Trade bill 'isn't dead'

Senators trying to avert veto

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's top trade negotiator said today President Reagan would veto a massive trade bill but congressional Democrats called on the president to "rethink his position" and sign the measure.

"This bill isn't dead yet," Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., told reporters today. "The ball is in the White House court. If there is a demise of this bill it will occur at the White House, not here."

House officials said it would be next week before the 1,000-page bill could be put into proper form and delivered to the White House. Reagan would then have 10 days to either sign it or veto it.

The bill would increase the power of the U.S. trade representative to act against other countries that use unfair trade practices, make it easier to curb imports, repeal the windfall profits tax on oil companies, and increase agricultural subsidies.

U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter said earlier that Reagan will veto the bill because of a controversial plant-closing provision. He urged that the Senate eliminate that provision "very quickly."

"We need a trade bill this year," Clayton K. Yeutter said on NBC-TV's "Today" program.

Family searching for cat that attacked 3-year-old

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Jeff Leak has no way of knowing whether a cat that bit his son last week has rabies because the long-haired, gray feline escaped from the city animal shelter Saturday, the father said.

If the cat's not found, Leak's three-year-old will have to undergo rabies shots as a preventative measure, the father said Wednesday.

"It's going to be traumatic for me, and I'm 10 times that old," Leak said of his son's pending ordeal.

The father is asking that people in the southwest Midland area near Henderson Elementary or Big Spring and Wadley Avenue watch for the cat.

In addition, Leak would like persons living in the area of the Midland Animal Control shelter — located near Orchard Lane and Carver Street in southeast Midland — to keep an eye out for the cat.

The feline, known in Leak's neighborhood as "Tom," is about 2½-years-old, full-grown, and has long gray hair and either dark blue or gray eyes.

"I would just like some public awareness on this," Leak said.

"It's the pain of suffering of this little boy. You do this (the shots) to a three-year-old boy and he's going to remember it forever."

Russell Leak was playing with the neighborhood cat two Wednesdays ago when the cat went berserk, the father said.

The cat scratched and clawed the child's left arm and stomach and eventually punctured one vein in the child's forearm, the father said.

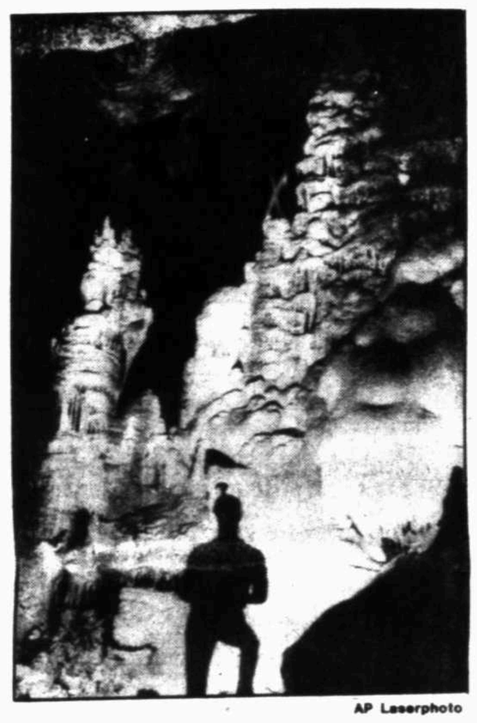

A city of Midland Animal Control official picked the cat up that day, Leak said.

The father was assured the cat would be quarantined until a rabies determination was made, he said.

Leak was upset that he wasn't notified of the cat's escape until the Tuesday after it happened.

A note — tacked to the front door of Leak's southwest Midland home — instructed him to "call animal control," he said.

Grand Canyon state adopts another wonder

By LAURIE ASSEO

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The state that's home to the Grand Canyon and the Petrified Forest soon will acquire another natural wonder — a spectacular 2½-mile cavern kept secret for years for fear it would be vandalized.

The Legislature and Gov. Rose Mofford on Wednesday rushed to enact legislation allowing the state to acquire the cavern discovered 14 years ago near Benson in southeast Arizona.

Mrs. Mofford perched a spelunker's helmet atop her beehive hairdo as she signed the bill passed by lawmakers only an hour earlier.

The cave's existence had been a closely held secret since it was discovered in 1974, because its owners feared vandals would destroy its beauty.

One killed in morning accident

From Staff Reports

One person was killed early today when two tractor-trailers collided on Interstate 20 near FM 1788 in a mishap that closed westbound lanes of the interstate, the Department of Public Safety reported.

The identity of the person killed was unknown this morning, a DPS dispatcher said.

The accident occurred on the westbound lanes of I-20 just east of FM 1788 about 7 a.m. when the two trucks apparently collided "one up underneath the other," a DPS dispatcher said.

Ken Ellis, dispatcher for the Midland County Sheriff's office, said deputies and DPS troopers were diverting westbound traffic to service roads from the Loop 250 exit.

No other injuries were immediately reported, Ellis said.

Metabolic differences may explain injustices of dieting

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON — New evidence that chubby people have sluggish nervous systems may help explain one of the great injustices of dieting — why some people burn up calories more quickly than others.

The study published today supports the theory that many fat people get that way because their bodies are extra-fuel efficient.

Earlier research has documented that obese men and women often have lower metabolic rates. Their bodies use up less energy, even when they are doing the same things as ordinary-size people. So they need less food.

The study, published in the New England Journal of Medicine and directed by Dr. Hugh R. Peterson of the University of Louisville, may help explain at least part of how this happens. It shows that the fatter people are, the more lethargic their sympathetic nervous system, the internal thermostat that revs up the body in times of danger, stress or exertion.

"Their findings are consistent with recent evidence that indicates there is a biological difference between obese and lean," said Dr. Lewis Landsberg of Boston's Beth Israel Hospital.

"This difference involves energy expenditure, and the sympathetic nervous system is important in regulating energy expenditure," he said. "What they find shows diminished sympathetic activity, and that works into the overall equation."

Dr. Jules Hirsch of Rockefeller University in New York agreed, saying, "It's another piece of the puzzle that's been unlocked."

Saudis oppose unprecedented proposal on production cuts

New York Times News Service

VIENNA, Austria — Saudi Arabia took a stand Wednesday against any further reductions in oil production, casting a chill on the prospects for cooperation between the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and other oil-producing nations.

On Tuesday seven oil producers had offered to reduce exports by 5 percent in an attempt to persuade OPEC to act in concert with them to restrain production and bolster prices. The offer was made at an unprecedented meeting here between oil ministers inside and outside OPEC.

Several OPEC officials, including its president, Rilwanu Lukman, had welcomed the proposal, and a spirit of cautious optimism seemed to surround the talks.

It had been anticipated that if the talks seemed promising, the seven nations would be invited to meet Thursday with all 13 OPEC members. But after the Saudis made their stand Wednesday, OPEC decided not to invite the other nations.

Some OPEC officials said they thought the Saudi stand was a negotiating tactic intended to extract greater concessions from the non-OPEC nations. A Venezuelan OPEC official who asked not to be identified said, "The Saudis have told us that if the cuts are sizable enough they are willing to cooperate."

Iran's deputy oil minister, Kazempour Ardebelli, said Saudi Arabia would come under pressure Thursday at the OPEC meeting. The Saudis refrained from public comment.

The setback in the talks, which followed by a day Saudi Arabia's break of diplomatic relations with Iran, revived old political rivalries.

Ardebelli hinted at the stormy meeting lying ahead when he made a strong attack against Saudi Arabia.

In severing relations, Saudi Arabia cited Iranian mining of the Persian Gulf, rioting involving Iranian pilgrims in Mecca last year that left 400 people dead and a subsequent attack on the Saudi Embassy in Tehran.

Ardebelli said that the Saudi decision was inspired by the United States and that the rupture of relations was meant to justify "more American military presence in the gulf in the future."

Iran and some other OPEC members, including Venezuela, Algeria, Libya and Ecuador, favor cooperation with the non-OPEC countries.

The seven oil producers that came to negotiate with OPEC are Egypt, Mexico, Angola, China, Colombia, Malaysia and Oman. The OPEC oil ministers from Venezuela and Algeria, in separate statements, praised the offer from the independent oil producers as "a very good step."

Nation's capital paying tribute to Lady Bird's beautification plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Washington is paying tribute this week to the first lady who dressed the city in its spring finery of blooming tulips and blossoming dogwoods.

Lady Bird Johnson "deserves the national applause and appreciation for what she's done for the country," says David Northington, executive director of the National Wildflower Research Center in Austin.

Separate ceremonies were planned today in the House, Senate and White House Rose Garden to honor Mrs. Johnson, wife of former president Lyndon Johnson and founder of the wildflower center.

More celebrations are planned Friday marking her 75th birthday this past December.

"It think it's very fitting. This celebration is about all she's done," Northington said Wednesday, "not just the tulips in Washington but all over the country."

Clements, Mexican area's governor sign comprehensive economic pact

By JEANETTE ALLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

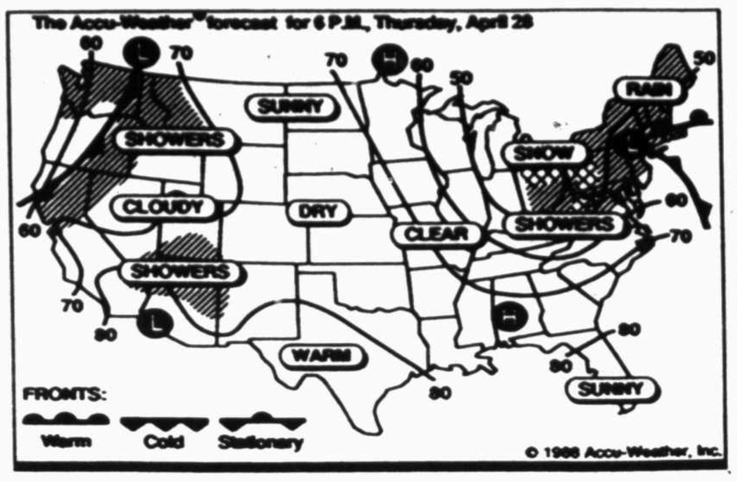

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements signed a comprehensive economic agreement with the governor of the Mexican state of Coahuila Wednesday.

Texas and Coahuila share 323 miles of border from just north of Laredo to the Big Bend area. Coahuila is the fourth border state to enter into an economic pact with Texas during the past 10 weeks. Texas and Mexico share a total of 1,300 miles of border.

"It is a beginning. I want to make that clear that it is a beginning," Clements said. "During the past three months we have constructed a framework for economic and cultural progress."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Chance for rain at 30 percent

From Staff and Wire Reports

A 30 percent chance of thunderstorms is expected tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the mid-50s, and winds will blow out of the southeast at 10-15 mph.

Friday's forecast calls for a continued 30 percent chance of thunderstorms and slightly warmer temperatures. The high is expected to reach the mid-80s, and winds should shift to the south at 10-20 mph and gusty.

Wednesday's high of 78 was 17 degrees cooler than the record high of 95 set for that date in 1974. Today's low of 52 was 21 degrees warmer than the record low of 31 set for that date in 1934.

STATE

Thunderstorms are expected across West Texas tonight, spreading across the rest of the state tonight and Friday.

A high pressure center over Arkansas today produced east to southeast winds over the state and brought moisture from the Gulf of Mexico into the state.

Fog was reported over lower portions of the coastal plains early today and scattered high clouds were reported over most of the state.

Forecasts called for partly cloudy skies statewide with increasing cloudiness tonight. There is a chance of thunderstorms over western portions of the state tonight.

And there is also a chance of scattered thunderstorms in South Texas tonight and in western and central portions of North Texas Friday and a slight chance of thunderstorms in East Texas Friday.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 50s and 60s, ranging from the upper 40s in the Panhandle to the lower 70s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Highs Friday will be in the 70s and 80s over most of West Texas, ranging upward into the lower 90s in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas, in the 80s across North Texas, and in the 80s and 90s in South Texas.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 50s and 60s, ranging from the upper 30s in the Panhandle to the 70s in South Texas. Extremes ranged from 37 at Amarillo to 70 at Corpus Christi.

Other early morning temperatures around the state include 49 at Wichita Falls, 53 at Fort Worth, 54 at Waco, 61 at Austin, 59 at Houston, 50 at San Angelo, 49 at Lubbock, 53 at Midland and 59 at El Paso.

NATION

Rain fell along the Atlantic coast today from New York to the Carolinas, while a storm brought rain and thunderstorms to the Pacific Northwest.

Thunder rumbled over New York City early today. On Wednesday night, thunderstorms pelted Durham, N.C., with marble-sized hail and 30 mph gusts.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours ending at 2 a.m. EDT included 1.14 inches at Philadelphia, 0.96 inch at Wilmington, Del., 0.95 inch at Baltimore and 0.72 inch at Newark, N.J.

Showers and thunderstorms were reported in parts of Washington state and Oregon, which had thunderstorms for the second night in a row near Eugene.

Elsewhere, light rain was widespread from the central Appalachians across Ohio to parts of Indiana and Michigan.

Most of the nation had clear to partly cloudy skies this morning.

Forecasters posted a frost advisory today for low-lying areas in northeast Kansas.

Drug war should first battle demand

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States must give the highest priority to curbing its own demand for illegal drugs if it is going to have any chance of stemming trafficking from Central America, a panel of prominent Western Hemisphere experts said today.

"As long as the profit margin for cocaine is 12,000 percent from production cost to street value, the lure of trafficking will be irresistible," the panel said in a 50-page report. "Primary attention must shift to demand."

The report, which contains a series of recommendations for action on hemispheric issues, was prepared by the Inter-American Dialogue, a nonpartisan group of 62 noted citizens from the United States, Latin America and Canada.

The commission is chaired by Sol M. Linowitz, a former ambassador to the Organization of American States, and Daniel Oduber, a former president of Costa Rica. Other members include two additional former Latin American presidents and more than a dozen former cabinet members from the United States and Latin America.

The report said efforts to reduce the supply of drugs from Latin America to the United States are bound to be inadequate, and the high profit margin for drug smuggling "will buy all the protection the drug lords need."

The Reagan administration initially concentrated its efforts on stopping drug smuggling at its source but recently has said more attention must be given to reducing demand.

President Reagan said in a speech last February, "as significant as stopping smugglers and pushers is, ending the demand for drugs is how, in the end, we'll win."

According to the report, "Experience has shown time and again that short-term disruptions of drug supplies have little or no long-term effect on drug availability in the United States.

"Eradication programs temporarily succeeded in Mexico and Bolivia — and previously in Turkey — but failed ultimately to reduce the flood of illegal drugs to the United States. It is all too easy for drug traffickers to shift their sources of supply from country to country and, if necessary, from continent to continent, one step ahead of U.S.-assisted drug enforcement programs."

The report also recommended that the United States help other countries design and implement their own drug control policies rather than apply pressure and threaten sanctions if these countries do not adopt U.S. prescriptions.

Under U.S. law, the administration is required to impose economic sanctions against countries which do not cooperate in curbing drug flows into the United States.

This year, Reagan found that Syria, Iran, Afghanistan and Pakistan were not offering such cooperation but no sanctions were applied because none is a U.S. aid recipient.

Many members of Congress are clamoring for sanctions against other countries, and on Wednesday the House Foreign Affairs Committee voted in favor of taking such action against Bolivia, Peru and Paraguay.

The report said the campaign against drug imports sometimes has had counterproductive results.

It noted that efforts to interdict such imports have been more successful against marijuana than against cocaine, which is less bulky and more lucrative.

As a result, the report said, many traffickers have switched to cocaine and up to half the marijuana used in the United States may now be homegrown.

OPEC

Oil producers have been seeking to halt the slide in oil prices, which in recent months have fallen far below OPEC's official price of $18 a barrel. Middle Eastern oil is trading at about $15 a barrel.

After news of the developments here reached the New York markets, the near futures contract on West Texas Intermediate crude oil, the American benchmark, fell 33 cents, to $18.27.

The Saudis, along with Kuwait and Nigeria, think that OPEC has already sacrificed a substantial part of its oil output in recent years in order to prop up prices. And they complain that other oil-producing nations responded to the OPEC cuts by increasing production and stealing market share from OPEC.

While OPEC officials who attended the closed-door meeting said the Saudis had said they were not prepared to reduce their own output, some officials said it was too early to take the Saudi stand as a final answer.

Arab OPEC officials who asked not to be identified said the Saudis argued that an offer by the seven independent oil producers to reduce their sales by 5 percent — about 200,000 barrels a day — was inadequate, in light of their estimated production of 8.5 million barrels a day.

"The independent oil producers are only cutting from their dreams," said a senior official from an Arab delegation that supports the Saudi position.

The 13 members of OPEC have reduced their output by more than 13 million barrels a day in the last seven years.

Therefore, Arab officials close to the Saudis said, non-OPEC countries must go much further before OPEC is asked to cut its output again.

Some OPEC officials think talk of production cuts is premature. Kuwait's oil minister, Sheik Ali Khalifa Sabah, suggested that no action may be necessary by OPEC.

"I think the market is going to pick up irrespective of what we do," Ali said. He said that oil demand was rising and that prices would move up even without output cuts.

Iranian, Algerian and Libyan officials said they would push for yet another collective cut in output by all OPEC members to at least match the independent oil nations' gesture. Current OPEC production is estimated at about 18 million barrels a day.

Paramedic didn't expect to deliver his own child

Copley News Service

CARLSBAD, Calif. — Having delivered several babies in emergency situations, Vincent B. Kennedy was planning to assist the obstetrician during the birth of his own child.

But he didn't plan on the delivery room being the back seat of his Nissan station wagon on the freeway — or doing the delivery himself.

"It's different...a bit exciting. It's kind of nice delivering my own kid," said the 30-year-old Kennedy, a paramedic with the Vista Fire Department in San Diego County.

"When it's your own kid and your own wife, there's a little bit of nervousness, too."

The birth of Madison Renee Kennedy occurred at 5:03 a.m. Tuesday (April 26) on a San Diego freeway, Kennedy said.

His wife, Sharon, 29, had gone into labor a few hours earlier and he was driving her to University of California Medical Center in San Diego. They were about 10 miles away when events — and Madison Renee — overtook them.

"She yelled at me from the back seat that she was having the baby NOW," he said. "I stopped the car, crawled in the back seat ... and sure enough, the baby was crowning, getting ready to come out."

Kennedy said the delivery took less than two minutes. "It just happened so fast," he said.

It was chilly and still dark, with the only light being the faint glow from the vehicle's ceiling light.

Kennedy tied the umbilical cord with a shoelace, then separated the cord with his teeth.

"We had absolutely nothing sharp in the car, so I just said, 'Well, pioneers did it this way,'" he said.

CAT

The father said he had worried about the cat the day the animal control officer picked it up.

The cage that held the cat had a "flimsy door" and "looked like a joke to me," he said.

Leak would have asked neighbors to help find Tom sooner if only he had known of the animal's disappearance, he said.

Animal control personnel told Leak "they thought it was loose in the office," he said.

Patty Armstrong, Animal Control assistant director, said today that "We did think it was still in the building. It is a large old building and has lots of holes and crawl spaces to get in the attic."

Cats have been known to hide in the attic for days at a time, she said, adding that personnel had attempted to find the feline, but to no avail.

Said Leak: "I don't expect the cat has rabies, but we just can't take a chance."

If the cat isn't found by week's end, young Russell must undergo a rabies series starting Saturday.

The five injections, completed over the course of a month, are painful, the father maintained.

"They go plumb to the bone with that needle. For a three-year-old boy this is going to be pretty traumatic," he said.

Coahuila Governor Eliseo Mendoza said diligent work by both states has laid a framework to establish cooperation in technology, agriculture, building of infrastructure and "cultural cooperation to strengthen our ties of friendship."

Law enforcement agencies from both states will be working together to fight illegal drug traffic and automobile thefts, while efforts will continue to improve the maquiladora industry.

University of Texas at Austin President Bill Cunningham said he is cooperating with the Coahuila Secretary for Education and Culture to establish a museum in Monclova in central Coahuila.

The museum will be housed in an existing historical building at no cost to Texas taxpayers, Clements said. It will be funded by private sector donations and tourist dollars.

Tourism between the states will be furthered with the establishment of a hotel and resort area in Boquillas, just across the border from Big Bend National Park, Clements said.

Texas is helping Mexico install telephone service and utilities at the planned resort and they should be complete in the next three to four months, Clements said. Mexico is also planning to establish its own national park in the area.

In addition, Clements said the two states have agreed to form a commission to further economic development. "This commission ultimately will address other joint concerns such as education, health and the protection of our environment," he said.

Clements and Mendoza will meet in Saltillo, Coahuila, in September to "monitor the progress" of their agreement.

CAVE

"It is a major natural resource find," said state Park Board Director Kenneth Travous, who has twice squeezed through the tiny opening to view the cavern.

"It's fabulous," Travous said. "Walt Disney couldn't have done any better for the state of Arizona. Your imagination goes crazy when you get down there."

The two-room cavern is about 7,000 feet long and from 50 to 100 feet high inside. Thousands of still-growing stalagmites and stalactites ranging from a few inches to 60 feet are found throughout. It's also home to a colony of 700 bats.

In about three years, Travous says, about 100,000 to 150,000 people a year will get to travel by elevator to see the cave. Officials plan to use state park revenues to acquire the site for $1.6 million within a year from the Arizona Nature Conservancy, which soon will buy the site from the family of the late James Kartchner, a Cochise County rancher and educator.

"I imagine I walked over this thing I don't know how many times hunting deer" but never realized the cavern was underneath, said Rep. Gus Arzberger, whose district includes the cave.

The state on Friday sent park rangers to guard the site on an emergency basis as word of the cavern's existence began to leak out. The bill was quickly enacted Wednesday to allow the state to continue to oversee the land.

The cavern's co-discoverer, Randy Tufts, 39, said that finding it along with Gary Tenen, 37, was "a once in a lifetime discovery for the caver."

"People go out and hunt and hunt and hunt for caves; 99 times out of 100 you never find anything," Tufts said.

Tufts said he and Tenen wanted the cavern turned into a park because that would be the best way to protect it from vandals. Because it is near a major highway, Tufts said it was inevitable that other people would find it.

JOHNSON

Mrs. Johnson said earlier this month that she was inspired to beautify Washington as first lady, after returning from trips abroad with her husband.

She said flowers light up a city the way lipstick does a woman, and her interests in beautifying the environment widened with the years — from the traffic circles and public buildings in Washington to the coasts and the heartlands in between.

With a donation of 60 acres east of Austin and $125,000, Mrs. Johnson in 1982 helped found the National Wildflower Research Center, an information clearinghouse where research is done on the role of native wildflowers in landscaping along the nation's roadways.

Proceeds from the Jubilee Celebration will benefit the center, Northington said. Activities include a black-tie dinner tonight, a luncheon Friday at the Watergate Hotel with leaders of the Washington community, a national concert and a reception by the Texas State Society and members of the Texas congressional delegation.

TRADE

"There are a lot of good things in that legislation, so if a couple of necessary corrections are made and the bill comes back, I'm really quite confident the president would sign it," Yeutter said in another interview on "CBS This Morning."

Byrd, however, said the Senate had only about 90 legislative days left this year and had a heavy schedule. Asked if it would accept proposed changes from the White House, Byrd said, "we're not spoon fed from the White House."

"I hope the president will rethink his position and come down on the side of the American people," Byrd said.

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, pleaded for Reagan to sign the bill, which he said has overwhelming popularity across the country.

"There has to be a warm side to the president," he said. "I can't believe it falls on deaf ears or a flinty heart."

Wright said Reagan's promise to veto the bill was made to "captains of industry" who would understand if he changed his mind.

But Byrd said, "The White House doesn't want this bill. The White House doesn't want any trade bill."

The governments of Japan and Korea today urged Reagan to veto the measure. There was also a warning from the European Economic Community of retaliatory action if Reagan doesn't kill it.

Japan's chief government spokesman, Keizo Obuchi, said the bill which imposes sanctions against Toshiba Corp. may hinder world economic development.

Dukakis, Bush eye November battle

Associated Press

George Bush, the Republican presidential nominee in all but name, expressed eagerness to debate Michael Dukakis and challenged the Democratic front-runner to "fire away." Dukakis did just that, using the Iran-Contra affair as ammunition, and added that he'd be "delighted" to debate.

Jesse Jackson, meanwhile, said his big loss to Dukakis in Tuesday's Pennsylvania primary did not mean he was out of the Democratic contest.

"This is a tight race...It is closer now than ever before," Jackson said as he campaigned in Ohio, where 159 delegates are at stake in Tuesday's contest. He had a series of stops set around the state today.

Indiana and the District of Columbia also vote Tuesday, offering 79 and 16 Democratic delegates respectively.

"We know how to win," Jackson told a crowd of 5,000 at a rally in Cincinnati on Wednesday night. "We've come a long way."

Bush now has more than enough delegates to assure him the GOP nomination. His boss, President Reagan, is holding off on a formal endorsement but the White House indicated that one is near.

Republican Party and administration sources said Reagan planned to play a low-key role at the GOP's convention in August to avoid upstaging Bush. The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the president would address the convention on opening night — Monday, Aug. 15 — and then leave the next morning for California.

On the Democratic side, Dukakis remained reluctant to describe himself as the likely nominee despite a string of wins and a widening delegate lead. Any reference to a fall faceoff with Bush is cautiously qualified with an if.

But Dukakis was sounding increasingly relaxed and confident. He sent the Boston Bruins hockey team a telegram Wednesday following a win over the Montreal Canadiens that advanced them to the semifinals in the Stanley Cup series.

"Having enjoyed a few wins myself lately, I can well imagine how you feel," the governor wrote. "Maybe your winning formula will rub off on me as I enter some playoffs of my own."

The Massachusetts governor said there was "no question" that if nominated, he would debate the Republican nominee.

"I've already agreed to," he said. "I'd be delighted."

Bush said he, too, was ready. "I will have debates and I look forward to it," he told CNN.

The vice president has criticized Dukakis for lacking foreign policy experience. The Massachusetts governor retaliated Wednesday by questioning Bush's role in "one of the most misguided adventures in the history of American foreign policy" — the Iran-Contra affair.

"I can't imagine what they (in the White House) were thinking of when they proceeded to do business with a terrorist nation," Dukakis said in Springfield, Mass.

Where foreign policy is concerned, he added later, "it's your values, it's the quality of the people you pick...That's what makes for strong international leadership."

Bush, in Washington, said he expected Dukakis to try to make the Iran-Contra affair a campaign issue. "Let him fire away," he said.

Dukakis, in New Jersey for a fundraiser on Wednesday night, also attacked the Reagan administration record on environmental issues, saying: "It's about time we had an administration that did something about the environment."

And, questioning whether Bush backed Reagan's threat to veto a trade measure that won congressional approval on Wednesday, Dukakis said: "I think the vice president would be well advised to stop criticizing others for a while and address some fundamental issues facing this country."

Reagan objects to a provision of the bill that would provide workers with 60 days notice before a plant shuts down. Massachusetts has a plant-closing law, but it does not require companies to notify the state of impending shutdowns, and critics say the measure lacks teeth.

Robertson has congratulated Bush on wrapping up the nomination and pledged to help elect a Republican.

Reagan calls for more acid rain research

WASHINGTON (AP) — Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney came to Washington seeking more U.S. action to reduce the acid rain that he likens to "dumping garbage" on his country, but he got no promises from President Reagan.

During a one-hour meeting on Wednesday, Reagan held to the administration's 7-year-old position that more research is needed before targets are set for reducing the pollution blamed for acid rain.

Mulroney had used the meeting and a subsequent speech to Congress to renew Canadian pleas that the United States follow his country's lead by setting specific pollution-reduction targets and timetables.

Canada's program will cut pollution levels there to half the 1980 levels by 1994, Mulroney told Congress.

"But that is only half the solution, because the other half of our acid rain comes across the border, directly from the United States, falling upon our forests, killing our lakes, soiling our cities," Mulroney said.

The Reagan administration has rebuffed pleas from Northeastern states as well as Canada to set targets and timetables, calling instead for more scientific investigation to establish the most effective cleanup methods before spending money on acid rain reduction.

A senior U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that Mulroney gave Reagan "some private ideas" on how they might narrow their differences on the issue.

Mulroney

The talks, however, did not alter the administration view that there is little possibility an acid rain accord sought by Mulroney will be reached before Reagan leaves office next January, the official said.

Prior to his Washington visit, Mulroney said the U.S. acid-rain emissions drifting into his country are tantamount to "dumping garbage" on Canada. Using more elegant language in his speech to Congress, he said, in effect, the United States is doing the same to its own environment.

"The one thing acid rain does not do is discriminate," he said. "It is despoiling your environment as inexorably as ours. It is damaging your environment from Michigan to Maine, and threatens marine life on the Eastern Seabord."

He welcomed additional research into ways to reduce emissions from coal-fired furnaces, but said more action is needed.

"Canada will continue to press fully its case to rid our common environment of this blight, and we shall perservere until our skies regain their purity and our rains recover the gentleness that gives life to our forests and streams. And we hope the U.S. Congress and people will respond exactly the same way," he said.

"The cost of reducing acid rain is substantial, but the cost of inaction is greater still," he added.

While the leaders remained apart on the acid rain issue, they joined in an appeal to both nations' legislatures to ratify the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, designed to abolish tariffs and further enrich what is already the world's biggest trading partnership.

Mulroney noted that the United States sells more goods in Canada than it does to Britain, France, West Germany and Italy combined.

"This is a good, balanced and fair agreement, the most important ever concluded between two trading partners," Mulroney said.

Reagan and Mulroney also said they do not believe the pact will be endangered by Reagan's threatened veto of a trade bill being considered in the Senate, the official reporting on their meeting said.

Reagan also gave his permission for the Canadian purchase of tightly-held U.S. nuclear submarine technology. The Canadians are considering the purchase of 10 or 12 nuclear-powered attack submarines from France or Britain. If they choose the British "Trafalgar" class subs, U.S. permission will be required because the submarines use American power plants.

Reagan and Mulroney set aside their differences over acid rain and accentuated the positive at a White House state dinner Wednesday evening. Reagan lauded his Canadian counterpart as "a good neighbor and a firm friend."

GLIMPSES OF THE CLUB'S HISTORY

The Midland Lions Club was organized April 9, 1928, with 102 charter members and was sponsored by the San Angelo (Downtown) Lions Club.

The charter was presented at a gala banquet held in Hotel Scharbauer's Crystal Ballroom on June 21, 1928. The charter was presented by District Governor N. N. Rosenquist of Dallas. (The district then extended from Dallas to El Paso and from Amarillo to San Angelo.)

Homer W. Rowe was the charter president; R. J. Moore, secretary, and B. G. Grafa, treasurer.

Miss Lillie B. Williams, now Mrs. Holt Jowell, was the club's first sweetheart.

The club aided in publicizing the formal opening of the 12-story Petroleum Building in 1929.

The Lions-Rotary ball game in 1931 was a feature of the Fourth-of-July celebration. It was a hot contest. Who won? Who knows? Then there was the "Womanless Wedding" performed on the stage of the Yucca Theatre as a money-raising event. But it was fun anyway.

A "Bathing Revue," with a lot of Lions' legs showing, was another fun event, which provided funds for club activities. Lion Ned Watson and His Trained Lion Orchestra, which performed in elegant style in the late 1920s and early 1930s, was the forerunner of the famous Midland Downtown Lions Club's International Convention Midland Championship Rodeo Band, which played a lot of good music for 25-years, disbanding in the late '70s.

The building of the wading pool at Cloverdale Park (Cole Park) was the club's first big project. It was dedicated on July 22, 1931. Midland won its first district convention at El Paso in 1939, on the campaign song "Midland Wants You in '40, We Do," written by John P. Butler. District Conventions have been held here on a more-or-less regular schedule since that time.

Annual Easter Egg Hunts were staged by the club before the World War II years.

During the war years, the club played a big role in War Bond Sales, in gathering scrap iron and copper, and in working with and for the personnel at Midland Army Air Field.

The club raised $7,500 for the Midland Memorial Hospital Building Fund.

The club has more-or-less adopted the West Texas Boys Ranch as a continuing project. It also plays Santa Claus to the boys at Christmas giving them some spending money.

The starting of the club's Annual Pancake Jamboree more than 30 years ago provides most of the funding for the many and varied projects of community, sight conservation, youth welfare and charitable work carried on each year by the club. Receipts from the 1988 Jamboree totaled over $29,000.

A far-reaching hearing aid program came into being in the 1970s, along with support of the District 2-A1 Eye Bank established in Midland. Eye Donor Cards are available and the "Gift of Sight" helps one to keep on giving by helping another person to see.

A program honoring Firefighter of the Year was established in the mid-'70s. This year, the Fire Department was recognized for their concern and help in rescuing little Jessica McClure.

In 1979, a campaign was launched to "Save The Firetrucks" - to sponsor a fund raising effort to build a museum to house and restore Midland's first two fire trucks. Pictures, old fire-marks and other memorabilia are on display daily from 9 AM to 9 PM at the museum located at the Central Fire Station, 1500 W. Wall and merit a trip to view a part of early Midland.

Many Lions worked diligently raising funds, getting the trucks restored and the museum ready for dedication on April 30, 1985 - Midland's Centennial Year.

In 1981, PDG Roy Minear was honored by election to the Texas Lions Hall of Fame.

On April 14, 1984, the Ray Gwyn Humanitarian Award was established as the club's most prestigious award of honor-a centennial belt buckle was designed by Past President Keith Somerville and made of bronze. It is still available.

Past District Governor Carl O. Hyde was inducted into the Texas Lions Hall of Fame and presented a club plaque in 1987.

Lions-Quest and ALL STARS are two peer enhancement programs the Downtown Lions are quite interested in promoting as well as the McGruff "Take a Bite Out of Crime" education. Helping students in their fight against drug abuse, alcohol and crime helps to ensure a strong future for these United States.

These are but a few of the many worthwhile activities and projects during the sixty years of service of the Midland Downtown Lions but they show the Lions have earned their keep by helping others through the years.

Lions' Motto: "WE SERVE"

Lions Clubs Objects

To create and foster a spirit of understanding among the peoples of the world.

To promote the principles of good government and good citizenship.

To take an active interest in the civic, cultural, social and moral welfare of the community.

To unite the clubs in the bonds of friendship, good fellowship and mutual understanding.

