Quarrels precede convention opening

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Walter F. Mondale worked awkwardly Saturday to realign the Democratic party leadership, as convention delegates descended on San Francisco to nominate him for president and celebrate his choice of Rep. Geraldine Ferraro for vice president.

The convention opens Monday but the Democrats began quarreling in advance after Mondale ousted national party chairman Charles Manatt, effective with the close of business next week. "It's time for new leadership," he said. "It in no way reflects on Mr. Manatt."

Word swept through the convention hotels that Bert Lance — Jimmy Carter's old confidant — would get the job. But that seemed to risk a party revolt, and Mondale quickly assigned Lance the newly created post of general campaign chairman.

The very possibility of appointing Lance to head the party stunned some Democratic officials. "The Republicans are already running all over the United States talking about Carter-Mondale," said Texas party boss Bob Slagle. "This will just give them something else to talk about."

The hullaballoo intrigued campaign rival Gary Hart, whose aides produced names of delegates they claimed were ready to bolt from Mondale over the shakeup.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who arrived to a welcoming rally, said, "It appears to be another case of too few people making too many decisions.

"I was not given the courtesy of consultation in this latest Chuck Manatt-Bert Lance fiasco," Jackson said in an interview on NBC-TV. "I would hope that the Mondale camp would take into more account the role that Gary Hart and I must play if we are to leave San Francisco unified and strong."

Manatt said he had "no comment on that" when asked about the day's developments.

Two delegates announced quickly they were abandoning Mondale for the ranks of the uncommitted — Nebraska national committeewoman DiAnna Schimek, who said she would try to encourage her state's other 11 Mondale delegates to follow her lead, and Richard Koster, head of the five-vote delegation representing Democrats living in Latin America.

Lance himself switched his allegiance to Mondale from uncommitted, and that still left Mondale with nearly 2,100 delegates, more than the 1,967 needed to win the nomination.

Hart, perhaps trying to stir up trouble for Mondale, criticized the timing of the ouster of a "scrupulously neutral" Manatt.

MISD personnel level suffers minimal effects of reforms

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Despite a special legislative session, delayed budget discussions and a temporary hiring freeze, the personnel situation for Midland Independent School District is little changed from what it was this time last year.

The uncertainty of what educational reforms would come out of Austin — and how they would affect the budget — was responsible for a week-long hiring freeze. Even before the word came down to cease hiring, Human Resources Director Ron Whitmore delayed filling most positions.

"We just had to make sure we had some flexibility," he said. Administrators knew legislative reforms could result in decreased funding as well as increased expenditures for the district, and they were preparing for possible cuts in staff.

The ban on hiring was lifted the same day legislators voted for the educational reform package, Whitmore said. Although final figures were uncertain, "we knew enough of what had happened in Austin that we could go ahead. We had continued interviewing and making recommendations, and when the freeze was lifted in a matter of hours we were able to fill some of those positions." About 30 of 60 vacancies were filled in less than two weeks.

"We knew who we wanted and were able to offer them contracts. With two or three exceptions, I don't think we lost anybody because of the freeze," Whitmore said.

"The first thing we did was to hire teacher-coaches," he said, because many of them have to start work in two weeks. "There were also some math and science positions where we couldn't afford to wait because of supply." Math and science are two areas suffering from a nationwide shortage of teachers.

"The most critical thing right now in terms of a shortage is physics," Whitmore continued. Two other positions he is having trouble filling are those of a math chairperson and a metals teacher for industrial arts.

"The rest of it, we're in pretty good shape. In elementary we have a good supply of really good teachers. There are many more than we'll be able to hire. In special education and bilingual education we're looking pretty good, although that wasn't the case a few years ago."

Boom over but Midland growth continues

EDITOR'S NOTE: Post-boom conditions and growth in Midland continue to receive state- and nationwide attention. This report is by the West Texas correspondent for the Associated Press.

By JUDY GIANNETTINO
Associated Press Writer

MIDLAND — The skyline of this oil-dependent West Texas city — tall, sleek, concrete-and-glass buildings clustered in the middle of an often-forlorn part of the state — occasionally stuns first-time visitors.

The number of buildings, their size, and the money obviously needed to construct them is unexpected amid the dry plains of the state where the horizon is always visible.

"It takes many people aback," said Carolyn Ivy, executive secretary of the city's Chamber of Commerce. "But once they get to know the city, they understand. It's a great place."

And, apparently, many people are beginning to get to know Midland.

Though its growth rate is not as awesome as it was three years ago when the oil business was booming, Midland's skyline is expanding steadily, as is its population.

Midland officials say their city is experiencing a "steady growth rate."

And some outside analysts contend Midland, which serves as the center of oil production in the vast Permian Basin, is one of, if not the, nation's fastest-growing city.

One report, prepared by Dun and Bradstreet Corp. in New York, showed that Midland's population jumped 29.7 percent between the 1980 census and 1983.

Reports vary as to the exact size of Midland, but city officials say the population currently is close to 100,000.

Despite a devastating oil bust two years ago that left many people jobless and several companies faltering, Midland "has stabilized. We're definitely not going backwards," said City Manager James Brown.

New apartments and new office space also are signs of Midland's once-again healthy economy, officials said.

A study conducted in January by the Midland Chamber of Commerce revealed that Midland has more than 6.2 million square feet of leasable office space. That number is an 11.55 percent increase over 1983 and exceeds the amount of leasable office space available in 1981 by more than 3 million square feet.

According to "Texas Facts & Figures," a report published by Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc., 60 percent of Midland's office developments has been built since 1979.

'Wrong' Midlander shot as 'family feud' erupts

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A family feud which was ignited at least six months ago resulted in the rifle-shooting Saturday of the "wrong" man and the arrest of another.

The brother-in-law of the accused reportedly was the intended target of the rifle shots.

The injured man, Joe Campos, 36, was listed in critical condition late Saturday night in Midland Memorial Hospital. He was shot, reportedly with a .30-caliber rifle, in the hip and abdomen as he was driving a Ford Econoline van in the 2000 block of South Fort Worth Street in far southeast Midland.

About 30 minutes after the 5 p.m. shooting, Midland County Sheriff's deputies arrested 26-year-old Sammy Martinez at his house at 2005 S. Fort Worth St.

Martinez's 30-year-old brother, Johnny Martinez, said Sammy was shooting at his brother-in-law, Billy Nunez, who was riding in the right front seat of the van. Billy and his brother, Danny Nunez of Dallas, ducked. One slug shattered the right front window and another pierced the center of the right front door.

"He (Martinez) was shooting at Billy," Johnny Martinez said.

Campos was driven to the hospital in the van.

Tom Craddick

Tom Craddick among 'outstanding' legislators

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

"Each one of us has a name that quickly comes to mind when 'Legislator of the Year' is mentioned," began the letter from the National Republican Legislators Association.

For State Rep. Frank Eikenburg, the name of his colleague in the State House of Representatives — Tom Craddick of Midland — came to mind. He gathered information on Craddick, obtained recommendations from two other statewide Republicans and sent in the nomination.

Last week, Craddick — who was unaware of the nomination — was notified he had been selected as one of 10 Outstanding Legislators of the Year from almost 3,000 Republican state legislators across the United States.

Craddick, 40, who was surprised at his selection, will be receiving the award July 23 in Boston at a luncheon session of the NRLA. Featured speakers will be Ambassador William E. Brock and Frank J. Fahrenkopf Jr., chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Eikenburg was a college roommate, said Craddick. And it was Eikenburg who chased down every Republican member of the state House and Senate to endorse the nomination.

Jacksons thrill crowd in first Dallas concert

IRVING, Texas (AP) — As thousands thronged into Texas Stadium on Saturday for the second concert of the "Jacksons Victory Tour," first-aid teams geared up to handle fans already wilting from the heat.

Excitement built as fast as the humidity rose inside the semi-domed home of the Dallas Cowboys, as a crowd expected to reach almost 40,000 gathered inside to watch superstar Michael Jackson and four of his brothers sing and dance onstage.

"We've already had 17 come in suffering from headaches and the heat, and it's a few hours until the concert starts," said nurse Phyllis Hall, who was manning one of several first aid stations. "I think it's a lot more humid tonight and we expect more problems."

Ms. Hall said tour promoters had been asked to lower the volume of the concert Saturday night because "we had lots of problems with the noise last night — kids were crying and begging to go home and some of them couldn't hear for several hours after the concert."

Tickets sales were sluggish in the Dallas area initially, with many fans disgruntled at having to mail $120 for four tickets without a guarantee of seeing any of the three shows, which started Friday.

On Friday night, Jackson, wearing a white-sequined coat and black pants, rose from the bowels of the giant stage with his brothers and made a rhythmic entrance amid a halo of red and green laserbeams and blinding white lights before 39,000 fans.

The group played for 1 hour, 45 minutes, and at the end, Jackson's fine, curly hair was limp with perspiration.

One crowd favorite, "Beat It," was marked by an impromptu walk-on by Van Halen, who was in Dallas for a concert of his own Saturday night.

Friday's audience, many of whom had been waiting for five hours in 90-degree heat at the semi-domed Texas Stadium, got a look at Van Halen, lead guitarist of the heavy metal band of the same name, when he walked across the stadium floor before the Jackson extravaganza.

The Jacksons also won over one of their chief critics.

Ladonna Jones, 11, whose criticism led Jackson to order changes in the tour's ticket-buying procedure, got a kiss on the left cheek and a hug from the singer when she met him backstage for a few minutes before the opening act of the Jacksons' second tour stop.

The Lewisville sixth-grader had written a heart-tugging letter to Jackson, her idol, complaining about the high price of tickets.

"It was great," a beaming Ladonna said when it was all over. " 'Billie Jean' was my favorite."

Pepsico Inc., tour promoters, gave Ladonna four concert tickets which the youngster thought were on the front row but instead were in Section 1, Row 28.

Hance says he's 'lame duck'— not dead duck

WASHINGTON (AP) — Kent Hance says the only thing that bothers him these days is sympathy.

"Some of my colleagues, you can tell they feel a lot of sympathy for me like my world's come to an end. Well, my world hasn't come to an end. There's a new venture out there waiting," the Lubbock congressman said.

"I guess that's the only thing that's upset me since it was over," Hance said. "There are some people that want to give me sympathy."

When Hance lost his race for the U.S. Senate this year, he also lost his House seat because he could not run for both.

He had surprised political pollsters, who figured him for a distant third, by finishing first in the tight three-man race for the Democratic Senate nomination. But it was state Sen. Lloyd Doggett who won the excruciatingly close June 2 runoff.

Instead of moving to the other side of the Capitol as he had hoped, Hance will be moving back to Texas at the end of the year.

Hance said he had expected to return to Lubbock, but is weighing "lucrative" offers from large law firms and investment groups in Dallas and Houston. Still, he said, the political arena beckons.

"I invested so much time and effort and money in it to walk away from it," Hance said.

"It's something I like and in a few years, if there's something that looks like it would be a good position to run for where you could accomplish a lot, well, I'll talk it over with my family and if it's all right with them, I'll be back."

Hance, a lawyer, former state senator and Texas Tech University professor, is popular in his district and could have counted on a long career in the House. Did he regret giving up a sure thing for a long shot?

"Not one minute. I wondered about that before I made the decision, whether I would. I made the right decision," he said. Otherwise, "I'd be sitting around today saying, 'What if, what if...' "

Hance was one of the House Democrats tagged with the nickname "Boll Weevil" for supporting President Reagan's economic policies. Fellow "boll weevil" Phil Gramm of College Station switched parties and now is the Republican nominee for Senate.

Hance said he is supporting Doggett, a liberal, though he thinks he would have had a better chance against Gramm. He said does not regret the times he supported Reagan.

"When I thought he was right I helped him, when I thought he was wrong I opposed him, and I did that with (former President Jimmy) Carter," Hance said. "I just don't want to ever in politics get in a position that some other official thinks that they own me."

Politics aside, Hance says, he has left his legislative mark.

"In 1981, I passed the largest tax cut in the history of the country. It was the Conable-Hance bill. It has my name on it," he said proudly.

It was the "Hance amendment" that kept the Carter administration from instituting withholding on savings accounts, Hance said. In the tax bill passed last month was a Hance-sponsored provision that reduces the capital gains holding period to six months.

Some members who lose elections "lose interest," he said, but he expects to be involved in trade legislation and farm and environment policy before he leaves.

Last month, as he was hearing that a recount had not changed the results of the runoff, Hance was plotting strategy for defeating the immigration bill.

Just before the May 5 primary, Hance had run television commercials touting his opposition to amnesty for illegal aliens. He credited the spots with propelling him into first place.

The House narrowly passed the immigration bill, 216-211, on June 20, amnesty provision included.

"If I get involved in a fight, I don't walk away from it," Hance said. "This is something I've felt strongly about for the last couple of years. But it just didn't reach a point where I could do anything about it until it got to the floor."

He said the bill's sponsor, Rep. Romano Mazzoli, D-Ky., "thinks the bill would have passed by large margins if it hadn't been for my campaign. He said it made people stop and think how explosive the amnesty thing was."

All but three representatives in the 27-member Texas delegation opposed the bill.

More in South, West

The 1980 census, which counted over 225 million people in the United States, 11 percent more than in 1970, showed that for the first time more people were living in the South and West than in the Northeast and North-Central states.

Would-be teachers fail competency tests

AUSTIN (AP) — First tests given would-be teachers in Texas schools show 47 percent of them are lacking in reading, writing and mathematics skills, the State Board of Education was told Saturday.

"Now we have some information that this board and future boards can use in setting criteria for youngsters entering our education schools," said Dr. William N. Kemp, Houston, chairman of the board's committee on teacher preparation.

The board discussed the report, prepared by the Texas Education Agency, but took no immediate action on changing the Pre-Professional Skills Tests that all undergraduate students wanting a degree in teacher education must pass.

The education reform bill passed by the recent special session will require all current teachers to take similar competency tests by June 30, 1986. However, details of those tests, highly controversial among teachers' organzations, must be decided by the 1985 Legislature.

Two special meeting of the state have been called, for July 21 and Aug. 3-4, to discuss implementation of the bill signed Friday by Gov. Mark White.

Board member Will Davis, Austin, pointed out Saturday that the TEA report showed only 1,440 prospective teachers, most of them college sophomores, passed out of 2,687 taking the first pre-professional skills examination last March..

Another 4,800 college students who want to be teachers will take the tests July 21.

Only 19 percent of the Hispanics taking the first test passed, 10 percent of the blacks and 62 percent of the whites.

"One of the most interesting things in this report," said Kemp, "is that the differences in the ethnic groups is very similar to the differences shown at first in the basic skills tests given secondary students some years back."

By state law, students in third, fifth and ninth grades must pass tests in reading, writing and arithmatic in order to advance. The recently signed bill will expand those tests.

"However, we have found that the ethnics have been progressing in the basic skills tests, the gap is narrowing," said board member Kent Grusendorf, of Arlington. "Hopefully the differences will narrow in these new education school tests."

"To me the most disappointing thing about these tests is not the grades, but how few prospective teachers we have taking them," said Board Chairman Joe Kelly Butler, of Houston.

The Pre-Professional Skills Test was given at 51 of the 65 teacher training institutions in the state. Students did not have to be enrolled at a college to take the test there.

As a group, students taking the tests at the University of Texas at Austin, Rice University, and Austin College — a private college in Sherman — posted the best scores.

Of the 348 students who took the test at UT, 94 percent passed the reading portion, 91 percent passed math, and 93 percent passed writing.

All of the 19 students at Rice who took the exam passed the math and writing portion, while 90 percent mastered the reading section. At Austin College, 96 percent passed reading and 92 percent passed both math and writing.

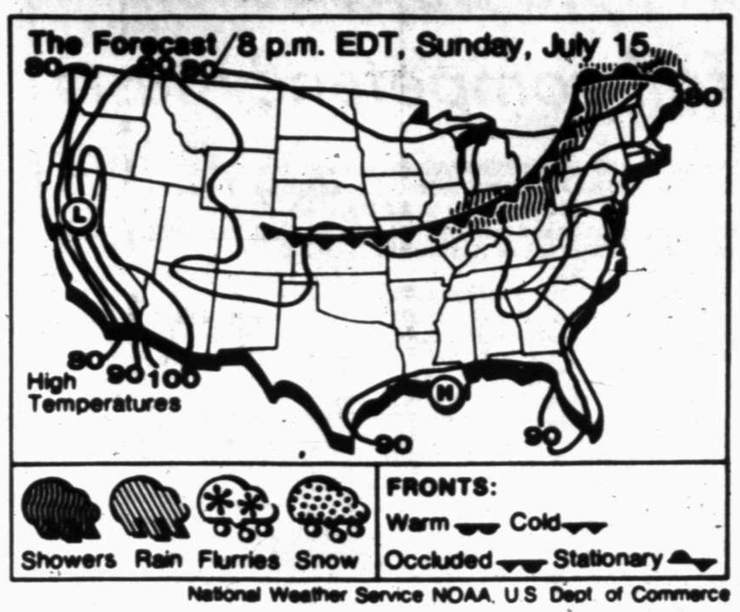
WEATHER SUMMARY



National Weather Service NOAA, U S Dept of Commerce

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service predicts showers today from the Ohio Valley to the eastern Great Lakes and northern Maine.

Hot, dry, sunny still characterize forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

It's another one of those summers that inspires gifted writers who can easily flick out descriptions of endless days colored by a golden aura. In simple language, it's gotten just plain hot and dry.

Midland should see no change in its weather pattern today: The sun will come up and the sun will go down and the sun will shine in between those two events.

During that sunshine period, the high should soar into the middle 90s. Once the sun drops below the western horizon, the mercury should ease down and stop in the upper 60s. Winds should breeze through at 5 to 15 mph.

Saturday's high of 94 fell short of the history book's 107 on that date in 1933. Today's overnight low should be warmer than the 64 recorded in 1960.

With no rain in the forecast, it can be expected that the monthly total will remain stationary at 0.75 of an inch. The year-to-date mark won't go above 6.81 inches.

STATE

Typical July weather continued its grip on the state Saturday, with sunny skies and high temperatures the rule in most areas.

By late afternoon, the mercury ranged from the upper 80s along the Gulf Coast where the sea breeze was moving inland, to 101 degrees at Waco.

Fort Worth and Wichita Falls also reported temperatures of 100, the National Weather Service said.

Most of the state felt some relief from the sweltering heat, however, as south and southeast breezes blew across Texas.

Midland statistics

FORECAST

Today should be fair with a high in the mid-90s with winds blowing from the south at 5-15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the upper 60s. High on Monday should be in the mid-90s.

GROWTH

The city's boom in office space is in sharp contrast to several other Texas cities, such as Dallas, where the amount of leasable office space declined during the past year.

According to the business development section of the Dallas Chamber of Commerce, more than 48 million square feet of leasable office space was available in 1983. Currently, the chamber said, the amount of office space in Dallas is about 38 million square feet.

Ms. Ivy said other construction in Midland also is "growing at an unprecedented rate."

In the past two years, 9,000 new apartment units have been built in Midland, bringing the number of apartments in the city to more than 13,000.

Across the board, in residential, retail, multi-tenant and commercial buildings, the vacancy rate stands at about 20 percent, she said. But she predicted that if Midland has a 3 percent growth rate this year, the vacancy rate will drop to a mere 6 percent.

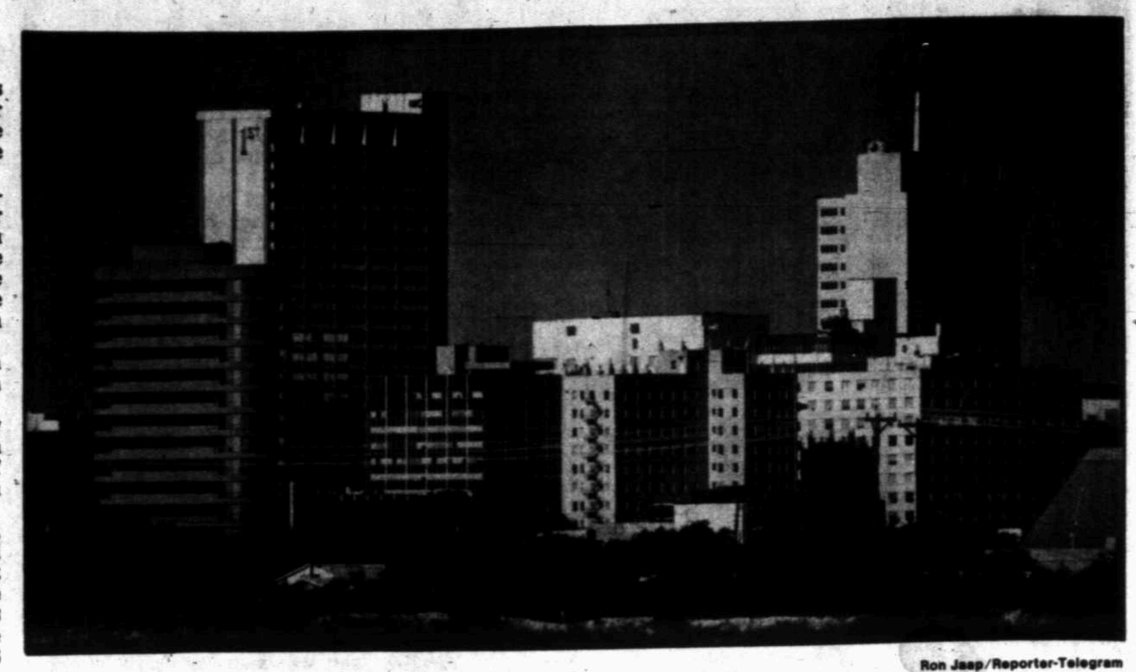
"Midland is growing fast and really quite steadily," Ms. Ivy said. "There never has been a lull."

Yet despite the heavy influx of people, the unemployment rate in Midland remains relatively low.

At the end of May, Midland's jobless rate was 3.5 percent, according to the Texas Employment Commission.

Ms. Ivy said many of the unemployed people in Midland are those in the oil-service business who were affected by the 1982 oil bust.

"The service end of the industry was hurt the most," she said. "But, now, things are much better and all our growth stems from an expansion in the oil industry."



Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Midland's skyline, rising from the plain, still surprises some first-time visitors.

Midland, at the corner of western Texas near the New Mexico border, sits in the heart of the Permian Basin, which, as the largest single producer of oil in the United States, covers more than 100,000 square miles in 54 West Texas counties and four southeastern New Mexico counties.

Approximately 700 oil- and gas-related companies have established offices in Midland, which most of its residents describe as a city with a "small-town" atmosphere.

But Midland does have "many amenities that draw people to us," Brown said.

"Beside the fact that our economy is good and the unemployment rate is low, we have things now that big cities have," he said, pointing out that Midland is home for a community theater, symphony, several museums and nightclubs.

And with the highest per capita income among all urban areas in the nation, Midland attracts people "who want to try and be a part of it all," Brown said.

"We're not the normal mix. Our economic foundation is not broad-based," he explained. "Our blue-collar community is not large."

Midland is generally an "administrative and technical" community, he said. "That is a big attraction."

Brown said he does not believe Midland ever will experience the rapid all-at-once growth it did three years ago when people flocked to the Permian Basin to try their hands at the oil industry.

But, he said, it's obvious the steady growth will continue for several years.

"That kind of growth is better," he said. "It's easier to plan for, easier to absorb."

Sammy Martinez, 26, is arrested by Midland County Sheriff's deputies following the Saturday shooting of 36-year-old Joe Campos in southeast Midland.

FEUD

Officers from the Midland County Sheriff's Department, Midland County Constable's Office and the Midland Police Department initially investigated the shooting. The investigation now is being conducted by the sheriff's office.

Martinez's brother Johnny said the feud was fueled at least six months ago when Billy Nunez pulled a blank pistol at an automobile glass shop where Sammy Martinez worked. A fight broke out between the two, and Campos intervened and hit Martinez in the head with a knife. Sammy's wound required 21 stitches to sew up.

Johnny Martinez said Billy Nunez resented Sammy.

After the incident at the automobile glass shop, Martinez was laid off from work and went to Wichita Falls. He had recently returned to Midland when on Saturday afternoon Billy Nunez got someone to awaken Sammy from his sleep.

His brother got a rifle, stepped into his front yard and fired, Johnny Martinez said.

New Zealand's Labor Party succeeds in ousting Muldoon

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — The Labor Party led by David Lange ended Prime Minister Robert Muldoon's nine-year tenure with a landslide election victory Saturday. The conservative defeat was seen fueled by voter discontent over Muldoon's economic policies, confrontational style and close U.S. defense ties.

It appeared Labor would win 57 of the 95 seats in Parliament and Muldoon's National Party 36 seats, New Zealand television said. The Social Credit Party would probably win two seats, it said.

Five of Muldoon's Cabinet members lost their seats in Parliament.

Election officials said turnout was heavy around the country despite bad weather.

Lange, who at 41 will become the youngest prime minister in New Zealand's history, called Saturday for national unity and a return to the prosperity and harmony many of his countrymen fear has been lost forever.

But some applicants are being put on hold. "There are a few positions where I know we can afford to wait — because there are plenty of applicants — just in case August rolls around and we find we have to reduce staff."

"No one's going to lose their job," Whitmore assured, "but there may be some positions that we don't fill. There's a couple in special education where the numbers are so small we'd consolidate some units. There might be some in physical education. It remains to be seen what we're going to do with the intern program. We had some tentative plans for four interns. I doubt if that will happen now."

The intern program employs teachers as administrative aides at schools with large student populations.

The delay in setting salaries for next year has caused additional problems, Whitmore admitted. "Since we don't know what our salary schedule is going to be, that's been a disadvantage. There's been a couple of people we have wanted to hire who haven't wanted to make a commitment" because wages are not yet finalized.

That hasn't been a problem in the past, Whitmore said, because Midland had one of the top pay scales in the state. But after the special legislative session, salary schedules all over the state will be upgraded. "From a competitive standpoint, it's not that we don't pay good salaries, it's that other districts will be much closer to what we pay," Whitmore explained.

The district may not be able to afford large raises, he added, and for comparable salaries many teachers may choose to work in more favorable locations. "Places with lakes and trees and grass," Whitmore said.

He guessed the number of vacancies this summer would be similar to last year — about 100 — although some positions may not be filled.

Turnover the past two years has been considerably less than in previous years, Whitmore noted. About 180 new teachers were hired in the summer of 1982, and about 250 in 1981.

Tenure at the administrative level is even more notable. There have been no administrative openings this year, he pointed out, whereas last year saw eight.

Midland toddler dies after fall onto babysitter's porch steps

From Staff Reports

A 13-month-old toddler who fell onto concrete steps at his babysitter's house Friday has died in Midland Memorial Hospital.

The boy, Luis Garcia Olguin, reportedly fell into a coma after the fall in the windowpane area in far southeast Midland and died at 6:30 p.m. Saturday.

He suffered head injuries.

Midland County Justice of the Peace Robert H. "Bob" Pine pronounced the boy dead and ordered an autopsy.

Midland County Sheriff's Office is investigating the fall.

Pine is to rule on the cause of death following his review of the autopsy report.

The boy's mother is Rosario Olguin.

Services are pending at Thomas Funeral Home.

U.S. gave funds to Indian churches

For many years federal funds were committed to the building of churches through treaty agreements with the Indians.

And until very late in the 19th century, Congress was appropriating annually over $500,000 in support of sectarian education of Indians that was supplied by religious organizations.

In his nomination letter, Eikenburg wrote, "In my opinion, Tom is probably the outstanding legislator in the Texas House of Representatives. His help to further Republicanism in this state is questioned by none, and the accomplishments he has made far exceed anything I could enumerate on this brief document."

When Craddick was elected a state representative to the 61st session, he was the youngest member of the House. He has won re-election every time since then, in addition to working on fund-raising for Republican candidates on the local and statewide basis.

Now, Craddick is the senior Republican member of the Texas Legislature. He serves as chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, a member of the House Energy Resources Committee, on the Natural Resources and Environmental Committee, Council of State Governments — Environmental Quality and Natural Resources Committee, Southwest Energy Research Council and vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Study of Water Resources.

In answering the question on the application which asked him to briefly reflect on changes since President Reagan took office, Craddick had included: drastic reduction of inflation for America, economy is moving, return of international respect for American foreign policy, personal renewal of confidence in national government since Reagan/Bush have been elected.

Locally, Craddick is a past director of the Boys Club, past member of the Midland Jaycees, member of the Downtown Lions Club and the Texas American Bank/ Midland board of directors. He is owner of Craddick Properties and sales representative for Mustang Mud, Inc.

Also sending in their recommendations were Ernest Angelo Jr. of Midland, a national Republican committeeman; and George Strake, state Republican chairman.

Andrews woman killed, another injured in truck-auto accident

ANDREWS — A 20-year-old Andrews woman was killed and another woman was injured in a truck-car mishap just south of Andrews Friday afternoon, according to the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Killed was Shelly Merrick Tidwell, an Andrews waitress, driver of a 1983 Chevrolet car. Injured was her passenger, Ronda Glenn, 20, of Andrews. Ms. Glenn, also a waitress, was listed in stable condition Friday night in Permian General Hospital. She suffered head lacerations and bruises.

The DPS reported the accident occurred after Ms. Tidwell made a U-turn in a cross-over 1.4 miles south of Andrews about 3:20 p.m., attempted to head north in returning to Andrews. The car accelerated as it hit a puddle of water in the crossover, spun around 180 degrees and into the path of a northbound 1981 Mack tractor-trailer.

The truck, driven by Dale Waldon, 50, of Andrews, struck the left front side of the car. Ms. Tidwell was dragged beneath the truck.

She was pronounced dead at the scene by Andrews County Justice of the Peace G.A. Ragsdale. Waldon was not injured.

Ms. Tidwell's body was taken to Singleton Funeral Home.

Centenarian recalls life in circus

AUSTIN (AP) — When Fred LaNovel goes to the circus Sunday afternoon, he'll likely be one of the oldest spectators in the audience. He'll also be among the most knowledgeable.

LaNovel, who will turn 100 July 23, was born into a Barnum and Bailey Circus family, became a clown when he was 5, and later formed an aerial act with his brothers and sisters.

As Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus roustabouts brought in equipment to the Erwin Center this week, LaNovel recalled the old days.

"They've got it easy compared to what we had," said LaNovel. "We didn't have tractors. We used elephants and horses."

LaNovel is the son of circus bareback riders who raised their five boys and three girls around the circus. The children's aerial act was known as the Flying LaNovels.

"Sometimes we worked a double act, two rigs side-by-side, with the whole family up," LaNovel said. "I've hit that thing a many a time," he added, pointing to a rolled up safety net nearby.

Fred LaNovel's 100th birthday falls in the same year as the 100th anniversary of the founding of the Ringling Bros. part of the circus. The Barnum and Bailey Circus was founded 113 years ago.

LaNovel has fond memories of the legendary P. T. Barnum, and said, "I was practically raised on his knee. He could be tough, but I knew him as a gentle and good man. He knew everybody in the show by name."

When Barnum's office tent was set up, LaNovel said, "the telegram tent was always set up right beside it because he never wrote letters, he sent telegrams."

Circus people "all took care of each other," LaNovel said. "If anybody got in trouble, they all pulled together, we were like a big family."

The Big Top had charms and dangers. "There were times I saw it blown flat, blown away in a storm," LaNovel said. "That's how I lost my four brothers. In Iowa City in 1908, a tornado hit just like a shot without warning.

"We never knew if my brothers were hit by lightning or got caught under the canvas in the fire that followed, but they all died there."

LaNovel left the circus after his brothers were killed to follow other careers. When he was 98, he was still using his tractor to farm his small plot of land near Lockhart until a circulatory problem forced amputation of both legs above the knee.

Since then, he has bravely tried to use artificial legs and last week was fitted with "stubbies," fashioned for him by Austin prosthetist Dennis Cole. They bring him close to the floor and help him keep his balance.

The Stubbies resemble backward soles. LaNovel grinned and said, "Yes, you can't tell whether I'm coming or going, can you?"

Even if he becomes more mobile, he will hang onto his wheelchair, LaNovel said, "because I wouldn't be able to reach my easel without it." He took up painting "because it beats the hell out of staring at four walls," and is gaining a reputation as a landscape artist. He recently had a one-man show at a Lockhart gallery.

At the moment, however, LaNovel is more excited about the prospect of attending a circus performance Sunday. "I've always loved the circus and I always will," he said.

"They call it the greatest show on earth and that's exactly what it is. There's nothing so colossal as the circus."

Standard blood tests may aid in digestive cancer detection

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Researchers say standard blood counts may give doctors a tool for early detection of disgestive cancers.

Dr. David Bessman of the University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston said Friday he has been able to distinguish iron deficiencies from a common genetic disorder by observing standard blood counts.

A Coulter Counter, the standard machine used to show red blood cell counts, produces a graph to show differences between iron deficiency and thalossemia, a genetic defect described by Bessman as "nature's attempt to combat malaria."

If the graph indicates iron deficiency, further tests are ordered to determine its cause. Iron deficiencies are most common in women of menstruating or childbearing age and are usually treated with simple iron supplements.

But in men, he said the disorder is an indication that the man is bleeding. Ulcers or hemmoroids are typically suspected of causing male iron deficiencies, but in both sexes the cause may a cancer of the digestive tract.

Bessman said the early detection method is significant because colo-rectal cancers have the worst cure rate and are not responsive to drug therapy unless caught in the very early stages.

Testing for digestive cancers was until recently limited to testing of the stool — but only after standard blood testing indicated a risk.

Such tests are time-consuming, more expensive and embarrassing to the patient, he said.

But the Red Cell Distribution Width, the graph produced by the Coulter Counter, will immediately alert physicians to the likelihood of a deficiency, and a second test now will be needed only for confirmation, Bessman said.

The school's Coulter Counter is one of only four in the country capable of producing Bessman's Red Cell Distribution Width.

Only floor fight likely to be on party's platform

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The only floor fight of the 1984 Democratic Convention is likely to come Tuesday as delegates debate the party's platform, and that battle may be mild in comparison with fights of past Democratic gatherings.

With Walter F. Mondale's pre-convention designation of a running mate, adoption of the platform remains the only major unresolved business of the convention, with Gary Hart and Jesse Jackson both planning challenges over selected parts of the document.

"The only justification we have for meeting this week is (if) somehow we come out of that convention with a plan for peace, for jobs and for justice," Jackson said Friday. "Nominees and tickets and slates and schemes are by-products of the real agenda."

Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, D-N.Y., was to have presided over the debate as chairwoman of the platform committee which drafted the document, a political statement of the party's general goals and philosophy that all Democratic candidates are expected to embrace.

But in light of Mondale's selection of her for the No. 2 spot on his ticket, she will not speak until her acceptance speech on Thursday, Democratic officials said Saturday. Instead, the job of presiding will be shared by Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, Boston Mayor James Flynn and Birmingham, Ala., Mayor Richard Arrington.

WHILE JACKSON has vowed to fight energetically for his positions during the platform debate, Hart's challenge centers on one foreign policy plank and appears more symbolic than substantive.

Party leaders say they do not expect the floor fights to come close to matching the kind of divisive debate that marked the 1980 platform confrontation between forces loyal to then-President Carter and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

The proposed 1984 platform is a 35,000-word composite, tailored for Mondale's candidacy but also borrowing heavily from themes generated by Hart and Jackson. And stitched through it, page after page, is stinging criticism of President Reagan and what the platform draft calls his "government by subtraction."

And, predictably, it holds out the promise of a better life for all Americans under a Democratic president.

Although Mondale delegates on the committee made numerous concessions in accepting language from Jackson's "new directions" and Hart's "new ideas" agendas, they stood firm in some controversial areas.

Floor fights are expected over five minority planks, one proposed by Hart and the other four by Jackson:

—A Hart plank spelling out when a Democratic president should not use military force, a watered down version of an earlier Hart plank ruling out use of U.S. land forces in a Persian Gulf war.

—A Jackson plank urging "substantial" cuts in defense spending instead of the increased spending endorsed by the committee version.

—A Jackson plank stating opposition to runoff primaries common in southern states. The platform draft opposes such races only where they can be demonstrated to be discriminatory.

—A Jackson plank stating, in absolute terms, a "no first use" policy for nuclear weapons.The committee version calls just for moving toward such a policy.

—A Jackson plank advocating stronger affirmative action programs and asserting that quotas are permissible in some situations. The platform reiterates Democratic opposition to all quotas.

"This is a broad-based document ... a document all of us can be proud to run upon," said Rep. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., Hart's top spokesman on the 435-member platform committee which adopted the document.

In a less generous moment, Wirth called the effort "a conglomeration of mush."

Seeking to avoid a repeat of the platform brawls of 1980, party officials set out from the beginning to keep the document general and broad, with efforts made to sidestep areas of controversy.

This year's relative harmony was achieved under the leadership of Ms. Ferraro, whose role helped propel her into the national spotlight before she was tapped by Mondale to be his running mate,

She kept close touch with each of the three camps and sucessfully fought off most attempts to make the platform specific.

"It got a little more specific than we intended," Ms. Ferraro said. "But my real goal was to avoid mentioning specific legislation or putting dollar figures on programs. And we did that. It came out better than I expected."

THE PLATFORM is more fiscally conservative than those of either 1976 or 1980. Absent are jobs or other major spending programs — the 1980 platform contained a $12 billion jobs program proposed by Kennedy. It also advocates increases in defense spending.

The platform lashes into the huge federal deficits of the Reagan years, vows to restore cuts in domestic programs made by the president and urges "sensible arms control agreements."

Democrats promise to reduce deficits through a more cost-efficient military, through a fairer tax program and though controlling health costs.

It criticizes Reagan as "the first president in over 50 years who has not met face to face with Soviet leaders" and proposes annual summits with Soviet leaders under a Democratic administration.

On Central America, the platform opposes Reagan's emphasis on military aid, stresses the importance of a politically negotiated settlement, advocates restrictions on military exercises in the area, and vows that all future aid to El Salvador should be tied to human rights progress.

The platform proposes for the first time that political action committees be prohibited from contributing to presidential and congressional campaigns.

The platform also goes further than past party platforms in guaranteeing legal rights to homosexuals in employment, the military and immigration. It also deplores acts of violence against "gay men and lesbians."

It also endorses ratification of a new Equal Rights Amendment.

Manatt out; Lance heads Mondale's campaign

By CLIFF HAAS

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Walter F. Mondale moved to take charge of the Democratic Party structure Saturday by dumping Charles Manatt as party chairman and naming Georgia party chief Bert Lance as general chairman of his presidential campaign.

The possiblity that Lance would be named to Manatt's post sparked stirrings of rebellion among Democrats in this convention city.

At a news conference in the yard of a vacation home in Lake Tahoe, Mondale commended Manatt for his "superb leadership of our party" but said that nonetheless he would exercise his option as the presumed Democratic presidential nominee to replace Manatt by the end of next week.

He called Lance "an old friend and supporter."

The announcement came after Mondale met with Lance, former President Carter's budget director who resigned amid questions about his financial dealings.

"It's time for new leadership," Mondale said when asked why he was replacing Manatt. "It in no way reflects on Mr. Manatt."

LANCE, STANDING by Mondale's side, said, "I am excited by this opportunity."

Asked if he was concerned that the allegations of past financial irregularities could become a political issue again, Mondale replied, "I consider myself a good judge of character. ... Bert Lance is a very, very fine human being with good values, a deep religious faith and a marvelous family."

Mondale said Lance would work with him in the search for someone to replace Manatt by the time the Democratic National Comimittee holds its post-convention session next Friday in San Francisco.

Lance's responsibility as general chairman of the Mondale campaign will include coordinating the activities of the Democratic National Committee, the House and Senate campaign committees and various local political committees.

In that way, it will be similar to the role being played in the Republican Party by Sen. Paul Laxalt of Nevada.

Asked if Carter had played a role in his selection of Lance, Mondale replied, "I told him about an hour ago what I was going to do."

MONDALE SAID he talked to Manatt three or four days ago and told him he planned to make a change in the party leadership.

Asked who would prevail should a conflict arise between Lance and the new Party chairman, Mondale said, "the chairman of my committee will be very, very influential."

Mondale campaign manager Bob Beckel had said before Mondale's announcement that Lance was being interviewed because he has strong political credentials in the South, which Beckel said is "very critical to us" for a November victory.

Lance "helped us enormously" to recover from Mondale's early primary setbacks and win the South, Beckel said. "Mr. Mondale has an enormous amount of admiration for Mr. Lance, as do those of us who have worked with him closely," he said.

Democratic sources who spoke on condition that they not be quoted by name said Friday night that Manatt would be replaced as party chairman by Lance. But that touched off a flurry of criticism Saturday, which apparently led to a reversal of the plan for Lance to take over the party operations.

Manatt, leaving a San Francisco hotel for a visit to the Napa Valley wine country, repeatedly was asked by reporters about the move to replace him as party chairman.

"It's going to be a real good convention," he repeatedly answered.

MANATT APPARENTLY was told Friday that Mondale wanted to turn control of the committee over to Lance.

While it is traditional for the party's new presidential nominee to install the party chairman of his choice, Democrats appeared startled that Mondale chose to make the move even before the nominating convention convenes Monday.

Sen. Gary Hart, Mondale's chief rival for the presidential nomination, criticized the timing of the change of party leadership and praised Manatt as one who had "done an excellent job under difficult circumstances."

Hart said during the bitter primary election struggle, Manatt had been "scrupulously neutral."

"I don't know what the rush is to displace him," Hart said.

Oliver Henkel, Hart's campaign manager, said naming Lance to the top party post might persuade large numbers of delegates to switch from Mondale to Hart.

"It is the kind of lightning strike that can occur at a convention like this," said Henkel, "and lightning looks for a place to strike."

THE HART CAMPAIGN claimed the move to dump Manatt had brought at least 10 delegates who had been backing Mondale into their corner. But that claim could not be confirmed immediately.

One delegate from a Midwestern state claimed by the Hart camp denied that he had turned against Mondale. But the delegate, who asked not to be identified, indicated he would be upset if Lance were brought in as party chief.

Tom Donilon, a Mondale aide who oversees the delegate hunting operation, told reporters earlier Saturday that 2,107 delegates are backing Mondale, or 140 more than he needs to win the nomination.

The Associated Press survey of delegates counts 2,096 who have publicly stated they will vote for Mondale on the first ballot Wednesday night.

Tad Devine, one of Mondale's delegate hunters, said later Saturday, "The phones aren't ringing off the hook telling us that they're leaving us."

Rep. Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., the assistant House majority leader, said of the Manatt ouster, "People who have admired the work of Chuck Manatt obviously have some concern."

BIG LABOR, whose support was essential to Mondale's drive for the nomination, also appeared cool to talk of Lance assuming a major role.

Record results from hard work and customer confidence.

Thanks, Midland for making these past six months so dramatically successful for Western Bank.

We're proud of our achievements. They are the result of our commitment to hard work and your response to our service.

But more importantly, our results reflect our business attitude at Western.

At Western Bank, you'll find friendly, neighborly folks doing their jobs with a genuine interest in your financial needs. Couple that attitude with our years of Midland banking experience, and you've got a combination that more and more Midlanders are discovering at Western. We like to think of it as the WESTERN WAY.

Over the next few weeks, we'll be telling you more about the WESTERN WAY of banking. Please call us if we can offer it to you.

Slagle has mixed feelings about Lance

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Replacing Charles Manatt with Bert Lance as chairman of the Democratic National Committee in a bid to appeal to Southerners may not be such a hot idea, the head of the Texas Democratic Party said Saturday.

"I'm not sure I like it," said Bob Slagle, a long-time backer of likely presidential nominee Walter Mondale. "I've got mixed emotions, and I'm not sure I'd be agreeable to that."

Mondale's campaign manager, Robert Beckel, said Saturday that Manatt would be replaced. And Slagle said a Mondale aide talked with him Saturday about replacing the current National Committee chairman.

Slagle, who is bringing the third-largest delegation to the Democratic National Convention, said giving the job to Lance might cause problems.

"The Republicans are already running all over the United States talking about (the) Carter-Mondale (administration)," Slagle said. "This will just give them something else to talk about."

After a series of Senate hearings and national hoopla over Carter's Georgian confidant, Lance resigned in September 1977. Three years later, a jury cleared him of bank fraud charges.

But despite his reservations, Slagle said he wouldn't foresee an image problem should Lance get the job.

"There's nothing wrong with Bert Lance. I only wish he'd get his waistline down a little bit," he said with a laugh.

Slagle, who has argued with Manatt in the past over party rules and operations, said that nevertheless, he believes Manatt has done a good job as national chairman.

"He's been exceedingly fair with Texas," Slagle said. "I've got no complaints whatsoever with the way we've been treated by him.'

As did more than one-third of the Texas delegation, Slagle had favored Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen for the vice presidential nomination. He said Bentsen would have been a big help not only in carrying Texas — without which no Democrat has been elected president — but across the South as well.

Installing Lance as chairman might help some in that regard, Slagle said. "It's always nice to have someone in there I can understand."

Although Slagle said Bentsen or San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros would have been a big boost to the party's hopes in Texas, he said also had good words for Mondale's choice — New York Rep. Geraldine Ferraro.

Recent polls in the state have shown that 80 percent of the voters say they would vote for a qualified woman for president, he noted, adding: "There's no question she's qualified. The fact that (House Speaker) Tip O'Neill endorsed her against the whole field speaks well of her."

Slagle also said he believed Ms. Ferraro would prove a popular candidate.

"The fact that she's a very direct person is good. That will go over well in Texas," he said.

Five people die in plane crash

CONCORD, Calif. (AP) — An airplane that "banked real sharply" to avoid another plane slammed into a car dealership and exploded in flames Saturday, killing five people, witnesses and police said.

The plane, a twin-engine Cheyenne turbo-prop, crashed into the body shop and parts department of Shepherd Pontiac at 12:12 p.m. in Concord, about 35 miles east of San Francisco, said fire dispatcher Pete Alioto.

The plane was approaching Buchanan Field to land when the accident happened, said Bob Baldwin, area supervisor for the Federal Aviation Administration, said .

"It looked like (the pilot) decided not to land the first time and there was another plane coming, so he banked real sharply to avoid the other plane and as he banked his tail dropped and he went right down," said Diane Lister, a saleswoman at Concord Toyota about two blocks from the crash scene.

"I remember turning away and thinking the plane was too low and then I heard the crash," she added. "There was a big explosion and it burned fast and it burned hot. Those guys (at Shepherd) were real lucky.

"Fifty feet more and it would have landed right in the showroom. They would have been gone."

Baldwin said the plane can hold up to 10 people but that it was not immediately known if all the victims were in the plane.

Police said the victims included four adults and one child.

Tim Verducci, sales manager at Sun Valley Ford about a block from the crash scene, said that after the crash he heard "a couple of big booms. It hit a garbage bin first, then crashed into the building.

"Somebody said it flipped on its side as it approached the field, then hit the body shop, the parts department and the back of the main building. It damaged four or five new cars."

"There was kind of a mushroom shape as soon as it hit, a bunch of big pops," Verducci said. "The windows shook a little bit here."

FAA investigators were on the scene.

Koch disfavors investment

NEW YORK (AP) — Mayor Edward Koch has endorsed a gradual reduction of city pension fund investments in companies that do business in South Africa.

Koch said Friday the city's five pension systems, with about $20 billion in assets, should immediately begin terminating investment in companies that do business with the police or the military in South Africa.

A majority of the trustees of the New York City Emplyees Retirement System has recommended an end to investments in any company doing business with any branch of the South African government.

Navy to assess project

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — The Navy says it will complete a full environmental impact statement on the effect a powerful electromagnetic generator would have on the Chesapeake Bay.

The statement will be completed before a decision is made on the whether to proceed with the project, said Secretary of the Navy John F. Lehman Jr. in a letter Friday to Gov. Harry Hughes.

The Navy originally had planned a less thorough environmental assessment for the project, in which the generator would send pulses simulating those produced by a nuclear blast to test the pulses' effect on ships' electronic equipment.

Priest put on suspension

DETROIT (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest has been suspended from his clerical duties because he is a delegate to the Democratic National Convention, officials of the Archdiocese of Detroit said.

The Rev. Robert Williams will not be reinstated until he has admitted his decision to defy church law was wrong, said Jay Berman, director of the archdiocesan Office of Communications.

Williams, pastor of St. Lawrence Church in the Detroit suburb of Utica, was suspended Wednesday by Archbishop Edmund Szoka. He may not celebrate Mass, hear confessions, preach or perform other priestly duties, Berman said. Canon law specifies clerics are not to have an active role in political parties.

Two Marines convicted

HONOLULU (AP) — Two Marines have been convicted of penetrating the Pearl Harbor Naval Base West Lock weapons depot, the Navy said.

Lance Cpl. Joe McWilliams, 25, of Staten Island, N.Y., and Pvt. Gregory W. Pratt, 20, of Moline, Ill., said they penetrated the zone May 6 to test the readiness of guards at the site.

The pair climbed two perimeter fences, ran undetected across a lighted field, then climbed a 60-foot guard tower and took a rifle, ammunition and radio from a guard, according to testimony at their court-martial.

Under military rules, they could have been shot on sight.

McWilliams was reduced to private, sentenced to 12 months at hard labor and fined. Pratt was given six months at hard labor and fined.

Prostitutes adopt platform

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Prostitutes who ended a four-day convention say they'll try to present their platform to the Democratic National Convention this week.

Several dozen prostitutes, at a convention ending Friday, adopted a platform calling for freedom to run brothels, acceptance of credit cards for services and an income tax structure for hookers.

At a crowded press conference just a block from Moscone Center where the Democrats will meet, one prostitute said she would not be working the Democratic convention.

Officers rushed to streets

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The city Police Academy pushed 59 recent graduates through training on an accelerated schedule, slicing one month off the six-month curriculum to get the new officers on the street in time for the Olympics.

"There are a few areas where the recruits didn't receive as much instruction," said Capt. Thomas G. Hays, commanding officer of the Training Division. "But it's nothing the casual observer or members of the community would notice."

The new officers had 310 hours cut from the 960-hour course, received 105 fewer hours of Spanish lessons, Hays said. Other areas, especially community relations and cultural courses, were also reduced, he said.

Protesters found 'guilty'

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Eight members of an anti-nuclear group known as the Pershing Plowshares were found guilty Saturday of all charges against them in the break-in of a Martin Marietta defense plant.

The federal jury deliberated one hour and 40 minutes before reaching its verdict. Each defendant was convicted of conspiracy and causing more than $100 in damage to U.S. Army property.

They each face a maximum 15 years in prison and a $20,000 fine. U.S. District Judge George Young set sentencing for July 25.

The group, which has claimed it never intended to break the law but rather make a point, used as its defense the argument that nuclear weapons are immoral and illegal.

The defendants admitted through out the six-day trial that they broke into the Orlando plant early on Easter Sunday. They said they cut through a chain-link fence, broke down a door and entered a building where Pershing II missile components are manufactured.

Bush criticizes Mondale's foreign, economic record

DENVER (AP) — Vice President George Bush lashed out Saturday at Walter Mondale's record on Nicaragua, accusing him of ignoring the massacres of Miskito Indians and "the suppression of free worship and free press and free expression."

Addressing a crowd of about 9,000 at the Colorado Republican Convention, Bush said, "To me, it's terribly troubling that Mondale has opposed every specific action the administration has taken to meet the communist threat in Nicaragua."

"He wants us to forget about Cuban, North Korean, Vietnamese and Soviet support for the Nicaraguan regime; to forget that the Nicaraguans are exporting anti-American revolution to neighboring El Salvador.

"Walter Mondale remains silent," he continued, about the suppression of ndependent labor unions, the humiliation of church leaders and the massacre of the Miskito Indians.

"Forget about all that,' Walter Mondale seems to say. Well, this president and this vice president will not forget," Bush said.

Bush also attacked Mondale's past economic record, saying that as vice president in the Carter administration, his "advocacy of endless economic programs helped create the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression."

Bush warned Republicans not to expect a positive message from the Democratic National Convention next week in view of the "gloom and doom" theme spread so far by Mondale.

"They said there was a 'malaise' in America," he said. "There was no malaise; the only thing wrong with America was a lack of leadership from Carter and Mondale."

But since Ronald Reagan took control, Bush said, the "supposedly hopeless" economy has begun to turn around. He said the message he and other Republicans would carry in the campaign is one of optimism. He likened it to the passage of the Olympic flame across the country.

"Watching its passage through the nation, you've got to know that America is still good and free and proud and brave. You've got to know that America is back and standing tall," he said.

"Walter Mondale talks loosely and loudly about fairness and what he's going to do for working men and women. We know Mr. Mondale's history and from bitter experience, so do the American people."

By the end of the Carter-Mondale term in 1980, he said, "Our economy was in a crisis state — the worst in nearly 50 years."

Bush's speech was interrupted more than a dozen times by prolonged applause.

Grass-roots America generally pleased with woman candidate

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — At first glance, Americans talking about Geraldine Ferraro seem generally pleased to have a woman running for vice president — but suspect Walter F. Mondale picked one with an eye on the political rewards. Some people wonder whether the gambit will work.

Those first impressions emerged from interviews with people scattered across the country, two days after Mondale said he wants Rep. Geraldine Ferraro on his Democratic ticket.

"He was just reaching for straws," said James Meador, 52, a retired Army master sergeant in Columbia, S.C. But Linda Walker, 32, of Brentwood, Calif., called the selection of a woman to be the Democrats' vice presidential nominee "the most exciting thing that has happened in this country's history."

