Police find bodies

HOUSTON — The bound and gagged bodies of three people have been found inside a car parked at a local sporting goods store, a police spokesman said. Houston police officers found the bodies while investigating a Friday night call about a suspicious vehicle left parked at an Academy store in northwest Houston. The officers first discovered the bound and gagged body of a woman in the backseat under a pile of coats, said Joe Gamino, a police spokesman. Two more bodies, both of men, were found tied up in the trunk of the car. Witnesses told police the car had been parked at the store since last Wednesday. No identification was found with the bodies, scheduled for a Saturday afternoon autopsy by the Harris County Medical Examiner's office.

Shell shatters market

Clinton calls for U.N. probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton called Saturday for an urgent United Nations investigation of the latest bloodshed in Bosnia and ordered U.S. planes to help evacuate victims of a mortar attack that left at least 66 dead.

"We rule nothing out," Clinton said in a statement, as top aides raised the possibility of NATO air strikes once responsiblity for the attack in the Sarajevo marketplace had been determined.

It was the bloodiest single attack on Sarajevo's civilians since the war started 22 months ago.

Clinton directed the Defense Department to offer immediate assistance in evacuating, hospitalizing and treating the injured. Aides said the military would use C-130 aircraft to transport injured to a M*A*S*H unit the United States operates outside Zagreb, Croatia, and a U.S. airbase outside Frankfurt, Germany.

Defense Department spokesman Dennis Klauer said Saturday night that the first plane was being dis-

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bodies and severed limbs lay amid bloodstained market stalls after a mortar shell landed in a crowd of Saturday shoppers, butchering at least 66 people and wounding more than 200.

The bloodiest single attack on Sarajevo's civilians since the war began 22 months ago came just after noon, as people filled the Markale market to scavenge for basic necessities.

President Alija Izetbegovic's spokesman, Kemal Muftic, said the 120mm mortar shell was fired from a Serb-held position north of Sarajevo. U.N. troops were analyzing the crater to determine the shell's origin.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic suggested government soldiers had fired on their own people as a way of persuading NATO to go ahead with threatened air strikes on Serb positions. But there was no evidence to support such a charge, which was immediately dismissed by the Bosnian government.

Gramm lambasts Clinton's proposal

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

ODESSA — While U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm and President Clinton agree that there is need for change in the nation's health care, their approaches and philosophies are different.

Gramm is "the" Republican Party opposition to the Democratic president's health-care reform plan.

"The real reason I am against the Clinton plan is not what it does to our money and not that it costs us our jobs," Gramm said at a town-hall meeting at Medical Center Hospital on Saturday.

"It costs us something more precious than our money and our jobs: It costs us our freedom.

"When my Momma gets sick, I want her to talk to a doctor, not a bureaucrat," Gramm, 51, said in lambasting the president's proposed government-run health-care plan.

The United States has the "greatest medical-care system in the history of the world," Gramm said. "In the last 25 years, 90 percent of all the cures, all the treatments, all the pharmaceuticals, all of the medical miracles

Corporate spelling bee is to be March 4

Midland's best spellers will gather once again on March 4 for the annual Reporter-Telegram Corporate Spelling Bee for Literacy benefitting the city's adult literacy agency, Need to Read.

The catered lunch and bee, billed as a "fun event for a good cause," is sponsored by the Reporter-Telegram with all proceeds going toward helping fund Need to Read, which currently has 148 volunteer tutors assisting an identical number of men and women seeking to improve their reading skills.

Five teams already have signed for this year's event: Texas Instruments, Penny Quick Printing, Texaco, Parker & Parsley and Midland College, whose team is sponsored by the Reporter-Telegram. A total of 12 teams, but no more, can participate due to the limited time frame.

Bill Dingus will once again serve as master of ceremonies, a position he has held for several years, and Denise Walters will be pronouncer.

The public is invited to attend and enjoy the lunch and the spirited bee while corporate teams usually also are backed by "cheering sections" of fellow employees on hand to support their teams.

In the corporate bee, team participants many confer among themselves about individual word spellings.

Winner of the Midland bee can participate in the State Bee for Literacy in Austin. Last year's local winner, Oxy U.S.A. Inc., went on to be declared the state winner in that competition.

Tickets to the event, which include the catered lunch, are $10 each. For tickets or for more information, call the Need to Read office, 685-4572.

Many callers think Harding should step down from team

Cityline Community Pulse

A large number of respondents in the Reporter-Telegram's Community Pulse Poll regarding Tonya Harding and her Olympic future feel the embroiled figure skater should voluntarily relinquish her position on the team during the skating competition later this month in Lillehammer, Norway.

Seventy-five percent of the 273 callers said yes, even if Ms. Harding is innocent, she should step down from the team.

Ms. Harding has repeatedly maintained her innocence, and also denies that she had any prior knowledge of the attack on rival skater Nancy Kerrigan, on Jan. 6, in Detroit. Four others, including Ms. Harding's ex-husband Jeff Gillooly as well as her bodyguard, Shawn Eckhardt, have been charged in the attack. Shane Standt, the alleged hit man, is believed to have clubbed Ms. Kerrigan just below the knee with a retractable baton in hopes of ending her chances at competing in the Lillehammer games.

Of those who chose to leave comments, many felt that Ms. Harding's lack of sportsmanship contributed to their feeling that she should voluntarily withdraw from the team. Some callers suggested that regardless of what Ms. Harding knew of the attack and when she knew it, the issue of her status on the team shouldn't necessarily revolve around guilt or innocence, but rather image and sportsmanlike conduct.

"I was a professional roller skater in the 1940s," a woman named Donah said. "That was long before it was accepted into the Olympics. I am appalled at the attitude that Tonya has shown throughout all of this. We are already looked at as ugly, greedy Americans."

Another caller, named Paula, expressed the same concern, saying, "I

JACKSON, Miss. — Byron De La Beckwith, the bombastic racist who eluded justice for 30 years, was convicted Saturday of murdering civil rights leader Medgar Evers in 1963. He was immediately sentenced to life in prison.

Beckwith, who escaped conviction by two all-white juries in 1964, appeared to smile slightly as he was booked at the Hinds County jail following his conviction by a jury of eight blacks and four whites.

The verdict sent up a cheer among the mostly black crowd attending the trial, and brought to a close one of the longest and most painful sagas of the 1960s civil rights movement.

U.S. businesses to get large piece of Vietnam pie

By George Esper
AP Special Correspondent

■ News analysis

HANOI, Vietnam — With the U.S. economic embargo now lifted, U.S. businesses can claim a large chunk of the $40 billion needed to rebuild Vietnam from the ruins of the war with the Americans.

The end of the sanctions announced last Thursday by President Clinton make it easier for American businesses to become a more active partner in Vietnam's development.

U.S. companies can compete for contracts financed by the World Bank and Asian Development Bank as well as investing their own money in Vietnam.

Vietnam estimates it will need $40 billion in private and public investment to rebuild the country and double economic output by the year 2000.

Two-thirds of that money or about $27 billion will have to come from foreign investors including American companies. The other third would come in the form of assistance from other countries and from international financial institutions like the World Bank.

The advantages to American businesses are a market of more than 70 million consumers and a large pool of cheap labor. Vietnamese laborers earn an average of $50 per month.

In short, the end of the embargo puts U.S. business on an equal footing with the European and rich Asian nations. Prior to the lifting of the embargo, Vietnam had licensed more than 800 foreign investment projects with a total approved capital of $7 billion.

For Vietnam, the end to the sanctions will make it easier to contract American expertise and use it in a country that has stood still in time for the last 40 years.

Most observers see the end of the 19-year embargo as one more step toward normalization of relations with the United States, which were broken off in 1975 when the Communist North took over the U.S.-backed South and reunified the country.

"Vietnam sees it in their interest to strengthen relations not only with countries within their region, but also with the West," said Roy Morey, resident representative of the United Nations Development Program.

Vietnam recognizes that to meet its own developmental goals it has to increase its contacts with the outside world.

For Vietnam to meet its goal of $40 billion in private and public investment and to double its economic output by the year 2000, it would mean increasing investment as a percentage of the economy from the current 12 percent to about 25 percent over the next seven years.

U.S. companies from American Express to Pepsi moved into Vietnam within hours after the embargo was lifted. And more have said they want to do business here or at least survey the market.

Vietnam suffered years of neglect and decay from failed Communist economic policies and a toll on its resources from wars with the French, the Americans, the Chinese and the Cambodians.

New defense secretary renews threat of air strikes in Bosnia

By Susanne M. Schafer
Associated Press Writer

MUNICH, Germany — Newly installed Defense Secretary William Perry, confronted Saturday by an outbreak of violence in war-torn Bosnia, renewed U.S. threats of military action to prevent the isolation of Sarajevo.

"President Clinton has already stated we'd not permit the strangulation of Sarajevo. If this action is seen as a strangulation and we cannot prevent that, we will definitely consider stronger action including air strikes," Perry said.

President Clinton later ordered U.S. planes to assist in evacuating casualties for the latest mortar attack on the Bosian capital and arrangements were made to dispatch a C-130 plane with a medical crew from Rhein Main Air Base near Frankfurt. It was leaving Germany in time to land in Sarajevo at first light today.

A senior defense official traveling with Perry defined strangulation as "any shelling or any substantial increase in shelling, or any interdiction that would block resupply of humanitarian assistance to the city — that would effectively bring the city to its knees."

Talking to reporters after his first round of meetings at a European conference on security issues, Perry echoed British and German sentiments on Bosnia. He stressed that a peace settlement will only come to the battered former republics of Yugoslavia if and when the parties in the civil war reach a peace agreement.

"The United States and NATO are not prepared to send armies into Yugoslavia against the will of the people," Perry said.

German Defense Minister Volker Ruehe, standing next to Perry, said he agreed with the American's comments and said Europe could not impose a peace agreement "from the outside."

Earlier in the day, German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said in an address to the Munich Conference on Security Policy that the allies "must exhaust all possibilities for negotiations."

British Defense Minister Malcolm Rifkind denounced the recent bombing in Sarajevo as "simply useless carnage," but appeared like other European leaders to emphasize they had little stomach for increased involvement.

"You can't impose an external military solution," Rifkind said, adding that such an act would intensify the conflict.

The comments came hours after a new barrage of shells raked Sarajevo's main downtown marketplace, killing at least 66 people and wounding dozens more, according to hospital and morgue officials.

Many of the government delegates appeared reluctant to deal with the issue of Bosnia since many had come prepared to discuss NATO's emerging new plan for opening a limited military partnership with the former Warsaw Pact nations and to air their concerns about the potential rollback of reforms in Russia.

After his discussions Saturday with Rifkind and Ruehe, Perry was slated to attend a black-tie dinner and deliver a keynote address today before returning to Washington.

Perry told reporters it was unusual for a secretary of defense to travel to Europe the second day he was on the job, but that Clinton had told him to keep his appointments in order to reaffirm Washington's commitment to NATO and its friendship with Germany.

Perry had refused to discuss Bosnia on his way to Europe, saying he preferred to deal with the issue after he'd had a chance to meet today with the two top military leaders in Europe.

WEATHER WATCH

Today's high is to be near 65

Staff Report

Another sunny day fit for tempting buds to bloom is coming up today.

The forecaster at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport is calling for a high today between 60 and 65 degrees and southerly winds at 10 to 15 mph.

The sky is to become increasingly cloudy tonight, when the low is to be near 40.

Monday is to be cloudy and warmer. Monday's peak temperature is to be near 70.

Saturday's high was 66, and the overnight low was 39.

The record high temperature for Feb. 5 is 78 degrees in 1951. The record low temperature for Feb. 6 is 9 degrees in 1989.

STATE

Mild conditions and mostly clear skies were dominant throughout the state Saturday as springlike temperatures neared 80 in some areas.

In North Texas, extremes ranged from 53 degrees in Wichita Falls to 77 degrees in Lufkin. Skies were mostly clear with some high streaks of clouds.

Low clouds remained along the coast Saturday afternoon as skies were mostly cloudy in South Texas.

There were a few light rain showers in the region, where temperatures were in the low 80s.

Skies were mostly sunny in West Texas. Temperatures ranged from 40 degrees in Amarillo to 73 degrees at Sanderson.

Forecasts call for partly cloudy skies across North Texas today. Lows will be in the 30s to mid-40s. On Monday, there will be a slight chance of thunderstorms. Highs will be in the middle to upper 60s.

This morning may bring some fog to South Texas. Otherwise, it will be partly cloudy with highs ranging from 60s in the hill country to 80s inland. Lows will range from the 30s in the hill country to 50s elsewhere.

In West Texas, skies will be partly cloudy with highs in the mid-50s in the panhandles to mid-70s elsewhere. Lows will be in the 20s in the north and 40s south.

NATION

Wintry weather across the nation Saturday included heavy rain in Southern California and snowfall in the Rockies.

Showers preceding a Pacific storm dumped 1.7 inches at Palomar Mountain, 1.38 inches at Lake Henshaw and 1.1 inches at Cuyamaca, all outside San Diego.

Rain and windy conditions were expected into Monday.

In the southern Rockies, snow fell at higher elevations in Colorado, New Mexico, Utah and Arizona.

Up to 10 inches of snow was expected in the San Juan Mountains. High winds sharply reduced visibilities with blowing snow.

Elsewhere around the country, a few snow showers lingered in the lower Great Lakes region. Snow showers produced slippery road conditions in northeastern Indiana and northwestern Ohio early Saturday morning.

A band of rainshowers extended along the central Gulf Coast. Port Arthur, Texas got nearly a half-inch of rain between 6 a.m. and noon.

At daybreak, 1 inch or more of snow covered the ground from the northern and central Plains through the upper half of the Mississippi Valley, the upper Ohio Valley and lower Great Lakes to New England.

More than a foot of snow covered much of Minnesota and the Dakotas. Up to 3 feet of snow was on the ground in parts of Michigan. More than 1 foot of snow covered parts of New York state and northern New England.

Associated Press contributed to this report.

Wedding was a lot of bull(dog)

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Sitting on all four paws, the snuffling bulldog groom looked reluctant in his top hat and tails. The bride was pregnant.

So was the bridesmaid.

What better way for them to be noticed at an annual dog show?

Paula Braz of Concord married two of her prize female bulldogs Saturday at the Golden Gate Kennel Club's 84th Annual Championship Dog Show and Obedience Trial.

It all began Jan. 3 when Ms. Braz bred the dogs, Shabrae's Easy On The Eye and Shabrae's Magic of Nam Mars, with two of her top studs, Shabrae's Bar None and Shabrae's Marlowe of Nan Mars.

Both pairings used artificial insemination because bulldogs, by reason of their unusual shape, have trouble breeding naturally.

Finding the females pregnant just weeks before one of the state's biggest shows, Ms. Braz and co-owner Donna White did the only proper thing: They planned a wedding.

And what a ceremony it was: The bride wore white. The groom wore a top hat and tails. The bridesmaid wore blue. The minister, who is responsible for the bridesmaid's condition, didn't show.

The theme was a miniature garden party, complete with a tiny latticed gazebo and roses. The couple was the center of attention.

"He's like, 'You've got to be kidding. Do I have to marry her?'" passerby Glorina Crisostomo said of the groom's expression.

Ms. Braz conceded the groom was a little less than enthused.

"I think he could kind of care less," she said. "He was excited when the (breeding) happened. But after, he doesn't care at all. Typical male."

think Tonya Harding is a very troubled young lady. I'll admit she is a very good skater, but there's more to it than that. She seems to be a very cold individual. Not once has she expressed any sorrow about what happened to Nancy Kerrigan."

Another caller said that "moral character is so important with this competition, and I don't think (Ms. Harding) displays anything our youngsters can look up to."

Others felt she had been unduly tried in the media, and several felt that, regardless of her actions, she should receive the most basic of American rights: due process.

"We're lucky enough to live in a country where every organization is required to provide due process for people suspected of a crime," one male caller said. "I sincerely hope that Tonya Harding would be allowed this due process before she is punished in any way. However, if she is punished, I would like to see the harshest punishment possible."

In the same vein, one female caller added, "I still believe in innocent until proven guilty. I think that if she is indeed innocent of any wrongdoing, she should be able to compete because she has trained her whole life and she deserves that chance if she knew nothing about it."

"Tonya is innocent until proven guilty," another female caller said. "That's what makes this country a democracy. It doesn't make any difference what this newspaper says, or any other media, Tonya has yet to be indicted. Even though Gillooly's attorney says she's guilty, let's show the world what a democracy is. If she is guilty, her medal will be taken away from her."

Robert Harrington said he felt not only should Ms. Harding remove herself from the team, but that the Reporter-Telegram should "make the results of this poll known to the Olympic Committee."

On the other hand, a few callers suggested that the media has gone much too far in its reporting of the Harding story. One female caller went so far as to liken the coverage to a public hanging.

"In polls such as this, you are trying Tonya Harding by public jury. This has never been accepted in this country. She has not been tried by a proper jury. In other times, we might have called this a lynching."

A pair of callers — one male and one female — suggested there were more important things that we should concern ourselves with.

"I think that it is ridiculous how the press has kept this thing going," said one caller who chose not to leave her name. "Our country does not revolve around figure skating. This is a bad thing, but it's not nearly as bad as Whitewater. I wish our investigative reporters were on that and not on this crucifying of Tonya Harding. It's terrible, but it's not the biggest tragedy of the entire world. Get real!"

"It's bad. She shouldn't have been hit," the male caller said. "But there's a trial going on in San Antonio that should be getting better coverage. Lorena Bobbitt and this Harding thing . . . Who cares?

Eleven people are on trial in San Antonio (in the Branch Davidian case) and from what I've heard — not in your paper — some of these people are on trial for their lives but weren't even in the compound when the shooting started. That's not being covered. Why?"

Still, two others had a question with Ms. Harding's judgment:

"She should step down," one caller said, but anyone who would want (an Olympic gold medal) so badly that she'll damage their competition isn't likely to."

Shelly in Midland said, "I think she shouldn't be allowed to compete in the Olympics because if she hadn't come home griping about the other competition (a recent international amateur event that she lost), her husband wouldn't have had any reason to hire anyone to assault Nancy Kerrigan."

FILE: Economic development to be No. 1 issue

trict 4, held by Claudia Egan.

"Normally, you can expect an opponent" based on past city races, City Secretary Bill Clanton said.

Businessman and Planning and Zoning Commission chairman Bobby Burns has announced his bid for the mayoral race. Although Faircloth has not officially made known his intentions, he is expected to run for re-election.

Some observers of city government have said that economic development will be the foremost issue in that race. During his candidacy announcement, Burns focused on a need for more aggressive leadership to spur economic development.

Five people filed for the mayoral position in 1992, with one withdrawing his bid before the election.

"As far as races, the mayoral race usually creates more excitement," Clanton said. The mayoral races usually attract more candidates than a council seat and mayoral candidates tend to spend more money on their campaigns.

As for this year's council races, Ms. Egan has publicly said she will seek another term, while Sipes said he will not. Former Airport Advisory Board chairman Ed Vogler recently announced his intentions to run for Sipes' District 3 seat.

Vogler and Ms. Egan each voiced concern for economic development when announcing their candidacies.

And if the trend remains consistent, this year's three races will be contested. In 1992, Sipes had one challenger and Ms. Egan had two. Last year, all four council seats up for election were contested.

Despite the interest to serve the city, those who do receive only nominal financial reward.

The mayor is paid $75 a month for his or her services while the City Council members are paid $25 a month.

To be eligible to run for mayor or a City Council seat, a candidate must be a U.S. citizen, have resided in Texas for at least a year, and lived in the city or applicable district for a minimum of six months before the application deadline. Candidates must be at least 18 years old on the first day of their term, have never been found mentally incompetent by a court, and not be a convicted felon.

Those seeking office must file some forms with the city secretary's office: a candidacy application, a designated treasurer form and a declaration of contributions, expenditures and loans.

Interested individuals can obtain a packet from the city secretary's office that outlines requirements and explains much of the process involved in seeking a city seat.

"It's very easy," Clanton said of the procedure to run for mayor or a City Council seat.

Filing for municipal races begins Feb. 21 and ends March 23.

Other municipal elections will be:

■ Hospital District seats up for grabs will be: District 3, currently held by Jo Ann Viney; District 4, held by Jean Pittman; and District 7, held by Charles Coffman.

This will be the first year hospital district board members will be elected to four year terms to comply with state law. Terms were previously two years each, although last year officials were elected to three years terms to allow the subsequent four year terms to stagger.

■ Midland College's board will have three places open. Those at-large positions are currently held by Bill Kleine, Parker Humes and Charlene Wurtz.

■ The Midland Independent School District's board will have positions up for election to represent District 3, held by Jack Hightower; District 5, held by George Staley, and District 6, held by Gary Willis.

■ The Greenwood Independent School District will have two seats available. They are Place 6, held by John Underwood and Place 7, held by Brooks Smith.

U.N.: Western allies discuss possibility of air strikes patched from Rhein Main Air Base in Germany in time to reach Sarajevo at first light.

It carried an eight-member medical team that will assess evacuation needs of the wounded and arrange for other C-130 flights as warranted.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher met with Clinton and other top advisers Saturday morning and consulted by telephone with British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd and other Western allies, including French and NATO officials, aides said.

The discussions focused on the possibility of air strikes and longer-term prospects for a "more vigorous" U.S. role in working with European allies toward a negotiated settlement of the war, according to one official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"This unforgivable incident clearly demonstrates the need to find a negotiated settlement to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia," Christopher said in a statement.

The first order of business is to determine responsibility for the attack, Christopher said, adding, "We do not rule out the use of NATO air strikes once responsibility has been fixed."

Madeleine Albright, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, said it appeared "the Bosnian Serbs are the ones that probably have a great deal of responsibility but it is very, very important to establish the facts."

Aides said it could take several days to determine responsibility for the attack and that the North Atlantic Council would have to give the go-ahead for retaliatory air strikes, with the first bombing to be approved by the U.N. secretary general.

It was unclear whether there would be concensus within the alliance to support air strikes, since there is concern among the Europeans about possible retaliation against their ground troops in Bosnia, aides said.

"The United Nations should urgently investigate this incident and clearly identify those who are guilty," Clinton said. "I know I speak for all Americans in expressing our revulsion and anger at this cowardly act."

Republican and Democratic congressmen criticized a lack of forceful action by the United States and Western allies to stem the bloodshed in the former Yugoslavia.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said the latest violence was "not surprising in light of the international community's utter lack of will and principle in responding to nearly two years of aggression against Bosnia."

"The slaughter of innocent, defenseless civilians can no longer be ignored by the United States," Dole said in a statement from Bal Harbor, Fla. "The response of the U.S. and its allies should not be another bureaucratic 'working group' but immediate and firm action to implement air strikes and to begin the arming of the Bosnian government."

Rep. Frank McCloskey, D-Ind., a member of the House Armed Services and Foreign Affairs committees, called the latest attack "a major turning point and an escalation in the war in Bosnia."

GRAMM: Clinton plan 'costs us our freedom,' senator says have been produced by Americans.

"Our big problem is not the quality," he said. "It is the ability to pay for it."

Gramm noted that "were insurance permanent and affordable, we would eliminate more than two-thirds of the problems that we have today with Americans not having private health insurance."

Gramm acknowledged that change is needed in health care but "in what direction?" he said.

"President Clinton wants to put the government in charge of the American health-care system. We think that's the wrong direction," said Gramm, who wants "to promote consumer choice and price competition."

In his State of the Union speech, Clinton had projected the "sugar-coating of limitless benefits for everyone," Gramm said.

"He did not share the bitter pill inside, the loss of jobs and freedom," and possibly "bankrupting" the nation.

The nation cannot afford the proposed health-care plan. Most working Americans don't want it, the senator said.

"As we debate the health-care reform issue, we ought to also talk about how expensive mandates imposed on businesses threaten to trigger the layoff of hundreds of thousands of Americans," Gramm said. "Not having health insurance is bad, but having neither health insurance nor a job is much worse."

Gramm said he would not support "any plan that eliminates the freedom people have to choose their own doctors, their own hospitals, and their own insurance."

Clinton's national health-care plan, which Gramm termed "socialized medicine," would be operated through government cooperatives.

"A lot dedicated people work for the government," Gramm admitted. "The problem is the system."

And the system would not allow a force that stimulates the private sector: incentives.

"The people who are going to be running these government cooperatives are not going to be making any more money if they control costs," Gramm said. "And they are not going to be making any less money if they don't."

Gramm said that the reams of paperwork and red tape that already confound government would hamper government-controlled health care.

Indicative of that would be the confusion generated by the Internal Revenue Service and the red tape, waste, fraud, and abuses that are well-known within the Pentagon and the Department of Defense, Gramm said.

Health care would not be simplified, Gramm said.

He said that Clinton "talks incessantly about access, about universal coverage," but "the real debate is not about coverage. It's about costs."

Contributing to health-care costs, he said, is the "government under-compensating for the health care it buys" through Medicaid and Medicare programs.

"As a result, we all pay our bills and the government's," he said.

"We have an anomaly in America, where if you don't work, you qualify for Medicaid, and, therefore, you've got health insurance. And if you do work and make a modest income, you often don't have health insurance. I do not understand a society that treats the people riding in the wagon better than it treats the people pulling it."

Gramm said that major contributing costs to health care are medical liability and defensive medicine.

"We have a system where people sue each other routinely," Gramm said. "and a system that is now adjusted to defensive medicine."

Twenty percent of medical costs deal with "defensive medicine and medical malpractice."

In frivolous lawsuits, including any against hospitals and doctors, the plaintiffs ought to bear the costs to the defendant hospitals or doctors in order to discourage idle lawsuits, he said.

Gramm said the prospects of the government "promising massive new benefits" and "running the health-care business" is "very frightening. If we adopt it we will never be able to fix it."

The World in brief

■ North Korea calls U.S. 'bluffing tiger'

TOKYO — North Korea accused the United States of trying to start another war on the divided peninsula and said the outcome would be an even bigger defeat.

Saturday's denunciation came a day after the United States began building U.N. support for possible economic sanctions against North Korea, which has rejected full international inspections of its nuclear sites.

North Korea insists its nuclear program is only for peaceful purposes. But its resistance to scrutiny has heightened suspicions that it is developing a nuclear arsenal.

"Our people, who know of the vulnerability of the United States better than anyone else . . . regard it not as a superpower but as a bluffing paper tiger," said the Minju Joson organ of the government's Administration Council.

The commentary, carried by the official Korean Central News Agency and monitored in Tokyo, went on to say that if another war breaks out in Korea the United States "will suffer a more tragic and grave defeat than in the past Korean War, in which it was humbled and bruised all over."

North Korea harshly criticized plans announced last month by the White House to deploy Patriot anti-missile batteries in South Korea, as well as a non-binding resolution passed Tuesday by the Senate urging Washington to consider returning tactical nuclear weapons to South Korea.

■ Coast Guard cancels search for ship

FALMOUTH, England — The coast guard canceled its search Saturday for the 26 crew members of cargo ship that sank in stormy seas off the Irish coast.

The search failed to find any survivors of the Christinaki, whose crew included five Greek officers, 20 Filipinos and one Honduran.

All are presumed dead, said the coast guard at Falmouth, southwest England.

The last contact with the ship was Thursday when it radioed that water was pouring in through hatches that burst open in stormy seas.

The ship was about 240 miles southwest of Cork, southern Ireland.

The 16,400-ton bulk carrier had sailed from Liverpool, northwest England, bound for the Mexican port of Veracruz with a cargo of scrap metal.

Mexican rebels demand government reform

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico (AP) — Rebel leaders, speaking to Mexican reporters deep in the jungle for the first time since their rebellion began, appealed for nationwide support as they prepare for talks with the government.

The Mayan Indian rebels, as quoted in Saturday newspapers, continued to demand the resignation of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari and insist that talks include discussion of fundamental national political changes.

The government, however, says the political system is off limits and it will only discuss rebel demands for improved treatment of Mexico's impoverished Indian minority.

"The democracy Salinas speaks of is a hoax to us," said a rebel leader who goes by the name Comandante Javier, as quoted by the daily Tiempo of San Cristobal and La Jornada of Mexico City.

He and other rebel leaders met with reporters Friday in the Lacandon jungle east of San Cristobal in southern Mexico, where the rebellion began on New Year's Day. Reporters said the trip took several days, with travel often by night.

The rebel Zapatista National Liberation Army and the government both say talks seem close, but no time or place has been announced. A cease-fire has been in effect for nearly a month.

It was not clear if the delay in starting talks was due primarily to disagreement over the agenda or to other factors, such as difficult communications with the remote rebel leadership or rebel wariness of the government's intentions.

The government has already reacted to the rebellion and to other calls for reform by signing a pact with opposition parties promising steps for free elections and by announcing plans to spend more money in the rebellious Chiapas state. About half of the prisoners captured by the army have been freed.

Asked why the government balked at including national topics, the head of a congressional committee visiting the region, ruling party Sen. Victor Tinoco of Michoacan, said the rebellion was "very well localized" in only four of Mexico's 2,600 districts.

"That is not to minimize the problem," he added in an interview on Friday.

The newspapers said the rebel spokesman, who goes by the name Subcomandante Marcos, appealed for support throughout Mexico for the rebel goals, indicating the insurgents were not satisfied with local reforms.

"As never before ... the Zapatista army needs the rest of civilian society. We depend on the rest of the country," he was quoted as saying.

South African rightists threaten violence, Mandela warns of retaliation against attacks

WELKOM, South Africa (AP) — A neo-Nazi leader threatened "total war" Saturday if whites don't get an independent state, but Nelson Mandela rejected the demand and threatened fierce retaliation against white attacks.

The war talk came a week before an alliance of pro-apartheid whites and conservative black groups are to decide whether to participate in the nation's first all-race election in April.

A boycott by the alliance, called the Freedom Alliance, could increase political violence that has killed thousands of blacks in recent years and threatens South Africa's ability to hold free and fair voting.

At least 19 explosions have occurred in rural towns in the past six weeks, with Mandela's dominant African National Congress offices targeted in several of the blasts. Police consider white extremists the likely culprits, though no arrests have been made.

"The whites in this country must realize the implications of the violence now being used by the right wing," Mandela warned an audience of mainly white business executives at a campaign stop in Welkom, where right-wingers are especially strong.

"Now it is not only blacks who are going to die — blacks and whites are going to die — innocent people," he said. "It is your duty to stand up and persuade them to abandon this suicidal scheme."

Mandela's threat was among his strongest statements on possible civil conflict. It came as the government, ANC and the opposing white and black groups prepared for a final bid at negotiating an agreement to get the dissenters to take part in the April vote.

Conservative farming country west of Johannesburg and in the central Orange Free State is the base of support for right-wing groups seeking to cling to apartheid.

In Lichtenburg, the leader of the Nazi-like Afrikaner Resistance Movement told about 400 cheering supporters that there would further explosions and violence.

"Mandela, give us a volkstaat (white homeland) or you'll have total war in South Africa," Eugene TerreBlanche said after the town honored his group.

Mandela said he was ready to negotiate with rightists but would never agree to demands for an independent white state.

"They are playing with fire," he said of white extremists.

Referring to right-wing leader Gen. Constand Viljoen's threat of "limited violence" by white extremists to try to win their demand, Mandela said such an option didn't exist.

"Once violence begins, we will decide how limited it will be," he told a crowd. "We won't make it limited violence when we retaliate."

EVERS: Jurors refuse to discuss murder case

(From 1A)

said in an emotional and joyful statement after the verdict. "Medgar," she added, eyes heavenward, "I've gone the last mile."

Evers

Mrs. Evers, usually a rock of composure, broke into tears after the verdict was read. She clasped the hand of her daughter, Reena Evers-Everett, while her son, Darrell Kenyatta Evers, clapped in jubilation.

Ms. Evers-Everett, who was 8 when her father was slain outside their Jackson home, later stood before reporters and, like her mother before her, talked to her late father.

"Hi daddy," she said in a voice choked with emotion. "We did it."

She said the pain of her father's death "cannot be erased . . . but now it can be soothed. And I got a whole lot of medicine soothed on me today."

Beckwith's wife, Thelma, broke into sobs after the verdict was read by the court clerk. "He's not guilty," she wailed to defense lawyers who tried to comfort her. "He's never been guilty and they know it, they know it."

Hinds County Circuit Judge L. Breland Hilburn announced the life sentence within moments of polling the jurors, who deliberated for about seven hours Friday and Saturday.

The jurors, who had been chosen 140 miles north of Jackson in Panola County, were taken home by bus. Upon disembarking in front of the Panola County Courthouse, they told reporters they had agreed not to talk about the case.

"They were exhausted. They were just drained," Panola County Sheriff David Bryan said.

Merrida Coxwell Jr., one of Beckwith's two court-appointed lawyers, said they would appeal.

Beckwith would ordinarily be eligible for parole in 10 years, but might be eligible earlier because of about 1½ years he has already spent in jail, District Attorney Ed Peters said.

Beckwith could have received the death penalty had he been convicted in 1964, but both his trials then ended in hung juries. The case was reopened in 1989 when prosecutors said they had new evidence against him. The death penalty law no longer applies to the Evers' killing.

The new evidence, which Peters' credited with tilting the balance toward conviction, consisted mainly of six witnesses who said Beckwith had made incriminating remarks about the killing. One witness said Beckwith had told a meeting of Ku Klux Klan leaders, "Killing that n---- didn't cause me any more discomfort than our wives have when they have a baby."

"Well," Peters said after the conviction, "he won't be bragging about it any more."

The district attorney said that he had been criticized by many people for bringing the case.

"I feel like it should have been done a long time ago," Peters said, "but by waiting we were able to get some new witnesses, so maybe it's a blessing it took so long."

Coxwell, the defense attorney, said the case raised serious constitutional issues of Beckwith's right to a speedy trial and to due process — a concern echoed by others, including some blacks.

Evers, then Mississippi field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was getting out of his car shortly after midnight on June 12, 1963, after attending a meeting to watch a televised speech on civil rights by President Kennedy. A sniper hiding in a clump of sweetgum trees shot him through the back with a .30-06 bullet.

Testimony at the trial demonstrated that a .30-06 Enfield military rifle found in a honeysuckle thicket nearby belonged to Beckwith, and that one shot had been fired from it. Beckwith's fingerprints were on the rifle's telescopic sight, and a car matching the description of his was seen in the vicinity.

His defense consisted largely of three policemen from his hometown of Greenwood, 90 miles away, who said they saw him there that night. Because of a procedural blunder, the defense was denied an opportunity to call a witness who claims to have owned a car similar to Beckwith's and was parked at a drive-in near the Evers' home when the shooting occurred.

Peters said it was a "very significant" break for the prosecution when that witness, James Hobby, was ruled ineligible to testify.

MARKET: Identification is difficult, morgue worker says

(From 1A)

"We see the shells coming from the hills," Bosnian Vice President Ejup Ganic told CNN. "This is a city under siege."

In Washington, President Clinton denounced the slaughter and called on the United Nations to "urgently investigate" who was to blame. He gave no indication air strikes were imminent but said, "We rule nothing out."

The Pentagon arranged for a U.S. medical team to arrive in Sarajevo at first light today to begin evacuating victims, a spokesman said. The team planned to call, if needed, for evacuation planes and other help from the Rhein-Main airbase in Germany.

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali in a statement condemned the attack and ordered an immediate investigation.

Civilians have been targeted numerous times since Sarajevo's siege began in April 1992. In most cases, U.N. officials have found Serb gunners ringing the city responsible.

To the horrified bystanders, the question of who fired the shell seemed less important than how it reflected the world community's impotence at ending the war.

"Thank you Boutros-Ghali, thank you Clinton," one man yelled, referring to the U.N. secretary-general.

Gen. Manojlo Milovanovic, the Bosnian Serb army chief of staff, demanded from Lt. Gen. Michael Rose, the U.N. commander in Bosnia, that Serbs be included on a commission to investigate the latest massacre.

He said if they are not, the Serb supreme command would sever all cooperation with the U.N. force and all humanitarian organizations as of Monday. There was no immediate reaction from the United Nations.

U.S. Defense Secretary William Perry responded to the carnage by issuing a new warning that NATO planes may bomb Serb artillery positions around Sarajevo.

Minutes after the shell struck, ambulances, their sirens howling, raced to and from the open market. The dead lay strewn beneath the tables as the wounded were rushed to hospitals. The air was filled with the voices of wailing survivors.

"It is a little difficult to identify the victims and the number of killed, because a lot of them are in pieces," said morgue worker Alija Hodzic.

Rescue workers dragged bodies and body parts away from collapsed market stalls on blankets and a piece of green canvas that looked like a stall cover.

Other bodies were loaded onto open trucks and vans because there were not enough ambulances and morgue vehicles.

As the wounded were piling up in the Kosevo hospital, one man on a stretcher called out: "Help me. Why doesn't somebody help me?" Next to him a woman was already dead.

By late evening, the death toll had risen to 66, Bosnian Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic said. Hospital workers said more than 200 were wounded.

After the attack, Sarajevo police banned all public gatherings, beginning today.

Gen. Andre Soubirou, the commander of U.N. forces in Sarajevo, visited the scene of the bloodbath and deplored the "terrible tragedy." Sadako Ogata, the U.N. high commissioner for refugees, said the attack demonstrated "new depths in calculated barbarism."

After meeting with other Bosnian government officials, Izetbegovic said his negotiators would still take part in peace talks with Bosnian Serbs and Croats that are to resume Thursday in Geneva.

Vice President Ganic condemned the reluctance of the world to get more involved in the conflict.

Investigators: Addicts spend disability money on illegal drugs

By Jennifer Dixon
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Social Security is paying hundreds of millions of dollars in disability benefits to alcoholics and drug addicts, who turn around and spend the money on heroin, cocaine and other illegal drugs, congressional investigators say.

According to a report issued by Sen. Bill Cohen, R-Maine, more than 250,000 drug addicts and alcoholics collected $1.4 billion in disability benefits from Social Security last year.

Fewer than a third, or 78,000, are required to receive substance abuse treatment and have someone else — a representative payee — collect their monthly check on their behalf.

Even then, investigators found widespread abuse: Only 15,700 were in treatment and some representative payees were addicts themselves or bartenders, liquor store owners and hotel managers.

"Each month, the government is giving vulnerable people the money to poison and kill themselves," says Cohen, the senior Republican on the Senate Special Committee on Aging, who released the report over the weekend.

"Hundreds of millions of scarce federal dollars are flowing directly to drug addicts, who are turning around and buying heroin, cocaine and other illegal drugs on the street the very same day," Cohen said. He described it as "federal revenue sharing for drug and alcohol addicts."

To qualify for Social Security disability, a person must be unable to work because of a physical or mental impairment that is expected to result in death or last at least a year.

Social Security awards disability retroactively to the date a claim is filed. Because the process can take a year, addicts often collect lump sum payments of $15,000 to $20,000.

"Unfortunately, we found disturbing evidence that some of these lump sums are being used for huge drug or alcohol binges, sometimes with life-threatening or fatal consequences," said Cohen, the senior Republican on the Senate Special Committee on Aging.

His report, based on investigations by the General Accounting Office, the congressional watchdog agency, and the committee's GOP staff, found:

■ A recipient in Bakersfield, Calif., who died of a lethal drug overdose bought with thousands of dollars in retroactive benefits.

■ An alcoholic in Van Nuys, Calif., who used lump sum benefits of $26,000 to buy two cars and a van, went on a drinking binge, wrecked the cars, and landed in a VA hospital, his money gone.

■ A Californian who bought a car and went on a drinking binge after receiving $18,000. He was robbed, involved in a drunk driving accident, and jailed.

Investigators examined both Social Security disability insurance, which provides benefits based on a person's work history and comes with no strings attached, and Supplemental Security Income, a welfare program for indigent elderly, blind and disabled persons.

The average monthly disability benefit under SSI is $405. The average disability insurance benefit is $641.

Of the 250,000 addicts and alcoholics on Social Security, 78,000 are SSI recipients who were awarded disability benefits solely because of their addiction. They are required to receive treatment, if it is available and at no cost to themselves.

The rest are on the rolls because they are collecting disability due to another impairment, such as the HIV virus or cirrhosis of the liver, or because they receive disability insurance for their addiction.

"The word on the street among illegal drug users is that SSI is an easy source of cash," said Cohen, "and the government is doing little or nothing to stop the gravy train."

His report cites the director of a homeless shelter in Denver who called SSI "suicide on the installment plan." The investigators also found that the disability process has spawned a "cottage industry" of clinics, doctors and attorneys who encourage abusers to get on the rolls.

Social Security spokesman Phil Gambino says the agency has improved monitoring payments to substance abusers over the past year. Drug testing is now required for SSI's drug addicts and alcoholics in 33 states and the District of Columbia.

"The American public has a right to expect that substance abusers will not simply continue to collect benefits without making an attempt to rid themselves of their addictions and seek productive employment," Gambino said.

Frustrated GOP tries to turn Clintons' land deal into Whitewatergate

By Walter R. Mears
AP Special Correspondent

■ News analysis

WASHINGTON — The chart looks like a maze — names linked by lines that interlock and overlap in all directions, with President Clinton in the middle. Republicans call it the Whitewater family tree in their unrelenting but so far frustrated effort to make the case a cutting issue.

The very complexity of their diagram, 50 names in a maze of lines, is one reason.

They've got no arena in which to pursue and dramatize questions raised about the investments the Clintons say they made and lost in the failed Ozark land deal.

Nor is there a villain they can cast as the heavy. The financier involved in this case is not a haughty fat cat: he's broke, sick, and already tried and acquitted of fraud.

None of that dispels the questions Republicans have raised as grounds for the congressional investigations that majority Democrats are refusing. But it will take more than questions to make Whitewater into Whitewatergate, the label some House Republicans want applied.

Indeed, while that argument has been going on, Clinton's approval ratings have been going up, to 58 percent in a poll a week ago. That Gallup survey for CNN and USA Today showed no significant change in the number of people who see the president as honest and trustworthy, 52 percent.

The Clintons have emphatically denied doing anything wrong.

The president has grudgingly agreed to have a special counsel look into the case of Whitewater Development Co. and the later failure of a savings and loan run by the Clintons' partner in the Whitewater land deal.

The questions involve the possibility of regulatory favors while Clinton was governor, suggestions that S&L money might have been diverted to pay off campaign debts, and the involvement of Hillary Rodham Clinton as a Little Rock lawyer.

Rumor and innuendo, says House Speaker Thomas S. Foley.

"Serious questions of possible wrongdoing," says a memo of suggested speechmaking points from the Senate Republican Policy Committee.

Either way, with a former Republican U.S. attorney from New York investigating as special counsel, the Democrats have a ready rebuttal to continued Republican demands for a congressional inquiry. Let him do his job, they say. There'll be time for hearings later if need be.

The counsel, Robert B. Fiske Jr., said he almost certainly would question the president and Mrs. Clinton under oath as part of his investigation. Congressional investigators couldn't.

And while the White House hadn't wanted a special counsel, having one enables the administration to deflect persistent Whitewater questioning.

To that extent, it helps now. Whether it hurts later depends on Fiske's findings, and there's no telling when he'll be done.

