War update

■ Twenty-five days of round-the-clock bombings have reportedly wrecked much of modern Iraq's pride: roads, bridges, power stations, refineries, communications and waterworks. With shortages acute, Iraqis heard President Saddam Hussein urge them Sunday night to be patient and steadfast and victory would be theirs.

■ Its instant communications a shambles, Iraq's central command spends a full day to get word to the front lines.

■ Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, en route from the gulf to report to President Bush, seems to agree with field commanders that three or four more weeks of air attacks are needed before Bush can order an "Air-Land Battle" to begin.

■ Allied losses: Troops — The U.S. Central Command in Riyadh gave no new tallies.

Aircraft — The briefer in Riyadh reported the loss of a Marine Corps Harrier jump jet over Kuwait and said the pilot was missing. This increased the number of American aircraft shot down to 18. The coalition partners have lost 7, for a total of 25.

The officially acknowledged losses do not include aircraft crashes on support missions, on training flights or in other non-combat incidents.

■ Iraqi Forces: Troops — Forty-two more Iraqi soldiers were reported to have crossed lines, pushing the total of war prisoners toward 1,000.

Speaking Out on the Gulf War

"If they resort to a chemical or biological type of warfare, that opens up a lot of possibilities to us. Hopefully, it won't come to that, but if it's going to minimize our casualties, I think that's a No. 1 consideration.

Cheney, Powell return to brief Bush; U.S. weighs attack timing

SHANNON, Ireland (NYT) — After a weekend of listening to the strategic advice of American field commanders in Saudi Arabia, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney flew back to Washington on Sunday for meetings with President Bush on the next steps the United States and its allies should take in the Persian Gulf war.

Cheney, who was accompanied by Gen. Colin L. Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said the United States still needed to continue its bombing campaign before a ground attack might be opened against Iraqi forces occupying Kuwait.

"I think there is still a lot of potential out there," the secretary said, referring to the air strikes.

But he steadfastly declined to confirm a report that senior American officers had recommended that the allied air campaign against President Saddam Hussein's forces continue for at least three weeks before a ground offensive was undertaken.

Cheney's comments, made to reporters en

■ Allied air onslaught destroys roads, bridges, refineries, power stations, telecommunications.

AMMAN, Jordan — Faced with the systematic destruction of his country's major public works and other installations, yet displaying little readiness for peace, Iraqi President Saddam Hussein urged his compatriots Sunday night to practice "patience and steadfastness" and assured them Iraq would win the Persian Gulf war.

In his first public speech in weeks, Saddam said, "With each passing hour and each passing day, the Iraqi people are strengthening their convictions."

The statements seem to ignore persuasive evidence that the allied air onslaught on Iraq has destroyed not only military targets but also the modern complex of roads, bridges, refineries, electric power stations and telecommunications that once formed part of Iraq's pride and self-image.

As a result, according to travelers and news reports, dispirited Iraqis are scrounging for scarce fuel in Baghdad and Kuwait and improvising in their daily lives as they wrestle with an existence bereft of electrical appliances, gasoline and regular water supplies.

Trade pact provokes criticism

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm says a free trade agreement with Mexico will turn impoverished border communities into prospering, bustling hubs of commerce.

But Sen. Dennis DeConcini says he's afraid an increase in trade could bring more people and pollution to a region where raw sewage is dumped into precious water supplies and residents cope with diseases more common in the Third World than the United States.

"We just cannot afford to do anything that would magnify the bad environment that's on the border already," says DeConcini, D-Ariz. "I don't believe you could get an agreement without the environment playing a major role."

But Mexico's commerce secretary, Jaime Serra Puche, said last

Arizona 'sting' nets legislators

PHOENIX, Ariz. — "Are you sure there are no hidden cameras up there?" joked state Sen. Don Kenney moments before accepting what police say was a $55,000 bribe and zipping it into a gym bag.

"Wave to the cameras," replied a smooth-talking, chain-smoking man who called himself J. Anthony Vincent and said he was a casino operator out to trade money for votes to legalize gambling in the state.

There was indeed a hidden camera, and "Mr. Vincent" was in fact a convicted con man, working for police in a 16-month operation that resulted in the indictments during

A year later, Panama tries to assert itself

N.Y. Times News Service

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Thirteen months after the United States invaded Panama and arrested Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, most of the problems that have plagued the nation for years remain. Panama is still searching for its own identity and seems linked more than ever to Washington.

The economy here has rebounded and political freedoms have expanded since Noriega's ouster, arrest, and extradition to Florida to face trial on drug trafficking charges.

But cocaine continues to be smuggled through Panama on its way to the United States and other destinations. Popular support for the government has weakened, as have the cheers for the American invasion. And President Guillermo Endara, who was installed by Washington on the day of the invasion, remains highly dependent on the 10,000 American troops in the country, relying on them, as he did two months ago, to thwart attempts by some in the security forces to retake power.

Panamanian officials say they want to assert an independent identity, but their failure to construct an effective and popular government appears to insure that Washington will not be able to withdraw the shadow it casts over this small nation of 2.3 million people any time soon.

"No matter how good the invasion was for us, it was a trauma we can't shake," said Roberto Troncoso, president of the Panamanian Committee for Human Rights. "The United States overthrew the generals they tolerated for so many years, but this government hasn't been able to put the word 'democracy' back in our dictionary."

With its many glistening shopping centers, banks, high-rise condominiums, and Dairy Queen drive-ins, Panama City could be a city in Florida. The resemblance is more than cosmetic.

14 vets listed as dead on memorial are alive

By Michael J. Sniffen
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Fourteen Americans can visit the Vietnam Veterans Memorial and find their names carved in black granite among those who died in the war.

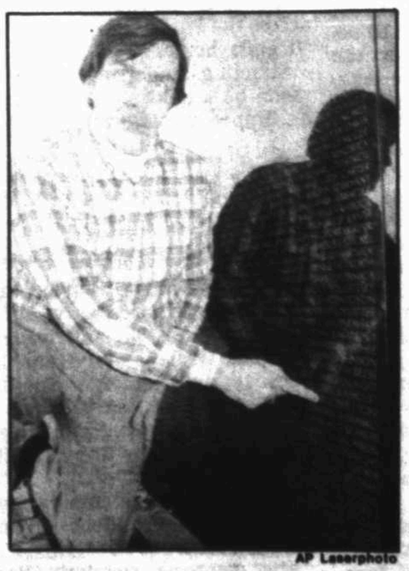

"It was kind of scary," said Eugene J. Toni, who lost part of both legs in Vietnam. "It's like seeing your name on a gravestone."

Toni's name is there because a government clerk typed a wrong number into a computer. All 14 computer records have been corrected, but the names can never be erased from the polished granite.

"It's a very sobering thing," said former Spec. 4 Andrew J. Hilden, who found his name in 1987. "But I guess we have been able to laugh about it — that we've got a walking dead man around."

There are 58,175 names of dead and missing carved on the V-shaped wall. The fact that it lists 14 living Army veterans as dead

War rages, money's tight — party goes on

NEW ORLEANS — The bawdy, boozy party called Mardi Gras hits the streets this week only slightly tempered by war and recession.

Hotels around New Orleans reported bookings of 91 percent, down from 97 percent occupancy last year, for the final four days of Carnival, which ends with the big Mardi Gras bash Tuesday. Carnival formally begins Jan. 6.

The Persian Gulf War initially looked as if it would really hurt Mardi Gras, said University of New Orleans economist James McLain.

"People were worried that maybe they shouldn't celebrate while Americans were being shot at," he said. "People were afraid of terrorism.

"But now maybe they want to get away from the constant war reports and they've realized that Scud missiles don't come this far."

This year's celebration may not match last year's when $480 million was spent around New Orleans and

REELS: Peace initiative makes little progress

(From 1A)

Saddam's 20-minute speech on Baghdad radio coincided with an assessment by neighboring Iran that its peace initative had not made much progress.

Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati, interviewed in Belgrade by Cable News Network, said Iraq's response to his government's as-yet unpublished proposals was "not on the same level as we had expected" and the initative needed "more time and more effort."

Iraq has sent conflicting signals about its diplomatic intentions, with one high official, Deputy Prime Minister Saddun Hammadi, telling reporters in Amman on Sunday that his country was ready for a cease-fire and a negotiated settlement, although on terms that would most likely be unacceptable to the United States.

Baghdad radio, by contrast, broadcast a commentary from the Defense Ministry newspaper, Al Qadissiya, saying, "The decision in Iraq to fight the aggressors and bury their evil designs is irrevocable."

Some Iraqi citizens have taken their unhappiness to the extreme of scrawling graffiti criticizing Saddam — a hazardous venture in a land where criticism of the president is punishable by death.

The slogans, saying "Down with Saddam," were not widespread and were quickly painted over, according to Western reporters recently in Baghdad. But they would have been unthinkable in prewar Iraq, dominated by Saddam's pervasive security agencies.

"A lot of people are suffering stoically," said a reporter who asked not to be further identified. "They are becoming indifferent to all the propaganda on Baghdad radio. What is remarkable is that very few people seem to be rallying 'round the flag. Saddam is no Churchill."

In his speech Sunday night, however, Saddam seemed to be seeking to rally his people to him as the impact of the war deepens and Iraqis prepare for greater deprivation in a possible ground war to evict Baghdad's forces from Kuwait.

It was the first time his words had been broadcast since an interview two weeks ago with Peter Arnett of CNN. Since the war started, Saddam has rarely been seen or heard by most Iraqis.

"All the good people will be as victorious as Iraq," he declared Sunday night, "and victory will restore to the Iraqis all the requirements for a free and honorable living that they will merit for patience and steadfastness.

"Each hour and day they become more firm in what they believe," he went on. "Iraq is not ready to relinquish the role given to it by its God."

The official Iraqi News Agency sent excerpts from the speech to Western news agencies in Cyprus.

Earlier, Tehran radio quoted Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani as expressing annoyance with Iraq for invading Kuwait and castigating the United States for resorting to military operations.

Velayati said Saddam, in his most recent message to Iran about peace efforts, had not completely ruled out negotiation.

"What we could understand from the message of Saddam was they don't rule out a peaceful settlement," Velayati said, "but if the other side insists on war as the only solution to this crisis, they are determined to continue the fight."

Hammadi, who took the Iraqi message to Tehran on Sunday, then flew to Amman to meet King Hussein of Jordan.

RETURN: Timing of ground war focus of talks

(From 1A)

route to Washington, reinforced the idea that an allied land attack against Iraqi forces, while virtually inevitable, was not imminent.

The timing of an expected ground offensive was the focus of discussion on Saturday by Cheney, Powell, and senior American officers who command the forces in the gulf.

A senior military official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, said after that session that top military officers in Saudi Arabia generally favored a sustained period of bombardment that could run to three weeks or more before a ground attack was begun.

The exact length of the bombing campaign would vary, depending on weather, the military effectiveness of the raids, and Iraq's response.

Cheney, who is to meet with Bush on Monday to review the progress of the military campaign, declined to comment on the recommendations of the military leaders in Saudi Arabia or to suggest a date when the United States might begin a ground campaign.

He said a decision on a land campaign would be made by the president in consultation with King Fahd of Saudi Arabia and other allied leaders. But in his remarks at a news conference in Riyadh early on Sunday and in an interview with reporters on his airplane, Cheney left two impressions.

One clear message was that a land campaign was needed to induce Iraqi troops to move out of their defensive positions so they could be more easily struck.

And Cheney also implied that an additional period of sustained bombing and air attacks was needed before a ground attack could begin.

Asked en route to Washington if the use of air power as the sole military force against Iraqi troops was reaching a point of diminishing returns, Cheney said air power still had unexploited potential.

PANAMA: Endara concedes a weak democracy

(From 1A)

In its essential political character, Panama has not changed since President Theodore Roosevelt, seeking a subservient country in which to dig a transoceanic canal, encouraged the rebellion that separated the isthmus from Colombia. Just as the first president of Panama was installed by United States forces, so was Endara. Panama's unit of currency remains the United States dollar.

Endara conceded that democracy in Panama is weak, but said it is "getting stronger by the day." He said it would be more stable if the $461 million aid program from the United States had only come through faster to "jump start" the economy.

Even while the Endara government affirms its dependency, it must assert its autonomy to obtain popular support.

In this vein, as the United States demands tougher enforcement against drugs and money-laundering, Panama officials say such demands are intrusions on their sovereignty.

Sniping between Panama City and Washington has risen to the point that Foreign Minister Julio Linares and the United States ambassador, Deane Hinton, engaged in a public shouting match over a proposed money-laundering enforcement agreement at a recent party at the Vatican embassy.

Washington has frozen $84 million in aid for agriculture, education, and health until Panama agrees to open Panamanian bank accounts to United States officials investigating money-laundering, much of it related to drug trafficking. Endara says he has no problem with provisions of the Mutual Legal Assistance Agreement to fight money-laundering, but says provisions to combat insider trading and tax evasion offend his nation's sovereignty.

Two United States officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said they believe some Panamanian authorities are covering for some of the banks. They noted that several senior officials have served as directors and lawyers for banks allegedly involved in past money-laundering. Senior government officials denied that they or others in responsible public positions had ever been involved inthe practice.

More friction has been caused by Panama's refusal to sign an agreement providing joint naval patrols to stop drug trafficking.

IMPACT: Environmental issues won't be on table

week that environmental issues would not be on the table when Mexico and the United States negotiate an agreement to eliminate tariffs and other trade restraints. He and U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills said environmental questions can be addressed outside the free trade negotiations.

While border states like Texas and Arizona are the gateways to economic opportunities south of the border, their border cities will feel the effects of the increase in trade in a number of conflicting ways, with the net effect ambiguous, according to the International Trade Commission.

"An FTA could threaten the availability of already scarce water resources along the Texas border and further exacerbate a growing water quality problem in the entire Rio Grande River Basin," the ITC study said.

The increase in trade will also raise the demand for transportation and warehousing services on the border, and place additional pressure on already strained transport and entry facilities, the study said.

The AFL-CIO, which opposes the FTA, believes an agreement would result in lower wages for workers on the U.S. side of the border and increased environmental and health problems.

But Gramm, R-Texas, said he believes that the prosperity that comes with an increase in trade will provide the revenue to address pollution problems.

"The thing that's causing pollution is poverty. The reason the Rio Grande is the most polluted river in North America is because the Mexicans are dumping raw sewage into it," Gramm said.

"One of the big advantages of a free trade agreement will be that as Mexico grows and prospers, they will have the capacity to institute clean air and clean water provisions. Free trade will help the environment, not hurt it."

But past experience suggests the opposite is the case, said Mark Anderson, international economist at the 14.2 million-member AFL-CIO.

ALIVE: 'It's like seeing your name on a gravestone'

(From 1A)

was buried in computerized Defense Department records at the National Archives. Only three of those errors have been publicly acknowledged before — four years ago.

Four of the 14 were located by The Associated Press.

Toni's journey to the wall began on an October morning in 1970 when he tripped a land mine on a reconnaissance patrol for the 101st Airborne in mountainous jungle west of Hue.

Twenty years later, the 41-year-old former Army sergeant said: "I woke up one day and decided I didn't want to be a double amputee any more ... I felt like a prisoner who wasn't getting any time off for good behavior."

He sought treatment for post-traumatic stress syndrome and "part of the treatment was that I went down to the wall" — just across the Potomac River from his Virginia home.

Standing under a nearly full moon on a mild night last March, he flipped through the paperback directory of names on the wall, looking for friends. He turned to the T's in a long-shot search for an uncle he never met.

Instead, he found his own name.

He and his wife, Nancy, walked down to panel W7, counted to line 121.

"I showed her the name and then we both looked at each other like we couldn't believe it."

Three years earlier in Cambridge, Minn., Andrew Hilden and his wife, Shirley, visited one of the two half-scale touring replicas of the wall.

"I spotted the name," Shirley said in an interview. "I shouted, 'Your name's on the wall!' and everybody looked. He just couldn't believe it."

Former Pfc. Willard D. Craig got a call from his aunt in 1985 when her daughter found his name.

"It was weird," he said. "You can imagine how I felt when my aunt calls and tells me I'm supposed to be dead."

And former Pfc. Darrall E. Lausch heard in 1987 when a relative told his wife that his name was on a list of Michigan war dead in the Detroit News.

When Toni made his discovery, he told only his psychiatrist and priest, swearing them to secrecy.

"It was like a secret treasure that I knew and no one else did," he said. "I was afraid they were going to take my name off."

Toni, a Navy purchasing manager, later demanded an explanation.

"Somebody made a keypunch error transcribing the Army database," he said. "Instead of '21,' someone hit a '51'," the code for killed.

Sherry Lawrence of the Army Personnel Command agreed that many of the errors appear to be typing mistakes.

The names were compiled by government clerks hired by the private Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund, which paid for the wall and helps maintain it.

Jan Scruggs, head of the fund, said they tried to reconcile death records from each branch of the military, the central Defense Department files and the military records center in St. Louis.

"It's 99.9 percent accurate," Scruggs said.

The mistakes apparently didn't permeate every government computer — those disabled did receive benefit payments.

As it learns of the errors, the government removes the names of the living from the alphabetical directories that visitors use to search the panels, which are arranged by date of casualty.

The only way a name could be removed from the wall is if a panel cracks and is replaced. National Park Service supervisor Arnold Goldstein said the fund had purchased some blank granite slabs and that errors could be removed if a panel had to be re-engraved.

Willard Craig of Walkersville, W.Va., said he never tried to get the mistake fixed because he assumed "it was different people with the same name."

When told the directory had listed his death on the same date that bullets severed an artery and a nerve in his right leg, he replied: "That was an unlucky day for me, but not that unlucky."

STING: Probe raises strain

(From 1A)

the past few days of seven state legislators and 11 other people. More indictments are expected.

Nervous jokes about hidden cameras are a theme running through nearly 500 hours of police videotape, portions of which have been broadcast nightly on television.

The public display of legislators and lobbyists accepting wads of money comes three years after the impeachment of Gov. Evan Mecham on corruption charges and while an ethics investigation of both of Arizona's U.S. senators is still fresh in the minds of the people.

One of those indicted in the operation carried out by the Phoenix Police Department and the Maricopa County Attorney's Office, a lobbyist named Rich Schefel, pleaded guilty to conspiring to bribe legislators. Others have declined public comment or have complained about entrapment and reminded the public they are innocent until proven guilty.

The widening scandal, in which one legislator after another can be seen on videotape exchanging pleasantries while pocketing what police say was thousands of dollars, has paralyzed the state Legislature and raised calls for political reforms, including changes in campaign finance laws and an increase in the salary of state legislators, now just $15,000.

The legislators who have been implicated have relinquished or been asked to give up any leadership posts they hold. Political analysts say internal ethics proceedings could result in the removal from the Legislature of more members than are actually indicted.

The scandal has raised a host of issues, including the concern that the more than $380,000 used by police as bribes went to support the election campaigns of some legislators and possibly affected the outcome of the races.

But the most damaging effect could be a lasting disillusionment that has grown out of the nightly broadcasts of the videotapes. The taped conversations are filled with easy talk about money laundering, blackmail and bribery and a cynicism about public life that seems to accept shady back-room deals as a way of doing business.

Most of the legislators are shown in police transcripts of the tapes to have paid several visits and received repeated payments from the con man, whose real name is Joseph C. Stedino. "What do you need?" he sometimes asked them, or, "What can I do for you?"

One after another, the transcripts show them confiding their political fears and private ambitions.

PARTY: Mardi Gras to hit the streets produced $54.4 million in local and state taxes, promoters say. But no major drop-off was anticipated.

(From 1A)

Mardi Gras, French for Fat Tuesday, ends midnight Tuesday, when Ash Wednesday ushers in six weeks of Lenten repentance to this predominantly Roman Catholic city.

"The tourists are coming," said Stuart Barash, president of Travel New Orleans.

His company regularly books more than 2,000 hotel rooms for Carnival and will fill them again this year, he said.

"We may have three or four cancellations normally," Barash said. "This year we had about a dozen. Some have said they were concerned about their safety, some said they don't feel it's right to be partying while the war is going on."

About 91 percent of the 25,500 hotel rooms in the New Orleans area were booked for the weekend, said Michael Tourniaire, president of the Greater New Orleans Hotel and Motel Association.

French Quarter hotels, like the Royal Sonesta, where rooms start at $120 a night with a four-day minimum, were booked solid.

More than a million visitors showed up last year. Attendance at the nation's biggest free party could drop slightly, though projections say by no more than 10 percent, said Tim Ryan, director of the University of New Orleans division of business research.

"Certainly if you've lost your job, or are afraid you will, you wouldn't spend the money to come to Mardi Gras," Ryan said. "The economy has not become so bad that most people are dropping all trips, however. The effect of the war has diminished. People are not going to remain frightened forever."

Allied bombs severely disrupt Iraq's communications

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia (NYT) — The allies in the Persian Gulf believe that they have so severely disrupted Iraqi communications that it takes 24 hours for President Saddam Hussein to get a message to the front by reasonably secure means, American intelligence officers said on Sunday.