Sanford Bing, who teaches at the Princeton Day School in Princeton, N.J., appeared to speak for many Americans when he said, "I think it's terrific that a woman was selected, though in my heart I'm not sure she's had the kind of experience to be vice president of the United States. I respect what Mondale has done, although it's probably politically motivated."

And insurance agent Danney Clark, 37, of Boise, Idaho, smelled a political motive in Mondale's act: "He knows he doesn't have a snowball's chance without some trick," Clark said, "and this could mean how many hundreds of thousands or millions of votes for him?"

Associated Press reporters asked people — bank tellers, receptionists, auto mechanics, street vendors — what they thought about Mondale's selection of Ms. Ferraro, and their answers show a wide receptiveness to the idea, from men and women alike. Those interviews were not a public opinion survey or poll, rather, a gathering of the comments of ordinary people.

Some doubt that the country is ready to put a woman in such high office, a heartbeat from the presidency.

Staff Sgt. Robert Harman, 28, Concord, N.H., an Army recruiter in Concord, N.H., said he is uncomfortable with the thought that Ms. Ferraro could be in line to become his commander-in-chief. However, he also said this: "I'm a Republican and I'll vote for President Reagan, but I like the fact that Mondale has broken the barrier."

Another doubter is homemaker Helen Gratton, 48, of Pittsburgh, who said, "If something happens to Mondale, then she would have to lead, and I don't feel right about having a woman lead. I like a man to lead."

On the other hand, Luanne Martin, 30, a real estate agent in Rocky Hill, Conn., said, "I was going to vote for Reagan but as of now I'm having second thoughts."

Mondale, in presenting Ms. Ferraro as his running mate, denied that her gender was the factor which motivated him. "I looked for the best vice president," he said, "and I found her."

But some Americans aren't buying that explanation.

"He bent to pressure," artist Elizabeth Czaban, 26, of Schenectady, N.Y. said of Mondale.

Homemaker Leanna Higgins of Kansas City, Kan., said Mondale was "grandstanding and is not sincere" in making his decision — but she's pleased anyway because it "sets the way for next time." Of Mondale, she said, "I wouldn't vote for that wimp, no matter what."

Mondale's decision could backfire, said Joe Spitzkoff, 41, a utility company supervisor: "If people see it as a move to placate a certain gender, it will hurt."

Delegates' presidential preference listed

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Here is the current breakdown of the presidential preference of delegates to the Democratic National Convention. The preferences are based on actual delegates' public statements.

DEMOCRATIC

	Prevs	New Totals
Mondale	2,096.05	2096.05
Hart	1,243.75	1243.75
Jackson	387.2	387.2
Others	48	48
Uncommitted	158 -2	156
Not Voting	+ 2	2

Needed to nominate	1,967
Total delegate votes	3,933
Chosen thus far	3,933
Yet to be chosen	0

NOTE: The others category includes those pledged to candidates who have dropped out — Sen. John Glenn and former South Dakota Sen. George McGovern — as well as those pledged to favorite son candidates like Chicago Mayor Harold Washington.

Not Voting includes members of Congress who have announced they will not attend the convention. Under party rules, the 164 delegates chosen by the House Democratic caucus cannot be replaced by alternates.

Ferraro challenges Bush

SOUTH LAKE TAHOE, Calif. (AP) — Satisfied that his choice of a woman for the Democratic vice presidential nomination is meeting with widespread acclaim, Walter F. Mondale is turning his attention to the message he wants to deliver next week to the Democrats and the nation.

Mondale and Rep. Geraldine Ferraro of New York flew Friday to this resort community about 200 miles east of San Francisco. And even before their first full day of campaigning together had ended, Ms. Ferraro moved quickly to challenge Vice President George Bush to a debate.

Meanwhile, Mondale campaign manager Robert Beckel said Charles Manatt will be relieved as Democratic national chairman, but refused to comment directly on widespread reports that his successor would be Georgia party chief Bert Lance, who served as budget director under former President Carter.

Mondale press secretary Maxine Isaacs said John Reilly, the senior aide who spearheaded the vice presidential search for Mondale, was aware of an illegal campaign contribution that Ms. Ferraro received from her husband for her first House election campaign in 1978. The spokeswoman said Reilly "was not concerned about it."

"It was taken care of six years ago," the spokeswoman said. She was referring to Mrs. Ferraro's payment of a $500 fine for violating federal election laws by accepting a $100,000 campaign loan from her husband that exceeded statutory dollar limits on individual contributions.

AFTER A WEEKEND of getting better acquainted and polishing the speeches they will deliver to launch their campaign against President Reagan, Mondale and Ms. Ferraro will move on to the Democratic convention on Monday.

Mondale brought the New York congresswoman to Elmore, Minn., on Friday to meet the homefolks.

"My choice of Geraldine Ferraro is being received with tremendous enthusiasm throughout the country," he told a news conference outside the United Methodist Church.

When asked if his choice might be viewed as bowing to pressure from women's groups, Mondale replied that, "if there was anything, the pressure was on the other side."

However, a CBS-New York Times poll released Friday said 60 percent of Democratic voters surveyed think Mondale chose Ms. Ferraro because of pressure from women's groups, and only 22 percent said they thought she was selected because she was the best vice presidential candidate. The survey of 747 registered voters was conducted Thursday night and has a margin of error of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

Ms. Ferraro responded to a question about her relatively limited experience as a third-term member of Congress by saying that "I'd like to let the people of America see if I can keep up with (Vice President) George Bush."

ASKED IN DENVER if he would debate Ms. Ferraro, Bush responded: "Yes, but what I want to do is focus on the national issues and do whatever is best for the re-election of a president in whom I have tremendous confidence."

Mondale took her to the wood-frame white house where he spent his teen years and introduced her to several hundred people crowded into his former backyard.

"She is perfect for our time," he said. "She speaks for the future."

Mondale also introduced Ms. Ferraro's husband, real estate developer John Zacarro, and said, "If Gerry and John lived in Elmore, you'd love them. They're just like we are, with the same values, the same hopes, the same belief in family."

Mondale clearly is determined not to allow President Reagan to co-opt the family and religion issue in the upcoming campaign.

At the news conference, Ms. Ferraro said the president "calls himself a good Christian, but I don't believe it. His policies are totally unfair and hurt a lot of people in this country."

ON THE SIDEWALK in front of the house and later by the church, three or four anti-abortion pickets protested Ms. Ferraro's support of federal funds for abortions.

Asked about her stand on abortion, Ms. Ferraro said, "I wouldn't have an abortion if I became pregnant ... If I were raped I don't know how self-righteous I would be, but the choice would be mine."

On Wednesday night, the Democratic convention will vote on the presidential nomination and Mondale is assured of a delegate majority.

The next night, the delegates will ratify his selection of Ms. Ferraro and then the two candidates will deliver their acceptance speeches.

Mondale's chief speechwriter, Martin Kaplan, has been at work for the past week turning out drafts of his acceptance speech.

Bernard Aronson, another Mondale adviser and speechwriter, was assigned to work with Ms. Ferraro on her address.

Mondale children help Ferraro children handle new attention

LAKE TAHOE, Calif. (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro's daughter, Laura, stepped off the campaign plane, glanced over at Walter Mondale's son Teddy waving to the crowd, and waved, tentatively.

She and her sister, Donna, 22, are getting a fast lesson from Mondale's three children on life in the national spotlight — political protocol.

And all they have to do is listen to Mondale's son, Teddy, 27, holding court with reporters, spouting off figures about the national debt like a professor lecturing his students.

Or they can watch William Mondale, 22, joking with photographers, positioning his mother into a picture or drawing his father's attention to someone in the crowd.

It's not that Ms. Ferraro's children haven't had exposure to the limelight as part of family life of a New York congresswoman. But Mondale's kids have grown up in the national arena and seem very at ease with its demands.

Scott Widmeyer, who is acting as Ms. Ferraro's press secretary this week, said Mondale's chidlren have been giving advice this weekend on such potentially touchy subjects as talking to the press, relaxing when under pressure, and what to say to people they don't know.

"It's like a match made in heaven," Widmeyer said. "They're having a great time."

They have even more in common than the fact that their parents are politicians — Brown University in Providence, R.I.

Mondale's son, William,, is taking his senior year off from Brown to campaign with his father. Ms. Ferraro's daughter, Donna, 22, a financial analyst with Salomon Brothers in New York, graduated a year ago from Brown. And 18-year-old Laura starts there as a freshman in the fall.

Eleanor Mondale, 24, an aspiring actress, plays the Yoplait girl in the yogurt commercial. And Teddy has taken time off from the University of Minnesota where he is scheduled to graduate in 1985.

Widmeyer said at least three of the kids have a Sony "Walkman" on their heads when they relax in the houses their parents are renting on the shore of Lake Tahoe.

"Laura plays tennis and rides bikes," Widmeyer said. "They'll probably get into some of that stuff here."

Reagan denies pushing for delay in space talks

Ronald Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration said Saturday it is still planning to open talks on space weaponry with the Soviet Union in September, though the president is willing to postpone the meeting, if Moscow prefers, until the November election is decided.

Bob Sims, a White House foreign policy spokesman, denied reports that Reagan had specifically proposed to Soviet President Konstantin Chernenko that the negotiations on anti-satellite weapons be put aside until American voters have made their choice.

The president "has not proposed delaying the talks," Sims said.

But one White House official, commenting on the condition he not be identified by name, said he believes the president "is prepared to meet with them after the elections" if opening the talks before that time "would be a problem for them."

LAST SPRING, Reagan told Congress there was virtually no point in attempting to negotiate a ban of anti-satellite weapons, or ASATs, because of difficulties in verfifying compliance with any such treaty. While he did not rule out the possibility of a much narrower agreement — on specific types of ASATs — policy-makers at the Pentagon have balked at any talks until the United States tests and deploys a version that involves a small missile fired from an F-15 jet fighter.

Democratic presidential candidate Walter F. Mondale has called for a "space freeze" and pressure has mounted in both the House and Senate for negotiations on all arms control fronts. When the Soviets recently proposed that ASAT talks be opened in September, Reagan accepted almost immediately.

When asked Saturday if there had been any proposed change in that timetable, the White House and State Department issued identical statements:

"As we have indicated in the past, we have accepted the Soviet proposal to meet in Vienna in September. We are continuing our preparations for that and are discussing the matter in diplomatic channels with the Soviets. We are not going to comment on the content of these discussions, but the president has not proposed delaying the talks."

"WHILE WE ARE prepared for the meeting to take place at any mutually convenient time, as we have said, we have agreed to meet in September."

Asked directly about reports that Reagan had proposed to Chernenko that the talks be held in December, the White House official said:

"I think that these (reports) suggest that the president would be willing (to postpone the meeting) if the Soviets feel that meeting before the U.S. elections would be a problem for them, even though they proposed that."

The official reiterated that the United States has accepted the Soviet proposal for a September meeting in Vienna "without preconditions"

The United States also made clear it would also raise other arms control issues at the talks and the official noted that the Soviets responded that they want the talks focused only on a proposed ban on weapons in space.

The official said the United States does not intend to respond to that in public.

WE'D RATHER leave our views in the private realm because we believe the way to get them back to the table is through private diplomacy," he said.

The Soviet Union announced last September it was suspending tests of its anti-satellite system, and the House has passed legislation, now pending in a House-Senate conference, that would prohibit tests of the U.S. device so long as Moscow honors its commitment.

The Soviet weapon, according to the Pentagon, had failed many of the tests conducted before Moscow announced the moratorium. Compared to the U.S. device, it is crude and slow.

Launched by a regular booster rocket, the Soviet ASAT is itself a satellite that must orbit the earth several times before it catches its target and then explodes. Because it can fly in only comparatively low orbits, it could strike less than one-third — and the least important — of America's military spy and communications satellites.

The U.S. weapon, called a miniature homing vehicle, is designed to ram its target just minutes after being fired from a high-flying F-15. It too, could strike only satellites in low orbits, but planners envision an upgraded version that could reach out to those as far as 25,000 miles from Earth in geosynchronous orbits.

Pentagon officials have said verification of an ASAT ban would be extraordinarily difficult, in part, because the Soviet weapon is carried into space by the same boosters as regular satellites. Moreover, they point out, virtually any ICBM — with nuclear warheads — could be programmed to destroy satellites as well as land targets.

Israeli election enters home stretch

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and opposition leader Shimon Peres are battling into the final week of an increasingly close election campaign.

Many observers see the July 23 balloting as a crossroad for the 36-year-old Jewish state — both for the future of relations with Arab states and for resolving divisive domestic issues that separate rich and poor, religious and secular.

In the closing weeks of the campaign, Shamir's Likud bloc has gone on the offensive. Polls show him gaining ground on Peres' Labor Party, which now leads by 7-10 percent compared to the commanding 15 percent margin Labor had in June.

The narrowing gap indicates that neither Likud nor Labor will win by a big margin and that either party would have to form a coalition with some of the 24 small parties running candidates in the election.

IN 1981, the Likud bloc won 48 seats in the 120-member Parliament and the Labor Party 47 seats. Likud put together a governing coalition with the support of religious and other small parties, but the coalition fell apart and an early election was called.

Apparently unwilling to rely on small, special interest parties if Likud is chosen to form the next government, Shamir has called for a national unity government with Labor. The front-running Peres rejected the idea, saying it will not be a national unity government but a national paralysis government."

The two candidates have often sounded alike as they fought over the middle ground — the 15 or more percent of the nation's 2.6 million electorate who pollsters say are undecided.

But the two parties have vastly different approaches to government and the list of unresolved conflicts that plague this nation of 4 million.

The pressing questions include what should be done about an economy with 400 percent inflation, how to end Israel's two-year-old involvement in Lebanon and whether territorial concessions are necessary to make peace with the Arabs.

THERE ARE deeper divisions as well. These include the social gap between the Ashkenazic Jews of European origin who have traditionally held the economic and political power and the Sephardic Jews who came mainly from Arab countries and have been at the bottom of the socio-economic ladder.

There is also an unresolved conflict about the role of religion in the Jewish state. Should Jewish law be the final authority as the Orthodox Jews want or are the 120 members of Parliament the final arbiters?

Shamir, 68, a pre-state underground leader and former Mossad intelligence agent, inherited the job of prime minister unexpectedly last September when Menachem Begin resigned and went into seclusion.

Like Begin, whose name is still chanted by crowds at election rallies, Shamir is an ardent nationalist who believes in making no further territorial concessions to the Arabs. He is pledged to continue, whatever the cost, a settlement program that has put 30,000 Jews and more than 100 settlements in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

Likud's policy appeals to those who still view Labor as the Ashkenazi establishment that excluded them during the state's first 29 years of existence. Religious Jews, especially those who fervently believe in Israel's biblical claim to the occupied territories, also tend to prefer the rightist bloc.

PERES, 61, a former defense minister who twice lost to Begin in his bids to become prime minister, has sought to win over Likud supporters by blaming Likud for the Lebanon involvement and the country's economic woes.

Labor has suggested it will get Israel's sons back from Lebanon quicker than Likud and switch spending priorities away from West Bank settlements to development towns inside Israel.

Specialist: Kremlin may be using drugs, hypnosis on Sakharov

WASHINGTON (AP) — A specialist on Soviet abuse of psychiatry said Saturday recent reports indicate the Kremlin has ordered an all-out effort, using drugs and possibly hypnosis, to make physicist Andrei Sakharov repudiate his dissident views.

Soviet authorities "seem to be set on a course of doing their utmost to try to get a recantation out of him," said Peter Reddaway, a London School of Economics political scientist and author of a study of Soviet imprisonment of dissidents in mental hospitals.

Reddaway's comments followed the American Psychiatric Association's expression of "grave concern" over reports that Sakharov was undergoing forced psychiatric treatment.

The association's Committee on International Abuse of Psychiatry and Psychiatrists sent cables Friday to the director of a hospital in Gorky, the city to which Sakharov has been exiled since 1980, and to Dr. Vladimir Rozhnov, a prominent Soviet psychiatrist said to be treating Sakharov.

In a statement announcing its protest, the association said "it has been reported by reliable sources that Dr. Sakharov is presently confined incommunicado to the Semashko Hospital in Gorky and that Dr. Rozhnov visits him frequently."

"There is reason for concern that the purpose of Dr. Rozhnov's visits may be to elicit a statement from Dr. Sakharov which would not be fully intended by him," it said.

Soviet officials have sought to offer assurances about Sakharov's well-being. On June 21, during a Moscow visit by French President Francois Mitterand, Kremlin spokesman Leonid Zamyatin told correspondents that "everything is all right with him."

However, Tatiana Yankelevich, Sakharov's stepdaughter, said earlier this week she had received information that the 63-year-old Nobel Peace Prize laureate was being held at the Gorky hospital and injected with mind-altering drugs.

Sakharov was reported to have begun a hunger strike on May 2 in an effort to persuade authorities to let his wife, Yelena Bonner, go to the West for medical treatment.

Reddaway said in an interview Saturday he was particularly concerned about a report that Vadim Zagladin, a senior official of the Communist Party Central Committee, had told a West German visitor to Moscow that Sakharov was working on an article to be printed in the Soviet press.

Sakharov, once honored for his work in developing the Soviet H-bomb, has been barred from publishing in the state-controlled press since he began speaking out on human rights violations in the 1960s.

Reddaway said it appeared that "the Politburo took a decision several weeks ago that the Soviets were going to tough it out, and then the order went down to the KGB to get a recantation out of Sakharov."

U.S., Cubans met formally

WASHINGTON (AP) — Representatives of Cuba and the United States met in New York City Thursday and Friday but reached no resolution to the pressing immigration issues between the two countries, the State Department said Saturday.

Although the two nations maintain low-level diplomatic contacts in each other's capitals, the meetings marked the first time in years that the two sides have sat down in formal talks.

A department statement said talks between the Cuban and American delegations centered on discussions about the possible return to Cuba of the estimated 1,000 persons who came to the United States in the 1980 Mariel boatlift who have been found ineligible to remain here because of their criminal or psychiatric backgrounds.

The U.S. delegation at the two-day talks was headed by Michael G. Kozak, deputy legal adviser of the Department of State.

War takes toll on schoolchildren

By TAMARA JONES
Associated Press Writer

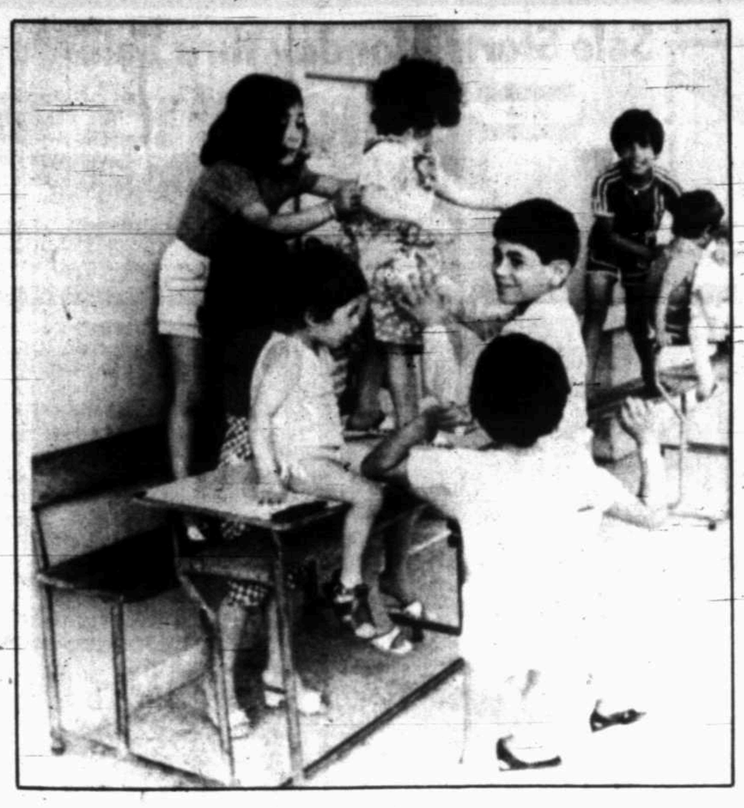
BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Fadi Lala didn't sleep for three nights and refused to go back to school for six weeks after a shell exploded on the playground during recess and a boy fell dead on top of him.

The blast wounded 22 other classmates of 11-year-old Fadi.

Some 150 of the 700 pupils at Fadi's private east Beirut school are still too frightened to return. Lessons are sent home to them instead.

In west Beirut, hundreds of high school students forced to miss classes during heavy fighting four months ago are now unable to resume studies because refugees are living in their classrooms.

Desks at other schools stand empty because scores of boys — some as young as 12 — have joined one or the other of Lebanon's factional militias.



AP Laserphoto

Refugee children play at Raml-Al-Zarif secondary school and refugee families occupying classrooms are some of the problems Lebanon faces in trying to educate a generation caught by war.

"Unless we find peace soon, the future will bring only darkness for all of Lebanon's children."

Elham Lala
Lebanese mother

WHILE NO ONE can calculate the damage nine years of civil war have wreaked on Lebanon's once-demanding educational system, officials, teachers and parents fear the nation's young are learning little beyond how to survive.

Teachers say children are often too anxious to concentrate, or too fatigued because the crack of sniper fire and thunder of artillery keep them awake at night.

After school, frequent blackouts and intermittent shelling, which sends families scurrying to basements for safety, prevent youngsters from doing homework.

In the capital alone, only 22 of 66 public schools operate normally, according to the Ministry of Education.

Of the remaining 44, half are occupied by refugees and 10 have been shut down because they were heavily damaged or destroyed in the fighting.

TWELVE SCHOOLS in neighborhoods where fighting has been frequent hold classes in shifts that may begin as early as 7:30 a.m. or run as late as 5:30 p.m. at schools in safer neighborhoods.

Education Minister Salim al-Hoss said this year "is lost" and next year will be in jeopardy as well unless the situation stabilizes.

"We are trying to salvage what we can," Hoss said in a recent interview.

Elias Mezhir, superintendent of public schools, said the three chief problems educators face in Lebanon are providing security for the schools, rebuilding, and reintegrating school-age militia members into the system.

While educators are at a loss to spare schools from the ravages of war or make young militiamen lay down their weapons, Hoss said the ministry is considering putting up four pre-fabricated buildings pending full school reconstruction and will also keep trying to find some place else for the refugees to live.

No estimates on the number of refugees occupying both public and private schools are available, but it is easily in the thousands.

At Raml-al-Zarif secondary school in west Beirut, laundry hangs from the balconies and teen-age boys toting textbooks dodge tricycles and toddlers in the stairwell.

SIXTEEN FAMILIES left homeless by the war live in classrooms and offices on two of the school's three floors.

A family of six children and three adults lives in one office the size of a prison cell. The International Red Cross brought them here five months ago.

The mother, Zainab Jawad, is upset because she has heard that displaced students and teachers "call us dirty refugees. But we clean the grounds after the students leave, we pick up after them — not the janitor," she told a reporter.

"The officials tell us we must move, that they need this room so the students can come back and learn again. But where are we to go?"

Three of her six children were wounded by rocket fire. One son, 7-year-old Hassan, requires daily physical therapy because shrapnel gouged fist-sized chunks of flesh from his legs and severed a little finger. He cries in shame when his mother forces him to show the ugly red scars to strangers.

IN A LARGE classroom, Halemi Halebi, a 25-year-old mother of seven, was washing clothes in a tub of cold water. Cooking utensils were arranged carefully in the blackboard's chalk tray. Desks had been cleared out to make room for the foam mattresses the family sleeps on.

"They told us to move out two weeks ago, but we have nowhere else to go. So we'll just stay, " Mrs. Halebi said. "I don't know how long we will be here. I am so ashamed we have to live like this."

Samira Hemaidan, a teacher for 14 years, said the war has deeply affected the children's learning ability.

When she is able to hold math classes at Raml-al-Zafir, she notices that her students' "perseverance and concentration levels are very low. It's very hard to hold their attention and make them listen."

At the Greek Orthodox School of the Annunciation in the oft-bombarded east Beirut neighborhood of Ashrafiyeh, Headmaster Nabih Haddad is still coping with the effects of the bloody May 14 playground shelling.

"Conditions are not good," he said. "As soon as we resume classes, a rocket suddenly explodes nearby or fighting breaks out and everybody has to go home. The children are frightened."

Superintendent Mezhir said parents usually keep their children home when they "hear reports on the radio that something is happening."

"THE WHOLE learning environment is bad, and we can't provide a sufficient education for our boys and girls," he added.

Heavy fighting closed schools for months at a time over the past nine years. The latest closure lasted from February to mid-June.

Fadi Lala's father took him back to the School of the Annunciation six weeks after the shelling, but Fadi ran home 30 minutes later.

"I'm too scared," the boy said.

Ghassan Lala said he told his son "how important learning is, and his teacher promised not to make him go outside at recess. Now he stays at school, but he is still frightened."

Fadi's mother, Elham, worries that Fadi and his 10-year-old sister, Noha, will grow up incapable of building a decent life for themselves because war has denied them a proper education.

"Unless we find peace soon, the future will bring only darkness for all of Lebanon's children," she said.

Fadi's twin cousins, 11-year-old Dori and Dani, have not returned to school since the shelling.

Their father, Eli Falala, said the boys "get very frightened and cry even when we have to just pass by the school."

Eli Lala said he will keep the twins home for both financial and psychological reasons until the new school year begins.

The twins spend their days watching television and hanging around the Lala family barber shop.

"We forget almost everything except some math," Dori said. "We want to go back to school. We're mad that we have to lose this whole year.

"We'll go back as soon as everything is good again."

Violence continues; Press plans protest

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Sporadic artillery exchanges threatened to rekindle a war for dominance between pro-Syrian militias in north Lebanon Saturday.

In another development, Beirut's professional press association called a newspaper strike for Monday to protest the shooting of leftist publisher-editor Talal Salman in an assassination attempt. Salman was reported in satisfactory condition after surgery to remove bullets from his jaw and neck inflicted in the Saturday pre-dawn attack.

Syrian President Hafez Assad personally intervened late Friday night to halt four days of fierce battles between the Marada militia, loyal to former Lebanese President Suleiman Franjieh, and fighters of the Lebanese Syrian Social Nationalist Party in the northern farming districts of Koura and Zgorta.

Assad's Soviet-equipped army controls northern and eastern Lebanon. He threatened military action against both warring groups unless they heeded a cease-fire he called at 1 a.m. Saturday.

Police said the guns fell silent after Assad's cease-fire orders were sent to both commands around midnight, but intermittent skirmishes with mortars and multiple rocket launchers erupted anew after noon.

No casualties were reported in the renewed exchanges.

Police said at least 28 people were killed and 85 wounded, 13 seriously, in the four days of fighting at the foothills of northern Lebanon's Cedar mountains.

Franjieh's son, Robert, commander of the Marada militia, and Inaam Raad, president of the Syrian Social Nationalist Party, met in the presence of Syrian military experts in Damascus on Saturday and discussed arrangements to firm up the cease-fire. They later met with Syrian Vice President Abdul-Halim Khaddam.

The national coalition government has been preparing to extend law and order to other parts of the nation after successfully reconnecting the Christian and Moslem sectors of Beirut and reopening its airport and port.

Christian and Moslem militias, whose sectarian warfare had split the city in two, withdrew peacefully to make the government peace plan possible. But they still hold sway in wide areas of the nation outside Beirut, and Israeli and Syrian occupation troops also remain.

Reporters based in southern Lebanon said in telephone dispatches to Beirut Saturday that residents of the villages of Nabatiyeh and Jibchitt heard gunfire crackling all night at the Israeli Ansar detention camp.

Shouts of "Allah akbar!" or "God is great!" — Islam's battle cry — were heard from the camp during the shooting and flares illuminated the night sky overhead for hours, according to the dispatches.

Lebanese reporters in Nabatiyeh and Jibchitt, who saw and heard the action, said they could not tell what happened in the camp but said local residents speculated a new jailbreak attempt was crushed.

The reporters said by telephone that Israeli forces set up roadblocks and checkpoints in all areas surrounding the prison Saturday morning. No comment on the report was available on the Jewish Sabbath from Israel's liaison office in east Beirut's Christian suburb of Dbaye.

The organization of Beirut newspapers decided on Monday's strike at a meeting of its board at the offices of Salman's As-Safir newspaper in mostly Moslem west Beirut six hours after the attempt on his life, a statement from the group said.

"The attempt on Talal Salman's life is a crime against the freedom of the press. Authorities are called upon to spare no effort in tracking down and punishing the culprits," the statement said.

Salman, 46, had just stepped out of his bulletproof BMW automobile with two companions after returning home from work when assailants opened up with submachine guns in an ambush. They then sped off in two cars, police said.

world in brief

Nuclear explosion reaches 6.9

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The strongest underground nuclear explosion in 16 months occurred Saturday in the central Soviet Union, the Seismological Department in Uppsala reported.

The blast, in the nuclear test area outside Semipaltinsk in eastern Kazakhstan, reached 6.9 on the open-ended Richter scale. It was the strongest explosion since a blast of the same magnitude at the same testing site in March 1983, a spokesman for the Department said.

The Department has registered seven underground nuclear explosions from the area during 1984, none weaker than 6.0 on the Richter scale.

A rating of 6.9 is the equivalent of a major earthquake, capable of causing heavy, widespread damage.

Attackers set fire to four cars

PAMPLONA, Spain (AP) — Attackers hurling Molotov cocktails set four parked passenger cars with French license plates on fire early Saturday, destroying three of the cars, police said. No injuries were reported.

The cars were parked in the outskirts of this northern Spanish city where the annual week-long Running of the Bulls festival came to an end Saturday.

The Basque separatist movement ETA took responsibility for similar attacks against French vehicles in northern Spain earlier in the week. ETA threatened to keep attacking French property until France stops cooperating with Spain to curb activities of ETA members based in southern France.

ETA is fighting for the Basque territory's independence from Spain.

Flames burn college's dining hall

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Flames burned out the 18th-century dining hall building at Dublin's Trinity College, but students, teacher, kitchen staff and passersby formed human chains to save most of the hall's valuable collection of paintings and silver, officials said Saturday.

Paintings, chairs, lamps and silver were passed out, hand to hand, as smoke billowed from windows late Friday.

The dining hall was completed in 1761.

Official attempts to steal secrets

TOKYO (AP) — A Bulgarian Embassy official here tried to steal secrets from several Japanese biotechnology firms, Kyodo News Service reported Saturday.

Kyodo said the embassy official requested secret data on animal and plant cell cultivation and the rearrangement of genes, after contacting technicians from several biotechnology companies, including a major firm headquartered in Tokyo, which it did not identify.

The official, who was not identified, was described by Kyodo as a 37-year-old second secretary of the Bulgarian mission.

Bomb explodes near police office

MARANO, Italy (AP) — A bomb exploded early Saturday outside an office of the state police, causing extensive damage but no serious injuries, officials said.

The blast blew out walls, broke windows and destroyed furniture in the building in this southern city outside of Naples.

Some of the officers inside suffered from shock but no one was hurt seriously, officials said.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attack, but officials believed it was the work of local crime gangs in retaliation for recent police crackdowns.

Inmates kill guards during prison unrest

STONY MOUNTAIN, Manitoba (AP) — Inmates killed two guards during a disturbance at the medium-security Stony Mountain penitentiary near Winnipeg, Assistant Warden Pat Newton said today.

Joseph George Wendl, 54, was stabbed to death, authorities said. The other guard, Werner Rudy Friesen, 34, also stabbed, was taken to a hospital in Winnipeg but was pronounced dead on arrival. The Canadian prison is about 75 miles north of the Minnesota and North Dakota borders.

Ms. Newton said at an early-morning news conference at the prison that the two guards were "attacked and stabbed by an unidentified number of inmates" at about 11 p.m. Friday in the reception range, which holds prisoners who have just recently been admitted to the institution.

Ms. Newton said all 508 prisoners in the prison had been accounted for and an investigation was under way. Dozens of police were rushed to the prison from Winnipeg, about 10 miles to the south.

"No apparent motive for the incident has been identified," said Ms. Newton in a prepared statement. "The institution remains calm and will remain in lockup pending completion of the investigation."

Ms. Newton said one guard died inside the prison during the disturbance and another died later in a hospital.

She declined to provide further details or answer reporters' questions.

A flag flew at half-staff on the prison grounds today.

There have been repeated acts of violence at the prison in the past few years by inmates complaining of overcrowding and other problems. In May, prisoners were confined to their cells for 10 days after some inmates unsuccessfully attempted to take hostages.

A guard was grabbed by a knife-wielding inmate but the man was overpowered by two other officers.

Last December, a guard was attacked and beaten by a prisoner, and a year before that, four guards were held hostage for 39 hours before they were released unharmed.

Prison officials were criticized for making deals with the convicts during that incident to ensure the safety of the guards. A federal inquiry found that officials had provided prisoners with drugs and had made other bargains in violation of a federal no-deals policy.

In August 1982, prisoners rioted to protest a plan to put two convicts in cells designed for one person.

Solidarity advisers Jacek Kuron, left, and Adam Michnik, right, under police guard, attend the opening session of their trial in a Warsaw military courtroom Friday. They are two of four Solidarity advisers accused of plotting to overthrow Poland's Communist system.

Pro-Solidarity priest facing new charges

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A pro-Solidarity Roman Catholic priest under investigation for alleged abuse of religious freedom said Saturday he faces charges of causing public unrest.

The Rev. Henryk Jankowski, one of Solidarity leader Lech Walesa's closest advisers, said he appeared at the state prosecutor's office in the Baltic port of Gdansk on Saturday and was given a copy of the government's case against him.

Jankowski, contacted by telephone at his Gdansk apartment, said the government accused him of causing "public anxiety" by announcing when he was summoned to appear before the prosecutor.

He called the charge "completely nonsensical."

The new allegations against Jankowski followed the indictment Friday of another pro-Solidarity priest, the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko, on charges of abusing religious freedom and storing explosives and underground literature in his Warsaw apartment.

Popieluszko has repeatedly denied the government's allegations, claiming the evidence was planted in his Warsaw apartment.

In Italy, Pope John Paul II urged prayers Saturday for "those currently on trial" in his native Poland and made an impassioned appeal for the release of Polish political prisoners.

Speaking to a group of 160 Polish pilgrims at his papal palace south of Rome, the pope did not mention any names or specifically cite Solidarity.

But he urged prayers "so that our country becomes a true fatherland for all Poles, where everyone can live by its centuries-old tradition of Christianity and humanism."

The government's trial against four prominent Solidarity advisers began Friday and then was adjourned until Wednesday.

The four defendants, all members of the Committee for Social Self Defense, known as KOR, were the target of an attack Saturday in the army newspaper Soldier of Freedom.

It claimed the defendants "destroyed systematically and purposefully the employees' ties in factories and brought anarchy to the socio-political life of the country."

The four, Jacek Kuron, Adam Michnik, Henryk Wujec and Zbigniew Romaszewski, are charged with plotting to overthrow Poland's communist system. They face a maximum penalty of 10 years in jail.

KOR, formed following worker unrest in 1976, helped unite Poland's intellectual community with workers, leading to the birth of Solidarity in August 1980. Solidarity, the only free labor movement in the Soviet bloc, was suspended when martial law was imposed in December 1981 and later outlawed.

It is believed authorities plan an amnesty for most of the 600 Solidarity members and sympathizers jailed after the martial law crackdown when the government marks the 40th anniversary of communist rule on July 22.

The KOR trial resumes Wednesday with Kuron's testimony before a Warsaw military court.

During the opening session, Kuron demanded that Western correspondents be allowed to attend, according to the defendants' lawyers. But they were barred from the courtroom and the building.

Also indicted Friday was Maciej Bednarkiewicz, a lawyer who represented the mother of a youth whose May 1983 death while in police custody sparked a wave of anti-police sentiment.

Thirty-six vacationers killed in train accident

DIVACA, Yugoslavia (AP) - A freight train smashed into the rear of an idling holiday express to the Adriatic coast Saturday, killing 36 people, according to a state radio broadcast.

There were about 1,500 people on the overnight passenger train, the official Tanjug news agency said.

It quoted railway station officials as saying all those killed were Yugoslavs.

The "death toll rose to 36," said the unattributed radio report. Earlier, Investigative Judge Tine Rozanc told reporters at least 30 had been killed.

The radio did not specify whether more bodies were discovered on the scene or if some victims in hospital had succumbed to injuries.

Tanjug said 24 people were hospitalized, some in serious condition. Officials said most of the passengers were young Yugoslavs, heading south on the first weekend of the peak vacation season.

The accident at this village about 15 miles south of the Italian border city of Trieste occurred at 6:10 a.m.

The freight train, moving at about 37 mph, plowed into the 14-car express stopped on a shunting rail, derailing and heavily damaging the last three cars, according to Tanjug.

The freight train engineer was held while investigators tried to find out if he failed to respond to a flashing stop signal or if the device malfunctioned, said Tanjug. It said the freight train began braking only about 15 yards before collision.

"All of a sudden there was a terrible crash," passenger Vera Milojevic, 41, told Tanjug. "Coaches started to break and steel to crack.

"A girl fell into my arms; she did not survive."

Her own injuries were reported as minor.

Zdenka Milojevic, identified by Tanjug as her niece, said: "The only thing I remember is cries of help, then weeping, then smoke."

Judge Rozanc said most of the dead were in the heavily battered last unit, subdivided into freight and passenger compartments.

Of the injured, 17 were hospitalized in nearby Isola. Dr. Mario Gasparini, a surgeon at the hospital in the town near the Italian border, told reporters many had "serious injuries of the extremities."

The express was heading from Belgrade, capital of this Balkan nation, to the Adriatic seaside resort town of Koper and then on to Pula, another coastal community about 50 miles south of here.

The section remained closed to traffic at sundown, with cleanup work not expected to be completed before midnight, according to Tanjug. Heavy equipment was removing the wreckage.

It was the worst postwar rail accident in the Yugoslav republic of Slovenia, Tanjug said. The Slovenian railway company estimated damage at about $442,000, and said 16 freight cars were damaged, 10 beyond repair.

U.S. social worker told to leave country

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The Indian government has asked an American social worker to leave India because his work was creating "an explosive situation" between landlords and untouchables, the Indian Express newspaper said Saturday.

The newspaper said William Allan Christensen, who has been in India since 1978, set up a project to build roads, schools and medical clinics in and around Paru, a remote area of Muzaffarpur district in Bihar.

The project has arranged subsidized loans for 650 people, and built wells and toilets, it said. Christensen, with the help of the district health department, also started a two-year program for mother and child care covering 30 villages, the newspaper reported.

"There has been friction, particularly in the early stages of the project, among the upper castes and harijans (untouchables)," the newspaper said.

But the newspaper quoted Christensen, 41, as saying he thought he was asked to leave because he refused to bribe local officials.

It also quoted an unidentified government official in New Delhi as saying Christensen was asked to leave because he insisted that landlords pay back bank loans arranged through his local development corporation.

Christensen met officials at Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's office Friday and was told his visa could not be extended immediately but "that his case would be considered sympathetically," the report said.

Neither Indian government officials nor Christensen could not be reached for comment Saturday. The U.S. embassy said Christensen did not contact the embassy for assistance. It said it did not know Christensen's home town.

Christensen's project was funded by foreign donors, government agencies and an Indian nationalized bank, the newspaper said.

"He has no personal funds, meanwhile, to return to the U.S. and will probably wait in Nepal to see if the government of India changes its mind," the newspaper said.

White, Alcott move into tie for first place

Amy staying with aggressive, 'go-for-broke' game plan

PEABODY, Mass. (AP) — Amy Alcott, who thrives on pressure and tough golf courses, and veteran Donna White, who is shooting for the moon, moved into a tie for the 54-hole lead Saturday in the U.S. Women's Open championship.

Deadlocked at 218, two strokes over par, they will carry a one-shot lead into the final round Sunday.

Alcott, who numbers the U.S. Open among her 19 championships since joining the pro tour in 1975, gave her rivals something to think about overnight.

"It's going to be a dogfight," the 28-year-old Alcott said. "I'm going to put the ball on the ground, tee it up and rip it. I'm going to play my same aggressive, go-for-broke game."

"To win the U.S. Open would be ecstasy, the ultimate," said White, the 1976 U.S. amateur champion with only three LPGA victories since she began the pro tour in 1977. "It's something most golfers dream about. I consider this the most important tournament we play all year. Amy has won it before, won a lot of tournaments, so maybe she has an advantage, but I'm not going to think about it."

Blistering heat, sun-baked greens and gusty winds plagued most players for the third day in a row, but White and Alcott didn't have much trouble.

White, a 30-year-old mother who underwent back surgery last October, equalled par 72 on the tricky 6,285-yard Salem Country Club course.

Then Alcott, the 1980 U.S. Open champ, came charging home to pull into a tie with just one round left in the $225,000 event worth $36,000, plus a ton of endorsement money, to the winner.

Alcott, 28, surrendered the undisputed lead with a double bogey 6 on the 52nd hole, but bounced back with a birdie 4 on the next green. Then she sank a clutch putt on the 54th hole for a third round 73 to go with her previous 71 and 74 for 218.

Rosie Jones, 24, a former Ohio State star seeking her first victory on the women's pro tour, remained in close contention despite a 75. Jones had a 219, just one stroke off the pace.

However, Penny Pulz, who shared the halfway lead at 144 with Jones, ballooned to a 78 for a 54-hole score of 222.

Japan's Ayako Okamoto, winner of two LPGA tournaments this year, ran into trouble on the back nine and took her second 74 in a row for 220.

Only three players among the 62 survivors of the 36-hole cut bettered par. They were 1974 U.S. Open champion and LPGA Hall of Famer Sandra Haynie, who equalled the best score here so far with a 69; 1981 Open champion Pat Bradley, who had a 70; and defending champ Jan Stephenson, who bounced back from a second round 81 for a 71.

Patty Sheehan, the LPGA champion the last two years and the leading money winner in 1984, carded a third-round 74. That moved her into a tie at 224 with Stephenson, Heather Drew and Patti Rizzo. Drew had a 76 and Rizzo a 78.

The three scores pointed up the toughness of the course and the playing conditions. The last time the U.S. Open was played here was in 1954, when the late Babe Didrikson won by 12 strokes with a score of 291, three over regulation.

Pearson says pro football career over

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Drew Pearson said Saturday that his professional football career is over and he would not report to training camp here Sunday.

Pearson, who was injured in an automobile accident earlier this year, made the announcement from Dallas in a telephone conversation with Cowboys coach Tom Landry.

"I'm not going to play any more football," Pearson said.

The 11-year National Football League veteran suffered a lacerated liver last March 22 and underwent surgery after the automobile accident. His 27-year-old brother was killed in the mishap.

The Cowboys' all-time leading receiver had hoped to recover in time to play a portion of the 1984 season. But Pearson said doctors convinced him he would risk severe, possibly life-threatening injury if he played football this year.

"My conversation with Dr. Lee Bourland of Dallas on June 29 had left me with some optimism," said Pearson, 33. "But, my final decision had to be based on what he and Dr. Thomas Starzl of the University of Pittsburgh said this week."

Cowboys receivers, quarterbacks and running backs were to report to training camp Sunday.

Landry said he did not try to influence Pearson's decision.

"Obviously, we are going to miss Drew," Landry said. "He's been a great force in the history of the Cowboys with all the clutch catches he made over the years."

Pearson, signed as a free agent out of Tulsa in 1983, became a starter midway through his rookie year. In 1983, he caught 47 passes for 545 yards and five touchdowns in his best season since 1979.

"At my age, I didn't feel I could realistically spend a year out of the game and expect to come back and play up to the standards I had always set for myself," Pearson said. "I was getting into good condition with the idea of being ready if I could play this year."

He said he would begin investigating a career in professional sports management or broadcasting.

"But, I can live with this," he said. "It's nothing I hadn't prepared myself for. I still feel fortunate I'm able to do everything but play football."

Orlando Temple, Midland's Panamanian Olympic fencer.

Temple seeks gold in Olympic fencing

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland's Orlando Temple is going to Los Angeles later this month to do a bit of prospecting at the Olympic Games. He's well armed for his trek to America's wild West Coast, carrying foil, epee and sabre.

He isn't arming himself for the dangers of Los Angeles but rather for honor's sake. He'll be dueling for his country — Panama — in his quest for the Olympic fencing gold medal.

Temple, 47, has lived in the United States since 1962 and has raised his weapons in duels for both his native country and the U.S.

"When I was 14, I started fencing and stayed with it for about six months and then stopped," said Temple. "I came back to it when I was 17 and I've been really serious about it since. I was a champion at novice and was Panama champion in epee in 1961."

He remained epee champion of Panama until he left.

Temple's first taste of international competition came just before he moved to the United States, "representing Panama in the Caribbean Olympics in Kingston, Jamaica," he said. "Princess Margaret was at the matches and at that time Jamaica had just gotten it's independence from Great Britain."

Though not a citizen of the United States — "I'm still a Panamanian," said Temple — he spent his two years in the U.S. Army, in which he continued his fencing competition.

"I served in the U.S. Army for two years and also fenced for them in France against the French Air Force. I came out of that competition a winner. This was in '64. I've been in the United States since Sept. 16, 1962. My wife, Marty, is an American."

Temple says he won the gold medal in the service match "in my division in epee and overall I got third in epee against every division. In sabre I got the silver medal in my division.

This trip to Los Angeles will be Temple's biggest competition to date. "This is my first Olympics," he said. "I just came back from Chicago where I fenced in the U.S. Nationals. I didn't do too good.

"I'm excited about the Olympics, of course," continued Temple. "I feel very good about representing my country. Also, while I'm representing my country, I'll be representing Labelle Fencing Club here in Midland."

Labelle is the local club where Temple works out while trying to help promote the sport of fencing in the United States.

"Fencing in the United States is not small," but it still lacks the popularity it has in Europe, said Temple about the sport's following in this country. "The French, Russians, Hungarians and Italians are top notch in the sport. Where I was living in Panama — Colon — fencing was pretty big. The year I was in the Caribbean Olympics, Mexico was there and Panama beat Mexico, and Mexico is also very big in fencing."

In those games, Temple said, "In individuals, I didn't do too well." He just contributed to the team's overall effort.

Most of Temple's fencing training comes through day-to-day practice and sometimes through outside help.

"We've got coaches we invite from outside, from Colorado Springs and San Antonio," said Temple. "We pay for them to come. We also train at the Olympic Center in Colorado Springs. Whatever we pick up at those clinics, we bring back to the Alamo YMCA (where the club meets) and work on back here. We also give classes to new members. We try and promote the sport."

THE SWORDS used in fencing are the foil, epee and sabre. Each weapon was used, historically, in different forms of fighting.

The foil is the modern version of the dueling rapier. It has a flexible blade about 35 inches long and weighs about a pound. Touches (wounds that would have been inflicted in real combat) are scored only with the point of the weapon, which must land on the trunk of the body.

The fencer's valid target area is covered with a metallic vest and when an opponent's blade hits the vest, the point of the blade completes an electrical circuit causing a buzzer to sound. The first fencer to score five touches (10 in direct elimination events) on the opponent wins the bout.

The epee is the modern version of the dueling sword. It's about as long as a foil, but heavier, about 27 ounces, with a larger hand guard and a more rigid blade. As in foil, touches are scored only with the point of the weapon. However, unlike foil, the entire body is a valid target.

A new league, a different title game

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — It's football and it's Tampa, but almost everything else about the USFL Championship II is as different from the NFL's Super Bowl XVIII as January and July.

In January, 65,000 out-of-towners flocked to this Gulf Coast city to see the Los Angeles Raiders beat the Washington Redskins in the National Football League's Super Bowl. This week, about 10,000 tourists are in town for Sunday's United States Football League title game between the Philadelphia Stars and Arizona Wranglers.

Tickets for the Super Bowl on Jan. 22 went for $60 apiece, and scalpers were getting as much as 10 times that amount for tickets. For the USFL game, tickets are $15 and $25 and plenty are available.

USFL Playoffs

USFL Commissioner Chet Simmons says things must be placed in perspective.

"We're only in our second year and the other league has had 18 championship games," Simmons said. "The Super Bowl has gotten more glamorous. It's actually become more of an event than a game."

This is the first time rival leagues have held their championship events in the same city in the same year and it is viewed locally as a bonus for an area eager to enhance its national image as a sports town.

But unlike January, when downtown streets were lined with colorful pennants greeting out-of-towners looking for a good time, the week leading up to the USFL game lacked electricity.

Hotel lobbies were busy as usual but not jammed and the free-spenders who added another dimension to the city's nightlife before the Super Bowl were noticeably absent.

Some other comparisons:

—500,000 programs were sold for Super Bowl XVIII; 25,000 have been printed for Sunday's championship.

—An estimated 104 million Americans watched the Super Bowl on CBS, which charged advertisers $484,000 for a 30-second commercial; ABC is charging $66,000 for 30 seconds, and expected an audience of about 35 million.

The USFL also chose not to compete with the NFL-sponsored social calendar accompanying Super Bowl week. It held several cocktail parties but nothing that rivaled the lavish party NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle hosted at the Florida State Fairgrounds.

"Eighteen years from now maybe we'll be going through all that mind-blowing, hair-pulling, nerve-wracking situation we went through with the Super Bowl," said Rick Nafe, Tampa Stadium manager. "Certainly this (USFL) is a lot more relaxed."

Bucked Cowboys bounce back to lasso Mustangs

From Staff Reports

The Cowboys spotted the Mustangs a 6-0 lead in the first inning and rallied for a 9-6 victory in the Hi-Junior Tournament championship at Cubs Stadium Saturday night.

For the Cowboys, it was pretty much a Tuey Rankin show.

Rankin came in from shortstop to pitch in the first inning and hurled 4 2/3 innings of hitless, runless ball. Mike Rittenberry closed it out by allowing only two hits in the final two innings.

But pitching was only part of the Rankin act. His lead off triple in the first started a three-run comeback rally. And with the score tied 6-6 in the fourth, his lead off single launched a game-winning two-run rally. Chris Kenney doubled him to third and Jake Young plated one run with a sacrifice fly while Kenney stole third and scored on Tommy Yorkman's fly to left.

Then, in the fifth, Rankin completed a 3-for-3 night by doubling home Durian Jenkins, who had walked.

The Mustangs scored six runs in the first with a two-run single by Paul Colwell and a two-run single by Jason Logi the big blows off Rodney Simms, the Cowboys' starter.

In the third place game, Odessa's American Legion team beat the J.I.O'Neill Shamrocks while Odessa Pierce Construction defeated the Lions for the loser's bracket title.

Todd Woodard joins R-T as Outdoor Writer

Todd Woodard

Todd Woodard will join the Midland Reporter-Telegram as Outdoor Editor starting Wednesday. As a sneak preview, see his story on Olympic Shooting on Page 6B.

Each week, Woodard, who attended Texas A&M, will profile a West Texan in his column and update the fishing report at area lakes for the benefit of weekend anglers. Woodard, a native of Crane, also will keep readers informed on state and national happenings as it relates to West Texas.

At A&M, Woodard lettered four years in International three-position shooting. And he has been coaching and shooting instructor at Odessa High.

Now 24, Todd wrote his first news story on antique cars in the fifth grade and his first fishing experience was in an inner tube on Lake Nasworthy when he was 12. "I quickly grew out of the tube...because of snakes."

Phillies edge by Astros

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Philadelphia's Glenn Wilson drove in three runs, including a two-run go-ahead double in the sixth inning, to rally the Phillies to a 4-3 victory over the Houston Astros.

With the Phillies trailing 3-2 in the sixth, Ozzie Virgil and Von Hayes opened the inning with singles off loser Vern Ruhle, 1-7, and scored on Wilson's double to deep center field.

Jerry Koosman, 10-7, won for the ninth time in his last 12 decisions, giving up seven hits in seven innings. Al Holland finished up for his 19th save.

Houston third baseman Phil Garner tripled to center field with two out in the first to extend his streak to eight hits in nine at-bats and scored the first run on Jose Cruz' single to center field.

Pirates 6, Giants 2

PITTSBURGH — Rick Rhoden pitched a five-hitter, and Jim Morrison drove in four runs with a homer, single and a ground ball to power the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 6-2 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Rhoden, 7-7, retired 14 batters in a row at one point and struck out six while walking two. Manny Trillo singled with one out in the second, and Rhoden did not allow another baserunner until Jeff Leonard doubled to lead off the seventh.

The Pirates, winning their fifth in a row, jumped on loser Mark Davis, 3-9, for two runs in the first.

Chili Davis had given the Giants a short-lived 1-0 lead when he led off the game with his eighth homer of the season. Trillo lofted a sacrifice fly in the seventh for the Giants' other run.

Dale Berra made it 3-1 in the fifth with his fourth homer of the season, a solo shot and his first since May 20.

Madlock hit his fourth homer of the season in the sixth and Morrison hit the next pitch for his third homer, marking the first time the Pirates have belted consecutive homers in a game this season.

Dodgers 8, Cubs 0

CHICAGO — Orel Hershiser pitched a two-hitter, and German Rivera doubled and hit a two-run homer, leading the Los Angeles Dodgers to an 8-0 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Hershiser, 5-3, who has allowed only one run in his last 35 2-3 innings, struck out nine and walked one as the Dodgers snapped a three-game losing streak. The Cubs had won three in a row.

Hershiser allowed only two singles and did not give up a hit after the third inning. The only hits off the rookie right-hander were by Jay Johnstone in the first and Bob Dernier in the third.

