TEC office can attest to area's hard times

ODESSA (AP) — When oil prices started dropping and producers stopped drilling, the roughnecks lost their jobs first. Then banks suffered. Then people bought less merchandise in retail stores, and the problem got bigger and bigger.

Evidence of the problems the oil price drop has caused can be seen in the Texas Employment Commission office in Odessa, where many oilfield workers live.

One such worker, L.A. Richards, said he'd worked in the oil fields since he was 15, when he got his first job by lying about his age.

Friday, the 29-year-old driller became one of 1,543 people to file for unemployment benefits in February at the Odessa office, almost four times as many as the 403 people who filed in February 1985, the TEC reported.

"You grow up in the oil field and it's what you've always done. It's hard to figure out what else to do," Richards said. "I'll find something."

Richards said he's seen slack times in the oilfields before, and is confident the industry will come back. He said he won't look elsewhere for work.

"I'm not going nowhere. I like it here," he said.

Many others want to stay, too — so many that the commission is now processing claims in groups of up to 50 at a time. Formerly, the commission set half-hour appointments with unemployed workers, said Ron Norris, commission area manager.

"We will have a problem real soon with space constraints," Norris said, adding it might be necessary to expand a room or find another room in which people can file their claims.

"It's probably going to get a lot worse...the oil field's shut down and it's just rippling," Norris said. "You start with the blue collar, which Odessa's got a lot of...it's rippled into the banks, it's rippled into the retailers."

Albert Hernandez, 31, another oilfield worker at the commission office, said, "They're just rigging down the rigs. It'll get better. They say two more months."

Gene Richardson, TEC unemployment supervisor, said that there usually are more layoffs in January than in February, because temporary workers hired during the Christmas shopping season are laid off then. But February has seen more than double the 747 claims filed in January.

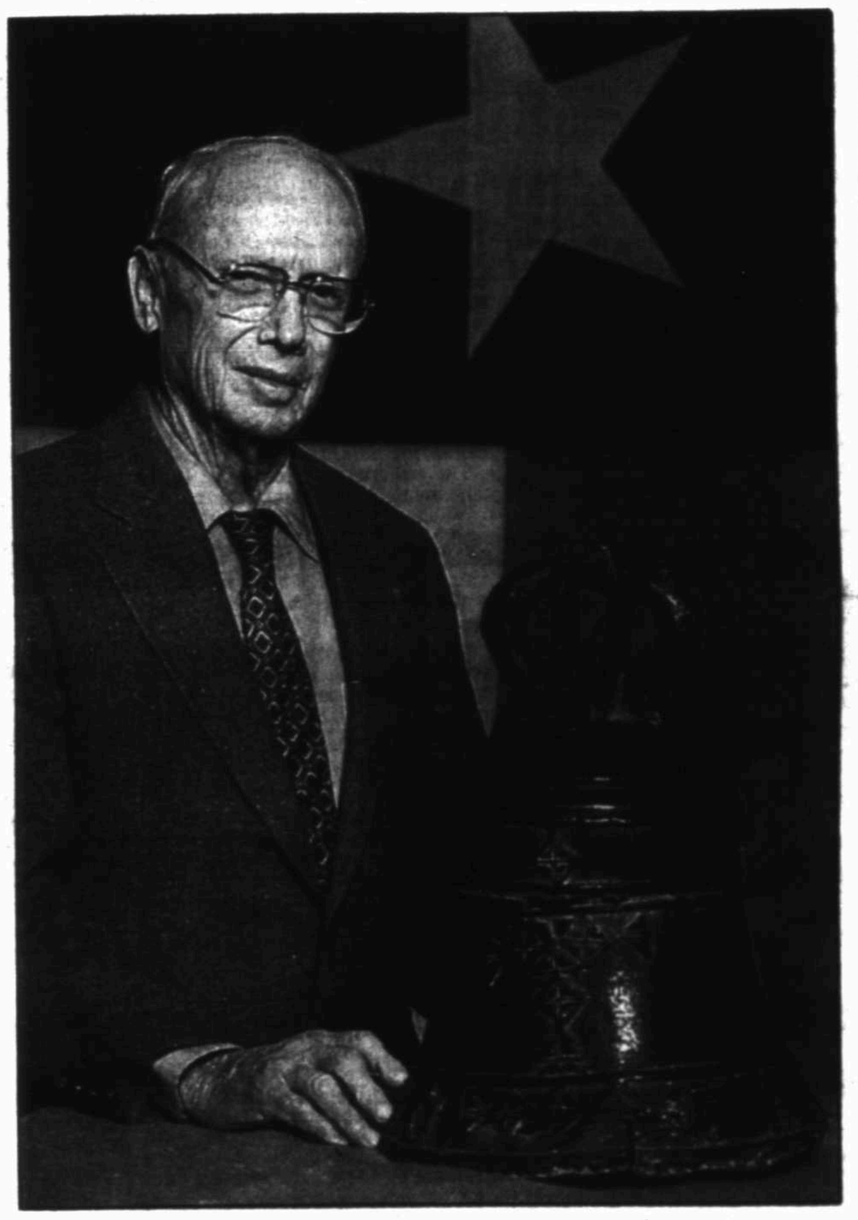

"We're having a steady increase, almost expotential," Richardson said. Most of those laid off in February were roughnecks, he said.

"They don't come in every time a rig's stacked, but when they don't think they're going back for a while they do come in," he observed.

"The difference I can see now is, we're having people walk in and file a claim that never filed a claim in their life," Richardson said.

The unemployment supervisor recalled some years in which days passed between people filing unemployment claims.

"The times are not normal," he said.

Haley says it's 'funny' how Alamo Bell got to Midland

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

It wasn't hanging at the mission that fateful day in March 1836. But it did ring out during the early days of colonization by the adventurers. Just as the Liberty Bell is remembered in connection with this country's independence, the Alamo Bell symbolizes the spirit and freedom of Texas' early settlers.

Broken and no longer able to ring, the 164-year-old Alamo Bell remains on display at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave., under a plexiglass cover. And the story of how it came to Midland, instead of to a resting place in San Antonio, is a tale of independent-minded men who typify the spirit which brought people to Midland and kept them here throughout the history of economic Alamos.

J. Evetts Haley laughs when he talks about how the Alamo Bell found the road to Midland. He played no part in paving that road, although he did assist in helping others to pay for it.

Swedes heap flowers on spot where Palme slain

Palme

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Mourning citizens heaped flowers Saturday on the bloodstained cobblestone sidewalk where socialist Prime Minister Olof Palme was assassinated, and police scoured the nation for the killer.

Police had reported earlier that Palme's widow Lisbet — who was grazed by the single 9mm bullet that fatally wounded her husband late Friday night — said she thought she had seen the killer before, but could not recall the circumstances.

But police Superintendent Kenneth Karlsson said Saturday night, "She has not reported that she in any way knew the man" or that he resembled anyone she had met.

He said Mrs. Palme, 55, told investigators she was walking arm-in-arm with her husband when she heard one or two "bangs" and turned to say something about them, thinking children were playing with firecrackers.

Karlsson reported Mrs. Palme said that as she turned, her husband was falling to the sidewalk, bleeding heavily from the chest, and she got only a brief glance at the killer as he ran from the scene.

Police said they were investigating an anonymous telephone call to an international news agency in London saying West German terrorists killed the 59-year-old Palme, who was serving his fourth term as prime minister since 1969.

National Police Chief Holger Romander said of the call, "Of course we take it seriously but we cannot believe in all declarations like that."

Swedish Radio said Saturday that Stockholm subway system employees had found a bag containing a dark jacket and pants and turned them over to police. Palme's assailant was initially described as wearing dark clothing. A police spokesman was quoted by the broadcast as saying the find was "potentially interesting."

More than 10,000 Swedes gathered Saturday in a central Stockholm square for a candlelight memorial service for the flamboyant, caustic politician, one of Western Europe's leading socialists and best-known advocates of disarmament.

Aquino retires 22 generals

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino retired 22 generals and pushed for the release of additional political prisoners Saturday as more exiles returned to support her fledgling government.

Four days after she was swept to power by a nearly bloodless "people power" revolution, Mrs. Aquino was running the government from an office building as soldiers cleared booby traps from the presidential palace.

The government's Philippine News Agency said that by Saturday, soldiers had neutralized 18 landmines planted by troops loyal to then-President Ferdinand E. Marcos' on the banks of the Pasig River behind the palace.

Army men also hauled away six truckloads of hand grenades, mortar shells and other ammunition, the agency said.

The military said it seized scores of automatic firearms in abandoned homes of two Marcos children and in two establishments owned by business tycoon Eduardo Cojuangco, who joined the Marcoses in their flight to the United States.

Heading the list of generals retired by Mrs. Aquino on recommendation of armed forces chief Gen. Fidel V. Ramos and Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile was former military chief Gen. Fabian C. Ver, who joined Marcos in exile.

The generals, including the former heads of the army, navy and air force, were overdue for retirement, but Marcos refused to let them go.

Couple became engaged on radio, will be wed live on station KBAT

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Ken Welch and Barbra Mullis may not be married to rock 'n roll music, but they're getting married because of it.

On Dec. 20, 1985, KBAT radio asked listeners what they were wishing for Christmas. Welch called in and wished Ms. Mullis would marry him; she called and said "yes" and now the wedding will be aired live at 4 p.m. March 15 from the studio at 3306 Andrews Highway.

For the morning team of Dave Conway and Mark Lapidus, the Bat Flight show had started off normal. The duo dreams up reasons for listeners to call in during the show, and that morning the idea of asking people what they wanted for Christmas was the theme.

They were getting the usual assortment of wishes, said Lapidus, "a car, a VCR, a divorce."

Welch, 21, is employed by Oil Center Research and was on his way to Odessa that morning when he heard the request for Christmas wishes ring out over the radio from the ebullient morning team. "I just thought I'd reach out and touch someone," he said jokingly. Welch, a native of Tarzan, stopped at Dingler's Exxon on the corner of Midkiff and Midland Drive and called KBAT from a pay phone.

Identifying himself as Ken, the caller said, "I have a Christmas wish. I want Barbra Mullis to marry me."

It caught the morning team off guard. Taping each call before airing it, the two decided Ken might be serious.

Meanwhile, Welch had called Ms. Mullis, 19, at Fina Oil and Chemical and told her to listen to KBAT.

"I didn't know what he meant," she said. "I thought he had won something." She finished her work and then remembered to turn on the radio. It wasn't long before they aired the request.

Meanwhile, Lapidus and Conway sat there "breathless for 25 minutes waiting for a reply."

"We thought it might be a hoax," said Conway.

But then the phone rang and the voice said, "This is Barbra Mullis."

"What's your answer," the morning team asked.

"Yes," came the quiet reply.

Industry Minister Thage Peterson, surrounded by red banners of the Social Democratic Party, told the assemblage, "All Palme did was to walk as a free man in the streets, every man's right."

Sweden's flag, a yellow cross on a blue field, was lowered to half-staff and Stockholm church bells rang in mourning under a crisp and clear winter sky.

Leaders of the governing Social Democratic Party, which has been in power almost continuously since 1932, met in emergency session and nominated Deputy Prime Minister Ingvar Carisson as new party leader and prime minister.

Carisson, 51, a veteran politician little known outside Sweden, automatically heads a caretaker government until Parliament, called the Riksdag, meets this week to vote on Carisson's nomination. Approval was virtually certain.

Palme and his wife had gone to a new movie, "The Brothers Mozart," Friday night and were walking along a snowy sidewalk in central Stockholm when a man wearing a blue jacket and a hat with earflaps shot him once in the back at 11:20 p.m. Palme had dismissed his bodyguards earlier in the day.

Police described the gunman as 35 to 40 years old, about 5-foot-7.

Two teen-age girls said on television that they and a third person, a man, tried to give Palme first aid. One girl, 17-year-old Karin Johansson, said the assailant had dark hair. "He was alone and he ran very fast," she said.

Palme was taken to a hospital, where he was pronounced dead on an operating table at 12:06 a.m. Saturday.

A large pool of blood marked the spot where Palme fell, in front of an artists' supply shop. The blood was covered Saturday by mounds of flowers piled there by Swedes.

A banner hung on a nearby wall read, "Why murder a true democrat?"

Hundreds of people remained gathered at the spot throughout Saturday, and police estimated that about 300 people filed each hour into the main government building to sign a remembrance book.

"We just felt we had to come here, it seemed the right thing to do, to honor Sweden's great statesman," Ingela Benn said, choking back tears as she waited on line to sign the book.

Tributes to Palme poured in Saturday from throughout the world, from every political spectrum.

Social Democratic officials said Palme would be buried March 15 after a memorial service in the Great Church, the resting place of Swedish kings.

Palme was killed blocks from the site where King Gustaf III was shot to death in 1792, the last Swedish leader to meet a violent death.

Palme's killing appeared likely to shatter the relaxed political tradition that had developed over centuries in Sweden.

King Carl XVI Gustaf, rushing back to the capital from a skiing holiday, called the slaying "a blow to the open society Palme always worked for."

"The meaningless violence will forever cast its shadow over our political life," said Palme's chief political opponent, Moderate Party leader Ulf Adelsohn.

The Social Democratic speaker of Parliament, Ingemund Bengtsson, warned that if the killer turned out to be a foreigner, racial prejudice could be stirred up against emigrants to traditionally open Sweden.

"If it's a crackpot it's, well, all right," he told the national news agency TT. "But if it's an organization behind it, it's extremely serious, especially if the perpetrator is not Swedish. Then the hate against immigrants would be awful."

BELL

It was one of those warm spring evenings — much like the recent balmy weather — in 1974 when five Midland men were capping off the work day at a local watering hole. Haley's son, Evetts Haley Jr., and nephew, John Haley, were among the group. The others were Ray Whiteside, Don L. Bradshaw and J. Ray Stewart.

All the men were collectors of one thing or another, and it was Whiteside who brought up the Alamo Bell.

"Ray said he knew of the rarest thing in collecting and the other men asked for another drink," said Haley. "Whiteside was a trader of oil leases and a pretty good one."

THE EVENING slipped into nighttime, the drinks kept coming and the boldness grew. The word was, related Whiteside, the Alamo Bell was being sold to a collector in Nashville, Tenn. "It was a matter of sacrilege to these men for the bell to be taken out of Texas, especially when the spirits were moving them," Haley joked.

But the men weren't joking when each decided to pledge $25,000 — a total of $125,000 — to buy that bell, and they shortly thereafter soberly signed the notes at the bank. "Only two of them could afford it," said Haley. "Now that's nerve."

When his son related what had happened, "I just shook my head. I thought it was funny but my name wasn't on that note."

By this time the five Midland men were in the same situation as those 182 men who barricaded themselves inside the Alamo — it was too late to change their minds.

Haley, a noted historian, was asked to help these men out of their predicament. A bronze replica of the bell along with a leather-bound copy of Haley's book titled, "The Alamo Mission Bell," was sold in a limited edition to 85 buyers to pay off the notes.

The story of the bell's trail to Midland "is funny," he said, but the history of it "is damn significant."

THE BRONZE BELL, according to Haley, was cast in 1722 in Spain for the mission set up at Mission San Antonio de Valero, also known as the Alamo. "This bell had for a long time sounded the sacred vespers, calling the faithful to prayer and confession, at that hallowed mission, no matter anyone's religion, which had become the cradle of Texas independence and freedom — the Alamo," wrote Haley in his book.

This bell, he continued, was "sanctified by the blood and tragic memories of the birth of the Republic."

Although its history is somewhat fragmented, Haley wrote that the bell was being taken to a mission at Refugio when the cart carrying it broke down and the bell was left beside the road near the San Antonio River. Eventually, a passing horsemen found it a good weight for staking his mount. "But the bronc stampeded, dragging the bell for miles, cracking it badly and breaking away its thin-lipped rim."

In 1900, the bell was found on a scrap pile and taken to a junk dealer named Moses Oppenheimer, wrote Haley. From there it went to Adina de Zavala, a descendant of a San Antonio pioneer family, and then on to Bessie Lee Fitzhugh. Again, it went to an antiques dealer who then sold it to the Nashville collector.

The battered bell reflects the crude methods of bell-making in the early 1700s. On one side are the uneven numerals: 1722. On the other, a Spanish cross.

The men who fought for the Alamo "knew they were going to die," said Haley of the fight against the Mexican leader Santa Anna and his thousands of trained men. "They had no way of escaping" the bloody battle that ended by 7 a.m. on March 6, a Sunday morning.

"THE TEXANS WERE just a wild bunch of free-lancers while the Mexicans had an organized army. They were free men. There was no way you could have drafted or forced them into the Alamo. They did it of their own free will. They just chose to die because they believed in something...in standing for what they thought was right. That belief is translated into a moral, spiritual and patriotic course that motivated Texas toward independence," said Haley.

Without the battle at the Alamo, independence would have come to Texas, but not as quickly, he said. It was the massacre at the Alamo that spurred others to join the fight.

"There was a tremendous motivation among these people to stand and die," he said. "It's difficult for people of a more sophisticated age to appreciate it or understand it."

The Alamo Bell not only signifies the place where independence took root in Texas, but it symbolizes tradition. "That's what holds us true to our course and our ideals. (The men) couldn't change their minds or turn back. Individually, their course was set, come death, hell or high water."

For today's Sesquicentennial celebration in San Antonio, a group of Texans sought to borrow the Texas flag that flew over the Alamo on March 6, 1836, but the Mexican government refused.

There was no request for the Alamo Bell. Haley said occasionally there have been remarks from a few curious people as to why the Bell is in Midland. "It followed the spirit," the historian says with a chuckle. "It's where the spirit is."

Today, with the falling oil prices and sluggish economic outlook for Midland, some people are losing their spirit, according to Haley. He sees today as no different from 150 years ago when 181 men crossed a line drawn by William Barret Travis and stood their ground against the Mexican army.

"It takes determination that we're going to stay," he said. "We're going to lose some of the weak-hearted, some who won't cross Travis' line. Those who do cross it will stay."

AQUINO

Presidential spokesman Rene Saguisag said Jose Maria Sison, reputedly the founder of the outlawed Communist Party of the Philippines, and three other purported party members were not among the 441 political prisoners now in the process of being released.

Saguisag said Mrs. Aquino was committed to releasing all political prisoners "without any exception." But he said "certain domestic considerations" had to be taken into account regarding Sison and the three others.

Their cases are to be considered when a special committee created by Mrs. Aquino meets again Wednesday, Saguisag said.

The three other prisoners are Bernabe Buscayno, alleged commander of the communist New People's Army; and two purported members of a communist assassination squad, Alexander Birondo and Ruben Alegre.

Bush dedicates flag

SUGAR LAND, Texas (AP) — Vice President George Bush started his four-day swing through Texas Saturday by dedicating the world's largest Sesquicentennial flag to commemorate the state's 150th birthday.

"Here in Sugar Land today we're showing the world once again what Texas pride is all about," Bush said. "Sugar Land was Texas' first Sesquicentennial community and now today Sugar Land is flying the biggest Sesquicentennial flag in the world."

Sugar Land was the first to get "Sesquicentennial community" status when the state began handing out that moniker in 1982.

The flag, measuring 100 feet by 150 feet and a replica of the official Texas Sesquicentennial flag, was draped over the side of the Sugar Creek National Bank building in clear view of drivers on Highway 59.

Library records books for nation's handicapped

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

"Children Indian Captives," "Chronicles of the Big Bend," and "Border Healing Woman" are some of the many copies of book covers covering one wall of a local library.

Underneath the photocopied book covers, names and dates are stenciled on adhesive red labies.

These names are not the authors — not the original authors anyway.

The stenciled names represent the readers of the books who have donated their time in the painstaking process of recording books for the blind.

The books recorded in Midland are copied and sent all over the nation through the Texas State Library and the Library of Congress, said the center's executive director, Dennis Stephens.

About 19 volunteers showed up Friday to get reading tips from state experts. The Recording Library For The Blind And Physically Handicapped is at 202 N. C St.

Each year the center produces between 30 to 35 books, along with recording monthly issues of Texas Monthly. Issues of Texas Monthly are sent to the center ahead of time so "readers" can get current issues on time.

About 1,800 Permian Basin clients are served every year with free reading material. Last year 44 volunteers donated 4,086 hours to produce 12 issues of Texas Monthly and 32 books.

The center also records at no charge Sunday school lessons and textbooks for local college students.

Like the seeing population, about half of the blind read, Stephens said.

The volunteers who record books tend to be bookworms.

"Most of the volunteers are avid readers who think the world would be horrible without books," he said.

One thing readers have to discard is their West Texas accents when recording.

"Normally we try to do without an accent because different people from different parts of the country are listening to this," Stephens said.

However, accents are appropriate for some books about Texas, he said.

Recording books takes more effort than just sitting down and reading. About 10 to 12 hours are required for every one hour of recorded time. Three people, along with the narrator, are required to produce one book. Monitors watch out for taping problems and mispronunciations during the reading. Reviewers edit the final taping to "proof read" for any mistakes. Sometimes a sentence or a word is left out and must be reread and inserted into the tape.

"It takes an army of volunteers," Stephens said.

Texas history books or western lore books are the center's specialty, although they will read other genre requested by the Library of Congress.

"I think the toughest one we ever did was Multiple Sclerosis in Spanish," Stephens said.

Midland's recording center is one of five in the state including two in Austin, one in Dallas and one in Houston.

The center began in 1963, but didn't meet Library of Congress recording standards until 1977. About $75,000 in private donations per year is used to operate the center.

WEDDING

And now, the morning duo is taking credit for sending this couple into the sunset of happily wedded bliss. "I've been in radio 16 years," said Conway, "and this is the strangest thing I've been involved in."

"It's certainly fun to be a part of this," said Lapidus, who has listened to callers talk of their suicidal desires or request songs for wakes.

Since the public proposal, KBAT — an album-oriented rock station — has been in a flurry over wedding details with the ceremony to be in the studio. "We will have a play-by-play commentary," joked Lapidus.

It will be a "family affair" with a familiar setting for at least one of the family members. Conway and Lapidus will be candlelighters. KBAT account executive James Jolly, also an ordained minister, will perform the ceremony. And several years ago, Ms. Mullis' father worked in sales for KBAT.

In addition, Dallas Nights is providing the reception complete with cake, champagne and food buffet with waiters dressed in tuxedoes.

"We were engaged on the radio," said Welch. "We thought we might as well go all the way."

UTPB's Leach expects to shave $1.7 million from budget

ODESSA (AP) — As the state's universities look for ways to cut money to meet the governor's austerity criteria, more and more will be looking to the private sector for some services, the president of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin said.

UTPB President Duane Leach said he expects to shave $1.7 million from the two-year, upper-level school's budget in response to an executive order issued Feb. 18 by Gov. Mark White.

However, Leach said he will seek private funding for programs such as has been obtained for the energy center and day-care program at UTPB.

"All universities across the state, as state funding becomes less and less available, will be going to the private sector," Leach predicted. "All of us will be getting more into that."

Exact dollar amounts to be saved in specific areas are yet to be determined, Leach said Friday.

White's order directed all state agencies and universities to reduce spending by 13 percent within a two-year period.

Of the three areas in which budget cuts can be made — people, programs and facilities — Leach plans to make his cuts in facilities.

"We will be doing less maintenance than before. There will be no big repair and rehabilitation," Leach said.

Several new programs will continue on schedule, Leach noted.

Recent University of Texas Board of Regents approval to build a $500,000 energy and economic diversification center between Midland and Odessa will not be affected, Leach said. Funding of the center's proposed programs stems from the private sector, said Leach.

Mixer jumps curb, tosses cement into furniture store

From Staff Reports

A cement mixer tore away from a pick-up truck, tumbled down South Big Spring Street in Midland on mid-afternoon Saturday and threw cement into a furniture store.

"The (cement-mixer) trailer just jumped the curb," said Donny Rains, Matlock Furniture Store manager, who was in the store when the crash came. "It looks like a big slug of cement went through the window and all over the furniture. Evidently, it was slinging cement. It must have been just like a mud ball."

A three-piece burgundy couch, which earlier had been reduced in price from $1,349.95 to $859.95, was splattered with the mushy cement. It had been tagged "slight damage."

"Now, it's really damaged," said Rains, 36.

Coffee tables, other couches, a sleeper, a bookcase-sound console, an end table and other furniture were splattered and sprinkled with the cement.

"This is the second time in six months we've been hit," said Rains, "and the third time since 1981."

In February 1981, a car plowed into the furniture store, operated by Travis and Gladys Matlock at the 805 S. Big Spring St. location since 1957, and scattered appliances. "That happened on the coldest day in the winter," said Rains.

The driver, who promptly excused himself from the car, left the scene and was located three days later.

"He had no insurance, no driver's license, and it wasn't even his car," said Rains.

About six months ago, a cattle trailer broke loose from a pick-up truck, went awry and bumped into the building.

Rains and Ann Matlock Hopkins, vice president of the company owned by her parents, were in the store when the cement mixer tumbled by and pounded the one-story building about 3:15 p.m. Midland police asked the driver of the pickup and his crew to shovel the cement from the street and intersection.

"Donny thought it was an earthquake," Mrs. Hopkins said of the noise of the tumbling mixer. "I thought it was an explosion."

A monument at Washington-on-the-Brazos marks the site where the Texas Declaration of Independence was signed 150 years ago. The convention hall, the reconstructed building behind the monument, was owned by a gunsmith.

Independence declared in ramshackle surroundings

WASHINGTON-ON-THE-BRAZOS (AP) — The collection of a dozen ramshackle cabins and shanties was an unlikely site for a national political convention.

The convention hall itself — owned by a gunsmith who was promised $170 rent but never was paid — was not even finished when the delegates assembled.

One eyewitness wrote that the town had "not one decent house in it and only one well-defined street, which consists of an opening cut out of the woods."

"The stumps are still standing," complained William Fairfax Gray, a Virginia attorney who 150 years ago today was keeping a diary that preserves the account of the meeting that resulted in the Texas Declaration of Independence.

Actually, everyone was ready to make the break from Mexico on March 1, but the 59 delegates decided to wait until the following day because March 2 also happened to be Sam Houston's birthday.

Today, Gov. Mark White is keynoting the Independence Day festivities at Washington-on-the-Brazos, now a state historical park. The park, about 85 miles northwest of Houston, includes a replica of the wooden building where the convention was held.

The celebration is among dozens around the state marking the 150th anniversary of the declaration.

In addition, the U.S. Postal Service today is issuing a 22-cent Republic of Texas stamp, commemorating the birth of the republic.

The eight-page Texas Declaration of Independence — handwritten with a quill by George Childress — was modeled roughly after the then 60-year-old U.S. Declaration of Independence authored by Thomas Jefferson. Where Jefferson complained about the tyranny of England, Childress complains against Mexico.

"One of the keys to the history of the state is the 10-year experience as an independent nation," says Lewis Gould, former chairman of the history department at the University of Texas.

After nearly 10 years as a republic, Texas joined the United States formally on Dec. 29, 1845.

"The 10 years may not seem like much over the course of 150 years, but the declaration makes the republic in constitutional and legal terms — and, of course, once they win the battles.

"But in terms of forming a Texas character, a Texas ethos, a Texanness, the Republic Period was crucial."

'Tea-sippers' turn eyes upon giant flag, toast heroes

AUSTIN (AP) — They shot off a cannon, waved a giant flag and toasted the heroes of San Jacinto.

They posed for pictures with a cardboard Bevo, ate Texas-shaped brownies and sang The Eyes of Texas.

And, yes, they sipped tea.

For the 90th year, University of Texas students and alumni gathered to celebrate Texas Independence Day and to proclaim to the world their faith that all things are possible if you just keep waving your forefinger and pinky in the air.

The festivities, held Friday because March 2 falls on Sunday this year, got started just before noon with a brief ceremony in front of the Main Building, which was draped by a 900-pound, 40-by-27-yard Texas flag.

Ex-Students' Association President Gordon Appleman and UT President William Cunningham made brief speeches before a couple of thousand Styrofoam cups of tea were lifted in a sesquicentennial toast to Texas.

For those who didn't go back to work or to study, the rest of the day was given over to fun and games on the West Mall, where the usual assortment of anti-'Star Wars' petitioners, Young Republicans, environmentalists, Christians and Sandinista supporters shared space with sesquicentennial bake sales, dunking booths and trivia contests.

The Liberal Arts Council had one of the most original fund-raising gimmicks with their "smallest cakes in Texas" — tiny brownies shaped like the state and packaged complete with a tiny birthday candle, a tiny Texas flag and a tiny plastic saber, all for a tiny 50 cents.

A sign in front of their table read, "Prince Charles says, 'They're a bloody sight better for tea than that large one'" — a reference to the "world's largest cake" that the prince sliced into with a saber during his Austin visit last week.

High winds bring down three hot air balloons

GEORGETOWN (AP) — Highs winds sent three hot-air balloons crashing to the ground Saturday after the balloonists decided to go up on their own when officials postponed the start of a Texas sesquicentennial race.

Three people suffered minor injuries when the balloons crashed in a rancher's field near this Central Texas town about 30 miles north of where they took off from Zilker Park in Austin, Round Rock Volunteer Fire Chief David Smith said.

Smith said the balloons were trying to land in gusty winds when they crashed. The gondola of the balloon whose occupants were injured was dragged through a field by the high winds and struck a wire fence.

How do teachers grade White the second time around?

By STEVE LEVINE

AUSTIN — Mark White, conventional wisdom has it, won the 1982 election with public perception that he would reduce utility bills, with a staggering voter turnout in South Texas and with tremendous help from the state's teachers.

This time around, the governor is counting on those same factors to help him defeat whichever of the three Republican candidates emerges from what could be a rather messy GOP primary. Observers here — and I stress here, as in Austin — question White's logic.

Average residential electric bills, for example, have increased about 9.9 percent since White took office in January 1983. But, the governor's team likes to point out, those rates rose by more than 25 percent in the last two years of Bill Clements' administration.

The possibility of a Hispanic GOP attorney general candidate could join complaints that White has turned his back on his South Texas constituents to deflate the governor's support in that ever-more-crucial part of the state. Some black leaders claim a similar abandonment. White points out, however, that he has appointed more blacks, Hispanics and women to state posts than have all his predecessors combined.

But the teacher problem is a bit tougher to figure out. And if you're a teacher — particularly one that helped White in 1982, please read on. You can lend a hand here too. Here's the situation:

Like I started out saying, teachers provided the catalyst for White's 1982 victory over Clements. Buoyed by his promise of a 24-percent pay raise, thousands of teachers stuffed envelopes, pounded in yard signs and ran telephone banks. Then they voted White into office.

The governor failed to convince the Legislature in 1983 to raise the money for the salary increases. One year later, lawmakers boosted taxes to pay for the increase. But the price also included reading-and-writing tests for all teachers, an under-funded merit-pay plan that pits teacher against teacher and a new classroom discipline program that effectively ties the hands of teachers and principals who want to expel unruly students.

Here in Austin, three teacher groups and organizations representing principals and other administrators say those changes have their members very upset. With White campaigning on the positive aspects of education reform, the leaders of those groups add, their members are beginning to feel like political pawns.

Then, of course, there's the no-pass, no-play rule, which has the Texas High School Coaches Association up in arms. So far the principals, the coaches and the two more-conservative teachers groups have called for White's ouster.

The governor and his re-election team dismiss those complaints as "ignorance and superstition" coming from vested interests who wanted to maintain the status quo. Despite what their organizational leaders might say, White's folks maintain, rank-and-file teachers are still behind the governor.

"I think they — individually and, in many cases, collectively — support what we're doing," White told reporters.

Whom to believe? That's the big question. A question this writer has pledged to spend the next month or so trying to answer. And, like Shake 'n' Bake, you can help. Especially if you're a teacher.

Pick up your pen and write me a letter. Send it care of the Reporter-Telegram to Post Office Box 13104, Austin, 78711. Let me know what you think of Mark White and his education reforms. Just one ground rule: no form letters please; I'm not counting votes.

Include, if you will, a little background. In which school and grade do you teach? What subject? For how long? Did you vote — or work — for White in '82? What are your plans this year? (I'll keep the individual vote confessions confidential.) Do you belong to a teacher group? Which one?

Then add some subjective thoughts. What's it like in your classroom today? How is morale in your school? How is your checkbook doing these days? Tell me about discipline, the pass-play rule, the reading-and-writing test, paperwork.

I'll combine your input with some travel and a lot of interviews with teachers, principals, parents, government officials and others. It'll take a month or so of hard work to get the real answers. Thanks, in advance, for your help.

Steve Levine is a staff writer in the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau.

Lawmakers may have change of view next session

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Assuming lawmakers aren't too busy haggling over the state budget next year, they'll notice some definite changes in what Capitol Architect Roy Graham calls "the symbol of organized government in Texas."

Graham, who is developing a 20-year master plan for restoring the 98-year-old building, garnered his share of headlines recently by removing the Goddess of Liberty from her perch on the Capitol dome.

The Aluminum Company of America is in the process of selecting a foundry to cast a new-and-improved aluminum goddess. Graham said he expects the new goddess to be in place by this summer. Meanwhile, a Rhome, Texas, foundry is busy making molds of the weather-worn lady, which are about 75-percent complete.

When Speaker Gib Lewis bangs his gavel for the first time in January, House members will stand on a newly installed carpet. When they lean forward on their elbows to examine the first bill or resolution that comes their way, it will be on refinished desks.

Representatives should feel a more cushioned floor under their feet, thanks to a new carpet.

"We've got a pretty good idea of what the original carpet looked like because there's a picture of Sam Houston Johnson (in 1894) from a bird's eye perspective that shows him and the carpet all spread out below," Graham said.

And, when the going gets boring, members will be able to sit back and enjoy new wooden shutters, replacing the Venetian blinds that now cover the chamber's windows.

"I won't say that this will be overwhelming to them, because we're just working in one area at a time," Graham said. "But they'll see quite a bit of difference."

Fort Worth Rep. Mike Millsap, a member of the State Preservation Board, said House members will see "some very noticeable and appropriate changes by next January."

"I think the members will be excited and pleased with the minimal changes we're making here this interim," he said.

Another restoration project involves Millsap's third-floor office. Graham said he wants to use the office as an example of the kind of room 19th century lawmakers worked in.

That job will include new carpeting, repositioning of furniture and installation of a period light fixture. Millsap made the restoration a little easier since he already has an original desk in his office.

Graham and his crew have already done a considerable amount of work on the House members lounge, just off the chamber. Plans for that area include indirect lighting rather than the current florescent lights, new carpet and draperies, and concealed fixtures to "hide microwaves and things like that so they'll look like an historic piece of furniture."

"It'll be completely redone," Graham added, "you won't even recognize the room."

It's yet to be determined who will hold weekly press conferences in the Governor's Reception Room, but whomever voters side with in November's election will have new — well, make that old — quarters, thanks to a donation from the Austin Heritage Society.

Graham plans on installing new carpet and draperies in the room, as well as a chandelier now suspended in front of the Sergeant's Room. The chandelier now in the reception room "is completely inappropriate," he said. "It's probably about the right size, but it's the wrong style."

U.S., Philippine, international law to determine who gets plane's cargo

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, setting the stage for a possible legal battle, said Saturday that U.S., Philippine and international law will determine who gets a planeload of possessions brought from the Philippines by former President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Administration officials, speaking on condition they not be identified, confirmed published reports that one of the two U.S. Air Force jets that flew Marcos, more than 80 fellow exiles and cargo from the Philippines to Hawaii contained boxes of documents.

The officials would not disclose the subjects of the documents — said to provide information on Marcos' business dealings — but confirmed that the baggage included about $1.1 million worth of Philippines' pesos and boxes of jewels.

Meanwhile, the Washington Post said in Sunday editions that documents left behind when Marcos fled his presidential palace in Manila included a 1982 contract for the $70 million purchase of a 71-story office building on Wall Street in downtown Manhattan.

The contract and supporting documents were stored in a brown folder marked "PFM's copy," shorthand for President Ferdinand Marcos.

The Post said its reporter had viewed the documents which did not identify Marcos or his family directly as the purchaser, but would appear to bolster previous congressional testimony about Marcos' extensive U.S. real estate holdings.

Palace documents named two New York brothers, Joseph and Ralph Bernstein, as executors of the purchase, the Post said. The two were cited for contempt of Congress last week for refusing to answer questions during House hearings about the relationship of their firm, New York Land, with the Marcos family.

Former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife, Imelda, along with a military aide, leave a brief news conference Friday at Hickam Air Force Base in Honolulu Friday.

AP Laserphoto

Other witnesses told the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee that the Wall Street office tower in question was owned by the Marcoses, and this week, the Bernsteins announced plans to sell the building.

As to the contents of the airplane in Hawaii, CBS News reported Friday night that documents found in the luggage of Marcos' confidant, Gen. Fabian Ver, dealt with allegations the Marcos regime funneled U.S. military aid through a phony corporation.

A federal grand jury in Alexandria, Va., was investigating charges of kickbacks to high-ranking Philippine officials in connection with $100 million in Pentagon contracts, the New York Times reported in December. The probe was focusing on whether Filipino agents employed by companies who got the contracts may have paid money to officials in the Marcos government, the newspaper said.

A spokesman for the U.S. attorney in Alexandria last Sunday declined comment on the alleged grand jury investigation.

"All I can say is that I cannot confirm or deny that an investigation is underway," said the spokesman, Justin Williams.

White House spokesman Edward Djerejian said U.S. officials were conducting an inventory of the contents of the plane in Hawaii. He said he had no knowledge of any sensitive documents found but "if there are, we will look at them and they will be processed in accordance with U.S. law."

He said Filipino and international law could come into play "if the Philippines makes a claim" with respect to the contents of the shipment.

Lawmakers seek answers before backing Contra aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The decision by Congress on President Reagan's request for a four-fold increase in aid to Nicaraguan rebels will determine whether the U.S.-backed insurgency lives or dies, those on both sides of the debate agree.

Before deciding, lawmakers appear determined to get answers to questions about the 5-year-old rebellion that many feel haven't been adequately answered, such as what the administration hopes to achieve and how far it will go in backing the insurgency.

"We have upped the ante," said Sen. Dan Evans, R-Wash., at a Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing last week. "If the result of this request is...a popular revolution, and they don't quite do it, what then do we do? I haven't been able to get an answer that comforts me."

Secretary of State George P. Shultz replied, "I don't know," but said he is confident the struggle must go on to prevent a Soviet-backed communist government from becoming entrenched on the North American continent. He repeated anew there is no plan to send American troops.

Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., speaking for the Democratic party position in a nationwide radio address Saturday, said only the Vietnam war, of all modern wars in which the United States has been involved, has lasted longer than the U.S.-backed insurgency.

"Yet today, the Contras do not hold a single town in Nicaragua — not one," he said. "We are caught in a cycle of failure, pouring more and more U.S. tax dollars into an uncontrolled and unending war."

President Reagan has asked for $100 million in aid for the next 18 months, including $70 million in lethal military assistance. The House leadership blocked military aid last year — approving $27 million in humanitarian assistance instead — and predicts it can block it again.

Many Republicans, in both houses, also have voiced concern about the program, although the administration picked up a strong commitment to its latest proposal this week from Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., the foreign relations committee chairman, who said it was both reasonable and modest.

He told reporters Friday he thinks the aim of the American effort should be to force the leftist Sandinista government to hold free and fair elections, after which there would be no need for the Contras.

Even though Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, has come out against military aid, the proposal is likely to be approved in the Republican-controlled Senate by a narrow margin, even opponents concede.

But Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee who opposes any aid for the Contras, said the outcome appears to be a toss-up in the House. Three weeks earlier, he predicted the aid package would be approved, but he said last week that backing for the administration has since weakened.

Under an agreement between the White House and Congress, the issue is supposed to be decided this month. More hearings are scheduled in both houses this week.

The outcome will hinge on how well the administration and its critics address the issues of morality, the purposes of the insurgency, whether diplomacy would achieve the same ends, the makeup of the Contras themselves, why other nations in the region don't support the U.S. policy and the nature of the threat to the United States from the leftist government.

Initially, the administration said the purpose of the insurgency was to force the Sandinistas to stop aiding leftist guerrillas in El Salvador. But more recently it has said the puprose is to force the Sandinistas into negotiations with its opponents.

Proponents and opponents outside Congress see the congressional decision as pivotal and have mounted major campaigns to persuade the lawmakers. Contra leaders are expected in Washington this week to help lobby members of Congress.

Looking for work

Thousands of people wait in line at Memorial Auditorium in Buffalo, N.Y., Saturday to pick up applications for one of 270 new job openings at the new General Electric plant to be opened this year in a Buffalo suburb. The plant will refurbish subway cars and is slated to open in July. The company expects more than 10,000 people to apply for jobs.

Catholics advertise right to dissent

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a new challenge to Roman Catholic Church leaders, more than 1,000 Catholics are publishing a broadside defending dissent on abortion and blasting Vatican reprisals against dissenters.

The declaration, published as a full-page advertisement in today's New York Times, includes signatures of at least five priests and 40 nuns, sponsors said, though many signers didn't include affiliations.

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice, which helped organize the protest, said in an interview that a main goal of the statement is "to send a clear message to the Vatican that Catholics will not be intimidated by reprisals against Catholics who speak out...that reprisals will lead to more public comment rather than less."

Seventeen months ago, a smaller group of Catholics stirred what has become a substantial controversy within the church with a similar ad contending that staunch opposition to abortion by Pope John Paul II and other church leaders was not the only legitimate Catholic position.

That statement, published at the height of the 1984 presidential campaign, was intended to counter church leaders' criticism of Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro, a Catholic, for her position that she was opposed to abortion but not in favor of outlawing it.

The first ad, also published in the Times, was signed by 97 people, including some two dozen nuns whom the Vatican then threatened with expulsion from their religious orders unless they recanted.

Noting the expulsion threats and other efforts to penalize original signers, the new statement says in a "declaration of solidarity":

"Such reprisals consciously or unconsciously have a chilling effect on the right to responsible dissent within the church, on academic freedom in Catholic colleges and universities and on the right to free speech and participation in the U.S. political process. Such reprisals cannot be condoned or tolerated in church or society."

William Ryan, associate public affairs secretary for the U.S. Catholic Conference, said the bishops' national organization had no formal reaction to the new ad and was "standing with" a statement Cardinal Joseph Bernardin of Chicago made last September.

In that statement, prompted by the first ad and by continuing discussion of it, Bernardin said a Catholic who chooses to dissent from the church's anti-abortion stance "or to support dissent from it is dissenting not only from church law but from a higher law."

Former NASA administrator may head agency again

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former NASA Administrator James C. Fletcher was was described Saturday by a White House official as the leading candidate to head the agency again in the wake of the shuttle Challenger disaster.

The official, speaking on condition he not be identified, said Fletcher had been told by White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan that he is the top contender to succeed James T. Beggs as head of the embattled agency.

Beggs resigned Tuesday. He had been on leave of absence since December after being indicted on federal fraud charges unrelated to his NASA duties. William R. Graham, who had served briefly as his deputy, has been acting administrator since his departure.

Beggs' resignation had been expected and the search for a new administrator has been stepped up since the Challenger explosion Jan. 28, which killed all seven crew members.

Weather keeps ships in port, delays shuttle-recovery efforts

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Wind whipped up 10-foot waves Saturday that kept salvage ships in port, delaying efforts to recover wreckage of the space shuttle Challenger from the ocean floor.

Among the shorebound ships was the Stena Workhorse. It was to have moved to the recovery area 42 miles northeast of Cape Canaveral to retrieve a large chunk of the shuttle's left booster rocket in a dress rehearsal for recovering parts of the suspect right booster from deeper water.

The Stena Workhorse, normally used in offshore oil drilling work, is capable of lifting 100 tons from the sea.

Navy officials said the weather should be better today and that the search would continue with 10 surface ships, two small manned submarines and four robot submersibles.

The presidential commission investigating the Jan. 28 Challenger explosion has focused on the right solid fuel booster as a leading suspect as the ignition source that set off the blast. Photographs show a tongue of flame bursting from the rocket, near a seam between segments, 15 seconds before the explosion.

Television pictures shown at a news conference Friday showed a 91-inch, 12-foot-diameter segment of the left booster at a depth of 210 feet. The 4,200-pound part appeared to be heavily damaged.

Bag & Save?
Warehouse Food Store!

WHY A STORE IN ODESSA?

We chose Odessa and the Permian Basin as the home for a Bag & Save because there's nothing like it in the area. Up until now, you've never had a choice of how you could feed your family. You've had plenty of supermarkets to shop at, but you've never had an option like a warehouse food store. Money is tight right now and the Permian Basin is facing a depressed economy. We know that and we're here to help you stretch your money as far as it can possibly go.

WHY OUR PRICES ARE THE CHEAPEST!

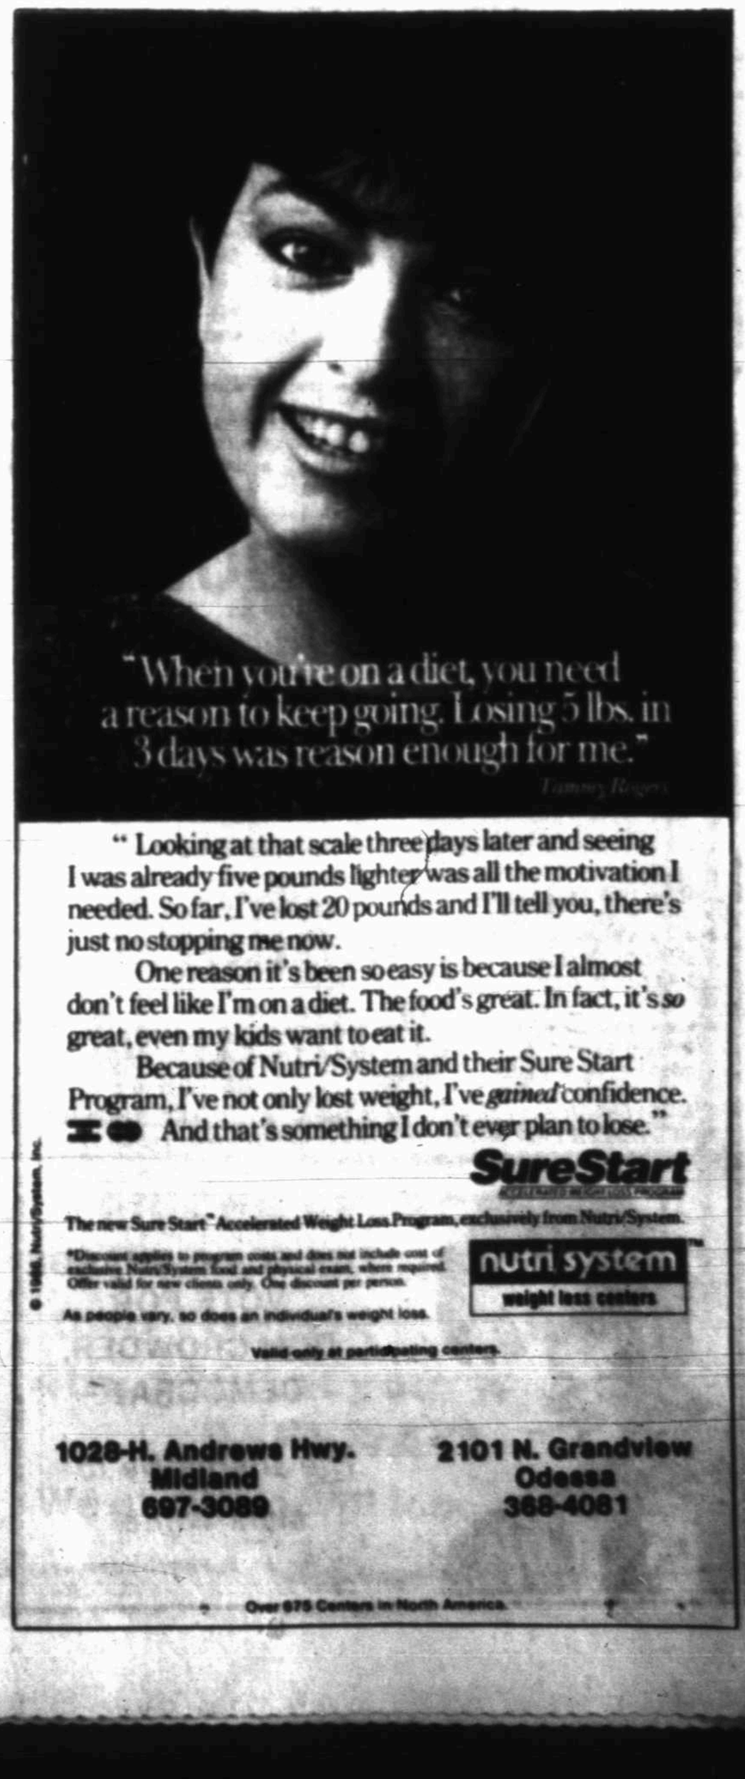

Bag & Save has the cheapest prices in the city because everything we do is cheap. There's an old saying that "You gotta spend money to make money." But we don't believe that. We save every penny we can, and that means lower prices for you. First of all, we rent a cheap building. It's not fancy inside or outside. It's not in a prestigious location. It's big and it's clean, and that's all. We don't give trading stamps. We don't play games. We don't have merchandise giveaways! All these things cost money and we'd have to mark up our prices to pay for them. We don't have double coupons. We don't want to mark up our prices a penny here or a penny there to pay for the second discount on a double coupon. And while we're on the subject of pennies, a grocery bag will cost you 2¢ at Bag & Save. We have plenty of free boxes you can use — all our products are shipped in boxes. But we have to buy grocery bags, and if we "gave" them to you, we'd have to charge more on some of our prices. (How's that for cheap!) We also keep our costs down by letting you sack and carry your own groceries. We don't have to mark up our prices to cover the salaries and benefits for extra personnel, and you save money.

MARK UPS AND HOW THEY WORK!

So far we've been talking about how Bag & Save doesn't mark up prices to cover extra expenses. That's the key to the difference between Bag & Save and the supermarket. We both buy our merchandise from the same suppliers. We buy wholesale and then we sell retail. That allows us to mark up the price of our merchandise to make a profit and to cover expenses. Naturally, Bag & Save makes a profit. We couldn't stay in business if we didn't. But we rely on volume sales for our profit rather than big mark ups. When a supermarket has a huge overhead due to stamps, games, giveaways, extra help, double coupons, piped-in music and a fancy store, it has to charge higher prices just to cover its expenses. We don't have a high overhead so we don't have high prices. It's as simple as that. The cheapest prices are coming to Odessa and you'll find them in the Bag & Save store!

HOW THEY VOTED

House backs nuclear test ban despite opposition

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending Feb. 28, 1986.

HOUSE

HOUSE URGES NUCLEAR TEST BAN DESPITE WHITE HOUSE OBJECTIONS. Proponents of a comprehensive nuclear test ban launched their 1986 offensive Feb.26 with negotiations with the Soviet Union leading toward such an agreement. The measure, which was approved 268-148 despite President Reagan's opposition, also called on Reagan to request Senate ratification of two nuclear test ban treaties signed during the Nixon and Ford administration.

While the resolution is non-binding, its passage over strong White House objections is significant because it repudiates the president's current arms control policy. The Reagan administration holds that a nuclear test ban should only be sought after reduction are made in existing nuclear weapons. The administration has also argued that the two treaties now awaiting Senate approval should remain on the shelf until improved methods of verifying compliance are developed. Those treaties would bar any underground nuclear blasts greater than 150 kilotons.

Backers of the resolution stressed that the measure simply urged the president to act without entangling the administration in agreements that would undercut current arms control talks or endanger national security. They also argued that new technology could assure compliance with any test ban treaty.

Supporters also held that a comprehensive nuclear test ban would cover all types of nuclear weapons, and that without testing, the development of new weapons would be impossible.

A nuclear test ban treaty without significant and verifiable reductions in nuclear weapons will give the two sides no incentive to reduce their stockpiles of arms, opponents argued. Since the Soviet Union is leading the arms race, they said, a test ban at this point would leave the United States in an inferior position. The resolution's detractors also said that circumstances have changed since the measure was first introduced and passage of the resolution would only embarrass the president.

Voting for the non-binding resolution calling for a nuclear test ban: Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio.

Voting against:

Larry Combest, R-Lubbock, Richard Armey, R-Denton, Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo.

Paired no:

Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt.

SENATE

SENATE APPROVES RADIO, TELEVISION COVERAGE. After almost a decade of debate, and seven years of watching House members reap the benefits of television exposure, the Senate Feb. 27 agreed to throw its proceedings open to live, gavel-to-gavel coverage on radio and television. The measure, which will allow the coverage on a trial basis from June 1 to July 15, was approved 67-21.

The measure also streamlines and modifies some Senate procedures, such as filibusters, so audience interest in the proceedings will be maintained. The Senate will vote on permanent coverage at the conclusion of the test. The House has televised its proceedings since 1979.

Television coverage of the Senate was blocked for years because of fears that the chamber's character would change with the introduction of live, unedited broadcasts. Currently, proceedings in the Senate can be brought to a virtual standstill by a committed group of senators willing to engage in a sort of parliamentary guerrilla warfare, using quorum calls and filibusters to tie the chamber in knots.

Backers of the measure, while admitting that live coverage of the day-to-day proceedings of the Senate might prove occasionally embarrassing, argued strongly that a free and democratic society required open government proceedings. The public selects the leaders it believes will best serve the country, said William L. Armstrong, R-Colo. "In order to do that job, the public needs to see what we are talking about."

Opponents said that the often arcane, confusing and murky procedures of the Senate offer protection for the minority's opinion, allowing senators to take politically unpopular stances on important issues. They expressed fears that television coverage would discourage members from saying things their constituents didn't want to hear. "I think that those of us who feel that statesmanship is altogether too scarce a commodity the way it is now will find that it is going to be more scarce on television," said Russell B. Long, D-La.

Voting for live radio and television coverage of the Senate proceedings:

Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

Treatment does affect heroin use, study says

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Recent findings of a 12-year national study of 400 heroin addicts show that daily use of heroin among the former drug abusers dropped dramatically after treatment, Texas A&M University researchers say.