Republican congressional leaders had proposed a special joint committee to investigate, but dropped that when the special counsel was appointed, a step they also had urged.

Now the GOP pressure is for hearings in the House and Senate banking committees. Both chairmen have refused to conduct Whitewater-S&L hearings, but there apparently will be committee sessions on the management of the agency that overseas the savings and loan bailout. Those are supposed to be held twice a year, and they are overdue.

For Republicans, that will offer a way into the Whitewater case; they will be able to raise questions about Madison Guarantee Savings & Loan, shut down by the government in 1989 and bailed out at a cost of more than $47 million. In the House committee, Republicans have a right to call witnesses, and Rep. Jim Leach of Iowa, who has had his own investigators at work, said he intends to do just that.

Still, the opening would be brief, not the long, close look Republicans have demanded.

And not enough to make suspicions into issues that would resound politically if, indeed, that can be done at all.

That's particularly irksome to Republicans, who saw their administrations under frequent investigation over 12 years in the White House. Sen. Bob Dole, the Republican leader, said that happened at least 18 times.

But Democrats won't investigate Democrats, he complained, although that is hardly a surprise ending.

Clinton previews new budget in Saturday radio address

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The $1.5 trillion budget the administration unveils this week will ask Congress to make "tough choices" that will keep the deficit headed down while still proposing new programs in job training, education and crime fighting, President Clinton said Saturday.

Providing a sneak preview of the budget he will release Monday, Clinton said it will cut spending on more than 300 programs, reduce the federal workforce by more than 100,000 and give seven of the government's 14 biggest departments less money to work with than they have currently.

"We had to cut spending on yesterday's outmoded programs so we can bring down the deficit and still invest more in tomorrow's most urgent priorities," the president said in his weekly radio address.

The president said the massive spending plan, which is for the budget year that begins Oct. 1, asks the federal government to do the same thing a family has to do with its budget — "make tough choices, provide for the future and make distinctions between luxuries and necessities."

In his State of the Union address, Clinton had given notice that the spending plan would be "one of the toughest budgets ever presented to Congress."

In addition to the sharp cutbacks in many programs, it will propose outright termination of 115 programs, all in the name of keeping faith with the crowning economic achievement of Clinton's first year in office — the $500 billion deficit reduction program.

That agreement is reaping big dividends, the administration insists, by spurring a private investment boom at home and signalling to the world that the United States is getting its economic house in order.

Instead of the $300 billion deficit that was forecast a year ago for the 1995 fiscal year, the administration's new budget will project that the deficit will decline to close to $170 billion next year.

If realized, that would give the country three straight years of falling deficits, something that has not happened since Harry Truman was president.

But the reductions have not come without pain. Last year, Congress voted to increase taxes by $250 billion, reflecting increased tax rates on the wealthy and higher gasoline taxes.

Clinton's 1995 budget will not have any broad tax increases but it will have plenty of other pain in the form of cuts in government programs.

The reductions are required to meet stringent spending caps on so-called discretionary government programs — a category that covers all the functions of government outside the entitlement programs such as Social Security.

The 115 programs earmarked for extinction range from federal support for local schools with military dependents and construction grants for public libraries to the Air Force's F-16 fighter program and Small Business Administration grants for tree planting.

Among the programs targeted for cutbacks is NASA, which the administration would trim by $250 million, a small cut but the first the space agency has received in 21 years.

The administration is also proposing spending 70 percent less on loan subsidies offered by the Rural Electrification Administration, 25 percent less on Army Corps of Engineers construction projects and perhaps as much a 50 percent less for a popular federal program that helps millions of poor Americans pay their heating bills.

Already, 51 senators, including Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, have sent a letter to Clinton protesting the cut in home heating assistance. Undoubtedly, there will be many other objections as various groups appeal to Congress to save their favorite programs.

The administration has proposed cutting federal mass transit subsidies by 25 percent, a cut that the American Public Transit Association is warning will force fare hikes and service cutbacks in cities across the nation.

Some wonder just how successful the administration will be in scaling back or eliminating programs with an entrenched constituency on Capitol Hill. Cynics note that many of the targeted programs successfully fought off similar attempts by the Reagan and Bush administrations.

The Clinton team insists that times have changed and Congress now has the deficit-cutting religion. But they concede that the battle over priorities is likely to be ferocious.

Some of the biggest fights will certainly come as the administration tries to convince Congress to cut entrenched programs in favor of its new spending initiatives.

To free up funds for the homeless, the administration is proposing sharp reductions in several other popular programs administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Developing. Likewise, the administration is pushing to create a large new job training program, but part of the money would come from eliminating or scaling back older training programs, all of which have their own constituencies.

"There'll probably be a lot of blood on the floor by the time we finish," Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen said Friday.

Problems force NASA to scrap satellite release

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA scrapped plans to release an experimental science satellite from Discovery on Saturday after struggling for hours to overcome problems caused by radio interference and glare from the sun.

After advising commander Charles Bolden Jr. to get a pencil to write down instructions — "you may also need some aspirin" — Mission Control informed him that flight directors were giving up for the day.

Officials said they would try again today to release the satellite.

"I think that's an excellent plan," Bolden said.

The satellite, a 12-foot-stainless-steel disk called the Wake Shield Facility, was supposed to fly free of the shuttle for two days. Researchers wanted to see if superior semiconductor films would grow in its ultra-pure wake.

Flight director Gary Coen said other experiments would be curtailed or eliminated because of the delay in releasing the satellite, and that the craft, once deployed, would remain out for two days as planned.

Discovery doesn't have enough fuel to extend its flight. The eight-day mission is due to end Friday.

The trouble began soon after Jan Davis lifted the Wake Shield from Discovery's cargo bay.

As the Wake Shield dangled overboard on the end of the shuttle robot arm, allowing the rush of atomic oxygen to clean the extremely contamination-sensitive craft, the five status lights on the satellite appeared to keep going off. The lights are supposed to indicate the status of electricity and computer systems.

No sooner had Mission Control traced that problem to a bad battery and switched to a backup than the two satellite transmitters appeared to go out.

As the problems mounted, NASA passed on the second release opportunity and then the third and final opportunity of the day.

A Wake Shield manager, Alex Ignatiev, said the lights and battery apparently were never a problem. Glare from the sun made it hard to distinguish whether the lights were on or off, he said.

As for the transmission trouble, on-board radio interference was the likely culprit, Ignatiev said. The crew should be able to eliminate it by simply readjusting the position of the satellite on the end of the arm, he said.

If the satellite isn't released at all, Discovery's cosmonaut, Sergei Krikalev, will lose his big chance to pluck the satellite from orbit.

■ Jackson grand jury to hear testimony

LOS ANGELES — A Santa Barbara County grand jury will hear testimony this week about allegations that Michael Jackson molested a 13-year-old boy, the Los Angeles Times said Saturday.

Subpoenas have been delivered to witnesses, but neither Jackson nor the boy were summoned, according to unidentified sources, the paper said. The grand jury will determine whether there is enough evidence for an indictment.

Jackson, 35, denies any wrongdoing.

A person at the district attorney's office in Santa Barbara said no one would comment until Monday. Jackson attorney Howard Weitzman didn't immediately return a phone call for comment.

Criminal investigations were under way in Los Angeles and Santa Barbara counties because Jackson has houses there.

Lawyers for Jackson and the boy, now 14, announced Jan. 25 that they settled a lawsuit filed by the teen. Terms weren't disclosed, but sources said Jackson will pay between $15 million and $24 million.

Los Angeles County District Attorney Gil Garcetti said the settlement had no impact on his investigation.

The boy's attorney, Larry Feldman, didn't immediately return a phone call for comment Saturday.

■ Doctor must pay nurse $5,000 for 'joke'

NEW ORLEANS — A surgeon was ordered to pay a nurse $5,000 for shooting a surgical staple into her buttocks as she stooped to count sponges on an operating room floor.

Lola Simpson said she was less interested in the jury award than in bringing Dr. James Bennett to task for the 1990 incident at Children's Hospital.

She said Bennett called the incident a "joke," but he could have spread infection from the patient to her.

Bennett had just finished stapling the hip of a boy being prepped for surgery when Simpson bent down to count sponges. Bennett turned the stapling gun on her.

"There was a nice muscular man standing next to him in the operating room, but he didn't think to do that to him," Simpson said.

Bennett's attorney said the surgeon may appeal Thursday's judgment.

■ ABC, 'Roseanne' clash over series kiss

LOS ANGELES — A kiss is not just a kiss. Not when it involves Roseanne Arnold and Mariel Hemingway.

ABC is refusing to air an episode of Ms. Arnold's hit sitcom "Roseanne" because it shows her and Hemingway exchanging a kiss in a gay bar. The episode was slated to air March 1, said Tom Arnold, Roseanne's husband.

Arnold said he was told by Steve Weiswasser, senior vice president and general counsel of ABC Inc., that the scene "is not the lifestyle that most people lead."

Arnold's remarks were reported Saturday by the Los Angeles Daily News.

ABC spokeswoman Sherrie Berger said the network had no comment on the issue.

In the episode, Roseanne Conner goes to the bar with bisexual friend Nancy (Sandra Bernhard). Roseanne dances with a woman (Hemingway), smooches — and then has to explain things to husband Dan (John Goodman).

The Arnolds are executive producers of the series, now in its sixth season. Arnold said "Roseanne" producers submitted the gay bar story line two weeks ago to ABC, which rejected it. He said he refused when ABC officials asked him to replace the kissing scene.

Local attorney candidate for county court at law judgeship

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Midland attorney John D. Roosa announced his candidacy Monday for the Midland Court at Law No. 2 position citing his legal experiences as the reason he should be elected.

"I'm in my third decade of trying lawsuits...I believe that experience will qualify me to serve this community as judge," Roosa said.

Roosa, 50, attended Texas A&M University and graduated from the University of Texas at Austin. He received his law degree from South Texas College of Law in Houston.

He served in the U.S. Air Force from 1964-1968. He is a member of a number of professional organizations and serves on several committees of the State Bar.

Roosa, who is running on the Republican ticket, said he thinks he is the best qualified candidate to fill the position to be vacated by Judge James Fitzgerald, who is retiring.

"The County Court at Law is a trial court which listens to four kinds of cases: civil lawsuits, family law matters, probate proceedings and misdemeanor criminal cases," Roosa said.

He has practiced law for more than 20 years in courtrooms across the state trying lawsuits in more than 85 Texas trial courts from Houston to El Paso.

He is a partner in the law firm, Allen, Allen and Roosa. He said if he is elected he is willing to give up the partnership for the position.

"It's a sacrifice...but I believe the legal community, and I know the people of this community want and expect judges who are competent in the areas of law in which that judge is going to preside," Roosa said.

Roosa served as a special prosecutor in consumer and banking fraud cases in several counties and served as a special judge in several counties in such cases as an ill judge or other circumstances when the judge wasn't available.

"I have tried cases on both sides of the bench and believe I can be fair and impartial," Roosa said.

Roosa said this position is important because, essentially, it is listening to the same cases as the district court does.

Roosa is married to Midland native Rhonda Kellogg.

Dear Voters:

Although the County Court at Law, No. 2 hears Civil lawsuits, Family Law matters and Probate proceedings; nothing is as personal to me than D.W.I. misdemeanors. That is because I am a recovering alcoholic myself. Fortunately, when I pled Guilty to a D.W.I several years ago in Houston, the Judge who listened to my case was also a recovering alcoholic himself. In addition to the normal punishment, he took the effort to take me with him to Alcoholics Anonymous. That additional effort on his part saved my life.

I definitely support M.A.D.D. for their efforts in getting tougher laws passed. If I am fortunate enough to be elected Judge, I can assure you that I will require that all drunken drivers submit to Alcohol Abuse testing and treatment at their own expense. The law also allows for community service for repeat offenders.

Because I am not like the preacher "preaching against sin and never done it", I understand only too well the problems of alcohol. I will do whatever it takes to see that someone with a drinking problem pays for and gets treatment in addition to the punishment allowed by the law. I will not just send them to treatment, I will take them.

The problems caused by alcohol are extensive in our society but I can assure you that I will be a part of the solution. I have a great debt to re-pay that good Judge in Houston.

And I again ask for your Vote.

Sincerely,

John D. Roosa

Teamsters may still call strike against UPS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Teamsters union said on Saturday it has not abandoned plans to strike United Parcel Service Monday morning over an increase in the maximum weight of packages despite a court restraining order.

The Teamsters are threatening to strike the delivery company over its plan to increase the maximum package weight from 70 pounds to 150 pounds.

But a UPS statement issued from its Atlanta headquarters said the company believes "a job action of any kind on Monday would be a violation of the law and assumes the teamsters will honor the restraining order."

Mario Perucci, a Teamsters vice president and small package director, said the union is reviewing the order of the U.S. District Court of the District of Columbia blocking a strike for five days.

"We're still taking a look at that but we have a tentative strike date at 8 a.m. Eastern Standard Time," Perucci said in a telephone interview. "We are looking at the restraining order seriously with our lawyers but we have not changed that date."

The question is, he said, "are the restraining order and parcels more important than people. We certainly think our employees are more important than UPS parcels."

The union claimed the company was making a unilateral change in working conditions that should have been taken up during contract negotiations, which ended two months ago.

The parcel delivery company has some 165,000 employees nationwide.

Perucci said the weight increase puts UPS employees at peril. He asserted that a 150-pound weight is too heavy to lift safety without help or special equipment.

UPS officials have said the issue arose during bargaining and that the union made no objection. They said the weight increase is necessary to match competitors.

The UPS statement said that packages weighing up to 150 pounds are "standard in the industry."

NTSB reports show pilot of fatal flight jostled passengers, bullied copilots

By Philip Brasher
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The captain of a commuter plane that crashed last December in Minnesota was an angry man who deliberately jostled passengers to spite his employer and sometimes bullied or hit his copilots, colleagues told investigators.

Marvin Falitz also failed semi-annual proficiency checks three times in the past five years, according to reports released Friday by the National Transportation Safety Board.

The twin-engine Jetstream 31 — Northwest Airlink Flight 5719 — crashed near Hibbing, Minn., on Dec. 1, killing all 18 people on board.

The plane was operated by Express II, a commuter carrier affiliated with Northwest Airlines.

Falitz was in a bad mood the day of the accident because he was supposed to fly the next day, his day off, the reports revealed.

Speculation about the cause initially focused on the icy weather, but the reports released Friday would indicate that investigators are focusing on the performance of the crew. There were suggestions in the report that copilots might be reluctant to challenge Falitz if he made a mistake.

The plane had gone into a sharp dive, apparently to avoid icing, shortly before it leveled off, clipped a tree, and crashed into a hillside. The steep descent was a common practice among Express II pilots in icy conditions, investigators found. Ice can cause a plane to lose lift.

Falitz had a reputation for following company procedures and being meticulous with flight checklists, according to investigators.

But three junior pilots, known as first officers, said he was sometimes "deliberately rough on the flight controls, causing the passengers to receive a rough ride," according to the NTSB reports.

Falitz told them that was "his way of getting at the company," Express II.

Express II's chief pilot told investigators he kept an eye on Falitz, whom he described as competent but "intimidating and provocative" with colleagues.

On one flight, Falitz repeatedly punched his copilot in the headset for making mistakes, according to the reports.

There was no indication of friction between Falitz and his first officer on the flight from Minneapolis-St. Paul — Chad Erickson, 25 — in the transcript of the plane's cockpit voice recorder that was released Friday.

Before they took off, however, a ground agent said Falitz angrily criticized Erickson for an improper procedure on an earlier flight that day. The agent said he had "never seen (Falitz) act like this before."

Child warrior avenges brother's death

By Greg Marinovich
Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Before Salad Nuur Ali left home one morning, his mother prepared his breakfast of bread, oil and sweet-and-spicy tea.

Salad dallied and was late in joining his militia unit in war-shattered Mogadishu. But his commander did not punish him — he's only 15 years old.

Two years ago, during the civil war, Salad saw his slain older brother's body brought home for burial.

"I became upset and angry and decided to avenge my brother," Salad said in an interview.

He took up his brother's assault rifle and, despite his parents' pleas, went to the Murosade clan unit commanded by Col. Dhoore Mohamed Gessy.

"We suspected he was too young for the job and so I told him to remain in a defensive position. But he disobeyed me and crept forward, climbed up the back of a building the enemy occupied and shot dead the very machine gunner who had killed his brother," said Col. Gessy.

He said Salad's mother came to him, begging him to send the boy home as she had already lost three sons in the war.

"I told her that if Salad went home, she and he would die undefended."

Salad is small for his age and looks younger than 15. He is shy, smiling coyly when asked a direct question. His voice seems to have just broken, but he says he has already killed many men.

"I was not scared that day," recalls Salad of his first venture into the war. "But sometimes I am scared, especially if the war is going badly and there is shelling."

Despite Col. Gessy's pride in the young fighter, he is aware of the damage to the boy's psyche.

"We do not leave weapons near him at night because he has bad dreams," he said. One night Salad picked up a gun while sleeping and began firing, wounding two men.

"I dream about what I have passed through," says Salad softly. "I do not like the dreams."

As a tense cease-fire holds in the city, Salad has stopped having the nightmares. But he remains in the militia, still holding his late brother's oversize rifle.

1 family's plea for asylum dramatizes tightening borders

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — She was born in Somalia and at 5 fled with her family to Ethiopia. But in the spongelike way of bright children, she has soaked up a lot of German in six weeks of life in Transit Building C-183.

The 7-year-old girl can count to 20 and reads the German children's books volunteers bring to her bunk in the concrete dormitory at Frankfurt airport, where she sits in sweat pants and a blue party dress, her hair in a ponytail.

When she says "Tschuess!" — "Goodbye!" — the little girl named Istanbul sounds like a native German. She has said it all too often.

Authorities have turned down six appeals for asylum since the girl's family landed at Europe's busiest airport Dec. 10. After each refusal, deportation loomed until a volunteer lawyer launched a fresh appeal.

Though few of the 33 million people passing through it every year are likely to notice, Frankfurt airport has come to epitomize the hardening of western Europe's boundaries against immigrants from eastern Europe, Africa, Asia and the Middle East.

From Sweden to France to Greece, police are tightening the rules and cracking down on illegal aliens. Germany, long the most welcoming nation for refugees, since last July has been closed to asylum-seekers.

Natives of countries at war can stay temporarily, but Germany is narrowing that loophole, too. It has taken in 2 million refugees in the last five years, far more than any other European country. About 37,000 refugees live around Frankfurt, a city of 500,000. That is about as many as in all of Britain.

But German coffers are dry, alarm about foreign criminals is running high, and officials who've spent billions to feed and house refugees are bent on closing the door to all but the most desperate cases.

Istanbul's family would appear to be one of those. They were shot at, robbed and threatened by rival Somali clansmen in Mogadishu, said her father, Abukar Osman. Mohamed, Istanbul's 6-year-old brother, has a scar on his shoulder from a bandit's stray bullet.

In Ethiopia, where they fled to in 1992, they couldn't get enough to eat, the family says, and Marian, Istanbul's mother, lost a son in childbirth.

Marian, 41, is six-months pregnant now. After the family's last asylum appeal was rejected Jan. 20, she started having contraction pains out of fear.

She was admitted to a Frankfurt hospital for a possible miscarriage, but even that proved to be no safe haven. After one night at the hospital, border police got a doctor to release her and brought her back to the airport.

On the morning of Jan. 22, agents dragged Marian in handcuffs toward Lufthansa Flight 590, scheduled to depart for Addis Ababa, the capital of Ethiopia, at 10:50 a.m.

An unexpected reprieve came from the pilot, who refused to take her aboard, saying he couldn't be responsible for a mid-flight miscarriage.

Two days later a judge declared the family could remain in Germany — until exactly four weeks after Marian's new baby is born.

The family would be the first Somalis to be deported from Germany since Somalia's civil war began in 1990.

In December, the government ordered 100,000 Croatian war refugees to leave by April. After an outraged response from advocacy groups, officials said they might allow Croatians whose hometowns are occupied by Serbs to stay.

For those who work with the refugees, the new climate is exhausting.

At least four refugees threatened with deportation killed themselves in jail in 1993. On Wednesday, a desperate Russian evangelist set fire to himself in a Bavarian town square after getting an asylum rejection notice. He survived, with bad burns.

Both sides debate effectiveness of ban on assault weapons

By Dan Freedman
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Semi-automatic assault weapons have become a nightly newscast staple, a symbol of American vulnerability to crime and violence, whether it's teen-age gang murders or the latest random killer run amok.

To the anti-gun crowd, the answer is simple: Get rid of them. In 1989, Congress banned importation of assault weapons, and this year the House is expected to vote on a measure, part of a Senate-passed package, that bars 19 domestically-produced brands of semi-automatic rifles and pistols.

To the pro-gun crowd, banning them isn't necessary.

A semi-automatic assault weapon is one with a military-style appearance where each trigger pull fires a shot without the necessity of reloading. A typical semi-automatic can take a clip with 30 rounds or more.

The relationship between semi-automatics and crime is hotly debated. The National Rifle Association points to studies in two states that have banned semi-automatics — California and New Jersey — that show relatively few crimes are committed with assault weapons.

Anti-gun groups such as Handgun Control Inc. cite federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms statistics showing that while semi-automatics comprise .5 percent of all privately-owned guns in America (1 million of the 200 million owned), they represent 8.4 percent of guns used in crimes.

What appears beyond dispute is that semi-automatics owe their notoriety to their frequent use in horrific, highly publicized crimes.

Gian Luigi Ferri used a TEC-DC9 in his shooting spree at a San Francisco law firm last July in which eight were killed, and Patrick Edward Purdy killed five children in a Stockton, Calif. schoolyard in 1989 with an AK-47. Both are targeted in the proposed ban, authored by Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif.

The NRA insists the ban would extend beyond the 19 specified brand names to a wide variety of sporting rifles.

Still smarting from their loss over the law requiring a five-day waiting period for handgun purchases, the NRA is gearing up for the House vote, expected next month, on Feinstein measure.

NRA officials point to language in the amendment meant to cover "copycat" versions of the 19, effectively barring any weapon with two or more "assault" characteristics — grenade launchers or bayonet mounts, for instance — and any ammunition clip capable of holding more than 10 rounds.

Other such characteristics include rifles with folding stocks, threaded muzzles, flash suppressors or protruding pistol grips, and pistols with ammo magazines outside the grip.

The NRA says these criteria could be used to outlaw weapons that have sporting uses. One, they say, is the Benelli M1 super 90 field auto shotgun used during a Christmas season hunting trip by President Clinton — a staunch gun-control advocate.

"If the purpose of the legislation is to reduce violent crime, it's misguided," said NRA spokesman Bill McIntyre. "If they replaced the word 'weapon' with the word 'criminal,' it would make sense."

The NRA argues that guns in the hands of law-abiding purposes serve lawful purposes of self-defense and that semi-automatics are used for purposes other than killing people.

McIntyre points out that one of the 19 semi-automatics — the AR-15, a near replica of U.S. Army's M-16 rifle — is used in international target shooting competition.

In response to a letter from Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms director John Magaw on Dec. 20 listed 26 types of rifles, pistols and shotguns that could be banned by the criteria established in the Feinstein measure.

Feinstein insists her measure is fair to lawful gun owners. The amendment specifically protects 670 hunting and target-shooting rifles and grandfathers in all semi-automatics know in circulation, banned or not. The law is limited to "future manufacture, transfer and possession" of such weapons.

Proponents of the ban note that semi-automatic assault weapons were developed by the armed forces for military purposes — killing human opponents.

Archaeologists discover major city near gulf

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Archaeologists working near Mexico's Gulf Coast have discovered ruins of a major city that may help answer important questions about the continent's ancient cultures.

The discovery of the city, El Pital, is the most important Mexican archeological discovery since the excavation of the Aztec civilization's "Great Temple" in Mexico City in the 1970s, said Homero Aridjis, a leading Mexican writer and president of the environmentalist Group of 100 that helped sponsor the discovery.

S. Jeffrey Wilkerson, an American archaeologist from Tampa, Fla., began working last year on the site along the Nautla River, about 150 miles east of Mexico City and about 10 miles up river from the Gulf, a trip Wilkerson said could have been made by small boat in ancient times.

Earlier investigators thought the site to be a series of small settlements. But Wilkerson found it was a single metropolis that apparently dominated a large area in the years 100 to 600 A.D., prior to the emergence of El Tajin, 40 miles to the north.

"It appears that the site is of immense importance for its own monumentality and extent, and also for its role in the cultural dynamics of ancient Mesoamerican civilization," said George E. Stuart, chief archaeologist for the National Geographic Society, which also sponsored the project.

El Pital apparently flourished at about the same time as Teotihuacan, the famed city of pyramids in the highlands outside Mexico City. Wilkerson said it may help answer longstanding questions about the spread of cultures between the two zones.

"It appears to be the principal end point of an ancient cultural corridor that linked the north-central Gulf Coast with the cities of central Mexico," Wilkerson told a news conference.

Ceramics at the site indicate it may have been an unusually multicultural city as well, he said.

Ironically, Wilkerson had been forced toward the site because Mexico's National Institute of Archaeology and History had excluded him from a major new project further up the river in a region where he had been working for years.

The exclusion caused a controversy among Mexican intellectuals, some of whom accused the government of robbing Wilkerson of his intellectual property.

Around El Pital, Wilkerson said his team discovered about 200 structures, including earthen pyramids more than 80-feet high, covered by orange and banana groves.

The tropical jungle covering the area was gradually stripped away by the 1950s, exposing the pyramids that many local residents believed were natural hills, Wilkerson said.

The pyramids appear to be the tallest and most massive in the gulf region, said Wilkerson, who has worked in the area for about 30 years.

A city center tentatively estimated at 450 acres is surrounded by roughly 40 square miles of outlying settlements that used raised fields and sophisticated irrigation.

In an article for National Geographic Research and Exploration magazine, he said the raised field systems and fresh-water channels were "among the largest earth-moving projects of their time in ancient Mesoamerica."

Mesoamerica is an archeological term for an area stretching from part of the southwestern United States down through Panama.

Wilkerson said it was too early to estimate the population, but that it appeared to be roughly as dense as that of Tajin, which held tens of thousands of residents.

2-step lawsuits

DALLAS — The Texas Supreme Court, trying to ensure fairness and keep the state current on punitive damage laws, has instituted a new two-part trial system in civil lawsuits.

Call it the Texas two-step for such cases. Justices ruled Wednesday that when plaintiffs now seek punitive damages, defendants can have the trial broken into two separate phases.

The ruling was welcomed by Texas business organizations as an important step toward reversing what they say is a trend toward excessive awards in civil lawsuits.

The first, and main, part of a trial in which punitive damages are sought would still determine who wins or loses. If the defendant loses, the first phase will also determine the amount of actual damages owed and whether additional damages to punish the defendant should be assessed.

But a court would not hear any evidence or make any decision at that point on the amount of that additional award.

If needed, a second step will include a bifurcated hearing to decide that. Included in that phase will be information about the defendant's assets, resources and financial wealth.

That's useful, trial lawyers say, so that the punishment will be large enough to be felt.

Critics of the current system have argued that when such information is introduced in the main trial, it can prejudice a judge or jury. They say the decision of who wins and the actual damages suffered is sometimes made on the basis of how rich the defendant is instead of the evidence of wrongdoing.

Some trial lawyers expressed disappointment in the ruling but were uncertain whether it would greatly alter the final outcome of most cases.

Justices noted that 13 states already apply some version of bifurcation in punitive damage cases.

Make a plan. Scrutinize it. Test it. Put it into action. Expect quality.

That was some of the advice that Sandra Kaplan, a professor at the University of Southern California, offered West Texas teachers and administrators in "Vision II: A Class Act" at the second annual Permian Basin Conference on the Education of Gifted and Talented Learners.

"We don't do anything in our classrooms anymore without a plan," Ms. Kaplan said Saturday at the Region 18 Education Service Center.

The objective is to "get quality work" out of students, she said.

Ms. Kaplan was the keynote speaker at the "Class Act" seminar, which was attended by about 350 educators and parents from the Midland-Odessa area to as far away as the Alpine-Terlingua region.

One test of the viability of a plan is to determine if the approach is teachable, learnable, worth the time and effort, and significant, she said.

Ms. Kaplan, who is a clinical professor in USC's Teacher-Education Department, said "the worst thing" she could imagine in a classroom would be "people teaching toward the test . . . to increase test scores.

"That kind of teaching has not always paid off," she said following a three-hour seminar on "Meeting the Needs of Gifted Learners in the Regular Classroom."

"Just drill has not been sufficient," she said. "We need to look at how we can help our children learn the skills . . . embedded in curricular tasks."

Ms. Kaplan contrasted curricular teaching approaches: the traditional or integrated approach vs. a

FORT WORTH (AP) — Forty potential jurors have been summoned to appear in court Monday to begin jury selection in the ethics trial of U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison.

Shroud of publicity drapes murder case

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel

Trial to begin Monday for 18-year-old Ramsey Harrell who is charged in the murder of 48-year-old Tommy Musick.

Charges of too much publicity have surrounded what is becoming the high-profile capital-murder trial of Ramsey Blake Harrell, who is charged with killing an area hairdresser last spring.

Harrell, 18, of Odessa was indicted on a murder charge in the April 14 shooting death of Tommy Edward Musick, 48, of Midland. Another man, Scott Thomas, 19, of Midland also has been indicted on the murder charge.

Musick was shot several times in the head on the evening of April 14 and his body was dumped on a county road near the Ector-Midland county line. His car was found near the airport. Musick died a few hours later at a local hospital.

Midland County Sheriff's deputies and Odessa police worked together on the investigation that led to Harrell and Thomas.

Musick's roommate told officers Musick was supposed to be with the defendants on the night of his death, but later in the evening the two men appeared at their home claiming that they never saw him.

Officers later found both men at Harrell's home and recovered the alleged murder weapon — a .22 caliber revolver — at Harrell's home, according to pre-trial testimony.

Harrell allegedly confessed, on tape, to investigating officers following his arrest several hours after Musick died.

Defense attorneys tried to keep the tape from being presented as evidence in the trial, which starts Monday in 238th District Court, but the judge ruled Harrell had been told his rights before making the statement.

On the tape, which was played in a pre-trial hearing in late January, Harrell said he pulled the trigger and shot Musick, but didn't know how many times. At times, Harrell sobbed on the tape.

According to the tape, Harrell said Thomas called Musick to ask for a ride to Thomas' house. On the tape, Harrell said he rode in the back seat of the car and Thomas sat on the passenger side.

Harrell said the men were sitting in the car in Thomas' carport when Musick made a sexual overture toward

Shield of denial delays daggers of daily life

The newspaper headline said: "A loud thumping sound is probably not a good sign." The story that followed was about car trouble.

Ott

What the headline should have said was: "If you hear a loud thumping sound turn up your radio as high as it will go." The reason being, of course, that the music will drown out the thumping sound. And, as we all know, what you can't hear can't hurt you.

Ignorance is indeed bliss.

There is probably not a worse feeling in the world than suddenly realizing that your car is doing something peculiar. As with alcoholism, your first inclination, after turning up the radio, is to go into denial. You simply refuse to admit a problem exists.

What noise? you say to yourself. Or, if you are in a particularly foolish mood, you might say, "No problem. That noise is coming from the car over there."

It's the same thing with smoke escaping from under the hood.

You merely shrug your shoulders and assume it is the exhaust from the car in front of you. Then you turn up the radio even louder and sing along with Mick Jagger.

Denial can be a wonderful thing. By putting a bad thought out of your mind you are able to pretend all is well. And, it goes beyond car trouble. It works with all aspects of life.

Take your marriage for example. It may be crumbling all around you, yet by refusing to acknowledge the problems exist you might be able to postpone the inevitable — your wife walking out on you and taking all the clean towels with her — by several weeks.

Here's another example. You owe a small fortune on a particular credit card and haven't made a payment in at least five months. Each day when you arrive at the office there is 1-800 phone number for you to call. But by simply refusing to make that phone call you can successfully delay the threats of "ruined credit" and "possible lawsuits" for a couple of months.

Now, you might be thinking, "But, Gary, what good does that do? The ugly consequences are still going to happen."

To which I respond, "So what? You delayed it for as long as possible and there's something be said for that."

Indeed, that is the crux of what we're talking about here — putting off bad news.

Is that childish behavior? Of course.

Does it make things better? Not at all.

Then why do it? Because bad news is painful and no one likes to hurt. So put it off.

Laugh today, cry tomorrow.

It's really a very simple strategy. You ignore reality and, instead, live in a make-believe world where everything is nice and pretty. Besides, you might die before tomorrow arrives, and in such case you will have managed to avoid the bad news altogether.

You will go to your grave not realizing that, yes, it was YOUR car making that weird noise, YOUR wife who left with the clean towels, YOUR credit that was ruined.

So don't let the prospect of bad news get you down. Delay it. Postpone it. Avoid it altogether.

If necessary, stick your head in the sand and keep it there.

After all, when dealing with life's unfortunate situations, always remember the battle cry: no news is good news.

operations division under Deputy Chief John Urby. The software will work in conjunction with the department's Communications Aided Dispatch system, which tracks all information when an officer answers a call.

"The software will fit like a glove with our existing dispatch system," Urby said. "The information will be downloaded into the PROS system and analyzed."

The PROS system will compile all the information from the dispatch system as recently as the past 24 hours. The system will evaluate all factors of police work, such as when calls come in, dispatch and response times, priorities of calls and officers available.

The system then can make recommendations for re-scheduling officers to have a maximum number of officers on duty at peak-call times.

"We used to do these studies manually," Urby said. "But, it takes six weeks to do that and by the time you finish, the information is old and stale. You can't make recommendations for re-scheduling without up-to-date information."

In addition to scheduling, the software will analyze all troop work, design beats for officers based on equalized manpower, help in proactive policing with crime analysis, forecast future needs and help with traffic needs.

Urby said that although the department will pay close attention to the computer recommendations, it will also consider the human side to scheduling.

"We will try to get optimum scheduling for everyone," he said.

"Of course, you can't please everyone. The schedule will be designed for a year and most officers will follow the same schedule for a year.

There will be about 10 percent that has to shift due to changing demands, but all of this will take into consideration the officers' personal needs and what is best for the city," he said.

Once the system is installed, it will take about six months preparation to go on-line. Training for the system is included in the total cost.

The system is currently being used in 30 departments nationwide, including Dallas and Austin.

holistic or systems approach.

While the former is the foundation of the latter, Ms. Kaplan noted that the systems approach is designed to be tantalizing to the gifted students and to be provocative and to stimulate "more inquiry and thought."

A systems approach — whether it is in language arts, science, or social studies — would take in the general and the detail. And the approach would study how interactions — from the human body to the political process — work and effect change.

"Conflict is a universal idea," she said. "Conflict is a change agent. Without change, you and I would be riding around in a buggy."

In education, "we are moving the standard of learning," Ms. Kaplan said. "We are taking the old stuff and using it for new purposes to understand bigger, more abstract, and more complicated ideas."

Ms. Kaplan discussed such basics as reading and mathematics skills and what's beyond those basics.

"The skills of reading and the skills of multiplying are not sufficient. They are not the only goal we have. We also have goals to help kids understand to make relationships, how to be investigators, how to see things from multiple points of view.

"So, we are looking at reading skills and math skills as tools to get to a higher level of conceptual understanding and performance — making big connections in relationship among ideas."

While Ms. Kaplan said that not "all children are gifted," she said "all children do have some special abilities. And all of us are members of many cultures. We can be a member of a whole classroom and a member of special groups as well."

HIDALGO — Hundreds of Central American used-car traders stranded at the border for more than a week cheered an announcement Saturday that Mexican customs will allow them to haul their goods home.

"Gracias!" tired-looking men shouted as they applauded and embraced two Guatemalan members of the Central American Parliament who came to this border town to announce that Mexico will relax its stance, at least temporarily.

Without advance notice, Mexican customs began enforcing new restrictions on Jan. 27. The move virtually shut down a growing flow of Central Americans who buy used cars and equipment in the United States, drive through Mexico and resell their wares in their home countries.

Mexican customs officials had said their actions were aimed at avoiding hazards on the mountainous highways to Central America.

It's not uncommon to see a "transmigrante" — as Central Americans passing through Mexico are known — driving a beat-up car, pulling another car, with junk stuffed to the windows of both vehicles.

Among the popular items are kitchen appliances, bicycles, farm equipment, computers, salvaged auto parts and used clothes.

Mexico's action stranded hundreds of transmigrantes in Hidalgo and other border towns on the U.S. side. Many slept in their cars for more than a week. Others peddled their cargo for money to eat or stay at a motel.

Cesar Olmos of Costa Rica, who spent nine days in Hidalgo, said this trip was a loss. "We still have a long way to go," he said.

The Central American Parliament members, Hector Manuel Klee Orellana and Antulio Castillo Barajas, presented a letter from Mexican Customs General Director Luis Manuel Gutierrez Levy, whom they had met Friday.

The letter said the transmigrantes will be allowed to cross Mexico with their loads until Feb. 21.

By then, the Mexican government will establish a new policy to regulate the transmigrante traffic.

Klee Orellana pledged that the Central American Parliament will work with Mexican officials on the new regulations.

Youth leads police on high-speed chase

Staff Report

A 16-year-old Midland youth, driving a subcompact car at night without headlights on, led Midland police on a 31-minute chase "all over the city of Midland" early Saturday morning, according to a police report.

The police report offered no clue as to why the youth eluded police at speeds close to 90 mph.

The chase started at Midkiff Road and Illinois Avenue and ended 31 minutes later at Whitney and Metz drives, according to the report.

In speeding away from pursuing officers in several patrol units with rotating red-and-blue lights, the youth "ran red lights, drove without headlights turned on, and reached speeds close to 90 mph," police said.

The youth "intentionally tried to run into police units on several occasions" and drove over yards, and into fences and street signs.

He was being held in Culver Youth Home Saturday for aggravated assault with a motor vehicle, which police termed a "weapon," according to the report.

TRIAL: Judge examines tape

(From 1B)

Thomas and Harrell shot him, according to the taped statement.

He said Thomas took the gun from him, then ran to get some towels to clean the blood out of the vehicle. He said the two men then shoved Musick's body into the back seat of the vehicle and drove away, according to the recorded statement.

Harrell said they then dumped the body, left the car at the airport and walked home, according to the tape.

"We were both freaking out," Harrell said on the tape.

A sheriff's investigator said that later that night, after Musick's roommate implicated the two defendants, he went to Thomas' house and found the blood stains on the driveway.

Both men were arrested later that night. Both remain free on bond under house arrest.

The trial is expected to start late Monday and go through the week.

Prayer vigil targets resolve of woman charged in baby's kidnapping

By Chip Brown
Associated Press

AUSTIN — A prayer vigil Saturday focused on breaking the icy resolve of the suspect in the kidnapping of a 3½-month-old baby boy.

Like the cell she sits in, any possible answers that Cathy Lynn Henderson may have about the whereabouts of Brandon Baugh remain locked up.

"She has done everything she can to keep us from finding Brandon," said Travis County Sheriff Terry Keel.

"If she wants to cooperate, we can solve this pretty quick," said sheriff's department spokesman Andy Saenz.

Ms. Henderson, a day-care provider from the Austin area, is charged with kidnapping the boy while he was in her care Jan. 21. After a large-scale search that involved a national television program, she was arrested Tuesday in Independence, Mo. A bond hearing is scheduled for next week.

The baby has not been found.

About 30 people shared tears and hugs with the boy's parents, Eryn and Melissa Baugh, at a prayer vigil on the front steps of the Capitol. Many then embarked on a journey to try to find the boy themselves.

"When we heard that Cathy Henderson was not releasing any information, we decided we needed to act quickly ourselves," said Lois Smith, who helped organize the vigil.

"This has brought out the parent in everyone. It's a parent's worst nightmare."

The Baughs huddled close to family members before leading a caravan of cars decorated with baby blue ribbons north on Interstate 35. At least two of the volunteers, Charlie Woods and Jimmy Jimenez, hope to retrace by car the route to Missouri believed to have been taken by the suspect.

They planned to stop in towns along the way and distribute fliers in hopes of locating the 12-pound, fuzzy brown-haired, blue-eyed child.

"We cannot be overcome by hate and fear," said the Rev. Jim Chandler, of the First United Methodist Church of Round Rock, who led the vigil. "The caravan keeps everyone moving forward and thinking positive. The last 15 days have seemed like 15 years."

Keel acknowledges there is a "strong possibility that what we are dealing with here is a homicide and possibly a capital murder."

The Austin American-Statesman reported Saturday that the focus of the investigation has turned to Ms. Henderson's attorney, Nona Byington, who met with her client for two hours after Ms. Henderson was returned to Austin Wednesday.

The newspaper reported that authorities collected evidence from Ms. Byington's office Friday. Ms. Byington says she will stand behind the attorney-client privilege.

Friendly welcome surprises new blacks in Vidor

By Terri Langford
Associated Press

VIDOR — Hugs were the last thing Donise Jackson expected when she and her five children moved in the middle of the night under federal guard into this town's all-white public housing complex.

Death threats, taunts and slurs, perhaps. But not hugs.

"It really surprised me because I wasn't looking for it and I don't have to say a word," said Ms. Jackson, 25, raising her voice to be heard over her children's playful laughter in their freshly painted new apartment.

"They just come up to me and ask me 'Are you one of the ladies who moved out here?' and I tell them yeah, and they just, you know, some of them hug me. Some of them shake my hand and greet me. It's really not something I thought would take place."

Not many did.

Not after last year's disastrous desegregation effort by the Orange County Housing Authority, when the complex's four black families were chased away by death threats and taunts. The last to leave, Bill Simpson, was killed less than 12 hours later in a random shooting in nearby Beaumont.

Shortly after, Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros seized control of the authority, demanded the resignation of its director and vowed that blacks would live in Vidor, about 100 miles east of Houston near the Texas-Louisiana border.

Cisneros also ordered $2.1 million in improvements, including a new laundry facility, air conditioning units, job training, GED classes and shuttle van transportation for residents.

And he beefed up security. The circling development of single-story duplexes sits behind a six-foot chain-link fence and 24-hour police guard shack. Outsiders are barred unless invited by a resident.

Federal marshals accompany the complex's black residents to school, the store, visits to relatives in nearby towns, everywhere.

So far, five black families have moved into the 74-unit complex in January.

JURY: Hutchison denies any type of wrongdoing duct and felony counts of tampering with a government record and tampering with physical evidence.

A Republican, Mrs. Hutchison has denied any wrongdoing and claims the charges against her were part of a Democratic plot to ruin her re-election campaign.

Also on Friday, attorneys for Courtroom Television Network and the Fort Worth Star-Telegram filed motions asking Onion to open courtroom proceedings to video and still cameras, respectively. Onion has said cameras will not be permitted.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Hutchison's latest campaign finance report shows she used at least $93,000 in campaign funds to pay her defense attorneys.

Under federal election law, use of campaign funds for such items is legal.

Mrs. Hutchison's spokesman, David Beckwith, said the senator used campaign funds until she set up a separate legal defense fund to pay her attorneys.

