White House shots injure 2

Gunfire erupts as armed Virginia man vaults gate

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Three days after White House security was tightened to historic levels, an armed man jumped over a gate at the White House late Tuesday night and was shot by a Secret Service officer. A Secret Service officer also was shot, police said.

Secret Service spokesman Dave Adams identified the suspect as Leland William Modjeski of Falls Church, Va. The wounded officer, whose name was not released, and Modjeski were in an area hospital with non-lethal injuries, Adams said.

President Clinton and his family, who were inside at the time of the shooting, were not in danger, Adams said.

He said the suspect climbed a fence on the east side of the White House. At some point, the suspect fired at a uniformed Secret Service officer and hit him in the arm. Police believe the suspect was shot by the wounded officer.

Saying details were sketchy almost two hours after the shooting, Adams said it was unclear who fired first. He did not know how many rounds were fired.

Adams said the incident took place about 10:45 p.m. He did not know what type of gun was used by the suspect.

A spokeswoman at George Washington University Hospital seven blocks from the White House said a uniformed Secret Service officer and a civilian were brought to the hospital shortly after 11 p.m.

The officer was shot in his arm, while the other man was wounded in his upper body, said the spokeswoman, Merle Goldberg. Both were in stable condition and it was not immediately known whether either would need surgery, she said.

The first paramedic on the scene, Thomas Crabb, said both men had been shot in the left arm.

Under heavy guard, Modjeski, 37, was brought into the hospital in handcuffs to be treated. About an hour later the head of Secret Service, Ron Noble, arrived at the hospital to oversee the investigation.

An hour after the shooting, uniformed Secret Service officers stood in small clusters on streets surrounding the White House as patrol cars with lights flashing drove past from time to time. Reporters, camera crews and a handful of passersby were kept across the street from the rear fence area where the shooting occurred.

Final blow: Monstrous reminder comes down

Blast jolts wounds, begins healing

OKLAHOMA CITY — Standing just a block away in the hazy dawn light, they were expecting to hear warning signals before the nine-story hulk of the federal building was brought down with strategically placed explosives.

But buffeting winds drowned out the sirens, and when the remains of the building collapsed Tuesday with a thundering boom, survivors of the bombing and relatives of the dead instinctively ducked, recoiled and trembled.

"I wasn't expecting it. But when I heard the explosion, it brought it all back," said Priscilla Salyers, who was pinned under concrete for four hours after her fifth-floor office toppled to the ground more than a month ago.

"That's just what it sounded like," she said, wiping away tears. "That's what I remember."

As on April 19, it started with a loud boom, followed by a billowing cloud of dust.

But this time, there was no bleeding, no frantic screams, no throngs of people fleeing in terror. There was no fire or thick black smoke, no blaring car alarms, no stretchers covered in bloody sheets. No firefighters

Teachers stave off district salary freeze, but conditions remain icy

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Midland public school teachers rejoiced after staving off a district salary freeze Tuesday night, but their victory may be short-lived. School board trustees voted not to impose a salary freeze, but said they could come back and change that decision at the next board meeting on June 20.

Trustees voted 5-2 not to give notification of a salary freeze. Jackie Hamilton and Dianne Anderson opposed the motion.

"This is the time of year that knots my stomach. It's not because of tests, kids being ready to leave (for the summer), or because discipline problems increase. It's because I have to fight for my quality of life," said Jo Hayes, a Midland Independent School District teacher.

Talking to a standing-room-only crowd, MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. said, "My first priority is 'teachers first.'"

However, school-board trustees may not agree with him if it comes down to raising property taxes to pay teachers.

Baressi said the salary issue was put on the agenda in order to allow teachers to voice their opinions before summer vacation begins.

"At this point, we are just doing admin-

Former President Bush draws fire for NRA slap

From Staff Reports

More than 73 percent of the 597 callers who participated in this week's Cityline Community Pulse poll felt that former President Bush acted incorrectly in resigning from and denouncing the National Rifle Association for a recent statement made in its fund-raising literature.

In the letter, the NRA referred to federal agents as "jack-booted government thugs." Of the almost 600 calls logged, 437 said they thought Bush either overreacted, acted incorrectly or needlessly made a political issue out of his resignation. The remaining 160 callers felt Bush acted correctly in announcing his resignation.

According to caller Banks Campbell, "Our government was created by the people and exists by our lead. It is the right — no, the duty — of any citizen who perceives the actions of the government are those of jack-booted government thugs to say so publicly and to initiate action to prevent a recurrence of such action."

"As a lifetime member of the NRA, I recently attended the 124th meeting in Phoenix," according to Kelly McNair. "I support the right of any

Arab leaders demand that Israel cancel Jerusalem land confiscation

JERUSALEM (NYT) — Buoyed by Israel's retreat on a major issue affecting Jerusalem, Arab leaders demanded Tuesday that the Israelis not merely suspend their planned confiscation of land in Palestinian neighborhoods but go on to cancel the move outright.

Calls for further Israeli action came from senior officials in Arab countries and among the Palestinians, including Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The confiscation plan has stirred international protest for weeks, and it threatened for a while to bring down the government and, perhaps with it, the Middle East peace talks.

There was no sign that Israel was about to comply with the Arab demands. Its decision for now, made suddenly at an emergency Cabinet meeting Monday, is just to freeze the intended seizure of 134 acres in Palestinian areas and study it later.

But senior Israeli officials acknowledged that there was no way now for them to press ahead with their original expropriation, and so it in effect seems dead.

As such, their about-face to avoid a possible government collapse was generally viewed here Tuesday as an unusual Arab victory in the endless battle for control over Jerusalem, claimed by both Israel and the Palestinians as their capital.

Officials said that as far as they knew, it was the first time since Israel gained authority over the entire city in 1967 that it had announced a land expropriation and then backed away.

Relentless building has been almost an article of faith for most Israelis, both to assert their primacy and to maintain the demographic edge that Jews have over Arabs in Jerusalem. The government reversal was therefore seen by many Tuesday as a defeat.

"The big winners are the Arabs," the newspaper Maariv said.

Still, the victory may prove to be short-lived. Israel may have stopped its land-development and housing plans on these 134 acres, in the Beit Safafa and Beit Hanina areas, but officials insisted that they would continue to build in other sections captured by Israel in the 1967 war.

Housing Minister Binyamin Ben-Eliezer said he hoped before long to construct some 6,500 new apartments in Har Homa, a new Jewish neighborhood that is supposed to rise on wooded hillsides in the city's southeast, alongside the Arab areas of Umm Tuba and Sur Bahir.

That land, about 460 acres, was expropriated in 1991, mostly from Jews who had acquired property there over the years.

"We are continuing to build in Jerusalem," Trade Minister Micha Harish said. "We are continuing to expand Jewish settlement in Jerusalem."

Whatever the future of land disputes, the government decision to back off this time seems to have eased a crisis that was threatening to get out of hand.

Arab countries called off a meeting they had scheduled for Saturday in Morocco to consider anti-Israel action, and Israel and the PLO affirmed their commitment to reach an agreement on expanding Palestinian self-rule by July 1.

Visiting Jerusalem on Tuesday, Osama al-Baz, an adviser to President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, said the Israeli turnabout had produced "an atmosphere which is suitable to achieve tangible progress."

On Israel's domestic front, however, the atmosphere was anything but cordial.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin stood accused as a bungler — taking action and then reversing it on a land confiscation that even ministers in his Cabinet said should not have been attempted in the first place. The rightist opposition denounced Rabin for, in its view, surrendering to Arab pressure.

But the opposition did not look much better in many eyes, especially Benjamin Netanyahu, the Likud Party leader and would-be prime minister.

In his own party, Netanyahu was accused by former Foreign Minister David Levy, a rival, of exploiting the land issue and going against his own convictions.

He cited Netanyahu's readiness to support a no-confidence motion on Jerusalem that had been introduced in parliament by two small Arab parties and had stirred concern in the Rabin Cabinet that it might not survive.

Rabin's is a minority government, holding onto power in part because the Arab parties have agreed to support it from outside through dozens of no-confidence votes demanded by the Israeli right.

But if the Arabs and the rightists were to join together, as they seemed about to do Monday, the odds of the government's surviving would plummet to near zero. So to save itself, and arguably the peace talks, the Cabinet froze the land seizure, thus eliminating the no-confidence threat.

That revived accusations from Netanyahu that Rabin depends on the Arabs for survival — not a political compliment to most Israelis. But despite the Likud leader's assertion that he had behaved correctly, Levy and others accused him of having become the flip side of the same coin: depending on the Arabs to bring down the government

Cold War law designed to restrict radicals could ban Japanese cult

TOKYO (AP) — A Cold War law passed to restrict leftist radicals is what officials said Tuesday could be used to legally ban the sect believed responsible for the Tokyo subway nerve gas attack.

The Subversive Activities Prevention Law has been applied before only to eight individuals, all radical leftists.

But no group has ever been singled out, partly due to criticism from Communists and others that the law could be used by the government to stifle dissent.

The Aum Shinri Kyo (Supreme Truth) cult, whose leaders are under arrest on suspicion of murder in the March 20 subway attack, is the first religious organization even to be investigated as a potential subversive group.

An official of the Public Security Investigation Agency, speaking on condition of anonymity, said investigators have to be careful before deciding whether to apply the law to the group "because we also have to respect the freedom of religion."

Under the law, activities of a subversive organization can be totally banned. The law applies to groups found to have engaged in terrorism and deemed likely to repeat such actions.

Japan has been the scene of occasional attacks by leftists over the years, including fatal clashes with police over the building of Tokyo's international airport.

Police arrested sect guru Shoko Asahara at his hideout in a Mount Fuji commune May 16, and are questioning him on whether he ordered the nerve gas attack, which killed 12 and sickened 5,500 people.

Most of the 41 other cult members suspected of murder and attempted murder in the planning and execution of the attack are in custody after the largest criminal investigation in Japanese history.

Asahara says he is innocent, and refuses to discuss the attack, said a Tokyo Metropolitan Police spokesman. He said Asahara fasts every other day and, when questioned, only motions silently with both hands as though to demonstrate that he is encased in a shell.

Police have seized tons of chemicals and equipment that could be used to make the deadly gas sarin at the Mount Fuji compound, while confiscating caches of assault weapons, ammunition and small firearms from other facilities.

The newspaper Asahi Shimbun said Tuesday senior members of the cult have admitted to another toxic gas attack in central Japan last June that killed seven people and sickened 600.

In other cases of questionable deaths, the newspaper Yomiuri reported Tuesday that police have identified more than 20 cult followers who have disappeared since moving into cult facilities.

The Yomiuri said some may have died in accidents but others may have been the victim of drug injections or cult training sessions that involved immersion in scalding water. At least some bodies were cremated and the remains buried near Mount Fuji, the newspaper said.

Bonn court clears most East German Cold War spies of treason charges

BONN, Germany (AP) — Most of the East German spies whose tentacles reached into the heart of West Germany can't be prosecuted by the state that absorbed them after their defeat, Germany's high court ruled Tuesday.

The Federal Constitutional Court ruling should help to clarify the legal framework for Germany's reckoning with its bitter Cold War legacy.

Conservatives and victims of communist repression denounced the ruling, saying it gave credibility to a corrupt and criminal regime. Representatives of some 6,000 former East German spies rejoiced.

Tuesday's ruling was an "encouraging signal" that would end years of "uncertainty, defamation and prosecution," said Markus Wolf, the legendary East German spy chief.

Wolf's 1993 treason conviction and six-year sentence — as well as dozens of other trials — were likely to be overturned by the court's ruling, which said spying for East Germany in itself wasn't a crime.

"Wolf and the others did what every other country in the world does," said Heribert Hellenbroich, who lost his job as West Germany's intelligence chief in 1985 when a top aide defected to Wolf's services.

"It's painful to respect the constitution some times, but you can't get around it," Hellenbroich said.

East Germans who spied from inside East Germany can't be prosecuted, the court ruled, but those who spied on the soil of West Germany or other western countries could be.

The court's logic was that East German spies in unfriendly countries had been subject to arrest at the time. But even they should be handled leniently, the court said, because they deserve the protection of the state that adopted them when theirs disappeared.

In practice, the ruling means former East German spy managers won't be punished, unlike some of their agents in the field.

Prosecution of former West German citizens who spied for East Germany won't be affected by the ruling, nor will prosecution of East German spies for crimes like coercion and murder.

The 5-3 division of the court reflected the fine line Germany treads between punishing those guilty for 40 years of Stalinist rule, and integrating East Germans on an equal footing. The slap on the wrists many Nazis got after World War II weighs heavily on the debate.

In their dissenting opinion, Judges Hans Hugo Klein, Paul Kirchhof and Klaus Winger said the decision was effectively an amnesty. They pointed out that Germany's parliament had rejected other amnesties.

While the high court mulled the decision for four years, several lower courts prosecuted spies. The feeling of injustice stemming from these cases "has been counterproductive to German unity," the Constitutional Court said.

While Wolf was on trial in Duesseldorf, a Berlin court threw out proceedings against Werner Grossman, who succeeded Wolf as spy chief in 1986. The Berlin court said Grossman couldn't have betrayed a country he wasn't a citizen of.

Wolf claimed the court took revenge on him for the hundreds of moles he planted in West Germany from 1953 until his retirement, including one whose unmasking brought down Chancellor Willy Brandt in 1974.

Wolf won every espionage battle only to lose the war when East Germany collapsed in 1989. His spies provided the Soviet bloc NATO secrets that could have been decisive had war broken out in Europe.

The judges have "placed the East German police state on a moral pedestal and posthumously recognized the East German nation," charged politician Bernd Protzner.

Pope, like parent. returns to Poland homeland, lingers

ZYWIEC, Poland (NYT) — On his last stop on a one-day swing through southern Poland, pope John Paul II was clearly stalling Monday. A late afternoon sun had cast its shadows on the main square, jammed with people, and the 100-voice choir drifted from church music to something more sentimental.

The pope had delivered his message, another stern reminder to his fellow Poles to guard against the "systematic secularization" of society. Now he was in a lighter mood. He spoke of his emotional links to the region where he had grown up, and where he had served first as a priest, then as a bishop.

"Stay here with us, stay here with us," the crowd chanted in response. The pope, who had already been handed his silver-tipped cane by his personal secretary, Stanislao Dziwisz, as a hint that he was running more than an hour late, responded by inviting everyone to Rome.

"But now I must go," the pope said, "because for me, the Holy See is now what this town is for you."

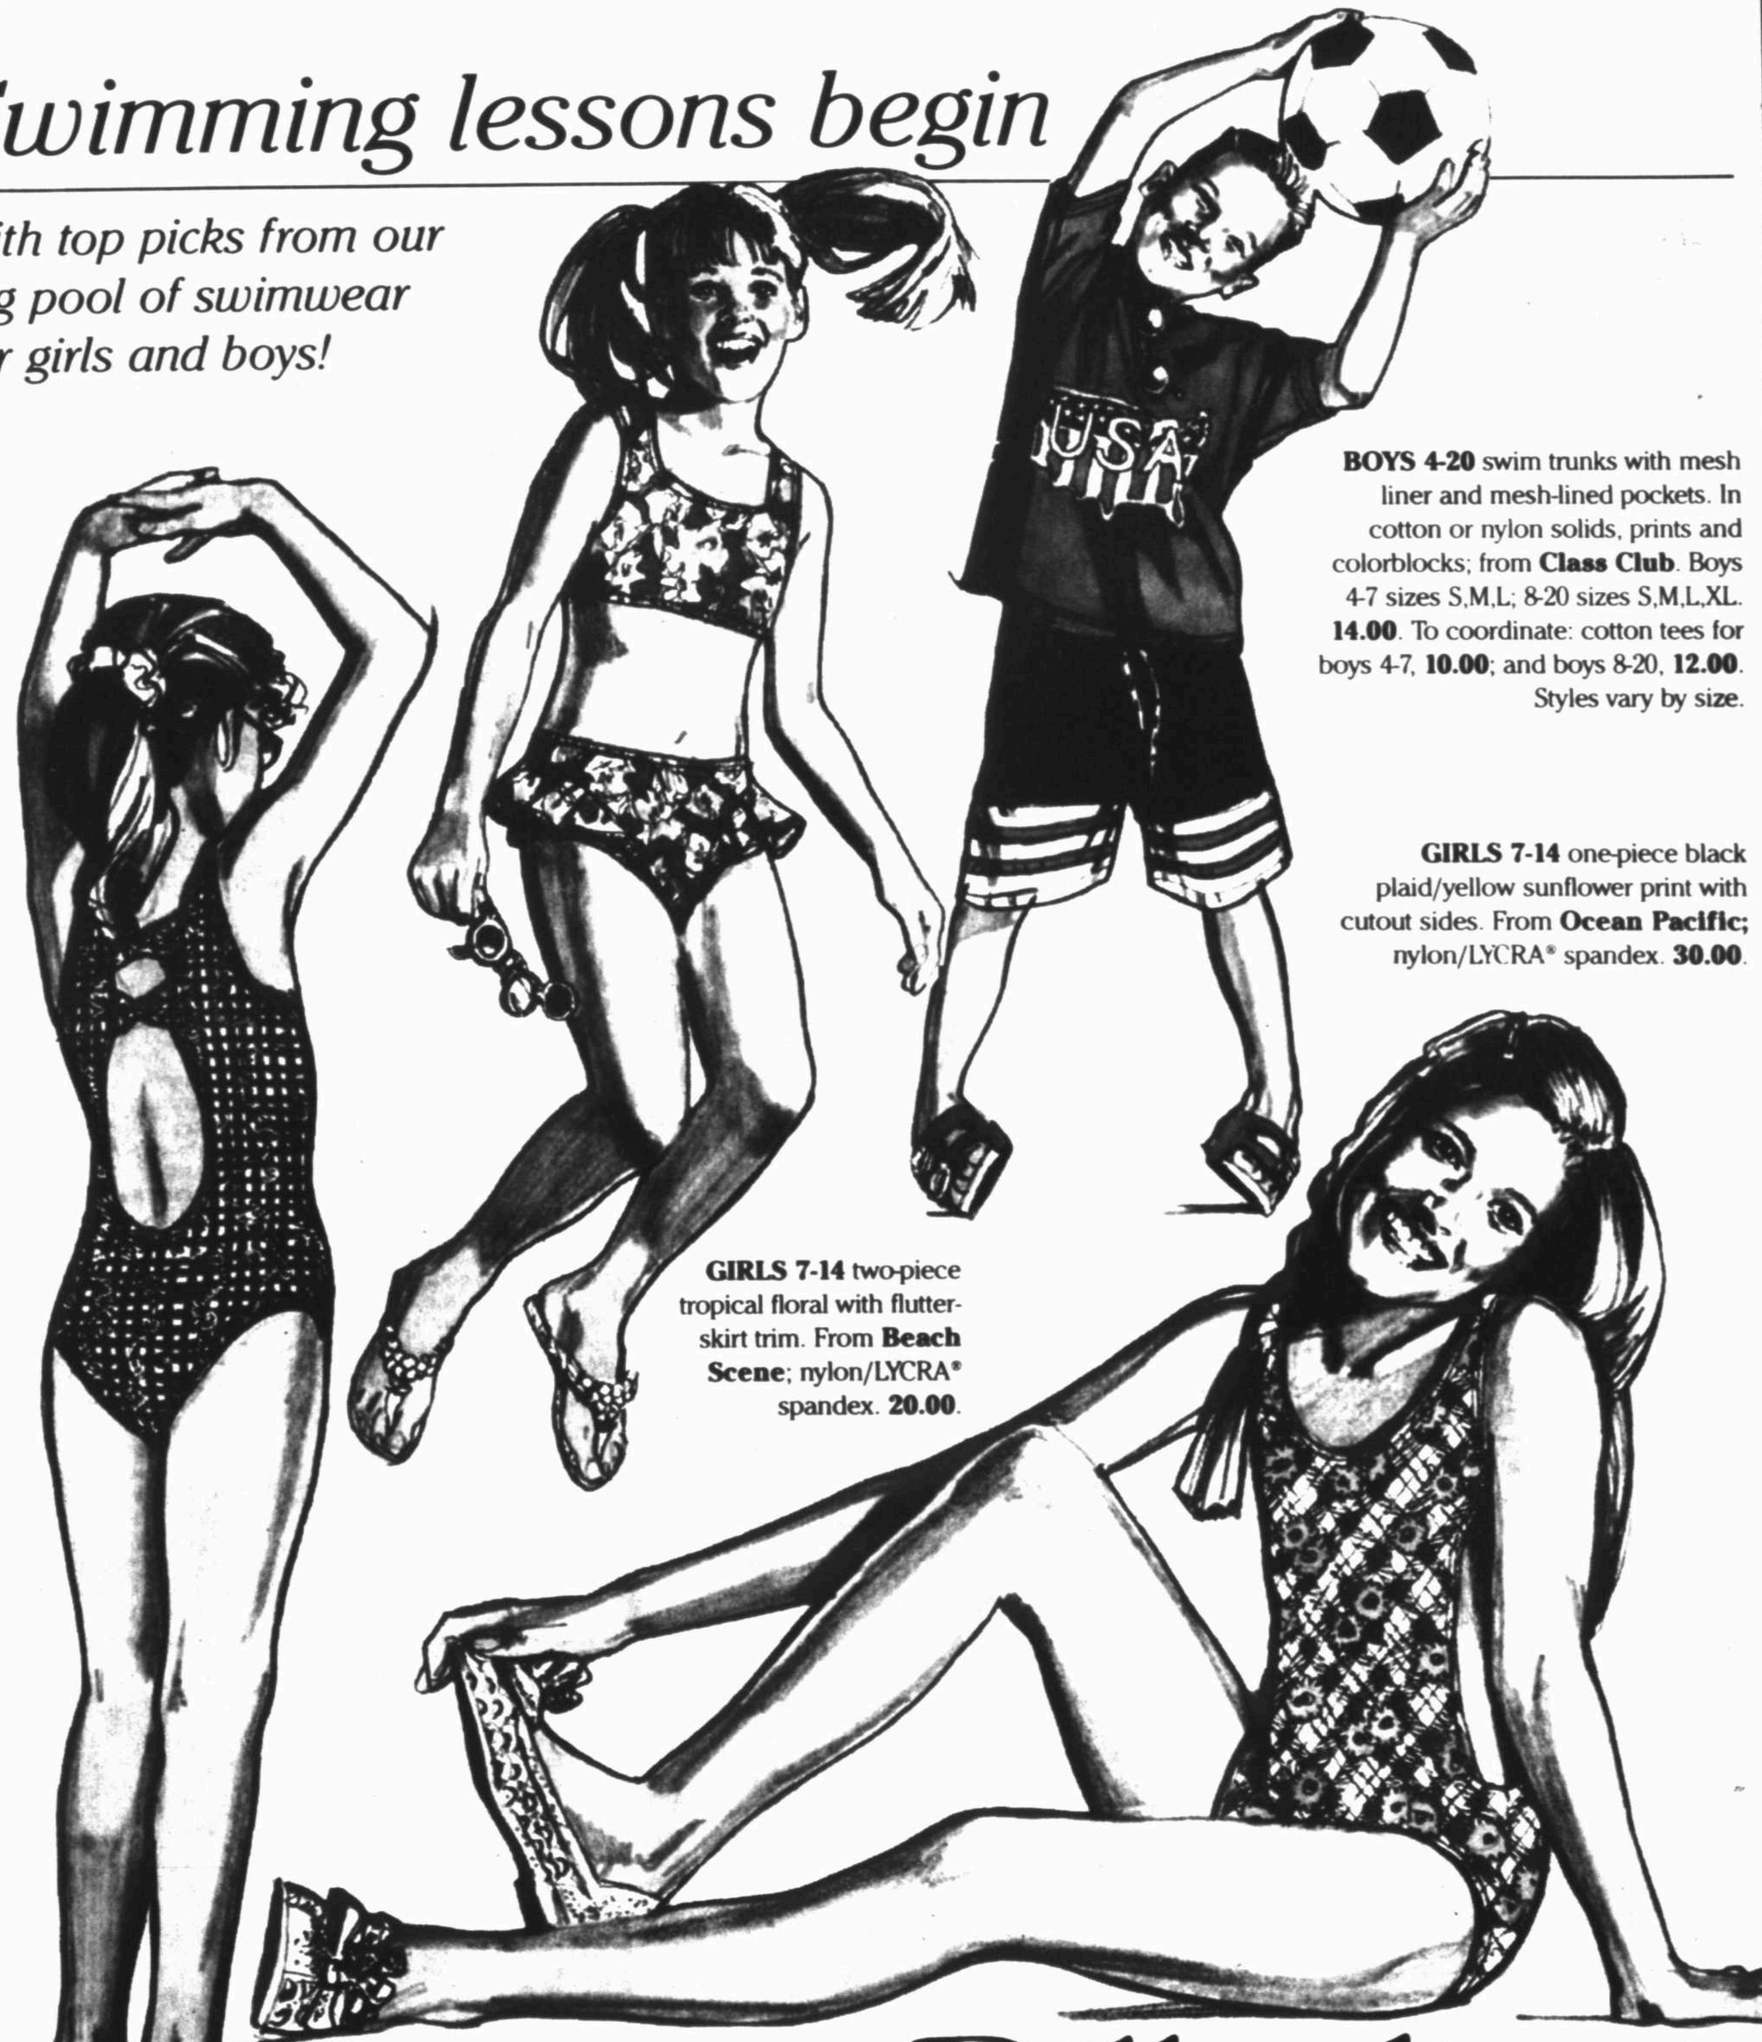

Karol Wojtyla left his archbishopric in nearby Krakow in October 1978 to travel to Rome to elect a successor to pope John Paul I. Since that consistory, in which his fellow cardinals selected him to the Throne of Peter, he has been back to Poland five times, including this brief visit linked to the canonization of a 17th-century martyr who died in what is now part of the Czech Republic.