To provide a forum for the open discussion of all matters of public interest; provided, however, that partisan politics and sectarian religion shall not be debated by club members.

To encourage service-minded men to serve their community without personal financial reward, and to encourage efficiency and promote high ethical standards in commerce, industry, professions, public works and private endeavors.

Lions Code of Ethics

To show my faith in the worthiness of my vocation by industrious application to the end that I may merit a reputation for quality of service.

To seek success and to demand all fair remuneration of profit as my just due, but to accept no profit or success at the price of my own self respect lost because of unfair advantage taken or because of questionable acts on my part.

To remember that in building up my business it is not necessary to tear down another's; to be loyal to my clients or customers and true to myself.

Whenever a doubt arises as to the right or ethics of my position or action towards my fellow men, to resolve such doubt against myself.

To hold friendship as an end and not a means. To hold that true friendship exists not on account of the service performed by one to another, but that true friendship demands nothing but accepts service in the spirit in which it is given.

Always to bear in mind my obligations as a citizen to my nation, my state and my community, and to give to them my unswerving loyalty in word, act and deed. To give them freely of my time, labor and means.

To aid my fellow men by giving my sympathy to those in distress, my aid to the weak, and my substance to the needy.

To be careful with my criticisms and liberal with my praise; to build up and not destroy.

Iran-Contra judge says administration threatens case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The judge in the Iran-Contra case is threatening to dismiss charges against Oliver North and three other defendants unless the Reagan administration stops withholding key documents.

"A stone wall is being built up between this court and the trial," U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell said Wednesday.

Gesell said he was troubled by "the government's intentional withholding of documents necessary for the defense."

The judge blamed delays on an inter-agency task force that is reviewing 300,000 pages of top-secret government documents that he said lawyers for the four defendants must be allowed to examine before the case goes to trial.

Independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh, "so far as I know, is making every effort to produce the documents," Gesell said.

"The responsibility lies with the attorney general and the White House. I want to find out promptly what is taking place and what is going to take place."

Gesell said the case against former National Security Council aide North, former national security adviser John M. Poindexter and arms dealers Albert Hakim and retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord can't go to trial unless relevant documents are declassified so they can be introduced into evidence.

The defendants are charged with conspiring to defraud the United States by illegally diverting money from secret U.S. arms sales to Iran to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels when such assistance was banned by law.

Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten denied there was any deliberate foot-dragging in preparing the documents for defense review.

"There is certainly no attempt being made to impede the process in any way," Korten said. "We're talking about a large volume of material here that needs careful examination."

Representatives of the Justice, State and Defense departments as well as the White House and CIA "are working as fast as they can to process the documents," Korten said.

Under the Classified Information Procedures Act the government agencies that produced the documents, not the prosecutor, has ultimate control over the material.

The law provides for summarizing documents to enable their contents to be introduced into evidence without compromising national security.

Gesell said he was unwilling to spend much time on that process, particularly since Walsh estimates 50,000 documents pertain to the case.

"We're not going to sit around in court in a series of secret hearings and rewrite the documents to get them ready for trial," Gesell said.

"I don't intend to take thousands and thousands of pages and attempt to engage in a process of summarizing."

The judge's remarks came at the end of a hearing in which Walsh was questioned about procedures he took to prevent his staff from learning about the testimony that North, Poindexter and Hakim gave to Congress last year under limited grants of immunity from prosecution.

The law bars Walsh from using their statements to Congress as evidence against them and the defense contends that forcing North, Poindexter and Hakim to stand trial violates their Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination.

Walsh testified that in one instance a former member of his staff, Judith Hetherton, had to forcefully cut off a Justice Department official who tried to tell her about North's testimony.

"She had to really be forceful with him to get him to stop," Walsh said.

The Washington Post quoted a Justice Department spokesman as saying that the official was Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds but that his remark to Ms. Hetherton was only a brief, inadvertent reference to a segment of North's testimony.

Hetherton was one of the prosecutors who questioned Reynolds when he appeared before a grand jury earlier this year for questioning about his role in the November 1986 investigation of the Iran-Contra affair.

Woman denies poisoning husband

SEATTLE (AP) — The woman accused of killing her husband with a cyanide-spiked painkiller tearfully told a courtroom that she watched him collapse, never knowing that he was dying.

"Babe, I feel like I'm going to pass out," Stella Nickell, testifying Wednesday at her U.S. District Court trial, quoted her husband as saying before he collapsed at their home June 5, 1986.

"He squatted down...shook his head," she said. "He wouldn't answer me. He stood up...I pulled him back toward the door...he put his hands on the couch to brace himself and collapsed."

When he didn't revive, she said, she telephoned for help.

Mrs. Nickell, 44, who is accused of killing her husband, Bruce, and a woman with cyanide-laced Excedrin capsules, tearfully told the jury that she never talked of murdering him and had researched cyanide poisoning only after his death.

Prosecutors expected to begin cross-examining Mrs. Nickell today.

She is charged with causing two deaths by tampering and three counts of tampering with a product involved in interstate commerce. She's the first person in this country to be tried on charges of causing death by tampering with over-the-counter medicine. If convicted, she could face life in prison.

Sue Katherine Snow, 40, of Auburn, died after swallowing a cyanide-tainted Excedrin capsule two weeks after Nickell. Prosecutors say Mrs. Nickell poisoned other over-the-counter pain relievers to make her husband's death appear the work of a random killer.

Mrs. Nickell described her 52-year-old husband as a loving, good-natured man with a sense of humor. She denied telling family members her marriage was unhappy or had grown boring since she and her husband stopped drinking alcohol in 1979.

Stella Nickell

"I believe that my feelings grew a lot stronger" after the drinking stopped, she said. "We got along a lot better."

She acknowledged periodic financial stresses, including a 1983 bankruptcy filing, but denied that their money troubles threatened the marriage or that she saw collecting on his life insurance as an easy solution.

Prosecutors contend she killed her husband in hopes of collecting up to $176,000 in benefits, and forged his signature on insurance paperwork.

She said she signed the forms with her husband's permission because he "despised paperwork." She said she thought he had only $25,000 in life insurance.

Mrs. Nickell's daughter, Cindy Hamilton, testified Tuesday that her mother had discussed several possible ways to kill Nickell.

Mrs. Nickell, asked Wednesday if she had ever told her daughter that she intended to poison her husband with cyanide, or that she had attempted to kill her husband, replied, "No."

Ms. Hamilton also testified her mother discussed copying the unsolved Chicago-area poisonings in which seven people died from cyanide-laced Tylenol, and also asked how to hire a hit man and where she could buy heroin.

And, Ms. Hamilton said, her mother mulled the possibility of putting a cocaine overdose in Nickell's iced tea.

In other testimony Wednesday, FBI specialist Carl E. Collins said 84 fingerprints belonging to Mrs. Nickell were found on 47 pages of "Deadly Harvest," a book about poisonous plants.

Mrs. Nickell said her prints were found on the book because she hoped to protect her granddaughter and children for whom she babysat from any such plants around her suburban Seattle home.

Collins, the prosecution's final witness, also said her fingerprints were found in three encyclopedia volumes concerning poisons.

Mrs. Nickell said she researched cyanide only after Nickell's death because "I wanted to know what it was that killed my husband."

Meese pushed to fill vacant posts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal prosecutors are increasingly concerned about vacancies at the top of the Justice Department which Attorney General Edwin Meese III has been unable to fill for nearly a month.

Meese

U.S. attorneys held a lengthy discussion about the vacancy in the department's No. 2 post, concluding in an informal vote that they want one of their colleagues, rather than someone from outside the department, to fill the position, said three department sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The consensus at Tuesday's meeting at the Justice Department was that Robert Ulrich, the U.S. attorney in Kansas City, should be chosen by Meese to become deputy attorney general, said the sources.

Ulrich is chairman of the U.S. attorneys' advisory committee, but was not in the room at the time of the discussion by the panel's 15 or so members, said the sources.

"The sense at the meeting was that the U.S. attorneys wanted Ulrich," said one source. "They want someone who knows and understands U.S. attorneys and who can hit the ground running."

The sources said the U.S. attorneys had not presented their views to Meese, who was in California on Wednesday, and that it was unclear whether they would do so.

The post of deputy attorney general became vacant last Friday with the departure of Arnold Burns, who resigned March 29, telling colleagues Meese's refusal to resign in the face of a nearly yearlong criminal investigation was damaging Justice Department operations. Criminal division chief William Weld resigned with Burns for similar reasons.

The concerns by U.S. attorneys about the top-level Justice Department vacancies come amid a report that a group of President Reagan's advisers and friends have joined forces to oust Meese.

Reagan reacted heatedly when reporters queried him about the Wall Street Journal report, which said Nancy Reagan supported the effort.

"I thought the story was totally inaccurate," said Reagan, who when asked what might prompt him to get rid of Meese, said: "Well, if he had a complete change of character."

The Journal said White House officials sounded out former Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger as a possible successor to Meese, but that Weinberger rejected the proposal.

In an interview with CNN, Weinberger said: "I did not have any suggestion that Mr. Meese should leave, and under no circumstances whatever would I even take the office, if it should be offered. It's never been offered."

At the Justice Department, spokesman Patrick Korten said Meese had flown to California to attend a funral on Wednesday and had a full work schedule Thursday.

Meese has made two unsuccessful bids to fill Burns' post.

Navy begins tow of disabled sub after bodies found

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Salvage crews took the stricken USS Bonefish in tow after finding the bodies of three crewmen aboard the submarine, apparently killed when explosions and fire filled the vessel with toxic smoke and gases.

The bodies were found Wednesday aboard the 30-year-old, diesel-electric sub, the Navy's Atlantic Fleet Command said. The Navy refused to say when the bodies would be returned to grieving relatives ashore.

Salvors from the USS Petrel and USS Hoist cautiously vented off toxic fumes from the fire before the salvage crew could enter and the Hoist take the crippled submarine in tow.

"The ship is headed for Charleston, South Carolina, and will arrive, depending on weather, in two to four days," Chief Petty Officer Joseph C. Mowery said Wednesday.

Charleston is the Bonefish's home port and 87 of the sub's surviving 89 crew members have been taken there.

Night four towns died remembered

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — Their steps may be a bit slower, their eyes dimmer, but oh how they remember the night 50 years ago when residents danced away the last hours of four towns that died to provide drinking water for Boston.

More than 100 former residents — the oldest in her 90s — and 300 descendants of the Swift River Valley towns gathered Wednesday for the 50th anniversary of the last dance at Enfield Town Hall.

And they remembered the night of April 27, 1938, when the towns of Dana, Prescott, Enfield and Greenwich flickered out of existence at midnight to create the Quabbin Reservoir.

The reservoir took 20 years to build and cost $53 million and the lives of more than 20 workers. Today, it provides drinking water for 2.5 million people, half of the state's population.

It's not the nation's largest reservoir, though none larger has been built strictly to provide drinking water. But for 2,500 people, the land under the water had been home. The ball marked the end of that life.

"My mother was crying. The older people were heartbroken," recalled Lucille Webster Thresher, dancing with Harrison, her husband of 50 years. They were the last couple married in Enfield. They remember the ball.

"There was such a crowd at Town Hall that night we young people couldn't get in," she said. "We climbed the fire escape and looked in the windows."

A hush fell over the crowd in the ballroom at the University of Massachusetts as the bell that had once hung in the Dana Town Hall struck midnight.

Robert Garvey, the High Sheriff of Hampshire County, dressed in top hat and tails, led the former residents in singing "Auld Lang Syne" just as the dancers had in 1938.

Men who had been young then bowed their heads. Tears glistened in many eyes as the sound of "Taps" echoed across the stilled ballroom.

"Our home was in the center of town. It now lies under the deepest part of the reservoir," said Joy Dickinson Bock, a South Hadley elementary school teacher, who was in grade school back then.

"My parents had six children and they couldn't afford to go to the dance. But we kids went down to the Town Hall and watched the people arriving," she said.

Her brother, Richard Dickenson, came from Indianapolis for the event as did three sisters and another brother.

"I wouldn't have missed this for the world," said Trudy Ward Stalbird Terry, 78, of Enfield, as 38 former residents who had been at the Farewell Ball led the Grand March around the hall.

Many of the women wore heirloom pins and other mementos of parents and grandparents. Some wore black as did many of the women at the dance 50 years ago.

Their reminiscences, jotted down on their dance programs, were read aloud between dance tunes.

Gwen McKenzie, Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services investigator, holds "Little Kenny" at Adair Park in Lakeland, Fla. during a press conference. The 18-month-old boy was found wandering the streets a month ago.

More than dozen people offer to adopt abandoned toddler

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — More than a dozen people have offered to adopt a toddler who was found wandering in traffic a month ago, but state officials are continuing their search for his relatives.

Despite a flood of calls to state social workers since a judge allowed the 18-month-old boy's picture to be published last week, investigators say they still have few hard leads.

"It is so sad," said Gwen McKenzie, a child abuse and neglect investigator with the state's Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services. "This isn't something that happens every day."

"If there were relatives out there, they would have called," she said. "Either someone knows this boy and is not coming forward or he is not from this area."

The only clue authorities have is a confusing account by a man who says he's "Little Kenny's" uncle and that the boy's father left a Skid Row bar last month bound for Washington state on a borrowed motorcycle.

"He doesn't seem to know very much about the boy," Lakeland police detective Miles Watson said Wednesday. "We want to find the father so we can verify this is not some boy who was kidnapped somewhere else in the country."

HRS officials have listed the toddler with "Child Find" in Tallahassee and the national registry for missing children, in case the child was abducted in another part of the country and parents are searching for him.

The toddler has been in protective custody since March 25 when he was rescued from traffic. The next day, Michael "Smokey" Kwil reported his 18-month-old nephew missing from the same area.

Kwil told Lakeland police he first saw the boy on March 23 in a bar. The child was with Kwil's half-brother, David Skaggs, he told police. During the night Skaggs borrowed a motorcycle and left, Kwil said.

Kwil has told differing stories about what happened to the boy, but Watson said it appeared the child wandered away from Kwil's trailer not far from where he was found in traffic.

A misdemeanor child abuse charge has been filed against Kwil.

If responsible relatives are not located, the courts could put the boy for adoption in about six months. Ms. McKenzie said more than a dozen people had already called by Wednesday offering to adopt the little boy.

Amnesty extension could send 'bad signal' to border

WASHINGTON (AP) — Immigration Commissioner Alan Nelson said today extending the May 4 deadline for illegal aliens to apply for amnesty "would send a very bad signal to people below the border."

The Senate is considering a measure passed by the House that would extend the deadline to Nov. 30. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, stopped attempts to bring the issue to a vote Wednesday.

"Extending it would send a very bad signal to people below the border," Nelson said on "CBS This Morning."

He said the long lines of aliens applying as the deadline nears are the result of people leaving it until the last minute, not because of a flaw in the program.

Nelson estimated between 1.7 million and 1.8 million people would apply under the program before the deadline, with the number gaining legal status swelling to 3 million as eligible relatives are allowed to enter the country.

An immigration rights advocate, Darlene Kalke, accused the commission of failing in its efforts to inform immigrants about the program.

"There's a lot of confusion, a lot of fear," said Ms. Kalke, also interviewed on CBS.

Gramm said there has been "a mammoth increase in the number of people entering the country illegally" in the past year because word spread that a tough new immigration law would not be enforced.

"If we came in now and changed the law on the very eve of it going into effect, the net result would be to cast further doubt on the credibility of the law and that would bring numerous people across the border illegally," Gramm said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Police say students burglarize cars

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Police and school officials can't explain what triggered a three-month spree of car thefts now linked to 10 teen-agers who are accused of using tools made in a high school shop class.

"Normally, you don't find that kind of operation in a small town like ours," Metamora Police Chief Mike Walters said Wednesday.

Walters said most of the 2,500 residents of Metamora, about 15 miles northeast of Peoria, were stunned by the allegations against the teens, who were arrested Tuesday at rural Metamora High School.

"They're surprised at the number of kids involved and the amount of property taken," he said.

The students face felony charges that include vehicle burglary and conspiracy to commit vehicle burglary, police said.

Reagan plans low profile

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has chosen a low-profile role at the Republican National Convention that will crown George Bush as his would-be successor, administration and Republican Party sources say.

Reagan is waiting to give Bush a formal endorsement, but presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said nothing should be made of that.

Fitzwater said Reagan talked campaign strategy privately with Bush over lunch Wednesday and said the president plans to help wherever he can.

During a picture-taking session, Reagan said Bush deserved congratulations for locking up the GOP nomination. Asked if he was ready to endorse Bush, he replied. "Well, I'm going to have to arrive at that since there are no others entering" the Republican presidential competition.

During a Cable News Network interview, Bush said "we've got to discuss that, whether it will be some formal endorsement. But when there will be some formal endorsement ceremony, we didn't have any agreement on that."

Arms restrictions debated

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats say they are are pushing for arms control restrictions opposed by President Reagan as "a way of keeping the lid on the nuclear arms race."

But Republicans such as Rep. William Broomfield, R-Mich., argue that the restrictions "have long been overtaken by events."

The fight is over Democratic-backed proposals which are being considered as the House debates and votes on the annual bill authorizing the Pentagon budget.

The restriction have been added for the past three years by the House and while some were later dropped during the lengthy congressional budget process, several remained.

"We're pushing these things because we need to keep the pressure on, keep pushing the White House," said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee.

Beatrice mails checks

CHICAGO (AP) — As contests go, "Monday Night Winning Line-up" was a bust for sponsoring Beatrice Cos., a boon for about 2,400 players and a few hours' work for a few lawyers.

The attorney for most of those winning players said Wednesday the first checks were in the mail from the $2 million settlement that stemmed from Beatrice's cancellation of the game two weeks ahead of schedule.

Chicago lawyer Lawrence Leck, who filed their class-action lawsuit, said individual checks would range from $130 to $32,000.

Sanctuary negotiated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interior Department is negotiating with officials in South Dakota to establish a sanctuary there for wild horses overpopulating government-owned rangeland in the West, a department official told a House panel Wednesday.

Under a 1971 law passed in response to complaints from ranchers, the bureau is required to round up excess wild horses on the Western range. It estimates there now are 43,000 of them roaming 35 million acres which have a grazing capacity for only 31,000 without endangering domesticated livestock herds.

Diplomats in dark countering Noriega

Remember Panama? The tiny Central American republic under the thumb of a military dictator accused of running drugs, a dictator we expected to dispatch with a flick of our economic stick? Well, it has been two months since Gen. Manuel A. Noriega forced Panamanian President Eric A. Delvalle out of office, and Noriega has gone nowhere.

It's Delvalle who remains in hiding, not Noriega. The ousted president spoke with Cable News Network recently from his hiding place in Panama and said he hopes the general can be ousted "very soon." He expressed the hope that "Panamanian military people" or "a multinational force" could do it, not a U.S. military force. The erstwhile president could be hoping for some time to come.

Meanwhile, the Panamanian government has turned off the electricity at homes of U.S. Embassy employees. Because of President Reagan's dollar embargo against Panama, the Americans haven't paid their light bills for the past two months.

The spectacle of American diplomats sitting in the dark is, if nothing else, an apt metaphor for our Panamanian policy. So far, the United States has tried economic pressure, negotiation and covert action. We have tried to rely on "people power," but a general strike that this country encouraged fizzled after a few days. All we have managed to do with our economic sanctions is inflict suffering on the Panamanian people.

The State Department has urged military action, but the Pentagon is reluctant. At this point, so are we. The military fears that using our Panama base to undermine a local government would jeopardize U.S. base agreements all over the world. And, "Yankee intervention" would certainly galvanize Latin American governments — against the United States.

Now is the time to back off and reconsider. Instead of intervening militarily, the United States must work out a way to isolate Noriega diplomatically and politically in the hemisphere. That can be done only in cooperation with Panama's neighbors, perhaps through the Organization of American States. They must be persuaded that a corrupt dictator under the influence of a dangerous drug cartel is more of a threat than Yankee meddling.

Foreign victim gets only sympathy

WASHINGTON — On the morning of Dec. 4, 1983, an American fighter pilot bailed out of his crippled plane and splashed safely into the Mediterranean. He was lucky, but a family on the ground was not. The pilotless plane veered back over a coastal town in Lebanon and smashed into the home of Abdo Tabet.

Jack Anderson

The incident is a lingering reminder of the bungled U.S. air attack on Syria. Because of it, Tabet lost his wife and his home, but he has yet to receive anything more than condolences from the U.S. Navy.

Tabet was outside working his vegetable farm when the flaming A-7 Corsair speared the three-story house he had inherited from his father. Inside, Tabet's five children were still sleeping; his wife was fixing breakfast.

In a blinding flash, his house was blown to rubble and his family severely burned. Sixteen hours later, his wife died. One of his sons was left with no outer ear. The other children are scarred, their skin blackened. A gold bracelet melted on the wrist of his youngest daughter, Hyam.

The Tabets were not anti-American. They lived in Zouk Makayel, a pro-American, Christian town. And they expected the United States would help them recover.

But their trauma and loss were not noticed in the day's action. The U.S. plane that destroyed their home was one of two U.S. planes knocked down by the Syrians during the early morning raid which came in retaliation for a Syrian attack on U.S. reconnaissance planes. The U.S. raid was the first time since the Vietnam War that any American aircraft had been downed in combat. The headlines focused on American pilots who were killed or captured, not on the one who dropped safely into the sea, and not on the woman cooking breakfast and the children sleeping in Zouk Makayel.

Tabet didn't expect the U.S. government to compensate him for his emotional loss. But he figured it could compensate him for his monetary loss, which he estimated at $440,000 for damaged property, $29,150 for medical expenses and $56,000 in lost earnings.

Our associate Jim Lynch obtained a copy of the letter Tabet wrote to the White House explaining his predicament. "I couldn't estimate the damage of my great major loss, my wife's tenderness who is more valuable to me than the whole world's jewelries," he wrote. Then he asked for compensation for his material losses, "so as I may be able to re-support my family."

Six weeks after the accident, the U.S. Embassy in Beirut wrote back and told him there would be no compensation.

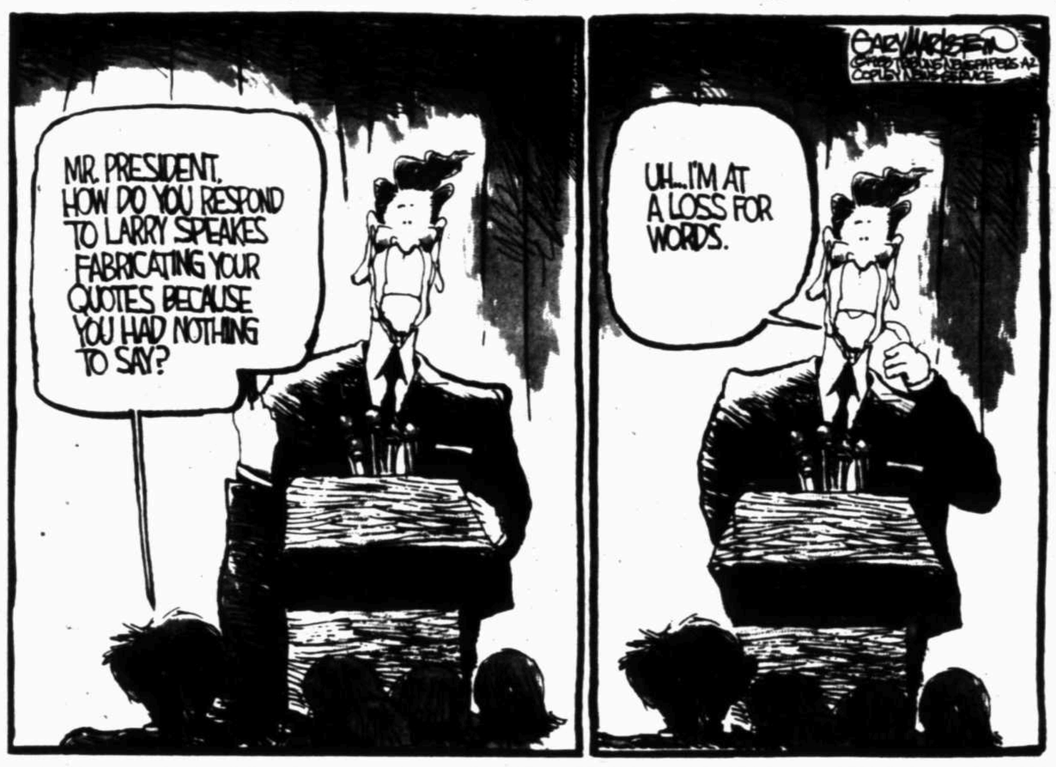

Tabet then wrote to the U.S. Navy's claim judge. But the judge said the United States didn't pay foreigners for damages arising from combat. Tabet could expect only apologies. "Please be assured of the sympathy ... in the loss of your wife and injury to your family," the judge wrote. "I am constrained by law, however, from rendering a more favorable reply."

As far as the Pentagon is concerned, the case of Abdo Tabet is closed. Last October, Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., inquired into the case, and a Defense Department judge sent a response that echoed the Navy's original conclusion. A Defense Department spokesman told us this month that there are no plans to reconsider.

Tabet can't afford a Washington law firm to plead his case. Instead, he has relied on the help of groups like the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee. "The government is playing hardball," said Albert Mokhiber, director of the committee's legal services. Mokhiber brought the case to the attention of Hamilton who chairs the House Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

Tabet has rebuilt his house and still holds hope that the United States will decide to at least partially compensate his family for what it has endured. Mokhiber said he doubts the Pentagon will change its stance until public outcry forces it to.

Marxist 'awakening'?

Concerning the editorial April 18th on the beginning of a religious awakening in the Soviet Union, somebody in the Soviet Union must be a student of Western history.

The present Marxist-Leninist thought, as well as the prevalent humanistic thought in the U.S. defines man as a machine whose value is defined by the state. Human reason is a god in these belief systems. Religions and the belief in the supernatural are all considered "myths."

Now we seem to be witnessing another cycle in human social trends.

Look at the parallels in history: The Renaissance (human reason) and the Reformation (return to man with dignity). The Enlightenment and the Industrial Revolution (human reason) and the religious awakening in Great Britain and America. (human dignity)

The Wesley and Whitefield revivals brought dignity to a dehumanized and materialistic Industrial Revolution. Free dispensaries, schools and orphanages were established. Credit unions and economic alternatives to welfare were also created. Lord Shaftesbury fought for justice for the poor. William Wilberforce was a key force in abolishing slavery in England. These movements and men were motivated by their strong Christian beliefs and some feel could have saved England from experiencing its own French Revolution.

I believe the Marxist countries are finding out that allowing religious expression and thought are beneficial for their people's welfare and in turn the, state's.

Wait for new board

I recently attended a meeting at Santa Rita elementary school in hopes of finding out more about the $11.8 million bond we will vote on May 7th.

We were told by the speaker, a representative of Midland Independent School District, that if it passes, taxes probably will be raised. This is not what many of us have been led to believe.

We were also informed that the site strongly being considered for the new K-3 grade school is in the Wydewood addition, which is about five miles from my home. Some of the children from Santa Rita will be going to this school. My daughter will be in third grade at the time this school will be finished. What this means to me and to parents of other third graders at Santa Rita in 1989-90 is that your child will be bused to this new school in third grade, Jane Long in fourth grade, back to Santa Rita in fifth grade, and to Travis in sixth grade.

Since Santa Rita is the school she attends now in first grade this means that by the time she finishes sixth grade, she will have attended four, count them four, elementary schools.

I do not feel that this is fair and could be avoided by: (1) building a pod school at Santa Rita, (2) building three elementary schools and creating a new cluster, or (3) redistricting the northwest part of town and putting more students at Scharbauer Elementary.

I urge you to vote against the bond issue on May 7 and wait to see what the new MISD School Board can do for us, before giving them any money. This bond issue could be put up for a vote in September, which is only three months after the election.

Jaycee event successful

On March 26, the Midland Jaycees held a spiritual development project called "Life's New Beginnings/The Sky's the Limit," at Hogan Park. Because of the support of many Midland merchants, the project was a complete success!

On behalf of the Midland Jaycees, I would like to express our sincere appreciation for the participation of: Albertsons, BYOB Water Store #2, Corley Paper and Box Company, Kentucky Fried Chicken, The Knotheads and Lamar Outdoor Advertising.

Special thanks also to Bruce Anderson who led our spiritual development and special music which was led by Bob and Joy Mullins and Lance Harris.

Except for a few hungry kite-eating trees, the kite flying contest went great! Awards went to Scott Haselwood for largest kite, Roy Mullins for smallest kite, and Randy Isenberg for the craziest kite.

Thanks also to the Reporter-Telegram for advertising the project and to Channel 9 TV for its coverage of the contest on the news.

It takes all of us to continue to keep Midland great in '88!

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, April 28, the 119th day of 1988. There are 247 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

Two hundred years ago, on April 28, 1788, Maryland became the seventh state to ratify the U.S. Constitution.

In 1969, French President Charles de Gaulle resigned his office.

Bush's 'education President' quest has risk

WASHINGTON — George Bush's aides say their tiger is about to "sharpen" his message. Given his message to date, sharpening it will be like stropping a slab of butter.

George F. Will

Having run in 1980 on a ticket pledged to obliterate the Department of Education, Bush now says he wants to be the "education President." The federal government, is and conservatives say it should remain, a peripheral factor in education. But, then, what remains of conservatism? Not much, as will become clear when Bush buckles down to the business of portraying Michael Dukakis as a budget-busting liberal who is weak regarding defense.

Dukakis may be exactly that but Bush must be at his silver-tongued (bronze?) best to obscure this fact: After eight years in power, conservatism is so confused that Republicans will have trouble making fear of Dukakis a substitute for enthusiasm for Bush.

In 1980, conservatism had a clear, if not altogether coherent, catechism: balanced budgets, shrinking government, strong defense, no nonsense about detente, action on the "social issues" of abortion and school prayer. Reagan at the peak of his powers was unable to get a Senate controlled by his own party to pass even the mildest constitutional amendments pertaining to those two social issues. And those issues are the least of conservatism's credibility problem.

How does Bush portray Dukakis as a menace to fiscal propriety? Compared to what?

Average expenditures during the Reagan years have been 18.9 percent of GNP, compared to 13.4 percent in the preceding eight years. As a percentage of GNP, the 1981-1988 deficits averaged 4.4. Those of 1973-80 averaged 2.4

How does Bush make Dukakis seem reckless regarding defense, given that Reagan's deficits killed Reagan's defense program years ago? John H. Makin of the American Enterprise Institute notes that the buildup began shortly before Reagan arrived and ground to a halt in 1985:

"The fastest growth of defense spending came during 1980-82, essentially reflecting outlays mandated in two Carter budgets and one Reagan budget. The Reagan administration continued a defense buildup through 1985, with defense outlays peaking at 6.5 percent of GNP during the fiscal year that began in October, 1985; defense spending never reached the average 6.9 percent share of GNP of the 1962-1985 period or even the 1962-85 share of GNP with the peak Vietnam years eliminated."

How does Bush depict Dukakis (as Reagan did Carter) as too fixated on arms control? The Reagan administration, like the Carter administration, has made arms control the "centerpiece" (the Carter administration's word) of U.S.-Soviet relations. Conservatives' grievances in this regard are compounded by the fact that for the last two years President Reagan has used his bully pulpit to preach an astonishingly garbled version of the European left's line. That is, he has stigmatized nuclear weapons, has waxed sentimental about Gorbachev, and has spoken nonsense about Soviet history.

It is inconceivable that Dukakis could say anything as daft as Reagan's recent statement that Gorbachev "is the first Soviet leader who has come along who has gone back before Stalin and...is trying to do what Lenin was teaching." What was Lenin the schoolmaster teaching? Why, glasnost and perestroika, openness and restructuring, and limited private enterprise.

Reagan now defines the Soviet regime with reference to Lenin the liberalizer, not Lenin the founder of "democratic centralism" and of the secret police to enforce it. Today's liberalization (says Reagan, applauding the chimera and ratifying Gorbachev's propaganda campaign) is "much more smacking of Lenin than of Stalin."

By contrasting Lenin the Good with Stalin the Bad, Reagan has endorsed a recurring theme of Soviet apologists. It is that the Soviet regime has no hegemonic aspirations as a result of its internal dynamic. Rather, the regime was distorted by a bad man who was an aberration, and the coming to power of a different man dissolves serious anxieties.

The Reagan administration is now pursuing commerce with the Soviet Union with the ardor one expects from Republicans, who really do believe that the business of America is business. In international affairs, many Republicans have only one idea and it is false. It is the 19th-century faith that trade produces peace — as though trade between European nations did not boom in the years before 1914.

Given the Republicans' recent record, it is going to be fascinating to watch the "education President" inwaiting educate the country about the current meaning, and indispensability, of conservatism.

Great thinkers also make good spellers!

NEW YORK — At Stanford the forces of social uplift and the academic Bourbons have been quarreling about what makes for a good education. More black and female literature in the curriculum? Or hold the line for Aristotle, St. Thomas Aquinas and Shakespeare?

Russell Baker

As one who has had a remarkable education, I feel obliged to make a few observations. First, it doesn't matter whether the required stuff is Aristotelian, black or female unless the students read it.

And don't tell me Stanford has ways of making them read. I have been to college. I have been required to read the 12 great thinkers of Western culture: Plato, Aristotle, St. Thomas and —

See: though I persuaded a faculty Gestapo that I had read enough great writing to merit a diploma, I can't even remember which great writers I was supposed to read, much less what they wrote. As for those I do remember, just ask me what Aristotle and St. Thomas said if you want to see me fall mute.

I realize Stanford students are so superior to all other students that they're practically weird, but does that mean they are actually going to read Aristotle? Or does it mean they are going to be amazingly cunning at devising ways to make Stanford think they've read Aristotle when they haven't turned Page One?

I am not siding with the revolution here. Though not required in college to read the works of W.E.B. Du Bois and Carrie Chapman Catt, I am confident I could have found them just as conducive to deep coma as Aristotle was.

When we talk about good education, one of the first subjects to be discussed is spelling, and the first reason for getting college students to read is to teach them to spell.

It is sad about the English language, but it can be spelled correctly only by people who have memorized what each word looks like. Logic is useless for spelling English words. Why "harass," for example, should have only one "r" while "embarrass" has two is a question with no answer. It just does, that's all.