Mike Marshall doubled in the second inning off loser Scott Sanderson, 5-2, and scored on Mike Scioscia's single. One out later, Rivera hit his first major league homer into the left-center field bleachers to give the Dodgers a 3-0 lead.

Cardinals 7, Padres 6

ST. LOUIS — Art Howe belted a two-run homer and added a run-scoring single in a five-run sixth inning as the St. Louis Cardinals defeated the San Diego Padres 7-6.

Winner Dave LaPoint, 7-8, and the Padres' Tim Lollar, 7-7, were locked in a scoreless duel until the fifth, when San Diego scored on a triple by Luis Salazar and single by Bruce Bochy, batting just .154 at game time.

But the Cards went ahead 2-1 in the bottom of the inning as David Green hit a one-out single and one out later, Howe homered over the left field wall. The homer was the first since the 1982 season for Howe, who sat out all of 1983 recovering from surgery to his ankle and elbow.

The Cards broke the game open with their five-run outburst in the sixth. Lonnie Smith opened with a popup single that second baseman Alan Wiggins lost in the lights. After Tommy Herr singled and Tito Landrum popped out, shortstop Garry Templeton bobbled George Hendrick's grounder for an error, allowing Smith to score.

Green followed with a two-run double and Darrell Porter added a run-scoring triple to chase Lollar. Howe completed the scoring with an RBI single off reliever Greg Booker.

Reliever Bruce Sutter recorded his 22nd save for St. Louis after giving up a pinch, two-run homer to Graig Nettles in the ninth.

Expos 6, Reds 2

MONTREAL — Charlie Lea pitched a six-hitter to become the major league's first 14-game winner and Mike Stenhouse knocked in three runs with a single and a homer in the Montreal Expos' 6-2 triumph over the Cincinnati Reds.

Lea, 14-4, struck out six and walked one in pitching his team-leading sixth complete game. At one point Lea had retired 17 of 18 batters until a one-out single by Gary Redus in the eighth.

The Expos erupted for three runs off Mario Soto, 9-3, in their half of the first.

The Reds moved to within one run on Nick Esasky's sixth homer in the second inning. But Stenhouse connected for his second homer following Carter's one-out walk in the third for a 5-2 Montreal lead.

The Expos have won four straight and moved above the .500 mark for the first time since June 1. The Reds have lost eight straight.

Mets 7, Braves 0

ATLANTA — Bruce Berenyi and Tom Gorman combined on a two-hitter and Keith Hernandez knocked in three runs and scored three as the New York Mets extended their winning streak to eight games with a 7-0 triumph over the Atlanta Braves.

Berenyi, 7-9, pitched the first seven innings and allowed just two singles. He struck out three and walked four in posting his fourth victory in six decisions since being acquired by the Mets in a trade with the Cincinnati Reds on June 15. Gorman wrapped up the victory with two innings of perfect relief.

Craig McMurtry, 7-10, took the loss.

The victory broke a seven-game losing streak for Berenyi against Atlanta. He lost twice to the Braves with the Reds earlier this season.

Cubs, Captains split doubleheader

From Staff Reports

SHREVEPORT, La.— The Midland Cubs split a doubleheader here Saturday night to the Shreveport Captains in a battle of Texas League cellar dwellers. The Cubs lost the first game, 2-0 and came back to win the nightcap, 4-1.

Midland struck quickly in the second game when Paul Noce connected for a double and scored on Tony Woods' second home run of the year. The Cubs picked up their third run in the fourth inning when Antonio Cordova hit a two-out double down the third base line and scored on Don Hyman's single up the middle.

Shreveport cut the margin to 3-1 when Mike Jones scored on Kelvin Torvey's sacrifice fly.

Darrin Jackson gave the Cubs their final run of the game with his 11th home run of the year.

Cub pitcher Larry Hrynko went the distance to pick up the victory, allowing only four hits and relying heavily on defense. Cub defenders came up with 17 ground outs in an errorless effort.

In the opener, Midland was squelched behind pitcher Randy Bockus' two-hitter. Bockus, 8-4, surrendered singles to Cub batsmen in the second and third before shutting the door in the route-going win.

One Cub hit came from pitcher Troy Chestnut, but the Caps solved Chestnut for runs in each of the first two innings to hand him his third loss in three decisions.

Chestnut, who fanned seven and gave up only three hits, was victimized further by Bockus when the Shreveport hurler knocked in the Caps' second inning run with a single.

The Cubs take off tomorrow before moving on to face the Jackson Mets on Midland's East Division swing.

Farr, Comacho team up to five-hit, shutout Rangers

By The Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Steve Farr, staked to a four-run lead in the first inning, combined with Ernie Comacho on a five-hitter to pitch the Cleveland Indians to a 5-0 victory over the Texas Rangers.

Farr, 1-5, gave up all five Texas hits, walked two and struck out four in 8 1-3 inings on his way to his first major league victory.

Loser Dave Stewart, 4-10, who pitched 3 2-3 innings, helped push the winning run across for Cleveland in the first inning when he made a wild pickoff throw to first which allowed Brett Butler to score from first.

White Sox 3, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Julio Cruz and Harold Baines homered for two of the three hits off Mike Flanagan, and Tom Seaver won the pitchers' duel by hurling the Chicago White Sox to a 3-2 victory over the Baltimores Orioles.

Seaver, 8-6, yielded seven hits, walking one and striking out seven. He retired 11 in a row until John Lowenstein hit his sixth homer with one out in the ninth.

Baines was 0-for-14 lifetime against Flanagan when he hammered his 15th homer with one out in the fourth to snap a 1-1 tie.

The switch-hitting Cruz, batting .200, sliced his fourth homer into the right field bleachers in the third after Flanagan, 9-7, had retired the first eight Chicago batters.

Flanagan had retired 13 in a row when Carlton Fisk led off the ninth with a single, and the White Sox eked out what proved to be the winning run on a fielder's choice grounder by Dave Stegman.

Baines was safe after an attempted sacrifice was bobbled by third baseman Wayne Gross, and Fisk was forced at third on Ron Kittle's bunt. A wild pitch moved the runners ahead, and Greg Luzinski was walked intentionally to load the bases. Baines scored when Stegman grounded into a forceout, just beating the relay to first on the attempted double play.

Yankees 4, Royals 1

NEW YORK — Rookie Dennis Rasmussen and Dave Righetti combined on a seven-hitter and Oscar Gamble blasted a solo home run as the New York Yankees defeated the Kansas City Royals 4-1.

Rasmussen, 3-3, allowed one run on five hits over six innings, striking out seven and walking one. He was relieved by Righetti after yielding a double to Darryl Motley and a single to Steve Balboni to open the seventh. Righetti was greeted by Hal McRae's sacrifice fly, but escaped further damage to post his 12th save.

New York, in winning its fourth straight game and sending Kansas City to its fourth straight loss, opened the scoring in the second inning. Gamble drilled a one-out single and continued to second on Motley's misplay in right field. Steve Kemp followed with a run-scoring single.

Gamble, who has one home run in each of his last four games, blasted his eighth this season when he drove loser Mark Gubicza's first pitch of the fourth inning into the right field seats.

New York chased Gubicza, 5-8, and added two runs in the seventh inning on run-scoring singles by Don Mattingly, which finished Gubicza, and by Dave Winfield off reliever Mark Huismann. Winfield went 1-for-3 with a walk, leaving his batting average at .368.

Jays 2, A's 1

OAKLAND, Calif. — Dave Collins drilled a run-scoring double down the left-field line after fouling off several pitches from Oakland's Bill Caudill with two out in the ninth inning to give the Toronto Blue Jays a 2-1 victory over the A's.

Dave Stieb, 10-3, tossed a six-hitter to win a pitching duel that was settled by Collins' clutch hit.

Caudill, 8-2, relieved A's starter Steve McCatty in the eighth.

After Damaso Garcia flied out to center for the second out, Caudill got ahead on the count 1-2 against Collins. Collins fouled off seven pitches and took one pitch for a ball before delivering the game-winning hit.

The A's had only four hits off Stieb through six innings and got their fifth in the seventh when they tied the score 1-1.

Stieb faced a starting batting order including four players with averages under .200. Oakland regulars Rickey Henderson, Tony Phillips and Carney Lansford were out of the lineup because of minor injuries.

Tigers 6, Twins 5

MINNEAPOLIS — Detroit's Kirk Gibson scored the go-ahead run on a close play at the plate in the 12th inning and Tiger relievers Doug Bair and Willie Hernandez combined for 6⅓ innings of one-hit relief as the Tigers defeated the Minnesota Twins 6-5.

Hernandez, 6-0, the third Tiger pitcher, worked the last three innings for the victory, giving up a homer in the bottom of the 12th to Tim Teufel. Bair had retired 10 stright batters before Hernandez took over in the 10th inning.

Mike Walters, 0-3, took the loss.

With one out in the Tiger 12th, Gibson doubled and Lance Parrish was walked intentionally. Chet Lemon followed with a single and left fielder Mickey Hatcher's throw to the plate came in ahead of Gibson. But home plate umpire Nick Voltaggio ruled that catcher Dave Engle missed the tag and Gibson scored. Walters was ejected in the ensuing dispute.

A sacrifice fly by Dave Bergman gave the Tigers a 6-4 lead and their eventual winning run.

Angels 2, Brewers 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Bob Boone led off the 10th inning with his first homer of the season to give the California Angels a 2-1 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Boone picked on a 1-2 pitch from reliever Tom Tellman, 3-2, for his first homer since September 27, 1983.

The blow rewarded the iron-man effort of rookie right-hander Ron Romanick, 9-9, who went the route while allowing five hits, walking one and striking out two. Romanick's foe for eight innings was Moose Haas, who held the Angels to seven hits before being relieved by Tellman at the start of the ninth.

Wee Willie plays big game of golf

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Wee Willie Wood, a slightly-built, soft-spoken little fellow, set still another seasonal record and took a 4-stroke command going into Sunday's final round of the $350,000 Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

His closest pursuers, Wayne Levi and host pro Curtis Strange, the men he played with in Saturday's third round and the men who will be his partners again Sunday, agreed the tournament is in his hands, that it's his to win or lose over the last 18 holes.

"In golf," said Strange, "you can't play defense against his offense.

"If he shoots more than two under par, he's gonna win. For me to have a chance, I'm going to need some help from him."

Levi agreed.

"If he plays fair to good, it's gonna be tough to beat him," Levi said, and indicated it was all up to the rookie who has led all the way.

"If he's around par, if he lets us get within one or two, then it's going to be tougher on him."

"I'm going to try to keep the same strategy, try to play aggressive, keep firing at the pins, not back off," Wood said.

Wood, 5-foot-7 and 135 pounds, reeled off a string of four consecutive birdies on his way to a third-round 66 and completed three trips over the 6,746 yard Kingsmill Golf Club course in 197, 16 under par and the lowest 54-hole total on the PGA Tour this year.

Wood also set the seasonal mark of 131 for 36 holes after Friday's play.

Only his two playing companions on this muggy day on the banks of the James River, Levi and host pro Strange, could stay within striking distance of Wood, the low qualifier in last year's PGA Tour Qualifying School.

Levi, winner of six career titles, scattered seven birdies across his card in round of 68 and finished 54 holes at 201, including a bogey on the final hole after the national television cameras had ended their coverage for the day.

Strange, whose home is on this golf course, bogeyed the first three holes, but rallied with an eagle and three birdies for a 69 and 202 total.

Ronnie Black was next at 66-204.

Lanny Wadkins, Mike Reid and Gary Hallberg followed at 205, a distant eight shots off the pace.

Wood, with rounds of 63, 68 and 65 has led by margins of two, two and four strokes in the chase for the first title of his short career.

"I was a little nervous when we started today," he admitted, and got away to a rather uncertain start.

He missed a birdie putt of about four feet on the first hole, then missed the second green and bogeyed the hole.

"I tried to relax, settle myself down. I took a couple of deep breaths, got a drink of water," he said in his Oklahoma drawl.

Then, he got on a roll.

He punched a sand wedge to four feet and birdied the third. He hit a 4-iron second shot to six feet and birdied the fourth. He used the 4-iron again, this time from the tee on the par-3 fifth and came within one foot of making a hole in one. The tap-in was routine. And on the sixth, he rapped in a 20-footer for his fourth consecutive birdie.

On the back nine, Wood holed from about 20 feet on the 12th hole and then coaxed in a wide-breaking 15-foot birdie putt on the 13th.

That gave him a four-shot lead. Levi cut it to three on two occasions, but bogeyed two of the last three holes.

Huckabees keep pace with two-stroke Jamboree lead

From Staff Reports

The team of Ron and Dub Huckabee stretched their lead to two strokes in the championship flight of Green Tree Country Club's annual Jamboree member-guest tournament.

The Huckabees posted a one-shot advantage over the second place teams of Harry Bettis-Kelly Sewell and C.E. Boyd-Craig Campbell on Friday. At 133, the Huckabees enter the final round today needing only to maintain their consistency to take the title.

In each flight save the fifth and seventh, the competition has been balanced. Except for those flights, no team has more than a three-stroke lead.

Leaders after the second round:

President's Flight: 1. Jim Gilbert-Ron Clark, 72-143. 2. J.R. Jarnagan-Gary Groseklaus, 73-144. 3. Lou Ladaga-Phil Waters, 74-145. 4. Bob Beck-Steven Harper, 74-146.

Pigg, Brown gain Trans-Miss finals

AUSTIN (AP) — John Pigg, a 33-year-old weekend golfer from Austin, and Billy Ray Brown, the 1982 NCAA champion from the University of Houston, won their semifinal matches Saturday to advance to the finals of the 81st annual Trans-Mississippi Golf Championship.

Pigg edged Randel Chamblee, of Austin, 1-up in Saturday's match at the Hills of Lakeway Golf Club. Pigg had to get up and down for a par from 99 feet on the 18th hole to prevent a sudden-death playoff.

Brown holed a 15-foot sidehill birdie putt on the first extra hole to edge Petey Petri, of Austin, a junior at the University of Texas.

Petri missed an eight-foot birdie attempt to keep the match alive.

Pigg's birdie on the ninth hole put him 2-up, but he lost that advantage to Chamblee's par and birdie on the 12th and 13th holes. After both players parred the next three holes, Pigg used a two-putt birdie on the par-5 17th for his winning margin.

Brown, a senior at Houston, also had a 2-up lead at the turn, but Petri deadlocked the match by winning with a birdie on the 15th hole and a par on the 16th.

An errant three-iron shot into a hazard cost Petri the 17th hole, but he won 18 with a par to send the match into the extra hole.

Pigg and Brown will meet in the 36-hole final at 8:30 a.m. CDT Sunday.

De Vicenzo shoots another 68

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Argentine Roberto De Vicenzo shot a second straight 68 Saturday to take a two-stroke lead after two rounds of the $150,000 Merrill Lynch-Golf Digest Commemorative Pro-Am senior golf tournament.

De Vicenzo, who has 230 career victories in a professional career that began in 1938, had four birdies on the back nine of the 6,566-yard Newport Country Club, including one on the 18th after he hit his tee shot under a tree.

"I couldn't follow through," he said of his eight-iron shot that ended up 20 feet from the pin. "It was a lucky shot."

De Vicenzo, who won the 1967 British Open, is 8-under for the tournament. He has a two-stroke lead over Fred Hawkins, who had a six-under 66, and Jim Ferree. Neither Hawkins nor Ferree has won a PGA senior tournament.

The 54-hole tournament concludes Sunday.

Dunston makes double smash hit in Iowa debut

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Just in case you may have feared that Shawon Dunston wasn't quite ready for the American Association, the young shortstop hit two home runs in his debut with the Iowa Cubs. Dan Rohn was called up to Chicago, which made room for Dunston on the Iowa roster. After knocking a home run, Dan was sent back to Iowa...

A chapter of Dollar Sign on the Muscle by Kevin Kerrane deals with the scouting philosophy of Brandy Davis, Chicago Cubs supervisor of scouts who was in Midland during the last home stand. You may have read the Johnstown gathering of scouts in Sports Illustruated last spring....

Although the Chicago Cubs organization book lists Tandy Charley as a Sioux, the Cubs lefthander says, "That's something that got started last year in Hagerstown (Carolina League) when I was playing there. Actually, I'm a Quinalt and I live on the Quinalt reservation on the Olympic Peninsula in Washington."
As an aside, "There is some Sioux, though, on my mother's side."...

Don and Diane Fuller were Midland guests of Ken and Elaine Jastrow during the Midland Cubs last homestand. Don Fuller is very active in the HoHoKams, the hospitality organization that is so vital to the smooth operation of the Chicago Cubs spring training in Mesa, Ariz. For someone brought up in England, Sandhurst near Hastings, Fuller has become thoroughly Americanized, sportswise, as a football and baseball avid.

"I was sent to Mesa's Falcon Field by the RAF for fighter pilot training in 1941. And I liked it so much, I came back to live." Don, a former Mesa Chamber of Commerce president, recalls that Mesa was 7,000 when he first came to the American West and now it is 195,000.

The Fullers are great Arizona State football fans who found baseball in Midland a delight, "Go to a game in Phoenix," relates Don, "And you have to take a towel, it's so hot. Here a night at the game is pleasant...we don't have to leave early because of the heat."...

Dugout Chatter

Former Midland Cub manager Doc Edwards is piloting the International League Maine Guides, subject of a feature in last week's Sports Illustrated magazine....Roy Hartsfield, another ex-Cub manager, is managing Indianapolis of the American Association....And A.J. Hill, a Cub infielder last year, is playing in the Southern League this year...

When Midland Cub third baseman Tony Woods wondered about a wicked line drive at him that was called an error, it was patiently explained, "I can understand how you can lose a ball in those cavernous gloves, but there's no excuse for dropping one once it goes in...."

Tony clarified, "but it didn't go in. It hit the top of my glove."...

What was it, two seasons ago that Tony Gwynn, the National League's leading hitter, was playing in the outfield for Amarillo....I wonder if Bruce Sutter is as upset as Phil Niekro that he didn't get in the All-Star game. And shouldn't that be illegal, Sutter and Goose Gossage in the same bullpen?...

Ex Midland Cub pitcher Jon Perlman is having a big year at Iowa and may make it to the majors before the year's out. Former Chicago scout Jack Bloomfield thought Jon would be in the majors within two years when he saw him pitch for Baylor back in his college days. It has taken a bit longer...

Switzer vows he's learned a big lesson

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — University of Oklahoma football coach Barry Switzer, arrested on a complaint of driving under the influence of alcohol, vows he's learned a lesson from the experience.

"What I am going to do is take a minus and make it a plus," Switzer told The Oklahoman when contacted about the incident. "I've got to make this a plus and make sure it never happens again."

Switzer's arrest occurred at 12:20 a.m. Friday on Interstate 44 near the state Fairgrounds just west of downtown Oklahoma City, said police spokesman Detective Bill Hanneman.

The arrest came during an off-season in which the school's regents, for the first time, failed to add a year's extension onto Switzer's five-year contract, which means it will lapse at the end of the 1987 season.

Switzer also successfully defended himself in federal court recently against a securities lawsuit.

Switzer still sports one of the nation's highest winning percentages despite three consecutive four-loss seasons.

In a statement released by the University of Oklahoma sports information office, Switzer said he and a companion were returning from an anniversary dinner party "when I was stopped for straddling the center line too long after passing another vehicle."

Switzer, 46, who listed a Norman address, was arrested on complaints of driving under the influence, first offense, and straddling lane lines, Hanneman said.

He submitted to a breath test, which registered a blood alcohol content of .12 percent, Hanneman said. The legal level for driving under the influence is .10 or above.

"Frankly, I belived I could pass a Breathalyzer test, since I had only a few drinks two hours earlier," Switzer said in the statement. "However, I failed to pass the test by a narrow margin."

"People are going to take this any way they want to take it," Switzer told The Oklahoman. "Some may think I was stumbling down drunk or something. That wasn't the case at all. ... It's a good law. You shouldn't drink and drive. But I really thought I was in full control of my faculties."

Switzer was booked into the city jail at 1:34 a.m. After summoning an attorney, the coach was released at 2:30 a.m. on his own recognizance, the spokesman said.

Mayotte beats Sadri to gain Fame finals

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Top-seeded Tim Mayotte advanced to the fourth final of his professional career Saturday with a 7-6, 7-6, victory over seventh-seeded John Sadri in the semifinals of the Miller Hall of Fame Tennis Championships.

Mayotte will play unseeded Vijay Amritraj Sunday in the hope of winning his first tournament title. Amritraj defeated fourth-seeded Leif Shiras, 6-2, 6-3.

Mayotte and Sadri battled through 12 games in each set without breaking serve. The only break points in the entire match occurred in the 12th game of the second set, when Mayotte had three opportunities to win the match.

Sadri saved each match point and forced the tiebreaker. Mayotte took a 3-0 lead in the tiebreaker but partially lost his advantage when he double-faulted on the fifth point.

Sadri double-faulted on the next point, and Mayotte went up, 5-2, with a volley for a winner. He hit a drop volley for a winner and a 6-2 lead and won the tiebreaker and the match with a sliced backhand that Sadri couldn't return.

Olympic shooting deserves more TV air time

Viewers of the 1984 Summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles will have to watch closely to see any shooting sports.

The commercial networks have traditionally paid only passing attention to the pistol, moving target and rifle competitions. Apparently, they feel the millions of firearms owners and hunters in the United States have no interest in shooting, that the men and women who have invested hundreds of thousands of dollars in shotguns, rifles and pistols will want to see synchronized swimming. I disagree.

Few of us will ever have the chance to float gracefully underwater while admiring watchers press their noses against a glass-walled tank. Many of us, however, could marvel at a time-compressed run of 200 straight caly pigeons because we have shot and missed so many of them ourselves.

Even though they haven't been popular with the press, shooting sports have been one of the most popular participant events since the Olympics were revived in Athens in 1896. They regularly have been the second or third most participated in events, behind track and field and boxing. They medal more people than any other events except track and field and the first medal of the summer games usually goes to a shooter — for free pistol.

The shooting sports are the only Olympic matches where men and women have competed, and will compete, shoulder to shoulder. Margaret Murdock won a silver medal in Montreal in 1976 in thefree rifle. Unfortunately, her performance prompted the European countries, especially West Germans and Swiss, to divide the events into men's and women's categories, 1976 Olympic gold medalist Lanny Bassham said. In Los Angeles, men and women will shoot against each other only in trap and skeet.

The tryouts forthe Olympic team started July 10 and will continue through July 23. The people mentioned in the column are pre-tryout shooters the National Rifle Association felt would probably make the Olympic team.

The shotgun matches are the best known Olympic shooting disciplines, Gary Anderson, a former free rifle gold medalist who works for the National Rifle Association said.

Trap, also called clay pigeon, is fired from behind a 15-machine bunker. In the bunker are the pigeon throwers, three of them for each of five competitors (a sixth shooter works into the shooting after each round). The competitors shot at 75, 75 and 50 black pitch birds in three days of competition. The targets, traveling as fast as 100 mph, vary in elevation and dispersion tremendously. One target may skim the top of the grass, the next may catapult high and away. The shooters can take two shots with no penalty. Expensive Italian and American superposed (over-and-under) guns are the arms of choice. World record holder Dan Carlisle (200 straight) is the American favored towin the trap sequence.

The other shotgun event is skeet, in which the clay birds exit from a high house and a low house, 21 yards apart. The bird, flying 100 mph from the high house, starts 10 feet off the ground; the low bird starts about 3½ feet off the ground.

Competitors fire from seven stations arranged in a semicircle and from one point halfway between the two houses. Single targets only are thrown from stations four and eight, doublesonly at seven and doubles and a high target at one. At the other four stations, the shooter fires at singles and doubles, which amounts to 25 rounds. Like trap, the shooters fire 75, 75 and 50 shots for a 200 total. The United State's Matt Dryke, world record holder with 200 straigh, is a favorite in this competition.

The other moving target competition is running game target, commonly called running boar. The target is a lithograph of a running wild pig, which travels on a rail 50 meters from the firer. On both left and right runs, the pig scoots across the 10-meter-wide firing opening at a slow speed (five seconds) and a fast speed (2.5 seconds). The 10-ring, or bullseye, is 2.4 inches wide and is centered over the pig's chest.

The guns used for running boar are .22 caliber and are the only firearms equipped with telescopic sights. They may not weight more than 11 pounds. Sixty shots make a match in the course, which was introduced to the Olympics in 1972.

Since there are only a handful of running boar ranges in the United States and access to them is limited, an American will probably not medal. The brightest hope is Randy Stewart, who holds the American record of 590.

Other smallbore rifle events include the rifle and pistol phases. The men will shoot smallbore free rifles and English match.

The smallbore rifle event is the most taxing shooting event besides free pistol. At 50 meters, each competitor fires 120 record shots for a possible score of 1200. The bullseye, or 10-ring, at 50 meters is smaller than a dime.

The 4½-hour match itself is shot in three stages, prone, Kneeling and standing. The major difficulties shooters contend with are the slow speed of the .22 bullet, which drifts in the slightest wind, and the long match. To win this competition, a shooter must now allow his attention to waver on any shot. Over 4½ hours, that's a tall order.

The free rifles are built so that a shooter can tailor it to his body, rather than strain to hold the gun in place. They have Schuetzen-type butt plates which curl under the armpit; palm rest, which allow the shooter to bring the gun up to eye level in standing so that he doesn't hunch over the guy; leather jackets to minimize hearbeat movement; arm-to-rifle slings that support the rifle without muscle tension and boots that reduce ankle wobble.

It's a higly specialized sport requiring a lot of equipment. The standing joke among shooters is that free rifle competitors routinely have longer arms than anyone else — they must carry so much equipment that their arms stretch.

One long-armed shooter who will probably medal this year is Lones Wigger, a 46-year-old gold mdalist who says he will retire after this Olympiad.

A similar event to free rifle is the Englis match. That course of fire is 60 prone shots at 50 meters lasting 105 minutes. A perfect 600 mightwin this year, since the co-world record holder, Ernie Vande Zande, shooting sports director at the Colorado Srings training center, is competing. He shot his first match 600 in 1981 in Rio De Janeiro.

Although women don't shoot an English match, they do fire a position match. It's half as long as the men's (60 shots), fired with a different rifle.

The course of fire is called standard rifle. The gun used in it is a lighter, more restricted but still expensive .22 caliber rifle. It can weigh no more than 11 pounds and many of the advantages of the free rifle — the hook butt plate, weights and palm rest — are not allowed.

The U.S.'s Wanda Jewell is the best shot the American have at a medal. Her chances were substantially increased when world record holder Marlies Helbig of East Germany was prohibited from coming because of the Soviet boycott.

Both men and women shoot another course called air rifle. In it, the men shoot 60 .177 caliber pellets at a series of 10 rings thesize of this 'o' at 10 meters. The women shoot 40.

Airguns are the most accurate firearms in the Games. Using compressed air, justlike the old pump BB-guns, they can develop hole-in-hole accuracy if the shooter can hold accurately.

To get a steadier hold, both men and women use weatshirts under a heave leather jacket to dampen any pulse movement that might be transmitted to the the gun. Leather boots and eyeglasses that look as if they've been stepped on (the lens in front of the shooting eye is rotated upward toward the eyebrow so that a shooter can see through the middle of his prescription at the sights; theother lens is in its normal position) are two items of special gear air gun shooters wear.

In the men's competition, world record holder Mike Gross (597 of 600) is the favorite. A number of American women might medal.

Three pistol matches wrap up the Olympic shooting events. Free pistol is the most demanding of the three.

In it, a shooter uses the one-handed equivalent of the free rifle. The free pistol has orthopedic grips which grip the shooters hand. The shooter can completely relax that hand so that no movement is introduced into the shot.

To further make the free pistol a specialty item, most of them have electronic triggers which release the shot hundreds of times faster than an ordinary mechanical trigger. Since the single-shot pistols must be able to put 60 bullets in a two-inch diameter ring at 50 meters, it requires the special trigger and design. Don Nygord is the best American shooter in free pistol and, since world and Olympic record holder Alexander Melentiev (581 of 600) will not participate, Nygord may be able to medal.

Rapid-fire pistol is a more conventional match. In it, shooters fire 60 shots at a lozenge-shaped 10-ring four-inches wide. The 10-ring sits in the middle of a man's silhouette target at 25 mters. The firing runs are timed in three stages: two series of five shots in eight seconds, two series in six seconds and two in four seconds. The same sequence is repeated the next day.

The difficult section of the match is waiting for a chance to shoot, according to the NRA. The match takes on 72 seconds each day, so every shot must count, especially when the world record is 599. A perfect score might win the Olympics.

Smallbore sport pistol is the final women's shooting event. In it, the competitor shoots a bullseye phase and a rapid fire phase. In the bullseye phase at 25 meters, six series of five shots go down range per competitor. In rapid fire, the shooter faces toward a silhouette target and shoots another six series of shots. The challenge of the course is combining the precision of free pistol and the quick accuracy of rapid fire.

Barbara Hile and Ruby Fox should do well in the sport pistol competition.

In fact, the United States shooters should medal in a number of events other than the ones — smallbore, rifle and trap and skeet — they normally win.

It's a shame those competitors won't generate much more coverage than a scattered film clip here and there.

The schedule of shooting events, all to be held at the Prado Recreational Area, San Bernardino County, California, are from July 25-Aug. 4.

July 29: Men's free pistol, women's sport pistol, trap.

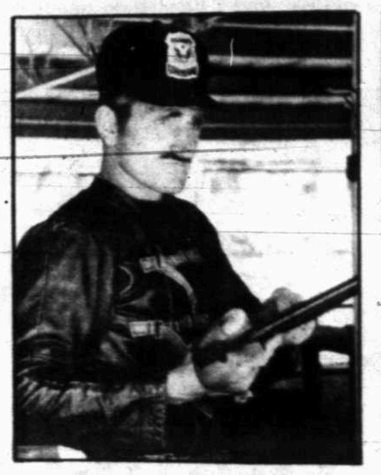
July 30: English match, running game target.

July 31: Women's air rifle.

Aug. 1: Men's three position free rifles, rapid-fire pistol.

Aug. 2: International skeet, women's standard rifle.

Aug. 3: Men's air rifle.



Eric Bulgung has an outside chance at a free pistol Olympic medal.

Ruby Fox hopes to win a medal in the inaugural Olympic match of sport pistol.

Merket takes first place in HSBC bass tournament at Lake Spence

From Staff Reports

Casey Merket took first place in the Men's Division of the High Sky Bass Club 's July tournament on Lake Spence by reeling in 7.54 pounds of bass. Bob Kirby, with 6.73 pounds, and Terry Denton, 3.22, were next.

The two-day outing attracted 38 people to Spence and they brought in 26 bass weighing 40.52 pounds.

Alice Bass won the Women's Division with 4.48 pounds and Lue Kirby was second with 2.44. Jennifer Davis was the Youth winner with 1.98.

Merket took the Large Bass with a 5.50 pounder to win the first day's calcutta and then took the second day calcutta with a 2.04.

The next tournament is scheduled for Oak Creek Aug. 18-19. Headquarters will be the Sportsman's Lodge at Ed Tucker's trailer. Tournament hours will be from 6 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 6 a.m. to 2 p.m. Sunday. This will be a heavy stringer tournament.

Current standings: 1. Bob Kirby, 491.36 points. 2. T.E. Armstrong, 444.00. 3. Dean Armstrong 412.80. 4. Fred Nobles 407.20. 5. Dow Scott, 369.12. 6. Jackie Wilkes 326.00. Women: 1. Lue Kirby, 203.36. 2. Alice Bass, 176,76. 3. Virginia Wade, 84.48.

King's 'dream'

When Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. stood before the masses of people gathered in Washington, D.C., in August 1963, he told them of his "dream."

Those immortal words of a dream to an end of racial bigotry ring true today: "I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men were created equal' ....

"I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character...."

Stirring words, those. And now, 21 years later, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s influence in breaking down racial barriers in this country is in ample evidence all around us.

To fully grasp the significance of what has transpired in the interim period, one must form a picture-image of what the situation was like in the United States in the mid-1960s. There was little hope for the black man or woman to crawl or fight their way out of their desperate life. Virtually all public facilities and buildings were off limits to them — restaurants, theaters, restrooms were segregated along with water fountains. Black people were treated less like humans than some animals.

Through the tireless efforts of Dr. King and individuals who have since shared his dream, the yoke of racial bigotry is slowly being removed, the endless mounds of racial misunderstanding erased.

Anyone who believes racial hatred is a thing of the past is naive. But at least a start has been made. To black Americans Dr. King was a liberator. To Americans of any race who share the longing Dr. King felt, the vision he experienced, Dr. King should always be recognized as the outstanding American he was, evidenced by Congress' decision to mark the anniversary of his birthdate as a national holiday.

So this week a request came before the Midland City Council to rename Indiana Avenue Martin Luther King Jr. Drive. After discussing the matter with those who presented the request and to opponents of the change, the council felt it unwise since it would create an unworkable precedent for the city.

The council did not say absolutely no, however, and appointed a special committee to formulate an alternate means of honoring Dr. King in a significant manner. That's good. Dr. King deserves recognition in Midland as elsewhere.

We wish the committee well in its attempt to find a suitable way in which to honor Dr. King and his dream for all oppressed Americans.

Another View:
Argentine austerity

Argentina's severe economic crisis has diverted attention from the fact that President Raul Alfonsin, in office barely half a year, is still struggling to reassert civilian authority in his country after seven years of military rule. Last week he moved decisively to bring the officer corps under stricter control by firing four generals from important government posts.

Two of the officers were managers of Fabricaciones Militares, a government-run industrial complex that manufactures military equipment and other material. The nation's largest single employer, Fabricaciones has provided political patronage, and opportunities for corruption, for Argentina's generals and admirals over the years.

Also removed was the commander of the army corps in Cordoba, Argentina's second city. Leaders of the Cordoba garrison have been in a key position to lead military coups in the past because they command large, well-armed units far from the center of government in Buenos Aires. Alfonsin was forced to move against Gen. Pedro Pablo Mansilla because of his vocal dissent from government efforts to prosecute officers suspected of violating human rights in the chaotic period immediately after Argentina's last coup in 1976.

The fourth officer to be ousted by the president was the highest-ranking of the generals, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Jorge H. Arguindegui, who had been appointed by Alfonsin specifically to keep his fellow army officers in line, but failed to do so.

Spokesmen for Alfonsin said there is no evidence that the ousted generals were plotting a coup. But it is common knowledge that many Argentine officers are unhappy with Alfonsin's campaign to restore civilian authority, so the danger of a coup attempt is real. And while it would likely fail for lack of popular support, a coup could cause serious violence and further disrupt an already tenuous political and economic situation in Argentina.

Outside his homeland, Alfonsin has been criticized for stubbornly resisting efforts by the International Monetary Fund and other financial institutions to impose austerity on Argentina until the economic crisis is overcome. That criticism is justified to a certain extent. Argentina is a relatively wealthy country by Latin American standards, and its 28 million citizens could live with austerity more easily than people in other deeply indebted Latin nations.

But a major political problem facing Alfonsin is that Argentines have rarely shown a willingness to accept such national discipline. Argentina's political situation may still be too uncertain for Alfonsin to risk imposing austerity too fast. But at some point he will have to start bringing the country's labor unions, business leaders, consumers and taxpayers into line, as he is now doing with the Argentine military.

JACK ANDERSON
Mexico's politics befuddle spies

WASHINGTON — What happens in Mexico is of special importance to the United States. When hard times hit, the flood of illegal aliens over our southern border swells dramatically.

Jack Anderson

As a secret State Department analysis has noted, "We are their major trading partners, the recipients of their human abundance and the safety valve for their rural despair."

Certainly, the geopolitical facts of life would seem to dictate that U.S. intelligence agencies try to gain at least a minimal inside knowledge of what is going to happen in Mexico. Unfortunately, this is not the case.

Though the Institutional Revolutionary Party has held undisputed power in Mexico since 1929, U.S. intelligence has been unable to penetrate its inner circles. Our intelligence experts know more about what is going on inside the Kremlin than they do about the workings of Mexico's ruling party.

It appears to be a question of priorities. While our best intelligence efforts are directed at Moscow and its minions, we seem content to let the Maxwell Smarts handle Mexico City. One CIA source said the lack of expertise can be traced to a basic flaw: Too few CIA employees speak Spanish.

This has led to embarrassments that would be amusing if they weren't so serious — such as the CIA agent who had to take along an interpreter when he met an important Mexican party official to ask for secret information.

My associate Dale Van Atta has conducted an extensive investigation of the CIA's pitiful capability in Mexico. He found shocking inadequacies described in secret and top-secret reports and cables from the CIA, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the National Security Agency and the State Department.

Consider this: The last time the CIA found out who had been secretly chosen as the next president of Mexico before it was publicly announced was 1966. And that was only because the man selected told the CIA himself.

In October 1966, Luis Echeverria Alvarez personally informed the CIA's station chief in Mexico City that he had been chosen to be the next president, to take office in 1970. This intelligence coup was regarded as so spectacular that the information was transmitted to Washington in a super-secret "Rybat" cable. The message was then put in a rare "blue line" report and hand-delivered to the White House, where the messenger waited to take it back after it had been read.

When Echeverria selected his own successor five years later, he apparently wasn't speaking to the CIA anymore. His choice was Jose Lopez Portillo. But the CIA assured President Ford that Secretary of Government Mario Moya Palencia was "a shoo-in to succeed President Echeverria."

Then the agency had second thoughts and sent Ford a new top-secret report. A new man, Secretary of the Presidency Hugo Cervantes del Rio, had emerged as the likely successor. The CIA report quoted "a high-ranking official" as confiding that Echeverria would pick Cervantes because he was "easier to manipulate than Moya."

The CIA ended its report with a bit of Machiavellian complexity that must have brought furrows to the presidential brow:

"If (Cervantes) continues to hold center stage over the next six weeks, we would have to revise our opinion that Moya is Echeverria's chosen successor. (There is a) possibility that Echeverria has been spotlighting Cervantes just to keep observers guessing a little longer and postponing his own lame-duck status until he announces his choice in mid-October. We are keeping our eye on Cervantes, (but) our bets are still on Moya."

Two weeks later the CIA and the rest of the world learned that Echeverria had chosen neither of the two men the CIA was touting, but Jose Lopez Portillo. Echeverria, of course, had made his choice much earlier.

Evidence of the CIA's astonishment at this unexpected turn of events was the unintentionally revealing title of one secret report: "Lopez Who?"

Even when the public announcement of Lopez Portillo's ascension finally put the CIA on the right track, the agency managed to play down the only significant piece of intelligence it received about the future president. "One businessman has implied that he is corrupt," the CIA reported, "but we have no independent information to confirm this."

GEORGE F. WILL
Democratic platform revealing

SAN FRANCISCO — Democrats, those free spirits, dispensed, when writing their platform, with that inhibition called editing. No reader will have an aching sense that the platform ends too soon.

George F. Will

I have never met an adjective I didn't like. The platform writers, chaired by Rep. Geraldine A. Ferraro, only like worn-out ones. How is our world? "Diverse and changing." What kind of choices face us? "Fundamental." What kind of programs do we need? "People-oriented." Housing? "Decent." Job training? "Meaningful."

Churchill said that to govern is to choose. What did Churchill know? The Democrats have chosen not to choose but to touch the fringe of every subject except New Zealand and architectural modernism. The resulting platform is a bit too short to be an encyclopedia, but much too long to be a clarion call. It is four-square for:

"Computer literacy" (programs are promised), auto safety for children ("safety-seat loaner or rental programs" are promised), "industry-specific experience," bilingual education, fair rates for "captive shippers," the Staggers Rail Act, Sesame Street, "language barrier-free" social services, polymer sciences, photovoltaics, ethanol and other biomass energy sources, ocean thermal power, efficient home appliances, "a formal apology" to Japanese-Americans interned during the war, wetlands, "the cultural heritage of the people of Puerto Rico," "sensitive" treatment of the Pacific Trust territories, peace on Cyprus, the "Report of the New Ireland Forum."

Democrats are mightily opposed to: AIDS, "ethnic stereotyping," "alienation" suffered by lonely children of lonely mothers, teen-age suicides (a panel is promised), sickle cell anemia (which also victimizes "persons of Mediterranean ancestry, including Turks, Greeks and Italians"), and "the use of plastic bullets in Northern Ireland." Evidently all is well in New Zealand.

Platforms should reflect a zest for disparagement and this one says Reagan's record should bring a blush of shame to the cheek of modesty. The trouble begins when the platform wanders off into matters of fact.

It rashly cites the "misery index" — the sum of the unemployment and inflation rates. But in January 1981, that rate was 19.2 (unemployment 7.5, inflation 11.7). In June 1984, it was 11.3 (7.1 and 4.2), the lowest since July 1973. Reagan's will be the first four-year term since 1961-64 during which both rates will have dropped.

The Democratic platform calls "shameful" the administration's ignoring of the mandate to reduce annual highway deaths "of over 50,000." But from 1980 to 1983 fatalities fell from 51,091 to approximately 43,000, the lowest total since 1963. From 1976 to 1980 fatalities rose from 45,523 to 51,091. The platform says the administration has neglected workers safety. But injuries have declined since 1980; work days lost are below 1976 levels.

The platform denounces the administration regarding crime. But major crimes rose between 1976 and 1980 and have since declined. The platform says the administration opposes affirmative action. But the administration has signed 35 consent decrees requiring it.

The platform says, opaquely, that Reagan "has raced to deploy new weapons that are destabilizing and difficult to ratify." Does it mean the MX — of which Carter sought 200, Reagan 100? Does it mean cruise missiles and Pershings? Reagan's deployments implement Carter's 1979 decision. Reagan has deployed no system not supported by Carter.

The platform says Reagan has weakened democracy abroad, and criticizes him regarding Grenada (the first place since Austria in 1955 where the Soviet grip has been lifted), for causing extremism there and for "failing to avoid military involvement" in extinguishing the extremism.

The platform could have been worse. It nearly was. It contains a bit of testimony delivered to a platform hearing by historian Barbara Tuchman. An earlier draft of the platform included this now-missing sentence: "How refreshing it would be to wake up one morning and find ourselves just once on the popular side!" A platform writer mischievously asked Tuchman — an ardent supporter of Israel — if we should be on "the popular side" in the Middle East. Yes, indeed, she said. Her questioner then wondered aloud how Israel would fare if put to a vote in the Middle East.

In politics, style and substance are often interestingly related: Rhetoric reveals temperament, which drives policy. This leaden, mechanical platform comes from people who do not seem to be having fun in politics. It reads like a joyless product of anxiety — anxiety lest some cause or faction, however marginal, be denied a nod, however perfunctory.

The platform is prolix, pitilessly comprehensive, repetitive and as didactic as an absentminded schoolmarm ("America is very much a part of the international economy"; "We have changed from a relatively isolated economy to an economy of international dependence"; "The American economy is a complex mix of..."; "Innovation — in process and product technolgy — is at the heart of...").

These qualities make the platform fascinating and successful. A platform should reveal a party's state of mind, and this one does, brilliantly, and mercilessly.

ART BUCHWALD
Mondale's crate has a secret!

I was getting off the airplane at the San Francisco airport when I saw a large wooden crate standing on the tarmac. Several customs officials were staring at it.

"What's going on?" I asked the chief customs inspector.

Art Buchwald

"We're not sure. We think we can hear a human voice from within."

"It's addressed to the Democratic National Convention, Moscone Hall," I said. "It's probably a stack of 'Fritz for Pres' placards or 'We Want Teddy' balloons," I told the man.

"We can't take any chances. It could be something bigger than that. It could be Gary Hart."

"Why would Gary Hart arrive in a crate?"

"He doesn't have much chance for the nomination and he might be trying to do something dramatic to turn the the convention around."

"Well, if Gary Hart wants to arrive in a crate, what concern is it of yours?"

"It might not be Gary Hart. It could be Louis Farrakhan or Phyllis Schlafly. We don't like people arriving in San Francisco in wooden boxes."

"What are those German shepherd dogs doing?"

"They're trained to sniff out suspicious crates addressed to the Democratic convention, just to make sure if they're accredited or not."

"It couldn't be Mrs. Ferraro, could it?"

"No, we've eliminated her, now that Mondale has announced she would be his running mate. There would be no sense in her arriving by box since there would be no element of surprise."

"What made you people pick that particular box?"

"For one thing it wasn't marked 'FRAGILE' or 'THIS SIDE UP,' and it wasn't insured. Then when two people from the Democratic National Committee showed up in a van to claim the crate, they didn't argue when we refused to turn it over, and just drove away. This aroused our suspicions that it was Gary Hart, because now that he is no longer a vice presidential possibility the DNC doesn't care how he shows up at the convention."

"Maybe it's Jesse Jackson?" I suggested.

"We've ruled him out. He'd never arrive by crate without tipping off the media."

"Maybe it's just one of the speakers scheduled to address the convention."

"Yes, but why would a speaker arrive in a crate?"

"Perhaps he didn't want to come in the first place, and that was the only way to get him out here."

"We won't know until the court order to open the box arrives."

"Is there any law about shipping someone to the Democratic convention in a crate?"

"Not if he was provided with enough food and water. Otherwise the ASPCA will bring charges."

Someone handed the Chief a court order and he went toward the crate with a hammer and crowbar. He tore open a few boards and talked to the person inside. Finally he nodded his head and hammered back the boards.

"Well," I said, "who was it?"

"You're not going to believe this, but it was Jimmy Carter."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On July 15, 1971, President Richard Nixon announced he would visit mainland China to seek what he called a "normalization of relations."

In 1870, Georgia became the last of the Confederate states to be readmitted to the Union.

In 1945, President Harry Truman arrived in Belgium on his way to the Potsdam Conference.

In 1958, President Dwight Eisenhower ordered U.S. Marines to Lebanon during a Middle East crisis.

In 1965, American scientists showed off close-up photographs of the planet Mars, taken by the spacecraft Mariner Four.

Ten years ago: Cypriot troops led by Greek army officers overthrew the government of Cyprus.

Five years ago: In a nationally broadcast speech, President Jimmy Carter proposed a new energy program as he spoke of a "crisis of confidence" in American attitudes.

One year ago: Several people were killed when a bomb went off at Orly Airport in France. An Armenian group claimed responsibility.

Today's birthdays: Alabama Sen. Jeremiah Denton is 60. Actors Ken Kercheval and Alex Karras are 49. Actor Jan-Michael Vincent is 40. Singer Linda Ronstadt is 38.

Thought for today: "I never think of the future. It comes soon enough." — Albert Einstein, physicist (1879-1955).

Where state of Texas concerned, bigger is better

Modisett

As long as I can remember, there has been talk about Texas being divided into a number of individual states. Personally, I think the idea stinks.

Most recently talk of a separatist move for part of West and North Texas — primarily the Permian Basin region, the Panhandle and South Plains — surfaced after Kent Hance lost his bid for the Democratic nomination for re-election to his seat in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Hance's loss disappointed a lot of West Texans, myself included, because he was commonly regarded in at least this part of the state as one of the brightest stars in the Texas delegation to the House. So talk surfaced, particularly in Lubbock, about West Texas separating from the rest of the Lone Star State. The idea was even heartily endorsed by former Gov. Preston Smith, who said he would advocate such a move.

In fact, Gov. Smith told Lubbock Avalanche-Journal writer Bob Campbell in June: "Personally, I think it would be tremendous. We would be the richest state in the nation."

Well, a separate West Texas definitely would be wealthy, but I can't embrace Gov. Smith's enthusiasm for breaking away from the heritage that we have shared with the rest of the Lone Star State since 1845.

Austin, known as readily for its cultural attractions — like "the Armadillo," Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings — as its political aura, would be lost in some state to the south.

The gorgeous Texas Hill Country that hides any number of communities steeped in Old World charm would be in some other state we West Texans probably would visit only on vacation excursions. Even then we wouldn't "feel" as though those Texans were a part of our lives.

Padre Island. The Texas Gulf Coast. The Big Thicket of deep East Texas. The Alabama-Coushatta Indian Reservation. Mist-shrouded pine forests 400 miles to the east all would be part of some other state — not part of that proud land we all now claim as home.

Texans are a proud breed. In fact, as recent letters to the editor in this newspaper have indicated, maybe we're sometimes proud to the point of alienating those who move here from other parts of the nation.

That pride surely is due in part to our heritage and the independent spirit that thrives here. We are proud of our state, proud of our past and future, and all too willing to do battle with anyone who questions our God-given right to feel that way.

But independence can be a double-edged sword and nowhere is that more obvious than in the movement to form a separate state.

Sure Texas has the right to separate from the Union. In fact the agreement which brought statehood to Texas actually gave Texans the right to establish as many as five separate states here if we so choose.

Simply because you have the right to do something, though, doesn't necessarily make it in your best interest. This is one of those instances.

I beg to differ with Gov. Smith and any others who think Texas would be better off as two, three or even five separate states. There might be political and economic advantages, but there are those of us who still think some things in this complicated world are more important than money and politics. Heritage is one of them.

I don't want to visit the beach or the Big Thicket in another state. They're part of my state and I want it to stay that way.

Call me a proud Texan if you will. I'll tell you you're absolutely correct.

SPEAKING OUT

Floodway rules hurt homeowners

By JOAN PORCH

Joan Porch moved to Midland in March from Vidor in Southeast Texas. She is employed as a licensed vocational nurse.

Do you want to know how the federal government is taking away the value of land or property with homes and giving the people nothing but heartache in return? Well let me tell you my story.

In June of 1982 we purchased five acres of land from a real estate company in East Texas. It was heavily wooded but we cleared the land with an axe and a lot of sore muscles. In August we decided to build a house. We put the stakes up and went to get a building permit from the county.

We were told that the land was in a flood zone "B" which meant the foundation had to be elevated 12 inches above the ground. East Texas has a lot of rain so that seemed reasonable.

Our land was not flat; it had high and low places so we picked the highest spot and then elevated the house a minimum of 15 inches in the front and three feet in the back to make it level. We made a pier foundation.

Time went by and we built the house. We did all the work ourselves — no hired help. When we were through our son wanted a house on one acre, so we got a loan to build the second house. I went to get permit from the county in August of 1983 and was told that all that area was now in a floodway.

That means you cannot build anything. You cannot die and leave the property in a will. You cannot move away and sell it. You cannot get flood insurance or a federally insured loan.

When I saw the map the government agency had drawn up I said it was wrong. It showed the creek running down the road in front of our house when in fact it bordered one side of our land. I tried to get the error in the map changed so I could build the second house and restore the value to our own house and land. I went or wrote to every government official from the county to the president asking for help.

The county did three surveys and sent them to the government agency that made the maps. I went on local television. I got my story in the local newspaper. I tried to get a tax break from the county and the Internal Revenue Service but nothing did any good.

In March of 1984 we got transferred because of my husband's job. I was then told by the county I could sell the house because of the "Grandfather Clause," which means the new floodway law does not affect existing property as far as selling. This is the opposite of what I was told a few months before.

Well the house is up for sale and we have a contract on it but what of the new people? If they want to build they can't and the worst part is they don't know. What of all the people all over who don't know what this government agency is doing to their biggest investment?

We now live in Midland and as I write this I find there are some streets even here in a floodway. Is it your house? Do you know what's happening to your property? Find out!

Cable recording answer 'sidestep'

I was not able to attend the city council public hearing concerning our local cable service due to other obligations. However, I did read the referenced article with interest.

(Gregg) Holmes' reply to Nancy Hart's question of not being able to record using a VCR while watching another show side-stepped the issue. Obtaining the correct diagram is only part of the story.

Holmes' people were not able to explain how to hook up a system so as to maintain use of the original television remote control and record as desired, when I recently asked the same question. Their ideas would work, but only if the individual enjoys walking to their television to slide a switch to the use of their VCR, having their television remote control useless for other than volume changes, and paying for and juggling a second remote unit. Toss in a third remote unit for a VCR, and you can understand Ms. Hart's concern. Compatability of remote control capability is a factor. How many televisions sold today in Midland are without remote control feature?

One topic that Holmes failed to address is the cost of obtaining the "correct wiring." Even the simplest switch-flipping hook-up costs ten dollars for parts. I finally found a way to control my system without following the advice of a cable company sales person. "You do it our way or no way at all," is a direct quote. My rigging cost thirty-five dollars and four hours labor. I did my own installation and used scrap coaxial cable and fittings.

I don't mind cables, equipment, and black boxes as long as they do what I want — not what a company rendering a commercial franchised service wants. The ultimate slap is the necessity and expense required to modify my system to fit what the cable company sees fit to provide.

Plaza committee, Jaycees say thanks

We of the Midland Jaycees and the Midland Centennial Plaza sincerely thank all those who made the plaza groundbreaking on July 4 such a festive and successful occasion.

Special thanks to the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Midland Center, Midland Reporter-Telegram, Parks and Recreation Department, Qualfied Printers, Rainbow Press, Powell Printing, Admarc Inc., Energy Plus Inc., A-Quick Sign Co., Magnatex Corp., Bonnie Beth Hanssen, Robert Rumbleow, David Nail, Chris Waterman, Bobbie Garcia, JBR Inc., the Rev. J.B. Stewart, Reynolds Brothers Reproduction Co., Pixie's Paraphernalia Inc., A.B.C. Sign Co., Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Tommy the Clown, Tillie and Scooter, Midland Girl Scouts of America, Boy Scout Troop No. 80, the Mayor's Four-Um, Mrs. James Ormond and the Colonel Theunis Dey Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution for making its annual parade part of the morning's festivities.