Expect some clouds, high 80s

Staff Report

Skies should be partly cloudy today with a high in the upper 80s and southwest to west winds at 10-20 mph.

Tonight will continue to be partly cloudy with a low in the upper 50s.

Thursday should be mostly sunny with a high in the lower 80s.

After an overnight low of 70, Tuesday's high reached 90, compared to the record high for that date of 106 set in 1989. The record low was 47 set in 1988.

STATE

Severe thunderstorms forming along a dry line in West Texas spawned a tornado that touched down Tuesday near Aspermont, causing some property damage, the Stonewall County Sheriff's Department reported.

Aspermont, the county seat, has a population of about 1,200. It is located about 170 miles west of Fort Worth.

Much of West Texas was under a tornado watch until 9 p.m.

Otherwise, it was cloudy, windy and warm across Texas. Southerly winds were 15 to 30 miles an hour in West Texas and gusty ahead of a stationary cold front extending across the south end of the Panhandle. Winds were northerly behind the front.

By afternoon, several severe thunderstorms had popped up from the South Plains to Permian Basin to the Big Country. Doppler radar indicated possible tornadic thunderstorms in Foard, Fisher and Scurry Counties, but authorities said no tornadoes touched down.

Temperatures were in the 50s in the Panhandle and 80s and 90s elsewhere. At 4 p.m., readings ranged from 51 degrees at Dalhart and Amarillo in the Panhandle to 91 at Wink in Far West Texas.

South Texas is expected to be cloudy and hot. Highs in the 80s and 90s with lows in the 60s and 70s.

Forecasters said West Texas will be partly cloudy today with highs in the 80s and 90s to over 100 in Big Bend valleys. Lows mostly in the

NATION

Heavy rains moved steadily across Kansas and Nebraska into Missouri on Tuesday, falling at a rate of up to 3 inches per hour. Rain and snow also spread across parts of Utah, Nevada and Arizona.

Up to 6 inches of rain has fallen in parts of Kansas since late Monday. Flood warnings were posted for several central towns where rivers and creeks were expected to be cresting until Thursday.

Little flooding has been reported except in low-lying farmlands, but some schools in Saline and Sedgwick counties canceled school because of standing water or rising rivers.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Five of the seven officers who were found to have had loaded weapons the night a paramedic was shot during SWAT training received days off without pay. The other two officers involved received written reprimands. The two command staff officers who were not present at the exercise also received days off.

Residents derail effort to make Cuthbert 2-way

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

The second reading to open a length of Cuthbert Avenue between Garfield and Ward streets to two-way traffic was derailed today when residents along that road rallied at City Hall.

Several residents — on both sides of the issue — gathered at Tuesday's meeting of the Midland City Council to voice their opinions on a plan to change this portion of Cuthbert Avenue back to two-way traffic.

It was changed to one-way several years ago in response to estimates of increased traffic in the area.

According to city officials, recent studies show that traffic never reached the estimated figures, and has even been reduced over the years. In addition, traffic accidents at Cuthbert Avenue and Ward Street have greatly increased since the change to one-way.

Since the street was not paired with another one-way street going the other way, part of Cuthbert Avenue's original traffic has been transferred to Storey Avenue.

"Why wasn't it paired with another one-way street going the other way?" said council member Pat Schneider.

"That's a good question. I couldn't find any justification for that," a city official said.

Residents along Storey were in favor of changing Cuthbert back to two-way to relieve the added traffic along their street. "We're getting Cuthbert's traffic and that's not fair," one resident said.

"When I grew up, we always knew Cuthbert was a traffic street," said Storey resident Joe Pickering.

Residents on Cuthbert Avenue, however, maintain that traffic along that street is already too dangerous, with speeders and people running stop signs.

"When they change it back to two-way — I'm not going to be able to get out of my driveway," said an older resident.

"Changing it back to two-way is not going to make people stop at stop signs," countered Cuthbert resident Jim Nyerges.

And with Midland's growth rate, "sooner or later you're going to have to change it back," Nyerges said.

After about an hour of debate, council members voted against changing Cuthbert Avenue back to two-way traffic. The vote was split, with Pat Schneider, Mayor Bobby Burns and John Webb voting to change the street, and Jose Cuevas, Bill Morrow, Juluis Brooks and Claudia Egan voting against the change.

Also at the meeting, Assistant City Manager Rick Menchaca was sworn in as Gov. George Bush's latest appointment to the Texas Municipal Retirement System's board of trustees. Menchaca and other board members will be overseeing the several-billion-dollar trust.

"We look forward to you doing an excellent job in Austin," Cuevas said.

Dr. Garland Lang was sworn in as the new health authority of Midland and Midland County.

Retiring from this position was Dr. James Humphries, who was given a proclamation honoring his 17 years of service in that position.

BLAST: Remains of federal building seem to melt cradling dead babies.

In seven seconds, the remains of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building seemed to melt into the ground, floor by floor, as the dust mushroomed into a thick grayish-brown cloud. The building was reduced to a 27-foot pile of rubble.

The center of the building was the first to fall. Then the two sides bowed and heaved and folded in. The towering elevator shaft collapsed on top as the last of nearly 150 pounds of dynamite exploded.

About a mile away, the blast sounded like firecrackers in the distance. In contrast, the 4,800-pound truck bomb that gouged out the building a month ago shook the ground 30 miles away.

About 2,000 people, many carrying video cameras and binoculars, watched the 7:01 a.m. demolition from police barricades, rooftops and parking decks.

Michelle Meek, whose mother died in the building, was so startled by the demolition that she grabbed her father's shirt collar and her brother's neck, "just to hang on."

Paramedic Melissa Webster, perched on a roof a couple of blocks away, felt a shock wave run through her body, then went numb as the building toppled to the street. She cried, reliving the day five weeks ago when she heard a similar roar from her station six blocks away.

"That day we were running on adrenalin, and we put our emotions in our back pocket," said Webster, captured by TV cameras that day prying the little hands of an injured boy from her neck as she put him on a stretcher.

"Today was my time to cry. I thought I was over the biggest part, but today I realized I wasn't. I'm sure this will be the beginning of the healing for me."

The site may eventually become a memorial park; the government's General Services Administration has not yet decided what to do.

Gov. Frank Keating said the demolition erases from Oklahoma City's skyline a monstrous reminder of the tragedy. "You really wanted to kick the rubble and say, 'There, you're out of here,'" Keating said.

At least 167 people died because of the bombing. The bodies of two of them — Christy Rosas, 22, and Virginia Thompson, 56, both credit union employees — remain entombed in the rubble, and police believe a third person may also be there.

He is 54-year-old Alvin Justes, who lived nearby and frequented the credit union. He hasn't been seen since the day of the bombing. If his death his confirmed, the death toll will be 168.

The search for Ms. Rosas and Ms. Thompson was called off May 4 when the building became too dangerous for rescue workers. The rubble will be searched again as debris is cleared over the next several days. The area where the bodies are believed to be buried has been marked with orange paint and netting.

Authorities had realized that using explosives to demolish the building would bring back terrifying memories of the bombing, but they said it was safer and quicker than a wrecking ball. On Monday, officials announced what time the demolition would take place, hoping people wouldn't be caught off guard.

As the dust cloud began to clear, Bud Welch, whose 23-year-old daughter died in the bombing, squinted — his eyes bloodshot from crying — and looked through the haze to the place that had once been her office.

"It's empty," he said. "That's how I feel, kind of empty."

As the air became clearer still and sunshine peeked from behind the clouds, he looked again down the street, and two images came into focus that had once been obscured by the federal building: an American flag at half-staff and the steeple of Old St. Joseph's Cathedral, where he and his daughter went to church.

He took a deep breath and mustered a wan smile.

"I had the feeling this was a shrine. Now it's gone," he said. "We'll have to build another shrine and we'll have to do it soon."

POLL: 73 percent of callers felt that Bush erred

member to resign; however I believe most members are behind the common commitment to support the Second Amendment, as well as the rest of the Constitution."

Andy Burge, of Boerne, who was in Midland visiting, said, "I think former President Bush missed the boat. The best way to change the structure of an organization is within rather than from outside an organization. He would've been in a much better position to change things had he stayed on the board."

A woman who identified herself as Harriet said, "I think the NRA has put itself in the same category as the thugs who bombed the federal building. I'm very disappointed and ashamed of (the NRA)."

Some callers accused Bush of playing politics with his announcement and resignation.

"I think Bush would've reacted differently," an anonymous caller said, "if he still needed the NRA's campaign contributions."

Another anonymous caller said, "What Bush didn't need to do is play politics and make a big to-do about it, and let the liberal media make a farce out of it. This country has a right to bear arms and the NRA is doing a great job protecting our right to bear arms."

Barry Warren put in a vote against Bush and said, "I think Bush has always reacted more to politics than what he thinks is right and wrong. The NRA was basically criticizing the ATF agents who break into innocent people's homes without warrants and injure citizens. The NRA wasn't attacking all government agencies."

"President Bush is correct in what he did," Henry Stewart said. "The NRA has numerous memberships with the wealthy. They have consumer influence in the Republican Party and since the Republican Party has gained a majority hold in Congress, (the NRA) has become very bold and disrespectful to anyone who doesn't agree with it. If the NRA becomes any stronger, the very thing that allows them to exist — the Constitution — could become ineffective. I believe George Bush made a wise decision."

Another Bush supporter said of the NRA, "There are already too many guns out there and the whole bunch is a bunch of cowards."

Another caller said Bush has "once again turned his back on Texas and the American people," while another anonymous male caller said, "as soon as we get the two-bit politicians out, the NRA will be an organization of men."

Former Midland resident Laren Haller said she felt Bush was in the right position, adding, "all law-abiding American citizens should give up membership in any organization that takes such an anti-government stand."

"I'm afraid I agree with the NRA in that most of our government and policemen are jack-booted thugs," said an anonymous caller. "There are few old-home type officers any more. This country is totally sick of government interference and I am strongly thinking of joining the NRA."

Countered another anonymous caller: "The NRA has overstepped its bounds and from all the things you hear and see about them on TV it's very scary. They're beginning to sound like a bunch of radicals. I think we should be concerned."

"I find it interesting that Bush didn't enclose a refund check to return the hundreds of thousands of dollars the organization contributed to his campaign fund," said Harold Hoerster. "I'm not a member of the NRA but I'm thinking about joining now."

FREEZE: Teachers celebrate short-term victory

istrative housekeeping," Ms. Anderson said.

MISD Business Manager Art Martin presented two salary-freeze options to trustees. One option would freeze salaries at the current annual rate. The other would freeze salaries at the current daily rate, which would compensate teachers for additional days if the state Legislature approves adding them to the school calendar.

Steve Buck, teacher and Midland Federation of Teachers president, said he has been following the Legislature's conference committee on teacher salaries. He presented the committee's base salaries to the board.

"It's been six long years since teachers received a pay raise from the state," Buck said. He said the state base schedule included 20 steps, which represent years of experience.

He said the state has developed a salary curve intended to catch teachers up to the national average in two years. MISD's salary line on a graph "looks like a clothesline," he said "It is well at the beginning, drops off and then comes back up."

He suggested MISD adopt the state base salaries at each step, then add $3,000. "We ought to be able to pay $3,000 above base in this district," Buck said.

"Please value us as professionals, people and treasured objects in the classroom, and do not freeze salaries," said teacher Sue Saunders.

"We have put in a lot of tears and effort inside and outside the school building, on weekends and evenings; be it money or materials, we give much of what we get (in salaries) back," said Karen Mosley, outgoing president of the Midland Educators Association. "Talking about freezing salaries is taking away from our classrooms."

Several teachers spoke of working part-time jobs during the school year and full-time jobs in summer.

Teacher and coach Bill Jordan said it "rubs him wrong" that he sacrificed three summers earning a master's degree to meet career ladder requirements that the state "never fully funded."

"I sacrificed and paid the price to meet those requirements," Jordan said after the school board meeting. Jordan said he took Baressi's words — spoekn during the invocation — to heart. "He asked to be guided to do what's best for the kids. A vote for teachers is a vote for kids."

Jordan asked that those who worked for career ladder status be compensated. "The state's intent was to get teachers to continue their education. They said we would get a salary increase if we worked for it." The teacher and coach said legislators debating the education code have told him that they weren't in office when the career ladder was approved.

"I was always taught that if a person says they are going to do something, they will follow through," he said.

Jordan said teachers with long-time experience are valuable to the district and should be given consideration for expending the additional time and money to develop professionally.

Trustees James Fuller and Jack Hightower both said they opposed freezing salaries.

"Here's my dilemma," said trustee Michael Dobey. "I'm worrying about guaranteeing dollars and then we get slashed (due to state and federal funding cuts).

MISD Board President Robin Hightower informed trustees that they could vote on a salary freeze again June 20, since MISD is required to notify employees 45 days before their contracts begin for the next school year.

In other agenda items, trustees awarded the Julie Conaway Memorial Scholarship to Michael Grandy of Midland High School and to Lori Lane of Lee High School. Grandy ranks third in his class and plans to study civil engineering at Brigham Young University. Miss Lane plans to study chemical engineering at the Colorado School of Mines.

The MISD Board of Trustees Scholarships were awarded to Christopher Allmon of MHS and to Meredith Blaydes of LHS. Allmon plans to attend Harvard University. He is the MHS valedictorian and is a National Merit Scholar. Miss Blaydes ranks third in her class at LHS. She plans to study environment/ecology at Texas A&M University.

Downtown travel woes to be over in few weeks

If it seems as though it used to be easier — and faster — to get through downtown Midland, don't hurry back to the office to punch out a heated call to City Hall. You're absolutely correct, in fact, if you believe that there is no synchronization to the traffic lights downtown.

There isn't.

The City of Midland is now in the process of installing a new traffic signal control system and while the installation is being performed motorists will be plagued by a lack of signal synchronization in the area downtown extending as far north as Cuthbert Avenue at Big Spring and A streets, bordered on the south by Front Street and east to west from Main Street to A Street.

Drivers should be aware of the installation work and that they may have to stop an extraordinary number of times while traveling through the downtown area. No doubt that will prove aggravating at times, since the rest of Midland has been operating with modern traffic signal synchronization since 1990.

However, there is a positive side to the ongoing signalization work. City officials say that in about two weeks, motorists should begin to notice some improved signalization downtown and once the work is completed, the new solid-state, computerized traffic signals should provide better synchronization for the downtown area.

That's a change all motorists will be able to fully appreciate!

Surveillance rumors mostly exceed reality

WASHINGTON — As the wrecking ball prepared to swing through the bombed-out skeleton of the Oklahoma City federal building, the Clinton administration and Congress were drafting blueprints for what could lead to the undermining of civil liberties.

Anderson

The most destructive aspect of legislation under consideration is the part that amends the 117-year-old Posse Comitatus Act, which sharply curtails the rights of the military to get involved in domestic law enforcement. This law — passed in the wake of the Civil War — has worked well since its inception.

President Clinton also wants to broaden the rights of federal law enforcement agencies to use wiretaps and other electronic surveillance methods to monitor suspects. This is another instance, however, where the rhetoric far exceeds reality. The government, in fact, already has the right to monitor suspected criminal organizations if they can provide sufficient cause to a judge. Clinton would expand this right, allowing law enforcement agencies to go on the type of "fishing expeditions" that gained ill repute during the reign of J. Edgar Hoover at the FBI.

A review of federal eavesdropping records, however, found that such devices are rarely used in investigating domestic terrorism. In 1993, the last year for which records are available, federal and state judges approved 976 applications for electronic eavesdropping. Not a single one was for investigating arson, explosives or firearms. Nearly all were for organized crime, gambling or drug investigations. There is little to suggest that this would change if the "anti-terrorism" plan is approved.

The federal government's recent assault on our freedoms is merely an extension of a trend that's been sweeping the private sector for years. With the rapid growth of information technology — in everything from banking to grocery shopping — our privacy is increasingly at the mercy of corporations, advertising agencies and anyone else interested in our tastes and preferences.

Practically anyone with a computer and modem can delve into the private pages of your personal life without your knowledge. A detailed profile of your financial status, credit history, purchasing patterns, tastes and preferences can be collected from bits of personal data such as your ZIP code, Social Security number, and records of credit and bank card usage.

Every time you use a bank card or give your address or Social Security number a record is created. The sum of all those records can be used to paint a detailed dossier of your life. Even more information will become available soon with the growth of online services, especially shop-at-home services.

What most people don't realize, our sources say, is that information which many Americans would consider sensitive is not covered by any federal laws or regulations. "There's little a person can do," one privacy expert told us. "For $200, I could get every conceivable piece of information on you."

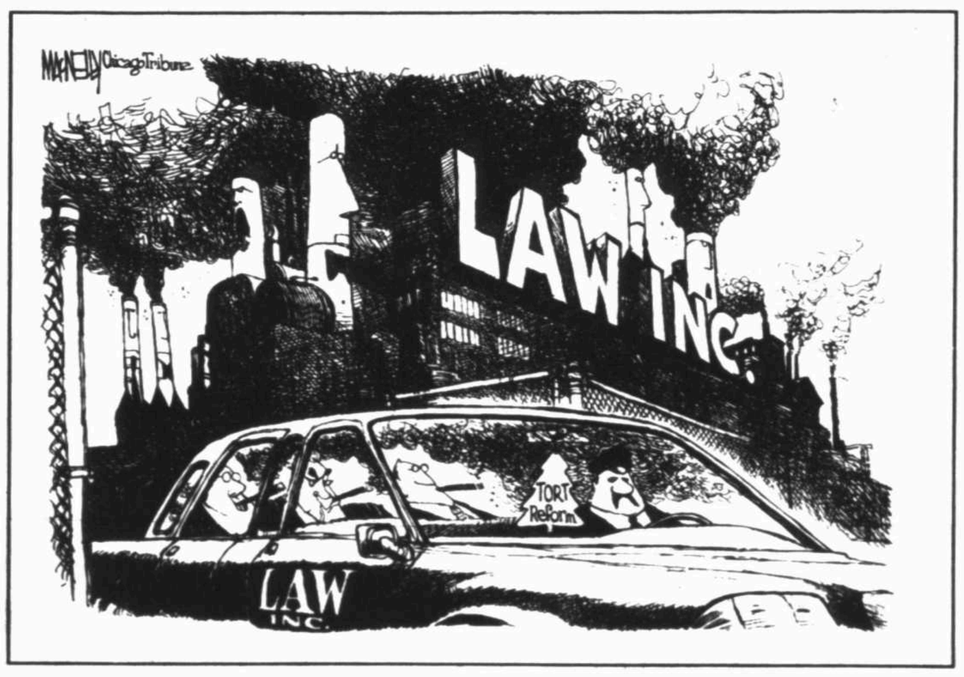

Computer databases across the nation are loaded with millions of pieces of personal data ready for sale. With the help of several privacy experts, we have compiled a list of some ways that private companies — and individuals — can meddle in your personal life:

■ Marketing firms make fortunes by compiling and selling blocks of data about individuals within certain income brackets, spending patterns or other personal characteristics. The data is taken from public records, after which it is used to make mailing lists and telemarketing lists. If you get married, subscribe to a magazine or enter a sweepstakes, you will undoubtedly end up on a mailing list. If you participate in a free health screening at a pharmacy or shopping mall, the information you give ends up in the data banks of companies that sell products related to the screening.

■ Strangers can obtain your medical records without your knowledge. When you sign a waiver during a visit to the doctor, it permits health care providers to release your medical records to insurance companies, government agencies and others. When you apply for a job, you may sign authorization forms for background checks that include checking your medical records.

Many people may not realize that their medical history could be stored in the Medical Information Bureau (MIB), which keeps records on about 15 million Americans for use by the insurance industry. When applying for insurance, you authorize that company to collect your medical records and to share the information with MIB. Insurance companies can use this information to weed out high-risk candidates.

Strong juvenile bill will help fight crime

Tough, strict, logical — all those adjectives apply to the new juvenile justice bill approved by a Texas House-Senate conference committee Monday (May 15).

The family code revision has something for everyone. The bill's sentencing provisions should please folks who want violent juveniles to spend more time in Texas Youth Commission facilities. The bill allows police agencies to keep photo and fingerprint records of juveniles. It contains progressive sanctions, which means than an offending youth receives stiffer and stiffer punishment with each new crime. Progressively harsher punishments should deter some young burglars from moving on to robbery or murder.

Most important, the final juvenile justice bill shows that legislators are beginning to understand the importance of prevention . Appropriations bills are being finalized, so the exact amount of money for preventive programs could still change. But it will be more than the state has ever spent on steering high-risk youths and young offenders away from a life of crime.

The Senate proposed adding about $42 million in prevention funds for boot camps, better mental health care for youngsters and an employment program for juvenile offenders. The Senate bill also included $38 million to fund services to truants, runaways and other at-risk youths and their families. That $80 million suggestion has been accepted by Appropriations Committee members, legislative aides say.

The final bill combined House and Senate bills without losing any important provisions. Gov. George Bush should sign the new family code, thus fulfilling a prominent campaign promise. Despite ducking other sticky problems — such as judicial reform and clarifying conflict-of-interest rules — legislators did well on this issue. Texas is finally launching a major effort to curb the rising juvenile crime rate.

Chinese show criticizes kickback economics

WASHINGTON — The television series soaring in popularity in China is about the exploits of Bao Qing Tien, a magistrate of the Soong Dynasty.

This legendary judge of a thousand years ago is shown dispensing evenhanded justice, punishing wrongdoers and exposing lawless government officials. The TV series is produced in Taiwan but can be seen in mainland China because it seems to be politically noncontroversial.

Safire

What makes the show such a hit, however, is its implicit criticism of corruption on high. Such kickback economics is rampant in China, making millionaires out of relatives of Communist leaders, Deng Xiaoping's son famously included.

That is one tea leaf in the reading of the rising tide of popular resentment in the world's most populous nation. China today is showing all the signs of being on the brink of a major upheaval.

On the eve of the sixth anniversary of the repression of freedom in Beijing's Tiananmen Square, longtime dissidents are being rounded up; scholarly signers of petitions for reform are being harassed and jailed; designated "troublemakers" from all over China are being denied entry to the capital.

As Deng Xiaoping prepares to "meet Marx," the sclerotic regime he leaves behind — embracing the dangerous excesses of capitalism without its saving freedoms — is left to face the "four fears."

First is the average Chinese consumer's fear of being robbed by inflation, now over 20 percent — which means that half of what he saves disappears after four years. The economic chief, Zhu Rongi, once a reformist who Richard Nixon thought might become the savior of China, has reverted to regulation, central control and protection of state-owned defense monoliths.

Second is the workers' fear of growing underemployment — commu-capitalism's dirty secret — especially away from the prosperous coast. Inland workers are migrating eastward, overcrowding cities and driving down wages, worsening inflation's impact.

Third is fear of the anger of farmers, their land encroached on by industrialization, who now prefer to sell to local entities and black markets than to Beijing's state purchasers. As in pre-revolutionary days, food shortages loom.

Finally, there is the well-founded fear in Beijing of some expression of the people's disgust at pervasive corruption. That explains not just the popularity of a Soong Dynasty Perry Mason, but the willingness of Deng's handpicked successor to crack down on a ring of grafters in Beijing's city government who make Tammany's Boss Tweed look like an innocent.

In the sincere syntax of Sinology, President Jiang Zemin's arrest of the head of the Communist Party in Beijing — a sleaze who was promoted to the Politburo for his brutality in crushing the Tiananmen demonstration — is perceived as a way for the transitional Jiang to gently dissociate himself from Deng's increasingly hated hard-liners.

Too many of us fall for subtle interpretations of maneuvering inside the Forbidden City as if it were comparable to jockeying for leadership within our Republican Party.

Forget that inside Ping-Pong, because the stakes are of a different magnitude: The after-Deng convulsion will determine whether a billion-plus people will progress toward democratic stability — or regress to the rigid totalitarianism that would lead to civil war within a nuclear power.

That's why we should be more actively on the side of the dissident scholars and students, publicizing their arrests, demanding their release, embarrassing their harassers.

That's why we should identify ourselves with courageous workers like the electrician Wei Jingsheng, jailed 15 years ago for wall posters protesting corruption, now held incommunicado lest his voice reach a new generation of workers. (A Nobel prize would help.)

That's why we should align ourselves with Asian decentralized democracy, protesting human rights abuses in Tibet; welcoming official visitors from Taiwan; using our market muscle to encourage freer enterprise.

The "four fears" may produce brittle dictators or leaders not fearful of freedom. We should know who to root for and be willing to use what influence we have.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, May 24, the 144th day of 1995. There are 221 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On May 24, 1844, Samuel F.B. Morse transmitted the message, "What hath God wrought!" from Washington to Baltimore as he formally opened America's first telegraph line.

On this date:

In 1819, Queen Victoria was born in London.

In 1830, the first passenger railroad in the United States began service between Baltimore and Elliott's Mills, Md.

In 1881, some 200 people died when the Canadian ferry Princess Victoria sank near London, Ontario.

Speech honors graduation that never happened

Every spring I choose one graduating class to address. This year was very special because I spoke to one that never was. On Sunday, May 14, 1995, George Washington University was supposed to hold its graduation. Chairs had been set up outdoors on the Ellipse to accommodate 3,000 students and 17,000 guests.

Buchwald

At 9 a.m. that morning it began to rain. Unbelievably, the university officials, having failed to make any alternative plans, called off the graduation.

