Bush calls for troop reductions

Gorbachev appears 'receptive'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, winning bipartisan acclaim in Congress, is proposing further deep cuts in U.S. and Soviet troop strength in Europe and declaring "that time has come" to swiftly conclude agreements limiting conventional, strategic and chemical weapons.

"Today, with communism crumbling, our aim must be to ensure democracy's advance," the president said Wednesday night in a State of the Union speech that blended his new troop withdrawal proposal with a pledge to withdraw the remainder of the U.S. invasion force from Panama by the end of the month.

In a surprise overture, Bush proposed cutting military manpower in Europe to 195,000 troops on each side, down from the 275,000 figure that was the U.S. bargaining position at conventional force negotiations in Vienna.

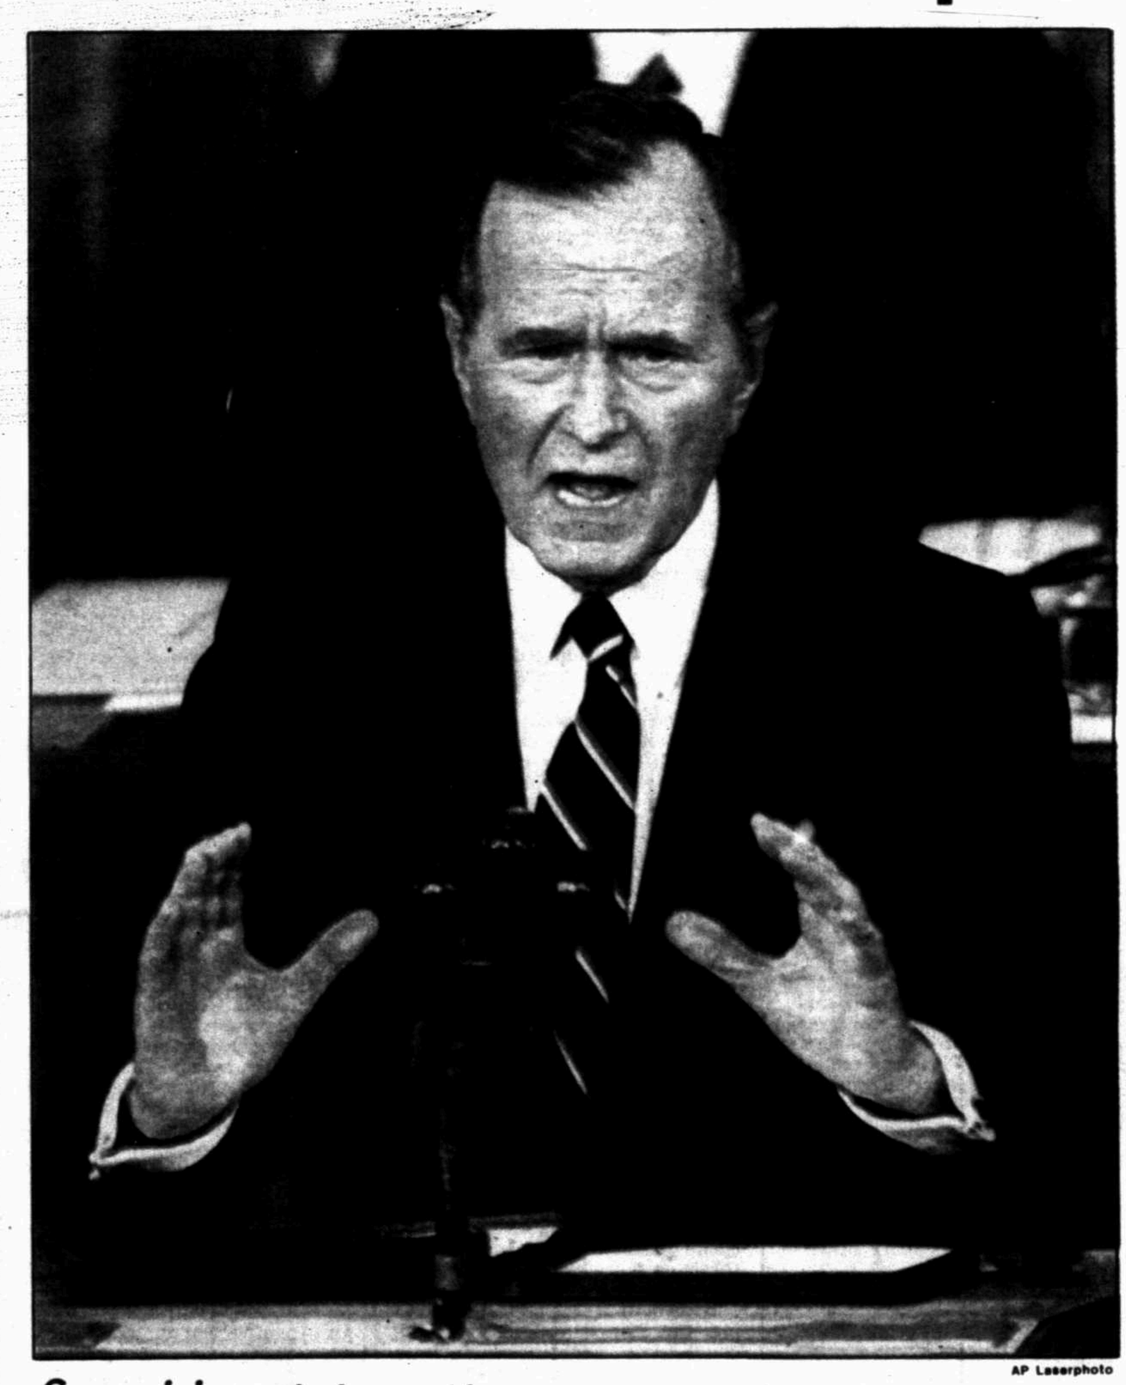

The president said he called Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev earlier in the day to inform him of the offer, which already had been endorsed by NATO allies. The move, Bush said, was a response to "the revolution of '89" in which he said the United States "stands at the center of a widening circle of freedom."

Bush said Gorbachev seemed "receptive" to the idea and was studying it.

Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said on ABC-TV this morning that the Kremlin was "satisfied" with Bush's troop cut proposal "as a beginning." But he said the Soviets want all foreign troops out of Europe and, "if that's Bush's bottom line, it is unfortunate."

In Brussels, Belgium, NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner said the allies offered their "broad support in principle" for Bush's proposals. "These