On July 4 alone over $2,500 was raised for the Centennial Plaza from the sale of "land deeds."

Anyone wishing to purchase one square foot of the plaza and receive a certificate of ownership can do so by simply mailing a check for at least $25 to Midland Centennial Plaza Association, P.O. Box 10216, Midland, 79702.

With the continued support of Midlanders the plaza will become a reality during Midland's Centennial in 1985.

Don't assume skin determines stand

When will slanted reporting of the news cease? I refer to Mark Lewis' reporting of the city council meeting on May 9.

Why does one assume that when blacks are present they are all there for the same purpose? Some people, namely myself, attend council meetings on a fairly regular basis. Not just when there is an issue concerning blacks.

If the reporter had stated the facts accurately, he would have stated that when Mayor Akins asked for a show of hands from others in the audience in favor of the petition, no other black hands went up.

I would not be so naive as to even consider changing West Indiana to M.L. King Jr. for I know the town and know that the "old timers" live there and you'd be defeated before you started.

Please note that this was not a movement of the black community but of (Arthur) Pertile and the Black Advisory Council. Also, this and one other action they undertook recently was done against the advice of the mainstays of our community.

While we feel the effort has its merits we also feel the timing as well as the designated street change was slightly off target. We also appreciate Pertile for having a conviction and the courage to adhere to it.

Mrs. Hoover prefers the traditional title

The recent article on the front page of the local section about the Highland Council for the Deaf was most informative and well written.

But the reference to Mrs. Thomas Hoover as "Ms." Hoover is unacceptable. Mrs. Hoover has taken her husband's name and wished to be known as such.

The "Ms." usage is associated with single or divorced women so much I hope no one would think of me as one who is unmarried or divorced. I hope reporters at the Reporter-Telegram will give women whom they write about a choice from now on.

I've had enough of 'Dark Ages'

I will apologize up front to the citizens of Midland for another Dallas Smith letter. I am sick of them and I am sure you are too, by now. However in the interest of all us illiterates who worked for Ed Darnell, in the "Dark Ages" of Midland, I feel I must speak up in response to letters by Lt. Decker and David Hancock. I have listened to this rhetoric of how great thou are and how utterly inept we were for eight years and enough is enough.

I came to work for Ed Darnell from a large Sheriff's Department with 15 years police experience and prior to becoming a cop I was an ordained minister. So you see, good citizens, I had been to school a day or two in my life. I had been to Midland many times prior to coming to work here and always heard good things about the Sheriff's office. I thought I had my eyes wide open but I never once realized I was entering the "Dark Ages." I bet you good voters in Midland were as shocked and surprised as I was to learn from David Hancock, that for 36 years of electing Ed Darnell sheriff you were voting for the "Dark Ages" and per David Hancock, it took Dallas Smith to enlighten you and let the sun once again shine on Midland.

Fellow citizens, you don't have to ask Dallas Smith, per David Hancock.I can tell we did not have pornography, adult book stores, XXX rated movies or massage parlors in the dark ages and, my friends, organized crime has never existed in Midland. We good old boys at the Police Department and Sheriffs Office saw to that and in those days we got along. Fellow Republicans, don't be misled. Rumors did not defeat Dallas Smith, the issues did. His own poll proved that.

You exercised your right and voted him out so let's get on with the business at hand lest we do Gary Painter a great injustice by giving him the primary nomination and then let him get beat in November. We also have a President and U.S. Senator to get elected. So remember, fellow Republicans, united we stand proud, divide us and the democrats will chuckle all the way to the polls.

Smith developed professionalism

Six years ago when I was hired by Sheriff Dallas Smith, he explained that he was organizing a professional law enforcement agency for Midland County. He went on to say that in my capacity as a patrol officer I would be handling calls for the citizens of Midland County and that I would not be "doing them a favor" by responding to their calls for assistance. He said that the citizens, regardless of who they were or where they lived, had already bought and paid for my services and that it was my job to be and act professional towards them.

Throughout my years of employment for Sheriff Smith, he has continually stressed how important it is to take pride in my work and to spend the extra time and effort required to "do the job right."

I am proud to have worked for Sheriff Smith and consider myself a professional law enforcement officer. I will always be thankful to him for the feeling that comes from "doing the job right."

According to a letter from B. John McDaniel, which appeared in your newspaper, he apparently believes that a deputy working for Dallas Smith would not write a letter in his defense unless he was "promoted" or "coerced." I can assure you that this letter is written without either.

Sgt. James Phipps
Midland

Critical views don't match mine

I think the readers should know that B. John McDaniel, whose letter appeared in the July 8 edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, is an ex-employee of the Midland County Sheriff's Department, and that his critical views of Dallas Smith are in no way consistent with my own views.

I do not appreciate his suggestion that my letter to the editor, which appeared in the paper on July 1, was written at the request of or the direction of Dallas Smith. I wrote the letter of my own free will because I believe that Dallas Smith has done an outstanding job as sheriff of Midland County. I wrote it because I am proud to be a member of his agency.

If McDaniel thinks I wrote the letter because I was coerced or was promoted he is sadly mistaken.

McDaniel's letter sounds like the typical "sour grapes" of an ex-employee who couldn't handle the job — much like the recent letter from another ex-employee, Robert Settles. It is also interesting to note that both Settles and McDaniel are actively involved in Gary Painter's campaign. Could this be the reason that McDaniel would think someone could be coerced into writing a letter?

Jackson re-runs comments damaging to Democrats

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — While lots of people are thinking these days that the Rev. Jesse Jackson must be a Republican plant to damage the Democrats, I don't believe that story for a minute. Jackson happens to be a loose cannon or an unguided missile smashing into people, things and organizations with little reflection for the immediate results or damage.

Just take his utterances of the last few days, practically up to the eve of the Democratic nominating convention for president and vice president in San Francisco. He assailed former Vice President Walter (Fritz) Mondale, an almost sure winner for the presidential nomination, for snubbing him as a running mate. Then, he charged that Jews were trying to make a "pariah" of him for his unorthodox behavior. Finally, Jackson, a candidate with U.S. Senator Gary Hart of Colorado, had this to say about the vice presidency:

"I'm not interested in pursuing it. It's not a litmus test for me. The real test is not a thrust for a position, but to be accorded the respect one has earned."

What "respect?"

Thereupon the Rev. Jackson lambasted what he described as "the Aryan press," a not-so-subtle dig at the media which I always thought lavished a great deal of attention on him. The word "Aryan" was brought into disgrace through its use by Hitler.

The women's organization "NOW" was overjoyed when Mondale, following on-again, off-again canvassing, chose 48-year-old blonde Congresswoman Geraldine Ferraro, of Queens, N.Y., to be his running mate. She has served three successive terms in the House of Representatives, is a highly qualified lawyer and mother of three children, two girls and a boy. Her husband is John Zaccaro, a real estate agent, but Ms. Ferraro uses her maiden name in professional life.

What voter appeal her selection will have remains an enigma. It's a historic "first" for a woman to be placed so high on a national ticket but the electorate, remember, votes mainly for the presidential candidate. Miss Ferraro's designation before the convention also is unprecedented. It came as Mondale declared bluntly that he couldn't possibly run with Jackson as No. 2; just too incompatible, was the way he put it. The former vice president ignored Jackson's suggested list of qualified black ladies who could fill the running mate bill.

Jackson was not included in the long list of male and female possibilities Mondale asked to his Minnesota home for interviews. But two blacks, Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles and Mayor Wilson Goode of Philadelphia, had been summoned about the No. 2 position. Of the first, Jackson said in a Los Angeles Times interview:

"Bradley's a good man but there's no evidence he has any regional strength. Goode is a good man but he lost his own city to me." Jackson carried Philadelphia in the Pennsylvania primary. Goode was not running. An in-depth N.Y. Times-CBS poll revealed that three-fourths of the blacks who voted for Jackson in the presidential preferential primaries prefer Mondale to Jackson as the party's nominee by a wide margin.

The Rev. Jackson ignored that study. Instead he bandied about accusations of "racism." For instance, he charged that Sen. Hart committed a serious "racist" act by closing out a Washington, D.C., account when he learned that the bank was owned by a group of Arab investors. An aide to Sen. Hart retorted that the account was by no means closed, adding, "We still have campaign money in that bank."

Jackson raised the issue when he was questioned about his feelings on the use of "Hymietown," meaning New York and its large Jewish population. He replied that "you can't compare the improper name 'Hymie' to an act (which is) that blatant, political and intentional. Suppose anybody had done that to a bank owned by Jewish people?" Sen. Hart's staff gave the answer.

It will be interesting to see how New York's Mayor Ed Koch refers to Jackson's remarks about "Hymietown" when he addresses the convention. Jackson has vowed to try to oust Mayor Koch in next year's mayoral elections and Koch, never one to shirk a political fight, has long openly found him on the opposite side of the fence. The two may well spar off in a no-quarter convention floor fight to add to the adrenalin already chopping up delegations.

In complaining that Mondale ignored him and his crowd-pleasing muscle, Jackson asserted that Jews were leaning heavily on the former vice president to make a vanishing character of him. No way, no how, was the Rev. Jackson's reply. He even has hinted strongly that if Mondale does not regard him with the "respect" his campaign "earned," then the party would suffer. On successive days, Jackson has issued veiled threats to the would-be party nominee and almost always ignored the real runner-up, Sen. Hart, who keeps insisting he'll be staying in the race until all convention ballots are counted.

"Don't deal me out," Sen. Hart told a crowd in Atlanta, Ga. "There are plenty of delegates, watching and waiting. They know I can win."

Personally, I'd just as soon allow Jackson to make the trip to the Soviet Union in the hope of obtaining releases for exiled Nobel laureate Andrei D. Sakharov and his ailing wife, leading dissidents. Western leaders, like French President Mitterrand, got the cold shoulder when they tried. Jackson had personal success in Syria and a mixed bag with Fidel Castro in Cuba.

If he fails on the mission to Moscow, no harm done but I don't see the Soviets releasing the Sakharovs. Somehow, should Jackson pull a rabbit out of the hat and win freedom for the Sakharovs, he'll merit international thanks and the "respect" he craves.

Moore not surprised with sudden victory over Benitez

MONTE CARLO (AP) — Davey Moore's sudden victory over Wilfred Benitez stunned many at ringside, but not the winner.

"No, I wasn't surprised the fight was stopped," Moore said after referee Gerlando Lucia of Italy halted Saturday's middleweight bout at 1:18 of the second round. "He was just sitting in the corner taking punishment. He has to come out and fight."

Moore, the former World Boxing Association junior middleweight champion, knocked Benitez down with a right in the final minute of the first round and Benitez never seemed to recover as Moore kept him pinned in his corner.

Lucia stepped in and stopped the scheduled 10-round fight after Moore connected with a right uppercut and another right in the second.

"I was surprised he stayed in the corner," Moore said. "He used to be good in the corner."

"It was an accumulation of punches," said Moore, describing the blow that prompted Lucia to stop the bout. "It was hard. He just fell for the old right hand over the left."

Benitez said he sprained an ankle while backing up in the first round before the knockdown. He said he remained in the corner, hoping the pain would go away, but it did not and said he had trouble moving around in the second round.

Gregorio Benitez, Wilfred's father and trainer-manager, said the fighter did not seem to have his mind on the fight.

"He said that when he went into the ring, he was thinking of his wife and daughter," the elder Benitez said. "That's not the way to go into a fight.

"He didn't have his mind right there. I told him to move left and right, but he just stood there."

Moore, a New Yorker who weighed 156 pounds, increased his record to 14-1 with 11 knockouts. His only defeat came at the hands of Roberto Duran.

Moore said he was already looking forward to his next fight.

"Next, give me Hearns," he said, referring to Thomas Hearns, the World Boxing Council super welterweight champion. "Hagler, I'll take him too," he said of undisputed middleweight title-holder Marvelous Marvin Hagler.

"I'm hungry. I'm starving. Bring them all on."

Benitez, a Puerto Rican who was the youngest fighter to ever win a title when he took the WBA welterweight title in 1979 at the age of 17, weighed in at 152. Benitez is now 45-4-1.

"He's young, but he's an old fighter," Moore said of Benitez. "He didn't show much opposition tonight."

In earlier fights on the same card, French lightweight champion Frederic Geoffroy lost his first fight in 16 bouts when the referee stopped his non-title match against Moroccan-born Abdelkader Marbi of France in the fourth round of a scheduled eight-rounder after Marbi opened a deep cut under Geoffroy's left eyebrow.

Fulgencio Obelmeijas of Venezuela easily outpointed Argentina's Cesar Romero in their eight-round bantamweight bout by winning the last four rounds with a series of left-right combinations. The fight had been scored even through the first half.

Italian middleweight Walter Giorgetti easily beat Mexico's Juan Castellanos on points.

Giorgetti was clearly in control during the fight, and hammered the Mexican mercilessly in the sixth and again in the final eighth round, but was unable to send him to the canvas.

Castellanos received an enthusiastic ovation for his courage from the crowd, which included international movie star and former boxer Jean-Paul Belmondo and Monaco's Prince Ranier.

Juan Domingo Roldan of Argentina outpointed Andre Mongelema of Zaire in another middleweight bout, dominating the first five rounds and holding on in the final three during which Mongelema scored effectively with his left.

Fiery exchange marks turning point in Fleming-McEnroe Cup victory

ATLANTA (AP) — Peter Fleming marked the turning point of an American Davis Cup doubles victory Saturday when his partner, John McEnroe, had a fiery verbal exchange with Argentina's Jose-Luis Clerc.

After "everybody got excited" in the third set altercation, Fleming noted, the Americans won 10 of 12 games to close out a 7-5, 4-6, 6-3, 6-1 victory over Clerc and Martin Jaite.

The match gave the American team an insurmountable 3-0 lead in the quarterfinal Davis Cup contest, which ends Sunday.

At 2-2 in the third set, the argument at the net between McEnroe and Clerc brought French referee Patrick Flodrops onto the court to restore order, while most of the crowd of 16,629 cheered McEnroe.

McEnroe appeared to be accusing the Argentines of hitting at the Americans' bodies.

Earlier, McEnroe had appeared to drive at a ball at Jaite, and then waved a finger at the 19-year-old Argentine.

After the match, McEnroe said, "It's all water under the bridge as far as I'm concerned. It just makes (the match) more interesting."

Of his shot toward Jaite, McEnroe said, "I just mishit it."

The Argentines did not appear at the post-match news conference.

McEnroe also showed a few cracks in his resolve not to argue with officials, shouting, "America" at two officials whose calls displeased him.

"I'd love to have good calls here (in the United States)," he said. "I sure don't get them anywhere else."

He insisted both calls he challenged were wrong.

Both Americans, who ran their Davis Cup record together to 13-0, said they had trouble concentrating early in the match.

The match turned on a string of service breaks in the third set.

With the match even at one set each, the Americans broke Jaite to open the third set when the young Argentine netted a volley at 15-40.

But Fleming then dropped his own service on successive double faults.

Clerc then found himself serving a break point. He fended off two blistering groundstrokes from McEnroe before the American's third drive at him tipped the net cord and bounced over Clerc for a winner and a 2-1 U.S. lead.

Clerc returned the favor in the fourth game with a wide return on break point that McEnroe netted to even the set at 2-2.

At 3-3, Clerc lost his serve, missing wide with a high volley on break point.

This time, the Americans held the advantage. McEnroe held his serve and Jaite lost his service on a netted volley to lose the set 6-3.

The third set also featured a long verbal exchange between McEnroe and Clerc, bringing French referee Patrick Flodrops onto the court to restore order.

McEnroe apparently accused the Argentines of hitting at the Americans.

Earlier, McEnroe had appeared to drive a ball at Jaite, and then waved a finger at the teen-ager.

The Americans took charge in the fourth set, breaking Jaite's serve in the fourth game and Clerc's in the sixth. Fleming served out the match, and McEnroe put away a volley on match point.

PBWG to hold championship on July 17-19

From Staff Reports

The Permian Basin Women's Golf Association will hold its three-day match play championship July 17, 18, 19 at three area clubs—Andrews Country Club, the first day; Mission, CC, the second; and Ranchland Hills CC, the final day.

More than 70 women from eight clubs are entered. First, second and consolation winners will be determined in each flight and prizes will be awarded at a luncheon held at RHCC the final day.

Also on the final day, a Lame Duck flight will compete for low net and low gross. A Long Drive and Closest-to-the-pin competition will be conducted.

Permian Basin associations who are members of the PBWGA are: Big Spring, Hogan Park, RHCC, Green Tree CC, Odessa CC, Sunset, Mission, and Andrews. Jean. Stinson, Odessa, is tournament chairman. Ella Heath, Hogan, is president.

Pirates take informal look at Luis Clemente

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Pirates staged an informal workout Saturday for 18-year-old Luis Clemente, the son of Pirates' Hall of Fame outfielder Roberto Clemente. But the team did not immediately offer him a contract.

Luis Clemente hit about 50 batting practice pitches thrown by injured Pirates pitcher Manny Sarmiento. He also was timed at running the bases by team scouting director Milt Graff and Manager Chuck Tanner.

"We're not going to judge him on today," Graff said. "He's been home in Puerto Rico and hasn't played competitively for about two months. He's going to play for the Little Pirates and we'll evaluate him on a daily basis."

The Little Pirates are an amateur team that plays American Legion competition and is sponsored by the Pirates.

Graff said he conducted the workout at the request of Vera Clemente, Luis's mother and the widow of Roberto Clemente, the former Pirates' outfielder who died in an airplane crash on Dec. 31, 1972.

Graff said Luis Clemente "is eligible to be signed now and we're going to take a good look at him."

"A couple of teams have looked at him but no one has talked to him about a contract," Graff said.

Graff did not disclose any of Clemente's running times but said he is "an average looking runner."

Luis Clemente pulled most of the balls he hit to left field and did not hit any balls out of Three Rivers Stadium.

Midlander's dream makes him delegate

Dallas Willis

Sitting in his high school at Cleburne, two subjects caught the eye of Dallas Willis: history and government.

He graduated and was serving in the Marine Corps during World War II when he became eligible to vote. It was the fourth time Franklin Delano Roosevelt's name was on the ballot and Willis cast his vote — absentee — for the Democrat. He's never voted for any other party since.

His devotion and support of the Democratic party are paying off. This week Willis is in San Francisco with the Texas delegation representing the 25th Senatorial District.

It's the realization of his lifetime dream and the culmination of all those hours of volunteer work he's put in for Democratic candidates. And Willis sees the naming of Rep. Geraldine Ferraro as vice president on the ticket with Walter Mondale as adding some excitement to the convention.

"I've always been interested in politics," Willis said last week before leaving for San Francisco. "It grew out of the high school work. I just became a participant. I believe in community involvement."

Willis was working for Southwestern Bell when he was transferred to Midland in 1949, and he claims it was because of a Republican president that he's still here.

Dwight Eisenhower was in office when a recession hit. Although Willis had a position in which he was to be transferred to various places, Ma Bell told the workers to get situated, that work was slack.

"I liked Midland, the climate, atmosphere," he said of his choice to stay here.

Willis became involved in local union activities and in 1957 was elected president of the Central Labor Union in Odessa, a position he still holds. In 1960, he became a lobbyist for Communication Workers of America, a job he still handles. He also has served as vice president of the Texas AFL-CIO. Locally, he serves on the executive board of Boys Club and has worked on a committee studying the feasibility of building a new county jail.

Since that first vote for FDR in 1944, Willis said he has campaigned actively for any Democratic presidential nominee.

"Harry Truman was the last Democrat to carry Midland County," he said of the 1948 presidential race. "Even LBJ (Lyndon Johnson) didn't carry it. I've never been able to understand that, when he was one of our own."

Willis became acquainted with Mondale when he ran as Jimmy Carter's vice president in 1976. "When Mondale announced this year, I got on the team. He was my choice. I've campaigned for him out here in Ector, Midland and Howard counties."

He sees Mondale as the right candidate, and not just from labor's viewpoint. "He has vast experience, compassion, knowledge of government. He's the most experienced person in government today. He understands American people, too."

With women comprising more than half the population in the United States today, Willis sees no reason why Mondale should not have considered a woman as his running mate.

"They do most of the political work," Willis said of women in the political arena today. "We've never had a woman this high in the councils of government. It's long overdue."

He praised Mondale for his "courage" in selecting a woman and said Ms. Ferraro "will increase interest in the convention." The two other major presidential contenders — Gary Hart and Jesse Jackson — will stop their criticism of Mondale and "will be working strongly for the team. They're good Democrats," Willis said.

In their campaigning, the two men have broadened the base for Democrats, Willis added. "It will mean a lot toward success for the ticket in November."

The helicopter unit of the Ector County Sheriff's Department fights crime from the sky. Whirling about at an average of 70 miles per hour, these choppers help officers keep a different perspective on any happenings on the ground.

Officers have new vantage point

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The popular saying goes, "No one is above the law." But the law is above everyone in Ector County when sheriff's office helicopters are hovering overhead.

These airborne officers have used their whirling perches to keep a bird's eye view on crime in this and other area counties since 1981.

When a cougar attacked a Midlander two weeks ago, the helicopter unit was contacted to provide aerial assistance.

The call to action never came, but the unit's presence gives Petroplex law officers another vantage point under the right circumstances. Other than a Department of Public Safety chopper, Ector County's is the only law enforcement unit in Midland/Odessa.

This was the closest the sheriff's helicopters have come to aiding Midland, but "we would (come) if they called us," said Lt. Richard Pate, special operations commander for the sheriff's department.

Pate estimated 15 missing persons have been rescued by their helicopter searches. "Most of them were little kids that wandered off," he said.

In late 1983, a man who had shot himself was saved when a chopper patrol spotted his car in a pasture and called for an ambulance.

Crime prevention patrols are used to deter burglars in "trouble spots," said Pate, since a helicopter can watch a 32-block area simultaneously. "There's no way to know" how many burglars changed their minds because of the whirlybirds, said Pate, but high rates do drop after the chopper cops take up the patrols.

Because helicopters can cover ground quickly, they come in handy in patroling oil fields. Also, "At 400 feet, you can see for a long way if anything's wrong," said Deputy Richard Rattan, who is training to be a pilot.

In oilfield accidents, they can oversee emergency operations from the sky. The chopper can also be used to direct patrol cars to scenes, saving officers time they might have lost finding their way in remote areas of the county.

Still in the planning stages is expanding the helicopters' use to emergency medical evacuations. A one-hour trip to a remote part of the region by ambulance would take 17-18 minutes by chopper, said Pate.

The feasibility of such an operation is being studied, possibly combining the resources of the chopper unit, the county hospital and the fire department's paramedics. Pate estimated that outfitting a helicopter for this purpose would cost close to $8,000.

Texas & Pacific Railway depot reaches end of line

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

The old Texas & Pacific Railway Co. depot in Midland begins to crumble and fall with the assistance of men and machinery. The depot, hailed in 1950 as the "Permian Basin Empire's finest, most modern, most attractive and best equipped railway station," was closed in 1970.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Just like the walls in the battle of Jericho, the walls came tumbling down in Midland.

And they'll still be falling until the old Texas & Pacific Railway Co. depot in Midland goes the way of the iron horse, the puffing steam locomotive: It'll be no more.

The beige brick-and-rock depot, built for about $250,000 in 1949, was dedicated amid enthusiasm and good neighborliness between the railway and the community on Jan. 12, 1950.

"There was quite a bit of fanfare," said Willard Schultz, regional director of public relations for the Union Pacific System. "It was quite a blowout."

Midland's mayor, William Neely, was there along with civic leaders such as M.C. Ulmer, First National Bank president, who lauded Clarence Scharbauer and Dr. John B. Thomas as "pioneers influential in Midland's growth and development;" and James N. Allison Sr., newspaper publisher and industrial leader "who was the primary mover" in getting Midland a new depot.

T&P President W.G. Vollmer, a successor to railroad magnate Jay Gould of the late 1800s, was in Midland for the dedication of the building with its red clay-tile mission roof and its miniature likeness, the Railway Express Agency building, east of the depot alongside the rails.

"IT IS MY DESIRE to meet the obligations of the communities which we serve," Vollmer had said. "We have tried...to be good neighbors."

"He (Vollmer) was for upgrading the image of the railroad," said Schultz, who has been railroading since 1942. In 1950, "passenger travel was still going fairly strong," he recalled.

Twenty years later, in 1970, T&P abandoned the depot and combined its freight operations with those in Odessa. Three years before that, on March 22, 1967, T&P's last passenger train, No. 26, stopped in Midland, picked up four passengers, who "solemnly boarded" a coach, unloaded U.S. mail and express and rumbled eastward in the pre-dawn hours toward Fort Worth.

At the time of the 1950 dedication, rail traffic through Midland had been "dieselized." The more efficient diesel-electric locomotives in the late 1940s were replacing the old stately, steam-blowing locomotives whose chugging ancestors almost 69 years earlier had first steamed through Midland and left soot and progress in their wake.

"There was some romance there," Schultz said of the steam locomotives. "The diesels are much more efficient in their operation, but they don't have the charm which the old steamers had."

THE RAILROAD OPENED the West to development; it was the catalyst to progress.

Jay Gould was T&P's president in 1881 when, on that July 4, 1881, rails were laid through Midland (then, called Midway) in T&P's westward move across Texas. Rail service through Midland was inaugurated on Sept. 12, 1881.

"We have quite a history out there," Schultz said.

Midland's first "depot" was a box car, which served as a post office. Afterward, the T&P built a stone depot. It was torn down in the late 1940s and was replaced by the 1950 depot.

"I wish we still had it," Nancy McKinley, Midland historian, said of the old-timey "darling" depot. She decried the razing the 1950 depot. "It's just a crying shame."

Mrs. McKinley is president of the Midland County Historical Society and is chairman of the Midland County Historical Commission.

"One of our primary objectives is preservation (of historic buildings), and that's what we work for — trying to preserve the past."

But the old depot and REA buildings are being razed, Schultz said, because both were idle, suffering from disuse, and Union Pacific System was tired of having to pay taxes on property which wasn't generating any income. "It's a yoke around your neck."

Training partnership of government, industry benefits job-seekers

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

When Mary Martinez took leave from her job last March to have a baby, she planned to return to work as soon as she could.

But shortly after her daughter was born, she was told that her old job no longer existed.

"After I had the baby, they informed me they were going to close the company," she says.

As a single parent with limited career prospects, a 6-year-old daughter and a new baby to care for, it isn't surprising that Ms. Martinez would turn to a government agency for help. What she really wanted, though, was a job.

Thanks to the Job Training Partnership Act, that's just what she got.

Ms. Martinez is finishing her second month of training as a dental assistant for Midland dentist Dr. Larry Z. Rusk. JTPA pays half her salary until her training period ends in two months. "And at that point she'll just become a regular employee," says Rusk. "We intend to keep her."

JTPA is the job-training program which replaced the Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA). Like CETA, it's funded by the federal government and designed to train economically disadvantaged people for jobs for which they otherwise wouldn't qualify.

But unlike CETA, the JTPA is administered by the Private Industry Council, a group of local business people who try to coordinate the training program with the employment needs of local companies.

"I heard about the program and went to see if they had anything," says Ms. Martinez. "They sent me on a few interviews, and I got this one."

As a dental assistant, Ms. Martinez prepares patients for examinations, takes their X-rays and assists Rusk at the chair.

"I really enjoy it," she says. "It's going to be a benefit because it's training for a career."

Rusk also is pleased with the results of his participation in the program.

"It's worked out real well," he says. "She's a very fine, intelligent young woman, and we were very fortunate to get her."

The JTPA program is designed to encourage employers to take on young people and unskilled adults and train them for specific positions. The JTPA checks the eligibility of the job candidates, handles the paperwork, pays half their salaries while they train and provides a tax credit for employers if they hire their trainees as regular employees.

"I'd say the program is extremely effective, because it helps someone into a position they may have had difficulty getting otherwise, and it gives employers a real incentive to give them the opportunity," says Rusk.

"It's been a benefit to both me and Mary."

The JTPA was established in October 1982 because "both Congress and President Reagan agreed that we needed a national job training program (to replace CETA), but they wanted something more diverted to private industry," says Donna Harrison, assistant director of JTPA in the Permian Basin area. "And it's working very well. But what we really need now is more private industry involvement."

Please see JOBS, Page 2C

JOBS

The Private Industry Council in West Texas has designated the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission to administer the JTPA program in this area, Ms. Harrison says. But the council still oversees the program and plays an important role in getting local businesses to participate.

"We're hoping we can involve more businesses with the program," says Oralia Corrales, who is both a member of the Private Industry Council and a participating employer who has trained several people at her Midland insurance agency.

"It's been a tremendous benefit to the young ladies we trained," she says. "They just need someone to give them an opportunity to prove themselves."

Some business owners are reluctant to participate for fear of having to hire someone they don't want. "But that's not true," says Ms. Corrales, who adds that the paperwork involved is minimal.

"Any time you're directly involved, you're making sure the tax money is not being wasted," she says. "In the end, we all pay" for alternative government programs, such as welfare. "I'd much rather it be spent in this way."

About 200 persons have been placed in training positions in Midland since October, says W.C. Wilson, JTPA coordinator for Midland and Martin counties.

The JTPA also runs a Summer Youth Employment Training Program, and works with Midland College to train some people in the classroom. In addition to helping poor people, the program also helps place handicapped people in training positions, according to Wilson.

By taking people off welfare and training them for jobs, "the JTPA can hopefully move people from being tax burdens to being taxpayers," Wilson says.

DEPOT

The old T&P started its fade into oblivion in 1976 when the Missouri Pacific Railroad bought T&P. "It was a matter of more efficient operation under one umbrella," Schultz said. In 1982, Mo Pac was merged with the Union Pacific Railroad to become the nation's third largest railway system.

Gary Tate, Midland's last depot agent, was transferred to Midland in 1963, when four passenger trains traveled through the Tall City.

The depot, he recalled, was "one of the most modern in this part of the country."

THE T&P DISCONTINUED its faster Texas Eagle in 1965 and on March 22, 1967, retired its last two Western passengers trains, the eastbound No. 26 and the westbound No. 27, from service through Midland.

It was a lonesome morning.

"On the platform where Midlanders once waited excitedly for the arrival of friends and loved ones," wrote reporter Cope Routh, "no one alighted."

"It's the worst thing that ever happened in West Texas," Conductor Joe Hendricks had lamented just before old No. 26 pulled out at 5:59 a.m. for the last time.

"I'm kind of a romantic (about railroading)," Tate said, but admitted that the old depot "doesn't have the sympathetic attraction" to him. He said he was glad to see the depot razed "for whatever progress calls for" rather than to see it continue to be "run down."

As ever, railroads today are deep into freight hauling. Prospects for railroad's prosperity "are very, very good providing the economy continues to hold up the way it has been," Schultz said.

T&P's dropping its passenger service turned out to be an omen of the depot's demise. The railway suffered a loss of revenue caused by the decline of boardings and the diversion of U.S. mails from trains to trucks. Cars became the primary means of intercity travel; airline travel flourished.

At one time, the T&P "aggressively promoted its passenger train business," Walter Wendlandt, director of the Texas Railroad Commission's transportation division in 1967, had noted. "This was probably a matter of pride and public relations rather than actual profit...Railroad management has grown more critical of passenger train operations and seems to have lost any enthusiasm for this part of its business."

And eventually, in 1984, the walls of the old T&P railway depot came crashing down due to lack of interest and disuse.

Arlington brunette crowned Miss Texas

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A radiantly smiling Miss Arlington, Tamara Hext, out-sang and outshone 69 entrants to win the 1984 Miss Texas honors Saturday night and was crowned to represent the state in the Miss America Pageant this September in Atlantic City, N.J.

The 21-year-old Fort Worth native, after gasping at hearing her name called, walked haltingly around the Tarrant County Convention Center Theater stage, fighting back the tears.

Miss Hext, a University of Texas at Arlington student who says her ambition is to become a national television personality, sang "I've Got A Crush On You" for her part in the talent competition.

Central and East Texas fared best in the week-long competition — all five top winners hailed from those areas — and so did the University of Texas at Arlington. Three of the top four winners attend that school.

Miss Greenville, Sherry Lynn Elkins, who along with Miss Hext set a precedent as winners of their second preliminary competitions on the same night, took 1st runner-up honors.

The 23-year-old Mississippi native entertained the crowd and judges with a peppy ventriloquism act.

Second runner-up was Miss Duncanville, Jonna Gail Fitzgerald, whose foot-stomping fiddling of bluegrass tunes brought some of the crowd to its feet.

Miss Grand Prairie, Kimberly K. Acker, was third runner-up in the competition. She is 22 years old and is an Oklahoma native.

Leos, employed by the city of Big Spring, was a lifelong area resident.

Several streets to receive repairs, detour signs soon

From Staff Reports

For the city of Midland, summer means street construction. And for drivers, construction means detours.

— Louisiana Avenue at the intersection of B Street will be closed to traffic Monday morning for intersection reconstruction. Westbound traffic will be detoured at A Street.

— Loraine Street at Illinois Avenue will be closed Monday for construction of water mains. Loraine between Illinois and Ohio Avenue will be temporarily signed and used for two-way traffic for entrance into parking lots in this area. In the weeks to come, crews will proceed westward along Illinois to Marienfeld Street. Drivers will be notified of additional street closures.

— Ohio Avenue will be signed No Parking Anytime from Andrews Highway to Garfield for one to two weeks during construction. Ohio will be barricaded and restricted to one lane each direction.

Motorists are urged to plan alternate routes and avoid these areas as much as possible during construction.

Week of pet shows scheduled in several neighborhood parks

From Staff Reports

Midland children are invited to bring their pets to the nearest city park next week to participate in a pet show sponsored by the City of Midland Parks and Recreation Department.

A show will be held each day at a different neighborhood park. All types of pets are eligible, but larger ones should be on a leash. Categories include cutest, ugliest, oldest, youngest, most colorful and friendliest pet. The show will be held as soon as the park opens, and parents are urged to pick up large animals at about 10:30 a.m.

Shows are scheduled for:

Monday at Henderson Park, Eisenhower and Graceland;

Tuesday at Wadley-Barron Park, Cuthbert and A;

Wednesday at Tumbleweed Park, Ventura;

Thursday at Grafa Park, Midkiff and Mamar;

Friday at Lancaster Park, Kansas and Godfrey.

For more information call the parks office at 683-4281, extension 316.

The county's unit now uses three TH55A's, a two-seat craft most effective for training and observation which would have cost $65,000 each new, and one Hiller OH23G, a three seater that can accommodate up to nine persons and costs $115,000 new.

The smaller copters were purchased used from U.S. Army surplus for $320 each. It took the unit five months and $5,000 to get the first one ready for flight. The second took only three weeks and the third five days.

"We learned a lot on the first one," recalled Pate.

The smaller choppers can move at 85 miles per hour, said Pate, with tailwinds adding to the top speed and head winds reducing it.

"We can stop a lot faster than a car," he said, estimating braking speed at two feet per mile per hour at which the craft is traveling.

"I can make it stop and make you drop your jaws down on your chest," said Pate, also promoting the craft's maneuverability over an airplane.

Operation costs run about $45,000 per year, said Pate. Gas mileage figures at nearly 6 miles per gallon at an average speed of 70 miles per hour.

A former airplane pilot, Pate said, "You have to fly a helicopter. A plane will fly itself."

"The helicopter is more adaptable to do whatever you want to do with it," he said.

People of our community who make a difference.

Midland's populace has one of the highest education levels in the country, yet at one time there was no local graduate program where Midlanders could continue their education. Dr. Jack Elam, an independent geologist, saw this tremondous need as a challenging opportunity.

Dr. Elam first moved to Midland in 1950 but left for a number of years to attend graduate school and to teach. In 1959 he returned to Midland because he believes in Midland as a city which benefits not only from a prolific oil basin but also from the cooperative people who live here.Dr. Elam began immediately to talk to organizations such as the West Texas Geological Society about beginning a graduate program for geologists and other Midland professionals. His idea and the cooperation of many generous Midlander's led to the establishment and to the success of the Permian Basin Graduate Center in 1967. Dr. Elam believes, "the real power of the graduate center is that it is completely autonomous." Thus, with Dr. Elam's guidance the center has been truly responsive to the needs of the community both in selecting courses and instructors. Though Dr. Elam has stepped down from his position on the board in order to allow others to serve, he still donates much of his time to teaching courses.

The graduate center is a very important part of Dr. Elam's contribution to Midland's growth, yet Dr. Elam has not limited his activities to that one program. At various times he has served as treasurer, vice president, and president of West Texas Geological Society. He also held the post of first vice president in the Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists in 1969 and 1970.

In addition, he has been recognized as a Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneer.

Dr. Elam's most recent accomplishment is the publishing of his book Creativity in Oil Exploration or How to Find Oil and Gas Economically. He has donated the proceeds from this book to the Permian Basin Graduate Center.

Strong beliefs, dedication and action are why Dr. Jack Elam makes a difference in Midland.

There is a traffic hazard situation at the intersections of New York Street with Colorado Street and at Big Spring Street. This is caused by mesquite trees growing near the corners at both intersections. Motorists have to get almost to the middle of the street to see if cars are approaching.

I called City Hall about this two weeks ago and nothing has been done. Can you do something? — Delia Herron

ANSWER: Terry Potter with the Traffic Engineering Department of the city says that the department will check on this situation. However, before anything can be done about removal of the mesquites, property owners have to be notified and the process can be a lengthy one, legally.

Is there any way I can locate my natural parents who put me up for adoption when I was a baby? — C.S.

ANSWER: Under a new law effective Jan. 1, 1984, voluntary registration may be accomplished through a Central Registry at the Department of Human Resources, says the State Bar of Texas.

An adopted child, birth parents and adopted siblings may voluntarily register after they have reached the age of 21. Also, agencies which place children for adoption may set up their own registries. Once enough information is obtained, the central registry will attempt to match the inquiries.

The Department of Human Resources Special Services Division is located in Austin, DHR, Building B.

Is there anyone in Midland who does re-weaving on clothes? - Mrs.J.C.H.

ANSWER: Dry cleaning establishments in Midland contacted report they do not know of anyone in Midland at the present time who does re-weaving on clothes. The items taken to dry cleaners for such work are sent to out-of-town services. Representatives with Fashion Cleaners said there is a woman in Odessa who does this type of work. She may be contacted through Henry Tobler in Odessa. His telephone number is 332-0365.

I don't think I fully understand something I read about the other day — the difference between the "face amount" of my life insurance policy and its "cash value." — K.L.

ANSWER: The face amount is the sum of money that will be paid to your beneficiary when you die, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

The cash value of a whole life (permanent) policy is the amount you get if you cash in the policy before it becomes payable upon death — or at maturity, in the case of an endowment. Term (temporary) life insurance policies rarely have cash value. Permanent policies build up a cash value over the years.

Do you know if there is a training center for florists in the Midland area, or if there is a Midlnd florist who would hire someone to train in the floral business? — M.H.

ANSWER: Brenda Nipp, who is employed with Midland Floral, says there is not a professional training center for florists in Midland. There are several in the state, including the Texas School of Floral Design in San Antonio. This telephone number is 512/341-5114. In Houston, there is the Shelton School of Floral Design located at 8406 Wier Drive. That telephone number is 713/644-4151.

Ms. Nipp said that in her situation, she is employed as a clerk, but is receiving some training in floral design. She said she is not aware of a Midland florist hiring individuals specifically for training.

Summer games set at speedway

Parks and Recreations is announcing its ABC Summer Warmup Games for 8 a.m. July 21 at the Twin Cities Speedway.

Purpose of these games is to heighten the awareness of the need for physical fitness and to create interest in the 1984 Olympic games.

Each child who participates will receive a certificate of merit and an Olympic poster. In addition, there will be drawings for T-shirts, a summer warmup games volleyball and Frisbee.

Games of all types, relays and a water spray will be offered.

Refreshments will be provided by Coca-Cola, and 7-Eleven stores will pass out free soft drink cards.

More information can be obtained by calling the Parks and Recreation office, 683-4281, extension 316.

Oranges planted in 1493

The New World's first orange trees were planted in Haiti in 1493 by Columbus. In the 1500s, Spanish conquistador Francesco Pizarro introduced the orange to Peru. Spanish explorers took oranges to Florida between 1513 and 1565.

Blood bank experiencing annual vacation shortage

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

As Midlanders cancel the paper, load up the station wagon and back out the driveway, they leave their jobs, problems and stress behind them. But the annual vacation routine leaves Midland Memorial Hospital searching for blood.

"It's typical," said Joan Hill, MMH blood bank supervisor. "It's just about normal. We're not extremely short of any particular type — we're just low on everything."

It isn't only Midland's supply that shrinks in the summer.

Odessa Medical Center Hospital requested pints of B-positive blood in an emergency situation last week. The next day, the two hospitals swapped. "They took our As and we took their Bs," Ms. Hill said.

When she walked into the lab the next morning, there were only three pints of A-positive blood on the shelf. "That was a shock."

Following a blood drive, the situation had improved. But Friday morning, there were only 43 pints of O-positive and 41 of A-positive, instead of the preferred 60 bags of each; 15 pints of 0-negative instead of the 25-30 usually kept on hand; and 10 each of A-negative and B-positive, instead of the usual 15 bags stored.

> "It's typical.... We're not extremely short of any particular type — we're just low on everything."
> — Joan Hill, MMH blood bank supervisor

"We'll take whatever comes in," Ms. Hill said. "We're not picky."

It happens every summer.

"It's because people go on vacation and they forget to donate and we have more accidents — the kids are out of school and everyone's going somewhere in the summertime," said Wanda Anderson, MMH donor recruiter. "It's hot and tempers flare; there are gunshot wounds and stabbings. But by October, everything gets back to normal."

Although school is in session in September, most of the regular donors are getting back into the swing of the routine and forget about giving blood. "Our blood drive is real slow in September," Ms. Hill said.

With a need for about 400 units of blood a month, it's essential that the 1,200 to 1,500 Midland donors give on a regular schedule.

"And 60 to 75 percent of those are in blood clubs so maybe the majority of those only donate two times a year," Ms. Anderson said.

In an effort to combat the declining supply, the department has extended hours on Tuesdays and opened its doors on Saturdays. Hours will be from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday; 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Tuesday; and 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday.

Also, those donors on the regular list who are called in during periods of shortage should be receiving a postcard reminder that the eight-week time period required between donations has lapsed.

"If people would just realize that blood cannot be replaced with money if it's not there," Ms. Anderson said. "And it's not frightening to donate."

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

'Kid's College' begins Monday in Midland

By H.A. TUCK

"Kid's College at Midland College" starts Monday, the first full effort for children's enrichment programs at MC. Children who are enrolled should arrive 20 minutes earlier than their class starting time on Monday for their orientation.

Designed for children ages 9-12, Kid's College offers one, two or three classes each afternoon Monday through Thursday for two weeks. There are programs in journalism, art, computers, athletics, dance, speech and several others.

The response was so strong that the Department of Community Services already is planning to expand the offerings next summer to accommodate even more children.

Monday also is the last day to late-register for second summer session credit courses. Persons who want to take one or two classes during the term should come to the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building between 7 a.m.-8 p.m. to sign up.

As we have discussed in previous columns, the role of MC as a comprehensive community college is to provide educational opportunities primarily for local residents. Now we've obtained some statistics from the American Council on Education which point out who is going to college these days. Between 1972 and 1982, the enrollment rate for persons 25-34 years of age increased by 69.8 percent and the rate for those 35 and older jumped an astonishing 77.4 percent.

Fulltime students increased by just 18.9 percent while enrollment of part-time students went up more than 65 percent.

The study also points out that male students increased by 15.1 percent during the decade, while enrollment of females went up 60.8 percent.

• • •

We frequently talk about MC's Adult Basic Education program, which prepares people to take the GED (General Education Development) test. According to the June, 1984, publication of the American Council on Education, almost 800,000 people took the GED test in 1983, more than 500,000 of those passed and received their high school equivalency diploma, and about half of those who passed plan to continue their education in college.

At MC their success rate is much higher than the national average, with a 99.7 percent pass rate for those who take the battery of tests.

• • •

Tennis enthusiasts are delighted with the announcement last week that John McEnroe and Vitas Gerulitis will be playing an exhibition at Chaparral Center Aug. 9. There also will be a "Futures" exhibition and some celebrity doubles with McEnroe and Gerulitis.

And to benefit the MC tennis program, the racquets used by McEnroe and Gerulitis during their match will be auctioned off. And if I thought their skills went with their racquets, I'd be getting a bank loan to be one of the successful bidders!

Tickets for the exhibition are on sale at the Chaparral Center box office, RepublicBank First National of Midland and the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

education in brief

Check shot records now

The Midland City-County Health Department recommends parents of school-age children review shot records and make certain their children receive needed immunizations as soon as possible. By bringing children in during July, parents can avoid crowded conditions and long waits typical at health clinics during August and September.

Immunizations can be obtained at a family physician's office or at the Midland City-County Health Department, 501 Andrews Highway, on Mondays from 8-11 a.m. or 1-4 p.m.

Alamo band to practice

Summer band practice for Alamo Junior High School students will begin at 9 a.m. Aug. 6. Bus students will be picked up and dropped off at their neighborhood schools.

Interested students should call the school office, 694-1601, or new band director James Snider, 697-7022, for band and bus schedules.

Students who were not in band last year should contact Snider.

Registration closes soon

Late registration for Midland College's second summer term closes Monday.

Persons who plan to enroll should go to the Student Services Office in the administration building between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday to register.

By Thursday afternoon, 791 students were enrolled. This is down slightly from the 825 who had signed up at the same time last year when the record for second summer term enrollment was set. There were 842 students signed up when registration closed at the end of the 1983 second summer term.

For information about courses which still have openings, interested persons may call 684-7851, extension 166.

Audio-visuals available

Films and other audio-visual material available to public schools through Region 18 Education Service Center may be requested for preview by parents and other interested adults during a one-day review session July 26. The session is scheduled from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the center, located on LaForce Boulevard at Midland Regional Airport.

Parents and other citizens interested in previewing particular films from the collection maintained at the service center should notify the staff at least five days in advance.

Persons wishing to preview films may call Shirley Higgins at 563-2380. The name of the films desired and the approximate time the person will arrive should be given.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS COUNT

Selling your home? What will the prospect notice about the exterior? Better yet, take an objective look at it yourself first. What is your first impression? Peeling paint or a weed-tangled lawn will be important first strikes against you. No matter how super the interior of the home is, the outside counts first. To get off to a positive start, here are a few tips:

Painting will improve the appearance. A small house will look best in white or just one light color. Unsightly features blend into the background if painted the same color. Special detailing can be highlighted in a contrasting color.

The entrance should be inviting. Bright paint on the front door, potted flowers on the steps, a few shrubs by the walkway can inexpensively transform a drab entry appearance.

Landscaping is important. Landscaping is to a home what a pretty dress is to a lady. It sets the tone. A few shrubs or trees from a supermarket or a local nursery can work minor miracles.

POSTAL EXAM WORKSHOP

Distribution Clerk Machine (DCM)

The Midland Post Office has Indicated They Will Be Accepting Applications For The DCM Exam Soon. (Possibly this month) The dates for taking applications have not been set at this time, but those dates should appear in the near future on Post Office bulletin boards and in local newspapers. The DCM position currently pays $10.56 per hour plus excellent benefits. People are hired for these positions based on their exam score, i.e. the people with the highest scores are hired.

WORKSHOP BY POSTAL EXAM PREPARATION CENTER

Many cities often take applications and begin testing the very next week. This system does not allow adequate time for proper preparation. In order to make sure that you have enough time to properly prepare, this workshop is being offered before application dates have been set. This workshop was designed by the foremost authority in America on gaining postal employment. Stephen McNally is a former postal employee and a Ph.D. candidate in Education. He scored 100% on his first DCM exam. One of Mr. McNally's students recently made this statement, "This workshop was well worth my time and money. Using Mr. McNally's techniques allowed me to score 100% on my first 3 Clerk-Carrier exams!" K.A. Summerfield, IL The DCM exam and C/C exams are very similar.

GUARANTEED SCORE of 95% or HIGHER

★The Exclusive P.E.P.C. Double Guarantee: 1. At the end of the workshop, if you do not think these methods will significantly increase your score, your money will be refunded. 2. You will enter a written contract guaranteeing you a score of 95% or higher or your money will be refunded in full.

*After attending this workshop you will be personally notified of the application dates.

WORKSHOP TUITION IS $25.00. Payable in cash, Visa, or MasterCard. (No personal checks). This fee includes the 2½ hour workshop, the textbook ClerkCarrier, which includes DCM exam complete test, diagnostic practice exercises, tips to make you testwise, and more...

Sweetwater may receive water from CRMWD's Lake E.V. Spence

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — The Colorado River Municipal Water District has agreed to make 3,500 acre feet of water from Lake E.V. Spence available anually to Sweetwater subject to an approving vote Aug. 11 by citizens of that city.

CRWMD directors last week approved a contract by which Sweetwater could obtain that volume of water at a cost of $3,808,006. The district will finance this if Sweetwater desires.

Cost is based on the estimated value of $45 million of Lake Spence in place as of Jan. 1, 1980, plus quality enhancement facilities which bring the present day value of the lake to $50,591,000. Sweetwater's 3,500 acre feet volume is 7.527 percent of the estimated 46,500 acre feet annual yield of the lake, this percentage being applied to the total present value of the lake.

Also, Sweetwater will pay the same percentage of the annual operation and maintenance cost of the lake. Whenever the original cost is retired, Sweetwater may decide to continue paying its pro rata share of operation and maintenance of the lake and have perpetual rights to the 3,500 acre feet of water at no othe charge.

Water in excess of the contract quantity will be available at 35.42 cents per thousand gallons as of Jan. 1, 1985, adjustable annually to the Price Index.

Sweetwater will install and operate its own pump station and pipeline facilities to its Oak Creek reservoir.

An offer by the district was made in 1980 but rejected by voters. The request was renewed in April this year by the city of Sweetwater.

Midland attorney resigns post on Industrial Accident Board

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Midland attorney Herbert Snow Harris Jr., has resigned as chairman of the Industrial Accident Board citing personal reasons, the governor's office reported Tuesday.

According to a letter received by Gov. Mark White's personnel office, Harris resigned to "return to private law practice" in Midland, a spokesman said:

White appointed Margaret M. Maisel, San Antonio, to replace Harris, who has served as chairman since Sept. 26, 1979. Harris was appointed to the post by former Gov. Bill Clements.

Harris' resignation was effective June 1, but the spokesman said he did not know if Harris has returned to Midland. In the resignation letter, Harris stated he has enjoyed serving as chairman of the IAB.

New trial ordered

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Court of Criminal Appeals Wednesday ordered a new trial for Guadalupe Eugene Herrera, convicted in Midland County Oct. 29, 1982, of delivery of more than five but less than 50 pounds of marijuana.

Herrera had received a 12-year sentence.

Herrera said that the penalty assessed him exceeded the maximum permissible sentence, because the sentence was assessed under House Bill 730, which was overturned earlier by the court.

The court agreed and ordered a new trial.

Search ends for Andrews teen-ager

PAGOSA SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Authorities suspended the search for a 15-year-old Andrews, Texas, boy who vanished Wednesday from his parents' southern Colorado summer home, the Archuleta County sheriff's office said Saturday.

A sheriff's office spokesman who refused to identify himself said deputies decided to suspend the search for Chris Harvey, son of Jim and Judy Harvey, on Friday.

A search Friday by about 30 people aided by three Colorado Civil Air Patrol planes failed to produce any trace of the boy, officials said.

The search was concentrated near the Harveys' trailer on the edge of San Juan National Forest.

Breakdance competition set

A breakdance contest sponsored by the city Parks and Recreation Department is scheduled for 1 p.m. Aug. 4 at Dillard's courtyard in Midland Park Mall.

Open to anyone, the contest's entry fee is $5 per person or $15 per group. Contestants must provide cassette music and should be at the mall by noon.

Trophies and a $50 gift certificate will be awarded first-place winners in the individual and team catagories. The winning team entry will perform at the mall's back-to-school fashion show Aug. 11.

Contestants will be judged on originality, degree of difficulty and team work. Registration forms are available at the Parks and Recreation office, 300 Baldwin, or the mall office. Entries will be limited to 10 in each division.

At SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND, A & Scharbauer (682-2519), we advocate correct and responsible use of prescription and over-the-counter medication. We invite you to stop in for a discussion of your health needs and interests. We are also available for consultation on diabetic problems. As a family owned and full service drug store, we're here to serve your needs. We're open Mon.-Sat. 8-7. Visa and Mastercard accepted. City wide delivery.

Some people, who would not ordinarily take medication of any kind, take it to help with their exercise regimen. Aspirins anti-inflammatory effects, for instance, can lessen stiffness in the joints and increase mobility. However, aspirin, even when taken several hours before exercise, can mask slight pain that would otherwise be aggravated by movement. As a result, any pain that is felt, after having taken aspirin a few hours earlier, should be an immediate signal to stop exercising. Rest and ice the injured area. This is true even if the earlier aspirin was taken to combat a headache. A fever is another sign that the body needs rest. Going back to an exercise program too soon can send an exerciser back to bed.

HINT:
An antihistimine-type medicine can cause drowsiness that may last for several hours.

'Doonesbury' to return to newspapers Sept. 30

KANSAS CITY, (AP) — The comic strip "Doonesbury," not seen since January 1983 because its characters were "confused and out of sorts" and needed to grow up from the 1970s to the '80s, will return to newspapers on Sept. 30, its distributor announced Saturday.