The only way to learn spelling is to read so much that you automatically recognize what thousands and thousands of English words look like. And how much Aristotle, Plato, St. Thomas, Du Bois and Carrie Chapman Catt can a college student read before overtaken by stupor?

Very little. The result: humiliation for the American letter writer. And why? Because high-minded professors and-or equally high-minded social upliftists are more interested in promoting their pet educational theories than in stamping out the barbaric spellings that infest the typical American letter.

Someone will say it doesn't matter if American letters are illiterate because you can always use the telephone, can't you?

Not to discuss Aristotle, W.E.B. Du Bois and Carrie Chapman Catt, surely. Imagine a phone ringing at dinner time. Mother answers the call, listens, says, "Father, it is our dear child phoning all the way from Stanford to talk to you."

Father: Wants another cash infusion, I suppose.

Mother: No, dear, it wants to discuss W.E.B. Du Bois' categorical imperative with you.

Does this little scene seem implausible to the point of lunacy?

If not, try to imagine Father taking the phone, saying, "Dear child, the categorical imperative was not W.E.B. Du Bois'; it was Immanuel Kant's. Which reminds me, I knew you hadn't been reading your Immanuel Kant, much less anything at all, when I got your postcard from Carmel-by-the-Sea saying you were 'having a wondurfull time reding "The Criteek of Pure Reeson" by Emanuel Can't.'"

Yes, you can imagine rage creeping into Father's voice as he speaks, can't you? No wonder. He is spending a fortune for a Stanford education, yet he gets postcards like that. I imagine Father might react just as I would, by sending a stiff note to Stanford demanding it expose his child to something a child might read so it can at least learn to spell.

Remember, brilliant though they may be, even Stanford students are human. They must read or they will spell dumbly.

When I was in college I learned to spell, despite Aristotle and St. Thomas, with the help of "Doc Savage," "Gone With the Wind," "The Grapes of Wrath," "Native Son," "The Great Gatsby," "Look Homeward, Angel" and "Spicy Detective," to name just a few that might improve spelling skills at Stanford.

Now, on to geography. It's disgraceful that students don't know where Asia is, much less Mexico. Stanford would be amazed at how much geography a kid can learn from stamp collecting. So suppose, instead of Plato...

Politburo member comes to steel mill

WORLD

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A Politburo member appeared today at the huge Lenin steel mills, where management declared a strike by thousands of workers illegal and reportedly threatened to call in riot police to end the three-day walkout.

Organizers said 16,000 workers, or half the work force, were on strike at the mills outside the southern city of Krakow to demand higher pay. It is Poland's largest work stoppage since martial law stifled the independent Solidarity labor union 6½ years ago.

Negotiations at the Lenin works broke off early today.

Alfred Miodowicz, a member of Poland's Communist Party Politburo and the head of the All-Poland Trade Union Alliance, was at the mill and said another government official, Deputy Prime Minister Zbigniew Szalajda, also was expected. Szalajda is the government's industrial policy chief.

The personal involvement of two senior officials indicated a high level of official concern about the strike, which comes only a few days before official May Day celebrations, an annual time of protest for government opponents.

Miodowicz, who began his career as a steel worker at the Lenin plant in Nowa Huta outside Krakow, is the head of the union alliance created in 1982 to take Solidarity's place.

Asked by a Western reporter about the possibility of using force to break the strike, Miodowicz said, "I don't think that will be necessary."

In other developments, about 100 people staged a brief rally in Krakow in support of the strike. Solidarity activists in the southeastern Polish city of Stalowa Wola reaffirmed their call for a strike Friday at an 18,000-worker heavy machinery plant there.

The government has raised prices 42 percent so far this year as part of a program to make the economy more market-oriented, and there is widespread discontent that wages are lagging behind inflation.

The 16-member strike committee was formally notified by a prosecutor today that their strike was illegal, and company foremen were distributing forms in which each worker was asked to declare in writing whether or not he was on strike.

But the committee said it would ignore the prosecutor's letter and told workers not to sign the forms, said Zygmunt Lenyk, an opposition activist in Krakow.

Amid signs of increasing tension at the plant, negotiations with the strike committee that began at midnight lasted just 15 minutes, and one committee member said they were told by a director that if a political solution was not found soon, "the ZOMO (special riot police) will take over."

Wednesday, the strikers rejected a government offer that nearly met their demand for a 50 percent pay increase.

Management later told strike leaders that if no agreement was reached, it "would not be responsible for the security of the strikers," Solidarity adviser Jacek Kuron said today in Warsaw.

Stanislaw Handzlik, a strike committee member, said by telephone that more than 12,000 strikers were at the plant this morning. Organizers said workers were rotating inside the plant, staying two shifts then going home for one.

Outwardly, the plant appeared calm, with no banners and little activity.

The government was to enter talks today with city transit workers in Lodz, Torun and Grudziadz, who are seeking higher wages.

Monday, transit workers in the northwestern city of Bydgoszcz staged an 11-hour strike and won a 60 percent raise. A day later, the strike began at the Lenin mills. Organizers said it was spontaneous.

The labor troubles are Poland's most serious since the yearlong heyday of the now-outlawed Solidarity trade union movement, which ended with the government's December 1981 crackdown. Strikes of occupation were then violently broken up by riot police and hundreds of union supporters interned.

Solidarity Chairman Lech Walesa, in a statement issued from his home in the northern port of Gdansk on Wednesday, urged Poles to "put pressure on the authorities" and called for the restoration of Solidarity's legal status.

The strikers at the steel mills have demanded the government double the current $15 compensation for the price increases for industrial workers, retirees, teachers and health workers.

Judge denies mistrial motion in robbery case

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A state district judge today denied a defense motion for a mistrial after most jurors hearing the aggravated robbery case said they read a newspaper article about the proceedings Wednesday.

Judge Pat Baskin denied the motion by attorneys for Edward C. Nicholson Jr., 22, who is accused of the robbery-shooting last November of 22-year-old LeeAnn Martin of Midland.

Defense attorney Vern Martin said the Reporter-Telegram story — which included a reference to a prior trial of the defendant on the same charge — had influenced the jury's ability to return a fair verdict.

"I don't have any choice but to ask the court for a mistrial," Martin said. He and co-counsel Carol Kirk noted a well-known evidentiary rule which states evidence of a prior conviction is not admissible in court.

As he made his ruling, Baskin noted he had not instructed jurors not to read or view any news accounts of the trial.

The eight jurors who said they read the article were questioned individually by Martin and Baskin in open court. But each said knowledge of the prior trial would not influence them.

The eight-man, four-woman jury was expected to hear closing arguments and begin deliberations late today in the trial which began Tuesday in 142nd State District Court.

Attorneys for the defendant — known to his family and friends as "Junior" — called a parade of witnesses to the stand Wednesday.

All testified a close friend of Nicholson's had claimed he had robbed and shot Ms. Martin as she walked through the Quinten's Walk Apartments complex on Caldera Boulevard.

Witnesses disputed Ms. Martin's identification of Nicholson as the man who confronted her as she walked home from her job at Midland Park Mall, kicked her and then tried to snatch her purse before he shot her in the side and fled.

Wilhemina Nicholson, the defendant's mother, took the stand late Wednesday and told the jury that a close friend of her son's, Warrick Clater, 17, had called her several times from the Midland County Jail and claimed he robbed Ms. Martin.

"He told me Junior did not do it, and that he (Clater) did," Ms. Nicholson told defense attorney Martin.

Ms. Nicholson was one of several witnesses whose testimony was ruled admissible by Baskin. Prosecutors had objected to the testimony earlier as hearsay, but after discussion the judge ruled the testimony was governed by an exception in the hearsay rule.

Earlier, witness Brian Baker took the stand for the defense and testified Clater also told him he pulled the Martin robbery.

Baker, who met Clater in the county jail, said he heard "quite a lot" of talk about the robbery.

"He convinced me he was telling the truth," about the crime, Baker said. "He said, 'I really did it.' "

Another inmate, Doyle Wells, who met Clater in jail in Snyder, told jurors the same story.

But, on cross-examination by prosecutor Robin Sams, Wells said Clater claimed the robbery occurred near "a bowling alley."

Within 30 minutes of the Martin robbery, another woman was robbed near the Fairmont Park Lanes bowling alley, 5320 N. Loop 250, a police detective testified.

Det. Sgt. Ken Moten told jurors Clater was a suspect in the robbery of Linda Matthews, 30. In fact, Moten said, an investigation led to Clater as the actual robber. He pleaded guilty to the robbery Jan. 15 and was sentenced to 10 years in state prison, according to court records.

Jurors heard from two more witnesses Wednesday who were incarcerated with Clater — and both said he talked about the robbery of "the woman at the apartment."

GOP chairman candidate doesn't see Robertson backers as threat to party

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Unlike many rank-and-file Texas Republicans, the man running for the state GOP chairmanship discounts the alleged threat of a party-machinery takeover by supporters of presidential candidate Pat Robertson.

Former Dallas County Republican Party Chairman Fred Meyer stopped in Midland Wednesday to speak to the Midland County Republican Men's Club about his bid to head the party in Texas.

Current state GOP Chairman George Strake, a Houston oilman, is resigning the post this year.

Supporters of Robertson — who still calls himself a candidate though Vice President George Bush won the nomination numbers game Tuesday — were successful in some Texas counties such as Lubbock and Tarrant in ousting Republican precinct and county chairmen during Super Tuesday elections.

Some Bush-supporters worry — in hushed tones — that Robertson followers threaten the more moderate platform they hope to present at the national convention in New Orleans this August.

Meyer, 60, however, sees the influx of new Robertson supporters as a chance to bring more Republicans into the party fold.

During the March 8 election "there were some areas in Texas where Bush-backers excluded Robertson supporters, but there were some areas where Robertson-backers excluded Bush supporters," Meyer said.

He doesn't believe the two factions are in disharmony, doesn't expect squabbles at the state convention, but admits challenges facing him should he win include "keeping the party unified," Meyer said.

What splintered party unity in a greater sense were the 1976 and 1980 Republican primaries pitting President Reagan against former President Gerald Ford and Bush, Meyer said.

A group of ultra-conservative Reagan-supporters felt Ford and Bush were too liberal for the party, he explained.

No one is running against Meyer in the chairman's race yet, he said.

Speculation that Diana Denman, state Republican Party vice chairman, would oppose Meyer was stifled earlier this year by her statement that she would not run.

The loser of the runoff for the Republican senatorial race was also expected to be a contender for the chairmanship, Meyer said.

But, the loser, Houstonian Wes Gilbreath, told Meyer he wouldn't seek the job, but that conversation occurred prior to his runoff loss to U.S. Rep. Beau Boulter, Meyer said.

Meyer said as state GOP chairman, he would try to secure more Republican seats at the city, county and state government-level and see to it that a plan is formed to redraw U.S. congressional and state senatorial districts in Texas.

Meyer said Democrats "badly gerrymandered" districts in 1981.

Strengthening the party at the grass roots level is also on the agenda should Meyer be elected, he claimed, as well recruiting more financial backers to support Republican candidates.

While Meyer served as the Dallas County GOP Chairman from 1979-1986, the number of elected Republican county officials rose from 10 to 80 percent, he said.

Dallas evolved as the largest urban Republican stronghold in the nation during that period, as well.

Meyer currently serves as president and chairman of the board of Aladdin Industries, best known as the maker of thermos bottles and lunch kits.

Odessa's police cycle unit may be abolished

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The operational suspension of the Odessa Police Department's motorcycle division could result in abolition of the unit because of the potential for liability claims against the city.

In the latest incident involving a police motorcycle, the operator, Cpl. Richard Mayo, and two El Paso Shriners were injured.

Mayo, 35, Glenn Edwin Guy, 55, and David Owen Graves, 65, were transported from the scene of the accident late Saturday morning in the 900-block of North Texas Avenue to Medical Center Hospital. Mayo and Graves were treated and released, while Guy was subsequently transferred to an El Paso hospital. Guy suffered a skull fracture and fractured leg.

Over a five year period, accidents involving police motorcycles have claimed the lives of two officers and injured two others, including Mayo.

Local flying club will restore Pliska plane

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Come June, a piece of Texas aeronautic history may find a place among the modern conveniences of Midland International Airport after the City Council this week chose a local flying club to restore the Pliska plane.

The plane — cited by some sources as the first motored airplane to fly in Texas — will be hung near the airport terminal entrance after its restoration by the West Texas Aerobatic Club, City Manager Fred Poe said Wednesday.

Poe said the plane likely would be hung from the terminal ceiling at a level low enough to give airport visitors a good look at the craft.

A rope or chain would cordon off the viewing site and keep the plane away from inquisitive hands, he said.

The craft was built in 1912 by aeronautic pioneer John Pliska, a Midland blacksmith.

Political campaigning akin to courting your darling

Todd

Political campaigning ought to be revamped and heightened.

About all anyone ever gets when romancing with a politician's run-of-the-mill gibberish is clambering rhetoric: "If elected ..." and all of that nonsense.

It's akin to courting your darling. In full rut, you are prone to make outlandish promises hinged to marriage and to the rainbow. After the wedding, you may spend the rest of your life waiting for the delivery truck.

Occasionally, I find it amazing that some people year after year and others only during troubled presidential elections years get full of fervent passion and excitement over who is running for what.

It's as if they are at the starting gate and are waiting for the dogs or the horses — depending on the caliber of the race — to stir up dust in their rabid charge for the sweating finish.

At the moment of the race, the excitement is peaking — jockeying for positions, the screams and yells, the flashing of promises and payoff, the anxiety as the race nears the end of the run, and the drama of the finish. What follows next depends on the perspective of the bettor. There will be the intense pleasure of winning the sweepstakes or the nose-dive letdown of losing a bet.

In politics, it seems that the "fun" is in the game-playing — the jockeying for positions. Those ardent partisans, who take sides as if the continued spinning of the Earth depends on their candidates winning the election, are euphoric if their man wins and dejected if he loses the race.

Afterward, it seems, most folks seem to forget the rhetoric and flag-waving gestures made in the heat of the race and who has got the most hair-line factures in "them there bones" in the closet.

Most folks, like Old Rip, go back to sleep until the barking of the watch-dog press reaches such a pitch that they cannot ignore the yipping. So, they turn on the boob-tube or radio and rattle the newsprint to read about what happened and to discern a writer's view of events and what might come to pass.

Now, we all understand the lofty principles underlying politics: the preservation of The Republic through the workings of a democracy guided by the brilliantly conceived and brilliantly written Constitution and tempered by a heritage of moral values and divine guidance.

Indeed, it seems truly amazing, in view of politicians' fumbles and foibles, that the country lumbers on. The nation may be like the old bomber, probably a World War II B-17 Flying Fortress, that returned from a mission on "a wing and a prayer" despite its being all shot up from enemy flak and fire.

That old airplane had something grand going for it. First of all, it was fundamentally sound — good, sturdy, stout, dependable and faithful. Like the old DC-3, it would fly when others couldn't.

Maybe our nation, now flying on a wing and a prayer, is not grounded because it has sound fundamental qualities — thanks to the grace of God.

The B-17 made it back home after the mission. But, as the pilot and crew knew, the old airplane would need major repairs — like the re-awakening of a nation — if it ever were to fly again.

In the meantime, while the costly "fun" of politicking and campaigning is headline news, the nation cries for some stimulating, rousing and thoughtful rhetoric — some intelligent and lofty rhetoric. Have the masters, such as William Jennings Bryan and Adlai Stevenson, all died, and their legacy is left dormant?

What this nation needs in the midst of political campaigns is some downright good oratory and thought and none of this soap-opera sex and drivel. Enough is enough.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Simon play to open

From Staff Reports

Neil Simon's comedy hit "Brighton Beach Memoirs" opens Friday at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Voted Best Play by the New York Drama Critics Circle, "Brighton Beach Memoirs" is a somewhat autobiographical play about Simon and his family in Brooklyn in 1937. The Midland Community Theatre production is being co-produced by Nancy and Buddy Anguish.

People attending the opening night performance will be offered free intermission hor d'oeuvres courtesy of El Chico.

The production runs Thursday through Friday until May 14. A matinee will be held at 2:30 p.m. Sunday.

For reservations or more information, call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

MC Student Senate elected

Election of 1988-89 Midland College Student Senate was held recently.

Executive officers are chosen during the spring semester, allowing them time to do planning for the 1988-89 year.

The newly elected officers are: Rusty Wilkes, president, graduate of Rankin High School; Schantale Wilturner, vice-president, Houston High School of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice; Michelle Settle, secretary, Midland Lee High School; and Heather Coleman, parliamentarian, also from Midland Lee High School.

OC to stage 'Antigone'

ODESSA — The Globe Theatre and Odessa College Theatre are presenting "Antigone" today through Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

The production is adapted by Paula Thompson from the play by Jean Anouilh, which was based on Sophocles' "Antigone."

Ticket price is $8 adults, $5.50 students and senor citizens and OC students and faculty are admitted with current ID's.

The Globe Theatre is located at 2308 Shakespeare Road. For more information or to make reservations, call 1-332-1586. The project is funded in part by the Odessa Cultural Council.

Jazz concert scheduled

ODESSA — A Jazz concert is being presented by the Odessa College Jazz Ensemble at 8 p.m. today at Permian Playhouse.

Guest artist will be saxophonist Dr. Thom Mason, director of Jazz Studies, University of Southern California. Mason will be conducting a "Saxophone and Wind Synthesizer Clinic" from 10 a.m. to noon Saturday in the Fine Arts Center at OC. The clinic is free and open to all interested parties.

Tickets for the concert are priced at $3 for adult and $2 for students and senior citizens. Director of the OC Jazz Ensemble is Dr. Bernard Rose.

Commencement planned

Commencement exercises for the West Texas Baptist Institute will be held at 8 p.m. Friday in the sanctuary of Tall City Missionary Baptist Church, 3500 Anetta.

The address will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. Robert Ashcraft of Benton, Ark. Ashcraft is a writer of Christian books, an educator and a seminary teacher.

Ashcraft will also be conducting a "Teacher's Seminar" at 7:30 p.m. today at Tall City Missionary Baptist Church.

The Rev. Bill Simpson, president of WTBI, invites the public to attend the seminar and the commencement exercises.

UTPB singers to perform

ODESSA — The University of Texas of the Permian Basin's University Singers will present a concert at 8 p.m. Saturday in the university's Performing Arts Center.

The group will perform Rossini's 1863 version of "The Petite Messe Solennelle" or "Little Mass" with chorus and soloists. Although Rossini was the most popular writer of comic operas during the 19th century, "Little Mass" is not a comedy but rather an unusual and uplifting sacred work.

Tickets, priced at $4 for the public and $2 for students and senior citizens, may be purchased at the door. For more information call Steven Powell, 1-367-2361.

In addition, the group will perform the same work at 3 p.m. Sunday at Our Savior Lutheran Church, Midland.

DEATHS

Alice Dickinson

Dickinson

KINGWOOD — Alice Bond Dickinson, 82, of Kingwood, formerly of Midland, died Wednesday at her residence.

Funeral services will be at 2 p.m. Friday at Kingwood United Methodist Church with the Rev. Ben Chamness officiating. Burial will be Saturday in the family cemetery in Palo Pinto.

She was born March 12, 1906 in Hillsboro. It was during her years there that she played the piano for services at the Mexican Methodist Mission Church, which her family helped organize. She completed her public education in Hillsboro, attended Kidd Key College, and taught school briefly before marrying pioneer West Texas oilman H.B. "Dick" Dickinson in 1926 in Mineral Wells.

The couple lived in the Midland area for more than 50 years and reared nine children. Mrs. Dickinson was active in the First Methodist Church as well as scouting and local charitable organizations. She was preceded in death by her husband in 1969 and her eldest son, David Lynn, in 1972.

Mrs. Dickinson moved with her son, Dan, and his family, to Hamburg, West Germany in 1971. She moved to Kingwood in 1976 and became involved with the Kingwood Volunteer Fire Department as a dispatcher, served on several committees including the Council on Ministries and Administrative Board of the Kingwood United Methodist Church. She was chairman of the Society of St. Stephen, which is a local ministry of Kingwood United Methodist Church. She also taught Sunday School classes, acted as a chaperone on youth outings, participated on the church softball team, worked with the Montgomery County Assistance Office, the 3-H Center in Humble, and other area churches and charitable organizations. She was a charter member of the Northeast Memorial Medical Center Hospital Auxiliary in Humble.

Mrs. Dickinson was named Texas State Mother of the Year in 1983. In 1986, Gov. Mark White presented her with a Bicentennial Distinguished Citizen of Kingwood Award for her contributions to community service.

Survivors include two sons, Dan Dickinson of Singapore and George Mark Dickinson of Dallas; six daughters, Mary Jess Baze and Sara Jane Dennett, both of Midland, Ruth Ann Metheny of Raleigh, N.C., Sue Apodaca of Bedford, Martha Alexander of San Diego, Calif., and Cynthia Elizabeth DeLeon of Baltimore, Md.

Pallbearers are to be Joe Robnett, John Bumberg, Vic Spurlock, Woody Barksdale, Walter Canty and Benny Jarratt.

Honorary pallbearers are to be Bob McGill, John Zimmerman, Alvin White, Charles Bonney, Jack Donner, Tom Wussow and the Kingwood United Methodist Church Administrative Board.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the Society of St. Stephen or the Building Fund of the Kingwood United Methodist Church.

Funeral arrangements are under the direction of Brookside Funeral Home in Houston.

Joseph Cappadonna

Cappadonna

A rosary for Joseph Anthony Cappadonna of Midland, will be recited at 7 p.m. tonight in the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel, with the Rev. Fred Nawarskas of St. Ann's Catholic Church officiating. Funeral services will be at 10 a.m. Friday at St. Ann's Catholic Church, with burial following in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Cappadonna died Thursday at local hospital after a lengthy illness.

He was born Feb. 6, 1962 in Midland and attended Midland schools. He was graduated from Lee High School in 1980 and joined his father in running the family business, Mid-West Electric, as an electrical contractor. In 1984, he moved to Phoenix and opened Mid-West Electric of Arizona. He was an amateur photographer and was a member of St. Ann's Catholic Church.

Survivors include his parents, Mitchell and Jerry Cappadonna of Midland; three brothers, Mitchell P. Cappadonna of Tomball, John Mark Cappadonna of Honolulu, Hawaii, and Bo David Cappadonna of San Antonio; two sisters, Cathy Steward of Kingwood, and Carol Cappadonna of Austin; and his grandmothers, Evenly Gentry of Austin, and Mary Ann Cappadonna of Midland.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the Leukemia Society of America, 906 Basse Road, San Antonio, Texas, 78212.

Maggie Britt

LAMESA — Funeral services for Maggie Ereth Britt, 99, of Lubbock, will be at 2 p.m. Friday at Welch Baptist Church, with the Rev. Ray Cunningham, pastor of Gomez Baptist Church, officiating. Burial will follow in Lamesa Memorial Park under the direction of Branon Funeral Home.

She died Tuesday at a Lubbock nursing home following a lengthy illness.

She was born April 28, 1888 in Fisher County. She married Dan Britt on Sept. 14, 1905 in Fisher County. She was preceded in death by her husband in 1972 and two sons, Edward Britt and Jimmy Britt. She moved to Dawson County in 1928 from Stonewall County and was a longtime member of the Baptist Church. She had resided in Lubbock the past nine years.

Survivors include a daughter, Mary Ellen Fortenberry of Lubbock; a son, J.D. Britt of Phoenix, Ariz.; six grandchildren; 12 great-grandchildren and seven great-great-grandchildren.

Parker Phillips

STANTON — Graveside services for Parker Phillips, 72, of Stanton will be 2 p.m. Friday in Evergreen Cemetery, with Deral McWhorter, pastor of the Stanton Church of Christ, officiating. Services are under the direction of Gilbreath Funeral Home.

He died Wednesday at his residence after a lengthy illness.

Phillips was born Jan. 18, 1916 in Somerset, Ky., and moved to Stanton in 1964 from Colorado City. He was a retired mechanic.

Survivors include two sisters, Pearl Cox of Stanton and Wagie Graham of Irving; three brothers, George Phillips of Stanton, Willie Phillips of Big Spring, and Earnest Phillips of Odessa.

Mrs. Ben Tamney

Services for Mrs. Ben (Jessie Cowden) Tamney were to be at 11 a.m. today at the First Baptist Church Chapel.

Burial was to follow at Resthaven Momorial Park.

Pallbearers were to be Jerry Walker, Durward Goolsby, Tom Sloan, Billy Joe Fox, Darrell F. Smnith, Edward Johnson, Wales Madden III.

PLANE

Pliska's daughter, Midlander Beth Pliska, has said her father was fascinated with flight and also learned how to fly hot air balloons in his native Austria.

A $10,000 grant from the Abell-Hanger Foundation will fund the restoration, City Councilman Gordon Marcum II said this morning.

Aeronautic Club member Gene Beggs has told airport board members that the club doesn't want to change the craft's character in restoration.

City Airport Director Vic White has said the plane has patches on the undersides of its wings, pinholes throughout, fabric covering its wings, tarnished wire and scuffed wood.

Marcum said the first step in restoration would be tearing out the north wall of the Abell-Pliska Museum at the airport — the craft's current location — to "gently pull and lift it out."

The restoration process would occur in a nearby airport hanger, he said.

After restoration, the council will contract with as yet unchosen engineering firm to disassemble the plane and then reassemble it within the airport terminal, he said.

"It's really something special," said Marcum. "I'm not sure if it was the first airplane in the air, but it was close to being the first airplane in Texas that flew."

EX-POWS to visit camp site

HEREFORD (AP) — A group of Italian ex-prisoners of war are scheduled to arrive Friday for a two-day visit to the Hereford POW camp where they were held during World War II.

One of the first stops for the 50 POWs and their wives will be a historic chapel that the POWs built in 1944 using cement they mixed by hand.

The group will hold a news conference Saturday, said Grant Hanna, an ex-staff sergeant at the camp.

Hanna said the group will visit the camp compound that was built in 1942 and torn down in 1946. He said the camp held between 7,000 and 8,000 prisoners while Hereford was a town of 2,300.

"While there we'll explain to them where their quarters, fences and jailhouse all were located," he said.

Later the POWs will go to the American Legion Hall where they will be served a Texas-style barbecue supper, followed by a short program and exchange of gifts.

On Sunday, the Italians will visit Umbarger where they will attend Mass at St. Mary's Catholic Church where several POWs painted murals.

The POWs will end the day with evening festivities at Harvey Artho's residence, Hanna said.

Artho, whose father was a guard at the camp, has corresponded and visited one of the former POWs, retired Gen. Franco Di Bello.

Accountant running for school board seat

From Staff Reports

Morrison

Ken Morrison has announced his candidacy for the District 3 seat on the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees.

Morrison, a Midland resident for the past 10 years, cites his experience as a certified public accountant working in public accounting for 10 years as an asset for managing the $59 million MISD budget.

Morrison has done the accounting for numerous large and small companies, "helping them to develop budgets and providing financial advice," he said in announcing his candidacy.

He has done audits required by governmental agencies of both profit and non-profit organizations.

He said he believes this, plus his experience in running his own business as a partner in Rhea, Prucka & Morrison, CPA's, will bring sound financial judgment to the MISD board.

A graduate of Hardin-Simmons University with a BA in history and MBA in management from the Univeraity of Texas of the Permian Basin, Morrison is a member of the Permian Basin Chapter of TSCPA, the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants and the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants.

As a CPA, he is required to take 40 hours of continuing professional education a year. He has taught in Project Business at both Lee and Midland freshman schools, as well as a number of accounting courses at Midland College.

He is a deacon at First Baptist Church, where he directs the seventh grade Sunday school.

He and his wife, Shirley, a certified teacher, have two children — Trey, 14, student council president at Lee Freshman and Misty, 11, a fifth grader at Bowie Elementary.

In announcing his candidacy, Morrison said, "My primary concern is to get some help to our elementary schools. We can combat our high drop out rate by reaching and helping the kids in their early years. If we establish a pattern of success instead of failure in their grade school years this pattern will carry over into the secondary years."

Killer charged with sexual assault

AUSTIN (AP) — A convicted killer placed on probation last year against the recommendations of police and prosecutors has been charged with two child sex offenses and one count of drug possession.

The foreman of the jury that decided to place David P. Bertram on probation instead of in prison said Wednesday that he is sorry about their decision.

Bertram, 21, of Austin, was convicted of shooting Carl Schuneman three times in the head while Schuneman slept in his East Austin apartment in September 1986.

At his trial, Bertram testified that Schuneman, 32, had forced him to perform oral sex at gunpoint the night of the killing, and that Bertram shot Schuneman to get away.

After finding Bertram guilty of voluntary manslaughter — reduced from the original charge of intentional murder, jurors decided to place him on probation for 10 years.

"It obviously makes me feel that we probably made a mistake," said jury foreman Roy Smith of the new charges against Bertram.

TRIAL

According to other testimony Wednesday, Clater, Nicholson and another man drove to Quinten's Walk. Clater left the car before the other two, shortly before the robbery occurred.

But the victim, who was the first witness in the trial, positively identified Nicholson as the man who robbed her.

CYCLES

The most recent fatal police motorcycle accident occurred Aug. 3, 1987. Officer Scott Smith suffered massive head injuries and died Feb. 7, 1988, in a Dallas hospital where he was transferred from MCH. Smith never regained consciousness after the accident.

In August 1982, Cpl. G.T. Toal, 36, died of injuries he sustained in an accident that occurred while he was on funeral escort duty. Toal's motorcycle was involved in a collision with a vehicle that reportedly moved out of line in the funeral procession.

Officer Sidney "Sparky" Lyle was injured in a motorcycle accident that occurred Nov. 27, 1987.

Mayo was off motorcycle duty from April 1987 to November 1987 following an incident in which a superior officer reported clocking Mayo and Officer Rick Campos traveling in excess of 90 mph while on funeral escort duty. Campos was fired in July 1987, allegedly for several violations of the police department Code of Conduct. Mayo received a 10-day suspension without pay from the force in August 1987.

Police officials several times have reviewed policies relating to the motorcyle division, but the decision to suspend use of the vehicles came Monday following a conference between City Manager Bill Brown, Chief Alan Stewart and Deputy Chief Jim Dodson. The unit apparently will remain suspended pending a review of departmental policies and a determination of the benefits and liabilities involved in the use of motorcycles.

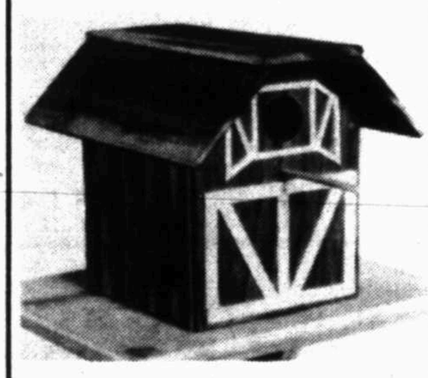

The initial accident report filed by investigating officers indicated an "unsafe" turn made by Guy had contributed to last Saturday's accident. The report stated Mayo was operating his motorcycle under "emergency conditions," with the motorcycle's siren and lights on.

However, in a news release Monday afternoon, Dodson said officers had investigated the accident in light of standard traffic regulations. He noted that the Shiners' Spring Parade was operating legally under a parade permit issued by Stewart, which meant the parade route had been closed and, therefore, standard traffic regulations did not apply.

Sailor's family trying to cope with his death

WILLIS (AP) — The family of Robert Bordelon Jr. had looked forward to a November reunion, but instead they were making funeral plans for the career Navy man killed during an explosion aboard the USS Bonefish submarine.

The body of Bordelon, 39, and two other crewmen who had been missing since the Sunday explosion in the 30-year-old submarine's battery compartment were found early Wednesday inside the vessel.

A Navy lieutenant's 6 a.m. visit to the home of Bordelon's mother east of Willis confirmed relatives' worst fears.

"The door bell rings at 6 o'clock in the morning, and you know. In our minds, we probably knew he was dead. But, in our hearts, we were still hoping," said Richard Etie, the fiance of Bordelon's mother, Adell Burger.

In telephone conversations with relatives before boarding the submarine in mid-April, Bordelon expressed concern over mechanical problems on the Bonefish.

On Wednesday, relatives were trying to cope with the realization that Bordelon would not be coming home.

After almost 20 years of military service, the petty officer 1st class had planned to retire in November and settle in his hometown of Willis, a town of about 2,500 people, located 40 miles north of Houston.

Relatives said he wanted to remarry and raise a family and possibly manage restaurants, the Houston Chronicle reported.

His son, Robert John "B.J." Bordelon, 14, lives with Bordelon's ex-wife.

"My feeling is if a man has put 19 years and so many months into the service and is fixing to retire, you don't send him out on a training mission. I'm sure he was training other people, but I don't think like the government, I guess," said Etie.

David Bordelon, 37, said the Navy indicated it would be two to three days before his brother's body is flown back to Texas. The family plans a military funeral at Conroe's Metcalf funeral home with burial at Willis Cemetery.

"We're going up to clear the plot today," said his brother, who lives in Houston. "We were all praying and hoping that he could still be alive. It's really rough."

He said he's sure his brother died while saving others during the submarine's mass evacuation.

"That was his job — getting people out. That was his responsibility, and Bobby is the kind who would help anybody."

Navy officials have said Bordelon and the others who had been missing were last seen in the vessel's control room and might have died while saving their comrades. Bordelon's relatives said Navy officials did not tell them where his body was found in the submarine.

"There's a lot of information we're still waiting on," said his brother. "I hope we know some of the details soon."

Relatives said they found it strange that Bordelon called all his relatives before boarding the submarine.

Police officer threatens suicide

EL PASO (AP) — An off-duty police officer who threatened to kill himself with a shotgun outside a convenience store is undergoing a psychiatric evaluation, officials said.

Jerry D. Herring, who held off about 50 other officers before a fellow officer talked him into giving up, handcuffed himself and surrendered peacefully after the one hour standoff early Wednesday, according to police and witnesses.

He was taken to R.E. Thomason Hospital for a 72-hour psychiatric evaluation, police spokesman Sgt. John Loy said, adding that no charges will be filed pending the examination's results.

Arturo Alarcon, a night clerk at the Circle K store on El Paso's east side, said a man pulled up to the store about 2:50 a.m., carrying three pistols and a shotgun. The man mentioned family problems and appeared to have been drinking, according to Alarcon and other eyewitnesses.