I was one of the guests. The daughter of a friend of mine, Julie Margulies, was expecting to get her masters degree. Julie's party consisted of her grandmother, mother, father, sister and seven or eight out-of-town friends.

When to everyone's dismay the graduation was called off, we retired to the Four Seasons for a disconsolate brunch. It was there that I was prevailed upon to speak at a graduation that never happened.

"My fellow Americans: This is the greatest day of your life — or at least it could have been if someone hadn't rained on your parade. Your administration feels sick about the inconvenience, but it urges you to turn this into an educational experience that you will remember in the years to come.

"You are experiencing your first 'life is unfair' trauma, or what people in charge of graduations call an 'act of God.' This means that if you or your relatives and friends who came from all over the globe are upset, you should blame the Lord, not GW, for failing to have a backup plan.

"In the academic world, we call a failed graduation tough luck and obviously something that no administration is pleased with. But there's no reason for parents who shelled out $100,000 to make a big deal of it.

"And one more thing — just because you paid a $50 fee for your cap and gown doesn't mean you're not going to get it back even though your graduation never took place. Originally your school intended to use the $50 fee as a contribution to find out why no administrator thought to have a plan B — despite the fact that the weather experts had forecast rain.

"I wish that I could personally hand each of you your diploma, but I can't because by now almost every graduate and his family is speeding down the highway hardly talking to each other because someone goofed.

"I know that many of you are asking, 'Why me?' As a truly educated person you should be asking, 'Why not me?' When thinking back on this day you will always remember that even though it was wet at GW, the rain in Spain stays mainly in the plain.

"Could this graduation, and the 20,000 people who had hoped to be part of it, have been held in a dry gymnasium or Constitution Hall or the Kennedy Center?

"Yes, it could have, but that would have meant someone needed to think about it. You can't assume that university administrators with Ph.D.s think.

"My fellow students, do not despair because you are out in the cold in your rented caps and gowns. In the years ahead when your children ask you what you did on graduation day, you can honestly say, 'I was canceled.' "

I'm pleased to report that although it was a small crowd at the Four Seasons, I received a standing ovation from all the disappointed families in the room.

California Department of Justice criminalist Renee Montgomery, center, looks at blood types found at O.J. Simpson's home during Simpson's double-murder trial, Tuesday.

Another DNA test links O.J. to murder victims

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Prosecutors piled up more damaging DNA evidence Tuesday against O.J. Simpson with a scientist rattling off new test results showing Simpson's genetic fingerprints in blood at the crime scene.

Using a different method of DNA analysis than earlier prosecution experts, criminalist Renee Montgomery also testified that blood from Simpson's Ford Bronco and from a glove found on his property had the same genetic patterns as the victims and Simpson.

Renee Montgomery's rapid-fire recitation of results was in sharp contrast to the days spent by fellow state Department of Justice scientist Gary Sims and private laboratory director Robin Cotton to explain PCR and RFLP, two other forms of DNA testing.

Jurors took notes and often looked up at a 7-foot screen where Montgomery pointed out the test results linking Simpson to the slayings of his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman. Montgomery gave many of the same results that Sims and Cotton testified to over the past two weeks.

Montgomery said she was assigned to the Simpson case because of her experience with D1S80 tests — she has worked on more than 20 cases using the method. The process was developed in large part by the FBI and is coming into widespread use.

The publication "DNA in the Courtroom" describes it as the most proven of the latest testing methods that combine advantages of PCR and RFLP.

"The way I like to look at D1S80 is the marriage of PCR and RFLP," she said.

Montgomery's direct examination took just over two hours. Defense attorney Robert Blasier began his cross-examination by asking Montgomery about her credentials and hands-on experience.

Simpson's lawyers have pressed a two-pronged defense: that there was a conspiracy to frame him and that sloppy evidence collection by police rendered results useless.

Group advocates doomed babies as donors

CHICAGO (AP) — Babies born with most of their brains missing should be allowed to be used as organ donors before they're dead, a policy-setting committee of the American Medical Association says.

The proposal to change state laws to allow such transplants has created dissent within the AMA and renewed a debate among ethicists. Critics charge it's killing one patient to save another.

"It is," acknowledged Dr. John Glasson, chairman of the AMA Council on Ethical and Judicial Affairs, a nine-member committee whose opinions are considered AMA policy.

But anencephalic newborns, as they are known, are doomed and "don't have any consciousness," said Glasson, a retired North Carolina orthopedic surgeon.

Donating their organs would help ease a serious shortage for children needing transplants and help the parents of the anencephalic newborns deal with their grief, Glasson said.

But George Annas, a Boston University professor of health law, said, "You can't kill babies to take their organs no matter how many lives could be saved."

The committee proposal appears in Wednesday's edition of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

About 1,000 to 2,000 U.S. infants are born each year with anencephaly, in which most of the brain, skull and scalp are missing. Such infants have brain stems that allow them to maintain some body functions, such as breathing, sucking and crying.

Fewer than half survive more than a day; more than 90 percent are dead within a week. Their vital organs deteriorate as they slip toward death, rendering the organs useless for transplants unless removed soon after birth, the AMA committee said.

In 1988, the committee declared that it is ethical to use anencephalic infants as organ donors only after they have died. But the Baby Theresa case in Florida helped change minds on the committee.

In that 1992 case, the baby's parents learned they had an anencephalic fetus but instead of an abortion wanted to offer her organs for transplant after birth. But the Florida Supreme Court denied the parents' request because of a state law requiring organ donors to be dead. The baby died nine days after birth, and none of her organs was suitable for transplant.

Senate rejects Gramm's tax-cut proposal by 68-32 vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate shot down Sen. Phil Gramm's effort Tuesday to add tax cuts to the Republican balanced-budget plan, exposing deep rifts within GOP ranks over one of the party's premier priorities for the year.

In a fight driven as much by presidential politics as anything else, senators rejected the plan by the Texas Republican and presidential candidate by a vote of 68-32.

As expected, Gramm ran into solid opposition from Democrats and from Republicans who prefer an all-out effort to eliminate deficits. All 46 Democrats, joined by 22 of 54 Republicans, voted "no."

Gramm proposed cutting taxes on families, businesses and investors by $160 billion over five years in a package that was similar to the collection of levy reductions already approved by the House. In that chamber, Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., has called the tax cuts the "crown jewel" of the "Contract With America," the campaign pledges GOP candidates made to the electorate last fall.

But the vote did not mean that the Senate had spoken its last on taxes.

Tax cuts appeal deeply to many conservatives who will vote in the GOP primaries next year, and another presidential contender — Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole — seemed unlikely to let the opportunity pass. The Kansas Republican was expected to offer a smaller alternative, perhaps today, that could provide tax credits for families and reduce the capital gains tax, said GOP Senate aides who spoke on condition of anonymity.

As Republicans tussled over taxes, President Clinton pledged to work with them toward eliminating the deficit within a specified period, but not in seven years as the GOP prefers.

Before the vote that he knew would fall short, Gramm argued that his tax-cut plan would let Republicans demonstrate their desire to "let working men and women keep more of what they earn," a theme he uses frequently.

Dole, who voted for Gramm's amendment, refused to say he would offer an alternative of his own. But he has said repeatedly that the Senate will vote to lower taxes.

"I like tax cuts," he said Tuesday.

Without mentioning Dole by name, Gramm seemed to take issue with the majority leader's plan, which Senate sources said probably would cut taxes for about three years.

"Coming back later with some temporary tax cut, some cut-a-deal proposal, undermines what the American people wanted us to do" when they elected a Republican Congress last fall, Gramm said.

The tax maneuvering occurred as the Senate debated a GOP outline for culling nearly $1 trillion in savings from Medicare, Medicaid, and hundreds of other programs over the next seven years, eliminating federal deficits by 2002. The overall measure, which probably will be approved today, omits tax cuts for now but would permit them once a plan for balancing the budget becomes law.

Democrats argued that the proposed tax cut sounded like a reheated version of the 1980s, when President Reagan sought tax cuts and a balanced budget and ended up with record federal deficits.

"In the old Western moves, we've seen these folks going around peddling bottles of tonic," mocked Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D.

Jury convicts man under new domestic violence law

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — A man was found guilty today of beating his wife into a coma and driving from state to state with her in the car trunk. It was the first conviction under the nation's new domestic violence law.

Christopher Bailey showed no emotion as the jury verdict was read in U.S. District Court: guilty of kidnapping and violating the federal Violence Against Women Act, passed by Congress last August.

Prosecutors claimed that in November, Bailey, 34, beat his 33-year-old wife, Sonya, then drove for six days aimlessly around West Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio with her unconscious in the car trunk. He finally took her to a hospital.

Mrs. Bailey remains in a coma, and doctors testified she would never have a normal life.

Bailey's lawyers argued that since their client was under the heavy influence of alcohol, he couldn't have intended to harm his wife.

Bailey, a handyman at a nursing home, testified he could only remember arguing with his wife in a bar in their hometown of St. Albans and waking up in a place he didn't recognize to find her, severely injured, in the back seat of their car. He said he drove around a few days longer, hoping she would get better, before taking her to a hospital.

Prosecutors said there was blood in the trunk, not in the back seat.

The jury got the case late this morning and deliberated for about 2 1/2 hours. Two of Bailey's daughters from a previous marriage broke down in tears when the verdict was read.

Neither Bailey nor his court-appointed lawyers would say whether they would appeal.

Sentencing was set for Aug. 21. The kidnapping conviction carries a maximum sentence of life in prison. The domestic violence charges carries a punishment of up to 20 years for serious bodily harm or permanent injury and up to life if the victim dies.

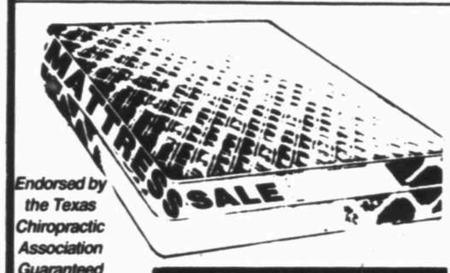

Joe Krovisky, a Justice Department spokesman in Washington, confirmed it was the first conviction under the law.

City to develop master plan for funds

■ Officials hear input from community leaders regarding Community Development Block Grant.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Midland city officials met at the Southeast Community Multi-purpose Center with representatives from multiple agencies that receive funds or wish to receive funds from the 1995-96 Community Development Block Grant (CDBG).

At the Tuesday evening meeting, city officials gained input from community leaders regarding the grant money that is earmarked for use in less affluent portions of the city.

"We're here to get input — get ideas as to how City Council members should distribute these funds," said Sylvester Cantu, administrator of community development for Midland.

After gathering input from the community, city officials will develop a master plan for all expenditures from this year's CDBG. This plan will be presented in a June 27 meeting and will be discussed for the following 30 days before being finally approved on Aug. 8.

The plan is a new, added burden in administering the CDBG this year, he said.

This year's grant will be $1,416,000, compared to the $1,548,485 that was received last year, Cantu said.

"We did have a cut in the CDBG this year, and may have a bigger one next year," council member Juluis Brooks said.

One by one, representatives from many community service groups from the south and east portions of the city related their reasons for needing funding from the CDBG.

Funded last year and seeking funding again this year are: the Southeast Midland Senior Nutrition Program, $64,000; Prime Time After School Care at the YMCA, $33,700; Summer Child Care Program at the YMCA, $25,000; the Citywide Home Cleaning Program of Casa De Amigos, $21,000; the lot clearing program, $50,000; demolition program, $50,000; Target Area Code Enforcement, $40,585; Housing Rehabilitation, $300,000; Housing Programs Administration, $60,000; Housing Emergency Repairs program $50,000; Home Ownership Incentive program, $50,000; Street Paving program, $400,000; and Park Improvements, $598,000.

New programs needing CDBG funding are: a therapeutic playground for Bynum School, $23,000; an outreach clinic of Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, $42,502; a mobile police substation, $150,000; and building renovation for the Eastside Lions Club, $21,074.

Additional requests are: $161,000 for CDBG administration, $71,000 for indirect costs and a $20,000 contingency fund.

Bug in burger

Midland health officials are calling a bug found in a woman's hamburger from Sonic Drive-in, 2310 N. Big Spring St., an "isolated incident." Monette Burke, director of the Midland Health Department, said the Midland woman reported the Sunday incident to police, who called the Health Department. Officials found a ladybug in the woman's hamburger and one in the lettuce at the restaurant. However, the establishment met Health Department standards. "We believe this was an isolated incident," Ms. Burke said. The department will conduct a follow-up inspection later this week.

Family looks to TV show to help find missing daughter

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

As law-enforcement officials filed new charges against a former youth minister missing since April 13, the family of a teen-ager who fled with him is hoping "America's Most Wanted" can help bring their daughter home.

An unlawful flight to avoid prosecution charge was filed by the FBI against 35-year-old Chuck Adair Tuesday in federal court. He also faces a charge of sexual assault of a child, filed last week by Midland police.

Adair, a former youth minister at Golf Course Road Church of Christ, and 15-year-old Kristen Berryhill were last seen together about 3 p.m. on April 13. Police said last week that they believe Ms. Berryhill left Midland willingly with Adair.

Ms. Berryhill has been listed by the police as a runaway.

In the affidavit filed Tuesday, an FBI special agent said that Midland Police Detective B.J. Johnson reported he had spoken to Adair's father, Charles Adair II of Nashville, Tenn. The elder Adair said his son called him and said he was en route to Nashville.

The affidavit also stated that police officials believe Adair and Ms. Berryhill left the Midland area on Saturday.

As law-enforcement officials continue to search, Ms. Berryhill's parents, Jamie and Renda Berryhill, contacted the local Fox affiliate about getting their story on "America's Most Wanted."

A segment on Adair and Ms. Berryhill will air on Saturday, two weeks after they Berryhills reported their daughter missing.

"The Lord has opened doors for us, through this television show," said Berryhill. "We have not given up hope that we will find Kristen. The Lord has given us a peace about it.

"Now, I just hope that the authorities will keep pressing to find them like they have," he said. "When things like this drag on for awhile, sometimes the search lets up."

The Berryhills attended Golf Course Road Church of Christ, where Kristen met Adair, but since she has been missing, they have has quit attending services, Berryhill said.

"That (Adair and Ms. Berryhills' disappearance) bore into our decision to quit going," Berryhill said.

Investigation uncovers illegal transfer of food stamps

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

A three-month investigation into food-stamp abuse led area law officials to issue 64 counts of illegal transfer of food stamps against 36 area individuals and businesses.

The investigation was conducted by the Texas Department of Human Services Investigation Division, the Permian Basin Drug Task Force and the Midland and Ector county sheriff's offices.

During the investigation, undercover officials used approximately $16,500 in food stamps to buy liquor, household appliances, jewelry, televisions, VCRs, camcorders and other items. Officials also recovered $3,600 in cash.

Permian Basin Drug Task Force Commander Tom Finley said undercover officers bought a Dodge van, a refrigerator and a Port-A-Potty from Antonia Mohge of Odessa Monday evening.

Officials arrested Ms. Mohge and she was charged with six counts of illegal transfer of food stamps.

Officials expected to serve the 64 warrants Tuesday and today. The names of the individuals and businesses would be released after the warrants were issued.

"This is a big business," said Don McWhorter, regional supervisor of the Texas Department of Human Services. "It is not as lucrative as business in the big cities, but that is because the volume is not as big."

McWhorter said the people who sold items for food stamps usually charged about 50 cents on the dollar and then would sell the stamps for full value.

Illegal transfer of food stamps is a felony charge if the amount of the stamps is more than $200.

Food stamps, a program of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, are to be used only for food, Finley said.

MISD board member challenges justice of the peace elections

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

A Midland Independent School Board member has filed a civil rights lawsuit against Midland County and the county commissioners challenging the method of election for justices of the peace.

Adela Marmolejo filed the lawsuit April 11 in federal court naming Midland County, County Judge Jeff Norwood, commissioners Henry Goulet, Guy McCrary, Louisa Valencia and James Brezina.

Ms. Marmolejo is represented by San Antonio attorney Rolando Rios, who has represented several Hispanics in local cases regarding the at-large election system in Texas.

The litigation — challenging the at-large system of electing justices of the peace — claims the system violates the Texas Constitution.

The plaintiff is seeking a declaratory judgment and a permanent injunction prohibiting the certification of any future JP elections under the present election system.

She is seeking the formation of an election system that includes single-member electoral districts "to ensure a court of justices of the peace whose elections will not cancel out, minimize or dilute the voting strength of minority voters."

The existing method of electing JPs violates her civil rights because it "unlawfully dilutes the voting strength of minority voters ...

"The adoption and maintenance of the present voting scheme grows out of intentional racial discrimination designed to dilute and minimize the Mexican-American voting strength," according to her lawsuit.

Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe, who has been in office for nine years, said he feels that the way JPs are elected at-large is fair.

Jobe serves as JP along with Robert Pine, who has been in office since 1964. In the Nov. 8 election, Pine defeated Democratic candidate Manuel Lujan.

Jobe said the present system of electing judges in Midland County has been in place for 25 years and "has worked well for Midland County and I believe we handle the job well and represent the people well."

"You know the old saying, 'If it ain't broke, don't fix it.'"

Lightning sets off grass fires, false alarms

By Katherine Poteet and Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writers

A Tuesday afternoon thunderstorm wreaked havoc on Midland's finest with officers responding to lightning strikes, grass fires and false alarms across town.

Only 0.07 inches of rain fell between 3-4 p.m., with no reports of hail or strong winds, according to the National Weather Service. However, deadly lightning from the quick storm caused its share of problems in the area.

Lightning struck several times in the west and northwest part of town, police Sgt. David Garcia said.

A house was reportedly struck by lightning at Lee and Washington streets and lightning started a grass fire near The Lakes apartments. Garcia said rainfall extinguished the fire.

Officers responded to several major accidents and traffic lights that went out, he said.

Garcia said alarms were going off all over town and officers had to respond to them. He said strong winds can vibrate buildings, setting the alarms off or lightning can cause power surges and trigger the alarms.

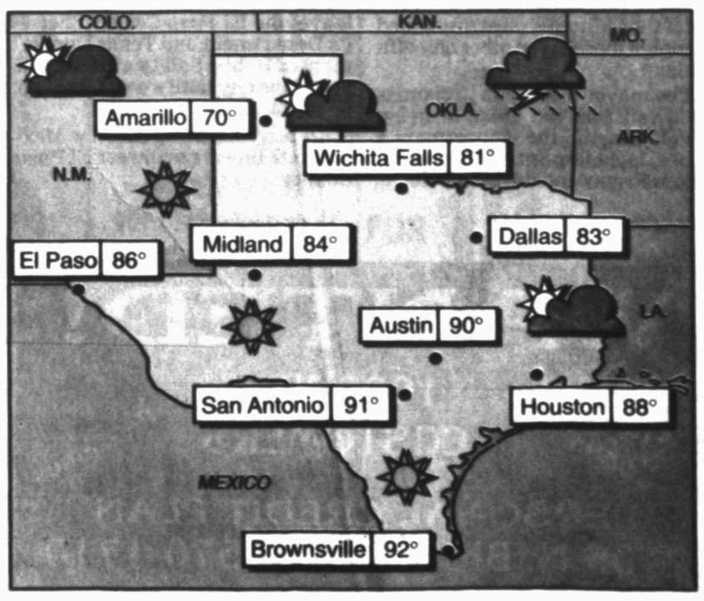

An air conditioner at Alamo Junior High was struck by lightning causing a brief power outage. One teacher said she could smell smoke after the lightning struck.

A power line at Rusk Elementary was struck causing the power to go off and for a brief time.

Rain is not in the forecast for today, however, a NWS forecaster said a chance of isolated, afternoon thunderstorms could come back into the forecast as early as Thursday.

The forecaster said Tuesday's storm was typical for this time of year, with clouds building up in the late afternoon and dispersing quickly. The storms can also contain lightning, strong winds and hail.

Skies should be partly cloudy today with a high in the upper 80s and southwest to west winds at 10-20 mph. Tonight will continue to be partly cloudy with a low in the upper 50s.

SUE: MISD board member files lawsuit

(From 1B)

The litigation claims the state constitution says Midland County should have at least four justices of the peace and should be divided into four precincts. Currently, the litigation states, Midland County has two JPs elected at-large from one precinct using a place system and the other three precincts are non-entities and inactive. Ms. Marmolejo's lawsuit contends that by eliminating JPs in three precincts, the county is not complying with state laws.

The lawsuit states Mexican-Americans make up 21 percent of the county's population and are primarily concentrated in one area, so single-member precincts would give minorities a better chance of getting elected.

"There exists in Midland County a white voting bloc that, absent special circumstances such as the minority candidate running unopposed, will usually defeat the choice of the Mexican-American community," the lawsuit states.

Norwood declined to comment on the lawsuit until the county's response has been filed. He said the county's attorneys are drafting a response to the litigation that will be filed sometime before late June.

County Attorney Mark Dettman was unavailable for comment. Norwood said Dettman indicated he didn't have the time or resources to deal with this lawsuit. The county retained the law firm of Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin and Browder to handle the case.

Ex-death row inmate sues officials for $200 million

HOUSTON (AP) — An accused killer who spent 13 years on Texas death row before an appeals court overturned his sentence filed a $200 million federal lawsuit Tuesday against Smith County Sheriff J.B. Smith and two deputies.

Andrew Lee Mitchell, 50, accuses Smith and deputies Walter Woodhull and Chantell Woodhull, who are husband and wife, of conspiring to supress evidence that would have cleared him during his 1980 capital murder trial.

The formerly condemned man, who also alleges numerous civil rights violations including false imprisonment, seeks $100 million in compensatory damages and $100 million in punitive damages.

"They held him on death row for 13 years despite having knowledge of exculpatory evidence," Los Angeles attorney Federico Sayre, who represents Mitchell, said.

"We want an example made of them so that other similarly situated law enforcement officials do not engage in this type of outrageous conduct."

Smith County officials, including the sheriff, still maintain Mitchell is guilty of the murder he was convicted of 15 years ago.

Mitchell was sentenced to die for the slaying of Keith Wills during a Dec. 26, 1979 robbery at a roadside business near Tyler. He was released from death row in July 1993, five months after the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals granted his request for a new trial.

The court, in its ruling, said statements made by two men who observed the crime scene should have been introduced during a trial.

Mitchell's lawsuit claims the defendants "suppressed material exculpatory evidence which proved plaintiff was innocent."

The Woodhulls, who initially investigated the Wills murder but no longer work as sheriff's department investigators, have an unlisted telephone number and could not be reached Tuesday by The Associated Press.

Smith, while declining comment on the lawsuit, reiterated his claim that Mitchell killed Wills.

"I feel strongly that by July or August he'll be back on death row," Smith said. "We're going to do our best to put him back ... Maybe he can sue us from there."

Mitchell, who now owns a small lawn mower rental-and-repair business in Tyler and is expected to be retried in the Wills murder this summer, said he is "looking forward to being exonerated."

"How could he put me back on death row?" Mitchell said of Smith. "He's not the prosecutor ... He's overlooking the truth. He won't own up to it."

Mitchell's attorneys claim the defendants suppressed statements from two law officers who allegedly reported seeing Wills alive up to two hours after the murder was to have occurred. That scenario, if true, would have given Mitchell an alibi.

Mitchell, who came within hours of being executed in 1984, admits being at the fireworks stand where Wills worked on the night of the killing but maintains his innocence in the murder.

Former congressman starts 3-year prison term

EL PASO (AP) — Former Congressman Albert Bustamante chatted about golf, admired El Paso's weather and bragged about his children as he was driven to a federal prison camp Monday to begin serving a three-year sentence.

Bustamante, who was convicted in 1993 of accepting a bribe and using his office to engage in criminal enterprise, will spend the next 36 months at the minimum-security camp at Biggs Army Airfield on the sprawling Fort Bliss installation.

On his way to the camp, Bustamante seemed upbeat. He cracked an occasional joke, reminisced about days spent at Fort Bliss when he was in the Army and talked proudly about his adult children, one of whom has applied to Harvard. But on occasion he would blast the federal government for the way it prosecuted him.

"The government put a spin on it, and they said Bustamante got a gift. That's my crime," said the 60-year-old San Antonio Democrat, who was defeated in 1992 amid continuing reports of the investigation.

Bustamante entered prison about 2:30 p.m. where a prison spokesman said he was then fingerprinted and photographed. The ex-lawmaker entered virtually empty-handed, except for some spending money, wearing a polo shirt and slacks.

He would be issued a blue shirt, pants, and gray cap, and assigned to a temporary work detail picking up litter and cigarette butts from a compound until he can be given a medical exam, prison spokesman Hilario Terrazas said.

Bustamante was convicted of two counts of accepting a $35,000 bribe from businessman Eddie Garcia, president of Falcon Foods, to help Garcia retain a food concession contract at Lackland Air Force Base.

He also was found guilty of racketeering while in Congress by using his office as a criminal enterprise to obtain a bribe.

Bustamante accepted a $20,000 guaranteed loan in 1985 to purchase stock in the fledgling San Antonio Video Corp., court records show. The venture could have garnered $650,000 if the corporation acquired a television station license from the Federal Communications Commission and became operational.

He was acquitted of eight counts, including one charge of receiving more than $300,000 in bribes from 1985 to 1991.

His wife, attorney Rebecca Bustamante, who was implicated in the bribery charges, was exonerated.

U.S. District Judge Edward Prado sentenced Bustamante to two years in prison for accepting an illegal gratuity and three years for the racketeering charge.

The sentences will run concurrently.

"What's so insulting in this is the way that the government really went after it (the case). They just put so much expense into it," Bustamante said during his last minutes of freedom.

He blamed the government's spin on the case for his conviction on what he said otherwise would have been viewed as ordinary business transactions.