"It's time to give them some $20 haircuts, graduate them and move them out into the larger world of grown-up concerns," cartoonist Garry Trudeau said when he announced his sabbatical on Sept. 8, 1982.

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Syndicated columnist James Kilpatrick has been named Virginian of the Year for 1984 by the Virginia Press Association.

Kilpatrick, who lives in Rappahannock County and was editor of the Richmond News-Leader from 1949 to 1966, received the association's Parks-Mason award Friday night at a banquet during its 102nd annual meeting.

The award is presented in memory of William Parks, the first colonial Virginia printer, and George Mason, author of the Virginia Declaration of Rights.

FIGUERAS, Spain (AP) — Surrealist painter Salvador Dali has left his castle home in the village of Pubol for the first time since the June 1982 death of his Russian-born wife, Gala, Dali's lawyer said Saturday.

Dali, 80, spent about 45 minutes in his theater-museum in this small Catalan town, which is near his home, said Miquel Domenech. The museum holds works that Dali and his wife had set aside as something to protect them against hard times, said Domenech.

When Dali, accompanied by a close friend and a nurse, left the museum, a small group of people applauded him and Dali replied by raising his walking stick in a salute, said Domenech.

MANTEO, N.C. (AP) — After a visit by England's Princess Anne, a 70-boat flotilla led by former CBS-TV news anchorman Walter Cronkite on Saturday headed for this island to celebrate the 400th anniversary of British settlement in America.

The first of the private sailboats left Elizabeth City to the northwest at 8 a.m., with the fleet to arrive here Saturday evening.

On Friday, Princess Anne dedicated the $700,000 Elizabeth II, a replica of a 16th-century ship that brought the first English colonists to the New World, depositing them on the North Carolina coast.

Despite the failure of the voyage to establish permanent colonies, the effort "was a real act of bravery and faith," the princess told about 5,000 spectators.

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Singer Philippe Wynne, a former member of the Spinners soul group, collapsed during a performance at a nightclub and died early today at a hospital. He was 43.

Wynne, lead singer with the Spinners from 1972 to 1977, died at 12:27 a.m. from a heart attack after being rushed to Providence Hospital, said Sonny Buxton, spokesman for Ivey's, the club where Wynne performed Friday night.

The body was transported to the Alameda County coroner's office for an autopsy, said Mary Ellen Waluch, nursing supervisor at the hospital. The singer used the name Wynne professionally but his legal name was spelled Wynn, said his former wife, Ava Le Flore Wynn.

In 1977, Wynne left the Spinners, which performed such hits as "I'll Be Around," "Could It Be I'm Falling In Love" and "The Rubberband Man." He recorded seven albums and about 10 singles with the group, said his manager, Linda Reitman.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Reputed New England organized crime boss Raymond L.S. Patriarca was buried Saturday, drawing mourners in expensive cars and police with cameras checking faces and license plate numbers.

Patriarca, 76, died Wednesday of an apparent heart attack.

Private services were held at a large, white Victorian-era funeral home and at Gate of Heaven Cemetery in East Providence. No church service was held because the family wanted to avoid a public spectacle, police said.

PEKING (AP) — Oqirhuyakt, a former Mongolian warlord and descendant of the 13th century conqueror Genghis Khan, died July 2 of cancer at the age of 84, the official Chinese news agency said Saturday.

Oqirhuyakt had served as a vice chairman of the standing committee of the People's Congress of Inner Mongolia and was chairman of the Regional Commission for Nationalities Affairs.

Doughnut shop's trainer will be tried for death of El Paso woman

DENVER (AP) — A manager of a doughnut shop's managerial training operations in Texas and three other states — who 14 years ago pleaded guilty to strangling his wife and was later convicted of rape — will stand trial in the strangulation death last month of a woman trainee from El Paso.

Also at Friday's preliminary hearing for Ronald Garner, 36, a detective testified that Garner is the primary suspect in the strangulation death of another woman trainee, though no charges have been filed in that case.

Denver County Judge Edward Simons bound Garner over to face first-degree murder charges in the June 10 slaying of Jennifer Della-Costa, 30, of El Paso. A cleaning woman found her nude body in a bed at a Denver motel.

Chief Deputy District Attorney Diane Balkin had asked that Garner be held without bond or under $1 million bond.

Simons declined, and set bond on Garner at $250,000.

At the time of the Texas woman's death, Garner was the training manager for the Mountain State's Division of Donut Houses.

Drilling Plan for Block 38, T-2-S, T&P Survey, Section 4; northwest quarter, Midland, County, Texas.

The City of Midland is considering advertising for bids for the lease of minerals on Block 38, T-2-S, T&P Survey, Section 4; northwest quarter, Midland County, Texas. Prior to advertising for bids and bid award, the statutes of the State of Texas require that a drilling plan be prepared and published for review by the general public in order to minimize potential harm to any park areas. The NW/4 of Section 4 contains approximately 13 acres of Cole Park. The following are the necessary comments regarding various areas of this NW/4 of Section 4.

1.COLE PARK - Cole Park is a relatively small park and has been determined by the Parks & Recreation Director to have no drill sites available for drilling for any potential bidders. All bidders and the public are hereby notified that the Cole Park will not be available for any drill sites in regard to recovery of minerals.

2.LANDFILL - The existing landfill will be prohibited from drilling due to considerations by the City of Midland as well as the Texas Department of Health. Drilling is prohibited in order to protect the integrity and percolation of water through the pits.

3.UTILITY CONSIDERATIONS - Other areas will be prohibited due to utility considerations.

A map with the proposed drilling area is on file in the City Secretarys officc and is available to the public as well as any interested bidders regarding this NW/4 of Section 4. This drilling plan will be published on July 1, 8 and 15th and a hearing will be conducted on July 24th in the Council Chamber at 11:00 a.m. located at 300 N. Loraine, City Hall, Midland, Texas. Any and all interested parties and bidders are invited and encouraged to attend the hearing. Bidders that are interested in copies of the proposed map delineating potential drill areas and areas prohibited from drilling may contact the City Secretary's office, 915-683-4281. Site maps are available reflecting the potential areas for drilling.

B.C. Clanton, City Secretary

MANAGEMENT OPPORTUNITIES

WE WANT THE BEST!

Long John Silver's, Inc. wants you to become the best restaurant manager in the business. So we offer management candidates a comprehensive training program accredited by The American Council on Education. It fully prepares you to handle the many aspects of restaurant management —everything from accounting to quality control. And training at Long John Silver's, Inc. is an on-going process. We offer basic and advanced management courses leading towards supervisory development.

This is an opportunity to grow along with one of the most rapidly expanding food service systems in the nation. Already 1,300 shoppes strong, Long John Silver's, Inc. plans to open additional units this year. You need no previous food service experience, just the desire to work hard and the determination to succeed. Our training program will take care of the rest.

If you're an aggressive individual who isn't satisfied with second best—in terms of training, opportunity, or rewards—get in touch with Long John Silver's, Inc. Contact:

"Some people only live this way two weeks a year."

Welcome to vacation living all year long. Welcome to Saddle Club Apartments. Saddle Club isn't a resort-we just look like one. We offer you 2 sparkling swimming pools, 2 lighted tennis courts, 2 indoor racquetball courts, a universal gym, indoor and outdoor jacuzzis, and wet and dry saunas.

Once inside a Saddle Club apartment home you can cozy up to a warm fireplace, relax on your own patio or balcony and enjoy the feeling of luxury living.

There's privacy here, but if you want activities, we have planned resident get-togethers.

Rent beginning at $310. We're located only minutes from major businesses, recreation, fine restaurants and entertainment. We're probably only a few minutes away from where you work.

So if you feel like taking a vacation that never has to end, take a drive over to Saddle Club and let us show you how.

City Newsstands

Photos by Jerry Mennenga

David Lee Forrest

Though newsstands in bigger cities are perched on the corner of busy intersections, Midland's newsstands are removed from the vicissitudes of West Texas weather. Kathy Carter of Lucy's Place in the Wall Tower East building sells anything from romance novels to Rolaids.

Newsstands: Small cluttered open-air shops on sidewalks beside the bustling streets of big cities such as New York and Chicago.

At least it is probably the most common image brought to mind by the word "newsstand."

Midland, however, has newsstands of its own. They are tucked quietly away in the nooks and crannies of office buildings, rather than exposed to the vicissitudes of West Texas weather.

Dispensing newspapers, magazines, snacks, beverages and a variety of other miscellaneous items, these businesses can help make its tenants feel a bit more at home.

"This is the busiest little corner in town; the most fun, too," said Jo Anne Williams of Williams Concessions, the newsstand nestled across from the elevators on the east side of RepublicBank First National.

"Even if people don't stop to buy something," she said, "they stop to visit."

Most of her regular customers are bank employees, tenants of other offices in the building and people who bank there, she said.

Of the items sold there, "Food is the number one thing," Ms. Williams said, "good old junk food. Snickers is the number one candy. I sell three Snickers to one of everything else."

Women's magazines, including Glamour, Mademoiselle and Ladies Home Journal, are the hottest items on the magazine racks.

"A few men come in and buy the news magazines, Amateur Radio and a few of the gun magazines," Ms. Williams said.

Her most popular newspapers are the Wall Street Journal and the Midland Reporter-Telegram. The San Angelo Standard-Times "does fairly well."

The Lubbock Avalanche-Journal is the least popular. Deliveries of that paper to her newsstand are "really rather erratic," she said, so her customers don't depend on it.

Larry Miller, of The Kiosk newsstand in the ClayDesta Bank Building, said the Avalanche-Journal fell so short of customers he stopped carrying it. The Wall Street Journal and Dallas Morning News are his popular papers.

Among, magazines, he said, "Your weekly news magazines probably go the most."

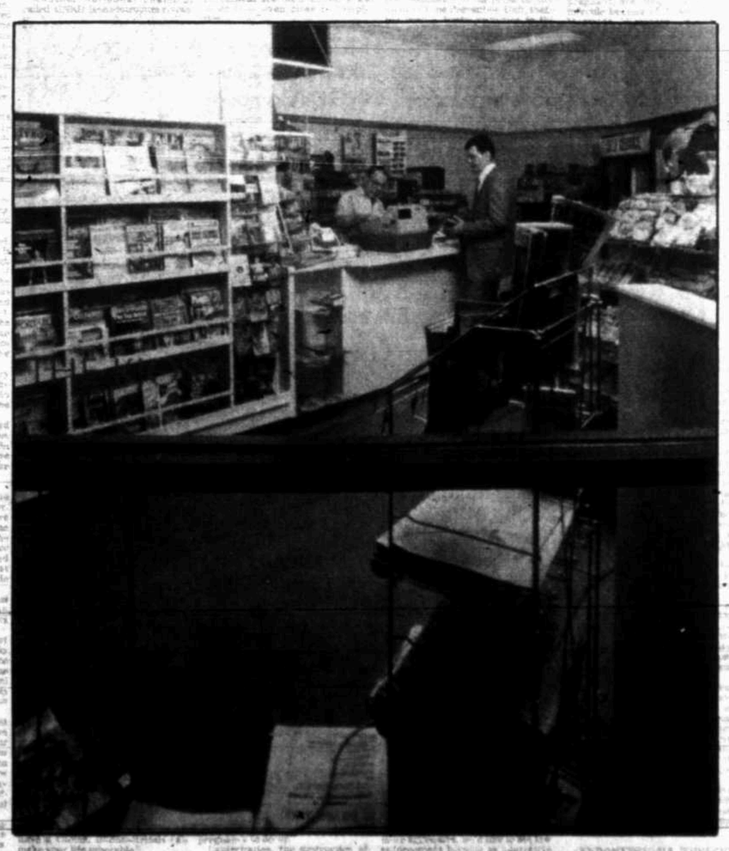
Food is a big item at The Kiosk, which resembles a small grocery store. Miller even sells popcorn from a cart in front of the newsstand.

The Wall Street Journal is also a big seller at J.D. Bradley Concessions in the Wilco Building, according to manager Jean Lacey. Her newsstand is located right around the corner from a stock brokerage firm.

Most of the rest of her popular items are less serious reading.

"People (magazine) is pretty popular," she noted. "And just about any ladies magazine."

Please see NEWSSTANDS, Page 2E



Larry Miller of The Kiosk, a newsstand in the new ClayDesta National Bank building, waits on a customer in the early morning hours.

NEWSSTANDS

Not many of her customers are people who just stroll in from the street, she said. "Mostly, it's people here in the building."

At least a couple of Midland newsstands don't depend on regulars, however.

The clientele of News and Sundries in the Hilton Hotel "changes every day," said cashier Suzanne Crites, because the people staying in the Hotel come and go.

The Wall Street Journal and the Reporter-Telegram are the most popular newspapers in the Hilton, she said, while the Avalanche-Journal was also her worst seller.

News and Sundries doesn't carry either the Odessa American or the San Angelo Standard-Times, although Ms. Crites said she does occasionally get requests for the Standard-Times.

Most of the newsstand's customers don't seem to be heavy readers, she said. "We don't have a lot of people with a lot of time," said Ms. Crites.

Some other popular items sold by the newsstand include those necessities of business people on the road, toothpaste, candy bars and Rolaids, said Ms. Crites.

The newsstand in the High Sky Restaurant at Midland Regional Airport also caters to travelers. Assistant manager Wilma Kitgen said there are a few regular customers, but "it's mostly people passing through."

The Wall Street Journal is also one of the most popular publications.

"We sell a lot of Wall Street Journals to businessmen and businesswomen," Ms. Kitgen said. The Morning News and Reporter-Telegram are also popular.

Male travelers most often buy Time, Newsweek and sports magazines, while women are more likely to buy Cosmopolitan, Vogue, Harper's Bazaar, Town and Country and Ultra, she said. Both sexes are about equally likely to purchase People or Us magazines.

As for all those little trinkets airport shops everywhere are noted for, Texas souvenirs are popular with out-of-state visitors. Texans are mainly interested in regular gift items, she said.

Hot tubs may aggravate conditions

From Staff Reports

Pregnant women and people with heart conditions, diabetes or high blood pressure are advised to obtain their doctors' approval before getting into a hot tub, spa or whirlpool bathtub.

The Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau said although these devices can provide many benefits including relief from arthritis and muscle spasm pain, they can be health hazards for people with the previously mentioned conditions. David L. Weiner, executive director of the Bureau, said careful monitoring of water temperature is the critical factor.

"Even if they obtain their doctors' approval, these people should make sure the water temperature never rises above 100 degrees," said Weiner. "This is particularly important for pregnant women because some studies show that water hotter than 102 degrees can cause fetal damage during the first three months of pregnancy."

Weiner also recommended the following safety procedures for anyone using a hot tub, spa or whirlpool bathtub:

— Never let the water temperature exceed 104-F. for healthy adults or 98-F. for children under 5 years old.

— Women and young girls or anyone with long hair should pin it up. Drownings have reportedly been caused by long hair being caught in the tub's suction devices, pulling the victim under the water.

— Consult a doctor before bathing with an open wound or acute swelling caused by a sprain.

— Always supervise children in one of these vessels.

— Never use a hot tub while under the influence of alcohol or drugs that cause drowsiness.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Mark your calendars now, ladies, for Nov. 15. That's the date the Midland Panhellenic Association has set for its second Sorority Sampler. Although that sounds light-years away right now, it will be here before we know it.

After the tremendous response to last year's giant holiday bazaar, the 16 sorority alumnae groups comprising the association have voted to make it an annual event. It will be held this year at the American Legion Hall on Air Park Road, where there will be ample parking. General chairman Ellen (Mrs. W. Bruce) Robinson emphasizes that invitations are not being mailed and that everyone is welcome.

Although only a partial list follows, it will give readers some idea of the variety of items available. There will be personalized Christmas ornaments, flower bulbs, gift wrap, stuffed animals, woven items, packets of recipe cards and many good things to eat, including jellies, bean soup mix, pecans, cheese balls, frozen lasagna, homemade pies and other baked goods. There also will be booths where arrangements may be made for visits and letters from Santa.

Proceeds from the event will benefit both local and national philanthropies, with each group designating the recipient(s) of its proceeds.

OUR FOND FAREWELLS go with Carolyn and Bob Pace and their sons Stephen, Daniel and Jonathon, who moved to Houston this past week.

Active in Boy Scouting and the First United Methodist Church, the family will be greatly missed, but we look forward to seeing them back in Midland from time to time as Bob's mother Evie (Mrs. Coy) Pace resides here. Bob has assumed a new position with NL Industries.

SHIRLEY IRELAND joined a California touring group bound for Hawaii recently. Staying on Waikiki Beach in Honolulu, she enjoyed many of the tourist attractions of the area and has returned with a renewed interest in the history, culture and current industries of the islands after her week's visit there.

Highlights of her trip included a tour of the Polynesian Cultural Center, a Hawaiian luau, a land tour of the island of Oahu and a visit to the impressive Arizona Memorial at Pearl Harbor. She also enjoyed a day on the neighboring island of Maui, only a 20-minute plane ride away, which was highlighted by a visit to a 10,000-foot extinct volcano.

While Shirley was there, more than 60 U.S. Navy ships, including the carrier USS Enterprise, were docked in Hearl Harbor at one time for refueling. The news reports stated that "not since Pearl Harbor 1941 have so many ships been gathered." That remark made the sightseers, natives and ships' crews alike all a little nervous.

A West Texas native, Shirley was intrigued to be in a spot where tourism is the No. 1 industry and a whole way of life. She observed that most of the tourists seem to come from Texas, California and Japan, and the various dialects and languages were a unique mixture of sounds.

Shirley's trip coincided with Hawaii's celebration of its 25th anniversary as the 50th state.

TWO OF THE TEN Midland girls attending Heart O' The Hills Camp at Hunt during the first session were elected to office. They are Nancy Sumner, daughter of Betty and Bill Sumner, who was chosen chieftain of the Pawnee Tribe, and Ashley Bunnell, daughter of Charlene and Doug Bunnell, who was named sophomore chief of the Pawnees.

Also attending from here were Hannah Boyd, daughter of Nancy and C.E. Boyd; the Bunnell's older daughter Allyson; Suni Cox, daughter of Jana Cox; Carol Kidwell, daughter of Judy and Cody Kidwell; Emily Kleine, daughter of Ann and Bill Kleine; Meredith Secker, daughter of Sue and Dan Secker; Taffy Staley, daughter of Sandra and George Staley, and Chris Tom, daughter of Kay and James Tom. They were joined by Fifi Nichols, daughter of former Midlanders Jean and Larry Nichols of Odessa.

Serving as counselors from Midland this year are Texas Tech student Angie Coale, daughter of Frances and Gerald Coale, and Elizabeth Yeager, daughter of Sharon and Goss Yeager and a student at TCU.

EIGHT-YEAR-OLD Joshua Phillips, son of Carol and Steven Phillips and grandson of Enid and John Phillips, is currently enjoying the many attractions of Southern California while a guest of his maternal grandparents Frances and Joe Calderazzo in Laguna Hills. As though visits to Disneyland, Knotts Berry Farm, Magic Mountain, Sea World, the San Diego Zoo and the beach are not enough, he may even get to attend some of the Olympic events.

Joshua has traveled by airplane before, but this was his first trip all by himself. He changed planes in Denver with no problem (and even handled an unexected layover with aplomb), but was disappointed that the five-hour flight didn't include a meal. He told his granddad upon arrival that he "could eat a million hamburgers."

Joshua is alert to politics and was quick to identify the picture of Walter Mondale taken with his California grandmother as "the man who wants to be president."

Marilyn McKnight Harrison is social columnist for the Reporter-Telegram.

Midlander to attend convention

Irmalee Ingraham, CPS, past president of Permian Chapter, Professional Secretaries International, will be the chapter's official delegate to the 39th annual PSI convention July 22-28 in Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Keynote speaker will be The Honorable Flora MacDonald, Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament for Kingston and the Islands, Ontario. A former secretary, Ms. MacDonald was the first woman graduate of the year-long course in Canadian and International Studies at the National Defense College in Kingston.

Professional Secretaries International has over 40,000 members in the United States, Canada, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and in affiliate chapters in Australia, Asia, Europe, Central and South America, the West Indies and South Africa.

Library to present magic show

Midland County Public Library Children's Department will present Jim McPherson in a magic show, to celebrate the end of its summer reading program, "Magical Mysteries." The show will be at 10:30 a.m. July 27. The only admission charge will be completion of the summer reading program. Because the reading program will continue throughout July, children still have an opportunity to participate.

After a life-long fascination with magic, McPherson began to study the art in 1979, his senior year in college, and has been working with magic ever since. He is a member of the International Brotherhood of Magicians, the Society of American Magicians, and The West Texas Wizards local magic club.

McPherson, who has lived in Midland about one year and who hopes to eventually own his own magic shop, is an industrial arts teacher at Lee Freshman High School.

Jogging may be hard on pets

NEW YORK (AP) — Joggers who take their dogs along for the exercise may subject the pets to the same running hazards as humans, some veterinarians say.

Dogs, like humans, are susceptible to pulled or inflamed muscles simply because they are out of shape. A sedentary dog can't be expected to go on a long run without working up to it.

Prenatal Clinic receives donation

A fetal doppler with amplifier was presented to Midland City/County Health Department Thursday by the Junior League of Midland.

Mrs. Walter Hammons, chairman of the perinatal clinic, presented the doppler to Dr. James M. Humphreys Jr., acting director of the Prenatal Clinic.

This instrument monitors the well-being of the unborn child, but also reassures the expectant mother during prenatal care by allowing her to hear her baby's heartbeat.

The Perinatal Clinic, a service of Junior League of Midland Inc., provides educational and supportive programs for its patients.

Midland obstetricians and a midwife volunteer their time at the clinic on a rotating scheduled.

For information concerning eligibility for the Prenatal Clinic contact the Midland City/County Health Department.

NEED THE RESOURCES OF AN INTERIOR DESIGNER
BUT NOT THE DESIGNER?

Finally! There is a showroom in the Permian Basin to make available to the public those resources. It is called The Midland Market.

No more driving from store to store in the futile search for those special items that will give you the personal look you are striving for.

The showroom is filled with many fabric and carpet samples, wallpaper books and furniture and accessory catalogs from which to special order. All price ranges are represented.

Have you seen an ad in a popular magazine for a certain fabric or a wonderful piece of furniture, but didn't know where to find it? The staff at The Midland Market is ready to search it out for you.

Schumacher-Waverly, Westgate, Stroheim & Romann and David & Dash are but a few of the names you will recognize. Most furniture lines are also available.

To make the concept even more attractive, a 20% discount is offered on most items.

Whether you are doing a single sofa, a room or a whole house, let The Midland Market make your decorating job easier.

ERSKINE-BOLES

Mrs. Robert Orman Boles

DALLAS — Erin Elizabeth Erskine of Dallas became the bride of Robert Orman Boles, also of Dallas, at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at Highland Park Presbyterian Church in Dallas. Officiating clergymen were the Rev. Dr. Tom Tyndall and the Rev. Jim Smith.

Vacuum cleaners have undergone sweeping changes

BLOOMINGTON, Ill. (AP) — When a housewife vacuumed her rugs in turn-of-the-century London, the whole neighborhood knew it.

The vacuum cleaner, an enormous horse-drawn affair, pulled up to the house and sucked the dirt out by means of an 80-foot hose. The contraption was so noisy that it nearly got its owner, Sir Hubert Booth, arrested for creating a public nuisance.

Ever since people started tracking dirt onto carpets, inventors such as Booth have been looking for ways to remove it, according to researchers at the Eureka Co. here, which celebrates its 75th anniversary this year.

The big question for inventors was whether to get rid of dirt by blowing it away or by sucking it up. The Whirlwind, a "sweeping machine" using suction and powered by a hand-operated fan, had been patented in 1859, but was unsuccessful. Its problem was that it spat out almost as much dirt as it inhaled.

Booth used an original, if unsanitary, method to prove that suction was superior to blowing. He lay on a grimy carpet face down, put a handkerchief over his mouth, and sucked hard. His handkerchief trapped the dirt, showing him that when used with a filter, suction worked.

Some of the first vacuum cleaners were more ingenious than effective, the research indicates. One model required two persons to operate it — one to pump a bellows with foot pedals and another to apply the nozzle to the floor. Another, the "Water Witch," sold for the then princely sum of $75 and had to be placed in the kitchen sink or bathtub before operation.

Electricity, not water, brought success to the new product. By 1913, the Eureka Vacuum Cleaner Co. was manufacturing a model with five adaptations for the different types of household electric currents then in use, as well as attachments for bare floors, walls, upholstered furniture and crevices.

Manufacturers were quick to point out the advantages of the new electric machines to over-burdened American housewives. "It eats up the dirt!" heralded one 1909 ad. "The terrors of the old primitive way of housecleaning — of ripping up and tearing down, of endless confusion and toil and drudgery — all are now abolished."

Electricity made the vacuum cleaner a viable product.

Home economics award given

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — In an award program to recognize and promote excellent and creativity in the teaching of home economics, Jeannette C. Simpson was named 1984 National Home Economics Teacher of the year.

Ms. Simpson, of St. Petersburg, Fla., was honored by the American Home Economics Association at its 75th annual meeting here. She created and implements a program to foster self-worth, trust and respect in students with severe emotional problems, while teaching them reading, writing and math skills and training them for jobs in the foodservice industry.

Book: Decorating needn't be costly

Hearst Feature Service

Decorating doesn't have to mean throwing out all the furniture, knocking down walls or being in debt forever. The high cost of supplies and labor has inspired many people to turn to do-it-yourself books and manuals on decorating.

With this in mind, author Karen Fisher has compiled a list of tips that range from choosing colors to using shoji (classic Japanese window covering) screens in her 174-page book "Quick Fix Decorating Ideas."

To make things easier for do-it-yourselfers, Fisher has divided the book into six different categories, with projects listed according to price ranges: under $25, under $50, under $100, under $200, under $300 and under $500. Most of these projects can be handled by the most inexperienced decorator, although some may require help from a professional electrician or a carpenter.

Fisher has been decorating editor for "Cosmopolitan," "Esquire" and "American Home" magazines. With that knowledge under her belt, she knows to open her first chapter with one of the most underrated of decorating jobs: painting.

SHE ONCE asked a top New York designer how he would decorate his own house if he only had $250 to spend. He answered, "I'd invest the whole amount on a paint job. Even if the furniture was old, nobody would notice my furniture if the walls were a beautiful color."

When professional decorators approach a job, their priority is to make changes that show, Fisher said. Changes are most noticeable in walls, floors and windows because they give a room its style. When decorating, Fisher believes these should be the top priorities.

For walls, nothing beats a good paint job. She suggests using a color you like and that flatters you.

"The best starting point might be in checking out your wardrobe," she says in her book. "If you consistently choose pastels or neutrals, then these are probably the colors you would be most happy living with."

Fisher suggests not worrying about breaking rules. However, she adds the cliche about using light colors to make a room look larger and dark colors to make a room look smaller has a grain of truth in it.

"DARK COLORS create instant warmth and drama," she said. "Your choice of color should depend less on rules than on your own emotional responses. Some people need to live wtih sunny colors in order to be happy; if you love bright yellow, you don't have to confine it to your kitchen. If you like it, even lavender can come out of a bedroom and into the living room."

Fisher offers some advice on color schemes:

— The easiest color scheme starts with one dominant color plus white. Any color accented by white has a crisp, fresh look.

— The safest color scheme calls for neutrals — beige and gray, primarily. Beige looks good with an enormous range of accessory colors, is pleasing to the eye over a period of time and can be given a very high-fashion look. Gray is an ideal background for bright accent colors such as red, yellow and white.

— The prettiest color schemes are pastels. Colors such as sky blue and melon are a natural background for floral-patterned chintz or striped cotton slipcovers and curtains. Anything that's soft, pretty and decorative will look right in a pastel room.

— The most dramatic color schemes involve very dark colors such as chocolate brown, burgundy and hunter green. Consider dark colors if walls are in poor condition. Dark paint can hide imperfections. Dark colors also serve as a good background for artwork and create a cozy, inviting atmosphere.

— The most unexpected color scheme involves red. Red becomes a neutral when it's on the wall and looks good with almost any print or upholstery color. In modern rooms, it's beautiful with toast or deep beige upholstery and fabrics. In traditional rooms, look for stripes and floral patterns in cotton, silk or brocade.

— An always-right choice is white. It can give a room a pristine, modern look that's restful to live with. Pure white will set off the colors of upholstery, rugs and artwork. For a bit of extra style, consider painting the ceilings a pale aqua or sky blue.

FLOORS OFTEN are the most overlooked major element in a home. Carpeting is still the easiest way to give a home a finished look, especially when it matches the walls.

Fisher suggests gray industrial carpeting. Although industrial carpeting is expensive, she points out that it wears well, looks sophisticated and is an excellent foil to white walls, leather furniture and glass coffee tables.

She also suggests rugs. Traditional rugs seem to fit in with just about any style of furniture. And in ultra-modern rooms, they soften the hard edges. Two of the most stylish looks — old fashioned and dhurries — are the least expensive.

If carpeting is out of the question, then there is always painting. One can also stencil floors in myriad patterns and colors. Linoleum tiles can be cut by hand and are easily installed. One can get creative with tiles and create bold patterns by using a border or mixing two or three colors.

WINDOW TREATMENTS are the finishing touch in a decorating scheme, according to Fisher. The choice of window coverings depends on whether one is working with high apartment windows or traditional casement windows.

For high-rise apartments, the ideal solution is vertical blinds. They allow light to come in, but offer complete privacy. If they are hung ceiling to floor in front of windows, they will cover radiators and air conditioner units and allow an inconspicuous place for stereo speakers. Vertical shades come in a palette of colors.

Lifestyle policies

The following are policies for publication of stories and announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only.

The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Interior MOTIVES
by Ray and Austella Berry

Black, white, gray, brown and tones of the latter two, known as "griege" and beige, are generally considered to be neautrals rather than colors. In practice, they are the "no-color" colors that are used with other colors to modify or contrast them. They are far from being negative. When working with color, one finds that all colors are influenced by the company they keep. This is particularly true of the tints, shades and so-called neutral colors. A juxtaposition of two muted colors, such as grey and a tan, will bring out latent greens, lavenders, and pinks that were not seen before.

DEAR ABBY

Rape shouldn't change sexual orientation

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A 19-year-old male homosexual molested and forcibly raped my 11-year-old grandson recently. There has been a preliminary hearing on this, and the judge who presided determined that a crime had been committed and a trial is now pending.

My grandson is now wondering if this criminal act committed upon his person has made him a homosexual. — CONCERNED GRANDFATHER

DEAR CONCERNED: If your grandson was a heterosexual before he was raped, he is still a heterosexual. Example: If a lesbian is raped by a heterosexual man, it will not cause her to become heterosexual — she will remain a lesbian.

It should relieve your grandson's mind, and yours, to know that this singular unfortunate experience has NOT made him a homosexual.

DEAR ABBY: The letters from all the "forgotten mothers" following Mother's Day cause me to comment on the other side of the coin. For years I remembered my mother on Mother's Day, dreading her reaction to my gift because I knew I could never please her.

Let me share a few memories from the past: There was the time I spotted a rhinestone cross in a display case, so I bought it for Mother's Day. It wasn't exactly the Hope Diamond, but I thought it would be a fine gift. When Mother opened the package she said, "My God, when are you going to develop some taste?" Several months later she asked if I would mind if she gave the cross to her beauty operator for Christmas.

There was the evening of her birthday when I delivered her birthday gift. I had called her earlier to wish her a happy birthday, but she chastised me for not bringing the gift earlier since her birthday started in the morning and was almost over by the time I arrived.

Now we come to this Mother's Day. On several occasions she had said she wanted a nice set of breakfast dishes because her pottery set was chipped. I selected a lovely breakfast set. A month later it was still unopened. I'm sure somebody's daughter is going to receive it at a bridal shower.

Last week was Mother's birthday, so after pondering about what to buy her, I finally asked her what she would enjoy. Her reply, "You can't afford anything I want." She laughed when she said it, but it hurt me because I think she really meant it.

So, sing me no sad songs, mothers. Children are not arbitrarily thoughtless. Sometimes we just give up. — NO NAME IN TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: As a mother of nine and grandmother of 10, I am asking you to advertise the following information in your column: I just heard that Trailways Bus System will give a runaway teen-ager free bus transportation home from anywhere in the United States.

Isn't that wonderful? I know that a lot of teen-agers read Dear Abby, so please print this. — GRACE Z., ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

DEAR GRACE: Thanks for writing; it was news to me. I checked it out and was informed by a spokesman for Trailways Bus System that this is true. However, there are some rules:

The runaway must go to the police department and fill out a form stating that he or she is in fact a runaway who wants to return home. (This will discourage kids who are not runaways but want a free ride home for a lark or to visit friends.)

Someone from the police department then escorts the runaway to the Trailways bus terminal and gives the signed form to the bus driver. Hooray for Trailways.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about drugs, sex and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WIT'S END

Children reach out and touch mom too often

By ERMA BOMBECK

It was one of those days that a mother dreams about.

It was Saturday and I could sleep until I got a headache. The kids were grown and on their own. Nothing in the house leaked oil, dripped water, smoked when you plugged it in, made a funny sound or had a light burnt out. There were no deadlines and the big insurance premium was paid. I didn't have a thing in the world to worry about.

Then the phone rang.

It was one of my kids telling me she was driving to Vegas and not to worry. NOT TO WORRY! Now I had to devote at least five hours to wondering if the car would break down, or if some crazy would cross the center line and run her off the road.

Suppose someone ripped off her credit cards and money. Five hours out of a perfectly good day sitting around waiting for a police officer to call and say, "I have someone here who wants to talk to you. Speak up. She's in traction." Five hours of unrelenting fear.

Would she reach over to change stations on the radio and hit a horse that ran out in front of the car? Would she drop into a roadside place for a hamburger and be dragged out on the road by a motorcycle gang who did wheelies around her? Would a sheriff running for governor pick her up for alleged speeding and accuse her of a crime for which he needed a suspect because he needed national press coverage?

When the phone rang again, it was another child who informed me he was going fishing in a rubber raft in the ocean.

"I hope you're not considering going this weekend," I said. "I'm already half crazy worrying about your sister driving to Vegas which is going to take at least five hours of misery and mental anguish."

"We're only going to be out for about four hours."

I was going to wash my hair, but what's a mother to do? I canceled that in case a Russian submarine surfaced just under their boat and dumped them into the Pacific. Or what if they caught a fish so gigantic it pulled their boat out into the open sea?

Of course, there was always a strong possibility of Jaws III coming to the beach for the summer, or a tidal wave they didn't hear about because a rock station didn't carry the news.

By my calculations, I had 10 or 12 hours of worry ahead of me when I heard from my third child. "Don't tell me," I said. "You're climbing Mt. Everest in tennis shoes just to punish your mother."

"Actually," he said, "I'm staying home this weekend."

I couldn't believe his insensitivity. Now I had to worry that he had no friends or social life. Unable to relate to anyone, he would become more withdrawn and finally trust no one. Eventually, he would pull his blinds and eat out of a saucepan on the stove.

I would never go to his wedding where everyone said, "She looks too young to be his mother." I would never dangle grandchildren on my knee where people would say, "She looks too young to have grandchildren."

What are they trying to do to me?

AT WORK

Search for new job requires careful efforts

By ADELE SCHEELE, PH.D.

You've just graduated, you're dying on the vine, you've been fired. It all comes down to the same thing: You need a job. And to get one, you've got to start looking.

The hardest part of the search is getting past the wish that a job will come to you, and you'll be "discovered." Life never happens that way; we just act as if it does.

So we mail out hundreds of resumes to companies listed in the yellow pages like trying to pin the tail on the donkey. There are better ways than stabbing in the dark, no matter whether this search is for your first or your fifth job.

To help rip those blindfolds off as well as start the adrenalin pumping despite summer's languid pace, here's an action plan to follow over the next few weeks.

Although resumes hardly ever get you the job in themselves, to be credible you have to have one that lists your experience and education. Writing down your background on a fact sheet is not great fun but, like medicine, it's good for you. Don't despair when you're stuck on your fourth draft. Get help from a sympathetic and competent friend who may have a resume to use as a model. Or use a resume book, or even a resume service.

Start by writing every job that you've ever had on a separate page. List duties or tasks that you consider the most significant. Be specific and descriptive, for instance: responsible for managing three major accounts, selected furniture for six office buildings on a million dollar budget, prepared daily reports, wrote promotional releases, responsible for budget of $750,000, etc. When you can, report how much business you generated or savings earned. Don't worry about sounding conceited, just don't lie.

Find an appropriate format for the industry you're interested in. For example, if you're applying to an educational institution, cite education first, then work experience along with awards and publications, using chronological order (from beginning to present). But if you're interested in business, use just the opposite format; begin with current experience, and cite your education briefly (without grade point average).

Resumes are not insurance applications, so don't include job objective, salary, marital or health status, height, weight, or hobbies. Do check for spelling or typing. Don't fall into the trap of making your resume "stand out" with extravagant colors or special typeface or paper unless you're applying for a job in advertising. Make it clear and concise on one page unless you've had unusually lengthy or significant job history. If you need more room, minimize the space between dates and job descriptions. Edit to be brief yet make sense.

A perfect resume is not enough. You still have to capture a prospective employer's attention with a cover letter.

Don't fall into the "pretend you're an intellectual" trap and write overly proper, phony language: "Enclosed herein you will find a resume that presents the career history and background in which I utilize my unique talents." Be straight and strategic in explaining what your past experiences means to this potential employer.

Don't apologize for your lack of education or experience, last title, or salary, but state what you have learned that can be applied to the next situation. "Volunteering in local political campaigns has jettisoned me into public relations. Therefore, in addition to my resume, I'm enclosing campaign literature that I wrote for our local congressman and the media responses it generated."

Then comment on why you are attracted to this company. If, for example, you are attracted to it because of its employee development policy, it is fair to say that promotion from within is critical to you, who have had to change companies to advance and handle more responsibility. Then close by promising that you will call them within the week. And call you must until you get through.

Mulch benefits gardens in many ways

Hearst Feature Service

Mulching a garden or foundation planting has many benefits, especially now that the searing, drying sun of summer is about to settle in. Choosing the right mulch will increase the benefits to the gardener and the garden.

Virtually any mulch will keep the soil cool and weeds reduced. Fewer weeds save the gardener time. Cooler soil means there's less watering needed and a better growing environment for the plant.

Research at the Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center in Wooster is pointing to another benefit: A reduction in common soilborne diseases. Dow Garden's entomologist Dan Herms is following the research and noted these preliminary findings:

A mulch of composed hardwood bark inhibits diseases such as phytophtora, pythium and rhizoctonia. Composed pine bark mulch inhibits phytophtora and pythium. These diseases can kill a plant by promoting root rot or cankers at the base of the plant. A canker can kill a plant by girdling the base of the trunk, thus killing tissues to the point where there's not enough tissue to carry the flow of nutrients and water up and down the stem.

Herms stressed that the benefits of either hardwood or pine mulch are found in mulch made from the bark of the tree, not from chips ground from the tree proper. He noted that fresh bark mulch does not have disease-inhibiting benefits. Mulch is easily composed by adding ammonium nitrate and phosphate to a bark pile set aside specifically for this.

Another popular — and free — mulch is grass clippings. As harmless as clippings seem, there are a few points to keep in mind. Don't use grass clippings as a mulch if a weed killer has been used within the previous four weeks. There may be enough residue in the blade that when gathered with other blades can be lethal to plants.

The use of grass clippings almost guarantees the proliferation of weeds and young grass plants. Herms noted that weed and grass seed is frequently gathered when grass is cut and collected.

Camp aids boys with learning disabilities

SWAN LAKE, N.Y. (AP) — For part of the time, they're just kids at camp, going on hikes and learning to use maps and compasses and taking part in sports.

But every day the youngsters attend two or three formal classes designed to improve academic skills in a special summer program Camp Mogen Avraham-Chaim Heller here has developed for children with learning disabilities. The camp is sponsored by the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies.

Some 30 boys of average and above intelligence with difficulties in reading, writing and coordination are taking part in the new program, which gives them the camp experience while making learning "relaxed but exciting," according to David Lazerson, a staff member.

Outdoor furniture prices rise

The Associated Press

If you have been shopping for outdoor furniture and equipment this spring, you may have noticed that prices are higher than you remember from years ago.

Where once you might have expected to pay under $500 for a sturdy table and four dining chairs, today the same quality could cost at least that or more, according to sources in the outdoor furniture field.

This helps explain why outdoor and casual furniture sales, estimated at about $500 million last year, have been going up while the actual number of units sold has remained relatively stable.

"We are selling more units in the upper end, but not necessarily more units overall," Jonathan Lamp, president of Medallion Furniture, told a home furnishings trade publication recently.

In partial compensation for these higher prices, technology appears to be providing improved performance from furniture and other equipment for outdoor living.

For example, a manufacturer of children's play gyms said the development of a new non-toxic pressure treatement for wood had made its possible for the company to offer a 15-year warranty against rotting and insect damage.

Electrostatically-applied powder coatings are being used to make aluminum furniture durable over a longer time period and new synthetic fabrics that resist fading and destruction through moisture are available.

Several fabrics are being used for cushions. Among them are "Textilene," a PVS-coated polyester that is unusually weather-resistant and "Dralon," an imported synthetic that feels like cotton but offers the longevity of synthetics. In addition, strapping for outdoor furniture often has ultra-violet ray inhibitors to stand up longer under the punishment of sunlight.

Besides the traditional aluminum, wrought iron and redwood-type furniture that has been a staple, you will find on the market furniture of newer materials such as PVC and injection-molded pieces of synthetic resins.

Families shopping for outdoor play gyms for children will find a more varied selection. Keeping up with the times, some manufacturers have appropriated space-age themes. For example, one is offering, under license, the "Scout Walker Command Tower." The tower has a battery-operated, electronic "command console" that produces four sounds of the future — for a more realistic fantasy, apparently.

When shopping for a gym set, select one that is reinforced with heavy-duty metal braces at the corners to maintain rigidity. Braces should be constructed in such a way that a child's fingers cannot get caught. Climbing and swinging should be well separated to prevent children from bumping into one another, according to Murry Froikin, an executive for Creative Playthings.

In addition to play equipment, another outdoor "must" is a barbecue grill. Besides the simple, inexpensive grills that are adequate for those whose cooking will be restricted to steaks, hamburgers and hot dogs, there are large kettle cookers which can be used for roasting, baking and even smoking food.

In addition, gas and electric units offer the convenience of fast heating and freedom from having to buy and tote charcoal.

With prices up for outdoor needs, it has become more important to take care of the pieces so they last a long time.

Manufacturers of the more expensive furniture generally provide use and care instructions. They often advise cleaning frames with a mild soap or detergent on a regular basis to avoid dirt build-up.

Agriculture department offers advice on eliminating roaches

WASHINGTON (AP) — That late-night trip to the refrigerator can be a shock if turning on the light reveals a sudden scurrying of cockroaches, and it can happen in any home.

They won't go away by themselves, but most people would like to move the pests out without turning their home into a toxic waste site in the process.

To help, the Department of Agriculture has put together a booklet entitled "Cockroaches — How to Control Them," which discusses the nasty creature's habits and means of avoiding or eliminating them.

The booklet sells for $2.25 and can be purchased from the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 184M, Pueblo, Colo., 81009.

While roaches can enter any home, the booklet points out that one way to discourage them is to leave them nothing to eat.

The pests love leftover food crumbs, unsealed garbage bags, unwashed dishes left in the sink, virtually any food that can be found. Don't leave these food sources out for roaches to find, make sure all food has been properly stored, dishes cleaned, crumbs removed and garbage sealed before you retire to bed.

Locking roaches out can be effective too.

Seal cracks in walls and floorboards, and especially around water pipes, with putty or plastic wood.

And always check for roaches hiding in grocery bags, beverage cartons and other food-related containers you bring into the house.

An adventure in Midland

Text by Julie Hillrichs

Injuries to muscles and joints, problems in the workplace and of course fatigue, all are valid excuses for growing flabby and out of shape.

These events, however trivial, tend to disrupt many an exercise routine and distract one from the repetitive regimen that continued fitness demands.

Even in Midland, an underdeveloped exercise enthusiast may forget how painful the journey back to fitness actually is until they set out on a bicycle tour.

For a while, everything hurts — muscles, joints, tendons and especially the derriere.

It doesn't matter what non-cyclists believe. Cyclists don't enjoy pain. The fact is, they look forward to the pleasures of cycling and the elation that goes along with fitness.

Unfortunately, to get to the point of elation, a person must be willing to suffer through some small degree of soreness, stiffness and saddle sores.

Pain was a fitting theme recently for a one-person bicycle tour across Midland which began and ended on Andrews Highway.

It wasn't a particularly demanding tour. The terrain is flat. The westerly headwinds were gentle and believe it or not, there wasn't any dust. Nevertheless, it was a lesson in pain.

Those first few blocks pedaling west on Andrews Highway — now under construction — reinstilled memories of several long-distance routes aboard a bicycle. A person's backside turns to fire; suggesting that whoever embarks on a venture such as this, first prepare by sitting on a picket fence for several hours a day.

The dips, the ruts and the pot holes are virtually unavoidable. And the traffic ... speaks for itself.

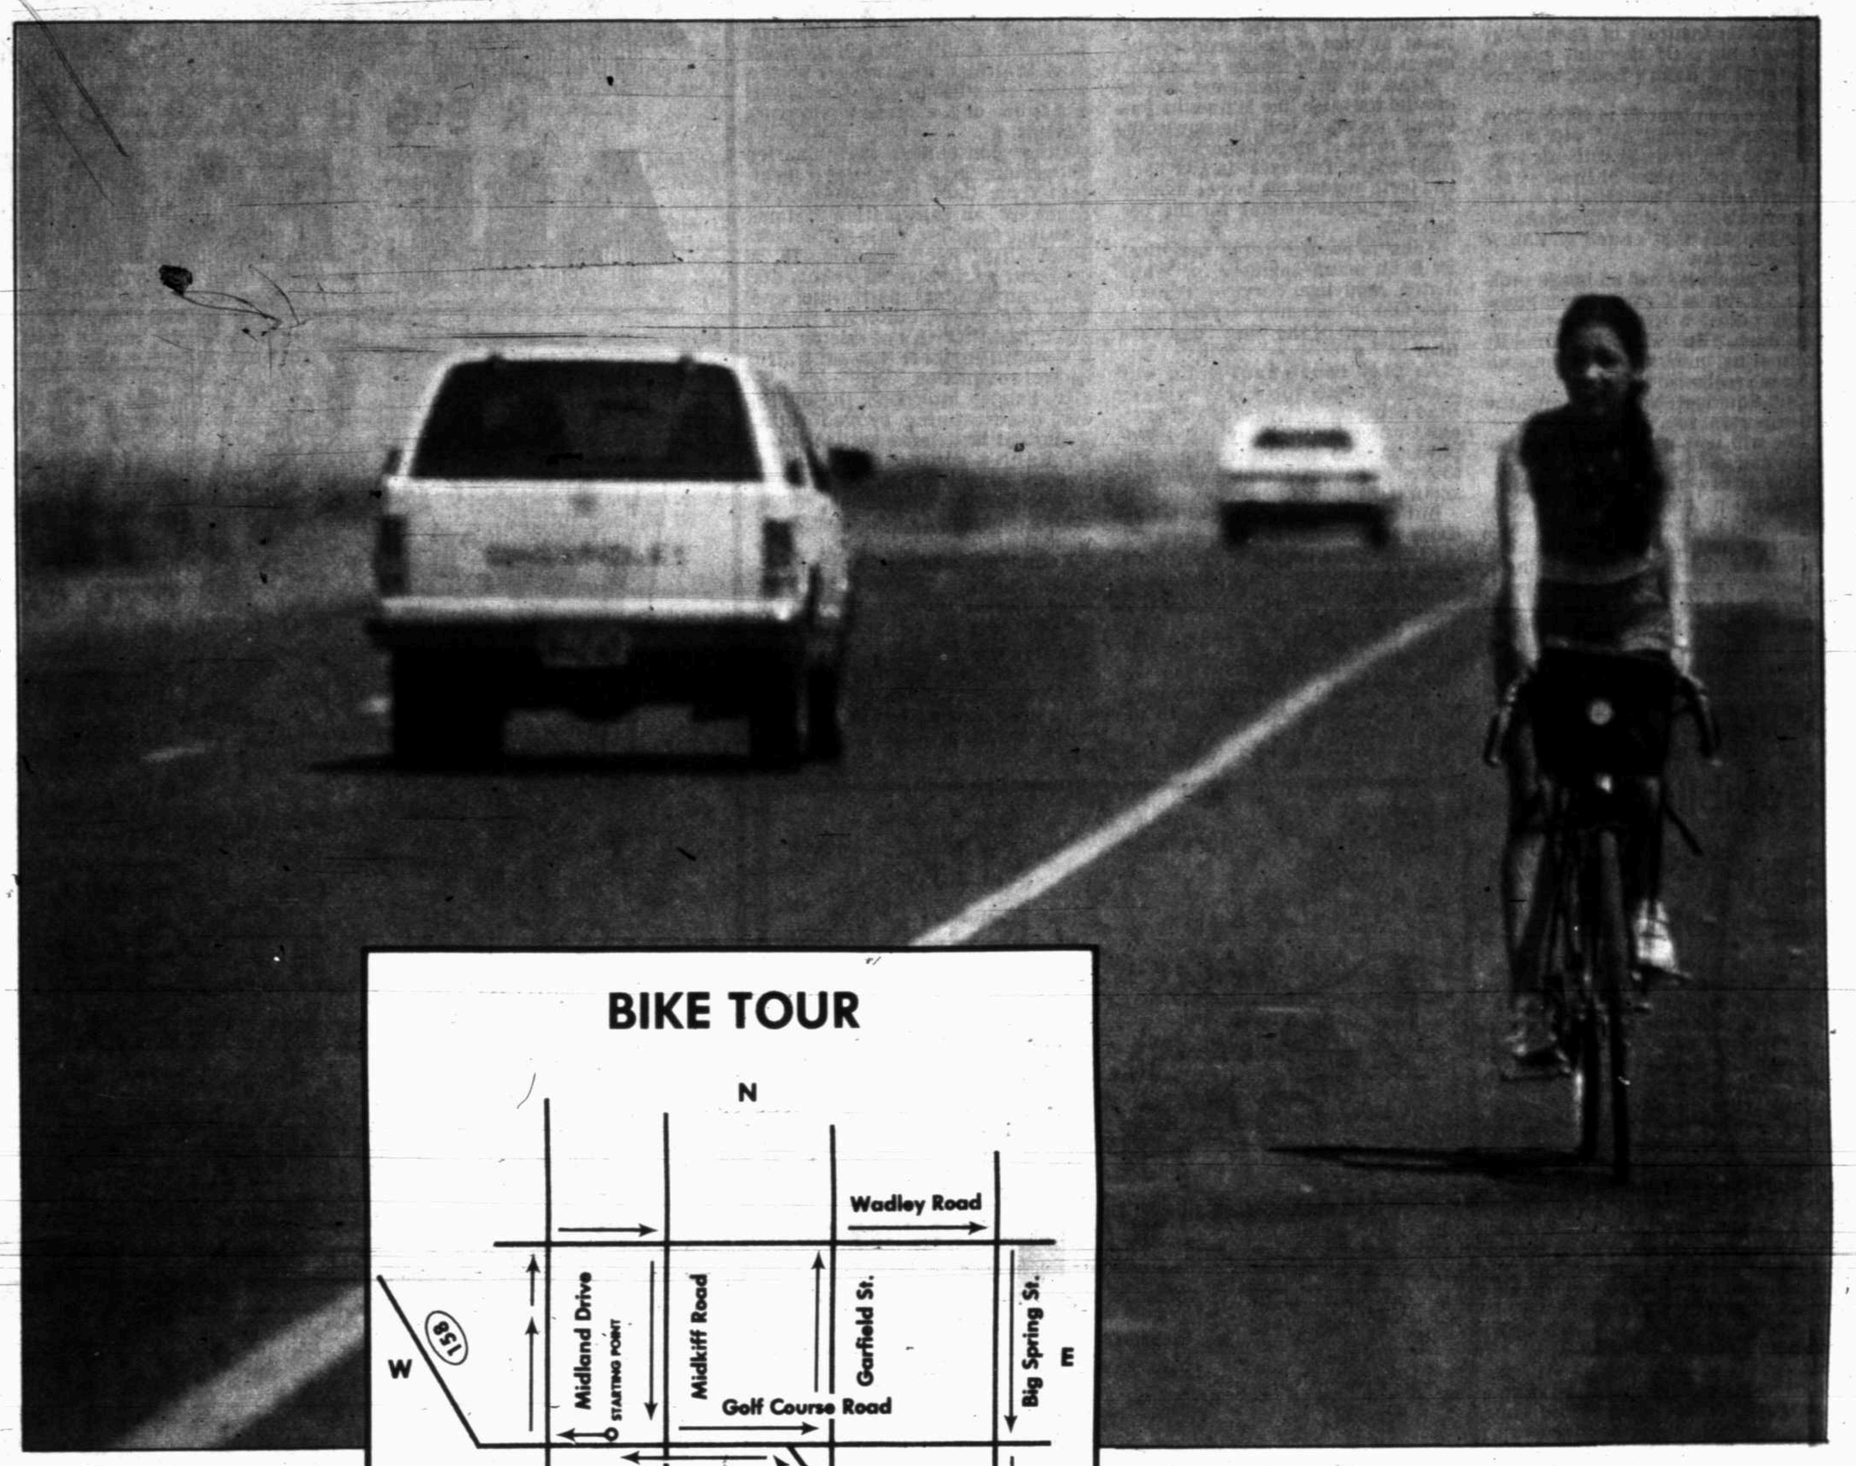
The trip north on Midland Drive to Wadley Road, however, was delightful and somewhat scenic depending on one's interpretation of the word.