President Bush's proposed withdrawal of 50,000 American troops from Western Europe "is a step in the right direction," but local Democratic Party leader David Mandell said the president must pay closer attention to the problems at home.

"It's the same rhetoric we've been hearing for the past 10 years now, and we've yet to see him back up those words with any money," Mandell said this morning in reaction to the domestic goals outlined by Bush in Wednesday's State of the Union address to a joint session of Congress.

In a surprise announcement, Bush proposed cutting military manpower in Europe to 195,000 troops on each side, down from the 275,000 figure that was the U.S. bargaining position at conventional force negotiations in Vienna.

However, the president's budget continues to provide for buildups of most nuclear weapons systems, including the Strategic Defense Initiative, a holdover from previous Reagan Administration budgets.

Mandell was critical of Bush's message on domestic issues, and accused the president of skirting the homeless, public housing and education issues because they "tend to be more controversial."

Defense issues are "safe and they're not going to upset the polls," Mandell said, adding that

Texas congressmen offer mostly praise for address

DALLAS (AP) — President Bush emerged as a statesman with a clear agenda for his presidency, Texas congressmen said after his State of the Union address.

Bush drew praise for proposing a bilateral troop reduction in Europe and statements about education.

"I thought it (the speech) was very thematic and one while very short on very specific goals, one that was long on what has made America a great country," said Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis.

"This was President Bush laying out his agenda for the 1990s," said Rep. Steve Bartlett, R-Dallas. "It clearly moved George Bush to a new plateau."

Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, said he believed Bush delivered a speech that was "epitomized the statesman." Smith also said he agreed with the president's plan to reduce U.S and Soviet troops in Europe.

More than 265,000 U.S. troops are in Western Europe, and 565,000 Soviet forces are in Central and Eastern Europe. There are an additional 35,000 U.S. troops in Britain, Italy, Greece and Turkey that would not be affected by Bush's latest plan.

The president's plan calls for U.S. and Soviet troop levels to fall to 195,000.

"President Bush's announcement is a welcome initiative that makes the policies of the American government more responsive to rapidly moving events in Eastern Europe," Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said.

Quest for aliens expanded

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

PASADENA, Calif. — A sophisticated radio receiver soon to be installed in Argentina will help scientists scan the whole universe as they expand their search for signals from intelligent aliens in space.

"One of the fundamental questions that has faced the human species throughout history is, 'Are we alone? ... What is our place in the cosmos?' " said Louis Friedman, executive director of the non-profit Planetary Society.

Tim Lynch, the group's program director, called the search for extraterrestrials "almost spiritual because if we find there is another civilization somewhere else, it's evidence this planet can survive as well."

The Planetary Society — a Pasadena-based group that advocates space exploration — raised $150,000 from its 125,000 members in 70 countries to pay for the high-tech radio signal analyzer, named Megachannel Extraterrestrial Assay II.

Raul Colomb directs of the Argentine institute that will house the Planetary Society's receiver.

META II, the size of two large refrigerators, will be flown to Argentina's Institute of Radioastronomy in two to three weeks, said Thomas McDonough, a coordinator of the worldwide Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence program, known as SETI.

Two Argentine engineers have been building the device at the Harvard-Smithsonian Oak Ridge Observatory in Harvard, Mass., west of Boston.

Since 1985, the society's identical META receiver at the observatory has scanned the space visible from the Northern Hemisphere seeking a radio signal from an alien civilization.

Steven Spielberg, director of the film "E.T., the Extra-Terrestrial," donated $100,000 for the first META project.

Since 1960, astronomers have conducted more than 50 separate but mostly limited searches for any radio waves that may have been inten-

Expectant mother tried for abuse

LARAMIE, Wyo. (AP) — A charge against a pregnant woman of abusing her unborn child by consuming alcohol has raised questions on whether the legal system should protect fetuses from their mother's drinking.

Judge Robert Denhardt was to be asked today to dismiss the state's case against Diane Pfannenstiel, a 29-year-old expectant mother charged with felony child abuse for consuming liquor.

Albany County Attorney Cal Rerucha alleged in the charge filed in early January that Pfannenstiel, who is four to five months pregnant, consumed alcohol "in an excessive amount which she knows will cause serious physical injury upon her unborn child."

But Mary Beth Galvan, attorney for Pfannenstiel, believes Wyoming's child abuse laws don't apply to fetuses and that the charges are unconstitutional.

"Whether or not a fetus is defined as a child is a question for the Legislature to decide, not for us," Galvan said in an interview this week.

Galvan was to ask Denhardt to dismiss the case on grounds of vagueness.

But she is so intrigued with what prompted Rerucha to charge Pfannenstiel that she has subpoenaed him to testify about how he reached his decision.