Bustamante lost his congressional seat to San Antonio Republican Henry Bonilla in 1992, ending an eight-year stint that was marked by criticism of his official travel junkets and his admission that he wrote more than $9,700 in hot checks to the House Bank.

Bustamante appealed the verdict asking that his conviction involving the TV plan be overturned and also requested that his bribery conviction be reversed.

The convictions and sentences were upheld by the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in February.

Before entering the prison camp, Bustamante said one of his attorneys intends to pursue an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Earlier in the day, reports surfaced about whether Bustamante was to enter prison Monday. Officials, who earlier said no reporting date had been set, later said the confusion was the result of problems in reaching the U.S. Marshal's Service, which was responsible for Bustamante's reporting date.

Police chief's dismissal could lead to entire department's resignation

ANTHONY (AP) — The proposed dismissal of a small town police chief could potentially empty out the entire force.

The town of Anthony's eight officers are threatening to resign if the City Council doesn't overturn Mayor Art Franco's decision to dismiss Chief H.B. "Sandy" Caldwell. The council was scheduled to vote on the matter Tuesday night.

Franco has said he is not reappointing Caldwell because of alleged inappropriate conduct, including using his police vehicle for personal business and insulting other appointed officials.

"I just think that I need somebody that I can trust, that will follow my instructions as far as the department should be and where it should go," Franco told The Associated Press in a brief interview.

Caldwell, who is the chief until the council decides otherwise, said Franco's allegations are "all basically false."

He said the mayor's actions are in retaliation for an equal employment opportunity complaint the chief filed after his pay raise failed to match those given other city officials.

The mayor's decision to dismiss Caldwell has led to a brewing revolt among the department's ranks, including Sgt. Luis Moreno, whom Franco intends to appoint as interim police chief.

Besides threatening to resign, officers in this town of 3,700 took to the streets during the weekend to collect signatures on a petition urging that Caldwell be reinstated.

They have also made a series of complaints alleging overinvolvement by Franco in departmental affairs.

Franco has acknowledged that he does get involved in police business.

"With all the mismanagement, I have to get involved," Franco was quoted as saying in Tuesday's El Paso Times. "I'm afraid about what's happening" and the possibility of lawsuits against the city.

He said he regrets that his decision to replace Caldwell may lead to the loss of what he has called fine officers.

"I hate to see them go, but I will not be intimidated by them or coerced by them in any way, shape of form," he said.

Franco said that if the officers do leave, the El Paso County Sheriff's Department and Texas Department of Public Safety officers will patrol the city until a new force can be hired.

Anthony sits along the New Mexico state line in northwest El Paso County.

Two Texans defy odds, give birth to quadruplets without fertility drugs

FORT WORTH (AP) — The odds may have been stacked against it, but two Texas women have defied probability by delivering quadruplets — without the aid of fertility drugs.

Odds-breakers Susan Collier of Benbrook and Sonia Cabral of El Paso now are scrambling to make room at home for their newborns, who were delivered by Caesarean section Monday within a half hour of each other.

Sixteen weeks into her pregnancy, Mrs. Collier, 28, and her husband, Steve, a 40-year-old police detective, were told to expect four babies instead of one.

"We couldn't believe it," Mrs. Collier said Tuesday from Harris Methodist Fort Worth hospital, where she was listed in good condition. "You never think something like this is going to happen to you ... and then it does."

Topping that — the boys were two sets of identical twins.

Ms. Cabral, 21, said she, too, got more than anticipated in the delivery room.

"I was just surprised. I thought there were just three. But no, there was another one," she said of the two girls and two boys born eight weeks early.

'I was just surprised. I thought there were just three. but no, there was another one.'

—Sonia Cabral
mother of quads

Surprisingly, neither mother had been taking fertility drugs.

The odds of spontaneous quadruplets are more than one in 500,000, Harris Methodist hospital officials said.

Dr. Bannie Tabor, an obstetrician who specializes in high-risk deliveries, said the Collier newborns were delivered without complication and are expected to develop just fine. Born 10 weeks premature, however, they are being kept in intensive care.

"In two months, the hospital will release the children one at a time so that we can have some time to adjust to each individual child," Collier said. "Dumping them all on us at once would make things too hectic. We need to get a game plan together first."

That includes turning the garage into a large nursery.

Three of the Cabral newborns are hooked up to respirators because of their underdeveloped lungs. Their mother was listed in good condition at Thomason Hospital.

Ms. Cabral, who before now has shared an apartment with her 4-year-old son, expects to have her hands full. She said she has no family in El Paso to help with the quadruplets.

"I'm going to do what I can," Ms. Cabral said.

Commissioner defends Rangers

AUSTIN (AP) — A man who helped spearhead the drive to enlist the first female members of the Texas Rangers Tuesday defended the elite crime-fighting agency against complaints of sexual harassment.

Ronald Krist served as chairman of the three-member Public Safety Commission when Cheryl Steadman made history in 1993 as one of the first two women inducted into the Rangers.

The commission oversees the Department of Public Safety and its unique Texas Ranger force, which numbers 103.

Ms. Steadman told The Associated Press Monday that she has filed a complaint against the Rangers with the Texas Commission on Human Rights, alleging sexual harassment, discrimination and retaliation.

"We have tried very hard to recruit qualified females who would feel comfortable in the Ranger service," said Krist, a Houston attorney who continues to serve as a public safety commissioner.

"It pains me enormously that it didn't work out with Cheryl."

Ms. Steadman's charges stem largely from events surrounding a March 1994 meeting that she said included "23 drunk Rangers" at a two-bedroom cabin in Southeast Texas.

She said she was told to peel potatoes, make a salad and perform other "womanly" chores while her male colleagues were gambling, drinking and traipsing in and out of the two bathrooms without closing the doors.

Some officers told crude stories, she said, and one read a poem about the "sexual prowess" of a recently retired Ranger.

After a year at the Ranger office in Houston, Ms. Steadman asked for and received a transfer into the DPS motor vehicle theft division, where she is still assigned.

Gov. George W. Bush said his office was looking into the matter.

"Every Texan deserves respect. Disrespectful treatment toward any Texan, in this case a female Texas Ranger, that is not acceptable behavior," Bush said.

DPS spokesman Mike Cox said an internal probe into the allegations is ongoing.

Krist said he investigated the retreat and "found nothing improper about what went on there. Nothing was swept under the rug by any means."

"Everyone pitches in and does their share at those outings. We thought it would be awkward to ask her to do less because then it would be a form of discrimination," Krist said. "But it was not some wild, gambling, drinking outing."

"When you are the only woman around a group of men, I am certain that she could feel awkward. But those men are above intentionally doing anything to embarrass or intimidate her into thinking that she was anything less than an equal in the Ranger service," Krist said.

The ranking officers at the retreat were W.D. Vickers, her captain from Houston, and Maurice Cook, the senior Ranger captain.

Krist said he, Vickers and Cook had a vested interest in seeing that Ms. Steadman succeed.

"It was on my watch that females were brought into the Ranger service," Krist said.

An appointee of former Gov. Ann Richards, Krist served as chairman of the Public Safety Commission from 1992 until January before Bush appointed Robert Holt of Midland as chair.

Richards, who now works in the Austin office of a Washington-based law firm, was traveling Tuesday and couldn't be reached for comment, according to an assistant at the law firm.

"The last thing we wanted was to have her fail. We were ridiculed by former Rangers who didn't want women in," Krist added.

"I would like to have proved the critics wrong to the extent that I would like to show that females can compatibly work and make an enormous contribution to service in the Rangers."

Arena tax bill strikes out in House

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislation to allow tax dollars to be used for building professional sports facilities struck out Tuesday in the Texas House.

The bill had been scheduled for debate but was sent back to committee on a procedural tactic employed by a legislator who said the measure amounted to corporate welfare.

The action may have killed the bill for the legislative session, which ends Monday. However, supporters said they weren't ready to give up yet.

"This is the clutch Capitol," said Gary Bradley, part owner of the Houston Rockets, which has been lobbying for the bill along with other professional sports franchises in Texas.

Sen. Royce West, D-Dallas, the bill's author, said he would continue working to try to get the bill passed. "It's not dead yet," he said.

The measure has been approved by the Senate but still requires House passage.

The bill would allow cities to create sports enterprise zones with governing authorities empowered to construct or renovate 10 sports facility projects.

The authorities would be eligible for rebates of certain state and local taxes for up to 30 years.

The bill has been backed by the NFL's Dallas Cowboys and Houston Oilers; the NBA's Dallas Mavericks, Houston Rockets and San Antonio Spurs; and the NHL's Dallas Stars.

Team owners say the measure is needed to keep the franchises, and the revenue they bring into the state, in Texas.

"This is all about where these teams are going to play," said Bradley, who contends the state would lose tourist dollars and merchandise revenues if it loses its sports teams.

"What kind of message are we sending across the United States if we're willing to lose one of our pro sports teams? It's no accident that your top four tourism states also have the most sports teams," Bradley said. "You do the math."

West said the cost of the bill would be offset by the revenue generated by the facilities.

"I look at it as a mechanism to maintain the various sports franchises that we have and also to increase the revenue sources for the state of Texas," he said.

Opponents said the measure would cost taxpayers millions of dollars, citing a projection by the Legislative Budget Board that the bill could cost as much as $180 million in its first five years.

"You've got a tremendous cost to the state no matter who tries to play with the numbers," said Rep. Kim Brimer, R-Arlington, who prevented consideration of the bill.

Fossil find suggests bees came before flowers

By John Noble Wilford
N.Y. Times News Service

Before time turned them to stone at least 220 million years ago, the fossilized logs of the Petrified Forest in eastern Arizona stood as tall trees in a tropical environment.

Many of them, scientists have now discovered, still bear traces of insect nests the trees once harbored. The logs are riddled with holes containing little chambers strung together in lines or clusters, nearly everything about them resembling the nests of modern bees.

The problem is that flowers date from only half as long ago. Could bees have lived before flowers? The very idea, once unthinkable, is upsetting traditional theory about the early history of bees and their supposed co-evolution with flowering plants, or angiosperms.

If confirmed by further research, the new findings at the Petrified Forest mean that bees were buzzing around some 140 million years earlier than previously thought. The oldest known fossil of a bee is an 80-million-year-old specimen trapped in amber from present-day New Jersey. Scientists now must be on the lookout for fossil bees to fill that huge time gap.

And then they must figure out what those bees were doing before the emergence of angiosperms, the earliest evidence for which is dated at 110 million to 120 million years ago. Either flowers actually appeared much earlier than anyone can conceive, or the first bees did without flowers for a long time, feeding on and pollinating cone-bearing, woody plants known as gymnosperms, a group that includes conifers, cycads and ferns.

In the latter and more likely case, scientists said, the discovery casts serious doubt on the standard theory that flowering plants and social insects like bees more or less evolved together, with the spread of flowers presumably influencing the development and proliferation of the bees.

"This new evidence suggests it was probably the other way around, and that insects like bees and wasps may have facilitated the evolution and diversification of angiosperms," said Stephen T. Hasiotis, a paleobiologist at the U.S. Geological Survey in Denver and a doctoral student in geology at the University of Colorado at Boulder.

Hasiotis came upon the fossil bee nests while conducting studies aimed at reconstructing the ancient ecosystem and climate at the Petrified Forest, particularly as it applied to invertebrate life. He and other researchers found the remains of several hundred nests and cocoons, and tests put their ages at 207 million to 220 million years. Although no bee or wasp body parts were found with the fossil nests, they said, the only creatures that make similar structures today are bees and wasps.

The discovery was announced last week by Hasiotis at a regional meeting of the Geological Society of America, held at Montana State University in Bozeman. His collaborators were Dr. Russell Dubiel of the Geological Survey in Denver and Dr. Tim Demko of Colorado State University.

Despite the discovery's stunning implications, other scientists tended to react favorably, in part because the evidence seemed compelling and it supported recent revisionist thinking about insect evolution. This stems from a growing recognition that the greatest expansion and diversification of insects occurred many millions of years before the appearance of flowering plants.

"We're all very impressed," said Dr. Charles D. Michener, an entomologist at Kansas University in Lawrence who is the author of "The Social Behavior of Bees," published by Harvard University Press in 1974. Hasiotis visited the Kansas campus earlier this year and showed the evidence to Michener and his colleagues.

Michener agreed that the fossil nests looked like the clusters of chambers, or cells, that make up the nests of modern bees. But like other scientists, he cautioned that more research would be needed to confirm the findings. It is always possible that some insect no longer extant made bee-like nests back then. The best evidence, of course, would be to find some fossil bees associated with the nests, he said.

"It's exactly what we would have expected," was the reaction of Dr. J. John Sepkoski Jr., a paleontologist at the University of Chicago.

If Okla. suspect was obsessed with Waco, he was not alone

By Mitchell Landsberg
Associated Press

WACO — For the past year and a half, Amo Bishop Roden has seen the visitors arrive. They pull up in their cars, their trucks, their vans. They get out, wander around. They try to absorb the spirit of the spooky, ravaged and oddly beautiful place she calls home.

Sometimes, they take jokey pictures of each other amid the ruins. Sometimes, they ask lots of questions. Sometimes, they cry.

"A lot of women cry here," Roden says in a soft voice almost lost to the wind whooshing through a chinaberry tree. "I suppose that'll be the same in Oklahoma when they put a monument there."

It was on April 19, during the dedication of a monument to the perished members of the Branch Davidian religious sect here, that Roden first learned of the bombing of a federal building in Oklahoma City.

Many Americans were surprised, two days later, to hear that the FBI had accused Timothy McVeigh, a suspect in the bombing, of carrying it out in revenge for the government's deadly siege of the Branch Davidians. Precisely two years before, nearly 80 sect members had died when fire consumed their multibuilding compound.

It didn't surprise Amo Roden in the least. As the last remaining resident of the Branch Davidian's property, she knows as well as anyone just how deeply the Waco tragedy stirred a small but passionate subsection of Americans.

She sees them every day.

"People come for three reasons," Roden said. "They come because they're tourists and they just want to see it, they come because it's a religious shrine, and they come because it's a shrine to the diminishing civil rights, civil liberties, constitutional rights — that kind of thing."

Among those who have made pilgrimages, according to the government, is Timothy McVeigh.

Along with a similar but smaller scale siege at the cabin of white separatist Randy Weaver in Idaho, the Waco disaster has kindled a potent backlash among many extremely conservative Americans, particularly those in the self-described "patriot" or "militia" movements.

"It's the single most repeated theme used by militia organizers ... to show that the government is at war with anyone who won't kowtow to it," said Irwin Suall of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, which monitors the militia movement and the far right.

"They're infuriated by Waco," said Angie Lowry, a researcher for Klanwatch, which also monitors far-right groups. "If there's anything that unites the right-wing movements in this country today, it's the 2nd Amendment (the right to bear arms) and Waco."

From the start, Waco was a rallying cry for, among others, neo-Nazi and other white supremacist groups. There may be some irony in this, since the Branch Davidians were multiracial and multiethnic, but leaders of the racist right were able to overlook the group's rainbow hues and focus on a greater enemy: the federal government.

Other, officially nonracist, militia groups were formed in the months following Waco. Among them was the Texas Constitutional Militia, which, like its counterparts elsewhere, is dedicated to upholding state's rights — at gunpoint, if need be.

"It was a galvanizing situation," spokesman Ralph Turner said.

NASHVILLE — Rain, snow, freezing temperatures or blazing sun, Cody Short usually waits for the trolley to pick her up at 11:30 a.m. to take her downtown for lunch.

"We love it when he rings the bell," said Short, a state employee who rides the trolley to restaurants and shopping spots. "I pretend I'm in San Francisco. It's nostalgic."

Lots of people share Short's affection. Trolleys — or at least buses with trolley-like bodies — are being brought back by the dozens in Southern cities.

Two-thirds of the cities with trolleys are in the South, according to the American Public Transit Association.

"They are just really starting to catch on again," said Richard McFadden, owner of Cable Car Concepts, a Florida trolley manufacturer. "The trolley car has got more appeal than a bus and is only one- third the cost."

Trolley buses are smaller and cheaper to manufacture than regular buses because they are more simple. Many aren't air-conditioned and have only a few windows to give them an outdoor feel.

The trolley's heyday was the early 1900s when trolleys were the most important form of transportation after trains.

Trolley cars raced up and down the streets of Atlanta, New York, New Orleans, Chicago and dozens of other cities and small towns alike.

General Motors' invention of the bus put most trolleys out of business. Only San Francisco has stayed true to trolleys through its renowned cable cars, although New Orleans has had electric trolleys for decades and Memphis added electric ones two years ago.

But most of today's trolleys run on wheels and are known by manufacturers as trolley buses. The diesel buses run on city streets and the body resembles that of an authentic trolley, complete with brass handlebars, leather grips, wooden benches, a deck off the back and, of course, the famous bell.

"They're a novelty," said Mike Moore, operations director for Raleigh's trolleys, which cost 10 cents a ride. "When they go down the street, people turn their heads."

Trolley buses serve different purposes in different cities. In St. Augustine, Fla., and Washington, trolleys are used to whisk tourists around historic areas. The trolley fare for historic tours are usually higher than the fare for commuter trolleys. In Nashville the fare for the downtown trolley is 25 cents.

Nashville also operates park and ride shuttles from the north end of town. During the spring, summer and fall, the city operates trolleys near Opryland to give visitors a way to get from the theme park to the area's restaurants, shops and the Opryland Grand Hotel. That ride costs 85 cents.

'They add to the character of the city. It sort of connects us with our past.'
— Keith Parker, planning director at the Greater Richmond Transit Co.

"People are just trolley-crazy," said Bucky St. Stephen, a Nashville musician who plays guitar on trolleys for tips. "They like the open-air feel of it."

In Hampton, Va., city officials recently added three trolleys to the fleet. Richmond will add 10 more trolleys in the coming year. And Savannah purchased 2 additional trolleys in February. Little towns such as Boone, N.C., and Pigeon Forge, Tenn., also run trolleys.

Atlanta experimented with the trolley buses but sold most of them in 1992 because of lack of ridership and complaints that they were uncomfortable and cold in winter.

Atlanta's bad experience seems to be the exception rather than the rule, however.

"They add to the character of the city," said Keith Parker, planning director at the Greater Richmond Transit Co. "It sort of connects us with our past."

In several cities, such as Winston-Salem, N.C., local businesses help fund the cost of running the trolleys downtown. Many trolley operations are supported with federal funds.

Those operated by private companies often charter trolleys for special parties, tours of homes or, particularly, weddings.

Some cities, such as Louisville, Ky., open certain streets only to trolley traffic.

Perhaps the biggest plus, traffic planners say, is that trolleys keep some people out of cars.

"People who are not normal bus riders are more inclined to get on a trolley," said Claudia Bolitho, development director of the Peninsula Transport District Commission in Newport News, Va. "It's perceived as not really being public transit."

Nashville trolley rider Jan Benson agrees.

"This is not as comfortable as a bus because the seats are hard," she said. "But it's cute, quaint and old-fashioned. You feel like you are going back in time."

Surfer girl

Kelly Walker, 6, from Auburn, Ala., loses her beach ball to a wave on the shoreline in Gulf Shores, Ala., on Saturday May 13. The sun came out for the first time in at least seven days along the coast and Kelly was one of many spending their Saturday at the beach.

AIDS cases increase among child-abuse victims, experts say

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The little girl didn't want much out of life: another stuffed bear to add to her collection of 20, a shot at varsity cheerleading, another chance to watch "Cinderella," her favorite movie.

But at age 12, the dreams began to fade.

First, she was diagnosed with the AIDS virus, and then doctors concluded that she had been sexually abused.

Eight days before her 14th birthday, she died — joining what pediatricians and public health officials say is an unmeasured but growing number of youngsters whom they suspect are infected through sexual abuse.

"We are aware it is a problem, and it is going to be a problem — and everyone is talking about it," said Dr. Margaret Khoury, who treated the girl at the Los Angeles County/USC Medical Center's maternal child AIDS clinic.

For the girl's mother, Mercie Tejada, the death on Dec. 4 capped a harrowing year of grief and mystery.

"Why her?" the mother of five cried during an interview. "Why anybody?"

The girl's only known exposure to the AIDS virus was sexual contact with an unknown man sometime before her 12th birthday, according to Los Angeles County health officials.

Despite her help, police detectives in Baldwin Park, 18 miles east of Los Angeles, were unable to determine how the molestation occurred or who was responsible. With no suspects, police have suspended their investigation.

To this day, exactly how the girl was infected remains a mystery.

What is clear is that the relentless march of AIDS is beginning to cross paths with another epidemic — child sexual abuse.

Public health officials say the overwhelming majority of the 5,735 pediatric AIDS cases since 1982 were the result of infected mothers passing the virus to their unborn children.

No one knows exactly how many are the result of sexual abuse, because no one tracks such cases.

But that is about to change: The federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has announced it will begin keeping a tally of children 12 and younger who become infected through sexual contact.

"If we don't do it, we can't determine the extent of the problem — and we are clearly underestimating the magnitude," said Dr. Mary Lou Lindegren, a CDC epidemiologist who is helping establish the new pediatric reporting guidelines.

"I don't care if you are talking about one kid, because I think it's a potential problem that will increase over time," Lindegren said.

A new CDC form for reporting pediatric AIDS asks whether the child had engaged in sexual contact before being diagnosed with an AIDS infection.

A CDC study presented last year at the 10th International Conference on AIDS found four children with AIDS whose only exposure to the AIDS virus was sexual abuse.

In Los Angeles County, the health department has uncovered three cases, including Tejada's daughter, where sexual abuse is strongly suspected as the source of infection.

Los Angeles researchers found 28 cases in 1992 during a national poll of health and social service agencies.

At Duke University Medical Center in 1991, four cases were found where child sexual abuse had resulted in AIDS and six more were found where abuse was a possible source of exposure to the AIDS-causing human immunodeficiency virus.

Cloaked by strict laws designed to protect the privacy of child-abuse victims and people with AIDS, only the most outrageous cases ever become public.

"Women my age have special health care needs. Luckily, we also have Planned Parenthood."

Surprised that a woman my age is going to Planned Parenthood? Well that's understandable. Because a lot of women think Planned Parenthood is only for the young and people who need birth control. But it's so much more!

Planned Parenthood people completely understand my special health care needs. I can take advantage of a wide range of affordable services like menopause counseling, gynecological exams, breast exams, Pap tests and hormone therapy. And their knowledge and professionalism make me feel very secure.

What I also love about Planned Parenthood is that they take the time to know me and answer all my questions in plain, simple language. Planned Parenthood people are sensitive, understanding and courteous. And everything is private and confidential. To put it simply, they really care.

As far as I'm concerned, there's no place better than Planned Parenthood for all my special health care needs. It's a very important part of my life.

Dog owner's trailer burns down after 11-year-old's mauling death

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Three days after an 11-year-old boy was mauled to death by his neighbor's dogs, a suspicious fire destroyed the pet owner's mobile home.

"I feel it should have been done a lot sooner," said Robert Thorpe's mother, Joyce Ann Close. "I don't have any idea who did it. It could have been any number of people around here because people are so raging mad about the whole thing."

About 100 people, including 30 from Robert's fifth-grade class, attended his funeral Monday.

A funeral director played the boy's favorite song, "Chattahoochie," country singer Alan Jackson's celebration of boyhood good times.

Five friends put their BB guns in his coffin beside a canister of pog toys and a few compact discs. His beloved go-cart was lowered into the earth atop the coffin.

Hours later, a trailer where Troy Dean Thomas and William Marker Jr. lived with about a dozen dogs burned to the ground. Fire Marshal Gary Brownfield said the blaze was set, possibly with gas or another flammable liquid.

"It went up quickly. Trailers usually do," Brownfield said.

No charges had been filed Tuesday evening in either Robert's death or the fire.

Police believe Robert was attacked Friday by at least one of the dogs that lived with Thomas and Marker.

No one witnessed the attack and Thomas has told police he wasn't home at the time.

The boy was found by his relatives beside a creek in the fetal position, barely alive. He had been bitten more than 100 times, mostly on his neck and torso, and soon bled to death.

Mrs. Close said police have questioned her, her husband and her ex-husband, Robert Thorpe, the boy's father.

Robert was known to race up and down dirt roads of rural Lower Tyrone Township, about 30 miles southwest of Pittsburgh, in his gas-powered gray go-cart.

On Friday, he ran over a puppy's leg while riding with his cousin near the trailer. He went home, told his mother and returned to the small lot where Thomas and Marker live, near a two-acre car junkyard where the dogs could run free. Police said the boy was checking on the dog's condition.

Tax relief

AUSTIN — The Texas Senate has voted to provide tax relief for oil and gas wells that have started producing again after at least three years of inactivity. The measure by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, and Sen. Teel Bivins, R-Amarillo, passed Tuesday. It earlier passed the House and will return to that chamber for consideration of Senate amendments.
The bill would continue the mineral severance tax exemption that was granted for three-year inactive wells under a law passed two years ago. The Senate also endorsed the creation of a state laboratory to develop new techniques for oil and gas recovery; and a 10-year severance tax exemption for gas produced from wells that require costly recovery techniques because of their formation or location.

Stocks move up

Stocks bounded ahead Tuesday with the Dow Jones industrial average closing just shy of its all-time high while two other popular Wall Street indicators achieved record finishes.
The market's advance impressed analysts because it came despite a mid-afternoon sell-off that temporarily knocked stock gauges back near their starting points of the day.
"The market easily coped with the sell programs," according to A.C. Moore, senior investment strategist at Dunvegan Associates Inc. in Santa Barbara, Calif. "That attests to the resilience of this market."
The Dow industrials ended at 4,436.44, up 40.81 points and only a shade below the prior peak of 4,437.47 hit May 15.