The results show 75 percent of those in the study had not used heroin during the last year of the study and 63 percent had stayed away from drugs for the past three years.

A&M, which conducted the study with a federal grant, said it is the longest-running examination nationally on what happened to heroin addicts after they got help from federally-funded community treatment centers during the late 1960s and early 1970s.

"The data addresses the old philosophy that once an addict, always an addict," said Dr. D. Dwayne Simpson, psychology professor and project director.

"There are many people who appear to have cleaned up and become well-adjusted. The long-term outcomes suggest that some people do recover from addiction."

The findings will be used by the National Institute on Drug Abuse to help set federal funding policies for drug abuse treatment and will be sent to treatment centers throughout the country.

State may soon be fishing for funds

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' revenue crunch has the state digging everywhere for new sources of money — including the possibility of farming redfish and crawfish in arid West Texas.

"The General Land Office for some time has been interested in promoting crawfish and redfish farming in West Texas," said land office spokesman Mike Connolly. "But we've been unable to interest others to go ahead with the project."

Connolly said Israeli agriculturalists suggested redfish farming in West Texas when they visited the area in 1985.

"They thought the combination of salty water and other conditions would make it ideal for redfish farming," he said.

About 1 million acres owned by the land office have been identified as possible sites for such farms. Connolly said the agency has been seeking ventures with private industry to use state-owned land not only for redfish, but also for crawfish and shrimp farming.

Money made from farming the land would go to the state's permanent school fund, Connolly said.

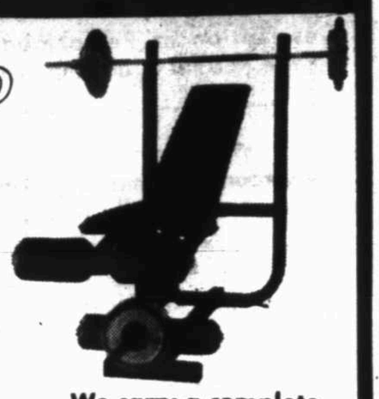

Hal Irby of the land office's land management division said he is studying crawfish farming. The state controls most of the bays along the Gulf of Mexico, and those areas might be ideal for such ventures.

NATION IN BRIEF

Councilman elected mayor

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — City Councilman Sidney Barthelemy easily outpolled state Sen. William Jefferson Saturday to win election as the city's second black mayor after a bitter campaign to succeed the first black mayor, Dutch Morial.

Voters also elected two blacks and one white to the City Council, giving blacks a majority on the seven-member body for the first time. Winners of two of the council races became the first women elected to the council.

With all of the city's 465 polling places reporting in the mayor's race, Barthelemy had 93,054 votes, or 58 percent, while Jefferson had 67,868 or 42 percent.

The runoff election between the two Democrats capped a campaign that touched in its final days on the issue of race although both men are black.

Actor leads peace march

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Robert Blake Saturday led more than 1,000 people on the first leg of the "Great Peace March," a cross-country trek for nuclear disarmament that began despite a lack of insurance and equipment.

The peace activists, carrying signs and American flags, left the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum shortly after noon. The 8½-month-long walk sponsored by PRO-Peace will take them 3,235 miles to Washington, D.C., passing through 37 cities and 15 states.

Blake, star of TV's "Baretta" and "Hell Town," walked in the front line, joining the marchers in singing "If I Had a Hammer."

Blake, clad in a T-shirt, Levis and running shoes, said he would walk the entire distance.

Paul Newman, filming in Chicago, was scheduled to join the march later, said PRO-Peace spokeswoman Torrie Osborn.

No more breaks for beer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — It will be coffee breaks, not beer breaks, from now on at Anheuser-Busch breweries.

The tap went dry for more than 9,000 hourly workers at the company's 11 breweries across the nation Saturday as Anheuser-Busch ended a long-standing tradition of letting employees drink free beer on their breaks.

The tradition is as old at the brewing industry itself, but company officials said times have changed.

"It is a practice which Anheuser-Busch and the brewery workers' unions have agreed no longer is appropriate in 1986," said Jim Morice, a brewery spokesman.

Mrs. Hobson died Friday night at New York Hospital, said Cathy Flamino, a hospital administrator.

Mrs. Hobson, who spent most of her life in New York, also wrote an autobiography, hundreds of short stories and magazine articles, news features and advertising copy during a career that spanned six decades.

Oregon Pharmacist's

Wrinkle Cream Great Success

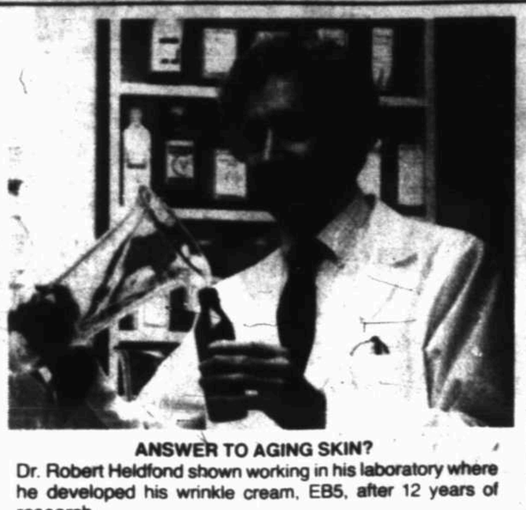

It's an exciting story of a pharmacist who developed a wrinkle cream which women all over the country are clamoring for.

Dr. Robert Heldfond, a Portland pharmacist, used knowledge from pharmacy school and years of experience, to compound EB5, a wrinkle cream he started selling in his drugstore and which is now making cosmetic history across the nation.

Women started coming to Heldfond's pharmacy when the word got around about its wonderful results in helping women look younger. The phones never stopped ringing and letters poured in praising the results with EB5 cream.

Research lab tests show that by using EB5 cream morning and night, facial lines, lines around the eyes, lines on the forehead and around the mouth are smoothed.

EB5 contains natural ingredients, including Liprogen, an exciting natural combination developed by Dr. Heldfond and other aids to help smooth aging skin. Heldfond's base for the cream absorbs quickly leaving the skin soft and velvety.

ANSWER TO AGING SKIN?
Dr. Robert Heldfond shown working in his laboratory where he developed his wrinkle cream, EB5, after 12 years of research.

EB5 cream is actually 5 creams in one jar . . . a wrinkle cream, moisturizer, night cream, eye cream, and makeup base, all in one. One jar lasts many months.

Note: EB5 cream is available in Midland at JCPenney at Midland Park Mall. 699-4347

Imprisoned communist praises Aquino, warns of 'imperialism'

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The communist-backed National Democratic Front has praised Corazon Aquino's ascension as new Philippine president, but the Communist Party's reputed founder said Saturday he does not know if the party's armed struggle against the government will end.

Jose Maria Sison, interviewed for the first time at a military detention camp where he has been held for eight years, said Mrs. Aquino's release of political prisoners indicates she is anti-fascist.

But Sison, 47, said the problems of "imperialism and feudalism," two other main communist concerns, remain to be overcome.

Membership in the Communist Party is a crime and, while it is generally accepted that Sison founded the Communist Party of the Philippines in 1968, he has neither admitted nor denied it.

The National Democratic Front, a coalition outlawed under President Ferdinand E. Marcos, said in a statement distributed to news media that the ouster of Marcos was "a significant victory in the Filipino people's struggle for genuine democracy and national independence."

The group, however, warned against "midnight or 11th-hour defectors" from Marcos' government, referring to military chief Gen. Fidel V. Ramos and Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile.

"These significant sections of the Marcos faction who instantly defected to flee a sinking ship pose a major threat to these gains," said the statement.

Mrs. Aquino's spokesman announced Saturday that Sison was not on a list of prisoners to be released without investigation, but said it was the president's policy to release all political prisoners, including Sison. Sources in the government, who demanded anonymity, acknowledged there was military pressure to keep Sison in detention.

Sison said he was confident of his release and had already begun packing.

"All progressive people are happy about the victory of Mrs. Aquino," he said, adding, "The Cory government is fair-minded."

Cory is Mrs. Aquino's nickname.

"I might have some moral influence, but I don't have any authority to command," said Sison of his relationship with the party that has had thousands of armed men fighting Marcos' government.

The party officially boycotted the election but did less to disrupt the polls than it had in past elections. Since Marcos fled to Hawaii and Mrs. Aquino took over on Tuesday, only one communist encounter has been reported by Manila news media.

Cory Aquino's rise shows power of Filipino women

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Although Filipino political institutions have usually been male-only clubs, Corazon Aquino's rise to the presidency highlights something that few Filipino men care to admit: they share the reins of power with women.

"In public, for appearances, the man is the boss, but deep in his heart, the man knows who is the real boss — his wife," said Filipino novelist Bienvenido Santos, characterizing the Philippines as a "subtle matriarchy."

"We have a matriarchy where the man does not lose face," Santos has said. "In all major decisions, the man defers to his wife. She knows her position and does not abuse it because her survival depends on her saving her man's face."

No one had predicted Mrs. Aquino's eventual rise to the presidency when her husband, opposition leader Benigno Aquino, was assassinated 30 months ago upon his return from voluntary exile in the United States.

President Aquino, who describes herself as a former housewife, stands in sharp contrast to Imelda Romualdez Marcos, wife of Ferdinand E. Marcos. Marcos was driven into exile Wednesday by a pro-Aquino revolt after 20 years in power.

Many Filipinos say they believe Mrs. Marcos' globe-trotting extravagance, grandiose projects and reputed lust for power played a major role in her husband's downfall.

Mrs. Marcos campaigned across the country for her husband before the Feb. 7 election singing and dancing, smiling and crying, pleading and shouting. She wore a bright red sash across her shoulders, pearls around her neck, and diamonds on her fingers.

"Filipinos want beauty," she once said. "I have to look beautiful so that the poor Filipinos will have a star to look at from their slums."

Mrs. Marcos was governor of metropolitan Manila, a minister in her husband's Cabinet, and it was widely assumed among Filipino officials and voters alike that she would make a play for power if her husband decided to step down.

South African cleric rescues man from crowd

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A leading anti-apartheid clergyman, the Rev. Allan Boesak, leaped from the altar Saturday to rescue a black man from vengeful funeral mourners who believed him to be a police informer.

Black mourners in the town of George east of Cape Town, attacked the man after the Rev. Freddie Booi, a black Anglican priest, declared during his eulogy: "There is an informer in the church, and there he sits."

Boesak, who is of mixed race, rescued the bleeding man from assailants, shielded him and helped him into a car, said Associated Press photographer Greg English, who witnessed the incident.

Infuriated mourners pummeled the man, shouting "Kill the traitor!" and "Burn informers!" and later burned down his house, witnesses said.

Elsewhere, police reported three blacks were killed in rioting in 16 communities from late Friday to Saturday evening.

Police shot dead two blacks in clashes at Potchefstroom's black township, 75 miles southwest of Johannesburg, said a nightly police summary.

In Soweto, outside Johannesburg, a mob firebombed a car and the driver retaliated, killing one man, it said.

The funeral service in George was for two blacks shot by police in rioting. It resumed after Boesak drove the man accused of being an informer to safety in Lawaaikamp, George's black township.

Suspected informers have been attacked before at funerals for riot victims, which often become vast anti-apartheid rallies in a country where security laws prohibit most forms of protest. Sometimes the people under suspicion have been stoned and beaten to death.

The man Booi denounced was Madlavu Mathuka, who residents later said had been seen in police uniform and with police in a car recently. Little else was known of his background.

Mathuka stood up in front of the 1,500 mourners and said, "Yes, I am the one you are accusing," according to witnesses.

English saw the crowd begin to beat Mathuka as he tried to make his way to the door of the church with his two sisters.

Boesak, a founder of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid movement, jumped from the altar, pushed his way through the crowd and grabbed Mathuka, who was bleeding from a cut below his eye.

Booi said he hadn't meant to turn the crowd on Mathuka, adding: "I only wanted to teach him that he should not come to a church and provoke the people with his presence."

After rejoining the service at St. Paul's Anglican Church, Boesak, a fiery 40-year-old preacher who became campaigning in his teens against South Africa's system of racial segregation, said: "I don't know if I saved the man's life. I didn't want to see him hurt. I just did what I had to do under the circumstances."

Deputy prime minister likely to succeed Palme

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Deputy Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson, a longtime friend and political ally of assassinated Prime Minister Olof Palme, was nominated Saturday by the governing Social Democratic Party to succeed Palme.

The nomination virtually assures the 51-year-old Carlsson of the country's top government position. He must be approved by Sweden's parliament, the Riksdag, when it reconvenes this week, but the vote is considered a formality.

Carlsson has been deputy prime minister since Palme won his second term as prime minister in 1982. More recently, he also has taken on the posts of environment minister and minister for future planning.

Carlsson automatically took over as head of a caretaker government shortly after Palme was shot on a Stockholm street late Friday while walking with his wife, Lisbeth.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soldiers seek mutineers as Cairo regains calm

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Soldiers searched vast stretches of desert Saturday for mutinous paramilitary security troopers still at large, and the government announced a shakeup in the top echelons of Egypt's internal security apparatus.

Cairo was calm as its 12 million residents enjoyed a 12-hour respite from a round-the-clock curfew, imposed Wednesday after an estimated 8,000-10,000 conscripts of the Central Security Force began rioting.

But public universities and schools, closed Thursday, will remain shut another week.

Sources close to the government, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the search for escaped mutineers centered on the desert west of the Great Pyramids of Giza and wastelands southeast of the city.

The government said 36 people were killed and 321 wounded in the riots. But a West European diplomat, who spoke on condition of not being identified, said his information from government sources indicated the death toll was much higher.

The Interior Ministry spokesman said about 2,600 security force conscripts and about 700 civilians were arrested since Tuesday night for mutinying or rioting.

Suspected Nazi questioned

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Police questioned alleged Nazi war criminal John Demjanjuk Saturday and barred him from phoning his family in Cleveland, Ohio, during his first full day of imprisonment here, Israel television reported.

It said Demjanjuk, 65, was told he could communicate only by mail.

On Sunday, Demjanjuk will appear before a Jerusalem court to be remanded in custody pending trial.

He will be driven to Jerusalem from the Ayalon maximum security prison in a Brinks armored car that police rented as one of the special precautions taken to guarantee his safety. The car will take him to Jerusalem for each session of the trial.

Justice Ministry spokesman Yitzhak Feinberg said it may be weeks or months before the prosecution completes its preparations and the trial begins.

Demjanjuk has been named by survivors of the Treblinka death camp as the guard known as Ivan the Terrible. He is accused of helping massacre 900,000 Jews.

Town honors Anne Frank

BERGEN, West Germany (AP) — An elementary school in Bergen has been named after Anne Frank, ending a controversy over how to honor the girl who died in the local Nazi Bergen-Belsen death camp in 1945.

After months of wrangling over whether to name a street in her honor, the city council chose to name a school after her.

A service making the name official was attended Friday by the 260 students, their parents, and community leaders. They heard speeches warning against any re-emergence of anti-Semitism or of dictatorship.

Anne Frank, a German Jew, died at age 15 in the camp in March 1945, one of an estimated 6 million Jewish victims of the Nazi Holocaust. After her death, she became world-famed for her diary of the time spent hiding from the Nazis with her family in Amsterdam.

Rebels holding up convoy

UNITED NATIONS (NYT) — Rebels controlling the southern Sudan have refused a United Nations request to allow a convoy to enter the area and bring food to 900,000 people facing starvation there, a Western relief official said in a telephone interview Friday.

The official said the Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar's representative in Sudan, Winston R. Prattley, had appealed to rebel forces in recent weeks for safe passage for the convoy of 60 white trucks, which were waiting at the Kenyan border.

The rebels have not allowed any significant shipment of grain to enter the region they hold in months.

A spokesman for the Office of Emergency Operations in Africa, Salim Lone, said the combined effects of the drought and civil strife has left southern Sudan perhaps the hardest hit of all famine areas in Africa.

U.S. officials upset Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — U.S. insistence that some Americans may still be held prisoners in Vietnam obstructs efforts to locate the remains of U.S. servicemen missing in action, Vietnam's official Communist Party newspaper said Sunday.

"According to foreign sources, some senior officials of the U.S. administration have just declared that they are ready to use force, if necessary, to free any American prisoners of war they know to be still imprisoned in Indochina," the Nhan Dan newspaper said.

A text of the commentary was carried by the Vietnam News Agency monitored in Bangkok.

Meanwhile, Lt. Col. Mather said Saturday upon returning from Hanoi, the Vietnamese capital, that Vietnam has handed over to the United States results of investigations into 49 reports of remains or crash sites involving Americans missing from the Vietnam War.

"We got some specific information back on these 49 cases they've investigated," Mather told a news conference.

Brazilians loot supermarkets

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Angry customers looted supermarkets in Rio de Janeiro Saturday after shopkeepers marked up prices despite a government-decreed price freeze, police said.

The freeze is part of the government's sweeping new economic program against inflation announced Friday by President Jose Sarney. The program includes a wage freeze and a new currency, the cruzado, to replace the cruzeiro.

"Midland's legacy is strong. . . our future is as bright as we choose to make it."

Midland's first citizens were faced with tremendous challenges and opportunities. Today, as Midland embarks on its second 100 years, challenges and opportunities of a different nature face our city and its citizens. The spirit and enthusiasm of our citizens will continue to play a large role as we move forward in accomplishing the objectives we set for ourselves as a city.

I believe in Midland's future, and I ask for your vote for Mayor on April 5, 1986.

ISSUES

- Continuation of our Capital improvement projects: These projects must continue to meet stringent criteria as to both public need as well as the resources available to fund the improvements.
- Diversification of industry: Our efforts must be directed toward securing new industry as well as insuring a healthy environment for our oil and gas industry.
- Quality of life: It is vitally important for Midlands future to continue development of park sites, to reduce crime even further, and to secure adequate water supplies for the city.
- Productivity and efficiency: Midland must maintain efforts to maximize the efficiency and productivity of the city work force.

Counties forecasts

Midland, Ector, Crane, Upton, Reagan, Glasscock, Andrews, Gaines, Martin, Howard, Borden, Dawson, Tom Green, Sterling, Irion and Coke: Today sunny and continued mild, high in the upper 70s. Southwest wind 5 to 15 mph. Tonight and Monday partly cloudy, low in the mid 40s, high near 70.

Warm days to continue

From Staff and Wire Reports

Another unseasonably warm winter day will be in store for Midlanders today and Monday.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is calling for a high temperature today in the upper 70s, a low tonight in the mid-40s and a high Monday near 70 degrees.

Winds are to be southwesterly tonight at 5 to 15 mph. Skies are to be partly cloudy tonight and Monday.

The peak temperature Saturday was 80 degrees, and the record high temperature for a March 1 is 85 degrees in 1976. The overnight low was 38 degrees. The record low for a Feb. 2 is 9 degrees in 1980.

STATE

Sunny skies and mild temperatures were the rule across Texas Saturday as south to southwest winds swept warm, dry air into the state.

Statewide, temperatures were mild on the first day of March with readings in the 60s and 70s, according to the National Weather Service.

The late-afternoon extremes ranged from 60 degrees at Sherman in north Central Texas to 79 degrees at McAllen in the lower Valley.

South to southwest winds at speeds of 10 to 20 mph were common across most of the state, although winds were gusting up to 30 mph at Waco.

The forecast for North Texas calls for sunny skies through Monday, with highs today in the upper 70s and lows in the 40s. Monday should be slightly cooler with highs in the upper 60s and lower 70s.

West Texas should have sunny days and fair nights, with highs ranging from the 60s to near 90. Lows Sunday night should be in the 30s and 40s, the weather service said.

South Texas' forecast calls for highs today and Monday in the 70s and 80s, with lows tonight from the 40s to the 60s. There is a slight chance of showers in southeast Texas Sunday night and Monday.

NATION

High wind forced cold air over all of Florida on Saturday, with snow over the northeastern part of the state, but unseasonably warm weather covered the West.

Northwesterly wind blew at 20 to 40 mph across all of Florida, and freezing temperatures were expected by Sunday morning all the way into South Florida.

A hard freeze warning was posted over extreme northern Florida, but the National Weather Service said the strong wind would help prevent formation of damaging frost in southern and central Florida.

Rusk teacher first honoree of chamber

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Rusk Elementary School first grade teacher JoAnn Sipko believes the ideal teacher is one who accepts a student for what they are and meets their needs at whatever level.

"If I haven't touched base with every single child, then I can't say that my day has been a 100 percent success," said Mrs. Sipko, who has been recognized by the Midland Chamber of Commerce as its first Outstanding Teacher in Midland. The award will be given monthly.

Mrs. Sipko also believes that she, herself, must pass a series of tests to ensure her students earn top grades in school — and the most important one is whether her class likes her.

"You can't let the academic pressure take away from the most important part of teaching and that is the stroking and hugging," she said. "These are children. They have to want to come to school to see Mrs. Sipko."

According to Betty Jeanne Moran, 2109 Wydewood, this teacher passed the test.

She knows from personal experience that Mrs. Sipko "goes an extra mile" to maintain a good relationship with the children in her classes.

In September 1984, Mrs. Moran's six-year-old daughter Kathy, who had been in perfect health her entire life, suddenly developed sporadic headaches and nausea. A few days later, doctors discovered the girl had a potentially fatal brain tumor and the family flew immediately to Fort Worth where they were to stay for two months while Kathy underwent surgery twice.

"JoAnn was one of the first people to call the hospital," said Mrs. Moran. "She just seemed to know the right things to say and do."

Mrs. Moran said the morning before the first surgery was most terrifying. "Kathy was frightened and not allowed to eat and my husband and I were going through the emotions of wondering if Kathy would survive this delicate surgery and what the future would bring. I was so grateful to have the large packet of letters from Mrs. Sipko's class and a tape of songs and jokes by the children. She had sent it just to help pass this dreadful time and it did, as nothing else could have," she said.

As Kathy recovered in the weeks following the first surgery, other gifts arrived at the hospital including a framed eight-by-ten photograph of the class with "We Miss You Kathy" written on the chalkboard behind them.

The second surgery also was a success to the amazement of her doctors, Mrs. Moran said.

"At home, JoAnn brought in meals and took our 'motherless' children out for pizza and other outings."

Kathy and her parents returned home two months later. But soon afterward, the girl was hospitalized in Midland for treatment of a second spinal infection. "Even though Kathy was taught by a homebound teacher, JoAnn visited her everyday to praise her work and encourage her progress," Mrs. Moran said.

In the weeks following, Kathy was allowed to return to school, but went home frequently with headaches. "At first she tired easily but JoAnn worked with her constantly to help her keep up and stay motivated about learning. Kathy's transition back was an easy one. The class had been prepared so that none of the children ever commented in an unkind way about her missing hair, the scar, or any other problem she was having. Kathy loved being back in school," Mrs. Moran said.

Merchants to 'take off their hats to teachers'

From Staff Reports

The Midland City Council Parent-Teacher Association and the Midland Independent School District will tip its hat to teachers in observance of Texas Public Schools Week beginning Monday.

Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi said "Hats off to Teachers" is a well-deserved and long overdue salute to MISD teachers for their dedication and tireless efforts on behalf of Midland children.

"The purpose is to show teachers we care and to encourage all citizens to give teachers a smile and a thanks for the gift of knowledge they give our children," he said.

City Council PTA President Geriann Green said 31 merchants will join the celebration by offering teachers and other MISD employees special discounts.

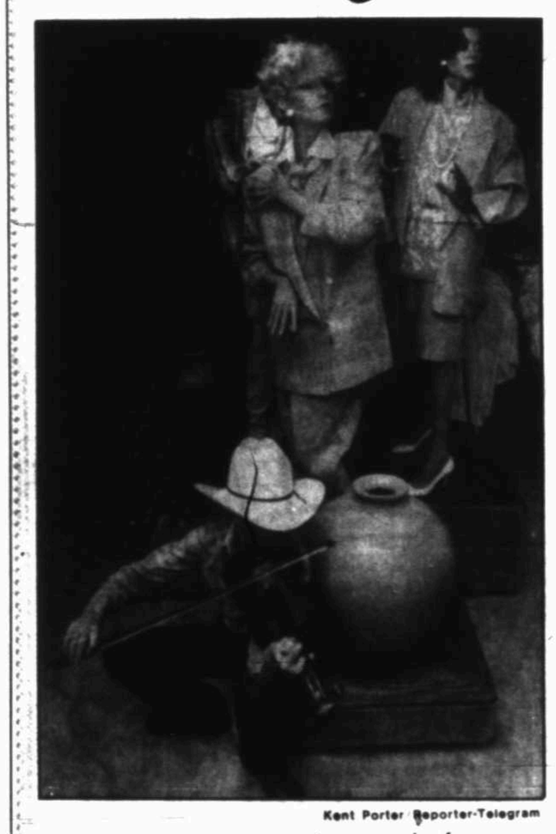

"We have everything from bargain manicures to lube jobs, from specials on bakery goods to cut-rate fitness club memberships, from ballet performances to plumbing services. All the merchants we approached were thrilled to have an opportunity to show teachers their appreciation," she said.

The festivities include a free private skating party for MISD teachers and their families from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Thursday at Playland Skate Center, 1004-A Andrews Highway.

Merchants will provide discounts to teachers throughout the week.

Participating merchants and organizations include Playland Skate Center, Stop Smoking Clinic, Body Shop for Women, Fitness Connexxion for Men, Chili's, May Plumbing, Oil and Lube Center, Dellwood Lanes and Fairmont Park Lanes, Family Video, Ballet Midland, ARC Truck and Auto Body, Hairwoks Salon, Goldings, Creative Schoolhouse, Pages and Prints, Town and Country Cleaners, national Video, The Bar, Matney Shoe Box, Backstage, Fashion Cleaners, Murray's Delicatessen, Murray's Bakery, North Park Cinema, Fuddruckers, Midland-Odessa Symphony, Abacus Computers Inc., Grigsby's Ragdoll, Burger King, Petroleum Museum, and Dr. James Carpenter

Musicians spend afternoon fiddling around at mall

Kent Porter Reporter-Telegram

Dillard's fashion mannequins turn deaf ears as Brian Fowler, a 12-year-old fiddler from Snyder, warmed up for a fiddling contest Saturday at the Midland Park Mall.

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Like most shopping centers, the Midland Park Mall is not known for its down-home ambiance. But visitors approaching the mall's central court Saturday afternoon found themselves in the middle of an old-fashioned hoedown.

Cutting through the piped-in Muzak were the rustic strains of Texas Swing breakdowns and old country waltzes.

The Texas Old Time Fiddler's Association was putting on its annual fiddling contest at the mall, and several hundred people showed up to tap their toes along with the music.

"It's part of our American heritage," said Darrell Boen of Odessa, who emcee'd the contest.

Boen said fiddlers showed up from as far away as Austin and Alamagordo, N.M., to compete. Most displayed the distinctive Texas fiddling technique.

"Texas has its own style," said Boen. "Don't ask me to describe it."

Others were more willing to supply a definition.

"It's the old Bob Wills takeoff," said Bobby McCall, a fiddler from Plainview.

"Before Bob Wills came along there was just country and hillbilly music," McCall said. "He added the jazz and the swing to it."

A fiddle is a violin with strings of steel instead of gut, which gives the instrument "its twangy and high-pitched sound," McCall said. "Other than that, it's the same instrument."

There were fiddlers aplenty in the mall Saturday, milling around the Dillard's entrance waiting for their chance to play.

"The mark of a good fiddler is to play a good breakdown and then come back and play a beautiful waltz," said Stephanie Lyell, a Gatesville fiddler who did double duty as a judge.

Smith hangs on every word uttered in Bunton's court

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Jim Smith is a congenial chap.

What's said, he takes down most obligingly and without fuss, feud, favor or waver.

Smith, the federal court reporter for U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton, records the spoken word and printable sounds via codes on his mechanical shorthand machine and translates the decipherable letters into plain, readable language.

"Jimmy's a hard worker," said the judge.

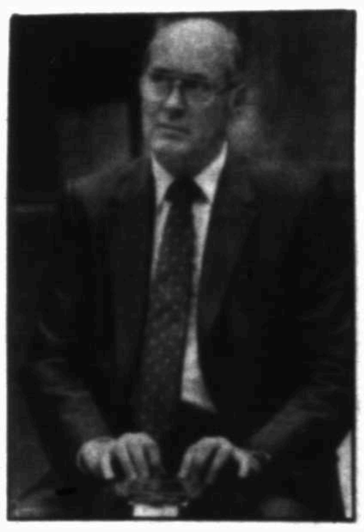

And testifying to that is the volume of transcribed pages — between 19,000 and 20,000 — which he turned out in 1985. "That's a lot of typed pages," observed Bunton. "And the pages have to conform to very rigid standards. It's very exacting." His work more than doubled that of any of the other federal court reporters in the sprawling Western District of Texas, which stretches westward from the Austin-San Antonio-Waco area to El Paso.

The primary reason Smith is so prolific is because the judge works steadily. He stays busy by never allowing time to idle.

"We try a lot of lawsuits," Bunton said. "We try more lawsuits than anybody. We try substantial lawsuits that involve sufficient sums of money which behooves the lawyers that lost the case to appeal the decision."

Bunton said Smith "gets along very well with the 'powers that be' in New Orleans where all of our appeals go." The judge hired Smith in late 1979 when Bunton, then an Odessa lawyer and president of the State Bar of Texas, was appointed to the federal judgeship. Smith has never been docked by the appellate court because he gets the court records to the circuit judges on time, Bunton said.

Support groups help computer owners cope with their machines

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Having problems coping with that $3,000 computer you bought to solve all your problems?

Many Midlanders are, and to cope with them they have resorted to forming computer support groups or clubs to work out the mysteries of their expensive machines.

About four years ago Pat Sayers, chairmen of Midland's Computer Interest Group, bought an Apple computer for $3,000.

After one year of trying to operate it, she realized she had the wrong computer for the type of work she was doing.

Perfecting one-liners a must for marital squabbling

In their book, "How to Avoid Love and Marriage," authors Dan Greenburg and Suzanne O'Malley take a delightful look at some sure-fire ways to ruin a marriage or relationship.

As you might expect, the book concentrates on subjects such as sex, money, nagging personal habits and fighting.

The latter — the part about fighting — was of particular interest. Marital squabbles have always intrigued me. I have the greatest respect for people who can inflict verbal wounds by merely stringing together a few choice words and delivering them with the iciness of an Alaskan sunrise. Better yet, the cutting remarks can be enhanced by arching an eyebrow and utilizing a distictively superior voice.

Both techniques are guaranteed to grate on your mate's nerves which, after all, is the entire point of arguing, or so the book says.

My interest in this subject is probably based on the fact that as a child I was deprived of marital fights. In the years I lived at home, my parents engaged in only two up-front, face-to-face disputes, and both were so trite they could hardly qualify for the Street Fighters Hall of Fame.

The first was over whether or not my dad would attend a golf tournament instead of his oldest daughter's college graduation ceremony.

He lost hands down. Never had a chance.

The other was over alcohol and whether or not it would be served at the rehearsal dinner of my wedding. Mother said "no," because "ladies from the church will be present." Dad said "yes," because "I'm not going to host a party at the country club and then offer nothing stronger to drink than Diet Dr Pepper."

I, being only the groom-to-be, did not get to vote.

"The man of the house" lost this one, too, though he did gain an unsolicited endorsement from me.

Realizing early that the husband had a dismal winning record in these matters, I avoided fighting tactics during my marriage. Instead, I sulked and pouted a lot, feigning illnesses when necessary and whining excessively about things that didn't go my way.

This proved moderately rewarding but, through it all, my fascination with marital squabbles continued. I studied the great fighters — observing married friends, studying Neil Simon films and reading "how-to" books.

What I learned was that when you choose to engage in marital fighting you had better be quick with the one-liner. A person who has to stop and think about a response to a verbal jab is a person who will be left far behind.

Still, not everyone is equipped to handle such pressure. Improvising might become necessary. That is where Greenburg and Ms. O'Malley enter the picture. In their book they offer several simple, easy-to-remember one-liners the novice can memorize and use when appropriate. Here are three examples:

1) "Pardon me for living."

2) "Could you speak up a little? They can't hear you in Europe."

3) "I'm seeing the real you for the first time."

All three are valid, of course, but they will be even more effective if you put your hands on your hips and use a condenscending voice when uttering the words.

As good as those three suggestions are, though, more will be needed when you enter the exciting world of marital discord. On a particularly eventful night you might easily use a couple dozen. Until you come up with your own list, here are some of my favorites. Feel free to clip and save.

— "You would say that, wouldn't you?"

— "So, you want to get down on that level, do you?"

— "Who died and made you Dr. Joyce Brothers?"

— "You're getting more like your mother everyday."

— "Boy, you're some little actor, aren't you?"

— "Go ahead and throw it. That should make you feel like a big man."

And, of course, there is the all-time classic that should be stored away and used only after your mate has made a very logical point you can't possibly dispute.

When that happens, look mildly distracted and innocently mutter, "I'm sorry. Did you say something?"

Gary Ott is city editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

SIPKO

Today, the girl is as "normal and healthy as any child and is doing well in school," said Mrs. Moran. "We all appreciate the love and friendship shown to us by this exceptionally caring teacher."

SMITH

And Smith, 53, is diligently careful with his courtroom records.

"MOST OF THE TIME," said the judge, "Jimmy drives to El Paso (and elsewhere), because he can't run the risk of losing his work product" by traveling on the airlines.

Were Smith's notes of a week's courtroom work lost, "Then, we've got a week's deal wiped out," Bunton said, "and that's the record."

"He's careful. He drives carefully," Bunton said of Smith, "and I know he's going to get back with it."

Wherever the judge goes, there goes Smith. Mostly, they are in Midland or Pecos where the judge regularly holds court. But the judge does hear and decide cases elsewhere in the Western District of Texas, which takes in Austin, San Antonio, Waco, El Paso, Del Rio, Midland and Pecos. The judge occasionally goes outside the state, such as to Mississippi, to reign over the court.

Smith goes, too.

The mild-mannered Smith had been a court reporter for the 161st State District Court in Odessa since 1961, when Bunton in late 1979 recruited him.

"I knew he was a hard worker," Bunton said. "His work product was excellent. He was well-respected and well-liked by the attorneys."

And he has another attribute: "He's younger than I am," said the judge, who quipped, "Isn't everybody." Bunton is 61.

BUNTON, WHOSE wit and humor afford him a penchant for kidding, said Smith "doesn't mind getting razzed." For example, Bunton in open court will identify his court reporter as the "man with the wig on." Smith is obviously balding and shuns toupees.

"Jimmy just smiles and does his work cheerfully," Bunton said.

"It's Smith's responsibility to record every word that's said." He noted that Smith has to do some interpretative reporting. Those times come when witnesses use strong or "bad" accents, mispronunciations, or even use relatively unfamiliar or esoteric words, terms or place names. Bunton said that Smith's oil-patch background benefits the court reporter on oil-field terms, such as "morning tours" and "evening tours," which are pronounced "towers."

"I've had court reporters — never Jimmy Smith — to ask them (the witnesses) to slow down," but Smith operates fast on the Stenograph keyboard.

And he probably clicked right along when he was barbering, which exactly was what he was doing before he started going to court regularly as a reporter.

"I didn't like barbering. That was the problem," Smith said. But that's not all which he didn't fancy.

— He tried farming. He nixed that. "I never did like farming." He grew up on a farm near Hermleigh northwest of Sweetwater in West Texas.

— He served in the U.S. Air Force during the Korean War. Military life wasn't his ideal. "I didn't do too much of anything."

— He worked in the oil field as a well-service hand. He had enough of that.

— He then tried barbering after going to barber school in Austin.

— He looked into the Texas Department of Public Safety. He was enrolled in the DPS Academy in the late 1950s. "They told me my time didn't belong to me but to the state of Texas. It was kind of like the military." He said "goodbye" to a career as a highway patrolman.

"I RESIGNED and went to school (Stenograph Institute of Texas in Abilene) for this business." His brother, Harvey, also took the night course while they were still barbering in Sweetwater and now is a court reporter in Gonzales.

In his earlier years as a court reporter, Smith had a notion he wanted to be a federal-court reporter. He didn't hesitate to leap for the job when Bunton got the federal judgeship.

"I'd be retired instead of tired (had he stayed with the state-court job)," Smith said and smiled. "You don't look back, anyway."

Smith's work-a-day schedule doesn't afford him time to moonlight. "I don't have the time." His wife, Jerrie, helps him with the typing and book-keeping.

Though he admittedly wasn't fond of barbering, Smith said he cut hair for $1, $1.25 or $1.50 a head "for my health."

"You have to remember," he explained, "if you're not on your feet, you're not making a dime, either."

Without doubt, he does enjoy his court work.

"He (Bunton) works hard," Smith said, "and it's often long hours. It's always been a fun thing. It's hard work, please understand. And you get weary, but you get over it."

COMPUTERS

"There I was marooned with a computer and printer I had to put together myself," Ms. Sayers said.

Most people are not very knowledgeable about computers, but will buy them anyway, Ms. Sayers said.

Don Carlton, chariman of the Midland Apple User group agrees.

"Computers are fairly complicated and a lot of people who get into it, don't know a lot about it."

Also Carlton said, once people become owners, "the learning is not that easy to come by."

Many computer club members are small businessmen who have bought computers, but haven't invested in training programs.

Large companies train their employees, but many smaller ones don't want to pay for training, Ms. Sayers said.

"We have a lot of little people out here who want to use computers..., but can't afford the $35 per hour course fee," she said.

Others who join the six computer groups in Midland want to learn more about their computers.

"There's no one person who can keep track of all the innovations being made now," said Rosemary Marler, an independent computer consultant.

A complete grasp of knowledge about computers will probably always be out of reach, said Gary Covington, with Midland Micro Computers Association.

"Since the very beginning the computing engine has been unconsciously an effort to emulate the human mind...which really hasn't been defined.

"No other machine attempts to do that," Covington said.

"The one thing we use to generate computers is minds. As computers expand so does the mind that built it."

Along with providing intellectual support on dealing with computers, the clubs also operate as consumer groups.

The groups get discounts on disks and other equipment by buying in bulk. Members also spread warnings about computer brands to avoid. Many members join to get pointers on the best types of computers to buy for their needs, Ms. Sayers said.

"We're very consumer oriented. It's a good place to find out what you need to stay away from. We're all very cost conscience," Ms. Marler said.

"We've had people that come in and they just want to find out what it can do. You don't have to own a computer," she said.

But the main goal of the clubs remains to reconcile the owner and its computer. Learning how to cope with your computer makes life much easier, said Ms. Sayers.

"It's a drag to have to go to work and think of it as a monster you have to attack every day.

"People should think of it as a challenge," she said.

Clements to address luncheon meeting of Downtown Lions Club

From Staff Reports

Clements

Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements will be the guest speaker at the Midland Downtown Lions Club at noon Wednesday at Midland Center.

Clements is seeking the GOP nomination against Kent Hance and Tom Loeffler. The victor is expected to face Democratic incumbent Mark White in the November general election. White faces token opposition in the Democratic primary in May.

Clements, who was defeated by Mark White in the last election, served as governor from 1979 to 1983. He is also a former Deputy Secretary of Defense and a member of the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

The Wednesday meeting is open to the public and the luncheon is priced at $6 per person.

FIDDLERS

The competition was divided into four age groups, with each group being judged by three members of another group. Each fiddler played a breakdown (hoedown), a waltz and a third tune of his or her choice.

"The most important things you look for are quality of sound, timing and the difficulty of the tune," said Ms. Lyell, who then shouldered her own fiddle and took the stage, accompanied by her husband, "Wild Bill" Lyell, on guitar.

"It's like a rodeo or golf circuit — you play against the same people every weekend," Boen said. "It is a contest, but we are trying to get them (the public) interested in fiddle playing. We just put 'em on a good show."

About $2,500 in prizes were to be given out for those finishing first through sixth in each age group (21 and under, 22-46, 47-59 and 60 and over); for the grand champion fiddler; the grand champion guitarist; the winners of the twin-fiddling contest (first through third); the oldest fiddler; the youngest fiddler; and the fiddler traveling the longest distance to get to the contest.

Texas, Our Texas

A shortcourse on Texas history most Americans and many others throughout the world are familiar with is full of hallowed references to the Alamo and San Jacinto, and such legendary figures as Davy Crockett, Jim Bowie and William B. Travis. That shortcourse is respectful, accurate and fully appropriate for a state wherein legends, like the land itself, are big, bold and proud.

But today's observance of Texas' Sesquicentennial, while wholeheartedly embracing that aspect of the state's history, should not overshadow the simple ceremony 150 years ago today that became a direct route to the Texas of 1986.

Texas has come a long way in the century and a half since Texas leaders met at Washington-on-the-Brazos March 2, 1836, to sign a declaration of their independence from Mexico — a move they hoped would offer some relief from hostilities with Mexico. While they took that historic step, Travis and his defenders of the Alamo fell to the Mexican army, a fact that set the stage for the bloody retaliation at San Jacinto.

But the blood of the men who died in the Alamo and the blood of the others who fought for Texas' independence was spilled in the name of liberty that lives on in modern times.

Texans have always been possessed with a special breed of independence and gallantry. The qualities that led early-day settlers to fight for their rights, their homes and their sovereignty lives on in modern-day Texans who risk economic hardship or failure simply to make a small portion of the state their own. That in itself is challenge enough for most of the state's residents.

The future undoubtedly will be blurred by monumental challenges which will require Texans to take unparalleled risks. Without a doubt, the residents of Texas will meet those challenges with the courage of those who met at Washington-on-the-Brazos to pave the way for Texas' independence from Mexico and who fought and died at the Alamo and San Jacinto.

Even after 150 years, Texas is only at its beginning. The future awaits.

Just a reminder

Granted, it's easy for Midland's motorists to "forget" the importance of driving slowly through school traffic crossings, particularly when the school year is this far along.

The slower speed required through the crossings may become a bit ridiculous to some when all the youngsters obviously are in the classrooms and there are no children attempting to cross thoroughfares. So, if a police car isn't parked nearby, the traffic speed seems to increase steadily as the year wears on.

We fully appreciate the limits of motorists' patience and the limitations of police department personnel where stationing officers near Midland's numerous school crossings is concerned. But in recent weeks we've received numerous telephone calls and comments about speeding through school crossings, and we've noticed some of that tendency ourselves.

Nothing is more tragic than when an accident in a school crossing injures or kills a youngster. Only one such incident is too many. Perhaps the Midland Police Department can beef up its patrol of school crossings for awhile to remind motorists of the law.

For the motorist in a hurry, paying a traffic ticket is much preferable to the trauma of injuring or killing a child in a school crosswalk.

Another View: Volcker's tough job

It's the job of Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker to swim against the tide. In times when everyone else is relaxing because tight-money policies seem about to bring inflation under control, the Fed has to start easing the money supply to prevent recession. When everyone else is enjoying a boom induced by lower interest rates, the Fed has to start raising them to prevent inflation.

And so it was that — with the dollar happily dropping against European and Japanese currencies, with American exports picking up as a result, with oil prices plunging and most economic indicators pointing upward in response, with the stock market in a record upsurge on the assumption that interest rates were falling — Volcker recently announced to Congress that he's starting to think about the coming downside of all this good news. Interest rates, he said, should not be pushed down further, as everyone had anticipated; the dollar has "fallen enough."

The stock market immediately plunged and the foreign currency markets reversed. But the next day the stock market resumed its jagged climb: If Volcker's psychological intervention is to be successful, his remarks will have to produce a more moderate response in the markets. The real risk that he will be over- or under-heeded is what's so tricky about the job. That and the continual risk that the Fed will choose to start fighting the next cyclical demon too soon — cutting off a recovery before it has to, pumping its way out of a downturn before it's safe to do so.

Volcker has made such mistakes before, and the addition of new Reagan appointees more ideological than flexible in their economic responses only makes it more likely that mistakes will be made again. Indeed, that may be why Volcker took the very unusual step of speaking out so plainly about his future intentions. His control over the Fed's policies is less certain nowadays; speaking out of school may be a way of keeping his thumb on the scale inside the Fed.

One can only hope he succeeds. Volcker's warning about the risks of a new round of inflation is unpleasant to hear in the middle of an upsurge, but it is probably correct. If the dollar keeps dropping, the rising cost of imports and the leeway given to American business to raise their own prices to match the imports eventually will become inflationary. If the Fed can keep that from happening by taking modest steps now — like not easing interest rates any further for a while — it might prevent the economy from reaching a peak it otherwise would have, but it will also prevent it from hitting the next low.

U.S. knows locations of terrorist camps

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's response to terrorist attacks against Americans has become as stylized as a minuet and just about as effective. There is the initial shock, expressions of grief and anger, followed by tough talk from the administration about getting to the root of terrorism. Then nothing.

Jack Anderson

The Christmastime attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports, which left five Americans, including an 11-year-old girl, dead followed this pattern of impotence step by dreary step. In that instance, the president poured out his rhetorical rage on Libya, while cautiously ignoring the equally guilty Iranians and Syrians. The United States imposed sanctions on Libya — but there was no retaliation.

Iran, in particular, has grown fearless to the point of arrogance in thumbing its nose at America. Few episodes were more revealing than the behind-the-scenes exchange of last March between Secretary of State George Shultz and Iranian Prime Minister Mir Hossein Mussavi last year.

Concerned about American hostages being held by Iranian-controlled terrorists, Shultz sent a stern secret message to the foreign ministry in Tehran by way of a Swiss diplomat. It warned the Khomeini regime that it would "suffer the consequences" if any harm befell the American hostages.

Shultz was especially upset over the reported torture of the kidnapped CIA station chief in Beirut, William Buckley. According to our sources, Buckley was smuggled from Lebanon to Tehran, where he died of a heart attack brought on by mistreatment. His torture and death occurred just a few days after Shultz's warning.

Partly in response to Shultz's secret threat, the Iranian prime minister took to the airwaves on May 28 to ridicule the United States. Even as he spoke, he was probably aware, our sources say, that the plan to hijack TWA flight 847 had already been set in motion.

Prime Minister Mussavi — related to the terrorist family of Lebanese Mussavis who have plotted nearly every attack on Americans in the Middle East since April 1983 — was quoted on the Iranian radio as saying:

"The United States cannot do a damn thing about these threats or through other actions. We have many times punched the United States in the mouth, and we are ready to do this once again over the world. The United States must know that we are able to turn the Persian Gulf into a quicksand for them to drown in."

Actually, Mussavi himself must know that U.S. intelligence has pinpointed the exact location of terrorist training centers in Iran that would be ideal targets for military retaliation. In their sublime self-confidence, the Iranians haven't gone to any great lengths to hide the camps, even featuring them occasionally in broadcasts and interviews with recruits.

Mussavi's wife, Zahra Rahnevard, is the director of one training camp: Beheshtia, west of Tehran. The camp's specialty is training non-Iranian female terrorists.

According to reports smuggled out of Iran, Mussavi's wife is about 30 years old and was initially trained in Palestinian guerrilla camps. Though she coordinates training programs throughout Iran, she concentrates on Beheshtia, which at any one time has about 300 women between 17 and 35 from all over the world.

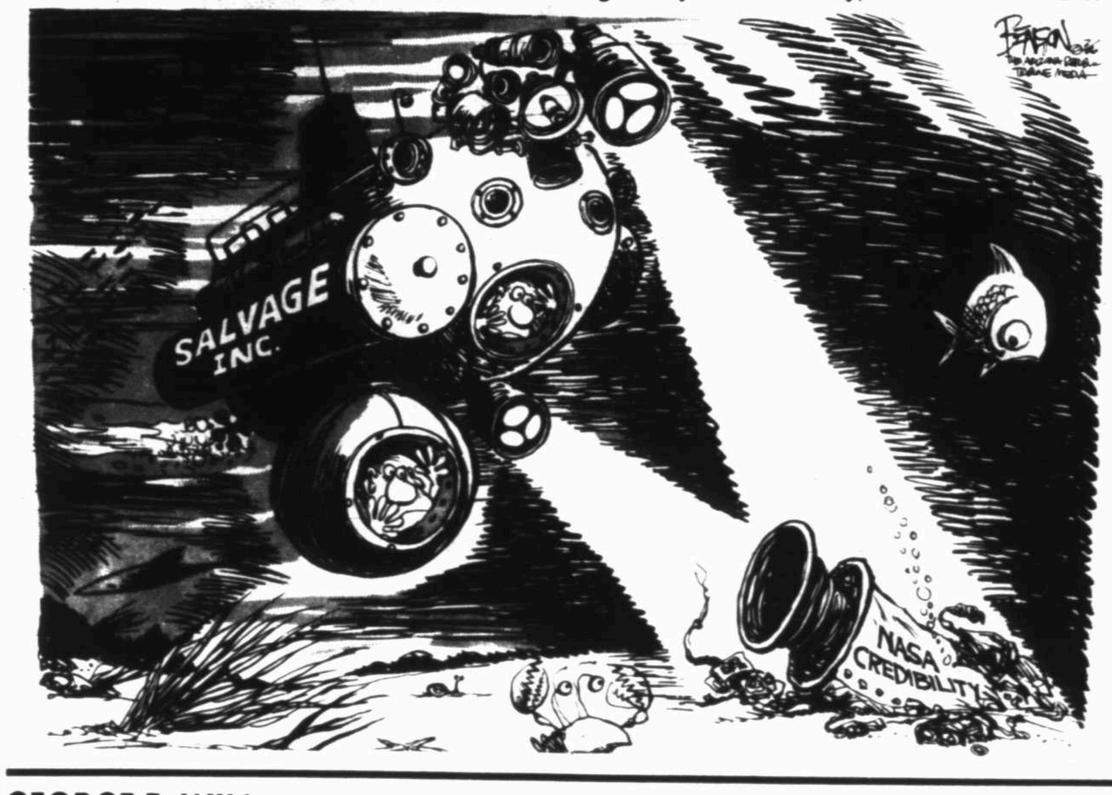

U.S. intelligence is aware of more than a dozen terrorist training centers in Iran, including at least seven for women. From secret CIA reports and our own sources deep inside Iran, we have learned the camp locations. They include:

— Vakilabad, in Khorasan province near the city of Meshed. Once used to hold Iraqi prisoners-of-war, it was converted into a terrorist training center in 1984. On the tarmac at a small airport, two Iran Air jetliners are parked for use in practice hijackings.

One of those who trained at Vakilabad was Ali Atwa, the would-be hijacker who missed TWA flight 847 at the Athens airport. He was arrested there but was later released to join his comrades as one of the demands for releasing the hostages. Atwa had spent at least two weeks in the Vakilabad camp, learning airliner cabin layout and controls, and then took a three-day course at Manzariyeh Park, near the Ayatollah Khomeini's Tehran residence.

— Two other centers specializing in hijacking courses are located near Tehran's Mehrabad airport and near Shiraz in southern Iran. From Saudi Arabian intelligence, the CIA believes the Iranians have trained at least 400 airplane hijackers, many of them non-Iranians.

GEORGE F. WILL

Chicago's politics: Has bombing stopped?

CHICAGO — Recently, Mayor Harold Washington announced: "'Council wars' are over. Peace has broken out. Come out of the cellar, Chicago. The bombing has stopped."

What? In "Beirut on the Lake"? Say it ain't so, Fast Eddie.

George F. Will

It is not so, says Edward ("Fast Eddie") Vrdolyak, chairman of the Cook County Democratic Party, alderman and leader of the 29 aldermen who have been the bombardiers against Mayor Washington's 21 supporters on the city council. There are just 50 seats. There are no aldermanic Switzerlands — no noncombatants.

Vrdolyak came to politics as a bee to honey — naturally, instinctively — but not in a beeline. He comes from the neighborhood near the south-side steel mills, but by way of a more refined south-side institution, the University of Chicago Law School. The school did not refine him excessively.

This morning he is wearing a light gray suit that perfectly matches his eyes, which perfectly match, in color and chilliness, Lake Michigan in winter. His shirt has French cuffs, his gold watch is thin as a communion wafer. There the flash stops. He is as functional as a ball peen hammer, this urban politician of the old school.

In Miami in 1972, he was a member, with Mayor Daley, of the group of Illinois delegates who were refused seats by the "reformers" running George McGovern's convention. The McGovernites said they, not the likes of Vrdolyak, represented "the people." McGovern managed to lose Cook County — quite an achievement for a Democrat. (Mondale carried it handily in 1984.) Cook County's "regular" Democrats deliver for, but only for, friends.

There is a twinkle — or what passes for a twinkle — in Vrdolyak's eyes when he says he would love to see the precinct captains' manual that Ferdinand Marcos issued in the Philippines district where Marcos beat Aquino 13,643 to zero. Vrdolyak does not seem like the sort who laughs a lot, at least not in the presence of Eastern journalists and other strangers. But he chuckles at the memory of Marcos explaining that he has a lot of relatives in that district.

In Chicago, the organization practices reductionist politics: Reduce the problem to bite-size components, then bite. One key is money on Election Day — say, $10,000 a ward. You spend it legitimately, openly, Vrdolyak says, giving receipts to the folks you hire to encourage — OK, if necessary to harry — people to vote.

Listen up. Vrdolyak speaks an American vernacular almost beautiful in its spareness. It is the short-hammer-stroke school of rhetoric.

What does his typical Chicago voter — "Barney Bungalow," Vrdolyak calls this guy — want from government? "Get out of my face — make the streets safe, pick up my garbage, otherwise get away from me." Has Mayor Washington really, as Washington claims, ended patronage? "What a question." But what about the court decision that forbids hiring or firing or awarding contracts for political reasons? "There's always a way." How about the improved press notices Mayor Washington is getting in out-of-town newspapers? "He's gotta run here."

Mayor Washington was at the game in Miami when the Bears suffered there their only loss of the season. Vrdolyak proposed that Washington be banned from attending Bears away games. That was a joke, son. So — sort of — was the episode early in Washington's tenure when, in a city-council meeting, Vrdolyak, asking Washington for recognition to make a point of order, said: "To someone of your gender it should be 'pretty please.'" Washington's riposte was a threat to give Vrdolyak "a mouthful of something you don't want." Soon the council was voting to consider bulletproofing the chamber and the gray suits sheathing Vrdolyak's long, trim frame showed the outline of a bullet-proof vest.