Campaign finance reports filed with the secretary of the Senate show Mrs. Hutchison paid McColl & McColloch law firm of Dallas $93,833.15 for "consultant services" in 1993.

Michael McColloch is a member of her criminal defense team.

Earlier, Mrs. Hutchison reported using $30,000 in state campaign funds to pay DeGuerin and Dickson of Houston. Dick DeGuerin is her chief lawyer in the ethics trial.

Both sides claim victory with cult witness

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Former Branch Davidian Kathryn Schroeder lived up to prosecutors' promises to divulge the apocalyptic sermons of David Koresh and his anticipated violent clash with the government.

Defense attorneys, though, insist the star government witness failed to demonstrate a conspiracy necessary to convict 11 Davidian defendants of murdering four federal agents.

"She's obviously an insider. She knows a lot. And she says she wasn't involved in a conspiracy," said one defense lawyer, speaking on condition of anonymity because of a judge's "gag order" on attorneys.

"In the long run, I think she helped us," another defense lawyer said.

Ms. Schroeder, 31, who agreed to testify against her former religious comrades in exchange for a lesser charge and a lighter sentence, had been expected to testify for two or three days.

Instead, she was in court about a day.

On Wednesday, Ms. Schroeder said Koresh intensified his doomsday message and stockpiled weapons for a "final confrontation" before a shootout with agents of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

Four ATF agents died in the Feb. 28, 1993, gun battle that erupted from a failed raid at the Davidian compound near Waco. The firefight led to a 51-day standoff that ended April 19 in a raging fire. Koresh and about 80 followers died in the inferno, some from gunshots.

"If you can't kill for God, you can't die for God," Ms. Schroeder quoted Koresh as telling his disciples. She said all the defendants were Koresh followers.

With a wide smile, the diminutive former Davidian identified each defendant. Most grinned back at her.

At times citing Bible verses, Ms. Schroeder explained that Koresh's followers adhered to his orders, whether it meant handing over their wives to him, target-practicing with assault-style rifles or being punished for "sins" such as smoking or drinking alcohol.

The details of Ms. Schroeder's testimony virtually echoed lead prosecutor Ray Jahn's opening statements to the jury. The conspiracy question, however, remained debatable.

"We will put a gun in everyone's hands who is charged," Jahn had said. "We will show they were not mere Bible students there, but they took an active role in this conspiracy."

Under cross-examination Thursday by defense lawyer Douglas Tinker, when asked if she conspired to kill federal agents, Ms. Schroeder said: "Not in those words."

Later, Jahn pressed her again about a conspiracy.

"Killing the agents was not something that I thought about," she said.

"Would you have done it?" Jahn asked.

"If I was told to, yes," Ms. Schroeder said.

Defense lawyers, who claim their clients acted in self-defense, contend there's a big difference between hearing a sermon about possibly killing someone in the future and actively conspiring to murder.

Prosecutors repeatedly have declined to comment.

Defense attorneys touted the fact that they were permitted to show the jury pictures of other Koresh followers. Ms. Schroeder identified the Davidians and offered details about their families.

CHARLES KELLY

Monday, February 7, 1994
Midland College Roadrunner Room (Student Center)

Mr. Charles Kelly, is a business professional with a background in sales, marketing and business development. He brings a wealth of experience and corporate contacts to his position as president of AAMB, The American Association of Minority Businesses, Inc. which he founded in 1992.

After obtaining his bachelors degree from the University of North Carolina at Charlotte in business administration, and working for major corporations such as General Motors and Hoechst Celanese, Mr. Kelly opened Kelly and Associates, a management and marketing consulting firm.

As a minority entrepreneur consulting with other minority businesses, Mr. Kelly saw first hand the disparity in opportunities afforded large companies and small minority businesses. He began working with a variety of national, statewide and local non-profit associations involved with the education of minority youth and low income business development. This work has culminated with the development of AAMB, a non-profit 501 (c) (3) trade association that uses the combined buying power of minority businesses nationwide to negotiate contracts and preferred pricing on a wide range of products and services. Additional money is also used to develop mentoring and internship programs as well as scholarships to encourage minority entrepreneurship, and develop those businesses successfully.

Mr. Kelly continues to use his time, talents and resources to work towards his life's goal of achieving economic parity between minority and majority businesses. Through AAMB, many major corporations are able to effectively and efficiently reach out to the minority business community and minority businesses are given the economic opportunities they need to compete successfully in today's marketplace.

Mr. Kelly's presentation is being held in conjunction with the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Inc.'s eighth anniversary and the celebration of African-American History Month. Entrepreneurs and youth are invited as well as the general public. The program will take place in the Roadrunner Room in the student center at Midland College, February 7, 1994 at 7:30 p.m.

Let's Go Cruisin'

Carnival Offers Vacationers New Ship and New Itineraries in 1994

Carnival Cruise Lines is offering vacationers two new ships as well as a variety of new itineraries in 1994, including -- for the first time ever -- Carnival sailing from New York, Tampa and New Orleans.

For those seeking the excitement of a new ship, week-long cruises to either the Eastern or Western Caribbean are available on the SuperLiner Sensation, which began service late last year from Miami.. Consumer and travel agent acceptance of the Sensation has been extraordinary, with the ship's unique "sensory-themed: interior design, stunning public rooms and exhilarating entertainment receiving particularly high praise.

To make way for the new Sensation, Carnival has completed the repositioning of two other vessels. Port Canaveral, the popular cruise port adjacent to Orlando, is the new home for Carnival's SuperLiner Fantasy, which operates three- and four-day cruises to the Bahamas. Pre- and post-cruise packages incorporating land-stays in the Orlando-Kissimmee area, rental car and admission to Central Florida attractions, can be combined with a fantasy cruise.

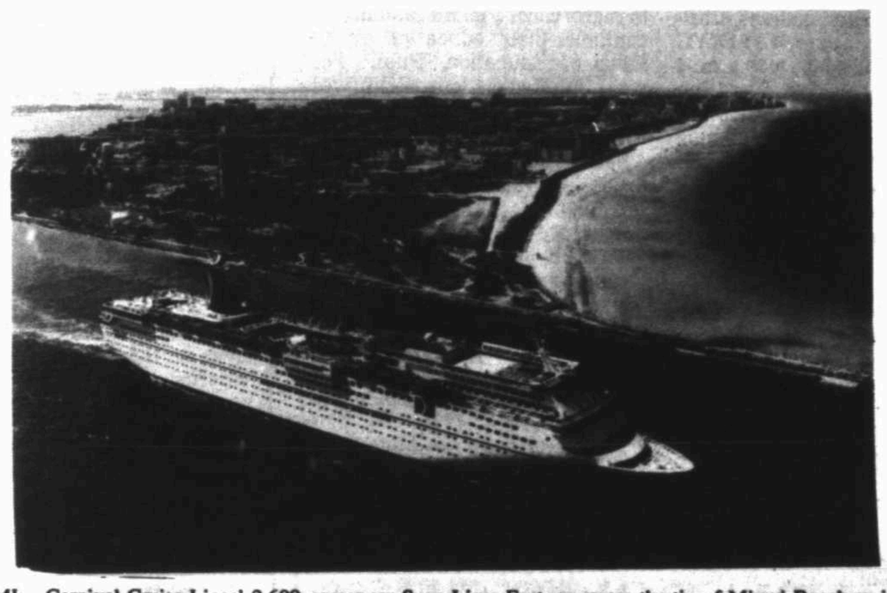
The SuperLiner Ecstasy now offers short cruises from Miami including a brand new itinerary -- four day cruises to Key West and Cozumel. While three-day Ecstasy cruises call in Nassau, the new four-day itinerary offers an excellent short-cruise alternative to the Bahamas.

The Big Apple will play host to a "Fun Ship" for the first time ever when the new $315 million SuperLiner Fascination arrives this summer fresh from a shipyard in Helsinki, Finland. Following a summer series of two-and five-night cruises from New York, July 24 through September 4, the Fascination will enter year-round and seven-day southern Caribbean service from San Juan on October 1.

Finally, the Carnival's MS Tropicale will inaugurate a first for the cruise industry this October -- seven-day Western Caribbean cruises that include a U.S. port of call. Both Tampa and New Orleans will be ports of call and ports of embarkation.

Passengers may either board the Tropicale on Sunday for seven-day round-trip cruises from Tampa, calling at Grand Cayman, Cozumel and New Orleans, or they may embark on Friday in New Orleans for seven-day round-trip cruises to Tampa, Grand Cayman and Cozumel. Because of the strong tourist appeal of both areas, the company expects a high percentage of passengers to take advantage of both pre- and post-cruise stay-overs.

Carnival presently operates eight ships on three-, four-and seven-day cruises to the Bahamas, Caribbean and Mexican Riviera, as well as 10- and 11-day Pamama Canal cruises. In addition to the Fascination, slated to enter service in summer 1994, Carnival has three more ships on order -- the 2,600 passenger Imagination, scheduled for delivery in 1995, an as-yet-unnamed 2,600 passenger ship, scheduled for delivery 1996, and a 95,000 ton ship, which will be the largest in the world, to be delivered in 1996.



MIAMI -- Carnival Cruise Lines' 2,600-passenger SuperLiner Ecstasy passes the tip of Miami Beach as it heads from the Port of Miami toward Caribbean ports of call. The 855-foot-long, $275 million floating resort features a seven-deck-high atrium, 12,000-square-foot health spa, dazzling casino, state-of-the-art show lounge and an array of imaginatively themed public rooms reflecting a "visionary metropolis" motif.

"With parisimony a little is sufficient; without it nothing is sufficient; but frugality makes a poor man rich...."

Seneca

We suspect that Seneca, had he lived today instead of in the First Century, might have used "frugality" throughout as a better word than "parsimony"..... which today means "miserly, stingy, extreme frugality".

It is, however, difficult to find fault with Seneca's conclusion. The ability to be saving, to make do with what he has, can make even a poor man rich in the sense that his little is sufficient. What more can a rich man boast?

Our staff is qualified to give advice on the availability of such benefits as Social Security, Veteran's and insurance. We can often suggest sources of unsuspected benefits and assist in the application for them.

	238TH JUDICIAL DISTRICT

NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF CLASS ACTION AND PROPOSED SETTLEMENT

TO: ALL PERSONS AND ENTITIES WHO NOW OWN OR WHO HAVE EVER OWNED A ROYALTY INTEREST AND/ OR AN OVERRIDING ROYALTY INTEREST SO AS TO BE ENTITLED TO SHARE IN PRODUCTION FROM THE 523 OIL AND/OR GAS WELLS DESCRIBED HEREINAFTER EXCLUDING ANY PERSON OR ENTITY WHO WAS A PARTY PLAINTIFF TO A LAWSUIT STYLED PARKER & 1994, PARSLEY PETROLEUM COMPANY, ET AL., V. DRESSER INDUSTRIES, INC., ET AL., BEING CAUSE NO. MO-89-CA-193 IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS, MIDLAND/ ODESSA DIVISION, OR WHO WAS A PARTY PLAINTIFF TO A LAWSUIT STYLED PARKER & PARSLEY PETROLEUM COMPANY, ET AL., V. DRESSER INDUSTRIES, INC., ET AL., BEING CAUSE NO. 39,224 IN THE 238TH DISTRICT COURT OF MIDLAND COUNTY, TEXAS.

THE 523 WELLS WHICH ARE THE SUBJECT OF THE PENDING CLASS ACTION ARE SITUATED IN THE SPRABERRY TREND IN MIDLAND, MARTIN, REAGAN, UPTON, CRANE, LOVING, GLASSCOCK, AND ANDREWS COUNTIES, TEXAS, AND ARE OPERATED BY PARKER & PARSLEY PETROLEUM COMPANY. THEY ARE FULLY DESCRIBED IN EXHIBIT A TO THE PLAINTIFFS' FIRST AMENDED ORIGINAL PETITION FILED IN THE ABOVE ENTITLED LAWSUIT.

Your rights may be affected by the above entitled lawsuit (the "Class Action") and a proposed settlement of the Class Action. The six above named Plaintiffs are the designated Class Representatives (the "Class Representatives"). Class Counsel are Don Graf and Jim Hund of McCleskey, Harriger, Brazill & Graf, L.L.P., Vann Culp and Marc Skeen of Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder, Inc., and John L. Shepherd (the "Class Counsel"). The Class Representatives, Class Counsel, and all the Defendants have agreed to the proposed settlement; and the Class Representatives and Class Counsel recommend that all Class members accept the proposed settlement.

The Class Representatives allege that the Defendants and their predecessors, including BJ Titan Services Company, intentionally and knowingly engaged in a scheme of improperly treating and/or fracturing the 523 wells commencing in 1983, which conduct resulted in injury to all royalty and overriding royalty interests and owners entitled to share in production from the wells. The Class Representatives allege that the Defendants' conduct constituted fraud, gross negligence, and negligence and seek recovery of damages for the members of the Class for alleged loss of past and future production of oil and gas from the 523 wells and alleged reduction of fair market value of the royalty and overriding royalty interest in the 523 wells owned by members of the Class.

The Defendants deny the Class Representatives' allegations in all respects and deny that the Defendants have any liability whatsoever to any member of the Class.

On September 17, 1991, the Court determined that the lawsuit should be maintained as a class action on behalf of all present and former owners of royalty and/or overriding royalty interest in the 523 wells who were not parties plaintiff to either of the two Parker & Parsley Petroleum Company, et al., v Dresser Industries, Inc., et al., lawsuits identified above in the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas, Midland/Odessa Division, and 238th District Court of Midland County, Texas. The Court has preliminarily approved a proposed settlement between the Class and the Defendants. If you are a member of the Class, you may be entitled to a portion of the Settlement Fund to be paid by the Defendants pursuant to the proposed settlement. Also, if you are a member of the Class,you have the right to exclude yourself from the Class or to object to the settlement. In any such event, you will be required to mail certain information to the Committee of Counsel not later than April 15, 1994.

Persons who have been identified as possible members of the class are being advised by mail of their rights with respect to the Class Action. This Notice is being published because some Class members may not receive the mailed notice either because they have not been identified as members of the Class or the mailing information is inaccurate. If you are (or believe you may be) a member of the Class but do not receive or have not received individual notice of your rights by mail by February 1, 1994, you should immediately notify the Committee of Counsel, P. O. Box No. 6823, Lubbock, Texas 79493, giving your name, telephone number, current address and social security number. You will then be mailed a more detailed explanation of the rights of Class members in the Class Action, including a detailed list of the 523 wells involved, and will be placed on the mailing list for any future notificaltons regarding this suit.

A hearing for final approval of the settlement is scheduled in the 238th Judicial District Court of Midland County, Texas, on June 30, 1994, at 9:00 a.m. If you have not received notice by mail, you should notify the Committee of Counsel immediately at the address shown above. If you are a member of the Class and do not file an election to be excluded from the Class postmarked no later then April 15, 1994, you will be bound by the final judgment entered in the Class Action regardless of whether the proposed settlement is finally approved. Likewise, if you wish to object to the settlement, you must notify the committee of Counsel by mail postmarked not later then April 15, 1994.

D-JAX CORP.
Dynamometers & Pump-Off Controls
1608 S. Main

21 years ago, D-JAX was your Oil well's Best friend, and we still are. Somethings just get better with age but we have to keep working at it. A 21 year Tradition of excellence but we're still going to keep trying. A challenging future and a Dynamic Past. Looking for more challenges after meeting the challenge for 21 years. 21 years of honest effort has made D-JAX a leader. After 21 years everything has changed except our service. 21 Years is our Anniversary, but it's also your guarantee. Everyday we live up to our promises we made 21 years ago. 21 years in business and still thinking "YOUNG" and INNOVATIVE. We haven't survived 21 years in the Oil Patch because we were lucky. After 21 years we are still doing our best.

STEWARD CABLE, INC.
1921 Alta Vista
687-2553

Steward Cable began as a backyard operation when Linda Steward started accepting the overflow work from her former employer. The work load increased and the business grew tremendously. Linda's husband, Bill, resigned his position after twenty years with a seismograph company in order to devote his energy to the business. The company is celebrating it's 16th anniversary this year.

Steward Cable manufacturers custom wire, cabe and connectors and provides a repair, maintenance and new assembly service for cables, geophones, load cell cables and a variety of other products used in the seismic and production industry. The company also stocks supplies used in but not limited to the seismic industry.

Steward Cable has built a reputation for being service oriented and offering the highest level of quality workmanship in the industry.

What a Founding Father Thought about the Ownership of Firearms

Firearms stand next in importance to the Constitution itself. They are the American people's liberty teeth and Keystone under independence....From the hour the Pilgrims landed, to the present day, events, occurrences, and tendencies prove that to ensure peace, security, and happiness, the rifle and pistol are equally indispensible...The very atmosphere of firearms everywhere restrains evil interference - they deserve a place of honor with all that's good.

M.C. maintenance team comes out tough, efficient during snow

By H.A. Tuck

Last week's ice and snow storm reminded us again of how efficiently the Maintenance Department functions in such inclement weather. Alerted by phone, they began blading off the Chaparral Circle, the sidewalks and as much of the parking lots as possible. At the same time, other workers spread ice-melting chemicals (not salt) on the steps and the handicapped ramps. With 10 buildings and miles of sidewalks, it wasn't an easy task.

Once more, the procedure used by Midland College during bad weather is very similar to that used by the Midland Independent School District. An early-morning driving survey is made by one or several administrators. If the decision is to close or delay classes, the news media is notified as quickly as possible. Usually that's done no later than 6:30 a.m.

In addition to the media, the night recording on the MC switchboard is modified so that the message tells if classes have been cancelled or delayed. That number is 685-4500.

There's only one basketball game on the Chaparral schedule for this week. The Chaps go to Odessa Monday for a 7:30 p.m. game against the league-leading Wranglers. A win could boost the Chaps toward a second-place finish in the conference. Catching the Wranglers isn't impossible, but it would require some help from another team or two during the second half. While MC needs all fans possible at the OC Sports Complex on Monday, getting a ticket to that game might be a problem.

MC has an open date on Thursday, then returns home for its Homecoming '94 game against South Plains College on Feb. 14. That's also the next-to-last home game, so there aren't many more opportunities to watch the 1993-94 edition of the Chaparrals. Final home game is Monday, Feb. 21, when the Chaps play New Mexico Junior College.

The Chaps conclude the regular conference slate at Big Spring on Thursday, Feb. 24, against Howard College.

The Chaps need to finish in the top four to qualify for the Region V and Texas-NMJC Championship in Waco in early March.

Chaparral basketball action is carried live on KCRS Radio, 550-AM. You can also get some inside words from the weekly Steve Green Show each Saturday at 12:30 p.m. on KMID-TV with MC head coach Steve Green, host Mark Packer and some interesting guests.

Samarra Khaja's art show at Midland College ends Thursday and the artist will be on hand at 7 p.m. Thursday for a talk and demonstration about her creations. This young artist from Dallas has a unique style, turning out photographic-based mixed-media works that have stirred up lots of interest and curiosity during her show.

The public is invited to her talk on Thursday without charge. You may see the show, which is being displayed in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, today from 1-5 p.m., and Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m.

A show by Ken Dixon of his mixed media is scheduled to open at McCormick Gallery on Tuesday, Feb. 15, and remain up through March 15. Susan Schwartz is showing her paintings March 19-April 21, followed by the traditional student show from April 26 through May 8.

For a unique evening, plan to attend a free poetry reading and discussion with Lance Henson, a poet of the Cheyenne Indian Nation. He'll be at the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 8, to read some of his many compositions.

Henson now lives part of the year in Albany, N.Y., although his home originally was in Oklahoma. He is the author of at least five books of poetry.

The Communications and Fine Arts Division of the college is sponsoring Henson's visit to Midland.

Those gremlins struck again when they left off the name of Tana Moore from the 1993 Dean's List of academic achievers. We apologize to Tana and salute her for earning at least a 3.5 grade point average last semester.

If you are with a firm which needs skilled, trained employees for either permanent full-time or part-time employment, plan to sign up for the MC Job/Career Fair '94. It's a chance for local employers and organizations to interview potential employees or to talk about career opportunities. The fair is being held on Thursday, March 3, from 10 a.m.-2 p.m. Deadline for firms to sign up for participation in the fair is Feb. 18.

There's no charge to be in the fair either for organizations or students. To sign-up or for more details, contact David Terry at 685-4501 or 685-4716.

The first of three spring sessions of College Classics begins this week exclusively for those at least 50 years of age. A single fee of $25 is all that's required to register for one or all 21 of the courses being offered this spring. Due to careful scheduling, there is no overlap of classes, so you really could attend all 21. The low fee is because all the instructors are volunteers from the community or the college.

Session I classes include: Create Your Personal History, Current Economic Issues, Literature: "The Best Is Yet To Be," Piano, Travel Trends, U.S. History,and WordPerfect.

Registration is simple. Just visit the Continuing Education Office, which is located in the Administration Building, or call 685-4501.

Since two of the classes begin Monday afternoon, we would advise you to call the office Monday morning to find out if openings still exist. You can register for classes in Session II and III as well.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

Nuclear power plant foes mark anniversary

AUSTIN (AP) — Opponents of the South Texas Project nuclear power plant marked the first anniversary of its shutdown this weekend with a lemon-flavored cake and a renewed call for a study of the benefits of keeping it closed.

"It's been an expensive year for consumers served by this plant," said Tom Smith of the group Public Citizen, standing behind a lectern with a bumper sticker reading, "STNP is a lemon."

He estimated that the plant near Bay City has cost, during its one-year shutdown, $1 billion in operation and maintenance, repairs and replacement power that partners in the project have had to purchase.

The plant was closed last February because of maintenance and equipment problems.

By Steve Wilstein
Associated Press Writer

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Figure skating officials said Saturday there were "reasonable grounds" to believe Tonya Harding violated their code of ethics with her role in the Nancy Kerrigan assault, but they stopped short of kicking her off the Olympic team.

The decision on whether she skates in the Winter Olympics that begin a week from today in Lillehammer, Norway,

BOSTON — On to Lillehammer.

After convincing a panel of judges she was fit enough to skate and performing before a crowd, Nancy Kerrigan said she was ready for the Winter Olympics.

Kerrigan, whose hopes of competing at the games in Norway were left in doubt after she was clubbed just above her right knee on Jan. 6, proved she had recovered Friday night during an exhibition before more than 4,500 people at Northeastern University's Matthews Arena.

"It was definitely a big test because I was in front of a crowd, and you have to control nerves and anxiety," Kerrigan said after performing three solo numbers and a doubles routine with 1992 Olympic silver medalist Paul Wylie.

Until she appeared in a program that featured Olympic and world champions past and present, Kerrigan had been training in seclusion during her recovery from an attack at Cobo Arena in Detroit. She was hit on her right knee as she came off the ice following a practice session for the U.S. figure skating championships.

UCLA hires Toledo

LOS ANGELES — Bob Toledo, offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach at Texas A&M for five seasons, was named to the same job at UCLA on Saturday.

Toledo takes over from Homer Smith, who was recently hired at Alabama.

The Aggies had a 49-12-1 record during Toledo's five seasons and played in five consecutive bowl games, including the 1992, '93 and '94 Cotton Bowls.

"Bob is an outstanding offensive tactician who has been successful everywhere he has coached," UCLA head coach Terry Donahue said.

"He has the ability and experience to take advantage of the personnel we have here and will fit right in with our offensive scheme."

1994 DISTRICT 5-5A SOCCER

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Midland Lee forward Jeremy Keener, left, marks Abilene High's Marlon Cardenas in Saturday's District 5-5A soccer game at Lee Field.

Unlucky Rebs fall

Staff Report

The Midland Lee boys soccer team took another hard-luck loss in District 5-5A action Saturday at the Lee field, losing to Abilene High by a 2-1 margin.

Lee (6-4 overall) has now allowed only four goals in four district matches while scoring six. However, the record now stands at 1-3 in loop play.

And this was another tough one since AHS (9-2, 2-1) scored the winning goal in the 78th minute of play on a goal that was deflected off a Lee player.

The close losses are beginning to take its toll on the Rebels.

"We are outplaying people, playing hard and controlling the game, but if we didn't have bad luck, we wouldn't have any luck at all," said Lee coach Eddie Bull. "We had ample opportunities to score in front of Abilene's goal. It's nothing wrong with the kids or the effort. It just wants to make you pull your hair out."

Lee took a 1-0 lead on a Timmy Tipton goal at the 14 minute mark of the first half and held that lead until the 72nd minute when Brandon Baker scored on a direct kick.

Lee plays against Odessa Permian at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday at Ector Junior High school in Odessa.

Cooper youth overwhelms MHS

By Mike Butts
Staff Writer

Youth wasn't just served Saturday at Midland High's soccer field. It was downright pampered.

Abilene Cooper (8-4) overwhelmed Midland High's girls soccer team 9-0 with the help of hat tricks from a sophomore transfer from Virginia and a freshman. The Lady Cougars scored seven goals in the second half to turn the game into a rout. The win kept them tied with Midland Lee at 4-0 for first place in District 5-5A.

"We played with them for almost half of the game," Midland coach Scott Hodkinson said. "We made it tough on them (in the first half) but they have a lot of talent on their team."

Midland High (4-5) has now lost all three of its district games after starting the season at 4-2. The Lady

Irvin might exit without new deal

Associated Press

DALLAS — Wide receiver Michael Irvin says he might have only one season left with the Dallas Cowboys if owner Jerry Jones doesn't provide him with a lucrative new long-term contract.

Irvin hopes that Jones will renegotiate his $1.25 million contract before the NFL imposes its salary cap. Otherwise, Irvin might not be a Cowboy after the 1994 season.

"When you look at it realistically, you can say if I play this year in Dallas, it may be my last year," Irvin was quoted as saying in Saturday's editions of The Dallas Morning News.

"We're getting close to the cap, and I think I can become a problem for next year," said Irvin, who is in Honolulu preparing for his third straight Pro Bowl game.

In addition to his desire for a new contract, Irvin wants to ensure that Jimmy Johnson will remain the Cowboys' coach before making a long-term commitment.

"If Jimmy's not here, I don't want to be here," Irvin said. "If this thing crumbles, I don't want to be here when it happens."

Irvin was the Cowboys' highest-paid player in 1992 but has since dropped behind Emmitt Smith, Charles Haley,

AFC attempts redemption

■ Losers of the last ten Super Bowls, the American Football Conference has a chance to win the Pro Bowl.

By Ken Peters
AP Sports Writer

HONOLULU — As the NFL closes shop for the season, the AFC plays a game it sometimes wins.

While AFC teams are 0-10 over the last decade in Super Bowls, the American Conference all-stars have won two of the last four Pro Bowls against the NFC. That includes a 23-20 victory last year in the lone overtime game since the series began in its present format back in 1971.

The AFC still trails 13-10, however.

Marty Schottenheimer and his Kansas City Chiefs staff coach the AFC; George Seifert and his San Francisco 49ers' assistants lead the NFC.

Schottenheimer is 2-0 in previous trips to the game, winning in 1987 and 1988, when he was coach of the Cleveland Browns. Seifert is 0-2.

Schottenheimer said being 2-0 in the Pro Bowl is good and bad, because the coaching staffs at the game are the ones whose teams lost in the conference championships — leaving them a victory short of the Super Bowl.

"My feeling is that this is a great opportunity for the coaches and players," he said. "If you can't be in the Super Bowl, this is the best place to be."

Schottenheimer's AFC squad has an impressive offense, including quarterbacks John Elway of Denver and Warren Moon of Houston, and running backs Thurman Thomas of Buffalo and Marcus Allen of Kansas City.

The starting wide receivers are Anthony Miller of San Diego and Tim Brown of the Los Angeles Raiders, with Denver's Shannon Sharpe the tight end.

Defensively, the AFC features linemen Cortez Kennedy of Seattle and Ray Childress of Houston, plus linebackers Junior Seau of San Diego and Derrick Thomas of Kansas City.

The NFC offense also is explosive, with Steve Young of San Francisco the starting quarterback, rookie Jerome Bettis of the Los Angeles Rams among the running backs, and the 49ers' Jerry Rice and Dallas' Michael Irvin among the receivers.

The National Conference defense has Reggie White of Green Bay at one end and Richard Dent of Chicago at the other, and also includes New Orleans linebackers Rickey Jackson and Renaldo Turnbull, and cornerback Deion Sanders of Atlanta.

Some of the NFL's big names are absent. Among those voted onto the Pro Bowl squads but missing because of injuries are quarterbacks Troy Aikman of Dallas, Joe Montana of Kansas City and Phil Simms of the New York Giants; running backs Emmitt Smith of Dallas and Barry Sanders of Detroit; and wide receivers Andre Reed of Buffalo and Sterling Sharpe of Green Bay.

Defensive end Bruce Smith of the Bills also is among the 15 players who bowed out of the game because of injuries.

Hart leads Pebble Beach; four tied at senior event

Associated Press

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Dudley Hart, the leader through three rounds of the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am, is one of the young men Johnny Miller is trying to impress.

■ Golf Roundup

"As a commentator, I'd want to let these young guys know I can get it airborne, that I can still play a little golf," Miller said.

And the 47-year-old Miller, making one of his rare appearances on the pro golf tour, will go head-to-head with the youthful Hart Sunday in the final round of the $1.25 million tournament sponsored by AT&T.

Miller, a television commentator who has won only once — the 1987 edition of this unique tournament — in more than a decade, shot a 5-under-par 67 Saturday to pull within one stroke of Hart's 10-under-par total of 206.

Tom Watson, with a round of par 72 at Spyglass Hill, trailed Miller by one stroke at 208.

Ted Tryba was another shot back at 209 after a round of 69 at Poppy Hills.

Tom Kite, who won the U.S. Open at Pebble Beach in 1992, could do no better than par 72 over the same course this windy day and was tied at 210 with Bob Gilder, Kirk Triplett and Tom Lehman. Lehman shot 73 at Pebble Beach, Triplett 67 at Spyglass and Gilder 72 at Poppy Hills.

Second-round leader Davis Love shot 78 at Spyglass Hill and dropped out of title contention at 213.

Jack Nicklaus failed to qualify for individual play, but will team with son Steve in the final round of pro-am play today. They're at 24 under par, and tied for second behind the leaders, Hart and Ray Floyd's 18-year-old son Robert, at 28 under par.

Actor Jack Lemmon continued a lifelong series of frustrations with this tournament, and former President George Bush may have started one.

Lemmon, who has tried without success for more than three decades to qualify for final round play, missed once again.

The former President, making his first start in this event, didn't even come close to qualifying. The Bush-Hale Irwin team recorded a 65 — their best of the tournament — and finished at 204, slightly above the middle of the field.

While it was their best performance of the week, Bush indicated he was less than enthusiastic about the outing.

He said he would be happy to return to Pebble Beach "with the proviso I don't have to play golf."

Hart, in his fourth year on the pro tour and still seeking his first victory, played his front side in 33 at Spyglass, then had a couple of putting lapses coming home.

"I stumbled a little," he said, "but I'm really pretty pleased with the way I played."

Miller, who hasn't played more than once or twice a year for five seasons, reeled off a string of four consecutive birdies on the front side at Pebble Beach and completed that nine in 31.

Seniors-Caribbean

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. — The leader board at the Royal Caribbean Classic ranged from A to Z.

George Archer and Kermit Zarley were part of a four-way tie for first place after Saturday's second round in the Senior PGA Tour event.

Bob Charles and J.C. Snead also shared the lead at 137, 5 under par on The Links on Key Biscayne. Seven other golfers were within three shots of the top.

First-round leader Lee Trevino, slowed by a balky putter, watched five players overtake him and slipped two strokes back with a 2-over 73.

On a warm, sunny day with little wind, only 11 of 78 players scored in the 60s. Putting was a common problem on greens that were redesigned after last year's tournament.

Playing partners Snead and Zarley each shot 66. Colorful Rocky Thompson, wearing knickers and using three putters, completed the threesome.

Bob Murphy was one shot off the pace at 71-138. Gary Player matched Trevino at 139. Four others were three shots back at 140, including Gibby Gilbert, who shot 66 to improve on his first-round score by eight strokes.

LPGA-Palm Beach

LAKE WORTH, Fla. — Laura Davies, who almost wasn't allowed in the tournament, was tied for the lead with Lisa Walters on Saturday going into the final round of the LPGA Palm Beach Classic.

Davies has seven birdies and an eagle on the eight par 5s during the first two rounds. Her two-round total was 134 after a 69 Saturday. Walters shot a 68 and Dawn-Coe Jones was two strokes back after a 69.

Three weeks ago, Davies called the LPGA office from Thailand to commit to the season-opening stop, but mistakenly referred to the tournament as the Oldsmobile Classic, the event's sponsor from 1989 to 1992. She was marked down for the new Oldsmobile-sponsored event at Michigan in June.

Johnnie Walker Classic

PHUKET, Thailand — Ian Woosnam fired a 4-under-par 68 Saturday and tied Fred Couples for the third-round lead in the $900,000 Johnnie Walker Classic

Meanwhile, Greg Norman of Australia shot a course-record 8-under 64 over the 7,049-yard, par-72 Blue Canyon Country Club and tied Germany's Bernhard Langer and Taiwan's Hsieh Chin-sheng for third place.

Norman, one stroke behind the co-leaders, came into the tournament with a lung infection and skipped practice before the event.

Graf, Navratilova to collide in Pan finals

Associated Press

TOKYO — Steffi Graf and Martina Navratilova won easy victories Saturday and will meet in the championship of the $750,000 Toray Pan Pacific Open tennis tournament.

■ Tennis Roundup

Top-seeded Graf of Germany, the world's top-ranked female tennis player, needed just 55 minutes to beat Kristie Boogert of the Netherlands 6-2, 6-2 in the semifinals.

Second-seeded Navratilova, seeking her second consecutive victory in this tournament, needed just one hour to beat sixth-seeded Manuela Maleeva-Fragniere of Switzerland — who is getting ready to retire — 6-2, 6-3.

Graf broke serve on the first and third games of the first set. In the second set, she broke the third and seventh games with powerful ground strokes.

"I returned well and am satisfied with today's match. I'm not tired at all because I played short matches. I'm mentally motivated," said Graf, who won the Australian Open a week ago.

Navratilova, playing her last season of singles, said, "I beat (Graf) in this tournament last year. I am really playing well — playing better every day. I will play with serve-and-volley tomorrow."

In the 15th match between them, Navratilova played her trademark serve-and-volley game to overwhelm Maleeva-Fragniere. Navratilova broke the first game of the first set and kept the second game at love to gain her rhythm against the erratic Maleeva-Fragniere.

Maleeva-Fragniere said she will retire after playing her last match in Osaka, Japan, next week.

Marseille Open

MARSEILLE, France — Defending champion Marc Rosset of Switzerland upset top-seeded Michael Stich of Germany 6-2, 2-6, 6-4 Saturday in the semifinals of the $538,000 Marseille Open tennis tournament.

Rosset was joined in the final by Frenchman Arnaud Boetsch, who beat Diego Nargiso of Italy 7-6 (7-3), 6-3.

Rosset, the Olympic champion and seeded fourth in this tournament, outfought Stich in a match of big servers.

Boetsch, ranked 22nd in the world and the No. 5 seed, struggled against Nargiso, a qualifier. Boetsch had beaten Henri Leconte Friday night, then played a doubles match that lasted more than 2½ hours and ended past midnight.

Dubai Open

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — Top-seeded Sergi Bruguera and No. 4 seed Magnus Gustafsson scored straight-set victories Saturday and will meet in the final of the $1 million Dubai Open tennis championship.

Bruguera beat No. 6 seed Wayne Ferreira of South Africa 6-2, 6-1 and Gustafsson defeated No. 8 seed Alexander Volkov of Russia 6-2, 6-2.

"I was playing very deep and controlling the match, and he missed many shots because he was attacking me from too far back," Bruguera said of his victory over Ferreira.

Gustafsson, ranked No. 10 in the world, broke Volkov, the world's No. 20 player, to take the first game in the opening set and broke again for a 3-1 lead.

A superb cross-court backhand gave Gustafsson the break in the second set to go up 3-2. He broke Volkov again in the seventh game, then served out the match.

KERRIGAN: Will skate

(From 1C)

Tonya Harding, who won the national title, has been implicated in the attack by her former husband, who has pleaded guilty in the case.

Harding must face disciplinary proceedings for her alleged role in the attack on Kerrigan, the U.S. Figure Skating Association said Saturday. Harding has 30 days to respond.

The decision does not immediately stop Harding from skating in the Olympics, which start next Saturday in Lillehammer, Norway. The United States Olympic Committee will make the final decision about whether Harding will compete.

When asked whether Harding should be allowed to skate at the Olympics, Kerrigan said Friday night, "That isn't my decision at all," adding "I have no opinion."

Kerrigan's coach, Evy Scotvold, said Saturday that the skater did not want to talk about Harding.

But even if Harding becomes Kerrigan's teammate in the Norwegian village of Hamar, where the skating competition begins Feb. 23, Scotvold said the two women would not cross paths.

"The (Olympic) organizing committee has taken care of it," Scotvold said. "It's already been decided that they won't be together."

Kerrigan was cleared to go to Lillehammer after skating in private Wednesday for a four-member panel of judges sent by the USFSA to the Tony Kent Arena in Dennis, Mass.

Her return to the public eye began with a standing ovation before she performed her Olympic short program.

A required triple-double jump combination at the beginning answered questions on whether her right leg was sturdy enough to handle the landing.

"I didn't leave anything out. There's eight elements and I did them all," Kerrigan said. "Although the last spin was a little bit slow."

She said her knee, which still has some scarring and a little bump on it, "doesn't keep me from doing anything and it doesn't really hurt."

At the end of the evening, Kerrigan thanked the sign-waving crowd, saying, "I'm ready to go. I can't wait to get there."

She will head to Lillehammer later this week, where she will continue training and also take in the atmosphere of the Olympic village.

"Coming from an individual sport, the Olympics is great fun for me because I feel like I'm part of a team," she said. "I don't get that chance a lot."

Elliott trade to Houston on hold for unknown reason

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — The trade which sent Sean Elliott from the Detroit Pistons to the Houston Rockets appears to be on hold. Yet nobody is sure just why.

Elliott was traded Friday to the Houston Rockets for Robert Horry and Matt Bullard. But on Saturday, Houston radio station KTRH reported that the trade is being held up while Rockets team physician Bruce Moseley further evaluates Elliott's condition.

"Anybody would be concerned if you can't go through a routine physical in a direct, straightforward way. But it may not turn out to be anything significant," Moseley said.

"He's had tests performed previously, and we're trying to gather that information, but because it's the weekend, those results aren't readily available," Moseley said.

Elliott, who had knee surgery in high school, plays with braces on both knees. Last season, playing for the Phoenix Suns, he missed 12 games because of back problems. He missed his last four games with the Pistons because of pneumonia.

The news caught Pistons' coach Don Chaney by surprise.

Chaney heard reports the disgruntled former Piston small forward flunked his physical with the Rockets moments after his team's 107-100 loss to the New Jersey Nets at The Palace on Saturday night.

"I'd like to know for myself what the situation is before I make any statements," Chaney said. "This is the first I've heard of it.

"But I really don't understand why it happened. I don't know if this means Houston will rescind the trade. I don't see that happening because I thought he would fit in well with them."

Elliott's problems with the physical meant Horry and Bullard couldn't dress for the game Saturday night. According to league rules, all parties involved in a trade must pass physicals.

COOPER: 2nd half buries Lady Bulldogs

(From 1C)

Bulldogs will have to wait at least one more game to get their first league win in their first year playing district soccer.

Cooper freshman stopper Melissa Butz scored the game's first goal and two more in the second half. Freshman center forward Stacy Metcalf had three goals in the second half, two unassisted. The Lady Cougars scored three goals in the last seven minutes of the game as the contest deteriorated for Midland.

"I don't know if it was their getting tired or just getting worn down emotionally," Hodkison said. "(Cooper) was also getting the breaks there at the end. Every single shot they made seemed to find the net."

The nine goals were not indicative of the game performance given by Midland goal keeper Cathryn Vadala. Vadala had to contend with 20 shots on goal by Cooper and finally just wore down. She made 11 saves and helped to keep the game at 0-0 until the 26th minute.

MHS missed the play of center midfielder Jacque Ketter, out with a sprained knee.

"I tried to use that to psyche them up," Hodkinson said. "I saw it working in the first half. Some people stepped up and played better than they ever have."

The Lady Bulldogs kept the game close early with good defense. But they didn't get their first shot on goal until the 20th minute. Midland did not record a shot on goal in the second half.

Butz opened the scoring at the 26th minute with an unassisted goal that typified Cooper's superior ball handling skills. She dribbled past two defenders and slapped the ball into the right corner of the goal from 15 yards out. She had the sixth goal of the game in the second half with a 25-yard shot, also unassisted.

With a 2-0 halftime lead, Cooper scored two goals in the first three minutes of the second half to all but put the game away. Metcalf tallied on a assist from Amanda Holt and Holt then scored on an assist from Jennifer Hightower.

"We always come out strong in the second half after they settle down and start establishing their game," Cooper coach Claudia Gonzalez said.

Midland's only good chances to score came in the first half. Trailing 1-0 Cooper keeper Maria Gonzalez dropped the ball in front of goal but recovered it before a Lady Bulldog had a chance to take advantage. A minute later Midland's Tina Richardson placed a corner kick in the goal mouth but Shauna Scarafile's shot went right at Gonzalez.

Ketter looks doubtful for Tuesday's game with Permian.

"We've had a rough start in district but we're hoping to turn things around Tuesday," Hodkinson said.

Abilene Cooper 9, Midland High 0.
Goals: Abilene Cooper — Butz 3, Metcalf 3, Norton, Holt. Assits: Cooper — Holt 2, Hightower, Norton. Shots: Midland High 3, Cooper 20. Corner kicks: Midland High 3, Cooper 11. Free kicks: Midland High 1, Cooper 6.

HARDING: Olympic spot up to USOC was left up to the U.S. Olympic Committee.

The U.S. Figure Skating Association ordered Harding to appear before a disciplinary hearing to be conducted within 30 days, which would put it after the Olympics. It could be held sooner if the skater and her attorneys agree, said Bill Hybl, chairman of the five-member USFSA panel investigating Harding.

After the announcement, Harding left the Portland, Ore., apartment where she has been staying, but made no comment.

"I don't think it would be in Tonya's best interest at this point to get involved in the hearings procedures," said Brian Burton, one of her attorneys. "Obviously we're not happy that they decided it was sufficient to proceed. But we're not overly concerned at this point."

In a unanimous ruling, the panel released a "statement of charges" against Harding:

"The hearing panel determined that reasonable grounds exist to believe that Tonya Harding, while a member of the USFSA, committed an act, made a statement, or engaged in conduct detrimental to the welfare of figure skating and-or failed to exemplify the highest standards of fairness, ethical behavior and genuine good sportsmanship in her relations with others.

"The panel also found reasonable grounds to believe that Harding committed an act to carry out a plan and-or was involved in a plan to injure Nancy Kerrigan; or knew about a plan to injure Nancy Kerrigan and either failed to oppose it, failed to report it, or made false statements about her knowledge concerning it."