"He was yelling real loud, and then he started crying," said Alarcon, who watched the standoff from the back of the store. "I thought he was going to kill himself."

The 28-year-old officer, a 4½-year veteran of the force, called police after he arrived at the store and threatened to kill himself, police Sgt. Barry Bogle said.

When several police cars arrived, Herring pulled out a shotgun, placed it under his chin and began yelling at the officers, Alarcon said. Several times, he hit himself on the head with one of the pistols.

Hostage negotiators and the Special Weapons and Tactics squad were on the scene, but were not used, Bogle said.

Policies encourage overconsumption of fat

By MARIAN BURROS
New York Times News Service

Americans are eating too much fat, but you knew that already. What you may not know is that the government's agriculture policies are partly responsible for encouraging this overconsumption.

Such findings are not the rantings of some nutrition fanatic or an anti-government reactionary. They are the conclusions of a three-year study of the American food supply by a committee of the National Research Council, an agency of the National Academy of Sciences.

The report, "Designing Foods: Animal Product Options in the Marketplace," released this month, said that in the American diet, animal products "contribute more than half the total fat, three-fourths of the saturated fatty acids, and all the cholesterol food components that may adversely affect an individual's health."

It said that the Agriculture Department's meat grading policies encourage overfattening of beef and lamb and that the department does not provide enough information to consumers about lower-fat animal products. Nutrition labeling is not mandatory.

Over the years there have been small but significant changes in the way animal products are raised and marketed, resulting in greater availability of lower-fat meat and poultry. But now, for the first time, a government committee has made specific recommendations to increase further the availability of healthy animal products. One recommendation, which would have been unthinkable 20 years ago, urges "a commitment on the part of producers to understand how diet relates to health and to implement appropriate feeding, breeding and selection programs." With this recommendation, the government is signaling that it is time to encourage American agriculture to be consumer-driven rather than producer-driven.

TO ACCOMPLISH this, the report recommends that economic, marketing and research policies be redefined to encourage production of leaner animal products and to discourage production of excess fat.

Changes in the meat-grading system, for example, could encourage meat producers to remove the outer layer of fat immediately after slaughter and before marketing, which would result in leaner cuts.

More progress in developing low-fat alternatives and in labeling has been made in dairy products than in the meat and poultry departments. But knowledgable consumers have already discovered some alternatives to more fatty foods: turkey in place of veal; beef graded select in place of choice or prime, which have higher fat content; game birds in place of capon; and an assortment of processed meats, though these products, while containing less fat than other meats, often fall short in other nutritional areas.

While the producers have a long way to go, some developments are already encouraging consumers to eat low-fat meats.

In 1987, for example, the Agriculture Department changed the name of the category of beef labeled "good," which has less fat than either prime or choice, to "select," which is considered to be more appealing, and thus more marketable. Retailers, under no obligation to use the government labels, had been selling the "good" grade under whatever name they chose, such as "lean"; they can now sell it with the government's "select" label. Consumers, hesitant to buy ungraded store-branded beef, may find this more appealing.

ABOUT TWO years ago, supermarkets began to trim their beef more closely, leaving about a quarter of an inch of fat instead of a half inch. But as any cook knows, such trimming can easily be done at home and nearly all the trimmable fat can be removed before cooking without affecting the flavor. It is the marbling — the intramuscular fat — that affects flavor and tenderness. Grading, in part, depends on the amount of marbling; the greater the marbling, the higher the grade.

Certain cuts of meat, no matter their grade, have much less fat than others and it makes sense to use them: such roasts as eye of round, shoulder (arm), rump, chuck with round bone and sirloin tip; flank, round, tenderloin and sirloin tip steaks; lean stew meat; chuck with round bone. The less marbling visible, the less fat.

For years some supermarkets have posted notices giving the amount of fat in their ground beef. But it is not always necessary to purchase the leanest — and most expensive — ground beef for the healthiest meal. If the beef is to be used in a dish in which it is difficult to pour off the fat, then the leaner the beef, the better. But if you are making hamburgers and all the fat that is rendered can be discarded, it makes no sense to buy the most expensive beef.

The Agriculture Department compared hamburgers made of regular ground beef with hamburgers made of extra-lean ground beef. The regular ground beef lost more fat during cooking; the extra lean, more water. In a three-and-a-half-ounce cooked hamburger, for example, the extra-lean patties had one gram less fat and one gram more water than regular ground beef patties. The protein content was the same, but the more expensive patties were drier and tougher when cooked.

Through a program of genetic selection and changes in feed, pork is now leaner than it was 20 years ago. That does not mean that pork in general is as lean as chicken, as some advertisments suggest, but certain cuts of pork are leaner than others. They include pork tenderloin, loin chops, sliced ham and center-cut ham.

THE LEANEST cuts of lamb are sirloin chops, leg of lamb and lamb steaks.

Veal, except for the breast, is very lean, but it is higher in cholesterol than beef or pork.

Turkey, once available for the winter holidays but almost invisible the rest of the year, is now sold in parts as well as whole and in more processed meat products. Turkey is a less expensive alternative to veal. Breast meat, either whole or in slices, makes good scallopini; ground turkey can be combined with ground beef to reduce the fat content of burgers. One producer advertises that its ground turkey contains 7 percent fat. Extra-lean ground beef seldom has less than 15 percent.

Agoraphobics avoid public places, events

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last of a nine part series.

By DENISE FORTINO

You might consider it a kind of paralysis: its victims, who number in the millions, may be stricken with such an overwhelming dread of public places that they are ultimately unable to leave home. Unlike the physically handicapped, the only crutch of those who do venture out may be a loved one or trusted friend with whom they can walk or drive a short distance before retreating back to "safety."

While agoraphobia, translated literally, from the Greek means fear of the market (agora) or any open place, the disorder is more pervasive and consuming than its name suggests. Most sufferers who seek treatment are seized by sudden, inexplicable panic attacks that can occur in virtually any setting: open or closed, empty or crowded, familiar or unaccustomed. Agoraphobics may be merely grocery shopping or standing on a bank line when their bodies abruptly react as if they're in mortal danger.

Imagine somone pulling the wrong internal switch or crossing some key emotional wires, so that everything starts misfiring. Adrenalin surges, your heart pounds faster and faster, sweat breaks out, hands and knees tremble wildly; you feel faint, dizzy, nauseous and gasp for breath.

"It feels like you're having a heart attack," describes one woman who was crippled by the disorder for over 15 years. "When you're in the throes of a panic," she explains, "you suddenly feel trapped, even in the most harmless situations, and on the verge of losing control. Sometimes you have an eerie sense of unreality, as if you're standing outside yourself. Your only thought is to flee the scene as fast as you can."

SO NIGHTMARISH are the symptoms that you will do almost anything not to experience them again. Whatever place they first occur becomes guility by association — and you actively avoid it the next time. Typically, the dread of one situation spreads to others until almost every locale maybe a potential threat.

Many agoraphobics are not terrorized by panic attacks, but are haunted by unfounded fears of losing bowel or bladder control, vomiting, screaming, going crazy or doing anything that may be publicly embarrassing or revolting. Their desperate effort to hide their phobia through avoidance or escape only intensifies their catastrophic thoughts and feelings.

Certain personality traits occur with remarkable consistency among agoraphobics. They tend to be highly imaginative (which may explain their vividly conjured disasters!) as well as overly dependent, unusually sensitive to criticism and rejection, fearful of abandonment, perfectionistic and obsessed with how they come across to others. Conscientious about obligations, they accommodate to loved ones' needs instead of asserting their own, and seek to avoid conflict at all costs. Because they rely so much on others' judgment and approval, they have been labeled "people pleasers."

FEARS and PHOBIAS

As the children of either overprotective or overcritical parents, they may grow up without adequate coping skills and the confidence to thrive on their own. Feeling powerless and overwhelmed from early in life, or guilty about upsetting a parent, they learn to suppress their problems insetad of confronting and resolving them. But as adults, this pattern of constant denial and evasion can make them profoundly anxious, explains Dr. Alan Goldstein, PhD., director of The Temple University (Philadelphia) Agoraphobia and Anxiety Program, in his book, Overcoming Agoraphobia (Viking).

GIVEN THEIR fragile self-esteem and failure to express their needs, it's no surprise that agoraphobics often have unsatisfactory personal relationships. "Most are enmeshed in a period of profound stress prior to the onset of (their first) panic attack, and fully 50 percent are threatened by the dissolution of a relationship at that time," Dr. Goldstein reports.

Agoraphobia usually surfaces between the late teens and early 30; the catalyst is often separation from or the feared loss of a "prime provider of security" — a parent, spouse or lover, or home itself, Dr. Goldstein observes. He adds that when they marry, "chronically anxious" people seldom choose ideal mates. Instead, most seek our "strong, dominant individuals whom they feel they can depend on for all things," as if to compensate for the stability their parents didn't offer. Ironically, the partner they end up with may share many traits of the unfulfilling parent(s): when the potential agoraphobic realizes the marriage isn't going well, the stage is set for all-out anxiety and panic.

The vast majority of those seeking professional help for both agoraphobia and panic attacks are women. However, some experts believe that men are equally susceptible for fear admitting to emotional vulnerability.

SINCE AGORAPHOBIA is so deep-seated and complex, the most effective therapy involves a multiple approach and may last six months to a year. According to Robert Dietz, psychological director of TERRAP of Pittsburgh, a self-help treatment center for agoraphobia with branches across the U.S., behavorial "exposure therapy" — accompanying agoraphobics to places where a previous panic occurred and gradually getting them to face their fears — is indispensable, but often not enough to remove the underlying conflicts that fuel the problem.

Besides learning how to bear with a situation and control their physical symptoms until their anxiety subsides, they must acquire the skills that allow them to fare better in intimate relationships. That includes being less needy and passive, and more willing to deal with conflicts head on instead of withdrawing from them. "What happened during their childhood is less important than what they may still be doing now," Dietz explains.

Gold-wrapped veggies have golden price

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

My kids, like most other kids, have their definite "likes" when it comes to foods. Some of these likes they share — yogurt with fruit, milk, bananas and grapefruit; some they disagree on — eggs, watermelon and anything with coconut in it.

But it's their dislikes that cause controversy at the table. And there are certain types of vegetables that neither one of them will touch. The older one can spot an English pea at 40 paces and immediately start gagging; the younger one rarely tolerates vegetables of any kind on her plate.

So when Del Monte introduced its line of "specialty" vegetables — or, as the company puts it, "premium vegetables and unique combinations" for "contemporary consumers" — I thought these canned vegetables might offer a more tasty alternative to ordinary canned vegetables, and encourage the little taste-testers to enjoy veggies.

The specific specialty vegetables are Select French Style Green Beans with Mushrooms and Sweet Peppers; Naturally Sweet and Crisp Whole Kernel Go'den Corn; Premium Tender Tiny Whole Beats with Sweet Onions; Natrually Sweet and Crisp Whole Kernel White Corn; Bavarian Style Sauerkraut with Caraway; and Young Small Peas with Pearl Onions and Sweet Peppers.

We checked out several of these vegetables for taste, price and advertising accuracy. (Since neither child will touch English peas, young and small or otherwise, I gave that can to a co-worker. Her child likes peas.)

Information from the company claims that the canned vegetables are unique: "In addition to saving time, reducing waste and delivering nutritional value, Del Monte Specialties are value-added side dishes that deliver distinctive flavor. Del Monte Specialties carry a gold foil label, distinguishing them from Del Monte's traditional vegetable line."

Well, I couldn't understand how they could be more time-saving than any other canned vegetables, or be less wasteful (if the kids won't eat it, they won't eat it) or more nutritional, but who am I to question foods that come wrapped in gold?

Anyway, price turned out to be gold-wrapped, too. For example, regular canned peas cost about 50-55 cents for a 16-ounce can, while the the specialty ones cost 73 cents for a can of the same size. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices from other locations may vary.)

In taste, the new veggies turned out to be disappointing. I mean, you can add sliced mushrooms and red peppers to green beans, but you still get regular green beans. The Tender Tiny Whole Beets were dumped into pickle juice and turned into quick and easy pickeled beets — always a big hit with the kids who won't touch ordinary beets. Everyone refused to try the sauerkraut, even though it did have caraway seeds. And the corn is still waiting to be sampled — perhaps when they recover from the green beans.

The specialty vegetables turned out to be ordinary foods with a little extra — just enough to make them more expensive. I guess I'll stick to bargain brands. That way, when the kids refuse to eat their vegetables, it won't cost so much.

Wheat flour substitutes help those with allergy

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

When someone is allergic to the wheat in bread, cookies, cakes, pastas and other foods, home baking becomes a necessity.

Substitutes for wheat flour include rice, soybean, oat, rye and barley flours. These substitutes can help add variety to the allergy diet.

The strong gluten in wheat flour helps to form the structure of breads and cakes. Since non-wheat flours or starches contain weak gluten, or no gluten at all, baked products made with these flours tend to be heavier and more crumbly than the same foods made with wheat flour.

Oat, rye, barley and buckwheat flours contain small amounts of gluten and should be avoided by people with a severe intolerence. Commercially baked rye and oatmeal breads will also usually contain some wheat flour. The non-wheat flours have distinctive characteristics:

■ Soy flour is light yellow and has a strong nutty flavor, so it's best mixed with other non-wheat flours. Nuts, spices or chocolate will also help mask the flavor.

■ Rice flour is less strong in flavor and has a slightly grainy texture. Since rice flour takes on other flavors well, it can be used in a variety of baked products.

■ Corn flour is similar to cornmeal, but ground much finer. It's not available in all areas.

■ Rye flour has a dark color, distinctive flavor and a slight amount of gluten. It's often sold in combination with wheat flour, so check the label carefully.

■ Oat flour has a mild flavor. It's available commercially or you can make your own by grinding dry-rolled oats in a blender or food processor.

■ Potato starch is a bland, white starch made from raw potatoes. It works best in baked products that have eggs to provide needed structure, such as sponge cake.

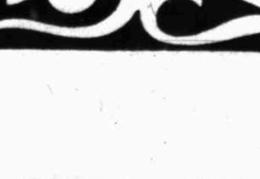

You will get best results baking with a non-wheat flour if you stir it thoroughly before measuring. Non-wheat cookies or cupcakes will have less of a crumbling problem than layer or sheet cakes.

Non-wheat flours also work best in baked products when two or more are combined to make the most of the qualities of each.

Cover non-wheat products tightly and store at room temperature for a short time or freeze for longer storage. These foods tend to become dry and obtain odors when stored in the refrigerator.

DEAR ABBY

Mother disapproves of store's easy credit

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Today, my daughter, who is substantially under 18 years old, unemployed but loves clothes, received a credit card from a major department store!

I telephoned the store's credit department and asked if there was an age requirement for those who applied for credit cards. I was told there was not. Then I asked if a person had to be employed in order to obtain a credit card. I was told no.

When I explained that my daughter was an unemployed student, I was told that if she were supported by a parent, that was the only "employment" necessary.

Abby, I am a single mother working full time to support myself and my daughter without financial aid, and I am struggling to stay afloat. I feel as though I have been stabbed in the back! I'd appreciate your comments. — CASH ONLY

DEAR CASH ONLY: Laws concerning credit extended to unemployed minors differ in the various states, but if there isn't a law stating a parent is not responsible for merchandise purchased by a minor child, there ought to be.

DEAR ABBY: Many years ago, on my first visit to the home of a new girlfriend in a neighboring city, as we were about to go out for a drive, her mother said, "Don't forget the garbage, Peggy."

"I won't," she said. She went to the kitchen and returned with a cardboard box of smelly trash, which she put in the backseat of my car.

"Don't you have a garbage service in this city?" I asked.

She replied, "Yes, but we can't afford it."

"All right, where's the nearest dump?"

"There isn't any, so we'll just drive around until we find a good place."

After driving around for a while, as we were going through a pleasant woodsy park, she said, "Pull over here." Then she got out and threw the garbage into a clump of bushes.

I've often pondered whether she ever wondered why I never asked for another date. — DISGUSTED IN SEATTLE

DEAR DISGUSTED: You don't say how many years ago this happened, but I would hope that "neighboring city" has since passed an ordinance or statute making dumping garbage just anywhere in violation of the law. I hope the girl who dumped the garbage in the bushes sees this in case she's wondering why you never called her again.

DEAR ABBY: "Frustrated in Glenwood Springs, Colo." complained about people who are always finishing other people's sentences. Well, I'm one of those people, and I'll tell you why. I tend to become impatient with folks who like to drag everything out, so I finish their sentences to kind of hurry them along.

Abby, it would be a public service to tell people that if someone is always finishing their sentences, they are either talking too much, or too slow. Probably both. — GUILTY AS CHARGED

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to respond to the lady who had so many holiday cookies and goodies she didn't know what to do with them. Has she ever considered arranging for an afternoon tea at a rest home for the aged? How they would enjoy some homemade goodies and the touch of the outside. She doesn't know what sweetness there is in sharing in this special way. — ROSIE FOWLER, SEATTLE

DEAR ABBY: I've read you for years, but this is my first letter to you because I just have to answer that Ohio woman who asked why baseball managers and coaches wear baseball uniforms when they look ridiculous with their potbellies hanging out.

I think I can help her. Wearing the team uniform has not always been a universal practice for managers. In the early days of baseball, Connie Mack, the Hall of Fame owner-manager of the old Philadelphia Athletics, always wore a business suit and straw hat. Later on, the managers began wearing the team uniform because it was more practical and comfortable.

A uniform allows them freedom to pitch batting practice and otherwise instruct the players on the field. Dugouts are often dusty and windy, and the hazards of tobacco juice are ever-present.

More important, the manager doesn't want to ruin a good suit when he kicks dirt in the umpire's face. Semper fi! — LT. WILLIAM F. REYES, USMC, OKINAWA

DEAR ABBY: Can you stomach another letter about cooking fresh fish? After 60-plus years in the seafood business, we know that fish smells "fishy" when it cooks, usually because it isn't fresh. Overcooked fish will also have that odor. The practice of thawing out frozen fish and trying to pass it off as fresh fish has given many a cook a bad experience. We recommend buying fresh fish only from a reliable fishmonger, or buying only top-quality frozen fish. Few home refrigerators are cold enough to store fish properly, so fish should be eaten the day of purchase.

The lady who complained about the cooking odors should present her neighbor with a pound of really fresh fish, accompanied by a recipe with the proper cooking time. We recommend 10 minutes per inch of thickness at medium-high heat. That means, a fillet that is ¾-inch thick should be cooked for only 7 or 8 minutes. Adding a little wine, or water and lemon juice, to the cooking pan will prevent odors as well. — NANCY BURHOP, CHICAGO

DEAR NANCY: Thanks. I learned something today. Readers, fresh fish should smell like cucumbers, and "fresh" means it's "never been frozen."

BETTER BUSINESS

Invention promotions often are misleading

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

Many inventors are attracted to firms whose advertisements that promise to make patent searches, obtain patents, determine marketability or arrange for the manufacture of sale or patents or patented products for a price.

After reading the glossy sales literature of these promoters, many inventors feel their worries are over and all they have to do is put their idea or invention in the hands of one of these firms and the checks will soon be rolling in.

After all, what's a few thousand dollars up front when you're going to make millions down the line?

After dealing with one of these inventor promoters, many people who believed their inventions had merit found that they were no closer to their goal than when they started.

To make matters worse, they were out several thousand dollars of their hard-earned money.

The invention promoters did exactly what they said they would do in their contracts, but their activities did little to produce the results the inventor expected.

Consumers need to understand that the purchase of new marketing services is a high-risk expenditure, and there is no guarantee that a profit will result.

Potential purchasers of such services should carefully read and thoroughly understand the terms of any contract, obtain all verbal agreements and guarantees in writing, and also have the contract reviewed by legal counsel.

New people-meter measures audience

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — You're watching television, a commercial comes on and you leave for the kitchen to get a snack. A box on the television set knows you're gone; a message on the screen asks who is there.

It isn't Big Brother, but part of a new people-meter system developed by R.D. Percy & Co. of Seattle and now operating in 1,000 households in and around New York.

Unlike other people-meter rating systems, this one focuses on who is watching specific commercials, not who is watching the programs on which they appear. The company's chief executive, Roger Percy, hopes to expand the service nationwide.

Skeptics note both the complexity of his goals and problems with the present system. For instance, the box, an infrared scanner, could be confused by a child moving around the room, they say, or by a heat source like a lamp.

Steve Singer, media research director of the advertising agency BBDO Worldwide — which has not subscribed to the system so far — says the Percy scanner, while improved since its start, is still too poky to detect people-exits during a 15-second or 30-second commercial.

Bob Warrens, who heads media research at J. Walter Thompson USA, noted, "We don't know if individuals sitting in front of the set are reading a magazine, playing Scrabble or have muted the sound."

But his company is a Percy subscriber, as are several other prominent advertising agencies. So are advertisers including Kraft Inc., Bristol-Myers Co. and the Coca-Cola Co.-Columbia Pictures, as well as NBC, WCBS-TV and WNYW-TV.

"We like the service and we like the direction they're going in," Warrens said. "Naturally there are areas still to be explored; this is a developmental exercise."

The exercise may be joined by the A.C. Nielsen Co. and AGB Television Research, which have been working on commercial-measuring methods of their own.

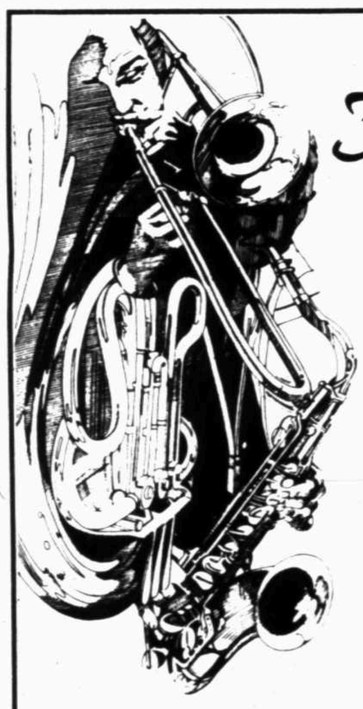

AGB, meanwhile, announced that it can now measure audiences for prerecorded video cassettes. To use the service, movie or video distributors would put a code on their tapes.

The company's president, Michael J. Poehner, said the ratings would, among other things, "accelerate the growing interest on the part of companies to advertise in home videos."

Musical 'Chess' now playing on Broadway

ENTERTAINMENT

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK — Nearly five years after it was written, "Chess" has found its way to Broadway.

The musical has survived the illness and death of its first director, Michael Bennett; technical and set problems that nearly capsized the London opening, and a confusing flurry of on-again, off-again announcements about its New York production which fed speculation that "Chess" had been checkmated for good.

"It has been slow, but I don't think that really matters," says Tim Rice, the man who wrote the lyrics and co-authored the new book for the $6 million musical, which mixes a love triangle with a U.S.-Soviet chess match.

"It's very important to get things right. This time, it's just a regular ordinary panic," Rice laughs. "But every show goes through that."

The other day, before the first Broadway preview, the genial, 43-year-old Englishman was sipping coffee in a Madison Avenue hotel, happy that the postponements are in the past.

"The only reason 'Chess' has been delayed, in all honesty, was because of the tragedy of Michael Bennett," he says. "When Michael got ill, we lost our director with 12 weeks to go before the London opening. We had this enormous set and show and no one quite knowing what to do with it."

Trevor Nunn, the man behind "Cats," "Les Miserables" and "Starlight Express," stepped in to supervise the West End production. He was up against an expensive and recalcitrant computerized set involving scores of television monitors.

The tinkering by technicians was frantic but everything was finally made to work. The show, which opened in May 1986, became a sizable hit and is still running.

"Trevor had saved us, but he then was totally booked up for the best part of two years," Rice says. "We thought it was best to wait for him for Broadway."

While the show waited, Rice and others refined the show. Several new songs were added to the score which has music by Benny Andersson and Bjorn Ulvaeus, two members of the rock group ABBA. Playwright Richard Nelson came aboard to help redo the book. More spoken dialogue was added.

"'Chess' is not based on anything else," Rice says. "It's not an adaptation of a classic or a piece that has no story whatsoever. It's not meant to be just a spectacle. It's meant to be a story."

The expensive London set designed by Robin Wagner was jettisoned for New York. The English production on Broadway would have cost $12 million and require a two-year run just to pay back its investment. But there were other reasons that Wagner reworked his design.

"I think we got carried away in London with the set, which was fantastic, but which took away from the plot," Rice says. "It made a lot of the situations seem unreal. You'd see songs that were being sung in some futurist bathroom and what we were just trying to do was tell a story about real people."

"Chess" is Rice's first Broadway musical without Andrew Lloyd Webber, his partner in three consecutive Broadway successes — "Jesus Christ Superstar," "Evita" and "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."

Rice commuted to Sweden during much of 1983 to work with Andersson and Ulvaeus on the score. Recording sessions began in Stockholm and London late that year with a cast — Elaine Paige, Tommy Korberg and Murray Head — that would eventually appear in the London stage version.

Releasing the show on record was a tactic Rice and Lloyd Webber had used to great success with "Jesus Christ Superstar" and "Evita." It allows songs from the show to find a public.

When "Chess" was released as a two-record set in late 1984, several numbers proved popular, particularly "One Night in Bangkok."

"In America, they played it as a disco record and it was a massive hit," Rice says. "I doubt whether many people who bought the record understood it came from a show."

Another song, "I Know Him So Well" was a No. 1 seller in England and the rest of Europe, but fared less well in the United States, Rice says, because American radio stations just wouldn't play it.

Helping put "Chess" on stage has only been a small part of Rice's current activities. He runs a cricket team, writes books on the sport as well as on pop music, supervises a publishing company and occasionally performs as a singer and actor.

Rice has a book about cricket and art — paintings about cricket — coming out in the fall. He's an enthusiastic booster of the game, which mystifies most Americans.

"American football is instant and very easy to understand once it's explained," he says. "Cricket (one game) can take five days and even then you may not have any results. To be honest, it's more like chess than any other game.

"The great thing about cricket is the social side of it," he adds. "Long tea intervals, sandwiches and sitting on the lawn in deck chairs."

Bentsen: WPT repeal fight not over

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen says he's not giving up the fight to repeal the windfall profit tax on oil, although the Reagan administration has put the issue "at the bottom of their list of priorities."

Repeal of the tax, a move supported by the oil industry, is included in a sweeping trade bill headed to the president's desk.

But President Reagan is threatening to veto the bill, passed Wednesday in the Senate by a vote of 63-36, because it requires employers with 100 or more employees to give notice of plant closings and large-scale layoffs.

Bentsen, who helped guide the bill through Congress as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said he would not abandon efforts to repeal the windfall profit tax.

"Our growing dependence on foreign oil poses a grave threat to our national security and I intend to keep pushing for a national energy policy with windfall profit tax repeal as its cornerstone. But this administration's utter lack of interest isn't helping at all," Bentsen said after the Senate approved the bill.

The Senate vote falls short of the two-thirds margin needed to override a presidential veto. The House approved the bill last week by an overwhelming majority.

Among those senators voting against the legislation was Republican Phil Gramm of Texas, who said the plant closing provision would hurt business in Texas. Gramm was among the senators pushing to include repeal of the windfall profit tax in the legislation.

A spokesman for Gramm said he would vote for the trade legislation if the plant closing provision is stricken from the bill.

Industry officials estimate it costs oil and gas operators more than $100 million a year just to do the paperwork for the windfall profit tax, although it hasn't been collecting any revenue since oil prices tumbled below the $18-per-barrel threshold.

Bentsen says the tax has bled $74 billion from the oil industry and repeal of the tax "would clearly be the biggest, most important legislative victory for this industry in many years."

"I know the administration professes support for windfall profit tax repeal, but it's at the bottom of their list of priorities." Bentsen said Wednesday. "I got repeal on the Senate budget resolution last year, but the administration's terms on the compromise budget forced it out. And this year, they're ready to dump windfall repeal over the issue of plant closing notification. The fact is, this administration has been willing to do everything but work for any effective national energy policy ever since oil prices plunged in 1986."

First-time home buyers dominate city market

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Real estate sales for March were down from the same period last year, but the inventory of active residential listings continues to decline, according to figures from the Midland Board of Realtors.

In presenting the monthly statistics to the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Board President Darrell McDonald pointed out that there are only 1,214 current listings, compared to 1,412 in 1987. He added that the inventory would probably increase in the next months, as school comes to a close, because it was traditionally the time of the year when homes are put on the market.

McDonald said sales figures seem to confirm that many of the sales are on the lower end of the scale to first-time buyers. The average sale price in 1987 was $71,369, while the average sale price in March of this year was only $60,889.

In other reports to chamber directors, the membership committee reported that it was moving to increase membership revenues by establishing a new individuals category of membership which would be billed at the rate of $75 per month.

Drexel junk bond chief takes the Fifth

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional investigators zeroed in today on whether Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. employees manipulated bond prices, after the firm's junk bond chief took the Fifth Amendment to avoid answering questions.

Drexel chief executive Frederick Joseph was appearing bfore a House panel one day after junk bond director Michael R. Milken cited his constitutional protection against self-incrimination in refusing to answer questions.

The hearings by the investigations subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee are focusing on Drexel issues of the high-risk, high-yield securities known as junk bonds.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of both the committee and subcommittee, said he was not alleging criminal violations at this time, but wanted to know "whether or not these matters complied with securities laws and the regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission."

ANWR oil drilling bill clears house committee

WASHINGTON (AP) — Advocates of petroleum development in the nation's biggest wildlife refuge are gaining ground in Congress but say they are fighting the clock to get their drilling bill enacted this year.

Led by the Reagan administration and the oil industry, the advocates won another round against environmental groups on Wednesday as legislation to allow oil rigs into the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge was endorsed by the first House panel to vote on the issue.

The bill was approved 17-9 by the Merchant Marine subcommittee on fisheries and wildlife conservation and the environment, setting the stage for expected approval next week by the full committee.

Earlier this year, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee voted 11-8 for legislation to allow development of the potentially extensive oil deposits in the coastal plain of the 19 million-acre reserve in Alaska. The bill is awaiting floor debate.

The issue has provoked a major struggle in the 100th Congress between environmentalists, who want no drilling in the refuge, and those who say the refuge offers the best chance to counter a growing national dependence on imported petroleum.

Secretaries not just typists any more

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Secretaries and their managers comprise a "team of two," each with a vested interest in the success of the other, according to Candy Daniels, president of the Texas and Louisiana division of Professional Secretaries International.

In town to speak at the organization's Permian chapter Secretaries Day luncheon, Daniels, a certified professional secretary, said that the secretarial half of the team should be loyal, keep up with the latest technology and do professional work. "We probably won't like it, but we will keep our filing current," she joked.

She added that documents must look professional when they leave the office. "A sloppy letter with obvious typos reflects on both the secretary and the manager," she noted.

For their part, the managerial half of the team should represent the secretary's cause to upper management, defend her when necessary, and offer constructive criticism when problems arise.

"And you should never ask your secretary to do something that compromises her standards," she stated, referring to Col. Oliver North and his former secretary Fawn Hall. "She may have believed in what he was doing, but he should never have asked her to sneak papers out of the building in her clothing."

In addition, Daniels said, the secretary should be supported in continuing education and other career advancement efforts. "Do you pay the dues to professional organizations for your secretary? Do you subscribe to professional magazines for her? If you don't, why not?" she asked.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

PSI regional president Candy Daniels told local secretaries that teamwork and professionalism are keys to secretarial success.

Exxon suit remanded to federal court

HOUSTON (AP) — A lawsuit filed by a dissident heir of the King Ranch against Exxon Corp., claiming the world's largest oil company shortchanged the family ranch in natural gas royalties, was ordered back to federal court.

U.S. District Judge David Hittner of Houston dismissed the case from federal court last August, saying the court had no jurisdiction. But Wednesday, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans overturned his decision.

The plaintiff, Robert R. Shelton, a Kerrville rancher who split with the rest of the King family in 1978, is a fourth-generation descendent of steamboat Capt. Richard King, who founded the million-acre South Texas ranch that bears his name.

Sometimes you get what you pay for

Howland

Paychecks are a funny thing. Not always something to laugh at, but funny nevertheless.

In the dozen or so jobs I've had in what passes for my adult life, the contents of the bi-weekly pay envelope is one of the most closely guarded corporate secrets that exists.

The "divide and conquer" mentality of managing non-union labor makes perfect sense and keeps employees guessing and on their collective toes.

There's only one fly in the proverbial ointment here.

One of the goals of maintaining paycheck confidentiality is to avoid the resentment that lower paid workers could develop against their more generously compensated brethren (and sistern). However, once the pay gets up to a level that can really offend people, then the figures wind up getting released.

Annual 10(k) and other Securities & Exchange Commission filings require the disclosure of executive compensation.

One of Business Week magazine's most popular issues every year is the Executive Pay Scoreboard, which was released this week.

For the truly naive among us, there are some eye-opening revelations contained in the figures.

One would assume that those companies with the best financial performance would be the ones which most highly compensate their biggest bosses. Wrong, seven-digit W-2 breath!

Last year, in salary, bonus and long-term compensation, Lee Iacocca pulled down almost $18 million for the second straight year. Meanwhile, Chrysler Corp., of which he is chairman, saw its market share slide 1.4 percent to just more than one-tenth of the market and its profits slip by 7 percent.

At Manufacturers Hanover, the sixth largest bank in the nation, losses totaled more than $1.1 billion but the bank's chairman John McGillicuddy made over $802,000. Since 1985, McGillicuddy's pay — $2.7 million — compared to fiscal performance has been the worst of the nation's top-paid executives, according to BW.

A pair of graduate business students who compiled compensation and total return to stockholders data on 1,300 companies dating back to 1974 found that for every $1,000 gained in market value and dividends, the average CEO was rewarded with an extra 2 cents.

That means that if a median Fortune 500 company was able to double its market value of $1 billion, the top officer would benefit by about $20,000.

While 20 grand would make an earth-shaking difference to my takehome pay, for the typical chief executive whose salary and bonus — excluding long-term considerations — total more than $965,000, $20,000 isn't much of an incentive to enhance market value.

Kevin Murphy of Rochester Business School told the New York Times recently that companies being taken private through leveraged buyouts are the most likely to create an incentive scale for top management positions. Compared to 2 cents per $1,000, these companies paid an average of $64 for each extra $1,000 in total return.