The racial animosity felt by blacks helped elect Washington, Chicago's first black mayor. Racial animosity felt by whites has been used by his opponents. But racism is not, at bottom, what motivates his opponents. Washington, who is inventive at least at coining verbs, says he has "rainbowed" city government with blacks, Hispanics and women. Vrdolyak just wants it monochromed with people of any color or "gender" who will play the game by the rules he learned at Mayor Daley's knee.

In 1983 in the Democratic primary (which is the big game), Harold Washington got 36 percent of the vote and two white candidates got 33 and 31. In 1987, Vrdolyak's "regulars" may run one white candidate, or — it could happen, he says — support one black candidate against Washington. If so, go back to the cellars, Chicago.

Vrdolyak can hardly wait. His focus on his turf leaves him only marginally interested in talking about the national party's problems. It was ever thus.

RUSSELL BAKER

Got TV troubles? Check the 'penguin' factor!

When I turn on public television I see penguins. A year or two ago it was seals, but now it's penguins. They're real penguins, too, not the sort of penguins you might see on commercial TV.

Russell Baker

On commercial TV, penguins would have to be armed men wearing penguin suits for purposes sure to produce gunfire.

When I hear gunfire on television I know I've got a commercial channel. In the culture of commercial television, death is almost always administered by gun in the noisiest fashion possible, whereas public-television deaths usually occur quietly with the help of poison.

This is because public television takes place in London, a city that does not share the passion of American cities for noise. Commercial television takes place in Los Angeles, the home office of motoring.

This explains why the identifying vehicle of commercial television is the car. The identifying vehicle of public television is the horse-drawn carriage, which tells us that the London in which public television takes place is 19th-century London.

Paradoxically, until about 20 years ago, the identifying vehicle of commercial TV was the horse. At that time, before commercial television settled in Los Angeles for endless car chases, it dwelt so exclusively among 19th-century gunslingers that sages said of the networks, "They're not networks; they're stables."

Relocation to Los Angeles changed that. Now commercial television has ceded horse and 19th century to public television. This is why you never see a couple of handsome young cops blazing away at fleeing gangsters in a high-speed horse chase through Beverly Hills.

This is only one aspect of the cultural split that has been widening between public and commercial television in recent years. Take public-television's penguins, for example. They indicate a curious urge by public television to turn itself into a zoo, just as commercial TV's proliferating corpses betray its irresistible desire to become a morgue.

The extremes represented by these two impulses can be detected when you ask what is quintessentially public television and what is its commercial counterpart. If I turn on my TV set, for instance, and find not penguins, nor 19th-century London, nor quiet poisoners, I still know it's public television if:

1) Bert and Ernie are performing,
2) Julia Child is cooking,
3) Mr. Rogers is talking to small children,
4) Beverly Sills is introducing Luciano Pavarotti,
5) Leo Buscaglia is lecturing on the value of love,
6) the Monty Python company is satirizing the BBC,
7) mulch is being discussed on the Victory Garden, or, what is more likely,
8) I am watching the 10th rerun of any of the above.

What are commercial television's cultural equivalents to Bert and Ernie? Only a tot can say for sure, but my guess is that if I were 4 years old, the only thing on commercial television that would seem to be in Bert's and Ernie's league for laughs would be one of the localju news shows.

Commercial TV's cultural equivalent to Julia Child? Easy. Dr. Ruth Westheimer with her cheerful advice on how to cook up a little passion no matter how tired the ingredients.

As for public TV's Luciano Pavarotti, I don't know what commercial television could do with a first-class tenor except have him bumped off in a car chase, so in finding a cultural equivalent we must find someone whose excellence embarrasses commercial television as deeply as Pavarotti might; by name, Bill Moyers.

The Leo Buscaglia of commercial TV must be someone devoted, like Dr. Buscaglia, to bringing psychic peace of mind to a nation that has forgotten how to know itself. Who else but Phil Donahue?

And the Monty Python gang where dementia alternates crazily with childish absurdity? We see its equivalent nightly on commercial TV, which presents it as serious stuff. I refer to the network news programs with their reports of events without context, interrupted by scenes of blissfully recovered constipation patients, followed by talk of the death of the race, followed by a smile.

A world of penguins and a world of speeding cars; a zoo and a morgue; but the zoo is becoming mostly a rerun.

Writers no longer just write; Now they sell products

Bill Modisett

When I got into the newspaper business in 1969 it was because I wanted to be a writer — not a celebrity and certainly not a newsmaker. For all practical purposes, it was that way for awhile. Writers were writers. They wrote about problems of the common people, problems they were familiar with personally. Celebrities were celebrities. They didn't even recognize that common people had problems.

I liked it divided that way.

But in the 17 years since things have changed. A lot. Nowadays the byword is marketing. A writer can't merely tell the story and let it go at that. The writer's "product" must be properly merchandised. The writer is called upon to be half actor, half salesman.

The trend toward newspeople becoming celebrities has been evolving over the last decade or so. It was egged on by Watergate and the resulting popularity of "investigative journalism." The two Washington Post reporters largely responsible for the unraveling of the Watergate conspiracy, Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein, did journalism both a service and a disservice. In the years following Watergate, attendance in journalism schools mushroomed. Applications to newspapers across the country increased significantly.

What once had been a ho-hum trade suddenly became attractive and, as it did, so did the glamorous life associated with journalism, which is the fancy name for reporting.

OK, I agree that journalism needed a little boost. It used to be that newspaper plants resembled below decks on a battleship. And the quality of people who inhabited newspaper offices wasn't much more attractive. Usually they were individuals who couldn't get a job anywhere else and, if they did, couldn't hold it because they were social outcasts and misfits.

Today journalism attracts individuals boasting all varieties of college degrees, including numerous holders of the masters and doctoral awards. Today's "hack" typically is a highly-educated, mobile professional.

So, yes, this trend toward celebrity status has helped the profession in a way. But in too many ways it has proven detrimental. Journalists should not lose the desire to represent the needs of the commonest individual because if they do not, who will? If we're busy being celebrities or "movie stars" who's going to pay attention when our readers can't get the garbage picked up in timely and sanitary fashion or their telephones fixed because no one cares?

Journalism still is nothing more than a job of telling the people of a community the important and the trivial happenings in that community. That's a great profession, even if it isn't that glamorous.

For journalists, celebrity status may prove an albatross that separates them from the people they are supposed to be protecting from all types of danger.

I hope that doesn't occur. It would be tragic for the entire nation if the people suddenly assumed journalists were too glamorous to hear their concerns.

SPEAKING OUT

Are your children's rights being upheld in the classroom?

By CHERYL MEARES

Cheryl Meares, a resident of Midland for 30 years, formerly was a teacher.

In a community such as Midland, with highly informed and concerned citizens, it is a common assumption that "someone else" is making certain that guidelines are being followed and that your child's rights are being upheld in the classroom. Are you confident that this is being done for your child?

Are you aware that this is a misconception? Recently an incident occurred in the Midland school system that could have been avoided if only parents and their children had been informed of their rights as provided by federal law. The reason they were not informed is the "Policies, Rules and Regulations" of the Midland Independent School District contains absolutely no reference to the rights of students and parents as provided in the Amendment to the General Education Provision Act (1978). This legislation is commonly known as the Hatch Act Amendment.

"This statute provides by Federal law that no student shall be required — without prior written parental consent — to submit to psychiatric or psychological examination, testing or treatment in which the primary purpose is to reveal information about:

(1) political affiliations,
(2) mental and psychological problems potentially embarrassing to the student or his family,
(3) sex behavior and attitudes,
(4) illegal, anti-social, and self-incriminating behavior,
(5) critical appraisals of members of the child's family,
(6) legally privileged relationships, such as those of lawyers, physicians, and ministers, or
(7) income (except to determine eligibility for financial assistance)."

"Parents who demand compliance with the Pupil Rights Amendment and its regulations are not demanding that any materials be removed or censored. Parents are demanding only that the schools obey the law which requires them to obtain written parental consent before students are subjected to any of the materials or activities covered by the Pupil Rights Amendment. The primary burden is on the schools to comply with the law, and then the parents can file a complaint if the schools disobey the law."

The regulations should be distributed to all MISD principals and teachers and published in the regulations handbook of all public schools, and any of the private schools which are recipients of public funds, directly or indirectly.

At this time, there is no availability of such copies to students or parents in the Midland school system. One should not assume that students attending private schools are safe from abuse in the classroom. It is the parents' responsibility to find out what their children are doing during classroom hours and assert parental rights.

"When a teacher intends to use materials or classroom practices covered by the Protection of Pupil Rights Amendment, the materials should be available for parental inspection in accessible places for at least a month before their intended use."

Specific descriptions should be provided with written approval from the parent and placed in the child's school file. Such record keeping is for the protection of the pupils, parents, teachers and schools. An alternative academic educational program should be provided; participants should not be punished, harassed, embarrassed, have their grades reduced or their workload increased because of their parents' decision.

On Nov. 12, 1984, new "Pupil Rights Amendment Regulations" went into effect. These regulations provided for the necessity of parental consent in any activities pertaining to "attitudes, habits, traits, opinions, beliefs, or feelings" or to "psychiatric or psychological treatment." This means activities or instruction "designed to affect behavior, emotional or attitudinal characteristics of an individual or group." Examples would be to allow outside speakers to address controversial subjects to persuade behavioral change. Role-playing can even encourage modification of attitudes and behavior.

"Parents should not be intimidated by accusations that they are 'censors' or 'enemies of public schools.'" Even the liberal National Education Association admits in the NEA Newsletter of December 3, 1984 that, "the Hatch Act now covers every classroom teacher, and every teaching method and all classroom material."

One Midland school board member addressed the rights of students in the classroom and was reprimanded by a fellow board member and was told not to get involved in such matters. "The time has come for parents to exercise their authority over their children." No one cares for your child like you do. Insist that the MISD board address this issue to protect your child in the classroom.

(Quotes are from Child Abuse in the Classroom, NEA, The Hatch Act of 1978 and Pupil Rights Amendment).

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

Proposed actions won't eliminate flood problem

I have read the account of how the city plans to handle flooding at the Maxwell Street crossing of the Northwest Drainage Channel in the Midland Reporter-Telegram. I have also carefully reviewed the two 1979 Engineering Studies of flooding in the area. What the city officials are planning to do will not be adequate to relieve the flooding in the 3200 block of Durant.

During the October 1985 rains I had occasion to carefully observe the flood-water flow pattern at the intersection of Maxwell crossing. The rain gauge in my yard indicated a little over 3 inches of rain fell in a 3-hour period. During this time water rose well over the Maxwell crossing and closed the street. The Maxwell crossing formed a dam and forced water to backflow northeast up Maxwell and collide with water coming from the opposite direction from the Goddard school-Haynes Street area to the north. This collision area formed a deep lake at the Durant and Maxwell intersection, and some water entered my garage. The water level in the draw on the downstream side of the Maxwell crossing was 15 to 18 inches lower than that flowing over the crossing, indicating the cause of the backflow on Maxwell was not water backing up from the Whitney crossing, et al, but was due to the dam effect of the Maxwell crossing.

The above information was phoned to Mr. Hansen, Mr. Baker and other city officials and council members on Oct. 9 through 15. All the details were conveyed to each of them and it was carefully pointed out that the Whitney crossing, et al, was not the cause of the high water on Durant.

Sixty-four individuals living in the Durant, Maxwell, Morman and Apperson area signed a petition requesting the Maxwell crossing be removed. Copies of the petition were delivered to all the city councilmen's homes prior to the December council meeting and I reviewed the flood problem with each of them personally or by phone. In spite of this request the flood hazard posed by the Maxwell crossing was left in place. Since then, an additional one-half square mile of area on the draw just west of Midkiff is now being developed to add to the hazard. Reports in the Midland Reporter-Telegram last fall outlined tremendous community growth along the western end of the drainage draw which will greatly compound the flood problem in already developed downstream areas.

A review of engineering studies on flooding along the northwest drainage channel completed in 1979 indicated city officials have been aware of the problem for years. The 100-year rain expectancy used in the study was 6.4 inches. Last October's rain was not even close to this amount and flooded several homes along the 3200 block of Durant. The engineering study specified a low water crossing (no dam effect) at Maxwell. The proposed elevated crossing and guard rails will be as bad or worse with a two- or three-inch per hour rainfall. My observation is that the engineering studies underestimated the flooding potential of the area — in other words, it will not take nearly as much rainfall to cause major flooding in the area as the study suggests.

I have a very strong concern that the City Council's recent decisions have left the homes in this area in jeopardy. I would appreciate answers from city officials to the following questions:

1. What is the effect of a high bridge crossing and guard rail over the Maxwell crossing versus the original low-water crossing proposed in the engineering study on flooding due to the dam effect?

2. What are the prospects for flooding of residences along Maxwell, Durant, and Morman for a 5-year, 10-year, and 50-year maximum rainfall using an updated computer model to reflect the latest information available?

3. What effect would the removal of Maxwell Street crossing have on flooding of this same residential area for 5-year, 10-year, and 50-year maximum rainfall?

I respectfully request that action be taken as soon as possible on this flood problem. I request that the Maxwell Street crossing be temporarily removed until further studies show it not to be a flood hazard; and that further development along the northwest drainage system be suspended until the flooding problem has been adequately dealt with.

MISD didn't follow rules in Catoico case

This letter is written to clarify some points concerning our daughter, Heidi — "Catoico Dutchess Can't Be Crowned." The two major points in the grievance proceedings against MISD seem to have been overlooked in the sensationalism surrounding Catoico.

Heidi filed a grievance concerning the misunderstanding between herself and her PhotoJournalism teacher, Mrs. Wanda Mouton. She did not fail the course; her semester grade was 78, including a 91 on the semester exam. We believe that a lack of communication between Heidi and the teacher resulted in an unfair six weeks grade of F.

After we began grievance proceedings, we received Heidi's grades, which included a U in conduct in Mrs. Betty Lathan's English class. Heidi has never received a U in any class. Her semester grade for this English class was 89 and the conduct grade was unjustified. She dropped from an 87 in PhotoJournalism to an F and from an S in conduct to a U in the English class with no warning to her parents or to her cheerleading sponsor. MISD has specific policies written to insure parents of notification and these policies were not followed.

The school system seems to think that these policies can be interpreted in such a way that we wonder why the policies were written at all. No one at Midland High School showed any concern for this child, although we had specifically asked both teachers to call if there were ever any problems concerning Heidi. We have never maintained that our daughter did not make any mistakes in this situation, but our hope was that the school system would accept responsibility for the accountability of the system.

We did not file a grievance concerning Catoico Court until we received an answer to our first grievances from the principal, Jimmie Kelly. His answer stated that Heidi was hereby declared ineligible to participate in extracurricular activities, specifically cheerleading and Catoico Court. At that point we filed the grievance concerning Catoico Court, stating that according to "No Pass, No Play," Catoico is social rather than extracurricular. We were then informed that Heidi was ineligible for Catoico because of the MHS Constitution. This constitution is vague and contradictory. For example, there are two different sets of guidelines for eligibility concerning members of the Student Council. We're referring to Article II, Section 2 and Article III, Secitons 1 and 2. The guidelines applied to Catoico are also applied to other elected positions of honor, but those guidelines are not followed. Surely no one believes that a Class Favorite who was eligible at the time of election would be removed six weeks later. The Midland High School Constitution is not applied equally to all students. If the facts were made known, students in elected positions this year would have been removed because of the very rules the school chose to apply to Heidi.

We have chosen to stand up, not only for Heidi, but for all students in this school system who may not be receiving equitable treatment. MISD includes the many children in this district as well as administrators, principals, and teachers, and we believe that all students should be assured fair treatment. If the assumption of MISD is that the teacher is always right, our students are being denied due process of law.

The well known saying, "You can't fight City Hall" certainly applies to the school system as well. But we refuse to be counted among the people who do not choose to stand up for their rights. We believe in democracy, whether it applies to adults or to a 17-year-old child.

RICHARD NIXON

U.S. could launch peaceful revolution

Nixon

I do not underestimate the cost or complexity of launching a peaceful revolution for progress in the Third World. But we have the economic resources. We have the skilled manpower and the brainpower. Our national interest requires it. There is only one nagging question.

British strategist Sir Robert Thompson once wrote, "National strength equals manpower plus applied resources times will." Do we have the will to undertake such a bold initiative?

Americans don't like to play a role on the world stage. Vietnam eroded our will to do so. But America, as a great nation, must be mature enough to accept the fact that you do not win all the time. Defeat is never fatal unless you give up, and America must never give up. We must not turn away from our responsibilities in the world. If we refuse to play a major role the rest of the free world would be at the mercy of totalitarian aggressors.

We must continue to play that role, not just for others but for ourselves. A world one-third rich and two-thirds poor will never enjoy real peace. America cannot be at peace in a world of wars. Where freedom is destroyed anywhere, it is threatened in America. We cannot have a healthy economy in a sick world economy. By providing more economic aid now, we reduce the possibility of having to provide more military aid later.

I believe the American people are ready to accept this challenge. Defeatism, indifference, and malaise are not American characteristics. Optimism, compassion, and high-spiritedness are. We are a people who are never satisfied with the status quo. Americans are always striving for something better. We must put those qualities to work beyond our borders. We must be as impatient with the status quo in the Third World as we are at home.

The best way to slow down and eventually halt the locomotive that propels the communist offensive in the Third World War is to deny it the fuel it needs. If a program for progress gives people in target countries the promise of a peaceful revolution, those who are trying to incite violent revolution will run out of gas.

In the past being against communist aggression has been enough reason to mobilize public opinion in support of American foreign policy. Our self-interest in this great initiative is obvious. But Americans will respond even more enthusiastically if the case is presented in idealistic terms.

In World War I, being against the kaiser and German militarism was a powerful incentive for our war effort. But Woodrow Wilson's greatest contribution to our eventual victory was that he presented our effort in idealistic terms. We were fighting "a war to end wars," a war "to make the world safe for democracy."

In World War II, Hitler and Hirohito made very convenient enemies. But Roosevelt and Churchill inspired the people of the free world by presenting in idealistic terms not just what we were fighting against but what we were fighting for — for the Four Freedoms and eventually a new world organization that would initiate an era of peace.

Throughout our history our greatest presidents have called upon Americans to participate in great causes — causes that were bigger than themselves, bigger than America, as big as the whole world itself.

Thomas Jefferson said, "We act not for ourselves alone but for the whole human race." Lincoln proclaimed, "We shall nobly save or meanly lose the last best hope of earth." Theodore Roosevelt declared, "Our first duty as citizens of the nation is owed to the United States, but if we are true to our principles we must also think of serving the interests of mankind at large." Speaking at Independence Hall on July 4, 1913, Wilson said, "A patriotic American is never so proud of the flag under which he lives as when it comes to mean to others as well as to himself a symbol of hope and liberty."

Appeals to our highest ideals have never failed to move Americans to support great causes. To make the world safe not only for ourselves but for others is a great cause. Even greater is the challenge to give millions of people in poor nations a chance to share the blessings of freedom and progress we enjoy.

Reagan's diplomatic maneuvers help end Philippine crisis

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — This week witnessed one of the most dramatic developments in recent history.

With brilliant diplomacy by the Reagan administration and amazing courage by the masses of Manila who stopped military might with flowers and prayers, there was an almost completely peaceful transfer of power in the Philippines from the 20-year-old Marcos dictatorship to a democratically elected president.

It is the stuff of which historians are likely to call a political miracle.

It is evident the turning point in the explosive-laden struggle between the ailing 68-year-old dictator and the 53-year-old Mrs. Corazon Aquino, both of whom claimed to have been elected president, came when thousands of Filipinos, young and old, nuns and priests, formed a human wall against tanks and truckloads of Filipino marines who had been ordered to storm the headquarters of two rebel military leaders.

When the soldiers refused to slaughter the civilians and the tanks turned back, it was a clear sign Marcos could not count on the military to keep him in power. He then sought to negotiate a power-sharing deal, but the desperate ploy was still-born. People Power had won an astounding non-violent victory in what a White House statement called "one of the most stirring and courageous examples of the democratic process in modern history."

We can be proud of the role President Reagan, with bi-partisan congressional support, played in this cliff-hanging, high stakes drama. It was the president, through his close personal friend, Sen. Paul Laxalt, who finally persuaded Marcos to step down and accept safe passage for his family, his friends and himself to a haven in Hawaii.

In one of the greatest foreign policy achievements of his administration, the president defused a crisis which not only threatened a terrible bloodbath in the Philippines but also vital American security interests in the Pacific. Even Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., one of the president's harshest critics in the past, said he deserved credit for his skillful and "decisive" action in letting Marcos know that he could no longer count on American support and must go.

It is a tribute to Marcos that despite reported appeals from his wife, Imelda, and others to stay and fight it out, he decided to avert a civil war by accepting President Reagan's advice and offer of safety. Whether he did so out of compassion for the Filipino people or because of fear for the lives of his loved ones, only he knows. My guess is that it was a combination of both.

Like most dictators, Marcos stayed in power too long. It was a classic case of the longer he stayed, the more power corrupted him. Critics accused him of wrecking the economy by overspending; by allowing rural officials to wield brutal power like feudal warlords, by politicizing the military with promotion of incompetent officers because he thought they would be loyal to him; by permitting the development of monopolies which exploited the people, and by tolerating vast corruption by relatives and friends.

He is portrayed, especially by liberal pundits, as having never done any good for his country since he became president. He is even accused of collaborating with the Japanese during World War II. The record shows neither contention to be true.

In praising Marcos for his decision to step down, Secretary of State George Shultz said: "As we assess his role in the Philippines over a long period of time, he has been a constructive force," and "a staunch friend of the United States."

As for the charges of collaboration with the Japanese, Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Armitage told a Senate committee last month that Marcos fought with American forces in 1942-45 and "was recommended for decoration by Gen. (Douglas) MacArthur's command."

Can any reasonable person believe Gen. MacArthur would have recommended him for a military decoration if he had been a traitor to his own country and to us?

Now we have promised to aid the new government of President Aquino, the widow of the man whose brutal murder precipitated the crisis. We certainly should do what we can to help the decent people of the Philippines, especially in recognition of what they have done in support of democracy and of the close relationship that has existed with that country since we liberated it from Spanish rule, as well as in our own security interests.

However, our taxpayers' money should be conditional on firm assurances that we can rely on the new government to be a loyal ally of the U.S. and to carry out the necessary economic, political and military reforms. There are some things that need to be clarified about the new Aquino regime.

During the presidential election, Mrs. Aquino said she did not want foreign bases on Philippine soil although she would respect the current bases agreement until it expires in 1991. She also linked Marcos' long stay in power to the bases, saying "if the bases had not been here, maybe America would have withdrawn its support after he declared martial law (in 1972)." She gave no indication of a realization of the importance of those bases to the security of the Philippines and the rest of the free world in Asia.

Her new Defense Minister, Juan Ponce Enrile, was Marcos' defense minister and long-time friend until a week ago Sunday when, following Mrs. Aquino's election as president, he jumped ship at the 11th hour to join her side and become one of the two top military leaders who led the military revolt against Marcos. He, like Mrs. Aquino's Vice President, Salvador Laurel, both have presidential ambitions. Both belong to the same type of ruling class clique from which Marcos emerged.

I hope we will have a few strings tied to the tax dollars you will soon be giving to the new government of the Philippines.

UTPB to host Permian Basin science fair

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Solar collectors, genetic experiments and other gadgets will be on display during the annual Permian Basin Science Fair March 7 and 8 at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Sponsored jointly by the university and the Ector County Independent School District, over 200 entries have been received from 20 counties through the Permian Basin. Students in grades three through 12 are eligible to compete in subject areas that range from earth and science to behavioral and social science.

The Science Fair is part of a worldwide event administered by Science Service, a non-profit institution for the public understanding of science.

The International Science and Engineering Fair, the "World Series" of science fairs, is held annually with some 600 student contestants from affiliated fairs in the U.S. and a number of foreign countries. It culminates a selection process involving thousands of school and regional fairs, their student participants and their judges from science, medicine and education. This year's International Fair will be May 11 through 17 in Fort Worth.

Each year, two finalists in the Senior Division (grades nine through 12) will be selected to represent the Permian Basin Regional Science Fair at the international level.

The judging will be from 8 a.m. to noon March 8. The public is invited to view the exhibits during the 1 to 6 p.m. Open House in the UTPB gymnasium. Presentation of awards will begin at 3 p.m. in the Student Lounge.

For information, call Dr. Florence Gardner at 367-2132.

Chaps to be participating in basketball tournament

By H. A. TUCK

Chaparral basketball players have put together a wonderful season, but now it comes down to winning every game or the season is finished. The Chaps enter the Region V Tournament at Snyder this week as the favorite, but strange things often happen at the tournament. Action begins Thursday, when the Chaps take on the fourth place team from the Northeastern Conference. The semifinals are Friday and the finals take place Saturday night. After that, the regional winner must play the winner of Region XIV, which could be San Jacinto Junior College of Houston, ranked second in the nation. Winner of that game goes to the NJCAA Tournament in Hutchinson, Kansas, March 18-22.

Congratulations are in order for Ralph Sellmeyer, Allison Professor of Journalism; Elise Coombes, publications lab instructor; and all the staff members of the 1985 fall issue of The Chaparral. The publication won a Silver Addy Award in the recent Permian Basin Ad Club contest. Starline Printing of Midland published the magazine and entered it in the Ad Club contest.

Does 10 days in Spain during May sound appealing? Then you should contact the Foreign Language Department at Midland College, which is sponsoring a trip to Spain May 18-28. The tour includes visits to Madrid, Toledo, Seville, Grenada, and Cordoba. Cost is approximately $1,200, which includes travel, lodging, and some meals. For details, contact Dr. Jim Jones at 685-4629 or the Foreign Language Department at 685-4562.

Those who chance upon a copy of the college newspaper, El Paisano, are familiar with a regular column entitled "Slam The Door Quietly." It's written by radio-television instructor Jerry Watson about dealing with his three children as a divorced parent. Now his columns are being made into a Readers Theatre production by Odessa College. Performances are scheduled April 18 and 19 at 8 p.m. and April 20 at 2 p.m. Marsha Gephart, OC speech instructor, is directing the play. Watson currently is writing a book from the same columns.

A new exhibit opens today in McCormick Gallery, featuring works of two Texas artists. Gallery hours are 1 to 5 p.m. on Saturday, 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday, and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday.

Each of the tennis teams gets one match this week, and both will be on the Midland College courts: The men's team hosts New Mexico Military Institute at 2 p.m. on Tuesday and the women's team plays UT-El Paso on the MC courts at 3 p.m. Friday. Tuesday's action between MC and NMMI is a conference match, so it carries a bit more significance.

This year's annual series of Free Enterprise Lectures promises to be outstanding. Lions Club gets ready to whip up pancakes

From Staff Reports

Approximately 2,000 pounds of buttermilk pancake mix and 2,500 pounds of sausage will be consumed by the thousands of persons expected to attend the Downtown Lions Club's 30th annual Pancake Jamboree scheduled for Saturday at the mall in the Dellwood Shopping Center.

Three hundred gallons of coffee, 4,500 half-pints of milk, 5,500 containers of orange drink and eight cases of syrup will be ready for the eaters.

Serving hours will be from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m., according to Norman Gould, general chairman. Cooking equipment, tables, chairs and other facilities will be set up Friday afternoon, he said.

Duke Jimerson, entertainment chairman, said special entertainment will be provided throughout the day, featuring some of the city's most popular musicians.

All chores in connection with the arranging and staging of the jamboree will be handled by the club's 400 members. All proceeds will go toward financing the club's wide-ranging projects and activities, Keith Somerville, club president, said.

More than $22,000 worth of tickets have been sold in advance by club members. Tickets also may be purchased at the door on the day of the jamboree.

Doctor will discuss radiation treatment

ODESSA — Dr. Greg Garrett will speak on "Treatment Modalities: Radiation" as part of the next class in "Understanding Cancer" series being offered at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

INTERIOR MOTIVES

JUMP TO VERTICALS

Do not become discouraged by small rooms that seem to defy the window treatment you have in mind. Consider the vertical blind. When hung from the top of a wall, vertical blinds can creat a sense of height in a low-ceilinged room. Vertical blinds combine the advantages of blinds and draperies into one versatile window treatment. Vanes can be rotated from fully open to closed or adjusted to any position in between. Gravity does the dusting. From the standpoint of energy savings, some vertical blinds out-perform standard horisontals. They close tightly, sealing in 30 percent more of the homes interior temperature. They also reflect solar radiation up to 75 percent more efficiently than aluminum one-inch horisontal blinds.

We'll help with all your window treatments at WINDOW DECOR, 30 West Industrial Loop, 686-0875. In addition to verticals we handle mini blinds, shades and custom made draperies. These can be topped with several diffrent treatments to put a finishing touch on your windows. Call 686-0875 for a free in-home consultation. Open: 8 am-4:30 pm Mon thru Fri, and by appointment.

Hint:
Vertical blinds are especially effective across sliding glass patio doors or a window wall.

Highway department to extend Odessa's 16th Street

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation Commission has approved a 2.1-mile extension of 16th Street between Texas 302 and Farm Road 1936 west of Odessa.

Highway department spokeswoman Rosemary Neff said the agency will begin letting bids on the project in April 1987. Construction is expected to begin by the summer of that year.

The estimated cost of the road work is $916,000.

As part of this year's $40-million farm-to-market road program, the highway commission authorized a total of 35 miles of new roadways across the state. The agency also approved projects to upgrade 102.8 miles of county roads and the rehabilitation of 57.5 miles of existing farm-to-market roads.

The rehabilitation projects are the first ever included in the farm-to-market program, which began in the 1940s. This year, the department plans on spending more than $11 million on such projects in 55 counties.

Counties and cities involved in the roadwork must agree to furnish all required right-of-ways and clear any other obstructions before the department can proceed with engineering and construction.

Hernandez to fight clean up attempt

NEW YORK (AP) — Keith Hernandez of the New York Mets said Saturday a grievance will be filed in an attempt to overturn Commissioner Peter Ueberroth's player suspensions, but Dale Berra of the New York Yankees said he won't challenge the decision.

They were two of the 11 players hit Friday with conditional suspensions by Ueberroth as a result of past drug involvement. Those players and 10 others were told that if they accepted the commissioner's decision they would be subject to spot drug-testing for the rest of their major-league careers.

"I don't know yet what we will do and won't know for several days at the earliest," Don Fehr, executive director of the Players Association, said Saturday. "On Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, we'll be discussing the situation with the players and their agents and asking for additional information from the commissioner."

HE said the union would not initiate individual grievances without the player's permission. "We advise, consult and recommend, but in the last analysis it's his decision."

On Friday Fehr had said: "It is important to note ... that while the commissioner has lumped the players into several groups, each player's case must be reviewed on its own merits and all decisions must be based on the specific facts."

The union already is actively contesting the drug-testing clauses unilaterally placed in multi-year contracts.

A SPOKESMAN for Ueberroth said Saturday he had been in contact with the commissioner and that "because we have not been notified of any grievance, we can not make any comment."

When Bowie Kuhn, Ueberroth's predecessor, slapped one-year, drug-related suspensions on several players — albeit without the "buy-out" conditions offered by Ueberroth — an arbitrator reduced some of the suspensions to a few weeks.

Under Ueberroth's ruling Saturday, Hernandez, Berra, Joaquin Andujar, Dave Parker, Lonnie Smith, Enos Cabell and Jeff Leonard — labeled by the commissioner as players "involved in a prolonged pattern of drug use" or distribution — were told they will be suspended for all of 1986 unless each:

— Donates 10 percent of his base salary to a drug-abuse prevention center or program in his team's city, — Contributes 100 hours of drug-related community service in each of the next two years, and — Participates in random drug testing by the commissioner's office as long as each plays professional baseball.

Monetarily, it means a cost of as much as $135,000 (Hernandez) or as little as $45,000 (Cabell) to the seven players most severely punished.

AL HOLLAND, Claudell Washington, Lee Lacy and Lary Sorensen, "engaged in more limited use or involvement with drugs," Ueberroth said, can avoid 60-day suspensions if they donate 5 percent of their salaries to drug-abuse programs, contribute 50 hours of community service each year and accept random testing.

"I kept trying to come back to what was fair," Ueberroth explained. "I did not want to take the players out of the game. Instead, I would let them give back to the area of society that caused their problems."

Bulldogs crack record in relay

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

BIG SPRING—When the bullies of District 4-5A track are away, the 'Cats and 'Dogs will play, and that's just what happened when Odessa Permian and Midland Lee avoided the ABC Relays here Saturday.

San Angelo's Bobcats piled up 43 points in the field events to take a lead they never relinquished to take the boys team title, while Midland High raced to a pair of relay victories, including a new meet record in the 1,600 meter relay.

The Bulldogs came in third, just three points back of Abilene High. The Eagles put 44 points on the board in the field events, while the Bulldogs could muster only 21.

"San Angelo really came out of the field events in pretty good shape, you can't let them get that far ahead," MHS coach Johnny Williams said. "I'm very pleased with the way we ran on the track though."

MIDLAND LEE'S girls hung on for a tight second place finish behind first place finishes of Tami Woodberry in the 110 low hurdles and Tangi Carter in the 100 meter dash. The Lady Rebels' Roz Eaden also captured a first place in the triple jump (35-1½), second in the long jump and third in the high jump.

The Lady Bulldogs pulled up with a strong fifth as Ethel Edwards paced the winning 1,600 relay and coasted home in the 200 meters. MHS also got a first place by Amy Cumings in the high jump with a leap of 5-1. Cumings followed up her field events with a second place in the 3,200 meters.

THE MHS boys, known for their wealth of second and third place finishes to carry them through, basked in the Big Spring sun with first places by Anthony Adkinson in the 100 meters (10.87) and Tyrone Oliver in the 400 (50.19) to go with their winning relay teams.

Lee cindermen gallop to first at Monahans

From Staff Reports

MONAHANS — Midland Lee took another shot at Odessa Permian here Friday and won by a nose, 135-130, when the final gun sounded on the Sandhill Relays.

Permian defeated Lee in a shootout at Fort Stockton last weekend, but it was time for some table turning here Saturday. Heading into the 1600 relay, the last event of the day, Lee was faced with having to beat Permian by two places. Lee did its job with a season best 3:20.4 to win while Permian helped with a third place finish behind Lee and Amarillo High.

Lee's Quintus Hampton remained unbeaten in both hurdle events with victories as did Mike Garza, who won both the 1600 and 3200 runs. Garza's 4:27.4 was a season best. Brad Cooper is also unbeaten in the 400 after another win.

"I would never have believed that we could win this meet with so few teams in it, but the kids, from top to bottom, really competed," said a pleased Lee track coach Eddie Wolski, who recorded his first track title as Lee track coach. This is only his second meet in that position.

Odessa High finished third with 110 points while Amarillo had 812 and Abilene Cooper 56.

Lee will head for the Mustang Relays in Andrews next Saturday with hopes of another title.

Sandstorm buries Dunbar, 72-63

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The last thing a true West Texan wants to hear is the cry, "Blow, Sand, Blow," but it was heard loud and clear at Chaparral Center Saturday afternoon, touching off a few approving giggles from even those wishing for rain.

The cry was heard because the virtually unknown Amarillo High Golden Sandies had pulled off a major 72-63 Region I basketball upset over powerful and state ranked Fort Worth Dunbar, giving the Sandies a ticket to the Class 5A Final Four in Austin next weekend.

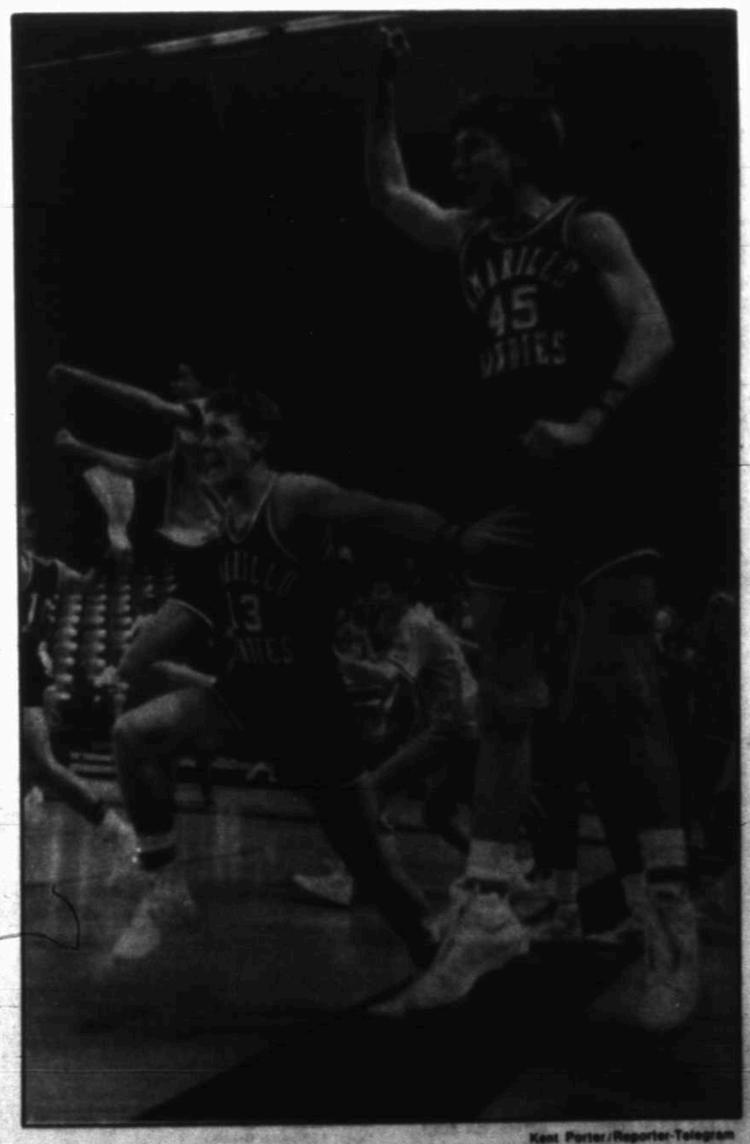

It was a victory that sent shock waves across the state and Wildcat fans leaving with heads hanging before the final bell was recorded. The Dunbar unfaithful, which travels wide and far with its team, couldn't bear the defeat to an Amarillo High.

It took the Sandies a little time for the realization to set in. After all, an Amarillo High team hasn't been to the state tournament since 1948 when Boone Pickens was a dust throwing point guard.

"This is unbelievable," said a disbelieving AHS coach Alan Simpson. "We're in the state's Final Four. When we started the playoffs, I didn't think we could stay on the court with Midland Lee in the bi-district game. Every victory has left me scratching my head over these kids."

The upset left Lee coach Paul Stueckler almost as happy as Simpson. "Maybe Amarillo is a lot better than we thought they were. I know one thing, they played a great tournament. Maybe we didn't play as bad as we thought we did against them."

Please see AMARILLO, Page 2C.

Dod Clapp (13) and Brant Capps (45) lead the charge off the bench as Amarillo High's Sandies celebrate victory in Region I boys High School finals at Langford Chaparral Center Saturday. Amarillo upset Fort Worth Dunbar, 72-62, to advance to state meet at Austin this week.

30-0 Chaps risk all in Region V tourney

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland College finished the season 30-0, rolled through Western Junior College Athletic Conference opposition 16-0 and set a new consecutive game winning streak for a Chaparral team.

The unbeaten season and perfect WJCAC record were firsts for both the Chaps and Coach Jerry Stone.

Now, all of a sudden, all the achievements to date are nothing more than water under the bridge. The Chaparrals find themselves 0-0 as they head into the Region V tournament play at Snyder Thursday against Hill County Junior College.

The successes to date got the Chaps where they are today, but all those victories won't buy even one reprieve. One loss and it's all over.

The road to Hutchinson, Kan., is potted with holes that could end the trip abruptly.

Of course, it's the same for everybody else in the three-day, eight-team jousting that brings together the four top finishers in the WJCAC and the Northeast Conference at the Scurry County Coliseum.

Play begins at noon Thursday with Ranger, No. 3 in the NC, facing South Plains, No. 2 in the WJCAC, at noon. NMJC, No. 4 in the WJCAC, faces Cisco, No. 1 in the NC, at 2 p.m. Midland meets No. 4 Hill of the NC at 5 p.m.

The Region V women's tournament, which begins Tuesday, will hold its title game at 7 p.m. and Western Texas College, No. 3 in the WJCAC, faces Grayson County, No. 2 in the NC, in the 9 p.m. and final first round game.

Semifinals will be held Friday and the championship game is 7 p.m. Saturday. After that there is one more step before the Nationals in Hutchinson, the play-in game against the South Texas survivor, which every one expects to be San Jacinto, currently unbeaten and ranked No. 2 in the nation. MC is ranked No. 3 nationally.

Last year MC beat Laredo JC at San Angelo in the play in game and went on to Kansas and a fourth place finish.

Webb paces Hawk win

ATLANTA (AP) — Spud Webb scored six points in the final 43 seconds to nullify a San Antonio comeback and give the Atlanta Hawks a 116-108 victory over the Spurs in an NBA game Saturday night.

The Spurs, trailing 108-100, went on an 8-2 spurt that cut the lead to two points with one minute remaining when Jeff Lamp made a jump shot.

Webb countered with a jumper with 43 seconds to play to give Atlanta a 112-108 lead. Webb then hit four free throws down the stretch to put the game on ice.

It was Atlanta's fifth victory in its last six games and its 20th in 22 home games.

Dominique Wilkins led the Hawks with 36 points, including 24 in the first half. Randy Wittman added 24 and Webb had 16, including nine in the fourth quarter.

Artis Gilmore had 31, Alvin Robertson 23 and Mike Mitchell 20 for the Spurs, who dropped their sixth game in a row.

Mavericks 119, Warriors 110

DALLAS — The Dallas Mavericks scored 11 straight points early in the third quarter to break open a close game behind Mark Aguirre's 40 points. The victory broke a six-game Dallas losing streak.

Golden State has lost six of its last eight games.

Aguirre, the Mavericks' leading scorer at 22.2 points a game, picked up only four points in the game's first seven minutes.

Rolando Blackman scored 22 points for the Mavericks. Purvis Short and center Joe Barry Caroll each had 21 for Golden State and reserve Terry Teagle added 19 before fouling out with 4:11 left in the game.

Lee 9th in golf tourney

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — Abilene Wylie posted a team score of 625 Friday and Saturday to win the Big Spring Invitational high school golf tournament while Abilene Cooper was second with a 646.

Midland Lee finished ninth in the 24-team field with a 666 while Midland High was 11th overall with a 680.

Bobby Gee led Lee with a 158 two-round total, placing eighth overall, and he was followed by Larry Bryan, 163; Mike Abbott, 172; Donny Feagan, 173; and Randy Milby, 185. None of the MHS individual scores were available.

The teams travel to the San Angelo Invitational, March 13-14, and then begin District 4-5A action March 21 at Midland's Green Tree Country Club.

57 wins Mission golf

The team of Jim Sumner, Nicky Wilson, Mack McGee, Bill Baker, Bill Holsey and Bill Carson combined for a 57 to win Mission Country Club's Spring Fling golf tournament Saturday.

The six-man scramble featured teams of three members and three guests. Taking second place was the team of Britt Smith, Harry Bettis, John Bettis, Tom Smith, Royce Woolard and Les Opperman with a 58 and they were followed by two other teams with 58. They were Chris Brashear, Cecil Tucker, Terry Warren, Joe Selman, Woody McGee and Larry Sparks and Phil Clark, Marshall Nelson, Jim Nelson, Rodney Hurt, Gary Moore and Bruce Bangert.

"I'm seeing a lot of things I'm liking out there right now," Williams said. "We don't usually bring out any favorites, we just do the best with what we've got on the track. I thought we did a fine job, I didn't think we could score 100 points in a meet like this, but we did."

The Bulldogs scored early in the track events, racing to an easy win in the 400 sprint relay, even though their time was much slower than last week's. Terry Robinson, Tracy Colvin, Mike Eaden and Adkinson combined for a 43.69 to get MHS started in the running events.

Adkinson in the 100 and Oliver in the 400 were the only other first places MHS collared until the final race, the 1,600 relay.

THERE, THE Bulldogs jumped out to a lead with Oliver setting the pace, then Jason Fuller, Adkinson and Eaden brought home the record-breaking 3:23.40 on what was being called a "slow track."

Lee's girls came up with a vastly improved showing over last week's opener in Fort Stockton. The addition of Carter, who not only won the 100, but ran on the second place 400 sprint relay and second place 800 relay, and Woodberry, the hurdles winner, helped immensely.

"We really performed super today, our relays and individuals really ran well," Lee coach Janice Baulch said. "We knew we had people in the right spots that we could bust loose and really score some points.

"I can't complain at all."

THE MOST exciting race of the day, however, came in the 1,600 relay, when Edwards overcame a 20-30 yard deficit on the anchor leg to win going away. Timers in the infield clocked Edwards' come-from-behind sprint at :55 for 400 meters.

After her record-setting 25.44 in the 200 Edwards said she wasn't entirely happy with her time, still one-half second over last season's best.

"I can run faster than that, there just hasn't been much competition so far this season," Edwards said.

Midland High also got a surprising third place finish from Amy Hubbard in the 1,600 in her first high school race. Hubbard and Sebrenia Finch, who ran on the 800 relay team, came out for the team just this week.

"We're still trying to figure out just where to put all of our people," said assistant coach Sonja Pittman, filling in for Jane Young who was at the state basketball finals. "We did much better than last week, though, and we're not far behind second, third and fourth places."

MHS' junior varsity boys came in third behind AHS and San Angelo. Taking firsts were Donnie Doan in the pole vault, 11-0, Jose Hernandez in the 800, 2:12.37, and Junior Natividad in the 1,600, 5:06.74.

AMARILLO

Again the Sandies relied on junior guard Sammy Simpson, the coach's son, to provide the offensive fireworks. He scored a game high 26 points with a 10 of 21 shooting eye from the field and a perfect six-of-six from the charity stripe. Simpson had 20 points in Amarillo's victory over South Grand Prairie Friday night for a tournament total of 46 points. People are still trying to figure out how Lee held this kid to a meager 10 points in the bi-district game.

And the work of 6-5 sophomore Lance Perry off the bench shouldn't go unnoticed. Perry scored 11 points in his reserve role and they always seemed to be big ones.

"I think we were just hoping we could win the region title, but I don't think any of us really believed it would happen. Dunbar is always a state power and that makes this a little more special," said Perry.

Despite the final nine-point victory, Dunbar didn't give up the title until the last three minutes of play. It was a game that featured 24 lead changes and 11 ties. Perry's two free throws with 4:42 left gave the Sandies a 58-57 lead and Amarillo went on and outscored the Wildcats by a 14-6 margin down the stretch.

Dunbar tried to go to its highly praised full-court press to slow the kill, a factor that helped them come from behind against El Paso Eastwood Friday, but Simpson brought in tiny guard Jason Rehm off the bench. That solved any press problems.

"We didn't show a lot of character there at the last and you usually don't win when that happens," said Dunbar coach Robert Hughes. "Amarillo beat us and if you can find a way to smooth that over, go ahead. I can't."

Dunbar leaves the playoffs with a 30-5 record while Amarillo High advances to Austin, carrying a 29-5 mark.

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Dunbar's Lionel Hamilton (23) hits the floor as Amarillo's Ashton Novak commits a charging foul.

The Wildcats got 21 points from junior guard Derrick Daniels while junior Mark Chambers added 17.

Coach Simpson isn't as new to the state tournament as his team will be. The Sandies haven't been there in 38 years. Simpson has one state title under his belt at Canyon and two other trips while at Perryton. Can he help his team in Austin?

"Obviously, our kids don't have the faintest idea of what they are going to encounter in Austin. These kids couldn't tell you who played for the Sandies five years ago, much less back in 1948," said Simpson.

No matter what happens in Austin, Saturday's meeting at the Chap may be just a preview of next year's Region I final. After all, Dunbar started five juniors while Amarillo loses only two starters.

Snow Chief, from California, took a big step toward the Kentucky Derby Saturday with a front-running victory in the Florida Derby at Gulfstream Park. It was the horse's fourth straight victory, three of them this year, and solidified Snow Chief's claim on the leadership of the 3-year-old division. In earning $300,000, the California-bred colt turned back 15 other 3-year-olds, reaching the end of the 1⅛ miles in 1:55 4-5...

St. Louis Cardinals Coach Gene Stallings named former Dallas Cowboys All-Pro Mel Renfro as his defensive backs coach. Renfro, 44, coached the defensive secondary under John Hadl with the USFL Los Angeles Express in 1984. Welshman Tommy Farr, 71, the first fighter to go the 15-round distance with former heavyweight champion Joe Louis, died at his London home Saturday. Farr reportedly had been suffering from cancer of the liver and pneumonia for several weeks. Although he was the unbeaten British champion, Farr wasn't regarded as much of a threat when he he fought Louis — "The Brown Bomber" — in New York in August 1937. But at the end of the bout — Louis' first defense — the Welshman was hailed as a hero by the American boxing fans. Some 10 million Britons stayed up in the middle of the night to tune into the radio broadcast of the fight, which some ringside observers felt he had won.

Some years later, Farr said: "At the end I thought I might have got it. If they had made it a draw, I would have been happy."...

Cooper defeats Rebels in finals

Jay McCarty connects to move Midland Lee runners into scoring position in District 4-5A Pre-District tournament action at Odessa Saturday.

ODESSA — As it did in 1985, the District 4-5A Pre-District baseball tournament boiled down to Abilene Cooper and Midland Lee. Also, like '85, Cooper was the winner, this time by a 10-5 count.

Even though the two starting pitchers were considered the best on the respective staffs, the game was anything but a pitching dual.

Cooper's Danny Whitford lasted 3⅓ innings, gave up eight hits, five runs and struck out two Rebels before being replaced by Scott Malone, son of Cougar head coach Andy Malone.

Malone the Younger took the victory in relief, pitching 3⅔ innings of shutout ball, allowing only two hits and a hit batter.

For the Rebels, George Matta met a team that wouldn't be suckered into swinging wildly at his curve ball, at least not for an entire game.

Matta survived the first two innings unscathed before running into trouble in the third.

Whitford led off with a triple and, one out later, trotted home when Bill Dehlinger hit a homer over the left field fence. Three singles and an error later and Lee was down 5-0. The only thing that kept it from being worse was a Raul Pena to Chad Jordan to Danny Jordan double play.

Matta stayed in the game and was tagged for seven earned runs — his first of the year — allowing 12 hits and two walks — also his first of the year.

The Rebels countered the five-run inning with two of their own in the bottom of the frame. Chad Jordan and Jay McCarty scored on an RBI single by Tuey Rankin and a sacrifice bunt by Danny Jordan.

The Cougars continued their hard hitting ways in the fourth when Whitford led off with a double and scored on Jason Marshall's triple. Marshall eventually scored when Pena threw wide to first base on David Tollison's grounder.

Lee came right back in the bottom of the inning with three more runs. Pena led off the rally with a one-out double and scored on Scott Smith's single to left. Smith went to second on catcher Chris Moore's errant pickoff throw and to third on a single by Chad Jordan. Both runners scored on McCarty's triple to right-center for a 7-5 score.

"I was impressed, really impressed (with Cooper's hitting)," said Rebel coach Ernie Johnson. "I was amazed they hit so many balls so hard. My gosh, my infielders, I was worried I'd have to put helmets and flak jackets on. We took some hard shots to the chest. I was afraid we'd have to dig the ball out of someone's chest bone."

Malone the Elder, is also impressed with his team's ability with the pine (aluminum).

"This is the best hitting team I've ever coached," said Malone. "I have 18 players with about a half-inch difference between them. This is really a balanced team."

IN GAINING the championship game, the Rebels used six unearned runs in the top of the first inning to lead the way to a 13-2 victory over Odessa Permian in a game called because of the two-hour time limit after six innings.

Rebel pitcher Terry Baxter went five innings to get the victory for a 2-0 record while David Barrow pitched the final frame.

Permian's Brad Cornett took the loss and fell to 0-1.

The Rebels collected 13 hits in the game with Rankin leading the way at 3-for-5 including a double and triple for two RBI. Joe Eldridge also added two hits for Lee and Pena knocked in three runs and Logi two.

FOR THE Midland High Bulldogs, it was the end of a two-game losing streak and a 1-2 record with an 18-6 victory over Abilene High.

The victory gave the Bulldogs seventh place in the tournament while the Eagles had to settle for eighth.

"They were having the same problem a lot of people were at the end of the tournament, didn't have any pitching left," said MHS coach Tim Whalen. "You can look at that from two points of view: They didn't have any pitching and we beat them or, Our kids went up there and were patient and did hit the ball when it came near the plate."

The victory pleased Whalen more than usual because the Bulldogs had so much trouble on Friday.

"We could have turned belly up but didn't," said Whalen.

IN OTHER tournament action Saturday, Odessa High rallied from a 12-2 deficit to a 12-12 tie with Odessa Permian. The game was called because of fading light and Permian won a coin toss to see who got which trophy.

In another tie game, San Angelo and Big Spring was called because of time-limit at 9-9 and Cooper was a 13-9 winner over OHS.

Illinois shocks Georgia Tech

Associated Press

Kansas 90, Iowa St. 70

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Ron Kellogg scored 20 points and Danny Manning added 19 Saturday as every Kansas starter scored in double figures as the second-ranked Jayhawks.

The Jayhawks, who clinched the Big Eight championship a week ago, never led by fewer than nine points in the second half as they avenged their only conference loss of the year.

The victory tied two school records and sent the Jayhawks into next week's Big Eight postseason tournament with a 28-3 record. Their conference mark of 13-1 was marred only by a 77-74 loss last month at Iowa State. The 28th season victory and a 33rd consecutive home victory tied longstanding school records.

Iowa State, which already had clinched the No. 2 seed in the postseason tournament, stands at 18-9 and 9-5.

Illinois 59, Georgia Tech 57

ATLANTA — Efrem Winters broke a tie with a 13-footer from the right baseline with 31 seconds remaining to give Illinois victory over fourth-ranked Georgia Tech.

