City commissioners have trouble finding more cuts in budget

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Tuesday night's Pampa City Commission work session again exploded in a conflict of personalities with commissioners only willing to agree with each other that the five-hour meeting had accomplished nothing.

"Let's just bring this thing (budget discussions) to a head at the next meeting and vote on it," said Mayor David McDaniel.

He was critical of the commission's inability to work together at all during budget discussions.

City Manager Bob Hart, after cutting $3 million out of last year's budget, said that to cut any more would be to cut services to Pampa residents.

However, Commissioner Richard Peet said he was confident that several thousand more dollars be pruned from the proposal.

"For example, I wonder if I could justify to my neighbor that we spend $68,000 in 10 months of travel," Peet said. "You know, at home I often have to say that the money is gone and that's it."

The proposed budget calls for a 2 cent tax increase.

Commissioner Ray Hupp sided with Peet that more cuts could be made.

"We can get into a lot of areas that (the city manager) can totally justify. But I don't want a tax increase. My experience tells me that we could cut enough to stop a tax increase.

"Let's get the men who know what they're doing to go back and re-do this budget," Hupp said.

Hart responded to all suggestions of more budget cuts by saying, "If you keep cutting, whoever sits on this commission two or three years from now will really be in bad shape."

He was critical of the commission, saying that they had provided the city staff little or no direction to go in.

"Sometimes I really feel like you all ought to go and find another city manager! That's the point I'm getting to. We've cut staff by 15 percent and we've cut the budget," Hart said.

Hupp responded by saying his call for more cuts was not an attack on the city mangager. "I'm not knocking you professionally, Bob. I'm suprised you think I am."

Most of the evening was spent pursuing a line-item agenda, even though the commission had previously agreed that was not the direction they would pursue.

In addition to criticizing the travel budget, Peet said he was concerned about the amount of money that was spent on office supplies.

"I come to a meeting on Tuesday and I get this stack of papers," Peet said, holding up a large notebook. "I come back in a few days and I get all this. A lot of them are duplicates."

Hart said that while they could reduce the amount of recources they provide the commission, he doubted that was what they wanted.

Commissioner Joe Reed and Mayor McDaniel sided with Hart, saying they appreciated the refernce material.

"When I got on this commission, we got one sheet of paper, the agenda. That was it. I'm glad we've got all this to go by," McDaniel said.

Among the few items commissioners found common ground on were canceling county fire service, since the county would not agree to a new contract that would help defray city expenses. This will save the city an estimated $20,000 annually.

Commissioners also agreed on working toward a city-run ambulance service and canceling the existing contract with Rural/Metro Ambulance Service; pursuing legal action against Southwestern Bell for overcharges; and renegotiating the city contract with Sammons Communications Inc. for better citywide cable service.

Most of those items had already been discussed in previous commission sessions.

Commissioners began the evening in a special session during which McDaniel made a gesture toward a more unified tone. During that meeting McDaniel reversed his earlier "nay" vote on the $600,000 loan to pay for new city equipment.

Last Tuesday he had voted against the measure, blaming the need for the loan on the cost of the new municipal golf course.

However, McDaniel said that the commission needed a show of unity and he was prepared to make it. This caused the loan

15 die in Dallas plane crash

GRAPEVINE (AP) — A Delta Airlines jetliner carrying 104 people crashed and burned on takeoff today at Dallas Fort-Worth Airport, killing at least 15 people, officials said. At least 20 survived.

Witnesses said the plane went down in hazy sunshine, plowed into the dirt at a runway, broke into two and burst into flames. Many of the survivors climbed to safety through a charred hole in the top of the cabin.

The fire was brought under control quickly, but the partially-blackened, split-open fuselage smoldered more than an hour after the 9:03 a.m. accident, which closed the airport.

An unattributed CBS News report at 11 a.m. CDT said at least 15 people perished.

Delta said the Boeing 727 was Flight 1141 en route to Salt Lake City, carrying 97 passengers and seven crew members, said Jim Lundy, a Delta spokesman in Atlanta. The flight originated in Jackson, Miss., Delta said.

In Washington, National Transportation Safety Board spokesman Michael Benson said at least seven were killed and at least 20 survived.

"There are probably more" survivors, he said. "We don't know for sure."

"We are anticipating receiving some casualties but we have no idea how many," said Bill Fabian, spokesman Tarrant County Medical Examiner's office.

"The plane had slid sideways about the last 100 yards on the ground. It wasn't a violent crash. It wasn't cartwheeling or anything like that," said Jerry Weeks, of Irving, who works for an airline shuttle service, talked to some of the survivors, some of whom were on stretchers.

"They had no idea what happened," Weeks said.

Survivors "weren't terribly distraught," Weeks said.. "They just asked us to call their relatives and say they were OK."

Delta said the three pilots survived.

Ben Waugh, an uninjured passenger on the flight, told reporters the plane "never got in the air."

"I heard a noise — I knew something was wrong," Waugh said. Within a minute of hearing the noise, the plane was in flames, he said. The plane tore in two, and passengers began scrambling through the roof, he said.

David Hooker, 28, of Celina, was waiting at a gas station at the south end of the airport when the plane crash.

"I heard the normal noise of an airplane taking off. I turned to watch and just barely saw the nose clear a building over there," he said pointing to a low-level warehouse type facility about a

Bush Jr. visits Pampa to support Milner

By BEAR MILLS

George Bush Jr., oldest son of Vice President George Bush, was in Pampa Tuesday campaigning for Larry Milner, Republican candidate for the 13th Congressional District.

The appearance confirms the seriousness of the Republican National Party to hold the seat being vacated by Beau Boulter, who is running against Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen for the U.S. senate. Last week Sen. Phil Gramm was in Pampa stumping for Milner.

"My father can be a more effective president when he has strong people in Congress," Bush said.

He said his reasons for visiting Pampa were twofold: "Texas is a battleground. (The Republicans) will win it in the fall, but it will take a lot of work.

'My father can be a more effective president when he has strong people in Congress.'

"Second, we're concerned that there will be a let-down after eight years. Most people just want change for change sake. But why change eight years of prosperity?" Bush said.

He said that once the issues were understood, the choice between Bush and Michael Dukakis would be clear.

"Texans don't want people like Dukakis who won't let the Pledge of Allegiance be said because it has the words 'one nation under God' in it," Bush said.

In Massachusetts children are not taught and do not recite the pledge in schools.

Bush also criticized Dukakis for allowing weekend furloughs for convicted murderers and supporting gun control.

Milner said that in spite of financial hard times in West Texas, he has out-raised his opponent, Democrat Bill Sarpalius, 2-1 in funds.

"We'll be back up here next week to announce our economic redevelopment plan. We need to help oil and agriculture all we can. But we also need to help diversify our economy every way we can. Next week I'll be showing how we plan to do that," Milner said.

He and Bush agreed that rural voters would be the key to Republican hopes in the November elections.

"I'm a West Texan, so I'll be spending a lot of time in West Texas talking to people about our concerns and the kind of leadership we want," Bush said.

Milner said Vice President Bush was set on "building on the sturdy foundation laid by Ronald Reagan.

"During President Reagan's two terms in office, the economy has created 17 million new jobs. We need to keep the economy growing. That's my commitment," Milner said.

In addition to the luncheon visit in Pampa, Bush and Milner campaigned in Amarillo, Dumas, Canadian, Perryton and Borger during the day.

Chamber officials expect Enterprise Zone to aid economy

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Pampans may soon see a change in the business climate now that the Texas Department of Commerce has formally OK'd the Enterprise Zone.

Bruce Barton, executive vice president of the Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce, and Glen Hackler, assistant to City Manager Bob Hart, traveled to Austin Tuesday to appear before the TDC and plead Pampa's case.

Their efforts proved to be successful, culminating six months of work by the Pampa Industrial Foundation, Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce, Pampa Independent School District, city of Pampa and Gray County Commissioners Court.

An on-site follow-up visit from TDC officials is expected in about two weeks, Chisum said.

To date, Pampa's Enterprise Zone is the only such area approved by the TDC west of Mineral Wells. "Right now, we're the only approved Enterprise Zone in the Texas Panhandle," said Warren Chisum, chamber president.

Through the Enterprise Zone, the Pampa chamber and local governing bodies hope to attract new business and industry to the area, as well as stimulate expansion of established businesses, Chisum said.

The Enterprise Zone, a concept formed by the Texas Economic Development Commission (TEXCEL), is intended to incorporate tax incentives and government services, while smoothing regulatory problems for prospective businesses or established businesses wanting to expand.

To qualify for an Enteprise Zone, Pampa had to prove the residents of the designated area had an unemployment rate 1½ times that of the state average, Chisum said.

Chamber figures show that 26.12 percent or 1,866 of the population in the local Enterprize Zone are below the poverty level.

Chisum said the Enterprize Zone encompasses most of the southern section of the city, as well as both industrial parks, the area surrounding Hoechst Celanese, IRI and most of the Price Road area.

More than one area in a county can be designated as an Enterprise Zone, officials say. Other areas in the county are being investigated as possibilities.

TDC approval of Pampa's Enterprise Zone could provide a much-needed boost to the local economy, Chisum said. "It has certainly been an asset to us," he said.

As the leading economic developer, the chamber of commerce will be using the Enterprise Zone as a tool to acquire new business, he said.

"We do have several new businesses interested in Pampa," he said. "We have five prospects we are talking to about coming to Pampa, as well as expansion of local manufacturing."

The powerful incentives included in the Enterprise Zone could be the deciding factor in whether a business chooses to come to this area or not, Chisum said.

Presently, 6,000 hard-hit communities in the nation are aggressively seeking to attract about 100 industries, the chamber president explained, or in other words, about 100 cities are vying for the interest of one new business.

Pampa ISD board members and city commissioners voted unanimously to accept the principles outlined in the Enterprise Zone this summer.

All of the Gray County commissioners, with the exception of Precinct 1 Commissioner Jim Greene, also passed a resolution pledging the county's participation. Greene voted against the resolution, he said, because he did not feel it was fair to county residents whose property was not included in the zone.

Pampa's Enterprise Zone includes a four-part plan of financial incentives, local and state assistance, technical training and support, and follow-up.

Chamber officials anticipate that in the next three years the Enterprise Zone will bring in approximately 137 new jobs, a total business investment of $28 million, additional city revenues of approximately $7,680 and net revenues to the county of $71,128. This does not include revenue from property taxes on additional housing.

In a ripple effect, the new manufacturing jobs will in turn lead to seven new retail establishments, 65 non-manufacturing jobs, and a population increase of 262 people plus an increased school enrollment of 79, chamber officials say.

"While others have used consultants that have cost up to $20,000, Pampa has done this with all in-house people," Chisum said. "It's a star in our cap to be able to do this without any outside consultants."

"We were also assisted by Mary Nabors of the Texas Employment Commission," he said. "Her office supplied the employment figures that we needed. We had to use her technical people to achieve the qualifications (for the Enterprise Zone)."

"Pampa is the second largest city and fast becoming the most active city in industry development in the Texas Panhandle," Chisum added.

County commissioners preparing to review revised '88-'89 budget

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Following a month of intensive budget work sessions, Gray County commissioners are ready to consider the revised 1989 budget and set the tax rate for the coming year.

Commissioners will look at these two items and 10 others when they meet in regular session at 9:30 a.m. Thursday in the second floor courtroom of Gray County Courthouse.

It was truly a battle of the budget as commissioners fought to close a $1 million gap between anticipated revenue and proposed expenditures throughout the month of August.

After three budget workshops — two were eight hours long — and the combined efforts of most county officeholders, the $4.7 million budget was reduced to $4.057 million. The remaining $515,000 needed to fund the 1989 budget will come from the Highland General Hospital interest bearing account, commissioners decided Friday.

Commissioners did not expect to increase the current tax rate of 25.6 cents per $100 valuation at the conclusion of last week's work session.

Firefighting services promises to be a hot topic at the meeting Thursday. During the budget work sessions, commissioners agreed not to accept the city of Pampa Fire Department's contract for services in the county, increased $20,000 from the $85,000 paid in 1988.

A letter informing the Pampa Fire Department of their decision was mailed following the meeting. Commissioners did agree to accept the contract if the city Fire Department would provide services for $85,000.

Meanwhile, county officials are considering a proposal from former Pampa Fire Chief J.D. Ray that would form a county volunteer fire department at the same cost.

Other items on Thursday's agenda to be considered by Gray County commissioners include the following:

- A request from Gray County Airport Board to purchase a snow plow for the Perry Lefors Field.
- Changes to ambulance contract with Rural/Metro Ambulance Service.
- A letter from city of Pampa concerning offers to purchase two properties taken by delinquent tax sale.
- Purchase of two CRTs from the Gray County Appraisal District and installation charges from NCR.
- A letter from the Potter County judge concerning the Amarillo Strategic Area Plan.

Also listed on the agenda is a request from Gray County Tax Assessor/Collector Margie Gray for replacement of an employee and for permission to attend to schools.

In addition, commissioners are scheduled to recognize County Treasurer Scott Hahn's completion of 20 hours of continuing education.

Consideration of salaries and bills and any time deposits and transfers that are necessary are also included in the agenda for Thursday.