An aggressive incentive pay plan doesn't seem to restrict an ambitious CEO. Paul Fireman of Reebok International has his pay tied to earnings performance and he managed to finish 1987 as No. 3 on the total compensation hit parade with more than $15.4 million in cash and stock.

Meanwhile, Fireman and his management team have managed to boost return on investment in the company by more than 39 percent in the last three years.

It sounds to me like a ringing endorsement of buying excellence for a little more than 2 cents per $1,000.

Oil prices fall on OPEC rumors

From Staff and Wire Reports

After a wild trading session Wednesday that saw oil prices close sharply lower, prices began a modest recovery today. Contracts for June delivery of West Texas Intermediate opened at $18.30, a gain of 3 cents.

Oil prices seesawed Wednesday, driven by speculation about the outcome of a meeting between OPEC and independent oil exporters.

"There were all kinds of rumors out today," said Jayne Ball, an oil-futures trader at the New York investment firm of Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. "The key here is what's going to be really done."

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, a sensitive barometer of price trends, WTI jumped 12 cents per 42-gallon barrel to $18.72 by noon but tumbled late in the day and closed at $18.27, down 33 cents from the previous close.

Traders said the market strengthened in the early hours because of indications that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and a group of non-cartel oil exporters, meeting in Vienna, might agree on 5 percent production cuts aimed at eliminating excess supplies and raising prices.

But later rumors hit the market that key OPEC member Saudi Arabia had walked out of the meeting. By another unconfirmed account, the non-OPEC participants at the meeting had inflated their production figures so the 5 percent output reduction proposal was largely meaningless.

Dollar falls in thin trading

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar fell in thin trading on European markets this morning. Gold prices were steady in stagnant trading.

The dollar began falling late Wednesday after U.S. Federal Reserve Governor Robert Heller warned of a growing risk of inflation in the United States as many industries reach capacity limits, dealers said.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.17 yen to a closing 124.82 yen. Later, in London, it was slighly higher at 124.90 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Wednesday's rates:

—1.6727 West German marks, down from 1.6785

—1.3862 Swiss francs, down from 1.3905

—5.6790 French francs, down from 5.69625

—1.8763 Dutch guilders, down from 1.8810

—1,243.95 Italian lire, down from 1,246.82

—1.2288 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2278

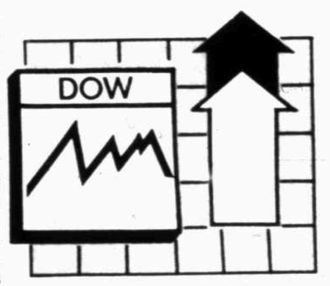

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound. It cost $1.8777 to buy one pound, more expensive than Wednesday's $1.8750.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $451.25 a troy ounce, down from late Wednesday's bid of $452.00. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $452.15.

In Zurich, the bid price was $451.90, up from $451.50 late Wednesday. Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $2.57 to close at a bid $453.54.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.49 a troy ounce, unchanged from Wednesday's late bid.

Stocks rise in quiet session

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market settled for a small gain Wednesday at the close of a quiet, drifting session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 3.15 to 2,047.91, posting its fifth consecutive gain.

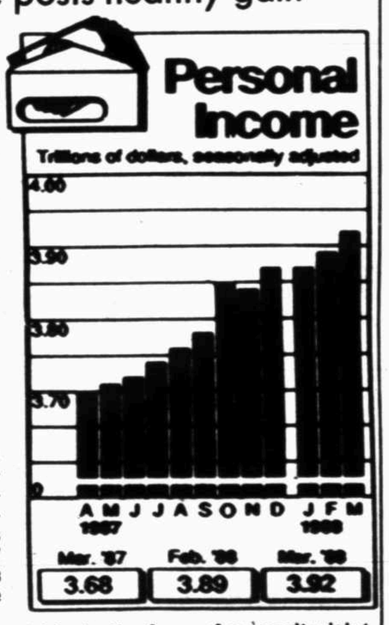

Advancing issues slightly outnumbered declines in New York Stock Exchange-listed trading, with 755 up, 711 down and 509 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 133.81 million shares, against 152.30 million in the previous session. The NYSE's composite index edged up .01 to 148.94.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $2.03 billion, or .08 percent, in value.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Personal income posts healthy gain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' personal incomes, boosted by profit-sharing payments in the auto industry, posted the biggest gain last month since December, while consumer spending jumped a healthy 0.7 percent, the government reported.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that personal incomes climbed 0.8 percent in March after a 0.6 percent gain in February. It was the best increase since an 0.8 percent advance in December.

FSLIC hopes to sell I-30 properties

DALLAS (AP) — The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. said it hopes by mid-summer to sell more than 1,900 apartments and condominiums it was forced to take over because of the 1984 failure of the savings and loan that financed the venture.

The sale to Lincoln Property would be in the form of an equity joint venture between the Dallas developer and the FSLIC, said Thomas Procopio, FSLIC regional director.

The apartments represent the bulk of 2,900 condominiums developed east of Dallas along Interstate 30 and financed by Empire Savings & Loan Association of Mesquite. Empire failed after making about $340 million in questionable loans.

Ford has world record earnings quarter

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. earned $1.623 billion in the first quarter of 1988, setting a world auto industry record for earnings in a single quarter, the nation's second-largest automaker said today.

Ford's earnings of $3.31 a share on sales of $20.74 billion were up 8.8 percent over first-quarter 1987 earnings of $1.49 billion, or $2.87 a share, on sales of $18.14 billion.

The previous quarterly earnings record was set by General Motors Corp., the world's largest automaker, with $1.614 billion in profits in the first quarter of 1984.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Martin project yields Silurian strike

From Staff Reports

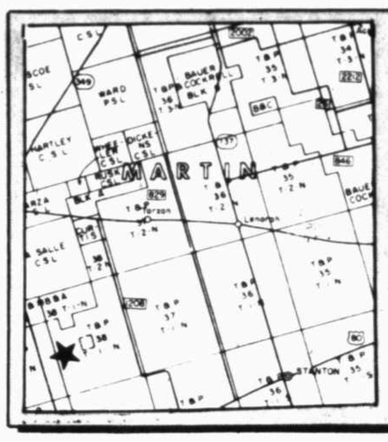

RK PETROLEUM CORP., Midland, has recorded a Silurian discovery in Martin County, surrounded by the Sale field, 12 miles southwest of Tarzan.

On potential test, the No. 2102 RK Glass flowed 177 barrels of 42 gravity crude, 33.6 Mcfd and no water on a 10/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 340 psi. The well flowed from perforations 12,087 to 12,112 ft., which had been acidized with 2,000 gallons of 15 percent acid. Gas-oil ratio is 190:1.

Permitted as a 12,800 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 12,186 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 12,170 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,862 ft. include the Yates at 2,854 ft., Spraberry at 7,822, Wolfcamp at 9,302, Strawn at 10,378 and the Silurian at 12,074 ft. Pay was topped at 12,087 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from north and 853 ft. from west lines of Section 21, Block 38, T-1-N, T&P survey.

★Silurian strike

Martin County has yielded a 177 barrel Silurian discovery, 12 miles southwest of Tarzan as RK Petroleum Corp. completed activity in the area.

Lea County area gets Pennsylvanian strike

A Pennsylvanian discovery has been completed in Lea County, N.M., northwest of the Tulk field.

BTA OIL PRODUCERS, Midland, completed the No. 1 Tulk to pump 33 barrels of 39.7 gravity crude and 541 barrels of water from perforations 9,808 to 9,844 ft. The interval was acidized with 2,750 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 16,393:1.

Drilled to 10,101 ft., the well was plugged back to 10,006 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 10,100 ft.

On ground elevation of 4,347 ft., formation tops include the Anhydrite at 1,458 ft., Yates at 2,413, Queen at 3,170, San Andres at 3,833, Glorieta at 5,362, Tubb at 6,720, Abo at 7,410, Wolfcamp at 8,875, Pennsylvanian at 9,332, and Canyon at 10,087 ft. Pay was topped at 9,808 ft.

Location is 330 ft. from south and 2,310 ft. from east lines of Section 20, T14s, R32e.

Santa Fe completes 544 barrel producer

The North Hume field of Lea County, N.M. gained its second Wolfcamp producer, extending the pay south.

SANTA FE ENERGY OPERATING PARTNERS, L.P. finaled the No. 1 Humble Hume "5" State to flow 544 barrels of 42.9 gravity crude, 370 Mcfd and no water on various chokes with a flowing tubing pressure of 493 psi. The well flowed from perforations 10,070 to 10,087 ft., no treatment reported. Gas-oil ratio is 680:1.

Drilled to 13,010 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 12,415 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 4,137.8 ft., include the Yates at 3,506 ft., San Andres at 4,452, Tubb at 9,043, Wolfcamp at 9,566, Strawn at 10,857, Atoka at 12,136, Morrow at 12,486, and the Mississippian at 12,914 ft. Pay was topped at 10,070 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from south and 1,980 ft. from east lines of Section 5, T16s, R34e.

Lea field extender flows 268 barrels

MOBIL PRODUCING TX & NM INC. has added a fourth Pennsylvanian producer to the South Shoe Bar field of Lea County, N.M., extending the pay northwest.

On potential test, the No. 3 Lovington Deep State flowed 268 barrels of 45.6 gravity crude, 325 Mcfd and three barrels of water on a 28/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 250 psi. The well flowed from perforations 10,712 to 10,892 ft., which had been acidized with 500 gallons of 15 percent DiNeFe acid. Gas-oil ratio is 1,212:1.

The well was drilled to 11,000 ft. and plugged back to 10,950 ft. A 5 1/2 inch liner was hung from 4,890 to 11,000 ft.

On ground elevation of 3,931 ft., formation tops include the Yates at 3,215 ft., Queen at 4,120, San Andres at 4,828, Glorieta at 6,200, Tubb at 7,620, Abo at 8,250, Wolfcamp at 9,415, and the Canyon at 10,805 ft. Pay was topped at 10,712 ft.

Location is 1,874 ft. from north and 1,980 ft. from east lines of Section 1, T17s, R35e.

Menard field gains second Crosscut well

A second Crosscut gas producer has been completed in the Menard North field of Menard County, extending the pay northeast.

DANIEL EXPLORATION INC. tested the No. 1 Sefcick for a calculated absolute open flow of 11.2 Mmcfd from perforatios 2,410 to 2,420 ft. The interval was acidized with 750 gallons of acid and fractured with 22 barrels of gel and 100 sacks of sand.

Drilled to 2,734 ft., the well was plugged back to 2,720 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 2,722 ft.

The well topped the Bunger Lime at 1,800 ft., Canyon Lime at 1,905, Crosscut Sand at 2,408, and Strawn Lime at 2,638 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from south and east lines of J.C. Autrey survey 100, Abstract 1612, nine miles north of Menard.

Strawn production added to Lea field

New Strawn production was added to the Northeast Lovington field of Lea County, N.M. as NEARBURG PRODUCING CO. completed activity in the area.

Nearburg tested the No. 1 Soledad "19-M" to flow 445 barrels of crude, 660 Mcfd and no water on an 18/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 650 psi. The well flowed from perforations 11,065 to 11,134 ft., no treatment reported.

Total depth was 11,460 ft. The well was plugged back to 11,350 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 11,640 ft.

Location is 1,000 ft. from south and west lines of Sectin 19, T16s, R37e.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Not cashing in whole life policy may be beneficial

By BILL DOYLE

Doyle

Q. I am a 20-year-old college student. My grandfather just presented me with a $3,000, 20-payment whole life insurance policy, on which he paid premiums since I was born. It is now paid up. My grandfather signed it over to me and said I can do whatever I want with it.

Should I turn in the policy for its cash surrender value of approximately $1,000 and put that money in a bank certificate of deposit? Or should I let it be? I want to use this wisely, as a tribute to my grandfather. I didn't need any cash now.

A. Your grandfather's intentions, no doubt, were excellent. But along with many other members of his generation, he made a mistake buying that insurance. If, instead of paying insurance premiums, he had put the money into a savings account or U.S. Savings Bonds for you, you would have a good deal more than $1,000 today.

Just the same, you would be wise to keep that little policy, if it is the only insurance on your life and if it has a "guaranteed insurability" clause. The latter means you can buy more insurance from the same company without a physical examination. That clause comes in handy for lots of people.

The $1,000 or so you would get by surrendering the policy won't buy much these days but the $3,000 death benefit will pay for your funeral if you join the choir silent soon.

There are only two close-to-good reasons for insuring a young child's life — to provide guaranteed insurability and to pay burial costs in the event of untimely death. Even so, the cost of children's life insurance is terribly high.

Q. My husband and I have $1,156 in a certificate of deposit. Our daughters, ages 10 and 7, have $2,074 in a CD and $227 in a savings account. We're not planning to use any of this. The girls' money is being saved for college.

The insurance man says we should put the CD money into our flexible premium adjustable life policy, where it wouldn't be taxed and we would make more interest on it. Is that a good idea?

A. No. Unless your daughters have other income, they are not paying any income tax on their CD and savings account interest. And if the $1,156 CD is the only "cash reserve" you and your husband have accumulated, you had better build up that amount before putting more money into insurance. Every family should try to have readily available money for emergencies.

Q. You wrote, "The death benefits of insurance policies on your life will not go through probate, unless you own those policies or have retained 'incidents of ownership.'

That is not accurate. Hadn't you better print a correction?

A. Yes. Here it is.

The death benefit of a life insurance policy is subject to probate only if payable to the dead person's estate or executor. In most cases, the death benefit goes directly to the beneficiary and avoids probate.

However, life insurance death benefits are included in the dead person's estate — for federal estate tax and state inheritance or estate tax purposes — if the dead person owned the policies or retained incidents of ownership.

PSI—

She told the audience of secretaries and their bosses that communication is the key to success for "the team of two." She suggested that the team set aside 15 to 20 minutes either daily or weekly to go over the calendar and update current and future projects. "This could be the most important 15 to 20 minutes you spend," she stated.

The professional secretary is not merely a typist, clerk or receptionist, Daniels said. The professional secretary is defined by PSI as "an executive assistant who possesses a mastery of office skills, demonstrates the ability to assume responsibility without direct supervision, exercises initiative and judgment, and makes decisions within the scope of assigned authority."

Henrietta Hagan, president of the Permian chapter, said that, despite this area's economic woes, professional secretaries are able to find and keep jobs. "It's typists and clerks who have a harder time," Hagan said.

She added that Professional Secretary's Week, begun in 1952, is not meant as "take your secretary to lunch week. We're emphasizing that we're professionals, that we're here to help management.

Said Hagan: "I'm glad to see us called administrative assistants, instead of secretaries, more often. It shows management realizes we're here to assist them."

CHAMBER—

Committee Chairman Joanne Langston said the new membership will appeal to educators, government employees and retired individuals who want to be active with the chamber. It would also provide business firms to list additional employees as members of the chamber.

The economic development committee reported that new printed materials to promote Midland were being published and that progress is being made on establishing a small business incubator.

Tourism and convention business remains on the upswing, according to the Convention & Visitor's Bureau advisory council chairman Jane Wolf. A total of 1,759 convention delegates and 1,824 tourists visited Midland last month, according to Wolf. She said the recent sales blitz to inform local organizations of the convention facilities in Midland had been a success with 18 exhibits and 4 convention leads, adding that the blitz will probably become an annual event.

To bring retired citizens to the area, the Midland/Odessa Health & Retirement Endeavor will publish an informational tabloid in the Midland Reporter-Telegram and Odessa American.

Reporting for the City of Midland, Councilman Robert Rendol, said Midland International Airport had increased boardings for 12 consecutive months.

He added that the city is experiencing a crisis in the parks as a result of a population explosion in the lower grades. "We just don't have enough playing fields to support all the athletic activities," said Rendol. He said it was a problem similar to the classroom crisis of Midland schools.

Dr. Joe Baressi, superintendent of schools for Midland Independent School District, said passage of school bonds to alleviate overcrowding in the schools looked favorable. He said that all but one of the new school board candidates supported the school bonds, and that PTA members were beginning a phone campaign to build support.

In other reports, the Keep Midland Beautiful committee said 330 tons of trash have been picked up as Midlanders called in to have large items hauled off.

Kay Billingsly reporting for United Way, said the organization had received a $48,000, two-year grant for the purpose of involving Hispanics in United Way. She said the grant had been won primarily through the efforts of Sam Flores, president of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

The MHCC, said director Elvia Hernandez, will sponsor a Cinco de Mayo parade and charreada (Mexican rodeo) on May 7. She also indicated that the chamber was finishing survey of residents on the south and east sides to determine shopping habits and needs and that the organization was working with a Mexican airline to establish service to Midland.

"WE INTEND TO THRIVE, NOT JUST SURVIVE."

James W. Kinnear
President and Chief Executive Officer

Since Texaco touches the lives of so very many Americans, I'm pleased to say that today, the Texaco Star shines brighter than ever.

On April 7, Texaco emerged from Chapter 11 with the burden of the Pennzoil litigation finally removed and freed from the competitive constraints imposed by the bankruptcy procedures.

On April 15, Texaco's Board announced the following actions which confirm our commitment to progress and profitability:

- Reestablishment of a substantial quarterly dividend to our shareholders of $0.75 per share,
- A dynamic restructuring program, including the sale of at least $5 billion in assets,
- Planned reduction in debt, and investment in high potential capital projects, including over $1 billion in exploration and production of energy in the USA in the coming year alone.

These decisions reflect our commitment for Texaco to continue to be a major competitive force in the petroleum industry and in the American economy.

The direct beneficiary of Texaco's restructuring will be Texaco's stockholders. We appreciate their continuing support as well as that of our loyal employees, suppliers and customers.

And the ultimate beneficiary is the American energy consumer. As a major economic force, we are equally aware of our responsibility to keep Texaco strong so that we may continue to fulfill our role as a leading supplier of gasoline, home heating oil, natural gas, diesel fuel and lubricants. We are committed to help America meet the energy challenges of the future.

We are determined to thrive... not just survive.

AIDS vaccine study perceived as failure

Copley News Service

Two men participating in the first federal AIDS vaccine study said Tuesday they were told recently that none of the test subjects' blood has yet produced the hoped-for antibodies to fight infection with the AIDS virus.

However, a spokesman for the National Institute for Allergy and Infectious Diseases in Bethesda, Md., the agency that administers the vaccine program, Tuesday disputed published reports that the lack of antibody production means that the study of the vaccine, developed by the Connecticut firm MicroGeneSys, is perceived as a failure.

"It's premature to come to any conclusion," said the spokesman. "Not everyone in the study has received the boosters that are in the program, and we regard the (published report) as a non-story."

Nevertheless, the spokesman acknowledged that the pharmaceutical company will be asked in the next few weeks to develop a double dosage, 160-microgram concentrate of the vaccine, in hopes that higher dosages will be able to stimulate the desired immune response.

That dosage will be administered this summer, on a new group of volunteers, the spokesman said.

Lance Clem and another San Diegan, who asked to remain anonymous, said they received the highest vaccine dosage, 80 micrograms, administered to any of the 60 study participants.

Nurses administering the National Institutes of Health program in Bethesda, told them during a recent monthly examination that antibodies had failed to appear in their blood.

"It may be too early still," said Clem, who said he has experienced no noticeable side-effects from the vaccine. "Everything is still real normal," he said. He was given a 40 microgram dosage earlier in the year, then another 40 micrograms in a booster shot in March.

Clem, who works as a public information officer for the San Diego AIDS Project, was accepted as a volunteer in the vaccine testing program because he is gay man who has not been infected by the AIDS virus.

The other study subject said he was given an 80 microgram dosage in one shot Feb. 23, but no antibodies have yet appeared. Researchers told him they had hoped antibodies would appear within the first three weeks, he said.

His blood was recently tested April 19, but results are not yet known, he said.

Normally, the body would be expected to produce antibodies to the virus within several weeks to three months after the vaccine was injected. The NIH researchers sought 75 uninfected gay men to volunteer for the study last fall.

Another spokesman for the research agency, Dr. John McGowan, said that the vaccine might not develop antibodies at such small doses, which are normal and appropriate in the early stage of testing when the safety of the compound is the foremost concern, he said, adding that it would be normal for higher doses to follow.

The vaccine, called GP 160, does not contain any part of the AIDS virus. It was developed by snipping off a part of a gene from the AIDS virus, and modifying it through a process called recombinant DNA. Scientists hoped that the body will see the particle as a foreign element, and would manufacture antibodies that can fight the whole virus.

New medical advances may help half of nursing home residents

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of elderly Americans are in nursing homes simply because they are unable to control urinary function, and virtually all of them could be helped through new medical techniques, a researcher says.

Dr. Alan J. Wein, professor of urology at the University of Pennsylvania Hospital, told a National Kidney Foundation seminar Tuesday that "help is available and more help is on the way" for incontinence, one of the most common and devastating problems of aging.

"Fifty percent of the people in nursing homes are incontintent and many people are placed in the homes simply because they are incontintent," said Wein. "A recent estimate of direct and indirect cost of just incontinence in the elderly exceeds $8 billion a year."

Linda Keegan, spokeswoman for the American Health Care Association, which represents the for-profit nursing home industry, said the latest study shows about 55 percent of all nursing home residents are incontinent, but she said the average nursing home resident has four "limitations to daily living" problems that led to placement in a home.

"Incontinence may be the final factor to force the family to put a person into a nursing home," she said. Ms. Keegan said that many families can cope with problems such as feeding, bathing and dressing an elderly relative, but when incontinence is added "it may make it impossible to handle them at home."

Wein said that incontinence affects an "incredible" number of people. Estimates are that 1 percent to 2 percent of men and 5 percent to 10 percent of women under age 65 suffer from the problem, and among older Americans, the estimates are 6 percent for men and 12 percent for women.

For many, incontinence is "devastating."

"They have to quit their jobs, restrict their activities and stay at home to avoid embarrassment," said Wein.

The sale of absorbent pads to collect leaking urine — a type of adult diaper — has become a billion-dollar industry, he said. And the problem is so widespread that companies selling the pads use national television advertising as a marketing tool.

"The fact that urine collection is a billion-dollar industry is a sad commentary" because there now are innovative and successful medical techniques to correct or improve the control of urinary function, Wein said.

"Many doctors regard incontinence as an inevitable consequence of age," he said. "But it is not...Virtually all forms of incontinence are treatable."

And yet, he said, only about one in five adults with urinary control problems will see a doctor, and many who do are told by uninformed physicians that nothing can be done.

Wein said sophisticated new measuring techniques now can determine the precise cause of incontinence. Once this is established, he said, there is a range of treatments that can be used, based on a precise diagnosis.

These include:

— Scheduling. Simply voiding on a set, timed pattern can solve some cases, he said.

— Biofeedback. This technique trains patients to use muscles to help strengthen the uninary sphincter (a muscle that acts like a valve) to control the flow, said Wein.

— Drugs. Medication to increase sphincter resistance and to decrease bladder contractility have become "extraordinarily effective," he said.

— Electrical stimulation. Wein said this system is under active study now to improve the function of both the bladder and the urinary sphincter.

— Surgery. Although considered a "last resort," Wein said, surgical techniques have been significantly improved in recent years as a result of more precise diagnosis. Ninty percent of women with "stress incontinence" (an involuntary leakage while coughing, sneezing or exercising) are cured with surgery, he said. Improved surgical techniques also are solving most of the problems men have with urinary function as a result of an enlarged prostate, Wein said.

The surgical installation of an artificial urinary sphincter was developed in 1973 and has been continuously improved since, he said. The technique, used appropriately, now is successful 80 percent to 90 percent of the time, said Wein.

Despite the availability of these improved treatments, said Wein, only about 20 percent of the people in need are seeking expert medical solutions. Instead, he said, they turn to adult diapers to deal with the problem.

"They feel that the high-cost television ads are showing the only solution — absorbent pads," he said.

Study shows morphine self-dosing reduces use

NEW YORK (AP) — Cancer patients who got morphine at the touch of a button to relieve pain stopped using the drug sooner, and used little more than half the narcotic than patients who got a continuous infusion, a researcher says.

"These patients don't even come close to developing addiction," said C. Richard Chapman, associate research director at the Pain Center of the University of Washington and director of the pain and toxicity research program at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center in Seattle.

The shorter time on the drug is important because it means an earlier end to confusion, sedation and other unpleasant reactions that accompany morphine treatment, he said.

"In order to cope you need all your marbles. You can't be coping effectively when you're on the drug," he said.

He spoke in a recent interview about research done with Hutchinson colleagues including Harlan Hill, Costantino Benedetti and others.

They studied hospitalized patients who had undergone bone marrow transplantation as part of cancer therapy. As a result of cancer treatment, such patients commonly suffer pain for two or three weeks in the mouth and through the digestive tract, and sometimes in the hands and feet and elsewhere, Chapman said.

In the study, 32 patients got a continuous infusion of morphine through an intravenous line, the standard treatment, Chapman said. Twenty-six others got doses by pushing a button on an electric pump hooked up to an intravenous line.

THE .5% SOLUTION

Among the most distracting and discomforting of all symptoms are those of itching, scaling, and swelling of the skin. Poison oak/ivy, dermatitis, and psoriasis are all skin conditions that have their sufferers fairly climbing the walls in search of relief. Very effective relief is available in the form of hydrocortisone. Available over-the-counter in a 1/2 percent concentration, this medication counters the symptoms of a variety of skin ailments. It does not, however, kill bacteria or fungi. Nor should it be taken internally or applied to the area around the eyes. Users should also guard against over-reliance upon hydrocortisone. If a skin condition persists after a few days, the advise of a physician should be sought.

When your symptoms indicate the need of a prescription medication see your physician...then see us at ALLEN'S PHARMACY, 2101 Midland Dr., 689-9999. WEIGHING OPTIONS

Most people are quite accustomed to seeing a pregnant woman exhibiting the effects of lower-back pain. Fortunately, in a majority of cases, the back pain disappears at the end of the pregnancy. However, what relief can the overweight person expect from backpain? Added weight in the area of the abdomen puts the same kind of strain on the lower-back that pregnancy exerts on the mother-to-be. As the extra weight in front pulls the body forward, the muscles in back shorten in an effort to sustain the body in an upright position. The result is back strain. The first step in relieving it is to embark on a sensible weight reduction program, and combine it with muscle-strengthening exercises.

The position of the spine and the stress it experiences often impedes the natural communications that take place from the brain to all parts of the body. Due to this, normal function can be impaired and difficulties experienced. CHIROPRACTIC CENTER, 2206 W. Louisiana, offers the applications and helpful hints for addressing such problem areas. BLOOD RELATIONS

There are four main classifications of human blood: A, B, AB, and O. Each type has a characteristic presence or absence of an antigen, a protein that stimulates the body to create an antibody. Type A blood carries antigen a and antibody b. Type B carries antigen b and antibody a. Type AB blood carries both antigens but neither antibody. Type O has neither antigen but carries both antibodies. Because certain antibodies and antigens exhibit hostility to one another, transfusions are only possible between compatible blood types. Type A's can receive blood from A's and O's. B's can receive from B's and O's. Type AB's, universal recpients, can receive blood from any type. O's, universal donars, can give blood to anyone.

Many conditions can be diagnosed through blood analysis. A complete blood count or "CBC" can analyze the various elements within the blood, including hemoglobin concentration. It can also diagnose anemia and indicate the need for more specialized tests. At MEDI-HELP, 805 W. Wadley @ A, quality medical care is provided with the personalized attention your family deserves. Complete lab and x-ray services are available. Allergy testing and treatment is provided through the MAST Immunosystems mulitple allergy test. Office hours: 8-8 7 days a week. Tel. 687-2704.

HINT:
People with type O blood can only receive blood from other type O's.

SOUND ADVICE

By Orland Purcell, M.S., Audiologist

WAXING PHILOSOPHICAL

Ear wax is produced by glands in the outer part of the ear canal. Its function is to prevent infections in the external ear by barring the entrance of bacteria with a slightly acidic barrier. Too little ear wax is more often the cause of ear problems than too much wax. Therefore, vigorous attempts at home to remove excess ear wax is hardly necessary. Quite often, a cotton swab will only serve to impact the wax deep in the ear canal and create a blockage. Left to its own devices, ear wax slowly works its way to the outer ear opening and is shed. In the rare cases where impacted ear wax has a negative affect upon hearing, the assistance of a hearing specialist should be sought.

There are many causes for hearing loss. AUDIO ACOUSTICS HEARING CENTERS, INC., 32 Village Court, has the hearing instruments that effectively address many of these situations. With experienced attention to your needs and concern for proper fit, your hearing difficulty can be dramatically reduced so that a normal lifestyle can be enjoyed. Call us today and hear what we mean. Tel. 682-5033. Open 9-5 Mon.-Fri.

HINT:
There is no reason to wash the inner ear with soap and water. This only invites infection.

Fast food shop may have sold more than burgers, ice cream

FORT WORTH (AP) — They were selling more than ice cream and hamburgers to students of three Fort Worth schools at the Mr. Softee on the city's north side, police say.

The owner of the fast food establishment and two employees were arrested Wednesday after an undercover officer bought five 4-gram bags of marijuana for $10 each, Fort Worth Police Capt. Ray Armand said.

The officer made seven other buys, including some in which he ordered food or beverages and $10 bags of marijuana during the month-long investigation, Armand said.

The employees put the food and the marijuana in a paper sack and handed it across the counter to the officer in exchange for his cash, Armand said.

The food was on the house, but the marijuana receipts were rung up on the cash register and listed daily in store records under "ice cream sales," Armand said.

Charles M. Pike II, 19, the manager, was arrested shortly after he sold what police described as marijuana to the undercover officer while two other officers watched from a nearby booth inside the business.

The owner, Todd Mitchell, who shares his Haltom City home with Pike, was arrested shortly later at his second business, Dynamite Ice Cream, which owns ice cream trucks that cater to children in several Fort Worth neighborhoods, Armand said.

Police also arrested Elizabeth Ann McKenzie, 25, of Fort Worth, who was named along with Pike on a warrant accusing them of selling marijuana to an undercover officer at Mr. Softee, Armand said.

Pike was released from Tarrant County Jail in lieu of bonds totaling $10,500, a jail spokesman said.

Mitchell and McKenzie were being held late Wednesday pending a bond hearing, the jail spokesman said.

The Mr.Softee is located within three blocks of Diamond Hill-Jarvis High School, Meacham Middle School and M.H. Moore Elementary School.

"I hate to think we've got elementary school kids buying, but nothing surprises me," Armand said. "These people are out to make a dollar."

Pike claims he never sold drugs to children.

"A few high school kids come in here, but they don't buy marijuana," said Pike, who dropped out of Saginaw schools in the ninth grade. "I tell by looks if they're over 20."

Pike, who said he first smoked marijuana when he was 13, admitted in an interview with the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that he decided to start selling marijuana out of Mr. Softee after some neighborhood teen-agers suggested it.

"I told a few people, and then they told their friends," he said. "It was fun, and I wanted to make some money. There are other ways to make money, but this is quicker."

Narcotics Officer Mike Camp disputed Pike's statement that he didn't sell to kids, saying it was a common claim by dealers who know it looks bad to exploit children in drug deals.

A search of the two businesses and Mitchell's home turned up several handguns, rifles and ammunition, about 40 sandwich bags containing small amounts of marijuana and other items, police said.

Police found a book with an itemized list of sales totals for the past month at Mr. Softee. Pike said he entered the marijuana sales under ice cream, and the figures ranged from $130 to $468. He estimated that he made $2 for every $10 bag he sold.

Woman allegedly hires mechanic to kill uncle

Heredia

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A mechanic allegedly was offered $45,000 to take part in the slaying of the husband of a woman who won $1 million in a New York lottery, police say.

Officers said Tuesday they believe Henry Bellettini, 38, was to receive the money from the estate of Armando and Norma Vasquez of Middleton, N.J., following their planned slaying.

Bellettini; his nephew, Joe Hernandez Jr. 17, and the Vasquez's niece, Linda Heredia, 34; were arrested following the alleged botched attempt to kill the couple.

The scheme collapsed after police captured two men at the scene of the murder of Armando Vasquez Monday night.

Vasquez's wife won the LOTTO jackpot May 16, 1981, while living in Union City, N.J., lottery spokesman George Yamin in Albany, N.Y., told the San Antonio Light.

"This is the first time anything like this has happened," Yamin said. "She is one of 590 people who have won $1 million since 1976."

Vasquez was at his brother-in-law's home when the attack occurred Monday night.

Bettellini and his nephew reportedly were recruited for the slaying by a woman offering cash and a $2,500 customized guitar, an investigator was told.

"I doubt they knew about the lottery at all," a police investigator said. "They were told the couple was worth about $200,000."

Heredia was named in the Vasquezes' will and stood to gain "a lot of money" by their deaths, an investigator said.

Bettellini, a driver for Dominguez Bros. Trucking Co., had told friends he would be coming into some money, a neighbor said.

"He said his girlfriend was going to help him start a new business," a neighbor said. "He was trying to get his own wrecker company started."

Heredia, a St. Luke's Lutheran Hospital nurse, had hired Bellettini to repair her pickup truck on several prior occasions, an investigator said.

Grand jury probing inmate death

LIBERTY (AP) — A Liberty County grand jury began a review of an investigation by Texas Rangers into the March 16 death of a black inmate in the Cleveland jail.

An eight-women, four-man jury met Wednesday for four hours and is scheduled to meet again next Wednesday.

Most of the grand jury session was spent interviewing the officers who conducted the investigation and the medical examiner who conducted the autopsy.

Kenneth Earl Simpson, 30, was arrested March 15 on disorderly conduct charges and was found dead in his cell about 4:30 a.m. on March 16.

However, the autopsy report said he died about four hours earlier, around midnight, about the time he was involved in a struggle with officers. A medical examiner concluded that Simpson was choked to death.

Cleveland Police Chief Harley Lovings suspended seven of his officers — two black and five white — pending the grand jury's review, but has said he believes Simpson's death was an accident.

Area mothers the best according to letters

The responce to the Midland Reporter-Telegram's "Why My Mom Is The Greatest" essay contest was tremendous.

Permian Basin Mothers are the best, the most loving, the kindest, and the most beautiful to be found, according to our letters.

Congratulations to the winners, who are listed below and to every Mother whose child will remember you on Mother's Day Sunday, May 8.

FIRST PLACE WINNER
Jamie Dodson will be treating her Mother to dinner at Gili's Restaurant y Cantina.