The Yellow Jackets had several chances to tie it, but Bruce Dalrymple missed a 12-footer and Duane Ferrell was off the mark on a tip with about 10 seconds to go. Then, after Illinois' Tony Wysinger failed on a one-and-one free throw opportunity with eight seconds remaining, Dalrymple missed a driving reverse layup at the buzzer.

Glynn Blackwell put Illinois ahead 57-55 on an 18-footer from the left corner with 1:11 to go and Price tied it again with 14 seconds later when he hit from the deep left corner, setting up Winters' game-winner.

Norman led Illinois with 17 points, Wysinger had 14 and Winters 10. Mark Price and John Salley each had 14 for Tech, 22-5.

Kentucky 68, Lousiana St. 57

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Senior forward Kenny Walker scored 17 points Saturday to lead fifth-ranked Kentucky. Kentucky, the SEC champion, improved its record to 26-3 overall and 17-1 in league play. LSU fell to 21-10 and 9-9 in the final regular-season game for both teams.

James Blackmon scored 13 points and Bennett 12 as Kentucky won its eighth straight game. Wilson topped LSU with 21.

Michigan 86, Northwestern 64

EVANSTON, Ill. — Roy Tarpley scored 21 points as No. 10 Michigan took over first place in the Big Ten.

Michigan had been tied with Indiana for the Big Ten lead going into the game. Michigan now is 12-4 in the Big Ten and 25-4 overall, while Northwestern fell to 2-15 in conference play and 8-19 overall.

Richard Rellford added 16 points for Michigan, while reserve Glen Rice contributed 14 and Robert Henderson and Gary Grant had 12 each. Northwestern was led by Shon Morris who had 18 points, followed by Jeff Grose, who came off the bench, with 10 points.

Notre Dame 74, Marquette 66

MILWAUKEE — Mark Stevenson scored 16 of his 18 points in the second half to lead a Notre Dame comeback.

Stevenson, a 6-foot-5 freshman guard, scored eight points in a key run at the beginning of the second half that brought Notre Dame back into the game after trailing at halftime.

David Rivers converted seven of eight free throws in the final minute to sew up the game as the Fighting Irish improved to 21-5. Marquette, led by Kerry Trotter with 16 points, dropped to 17-9.

Marquette, trying for an NCAA tournament at-large bid, led all the way in the first half and went into intermission with a 34-27 edge.

Oklahoma 72, N. Carolina St. 69

NORMAN, Okla. — Tim McCalister's jump shot with 34 seconds remaining — his only field goal in seven second-half tries — carried 14th-ranked Oklahoma over No. 18 North Carolina State Saturday.

After McCalister's basket gave the Sooners a 71-69 lead, teammate Darryl Kennedy deflected a pass by Bennie Bolton that Oklahoma recovered. McCalister then made one of two free throws with eight seconds remaining to clinch the victory.

The Sooners improved to 24-6. North Carolina State is 18-11.

North Carolina State fought back behind Nate McMillan and Chris Washburn, eventually taking a 69-67 lead on a Washburn slam with 3:53 left.

Two free throws by Kennedy tied the score with 3:26 left, and neither team scored again until McCalister made his jumper, which came with five seconds left on the 45-second shot clock.

David Johnson scored 12 points, while Chuck Watson had 11 points and 11 rebounds for Oklahoma. Washburn, a 6-foot-11 sophomore, scored 22 points to lead all scorers. Bolton had 17 and Charles Shackelford 14.

Georgetown 93, Pittsburgh 62

LANDOVER, Md. — Georgetown forward David Wingate scored a career-high 26 points, 16 in the decisive first half, to lead the the 15th-ranked Hoyas to a Big East victory. Wingate, playing his final home game, made 11 of 19 field-goal attempts as Georgetown improved its record to 22-6 overall and 11-5 in the conference.

Pittsburgh, despite getting 21 points from Demetreus Gore, lost for the seventh time in nine games and fell to 15-12 and 6-10. The Panthers now must face Georgetown in the opening round of the Big East Tournament next Thursday.

Syracuse 75, Connecticut 58

HARTFORD, Conn. — Dwayne "Pearl" Washington scored 17 points and Rafael Addison added 15 Saturday as sixth-ranked Syracuse earned a share of the Big East Conference regular season title.

Syracuse finished its regular season with a 23-4 record and tied St. John's for first place in the Big East Conference with a 14-2 mark. St. John's will be the top-seed in the conference tournament because it beat the third-place team, Georgetown, twice while Syracuse split with the Hoyas.

Connecticut opens the conference tournament Wednesday against Seton Hall. A coin flip will determine which of the teams is seeded last.

Senior forward Wendell Alexis scored 12 and center Rony Seikaly added 8 points and 11 rebounds for Syracuse. Freshman Cliff Robinson led Connecticut with 17 points, and senior forward Tim Coles, playing his last home game, had 15 points and 12 rebounds.

Navy 81, James Madison 67

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — David Robinson scored 32 points and grabbed 19 rebounds as No. 19 Navy advanced to the seminfinal round of the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament.

Navy, which led for all but the game's first three minutes, will carry a 25-4 record into its meeting with North Carolina-Wilmington in the tournament's next round Monday.

James Madison, which finished the season at 5-23 and winless in its 15 road games, was paced by Eric Brent's 20 points.

St. John's 82, Seton hall 70

NEW YORK — Walter Berry scored 31 points, grabbed 12 rebounds and broke the school's single-season scoring record Saturday night as No. 8 St. John's clinched at least a tie for the Big East Conference regular-season title.

St. John's finished tied for first place for the conference regular-season championship with Syracuse, which beat Connecticut 75-58 Saturday night. St. John's, which won the regular-season crown last year, will be the No. 1 seed in next week's Big East postseason tournament because of a tiebreaker.

Berry, a junior forward who is among the top 10 in scoring and rebounding in the NCAA, broke Chris Mullin's year-old scoring standard of 694 points with a driving layup after a steal in the first half, his 11th and 12th points of the game.

St. John's is 27-4 overall and 14-2 in the Big East.

Jacksonvkile 70, UAB 69

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Otis Smith and Ronnie Murphy sparked a 12-5 run late in the game as the Jacksonville Dolphins won the championship game of the Sun Belt Conference basketball tournament Saturday night.

Tar Heels, Devils battle for No. 1

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — A victory over third-ranked North Carolina on Sunday would put No. 1 Duke alone at the top of the Atlantic Coast Conference as the regular season ends.

That is just one reason the game has special significance.

"I guess the five of us will be looking at that game Sunday as the most important one ever," forward Mark Alarie said. "I know we probably shouldn't look at it that way, too. But that's just the way it is."

But at least one North Carolina player sees the game exactly the same way.

"This was the game we wanted the most so far," said Tar Heel guard Kenny Smith after North Carolina defeated Virginia Wednesday. "But Sunday will be even bigger."

"We had them in our building, and now they have us in theirs," said North Carolina coach Dean Smith. "It will be difficult over there (in Cameron Indoor Stadium). But if we play our game, we can quiet the crowd."

Duke, 28-2 overall and 11-2 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, clinched no worse than a tie for top spot in the regular-season standings with a 77-69 victory over Clemson Thursday.

The first-place finisher wins the top-seed in the ACC Tournament, where the winner is considered the conference champion.

Third-ranked North Carolina, 26-3 and 10-3, can assure itself of a tie with a victory over the Blue Devils, who have won more games this season than ever before in the school's history.

To further complicate the situation, if Georgia Tech beats Clemson Sunday and North Carolina defeats Duke, there would be a three-way tie for first place at 11-3.

In case of a a tie, conference officials would decide who gets the top-seed at the tournament.

Sunday's game will be the final home contest for Alarie and four other seniors: Johnny Dawkins, David Henderson, Jay Bilas and Weldon Williams.

"That one Sunday isn't for all the marbles..., but it's for a bunch of them. A big bunch," said Dawkins, who scored 27 points to lead Duke past the Tigers. It was the 119th double-figure scoring effort, breaking the old NCAA record set by former Brigham Young star Danny Ainge.

Dawkins now has 2,322 career points — one shy of Mike Gminski's school record.

HOUSTON (AP) — Rickie Winslow scored 23 points as Houston, fired up over Coach Guy V. Lewis' final home game, snatched an 85-83 overtime upset win from Texas Christian in Southwest Conference action Saturday night.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Tisha Boldt and Glynna Alkek scored 15 points apiece to lead Victoria to a 57-44 victory over Tyler Lee Saturday night to take the Class 5A title at the girls' state high school basketball tournament.

The victory marked the Stingarettes' fifth state title, a record for 5A, and the third title for coach Jan Lahodny.

Boldt, a 5-11 forward, and Alkek, a 5-3 guard, led all scorers with their 15-point scoring. Alexis Ware added 12 points for Victoria.

Levelland 44, A&M Consolidated 43

AUSTIN — Levelland's Terri Meyer hit two free throws with 1:11 left in overtime and College Station A&M Consolidated's Voccia Calhoun missed one with six seconds left as Levelland won the Class 4A title.

Calhoun had hit two free throws with eight seconds left in regulation to pull A&M Consolidated into a 42-42 tie and send the game into overtime.

The Tigers, losing only their second game in 33, held a 10-point halftime lead, but the Loboettes went on a 16-4 rampage in the third quarter, led by Kristi Schonerstedt's six points and two steals. That gave Levelland a two-point edge going into the final eight minutes.

Dailene Terrell led the Loboettes, 32-2, with 12 points and nine rebounds, followed by Kim Cavanaough with 10 points.

Sour Lake H J 72, Ingleside 53

Lisa McKitrick, a 6-foot-2 senior, tallied 21 points for Ingleside and tied with teammate Nina Perez for the most rebounds with 11 each.

Gina Redden had 16 points for Ingleside, including five field goals from a range of 15 to 22 feet. Her twin sister Julie scored 10 points, with three goals from 21 to 23 feet.

AUSTIN — Six-foot Connie Cole scored 26 points and grabbed 10 rebounds Saturday as Snook upset Nazareth 36-33 for the Class A girls' championship. Nazareth was seeking its ninth title since its first tournament appearance in 1976.

It was the first championship for Snook, which lost in the semifinals in 1978 and also last year to Nazareth by 18 points.

Mona Heiman, a 1985 all-tournament player like Cole, was held to 11 points, half her average but still making her top scorer for Nazareth.

Snook finished with a 28-4 season record, and Nazareth 28-5.

Abernathy 51, Rogers 42

AUSTIN — Phoebe Dunn scored 16 points and defensive star Mary Cooper added 10 Saturday as Class 2A Abernathy won its fifth state girls' title.

Abernathy's victory pushed its season record to 28-5. Rogers, a semifinalist in 1975 and 1979, fell to 30-6.

'Convicts' overlooked game fish

Sheepshead are one of the Texas Coast's most accessible, but overlooked sport fish. Art Morris, Texas Parks and Wildlife biologist, says the "convict" fish, because of distinct vertical bars on their sides, are often congregated in large numbers around passes, rock jetties and piers.

"Although any kind of tackle seems to work, an old-fashioned cane pole is about as effective as anything," says Morris. He recommends slowly dropping natural bait such as crabs, dead shrimp or cut bait on a small hook along the edges of piers or rocks.

Sheepshead average from one to three pounds, but five pounders are not unusual. Morris adds, "They are a little difficult to clean, but are good to eat."....

BLUSTERY weather made fishing uncertain at Lake Spence, but black bass continued to bite, although the catches were smaller. Striped Bass also were smaller than usual.

Gene McQueen, Midland, took two 8½ pound stripers and a black bass going two pounds. James Hood took 21 blue cats to five pounds and Donald Gerhardt, Odessa, checked in with three three pound black bass...

HIKING and biking enthusiasts can obtain free publications from the TPWD on trail opportunities in the state. Federal and State Park Trails in Texas contains locations and descriptions of types of trails in state and national parks, national wildlife refuges and national forest areas.

Another book, A Guide to Volunteer Trail Building on Public and Private Land in Texas, is for volunteers interested in planning building and maintaining trails. It focuses on concerns of landowners and park managers regarding volunteer-built trails.

Texas Trails, a third publication, contains maps of bike tour routes in the Hill Country set up by the TPWD.

PERSONS reserving campsites or other facilities in state parks more than 10 days in advance will be required to pay a reservation fee, says the TPWD. The fee will be in the amount of one day user's fee for each facility reserved. Officials said the fee will be applied to the amount due at the time of reservation....

The TPWD points out that some of the best recreation bargains in Texas can be found in state parks during the winter and early spring. Even the cabins, which are booked solid during the summer, often can be reserved on short notice.

The cabins are located in Bastrop, Possum Kingdom, Garner, Lake Brownwood, Daingerfield and Caddo Lake. Some were built by the Civilian Conservation Corps in the 1930s. Call the park you which to visit to make reservations....

Lead shot ban leads scramble for alternative

By BILL SCHULZ

ATLANTA (AP) — The National Wildlife Federation's move to ban lead shot for waterfowl hunting has shot manufacturers and state wildlife agencies scrambling for an alternate plan for next season.

The federation said it plans to file suit in U.S. District Court in Sacramento, Calif., later this month to protect bottom-feeding waterfowl from lead poisoning. The National Rifle Association said it planned to fight back.

"I think that's overkill. I think it's arrogant on their part that they think they know better than all the states," said G. Ray Arnett, executive vice president of the two-million-member NRA.

The states and the ammunition industry are caught in the middle.

American shooters buy one billion shot shells per year. The controversy centers on the 39,125 tons of lead blasted into the environment when those shells are fired. According to industry estimates, 150 million to 200 million of those shells are used for hunting waterfowl.

The only alternative to lead shot is steel shot, which is not manufactured as widely.

"What we want is a scheduled, known change over a period of years with plenty of advance warning," said Bill Horn, chairman and chief executive officer of Federal Cartridge Co. "We have never been able to get anybody who would help us achieve that."

Last year, the wildlife federation successfully filed suit to ban lead shot in certain zoned areas of five states to protect eagles and waterfowl from poisoning. The NRA fought that action and lost.

In its suit, the federation said bottom-feeding waterfowl pick up spent pellets and eagles — an endangered species in many states — eat ducks who are poisoned or crippled by lead shot, swallow the lead and become ill.

The U.S. Interior Department had planned to implement those zones for the 1986-87 season. But since the decision, it announced plans for a ban in 173 counties in 26 states.

The department has not responded to the wildlife federation's notice that it was bringing suit.

Only 75,000 where 60 million bison once roamed

By SPORTS AFIELD
A Hearst Magazine

There are only bout 75,000 buffalo left to roam where once there were as many as 60 million — and most of the animals that are left are treated like nothing more than woolly cows.

The buffalo once ranged freely from western New York to Georgia, from the Carolinas to Montana, according to Sports Afield, but today not only are their numbers reduced but so is their lifestyle.

The buffalo, the biggest game animal of North America, once was the world's most numerous game species. Today, the U.S. buffalo population stands at about 75,000. Some 60,000 are in private herds — raised as pets, as game for pay-to-shoot hunts, and as meat for the exotic foods industry.

Most of the other buffalo, or bison as they are also called, are confined to public preserves — the National Bison Range in Montana, the Fort Niobrara National Wildlife Refuge in Nebraska, Blue Mound State Park in Minnesota, Wichita Mountains Wildlife Refuge in Oklahoma, Custer State Park and the adjoining Wind Cave National Park in South Dakota, and Yellowstone.

These animals do not roam freely — they are almost as intensely managed as domesticated cattle. Excess animals are auctioned off or shot in controlled hunts. Herds are rounded up frequently to be tested for brucellosis and other illness. In most cases their movements are controlled by enclosures and exclosures.

At least one small herd, however, has been allowed to keep the dignity of the wild.

ABOUT 300 buffalo — less than half of 1 percent of America's herd — range over more than 1 million acres of the Henry Mountains in southern Utah. They are not rounded up because they can't be — they are wild — and they are hunted as fair game.

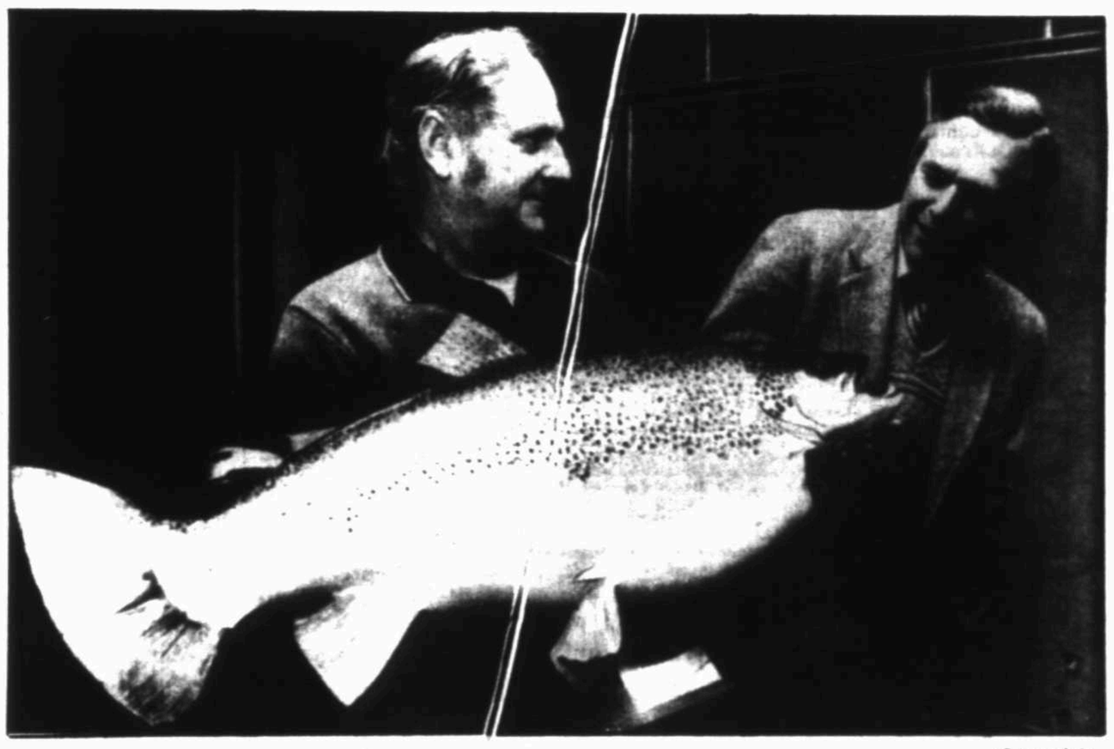

The buffalo were transplanted into Utah in 1941 from Yellowstone by a local sportsman's club, and were first hunted in 1950. They roam an area that belongs to the Bureu of Land Management, and the herd is managed by the state of Utah, which may maintain no more than 200 adult animals by census taken after the fall hunt. Excess animals are culled by fair chase.

THE WILD buffalo are hunted under a limited-permit system. On the first hunt 35 years ago, 10 permits were issued. Last year, 32 residents and three non-residents drew once in-a-lifetime permits. Residents paid $200; non- residents, $1,000. An additional license was auctioned off at more than $5,000.

What makes these buffalo so special is their wildness — they have little contact with humans and prove elusive game. They are potentially dangerous.

"They are as close to the great game of Africa as most of us will ever come," Lionel Atwill wrote in Sports Afield, "yet in the public's mind they are no more than woolly cows — this country's once most wild, most prolific animal now brought to leash."

He said there must be other lands in the West that could support small herds, adding, "one would think a few scattered square miles of public land might be held as free range for an animal that is as symbolic of this country as the eagle, an animal whose very wildness has slipped through the cracks."

Kenya's rhino in danger

By Ann Levin
Copley News Service

Peter Jenkins imagines the day when children around the world will drop pennies into plastic rhinoceros banks to help save the endangered black rhino.

Fifteen years ago, Kenya supported 20,000 of the creatures widely hunted because the pulverized horn is believed to be an aphrodisiac. Today, partly because of poaching, there are about 425 left.

Jenkins, a Kenya game warden for nearly 40 years, is a very worried man. He believes the Masai Mara Game Reserve — home of the greatest assemblage of grazing animals left on Earth — is on the brink of ecological disaster.

Tour companies, such as Lindblad Travel of Westport, Conn., recognize that Kenya is sitting on an ecological time bomb. On a recent safari, Lars-Eric Lindblad, the company's founder, invited Jenkins to address the group.

"WE WILL all be shedding a lot of tears over this soon," Jenkins intoned to the Americans over dinner at the Mt. Kenya Safari Club in Nanyuki. Then, to the embarrassment of some of the Americans, Jenkins, an outspoken man, pinned some of the blame on the latest tourist facility to open up in the Mara. Indeed, this group of Lindblad tourists was flying the very next day to the Mara to inaugurate the opening of a luxury tent camp in which they own an interest.

Jenkins proceeded to skewer the provincial council that administers the reserve. He said they allowed construction of three tourist camps within the reserve in defiance of an earlier agreement with the national government to limit the number of lodges to six.

He talked about the land's "carrying capacity," and the conflicting needs of animal populations — concepts familiar to beleaguered U.S. park rangers.

After dinner, one of Jenkins' colleagues smoothed the ruffled feathers.

"Peter? He's a bit of a purist," she said out of earshot.

Unfortunately, the Kenya wilderness faces a dual threat — from tourism and from the burgeoning population. Tracks of four-wheel-drive vehicles in remote areas of game reserves are easily visible from low-flying planes.

In 1963, Kenya had 350,000 visitors, 75,000 of whom went to the Mara. The country's goal is to host 1 million per year by 1989, according to a report in Animal Kingdom magazine. Investors from Nairobi and abroad want to build more camps and lodges in and around the reserve, adding 400 beds, the article reported.

KARL AMMAN, manager of the newly opened Mara Intrepids Club, said it takes the grasslands six months to recover from five cars driving over the same track. He said he is teaching his drivers to traverse the vast savannah with as little ecological damage as possible.

By far the greater threat to the parks and reserves, however, are the social and economic pressures to cultivate and graze the land. At a briefing for Lindblad tourists, travel agent Dennis Lakin explained that Kenya — with a 4.1 percent annual population growth — has the highest human birth rate in the world.

There were 11 million Kenyans in 1963 when the country gained independence from Britain. There are 19 million today, and the population is expected to double in less than 20 years, Lakin said.

While 10 percent of the nation receives wages for their labor, the other 90 percent is engaged in subsistence farming, he said.

In a country where two-thirds of the land is uninhabitable — the parks and reserves comprise 7.5 percent of the total land area and 25 percent of the usable land — the game parks are highly desirable for agriculture.

YET, MANY experts believe that increased tourism — Kenya's third-largest source of income after coffee and tea — will ultimately be the salvation of the wilderness. If the wide-open spaces are subdivided into farms, Kenya will kill the goose that lays the golden egg, they say.

MC niche waits on playoffs

Midland College completed its first undefeated regular season in history, which makes it something special for Coach Jerry Stone as well as the Chaparrals.

You see, he's never coached an undefeated team before, and, if you look at his record, that's a little strange, too.

In his nine seasons at MC, Stone's teams have finished first five times in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference. Five times, as a matter of fact, in the last six years.

Three times in the last four Region V tournaments, MC has won titles and is favored this year for a fourth. Prior to that, Stone had two second place and a third place finish in Region V and, beyond that, a national championship in 1982 and a fourth place finish in nationals last year.

Still, this is the first time he has coached a team that has gone unbeaten, either here or anywhere else. The last time a WJCAC team went unbeaten was in 1980 when Nolan Richardson's Western Texas College team capped a perfect regular season with the national title.

PERFECT seasons just aren't that common, either in junior college or the NCAA. You don't need both hands to count the number of teams that have gone unbeaten in the major college ranks since the 1930's.

Still, it's what follows the season, unbeaten or otherwise, that is the criteria by which a team is judged.

So it is that the 1981-82 team, despite those four early season defeats, is the the Chaparral team for the ages. It's the 1981-82 team that the current MC team hopes to emulate.

So what are its chances?

Although this team has frequently suited up only nine players, due to injuries, it's a team whose advantage over the national champions still seems to be in its depth.

"Despite the number of people we suit up, this team does have more depth," agrees Stone, "On the national championship team our bench wasn't nearly as strong. We had one or two players who could come off the bench and help.

"And at Hutchinson we lost Lance McCain as a result of an injury. and that really put us in a bind."

THE PUNTUS Wilson-Chester Smith-Spud Webb bunch specialized in harrowing finishes. And almost as harrowing as the close finishes, sometimes, was the excitement generated by the game those Chaps played with personal fouls. Somehow there was always the danger that the Chaps might not have enough people for the allowable personals.

"I can go to the bench with this team and there is no noticeable drop off in talent," explains Stone. As a matter of fact, somewhat like last year, Stone sometimes has to go to his bench to find the right combination for that particular night.

It's a curious team, a team with no dominating inside big man. Last year the game-plan was to work the ball into 6-9 Teviin Binns.

This year the offensive thrust comes from the guards and is ignited by the defense, those quick hands and fast feet that score points in clusters off turnovers and also possess the outside weapons to riddle a zone.

The unbeaten is nice, something that will be remembered for future generations, but it's what's ahead that will determine the ultimate niche this Chaparral team achieves in MC archives.

Stone undoubtedly remembers 1981 and the 30-3 team that won WJCAC and was a heavy favorite to win Region V. The Chaps lost that year in the Regional finals at Brownwood.

Midland hasn't enjoyed an unbeaten basketball team since the Knox Nunnally-Charles Dishman-Mike Humphrey-Mike Marsh Midland High team in 1960, a team that went 30-0 and didn't have a close call all year.

Then in the final step before the state finals in Austin, the Bulldogs went up to the Panhandle and in an drafty old Butler building lost to Borger in double overtime. This was the same Borger team Midland had blown off the court in two regular season meetings.

That's the concern about the Region V tournament at Snyder this week. The field is overflowing with Borgers.

DRUGS

Most of the players named by Ueberroth were either unavailable for comment or declined to discuss the matter. Parker, who had said Friday he would conduct a news conference Saturday, called it off "on advice of his counsel," a Cincinnati Reds official said. Parker brushed past newsmen and photographers at the Reds' Tampa, Fla., training camp.

On Friday he told the Pittsburgh Press: "I have never heard of a fine levied that large, anywhere, in any industry," a reference to the estimated $87,500 he would have to donate to drug-prevention, "and there are people who have committed far more serious crimes."

"I have no problem doing community work. I was doing those things long before we went into court. And I have agfejd to do the drug testing. But I've never heard of a fine levied for as much as that. Ten percent of my salaries could feed a lot of mouths. Basically, 10 percent of my salary sounds unrealistic," Parker said.

CABELL said Friday he had no problems with Ueberroth's decree. "I'm just going to do what he wants me to do. I've always wanted to get it over with. I'm going to agree with what he says to do."

Hernandez, told a news conference Saturday morning at the Mets' camp in St. Petersburg, Fla., that he had been in contact overnight with his lawyer, his agent and the union. "A grievance will be filed through the Players Association," he said. He declined to discuss details of the grievance.

"Obviously, I'm not pleased with the decision of the commissioner," Hernandez said. "When a decision is made by the arbitrator, I will make my decision on what to do."

And Frank Cashen, the Mets' general manager, said after meeting with Hernandez that it was his understanding a grievance would be filed on behalf of all 21 players named by Ueberroth. Asked on what grounds, Cashen said he wasn't sure, but noted that Hernandez "is a very private person. He might find community service difficult."

Rose rides winds into tie for lead

By BOB GREEN

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — Clarence Rose rode a hard-won round of par-72 through gale-force winds and into a tie for the third round lead Saturday in the $600,000 Honda Classic.

"My best 72, and one of my top 10 career rounds," said Rose, now in his sixth season of PGA Tour activity. "It was a great score today — like a 65."

No one offered argument.

In the face of the extreme winds — 30 miles per hour with gusts to 45 — it was a remarkable achievement. Only one other man — Mike Reid — was able to match it. No one bettered it.

Honda Open

Rose completed three trips over the TPC course at 215, 1-under-par. He was tied for the lead with Andy Bean, who struggled through the winds and out of water and through varied forms of woe to a 77.

Of the 22 men who started the day's play in subpar figures, there were the only two to stay there.

Bean did it only by virtue of what he called "maybe the best shot I ever hit" — a 3-wood second shot that set up a one-foot birdie putt on the 18th.

Payne Stewart was next at 73-216.

Kenny Knox, the longshot who led through the first two rounds, shot an 80.

And he remained in title contention.

He was tied at a 217 with Jodie Mudd who had a 75, a score Stewart said was "around par today."

That may have been optimistic. Actually, the field averaged 79 for the day.

"I don't think I ever played when it was this windy," Rose said.

Others recalled the howling winds of Sawgrass in the Tournament Players Championship of 1979, the U.S. Open of 72, the old Sahara in Las Vegas in the 60s. Bean mentioned "some Crosbys, maybe that one Memorial."

In short, it was a golfing horror show.

"A torture test," said Stewart.

"Ridiculous," said Rose, who last week matched his career-high with a runner-up spot in the Los Angeles Open. "You just had to hit and hope."

At least half the field didn't hope enough. Or hit it too often. Of the 72 men who started play, exactly half — 36 — shot in the 80s.

They included such outstanding performers as the current U.S. Open champion, Andy North, with an 84.

Laura Baugh comes out of the sand.

Laura Baugh opens four-shot Uniden lead

COSTA MESA, Calif. (AP) — Laura Baugh, in quest of her first LPGA victory, shot a 68 Saturday to open up a four-shot lead after three rounds of the $330,000 Uniden Invitational.

Baugh, the Rookie of the Year on the women's tour in 1973, began the day one stroke in front of Muffin Spencer-Devlin, but pulled away from the field with her second 68 of the tournament at Mesa Verde Country Club as Spencer-Devlin crumbled after making the turn.

Heading into Sunday's final round, Baugh has a 10-under-par 206 total and is four shots ahead of Mary Beth Zimmerman, who had a third-round 70.

Uniden LPGA

Patty Sheehan was another shot back after she also carded a 70.

A group of four — Beth Daniel, Pat Bradley, Alice Ritzman and Val Skinner — was at 213, seven strokes off the pace.

Spencer-Devlin, who stayed within a shot of Baugh through the first 10 holes of the third round, lost six strokes to par in the next four holes — a double bogey on No. 11, a bogey on No. 13, and a bogey plus a two-stroke penalty for slow play on No. 14.

Playing in a threesome with Baugh and Zimmerman, Spencer-Devlin finished the round with a 4-over-par 76 that left her nine shots back of the leader.

The 30-year-old Baugh carded a 35 on the front nine, then widened her lead on the back side with birdies on the 10th, 11th and 16th holes for a 33.

She had fired a 68 to share the first-round lead with three others, then had a 70 the second day to edge ahead of the pack.

Piniella or LaRussa, Who's next?

An AP Sports Analysis
By JOHN NELSON

The oddsmaking mystery in Las Vegas this month: Who would last longer? Dick Williams, Lou Piniella or Tony LaRussa.

Williams was the first one gone, as manager of the San Diego Padres, but his departure might also hasten Piniella's. If Piniella loses on opening day as manager of the Yankees, watch out ... Williams might be the new manager, and LaRussa would outlast them all, despite leading both leagues in votes of confidence from the Chicago White Sox.

Remember, George Steinbrenner hadn't owned the Yankees for more than a year when he tried to get Williams from the Oakland A's and ran afoul of Charlie Finley. ...

WHEN YOU aspire to perfection, as Detroit Tigers reliever Willie Hernandez did in 1984, you have to be ready to suffer the consequences when you fail, as he did in 1985. Hernandez had 31 saves last year ... but he blew nine save opportunities and was booed each time.

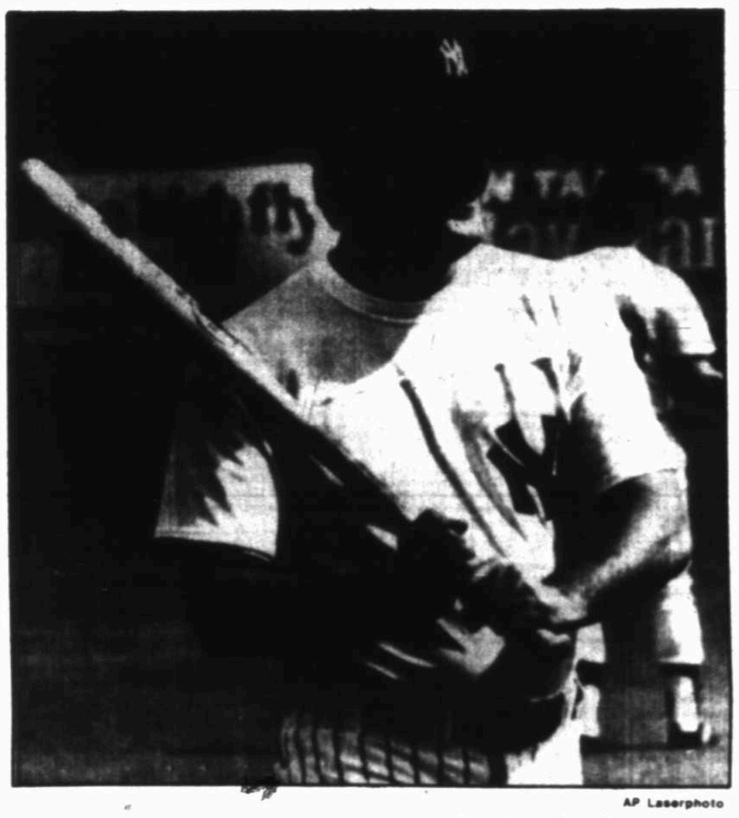

"I warned everyone not to get spoiled by a perfect season," Hernandez says. "I wanted them to remember I'm only human."

Drug problems led to Alan Wiggins' trade from San Diego to the Baltimore Orioles last July. The Padres had given up on him, but he hasn't given up on himself. ... Wiggins voted in favor of drug testing in Orioles contracts this year, then reported early to spring training.

GOOD JOB by Wiggins and by Bret Saberhagen.

The Cy Young winner Saberhagen is setting an example that could well solve the squabble between baseball and the players' union over drug testing. The 21-year-old pitcher won a $925,000 contract in arbitration and asked the Royals to put a testing clause in it. ... He asked for it. No prompting. "I have nothing to hide," he said. All our kids should grow up like that.

Did the Boston Red Sox lose by winning their arbitration case with

AP Laserphoto

Lou Piniella...all smiles now, but for how long?

Wade Boggs?

Boggs asked for $1.85 million and got $1.35 million instead. General Manager Lou Gorman asked the pertinent question: "If you give him that much this year, what do you pay him four years from now?" ... Put out another chair in the board room, Mrs. Yawkey.

Boggs checked into the Red Sox's camp at Winter Haven, Fla., last Thursday and called arbitration "a very unpleasant experience." We should all have such unpleasant experiences.

Seattle Mariners President Chuck Armstrong says people hold the misbegotten belief that baseball is a big business. ... "The New York Yankees can bring in $40 million to $50 million a year, but we're not the New York Yankees," Armstrong says. "Our gross revenues are $16 million to $17 million. A good restaurant in Los Angeles probably has a higher gross than the we do."

TOM SEAVER says if the Chicago White Sox don't trade him to an East Coast team after this season, he'll quit. He wants to be near his Greenwich, Conn., home, his wife and his two daughters. ... Sounds kind of strange coming from a 41-year-old pitcher who may well have no choice but to quit after another season ... but Seaver did average seven innings per start last year. He might last a year or two more, and he would fit right into the Yankees geriatric staff, which already averages 38 years and climbing.

The Cleveland Indians pitching staff had the highest ERA in baseball last year, 4.91, and Manager Pat Corrales says he's not interested in finesse anymore. ... He has five spots open on his staff.

"I don't care if they are on the roster or not," Corrales says. "If they are better than the other guys, we'll find a spot. I'll tell you something else. It won't be a camp to be working on a new pitch."

Montreal Expos pitcher Charlie Lea thinks he's coming back from a rotator cuff injury that sidelined him last year and will keep him out of action all this year too. ... He thinks because Rick Reuschel could do it, so can he. Nobody likes to see a quality player knocked out because of a rotator cuff injury ... just ask Bruce Kison, who quit the Red Sox because of it. Lea's chances are not good.

Sorry, Charlie.

MAYBE THE St. Louis Cardinals are feeling a little snakebitten. After all, if Vince Coleman can get run over by a tarpaulin machine, what couldn't happen? ... That apparently is why shortstop Ozzie Smith has been told he can't do backflips anymore when he runs onto the field.

"We know the fans liked it, but it would be awfully easy to sprain an ankle or land off-balance and break a wrist," General Manager Dal Maxvill says.

Cincinnati Reds player-manager Pete Rose did a fine job last season ... probably better than anyone but he expected. But the cognizance of one key element in building a real winner was totally obliterated during his chase of Ty Cobb's record last season ... what the Reds really need is a young first baseman who can hit with some power.

Houston's Guy Lewis aspired to be rancher

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — A career decision 33 years ago turned an East Texas farmer-rancher into one of the most successful college basketball coaches of all time.

Guy V. Lewis, who will retire at the end of this season, was at first reluctant to leave the peaceful rolling hills and the family's 700-acre farm for a high-pressure career in college basketball.

After he graduated from Houston in 1947, Lewis and his wife Dena were anxious to settle down near Arp, a dot along State Road 135 south of Tyler.

Lewis turned down an offer to become an assistant coach for the Cougars. "I just wanted to settle down," Lewis said. "I planned to just farm and raise some cattle."

But three years later, when the Cougars again offered him a job, Lewis was ready to leave the country life to produce hoops instead of holsteins.

HE SERVED a three-year apprenticeship as an assistant to Alden Pasche before starting a 30-year success story as the Cougar coach that produced more than 590 victories.

After posting losing seasons in Lewis' first three years, the Cougars ran off a string of 26 consecutive non-losing seasons, going into the current campaign. They enjoyed 20-victory seasons 14 times.

Lewis' teams advanced to the NCAA playoffs 14 times, including five trips to the Final Four tournament.

He was named AP Coach of the year in 1968 during the Elvin Hayes era and again in 1983, when Akeem Olajuwon was leader of the Cougar's Phi Slama Jama dunking fraternity.

LEWIS will close out his coaching career as the 11th winningest coach of all time.

Led by Hayes and Olajuwon, Lewis has tutored 29 players into the pros and 26 have been 1,000-point career college scorers.

He never has regretted turning in his overalls for pin stripes.

He's staunchly defended by many of his former players, such as Hayes and Olajuwon. But he also had critics who said he couldn't win the big games.

"They would have been saying the same thing about Dean Smith (North Carolina Coach) if he'd never won a national title," said Hayes, now an administrative assistant at Houston and a candidate to replace Lewis.

AP Laserphoto

Guy Lewis...calls it a career.

"I remember they said Wilt (Chamberlain) was a loser until he led two teams to the championship."

Lewis treats praise and criticism with the same shrug.

"Nobody gets into coaching expecting to win a popularity contest," Lewis said. "I don't like the criticism but it doesn't bother me.

"There were a lot of pressure games and a lot of big games we had to win to get to the Final Four. I suppose somebody must have been doing something right."

LEWIS WAS unprepared in a recent interview to recount his favorite memories.

"Memories?" he repeated almost incredulously. "I'm not going around thinking about the highlights of my career. When I get out, I'll have memories. Right now, I'm still trying to win some ball games."

When Lewis gets around to sorting out 30-plus years on the hardwoods, he'll likely remember:

— Becoming the forerunner of integration in Texas by signing Elvin Hayes and Don Chaney in 1964.

— Coaching the Cougars to a 71-69 victory over Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and the UCLA Bruins on Jan. 20, 1968, in what became known as "The game of the century."

— Houston's 1968 Final Four appearance when the Cougars took a 31-0 record into the tournament and lost both games.

— The 1983 Final Four when the Cougars were heavy favorites in the title game against North Carolina State, but lost 54-52 on a last second shot by Lorenzo Charles.

Closing seconds losses, in fact, played a role in Lewis' decision to step down this year.

After a bitter one-point overtime loss to Texas Tech Jan. 4 Lewis told his family this might be his last year. A 71-68 loss to Rice on Jan. 11 was the final straw.

"I made up my mind about 3 a.m. following the Rice game," Lewis said.

ALTHOUGH he remains in good health, Lewis admitted the tension had started to take its toll.

"Game after game, I can't take it like used to," Lewis said. "One-point ball games are for young coaches. I like to win them by 20 or 30 points."

Lewis, 63, admits he'd started thinking about retirement before the season started.

Houston had lost Tito Horford, declared ineligible by the NCAA because of a recruiting violation. Horford was the sixth player since the end of last season Lewis lost to defection or grades.

Lewis has not decided what he'll do in retirement. He likes to travel and would consider an opportunity to coach in Europe for one year.

"I haven't ruled that out," Lewis said. "I might do that for a year if the right place opened up. I haven't had any offers, just a few feelers."

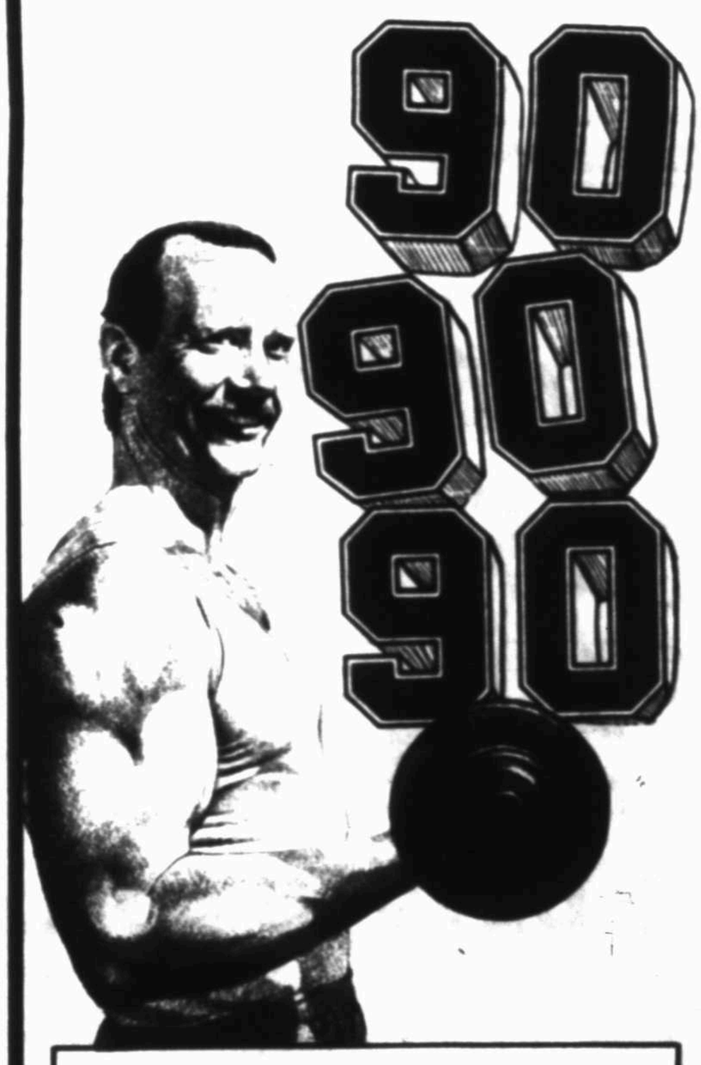

Lewis says he'll go a little gardening and yard work for relaxation.

He agreed with a suggestion that he might draw a crowd of neighbors to oversee his gardening decisions just as he had been critiqued for his coaching decisions.

It would go something like: "Look where Guy planted the petunias. How could he put them there? Obviously, the man's no gardner."

Lewis, smiling at the possible scene, glanced at the five Final Four banners flying above the Hofheinz Pavilion court and replied, "I wouldn't be surprised if they did."

Making a house a home

Many say that a good, workable floor plan is what makes a house a home.

In the case of a certain townhome in Polo Park, located at 1711 Castleford, the floor plan enables the present owners to enjoy an upbeat lifestyle in a quiet, luxurious setting.

The home's builder, Paul Billingsley, planned a versatile modern traditional exterior for the home, allowing it to blend perfectly with its neighbor homes. Approaching the recessed front entry, beautifully landscaped foliage lines the walk and flourishes in the modest planter beds about the doorway.

The foyer, featuring glazed Italian tile, opens into a spacious formal living area (top photo on the cover). A handsome woodburning fireplace

Family income of home buyers up dramatically, study reveals

With the number of two-income families on the rise, the combined family income of those a buying homes has increased dramatically in the current housing cycle, reports Chicago Title Insurance Co. in its 10th annual survey of recent home buyers.

The company, a leading insurer of property titles, surveyed buyers in 11 representative metropolitan housing markets last year. It found that 78 percent of all home buyers in metropolitan areas earned $30,000 or more last year, and more than half had a combined family income of $41,000 or more.

About one of every four families had a combined income of more than $61,000.

"Among home buyers, rising income directly relates to the growing number of families with two wage earners," said John Pfistser, vice president and director of market research for Chicago Title.

Last year, 76.3 percent of all home buyers are married couples. Among these, three of every four families had two wage earners. And, in 92.6 percent of these families, both partners were employed full time, he observes.

In 1962, less than 50 percent of repeat home buyers were two-income families. Today, that figure has risen to 72.2 percent. Over the same time period, the percentage of first-time buyers in this category has risen from 62.4 percent to 85.8 percent and appears to have leveled off at this point.

Chicago Title reports that, among married couples buying for the first time last year, the largest group had a combined income of between $31,000 and $40,000. What may be more significant, however, is the large number of buyers in this category ——46.3 percent of the sample —— whose incomes exceeded this range , while only 17.2 percent of married first-time buyers earned less than $31,000.

In the company's sample, 36.5 percent of all married couples buying for the first time had a combined income of between $31,000 and $40,000; 20.9 percent earned between $41,000 and $50,000; 13.6 percent earned between $51,000 and $60,000; and 11.8 percent earned $61,000 or more. Fewer than 20 percent earned less than $30,000.

Among repeat buyers, 42.4 percent earned $61,000 or more; 16.2 percent were in the $51,000 to $60,000 range; 14.4 percent earned between $41,000 and $50,000; and 19.8 percent earned between $31,000 and $40,000.

Pfister says the impact of two family incomes is dramatically apparent when compared with the incomes of married couples buying homes last year. Among those earning $61,000 or more, 83 percent were two-income families. For those in the $51,000 to $60,000 range, the percentage rose to 93.9 percent.

The percentage of two-income families dropped off to 60 percent among those families earning $30,000 or less.

The Chicago Title study also provides a breakdown of median home prices based on family income. The median price is a mid-point with an equal number of homes priced above and below it.

For those with a combined income under $30,000, the median home price last year was $75,970. It rose to $83,580 for those in the $31,000 to $40,000 income range; to $84,550 for those earning between $41,000 and $50,000; to $113,070 for those in the $51,000 to $60,000 income range; and to $139,710 for those earning more than $61,000.

Make a checklist before putting house on market

By MAY ADELAIDE BARBER

The time has come to sell your house. This is a decision which faces many Midland families each year. Whether you are being transferred and your employer will offer to purchase your property or your family has simply outgrown your present house, this can be a traumatic experience for the whole family.

The transferee with a company buy-back program probably has the least stress concerning the sale of his house, but he may be quite concerned about uprooting the family again and facing another new environment. He may have the option of trying to sell his house himself before the company offer expires. If so, his family will face many of the same problems that the growing family making a local move must handle.

The first question most home sellers ask their Realtor is "How much can I get for my house?" Using information available at the Board of Realtors office, the Realtor will come back with a market analysis of the area where the house is located and point out the approximate price at which the figures on the market analysis indicate the house will sell. The suggested listing price will depend on several things including the general economic climate at the time, the number of similar houses presently on the market, the interest rates for new loans and the condition and appeal of the house to be sold.

These first three items are things over which an individual home owner has no control. The last item, however, is directly dependent on the care and concern which the home owner has given the property. Deferred maintenance costs money.

When putting a house on the market, the owner should make a checklist of repairs that are needed– and do them. Do any of the faucets leak? Fix them. Often a new washer will take care of the problem. If the outside paint is curling or peeling, take a couple of weekends and scrape and repaint the wood. Is the yard neat and trim? If not, take the time to put it in good shape. A beautifully kept yard can make the crucial difference when a home buyer is trying to decide which of two houses to purchase. Clean carpets and fresh paint on the inside make a much better impression on a potential buyer than dirty spots and handprints. Neat, uncluttered closets also make a favorable impression, and they look larger than closets crammed full. Since the owner is hoping to move in the near future, cleaning out the closets and disposing of unneeded "treasures" makes sense.

When the house is in good shape, it can be turned over to a professional Realtor. With the Multiple Listing Service in Midland, the home owner has over 300 Realtors available to show and sell his or her property.

H.O.M.E.S. Guild suggests ways to avoid remodeling pitfalls

By GREGG HOWARD
Copley News Service

If you're into horror stories, one of the best ways to get a bone-chilling earful is by talking to people who have remodeled their homes.

From contractors tearing out walls that should have been left standing, to plumbers clanging on pipes while children try to sleep, to a do-it-yourselfer completing a job only to have to have it redone the right way by a contractor, to a home owner paying thousands more than estimated for an improvement, the list of horrors can go on and on.

But there must be some value in remodeling, or the $60-billion-a-year industry would not continue to exist, let alone grow at an average annual rate of 14 percent.

When you take into consideration the cost of new housing, as well as the expenses of real estate commissions on the sale of a present home and the costs of moving, professional remodeling can make sound financial sense.

"If a more efficient kitchen, an added bathroom or a better use of available space are among your reasons for considering a move, consider improving instead," said Bob Rasmussen, president of the National Association of the Remodeling Industry.

"A new kitchen or bathroom added to your present home will cost a lot less than a new house, and the equity you already have in your home will help you finance improvements. You won't have the expense or the hassle of moving; you don't have to uproot your family and you will have achieved your objective — to have a 'custom' home."

The first step in any successful home improvement project is to know exactly what you want, according to the Commercial Credit Financial Network, a control data company for several banks and savings and loans.

Of course, knowing exactly what you want is not as easy as it sounds.

It is not enough to say, "I want a new sun deck." What kind of sun deck? How big? Placed where? Made of what materials? Resting on what kind of substructure and soil? How many people will use it at one time? What furniture will be on it?

It can help to draw a picture of what you want, using graph paper and cutting patterns of furniture to scale.

You need detailed plans whether you go to a contractor or do the work yourself, the network said. Before you begin a project is the time to consult with experts — an architect, engineer or the contractor you may want to select.

You may not be sure if you can handle the work. This is the time to hit the books and talk to people, such as building code inspectors (who can also tell you if permits will be needed), suppliers and experienced renovators. You'll need all the detailed information you can assemble and understand.

If you're unable to understand all the information, don't do the remodeling yourself. One of the most common remodeling pitfalls is for a do-it-yourselfer to take on too large a project or to lack the proper skills to do the job.

But researching should tell you what is involved in any project so that you can determine whether you're capable of doing the work.

Other common pitfalls are improper financing, bad design and over-improvement. Over-improvement means adding on improvements that put your home out of kilter, valuewise, with your neighborhood.

For example, a home owner might install a pool for $15,000 believing that it will upgrade the value of his home by $20,000. However, as Realtors will tell you, nobody wants to buy a $90,000 house in a $70,000 neighborhood. If they have that kind of money, they'll look in a more expensive area.

Other remodeling pitfalls, such as poor materials, improper work or failure to meet government code requirements, may be the result of inadequate contractors.

These people make for some of the worst horror stories.

Unscrupulous peddlers, some of them unlicensed contractors, are strong on sales pitches, convincing on promises, but short on performance.

To avoid being trapped by such people, here's some advice from the H.O.M.E.S. Guild, a community organization in Los Angeles and Ventura counties in California that helps consumers find good tradespeople to do remodeling work.

— Shop around before hiring a contractor. Get names of some reputable contractors by asking friends, neighbors or local professionals in related fields for recommendations.

— Ask the contractor for job references. Ask the contractor for a list of jobs he or she has completed in the area. A skilled contractor is proud of his work and shouldn't mind providing this information.

— Talk to the contractor's customers. Ask if the contractor stuck to the schedule; if he offered suggestions and advice when appropriate. Ask if the customer was pleased with the work and the way it was done.

Ask if the contractor listened when the owner had a problem. Did he want to resolve it? Did he make necessary corrections willingly?

— Whenever possible, look at samples of the contractor's work. Determine whether the work meets your standards.

— Make sure the contractor is licensed. Call your local contractor's state license board to determine if the contractor is licensed properly and to verify that the license is in good standing.

— Verify identity and business location. Ask the contractor for his or her business address and telephone number. Fly-by-night contractors often operate out of temporary locations such as hotel rooms.

— Request a certificate of worker's compensation insurance coverage. Most state worker's compensation laws provide that a home owner must pay for work-related injuries suffered by an employee of the contractor if the contractor doesn't carry insurance.

— Make sure everything you and the contractor have agreed upon is included in the contract. The contract binds you, as well as the contractor, to the project. After conversations with your contractor, you may wish to change your original plans. If you have discussed added work, substitutions of materials or equipment or changes in the completion date, make sure that clearly worded and signed change orders reflect this. If any guarantee is involved, make sure you know just what is guaranteed, what strings are attached, who will make good. Remember that verbal assurances aren't enforceable. Get it in writing.

If you don't know a contractor in your area, check with your local building contractor's association for a list of recommended contractors.

POLO PARK

stretches to the deeply vaulted ceiling with a convenient ceiling fan and recessed lighting. L-shaped windows with white mini blind appointments stand on each side of the fireplace, illuminating the plush mauve carpeting. In one area is a wet bar with sparkling inlayed mirrors and glass shelves beneath recessed lighting.

A dramatic spiral staircase leads to the carpeted loft, which poses perfectly for a small office. The present owner has installed a wall of bookshelves for convenient use. With decorative brass track lighting and an angled skylight, this area can easily be turned into a cozy bedroom.

The formal dining area stands beautifully beneath the loft area, as a vital part of this entertainment space. A recessed ceiling with inlayed rice paper and a lovely brass chandelier reflect into a long mirrored wall; projecting a romantic feeling with a lovely brass chandelier perfectly dimmed for those quiet dining moments.