More Boeing cuts

Boeing Co. on Tuesday announced it would increase its planned job cuts for this year by 5,000 to respond to continued pressure from airlines for lower prices.
The additional cuts, mostly in the Seattle area, are part of Boeing's efforts to cut costs to meet increasing competitive pressures, the company said in a statement.
"You can't have consumers wanting lower prices and airlines wanting lower prices without pushing down the cost of an airplane," said Steve Lewins, transportation analyst at Gruntal & Co. Inc.

Seat belt recall

Nine automakers agreed Tuesday to repair or replace Japanese-made front seat belts in 8.4 million cars sold from 1986 through 1991. The buckles could jam or fail to latch or release.
The voluntary safety recall — one of the largest in history — was reached with seven Japanese manufacturers and two American manufacturers using the Takata Corp. seat belts.
"Our investigation showed, and the automakers acknowledged, that buttons in these buckles have broken and others may break in the future," said Transportation Secretary Federico Pena.
The buttons on Takata front seat belts will be replaced or repaired free of charge.

DETROIT (AP) — Kmart Corp.'s annual meeting is likely to be a more subdued affair than last year's rebellion by shareholders against management's plan to raise cash through stock sales.

But that doesn't mean the troubled discount retailer will be in its owners' good graces at Tuesday's meeting.

"I still question whether they can be a long-term, viable competitor against Wal-Mart and Target," said Bear, Stearns & Co. retail industry analyst Steven Kernkraut in New York.

"Duck under the table" was the suggestion Joseph Ronning, an analyst with Brown Brothers Harriman Inc. in New York, had for Kmart executives.

On the eve of the meeting, Kmart said it amended its plans to sell stock in its Borders Group Inc. book and music stores, increasing the stake the public will hold to 87 percent from the 52 percent initially planned.

The move would increase the proceeds Kmart would get from the sale, money it needs to improve its tired discount stores. Kmart has already sold majority stakes in its OfficeMax and The Sports Authority divisions.

Earlier this month, Kmart said it lost $28 million in the first quarter because of a new inventory system, a product mix weighted toward lower-profit merchandise and currency problems at its joint venture in Mexico.

The nation's third-largest behind Wal-Mart Stores Inc. has had nine straight quarters of disappointing earnings. Its stock has plummeted to less than half the nearly $28 a share it was worth in 1992.

Ronning predicted shareholders will be skeptical when hearing that the company's recent cost-cutting and inventory control steps will translate into a total recovery.

"But you've already gotten (ousted CEO Joseph) Antonini's head on a silver platter. How much more can they be given?" Ronning said of shareholders.

Shareholders are likely to be unhappy about Kmart's announcement last month that it was slashing its dividend in half. The company said it took the step in anticipation of continued disappointing earnings and in a move to free cash for store renovations.

"I think people are going to be happy just to have nothing upsetting happening," said Ron Petrie of from Roney & Co.

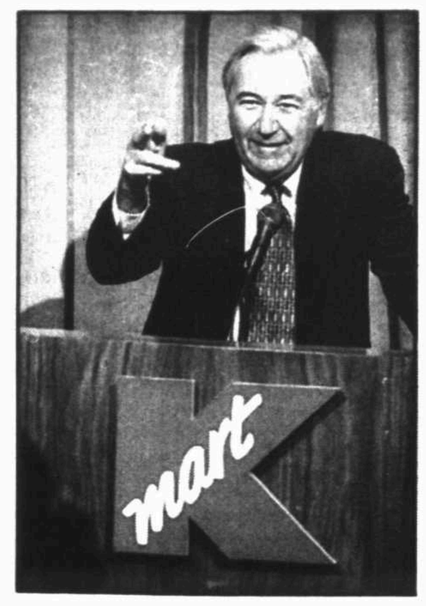

Kmart has said it expects a new round of cost-cutting announcements sometime this year. The company has closed 110 stores since last fall, renovated others and said it will trim more than 6,000 jobs by 1996, including 10 percent of management.

At last year's annual meeting, Antonini presented a plan to sell minority stakes in the company's specialty retail subsidiaries. The proposal failed to win enough shareholder support.

After pressure mounted from disgruntled shareholders, partly over earnings, Antonini was forced out as president and chief executive officer in March. He was stripped of his chairman title two months earlier.

Antonini was succeeded as chairman by Donald Perkins. Anthony N. Palizzi is acting as interim president.

A permanent successor has not been named. But speculation last week said the next Kmart CEO would be Richard G. Cline, the chairman of the Naperville, Ill.-based natural gas company., Nicor Inc. Until 1985, Cline was chairman and president of Jewel Cos. Inc.

Unemployment rates go lower

■ Expanding work force caused unemployment to go up in the Basin, while the rate for Midland was down.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

An expanding labor force sent the Odessa-Midland unemployment rate inching upward in April, but employment in Midland was lower.

Figures released Tuesday by the Texas Employment Commission shows the Odessa-Midland metropolitan statistical area (MSA) unemployment rate was 5.9 percent, up from 5.7 percent in March but well below the 7.3 percent recorded a year ago.

For the city of Midland, the rate was 4.5 percent, down from 4.6 percent in March and down from 5.6 percent in April 1994.

Jackie Moseley, manager of the TEC's Midland office, attributed the marginal increase to the expanded work force.

"We have people entering the marketplace who are looking for summer jobs or who have just graduated from high school or college," she explained. "I think we'll see total employment and total unemployment increase as job opportunities continue to improve and there are increases in the number of people looking for work."

Approximately 1,500 joined the Odessa-Midland civilian labor force in April, raising to 120,100 from 118,600 in March. In April 1994, the labor force numbered 119,400.

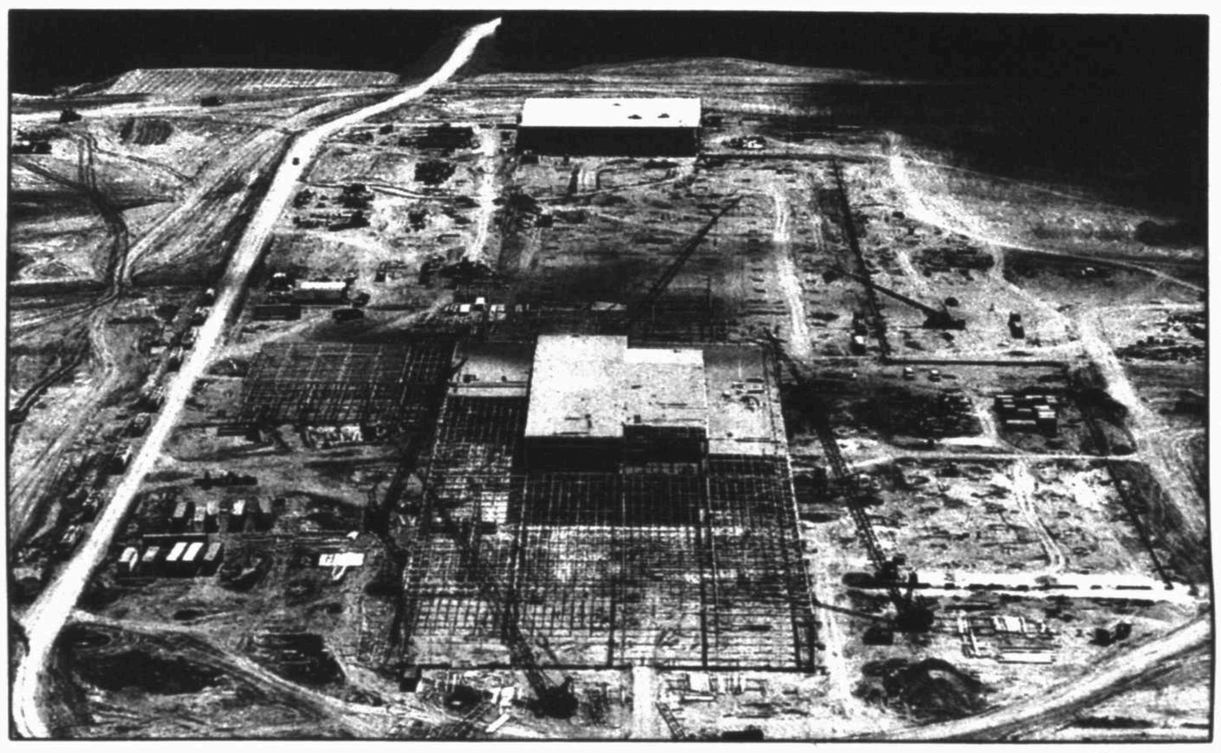

Total employment swelled by 1,200, to 113,000 from 111,800 in April. A year earlier there were 110,700 area residents employed.

Unemployment was also up, by 300, to 7,100 from 6,800 in March but is well below the 8,700 seen a year earlier.

In the city of Midland, there were 49,666 in the labor force, up from 49,188 in March and from 49,233 last year.

Of those in the labor force, 47,416 were employed, up from 46,937 in March and up almost 1,000 from 46,467 in April 1994. Unemployment was steady at 2,250, down one from 2,251. The number of unemployed Midlanders is down over 500 from a year ago, when there were 2,766 unemployed.

Moseley said her office has received a number of applications for the city's summer youth job program and is in need of job orders from prospective employers.

Land sale exceeds expectations

■ Loving, Ward and Winkler counties draw the most activity in annual University Lands sale

By Mella McEwen

The Board for Lease of University Lands banked $2,046,385 Tuesday following the 87th annual Oil and Gas Lease Sale. The sale was held at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin's Center for Energy and Economic Diversification.

Wallie Gravitt, director of the University Lands office in Midland, said the sale exceeded expectations "by some simple margin" and was comparable to the results of the last two or three lease sales held by the University Lands.

Of the 145 tracts up for sale, 67 tracts were sold for an average of $100.40 per acre.

Areas drawing the most attention were in Loving, Ward and Winkler counties and Gravitt said areas in Pecos and Andrews counties also drew some interest.

High bidder was IP Petroleum Co., followed closely by Dalen Resources Oil and Gas and Chuck Pearson and Associates.

One tract that was leased was in Cooke County and was part of the original 50 League lands in which the University of Texas System still has mineral interests, according to Gravitt. He said eight of these tracts had been nominated for the sale.

In conjunction with the 87th Oil and Gas Lease sale, the Board for Lease held a Frontier Oil and Gas Lease Sale Tuesday, offering acreage in El Paso, Hudspeth and Terrell counties.

Gravitt said none of these tracts were sold Tuesday.

"This was not totally unexpected," he said, explaining that the area had reached "a static level as far as interest by operators. I suspect interest in these tracts will pick up in the future."

The counties of Loving, Ward and Winkler have become active exploration ares in recent months, because of the fill area. Previously, the highly eroded area was unable to be define accurately with seismic, but now new techniques have enabled explorationists to get a better view of the tangled geology.

ROGERS FORD has expanded to Midland's north side, opening a retail used car lot at 3707 Andrews Highway.

Doss Rogers, president of the dealership, explained that sales of used cars have doubled in the Midland area and he decided to double his company's size to take advantage of the growing used car market. He chose the Andrews Highway location because it is a high-traffic area.

The new location offers nice used cars, Rogers said, including a number of 1993 and 1994 models. He said he plans to carry about 45 to 50 cars and trucks on the lot at any time.

He described the new location as "an extension of what we have on our main lot," offering the same services such as Ford's extended service warranty and Ford Motor Credit Corp. financing.

A grand opening was held this past Saturday at which a dozen cars were sold, he said.

Dewayne Stewart, owner of SPEEDY WINDSHIELD AND AUTO REPAIR, has added a new service: Oil changes. And he emphasizes that the used oil is disposed of properly.

In business for six months, Stewart is a mobile repair service, traveling to the customer's home or business to perform windshield repair or replacement, oil changes or any other minor mechanical work needed.

Justice Department investigates D.C.

■ Congress probes whether or not over spending by Washington D.C. violated federal law.

Washington, (Bloomberg) — The U.S. Justice Department is investigating whether overspending by the District of Columbia violated federal law, two congressmen said.

Robert Reid, the city controller, prepared a report for Congress examining whether the district violated the Anti-Deficiency Act, a law enacted in the 1800s that requires the district to stay within its congressionally mandated budget. Anyone found guilty of intentional overspending could face prison time, job loss or fines

"The Justice Department has the report," Rep. James Walsh (R-N.Y.), chairman of the House subcommittee on appropriations, said at a hearing. "They'll make the determination if there have been any violations to the act."

Walsh said responsibility for any overspending lies with the mayor. The district has been governed by home rule since the mid-1970s, giving it limited autonomy and congressional oversight, instead of direct federal supervision.

Rep. Julian Dixon (D-Ca.) also said that Justice is investigating the district's finances. Justice Department officials couldn't immediately be reached for comment.

The District of Columbia's fiscal 1995 budget is set at $3.25 billion, although the city's interim chief financial officer, Robert Pohlman, said today the district's spending is running closer to $3.4 billion.

The U.S. capital has come under increasing pressure from Congress and the federal government because of chronic budget deficits, including the more than $150 million for fiscal 1995, which ends Sept. 30.

Reid's 55-page report, dated April 25, says 12 district agencies, including the police, fire and education departments, exceeded their budgets in fiscal 1994 under former Mayor Sharon Pratt Kelly.

To determine why some agencies overspent and who was responsible, Reid asked department heads to provide written explanations. He included them in his report, which is based on the city's annual financial report dated Feb. 1.

At today's House subcommittee hearing, held in direct response to the controller's report, lawmakers hoped to determine which city officials were responsible for deciding to spend more than the allotted amount. What the congressmen found instead was a government so decentralized that officials couldn't say who was responsible for anything.

"It is so obtuse and decentralized that no one is accountable for anything," said Walsh, who became exasperated when Reid couldn't provide details on a passage in the anti-deficiency report. "So you aren't even responsible for your own report."

Walsh was referring to a passage in a letter to Reid from Joseph Yeldell, acting director of the city's employment services department, which exceeded its 1994 budget by $3.3 million. Yeldell wrote that Mayor Kelly "instructed the agency to maintain Summer Youth service levels" at fiscal 1993 levels, which resulted in overspending of $910,000 in program subsidies.

In sworn testimony, Pohlman and Reid were unable to delineate a chain of command, saying each agency had its own individual system for paying and tracking expenditures.

Each department has its own director, and larger departments also have a chief financial officer or chief administator, Pohlman said. A quick count by the two city officials tallied 15 CFOs or controllers, 15 financial managers and 50 budget coordinators all providing similar financial services for the city.

Pohlman said part of the reason city officials are confused about their mandatory budget is that Congress historically has provided additional funds.

"The game is up. It's over. The federal governmnet is just not going to give the district money, Walsh said. "We've been burned before and it's not going to happen again.

The controversy comes as President Clinton is expected to name a financial oversight board this month to take control of the city's finances, and the Senate appropriations subcommittee is considering a control board for the city's public schools.

Former Federal Reserve Board Gov. Andrew Brimmer tops Clinton's list of prospective candidates for the five-member oversight board, people familiar with the list said.

Other names on the short list are Joyce Ladner, former interim president of Howard University; Constance Berry Newman, undersecretary of the Smithsonian Institution; Stephen Harlan of real estate firm H.G. Smithy Co.; Terence Golden, president of Baily Realty Corp.; and Edward Singletary, former vice president of Bell Atlantic, the people said.

Brimmer, 68, who was a Fed governor from 1966 to 1974, is expected to be named the control board's chairman, people familiar with the appointment said. Brimmer is president of his own economic consulting firm, Brimmer & Co., and director of the National Bureau of Economic Research. A spokesman said Brimmer wouldn't comment until the appointment was made final.

Other expected board members weren't available for comment.

The board is charged with balancing the district's budget in the next four years. Each member must be a resident or have their principal place of business in the istrict.

Congress passed the law establishing the District of Columbia Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority last month. At the time, Congress requested that Clinton name the board's members within 25 days of the bill's enactment April 17.

People familiar with the appointments said the board could be in place by mid-June. The General Accounting Office's latest review of the district's finances also is expected by then, a necessary step before the U.S. Treasury provides an expecteed short-term loan.

Lightweight phones will compete against cellular systems

New York, May 23 (Bloomberg) — Ericsson Inc., the U.S. unit of Sweden-based LM Ericsson, expects sales to rise 50% in 1995 to almost $2 billion, boosted by orders for personal communications services equipment.

PCS will let users receive wireless voice and data services over small, lightweight phones that are similar to cellular phones. When the networks are built, PCS will compete against the $25 billion cellular industry.

The U.S. is largest market for Ericsson, which makes telecommunications equipment, and accounts for 11 percent of the parent company's sales. Last year, Ericsson posted $1.3 billion in U.S. sales.

"I think you could see 50% growth in sales" in the U.S. for Ericsson, Ericsson Inc. Chief Executive Bo Hedfors told the Bloomberg Forum.

Ericsson's PCS products are based on time-division multiple-access technology. TDMA is a digital technology that promises to increase a wireless network's capacity compared to analog networks. Ericsson also makes products that use global system for mobile (GSM) communications technology, which is based on TDMA.

Yesterday, Pacific Telesis Group said its wireless unit, Pacific Bell Mobile, will buy $300 million worth of PCS equipment from Ericsson over five years. Pacific Telesis said it will buy GSM equipment — making the contract among the largest for GSM.

Ericsson expects to sign additional PCS agreements over the next several weeks. In January, Ericsson said it signed letters of intent with several U.S. companies for PCS equipment.

"It's clear that we are on the road now with the announcement of the Pacific Bell deal," Hedfors said. "We'll see these contracts materialize within a couple of weeks or this summer."

Hedfors said Ericsson is talking with all of the major PCS license winners including AT&T Corp.; Sprint Corp. and its cable-TV partners; and a consortium of three Baby Bells and AirTouch Communications Inc.

In terms of size, the Pacific Telesis contract may just be the tip of the iceberg for Ericsson, Hedfors said. That's because Pacific Telesis won just two PCS licenses when the government held its auction earlier this year.

By comparison, AT&T successfully bid on 21 licenses for $1.68 billion; the Sprint alliance, known as WirelessCo. LP, agreed to pay $2.11 billion for 29 licenses; and the Baby Bell

State unemployment down

AUSTIN (AP) — The state unemployment rate for April was 5.6 percent, a slight increase from March's 5.5 percent, the Texas Employment Commission reports.

The unemployment rate for April 1994 was 6.2 percent.

Labor Commissioner Jackie W. St. Clair said the increase shows that "the spring hiring we saw last month is beginning to level off.

"But our job growth indicates the economy is still very strong," St. Clair said.

The lowest metropolitan statistical area unemployment rates in April were in Austin-San Marcos and Bryan-College Station at 3.1 percent.

The highest rates were in the McAllen-Edinburg-Mission region, which dropped from 17.1 percent in March to 16.3 percent in April.

Rates of unemployment in the urban areas of Texas as announced by the TEC for April, compared with March figures (in parenthesis) included:

Robinson honored

NEW YORK — David Robinson, who led San Antonio to the NBA's best regular-season record, won the league's Most Valuable Player award today.

Robinson, who averaged 27.6 points, 10.8 rebounds and 3.2 blocks per game, beat runner-up Shaquille O'Neal of Orlando by a wide margin. Robinson received 73 first-place votes and 901 points, while O'Neal got 12 firsts and 605 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

Robinson ranked third in the NBA in scoring, fourth in blocks and seventh in rebounding. He was 15th in steals (1.65 per game) and field goal percentage (.530). Robinson made the All-NBA team and the league's All-Defensive team this year. He is the first San Antonio player to win the MVP award./ Page 4D

KODM lands Cowboys

KODM (97.9 FM) radio has successfully landed the bid to broadcast Dallas Cowboys football games for 1995, ending the long association with KCRS, which had been the Cowboys affiliate for many years in the Midland-Odessa area.

"We're excited to be able to put the Dallas Cowboys on FM full time," said Spencer Bennett, KODM program director. "We know that Cowboy fans will really appreciate the imporved quality in the broadcasts. Most of the games are on Sunday and that will increase our Sunday audience size.

"We don't plan on adding more sports programming, but everybody in West Texas loves Cowboys football. It's the plum of radio sports in the market."

Sponsors back LPGA

WILMINGTON, N.C. — Sponsors have continued to support the LPGA Tour since a golf analyst was quoted as saying lesbians hurt the sport, commissioner Charles Mechem said Tuesday.

Mechem cited a recent full-page advertisement by Oldsmobile in USA Today that read, "We support the LPGA."

"That makes everybody feel good," said Mechem, in town to help kick off the NCAA women's golf championship at Pete Dye's Landfall course.

Chaps take first round lead in NJCAA Championships

■ Davidson's 71 paves way for No. 1 ranked Midland College to lead tight four- team race for top spot.

Staff Report

MESA, Ariz. — Midland College shot a combined total of 294 in the first round of the National Junior College Athletic Association Division I Golf Championships held Tuesday at the Alta Mesa Country Club course to lead defending national champion Scottsdale Community College (Ariz.) by one stroke.

Midland College sophomore Graham Davidson led the charge for the Chaparrals with a score of 71 to put him in a three-way tie for second place in the medalist standings. Freshmen Derrick Pursley and Euan Little posted scores of 73 each, tying for eighth in the medalist race.

Davidson

According to coach Delnor Poss, it is the first time the Chaps have led the competition on the first day. This despite a 79 by Jason Garduno and a 77 by Jason Brooks, two of the team's top players week in and week out. Garduno, however, was playing despite the fact that his father suffered a heart attack while in Mesa to watch his son compete.

"I expect Jason Garduno and Jason Brooks to come back with good rounds tomorrow (today)," Poss said.

"I'm extremely proud of the way the players performed," said Poss. "The golf course difficult and its was very windy out here in Arizona. Our two freshmen (Little, Pursley) played extremely well in the first national tournament."

Scottsdale, led by Dan Norton's 69 to head the medalist competition, finished with a 295 while New Mexico Junior College, with two scorers in the top nine

AP Laserphoto

Orlando Magic center Shaquille O'Neal goes up over Indiana's Rick Smits and Dale Davis (left) to score two of his career playoff-high 32 points in Orlando's 105-101 victory over the Pacers in the Eastern Conference final series Tuesday. O'Neal hit 11-of-16 shots from the field.

■ Shaq puts up MVP-type numbers in Orlando's 105-101 win to open the Eastern Conference finals.

By Charlie Nobles
N.Y. Times News Service

ORLANDO, Fla. — The sign flashed Tuesday night for all at Orlando Arena to see. "Shaq is the real MVP," it said. Earlier in the day, Shaquille O'Neal had found out he finished second in the National Basketball Association's most valuable player voting to San Antonio's David Robinson.

That hardly pleased O'Neal, the league's top scorer in the regular season. "I'll get it one day," he said, shaking his head. "They'll have to give it to me one day."

O'Neal simply took his anger out on the Indiana Pacers. His game-high 32 points allowed the Magic to overcome an early 18-point deficit and capture the opener of the four-of-seven-game Eastern Conference finals, 105-101, before 16,010 at Orlando Arena.

The teams meet again here Thursday night.

O'Neal, a 53.3 percent free-throw shooter in the regular season, hit 10 of 12 from the line Tuesday night. He also contributed 11 rebounds as Orlando now has won the first game in all three of its playoff series, which veteran forward Horace Grant said would be vital if the team is to reach the NBA finals.

The Pacers, inspired early by guard Reggie Miller's scoring, couldn't contend on this night with a torrent of Magic emotion and scoring depth, even as resilient as the visitors proved to be. The five Orlando starters scored at least 15 points apiece.

Miller led Indiana with 26, 17 in the first quarter.

The closest the Pacers got in the final period was the final margin, achieved on a Byron Scott jump shot at the buzzer.

"I don't know if we were tired or not," Pacers Coach Larry Brown said. "But I don't think we matched their effort. I thought Rik Smits, of all our guys, really looked tired. He just got through playing Patrick, and Shaq is a load."

The Pacers were extended to seven games before eliminating the Knicks and Patrick Ewing in the conference semifinals on Sunday.

A 35-point third quarter won it for Orlando.

In fact, just as a 70-point second half during a regular-season matchup between the teams here had carried the Magic to victory, Orlando flashed similar dominance through much of Tuesday night's second half.

"We dug a hole for ourselves, but somehow we came back fighting," said the Magic's Nick Anderson. "The last three quarters was the best guts we've shown all season."

It took the hosts a mere 2 minutes 31 seconds of the third quarter to go from a 5-point halftime deficit to a 4-point lead. It was a lead that the Magic lost only once thereafter, and that for only a few seconds.

"We came out flat, but once we got our fire back, we wore 'em down," O'Neal said.

O'Neal contributed the first 5 points of the third quarter to send Orlando, the NBA's best home team during this season, on its way.

The 3-point shot continued to be a prime Magic ally. Anfernee Hardaway made two of them in the quarter, Anderson and Dennis Scott one each. Anderson's, which gave Orlando a 65-58 lead, prompted him to do a quick hopstep and punch the air with glee.

Orlando Arena shook with delight.

The Magic carried a 9-point edge into the final period.

The first quarter was one of the NBA's most unusual this season. The Pacers buried Orlando early, and then watched the Magic string together 12 points to muscle back into the game.

Dale Davis, 2 inches shorter than O'Neal, provided an early clue that Indiana came ready to play, controlling the opening tip. Then the Pacers zoomed to

Chancellor comes home to play for Chaps

Former Midland High star, Julie Chancellor, signs her letter of intent with Midland College. Chancellor transferred to MC after a one-year stint at Angelo State University. She is the first Lady Dawg to play for Ron Jones' Lady Chaparrals.