Hybl said Harding has 30 days in which to respond to the USFSA, and if she does not do so, the disciplinary hearing will be held without her.

The panel did not have the authority to drop Harding from the Olympic team. But under the organization's bylaws, USFSA president Claire Ferguson could take executive action and remove Harding. She apparently chose not to exercise that power.

Article 27, Section c, Article i of the USFSA bylaws states: "The president may suspend or expel a member or member organization pending investigation and hearing by the hearing panel."

As far as removing Harding from the Olympic team, Hybl said: "That's a question the United States Olympic Committee will have to answer. ... The ball is back in the United States Olympic Committee's court.

"The United States Olympic Committee, as they sit as the game's administrative panel, has the final authority, in this particular case, as far as American athletes are concerned," Hybl said.

Sharon Watson, chairwoman of the USFSA's sanctions and eligibility committee and a member of the USFSA's board of directors, talked about the pain she and others felt in making the decision.

"We've tried to be very fair. I think we've bent over backwards to give Tonya the benefit of the doubt, but we had to deal with the evidence that was before us," Watsond said.

Kerrigan was clubbed in the right leg Jan. 6 in Detroit in an attack that knocked her out of the U.S. Figure Skating Championships.

Harding has said she learned after the attack that persons close to her were involved, but that she failed to report immediately to authorities what she knew.

Harding's ex-husband, Jeff Gillooly, has pleaded guilty to racketeering in the attack, and three other men have confessed to taking part. Harding has not been charged and denies any involvement, but Gillooly has told authorities that she was deeply involved and gave the go-ahead for the attack.

Harding won a spot on the U.S. Olympic team. Kerrigan also was named to the team.

The USFSA panel pored over evidence that included FBI reports and materials from a Portland, Ore., sheriff's deputy, a Portland attorney for the USFSA, and others.

Harding did not attend the hearing in Colorado Springs, staying in Portland to practice for the Olympics.

On Friday, a prominent member of the International Olympic Committee said the USOC should allow Harding to skate in the Lillehammer Olympics unless she is convicted in a U.S. court of conspiring to attack Kerrigan or confesses to a role in the attack.

Richard Pound of Canada, a member of the IOC, said the USOC "doesn't have much of a choice" but to keep Harding on the team.

"Unless you have got compelling evidence, such as a confession or a conviction, you don't have a basis on which to overturn the results," of the U.S. Figure Skating Championships. "It would be very risky in terms of (denying) due process, and all of those other things (Americans) hold dear.

"You come from a country with a long tradition of presumption of innocence. I don't think an accusation is enough. Grand juries can indict fire hydrants in the U.S. You couldn't take that seriously."

On Friday, a relaxed Harding had another raucous practice at a shopping mall rink outside Portland. It was her last public skate before the Olympics.

Harding has shown no intention of heeding calls for withdrawing from the team, and she appeared to skate with full confidence of performing in Norway. She has reserved time at the rink through next Friday, although those sessions will be closed.

In Boston, Kerrigan pronounced herself ready for the Olympics after performing flawlessly during an exhibition Friday night that attracted former champions, her family and more than 4,500 supporters.

"I'm ready to go. I can't wait to get there," Kerrigan told the crowd at Matthews Arena on Northeastern University campus. "Thank you all for coming."

She landed every move that tested her rejuvenated right leg, from an opening triple jump to a number of sit spins.

PRO BOWL: Aikman out

(From 1C)

The Cowboys had an NFC record 11 players voted into the Pro Bowl, but four of those — Aikman, Smith, safety Thomas Everett and center Mark Stepnoski — are out with injuries.

Although there's little at stake in the Pro Bowl, the coaches don't think the players will lack motivation.

"I think some of the most competitive games have been played here," Seifert said. "These players wouldn't be here unless they were extremely competitive. They're the cream of the crop and they want to play their best against each other."

Schottenheimer agreed.

"I think the thing with all professional athletes is they absolutely love to compete," he said. "When the game begins, it doesn't matter who they're playing against or what they're playing for, they just want to compete the best they can."

IRVIN: Wants new deal

(From 1C)

Erik Williams and Troy Aikman, who has a record $50 million contract.

Irvin has produced the top three receiving seasons in Cowboys history with 1,523 yards in 1991, 1,396 yards in 1992 and 1,330 yards in 1993.

Jones has said the Cowboys will be about $8 million under the salary cap when free agency begins in two weeks, but acknowledges "it's realistic to think we'll lose some players."

A Cowboys spokesman did not immediately return phone messages left by The Associated Press Saturday.

The Morning News reported one Cowboys source as saying the team almost certainly would renegotiate with Irvin.

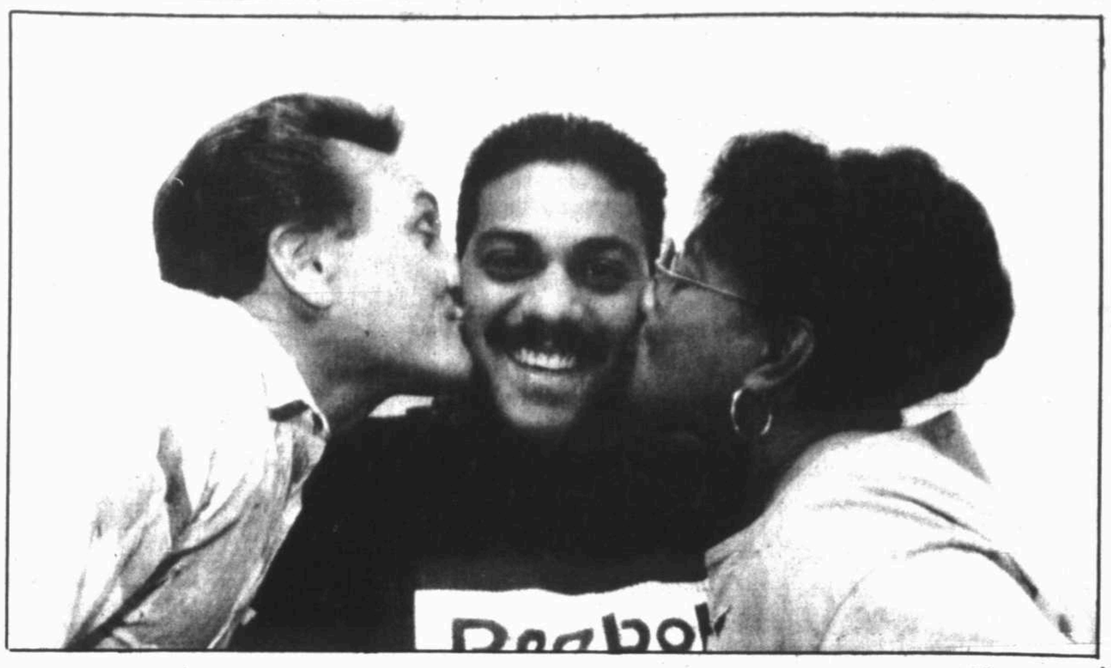
Igor's good deeds might hamper career

■ Texas Rangers slugger Juan Gonzalez keeps giving to his hometown despite worries it is interfering with his professional career.



AP Laserphoto

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — When he was 9 years old, Juan Gonzalez stomped through his barrio pretending he was professional wrestling idol Mighty Igor, eager to take on any pre-teen comers.

His buddies shied away from the young Gonzalez, who was oversized even then. But the nickname stuck, and during Gonzalez's rapid rise to major league superstardom, the chants of "Igor" have multiplied faster than the Texas Rangers slugger's career homers.

Nowhere do the chants ring louder than in his homeland, where the 24-year-old Gonzalez, the product of a rough neighborhood in the northern island town of Vega Baja, has played a leading role in reinvigorating Puerto Rico's winter league. The 6-foot-3, 210-pound Gonzalez has risen to become the island's biggest baseball hero since Roberto Clemente.

But some people close to him are concerned that his offseason drives to give back something to his homeland may interfere with his career.

While negotiating a $30.7 million, five-year deal with the Rangers that finally was agreed to Friday, Gonzalez has played for about $7,000 a month for the Santurce Crabbers, for whom Clemente once roamed the outfield.

Clemente, the Pittsburgh Pirates Hall of Famer, is considered practically a patron saint in his homeland following his death in 1972 while leading a mercy mission to earthquake-devastated Nicaragua.

Gonzalez's 46 homers for Texas in 1993 tied Orlando Cepeda's single-season, big league record for a Puerto Rican. After the season, he took a midnight flight home under an assumed name rather than spark the kind of miles-long fiesta that awaited him a year earlier.

With 121 homers in little more than three full big league seasons, with an average that rose 50 points from 1992 to .310 in 1993, one would think Gonzalez has little to prove to his homeland.

Since returning, however, Gonzalez has played winter ball, endured lengthy autograph sessions, pariticipated in baseball clinics and met repeatedly with officials from this U.S. commonwealth to lobby for more youth sports programs. He also schedules regular exercise sessions to strengthen his lower back, which gave out on him during the pennant run in September.

"Juan plays in Puerto Rico out of a sense of patriotism," says Luis R. Mayoral, director of community relations for the Rangers and a roommate of Gonzalez's during the summer season.

Like fellow Puerto Rican ballplayers Carlos Baerga, Edgar Martinez or Ivan Rodriguez, Gonzalez plays during the winter because he knows "the majority of people on the island cannot come to Miami even to see their heroes in the regular season," Mayoral said.

Listening to a crescendo of fans shouting "Igor!" one evening at dusk in San Juan's Hiram Bithorn Stadium, Gonzalez elaborates.

"I'm doing this so that this league of ours doesn't fall, so that the youth here have some inspiration for the future," he says in Spanish while waiting for batting practice before one game.

Gonzalez is also working on spraying outside pitches to center or right, but doing so in his trademark manner: one poke during a Friday night game — hit with somewhat less than his backstraining, 300-degree hip swing — flew over the center field wall on a line drive, more than 400 feet from home plate.

He seems loose, wearing a red T-shirt given to him by teammate and journeyman major league catcher Junior Ortiz that reads: "Junior Ortiz Fan Club." In the clubhouse minutes earlier, he had eaten the quintessential Puerto Rican meal with teammate Ruben Sierra: rice and red beans, with a stew of avocado and "bacalao," or codfish, ladled on the side.

But Santurce manager Max Oliveras says Gonzalez is continually under pressure here as Puerto Rico's top star.

After long autograph sessions, people occasionally shout epithets at Gonzalez when he quits. Sometimes he overschedules appointments, seeking to provide a positive role model for an ethnic group confronted with negativity.

Oliveras acknowledges the difficulties of the passage from stardom to superstardom, particularly for the humble Gonzalez, named for his tough, high school math teacher father.

"If anything, he's too nice a guy," Oliveras says. "He got such a big heart. He just has to learn how to say no. ... I pray to God that He protects him, that Juan doesn't lose his confidence, his attitude."

Oliveras, who will be the bullpen coach with the California Angels this season, has spent nearly three decades in professional ball, and he sees no limit to Gonzalez's potential.

"There's only one person who can stop Juan from entering the Hall of Fame — Juan Gonzalez," says Oliveras.

Brown ambivalent about long-term Gonzalez deal

ARLINGTON (NYT) — Kevin Brown, resplendent in his new Texas Rangers' white and red, greeted the news of the huge contract signed by teammate Juan Gonzalez with a certain amount of ambivalence.

On the one hand, the $45.45 million contract given Gonzalez shows the Rangers are willing to keep a home-grown, star player. On the other hand, Brown doesn't expect the Rangers to back the armored car up to his driveway next.

"You can look at it from one standpoint, that they've gone off and done something they haven't had a history of doing in the past, which is signing someone to a long-term deal," Brown said. "That's a positive. But you also wonder if, now that they've got Juan's contract, ... they're going to feel like they're limited in their ability to sign other people to long-term contracts or not."

The other people in question are Brown and Kenny Rogers. Both pitchers, who modeled the Rangers' new uniforms at The Ballpark in Arlington yesterday a few hours after baseball's newest millionaire met the media, are entering their final season before they can become eligible for free agency.

Both would like the security of long-term contracts, but neither sees the Gonzalez signing as a signal the Rangers will open the doors of the vault for all comers.

"When they sign a guy of that caliber, it tells us that they're going to sign the guys they have to to stay competitive," Rogers said. "It's a good sign. I think they want to sign me, too. But we'll just have to wait and see."

Rangers officials say that despite Gonzalez's big contract, the club still has money to sign players like Brown and Rogers, and will continue to attempt to get their signatures on long-term deals.

The Gonzalez signing doesn't, though, mean Texas suddenly has become a free-spending club.

"The money's there depending on what the dollars are," general manager Tom Grieve said. "These (Gonzalez's) kind of dollars aren't out there for anybody else, but there is a certain amount that is out there. I think there's enough dollars out there to make a legitimate and fair offer to the players we want to make it to. That may not be enough to get them signed, but the reason will not only be how many dollars there are, but what we deem is a fair contract to get those players. You can't just look at how many dollars you have to spend; you have to look at are you spending them wisely."

The Rangers will begin discussions with Scott Boras, Brown's agent, next week to see if the two sides agree on reasonable dollars for the 28-year-old right-hander, who faces an arbitration hearing Feb.18.

"We'll be talking to Scott Boras about Kevin, maybe beginning next week," Grieve said. "We'll at least explore a multiyear contract, and if it looks feasible we'll continue. If not we'll try to get a settlement on a one-year contract. It would be great if we can do at least that, and end up with no arbitration cases."

Settling could be easier than agreeing on a long-term deal.

Brown won't discuss how many years and how much money he wants, but it's likely he'll seek a contract similar to the four-year, $20.25 million one signed by Seattle's Randy Johnson. Brown, 15-12 with a 3.52 earned-run average last year, is 71-55 with a 3.65 ERA in five full seasons in the majors. Johnson, 19-8 with a 3.24 ERA in '93, is 68-56 with a 3.78 ERA in his five seasons.

The hangup could be the number of years. The Rangers are reluctant to give more than a three-year contract to a pitcher.

"We would prefer three, consider four and be very reluctant to give five," Grieve said.

That's what has kept Rogers from a multiyear deal. Texas talked to Boras, who also represents the left-hander, in the days before Rogers' arbitration hearing, but the club was offering three years while the pitcher wanted at least four.

Both pitchers say they would consider a multiyear contract through spring training but won't negotiate during the season. If nothing is done before Opening Day, they are prepared to test the free-agent market.

"I want to stay here," Rogers said. "They know that. But I also know my options. If I have to leave, I'm ready to leave. I don't want to leave, but we'll have to wait and see what happens."

SALT LAKE CITY — Jay Humphries, averaging only 6.2 points per game, came off the bench to score 25 Saturday night to spark the Utah Jazz to a 128-114 victory over Portland.

Utah led 106-87 on Karl Malone's basket with 9:58 left in the game before the Blazers made a brief run, closing within 12 at 117-105.

Karl Malone paced the Jazz with 30 points. Jeff Malone had 20 points while Ty Corbin added 17.

Strickland led Portland with 25 points. Mark Bryant had 17, Terry Porter 15, Clyde Drexler 14 and Williams and Cliff Robinson 10 each.

Cavaliers 109, Hawks 93

RICHFIELD, Ohio — John Williams, subbing for flu-ridden Brad Daugherty, had 19 points and 12 rebounds as Cleveland stopped Atlanta.

It was coach Lenny Wilkens' first loss in the last 13 meetings between Cleveland and Atlanta. He won his last 10 games against Atlanta as the Cavs' coach, and his first two against Cleveland as the Hawks' coach this season.

Larry Nance had 18 points and 13 rebounds and Mark Price had 16 points and 13 assists for the Cavs, who outrebounded the Hawks 48-36. Gerald Wilkins also scored 16.

Dominique Wilkins led the Hawks with 21 points, none of them in the fourth quarter. Mookie Blaylock scored 12.

Pacers 111, Hornets 102

INDIANAPOLIS — Rik Smits took advantage of an undermanned Charlotte front line and scored 24 points and Reggie Miller added 21 as Indiana won its fifth straight game.

The winning streak is the longest of the year for the Pacers, while the Hornets dropped their sixth in a row, also a season-high.

Before only their second sellout crowd of the year, the Pacers shot 59.5 percent from the floor, the fifth straight game over 56 percent. They collected their eighth win in nine meetings with Charlotte, including two of three this season.

The 7-foot-4 Smits topped the 20-point mark for the fourth time in the winning streak, as Charlotte played a front line with only one player as tall as 6-8.

Charlotte regulars Alonzo Mourning and Larry Johnson and reserves Scott Burrell and LeRon Ellis are sidelined with injuries.

The Hornets got a game-high 28 points, 18 in the second half, from swingman Eddie Johnson. His long-range shooting helped Charlotte trim an 18-point first-half deficit to two points midway through the third.

Hersey Hawkins added 16 points and Dell Curry and David Wingate 15 and 13 off the bench for Charlotte.

Nets 107, Pistons 100

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Derrick Coleman and Kenny Anderson each scored nine points in a third-quarter surge and New Jersey overcame a season-high 42-point performance by Detroit's Joe Dumars and defeated the Pistons.

New Jersey won for the eighth time in 10 games and moved within one game of .500 at 21-22.

76ers 96, Heat 94

MIAMI — Dana Barros hit a 20-foot jumper with one second left Saturday night to give Philadelphia a victory over Miami, ending the Heat's four-game winning streak.

Steve Smith tied the game on a jumper with 18 seconds remaining, setting the stage for Barros' game-winner. Philadelphia overcame Brian Shaw's season-high 27 points. Smith added 21.

Barros and Tim Perry led the Sixers with 14 points each. Philadelphia ended its two-game losing streak and won for the fourth time in seven games.

The Heat blew a seven point-lead in the second quarter with a woeful performance. Miami lead 29-24 after the first and stretched the lead to 31-24, but the Heat hit 3 of 21 fields goals and turned the ball over 10 times in the second..

SuperSonics 115, Bucks 94

The Bucks fell to 13-33, including 5-17 at the Bradley Center.

Milwaukee, down by 10 points at halftime, could get no closer than eight in the second half. The Bucks trailed 67-57 with five minutes left in the third period before Seattle got back-to-back 3-pointers from Gary Payton and Perkins and the Bucks began to fade.

Kemp scored Seattle's last seven points in a 21-10 run that gave the Sonics an 88-67 lead going into the fourth quarter.

Skater's father dies of stab wounds

SHEFFIELD LAKE, Ohio (AP) — The U.S. skating team — already preparing for the Olympics in the shadow of the Tonya Harding affair — now must deal with the stabbing death of the father of ice dancer Elizabeth Punsalan, whose brother was charged.

Ernesto Punsalan, 57, was found with two stab wounds in his chest, police Chief Thomas Schmidt said Saturday.

Ricardo Punsalan, 20, was being held in Lorain County jail on a charge of aggravated murder. He was scheduled to be arraigned Monday in Lorain Municipal Court. Police said the stabbing occured Friday night in the Punsalan home.

Late Saturday, Elizabeth Punsalan said she will compete in the Winter Olympics at the urging of her family.

"My father was proud of my skating achievements and would have wanted me to go on to Lillehammer," the skater said. "I will try to skate my very best there in his memory."

The stabbing preceded the decision Saturday by the U.S. Figure Skating Association that Harding must face disciplinary proceedings for her alleged role in the attack on rival skater Nancy Kerrigan.

The combined events don't cast a negative light on the sport, said Kristin Matta, a spokeswoman for the USFSA.

"This is an unfortunate and tragic incident for Elizabeth Punsalan and her family. But I don't see any connection of bad light," Matta said Saturday.

"I can't comment on how this will effect the team until I'm in Norway and can feel the mood. The team is very close and I'm sure the other skaters are very concerned."

Ernesto Punsalan, a surgeon, apparently was asleep when he was stabbed, Schmidt said. Police were called at 8:48 p.m. Friday to the Punsalan home in this city about 20 miles west of Cleveland.

The doctor was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Joseph Hospital and Health Center in Lorain. He practiced as a surgeon at Elyria Memorial Hospital Regional Medical Center.

Ricardo Punsalan was apprehended Friday after telling the first officers at the scene that he had stabbed his father, Schmidt said. A kitchen knife believed to be the weapon was recovered.

Schmidt would not comment on the motive, but said there was not a fight. He declined to comment on whether there had been a history of problems or violence in the family, and would not say whether drugs or alcohol were involved.

Theresa Punsalan, 59, the doctor's wife, and their son, Robert, whose age was unavailable, were in the house at the time of the stabbing. They were not injured, Schmidt said.

Elizabeth Punsalan, 23, and her husband, Jerod Swallow, 27, were scheduled to perform Friday night in Boston at an exhibition where Kerrigan showed she was ready for the Olympics. They did not perform.

Punsalan and Swallow will represent the United States in the ice dancing competition at the Olympics this month in Lillehammer, Norway.

Elizabeth Punsalan and her husband and skating partner Jerod Swallow are shown here at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships. Punsalan's father was found dead in his home Friday night.

The couple won the ice dancing competition at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships in Detroit on Jan. 7 after the withdrawal of defending champs Renee Roca and Gorsha Sur.

Punsalan and Swallow, who live in Pontiac, Mich., are two-time U.S. Ice Dance Champions for 1991 and 1994. They were married in September.

Funeral services for Ernesto Punsalan were scheduled for Tuesday in Sheffield Lake.

Irish milers dominate Millrose race

■ Millrose Games

NEW YORK (AP) — This is a tale of three Irish milers from different eras.

First, there was Eamonn Coghlan. Then, there was Marcus O'Sullivan, and finally, there was Niall Bruton.

What Coghlan and O'Sullivan couldn't do, Bruton did.

Coghlan won, but couldn't break four minutes. O'Sullivan broke four minutes, but couldn't win. Bruton broke four minutes and won.

The 22-year-old Bruton, a senior at the University of Arkansas, put on a surprising kick in the final 40 yards and overtook O'Sullivan in the Wanamaker Mile at the Millrose Games on Friday night at Madison Square Garden.

The non-plussed Bruton finished in 3 minutes, 58.71 seconds, relegating O'Sullivan, a five-time winner of the race, to second place for the second consecutive year. O'Sullivan, 32, the three-time world indoor champion at 1,500 meters, was timed in 3:58.80.

For a brief moment, it appeared that neither Bruton nor O'Sullivan would finish the race. The two bumped slightly at the three-quarter mark when pacesetter Stanley Redwine left the track.

An hour before the Wanamaker Mile, the 41-year-old Coghlan was under a lot of pressure — the self-imposed kind.

He was confident of becoming the first Masters competitor to break four minutes for the mile — and he failed.

Running as the sellout crowd of 17,488 stood and cheered his gallant effort, Coghlan could finish only in 4:04.55. Although it was a Millrose record and he won by 65 yards, Coghlan was not happy.

Countdown to Lillehammer winds down as Olympic Games draw near LILLEHAMMER, Norway (AP) — Next weekend, reindeer pulling sleighs, Lapp herders singing Yoiks, snow nymphs and a ski jumper soaring with the Olympic torch in his hand will help open the Winter Olympics in this small town.

The moment — on Saturday, Feb. 12, — is one winter sports-crazy Norway has been counting down to for years.

"Everything is under control. There aren't any major crises, at least not that we have heard about," said Rolf Nereng, a spokesman for the Lillehammer Olympic Organizing Committee.

Near-record snow depths muffle the sound of hectic last-minute preparations in Lillehammer and the other host towns on the shores of frozen Mjosa, the country's largest lake, and up the long Gudbrandsdalen Valley.

The snow has turned charming Lillehammer into even more of a picture-book setting. It could also clog roads and rail lines and disrupt carefully laid plans for transporting up to 100,000 people a day into the Olympic region.

Many of the trains, some blocked by snow and others by moose on the tracks, are running late on the 110-mile journey north from Oslo, the nearest major city.

Those woes aside, this country of 4.3 million is ready and eager to see the Winter Games return to Norway, this time with about 2,000 athletes from at least 65 counties. Norway also hosted the 1952 Oslo Games.

Norway is spending $1 billion on the Winter Games, not counting related projects. The Winter Olympics are a matter of national pride, which shows in the virtually all-new venues that reflect Norway's Viking heritage and the wood, stone and ice of its wild mountains.

The Norwegians built a huge sports hall in Hamar, south of Lillehammer, and made it look like a giant Viking Ship overturned on the shores of Lake Mjosa.

They hollowed out a mountain in Gjovik, another subsite, and built an ice hockey rink inside it.

They built a bobsled track north of town and, since they didn't really want it, they hid it in the trees.

Petter Moshus, LOOC's chief designer, said the spirit and look of the Winter Games were inspired by the Vikings.

"The Olympic medals are made of stone, the winner's podium is made from ice, the pictographs for the events are based on a 4,000-year-old rock carving (of a Norwegian skier), the maps are made from woodcuts," he said.

Lillehammer, with carefully preserved 19th-century wooden buildings on its long main street, is a place were wild moose sometimes wander through town.

There are moose-crossing signs along most roads. And the antlered giants often stroll on the railroad tracks, a habit making it hard on train schedules and often fatal to the moose.

This city, which has a skier in its coat of arms, is a place of Trolls, the giants of Norse folklore; reindeer; and Vikings, including Haakon and Kristin, the children who are the official mascots of the Games.

A&M still unbeaten, tops Red Raiders 89-88

AP Laserphoto

Texas A&M's David Edwards (10) looks to drive past Texas Tech's Jason Sasser in the Aggies' 89-88 win over the Red Raiders Saturday night.

LUBBOCK (AP) — Chuck Henderson hit a 3-pointer with six seconds to play and two free throws with one second left, lifting Texas A&M to an 89-88 victory over Texas Tech on Saturday afternoon, keeping the Aggies unbeaten in Southwest Conference play.

A fight broke out after the game as the Aggies made their way through fans to get to their dressing room.

"There were a bunch of nitwits behind our bench, and we had to go through the crowd to get to the dressing room. Crowd control was awful," A&M coach Tony Barone said.

Joe Wilbert led the Aggies (13-5 overall, 7-0 in league play) with 26 points. Lance Hughes had 24 points and Jason Sasser 21 for Texas Tech (9-9, 4-3). Tech had won three straight going into the game.

Tech led 86-84 before Henderson's 3-pointer at 0:06 put the Aggies up, 87-86. However, Mark Davis was fouled and made both free throws with two seconds left, for an 88-87 Texas Tech lead.

But A&M's inbounds pass went the length of the court to Henderson, who was fouled by Hughes, setting up the winning free throws.

Henderson had eight points in the final two minutes, including two 3-pointers.

Tech led 12-11 before the Aggies pulled away, and A&M was up, 51-43 at the half. The Raiders went on a 21-10 run to regain the lead.

A&M led by as much as 10 points with 7:15 to play before the Raiders rallied again. The Raiders made six of eight free throws in the final two minutes.

There were 12 lead changes and seven ties, most of them in the second half.

The start of the regionally televised game was delayed because of a broken hoop. It took 35 minutes to put up two new goals.

Both Barone and Tech coach James Dickey were upset at the officiating at game's end, and especially in the final two seconds.

"The officials took the game away from the teams. Those were probably fouls both ways at the end, but neither probably should have been called," Barone said.

Dickey added, "I'm not going to say anything that I shouldn't at this point. It's a shame that a great college game had to end the way it did."

Dickey tried to get in the officials' dressing room after the game, but it was locked and they wouldn't let him in. Security officers talked him into leaving.

Aggies, Tech fans brawl after game

LUBBOCK (AP) — A brawl broke out at the end of the Texas A&M-Texas Tech basketball game Saturday, when at least four fans interfered with Aggies coach Tony Barone and his players when they headed for the dressing room after their last-second 89-88 victory over Tech.

At least one fan took a swing in the direction of Barone and his son, Tony Jr., a senior guard for the Aggies, although he didn't connect, witnesses said.

The Aggies remained unbeaten in Southwest Conference play with the victory, achieved on Chuck Henderson's two free throws with one second left. Henderson also hit two 3-pointers in the final two minutes, including one that gave A&M an 87-86 lead with six seconds to play.

Several A&M players, including junior Joe Wilbert, came to the aid of their coach and exchanged punches with fans as the brawl continued up the ramp and into the coliseum mezzanine. It took Texas Tech police about three minutes to restore order.

"We had a bunch of (expletive) attack our players. We had no way to get to our locker room after the game except through their students," coach Barone said.

"This has nothing to do with (Tech coach) James Dickey and his team. It has everything to do with a lack of police and a lack of administration in running a basketball game when 7,000 fans are in attendance," the coach said.

No injuries were reported and no arrests were made. Tech police escorted one of the participants outside, but he apparently left the scene when police were called back into the coliseum as the fight spread to the mezzanine.

Barone said he would not file a complaint with the Southwest Conference office.

Tech athletic director Bob Bockrath said the incident would be investigated.

Burditt, Rencher spark Texas past Frogs, 95-73

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' Albert Burditt and Terrence Rencher scored 22 points each, leading the Longhorns past Texas Christian, 95-73, in a Southwest Conference game Saturday night.

Burditt also had 11 rebounds for Texas (14-6 overall and 6-1 in the SWC). Roderick Anderson added a career-high 20 points and 10 assists for the Longhorns.

Kurt Thomas led all scorers with 23 points for TCU (5-13, 2-5). Eric Dailey had 18 and Byron Waits 12.

The Longhorns, who won their second straight without leading scorer B.J. Tyler, built a 47-26 halftime lead behind a swarming press that forced 13 turnovers.

The Longhorns opened the game with an 11-2 run, but TCU closed it to 25-18 on a three-point play by Thomas.

Texas closed the half with a 22-8 run behind Rencher and Watson, who each hit two 3-pointers.

The Longhorns opened the second half with a 8-4 run to give them their biggest lead, 55-30.

The Horned Frogs cut it to 65-50 with 9:50 remaining, but Texas went on a 14-4 run, and the Horned Frogs never got closer than 19.

Houston slips by Rice, 69-67

HOUSTON (AP) — Anthony Goldwire scored 17 points, including a pair of game-winning free throws with three seconds left, to lead Houston to a 69-67 victory over Rice Saturday.

The victory ends a 13-game losing streak for Houston and is the Cougars first Southwest Conference win under first-year coach Alvin Brooks.

Tim Moore had 14 points and 11 rebounds and Jessie Drain added 10 points for the Cougars (13-15, 1-6 SWC).

Torrey Andrews led Rice with 19 points. Tommy McGhee added 11 points and Shaun Igo had 10.

Todd Schoettelkotte grabbed 11 rebounds for the Owls (11-8, 3-4).

Houston led 40-35 in the second half when Rice went on 26-point run to grab the lead, 61-48, with 5:48 left.

Houston then hit three consecutive 3-point shots, two by Goldwire, to cut the deficit to 61-57 with 4:15 remaining.

Andrews hit four free throws and a basket to boost Rice to a 67-59 lead with 2:45 left. Houston then tied the score, 67-67, with 23 seconds left on a basket by Goldwire and 3-pointers by Drain and Goldwire. That set the stage for Goldwire's game-winning free throws.

Lady Aggies shock No. 4 Lady Raiders

■ LeKisha Wylie misses three-pointer with two seconds left as Texas Tech loses second conference game.

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas Tech's LeKisha Wylie missed a 3-point shot with two seconds left Saturday night, and Texas A&M remained unbeaten in Southwest Conference play with a 67-64 victory over the No. 4 Lady Raiders.

Lisa Branch led the Lady Aggies (15-3, 7-0) with 19 points, while teammate Martha McClelland added 16 as A&M snapped a 10-game losing streak to Tech. Kelly Cerny had 13 points, eight rebounds and five assists.

Texas A&M had a 35-29 halftime lead, but Texas Tech (17-3, 5-2) was up 62-59 with 3:12 left. McClelland scored six points to lead an 8-2 run to end the game.

McClelland's layup with 1:26 left gave A&M a 65-64 lead over the defending NCAA national champions.

"Everything happened so fast," A&M coach Lynn Hickey said. "We did a tremendous job of taking the ball inside versus the zone.

"This was a major win, a major, major, major win for our program," she said.

Noel Johnson hit five 3-pointers in the game, leading the Lady Raiders with 19 points. Connie Robinson had 17 and Michi Atkins added 12 points and six rebounds.

Buzzer beater lifts SMU over Baylor

WACO (AP) — Mary Gleason's 3-point shot just beat the buzzer, giving Southern Methodist an 82-79 victory over Baylor in a Southwest Conference women's game Saturday afternoon.

Kerri Delaney scored 25 points to lead the Lady Mustangs (12-5 overall, 3-4 in the SWC). Mary Lowery led Baylor (11-8, 2-5) with 28 points.

The Bears led 41-38 at the half and led by as much as five points in the second half. Leslie Frazier's two free throws with 3:15 remaining put SMU ahead, 75-74.

Baylor took its last lead, at 79-77 with 2:32 to play, on Kristin Mayberry's 3-point shot.

But Baylor never scored again. Alexa Devine tied the game for SMU with an 8-foot jumper at 2:15. That was the last score until Gleason's shot with 0:00.2 on the clock.

TCU falls to Lady Longhorn Routt

FORT WORTH (AP) — Sophomore forward Erica Routt scored a career-high 25 points leading Texas to an 85-56 rout of Texas Christian Saturday night.

Danielle Viglione scored 14 and Holly Graham added 13 for the Lady Longhorns (14-5, 6-1 Southwest Conference). Donna Krueger led the Lady Horned Frogs (5-12, 1-6) with 26 points and 15 rebounds.

Texas led 41-29 at halftime despite both teams shooting nearly even through the first half.

The Lady Longhorns continued their rout in the second half, leading by as much as 31 at one point. TCU cut the lead to 19 with just over five minutes left but never came close.

The Lady Longhorns made 46 percent of their shots while TCU hit 35 percent.

Freshman Angie Jo Ogletree grabbed a career-high nine rebounds for Texas. Routt and Graham also had nine off the boards.

Hometown hero guides Lobos over UTEP

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Greg Brown, a former star at Albuquerque High and now ring leader in The Pit, hit 10 straight shots in one stretch and finished with a career-high 42 points Saturday as New Mexico held off Texas-El Paso 80-78 in overtime.

New Mexico (16-4, 8-2 in WAC) hasn't been this well off in the conference race since the 1977-78 season, the last time the Lobos won the WAC regular season title. The win moved the Lobos into at least a temporary tie for the league lead with Hawaii.

UTEP (13-7, 4-6) got a 31-point effort from Antoine Gillespie.

The Miners played without head coach Don Haskins, who flew to California earlier in the week to be with his 41-year-old son Mark, who is hospitalized in the Los Angeles area.

Voters must make informed choices

If you've been holding off on getting excited about the March 8 primary election, it's time to put aside your "Who cares?" attitude and start familiarizing yourself with the candidates.

This being a gubernatorial election year — one in which Texans will not be helping to select a president — virtually every other office is up for election, and with Texas now definitely a two-party, and in many instances a three- and four-party state, there are numerous candidates from which to choose.

So it's time to begin finding out as much information as you possibly can about the various candidates at the precinct, county, state and national levels. In fact the final day to register to vote in the March 8 election was Friday, so there is no time to waste.

Midland voters will be choosing district judges, county court-at-law judges, a county judge, two county commissioners, district and county clerks, county treasurer, a justice of the peace, and various precinct-level officials.

They'll also be taking part in selecting three members of Congress, a U.S. senator, governor, lieutenant governor, state attorney general, comptroller of public accounts, state treasurer, commissioner of the General Land Office, agriculture commissioner, two Railroad Commissioners, three justices on the Supreme Court, three members on the Court of Criminal Appeals, and hundreds of other appellate court jurists and members of the State Board of Education.

The officials being selected are the ones who will be directing the machinery of government over the next few years. Every selection will be important. Voters must be as fully informed as possible about all the candidates.

Every vote counts and every vote is important. So it is imperative for voters to make fully informed, intelligent choices. That procedure is what gives us either a better or worse government.

Make yourself fully informed and make intelligent decisions; your government is depending on it.

American spirit makes nation envy of world

President Clinton, during his State of the Union speech Tuesday (Jan. 25), commended the American spirit for dealing with disasters such as the Los Angeles earthquake, the cold weather up north and east and the devastating floods in the midwest last summer.

That spirit and resolve is what makes this country what it is. And that's one reason why so many people from other countries want to be in our country.

Sure, we have problems, but we try to deal with those problems. It may take years of wrestling and trial and error, but eventually some kind of solution is found.

As always, not all solutions take care of 100 percent of a problem, but Americans have resolved that we have less than a perfect society and are willing to work around it.

That same thing may help Clinton do his job, as we have found out that he is not like us — not a perfect person but one who is giving it his best effort. He sees and feels the same things most Americans seem to and has adopted the motto of the late Robert Kennedy: "Most people see things and ask why. I see things and ask why not."

In this time of uncertainty and rapid change, it would seem that motto is more fitting than ever before.

Problem isn't health care but crumbling welfare state

Americans are facing a bona fide crisis these days — but it's not the one President Clinton and his administration keep telling us about.

Much as they would have us believe that the health care cost spiral (which is slowing) and a gap in health coverage merit a radical redesign of an essentially sound system, society is crumbling under the weight of the welfare state.

Welfare is subsidizing illegitimacy and holding neither biological parent answerable. That phenomenon, more than anything else, is turning more and more young men into unguided missiles, bent on lives of crime. It is turning more and more young women into largely uneducated and unemployable welfare mothers-in-waiting.

Clinton's real work lies in ending our degenerative culture of welfare dependency.

Instead, he would squander his time and our money on fixing a health care system that isn't broken.

Perry faces 'nightmare' in North Korea

WASHINGTON — The next U.S. secretary of defense faces a "nightmare scenario" in North Korea, which has violated international law with its nuclear weapons development program. This is how Defense nominee William Perry described his new job last week during Senate confirmation hearings.

Anderson

Perry alluded to the most vexing dilemma of enforcing nuclear inspections, a cornerstone of Clinton's North Korea policy. Some intelligence sources believe the secretive nature of North Korea's extensive tunnel-building has not factored into Clinton's diplomatic bargaining as much as it should. Several classified Defense Intelligence Agency reports, seen by our associate Dale Van Atta, tell the story.

North Korean dictator Kim Il-Sung apparently became a convert to underground military sites in 1970, when the military stepped up what was previously a moderate defensive program. Since that time, for example, at least a dozen airfields have significant underground facilities supporting them.

Perry's sober talk clashes with the Clinton administration's optimism regarding North Korea and its recent agreement to allow international inspections of its seven declared nuclear sites. Unless the president and Perry can focus a laser beam on North Korea, they'll never discover the full extent of their nuclear bomb-making program.

"Extensive construction of huge underground aircraft support facilities, as well as hardened hangarettes and revetments, has taken place," reads one DIA estimate. "Virtually all major air bases have hardened or underground facilities, or both."

The North Korean navy is equally well protected. At its principal naval installations, according to a DIA report, the North Koreans have "constructed underground naval facilities," including "underground (or sheltered) berthing" for its fleet.

The same holds true for its army. "Since at least 1970, North Korea has been engaged in a program to expand its materiel storage capacity," the DIA report states. "(This includes) expanding its underground facilities, including sites for ammunition POL (Petroleum-Oil-Lubricants), and food storage."

The DIA has estimated that there are "several hundred storage facilities located within 75 kilometers of the DMZ (Demilitarized Zone)," the buffer area between North and South Korea. The North Koreans have also stored, often in underground facilities, more than "4.5 million barrels of POL and well over 1 million metric tons of other supplies, including ammunition" — enough "to wage intensive combat for at least 30 days, perhaps several months."

Although some analysts continue to argue that North Korea has done all this to defend the country, that same argument has never applied to the most infamous of all North Korean tunnels — those located underneath the DMZ. These infiltration tunnels are offensive by nature, they would support a surprise invasion should Kim Il-Sung ever make such an ill-considered decision.

In another classified report, the DIA noted that these tunnels "could be used to place specialized troops behind (South Korea's) forward defense line." The DIA called it a "high priority program" that began in 1971.

At least a half dozen of these huge tunnels, some big enough to drive tanks through, have been discovered by the United Nations Command.

Market disruption is ferment of progress

WASHINGTON — Government-defined problems frequently are excuses for government to throw its weight around. Comes now the "problem" of "market disruption" in the domestic honey industry.

Will

The government says the disruptors are Chinese honey exporters. Of course the real cause of the disruption, were there any disruption, would be American consumers consuming a disruptive amount of the products of Chinese bees.

Market disruption occurs when a new or improved or more competitively priced product comes to market. The automobile disrupted the market for buggy whips, Japanese cars disrupted the U.S. auto market, the ballpoint pen disrupted the pencil market, McDonald's disrupted the hamburger market, and so it goes. Market disruption is generally the ferment of progress. The government is against it, which is why the government may restrict imports of Chinese honey.

China is not accused of "dumping" honey — of selling it here for less than it costs to produce, or for less than honey sells for in China. The complaint of U.S. beekeepers is simply that China's honey sells well. It does, for reasons of quality as well as price.

The trouble for would-be protectionists is that there is no trouble. The U.S. honey industry is doing nicely — productivity and prices are up, inventories are down. The secretary of agriculture says: "Because of the strong demand for honey, the increased (Chinese) imports have been absorbed by our market without adversely affecting sales of domestically produced honey."

Chinese honey primarily displaces other imports, not domestic production. Most Chinese honey goes to industrial users — bakers, cereal makers, etc.— whereas most domestic honey goes to the retail market. And Chinese honey is sometimes blended with U.S. honey that otherwise would be unmarketable. U.S. beekeepers say that but for Chinese honey, prices would rise and so would U.S. production. Perhaps, but it is foolish to deliberately raise prices for 250 million American consumers in order to increase the share of the American market for a few thousand producers of a food product.

Nevertheless, a Cold War provision of trade law authorizes protectionist responses to "market disruption" caused by rapid increases in imports from any "non-market" economy if the imports produce "material injury, or threat thereof" to a domestic industry. The International Trade Commission, incited by U.S. beekeepers, has intuited a "threat" and recommended various pre-emptive tariffs.

Last September Congress promised that the program would die. Beekeepers promptly sought ITC action against China's non-existent but supposedly threatening "market disruption." They were hoping to get the government to give with one hand what it was taking away with the other. They said as much. The president of the American Beekeepers Federation said: "If we can get some reasonable trade sanctions against China, the reduction in the price support programs will have no effect."

"Support people, not industries," President Clinton said to Boris Yeltsin in Moscow last month.

U.S. protectionist actions against $50 million worth of Chinese honey per year could jeopardize billions worth of U.S. agricultural exports to China. Furthermore, many U.S. honey packers could be injured, even bankrupted by tariffs that increase the price of honey they are contractually obligated to deliver to customers at fixed prices. And the mere prospect of higher tariffs already has caused some industrial users of domestic as well as imported honey to shift to less expensive sweeteners.

All this because the incorrigible government, with its itch to intervene incontinently here, there and everywhere, cannot keep its sticky fingers off honey.

Sure-fire industry: Young man, get into prisons

Get into plastics, the dreary old grown-up advised Dustin Hoffman in "The Graduate," and young men everywhere laughed. I wasn't quite young enough to get the joke.