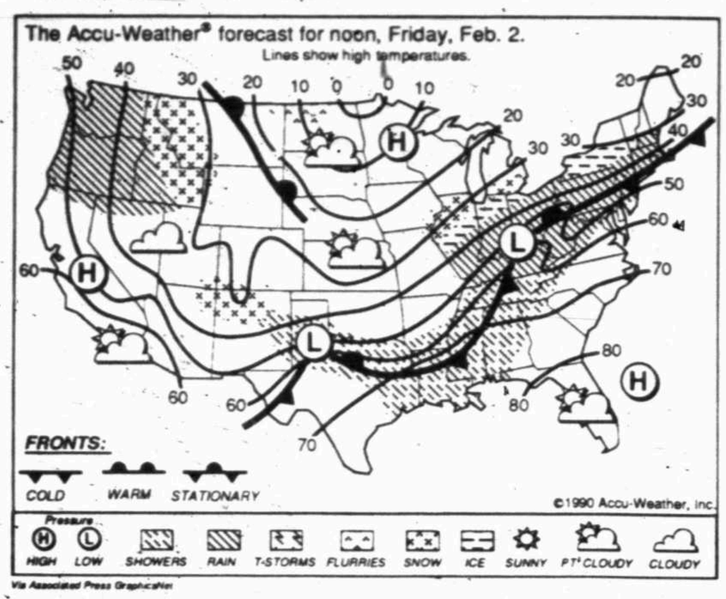

According to court records, the charge against Pfannenstiel was filed two months after another judge ordered her to remain alcohol-free.

That judge's unusual intervention followed a previous pregnancy that produced a baby suffering from fetal alcohol syndrome, a leading

WEATHER SUMMARY

Partly cloudy skies continue

Partly cloudy skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, with the low in the middle 30s and winds from the west at 5-10 mph.

Friday is expected to be mostly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of showers. The high will be in the middle 50s and winds will continue from the west at 10-20 mph.

Wednesday's high of 71 was nine degrees cooler than the record high of 80 set for that date in 1963. The overnight low of 46 was 54 degrees warmer than the record low of minus eight degrees set for this date in 1985.

STATE

Residents in the portions of north and central Texas braced themselves for high water early today, but heavy rainfall that triggered flash flood warnings slowed to a non-threatening drizzle in most areas by mid-morning, authorities said.

"It's clearing off," said Billye Lane, a police dispatcher in Alvarado, where water was reported more than a foot deep in some areas. "It's a slow sprinkle."

Ms. Lane said the only areas to flood were those that normally are covered with water following heavy rain, including a number of low-water crossings on outlying roads.

Flash floor warnings and watches were posted early in the morning, but many were being terminated at mid-morning. A flash flood warning still was in effect in Denton County until 11:15 a.m.

"It wasn't any more extreme than normal for us," said Bonham police officer Melvin Palmer, but he said water crept up over curbs in several areas of the Fannin County city. Police were called to check on one vehicle found stalled in water, but officials weren't certain whether it was weather-related.

Several motorists did have to be rescued from vehicles in the Dallas-Fort Worth area, where more than two inches of rain fell in a four-hour period. Rush-hour traffic was snarled by the downpour.

Do you wonder what children think?

NEW YORK (AP) — An overwhelming majority of high school students believe a pregnant teenager who wants an abortion should have the final say rather than the girl's parents, according to a survey by the Girl Scouts.

The survey released Wednesday also found that 65 percent of high school students would cheat on an important exam, and 37 percent of junior and senior high school students said they would have sex with someone they loved.

Seventy percent of the students interviewed thought the decision about whether to have an abortion was the girl's to make, while 13 percent said her parents should decide.

Only 12 percent said they would advise an abortion, and 57 percent said the girl should have the baby. Black and Hispanic children were significantly more likely to recommend keeping the baby, over abortion or adoption.

The survey of 5,012 students questioned students from 233 public, private and parochial schools from Sept. 14 to Oct. 30, on their beliefs and moral values. Questionnaires were different for students in grades 4-6, and for junior and high school students.

Among other findings:

■ Nearly half of those surveyed (45 percent) said they rely on their own experience when deciding what is true, compared to just 3 percent who believe science is the most believable authority.

■ Among their major concerns, respondents most often (24 percent) listed pressure to do well in school or sports, followed by what to do with their lives (17 percent), drug use (13 percent), lack of close friends (8 percent) and teen-age pregnancy (6 percent).

■ The greatest pressures they feel were obeying parents and teachers (80 percent), to get good grades (78 percent), not to take drugs (77 percent), to prepare for the future (69 percent) and to earn money (62 percent). Just 6 percent named the pressure to take drugs.