"They have backup networks we haven't been able to destroy," one officer said, "but they're pretty primitive. So they have two choices: Either they take the chance that we'll monitor their traffic, or they use safer but very slow methods to get the word from Baghdad to their people in the field. Once the land battle starts, that won't be nearly good enough."

Airplanes with electronic eavesdropping equipment, like AC-130s, are used to listen in on unprotected enemy transmissions, as are certain spy satellites, including three known as Keyholes and one called Magnum.

Speaking to his people for the first time in more than a week, Saddam remained defiant.

He said on the Baghdad radio, monitored here, that Iraq, which he called the leading Islamic nation, would inevitably prevail, but he warned Iraqis that they must continue to be patient. Beyond that, the speech was short on military substance and long on exhortation.

Damage wrought on communications also is believed to have crippled Iraq's anti-aircraft defenses, making coordination impossible, the intelligence officers said. Despite the huge number of combat missions flown by allied pilots — more than 30,000 in less than a month — only 33 allied planes have been shot down by Iraqi gunners, a rate far below that predicted by American experts.

Until Saturday, no American plane had been shot down in over a week. But then a Marine Corps AV-8 Harrier jump-jet, operating over southern Kuwait, was lost to ground fire, and on Sunday an American military spokesman reported the pilot as missing.

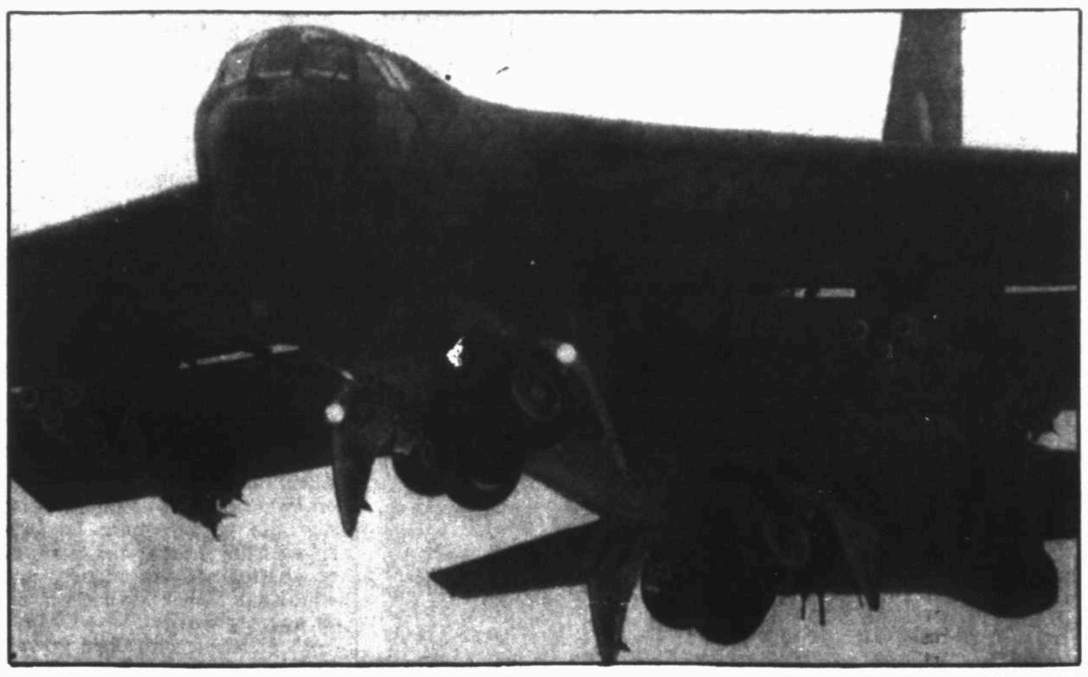

The spokesman, Brig. Gen. Richard I. Neal of the Marine Corps, said at the daily military briefing in Riyadh, the Saudi capital, that 505,000 American military personnel were now in the region. He indicated, for the first time, that present plans called for no further buildup in American troop strength. But some units are still on their way to their combat positions.

As Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and Gen. Colin L. Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, travelled back to Washington from their two-day visit to Saudi Arabia, allied warplanes had one of their busiest days of the war.

Wave after wave of fighters and attack aircraft roared off runways all over the region, logging a near-record 2,800 missions in a single day as the heavy cloud cover that has plagued pilots broke in several places.

About 650 missions were flown against Iraqi troop emplacements, part of a campaign to wear down their numbers and fighting ability. Cheney said of them on Sunday: "I don't think it's the world's fourth-largest army any longer."

Among the other targets, reports from Baghdad indicated, were several government departments, including the Ministry of Industry and Military Industrialization. Two major bridges over the Tigris River were also hit.

Battlefield veteran wants to serve in Persian Gulf

The retired Army medic, physician assistant, counselor of veterans and one-time politician is back in the military, ready to save wounded soldiers in the battlefields of the Persian Gulf War.

"I volunteered for it. I feel very strongly that they need experienced people. They need people who have been in combat before," Rocco said. "Believe it or not, there are a lot of retirees that want to go."

After hearing on television that the military was calling up former physician assistants, 52-year-old Rocco volunteered. Last month he headed to San Antonio and Fort Sam Houston to start getting recertified.

"I had never even given thought (to) coming back to the service," the chief warrant officer said. "I guess it's destiny."

After 22 years in the Army, Rocco left in 1978 but remained involved with veterans by heading counseling programs and becoming director of New Mexico's Veterans Affairs Department.

Cheney, Powell join bomb graffiti writers

By Charles J. Lewis
Hearst News Service

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and Gen. Colin Powell on Sunday joined the long list of U.S. military personnel here who have jotted personal insults to Iraqi strongman Saddam Hussein on bombs and missiles destined for Iraqi targets.

Winding up their two-day visit to Saudi Arabia to assess when to start a U.S.-led ground war, Cheney and Powell — the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff — stopped at the Air Force's headquarters for the F-117 Stealth fighter-bomber and put their autographs on a bomb.

■ Gulf notebook

Using a black felt-tip marker, Cheney wrote: "For Saddam, with affection. Dick Cheney. Secretary of Defense."

Powell selected a space nearby and wrote: "To Saddam — you didn't move it, now you'll lose it. Colin Powell."

Hand-scrawled messages to Saddam have become a fad among Air Force personnel, many of whom chuckle with regret that they know full well that the written messages won't survive the bomb's mission.

The two top Pentagon officials took back with them a "Bart Simpson" doll, modeled after the television cartoon character by the same name.

This model, however, was wearing a homemade desert camouflage uniform like that worn by its promoter, Air Force Staff Sgt. John Pennell.

Pennell, sporting a Simpson-style haircut with a blond flat-top crewcut and "high and tight" side trim, gave the model to Cheney at the end of a pep talk that Cheney and Powell delivered to Pennell and several hundred others.

Pennell asked Cheney to take it to President Bush; Cheney promised it would be "in the Oval Office tomorrow morning."

U.S. soldiers talk about life at the front:

■ Army Pfc. Jerry Polakis, 21, of Modesto, Calif., in his duty to care for wounded soldiers waiting in tents to be airlifted: "I don't think I'll ask them what happened. I don't they'll want to think about it at that moment."

■ Spec. Rowdy M. Hunt Sr., a 23-year-old native of Reno, Texas, assigned to a Patriot unit based in San Antonio, Texas: "I would drop every nuclear weapon we had to save one American life. If they want volunteers, I'll push the button. There are certain sacrifices you have to make."

Powell watched home vanish

By Rick Hampson

NEW YORK (AP) — All that's left of Colin Powell on the battered old street where he grew up is a two-page report in a file cabinet at I.S. 52.

The record tells us that the future general and chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff lived up the street at 952 Kelly and got mostly 80s and 90s. That he typed his reports, collected stamps and liked to make maps. That he was elected "class captain" and took French. That he graduated from junior high in 1950.

When Dwight Eisenhower, a general to whom Powell is being compared, was named Supreme Allied Commander in 1943, reporters who went to Abilene, Kan., saw the house where Ike was raised. They interviewed his mother, chatted with his friends, visited the dairy where he had worked 80 hours a week.

It's different with Colin Powell. He grew up in the South Bronx.

WHEN THE POWELL family moved out in 1956, the neighborhood already had begun a decline so rapid that today there is virtually no memory or trace of those who were born, lived and died there in the years after World War II.

Were Powell to return, he would not find the corner bakery where fat Mr. Kaiserman sold cheesecakes for less than a dollar. He would not find the Tiffany Theatre, where he liked to watch Westerns. And he would not find the four-story brown brick walkup where he lived for 15 years.

J. Sickser's, the children's store where young Colin fixed furniture after school, is shuttered. Intervale Avenue station, his subway stop, has been closed since a fire damaged it several years ago.

Prospect Hospital is now a shelter for homeless families, and P.S. 39, Powell's grade school, is filled with community group offices. A hand-scrawled sign on a club across the street says "Pool Tables for Customers Who Drink Only."

Sammy the shoemaker, the printing shop, the storefront synagogue — all gone. The only constant is the screech of the train wheels as they round the curve in the elevated tracks at the end of Powell's old block.

"You're looking for people who knew Colin Powell?" asks accountant Henry Altman, one of the few white businessmen who waited out the two-decade storm of arson, crime, drugs and migration. "You got a tough job."

CARMEN RIVERA'S living room window offers a view of the spot where 952 Kelly stood. Today it is a parking lot, surrounded by an eight-foot high chain link fence topped by large loops of barbed wire.

This is the 41st police precinct, "Fort Apache" as it became known in the days when you could count on hearing a siren — police, fire or ambulance — every five minutes.

But in Carmen's home, all is orderly. Thick plastic covers the flower-print upholstery of her couch and chairs. An array of intricate ceramic knickknacks sits on a lace runner atop her coffee table.

Were Powell to return, he would not find the corner bakery where fat Mr. Kaiserman sold cheesecakes for less than a dollar.

Carmen, who left Puerto Rico when she was 5, is living at the corner of Kelly and 163rd Street for one reason: In 1983, she was able to get a three-bedroom apartment in a new, rent-subsidized building.

There are a few things she likes about the neighborhood. The gyro sandwiches at the pizza shop are delicious; there's also good food shopping, ranging from supermarkets to a poultry store under the el tracks where hundreds of noisy chickens sit in cages, waiting for a customer to pick them out.

"It's OK," Carmen says of the neighborhood, "because I don't get involved with the people around here. I just stay inside."

POWELL IS A long way from Kelly Street, however; he now resides in a graceful old house reserved for the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff atop a hill in Fort Myers, Va., with a fine view of Washington.

Unfortunately, he is no longer able to indulge in that favorite Bronx pastime — repairing and rebuilding old cars. "That august place that I live in makes it a little difficult to have old Volvos laying around the yard," he said last year. "It drags down the neighborhood."

He was born in Harlem on April 5, 1937, the second child and first son of Luther Theophilius and Maud Ariel Powell. They had emigrated from Jamaica in the 1920s.

Today, as the South Bronx tries to come back, Colin Powell — the homeboy no one remembered until he became the president's national security adviser in 1987 — is a role model.

AT HIS OLD junior high, Powell's utterances are repeated on the student "radio station," which broadcasts over the public address system. Tania Osorio, a brisk middle-aged woman who teaches religious classes at St. Athanasius Church, calls Powell "an inspiration to the young people around here. His success shows them that hard work and determination pay off."

When Bronx Borough President Fernando Ferrer spoke last month at the funeral of the first New York soldier killed in the Gulf War, he reminded his audience that Powell grew up nearby. "The South Bronx is now a neighborhood which will be known for its heros," he said.

On the street, however, Colin Powell's name usually evokes only quizzical stares. "Colin? What's he, Irish?" asks one man. But almost everyone knows "that black general on television." "He came from around here?" marvels an old black man, Johnny Johnson. "Damn!" he says with a smile.

Support of U.S. fades in Latin America

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The war against Iraq is a touchy issue in Latin America, a region usually swift to denounce Yankee interventionism. Leaders agree on only one thing: they oppose the Iraqi takover of Kuwait.

"For small countries like Venezuela, any forceful action to erase international borders is unacceptable," President Carlos Andres Perez has said.

But all Latin American nations except Argentina have refused to send troops to the Persian Gulf. Some have called for a truce and others say they would have preferred to rely on the U.N. trade embargo and international censure to pressure Iraq.

"There will be no Mexican troops involved in the conflict," President Carlos Salinas de Gortari said.

Uruguay, which has canceled beef sales to Iraq valued at $22 million, has said allied fighting is "legitimate."

However, Foreign Minister Hector Gros Espiell says Uruguay is officially neutral, and that "the allies should not have as an end result the questioning of Iraqi independence or the territorial integrity of that country."

Public reaction has been ambiguous.

Universal criticism of Saddam Hussein has shifted to a condemnation of both sides. Initial support of the United States has faded.

Political cartoons in Mexico City depict President Bush with rockets in his ears, bloody butcher knives in both hands and a globe with only one country on it: the United States.

While anti-war demonstrations in this region have for the most part not attracted large crowds, a peace rally Jan. 23 in front of Argentina's congress drew 7,000 people.

Demonstrators destroyed a statue of former President John F. Kennedy in a park in Lima, Peru; burned flags at the U.S. embassies in Mexico City and Buenos Aires; and set off small bombs at U.S. and European businesses elsewhere in the region.

Leftists from Mexico to Argentina accuse the United States of imperialism and charge that it wants to destroy Iraq and strengthen its position in the Persian Gulf. Latin America should stay out of a conflict that is alien to it, they say.

The Argentine government, which sent a missile-bearing destroyer and corvette to help enforce the trade embargo, argues that Saddam is a danger to the post-Cold War world order.

"Whoever thinks that the distance to the gulf or the lack of an Argentine presence in that region could assure us of not suffering the consequences of these events is mistaken," said Domingo Cavallo, foreign minister until he shifted Cabinet posts last month.

Latin America's diversity of responses to the Middle East conflict stem from complex and individual patterns of immigration, trade and public policy. Arabs are the third largest immigrant group in Argentina; President Carlos Menem's parents were born in Syria.

Police try to identify dead woman found in boxcar

NATION

PALMER, Mass. (AP) — Shortly after noon on a winter's day, a railroad worker stumbled across the frozen body — a young woman with long, dark hair, carrying nothing but a few Mexican pesos in her pocket.

Four weeks later, nobody knows her name or where she came from. But investigators believe she was one of scores of illegal aliens who, lacking papers or money, steal aboard freight trains on perilous journeys across the United States.

"There's a very slim chance that we'll ever find out who she is," said Police Chief Howard E. Case.

He said the incident is among the oddest he has encountered in two decades or so of police work in this small town nestled in the western Massachusetts countryside.

"There's a young girl out there who has died and the next of kin doesn't have any indication of where she might be," Case said.

Police speculate that somewhere the young woman climbed aboard the open-sided car of the train that left Long Beach, Calif., Jan. 8, bound for western Massachusetts with stops in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Kansas City, Chicago, Cleveland and Buffalo, N.Y.

She died of exposure at least three days before she was discovered Jan. 15, a medical examiner determined.

The woman, who weighed 140 pounds and was 5-feet-8, is believed to have been in her early 20s.

"My own feelings are that for whatever reason, hunger possibly, she was unable to crawl out of that boxcar," Case said.

Because of where she was hiding, Case doubts the woman was robbed. A jacket and sweater were found near, but not on, the body, which Case attributed to the possibility the woman losing consciousness before realizing she was freezing to death.

Fingerprints and photographs were taken and a description issued to law enforcement agencies across the United States.

But by early February authorities had no solid leads, said State Trooper John Gibbons, who's heading the investigation.

The Mexican pesos and lack of identification indicate the woman may have been an illegal alien from Mexico who jumped the train to visit relatives or find work, Case said.

That dangerous form of transport, reminiscent of the hobo travelers of the Depression, has become more common as immigration restrictions have tightened, said Cristobal Bonifaz, an immigration lawyer in Northampton.

Immigration reforms passed in 1986 have made employers liable for checking on their workers' legality, a measure designed to curb the flow of illegal immigrants. Bonifaz and other immigrants' advocates contend the new regulations pushed illegal immigrants further underground.

"The employers are very careful that nobody knows they are employing these people," Bonifaz said.

Immigration and Naturalization Service spokesman Duke Austin said illegal immigration decreased steadily after the reforms went into effect in 1986. But it increased last year, in part because of a worsening economy, said Austin.

An economic downturn in Texas and other southern states seems to be sending the immigrants farther north, Austin said.

Gasoline prices continue to fall, survey shows

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices at the pump dropped an average of more than 5 cents nationwide over the past two weeks, reflecting lower winter demand and increased oil supplies, said a survey released Sunday.

The average price Friday for all grades of gasoline at full and self-service stations, including taxes, was $1.2522 per gallon, said the bi-weekly Lundberg Survey of more than 13,000 service stations.

That price was down 5.13 cents from Jan. 25, the survey said.

"This drop is much more than often occurs ... during the usual winter demand slump, so this points to a modest overabundance of supplies," said oil industry analyst Trilby Lundberg.

Lundberg cited increased production by oil companies to offset the loss of supplies from Iraq and Kuwait. Prices also dropped in part because of lower motorist demand during the winter months, she said.

After Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait, gasoline prices peaked at $1.4709 on Oct. 19. Prices since have fallen an average of 21.87 cents despite the imposition of a 5-cent federal gas tax on Dec. 1.

Prices stood at $1.1771 per gallon July 20.

'This drop is much more than often occurs . . . during the usual winter demand slump . . . so this points to a modest overabundance of supplies.'

— Trilby Lundberg, Oil induatry analyst

At self-service stations, which account for over 80 percent of sales, the average price of regular unleaded gasoline was $1.1260 a gallon on Friday. Premium unleaded sold for $1.2884 per gallon and regular leaded was $1.1045.

At full-service stations, regular unleaded sold for $1.4298 a gallon, premium unleaded sold for $1.5688 and regular leaded was $1.4285.

Gospel king dead at 59

Cleveland

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gospel great James Cleveland, who helped teach Aretha Franklin how to sing and returned choirs to the forefront of gospel music, has died. He was 59.

The three-time Grammy winner died Saturday at Brotman Medical Center, where he was admitted Thursday with respiratory problems.

The Rev. Marvin Winan, leader of The Winans, said Cleveland reigned as the "king of gospel" and inspired numerous performers.

"He was not to me a great vocalist, but he was a great interpreter," Winan said. "James could make you see the song."

Cleveland, a Baptist minister, pianist, composer, arranger and producer, often called his baritone voice a fog horn. He wrote or arranged more than 400 gospel songs, including "Everything Will Be All Right," "The Love of God" and "Peace Be Still."

Cleveland was born Dec. 5, 1931, and grew up on the South Side of Chicago. Later, he moved into the home of the Rev. C.L. Franklin, father of soul legend Miss Franklin. He taught the 9-year-old Aretha how to sing gospel and later produced her Grammy-winning album, "Amazing Grace."

Winan said his grandmother and both his parents worked with Cleveland in Detroit's Living Gospel choir in the late 1940s.

Extreme passion entices conflict

It's an irony of our system of government that the dissenter to a governmental action such as the war against Iraq has just as much right to protest the war as the patriot has to support the action. The U.S. Constitution guarantees a diversity of views on a wide range of social issues — including war, abortion, religion and numerous other topics.

That's in stark contrast to opponents to a totalitarian government's actions. Opponents in those situations can face rough treatment, possibly even death. Our system of government is steeped in the belief that the individual has the right to voice opposition to a government action and even work against it — within the limits identified by our laws.

Different views bring to the debate over government actions a clarity unseen under many other forms of government. Yet the "right to disagree," as it might be termed, can create conflict when those of sharply different views meet head to head. That occurred during the 1960s when the American people were divided over the tragic war in Vietnam.

To this point, commendably, those protesting the war with Iraq have kept their comments directed at the reasons for the war and why they believe we should not be there. They have not targeted the fighting men and women who are only doing their duty to this country by serving in the war against Iraq. In the Vietnam War that wasn't the case and thousands of U.S. troops returned to the states to the anger and ugliness of a people divided.

A repeat of that unhealthy situation must never be permitted.

Patriotism is a good and healthy attitude, particularly when a nation is at war. Opponents of the war — regardless of their motivation, except in matters involving treason — have every right to voice their opposition. But either passion — that of the patriot or that of the opponent to war — can be counterproductive if carried to extremes.

That's where individual responsibility is imperative in our system of government. We all must recognize that our passion may not be universal and must be tempered to the limits allowed by law.

Banking changes call for regulation

President Bush, in his State of the Union message, said he wanted to bring America's financial system in to the 21st Century.

The first order of business, however, should be to make the financial system survive the rest of this century. To that end, Congress must act soon to bolster the disappearing bank deposit insurance fund and must focus on restoring confidence in the banking system. ...

The Congressional Budget Office has suggested that the bank insurance fund borrow money temporarily from the treasury while raising the premiums that banks pay for deposit insurance from 19.5 cents per $100 of deposits to 30 cents per $100.

But other, permanent, changes may be needed.