Beside this formal eating area is a long rectangular kitchen (bottom left photo on the cover) and breakfast room with two openings into the formal expanses. From a long, open buffet, guests can easily be served in the formal dining area. A bifold door opens into this baker's haven, boasting all electric appliances, from the living area. Atop mauve and white patterned linoleum, matching floral bordered wallpaper, ash custom cabinets and fluorescent lighting give this room a clean, refreshing feeling. Just beside the cooking area is a small, private utility room, secluded by a bifold door and leading to a two-car garage.

The breakfast room, featuring matching linoleum and wallpaper, onlooks a beautiful deck area just beyond a sliding glass door. Originally, this was a courtyard but the present owners enjoy a low maintenance lifestyle. By planting smaller foliage, the high-fenced area projects a tropical flair, rare to West Texas.

To the left of the entry are the bedroom and bath areas. In the guest bath, mauve pastel wallpaper with the matching carpeting and recessed lighting compliment the single marble vanity and tub/shower combination, all with brass appointments.

Double windows viewing the front lawn with white mini blinds beneath a brocade-look cornice board in rich winter hues perfectly matches the room's bedspread. Six panel pocket doors seclude the convenient closet with storage shelves.

Three panel double doors open into the luxurious master bath (smaller right photo on the cover) with pastel floral wallpaper, matching carpeting and recessed lighting with chic glazed triple skylights. The mirrored split double marble vanity provides simultaneous multiple use. A raised tub stands, also with brass fixtures, stands independently as a decorative addition. Opposite are swing doors into a private toilet area. Completing this room's useability is an immense walk-in closet with several divided hanging rods and many storage cabinets and shelves.

From top to bottom, inside and out, this townhome provides its owners a beuatiful setting for any type of lifestyle they choose.

Saunas, hot tubs go high tech

By STEVE HURTADO
Copley News Service

It had to happen sooner or later. Spas — with their relaxing saunas and soothing baths — have come out of the yard and into the home.

Even if you don't want those devices in your home, you no longer have to try to hide ugly hot-tub motors and filters behind hedges or redwood lath enclosures. Tubs have entered the computer age and now come self-contained — all-in-one reflections of the "I've-got-it-made" good life.

Operating panels are high-tech gadgets controlled by touch. Most of the panels include controls for everything you need to operate a hot tub — lights, water jets, heaters, energy-control cycles and aerators.

If water isn't exactly your forte, if you have a more steamy style, consider a sauna. These dry heat baths use steam provided by water thrown or drizzled onto hot stones to rejuvenate and stimulate the body.

Present models require absolutely no plumbing and can be installed easily in a home or office in an area measuring 3-by-4 feet or larger — and that can be an existing walk-in closet or part of a bathroom, according to a spokesman for HELO Inc., a Stamford, Conn.-based manufacturer of saunas.

Saunas — indoor or outdoor — come in many sizes and shapes, often precut according to customer specifications. They usually are made from rich, attractive woods such as redwood, cedar and pine, which have unique properties that ensure comfortable surface temperatures.

While wood is essential to a sauna, other materials are preferred for tubs. Gone are the days of coveted redwood hot tubs.

"People are going for non-porous, low maintenance surfaces," said Scott Jasgur of Hawkeye, a spa manufacturing firm. "Wood is porous and invites growth (of algae)."

Acrylic and fiberglass tubs are popular alternatives, although acrylic is the material most often preferred. According to many spa manufacturers, acrylic is more durable, shinier and easier to maintain than fiberglass.

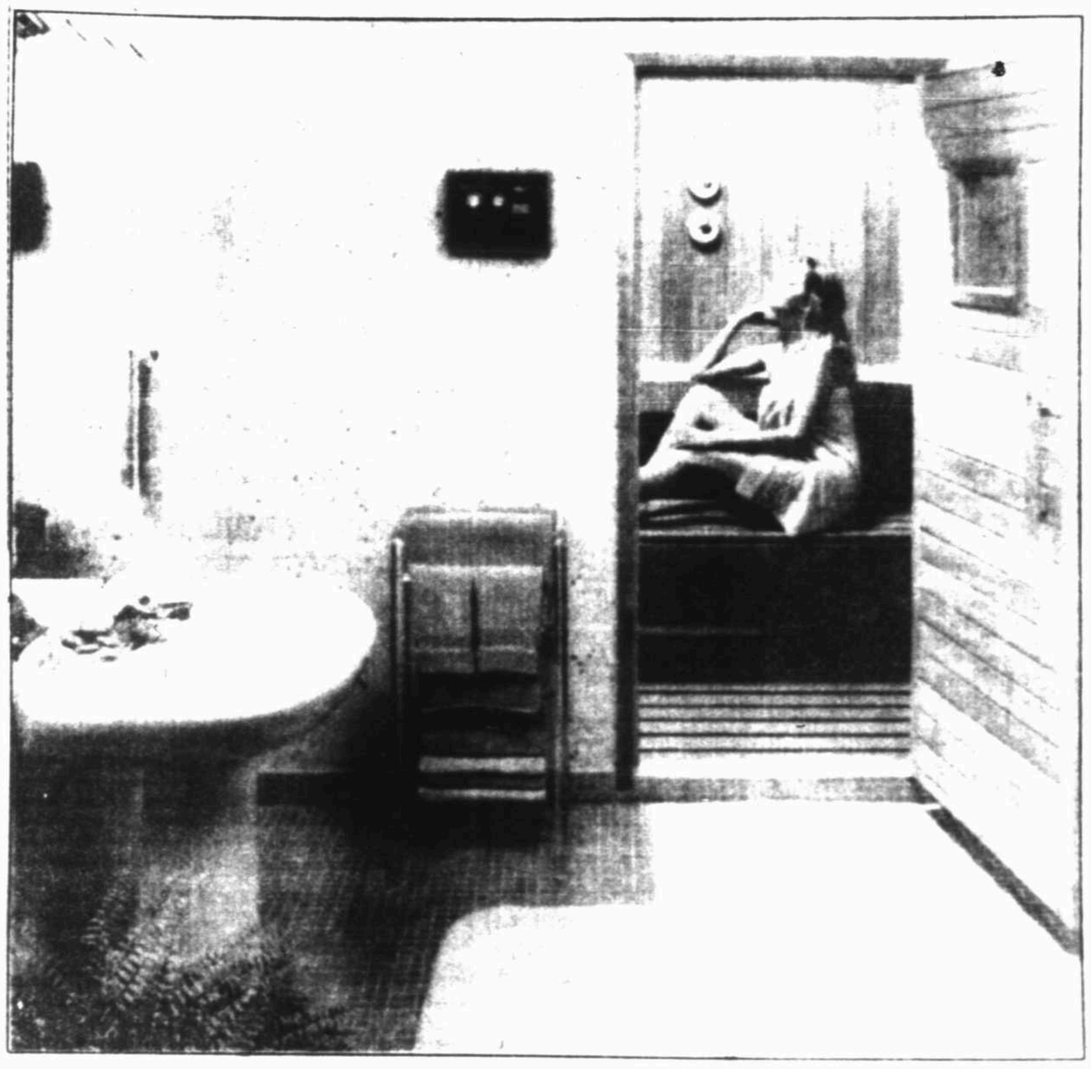

Aside from new materials and high-tech controls, comfort is a priority in new tubs. Lounge-type seats are sculpted into the walls of almost all models. Some come with attached inflatable rubber pillows and backrests. Others include hammocklike affairs that allow users to be suspended in the tub while water circulates around the entire body.

But spas are for more than relaxing.

"People are looking at spas now as something more than just spas," Jasgur said. "They've become multipurpose areas for entertaining. They're becoming focal points. You can make them as designer-right as you want."

A home owner can install one in an existing porch or create a gazebolike spa structure with raised multilevel redwood decking and redwood lattice ceilings.

When entertaining in a spa, don't forget the necessary accessories, everything from a 10-minute sand timer for novices to the sauna to floating checker and backgammon boards for the hot tubs.

Saunas, dry steamy baths designed to rejuvenate and stimulate the body, can be installed easily in a home or office in an area measuring as little as 3-by-4 feet, according to a spokesman for HELO INC., a Stamford, Conn.-based manufacturer of saunas.

Experts tell what's hot, what's not for a well-dressed home

By CAROL ROBERTS
Copley News Service

The '80s have seen a heightened reaction against look-alike housing and a rising interest in the creation of personalized living spaces. A chief means of giving interior space a unique personality is the use of accessory furnishings — lamps, vases, clocks, wall art, floral arrangements and plants.

Once upon a time, a home owner chose accessories from one specific design period to decorate his home. He chose, for example, 19th-century ornamentation or visual minimalism, early-American or contemporary. And never the twain would meet. Now, however, home owners are paying less attention to period constraints and are leaning toward comfort and individual expression in home furnishings and interiors.

Rooms mix diverse textures, illusionary techniques and a rich assortment of fabrics. The look of the '80s is a put-it-together-anyway-you-like look that draws from just about any combination of historical and contemporary references.

Design motifs for wall hangings and sculptures range from Egyptian to Oriental influences. Authentic Grecian urns sit atop laminate table tops. Traditional wood furniture is adorned with the eye-shocking neon-bright colors and unique shapes of Memphis-style vases and clocks. Swing-arm table lamps in updated glossy or metallic finishes rest on antique French chests. Carved wooden heads imported from the Philippines hang on a wall, their unfinished texture in contrast with the smooth, clear finish of Italian glass bowls displayed on a shelf.

While there is little hesitation to mix styles of decor, there is even less hesitation to mix reality with reproductions in the world of accessories.

For Southwestern flair, a home owner can include authentic handmade pots purchased on an Indian reservation or "Navaho" blankets mass-produced by a New York City manufacturer. Or both.

Great-great-grandmother's hand-carved cedar chest may add a homespun cottage look to a hallway or bedroom, or that role may be filled by reproduction cedar chest by Lane, an American manufacturer.

Greek- and Roman-style furnishings — whether real or fake — are very big in the world of accessories. The price tags, too, are big, at least for authentic travertine marble busts of the gods. Faux marble reproductions of fiberglass and reinforced polyresin are more affordable. Faux marble columns also are popular, whether a chunk or two of it supports a table or a slab simply stands there like a heroic ruin as a main accessory in a room. Faux marble also is popular for urns, tabletops and human and animal statues.

William Heffern, sales manager for Otto Gerdau Co., an importer and exporter of lacquer and marble furniture and accessories, said such materials are popular because they suggest elegant, but still affordable, fashion.

"Accessories have ... become much more sophisticated," said Jules Fogel, president of Jaru, an accessory design and manufacturing group. "We now are a home fashion industry charged with dressing a home and not just an arm of the furniture business."

No matter what style and combination of accessories a home owner chooses for his well-dressed home, the wardrobe rarely is considered complete without houseplants. Plants add freshness and their own statement of fashion — but only if they're alive. Syndicated garden columnist Patrick Denton offers the following suggestions for successful houseplants.

The key, he said, is to match a plant you like with a suitable location in the home. Make sure the plant you choose for a certain location can survive in the light that area receives.

Most plant tags describe the lighting required. "Indirect bright" or "bright diffuse" describes lighting places that are bright but do not receive direct sun. Most house plants will thrive under such conditions, which usually are found adjacent to west and south windows.

A few plants, however, will tolerate low-light conditions such those found in the center of a room, in a hallway or against an inside wall. Some of these tolerant types are Chinese evergreen, aspidistra or cast-iron plant, parlor palm, dieffenbachia or dumb cane, striped dracaena and corn plant, heart-leaved philodendron, sansevieria (snake plant), spathe flower, Swedish ivy and table fern.

Individual room air conditioning units becoming popular in home building

Homebuilders are starting to follow the pattern of apartment builders in providing individual air conditioning units for each room, instead of a central system.

In mild climates there has been a tendency not to turn on the cooling equipment, except when it is essential. Homeowners who used to think nothing of keeping the house at 73 to 75 degrees all summer, now hesitate to drop the room temperature below 80 degrees on hot days because of the excessive electric bills.

One approach to reducing the operating cost, suggest the Better Heating-Cooling Council, is to cool only that part of the house which is being occupied and letting the other rooms stay warmer until they are in use.

The traditional central cooling system does not lend itself to this type of partial operation. It would be a nuisance to constantly open and close dampers behind the air registers whenever entering or leaving a room. If the cooling register is where it belongs to do the proper job, high on the wall near the ceiling, it is out of the question to keep opening and closing dampers.

Besides, if the air system is in balance and providing the necessary volume of air as needed for each room, changing damper positions can easily throw the system out of balance.

A simpler method to control cooling for each room is the use of individual room air conditioners. The unit is needed only while the room is occupied, and may be turned off at other times.

Another important saving is the absence of losses from the ducts.

Water heater, boiler: what's the difference?

A 'water heater' heats domestic use water, for kitchen and bath, while a 'boiler' heats water for warming the rooms and providing comfort in winter, the latter also known as 'hydronic heating.'

Of special interest is the fact that the one boiler can be used for both purposes — giving you space heating in winter and water heating all year round.

Some heat systems give optional extras

If you have hydronic (hot water) heating in your home, there are several luxurious extras you can add to your home using the same boiler, reports the Better Heating-Cooling Council.

In hydronic systems, water is heated in a boiler and circulated through small tubing to baseboard radiators throughout the house on outside walls, especially under windows. In this way they set up a 'curtain wall' of warmth against the cold and drafts and, according to the Council, provides optimum comfort.

At the same time they are very flexible and easy to build upon. If you plan to finish your attic, basement or add a room, it's very easy to expand a hydronic system. Since the tubing is only finger-sized, it can be snaked through walls or floors without fuss or mess.

One advantage that is available only with hydronics is to have a built-in water heater in the boiler to give you hot faucet water all year long. No need to give valuable floor space to a separate water heater.

Another unique hydronic exclusive is a heated bath tub. By running a length of finned tubing behind the tub and connecting it to the heating system, the tub will get warm whenever the thermostat calls for heat. No more sudden chill when bare skin touches cold enamel above the water line.

If you want a heated swimming pool, have the pool water run through a heat exchanger connected to your home heating boiler. Since you won't be needing heat when you are using the pool, the boiler's capacity is enough to take care of the pool.

A heated greenhouse is another possibility with hydronics. Just treat the greenhouse as an add-on room and connect it to the heating system.

An extension of additional rooms requires an extension of your heating system. If your boiler is big enough for the addition, it may be a simple matter to extend your present hydronic heating system into the new portion of your home.

Hydronic tubing is generally ¾ inch to 1¼ inch diameter, so it can be installed in unobtrusive places, the Better Heating-Cooling Council points out.

It is genreally desirable to set up the new addition as a separate zone from the rest of the house, having its own thermostat. The thermostat controls its own small pump or zone valve to provide just the temperature the new room needs, without overheating the rest of the house.

Overheating makes for unnecessary expense

A plentiful supply of domestic hot water for cleaning and cooking is one of the blessings of American ingenuity, but you can have too much of a good thing, especially when you're paying for the fuel.

Little attention was paid until recently to the temperature setting for your tap water, but the need to conserve energy has shown there is appreciable waste in providing scalding hot water from your faucet.

The temperature setting established by the engineering profession has been 140F degrees, but that is much too hot for ordinary use, states the Better Heating-Cooling Council. Even at 120 degrees it is too hot for comfort. Of course you mix hot water with the cold, but you have already used fuel to overheat the water.

If you have a mixing valve adjacent to your water heater or tankless coil, adjust it to provide the temperature you really want. If your boiler temperature is controlled by aquastats, have your heating contractor adjust the settings to suit your needs.

Carefully selected fancy floors are made for walking, wear and tear

By GREGG HOWARD
Copley News Service

You can tromp on them, stomp on them and generally abuse them. They'll stand up for years — if you've done your homework. While floor coverings are something you can walk all over, you can't just take them in stride.

Coverings must be selected with great care and consideration, simply because they are so durable — and somewhat expensive. While furniture, draperies, comforters and other components of interior design can be changed frequently, once a floor covering has been placed in a home it will be there for years — perhaps as long as the house itself. So, a consumer must be certain to choose something to meet his tastes — perhaps something flexible that looks good with a variety of styles in case his tastes change.

It wasn't too long ago that wall-to-wall carpeting was what every home owner had to have in his home. It accommodated any style of furniture, was easy to care for and provided an unbroken expanse of color that created a sense of spaciousness. But there are plenty of alternative floor coverings, and what's best for each home owner depends mostly on which room is being floored, how much traffic that room receives and, of course, the home owner's preferences.

Floor covering manufacturers, however, offer suggestions on coverings that are most commonly used.

According to carpet manufacturers, dense, short-pile yarns generally wear best, so they are best for areas such as hallways and family rooms that get lots of traffic. For bedrooms that get relatively little traffic, high-pile, soft texture yarns give a luxurious look that still is practical since the carpet doesn't have to be as durable. Multicolor carpets in which yarns are cut to several heights help hide dirt and traffic patterns.

Generally, dark colors more readily show lint and light colors show dirt. The newest nylons, however, are soil and stain resistant, so any color carpet made of these nylons can be considered a practical choice, according to Allied Fibers, makers of Anso IV nylon.

For centuries before carpeting existed, richly finished wood floors were a mark of high style and elegance. They suffered a bit of a setback when wall-to-wall carpeting made its move to popularity in the '50s, but the country look and the "no-rules" decorating trend gave wood floors a new boost. Always popular for entries, wood floors also are moving into living rooms, dining areas and bedrooms.

Wood floors, like carpeting, blend well with virtually evey architectural style and interior design. And there is a wide assortment of patterns, from the strong, parallel look of planks to the distinctive parquet look. Colors range from dark and rich to bleached wood tones, and surface treatments range from smooth to textured, according to Bruce Hardwood Floors, a manufacturer of oak, walnut and teak flooring.

Perhaps part of the resurgence in popularity for wood floors is their durability and ease of care, according to Hartco Flooring, a manufacturer of oak parquet flooring. A wood floor can last as long as the building in which it is installed, while carpets typically are replaced about every eight years, the company said.

Other flooring alternatives are less common than carpeting and wood flooring but still interesting. Quarry tile — a baked clay type of floorcovering with interesting texture, high durability, low maintenance and stain resistance — is a natural for Mediterranean and Spanish style homes. The catch is that quarry tile can be a bit expensive.

But it's not as expensive as marble. The expense of this material might intimidate at first. But marble, like diamonds, is forever. It doesn't have to be replaced every dozen years or so and it adds a touch of elegance and formality. But, marble stains easily, requires regular waxing and is a hard surface.

Brick flooring gives a rustic country flavor. It is hard underfoot, however, and requires waxing from time to time.

Slate, yet another choice, is highly stain resistant and relatively easy to install. It does scuff, however, so it's not the best choice for heavy traffic areas, and it requires periodic waxing.

If a home owner wants the look of stone, brick, slate or wood, but doesn't actually want to install any of them, he should take a look at vinyl floor coverings. They are inexpensive, stain resistant and a cinch to maintain — they require only a periodic application of vinyl dressing to restore shine.

This flooring is the most popular for kitchens and bathrooms, with designs ranging from photographic reproductions of stone, brick and tile to abstact prints. This type of flooring usually is replaced about every seven years, according to Mannington Mills, a manufacturer of resilient flooring.

There are two basic types of vinyl flooring. One is called rotogravure vinyl, in which the design is printed on the vinyl surface and then sealed in with clear protective vinyl or urethane layer. The thickness of this layer determines how long the flooring will hold up. The other type is called inlaid vinyl, in which the design is embedded in the body of the vinyl.

Vinyl is sold in tiles or sheets that are glued to the floor. Some vinyl tiles come with self-adhesive backing that makes it easier for do-it-yourselfers. Sheets are available in 6-foot or 12-foot widths, the latter making it possible to reduce or eliminate seams that make vinyl floors difficult to maintain over time.

No matter what flooring manufacturers recommend, the final flooring selection — or selections — lies with the home owner. Careful consideration and planning makes for a lovely, coordinated home — and for a home owner with a confident stride.

Wood floors blend well with virtually every architectural style and interior design. There is a wide assortment of patterns available, from the strong, parallel look of planks to the distinctive parquet look pictured her.

LETS TALK REAL ESTATE

Is this really a good time to Buy?

We Say "YES" in spite of the uncertainty in the oilfields. Interest rates are the lowest since May, 1979, the aver0ge prices of homes have leveled to more comfortable, affordable figures, and there is an abundance of new and preowned homes on the market.

Is it safe to wait and hope the market gets even better?

You can take that chance but several factors may begin to work against you. First, most economists suggest that interest rates may be hitting bottom, especially if declining oil prices spur growth in the rest of the nation's economy. Second, even though supply and demand is currently weighted on the supply side, inventories will be affected if the scales are tipped through the announced (and very welcome) influx of corporate transferees and if new homes starts begin to follow the declining trends in the rest of the state. While these factors may not result in higher home prices, they may encourage a firming of the market, and unwillingness on the part of many sellers to negotiate beyond certain limits.

So What is the message?

Now may be your very best opportunity to buy smart and finance wisely! Please call if we can help.

RATTLER ROUND-UP

Text by David Lee Forrest

Sleeping with open, unblinking eyes, he lay quietly in his den. A strange feeling of warmth suddenly hit his mid-section. Someone outside was using a mirror to reflect sunlight into his cozy nook, searching the darkness for him and his comrades.

The light — much brighter than a flashlight beam — was quickly followed by a long, copper tube snaking inside the narrow entrance. A heavy smell filled the air as a small amount of gasoline was pumped through the tube.

Annoyed at this disturbance, he slowly began to crawl on her stomach toward a side opening. Before he reached it, a metal claw reached into the little cave, grabbed him and delicately pulled him out the front crevice.

Plopped down on a flat rock outside, he discovered he was a genuine media event. The rock — isolated on a steep hillside of a ranch — was surrounded by two television news crews, a newspaper photographer, several reporters, a gaggle of vaguely queasy teen-aged girls, a number of Jaycees and a variety of other onlookers.

He was really upset now. He reared up and made threatening noises, which only spurred the photographers to move in closer for better shots of him.

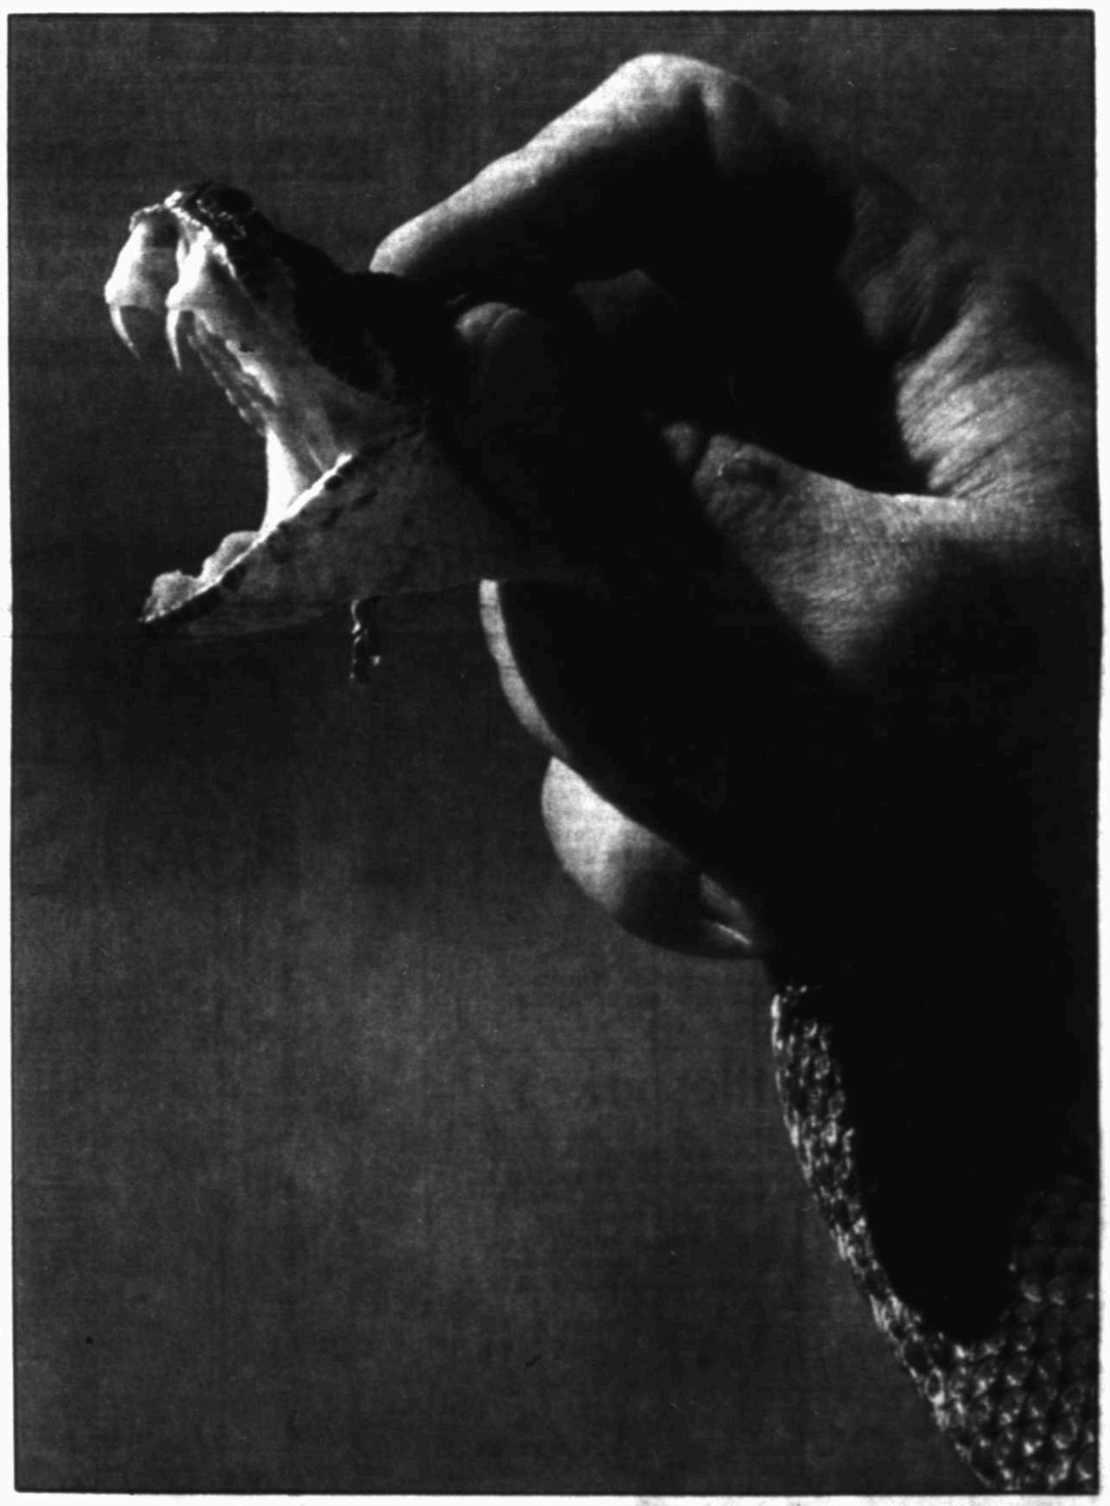

Then the claw lofted him back up in the air and unceremoniously deposited him inside a metal trash can, where he and some of his other scaly friends protested loudly — sounding like a half-dozen leaky tires — as the lid, perforated with air holes, closed.

That was the snake's-eye-view of a special media preview of next weekend's Sweetwater Rattlesnake Round-Up.

The preview was designed to give the media an advance look at the annual event. This year, the Round-Up has already received some national coverage, including a segment on the "Good Morning America" television show.

"A lot of the attention is just because of the Sesquicentennial," said Kyle Lawrence, the event's publicity co-chairman. "Of course, there's really not much you can do to tie the Sesquicentennial in. Basically, all you can do is put '150' on a lot of things."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

A delightful lady and longtime Midlander, Virginia "Hoffy" Hoffman, was honored recently on her 100th birthday with a fun party in the Holidome of the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Hoffy greeted approximately 200 friends during the afternoon. Guests ranged in age from one month (Chrys and Kelly Beal's daughter, K.C.) to 100 years.

The honoree's family includes a daughter, Virginia Rachal and her husband, Hal; a son, former Midlander Norman Hoffman and his wife, Eloise, of Dallas; eight grandchildren and 23 great-grandchildren. All but two were able to be present for the extra special occasion. Drawing many oohs and aahs were eight-month-old triplets, the daughters of Terry and Bryon Hoffman of Dallas. A special guest was Hoffy's godson, Vernon Bryant of York, Pa.

Each family member wore a balloon tied to the wrist, pink to identify Virginia's family and red for Norman's.

Red and pink balloons were used to decorate the tables, and a bouquet of 100 pink helium balloons was a gift from the Women of the Church of Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity. A beautiful pink birthday cake with lighted, colored sparklers was served.

Prior to the party, the four priests from Holy Trinity Church offered communion and the blessing of the family.

Hoffy also was honored by Altrusa Club members, who appeared at her home with a special birthday cake and a silver-sprayed yucca tree holding notes of best wishes. They enjoyed watching a pre-taped interview of the honoree, as it was being shown on a local television station.

Hoffy was born on Feb. 14, 1886, in Norfold, Va. and moved to Dallas in 1914 as a bride. She came to Midland in 1947 to serve as office manager of West Texas Flying Service, a position she held until the early 1960s. She has been active in the Episcopal Church, Altrusa Club and Midland Memorial Hospital Auxiliary.

IT WAS SO GOOD to see former Midlander Connie (Mrs. Jerry) Metz of Sugar Land, who was in town recently on business. She was the house guest of Anne and Bob Gaston.

Friends enjoyed visiting with Connie at an afternoon wine and cheese party in the Gaston home. In sharing family news, Connie related that she and Jerry particularly enjoyed a trip to London over the Christmas holidays with their children, Mark and Sarah, who attend the University of Oklahoma and Stephen F. Austin University, respectively.

PRIOR TO THEIR VALENTINE'S DAY wedding, the former Donna Mahanay and Ronald Paul, both of Lubbock, were honored at parties here.

The home of Sylvia (Mrs. John) Hampton was the setting for a display shower and brunch. Co-hostesses were Jean (Mrs. Frank) Cole, Jackie (Mrs. Vance) Hendricks, Dottie (Mrs. Buddy) Redden and Helen (Mrs. John) Reid. The bride's chosen colors of mauve and silver were featured in the decorations.

Sonny and Karl Davis and Wanda and Joe Younger were the hosts for a couples' party and barbecue at the Davis home. Special guests included Donna's parents, Melva and Curtiss Mahanay of Midland and the groom's mother, Mrs. Donna Holloway of Roscoe.

Harp music by Andra Rodden and ClayDesta's Atrium, which was ablaze with colorful spring flowers, provided a romantic atmosphere for the exchange of vows. Donna wore the wedding gown made for her aunt in 1950 by her grandmother, the late Geri Mahanay.

A reception followed in the Plaza Club. House party members were Donna's aunt, Mary (Mrs. Morris) Melton of Malakoff; her godmother, Bobbi (Mrs. John Ray) Bishop of Lovington, N.M., and friends Susie (Mrs. Cecil) Vest, Lisa (Mrs. Sidney) Sowell and Maxine (Mrs. Don) Teague of Hobbs, N.M.

TWO MIDLAND GIRLS were recently honored by Kappa Delta sorority at UT-Austin at the chapter's annual awards banquet. New initiate Mab Fitz-Gerald, daughter of Carolyn and Jim Fitz-Gerald, was honored as the pledge with the highest GPA. Tiffany Roper, daughter of Georganne and Fred Roper, was chosen Outstanding Sophomore. Another Midlander, Emily Goodfellow, daughter of Emily and David Goodfellow and chapter vice president, was in charge of the banquet.

LADIES' NIGHT was observed when the Midland Chapter of the Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists met recently at Midland Country Club. Two hundred twenty-four persons enjoyed the seated dinner and preceding cocktail hour. Arrangements of spring flowers decorated the tables and were later awarded as prizes to some of the lucky spouses.

The event featured a fascinating program on diamonds given by Bob Slaydon, owner of Gems N Jewelcraft, Inc., and the installation of new chapter officers.

Among those attending were outgoing chairman Bob Grace and his wife, Betty Lou; the guest speaker and his wife, Jody; the incoming officers: chairman Wayne Miller and wife, Carole; vice chairman Jack Cartwright and wife, Barbara; secretary Bill Hendon and wife, Kay, and treasurer Charles Hartwell and wife, Barbara. Other officers present were outgoing treasurer, Ed Kenndey and wife, Margaret, and outgoing membership chairman, Harold Jones and wife, Anna Mae.

Diamondback most deadly

From Staff Reports

The western diamondback rattlesnake, the type of snake hunted during the annual Sweetwater Rattlesnake Round-Up, causes the greatest number of snakebite deaths in the United States, according to "The World of Snakes," by Hal H. Harrison.

However, the author adds, "More people die every year as a result of slipping in the bathtub — or by being struck by lightning — than of snakebite."

Harrison estimates that the odds against dying of snakebite are approximately two million to one.

Town to race rattlesnakes

From Staff Reports

The 14th Annual World Championship Rattlesnake Races are scheduled for 10 a.m. until dark March 15-16 in Old San Patricio.

The actual races begin at mid-afternoon — it has to be warm for snakes to wiggle quickly — and contestants who don't bring their own rattler will be furnished one.

"Any contestant mishandling a snake, or getting snake-bitten, is automatically disqualified," sternly warned Lonnie Glasscock III, president of the San Patricio Restoration Society.

The races are sponsored by the society as part of the town's annual St. Patrick's Day Celebration.

Other events scheduled during the celebration that weekend include games, carnival rides, sky-diving exhibitions and a dance 4-6 p.m. March 15 with the Bob Clawson Band providing the music.

A $25 registration fee will be required to enter the snake races and all participants must be age 18 or older.

Daily admission to the Snake Grounds, adjacent to St. Patrick's Church in Old San Patricio, will be $3 for adults and $2 for children ages 6-12

The races raise funds for historical restoration of Old San Patricio, founded in 1830, and for a permanent museum there.

The town is 30 miles northwest of Corpus Christi on FM 666.

RATTLER

The preview hunt was also set up to give contestants in the Miss Snake Charmer Queen contest, a teen pageant for Sweetwater-area girls, a closer look at what the West Texas tradition is all about.

Of course, the Round-Up is about rattlesnakes, lots of rattlesnakes.

The record amount of rattlers ever rounded up was the 17,986 pounds of snake captured in 1982. The average Round-Up nets approximately 5,000 pounds, according to the Sweetwater Jaycees.

More than 75 tons of rattlesnake have been collected since the Jaycees got into the snake business back in 1958.

"Year after year, the number of livestock killed or lamed by the bite of the rattlesnake increased until, in 1958, the Sweetwater Jaycees decided to aid local livestock producers by holding a rattlesnake round-up," according to the Jaycees' literature on what they bill as "The World's Largest Rattlesnake Round-Up."

Once captured, the reptiles are brought in to the Nolan County Coliseum where they are weighed. After the weigh-in, the snakes are put into double-lined pits for public viewing. Hunters receive prizes for the most pounds of snakes brought in and for the longest snake captured.

For $5 a day per person, groups of amateur adventurers can go on their own guided snake safari escorted by experienced rattler hunters who'll help them stalk snakes.

For those who consider rattlesnake hunting more of a spectator sport, there are also bus tours out to watch and photograph snake hunters in action on area ranches.

LAST WEEKEND'S preview hunt definitely fell into the spectator category. Journalists, Jaycees and aspiring Snake Charmer Queens rode a caravan of pickup trucks and jeeps across a Nolan County ranch in search of snakes.

"A mirror is the number one thing in hunting," Wayne Wilson, an experienced rattler wrangler, explained before the hunt commenced. "If you don't have a mirror you're just whistling in the wind."

By reflecting bright West Texas sunshine, the hand-held mirrors are much more effective at illuminating the nooks and crannies hibernating rattlesnakes find so comfortable at this time of year, he explained.

Wilson led his hunting party to a nondescript boulder on a steep hillside and, after peering under it with his trusty mirror, spotted some snoozing snakes.

Hunters flush the snakes out by squirting gasoline into the den from a pressurized spray can — the same kind many gardeners use — with 10-feet of flexible copper tubing attached.

While a couple of Jaycees pumped some gas under the boulder, other participants scattered around the rock to guard the openings that an angry snake might slither out of.

"Whew! They sprayed the gas again," said one female onlooker, wrinkling her nose. She diligently watched the crevice closest to her, not wanting to be surprised by fleeing rattler.

"They say a watched pot never boils, I guess nothing ever happens at the watched snakehole," she said.

Using their claw-like "snake hooks," the hunters soon dragged out dragging out some angry snakes.

"That's a good one," said Jaycee Tere Lawrence, when an exceptionally big rattler was captured. "That's what you call good eating."

AT FIRST, most of the teen-age pageant contestants looked considerably less than thrilled at being so close to poisonous reptiles. Several of the girls, however, simultaneously cooed, "Ahhh, how cute," when a young, tiny rattlesnake was delicately fished out from the den.

Eventually, almost a dozen rattlers were taken from the den and dropped into the trash can snake cage.

In the past, the Round-Up has been strongly criticized as both environmentally unsound and cruel to animals.

The Sweetwater Jaycees bristle at accusations that they're upsetting the local ecology by "exterminating" snakes.

"We've gotten a lot of bad press from environmental groups," Kyle said.

The hunt, he said, "started out to control the snake population, which it really hasn't done. We're kind of glad it hasn't, because they control the rodent population.

"After 28 years, they're still out there."

The rattlers are "milked" during the Round-Up for their venom, which, the Jaycees like to stress, is donated for medical research.

Kyle said one university — which he didn't want to name — accepted the donated venom, but then refused to publicly acknowledge the gift.

"They said they couldn't afford to be associated with us."

The Sweetwater Rattlesnake Round-Up, the Jaycees claim, is actually an educational event promoting better public understanding of rattlesnakes.

"The annual Round-Up offers the participant the opportunity of witnessing lectures emphasizing safety and factual information on rattlesnakes," says one Jaycee leaflet. "False tales and rumors concerning the rattlesnake are discussed and explained by a professional snake handler. The public leaves with a respect for the rattler based on understanding, rather than fear."

Asked what unfounded fears about rattlesnakes were most common, Wilson replied, "I don't know, but I'm still afraid of them."

Serpent soiree scheduled

From Staff Reports

Here are some of the things visitors might need to know if they plan on slithering into Sweetwater for next weekend's 1986 Rattlesnake Round-Up:

SCHEDULE

The Rattlesnake Review Parade through downtown Sweetwater will begin at 4:30 p.m. Thursday and will be followed by the Miss Snake Charmer Queen Pageant at 7:30 p.m. in the Municipal Auditorium.

On Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the Nolan County Coliseum will open to the public at 8 a.m. and close at 6 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 5 p.m. Sunday. Hunter registration and snake weigh-ins also begin at 8 a.m. all three days.

Bus tours begin departing at 10 a.m. (or when the first bus fills up) all three days and are then scheduled every hour for the rest of the day.

A Rattlesnake Dance is scheduled for 9 p.m. Saturday at the Sweetwater Country Club.

A 10-kilometer Rattlesnake Run — for people, of course, not snakes — will begin at 9:30 a.m Sunday.

The Rattlesnake Meat Eating Contest will be 3 p.m. Sunday and the awards ceremony is set for 5:30 p.m.

ADMISSION

Admission to the Round-Up will be $4 for adults and $1 for children under age 12. Bus tours will be $3 for adults and $1.50 for children under age 12.

Proceeds from the Round-Up are used by the Jaycees to support community activities. The main beneficiaries are the Sunshine Inn, a learning center for the mentally handicapped, and the restoration of the Sweetwater Municipal Auditorium.

HUNTING FEES

All participating hunters must be registered. A single hunter will pay an $11 registration fee. Teams pay a $17 registration fee for two hunters and $6 for each additional team member badge.

Guided hunts will be $5 a day per person.

All snake hunters are absolutely forbidden to carry firearms.

Rattlesnake questions answered

From Staff Reports

The following are some questions that Sweetwater snake handlers are commonly asked at the annual Rattlesnake Round-Up and their answers:

Q. How long do rattlesnakes live?

A. The oldest on record, in captivity, is 26 years old.

Q. How long do rattlesnakes get to be?

A. The longest one turned in at the Round-Up was 74 inches. The longest ever recorded was 84 inches.

Q. Are rattlesnakes born alive or do they hatch from eggs?

A. They are born alive in litters of 8-16 babies. They are capable of biting at birth.

Q. Is the venom of bigger rattlesnakes more potent?

A. Big snakes have larger quantities of poison, but, drop for drop, the newborn snake's venom is more concentrated.

Q. How far can a rattlesnake strike?

A. As a general rule, they can strike about one-half their length.

Q. Does a rattlesnake have to be coiled to strike?

A. Any venomous snake can bite from any position.

Q. What happens if a rattlesnake loses a fang?

A. It has a second set that will drop into place within a few hours. If the snake also loses his second set, another new set will grow out in two or three days.

Q. When a rattlesnake bites another, does the bitten snake suffer any ill effects?

A. A rattlesnake is quite resistant to venoms of his own species. The snake might die from a fang puncturing a vital organ rather than from venom.

Q. Do rattlesnakes always sound a warning with their rattles before striking?

A. Rattlesnakes need not rattle before striking and don't do so when hunting.

Q. Do rattlesnakes return to the same den each year?

A. Usually they do, but if the den is damaged or if they're caught in a cold spell they will den at the closest place.

Q. Can you tell the age of a rattlesnake by counting its rattles?

A. A rattlesnake acquires a new segment of rattle each time he sheds its skin. The frequency of shedding varies with the individual snake depending on how fast it is growing and how well it's feeding. A snake may shed four to eight times a year, so it is not possible to accurately determine its age by counting the rattles.

Q. Are rattlesnakes slimy?

A. Like all reptiles, the skin of a rattlesnake is dry and leathery.

Q. What should you do in case of snakebite?

A. Above all, stay calm and promptly seek medical attention. Try to reduce blood circulation through the bite area by keeping the bitten arm or leg in a lowered position below the victim's heart. Apply a loose constricting bandage, but not a tourniquet.

Do not cut the wound; the possible infection could be worse than the bite.

Sweetwater snakes become snacks

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

Many of the snakes captured during next weekend's Sweetwater Rattlesnake Round-Up will end up as breaded and deep-fried snacks.

In fact, one of the big events during the Round-Up is the Rattlesnake Meat Eating Contest scheduled for 3 p.m. next Sunday in the Nolan County Coliseum. The 1983 winner of that culinary competition managed to down a record 14 ounces of snake meat.

Rattlesnake tastes much like white chicken meat, but is laced with lots of tiny fish-like rib bones. Once decapitated (being careful to remove the venom glands near the jaws) and skinned, a rattlesnake resembles a long, skinny fish, and is often breaded with cornmeal and fried like catfish.

At a recent gathering of contestants in the Round-Up's Miss Snake Charmer Queen teen pageant, the Sweetwater Jaycees served snake.

One teen-aged girl kept sifting through the tray of fried snake until a Jaycee asked her what she was looking for.

"Oh, just a piece that looks good," she said.

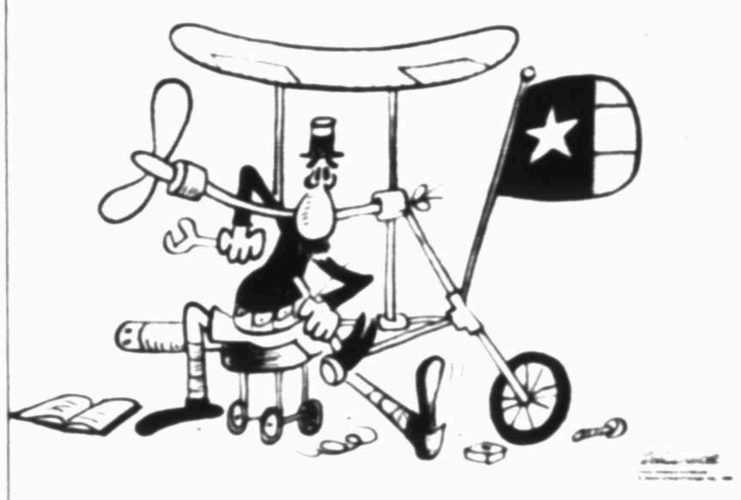

"But they're all backs," the slightly puzzled Jaycee explained.

Another popular way of preparing rattlesnake is in chili, as in the following recipe from the Hersey Pasta Group. Of course, the pasta company worked out a way of putting some pasta in, which, despite the recipe's name, yields more of a "chili mac"-type dish rather than a true Texas chili.

TEXAS RATTLESNAKE CHILI

- 2 tablespoons vegetable oil
- ½ cup chopped onion
- ½ cup chopped green pepper
- 1 clove minced garlic
- 1 pound lean ground beef
- 1 cup cubed rattlesnake meat (the squeamish can substitute 1 cup cubed chicken)
- 2 tablespoons chili powder
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 1 teaspoon cayenne powder
- 8 cups (two 16-ounce cans) tomatoes, undrained
- ⅔ cup (one 6-ounce can) tomato paste
- 2 cups water
- 2 cups (8 ounces) of macaroni or similar pasta, uncooked

Heat oil in 5-quart saucepan or Dutch oven, add onion, green pepper and garlic; saute until tender but not brown. Add ground beef and rattlesnake meat; brown and cook until done, about 5 minutes. Stir in spices, tomatoes and tomato paste. Bring to a boil, then reduce heat and simmer about two hours. Before serving, add water and return chili to a boil. Stir in uncooked pasta, continue boiling and stirring frequently for 10-15 minutes or until pasta is tender. Makes six servings.

Household appliances become colorful

Associated Press

If you are planning to buy a new home appliance or radio this spring, be prepared. Color has invaded the realm where once white, brown and beige reigned supreme.

You can expect to see pink and lime green microwave ovens and vacuum cleaners in baby blue, pink and white on display. Several manufacturers have colorful audio products, and at least one will start shipping a microwave oven and vacuum cleaner in colors this spring.

A spokesman for Sharp Electronics Corp. noted that colorful home electronics products first surfaced in Japan where they were very popular with customers. In 1982, the company introduced color to the American market with red, white and blue radios, promoted as Christmas gifts. The company was surprised to find that when Christmas was over sales continued high, so more colors were added. Now Sharp is introducing colorful microwaves and vacuums.

Actually, things have been getting more colorful lately in virtually all areas of home furnishings. Ever since manufacturers and retailers learned via sales and focus-group comments that color is a powerful persuader,

Eyeing the juicy sales that apparel makers enjoy every year or so as color trends change, those who make products for the home are attempting to tie their products in with the same emotive forces that influence clothing sales.

Female car shoppers in driver's seat

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — With so many women now working outside the home, women are one of the fastest growing segments of the U.S. car market, reports the Automotive Information Council.

The nearly 75 million women who are registered drivers in the United States are a major buying force that can't be taken lightly when it comes to the new car marketplace, the council points out.

Fireplaces pre-fab

Associated Press

These days, adding a fireplace to your home doesn't have to strain the budget. With a factory-built unit, you get all the charm of a custom fireplace, without the cost of brick-by-brick construction, according to Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

Factory-built fireplaces are ideal for remodelers, because they're designed to safely fit next to your walls, with minimal clearance from combustible materials.

Prefabs give you the flexibility to achieve almost any look. There are traditional models made for middle-of-the-wall construction, corner and see-through units that open on two sides, and peninsulas with three open sides. Surround a unit with intriguing material — brick, tile, stone, perhaps a salvaged mantel — and you have an effect that's strictly one of a kind.

Check local building and fire codes before you buy; not every model meets every code. Also, be sure the model you buy is labeled as safety-tested by a nationally recognized testing laboratory.

Tuxedo named for town

By IRENE GARDNER KEENEY
Hearst News Service

Pierre Lorillard's fashion idea was translated into a tailless jacket modeled after the "pink" or scarlet coat worn by fox hunters in riding to the hounds. His son Griswold daringly volunteered to wear the radical new creation to the very formal Autumn Ball. The next day a gossip column entered a protest:

"At the Tuxedo Club Ball, young Griswold Lorillard appeared in a tailless dress coat and waistcoat of scarlet satin, looking for all the world like a royal footman. There were several others of the abbreviated coats worn, which suggested to onlookers that the boys ought to have been put in straightjackets long ago."

Although shocking at first sight, this radical new style was an overnight sensation and became one of the most popular formal looks to hit men's fashion.

That's one version of how the tuxedo was born. Another version appears in George Waller's history of Saratoga, "Saratoga, Saga of an Impious Era." According to this version, Evander Berry Wall, a frequent visitor to the Queen of Spas, was known for the splendour of his dress. Young Wall, who inherited well over $2 million from his father and grandfather on his 18th birthday — and spent it all by the time he was 29 — flew in the face of convention (white tie and tails) by turning up at the ballroom of the Grand Union in a tailless dress coat, designed by his London tailor. He was so rudely cold-shouldered that he departed in a huff to a rival New York resort, Tuxedo Park, which became so enamored of the innovation that it named the jacket after itself.

Whoever started the fashion, it's agreed it happened at Tuxedo Park — one of the places, along with Saratoga, at the turn of the century, to see and be seen.

The new tuxedo, as it was called from then on, was made in two styles: shawl collar with satin faced lapels, and peak lapel style.

As early as 1911, men's formal styles began to be tailored along more natural lines. After World War I, Americans in a jubilant mood were ready to dress up and celebrate. The soldier was back in civilian clothes and fashion was ready to satisfy his desire for easier-to-wear clothes. Formalwear advertising was on the upswing. Formal attire was updated to resemble the popular "jazz suit," with a natural shoulder style, jacket buttons set close together at the waistline and a wide flare over the hips.

In the '20s and '30s, when Hollywood filled our lives with glamor, black tie filled the Silver Screen from coast to coast; it was Ginger and Fred, and black tie at the Oscars. In 1924, Morris and Max Rudofker, founders of After Six Inc., the world's oldest and largest manufacturer of men's formalwear, introduced their first ready-to-wear tuxedo. Price? $16.

The single-breasted dinner jacket with peak lapels rose in popularity with 42 percent of the Princetonians wearing them for evening occasions. The "batwing" bow tie was also in vogue, an extra wide version of the butterfly bow tie. By 1932, the formal favorite was the double-breasted jacket in midnight blue, calculated to look blacker than black. It was preferred in Palm Beach and Europe by such fashion notables as the actor-playwright Noel Coward and King Alfonso XIII of Spain. The straight end tie, a long thin style, was also quite popular in the '30s and sometimes protruded as much as a full inch beyond the edge of each collar.

Midnight blue continued to be a popular color throughout the 1940s. Most customers preferred the double-breasted style in tropical wool worsted with a satin shawl collar and peak lapels. In 1960, After Six introduced the first wash-n-wear dinner jacket — the Tony Martin tuxedo.

Parfait colors were added by the mid-'50s.

By the '70s, the "peacock revolution" was in full swing, offering men's formal fashions an overwhelming variety of colors and styles. Ornately ruffled shirts with oversized bow ties were color-coordinated to match jackets and trousers in every color from powder blue to burgundy.

Marriage market mixed

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Women who defer marriage to go to college and pursue a career are finding that by the time they decide to marry, the marriage market has, in effect, evaporated, according to a new study by two Yale sociologists and a Harvard economist.

College-educated white women who have not married by the time they are 25 years old have only a 50 percent chance of marrying, according to the unpublished study, which analyzes census data from 70,000 households.

Just 20 percent of the women who reach the age of 30 without marrying can be expected to marry, 5 percent of those who reach the age of 35 without marrying will marry, and for those beyond 40, "perhaps 1 percent" will marry, the study showed. And in general, a lower percentage of the total population of women are marrying these days, the study showed.

"I think people up until this point have suspected that well educated women were deferring marriage," said one of the sociologists who conducted the study, Dr. Neil G. Bennett, an associate professor of sociology at Yale University. "However, it appears from this analysis that much of this marriage deferral is translating into marriage forgone.

"Many women are investing a lot of time in higher education and pursuing careers, and in the process they're deferring marriage," he added. "We are finding out that it reaches a point eventually where the marriage market in effect falls out from under them."

BENNETT SAID the reasons that fewer women are marrying are complex. Essentially, the study showed that many women, after deferring marriage, find that by the time they want to marry, there are fewer available men to choose from. Those available are either not the kind of men the women want to marry, or the men prefer women who are younger, not as highly educated or not as successful.

Sociologists and psychologists who were asked about the results of the survey said that although it was impossible to verify its statistical conclusions until it was published, the results seemed to bear out some current theories about marriage patterns.

"The cultural pattern is still for men to choose women who are not their equals, even though women are increasingly becoming their equals in their careers and their education," said Dr. Laurel Richardson, a sociology professor at Ohio State University who has written a new book on single women and their options, "The New Other Woman" (The Free Press, $17.95).

Richardson said her research had found a dearth of available men for older women in the United States. For example, for every 223 unmarried women in their 40s, there are only 100 unmarried men in their 40s, she said, and for every 10 women 40 to 49 years old with a college education, there are only 3 single men who are older and better educated.

The new Yale-Harvard study showed that in part because of this imbalance, the number of college-educated women who marry has dropped significantly, Bennett said.

"Whereas only 9 percent of college-educated women born in the mid-1930s never got married, it appears that 22 percent of college-educated women born in the mid-1950s can be expected to never marry," he said.

The study did not establish why women surveyed did not marry. It did not show, for example, if the women chose not to or if they could not find suitable husbands.

"Also, it may well be that men are continuing to make unrealistic demands of well educated, career-oriented women, demands to which men themselves would never accede. And that may be why many of these women are not marrying."

Bridal shopping turns high-tech

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — In February, thoughts turn to romance, and not only because of Valentine's Day. For those who plan on being June brides, bridal shop owners say, February is the time to order a wedding dress to insure that it will arrive in time to be fitted.