Computer 'viruses' rivals battling each other instead of 'the enemy'

By PETER COY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Rivals in the fight against computer "viruses" are spending much of their time battling each other instead of their common enemy: the software invaders that can secretly destroy computer data.

The dispute concerns which of two groups has the qualifications and impartiality to evaluate anti-virus software for customers. The competition could slow progress in combating the viruses.

"I personally know most of the people in this industry and I have never seen this kind of animosity," Brian Camenker, head of the PC users group of the Boston Computer Society, said Tuesday.

The battle centers on products — called "vaccines" — that are designed to combat viruses. Viruses are tiny pieces of computer code that pranksters or others slip into normal programs to "infect" computers when used.

Although they are rare and have done limited damage so far, viruses are feared because of their potential to be spread from one computer to another, wiping out millions of dollars' worth of data in minutes.

Publicity about recent viruses — including those dubbed the "Christmas Virus," the "Black Friday Virus" and the "Pakistani Brain" — led to anti-viral software products, but there is no easy or reliable way to know whether they work.

Customers and producers agree on the need for an independent panel of experts to review the software. The question splitting the industry is who should be in charge.

Pitted against each other are the 2-month-old Computer Virus Industry Association, based in Santa Clara, Calif., and a loose collection of other computer experts led by Jon R. David, a consultant in Tappan, and Harold Highland, editor of Computers & Security magazine in Elmont.

The controversy heated up Monday with the publication of a front-page article on the debate in MIS Week, a trade newspaper.

Each side accuses the other of using sloppy techniques and manipulating the testing process for its own purposes. The intensity of the debate has left some software developers disgusted with the whole business.

An independent testing panel is essential because most computer users have never seen a virus. If they had a useless defense, they would not know it until a virus caused problems.

proposal to be passed unanimously.

During the meeting, Hart informed commissioners that state approval for an Enterprise Zone had been granted earlier in the afternoon.

All spirit of cooperation soon faded, however, when the five commissioners adjourned to the work session.

"In my work enviornment, we've been cutting costs and not giving increases. But here we say that we don't have the money so let's have a tax increase," Hupp said.

Hart responded by saying that the city had already lost one employee to Hupp's company because they paid better than the city. He also said that staffers had amended an earlier proposal for an across-the-board 5 percent pay increase for city employees.

Under the new plan, employees who had been with the city less than one year would serve a 12-month probation before being granted the increase.

Peet responded by saying he was shy to "take away" the raise, since it had already been reported in the media that one was likely to be approved. Originally, Peet and Hupp expressed the most serious doubts about the pay raise plan.

Peet also questioned $6,500 in the budget under the heading "dues and subscriptions."

Hart said that money went to the city's membership in the Texas Municipal League and other national and state organizations. While he could not justify their cost in dollars and cents, Hart said the groups provided a number of valuable resource services to the city.

Car-pooling was suggested by Peet as a way to reduce the city's fleet of 18 vehicles. In response Hart went through each car in the city inventory and explained why it was neccessary. He said all unnesessary vehicles were removed from the city fleet on his arrival.

"You had a lot more cars owned by the city then than you do now," Hart said

Commissioner Reed said Clean Pampa Inc. was one area he would consider cutting off. Currendy the city provides $5,000 to their budget.

"What do they do? I just can't see that they're neccessary," Reed said.

McDaniel responded by saying the organization had gone a long ways toward creating a litter-free Pampa.

"If we have any hopes of being named an All-American City, we should keep them," Hart said.

McDaniel agreed. "They are fulfilling the areas we've asked them to cover. That's heading up a lot of the campaigns and making sure the Adopt-A-Park program is working. Let's leave them alone."

In the end the commission could not agree on one area the budget could be further cut. Hart said his staff would again review the 356-page document, looking for items that could be axed.

The commission will meet again Tuesday, Sept. 6 for another budget session.

"Then there was a cloud of smoke about three stories high and an explosion," Hooker said.

"I was coming over the bridge on I-30 in Arlington, and I saw a big ball of fire going into the air," Greg Isaacs of Dallas told KRLD radio. "I started driving over there and it looked like it was over near DFW, and I thought, 'No way could it be an airplane accident.'

"I could tell it was over near DFW. It was an unbelievably big explosion. I could not believe it — I absolutely could not believe it was that big an explosion," Isaacs said.

Fire trucks were blanketing the wreckage with foam.

The jet lay smoldering in two sections under a cloudless sky, and the top half of the front section burned completely away.

The tail-section was not visible, and only a portion of the rear half of the jet with the name Delta above about a dozen seat windows was not scorched or blackened.

Less than an hour after the accident, rescue teams in asbestos suits were beginning to walk through the wreckage, looking for additional passengers and spraying water on sections still aflame.

A constant stream of ambulances with sirens wailing flowed in and out of the flat, grassy field where the jet crashed. Several helicopters were also coming in and out of the crash site.

Relatives and friends of people believed to be on the flight were ushered into two meeting rooms at the Delta terminal, near a chapel.

Delta officials contacted several ministers from suburban Dallas-Fort Worth to help comfort those at the terminal, said a minister who declined to give his name.

Bush, Dukakis still at blows

By The Associated Press

George Bush turned Michael Dukakis' 25-year-old snowblower on him to argue that the frugal Massachusetts governor would shortchange national defense, while Dukakis said the vice president failed a vital test of judgment by letting the Reagan administration sell arms to Iran.

The sniping took place Tuesday as the Dukakis presidential campaign planned an early battery of television commercials and pointed to organizational successes in establishing strong, well-financed, grassroots organizations in nearly every state.

But there still was lingering tension between the Dukakis camp and Jesse Jackson over how the civil rights leader and former Dukakis opponent would campaign for the Democratic ticket.

Sources who spoke only on condition of anonymity said Jackson resisted attempts to limit the states in which he campaigns, but it was still unresolved where and when Dukakis and Jackson would appear together.

Bush ridiculed Dukakis' snowblower — the prized emblem of the Democratic presidential nominee's budget-consciousness — during one of several appearances in which he continued to criticize Dukakis as weak on defense.

"If he doesn't want to modernize his snowblower, that's his concern," Bush said at Fort Campbell, Ky., referring to the 25-year-old snowblower that figured prominently in a film about Dukakis at the Democratic National Convention. "But if he doesn't modernize our weapons systems, that puts the national security of the United States in considerable risk."

The vice president also was trying to broaden his campaign beyond traditional Republican themes by highlighting environmental issues today.

Bush was traveling to Michigan, where his schedule included a speech near Lake Erie to environmentalist groups. Later in the week, Bush, who has proposed a ban on ocean dumping, will visit several beach sites in New Jersey and New England.

Aides said he also may make a foray deep into Dukakis territory — a campaign event on polluted Boston Harbor, an environmental disaster that has been a political embarrassment for the Massachusetts governor.

Bush's running mate, Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle, will be traveling to Louisiana with his wife, Marilyn, as part of a five-state southern swing.

Dukakis, resurrecting the Iran-Contra arms and money scandal as a campaign issue, said Bush was head of an anti-terrorism task force that had issued a report denouncing any concessions to terrorist nations.

"Making tough decisions is a test of leadership," Dukakis said. "George Bush endorsed the decision to sell arms to Iran and in doing so he failed that test."

FCC ordered to have hearing on radio discrimination claims

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Court of Appeals has ordered the Federal Communications Commission to conduct a hearing on questions two Texas radio stations discriminated against black employees and failed to meet affirmative action obligations.

The court ruled the FCC had "abused its discretion" in renewing a broadcasting license for KIEZ-AM and KWIC-FM of Beaumont without holding a hearing on discrimination claims raised by two black groups.

The court said the FCC instead had relied on stetchy and contradictory information from the stations' owner, Pyle Communications of Beaumont Inc., in making its decision.

"Under these circumstances the commission abused its discretion in issuing the license renewal," the court held in its Aug. 19 ruling.

FCC officials said the agency would abide by the ruling and hold a hearing on the issues, initially raised by the Beaumont Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the National Black Media Coalition.

"It's a very positive ruling. The FCC won't be permitted in the future just to wash out without a hearing serious allegations of racial discrimination in broadcasting," said David Honig, attorney for the two groups.

Pyle acquired the two Beaumont stations in 1981 and by 1983, the number of blacks at the two stations fell from 11 to one. During the period, the stations hired 112 new employees but only three were black, and none stayed on the job longer than two months, the ruling said.

"This was by far the most egregious case of discrimination brought before the FCC in 22 years," Honig said, yet the FCC granted the license renewal based on Pyle's answers to three letters sent by the agency over three years.

Pyle applied for the license renewal in 1983 and the FCC granted it a short-term renewal in 1987, said Richard Bozzelli, special assistant to the FCC general counsel.

At issue, the court ruled, is why black employment dropped so dramatically after the stations were acquired by Pyle and why blacks were so underrepresented in subsequent hiring by the stations during the period from 1981 to 1983; why the licensee contradicted itself in statements to the FCC about the reasons for the departures of several black employees; and why the stations were unable to maintain an adequate affirmative action program during the years in question, as required by FCC regulations.

"The record evidence in these three areas raises troubling questions that remain unresolved about whether the licensee practiced intentional employment discrmination," the court said.

"The commission acted unreasonably when it pronounced itself satisfied on these points based entirely on the licensee's sketchy and sometimes contradictory explanations."

A documented pattern of intentional discrimination will almost invariably disqualify a broadcaster from obtaining or retaining a license, the court said in its ruling.

Furthermore, stations must show they have an affirmative action plan in place, as part of their federal mandate to serve the public interest.

"We hold that the commission's decision (to renew the license) was not consistent with the requirements of the Communications Act of 1934 that the commission hold a hearing when a 'substantial and material question of fact is presented,' " said the ruling from the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Robert W. Healy, attorney for Pyle, said through a spokesman Tuesday that his law firm has a policy against commenting on clients' cases.

Charles W. Pyle, president of Pyle Communications, in an affidavit filed in the case in 1984 denied he or the stations had engaged in discriminatory practices.

One of four burn victims is rushed to medical center upon arrival in San Antonio early this morning.

Four air show crash burn victims arrive in Texas today for treatment

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Three American serviceman and an Italian soldier burned during an air show crash in West Germany arrived at a military burn treatment facility here today, officials said.

The four victims, three military service personnel and a dependent of a military serviceman, were taken off a military C-141 cargo plane that landed at Kelly Air Force Base and taken to the burn unit at Brooke Army Medical Center about 2 a.m.

BAMC spokesman Ray Dery said that the four suffered a variety of second-and third-degree burns and would be listed in critical condition under their injuries could be assessed by burn specialists.

The four were identified as Air Force Master Sgt. Stephen Hull, 32, stationed at Kelly Air Force Base in San Antonio; Army 1st Lt. Kim Strader, 30, of Salt Lake City; and Army Pfc. Myron Riggs, 24, of Pittsburgh; and Anderea DelaRosa, 33, a sergeant major assigned to the Italian Embassy.

The victims were among those injured Sunday when three Italian jets crashed during an air show at Ramstein Air Force Base. More than 40 people were killed and another 500 injured.

Hull is assigned to the Air Force Broadcasting Service, a unit of the Air Force Service Information and News Center, said Kelly spokeswoman Phebe Brown.

Brown said Hull, of Covina, Calif., was in West Germany as part of a tour visiting broadcasting units in Eurpoe.

"He was at Ramstein, but was not reporting on the air show," Brown said Tuesday.

On Monday, a five-member team of burn specialists from BAMC flew to West Germany to help treat the victims and decided to bring the four to the United States.

"They are all listed in critical condition, but we have nothing to go on beyond that," BAMC spokesman.

The 40-bed burn unit at BAMC is staffed by 240 physicians, nurses and support personnel.

Sailors injured during attacks in the Persian Gulf in the last 15 months were among the victims treated at the unit, which is run by the Army Institute of Surgical Research.

The burn unit began in 1943 in New York and was moved to BAMC in 1946 and in 1949 was given permission to study burn trauma and has developed various techniques for treating burn wounds, Clark said.

West German tragedy probably won't affect Texas air shows

By The Associated Press

The crash of three Italian jets that killed and injured spectators at a West German flight demonstration probably will not affect upcoming Texas air shows, organizers said.

Air performances in the United States already follow strict Federal Aviation Administration guidelines that ensure the safety of spectators, show coordinators said.

Forty-nine spectators were killed and 500 others were injured Sunday in the crash at Ramstein Air Base in West Germany.

Injuries to so many spectators could not happen at a Confederate Air Force show, or at any air show in the United States, according to Col. Archie Donahue, CAF director of flight operations, and Ralph Royce, CAF executive director.

When the CAF performs its World War II airpower demonstrations — complete with simulated bombs, fireballs and machine gun fire — it does so only under FAA control, authorities said.

"We operate here under a waiver, with very rigid rules, promulgated by the FAA," Donahue said. "So, anytime those high-speed aircraft are operating in front of a crowd in the United States, they're going parallel to the crowd line."

Although the West German tragedy wasn't expected to hurt attendance at the Confederate Air Force's Airshow '88 in Harlingen on Oct. 6-9, the disaster will not go unnoticed, CAF leaders said.

Officials said no changes will be made in the Wings Over Houston air show Oct. 1-2 at Ellington Field, and sponsors of the Fort Worth International Airfest planned for Oct. 15-16 at Meacham Field said that show also is likely to be unaffected by the tragedy.