The journey east to Midkiff Road, south to Golf Course Road and then east to Garfield Street might surprise even a few natives.

Trees line several streets winding through the chiefly residential area providing shade for the cyclist who dares to trek out in the blistering West Texas sun.

Shrubs and flowers also are present in almost every yard transforming this otherwise desolate environment into a mecca in the desert.

Please see TOUR, Page 3F



Laura Chaney of Midland rides against traffic posing a hazard to motorists and bike riders. Cyclists are advised to ride with traffic as far to the right side of the road as possible.

Bicycle styles: What's hot, what's not

"The lighter the better" describes recent trends in the design and manufacture of bicycle equipment and accessories, according to two Midland bicycle retailers.

Managers at Bike Masters, Midland Park Mall, and Peyton's Bikes, 600 Kent St., say manufacturers consider weight a dominant factor in bicycle design and also urge consumers to do the same when purchasing the appropriate bike.

Most top-selling bicycles today are constructed from alloid aluminum "to provide a lighter, faster, more comfortable ride especially on long distances," said Efran Gallardo, shop manager of Bike Masters.

He added that the basic philosophy of creating lighter bicycles is standard among most American and European manufacturers of touring, racing, motocross and the more recent mountain bikes.

For years United States manufacturers have followed the lead of many European designers who currently monopolize the bicycle industry, Gallardo said.

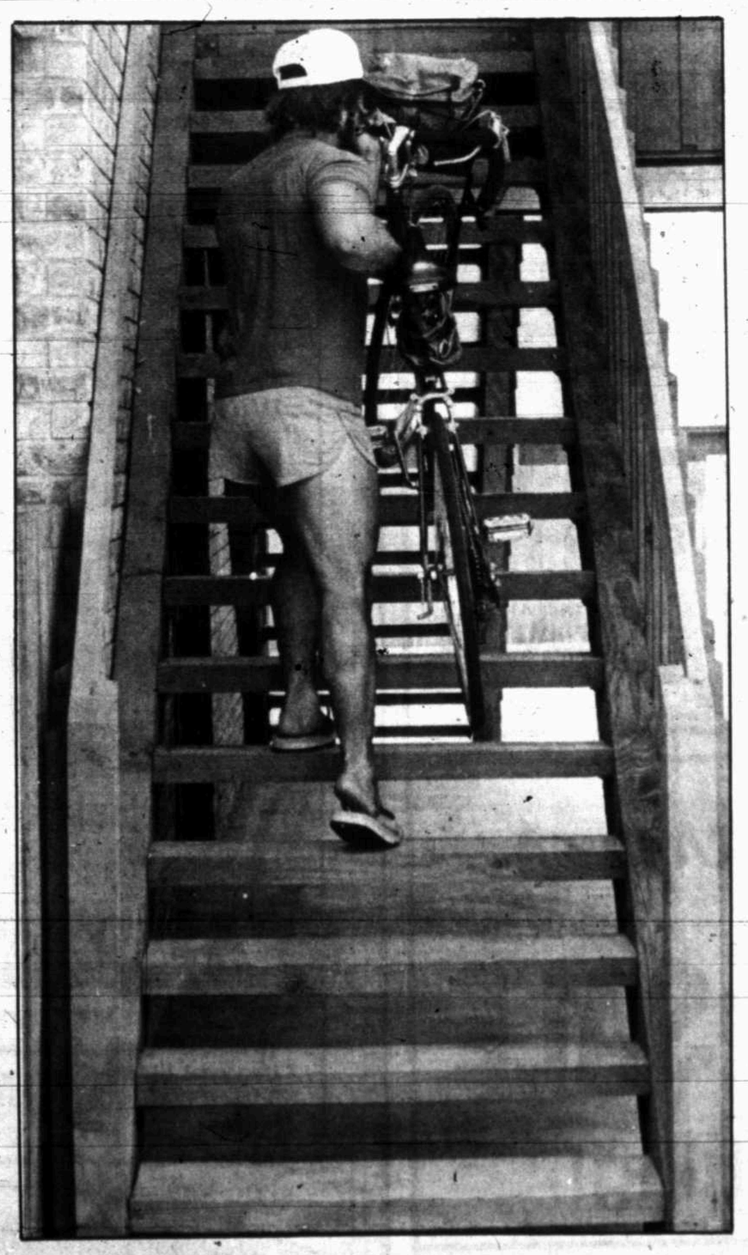
Ideal bicycle weights are about 23 pounds for racing, 18 pounds for motocross and 23 pounds for touring bikes.

Top selling bicycles today include Fuji, Puch, Raleigh, Mongoose, Moter Becane and Schwinn, according to Gallardo.

David Ham, general manager of Peyton's Bikes, said bicycle accessories and apparel also are designed with less weight in mind.

"Most bicycle apparel is produced from polypropylene which clings to the body for added comfort, absorbancy, and prevents the formation of air pockets to produce faster racing times," said Ham.

Shorts, jerseys, helmets and shoes also are available is bright colors to ensure better visibility, he added.



Lane Chaney of Midland carefully wheels his bicycle up a flight of stairs following an invigorating and refreshing ride.

Road tips

Bicycling is enjoying a resurgence in popularity among sports enthusiasts.

And as the number of cyclists on the roadways increase, so do the number of bicycle-related injuries, according to the Texas Department of Public Safety.

While the Midland Police Department reports injury statistics are considerably lower in Midland than in other areas of the state, Crime Prevention Officer Ron Benton said cyclists should be aware of and adhere to all rules pertaining to bicycle safety. He offers the following suggestions:

Maria Uryga, a student at Midland College, places books in a basket in preparation for a safe ride.

LAWS

— The bicycle is defined legally as a vehicle in Texas.

— Traffic laws apply to persons riding bicycles. Obey all traffic signs and signals.

— Bicyclists are required to ride with traffic as far to the right side of the road as possible with no more than two abreast.

— Proper equipment is required for night riding. Minimum requirements are a front lamp which is visible from at least 500 feet and a rear reflector visible to 100 feet. A rear red light extending visibility to 300 feet is recommended in addition to the rear reflector.

— Bicycles use on controlled access roadways are forbidden where such restrictions are signed.

SAFETY TIPS

— Do not attempt trips which are beyond your capabilities.

— Be sure your bicycle is the right size for you and keep it in good repair, checking loose and worn parts regularly.

Tiddlywinks has new champion

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Do not say "tiddlywinks."

Especially do not say it at the National Singles Tiddlywinks Tournament at the home of Larry Kahn in Gaithersburg, Md. The finals were Sunday, and Kahn, reigning world singles and pairs tiddlywink champion and secretary-general of the North American Tiddlywinks Association, had enough on his mind.

"The game is called winks," Kahn is quick to point out. "Tiddlywinks is sort of the official name. There is no tiddly in winks."

No joke, tiddlywinks.

"Everybody associates it with the kids' game," says Kahn, who is 30. "Nobody knows that there are a set of rules that make it a lot different from the kids' game."

For one thing, a degree from Massachusetts Institute of Technology doesn't hurt. Of the nine players gathered at Kahn's house, all were MIT graduates.

There are about 75 to 100 NATwA members. Of that, half will attend six or so U.S. tournaments this year. But the most intense of these — the Wimbledon, the Masters, the America's Cup of Tiddlywinks — was the one that ended at Kahn's house Sunday.

"We've always had an image problem," Kahn said as he absent-mindedly potted a few winks with his squidger. "But when I'm actually competing in serious tournaments, it's real, real serious."

Pot. Squidger. Not to mention the all-important squop.

We will now pause to explain the rules and equipment.

The winks are Italian-manufactured plastic disks, convex on both sides, either 16 or 22 millimeters in diameter and 1.75 millimeters thick. A winker shoots his wink using a squidger, a small plastic disk with very thin edges.

The object of the game is to use the squidger to pinch all the winks against a mat, which is a 6-by-3-foot piece of white English felt. The pinching propels them through the air and into the pot, which looks like a plastic shot glass, or onto an opponent's winks, which keeps them from being shot into the pot. The former is called a pot-shot, and the latter a squop shot. The squop is intrinsic to superior wink strategy.

Meanwhile, back in the midst of the fray, tiddlywinks is being taken very seriously indeed:

"Not to be belittled," said Dave Lockwood, 31, who is not only last year's national singles champ but also secretary-general of the International Federation of Tiddlywinks Associations and an economist for Gulf Air, an airline in Bahrain. He had flown for 14 hours from the Middle East with his wife and infant daughter to get here. But consider the stakes, as he sees them: "There's not many people who are the best at anything."

Once he started setting up a shot, no one could talk to him. He surveyed the table and the muscles in his face tightened with intensity. He is known for taking his time to shoot, all part of his legendary stature as the game's master strategist.

Kahn, on the other hand, circled around his table like Minnesota Fats eyeing an eight ball. He slowly fingered three of his squidgers with his right hand. His eyes darted back-and-forth behind his brown aviator-framed glasses looking for the perfect shot.

Kahn is used to being analytical. He is an ocean engineer for Washington Analytical Services in Rockville and is currently working on a contour map of the West Coast's sea floor.

As play continued, Kahn was matched with top-flight winker Brad Schaefer. Schaefer is a 27-year-old University of Maryland astrophysicist who discovered a star not too long ago, but doesn't like to talk about it, he says.

But talk became heated when Kahn accidentally shot a wink off the table, not a common occurrence for the man whom many consider to be the game's best technical player.

Schaefer shouted: "Yea!"

Heads lifted as concentration throughout the room collapsed.

"Brad!" Kahn yelled, "You've got to stop doing that. It tends to be very obnoxious."

Lockwood glanced towards the pair as if shaken from a deep, deep trance.

"What did he do?" he asked.

Kahn, still crouching at the corner of his table trying to line up a shot and regain composure, complained, "He always goes, 'Yea!' every time I roll off the table."

"Look, I'm sorry," said Schaefer. "I won't do it again."

The winkers fell back into their trances.

"These guys are all incredibly bright," said Deja Lockwood, Dave's wife, as she played with their year-old daughter Samantha. "It seems like the most ridiculous thing in the world. I find it very amusing, the seriousness of all the winkers."

After eight hours of winking on Saturday during preliminaries at the University of Maryland, it began to look as if the big match at Kahn's house Sunday was going to feature Arye Gettelman, 22, a computer programmer for Chase Decision Systems in Nashville, N.H. He is considered the third best winker in the world, after Kahn and Lockwood, and is one of this year's world pairs champs.

Other contenders were Charles Frankston, 29, a computer consultant from Cambridge, Mass.; Joe Sachs, 29, an information systems manager for New York Air in New York City; Rich Steidle, 28, a designer of industrial robots for Milacron in Cincinnati, Ohio; and Rick Tucker, 29, editor of "Newswink," the NATwA's newsletter, and a systems engineer for air traffic control automation.

By Sunday afternoon, the unofficial handicapping proved right. Kahn and Gettelman battled it out on Kahn's dining room table. Shortly before 2 p.m., Gettelman won to become the national singles champ. Kahn was second and Lockwood third.

Kahn congratulated the victor. "Dave and I, we've been waiting for Arye to break through. We thought he'd win one."

"Larry was playing a little inconsistently and it was one of my better days," Gettelman said. "There were some great squops, but nothing out of the ordinary — just solid winks-play."

Secretaries acquire new status at work

NEW YORK (AP) — Today's secretaries may take on the role of educating their bosses about the use of electronic office equipment, according to a Yale University sociologist.

Since secretaries work closely with word processors, electronic mail and personal computers, they are most likely to learn it first, says Dr. Rosabeth Moss Kanter, reporting on a Honeywell survey of managers and secretaries.

Gambling may signal depression

Hearst Feature Service

Winning a bet can be an uplifting experience, but for compulsive gamblers the act of wagering is often a sign of depression, according to a controversial new study that says the odds are better than 3-to-1 that the average compulsive bettor is suffering from an underlying emotional disorder that must be treated before the addiction can be cured.

"A major emphasis needs to be put on other emotional problems when a gambler comes in for treatment," Angel Russo, a researcher at the Veterans' Administration Medical Center in Brecksville, Ohio, and co-author of the study, which found that compulsive gamblers were depressed and manic, with many exhibiting suicidal tendencies.

Reported in this month's American Journal of Psychiatry, the study has stirred debate among those who treat compulsive or pathological gamblers. The findings bolster the arguments of therapists who see gambling and other addictions as a warning of more serious mental illness. But critics of the study argue that compulsive gamblers bet for the thrill of it, not out of depression. Often these gamblers invent "sad stories" to excuse their habit — stories that sometimes fool family, friends and even researchers, the critics say.

"The truth of the matter is that they are seeking pleasure," declared Abe Kramer, a psychologist with the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Brooklyn, N.Y. "It's not a sad story, it's an escape." Lying is a trait common to almost all compulsive gamblers, he adds.

Russo denies the authors were "taken in" by the gamblers. "I believe they're being genuine when they talk about being depressed. There could be an element of manipulation, but to attribute it all to lying would be a serious mistake."

The study involved 50 gamblers who had to be hospitalized for treatment. They were classified as pathological gamblers, a group defined by the American Psychiatric Association as anyone with an "irresistible impulse to gamble." Researchers at Brecksville, a leading center for treating gambling addiction, found that 38 patients, or 76 percent of those studied, suffered from a "major depressive disorder."

In addition, 19 patients were found to have some type of mood disorder (some patients were both depressed and hypomanic). And 70 percent said they had suicidal tendencies, including six who had actually attempted to kill themselves.

Finding happiness at the world's bluebird capital

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Both the executive director of the North American Bluebird Society and the man responsible for establishing Prince George's County, Md., as the self-proclaimed bluebird capital of the world agree that one of the sweetest things about bluebirds is the way they warble, but neither can duplicate the song.

"Well, I can try," said Mary Janetatos, the executive director, pursing her lips to emit a pair of tweets. "No, no, that's not it."

"I don't know anyone who can duplicate the bluebird's song," said 80-year-old Larry Zeleny, who has devoted 18 years since he retired from the U.S. Department of Agriculture to restoring the bluebird to prominence.

"But if you listen, you can hear the real thing," said Janetatos.

The fact that you can see, hear and enjoy bluebirds at the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center in Maryland today is almost entirely due to the good works of Zeleny, a retired doctor of biochemistry and a lifelong fan of the gentle, electric-blue thrush that in his Minnesota childhood was as common a harbinger of spring as the robin.

ZELENY BUILT his first bluebird nesting box when he was 14 years old and watched the sparrows move in. It infuriated him then as it infuriates him now when he lifts the top on one of the 60 bluebird boxes he keeps at the center and finds inside a house sparrow that has pecked to death four baby bluebirds and their mother and taken over the nest.

The good news is that over the years Zeleny, author of a book on bluebirds and former bluebird columnist for a birder's publication called the Purple Martin News, has developed a system whereby man can wage war on encroaching starlings and sparrows.

When he retired in 1966 he won permission to set up bluebird nesting boxes at the 7,000-acre research center. At the time a bluebird sighting there was rare. But Zeleny built his boxes and policed them, exterminating marauding sparrows and starlings, and that first year he had a nesting pair of bluebirds.

BY 1969, and every year since, he was producing from 100 to 200 baby bluebirds a season. Usually about half his nesting boxes are in use.

Zeleny guesses that 90 percent of Americans under 40 years old have never seen a bluebird. "Most people think it's a mythical bird because they hear about it all their lives but never see one," said Janetatos.

The decline since the turn of the century has been catastrophic, said Zeleny. The little thrushes have been evicted from their traditional nesting sites by house sparrows and starlings, both imported from Europe in the 1800s.

Zeleny is a gentle fellow, like the bird he loves, but he hates house sparrows and starlings and will pinch their heads off if he catches them around his bluebirds. These two nuisance species, along with the rock dove (pigeon), are the only birds not protected by U.S. law, Zeleny said, so he's within his legal rights.

HE FEELS within his moral rights, as well, since the house sparrow is a dirty bird, not a sparrow at all but a member of the weaver finch family that builds its nest with band-aids and cigarette butts, and the starling is an unkempt misfit.

By contrast, "the bluebird is the most loved of all American birds," said Zeleny. "I sat down once and just jotted down the songs I know that mention bluebirds, and there were 20 of them."

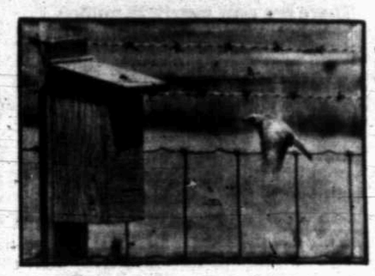
The Beltsville research center is a bluebird paradise where the casual visitor can drive along the narrow roadways and see bluebird after bluebird perched on the fences, in the wires, or feeding the young in the nesting boxes.

Unscrewing the top on one of his homemade boxes the other day, Zeleny found a perfect nest of coiled grasses and four tiny, pale blue eggs. In the next box lay day-old chicks, their tiny mouths spread wide in hopes of a meal. In a box down the lane lay some 10-day-old chicks, and Zeleny gently lifted one out. On its wings were the first faint signs of the brilliant blue that would soon distinguish the mature bird.

ZELENY'S LABOR of love has spawned the 4,000-member North American Bluebird Society, which Janetatos runs from her home. It generated enough enthusiasm in Prince George's County that in 1976 the bluebird was designated the official county bird.

More important, in Zeleny's view, is the fact that his boxes have helped stave off extinction for the gentle North American native. "The wonderful thing is that everywhere someone establishes a trail (of nesting boxes), they come back," he said.

"If the trend of the last 50 or 60 years continued for another 50 or 60," he said, "they might become extinct."



A bluebird heads for its box at Beltsville, Md., Agricultural Research Center to feed its young.

TOUR

Traveling along Garfield Street back to Wadley Road, there are a couple of interesting sights. To the north, buildings at Midland College silhouette against the evening sky. And from a distance, a few downtown skyscrapers resemble large mirrors reflecting images of west-side landmarks.

Big Spring Street can be considered the midway point on the tour. By this time, adrenalin should be pumping throughout the body and the cyclist should feel strong and comfortable on a bicycle again. He ought to feel good despite an occasional leg cramp.

The last leg of the tour circles around Big Spring Street to Illinois Avenue and heads back to Andrews Highway and the starting point.

Be prepared for a long ride and an increase in the the number of dips, ruts and pot holes. Also, ride defensively in these areas because traffic can be a little harry at times.

Altogether, this great bicycle ride across Midland encompasses about 10 exhilarating miles of West Texas desert terrain.

There is a consolation, however. A cyclist need not worry about grueling hills and the embarrassment of running out of leg power in the middle of the upward climb.

Who knows. Maybe this is the start of something big — something Midlanders will look forward to year after year.

It could perhaps become a tradition and grow to be a respectable All-City Cyclefest or even an invitational marathon. Madness pure madness ...

SAFETY

— Keep tires inflated to proper pressure.

— Be properly equipped with tools and spare parts.

— Be prepared for long distances between services. Carry plenty of water and food.

— When riding with a group, ride single file.

— Signal all turns well in advance; keep both hands on the handlebars when executing a turn.

— Avoid night riding, especially in rural areas.

— Ride defensively and in a predictable manner. Stay alert and wear a helmet. The bicycle always loses in a conflict with a car.

— Establish eye contact with drivers around you to be sure they are aware of your presence.

— Wear bright clothing for visibility; avoid loose-fitting clothes which might get caught in the spokes or chain.

— Watch out for speeding drivers.

— Watch for sand and loose gravel, particularly near the edge or shoulder of the road.

— Watch out for cattle and other livestock in rural roads.

— Be courteous to other drivers; keep traffic flowing by helping them pass you in a safe manner.

— Never ride bicycles on sidewalks.

— Cross streets at lighted intersections or crosswalks only. When doing so, get off of the bicycle and walk across intersection.

Aging causes number of different effects

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Some lessons from "What About Aging?":

— More than 5,000 Americans reach the age of 65 each day.

— At the turn of the century, between 3 million and 4 million people were over 65 in America. There are now nearly 26 million.

— When the senses of taste and smell lose their acuteness, strong spices such as chili and garlic can make food more interesting.

— Most people tend to raise their voices and speak more quickly when trying to communicate with the hearing-impaired. But because they often have the most trouble with high-frequency sounds, a high-pitched voice is harder to understand.

— Persons whose vision is failing because of cataracts may not be able to distinguish, for example, between the nearly identically sized cans of Arrid deodrant and Pam no-stick spray. A white plate may vanish into the surface of a white counter.

Ages 30 to 50 hard on memory

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Contrary to popular thinking, some research indicates that the most significant change in a healthy person's memory occurs not in old age but between ages 30 and 50, a symposium at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association was told Sunday.

This decrease in memory performance occurs in the ability to learn new information quickly and to retain it a long time, not in the ability to remember and manipulate what has already been learned, psychologist Marilyn Albert, Ph.D, director of the Alzheimer's Clinic at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, told a symposium on memory and the aging brain at the Los Angeles Convention Center.

It was one of several symposiums and courses held over the weekend as part of the American Psychiatric Association's 137th annual meeting, which officially opens Monday and ends Friday.

More than 10,000 persons are expected to register for the sessions. Presentation topics will range from depression in preschool children to psychiatric problems of the elderly, from advances in brain imaging techniques to the role of hope in the remission of illness.

At Sunday's memory symposium, Albert said, "It is becoming increasingly clear in examining the optimally healthy individual across the age range that the most significant change that occurs in memory occurs between the ages of 30 and 50.

"We have done elaborate EEG (electroencephalogram) studies ... which showed that corresponding to the change in memory are changes in electrical activity ... in the temporal lobe," she said. Why, then, is it not until people are in their 60s that they usually complain of memory problems?

"It's my opinion — and I stress it's only my opinion — the reason is that older people are experiencing other kinds of changes that are superimposed on memory changes that have already occurred," Albert said.

In their mid- to late-60s people began to have trouble with divided attention — that is, dealing with many things that are going on simultaneously around them, she said.

"If the information doesn't get through in the first place, they aren't going to remember it later on," she said. "It may not be primarily the result of new memory impairment but in divided attention, which secondarily is having an effect on memory."

It is important to understand the cause to know how to attack the problem, she said.

Because physical deterioration occurs with increasing age, the idea that memory is also impaired "fits very nicely and ogically," Albert said.

"SHARING THE FAITH" NOW AVAILABLE

Pope John Paul II and artist Larry Dyke

Midland Gallery is pleased to announce that we now have a limited number of "Sharing the Faith" prints by Texas artist Larry Dyke.

Destined to become a classic, this framed print is a reproduction of the painting Dyke presented to Pope John Paul II during a special audience in Rome February 29. The original now hangs in the Vatican.

To celebrate the edition, a special medallion has been struck bearing the name of the artist and an imprint of St. Peter's Basilica in Rome. A copy of this unique medallion will be yours with the purchase of this limited edition.

Don't miss this opportunity to own a very special limited edition and the accompanying medallion. These prints are signed and numbered and in very limited supply. It is thought by many art investors to be the finest investment print to be released in the last decade.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Alzheimers patients continue to live at home

Dear Dr. Solomon: Do all patients who have Alzheimer's disease have to be hospitalized or placed in a nursing home? My father has the condition and we would like to be able to keep him at home. Are there ways that this can be made possible? — Ms. B.N., Newport, R.I.

Dear Ms. N.: Many Alzheimer disease patients do continue to live at home, although this is not feasible in all cases. There are certain steps a family can take to minimize some of the difficulties in management.

For example, patients with Alzheimer's disease may become extremely emotional or agitated if they are faced with situations they find confusing. Therefore, it would be advisable to try to avoid these situations by simplifying instructions and by following familiar routines. In addition, they should be permitted sufficient time to accomplish even the most simple tasks they are called upon to perform.

Similarly, since these patients have a memory disturbance, it may be necessary to repeat instructions over and over. Such measures may help avoid extreme reactions and thus make management somewhat easier.

Although some precautions are obviously necessary, patients with Alzheimer's disease should be permitted to maintain their independence to the extent possible, consistent with their safety and health. The maintenance of dignity is as essential for these patients as for any other group.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

National arthritis costs high

ATLANTA (AP) — Not many things cost $25,000 a minute, but that's nearly how much arthritis costs the United States, according to the Arthritis Foundation.

The foundation says, "The impact of arthritis on our economy — in lost wages, lost taxes and medical care expenses — will be at least $13 billion this year." It says that amounts to a cost of $412 a second, $24,720 a minute, and $1.48 million an hour, all year long.

Success in treating arthritis depends on what type it is, where it is in the body, and how soon treatment is begun, according to the foundation.

The foundation says, "There are more tha 100 different types of arthritis. Many of these can be controlled effectively with proper and prompt treatment."

DEAR DOCTOR

X-rays may help detect cancer

By JEANNE A. PETREK, M.D.

Q. I have tried so many times and so hard, but I simply cannot stop smoking. How often should I have a chest X-ray in order to find lung cancer when it is still curable?

A. There is every reason to think that frequent chest X-rays would result in earlier detection and a consequent increased cure rate. This is because a cancer will be visible on chest X-ray for an average of 20 months before it produces symptoms.

However, remember that the malignant cells have been growing for several months to several years before they arebig enough to be seen on the X-ray.

Lung cancer is a rapid disease, and by the time it is visible, it has often spread to other sites. Once detectable on X-ray, the course of the disease is usually explosive, with about half the patients surviving less than six months and less than 10 percent surviving five years.

As you may know, the American Cancer Society (ACS) does not currently recommend routine annual chest X-ray for people without symptoms. In changing the guidelines, the ACS has probably considered the cost-to-benefit ratio.

"Cost" includes the $30 to $50 for a chest X-ray multiplied by approximately 54 million smokers, which could equal $2,700,000! The "benefits" include the number who would be cured as a result of frequent routine chest X-rays.

One significant study done between 1951 and 1955 found that the benefits are relatively small. In the Philadelphia Pulmonary Neoplasm Research Project, more than 6,000 men had chest X-rays every six months. The men who were found to have lung cancer — diagnosed early through chest X-rays — had a cure rate of only eight percent. This low survival rate approximates that of all lung cancer victims — who usually get a chest X-ray only after symptoms begin.

There are, however, many valid criticisms of this study, including the fact that some men did not undergo screening as planned, while others diagnosed with lung cancer refused treatment.

Another study with 29,000 participants compared a group with chest X-rays every six months to a group with chest X-rays three years apart. Those who developed lung cancer in the former group had a cure rate of 15 percent; those in the latter group had a cure rate of six percent.

Though one might concude that the more frequent chest X-rays were beneficial because the cure rate increased two and a half times, a 15 percent cure rate is still quite low.

In summary, early detection is not very effective. One must simply stop smoking. After about 10 years of not smoking, the ex-smoker reduces her risk to that of a person who has never smoked. The damaged and abnormal cells are gradually repaired and replaced. For those who are able to stop smoking, every day, every month, every year that passes reduces the risk of lung cancer.

Q. What does the acid or alkaline property have to do with shampoos? What about baby shampoos or protein shampoos?

A. Shampoos are mixtures of ingredients — detergents, foaming agents, conditioners and additives — designed to clean the dirt, oils and chemical pollution trapped in hair and cleanse the scalp.

Regular soap which one can use when nothing else is available will not do as good a job and will usually leave a film unless the water is very soft. Detergents lather better and accordingly get between hair strands better than soap.

Baby or "no tears" shampoos are milder because they contain the mildest detergents. As such they may not lather as well as other shampoos and may have to be applied more generously.

Neutral shampoos have a pH of 7, which is also the pH of water. Acidic shampoos are lower, with a pH of 3 to 6, like lemon juice. Alkaline shampoos run 8 to 10, as do most soaps and detergents. Acid shampoos are usually gentler and better for damaged hair — whether damaged by sun, permanents, coloring, etc. Alkaline shampoos are good for normal undamaged hair that is dirty or oily, as the alkaline content strips oil and dirt away best.

Protein shampoos help rough parts of the hair shaft and split ends by filling in the rough parts or splits. This smoothening action can make the hair easier to comb. The hair is a dead structure and can never be completely repaired when damaged. Beer and egg (being protein) shampoos function in the same way.

"IF YOU THOUGHT THESE GUYS WERE GOOD ACTORS, YOU SHOULD CATCH THE REST OF OUR SHOW."

— Bill Howard, President of Gibson's

Recently, we received several letters at Gibson's suggesting that the people in our television commercials were professional actors and actresses. People paid to say nice things about our stores. Not so.

The people you see on television are real people. Real Gibson's employees. People who work in our produce department. Our meat department. Hardware and sporting goods departments. In cosmetics and groceries.

And if you were impressed by their performance on camera, you should see the rest of the show we're putting on everyday at your local Gibson's. We've cleaned up the stores. Filled the shelves with more of your favorite name-brand merchandise. Lowered prices. And improved service. It's no act.

It's our way of saying we want your business. Now, we may not win an academy for this, but we do hope to win you over to Gibson's.

Dallas' Registry Hotel: Worth the expense

By CAROLYN FITZ-GERALD
Special to the Reporter-Telegram

Entering The Registry hotel in far north Dallas is like entering a greenhouse. A two-storied expanse of glass filled with lush greenery and tall palms greets visitors but there is a difference in this glass enclosure.

The entry at The Registry is backed by soft music from a grand piano and the registration desk offers guests a choice of 570 rooms with two concierge floors devoted to greater personal service and security for those who are willing to pay a little more.

Sitting atop the marble counter, polished apples in a brass bowl are tempting as the desk clerk asks my preference, but I remember Snow White and resist. Besides, impeccably attired guests who are reading and visiting in the lobby don't look as if they had ever seen anyone eat an apple or indeed eaten one themselves, even in private.

Under the palms in the Garden Court lounge a photographer is busily posing a model dressed in white. "Let's get the geode in," he says. Unlikely enough, there really is a giant amythyst geode in the midst of the ivy, split to reveal its sparkling purple interior. Across the lobby a jeweler's display window boasts the polished product surrounded by more precious stones.

There is still more glitter as I ride the escalator up to the mezzanine and enter the crystal ballroom which is studdied with Italian chandeliers. It is said to be the largest ballroom in the Southwest.

Continuing the theme is the La Champagne dining room where European chefs are garnishing gourmet dishes. Well-appointed tables are bedecked with crystal goblets and surrounded by Louis XV style chairs.

Downstairs dining is more casual in Stetsons, which is patterned after the stockyard steakhouses of years past. Porterhouses and T-bones are menu staples that are sized generously.

Even more relaxing is Cafe Chabilis were breakfast, lunch and dinner are served in a country French setting with casement windows that overlook the Lobby Bar. French pastries are available at its own pastry shop.

On the lower level is Ravel's disco which is reached through a neon-lit tunnel. The photograher and the model are there before me and the last ones to be let past the golden rope.

If crowds are indicative, Ravel's must be Dallas' most popular nightspot. Ravel's is open busily until 2 a.m.

Another plus of The Registry, which opened on the Dallas Parkway a year ago, is that all airports including Addison Executive Airport are only minutes away.

Call 1-800-442-2039 for reservations at The Registry, where weekend packages are available at $65 each night for single or double occupancy.

Cruising magnificent

By MICHAEL CARLTON
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

HONNINGSVAAG, Norway — When most of us think about cruising we think about decks awash with sun and nubile young bodies tanning by the pool. We imagine playing deck tennis and standing on the fantail at midnight, the warm breezes of the Caribbean or the Pacific ruffling our hair. We think of bikinis, sheer silk evening gowns and fields of sugar cane waving a greeting as we pull into an island port.

But more and more of us are thinking about a different kind of cruising. We are thinking of the Midnight Sun and air so cold even the polar bears wear scarves. We are thinking of fat fur seals and whales, and mountain ranges topped by caps of snow. We are the new cold-water cruisers.

Cold-water cruising is one of the few bright spots in an industry beset with problems. So many new ships have entered the cruise field in recent years that the lines are plagued with over-capacity and under-utilization. As a result, cruise-ship owners are offering many special packages (some of which include such goodies as a free week's stay at a luxury Caribbean hotel, free airfare, and large discounts).

But the cold-water cruises, unlike their Caribbean and Mexican counterparts, are doing very nicely. There has been, for example, a 35 percent surge in bookings to Alaska in just two years, and many of the ships are sailing at capacity. Even more exotic (and expensive) cruises like those to Norway's North Cape, far above the Arctic Circle, are doing well. The remote village of Honningsvaag, Norway, for example, received 73 cruise-ship calls last summer and pretty little Bergen, on Norway's southern flank, will host 115 cruise ships during its short summer this year.

Greyhound tells travelers 'leave the cruising to us'

The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

ORLANDO, Fla. — The Greyhound Corp. has been telling travelers to "Leave the driving to us." That soon may be changed to, "Leave the cruising to us."

The multinational corporation, best known for its Greyhound bus line, last year purchased a 26-year-old Italian cruise ship, spent $6.5 million to renovate it, and in March formerly entered the three- and four-day cruise market from Orlando to the Bahamas.

The newly christened S.S. Royale will leave Port Canaveral, 40 miles east of Orlando, on Mondays and Fridays for jaunts to Nassau and San Andros in the Bahamas.

Although most Bahamas cruises leave from Miami, Greyhound decided Orlando was a better choice because of its proximity to Walt Disney World and Epcot Center, its new airport, and "because Miami has a lot of problems and many people just don't like coming there any more," a Greyhound spokesperson said.

Vacationers can choose packages offering either a three-night cruise and four nights at Walt Disney World or a four-night cruise and three nights at Walt Disney World, including hotel accommodations, free transportation and admission to Epcot Center and the Magic Kingdom.

Accommodations are provided either on-site at the Contemporary Hotel or the Polynesian Village or at several hotels at the Walt Disney World Hotel Plaza 2. The choice of a rental car or bus transportation between airport, hotel and cruise port is included in all packages, plus a three- or four-day pass to Epcot Center and the Magic Kingdom.

Nostalgia trips available

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

If you are tired of the 20th Century merry-go-round, you can hop a wagon train June 17 in Carson City, Nev. This is an 11-day trip. You cross the Sierra, following historic U.S. 50 and wind up in Sacramento, Calif. Just as the old pony express did. Exciting scenery (the American River, Spooner Path, Lake Tahoe, Amacker Ranch, Echo Summit, Strawberry, Old Hangtown, Fort Sutter). Vacationers will join the Wild West parade in Lake Tahoe and the Pioneer Days parade in Hangtown. They will circle the wagons at night for country-Western dancing, Indian ceremonies. Meals provided from a chuck wagon. All you need is a sleeping bag and $495 for the entire 11-day trip. Make that $50 per day if you have to cut it short.

Contact the J.B. Ranch, P.O. Box 288, Elverta, Calif. 95626. Ask about their other wagon train trips. Some as short as three days.

For more nostalgia, go choo-chooing aboard the Roaring Camp & Big Trees Narrow-Gauge Railroad at Felton in California's Santa Cruz Mountains. Operates every day except Christmas. Passengers travel from Roaring Camp through McSkunk Junction, Big Trees, Indian Creek, Grizzly Flats, Westside Junction. There is a luncheon stop at Bear Mountain for those who wish to get off, catch a later train. This train used to haul lumber. Now it carries only passengers. A total of five steam locomotives. Up to 3,500 passengers travel daily through the redwoods. Some of the steepest railroad grades in the United States. Horseshoe curves, trestles that span forested canyons. For an up-to-date timetable write to Roaring Camp & Big Trees Narrow-Gauge Railroad, P.O. Box G-1, Felton, Calif. 95018.

Airline publishes tour brochure

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Pan American World Airways' new brochure describes hundreds of tour packages. Everything from a single night for $10 at a London hotel to a 26-day cruise through Indochina for $10,400. Tours take in Europe, the Middle East, Africa, South America, the South Pacific, Orient, the United States. Copies of the "Pan Am Holiday 1984 Worldbook" can be obtained from the Pan Am Distribution Center, 11 Hancock St., (WB) Trenton, N.J. 08650.

While we're on the subject of guides, Wyoming has produced one that's packed with vacation ideas. Details on accommodations, state parks, self-guided tours, historic sites, wildlife, hunting, fishing. The section on accommodations describes campgrounds, hotels, motels, dude ranches, lodges, resorts. For a copy of the "Wyoming Vacation Guide" (map included), write to the Wyoming Travel Commission, Cheyenne, Wyo. 82002.

Rafting through Big Bend country compelling

By JANET FULLWOOD
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

BIG BEND NATIONAL PARK, Texas — The moon came up like a searchlight, making us gasp, exposing all the secrets of the camp. Huge and round and mottled like a marble slab, it banished a million stars in an instant. Every pebble cast a shadow, every leaf and thorn from foreground to horizon stood in knife-edge silhouette. The Rio Grande shimmered silvery, alive and exquisite in the boldness of its light.

There had never — at least for me — been a moon to match this one leering bright over the Great Chihuahuan Desert on a cool and cloudless March night. So tangible was its energy, so vibrant its rays, that the landscape seemed to dance. Colors that had faded at dusk took on new, muted glows. Even the whoosh of breeze against rock seemed magnified in its presence.

A moon like this called, at the very least, for a toast of recognition. And our band of campers, settled for the night on the Texas side of the international border we were navigating by rubber raft, was ready. With a jug of lukewarm margaritas, cans of Mexican beer and a good many yelps and whoops, we gave the moon its due. Then out came the guitars, and soon moon songs, Texas songs, Mexican songs, cowboy songs, songs to love and loneliness and wanderlust and life were spinning out across the desert and into the brilliant night sky.

When it came to musical entertainment, this group was blessed. Among our numbers emerged several pickers and singers of considerable talent; at their fore was Texas composer and recording artist Steven Fromholz, special guest on this three-day Texas River Music float trip through Santa Elena Canyon in Big Bend National Park.

Far Flung Adventures, the most established outfitters on this stretch of the Rio Grande, organizes several flings of this type in spring and fall, each featuring campfire concerts under the stars by a prominent Texas musician. Fromholz has been a Texas River Music regular for several years, contributing his own baritone brand of musical Texana to a journey that at any time of year provides an otherwise unobtainable perspective on this remote border region.

The music that first night on the river made friends of folks who had started the day as strangers, but the moon was relentless. When the last song had been sung we crawled into sleeping bags under the open sky and closed our eyes against the glare. One member of the party gave up and slept with his sunglasses on — it was that bright.

This Big Bend is strange, compelling country, with or without a full moon. Stark and vast and filled with geological contradictions, it commands a feeling of awe both for its wild, endless panoramas and its fragile, close-up detail. The Chisos Mountains, rising to altitudes of almost 8,000 feet above a desert floor spangled with cacti, low shrubs and wildflowers, are multi-hued sentinals in a land that looks like a stage set for a Western. Man is dwarfed in Big Bend's landscapes, and so is the thread of water that provides a division between two major nations.

To Texans, it is the Rio Grande; to Mexicans, the Rio Bravo del Norte. By either name, the river that separates Texas from Mexico meanders 118 miles through continental America's most remote national park on its journey to the Gulf of Mexico, carving some spectacular scenery along its course. Relatively few are the human witnesses to its grandeur, however. Big Bend is far too isolated to gather crowds on the order of, say, Yellowstone or Grand canyon, though its limited facilities fill to bursting in spring and fall.

To get to Big Bend — a 750,000-acre preserve of desert, mountain and river environments that takes its name from the giant U-turn carved by the Rio Grande to define the dip of West Texas — requires a commitment of time, substantial planning and a minimum drive of 250 miles from the nearest commercially served airport. And to explore the river itself, in its remote but magnificent wanderings between sculpted buttes and towering canyon walls, requires being on it. There is no other way.

For reasons of access and convenience, as much as guaranteed drama, Santa Elena Canyon, first of the great gorges encountered within park boundaries, gets the most human traffic. It is possible to obtain a park service permit to run this stretch of river on your own, but it is hardly advisable for first-timers.

We encountered Santa Elena and the Rock Slide on Day Two, after a lazy first day spent floating on slow-moving current from a put-in point near Lajitas, just outside the park's southwestern boundary, to a spot near the canyon entrance. The heavily laden flotilla of four rubber boats carried 12 passengers, four river guides, personal gear and provisions for the duration of the trip — including enough beer to raise the river a foot.

Not all Far Flung Adventures river trips are as party-oriented as our Texas River Music special turned out to be, but all attract a cross-section of participants. Singles, couples, and families of all ages get the same treatment — a seat on a raft, commentary by the guides, nights under the stars and meals that could win culinary awards for outdoors inventiveness. It's luck of the draw how personalities mesh on a particular trip, but its the meshing the provides the memories. You pay your money, sit back, make friends and enjoy.

Cheryl Ladd

Cheryl Ladd, who loves being a mother, is an ardent fighter against child abuse and is an Amabassador-at-Large for Childhelp USA.

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features Syndicate

When Cheryl Stoppelmoor was a child in Huron, S.D., the family dinner table was the place where everyone talked about their day, where children were heard, where parents gave love, understanding and guidance. "It was a fabulous upbringing, a start in life that is still with me, the source of all my values," she says now.

"Guidance included discipline. We all got a pop on our rears a time or two. I don't mean a beating. I don't even mean a spanking. Just a pop on the rear.

"Any time a punishment was given in our house, we were put on mother or father's lap and it was explained to us that the punishment — the taking away of a privilege, for example — was being given out of love and concern. Whether I liked it or not, that was the way it was going to be. Because I'd done so and so, no matinee on Saturday or whatever.

"It makes a child feel secure. A child needs a parent to show that there is some kind of control. There are rules in life and you need to follow those rules. You don't always do so because children aren't perfect.

"Adults aren't perfect either; but it gives a child a sense of security to know that parents will listen to what he or she has to say and to realize that a guideline is part of parental love."

TODAY, GROWN-UP Cheryl Ladd and her husband, producer/composer Brian Russell, follow the same pattern. They sit at the dinner table discussing the day with their children: Cheryl's daughter, Jordan, 9, and Brian's daughter, Lindsay, 7, who are growing up like sisters.

"I watch them playing their make-believe games, watch them dress up and try my lipstick, and it's just like seeing my sister Maryann and me. When we were little, we fought like cats and dogs. We were each other's opposites, she very precise, her room always just so, while mine was a total disaster; but we grew up to be best friends.

"How quickly childhood is over and how important it is to get to the basics of what is family life, what you mean to each other. I really love being a mother. It's so rewarding to watch children grow, and ours are so open and have such terrific personalities, it's joy to see their happiness."

Little wonder this beautiful woman has become one of the country's most ardent workers against child abuse. The girl who stepped into stardom as one of "Charlie's Angels" has acquired strength and poise, and it's visible in her role as the dedicated nurse in the Vietnam-era film, "Purple Hearts," which was released in May.

She explains, "A very realistic part for me, a very realistic girl. Most of it was filmed without makeup. I've never thought of myself as a raving beauty and although "Charlie's" was a great experience for me, the look that became popular on that series hasn't afforded me the kind of roles I've wanted. I love a love story, and this girl Deborah Solomon has a great humanity about her. She's straightforward, warm and has a wonderful naturalness."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. I enjoyed watching Duncan Regehr in "The Last Days of Pompeii" and would like to know something about him and whether he has any other projects coming up.

J.N.
Sacramento, Calif.
Joan Arlin
Colorado Springs, Colo
Tess DeVille
Rock Island, Ill
April Smith
Plymouth, Calif.

A. He was born in Alberta, Canada, is of Flemish extraction, was an accomplished figure skater at 5 and then, at 14, the host of a cable TV show in Canada.

He went to drama school there, joined a repertory company in which he performed in plays ranging from "Hamlet" to "House of Blue Leaves," and did voices of cartoon characters on radio.

From 1976 to 1980, though, he trained for the Olympic boxing team; and after that, promptly gave up boxing for acting. In 1981, he moved to Hollywood and soon had parts in the film "Goliath Awaits," the miniseries "The Blue and the Gray" and the series "Wizards and Warriors" before landing the role in "Pompeii."

Duncan Regehr

Next up is the CBS bio of Erroll Flynn, "My Wicked, Wicked Ways," which covers Flynn's first seven years in Hollywood; it's due to air in the fall. Off camera, Regehr is married, likes to paint, collect antiques and — obvious from the shape of his body — lift weights.

Q. I read once that Hal Linden was to be in a new TV series called "Second Edition," but I haven't seen it listed among the fall programs. What happened?

M.M.
Kansas City, Kan.

A. He shot a two-hour pilot for the show, in which he played the editor of a weekly news magazine, but in that most common of TV occurrences, the pilot didn't sell. Therefore, no series.

He's still looking for a series, though, and in the meantime is making personal appearances and doing his nightclub act. He's just been in Las Vegas and is headed to San Francisco and Atlantic City.

Q. Please tell me everything about Billy Joel — when and where he was born, what his future plans are?

A.L.
Decatur, Ill.

A. William Martin Joel was born May 9, 1949 in Hicksville, Long Island, N.Y. into an economically depressed working-class environment — but one that was filled with music.

His father, a German-born engineer with General Electric, was an accomplished pianist who met his wife when she was singing in a Gilbert and Sullivan company at City College of New York. Young Joel took after his parents and when they found him experimenting with a Mozart piece at age 4, they enrolled him with a piano teacher.

His parents divorced, however, when he was 7. His father went back to Europe, and his mother had to juggle jobs to support him and his older sister. That situation eased slightly when Joel was in his teens and started to pick up extra money by playing piano in clubs at night; but it wreaked havoc with his school life. "'I would come into school having missed three classes, with very red eyes," he says. "The teachers thought I was a drug addict."

He made it through to the 12th grade but wasn't allowed to graduate, a fact that didn't seem to bother him much. "I told the school officials, 'The hell with it,' " he remembers.

Currently, he's finishing up a U.S. tour, as we go to press, and looking forward to taking a little time off at his house on Long Island. Next plans are for a greatest-hits album, "From a Piano Man to an Innocent Man," tentatively set for release in the fall.

Lee Remick

Q. I saw a movie on TV a while back that starred Lee Remick and was, I think, the true story of Maureen O'Hara. It was very moving. Could you tell me the name of the movie?

A Fan
Plainsboro, N.J.

A. We can't find anything pertaining to Maureen O'Hara. Perhaps you mean Margaret Sullivan, a contemporary of O'Hara's, whom Remick portrayed in the TV movie "Haywire."

If you're a fan of Ms. Remick's, you might want to see her in another TV movie, "Mistral's Daughter," in which she co-stars with Stacy Keach and Stefanie Powers. It's scheduled to air on CBS this fall.

Q. Can you please give me some information on supermodel Lauren Hutton — background, if she's married, if she has kids, where she lives, what her plans are.

Ken Onofrey
Clarks Summit, Pa.

A. Her real name is Mary Laurence Hutton, named after her father Laurence Hutton, a would-be writer who grew up next door to William Faulkner in Oxford, Miss. His daughter (who borrowed "Lauren" from Bacall) was born in Charleston, S.C., and raised in Tampa, Fla., where she spent her time fishing for alligators.

She describes herself as a continual school dropout who took off for New Orleans at 18, worked as a barmaid in a jazz club and lived a pretty wild life, until deciding to get away from it all by jumping a tramp steamer to Africa.

She needed money for that, however, so she went to New York to work, first as a Playboy bunny, then as a house model for Christian Dior for $50 a week. All the major agencies turned her down for a modeling career, but finally, superagent Eileen Ford agreed to take her on if she'd have her nose fixed and the gap between her front teeth closed. She never did either.

Her extremely successful modeling career led to acting when the wife of the producer of the film "Paper Lion" saw her face on the cover of "Vogue" and called her in to test. The casting people watched her talk football with Alan Alda for half an hour and gave her the part. Other films include "American Gigolo," "Zorro, The Gay Blade," "The Gambler," "Gator" and the recent "Lassiter."

She isn't married and can usually be trusted to turn up in the company of young, hot actors.

Lauren Hutton

Q. How is Ann Southern? Is she still working or has she retired?

Anne Galiette
Waterbury, Conn.

A. She hasn't retired, but she isn't terribly active at the moment. "She's done some TV here in California," according to a business associate, "and I know she'd like to do more, but nothing's come along that seems right. So at this point, she's trying to develop TV properties for herself."

CHERYL

As Ms. Ladd herself has. In her private life she wears no makeup. The golden hair is pulled back into a tight little knot, the face has a classic beauty. In it you read purpose and a grave, sweet determination to make this a better world.

THAT WAS apparent as long as four years ago when she played the lead in a script she had developed to fight child abuse, "When She Was Bad."

"I had seen so much about this problem on television, I wanted to do something about it. So I started research. I wanted to bring to the public's attention some understanding of the fact that it crosses all boundaries of race, religion or social status. It can happen anywhere, to any child, to your own child.

"In developing the character of the abusive mother, I didn't want her to be a person who drank or had a drug problem. I wanted her to be someone you'd never suspect — the woman next door who wanted to be a perfect wife and mother and when that went awry, she couldn't handle the situation and struck out at her child. It was not so much anger at the child, it was her own fear of being inadequate. She felt frightened, unable to cope."

Ms. Ladd worked with the writer, went through case histories, became involved with the people working at Children's Village in Beaumont, Calif., which has now expanded to Childhelp USA.

The picture ran on ABC-TV to an immediate response. A child-abuse hot line was flashed and millions of calls came pouring in from all over the country, from people wanting to know more. Now Ms. Ladd is Ambassador-at-Large for Childhelp USA, bringing the work of that organization to public attention.

She was very visible at their mid-May fund-raising luncheon at the Century Plaza in Los Angeles. Sara O'Meara and Yvonne Fedderson, founders of the organization, are very proud of Ms. Ladd and what she does. "I talk wherever I'm asked," she says.

"I TALK ALL the time, we do spots on television, we've done a television show, a special which will air this summer. I did a number called "I'm Your Child," a very touching song about a child who looks for and needs love."

The singing takes her back to her own childhood. She's been singing all her life. "My dad played guitar. He'd get together with some of his friends for a jam session and I'd always sing. Show business was my dream all along."

She sang and danced throughout elementary school and in high school joined the professional Music Shop Band. "I was 16 when I first sang with this band, a junior in high school. I'd been a cheerleader and had been in plays and I knew that the band would cut into all that.

"My folks sat and talked with me. The band would travel, and my mother didn't like that. My dad said, 'Cheryl is telling us something. She's been trying to do this all her life. She'll resent it if she doesn't get the chance. We have to let her go.' My mom cried for two or three days and finally said OK. Bless their hearts!"

The band proved to be her ticket to Hollywood. After graduation, they hit the road. "I traveled around, singing in nightclubs I wasn't old enough to be in.

"We ended up in Los Angeles because the people booking us lived in Sherman Oaks: Art and Edna Whiting. The band broke up and they took me under their wing. I lived with them, babysat for my room and board, and they helped me get an agent and guided me to acting classes. They really believed in me."

AND THEY were right. She was cast as the voice of Melody in the animated TV series "Josie and the Pussycats." She made commercials, including a major campaign for Max Factor. She started getting parts on television and had a string of impressive credits before she landed on "Angels" as the fiesty Kris Munroe.

"It's a wonder I survived as well as I did," she says now, laughing.

"I had no idea how difficult the business as, so it never traumatized me in any major way. I guess my naivete helped me to survive. So did my South Dakota upbringing. I was straightforward about everything and wasn't chased around too many desks.

"My mom used to ask me about that when I had enough money to call home. I'd told her I thought something was wrong with me. No chasing. Then someone did chase me around the desk. 'You run fast,' my mom said and I said, 'You bet.' "

The biggest problem when you're a newcomer is rejection. Ms. Ladd's greatest disappointment was not getting the role of the daughter on "Family." "I was up for it and read three or four times. They were testing Meredith Baxter Birney and me. I loved that show, I loved the whole concept of the character; but Meredith got the part."

And Ms. Ladd landed on "Angels," which was a learning experience. "There's nothing," she says, "like working five days a week, 18 hours a day. And it was such a popular show! A fantastic and fun concept, it was never intended to be Shakespeare. What was annoying was the idea people had that it was sexist. Nothing of the sort."

"NOBODY WENT TO bed. We bought our clothes in Beverly Hills; it was just contemporary clothing. Actually, the series was the first of its kind in that we were liberated women, not the typical role models of teacher or nurse or young housewife. If we'd been three hags, no one would have written anything about us."

In her third year on "Angels," Ms. Ladd was divorced from David Ladd, her first love and father of Jordan. "I had never expected to get a divorce; I want love stories to be happy ever after," she says.

"When it doesn't work out that way, it's hard to take, hard to get over the feeling of failure. I just think I was young for marriage, and show business makes it difficult. But essentially a relationship has to be a healthy one to begin with and ours wasn't as healthy as it should have been. I just wasn't aware."

Today she is very aware. "I always say my husband and I look at the world through the same window." She met Brian almost nine years ago through music. "Actually, my first single was a song he had written. He sang on the record too. And we became friends. We were both married then and Jordan and Lindsay have known each other all their lives. The families saw each other socially.

"Then when I was divorced, Brian and I ran into each other and all of a sudden it was very different! You could have bowled me over. I'd never thought of Brian that way; but we were now both unattached, he'd been separated for two years.