The $100,000 cap on insured deposits must be made meaningful, and taxpayers must be protected from another massive fund bailout, perhaps by charging depositors directly for insurance on amounts larger than that. Competing investments and instruments — municipal bond funds, for instance — can be had either with or without insurance, with the comfort of insurance reducing the interest paid to the depositor. ...

Whatever changes are made — and changes there must be, from Congress and within the industry itself — there should be more regulation, not less. If banks are to engage in new areas of business, those areas must be regulated. If non-banks are to infringe further into traditional consumer banking services, they too, must fall under banking regulation.

Legislators should not count on 'maybe' tax

There are indications that state officials may be counting on the indulgence of the Texas Supreme Court in trying to fashion a way out of their school-tax dilemma.

The kindness being hoped for from the court apparently concerns the 25-cent "local enrichment" part of Sen. Carl Parker's statewide school property tax proposal. Parker's proposal is widely seen at the moment as perhaps the only practical way of satisfying the court's ruling that funding available to every school district in the state be equal. ...

The plan has two parts: abolish local school taxes and establish a statewide school property tax of $1 per $100 valuation which will be redistributed by the state, and allow local voters to also add a 25-cent local enrichment tax.

When asked whether the court is likely to approve the 25-cent enrichment, the answer is generally along the lines of "We think so" and "We certainly hope so." That is not reassuring. ...

We trust the Legislature and other state officials will think this through to the point where they don't have to hope, but are sure that the 25 cents is legally sustainable.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Feb. 11, the 42nd day of 1991. There are 323 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

One year ago, on Feb. 11, 1990, South African black activist Nelson Mandela was freed after 27 years in prison. Mandela walked through the gate of Victor Verster prison in Paarl, outside Cape Town, setting off joyous celebrations among his followers.

On this date:

In 1752, the first American hospital opened, in Philadelphia.

Soldiers in for 'certain kind of hell'

NEAR THE KUWAIT BORDER, Saudi Arabia — Ground war has come a long way since the "Charge of the Light Brigade." If only the allied forces had nothing more potent than "cannon to the right of them, cannon to the left of them."

Anderson

The kind of breach that American soldiers must make in Iraqi defenses makes the British Light Brigade's suicidal charge look like a game of Pac Man.

An awesome array of millions of mines, barbed wire, deep trenches filled with flaming oil and radio-detonated napalm bombs awaits them. And that's not counting the possible use of chemical and biological agents or the pounding from more than 7,000 Iraqi tanks and artillery pieces, or the guns of hundreds of thousands of foot soldiers.

"It sounds like a certain kind of hell," one Marine told us in typical leatherneck understatement.

The U.S. military is concentrating most of its efforts on destruction of mine fields, mindful of the fact, as one Marine officer said, that mines caused a majority of the casualties in Vietnam.

Military intelligence officers in the region estimate that Saddam Hussein has sown more than 500,000 mines in belts 2 kilometers wide along virtually the entire Saudi-Kuwaiti border. And he is continuing to plant this deadly crop in an effort to turn Kuwait into one big booby trap.

From Dec. 19 to Jan. 5 alone, satellite photos showed Iraqi soldiers laying 60 kilometers of mines. They can continue to spread them from helicopters and special artillery pieces that spew mines like a tennis ball machine.

Intelligence sources estimate that Saddam has a stockpile of 20 million mines purchased in recent years from France, the Soviet Union, China and even the United States and Kuwait.

There are the small "toe poppers" that can blast off a soldier's foot; the "bouncing Betty" that jumps 4 feet in the air before exploding; mines set off by trip wires; mines detonated by computer chips; and a large pressure-sensitive mine that can lift a 60-ton tank 5 feet off the ground.

With the approach of the ground offensive, or "G-Day" as they call it here, the biggest fans of the successful air assault were the Army and Marine Corps combat engineers. It is their job to create a path through Saddam's maze using mine detectors, bulldozers and special tanks equipped with plows and explosive cords shot by rockets across a mine field and then detonated.

Iraq's last enemy, Iran, didn't have those sophisticated devices. Instead the Ayatollah Khomeini used Iranian children, including some who were deaf and mute, to run through the Iraqi mine fields ahead of the soldiers.

The mines are not all that allied ground forces have to contend with. These are the other features in Saddam's hellish obstacle course, roughly in the order that U.S. soldiers will confront them:

- hundreds of miles of razor wire;
- ditches filled with metal spikes, concrete blocks, burned-out vehicles and 55-gallon drums of napalm that can be detonated by remote control;
- trenches filled with oil ready to be set on fire as flaming moats;
- 12-foot-high sand walls;
- hundreds of thousands of infantry soldiers ready to fire on anyone who makes it that far;
- more than 2,000 fortified artillery pieces that will belch out an inferno if they are not stopped by air strikes and allied artillery;
- and more than 5,000 tanks, many of them in triangular formations that allow them to fire on anyone coming at them head on or along their flanks.

It is all calculated, as one Marine officer put it, "to channelize us into what we call killing zones."

CHARLEY REESE

Impeachment resolution is right as rain

Just so you will know I'm not the only person in the U.S. who disagrees with the president's Persian Gulf policy, I want to let you know that Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, and chairman of the House banking committee, disagrees also.

Reese

So much, in fact, that on Jan. 16, Rep. Gonzalez filed a resolution of impeachment against President Bush. The resolution has been sent to a committee, and I figure has about as much chance of getting off the ground as an Iraqi pilot.

There are five articles in the resolution citing why the president ought to be impeached.

Number One charges that he failed to uphold the equal protection clause of the Constitution. It says in part, "...calling on the poor and minorities to fight a war for oil to preserve the lifestyles of the wealthy is a denial of the rights of these soldiers."

Number Two states the president has violated the Constitution, federal law and the United Nations Charter by bribing, intimidating and threatening others, including members of the United Nations Security Council, to support belligerent acts against Iraq.

The congressman lists these specifics: the debt of Egypt was forgiven; a $140 million loan to China was agreed to; the Soviet Union was promised $7 billion in aid; Colombia was promised assistance to its armed forces; Zaire was promised military assistance and partial forgiveness of its debt; Saudi Arabia was promised $12 billion in arms; Yemen was threatened with termination of support; and the U.S. finally paid off $187 million of its debt to the U.N. after the vote the president sought was made.

"The vote was bought," says the congressman, "and it will be paid for with the lives of blacks and Mexican-Americans." He is referring to the Security Council resolution authorizing the use of force.

The third article charges President Bush with a conspiracy to engage in a massive war against Iraq employing methods of mass destruction.

The fourth article states the president has committed the United States to acts of war without congressional consent.

"Once the president approached Congress for a declaration of war, 500,000 American soldiers' lives were in jeopardy, rendering any substantive debate by Congress meaningless. The president has not received a declaration of war by Congress, and in contravention of the written word, the spirit, and the intent of the U.S. Constitution has declared that he will go to war regardless of the views of Congress and the American people."

The fifth article states that, from August through January, the president embarked on a course of action that systematically eliminated every option for peaceful resolution of the Persian Gulf crisis.

Rep. Gonzalez, who is a long-time member of the Congress, pointed out a very good rationale for dissent.

"The Iraqi people," he said, "are as opposed to war as are the American people — the difference is that the Iraqi people have no choice but to support their country's leader, but the American people not only have the right to oppose and speak out in disagreement with their president, but they have the responsibility to do so if our democracy is to be preserved."

The impeachment resolution will never get out of committee unless some unforeseen disaster occurs, but Rep. Gonzalez is right as rain on a hot day. George Bush has confused election with coronation and acted as if the Constitution and the Congress were nothing more than nuisances.

If he gets away with it, he'll probably do it again and others after him.

A president in league with the American Establishment has tremendous resources to manipulate public opinion. The style of government during most of this century has been for the Establishment to do what it pleases and then manipulate the public into approving it.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Magazine ad airs more than war news

I've been watching a lot of television in an effort to keep up with the war. I've probably watched more television the first week of the war than I had watched all the previous years.

To be honest about it, however, I haven't learned a lot about the war by watching television.

Grizzard

Military censorship, of course, has a lot to do with that. And this war, so far, has been mostly air attacks at night, and if the Iraqis can't see the planes how can I expect to see them 8,000 miles away on my television?

What I have learned, however, is if I have to watch a Sports Illustrated commercial giving away the Muhammad Ali videotape much longer, I'll be punch drunk and loop-legged myself.

If you've watched television at all the last week, you've seen that SI commercial.

It's had more air time than Bernie Shaw.

Here's the pitch:

It's an alleged bargain. You start a subscription to Sports Illustrated and you get a videotape of Muhammad Ali's big fights FREE!

The commercial was shot in Las Vegas, "Fight capital of the world."

So what else you have is all these people in the streets of Vegas talking about the tape.

These people are all incredibly excited about it. "Free! How can this be free?" one guy gushes.

And he's trying to win at the tables?

"It's not free, you ninny," I say to my television. "You've got to pay for your subscription, the videotape didn't cost Sports Illustrated very much in the first place, and Time-Life stands to make a lot of money here."

Where does Sports Illustrated find these people? Remember the sneaker phone commercial?

It preceded the Ali spot. You subscribe to Sports Illustrated and you get a telephone shaped like a sneaker. FREE!

"It's a phone?" some dingbat asks. "This is great! Fantastic!"

Aren't these people a little too old to get that fired up over a telephone shaped like a shoe?

I saw a phone shaped like a beer can once. I didn't get fired up about it, however. In fact, I thought it was stupid.

Don't get me wrong, I like Sports Illustrated. I even worked for Sports Illustrated once.

The photography is wonderful. The writing and editing are superb. But just because I like to read about Joe Montana or digest a thoughtful piece about what's wrong with college football, it doesn't mean I'm some sort of juvenile who'd want a telephone shaped like what Michael Jordan wears on his feet to work.

Advertising can turn a consumer off. I don't buy anything that is supposed to be "new and improved."

Why didn't they get it right the first time?

I'd never buy a car from a dealer who does his own commercials, go to a lawyer who has to go on television to get clients, and isn't one laxative about like all the others?

Now I click the button on my remote the moment the Ali ad appears on my screen, which is about 18 times a night. I've just about worn out my clicker trigger finger trying to escape it.

"Float like a butterfly, sting like a bee." Not a Patriot knocking out a Scud. Ali decking Sonny Liston again. Enough is enough.

I may drop my subscription to Sports Illustrated and use the money to buy an airline. Talk about a bargain.

NATION IN BRIEF

Veterans honor WWII chaplains

CINCINNATI (AP) — World War II veterans gathered Sunday to honor four military chaplains who surrendered their life preservers and drowned so that four soldiers could survive after a 1943 U-boat attack.

"Each proved that courage has no faith or creed," said Don Poland of a Hamilton County American Legion group that has sponsored the annual memorial service for 20 years at St. Boniface Church.

The clergymen were the Revs. George Fox and Clark Poling, both Protestants; the Rev. John Washington, a Roman Catholic priest, and Rabbi Alexander Goode.

The USS Dorchester, a transport ship, was torpedoed and sunk off the coast of Newfoundland on Feb. 3, 1943, and about 600 of the 900 troops on board drowned.

Witnesses said the chaplains gave their life jackets to four soldiers as the ship sank, then linked arms and prayed as the ship went down.

This year, the congregation also prayed for U.S. troops in the Persian Gulf War and for an end to combat.

Jury recommends 'chair'

BARTOW, Fla. (AP) — Days after Peggy Carr sipped from a poisoned eight-pack of Coca-Cola, her hair began to fall out, her feet felt like fire and she could no longer walk.

Before lapsing into a three-month coma from which she would never awake, she kept asking "Why?"

It's a question investigators spent more than two years trying to answer and prosecutors a month trying to prove.

Last week, a jury convicted the meek, self-styled genius who lived next door, George James Trepal.

The panel also recommended the electric chair for the 42-year-old computer programmer, chemistry buff and high-IQ Mensa club member who prosecutors said tried to pull off the "perfect crime."

"Here's a man who thought he was so smart he could literally get away with murder," said prosecutor John Aguero. "I think he actually believed, because of his intellectual level, he would never be found out."

British roundtrip cut

NEW YORK (AP) — British Airways on Sunday cut roundtrip airfares by 33 percent for flights between the United States and Britain and said it would give refunds with two weeks notice.

The move addresses fears of terrorism related to the Persian Gulf War.

"We recognized the need to answer consumer concerns," said John Wood, British Airways' top marketing official in the United States.

"Our Cash Back fare allows customers the option of a super deal, while at the same time protecting their investment if world events do not improve," he said.

Airlines have been stung with cancellations since U.S.-led forces launched an air assault on Iraq and occupied Kuwait nearly four weeks ago. Higher fuel prices and the recession in the United States have also hurt carriers.

Rather than the 30-day advance purchase for discount fares, British Airways has set a March 15 deadline for purchase of the cut-rate tickets for travel between April 6 and Oct. 31.

Clerks find cocaine

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Store clerks unpacking bananas from Colombia found about 74 pounds of cocaine in three crates, authorities said.

The first illegal stash was discovered Friday in Indiana and two were discovered Saturday in different Florida cities.

All three crates were imported by Turbana Corp. of Coral Cables, said Brad Knutter, assistant special agent for the U.S. Customs Service.

The Florida-bound shipments entered the United States through Tampa and the shipment sent to Indiana was imported through Bridgeport, Conn.

Robert Lounsbery, Turbana's vice president of operations, said his company had no knowledge of the cocaine. Turbana has armed guards on ships, searches vessels and takes other security steps, but "it's not possible to be a hundred percent effective," he said.

Quake rocks Guam

MENLO PARK, Calif. (AP) — An earthquake rocked the Pacific Ocean island of Guam, the U.S. Geological Survey reported Sunday.

The quake measuring 5.8 on the Richter scale occurred at 12:15 a.m. Monday local time, or 9:15 a.m. EST Sunday, said survey spokeswoman Pat Jorgensen.

There were no immediate reports of injuries or structural damage, she said.

It was centered about 150 miles northeast of the U.S. territory of Guam, near the island of Saipan.

"It was felt strongly by the people of Guam. We have reports that items were knocked off shelves," Jorgensen said.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph.

An earthquake of magnitude 5 on the scale is capable of causing considerable damage. A quake of magnitude 6 can cause severe damage.

The earthquake was monitored by the survey's National Earthquake Information Service Center in Golden, Colo.

New rules will help disabled children

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government has approved regulations expanding by tens of thousands the number of poor children entitled to disability benefits each year, administration officials said.

The regulations were scheduled for release Monday and will be effective immediately, according to a description obtained by The Associated Press.

The changes were ordered nearly a year ago by the Supreme Court after advocates for the rights of the disabled complained that the administration had delayed crafting the regulations.

Under the new rules, the government for the first time will consider not only children's medical conditions but also the effect those conditions have on their ability to walk, eat, dress themselves and perform other daily activities.

The change is expected to add as many as 37,000 children per year with severe physical and mental disabilities to the Supplemental Security Income program who would not previously have qualified for benefits.

The administration estimates the new guidelines will cost $2.5 billion to $3.5 billion over the next five years.

"These new rules greatly enhance the protections we can provide to some of our most vulnerable citizens — children with disabilities," Secretary of Health and Human Services Louis Sullivan said Sunday in a prepared statement.

About 312,000 needy, disabled children receive SSI benefits, which average $387 per month. About half the applicants now qualify, but the administration expects as many as 65 percent of those applying to qualify under the new plan.

By a 7-2 vote, the Supreme Court last year voided a government regulation that gave children seeking benefits less protection than adults. The old rule applied a rigid list of disorders — deafness, for example — to children, while permitting adults to be judged on their ability to work. Advocacy groups complained the list did not account for the cumulative effect of disabilities on children's daily lives.

The changes "bring Social Security's evaluation of childhood disability into line with state-of-the-art practice in pediatric and adolescent medicine," said Social Security Administration Commissioner Gwendolyn S. King. "The implementation of these rules will ensure that the SSI program reaches the entire population of children with disabilities that it was intended to reach."

The lawsuit was originally filed in 1983 on behalf of Brian Zebley, then 5, of Upland, Pa.

Vilnius grows quiet

N.Y. Times News Service

VILNIUS, Lithuania — There was at least one popping champagne cork — maybe two; accounts differ. There was a modest cry of "Hurrah!" from some aberrant individual, and thus went the celebration in the barricaded Parliament at 3 a.m. on Sunday morning at the news that the republic's citizens had just voted 9-to-1 in favor of independence.

Lithuanians are like that: their weapon against the Kremlin is stolidness, not demonstrativeness. More than ever, theirs seems a relentless plodding toward independence in which they bear determination the way a tortoise bears its carapace, with more wobble than flourish, but moving ever forward across time as much as place.

"This will give strength and patience to our nation, qualities we will need in the future," said Presdent Vytautas Landsbergis, celebrating this virtue of durability in the sighing, almost lugubrious fashion that has become his trademark in the last 11 months of Lithuania's contumely toward the Kremlin.

Landsbergis is a self-sentenced prisoner within the tattered, tired Parliament. He is a resilient music professor turned politician by some entirely hidden wellspring of personal nationalist passion. With him as the principal, the Parliament scene has been presented with Brechtian stagecraft through these months of standoff as his voice perseveres amid a jumble of melodramatic trash piles and half-serious barricades that would seem paranoid were it not for the chronic, deadly challenge of the Soviet army.

On Sunday morning, as fresh, clean snow muted the city and added to the hush of anti-climax after the vote — for which 84 percent of the electorate turned out — the voice of Landsbergis slowly, deeply ground on in the Lithuanian night, a sad, crooning sound. Its main point of celebration was how absolutely, pristinely defenseless Lithuania is and how absolutely vile the tanks and soldiers of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev must seem to the watching world.

The bearded, tired man leaned closer to the microphone, his voice cello slow, offering a smiling stare that can seem to dance between triumph and desperation at such moments.

"This is a victory against lying and intimidation," he said of Saturday's plebecite, his eyes glowing. "The Lithuanian people reject lies. They are not afraid."

All this was so undramatic after a big day of yea-saying by three-fourths of all eligible voters in the republic that Gorbachev could perhaps mark it as a lesson in trying to use once-formidable Kremlin parapets to talk down upon the many voices of nationalism heard now in the Soviet empire.

The Soviet president had fairly fumed at the spectacle of those he considers Kremlin subjects going off on an unauthorized world demonstration of precisely how much they want to be done with his rule. But he may have to get used to it, for a spat of it is overtaking the crimped but determined forces of democratic opposition he helped encourage into being in a now past phase of his leadership.

AP Laserphoto

Lithuanians holding vigil around a campfire outside Parliament flash victory signs when they learned 91 percent of voters there defied Moscow by voting for independence.

The other two sovereignty-hungry Baltic republics, Estonia and Latvia, are soon to follow suit with their independence plebecites. And the giant Russian republic, the heart of the nation where Boris N. Yeltsin, Gorbachev's populist rival, thrives, is likely to have an eye-catching referendum on introducing direct election of the republic's president.

This would create a stronger platform for Yeltsin and be a poetic touch of one-upmanship toward Gorbachev. He, more than ever lately, as times and options grow tougher, may regret that he avoided a direct election process for himself.

Amazon activist's murder may presage new violence

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — More unionists and defenders of the vast Amazon rain forest may be killed if the government does not move quickly to prosecute gunmen and enact land reform, activists say.

The predictions follow the shooting Feb. 2 of Amazon unionist Expedito Riberio de Souza near his home in Rio Maria, a jungle village 2,000 miles north of Rio.

"The violence will only end when the government makes good on its promise to redistribute land and starts punishing the killers," said Rev. Ricardo Resende, a Roman Catholic priest who presided at Riberio de Souza's funeral — and one of six area land reform activists under death threat.

Police arrested Jose Serafim Sales on Friday in connection with Riberio de Souza's murder. Resende believes Sales was paid by a group of large landowners who want to wipe out the peasant demands for land.

The root of the violence is Brazil's unequal pattern of landholding, says Ana Pinto de Souza, an activist with the Catholic Church's Pastoral Land Commission.

President Fernando Collor de Mello, who took office in March, has promised to settle hundreds of thousands of poor farmers but thus far virtually no land has been distributed.

Rev. Resende also faulted the government for failing to provide police protection for those who have received threats.

"Ribeiro requested protection from Justice Ministry officials last year," he said. "They promised to take action."

Cholera epidemic in Peru spreads; 51 die

LIMA, Peru, (AP) — At least 51 people have died from a cholera epidemic that began in the coastal city of Chimbote and has spread along the entire coast of Peru, a Peruvian Health Ministry spokesman said Sunday.

Dr. Pedro Guerrero said health officials have treated 5,200 cholera victims and that 20 percent of them have been hospitalized.

Guerrero said health officials hope to erradicate the disease within a few months, but that much of the success depends on public cooperation.

Terrorists blast empty bus

ATHENS, Greece (NYT) — In the ninth terrorist attack here in the last two weeks, a bus used to carry employees of a Greek military plant was badly damaged on Sunday by a homemade bomb that exploded close to the Acropolis.

The police said the bomb was not very powerful and caused no injuries. No one was on the bus at the time of the explosion.

A police spokesman said no group had yet claimed responsibility for the bombing.