My Mom is my very best friend. She has been a part of my life always. Mom has been my brownie leader, Sunday school teacher, and has kept everything from my childhood, even my chicken pox scabs, so that someday I will have memories of my childhood. She's my "Wonder Woman" and I love her!
Jamie Dodson,
Age 16
Midland

SECOND PLACE WINNER
Heath Huff's Mother will receive a dozen roses from Bob's Designs.

Mom is a nice lady. She washes clothes and makes me dinner. No doubt Mom would climb a mountain 9100 feet tall to find me. I love my Mom because she cares for me and gives me a home. That's why I love my Mom.
Heath Huff
Midland

THIRD PLACE WINNER
Micah Prude's Mother will enjoy a free facial from The Skin Institute.

My Mom is the greatest because she works so hard in the kitchen to make perfect meals. And she takes care of me and does the shoping. She looks good all the time and does not embarass me. I love my Mom.
Micah Prude
Age 8
Midland

My Mom is the greatest because she always takes care of me when I am sick. When I need help with my homeowrk she's there to help me. When my Mom is at school, she'll always help me with a report that I have to do for piano. Mom is perfect!
Jeremy Louder
Stanton

No Mom can compare with mine, she is a special Mom. She is nice and always listens. My Mom always helps me to learn. My Mom is a great cook.
If a Mom could beat my Mom it would be a miracle.
Mom, you're the greatest.
John Hodge
Age 9
Greenwood

My Mom is the greatest. She is always there when I need her. When I have homeowrk she's there to help. Sometimes my Mom gets mad at me but she still loves me!!! I'm so happy to have a Mom like mine. There were many times I needed her and-...well she was there!!!!!!
Gena McMillan
Age 9

My Mom,
I think my Mom is the greatest Mom in the whole world, because she always plays jokes on my brother and I. She's really nice at night because after I've finished my home work, she let's me go out and play. Some people's Mom makes them go to bed at the same time as their littler brother or sister, but my Mom let's me stay up thirty minutes after my brother (who's six years younger).
I think my Mom deserves this present because my dads working far away, and we can't go out and buy her one.
My Mother has never spanked me,d and when she get's mad at me or I get mad at her we always seem to work out our differences.

My Almost Mom,
A woman who seems more appropriate to being my mother is my English teacher, Miss Gunn. Miss Gunn has taught me more than what she or I realize. Each day I would come in tardyd and she would call me inconsiderate, but she was teaching me responsibility. Also when I would start to work on another class' assignment while she was talking, she would call me rude. She was only teaching me to be more polite, attentive and mannerly to others. She's not only teaches me lessons in English, but lessons in life.

From cards to collages, new greeting card ideas

By AIISON ASHTON
Copley News Service

You're probably planning on spending a good half-hour at the greeting card rack hunting for the perfect Mother's Day card. The one that hits just the right note.

If it's earnest, you want it to not be syrupy sweet. If it's funny, you want to be sure it's not making fun of her.

You won't be alone. Mother's Day is the fourth biggest card-sending holiday: an estimated 145 million Mother's Day cards will be given this year. And devoted natural mothers won't be the only recipients.

Mother's Day cards have come a long way from staid floral designs and equally flowery verse.

As divorce changes the dynamics of family life, children want to acknowledge stepmothers, maternal friends, baby sitters, nannies, aunts and grandmothers — anyone with whom they have a maternal relationship.

"Greeting cards reflect what is happening in society," says Shirley Leonard of American Greetings. "With more dual-career couples and single-parent households, cards suitable for a variety of sending situations re becoming more popular.

Research shows that people like to acknowledge a mother-child relationship, whether that is with a biological mother, or with someone who has been like a mother to the sender. So more than 10 percent of the nearly 1,000 greeting card designs are suitable for sending to stepmothers, dads and motherlike friends and relatives who are important in our lives.

After all, more than 1,300 stepfamilies are created each day, and 65 percent of all grandparents will be stepgrandparents by the year 2000.

Mothers-to-be and new mothers are also active senders of Mother's Day greetings.

"Today there is a need for cards that celebrate the joys as well as laugh at the frustrations of being a new mother," explains David LeMoine of Hallmark.

According to LeMoine, the number of Mother's Day cards for new mothers and mothers-to-be has more than doubled in the past two years.

These new cards allow new mothers to pay tribute to their own mothers, either seriously or with a touch of humor.

One greeting says it straight: "Now that I'm a parent too, I just want you to know that I really understand what a wonderful mom you've always been."

Another addresses the challenges of motherhood with a smile: "Mom, now that I'm a mother too, there's just one thing I'd like to say ... HELP!"

Humorous cards are becoming more and more a part of the Mother's Day scene. However, that humor is either aimed at the sender or it is directed at the demands of motherhood, never at Mom.

"Cards that lovingly applaud Mom's patience for putting up with a less-than-perfect child (isn't that all of us?) do well on this occasion," says Leonard.

One popular card marvels at Mother's endless patience: "Mom, when I look back on all the sacrifices you made for our family, how you put up with all our oddities and our finicky appetites, I have to wonder ... Are you crazy or what?"

Senders can express appreciation for Mom's restraint: "Thanks for all the times you gave me good advice...and for all the times you wanted to, but didn't."

Another greeting immortalizes those famous words of exasperation: "Mom, I'll never forget those wonderful words of advice you gave me that molded me and influenced my life. 'Wait till your father gets home!' "

Friends also are exchanging Mother's Day greetings. On a genuine note, they compare how they had imagined motherhood as children with the way it is now. Or they playfully poke fun at motherhood:

"Just for fun on Mother's Day, let's trade kids! I'm trading mine for a BMW. How about you?"

One mother who is most definitely not a target of Mother's Day humor is the working mother.

"You won't find many women carrying briefcases in office meetings on our Mother's Day cards this year," says Shirley Leonard.

"Our research shows that on this one occasion women do not want to be reminded of their careers or activities outside of the home."

Creative alternatives to traditional Mother's Day greeting cards abound. Handmade greetings are always a mother's favorite.

Enclosing a do-it-yourself coupon helps personalize a store-bought card. These can be redeemable for anything from treating Mom to a meal at the restaurant of her choice to breakfast in bed to doing small chores on a regular basis.

Today, choose among cards for all kinds of surrogate Moms - even baby sitters and Dads.

Super silk plants, roses, corsages for Mom

By DEBRA LEE BALDWIN
Copley News Service

Mom taught you the names of flowers. Rose. Hibiscus. Nasturtium. (You delighted her by saying "High Biscuit" and "Mustard Chum.")

Give the lady who opened the world for you a bit of it back on Mother's Day. Surround her with spring flowers and lovely, leafy green plants.

"There are two kinds of mothers," says a florist. "The traditional and the modern."

Flower stands, plant stores and florists stock up on the unusual this time of year. And browsing is half the fun of finding the perfect message for Mom. If your Mom is modern, order something Oriental. The trend is toward showcasing one exotic flower—a spray of orchids, a peach-colored bleeding heart, a feathery pink-purple protea — in a simple, elegant arrangement.

Or send her a bonsai tree.

If Mom's more old-fashioned, she'll adore a spring basket bursting with carnations, irises, daisies, freesias and tulips. "The key is lots of color," advises the florist.

Whether Mom's current or conservative, she'll love a corsage, greenery in a gift container, roses (roses, roses!) or fabulous fakes: silk flowers, plants and — believe it or not — vegetables.

Corsages are making a comeback. The now look in "wearable flowers" includes cymbidium orchids with flashy ribbons. Carnations with satin and sequins. Sprays of miniature roses.

Gardenias are out of the picture since prices have soared. If you want fragrance, try freesias in a corsage. They smell good and the variety of available colors range from deep blue-purple and bright magenta to creamy white, lavender, and sunny yellow.

POTS TO TREASURE

Add something special to Mother's Day blooms and plants by placing them in elegant, fanciful or practical containers. You'll be giving Mom two gifts in one.

FTD's Mother's Day bouquets come in ceramic compote jars (complete with serving spoon and lid) and in graceful white ceramic swans. Teleflor offers special containers too — including a designwork pitcher.

Check out the blooming plants at your local nursery: blue-purple hydrangeas, rust-colored chrysanthemums, peppermint geraniums. Pick out a pot to match.

Wrap polka-dotted fabric around a tub of tulips. Or tie a ribbon that hints at the color of the flower-to-be around a container of soon-to-bloom hyacinths.

Be creative in your search for containers and delve in kitchen cupboards and antique shops for the right one. Put violets in a ceramic mug. Fill a watering can with daffodils. Arrange lilacs and mums in a souffle dish.

Give Mom an indoor herb garden. Plant rosemary, sage, thyme, French basil and mint in little pots. Place them on tiny pebbles in a plastic tray that fits her kitchen window sill.

Help her favorite grandchild plant flower seeds in a funny animal container (a hippo, elephant or frog). Next time you talk to Grandma, ask if her Mother's Day marigolds have sprouted.

ROSE TRENDS

Flowers come and go in popularity. The pick of this season is the rose.

Roses are blooming in more places than florist's shops: on clothes, bedspreads and towels. They're decorating drapes, dishes and tablecloths.

For Mother's Day, give Mom roses and a rose-embellished gift to match.

Arrange cream-colored and pale pink roses in a deep green vase. Present the arrangement to her with a gift-wrapped rose-patterned tablecloth.

Pin a rose corsage to a pale pink slumber pillow.

Select a rose-scented soap or bubble bath. Wrap your gift in rose-pattern paper. Tie fresh or silk rose buds to the ribbon.

Can't be with Mom on Mother's Day? In the card you send her, enclose a rose-scented sachet.

Check out flea markets and antique stores for pieces of china (such as teacups and teapots) in classic rose patterns. Fill the treasures you find with miniature roses for Mom.

If she loves exotic plants but hates to care for them, give her silk. Some stores carry silk plants and flowers so lifelike you have to touch them to make sure they're not real.

Buy her an antique Chinese vase and fill it with silk blooms that complement her home's color scheme.

If she loves Boston ferns but they don't love her (they turn brown, shrivel up and die) give her a silk one. All she'll have to do is dust it.

Silk plants are great for sunless corners. No window in the bathroom? No problem. The silk ficus or palm you give Mom won't mind.

New on the silk plant scene are hanging baskets of impatiens, azaleas and fuchsias — sometimes mixed with ivy for an even more realistic look. Give Mom one for her patio. This year, she won't have to worry about watering her hanging plants while she's in Toledo, Tucson or Tahiti.

Also trendy are silk cacti: everything from tall cucumber like euphorbias to squatty fat-leafed succulents. They make a great accent to the Southwest look.

Here's a fun new idea: silk vegetables. Update Mom's kitchen with an assortment of silk lettuce, celery, tomatoes and asparagus arranged in a woven basket.

History, trivia and Mom Day IQ puzzlers

By ALISON ASHTON
Copley News Service

As you order flowers for Mom, mail off a card or dial her number on May 8, you just might wonder who is responsible for Mother's Day and its traditions.

Why is it in May? Why are flowers, especially carnations, such a popular gift? Whose idea was it, anyway?

Contrary to popular belief, Mother's Day was not concocted by florists and greeting card manufacturers. The practice of commemorating mothers and motherhood is deeply rooted in tradition.

Honoring motherhood is a custom that dates back to the ancient Greeks. Revelers worshiped Cybele, mother of the gods every spring with sylvan rites. The Romans later paid homage to the goddess in the three-day festival of Hilaria during the Ides of March.

The advent of Christianity brought Mothering Sunday, which celebrated both the mother church and the parishioners' mothers on the fourth Sunday of Lent. In England in the 1600s, children returned home bearing gifts for their mothers.

In modern times, credit for Mother's Day goes to Anna M. Jarvis, a schoolteacher from West Virginia who was devoted to her mother. Motivated by her mother's death in 1905, as well as by the neglect she observed other mothers suffering, Jarvis wrote congressmen and ministers, urging them to support a national holiday honoring mothers.

In 1914, Woodrow Wilson declared Mother's Day a national holiday as "a public expression of Clergymen across the country devote special sermons extolling the virtues of motherhood. Jarvis died in 1948, having spent her fortune promoting Mother's Day.

Nonetheless, the origin of Mother's Day remains a hot issue.

Julia Ward Howe, composer of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," allegedly proposed the idea of an annual Mother's Day celebration as early as 1872.

Another schoolteacher, Mary Towles Sasseen of Kentucky, had her pupils stage a musical salute to their mothers in 1887. Still another schoolteacher, this time Harriet Lee of California, is said to have come up with the idea before Jarvis, in 1903.

Frank E. Herring also suggested a Mother's Day observance in a speech he made to the Fraternal Order of Eagles in 1904.

Let Mom know you care with the gift of beautiful jewelry

May 8th is a very special day - a time to honor the important women in our lives...our Mothers.

How do you celebrate Mother's Day? For many, it's a time to gather together with family and present Mom with a thoughtful gift - a gift that says who she is.

Jewelry is a very personal way to say thanks for all you've done. "Plus, it's the perfect complement to any mother's wardrove," say Kathleen Walas, beauty and fashion director for a major jewelry reatiler.

But, before you rush out to buy your gift, remember that each mother has her own individual style.

What jewelry is right for your mother? Says Ms. Walas, there are three basic kinds of jewelry - classic, casual, and high fashion - to suit every mother's personal style.

For Mother's Day, give her the very best - jewelry that will dazzle her and complement her look and wardrobe.

Jewelry is the 'in' gift for Mother's Day, Sunday May 8. This classic collection from Avon includes an heirloom pin and earrings with simulated coral surrounded by a asea of imitation seed pearls in a goldtone setting.

WHO DO YOU THINK YOU'RE TALKING TO?

If you advertise on television or radio, you never really know.

Advertising in the Midland Reporter-Telegram is quite another story, however. In our most recent readership survey, people talked to us and we listened. They shared a lot of interesting things with us like their household income, for example, as well as how, when and where they like to spend it. They also told us that a newspaper ad is 4 times more likely to influence where they shop than a television commercial.

You can learn a lot by listening.

So give us a call at 682-5311. And when it's time to tell your story, you'll have a pretty good idea of just who you're talking to.

Pamper your special Mom with books, photos, sweets

By MONICA PEREZ
Copley News Service

Mom opens a package containing a football helmet.

Little boy says, "It's for you, Mom, but if there's ever a day when you're not using it, I thought that maybe I could borrow it..." (cartoon from "It's a Mom's Life," by David Sipress, Plume Books).

Mom's view of a gift may be different from your own.

She may need a new mop, but that's not a good gift for Mother's Day. You could be telling her you see her as the cleaning lady. Or that you think the floor is dirty and she should do something about it.

When it comes to Mother's Day gifting, it's not so important how much you spend, nor that the gift be useful. What is important is to look past the gift to the feelings she'll have when she opens it.

Every gift has a hidden message, and the best Mother's Day gift says: 'Mom, you're special."

A smart accessory for her office tells her she's a high-powered exec. A carefully chosen cookbook is a compliment to her culinary creativity, providing she loves to cook! A framed photo of yourself says you know no one loves you like she does.

And any gift that pampers her is right-on.

GIFTS OF TIME

Budget-conscious adults, children and teens can pair two precious items: love and time. All you need is a dollar or two, a trip to the variety store, and some imagination.

For example, if the Queen's carriage needs cleaning wash and wax Mom's car. Vacuum and dust the inside. The finishing touch: tiny silk flowers tied above the rearview mirror.

You, her humble servant, are quick to recognize her needs. Are you guilty of snitching the pen she keeps by the phone? Replace it with a new one. Attach it to a ribbon tied to a jazzy pad of paper.

Copy the names and addresses from her old address book into a new one. (Neatly — in pencil!)

Toss out those unworthy gray dishrags. Decorate white cotton dish towels with loving messages and bright designs, using indelible markers or fabric crayons. Or embroider the towels with the words "World's Greatest Mom" and a few red hearts.

Give her a coupon book of hand-decorated "certificates." One can be redeemed for breakfast in bed, another for dusting the entire house, another for cleaning out the refrigerator — you get the idea.

LUXURY AND GOURMET

Mom is a lady who deserves luxury, so wild extravagance (or the illusion of it) will do nicely.

If you have $10 to $15 to spend, give her an assortment of truffles in exotic flavors (black Russian, champagne, tart apricot, Kahlua, macadamia nut) with a quarter-pound of fresh-ground coffee.

Browse the grocery store for treats she'd never buy for herself: flavored international coffees, a sampler of teas, imported jams and jellies, smoked cheeses.

Make a tasty pate. Present it to her along with the recipe, on a special dish she'll want to save. Gift and department stores, for example, have festive plates decorated with bright-colored fruits and vegetables.

If you plan to spend upwards of $15, giver her an addition to her china set — something elegant and pretty, like a gravy boat, sugar bowl, creamer or relish tray.

Pillows say luxury, too. Embroider a tHrow pillow with roses. Give her a lacy eyelet pillow sham for her bed. Buy several yards of satin at a fabric store and custom-make pillow cases.

ROMANCE AND NOSTALGIA

Tell Mom she's still a "sweet young thing." Take her back to the lazy, crazy days before she met Dad. Visit your music store for an audiocassette of the tunes that were hot when she was 16.

Please her nose. Give her a sachet of cedar chips for her closet. Or vanilla-scented potpourri for her kitchen. Or jasmine bubble bath and matching soap for the bathroom. Or a scented candle for her coffee table.

No one has a heart as golden as Mom's. Show her you appreciate her sentimental side.

Unless she's amazingly organized, somewhere in her home is a drawer stuffed with photos. Present her with a crisp new album and spend the afternoon sorting through memories.

Give her a framed photo that talks to her. New "Talking Pictures" frames have a computer chip in the back. Record (or re-record) a six-second message; she will hear you every time she tilts the frame forward.

Card shops stock ceramic mugs with special messages: "You are loved!" "A grandma is love that you never outgrow!" Fill one with foil-wrapped chocolate kisses.

HOBBIES AND DREAMS

There's more to Mom than the fact that she's your mother. Show her you appreciate her avocations.

Visit a bookstore, keeping her hobbies and interests in mind. Check out the gardening section and how-to sections, as well as cookbooks and travel.

Does she love a good murder mystery? Give her a gift certificate for a blazing fire, a hot buttered rum, and an hour's peace and quiet. Wrap it with the new edition of "Murder Ink," a collection of whodunits from England and America.

Give her a good laugh: any book by Erma Bombeck, Peg Bracken or Emma Goodman. Or one of the newly-released compendiums of cartoons — Garfield, Far Side, Family Circle or Calvin and Hobbes. Personalize the inside front cover with your own cartoon depicting a funny family situation.

She's a busy lady. Save her some time. Fill a box with sheets of all-occasion giftwrap, matching bows and enclosure cards. Next time she buys someone a gift, she'll appreciate your thoughtfulness.

Has she always wanted to know more about wine? Wrap a bottle of champagne with a gift certificate to a wine-tasting class at a nearby college or university.

Many moons ago (long before you were born) Mom dreamed of being a fairy princess. Wrap up a music box for her dressing table. Select one with carousel horses, fairy-tale figurines, swans, or a castle worthy of Cinderella.

Mom deserves a pocket calculator that makes a fashion statement.

Buy her an addition to her collection of ceramic figurines, crystal animals or gold charms. Check antique stores for unusual one-of-a-kind finds.

PRACTICAL BEST BETS

It's OK to give Mom a practical gift if it does something special—an espresso machine, for example.

Give her freedom from worry with an appliance, such as an iron or coffee maker that shuts off automatically.

Mothers must repay kindness on Fathers Day

One advantage mothers have over fathers is that Mother's Day comes before Father's Day. Thus can mothers tote up the spoils of their special day and repay their husbands in kind that Sunday in June.

I would rate last Mother's Day as mixed. It started off wonderfully: with a week's worth of handmade presents from my 4-year-old daughter, who is thrilled by any occasion that warrants gift-giving; a potted pink tulip plant, my favorite; and a raspberry breakfast cake, a thoughtful bow to my taste and indulgence unworthy of my waistline.

I was then encouraged to loll around the house in the morning, treated to unending cups of coffee and an uninterrupted read of every section of the Sunday paper.

On the down side, this Mother's Day involved no luxurious presents, money being tight in our household.

As cars will, ours died two weeks after paying off the IRS and one week before Mother's Day, so buying a new car stood in for the magazine subscription, the nice T-shirt, or the cotton sweater I would have liked to have had.

However, I consider this no big disadvantage, as I probably would have gotten a pink nightgown I didn't really want as opposed to the navy-blue T-shirt I did, and then would have been forced to buy my husband a tie he didn't really want for Father's Day.

The real reason I rate my Mother's Day as mixed rather than excellent is that we spent the afternoon doing something primarily for my husband's sake. I agreed it was necessary, I even half enjoyed it, but if I had truly been Queen for a Day, it is not how I would have decreed we would spend our time.

So here comes Father's Day, and given the tenor of Mother's Day, I know what I have on the agenda for my husband: He can sleep late while my daughter and I brew the coffee, fetch the newspapers and cook him some bacon and eggs — his raspberry cake equivalent.

We will buy him, instead of a book or a bathing suit, maybe a little evergreen tree — his tulip equivalent.

Radiating loving tenderness, 'Sarah and Tess' is the 1988 limited edition Mother's Day plate created by internationally-known artist Edna Hibel.

Ideas for dining out or brunching in

By MELANIE BARNARD AND BROOKE DONJNY
Copley News Service

There is probably nothing that can touch a mother's heart like the gift of a home-cooked meal.

Mothers give willing and loving nurturing to children, and a big part of this job, of course, involves feeding those offspring three meals a day — week after week, month after month, adding up to thousands of meals during the child-rearing years. It's a role that most moms undertake with great pleasure. But ...

Mom doesn't want to cook on Mother's Day! She wants permission to take a day off the job. She wants a holiday, the gift of freedom. Going out to a restaurant would be just fine. Or thrill Mom by offering to cook a meal.

What should you do? Consider taking Mom out to brunch at a local restaurant. (Make reservations early, if you can.) Build up to the big event with a homemade invitation, done up with glitter, lace and ribbons, she won't forget.

Why not plan a spring fest picnic? Decorate a basket with a pale pink or yellow tablecloth and fill it to the brim with matching paper plates, napkins and forks. Brew up some lemonade, throw together a few tuna sandwiches and hard-boiled eggs and a copy of Mom's favorite poetry book. Read her a story by a babbling brook.

Perhaps you'd rather make your picnic a take-out affair. Choose pizza, chicken wings, Chinese food or just desserts. Whatever the cuisine, Mom will appreciate the break from cooking.

If a homespun brunch is more your style, then do it up right. The "Silver Palate Cookbook" by Julee Rosso and Sheila Lukins (Workman Publishing) reminds us that, according to a Chinese proverb, "There's only one pretty child in the world, and every mother has it."

The authors suggest enlisting Dad's help on Mother's Day, starting the surprises the evening before:

"Make up Mom's bed with pretty, pressed pastel sheets and fluffy pillows. Add a bouquet of wisteria on her night table for its heavenly fragrance, and slip a tiny box of her favorite candy slightly under her pillow to ensure sweet dreams.

"Mother's Day morning begins with breakfast in bed on a beautifully set tray: fresh orange juice, strawberries in cream, cinnamon toast and a few wildflowers or daffodils for cheer."

For the mother-to-be and her husband, the Silver Palate gremlins suggest throwing an "I Won't Grow Up Party": "Bring loads of kites, yo-yos, jump ropes, jacks, balloons, string for a cat's cradle, marbles and bubbles for blowing. Play kick the can, hide and seek, king of the mountain and hopscotch (for dads).

"Let the menu be peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, Kool-Aid and chocolate chip cookies." You'll be ready for your little bundle of joy with this jump back to juvenile pleasures.

If you already have children anxious to help with Mother's Day menu planning, consider the following menu. It can be cooked by a person as young as, say, 10 or 11, using great care when using the stove. Or it can be undertaken as a family project, with younger children supervised by an older family member.

The Herbed Cheese-Stuffed Chicken Breasts are elegant yet easy.

The recipe calls for chicken breasts that have been split and boned, but with the skin left intact. These are available in packages in some supermarkets, but if not, buy a package of split breasts and ask the meat manager to bone them for you.

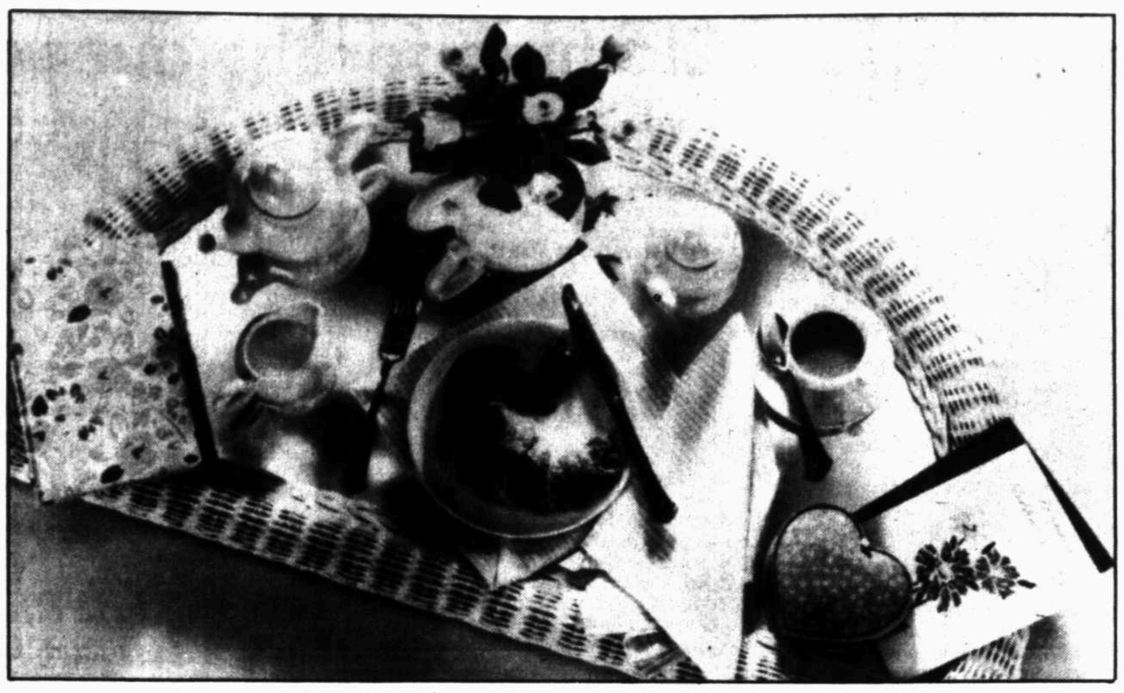

The filling is simply a prepared herbed cheese spread, with the addition of some chopped scallions and additional seasoning. It's tucked under the skin and the chicken is then shaped into a neat rounded package. Then it bakes without needing any attention other than a single basting.

Raisin and Spice Rice Pilaf makes a sweetly savory accompaniment to the chicken, and requires nothing more taxing in the way of kitchen expertise than chopping an onion.

To complete the meal, we suggest carrots — either whole baby carrots, which are available fresh or frozen in most supermarkets and do not need peeling, or peeled large carrots cut into 2-inch lengths. Cook the carrots in lightly salted water to cover for about 20 minutes, or until tender.

For a special spring dessert, buy a pint of strawberries and a quart of vanilla ice cream. Wash and hull the berries, slice them, and sprinkle with about 3 tablespoons of sugar. Let the sugared berries stand for about half an hour, and they'll make their own syrupy sauce. Spoon the sweetened strawberries over the ice cream and top with a single large berry for extra drama.

Mom will feel like a queen for a day.

Decorate the day with a breakfast tray, laden with Mom's favorite foods.

HERBED CHEESE-STUFFED CHICKEN BREASTS

1 (4-ounce) package herbed and spiced cheese
2 tablespoons minced scallions, including some green tops
¼ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon black pepper
⅛ teaspoon nutmeg
4 chicken breast halves, boneless but with skin intact (about 6 ounces each)
1 tablespoon butter
Additional salt and pepper for sprinkling on top of chicken
Preparation time: 10 minutes
Baking time: 35 minutes
Serves: 4
Preheat oven to 400 F.

In small bowl, combine cheese, scallions, salt, pepper and nutmeg, mixing together with a wooden spoon until well combined.

Loosen skin from one side of chicken breast and insert about 1 tablespoon of filling under skin. Smooth skin around filling and meat, tucking the two ends under to form a rounded dome shape. Arrange in buttered 8-inch-square baking dish, dot with butter, and sprinkle with salt and pepper. (May be made ahead to this point and kept, covered, in the refrigerator for up to 24 hours.)

Place uncovered baking dish in preheated oven, immediately turn heat down to 350 degrees, and bake for 30-35 minutes, until chicken skin is lightly browned and meat juices run clear when checked with a sharp knife. Baste once during cooking time with pan juices.

Serve immediately, or cool slightly and slice each breast into 3 slices. Spoon pan juices over chicken.

Mother & daughter outfits create romance

By Barbara DeWitt
Copley News Service

No, we're not talking about matching Reeboks or disco dresses, but those pretty, romantic dresses for moms and their little girls.

Just when you thought that sort of innocence was never to be seen again (except, maybe, at the Smithsonian Institution), along comes a new interest in that treasured tradition.

Blame it (happily) on the yuppies. They remember dressing like Mom (or Dad), and they want their children to continue the fashion, but with designer flair.

No more is little Susie wearing a dress made from the leftover fabric of Mom's handsewn dress; in the '80s it's big-ticket designer clothes in little sizes that either match or coordinate with the parents' wardrobe.

Leading the nostalgia parade is Laura Ashley, well-known for romantic floral print clothes and home furnishings.

Choose from a collection of sweet Sunday-type outfits in floral voile, sailor dresses in white damask, pastels and bright florals, and crisp cotton dungarees in bold geranium prints.

Coordinating straw boaters trimmed with matching ribbons, lacy tights and floral-print tennis shoes are also in the design group.

Laura Ashley not only has created a collection of clothes for infants and girls up to size 12, but also has opened specialty boutiques for upscale parents who want their children to dress like miniature versions of them.

The Mother & Child shops in limited locations offer a babies' toilette collection of soaps, lotions, shampoos, oil, talcum powder and cleansing cream, priced between $5-$15 each.

Laura Ashley isn't the only designer, however, to recognize the buying power of yuppie parents.

With a more contemporary taste level, trendy sportswear designers like Esprit, Benetton, The Gap, Liz Claiborne and Guess? also have embraced the schoolyard customer and her mother.

For instance, Mom and daughter could wear coordinating '60s-style print tops with miniskirts and matching hats and socks in colors such as hot pink and black or acid green and cobalt blue. Hats are an important accessory at Benetton. In their spring Exploring the World collection, they even have pith helmets.

But before you rush right out for your mother-daughter costume, consider your age, size and the occasion. Mother will look best if she's young and slim and her outfit is on the conservative side.

As long as the outfits are tailored, you can span the ages, and nautical navy and white dresses work best for this nostalgic look. Denim also works well, because it's sporty and contemporary.

Whatever your taste, remember that whether it's Mother's or Father's Day, dressing up a duo is in!

Clothing for the queen-for-a-day

By DEBRA COOPER
Copley News Service

This Mother's Day, treat Mom to something that's both fun and fashionable.

Buy her a teddy bear. Wrap it in a silk scarf. Drape a string of pearls (real if you can afford it!) around its neck.

Take her to a hat shop. Buy her a spring bonnet and decorate it with silk flowers. Choose one with a wide brim to shade her from the summer sun — in sizzling orange, red, yellow or neon green.

Sign her up for a makeover: hair, skin and nails. Treat her to a tray of fresh cosmetics, recommended by the personal care consultant. Take her picture afterward — then take her out to dinner!

Browse through a lingerie shop. Your criterion: something she would admire but wouldn't buy for herself. Make it frothy, frilly and feminine — a slip, nightgown, camisole or lightweight summer robe.

Give her a piece of trendy lingerie—an item she didn't know existed, such as an all-in-one bra/slip. Or silk lounge pajamas and tap pants. If she wears Dad's undies, buy her women's boxer shorts by Calvin Klein.

Mom's socks need updating. Bulk is out. Thin and feminine are in. Present her with an assortment of pretty anklets trimmed in ribbon, eyelet or lace. Polka dots, stripes and bright color combinations are haute.

Give her a gift certificate for a pair of shoes to match her jazzy new socks.

Has she got great legs? It's time she showed them off in new textured, colored hosiery. Hint: before you buy, check her closet. Does she have a denim skirt? Silk dress? Choose hosiery patterns and colors that will coordinate.

Fee, fi, faux. Any red-blooded Mom must have a mock-croc handbag, belt or gloves. According to a buyer for a department store, "There is probably no fashion statement more important this season than imitation crocodile and reptile accessories."

Clutch an eel. Chances are, her old clutch is worn out (remember giving it to her five Mother's Days ago?) Update it in eelskin. Best bet: a clutch that encloses its own calculator.

Mom the 9-to-5er can always use another suit blouse. Select one with a paisley or floral print, subtle ruffles and a jewel or collared neck (not a bow!). Fashionable fabrics include regular and washable silks, puckered textures.

If her colors are more Southwest than St. Tropez, fine. Sun-bleached pastels are in: shades of sand, peach, celery and sage. Give her a soft, pale top or cardigan in a crinkly, puckery knit.

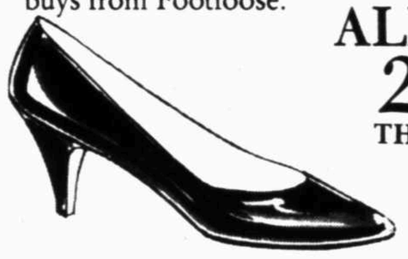

Executive Moms aren't the only kind who need portfolios and attache cases. Even if she's a full-time house frau or teaches scuba diving, there are occasions when she packs papers. Show her you appreciate her professional side.

You simply can't let Mom go out to play without the right outfit: acid-washed jeans and a tropical-print top (tank, if the look is right for her).

Easy projects that make perfect Mother's Day presents

By KELLE BANKS BARFIELD
Copley News Service

Looking for a project that's a perfect Mother's Day present?

Make a booklet of gift certificates that includes free hemming, kitchen dusting and car washing.

Make a potato print Mother's Day card.

Your local hobby stores are brimming with ideas for sewing and crafts projects you can make with love.