"It wasn't like dating a stranger, of course. It was being with someone you'd known a long, long time and I guess I knew rather soon that if things kept going the way they were...I saw us being together forever."

HER CLEAR eyes sparkle. "He's a wonderful man. Very creative. Very interesting. Very funny. I like him a lot.

"We share so many things. I would say that the real test was when we redecorated the house we bought. We did every bit of it ourselves and together.

"We've also worked together professionally. He produced 'Grace Kelly' and two of my variety specials. Now he's just produced a film in Atlanta — 'Voyage of the Rock Aliens.' "

One of the hazards of any show business marriage are the inevitable locations. That was one of the things they discussed before their marriage. "What is really important to us is being together. Two, maybe three weeks, is the most we allow ourselves to be apart.

"Filming 'Purple Hearts' in the Philippines, I was lucky. He was able to be with me. Then I got a week's break right in the middle of shooting and we were able to have a bit of rest and relaxation in Hawaii and our children joined us there."

"The children have always been a prime consideration, of course. It was so important that they have equal treatment and equal love. The greatest problem was what to do about sharing them with their other parents. Brian and I both have joint custody, so I talked it over with Jordan's pediatrician. He suggested we have the girls in our home one week, then the following week, they each go to the other parent.

"WHEN THE DOCTOR suggested this, I looked at him as if he'd just come from Mars. 'How in the world would that help?' I asked. His answer: 'The problem in divorce is the child's sense of loss. They feel abandoned by one parent. If you can organize this, they will not feel abandoned and you'll have happy chilren.'

"And you know, he was right. They had to adjust to two households but they knew they were wanted and loved, and they come back to each other with joy.

"We try. There has been so much lately about child abuse. Every two minutes, somewhere in this country, some child is being abused.

"They know I am involved in this work. I want them to know about that. Little by little. No one wants a child to grow up in fear, but they must be alert. I tell them that if anything strange should happen, they must tell me at once. They shouldn't be afraid to tell."

Along with the show business dream there was always another dream — to be a wife and mother and create the ambience she knew as a child. But she wants to work too..."until I'm 80." She and Brian have several projects in development, one for cable — the story of two women in love with the same man and who become friends — one for ABC, a movie for television, and several series.

And then there's music. "Acting is more challenging, music is more fun." There's always music at their house. Ms. Ladd's newest video, "Fascinated," is currently being syndicated as a television special.

Both the girls are studying piano and Brian plays. He's written one song especially for Ms. Ladd, and when he plays that..."I cry. It's so touching, so romantic. It's very special to have a song written for you. It makes you feel immortal."

Film falters when it takes to the stars

By DAVID LEE FORREST

David Forrest

Oddly enough, "The Last Starfighter" soars highest when earthbound and only begins to falter when the action takes to the stars.

The lead character, teen-ager Alex Rogan, played by Lance Guest, lives in the rundown "Starlite Starbrite Trailer Court" with his parents, irreverant little brother, girlfriend and a host of slightly oddball tenants.

Although Alex has big but vague dreams of success and adventure, he spends most of his free time playing a videogame called "Starfighter," which unbeknownst to him is actually a test planted by aliens to find talented recruits to defend the Star League.

One evening, he scores an all-time record score on the machine — a hilarious scene as the entire population of the trailer park clusters around the machine to cheer him on — of over a million points.

This information gets back to the alien recruiting officer, played by veteran actor Robert Preston, who decides Alex is the right earthling to join the interstellar defense force. Preston carries Alex off to the planet Rylos, leaving a robot double behind with the Rogan family.

Alex is not pleased with being shanghaied, refuses to join the starfighters and is returned to Earth, where his scornful double says, "Oh, save the whales but not the universe, uh?"

Eventually, of course, Alex does end up locked in combat with the evil forces of alien invader Xur and his huge Ko-dan armada.

Director Nick Castle displays a deft touch in the scenes set on Earth. He polishes short shots of a dog sleeping on a porch and a cat crawling out of a mailbox into little comic gems. He gives all the minor characters in the trailer park lovable human touches, even though most of them appear only briefly.

The most humorous scenes are those in which the robot double desperately tries to fit in on Earth, but is completely bewildered by the interest Alex's girlfriend, played by Catherine Mary Stewart, has in kissing and other "gland games," as he labels them.

When the scene shifts to outer space, however, "Starfighter" primarily rehashes old science fiction plot cliches which have been used before, and used better, in other movies.

The special effects are somewhat different from those used in other movies, however. Instead of filming scale models, the makers of "Starfighter" use digital simulations created by a powerful Cray XMP computer for most of the special effects shots.

While the computer animation is exotically attractive, the graphics don't quite have the realistic three-dimensional look that the best special effects using models achieve.

Although the space action is throughly cliched and the plot is purely on the level of a comic book, "Starfighter's" offbeat humor and clever characterizations keep it entertaining. Children will especially revel in the fantasy adventures of a boy who rises from videogame jock to defender of the universe, despite the story's implausibility.

"The Last Starfighter," rated PG, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Bachelor Party' in tradition of 'Animal House'

"Bachelor Party" is the type of movie that people are either going to find hilariously funny or horribly offensive, depending on their tastes.

The story revolves around a carefree, low-class guy, Rick (played by Tom Hanks) who's engaged to Debbie, a girl from a wealthy and respectable family, played by newcomer Tawny Kitaen.

Debbie makes Rick promise that he will remain completely faithful to her even though they are not yet wed.

During the wild bachelor party that his friends throw for the groom-to-be, Rick not only encounters strong temptation to break his promise of fidelity, but also has to stumble his way through plots by Debbie's parents and ex-boyfriend (all of whom find Rick downright gross) to break up the couple's engagement.

The movie is advertised as being in the tradition of "Animal House" and "Porkys," and it is certainly every bit as crass as those two films.

At least one scene in "Bachelor Party," involving a mule, seems to have been borrowed almost directly from a sight gag used in "Animal House."

"Bachelor Party" also contains jokes about prostitution, drug abuse, homosexuality, transvestism, proctology and even bestiality.

This is definitely not family fare.

The movie never becomes completely mired in obnoxiousness, however. Much of the humor is genuinely funny and the young cast does deliver an energetic performance.

Rick, although he's a long way from the comparatively innocent role Hanks had as the star of the recent Disney film "Splash," manages to remain very likeable even while tastelessness runs amok all around him.

The endless stream of one-liners, delivered mainly by Hanks, and visual humor keep the film lively and had the audience alternately laughing in merriment and groaning in disgust.

It's not hard to enjoy the wild and often weird humor of "Bachelor Party," providing you make sure you leave your good taste at home.

"Bachelor Party," rated R, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

David Lee Forrest is film critic for the Reporter-Telegram.

CELEBRITY CHATTER

What motivated you...?

Morgan Brittany: "My grandmother. She started me in dance classes and fought a debilitating illness to take me to auditions. Even today, whenever I hit a professional low, I remind myself of her dedication and I get a lift."

Morgan Brittany

Richard Chamberlain: "Peter Dews, former artistic director of the Birmingham Repertory Theatre in England, who offered me the chance to play Hamlet. He thought it amusing to see if he could whip a young American upstart into shape. It turned out he could — and did."

Dolly Parton: "The greatest influence in my life was more of a what than a who — the Grand Ole Opry. The moment I stepped into that hall I got goosebumps, and I knew I had to make my dream of being a singer come true."

Dolly Parton

Sally Kellerman: "My analyst. With the exception of my husband, Jonathan Krane, he's the only person who's ever really told me the truth about myself."

Sally Kellerman

Brooke Shields: "Up till now, my mother, Teri, has been my one and only greatest influence."

Tab Hunter: "I have no role model other than myself. My parents separated shortly after I was born, and I spent most of my youth on my own. I joined the Coast Guard illegally at 15 and learned to depend on myself and do the best I can under any circumstances."

Bo Derek: "John Derek, of course. I was a very impressionable 16 when we met."

John Travolta: "That's easy. James Cagney. He's the quintessential performer — a gifted, subtle actor and a fantastic dancer."

John Travolta

David Brenner: "My father — the funniest man I've ever known. He was an old vaudeville performer, and he had me laughing from the day I was born. All the inspiration for my brand of humor stems from my childhood in Philadelphia, living with a whacko banana."

Martin Sheen: "To me, James Dean was the most important actor ever, and when I began performing, there were the inevitable comparisons: I looked, talked, acted like him. While most actors shun such comparisons, I welcomed them; they were the highest form of flattery."

Martin Sheen

Faye Dunaway: "Elia Kazan. He's a great director — in both theater and films — a wonderful writer, and, most important, a gifted teacher."

Faye Dunaway

Chuck Norris: "Steve McQueen was a student at my karate school, it was he who encouraged me to take up acting."

Tom Selleck: "I have three brothers and a sister. As we were growing up, my father told us that if we didn't drink or swear by the time we reached 21, he would give us a gold watch. To this day, we still have our Rolexes. I doubt that we would have gotten them without the care, guidance and support of our parents."

Tom Selleck

Ali MacGraw: "Right after college, I worked at 'Vogue' magazine as an editorial assistant to the editor, Diana Vreeland. There simply was no limit to her imagination, her creative drive. For all my education, she showed me things I'd never seen or heard before."

Ali McGraw

Robert Goulet: "Laurence Olivier. After one of my first performances in Camelot, he came backstage to compliment the show and to point out a flaw of mine he'd spotted from the back row — I was afraid to face the audience. Well, the next time, I forced myself to do it, and I could see they were having a good time. So have I ever since."

Jane Fonda: "Lee Strasberg. The day I auditioned for his acting class in New York, I was petrified. When my turn came and I had done the routine, Lee came over and said, 'You know, you're very talented.' No one had ever said that to me before! I went home feeling like there was nothing greater in the world than acting, not even love."

Jane Fonda

Robin Williams: "John Houseman, whom I studied under at Juilliard. He taught me so much it would take a couple of months just to tell you the basics."

Teri Garr: "Ever since I can remember, I've been a James Dean freak. He lived in my aunt and uncle's house in Sherman Oaks just before he died. I used to go over there and mow the lawn, hoping to catch a glimpse of him."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon
Monday, July 16, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: English painter Sir Joshua Reynolds and Christian Science founder Mary Baker Eddy were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: Barbara Stanwyck, consumer advocate Bess Myerson, Ginger Rogers and tennis' Margaret Court. Take the blinders off and see things as they really are. A practical approach will help you build a strong financial foundation. You may want to start your own business. Give serious thought to forming a partnership. Romance has its ups and downs but is always rewarding. Your artistic talents bring you public recognition.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Higher-ups are impressed by the way you catch on to new ideas. Be unselfish and buy things for those in need.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Postpone a romantic encounter and concentrate on your platonic relationships. At work, continue to give free rein to your imagination. Do not pay cash for merchandise unless you have carefully examained it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A job offer holds great appeal. Get promises in writing, even from relatives. A leadership role suits you beautifully. Salespeople should soften their approach to prospective buyers.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Do not take the advice of a know-it-all neighbor. Romance will pick up if you make the first move. Self-discipline helps you succeed in replacing bad habits with good ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Romance remains exciting but takes a backseat to career or business. Develop new strategies for handling your associates. A change of residence could improve a personal relationship.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Working with mate boosts productivity. Try to approach any problems without a preconceived notion of the best way to handle them. Friends provide valuable information. News from afar prompts immediate action.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Put your best foot forward in all business and social situations. Partner offers some sage advice. Show your appreciation. Consult loved ones before accepting invitations. Romance is amusing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An at-home business begins to make a nice profit. Entertaining key people could boost your social status. A close friend is probably telling you the truth about a loved one. Take action.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Travel can be useful, but the telephone is quicker and less expensive. Seize an opportunity to make new investments. Work upon improving a better balance between work and family.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Some financial advice may be difficult to follow. Persevere! The results will be worth the sacrifices you make. The ideal romantic partner could be right around the corner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Socializing helps you move up at place of employment. Let others know how much you value their opinions. A scholarship comes through for a college-bound teenager.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You cannot accomplish much when you change jobs too often. Travel gives you a new perspective. May-December romance work out better for some people than others. The choice is yours!

Can 'pope's pop' make Top 40?

Canadian-born composer and lyricist Gene Lees has translated eight poems written by Pope John Paul II when a young priest and turned them into popular-type songs.

Lees, 56, who now lives in California, was given the assignment by the Vatican after it had rejected several other composers. He says the poems "are very beautiful and moving, humanist more than spiritual."

Man flatters ordinary folks for asking for autographs

LANCASTER, Pa. (AP) — You might be browsing at a shopping mall, or eating breakfast at a restaurant somewhere, or sunning yourself on a park bench.

A dapper man with a little mustache approaches you, pen and notebook in hand.

"Hi," he says. "My name is Charlie and one of my hobbies is collecting autographs of important people I meet all over the world. May I have yours, please?"

You're flattered. Someone told you that you looked a little bit like Kirk Douglas one time, but you can't lead this guy astray. So you explain to him that he must be mistaken — you're not anyone important.

But Charlie Ashenfelter, Lancaster's own "Autograph Man," disagrees. "To me," he says, "everyone is important. May I have your autograph please?"

For the last 19 years, Charlie Ashenfelter has given this pitch to people all over the world.

Some people collect stamps. Others collect coins, or rare bugs, or rocks. This 69-year-old man collects autographs. At last count, he had 46,607 signatures.

Ashenfelter's signatures are not autographs of the the famous and the infamous, although he admits there might be a few well-known signatures sprinkled throughout, but most of the signatures are those of "everyday people."

"One of the main reasons I do it is because people frequently say, 'You just made my day. No one ever called me important before. No one has ever asked for my autograph.' They really get a kick out of that."

Ashenfelter began his unusual hobby back in 1965, quite by accident. Then an employee for the state, he attended a management training program at Michigan State University. One day, he was asked to sit in on a special class of foreign students.

The Lancaster man was so impressed that he asked some of the students to sign a copy of the "Michigan State News" he had with him that day.

"The reaction I got from everybody I talked with that day was so positive," he remembers. "It inspired me to do it again."

Since he and his wife, Clara, enjoy traveling, he collects signatures on trips here and abroad.

Nashville Network dance show to tape at Water Wonderland

"Dancin' USA," a 30-minute dance and music show on cable television's The Nashville Network, is taping several episodes during five production days in Midland and Odessa. The sessions, which are being held at Water Wonderland, end Wednesday.

The show features contemporary country music with the feeling of a country and western nightspot. Area dancers are encouraged to participate and appear on camera.

Country music artist Jacky Ward is the host of "Dancin' USA." He is joined by the "Dancin' USA" band and a quartet of singers. Show production begins daily at 8 p.m. at Water Wonderland. Interested dancers need to arrive by 7:30 p.m. Expertise in the Cotton-Eyed Joe and the Texas Two-Step is helpful but not required.

The parts are unpaid, but participants will receive prizes and national television exposure. Minors must be accompanied by a parent or guardian. No special dress is required, but western wear is preferred. Faded blue jeans and white clothing are discouraged.

For additional information call Water Wonderland, 563-3141.

TNN is a national cable television network currently seem in more than 16 million homes. Programming is produced by The Nashville Network, a division of Opryland USA, Inc., Nashville. The service is marketed and distributed by Group W Satellite Communications.

Humorist to lecture at museum

John Henry Faulk is the guest lecturer Thursday at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, I-20 West. His talk is being presented as part of the museum's Fuqua Distinguished Lecture Series.

The Texas born and raised Faulk, a regular on the television show "Hee Haw," is nationally known as a humorist, folklorist and constitutional expert. He has had his own radio and television programs as well as guesting on such interview shows as "The Tonight Show" and "The Today Show." The Austin resident also has a number of acting roles to his credit, having appeared in the films "The Best Man," "Loving Molly" and "Leadbelly."

Faulk will speak on "To Secure the Blessings of Liberty." His remarks will be a folksy, humorous and yet serious account of the ideas and principles that are the essence of the people of the United States.

The lecture series is funded by The Sid W. Richardson Foundation in honor of the Fort Worth industrialist and philanthropist, H.B. Fuqua. The first speaker in the series was John E. Swearingen, retired board chairman of Standard Oil of Indiana.

The lecture will be followed by a reception honoring the speaker. Both the lecture and the reception are open to the public.

Pickwicks to perform 'Rascality'

The Pickwick Players of Midland Community Theatre are presenting the melodrama "Rascality on the Rig" today at 1:30 p.m. at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

MCT's youth performing group, the Pickwicks are doing their adaptation of the same melodrama being staged this summer during the 36th annual Summer Mummers. Admission is $3 and may be paid at the door. Cokes and popcorn will be sold.

Number of female gamblers up, experts say

By PHYLLIS ZAUNER
King Features Syndicate

Compulsive gamblers aren't in it just for fun. They're on a relentless course to self-destruction and they can't stop. Betting turns into the only focus of their lives. They'll lose everything before they hit bottom: jobs, family, self-respect.

Nineteen years ago, life had become pure hell for Diana S. of Los Angeles. The poker parlors of Orange County, which had started out as so much fun, had turned into 12 years of misery.

"I lived out my days and nights there, hating myself, unable to stop, writing bum checks, rushing home to make them good. I robbed my sons' piggy banks, cashed in my daughter's savings bonds. I loved those children dearly, yet I neglected them.

"One night my daughter, who was 12, called me at the game. She was crying and said her brother, who was 7, had scalded himself in the shower. I was terrified and told her I'd be right home. That was 9 p.m. I went back to pick up my chips, then without thinking I simply sat down and started playing again. I stayed until the place closed at 6 a.m.

"My husband tried to help me. He put me in a rest home for psychiatric care. I begged to get out, promised I'd never gamble again. Two days later I was back playing poker.

"THE END CAME one night when I was driving home, broke again, heartsick and forlorn. I realized what my life had come to. I was destroying myself, my husband, my children, my parents. My thoughts turned to suicide, which then seemed the only way out. But then I remembered a commercial for Gamblers Anonymous I had heard on the car radio that morning.

"When I got home I found the power had been shut off and the bank had closed my account. At 7 a.m. I called Gamblers Anonymous.

"I went to a meeting that very evening. I was scared; I didn't know what kind of people I'd meet there.

"They were wonderful. I tell you, there's so much love in those rooms — there's love, there's feeling, there's caring. That first year I went to 320 meetings. That was 19 years ago. I've never gambled since."

There are hundreds of similar stories, all heartbreaking, and so much alike it's frightening.

Barbara L., a divorced mother in her 40s, had a nice business going in New Jersey, her life put together — that is, until one day six years ago when curiosity brought her to the new Atlantic City casinos. Four years later she was $100,000 in debt and her life was in shambles.

SHE LOST HER business and her friends. She used up the money for her children's college education. She even gambled away their trust funds. A lot of her gambling was financed by the credit line the casino extended. Friends who knew her well said they would never have believed it could happen to her, she wasn't the type.

Sad as these stories are, they're not unusual. Experts estimate that in 1983 there were some 10 to 12 million people in this county who gambled uncontrollably.

Ten years ago, however, both Barbara and Diane would have stood out among compulsive gamblers because they're female. "The fact is that in the mid-1970s, one out of a hundred compulsive gamblers would be a woman," says Arnold Wexler of the National Council on Compulsive Gambling.

"Today, one out of five is a woman. It has gone from one percent to 20 percent. In some parts of the country, take Las Vegas, it's 30 percent women. In Southern California, where poker parlors abound, it's 40 percent."

Statistics on compulsive gamblers aren't precise. Unless they get caught, usually stealing money from their employers, or unless they seek help, they're invisible.

Unlike problem drinkers, they do not smell of alcohol. Unlike junkies, they bear no needle marks. The most visible sign of compulsive gamblers may be their mounting debts. A typical compulsive gambler owes creditors more than $80,000, according to a study by the Council of Compulsive Gambling.

EXPERTS SAY THAT one reason for the increase of women in the ranks is the new accessibility. In one decade, legalized gambling has increased its outlets by 340 prcent.

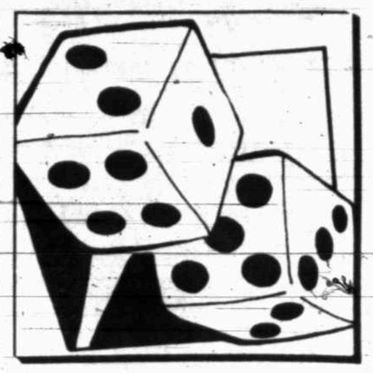
Currently, more than a hundred legislative bills are pending across the country to create some form of legalized gambling. In some cities, you can make a bet at any street corner. "You go to the store to buy milk," says Wexler, "and on the way you can throw a few bucks down on the lottery."

You think lotteries are small-peanuts gambling? Wexler cites one woman who embezzled $40,000, trying to cover $100,000 in losing lottery tickets.

Another major reason for the rise in women gamblers is the increasing availability of credit, both from banks and from casinos. Jane B., 49, of New Jersey, says that when she finally quit betting she was earning a salary of $15,000, but had a combined credit line of $50,000 from four Atlantic City casinos.

"They were very good to me. That's what really ruined me financially," she said, adding that she ended up owing more than $40,000 to casinos and that one had filed suit to collect. "I never walked away with winnings. I was always behind. The most I ever lost in one night was $15,000 because I didn't have time to lose more."

Sorting out the social gamblers from the compulsive gamblers is not clear-cut. But the National Foundation for the Study and Treatment of Pathological Gambling has sketched a profile of a typical female compulsive gambler: usually highly intelligent, often well educated, energetic, industrious, fond of challenge and competition.



SHE HAS A need for stimulation, can't tolerate boredom, doesn't relax. In act, the mold fits the workaholic. You might say it's the workaholic personality gone berserk.

A study by Robert Custer, a Washington, D.C. psychiatrist who is president of the National Foundation, reveals some significant common personality traits: an unrealistic view of their abilities, expecting to excel in most things; a feeling that money is to spend, not save; and a taking of risks, especially in financial affairs (such as-taking a commissioned sales job instead of a salaried one).

He notes that most female gamblers get the habit in their early 20s, whereas men start in their teens or earlier. The course of the disease follows a predictable pattern, too. The addiction begins with the first big win, which brings an unreasonable optimism, the sense of having been "chosen" by Lady Luck.

The hooked gambler then increases her bets, and when losses start mounting, superstition and mysticism seem to erode the gambler's sense of judgment. She goes into a losing phase, caring only about gambling, covering up with lies, losing touch with friends and family.

Wexler of the National Council on Compulsive Gambling has seen the same results in hundreds of sad cases. "They begin wondering why they keep creating pain for themselves and those around them and become incapable of stopping. Then the world comes crashing down. With a feeling of hopelessness, they are physically and psychologically exhausted.

"They are heavily in debt, alienated from everyone, one the verge of divorce, and welcome nowhere. One-fourth of them are about to be arrested. Depression and suicidal thoughts and attempts are common at this time, and they see only four options: suicide, imprisonment, running or seeking help. Yet they still have the urge to gamble.

THE WAY OUT is not easy. The first good luck the tragic gambler may have had in years is finding the way to Gamblers Anonymous.

At G.A. meetings, gamblers share their stories and are offered help and advice from others who have been in the same situation. In some areas of the country, membership has tripled in the past three years. And chapters that had been predominantly male are now finding women at the meetings.

Still, many women find it hard to share their intimate thoughts in the midst of 20 or 30 men. This bothers Barbara L., and she is working to create women-only meetings.

The other therapy alternative is special treatment centers, which are sorely needed. Briefly, the state of Maryland contributed a share of its lottery bankroll to a therapy center at Johns Hopkins. When funding was withdrawn, it was replaced by a non-profit, private program, the Washington Center for Pathological Gambling.

Here, in a comfortable home setting, gambling's victims (some sent by the courts) live together for two weeks, sharing their common affliction and learning how to get their lives in control through individual consultation and group discussion.

"One thing we insist on," says diirector Clark Hudak, "is restitution of debts. That's an integral part of being cured. These people have conned their families into bailing them out time after time. They must feel the pain of their disease."

CONSIDERING THE hundreds of millions of dollars that flood into state treasuries from gambling revenue, it's a sad commentary that almost nothing is set aside for research and treatment of gambling's casualties.

In New Jersey, where gambling revenue amounts to 7 percent of the state's budget, $200,000 was recently appropriated, thanks largely to the efforts of Assemblyman Chuck Hardwick, and $70,000 of that money will go to a treatment clinic at John F. Kennedy Medical Center.

Hardwick has introduced another bill that would tax each betting machine $25 a year for funds to go for treatment and research. "We can't depend on the industry to put up any money," he says. "It's up to the Legislature to do it."

"Fortunately," says psychiatrist Custer, "the compulsive gambler is a very treatable personality. They get enthusiastic about treatment and see the addiction as something to beat."

Still, he believes that as opportunities to gamble increase, so must support for those who get hooked. "Compulsive gambling depends on the first big win to reel in addicts. We've increased the opportunities to gamble. It's time to increase the opportunities for those whose lives are being ruined by the addiction."

Where to go for help

Compulsive gamblers and their families have a lot more than money to lose. If you have a gambling problem, or want to help someone, write or call:

Author offers 'epoch-making' sleep theory

"Landscapes of the Night: How and Why We Dream," by Christopher Evans, edited and completed by Peter Evans; Viking; $16.95; 254 pp.

A Review

By KENNETH ATCHITY
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

"We sleep in order to dream." With this simple statement Christopher Evans recapitulates the most important new theory of sleep and dreams since Freud's. Discounting once and for all the "exhaustion" as well as the "cultural habit" theories of sleep, experimental psychologist and microcomputer scientist Christopher Evans confirms my own conclusions that the primary and biologically necessary purpose of sleep is the avoidance of stimulation; and that the purpose of dreams is to sort stimuli.

Drawing both from historical surveys of dreams and paranormal experience and from scientific analysis following Freud, Jung, Dement, Ullmann and Kleitman, Evans offers a fully developed and epoch-making theory based on the computer analogy:

"Sleep is the period when the brain comes off-line, cutting itself off from the sensory input, and restricting psychomotor input. In this off-line period, the great software files of the brain become open and available for revision in the light of changes that have taken place as the result of the horde of new experiences which occur every day ... in sleep, man with his own tremendously advanced computer — his brain — might be performing an operation similar to and as vital as the modern computer program clearance."

Waking brings such a mass of incoming data to the brain that it stands to reason a sorting period is required. Freud's "day residue" is Evan's "new programming" that needs to be related to all previous programs for the system to continue smooth functioning. "During REM sleep — and possibly at other times as well — the brain is scanning this new information, rerunning and rewriting existing programs to see if they are relevant in light of the day's experience."

By Evans' model, what we have been calling "a dream" is "a momentary interception by the conscious mind of material being sorted, scanned, sifted..." He divides dreams into Type A, the ongoing inaccessible dreaming process, and Type B, the portion of Type A that we remember when we awaken ("a dream"). Neurophysiologists Robert McCarley and Allan Hobson among others have argued the primacy of the ongoing process to the "remembered" portion, but none have emphasized its psychological-mental (as opposed to neurological-physical) importance as Evans does.

His is a revolutionary redefinition for psychology, suggesting that until now the tail has been wagging the dog: "All human thinking about dreams, from the earliest philosophers through Freud and beyond, has concerned itself largely with, and has been based on, the second aspect of dreams, the intercepted part, and furthermore has considered that aspect to be the root and heart of what dreams are about. This is neither surprising nor reprehensible. After all it is, or has been, the only aspect of dreams that has made itself available for study, and it is only with the Dement-Kleitman work that we have realized that this aspect is but the tip of the iceberg."

Evans began by accepting William Dement's central assumption that an essential psychological process was occurring during REM periods. "I then moved to the 'dual memory' hypothesis and made the following proposal: Suppose that the short-term system could hold information circulating, so to speak, in an immediate-access store, but that the system was unable to keep this information indefinitely 'on hold.' At night, with sensory input reduced, some part of the brain would now get to work on the sensory data pool, sorting out the material into 'wanted' and 'unwanted,' filing the data according to whether it would be needed for immediate access or long-term store. The REM periods with their accompanying phases of hyperactivity might represent the sorting and transferring process." Of course sorting is best done while doing nothing else, just as reprogramming a computer must be done while the computer is off-line.

Considering the massive input of an ordinary day, it makes good sense that our "living programs" "must be constantly and regularly revised and updated."

Sir Francis Crick, known for his work with DNA, and Graeme Mitchison have recently suggested a similar model: "We dream in order to forget," and that the REM period is used by the brain to slough off what it doesn't need. Crick's model suggests that the brain has a limited capacity for storage and must clean house each night to avoid bursting. For Crick, dreams are "garbage out," leaving artists, prophets, analysts, the introspective and performers who have followed their dreams out with the day's refuse. Evans' model accomplishes the same function — tidying up rather than discarding — without detracting from the importance of the Type B dream.

Instead, Evans would agree that the housecleaning function itself is worth analysis for what it can reveal of the house. He agrees with those who, like psychologist Nicholas Humphrey of Cambridge University, speculate that dreams are "like dress rehearsals for events we can expect, hope for or fear in everyday life. Situations present themselves in which the dreamer is actor, playing a part, coping with the often strange twists of the plot, keeping abreast of the unfolding drama." Where Crick would say that the dream is a nonsensical scenario that should rightly be ignored, Evans would say it presents a pattern still worth analyzing (if one is analytical) or appreciating (if one is artistic).

He agrees with Jung that the human race shares "a significant number of rudimentary dream patterns," in the same way that we share "more overt psychological behavior patterns such as breathing and eating." These are the primary programs of survival. The dream-work process may even prepare us for death by running that program in advance until we become familiar with it: "...the older we get and the nearer we approach our death, oddly enough, the less terrifying it seems. Has dreaming over many years gradually enabled us to meet the inevitable with equanimity?"

Although the authors do not make the point, I'll make it for them: The computer analogy is not far-fetched. Humans designed computers and it is not surprising that mechanisms might reflect something of the creator's mind better even than the designer himself might have predicted.

Book shows actors 'in drag'

Reviews

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The more than 200 stills that make up "What a Drag" by Homer Dickens (Quill; $10.95) reminds us of how venerable a tradition "Tootsie" and "Victor-Victoria" followed. Indeed, the sexes have often been masquerading as one another with such unlikely fellows as Burt Lancaster in "The Crimson Pirate," Marlon Brando, "The Missouri Breaks," and Lee J. Cobb in "In Like Flint." Woody Allen fans will be especially amused by a shot from an ultimately unused sequence in "Bananas" as their hero poses as a "bewitching senorita."

Written in primer English and blithely confident that operant conditioning can solve all personnel problems, "Putting the One-Minute Manager to Work: How to Turn the Three Secrets into Skills" by Kenneth Blanchard and Robert Lorber (Morrow: $15) is the second volume in a series. We can be grateful that Blanchard has more people thinking about management, but regret that he is silent about such issues as what to do when an employee wants money rather than gold stars, for good performance.

Norway's population growth slows

Norway's natural population growth (excess of births over deaths) in 1983 was less than 0.2 percent of the population, the lowest growth rate since 1814. Births declined by 1,400 to 49,700, and deaths increased by 800 to 41,900. Net immigration increased by 1,400 to 4,200.

Novel straightforward, smooth, uncluttered

"I, Giorghos," By William J. Lederer. Norton. 287 Pages. $12.95.

A Review

By CAROLE DEEGAN
The Associated Press

While not every reader may find George Adamson's journey believable, few will argue the pleasure derived from reading a novel that is simple, straightforward and smooth-flowing, uncluttered by too much explanation and detail.

"I, Giorghos" is by William J. Lederer — an author, who along with Eugene Burdick, wrote "The Ugly American," a story that attracted much attention and interest when it was published some years back.

As "I, Giorghos" opens, Adamson, an American-born author, is on his way to Greece, where he had been acclaimed, 11 years earlier, for his book, "Mount Athos, the Holy Mountain." Adamson's returning to Greece older, heavier, and burdened by personal troubles. He needs the $10,000 advance promised by his Greek publisher for a new book in order to meet a $5,000 payment on his divorce settlement. He is 57 years old, and worried about his recent heart attack.

Almost from the moment Adamson steps on the plane to return to Greece, he begins a journey that will restore his physical health and his mental and emotional spirit. He will have many friends, old and new, to guide him along the way, including, oddly enough, an old, red Greek sailboat. During his stay in Greece, Adamson successfully researches and writes his new book about some early Greek saints.

But it is what Adamson doesn't discover in his research, which is what happened during the 40 days the saints went into the wilderness and fasted, that spurs him on to the final leg of his journey, where he finds the answers to some lifelong questions.

"I, Giorghos" is written in the form of a journal that Adamson keeps during a six-month period from April through October in 1967. In it, Adamson describes his adventures in Greece, the people he meets, and the struggle he has in ridding himself of past emotional scars. This is a very readable book, and Adamson is a thoroughly believable character.

Scotch whiskey blended

According to an act of Parliament, the expression "blended Scotch whiskey" means a blend of several distillates, each of which is entitled to the description "Scotch whiskey."

Barbecued seafood low-cal alternative

By PHILOMENA CORRADENO
King Features Syndicate

Way back in 1773, George Washington recorded in his diary that he enjoyed "a Barbicue of my own making at Accatinck." From that entry we can assume that George did the cooking, that the colonials had a strange way of spelling and it was probably a meat barbecue.

The word "barbecue" originally referred to the wooden framework or grill over which food was cooked. Nowadays, it's a way of cooking.

The variety of grills, equipment and accessories is as wide as all outdoors. The fire-tender has instant-lighting charcoal briquets, packaged wood chips or chunks and fire-starters. There's even a chimney charcoal starter that is a miracle aid for avoiding exasperation. Gaining popularity are the woods: mesquite, hickory and oak.

If you don't want to be exhausted by the time everyone else is enjoying the food, ignore the onlookers and heed the advice of the experts for getting a good fire going.

Line the fire pit with aluminum foil. It helps distribute the heat and makes cleanup easier.

Stack briquets in a pyramid. This acts as a kind of flue and provides proper ventilation to the fire. Use an electric, liquid or jelly starter and carefully follow package instructions. Light the fire early so by the time you're ready for the fire, the fire is ready for you.

Be patient: Wait for a white ashy cover on the coals. This will take from 20 to 40 minutes, depending on amount of coal, size of the fire bowl and ventilation. In daylight the coals will look white; at night, they'll have a red glow.

Next, spread the coals out in a single layer extending about one inch beyond the edge of the food. This provides direct heat to the grill. For indirect heat to the food, push glowing coals to one side; for hotter indirect heat, spread the coals around the edge of the fire bowl.

To judge temperature, carefully hold your hand over the fire at grid level. If you can hold your hand in position for five seconds, the temperature is low; for four seconds, it's medium; for three seconds, it's medium-hot; for two seconds, it's hot.

Now then, to get to the meat of the matter — that meat being fish:

This summer, if you want to elevate your outdoor cooking to cuisine al fresco, consider a seafood barbecue instead of the usual franks, burgers, steaks and chicken.

Grilled shell- or fin fish is delicious and perfect for light, easy summer meals and a low-calorie alternative to meat. Lobster is the obvious choice. Ah, but there's a whole sea of less expensive, tasty denizens of the deep (and not-so-deep).

The fatty or moderately fat species such as salmon, trout, bluefish, catfish, butterfish, striped bass, swordfish and so many others take very well to the open fire.

Lean varieties such as halibut, red snapper, bass, flounder, sole, tilefish and shark — yes, shark — can also be open-grilled but are perfect when foil-wrapped.

In any case, for easy turning, a long-handled grill basket is ideal. If the skin is left on, fish is less likely to fall apart when removed from the grill. Spray grill, grid and basket with no-stick vegetable spray.

The meat barbecuer always seems to be in a contest to come up with a "new" concoction. In fish cuisine, indoors or out, the secret is simplicity. Never allow seasonings or sauces to take over. Let them enhance, never overpower.

Start your fish feast with a well-flavored seafood appetizer: scallops and cantaloupe balls marinated in a limey, minty bath then skewered and grilled.

SKEWERED SCALLOP APPETIZER
1½ pounds scallops
3 tablespoons fresh lime juice
2 tablespoons minced mint leaves or 2 teaspoons dried mint
1½ tablespoons honey
¾ teaspoon salt
1 large cantaloupe, cut into balls
12 bamboo skewers
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
Lettuce leaves

Rinse scallops in a bowl of cold water; drain and pat dry with paper towels. Cut large scallops into bite-size pieces. Combine lime juice, mint, honey and salt in a large bowl. Add scallops and melon balls. Cover bowl with plastic wrap; refrigerate 1 hour.

Meanwhile, soak skewers in water to cover. Prepare grill for barbecuing. Drain skewers; pat dry with paper towels. Melt butter.

Alternately thread scallops and melon balls on skewers. Brush with butter. Grill 5 inches above medium-hot coals for 2 minutes; turn; brush with additional butter and continue to grill just until scallops are firm, about 3 minutes more. Serve skewers on lettuce-lined platter.

Heavy-duty aluminum foil does wonders on the fire. Securely wrap individual portions, seasonings and liquid. The simmering liquid produces steam. The result: a fragrantly moist delicious delicacy that would be appropriate even in a formal dinner setting.

SESAME FISH FILLETS
4 fillets of sole or flounder
1 tablespoon sesame seeds
¼ cup bottled teriyaki sauce
3 tablespoons orange juice
1 tablespoon cognac or brandy
1 teaspoon sesame oil
¼ teaspoon ground ginger
1 tablespoon slivered green onion

Rinse fillets in cold water; pat dry with paper towels.

In a small saucepan, heat sesame seeds until golden. Remove from heat; set aside.

Combine teriyaki sauce, orange juice, cognac, sesame oil and ginger. Tear four 12-inch pieces of heavy-duty foil. Fold a fish fillet crosswise in half and place on piece of foil. Pour teriyaki mixture over each fillet. Sprinkle each with sesame seeds and green onion.

Wrap fillets securely. Place packets on grill about 5 inches above medium-hot coals. Grill 10 to 12 minutes or until fish flakes easily.

SALMON AND MUSHROOMS
4 salmon steaks or fillets (about 6 ounces each)
3 tablespoons butter or margarine, melted
⅛ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
⅛ teaspoon rosemary, crushed
2 tablespoons dry vermouth or dry white wine
1 cup sliced mushrooms
2 tablespoons minced green onion

Cut four 12-inch squares of heavy duty or double thickness aluminum foil; grease top surface. Place salmon steaks on foil. Combine butter, seasonings and vermouth; stir in mushrooms and green onion. Divide mushroom mixture over salmon; seal foil tightly.

Barbecue on grill or directly on medium hot coals. Cook 10 to 15 minutes or until salmon flakes easily when tested with a fork; turn packets every 5 minutes.

FISH AND SCALLIONS
1½ pounds fish fillets
8 scallions
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup bottled lemon juice
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
¼ teaspoon black pepper
⅛ teaspoon salt

Cut of tough ends of scallions. Split them lengthwise in half and wash well.

Butter 4 large squares of heavy-duty aluminum foil. Divide fish into four portions. Place one serving on each square of foil.

In small saucepan, melt butter; add lemon juice, parsley, pepper and salt. Pour equal amounts over fish. Top each with two scallions. Wrap foil securely around fish, leaving space for fish to expand. Grill 5 to 7 minutes on each side, or until fish flakes with fork.

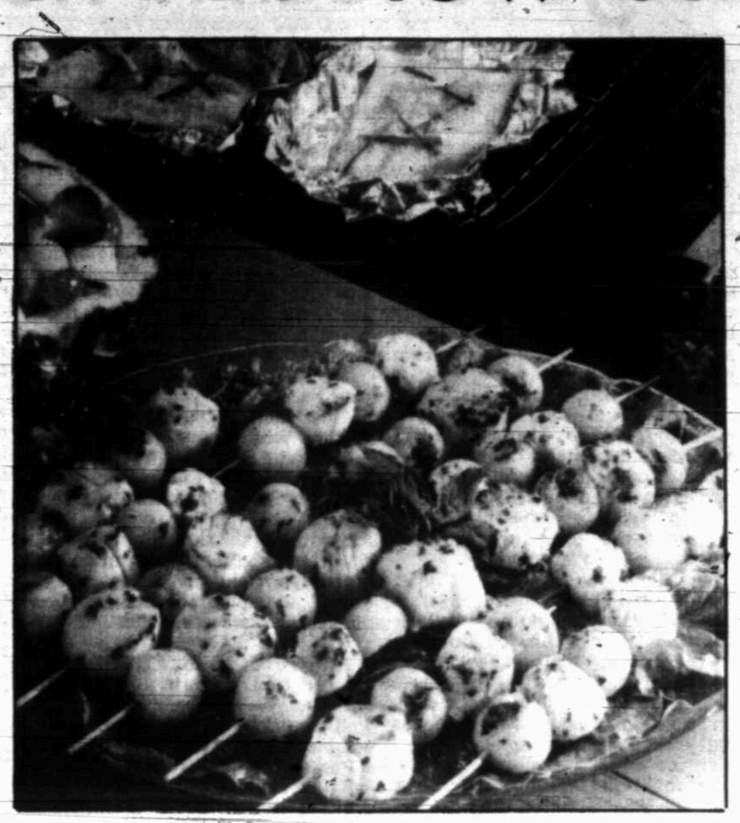
In your search for something different, look to whole fish and steaks. Consider mako shark. It's similar in taste and texture to swordfish, although it's moister and more delicate in flavor. It may be substituted in any swordfish recipe for about half the price. Green peppercorns, a recent gourmet rage, and mustard add zip to the butter.

MAKO SHARK
4 (4 ounce) shark steaks
Juice of one lemon
⅓ cup olive oil
1 stick sweet butter, softened



Skewered Scallop Appetizer

Salt, pepper
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
1 teaspoon chopped fresh parsley
1 teaspoon chopped fresh chives
2 teaspoons green peppercorns
1 teaspoon brandy

Marinate shark steaks in lemon juice and olive oil for one hour.

Meanwhile, blend softened butter with remaining ingredients. Roll in waxed paper or aluminum foil to form a cylinder. Chill and slice down into individual rounds.

Grill shark steaks about four inches from fire, about 10 minutes per inch of thickness. Check often. When steaks are cooked, place sliced butter pats on top and serve.

BARBECUED WHOLE FISH
Any whole fish, dressed
Onion rings
Fresh herbs (parsley, dill, etc.)
Herbed-Butter

Wash fish and pat dry. Stuff cavity with onion rings and fresh herbs. Oil long-handled grill basket with vegetable oil and place fish inside. Brush fish with Herbed Butter (recipe follows). Place basket on cooking grid 4 to 5 inches over medium-hot coals. Cook 10 minutes per inch of thickness, turning once during grilling time. Brush with herbed butter frequently during cooking to prevent drying.

Herbed Butter: ½ cup butter, softened, 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, ¼ teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons sliced, green onion, ½ teaspoon tarragon leaves

Combine all ingredients in small bowl. Brush on fish while grilling.

Seafood-loving Scandinavians usually serve cucumbers with their fish. We borrowed the idea for a salad but added rice for substance.

And what's a barbecue without corn? For a delicious touch, barbecue it. Or for convenience, you might cook it indoors and serve it piping hot. Have plain butter for the purists, and for the more daring, mix a little dry mustard or curry into softened butter or try herbs to enhance the corn.

CUCUMBER RICE SALAD
3 cups cooked rice, cooled
2 medium cucumbers, peeled and chopped
1 small green pepper, chopped
½ cup chopped radishes
⅔ cup bottled Italian dressing
½ teaspoon powdered mustard
⅛ teaspoon ground white pepper

Combine rice, cucumber, pepper and radishes. Blend remaining ingredients. Toss dressing lightly with rice mixture. Chill. Makes 6 servings.

CORN ON THE COB

Peel back husks from 6 ears sweet corn; remove corn silk. Brush with softened butter or margarine; season with pepper. Replace husk around corn. Place on heavy duty or double thickness aluminum foil; sprinkle each ear with ⅛ teaspoon water. Wrap tightly. Place on grill or directly on medium hot coals and barbecue 15 to 20 minutes or until tender; turn frequently. Makes 4 servings.

GRILLED FRUIT

Fruit makes an extraordinary dessert with barbecued fish. Halved or whole, it may be skewered or wrapped in heavy duty foil. Rotate several times, using tongs.

Apples, fresh or canned peaches and pears, apricots, plums, wrapped individually, are grilled over medium or low heat until done. Test with a fork. Time will vary, depending on the fruit. Apples and pears, for example, will take about 50 minutes.

Grapes, so good with fish, and cherries should be wrapped in foil.

Bananas are ideal for ember-cooking. Lightly oil skins of firm, green-tipped bananas and cook them directly on low coals, or place them on the grill, turning occasionally and cooking until skins turn black. Remove from heat with tongs.

Oranges and grapefruit: Skewer sections and cook over low heat. Or grill halves, cut side down over low heat.

Successful managers learn how to delegate

By JOAN IACONETTI
King Features Syndicate

At last you've done it! For nearly two years you've been building a reputation as the company's most indispensable administrative assistant. You've spent time and effort learning the ins and outs of your department, taken care of everything from sending out for pizza to dealing (successfully) with your boss's most demanding clients.

You've also stayed late on countless Friday evenings to take care of important paperwork and made a point of becoming familiar with people and operations your supervisor needs to keep the department — and your jobs — running smoothly.

Now, all that hard work and increasing savvy have finally been rewarded with a promotion to a supervisory position and your own project to manage. Here's the opportunity you've been waiting for.

But the delicious adrenaline surge of triumph soon becomes tinged with a sobering realization that, along with the new office, staff and healthier paycheck, you've also been given an enormous amount of unfamiliar — and important — work you are now fully responsible for, no matter what.

Check your initial reaction to the above scenario. Is it confusion? Momentary panic? Bravely resigning yourself to zero social life for weeks (months?) until you've done every bit of research, telephoning and paperwork the project calls for? If so, take a deep breath and relax. You simply need to know more about the essential art of delegating, a skill that every successful manager has mastered.

WHEN YOU KNOW how to delegate, you'll be at ease approaching any project in terms of the results it's intended to produce. You decide how to break up the work into manageable tasks, evaluate your staff as far as skills and interests go, and systematically "give away" work to the appropriate people.

"Wait," you say. "I'm responsible for the project. They wouldn't have promoted me if they'd expected someone else to do it. Yes, there is a mountain of work involved, but that's what I'm being paid for."

Are you? One of the most common — and dangerous — mistakes made by new managers is to assume that they have to do it all because no one else can perform these tasks better/quicker/more creatively than they can.

The reluctance to delegate — to utilize available staff and resources to get the job done successfully — short-circuits many a promising career and makes drudges out of otherwise bright, promotable young people.

"Learning which tasks to delegate, and deciding when and how to assign them effectively, is probably the most important skill a manager at any level can develop. In fact, it's a necessity," stresses Nancy Ferrantella, director of training with New York City's Department of Personnel.

Managers aren't supposed to do the whole job themselves; their essential purpose in the organization is to coordinate and direct other employees' efforts.

AN EVEN WORSE problem is that too many people still believe becoming a supervisor means they should keep doing everything they did in their old slots and take on a host of new duties.

Not so. What's needed is a change in focus: from taking directions to giving them. If you're a secretary who distinguished herself or himself through hard work and willingness to shoulder extra assignments, getting in the habit of delegating may seem an alien way to operate — maybe even a cop-out.

You're proud of your ambition, respected around the office for consistently pulling your weight (and then some). And maybe you're a little scared you'll suddenly come across like a Queen Bee if you start "bossing around" the people who used to be your peers in the company hierarchy. What to do? Are you expected to change your job, office and personality overnight?

Of course not. But it is essential to understand how good delegating skills can benefit you, your staff and the organization you work for.

"The question every manager should ask (themselves) each day is 'What work can I give away so I'll have more time to manage and help subordinates learn something new?'" says Patrick O'Hara, a Manhattan management consultant who teaches business administration at John Jay College.

Refusing to delegate work (or doing so haphazardly) sabotages not only the company's goals but your own effectiveness. Silently resolving to give up your lunch hour or raquetball game to complete tasks your secretary or assistant could perform is neither noble nor conscientious.

INSTEAD IT'S A misguided, if well-meant, decision that cripples you with unnecessary detail and sets a dubious precedent for your staff.

Even experienced managers have a difficult time letting go of certain responsibilities and delegating them appropriately. Vanessa, a district manager for a large accounting firm, persists in handling some routine audits that could easily be completed by her staff.

"My people are perfectly able to do the work, of course," she says, "but since I'm ultimately responsible for their accuracy, why not take a little extra time and handle at least half the audits myself? Besides...I rather enjoy checking figures."

Vanessa hasn't yet realized that the "little extra time" is costing her points in her own boss's estimation. What he sees is that she's not using her time to go after new accounts or develop her staff.

Members of her department, at first relieved that Vanessa had taken over some of their work, have begun to wonder if it's because she doesn't trust them.

And her fellow supervisors are alternately envious and irritated: "Van can practically go over those audits blindfolded. Why doesn't she attend to the job she's being paid to do?" Bogged down in trivia, Vanessa has lost sight of the company's goals and her position in the organization.

CONTRAST VANESSA'S situation with that of Maureen T. Celusta, who left her job as a training specialist with Blue Cross to become administrator of liaison services for a large health-maintenance network in Los Angeles.

"I wasn't promoted from within, so I wasn't a technician in the area," she says. "I had to rely on my people, simply because I didn't know how to do that part of the work myself. As a result, I became an excellent delegator."

Being hired from the outside also circumvents problems that arise when a co-worker suddenly becomes a subordinate. "Making the transition from friend to boss is a difficult one, even when everyone concerned knows your purpose is to get the job done," comments Phyllis White, group manager of the Human Resources Division of the American Management Association.

"Still, I've found that problems rarely arise as long as the (person) doing the delegating is comfortable in the role. Otherwise there can be resentment."

While most firms are aware of this potentially sticky situation and try to avoid it, getting used to delegating as quickly as possible is one way to defuse the tension that often accompanies a promotion from within.

Whether you've been managing people for two weeks or two years, learning to "let go" of work and feel secure about doing so is crucial to career success. Theodore J. Krein, a psychologist and specialist in professional development, has pinpointed attitudes that keep people from delegating more effectively.

SAY YOU HAVE a problem dealing with the way your own boss approaches her (or his) job. Does she really expect you to follow up on every detail? Does she care how a task gets done, as long as it's done well? You may be creating burdens for yourself where none exist, so take the time to sit down with the boss and redefine both your goals and his/hers as well as the ground rules for getting there.

The boss will be impressed with your concern, and you'll have a clearer picture of what's expected of you and your staff. This is also an excellent time to draw your boss out about their own delegating methods. Learn from the competent people around you.

Another common problem is confusing responsibility with accountability. True, you're the one who's responsible for getting work out accurately and on time, but this rarely becomes a problem when you let your subordinates know that they're accountable for each task you've delegated.

Setting up — and sticking to — checkpoints and follow-up meetings forestalls last-minute crises. Equally important, doing so creates a satisfying what-I-do-around-here-really-counts attitude in the people who work with you. Though it's tempting to assign only routine tasks and keep the "hard stuff" for yourself, remember that part of your new position includes developing your staff.

"In fact, you should be training your successor if you plan to move on to a more responsible position," says Ms. White.

"Good delegating ultimately means being able to leave the office for a week and remain confident that your people can cope." Allow subordinates to take on new responsibilities; let them make mistakes, learn from them, correct them. You'll get points for beng a good planner and a trusting manager.

IF YOU CONSISTENTLY work longer hours than you should because you're afraid underlings won't complete the job properly, you may be your own worst enemy.

Perfectionism, workaholism — call it what you will — these are personal attitudes that you translate into self-defeating behavior at the office.

Expecting staff members to behave as if they automatically share these ways of thinking is a quick way to drive yourself (and them) crazy. Instead, ask yourself whether your goals and standards are realistic.

If so, have you communicated them clearly? Have you let your staff know you'll be available to coach (but not to carry) them through the difficult or unfamiliar tasks you've delegated? Did you take time to listen carefully to their comments and answer questions?

Because these attitudes are part of your personality, they're highly resistant to change, but don't shrug it all off with "Well, that's just the way I am." You can change your behavior toward both work and staff, and gradually prove to yourself that in the long run, careful delegation pays off for all of you.

Finally, you may have to make a real effort to stop feeling guilty or uncomfortable about delegating. You're sharp enough to know that anyone is more productive when he or she isn't swamped with unfamiliar, boring tasks, and to remember how you felt when you were on the receiving end of some thoughtless delegation... or is "dumping" more the word?

Here's where those new-role/self-image bugaboos sneak into play. You're already in uncharted waters handling new duties — who wants to risk resentment or misunderstanding with your staff? Easier to do the work yourself?

THERE'S NO REASON to make important work sound like drudgery.

— Get your subordinates' ideas on how best to complete the task. Again, listen. People love to be taken seriously, whether or not you agree with their ideas. Encourage independent thinking and discussion whenever possible.

— Mean what you say. Once you've given authority to a worker to carry out a task, don't take it back without a good reason. If you must, establish a reputation for straightforwardness by explaining why to the person involved. Prevent frayed nerves by allowing time for your staff to learn from the mistakes they'll occasionally make.

— Delegate on a continuous basis. Let your people know that passing work along is business-as-usual. Haphazard delegation looks too much like dumping, and it breeds resentment.

— Encourage feedback, both formal and informal. Be sure subordinates know they can come to you with questions whenever necessary, and with progress reports on specified dates. Be ready to give them the occasional pep talk, too — often more effective with a discouraged worker than a how-to-do-it response.