MIDLANDERS SHOW THEIR SUPPORT

From hallways in schools and hood ornaments to front yards and flag poles, Midlanders are individually showing their support for the troops of Operation Desert Storm. Ubiquitous yellow ribbons top radio antennas, encircle tree trunks and adorn lapels throughout the city in small showings of solidarity with the soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines in the Middle East.

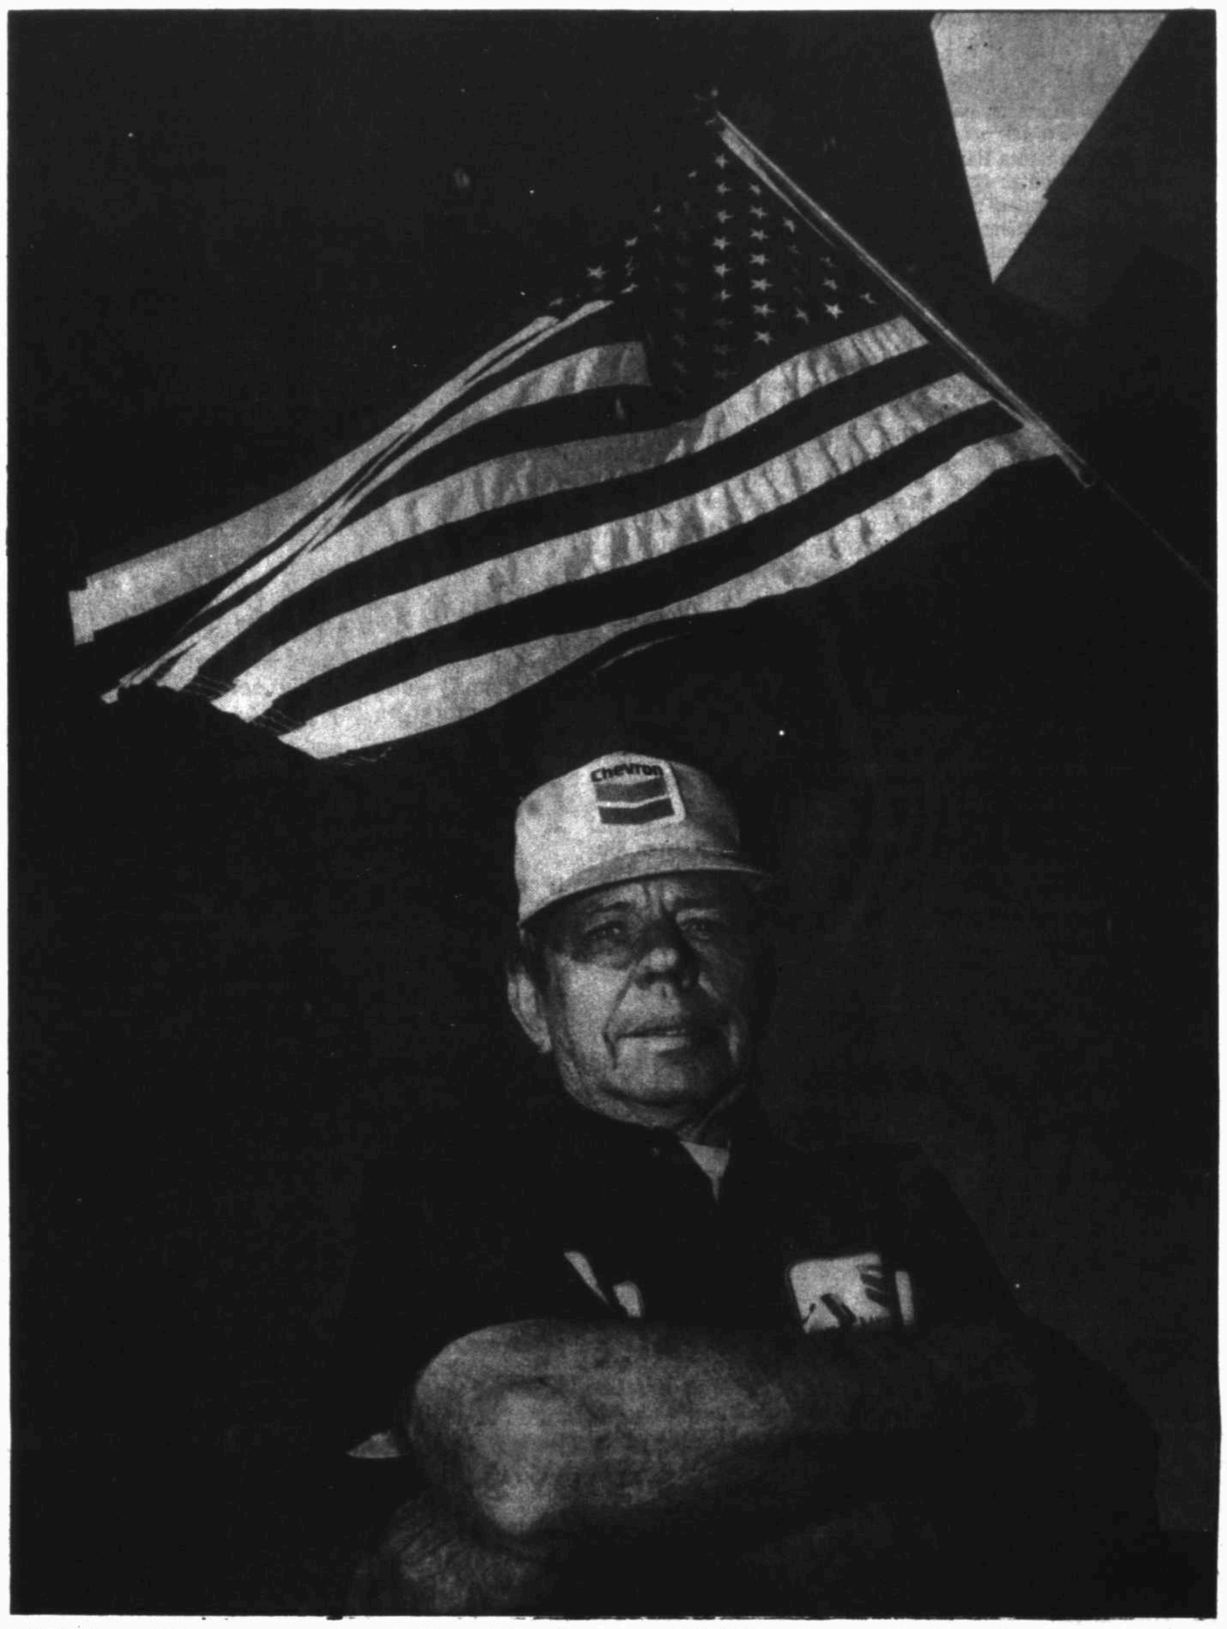

From the most elaborate, custom-tied silk bows to a simple swatch of canary-colored fabric, the message is the same: "We miss you. We're thinking of you. We await your safe return."

In stores where Valentine's Day promotions would traditionally dominate this time of year, red hearts and flowers are sharing — and in some cases surrendering — center stage for the red, white and blue.

At Trendy T's at Midland Park Mall, sales are up 60 percent from a typical January and February, co-owner Ruben Vargas estimated. Within three days of the allies' launch of Desert Storm against Iraq, the store's suppliers had come up with and delivered a couple of new designs to add to the line of Desert Shield t-shirt heat-transfer patterns the store sold, he said.

But even before they could get the new designs into the store, inquiries were rolling in from eager customers, said Vargas, who also teaches distributive education at Midland High.

Bill Fulton, Chevron service station attendent, and WWII veteran, flys the American flag to show his support for the troops stationed in the Middle East. "The flag stays up until the troops come home," said Fulton.

Midlander Debra Ellis, center, and her daughters Kayce, 11, left, and Erin, 7, show their support for US troops in Saudi Arabia by flying a small US flag.

A yellow ribbon with the name of a Permian Basin soldier serving in Saudi Arabia hangs from a tree limb in Centennial Plaza. The ribbons were placed on the trees recently during a ceremony to honor the many men and women who have been called to serve their country.

PATRIOT: Yellow ribbons most popular theme

(From 1B)

Of the 35 differed styles the store now carries, the biggest selling designs are those incorporating yellow ribbons — with the mottos "Until They All Come Home" and "Until They All Come Home Safely," he said.

Anti-Iraq slogan designs are hot among the 16-to-20-year-old crowd, while a shirt with a Saddam Hussein "wanted" poster look is the most popular with pre-teens, especially the boys, Vargas said.

"January is usually one of our slowest months, but this year it's going to be one of our best. But I'd sure rather have the troops home than all the sales we've had."

Stores around the city are selling patriotic and anti-Iraqi themed clothing and items almost as quickly as they comes in.

At least one mobile stand dedicated to nothing but "Support Our Troops" goods has even popped up along North Big Spring Street in recent days.

Locally and nationally, flag sales have been brisk, with Old Glory visible on the porches and in the yards of growing numbers of homes and businesses.

A CNN business report recently recounted the experience of an upscale women's clothing chain which abandoned its standard haute couture window displays in favor of stark rows of American flags under spotlights.

Despite many marketing gurus' warnings of the move as a major gamble, the stores' sales have not only held their own, but have risen, a fact executives attribute to a favorable patriotic response.

The heaviest concentration of yellow ribbons in town appears to be Centennial Plaza, where giant bows bearing the names of more than 330 service men and women were tied in the trees for last month's Operation Desert Shield-/Storm rally organized by the American Red Cross and its family support group.

The bows stand as a reminder for many of the large number of West Texans directly affected by the fighting in the Persian Gulf.

Next week the plaza may get some competition in the yellow density derby, when Midland Freshman High has its "Paws for America" day, Feb. 19.

Already, 180 names of family members and friends in the Persian War have been submitted by students. K-Lite FM has donated ribbon for bows bearing those names to be tied on trees in the school courtyard.

The same day American Legion Post 19 Commander John Neal will give 45 classroom flags to the school in a color presentation at 9:40 a.m.

Scout troops, school classes, coworkers and businesses are tackling projects to "boost" the troops' morale by sending cards, letters and goodies overseas.

Experts say that such activities not only gives those on the home front something constructive with which to occupy their time, but it builds bonds and makes the folks back home feel as though they're contributing to the war effort.

Woman teaches survival to offshore workers

HOUSTON (AP) — A Louisiana woman who pioneered survival training for offshore oil rig workers has expanded her service area to include Houston and other Gulf Coast cities.

Margaret McMillan offers the training in alliance with the University of Southwestern Louisiana and scores of petroleum companies eager to train their employees.

"Margaret really started water survival training in the United States," said Gerald L. Lund, director of USL's Marine Survival Training Center in Lafayette, La. "She got the industry to thinking about it."

When the university established its survival training operation last year, "it was always intended that she would be part of the center. She's at the point now where she's ready to retire, but she didn't want to leave the business completely," he said.

The USL operation recently merged with McMillan Offshore Survival Technology in Lafayette, which has provided survival training to workers in the petroleum and maritime industries since 1973.

"We can now take the training to the industry — everything but the survival craft," Lund said.

The center in Lafayette is the first public facility in the country to train offshore workers in the actual launch of escape craft from platforms and rigs. It was established as a joint project between the university and about 64 companies that spent four years raising more than $1.6 million in funds and finding more than $500,000 in equipment for the program.

"The industry decided that those old methods were just not applicable," Lund said of traditional safety measures. "It decided to set up our center. Nobody has ever offered anything like this in the country."

Since beginning its full range of courses in January 1990, the center has trained 2,300 workers from 50 companies throughout the Gulf Coast area in water survival and the use of survival craft.

But now the training can be done outside the school's 60-acre lake site in Lafayette. In Houston, the center began training workers at a YWCA near downtown last month.

"The whole idea was to control the training atmosphere at the center and keep it as safe as possible," Lund said. "We did all of the training in Lafayette and McMillan handled all of the training outside of Lafayette for about a year.

"But in the last six months, we've been talking about bringing it all together."

John McMillan, vice president of McMillan Offshore, will coordinate all of the center's outside training operations while the center has hired McMillan Offshore's instructors.

The oil companies have donated enclosed lifeboats and survival craft, life jackets, rafts, floats, an audio-visual system, and office and classroom furnishings.

"The oil companies decided there is a need for this kind of training, but it was prohibitively expensive to set up such courses individually," Lund said.

"The way that the offshore companies set up the center shows they're concerned about safety," Lund said. "They're always looking for new ways to promote safety offshore."

Perjury trial set in Dallas for former police chief

DALLAS (AP) — Jury selection begins Monday in the misdemeanor perjury trial of former Dallas police chief Mack Vines.

Vines is accused of lying to a panel investigating the 1989 firing of a police officer. Dallas City Manager Jan Hart fired Vines Sept. 12, hours after he was indicted on the charge.

Vines has maintained he is innocent.

Last month, Ms. Hart hired Los Angeles Deputy Police Chief William Rathburn to replace Vines.

Vines allegedly committed perjury before a panel investigating the firing of officer Patrick LeMaire, who fatally shot an unarmed Mexican national.

LeMaire was reinstated last summer by administrative judge who ruled the firing was unjustified. After the officer was reinstated, Ms. Hart appointed a panel to investigate allegations that an internal affairs document used in the LeMaire investigation was altered.

Prosecutors say Vines called his deputy, Greg Holliday, the night before Holliday was to appear before the panel and tried to influence his testimony. Vines allegedly lied when testifying before the panel about whether he had discussed the probe with a subordinate.

The Dallas County District Attorney's Office initially sought seven felony perjury indictments against Vines. A Dallas County grand jury returned one misdemeanor indictment against the chief.

Airline pact calls for 4 percent raises

FORT WORTH (AP) — American Airlines pilots reportedly would receive annual 4 percent raises under a three-year contract expected to be ratified this week.

A tentative accord reached Saturday between the airline and the Allied Pilots Association would provide annual increases each Aug. 31, newspapers reported Sunday. In addition, each of the nearly 9,000 pilots covered by the pact would receive a lump-sum retroactive raise of 8 percent dating to Jan. 1, 1990, reports said.

Union directors are expected to approve the agreement this week, said Allied Pilots spokesman Tom Hunt.

"I think this is something that American and the pilots can all live with," he said.

The contract replaces one that expired more than a year ago and ends 16 months of talks. The National Mediation Board has been moderating the pilots' contract negotiations at a Washington hotel since Jan. 7.

Talks broke down Jan. 30 when the union rejected an offer that would have increased American's cockpit costs by more than $1 billion over four years. The breakdown raised the prospect of a 30-day cooling period that, under the bargaining terms, would be required before a strike.

Mediator Harry Bickford pushed the two sides back to the table Monday and kept them there virtually around-the-clock Thursday and Friday. In statements announcing the agreement, the sides called Bickford's efforts "extraordinary."

However, Bickford said he never doubted an agreement would be reached.

The two sides left a handful of issues, including pilot contributions to American's health plan and retiree medical coverage, to be decided by an arbitrator.

An abnormally high number of pilots called in sick during the December holiday period, the busiest for air travel. American accused the union of staging an illegal "sickout" and blamed pilots for the cancellation of about 1,000 flights between Christmas and New Year's.

The union, which represents 8,800 American pilots, denied the charge, saying the company was blaming them for weather problems and poor scheduling. American had tapped its pool of substitute pilots when the sick calls came in December. The company cut 11 percent of its flight schedule to avoid cancellations again in January, an action that prompted some layoffs.

Theater cancels anti-war play

ARLINGTON (AP) — A theater company is canceling its spring production of the rock musical "Hair," citing the play's anti-war sentiments as inappropriate during the Persian Gulf War.

Theatre Arlington instead will perform Beth Henley's Pulitzer Prize-winning play "Crimes of the Heart" beginning in May.

"We're just trying to be sensitive to what the community really would want to see at this time," theater managing director Penny Patrick said of Friday's announcement. "We're all in a real patriotic mood and being supportive of the troops."

The popular 1967 musical, which featured nudity in the original production, depicted anti-Vietnam War sentiments and the burning of draft cards.

"We very much wanted to do the production and were very excited about it, but we felt we had to make a change," Ms. Patrick said.

The decision was made without public pressure, she said.

A national touring company performed "Hair" last week before a sold-out crowd and a second near-capacity audience at Dallas' Majestic Theatre.

Hispanics, Asians seek coalition

HOUSTON (AP) — Hispanic and Asian leaders in Houston hope to capitalize on significant population gains over the last decade by forging a coalition to gain greater political representation during the next five years.

Officials from the two minority communities have been meeting privately during the past few weeks to explore ways Hispanics and Asians can help each other, The Houston Post reported Sunday.

"These are quiet people, working behind the scenes, low-profile types, low-key individuals who are working to bring the two groups together for the long run," said Glenda Joe, founder of the Council of Asian American Organizations.

The 1990 census figures released last week showed dramatic increases for the city's Hispanic and Asian populations since 1980. The number of Hispanics rose 60 percent to more than 450,000 — just 10,000 fewer than the number of blacks, the city's largest minority group, which grew only 4 percent for the decade to 460,000. And the Asian population jumped 104 percent to just over 67,000.

The Anglo population, meanwhile, decreased 12 percent to about 650,000 residents.

Overall, the Anglo population represents 40 percent of the city's 1.6 million residents. Blacks and Hispanics each comprise 28 percent, while Asians account for 4 percent of the population.

On Friday, Mayor Kathy Whitmire asked the City Council to study the possibility of changing the governing body's ethnic and racial makeup to be more reflective of the city's new demographics.

Currently there are nine whites, five blacks and one Hispanic on the 15-member board. Mrs. Whitmire asked the council's Human Relations Committee to submit recommendations by April 17 for restructuring the body.

"Our thinking is that if we're going to run someone in the next five years for City Council, it's going to have to be someone who's American-born with good English skills and a lot of savvy dealing with the political structure here," Ms. Joe said. "Right now, American-born Asians are a minority. Fully 85 percent of the 200,000 Asians who have come here since 1985 are lacking fluency in English and the ability to stand toe-to-toe with the political entities (in place)."

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠83 ♡QJ93 ◇AKQ876 ♣7
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Only 12 points in high cards, but as little as ace-fifth in hearts with partner could be enough for game. That makes the hand just too good for a simple heart raise. Show your playing strength by jumping to three hearts.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠QJ ♡9832 ◇AKQ876 ♣7
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Still 12 points in high cards, but this time your queen-jack of spades are, at best, doubtful assets. Now we feel that two hearts adequately describes your values.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q84 ♡J ◇KQ ♠AKQJ1073
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Dbl

What action do you take?
A.—You have at least eight tricks in your own hand. There's only one way to tell partner how good you really are—redouble. A jump to three clubs would describe a good six-card or longer suit with not much outside.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK63 ♡K72 ◇632 ♠954
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Dbl
Pass	2 ♡	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner's pass has shown a minimum opening bid with no clear-cut course of action. While your side rates to have the balance of power, your king of hearts is of doubtful value and your flat distribution is a disadvantage. Pass.

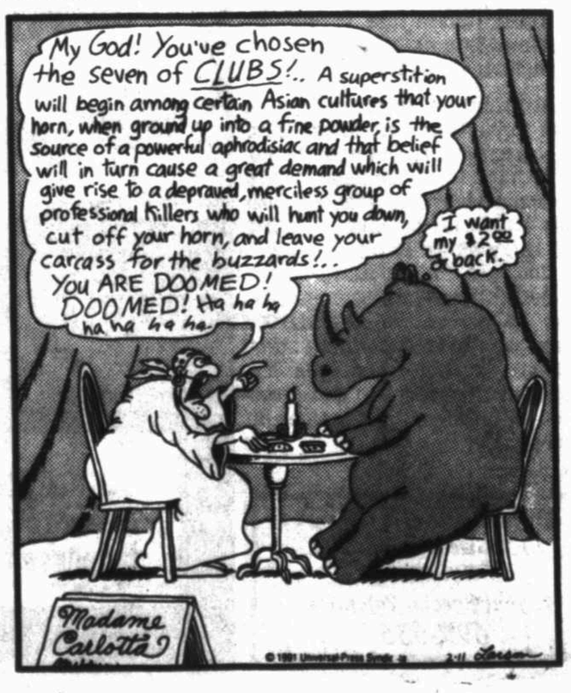

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK63 ♡K72 ◇632 ♠954
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Dbl
Pass	2 ♡	Pass	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner has heard the enemy auction die at two hearts, so he knows you have fair values. Rather than let the enemy buy the hand cheaply, he is competing. Don't hang him for refusing to sell out. Pass. Suits may not break too kindly.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK83 ♡Q93 ◇AK762 ♠A
Partner opens the bidding with a weak two-bid in hearts, showing at least a six-card suit and a hand weaker than opening bid strength. What do you bid now?
A.—If partner has the two top heart honors, a grand slam in hearts ought to be a superb bet—except in the unlikely event that partner holds three low diamonds. The way to find out is with the Grand Slam Force. Jump to five no trump, instructing partner to bid a grand slam with two of the three top honors in his suit.

'Farewell Tour' isn't, dancer Nureyev says

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Ballet dancer Rudolf Nureyev says fans should pay no attention to the fact that his tour is billed as "Nureyev & Friends: The Farewell Tour."