The survey for the Girl Scouts of the United States of America was made in partnership with the Lilly Endowment and the C.S. Mott Foundation. It was conducted by Harris-Scholastic Research, a division of the Louis Harris and Associates Inc. polling firm, in collaboration with Harvard child psychiatrist Robert Coles, sociologist James Davison Hunter of the University of Virginia and John Seel of the Williamsburg Charter Foundation.

A companion study is to be published next year.

Bush's failure to meet these problems head on suggest that the president "isn't willing to take any chances."

But local Republican leaders dismissed the criticism as politically motivated.

"I'm growing very weary of the Democratic Party's rhetoric which tries to paint the Republican Party as the rich man's party. The fact of the matter is that Congress doesn't want to stop pork barrel politics," said former Midland County GOP chairman Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer.

"I think he (Bush) is absolutely right when he says that by the year 2000 we need to be the best in the world in math and science. I think that's an enviable goal," Seltzer said.

Renewing his call for a capital gains tax cut slapped down by Democrats last year, Bush also urged lawmakers to pass clean air, child care, crime and drug, and education legislation.

In addition, he condemned racially motivated mail bombings, saying the nation "must confront and condemn racism, anti-Semitism, bigotry and hate." And he said, "Our hearts go out to our hostages — our hostages who are ceaselessly on our minds and in our efforts."

Bush also expressed concern over the nation's health care, and directed Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan to review recommendations on the quality, cost and accessibility of the health care system.

Although former Midland Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. was disappointed that Bush failed to mention energy issues in the address, he said the president hasn't softened his position on a National Energy Policy.

"You always like to hear about the things you're interested in, but we know from other sources that energy remains a top priority in the Bush Administration," said Angelo, a Republican National committeeman and independent petroleum engineer.

The Democratic senior senator also said he expected Bush to make similar announcements about U.S. troop reductions in South Korea and elsewhere in Asia.

Bartlett said he thought Bush surprised Congress with the proposal. He said he hoped Congressional members remember the reductions are bilateral.

"I do have some concern about Congress' inability to listen accurately," he said. "In watching to the response by the Democrats, I don't recall hearing anybody in Congress use the word bilateral."

Bush's remarks about education were also warmly received, but Rep. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, a former teacher called the president's proposed 2 percent spending increase insufficient.

"If he wants to see 90 percent of our kids graduate by the year 2000, he can't do it by throwing pennies into education. He's got to make a real investment," Sarpalius said.

However, Rep. Jack Fields, called Bush's education goals "noble."

"I think the President really laid down the challenge for America for the 1990s," said Fields, R-Humble.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said Bush made a strong case for his budget priorities. "He made it clear that he was not going to support raising taxes and fooling around with social security," Gramm said. "I think overall it was a very effective first State of the Union Address for our new president."

Rep. Michael Andrews, D-Houston, said he was discouraged by the president's plan to cut military bases in Texas.

"If the world events will define our defense policy, the budget debate will define our domestic policy," Andrews said. "This is going to be a tough year for Texas," Andrews said. "The president's budget is very tough on our state."

He said proposed cuts to teaching hospitals and military bases will have a significant affect on the state, while there will be a tough battle for funds for such programs as the super collider and the space program.

"It's going to be hard on the Texas delegation," Andrews said. "We're going to have to work together as a team. I'm optimistic, but it's going to be a tough fight."

tionally beamed into space by extraterrestrials.

Almost all previous searches listened to space visible from the Northern Hemisphere, with only brief, partial scans of Southern Hemisphere skies from Australia and the Argentine institute, located in a park 30 miles southeast of Buenos Aires.

META II tests will start in June after the 8.4 million-channel receiver is hooked to one of the institute's two dish-shaped, 98-foot-wide radio-telescope antennas.

By its dedication on Oct. 12 — the holiday commemorating Christopher Columbus' discovery of the New World in 1492 — the device will spend at least 12 hours daily for three or more years listening for signs that humanity is not alone.

With both META receivers working, the Planetary Society will be conducting "the first systematic search of the universe as a whole for signals from another civilization," McDonough said. "This could be the system that makes the first contact with another civilization."