Baker

The dreary old fellow was simply tipping Dustin on a good capitalistic enterprise, wasn't he?

This was surely sounder advice than Horace Greeley's "Go west, young man, and grow up with the country," which people have listened to without laughter since Greeley issued it in 1850.

Unlike getting into plastics, going west plunged American youth into the degrading world of federal dependency, for Greeley's west was the ultimate handout state.

The U.S. Army disposed of inconvenient Indians for Westerners. The government gave them land incredibly cheap, when not free. Western cattle, agricultural, mining and timber industrialists still enjoy big-hearted federal subsidies in the form of cheap rents for cutting, digging and using public lands.

By contrast, a young man getting into plastics was the very model of the entrepreneurial spirit so highly cherished today. I urged my own children to do it.

I pointed out that with millions of young Americans laughing along with Dustin at the idea of getting into plastics, plastics were going to be hard pressed to find bright young workers. This meant plastics would probably pay top dollar for entry-level jobs in a field where fortunes were sure to be made.

My children laughed. Why should they face the rigors of capitalistic competition, they asked, when they could go west, get into California's defense-industry colossus and live off the federal dole handed out by the Pentagon?

And look what happened to them:

After working their way to the top of multi-billion-dollar defense industries, they used to enjoy coming East to taunt their father about his taxes being used to buy their Lamborghinis, Chateau Latour and South American ranches.

Now the joke's on them, because they are as bankrupt as the rest of California. This means they have to live on their vast Florida estates, where they invested their fortunes and cellared their wine as soon as they learned that Florida law shelters the bankrupt from importunate bill collectors.

I telephone them now and then. "If you hadn't chosen to live on Federal handouts," I remind them, "you could now be living in Passaic instead of those big dull Florida estates."

It was 1967 when Dustin was advised to get into plastics, and the business picture has changed a lot since then. Nowadays if I wanted to point him to a sure-fire growth industry, I'd say, "Dustin, get into prisons."

The intense political pressure to lock up bad characters forever is going to create business opportunities that most people, including the politicians, have not yet foreseen. Here's how:

The idea of locking them up forever is so exhilarating to the voters right now that they are forgetting that forever, as the old song says, is a long, long time.

The average bad character who goes over for good this year at age 21 will probably still be in the joint 50 or 60, and in some cases 70 years from now. This means that by the year 2050 prisons are going to be swarming with geriatric cases.

The average prison will then confront all the nightmarish problems now dumped onto retirement and nursing homes, plus a few more: prisoners who are incontinent, all memory gone, unable to walk or sit up unaided or feed or bathe themselves.

This isn't exactly what politicians and public now have in mind when cheering for prison eternal, but they are soon going to be stuck with it, and a young go-getter can make a fortune by getting in on the ground floor of businesses that will eventually be needed to cope with it.

Needs will include: vast quantities of privately supplied in-prison geriatric nursing and medical counseling; sound amplifiers for cells of Alzheimer's patients so that constantly repeated recordings can remind them where they are and why they are being punished.

Later, when the public rebels against the expense of keeping decrepit crocks in prisons, there will be pressure to house them in low-cost halfway nursing homes until Congress decides what to do next.

Get into prisons, young man, and make your fortune in old cons.

Russell Baker's column is distributed by New York Times News Service.

LETTERS

Economists issue health-care warnings

If you have a broken window, you don't tear down the whole house to fix that broken window. It seems to me that the Clinton health-care reform program is trying to tear down our existing health-care system and replace it with a whole new house.

I was especially impressed by an open letter printed in the Wall Street Journal on Jan. 14, which was signed by 562 economists from leading universities across the United States warning the president about the serious economic consequences of his proposed health-care reform.

For the Midland readers who did not read the letter, I will quote from it. "Price controls produce shortages, black markets and reduced quality. This has been the universal experience in the 4,000 years that governments have tried to artificially hold prices down using regulation." This letter continued to warn that, "Caps, fee schedules and other government regulations may appear to reduce medical spending, but such gains are illusory. We will instead end up with lower-quality medical care, reduced medical innovation, and expensive new bureaucracies to monitor compliance. These controls will hurt people, and they will damage the economy."

Health-care insurance reform is necessary and quite overdue. But reforming a system that has flaws is not the same as creating a National Health Board and an accompanying bureaucracy, which will hurt everyone, most especially the taxpayers.

Imposing a bureaucracy on any system has always been a negative, and the end result is far from the desired goal. I would urge concerned voters to let their representatives in Washington, D.C. and Austin know that the warnings of these economists have been heard and make sure that any health-care reform is carefully structured to produce benefits and not headaches.

State should better utilize prison beds

Now that Chief-of-Police Clinton has discovered the joy of applause lines in the fight against crime, we must now pay more attention to the problem of housing three-strikes-and-you're-out violent criminals. Don't get me wrong, I join the applause for his new-found support of this trend.

It shouldn't create any great problem for the federal prison system. They have relatively few three-time violent losers. But as more states join the lead states who conceived this policy, there could be a significant increase in present state prison overpopulation problems. Worse, it would extend the practice of early releasing the one- or two-time violent criminals.

It is said that a problem is an opportunity in disguise. Let's accept this problem and take the opportunity to double the utilization of existing prison facilities.

When you hear any discussion on the need to build more prisons, it's always based on the cost-per-bed. So why not assign two inmates per bed? No, not at the same time, but consecutively. There could be a sleeping shift and a work shift of 12 hours each. To avoid monotony, the cellmates could swap shifts every 20 years.

Yeah, I know. The ACLU will raise Hades about this being cruel and unusual punishment. Funny, it's not greatly different from the four-hours-on, four-hours-off watch routine I recall as a white-hat on U.S. Navy Reserve cruises. I don't know if they still do that. But it's no big deal to share a bed with someone not using it — so long as you have your own clean linen. It's what you do when you're a pilot or trucker renting a motel room when you're working the night shift.

I don't claim that all this would halve the cost-per-inmate. However, I do believe you could save enough prison construction and maintenance money to more than pay for additional guards needed for the increased population.

America needs to get tough with immigrants

I was disturbed recently to hear that one of the devastating fires in California was believed to have been started by a homeless Chinese non-English speaking immigrant. Who is responsible for the person being in our country? I guess everyone is because the homeowning, American, English speaking, tax paying citizens will pick-up the tab. I may sound cold-hearted towards the plight of people less fortunate than I am, but if I'm paying my share of the bills, then I have a right to voice my opinion.

I know there are immigration laws to control people coming into this country. Either the laws are not strict enough, or they are not being enforced. I believe before a person is allowed into this country they must prove that in no way will they be a burden to society. Anyone that is allowed into America should have to be able to speak enough English to more than just get by. An American citizen must be willing to accept responsibility for the new immigrant during a probationary period pending the successful completion of requirements imposed on the new immigrant. I don't believe that just because you breathe your first breath on American soil, you become an American citizen. Specifically, I'm talking about pregnant mothers from foreign countries making their way to American soil to have a baby (normally at American taxpayer expense) in order to qualify that child for "benefits," courtesy of the American taxpayer. This is a slap in the face of all taxpaying Americans who have honored, fought for and defended the red-white-and blue. Only the children of parents (one of whom must be an American citizen) should automatically become a citizen just because of the location of their birth.

The government is not allowed to force me to accommodate people or troops within my personal home. In my opinion, not only is my residence my home, but Midland, Texas and the United States of America is my home, all of which is covered by one roof. Our country cannot balance its books or care for its own, let alone others. I'm sorry, but if you cannot prove to me that your moving into my "home" is beneficial to the rest of us living under the same roof, then you must stay where you are until such time as you are willing to pay the price that the rest of us and our forefathers have paid.

Family thanks those who helped with dog

After a week of worrying and wondering about Gus, our missing Rottweiler, we have him home. We want to thank the many, many Reporter-Telegram readers who called with information, sympathy and support. Finally, one special lady called to say she found Gus and was keeping him until we got there. Reward? No, thanks — she was just happy to reunite the "family."

We also appreciate the heartfelt cooperation of the veterinarians in the area, Midland Animal Control, the SPCA and the Humane Society who graciously let us post flyers in their offices and said they would keep an eye out for our Gus. They also offered many suggestions to help recover him. These folks truly understand the importance of a family pet and, without exception, were ready to help in any way they could.

Finally, we want to recognize officer Phil Partin and Sgt. Benton of the Midland Police Department for their quick response and attention to our plight. Surely this was a small matter in the scheme of things — yet they realized how real and heart-rending the situation was to us, and they gave it the same professional consideration a more urgent case might warrant.

In a world were "Deathclocks" record man's cruelty, it's nice to be reminded that there really are a lot of kind and caring people out there.

Thank you all, and Happy New Year Midland!

Reader questions city tax expenditures

Many citizens believe that the city of Midland is actually being run by the city managers and the elected members of the City Council.

The city budget includes an award of $183,000 to the chamber of commerce for economic development, and the finance department duly sends a check for $15,304 each month. The agreement between the city and chamber forbids co-mingling of funds and stipulates that a monthly report of how the funds from taxes are spent be submitted. A trip to the city secretary's office disclosed that September's report, under disbursements, showed $550 to Forward Midland for the I-27 project and in October $9,090 was disbursed to the same group for the same purpose. Forward Midland has always said that their group is privately funded.

When questioned about these entries, J.D. Faircloth, Mike McGregor and Rick Menchacha all insisted that the report showed revenue from Forward Midland also. When I suggested that the report be changed to reflect only revenue from taxes and expenditures from the funds, and that Forward Midland revenue and disbursements be reported on a separate sheet, all three responded "they won't do that." They won't? Then perhaps we, the taxpayers, should insist that no more tax revenue be given to the chamber until the method of reporting be submitted so there is no confusion on the part of any citizen reading those reports. For the last three months, the required reports have not been delivered to the city secretary's office, the repository of all city records.

Remember that Forward Midland was the group that induced City Council to spend tax dollars on an election for increased sales tax in the city. If the taxpayers had voted for the increased tax, the resulting revenue of well over $2 million would not have gone to improve city services but would have been given to Forward Midland to increase their dominance over the people of Midland.

Three quarters of registered voters in the above election said clearly that while few taxpayers are against economic development, most believe that economic development is the business of business, the Chamber of Commerce.

Citizens of Midland, how do you feel about this issue of how reports of expenditures from taxes are submitted? May I hear from you at 697-1590. Thank you.

Ordinance irks owner who gets hit with lien

I would like to address the issue of the ordinance permitting the water department to file a lien against property owners when a tenant moves and leaves an unpaid bill.

I fail to see why this department cannot conduct their operation effeciently enough to collect unpaid bills, as other utility suppliers are forced to do. It is because other companies are not afforded the privilege of filing a nuisance lien against property owners without the courtesy of a two-minute phone call to allow them to pay this without an additional charge of $19 for lien filing and release fees?

I had a tenant move on Aug. 7, 1993, leaving a bill for over two months' services, and when I called their office several days later, I was told that this account was current.

On Oct. 15, 1993, over two months later, a lien was put on my property, and then two weeks later, still without the courtesy of a phone call, I was notified. I find this very offensive.

I then wrote a letter of appeal to the city manager, which was supposed to be heard by a fair or impartial person selected by him. This letter was referred back to the employees of the water department that filed the lien. I wrote a second letter of appeal to the city manager, and he chose the assistant city manager to hear and rule on this. Who do you suppose this ruling favored, and do you think this was fair and impartial?

I ask the mayor and City Council if this is not abuse of this ordinance, and can't they do something to correct it?

Some people blame messenger unjustly

In this day of intense criticism of the media, who according to many folks are nothing more than horseflies, we must remind ourselves that we are, in fact, observing ourselves.

We consumers of local and national journalistic efforts are quicker to critique the one telling the story rather than the story itself. People might feel that they have not been entertained properly, or that a story has been overplayed or downplayed. They might also slip into a sort of soap opera lethargy, as was the case with many viewers who, after being witness to Lorena Bobbitt's testimony, became co-dependents with their own imagined anxieties.

The implication here is not that each and every reporter of news, whether local or otherwise, should or could be so gifted as to provide for our individual comforts; rather, that the information we are so fortunate to receive should be considered and stored wisely in our 20th century craniums of knowledge.

To make the point clear, consider the sports fan. He combs the statistics. He cuts and slices the sports page until he has consumed all the information that is obtainable. He's ready for tonight's MC/Odessa game. He contemplates the upcoming baseball season and knows of its latest transactions. And so, he has used the information made available to him for his benefit. Of course, since he didn't notice that the City Council will be holding a public hearing on repairs to be made in his area, his might be a bumpy ride to Angels Stadium this spring.

And so, here is the individual — the sports fan. The information he consumes is a part of him as well as a reflection on him.

This is why the decoder (reader or viewer) is just as important as the encoder (newspaper or television). Some choose not to decode at all — well, perhaps if Tennessee Tuxedo and Chumly can hold their attention.

We needn't blame the media for Mr. Inman's downfall or the overexposure of — hands to your hearts — Ms. Hutchison. We are being shown what WE are made of. We're only human. Besides, there's always the sports page!

Letter on gas prices pumps out response

It was nice to finally see someone write about the gas prices in our area with facts instead of emotions. It is easy to get upset about fuel prices in Midland-Odessa because they are usually higher. I don't understand why our local retailers and jobbers keep getting the blame. The facts speak for themselves; gas costs more in our area for two reasons plain and simple. The rack price (price paid by distributors at the refinery) is higher than almost any in the state. Why? I don't know but it is an undeniable fact not an opinion. And our area participated in two of the worst gas wars I have ever been involved in from June '92 until October '92 and from December '92 until March '93. During these times I still remember my price being about 2 cents over cost and still having many outlets around me even lower. I strongly hope the other marketers in this area have finally learned that the purpose of selling gas is for profit and not just for the sake of maximum volume at all costs.

In answer to Scott McGraw's letter (Letters, Jan. 30) I wish to say most of these areas that are experiencing these artificially low prices are dominated by the same distributors. These companies are still hanging on to the old view of "sell as much gas as possible any way you can no matter what the consequences." For years the entire industry was driven by this philosophy all the way from the wellhead to the consumer. With today's more fuel efficient cars and more conservative consumers gasoline volume is down. Rather than accept this change these old-school marketers do the only thing they know, cut prices, in an attempt to maintain their volume. Others, unwilling to lose market share in turn, do the same. McGraw stated that he could not believe that these people would be so dumb as to sell at or below cost. I assure they are and they do.

In answering McGraw's comments regarding buying across town, I must say please compare apples to apples. If you are willing to drive all the way across town to save 4 cents please do so, but be sure you don't need any air in your tires or need to clean your windshield because I'm afraid you will be out of luck. If you should need to use the restroom you are really in trouble. If you should happen to be at a brand "X" store that does not display a major oil company sign understand that you are buying what is called base gas that has no additives to protect your engine from carbon build up or improve performance. If you are willing to incur the higher cost of maintenance caused by this base gas then by all means buy the cheapest gas you can find.

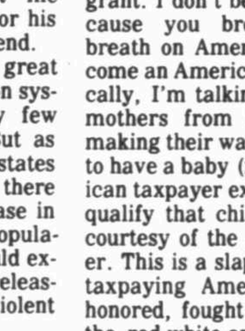
Lorena Bobbitt wrongly took law, knife into her 'vigilante' hands

Lorena Bobbitt jokes simply scream out to be told.

Jay Leno recently had some lame line about her signing a contract with "Weedwacker." I'd already heard the one about John Bobbitt getting a deal with Snap-on Tools. (That's followed closely by the one about Tonya Harding's new contract with The Club.)



Grizzard

Even Newsweek couldn't resist. In last week's Conventional Wisdom box, the following or close to it appears:

"Lorena Bobbitt: Quiet Ecuadorean manicurist seeks SWM for new attachment."

I tried to come up with my own little effort. I sat around for hours writing down the answers to, "How can you tell if your wife or lover is contemplating cutting off your organ?" The problem was, no matter how hard I tried, I couldn't get away from Ginsu knife lines.

Good humor is never predictable. It shouldn't be easy. And Ginsu knife lines, in relation to what Lorena Bobbitt did to her husband, are both.

But there's another problem here. A big one:

There's simply nothing funny about this.

Allow me to be fairly graphic here. (I have to ask permission to do that after what the media has already done with this story?)

Men, next chance you get, consider what it would be like to have your sexual organ cut off by a knife.

Think of the blade tearing through your flesh. Think of the blood. Think of the pain. And, if you lived through it, think of what effect it might have on the rest of your life.

Then, laugh.

Here's what happened:

Lorena Bobbitt did in fact cut off her sleeping husband's member with a knife. Then she left him bleeding, took the severed portion with her, got into a car, drove away and tossed what she had painfully dislodged out the window.

Not only that, but she got away with it in a court of law.

None of that is funny.

There's more. A group of women in Lorena Bobbitt's native Ecuador threatened to cut off the organs of 20 men for every one year of prison sentence she received.

I read the results of a poll that said 51 percent of the American women asked thought John Bobbitt got what he deserved.

Find me the humor there.

Lorena Bobbitt, said the Virginia jury, was temporarily insane when she maimed her husband.

The man could have died. He could have bled to death.

I don't think Lorena Bobbitt was temporarily insane. I think she's a full-time wacko — that wasn't meant to be a pun — to do what she did.

Of course it doesn't matter what I think. She'll look at ink blots for 45 days and then be back on the streets free to pedal her sickening story to the highest sickening bidder.

Lorena Bobbitt is a vigilante. If she were afraid of her husband's abuse, she should have called the cops. Instead, she went for revenge and inflicted what she, not a court, decided was the proper punishment.

Too bad the Bobbitts don't live in Iran. Isn't that what they do over there? Cut off the offending appendage as a means of administering justice?

We talk about crime in this country and then we allow rioting brick-throwers, parent-killers and husband-maimers to walk.

And Tonya Harding and her entourage will probably wind up serving time over bruising somebody's knee.

That's funny. Really funny.

Lukases put life back together after accident

By John Nadel
AP Sports Writer

ARCADIA, Calif. — Thoroughbred trainers Wayne and Jeff Lukas had much more than a close father and son relationship. They were co-workers, best friends, constant companions. Wayne says they will be again.

"He'll be back in some winner's circles," the elder Lukas said the other day. "The last three weeks have given us a lot of hope. I expect him to be 100 percent.

"Until somebody tells me something different, that's what I'm going to believe."

Jeff, 36, suffered fractures at the base of his skull when run down by Tabasco Cat, now a promising 3-year-old colt, on Dec. 15 at Santa Anita.

From his office, Wayne, 58, saw his only son seriously injured as he tried to stop the runaway horse.

Jeff Lukas was in very critical condition for several weeks and in a coma for about a month. Now, he's doing much, much better, his father said.

"We went through some really critical stages," Wayne Lukas said. "We came very close to losing him on two occasions. Our whole thoughts were never on a rehab process, just to save him.

"He's beyond the best expectations in a lot of areas. I think it comes from his athletic background."

After the accident, the younger Lukas was flown by helicopter to Huntington Memorial Hospital in nearby Pasadena, where he's been ever since.

"It'll just about make me sick, to recall the accident," Wayne Lukas said from the same chair where he saw the accident. "You're grateful, then you're almost upset. You get these depressive states, I do, anyhow.

"I hear a helicopter now, it makes me sick to my stomach, just that noise. When they bring them in by helicopter, it's never good."

Wayne Lukas recalled watching the NFC championship game two weeks ago, when Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman took a knee to the head and suffered a concussion.

"That bothered me, it made me a little sick to my stomach," he said. "You relate to it a little different.

"They holler 'loose horse' in the barn area, they do that every day, now I pay attention. It'll bother me for a while. It's funny how you change. I don't think I want to watch heavyweight fights anymore, it's lost its appeal."

Jeff Lukas is involved in physical therapy and is speaking, something made much easier since a tube was removed from his throat.

He remains on intravenous feeding, but it's hoped he'll be eating solid food soon.

"Solid food is the next step, which is a major breakthrough," Wayne Lukas said. "He's much, much more in tune with everything when he's rested. It's coming good. His speech is clear, his vocal cords are getting stronger every day.

"There are some problems. The sight in his right eye has not responded at all. He's gained back a little weight, he probably lost about 41 pounds."

Lukas said he tries to be at the hospital when his son goes through physical therapy. That's no surprise, considering their past.

"We have a unique relationship, we were almost inseparable," he said. "We would meet for coffee at 4 (a.m.), side-by-side the rest of the day. That's seven days a week, 365 days a year.

"It was a very, very tight relationship. That I miss a lot."

He made it clear he misses his son professionally, too.

"He's been instrumental in our success, without question," Lukas said. "I've bowed a lot of times to his expertise on a horse. He's been a big, big part (of the operation). He's been running the shedrow (stable area) since he was 11.

"Each year, I have put more and more emphasis on what he's doing, given him more responsibility. It's a blow to the organization. We're on the same page every single day."

Lukas smiled as he noted that his son and granddaughter, Kelly, are learning how to walk at the same time.

"She's 11 months old," Wayne said. "It's amazing, the parallel. He knows what to do, it's not a mental thing. It's a physical thing, everything on his right side is weak. He's getting stronger every day."

Just a few weeks ago, the smallest of movements Jeff made were a big deal.

Lukas had some special words for Jeff's wife, Linda. Besides Kelly, they also have a 3½-year-old son, Brady.

"I was concerned about her," Wayne said. "She's been an absolute trooper. The burden of this whole thing has fallen in her lap. She does everything. She's a dandy, she's really been there.

"And Brady is everywhere, he's got it down. He gets in the wheelchair with Jeff. They make Jeff dress every day. He's got his Bobby Knight sweat shirts. They (Jeff and Brady) were all decked out yesterday, his boy watched him work out."

Lukas also was thankful for the support the family has received.

"I just got off the phone with (Louisville basketball coach) Denny Crum," he said. "Some guys call every day, like (former jockey) Angel Cordero, who had a serious accident.

"The outpouring has been amazing. We've gotten literally hundreds of letters from people who have been through it. I think that's a great help. We get letters from people who just sign their (first) name, like 'Jack.'

"Jeff speaks on the phone. I pick out two of his close friends every day, I try to get him on the phone. They won't put through any calls yet. In a few weeks, I would say he'll be able to handle visitors and some calls. That's my opinion, I'm assuming that will be the case."

Lukas said his son loses track of time and sometimes has trouble communicating.

Bulls earn respect in life without Jordan

By Bill Bernhard
AP Sports Writer

■ Analysis

No three-time defending champion in sports history has ever been so lightly regarded as the Chicago Bulls.

The reason, of course, is the retirement of Michael Jordan, but as the NBA season reached its halfway point, the most startling development was that the Bulls were playing as well as anybody in the Eastern Conference.

Chicago was 28-13 at the midway point a year ago, with Jordan well on the way to his seventh NBA scoring title. But when the Bulls won their 41st game on Jan. 28 against Milwaukee, they were 29-12.

Asked to compare the two teams, Bulls coach Phil Jackson said that last season, "I wouldn't say we were bored with the game, but it became old hat. There were games you kind of penciled in as wins, and ones that you said were interesting or could-be's, and other games where you said, 'We'll have to play well to win these.'"

Jackson said this season's team, without Jordan, is taking the regular season more seriously.

"Our players are certainly rising to the occasion and playing well, but the Eastern Conference right now is riddled with injuries and maybe not as competitive as it has been the last couple years," he said.

B.J. Armstrong, who will join Scottie Pippen as All-Star game starters, said he believes Jordan had more difficulty taking the regular season seriously than the rest of the Bulls.

"Michael was different than the rest of us," Armstrong said. "He achieved so much individually and with the team and maybe he was bored. He tried to win every game, and so did the team. Maybe the focus wasn't there, but the effort was there. Before, winning 60 games was taken for granted. Now, there is a lot of energy."

The New York Knicks, who had a better record than Chicago last season before losing to the Bulls and Jordan in six games in the conference finals, and the Atlanta Hawks are battling Chicago for the top seeding position for the 1994 playoffs.

"Right now, the Chicago Bulls are the best team in the Eastern Conference," Knicks coach Pat Riley said during the Bulls' 17-game home winning streak.

"There's a big difference between talented teams and good teams," Jackson said. "I think we're playing very well as a basketball team, without a doubt."

GTS, LeMans cars hold early Rolex lead

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Six hours into the Rolex 24-Hours at Daytona International Speedway, the forecasters were right on the money.

The key prediction that appeared to be coming true was a battle at the front among the top GTS and LeMans Division cars, with the International Motor Sports Association's new World Sports Cars succumbing to a multitude of problems.

■ Rolex 24

Another prognostication was that the Nissan ZX300s that started from row two in the 62-car field would be the cars to beat. After darkness fell, the two GTS cars were at the front.

The trio of Paul Gentilozzi, Scott Pruett and Butch Leitzinger was in the lead, with the Nissan shared by John Morton, Johnny O'Connell and New Zealander Steve Millen on the same lap.

Third place belonged to yet another GTS entry, an Oldsmobile Cutlass co-driven by Darin Brassfield, Mark Dismore and John Fergis. That car started 18th after failing to post a qualifying speed. Usually, that would have relegated them to the rear of the big field, but IMSA moved them closer to the front because of the big differential in speeds in the four-division race.

Staying with the production-based GTS cars was the Porsche 911 Turbo LeMans-division entry of five-time Daytona winner Hurley Haywood, Germans Hans Stuck and Walter Rorhl and former Indianapolis 500 winner Danny Sullivan.

The Porsche actually led much of the sixth hour before a long pit stop to replace a broken fan belt. Still in the pits as the seventh hour began, the 911 had dropped to seventh.

Much to IMSA's regret, its new WSC division, intended to be the new glamour cars of the series with the end of the GT Prototype era, were falling by the wayside.

Two of the open-cockpit WSCs started at the front of the 62-car field and the pole-winning Chevrolet Spice of Spaniard Fermin Velez, Canadian Ross Bentley and team-owner Andy Evans led the first 12 laps on the 3.56-mile Daytona road course.

But smoke in the cockpit forced Velez to stop on course on lap 13. He was able to drive the car to the pits, where the problem was diagnosed as an engine fire. The car got back onto the track, but eventually fell far off the pace after a long stop to replace an oil pump belt.

Fourth belonged to the Porsche 911 Turbo of four-time Daytona winner Bob Wollek and Dominique Dupy of France and Juergen Barth of Germany.

The race was considered a tossup, with no clear-cut favorite for the first time in many years. In fact, with the less expensive but slower WSC cars taking the place of the very expensive but more exotic and much faster GT Prototypes as IMSA's top division, the winner could easily come from either the GTS division or the small-but-strong LeMans division.

Another thing expected to keep things close is the difference in fuel tanks among the divisions.

The GTS and LeMans cars have 100-litre tanks that will require them to stop after about 50 to 55 minutes, while the WSCs have only a 70-litre tank and will have to stop about every 45 minutes.

Webber getting better by leaps and bounds

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — One minute, Chris Webber is a fresh-faced 20-year-old, missing his buddies at Michigan and parents back home. The next, he looks every bit like the NBA's next superstar, dunking on Denver's Dikembe Mutombo and drawing a technical for yapping so much.

With one size-15 foot still in his teens and the other in the big-dollar, big-expectations world of the NBA, Webber has spent the first half of his rookie year working it all out. And suddenly, the unpolished No. 1 draft pick is progressing by leaps and bounds.

"I get frustrated sometimes, but I try not to let it show," said the Golden State Warriors forward, the league's youngest player. "Then again, I'm also encouraged by some good things I do. I just feel excited with everything right now."

His 17.1 points a game, 3.4 assists and development of a low-post game clearly make him the best of the rookie class. Accordingly, Webber was the first player chosen for the inaugural rookie All-Star game Feb. 12 in Minneapolis.

But he isn't content with the equivalent of having to eat at the kids' table at Thanksgiving. Webber wants to eat with the grownups.

"That's something I dreamed about," said Webber, who finished second to Houston's Hakeem Olajuwon in fan balloting for centers. "I guess I'll wait a year. I definitely wanted to go."

Webber, old enough to sign a 15-year, $74 million contract but not old enough to drink, has been in a hurry most of his basketball life — rushing to call a timeout that his Michigan team didn't have in last year's NCAA championship, rushing his recovery from an appendectomy so he could get to training camp, rushing to develop a pro game in as short a time as possible.

Getting off to a slow start because of the surgery and a subsequent ankle injury, Webber often looked lost on the court at first. The last two months, he's been getting up to speed, showing flashes of a brilliant future by unveiling a nifty hook shot and honing his post skills.

In the last 19 games, Webber averaged 19.7 points a game.

"When I came in, I didn't have a stationary post game," Webber said. "I came in and worked on the jump hook and some baseline moves, and now I do have a post game. I wanted to work on things, not in the traditional way of doing things, but the way I can score."

And no one is more gratified than Golden State coach Don Nelson, who pulled off the deal of his career when he obtained Webber's rights from Orlando for Anfernee Hardaway and three first-round picks.

"He came in with all the great skills, but he didn't really have a game that he could go to and get something out of," Nelson said.

"In the pros, there's more time. You can dribble more. In college, there's guys all around you all the time. Now he can pass off the dribble as well as off stationary, and how many big guys can do that?"

It's no wonder, then, that Webber's passing ability is what's been setting him apart. He's become adept at pushing the ball upcourt on the fast break and sending a dazzling pass to Billy Owens or Latrell Sprewell.

Webber's 3.4 assists average is the same as the career mark for Bill Walton, one of the game's best passing big men ever.

"That's my favorite part of the game right now, setting other people up with shots, leading the break," Webber said. "It sounds funny, but I always dreamed of being a Magic (Johnson), and coach really encouraged me to push it and lets me play point sometimes."

But Webber has a lot to learn. He sometimes stands and watches while teammates crash the boards, so Nelson would like his 8.9 rebounding average to improve. And he's often stymied by screens and picks.

"I think the players are a lot more physical, so it's hard to get adjusted to that," he said. "Those guys are strong and physical and they know how to get away with some things, and I haven't learned those tricks yet."

He's getting there, though. Mutombo dominated him during a December meeting and elbowed him in the head, but on Wednesday night the rookie made a bid for respect. After being hip-checked and knocked to the floor by Mutombo, Webber dunked over him and got in his face afterwards, earning himself a technical.

Nelson was glad to see Webber's intimidating side, part of a newfound self-reliance that Webber credits to teammate and boyhood idol Chris Mullin.

"He doesn't know how much his presence on the court has helped me," Webber said. "Just him being on the court and saying, 'You shoot it, you take it to the hole,' having him encourage me, that's mind-boggling. He's boosted my confidence in my overall game, just the intangibles that coaching can't do."

Mullin, who's struggling with his own game while trying to come back from a hand injury, thinks Webber already has all the tools he needs.

"He's got unlimited potential," he said. "He's been one of the top guys in the league, almost from the start, part of it being from his physical talent, but the other part being his approach to the game.

"He wants to be that good."

And get there in a hurry.

Franchione thinks New Mexico's grass greener after second year

■ With his second recruiting class, New Mexico football coach Dennis Franchione sees his program improving vastly.

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Dennis Franchione still hedges some of his hunches. Still talks about a football program that has miles to go in a marathon that started with his arrival in Albuquerque in the winter of 1991.

But in his heart, and with increasing frequency, Franchione knows the shade of grass at New Mexico is getting greener.

"It's a good time to be at UNM," Franchione said on the heels of the Lobos' signing of 21 recruits — 20 of them incoming freshmen — for next season.

The newest Lobos, faster and more athletic, will complement Franchione's recruiting class of a year ago, when the emphasis was on size and bulk — offensive and defensive linemen.

The combination, Franchione hopes, will push New Mexico closer to the top of the Western Athletic Conference and a bowl bid.

"I want to get it to the point where a bad season is 4-7 and where in good seasons we're competing for bowl bids," says Franchione. "This (recruiting) class, matched with last year's class, starts putting us on a plan to reach some stability and continuity in our program."

There are plenty of signs that Franchione and his staff are rapidly closing ground on that goal.

In two seasons under Franchione, the Lobos have won nine games, equaling the school's total wins for the previous five. Last year's 6-5 team was the first winning season in 11 years and included wins over bowl teams Wyoming and Utah.

There were no blowout losses.

Their defeats to Brigham Young and San Diego State when last-minute field goals went wide, combined with one point losses to Colorado State and Texas Christian, kept them out of the bowl picture.

By the end of the season, New Mexico had set single game and season attendance records. The Lobos played before 33,659 fans in the season opener against BYU — the school's first-ever sellout of University Stadium. They averaged 25,307 fans in six home games, a 31.4 percent increase over attendance the previous season and 60 percent over the 1991 attendance average of 15,822.

Another sellout crowd of more than 850 attended the team's annual post-season banquet. A town where basketball has been the best game in town for three decades had developed a contagious case of football fever.

By the end of the season, Franchione was WAC Coach of The Year and had a contract extension that would keep him in Albuquerque through the 1999 season.

The new contract and the winning season, he noted, helped him recruit against bigger, better programs.

"The image of our program in people's eyes has changed dramatically," he said. "This is the first time in 11 years a coach has been able to go out from New Mexico with a winning season in his pocket."

As he did last year, Franchione plans to redshirt virtually all of next year's freshmen. That's another indicator the program is building depth.

"One of the things I gauge recruiting success by is who we recruited against," said Franchione. "We were able to sign two of the top 100 prospects in Texas."

The two recruits Franchione stole from Texas are quarterback Brad Boyd from Harlingen and offensive lineman Chris Wallace from Spring.

Boyd, a potential clone for current Lobo quarterback Stoney Case, turned down Louisiana State and Houston to sign with New Mexico. Last season he threw for 1,871 yards and 19 touchdowns.

Wallace (6-foot-2, 300 pounds) was considered one of the top linemen in the country.

The Lobos signed another quarterback in Rocque Sandoval from Palmdale, Calif. Sandoval (6-2, 185) passed for 2,798 yards and 27 touchdowns last season. Sandoval's primary receiver last season, Anthony Coleman (6-1, 185) also is headed for Albuquerque and could be one of the few freshmen not redshirted next season.

"He's as smooth an athlete as we've been able to recruit since I've been here," said Franchione.

And with the signing of another Texan, Corbin Epps (6-0, 225), the Lobos may finally have the big back the program has lacked for years.

Franchione did lose three of New Mexico's best high school players to other schools. Albuquerque La Cueva High School linebacker Nelson Smith initially leaned toward New Mexico but ended up signing with the University of Miami. His teammate, lineman Brian Donoghue, a Parade Magazine All America, went to Stanford and Albuquerque Sandia High's Sharay Ratliffe, a talented halfback-defensive back combo, signed with Wyoming.

But overall, Franchione knows he's winning more battles than he's lost.

"I was talking to one of my friends the other day and I was telling him about the winning season, the attendance figures, the facility upgrades and what we've been able to do with our coaching staff," he said. "After we got done, I thought to myself, 'things sound pretty good here.'"

Pro football more like war than sport

NEW YORK (AP) — War and football are often viewed as analogous. Tim Lewis discovered that and walked away from football rather than risk paralysis or death.

"The Marines and the Army use discipline to get a man to walk into bullets," says George Young, the general manager of the NFL's New York Giants.

"Football players have to be disciplined in much the same way — to give pain or absorb it. It's not natural to get a soldier to walk into bullets. And what we do in football isn't much more natural."

That's why Lewis quit.

In 1985, in his third year as a defensive back for the Green Bay Packers, he tackled Willie Gault, and went down, no feeling in his arms or legs. It had happened before and he had recovered, so he assumed he'd recover again. He did, but doctors told him his body wasn't equipped to absorb the shocks and stresses of everyday collisions.

"As an athlete, I thought I'd be ready in a couple of days," Lewis says. "But the doctor (at Mayo Clinic) told me I had a congenitally narrow cervical canal. 'You never should have played the game,' he told me. Usually, they tell you it's just a stinger, You'll be all right."

"You're not washed up," Lewis says a doctor told him. "You're Mr. Invincible, Mr. Tough Guy. He said, 'Go tell coach Gregg you can play. It's just a bruise. Just a bruise.'"

But coach Forrest Gregg told Lewis to go to the Mayo Clinic and that he'd abide by the findings of the doctors there.

"The doctor there asked me if I had my college degree. I told him I did, and he said 'Use it.'"

"I think all players are afraid," he says. "In football, many a locker-room conversation is about how I hope this doesn't happen and that doesn't happen. But when the whistle blows, fear goes out of your mind. You're invincible. You're Superman, you're a projectile missile."

Arkansas coach replaces McCutchen at Duncanville

Associated Press

Arkansas linebackers coach Scott Smith was hired Friday as head coach at Duncanville High School.

Smith, who is married and has two young sons, expressed a desire to spend more time with his family. He also said his college career wasn't progressing as he had hoped.

"At this point in my life, with my family, I think it was time to settle down a little bit more," he said. "When I made the jump from high school to college coaching, I told myself that when I turned 35, I'd reevaluate my career and if I was progressing as I wanted to, I'd stay in college. If not, I'd get back into high school coaching."

"We hate to lose Scott," coach Danny Ford said. "He did a fine job for us, but he wanted to get back to Texas."

Smith, 35, is a native of Dallas. He played at Baylor and coached at two nearby high schools — Overland Park and Garland — as well as North Texas, SMU and Baylor before coming to Arkansas last season.

Drew Pearson pitches Negro League souvenirs

ARLINGTON (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Drew Pearson is used to catching footballs, but now he wants to try his hand at making money in baseball.

The ex-Cowboys great is looking to sell — at Texas Rangers' games — caps and T-shirts commemorating baseball's long-defunct Negro Leagues.

Pearson first pitched his idea last fall, and his excitement grew after a tour of the Rangers' new home stadium, The Ballpark in Arlington, which officially opens in April.

"It just enhanced our feelings that, yes, this is something we want to get involved with," said Pearson, who owns a sportswear business, a sports grill and other enterprises that last year recorded sales totaling almost $140 million.

Drew Pearson Cos., which specializes in headwear, is one of 22 businesses licensed to sell official Negro Leagues goods, according to an official with the league's baseball museum in Kansas City, Mo., which decides who can sell the merchandise.

Major League Baseball has issued another 10 licenses to sell Negro Leagues apparel, baseball's licensing office says.

Regardless of whether Pearson is given the go ahead to sell the items featuring teams that prospered in the days of segreged baseball, between 1920 and 1960, the Rangers intend to sell or provide space for such souvenirs.

"The Negro Leagues are very much a part of baseball and the history of baseball," said Tom Schieffer, Rangers president. "We definitely want to have some of that merchandise available."

Rangers officials have given no guarantee to Pearson, who retired as the Cowboys' all-time leading receiver after the 1983 season, but said they look forward to further meetings with him.

The hats, T-shirts, baseball jerseys and other apparel sport names and logos of Negro League teams such as the Atlanta Black Crackers, the Birmingham Black Barons, the Chicago American Giants and the Baltimore Black Sox.

Those accepting a license through the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum agree to pay a 5 percent royalty to the museum on all merchandise they sell.

Notre Dame tosses No. 4 UCLA

Notre Dame's Admore White (12), Billy Taylor (30) and Marcus Hughes (42) celebrate the Irish upset victory over No. 4 UCLA Saturday in South Bend, Ind.

Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Once again, Notre Dame played a rude host to UCLA.

Monty Williams scored 28 points and Notre Dame roughed up the No. 4 Bruins 79-63 Saturday for its fifth straight victory at home against UCLA.

The first sellout of the season at the Joyce Athletic and Convocation Center saw Notre Dame (7-13) win for only the second time in eight games. The Bruins (15-2) lost for the second time in three games, having fallen from the No. 1 ranking with an 85-70 defeat by California last week.

■ Top 25 Roundup

The last time the Bruins came to South Bend, they were 21-2 and ranked No. 2, but lost to Notre Dame 84-71 on Feb. 22, 1992. And in one of the biggest upsets in NCAA history, the Irish beat No. 1 UCLA 71-70 on Jan. 19, 1974, to end the Bruins' record 88-game winning streak.

Edney led the UCLA with 17 points. Ed O'Bannon had 14 and brother, Charles, who came in averaging 12.6 points, was scoreless.

No. 1 Duke 78, Clemson 74

DURHAM, N.C. — Grant Hill scored a career-high 33 points as No.1 Duke edged Clemson.

Duke (16-2, 7-2 Atlantic Coast Conference) was coming off on 89-78 loss to No. 2 North Carolina Thursday night, while Clemson (12-9, 3-6) was looking to follow up on a 19-point win over Georgia Tech. Clemson led Duke by seven points late in the second half.

Hill scored 15 of Duke's 17 points during a five-minute period in the second half. Clemson didn't score from the field in the last four minutes.

Devin Gray paced Clemson with 22 points before fouling out with two minutes left. Wright finished with 19 points, Bovain had 15 and Jeff Brown had 10.

No. 2 North Carolina 77, N. Carolina St. 64

RALEIGH, N.C. — Dante Calabria and Jerry Stackhouse helped second-ranked North Carolina hold off North Carolina State midway through the second half, and the Tar Heels pulled away.

Although Calabria only had seven points, he scored five in a row to break a tie at 55.

Stackhouse got 11 of his 17 points in the second half.

Derrick Phelps also had 17 points for North Carolina (19-3, 7-2 Atlantic Coast Conference). Brian Reese had 12 and Kevin Salvadori 11.

No. 5 Connecticut 73, Miami 57

STORRS, Conn. — Donyell Marshall scored 20 points after a slow start and No. 5 Connecticut welcomed coach Jim Calhoun back with a Big East victory over Miami.

The victory gave Calhoun his 400th win at UConn. He missed the last two games because of pneumonia, including Tuesday's loss at Syracuse. Calhoun lost 10 pounds during his illness and sat during much of Saturday's game.

Miami (7-11, 0-10 Big East) remained winless on the road (0-23) over three seasons in the Big East. Donny Marshall scored 15 points for UConn. Doron Sheffer added 13.

Alex Fraser led Miami with 12 points. Steve Rich and 7-foot-3 Constantin Popa each chipped in with 10.

No. 6 Arkansas 131, Montevallo 63

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Scotty Thurman scored 16 points during an early 28-3 spree, sending No. 6 Arkansas past Montevallo.

The Razorbacks had seven players in double figures, including Al Dillard, who made 5-of-9 3-pointers and finished with 17 points.

Arakansas' starters sat down just over seven minutes into the game with a 30-7 lead and returned for the first nine minutes of the second half.

No. 10 Temple 73, St. Bonaventure 52

PHILADELPHIA — Aaron McKie scored 22 points and Eddie Jones had 21 points as No. 10 Temple defeated St. Bonaventure for its 10th straight victory.

The Owls hold the longest winning streak in Division I play. Temple also beat St. Bonaventure for the 22nd straight time since Feb. 2, 1983, and increased their overall edge against the Bonnies to 27-1.

Ivey had 13 points and Rick Brunson had 11 points and 10 assists for Temple.

Harry Moore scored 19 points for St. Bonaventure,

Washington 74, No. 12 Arizona 69

SEATTLE — Maurice Woods and Jason Tyrus each scored 20 points as Washington beat Arizona for its first victory in the Pac-10 this season.