Nureyev

"This is not a farewell tour," he said in a interview published Sunday in The Tennessean. "It was not my idea to call it that. There are so many requests for engagements to dance still coming in that I see no point in stopping."

Nureyev defected from the Soviet Union in 1961 and has danced with more than 30 of the world's major dance companies since then. He also has choreographed more than 25 productions. But he doesn't expect to stop anytime soon.

"I feel good and it keeps me healthy, so I don't know when I'll stop. If work comes along you do it, and you just don't take a vacation."

NEW ORLEANS — Blues king B.B. King will lead a group that rarely calls upon big names to lead its part of the Mardi Gras parade and he's excited about doing it.

He said the reason is "because I've never even been there for a Mardi Gras, never have."

Some Carnival parade groups use celebrities to attract crowds, but the Zulu Social Aid and Pleasure Club isn't among them.

Zulu, which traditionally picks a king from within its ranks, crowned jazzman Louis Armstrong king in 1949, and jazz bandleader Woody Herman was a celebrity guest rider in the late 1960s.

The 65-year-old King, whose five Grammies include a lifetime achievement award, said he knows he'll have to get up well before dawn for the parade, the first to roll on Fat Tuesday, adding:

"That's all right. It's worth it to me. I'm crazy about New Orleans, anyway.

"Over the many years that I've been coming ... it's always been Mardi Gras time. I've just left before it started, or it just finished when I came in. So I've been looking forward to this for a long time."

TAMPA, Fla. — David Copperfield may be a master magician, but even he couldn't fill the rows of empty seats for the taping of his CBS-TV special.

So production personnel started calling local temporary job agencies.

Several hundred people showed up late last week at the Tampa Bay Performing Arts Center, where they were handpicked to be in the audience. But dozens of Tampa's jobless who had been promised a free magic show and a minimum of four hours' work didn't make the cut.

"They were drunk, They were unclean. They were rude and crude, and David Copperfield doesn't need that kind of audience," said production coordinator Karen Woods.

"They should have known these are working people," responded Mike Burger of the Labor World temporary job agency.

Eighty of the 87 people he rounded up were rejected.

"Apparently they just made mass calls and picked out the best dressed in the 18-to-40 age bracket," Burger said.

Ms. Woods said the producers went "above and beyond the call of duty" in compensating those who were turned away.

"Even though they were drunk, unclean and verbally abusive, we ended up paying them a percentage of the mileage for coming out here," she said. "We paid the minimum."

MALIBU, Calif. — Cher apparently will get her mansion and bulky security walls built in this seaside enclave after all.

Cher

The California Coastal Commission approved plans for the actress-singer's future Mediterranean-style home and 10-foot-high security wall by an 11-1 vote.

The panel reserved the right to approve landscaping, the color of the 15,822-square-foot mansion and where the wall can be built.

"The commission was concerned about the visual impacts of the construction," said Chuck Damm, the commission's deputy director. "Given the size and prominence of the property, they wanted to ensure that the colors blend into the natural environment."

Cher originally put the plan up for a vote last month. It was postponed after several commissioners objected to the security walls that will embrace the 2-acre property.

For a profile of actor John Goodman that appeared in yesterday's New York Times, journalist Peter de Jonge interviewed Al Pacino, who worked with Goodman in "Sea of Love."

De Jonge mentions that to interview Pacino, he had to comply with the actor's demands:

Questions were submitted in writing. Pacino dictated his response into a tape recorder. His assistant transcribed the responses, photocopied the transcriptions and then faxed them back to de Jonge.

'Murder Mystery' unraveled

By Elizabeth Edwin
Lifestyle Editor

On Friday evening at 7 p.m., a group of Midlanders gathered at the Midland Hilton Hotel Ballroom for cocktails, dinner and dancing in hopes of becoming one of the next members of "The Black Diamond Society," a very elite and privileged club. But they found instead murder.

At around 3 p.m. that afternoon, the most recent Black Diamond inductee, Chester Blande, was found victim of a brutal knife attack in the ballroom. The body was discovered by Nigel Livingwage, a reporter for the Midland Tatler. Blande was an investment counselor to Douglass C. Treadwell, a very wealthy man who created the Black Diamond Society.

Although this reads like a typical police report, this murder was anything but typical. It was the beginning of an evening of "Murder, Mystery, Music and Mayhem" created by Capers of Los Angeles to benefit the Community and Senior Services (CSS) and Visiting Nurse Programs (VNP) of Midland; a murder mystery party.

As approximately 80 guests mingled in the ballroom lobby during the cocktail hour, actors and actresses portraying various characters in the evening's "whodunit" talked with guests revealing clues about themselves and the other characters involved in the caper. The task of each guest then became to unravel the information, and solve the crime.

But there was more than one murder to be solved on this night of mayhem. In fact, before the evening was over, the only character left alive was Fabiola (played by Lynn Chaplin-Noe of Capers), who was a gypsy recently retained by Treadwell as his psychic.

Midlanders cast as characters of the evening included, Treadwell played by Bill Shaner, Crystal Treadwell played by Jan Phares, Bambi Bedwell played by Melissa Martin, Laughlin Koffin played by Terry Martin, Harry T. Mudd played by David Whitaker, Toothpick Hoolihan played by David Hunt and Steve Edwards (director of CSS) who played himself. Nigel Livingway was played by Buzz Noe of Capers of Los Angeles.

At 8 p.m., the guest investigators moved into the ballroom where dinner was served. Each table of eight became a team to solve the murders and were given additional opportunities to talk with each of the characters in order to acquire more clues to the crime.

During dinner, an unexpected character appeared. He was Nigel Livingway's identical twin brother, Dick, also portrayed by Noe. Numerous clues were divulged, yet the task of unraveling the mysterious deaths continued to plague the investigative teams.

To add to the confusion, Hoolihan — who was the personal bodyguard to Treadwell — was thought to have been murdered several times before his actual death. He continued to reappear throughout the mystery with new accusations to confuse the case further.

Even when the murder was solved, only one team of investigators, the Capers Cops, were able to answer all the questions correctly.

But once the murders were solved, guest were invited to dance to the music of "The Shades" until 1 a.m.

According to Ann Dunbar of the CSS and VNP, "This wasn't initiated as a big fund-raiser this year, so we didn't make much. This year was basically a pilot just to see what we thought of it. It was really a lot of fun," Ms. Dunbar said.

Although the final decision has not yet been made, CSS and VNP are considering doing the "Murder Mystery" party again next year as a benefit, but on a much larger scale. So, would-be investigators have a little time to "bone up" on their skills before possibly having a "shot" at next year's mayhem.

DEAR ABBY

World War II brides say 'yes!' to family

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Mom or Not," who debated whether to start a family before her husband leaves for combat duty in the Persian Gulf:

Van Buren

My Air Force husband and I made that decision on our wedding night in 1942. He didn't want me to be burdened with a child if the worst should occur. I told him I wanted a part of him — a child of his — in case he didn't return.

Two months and two days later, his bomber exploded in midair, and all 10 of his crew were killed instantly. Eight months later our baby girl was born. She is her father's daughter. When I look at her beautiful face, I see him. She is everything her father was — smart, well-liked and successful. She is now happily married and is everything a mother hopes her child will be.

Knowing that I was carrying his child sustained me during the months after his death. Single parenthood was never a burden for me. His military pension was adequate. I later married a fine man who accepted my daughter unconditionally, and gave me three more children who love and look up to their older sister.

Never, for one minute, have I regretted our decision. For me, it was an easy choice. — DOROTHY J. BURKE, WHITTIER, CALIF.

DEAR DOROTHY: Read on for more letters from readers who had to make that decision:

DEAR ABBY: Claude and I were married during World War II. We both knew that he might have to go to war. We had gone together for four years and were very much in love. I wanted a baby in case he got shipped overseas. He said no; it would be too hard for me if he never came home. (I won.) I had my baby alone while he was in England waiting to be shipped to Germany.

When our baby girl was 2 months old, I got word that Claude was missing in action! I was devastated, but thanked God I had a part of him. I later got word that Claude was a prisoner of war in Germany. We were lucky — he survived to return home after the liberation. We had two more children, and hope to celebrate our 50th anniversary next year. It wasn't easy, but I wouldn't change a thing. — PAT FROM WEST VIRGINIA

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "Mom or Not" tugged at my heartstrings and brought back memories of World War II. We were newly married, my husband was an aviation cadet, and we faced the same quandary — should we have a baby or not with all the uncertainties of war. We resolved it intelligently — by writing on paper all the pros and cons of having a child. The cons won hands down, so we tore up the paper and did what we both wanted to do. I got pregnant, and we've never regretted it. Sign me ... CONTENTED GRANDMA IN LA JOLLA

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Mom or Not," who was debating about whether she and her husband should have a baby, knowing that he'd be going to serve in the Persian Gulf and might not return: Her husband should investigate the local sperm banks and consider making a deposit before he leaves. And should he not return, she'd have the choice of bearing his child. That's what I did. Sign me ... FARSIGHTED IN SACRAMENTO

Who's No. 1? No doubt about it

■ Stacey Augmon's 31 points help Nevada-Las Vegas show Arkansas the door to the Razorbacks' own facility.

Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — There's a big difference between No. 1 and No. 2. And that's what has UNLV rolling toward the record books.

Everything that might have worked against the top-ranked Rebels was there. Playing No. 2 Arkansas. On the road. Even trailing at halftime for the first time all season. It didn't matter.

With Stacey Augmon leading the way with 31 points, the top-ranked Runnin' Rebels ran away to a 112-105 victory over the Razorbacks on Sunday for their 31st consecutive win.

In ending the Razorbacks' winning streak at 20 games, UNLV withstood the first-half pressure of a record crowd of 9,640 at Barnhill Arena and went on a 16-2 run to start the second half to take control of the game.

Top 25

The Rebels (20-0) trailed 50-46 at the half — the first time they've trailed at halftime since last year's Final Four against Georgia Tech — before seizing control and taking a 62-52 lead with 16:19 left. Later, UNLV increased its lead to 23 points.

"The atmosphere was quiet and confident. The coaches went over the things we didn't do well in the first half and we just came and played hard and played like UNLV," Augmon said.

UNLV, trying to become the first undefeated team since Indiana in 1976 and the first repeat national champ since UCLA in 1973, had beaten 19 other opponents by an average of 32 points.

Can the Rebels do it for 16 more games and reclaim the title with an '0' on the right side of their record?

"We don't think about that, seriously," UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian said. "We have not talked about that all year and we will not talk about it now."

Arkansas (23-2) tried to keep pace, but Augmon, Anderson Hunt and Larry Johnson — who totaled 82 points — wouldn't let them.

"You never see teams that play great defense run and teams that run usually play soft defense," Tarkanian said. "This team is so focused and so tough mentally. These guys go both ways and they do it for 40 minutes."

Arkansas closed to 66-61 with 14:27 to play before UNLV turned it on again, scoring nine straight points and forcing the Razorbacks to use the last of their timeouts with 12:45 left.

UNLV extended the lead to 98-75 with 6:23 left and a late rally by Arkansas wasn't nearly enough. The Rebels became the eighth top-ranked team to win a No. 1 vs. No. 2 matchup in 10 meetings over 10 years.

Barkley outshines healthy opponents

■ For a guy who wasn't supposed to play, Charles Barkley did quite a job in the NBA All-Star Game.

Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Charles Barkley, a reluctant All-Star, showed no reluctance to go to the basket Sunday.

The powerful forward for the Philadelphia 76ers, playing on a stress fracture in his left foot, won MVP honors in the league's annual All-Star Game with 17 points and 22 rebounds, leading the East to a 116-114 victory. The game was not decided until the final seconds when the West's Karl Malone was called for basket interference on a 3-point attempt by teammate Kevin Johnson.

Barkley wanted to miss the All-Star game to rest his ailing foot and sprained ankle. But he returned to the 76ers four games before All-Star weekend, and was ordered to play by the NBA.

"I'm thrilled you volunteered to be here," commissioner David Stern needled Barkley at the award ceremony.

Barkley's 22 rebounds were the most of any All-Star since Wilt Chamberlain grabbed 22 in 1967, but five short of Bob Pettit's 1962 record.

"I'm glad I came down here," Barkley said. "My foot was hurting a little, but I hope I can come back strong in the second half of the season."

Barkley also wanted to skip All-Star weekend a year ago to rest another injury, but he was ordered to play or risk suspension then, too.

"I had a really good time here,' Barkley said. "The didn't do anything until today. I didn't practice on Saturday."

Barkley had 11 rebounds in each half for the East, which improved its All-Star game victory margin to 27-14.

NBA Stars

Malone and Magic Johnson spoke good-naturedly of Barkley's injury and volatile personality.

"I hate Charles because throws everybody out of the way and then he complains to the ref when he gets nicked," Johnson said. "That's his way. But with his rebounding, Charles set the tone for the way the game was played."

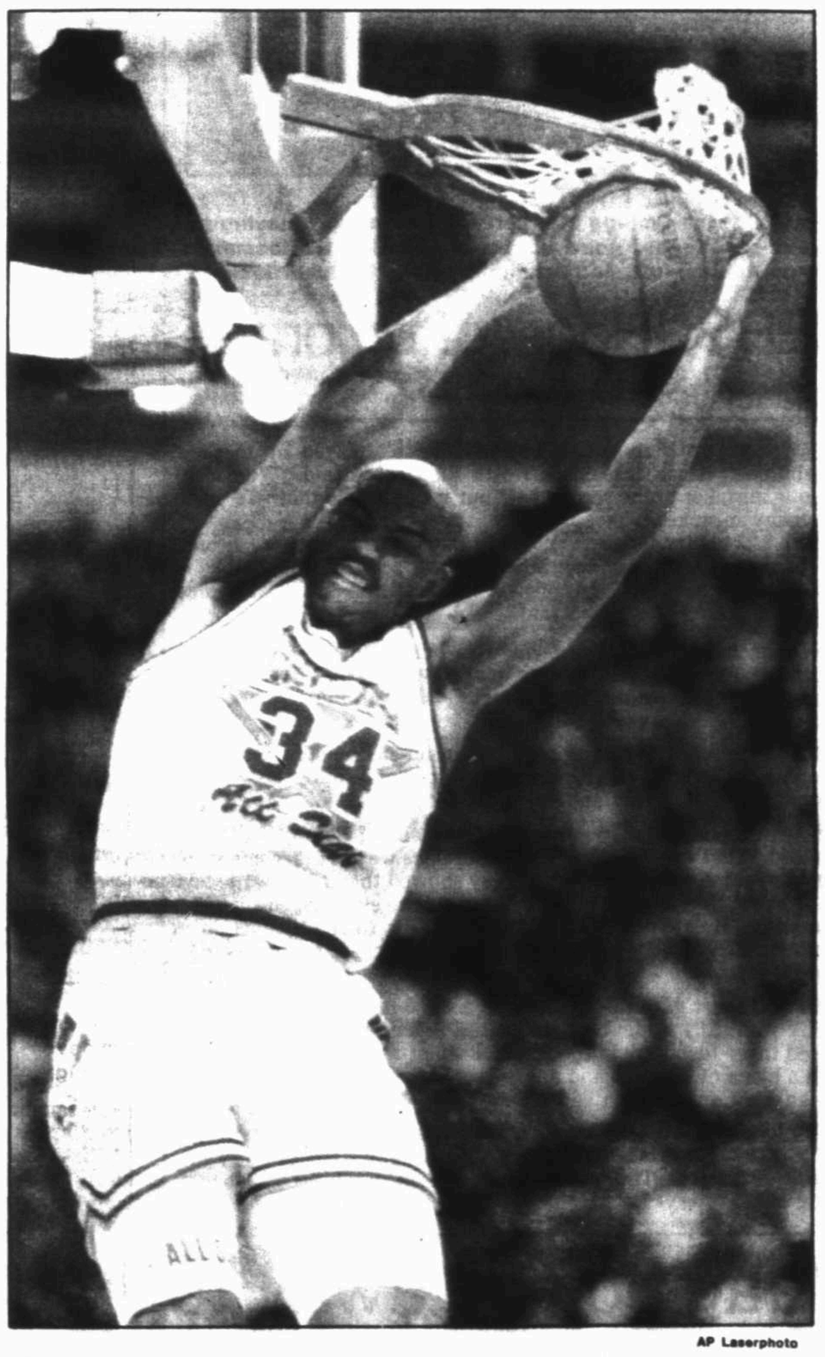

"He has a stress fracture — yeah, right," Malone said. "I think he was setting everybody up, that he was going to play soft."

The game was close most of the way, with 20 lead changes. The West climbed within two points four times in the final minutes without catching up.

Playing the first seven minutes of the fourth quarter with forward Tom Chambers at center because of David Robinson's foul trouble, the West pulled ahead 100-95 before the East regained control with a 14-4 burst. Michael Jordan, scoreless in the third quarter following a 19-point first half, had two baskets during the rally and finished with 26 points, although he turned the ball over 10 times.

"Charles won the MVP and I'm happy for him," Jordan said. "We deserved to win the game. Charles is certainly an all-around player. He's what I call a utility man."

Robinson, who had four fouls at halftime, returned with 5:01 left and quickly converted a three-point play to close the West deficit to 109-107. Robinson's rebound basket off a missed free throw made it 112-110 with 2:43 to go, and the West drew within two points two more times in the final minutes.

Pavin beats rival in playoff

Copley News Service

INDIAN WELLS, Calif. — Mark O'Meara was not exactly shocked when Corey Pavin holed a 40-foot chip on the first playoff hole Sunday that decided the $1.1 million Bob Hope Chrysler Classic.

"He's known for having a good short game, and he's a heck of a competitor," O'Meara said. "I wasn't discounting the fact that he could chip in, but I looked at the lie he had and it wasn't that good ... He's done that kind of crap to me before."

"He's done that kind of crap to me before, too," countered Pavin. "He did the same thing to me at Kapalua (Hawaii) in 1985. I'd say turnabout is fair play."

Pavin's chip-in, followed by an O'Meara birdie putt from 15 feet that stayed out of the cup, ended a tournament in which birdies were made by the bushel, a tournament in which the two combatants left at the end have a rivalry that goes back over a dozen years and was especially heated in college.

Pavin was a sophomore at UCLA when O'Meara was a senior at Long Beach State. By Pavin's recollection, he won five or six tournaments and O'Meara was second in four or five.

"I had Mark's number that year," Pavin said.

The number at which Pavin and O'Meara ended regulation play for the Hope was 29 under par, breaking the tournament record by two shots. It was the lowest total relative to par in PGA Tour history.

Twenty-seven under par had been achieved twice before in 90-hole tournaments — by Craig Stadler and Lanny Wadkins in the 1985 Hope and by Greg Norman in the 1986 Panasonic Las Vegas Invitational. In 72-hole events, Mike Souchak was 27 under par in winning the 1955 Texas Open and Ben Hogan 27 under for the 1945 Portland Invitational.

Pavin got to a 331 total for 90 holes with a 65 yesterday at Indian Wells Country Club, O'Meara to the same number via a 67. Tim Simpson (67) finished one stroke back. Raymond Floyd missed the playoff by two shots even though he played Indian Wells in 8-under-par 64 for the second day in a row.

Twenty-two players had figures of 20 under or better for five days in pleasant weather conditions and over four Coachella Valley courses that were in ideal playing shape.

It was a tough tournament to lose. Listen to the litany of O'Meara:

"I played 90 holes, made three bogeys, 32 birdies, break the tournament record, and I lose," O'Meara said. "I'm disappointed, but I'm not hanging my head."

O'Meara took a one-shot lead over Simpson and two-stroke advantage over Pavin entering the final round. They made up the final threesome.

Among them, they made 18 birdies and one bogey yesterday.

The bogey, by Simpson at the 446-yard 10th hole — the one he said he considered the toughest on the course — proved the difference in his making the playoff. He put his second shot in a bunker and was unable to make a 12-foot putt to save par.

One behind O'Meara and Pavin for the last three holes, Simpson had chances at them all. A bunker shot at 16 came to rest inches from the cup. A 20-foot putt at 17 rolled past, tickling the left edge of the cup. A chip for eagle on 18 bounced left when it hit the green.

Simpson, who said he wanted to win the tournament for his brother-in-law, John Termini, a murder victim on New Year's day in Atlanta, said any one one of them easily could have fallen.

"I just wasn't supposed to win," Simpson said. "Only God can explain to me why the ones at 16 and 17 stayed out."

O'Meara never had a comfortable margin on Simpson. But after five holes he had made two birdies, Pavin nothing but pars, and O'Meara was four ahead.

"I hit a bad drive on No. 5, almost out of bounds," Pavin said. "I got upset with myself; that seemed to snap me out of it, and I got going."

Cowboys await draft

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — This year's draft is the one the Dallas Cowboys have been waiting for.

For two seasons under coach Jimmy Johnson, the Cowboys traded away such players as Herschel Walker and Steve Walsh for draft choices in hopes of paving the way for a return to the playoffs.

NFL

Which is why the Cowboys, who have three No. 1 picks in the April 21-22 draft, kept a high profile at the week-long NFL scouting combine.