The program and safety measures for Wings Over Houston have been inspected and approved by the FAA, said Lou Lewis, spokesperson for the show. That includes the flight maneuvers the U.S. Navy Blue Angels will perform.

The Blue Angels performance in Houston is expected to draw an even larger crowd than the estimated 100,000 people who saw the show last year, Lewis said.

The Blue Angels and other military flying teams, such as the Air Force's Thunderbirds, perform maneuvers the agency has approved in advance, said Jacques Lonchambon, an FAA safety inspector.

Air shows also must meet stringent safety requirements, including separation between an aircraft's flight path and the crowd, minimum altitude for acrobatics and a prohibition of acrobatic maneuvers in which aircraft fly toward the crowd, he said.

Featured in the Fort Worth International Airfest will be several acts, including a demonstration by the Thunderbirds, wingwalkers, skydivers and aerobatic teams.

City Manager Doug Harman said the city would not sponsor an air show if it were not safe.

"In the contract that was awarded by the City Council for the airfest, we have $5 million worth of liability insurance that would cover something like this," Harman said.

Loretta Scott, the city's assistant aviation director, said FAA requirements call for air show promoters to establish a "sterile box" in which the airshow is performed.

"Once the sterile box is established, no living creatures are allowed inside it," Scott said.

The day after the West German crash, FAA officials said the agency had no plans to ban or curtail air shows in the United States. The agency cited the safety record of such shows in this country.

Customs seizes more than ton of cocaine

HIDALGO (AP) — Federal officials said they expect to find the truck driver who walked away from more than a ton of cocaine concealed in the roof of a trailer.

A sniffer dog aided in the seizure of the 2,735 pounds of cocaine, said Billy McFarland, chief Customs inspector at Hidalgo, a border city in the Rio Grande Valley across the Rio Grande from Reynosa, Tamaulipas, Mexico.

"We have information on the driver and we expect some arrests," said McFarland.

The drug shipment, with an estimated street value of $500 million, was found Monday evening at the Hidalgo port of entry concealed in the roof of an 18-wheel rig's trailer, officials said.

The trailer appeared to be empty, McFarland said, but a Customs inspector in a program for inspecting empty trucks decided to give it a closer look.

"The inspector didn't like the looks of the trailer, he brought the dog over and he (the dog) alerted us to the presence of drugs," McFarland said.

Customs inspectors then drilled into the top of the trailer and found the cocaine in 5-inch-deep hidden compartments stretching the trailer's entire 45-foot length and 10-foot width of the trailer.

"We had to peel the entire top of the trailer off," McFarland said.

Customs officials said it was the second largest land seizure of cocaine at a U.S. port of entry on the Mexican border, surpassed only by the seizure last September of 3,589 pounds of cocaine at El Paso.

The 2,735 pounds of cocaine occupied the space of a medium-size automobile, McFarland said.

On Aug. 4 at Hidalgo, Customs officials working with National Guardsmen discovered 8,464 pounds of marijuana in a similar, supposedly empty truck trailer, which officials described as the largest land seizure of marijuana ever at a U.S. port of entry.

Discovery astronauts, control crews have final rehearsal

SPACE CENTER, HOUSTON (AP) — Astronauts resolved a problem caused by a a simulated failure of their craft's right engine as part of a final rehearsal of the upcoming flight of Space Shuttle Discovery.

The 56-hour simulation began Tuesday and involved about 300 people at Johnson Space Center in preparation for mission STS-26, a four-day flight that will mark the first launch of a NASA space shuttle in more than 2½ years.

NASA spokeswoman Barbara Selby said, "The first thing after launch, when they were going into orbit, the right engine failed so that they had to do what's called 'abort to orbit.'"

"That means the shuttle can still make it into orbit, but lower than planned, so they have to adjust their activities," Selby said. "They did achieve the ATO, as we call it, and made the necessary adjustments to continue the mission."

The shuttle crew faced another problem later Tuesday when they tried to deploy the $100 million communications satellite.

A tilt table used to deploy the satellite stuck at a 24-degree angle, meaning two crew members will have to go outside the orbiter today to manually adjust the table to the needed 50-degree angle, Selby said. That simulation will take place in a water facility at JSC, she added.

Officials say Commander Rick Hauck, pilot Richard Covey and mission specialists David Hilmers, Mike Lounge and George "Pinky" Nelson are expected to face about 150 simulated problems during the lengthy test.

But the first problem of the day wasn't simulated. The scheduled 8 a.m. test got off to a late start because of a malfunction in the shuttle simulator, but the problem was corrected and countdown ended at 9:04 a.m., said spokesman Bill Green.

Spokesman Brian Welch said as many as 200 others are taking part in the rehearsal in New Mexico and California, along with flight and ground crews at Johnson Space Center.

"The people who do the simulation, the 'sim' supervisors, sort of wage a mental battle with the flight controllers," Welch said. "They will do everything they can to make it more difficult."

'Little guys' are really 'big guys'

Off Beat

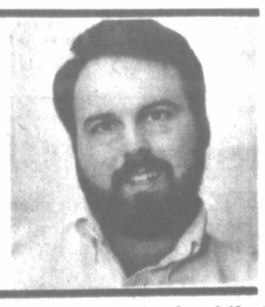
By Bear Mills



Máybe I was sleeping, but why haven't I heard one single politician talk about "the little guy." You know the type of speech: " ... and I'm the candidate that represents 'the little guy.' "

In the absence of that kind of political hogwash this time around, how about a few inches of newsprint for the little guy instead?

Actually, I don't believe in "the little guy." In our own minds each of us are "big guys." What person hasn't thought, at one time or another, "Boy, my life would sure make a great movie." Granted, it would have to be a movie about a $3.35 an hour taco maker, but what a story line!

There are probably very few of us who have the kind of life Hollywood is looking for. Our contributions are often small and quickly forgotten. But, hey, this column's for you.

How about the man (or maybe woman) who waxes the floors at the county courthouse? Those floors rate a solid 10 on the Shiny Scale. Anyone who's ever tried to wax a floor knows it is no small task. Waxy build-up is an ever present danger.

But whoever it is that waxes the courthouse floors doesn't know the meaning of the word "smudge." Those floors are like a work of art.

Let's also hear it for the people who put up the books we've returned at the public library. Putting up other people's reading material rates right up there with picking up other people's dirty dishes. Not glamorous, but neccesary.

Bank tellers have a less than glorious job. Is it their fault we can't balance our checkbook? No. Do they get the blame? You betcha'. Yet they smile and carry on, which is something of a chore all its own.

Have you ever tried to keep a good attitude while wearing pointy-toed pumps for eight hours? Neither have I, but it doesn't sound fun.

We could spend hours this way and still leave out a lot of people. So, let's just run down a few thousand people we've forgotten to thank: janitors, the guy who fixed our hamburger, gas station attendants, the mailman, whoever keeps having to fix the light at Hobart and Somerville, the lady that gets up at 3:30 each morning to go fix donuts and coffee, the lady who tranfers our call to the person we wanted to talk to when we called in the first place.

Then there is the person who takes all of last Sunday's bulletins out of the hymm books at church, the people who wash the windows at the office, the unseen soul on the other end of countless 1411 information calls and a host of others.

To each of you, "Thank you."

What would the world be without all of these unthanked and often unappreciated people. I shudder to even think about it.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Soviets will leave a legacy of death

Even as they celebrate the retreat of foreign troops from their land, Afghan refugees are finding that the litter of war is just as deadly as the troops that wage it.

The United Nations confirmed this week that the Soviet Union has withdrawn half of its 115,000 soldiers from that war-weary nation, thereby complying with the agreement signed in Geneva in April.

But even as the Afghan people celebrate their impending liberation, they fear treading on their own native soil. The problem is land mines, strewn by the tens of millions across the countryside, mainly by Soviet troops and the Afghan government they backed.

Current estimates suggest that between 10 million and 30 million of the deadly devices pollute Afghan soil. Most are plastic devices scattered by airplanes, helicopters, artillery and rocket launchers. Because they were strewn so haphazardly, they can't be found on maps. Because they are plastic, it's extremely difficult to detect them.

This is a recipe for tragedy when you add the human ingredient — the millions of Afghan refugees eager to return to their homeland once the remaining Soviet troops withdraw.

But if nothing is done, they will find many of their farms, fields, villages and roads still under siege from the deadly litter of the eight-year war. International efforts are under way to clear as many mines as possible and train even women and children in the delicate art of mine detection.

But U.S. State Department officials say the Soviets are dragging their feet on the cleanup and may actually be laying new mines as they withdraw from key areas.

The Soviet withdrawal is supposed to be a sign of its new, less-confrontational approach to world affairs. But Soviet leaders must realize that the land has to be returned to habitable form. If they expect to impress the world with a new attitude, they should join immediately in full-scale efforts to free the Afghan people from the continued horrors of their invasion. To do otherwise will taint the Afghan people's pending freedom — and Soviet creditability — with a lingering legacy of death.

If it ain't broke, don't fix it

James J. Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON - When Congress gets back to work on Sept. 7, barely a month will remain before scheduled adjournment in October.

The Senate will have a score of controversial bills to dispose of, among them H.R. 3400, a House bill to liberalize the Hatch Act. This is how to dispose of a pending bill: Kill it.

Named for Sen. Carl Hatch of New Mexico, the Hatch Act of 1939 has served a useful purpose in our public life — indeed, an indispensable purpose — for nearly 50 years.

The law has protected federal workers from political exploitation by their bureaucratic bosses. It has protected the public from the evils of party patronage. The law works, and the maxim applies: If it ain't broke, don't fix it.

The Hatch Act significantly restricts the partisan political activities of federal employees. This is the sacrifice they make in exchange for the benefits of federal employment.

Those who work for the U.S. government have a right to vote in all elections; they may publicly support candidates of their choice and contribute money to them; they may attend party conventions and rallies as spectators. Beyond that, the Hatch Act says no.

Under this "reform" bill the restrictions would be significantly eased. The bill would permit federal employees to hold office in a political party. They would be free in their off-duty hours to distribute campaign literature, to solicit votes for a favored candidate, to participate in telephone banks, to organize political rallies and to solicit contributions from fellow employees to a political action committee.

In the deceptive guise of "reform," the House bill proposes virtual repeal.

In November the House voted 305-112 for the bill. On July 7 the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs approved a slightly revised version. Only three senators dissented — Trible of Virginia, Rudman of New Hampshire and Roth of Delaware.

They filed a minority report that precisely sums up the situation:

"This legislation is bad for the federal employees because it unleashes irresistible pressures to become a captive soldier in political armies inside and outside the government.

"This legislation is bad for the federal government because it would undercut the neutral, non-partisan administration of programs by civil servants. It would replace merit with politics.

"This legislation is bad for the public because it would foster the creation of employee interest groups inside the government that might sabotage the will of the American people. The federal work force is the servant of the American people, to act as their instrument, not as their foil."

Sponsors of the bill make much of the argument that federal employees could exercise their expanded and liberalized privileges only "off the clock" or "after hours." The argument is a sham. Such are the regulatory and punitive powers of the federal government that many inspectors, agents and supervisors never are truly off-duty.

The citizen who is subject to their authority knows how to take a hint. When he reads in the papers that John Doe of the Federal Trade Commission has been elected treasurer of the local political party, the news carries a special meaning. Doe is no longer a neutral public servant. Doe is now a partisan politician.

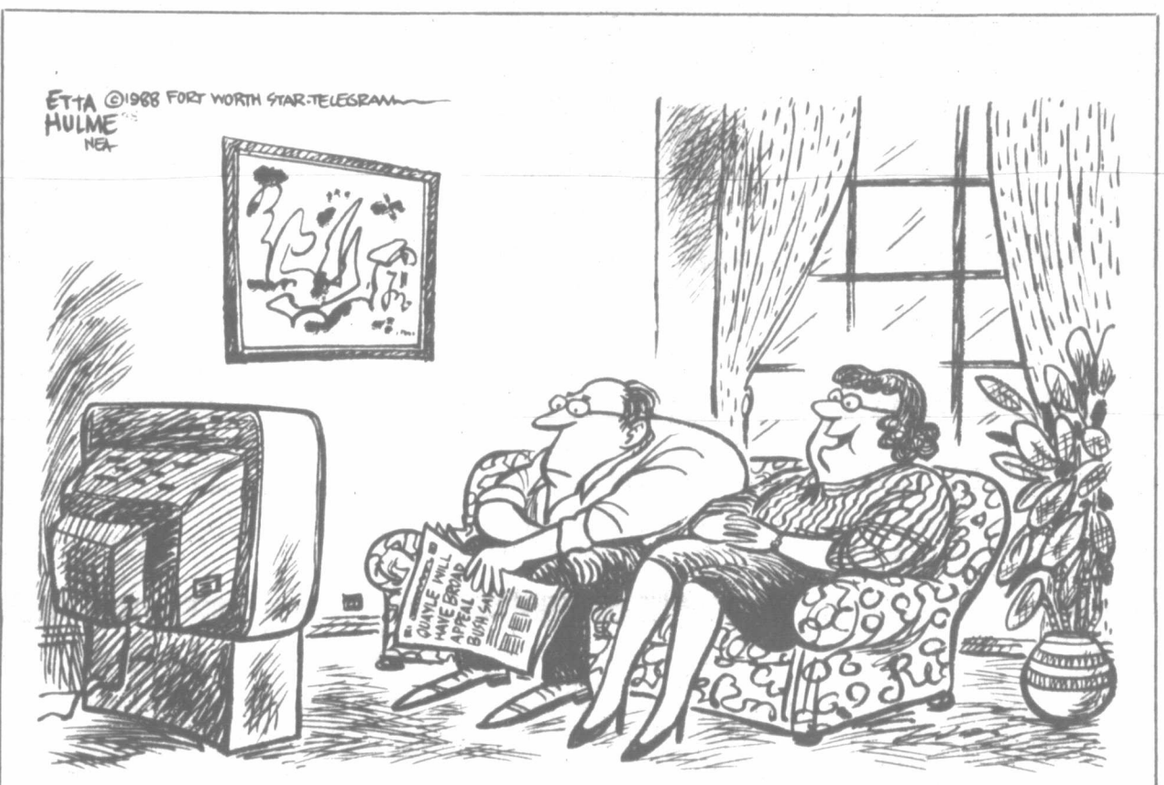
It is difficult to understand why leaders of the public employee unions are supporting the bill. They are inviting the very oppressions that characterized federal employment in the bad old days before Theodore Roosevelt embarked upon his crusade against the spoils system.