This year, shopping for a bridal gown has taken a high-tech turn. Wedding Information Services has developed a two-hour videotape of wedding fashions for brides to watch before hitting the bridal salons.

Created by John Hunt, a Minneapolis video producer, and Andrew Rush, owner of Rush's Bridal Shop in that city, the tape features 200 gowns from 17 bridal manufacturers.

It is a visual catalogue of sorts, with less emphasis on fashionable backgrounds and more attention to the price of each gown and complete lists of retail stores nationwide.

Hunt said he hopes the tape will be an added service

About 100 bridal shops across the country carry the tape, Hunt said, and it is available for rent in many video stores. It can be purchased for $39.95 plus $4 shipping and handling from Wedding Information Services, 927 Nicollet Mall, Minneapolis, Minn. 55402. For more information call 800-328-3890 (in Minnesota call 800-662-3816).

DEAR ABBY

Name change easier done than said

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is no joke, so please take it seriously and give me some advice. I am a single male, 33 years old. I was named Ray Jr. after my father (no middle name).

I never liked my name. All through school I wished I had a name I liked better.

Two years ago my father died, so last year I petitioned the court for a legal name change. I chose Michael.

Now for my problem. Nobody, but absolutely nobody, calls me Michael. I had copies made of my official name-change document and mailed them out to my friends and relatives requesting that they start calling me Michael. I even had my I.D., bank account, credit cards, etc. changed to Michael.

When I am addressed as Ray, I politely say, "I am not Ray anymore — I am Michael." I even refused to answer to Ray, but nobody takes me seriously; they just laugh and keep calling me Ray.

I am really upset over this. What should I do? — MICHAEL

DEAR MICHAEL: To the friends and relatives who have always known you as Ray, it will be difficult for most and impossible for some to call you anything else. You can keep correcting them and hope they make an effort to accommodate you, but don't be disappointed if they don't. From now on, introduce yourself to new acquaintances as Michael, or relocate and assume a new identity.

DEAR ABBY: I have a solution for the problem of young children at weddings and receptions. Hold the wedding at night!

I recently attended a 400-guest wedding held at 7:30 p.m. on a Friday night, followed by an adult reception at a hotel with a loud band. It was great. No kids in sight. When I get married, I'm going to use the same game plan.

Can you honestly imagine anyone bringing a 3-year-old to a 9 p.m. reception? — JANICE

DEAR JANICE: Yes. For a variety of reasons:

— "The sitter didn't show up and we didn't want to miss the wedding."

— "He's a very well-behaved child and we know he'd enjoy it."

— "There were a lot of relatives there who have never seen our child, and we wanted them to see him."

— "We don't believe in leaving our child at home; where we go, he goes." Etc.

DEAR ABBY: I have two teen-age grandchildren living in a distant city. They are fine children and a credit to their parents. I write to them quite often and they are very good about responding.

Quite by accident, I learned that their mother opens their mail and reads it before giving it to them. Isn't this an invasion of privacy? Or don't children have any rights?

I have no objections to her reading the letters I write to my grandchildren, but I think they should read them first. Please print your response. — FARAWAY GRANNY

DEAR GRANNY: Opening mail addressed to another is, indeed, an invasion of privacy. And, yes, children do have rights.

Parents have an obligation to protect their children against suspected drugs or pornographic material that might come through the mail, but obviously this is not a factor in the case of your grandchildren. Shame on their mother.

DEAR ABBY: In "Confidential to T.L. in Berkeley," you wrote that Ralph Waldo Emerson said, "The end of the human race will be that it will eventually die of civilization."

UNcivilization, yes — civilization, no! In his scholarly two-volume study, "Civilization and Ethics," first published in 1923, the late Dr. Albert Schweitzer wrote: "Our civilization is going through a severe crisis. Most people think that the crisis is due to war, but they are wrong. War, and everything connected with it, is only a phenomenon of the condition of uncivilization in which we find ourselves."

If anything kills us, Abby, it will be uncivilization. — ARTHUR H. PRINCE

Weekend travel preferred by many

New York Times News Service

According to a poll taken for Marriott Hotels and Resorts among 1,000 American adults, a majority favors shorter and more frequent vacations than they did a few years ago. According to Marriott — operators of 147 properties, including 118 domestic hotels in suburban, downtown and airport locations, 12 overseas hotel and 17 resorts — 57 percent of the respondents indicated a preference for weekend trips as opposed to extended vacations.

However, the poll also indicated that a large percentage of leisure travelers perceive the cost of weekend trips to be higher per day than for an extended trip.

On the basis of the survey, the Marriott Corp. is offering a $49-a-room weekend rate through March 29 at all its domestic hotels and at selected resorts. The rate, on Friday and Saturday evenings, allows occupancy by up to five people and includes guaranteed reservations.

More information and reservations are available from Marriott Hotels and Resorts Marketing Department (1 Marriott Drive, Washington, D.C. 20058; 800-228-9290).

Aspirin's dangers studied

Hearst News Service

With the first cold or flu symptom, adults often reach for the aspirin bottle. But that impulse may spell danger instead of relief when you're treating childhood cold and flu malaise.

In several studies, aspirin and other medications containing salicylates have been associated with Reye's Syndrome, a life-threatening illness that occasionally affects children while they are recovering from a virus — whether it be chicken pox, a cold or the flu. Children between the ages of 6 months and 15 years are commonly affected, but it has also been reported in infants as young as 4 days old and occasionally in older adolescents and adults. Although more research is necessary to prove the aspirin-Reye link, the American Council on Science and Health, a national consumer-education association directed and advised by a diverse scientific panel, warns parents to avoid giving salicylates to children with chicken pox or flu-like symptoms.

Though rare, Reye's Syndrome, — which is characterized by brain swelling and liver damage — is serious. It rapidly grows worse and requires immediate hospitalization and treatment. In cases of Reye's Syndrome, a child recovering from a virus suddenly seems much sicker, with a fever, vomiting, irrational behavior, progressive stupor or coma.

Although survival has improved dramatically in recent years, more than 20 percent of the children who develop Reye's Syndrome die; very young children who get it are most likely to die from it. The earlier it is treated, the better the survival rate. Although most children who survive suffer no long-term damage, those severely ill in advanced stages before they are treated are more likely to suffer some permanent brain damage, often with mental retardation.

In the early stage of Reye's Syndrome, a child vomits, is lethargic and/or sleepy but alert enough to obey commands. As the illness progresses, he is disoriented, delirious and combative, and may hyperventilate. In the third stage, he is unconscious and may not respond to painful stimui. Breathing is abnormal, and he lies rigid. Finally, he becomes limp and breathing may stop.

"Most viral illnesses (such as colds and flu) are mild and self-limiting," the ACSH notes, and "contrary to what many parents believe, moderate fever may be beneficial in helping a person overcome an infection."

Researchers study MS risks

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A preliminary study of 29 multiple sclerosis cases in Key West suggests that health workers are at higher risk of contracting the disease, state and federal researchers said.

Nine of those 29 cases were nurses.

Still unresolved is why an unusually high number of people in Key West have been diagnosed with MS, say officials at the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services in Tallahassee and the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

Multiple sclerosis destroys or damages the myelin sheath of nerves and causes a loss of muscular coordination.

The study also said that other possible factors, such as association with the Naval Air Station, the city dump, local water supplies or exposure to mosquito-borne viruses, don't appear to be as strong.

Analysis of blood and urine samples showed normal levels of heavy metals and there was no difference between people with multiple sclerosis and a control group. Those with MS weren't more likely to have been exposed to common childhood diseases.

The most consistent link involved the nurses, the report said.

"Health care workers, particularly nurses, appear to be at higher risk of acquiring MS than people not employed in the health care professions," said Dr. Matthew Zack of the CDC's division of chronic disease control.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Life insurance for special philodendron

BY ELVIN MCDONALD

Q. I am sentimentally attached to a heartleaf philodendron given me by a dear and now departed friend. What began a few years ago as a rooted cutting has grown into a huge vine that hangs down nearly 8 feet from the top of a bookcase. Recently some of the stems have dried up, noticeably at the pot rim, resulting in wilted, lackluster leaves mixing among the turgid, healthy ones. How can I rejuvenate the plant without risk of loss?

A. There is hardly any risk in the procedure I am going to recommend, but for safety's sake, first root some cuttings. Here's how:

1. Select pieces 8 to 10 inches long with healthy tips and at least three or four strong leaves. Use a sharp knife and make clean cuts.

2. Strip away the lowest leaf or two, also the papery brown stipule that clasps the stem at the node where each leaf originates. Since the philodendron is part air plant, beginning roots can be seen and felt at every node.

3. Prepare a pot of rooting medium. This could be equal parts moistened peat moss and clean, sharp sand, or any purchased product labeled specifically for seed starting and general plant propagation. I might use a mixture of peat moss, perlite and horticultural vermiculite, even adding a sprinkle of timed-released fertilizer pellets such as Osmocote 14-14-14.

4. Insert the prepared end of each cutting to a depth sufficient to cover 1 inch of at least one node, preferably two. Settle in by applying lukewarm water from the top; set aside to drain.

5. Enclose the cuttings in a clear plastic bag. Set to root in bright light, no direct sun, where temperatures stay constantly warm (70-80 F.).

Heartleaf philodendron

6. Within two weeks the cuttings will take root and the plastic cover can be gradually removed. After a month, or when vigorous roots show through the pot drainage holes, transplant to a permanent pot or hanging basket.

7. Prepare a planting medium such as two parts sphagnum peat moss to one each of sand or perlite and packaged all-purpose potting soil. Let some of the rooting medium adhere to the tender young roots as you carefully transplant.

At this point you have a strong new philodendron and may wish to dispense with the parent. It can also be rejuvenated, by this simple procedure:

1. Remove pot and long vine from bookshelf perch and take to a work area where there is adequate light.

2. Relax and be patient at this stage, which will take less time than if you try to hurry. Stem by stem, leaf by leaf, extricate and remove every last trace of dead growth. I suspect you will conclude that the stems got so long and heavy they broke off at the rim.

3. Cut back all remaining healthy stems by half or more. This will stimulate many new growing tips.

4. Remove the old pot and crumble away half or more of the soil. Repot, in a size larger if you like, using the recipe I gave for rooted cuttings (step 7 above).

P.S. I appreciate this reader's letter, whose sentiments are shared universally. The essential lesson here is to habitually multiply any treasured plant. This not only serves as insurance but provides material for sharing with other gardeners.

Q. How can I keep a fairy primrose blooming?

A. It needs moderate coolness (60-70 F.), fresh air that circulates freely and bright light but little or no direct sun. Keep the soil evenly moist. Promptly remove withered or discolored leaves and flowers. This lovely little primrose, Primula malacoides, is treated as an annual; when there are no more flowerbuds, the plant is ready to be composted.

'80s snob wears designer running shoes

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I read an article the other day defending snobs. We've all known a few in our time. The wine snob who sniffs at a cork like he has just witnessed a miracle. The literary snob who never reads an author whose name he can pronounce. The television snob who admits to watching only PBS reruns of "Flora and Fauna Reproduction."

The article supported snobs, saying they were dedicated souls who set a standard of excellence. If it weren't for them we'd be covering our walls with paintings of small children and eating peanut butter.

Well, meet the ultimate snob of the '80s: The Running Shoe Snob.

If there is any individual who is more condescending, overbearing, brash and braggadocio, I have yet to meet one. The Running Shoe Snob shows up at a formal dinner party wearing a black tie, cummerbund and a pair of running shoes that cost $168. When approached by another person who says he jogs, he will look at him coolly and say, "I don't jog. I'm a runner." He will discuss his shoes with no one who does not "run" 40 miles a week.

Running Shoe Snobs are generally totally offended by impurists who wear tennis shoes with a jogging outfit, aerobic shoes to a movie, gym shoes to walk in and basketball shoes to fertilize the lawn.

The other night I saw a "runner" who pointed to my husband's shoes and said, "Don't tell me... New Balance Tigers — 1983."

"They're classics, aren't they? I wouldn't run in anything else. Don't know how I'm going to replace them when they wear out."

I couldn't help but remember a few years ago when I hiked to the bottom of the Grand Canyon. I shopped for the "right boot" for three months. I had soles with a good grip, ankle support and they were impervious to rocks and rattlesnakes.

A quarter of the way down a kid in shorts, no shirt and thongs passed me. Halfway down, the kid passed me again — going up!

I didn't understand it. I was wearing signed, numbered, limited-edition shoes and was sweating designer sweat.

I had to believe he got a blister.

Treatment of children's muscle disease studied

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Scientists at the University of Rochester Medical Center say they are studying the effectiveness of penicillamine as a treatment for Duchenne's Muscular Dystrophy. This form of Muscular Dystrophy affects children.

They say penicillamine (not an antibiotic) may have the ability to interfere with the process that destroys patients' muscle cells.

Dr. Robert Griggs says the course of the disease is being studied in 100 patients. The studied is being conducted over a period of time in order to determine the effectiveness of the experimental treatment.

It is probably the only study of its kind, says Griggs.

TRAIL'S END...

The dotted line shows the course of the Pacific Crest Trail.

By LAWRENCE BUDD

I crossed the Columbia River on the Bridge of the Gods and stepped into Washington. Less than 500 miles stood between me and the Canadian border.

About 15 miles of road walking carried me back to more comfortable hiking along the forest-covered trail. Just before returning to the trail, I was walking at about 10 p.m. in complete darkness along a forest service road when an old Rambler station wagon screeched to a halt close to where I had retreated off the side of the road.

Out hopped 73-year-old Detus Perry, excited from a day's exploration of some nearby lava tubes. This long-haired character pointed out some short cuts through the next section of the trail, explained how he'd recently rediscovered his youth by taking doses of magnesium, then recalled for me several of the 12 sightings he'd made of "Big Foot" during his life.

Finally, we parted and I chose a spot in the forest for my first Washington campsite.

Rain dampened my gear and my spirits as I pushed through the Gifford Pinchot National Forest over the next several days. The rain, coupled with near-freezing temperatures, did little to encourage me about the miles ahead.

ONE EVENING, a persistent mouse skittered around my camp on Trout Lake Creek. During the night I was awakened by his presence in my tent. Several days later, I discovered that he had chewed his way to safety.

The next day, about 6,000 feet up the side of Mt. Adams, rain turned to snow and my bare legs were soon freezing. After quickly donning rain pants, I hiked on for warmth, before making a hurried camp near Killen Creek.

Another day's hazy hike took me off the side of Mt. Adams, the peak of which I never saw until a week later. Walking along an ascending jeep road in the Yakima Indian Reservation, three bow-hunters pulled up beside me in a jeep.

They warned me I was on disputed land, claimed by the Yakimas and the government. After giving me some food and hot coffee, one guided me back to the trail.

As the weather again threatened the next morning, I decided to climb up Nannie Ridge and head for the Dana May Yelverton Shelter, near the Packwood Glacier in the Goat Rocks Wilderness. If conditions worsened, I would stay there. If not, I would push on to my next food pick-up at White Pass.

As I gained altitude, rain turned to sleet, which turned to snow, and I found myself in the midst of a terrible storm. I pushed up the newly snow-covered trail and took refuge in the shelter, built in memory of a young woman who had died when a storm struck suddenly while she was hiking in the area with her church group.

As I sat inside the shelter, pondering my next move, fellow hiker and Ohio native Jeff Sauer walked up, covered with snow. We spent that night and all of the next day in our tents pitched inside the shelter, trying to stay warm, since the storm had whited out our path ahead.

THE SKIES CLEARED the next morning, but the trail proved impassable. We were forced to take another route down to civilization. Missing that 17-mile section marked the only interruption for me in what otherwise would have been a continuous hike of California, Oregon and Washington.

As Sauer and I walked the road down to the city of Packwood, a forest service truck pulled up next to us. During the ensuing conversation, we were startled to discover we had been declared missing and an air search for us would have begun soon.

Apparently, fellow hiker Keith Jones had dropped out earlier, when he'd encountered snow at 5,000 feet, and become alarmed when we hadn't shown up at White Pass. From here on, the three of us agreed we would hike together.

After regrouping, we hiked from White Pass back onto the trail. Walking along a foggy path the next morning, I noticed a bear padding along, not far off the trail. Apparently, it had spotted me first and taken evasive action, as I found bear pawprints less than 50 yards down the trail.

A return to tough climbing was compensated by panoramic views featuring Mt. Adams, Mt. Rainier and the Goat Rocks. A jet fighter swooped low near me on one spectacular ridge, providing an interesting paradox between nature and civilization.

Please see HIKE, Page 2F

Six months of backpacking from Mexico to Canada reaches trail's end in this conclusion of a special six-part series on hiking the Pacific Crest Trail. Mount St. Helens, in the right background of the top photo, stood to the north as the hikers retraced their steps out of the Goat Rocks Wilderness. Severe weather and deep snow forced them off this section of the trail. Glacier Lake lay below and Glacier Peak ahead as the trail pushed onward, lower right. This was the last major peak on the hike and it proved to be a serious test. After walking more than 2,600 miles, writer Lawrence Budd, lower left, crossed into Canada on Oct. 10, 1985.

Mount St. Helens: Fascination continues five years after catastrophe

By MICHAEL RICHMOND
Copley News Service

From 50 miles away, the outline of Mount St. Helens resembles a giant tree stump after someone cut off much of its top.

The snowcapped remnant of the once majestic-looking mountain became clearer as we headed north on Interstate 5 from Vancouver, Wash., and I was surprised at how much of it was missing.

It has been just over five years since the catastrophic eruption that blew off the upper 1,312 feet of the 9,677-foot-high cone with a force comparable to a large nuclear blast.

Recently, the mountain has been rumbling again and scientists venturing inside the crater of the jittery volcano report that the growth of its lava dome is such that it could produce another eruption soon.

A faint column of smoke or steam was rising from the north face of the sawed-off mountain when I was near and I wondered if this would be the day.

Since it sprang to life with such devastating results, Mount St. Helens has become one of the most popular tourist attractions in the Northwest and now is drawing about 1 million visitors annually.

They come for a glimpse of the volcano and more than a few have had notions of climbing to the top of the crater.

The mountain also is very special to local residents, says Brenda Finney of the Vancouver Chamber of Commerce: "It keeps growing, it belches steam or ash once in awhile ... you never know what it's going to do; it's fascinating."

IT WAS that same fascination that drew me to the mountain.

After looking at the volcano from 20 miles away from a couple roadside vantage points, I found myself staring directly into the horseshoe-shaped crater from a small sight-seeing airplane.

"The winds are blowing a little," commented pilot Dale Bowers as he guided the single-engine Cessna 172 toward the mountain.

We had taken off from a small airport alongside Interstate 5 at Chehalis, Wash., about 40 miles from the volcano as the crow flies. There was not a cloud to be seen and the clear water of the Cowlitz River sparkled in the sunlight below.

Snowcapped Mount Rainier rose to the northeast. Mount Adams is almost due east of Mount St. Helens. Farther south, in Oregon, Mount Hood and Mount Jefferson were wearing mantles of snow.

As we neared Mount St. Helens, the gray water of the Toutle River, still carrying pumice and ash, came into view. Soon we were over the volcano itself.

The sight of the moonscape terrain below and the once pristine Spirit Lake at the base of the mountain left me momentarily speechless. I busied myself shooting picture after picture as Bowers brought the plane down to within 300 feet of the crater's rim.

The snow blanketing the outside of the mountain was ash gray except for the white streaks scooped out in the dust by rocks that had been dislodged by the rumbling volcano and sent tumbling down the slope.

After circling the mountain twice, we cut directly across the top of the crater, yawning to the north.

Again the plumes of steam came into view, rising from cracks in the huge, 800-foot-high lava bulge that has been building in the crater since an October 1980 eruption followed by more than a dozen since.

However, the ash cloud in the sky near us was from dust kicked up by winds rather than from fresh emissions by the volcano, Bowers said.

FAR BELOW, looking like some small insect, a helicopter whirled through the mile-wide crater. It was skimming along the rocks, carrying scientists in for more checks of the growth of the lava dome, which at the time was continuing to swell by a few inches a day.

To the north of the volcano, the waters of Spirit Lake, still clogged with debris, were visible. And although some salvage logging has taken place, acres and acres of downed trees still are lying where they were knocked over.

But patches of green on the land below indicated the new growth of vegetation, including rushes, ferns and wildflowers, which have sprung up through the pumice and ash in the five years since the eruption.

As we banked and headed back to the airport, I took one last long look and understood for the first time something of the magnitude of what had happened in a few seconds of earthquakes and explosions.

An excellent temporary visitors center is located on the Jackson Highway, just north of Toledo, Wash., where there is a 22-minute movie about the volcano, a shorter slide program and interpretive displays concerning the eruptions.

HIKE

After this day of splendid views, we were subjected to the most severe examples of logging visible from the trail. Entire mountains had been cleared of their trees and the trail was often obliterated beneath the remaining rubble.

As I walked along one day, wondering what happened to the animals after the forest was removed, I traded curious glances with a bear cub, who quickly darted back into a section of the forest which had been spared. Despite the logging, this area near Snoqualmie Pass was popular with dayhikers and young deer seemed undaunted by the transformation.

The trail into Snoqualmie Pass took us under power lines and ski lifts before descending to I-90. After picking up more food and gorging ourselves at a roadside restaurant, we hiked back into the mountains.

Leaving logging behind, we walked into the first of a series of unscathed areas that would carry us through the North Cascades to Canada. Beauty abounded, as the forest alternated with strange rock formations and peaceful lakes.

Long climbs were followed by equally athletic descents. I spent one last clear, but chilly night sleeping under the stars on Cathedral Pass, before resorting to my tent for the rest of the hike.

GLACIER PEAK loomed ahead, the last prominent mountain we would have to climb around. More ski lifts hung above as we hiked to Stevens Pass, where Jones and I stayed in the walkway of Ranger Glen Katzenberger's home, grateful for shelter from the increasingly severe temperatures. Sauer had hiked out ahead earlier in the day, but we would overtake him a few days later.

Katzenberger, who had manned his winter post since 1958, counted less than 15 hikers who had walked all the way from Mexico in 1985, a far cry from the late 1970's when the PCT was more publicized.

Climbing back into the Wenatchee National Forest, we pushed for the finish, which was only 200 miles away. As the days shortened, it became necessary to walk virtually from dawn to dusk to keep up our desired 20-mile per day pace.

Hiking past Pear Lake slightly behind my companions one day, I stopped for a break where another backpacker had camped. Incredibly, the hiker turned out to be Tom Stackhouse, a PCT legend — the only person to walk the entire trail from the Mexican border to Canada in 1983 when heavy snows foiled the plans of every other hiker intending to walk the PCT, south to north, that year.

The next day, the trail led into the Glacier Peak Wilderness. In clouds that left less than 10 feet of visibility, we climbed over desolate Red Pass.

After happily descending several thousand feet, I camped with 61-year-old Joseph Zorn. As I pitched my tent, this energetic elder talked endlessly of his time in concentration camps during World War II, his trials finding a job despite having a doctorate in physics and the extensive travels he'd apparently managed because of an austere daily lifestyle.

I caught up to my two companions again the next evening as they made camp near Milk Creek after a scary, slippery climb over Fire Creek Pass in rain and near-freezing temperatures.

THE HEAVENS answered my prayers and the next morning offered clearing skies.

The last tough ascent over Dolly Vista was almost a joy as sun burned through the clouds. Hiking back to lower elevations, I finally traced random whistlings to marmots hopping about the rocky ridges above the trail.

Two days later, we crossed a bridge over wide Agnes Creek and hiked down to a guard station, from which a shuttle bus carried us down to Stehekin, a tiny resort town on Lake Chelan. Other than by walking, the only outside access to this town was by ferry or seaplane. Telephones were nowhere to be found.

After a refreshing day of rest and eating, we returned to walk the last 100 miles. Spectacular views of glacier-capped mountains provided us with inspiration as we hiked the snowy path over Rainy Pass and I-20, the last major road across the trail.

The climb up to Cutthroat Pass previewed deep snows that would make the going ahead increasingly difficult. Jones and I stopped for a break atop this windy, snow-blanketed pass, despite freezing temperatures that made relaxation dangerous.

After descending into forest for the night, we climbed back up and over Glacier Pass, via a seemingly endless series of switchbacking trails that finally deposited us on its snowy top. Crossing Hart's Pass and the last escape route out, I failed to catch my companions as darkness forced me to take shelter in an isolated stand of trees near aptly named Windy Pass.

The next morning, my frozen boots refused to accommodate my sore feet before some vigorous massaging. As I struggled to free up the hardened leather, I pondered my fate if forced to don my alternate footwear, light running shoes.

THE SNOW seemed to get deeper as the trail traveled up and down several passes. Our last night outside was spent on snow beneath Woody Pass, roughly 20 miles from the finish line.

Quickly crossing over Woody Pass the next morning, we pushed through snow that at times drifted knee-high over the final miles. We eventually descended from the last 7,000-foot ridgetop to Hopkins Pass.

As I rose from a short break at this pass, I came upon Jean, a long-haired French Canadian munching crackers given him by Sauer, who had been hiking a few miles ahead with Jones. The most amazing thing about this unusual hiker was his footwear — more specifically his lack of any boots.

While I was pondering a final switch to track shoes from my worn and painful boots, Jean, wearing sandals and no socks, was preparing to enter the 40 miles of snow from which I'd just emerged. He stood there, content with his situation, and explained how he had learned to overcome sensations such as freezing cold.

As with so many of the people I met briefly while hiking the trail, I will always wonder what happened to Jean, my final acquaintance along the PCT.

Leaving Jean to his ingenuity, I hiked to the Canadian border, which is marked by a scaled-down replica of the Washington Monument. Following a celebratory feast, Jones, Sauer and I hiked the final miles, which ended at Highway 3 in Manning Provincial Park.

I HAD come 2,600 miles in six months. It is hard to measure how much the adventure changed me.

Physically, I'd lost 40 pounds in finishing this 176-day backpacking trip — 173 days longer than any I'd undertaken before.

The novice nature buff that had walked away from the Mexican border, with gear hung haphazardly all over his backpack, not fully aware of all that lay ahead, hiked into Canada totally adapted to life in nature, with all his belongings efficiently stowed away.

Surviving this experience convinced me that anything can be within a person's grasp, if only they are willing to reach deeply enough inside themselves for the strength to do it.

I guess the experience was positive, because I plan to start hiking the 2,100-mile Appalachian Trail later this month — the nearest I can come to reliving my Pacific Crest experience.

Huge boom turns into boon

By ROBIN and PATRICIA HARRIS
Hearst News Service

To the world, the eruption of Mount St. Helens was one of history's worst natural disasters. But to the people who live near here it was something very different — an economic boon for which they are increasingly grateful.

"It was the best thing that ever happened," said the grizzled old bartender at a saloon in Castle Rock, the little town of 2,500 from which the rescue efforts were directed. "It put us on the map forever and put money in our pockets."

When the peak exploded precisly at 8:32 on the clear, quiet Sunday morning of May 18, 1980, with the force of 500 Hiroshima-strength atomic bombs going off at once and a noise so thunderously overwhelming it was heard 225 miles away in Vancouver, Canada, nobody felt so appreciative.

The financial fallout for every motel, restaurant and shop in the St. Helens environs is immense. All of them carry an endless line of souveniers and novelties. A multi-million dollar amusement park with a St. Helens theme is under construction on the Toutle River.

A less apparent but more important long-range bonus from the eruption is that the volcanic ash spread over the west is a most effective fertilizer.

But the most enduring impression is the evidence of nature's amazing recuperative qualities. A helicopter flight over the ravaged region reveals grass and new trees growing and a healthy herd of elk grazing contentedly. It is proof that nature has been hard at work repairing the terrible damage it caused.

Canada offers season, travel for everyone

Winter called 'best time' to be in French Canada

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

QUEBEC CITY, Canada — It is winter in French Canada. In Montreal snow is nudging at icy windows, car tires squeak over cobblestones, and street lamps send out cold light over silent, snow-clogged streets.

About 150 miles up the frigid mouse-gray waters of the St. Lawrence River, Quebec City is wearing its February face, so stormy, so full of frost.

But inside — in bistros, jazz clubs and restaurants — winter is but a small wolf at the door. Roaring hearths take the chill out of your bones, hearty French onion soup covered with stringy baked cheese warms your belly, and a bottle of French wine makes your cheeks glow with the joy of winter in French Canada.

Both cities glitter with the special magic of wintertime in Canada, a time of cruel winds and shoulder-high snow drifts, to be sure, but also a time of theater, festivals, cross-country skiing and long, luxurious evenings in warm, elegant restaurants.

TO BE IN French Canada in winter is a special privilege, an invitation to enjoy weather that can bring both tears to your eyes and a smile to your lips at the same time. Residents of both Montreal and Quebec City revel in winter (although, to be truthful, a lot of them also escape to Florida, the Caribbean and Palm Springs when they have a chance) — the women resplendant in magnificent coats of red fox, mink and Canadian beaver, the men walking beside their ladies like faithful spaniels.

It is, to me, the best time to be in French Canada. It is a time to go to a hockey game to see Montreal's Canadiens, the ghost of glory still hanging around a losing team, or Quebec City's Nordiques, a splendid collection of hockey players that may unseat Edmonton and the great Gretzky one day.

It is a season of winter carnivals, riotous events where public drunkeness is tolerated and ice sculpture is an art; a time when a fat, smiling snowman named Bonhomme becomes the symbol of an entire province.

Winter is when the great halls of both cities host their symphonies and ballet — and when visiting performers from Paris and the Mother Country play to knowledgeable audiences.

IN WINTER THE twisting sidewalks of Quebec City and the miles of underground passageways of Montreal ring with the elegant patois of French, not the accents of New Jersey, New York and Illinois. Little alleyways like Quebec City's La Petit Champlain are no longer jammed with tourists, and you can stroll along and select a piece of art — or a hot, buttery croissant — in splendid isolation and comforting timelessness.

Sturdy French-Canadian cuisine — food like ragout of pigs knuckles and meatballs, braised goose breast with apples, and turkey scallops smothered with hazel nuts — fills you after a day of walking in the crisp air, and a breakfast of fluffy pancakes smothered in rich Canadian maple syrup seems like the only way to start the day.

The mass of tourists who crowded Quebec City's Parc des Champs-de-Bataille in summer have run back to their southern homes, to be replaced by solitary cross-country skiers making their way through stands of reaching maple trees. And Montreal's Mont Royal is even lovelier in its winter coat of white, which wraps around the parkland like fine ermine.

Both cities resemble frozen fairytales in winter, especially when the snow snuggles tight against the Victorian buildings of Montreal and parlour lights shine through snowflakes like miniature lighthouses, beckoning you inside.

OUTDOOR SPORTS accelerate in winter. Nearly everyone cross-country skis or tries his hand at snowshoeing, and nearby mountains provide the best downhill skiing in Eastern Canada.

There is a thrilling toboggan ride which rushes along the venerable Chateau Frontenac in Quebec City, ice skaters glide along the Saint Charles River, and both cities have carriage drivers who will bundle you underneath a bearskin rug or a mound of blankets and take you clattering through the streets as they tell you about the rich history of French Canada.

Winter has always played an important part in that history, isolating French Canada for months, bringing people together for warmth and protection in small villages like Quebec City and Ville Marie, which is what the French once called Montreal. Brutal winter weather kept the British at bay for years before the historic battle on the Plains of Abraham in 1759 which made Canada British, and helped those same British rebuff the American's bid for Canada 16 years later when a band of invaders led by Benedict Arnold suffered and froze and, ultimately, retreated.

French Canada's history is particularly alive in winter. When the wind cuts through your clothes as you stroll along Quebec City's broad boardwalk you can better understand the sufferings and the agony of freezing soldiers, and by walking on the frozen cobblestones of Old Montreal you appreciate how tenacious settlers had to be to endure days without sunlight and nights without heat.

PRACTICALLY ALL the principal historic attractions of the two cities — Montreal's Vieux Montreal and Notre Dame church, Quebec City's Place Royale, where Champlain founded New France in 1608 — are open in winter, with the added benefit of being generally uncrowded.

The hotels, with the exception of Quebec City during the 10-day Winter Carnival, are generally uncrowded in winter and you rarely need a reservation at restaurants. And, considering that Montreal has more than 3,000 restaurants and that Quebec City has more restaurants per capita (about one for every 500 residents) than any city in North America, you will have plenty from which to choose.

There are people, I suppose, for whom French Canada in winter has no appeal. But I suspect that anyone with a trace of romance in his soul will find that walking arm-in-arm along Quebec City's Rue Petit Champlain or Montreal's Greene Street at dusk, which comes about 3:30 in winter, will find the warmth of an exquisite shared experience will keep the cold away and warm the heart.

IF YOU GO:

• How to get there — Both cities have international airports and good highway systems. Bus service runs between the two every hour on the hour and Canada's VIA Rail provides excellent service between the two downtowns (about $45 roundtrip).

• Where to stay — Montreal is blessed with a number of fine hotels — the Four Seasons, Hyatt Regency and Ritz Carlton among them. Quebec City is not as fortunate. The Loew's is the city's best, followed by the Hilton and the aging Chateau Frontenac. A pleasant alternative in Quebec City is staying at a small inn like the Manoir Ste. Genevieve.

• What to see — Both cities abound with historical attractions, with Old Town Montreal and Lower Town Quebec City the main concentrations. Tours are an inexpensive, and smart, way to see the historic areas, particularly if you rent a horse and carriage. Montreal's museums, especially the Museum of Fine Arts and the McCord Museum of the Eskimo people, are outstanding, and the city's 460 parks will always welcome you. Montreal's "Man and His World," a permanent culture and entertainment festival is, alas, closed in winter. Any visit to Quebec City should begin at the Musee du Fort where, for about $2, you will see an excellent diorama presentation of the history of the city. You should walk around Lower Town, visit the Citadel and the Plains of Abraham, and take the day trip to the Basilica of Sainte-Anne-de-Beaupre.

Canada's rails celebrate past

New York Times News Service

On July 21, 1836, a locomotive named the Dorchester chugged out of Laprairie, Quebec, hauling two passenger cars across wooden rails strapped with iron on a two-hour, 14.5-mile run to St.-Jean-sur-Richelieu, 22 miles from Montreal. The arduous journey of the small locomotive, built by Robert Stephenson, son of the British railway pioneer George Stephenson, and operated by the Champlain & St. Lawrence Railroad, inaugurated passenger rail service in Canada.

This year marks not only the 150th anniversary of that event but also the centennial of Canada's first transcontinental passenger train to the Pacific Coast — a journey that began June 28, 1886, in Montreal and ended in Port Moody, British Columbia, on July 4.

VIA Rail Canada, the government railroad system, is taking a leading role in commmemorative observances and has begun to announce a series of improvements. To tell the story of passenger rail service in Canada, in conjunction with the Expo '86 world exposition scheduled for May 2 through Oct. 13 in Vancouver, almost half the renovated Vancouver station will be devoted to a display.

Among its elements will be a full-size replica of the Dorchester, a steam locomotive and six luxurious cars from the 1929 Trans-Canada Limited, an audiovisual review of passenger rail technology around the world and two miniature trains hauled by vintage-style locomotives that will transport children and adults around the historic trains parked in the station.

Further information is available from the Public Affairs Department, VIA Rail Canada (Post Office Box 8116, Station A, Montreal, Quebec H3C 3N3, Canada; 514-286-2417).

Kayaks produced

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — There are two ways to produce kayaks to use on white water expeditions, according to Dr. Andrew Embick, a doctor who also leads such expeditions.

One is to use expensive, hand-laid laminates in which the materials alone may cost $1,000. The other, at less cost, is to mold the kayaks from polyethylene whose molecules cross-link during the molding process.

The crosslinking produces very tough kayaks such as the ones Embick chose for an expendition to run the Braldu River in Pakistan. The kayaks were molded by Perception Inc. of Liberty, S.C.

Parent, child relationship important to learning

Hearst News Service

School grades tend to decline when parents get upset with a child's performance, or impose punishments and rewards in an effort to improve their grades, according to preliminary results of a Stanford University study.

Parental participation in school, along with offers to help and low-key encouragement of their children, is "the best advice I can give parents, based on the study," said its author, Sanford M. Dornbusch, professor of education, sociology and human biology.

Dornbusch's study will be finished next year. He said preliminary results show a relationship between parental action and the quality of school grades.

"The main thing I get out of the study is that the relationship between parents' actions and their children's performance in school had more effect than family income, parental education level, ethnicity and family structure combined. We are beginning to understand why some children do better than others."

Parents who are obviously upset over their child's grades further upset the child. This in turn results in lower grades. But children whose parents attend school events tend to get good grades.

His study also found that students do poorly if they get mixed messages from their parents.

AIDS can cause years of life to be lost

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

AIDS is the fourth-leading cause of lost years of potential life in New York for men under 65, the government reported, and at its present rate of growth may soon be the leading cause.

The disease, which killed 923 men in New York in 1984, accounted for 24,400 years of lost potential life before age 65, according to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

The statistic of lost years of potential life is figured this way: if a 25-year-old man dies of AIDS, that would be counted as 40 lost years of potential life.

Picking a college

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — How do high school students choose colleges?

Some do so rationally and others romantically, says Dennis O'Brien, president of the University of Rochester. He says that while some choose on the basis of academic programs, others use the "botanical principal of university choice" — they enroll at a college after being impressed by all the flowers in bloom when they visit.

Parent, child relationship important to learning

Hearst News Service

School grades tend to decline when parents get upset with a child's performance, or impose punishments and rewards in an effort to improve their grades, according to preliminary results of a Stanford University study.

Parental participation in school, along with offers to help and low-key encouragement of their children, is "the best advice I can give parents, based on the study," said its author, Sanford M. Dornbusch, professor of education, sociology and human biology.

Dornbusch's study will be finished next year. He said preliminary results show a relationship between parental action and the quality of school grades.

"The main thing I get out of the study is that the relationship between parents' actions and their children's performance in school had more effect than family income, parental education level, ethnicity and family structure combined. We are beginning to understand why some children do better than others."

Parents who are obviously upset over their child's grades further upset the child. This in turn results in lower grades. But children whose parents attend school events tend to get good grades.

His study also found that students do poorly if they get mixed messages from their parents.

AIDS can cause years of life to be lost

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

AIDS is the fourth-leading cause of lost years of potential life in New York for men under 65, the government reported, and at its present rate of growth may soon be the leading cause.

The disease, which killed 923 men in New York in 1984, accounted for 24,400 years of lost potential life before age 65, according to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

The statistic of lost years of potential life is figured this way: if a 25-year-old man dies of AIDS, that would be counted as 40 lost years of potential life.

Picking a college

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — How do high school students choose colleges?

Some do so rationally and others romantically, says Dennis O'Brien, president of the University of Rochester. He says that while some choose on the basis of academic programs, others use the "botanical principal of university choice" — they enroll at a college after being impressed by all the flowers in bloom when they visit.

Center helps in diversification move

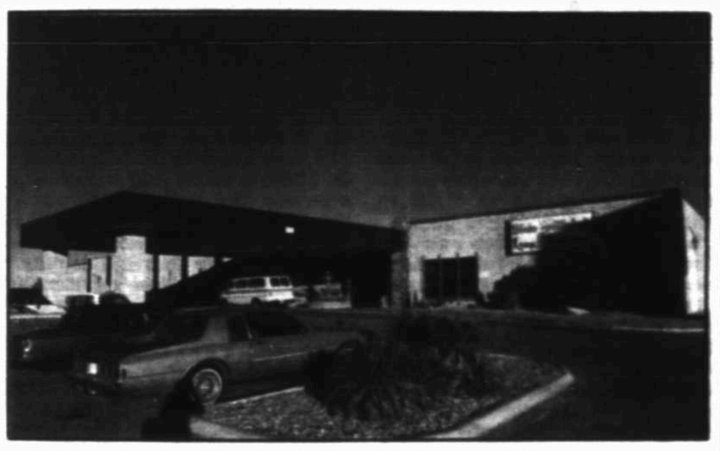

Complex boosts local economy with meetings, concerts

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

A move to diversify the economic base of Midland has gotten a strong assist from an unlikely source — a large building located on the back of a parking lot, behind an auto dealership, adjacent to the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

"This is a fantastic place, and probably the best kept secret in Midland," an individual was overheard, leaving the facility after a concert. The Holiday Inn Convention Center is no secret, but since its opening in October, it has not-so-quietly gone about the business of boosting the local economy with concerts, conventions, seminars and other events.

"The center has been continuously busy. We've had concerts for up to 1,400 people, auctions, dinners and the symphony," said Nicki Dancy, Holiday Inn director of sales.

The 20,000-square foot convention center allows the Holiday Inn to accommodate meetings for 2,500; banquets up to 1,500; and permit up to 100 booth spaces for trade shows. In the past the nearby Holidome had been able to accommodate only 300-500 conventioneers.

Construction of the Villa complex was part of a multi-million dollar expansion and renovation project of the two motels.

"The convention center opened up our potential to house people," she said, adding that the complex is being marketed locally, statewide and nationally. Special emphasis is being placed on non-petroleum groups.

"Convention dollars are said to turn over seven times in a community. This could yield a minimum of $3 million per year in generated income to the community as well as expose conventioneers to Midland," she said. "Maybe some of those visitors would want to locate their businesses here. This is our portion in the city's diversification."

Between the two Holiday Inns — Country Villa and T-Dome — 435 sleeping rooms are available to conventioneers nearby the convention center. Additionally, the Holiday Inns have remodeled sleeping accommodations and public places. A nine-hole miniture golf course and playroom have also been built at the T-Dome.

Dancy said the hotel is shooting to book a minimum of 24 conventions per year in the new complex. "We're already on our way to reaching this number and have conventions booked for the tax assessors, Land Managers Association and the Permian Basin Petroleum Association," she said.

The Midland Holiday Inn Country Villa/Holidome is owned by Harper Construction Co. of Great Bend, Kan.

Population analysis show newcomers to Texas decreasing

From Staff and Wire Reports

A depressed oil business and the overall slowdown in the Texas economy has decreased the number of newcomers to the state, according to a newly released population analysis.

Texas' net in-migration totaled 50,700 people in 1985, the lowest in almost 20 years and just one-fifth the annual inflow recorded in the late 1970s and early 1980s, M/PF Research Inc. of Dallas revealed at its annual Texas economic conference Wednesday.

During the state's oil industry boom period of the 1970s and early 1980s, net in-migration — the number of people who moved in the state less the number who moved out — increased above 200,000 annually.

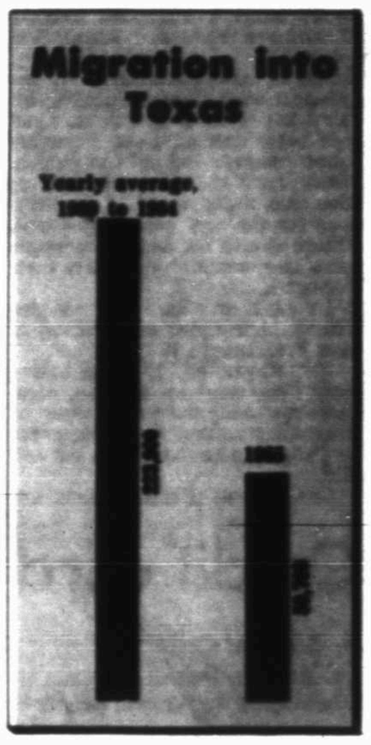

Between 1980 and 1984, Texas recorded an average net in-migration of 223,900 each year, according to M/PF.

During this time, approximately 31,000 moved to Midland, based on figures released by the Midland Chamber of Commerce. Midland reported 82,311 residents in 1980 and 118,728 during 1984. Figures for 1985 have not been released yet.

Midland also experienced an out-migration last year. An out-migration occurred in seven of the state's 26 metropolitan areas, many in the oil patch region. Other cities include Odessa, Victoria, Longview-Marshall, Wichita Falls, McAllen-Edinburg-Mission and Laredo. MP/F's data showed.

In 1985, Dallas attracted the greatest number of newcomers to Texas with 53,497. San Antonio was second among the state's major cities, with 21,205 net in-migration in 1985. Houston recorded net in-migration of 10,266 last year.

"As job opportunities in Texas became more scarce, the flow of newcomers into the state slowed in 1985," said M/PF chairman Oliver Mattingly.

Source: M-PF Research, Inc.

People who have moved to Texas are separted in three categories by Mattingly — career seekers, corporate transferees and the displaced jobless.

Historically, the career seeker has dominated in-migration to the larger Texas cities. The corporate migrants and the career seekers are the important newcomers to Texas and will continue to be a key source of population growth, Mattingly said.

The displaced workers — typically those who lost their jobs elsewhere for economic reasons and moved to Texas to find better opportunities — have become less of an influence, Mattingly said.

Dr Pepper giving away 45 million cans

From Staff Reports

With only 37 percent of Americans having tried Diet Dr Pepper, the company has launched a campaign to encourage the other 67 percent of the American population to give it a try.

Dr Pepper Co. president, John Albers, will offer every viewing household a free can of Diet Dr Pepper beginning with a series of television commercials that began airing on February 24.

"Half of all families in the U.S., or 45 million households, will be extended this offer in a two-week long television campaign," Albers said in a recent statement. "This is the single largest sampling effort in the history of Dr Pepper Co. We are convinced that once consumers try Diet Dr Pepper, they'll buy it."

Dr Pepper Co. has identified the Midland/Odessa market as a key growth opportunity area. The area has not seen increases in the sale of Diet Dr Pepper, unlike many cities where sales are enjoying double-digit increases. For example, the soft drink has posted increased sales of 10 percent in Minneapolis, Minn.; 57 percent in Pittsburgh, Penn.; 18 percent in Chicago, Ill.; and 46 percent in Tampa, Fla.

A year in developing, the Diet Dr Pepper giveaway involves the combined efforts of 250 bottlers from Los Angeles to Boston. More than 1,500 WATS Marketing of America agents will be fulfilling requests for Diet Dr Pepper coupons. Each coupon may be redeemed for either a free can of Diet Dr Pepper or for 60 cents off a six-pack.

Dr Pepper Co., entering the new year as a tough competitor in the soda wars, will feature "out of the ordinary" commercials featuring Godzilla's diet conscious girlfriend, Ms. Zilla, humorous radio spots featuring talk show personality Dr. Ruth Westheimer, and in-store sampling events to support specially set-up Diet Dr Pepper displays.

The soda has undergone a name change also. No longer known as Sugar Free Dr Pepper, the new name is Diet Dr Pepper. According to company spokesmen, "With this new name, Diet Dr Pepper becomes a more clearly positioned brand in the diet category and, consequently, sales are expected to increase."

The formula may also be seeing some change in the near future. Diet Dr Pepper is sweetened with a blend of aspartame and saccharin. The company will soon begin testing the use of 100 percent aspartame-sweetened Dr Pepper in several U.S. markets to find out if there is a perceived difference between a blend and a 100 percent aspartame-sweetened Diet Dr Pepper. Albers commented, "Our commitment is to continue to test and be prepared to move into 100 percent aspartame if future product and consumer research does not continue to support that position."

Dr Pepper's cold drink distribution strength lays the foundation for its claim to overtaking Seven-Up as 1985's number one non-cola nationally. "The number one non-cola...It sure feels good to have regained our rightful position in this exciting industry," said John Clarke, vice president of bottle and can sales for the company.

"I think it also presents us with a tremendous opportunity. The pride and prestige reflected in being number one can be directly leveraged in each of your markets to gain continued and even greater sales growth."

Dr Pepper oldest manufacturer of soft drink syrups

Laying claim to the number one non-cola spot in America, Dr Pepper attributes much of its success to its 'Out of the ordinary' marketing campaign.

But facts about the company are not as readily publicized. These include:

■ Dr Pepper Co. is the oldest major manufacturer of soft drink concentrates and syrups in the U.S. Dr Pepper, the number-one-selling non-cola, according to Beverage Industry, was formulated in 1885 by young pharmacist Charles C. Alderton in Waco.

■ Dr Pepper is not a cola or a root beer. It is a blend of 23 flavors which creates a distinctive product that no other company has successfully copied in more than 100 years.

■ In 1984, Dr Pepper Co. went private in a leveraged buyout that merged the firm with the New York investment firm, Forstmann Little & Co.

■ Dr Pepper Co. has 500 employees, of which 150 live and work outside Dallas as sales, marketing and quality-control representatives. The company offers marketing and technical assistance to bottlers who have the ability to engineer and construct bottling plants with production capacities in excess of 200 million liters per year. In addition to the Dallas concentrate plant, Dr Pepper Co. produces concentrates and syrups in Canada, the United Kingdom and Japan.

■ As America's number-one-selling non-cola soft drink, Dr Pepper comprises about 7 percent of the total US industry share of soft drink sales. It is the undisputed leader in the category of pepper-type soft drinks and commands a 93 percent share of that segment.

■ Fountain syrups are sold to licensed bottlers, wholesale distributers and directly to fountain accounts. Dr Pepper is distributed by more than 450 U.S. bottlers. Dr Pepper is sold in 15 markets in the international marketplace.

Have independents outlived their usefulness?

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association this week issued a resolution calling upon the administration to establish a national energy policy to let the independent petroleum industry know, once and for all, exactly where it stands in the complicated, grand scheme of world oil production and sales. It is a plea that makes much sense, but will probably fall upon deaf ears.

In the 10-plus years that I have been writing about the oil and gas industry, I have lost count of the number of times such pleas have gone out. Over the years, a chorus of pleas has gone up from economists, industry leaders, oil associations, and politicians calling for a firm national plan to insure Americans of a continuing, adequate supply of energy at a reasonable price, a secure source of petroleum for national defense, and preservation of our domestic energy industry while freeing our nation from foreign energy blackmailers. Despite the pleas that has not happened.

We still do not have a national energy policy. As a consequence, this nation flits from energy crisis to energy crisis as the should-be policy makers keep on doing whatever is politically expedient.

PBPA President Perry Bolger was correct when he made that observation earlier this week and commented that there seemed to be little concern for the protection and preservation of an independent domestic petroleum industry.

Said Bolger: "So far each administration spokesman has said that low oil prices are good for the consumer and the nation. This tells me that the administration has already written off the effects of lower oil prices against the small producer and national security."

His concern was validated by news reports which appeared the same day. In the news story it was pointed out that Reagan would not intervene in the market with an oil import tax, even though some from oil producing states have warned of the destruction of the independent oil industry if oil prices were not stabilized at more reasonable levels. Neither was the argument for national security given credibility. Said an administration spokesman: "Our policy is that the market works."

History shows, however, that the market works only part of the time. When it swings in favor of the consumer it works very well, but when it favors the oil industry government assumes it is failing. That is why the oil industry is the only industry that has ever been penalized by a "windfall profits" tax.

To be sure, when it comes to political battles, the independent oil industry has a winning record something akin to the Houston Oilers. We once attributed this lack of ability to win to a deep and longstanding animosity between the conservative, energy-producing states and the liberal, energy-importing states, but now I am not so sure that has been the only reason all along.

At the risk of sounding like a demented paranoid, looking for a trilateralist under every bed, I am prone to wonder if maybe we do not already have a national energy policy.

Could it be that a national energy policy, as yet still unknown to those outside the inner-circle, has already been established in secret meetings by an occlusive handful of major oil companies, government leaders, international bankers, industrialists and economists. Furthermore, could a tenant of that policy be that, in a period of shrinking reserves, enhanced recovery and limited frontiers, the independent sector of the oil industry has outlived its usefulness?

Sure it sounds like a hair-brained conspiracy theory, and there's no way to prove it anyhow, but I can assure you stranger things have happened in our society. Besides, whether or not such a conspiracy was actually hatched in paneled rooms in New York and Washington matters little, because the net result is the same — independents must suffer. For the past two decades, come Republican or Democratic administration, events have been structured so that independents have had to pay whether the price of oil went up or down. During the same period, persistent legislation and regulation, from price controls to so-called decontrol with windfall profits tax, to NGPA, has chipped away at the incentives that make up the foundation of the independent petroleum industry. Third, except for a few narrow quarters inhabited by oil state legislators, sympathy for the independent oil industry is practically nonexistent in the political world. Few politicians could care less if it survives or dies, and a few more have been most enthusiastic in pushing it along toward an early grave.

Indeed, if by conspiracy or by chance an unspoken policy has evolved that writes off the independent petroleum industry it is a bad policy. America needs an independent, highly flexible, oil-finding business as badly as it needs secure reserves for national defense. We need a national energy policy.

Former contruction worker compares buildings and hair styling as art form

Replaces hammer and nails with blow dryer and shears

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — When Franck Piedra told his Mexican-born father he was quitting his construction job to attend beauty school, the reaction was predictable.

"He looked at me and asked, 'Are you straight or what?'" Piedra recalls.

"I said, 'I'm straight but I want to try this.'

His father, construction foreman Francisco Piedra, "wasn't too pleased."

The change in professions for the younger Piedra meant doffing his hard hat to learn how to turn out perfectly coiffed heads; putting down hammer and nails to pick up blow dryers and shears and leaving the loud, dusty world of construction for the cozy cocoon of salons, where women tell their hairdressers what they wouldn't confess to their husbands.

He did it on a dare from his girlfriend, a hair stylist, during a stay in San Francisco in 1975.

The 32-year-old El Paso native hasn't regretted his decision, accumulating along the way a roster of clients so loyal they fly in from as far as Dallas and Lubbock for a cut and dry.

One of those clients is Calvin Kitten, 41, whose job as Lubbock-based operations manager for Save N' Gain keeps him constantly on the road or in the air, supervising his territory in Texas and New Mexico.

"Franck is very conscientious and he does not bore you with a lot of idle talk," said Kitten, whose hair Piedra has been cutting about every four weeks for more than three years.

"There's not much you can do with a man's hair," Kitten said. "But he cuts it once a month and it holds up nicely, and I've got curly hair. I'll not let anybody else touch my hair."

Piedra, a slim, neat man on the shy side of friendly, doesn't think his change of profession was all that startling.

Construction work and hair styling both are art forms, he says.

"If you look at blueprints, you don't know what the building is going to look like," he said. "Then you build it.

"With hair, you get a canvas which is not flat and you do the same as with a house: you keep working at it for that end result.

"My father can tell what boards are not aligned. The same with hair. I can tell what's out of place."