Washington (3-15, 1-9) broke a nine-game losing streak and a 12-game skid in the league. The Huskies averted losing a school-record 10th consecutive game, and also beat Arizona for the third time in four games in Seattle.

The 6-foot-10 Woods scored 18 points in the second half. Tyrus got 16 points in the first half in only his fifth starting assignment at guard this season.

Arizona (17-4, 6-3) had a four-game winning streak broken.

No. 13 Michigan 59, Michigan St. 51

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Juwan Howard had 18 points and 12 rebounds to lead undermanned Michigan to a win over Michigan State.

The 13th-ranked Wolverines played without starters Jimmy King and Ray Jackson, who are serving a suspension for violating team policy.

The win helped Michigan (15-4, 7-2 Big Ten) stay in a first-place tie with Indiana. Michigan State fell to 14-8, 5-5 following its worst offensive performance of the season.

Jalen Rose scored 15 points for Michigan, and Saint-Jean added a career-high 11. Respert, averaging 23.2 points, led Michigan State with 15 but made only 5 of 17 shots.

No. 14 Indiana 76, Penn St. 66

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Pat Graham scored 21 points and stopped a critical Penn State fast break when he lost a contact lens, giving No. 14 Indiana a win.

Officials stopped play for Graham with 3:52 left, interrupting a Penn State five-on-four drive that could have cut Indiana's lead to two. After Graham was set, Indiana (14-4, 7-2 in the Big Ten) forced a turnover and the Lions (10-8, 3-6) never came close again.

At the time, Penn State was on a roll. The Lions had just cut Indiana's 16-point lead to five and Rashaan Carlton, who already had four 3-pointers, was breaking free on the fast break.

Graham, however, was lying still on the floor under the Hoosiers basket. Rather than waiting for Indiana to regain possession to stop the clock and determine Graham's trouble, officials stopped play.

After initially ordering Indiana to play with four players until getting the ball back, crew chief Phil Bova let Graham reset his contact lens and re-enter the game, as is allowed under Big Ten rules.

Syracuse 80, Pittsburgh 77

PITTSBURGH — Adrian Autry scored 26 points, including five baskets that halted Pittsburgh runs as No. 15 Syracuse beat the Panthers.

John Wallace added 23 points for the Orangemen (15-3, 8-3 Big East), who pushed Pitt (13-6, 7-4) into third place in the conference.

Orlando Antigua, Eric Mobley and Jerry McCullough all scored 15 points for Pitt, which missed 17 free throws and struggled on the boards.

Ohio State 73, No. 16 Wisconsin 57

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Lawrence Funderburke and Tony Watson led a 13-0 run to end the first half, then scored the first six points in a 12-2 second-half surge as sharp-shooting Ohio State upset No. 16 Wisconsin.

Only one of 17 previous opponents had shot better than 50 percent against the Badgers. But Ohio State hit 28-of-44 from the field for 64 percent. The Buckeyes had shot 29 percent in a 69-55 loss in Madison on Jan. 8.

Derek Anderson led Ohio State (10-10, 3-6 Big Ten) with 17 points and five assists, while Watson had 16, Funderburke 15 and Greg Simpson 12.

Michael Finley scored 18 and Tracy Webster 14 for Wisconsin (14-4, 5-4).

No. 17 UAB 83, No. 25 Cincinnati 67

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Former Odessa College standout Robert Shannon scored 21 points and No. 17 Alabama-Birmingham improved its shooting to beat No. 25 Cincinnati.

UAB (17-3, 5-2 Great Midwest Conference) had shot only 37 percent in its last five games. But the Blazers made 52 percent overall, including 5-of-9 from 3-point range by Shannon, in beating the Bearcats (15-6, 3-3).

Dontonio Wingfield and LaZelle Durden led Cincinnati with 15 points each, and Damon Flint added 14. Curtis Bostic had 11.

Clarence Thrash scored 18 points for UAB and Carter Long came off the bench to score 10. Reginald Allen also had 10 for the Blazers, whose next four games are on the road.

No. 19 California 81, Oregon 61

EUGENE, Ore. — Jason Kidd scored 11 points in a decisive 23-4 second-half surge Saturday to lead No. 19 California to a win.

Kidd had 19 points, 11 assists and 7 rebounds for the Bears (14-4, 7-2 Pac-10).

Lamond Murray, the Pac-10's leading scorer, had 26 points and 12 rebounds for the Bears.

California led by as many as 18 points in the first half before the Ducks cut the lead 39-32 at halftime. Jeff Potter's layup with 15:02 to go pulled Oregon (6-12, 2-7) to within 43-39.

No. 20 Missouri 104, Oklahoma 94

NORMAN, Okla. — Jevon Crudup had 25 points and 15 rebounds, and Mark Atkins ruined Oklahoma with his 3-point shooting as No. 20 Missouri remained unbeaten in the Big Eight.

Missouri (16-2, 7-0) overcame a seven-point second-half deficit to win its fourth straight conference road game. After struggling much of the day from the foul line, the Tigers sealed the victory by making their final 10 in a row.

Oklahoma (12-6, 3-3) hung in against the Tigers despite just six points from Jeff Webster, who came in leading the league in scoring with 24.4 points per game.

Atkins scored 24 points, 21 of those from 3-point range. His 3-pointer with 2:09 to play broke an 89-89 tie and gave the Tigers the lead for good.

He got fouled on the shot and had a chance for a four-point play but he missed the free throw. Crudup came down with the rebound, however, and Missouri wound up with two free throws on the possession to stretch its lead to five.

Calvin Curry then missed 3-pointers on two straight trips as Oklahoma tried to rally. Missouri got the rebound each time and converted at the foul line.

Georgia Tech 83, No. 21 Maryland 71

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — James Forrest made two straight layups in a late 9-0 run that enabled Georgia Tech to pull away from No. 21 Maryland and snap a three-game losing streak.

Georgia Tech (12-8 overall, 3-6 in the Atlantic Coast Conference) never trailed, making its first seven shots to take a 16-5 lead.

Travis Best had 23 points, including 14 in the second half, and Barry scored a career-high 19 for the Yellow Jackets, who had lost five of six.

Booth and Exree Hipp each scored 17 for Maryland, while Smith had 12 points and 13 rebounds. The Terrapins have lost three straight.

No. 22 Minnesota 79, Northwestern 65

MINNEAPOLIS — Townsend Orr scored 11 of his 14 points during a game-breaking run as No. 22 Minnesota beat Northwestern to snap a three-game Big Ten losing streak.

Randy Carter had 18 points and Arriel McDonald added 16 for Minnesota, which shot 50 percent from the field and tied a season-low with eight turnovers.

Patrick Baldwin scored 16 for Northwestern, while Kip Kirkpatrick added 15. Kevin Rankin, the Wildcats' leading scorer with a 16.6 average, was held to seven points.

Utah St. 69, No. 23 New Mexico St. 68

LOGAN, Utah — Freshman Jarobi Kemp scored 14 points and Corwin Woodard added 13, leading Utah State to a 69-68 upset of 23rd-ranked New Mexico State.

It was the second straight loss for New Mexico State, which was beaten by Nevada on Thursday.

Utah State (8-11, 5-6 Big West) hit 19 straight free throws in the second half.

Darrin Jackson scored 16 points for New Mexico State (16-3, 8-2).

No. 24 Florida 84, Mississippi State 75

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Dan Cross scored 26 points and hit a key 3-pointer that helped No. 24 Florida beat Mississippi State.

Cross' 3-point shot with 1:06 gave the Gators an 80-75 lead. Florida (18-3, 8-1) remained in first place in the Eastern Division of the Southeastern Conference.

Mississippi State (13-5, 6-3) led 46-41 at halftime, but Florida went on a 10-2 run to start the second half. The Bulldogs reclaimed the lead a short time later and were ahead 59-55 with 11:48 left.

Craig Brown added 17 points for the Gators and Dametri Hill had 15.

A palatial place

It would seem obvious to many that, a professional person, looking for services within his or her own field, would demand the very best.

Just as a doctor would expect the very best health-care for his family, so it would follow that a builder would look for, or build an exceptional house for himself.

That is exactly what Jim Hillman, the builder of this fabulous house in Knights Place, Polo Park has done.

Hillman built this house to his own exacting standards, for himself so that he could be assured of the very highest quality.

A resident of Midland for over 30-years, Hillman has a wealth of experience in constructing homes and light-industrial buildings, and this experience shines through in this superb four bedroom, three bath family house.

This home offers many unique features and it balances practicality with elegance to produce a home that is truly exceptional.

It is in the area of design that Hillman's talents are most obvious. This is an unusual house, full of varying ceiling heights, interesting windows and gorgeous wood-work. Nothing is out of place although there are different design styles in the house.

There are plenty of modern elements mixed in with older, Edwardian styles which are evident in mouldings and other wooden parts of the house.

The sequestered master suite is representative of the rest of the house because of its unusual bay window, elegant fireplace and tray ceiling. It is this usage of interesting design and architectural elements which give this house such character, and this use of design spreads throughout the house.

This house is being represented by Sandy Hanson of Langston Realtors: for more information about the house, and to arrange a time to see how wonderful the other rooms are, call 682-9495.

The history of organized real estate . . . Our National Association

Pat Orseth
President Midland
Association of Realtors, Inc.

The NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS, the nation's largest trade association, represents REALTORS who are members of the 54 state and district REALTOR associations.

Founded in Chicago in 1908 the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS remains constant in dedication to its original goals: unity in the real estate profession, compilation of relevant information concerning real estate, protection and promotion of private ownership of real property and establishment of professional standards of practice. In 1913 the National Association adopted its Code of Ethics. Amended over the years, the Code of Ethics remains the cornerstone of professionalism in the industry.

In 1917, the first step toward securing legal recognition of the professional status of those engaged in the real estate business was taken when California adopted the first real estate license law. Since then, all the states and districts have enacted license laws pertaining to the practice of real estate.

The National Association has been surpassed in its educational endeavors. In 1923 the Association was instrumental in publishing one of the first recognized textbooks on real estate. Since then, the Association's library, the largest collection of real estate material in the country, contains more than 23,000 volumes plus additional material concerning real estate in its archives.

With the constant growing trend toward specialization in the complex real estate field, and to assist REALTORS with specialized interests, the National Association has established affiliated institutes, societies, and councils. These professional organizations devote themselves to continuing studies of the latest trends in fields from commercial investment, counseling, and leadership training to brokerage, property management, group investment and urban and land development.

In the eye of the public and in both the legislative and executive branches of government, the National Association has been officially recognized as the "Voice of Real Estate" since April, 1989. In addition, the national Association has recognized the importance of liaison with the various regulatory agencies of government. Active historically in the development of government programs to make home ownership possible for increasing numbers of families and in easing the impact of recurring shortages of mortgage money, the National Association carries on a continuing leadership program to develop and recommend ways and means at all levels of government, industry and business to expand the resources available for home ownership. Leadership by the National Association has helped to develop the Home Owners Loan Corporation, the Home Loan Bank System, the Mortgage Insurance Program of the Federal Housing Administration and the Federal National Mortgage Association.

Next week, "The History of Organized Real Estate - Our State Association."

WEEKLY & MONTHLY INCOME

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has an opening on one of its few "special allowance" routes. This larger route receives a $50 check each Friday, in addition to the regular monthly route profits. The route is in the Cottonflat and Rankin Hwy.

As with all newspaper distributorships this opportunity requires a 7 day a week commitment (when you go out of town you must arrange a substitute for yourself) and it is early morning work.

Newspaper distributorships provide great supplemental income for housewives/mothers, senior citizens, college students or any other adult wanting to "moonlight".

310 General Help Wanted

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?
YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you do not need daycare!
★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?
Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?
Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekened mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family members, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?
An initial $100 refundable deposit is required.

Homebuying? Get a real PAL - a Pre-Approved Loan!

"You know, when you hear the word pal, you normally think of a friend, a buddy, a compadre. But at AmWest Savings, PAL also stands for Pre-Approved Loan. And when you're lookin' for a new home and want to move in quick, AmWest can be your best PAL.

Fact is, most of us go out lookin' for a home, find the one we want, and then go see about a loan. But, if you go see my friends at AmWest first, you can get pre-approved. Now I know that some banks will pre-qualify you, but I'm talkin' pre-approval. That way you know exactly how much you can buy, and you can go out and get the house you want, pronto!

So, if you're fixin' to buy a new home, take your PAL from AmWest with you."

COMING... New Mexico Energy Summit

PERMIAN BASIN OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, February 6, 1994 SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

BRIEFING

Prices gain

Crude oil and natural gas prices got a strong boost early in the week due to bitter cold weather in the Northeast, then retreated later in the week as warmer weather forecasts prompted profit-taking.

March contracts for crude oil passed the $16 level at mid-week, retreating to $15.89 late in the week. The posted price rose to $14.25 a barrel.

Natural gas contracts, after rising as high as $2.63 per thousand cubic feet, fell 20 cents in a late session, closing at $2.38 per Mcf late in the week.

Drilling venture

Howell Corp. has entered into a tentative joint venture agreement with Tenneco Ventures and GEDD Inc. to pursue oil and gas drilling opportunities with smaller prospectors in Mississippi and Alabama.

The venture would focus on Howell's recently acquired 50 percent mineral interest in numerous separately owned land parcels covering a total of 1.75 million acres in those two states.

Tenneco Ventures is a subsidiary Houston-based Tenneco Inc. GEDD is a privately-held company based in Corpus Christi, Texas. Houston-based Howell is a diversified energy company.

Texas geology is still ripe, but drilling has slowed in recent weeks.

Drilling steady

Drilling activity showed modest improvement in the final week of January, Baker Hughes Inc. reported.

In the Permian Basin, the company reported a gain of five rigs during the week, to 102, below the 113 seen a year ago. Lea and Eddy counties, N.M. remained the most active in the Basin with 16 and 11 rigs respectively, followed by Midalnd and Upton counties, seven rigs each.

The national rig count was unchanged at 778 for the week but is above the year-ago count of 762.

Among major producing staes, Wyoming posted the sharpest drop, nine rigs, followed by Texas with eight rigs. Louisiana and Oklahoma each gained six rigs.

New Mexico oil impact conference

■ Economic impact of oil and gas will be focus of energy conference

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

If it were not for oil and gas, say experts, New Mexico might well be a third world state, and that is a fact some in the Land of Enchantment would like to get across.

According to state statistics, the New Mexico oil and gas industry is the single largest contributor of tax revenues in the state, accounting for 90 percent of the $4.7 billion dollars in the states permanent fund and 30 percent of the general fund. In 1992, oil and gas alone accounted for $847 million from production, taxes, royalty and investment earnings.

Yet, these are facts that escape most New Mexicans, says Doris Rhodes, director of development for the Robert O. Anderson Schools of Management at the University of New Mexico.

"We have done a very poor job of educating the citizens of New Mexico on the impact of the oil and gas industry," said Rhodes, noting that a conference, now being organized by the school is designed to focus on the economic impact of the industry on the state and to help citizens understand the role of oil and gas in New Mexico.

The conference is the fourth annual New Mexico Oil & Gas Conference, sponsored by the Robert O. Anderson Schools of Management at Albuerque, has been set for February 24 at the Albuerque Marriott. And this year, the conference which will include industry leaders from Mexico and the U.S. will focus on the impact of energy in the state of New Mexico.

Pool debuts flameless hot-oiler

■ Hot oil unit captures unit heat to eliminate open-flames improve safety.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

If Pool Energy Services has its way many oil companies may be saying goodbye to an "old flame."

Used to remove paraffin from wellbores, tank batteries and flow lines, hot-oil units, which take lease oil, heat it and use it to melt paraffin deposits, have long been standard equipment in the oilpatch. But Pool says frequent fires caused many operators to have safety concerns about bringing the propane-fired, open-flame unit on a lease with flowing oil and gas.

Now Pool Company says it has developed a hot oil unit that alleviates those concerns about mixing fire and oil. Called the Thermo-Safe, it is a flameless hot-oil treating system that relies not on an open flame firebox but heat generated by the unit's own engine, transmission, and exhaust heat.

"Many operators would not even allow a hot-oil unit on their lease for fear it would catch on

IPAA nixed on import restraints

Staff Report

The Independent Petroleum Association of America said this week that it was surprised and disheartened to learn that the Commerce Department, citing legal constraints, has decided not to act on IPAA's emergency petition to adjust imports under Section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962.

The Commerce Department today sent a letter to IPAA Chairman George Alcorn stating that the administration is prohibited from acting on IPAA's request for presidential action to adjust imports. On December 6, 1993, IPAA filed the petition asking that the president take immediate action to adjust imports under President Reagan's 1989 finding that oil imports threaten to impair national security.

In the letter, Commerce Acting Under Secretary Barry Carter concludes, "The law does not permit the action your petition seeks." Carter states that

Gas price surge misses Basin

■ Weakness in West Texas' main gas market, the West Coast, keeps gas prices flat.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Natural gas producers expected gas prices this year to average less than they did in 1993. However, a prolonged bitter cold spell in the Midwest and Northeast portions of the nation has raised expectations of firm prices for the year.

Midland gas analyst Robert Anderson said that the overall trend remains positive for gas producers.

"I tend to look back at February prices for previous years and compare this February to others," he said, referring to February 1993's price of $1.60 per MMBtu, $1.05 for February 1992 and $1.40 for February 1991. "Although the February price may be slightly less for Waha than we'd hoped for, it's still superior to recent years."

Noting that the February index was around $1.80, John Smart, president of Pinnacle Natural Gas, noted that the price "is a decent price considering two years ago it was $1.05 or even lower."

Smart added that his clients have had no problems at all moving all their gas production and that "This year has started out as good as or better than last year and it's certainly better than 1992."

Gary Thomas, vice president and general manager of Enron Oil and Gas, said he had heard of cash prices as high as $2.30 in the West Texas area and as high as $2.70 per Mcf on the Gulf Coast.

The bitter cold spell seen in portions of the nation has sent natural gas futures contracts on the New York Mercantile Exchange soaring as high as $2.63 this past week. That, however, has not translated into soaring spot prices for area producers.

The main reason, Anderson explained, is that most of the gas produced in West Texas goes to the West Coast, which has experienced a mild winter this season and is suffering from slack demand due to low oil prices that have slowed activity in California's steam flood fields.

While spot price index reports issued February 1 indicated price increases over January prices for pipelines serving the Eastern coastline and the Northeastern part of the country, due to cold weather, Anderson said Rocky Mountain and West Coast prices were generally flat to slightly lower.

"Typically, we see a basis differential between the NYMEX at Henry Hub, Louisiana and Waha of West Texas of 10

Trucking moves closer to deregulation

Pitts

There are new signs that Texas may, indeed, be moving closer to the era of deregulated trucking, which will have an impact on all hauling, including oilpatch trucking.

Consider the case of B-Line Delivery Service of Dallas. This innovative company last month won a historic case that once again exposes to the public the gross inefficiency, unfairness and high cost of regulated trucking in the state.

At the same time, the B-Line case put a chink in the legal armor of the pro-regulation crowd — a chink that may have profound implications for other haulers in the future.

What B-Line did was try to find a way around the complex Texas trucking regulations which have long stifled competition and kept trucking rates artificially high in the state.

B-Line operates a small package delivery service within several large metropolitan areas of Texas, an activity that does not require Texas Railroad Commisssion authority.

The company's controversy began, however, when it began to gather packages, consolidate them into large shipments and ship via authorized trucking to other Texas cities. There B-Line would break down the shipment and deliver the individual packages door-to-door in the company's non-regulated trucks.

Large trucking companies, fearful that the practice would spread, quickly filed a complaint with the Texas Railroad Commission (TRC). The big trucking companies had reason to fear B-Line innovations because the little package company from Dallas was moving packages around the state 15 percent cheaper than they could.

In their complaint to TRC, the large truckers said that B-Line shipments should be regulated from its origin to its final destination. B-Line disagreed and so did TRC Commissioner Barry Williamson, who said that to prohibit B-Line from consolidating packages for shipment would penalize the trucking company for innovative and creative business practices.

"B-Line found a legitimate way to serve a need and utilize the large trucking companies for the city-to-city portion of the haul. But the large trucking companies did not want a piece of the pie, they wanted the whole pie, the recipe and the oven." Williamson said regulation of B-Line by the TRC would shut down the company's operation, because it did not have Commission authority to transport from city-to-city.

Despite his passionate plea, Williamson's reasoning did not prevail and when the matter came to a hearing in October 1993, he was outvoted 2-1 by fellow commissioners Jim Nugent and Mary Scott Nabors.

At that point, Williamson said he filed a dissent decision with the Commission and B-Line took the matter to court, where his dissent was presented for consideration by the judge.

Upon examination of the facts several weeks ago, Judge John K. Dietz of the 250th District Court in Austin agreed with Williamson and B-Line that the law was not clear enough to support the Commission's interpretation.

fire and, in turn, catch a well on fire," said Gil Gayaut, director of technology and environmental affairs for Pool. "So our motivation was pure safety — to develop a hot-oil unit, that did not use a flame and that operators would not fear."

Gayaut said it is almost impossible to buy insurance for a hot-oil unit because 6 percent of the fleet burns up each year.

Gayaut, who worked over a year with a team at Pool's San Angelo office to develop the Thermo-Safe hot-oil unit, says it works by using heat-exchangers to capture wasted heat from the engine, exhaust and crankshaft.

"We get about 30 percent of the heat needed to heat the oil from each of the sources."

Not all three of the heat exchangers in the patent-pending system are always needed, but they are all three plumbed together to maximize efficiency. Together the heat sources on the transport vehicle allow fluid temperatures to be raised at a rate of 1.5 million BTUs/hr.

The system is controlled by outside controls that include engine throttle, retarder brake control, exhaust diverter controls and speed and direction controls for a Triplex pump, Bowie pump and Viking pump, all of which are hydraulically powered for safety.

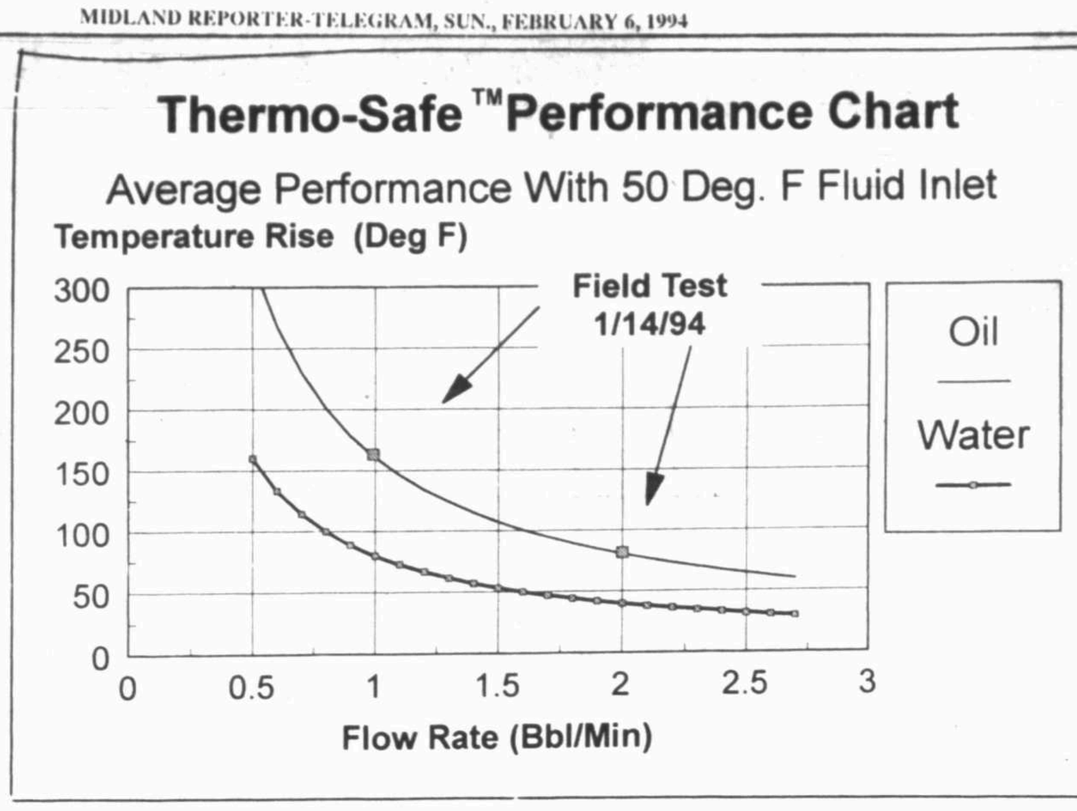
An additional safety feature assures that all systems are shut down in the presence of gas in concentrations sufficient to interfere with the normal operation of the transport's engines.

Some of the design problems encountered in the building of the Thermo-Safe unit was one learning how to load the engine at standstill, and how to load it without it overheating. There was also the problem of capturing transmission heat without it overheating. He said a brake inside the transmission uses a rotor and stator and works similar to a hydramatic transmission to create heat through fluid resistance.

"You may have a 600 horsepower engine and burn enough fuel for a 600 horsepower, but get only 200 hp delivered to the wheels. The rest of the horsepower goes out the radiator or muffler as heat," said Gayaut.

He said the hot-oil unit will burn 15-16 gallons per hour in heating the oil, and while it will not initially be cheaper than a conventional hot-oil unit, it will be much safer.

Pool is now touring the oilpatch with the Thermo-safe to determine the level of interest, before building other units. Demonstrations have been planned for Bryan, Texas; the Permian Basin; Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle and East Texas.



PITTS: Trucking deregulation lives

(From 1E)

"I'm glad the judge agreed with me," said Williamson. "This is just one more step toward deregulation, which will allow more carriers and greater competition into the highly regulated Texas trucking industry." Williamson predicted that greater competition would bring better prices and service to all business in Texas, including the oil business.

The Texas trucking industry has often been cited for its inequities and inefficiencies.

The B-Line case is subject to appeal, but even if the decision is overturned on appeal, Williamson says the legal momentum for trucking reform and deregulation has been established.

There is no doubt that the B-Line case has let a legal worm out of the can, and one of the next areas that may have to be looked at in light of the B-Line decision is oilfield hauling. Texas Railroad Commission lawyers say that the B-Line case opens up new possibilities for load consolidation, perhaps in the consolidation of pipe loads that may have to be eventually examined by the courts or in the regulative arena.

The last go-around in oilfield trucking regulations, several years ago, involved roustabout gang trucks that would pick up several joints of pipe at a yard for a customer or suck up a wellhead and carry it from one location to another. Truckers in the Abilene area filed complaints and these roustabout trucks were in violation of TRC regulations, and the roustabout companies were warned.

I am not sure of the final disposition of the situation, but I do know there was little stomach on the part of TRC or anyone else to enforce such blatently un-Texas type laws that strike at the heart of free enterprise and entrepreneurial efficieny. Texans may be used to having it done to them by federal agencies, but they are not used to having it done to them by Texans.

"It is just a matter of time before trucking is deregulated in Texas," said Williamson. "I think we will see it in my term. If the legislature will not reform the trucking industry, the courts will."

Campaigning on a platform of trucking deregulation, Williamson blasted the present system when he was running for Railroad Commissioner. He would often say that as an American, he thought he could go anywhere and be anything he wanted to be — but that was before he learned about Texas' regulated trucking industry.

"Texas' outdated way of keeping people out of the trucking business must change. To compete and attract business in the soon-to-be 21st century, Texas must provide a competitive transportation system that will encourage commerce and trade and not discourage it," said Williamson.

IMPACT: New Mexico oil

(From 1E)

While the school has addressed primarily issues of concern to the oil and gas industry at past conferences, Rhodes said the school was being joined this year by the Industrial Development Corp. of Southeast New Mexico in an effort to focus on the economic impact of the industry in the state.

"New Mexico would be in serious trouble economically, if it were not for oil and gas. It fuels the severance tax fund which gives us the bonding power to build road and schools, but few New Mexicans have stopped to think of the far-reaching impact of oil and gas industry not only in direct but indirect economic impact to the state. When you stop to think of all the suppliers, the pipe haulers, pipelines, drilling companies and all the other companies that support oil and gas development and production, you are talking about a lot of jobs and a lot of impact."

Rhodes said it was unfortunate that when the oil and gas industry got into the news it was usually about some environmental problem real or perceived. "It is certainly important to have a focus on the environment, but you also have to look at both sides. You have to look at all the good the industry does for the state. We need a balance of the two perspectives."

Among the scheduled speakers for the oil and gas economic impact conference on February 24 are: Robert O. Anderson, former chairman of ARCO, Manuel Suarez-Mier, Mexico's trade representative to the U.S. during the Bush administration, and a major player in the formation of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), and Ms. Maria Eugenia Perez Castano, director of hydrocarbon operations for Mexico.

Other speakers include: Anita Lockwood, New Mexico Secretary of Energy, Minerals and Natural Resources; Bill Garcia, New Mexico Secretary of Economic Development; George Howison, President Meridian Oil Inc.; Alberto Gutierrez, president H+GCL; Tom Petrie, Petrie Parkman & Co.; Kenneth Walters, dean Robert O. Anderson Schools of Management.

Annual Texas Energy Update scheduled

The Seventh Annual Texas Energy Update will be held Thursday at the Loews Anatole Hotel in Dallas beginning with registration at 7:30 a.m.

Sessions begin at 8:15 a.m. with William L. Liscom, publisher of Oil Market Listener & OPEC Listener magazine speaking on "Will OPEC Rescue Oil Prices in 1994?"

At 9 a.m., a finance panel discussion on "Dealing with Today's Realities" will be moderated by Edward W. Blessing of the Independent Petroleum Association of America. Speakers will be Timothy T. Stephens, vice president, Enron Finance Corp., George R. Hutchinson, senior vice president, TCW Asset Management Co., and Patrick D. Hanley, vice president and chief financial officer, Union Pacific Resources.

At 10:15 a.m., John R. Scott, vice president and general counsel, Hunt Oil Co., will speak on "Cost Effective Environmental Compliance Programs or Independents."

The final session will be an international panel discussion on "Opportunities in Latin America" moderated by Thad Grundy Jr. Speakers will be Thomas F. Cooke, chairman and chief operating officer, Saratoga Resources, Gabriel Sanchez-Sierra, former executive secretary, Latin America Energy Organization, and William H. Kaufman, director, new areas, Oryx Energy Co.

Cost is $40 for preregistration, $50 at the door. Sponsors are the IPAA, Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association, North Texas Oil & Gas Association, Akin Gum Strauss Hauer Feld, and Deloitte & Touche.

SURGE: Cold weather

to 15 cents," Anderson said. "This month, spot price is $1.90 and February closed on the NYMEX at $2.47, a gap due entirely to weather. NYMEX closed high due to severe cold weather in the Northeast but didn't impact the market for West Texas gas directly. As a result, there's a huge basis differential. The producer who locked his gas in on a NYMEX-based contract minus the typical differential made a lot of money this month."

Further pressuring prices, he said, is a new abundance of pipeline capacity to the West Coast. He estimated that with the expansion of the PGT pipeline and the completion of the Kern River Pipeline, there is now an additional billion cubic feet or more a day available to California.

"As a result of the additional gas, there will be pressure on wellhead prices for natural gas that moves westward, and the smart producer will find ways to move his gas to the Eastern or Midcontinent markets," he advised.

Just as weak oil prices have had an impact on gas prices on the West Coast, Anderson said he expects oil prices to begin affecting natural gas prices this spring.

"If oil remains below $15 a barrel, and with gas demand slackening due to milder temperatures," he said, "I would doubt gas prices in West Texas will exceed $2 per Mcf. It's my opinion natural gas and oil do still compete for market share."

Thomas, Smart and Anderson all said they had heard reports of record withdrawals from storage during the cold spell.

Smart expressed the hope that buying to fill storage will firm prices at around their current level this year.

Thomas, too said he expected that "if storage is being drawn down at the record levels I've heard, hopefully buying natural gas for storage will help support prices at least somewhat this summer."

IPAA: Irked at response

(From 1E)

1988 amendments to the Omnibus Trade Act requires that "action to adjust imports be taken no later than the 15-day period is merely a statutory deadline for initial action, but that Section 232, even as amended, gives the president continuing authority to act on a previous finding."

"Clearly this is a matter of legal interpretation, and we are disappointed that the Commerce Department chose not to interpret the amendments in our favor," said Alcorn. "This petition was just one step in our current efforts to stop the decline of the domestic petroleum industry; we won't stop here." Alcorn went on to say that IPAA leadership is considering a range of options, including legal action, but it would be premature to discuss them before the Executive Committee has had the opportunity to examine the issue. "Let's just say everything is still on the table," said Alcorn.

Carter's letter also states that "Secretary Ron Brown is most sympathetic to the problems facing the independent oil production industry. He has asked that I reiterate his intention to investigate what action the Department of Commerce can take to provide assistance."

"I hope the Secretary does intend to take action and soon," said Alcorn. "So far, the administration has failed to address the serious crisis facing a critical American industry that is severely at risk," said Alcorn.

"Last year the United States imported 49.5 percent of the oil it needs every day to operate our economy, the highest level since 1977. This alarming dependency was not due to increased demand, or economic growth but the fact that domestic production fell to the lowest level in 35 years, a consequence of low-priced imports. As bad as last year was, the current depression in world oil prices, transmitted through the medium of imports, will push domestic production to new historical lows," said Alcorn.

Mobil names new chairman

N.Y. Times News Service

Lucio Noto, the president and chief operating officer of Mobil Corp. has been elected to succeed Allen Murray as chairman and chief executive in a move that analysts said might bring some change in the management style but not in the direction of one of the world's leading oil companies.

Noto, 55, grew up in New York City and like Murray came up on the financial side of the company rather than the production end.

"I would like to express my own deep personal satisfaction with the board's decision," said Murray, who will retire March 1 after 41 years at Mobil.

Noto made his career largely overseas, running Mobil's refineries and gasoline stations in Italy and Japan. From 1977 to 1985 he build Mobil's presence in Saudi Arabia.

Noto moved to Jidda in 1979 and became close to many of the Saudi leaders while helping to set up joint ventures in petrochemicals and a big refinery.

The overseas experience will serve him well, some analysts said, because Mobil, like other big oil companies, faces the challenge of finding new oil and gas deposits to replace fields that will run down this decade.

Both executives have long worked in tandem to shed Mobil of extraneous businesses and refocus the company on its core oil and gas business, where both have sought to cut costs and increase the efficiency and profitability of its refineries and huge chain of stations.

Analysts said they expected Noto to move faster to shed operations where Mobil has a weak market share, and he may keep a tighter hold on the purse strings when financing new projects.

After graduating with a degree in physics from Notre Dame in 1959, Noto got an MBA at Cornell University in 1962.

He worked as summer intern for Mobil that year and then was hired as a member of its regional planning analysis group.

Four years later Noto went to Italy to work for Mobil Oil Italiana.

Noble earnings fall, reserves climb

ARDMORE, Okla. — Noble Affiliates Inc. has reported net income of $12,625,000 or 26 cents per share in 1993 on revenues of $286,583,000.

This compares with 1992 net income of $41,240,000 or 93 cents per share on revenues of $303,782,000, which included an $18.4 million after-tax gain from the sale of the company's interest in Natural Gas Clearinghouse.

For the 1993 fourth quarter, the company had a loss of $130,000 or 1 cent per share, which included previously announced pretax writeoffs and adjustments of $11.7 million. In 1992's fourth quarter, Noble reported net income of $8,083,000 or 18 cents per share.

Revenues for the fourth quarter, 1993, were $86,056,000, a 12 percent increase over the previous year's fourth quarter revenues of $76,814,000.

Robert Kelley, Noble's president and chief executive officer, noted that 1993 was a year in which, by virtue of two major acquisitions, the company increased its proved reserves of oil and gas by 54 percent and 85 percent, respectively, to the highest levels in the company's history. The acquisitions contributed to the sharp increases in 1993's oil and gas production, said Kelley, who noted that the company anticipates further production gains would be forthcoming in 1994.

Average oil production during 1993 averaged a record 19,496 barrels per day, 9 percent above the previous high of 17,826 barrels per day in 1992. However, the price received by the company for its oil in 1993 averaged $15.91 a barrel, down 15 percent from the average of $18.68 a barrel in the prior year.

During the 1993 fourth quarter, oil production averaged 22,689 barrels a day, compared with 17,677 barrels a day in the same period of 1992. But the average oil price received by Noble in the final three months of 1993 fell 31 percent to $13,24 a barrel from the 1992 fourth quarter average of $19.23 per barrel.

Average gas production in 1993 reached a new high of 211.1 million cubic feet per day, compared with an average of 204.6 million cubic feet per day in 1992. The average gas price received by the company in 1993 was $2.10 per thousand cubic feet, up 16 percent from the average $1.81 per thousand cubic feet received in the prior year.

During the 1993 fourth quarter, gas production averaged 271.6 million cubic feet per day, a 27 percent increase over the daily average of 213.1 million cubic feet in the same quarter of 1992. Gas prices rose slightly to an average of $2.21 per thousand cubic feet in the 1993 fourth quarter, compared with the average price of $2.18 per thousand cubic feet in the final quarter of 1992.

Moody's raises Mitchell debt rating

THE WOODLANDS — Moody's Investors Service has upgraded the senior unsecured debt rating of Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. to Baa3 from Ba1.

The upgrade to an investment grade rating is based on the enhanced structural status of the rated debt, improved covenant protection, and the stronger fundamentals of the company's real estate operations.

Also changed were the preliminary ratings for the company's shelf registrations to (P) Baa3 from (P) Ba1 for senior unsecured, and to (P) Ba2 from (P) Ba3 for subordinated debt.

The company is involved in two unrelated businesses, energy and real estate. Since the rated debt is issued by the holding company rather than the energy subsidiary, which is the main source of cash to support the bonds, there has been some concern about a spin-off.

However, Mitchell has stated that it will implement "enhanced bondholder protection provisions regarding the company's ability to dividend or distribute its energy assets, without restricting the distribution of its real estate assets."

Since the bonds rated by Moody's are obligations of the holding company, they are effectively subordinated to the debt of the operating subsidiaries. Consequently the implied rating of the energy subsidiary is higher than the rating of the parent. Moody's anticipates that the percentage of parent company debt relative to subsidiary debt will continue to increase. As a result, this effective subordination issue will become less important over time.

An equity issue in 1993 was used to buy out partnership interests and retire off-balance sheet debt. Bringing this equity investment in oil and gas reserves onto the balance sheet has increased cash flow available to service the company's debt. Eliminating this off-balance sheet debt improves the structural standing of bondholders, since they will no longer be subordinated to the project finance creditors.

The economic viability of The Woodlands, a master-planned community in the Houston area, has improved significantly in recent years. The community has reached a critical mass, and consequently its economic viability appears reasonably assured. The completion of a large mall currently under construction is expected to further enhance its economic fundamentals. Currently, the real estate operation is generating sufficient cash flow to cover its cash interest expenses.

R & R ELECTRONIC SUPPLY in Odessa is helping customers comply with the latest environmental legislation.

As of January 1, 1994, no freon based products can be manufactured. An oilfield cleaning product called Blue Shower, used for cleaning everything from electronics and wirelines to paraffin and grease, can no longer be made. In its place, R & R Electronics is selling a new product called OZ800. It is manufactured by North American Phillips (formerly Norelco) and is labeled environmentally safe and free of CFCs and Tri-compounds.

Otis Brasfield, co-manager at R & R said although it dries quickly like Blue Shower, it leaves a very fine silicon powder residue, which in some cases can help guard against corrosion.

He said R & R is also moving into the computer and cable accessory line. The company will supply connections and inverters used in data communications management, i.e. remote transfer of well data from the wellhead to the office.

ANCHOR BOLT & SUPPLY COMPANY in Odessa is carrying a new line of protective coatings from Ameron Company.

The full line of high performance coatings and surfacers are used for general oilfield maintenance, to protect pipe, valves, and all oil production equipment including the interior and exterior of tanks, among other uses. David Ward at Anchor said the coatings range from high performance epoxies to polyurethanes, which can withstand ultraviolet rays and reduce color fading.

He said the Ameron coatings are well known in the offshore oil industry for their resistance to salt water. The coatings also withstand splash and spillage of crude products, acids and alkalines, and have been used in epoxyurethane systems to seal concrete.

Ward said Anchor designs coating systems which vary according to use. A sample system might include an inorganic zinc coating with an epoxy intermediate coat followed by a polyurethan for maximum resistance. Anchor is selling the coatings to local manufacturers who ship oilfield equipment and processing plant components overseas.

Kerr-McGee unit to market natural gas

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Kerr-McGee Corp. has formed a wholly owned subsidiary to take over the marketing of the company's natural gas, the company announced.

Kerr-McGee Natural Gas Inc. will begin the marketing March 1, said L.V. "Bud" McGuire, the subsidiary's president and a vice president of the parent company.

J.G. "Gil" Walker is vice president of the new organization. He will be in charge of the daily operations.

The natural gas has previously been marketed within the company. The new subsidiary provides a different organization.

"The fast pace and volatility of the natural gas industry demand flexibility and innovation in the relationship between producer and consumer," Walker said. "Our new organization is well equipped to handle business on an individual, customized basis."

The company produces almost 300 million cubic feet of natural gas per day from offshore blocks in the Gulf of Mexico and from fields in the United States and Canada.

Amerada Hess closing Tulsa operations

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Amerada Hess says it will close operations this summer in Tulsa, where it employs 450 people. Some will be transferred to Houston.

Amerada Hess, a Houston-based energy and computer systems company, will consolidate its Tulsa and Houston offices because of the effect of low oil prices on earnings, said Carl Tursi, vice president of investor relations.

"We will be closing the Tulsa office in July," Tursi said. "We are making this move because of what oil prices have done in recent weeks. We felt the need to consolidate, reduce redundancies within the company and take these cost-cutting moves."

The company's Tulsa and Houston offices will move to One Allen Center in Houston, where it has leased 325,000 square feet for the next 17 years.

Amerada Hess' onshore exploration and production, natural gas marketing and computer information systems divisions were run from Tulsa.

Tursi said employees will be offered early retirement or a transfer to Houston. He declined to say how many may be laid off.

Amerada Hess, which had revenues of $5.9 billion last year, ranks 91st on the Fortune magazine list of 500 largest companies in the country.

GHK unit spuds wells in Colombia

OKLAHOMA CITY — A subsidiary of the GHK Co., GHK Company Colombia, has spud the first of two 6,000 to 7,000 ft. exploratory tests to be drilled in the first quarter of 1994 on a 192,000 acre contract area.

The wells will test a large undrilled anticlinal structure in the Upper Magdelena Basin, one of Colombia's largest oil producing provinces. The structure, located approximately 60 miles northwest of Bogota, is the approximate size of the Oklahoma City field and has the potential for a large volume of natural gas and over 100 million barrels of recoverable oil.

Other U.S. participants include Breene M. Kerr, Oklahoma City-based Red Eagle Resources Corp., Tower Colombia Corp. and Bill D. Saxon.