True, certain protective provisions of the existing Hatch Act would be retained. Employees could not be coerced into political activities intended to please their superiors.

But the "reform" bill, by greatly expanding the realm of permissible political activism, would produce subtle pressures almost impossible to prove in court. Employee evaluations, on which pay raises and promotions are based, are subjective judgments. With this bill, the old risk of political punishments and rewards would reappear.

Fortunately, many federal employees understand clearly what is involved. They have expressed opposition to the bill, thus joining such diverse groups as Common Cause and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

The existing law protects the federal worker, just as it protects the public at large. Let's leave it alone.



"I don't feel I'm being patronized. I really do think it's cute the way Lloyd Bentsen comes across as mature and seasoned."

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, Aug. 31, the 244th day of 1988. There are 122 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

One hundred years ago, on Aug. 31, 1888, Mary Ann Nicholls, a 42-year-old prostitute, was found stabbed to death in London's East End in what is generally regarded as the first of at least five murders committed by the notorious serial killer who came to be known as Jack the Ripper. Speculation about the identity of the Ripper, who was not known to have been apprehended, continues to this day.

On this date:

In 1688, preacher and novelist John Bunyan, author of The Pilgrim's Progress, died in London.

In 1881, the first U.S. tennis championships were played, in Newport, R.I.

In 1886, the first recorded major earthquake in U.S. history rocked Charleston, S.C., killing up to 110 people.

In 1887, inventor Thomas A. Edison received a patent for his Kinetoscope, a device which produced moving pictures.

In 1935, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed an act prohibiting the export of U.S. arms to belligerents.

A camp to believe in miracles

Paul Harvey

What a fun place to be — Camp Quality in Stewartsville, Mo.! Imagine it. Eighty children having the time of their lives!

There's swimming and boating and horseback riding, canoeing and fishing, archery and games of all kinds.

Want to learn? There are craft classes — candy-making, photograms, you name it.

One afternoon there may be a visit by the Moila clowns, after which they teach face-painting — allowing the camp's youngsters to paint themselves and one another.

Ronald McDonald is likely to drop in anytime with his magic show.

None of the visiting performers charges the camp anything; being with the kids of Camp Quality is its own reward.

One afternoon a fire truck came to call — the youngsters took turns riding on the truck and helped stage the biggest water fight that ever was!

Today, a bell choir, tomorrow a singing group, the next day a tractor pull. At suppertime a contemporary rock group will entertain and the youngsters will dance. There will be a ventriloquist, a treasure hunt. And, for the finale of the evening, an on-camp talent show.

Or one evening there may be a luau with real open-fire roast and and hula dancing and everybody in the most colorful costume he or she can design.

Camp Quality in Stewartsville, Mo., is one of an international group of such camps. The idea originated in Australia in 1983 and there are now 15 camps in five countries; two more are starting in the United States this year.

No government money. These camps are supported entirely by gifts. Parents of the children contribute only what they can and want to.

A very special "Buddy System" assigns each camp guest an individual companion, most of them students from area high schools.

The "Buddy System" has developed many abiding friendships. Many of them "lifelong" friendships.

Though for some the life is not very long.

You see, the only qualifications for admission to Camp Quality is that you must have cancer.

Until now a child with cancer has been severely limited by cautious doctors and anxious parents. Hospitals and treatment and confinement become a drab, dismal, depressing way of life.

At Camp Quality a child can be a child again — for however long. I have talked at length with camp nurses, counselors and dorm parents. Something strange and wonderful is happening. In such a few years, no professional would suggest that cancer is being "cured" by such unconventional therapy.

Yet, we are seeing it happen, more and more, elsewhere and at Camp Quality, that healing can be self-induced. Again, I make no claim beyond what the words of David Ben Gurion imply: "Anyone who does not believe in miracles is not a realist."

Dukakis, Bush each has made a mistake

By BEN WATTENBERG

Let us all pause for a moment and eat crow; fear not, it is low in saturated fats.

Accordingly, let it be noted that, contrary to reports, George Bush and Michael Dukakis are not the most boring men in America; there will be no panic buying of caffeine to stay awake. Nor will the presidential race be between Zorba the Clerk and Georgie the Wimp. It will not be about balloons and banalities. Moreover, the long primary campaigns were not exercises in silliness. It is not right to say, as so many have, that it's a shame in a country with so much talent we came up with two bozos.

Quite the opposite. The selection process has brought forth two skillful and admirable presidential candidates. It is likely that, as proper, we will see a serious election about ideas and the direction of the country.

Gov. Dukakis has shown himself to be an indefatigable marathoner — shrewd, intelligent, articulate, cautious as a rule, but daring when required (as in the choice of Lloyd Bentsen for his vice presidential running mate).

Dukakis has made one big mistake, which is correctable.

Vice President Bush has demonstrated that he is more than the candidate of the glowing resume. The early Bush-bashing was misguided: If elected, he is a man who can indeed leave footprints. On a scale of one to 10, I was tempted to rank his acceptance speech at 10½, but Bush gets one point taken off for neglecting to mention, by name, his support for the beleaguered contras. Still, it was a speech that set out a coherent and attractive political philosophy — call it "Reaganism with a human face."

Bush, like Dukakis, has also made one big mistake, which may or may not be redeemable.

What are the mistakes?

The Bush mistake clearly was the choice of Sen. Dan Quayle as his vice presidential running mate. The essence of the mistake does not concern Quayle's National Guard duty during Vietnam; that is only a symptom of the error. The mistake is in picking someone not known to the public.

In this media age, being tapped as a running mate confers instantaneous political celebrity — in Quayle's case perhaps for the next 30 (!) years. Such a choice should not be made arbitrarily by one person, even the presidential nominee. The voters deserve participatory rights; they deserve someone they know something about, someone who has gained their attention the old-fashioned way, by earning it.

Bush may still get lucky with Quayle. Who knows? Quayle may turn out to be a political wunderkind. But if Bush is really lucky, the overzealous pit bulls of the press corps may dig up enough so that Quayle will ask to be relieved. That would offer Bush a second chance.

Dukakis' error comes in the form of one statement in his speech: "... this election isn't about ideology. It's about competence."

Wrong. It won't wash. Competence to do what? The American people ought not, and do not want, to be choosing the ultimately efficient super-bureaucrat. A presidential election should not be about which man is entitled to a Civil Service rank of GS-100.

Until Dukakis puts his philosophy (i.e., ideology) on the table, he will be in difficulty. Sooner or later he will have to lay out an ideological framework. Sooner is better than later. Just as Bush is trying to reshape modern American conservatism, so ought Dukakis reshape modern American liberalism. If Bush is going to be "Reagan with a human face," Dukakis should start explaining why and how liberalism could have spine of steel.

That can be a winning philosophy. As a down payment, Dukakis should take another look at the situation in Nicaragua.

When, and as, all of the above transpires, Americans are going to be offered two choices and no echoes. It can be, and should be, a fine election.

California firefighter crews battle more than 170 fires

By BART ZIEGLER
Associated Press Writer

California firefighters battled more than 170 fires, while gusts in Yellowstone threatened to fan a 90,000-acre blaze toward 600 cabins and the park superintendent said there was no end in sight to this summer's wildfires.

Montana ranchers prepared for possible evacuation today, and crews fought woodland blazes in Idaho, Oregon, Washington, Nevada and Utah.

In California, nearly 9,500 lightning strikes Tuesday sparked scores of blazes a year after a similar barrage spawned devastating fires. Firefighters said more than 4,600 acres had burned, but they held most of the blazes to an acre or less in the drought-parched wildlands.

Crews were hampered by 100-plus-degree temperatures, winds and lightning in some areas. The unfavorable conditions were expected to continue today.

Altogether on state land, 73 lightning-sparked fires burned 2,700 acres, said state Department of Forestry spokeswoman Karen Terrill.

U.S. Forest Service spokesman Matt Mathes said 43 lightning-caused fires in Southern California national forests burned just 30 acres, while 60 blazes in Northern California national forests blackened 1,900 acres.

"We are flying over the areas to determine if there are any (other) hot spots," Terrill said.

Near San Francisco, fire swept through dry brush and trees Tuesday in Orinda, destroying five houses and badly damaging two others.

Police believe an electronically ignited toy rocket may have sparked the blaze, which was controlled in about two hours without reports of injuries.

"This has been the worst time of my life," said Beverly Hopp, whose 33-year-old home was destroyed. "What do you do after all these years?"

The only thing she and her husband, Al, could save was a desk containing money and insurance papers.

In Wyoming, flames from the 90,000-acre North Fork fire at Yellowstone National Park moved to within a quarter-mile Tuesday of the Canyon hotel and campground complex.

Firefighters hoped for an early winter to quell blazes burning about a fifth of the 2.2 million-acre park, but Yellowstone's superintendent offered little encouragement.

"When will this end? Frankly, ladies and gentlemen, that's anybody's guess," Robert Barbee told about 100 people Tuesday night at a meeting in nearby Gardiner, Mont.

Gusty winds forecast for this afternoon threatened to again close some park roads that were put off limits Tuesday afternoon but later reopened.

Yellowstone spokeswoman Linda Young said activity on the 34,000-acre Wolf Lake fire forced closure of one road, and a flareup in North Fork blaze closed Yellowstone's west entrance for several hours.

To the north in Montana, winds played havoc with efforts to control the 190,000-acre Clover-Mist fire, burning in Yellowstone and in neighboring Shoshone National Forest.

Officials closed U.S. 212 near Cooke City for a time Tuesday as soldiers chased spot fires.

Ranchers were planning for possible evacuation today along western Montana's Rocky Mountain Front where a previously "let-it-burn" wilderness fire jumped onto national forest and private land Tuesday. Hundreds of firefighters rushed to keep it from spreading further.

The 39,000-acre blaze in the Scapegoat Wilderness roared into Lewis and Clark National Forest, burning 7,000 additional acres.

Livestock and horses were removed from cabins threatened by the 9-week-old blaze, which was sparked by lightning, and some ranchers left as a precaution.

In Idaho, crews near the Wyoming line worked to protect ranches in the Caribou National Forest after a 6,000-acre fire burned to within a mile of the properties Tuesday. One family was evacuated because they lack a telephone and couldn't be notified in case the blaze blew up. Seventeen major fires are burning 70,000 acres in Idaho.

The number of firefighters more than doubled Tuesday to 679 at Oregon's biggest forest fire, which has burned 36,000 acres in the Wallowa-Whitman National Forest and the Hell's Canyon National Recreation Area.

Favorable weather in eastern Washington helped thousands of firefighters gain a handle on fires burning on more than 23,000 acres. Winds were light Tuesday as crews cut trails around nearly 70 percent of major fires on the Colville Indian Reservation and the Colville National Forest, officials said.

Study says colon cancer linked to inherited genes

BOSTON (AP) — About one in three Americans inherits a gene that increases the risk of getting cancer of the colon and rectum, which are among the nation's leading cancer killers, researchers said.

The scientists believe they have discovered the existence of one or perhaps more genes that make people highly susceptible to getting adenomatous polyps. Colon and rectal cancers develop from such growths.

The researchers theorize that the still-unidentified genetic factor underlies between 50 and 100 percent of all cancer of the colon and rectum, which strikes an estimated 147,000 Americans annually.

However, inheriting the gene does not mean that one is destined to have cancer. Other studies have shown that only about 5 percent of adenomatous polyps go on to become cancerous. The researchers believe other genetic factors or diet may play a role in turning the polyps cancerous in people who inherit the gene.

One expert said the study suggests that people with relatives who have colon or rectal cancer should be checked for the disease, starting perhaps at age 40.

The study, conducted by Dr. Lisa A. Cannon-Albright and colleagues at the University of Utah Medical Center, was based on examinations of 34 families with histories of colon and rectal cancer and polyps. It is being published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"It's been previously believed that polyps and colon cancer are just a product of the environment, primarily a dietary problem," said Dr. Randall W. Burt, senior author of the study. "Our study shows that a large fraction of the people who get colon cancer and polyps are susceptible by inheritance."