Piedra, the third of eight children, was born in Durango, Mexico, where his father's relatives live.

"Every time my mother was about to give birth, she'd go stay with our family in Durango," Piedra said. "She didn't want her boys to be recruited" by the U.S. military.

Piedra did try twice to join the military only to be turned down because of a malformed collarbone.

His father has been in construction work all his life and his three brothers have followed the family tradition. So would he, had he not gone to San Francisco to live with Elba Rosas, his then-girifriend.

"We had five months of straight rain, and when it rains, there's no construction work," Piedra said.

Through his girifriend, he had been meeting many people in the hair styling business and life as a construction worker was dissatisfying, anyway. So when Ms. Rosas issued her dare, he bit.

"She said, go to beauty school and if you're not happy after a year, I'll pay you what it cost you," Piedra said.

He returned to El Paso, informed his father about his plans and set to work learning the intricacies of caring for tresses.

After beauty school, he worked part time for his living and apprenticed under a stylist he calls among the best in the business.

"He said he wouldn't pay me, but he'd give me pocket money once in a while," Piedra said.

Piedra still consults with his old teacher when he has a tricky color correction to perform.

The apprentice learned fast and was hired as a full-fledged stylist at a salon.

He has a new girifriend now and doesn't allow anyone but himself to touch her hair.

"I wasn't happy in construction work," he said. "Now I enjoy what I'm doing. I earned $12.50 an hour 11 years ago. Now I earn considerably more."

His three brothers are still doing construction work. He does his sisters-in-law's hair.

His parents live in Fairfield, Calif., a community northeast of San Francisco.

"When I visit my parents, I do my mother's hair," he said.

His father eventually learned to accept his son's work.

"Six years after I started doing this," he said, "my father told me, 'You work year-round. We don't.'"

Credit card protection services no guarantee

By S.J. DIAMOND
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

It is the rare charge card that does not offer customers card "protection." Most pitch a lot of peripheral services, but the first, and seemingly the simplest, is the promise of help if cards are lost or stolen — including notification of all issuers involved and arrangement for replacements. "I keep hearing about the growth of credit card fraud," a New Jersey businessman says, "and I figure there's more chance my cards will be stolen. They take care of everything if that happens, don't they?"

They may and then again, they may not. They may also do things with these lists of cards that they do not advertise.

These services are usually provided by outside contractors, but come with the intrinsic recommendation of the card-issuer. After all, says Spenser Nilson, whose Nilson Report covers the credit card industry, "When an offer comes from your bank, you believe it."

The service does seem undeniably helpful. For an annual fee of $6 to 15, and usually $12, the service will register all one's different cards, including those of a spouse and any dependants under 25. Notified of any loss or theft, the service will notify the card-issuers and request replacements. It may also report address changes to the whole list. "Better to make one toll-free call," says the New Jersey man, "than have to look up and call all those individual companies."

It may even work as advertised. One California subscriber reported her dozen cards stolen after a mugging; the next day, she checked one bank, one department store, and American Express and found them already informed. Bank of America promises that its SafeAmerica service will telex card-issuers within an hour of the consumer's call — a speed few consumers could match. Moreover, "consumers may forget one or two cards," says Anne Kortlander, manager of BofA's ValueAmerica programs; "here you have all your cards listed in one place."

The services appeal most to people with lots of cards. The businessman above has "25 or 30." A banking executive signed up for American Express' service when she started traveling with "a huge number of cards, separated into business and personal use." Many services also offer traveling card holders up to $1,000 in emergency cash or airline tickets.

The convenience of such a service, when needed, is unarguable. Many people, however, question the need.

For all the publicity about credit card fraud, and stolen cards, fewer than 2 percent of the nation's 100 million card holders suffer a loss or theft in a year. Even among registration service subscribers, who are perhaps "more conscientious about reporting," says Robert May, president of Credit Card Sentinel in Los Angeles, the figure is only 7.5 percent.

Most consumers do not have many cards to report: The average number owned is 7.1, says Nilson. The average number lost by his subscribers, says May, is 5. Furthermore, this is one of those rare instances in which oral notification is acceptable and, as one consumer points out, people could easily keep for themselves a list of the requisite telephone numbers.

Some people want the service because they have read the small print saying that they may be liable for $50 of fraudulent charges made before they notify the card-issuer and they believe that if they subscribe to a service they can, as BofA advertises, "waste no time or energy worrying about all the legal procedures you must follow to avoid liability." They are wrong: Most services (including BofA's) assume liability only after they are notified.

But liability may not be a problem. Many people are already covered under a homeowner's policy. State Farm, for example, the nation's largest writer of homeowners insurance, covers up to $1,000 of such liability, or 20 cards' worth (and, incidentally, receives few claims).

Moreover, the liability may be arguable. A victimized consumer might well argue, suggests one lawyer, that a merchant had not adequately checked signatures or identification.

It may be the thought of making such liability stick that has everyone in the industry adding, sotto voce, that consumers are rarely pursued for that $50. It is also the time involved: "They're not going to take you to court for $50," says Nilson, "when it might cost them $2,000."

Chevron head to speak at Midland conference

George M. Keller, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Chevron Corp., will speak at the Permian Basin Oil & Gas Recovery Conference at the Midland Center on March 14, beginning at 8 a.m.

Keller will address the subject of what's likely to happen in the oil business in the 1980s to an industry faced with excess production, weak prices and the need to find new reserves to forestall another energy crisis in the 1990s. He will discuss these and other challenges facing the petroleum industry in the next five to ten years.

The executive joined Chevron in 1948, first in the company's engineering department as design and construction engineer on refinery and chemical facilities, then in its foreign operations staff. he was named assistant vice president of foreign operations in 1967, and a year later was promoted to assistant to the president.

George M. Keller

He was named vice president of the corporation in July, 1969, became a director in August 1970, vice chairman in February, 1974, and was named to his present position in May, 1981.

OILFIELD SALES

Some buyers prefer discount to service

By RAYMOND BASS

There are many customers who, in reality, are not concerned with the price of a particular service or piece of equipment. Rather, they simply want to know how much of a discount they are receiving. Lots of buyers think that a gas lift valve is a gas lift valve or that all mud logging units are the same. In reality, most equipment is not the same but rather only similar. In many cases, buyers are not aware of specialized features, quality control variances, and other manufacturing differences; thus they think everything is the same and that in many cases it all costs about the same.

So what they're really interested in is the amount of discount they are receiving. If the salesman offers a 15 percent discount and the competitor offers a 20 percent discount, they think that they are not getting a good buy simply because of the lower discount offered them. They are not concerned about the product but rather the discount off the listed retail price.

It is simply a matter of knowing your customer and which buyers are interested primarily in the amount of discount they receive. One successful way of dealing with these types is to get them to your plant or manufacturing site and give them the VIP tour. This will help justify your lower discount and will show them how your product is different, and thus better, from the competitors.

I have known many buyers who smile from ear to ear saying that they got a particular item at a 40 percent discount when, in effect, the price they paid is much higher than if they would have bought it somewhere else at a 25 percent discount. If this is what it takes to make the customers happy, we simply need to be aware of their needs so we can make the necessary adjustments in our selling strategy.

U.S., Basin rig count continues falling

Rig activity in the Permian Basin and the U.S. continued to drop this week. There are only 201 rigs working in the Basin and 1,308 in the nation.

Locally, Midland and Ector counties each posted an eight rig total for the week. Lea County gained a rig, continuing to be the most active county in the Permian Basin with 20 rigs at work there. Martin County lost five rigs, while Glasscock and Howard counties each gained a rig. Irion County added three rigs to its total, boosting its total to ten.

Nationally, the Texas count dipped seven, down to 436. Louisiana lost 26 rigs and Oklahoma saw a nine rig decrease. New Mexico also dropped nine, bringing the total there to 38 rigs.

Last week the Permian Basin count was at 218; the U.S. count was at 1,376. A year ago, the Basin posted a 310 total and the U.S. total was at 2,143.

Midland firm purchases oil, gas interests

Midland SouthWest Corp. has purchased 20 percent of Calgary-based Norcen Explorer, Inc.'s interest in oil and gas properties in the Black Warrior Basin in Northern Alabama and Mississippi, Midland SouthWest Chairman and President Gail A. Siler recently announced.

The transaction is valued at about $6 million and gives Midland SouthWest an interest in properties comprised of fourteen oil and gas fields and about 90 wells that are producing or are capable of production, he said.

"We're pleased to be involved in the Black Warrior Basin."

RRC approves 13 pipeline permits

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission issued 13 permits to operate new pipelines in Texas in January. In December, the Commission approved 17 permits.

Twelve of the new permits were for gathering pipelines, and one was for a multi-purpose line. Gathering lines bring oil and gas from production leases.

In January, six operating permits were approved for the Refugio area, two in Southeast Texas, one in deep South Texas, one in West Central Texas, two in the San Angelo area, and one in the Midland area.

Gathering line permits approved include: Concho Gathering Co., San Angelo, gas, Tom Green County; Princeton Energy Corp., Denver, Co., gas, Hood County; Mission Valley Gas Gathering, Inc., Corpus Christi, gas, Victoria County; Sun Exploration & Production Co., Midland, gas, Loving County; Seneca Resources Corp., Houston, gas, Calhoun County; The George R. Brown Partnership, Houston, crude/condensates, San Patricio County; Alpha Gas Development of Texas, Inc., Knoxville, TN, gas, Goliad County; Jerry Chambers Exploration Co., Denver, CO., gas, Lavaca County; Anschutz Pipeline, Inc., Houston, gas, Austin County; Diamond Oil International, New Orleans, LA, gas, two lines in Calhoun County; Eagle Pipeline Corp., San Angelo, gas, Concho County.

Gasoline sales boost Southland's quarterly income

DALLAS (AP) — Gasoline sales boosted Southland Corporation's net income to $43.5 million in the fourth quarter last year, up almost 42 percent over the same period of 1984, the company recently reported.

Earnings per share for the quarter were 86 cents, a 32.3 percent increase, on revenues of $3.3 billion, officials said.

Net earnings for the year increased 32.6 percent to $212.5 million, or $4.41 per share, on revenue of $12.8 billion. That was an increrase of 63.8 percent from 1984's $160.2 million, or $3.41 per share, on revenue of $12.1 billion.

Southland chairman John P. Thompson said the company had "an outstanding year overall, although 7-Eleven and some of our other traditional businesses produced results which were less favorable than last year."

Gasoline deliveries up 4.9 percent

WASHINGTON — Gasoline deliveries in January were up 4.9 percent, the American Petroleum Institute reported in its Monthly Statistic Report.

Because of declining crude oil prices and their impact on the trading decisions of buyers and sellers, the API said delivery data for January "may well be somewhat distorted." Overall, however, major trends remained largely intact, the API said.

Deliveries of motor gasoline amounted to 6,647,000 barrels per day — an increase of 311,000 barrels per day, or 4.9 percent, compared with January a year ago. Part of the increase was attributed to the fact that deliveries a year ago were about 200,000 barrels per day below trend; the remainder of the deliveries increase is in line with recent year-to-year increases in the 1 1/2 to 2 percent range.

The API said gasoline prices declined an estimated 4-cents-a-gallon at the pump in January compared with December; the drop was roughly in line with the $2-a-barrel fall in estimated crude oil costs to refiners. Price decreases focused on the unleaded gasoline market because compliance with recent lead phasedown regulations has increased the cost of producing leaded gasoline.

Unleaded gasoline's share of the market rose to almost 69 percent in January, about five percentage points above year-earlier levels.

Total domestic petroleum deliveries for the month amounted to 16,377,000 barrels per day or 1.4 percent.

Other January figures:

- Deliveries of distillate rose only 5,000 barrels per day. Temperatures were warmer by 19 percent with a resultant 270,000 barrels per day decrease in demand for home heating oil, but rail and truck traffic regained strength. Distillate deliveries amounted to 3,467,000 barrels per day. Distillate inventories, which historically have declined about 30 million barrels in January, fell only six million barrels because of the warmer temperatures and a continued high level of domestic output by refineries.
- Residual fuel oil deliveries fell by 14 percent; part of the decrease is the result of deliveries last January having been 50,000 to 100,000 barrels per day above trend. But the rest of the decrease still represented a "somewhat surprising" decline, the API said, in view of the substantial drop in residual fuel oil prices on spot and contract markets. The remainder of the deficit, however, was attributed mainly to a continuation of lower petroleum purchases by electric utilities; they reportedly generated 2 percent less power in January compared with the same a month a year ago.
- Jet kerosene deliveries of 1,111,000 barrels per day were up 12.1 percent for the month as miles flown by airlines increased.
- Production of crude oil amounted to 8,950,000 barrels per day, up 3.1 percent over a year ago. The 273,000 barrel per day increase is the result of a continued rise in production at the Kuparuk field, and output from the new Milne Point field in Alaska, as well as an increase of 50,000 barrels per day in the lower 48 states.
- Imports of crude oil and petroleum products were up 1,079,000 barrels per day, or 26 percent, to a level of 5,233,000 barrels per day. A year ago, levels were down in anticipation of a decline in crude prices.

U.S. gas industry ready to meet competitive challenge

The U.S. natural gas industry "is well positioned to meet the challenge of increased competition in the years ahead," the President of the American Gas Association, George H. Lawrence, told a group of European financial investors.

Lawrence called the U.S. gas transmission and distribution industry "a unique energy industry" with a growing recognition on the part of institutional investors that gas stocks are "increasingly attractive."

The American natural gas industry executive cited four key economic reasons behind the sudden discovery of U.S. utility and pipeline investments by the American and European financial community.

"Current, excess, production capability exceeds demand by about 2.5 Tcf, or 15 percent. And when increasing demand eliminates this present oversupply, we see no return to the shortages of the past. Rather we see all the ingredients for a growing supply to meeting a growing demand."

He emphasized that conventional U.S. gas resources — proved and potential reserves — total $180 trillion cubic feet or the equivalent of nearly 50 years supply at the 1984 level of domestic gas production of 17 Tcf.

In additions, Lawrence called potential U.S. natural gas supplies, "virtually inexhaustable when you consider new technology gas from tight sand formations, Devonian shales and coal seams, plus the research targets of the more exotic resources from geopressured zones, hydrates, abiogenic sources and renewables."

Lawrence pointed out that the U.S. natural gas industry is now entering an era of stable or declining — but in any event competitive — natural gas prices.

Average retail constant dollar natural gas prices are expected to decline during the 15-year period 1985-2000. However, Lawrence said, "a drop in natural gas prices for our transporting companies is more of a plus than a minus from an investor's standpoint.

Energy conservation viewed as 'fact of life'

Nation could become more energy-efficient, economics say

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The twin oil shocks of 1973 and 1979 have caused American business and consumers to make such great strides in conserving energy that falling oil prices are not likely to lure the nation into reverting to its wastrel ways.

In fact, conservation has become so built into the country's infrastructure that the economy could become even more energy-efficient in the years ahead, according to economists, corporate officials and energy experts. And this progress, they say, could position the economy to reap an extra bonus from tumbling oil prices.

"Since 1973, the economy has become significantly more energy-efficient," said Michael D. Smolinski, director of world oil service at Data Resources Inc., an economics consulting firm. The Department of Energy calculates that the amount of energy consumed to produce each dollar of gross national product has fallen by about 26 percent since 1973. Measured the same way, oil consumption has shrunk by about 33 percent.

The added bonus of falling oil prices means that "economic growth will be more and inflation will be lower; the question is: how much?" said Richard M. Young, a vice president at Chase Econometrics Inc., an economics forecasting group. Chase estimates that a $5 drop in the price of oil could add about half a percentage point to the growth rate of the economy and could reduce inflation by nine-tenths of a percentage point.

IT REMAINS to be seen to what extent lower oil prices will actually benefit the economy. For one thing, many officials in Washington favor a tax on oil imports to help shrink the federal deficit. This could mean that oil users — both consumers and business — would not see much, if any, decline in the prices they pay. Also, if the price drops are passed through, the national drive to conserve energy will definitely suffer.

There are already signs that the interest of Americans in conservation is waning. Purchases of big cars are up and sales of insulation for existing homes have fallen significantly in recent years. Meanwhile, institutions ranging from businesses to hospitals are postponing some conservation projects.

Even so, experts note, homeowners are hardly going to rip out the billions of pounds of insulation they installed to cut their heating bills. Nor are corporations about to scrap the billions of dollars worth of investments they have made to dramatically improve the energy efficiency of their operations.

And new generations of products streaming out of American factories — ranging from light bulbs, refrigerators and motors to jet planes and automobiles — are far more efficient than the models they are replacing.

Even the bigger cars that are so popular again are hardly the gas guzzlers of a decade ago. The Crown Victoria, one of Ford'sfull-size 1985 models, gets 21 miles a gallon, or nearly the same as the 1975 Pinto, Ford's most fuel-efficient car at the time.

"Even if the price of oil dropped to where it was in 1973, we'll never go back to where we were then in terms of the amount of oil consumed relative to the gross national product," said Morris A. Adelman, an economist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "Part of the change is irreversible."

Data Resources predicts that domestic oil consumption will rise in the next few years at only a 1.6 percent annual rate. "Were it not for the changes that have occurred in the economy due to the sharp rise in prices in the 1970's, consumption might easily be climbing at a 3½ to 4 percent rate," Smolinski said.

THERE ARE many reasons for believing that, no matter what happens to oil prices, the efficient use of energy of all sorts — and not just oil — could improve during the next three to five years, experts say.

For one thing, the price of oil may be dropping, but the price of electricity has been heading in the opposite direction. And the completion of new nuclear power plants, which will help keep oil consumption down, ironically is widely expected to keep electric rates rising as the cost of the plants is passed on to consumers.

An array of federal and state regulations governing everything from the fuel efficiency of automobiles and appliances to the minimum amount of insulation in new buildings is also keeping the pressure on industry to turn out products that use even less energy.

And while the energy efficiency of refrigerators has improved by 71.4 percent since 1972, that is not good enough for California regulators. By 1992, refrigerators sold in the state will have to operate on about half the energy used by today's models.

But many scientists and industry officials argue that energy conservation would probably improve in many sectors of the economy even without governmental intervention. From the way engineers are trained at MIT to the way homes are designed, the importance of energy efficiency has become a fact of life, they say.

Moreover, there are still many consumerswho are skeptical that lower oil prices will last. All the talk in Washington about taxing oil imports is hardly helping to dispel such doubts.

"Everything keeps going up," said Don Guerrieri, who says he has had no second thoughts about the $3,200 he spent last November on 17 energy-efficient windows for his oil-heated home in Pelham, N.Y. This year he plans to replace more windows and buy a fuel-efficient oil burner for a furnace in a bar and apartment building that he owns. "It's money well spent," he said.

The three primary objectives of the forum are:

- Provide a mechanism for TAB members to describe the nature and extent of their insurance problems.
- Analyze information received and communicated it to appropriate legislative study committees and other policymakers.
- Help create a better understanding of the insurance problems facing businesses in Texas and throughout the United States.

Serving as Chairman of the Forum will be Larry Durland of Austin, a former TAB State Chairman. Serving with him will be John Holgreen, chairman of the Board, Alamo Iron Works, San Antonio; Lamar Lovvorn, secretary/treasurer, Frito Lay, Inc., Dallas; Jim Blain, president, Johnn Drilling Co., Odessa; (all former chairmen of TAB) and Joe Byrd, president, BRB Industries and Mario Oil Co., Texas City, and chairman of the TAB statewide insurance department.

Century-old doctrine for firings debated in Colorado courts

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

DENVER — When Continental Airlines fired Maynard Keenan, a supervisor at its Denver terminal five years ago, he protested. The company had not used the procedure spelled out in its employee manual to get rid of him, he argued.

Today, Keenan's simple protest has grown into a landmark lawsuit before the Colorado state Supreme Court. If the court agrees with Keenan, in a decision expected by the year-end, the traditional relationship between employers and thousands of non-union workers in the state will be shattered, probably forever.

Keenan vs. Continental Airlines, as the case is called, is one of hundreds of cases now before courts around the country that are testing the century-old idea of "employment at will."

"It's an American doctrine, and it says you can be fired for having red hair, you can be fired in the next 10 minutes, and that you have a right to quit," said Joseph Gold-hammer, chairman of the labor law committee of the Colorado Bar Association.

About one million Americans get fired every year, and until recently, employers in the private sector assumed that unless they were bound by union contracts, "employment at will" gave them plenty of latitude in terminating workers.

But the past decade has spawned a series of exceptions to the idea.

The impetus to change employment at will comes from the passage of a number of anti-discrimination laws in the 1960s, said Lynn Feiger, a Denver attorney who specializes in employment law. "We created protection for women, blacks and other minorities," she said. "Employment at will protects the rights of white executives."

UNIONS traditionally have used arbitration to settle what otherwise might have become employment-at-will cases, Goldhammer said. But with unions on the wane, employment-at-will cases are on the rise and overflowing into the courts.

In progressive states such as California, courts have ruled that employee handbooks are part of an implied contract for employment. In the interest of good public policy, they also have said that employers cannot fire employees who refuse to commit illegal acts. And courts have ruled that employers cannot fire workers out of malice or in bad faith.

These exceptions have given millions of workers, including millions of professionals, a chance to obtain huge judgments after they are fired. A recent study showed that fired California employees are winning jury awards averaging $600,000 in lawsuits for wrongful termination.

So far, Colorado has been far more traditional in its approach. Keenan's suit, viewed by lawyers as the most important employment-at-will action to come before the Supreme Court, is seen as a test of how far Colorado is willing to go in making new law.

Proponents of Keenan's position argue that it is time the court recognized society's changing attitude about job security. Opponents say that allowing Keenan to win will flood the courts with spurious claims by worthless employees who have been properly told to pack up and leave. And they say many employers will get around the Keenan decision by simply eliminating their employee handbooks.

"THROUGHOUT the country, there have been some radical changes in employment-at-will practices," said Feiger, who filed a friend of the court brief in the Keenan case. "The average person thinks they have a right to a job as long as they're doing their work."

She and Bradley Losow, who represents Keenan, said they believe Continental's employee handbook established an "implied contract" between Keenan and the company. "Reliance placed on the procedure by the employee" is a key factor in establishing that a contract exists, Losow wrote in his brief.

Continental, represented by Holland & Hart of Denver, denies that a contract exists. John Husband, Continental's lawyer, argued that the airline treated Keenan fairly, offering counseling and second chances to improve performance, before terminating him. In fact, a district court agreed with Husband and dismissed the case, only to be reversed by the court of appeals.

When Continental took the case to the state Supreme Court late last year, a leading employer group, the Mountain States Employer Council, filed a brief supporting Continental.

"Employers prepare handbooks as a matter of information only, there is no intent to have a contract," said Dick Moore, director of governmental relations.

COLORADO'S courts have progressed far more slowly in making other exceptions to employment at will.

In 1984, David Wuchert, a chemist at Great Western Sugar Co., won a $1 million judgment for wrongful discharge. He was fired for refusing to submit what Wuchert believed were fruadelent fructose samples as part of an effort to win a Pepsi-Cola contract.

Opponents of the employment-at-will doctrine say the Wuchert case represents a classic victory in the area of "public policy exceptions" that protect whistleblowers and union organizers from unfair firings.

In the third major area of employment-at-will exceptions, "malicious" or "bad faith firings," the courts have shown little sympathy with employees, said attorney Goldhammer. "The appeals court so far has rejected this line of reasoning," he said.

Ted Olsen, a labor law expert at Sherman & Howard in Denver, said that if Keenan wins, many companies will consider writing employment contracts for large numbers of managers — adding to the potential for litigation.

More people participating in workplace fitness programs

CHICAGO (AP) — On-the-job fitness programs that reward participants would get more Americans into shape and feeling better, with a lower risk of heart attack, researchers said in a new study published today.

Such a program was offered to 2,600 employees at four companies, and almost one-third of the men and one-fifth of the women who didn't ordinarily exercise began working out within two years, the study found.

"The changes we observed in exercise and fitness were not limited to any particular group. ... This was not a bunch of white-collar executives taking up marathon running," said researcher Steven N. Blair of the Institute of Aerobics Research in Dallas.

"The work site may be a very effective place to encourage widespread exercise since most adults are employed outside the home," the researchers said in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

The four Johnson & Johnson companies offering the program began with an annual health screening. It included questions about health habits and measured blood pressure, blood-fat levels, body fat, height, weight, and capacity for physical work or aerobic power, the researchers said.

The health screening was offered on company time at no expense to employees, and exercise facilities and programs also were offered free on or near the workplace. Employees participated on their own time, researchers said.

The exercise program developed by the Brunswick, N.J.-based Johnson & Johnson is part of a larger plan called "Live for Life," the researchers said. That plan helps workers stop smoking, control weight, manage stress, learn about nutrition and detect high blood pressure.

"They (company officials) tried to change the health culture through awareness, motivation, incentives for each mile that you run, each aerobic dance class that you attend," Blair said.

Participants were compared with 1,700 employees at three other Johnson & Johnson companies that offered only the annual health screening.

"Daily energy expenditure in vigorous activity increased 104 percent among employees at companies offering the health-promotion program (including exercise), compared with a 33 percent increase among employees at comparison companies," the researchers reported.

While almost 20 percent of women and 30 percent of men in health-promotion companies began regular vigorous exercise, only 7 percent and 19 percent, respectively, did so in the health-screen-only companies, the researchers found.

"To get the amount of change that we saw on the total population, I think, was a striking finding," Blair said in a telephone interview. "And I'm not bragging on myself. Johnson & Johnson designed the program. All I did was analyze the data."

Whether the company gained more in increased productivity and lowered health-care costs than it spent on the programs is being studied by other independent researchers, Blair said.

A goal of the surgeon general is to have 60 percent of U.S. adults exercising regularly and vigorously by 1990, the researchers noted.

An estimated 10 percent to 20 percent do so now, according to the Public Health Service in Washington, and research indicates it contributes to lower risk of heart attack, helps in weight control and may help protect against some cancers.

Liquid wastes symposium scheduled for Monday

OKLAHOMA CITY — Information which could ultimately decide the fate of Class I hazardous waste wells will be presented ruing a three-day symposium sponsored by the Underground Injection Practices Council, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and the Association of Ground Water Scientists and Engineers. The International Symposium on Subsurface Injection of Liquid Wastes will be held March 3-5, 1986, at the Royal Sonesta Hotel in New Orleans.

In its reauthorization of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, the U.S. Congress instructed the administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to determine if Class I hazardous waste wells should be allowed to continue to operate. The burden of proof has been placed on the well operators, who must show that these wells are not harmful to human health or the environment. Absent these findings, Class I hazardous waste wells could be banned as early as 1988.

Class I hazardous waste wells are uniquely constructed wells with special protective casings and linings. Through these wells, liquids are injected into extremely deep geologic formations which are capable of containing wastes and which are separated from ground water by confining layers of rock.

The symposium will bring together internationally-known experts on underground injection. Scientific papers will address well construction, the fate, transport, and confinement of injected liquids; operational experience, etc. Opposing points of view will be presented including an advocates position by Jay Lehr of the National Water Well Association. An opposing point of view will be delivered by Wendy Gordon, representing the Natural Resources Defense Council.

The speaker at the March 4 luncheon will be Michael Cook, director of the EPA Office of Drinking Water. In all, 36 speakers representing government, academia, and industry will appear.

For registration information, contact the Underground Injection Practices Council, Inc., 525 Central Park Drive, Suite 106, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 73105, or call (405) 535-6146.

Chemical company plans attack to boost sales

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — After two years of spectacular success, C. Robert Powell has hit a snag in his ambitious plans for transforming sluggish Reichhold Chemicals Inc. into a premier high-technology, specialty chemicals company.

Powell was recruited in April 1982 to succeed the company's sole leader for the previous 55 years, and earnings more than quintupled through 1984.

But in 1985, Reichhold recorded its first annual loss since its stock began publicly trading 30 years ago. Some analysts say they are skeptical about chances for renewed robust growth.

"I've got to admit that I feel a little like the general and his troops who find themselves surrounded," Powell, 58, recently told a business group. "The troops ask, 'What should we do?'

"There's only one answer and that's 'Attack.'"

Powell has been on the offensive since taking over as chairman from Henry Reichhold, who established the company in 1927 as a manufacturer of automobile paints and built it into an empire with nearly $1 billion in sales but lackluster profits.

Since Powell took the helm, the company has disposed of 18 businesses and acquired five others. Nearly a quarter of its jobs have been eliminated, with employment dropping to 4,200 from 5,500, mostly because of the divestitures.

Robert Powell

A new corporate strategy has been adopted and Powell has been busy trying to fashion a striking change in corporate culture.

"Profit making was not a motivation under Henry Reichhold. Being big was. And I'll tell you what he rewarded, he rewarded loyalty and he punished mistakes," Powell said. "In contrast, we reward achievement. We do not punish mistakes. The only thing we punish is people not doing anything."

Winning converts at Reichhold Chemicals has not been easy.

Powell barred Henry Reichhold from returning to the company's headquarters and never enlisted the full support of the other top officers, who eventually left.

"He had to take the company up from the dark ages," said Robert Reitzes, an analyst who follows the chemical industry for the investment firm of Mabon, Nugent & Co. "I think the guy has done the right thing."

Seated in an easy chair in front of his office fireplace, Powell reviewed his transition from being executive vice president of Diamond Shamrock Corp. and president of its industrials chemicals unit.

Reichhold Chemicals had been one of Powell's customers during his 31 years at Diamond Shamrock, "but I found out one thing in a hurry, you never really know what's going on in a company until you work there," he said with a chuckle.

"They had a group of very nice people but there had been absolutely no money ever spent on training. I did not realize (that) in the 20th century you could have a Fortune 500 company like that.

"The biggest single thing that we had to teach people for the new culture was that change was going to be forever. That you had to give up on product lines that no longer could do what you wanted to and sell them and either start a new business or buy a new business. This was very hard to do. This company never sold anything in its entire history."

Reichhold now concentrates on specialty chemicals, little known polymers that are components of widely used products.

Its chemicals go into paints and help them adhere to the walls of a home or stick to highways where they mark lane divisions. Other products are used to make fiberglass boats and showerstalls and to produce synthetic marble for bathroom fixtures and furniture. Reichhold specialty chemicals also allow packagers to seal cereal boxes or keep the label on a beer bottle.

The attraction of specialty chemicals to a manufacturer is that no other product is exactly alike and prices can be based more on the performance of the chemical than the cost of production. But competition remains stiff and other producers are constantly developing new products that may do the job better or cheaper.

As part of a five-year plan, Powell is seeking to improve productivity and enjoy big enough profit margins so that by 1987 earnings will be the equivalent of a 20 percent return on the average shareholder's stake in the company.

Reichhold's historical return on equity had hovered around 6 percent to 7 percent, about half the average for all industries and also below the less impressive performance of the chemical industry. At Reichhold, return on average shareholder's equity rose to 10.8 percent in 1983 and 13.3 percent in 1984, before the loss last year.

Reitzes and some other analysts are not confident Reichhold can quickly return to the rapid growth of Powell's first two years at the helm.

The lesson learned from Reichhold is: "You don't see miracles overnight," said Reitzes. "He (Powell) has got a lot to prove."

Powell said the company's goals can be achieved without miracles.

"I would say the only way we'll fail is if our people lose faith and give up," he said. "I think that's my main job, to see that doesn't happen."

Reichhold recently took a $28 million after-tax writedown against its earnings to further scale down the company as sluggish demand left plants running well below capacity. That resulted in a $28.4 million loss for 1985.

A strong dollar hurt some of Reichhold's major customers, and a staff trying to adjust to the heady pace of divestitures and acquisitions had difficulty coping with changing markets.

"In retrospect, I think we tried to do more than we had the talent to do it with," Powell said. "In short, we didn't have enough leaders."

He remains optimistic, though.

Hughes wins suit against Smith for rock bit patent

W.A. Kistler, president and chief executive officer of Hughes Tool Co., announced that the Federal District Court for the Central District of California ruled that Hughes Tool is entitled to damages from Smith International, Inc. for infringement of Hughes Tool's "O-ring seal" rock bit patent in an amount equal to a 10 percent royalty on all infringing rock bits sold by Smith, plus interest on such amounts, or approximately $227,000,000.

The case ultimately leading to this award commenced in 1972. In the intervening years, federal courts have ruled that the "O-ring seal" patent was valid and that Smith had infringed such patent, and federal appeals courts have upheld such rulings. Hughes Tool has obtained a damage award of $132,000,000 against Dresser Industries, Inc. for infringement of the same patent. The Dresser case in now on appeal.

Kistler said that he was gratified that his case, which has now been litigated for 14 years, appeared to be nearing conclusion.

Stress management 'expert' searches for perfect formula to reduce stress

Copley News Service

Fight, flight, flow: Tom Kennedy sees them as the three F's of stress management.

You can fight a situation, flee from it, or flow with it if escape is impossible.

Kennedy, director of graduate studies and of corporate education at the College of St. Francis in Joliet, Ill., is an "expert" at stress management. He's read many books. He gives seminars to CSF off-campus nursing students around the country, professional groups in the Chicago area and other companies in the Joliet area.

But he's still looking for the perfect formula for reducing stress in his own life.

"I come at it from the viewpoint of someone who has to cope with stress every day," Kennedy says. "I'm doing better, but I'm still not satisfied. I'm better at telling people what to do than at doing it myself."

The week before, for instance. He had traveled to Dallas for business. He took the last possible plane to get to Dallas on time. He scheduled every minute there. He left as soon as his work was done.

"I have this fetish with being productive," Kennedy says. "I was told I missed a beautiful sunset."

Suggestion No. 6 on Kennedy's list of stress reducers: "Do things for me. Take time to do things I really enjoy." He's still learning to take his own advice.

Kennedy, who has two jobs at CSF, thinks having too much to do is the main cause of stress. He decided he couldn't manage stress without managing his time better. The irony is that the better he manages his time, the more he tries to squeeze into every minute.

"It's a never ending battle," he says with a laugh. "Since I'm constantly trying to manage stress more effectively in my own life, I feel qualified to try to help others."

At his stress management workshops, Kennedy talks about the need for exercise, sleep, proper nutrition, relaxation techniques and the company of "people who are stress relievers."

Shulamith Mellman, director of counseling at CSF, leads the workshops with Kennedy. She hands out a list of "30 tried-and-true stress buffers."

Self-hypnosis is particularly helpful, Mellman says. She teaches a technique developed by Betty Erickson, wife of famous hypnotist Milton Erickson. It's called 4-4-4, 3-3-3, 2-2-2, 1-1-1.

Mellman describes it: "You think about four things you see, four things you hear, four things you feel. Then you think about three things, two things, one thing." It puts you in a trance, she says. You tell yourself beforehand how long you want to stay under, and, presto, you come out of it on time.

Deep breathing is another good technique, she says. Inhale deeply to the count of three, then exhale to the count of three.

These are her more unusual tips:

Talk slowly — that can reduce heart rate and blood pressure.

Imitate someone else: How would that person handle the situation well?

Reframe the situation by putting a different picture around it — similar to what other people call keeping things in perspective and looking for the good within the bad.

Talking to yourself — realistically. "The things we tell ourselves may cause stress," she says. Our expectations should be realizable, she says. We can't expect the same performance day in and day out. Everyone will make mistakes. Job burnout, a condition of overstress, happens to us all to some degree at one time or another.

Jobs cause stress and employers should take some responsibility for relieving it, Mellman believes.

Here are other techniques:

— Recognize your symptoms of stress. For Kennedy, they are: losing his sense of humor, getting headaches and backaches, being unable to concentrate on his work and on other people's conversation. Stress usually comes out in our relationships, Mellman says. Many people show physical symptoms, but be sure to eliminate medical causes before blaming stress.

— Laugh. Take yourself less seriously.

ClayDesta Communications acquires fiber optics firm

Clayton W. Williams Jr. announces the acquisition of Fiberline, Inc. of San Antonio by his long distance communications company, ClayDesta Communications.

Founded in 1984, Fiberline markets fiber optics facilities for private line voice and data transmissions.

"This is a natural marriage for ClayDesta Communications, whose primary thrust has been long distance services, and Fiberline, whose emphasis has been private line services," Williams said. "As a result we will immediately be able to furnish digital services to more Texas cities than any other carrier including AT&T."

As a result of the acquisition, ClayDesta Communications has, in place, a digital network to Houston and San Antonio; immediate access to a full array of private line and long distance services; and an immediate increase in its network's capacity as well as long term expanded capacity.

"Our networks compliment each other," said Bob Mahler, founder and former president of Fiberline. "There is no duplication of networks."

Over the past year, both companies have achieved astounding success in expanding their networks across Texas. Beginning in Midland/Odessa, ClayDesta has expanded its network to include the metropolitan areas of Amarillo, Lubbock, Abilene, San Angelo, Dallas, Austin, Waco/Temple and Bryan/College Station. Fiberline's markets have expanded from San Antonio to include Austin, Houston and Dallas.

Mahler, who will become director of carrier sales for ClayDesta, called the acquisition "very positive for both companies." Fiberline brings to ClayDesta 17 employees with strong technical and sales backgrounds, especially in large private line offerings.

ClayDesta Communications, founded in 1984 by Clayton W. Williams Jr., now employs over 400 people.

Ordering goods by mail no longer such a risky business

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

There are all these wonderful catalogs now of mail order goods — everything from soup to nuts, and easy to order, what with credit cards and toll-free phone numbers. Unfortunately, there is still the same old fear of late delivery, no delivery, or delivery of something totally unacceptable — a reasonable fear if one is buying unseen goods from unknown merchants across the country.

Such sales have nevertheless grown to $150 billion, and a third of all U.S. households have at some time made these long-distance purchases. Actually, "mail" order is increasingly a misnomer: Neither solicitation nor order necessarily goes by mail. Catalog mailers represent about a quarter of those sales, and perhaps two-thirds of the customers order by phone, charging purchases to a credit card. Consumers, moreover, are no longer so powerless if they are disappointed — particularly credit card customers, who have a powerful weapon in their method of payment, though few apparently know it.

The best protection, as everyone says, is prudence. Mail order purchase is obviously more of a gamble than a considered buy at a retail store. One should be careful with merchants one does not know, suspicious of companies with no phone numbers or street addresses, and leery of offers that sound too good to be true.

If there is any concern — about the offer, goods, or refund policy — "people should call the company and make inquiries," suggests Sandra McFeeley, senior attorney in the U.S. Postal Service's consumer protection division, "and the company should respond. Any business that wants to do well should be into the care and feeding of customers."

If there is a problem later — a gift not there for Christmas or an ill fit — the company itself is the first recourse. As the industry has grown, so have the companies involved; many are sophisticated, well-managed marketers, who study their customers, streamline their order and delivery systems and care about their reputation for safety and service.

They also care about their image as an industry; all are tarnished by the occasional opportunist who jumps into mail order with a backpage or late-night ad and a hope that some people will buy anything. The Direct Marketing Association, an industry trade group in New York, therefore maintains a "mail order action line" for dissatisfied consumers. If a company is unresponsive, the consumer can write the DMA, which will refer the complaint to the company's management. Of some 11,000 complaints received annually, says Lorna Christie, manager of the DMA's ethics department, "approximately 75 percent are resolved satisfactorily."

The U.S. Postal Service, interested in "preserving the integrity of the mails," can take criminal action against a company for mail fraud, or civil action for false representations — "falsely representing or implying," McFeeley says.

The Postal Service may act on consumer complaints or screen ads itself. The offer can be advertised anywhere and delivered by any means, but the consumer must order or pay by mail if the Postal Service is to exercise its principal remedy — "mail stop," which intercepts consumer orders or payments before they reach the company.

Similarly, the Federal Trade Commission's "mail order rule" applies only when the order is mailed, and its concern is not the quality of goods but their timely delivery. Under the rule, a company must ship within 30 days of receiving payment, or within the time specified (as in "allow six to eight weeks for delivery"), or give the consumer the option of canceling the order and getting a refund.

If a company has not followed the rule, the FTC can sue it for both penalties and a promise never to misbehave again, which may or may not help the consumer who originally complained.

The consumer is not without a weapon, however — if he has charged to a credit card number, by mail or phone. On the back of many credit statements — rarely read, barely understood — is an explanation of the consumer's legal rights, and how to exercise them, in case of a billing error or quality dispute.

EPA not planning to ban deep well disposal of wastes

OKLAHOMA CITY — The director of a national research organization on underground injection has told the Oklahoma House of Representatives Committee on Natural Resources recently that the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has no certain plans to ban deep well disposal of hazardous wastes.

Michel Paque said a witness was wrong when he told an Oklahoma Legislative Interim Committee that such a ban was certain.

"In fact," said Paque, "EPA is currently conducting major research and holding meetings with experts on deep wells to try to determine that the practice is safe when carried out under current underground injection control regulations. If they are unable to prove that the practice is not harmful to human health and the environment, then and only then, will the EPA administrator ban the practice."

Paque told the committee that a ban or moratorium on deep well injection would be premature at this point as there is simply no data to support such action. He said the UIPC will conduct an international symposium on subsurface disposal of hazardous wastes in March and a regional hydrologic and geochemical study of deep well injection soon after that.

"Additionally, the UIPC has just completed the most significant piece of work to date by any group in its National Assessment of Class I Wells," he said.

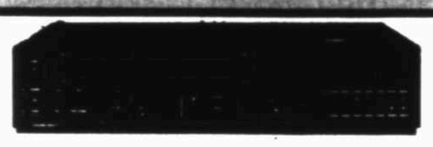

According to Paque, this study of deep well disposal was conducted by an independent consulting firm of unquestioned ability and includes information on all 550 Class I wells in the U.S. Of those, approximately 125 are hazardous waste wells.

Paque said the UIPC is a non-profit technical association with no direct financial interest in injection wells. "We do believe, however, that the practice can be safe when wells are sited, constructed, and operated properly to the exact letter of state and federal law," he said.

Hoffman

Q. I would like to know about my favorite actor Dustin Hoffman.
Charles Picco
Goulds, Nfld.

A. He's 48 (born August 8, 1937), from Los Angeles, the son of a former movie prop man for Columbia Pictures and his wife, who may or may not have named him after the western star Dustin Farnum. As a teen, he was always smaller than everyone else (he's now about 5'6") but his stature earned him his first dramatic role, that of "Tiny Tim" in "A Christmas Carol" while in junior high school.

In high school, though, his height made him too short for football and his acne which he called "one of the worst cases in California" made him feel like a total outsider. He finally made it through, however, and entered Santa Monica City College as a music major, with a minor in theater. Theater won out and he left college after a year to study acting at the Pasadena Playhouse.

Two years later, in 1958, he left for New York determined to make it as an actor, or at the very least, fall out of sight of his relatives and friends. He moved into a cold water flat, worked as a psychiatric attendant, a dishwasher, waiter, toy demonstrator at Macy's and various odd jobs while waiting to score onstage. Two small roles appeared in 1961 but by 1965, when he assisted director Ulu Grosbard in staging a revival of "A View from the Bridge" he began to wonder whether he should go into directing instead.

Finally, however, he began to get work and with it, attention and awards, in plays such as "Harry, Noon and Night," "Journey of the Fifth Horse," and "Eh?" Director Mike Nichols saw him in the latter play, flew him out to Los Angeles to test for the film "The Graduate," and despite a terrible test, gave him the part. That 1967 film, as you probably remember, made him a star.

Following "The Graduate" he appeared in "Midnight Cowboy," "Straw Dogs," "Little Big Man," "Marathon Man," "All the President's Men," "Kramer Versus Kramer" (for which he won the Best Actor Oscar) and "Tootsie," among other films. He also recently repeated his critically lauded stage role as Willy Loman in "Death of a Salesman" on a CBS special. Currently, he's filming "Ishtar" with Warren Beatty and Isabelle Adjani, directed by Mike Nichol's former comedy partner, Elaine May.

Personally, he was previously married to dancer-actress Anne Byrne and has two daughters from that marriage. Presently he's married to Lisa Gottsegen, whom he met when his parents and her grandparents were neighbors in California. They have three children.

Bujold

Q. I am a fan of Genevieve Bujold but I never read anything about her. Could tell me a little bit?
C. McDonald
Pleasantville, N.J.

A. She's 43, was raised in Montreal and educated in a convent there. After the convent, she entered drama school but dropped out at 19 to tour Europe with a theatrical company. While the troupe was performing in France, she was discovered by the mother of director Alain Resnais, who subsequently cast her in his film "La Guerre Est Finie."

Philippe de Broca's cult classic "King of Hearts" followed and in 1969, she made her American film debut as Anne Boleyn opposite Richard Burton's King Henry VIII in "Anne of a Thousand Days."

Roles in the films "Coma," "Obsession," "Monsignor," "Tightrope" and the recent "Choose Me" followed. But, as she explains it, she's more committed to motherhood (she had two sons, aged 17 and 5) than to acting and frequently takes long stretches off to spend with her family at their home in Malibu. According to her agent, she's in one of those stretches right now.

Q. Was Orson Welles ever married to Delores Del Rio?
A fan
Pomona, Calif.

A. No; the two had an affair in the 1940's and co-starred imn the 1942 film "Journey Into Fear." But Delores Del Rio's husbands were Jaime Del Rio, director Cedric Gibbons and producer Lewis Riley, to whom she was married at the time of her death in 1983 at the age of 77.

Q. What is Fred Astaire doing now and how old is he?
M.K.
Chicago, Ill.

A. He's 86 and has been spending most of his time with his wife, ex-jockey Robyn Smith. According to his agent, though, he still wants to work and is having a couple of film and TV scripts written.

Hawn

Q. I just saw an old rerun of a show called "The Courtship of Eddie's Father" and a dead ringer for Goldie Hawn appeared on it under the name of Kristina Holland. Did Goldie ever act under that name?
Naomi R. Spigie
Mishawaka, Ind.

A. No, Goldie Jean Hawn has always acted under her real name. An actress named Kristina Holland did appear on "The Courtship of Eddie's Father." She and Hawn did look very much alike.

Q. I would like to know more about my favorite actress Nancy McKeon, such as how old she is and where she grew up.
J. Linse
Blooming Prairie, Minn.

A. She's 19 and grew up in Forest Hills, Queens, a borough of New York, where she began her professional career at the age of 2, modeling baby clothes for Sears catalogues. When she was 9, though, the family moved west to Los Angeles because her brother Philip had just gotten the role of Linda Lavin's son on the series "Alice."

She started working again in that city, doing commercials and guest shots on series such as "Starsky and Hutch" and "The Love Boat." A role as a female "Fonzie" type in an unsold pilot called "Dusty" convinced the executives at NBC that they'd found the actress to play "Jo" on "The Facts of Life" which she has, obviously, been doing the last couple of years.

Watch for her next, though, in a CBS TV movie called "Fire Lady" in which she plans to star as the first female firefighter in Los Angeles. She plans to film it during the series' hiatus in April and it should air sometime next season.

Colleen Dewhurst

'courts the danger zones'

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features

On stage there is a line of which every consummate actor is aware. On one side of that line is a safety area where you play your part and take no chances. Step across that line, and you're into the danger zone.

With a marvelous character to play and acting with someone who is as willing as you are to venture, you both feel you can let your characters go where they will without being afraid. It's in that danger zone that the indomitable Colleen Dewhurst adores to spend her acting life.

You remember her as big Josie in Eugene O'Neill's "Moon for the Misbegotten," Martha in "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf," Amelia in Albee's adaptation of Carson McCullers' "The Ballad of the Sad Cafe," Cleopatra, Medea, Annie Hall's mother, Queen Gertrude in "Hamlet," Lady Macbeth, Mrs. Squeamish in "The Country Wife," the wracked tragic heroines of O'Neill's "Desire Under the Elms," "Mourning Becomes Elektra" and "More Stately Mansions."

"I love women who bear such constant investigation that you never feel you have investigated them completely," Ms. Dewhurst explains. "And each day or each night in each scene, there is the excitement of discovering facets of which you haven't dreamed."

Her voice is deep, resonant, thrilling as thunder. She is at her 32-acre farm at South Salem, N.Y., which she and George C. Scott bought during their time together. They were married twice over a period of 13 years and are still close friends. (In real life Ms. Dewhurst courts danger zones too.)

This farm is where their sons, Alexander and Campbell, grew up. It's a marvelous wild piece of land inhabited by "non-producing" animals: horses, goats, sheep, geese, two mules, a peacock and a finch.

Last year she finished a run at Long Wharf Theater in New Haven, in "Rain Snakes," a play she had wanted to do for two years — a deep, rather Strindbergian play. It was produced by her friend and love, Ken Marsolais, and directed by her long-time friend, Jose Quintero, the man who first saw her as Kate in Papp's "Taming of the Shrew" production in Central Park and started casting her in theater pieces which made her famous.

"It was good to be with him again. It's not often you find a man who breathes with you, moves right ahead of you, keeps leading you to new heights. I loved it especially because sometimes you've had to tap dance for a while," she says.

And by tap dance she means playing less demanding roles for films or TV to make enough money to keep going in a profession which has never been noted for consistency — "It's wonderful to come back to something that's going to eat up your every waking moment trying to figure out this character and this play."

Luckily, she's not been tap dancing recently. She's been spending an unusual amount of time before the cameras and in danger. She'll be starring on ABC-TV in "Two Women," with Farrah Fawcett in the story of a young housewife's struggle with a difficult mother-in-law. Last year she did NBC's mini-series "A.D." picking up where "Jesus of Nazareth" left off and recreating the turbulent years following His death.

"Here again (in "A.D."), " says Ms. Dewhurst, "was a role which in terms of history, in terms of time and place, was a genuine excitement. I especially enjoyed playing a woman no one expects to see me play, and as Antonia, I was one of the noblest Romans of them all.

"Such a revel in antiquity — the elegant gowns, the jewelry, the wigs. We shot in Tunisia, and I love to travel. One of the perks of the business is this chance to taste the world."

She recalls, "It was absolutely stunning to arrive that morning, to get out of the car in the middle of what was obviously the ancient Roman forum and to be surrounded by these beautiful, incredible buildings, every architectural detail perfect. Absolutely beautiful and right beside the Mediterranean. Every piece of material handwoven for our costumes.

"Our makeup was done by makeup artists standing in rooms lined with ancient coins and pictures. And there were warehouses with the most beautiful gowns and robes and shoes you have ever seen!"

"Imagine going right from all that elegance and aristocracy into the part of the immigrant Appalachian miner's wife in 'Johnny Bull' (an ABC film based on an award-winning play from the Eugene O'Neill Memorial Theater). Here I am nickling and diming it with all the housework to do, a Hungarian accent and Jason Robards as my husband."

She gives you that thunderous laughter. "Wonderful, of course, to work again with Jason. It's one of the joys of this business that you know and get to work with old friends."

She remembers especially their collaboration in "Moon for the Misbegotten." She loves O'Neill. "He has such tremendous passion, and we live in a world where there is so much manufactured passion. There's nothing we don't have a book on how to do.

"But there were Jason and I night after night sitting under that tree, Josie trying to seduce Jamie who is a drinker and prefers to view her as a kind of Virgin Mary, a pure confessional vessel for the relief of his own sins. One night when the lights were down, I reached out for Jason in the dark bringing him back to me, and I said, 'Jason, which is the real world, out there or up here?' He whispered, 'Up here,' and the lights went on, and I said, 'OK, that's right.' "

She has also loved working with former husband Scott. "George is wonderful to work with — another one of those actors who has done his homework and always brings to the stage that little extra thing. When you look at him, he's there for you."

They did "Antony and Cleopatra" and "Desire Under the Elms" together. "He's a great intellect, George. He puts to bed once and for all the view of what an actor is. What you can expect. As I've always said to the boys, 'No matter what, my dears, you can be very grateful that's your dad!'

"Oh, the boys know. They've been fortunate because they realize that they came from a loving relationship, and it remains so. Very meaningful. We will always be friends. We talk theater. We argue. We laugh a lot. We have a very good time. When I do a play, I want George out front. I want him there because he is very quick."

Ms. Dewhurst continues, "Also, we recognize each other's escape runs in a situation we have not dealt with before. I would love to be directed in a play by George. Probably will be. We have great affection, great admiration for each other, great respect, and also we have the same sense of humor. He likes me to sit out front for him, too.

"Last year I told him how great 'Scrooge' was. We both laughed because what you could never imagine George doing would be this character, and he brought to it a wonderful humor which gave the character an added believability. Incredible. I don't think there's a thing George couldn't do."

The stories of their tempestuous marriage are legend. Here are two people, titan-sized in talent and temperament, and the wonder is that they were able to spend as much personal time together as they did during their marriages. Ask her how she managed that, and she brings her thunder down to a whisper. "Very quietly," she says.

And the boys grew up deeply influenced by them both. Alexander just finished college, is "married to a girl named Kate, and I'm a grandmother. Isn't that lovely? Three years ago, Alexander assisted his dad as stage manager down at the Circle in the Square when they were producing 'Present Laughter.' Whether he'll go on with the theater, I have no idea. He majored in philosophy. His dad says, 'You know you can't open a philosophy store, Alexander.'