— Follow up when the job is done. Where credit is due, give it lavishly, "and let the rest of your staff know that you truly appreciate a job well done," advises Ms. White. "Rewards are extremely important for staff morale"...whether they take the form of a bonus, extra time off or a sincere smile and warm "thank you."

AND IF THE job wasn't so well done? Use foul-ups constructively as part of that particular worker's training; then give him or her another opportunity to try again soon. Ignoring mistakes is as ill advised as overreacting to them.

What else will delegating get you? "More hours to dream up the next project, relax for half an hour when you need to, pursue your next promotion," says management consultant O'Hara.

It will also get you respect and results — plus the sweet satisfaction of knowing that your staff will be ready and able to fill your shoes when that next promotion moves you on to even greater challenge and prestige.

Custody fights take toll on parents, children

By KAY MARIE PORTERFIELD
King Features Syndicate

The knock at the door came the day before Thanksgiving. Up to her elbows in stuffing, Sarah grabbed a towel and tried to make herself presentable. The caller was a stranger. He smiled at her, wished her a happy holiday, then handed her a paper and turned to disappear into the snowy darkness.

Bewildered, she called out a thank-you to him, then closed the door and read the message. It was an official legal summons stating that her ex-husband was suing for custody of both children.

Fear and anger overwhelmed her, and the following Monday, when she could finally reach her lawyer, the news wasn't tremendously encouraging. "It's in your favor that you've raised the kids for the past four years," he told her.

"Judges are reluctant to arbitrarily take them from their custodial parent, but a good deal depends on the judge we draw and just what sort of a mood that judge is in on the day we have the final hearing."

It was the beginning of a nightmare for the kids and for Sarah. At each step of the court process, her ex-husband introduced new motions that kept delaying the final decision. Feeling the stress of an uncertain future before them, both Sarah and her elementary-school-age children found therapy essential to survival.

BEWTEEN SPENDING at least $100 a month in legal bills and more than $300 for therapy, she was forced to move to a run-down section of town. Her ex made it clear that because of her "choice" of neighborhoods, Sarah was an unfit mother, and he promptly moved to a posh apartment complex to gain points with the judge.

After two years, the warring parties finally faced off in the courtroom. Sarah was awarded complete custody of the children, and the court set up an extremely structured and limited visitation schedule between her former husband and the children.

"I guess I should have gone out to celebrate," she says looking back two years after the terrible time. "But I was so drained, I went to bed and cried for two days. It has taken these past years to get back to normal after the ordeal. I still feel vulnerable because there's nothing stopping my ex from filing papers again."

She shrugs. "In custody battles, there aren't winners and losers, only losers."

An estimated 10 percent of divorces are complicated by hassles over child custody, and not a few divorced spouses go back to court long after the decree is signed to forcibly change the original custody arrangements.

Even though much has been written and said about how custody wars affect the children of divorce, those battles can take their toll on parents, too.

ALTHOUGH MANY custody battles are fought because the parents without the kids feel they aren't being properly cared for or want to do the caring themselves, others are waged for ulterior motives.

According to many lawyers and psychologists, some parents may not have emotionally resigned themselves to the divorce or started detaching from the former spouse. A custody battle becomes a way to continue contact, even if it is mainly through lawyers, and to work through the issues that remain unresolved after the divorce.

Unfortunately, it is an expensive form of therapy, both in terms of money and emotional cost. "Trying to be an effective single parent during the middle of a custody fight is almost impossible," according to one man whose ex-wife willingly gave him custody of their son after the divorce and then changed her mind later.

"You have to be caught up in evaluating everything you do in terms of: What will the court think about this? When you live with children, a lot of your self-concept gets tied up in your identity as a parent. You find yourself courting the children, trying to convince them to take your side. You eat, live and breathe litigation."

The single parent who would never consider fighting dirty under any other circumstances will rise up like an angry bear when the children are involved. Some fathers' rights groups advise men without custody to lavish money and attention on their children during visits and then to capture these fantasy visits on film so they will have a scrapbook to show the judge when they go to court.

Although not all lawyers urge clients to sling mud at the other parent, there is always some accusation and name-calling inherent in the litigation process. If one party to the dispute begins playing dirty, the other may be forced to play by unethical rules.

IN THE MEANTIME, the children, upset by the stress, often are openly persuaded by each parent to take sides. For survival, it's easy for a child to act one way with one parent and another way with the other.

"I'd tell my dad I wanted to live with him and my mother I wanted to stay with her," admits a 12-year-old boy. "But I didn't know who the judge was going to say I had to live with, and I couldn't make anybody mad at me." Even though a child may not deliberately play both parents against the middle, often the children do add fuel to the custody fire.

Ironically, the emotional reactions most parents experience in their fight for retaining custody are called their worst enemies, even more damaging than the parent who is out to take the kids away. Rage, depression, anxiety, grief and worry make it all too easy to appear to be a flaky parent, even though they didn't appear that way until after the subpoena was served.

According to Robert Wood, a psychologist and author of "Getting Custody," the attacked parent needs to take care of herself or himself and avoid self-defeating behaviors and people. Says Wood, "The challenge, especially in the period of time when you may be under fire and somewhat drained of ego strength, is to pattern your life so that you purposefully avoid coming in contact with people who have something to gain by attacking or rejecting you.

"Instead, you should enter situations in which you at least have a fair chance of being accepted as you are, and, you hope, going the step further to being liked."

Sometimes these support networks can and should include a professional therapist. "I was very reluctant to get professional help at the beginning," Sarah admits. "I really thought it was an admission of failure or craziness and that it would weigh against me in court.

"IT WAS MY lawyer who encouraged me to seek help. He said that the fact that I could respond to stress in a constructive way would be a positive rather than a negative."

In truth, judges rarely change custody once it has been established unless there has been a dramatic change in the lifestyle or quality of parenting the custodial parent is providing.

If money is at issue and the parent seeking to remove the children from their established home earns substantially more than the custodial parent, most judges tend to keep the custody arrangements the same and increase child-support payments.

Simply missing the children and wanting them is not generally enough motivation to convince a judge that the kids should change homes. Factors that do affect a judge's decision are the morals of the parents, the custodial parent's ability to take care of the children, and if the child is approaching the teen years or older, his or her wishes.

Obviously, because custody battles are legally complicated, the first step a threatened parent should take is to contact a lawyer, a good one, who will devote time and attention to the case.

It is important, as well, to pick a lawyer who will listen to your input. Because legal precedent does vary from state to state, it is essential to ask your lawyer just what positives and negatives exist in your life as you prepare to go to court.

BECAUSE NO lawyer can properly work up a case for a client who doesn't tell all, it is important to admit all of your strengths and weaknesses with the legal professional.

If dates stay overnight when your children are present, hiding it from the lawyer won't do any good. Chances are, the issue will come up in court and the lawyer won't have a strategy to counter it. Excessive drinking, "immoral friends," living with a lover and gaps in parenting skills all can be used against you.

Even though at first sight, such errors may seem hopeless, there is usually time between when the papers are first served and the case actually comes to court to get your life in order.

If you can show that you've recognized your shortcomings and that you have taken steps to overcome them, you stand a good chance of maintaining custody. Even when a custodial parent is an alcoholic, the children generally aren't removed if the parent has stopped drinking and undergone alcoholism treatment before the hearing.

In the interim, keeping family life as normal as possible can help restore your own sense of balance as well as that of the children. Failing to discipline because the kids might tell your ex, or because they threaten to tell the judge they want to live with the other parent, does neither you nor them any good.

"You need to learn to look at the custody battle as a part of your life, not your entire life," advises Kate Cusack, a Denver social worker who has participated in a number of custody evaluations. It is critical to turn your attention to work, friends and recreation instead of brooding over the situation constantly.

EVEN THOUGH IT may be temporary, a grim, anxious family environment is bound to come out before the judge or an evaluation team the judge might appoint. While some tension centering around a custody fight is normal, a household consumed with anxiety isn't healthy.

Even though "in the best interests of the child" is a term you'll hear frequently when the issue of child custody is debated, you need, in your own mind, to begin considering your best interests, as well.

Being the target of a custody battle can either tear you apart emotionally, or it can serve as impetus to improve your life and the lives of your children. Even when the accusations hurled your way are totally unfounded, it is possible to use this time of turmoil to clarify and resolve unfinished business from the divorce.

Sleep styles differ as do fingerprints

By DOREEN T. HANSBURY
King Features Syndicate

Sleep styles are as individual as fingerprints. No two are alike. Some people curl up into a tight ball and don't move until the first light of dawn. Others twirl around the bed like clothes in the dryer. Asked how they slept, this type invariably chirps, "Like a log!" Often, these two types marry.

Sleepers include snufflers, grunters, growlers, talkers, walkers and snorers.

It's been easy for me to gather facts on such a variety of sleep patterns. Our immediate family of five exhibits all of them at one time or another.

Lately, I've found my sleep-o-stat showing signs of needing a tune-up. At a meeting, I can doze instantly, perched on a chair built for a 2-year-old. But later, when I slide into a comfortable bed, my eyelids snap to attention.

Trying to watch a TV show I've anticipated all afternoon, I end up snoring at a decibel rate high enough to muffle the roar of a jet engine. As my husband nudges me awake, I move through my before-bed routine with all the zip of a zombie.

But at 3 a.m., I'm staring at the ceiling, planning the menu for Christmas dinner, 1986. I did the 1985 menu at 2 a.m.

This sleep pattern has developed slowly over the years. It may have been brought on by having children.

"Did the baby's breathing sound regular?" I'd ask myself in the middle of the night, and pad in to find out.

Later, years later, I keep one ear alert for the sounds of offsprings' or their friends' cars in the driveway. I check the clock as I check them in. "There's the Honda. There's the Vega." And, as dawn's early light appears, "There's the VW."

It seems my body has become conditioned to full alert after midnight.

The subject of sleep came up one recent afternoon in Mona's darkened living room while looking at slides of her latest trip to Barbados.

Actually, it was a natural accompaniment to the sound of neck-snapping nods as the lights were turned on. Barbados quickly was forgotten while we each explored the best way to get a good night's rest.

Agnes couldn't stand the thought of eight hours of her day producing nothing but a rumpled bed.

"Do you realize," she noted, "that we spend one-third of our lives sleeping? I've found a way to put those wasted hours to good use," she boasted. "I put a learning cassette on the tape recorder and let it play while I sleep. My subconscious does the rest. A little supplemental reading in the morning and I'm ready for a quiz the afternoon. So far, I've mastered courses in data processing, hypnotism techniques and Portuguese."

Agnes didn't explain how this mix of information did anything to ease her organized life.

Still, it sounded like a great idea. I could use a few brush-up courses like "How to Balance Your Checkbook in One Afternoon" or "Two Hundred New Ways to Surprise Your Family With Chicken."

On the other hand, I wondered if it was fair to keep my subconscious from getting a good night's rest. Anyway, how could I "sleep learn" if I couldn't sleep?

I asked Mona how she avoided sleepless nights. Perhaps this time her suggestions would include something I could afford. It was worth a try.

Mona explained that lately she had suffered from nighttime wakefulness, too. But she immediately searched out enough sleep aids to keep her hibernating for six months. Mona found the answer to her insomnia problem, just as she does all others — by buying things.

First, she found a waterbed, then a nifty gadget called a sound conditioner. This emits a noise that drowns out disturbing sounds in the area, like her husband gargling in the bathroom or the jangle of the Dow Jones slipping 10 points. Any disturbing din is replaced with the synthesized cadence of soothing surf beating on the shore, falling rain or a gurgling waterfall.

Along with these, Mona bought the latest in ear plugs (in case the sound synthesizer fails), eye shades and a satin-covered pillow to slip under her head.

I couldn't help but imagine that Mona, ready to crawl into bed, must resemble something dropped off by a passing UFO. Could this explain why her husband has taken to sleeping in one of their spare bedrooms?

I wanted a good night's sleep, but I wasn't prepared to cash in bonds to duplicate Mona's paraphernalia.

Next, I turned to Olivia for advice. Olivia promised me instant heavy eyelids. She told me that a soothing cup of her "Tran-Quil-I-Tea," a mixture of her homegrown herbs, would have the right sedative effect to bring on eight hours of undisturbed slumber.

Olivia observed she has no insomnia problems. She attributed this to the green and restful atmosphere of her bedroom, which has just a few less plants than the local botanical garden.

"The soft, natural color and the higher-than-usual level of humidity all add to a sleep-inducing atmosphere," she explained. She slipped a package of herbal tea into my purse and promised I'd feel better in the morning.

Agatha noted the dark circles under my eyes and started her interrogation. "Do you watch TV in the evening?" she asked.

When I explained that the only place I seemed to be able to snooze lately was in front of the lighted screen, Agatha harumphed. "Maybe, but can you sleep when you get to bed?" she asked, knowing full well what my answer would be.

"How can you expect to sleep when you've spent the evening cramming your head with..." (and she counted them off on her fingers):

"1. One-half hour of canned laughter not related to anything that you can see or hear.

"2. One hour of car chases that end in fiery crashes.

"3. One hour of depressing documentaries that try to convince you that the world, the nation and your personal health should be viewed with nothing but alarm.

"4. Topped off by...one-half hour of dismal, disturbing news analysis?

"Turn the set off," Agatha commanded. "Put on some good records and then, just before you are ready for bed, sip a glass of warm milk. You'll sleep like a baby," she assured me.

In a roundabout way, Agatha's advice proved to be the best.

My husband and I pulled out the records and discovered some old 78s of Glenn Miller and Tommy Dorsey. We spun them until the needle wobbled, while we Lindy-Hopped a new, worn spot in the rug.

It's hard to leave old home, memories

By CHERYL MACDONALD
King Features Syndicate

We're moving, leaving the home we've shared since our first wedding anniversary. Someone else will live here now, someone who will have to adjust to the particular quirks of this old house. Someone else will live here now — not me.

How often did the furnace die on a cold winter night or the fuses blow in the middle of cooking breakfast? How often did the hot-water faucet refuse to turn off, leaving me elbow-deep in dishwater? I thought I'd be happy to leave this place, but now, with moving day a handful of hours away, I'm not so sure.

Swaddling our dishes and other treasures in last week's newspaper, I recall the dear people who gave them to us. I can still see my grandmother pulling dishes and linen out of her own cupboards to help furnish my home.

The seahorse picture in the bathroom was my sister-in-law's first attempt at embroidery; the fireplace accessories came from our parents. Some things I look at bring tears: the picture of a special friend who died so young, so needlessly. Other things make me smile at the memory of jokes and laughter.

Stripped of all personal touches, the rooms still retain the past. The living room, for instance, with its welcoming fireplace, where Dan and I dreamed and planned and changed our plans when we needed to. We decorated the room with special care, staining the pine panels individually, hand-polishing each to a satin sheen. No other room holds more memories, unless it's Catherine's bedroom.

I sat here watching television one night when the baby stirred inside me for the first time. Her tiny foot kicked strongly at her father's head as he sat on the floor at my feet. Dan and I laughed, and shortly afterwards the TV and armchair were replaced with a white crib and rocker.

Beyond the bushes at the rear of the house is the river, and perhaps of all the things I'll lose by moving I'll miss it most of all. I've seen the river change from azure to white-capped gray, watched chunks of ice drift downstream, heralding the spring.

When the moon is full, its reflection shimmers in the dark water like an earthbound star. Rustling leaves from three huge maples muffle the sound of nearby cars. The river and those three maples drew us to the house.

On our first Christmas, we awoke to find the trees frosted with ice, each branch encased in crystal and dusted with fine snow powder. The slow changing of the maples told seasonal time; even the approach of the long, cold winter was made palatable by their beautiful scarlet and gold leaves.

We've been happy here. Our parents are nearby, and they and three great-grandmothers have lavished love on Catherine all her short life. Now that must change. The drop-in visits and long telephone chats will end. While we'll still see our families, we'll lose the easy closeness of day-to-day contact, so precious in these frantic times.

We can't hold back the future. The new house is waiting. It's close to open country, and we think we've chosen wisely. The place is clean and modern — still untouched by human lives. In time, new memories will permeate it, like rambler roses entwining cottage walls.

But for now, this old place is home. The fireplace, the river, the rooms hold many happy memories and I am lost in them.

When we leave I'm going to cry.

Waiter, Jean Pierre, serves diners at Ansazai's restaurant. Dining is one of the practiced pleasures that makes Midland second in the state for eating out.

They really do eat out more in Midland

By RON GILMORE
Business-Oil Writer

If you thought Midlanders spent a lot of time eating out, and that Midland has more than its share of eating establishments, your're right.

When it comes to dining out, Midland is number two in Texas, second only to the Austin area.

Last year, Midlanders spent $718 per person or 44 percent of their total food dollar eating out, says a report by the Texas Restaurant Association.

A quick drive down Big Spring Street easily affirms those statistics. An assortment of eateries from burger and burrito places to Continental gourmet, await the hungry.

"Midland has a high percentage of working couples," said Chuck Stone, former president of the Texas Restaurant Association, Permian Basin Chapter. "They have a higher percentage of disposable income, fewer children at home and no desire to go home and prepare a meal after a long day at work."

With these demographics it is no small wonder that Midlanders spent about 32 percent more than the state average ($545) on dining out in 1983. The statistics are for a Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area, which for Midland, includes all of Midland County. The Austin SMSA beat out Midland with a yearly average expenditure of $798.

Fast food restaurants account for almost half of those food dollars–48 percent. That is an increase of 33 percent over the last five years.

The report shows that while Midlanders like their fast food, their fondness for fine dining is on the wane.

Fine dining has decreased 11 percent in that same period, holding 38 percent of the total. Institutional dining (airline, hospitals, schools) make up the remaining 14 percent of dining dollars.

However, despite the rosey statistics and upward trend, not all restaurants make it in Midland.

"There are many restaurants going out of business," said Stone. "It takes alot of money to open a restaurant and sometimes the volume of diners is not sufficient to support all of the new businesses."

Leo's Oyster Bar, Beaumonde, Yalon's and The Montana Mining Co. are a few of the restaurants to close within the last year.

Remembering oil industry birth

Demand brought in drilling

Petroleum was not an unknown substance when Drake hit paydirt in 1859. Prior to the 1840's, the greatest source of this product in Pennsylvania was found along Oil Creek. It was collected from water springs that existed in the bank or bed areas of streams and used for medicinal purposes.

For the most part, however, oil was an unwanted by-product of salt wells. Drilling was standard practice for salt producers in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky. Petroleum frequently accompanied brine that was pumped from salt wells but was thought to be so useless that production and the well were often abandoned comletely.

By the late 1840's, more markets were being discovered for oil, including lighting fluids and lubricants. It also became the main ingredient in kerosene, which was replacing other burning fluids for lighting purposes due to cost and safety.

In the late 1850's, sizeable quantities of oil were being sold from Western Pennsylvania to textile mills. As demand outran supply, prices climbed from seventy-five cents to two dollars per gallon.

In 1855, following a report by Yale Professor Benjamin Silliman Jr. on the economic value of petroleum, a number of New Haven, Ct. capitalists formed the Pennsylvania Rock Oil Co. After friction with New York stockholders regarding the company's slow progress, the New Haven owners leased the Titusville property and formed the Seneca Oil Co. On March 23, 1858, Edwin Drake was named general agent in charge of oil production.

Drake arrived in Titusville in May of 1858 and began digging a well at the site of the area's principal petroleum spring. After hitting an underground water stream, the site was abandoned and Drake decided to utilize drilling techniques to search for oil.

In the spring of 1859, Drake signed William "Uncle Billy" Smith, who had previous experience on salt wells, to drill the shaft. A six-horsepower engine and stationary tubular boiler powered drilling operations.

The shaft initially was sunk 32 feet in the gound and continued to a depth of 69 feet before striking oil. On a Sunday afternnon, August 28, Smith visited the well after drilling operations concluded the day before and noticed a dark fluid on the water surface that was indeed oil. Although no one quaged production, it's estimated that the well produced eight to ten barrels per day.

It was later that the full significance of this achievement was realized.

Oil industry birthday celebration set

OIL CITY, Pa. — As the 125th anniversary of oil discovery at Drake Well approaches, plans are culminating for a week-long celebration in the small valley of Oil Creek, Pa. It was here on August 27, 1859, that Colonel Edwin L. Drake completed drilling the world's first successful oil well near Titusville, giving birth to the petroleum industry.

To commemorate that achievement, a non-profit organization appropriately dubbed One 25 Inc., was established to raise funds to restore the interior of the Drake Well. Although the exterior was accurately restored board by board in 1946, courtesy of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the interior steam engine and boiler, also installed at that time, are a different design than the machinery originally used to operate the Drake Well.

Lee Forker, former chairman and chief executive officer at Quaker State Oil Refining Corp. and longtime Pennsylvania oil man, founded One 25 Inc. to build from scratch a more accurate replica of the original steam engine and boiler.

In addition to the engine and boiler, all gearwork and pump systems will be replaced and a security system installed.

An archaeological excavation, also sponsored by One 25 Inc., will be conducted in Petroleum Center, an abandoned boom town located in the middle of Oil Creek State Park. Under the direction of archaeologist William Leech, students from Clarion University will dig for unique artifacts relating to the oil industry of the 1800's and early 1900's.

The 125-year event will begin August 24 and end September 1 after a week of concerts, shows and parades. The Drake Well Museum plans to feature a special art exhibit and engine display.

Quaker State Oil Refining Corp. will present a week-long photo display of original prints depicting the early oil industry of this area. Photographer John Mather shot thousands of photos of various oil activities while traveling by boat and wagon that serve as constant reminders of the petroelum industry's beginnings.

In addition, a wax figure of Edwin Drake was delivered by helicopter and Quaker State Oil Refining Corp. drilled a well in Drake Memorial Park specifically for the "Today" television show.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

The Texas 400, Midland 16, and Ferraro

The Lone Star State equivalent of the Fortune 500 — the Texas 400 — is just off the press in the July issue of Texas Business, and provides some interesting insights into ratings, rank, size and health of Texas corporations.

It also provides local angles, if you want to dig. With trusty TI calculator in hand, and the help of some colored pens I scanned, searched, scrutinized and scratched through the 400 to come up with my own list — the Midland 16.

The Texas 400 compiled by computer from previously published information (probably annual reports) by Texas Business editors and David Emanuel, PhD., a former University of Texas professor, endeavors to rank the top 400 corporations in Texas whose stocks are traded publicly. The information for this list is based on fiscal 1983 for the firms, and ranking is by revenues.

While the list may not be perfect (no list is perfect), it serves nevertheless as a reliable barometer of who's who in Texas business.

Texas Business, of course, writes its own analysis of the 400 list, but leans more or less to the panoramic view of Texas business. Our focus was on Midland.

FOR INSTANCE, no Midland firm was near the top, not even in the top 100 of the 400 list much to my surprise, although there are probably some non-public Midland firms that might fit very comfortably into the top 50.

The closest Midland corporation to the top 100 was not an oil firm as one might suspect, but Elcor Corp., a manufacturer of roofing products, with annual revenues of $211 million, who stood at 114 on the 400 list.

Other Midland firms named to the list according to rank and revenue were: Texas American Energy, (123) $199 million; Adobe Oil & Gas, (130) $165.5 million; Tom Brown Inc., (151) $112.8 million; Tipperary Inc., (196) $60.7 million; Midland Southwest Corp., (251) $25.9 million; Taco Villa, (253) $25.5 million; Bell Petroleum Services, (287) $14.2 million; Dawson Geophysical, (300) $10.6 million; Flare Inc., (312) $9 million; Ike Lovelady Inc., (336) $5.2 million; Mineral Development, (351) $3.6 million; Melton Drilling & Exploration, (368) $2.2 million; Alta Energy Corp., (378) $1.4 million; Parallel Petroleum, (381) $861,000; Natura Energy, (387) $489,000 for a total of 16. Only two, Elcor and Taco Villa, are not energy-related firms.

IT SHOULD BE noted, too, that of the 16, seven posted significant losses in the net income column. Tom Brown with losses of $15.9 million led the list, while Midland Southwest Corp. with a bracketed $12.6 million was second.

Other firms in the net loss column were: Bell Petroleum Services, $993,000; Flare Inc., $589,000; Ike Lovelady Inc., $5.6 million; Mineral Development, $946,000; Parallel, $347,000 which was adjusted for depletion, depreciation, amortization and dry holes and abandonments; and Natura Energy, $920,000.

In the net earnings column, Adobe with a net income of $23.7 million was by far the leader. Elcor with $7.2 million in net income was a distant second. Adobe, traded on the American Stock Exchange, was also the highest traded stock showing a high of 27⅝ and a low of 15.

Others with net income were: Texas American, $2.8 million; Tipperary, $848,000; Taco Villa, $1.1 million; Dawson Geophysical, $474,000; Melton Drilling & Exploration, $170,000; Alta Energy, $27,000.

HOW DO THE Midland 16 rank? I'm not about to stick my neck out there — just too many variables. People would jump all over me if I didn't pick them right.

I will, however, pick the number one corporation in Midland because it's so obvious. Based on net earnings, assets and stock price, Adobe Oil & Gas is the healthiest, publicly traded corporation in Midland on the Texas 400 list. You can calculate the others for yourself.

As a home for publicly traded companies, Midland also fared well compared to other cities.

While Midland has less than a quarter of the population of either Austin or El Paso it is home to three times as many publicly traded corporations as those cities. In fact, it falls only three short of San Antonio, a city with about one million population. As a matter of information, the leading city in Texas is Dallas with 122 publicly traded firms as opposed to Houston with 109. The Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex, however, packs in 159 firms.

••••

TEXAS ENERGY firms on the 400 list have had some tough skidding over two rocky years, but they could be in for some more as a result of Mondale's vice presidential pick.

Mondale has been attacked for his choice of Geraldine Ferraro as a running mate, first, because of her obvious lack of experience and second, his obvious political ploy.

Critics claim the only reason she was chosen was because she was a woman, and that this is not criteria enough for selecting the vice president of the United States and the individual who is one heart beat away from the presidency. That may be cause for worry for some, but then again we have been selecting vice presidents more for political pull than practical experience for many years and Mondale's move is no radical departure.

WHAT WE in the Permian Basin should worry about is the fact that Ms. Ferraro has a goose egg — a zero — spelled with a "z" as in zilch voting record on energy, according to the Permian Basin Petroleum Association executive vice president Ed Thompson, who reminded us that a person has to be pretty devoted to the anti-energy cause when he or she votes against the energy industry 100 percent of the time. On matters of business and free enterprise, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce gives her a dismal, failing score of 26 percent, which means she is not that friendly to business either.

Couple this radical anti-oil sympathy of Ms. Ferraro with Mondale's own negative feeling about the energy business, and the oil business has something to worry about.

John Paul Pitts is Business-Oil Editor for the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Permian Basin rig count gains

After several weeks of sliding back, the Permian Basin rig count this week recouped most of its loss with a gain of seven rigs. The gain was evenly distributed across the Basin with no particular county reflecting heavy increases.

Lea, Andrews and Pecos counties continued to lead the pack of counties, with Midland, Ward, Ector, Glasscock and Crane making strong showings. If any county could be described as a big gainer it was Crane who picked up seven rigs, as drilling in the Sand Hills field and other fields continue in that county.

The national rig also continued on its upward trend, picking up seven rigs this week. Wyoming continued to be on an upward trend picking up five rigs and Michigan added 10 rigs to its count.

The national rig count this week is 2,374 as compared to 2,016 for the same period in 1983.

The Permian Basin rig count is 330, as compared to 216 for the same week in 1983.

OIL FACT

1923

The Atlantic Refining Company becomes interested in seismorgraph and sets up a project called "the McCollum Experiment." This is made in Mexico, under the auspices of the Cortez Oil Corporation, then Atlantic's Mexican subsidiary. In 1924, work begins in Mexico in a wildcat area close to Tampico. Both reflection and refraction methods are used, with greater emphasis given to the latter. Though the first well is dry, the well log confirms the seismograph finding. This well, the LaGatero No. 4, is probably the first ever drilled on a seismograph location.

PBGC to offer three courses

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer three courses in the PBGC Building, 105 W. Illinois, Midland.

"Clear Writing — Business, Professional, Technical," Monday and Tuesday, July 23, 24, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Few skills contribute more to success, are more impressive and save as much money as those of direct, concise writing. This workshop will provide you with these skills in such a way that you will be able to use them on the job immediately. John Brogan, Brogan Clear-Writing Seminars, San Francisco, will instruct the course. Fee is $260. Eligible for CPE credits.

"Creative Thinking and Management," Wednesday, July 25, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. This seminar helps create a joint focus — the use of creative thinking applied to the world of management. It will actively involve all participants — learning by doing. Dr. Vernon Stokes, assistant director for instruction, Region 18 Education Service Center, will instruct. Fee is $85. Eligible for CPE credits.

"Advanced Land Management," Wednesday and Thursday, July 25-26, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. This course is specifically for the more experienced explorationist whether they are a geologist, geophysicist, landman, or independent. Particular emphasis will be on structuring exploration deals, negotiations and petroleum economics. Dr. Patrick W. Fitzgerald, attorney, Wright, Johnson & Pearson Inc., Oklahoma City, will instruct. Fee is $260. Qualifies for 10 AAPL recertification credits.

For registration or further information, please call 683-2832.

Was $895 Now $845 Used/Factory Conditioned
Was $2,095 Now $1,895 Used/Factory Conditioned

You won't find a better value than a Xerox used copier or used Memorywriter typewriter.

Because what made them great when they were new is still making them great.

Our used copiers can:
- Copy on plain, ordinary paper.
- Reduce.
- Handle oversize documents.
- Give you 20 copies per minute.

Our used Xerox 610 Memorywriter typewriter lets you:
- Make revisions instantly without retyping entire pages.
- Store addresses and often-used phrases.
- Upgrade as your needs change.

All machines come with a 30-day, limited warranty and are eligible for Xerox service plans.

So hurry down. Or call 800-847-7811. In New York State call 1-800-847-7800.

And see why a Xerox used deal is probably better than the deals you're used to.

The associates at E.J. Stevenson and Associates are reviewing a design that the company has been contracted to complete. The associates are: sitting, Leon Taylor(L), Tammy Stevenson, E. J. Stevenson(R); standing, H. Thomas Collins(L), Clayton Kron, Gary Starnes, David Stein(R). Missing from the photo is Jim Sale.

E. J. Stevenson & Associates is a Midland-based engineering firm

E. J. Stevenson & Associates, Inc. is a highly specialized Midland-owned Professional Engineering firm providing Consulting, Design and Construction Management to the Permian Basin through one of its two diversified branches: The Urban Division and the Oil & Gas Division.

Since its inception, the Policy of E.J. Stevenson & Associates, Inc., has been to employ the very best engineering talent available in each applied discipline. In order for E. J. Stevenson & Associates, Inc. to grow and insure the success of our clients' projects this practice will continue to be followed in the future.

We recognize that the only product we have to sell is the expertise of our personnel and that our clients are seeking the highest standards of quality from each of them. E. J. Stevenson & Associates is committed to its clients to maintain a qualified staff with the best possible working environment, technical equipment and resource library required to insure professionalism and peak efficiency.

Because E. J. Stevenson & Associates is a locally owned and operated corportion, our personnel take vital interest in the continued growth and prosperity of the company and of the Permian Basin. Our objective is to provide services that are technically sound, economically conceived, delivered on time and within budget. We will refuse an assignment that is outside our realm of technical competence or overloads our staff to the extent that it or other projects may be jeopardized.

The Urban Engineering Division of E. J. Stevenson & Associates was established to provide the Permian Basin, Civil ad Mechanical Planning, Design and Management Services as they relate to Buildings, Road and Bridge Design, Drainage, Land Development, Wastewater Collection & Treatment, and Water Supply & Treatment.

E. J. Stevenson & Associates provides both Commercial and Public Clients with a unique approach, in a consulting capacity, in that having broad experience, we are able to apply our knowledge in all disciplines to accomplish the complete scope of projects.

The services, offered in general, by E. J. Stevenson & Associates, Inc., are: The applications of the Laws of Science, Mathematics, Business Managment, and Economics for the production and operation of items & systems contructed. Effectively, E. J. Stevenson & Associates can design and initiate a system into efficient and profitable operation.

Our Services Are:

Fabrication/Construction (Drawings & Specifications), Contract Negotiations (Lump Sum & Cost-Plus), A.F.E. Presentations (Preparation & Review), Conceptual Estimating (Planning & Methods), Planning & Scheduling (CPM), Contract & Subcontract (Administration), Construction Management, Engineering Management, Quality Assurance & Control, Facility Evaluations, Operations Evaluations, Single & Multi-Project Management, Logistics & Purchasing, Field Engineering and CAD based facilities management (Databases & Overlays).

The above capabilities provide the well rounded expertise to enable efficient and economical production operations in today's tough economy without the costly overhead involved in employing staff "In-House" Engineering Personnel. Our cost efficient, expedient trouble-shooting and experienced design and project management capabilities will streamline your operations and at a reasonable cost, only when actually required

Additionally, our In-House computer capabilities allow our engineers and managers to write programs to fit your unique requirements in design and analysis through our terminal packaged programs. In keeping abreast of the latest technology, we utilize an In-House CAD System based on the Hewlett-Packard 9836 Computer with full capability for producing 36" x 42" drawings and plots. An extensive library of engineering software for this system is available and can be utilized as the need arises.

Our designs follow applicable codes and specifications, such as ASME, ASCE, API, ANSI, AWS, ASTM, OSHA, NACE, and MSS. Disciplines include specifically, but not limited to: Civil (Design, Constuction, & Installations), Petroleum (Oil & Gas Facilities & Operations), and Mechanical (Piping & Equipment Design and Installation).

Kelly's temporaries offer a wide variety of services

The "Kelly Girl" People offer professional temporary services in an extremely wide variety of fields. Kelly's well-trained and tested temporaries are all skilled in their fields. In contrast to what many people think, their temporaries are not all secretaries or clerks.

For instance, some Kelly temporaries are skilled in the accounting field with abilities ranging from that of a payroll clerk to a full charge bookkeeper. Before they are sent on an assignment, these people's skills are tested to insure that they can perform the necessary tasks. Hence, their guarantee!

Another service offered by the Kelly people is light industrial. Assemblers, bindery workers, blueprint workers, cafeteria workers, inventory takers, and packagers, as well as many other manual laborers, frequently serve as efficient Kelly temporaries.

Kelly Services is excited about developing their new technical division. They now have temporaries who are capable of performing technical tasks, such as drafting. Kelly has found that this type service is in great demand. The response by customers who have utilized this division has been tremendous.

Another field that is extremely important to the Permian Basin and to Kelly Services is the information processing field. Kelly has made a strong commitment to provide their customers with temporaries whose skills have been accurately assessed.

By utilizing a KEE training system, a special word processing simulator, Kelly can test word processing operators in a number of critical areas. KEE is a hands-on simulator which at the present time imitates the Lanier, Wang and IBM word processors. In the near future, Kelly Services will also be able to do testing for Digital and Xerox.

The marketing service people which Kelly provides should not be overlooked. Qualified temporaries who can serve as hosts or hostesses, convention clerks, tour guides, and product demonstrators are available to Kelly's customers. Kelly also has surveyors, display clerks, inventory counters, and comparison shoppers. When a need arises for temporary or extra help in your marketing department, Kelly is the place to call.

Kelly's efficient typists can help to pull customers through at those tough times when the pressure is really on. Clerk, forms, senior, and statistical typists are available. Kelly also has shorthand typists and transcriptionists. Typists have long represented a strong division of Kelly Services and Kelly intends to keep it that way.

The "Kelly Girl" People also have a division of clerks. This division offers the services of junior clerks, mail clerks, general clerks, and records clerks. Others are classified as senior, tabulations, statistical, and credit clerks.

It is clear that Kelly Services is much more than a secretarial pool; however, their secretarial program is still strong and professional. Kelly's secretarial division is equipped to provide customers with everything from a junior secretary to an executive secretary with extensive experience.

How does Kelly Services offer so many different types of temporary services with full confidence? They are commited to testing and to training!

To learn more about the wide range of temporary services offered by the Kelly People call 689-9801 or stop by Suite 2050 in the ClayDesta National Bank Building. Also, you may contact the Odessa office at 332-0191.

Kelly supervisor, Debbie Hill (L) is showing an applicant how to utilize the KEE simulator to evaluate her skills.

TANtalizing's suntanning beds provide safe tanning

Are your tired of having unhealthy looking skin? TANtalizing, "Midland's Finest SunTanning Place", offers you the realistic alternative of healthy skin! TANtalizing's well-informed staff is prepared to assist you with a full range of skin care services and products.

How would you like to get a beautiful tan while relaxing in a cool room and listening to your favorite music? TANtalizing offers you just that! "Sun time" in a suntanning bed is a far cry from a hot day under the sizzling sun or a trip to the old tanning booths. The tanning rays you encounter on the tanning bed are not as dangerous as the sun's rays. In fact, it is practically impossible to get burned using the tanning bed.

Those who have used the tanning beds suggest numerous benefits. Rubye Boyd explains, "I like these tanning beds because you can be comfortable while getting a tan- not in the sun sweating. They also require a lot less time." Other people note improvements in their complexion once they begin using the tanning beds. TANtalizing's owners, Mark and Karen McCraney, are especially excited about the safety and convenience of tanning beds.

Suntanning beds have been available in Europe for many years but are relatively new in the United States. Mark studied many different models before selecting the tanning beds made by Sun Industries, a USA company. This particular model of tanning bed is one of the few approved by Underwriter's Laboratories. The soft UVA light, which is safer than sunlight, was approved by the FDA approximately three years ago. You can be assured that suntanning beds offer the safest way to get a healthy tan.

TANtalizing is so confident of their equipment's tanning ability that they offer a money back guarantee.

Your first TANtalizing experience is absolutely free. Also, from now through the end of July, TANtalizing is offering a special- 15 tanning sessions for $60. That is $30 off the regular price. Don't pass this opportunity up!

To enhance your skin after tanning, TANtalizing carries a line of JOICO skin care products. These products contain aloe vera and many other healthy skin supplements.

Color analysis is also availble at TANtalizing. Dianne Saunders, a color analysis expert, can analyze your skin and help you select the makeup and wardrobe which will compliment your complexion and enhance your appearance.

If you have any questions, call the TANtalizing skin care specialists at 699-6698 or go by San Miguel Square, number 170 (in the atrium). They are open evenings and will set appointments at just about anytime. Why not start your beautiful tan today?

Now Midland Building Specialties offers siding

Are you tired of painting the exterior of your home every 3 years? Midland Building Specialties can put an end to that annoying task!

You have long been aware of Midland Building Specialties' quality service and storm window and door product lines. Now, they are expanding their expert services to include siding.

They carry Revere steel siding which is well known for adding extra insulation, being incredibly durable, and offering a wide variety of colors as well as a life time guarantee. Likewise, the Mastic vinyl siding which they offer is a great value. Mastic siding is guaranteed to never crack, bend, rust or scratch. It provides an easily cleaned, paint-free exterior in a number of colors. The extra insulation it gives is also something to consider. The experts at Midland Building Specialties are also prepared to blow in extra insulation if your home needs it.

Before you paint your home again or purchase siding from a company you don't know, call Midland Building Specialties. Since they are a local company, they are commited to providing their customers with outstanding service now and for years to come. They will be glad to give you a free estimate. Manager Ken Vanhoozer feels confident that his company can offer you the best prices around, not to mention the best service.

Through August 31st, Midland Building Specialties is offering all complete siding jobs at 20% off. The storm and replacement windows and doors are also 20% off. So why not change your windows and doors at the same time?

Energy efficient storm windows and doors are available in a wide selection of styles and colors. Not only do they add beauty to your home, but they also cut energy costs. The special Ford sunglass which Midland Building Specialties uses reflects more of the sun's rays than clear glass does. This helps to keep your home cooler in the summer. Storm windows and doors may also be considered a housekeeper's best friend during dusty seasons. Other benefits include added security and noise reduction.

Consider also the many benefits of having Midland Building Specialties dress up your patio with a patio cover or screen room by Howmet Corporation. They also offer carport covers which can help keep your car looking new.

In addition to all of this, Midland Building Specialties is a retailer for beautiful Levolor Riviera Mini blinds, Stanley Insulated Replacement Entry Doors, Interior Aspenwood Wall Planking and a number of commercial type doors and windows by Republic Steel.

Midland Building Specialties is a division of Mid-West Glass Company which has served the Midland area since 1942. So next time you consider an additional investment in your home and you want a name you can trust in, call Midland Building Specialties. You will find competitive prices for very high quality materials and workmanship. Free estimates and job references are available. Stop in at 900 West Front or give them a call at 683-2184 or 563-3013.

Midland Building Specialties is expanding its lines to include steel and vinyl siding. Take advantage of their 20% off special on all complete siding jobs (good through August 31st).

Caymans, little giant on financial map, under U.S. pressure

GEORGE TOWN, Grand Cayman (AP) — In the electronic flash of telex and computer, billions of dollars are flooding through this secretive sandspit south of Cuba, making "Cayman" a trademark for wealth with stealth.

The U.S. government, convinced that drug traffickers use the confidential offshore banking traffic to launder their cash, is mobilizing new regulations and legislation to try to stem the flow.

But something else worries U.S. authorities just as much: More and more ordinary Americans are evading taxes by shuffling their assets through this British crown colony and other offshore havens.

TWICE A DAY in Room 518 at the beachfront Holiday Inn, a distinguished-looking American appears on a video screen and advises his audience that "a new form of Gestapo, called tax collectors, are out to confiscate wealth."

He invites his listeners, usually two or three American vacationers who have paid $25 each for the "U.S. Tax Planning Services Ltd." presentation, to establish trusts here to outwit a U.S. government that is "taking from the rich and giving to the poor."

Thanks to its bank secrecy law and tax-free status, this 17-mile-long island has become a giant on the world financial map.

It has 449 banks and 18,000 companies registered, more than one for each of its 15,000 residents. Most are "shell" companies, sitting on paper in the files of Cayman lawyers or accountants who represent them. But a few operate from large George Town offices.

Much offshore business is legitimate — loans and deposits that world-class banks "book" through Grand Cayman to deftly but legally avoid taxes and other requirements of foreign governments.

BUT THE ISLAND is popular, too, with people who have something to hide. Cayman bank accounts have figured in recent cases involving child pornography in California, extortion in Michigan and a bank collapse in Tennessee, as well as numerous drug cases.

"The problem has grown geometrically in the past few years," U.S. Senate investigator Charles Morley said in a Washington interview.

John Walker, the U.S. Treasury Department's enforcement chief, estimated that tens of billions of dollars in tax-fraud, drug and other criminal funds flow annually through offshore havens.

Washington is taking concerted steps. The Treasury Department is widening its examination of foreign banking transactions, a Senate panel is expected this summer to recommend tougher legislation on offshore banks, and U.S. prosecutors are pressing haven governments more aggressively in the courts.

The superpower pressure is making Dennis Foster angry.

An AP Extra

"IN THE LAST 15 years, this little dried-up territory with nothing has been able to get where we are by careful management," said the beefy, bespectacled Foster, chief secretary of the Cayman Islands government.

Spread across his desk are paperweights advertising some of Cayman's most important banks.

"We do our best to keep clean as possible," Foster said. "But it's inevitable that some dirty money is getting through. You can't stop it."

The three-island Cayman chain has come a long way since the pre-World War II days when its isolated people had to catch turtles and twist leaves into rope to make a living.

Because of offshore banking, Caymanians now have the highest standard of living in the Caribbean, with virtually no unemployment. The majority of the islanders are landowners. The offshore industry accounts directly for 1,300 jobs, bank and company fees for one-quarter of the government's $70 million annual revenues.

The Caymans offer political stability, excellent communications, English as the working language and frequent flights to Miami, 450 miles due north.

BUT MORE IMPORTANT to the financial community is the secrecy law, the Confidential Relationships (Preservation) Act, which prescribes two years in prison for divulging ownership of a Cayman company, bank account or other "confidential information."

And as for taxes, the only one is a $12-a-year "head tax" on every male resident aged 18 to 60. There are no income, corporate, inheritance, capital gains, gift or property taxes.

The uses of offshore havens may be limited only by a financial adviser's imagination. Walker offered a "classic example" of how money laundering can work:

"You're a drug dealer. You fly $1 million cash to Panama, deposit it in an account in the name of ABC, a shell company. Three days later, the money is wired to the Caymans, to a DEF Corp. bank account. The $1 million is then loaned to Ajax Enterprises in Miami. You have set up all these companies. You've got the $1 million back and it's not taxable. You might even pay interest on the Cayman 'loan,' claiming a tax deduction."

DINING

Still, for most eating establishments, business is good. According to the report , total food service sales in the Midland SMSA total over $65 million, a 9.4 percent increase over the previous year. That compares to a statewide increase of only 8.4 percent, making Midland a definite leader in dining out.

These positive statistics and other upward demographics, have obviously played a roll in catching the eye of national restaurant chains.

In recent months national chain restaurants like Bennigan's ,Harrigan's and Red Lobster have come on the Midland scene to stiffen competition for local operators. Yet local operators offer different assessments of the situation. Allen Yee, owner of Blue Star Inn, reports that his business volume is unaffected, while John Williams, owner of Anasazi reports that "an onslaught of new businesses have dipped into his business."

But both small restaurant owners and chain operators seem confident that sufficient volumes will sustain a healthy restaurant business. "The future looks outstanding," said John Williams, owner of Anasazi's a 'fine dining' restaurant. "Midland is definately an 'eating out' town."

New public accounting firm formed as result of merger

Kenneth L. Arnold, CPA, Calvin C. Hancock, CPA, and James P. Roye, CPA, have announced the formation of the public accounting firm of Arnold, Hancock, Roye, & Co.

The new firm is the result of a merger of Donald S. Johnson and Co. Inc., and Roye, Morris, and Co., both long time Midland accounting practices. Donald S. Johnson, CPA, will remain active as a consultant to the firm.

Arnold, Hancock, Roye & Co. offers complete accounting and business consultation services including tax and financial accounting, managerial accounting and information systems, financial planning and investment counseling. The firm offices are in the Midland Tower Building, Suite 215.

Kenneth L. Arnold, CPA, a native of West Texas, is a graduate of Texas Tech University. His experience includes four years with a national accounting firm in Midland. He has also served in various accounting and financial management positions for two major independent oil companies in Midland. Arnold is a member of the American Institute of CPAs, the Permian Basin CPAs, and the Petroleum Accounting Society.

Calvin C. Hancock, CPA, is a native of Midland. After graduating from Hardin-Simmons University, he spent seven years in private industry as a tax manager or controller, and severteen years in public accounting, twelve as a partner-in-charge. Hancock is a member of the American Institue of CPAs, Texas Society of CPAs, Permian Basin CPAs, and the New Mexico Society of CPAs. He also taught accounting at Eastern New Mexico State University. He is a past president of the Midland Jaycees.

James P. Roye, CPA, is a graduate of Arizona State University. After several years in public accounting with Arizona and West Texas firms, he began his own practice in 1979, specializing in taxation, partnerships, joint ventures, corporations, and management services. Roye is a member of the American Institute of CPAs, Texas Society of CPAs, Permian Basin CPAs, and the Arizona Society of CPAs. Civically, he serves as chairman of the Midland County Red Cross, and is a past vice president of the Midland Jaycees.

Pay phones go private as market demand grows

The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Until a month ago, Mary Zalonis had a privately owned coin telephone in her liquor store, Spirits and Stuff, in Scottsdale, Ariz. She used the dimes and quarters to pay her telephone bill, and her patrons could get out of the 118-degree Arizona heat to make a call instead of using Mountain Bell pay telephones on the street.

"My customers loved it," Zalonis said. "It's so hot out here in the summertime, people just aren't going to stand out there if there's one inside."

Then Mountain Bell found out about Zalonis' privately owned coin phone and warned her that her phone service would be cut off if she persisted in using it. Reluctantly, she disconnected the phone.

But telephone companies all over the country have their hands full with customers like Mary Zalonis, and much bigger ones, too, who want to buy coin phones, install them and collect the revenue for themselves.

OIL

Drake founded the petroleum industry by demonstrating that adependable natural resource could be obtained using salt well drilling methods. This simple discovery set off an entire industrial revolution and oil soon replaced coal as the primary source of burning fluids and lubricants.

Drake was an unlikely founder of the oil industry, since the first years of his life were spent on farms in New York and Vermont and his young adult life as a clerk in Buffalo and New Haven.

It was while he was in New Haven that he became associated with James M. Townsend, the main owner of the original Pennsylvania Rock Oil Co. Drake soon purchased a small amount of company stock and began work around the time Seneca Oil Co. was formed.

Following his success in 1859, Drake was soon out of the oil production industry. He left Titusville in 1863 and lost everything in the oil stock market. He was stricken with neuralgia and spent the remainder of his life an invalid. When his condition became known, the General Assembly of Pennsylvania voted him an annual $1,500 income in recognition of his important contribution to the state.

Drake died in 1880. In 1901, his body was moved to Titusville where a large momument was constructed in his memory. Today, the momument is still there and the Drake Well replica stands on the site where he first struck oil. The Drake Well Museum illustrates the history of petroleum and honors a giant of the modern industrial world.

Southern economy continues to rise

RUSTON, La. (AP) — A handful of Gulf South counties and Louisiana parishes continued a 12-year trend by dominating U.S. economic growth during the recession year of 1982, according to a report by Louisiana Tech University researchers.

However, an analysis of the latest data on earned income showed the dominance was more a function of the nation's economic malaise than the counties' own economic prowess.

The analysis of earned income changes in the Sun Belt came from a computer run of data on more than 1,400 parishes and counties in Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Virginia, New Mexico, Arizona, Tennessee, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina and West Virginia.

Examining earned-income data from the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis, Louisiana Tech research director Dr. James Michael ranked Southern counties according to their share of the nation's economic growth and found that the home counties of Houston and Dallas were far and away the most dominant.

In the 12 years from 1970-1982, the two Texas "mega-counties" accounted for 11.67 percent of the change in the nation's earned income.

During the 11 years from 1970-1981, the two counties accounted for less than 10 percent of the nation's earned income growth, indicating they gained economic importance to the nation in 1982, Michael said in the report.

A similar pattern emerged when Michael looked at other key counties — including a handful of Louisiana parishes — that made important contributions to the nation's economic growth.

"The nation declined in earned income by 10 percent in 1982, and Louisiana declined by 1 percent," Michael said. "The 16 Southern states here declined by 2 percent. That 10 percent drop in the nation made us look good. Texas had a real increase and Oklahoma had a real increase. But Louisiana as a whole had a decrease."

The computer analysis showed that 28 counties in two corridors sweeping through Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi accounted for more than 21 percent of the growth in the nation's earned income during the 12-year period.

Louisiana had 10 parishes among those top 28.

The parishes and their percent of the change in earned income in the U.S. during the 12-year period are Jefferson 0.68 percent; Lafayette 0.61 percent' East Baton Rouge 0.54 percent; Orleans 0.32 percent; Caddo 0.30 percent; Terrebonne 0.23 percent; Calcasieu 0.21 percent; St. Charles 0.18 percent; St. Mary 0.14 percent, and Iberia 0.14 percent.

BILL KIDD

Rep. Lee wants rate deviations canceled

AUSTIN — Rep. Don Lee, D-Harlingen, wants the State Board of Insurance to cancel existing rate deviations on property and casualty insurance policies, saying the practice is threatening the solvency of insurers.

SBI and insurance industry officials, however, disagree with Lee, arguing that problems with solvency are related to other factors.

SBI sets "manual rates" for property and casualty lines, but has statutory authority to allow insurers to charge a "deviated" rate, lower than that set by the State agency.

Lee attempted, during the recent special legislative session, to pass a resolution calling on SBI to cancel existing deviations, saying that since 1979, the combined loss ratio for property and casualty insurance companies consistently has exceeded 100 percent.

For the first quarter of 1984, Lee reported, the combined loss ratio was 117.3 percent.

Such continuing losses, Lee contends, are threatening the ability of property and casualty companies to continue to provide insurance — and he believes rate deviations are a factor.

Companies, Lee contends, may offer policies at deviated rates simply to obtain needed cash flow.

While SBI is charged with determining that a compnay's experience justifies allowing them to charge a lower rate, Lee argues that the agency may not be checking closely enough to assure that such deviated rates are justified.

During discussion of Lee's resolution (the House refused to suspend its rules to consider the measure), Rep. Gene Green, D-Houston, argued that the problem of company insolvency and high loss ratios ins't just a Texas problem, or even a national problem, but an international problem.

Green argued that use of deviations allows for competition within the Texas system of agency-set rates, and said the practice shouldn't be halted.

Figures compiled by SBI show that downward deviations for property lines averaged 21.9 percent for 1981, 25.3 percent for 1982 and 25.4 percent for 1983.

For homeowners, average deviations for the three years was 22.7 percent, 26.6 percent and 26.8 percent respectively, with market share at 90.8 percent, 92.8 percent and 93.9 percent.

Upward and downward deviations are permitted on auto lines, but SBI data on auto is less complete (with work still in progress).

In 1982, SBI reports, private passenger auto policies were written with an average downward deviation of 12.7 percent, representing 56.9 percent of the market, while upward deviations averaged 3.3 percent, with 18.3 percent of the market.

Combined auto figures showed an average of a 6.6 percent downward deviation, with 60.2 percent of all auto policies at deviated rates.