In a separate report in the journal, Dr. Bert Vogelstein and others from Johns Hopkins University report more evidence that a series of four or five genetic mutations and deletions are necessary for colon or rectal cancer to occur. Just how the two discoveries fit together is unclear, but Vogelstein said they don't necessarily contradict each other.

"It would suggest that for some reasons, members of those families who have colon cancer have a higher tendency to mutate one of these genes, or they already have inherited a mutated copy," Vogelstein said in an interview.

"If it takes four or five steps to get cancer, and they have already inherited one of them, that would explain why they get cancer more frequently, because they already have a head start," he said.

The American Cancer Society recommends that people older than age 50 have stool tests annually.

Democrats defend Dukakis' crime record

By The Associated Press

Defending Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis' record on crime, Texas Democrats say Vice President George Bush ought to be explaining his record as head of the nation's war on drugs.

"Americans are tired of the same old rhetoric in the war against crime," state Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock. "The Republicans have had their chance to do something about the problem ... It's time for a change."

Bush, who calls Houston his adopted home, has been at the helm of the nation's anti-narcotics efforts in recent years, but Oden and the others charged that during his tenure problems with illegal drugs have gotten worse.

"If George Bush was a real Texan, we'd say he was all hat and no cattle," said Travis County Attorney Ken Oden, one of about 130 lawmen, prosecutors and others who announced their endorsements of Dukakis on Tuesday.

"Bush is supposedly the general in the anti-drug effort, but while he has been on duty cocaine imports have tripled, drug-related deaths have doubled and heroin imports have risen by 50 percent," added Cameron County Sheriff Alex Perez.

"We can't afford any more of this phony Reagan-Bush war on drugs. We need a real war on drugs," Perez added.

Tom Loeffler, co-chairman of Bush's Texas campaign, continued GOP criticism of Dukakis' record as govenor, saying Dukakis is more than soft on crime — "he's at the point of meltdown."

Loeffler, a former congressman, echoed Bush criticism of a Massachusetts program granting weekend furloughs to prison inmates.

"Meltdown Mike has a wonderful way of punishing criminals in his state — he gives them weekend passes and asks them to be good little boys for eight hours. He thinks punishment is a four-letter word," Loeffler said.

'Mike Dukakis understands how to combat crime. He is tough on crime.'

But the Dukakis backers, including district attorneys, county attorneys, county sheriffs and the Combined Law Enforcement Associations of Texas, charged that Republicans have distorted Dukakis' record.

Attorney General Jim Mattox said Dukakis' record is solid and that Republicans such as Loeffler are ignoring the facts.

"We do not want to have four more years of gag lines," he said. "Mike Dukakis understands how to combat crime. He is tough on crime."

Mattox and others said crime in Massachusetts has dropped 13.4 percent and the homicide rate is the lowest for any industrial state.

Besides that, Mattox said, 40 states have similar inmate furlough programs. And taking a potshot at Gov. Bill Clements, who has been campaigning for Bush, Mattox said the Texas Department of Corrections last year released 34,370 inmates under various programs. "Only 229 that actually discharged their (complete) sentences," he said.

"The Republicans have an exemplary record of distorting facts," added Railroad Commissioner John Sharp, who chairs the Dukakis state campaign. "The facts are that the federal government has a furlough system and furloughs existed when Reagan was governor of California."

The More I Resist Exercise, The More Inches I lose!

"I used the Slimmer-Trimmer-U tables to work on problem areas. Since I've been using these tables, I've lost 21 inches and 18 pounds. Now I'm able to do things I haven't done since high school!"
Denise Bellville
Clearwater, FL

Denise was bewildered when we first told her the way to lose inches was to resist exercise. But, when we explained why, she was anxious to begin her personalized isometric program. This unique exercise system centers around six toning tables which slim and firm your body. As the tables move, you simply apply resistance. The more resistance you apply, the more toning takes place. There's no strain. No pain. And no more size 13 and up! We'll even give you your first session free! So call today and see how many inches you can lose by resisting exercise!

Vegetables may vary in spaghetti salad

For a cool, end-of-summer salad, marinate chopped and sliced vegetables and serve with chilled spaghetti in a lettuce-lined bowl.

By NANCY BYAL
Better Homes and Gardens
Magazine Food Editor

Hot, dry weather in the Midwest has made my garden a sad place this year, so we've enjoyed our small vegetable crop even more than usual. I vary the proportions of vegetables in this pasta salad a bit depending on the day's harvest. My family likes it with grilled or broiled meats or chicken.

MARINATED VEGETABLE AND SPAGHETTI SALAD

2 cups halved cherry tomatoes or chopped tomatoes
¾ cup chopped cucumber
¾ cup halved sliced zucchini
1 small green pepper, cut into bite-size strips
2 tablespoons chopped onion
¼ cup red wine vinegar
3 tablespoons salad oil
2 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 teaspoon snipped fresh parsley
¾ teaspoon snipped fresh basil or ¼ teaspoon dried basil, crushed
1 small clove garlic, minced
⅛ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
8 ounces spaghetti, broken
1 tablespoon salad oil
Lettuce leaves

In a large mixing bowl combine tomatoes, cucumber, zucchini, green pepper and onion. In a screw-top jar combine vinegar, the 3 tablespoons oil, sugar, lemon juice, parsley, basil, garlic, salt and pepper. Cover and shake well; pour over vegetable mixture. Cover and chill 2 to 24 hours.

Meanwhile, cook spaghetti according to package directions. Drain; rinse under cold water. Toss with the 1 tablespoon oil. Cover and chill.

To serve, spoon vegetables around spaghetti in a lettuce-lined bowl. Toss before serving. Makes 8 to 10 servings.

Chocolate cheesecake features cookie crust

By NANCY BYAL
Better Homes and Gardens
Magazine Food Editor

Here's a dinner party dessert that's so rich, so creamy, and so luscious that it's sinful — and everyone will rave about it! We used milk chocolate for the chunks because it cuts smoothly, even when the cheesecake is chilled.

White baking bar with cocoa butter is a creamy white, chocolate-like product. Store, melt and cook with it as you would with chocolate. You'll find it shelved with chocolate products in your supermarket.

WHITE CHOCOLATE HAZELNUT CHEESECAKE

One 8-ounce package hazelnut or shortbread cookies, crushed
3 tablespoons margarine or butter, melted
1 pound white baking bar with cocoa butter
Four 8-ounce packages cream cheese, softened
½ cup margarine or butter, softened
3 tablespoons hazelnut liqueur or milk
1 tablespoon vanilla
Dash ground nutmeg
4 eggs
1 egg yolk
Two 3-ounce bars milk chocolate with hazelnuts or four 1½-ounce bars milk chocolate with almonds, chopped
Chocolate curls (optional)

Butter sides of a 10-inch springform pan. In a mixing bowl combine crushed cookies and margarine. Press crust evenly over bottom of pan. Place pan in a shallow baking pan. For filling, cook and stir baking bar over low heat until melted. In a large mixer bowl beat melted baking bar, cream cheese, softened margarine, liqueur, vanilla and nutmeg until well mixed. Add eggs and egg yolk; beat on low speed just until mixed. Stir in milk chocolate.

Pour into crust. Bake in a 350-degree oven 60 to 65 minutes or until a knife inserted midway between center and edge comes out clean. Cool 5 to 10 minutes on a wire rack. Loosen sides of cheesecake. Cool 30 minutes. Remove sides of pan. Cover; chill thoroughly. Top with chocolate curls before serving. Makes 16 servings.

Try fruit drinks for non-alcoholic refreshment

By AILEEN CLAIRE
NEA Food Editor

Refreshing non-alcoholic drinks are in order during summer days. These may be used as a send-off treat to soothe youngsters during their first days in school.

FROSTY STRAWBERRY DAIQUIRI

3 ounces frozen sliced strawberries in syrup, partially thawed
1 ounce lemon juice or sweet-and-sour mix
1 scoop ice
1 whole fresh strawberry
1 lime slice

In a blender, combine sliced berries, juice and ice; blend smooth. Pour into stemmed glass. Garnish with whole berry and lime slice. This kitchen-tested recipe makes one 10-ounce drink.

STRAWBERRY MARGARITA

4 ounces frozen sliced strawberries in syrup, partially thawed
1 ounce lime juice or sweet-and-sour mix
1 scoop ice
1 whole fresh strawberry
1 lime slice

In a blender, combine all ingredients, except whole strawberry and lime slice; blend smooth. Pour into stemmed glass rimmed with salt or sugar. Garnish with whole berry and lime slice. This kitchen-tested recipe makes one 10-ounce drink.

STRAWBERRY COLADA

2 ounces pineapple juice
1½ ounces frozen sliced strawberries in syrup, partially thawed
1 ounce cream of coconut
½ ounce lemon juice or sweet-and-sour mix
1 scoop ice
1 whole fresh strawberry

In a blender, combine all ingredients except whole berry; blend smooth. Pour into stemmed glass. Garnish with berry. This kitchen-tested recipe makes one 10-ounce drink.

PINK GRAPEFRUIT JUICE

4 ounces frozen sliced strawberries in syrup, partially thawed
4 ounces grapefruit juice
Dash salt

In a blender, combine all ingredients; blend smooth. Pour over ice cubes in tall glass. This kitchen-tested recipe makes one 8-ounce drink.

Mock fruit daiquiris, margaritas and coladas are summer coolers.

Vanilla adds flavor to pound cake, cookies

By AILEEN CLAIRE
NEA Food Editor

Real vanilla is produced from the fruit of a tropical orchid, and 80 percent of the world's vanilla is grown in Madagascar, an island off the coast of Africa.

Vanilla is a hand-labor-intensive crop, with each flower that is to produce the bean pollinated by hand. In fact, before harvesting, many of the beans are branded by hand to prevent theft. The United States imports nearly 2 million pounds of vanilla beans a year, and most are used to make pure vanilla extract.

Whole vanilla beans can be tucked into sugar canisters for flavoring and aroma, or cooked in liquid for sweet preparations. Imitation vanillas are made from artificial vanillin, most of which is synthesized today from the sulphite liquor that is a byproduct of pulp paper manufacturing.

VANILLA SOUR CREAM POUND CAKE WITH CITRUS TOPPING

3 cups all-purpose flour (unsifted)
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon baking soda
1 cup butter or margarine, softened
2¾ cups sugar
1 tablespoon pure vanilla extract
2 teaspoons grated orange peel
6 eggs (at room temperature)
1 cup dairy sour cream
Citrus Topping (recipe follows)

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Set rack on lowest position.

Grease and flour a 10-inch tube pan with a removable bottom; set aside.

On a square of wax paper, combine flour, salt and baking soda; set aside.

In a large bowl with an electric mixer, beat butter until creamy. Gradually add sugar, beating until light and fluffy. Beat in pure vanilla extract and orange peel. Add eggs one at a time, beating 1 minute after each addition.

On low speed, alternately add reserved dry ingredients and sour cream, beginning and ending with dry ingredients.

Turn into prepared pan. Bake until cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean, about 1 hour and 15 minutes. Spoon Citrus Topping over hot, freshly baked cake in pan. Let cool on a rack for 15 minutes.

Remove sides of pan, leaving cake on the bottom portion with the center tube. Place on a wire rack to finish cooling. Remove remaining portion of cake pan and transfer to cake platter. This kitchen-tested recipe makes one 10-inch cake, or about 16 servings.

CITRUS TOPPING

1/3 cup orange peel (orange portion only) cut in julienne slivers
2 teaspoons salt
1/3 cup orange juice
½ cup sugar, divided
1/3 cup lemon juice
1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract

In a small saucepan, combine orange peel, salt and water to cover. Boil for about 2 minutes; drain.

Add orange juice and ¼ cup sugar to orange peel in saucepan. Simmer, uncovered, for 10 minutes; drain; cool.

Stir in remaining sugar, lemon juice and vanilla extract.

NUT CRESCENTS

1 cup finely ground toasted almonds (see below)
1 cup butter, softened
½ cup granulated sugar
¼ cup firmly packed light brown sugar
1 tablespoon pure vanilla extract
2½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
Vanilla confectioners' sugar (recipe follows)

To toast almonds, place in a large skillet, and stir over medium heat until pale gold.

In a medium bowl, combine almonds, butter, sugar, brown sugar and vanilla extract; mix until well blended. Add flour; blend to a smooth dough. Cover and chill until firm enough to shape, 1 to 2 hours.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

Using a rounded measuring teaspoonful of dough for each cookie, shape dough into crescents. Place on ungreased cookie sheets, 1 inch apart. Bake until pale gold, 15 to 18 minutes. Cool slightly.

Carefully dip cookies in Vanilla Confectioners' Sugar; shake off excess. Cool completely on wire racks. This kitchen-tested recipe makes about 6 dozen cookies.

Vanilla Confectioners' Sugar: Cut 1 vanilla bean into 2-inch lengths. Place in a tightly covered jar containing 2 cups confectioners' sugar. Set aside for 1 month, stirring once or twice a week.

Vanilla sour cream pound cake and nut crescents will lure youngsters home for family meals.