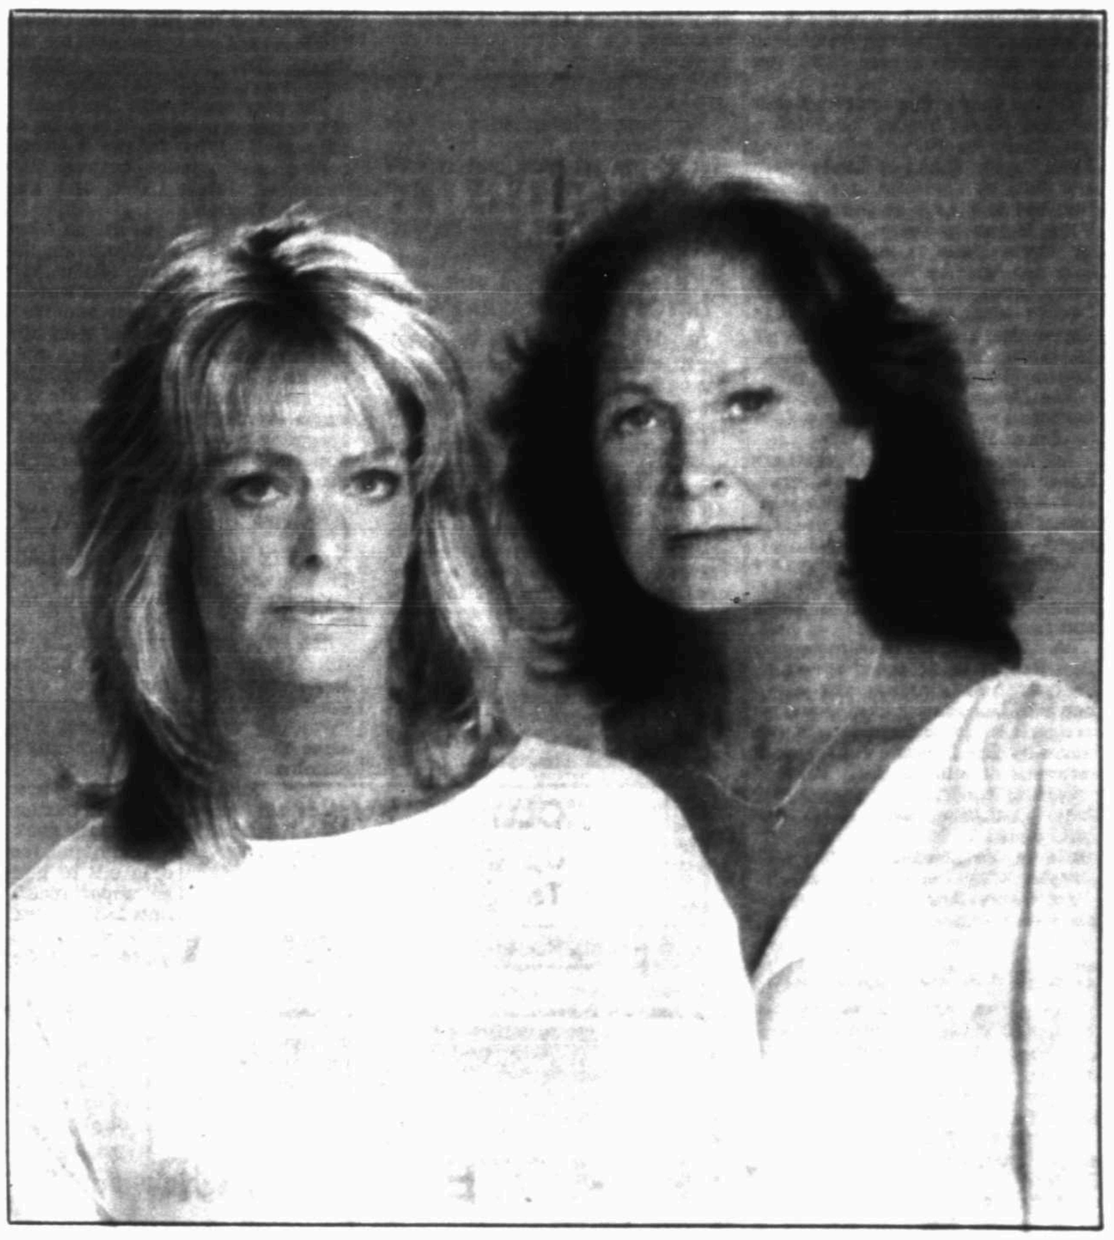

"Meanwhile, last year Campbell understudied the two young men in 'The Real Thing.' I think he will be an actor, but he won't let me speak about it. He gets very angry. God forbid he should be identified in any way as being somebody's son.

"At one point he even thought of changing his name, except I said, 'Scott is just like Smith, Campbell.' Then one of his friends suggested he change to Dewhurst. 'That,' he said, 'is not funny.' "

She continues, "Actually, I didn't yearn for either of them to become theater people. On the other hand, my mother never tried to stop me. Being a very bright lady, she knew that anything that you are doing for love, you should go ahead and do.

"And I do realize, because a friend pointed it out...if they had grown up in a house where the head of the family or both parents were engaged in a certain business, they would likely have become interested in that.

'Knots Landing's' Pat Peterson latest teen fave

By SUSAN KING
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — Pat Petersen is the latest "Hunk of the Month." During the past seven years, the 19-year-old actor has literally grown up in front of TV audiences as Michael Fairgate on CBS' popular prime-time soap "Knots Landing."

Recently, though, Petersen has joined Rob Lowe, Michael J. Fox, the members of Duran Duran and Don Johnson as a fave of the teeny-bopper set. Every month he's featured in interviews and pinups in such fan mags as 16 and Tiger Beat.

Sitting in the purple living room (even the fish in the tank are purple) of his apartment here, the trendily dressed and sandy-haired young actor admits he initially was reluctant to do publicity in teen magazines. "I never wanted to do that before because I felt it was the wrong way to go," Petersen says. "I thought you would be typecast (as a teen idol)."

But Petersen says he eventually decided to do it because he wanted to "get out and show my face."

In the past few years, Petersen says, his role as Michele Lee's son on "Knots Landing" has been expanded. "I do have a lot of story lines coming up," he says. In recent episodes, says Petersen, "I've gone after an older lady. They've had me deal with more adult problems than in the past. I even have some bigger stuff coming up."

Because of his increased exposure on "Knots Landing" as well as in the magazines, Petersen's fan mail has increased more than 30 percent in the past three months. "I guess I get about 100 letters a month," he says. "To tell you the truth, I really don't have any idea."

Petersen quickly points out that he answers all the letters. "I'm kind of into it," he says. "I'm doing this on my own. My mom used to handle everything. She wasn't my manager, but she dealt with all the aspects (of my career). She still does handle the checks, but I'm doing this on my own."

Petersen was born in Los Angeles, where his father owned a flower shop and his mother was "just a housewife. She wanted to get us (Petersen has three brothers) some money for college, so my brothers did a commercial."

His brothers eventually got work as extras and Petersen followed in their footsteps. "She (his mother) dragged us on interviews when we didn't want to go," Petersen says. "I was really into sports; that's what I really wanted to do."

By the time he was 16 and had been on "Knots Landing" for four seasons, Petersen says he finally decided he wanted to pursue a career as an actor. "Even though I had been on the show for four years, I really wasn't into it that much," he says. "Then I decided I wanted to be an actor, so here I am."

Petersen graduated from a Catholic high school in the San Fernando Valley and went to Santa Monica College for one semester. "It worked out all right for the first semester," he says. "I missed a lot of classes, but school was easy there." He didn't bother to return for the second semester. "I didn't really like the public (school) system at all."

Besides, he adds, "I don't want to go to school right now. I want to go to school when I want to go to school."

When he's not filming "Knots Landing," Petersen takes acting classes twice a week. "I play sports and I'm playing the piano," he says. "I would like to take up voice lessons. I played the guitar for a while. I would like to try writing maybe. I go through so many phases. I want to learn a little bit about everything."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

'A Chorus Line' will be playing until March 22

"A Chorus Line" is onstage through March 22 at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Kristine will be played by Jennifer Williams, Maggie by Terryl Dendy, Bebe by Maria Major, Connie by Judy Coleman, Mike by Tony Ferro, Al by Jerry Lopez, Bobby by Bob Fennell, Don by Mark Gard, Paul by Brian Taylor, Mark by Jeff Smith, Gregg by Wade Freeman and Richie by Rogers Tilley.

Theatre school planned

SANTA FE, N.M. — The British American Theatre Institute is now accepting applications for its residency this summer at the Greer Garson Theatre Center at the College of Santa Fe.

This is the fifth year that professionals from the great theaters of England will be brought here to teach for five weeks beginning June 30 and ending Aug. 1. In addition to their roles as teachers, the artists will be performing in Bati's summer theater program of Shakespeare's "Henry IV, Part I" and "His Infinite Variety", an original performance of selections from several Shakespeare plays on the themes of love and power.

"In recent years our school program has received international recognition for its high quality faculty and the standard of excellence maintained in the program," said a spokesman for the College of Santa Fe. "This year's curriculum has been streamlined to offer students a concentration in voice, movement and Shakespeare with minors in 19th and 20th century drama. Students may receive up to 9 college credits from the College of Santa Fe for more than 175 hours of class study."

The British American Theatre Institute's summer program is "unique" in the United States.

"Nowhere else can a student get training from the finest calibre British actors along with the opportunity to observe their intructors' rehearsals and public performances demonstrating their art," the spokesman said. "Students receive a sense of discipline, a breadth of training and a range of techniques to augment their American studies. At the same time they will find the conservatory intensely creative, highly informative and unquestionably a fun experience."

ODESSA — Entries for The Presidential Museum's second photography competition for regional photographers will be accepted beginning Monday.

With the Sesquicentennial celebration in mind, "Texas Symbols" is the theme for the 1986 competition. All work submitted must have name, address and phone number of the photographer securely attached to the back before the piece is delivered to the museum and must be ready for hanging with wire securely fixed to the back of each work. Color or black and white photographs are acceptable. An entry fee of $5 must accompany each photograph submitted.

The judge will award $150 for first place, $75 for second place and $50 for third place. The judge will also determine what will be hung in the exhibit. The museum reserves the right to refuse to include any work in the exhibition based on the recommendations of the judge. The judge's decision is final.

The exhibit will be on display in the John Ben Shepperd Gallery at the museum April 3-May 3.

'"night Mother" playing

Midland Community Theatre's production of Marsha Norman's brilliant drama "'night, Mother" opened Friday at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. The drama will be onstage in Mabee Foundation Theatre II through March 15.

Reservations may be made by calling MCT's box office 682-4111.

Ms. Norman created an off-Broadway sensation when her first play "Getting Out" opened. Shortly thereafter, "'night, Mother" opened to rave reviews at New York's Golden Theatre. There it played to enthusiastic audiences for over a year. Because of continued interest in ticket sales, the play then moved off-Broadway where it continued to thrill audiences.

"'night, Mother„ has given Ms. Norman much acclaim. Newsweek called her "...the biggest and rarest news in theatre." The Pulitzer Prize for 1983 and the 1983 Outer Critics' Circle Award were presented for the drama. Four Tony Award nominations were in order the same year.

The play opens with the daughter's simple revelation, "I'm going to kill myself." What follows is a compelling confrontation between the daughter, Jessie Cates, and her mother, Thelma.

Uniquely staged, the drama takes place in a single act. Clocks on the stage mark the passage of time and the effect is riveting. The audience is held spellbound as Jessie and Thelma expose the "ghosts" of their lifetime together.

What is Jessie's final decision? Can her mother reconcile her to life in a single evening? MCT's box office is accepting reservations now from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Artwork displayed at MCT

ACT IX and Midland Community Theatre are presenting the work of Midlander Cynthia Wolfe during the production of "A Chorus Line."

"Ms. Wolfe's paintings are the result of hours in the kitchen baking and decorating gingerbread cookies," says an ACT IX representative. "Wanting to preserve them, she came up with the idea of creating a painting.

"Each painting shows the whole process of her enjoyment in baking, decorating, and displaying the cookies. On a watercolor background, the cookies are painted in oils to give them a "frosting-like' appearance."

Ms. Wolfe also paints Indian corn, loves the festive colors of Mexican art and enjoys primitive molas depicting children.

"I love every minute that life has to offer and I hope when you look at my paintings they will stir up memories of something good baking in the oven, the gaiety of a party or a happy time in your life," says Ms. Wolfe.

Her work will be on display until March 22.

Drawings exhibited at MC

From Staff Reports

An exhibition of pencil drawings and stone lithographs by Annette Morris of Austin, plus photographs by William Wright of Abilene, opened this week at the Midland College McCormick Gallery. The show remains on display through March 26.

Miss Morris is a Texas native whose heritage is reflected in her nature drawings and stone lithographs. She received her bachelor of fine arts degree from the University of Texas at Austin and, while serving as art director and illustrator for the Texas Parks & Wildlife Magazine, won national awards for the magazine and for her drawings.

She formed her own graphics studio in 1979. Her works are in collections throughout the United State, Japan and Australia. During the past year, she participated in Midland's Septemberfest at the Museum of the Southwest and exhibited her works in more than 20 shows.

Wright is well-known for his sensitive photos of people from around the world, epecially his latest work from China. He helped organize a photographic exhibition in conjunction with the Texas Sesquicentennial. Photos by the selected photographers now are being published in book form.

Gallery hours are 1 to 5 p.m. Sundays, 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursdays, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Fridays, and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturdays. The gallery is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building and admission is free.

'Kiss Me Kate' at Globe

ODESSA — Cole Porter's hit musical "Kiss Me Kate," closes at 2:30 p.m. today at the Globe Theatre. The production is being produced by the Globe and the Odessa College Theatre Department for the Odessa Shakespeare Festival.

"Kiss Me Kate" is based loosely on Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew."

Like Shakespeare's comedy, "Kiss Me Kate" features the battle of the sexes. In this case, the combatants are the actor and actress starring in a musical version of "The Taming of the Shrew." The show plays out their battle both backstage and on stage.

First performed on Broadway on Dec. 30, 1948, "Kiss Me Kate" features such memorable Porter tunes as "Another Op'nin', Another Show," "Too Darn Hot," "Wunderbar," and "Brush Up Your Shakespeare." This is the second time the production has been produced at the Globe "Kiss Me Kate" was produced at the Globe by the Permian Playhouse in 1963 before the building was complete.

Admission is $7 for adults and $4 for students and senior citizens.

Other shows included in the Odessa Shakespeare Festival are "The Tempest," performed by Stephen F. Austin State University Thursday through March 8, and "A Midsummer Night's Dream," performed by North Texas State University March 13 through 15. For additional information, call the Globe Theatre, 1-332-1586.

'Grease' auditions slated

Auditions for the upcoming production of "Grease" will be held at 7:30 p.m. March 16 and March 17 on the main stage at Theatre Midland.

This production is the Act IX special project of the year and is scheduled to be presented at the Yucca Theatre May 9-June 7.

There are 17 speaking roles in the show and several back-up singing and dancing positions available. Scripts may be checked out from the Midland Community Theatre's business office.

The musical production will be directed by MCT associate director Michael Spicer and choreographed by Sharylynn Shaw.

The musical is about a high school reunion and involves a flash back to the days when the reunion graduates were in school.

The age range of the students is somewhere between 25-40. There are some roles however which can fall out of that range on either side. It is suggested by the director that the show has something for an actor of any age.

Chaps Center to host circus

The American Continental Circus will be at Midland College's Chaparral Center March 10 for one day only with shows at 4:30 and 8:00 p.m. The circus is being sponsored by the Fraternal Order of Eagles No. 2982.

New features include Wally Naughtins Bears, the world's largest collection of performing bears; and "Conga", a baby African elephant that plays the harmonica. Also included will be the American Continental Circus Elephants, the Casa Blanca Arabian Tumblers, and an international cast of clowns, aerialists, acrobats and animals.

'King of soaps' to return

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bill Hayes, once dubbed "king of the soaps," is returning to NBC's "Days of Our Lives" in his old role as Doug Williams.

Hayes, who with his wife, Susan Seaforth Hayes, quit the soap two years ago, will be back in April.

Suzanne Rogers and Robert Clary are also rejoining "Days of Our Lives," NBC's highest-rated daytime serial.

Hayes says he and his wife, who were known as the "king and queen of the soaps," left the soap because the writers were putting more and more emphasis on characters under 25. This, reportedly, has turned off some fans.

"It's my understanding that the show went too far with its younger story lines," says Hayes, who is 60.

Contacts can be important

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Marc Rocco, son of actor Alex Rocco, learned early that contacts are important in Hollywood.

When he was a 15-year-old production assistant on "The Stunt Man," he hung around director Richard Rush, picking up tips, and got chummy with co-star Steven Railsback.

Rocco, now 23, is due to direct his first feature, "Scenes From the Goldmine," for Air Age Productions.

Rush is the production executive and Railsback stars in the action picture about a rock band's climb to the top and the sharks patrolling the waters along the way.

Quilts displayed at museum

On display at the Museum of the Southwest through March 30 is "Contemporary Texas Quilts."

Featuring the work of Texas quilters, the exhibit is one of three the museum has planned for the sesquicentennial year. It is a part of Tex-Art/150, a statewide program of art exhibitions celebrating the 1986 sesquicentennial.

Curated by Acting Director Sue Devine, "Contemporary Texas Quilts" brings together quilts made in traditional patterns as well as those made with innovative designs and techniques.

"Today's quilters are drawing from the traditions of the past as well as creating new trends for the future. These quilts are particularly beautiful examples of the design and artistic talent of Texas Women," Ms. Devine said.

COLLEEN

"These boys just happened to grow up in a house where people were constantly holding scripts in their hands, and everyone who came in and out was speaking about different areas of the theater. They learned more than they knew they were learning just by growing up where everyone was reading, reading, reading.

"I certainly had no idea what I was getting into in life. I just wanted a job and wanted to act. My whole vision of the profession changed as I went along. I began to realize that there was much more to acting in terms of universality, of having something to do to have a reason for being.

"You live with the human condition — what you are trying to project is the human condition. The more you become a part of that condition, the more you project; and you never stop studying because every day what happens to you becomes a part of the whole."

She reflects, "It is a wonderful way of life. You never worry about losing time or wasting time. There is always something you are going to find that you are going to use.

"And there is a theater family. You move anywhere in any country and see a play. You go backstage and say, 'I'm Colleen Dewhurst, I'm an actress, and I'd love to speak to the actors to tell them how much I enjoyed...' It becomes a family, and you are never isolated to any specific peer group.

"Your friends and co-workers range in age from 18 to 80. The age difference that pigeon-holes people in most walks of life doesn't exist because on stage you are all so highly dependent on each other. The old and the young don't lose contact."

She had a new marvelous and horrendous theater experience a year or so ago when Ken Marsolais nudged her into directing her first play, "Ned and Jack," a play about two great friends — the actor John Barrymore and Ned Shelton, an influential Broadway producer of the '20s.

Marsolais was interested in producing the play. Ms. Dewhurst had been a strong bystander, but there was no theater available, and they were postponing production when the Henry Hudson suddenly called and said they could house it.

There were a few moments of discussion about directors. She kept saying no to each suggestion so Marsolais turned from the phone and said, "OK, you direct it."

"You have to be kidding!" she answered. He wasn't kidding, and she did direct. They rehearsed for three weeks, played for three weeks off Broadway to good reviews, then took it uptown and folded overnight.

"We watched that ship go down in 30 minutes with all hands on deck, and I didn't think I'd ever want to direct again ever."

"But since then," she continues, "I've thought, yes, I'd do it again. The trouble we're into on Broadway right now is that every producer is trying to pick a play that will be a 10.

"Twenty years ago, the other nine could have been done, but now, everyone is looking for that sure thing. 'Ned and Jack' could have been one of the nine, but it wasn't quite dangerous enough for the 10."

Ask Colleen Dewhurst if she would ever care to marry again, and she says "I suppose really Ken and I are married in a sense. I always used to ask why would I ever marry again. I have the children. I have the farm. What is the point in marrying? But my mother said, 'Never say never. You turn right around and do it, and that's embarrassing.'

"I feel that perhaps there might be a time when for your own reasons, you might want to make that further commitment." But she's not alone. Never alone. "I've always been lucky that there have been wonderful people in my life, and I've loved them and feel that I have made friends of those I've loved." The lady does live dangerously.

'Pretty in Pink' preview popular

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

Director John Hughes — the director of such successful youth-oriented films as "Sixteen Candles," "The Breakfast Club" and "Weird Science" — seems to know what teens want.

Last weekend's local preview showing of his new movie, the teen-age romantic comedy "Pretty in Pink," was awash with adolescents, predominantly female ones.

The high percentage of girls in the audience was pretty amazing since the overwhelming majority of teen films cater heavily to male adolescent fantasies.

Apparently, however, the star of "Pretty in Pink," Molly Ringwald, who was quite good in both "Sixteen Candles" and "The Breakfast Club," has won a loyal following of fans among teen girls.

Molly plays a young girl who is living with her divorced, unemployed father, played by scruffy-looking Harry Dean Stanton.

She attends a high school with a student population that seems to be just about evenly divided between affluent teens and kids, like Molly's character, from the proverbial wrong side of the tracks.

Molly spends the bulk of the movie agonizing over whether to go to the prom and, if so, who with.

"It's just a stupid tradition," she tells a friend.

"You could say that life is just a stupid tradition," the friend replies.

Obviously, this is not a plot conflict on a par with, say, "West Side Story."

Molly's confusion stems from the fact that she has two teen guys — one wealthy and the other not — fall head-over-heels in love with her.

Blaine drives a BMW and hangs around with guys who wear white linen "Miami Vice"-style jackets just so they can roll the sleeves up to their elbows. Duckie rides a beat-up bicycle and dresses like a member of the Stray Cats neo-rockabilly band.

Since we're living in a material world, it isn't hard to guess which one Molly prefers.

Hughes manages to stretch the entire movie over this thin frame. While the material may seem terribly meager to many adults, it was obvious from all the overheard conversation (teen girls are only slightly less noisy in movie theaters than teen guys) that most of the preview audience took all this very seriously.

The female audience members were constantly comparing notes: "Would you do that?" "Do you believe him?"

Their favorite adverb used when discussing the film seemed to be "so," as in: "That was so rude," "He's so cute," and, of course, the popular, "Oh, I'm so sure."

It was easy to tell when Hughes struck a nerve. During one emotional scene between Molly's character and her father, for example, there was a sudden outbreak of simultaneous sniffling throughout the theater.

The movie is rather slow for a youth-oriented film and, from an adult standpoint, isn't nearly as interesting as Hughes' best work, "The Breakfast Club."

Based on the preview audience, however, teens will probably find "Pretty in Pink" pretty good.

"Pretty in Pink," rated PG-13 for some strong language and sexual innuendo, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'The Hitcher' just a ride to nowhere

"My mother told me never to do this," C. Thomas Howell says with a grin as he picks up a hitchhiker early in the new thriller "The Hitcher."

Well, Mom was right. Dead right.

The hitchhiker Howell's character picks up turns out to be a psychotic mass murderer, played by Rutger Hauer (who also played the killer android in "Blade Runner").

"Stop me," Hauer whispers.

Howell spends the rest of the movie trying to do just that, with an extraordinary lack of success. For a good chunk of the movie, the poor kid seems utterly incapable of even finding a working telephone.

Most of Howell's troubles, though, are not his fault. After all, his adversary has got to be one of the most amazing killers of all times. Hauer's character is so efficient he makes Jack the Ripper look like an absolute underachiever.

The hitcher singlehandedly wipes out entire police stations with amazing speed and ease. At one point, he even brings down a police helicopter with a pistol (shooting casually from the window of a speeding pickup truck, no less!).

It would be terribly interesting to have the Hitcher, the Terminator and Rambo compete against one another to see who could slaughter the most people in a two-hour period. Unfortunately, such a contest would probably require depopulating an entire third-world nation.

Hauer somehow knows precisely where and when Howell will be at every given moment — and also always gets there first. This allows him to deftly pin his whole bloody one-man crime wave on the innocent Howell, leading to even more foul — and far-fetched — consequences.

The movie borrows liberally from "Duel," "The Sugarland Express," "The Getaway" and even a little bit from "Bonnie and Clyde," all of which are updated with 1980's Henry Lee Lucas touches.

The film is supposed to be set in West Texas, but close observers will quickly figure out that it was actually shot in Southern California. The desert terrain closely resembles that seen in the opening segments of HBO's similarly named cable television series "The Hitchhiker." This may not be entirely coincidental, since "The Hitcher" is also an HBO production.

To be fair, this fast-paced film does have great visual flair, a certain nihilist verve and some vaguely interesting existential overtones, but none of that can overcome the fact that it's almost totally unbelievable.

"The Hitcher" is literally a ride to nowhere.

"The Hitcher," rated R for a great deal of violence, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

'Kiss of Spider Women' subplots don't mesh

Old movies, homosexuality and South American politics are the unlikely elements combined in "Kiss of the Spider Woman."

The film is adapted from a novel by Argentine writer Manuel Puig, but looks more like it was adapted from a stageplay.

Almost all of the film is set in a cramped South American prison cell. Imprisoned in this cell are Raul Julia and William Hurt.

Julia plays a fervent revolutionary arrested and tortured for political subversion. He's given to saying things like, "What life offers you is the struggle!"

His unlikely cellmate is a homosexual, played by William Hurt, who was arrested for corrupting a minor. He lounges around the cell in feminine gowns and worries a lot about his mother.

To pass the time, Hurt paces the small, gray room describing in lengthy, dramatic detail an old film he once saw and loved.

"Kiss" slides into fantasy sequences — constituting a movie-within-a-movie — as Hurt describes his beloved film. The mini-movie even has its own cast, headed by actress Sonia Braga as a World War II-era French nightclub singer.

Julia's character is appalled when he realizes that the movie was, of all things, an anti-Semitic, pro-Nazi romance.

Hurt's flamboyant character — interested considerably more in style than substance — could care less about the politics involved in either the film or in his cellmate's life.

However, as time passes, Julia keeps listening to the movie and Hurt grows interested in his companion's struggles.

The interwoven movies are a fascinating conceit on the part of Brazilian director Hector Babenco, and the fantasy film helps alleviate the considerable claustrophobia that sets in during long scenes in the cell.

The two subplots don't mesh as well as one might like, though. The film also spends more time dwelling on Hurt's sexual orientation than on Julia's politics.

Hurt has been nominated for an Best Actor Academy Award for his performance. "Kiss" has also received Oscar nominations for best picture, best director and best screenplay adaptation.

Hurt's acting has been much-praised, but it may be too much of a good thing. He's so theatrically flamboyant that his mincing about tends to overshadow everything else in the film.

"Kiss of the Spider Woman" is a interesting, offbeat movie, but, in large part, whether a viewer likes it or not will simply depend on how he feels about Hurt's performance.

"Kiss of the Spider Woman," rated R for some violence, strong language and considerable sexual innuendo, is now showing at the North Park Cinemas.

Broccoli nutritional warehouse

By TED LARSEN
King Features Syndicate

Mark Twain said that cauliflower is nothing more than a cabbage with a college education; he could have written the very same characterization of broccoli. You see, no matter how much you disguise them with rich, green, velvety plumage, deep in the heart of those frail-looking shoots lies the soul of a rough and ready cabbage. Don't let appearances fool you; broccoli is a pretty tough customer.

Like all relatives in the cabbage clan, broccoli is a member of a remarkable plant species, "Brassica oleracea," which has its roots in the wild cabbage of the Mediterranean coast. Common to all of these plants are thick stalks and succulent leaves that can store water easily and weather the worst conditions, from desert heat to New England winters. If you've ever put out a late crop of broccoli, you've probably snipped your last harvest from under a blanket of early snow in December.

Membership in the family also allows broccoli to share some of cabbage's isothiocyanates, a shopping list of foul-smelling chemicals. Unlike onions, odoriferous at room temperature, cabbages don't come alive until cooking, when they give off plumes of hydrogen sulphide (the "stink" of rotten eggs), ammonia and methyl sulphide.

Unlike most vegetables, these strong flavors grow more intense, not weaker, with prolonged cooking. This explains why broccoli tastes best when cooked least.

The history of broccoli is also that of a survivor which won't quit. The vegetable was developed around Rome, the word from the Italian, "brocco," for "sprout." It worked its way from Naples to London about 1720, and by 1775 was growing in Williamsburg, Va. One colonial writer noted, "The stems will eat like asparagus and the heads like cauliflower," still rather accurate.

Broccoli flourished in home gardens until the turn of the 19th century, when for no clear reason its popularity vanished, except in the Italian community. In 1920 broccoli was reincarnated.

A group of enterprising Italian growers in California sent a few ice-packed crates to Boston. It was an immediate hit and broccoli's new fame rapidly spread nationwide. Even in the days before modern refrigerated produce shipping, broccoli proved it could travel well, out of season. As I said, a survivor.

Broccoli is a nutritional warehouse, filled with vitamins and minerals, but not calories. A cup of cooked broccoli has about 40 calories and is a good source of the following nutrients: fiber, vitamins A, B2, B6, pantothenic acid and C, phosphorus, potassium, calcium and iron.

Despite all these benefits, average Americans eat less than two pounds of broccoli a year, while wolfing down 120 pounds of potatoes. Maybe that will change in the future. Broccoli certainly can take the wait.

This unusual combination is a lovely contrast of flavors and textures that's very simple to make.

BROCCOLI SALAD

½ cup mayonnaise
1 tablespoon sugar
1 tablespoon cider vinegar
1 large broccoli head, trimmed and washed
1 medium onion
1 cup macadamia nuts, chopped
5 slices bacon, cooked and crumbled

Whisk together mayonnaise, sugar and vinegar. Coarsely chop broccoli. Finely chop onion. Add these to dressing mixture along with nuts. Mix until well coated. Refrigerate, covered, for at least 8 hours or ideally overnight. Stir occasionally. Before serving, garnish with bacon pieces.

Hints:

Try substituting honey for the sugar in the dressing.

If you are concerned about a budget, use 1 cup coarsely chopped walnuts.

This can be served as individual salads by placing scoops of the broccoli mixture on beds of lettuce. Garnish with additional nuts and bacon pieces.

This impressive recipe is perfect for a formal dinner. Despite its complexity, all of the flavors stand firmly on their own.

BROCCOLI PROVENCAL

1 large broccoli bunch, washed
¼ cup fresh lemon juice
2 tablespoons olive oil
5 fresh tomatoes, sliced
1 tablespoon parsley, chopped
½ teaspoon basil, dried
Sauce:
3 egg yolks
Salt, pepper
1 tablespoon white wine
1 tablespoon heavy cream
¼ cup unsalted butter, very cold
½ teaspoon parsley, chopped
½ teaspoon chives, chopped
½ teaspoon marjoram, chopped
Pinch thyme

Trim broccoli, leaving about 2 inches of stem. Steam for 10 minutes or until just tender. Sprinkle with lemon juice and reserve in a warm place. Heat olive oil in a saute pan and quickly cook the tomatoes on each side. Do not allow to become mushy. Put tomatoes on a serving plate and sprinkle with herbs. Reserve.

In the top of a double broiler mix together the egg yolks, salt and pepper, wine and cream. Bring water to a boil and reduce to a simmer. Cook egg mixture, whisking constantly until thickened.

Now whisk in cold butter, piece by piece, beating constantly. Finish sauce by whisking in herbs. Sauce can be kept over warm, not hot, water. To serve, place cooked broccoli over prepared tomato slices and top dish with sauce. Serve immediately.

Hints:

This recipe uses an egg-thickened sauce. It should never be allowed to cook at a high temperature because it can easily curdle. If this occurs, whisk in a little water and adjust seasonings.

Try this dish and cauliflower or a mixture of half broccoli, half cauliflower. Same directions apply.

White vermouth is my favorite substitute for white wine.

This creamy, cheesy combination makes a hearty supper or brunch dish. It also reheats very well, especially in a microwave oven.

BROCCOLI FLAN

1½ cups broccoli, chopped
1 tablespoon unsalted butter
½ cup onions, chopped
½ teaspoon garlic, minced
¼ cup mozzarella cheese, grated
¼ cup Parmesan cheese, grated
½ cup heavy cream
4 eggs
Salt, pepper

Preheat oven to 375F. Steam broccoli for 3-5 minutes or until cooked but still crunchy. Reserve. Melt butter in a saute pan and cook onions until golden. Add garlic and cook for another minute. Combine with the broccoli, cheeses, and cream. Beat the eggs well and add to the broccoli/cream mixture.

Pour into a well-buttered, 10" pie plate. Set in a larger pan and add water until it comes halfway up the side of the pie plate. Place in oven and bake for 10 minutes. Lower temperature to 350F and bake 45-50 minutes. Flan is done when cake-tester inserted into middle of dish comes out clean.

After removing from oven, allow to stand 20 minutes. To unmold, run knife under edge to loosen. Place larger plate over top of flan and turn both upside down. On counter, carefully remove pie plate. To serve, place another plate over flan and invert again. Flan can be cut into wedges for serving.

Hints:

This recipe works equally well with cauliflower. Follow same directions.

Experiment with different cheeses such as smoked gouda or cheddar.

To impart an interesting texture, add ¼ cup finely chopped water chestnuts to uncooked custard mixture.

'Outrage' deals with people taking law into their own hands

By VALERIE GRECO
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — "It's important to me that 'Outrage' not be an invitation for people to become vigilantes," states Beau Bridges, one of the stars of a TV-movie about a father who kills the confessed rapist and murderer of his daughter. "Outrage" will be seen tonight on CBS-TV stations.

Bridges acknowledges that the topic is an explosive one. He admits that if someone hurt his own family and confessed to the crime, "Goodness knows what I'd do if the justice system fell apart like it does in this movie and they couldn't get the guy."

Bridges stresses that he believes "where there are unjust laws protecting criminals that invite people to become vigilantes because the system fails to punish the criminal, the laws must be changed."

Playing the father's defense attorney was a challenge for Bridges, who often played the bad guy in the past. In addition, Bridges has been actively involved for several years with youth groups in Los Angeles. He says he tended to sympathize more with those who suffer from police harassment.

"Sometimes there's too much emphasis on law enforcement and not enough on making the quality of life better for young people. A lot of crimes are committed just as an expression of machoism and playing cops and robbers with real bullets."

Although Bridges has been the real-life victim of a robbery where a man was shot in the leg, the script of "Outrage" started him identifying more with the victims of crime.

"The role got me more in touch with the victims. It brought home to me what you read in the papers about people being victimized. To think of death, a life gone, touched me deeply."

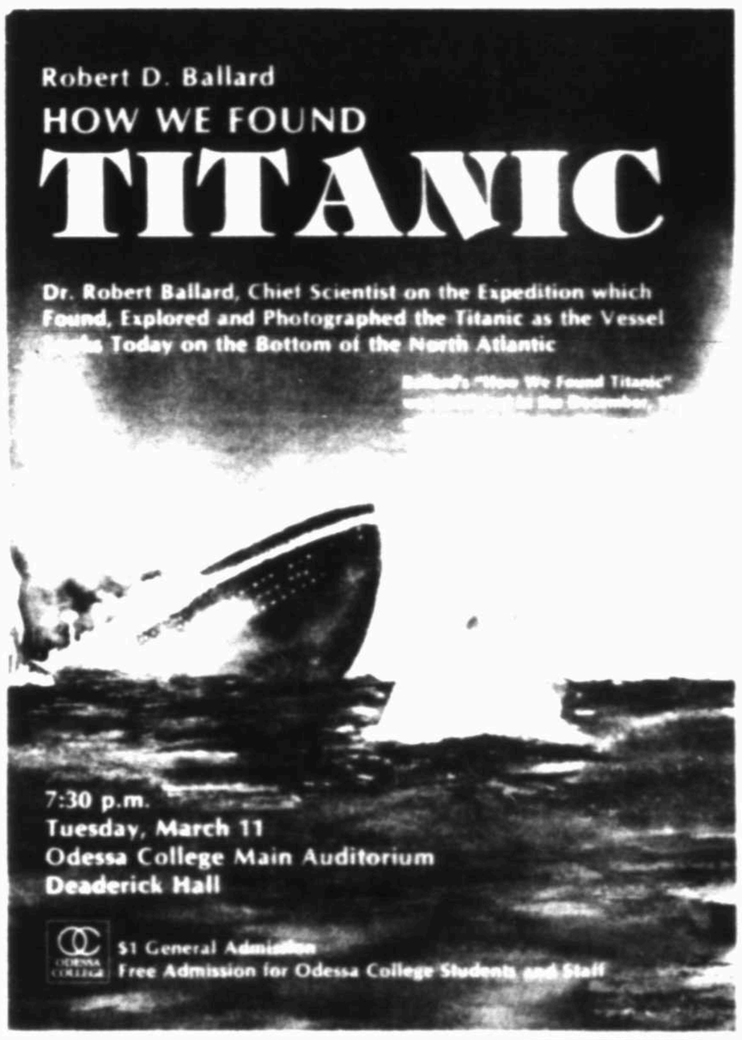

Aside from the philosophical challenge, Bridges also had the physical one of learning pages of legal dialogue.

"I'd been in criminal situations as an actor and been the bad guy on the witness stand in "Witness for the Prosecution" and heard Sir Ralph Richardson and other people doing the legal beagle stuff, but I'd never done it myself. You have to have not only the words, but the inflections correct."

Helping Bridges stay calm and sane during the filming were his costars Robert Preston, Burgess Meredith and Mel Ferrer.

"I'd worked with Bob before in 'Childs Play' and with Burgess on a 'Rawhide' episode years ago. Bob and Burgess are old friends of the family. I couldn't have done this movie without those guys being very supportive and sometimes loosening me up by teasing me and messing around, because it was a lot of pressure. They gave me some swift kicks and gave me a stroke every once in a while. I think they invested a lot more than just their roles to help me through this. It was like having a family there."

Bridges says his own family and especially his father, actor Lloyd Bridges are very much a part of his life. Married and with three sons, Bridges has been busy lately with several "Afterschool Specials" for ABC-TV, including the recent "Can a Guy Say No?" He's also done a videotape for A&M called "Creative Parenting." The tape features Bridges talking about the first 12 months of childhood.

Good teachers help build character

By SHIRLEY YASKIN

Since I can no longer read papers comfortably without holding them at arm's length, I just went shopping for glasses. I am convinced the optician cajoled me into purchasing an expensive pair of Christian Dior frames simply because he told me the others made me look too much like a teacher.

And what is a teacher supposed to look like?

I once asked my students to create a descriptive picture of a teacher. Invariably, teachers were portrayed as perennial wearers of chalk dust on their posteriors. One student described a teacher running to the bank with her first paycheck after taking an oath of poverty from the School of Education upon graduation. (Her mother is a teacher.)

I tease my students that all teachers retreat to the privacy of homes decorated in Early American, prelchabod Crane furnishings. We sit down to grade papers every night while wearing long-lasting night shirts, sipping tea, adjusting our glasses and cackling — hoping to ruin someone's grade-point average. Unfortunately, I think my students believe my description.

But beyond this stereotypical image of a teacher, there remains this question: What makes a good teacher? Opinions vary.

One principal told his faculty that he measured a good teacher by how neatly grade books are kept. Teachers, he said, should write in the same ink color, preferably black.

I guess I fail his test because I can never find the right pen at the right time.

Being a good teacher is the sum total of many intangibles, but I place importance on the ability to build character.

Instead of telling my students that grades will be based solely on tests, quizzes and homework assignments, I'll let them know that character will also be figured into the grade equation.

The whiz kids in my class, well-equipped with their fancy calculators and acrylic clipboards and armed with erasable pens and white-out, will certainly rebel against these grade requirements. How will they ever be able to factor in character to figure out their grade-point averages?

After all, this is the Me Generation and, according to rock star Madonna, we're living in a material world. I often wonder what today's teens are committed to. The biggest concern for some teens is what jeans to wear and where they are going to park in the overcrowded school parking lot.

Of course, there are those who do have a commitment. Betsy talked about joining the Peace Corps, although many of her friends had no idea what she was talking about.

David said he wanted to go the Naval Academy and serve his country; Steve asked him how much money he would be making. Jill wrote an editorial in the school newspaper chastising students for applying to what she calls the University of Prestige only to impress their friends.

And then there are those who rebel. Julie, against what she calls petty materialism, now shops at second-hand stores for her clothes and wears black nail polish and Daddy's ties in her dare-to-be-different campaign.

Finally, there's Barry. He told me he's going to join a service club this year to make his record look good for college. "You've got to play the game," he told me.

"I think I'll teach Robert Frost again this year. It's time we got this Me Generation on the road not taken, the road less traveled," I told him.

He looked at me with bewilderment.

"I don't mean which expressway to take on the way to corporate headquarters," I told him. "I'm talking about commitment."

We teachers have a lot of character-building to do. But first we must consider what to do to look stereotypically marvelous and pedagogically wonderful. What should we wear? A real smile, a sense of humor, a feeling of commitment.

Students learn science while inventing

BRYAN, Texas (AP) — At least a part of the nation's next generation of inventors may be a group of fifth-grade science students at Lamar Elementary School in Bryan.

About 115 Lamar science students entered the school's first Invention Convention recently with hopes of advancing to a national convention and possibly a patent.

Kathe Eugster, convention coordinator and a science teacher, said her and the other science teachers' motives were simple:

"We wanted to let them know that school is fun; and we wanted them to feel that in making inventions."

Ms. Eugster said the convention is an example of the kind of supplemental, learning activities that the 1984 education reforms encourage.

"It involves every subject — math, reading and art — not just science," she said.

Ms. Eugster said the five convention judges, which included Texas A&M University's patent administrator, Taylor Morgan, were all science professionals.

The prize for best invention went to John Bradford for his creation called Safety Suspenders. The suspenders were made with tiny, Christmas tree lights, but could be made with neon or amber reflector lights for use by nighttime bikers, joggers or walkers.

Bradford's suspenders were operated by a rechargeable battery that could be attached to a belt around a person's waist.

Bradford's prize will be sent to the Silver Burdett National Invention Convention in Morristown, N.J. The winner of that competition will advance to the National Science Fair Convention in March.

Ms. Eugster said before the students designed their inventions, they made sure each did not already exist.

"They also researched a famous inventor and they wrote a paper on the intent of their invention," she said.

The students started on their inventions in September and worked on the projects in class. Teachers made sure the projects were practically priced and safe.

"The inventions could have been an idea, an object or an improvement of something that all ready existed," she added.

Other prize winners included:

Second prize, Lisa Bingham for her Iron Cradle, a holder that prevents a hot iron from falling from an ironing board; third and fourth prize, Kristie Fritcher, the Traffic Light Reflector, and Tracy Pritchard, Who's Got What Game, a game that helps students learn about science.

Cited for having the best-of-homeroom inventions were: Dena Zubik, for the Tomato Guard; Nicole Stegall, the Sheet Guarder for waterbeds; Michael Hoeinghause, the Better Absorbing Paper Towel; Sara Hall, the Key Gripper, for people with arthritis.

Honorable mentions went to Rebekah Ledford, for the Velcro Stick, a contraption designed to pick up loose, lost cloth objects such as the sock that's caught under a king-sized bed; Stephanie Scarmado, for the Baby Sitter Blanket; Anju Tripathy, for How to Play Tennis on the Moon; Laurett McDaniel, for Dine-A-Desk; Bracken Kolle, the Convenient File; Todd Henderson, the Bird Trap; Megan Yandall, Do You Know Your Math; Allison Rundell, the Balloon Inflator; Leslie Atkinson, the Temperature Protector; and Jill Holste, the Pencil Callus Avoider.

Lawyer outlines struggle between evolution, creation

"Trial and Error: The American Controversy Over Creation and Evolution," by Edward J. Larson; Oxford University; $17.95; 222 pp.

A Review

By DAVID G. SAVAGE
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

The attorneys from New York had come to the small Southern city to do battle with Christian fundamentalists before a judge and the assembled media. The issue was evolution versus the Biblical story of creation, and specifically, whether the state could require the teaching of one version or the other to students in its public schools.

The time was December 1981. In one sense, little had changed since 1925 when the world had focused its attention on a similar trial in Dayton, Tenn. There, a high school teacher named John Scopes was tried and convicted of having taught evolution to his students in violation of state law.

But although the issue and the law were largely unchanged in the 1981 trial in Little Rock, Ark., public opinion had changed markedly. This time, it did not take Clarence Darrow ridiculing William Jennings Bryan to win the day for the evolution side. Instead, the state attorney general in Arkansas seemed faintly embarrassed to have to defend a state law that called for a balanced treatment in science classes between evolution and scientific creationism. A parade of scientists came forth to testify to the validity of evolution and to denounce creationism as religion, not science. Meanwhile, the state was hard pressed to find anyone of scientific repute to testify in behalf of the creation story. One expert for the state, British astrophysicist Chandra Wickramasinghe, said he doubted whether evolution could have occurred as widely believed, but then went on to suggest that life was seeded on Earth by comets.

Needless to say, Federal Judge William Overton struck down the Arkansas law, calling it an unconstitutional attempt to inject religion into the classroom. His opinion so thoroughly knocked down the pretense that creationism was scientific that the state decided against a further appeal.

In "Trial and Error," Edward J. Larson, an attorney and former committee counsel for the House of Representatives, presents a concise and clearly written history of the struggle between evolution and creationism. He points out that by the 1880s, the theory of evolution had become firmly entrenched in American school textbooks, less than three decades after Darwin published his "Origin of the Species."

However, after the cataclysm that was World War I, a fundamentalist movement emerged that gave new life to creationism. The 1920s saw the high point of legislative activity in behalf of creationism in the classroom. Although the famous "Monkey Trial" made a mockery of the creationism in many sectors of the nation, fundamentalist tide still ran strong in the rural South. Again in the 1970s, creationism emerged, although this time seeking only equal time or balanced treatment.

Larson, whose book benefits from his even-handed treatment of both sides, nevertheless ends with an oddly even-handed conclusion. "The controversy over evolutionary teaching is as lively today as ever," he writes. "Conviction on both sides of the controversy have been too strong to permit a compromise."

His account of the history suggests otherwise. A few creationists may still see this as a lively fight and will resist any compromise. But they have been waging a losing battle against science for centuries and expressions of faith, no matter how fervent, will not change that.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Monday, March 3, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: New and unexpected financial gains are possible in the year ahead. Teamwork can make things happen for you both emotionally and financially. Your exuberance for the tasks at hand wins admiration and support from those around you. A concentrated effort on one project at a time increases productivity and the bottom line. Your rare ability for analyzing people grants you the gift of many close and loving friends. Romance proves to be an exciting part of your year.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Beautiful legend Jean Harlow, golf's Julius Boras, singer Enzo Stuarti, football's Randy Gradishar, actresses Edna Best and Diana Barrymore.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): First-hand experience serves you well in handling a delicate situation or relationship. Someone from your past re-enters your romantic sphere!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The influences are positive today for trying something new. Be creative and take a chance! Diplomacy is the key to avoiding a possible disagreement with a member of the opposite sex.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An unpromising emotional situation may be affecting your productiveness at work. Perhaps a change is in order! Check all instructions with superiors before taking action.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your social interests could keep you from attending to important business matters. This situation requires more self-discipline. News received from afar may have romantic implications.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Despite a slow start things will be a bit hectic by noon. Your financial picture is more encouraging than in the recent past. Romance looks promising.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A great deal can be accomplished today as long as there are no interruptions. Seek assistance from your mate or associates regarding this matter. Unsettling news about a loved one may mar your evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Excellent time to utilize financial resources to tackle those much-needed home improvements. A real estate deal has possibilities of being completed. Tender, loving care may be the solution to a loved one's erratic behavior.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A travel timetable could confuse you. Do not forget important medical or dental appointments. Avoiding involvement in a dispute between friends is to your benefit. Romance seems uncertain.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): People who normally ignore you suddenly find you irresistible. You are attracted to someone who shares mutual interests. Be prompt on the job.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be patient; your working conditions will soon show signs of improvement. Finances get an unexpected boost. A difficult emotional problem needs attention.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone who has been pressuring you for an answer will not be as persistent. Give your intellectual curiosity a free rein. Your instincts will be right on the mark in both business and romance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Exert your influence to help a family member who is having trouble making a decision. Diplomacy is the best tactic in dealing with a difficult situation. Concentrate all your strength on a new enterprise.

GOREN BRIDGE

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—With both sides vulnerable, partner opened the bidding with one heart. I held:
♠Q63 ♡Q10542 ◇K73 ♣Q5

I chose to bid four hearts, a contract which had no play whatsoever. We ended up taking a minus score on a hand where the opponents could make nothing.

My partner was not thrilled by my response—he thought two hearts was adequate. I felt that I should preempt because of my five-card support for his suit.

Who was right?—B.B., Ridgefield, Conn.

A.—It is true that, when you have five-card support for partner's major suit, you lessen the defensive potential of his hand. However, that alone does not give you the right to jump to four hearts over his one heart opening bid.

One of the essential ingredients for a jump raise to game is an unbalanced hand. Ideally, you should not have too much in the way of defense.

The hand you submit is balanced—it contains no singleton or void and only one doubleton. In addition, its secondary honors could be more useful on defense than offense. You have a fine raise to two hearts, and that is the bid we would have made with your hand.

Q.—We had the following auction:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	Dble	1 NT	2 ♠
3 ♡	Dble

Is North's double for takeout, penalties, or is it optional?—J.P., Portsmouth, Maine.

A.—That's simple enough. With the first double, North asked his partner to name a suit. South did so, and he is relieved of any obligation to bid again unless his partner forces him to do so.

Even though North's second double was over the same suit that he doubled originally for takeout, it now becomes a penalty double. South has already named his suit, and North could have raised or shown a good hand with a good suit of his own by naming another strain.

Note that it would not be the case had South passed at his first turn. Now the double would still be for takeout, since South has not yet bid.

Book includes facts, statistics about typical Americans

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The typical American consumes eight cans of tuna annually. The average household spends $1,317 on fuel for the car. And today's males seem to be having more luck than females in holding down their weight.

Those are among the myriad statistics, essential and esoteric, compiled in the government's colossal compendium of information, The Statistical Abstract of the United States.

The 985-page 1986 edition was published last week, the 106th annual feeding for those who work with or just enjoy the numerical details of life in America.

The volume includes nearly 1,600 tables, including 102 new ones this year, and charts on dozens of social, political and economic subjects. New entries for 1986 include studies of the marital status of women, births by Caesarean section, health insurance coverage, micro-computer use in schools, adult leisure time, characteristics of college freshmen, union membership and frequency of seat belt usage.

Compiled by the Census Bureau from a variety of sources, the Government Printing Office sells about 36,000 of the books annnually at $27 for the hardbound, $22 for the more popular paperback.

In addition, all or parts of the abstract often are reprinted by private publishers, sometimes accompanied by additional information, and put on sale within a few months, the GPO said. Commercial firms can sometimes sell at lower prices because of higher volume publishing and inclusion of advertising in some volumes.

Anyone can legally reprint information from the abstract, since government publications cannot be copyrighted.

While magazines, stores and self-help groups offer continual aid in the battle of the bulge fought by many Americans, one table indicates that on average little has changed in recent years.

Men aged 18 to 24 weighed an average 165 pounds in the early 1970s, and dropped to 163 in this decade, the volume reports, while females in the same age group edged up from 132 pounds to 134.

In the 25 to 34 group men dropped from 176 to 173 while women went from 140 to 142 on average. For those aged 35 to 44 men held steady at 178, women at 148.

In the 45 to 54 age group, men increased from 175 to 178 and those 55 to 64 went from an average of 171 to 174 over the decade. Women in both age groups increased from 149 to 150 pounds, on average.

Some weight-loss programs stress seafood as a healthy source of protein. That may be a reason why per capita seafood consumption climbed to a record 13.6 pounds in 1984. That included 3.2 pounds of tuna — about eight 6.5-ounce cans. While overall seafood eating was a record, tuna peaked in 1978 and 1979 at 3.3 pounds per American.

Trips to the grocery store for those cans may help contribute to the reported annual spending for motor fuel, which was highest in the South at $1,385 per person, and lowest in the Northeast at $1,254.

Other facts of American life in the new abstract included:

- Flower gardening tops the list of favorite leisure time activities, named by 47 percent of people aged 18 and over. It was followed by swimming, 41 percent, and vegetable gardening, 40 percent.
- Some 15 percent of Americans lack health insurance. Eighty-six percent of women and 84 percent of men have some sort of health insurance, most obtaining coverage through their employers.
- Seat belts are always used by 17.3 percent of women, compared with 17.1 percent of males.
- Life expectancy for newborns is 74.7 years. But people who have already made it to 75 can look forward to another 11 years of life.
- There are 1,027,700 Americans in hospitals on a typical day, down from 1,401,900 in 1960.
- Women outnumnber men among college freshmen 52 percent to 48 percent, just the reverse of the count in 1975.
- Food companies were the biggest spenders on network television advertising in 1984 at $1.4 billion. Makers of toiletries were second, followed by the automobile business and medication manufacturers.

Dog from 'Down and Out' has left his paw print on Hollywood

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mike the dog, whose reviews have matched those of the humans in the hit comedy "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," has left his mark on Hollywood — by pressing his paws into wet cement.

The border collie stepped from an air-conditioned Cadillac limousine to meet his public and press his front paws squarely into the wet cement at the Tail O' the Pup hot dog restaurant.

In the receiving line was a bull terrier named Sparky, wearing a bow tie; Benji, in an orange director's chair and Lassie VII — whose namesake put paw prints in Mann's Chinese Theater cement back when it was Grauman's.

After Mike's owner-trainer, Clint Rowe, scratched a message into the square, Mike climbed back into the limo and headed to Rodeo Drive for a TV show.

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — When the flashing lights went off, Lawrence Shingle thought he'd won another bag of popcorn or a juice bar from Disneyland. Instead he got a 1986 Pontiac Firebird — his second car from the folks at Disney.

Shingle, 26, who said he goes to the amusement park nearly every day, won a 1985 Buick Century in August for being the 30,000th visitor of 1986 — the 30th anniversary of Disneyland. This year, the park is giving away a car a day.

Shingle, a department store appliance salesman who won his second car last week, said he sold last year's prize and bought a sportier model.

"Nobody needs two cars," he said Monday. "I don't know what I'm going to do with this one.'

Shingle lives a mile from the park. He said he spends 30 minutes of every lunch hour at Disneyland, and recently spent a two-week vacation there.

"My friends think I'm stupid," he said. "I take a lot of razzing for going every day. They think I should be Mickeyed out."

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Mayor Mike Roark says he is leaving the fate of his face up to the public.

Roark stopped shaving in December, and has been getting a lot of grief about the beard, according to assistant Ed Esposito.

So, the two men decided to conduct a telephone survey to determine whether the mayor should whisk off his whiskers, Esposito said. Roark announced last week that he would shave March 17 — St. Patrick's Day — if callers say they hate the hair.

As of last weekday, the mayor's office had received about 45 calls in favor of the beard and 80 calls against, Esposito said.

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Santa Fe is known as the City Different, and different is not unusual here.

In its calendar of events, the College of Santa Fe notes that on March 29, "Dylan Thomas will read his poetry in the Greer Garson Theater."

The Welsh poet died in 1953.