"We believe this draft will give us immediate help and also provide a solid nucleus for years to come," said Dick Mansperger, the club's director of college scouting. "It will be a long time before we have three picks in the first round again. Not many teams get that opportunity, but we do through some trades we think were astute.

"We're very happy with our draft situation and excited over what it can produce, if we do our homework."

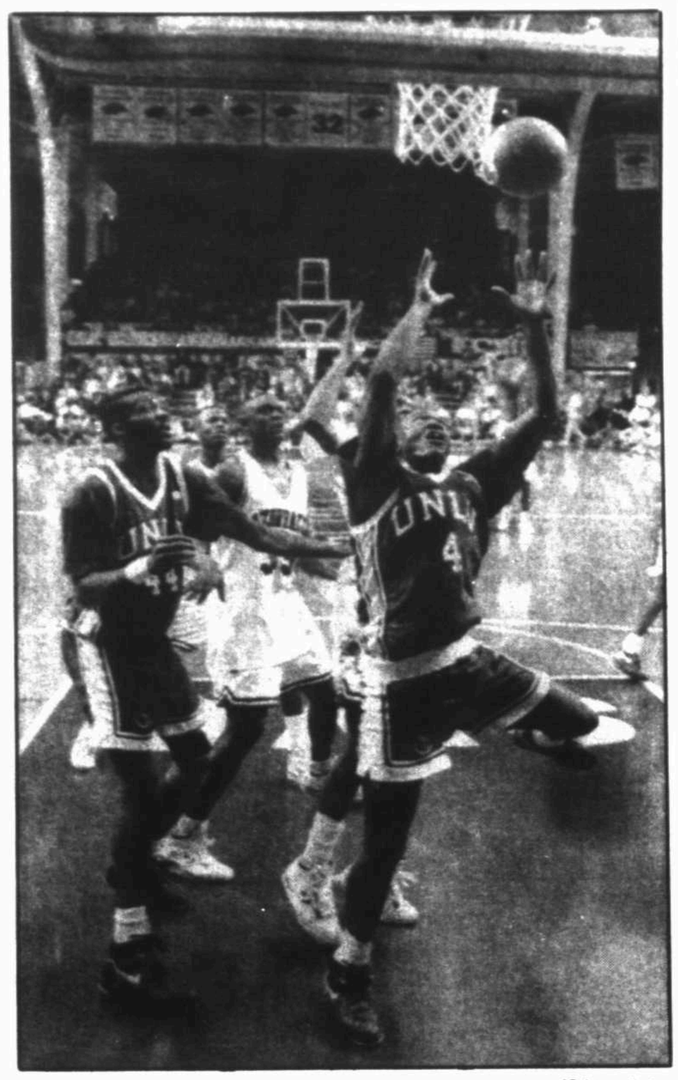

In 1989, the Cowboys won one game in Johnson's first year. Last year, they were 7-9 and were eliminated from a playoff berth on the final weekend of the season. Dallas last made the playoffs in 1985.

"We made major progress last year and feel we would have been in the playoffs if we had our quarterback for those last two games," Mansperger said.

REBS: Hogs offer praise

(From 1C)

"We were up four at half but they hadn't played up to their capabilities," Razorbacks coach Nolan Richardson said. "We had to cut our mistakes in the second half but we didn't do that. We made too many mistakes."

With 2:27 to play, Johnson and Todd Day of Arkansas were ejected for unsportmanslike conduct when a brief scuffle broke out.

"Larry told me that Todd threw a punch at him and what was he supposed to do," Tarkanian said.

Neither Johnson nor Day wanted to talk about it.

Official Jim Burr said neither player was ejected for fighting, something that would have carried an automatic one-game suspension.

Hunt finished with 26 points and Johnson 25, including 19 in the second half. Day led the Razorbacks, whose only other loss was to Arizona, with 26 points and Oliver Miller had 22.

"Their run in the first 5 minutes of the second half surprised me," Day said. "That was the key to the game. Once we got the momentum back, the game was already over. They showed they are No. 1 today. Defensively, they are one of the best teams I've ever played against."

In taking its halftime lead, Arkansas got its final 12 points on 3-pointers, including Lee Mayberry's 45-second clock beater with 13 seconds left.

An 11-0 spurt gave the Razorbacks a 36-30 lead with 7:16 to play. UNLV went 3:04 without a field goal as Arkansas' pressure defense forced three turnovers in the run and Miller asserted himself inside with a block of Augmon and a length-of-the-court bullet pass to Day for an easy dunk which capped the run.

The loss also snapped Arkansas' 19-game home winning streak.

"They're a great team with great talent. They need to go to the NBA," Miller said. "They're No. 1, but I also think we're capable of being No. 1."

'Cats need overtime to win

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — After the adrenaline flow had slowed, Arizona coach Lute Olson called Brian Williams "a star of stars."

Williams, though, had been one bad pass and 26 seconds away from being the goat.

Williams, Arizona's imposing 6-foot-11 forward, nearly had a critical mistake overshadow a career-best performance of 32 points and 14 rebounds. In the end, the No. 5 Wildcats forced overtime, then beat No. 14 UCLA 105-94 in the Pacific-10 Conference.

With UCLA pressing after a turnover, Williams threw a blind pass right to the Bruins' Gerald Madkins, who converted the gift into a slam dunk that gave UCLA an 85-84 lead with 26 seconds left in regulation.

"I couldn't believe I let that happen," Williams said. "I figured someone would break to the ball. I faked it, but couldn't hold it.

"It feels really good to find a way out of that," Williams said.

Sean Rooks missed a shot for Arizona, Mitchell Butler rebounded and was fouled. Butler, 0-for-10 at the line up to then in Pac-10 play, missed his first free throw but made his second with six seconds left.

UCLA's Don MacLean knocked away a pass on Arizona's final possession, but Chris Mills picked up the ball on the baseline and scored at the buzzer for an 86-86 tie.

"It was a cool play by Mills," Olson said. "He got into foul trouble early. I don't think he wants to remember any part of this game until the last play."

"There were only six seconds left when we got the ball back," Mills said. "I just threw it up, and fortunately it just went in before the buzzer.

"I had a feeling that if we could send it into OT, we'd win," Mills said.

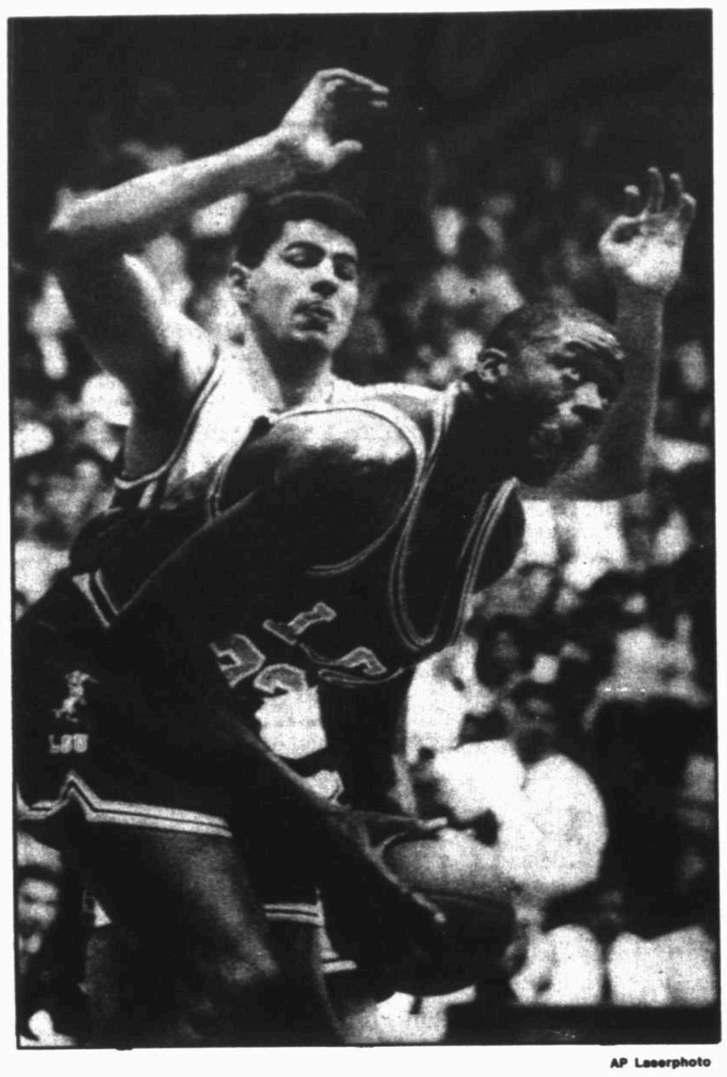

Williams made the bucket that put the Wildcats ahead for good at 92-90 with 2:45 left in overtime. He had four points in the extra period and Mills had five.

Arizona (19-4 overall, 8-3 Pac-10) opened a one-game lead over surprising Washington State (7-4) in the conference. UCLA fell to 17-6 and back to .500 in the conference at 5-5.

Matt Muehlebach added 15 points for Arizona. MacLean scored 28 to push his career total to 1,781, fourth-best in school history. He passed Bill Walton, who scored 1,767 points from 1972-74. Tracy Murray had 23 and Madkins 18 for UCLA.

Williams scored Arizona's first four baskets of the second half in a little more than three minutes to give the Cats a 54-49 lead. He made a baseline jumper, a fallaway jumper, another baseline shot and then a layup when the Bruins were caught napping on an inbounds play.

UCLA closed to 54-53 at 16:28 following consecutive putbacks by Shon Tarver and Butler, but Arizona went on an 11-2 run for a 65-55 lead with 13:12 left. Rooks made a three-point play, Matt Othick and Mills made 3-point shots and Williams added his fifth bucket of the half.

Williams drew his third and fourth fouls in a span of 22 seconds, and MacLean and Madkins converted three-point plays to cut the deficit to 67-61.

With Williams out for nearly five minutes, the Bruins got consecutive hoops from Keith Owens, Murray and Butler to pull to 69-67.

With Williams back in, Murray made a 3-pointer, MacLean two free throws and Madkins one free throw for a 75-73 UCLA lead.

Williams matched his previous career high of 28, set against South Florida in the NCAA tournament last season, with an inside bucket for an 84-81 lead with two minutes left. Murray missed a 3-pointer with 35 seconds left, but MacLean made an 18-footer to close to 84-83.

Williams' previous career rebounding high was 13 against UCLA in last season's Pac-10 tournament championship game.

Williams "had a tremendous game," Olson said. "Another key is that he defended Don MacLean for a long perod of time with four fouls."

UCLA coach Jim Harrick said he didn't see Mills take his shot, "but then I saw it when the ball was in the air and I knew it was good.

"We had lost a little momentum (going into OT), because we were very disappointed in the way (regulation) ended," Harrick said. "When you're dejected, you have to pick yourself up. They were lucky to be in it and were excited. We were down."

UCLA tied the game three times in the first half but didn't take its first lead until 4:16 before intermission. MacLean had consecutive rebounds, throwing a long pass to Darrick Martin for a fast break layup and a 37-35 lead, then starting a possession capped by Madkins' two free throws just 24 seconds later.

No. 4 Indiana 81, Purdue 63

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Sophomore Calbert Cheaney scored 18 points to go over the 1,000-point career mark as fourth-ranked Indiana beat Purdue in the Big Ten.

The victory gave the Hoosiers (22-2) the Big Ten lead with a 10-1 record to Ohio State's 9-1, and completed a two-game sweep of state rival Purdue this season. Indiana beat the Boilermakers 65-62 in West Lafayette last month.

Trailing 41-27 at halftime, Purdue ran off nine straight points to get within 46-40 with 13:04 left in the game.

Matt Painter and Linc Darner had consecutive 3-pointers in the spurt for the Boilermakers, who dropped their fifth straight Big Ten game to fall to 11-10 overall and 3-8 in the conference.

Cheaney had two baskets, including a driving layup that made him the fifth Indiana sophomore to score 1,000 points, and Pat Graham and Eric Anderson added baskets to push Indiana's lead to 54-43 with 9:27 left.

The Hoosiers maintained at least an six-point lead the rest of the way, scoring mostly from the free throw line.

Indiana freshman Damon Bailey added 13 points and Jamal Meeks and Graham 10 each.

No. 6 Duke 88, No. 19 LSU 70

DURHAM, N.C. — The crowd taunted Shaquille O'Neal and Duke tamed him.

Holding LSU's O'Neal to a season-low 15 points, the No. 6 Blue Devils got 24 points from Christian Laettner.

O'Neal, the 7-foot-1 sophomore center, was game averaging 27 points and leading the nation in rebounding with 15 per game. But, with the crowd at Cameron Indoor Stadium harrassing him with derisive cheers and Duke players hounding him, he was ineffective.

O'Neal scored only four points in the first half as he missed more than 10 minutes because of foul trouble. His 15 points matched his season-low against Auburn, and he finished with just 10 rebounds.

Duke (21-4) has won six straight games and 11 of its last 12. LSU is 15-7.

Wake Forest 74
No. 11 Virginia 66

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Freshman Randolph Childress scored 11 of his 19 points in the final 10 minutes as Wake Forest knocked off Virginia for the road-weary Cavaliers' third loss in four days.

Wake Forest (14-7 overall, 5-4 Atlantic Coast Conference) won its fourth straight game and beat Virginia for just the second time in their last 12 meetings.

Virginia (17-7, 5-5) had been on a six-game winning streak before losing by 12 points at Duke on Thursday and by 19 at North Carolina on Saturday.

Wake Forest erased a nine-point halftime deficit by hitting 10 of its first 12 shots in the second half.

After the Demon Deacons went up 56-55 on a 3-pointer by Childress, there were four ties and three lead changes before Wake Forest went ahead to stay at 65-63 with 3:53 left when Chris King tipped in a missed free throw by Robert Siler.

That basket started an 11-3 Wake Forest run to end the game. Childress, a freshman who one day earlier had scored a career-high 28 in an 86-74 victory over Georgia Tech, had five points as the Demon Deacons pulled away from Virginia over the final 2:19.

Maag bombs away to lead Owls

SWC Basketball

HOUSTON (AP) — Chase Maag scored 24 points, including five 3-pointers, to power the Rice Owls to a 79-69 Southwest Conference victory over Houston on Sunday.

Brent Scott added 17 points and 14 rebounds for the Owls (10-11 overall, 4-6 SWC). Houston (14-8, 6-5) was led by Tyrone Evans with 17 points and Alvaro Teheran with 16.

The victory snapped a four-game Rice losing streak against Houston and is only the Owls' fourth victory in 43 games against the Cougars.

After trailing 46-31 early in the second half, Houston came back and tied the score 57-57 with 7:02 left. A pair of 3-point shots by Maag and two inside baskets by Scott boosted the Owls to 67-59 with 4:01 left.

A 3-point basket by Byron Smith pulled Houston to 67-62, but Rice then scored 12 of the next 19 points.

With an 8-7 lead, Rice outscored Houston 15-4 to lead 23-11 with 13:01 left in the first half. The Owls increased that lead to 32-18 with 9:33 left.

Houston outscored Rice 11-4 in the final minutes of the first half to cut its deficit to 36-29 going into the second half.

"This is a great game, it had a great atmosphere and the crowd was going crazy," Maag said. "When they tied it up in the second half, we just kept working. We just kept running the things that had been working for us in the first half.

"I know where my shot is coming from in the offense now and it was falling for me today."

Daniel picks up old pace

LPGA

LAUDERHILL, Fla. (AP) — Bet' Daniel began the 1991 season where she left off last season — winning golf tournaments.

Daniel, the 1990 LPGA Player of the Year with seven victories, turned back challenges by Nancy Lopez and Laura Baugh with three birdies on the final eight holes Sunday to win the $500,000 Phar-Mor Classic.

Daniel had a closing round 69 at Inverrary Country Club for a 7-under-par 209 and a 2-shot victory over Lopez, runnerup at this event for the second year in a row.

Lopez pulled even with Daniel with a birdie at the eighth hole, then made three bogeys and two birdies on the next five holes. She finished with a 69 and a 211 total. Lopez lost by a stroke here a year ago when Jane Crafter sank a 40-foot birdie on the final hole.

Baugh closed with a final-round 69 to take third place, her best finish since 1986.

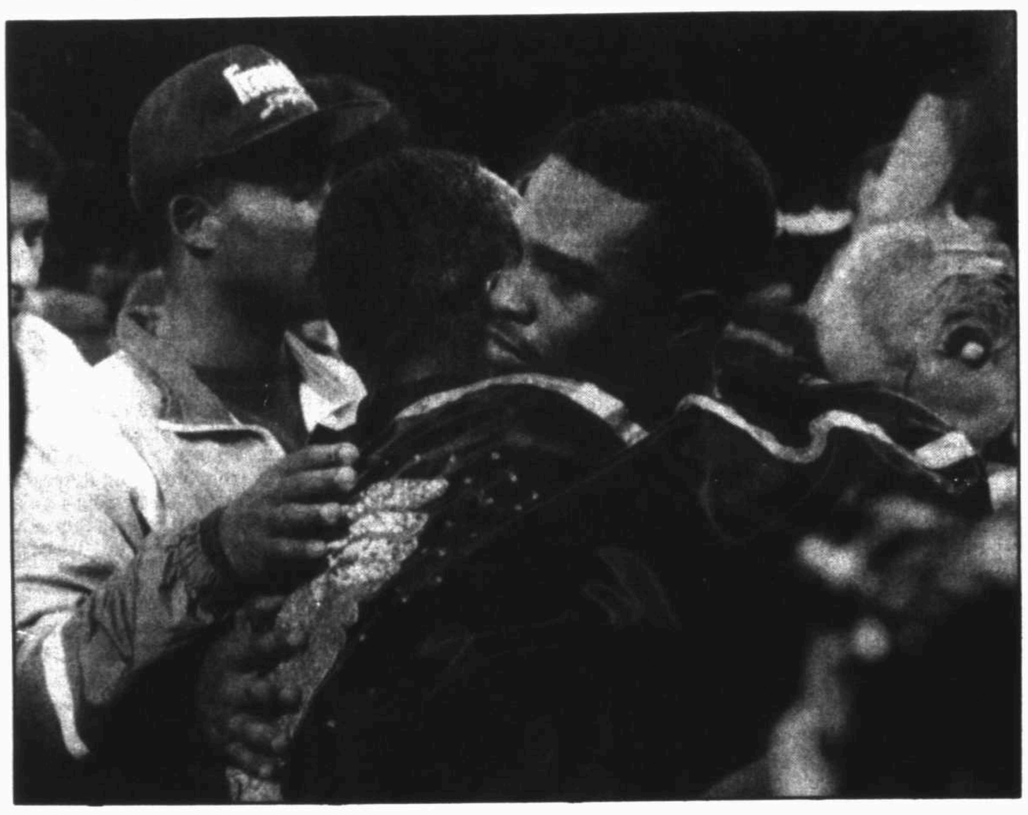

"I knew I would have to play very well coming down the stretch to beat Nancy," said Daniel, whose rivalry with Lopez goes back to their college days in the 1970s.

Charles seizes Suncoast title

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Bob Charles, capitalizing for the second year in a row when misfortune struck his playing partner on the 17th hole, beat Lee Trevino and George Archer by four strokes on Sunday to win the $450,000 Suncoast Classic senior tournament.

Charles won the 1989 tournament after leader Dave Hill triple-bogeyed the the par-5, 549-yard 17th. He won on Sunday when Trevino did the same.

Charles shot a 2-under-par 70 to complete the 54-hole Senior PGA Tour event at 6-under 210.

Leonard plans new life

Boxing

NEW YORK (AP) — It's time for Sugar Ray Leonard to hit something that doesn't hit back.

That's exactly what he's going to do.

"I want to do what I planned to do a long time ago — take golf lessons," Leonard said early Sunday following his 12-round battering by Terry Norris.

"It's time to get away physically from boxing," added Leonard, who will continue to be involved with the management of boxers.

Shortly after the end of his Madison Square Garden debut before 7,495 fans Saturday night, Leonard grabbed the ring microphone and said, "This is my last fight. Thank you for coming out. God bless you all."

Leonard, who will be 35 on May 17, had said he never again would announce his retirement.

It was not so much an announcement, however, as it was a confirmation. The flashing fists of the 23-year-old Norris and the three official scorecards already had announced that Leonard was finished.

"Trust me, this is it," Leonard said when reminded that he twice has come out of announced retirements.

"It was a sad victory because of the way I ended Ray's career," said Norris, who retained the World Boxing Council super welterweight (154-pound) title.

Leonard was knocked down in the second and seventh rounds.

Joyner shatters arbitration mark

Baseball

NEW YORK (AP) — Wally Joyner set an arbitration record when arbitrator Gil Vernon awarded the California Angels first baseman a salary of $2.1 million for the 1991 season.

It was the first $2 million salary ever awarded in arbitration and broke the previous record of $1,975,000, which Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees set in 1987.

Andre Dawson, Lonnie Smith and Benito Santiago all went to hearings requesting $2 million salaries, but they lost their cases.

"Obviously, I'm very happy about the outcome of the arbitration case," Joyner said of the award, announced late Saturday night. "It's finally over. There's two seasons in baseball, in-season and out-of-season. My out-of-season is finally over. Now I can start having fun."