Here are three projects Mom will enjoy all year round:

BREAKFAST BASKETS

A breakfast basket is the perfect way to brighten Mom's holiday.

The goodies you pack inside give Mom a delicious way to start her day, and even after the scrumptious edibles are long gone, the basket is a handy-as-ever reminder.

Any size or shape basket fits the bill for your gift package, so use your imagination when searching for colors and styles. Once you've selected your container, spice it up with bright cloth napkins, ideal for lining the basket and covering the food.

You may also want to personalize your basket by painting parts or all of it, or winding ribbon around the rim and handle.

The real fun of your creation is how you choose to fill it. Homemade treats like breads or muffins and jellies or jams are always a pleasure to receive. Wrap these with festive pieces of fabric or cloth napkins to liven the basket.

An assortment of fresh fruits is another colorful way to add to the gift. Or throw in dried apricots, banana chips or raisins for nutritious snacks that will stay fresh for days.

Top your breakfast basket off with summer sausage and cheeses, always special treats that add real flavor to the first meal of the day.

RECIPE ALBUMS

Use a standard size or miniature photograph album as your recipe file.

If yours is the type of album with plastic-covered pages, simply press recipe cards between the plastic sheet and the sturdier board.

If the leaves of the album are plain sheets of paper, either write recipes directly on the paper or tape cards to the page.

There are several ways to spice up the outer cover of the photo album. Your custom design on the front will make the recipe file not only handy in the kitchen but attractive, as well.

A simple way of adding color and style to the recipe album is to apply self-stick shelf-lining paper to the cover. Cut the paper to fit across the front of the album only and trim around the edges with colored tape. Or, cut the paper large enough to wrap around the inside of the book as well.

Use your recipe file as a collection of Mom's favorite recipes and snapshots that tell a story. Next to each recipe, tape a photo of a picnic, cookout or barbecue where the goods were served.

Shelf paper on the cover really serves its purpose for the snapshot/recipe album, because you can use the paper to mat a family or scenic photo on the front. Before sticking the paper down, just cut a hole out of the paper with a craft knife. Be certain the hole is small enough to hold the photo in place while showing as much of the scene as possible.

SCENTED HANG-UPS

A pretty fabric case used over Mom's clothes hangers is ideal for adding the light, clean scent of cedar or a delicate scent of potpourri to her closet. Just fill the padded case with chips and shavings of cedar or with dried flowers and leaves spiced with potpourri oils.

When selecting the fabric, look for lighter weight cotton prints. These will be easier to handle as you sew and will allow the scents to seep through the fabric more completely.

As a frame for your fragrance case, use a sturdy wooden or plastic hanger. Create a pattern for cutting fabric by drawing around the hanger on a grocery bag.

Depending on your fabric, you may even be able to draw directly on the wrong side of the fabric. But remember, before cutting, to draw your actual cutting line ¾-inch wider all the way around. This allows not only for your seam, but also for fitting the hanger inside.

Cut one side of the fabric case exactly from the pattern. However, the second side must have additional fabric across the bottom, which will be folded over to seal the case. When you cut this second side, cut along the sloped sides on your pattern, but add 5 inches in length along the bottom line.

In addition, you will need to cut two pieces of fusible interfacing to match the pattern. Cut these according to the original size of the hanger; do not add allowance for seams. After cutting the two fabric pieces, center the interfacing in place on the wrong side of each piece and press with an iron to secure.

QUEEN

Add a pair of matching geometric earrings and sun-sensitive Serengeti sunglasses.

Speaking of sunglasses, give her an assortment of colorful "leashes" (the straps that fit onto the earpieces of glasses so she can wear them around her neck.) Choose colors that coordinate with her warm-weather wardrobe.

Nothing sparkles like diamonds in sunshine. Give Mom a stylish tennis bracelet: a glittering strand of diamonds set in 14k gold.

If diamonds are too pricey for you, give her a simple ring, bracelet, pendant or brooch set with stones representing the birth months of each of her children.

Bring tears of joy to her eyes: trim a photo of a favorite grandchild and tuck it into a gold locket. You (or another family member) can give her earrings to match.

Chain her. Gold-tone chains are as popular as ever. The look is wide, flat and large-linked.

Take her on a sniff-and-snack tour of department stores. Visit a perfume counter and sniff and test three or four scents. Give your noses a breather while you have a hot croissant and a cup of coffee or share a bag of mints. Return to the perfume counter(s) and sniff-test a few more. Which is her favorite? Present it to her for Mother's Day.

If Mom has a signature scent, buy her soap, powder and bath salts to match. She'll love the long-lasting results of layering fragrance. Or give her a new scent for summer — a fresh, light rose floral or something citrusy.

Trousers and pants for evening are back on the fashion scene — to the relief of many Moms who dread dressing up. Which blouses in her closet look great? Buy her trousers to match. Suggestion: they should be high-waisted and full; the fabric slinky and shimmery.

Sneak into Mom's closet and steal all the shoes that have miles to go, fashionwise, but are literally down-at-the-heel. Take them to a shoe-repair shop. Play shoemaker's elf and line them up on Mother's Day morning.

New issues face today's Mothers

Mother's Day is a good time to reflect on the contemporary issues facing the American family today. Here is a small list of the choices and decision Mother's across the country face in their daily lives.

School dropouts - In some areas as few as 20 percent of entering freshman are graduated just four years later.

Day care centers - There just aren't enough of them, and not nearly enough reliable ones. A mother who goes off to work will have little peace of mind, and hence be less productive, if she has the welfare of a young one on her mind. Worry-created stress weighs heavily on new mothers.

More than 70 percent of all working women are of childbearing age and over 90 percent of them are likely to become pregnant during their working lives.

Half of all children under six years of age have mothers who work.

In one corporate study, 56 percent of the mothers questioned replied that they had difficulty in arranging satisfactory, quality child care.

Complaints run high that infant/child care costs are excessive, to the point that they negate the value of a "second income" to the family.

The number of day care facilities has increased 77 percent between 1977 and last year. But compensation is low, and the pool of young people from 18 to 24, who make up most of the staff, is dwindling, while demand for their services is rising.

Over 2,000,000 (7.2 percent of all youngsters) have no adult supervision after school, according to the Census Bureau. The children of working mothers are the most likely to be left alone before and/or after school. And children of executive-type mothers are more likely to be left alone than those of service employees.

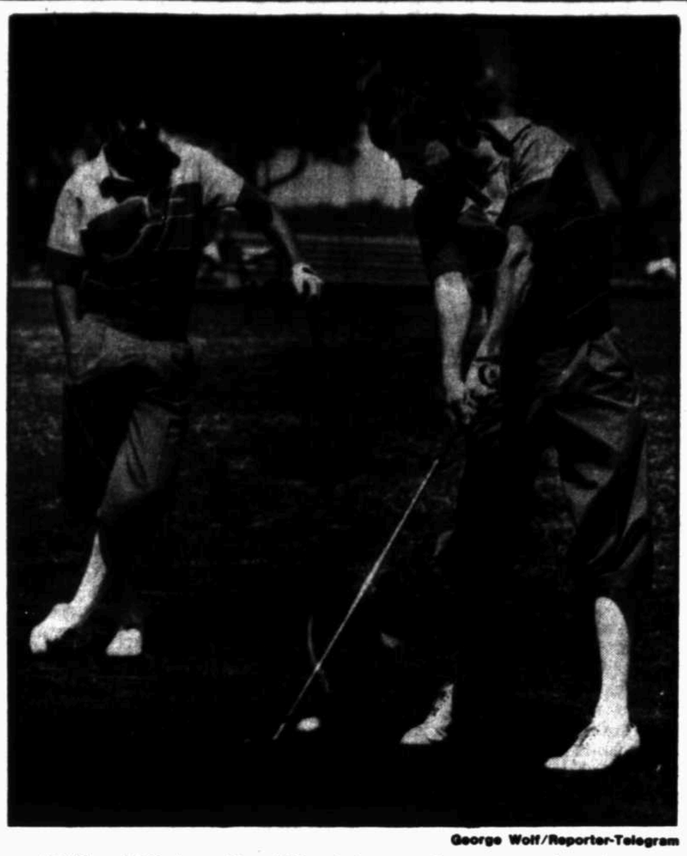

Five percent of mothers recently interviewed by the Census Bureau, reported that they had lost time from work during the preceding month because of problems with child care.

Over the past five years, the number of working mothers who use organized centers for their children has almost doubled. However, many are forced to resort to private home care for their young.

About 12 billion dollars are spent on day care annually, and the figure is growing every year.

Over the past decade, the number of women studying for professions has at least doubled, and even tripled in some cases. In fact, the number of women studying dentistry has risen 700 percent.

Being remarried, Mother? Want your children and/or his to come to the ceremony? Discuss it with them and let them decide. If they want to become involved, bring them into every decision and plan in which they show interest. But don't force them to be part of something about which they may have reservations, or feelings of "betraying" a biological parent.

Midlanders run for state berths

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — Class 5A's Region I dash for state track glory will be staged at the Lubbock Coronado oval here Friday and Saturday with both Midland Lee and Midland High hoping to gain a free ticket to Austin in two weeks for the state track meet.

All qualifiers here have already proven themselves champions by advancing from various district meets across the Region I area, which spreads from Fort Worth to El Paso. Now the best-of-the-best go head-to-head in an effort to win a state track berth.

The top two finishers in each event qualify for the state meet, so this is probably considered by most athletes as the most significant meet of the year. Getting to state is the recognition and whatever is done in Austin is pure gravy.

The two-day dash for pride begins at 9 a.m. Friday with selected field events and running preliminaries are scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. All events Saturday will be finals with field events beginning at 9 a.m. and running finals at 1 p.m.

Here is a look at the state-bound chances of the Midland athletes:

Region I Track

Boys

Pole Vault: Lee's Joel Van Cott has a season best of 14-0, including his 4-5A championship, but most feel he will have to go at least a foot higher to get out of Lubbock. The major trouble spot comes from Wichita Falls' Jayson Lavender, who has a 16-7 this year, but Amarillo Caprock's Dan Tanner owns a 15-6. However, Van Cott has been breaking in a new pole the last two weeks and says, "I can go much higher than 14-feet. This pole has a greater flex weight and it throws me a lot higher." This is a Friday morning event.

Shot Put: Lee's Paul Little, who most consider a surprise qualifier, almost won the 4-5A title before placing second on the final throw of the day. Little also injured a shoulder in the district competition and it isn't clear just how competitive he can be. "It's been a great year for me, making All-State in football and qualifying for the region meet." Little has 10 throwers with better throws than his qualifying 50-11½. Amarillo High's Ken Watkins, who has been over 58-feet this year, is the favorite. This is also a Friday event.

Long Jump: Midland High's Braggston Morris was another surprise qualifier in this event, but he will have to go at least two-feet better than he has ever done to get out of Lubbock. Still, he has been a mainstay of the Bulldog track team this year. Says MHS coach Johnny Williams, "Morris has overcome a lot this year. He has asthma and he scares me to death sometimes. Sometimes I don't even know if he is breathing, but he has not missed one workout this year. I'm really proud of what he has done. The favorite is Greg Crenshaw of Forth Worth Eastern Hills, who has a 24-11 this year and ranked second in the state. This event is Saturday morning.

400 Relay: Midland High's sprint relay team seemed to come together late, but at the right time, earning this region berth with a second place 42.65 with Morris, Albert Ray, Anthony Burton and Dwane Roberts. However, coach Williams says, "just making the finals will be tough for us. I hope we can, but it will take at least a 42.5 or lower to do it." Wichita Falls Rider (40.91) and Odessa Permian (41.11) come in with the best times.

800: Lee's David Parkerson (1:56.15 this year) has a shot at getting out in this event, but it won't be easy. El Paso's Gilbert Contreras, who has a state best 1:51.54, is almost conceded as the winner with several, including Parkerson given the shot for second place.

MHS linksters tackle Region I

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

The Midland High golf team took a roller coaster ride through the four-week long District 4-5A golf tour. Up and down they went until finally, the tour was completed and the Bulldog golfers had nailed down a second place district finish and a berth in the Region I tournament Friday and Saturday at Lubbock's Meadowbrook Municipal Course.

As the cross-town Lee Rebels took a nose dive during the tour, the Bulldogs were also busy staggering through the lower echelon during the first half of the tour.

But a third week stop on their home course — Ranchland Hills Country Club — combined with some good weather, saw the MHS linksters in second place, poised to take over first place from San Angelo.

The Bulldogs could never quite overcome the dominance displayed by the Bobcat linksters, but their second place finish was good enough to advance them to the first round of postseason.

EIGHTH PLACE finishers in the pre-district Midland Inviational, the Bulldogs finished with a four-round district total of 1236 — one stroke behind San Angelo.

That the Bulldogs improved so much to finish in second was a story within itself. Two weeks earlier they had been mired in a slump 21 shots behind the leader. At Ranchland, though, the 'Dogs picked up nine strokes to move from fifth to second.

But considering second place was good for an appearance at regionals, head coach John Ford was satisfied.

"There's not one kid solely responsible for getting us where we're at," Ford said. "That's why we are where we're at. You can't just have one real good star. You have to have a complete team."

Mike Johnson is Midland High's No. 1 golfer, currently tied for team medalist honors with Mark Smith. Both seniors, Johnson is known for his iron game onto the green while Ford describes Smith as an all around player.

"Mark is just solid from green to tee," he said. "If he has a weak spot, I haven't seen it. Course conditions may give him a problem from time to time."

Smith finished the district tour with a 311 for an average of 78; Johnson led during the tour with a 305 for a 76 average. Both finished on the All-District squad for being among the Top 10 medalists.

Smith also boasts the low round of the year, a 71 in Del Rio prior to the opening of district play.

Ford describes senior Donnie Doan as the team's best scrambler, saying, "he gets out of trouble better than any kid on the team. Very dependable." Doan finished a stroke behind Smith in the district medalist race, shooting a 312, good enough for honorable mention on the All-District squad.

Fourth senior Ted Newman is described by Ford as being not only the team's best putter but also the longest driver. Newman finished in the Top 10 medalist race shooting a 310.

Kris Doan, the team's only junior, started off the tour on the MHS No. 2 team, but improved so much he was promoted to the top squad.

"He's real good off the tee," Ford said. "He also has a real good short game. Consistency is probably the best part of his game. He started off slow but came on strong in the end."

KRIS DOAN earned honorable mention All-District recognition with a four-round 316.

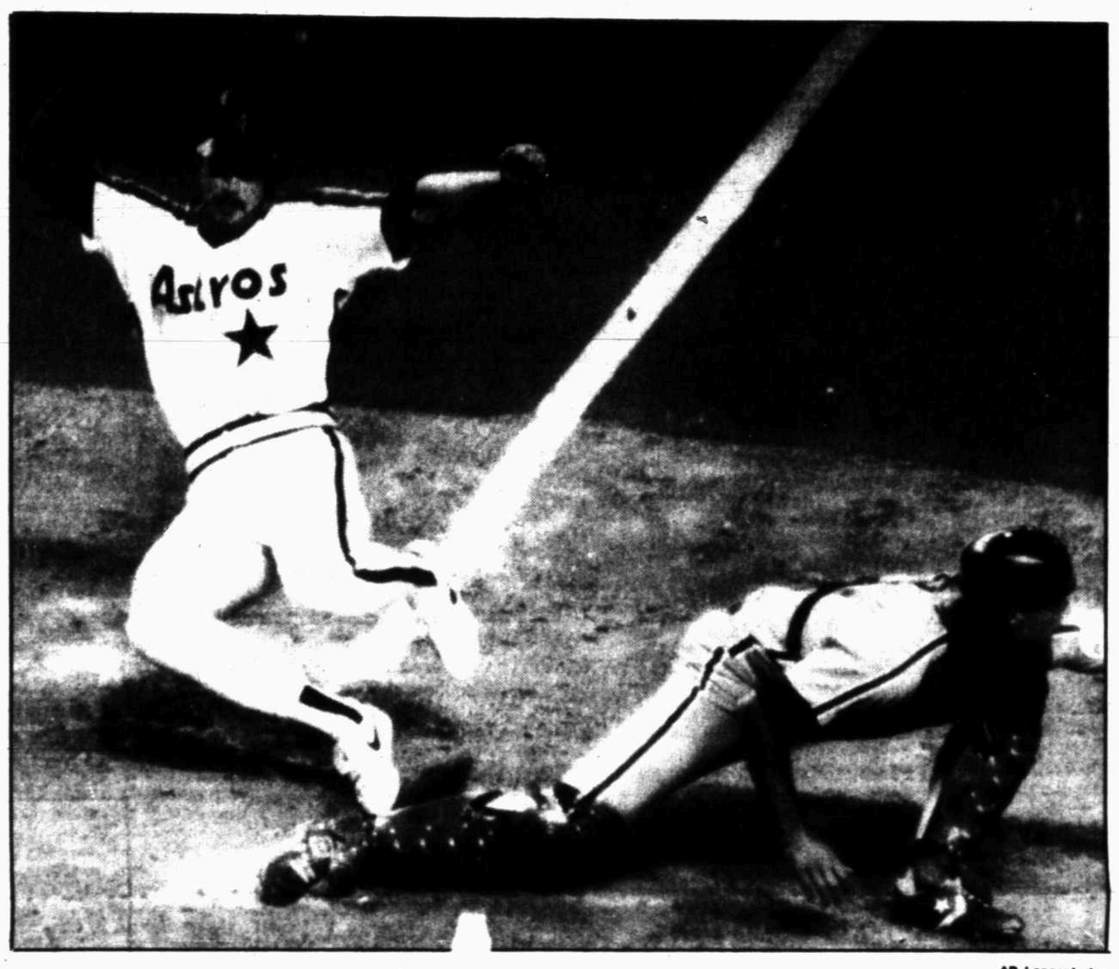

Midland High golfers competed in a dual match with Andrews last week, shooting a 308 on a course they had not seen this year. While Bulldog golfers are not familiar with the Meadowbrook course in Lubbock, they did play earlier in the year at the Austin course where the state finals will be held.

"We're starting to peak now," Ford said. "We're in the best position we've been in in a long time. The key to our game is to have all our kids manage the course. If we can get out of Lubbock we'll be doing well."

Ford lists Amarillo High and Denton High, along with San Angelo, as the teams the Bulldogs need to beat to make it to Austin.

The top two teams, along with the No. 1 and 2 individual finishers, in Lubbock will make the trip to Austin.

Odessa Permian's Ben Bangert and Abilene Cooper's Robert Joyner will compete at the regional tournament as District 4-5A's top two medalists.

Houston's Glenn Davis scores the winning run in the 10th inning in a 3-2 win over Philadelphia Wednesday, a game that saw Nolan Ryan lose a no-hitter in the ninth inning.

Ryan loses no-hitter in ninth

Associated Press

Nolan Ryan hasn't pitched a complete game in two years but that doesn't mean he can't pitch another no-hitter.

The amazing 41-year-old fireballer came within two outs of what would have been the sixth no-hitter of his record-breaking career, then dejectedly settled for a no-decision as the Astros beat the Philadelphia Phillies 3-2 Wednesday night.

"I'm disappointed," Ryan said. "It would have been my first complete game and shutout in quite a while. I don't even remember when my last one was (his last complete game was April 25, 1986).

"If I'd just lost a no-hitter and won the game I wouldn't have been disappointed. I let the lead get away, and I was one out away from winning the ballgame — a complete ballgame."

Ryan, who struck out nine, lost his no-hit bid when Mike Schmidt singled with one out in the ninth. With two out, Lance Parrish doubled home two unearned runs to tie the score. Ryan left for a pinch hitter in the bottom of the ninth.

In the Houston 10th, Glenn Davis singled with one out off reliever Kent Tekulve and went to third on Kevin Bass' hit-and-run single. Alan Ashby was intentionally walked to load the bases and Craig Reynolds batted for Chuck Jackson. He hit a grounder near second base which shortstop Steve Jeltz ran down but Davis easily beat his off-balance throw to the plate.

Houston's Nolan Ryan
...two outs too late

Ryan said he felt good about his no-hit bid in the eighth inning.

"In fact," he said, "I felt better about it in the eighth than I do now. I was concerned about Schmidt in that situation. I had thrown him a curve earlier in that situation, so I didn't think he would be expecting it.

"I was more disappointed with the Parrish hit than I was with Schmidt. I got behind and I tried to give him a pitch he wouldn't hit."

NL Roundup

Cardinals 2, Padres 1

Tom Brunansky hit his first National League home run and rookie Luis Alicea had a run-scoring single as St. Louis snapped San Diego's four-game winning streak.

Brunansky led off the fifth with a homer off Jimmy Jones, ending the Padres' shutout string at 37 innings. The Cardinals made it 2-0 in the seventh when Brunansky reached first on third baseman Randy Ready's throwing error, took second on a wild pitch and third on a groundout, then scored when Alicea bounced a single through a drawn-in infield.

Winner Bob Forsch took over for starter Greg Mathews, who left after three innings with a sore left shoulder. Forsch went 3⅓ innings, allowing just three hits and an unearned run, before needing help from Todd Worrell.

"When you come to a new ballclub and you're a power hitter, they expect you to hit home runs," Brunansky said. "I had driven in a couple of runs and I felt comfortable with that. But getting that first home run takes a lot of pressure off me. Now I can feel comfortable at the plate."

M-Angels finish trip with victory

From Staff Reports

WICHITA, Kan. — Midland Angel second baseman Jim Thomas gave relatives and friends something to cheer about with a three-for-five showing at the plate, two runs scored, two RBI and two stolen bases to lead the Midland Angels in a 7-6 Texas League win over the Wichita Pilots here Thursday.

The Angels, 2-3 on this week's trip to Wichita, return home to meet the Western Division-leading El Paso Diablos at 7 p.m. today in Angel Stadium. Tonight's game begins a 10-game homestand in which the Angels will entertain El Paso and Wichita.

Thomas, a Wichita Southeast High graduate who set an NCAA record for at-bats at Wichita State University in the early 1980s, led off the game with a single, stole second, reached third on a wild pitch, and scored on a groundout by Bill Geivett.

Thomas again singled to lead off the third, but was forced at second by Geivett. Dan Grunhard then singled, Tom Alfredson was hit by a pitch, and Jeff Manto singled to pull back into a tie for the league RBI lead.

The Angels broke the game open with four runs in the sixth inning on a one-out single by Jim McCollom, a walk to Mike Knapp, and back-to-back doubles by C.L. Penigar and Thomas. Penigar drove in what proved to be the deciding run with his first extra-base hit of the season, while Thomas drove in two insurance runs with his smash.

Thomas then stole third and scored on Geivett's sacrifice fly.

Angel starter Mike Fetters, 2-2, ran into problems in the fifth and sixth innings, but reliever Kurt Walker notched his third save with 2⅔ innings of one-hit relief.

The Pilots had the tying run at bat in the bottom of the ninth, but Walker fanned Jeff Yurtin to end the rally and the game.

Steve McGuire, 0-3, will start for the Angels in tonight's game against El Paso. The Diablos have used their league-leading .316 team batting average to forge a two-game lead over San Antonio and Wichita, while Midland sits four games back.

El Paso outfielder Mario Monico leads the league in hitting with a torrid .488, while Diablo teammates Greg Vaughn and Joe Mitchell are tied with Manto with a league-leading 20 RBI. Vaughn also leads in home runs with six.

Area track stars face big weekend

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Several area athletes may be on the phone making reservations for Austin after three separate Region I track meets in Odessa, Brownwood and Big Spring Friday and Saturday.

Big Spring's Brian Mayfield, who is no stranger to the state meet over the past three years, will try for a Region I triple in the 4A meet in Brownwood in the high jump, long jump and 1600 relay.

Rankin's Nicki Guyger, will even try to do Mayfield two better in the 2A meet in Big Spring when she goes for five state berths in the long jump, triple jump, high jump, 800 relay and sprint relay. Stanton's Kody Newman could be another 2A standout, going for state berths in the 100 and 200.

The Greenwood Rangers will try to send three athletes back to Austin when Kane Harris (800), Cheryl Martin (hurdles) and Denisa McMullan (long jump) compete in the 3A meet in Odessa.

Harris turned in a 1:57.2 in the 800 last weekend in the Wall qualifiers meet and placed fifth in the state last year with a 1:59. Martin was second in the state last year in the 100 hurdles and appears back on target this year. McMullan didn't place in the state long jump last year and would like another chance.

Andrews' has two athletes who appear to have an inside track on a state berth with Joe Don Finley in the discus and Kathleen Johnson in the shot put. Both are state ranked. Finley ranks No. 9 with a 181-9 while Johnson ranks No. 9 with a 41-6.

Rankin's Bruce Hooker has an excellent chance to earn a state berth in the pole vault after a qualifying leap of 13-8 and Big Spring's Charles White, in the 10.4 range, should have a battle with Monahans' Charles Thompson in the 100.

These are a few of the top ranked athletes vying for state berths, but the area is full of potential stars. The following is a list of the area's Region I qualifiers.

Class 4A in Brownwood

Today's Question: After facing Ted Williams in the All-Star game, he said he wasn't impressed and wished he were in the National League where he could face him more often. Name the pitcher.

Wednesday's Answer: Luis Arroyo, who won the Fireman of the Year award with the Yankees in 1961, used the screwball as his out pitch.

Orioles lose again

Associated Press

After 20 straight losses, there's plenty of blame to go around the Baltimore clubhouse. Manager Frank Robinson took responsibility for the latest defeat.

"I didn't do a good managing job in the eighth inning," Robinson said. "I just didn't put the right people out there at the right time. I'll take the blame tonight."

The winless Orioles tied an American League record Wednesday night with their 20th straight loss, falling 7-6 to the Minnesota Twins at the Metrodome.

With the score tied 4-4 in the eighth inning and one out, Larry Sheets singled.

With Keith Hughes at the plate and the count 2-2, Robinson put on an apparent hit-and-run. Sheets was thrown out by 10 feet at second base and Hughes struck out — end of rally.

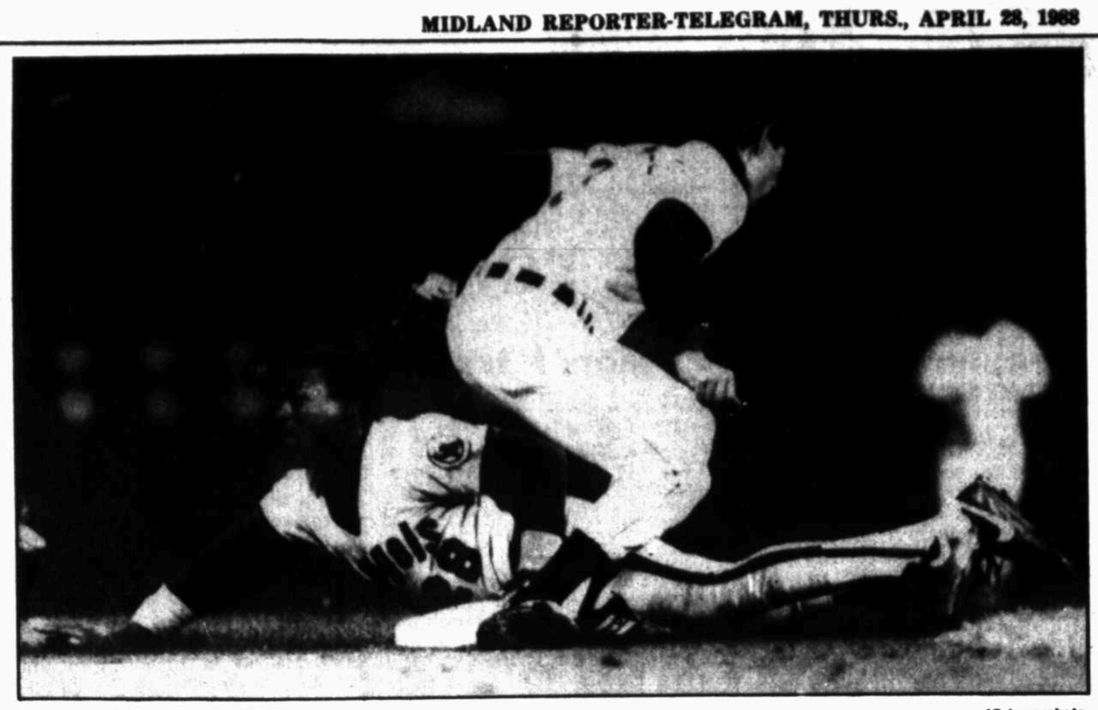

Sheets has three stolen bases in six attempts in his 288-game major-league career. On the bench at the time was Ken Gerhart, who has 128 stolen bases in the last five seasons of minor-league ball.

"This is a game of ups and downs and it alwasys will be," said shortstop Cal Ripken, who had two hits and two runs batted in.

Baltimore players stood in stunned silence in the eighth inning when Kent Hrbek and Tim Laudner broke a 4-4 tie with leadoff homers against reliever Bill Scherrer, 0-1. A walk, balk and throwing error by reliever Doug Sisk added another run.

The Orioles matched the AL record for consecutive losses set by Boston in 1906 and the Philadelphia Athletics in 1916 and 1943.

The modern major-league record is 23 straight by the Philadelphia Phillies in 1961.

Former Midland Angel Mark McLemore is caught stealing by Detroit's Alan Trammell during a 4-3 victory by California over the Tigers Wednesday night in Detroit.

Brewers 4, Rangers 3

Rob Deer broke a fifth-inning tie with a single as Milwaukee snapped a three-game losing streak at Arlington.

With the scored tied 2-2, Robin Yount hit a one-out double in the fifth and scored one out later on Deer's single. In the sixth, Joey Meyer hit his second home run of the season to make it 4-2.

Juan Nieves allowed seven hits in 7⅓ innings and Dale Sveum added a two-run homer for the Brewers.

Indians 6, Mariners 4

Willie Upshaw hit a three-run homer and Greg Swindell won his fifth straight game as streaking Cleveland beat visiting Seattle.

The Indians won for the 10th time in their last 12 games, and their 16-4 record matches the 1941 team for the best start in Cleveland history.

The victory tied Swindell with Oakland's Dave Stewart for the AL lead in victories, and his 5-0 start hasn't been equaled by a Cleveland starter since Jim "Mudcat" Grant won five to start the 1961 season.

Royals 3, Yankees 1

Kevin Seitzer singled in Kurt Stillwell with the tie-breaking run with one out in the 11th inning as Kansas City beat New York for the Royals' first victory in Yankee Stadium since 1986.

Kansas City last won in New York on Aug. 10, 1986, a 13-3 victory.

Tommy John, 44, shut out the Royals for 7⅓ innings on two hits before being relieved.

Athletics 5, Blue Jays 3

Don Baylor's run-scoring single snapped a sixth-inning tie as visiting Oakland defeated Toronto.

With the score 2-2, Dave Henderson doubled down the right-field line with two outs against starter Mike Flanagan and Baylor singled to left to put the Athletics ahead.

Angels 4, Tigers 3

Jack Howell drove in two runs with a triple and double as California beat Detroit at Tiger Stadium to snap a four-game losing streak.

Willie Fraser, 3-0, allowed three hits, and walked two batters in each of the first three innings. But he settled down and pitched 7⅓ innings, allowing five hits overall.

Mavs, Rockets start fireworks

Associated Press

Remember 1987.

Although not as enduring as "remember the Alamo" it will serve as inspiration for the Dallas Mavericks in the first round of the NBA playoffs beginning tonight.

The Mavericks host the Houston Rockets in a best-of-five series at Reunion Arena in the first playoff meeting between the two franchises.

"We remember how humiliating it was last summer," said Dallas guard Rolando Blackman. "We don't want to spend another summer answering questions of what happened."

Blackman was referring to the shocking first-round ouster of the Midwest Division champion Mavs by Seattle, a team it had swept during the regular season.

THE MAVS, who beat the Bill Fitch coached Rockets four times in six games this season, are being constantly reminded of what happened last year.

"We have the incentive to do better in the playoffs this time," said guard Derek Harper. "The loss to the Sonics was fluke. We'll show everybody that this year."

Mark Aguirre, the Mavs' leading scorer, admitted Dallas was overconfident last year.

"We figured there was no way we weren't going to meet the (Los Angeles) Lakers in the Western Conference finals," Aguirre said. "This year we're taking nothing for granted because we don't want to go through a humiliation like that ever again."

Dick Motta retired after the upset without ever saying why, but his feuds with Aguirre were well publicized.

Dallas won 53 games this season under new Coach John MacLeod.

However, Dallas lost a five and one-half game lead to eventual division champion Denver.

"It was a big disappointment but maybe this team needs to run a little scared," said MacLeod. "Maybe the team was too comfortable."

The Mavs won the season series from the Rockets for the fist time since 1983-1984. They beat Houston twice in The Summit after losing seven in a row there.

Dallas will have to slow down Akeem Olajuwon, who has averaged 26.5 points and 9.8 rebounds against the Mavs this year. For his career, Olajuwon is 24.4 and 10.5.

Despite Olajuwon's presence, the Mavs had 30 more rebounds than the Rockets in their season series.

The Utah-Portland game is one of the other threer NBA series openers tonight. Elsewhere, it's Washington at Detroit and Cleveland at Chicago. On Friday, Milwaukee is at Atlanta, New York at Boston, Seattle at Denver and San Antonio at the Los Angeles Lakers.

The fact that Portland won six more games than Utah and has the homecourt advantage in the first round of the NBA playoffs doesn't count for much with Trail Blazers Coach Mike Schuler.

"When you beat a team four out of five times, twice in their own place, you've got to be considered the favorite," Schuler said of the Jazz, who travel to Portland for tonight's opener of their best-of-5 series.

But Jazz Coach Frank Layden is just as adamant that Utah's 4-1 advantage over Portland this season and its 7-1 regular-season finish won't help his team.

"I think it's a lot of baloney," Layden said. "First of all, we're playing a team that won 53 games; that's no little feat. And when you get to the playoffs, the home team becomes a bigger factor.

"Regardless of what happened in the regular season, my feeling is they've got to have the edge."

THE BULLS, with eight more victories this season than Cleveland, remembers that the Cavaliers beat them Friday in a regular-season game.

"I think it gave them more confidence," Chicago Coach Doug Collins said of Cleveland's 107-103 victory. "But it probably sent a message to our guys, too — that this team is for real and we can't just walk in and beat them."

"We hope we can get off to a good start," said Michael Jordan, the NBA's scoring champion. "But we have to come out here and play, and not just relax because we're playing at home."