A desire to get back to the winning feeling that she helped bring to the Midland High girls basketball team as a three-year starter has brought former Lady Dawg Julie Chancellor back to the Tall City.

Chancellor, a 5-foot-9 sophomore guard who signed out of high school last year to play with Angelo State University, transferred to Midland College Tuesday to continue her career with the Lady Chaps, becoming the first MHS signee to the MC program, which is beginning its second season.

Chancellor, who ended her highly-successful career at MHS in 1994 by being named the co-MVP in District 4-5A along with teammate Amy Alcala, signed with ASU after the Rambelles had finished the 1993 season with a 23-6 record, a 13-1 Lone Star Conference record, their first-ever conference championship and NCAA Division II national tournament bid.

Angel runners caught off base in 11-10 loss

By Mike Butts
Sports Writer

For a time in the Angels 11-10 loss to Tulsa Tuesday, it didn't seem to matter that Midland was losing base runners almost every inning. But after the Angels cut Tulsa's 10-1 lead to one run in the ninth inning, it became obvious Midland lost its 24th game of the season because it couldn't protect its players on the base paths.

The Angels (21-24) left seven on base in the last game of a five-game set with the Drillers. But the runners they didn't leave on base hurt them

All-female Silver Bullets to show their stuff against Permian Basin all-star team

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Sports Writer

If baseball fans in the Tall City find themselves stuck in the city on Memorial Day weekend and panic breaks out when they realize the Midland Angels are open, they won't have to scan the television dials for their favorite team to get that special ball park feeling.

But some of the Angels will be in action — as part of a Permian Basin All-Stars team in a game against the all-women's professional team known as the Colorado Silver Bullets.

In their only appearance in Texas, the Silver Bullets, with former major league pitchers Phil and Joe Niekro as the coaches, will play a team comprised of men's college players, former college players, a few members of the Angels along with the Angels coaching staff, and local celebrities.

"It's the big game of the day on Memorial Day," said Angels general manager Monty Hoppel. "I just hope there are enough people around looking for something to do."

Earlier Monday, the players will make an appearance at Midland Park Mall from 1-3 p.m.

Before the game, a lucky fan and the local celebrities will get a chance to bat against Phil Neikro. After the game, the coaches and the players will sign autographs. Game time is at 6 p.m.

Midland is the only Texas appearance for the 22-woman team because of aggressive recruiting by the Angels support staff, Hoppel said.

"I think it's because teams that really

Chapman named polo's top collegiate

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland's Jimmy Chapman was recently named Collegiate Polo Player of the Year by Polo Magazine, and the Texas A&M star can probably give an assist for the trophy to a lame horse.

Chapman graduated from A&M last summer with a degree in animal science after a college polo career. The annual award was presented a year later.

"The award isn't just given to the person with the most skill. There is more to it than that," said Chapman, who made the All-West team, but didn't receive All-America honors. "This award recognizes what you have done for the sport of polo. That makes it even more special to me."

Chapman, also a graduate of Midland Lee, served as vice-president of the A&M polo club while being an active

Steers set for baseball playoff

By Mike Butts
Sports Writer

It's easy to guess Bobby Doe's favorite playoff rule.

The Big Spring baseball coach, whose Steers are pitching-thin, has the option to play one-game playoffs instead of best-of-three series. His team faces Fort Worth Arlington Heights today in a Class 4A Region I semifinal. And the Yellowjackets have all the pitching depth the Steers don't.

"We've tried to play three games every series and nobody's wanted to play us three yet," Yellowjacket assistant coach Brad Allen said.

No wonder. Arlington Heights (20-7) has three hurlers that have combined for 19 wins and only five losses. Junior Darren Wood has thrown 14 scoreless innings in two playoff shutouts including a one-hit, 12 strike out performance against Granbury.

"We don't have any particular starting rotation, they're all about equal," Allen said. The Steers and Yellowjackets' game begins at 7:30 p.m. at Abilene's Hardin Simmons University.

■ Class 4A Playoffs

The Yellowjackets' other two starters are senior Josh Flores (7-1, .84 ERA) and junior Mike McCoy (6-1, 1.43). Wood is 6-3 and leads the team with a .419 batting average and three home runs.

Steer starter Zac Leslie, a junior right-hander, is 12-5. No other Steer pitcher has near the same number of wins. Big Spring is 18-11-1 after beating Canyon Randall 3-2 Thursday in the area round. Today's winner qualifies for the Region I final against the winner of Friday's Andrews-Lamesa matchup.

Big Spring has enjoyed a remarkable amount of playoff success the last three seasons. The Steers made the playoffs all three years and went to Austin's state tournament with the final four Class 4A teams in 1992 and '94. They lost to Belton 4-0 last June in the state final, and returned only three players to this year's team.

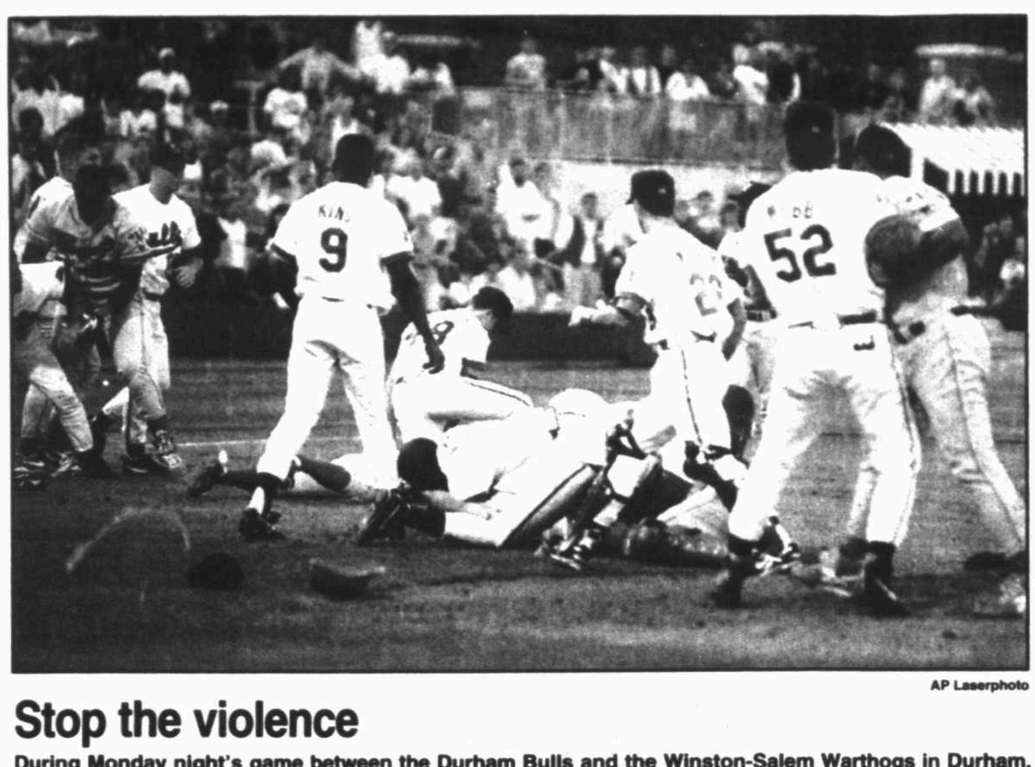

Senior first baseman Trey Terrazas leads the Big Spring offense this year with an over .500 district batting average and seven home runs. The team's other senior starters are second baseman John Oliva and center fielder Mike Sizenbach.

Big Spring beat the Yellowjackets last year in the same round by coming back from a 12-4 loss in the first game and taking Games 2 and 3, 4-2 and 5-4.

Arlington Heights bats only .284 as a team and Allen said they have struggled some at the plate.

"We've met a lot of good pitching," Allen said. "Most of the teams we've seen have one good pitcher."

That may not change much for the Yellowjackets today.

Stop the violence

During Monday night's game between the Durham Bulls and the Winston-Salem Warthogs in Durham, N.C., a brawl ensued in the third inning after a Durham batter was hit by a Winston-Salem pitcher Jason Kummerfield. Both benches emptied onto the field during what was a "Strike Out Domestic Violence" promotion night for the Durham organization. Ten players were ejected and Warthogs pitcher Glen Cullop lost several teeth and was knocked unconscious. He was listed in stable condition Tuesday at Durham Regional Hospital. League president John Hopkins said Tuesday it was still too early to discuss what action the league will take.

White Sox Fernandez loses in salary arbitration, gets $3.25 million

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball owners increased their record in salary arbitration this year to 2-0 when the Chicago White Sox beat pitcher Alex Fernandez.

In a decision issued late Monday night, just hours after the case was argued, a three-man panel awarded Fernandez $3.25 million, four times his salary of $758,334 last year. He had asked for $3.9 million.

Hearing the case were arbitrators Nicholas Zumas, Ralph Berger, Morton Mitchnick, the second time this spring that players and owners experimented with a three-man panel.

Another panel ruled in favor of Baltimore against third baseman Leo Gomez.

Pitcher Kile walks into 10-5 Astro loss to Cincinnati

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Darryl Kile walked seven batters, hit two more and threw a pair of wild pitches Tuesday night to help the Cincinnati Reds beat the Houston Astros 10-5.

Kile (1-3), one of the NL's wildest pitchers last year, let in one run with a wild pitch, walked home another, and left with the bases loaded in the fourth after walking two and hitting Reggie Sanders.

Pedro Martinez relieved and walked Eddie Taubensee, forcing in a run that made it 5-3. Slumping Bret Boone then cleared the bases with a double, sending the Reds to their 12th victory in 15 games.

The Astros walked 11 (two intentionally), two shy of the team record. Six of the 11 scored.

It was an all-to-familiar to Kile (1-3), who led the NL in walks last season, tied for the lead in wild pitches and was third in hit batters. He has walked 13 in his last 11 2-3 innings, hit five batters for the season and thrown four wild pitches.

Dodgers 6, Mets 4

NEW YORK — Tim Wallach went 3-for-4 and tripled in the go-ahead run in the eighth as Los Angeles beat New York in Hideo Nomo's fifth straight no-decision.

Wallach, playing in his third game of the season since coming off the disabled list Saturday, hit a two-out line drive to center off Doug Henry (1-2) that was barely missed by a diving Brett Butler.

Braves 7, Cardinals 1

ST. LOUIS — Greg Maddux, rebounding from his worst performance of the season, began with five perfect innings and finished with a five-hitter, leading Atlanta over St. Louis.

David Justice and Mike Kelly homered for the Braves, who opened an eight-game trip with their fifth consecutive victory.

In his previous start, Maddux (3-1) allowed six runs in a 6-5 loss to Colorado. Against St. Louis, he struck out eight, walked none and lowered his ERA from 3.16 to 2.68.

Maddux faced just three batters of the minimum in recording his first complete game this season, the 61st of his career.

Expos 6, Padres 4

MONTREAL — Mike Lansing hit first career grand slam and Jeff Fassero became the National League's first five-game winner as the Montreal Expos beat San Diego 6-4 Tuesday night, their 14th straight win over the Padres.

Montreal hasn't lost to San Diego since July 24, 1993, and is 23-2 against the Padres since the start of 1993.

Fassero (5-1) worked out of a bases-loaded jam in the first and wound up allowing two runs and five hits in 6 1-3 innings. He struck out four and walked three.

Marlins 6, Pirates 1

PITTSBURGH — Chris Hammond pitched two-hit ball over eight innings in only his second start and Tommy Gregg homered as Florida stopped a six-game losing streak by beating Pittsburgh.

The Marlins, whose 6-19 record is the majors' worst, took out their frustration on the only team with a poorer home record. The Pirates' 1-8 start is their worst since moving into Three Rivers Stadium in 1970.

Gregg, a former Pirate called up from Triple-A Charlotte on Sunday, was 3-for-3 with three RBIs to support Hammond, who fractured his left leg last August and was activated only 10 days ago.

Hammond (1-0), who pitched six hitless innings in his first start May 17 against Philadelphia, allowed only leadoff doubles to Rich Aude in the fifth and Steve Pegues in the eighth.

Cubs 7, Rockies 6

DENVER — Kevin Foster struck out nine in 6 2-3 innings and helped his own cause with a homer, leading Chicago over Colorado.

Colorado drew 43,226 despite a game-time temperature of 38 degrees and a persistent drizzle.

Foster (3-2) allowed five runs, six hits and four walks. He gave up homers to Andres Galarraga, Marvin Freeman and Larry Walker, accounting for Colorado's first five runs.

Phillies 6, Giants 5

PHILADELPHIA — Rod Beck blew a chance to get his 100th career save as San Francisco wasted Matt Williams' league-leading 11th homer and lost to Philadelphia.

Beck (3-2), who walked three in 1 1-3 innings, had a 5-4 lead in the ninth but blew his third straight save chance. Darren Daulton tied the game with an RBI single and Kevin Stocker won it with a sacrifice fly that scored Dave Hollins, giving the Phillies their 15th win in 18 games. Hollins walked four times, increasing his major league-leading total to 32.

Rookie's homers lead Blue Jays to win over Royals

The Associated Press

TORONTO — Rookie Alex Gonzalez hit his first two major league homers and drove in four runs Tuesday night as the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Kansas City Royals 10-6 to snap a three-game losing streak.

Carlos Delgado of the Blue Jays led off the seventh with a pinch-hit homer off Hipolito Pichardo (0-1) to make it 6-6. Devon White followed with a single, and one out later, Paul Molitor forced him at second. Candy Maldonado singled, sending Molitor to second, before John Olerud, Roberto Alomar and Shawn Green hit run-scoring singles.

Mike Timlin (1-0) was the winner despite letting Kansas City take the lead in the seventh.

Reliever Tony Castillo walked the bases loaded before being replaced by Timlin, who hit Garry Gaetti in the arm with a pitch to give Kansas City a 6-5 lead.

Kansas City scored three times in the sixth to tie it 5-5. Toronto starter Paul Menhart loaded the bases on two walks and a single before being lifted. Castillo hit Bob Hamelin with his first pitch to score a run and Gaetti followed with a two-run single.

Menhart went five innings and gave up five runs on three hits in his first major league start, walking three and striking out five.

Gonzalez, who drove in his fourth run with an eighth-inning double, sent the first pitch he saw from Jim Pittsley over the wall in left with one on in the first to tie it 2-2.

Pittsley, making his major league debut, allowed five runs on seven hits in 3 1-3 innings.

Indians 5, Brewers 3

CLEVELAND — Omar Vizquel homered for the second time in two games — matching his career high for a season — and Dennis Martinez remained unbeaten as Cleveland beat Milwaukee.

Vizquel, who had ended a string of 333 at-bats without a home run Monday night, followed up with a two-run homer Tuesday that stretched Cleveland's lead to 5-1 in the fourth inning.

Paul Sorrento had three hits, including two doubles, and Jim Thome homered for Cleveland, which has won 11 of 14 games. Milwaukee has dropped eight of 10.

Martinez (4-0) lasted six innings, giving up three runs and six hits, walking one and striking out four.

He yielded a first-inning home run to Turner Ward, his second of the season and the first by the Brewers in 10 games, then blanked them until they scored two runs on four singles in the sixth. Kevin Seitzer and Joe Oliver singled home the runs.

Eric Plunk pitched two scoreless innings, striking out three, and Jose Mesa got the last three outs for his sixth save.

Tigers 6, Twins 4, 7 innings

DETROIT — Alan Trammell's two-run single keyed a five-run fifth inning that rallied the Detroit Tigers to a rain-shortened 6-4 victory over the Minnesota Twins on Tuesday night.

The game was called in the bottom of the seventh following a 90-minute delay.

Danny Bautista homered as the Tigers overcame a 4-0 deficit and extended their season-best winning streak to four games.

David Wells (2-3) survived a shaky third inning for the win, giving the Detroit bullpen a much-needed rest by going seven innings. He gave up two earned runs and eight hits.

Eddie Guardado (0-2), making his first start of the season, gave up all the runs in the fifth as the Twins lost their third straight and fell to an AL-worst 8-17.

The left-hander was cruising in search of his first big-league win since Aug. 13, 1993, allowing two hits with five strikeouts through four innings. But he started getting behind in the count in the fifth, and Detroit took advantage. Singles by Juan Samuel, Todd Steverson and John Flaherty loaded the bases with one out, then Chad Curtis walked to force in a run.

Robinson named MVP

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

SAN ANTONIO — David Robinson wasn't ready to celebrate after winning the NBA's most valuable player award Tuesday.

The San Antonio center said he's too busy focusing on the Spurs' playoff series against Houston and last year's MVP Hakeem Olajuwon in the Western Conference final.

"We're in the middle of this battle and it's going to be hard to celebrate anything right now," Robinson said. "This is an incredible honor and I don't think it's going to sink into my head for some time."

In a league where centers have again emerged as the dominant players, the 7-foot, 1-inch Robinson was the most consistent as he led the Spurs to a league-best 62-20 record. His teammates felt the award was a foregone conclusion.

"If he wouldn't have won it, that would have been a big surprise," Sean Elliott said. "The NBA would have had the legitimacy of Don King Productions."

Robinson, who averaged 27.6 points, 10.8 rebounds and 3.2 blocks per game, beat runner-up Shaquille O'Neal of Orlando by a wide margin. Robinson received 73 first-place votes and 901 points, while O'Neal got 12 firsts and 605 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

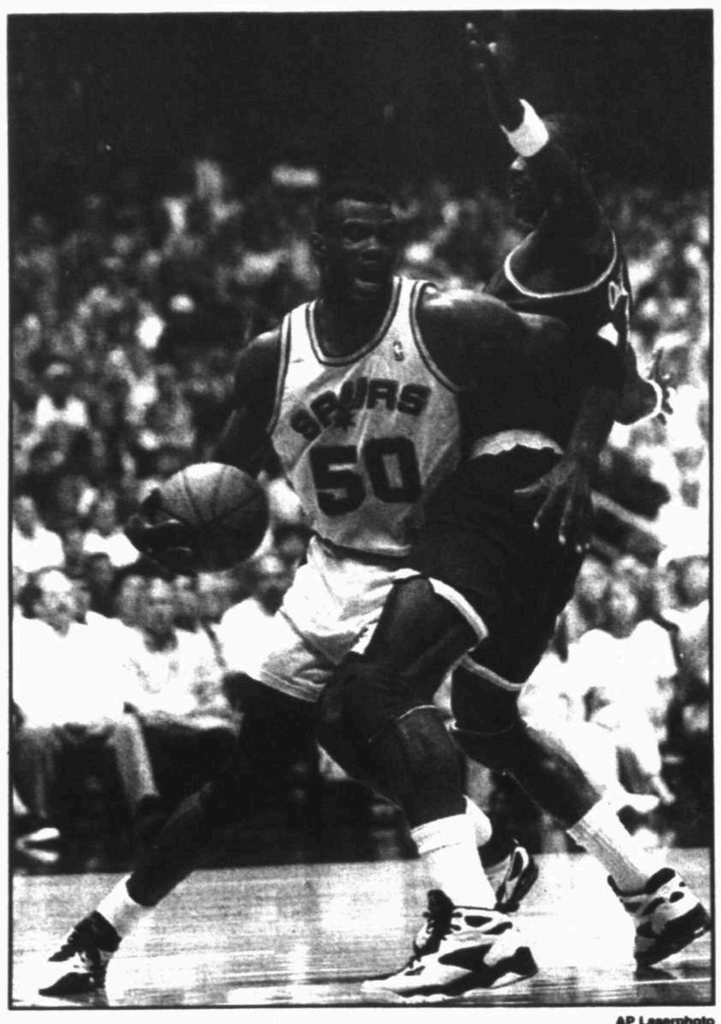

Utah's Karl Malone was third, followed by New York's Patrick Ewing, Houston's Hakeem Olajuwon, Charles Barkley of Phoenix, Chicago's Scottie Pippen and Utah's John Stockton.

Robinson said learning to deal with high expectations has helped him get to the top of his profession.

"Carrying the team is a whole lot different than coming out and just being good every night," Robinson said. "Being able to withstand that kind of pressure night in and night out, and not only withstand it, but excel under it, I think that's where I've been able to grow."

Robinson ranked third in the NBA in scoring, fourth in blocks and seventh in rebounding. He was 15th in steals (1.65 per game) and field goal percentage (.530).

Robinson gained his nickname "The Admiral" from his days at the Naval Academy, but he said he didn't know how tough it would be to lead a team in the NBA when he joined the Spurs after his tour of duty with the Navy ended in 1989.

San Antonio's David Robinson, left, drives around Houston's Hakeem Olajuwon during playoff action Monday night. Robinson was named the National Basketball Association's Most Valuable Player after leading the Spurs to the best record in the NBA regular season.

"When I first came into the league, I really didn't know how to play the way I play now," he said. "Like I said, it's a big credit to the coaches who have taught me how to push myself harder and go out and do more things on the floor every night."

Olajuwon congratulated Robinson and expressed no resentment at finishing fifth in the voting after a year that was, statistically at least, better than his MVP season.

"You see, I won all the awards last year," Olajuwon said. "So I don't think it's the level of play. I think it's winning. They had the best record in the league."

Robinson said winning the MVP wasn't one of his goals. At age 29, he thinks about the other MVPs who have led their teams to the NBA title.

"It's a pretty special list, just the guys I know," he said. "I watched Moses Malone and Larry Bird and Magic and Michael. It's an unbelievable group of people.

"I'd like to really establish this San Antonio Spurs team as a championship team and really add my name to the list of players who have been able to take their teams to the top."

Rockets reaping rewards of Drexler trade

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Has the trade for Clyde Drexler been good for the Houston Rockets?

To borrow a favorite phrase of Drexler's, "No doubt about it."

One game into the Western Conference finals, it's clear Drexler is a big matchup problem for the San Antonio Spurs. He scored 25 points and grabbed 12 rebounds in Houston's 94-93 road victory Monday night.

The Spurs are promising a better defensive effort against Drexler Wednesday. If not, this Texas showdown could be short.

"I don't think any one guy stops him," San Antonio coach Bob Hill said. "The team has to guard him. He's like Hakeem. He's like David. That's what this league is about. The Spurs didn't guard Clyde enough."

The Feb. 14 trade that sent Drexler back to his hometown and Otis Thorpe to Portland was viewed with some skepticism because it removed a top rebounder from a Rocket team already deficient in that area.

As the team continued to struggle in the regular season, the skepticism grew, but the playoffs have shown the importance of Houston having two experienced scoring threats in Drexler and his old Phi Slama Jama teammate Hakeem Olajuwon.

"Before Clyde they had one guy who could score and other guys who were capable of scoring but they were streaky," the Spurs' Sean Elliott said. "Now they have two guys who are going to score every night."

Drexler, free of injuries and obviously happy to be out of Portland, showed his old quickness and jumping ability Monday night. One soaring slam over Elliott was reminiscent of the Clyde of three or four years ago.

"He's home," Olajuwon explained, "and he's playing on a winning team."

Drexler, as usual, deflected all comments about himself or any comparisons about the way he's playing with before the trade.

"We're working hard. We've got a great team here," he said. "It's going to be a great series."

San Antonio's Doc Rivers said the mistake was playing defense too loose against Drexler at the start. Drexler hit his first seven shots Monday.

"Clyde Drexler is a good player all of the time, but when you let his confidence go, he's a great player," Rivers said.

The Spurs have some new defensive ideas and Rivers figures into them.

Drexler is just one of the problems facing the Spurs, who felt they failed to match the intensity of the defending NBA champion Rockets down the stretch Monday night.

"We didn't have the urgency that we needed in a game like this," Avery Johnson said. "We've got to realize who we're playing and what time of year it is."

Hill said a look at the statistics shows how the Spurs let a game they should have won slip away.

"You hold a team to 94 points and 42 percent shooting, get to the foul line 18 more times than your opponent and lose by one point," Hill said. "I'd say we beat ourselves."

And the Rockets, filled with confidence after comeback playoff victories over Utah and Phoenix, seized the opportunity.

"Houston is like a shark that smells blood," Hill said. "They see the chance to go and then they go."

The Spurs don't figure to get two straight off games from David Robinson. But J.R. Reid said Robinson can't do it alone against the Rockets.

"David's been carrying us all year long," Reid said. "But in the playoffs, other players have to step up and make plays and that's what we didn't do."

NBA official who ejected Drexler may not work any more playoff games this year after league decision

HOUSTON (AP) — NBA referee Jake O'Donnell, who had a run-in with the Houston Rockets' Clyde Drexler two weeks ago, may not work any more playoff games this season, according to a newspaper report.

O'Donnell hasn't been assigned to a game since ejecting Drexler from a playoff contest against Phoenix on May 9. Following an investigation, the NBA rescinded all fines against Drexler, including the automatic $1,000 that comes with an ejection.

The Houston Chronicle, quoting unidentified sources, reported Tuesday that O'Donnell's absence is a clear sign the NBA didn't condone his conduct in the Houston-Phoenix game.

"There's no reasonable explanation why one of the league's best refs like Jake wouldn't be doing games," a source told the paper. "It's obvious the league didn't like what happened in that game."

Another source said there's a chance O'Donnell won't work any more games during the playoffs.

The NBA refused to comment.

O'Donnell officiated games during the first round of the playoffs and early in the second round.

During Game 1 of the Houston-Phoenix series, O'Donnell refused to shake hands with Drexler at center court when captains from both teams met with the officials.

Then, after Drexler was called for a borderline foul against the Suns' Dan Majerle, he threw up his hands and said something to O'Donnell.

Normally an emotionless referee, O'Donnell quickly hit Drexler with two technical fouls, which resulted in an automatic ejection. Drexler charged O'Donnell and had to be restrained by coaches and teammates.