The GHK Co., an Oklahoma City-based firm headed by Robert A. Hefner III, is also actively pursuing the acquisition of natural gas producing properties in the United States, exploratory and development drilling in the Arkoma and Anadarko Basins and power generation projects in China.

Texoil to test Bayou Lafourche prospect

Texoil Inc., a Houston-based oil and gas company, paid $311,428 to join with Texas Meridian Resource Corp. in the drilling of an exploratory well to test the Bayou Lafourche prospect in Lafourche Parish, La.

The prospect is the first in a group of 14 South Louisiana exploration prospects that were initially developed by Texoil's geological staff and subsequently sold to Texas Meridian in December 1992, according to a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Under an agreement between Texoil and Texas Meridian, Texoil can receive an overriding royalty interest as well as acquire up to a 10 percent working interest in the prospect if the test is successful.

Exxon, Nalco form joint venture

Associated Press

Exxon Chemical Co. and Nalco Chemical Co. said Thursday they have agreed to form a worldwide energy chemicals joint venture.

The joint venture will consist of Nalco's U.S. petroleum chemicals division, certain petroleum chemicals segments of its international operations, and Exxon Chemical's worldwide energy chemicals business.

Energy chemicals are used in oil and gas exploration, production, distribution and refining.

The new company, Nalco-Exxon Energy Chemicals, is expected to begin operations by mid-1994, pending regulatory approvals.

Nalco, based in Naperville, Ill., is a worldwide producer of specialty water, waste and process treatment chemicals with 1993 sales of $1.4 billion. Exxon Chemical is a subsidiary of Irving, Texas-based Exxon Corp.

Russian party ends for Beta

N.Y. Times News Service

It's great to have a very profitable business. But what do you do when it vanishes?

If the company is Beta Well Services, a Canadian company traded on the American Stock Exchange, you bury that fact as deep as you can in your annual report, which you delay issuing for as long as you can.

At least that's what it looks like. Beta, which became a hot stock last year on the strength of Russian oilfield service operations, appears to be losing all those revenues. Whether it can replace them or not is, at best, highly questionable.

To be sure, it was nice while it lasted. The company's annual report, belatedly filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission last week, showed profits of $11.3 million, or $1.73 a share, for the year ended Sept. 30. Not bad for a stock that ended the week at $14.50.

The report, which was due on Dec. 31, shows that its Canadian operations lost money, as they have for years. But its Russian operations more than made up for the loss.

Beta Well had 10 rigs operating in Russia, at favorable leasing rates, servicing Russian oil wells. But on Sept. 2, it was forced to sell four of those rigs, at a loss, because of an option agreement.

It evidently did not disclose that fact until last week, when it was included in the annual report. It said two more rigs might be similarly purchased.

As for the four remaining rigs, it said all the work needed to be done by those rigs would be completed within 90 days. After that, it said, it would look for other work in Eastern Europe, or sell the rigs.

The most eloquent testimony of all that the Russian party is over for Beta Well came deep in the annual report, showing that people with intimate knowledge of the situation think the foreign operations have fallen sharply in value.

Beta Well had operated all its Russian operations through a subsidiary, BWS Service Ltd., of which it owned 75 percent. The remaining quarter was owned by another company, Calgary Overseas Development Co. Calgary Overseas' share of the profits last year came to $2.8 million.

Evidently, Calgary Overseas does not expect that level of profits to continue. The annual report states that on Nov. 25 — more than six weeks before it was disclosed — Beta Well bought the 25 percent stake back from Calgary Overseas.

The price: $178,000 in cash plus securities that Beta Well valued at $449,000. That comes to a total price of $627,000, putting the overall value of the international operations at about $2.5 million.

Why did the company wait so long to disclose the facts about that transaction? In a telephone interview, William Gordica, the president of the company, first dismissed the transaction as relating to "not a significant portion of our business," then amended that to say that the papers related to the Nov. 25 sale only became available last week.

With 8.26 million shares outstanding, the current market value of Beta Well stock is about $120 million. Since the company also has $4.3 million in long-term debt, that implies a big value for the Canadian operations, which last year had revenues of about $10 million and assets valued on the company's books at about $17 million.

But bulls on the stock have hope. On Jan. 5, Beta Well announced a tentative deal to acquire two companies with joint ventures in the former Soviet Union, one in the Komi area of Russia and one in Kazakhsatan. The price: two million shares of Beta Well and half the profits from the joint ventures, up to a maximum of $10 million.

Will the sellers go through with the deal when they discover how little Beta Well has in the way of operations other than the new joint ventures? Stay tuned.

BDM to acquire part of H+GCL

McLEAN, Va. — BDM International Inc. has agreed to acquire the environmental services assets and certain ongoing businesses of H+GCL.

The new company will operate as a wholly-owned BDM subsidiary, according to BDM President and Chief Executive Officer Philip A. Odeen.

BDM is acquiring the assets of a firm formerly known as Geoscience Consultants Ltd. before it merged with Hygienetics to form H+GCL in 1991. The Hygienetics portion of the company is not involved in the acquisition, Odeen explained. The acquisition is expected to be concluded in February.

The GCL environmental services business includes assets and contract activities relating to environmental regulatory compliance and permitting, environmental and geotechnical engineering, underground storage tank management, soil and ground water investigations and remediations, and property transfer audit services.

"We view this as an exceptionally 'good fit' between companies expanding their environmental services and capabilities to meet burgeoning market requirements," Odeen said. "BDM's own environmentally-related business has grown dramatically, and we look forward to this new relationship to strengthen BDM still further in the environmental area."

Odeen said that Alberto A. Gutierrez, who has been serving as president of the new subsidiary, Gutierrez noted that fiscal year 1994 revenue for the GCL portion of the business is expected to be approximately $6.9 million. The overwhelming majority of GCL's work is for commercial and industrial firms, although GCL does provide services to federal and other governmental agencies and entities.

GCL has a total of 67 employees located at the company's corporate headquarters in Albuquerque and at the company's East Coast regional office in Lanham, Maryland.

GDM International Inc. is headquartered in McLean, Va. The company provides scientific, engineering, technical and other expert services to public and private sector clients in national defense, transportation, communications, energy, environment, logistics, space, information systems, advanced technology, manufacturing technology, systems integration, product distribution, operations and maintenance, and public policy. The company has approximately 6,000 employees and operates in more than 60 locations worldwide.

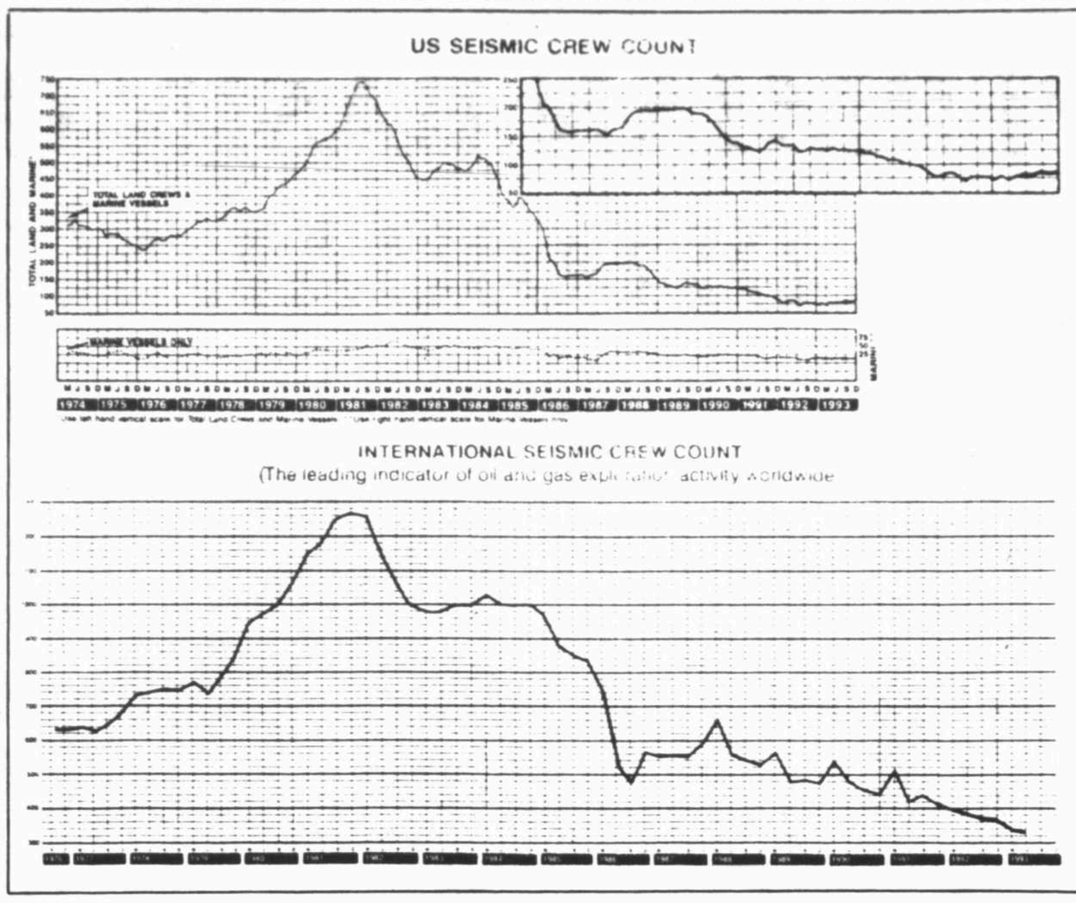
Environmental mitigation topic for WTGS

The West Texas Geological Society will meet Tuesday at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Guest speaker Greg C. Waltersheid of CURA Inc.'s Midland office will speak on "Environmental Mitigation in the Oil and Gas Industry."

The oil and gas industry,like many others, is being exposed to increasing environmental regulation, Waltersheid noted. In these times of depressed oil prices, it becomes extremely crucial for companies to be cognizant of their environmental compliance and exposure issues. Too, mitigation of environmental problems that do occur is an important step in presenting a strong environmental concern to the regulatory bodies and the public, he added.

Cost is $7 per person and reservations can be made by calling 683-1573.



Seismic activity

The Society of Exploration Geophysicists reports that in December the number of seismic land crews and marine vessels working in the U.S. and its waters rose for the second consecutive month. The land crew total rose by one to 66 and the number of marine crews rose by one to 18 for a total of 84 crews. The number of worldwise seismic oil and gas exploration crews on and offshore fell in June 1993. The land crew total fell six to 252 and the marine vessel total fell two for a net decrease of eight crews, bringing the total to 332 crews and vessels active around the world.

BRIEFS

Union Texas Petroleum to explore in Alaska

Union Texas Petroleum Holdings Inc. said Wednesday it has signed an agreement with Cook Inlet Region Inc. to explore for oil and gas in south central Alaska.

Under the agreement, Houston-based Union Texas will head a three-year exploration program of more than 340,000 acres on the Kenai peninsula, about 50 miles southwest of Anchorage.

The deal gives Union Texas the option to acquire leases from Cook Inlet Region to develop oil and gas discoveries on the parcel. Cook Inlet Region will have the right to participate in exploratory drilling and development programs.

Cross Timbers raises stake in oil unit

Cross Timbers Oil Co. of Fort Worth, Texas, increased its working interest in what the company calls "its most important oil property" to 91.5 percent for $28.4 million.

The company purchased a 29.4 percent working interest in the property, called Prentice Northeast Unit, from Amoco Corp. on Jan. 14, and a 13.2 percent working interest from a private company in Oct. of 1993, according to a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The acquisition represents estimated proved reserves of 4.1 million barrels of crude oil and 1.1 billion cubic feet of natural gas.

The unit, located near Lubbock, Texas, is operated by Cross Timbers, and currently produces 3,700 barrels of oil and 1.3 million cubic feet of natural gas per day.

The settlement agreement also provides for a new four-year agreement enabling Delhi to supply gas to SWEPCO's Wilkes and Lone Star power plants in East Texas at market sensitive prices. SAFE MATCH

HEAT UP SAFETY TO FIGHT FIRES

Home safety is always an important issue, and that's why this year the Sleep Products Safety Council has named February as Sleep Safety Month.

According to statistics supplied by Midland Fire Marshal Jerry Petree of the Midland Fire Department, about 5,500 people die each year in fires, and another 30,000 more are injured (nation-wide). "Of those (who die), about half are children and the elderly," he added.

Statistics from the Sleep Products Safety Council show that each year 1,200 children die in residential fires and another 12,000 are injured. "Tragically, children playing with fire are responsible for setting 25 percent of the fires that claim children's lives. Many times, these fires start in a bedroom — a hidden place where kids think they won't be caught playing with fire."

"Fires kill more Americans each year than all natural emergencies combined," Petree said. "The United States has one of the highest fire death rates per capita in the whole world. It's the third leading cause of accidental death in the country."

AND OF ALL those fire deaths, 70 percent of them occur in homes.

"Most house fires where fatalities are involved occur between midnight and 6 in the morning," Petree added, which means smoke detectors are vitally important for fire safety.

And the bedroom is the second most-common location where home fires start. (In order, home fires commonly start in the kitchen, bedroom, living room/den, chimney, laundry area, heating area, garage, bathroom, hallway and closet.)

Smoke detectors are designed to awaken people in time to get out of a burning building.

"I can't over-emphasize (the importance of smoke detectors)," Petree said. "You can do all this fire prevention, but every home should have at least one smoke detector, and you should make sure you maintain it and keep it checked."

CARELESS SMOKING is the Number One cause of home fires that lead to deaths, Petree said. "If there is a smoker in the house, be sure to use the proper type of ashtray and be careful in your smoking habits."

The second-largest cause of residential fires, he said, is arson.

Heating — whether the units are faulty or misused — is the third-largest cause of home fires. "Have the unit checked out," Petree said. "Use UL approved space heaters and don't put them within three feet of any combustible material" such as curtains or bedding.

Any electrical heating source can be the cause of a fire. Electric blankets and heating pads should never be left on and wadded up, since that can start a fire. Petree advised to be sure electric blankets and heating pads are left flat and turned off when not in use.

Other electrical sources can cause fires if misused. "Don't trap cords against the wall where heat can build up," Petree said. "Don't run them across the room where people can walk on them; don't use excess electric cords because they can overheat and start a fire. Don't run cords under the carpet or set furniture on them."

PARENTS ALSO should practice EDITH — that stands for Exit Drills In The Home, he said. "Parents should tell children two ways out (in the event of a home fire). HAVE YOU HEARD?

'MCT Follies' is season opener

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

The house was packed at the Yucca Theatre last weekend when ACT IX, the women's auxiliary of Midland Community Theatre, presented "The MCT Follies," a party to kick off the theatre's 1994 membership season. It opens on Feb. 11 with the musical, "The Secret Garden."

McKnight-Harrison

The festive evening featured a two-hour stage show of music, dance and comedy from past MCT hits.

Among the performers were former Midlander Bobby Marshall of Dallas, who sang selections from the musicals, "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," and "Les Miserables,"and Sam Zachery and Carlos Zachery, who performed numbers from "Big River" in memory of their brother, James Zachery, who starred in the MCT musical in 1992.

The Follies was co-produced by NationsBank. Delicious hors d'oeuvres were provided compliments of the Midland Hilton.

Among those in the crowd was Buddy Anguish, who was celebrating his 65th birthday with his wife, Nancy, and a party of 24. Others in the audience that evening included Janie and Steve Hofer, Rebecca and Herb Williamson, Jamie and Mark Owen, Carolyn and Larry Seright, Alathea and Jim Blischke, Janet and Joe Overton and former Midlander John Halpert of Dallas.

"Masterpeace" from Lubbock provided music for dancing after the show.

Karen (Mrs. Dean) Rucker is president of ACT IX, and Shari (Mrs. Roy) Kendrick, chairman of the Follies.

And in closing, we want to compliment Rene Chambers, director of the event, for a well-orchestrated show.

ALTHOUGH THE DAY was overcast and cold, the atmosphere inside Midland Country Club was warm and cheery when members of the Ladies Association and their guests were treated to a spring fashion preview recently.

Jean Anderson, owner of Jean's Selections in Breckenridge, brought a lovely selection of dresses, sportswear, separates and suits and some of her best friends as her models for what was truly a delightful show. In addition, well-known local models, Bonnie (Mrs. Stanley) Beard, Pam (Mrs. Gary) Feist and Dawn (Mrs. Don) Davis joined the out-of-towners in showing the lastest trends in clothing and accessories.

Mrs. Anderson stated that popular colors for spring will be coral, turquoise, green and yellow and that there will be "lots of mix and match." She predicts that handbags will be smaller but jewelry larger, or in her words, "clunky." Nailheads and appliques will adorn jackets in place of glitter.

Mrs. Anderson further says the nautical and Safari looks will be good, and she assured the audience that pants are definitely "in" this coming season.

Prior to the program, the large crowd enjoyed a social hour and a luncheon featuring Chicken Lasagna and Italian Creme Cake. Hostesses were Tommie (Mrs. Dean) Strack, Jan (Mrs. Robert) Hover and Wyoma (Mrs. G.F.) Whitlow.

Hyacinths in various colors on the tables hinted that spring is just around the corner.

Among those spotted in the crowd were Suzanne Martin, Linda (Mrs. Kirby) Tarry, Janet (Mrs. Corby) Considine, Rebecca (Mrs. Michael) Talley, Carolyn (Mrs. Robert) Winkler, Jeanette (Mrs. William) Probandt and Jess Ann Thomason.

WORD HAS BEEN RECEIVED here of three new fraternity pledges at Texas Tech University.

They are Darren Grubb, son of Cynthia and Dennis Grubb, Phi Delta Theta and newly elected president of his pledge class; Ben Edwards, son of Frances Edwards Younger and David B. Edwards, Farm House, and Wes Faris, son of Kathy Faris, Sigma Phi Epsilon.

MEZZO-SOPRANO Luretta Bybee returned to her hometown under the auspices of Midland Opera Theater and presented a concert Tuesday evening in the Lee High School auditorium. She also was guest soloist at last Sunday morning's services at First United Methodist Church. Her grandfather, the late Dr. Howard Hollowell, was senior pastor there during the mid-Forties to early Fifties, and Hollowell United Methodist Church is named for him. Her grandmother, Mrs. Sally Hollowell, now lives in Abilene.

The daughter of Midlanders Helen and Cecil Bybee, Luretta resides with her husband, opera singer Greer Grimsley, and two-year-old daughter, Emma, in Morristown, Pa.

Luretta, who spoke on Monday with music and drama classes at Lee High, last performed in Midland with the LHS Alumni Choir in October. She and her husband are scheduled to leave shortly for Tel Aviv to perform in an opera production.

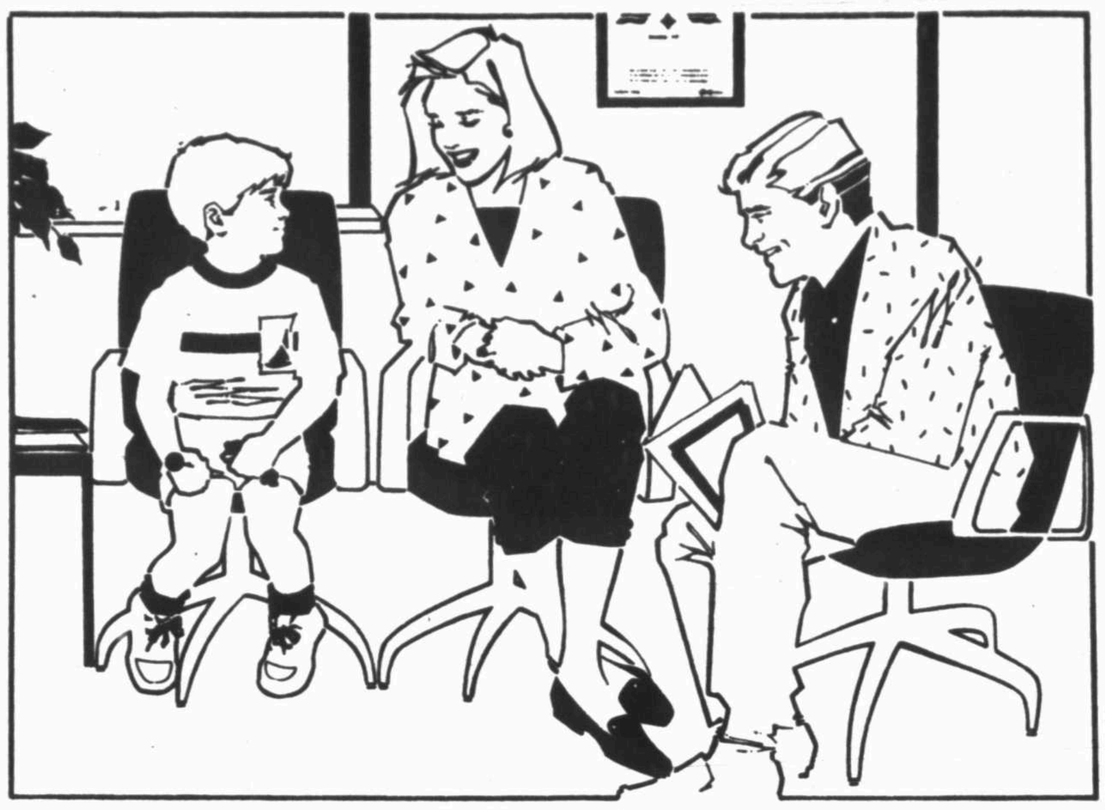
Select child's preschool carefully

Associated Press



Thirty years ago, preschool was considered a nice little extra for kids. But now, research shows that a good program can set the stage for a successful school career.

If you have a preschool-age youngster, Better Homes and Gardens magazine offers advice that will help you choose the best program for your child.

"We used to think that nursery school was just a time of social interaction with other children," says Nancy Balaban, director of the Infant and Parent Development Program at the Bank Street Graduate School of Education. "We now know that preschool is a great period of learning."

For preschoolers, learning means much more than ABCs and 123s. In fact, reading and writing should not be formally taught in preschool. Rather, 3- and 4-year-olds should spend their schooltime exploring the world.

Before deciding on a preschool for your child, consider these suggestions.

If full-time child care is in the cards for your kids, you can follow much the same advice. You'll find that the best child care centers for preschool-age children make no distinction between when school ends and child care begins.

"Parents need a preschool that reinforces the ideas they're trying to promote at home," Balaban says. Do you want a school with strict rules or one that is more relaxed? Is a church- or synagogue-connected school important to you?

CONSIDER YOUR child's temperament too, suggests child psychologist Dr. Norma Doft, a professor at New York University Medical Center. Is your youngster a self-starter, or one who needs a push to get going? Do you have a child who has a long attention span or one who's easily distracted? You should seek a school that matches your child's disposition.

"Don't expect all children to do the same thing at the same time," says Dr. Barbara Willer, public affairs director for the National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC). "Look for small groups and a recognition that there are different ability levels."

The NAEYC's Accreditation Criteria encourage schools to have their written philosophy of curriculum and goals available for parents to see.

But to tell what's really being taught, you need to observe while school is in full swing, advises Ethel Titnich, child development specialist with the University of Pittsburgh's Child Development Office.

"Watch how the teachers interact with students during free play," she suggests. "How much control do children have over their projects? Is the routine natural and smooth? Is it reasonable for children this age or is the staff expecting too much of young children?"

Looking around the classroom, you should see a rich literary environment — plenty of books. But preschoolers should not be learning to read in a formal way.

"We know that children learn through their senses," Balaban says. "Experience with touch, smell and hearing gives them a chance to stretch their intellects. They need to be read to. They should have lots of opportunities to make up stories and to use materials like paint, clay and blocks, which form the foundation for reading and writing."

CHILDREN ALSO learn by moving around, and the great outdoors is the best place for that. Kids should get outside every day, according to the NAEYC. It gives them a chance to exercise by doing what comes naturally — running around.

The NAEYC recommends that at least one staff member in the preschool hold a degree in early childhood education. But even a well-qualified instructor could be wrong for your child. On your classroom visits, take note of the teachers' interactions with children.

"Are they really responding and listening to the kids?" asks Nancy Peddle, director of Harkness House for Children, a preschool in Winnetka, Ill. "Are they firm but gentle? Are they giving a crying child attention? Do they look as if they love kids and really love what they're doing? Are they kneeling down on the kid's level? If it's natural, you can tell," Peddle says "A good teacher looks like she could do it forever."

Youngsters need attention and supervision, so the ratio of adults to children is important. The NAEYC recommends one adult per six 2-year-olds (with a maximum group size of 12), and one adult per 10 3- or 4-year-olds (maximum group size of 20).

Is there enough space? The NAEYC criteria recommend a minimum of 35 square feet of usable playroom floor space indoors per child and a minimum of 75 square feet of play space outdoors.

ONE WAY that preschoolers learn is by making choices, so a quality preschool provides a variety of educational materials. A staple of any preschool, blocks are also a child's first lesson in mathematics and spatial relations. Also look for a play kitchen and dress-up and dramatic play areas.

For more information, write the NAEYC for the brochure, "How to Choose a Good Early Childhood Program."

Council offers fire prevention, safety tips

The Sleep Products Safety Council recommends the following steps to fire prevention and safety:

■ Store matches and lighters out the children's reach or in a locked cabinet. Safety locks are inexpensive, easy to install and available at hardware stores. When shopping for lighters, choose the child-resistant models now available.

■ Always dress children in fire-retardant sleepwear. Do not dress them for sleep in loose-fitting, 100 percent cotton garments, such as over-sized T-shirts.

■ Install smoke detectors on every floor of the house — near bedrooms, away from air vents. Familiarize kids with the sound of the alarm. Test the alarm monthly, and clean the unit and replace batteries at least once a year.

■ Teach children not to hide if a fire starts, but to call for help.

■ Teach children basic fire safety rules:

— Do not fight the fire

— Stay low in the smoke

— Get out quickly and don't go back in

— Stop, drop and roll if clothing catches fire

— Call the fire department from a neighbor's home

■ Plan an escape route out of every room and a place to meet outside.

■ Replace mattresses made before the 1973 Federal Mattress Flammability Standard.

For more information about children and sleep safety, write for a copy of the "Parent/Child Sleep Guide" booklet by sending $1 to Sleep Products Safety Council, P.O. Box 275, Burtonsville, Md. 20866.

burning building, he warned. "Get out and stay out."

Another important fire safety tool children should learn is "Stop, Drop and Roll," Petree said, which is the best way to put out clothing fires.

The leading causes of fire deaths, he said, are smoking, heating appliances, arson, electrical, children playing with matches, cooking and then all other causes.

"There are people out there dying from fires." Petree said. "It doesn't hurt to emphasize safety. Any fire safety we want to do is helping these children" and possibly preventing fire deaths.

Texas schoolchildren develop state pride at very young age

By Jane P. Marshall
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — State pride — some have other names for it — starts early in Texas. Kindergarteners build models of the Alamo, draw bluebonnets and memorize the height of the San Jacinto Monument (570 feet).

When asked what Columbus discovered in 1492, one Houston first-grader answered confidently, "Texas."

Pride and a strong sense of state history are good for business at Hendrick-Long Publishing. They keep the small Dallas book publisher busy.

Currently Joanne and Jim Long offer more than 80 titles, all for kids and all about Texas.

The company started in 1969, publishing Texas history books and other types of trade publications. Later it narrowed its focus to books on Texas and the Southwest, for home and school. Teachers needed more for young students on Texas history, said Joanne Long.

EACH YEAR the Longs see about 400 manuscripts and publish eight. Some come from agents and hopeful authors, others from writers such as Ruby C. Tolliver and Jeanne Williams, whose works they publish often.

Titles coming out this spring include "New Medicine" ($8.95 softcover, ages 12 up) by Williams, a fictional story about a young Comanche named Walker who must adjust to life at Fort Sill, Okla., after a youth spent on the open plains; "The Lone Star State Divided: Texans and the Civil War" ($14.95, ages 12 up) by retired Austin teacher Merle Durham; and "Hats Are for Watering Horses (Why the Cowboy Dressed That Way)" by Houstonian Mary Blount Christian ($14.95).

The Longs keep acquainted with children's tastes via their grandkids, ages 10, 8 and 6. But mostly they rely on teachers who tell them what kinds of books they need and their students like.

Hendrick-Long publishes 3,000 to 5,000 copies of each book. Most of their authors have to keep their day jobs, Joanne Long said.

One of the company's most popular books is "Dinosaur Days in Texas" ($14.95, ages 8 up), a guide for dino-lovers of whatever age.

ITS PAGES show 16 species found swimming, clomping or flying around the state during the Cretaceous, Jurassic and Triassic periods of 225 million to 65 million years ago. Each of the 22 major finds in Texas is placed on a state map, illustrated and explained. The oldest species were found in the Panhandle — the 8-foot-long Coelophysis and the smaller Technosaurus.

"Miss Ima and the Hogg Family" ($8.95 softcover, ages 6 up) by Gwen Cone Neeley is the press's only Houston book; it was published last year. In charming storytelling fashion, it tells about powerful Gov. Jim Hogg and the daughter of whom he was so proud.

She grew up to be called the first lady of Texas because of her contributions in the fields of art, music and historic preservation. It also explains that he named her after a character in an epic poem written by his dead brother, Thomas, about the Civil War. She did not have a sister named Ura.

Author Neeley is a lively story herself. She's a retired schoolteacher of 85 who began the book 35 years ago. It's her first.

IN "BOOMER'S Kids" ($14.95, ages 12 up) by Tolliver, Luke Brown moves his family to Beaumont after the Lucas Gusher on Spindletop Hill comes in. Luke is a driller who follows the oil booms.

But this move is too much for Ellie, 14, and Andy, 15. They are tired of moving, tired of helping their mother make one more shanty into a home, tired of losing friends and being behind in schoolwork. Bitterly they adjust to a new life in Gladys City, four miles from Beaumont, the newest oil-boom town in 1901.

Then Luke gets a better offer in Louisiana. Full of anger and tears, his family declares it won't be uprooted again. But Ellie and Andy learn there are worse things than being boomer kids. Two other popular books are: "Shipwrecked on Padre Island" ($14.95, ages 9 up) by Isabel R. Marvin, a story centered on 13-year-old Catalina and her father, who are shipwrecked in a 1554 storm.

"Trails of Tears" ($15.95, ages 2 up) by Williams tells stories of Comanche, Cheyenne, Apache, Navajo and Cherokee who suffered the seizure of their lands and forced migrations.

The Hendrick-Long books, available at children's bookstores, aren't full of fancy color and slick paper.

BUT THEY'RE often available in both hard- and softcover, and they're serviceable, jammed with information and easy to follow. Even some of the fiction books offer maps and bibliographies. These books spin yarns and personalize history for eager young minds. They are all about Texas.

Roses: Everyone's favorite flower

By Deborah A. Benge

Benge

The rose is not only the favored flower of most people, it is also our nation's chosen flower. The genus Rosa covers numerous species, including some native roses. The major appeal of roses is in the color and beauty of the blossoms. Some bloom almost year round, while others provide massive displays for several weeks.

There has been considerable controversy over the landscape value of roses. Actually, there are many that lend themselves to be used as vines, masses, hedges or even specimen use. Hybrid tea roses currently available are best grown in well-prepared beds where they receive at least a half-day of sunlight and good air circulation. Hybrid tea roses may require occasional sprays for the prevention and control of black spot and powdery mildew, although this is not a big problem for us in West Texas.

Garden roses require very little cold to satisfy their dormancy requirements; therefore it is possible to successfully grow roses even in our mild winter area. They are best transplanted during winter from late December through February. Many garden centers order bare-root plants for delivery in December and January. Immediately upon arrival, these plants are potted in containers. This method allows the planting season to be extended later into the spring. Most rosarians like to set out new plants during January and February so that the root systems can be well established before hot weather arrives.

Roses are classified according to growth and flowering characteristics. A brief description of the most common classifications should be helpful in planning their use in the landscape.

HYBRID TEAS

Because of their almost continuous flowering habit, hybrid teas are often called monthly or everblooming roses. They are the result of crossing two old-fashioned rose classes, the hybrid perpetual and the tea rose from China, which gave them the repeat blooming trait. In general, the buds are long and pointed and are borne one per stem. Hybrid teas are the most common class sold today, but are generally grown for cut flowers rather than as landscape plants.

FLORIBUNDAS

The floribundas originated from crossing the hybrid tea with polyantha roses. Plants are vigorous with large masses of well-shaped flowers that resemble miniature hybrid teas. With proper care floribundas can provide an almost continuous source of landscape color. They are most effective in mass displays of the same variety. Floribunda roses are usually more compact in growth form than hybrid teas.

POLYANTHAS

Polyanthas produce small flowers in large clusters and are primarily used for mass plantings or borders. Probably the most popular variety available in the class is "Cecile Brunner," which is often called the "Sweetheart Rose" and is available in both climbing and bush form. Very few polyanthas are on the market today because floribundas seem to have more appeal and are more widely available.

GRANDIFLORAS

This is a relatively new classification which resulted from crosses between tea and floribunda varieties. Grandifloras are usually very vigorous plants. "Queen Elizabeth" is probably the most popular rose in this class.

CLIMBING OR PILLAR ROSES

Many of the popular varieties of the classes previously described have climbing forms. There are, however, some varieties considered natural climbers. These include "Blaze," "New Dawn" and "Lady Banks." Climbers are usually very vigorous and require different pruning practices from those of bush types. Most climbers should be pruned after they bloom in the spring, since most of them flower primarily on last year's wood. Some climbers such as "Lady Banks" tend to be highly disease-resistant and are very useful as landscape plants.

OLD GARDEN ROSES

This is really more of a generalized grouping rather than a class of roses. Included are China, Hybrid Perpetual, Tea, Moss, Damas, Bourbon and Noisette roses. Recent years have seen considerable interest in many of these plants. Old rose enthusiasts quickly point to the superior fragrance, hardiness, growth habit and disease resistance of some of the old varieties that may have been lost or weakened in the hybridization process of newer varieties.

Whatever the reason, there is a definite emerging interest in old roses in Texas as well as the nation. Catalogs from nurseries specializing in old roses have become popular references and sources of information for the older varieties.

MINIATURE ROSES

Most of these plants grow 16 to 36 inches in height. They are natural (genetic) dwarfs and have become popular in recent years. Unlike most other rose classes, miniatures are valuable for mass landscape plantings or container culture. Their growth requirements are similar to those of other roses, and most varieties need to be sprayed regularly to control black spot and spider mites.

Hundreds of varieties are available, with new ones appearing on a regular basis. A major reason for the popularity of miniature roses is their ease of propagation. Cuttings can be taken during the cooler months, and older plants can usually be divided. Most miniatures bloom regularly and profusely.

This guide will hopefully give you an idea of what type of roses you'll want in your landscape. Roses are very specific in their requirements and so all steps should be taken to meet these needs from the beginning.

Next week we will take a look at handling, planting and caring for roses — without question very important steps.

Today's weddings like fairy tales

By Patricia Rodriguez
N.Y. Times New Service

In the rebellious '60s and '70s, an "unusual" wedding was likely to have taken place in a cow pasture, with the barefoot bride and groom in Levis and T-shirts, reciting vows they wrote themselves. Guests and minister optional.

If, of course, in that anti-establishment time, they chose to marry at all.

But now it's the '90s, and not only is marriage back in fashion, but today's unique wedding is more likely to be straight out of a fairy tale.

Couples get married in formal dress in a balloon gondola at sunrise. They wed in full Renaissance costume in front of a fake castle, complete with moat. They re-create heaven on Earth, replete with gold-and-white dresses, tuxes and flowers, and a bride who makes her entrance through a cloud.

Publicity-seekers? Matched sets of oddballs who managed to find each other? Not at all, say bridal consultants. Such nontraditional weddings are usually engineered by a couple seeking something memorable, romantic and unique to their relationship — and they're usually also quite traditional.

"They're not doing something strange for strange's sake," says Millie Martini Bratten, executive editor of Bride's magazine. "What they're doing is personalizing their wedding and creating a wedding that reflects their lifestyle and interests."

OVER THE years, the unique wedding has metamorphosed from the casual to the elegant. That's partly thanks to the popularity of the institution of marriage itself; despite media conjecture about the demise of marriage, about 2.4 million couples married in 1992, and couples have been marrying at roughly the same rate for more than a decade. With so many weddings annually, some couples are sure to be looking for something unusual to set them apart.

And they're more likely to turn to elegant settings because glamour and tradition are back in vogue, spurred on by the fairy-tale wedding of Diana, Princess of Wales in 1981 and the renewed popularity of elegant formal wear beginning in the '80s.

Oh, sure, couples still may get married while doing non-romantic things, like bungee jumping or sky-diving or running the New York marathon. But unlike the old counterculture days of the '70s, they're more likely to do so wearing tails and bridal gown, and afterward, presiding over a reception for 200.

"They're not getting away from a traditional wedding. They're still wearing special clothing, serving food, exchanging traditional vows, entertaining guests, all the things that a wedding traditionally is," Bratten says. "They just want something more unique."

Bratten's staff gets wind of a lot of unusual weddings, usually from brides and grooms eager to share their stories with the world.

SOMETIMES THE unusual twist is the location. Like the couple who got married on the top of a pyramid — a water-ski pyramid. The bridal party formed the lower tiers, the minister rode in a boat, the bride and groom — who owned a water-skiing school — exchanged their vows while skiing along on the shoulders of the wedding party.

Or the couple who got married in a baseball stadium — the same stadium, it turned out, where the groom had proposed to the bride on the scoreboard, in front of 35,000 people.

Often, the special touch is a theme — like the couple who got married after they'd purchased a dairy farm. They designed a cow-themed wedding. The bride wore cowboy boots in a black-and-white Holstein pattern under her traditional white gown; the groom wore a cow-spotted cummerbund with his tux. And the decorations — from bandana napkins to the black-and-white spotted guest book to the decorative udder topping the cake — all matched the theme.

EXOTIC WEDDINGS have grown so popular that a small industry has developed around them. In 1989, Pamela Robison of Dallas started a consulting business, Faraway Weddings, to help couples make arrangements abroad. Robison has arranged weddings in an Icelandic village, in a hot-air balloon over Africa, at a Scottish castle and on a Tahitian island, where the groom arrived for the ceremony in a canoe paddled by local residents.

Robison finds that her clients tend to be "someone who is professional, who's working, who's traveled before, who's doing a lot of other things," she says. The weddings she plans tend to be elegant and romantic, she says, often held in a country where the couple have vacationed before, or one that they've always dreamed of visiting.

"I would say couples are into doing something that's unique, something that's different, maybe that reflects their own fantasies," Robison says. "They want something that's personal and memorable."

Most people, but especially women, have an idea of what they would like their wedding to be, even before they're engaged, consultants say. The difference is that today's engaged couples tend to be older and more financially secure, and they wield a greater sense of their own style and taste.

"I think, from the time women are little girls, they think about their weddings, but a lot of times, the mothers were the ones who really took over. It was the mother who was fulfilling her dream wedding, because HER mother did it for her," says Jan Simus, co-owner of Combined Concepts Unlimited, a Fort Worth wedding consultant. "Now that the brides are a little older and have probably been out working for a while, they do their own wedding."

IF COUPLES WHO plan elaborate, unique weddings hear any criticism, it's probably this: Why go to so much trouble for something that lasts only for a few hours?

"It's not just one day," argues Bratten, of Bride's. "Think of what you've gone through to get there. You've lived alone, you've had some disappointing relationships, and now you've found someone to be a partner and friend, someone you're going to create a family and a home with."

More tangibly, photos, videotapes, the wedding dress, even decorations are kept and passed down as family heirlooms over the years, Bratten points out.

OSBURG-STOTLER

Patricia E. Osburg and Wesley M. Stotler are planning to be married 5 p.m. March 5 at St. Joseph's Old Cathedral in Oklahoma City. The bride-to-be is the daughter of Cliff and Debbie Osburg of Midland, and the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Osburg of Midland. Parents of the future bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Larry Stotler of Del City, Okla.

Miss Osburg is a 1987 graduate of Guymon (Okla.) High School. She earned degrees in management and finance from Oklahoma State University in 1992. She is a special accountants officer with Tulsa Teachers Credit Union. Her fiance graduated from Mount Saint Mary High School in Oklahoma City in 1987. He earned a degree in sports science from Oklahoma State University in 1992 and is a second-year medical student at OSU College of Osteopathic Medicine.

Couple hangs out in dives

N.Y. Times News Service

Joe and Helen Ivy first met in a scuba-diving course he was teaching at a Fort Worth dive shop.

So when they decided to marry, Joe Ivy thought it would be a neat idea to hold the wedding underwater, at Aquarena Springs in San Marcos.

"We wanted to do something kind of different, and I had read about underwater weddings before in (diving publications), and I thought it would be really neat," says Joe Ivy, a railroad conductor who's been diving since 1965 and has visited diving sites around the world.

Helen Bagby Ivy, a Realtor, was not, initially, equally enthusiastic. But after she'd considered the appropriateness of the setting — that's how they'd met, after all — she got into the act too.

The couple wore formal attire, weighted down with washers and weights, during the wedding, which about 50 dry guests watched through an underwater viewing window. Afterward, the couple dried off and presided over a more traditional reception, with seashells scattered about and a groom's cake shaped like a diver's flag.

Marriages need care, nurturing

Hearst News Service

Most failed marriages don't blow up — instead they slowly erode.

In the best of times, Jane Lane wrote in an article for Cosmopolitan, marriage means shared history, fun and fascination. In moments of doubt or discord, it means understanding that this living arrangement needs care and nurturing. Ultimately, marriage should be a gentle haven in a world that isn't always kind.

"People enter marriage with expectations, and if the partners' expectations are not in sync, problems will arise," said Ann Hamilton, a retired New York psychotherapist.

She said some husbands need reinforcing of their positive actions.

"Catch him being good and reward with a smile or praise," she said. "Don't judge or criticize with remarks that begin with 'You always' or, 'You ought to.' Take care of your own needs. And don't nag. If you nag a child, she gets discouraged and indifferent; the same is true for a husband.

"Be loyal. Complaining to your friends about your partner reinforces in your own mind that he's a louse. And if you have real problems, get help."

If your marriage suffers from chronic fatigue, you may have helped sap its energy without realizing it.

Paying attention to your lover is simple, yet failing to show interest in him is a surefire way to botch that loving feeling. Lawrence Grossman, a New York psychotherapist and professor of clinical psychology at Adelphi University, advised following the three As — attention, acknowledgement, appreciation.

"Conscious listening, hearing the subtlest things, is the best move you can make with a mate. We all have a deep need for attention," he said.

Nagging can be a problem.

"You should recognize he's dealing with his own schtick," said Los Angeles psychologist Marion F. Solomon, who specializes in couples therapy. "Don't personalize, take things so seriously, or put everything under a microscope."

Another mistake wives make is spending so much energy on the children that none is left for their husbands.

"The greatest number of men who use prostitutes are those whose wives have recently had babies," Grossman said. "Women tend to be self-centered in their relationships with their children, and men may feel left out."

Another common love bungle is to rely too heavily — or not at all — on work as a source of emotional sustenance. No matter how satisfying your job, you must reserve a private store of enthusiastic devotion for your husband. Wives who don't work at all risk becoming totally dependent on their husbands — financially, emotionally, socially. Most husbands fear — and grow to resent — a completely dependent wife.