"There are so many stars like the sun that it's impossible to think the sun is the only one that has life on an orbiting planet," said Raul Colomb, director of the Argentine institute.

ADDRESS

new steps take account of new political developments in the East, while remaining consistent with the needs of the alliance's strategy of deterrence."

The surprise overture was the centerpiece of an address that also promised to "invest in America" through savings incentives, research and improved education, and called on citizens to "confront and condemn" racism and hate.

Bush also renewed his call for a capital gains tax cut, slapped down by Democrats last year, and called on lawmakers to pass clean air, child care, crime and drug legislation.

But while Congress applauded the troop cuts — and the savings they eventually would produce — Democrats said Bush's rhetoric on domestic issues did not match the budget he sent to Capitol Hill just two days earlier.

On education, "the president's words seem to agree with us, but his actions say something else," said House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., delivering his party's formal response to Bush's prime-time televised speech.

Foley ignored the troop proposal in his formal remarks, instead focusing on the domestic issues congressional Democrats have decided to make their theme for this election year. "In the 1990s, and well into the next century, the central challenge for America will be economic, not military," he said.

Foley raised the troop cut proposal this morning on NBC's "Today" show, saying Democrats are "in agreement that we ought to reduce our troops in Europe. I think everyone sees there is a change in need there," Foley said.

Lawmakers in both parties saw the troop cut as a welcome development, with many characterizing the move as an attempt to catch up with events that outpaced the arms talks.

"It was a very good move on his part, because we were falling behind the curve of popular will," said Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine. "He had to get way out front. If we didn't make these kinds of proposals, we'd be seen as being irrelevant to the process."

"He is rushing to catch the reality of Eastern Europe," said Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont. "Events in Eastern Europe are pulling the Pentagon and the president toward decisions they wouldn't otherwise make."

The cuts would place a heavier burden on the Soviet Union, which has 565,000 troops in Central Europe compared with the U.S. level of 305,000. But the offer could come as a welcome relief for Gorbachev, who is under heavy popular pressure to unilaterally remove Soviet troops from Warsaw Pact countries which are shedding their ties to Moscow.

The proposal reflects advice of top military strategists, would sustain NATO's needs and would help push peaceful change forward, Bush said.

"A swift conclusion to our arms control talks — conventional, chemical and strategic — must now be our goal. That time has come," he said.

However, Bush's budget provides continued buildups for most nuclear weapons systems and the Star Wars missile defense, a reflection of what the president called Moscow's continued modernization effort in that area.

cause of mental retardation and other developmental problems, according to court records.

Robert Horowitz, associate director of the American Bar Association's Center for Children and the Law in Washington, said he was unaware of any similar cases that have led to convictions that have withstood appeal.

Drug use, particularly cocaine, has led to arrests of pregnant women in some states. Crack cocaine use by pregnant women has led to several arrests in Florida on charges of delivering cocaine to newborn babies since the first successful conviction in August. But that case is still on appeal.

Some of those watching the case believe the woman should not be prosecuted because of an addiction, if one exists.

Patricia Schene, director of the American Association for Protecting Children in Denver, said that rather than prosecuting Pfannenstiel, Rerucha should try to help her.

"She's as much a victim as the child," she said.

Pfannenstiel was charged after going to police to have her husband charged with battery. While she was being treated at a hospital, a blood test revealed she had a blood alcohol level of 0.1 percent, Galvan said. That is level considered at which a person is considered intoxicated under state law.

Asked if Pfannenstiel is an alcoholic, Galvan replied: "There is no diagnosis in the record that I am aware of."

Galvan wondered what would happen if Pfannenstiel is convicted and sentenced to five years in prison — and five months from now gives birth to a healthy baby?

She said Rerucha will be hard-pressed to prove his case.

"It requires that an actual injury be shown. Harm has to have resulted," she said.

Rerucha maintained that prosecutors shouldn't have to wait until a child is born with defects.

"The damage is done by that time," he said in an interview.

BUSH

He founded and managed the Spectrum 7 Energy Corporation, an oil exploration company in Midland. In 1986, he merged Spectrum 7 with Harken Energy Corporation, which is based in Bedford.