CHERRY-LIME SALSA

1½ cups fresh or frozen pitted tart red cherries, quartered
3 tablespoons sugar
1½ teaspoons cornstarch
Dash ground cloves
1 teaspoon grated lime peel
4 teaspoons lime juice

Partially thaw cherries, if frozen. In a microwave-safe 2-cup measure combine sugar, cornstarch and cloves. Stir in cherries, lime peel and lime juice. Cook, uncovered, on 100 percent power (high) 2½ to 3½ minutes or until thickened and bubbly, stirring twice. Cook 30 seconds more. Cover; chill. Serve with grilled beef or chicken. Makes 1 cup.

One 12-ounce can vegetable juice cocktail
One 8¾-ounce can whole kernel corn
One 8-ounce can red kidney beans, drained
One 7½-ounce can tomatoes, cut up
½ teaspoon sugar
Dash pepper
One 4-ounce package shredded sharp cheddar cheese (1 cup)

In a large saucepan combine sliced tamales with liquid, vegetable juice, undrained corn, kidney beans, undrained tomatoes, sugar and pepper. Bring to boiling; reduce heat. Simmer, uncovered, 5 minutes. Serve in soup bowls; sprinkle each serving with cheese. Makes 4 servings.

Almanac has something for everyone

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

When is the best time to plant brussel sprouts? How do we remove that rascally stain in Junior's overalls? What does the zodiac say about gift-giving? How do we master eating with chopsticks?

For answers to these and other pressing issues about life in the 1980s, we turn to that friend of farmers everywhere: the Almanac.

Greentree publishing has just issued its 1989 edition of The Almanac for Farmers and City Folk. While not nearly as old or presitgious as The Old Farmers Almanac, this 96-page jewel offers a variety of diverse information on just about anything you'd ever want to know.

Plus a lot about things you care nothing about.

Pages 48-49 offer planting guides for everything from leeks to shallots to collards. Less exotic varieties of garden greenery are also included.

If your garden is going to be centered around a major crop of horseradish next spring, don't plant a day before March 1.

Cress can be planted at the same time. Funny, though, I've seen a lot of peaches and black-eyed peas around here, but not much horseradish or cress.

Obviously, somebody's not taking their planting cues from the almanac.

While Roy McCoy and Darrell Sehorn probably don't use the almanac to help prepare the day's forcast, most farmers will say it has an uncanny accuracy rate.

So what's the word for this area? Cool and wet from November of this year to January of 1989. Then look for a dry spell from then through December.

Remember, you heard it here first.

Page 72 is eight long paragraphs on common euphemisms. "A janitor is now a custodian or sanitary engineer ... garbage is now refuse ... nobody steals, they misappropriate funds," the Almanac tells us.

It goes on to ask how come nobody ever dies. "They expire, pass away or did not make it."

There is a section on clever bumper stickers and another entitled, "Out, Out Damn Spot." It is about household stains, not Shakespeare.

In all honesty, the spot section is about as interesting as the back of a Tide box. "Soak in cold water, use peroxide for blood stains, scrape off wax stains with a dull knife and then use half parts alcohol and water."

Among the more grim facts contained in The Almanac for Farmers and City Folk is a shocking expose' on nursery rhymes.

Did you know "Ring Around the Rosey" was originally a song about the Black Death of London in 1665? Yep, it's right there on page 77.

Page 78 shows you how many zeroes are in a zillion and page 92 is a reprint of several letters written to stock brokers after the crash of 1987.

No, The Almanac for Farmers and City Folk probably won't help you cure cancer or end the threat of nuclear war. But it will make a handy companion for Reader's Digest in the "little boy's room."

Page 72 says that's a euphemism for the toilet.

An almanac can be a source of relatively little-known information.

PHS grad works on space shuttle computer

HOUSTON — Former Pampa resident Tim Holt is among the computer scientists who have worked the last few months testing and verifying the software that will communicate and control the space shuttle from Mission Control Center (MCC) in Houston as launch of the shuttle draws near.

Crews, engineers and support personnel have been checking and double checking the mechanical and electrical systems of the shuttle. Holt is a member of the Independent Verification and Testing (IVT) team, who are responsible for the reliability of the computer programs that monitor, track and control almost every aspect of the shuttle in flight.

Holt's primary responsibility is to test the computer software associated with the shuttle data known as telemetry that is radioed back to the MCC. This data may include any information from fuel levels to cabin pressure.

Every flight has custom software that is tailored to the unique events that will happen on that mission. As a result, modifications are made to existing programs and independent verification and testing are conducted to assure no major problems will result. Software for launch of the next space shuttle, known as STS-026, was tested weeks ago and passed on to flight controllers and astronaut crews for use in simulations.

Holt and the IVT team may be called upon at times for additional support or advice; they are presently focused on testing software for future flights.

Holt has worked with the shuttle program for over five years. After leaving the Air Force in 1981, he began his career as a programmer writing telemetry programs. He has since worked as an analyst on NASA's Local Area Network (LAN) system.

He had previously worked with the SOPC project, which was the Air Force's version of Mission Control, until it was cancelled. His recent move to IVT telemetry tester has brought him full circle to his early shuttle days.

Holt was a Pampa resident for 18 years and graduated from Pampa High School in 1973. He graduated from East Texas State University in 1977, where he majored in computer science.

He entered the Air Force as a 2nd Lieutenant and was stationed at Eglin AFB, Florida. At the end of his commission, he received an honorable discharge and returned to Texas.

He is the son of Alfred Wayne Holt and Mrs. Anna Kinsey.

Newlyweds disagree on sharing bed with pets

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Peter and I have been married for less than one year, and I am now faced with a problem that is threatening to break up our marriage. We are not kids. I am 45 and Peter is 47. He absolutely will not allow any of our pets in bed with us. (We have a dog and two cats.) Peter is extremely fastidious and says it's a matter of "cleanliness."

Abby, our pets are well-groomed and they are just as clean as people. I had these pets before I married him, and they were always permitted on my bed, so now they are confused and hurt when they are not allowed on my bed.

Is there a solution? Am I wrong to argue this point? I love my husband, but I think he's being unreasonable. Please help me. My pets are so angry, they won't even look at me.

ANIMAL LOVER

DEAR ANIMAL LOVER: I hope you love your husband more than your pets because you may be forced to make a choice. Although some animals are cleaner than people, a man who is not accustomed to having pets in his bed is not likely to change. Your poor pets are understandably confused to find that a part of their domain is suddenly "off limits." However, the word from here is: Retrain your pets. They may resist at first, but it can be done. Dumb animals are not so dumb.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Recent studies have shown that there is a dramatic decrease in automobile accidents when people drive with their lights on in the daytime.

Drivers have been a little slow to pick up on this. We have just returned from Canada, where we noticed that about 75 percent of the drivers were driving with their lights on during the day. When I asked my Canadian nephew about this, he said Canada has just passed a law that will require headlights to be turned on when you start you car!

LARRY WILSON,
BARTLESVILLE, OKLA.

DEAR LARRY: Many others wrote to stress the safety advantage of daytime driving with the lights on. It is the law in Sweden and Denmark. Thankfully, we are beginning to see the light.

DEAR ABBY: I was very much interested in your advice, "Do not transfer medicine from its original container to another." I have to, with Anacin. In their effort to make the bottle child-proof, the makers of Anacin made it "elderly-proof," too. I am in my 80s, and with my arthritic fingers and poor eyesight, I find it very hard to line up the arrows and pry off the lid.

Please let the Anacin people know this. Their product is very good — once you get to it.

Cowboys' record goes on the line

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys have the best NFL record for winning opening games, 22-5-1. It will be put to a big test this Sunday.

The Cowboys are down, both physically and mentally.

They have had numerous preseason injuries. Dallas is also coming off a humiliating 54-10 loss to Houston in a preseason finale.

The Cowboys were field goal underdogs to Pittsburgh on the road Sunday but coach Tom Landry said he has seen sick dogs turn tough on game day.

"We have injury problems and we had a big setback the other night (the record exhibition loss to Houston) and that sort of leaves you with a hangover," Landry said.

"It could be mid-season before we are where we want to be. But we could play a good game Sunday. We are capable of playing well."

Landry will be starting two rookies on offense for the first time, tackle Dave Widell of Boston College and wide receiver Michael Irvin of Miami.

"We have rookies starting for the first time but we had an excellent training camp and the foundation for recovery is there," he said. "We at least have something to build upon. We will overcome what has happened. I've been there before.

Jarrett Bell, assistant editor of the Dallas Cowboys Weekly, asked Landry if he could even beat Atlanta right now.

"I'm getting that question from our own newspaper?" Landry laughed. "Oh well. I don't read that one either."

Landry said he isn't sure which defense he will be playing."We might have to play a 3-4 if we don't have enough down linemen available."

Tackle Danny Noonan has a groin injury and another tackle, Mark Walen, has a neck injury. Randy White still isn't at full speed as he nurses a neck injury from last year.

"It could take Noonan a long time to get well," Landry said. "We just don't know. We don't know about Walen and Randy will be rusty of he plays."

Landry said Manny Hendrix, who had been in danger of being cut, earned the starting right cornerback job by default.

NFL Motto: Don't look back

By Howard Siner

NEW YORK (NEA) — Don't count on the Washington Redskins of 1988 to become the first team in the NFC in more than 20 years to beat the Super Bowl jinx.

Even their head coach, Joe Gibbs, has a few second thoughts.

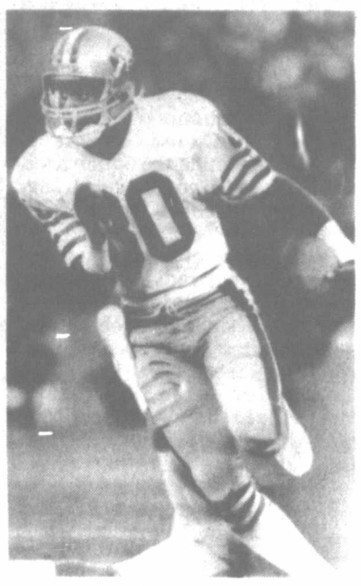
Never since the legendary Green Bay Packers won Super Bowls I and II in the late 1960s has an NFC club reigned as champion of the National Football League for two seasons in a row. And the 'Skins of '88 know the score.

"I sure hope we can repeat," says Gibbs. "But it's important that we approach this season in the right frame of mind. We've got to realize that, even though we won the Super Bowl, we are not a dominating team."

Not dominating? Maybe the Denver Broncos disagree.

Last January, Washington crushed the AFC champions, 42-10, in Super Bowl XXII, capping the strike-marred 1987 NFL season. For the Redskins, QB Doug Williams, an ex-bench warmer, had an MVP game, throwing for 340 yards and four TDs; rookie RB Timmy Smith, starting for the first time, rushed for 204 yards; and WR Ricky Sanders gained 193 yards receiving — all Super Bowl records. In an unprecedented burst, the 'Skins simply Hog-tied the Broncos. Washington drove for five straight TDs in barely more than 13 minutes in the second quarter.

What's the spirit of '88 in Denver? "We have some people who can get us back to the Super Bowl," vows Bronco coach Dan Reeves. Among others, he's thinking of QB John Elway and newly arrived RB Tony Dorsett.



Jerry Rice

Yet Denver is coming off its second Super Bowl (and second loss) in two seasons; and Washington, it's third (and second win) in six seasons.

So, both teams will be pressing their luck during the 69th NFL season.

Though NFC teams have won the past four Super Bowls, there hasn't been a repeat champion in the league since Jan. 20, 1980 — when the Pittsburgh Steelers, ending their AFC dynasty years, again won back-to-back titles.

Commissioner Pete Rozelle's dream of NFL parity is, indeed, alive.

Until 1987, no defending Super Bowl champ had ever finished last the following year. But the league's first in-season strike humbled the New York Giants in the NFC East. "The 0-5 start last season was psychologically very difficult to overcome," admits Giants coach Bill Parcells. Some claim he took the labor disruption personally and failed to motivate his team.

The NFL Players Association broke off contract talks and walked out after two regular-season contests. The league canceled one weekend of games. Then it used "replacement" squads — mostly players who had been cut in training camp — for the next three official games. And that permanently skewed the regular-season standings. In all, there were only 12 non-strike games.

It was estimated that the strike cost the NFL more than $100 million and the players more than $80 million. During the walkout, attendance fell to 40 percent of normal. Even worse, TV ratings dropped by one-third.

Ultimately, the highlights of 1987 in the NFL had more to do with the performances of the players than the teams. Among the individual feats:

• Jerry Rice of the San Francisco 49ers extended his scoring spree. He has caught touchdown passes in his past 13 straight games, an NFL record. Key factor: Joe Montana was the NFL's top-rated quarterback last year. Despite the strike, Rice also grabbed a one-season NFL record of 22 TD passes. He earned the World Almanac's Jim Thorpe trophy as pro football's MVP.

• Charles White of the Los Angeles Rams led the NFL in rushing in 1987. Taking over after the Rams dealt running star Eric Dickerson to Indianapolis, White galloped for a surprising 1,374 yards on 324 carries (11 TDs).

• Reggie White of the Philadelphia Eagles led the NFL with 21 sacks. For setting that one-season NFC record in just 12 games, the 6-foot-5, 285-pound end was named defensive player of the year by the World Almanac.