Hectic contemporary life may leave your marriage undernourished.

"Happy households put people first," Peggy Meszaros, dean of the college of human resources at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, in Blacksburg, said. "Anyone preoccupied with the nitty-gritty details of housekeeping is likely to overlook relationships, and a house that is cluttered to the point of being dysfunctional probably will interfere as well.

"A couple should negotiate. Look at the most essential things that have to be done, divide them up, and do them."

Tired of bar-hopping, people are searching outdoors to meet mates

By Clara G. Herrera
N.Y. Times News Service

MINERAL WELLS, Texas — John Lewis spends five days a week punching buttons on a computer keyboard. Off the job, he uses his delicate fingertips, too tender to have developed climber's callouses, to search for a minuscule crack in the stone to pull himself up the side of a rock.

There's no time limit and the only prize gained when he reaches the top is a sense of accomplishment. Tiny protrusions of stone that extend from the rock are his only friends. They dare him to be confident enough to rest all of his weight on a single nub of rock.

Sprawled up there, the 39-year-old Lewis, a Carrollton, Texas, resident, looks like he's playing Twister on the slab of stone. Stretching, he puts his foot on an overhang that sticks out about an inch. He finds a place to grip his fingers.

Lewis was one of eight people from Dallas-Fort Worth who carpooled to Lake Mineral Wells State Park, about 40 miles west of Fort Worth, on a Saturday morning to take part in a beginner's rock-climbing class.

It was through Sport-Aways, a local club and travel company for lovers of "adventure sports," that John found himself 20 feet above the ground while hanging onto a rock. He was kept from falling by a safety rope, which was good because he's afraid of heights.

He confronted his fear earlier in the day when he first rappelled over the edge of a rock as his voice grew louder and louder as he inched toward the ground. He expressed his anxiety in the volume of his voice.

"That's part of why I do this," he said. "That part over the edge is a big thing for me. After that, I'm OK."

It was a rush for these people to do something that scares them. When co-workers ask Lewis what he did for the weekend, they usually don't believe him.

"They make fun of me," he said. "But it's kind of like they're jealous. I say, 'Hey, come on, let's go,' and they say, 'No thanks, I got to mow the yard.' I think, 'Oh come on, they got to mow the yard? Like it's going to fall off of the world tomorrow or something.'"

Lewis and the others learn climbing and rappelling from one guy with a great sense of humor and another guy who wears fluorescent yellow biker shorts and, unbeknownst to them, records the Claymation videos of the California Raisins.

Bill Moore, 36, a Carrollton firefighter, is the funny one; Michael Fox, 37, is the guy with a California Raisin key chain in his car.

Both Moore and Fox said they're afraid of heights. They rappel down the sides of rocks, but don't look below while they're doing it.

"I have a real healthy respect for them," Moore said of the rocks. "They make me nervous as hell, but I find I love the rush."

He must. He's been a Sport-Aways instructor since the club began seven years ago and he keeps his classes laughing and safe with ropes, equipment and technique.

Beginning climbers are usually 22 to 35 years old. Not all of them are Sport-Aways members, but interest in the club has grown steadily through the years, said Fox, the club's president. Initially, there were about 80 members; now there are close to 400.

"We had to generate the interest because people thought, 'What, me on a rope? Forget it,'" Fox said. "Some people think this is crazy. I think sitting behind a desk from 8 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon punching buttons is crazy."

Sport-Aways also arranges deep-sea fishing ventures, skydiving, canoe trips and a slew of other outdoor activities mostly in Texas, Colorado and New Mexico. The rock-climbing seasons run from September to November and from March to June.

Most of the unmarried members, who make up about 75 percent of the clientele, want to find a healthful, outdoor activity with others who have the same interests, Fox said. It may even be the dating scene of the 1990s, the opposite step away from smoke-filled nightclubs.

For Ken Dice of Granbury, Texas, it was the first outing since his divorce two months ago.

"I decided to get out and start doing things again," said Dice, 33, a computer programmer. "It's like therapy."

Even though he hadn't really climbed since college, Dice made every climb and rappel with little effort and without the coveted climbing shoes that make gripping easier.

"The adventure fantasies are what people are turning to to meet decent people," Fox said. "They think this a better type of environment to meet new people."

Over the years, five couples who met through Sport-Aways have married.

"I've talked to a lot of people and they hate to go to bars," said 26-year-old Sandy Green, a Sport-Aways member from Plano, Texas.

It was Green's first experience as a rock climber since she moved to Texas from Massachusetts and she had other motivations to climb besides meeting active people.

"I just wanted to say I did it and because my mother told me not to," she said.

Author turns family history into novel

By Eduardo Montes

EL PASO (AP) — When Janice Woods Windle first stumbled across the cookbook containing the writings of the women who dominated her family legends, she was inspired to tell their stories.

Her whim to write a modest summary of her ancestors' lives would eventually lead to a 10-year quest to uncover her past.

"True Women," a highly touted first novel based on true accounts of Windle's family history, is the result of her expedition.

"This is just one of those unexpected miracles in life," said Windle, whose normally reserved, slightly-twanged voice almost bubbles when she mentions the novel which has garnered her accolades from critics, noted authors and even Gov. Ann Richards.

THE BOOK covers six generations of Windle's family tree — spanning more than 100 years from Texas' war of independence to World War II — and revolves around the lives of three women:

Euphemia Texas Ashby King, Windle's maternal great, great grandmother; Bettie Moss King, Windle's maternal great grandmother; and Georgia Lawshe Woods, Windle's paternal great grandmother.

The book had its beginning a decade ago in Windle's attempts to compile a family cookbook as a wedding gift for her eldest son, Wayne Windle Jr.

She was gathering recipes when her mother, Virginia Woods, told her of an old notebook containing recipes and remedies that had been started by Euphemia King around the time of the Texas revolution.

That notebook sparked something.

"I turned to my mother and said, 'I think I'll write a one-page summary of these women's lives,' and 451 pages later, here I am," Windle said with a laugh.

Despite her quick summation of events, getting from the family home in Seguin and the finding of the notebook to "here" required a long, and sometimes frustrating, journey.

DURING A 10-year period, Windle constantly shuttled back and forth between El Paso and Seguin and other areas featured in the book to conduct research, assisted by her mother and others.

Her trips often involved leaving El Paso after work on a Friday, spending all weekend digging for history, returning on Sunday night and the next day resuming her duties as the head of a multi-million dollar community fund-raising organization.

She found her research hindered by the frequent omissions of women in the historical records that she combed through to glean details of the past.

"The history of the women had to come from oral history," she said.

Then came the search for a publisher.

She was turned down by three literary agents, but persevered because she wanted to avoid the cycle of rejection often experienced by unrepresented authors submitting unsolicited works to publishers.

"I was really reluctant to get caught up in that," Windle said.

A SEARCH for the agent who represented "Roots" author Alex Haley was unsuccessful, but did lead her to an agent who eventually landed a deal with G.P. Putnam's Sons.

However, she said nothing was tougher than a call from her editor telling her she would have to delete one of the characters, paternal grandmother Laura Woods, because the book was too long.

"I felt like I had been hit with a sledgehammer," she said. "But his decision was objective and it was correct."

The result is a narrative that evokes pictures of a storyteller practicing her craft while recounting events like Euphemia's flight, along with 5,000 women and children, from the Mexican army and Georgia Woods' plot to kill a Yankee captain who was terrorizing her family. Historical figures like Sam Houston and Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, leader of the Mexican Army during the revolution, are also woven into the mix.

The book's title comes from a 1868 report to the Texas Reconstruction convention advising against giving women the right to vote because "the good sense of every True Woman" teaches her that doing so would be an insult to their sex by implying they are so "unwomanly as to desire the privilege."

WINDLE'S CHILDREN said watching the family history, of which they've heard snippets for years, take tangible form has been exciting. And they're delighted Windle found proof for some of the more extraordinary stories.

"My sister and I were kind of like saying 'Aw, come on. Is this really true?'" said her son. Wayne. "And it was."

Added Windle's daughter, Virginia Shapiro: "To me, it's an overwhelming book."

To a still breathless Windle, it's been all that and more as she's been feted in Seguin, made television appearances and begun to tour the country to promote the book.

One of the biggest thrills came recently when she entered a book store and saw "True Women" sitting on a shelf next to novels by Tom Clancy and Robert James Waller. "That was just mind boggling," she said.

She could conceivably continue to see such things, because with the "boxes and boxes and boxes" of unused material Windle has left, future books are a good possibility.

"There are 600 pages lying in the computer there on (grandmother) Laura Woods," Windle said.

Counsular officer is helpful friend abroad

By Jennifer Merin
Associated Press

Your passport and wallet are stolen on the streets of Paris, your airline tickets lifted from your hotel room in Rome. Your daughter is backpacking through Greece and has failed to call home.

What to do? Call the U.S. Embassy (phones are manned 24 hours) or the consulate and ask for the consular officer — your first line of defense.

Americans usually travel abroad without incident, but when difficult situations arise, consular officers are mandated to help resolve them — within limits.

They will replace a lost or stolen passport once you have provided a police report and proof of citizenship. In some countries, consular officers will escort you to the police station to make official reports or at least point the way and describe procedure. A photo copy of your passport's title page is sufficient proof of citizenship. Carry it separately for safekeeping.

If your money is stolen, don't expect a loan from the consulate till. Rather, an officer will put you in touch with local groups who assist stranded travelers or help you contact relatives or friends who can send funds via the consulate.

If you have no other way home, consular officers will buy you an airline ticket in exchange for a promissory note. But you must return home directly, and your passport will be restricted until the note is fully paid.

If a friend or relative fails to call or arrive home on schedule, you should call the State Department's Citizen's Emergency Center in Washington — (202) 647-5225 — with the missing person's itinerary and other pertinent details. They will be forwarded to the U.S. Embassy's consular officers who will question local authorities, hotels and tour operators. Consular officers are bound to search until the person is accounted for. But if the person is over age 18 and doesn't want his whereabouts known, consular officers must abide by the Privacy Act and report only that he is safe.

In case of illness, consular officers will recommend doctors and hospitals. If you're in a rural area, they should be able to get you transferred to a city with better facilities or to arrange your emergency evacuation home.

Americans visiting or working in a country where there is potential danger — from frequent earthquakes to political unrest — should report their presence to consular officers and check in periodically for developments. If it becomes necessary to evacuate the country, consular officers will issue an advisory and perhaps help with the best way out.

In jail? Consular officers can help — to a degree. They can't act as your lawyer, but by maintaining cordial relations with local authorities they might be able to intercede on your behalf — depending on the allegation and the country. For example, if you're wrongfully jailed during a police sweep, consular officers usually can establish your identity as a tourist and, once released, vouch for your conduct for the remainder of your holiday. But U.S. citizenship alone does not entitle you to be released from jail or placed in the custody of U.S. authorities.

In rare cases, in a country that has strained relations with the United States, an American might be arrested on trumped-up charges to embarrass the U.S. government. In such cases, consular officers' negotiating skills and tenacity are tested to the limit. You can help by cooperating with consular officers — and urging relatives and friends at home to call public attention to your situation to pressure the State Department to make your release a priority.

The situation for arrested Americans is particularly difficult in cases of alleged drug trafficking or possession. Of the nearly 3,000 Americans jailed abroad each year, about 1,000 are arrested on drug charges. Since American diplomats demand harsh punishment for foreign drug traffickers, they can hardly request leniency for Americans. In drug-related arrests, all consular officers can do is try to assure humane treatment in jail and a fair trial.

Grand Saline 'worth its salt,' residents say

By Richard Stewart
N.Y. Times News Service

GRAND SALINE — It was salt that built this town of 2,630. And the salt mine still dominates the local economy, giving birth to many one-liners: Grand Saline is the saltiest town in Texas.

People in Grand Saline are the salt of the earth. When workers in Grand Saline talk about going back to the salt mine on Monday morning, they mean it.

Maybe it's tough to lick City Hall, but in Grand Saline visitors can lick the Chamber of Commerce building — it's made of rock salt.

Grand Saline sits atop a 20,000-foot mountain of salt in northeast Texas, but don't go there expecting to see it. The top of the mountain is 400 feet underground.

It's part of a "mother bed" of salt deposited by an ancient sea 250 million years ago. Over the eons, the salt layer was buried deep beneath the ground. Massive geologic forces pushed giant domes of salt up toward the surface in places like Grand Saline. Salt leaches through the ground to create a salt marsh south of town. Native Americans long ago learned to go there to find the precious resource.

In 1872, a railroad reached the town. A few years later, the first wells were drilled into the salt dome. In 1920 the Morton salt company, now Morton International Inc., came to town and in 1931 completed the first of two shafts that still serve the mine.

Grand Saline was so proud of its mine that the town's Chamber of Commerce constructed its first building of salt five years later.

The current building, on U.S. 80, is aptly called the Salt Palace. It serves as the town's visitor center and a museum featuring the history of Grand Saline and its salt mine.

The outside walls appear to be made of light gray stone with veins of translucent quartz. But they're pure salt.

"People love to lick on it to see if it's really salt," said Terrie Savallo, who operates the museum. "It really is."

Big blocks of rock salt are strong enough to use as a building material, Savallo said, but they do have one problem. They dissolve in the rain — and it rains a lot in Grand Saline.

Grand Saline opened its third Salt Palace this fall. The first two melted.

The first Salt Palace resembled a small version of the Alamo. Built almost entirely of blocks of salt, it dissolved within a few years.

In 1975, a second Salt Palace was built. This one was a standard structure with an exterior veneer of salt blocks. From time to time, one of the walls would melt enough to fall down, and more salt blocks would be sent up from the mine for repair. The building was finally razed, and the latest Salt Palace has a roof with a wide overhang to shield the salt from most rainfall.

"We thought about putting some kind of latex covering over the salt to make it last longer," Savallo said of the newest and largest Salt Palace, "but people like to come and lick the outside of the building."

The town holds a Salt Festival every June with a rodeo, parades, a carnival and other events celebrating humble sodium chloride. But visitors shouldn't expect to take a tour of the salt mine.

In years past, groups of schoolchildren and tourists were welcome to look around the 700-foot-deep mine. The Chamber of Commerce even held its annual banquet in an underground room carved out of salt. Mine safety regulations put a stop to all of that in the 1960s, though.

It's little wonder, locals say, that Grand Saline is proud to claim that it's worth its salt.

Big Bend's black bears make comeback

By John MacCormack
Hearst News Service

BIG BEND NATIONAL PARK — It was five decades back that the last black bears in the Big Bend country were killed off by hunters, and only five years ago that the first Mexican black bears migrated north to live and reproduce in the Chisos Mountains here.

For park biologists and visitors, the reappearance of the reclusive species, endangered in Texas and long lost to the Big Bend country, was an exhilarating, almost magical occurrence.

"It was a thrilling event to witness because it was the return of a native species high on the food chain, a creature some people call glamorous," said Ray Skiles, the park's bear specialist.

"For as long as it was missing here, it was an indication of what humans had done. And a national park is supposed to maintain the full natural complement of creatures," Skiles said.

SINCE 1988 the park's permanent bear population has grown to between eight and 12 animals, and with increased sightings, they have become an attraction in their own right.

But five weeks ago, the honeymoon came to a crashing end when several bears celebrated the year's end with a rampage, tearing up tents and backpacks, stealing campers' food and behaving aggressively toward humans.

"For three nights in a row, they hit all the camp sites in the high Chisos. At least two sets of bears went from one site to another," Skiles said.

The binge was a wakeup call to park officials, who, over the last year had seen a steady increase in contacts between bears and humans, and a parallel rise in unacceptable behavior by bears.

More than 500 sightings of bears were reported in 1993, 10 times that of the year before. And for the first time, there were regular reports of bears being aggressive toward humans or damaging human property.

Forty-six such episodes occurred, the most serious being bluff-charges by bears at startled campers.

Clearly the bears were developing an attitude.

TO COUNTER the problem, park officials last summer installed bear-proof food boxes and garbage containers throughout the Chisos camping areas and rewrote the advisory given to visitors, giving it a sterner tone.

Still, the intensity of the holiday binge was not expected.

"It's happened before at every other bear park in the country, but we didn't and couldn't have known what the nature of the escalation would be," said Skiles.

Incidents reported in the weeks since make it clear the problem remains. The bear reports read like an inner-wilderness police blotter.

On Jan. 1, a camper from Louisiana wrote: "(Bear) destroyed water bottles, tent, sleeping bag, coat. $150-$200 value."

On Jan. 2, a camper from Austin wrote: "Hungry, small size fella ate my tent and white gas canister."

The same day, a second Austin camper reported: "Year-old black bear approached site. Was not put off by yelling or whistle. Moved only when hit by rock."

On Jan. 7, another park social taboo was broken: A ranger reported the first ever bear incursion into the Chisos Basin area which has a restaurant, store and motel.

WITH 60,000 visitors expected in March and April for spring break, park officials realized they had to act quickly.

For starters, they closed 20 campsites most vulnerable to bears.

Then two weeks ago they held a three-day bear summit, complete with outside experts, on how to cope with the suddenly unmanageable bruins. The summit convened with a sense of urgency.

"Between Christmas and New Years, the bears had a spree. They got food everywhere they could," Trail Superintendent David Karplus said.

"And during spring break, they'll have a six-week-spree unless we do something about it," Karplus said.

From New Mexico came researcher Carrie Hunt, with 18 years of working close with grizzlies and black bears. From Yosemite National Park came Steve Thompson, a biologist with broad experience with problem bears.

Also attending was Rick Taylor, the Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife's bear expert.

Taylor, an advocate of extending the bears' range in the state, believes the problems encountered at the park will not be repeated where contact with humans is not so direct.

The hastily called summit included crash courses on issues such as aversive conditioning of bears, aversive conditioning of humans, and marking and tagging protocols (of bears).

WITH PEAKS ranging nearly to 8,000 feet and the mountainsides covered with oak, pinon pine, juniper and rare species like alder and hophorn, the nation's southernmost mountain range provides excellent bear habitat.

As the bear experts made their way slowly uptrail, they paused now and then to cluster around animal droppings, hopeful they might be signs of bear. They also examined some wickedly shredded agave plants.

A gentle debate ensued: Javelinas seemed the most likely suspects, but a minority opinion held out for bears.

En route, Ranger Dennis Vasquez quizzed some passing hikers about what they had learned in the bear briefing they had received when they had paid for their permit.

It was quickly apparent that not too much had sunken in.

"I know you don't want to run. Beyond that, I don't remember anything," said Ricky Sandifer of San Antonio.

The next day, in more brainstorming sessions, the outside experts and the park rangers discussed how to teach bears to shun contact with people.

THE OPTIONS ranged from doped food to shock collars to rubber bullets to booby-trapped backpacks to fire extinguishers that spray a cayenne pepper solution to devices that emit high-frequency sounds.

But, with the first of the spring break crowd set to arrive here in early March, it was clear there was no time to educate the bears.

"Forget about aversive conditioning the bears at this point. We've not aversively conditioned our visitors," said Rob Arnberger, the park superintendent.

Rubber bullets and pepper sprays being out, the options for molding human behavior were somewhat more limited, even if, as the hiker on the trail had shown, not much of the message was getting through.

"You have to get blunt with them. The visitors are responsible for the survival of the bears. A fed bear is a dead bear," said Steve Thompson, the bear biologist from Yosemite National Park.

BY THE END of the summit late Thursday, plans were made for a range of remedies. Most center on educating the public and eliminating human food sources for bears.

For spring break, two quick fixes are planned, and both may come as unpleasant surprises to campers.

"We're going to hire one or two temporary employees to work the Chisos area back-country, going from site to site looking for food violations. And we'll be issuing citations," said Phil Koepp, a supervisory ranger.

"And, if we get a flurry of bear activity like we did over Christmas, we'll probably be forced to close certain sites or areas. The more serious the bear-human encounter, the greater will be our reaction," he said.

On a long-term basis, Koepp said, park officials are now committed to establishing a comprehensive bear program, including possibly hiring a large-mammal specialist, and then systematically tagging and tracking the bears.

"We've tried not to manipulate our bears. We have so few of them, we didn't want to take the risk of capture and collaring, because we might kill one. But now we've decided if we want to manage our bear population, we have to know what we have," he said.

And even though park officials emerged from the summit with a much better idea of how to handle their bears, the park superintendent voiced what many were thinking.

"It's the ultimate management dilemma. Whom do the mountains belong to, bears or people?" Arnberger asked.

This bear-crossing sign along a road in Big Bend National Park is proof that the Mexican black bear is making a comeback in the park. Five decades ago the last black bears were killed off by hunters; now there are between eight and 12 of the normally reclusive bears living in the park. Over the Christmas and New Year holidays, several bears went on a rampage, tearing up tents and backpacks, stealing campers' food and behaving agressively toward humans. To counter the problem, park officials have rewritten the advisory given to visitors, giving it a sterner tone.

DEAR ABBY

Christmas newsletters fail to bring good cheer to all

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have some advice for people who send those bragging printed newsletters inside their Christmas cards:

Van Buren

Before you go on and on about what a wonderful year it has been, be sure you don't send one to a person whose close relative is battling a life-threatening illness. And before you describe the renewal of your marriage vows and second honeymoon, be sure the recipient is not going through a painful divorce or separation.

Imagine how an unemployed relative will feel reading about your husband's promotion. Or how someone who is infertile or has had a miscarriage will feel reading about the beautiful new baby in your family.

My teen-age son recently suffered a cerebral hemorrhage and paralysis and is now facing neurosurgery, and the worst part of the holidays has been receiving letters from insensitive people bragging about their teen-agers' sports awards, proms, trips, etc. It only added to an already difficult time.

You have my permission to revise my letter, if you can improve it, but please don't use my name or town. — LONGTIME READER

DEAR ANONYMOUS: Your letter needed no revision or improvement — it came straight from your aching heart and delivers a powerful message. I thank you for it, and hope that others will learn from it.

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow who had a relationship with an older man for several years. I enjoyed his company very much, but in bed — forget it! (He really was a dud.)

He complained that I was cold and distant, but I didn't want to hurt his feelings by telling him what a poor lover he was. Once I even bought him a book on how to improve his sex life, but it didn't help. Because of this, he finally left me for someone else. Now I am left alone with a broken heart because I was too nice to hurt his feelings.

Should I have been more explicit about the situation? Or should I have just put up with his clumsiness and inadequacy? — "B" IN ARIZONA

DEAR "B": You did what you thought was right at the time, so don't beat yourself up about it now. Honesty is always the best policy. In matters concerning lovemaking, it's the only policy that pays off.

DEAR ABBY: I made a commitment to my children a couple of years ago. When I get old, I'm going to get even with them. How?

I'm going to take turns living with them.

I'm going to borrow their car, and bring it back two hours later than I said I would — with an empty tank!

I'm going to leave my clothes all over the house ... tie up the telephone ... leave all the lights on ... and drink milk right out of the carton with the door of the refrigerator open!

When I go to live with them, I am going to bring along an untrained pet. I'm going to borrow my son's sport jacket and return it with my teeth in the pocket.

I'm going to wear an earring. I might even dye my hair orange! And when they're gone for three or four days, I'm going to have a party every night. I'm going to get myself one of those big stereos, and play all my "Sing Along With Mitch Miller" records really loud! — GOOD OLD MOM

DEAR MOM: You make your "revenge" sound almost fun. Drop me a note when you go — who knows, I may want to join you!

AT WIT'S END

Some promises to children are made to be broken

By Erma Bombeck

Is there a mother alive who did not look at the newborn in her arms and make promises?

Bombeck

I will protect you from criticism and prejudice.

If you mess up, I will take the blame for it.

I will pick your friends so you won't make a mistake.

I will subsidize you with money so you don't have to sacrifice.

I will never doubt or question you.

I will never let you fall off a bicycle or attempt anything that is hard.

Decisions are tough. I will make them for you.

If you fail a test because you didn't study, I will go to school and plead for understanding.

When you lose your temper or are rude, I will find an excuse for you.

You will never want for anything and never know disappointment.

I will shield you from every bit of sorrow life has to offer.

You will never hear the word "No."

No matter how bad your behavior, I will be in your corner to applaud you.

If someone should make demands on you — call for Mommy.

Within three weeks, a couple of these promises are broken. Within five years, all of them have bit the dust.

It isn't that mothers didn't believe them when they made them; they simply realized that's no way to raise a child. Children are born with certain inalienable rights, among them the right to fail, to hurt, to suffer disappointment, to get angry and mess up.

Without these traits, how would they know the triumph of dealing with an illness, the pride of conquering adversity, the exhilaration of turning their lives around, the privilege of saying, "I'm sorry"?

You have to remember someone loved you enough to allow you to lead your own life. It's the least you can do for your children.

The saddest cartoon I ever saw was of a twentysomething man in a wheelchair being pushed by a woman of obvious wealth wearing a hat and a fur stole slung over her shoulder. To a bystander, the woman said indignantly, "Of course my son can walk! Thank God, he doesn't have to!"

Two siblings often have very different personalities

By Lawrence Kutner
N.Y. Times News Service

'If you go into a newborn nursery, you'll hear parents talk about how this day-old child is different from his or her sibling. Parents see more extreme differences between their first-and second-born children than between other children in their families.'

— Dr. Stephen Bank
adjunct professor of psychology, Wesleyan University

In his autobiography, Mark Twain wrote about how he and his younger brother, Henry Clemens, had opposite personalities, even when they were young children. Henry was a goody-goody who felt honor-bound to report his brother's misdeeds and questionable adventures to their mother. Twain later used their childhood conflicts as the basis for part of "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer."

Few things demonstrate the natural diversity within families as well as the temperamental differences between siblings. The first child in a family may be highly gregarious; the second one, shy and demure. A bookworm may be sandwiched between two athletes.

While some of these differences take years to develop, others are apparent soon after birth.

"If you go into a newborn nursery, you'll hear parents talk about how this day-old child is different from his or her sibling," said Dr. Stephen Bank, an adjunct professor of psychology at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn.

"Parents see more extreme differences between their first-and second-born children than between other children in their families," said Dr. Bank, who studies relationships between brothers and sisters. He said there was no apparent biological basis for these perceptions.

THE DIFFERENCES in personalities shouldn't be surprising. Temperament appears to be largely genetic. While children share genes with their parents, the number of possible combinations of those genes leads to siblings who differ not only in physical characteristics like hair and eye color, but also in how generally grumpy or happy they are and how easily they make the transition from one activity to another.

"Two siblings are almost as likely to be different temperamentally as two children chosen at random," said Dr. Judy Dunn, a professor of human development at Pennsylvania State University and a co-author of "Separate Lives: Why Siblings Are So Different" (Basic Books, 1990).

"I have fraternal twin sons who were as different as chalk from cheese from the moment of birth," she said. It was her experiences with her own children that inspired her to look into why brothers and sisters are often so different.

Her research has found that siblings who are temperamentally different when they are young tend to have more quarrels than siblings who are similar. But she cautions parents against paying too close attention to that finding.

WHAT'S MORE important, many developmental and clinical psychologists say, is how parents perceive and interpret the temperamental differences in their children. It is seldom the temperament itself that sets off a parent's emotions, but the association of that temperament with themselves or someone from their past.

For example, an aspect of a young girl's personality may remind her mother of the mother's favorite aunt. Because of this, the mother may pay more attention to the girl or favor her over the other children in the family.

A son's shyness may be the cause of seemingly disproportionate anger from this same mother because it is a trait that reminds her of herself as a young girl. The anger stems not only from the painful memories of her own shyness, but also from a desire for her son to somehow make up for her own childhood awkwardness and loneliness.

"A father who's outgoing and physical may have more difficulty getting along with a child who prefers to spend his time reading or playing chess," said Dr. Jonathan Bloomberg, an assistant professor of psychiatry at the University of Illinois Medical School in Rockford. "But if one child is very similar to a parent, that parent may expect too much of the child."

THERE'S NO malice intended by these parents. Their responses and associations may even be unconscious or stem from good intentions. But to children, the differences in how they are treated by their parents are often seen as reflections of how much they are loved.

'Sheer stretch dresses' bring fashion questions

By Anne-Marie Schiro
N.Y. Times News Service

An amusing new style? Or an unnecessary addition to the wardrobe? We're talking about the sheer stretch dresses Karl Lagerfeld showed for spring, layered under or over other dresses or over camisoles and miniskirts.

The buyers at Henri Bendel had a positive reaction and whipped up versions of the dress to sell under the store's private label. Customers got the message and the dresses have been selling nicely, said Teresa Tymoski, a vice president and general merchandise manager at Bendel's.

"We see the skin dress worn for day over knits," she said, "and for evening under or over a sexy tight slip dress."

Made of a synthetic stretch mesh, the dress comes cut like a slip or a T-shirt, black or white; prices range from $125 to $160.

The authentic long-sleeved black Lagerfeld dresses are due in the store later this month for $345, and Jean-Paul Gaultier's printed skin dresses, priced from $410 to $435, next month.

Musical opens Midland theater's 1994 season

When 10-year-old Mary Lennox journeys from her home in India to Misslethwaite Manor in Yorkshire, England, she has no idea what a difference a mysterious and secret garden will make in her life and in the lives of those around her.

She is a lonely wisp of a child, one whose thoughts revolve around herself especially since her parents' recent death from cholera. Archibald Cravin, the uncle who takes her in, is a depressed widower whose wife died while giving birth to their only child, Colin, 10, an invalid.

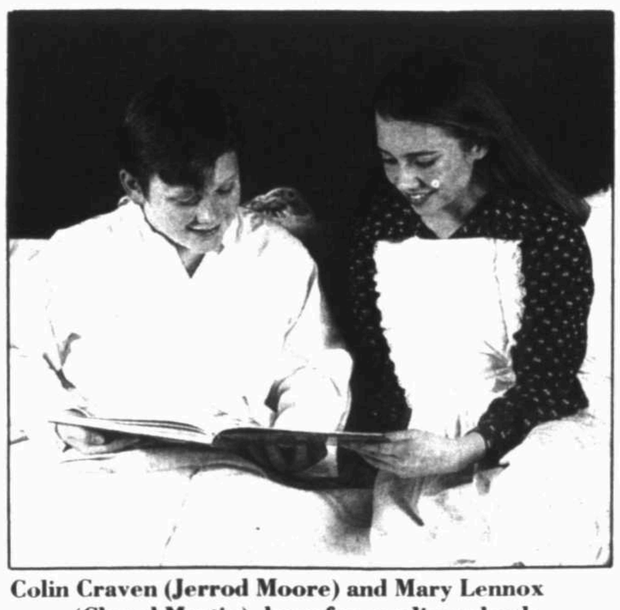
The lives of two unhappy, sickly, over-civilized children seem hardly the stuff of which musicals are made. Yet, playwright Marsha Norman, who received a Pulitzer Prize for her play "'night, Mother," and composer Lucy Simon, winner of two Grammy Awards for her "In Harmony" albums and sister of Carly Simon, do just that.

Thus some 80 years after it was first published as a children's book, Frances Hodgson Burnett's "The Secret Garden" became a Broadway musical thanks to Ms. Norman and Ms. Simon. Ms. Norman received a Tony Award in 1991 for her lyrics and script for the musical.

Ms. Norman "was smart enough to stay pretty close to the original and consequently put up something that was quite, quite good," said Midland Community Theatre executive director Don Bachmann, noting that before the musical was written the novel "had been the subject of four major motion pictures."

"The Secret Garden" opens MCT's 1994 season at 8 p.m. Friday in Theatre Midland's Davis Theatre I.

"I think it deals with themes that people are concerned about," Bachmann said of the theater's decision to stage "The Secret Garden." "It deals with love, friendship, understanding and it is very family oriented.



Colin Craven (Jerrod Moore) and Mary Lennox (Cheryl Martin), have fun reading a book.

"Besides, it's got some absolutely gorgeous music," said Bachmann, who is directing the MCT production. "It's not what we call Broadway opera. There are large sections of dialogue throughout the show. But it is the equal of many shows that are done that are considered Broadway opera."

The music attracted Nancy Daugherty, MCT staff scenic designer, to tryout for the musical.

"I heard the music, and it was beautiful, so I figured it had to be a fantastic play," said Ms. Daugherty, who was cast in the role Martha, the housemaid.

Ms. Daugherty moved to Midland from Richmond, Va., after graduating from Virginia Commonwealth University with a bachelor of fine arts degree. She was attracted to the area partly because of MCT.

"It was so beautiful," said Ms. Daugherty, who first performed on MCT's stage in the 1993 production of "A Christmas Carol." "I had worked in university and professional theater in Richmond. It was always difficult to get everything together. This place definitely has its act together. It's good to get the experience in such a comfortable setting."

Bachmann calls the cast for this production "top notch.

"Rene Spicer Ray, who has been in several of our musicals is back on our stage," he said. "Marc Graham is one of our strong lead players doing the part of Archibald.

"And other names like Bill Kersh and Jane Burgess are familiar to our audiences. We have a couple of newcomers in major roles — Nancy Daugherty and John Briggs. John Bates was in 'Smoke on the Mountain.' John is known for his superlative opera tenor type of voice.

"Then, when you add to that Jerrod Moore playing Colin and Cheryl Martin playing Mary Lennox, we have an extremely well rounded cast of principles. And the singing chorus is every bit as good as the chorus in 'My Fair Lady,' which was superb. So, I think people are going to hear some awfully good music."

Chorus members include Stacy Tollison, David Thomas, Vidya Srinivas, Ramesh Wadhwa, Debbie Corlee, Afton Hales, Charlotte Martin, Jo Richards, Paula Shipp, Charlotte Wornell, Sandy Faulkner, Michael James, Gayle Koeninger, Matt Nicholson, Robin Smith and Larry Elkins.

Darryl Knapp is musical director. Choreography is by Jan Collerd, with period design costumes by Mae Dawson. Set design is by Paul Fiorella and lighting is by Edward W. Taylor. Shop foreman Jeff Lander is in charge of ensuring the components of the set function properly.

Denton-based 'family' makes music together

By Shermakaye Bass
Associated Press

DALLAS — The Adkinses are the stuff of TV shows. Like the Waltons or the von Trapps of "The Sound of Music," they epitomize the ideal "family." But for the Denton-based clan, familial harmony is real. It's as tangible as the bow of a violin or the strings of a cello.

"We grew up with a certain sense of destiny," says Christopher Adkins, the principal cellist for the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, whose family will make its public debut Thursday night at the Morton H. Meyerson Symphony Center.

In a concert of Mozart, Bartok, Tchaikovsky and Mendelssohn, the five siblings and their mother will do what they might do at a Christmas Eve church service or in the living room of the parents' Denton home: make music together.

In age and sensibility, the siblings are like notes on a scale.

There is 36-year-old Elisabeth, who is the National Symphony Orchestra's principal violinist and associate concertmaster; 34-year-old Christopher, who played with the Fort Worth Symphony Orchestra while still a teen-ager and played cello for the Denver and Milwaukee symphonies before joining the DSO; 22-year-old Anthony, who launched his career as a cellist with the University of North Texas Symphony Orchestra and the Southern Methodist University Conservatory Chamber Orchestra and plays for the Richardson Symphony Orchestra; 19-year-old Alexandra, a junior at UNT and principal violinist and concertmaster for the school's symphony; and 16-year-old Madeline, a freshman at UNT who plays violin in the university's orchestra.

Classical music was to the Adkinses what cheerleading and football are to most young Texans. But then, they are the children of music professors.

"Artistically, there is a similarity of playing that comes from our family, in the shape of the musical mind," says Elisabeth.

"We all listened to our mother play the organ at church. Our whole sense of proportion, of what's right, is very much based on her musicianship...Dad has been a performing musician, but his thrust is more academic. So he's always been more concerned that we knew what we were doing, that we practiced musicianship as an intellectual pursuit."

Before reaching the age of 8, each child was given an instrument — cello, as it turned out, for the boys, violin for the girls.

"At about 4, I would start teaching all of them piano," says Alis Dickinson Adkins, a professor of musicology at UNT. From there, her children graduated to strings. For anyone considering a future in orchestral performance, she says, it's important to begin training as a young child, particularly if the instrument is stringed.

"I think the motions and all of the reflex actions for playing a stringed instrument — the reflexes needed for the adjustment of pitch and such — are so small, so subtle, that they need to be schooled in from a very early age," Mrs. Adkins says.

And although she says she didn't want to pressure them, she and Cecil Adkins, a UNT musicology professor and found of the school's Collegium Musicum, wanted to give their children something that would last, something with more than monetary value.

The parents spent hours cultivating their children's natural abilities. Neither had performed on the scale of a National Symphony or a Dallas Symphony, but the couple wanted to give their offspring those opportunities. And that would involve practice. Plenty of it.

"In our house there was no choice about it, any more than about brushing your teeth," says Elisabeth.

But like her brother Christopher, she speaks of her upbringing with a sense of gratitude. Listening to her story, one can imagine the holiday caroling, the family outings, the father leaning over sheet music, the mother at the piano.

Hers were not the stereotypical stage parents, she says. They managed to strike a balance between encouraging their children and instilling in them a sense of individuality. The result has been a close-knit group of musicians who happen to be family, says Elisabeth. "These are all people I'd want to play with anyway."

The third of eight Adkins children and the first to make music her profession, Elisabeth sounded out the field for the siblings who would follow. (All studied music at some point.)

She made her debut with the Richardson Symphony Orchestra at age 10. She graduated summa cum laude from UNT, continued her graduate studies at Yale University, then landed the job that has kept her in the national limelight for the past 11 years. Anyone who's seen the National Symphony's Memorial Day concerts on PBS has seen Elisabeth perform as concertmaster.

At times, Christopher says, her success was daunting. But it created a healthy competition that inspired him and compelled him to carve out his own style.

"Elisabeth always seemed just a little more accomplished, a little further along," Christopher says. "But I think it had the effect on me that I was consciously going to do things differently than she did."

Though competition has had a place in their relationship, jealousy hasn't. The two have played duets together since they were children and were in the same classical trio at Yale.

The youngest three Adkinses have also shared a school campus, and Christopher suspects they experienced similar feelings of competition. But like him and Elisabeth, he says, they have developed their own styles. "They are fantastic musicians."

day performances and $12 for Friday and Saturday. Season memberships are available. The production, which is co-produced by Wagner & Brown, is suitable for all ages. Production dates are Friday through March 20. For reservations call 682-4111.

The musical introduces an element not found in the original children's novel.

"There's two different worlds that operate inside the play," Bachmann said. "The world of reality and contrasted with that is the world of people's dreams."

Included in the musical is a chorus of Dreamers, spirits who replay scenes from the past. The contrast between the two worlds is designed to help those who continue to suffer from the loss of loved ones reconcile their losses.

Despite the serious nature of the problems with which the characters in "The Secret Garden" wrestle, Bachmann said, "People who come and see 'The Secret Garden' are going to finish the evening feeling contented, which is good. It's one of the reasons why we wanted to do this particular show so much. And I think this is probably the reason why it's as popular now as it was when it was written in 1911."

'Hand selling' took 'Bridges' to No. 1

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — What's hot in hardcover books is also likely to be hot in audio format.

More than a year after the book and audio were released, "The Bridges of Madison County" is still bobbing up and down within the top three slots on The New York Times hardcover fiction list — and holding on at No. 3 on Publishers Weekly's January Audio Best-sellers list. In its "Audio Best of the Year" roundup for 1993, PW called it a "publishing mega-phenomena."

But "Bridges" wasn't an instant hit in either format. The initial press run for the book was small; in fact, it didn't get much notice until sales took off when bookstore clerks embraced it and made an effort to "hand sell" it.

"It was the strongest fiction tape of last year — but it was a slow process," said Michael Viner of Dove Audio, the publisher of the audio version of "Bridges."

The Dove Audio version was released about a month after the Warner hardcover.

"We were disappointed in the audio sales for the first six months, and, indeed, B. Dalton (bookstore chain) didn't want it," he said. "We had to give them a super discount to even put it in (their stores).

"Unfortunately, the buyers at the chains buy their audio books based on how many hardback books they buy," he said.

He agreed that audio still is, in some respects, a stepchild of mainstream publishing, but added he thinks that will change.

Viner said he bought "Bridges" while it was still in manuscript for the Warner book.

"We read it in the beginning and bought that, and luckily, his next book ('Slow Waltz in Cedar Bend'), as well. I thought it was a lovely little book." But, Viner added, "I had no idea what it would do."

Viner estimated that the hardcover book has sold 8 million copies, with a million more in Japan; he said Dove has released about 250,000 cassettes, and "Bridges" is now also available in CD format.

Viner was pleased that the book, only 171 pages in hardcover, could be recorded unabridged on two cassettes.

"That made it particularly attractive," Viner said, "because we like to do unabridged when it can be done."

From the beginning, author Robert James Waller wanted to do his own reading, "and that was fine with us," Viner said.

Actress Deborah Raffin, who with her husband, Viner, was one of the co-founders of Dove, worked with Waller on the project.

"Deborah's built a very good relationship with him, and has enjoyed working with him very much," Viner said.

Dove, which Viner says is the largest independent spoken-word audio publisher, is based in Beverly Hills and has studios there. But Waller lives in Iowa, so Raffin went there for the recording session.

"'Bridges' went very smoothly," said Raffin, "as did 'Slow Waltz.' Robert Waller is a wonderful reader; he's a pro, and extremely nice to work with, and so the production was very smooth."

Dove has several editions of "Bridges" available, including a limited-edition CD.

"I believe that the future is CD," said Viner, who was formerly director of MGM Records.

Dove will release more than 100 titles in CD format this year.

"All the other companies are saying they want to get into the record stores, but they're going there on cassette, which is just 20 percent of the total sales," he said.

Raffin said the audience for books on audio is expanding beyond freeway commuters.

She said she listens to books on audio while she exercises, and noted that they are also used while people jog, do housework and as entertainment for children instead of turning on the TV.

If your opponents know what they are doing, you are not going to get rich doubling freely bid slams. Therefore, it is eminently sensible to follow Theodore Lightner's advice: aces were present, South contracted for a grand slam in clubs. When West doubled, South realized there was a danger of a ruff and retreated to seven no trump.

West led a heart, declarer called for the ten from dummy and East made a good play by ducking. Declarer won the ace perforce and took two rounds of clubs, ending in dummy. Now South made West pay a heavy price for the Lightner double.

If West could ruff a diamond, East had to have all five missing cards in the suit headed by the ten, so the suit was not going to run. The singleton diamond was led from the table and, when East followed low, declarer finessed the nine! As a result, the grand slam sailed home with a trick to spare.

Monday morning quarterbacks will tell you that West would have done better not to double seven clubs—East might have found a diamond lead anyway. In all honesty, though, we must admit that we, too, vice and use the double to direct a lead, usually the first suit bid by dummy. Once in a while though, that action can backfire.

South's hand met both criteria for a jump shift—a self-sufficient suit and a fit for partner's suit. When Blackwood showed all the would probably have doubled seven clubs. Switch the nine and eight of diamonds or give North a singleton nine instead of the seven spot and seven no trump fails by two tricks.