Phoenix went on to win 130-108, but Houston rallied to win the series in seven games.

Pacers playoff causes conflicts with Indy 500

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Saturday's NBA playoff game between the Indiana Pacers and Orlando Magic is creating headaches for police. This is weekend for the Indy 500 and police will be stretched thin trying to control traffic around Market Square Arena and along the 500 Festival Parade that starts three hours before the game. At the same time, patrolmen will try to keep things moving around the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

"We had this same situation last year," said Robert Allen, deputy IPD chief in charge of the west and downtown areas. "We will have additional officers in the area of the arena and the parade."

The Magic, meanwhile, have already pulled a rabbit out of the hat — snapping up a block of city hotel rooms for the day before the Indianapolis 500.

ANGELS: Midland just misses comeback

even more.

Midland got eight runners to second or third base that failed to score. Tulsa threw out four of those. And the Angels led off four innings with extra-base hits they failed to turn into runs.

The results was a missed chance to pick up a game on Western Division-leading San Antonio, which lost to Jackson.

Based on their pitching, the Angels shouldn't have been in the game anyway. But Midland ending up outhitting the Drillers (17-25) 17 to 16. And a ninth-inning four-run rally fell a run short of tying the game.

Consider the Angels' base running problems:

• Shortstop Orlando Munoz, filling in for the injured Tim Harkrider, led off the second with a double but was cut down at home on a throw from Driller right-fielder Jose Texidor.

• Left fielder Basilio Ortiz was thrown out trying to steal second in the same frame.

• Catcher Todd Greene got caught in between bases and was tossed out at third on a smash to third that would have been a hit for center fielder Michael Wolff, but became a fielders choice.

• Designated hitter Ty Boykin got doubled up on first on a pop fly.

The Angels fought back from the nine-run deficit with nine runs in the last five innings. After scoring just one run off Driller starter David Perez in the first four frames, on a Boykin homer, they scored two in the fifth and three in the sixth to chase the Tulsa newcomer.

Midland came into the ninth inning down 11-6. But after Ortiz grounded out to shortstop, George Arias, Greene and Leon Glenn had three straight singles which, with an error, scored two runs. Emmitt Cohick and Wolff then had run scoring hits. But Joe Morvay got J.D. Ramirez to hit into a fielders choice to end the game.

ANGEL DUST: Three Angels led the Texas League in statistical categories before Tuesday's game. They are: Todd Greene, home runs, 15; George Arias, RBIs, 39; Jovino Carvajal, stolen bases, 22; Greene, slugging percentage, .715; Arias and Greene, extra base hits, 24; Arias, runs scored, 37.

PURCHASE, N.Y. (AP) — New York Knicks coach Pat Riley says lack of harmony, not lack of talent, casued his team's second-round playoff demise.

"It makes my stomach turn," Riley said Tuesday after a season-ending meeting with his players. "It's the end-of-year, divide up playoff shares, exchange phone numbers, all that stuff you don't want to do until June 23, we did today. We had a team that was good enough to win. It was built to win.

"You can blame finger-rolls being missed, you can blame free throws, a lack of rebounding, losing close games in overtime. But we should have been on the upswing this year as a team that was totally together. For the majority of the season, we were pulling apart. And you can't put that stuff behind you."

Riley, as he did Sunday when the Knicks lost 97-95 in Game 7 of the Eastern Conference semifinals against Indiana, refused to comment on whether he will return as coach for a fifth year. He has one season left on his contract, and the Knicks have offered a five-year, $15 -million extension.

Asked if the tumultuous season meant he would resign or that it had drained his desire to coach, Riley said: "No. It fortifies it even more. Not reading an Orlando scouting report right now, getting ready for the game, infuriates me."

The Knicks would have played the Orlando Magic on Tuesday night if they had beaten Indiana on Sunday.

But Riley said the Knicks are not a championship team "because, internally, we broke down. It went on all season long. It manifested itself in self-destructive behavior."

Backup center Herb Williams said Riley gave no hint in the final meeting he would leave.

"He's talking about next year, talking about preparation, the chemistry and what we need to do," Williams said.

Much of the discord this season revolved around forward Anthony Mason, who nonetheless played so well he earned the NBA's Sixth Man award.

Mason was suspended by Riley for five games during the season and Mason had a timeout argument with Charles Smith during the Indiana series. Williams reportedly tried to relax Patrick Ewing by reminding him he had only a few more games to play with Mason before the free agent was gone from the Knicks.

Mason said that reports that he would stay with the Knicks only if Riley left are untrue. Mason also said it wasn't true he would leave if Riley stayed.

CHAPMAN: Aggie hopes for polo career player as a back.

"That was an 18-hour day, every day," Chapman said. "Polo at A&M is not under the athletic department, but receives a small amount of money through the Recreation and Sports Department. The biggest challenge is working with a limited budget and polo is a very expensive sport. We had to find funding from outside sources."

College polo is also a sport that doesn't receive much national attention.

"It wasn't unusual to run across students at A&M who didn't even know we had a polo team," Chapman said, "but the sport at A&M has become much more visible over the last couple of years."

Winning always helps visibility. The Aggies won the Central Region three years in a row and finished third in the nation two years in a row before placing second in the nation this past season. Since Chapman graduated last summer, he was not on the second place team.

"I went and watched the match for the national championship and I sure wanted to be out there playing," Chapman said. "That was tough."

Also, the A&M women's polo team has won two consecutive national titles. Currently, about 30 colleges play polo, but Chapman says that the sport is growing all the time. Sul Ross and New Mexico State are colleges currently talking about entering the polo field.

But Chapman's climb to national recognition probably started with that lame horse.

"I used to rope when I was in high school," Chapman said. "I had a horse that came up lame and was forced to sell him. I didn't want to quit riding, however, so I went out to the Midland Polo Club and some guys hired me to exercise their horses. I only played in a few practice games."

Midland's Stephen Beal, also a member of the A&M polo team told Chapman that there was a polo team at the university.

"In the second semester of my freshman year, I joined the team. It became almost like a job," Chapman said. "But that was when I really started playing polo. I really didn't play all that much in Midland."

One of Chapman's greatest thrills in polo also turned out to be one of his major disappointments. In 1994, he was selected to the American Collegiate Team that was to play a couple of weeks in England.

"Before going to England, I made a trip to Africa to play polo with a teammate (Shane Coventry, the A&M team captain who lives in Zambia)," Chapman said. "I broke my arm when I ran into a goal post and was only able to watch the matches in England. I really wanted to play in those games."

Chapman isn't through with polo even though his collegiate career is over. He's "chasing the dream," as he likes to put it.

He is leaving this week for Australia to play polo with friends and he doesn't know how long he will travel down this road.

"What I would really love to do is play polo professionally," Chapman said. "I just don't know if that is going to happen. If that doesn't work out, I'll probably go back to A&M and work on a master's degree."

A&M blood runs deep in the Chapman family. Father, Joe, was in the A&M Corps. Jimmy's older brother, Gary, also graduated from A&M, and younger brother, Scotty, is now a junior at A&M. Scotty is now playing polo for the Aggies, and like a chip off the old block, has already suffered a broken arm.

It's hard to figure out just where mom (Sandra) fits into the Chapman mix. She attended Hardin-Simmons and William and Mary before graduating from North Texas. And she doesn't even play polo.

Georgia county missing Olympic spirit

By LARRY SIDDONS
AP Sports Writer

A Georgia county threw cold water on the Olympic flame when it barred the Somali team from training there for the 1996 Games, a top IOC official said Tuesday.

"It strikes me as not being in the spirit of the Olympics," said Dick Pound, an International Olympic Committee vice president. "It's a little disappointing. And it seems not in keeping with what the Olympics is all about."

The Chamber of Commerce in Barrow County, a rural area about 35 miles northeast of Atlanta, voted Monday night to prohibit Somali athletes and coaches form training there because of resentment over attacks on American soldiers in the African nation.

U.S. forces were sent to Somalia in 1992 to try to quell bloody fighting between rival warlords.

A 45-minute chamber meeting discussed the protests, including repeated use of news photos showing the body of a U.S. serviceman being dragged through the streets of Mogadishu, the Somali capital.

In addition to his vice presidency, Pound heads the IOC's oversight panel on the Atlanta Games and is one of the committee's most powerful members. In a telephone interview from his Montreal office, he stressed that neither he nor the IOC were taking an official position on the Barrow County move.

"On a scale of problems from one to 1,000, it's not that high on the list," he said.

Nevertheless, Pound said, the situation was a slap at the Olympic goal of international peace and understanding through sports.

"It's too bad," he said. "One would have hoped it would not have landed on. the Olympic Games."

The Somalis were directed to Barrow County by the Georgia Olympic Training Alliance, a division of the state Department of Industry, Trade and Tourism.

The agency matches foreign Olympians with proper facilities in communities that volunteer to host them; since Somalia will send only a track-and-field team to Atlanta, the all-weather tracks in Barrow County seemed an ideal location, said Kim Adler, a project consultant with the alliance.

She said the question of whether it made sense to send a team of black athletes from an African nation with a history of animosity toward Americans to a predominantly white section of the rural South never came up in planning sessions.

"Just as all Somalis were not against American soliders, only some of the warlords, not all people in Barrow County are against this," Adler said. "Everyone in Georgia has southern hospitality. But any group will have people with hostility. It could have happened anywhere."

Pound, a Canadian, said the Barrow County shuffle was another sign that holding the Games in the United States can be different from staging them anywhere else. He noted an earlier decision to change the volleyball venue from Cobb County when that Atlanta suburb passed an anti-gay measure.

"It's one of the great things about the United States — that freedom of expression," Pound said. "It's also one of the unnerving things."

The Somali team is looking for another training site for its 25-member team and might wind up in Gordon County, 50 miles northwest of Atlanta, according to Omar Shekhey, the nation's Olympic attache in Atlanta. Shekhey said he was "very disappointed."

CHANCELLOR: Former Lady Dawg wants to win

(From 1D)

That, Chancellor admitted, was enough to convince her to play for the Rambelles instead of the fledgling MC program in its first year, which she had considered at one point.

"A lot of people said I should have stayed here," said Chancellor, who had talked with MC coach Ron Jones about playing for the Lady Chaps right out of high school. "But it was a first-year program and I didn't know Coach Jones."

In her only year at ASU, the Rambelles, despite returning most of that team, slid to a dismal 8-18 during Chancellor's first year and finished dead last in the LSC with a 1-13 record. That stint with a losing record was enough for Chancellor to look elsewhere.

"We only lost 20 games all during high school," said Chancellor, who led the Lady Dawgs to two district championships during that span. "I'm not used to losing. I played in almost all the games. But I wasn't happy. I wasn't having fun and if I can't have fun playing basketball, the sport I love, then I can't stay here."

The Lady Chaps, meanwhile, were compiling a 23-7 mark despite playing with a brand new team of freshmen and a lone sophomore transfer. They finished 8-4 in Western Junior College Athletic Conference play and qualified to the postseason where they lost in the first round of the Region V tournament in Denison.

When Chancellor decided to leave ASU, she looked at several schools but finally decided to come back home to Midland.

"I didn't hate basketball when I was there," said Chancellor. "But when you hear yourself saying things like that, you know you're in the wrong place. I looked at some other places but after I talked to Coach Jones I just really felt like he wanted me to play for him. I knew this was what I needed to do."

Jones said he was not surprised Chancellor was not sure about the Lady Chap program when it began.

"I talked to her last year about playing here and I don't know if it was the fact that it was a first-year program or what," said Jones. "But some of the players I talked to last year ended up not coming here because they didn't know what level (of competition) we would be playing at.

"One of Julie's best attributes is her competitiveness," continued Jones. "You can see it in her eyes when she plays. She likes to compete and she's a smart player. And the potential for sophomores that transfer is high. She brings a maturity to the program. For whatever reason, transfers seems to be a little more determined to make things happen for themselves."

Chancellor is the third transfer signed by Jones for next season. Two 6-0 forwards are also included on that list.

Theresa Harrison, from Luling, is transferring from Northwest Missouri College and will play a power forward or post. Erica Knight, who played high school ball in Ardmore, Okla., transfers to MC from Baylor. She will play a small forward position. Jones said there will probably be one more roster addition soon.

The newcomers also include freshman Mandi White, a 5-10 forward from Canyon who signed in mid-April, along with Ndiasse Ndiaye and Fatou Cisse, both of Senegal, West Africa, who signed during last season.

Chancellor most definitely is determined. But she says she doesn't regret deciding on ASU in the first place and she wants to make the best of the three years that remain in her collegiate career.

"I learned a lot," said Chancellor. "College basketball wasn't anything that I thought it would be. Everybody is good. Everybody works hard. It's not like in high school where two or three of us wanted to work hard and everybody else was waiting for the bell to ring. It's a whole different level of play.

"All Coach Jones wants is for me and the rest of the players to play hard and do it all the time," she said. "And I think I can do that.

MAGIC: Miller shut down after big first a 10-0 lead, eventually extending it to 23-5 as the crowd, raucous in pregame activities, sat stunned. On the Orlando bench, the players looked bewildered.

It was Miller who ignited Indiana, putting on a spectacular display of versatility. He registered 9 of his team's first 10 points and 12 of its first 13, mixing drives, floating jumpers and free throws.

Meanwhile, Hardaway had a tough start, even with his 3-pointer breaking the opening scoring drought for Orlando 2:25 into the game. Rapid-fire, he committed a turnover, missed a layup and had a jumper go in and out.

Soon afterward, just 5:20 into the quarter, O'Neal had to be removed from the game after incurring his second foul.

But just as this game was looking like a continuation of the "Reggie Miller Show" from New York, the Magic began, well, to feel its own magic.

Hardaway hit a jumper to start a 12-point run that required just 2:07. Dennis Scott, whose outside shooting was instrumental in Orlando's 4-2 series conquest of the Chicago Bulls, had 5 of the points.

By the time Indiana scrambled to call a timeout, the Pacers' margin had been reduced to 6 points and the partisan crowd was in delirium.

And Dennis Scott wasn't finished. After a Miller jumper broke the streak, Scott hit 2 more 3-point shots before quarter's end.

When the buzzer sounded, the Pacers, who had led by 18 points, seemed fortunate to be up by 27-23.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 24, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Jealousy will get you nowhere. Pull up your socks and go after what you want. Shortcuts are out; hard work is in. Romance turns in a more positive direction. Family life becomes the center of your universe. As 1996 gets underway, resolve to strike a better balance between work and play. Profits grow when you join forces with a friend.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Patti LaBelle, composer Bob Dylan, basketball player Joe Dumars, singer Rosanne Cash.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A very aggressive acquaintance will try to influence your everyday decisions. Guard against inroads upon your savings and resources. The people around you need you to stay on an even keel.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Economic matters are in the spotlight. You may have to cope with a cash shortage. Be careful with your belongings and purchases. Family squabbles will escalate unless you curb your temper.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Have respect for yourself. Positive feedback comes out of a candid family discussion. It is time to stop talking and take action. A close friend helps you find an innovative solution to a recurring problem.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Rely on a loved one who knows how to separate the wheat from the chaff. A highly-developed sense of self-worth sometimes puts people off. Pursue romance or you could lose out.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The time is ripe to make a long-range family or financial decision. Confer with trusted advisers. Travel is invigorating and will eventually produce rich rewards. Do not dismiss a hunch. Go slow in romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Family communications could get snarled early today. A prompt apology accompanied by a smile will set things right again. Job leads could emerge from a party conversation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Sharing responsibilities brings you and your loved ones closer together. Keep up a wonderful family tradition. A generous, understanding attitude brings you the kind of affection you desire.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Love is the dominant force in your life today and always. Try to ignore someone whose comments are not helpful. A clever solution to a financial problem will be found if you keep an open mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A busy and productive day lies ahead. You can accomplish a lot, whether you work alone or in tandem with an associate. Clients will pay top dollar for good service. Start a new business.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Important people provide valuable information behind closed doors. Let your intuition guide when making purchases or special financial arrangements.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Adopting a give-and-take attitude today will prevent accusations that you are domineering. An emphasis on team spirit encourages others to help you. Keep a dental or medical appointment. A friendship could turn romantic.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone may be in a touchy mood this morning. Indulging this person's whims could strengthen your alliance. Go all-out to land a special assignment. You could earn a bonus or a special award.

FROM DROSS TO GOLD TO DROSS

North-South vulnerable. South deals.

	NORTH ♠ Q 9 4 ♡ K Q J 10 5 2 ◇ 7 ♣ 8 6 3
WEST ♠ 6 5 3 ♡ A 7 6 ◇ Q J 9 3 ♣ K J 9		EAST ♠ 8 ♡ 9 8 4 3 ◇ K 10 8 6 4 2 ♣ 10 5
	SOUTH ♠ A K J 10 7 2 ♡ Void ◇ A 5 ♣ A Q 7 4 2

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♠	Pass	2♡	Pass
3♣	Pass	3♠	Pass
6♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ◇

Declarer found a way to resuscitate a seemingly moribund dummy, making six spades an excellent contract. But one careless play nullified all the good work.

Despite having only a three-loser hand, South's holding is whit short of a demand bid. Once North responded at the two-level and took a spade preference, though, South barged straight into the small slam in spades.

West led the queen of diamonds, and declarer was rather disappointed with the dummy that hit the table. However, the nine of trumps was a critical card, since it gave declarer a second sure entry to dummy. Declarer quickly put it to good use.

The diamond lead was taken in the closed hand, the seven of trumps was led to the nine and the king of hearts was run for a ruffing finesse, declarer discarding a club from hand. West reverted to diamonds, forcing declarer to ruff on the table. When East showed out on the second round of trumps, won in dummy, South was in trouble. Two more clubs were discarded on high hearts, but whether declarer tried to discard the remaining club or took the finesse, the defenders had to come to another trick.

Declarer's technique missed the mark ever so slightly. At trick two declarer should have cashed the ace of trumps, then led the seven to the nine. When spades break 3-1, declarer still leads the king of hearts, but a diamond must be sluffed, not a club. Now the defense is helpless. Declarer can ruff the diamond continuation in hand, cross to the board with the queen of trumps and, when hearts break 4-3, declarer has all the discards needed without having to resort to a club finesse.

Jane Fonda went beyond 'the burn' to plastic surgery for body sculpting

NEW YORK — Jane Fonda went beyond the burn to sculpt her body. She went for the scalpel.

Jane Fonda admits to having plastic surgery.

Fonda said in June's Fitness magazine that she had plastic surgery while married to Tom Hayden. She wouldn't say which parts were nipped and tucked.

"I have had the basic amount of work done for people in the industry," said the 57-year-old actress. "There are lots of reasons why people try to buy time. No one who is not an aging actress in an unhappy marriage can know what that's like."

Fonda and Hayden, the former '60s radical, divorced a few years ago. She is now married to Ted Turner.

PITTSBURGH — Stacy Keach didn't listen to the agent years ago who suggested plastic surgery to correct a scar on his lip.

"I said, 'Hey, Humphrey Bogart wasn't the prettiest guy in the world, and he did pretty well,'" the actor said Monday.

Keach, 53, had four operations as a child to correct a cleft lip and palate. The scar came up only once during his career: An agent brought it up after he got a scholarship to Yale drama school and was trying out for parts.

"He said, 'Looking the way you do, you'll never make it in this business,'" Keach said.

Keach usually wears a mustache to hide the scar. This summer, he will be named honorary chairman of the Pittsburgh-based Cleft Palate Foundation.

LOS ANGELES — "NYPD Blue" star Dennis Franz made two trips down the aisle in a month — once in real life, once on TV.

The wedding of Detective Andy Sipowicz and Sylvia Costas, played by Sharon Lawrence, was shot three weeks ago for the show's season finale Tuesday night.

On April 1, Franz married Joanie Zeck, his love of 13 years.

"It was a very emotional experience for me. I didn't realize it was going to be," he said of his real wedding. "And it was not difficult for me to recall that when I saw Sharon Lawrence walk down the aisle."

MALIBU, Calif. — With hell fully frozen over, the reunited Eagles watched Don Henley get hitched.

Reunited Eagles watch Don Henley get hitched in Malibu.

Henley, 47, married model Sharon Summerall, 33, on Saturday at a Malibu ranch.

The Eagles broke up in 1980. Henley once declared he would reunite with the band "when hell freezes over." That happened last year, and the "Hell Freezes Over" tour just ended.

Eagles Glenn Frey, Joe Walsh, Don Felder and Timothy B. Schmit were at the wedding, along with David Crosby, Clint Black, Randy Newman and Jimmy Buffett. Sting, Billy Joel, Jackson Browne, Bruce Springsteen and Sheryl Crow performed.

The groom himself sang a few numbers, but the band didn't play.

PANMUNJOM, Korea — Don Johnson was antsy Tuesday in the DMZ.

"You can damn sure feel the tension," he said. "It's a tangible sense that this is the front line in the last outpost of the world."

He and Bruce Willis toured the border after the opening of the latest Planet Hollywood restaurant, this one in Seoul.

Johnson spent a few minutes inside a quonset hut that straddles the military demarcation line.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden - Former Abba star Benny Andersson is donating four watercolors worth $229,000 to his country's National Art Museum.

The 1903 paintings are by Swedish artist Elsa Beskow.

"Don't depict me as a hero or philanthropist. I'm not," the pop star told the daily Expressen newspaper Tuesday. "I just felt that they should not disappear, and I felt everyone should have a chance to see them."

Andersson bought the paintings anonymously at a Stockholm auction.

Indy rookies learn to grow up quickly

■ Six rookies find ways to maintain composure.

INDIANAPOLIS — Six rookies who survived numerous challenges to earn starting positions in the Indianapolis 500 are finding ways to maintain their composure as they prepare for Sunday's race.

"Even though this is my first start at Indy, I know the key to success is to be relaxed, get as much rest as possible and not try to win the race on the first lap," said Brazil's Andre Ribeiro, whose qualifying speed of 226.495 mph is the fastest ever by a first-time starter in the race.

The drivers making their first Indy start have been working for nearly a month at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, starting with a three-day rookie orientation in late April, and then finding the right combination of engine and chassis to become part of the fastest racing field in history.

"There are so many things to learn at this place, you have to keep an open mind," Ribeiro said. "In the qualifying, and the practices, you have to be open to the track changes, weather changes. I was hurt by this when I hit the wall (in practice on May 13). I probably did not pay attention to the weather changes. ... And now for the race, there is much more to learn."

"Hopefully, I'll get to sleep early and sleep through the night," said Gil de Ferran of Brazil. "There are some sponsorship obligations this week, but the big thing to me is to stay calm and treat this like any other race."

The other rookie starters are Christian Fittipaldi, yet another Brazilian, Mexico's Carlos Guerrero, Eliseo Salazar of Chile and Italian Alessandro Zampedri — making up the first rookie field ever without an American-born driver.

The six, along with French rookie Franck Freon, the first alternate, were recognized Tuesday at the traditional "Fastest Rookie" luncheon sponsored by the American Dairy Association of Indiana.

Ribeiro received a $5,000 check for qualifying at 226.495 mph in a field averaging 226.912.

He joined an impressive group of former winners, including seven who are in Sunday's race.

"Just to be in Indianapolis is very exciting in the month of May. To be part of this event, and to be qualified is something out of this world," said the 29-year-old Ribeiro, last year's Indy Lights top rookie.

Ribeiro, one of 10 drivers who took part in the rookie orientation program, said, "Being a rookie, you don't know what you can really expect. The way things went this month, was just very, very good.

"I did learn a lot, now to have this qualifying situation is something really, really good.

NASCAR grants relief to Pontiac

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Chevrolet's successful new Monte Carlo sent stock car racing's sanctioning body back to the drawing board again Tuesday.

For the second time in less than a month, NASCAR announced body changes designed to help another make catch up with the 1995 Monte Carlo. Late last month, NASCAR granted concessions to both Ford Thunderbirds and Pontiac Grand Prixs. This time around, additional relief was granted only to the Pontiacs, which have not won a points-paying race or pole on the top circuit since November 1993 — a span of 41 events.

Wind-tunnel tests have shown that Chevrolet's new creation handles better in the turns and is therefore faster. On-track performances have been even more convincing, with the Grand Prix winning the first seven races of the year and eight of 10 so far in 1995.

NASCAR's latest changes call for the Pontiacs to lower their front air dams another quarter of an inch and to heighten their rear spoilers by the same measurement. Both changes are expected to add more downforce on the car in the turns.

The concessions are effective immediately, so the Pontiac teams will be able to use them in Wednesday night's first round of time trials for the Coca-Cola 600. The race, at 600 miles the longest oval-course event in the world, is scheduled Sunday at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

"In our desire to have competition among all the makes, we feel this may help the Pontiac in traffic," NASCAR spokesman Kevin Triplett said by telephone from the sanctioning body's headquarters in Daytona Beach, Fla.

The new rules mean Pontiacs will now have a front air-dam clearance of 3 1/2 inches and a rear spoiler height of 6 1/4 inches; for Fords, those measurements will be 3 3/4 inches and 6 inches, and for Chevrolets, they will be 4 inches and 5 3/4 inches.

NASCAR's latest concession to the Grand Prix drew praise from Chuck Rider, owner of the Pontiac driven by Michael Waltrip.

"We felt all along that there should have been a difference between the Pontiac and the Thunderbird," Rider said. "We need that extra spoiler back there because we really don't have the downforce that the Thunderbird and the Monte Carlo have on the rear deck."

Last Saturday, Rider's car started on the pole in The Winston Select Open, a 50-lap qualifying race at Charlotte for the circuit's main all-star event, The Winston Select. But Waltrip never led a lap and was not one of the top five finishers in the event, meaning he failed to make the 20-car lineup for the Select.