Going into 1988, its harder than usual to judge the top teams, because of the lingering impact of the strike. The best records in the 12 non-strike games belonged to: San Francisco (10-2), the New Orleans Saints (10-2), the Chicago Bears (9-3), Denver (8-3-1), the Minnesota Vikings (8-4) and Washington (8-4).

Only two team have new leaders in 1988. At 36 years old, Mike Shanahan, Denver's former offensive co-ordinator, joins the Los Angeles Raiders as the youngest head coach in the NFL. And Lindy Infante, Cleveland's ex-offensive co-ordinator, is now the head coach in Green Bay.

Harvesters prepare for season opener

It may sound like another corny cliche about how a football team must have the right attitude to have a winning season. Like most cliches, however, it rings with truth.

The Pampa Harvesters, says head coach Dennis Cavalier, possess that right attitude.

"The kids are trying hard and benefiting from a great practice attitude. "We came out of last week's scrimmage (against Tascosa) with a confidence that's going to benefit us as we inaugurate our regular season," Cavalier said.

A number of first-year players are showing some football ability, Cavalier points out.

"Terry Stroud, a first-year senior, is doing well in the secondary and two-other first year seniors, Ray Ward and Jimmy Willard are looking good defensively," Cavalier said.

Players in backup roles are also looking sharp, Cavalier said.

During last week's scrimmage, starting offensive guard Michael Shklar suffered a knee injury and reserves Scott Lucas and Mark Pulse combined to play the position.

"Scklar gave us a scare, but they (Lucas and Pulse) came in and played like he wasn't even on the team," Cavalier said.

Shklar, a starter last season, has to be fitted with a special knee brace due to a dislodged cartilage, but he should be able to play, Cavalier said.

Cavalier also had praise for reserve tight end Chip Morton, along with starter Jason Garren.

"These two together are getting the job done," he added.

Cavalier also likes the leadership ability of tailback Brandon McDonald, who started last season.

"He continues to provide great leadership and I appreciate his attitude so much," Cavalier said.

The Harvesters are stepping up their preparation this week for the first game Sept. 2 against Canyon.

"We're going to be paying a lot of attention to detail," Cavalier said. "We want to be able to play well in the season opener."

The Harvesters worked on their kicking game during Tuesday's afternoon practice.

Shannon Cook returns to kick field goals and PATS. Ricky Sewell is in line to handle the punting chores.

McEnroe advances

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — John McEnroe has learned that life in the fast lane can surely make you lose your mind. He wants to get back into the flow of traffic, but this time without driving himself crazy.

McEnroe, seeded 16th at the U.S. Open — his lowest seeding since 1977 at the tournament he has won four times — advanced Tuesday to the second round with a 6-3, 6-4, 6-4 victory over Leonardo Lavelle of Mexico. It wasn't as easy as it should have been, but the 29-year-old McEnroe wasn't complaining.

"I thought I played a set-and-a-half well and a set-and-a-half I was kind of struggling along, playing a little bit above what he played," McEnroe said. "I could have picked up a couple of those sets 6-1, 6-1 and it went 6-4, 6-4. That's a great waste of energy, especially in a major like this, where you want to get off the court as quickly as you can.

"It's stupid to put pressure on myself right now. The ups and downs are bigger now. It's tough to take the downs but you have to try to forget about them. It doesn't make sense to dwell on them.

"The reality of losing is difficult, but I'm not prepared to do anything else," said McEnroe, who quit the game for most of 1986 to tend to family life. "I want to give it my best. I still think I can play better than before. To drive myself nuts every time I lose makes no sense at all.

"I've done that before and I think that is what caused me to take a break."

Joining McEnroe in the second round were No. 2 Mats Wilander, No. 3 Stefan Edberg, fifth-seeded Boris Becker, No. 8 Miloslav Mecir, No. 10 Henri Leconte, 11th-seeded Brad Gilbert and No. 14 Andres Gomez.

Winners among the seeded women were No. 2 Martina Navratilova, No. 4 Pam Shriver, No. 5 Gabriela Sabatini, No. 10 Claudia Kohde-Kilsch, No. 13 Mary Jo Fernandez and No. 16 Larisa Savchenko.

Caprock defeats Lady Harvesters

Pampa's Lady Harvesters dropped a 9-15, 7-15 decision to visiting Caprock in volleyball action Tuesday night.

"We started out with some momentum and then we went into a lapse. We never showed much emotion," said Pampa coach Mike Lopez.

The Lady Harvesters' record dropped to 5-7.

Caprock's spiking power combined with Pampa's inconsistent serving proved to be the difference.

"We just weren't able to pick up their spikes, but they were picking up our spikes," Lopez said. "Our serving has been one of our strong points, but it was at an all-time low last night."

The Lady Harvesters host Amarillo High next Tuesday night.

Bucks out for revenge

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Writer

This is the first of a two-part story outlining the opening weekend of area high school football. Part two will follow on Thursday.

CANADIAN at WHITE DEER
Friday, 8 p.m.
GAME OF THE WEEK

The White Deer Bucks and the Canadian Wildcats will add another chapter to their long-standing rivalry when the season opens Friday night.

But if preseason expectations are any indication, the outcome may be a little different this season.

The Wildcats have won the past two meetings, defeating White Deer 27-6 in 1986 and 28-6 in 1987. The 1988 Bucks, however, have the power and experience to avenge those losses.

Both teams enter the regular season after solid performances in preseason scrimmages. Canadian faced 3A powerhouse Childress last Friday night, and head coach Paul Wilson was impressed by what he saw.

"We were really tickled with the way we played against Childress," he said. "We found a lot of weaknesses, but we struck some people, and that was our main concern."

Tight end Jared Lee, who is out with an ankle injury, is the lone Canadian casualty at this point. "We've got other bumps and bruises," Wilson said, "but otherwise we're fine."

White Deer, which emerged injury-free from scrimmages against Panhandle and Vega, is riding high in what may well be the year of the Bucks.

"We're as healthy as we can be," said head coach Windy Williams. "We had two good scrimmages, and we're ready for Friday night."

Wilson, who knows his Wildcats are facing perhaps the toughest squad in the Texas Panhandle, is a little more cautious about the upcoming contest.

"White Deer is an awfully good ball club," Wilson said. "They've got a lot of good skill people, and they can do a lot of things with the football.

"We've got to contain (Bart) Thomas, their quarterback. He's a threat throwing, but he's an even bigger threat running. We can't let him scramble and get out of the pocket, or he'll kill us.

"He loves to run it, and if we drop back for the throw, he will run it."

But Thomas is not the only threat that the Wildcats will have to be wary of. Tim Davis, who gained 1,000 yards rushing last year, and Bryan Waitman, who gained 850, round out a dangerous White Deer offensive backfield.

"All their skill people are good," Wilson said. "They're explosive, and they can score from anywhere at any time. And defensively, they're quick and very aggressive. They'll swarm you pretty good. They're everything we want, and then some."

And Williams knows the Wildcats, with a long winning tradition, won't be any pushover, either. "Their quickness is an advantage for them, and they're probably bigger than we are," he said.

"We're concentrating on our defensive game. Canadian uses a lot of motion, a lot of misdirection, and we're working real hard on playing technique football."

The Canadian coaching corps is also of some concern to Williams. "They're well-coached," he said, "and when you've got two teams that are fairly even like we are, that's a factor.

"This will be a great football game to watch," Williams said. "Texas high school football is good entertainment. And when those lights come on Friday night, it will be a great show."

Which is why football is king in Texas.

WHEELER at CLARENDON
Friday, 8 p.m.

The state-champion Wheeler Mustangs should enter the season opener with confidence.

The Mustangs outscored Electra, ranked eighth statewide in Class AA by the preseason Harris poll, by one touchdown during last week's scrimmage game. And, according to head coach Ronnie Karcher, the young Wheeler squad is improving with each passing week.

"We did some things better than the week before (in a scrimmage against Sayre)," he said. "Our secondary looked better. We moved the football well, and our passing game looked decent for this early.

"Our offensive line was outmanned, like they will be all year, but they held their own."

While Karcher characterizes his Mustangs as inexperienced, Friday night will find them facing a team that suffers from the same problem.

The Clarendon Broncos return only five lettermen from a team that finished fifth in District 2-AA in 1987. Mike Moore, left tackle and noseguard, is the lone returning starter.

"They're young like we are," Karcher said, "but they're getting better. They really moved the ball when we saw them scrimmage last week.

"We've got a little more experience, and they're not real big. It'll be nice to play someone who's our size."

Karcher cites their aerial attack as the Broncos' most dangerous weapon. "They're really throwing the ball," he said. "They've been passing about 50 percent of the time in the scrimmages. That worries you when you have an inexperienced secondary, but it will be good for us."

The Broncos have adopted a veer offense which may keep their opponents guessing — a fact that's not lost on Karcher, who's been doing his homework.

"They're running a different offense this year," he said. "They're running the option a lot, so we'll have to cover everything. We'll be working on that all week."

With the exception of quarterback Shawn Bradstreet — who sprained his ankle in practice last week but should start on Friday — the Mustangs will open the season injury-free.

Wheeler is ranked ninth statewide in Class A in the Harris poll; Clarendon is ranked 168th in the state Class AA ratings.

SPEARMAN at SHAMROCK
Friday, 8 p.m.

The Shamrock Irish received a needed boost in morale when they outscored Claude 4-1 in last week's scrimmage game.

"We did real well," said new head coach Ed Johnson. "The kids got on them, and we improved over last week."

The task facing the Irish this week is to buck all the preseason odds and continue that winning streak against the Spearman Lynx.

Spearman, picked unanimously to dominate District 1-AA and ranked 48th statewide in Class AA, has offensive and defensive lines that average more than 200 pounds. When you think of big, think of Spearman.

While that fact does concern Johnson, he is more concerned that the Irish play their own ball game and not be intimidated by Spearman's size.

"We're more worried about what we're going to do than about what they're doing," he said. "We're just going to work on our own execution and our own attack, and everything else should take care of itself."

Nonetheless, Johnson admits that the Irish have drawn a tough opponent for the season opener. But he is hopeful it will prove to be a learning experience for his young squad.

"They'll give us a good measure of what we've got to work on. They're a talented team, and they're big, and they should show us what our weaknesses are," he said. "We should learn a lot from Spearman."

Johnson is encouraged by the conditioning of the Shamrock squad, as each of the players emerged unscathed from the preseason scrimmages. "We've got the same 33 kids we started out with," he said.

The Irish, ranked 200th in the Class AA Harris poll, may have a long year ahead of them, but Johnson is ready to let the show begin. "It will be a good game," he said, "and we're anxious to start playing."

Kelton takes second

The Kelton Lady Lions opened their volleyball season with a second-place finish in the Borger Junior Varsity Invitational Tournament on Saturday, Aug. 27.

Kelton defeated Hereford 15-12, 15-13 in the first match of the tournament. It took the Lady Lions three games to defeat the Palo Duro JV squad. They dropped the first game 3-15, then rallied back to defeat the Lady Dons 15-13, 16-14.

In the championship match, Dumas defeated Kelton 15-1, 15-5 to win the tournament.

Kelton coach Dave Johnson said, "I was pleased with our girls overall because they don't have much experience yet. I was glad to see them do well."

The Lady Lions traveled to Borger with only a seven-member squad. "All the other teams had at least 15 players and were able to substitute them throughout the game," Johnson said. "But we did real well for having only one player to substitute.

"We didn't play very well in that last game, though. I don't know what happened. Maybe they were satisfied with making it to the finals.

"We're not in real good shape yet, because we haven't been working out very long."

Johnson is still trying to find a few more games for the Lady Lions, he said. Their next game is scheduled for the Borger Varsity Tournament during the weekend of Sept. 10.

Red Sox falter

By The Associated Press

While Roger Clemens found his fastball, Boston's search for first place in the American League East continues.

Oakland's Dave Stewart pitched a five-hitter to beat Clemens and the Red Sox 1-0 Tuesday night.

For the second straight night, the Red Sox missed a chance to move into a first-place tie with Detroit as the Tigers lost 4-1 to Chicago.

Clemens, 15-10, allowed nine hits and had nine strikeouts in 6 1-3 innings as he lost his fifth straight game. In the four previous games, he had allowed 21 runs in 20 2-3 innings.

"It's hard to take, when a guy like Roger finds himself and you wind up losing by a run," Boston manager Joe Morgan said. "When he gives up one run, we always win — but not tonight."

Clemens raised his major league-leading strikeout total to 257, one short of the club season record set by Smokey Joe Wood in 1912. Clemens had 256 strikeouts last season.

"That was major league baseball at its best," Oakland manager Tony La Russa said.

Elsewhere, it was Seattle 7, New York 1; Cleveland 4, Kansas City 1; Milwaukee 6, Toronto 2; Texas 8, Minnesota 6; and Baltimore 5, California 2.

Stewart, 16-11, struck out eight and walked three in his second shutout of the season. He ended the game by striking out the side.

Glenn Hubbard scored Carney Lansford with a suicide squeeze bunt, the A's first successful one of the season, in the sixth inning.