While Joyner won, Philadelphia shortstop Dickie Thon and Cleveland second baseman Jerry Browne lost. That left the arbitration scoreboard tied 3-3 with 49 cases remaining. Hearings are scheduled through Feb. 21.

Browne's case also was decided by Vernon, who picked the Indians' offer of $800,000 over his request for $1.1 million. Arbitrator Reg Alleyne chose the Phillies' offer of $1.25 million over Thon's request for $1.7 million.

Joyner had won $1.75 million in arbitration last year.

Earnhardt earns solid sprint win

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt conquered the new Busch Clash format Sunday, hammering the rest of the 14-car field to win both halves of the sprint race for the previous year's pole winners.

Earnhardt, who failed to qualify for the last two runnings of the Clash, proved again that he's tough to beat in a trophy dash, winning the 50-mile race at Daytona International Speedway for the fourth time in six tries.

Earnhardt, defending NASCAR Winston Cup champion, drew sixth place on the starting grid. Geoff Bodine started fourth, just in front of Earnhardt.

Those two played follow-the-leader on the first lap around the 2.5-mile oval, with Bodine leading at the end of the lap and Earnhardt taking the lead on the second.

Cahill beats label, Gilbert

Tennis

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Australian Darren Cahill climbed out of his role as the underdog and came up with a singles title for the first time in nearly three years. A lines call going his way at a key moment helped.

Cahill won his second singles title in seven years as a professional by defeating Brad Gilbert 6-2, 3-6, 6-4 in the championship match of the Volvo-San Francisco tournament on Sunday.

"It was a matter of keeping the pressure on him in the third set," Cahill said. "It's hard to break through him. I've got to put a little more on the volleys or he'll get there. I felt if I let the last game slip away it would have been difficult to break serve."

Playing a strong serve-and-volley game, Cahill, 25, survived the assortment of spins, lobs and changes of pace thrown at him by Gilbert.

The match turned after Gilbert lost his cool over a line call in the 10th game of the third set. Serving at 30-30 down 4-5, Gilbert delivered a first serve that was called wide by the linesperson.

Gilbert screamed, "No. No. God, that was inside the line," then whacked the net with his racket in disgust.

Fare wars spark interest in tickets

■ Half price air tickets bring out hordes of bargain hunters.

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The phones were ringing off the hook at the Carlson Travel Network office in suburban Woodland Hills, keeping manager Ina Barmazel at her desk for a frantic six hours.

"We are going crazy," Barmazel said Friday. "I can't even breathe."

Like most travel agents, Barmazel has been flooded with calls for the past two days in an unexpected air fare war that found tickets going for half price.

United Airlines spokeswoman Sara Dornacker said the company had 800 calls on hold at 8 a.m., an hour when there are normally no calls on hold. United takes in 200,000 reservations a day, but handled an additional 100,000 on Friday, Dornacker said.

But the deluge of business may provide little relief for airlines and travel agents fighting an industry downturn.

"Basically they're giving it away," said Paul Turk, publications director for Avmark Inc, an airline management consulting firm based in Arlington, Va. "It will depress (revenue) yield."

Travel agents say they are earning much smaller profits from the half-price fares.

"I would say I'm working 10 times as hard for half the money. The pressure is unbelievable," Barmazel said. She said agents get a 10 percent commission on tickets.

Barmazel echoed the sentiments of travel agents, airline officials and industry watchers who felt a three-day air fare war initiated by America West Airlines in Phoenix would do little to cure the air passenger market's recent ills.

Analysts say the airlines are enduring one of the bleakest periods in their history because of the weak economy, spiraling fuel prices following Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait, and fear of terrorist activity resulting from the Persian Gulf War.

The industry lost a record $1.7 billion in the fourth quarter of 1990 and was headed toward a $1 billion loss this quarter, officials said.

Lower fares started when America West announced that it was cutting all its fares in half if travelers bought tickets between Thursday and today. The tickets are non-refundable, but travel can take place between now and Jan. 5, 1992.

Soon after America West's announcement, the major carriers followed, including American, Delta, United, Southwest, TWA, USAir and Northwest.

The half-price fares were being offered primarily on West Coast-to-East Coast routes, not in the competitive California corridor. On Northwest, for example, discount seats from Los Angeles to New York cost $218 round-trip while coach fares were $545 round-trip.

Once the offer ends this weekend, most analysts expect business to return to sluggish levels.

New technology cuts drilling costs

■ Drillers in the U.S. are using a variety of methods, including super computers, to drill wells more efficiently and cheaper.

N.Y. Times News Service

During the oil boom of the early 1980s, most companies spent more than $10, some more than $20, to find and produce a barrel of oil in the United States.

Since then, the service companies that provide equipment and crews to drill for oil, and for the natural gas often found with it, have improved the process vastly. They have introduced supercomputers to spot drilling sites and sophisticated equipment that can even drill sideways.

For the three years that ended in 1989, the average cost to produce one barrel of oil in the United States was just $4.82, according to John S. Herrold Inc., an oil research firm based in Greenwich, Conn.

That still doesn't match the $2 a barrel cost in Saudi Arabia and other Persian Gulf nations, where huge deposits lie relatively near the surface. But achieving the decline in the United States, where most of the remaining petroleum lies deep indeed, demonstrates the service industry's technological leadership.

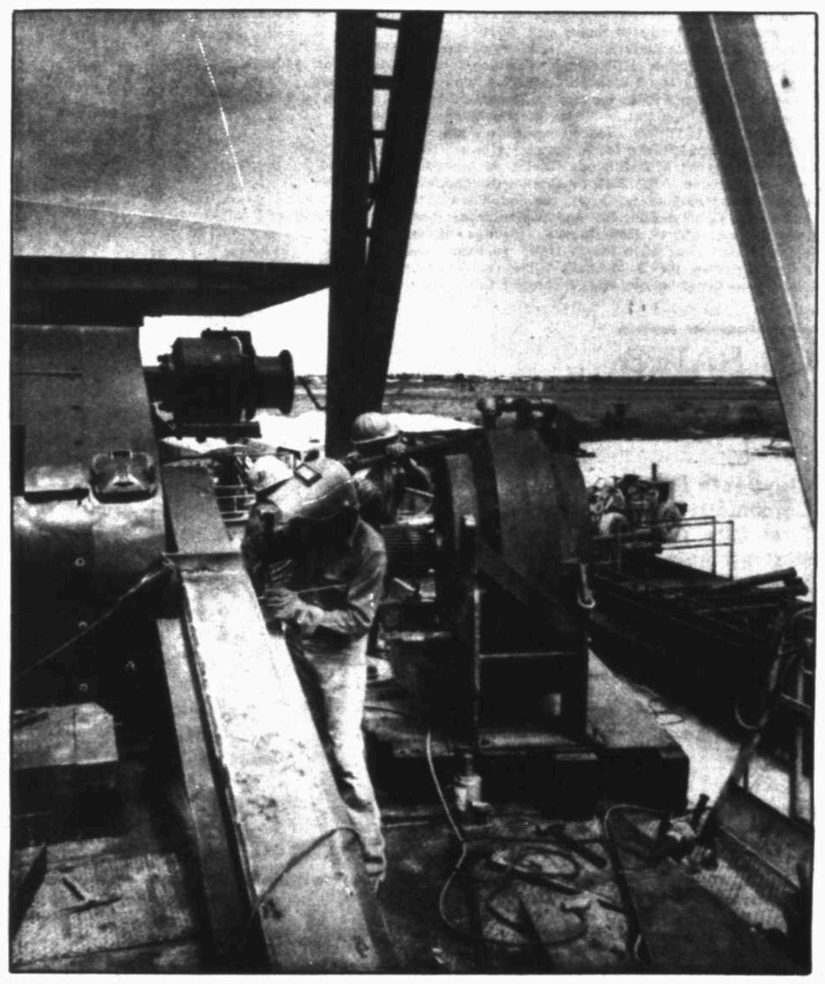

The high-tech pioneers — the major international service companies like Schlumberger, Halliburton, Dresser Industries and Baker Hughes — have steadily improved their profits over the three years through 1990. By slashing their payrolls and curtailing operations, they survived an unprecedented collapse in oil drilling activity from 1986 through 1989 that ruined or crippled many of their debt-laden rivals.

The fortunes of the oil field service industry can be tracked by the rig count. As oil prices soared in the early 1980s, the number of operating rigs in the United States rose to more than 4,500. The count fell to a post-World War II low of 869 in 1989, but rebounded last year to 1,010, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

Outside the United States, the rig count has been far less volatile. The international average, excluding Canada, was 907 rigs in 1990 — the first year since 1985 that the United States has beaten that average.

Many analysts expect higher oil prices, more drilling and higher revenues for

Chevron pipeline called feasible

■ A study has called Chevron's Pacific Pipeline feasible, but officials doubt the pipeline will get through.

N.Y. Times News Service

A 171-mile pipeline that would move Chevron Corp. oil from offshore Santa Barbara, Calif. wells to Los Angeles refineries is economically feasible and environmentally sound, according to a study.

The study released Thursday was conducted by an outside consulting firm and funded partly by Chevron.

It says that the $190 million Pacific Pipeline would take at least three years to complete and require a formal environmental impact report before being approved by a variety of state and local officials.

The project also would need several hundred jurisdictional approvals.

The study is the latest move in a continuing dispute concerning how to transport oil to Los Angeles from Chevron's Point Arguello oil project. The dispute has stalled production from the completed wells for the past two years.

County officials favor pipelines because they are considered safer than shipping oil by tanker. But no existing pipelines provide easy and economical access to Los Angeles refineries, according to Chevron.

The Pacific Pipeline would be built by Southern Pacific Transportation Co. along its existing railroad right-of-way.

Chevron officials were optimistic about the proposal's chances for success because they said its railroad track route will reduce disruption of area neighborhoods.

The pipeline would require at least 18 months for permitting and another 18 months for construction, even if approved, said Norman L. Rooney, president of Pacific Pipeline Co., an affiliate of Southern Pacific.

In the meantime, Chevron says it still needs to use tankers to move the 75,000 barrels of oil a day expected to be pumped from three offshore oil platforms once peak production is reached.

If the appeal is turned down, Chevron says it will take its case to the state courts.

Oil absorber is limited

HOUSTON (AP) — Canadian entrepreneur Don Noland set out to make decomposing golf tees. Instead, he came up with Peat Sorb, a type of dried peat moss designed to naturally soak up oil or hydrocarbon spills.

But for those thinking about using the product on oil spills in the Houston Ship Channel, think again.

Noland, of Edmonton, founded Peat T a year ago and now has sales representatives in Houston; Midland; Tulsa, Okla.; Pine Bluff, Ark.; and Morgan City, La.

Layoffs usually target over 40 employees

By Jane Bryant Quinn

NEW YORK–When companies cut payrolls, their targets are clear: (1) Workers over 40 who earn good salaries but aren't on a promotion track, and (2) workers near retirement who don't have much more to give to their jobs.

Quinn

So how come there aren't more age-discrimination lawsuits?

It's illegal to fire someone solely on account of age. The law protects everyone 40 and up. Yet in 1989, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission brought only 133 age-discrimination suits, exceeding, for the first time, the number brought in 1986.

Mark Arian of the consulting firm, Hewitt Associates, believes that the number of lawsuits will balloon as the baby-boom generation ages. But that's not apparent yet. "There's a slight increase in lawsuits every year, but not giant," says Cincinnati attorney Paul Tobias, executive director of the National Employment Lawyers Association.

One reason for the paucity of lawsuits may be that many companies have kept their layoffs within the letter of the law. It's perfectly legal to:

–Offer an early retirement bonus to workers over a certain age.

–Pare payroll costs by slashing middle management, even though they're preponderantly older people.

–Transfer you to a job or a location that your company suspects you will probably refuse.

–Replace an older worker with a younger one, if there's a legitimate business reason for the switch. In one such case, a company argued successfully that it needed someone more attuned to modern purchasing methods, says Paul Grant, associate professor of Industrial Relations at Loyola University's Industrial Relations Institute in Chicago.

What does it take to beat the rap? You have to show specific age discrimination, with no business purpose except to can you.

You might win a lawsuit if you overheard a discriminatory remark–for example, a supervisor's saying, "She's gotten too old to do the job." Or if you're fired during a downsizing when a similarly situated younger person is transferred to another position. Or if a much higher percentage of people over 40 are fired in a general layoff than people under 40. Or if you're replaced by a younger person for no defensible reason.

An employee-rights law passed as part of the budget compromise last fall clarified what a company can and can't do when it offers an incentive plan for early retirement. Unfortunately, the law isn't retroactive, so it gives no help to workers who have lawsuits pending.

The following rules are effective immediately for new plans, on April 14 for most older plans, on the next bargaining date for union plans, and on Oct. 16, 1992, for state and local government plans:

–You must be allowed at least 21 days to consider the early-retirement offer, if it came to you individually, and 45 days for a general offer to a group of employees. You can't be forced into a one-day decision as has happened in the past.

–The offer must be made to all employees above a certain age. Companies can't leave out, say, workers over age 60. Nor can companies offer less money to people closer to retirement age.

–If younger people are offered severance pay, older people must get it, too. Previously, companies often paid severance only to younger people. There's just one exception: During a downsizing, plant closing or other significant corporate adjustment, an older worker's severance pay can be reduced by the amount of his or her retiree health benefits or any sweetener added to the early-retirement pot.

–If you're asked to sign a waiver giving up your right to sue, as part of an early-retirement bonus plan, the company has to disclose the class of employees eligible for the offer, their job titles and their ages. This rule is effective immediately.

The information on who got the exit offer may be fodder for age-discrimination suits, if a company isn't careful. But the hard truth is that, for a 55-year-old worried about his job, a goodbye bonus is an offer he or she usually can't refuse. Perhaps the major reason for the small number of lawsuits is that this vulnerable age group can't afford them.

Oil prices rally

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices showed a modest rally Friday, after a spreading oil slick in the Persian Gulf forced the closing of a desalinization plant in Saudi Arabia and stirred concerns that oil refining could be cut back.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in March closed at $21.92 per barrel, up 70 cents, on the New York Mercantile Exchange. In London, North Sea Brent Blend crude closed at $19.98 per barrel, down 20 cents, on the International Petroleum Exchange.

This week, crude rose 58 cents a barrel, compared with a drop of 1 cent per barrel in the previous week.

Unleaded gasoline closed at 61.22 cents a gallon, up .64 cent for the day and .10 cent for the week.

Natural gas settled at $1.365 per 1,000 cubic feet for delivery in March, down 1.5 cents for the day and for the week.

Dollar advances

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar advanced in Europe Friday but was mixed in domestic dealings despite waves of concerted central bank intervention that capped a week of government efforts to shore up the weak U.S. currency.

In New York the dollar settled at 127.78 yen, down from 128.51 yen on Thursday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Thursday's rates included: 1.4556 German marks, up from 1.4553; 1.2435 Swiss francs, down from 1.2437; 4.9595 French francs, up from 4.9535; 1,096.25 Italian lire, up from 1,093.75, and 1.1580 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1587.

Gold prices advanced worldwide. On New York's Commodity Exchange, gold bullion for current delivery settled at $370.10 a troy ounce, up $2.30 from Thursday. At Republic National Bank, gold gained $2.65 an ounce to settle at $369.75.

Silver prices also advanced. On New York's Comex, silver bullion for current delivery settled at $3.820 a troy ounce, up from $3.799 on Thursday. In London the metal rose to a late bid price of $3.83 an ounce from $3.78.

New president

NEW YORK (NYT) — Sun Co., the nation's largest independent refiner of oil products, named Robert H. Campbell as president and chief operating officer Thursday.

The move puts him in the No. 2 spot and makes him heir apparent to the chairman and chief executive, Robert McClements Jr.

Chrysler profit surprises analysts

N.Y. Times News Service

CHICAGO — The Chrysler Corp. surprised Wall Street on Thursday by posting a $31 million fourth-quarter profit in the face of plunging car and truck sales.

The auto maker said it stayed in the black with a bookkeeping adjustment and by cutting costs faster than revenue fell; still, its profit was too narrow to quiet growing concerns that the No. 3 auto maker may soon face severe financial difficulties.

Lee A. Iacocca, Chrysler's chairman, said the company would probably not be profitable in the current quarter, and he said he would be meeting with Chrysler's bankers within two weeks to review the terms of a $2.4 billion credit line the company may have to tap if business conditions do not improve.

As the smallest and least-affluent domestic car maker, one that was saved from bankruptcy by the government a decade ago, Chrysler has been hit particularly hard by the current downturn and consumer uncertainty.

So even a tiny fourth-quarter profit was "no small accomplishment in these times," Iacocca said. Analysts expect the General Motors Corp. and the Ford Motor Co. to post large fourth-quarter losses later this month.

On the New York Stock Exchange Thursday, Chrysler's share price fell 87.5 cents, to $12.

While Chrysler still has ample resources, including $3.4 billion in cash and marketable securities, huge expenses loom. Foremost are the enormous development and retooling costs of rushing new cars and trucks to market to replace the mostly slow-selling models it has now.

Chrysler does not make money on any of its car lines, including the Daytona and LeBaron, but has profited from its mini-vans and jeeps. It has said its top priority is its new midsize car, code-named L/H and due out next year.

Rebates are another big expense. Last year, Chrysler spent about $2 billion, or about $1,200 a vehicle. Presumably, a stronger market might end or reduce outlays for such incentives.

Moreover, last fall's labor contract with the United Automobile Workers obliges the Big Three to pay factory workers whether or not they are on the job. Shutdowns because of slow sales cause more devastating expenses for Chrysler, since it is not so wealthy as its competitors.

Even before the gulf crisis, Chrysler had other operating problems, including defects that have plagued an electronic transmission, leading Consumer Reports to urge customers to avoid vehicles equipped with it.

Chrysler's ability to borrow in public credit markets has been severely limited in recent weeks by lower financial ratings from the Standard & Poor's Corp., which has put Chrysler debt securities in the classification of "junk bonds."

So unless the economy improves, the company could face the unpleasant choice of either scrimping on vital vehicle development programs, which would cloud its future competitiveness, or perhaps paying its bills more slowly.

Another possibility is that a group of 30 banks, led by the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., will extend Chrysler up to $2.4 billion of unsecured credit under an accord reached a year ago.

The agreement obliges the banks to lend Chrysler the money unless there has been an important change in Chrysler's financial condition. Although it is not clear how inclined the banks will be to extend credit, Robert S. Miller Jr., Chrysler's vice chairman, said, "I do not anticipate some big fistfight."

Nevertheless, Chrysler is taking at least one significant step to present itself in a more fiscally conservative light: by changing the way it accounts for the expense of rebates and low-interest financing, it will come into line with more conservative procedures at Ford and G.M.

Service stations handle more than gas prices

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — It's dark and cold at 5:15 a.m. when Chuck Novak flicks on the lights at the Warner Center Chevron station in suburban Woodland Hills.

Carrying a cup of coffee, he unlocks the cashier booth and tosses his folded New York Times on the battered shelf inside.

Like most days, the paper will remain unread as a steady stream of cars and customers keeps Novak from his favorite section — The Living Arts, where he follows Broadway theater and musicals.

While most of the Warner Center office workers are still sleeping, the 53-year-old station owner goes through his daily paces: He removes the padlocks from each of his eight pumps, looks over inventory reports from the day before, checks the station computer for overnight price changes from Chevron, and tests gasoline levels in his underground storage tanks to make sure there were no overnight leaks.

It's a scene that Novak stars in every morning, seven days a week.

Novak says he's used to it. He's spent 32 years in the business, starting in 1959 as a 21-year-old service station attendant at a Standard station in North Hollywood, another Los Angeles suburb.

He'd just completed a six-year stint in the Navy, when he signed on with Standard, the forerunner of Chevron U.S.A. Inc.

When Novak started, the station business was a lot simpler. Drivers weren't allowed to pump their own gas, there was no such thing as unleaded fuel, and pump prices averaged 30 cents a gallon.

Today, his full-service island is mostly empty, unleaded is the biggest seller and area pump prices regularly make it into the newspapers — and are well over $1 a gallon.

But it goes beyond just the obvious changes. There are computers to monitor, company imposed volume quotas, and environmental regulations.

To get an idea of what's involved, a Los Angeles Daily News reporter followed Novak and his crew on their rounds one day recently.

Novak runs the station with two of his sons, Vince, 29, and Tony 30. Daughter Kathy fills in as a cashier when needed.

On this day, as usual, Novak's full-service pump attendant, Walter Phipps, begins his day at 6 a.m. Tony and Vince are in by 7 — in time for the morning rush.

Only rarely do customers complain about gas prices, despite recent gyrations due to the Persian Gulf crisis. The recent drop in gas prices has cooled public outrage, Novak said.

Besides he is in the same situation as most station operators. He doesn't have much control over what he charges.

Price changes usually occur when an oil company either raises or lowers the wholesale price it charges its dealers for gasoline. Chevron informs dealers of the changes late at night by computer.