The Bulls are coming off their first 50-game winning season in 14 years, with a 50-32 record. Jordan won the NBA scoring title with a 35-point average, and Charles Oakley narrowly missed the league rebounding title despite grabbing 35 against the Cavaliers last week.

The Cavaliers finished 42-40, their best record in 10 seasons, but they probably won't be able to use Ron Harper, who sprained his right ankle in the victory over the Bulls Friday night. The 6-6 Harper, who averaged 15 points a game, had been assigned to guard Jordan.

Detroit, the Central Division champion, beat Washington three of five times in the regular season. Both the Pistons and Bullets depend on veterans, with Detroit led by Isiah Thomas, Adrian Dantley and Bill Laimbeer, while Washington has Moses Malone and Jeff Malone.

Minnesota Twins give Carlton unconditional release

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — If, as the Minnesota Twins say, Steve Carlton has reached the end of his career, how will he be remembered?

As a left-hander good enough to earn the nickname "Lefty" and four Cy Young Awards?

Or as a sullen star who stayed in the game too long and earned four pink slips in less than two years?

Carlton, 43, the winningest active pitcher in the major leagues, was released Wednesday by the Twins.

His earned run average was 16.76, bad enough to add three points to his 23-year career mark of 3.22. He was 0-1 this year, giving up nine runs in his only start, for a career record of 329-244.

His former teammate Jim Kaat, now a Twins broadcaster who had a 283-237 career record, will remember the pre-1985 Carlton.

"There was only one Lefty," said Kaat, a Philadelphia teammate from 1976-79. "He'll go down as one of the three greatest left-handers in baseball history, along with Sandy Koufax and Warren Spahn."

"The stats say he is one of the best ever," Twins pitching coach Dick Such said.

Twins general manager Andy MacPhail said he couldn't see much of the old Lefty this season. In 9⅔ innings, Carlton allowed 20 hits, 18 earned runs and five home runs.

MacPhail, eight years younger than Carlton, grew up watching the 6-foot-5 southpaw mow down hitters with his biting slider.

"It's never easy to release a baseball player, no matter who he is, but particularly someone with Hall of Fame credentials," MacPhail said. "It just didn't work out."

The defending World Series champions were 6-11 at the time of Carlton's release.

"We just felt we were running out of time," MacPhail said. "We needed to improve the club and we felt that going with younger arms was an answer."

The Twins' pitching staff, the lowest-ranked in the American League, still includes 43-year-old Joe Niekro and 37-year-old Bert Blyleven.

Carlton left the Metrodome soon after he was informed of the move and was unavailable for comment. He has had little to say during the second half of his career, when he received almost as many headlines for his refusal to talk to reporters as he did for being one of the stars of the game.

Giants 6, Pirates 4

Kevin Mitchell drove in three runs and Dave Dravecky scattered nine hits over eight innings as San Francisco ended a four-game losing streak and cooled off the Pirates, who had won four straight games and 12 of their last 14.

A throwing error by loser Doug Drabek on Brett Butler's third-inning bunt helped the Giants score the run that broke a 2-2 tie. Butler reached third and scored when Mitchell grounded out.

Expos 1, Reds 0

Pascual Perez pitched a two-hitter with 10 strikeouts for his first shutout since July 6, 1984. The only Cincinnati hits were a second-inning bloop single by Bo Diaz and Chris Sabo's smash with two out in the ninth which third baseman Tim Wallach knocked down.

Montreal scored off Mario Soto in the third inning when Tim Raines tripled and Hubie Brooks singled.

Dodgers 4, Cubs 0

Don Sutton earned his 322nd career victory with six scoreless innings and drove in a run with a suicide squeeze bunt. Sutton, in his 23rd major-league season, allowed four singles, struck out three and walked three.

He was lifted in the seventh inning after yielding a walk and Jody Davis' single. Alejandro Pena pitched three innings of two-hit ball for his second save.

Sutton's run-scoring bunt capped a two-run third inning that padded the Dodgers' lead to 3-0 against Jamie Moyer. Mike Devereaux drove in the first run of the inning with a single. Steve Sax led off the Dodgers' first with a single, stole second and third with one out and scored on Kirk Gibson's grounder.

Mets 5, Braves 2

Keith Hernandez tied the game with a two-run homer, Lenny Dykstra walked with the bases loaded and Mookie Wilson added a two-run single in a five-run ninth inning.

The Braves led 2-0 as Zane Smith scattered four hits over seven innings and Bruce Sutter pitched a hitless eighth. But Sutter left for a pinch hitter and Paul Assenmacher walked leadoff batter Tim Teufel in the ninth. Hernandez followed with his third home run of the season, all in the last two games here. Assenmacher retired Darryl Strwaberry, but Kevin McReynolds singled to deep short and went to third on a single by Gary Carter, who was thrown out trying for a double.

SMU's Bliss leading NM cage candidate

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist basketball coach Dave Bliss is a leading candidate for the head coaching job at the University of New Mexico, the Dallas Times Herald reported today.

New Mexico is searching for a head coach to replace Gary Colson, who resigned Tuesday.

The newspaper quoted sources close to the Lobos basketball program as saying Bliss and Purdue coach Gene Keady are the leading candidates.

"It's Bliss and Keady right now; they're the top choices," a source said. "Keady is the first choice, but (New Mexico) is also interested in Bliss."

Both Bliss and Keady said Wednesday they have not been contacted by New Mexico. SMU athletic director Doug Single said New Mexico has not asked for permission to speak to Bliss and Purdue athletic director George King would not comment.

FRIDAY, APRIL 29, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Use your charm to win the hearts of those who can open new doors for you. A financial bonanza is possible late this calendar year. Too much heavy emotion could scare off someone who would be the perfect romantic partner. Lighten up! Changes in your lifestyle please both family members and employer. A profitable business partnership could be forged in October.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: shortstop Rick Burleson, actress Celeste Holm, poet Rod McKuen, Japan's Emperor Hirohito, jazzman Duke Ellington, conductor Zubin Mehta.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Complete assignments on time and you could earn a nice bonus. Important relationships can be strengthened. Someone wants to confide in you; lend a sympathetic ear. Eat and exercise within moderation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Joint efforts to please higher-ups could fall short of the mark. Stick to solo projects. A compromise is the best solution to a sticky situation. Money could be at the root of disputes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be practical in your work and discreet about romance. New friends lead to new insights. Better eating habits will give you more energy. Make your home a happy place to be. Avoid squabbles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Go over savings and checking accounts, taking care of any mistakes you find. Tend to the needs of your loved ones. Attending a social gathering will benefit your career. Seek introductions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Move immediately on new offers. Disagreements could arise over dispersing funds. Compromise is the best solution. Trust your intuition about people and situations. Play your cards close to your chest.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Promote your own ideas, projects and talents. Someone you meet socially is interested in your business. Proceed with caution. A period of deprivation ends. Money arrives unexpectedly late in the day.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A long-distance move looms on the horizon. Consult mate before making a final decision. Stand your ground if others try to manipulate you. A romantic fling could lead to something more serious.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Take time to collect your thoughts before making an important presentation. Share the limelight only with the deserving. Your social life begins to shift into high gear. Dress to impress.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Short-term investments will work if you use your head. Seize a unique opportunity to connect with a major company. Write well-thought-out memos and letters, stating exactly what you mean.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A talent for speech-writing comes in handy today. Find an outlet for your tremendous physical energy. Do not underestimate the importance of details. Be more helpful to those in real need.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your career brings you new public recognition now. Let go of the past and your future will be rosier. Pay attention to all important communications. Avoid making a hasty personal decision.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Follow up meetings with telephone calls. Daily tasks go smoother than you expected. Delegating more responsibility will free you for creative work. Romance progresses nicely. Don't rock the boat.

Opening lead: Ten of ♠ Bridge players are only human—once in a while even the best don't reach the right contract, although you might have a hard time convincing them to admit it. But you have to prove they were wrong by beating them.

Four no trump is an inelegant contract—four hearts or five clubs (even slam!) would have been unbeatable. Had North wanted to make a slam try, a bid of four diamonds would have been the pundit's choice.

West led the ten of spades, and continued with the nine when declarer played low both from dummy and his hand. East topped dummy's jack with the queen, and declarer held off one more time. The crucial point of the hand had been reached.

Had East routinely continued with a spade, declarer would have coasted home. He would have discarded a diamond from dummy and then conceded a heart to East to set up the suit, thereby emerging with 10 tricks.

But sitting East was our colleague and many-time national champion, Tom Smith. He found a defense that is not easy to spot even if you are looking at all four hands. At trick three he shifted to a low club!

If declarer wins the trick in dummy, he must concede two red suit losers—one heart and one diamond. But it is as futile to rise with the ace of clubs and force out the king, discarding a diamond from the table. Since there is no spade in dummy to provide an entry back to the closed hand, East simply exits with a red-suit card and collects a heart trick for the one-trick set.

Sotheby's ticks off big prices as time goes by in sale of Warhol's collection

NEW YORK (AP) — Andy Warhol's plastic wristwatches of Fred Flintstone, Judy Jetson and Gumby reached $2,640 in a "wild" bidding war — $2,590 more than the timepieces cost the late artist in a department store, Sotheby's said.

Kitschy collectibles were only some of the objects on sale Wednesday during the fifth day of the 10-day auction of Warhol's possessions. There was also serious jewelry on the block.

American Indian art, including "no end of turquoise jewelry" was to be sold at today's auction, said Diana Brooks, president of Sotheby's North America.

So far, Warhol's collection has fetched $9,072,000, more than twice Sotheby's high estimate of $3,951,000. Only 37 out of some 1,400 lots have not sold, she said.

The highest bid Wednesday was $55,000 for a pair of surrealist ear clips by artist Salvador Dali, according to Ms. Brooks. The buyer, a private collector, was not identified.

The ear clips, asymmetrical ruby-studded hearts with a honeycomb center set with round diamonds, had a pre-sale estimated value of $10,000 to $15,000.

An 18-karat gold, garnet and diamond circular pendant, also by Dali, brought $47,300, Ms. Brooks said. The pendant, estimated at $7,500 to $10,000, depicted the profiles of Tristan and Isolde separated by a chalice.

The brightly-colored cartoon watches, made by Lewco, were decorated with raised, full-length figures of Fred and Dino, his pet dinosaur; Judy Jetson standing with hands on hips; and a smiling Gumby. Warhol bought them in 1985 and 1986 at Bloomingdale's, Ms. Brooks said.

In their original plastic packaging, the watches bore the original price tags of $20 and $10, she said.

"People were so wild to have the three plastic watches in the sale. They sort of symbolize the sale of the whole collection — something people will remember," she said.

The pre-sale estimate was $60 to $80 for all three. But in "wild bidding" that came down to a telephone contest between four people, the price climbed to $2,640, Ms. Brooks said. A private collector, who was not identified, won the bidding.

Bloomingdale's still sells the watches in some stores, said Miraed Smith, a store spokeswoman.

Another wristwatch that did well at the auction was a stainless steel piece, dated 1948, with a photo image of Gene Autry and signed "always your pal Gene Autry." Sotheby's estimated it would sell for $50 to $100 but it went for $1,870, Ms. Brooks said.

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Liberace seemed childlike two weeks before he died and was so ill he could barely speak and couldn't put on his glasses or read, let alone approve of changes in his will, said the nurse who cared for him.

Liberace

The flamboyant entertainer, who died Feb. 5, 1987, of AIDS-related complications, was a gaunt man who used what little energy he had left to smile at friends when they came to see him, Norma Gerber testified Wednesday.

"It was just the disease, it knocked everything out of him," said the nurse, who began caring for Liberace 13 days before his death and the day he named attorney Joel Strote as his executor.

"We would have miniature conversations but he could only speak in syllables," she said. "The motor coordination was going so he'd have difficulty speaking."

Her testimony contradicted that of Strote, who said the famed pianist sat at a table in his Palm Strings, Calif., home that day, talking with him and going over the estate papers before signing them.

Liberace's sister, his former manager, two housekeepers and a long-time friend, have filed suit to remove Strote as executor with full control of the estimated $20 million estate.

"He'd say yes to anything to please (at that point)," said Gerber. "He just wanted to please anyone and be left alone."

"He was so childlike he didn't know what he was saying," she said in describing the entertainer's dying days at his Palm Springs home.

According to provisions of the will made public Wednesday, three of the five received more in the death-bed will Strote drew up than in a will Liberace executed in 1982.

Under the revised will, Liberace gave $650,000 to his sister, Angie; $250,000 to his companion of seven years, Cary James; $60,000 to Seymour Heller, his manager for 37 years, and $5,000 to Dorothy McMahon, the housekeeper at his Palm Springs home.

He also left James two expensive cars and gave a house, furnishings and a car to the fifth plaintiff, Gladys Luckie, the housekeeper at his Las Vegas home.

James was not named in Liberace's previous will and Angie Liberace was to receive $450,000 under the 1982 document. Ms. Luckie, who had been given the right to live in one of Liberace's homes in the 1982 will, was given the house outright in the 1987 document.

Liberace also left $50,000 in trust to take care of his seven dogs, which he often referred to as his "babies."

Strote has said that he has received more than $400,000 in legal fees from the estate and the Liberace trust and is billing his services, including his time at the current trial, at $250 an hour.

In his fourth day of testimony Wednesday, Strote said $900,000 of the money owed the five plaintiffs had been set aside. Strote said he would seek to have the plaintiffs pay the extensive legal costs of the will litigation out of the $900,000 if the judge rules in his favor.

Douglas

LONDON (AP) — Oscar-winning actor Michael Douglas insists his marriage is intact, and suggests rumors that he and his wife, Diandra, are splitting may be an unhappy spinoff of his role as an adulterer in "Fatal Attraction."

Douglas, who recently won an Oscar for Best Actor for his latest movie "Wall Street," spoke to reporters Wednesday before a London premiere of the film, at which Princess Diana was a guest.

Asked if his marriage to Diandra, a 30-year-old model, was over as some reports have said, Douglas said, "It's not true and I really do not know how any of it got started.

"I suppose it was doing pictures like 'Fatal Attraction,' " a movie about how a family was thrown into crisis by the husband's adultery.

Asked whether he saw anything of his own personality in the character he played in the movie, he retorted, "How long have you been married? Do you fool around?"

When the reporter declined to answer, he went on to the next question.

TRACK——

Parkerson was upset in district by San Angelo's Jesse Fitchett and says, "that won't happen at the region meet." But Burns of Grand Prairie (1:56.90) and Arlington Sam Houston's Dan Hatfield (1:57.1) are major threats in addition to Fitchett.

110 High Hurdles: Lee's Jimmy Fennell, despite a near season long hamstring injury, is the clear favorite with his No. 8 state ranking of 13.78, run in district, being the only state-ranked runner. There could be a threat from Permian's Shawn Crow, but no one else is under 14 seconds. However, Fennell has had nothing but heartache at this meet. An injury kept him from the state meet last year when he strained foot ligaments at this meet. As a sophomore, and a member of Lee's mile relay team, an injury to teammate Kevin Witt kept Fennell from running. This year he hopes for the gold ring without controversy. "I think he's got a great chance this time around, but I hate to think about all the things of the past," said Lee coach Eddie Wolski.

100: Midland High's Dwane Roberts earned this berth in his first competitive 100. Due to his baseball committments, Roberts missed several weekend track meets. "We worked him mostly on the relay when he could practice with us, but he wanted to run the 100 at district and he was a pleasant surprise," said Williams. James Lincoln of Fort Worth Trimble Tech and Ron Jefferson of Lubbock Monterey both have 10.4s this year. Roberts has a 10.67 and will probably need a 10.5 to qualify for Saturday's finals. "We just don't really know if he can go that fast or not, but we'll see," added Williams.

300 Hurdles: Lee's Marcus Strambler has the second best time in the state with a 37.40 and is the favorite here, and he got a big break when Fort Worth Wyatt's Larry Sanders (37.69) didn't qualify out of his district. "Marcus has a lot going for him, but we're hoping for no wind because he is small. But the hurdles are in the lanes in Lubbock where he has done his best. He's got a great shot at going to state," said Wolski. No one in the Region I field is under 38 seconds.

1600: Parkerson (4:37.05) gets another chance at a state berth, but most feel he will go all out to qualify in the 800, which is considered his best event by far. Eight runners had better qualifying times than Parkerson in this event, but Greg Pickett of Richland is favored with a 4:25.01. Contreras (4:28.83) on a bad ankle two weeks ago could also win.

Girls

Shot Put: No one is state ranked in this event, but Midland High's Tracy Parker (40-9¾) appears to be the best and could be headed for Austin. "There are a lot of people who thought I couldn't do what I've done, but I feel like I'm going to Austin," said Parker. Another throw of 40-feet and she probably will have another trip on her hands.

3200: Midland High's Mayra Pina (12:40.58) is another surprise qualifier, but six runners have broken or neared the 11-minute barrier in the Region I field and 40 seconds of improvement almost seem too much for Pina to overcome. Pina, however, doesn't have to run in the preliminaries in this event, so she will be in Saturday's final, leaving her possibilities wide open.

400 Relay: Lee's Marcia Del Liano, Melody Miller, Jamelia Lott and Carrie Roach (50.16) have been hard to beat in West Texas, but they haven't faced Fort Worth Dunbar (47.19) or Trimble Tech (47.58). "We will have to be faster than we've ever been, but these girls have really been working hard and are convinced they can compete," said Lee coach Janice Baulch.

100: Lee's Melody Miller is ranked ninth in the state with a 11.67 this year, but unfortunately, is in the wrong event. Odessa High's Kasandra McDaniel, who Miller hasn't beaten, is ranked second with an 11.50 and Trimble Tech's Sonya Franklin has an 11.60. Duncanville's Sonja Graham isn't far behind with an 11.76. Miller will have to turn on the juice to get out of this fire. "I just run as hard as I can and whatever happens, happens," says Miller.

800 Relay: Lee's Roach, Lott, Shekeyshia Crisp and Miller have an outside shot of earning an Austin berth, but it could take some improvement of at least four seconds from the district time of 1:46.12 to be in the hunt. Duncanville is favored with a 1:39.98 while Fort Worth Dunbar has recorded a 1:40.55. "We have a chance here, but it will be close even if we put everything together just right," said Baulch. "We all think we can go faster than we have."

NOTE: Lee's Khristie Davis qualified for the Region I high jump, but will not partcipate due to another committment in music. Sherron Webster of Abilene (third place finisher in district) has been notified and will take Davis' place.

Spurs only team picked for winless playoff

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

Pairings and predictions for the best-of-five first-round NBA playoff series:

EASTERN CONFERENCE

No. 1 Boston against No. 8 New York — The Knicks are playing better than an eighth seed, having finished the season 24-16, but there's no way they can match the playoff experience and savvy of the veteran Celtics. Injuries can be a great equalizer, however. Larry Bird sat out the last two games of the season with a sprained ankle, and New York would have a chance if he hasn't recovered. Celtics in four.

No. 2 Detroit against No. 7 Washington — The Bullets played poorly in two of their last three regular-season games before putting it together for a playoff-clinching final game against Atlanta. Leading scorers Jeff Malone and Moses Malone have gone hot-and-cold throughout the season, while Detroit has one of the best home records in the NBA. Pistons in three.

No. 3 Chicago against No. 6 Cleveland — The Bulls, with Michael Jordan reaching a peak for the playoffs, won seven of their last eight road games and trailed only Boston and the Lakers in road victories. Cleveland also finished strong, breaking out of a five-team race for three playoff spots to finish sixth. The young Cavaliers figure to get lots of playoff experience in the future, but not this year. Bulls in four.

No. 4 Atlanta against No. 5 Milwaukee — Both teams struggled in April, but their solid play the rest of the season earned them higher positions than teams that finished stronger. The Hawks had hoped to get even with Detroit for beating them in the playoffs last year, but they will have to get past Boston first. Hawks in four.

WESTERN CONFERENCE

No. 1 Los Angeles Lakers against No. 8 San Antonio — The Spurs already have gone further than expected while they wait for the arrival of David Robinson. The Lakers are ready to begin their drive to become the first repeat champions since 1969. Lakers in three.

No. 2 Denver against No. 7 Seattle — From the same position, the SuperSonics upset Dallas a year ago and has the talent to do it again, especially with rookie Derrick McKey showing improvement late in the season. But Denver won 16 of its last 18 games to win the Midwest and should be able to hold off Seattle. Nuggets in five.

No. 3 Dallas against Houston — The Mavericks would have had a chance to get even with Seattle if Denver had lost three of its final 18 games, but the Nuggets' hot streak knocked Dallas into the third seeding position. Any kind of a letdown is dangerous against the Rockets and center Akeem Olajuwon, but the homecourt advantage should save the Mavericks. Mavericks in five.

No. 4 Portland against No. 5 Utah — The Trail Blazers run into a hot team in the Jazz, who have Karl Malone and assist champion John Stockton in peak form. Portland, with two of the most improved players in the league in Jerome Kersey and Kevin Duckworth, won't go down easy, but the Jazz are on a roll. Jazz in four.

Knight comment draws criticism

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Indiana University basketball Coach Bob Knight has a duty to the young people who idolize him to clarify his feelings about rape, an official in the school's women's affairs office says.

Knight has been the subject of criticism since a nationally televised interview Monday night in which he compared rape with handling stress.

"I think that if rape is inevitable, relax and enjoy it," the coach said when NBC correspondent Connie Chung asked him how he handled stress.

"That's just an old term that you're going to use. The plane's down, so you have no control over it," he added.

"I'm not talking about that, about the act of rape. Don't misinterpret me there. But what I'm talking about is, something happens to you, so you have to handle it — now."

Fire razes shantytown in Manila

AP Laserphoto

Residents train a fireman's hose on a house in an attempt to prevent the spread of a fire which had already destroyed more than 1,000 houses near a government-owned oil depot in Manila today.

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A fire described as the city's biggest since World War II swept through a crowded shantytown near an oil storage area today and destroyed more than 1,000 homes, the fire chief said.

At least four people were reported injured and thousands were believed to be homeless. No deaths were reported.

Firefighters concentrated on preventing the flames from reaching the oil tanks rather than on saving houses, and angry residents responded by pelting the trucks with stones. They piled their belongings in the street and began fighting the blaze themselves with buckets of water.

The flames spread to within 24 feet of the state-owned petroleum company compound, said Col. Oscar Pascual, deputy fire chief. Fire Chief Brig. Gen. Ernesto Madriaga said a shift in the winds prevented the fire from reaching it. Madriaga estimated that more than 1,000 dwellings, mostly squatter shanties, were razed before the fire was brought under control after 4½ hours. The cause of the blaze had not been determinesd.

"During the early stage, fire threatened the depot because there was a strong wind blowing in that direction," he said. "However, wind direction changed and the fire near the depot was placed under control."

There was no immediate estimate of damage. But Madriaga said the blaze was "possibly the biggest in Manila since World War II."

He said flames destroyed a candy warehouse and virtually every building in a 25-acre area along the Pasig River, which runs through the heart of Manila.

Oil companies such as Shell, Caltex and the state-run Philippine National Oil Co. maintain storage tanks in the area. The presidential palace is about 1½ miles away on the other side of the river.

Firemen said they were unable to move trucks into the crowded shantytown alleys and concentrated their efforts on keeping the fire from the oil tanks.

Troops armed with M-16 rifles were sent to the depot after the residents began throwing stones at the fire trucks.

Madriaga said the injured included three civilians and a fireman who was struck by a water hose.

As the fire raged, residents piled their belongings, including clothing, furniture and refrigerators, into the street and fought the blaze with buckets of water.

Shanty homes in the Philippines are normally made of wood, cardboard and other flammable materials and are packed side-by-side.

"We call on the people to be careful," Madriaga said in a radio broadcast. "Even small things can cause a lot of damage. For example, a matchstick that is not handled properly can cause millions in damages."

Mary Bayani, 27, whose home was destroyed, said she was attending a Bible study class about 3 p.m. (2 a.m. CDT) when she heard children shouting "Fire! Fire!"

She said the smoke seemed "far away, but we started just the same bringing our things out."

"I saved our clothes and some kitchen utensils," she said. "But we have no rice and no money."

Arab strike shuts down east Jerusalem

JERUSALEM (AP) — A protest strike virtually shut down Arab east Jerusalem and cities in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip today despite Israeli claims that the 5-month-old Palestinian uprising was waning.

In the West Bank city of Hebron, Israeli troops shot and wounded an Arab protester after 100 Palestinians burned tires and chanted slogans outside City Hall, Arab witnesses said. They called on the Israeli-appointed mayor, Abdel Majid Zir, to resign.

Soldiers wounded another Palestinian in Abwein, near Ramallah, after villagers blocked the road with rocks and burning tires, then pelted soldiers with stones and empty bottles, according to Arab reports.

The army confirmed the casualties and said it was investigating the circumstances.

In Jerusalem, an official of the International Committee of the Red Cross met with Foreign Minister Shimon Peres to protest Israeli measures for quelling the unrest, including deportations, administrative detentions and house demolitions.

A U.N. official, meanwhile, said Israeli troops and their Christian allies fired sporadic machine gun and artillery rounds into guerrilla-controlled areas of southern Lebanon overnight. They used flares to illuminate the area.

Israeli soldiers and Christian militiamen set up roadblocks and questioned hundreds of Lebanese villagers as they searched for collaborators with Palestinian guerrillas, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Following two infiltrations by Arab guerrillas, Prime Minister Minister Yitzhak Shamir said on Wednesday that guerrillas were trying to mount a spectacular attack on Israel because the uprising was "petering out."

Today, however, east Jerusalem streets were deserted in response to a strike call by uprising leaders. Even fruit and vegetable vendors, normally active during strikes, had closed.

In the Gaza Strip, young Palestinians whose faces were masked with checkered Arab scarves stopped cars to ensure workers did not go to jobs in Israel, according to Arab reports.

Wrecked cars and huge rocks blocked roadways in the West Bank town of Bethlehem and oil was spread on some streets to discourage drivers. Bethlehem's Manger Square, normally busy with traffic and vendors, was nearly empty.

An Arab reporter noted that even bakeries were shut in Nablus, the West Bank's largest city.

A Foreign Ministry official said Andre Pasquier, the Red Cross' director of operations, expressed the Swiss agency's concern, and that Peres defended the policies as "totally justified."

Israel has deported 20 Palestinians to Lebanon since the start of the Arab uprising last Dec. 8 and has detained 4,900 Palestinians by its own count. Israeli soldiers have killed 174 Arabs, and two Israelis have been killed, according to U.N. figures.

Protesters and Israeli soldiers clashed twice on Wednesday evening after. Moslems ended the sunrise-to-sunset fast that is kept daily during the holy month of Ramadan, according to reports.

Jewish settlers and Israel radio reported that Arab residents in Hebron stood on roofs and shouted "Slaughter the Jews!"

Israelis use Arabic term for 'uprising'

JERUSALEM (AP) — Many Israelis are using the Arabic word "intefadah," or uprising, to describe the violent protests in the occupied lands, and Jewish and Arab observers say the new terminology reflects a new attitude.

"It's an acceptance of the fact that we're not just talking about scattered disturbances, but a struggle against the occupation that involves everybody," said Palestinian editor Khaled Abu Aker.

When Palestinian unrest began in the West Bank and Gaza Strip on Dec. 8, Israeli journalists and army officials referred to the clashes between Arab protesters and Israeli troops as "disturbances."

Such language reflected the initial Israeli perception that only a few activists, incited by outsiders, were involved in the protests, while the majority of the Palestinians remained passive.

But in the last few weeks, more and more Israelis, including politicians and journalists, have spoken about "intefadah" when describing the protests in which more than 170 Arabs and two Israelis have been killed.

In his Independence Day address to Arab residents last week, President Chaim Herzog urged Palestinians to end the "intefadah" and said they must realize they are being misled by their leaders.

A recent routine news item on Israel's armed forces radio read: "Since the start of the intefadah, shopkeepers in east Jerusalem have usually opened their shops for several hours in the afternoon."

"It's now part of the jargon. Everybody knows what intefadah means," said Israeli journalist Joel Greenberg.

"The fact that they are using the Palestinian term means they are accepting the Palestinian definition," added Greenberg, the West Bank correspondent for the English-language Jerusalem Post newspaper.

Abu Aker, an editor at the pro-PLO newspaper Al-Fajr, noted that in the first few weeks of the uprising, the Israeli censor routinely blue-penciled the word "intefadah" in his articles.

"About three months ago, they began to accept the word, and we now use it all the time," he said.

Ethiopian government accused of bombing food center

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Government warplanes bombed a food relief station in drought-stricken northern Ethiopia and killed at least 50 people after the area fell into rebel hands, two Western sources said.

But the sources disputed a claim by the rebel Tigre People's Liberation Front that the government used napalm in the April 8 attack near Wukro in Tigre province.

The guerrilla group said 31 people, mostly children, were killed or wounded in the bombing, which hit a kindergarten.

But the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity Wednesday night, said at least 50 people were killed and many more wounded in the attack, which occurred at a food distribution center run by the Geneva-based International Committee of the Red Cross.

A Red Cross representative was at Wukro the day of the attack, but left before the attack, the sources said. They said the warplanes stuck about 30 minutes after monthly food allotments had been distributed to 5,000 to 8,000 peasants, and that thousands of drought victims were milling about.

"That's why so many people were killed," said one of the sources, who quoted eyewitnesses who said the attack on the civilians was intentional.

"They flew over and looked at them and came back and hit them," said the source.

Neither of the sources could say how many bombs were dropped or what type of aircraft were used in the attack. The Ethiopian military normally uses Soviet-made MiG figthers.

Wukro came under rebel control in mid-March. During the same time, rebels operating in neighboring Eritrea, Ethiopia's northernmost province, also scored major victories.

Government troops retreated to the major towns in the two provinces, but officials have said a major campaign is planned soon against the rebel movements.

The government pullback and the April 6 expulsion of foreign aid workers from the north has severely crippled the effort to save more than 3 million northern Ethiopians from starvation.

The government said it ordered foreigners out of the north .

WORLD IN BRIEF

Duarte's offer turned down

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A contender for the presidential nomination of the governing Christian Democratic Party rejected President Jose Napoleon Duarte's suggestion he abandon the race for the sake of party unity.

Julio Rey Prendes said Wednesday that he would continue to seek the nomination for the March 1989 elections. The party's nominating convention, which Rey is thought to control, is scheduled for Friday.

Duarte is limited by law to one five-year term.

In a broadcast message Tuesday night, Duarte urged Rey and archrival Fidel Chavez Mena to step aside in the name of party unity. Duarte suggested the party close ranks around a third candidate, Abraham Rodriguez.

Rey said the convention was the only legal mechanism for deciding the Christian Democratic candidacy. He referred to Duarte as "one member of the party."

Parents donate $250,000

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The parents of an American killed by Contra rebels a year ago presented the government Wednesday with $250,000 in donations to continue the development project on which their son had worked.

Benjamin Linder, an electrical engineer from Portland, Ore., was killed along with six Nicaraguans on April 28, 1987, when rebels attacked the small town of El Cua in northern Jinotega province.

Linder had been helping in the construction of a small hydroelectric plant.

The check for $250,000 was delivered by his parents, David and Elizabeth Linder, to Edwin Zablah, director of the Cesar Augusto Sandino Foundation, a government agency which handles financing of rural projects.

The Linders, accompanied by their children David and Miriam, were scheduled to travel to Matagalpa, about 100 miles north of Managua, today for a ceremony in the cemetery where Benjamin is buried.

Laos crash site probed

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — American military experts have inspected the wreckage of a downed aircraft in Laos and plan to search for remains of missing Americans, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said Wednesday.

The Americans returned to Bangkok Tuesday after the preliminary survey of the crash site in Savannakhet province, said embassy spokesman Ross Petzing. Other U.S. experts will join them in a few days to begin the excavation, he said.

Vietnamese remain sold on decades-old U.S. equipment

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam (NYT) — Want to find an American product endorsed with enthusiasm in Asia? Come to Vietnam.

All over the country the Vietnamese are making do with decades-old equipment manufactured in the United States, and they never pass up the opportunity to tell a visiting American how durable and well designed these products have proved to be.

Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D., was given an impromptu demonstration when he recently visited a farming village in the Mekong Delta, near the town of My Tho. As a young Army officer in the mid-1960s, Pressler had been involved in a U.S. aid project that provided small American water pumps for irrigation.

Pham Van Sau, a 40-year-old farmer, was using one of those pumps, a small model made by the Kohler Co. of Kohler, Wis. Twenty years ago it was worth less than $50. Sau said he had bought his, second-hand, eight years ago for about $60 in gold. It still works fine — although the fuel system is now a soda bottle and plastic tube, and the frame supporting the motor and water pipe is a locally crafted Rube Goldberg contraption.

So valuable were these small Kohler pumps, Vietnamese say, that the Vietcong stole them to power boats. When the war ended with the defeat of Saigon, most of the pumps went north, where they became part of not just village life but also the Vietnamese vocabulary. Cole (pronounced KO-lay) is now a generic word for pump.

When Pressler asked Sau what his pump was worth now, the farmer misinterpreted the question and answered quickly, "It's not for sale."

On agricultural land all over south and central Vietnam, vintage John Deere and Massey-Ferguson tractors are in use. Dodge and International Harvester trucks are the backbone of commercial hauling.

Old De Soto buses are so highly regarded, one driver said, that "some people paint that name on the vehicles even when they aren't De Sotos." Vietnamese are often surprised and incredulous when told that American products have trouble competing with their Japanese counterparts.

In the remote central highlands settlement of Nam Ban — known popularly as New Hanoi because northerners have been moved there to colonize virgin land — a couple of Ford Club Wagons are the only transportation capable of handling the unpaved roads.

Vietnamese cannot buy spare parts or new American goods because of a U.S. embargo and a lack of hard currency. At Nam Ban, the Ford vans are held together by improvisation.

I HEARD A MEADOWLARK
as I exited one of the most "beautymus" new homes I have ever seen! Look at that lovely wallpaper, the "whisper gray" walls, those moldings, ceilings like you have never seen, the double fireplace, the large marble tub, a kitchen complete w/appliances including double oven and Jen-air, the ½ bath in the utility room, the water circulating system on the hot water heater, security alarm, and the view out to the expansive greenness at the back side. "Soon to be old" folks would love the little yard maintenance & so would anyone who prefers to do something besides yard work - such as being out on the greens at Green Tree North!