Lansford hit a leadoff single, stole second and went third on a wild pitch. One out later, Hubbard broke the scoreless tie with a bunt down the first base line.

White Sox 4, Tigers 1

Harold Baines scored the go-ahead run and drove in another as Chicago beat struggling Detroit at Comiskey Park to send the Tigers to their fourth straight defeat.

Jeff Bittiger, 2-4, yielded one run and five hits in 5 1-3 innings to gain only Chicago's third victory in 11 games with Detroit this season. Barry Jones pitched two innings for his first save.

Mariners 7, Yankees 1

New York lost its sixth straight as Seattle's Scott Bradley hit a three-run homer and Mike Campbell allowed four hits in 7 2-3 innings at the Kingdome.

Bradley, a former Yankee, hit his three-run homer in the sixth inning following a double by Darnell Coles and a single by Alvin Davis to give the Mariners a 5-1 lead.

Indians 4, Royals 1

Tom Candiotti allowed five hits in six innings for his third consecutive victory as visiting Cleveland beat Kansas City to snap the Royals' four-game winning streak.

Julio Franco walked leading off the Indians' first, moved to third on Joe Carter's single and scored when Ted Power, 5-6, threw a wild pitch. Carter took third on the wild pitch and scored on Mel Hall's single.

Brewers 6, Blue Jays 2

Rob Deer hit two homers and drove in five runs as Milwaukee beat Toronto at County Stadium.

Deer hit his 19th homer with two outs in the fifth off starter Jeff Musselman, 5-3.

Deer then lined a three-run homer to straightaway center in the seventh off reliever Duane Ward.

Ted Higuera, 12-8, allowed eight hits and two runs in 7 1-3 innings en route to his fifth straight victory.

Rangers 8, Twins 6

Cecil Espy's two-run homer with one out in the ninth inning lifted Texas over visiting Minnesota.

Bobby Witt was seeking a club-record 10th straight complete game for Texas but left after eight innings allowing six runs, six hits and eight walks. Witt threw 150 pitches.

Morsani keeps options open

ARLINGTON (AP) — If Texas Rangers' fans think the prospective buyers of the team will keep it in the Lone Star State as long as they own it, they better think again.

Frank Morsani kept his cards hidden when he came for a tire-kicking visit on Tuesday.

He kept all options open on whether his group might move the American League club out of town some day.

Morsani, a Tampa, Fla., automobile dealer, and Bill Mack, a New York-New Jersey real estate developer, have agreed in principle to buy owner Eddie Chiles' 58 percent of the Rangers.

But Edward Gaylord of Oklahoma City has a month to exercise an option to buy the team. Gaylord owns 33 percent of the Rangers.

Baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth said on Monday that "the Texas Rangers are going to stay in Texas.

Astros break out of hitting slump

HOUSTON (AP) — Alan Ashby returned to the starting lineup after two months on the disabled list just in time to trigger a rare offensive outburst for the Houston Astros.

Ashby joined veteran Denny Walling to trigger a 10-hit attack to lead the Astros to a 7-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs Tuesday night.

Ashby drove in a run with a sacrifice fly and scored the winning run on a pinch hit single by Walling as the Astros broke out of a hitting slump to remain 6½ games behind the Los Angeles Dodgers in the National League West.

"It was great to contribute to a win. I felt good," Ashby said.

Ashby scored his run in a sixth-inning rally by the Astros after hitting a double off the top of the right field fence off Cubs' starter and loser Calvin Schiraldi, 8-9.

Both managers praised Ashby's performance.

"Getting Ashby back off the disabled list was a key. He hasn't played in two months, but he got a big hit for us tonight," said Astros mangager Hal Lanier. "He brings another potent bat to the lineup and can drive in runs."

"He's a guy that can hit a two- or three-run homerun and really hurt you," said Cubs manager Don Zimmer. "He almost did it tonight."

Schiraldi, who had won his last four starts, said, "I didn't have anything tonight: No fast ball, curve, slider or change-up. I was behind every hitter and never got in the groove."

Protests erupt in Chile after Pinochet is nominated again

By EDUARDO GALLARDO
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Anti-government protesters clashed with riot police across Chile after the military junta nominated President Augusto Pinochet to rule until 1997. One demonstrator was reported killed and scores were wounded.

Pinochet promised a move toward democracy after being named Tuesday as the only candidate in an Oct. 5 referendum. The right-wing general, who has run Chile since taking power in a bloody 1973 coup, made the selection with the junta's other three members.

Thousands in the capital banged empty pots and pans in protest and demonstrators erected barricades with burning tires and blocked traffic at many intersections in this city of 4.5 million.

News reports said Erickson Palma, 15, was killed by gunmen from a speeding car as he banged a pot from the window his home in a residential neighborhood in southwest Santiago.

Pinochet

An official at the hospital where Palma was taken told The Associated Press the teen-ager was shot twice in the chest. The spokesman said two other demonstrators were shot and wounded.

Police Capt. Alejandro Sierra said 19 people were injured and 364 arrested in Santiago. Four public buses were set afire and destroyed by demonstrators, and one of the bus drivers was seriously burned, he said.

Similar protests occurred in scores of other cities. Police did not report on the number of detainees in those cities.

The protests began as Pinochet and the other military commanders met to choose the nominee, and became more violent through the night.

Power outages struck several suburbs of Santiago and the northern coastal city of La Serena. Causes for the blackouts were not immediately known, but the power transmission towers are a favorite target of leftist guerrillas.

Pinochet heralded his nomination as "a decisive moment in the institutional process" started by his 15-year-old government. The opposition denounced it as the continuation of "an aging dictatorship."

"If I govern, you govern," Pinochet, 72, told thousands of supporters from a balcony of the government palace. He called on them "to fight to achieve victory" in the upcoming ballot.

Pinochet led the September 1973 coup that ousted the elected government of Marxist President Salvador Allende, who died in the palace takeover. Pinochet has been president of the military government since.

If the majority of the 7.2 million registered voters cast "yes" ballots for Pinochet, he will start a new term March 11 to last until 1997. If he is rejected, an open election will take place within a year, with Pinochet remaining in power until then.

"The operetta is over. General Pinochet has imposed his will and is preparing to continue to oppress his people until the end of the century," said Ricardo Lagos, a socialist and co-leader of a 16-party opposition coalition.

"Chileans must decide between an aging dictatorship and renewed democracy," Lagos said.

Walesa meets with government officials to discuss unrest

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa met today with Communist authorities for the first time since authorities banned Solidarity and eight years to the day that the government recognized the free trade union movement.

The meeting, held at an undisclosed location, was confirmed by lawyer Jacek Ambroziak, a lawyer at the headquarters of the Roman Catholic church.

"I can certainly confirm the meeting is under way. It started at noon," he said by telephone, adding that the participants agreed to keep the site secret.

Authorities hoped the meeting would help end Poland's most serious labor unrest since they crushed the free trade union movement in a 1981 military crackdown.

Ten enterprises across the country remained idled by strikers demanding reinstatement of Solidarity and higher wages to offset 60 percent inflation.

Walesa planned to confer with Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak; a senior representative of the Roman Catholic Church; and a member of a pro-reform group backed by the government.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban said Stanislaw Ciosek, a secretary of the official national unity organization PRON, also would take part.

Walesa went to church headquarters after arriving from Gdansk.

"I'm like a cook preparing this meal, but I can't tell yet if it is going to to be a good pie or a rotten one," said Andrzej Stelmachowski, a senior mediator affiliated with the church. Authorities communicate with the opposition through the church, and Stelmachowski has played a key role.

The government demanded in exchange for the talks — Walesa's first with government officials since 1982 — that Walesa end a strike at the Lenin shipyard in Gdansk.

When asked by reporters if he would do this, Walesa replied, "I don't have the powers." When asked if that meant he would not call off the strike, the Solidarity chairman said, "I did not say so."

Asked earlier what he would discuss with Kiszczak, Walesa said: "How to make up for the past seven years."

Accords signed at the Gdansk shipyard on Aug. 31, 1980 after a nationwide strike wave made Solidarity the only independent labor federation ever recognized in the Soviet bloc.

There was no government announcement of today's meeting, but the communist party's ruling Politburo issued a statement late Tuesday saying it endorsed a proposal by Kiszczak for "round-table" discussions on strikers' grievances.

The strikes began began Aug. 16 in the coal fields of Silesia, in southern Poland, and spread to Solidarity's traditional stronghold in the ports and shipyards of the Baltic coast.

At their peak, they affected 20 businesses employing about 100,000 people.

A strike at the huge steel and heavy machinery plant in Stalowa Wola, in southeastern Poland, intensified this week.

Solidarity activists there said four army helicopters circled over the plant Tuesday and 500 troops took up positions around it.

Search continues to identify crash victims

RAMSTEIN, West Germany (AP) — Family members desperately searched for loved ones missing after a fiery air show crash that killed 49 people. Injured children lay unclaimed in hospitals as officials tried to determine if their parents were among the dead.

By late Tuesday, only 11 spectators who died in Sunday's disaster had been identified and officials said that of the 282 people still hospitalized, 20 to 30 might not survive.

Scores of people were badly burned when three of 10 jets in an Italian air force stunt team collided and one careened into the crowd at the annual air show at the U.S. Air Force base in Ramstein.

The pilots of the three jets were killed, and the Italian air force official who coordinated the team's stunts said one caused the crash by flying into an intersecting maneuver at the wrong altitude and speed.

It was that pilot's jet, having crossed solo through two passing formations, that tumbled into the crowd.

Opposition to military air shows has mushroomed. NATO allies suspended future air shows as they tried to figure out how to make them safer. Many West Germans — including some of those injured Sunday — demanded the shows be banned.

"Now I take warnings about the dangers of air shows seriously. I didn't before," said Karl Eggenweiler of Rothenberg-am-Neckar, whose back and arms were severely burned and who will likely be scarred for life.

"Now I think these shows should be forbidden," he said from his bed at Kaiserslautern hospital near Ramstein.

The nationalities of the identified victims was unclear.

Chief Pentagon spokesman Dan Howard said six Americans were known to be among those killed. But Juergen Dietzen, government spokesman for Rhineland Palatinate state, said none of the 14 were American. He said most were West German and two were children.

Dietzen said police received scores of reports of missing people following the crash.

"There are even cases of people from as far away as America who have said 'my relative has been on vacation there for three weeks, and we haven't heard a word. Is it possible they were at Ramstein?'," he said.

West Germany's ARD television showed pictures of a special missing persons bureau set up after the disaster in the nearby town of Kaiserslautern.

"I'm looking for my sister," said one unidentified German man. "The whole family didn't come home."

The West German newspaper Bild said authorities searched in vain for the parents of two badly burned girls — 6-year-old Nadine and 10-year-old Melanie — who were taken to a hospital in Oggersheim.

"There is the possibility that the parents of both girls are dead, since no one has inquired about them," Bild quoted the head surgeon, Dr. Rudolf Zellner, as saying.

One boy thought to be about 13 also had not been identified, the Frankfurt Abendpost newspaper said. Doctors at a hospital in Offenbach near Frankfurt said he was burned over 95 percent of his body.

The boy has not regained conciousness since he was brought to the hospital "and no one has asked about him," Dr. Roberto Avalos was quoted by the newspaper as saying.

"The doctors have a horrible suspicion: they are afraid his parents are among the dead," the newspaper said.

In a poll by the respected Wickert Institute, 82 percent of the 2,710 West Germans surveyed said they want all military air shows stopped.

6 die in jet crash at Hong Kong

HONG KONG (AP) — A Chinese jetliner skidded down a slippery runway, barreled into the sea and broke apart today while landing in heavy rain. Officials said six of the 89 people on board were killed.

All of the fatalities were among the 11 Chinese crew members, said Chen Zhengyou, a spokesman for Civil Aviation Administration of China, that nation's flag-carrier.

A massive rescue operation at Hong Kong's airport involving divers, a flotilla of boats and five helicopters began after Flight 301 plunged into Victoria Harbor at 9:19 a.m.

Small rubber rafts with rescue personnel bobbed around the partially submerged wreckage of the British-made Trident jet, which had arrived from Canton, capital of China's Guangdong province about 90 miles to the northwest.

Fire engines crowded onto Kai Tak Airport's solitary runway, which juts into the harbor. Seven hours after the crash, a 15-foot crane began hauling the fuselage from the water.

"It fell into the sea at the end of the runway," police spokesman Tony Leung said of the CAAC jetliner.

Fifteen of the 83 people pulled from the wreckage required hospitalization and were reported in fair or satisfactory condition.

Government-run Radio Television Hong Kong said at least three of the dead were recovered from the wreckage.

The radio interviewed one unidentified passenger who said some of the plane's safety belts did not work.

"That's why when the plane landed so hard, people simply were flying," the woman told the station. "I was in the back. It didn't dawn on me that we were really out of control. I was thinking more of ... how I was going to get out."

Japanese media in Tokyo said the passenger list indicated 12 Japanese were aboard. Hospital officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, identified two of the injured as Heung Cheuk-Wu, a 38-year-old Chinese-American, and Jean Allegre of France. The others were reported to be Chinese.

The plane can carry up to 100 people.

China's official Xinhua News Agency said bad weather caused the crash. Chen, when asked about the cause, said only, "You know, today the weather is not very good."