When the dealer comes in the next morning, he decides whether to change his retail price right away, or hold off. If it's a steep cut — say 2 cents to 5 cents a gallon — Novak says he might wait a day to pass it along to customers because the gas he has on hand costs him more.

Novak says he often sells gasoline at or below cost in order to compete with nearby stations.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Marital transfer not taxable

By Bill Doyle

Q. My wife and I have a considerable portion of our total investments in five high-quality common stocks. We bought 100 shares of each stock in 1982 and immediately entered each company's dividend reinvestment plan. We are continuing those reinvestments, as we do not need the dividend income at the present time,

Two of the accounts are in my name alone. The other three are in my name and my wife's name, "JT TN WROS," which stands for "as joint tenants with right of survivorship."

I would like to change the two accounts now in individual ownership to JT TN WROS, so all five are in joint tenancy. What taxes, if any, will be owed as a result of this transfer?

Doyle

A. None, whatsoever!

The Internal Revenue Code has permitted "unlimited marital deductions for interspousal transfers" since Jan. 1, 1982. In plain language, this means a husband can give to his wife and a wife can give to her husband unlimited amounts, free of federal gift tax.

Gifts are not subject to income tax, so you are off the hook there.

If the market value of the stocks is high, a state gift tax could be due in some states. The gift tax rules of all 50 states can't be squeezed into this column. However, your return address shows you live where state gift tax regulations mirror the federal rules and where there is no state income tax.

The "basis" — cost for tax purposes — of the stock won't change as a result of the transfer from individual to joint ownership. Here's hoping you have kept track of your basis — the price at which shares have been acquired. You'll need that information to figure your profit or loss when and if you ever sell the stock.

Q. What procedure must I follow to change the ownership of a stock from my name alone to joint tenancy in my name and my wife's name? The stock is in a dividend reinvestment plan.

A. All changes in a stock's registered ownership are handled by the stock's transfer agent. You'll find the transfer agent's name and correct address in the latest annual stockholder report you received.

Because stock certificates are not issued for shares in a dividend reinvestment plan, the agent for that plan will also be involved in your transfer. That agent sends you a statement every time one of your dividends is reinvested to buy additional full and fractional shares. In some cases, the transfer agent and dividend reinvestment plan agent are one and the same — usually a big bank.

Contact the transfer agent and the dividend reinvestment plan agent. Obtain and sign the necessary papers. The transfer will be accomplished.

If you had possession of the stock certificates, it would be necessary to fill out the assignment form on the back of each certificate, have your signature guaranteed by a brokerage firm, commercial bank or trust company and send the certificates to the transfer agent, where new certificates would be issued.

Q. The dividend reinvestment plan (DRP) I have with a large utility company has a provision for making option addition payments to purchase additional shares. Every time I make such payments, almost six weeks pass from the time my check is cashed to the time my stock purchase is credited to my account. This happens even though my check arrives ahead of the deadline noted in DRP regulations.

I believe this is a calculate procedure, so they have the use of my money for that period and keep the interest. Is this common practice?

A. If your suspicion is correct, it is the first such blatant case I have run into. However, it might be allowed — if the DRP rules set the purchase date that far in advance of the date on which optional additional investment checks must be received.

Check that out in the fine print of the DRP prospectus. If necessary, contact the company's shareholder relations department or corporate treasurer.

DRILL: Budgets

revenues for the service companies by the mid-1990s, as oil prices rise from the current $20 a barrel or so to more than $25.

The analysts assume that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will again restrict output after the current war ends. They say that the United States rig count will gradually increase to an average of 1,200 in 1993, with 2,400 worldwide.

The service companies provide drill bits, drill pipe, special muds and fluids, offshore equipment, geological mapping software and the personnel to deploy it all.

A huge source of new orders for them might be the rebuilding of Middle Eastern facilities. The extent of damage to oil fields, refineries and petrochemical plants will known for certain only when the war in the Persian Gulf ends.

But some analysts estimate that just repairing the damage to Kuwaiti facilities so far is likely to cost $40 billion. The Kuwaiti government, with investments estimated at $100 billion, has more than enough to bankroll postwar reconstruction.

"At some point, there will be an enormous rebuilding plan required there," said John J. Murphy, Dresser's chairman and chief executive.

Meanwhile, the industry's main customers, the major oil companies, plan to increase their worldwide drilling budgets this year by nearly 14 percent, according to James D. Crandell, a Salomon Brothers analyst.

And government-controlled oil enterprises, which have been increasing their purchases by more than 30 percent a year, according to Suzanne L. Cook, an analyst at Merrill Lynch, contributed 40 percent of industry revenues last year. These national oil organizations, in places like Mexico, Indonesia and Venezuela, accounted for only about 10 percent of business in 1980, she said.

Midland firm gets contract

BCCK Engineering, Inc. has been awarded a $15 million contract for the Florida Gas Transmission Phase II Expansion project.

The private funded project is expected to employ 225 contractors, subcontractors and technicians.

Shauna Fullen, the local spokesperson, said the company signed the contract in December and work started in January.

The compression stations that will be under BCCK's supervision are located in Alabama and Florida.

The main thrust of the project is to increase the capacity of the pipeline from 800 million to 925 million cubic feet of natural gas per day.

BCCK will provide total project management for both the engineering design and construction phases.

BCCK is an independent engineering firm that has been in operation since 1980 and employees 30 people. The local office consists of engineers, computer programmers, designers and technicians. A branch office in California also employees 14 people.

Retired teacher makes living looking like Lincoln

By Danica Kirka
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — You can find Abraham Lincoln's face on copper pennies, five dollar bills and on a retired schoolteacher. And in February, you can find the presidential pretender all over town.

The Quaker beard, homespun humor and lanky frame mean at least $400 an appearance to Charles Brame, a former high school history teacher who traded in his chalk for a stovepipe hat more than a decade ago. He earns up to $2,000 for appearing at conventions.

Brame, 64, still goes to classrooms, but dressed as the rail-splitter raised in a log cabin.

"I do not talk about Lincoln. I am Lincoln," he said.

February is his busiest month; Brame said he has about 80 bookings. Tuesday is the 182nd anniversary of Lincoln's birth.

"It's awful hard to break the hammerlock on February," he said Friday during an interview from his Alta Loma home.

Brame first grew a Lincoln-style beard in 1959, while he was teaching high school.

"It really set the campus on end," he said. "I wore it for two days and the youngsters started calling me Abe."

But he did not capitalize on the similarity until 1976, when a friend who had seen him portray the 16th president in a parade asked him to recite the Gettysburg Address at a meeting of a Masonic service club in San Bernardino.

Brame, who was running for a local political office at the time, sensed opportunity. Quicker than he could say "four score and seven years ago," he offered to do a one-man show.

"This morning I had a lady whose name was Booth,' Brame said, chuckling over the association with John Wilkes Booth, who assassinated the president in 1865. 'I shook hands with her. I said 'Booth?' And she said ...'No. Not related.' "

— Charles Brame

"When you're a politician, you're always looking for a platform," he said. "I got a standing ovation. It turned out it was one of the better things that came out of the campaign."

After that, Brame started honing his acting ability, hoping for work on television.

Among his credits is a recent spot on ABC's "Growing Pains." He appeared in a dream segment during a Halloween episode, said Marsha Smith, a Warner Brothers publicist.

But personal appearances remain his bread-and-butter. Brame said he gets into character by slowly working through the crowd, introducing himself and shaking hands. He comments on things that would be odd for Lincoln's day, such as women wearing slacks.

"This morning I had a lady whose name was Booth," Brame said, chuckling over the association with John Wilkes Booth, who assassinated the president in 1865. "I shook hands with her. I said 'Booth?' And she said ...'No. Not related.' "

Analyzing Lincoln autopsy has potential, scientists say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists want to test bone fragments, strands of hair and blood stains from Abraham Lincoln to determine if the 16th president had an inherited condition called Marfan's Syndrome.

Dr. Marc S. Micozzi, director of the National Museum of Health and Medicine, said recently that new techniques may make it possible to use 126-year-old specimens in his museum to reconstruct Lincoln's complete genetic pattern.

Such studies, he said, could tell much about Abe's aches, pains and health problems.

"There is a lot of potential social value to learning the answers to these questions," Micozzi said.

While settling the historians' debate about whether Lincoln had Marfan's, he said, the studies could also "provide an inspiring perspective" on what people can accomplish despite serious medical problems.

Marfan's is an inherited condition that can have painful and crippling effects. Its most common symptoms include exceptional height and thinness, along with elongated fingers, arms, toes and legs and the effects of the condition can range from mild to very serious heart problems.

Patients severely affected die at the average age of 32.

Lincoln, assassinated at age 56, had many of the characteristics of Marfan's, but medical data on him isn't detailed enough to determine if he really inherited the disorder.

However, Micozzi said the museum is concerned about how such testing could affect studies of materials from other past presidents.

There are questions of privacy that would have to be settled because there are preserved medical specimens from a number of long-dead presidents, including Ulysses S. Grant and Grover Cleveland, he said.

A committee organized by the National Museum of Health & Medicine Foundation to study Prockop's proposal will meet in May.

Members of the committee will include people from the White House staff and from Congress.

Former president's daughter makes legal trek

By David Margolick
N.Y. Times News Service

A generation ago, John F. Kennedy somehow managed to make people care about Lucius Quintus Cincinnatus Lamar and other, less obscure figures in "Profiles in Courage." Now, the late president's daughter, Caroline, a lawyer in New York, is helping people (and, in this week's issue, People) to care about the Constitution.

This year, the 200th anniversary of the Bill of Rights, is an appropriate time to examine America's decalogue of individual liberties. Still, without the sugarcoating of a celebrity author, such birthdays would normally remain the province of a few Supreme Court buffs.

But for three years Ms. Kennedy and Ellen Alderman, a classmate and friend from Columbia Law School, have been burrowing into the Bill of Rights, a.k.a. the first 10 amendments to the Constitution.

A poll taken in 1987, when both Ms. Kennedy and Ms. Alderman were still toiling over torts textbooks, showed that 59 percent of the American public could not even identify the Bill of Rights.

By writing a book about cases that both illustrated and further defined its principles — cases involving flesh and blood rather than desiccated legal abstractions — the two women hope to combat such constitutional illiteracy.

Their efforts culminate with the publication later this month of "In Our Defense: The Bill of Rights in Action" (William Morrow, $22.95). The project took the two women from the Hoopa Indian Reservation in rural Northern California to death row in Florence, Ariz.

While it was under way, Ms. Alderman joined Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, and Ms. Kennedy put off law practice for marriage and motherhood.

This week, the two women talked about their book around a conference table at Paul, Weiss, the firm that once represented Ms. Kennedy's mother and where Theodore Sorensen, who wrote some of her father's most famous words, is a partner.

A president's daughter on the premises caused no apparent stir, for at least three reasons: Ms. Kennedy is unassuming; her face is familiar (she worked there as a summer associate); and people seem too wrapped up in their work even to notice her.

The book was born, they said, as an independent study project for Jack Greenberg, then a professor at Columbia Law School, now the university's dean of students. With help from him, several other professors and lawyers at the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, which Greenberg once headed, they selected the 17 cases they examined.

By and large, they are not those landmark decisions whose ringing rhetoric has found its way into Bartlett's. Instead, they are more obscure, recent decisions selected in part because the people whose names they bear are alive and able to reflect on the arduous experience of making constitutional history.

Ms. Kennedy and Ms. Alderman conducted all the interviews together.

Henry Trost left his legacy in El Paso

■ In 1904 the son of German immigrants realized El Paso's potential for trying out new ideas in architecture, then proceeded to leave a legacy behind.

By Ed Ivey
Associated Press Writer

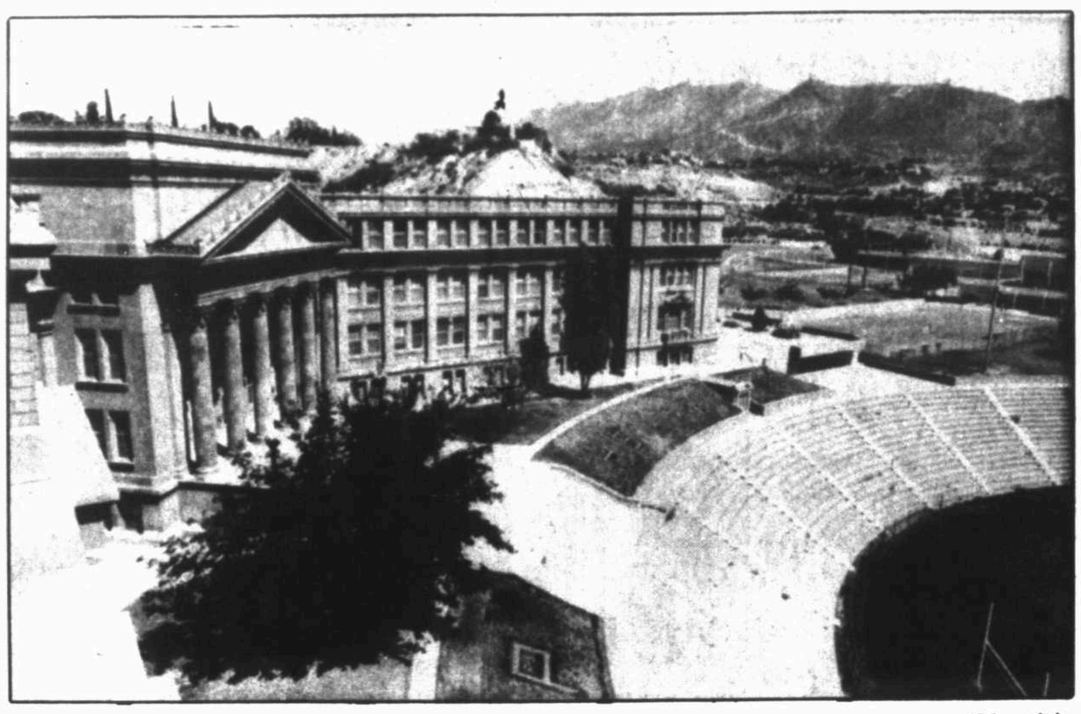

EL PASO, Texas — Like a giant who was planting buildings in a garden, Henry Trost hand-raised El Paso's skyline with his pen and vision. He brought perhaps the first real changes to the city's skyline since the Franklin Mountains rose up some 50 million years ago.

The Westin Paso del Norte, the Mills Building, Loretto Academy, the El Paso Museum of Art, the O.T. Bassett Tower — Trost designed them all. The El Paso list ends with Trost's final opus a few miles from downtown — La Tuna Federal Correctional Institution in Anthony, Texas.

But the city's skyline wasn't the only thing Trost changed. Perhaps no Trost edifice changed a neighborhood more dramatically than another of his jewels — El Paso High.

Nestled into the mountains just north of the growing center of town, the reinforced concrete and brick school was built between 1914 and 1916. The building cost about $500,000, and the neighborhood that surrounded the school was scarcely populated.

THE NEW SCHOOL replaced the first El Paso High School, built at Arizona and Kansas streets in 1902. Until that structure was built, high school students attended classes on the second floor of Central School at Myrtle and Campbell streets.

Built between 1914 and 1916, El Paso High School remains a demonstration of brilliant use of space and positioning, experts say.

Henry Trost designed the high school as well as many of El Paso's first skyscrapers.

Period photos of the new school taken from downtown show a singular, monumental structure surrounded by the Franklin Mountains.

A printed program of the high school's 50th anniversary in 1966 relates that Trost and his brother, Gustavus, "traveled widely to study the best high schools in other cities in gathering ideas" to use in the design.

In the opinion of El Paso architect Geoffrey Wright, the El Paso High School structure demonstrates a brilliant use of space and positioning that remains fresh today.

"Trost had a nice touch. He knew how to use proportion and scale," Wright said.

Wright refers to Trost's design as "Renaissance revival," using an architectural vocabulary that speaks of the Greeks and Romans.

"The style adopted the best parts of Greek and Roman architecture centuries later," he said.

Many people mistakenly think the school's front is its back, but Schuster Street — which runs in back of the building — didn't exist when El Paso High was built and in the area where that street now runs were empty, rocky slopes, Wright said.

Buff terra-cotta columns and other appointments help retain the regal sense of centuries-old architecture while lending a timeless feel, he said. Intricate ornamentation on the columns and around interior structures reinforce the notion of great craftsmanship and dedication to classic architecture, Wright said.

THE FOUR-STORY school has rectangular wings that jut out at 45-degree angles from a central porch served by spacious, stone stairs. Behind the porch entrance, as one comes into the school, the auditorium opens to view. Below the school, an athletics stadium is set in a semicircular bowl fashion. The stadium is being considered as the site for school's 1990-91 graduation ceremony. This would be the first time in recent memory the stadium was used for the ceremony, principal Luis Cortes said.

Wright said the design ties athletics to drama, the two classic arts of the Greeks and Romans.

"See, the design told you that you could go win a game and then come in and be the lead in a play, just by walking up from the stadium into the school," he said.

Of the interior, authors Lloyd and Mary Engelbrecht explore the mood created by Trost's ornamentation in their book "Henry C. Trost, Architect of the Southwest." It was published by the El Paso Public Library Association in 1981.

"The coffered ceilings and the massive engaged columns ... create a mood which is mysterious," they wrote.

Trost's spaciously designed stairs between the school's porch and stadium make an ideal place for Arlo Klahr to eat lunch and watch life go by. Klahr, one of this year's graduating seniors, has been attending classes at El Paso High since the eighth grade.

"I guess I've grown to like it," Klahr said, adding that the steps are a favorite gathering place for he and his friends.

"Today we were looking out across the city and somebody noticed we could see Bowie High from there," he said.

RALPH MCCULLEN, who graduated in 1974 and has lived next to the school since birth, calls the building "an unforgettable piece of the past and present for me."

McCullen grew up on Crosby Street, just a few houses from El Paso High, and he still watches out for his alma mater.

"It's a loyalty. If I see somebody there defacing it. I stop and tell them not to do it."

McCullen calls the structure "probably the most stabilizing building in the neighborhood."

When neighborhood people look at El Paso High, they're not just seeing the facade — they're seeing the humanity behind it, said University of Texas at El Paso sociology department chairman Howard Daudistel.

"Indeed, the architecture is impressive, but the facade combined with the fact that the neighborhood's generations passed through (the school's) doors is important."

THE SCHOOL WAS El Paso's most diverse melting pot during his years, he said.

"All the Lebanese and the Syrians, the Jewish people and some of the rich from Juarez went there. It was a real conglomeration of people," Ramirez said.

"You can grow up and move away, but you always feel that it is still there," McCullen, 34, said. "It's a magnet for a lot of people."

The architect was born in Toledo, Ohio, in 1860 to a German immigrant family, biographer Lloyd Engelbrecht said. He graduated from art school in 1877 and worked as a draftsman in Toledo for three years.

Little is known of the next two decades of Trost's life except that he spent time in Colorado, Louisiana and Kansas. He ended up working in Chicago for the famed American architect Louis Sullivan, along with another promising young draftsman, Frank Lloyd Wright.

Trost moved to Tucson, Ariz., in 1898 and started an architecture firm with his brothers, A.G. and Gustavus. They soon realized El Paso's potential for trying new designs and moved here in 1904. The firm of Trost and Trost designed many of El Paso's first skyscrapers and many noted residences.

Trost died in 1933 at the age of 73. His brothers continued to work in the firm until 1946, when it was disbanded for a lack of successors. Trost was a bachelor with no children.

Building down

The Anderson Mayfair Hotel, which is located in Houston's medical district, was demolished by implosion Sunday morning in Houston. BCP Construction Co. of Phoenix, Ariz., supervised the building's destruction.

T-strap show hits sour note with townspeople

GEORGETOWN, Texas (AP) — Residents of this Central Texas town are raising a beef over beefcake and say they will try to stop a traveling troupe of male strippers from putting on a show.

The Kansas City dance troupe — called Seduction — has rented the town's community center for a March 8 show described by the group's owner as having "a little something for everyone."

For $10, folks can see a 2½-hour show of five men, average age 26, gyrating in costume as Vikings, policemen, cowboys and Top Gun pilots, said Mike Powers, the troupe's owner.

They make their entrances fully clothed and then strip slowly to "a little T-strap," Powers told the Austin American-Statesman.

He said he chose Georgetown because it fit in the route of the six-week tour, and that smaller towns have been more supportive of the show than large cities where the market is saturated with male dancers.

But some people in this town of about 17,500, which boasts a family image, want to stop the sweating hunks cold.

Don Brown, a member of the American Family Association, known for his protests against pornography, said, "We're going to do everything we can to stop this. All I have to do is call five preachers."

Bob Phillips, a local lawyer and author of a column called "On the Right," which appears in the Williamson County Sun said the show "is just jim-dandy for Austin, that Sodom and Gomorrah city to the south, but I'll be surprised if anybody shows up in our little town."

Lynn Koy, president of the Parent-Teacher Association, said, "I've never picketed anything in my life, but I might picket this."

City officials said they cannot prohibit the troupe from renting the community center. "People can see just as much if they go to a swim meet or a swimsuit competition at a beauty contest," Community Services Director Hartley Sappington said.

He added that, "people can chose not to go."