Waltrip was not alone. The lineup for the Select contained nothing but Chevrolets and Fords.

"We had asked for another half-inch and we got a quarter of an inch," Rider said. "So this helps. This is another step in the right direction."

Triplett said the Fords were not given any additional concessions this time because NASCAR officials feel the Thunderbird teams "have closed whatever gap was there to begin with."

Fords have won two of the last three points races, but they never led a lap in the Select, where the top two finishers were Chevrolets.

Ford owner-driver Ricky Rudd said the Thunderbirds still need more concessions. Rudd went as far as predicting that Sunday's 600-mile event — the first points race on a superspeedway since NASCAR made any concessions to the Fords and Pontiacs — will be won by one of two Monte Carlo drivers.

"I expect it to be a Jeff Gordon and a Dale Earnhardt runaway," Rudd said.

The top 20 starting positions for the Coca-Cola 600 are to be set Wednesday night. The remainder of the field for one of NASCAR's four so-called crown jewels will be determined in a second round of time trials Thursday night.

Nigel Mansell fired as uncertainty looms over his slumping career

WOKING, England (AP) — The career of former Formula One champion Nigel Mansell, which took a drastic downturn last year, reached an even lower point Tuesday when he was fired by McLaren.

Less than four months after signing him, the team ran out of patience after a series of misadventures and disappointing performances by Mansell. The 41-year-old driver ran just two races in a McLaren Mercedes.

"The relationship has been short, and has obviously not achieved the results anticipated by either party," Ron Dennis, McLaren's managing director, said in a statement. "Nigel has not felt confident within the car, and this has affected his ability to commit fully to the program.

"In these circumstances, I believe that we have determined the most appropriate course of action."

The announcement followed speculation that Mansell would quit the team after parking his car on the 18th lap of the Spanish Grand Prix nine days ago. Speculation will now center on whether Mansell will quit the sport for good.

"I am obviously disappointed that the relationship with McLaren and Mercedes which could have achieved so much has been concluded early," Mansell said. "As this stage of my career, I had expected, on joining McLaren, that the total package would have given me the possibility to be competitive with the other top teams.

"I have no immediate plans in Formula One, but have welcomed the opportunity to keep in touch with the team, with whom I have parted on the best possible terms."

With no vacancies among the other major teams, it is unlikely Mansell will race in Formula One again this season. Mark Blundell, who finished sixth in Brazil for McLaren in Mansell's absence, will return to the team for Sunday's Monaco Grand Prix.

Known as one of the most temperamental drivers in the sport, Mansell won the title with the Williams team in 1992.

Then he left in a contract dispute to join Newman-Haas on the Indy-car circuit. The Briton became the first driver to win the Formula One and Indy crowns in back-to-back years.

Things began unraveling quickly, however. Mansell failed to win a race with Newman-Haas last year, and departed the Indy circuit to rejoin Williams for four races. He won the season-ending Australian Grand Prix.

But Williams unloaded Mansell during the offseason, giving his seat to a rising talent, the more affordable David Coulthard.

After the rejection, Mansell joined McLaren because he felt the team would give him another shot at the driving title and answer the critics who said he was too old.

The negotiations were protracted and difficult. Dennis had said he would never employ a driver he didn't understand, and he didn't understand Mansell.

But Dennis needed a driver and Mansell needed a team. An agreement was reached only after the two men agreed to give the final difference over which they were arguing to charity. Reports said the final deal was $8 million to $10 million for the 16-race season.

The partnership quickly turned into an unmitigated flop. First, Mansell had to miss the first two races because he was too big for the new Mercedes MP4-10 cockpit.

McLaren worked round-the-clock to build Mansell a car with a bigger chassis, but its performance was erratic. Mansell placed 10th at the San Marino Grand Prix before his retirement in Spain, where he pulled the car off the track and complained it was "virtually impossible to drive."

Behind the scenes, McLaren employees were reported to be furious that Mansell was not giving his full commitment to a car that they had worked overtime — and at great expense — to build. Telemetry data showed that Mansell's car had no serious problems when he quit in Spain.

Veggies on the barbie great side dish for Memorial Day cookout

Associated Press

For a Memorial Day barbecue, cook fresh vegetables on the grill. Vegetables that are good for grilling include eggplant, summer squash, bell peppers, mushrooms and onions. The following is adapted from a recipe from Periyali Restaurant in New York City.

GRILLED GREEK VEGETABLES

1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 teaspoons pressed garlic
1 teaspoon oregano
1 pound assorted vegetables, including eggplant, summer squash, bell peppers, mushrooms and onions

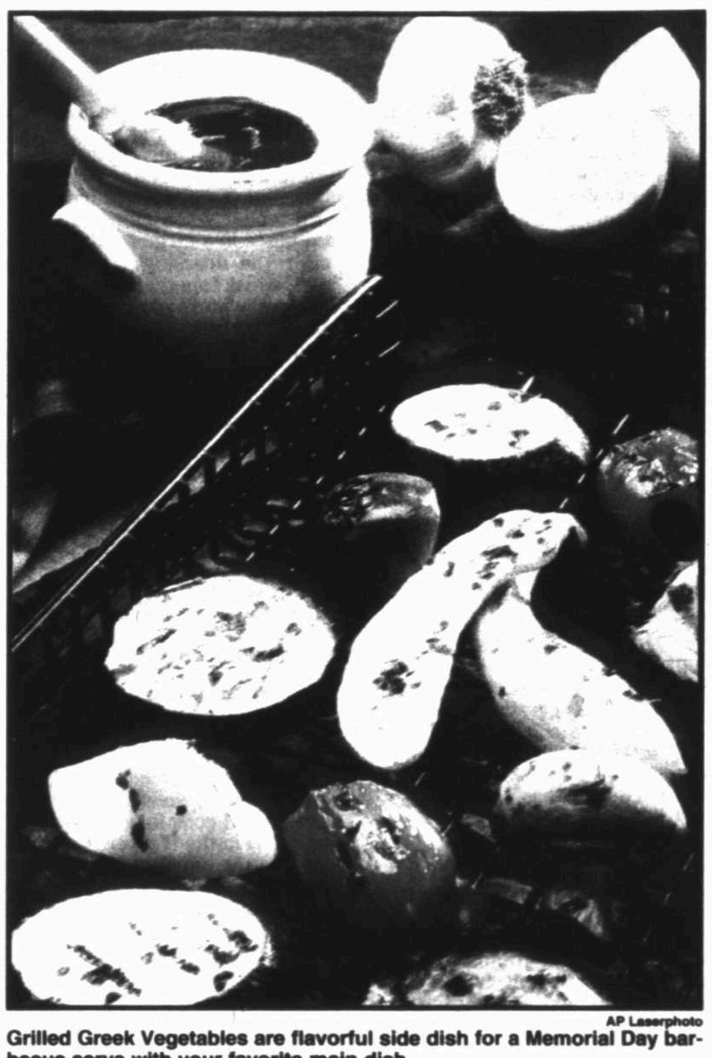

Combine oil, lemon, garlic and oregano; set aside.

Slice eggplant into ½ inch rounds. Cut small squash in half lengthwise; cut larger squash into ½ inch-thick pieces. Cut bell peppers into large chunks. Cut onions into wedges or rounds. Toss vegetables with garlic oil to coat. Place in a single layer on grid in covered grill over medium coals. Grill 10 to 20 minutes or until tender, turning once and basting with any remaining garlic oil. Remove vegetables as they become done and keep warm. Makes 4 servings.

NOTE: If time permits, salt eggplant slices on both sides and spread out in a single layer on paper towels. Let stand 30 minutes to drain, then press with dry towels to remove excess moisture. This helps eliminate any bitterness.

Prepare Salad Nicoise with poached or barbecued albacore; otherwise, chose a good-quality canned tuna. The recipe is from "Pinics," a collection of 48 recipes from the Coutnry Garden Cookbook Series by Collins Publishers in San Francisco.

You can use a good-quality, canned tuna for Salad Nicoise, one of the recipes in "Picnics," from Collins Publishers San Francisco, but poached or barbecued albacore is preferable.

Melanie Barnard's recipe for Down-Home Finger-Lickin' Barbecued Chicken is from her new cookbook, "Low-Fat Grilling" published by HarperPerennial. Chicken on the bone is more flavorful than boneless chicken breasts.

SALAD NICOISE

About 2 pounds potatoes (6 medium), unpeeled, sliced ¼ inch thick
Salt, to taste
¾ cup olive oil
6 tablespoons white-wine vinegar

Ava Jane Warren is used to having a lot of things going on at once. Not only is she a mother and grandmother, but for 17 years she has worked professionally with the Girl Scouts, "and before that I was a volunteer," she said.

As director of membership and marketing for the Mid-Cities (Midland-Odessa) Girls Scouts, her duties are many and varied, but the big job right now is getting ready for Girl Scout Day Camp, scheduled for June 5-9 at the Program Center in Midland. Usually about 400 girls, ages 5 through seventh grade, show up for that week, Ms. Warren said. "Then after the seventh grade, they can take our leadership courses and help at day camp. That's a big part of our leadership program. We usually have 20 to 30 girls working in day camp as unit leaders or assistant unit leaders, and they are wonderful."

Day Camp is open to girls who interested in attending but are not members of Girl Scouts, Ms. War-

GRILL: Down-home recipe is finger-licking good

(From 1E)

1½ teaspoons dry mustard
1 large clove garlic, minced
1½ teaspoons chopped fresh basil or ½ teaspoon dried basil
Lettuce leaves
¾ pound assorted fresh vegetables (asparagus tips, trimmed green beans, snow peas, broccoli florets), cooked crisp-tender
2 medium-sized ripe tomatoes, sliced
1 cup sliced mushrooms
1 bunch radishes, trimmed
Two 6½ or 6¾ ounce cans water-packed tuna, drained and flaked, or ¾ pound fresh albacore, poached or barbecued and sliced
Sprigs of fresh parsley, for garnish

Place the potatoes in a heavy saucepan with a tight-fitting lid. Add water to cover by 2 inches. Salt to taste. Cover and bring to a boil. Boil for about 8 minutes or until tender when pierced. Drain and place in a large bowl.

For the dressing: In a small bowl, whisk together the olive oil, vinegar, water, parsley, capers, mustard, garlic and basil.

Add half of the dressing to the still-warm potatoes; toss well. Cover and chill for at least one hour or for up to overnight. Place the remaining dressing in a leakproof container, cover tightly and refrigerate.

On a heavy portable plate, make a bed of lettuce leaves. Arrange the marinated potatoes, cooked vegetables, tomatoes, mushrooms, radishes and tuna over the lettuce leaves. Garnish with parsley. Cover with plastic wrap and pack for the picnic in a basket. Take along the remaining dressing to drizzle over the salad just before serving. Makes 6 servings.

DOWN-HOME FINGER-LICKIN' BARBECUE CHICKEN

½ cup reduced-sodium chicken or vegetable broth
½ cup finely chopped onion
½ cup finely chopped celery
2 teaspoons dry mustard
¼ teaspoon celery seeds
1 cup bottled chili sauce
1 cup beer
1 bay leaf, broken in half
2 tablespoons molasses
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
Salt and freshly ground pepper
¼ to ½ teaspoon hot pepper sauce
8 chicken breast halves on the bone (each about 7 ounces)
2 teaspoons vegetable oil, preferably canola oil

Place the broth, onion and celery in a medium nonreactive saucepan. Cover and simmer 5 minutes, until the vegetables are softened. Stir in the mustard and celery seeds, then stir in the chili sauce, beer, bay leaf, molasses and Worcestershire sauce. Simmer gently, uncovered, stirring often, 20 to 30 minutes, until the sauce is lightly thickened. Taste and season with salt, pepper and hot pepper sauce. Discard the bay leaf. Use the sauce immediately or cover and refrigerate for up to one week.

Prepare a medium-hot barbecue fire. Lightly oil the grill rack or coat with a nonstick vegetable spray.

Use your hands to pull off and discard the chicken skin, then cut off and discard all of the visible fat. Rub all sides of the chicken with the oil, the sprinkle lightly with salt and pepper.

Transfer one-half of the sauce to a small bowl and set near the grill for brushing. Grill the chicken 3 minutes per side, then brush with some of the sauce and continue to grill, turning two or three times and brushing with more sauce, for an additional 10 to 12 minutes, until the meat is white throughout.

Discard the brushing sauce, and serve the chicken hot with the reserved serving sauce. Makes 8 servings.

NOTE: The recipe makes enough brush-on to serve some alongside the chicken, but for maximum safety, keep the serving sauce separate from the sauce used for brushing on the chicken. For a hickory-flavored barbecue, add wet hickory chips to the fire.

Useful grill gadgets listed by author

Associated Press

Grills come in a variety of sizes and prices — from totable little units that are great for picnics to permanent outdoor kitchens for the serious grilling enthusiast. Melanie Barnard, author of "Low-Fat Grilling" (HarperPerennial, $10), recommends buying a quality covered charcoal or gas grill, which is versatile and can be used all year long.

These days, there are all sorts of grilling accessories, from hats and aprons to racks and rotisseries. Barnard lists the following as really useful grill gadgets:

- Sturdy, long-handled utensils, including tongs and spatula. (Don't use a fork, since it will allow cooking juices to escape.)
- Thick, long mitts to protect the cook's arms from the heat of the grill.
- A large, instant-reading thermometer to test for doneness of large pieces of meat and poultry.
- A supply of flavorful wood chips, such as hickory, mesquite, applewood or maple.
- Long metal skewers for shish kebabs.

With that many Girl Scouts to take care of, when does she ever find time to cook? "Oh, I love to cook," Ms. Warren said. "Before I went to work, I baked the family bread and cooked a hot meal every night. Now on weekends when I have time, I cook large quantities and put it in the freezer.

"I like the smell of foods in the house; like the aromas coming out of the kitchen."

Not only does she love to cook, but she also likes to share her skills with others and learn their recipes from them. In fact, an informal cooking group has been cooking and sharing recipes and techniques at the Girl Scout Program Center, which has a complete kitchen facility. Most of the cooks who attend are adult volunteers or prospective volunteers for the Girl Scouts.

The group is small and loose, Ms. Warren said, with usually somewhere between four and 10 people attending its get-togethers. "You get people together and they like each other, and they want to keep getting together."

Their schedule follows the school year, but next year they plan on getting together roughly once a month, she added.

Her skills in the kitchen are no secret to her fellow parishioners at St. Nicholas' Episcopal Church, either. Ms. Warren is frequently called on to bring a favorite dish or two to church functions.

One of her favorite claims to fame is gumbo. "I came from Louisiana, so a lot of (my cooking) tends to seafood, gumbo," and other Cajun and Louisiana specialities. "Here, people think they're really good. In Louisiana, I'm just an average cook. Out here I've got them fooled," she laughed.

The following are some of her favorite recipes, including her famous gumbo:

METHOD: Grilling naturally cooks delicious foods in low-fat method

render food 'low-fat,'" Barnard says, grilling does the job naturally, efficiently and deliciously.

Another benefit is that marinades and rubs can add flavor to grilled foods without adding fat. "From Mediterranean to Asian to Caribbean flavors, more and more grillers today realize that marinades and rubs provide an unlimited range of seasoning possibilities," says dietitian Robin Kline of the National Pork Producers Council in Des Moines, Iowa.

Marinades are simple "soaks" with three ingredients: an acidic component, like vinegar or citrus juice; flavorings, like fresh or dried herbs and spices; and sometimes oil. A rub is really a dry marinade — blends of herbs and spices rubbed onto the meat before grilling.

In addition, Kline says, low-fat grilled fruit and vegetable kebabs are replacing traditional baked beans and potato salad at many cookouts. "Salsas and chutney are replacing ketchup and pickle relish. Salads and side dishes made with dried beans, rice, couscous and other pasta are now in vogue."

Lean pork tenderloin roast can be grilled in about 20 minutes, or, with a twist of a knife, can be cut into cubes for pork kebabs. A few crushed spices rubbed over the meat will cook to a tasty crust. Pork tenderloin is also ideal for soaking up the sweet flavors of a marinade.

SOUTHWESTERN GRILLED PORK TENDERLOIN

Preparation Time: 10 minutes
Cooking Time: 20 minutes
5 teaspoons chili powder
1½ teaspoons oregano
¾ teaspoon ground cumin
2 garlic cloves, crushed
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
2 whole pork tenderloins, about 1½ pounds total
In a small bowl, mix all seasonings and vegetable oil well. Rub mixture over all surfaces of tenderloin. Cover; refrigerate two to 24 hours.

When ready to cook, grill tenderloins over medium-hot coals, turning occasionally, for 15 to 20 minutes, until thermometer inserted reads 155 degrees to 160 degrees. Pork is done when there is still a hint of pink in the center. Slice to serve. Makes 6 servings.

NOTE: A tenderloin will be thinner at one end, almost like a tail. To keep the tail from overcooking, fold the end over and tie it with some household string.

Nutrition facts per 3-ounce serving: 154 cal., 141 mg sodium, 26 g pro., 66 mg chol., 6 g fat.

SMOKY CITRUS KEBABS

Preparation Time: 10 minutes
Cooking Time: 10 minutes
1 pound pork tenderloin, cut into ¾ inch cubes
1/3rd cup smoky barbecue sauce
½ cup orange marmalade
2 tablespoons prepared horseradish

Thread tenderloin cubes onto skewers. If using bamboo skewers, soak in water for 30 minutes before using to prevent burning. Stir together remaining ingredients for basting sauce. Place kebabs over medium-hot coals, brushing generously with basting sauce. Grill and turn to brown evenly, brushing frequently with sauce, just until done, about 10 to 12 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

Nutrition facts per 3-ounce serving: 215 cal., 223 mg sodium, 24 g pro., 67 mg chol., 4 g fat.

CHEF: Easy to prepare lamb chops make great Memorial Day fare

(From 1E)

GRILLED LAMB CHOPS

Charcoal: Direct
Gas: Indirect-Medium Heat
8 lamb loin chops, cut 1-inch thick
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 clove garlic, chopped
1 tablespoon fresh rosemary, chopped
Salt and coarse-grind black pepper, to taste
Apple Shallot Barbecue Sauce (recipe below)

Trim fat from chops. Rub chops with olive oil, garlic, fresh rosemary, salt and black pepper to taste.

When grill is ready, place chops in center of the cooking grate. Cook 7 to 9 minutes for rare (140 degrees F), 10 to 13 minutes for medium (160 degrees), turning once halfway through cooking time. When cooked to desired temperature, place on serving platter. Serve with Apple Shallot Barbecue Sauce. Makes 4 servings.

APPLE SHALLOT BARBECUE SAUCE

2 tablespoons butter, melted
2 apples, finely chopped
1 red pepper, finely chopped
1 green pepper, finely chopped
2 cloves garlic, chopped
1 cup Worcestershire sauce
1 to 2 tablespoons liquid smoke
2 tablespoons brown sugar
4 tablespoons red-wine vinegar
1 tablespoon coarse-ground black pepper
½ cup applesauce
2 tablespoons tomato paste or ketchup

In a saucepan, place dried shallots in 2 tablespoons melted butter to carmelize. Combine the rest of the ingredients in a separate saucepan; cook 45 minutes over medium to low heat. Remove shallots from butter; mix butter into barbecue sauce. Makes about 1½ cups.

OVEN-ROASTED POTATOES WITH RADICCHIO

2 tablespoons olive oil
3 cloves garlic, chopped
1 sprig fresh rosemary
1 head radicchio, cleaned and separated
3 large baking potatoes, sliced and oven-roasted
Chopped parsley, salt and pepper to taste

Heat oil in skillet. Add garlic and rosemary; saute until just soft. Add radicchio; saute until wilted. Add oven-roasted potatoes; heat until potatoes are warm. Season to taste with parsley, salt and pepper. Serve with lamb chops. Makes 4 servings.

GRILLED WILD MUSHROOM SALAD WITH SMOKED BACON AND ONION

Charcoal: Direct
Gas: Indirect-Medium Heat
½ pound shiitake mushrooms
¼ pound oyster mushrooms
1 large portabello mushroom, sliced
½ cup leeks, cut into thin strips
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1 teaspoon seafood seasoning, such as Old Bay
1 tablespoon soft butter
Salt and coarse-ground black pepper, to taste
6 ounces cold water
1 small white onion, sliced
¼ cup Worcestershire sauce
6 pieces good-quality smoked bacon or regular bacon, crisp-cooked, drained and chopped into large pieces
1 head fresh arugula, cleaned and separated
½ bunch green onions, finely chopped, for garnish
2 tablespoons red pepper, finely chopped, for garnish
2 tablespoons yellow pepper, finely chopped, for garnish

Remove stems from mushrooms. In large mixing bowl, toss mushrooms and leeks with vegetable oil. Add seafood seasoning, soft butter, salt and pepper, gently combining all ingredients.

Using tongs, place mushroom mixture directly on the cooking grate; cook until tender, about 3 to 5 minutes, turning occasionally. Try to keep mushrooms in a pile so they don't fall through the grate.

Meanwhile, preheat a cast-iron skillet until very hot, add 3 ounces of the cold water. Put onions, Worcestershire and bacon in skillet. Let cook for about 5 minutes or until onions are golden brown. Reduce liquid. Add balance of cold water, salt and pepper to taste.

Remove mushrooms from the grill; place in a mixing bowl; combine with onion-bacon mixture and arugula. Toss and spoon onto plates. Garnish with finely chopped green onions and finely diced red and yellow pppers. Makes 4 servings.

DEAR ABBY

Paramedics are legally bound to conclude what they begin

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I must respond to the letter from the woman who wrote you saying she was angry because the paramedics refused to stop trying to revive her husband, who ultimately died from his heart attack. (She had called 911 when she discovered him.)

Van Buren

I am an emergency medical technician and CPR instructor, and I can sympathize with her feelings. But she should know that once a call is made to 911, the responding team of emergency medical technicians and/or paramedics is legally bound to follow a certain set of procedures called "protocol." This protocol dictates that cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR), once started, cannot be terminated unless one of the following occurs:

1. A physician authorizes the cessation of CPR.

2. A valid form stating that the patient is not to be resuscitated is presented. It is called a DNR ("Do Not Resuscitate") order.

3. The response team is too exhausted to continue and without means to transport the patient to the hospital.

4. The patient recovers.

This is set forth in both emergency medical technician training manuals and the American Heart Association Instructor's Handbook. If this protocol is not followed, all responders can be held liable for "abandonment" (having begun and then having stopped treatment).

In a home emergency situation, a living will is not enough. My advice to those in similar situations is to obtain a legally valid "Do Not Resuscitate" order from their physician. This form must be presented to the 911 response team if the family of the patient does not wish the team to carry out its professional duties and obligations. —PROTOCOL-BOUND, READING, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: Another wedding question: My brother-in-law is getting married in six weeks. On the response card I wrote, "Three guests will attend: my husband, myself and our 9-month-old daughter."

My brother-in-law called my husband and in a roundabout way told us that he didn't want to offend anyone, but children were not allowed.

Well, that started a big family feud, and now my mother-in-law refuses to attend the wedding. Abby, I regard our daughter as part of the family — not just another child.

I understand my brother-in-law's desire to avoid offending friends by making his niece an exception, but isn't blood thicker than water? — OFFENDED IN FLORIDA

DEAR OFFENDED: Yes, blood is thicker than water, but I hope none must be shed in order to prove the point.

The bridal couple has the right to exclude children —especially one who is 9 months old and could become restless, cry and disrupt the ceremony.

DEAR ABBY: Who said, "If you want your children to turn out well, spend twice as much time with them, and half as much money"? — CURIOUS

DEAR CURIOUS: I did, about 25 years ago — and it's still true.

No fat Oscar Mayer 'dogs' taste great

By Linda Anderson

Anderson

I've been hearing a lot about the new Free Oscar Mayer hot dogs made with no fat lately, so when I found them for sale in my favorite neighborhood supermarket, I had to buy a package. After all, we do love hot dogs at my house, and we are trying to cut dietary fat (isn't everybody?), so it seemed like a natural.

Free Oscar Mayer hot dogs are very user-friendly. They come in packages that are vacuum sealed for freshness, divided in half (four hot dogs in one pouch, four in the other) so the ones not eaten right away will stay fresh, and opened with re-sealable "zipper"-type seals so they can be closed again for added freshness.

However, all this extra-added attraction to the packaging — and, I'm sure, all the extra processing necessary to take the fat out of the hot dogs themselves — means Free Oscar Mayer hot dogs are, shall we say, a tad too expensive to serve every day. In other words, it's a good thing they have all that protective packaging to keep them fresh, because many people aren't going to be able to afford to buy them very often.

A 14-ounce package containing eight hot dogs cost $2.99. With a price like that, you might want to save them for special occasions — Christmas, maybe, or somebody's birthday. Serve with champagne.

After I quit hyperventilating because of the price, I bought a package and took it home to the calorie- and fat-conscious teenager at my house. She had added hot dogs to the shopping list, after all.

Label advertising is as lean as the hot dogs themselves. All it says is "NO FAT!"

The nutrition label, however, is a little more revealing. One hot dog is said to contain 40 calories and 0 percent fat. There's also a toll-free number for consumers to call if they just have to talk to somebody at Oscar Mayer — 1-800-222-2323.

And the taste test? Just about what you'd expect from Oscar Mayer. They were wonderful, within hot dog limits. I mean, they aren't T-bone steaks.

But they are good. We tried them hot and cold. I even had my older taste-tester, who doesn't like hot dogs very much, try them and she liked them too.

Will I buy them again? Probably. It's going to take us a while to finish this package, though. With foods that expensive, you have to make them last a long time.

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.
