingle to the ends of his fingers and toes. The counterfeit sensations caused him fairly to shudder with a longing to make them authentic.

He raised himself on his elbows to look out over the waste which intervened between the island and the further shore. It was not so distant as it had seemed, but it was greater than the first lap. He shook his head. "No booze until that's behind me. Too dangerous. I need everything I have to make it."

He took up the journey again. Now progress was slower. He was tired. The tangle seemed worse, the water deeper and blacker. Once he slipped and was immersed hip deep in the tepid water. He hastily crawled back to the grudging surface of a slender stick.

As he crawled one wide pool on a cedar whose far end was insecurely anchored, so that the trunk rocked with his weight, the bottle slipped from his shirt and plopped into the water. He straddled the log to consider.

It was getting late. The shadows were long over this fiends' playground. But he could not leave without the bottle. His nerves were searching with renewed insistence. Appetite beat upon him, shook him, tore him. He had to have that liquor. Yet he knew that the clamor was fictitious, and that there was a deeper reason for repossessing himself of the flask. If he went on without it, he was cravenly avoiding the possible knockout. It would be a drawn battle which he would have to fight again. The whiskey might be the bludgeon of defeat, but it might also be the symbol of victory. He might lose it, but he could never win by running away from it.

He removed his canvas leggins, his shoes and socks, as he perched perilously on the uneasy trunk. He let himself down into the pool. His toes encountered the muck. His arms were extended their full length before they encountered the bottle in the sooty depths. It was a task requiring muscular strain and dexterity, to grip the bottle between his feet and bring it surfaceward.

A new difficulty presented itself. He could not climb back on the log without the aid of his feet. He released a hand to reach downward for the bottle. It eluded him and sank again. As he lunged for it, the other hand slipped and he went under.

Back at the surface he shuddered with distaste and clung to the log. The dead water and the treacherous, molasses like muck filled him with nausea. Yet they had to be braved. He took a full breath and thrust himself under. His arm encountered the muck and was absorbed in it, yet his fingers felt no bottle. His shoulders, the top of his head were in the ooze, yet the desperate fingers closed only on slime. Closing his eyes he rammed downward until the muck was in his nostrils.

It drew him, sucked his insidiously into its grip. Panic that made his eyes pop and his heart race possessed him. But something elemental and fundamental would not permit him to withdraw. Both arms worked in a wide circle. His lungs cried for air. His eardrums cracked. He was undergoing all the agonies of drowning.

At last! A fingertip touched it. He worked lower, grasped the bottle firmly, and splashed frantically upward. The mud clung to him, it was reluctant to let him go a submerged log aided him firm footing. He heaved high above the surface, opaque as a puddle of ink.

Epworth League Picnic

On last Thursday evening a crowd of young folks headed by Mr. and Mrs. Dave Shanks, left the M. E. church at 7 o'clock for a good time somewhere on Wolf Creek. A few lively old-time games were played and then a big fire was made and wieners roasted, marshmallows toasted, and followed a watermelon feed and various melon contests. Miss Chester Carter and Addison Cutter were declared final winners though a number of others are worthy of honorable mention.

A special invitation is extended to the faculty and all high school students within the League age, to be present at our meetings at 7:00 o'clock each Sunday evening, in the basement of the Methodist church. We need you. Be there on time.

S. M. CHAMBERS, NATIONAL ADVERTISING MANAGER OF THE ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH, SAYS:

THAT newspaper advertising is the greatest seling force in the word. It can be timed to fit the weather. It can be designed to meet the emergencies of economic changes. It can sell blankets and furs in sweltering August and white goods in cold, crimpy January. It can, where service or value is superior, draw trade away from the beaten paths of commerce into the side streets. It can popularize worthy merchandise, increase production, lower manufacturing costs and reduce retail prices without disturbing margins of profits. It has come to be as much a necessary part of going concerns as bank balances and credit. It pays those who use it aright.

Today's Pontiac Six is the finest Pontiac Six built. Not merely does it offer the fashionable smoothness of Fisher bodies in new Duco colors, but it brings to the buyer those many refinements which have been made in Pontiac Six design.

Although the original Pontiac Six was such a revolutionary value that it set a world record during its first year—

—the Pontiac Six you buy today is even smoother in operation, even more sparing in the attention it requires, even more luxurious and more distinguished in appearance.

Yet it sells for less than ever—the result of price reductions made possible by the economies effected in the world's newest and finest motor car plant.

Unless you have actually driven today's Pontiac Six you cannot know what thrilling power and smoothness, what thorough road mastery, and what enduring satisfaction can now be obtained in a six at $745!

New lower prices on all passenger car body types (Effective July 15th): Coupe, Sport Roadster, $745; Sport Cabriolet, $795; Landau Sedan, $845; De Luxe Sedan, $925; Pontiac Six De Luxe Delivery, $585 to $770. The New Oakland All-American Six, $1045 to $1265. All prices at factory. Delivered prices include minimum handling charges. Easy to pay on the General Motors Time Payment Plan.