While a resident of Midland, Bush also was involved in the United Way, serving as campaign chairman in 1981.

Bush entered the field of politics in 1978 as a candidate for the U.S. Congress from the 19th Congressional District, which at the time included Midland. He won the Republican nomination, but lost the general election to Kent Hance, a Democrat from Lubbock.

Since that time Hance has become a Republican and currently is seeking the GOP nomination for governor.

In 1987-88, Bush worked in his father's presidential campaign.

Next, Bush became involved in major league baseball.

In 1989, he became a managing general partner of the Texas Rangers. He and Edward W. "Rusty" Rose led an investor group that purchased the controlling interest in the baseball team from Eddie Childs in March, 1989.

He is married to the former Laura Welch, also of Midland. The couple resides in Dallas with their eight-year-old twin daughters, Barbara and Jenna.

In addition to Bush's presentation, special awards will be given to companies in recognition of their employee giving for the fall 1989 campaign. New officers, including 1990 president Thomas W. Ortloff, and board of directors will be officially elected to office.

Cost of the luncheon is $8.50. For reservations to the luncheon, call the United Way office at 682-4358 by Wednesday, Feb. 7.

Bush attempts to regain initiative with troop plan

By MATTHEW C. QUINN
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — President Bush reached into his repertoire of secret diplomacy to spice up an otherwise bland State of the Union Address Wednesday night with a dramatic new proposal to cut U.S. and Soviet troop strength in Europe.

Just as congressional Democrats had launched a concerted offensive against his $1.2 trillion budget, especially his modest military trims, the president moved to regain the initiative with a new call to cut more forces from Europe.

And to critics who had attacked him for not coming to grips with the federal deficit, Bush replied that his plan would balance the budget by 1993 "with no new taxes."

Earlier, while Democrats were capturing the spotlight with various jabs at his leadership, Bush was quietly on the telephone with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev outlining his new arms proposal, which called for each superpower to pull down its troop levels to 195,000 in Central and Eastern Europe.

Bush's strategy worked. His initiative dominated the evening news, aided by details provided by senior White House officials five hours before Bush announced it in his first State of the Union Address to a joint session of Congress.

Then, in the nationally televised address itself, Bush was able to say, "I spoke by phone with President Gorbachev just today" about the plan, pointing up his capacity for surprise and his technique of hands-on diplomacy.

Critics were disarmed. In the official Democratic response, House Speaker Thomas Foley of Washington did not even mention the proposal. But he embraced the plan in remarks to reporters.

Some Democrats jumped on the development to support their "peace dividend" argument that the $303.6 billion U.S. defense budget should be cut further than the 2 percent after-inflation reduction Bush has proposed for next year.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., termed Bush's proposal "a very constructive step" but called on the president to "take bolder steps than we have seen so far in other areas of military spending."

Bush's speech was interrupted 35 times by applause in the House chamber. But Democrats immediately signaled the fights ahead on the budget and on Social Security.

Bush had denounced plans to cut the Social Security payroll tax by saying, "The last thing we need to do is mess around with Social Security."

Foley retorted afterward that Social Security "has been the Democratic Party's proudest achievement" and vowed to protect it from Republican assault.

But much of the focus of Bush's speech was on foreign policy. He reflected on "the revolution of '89" that saw the foundations of communism crumble in Eastern Europe and called them "remarkable events."

He took credit for the restoration of democracy in Panama, drawing a standing ovation, and announced that all of the 13,500 troops he sent to that Central American nation in a massive Dec. 20 invasion would be withdrawn "well before the end of February."

But the real surprise was Bush's European troop withdrawal plan, which he handled in secrecy, just as he has with previous foreign policy initiatives.

Although aides had been drafting Bush's speech for weeks, the troop announcement was not inserted into the speech until Wednesday afternoon.

For several weeks last fall Bush was pounded by Democrats, who accused him of "timidity" for his lackluster response to Gorbachev's reforms and the collapse of the Berlin Wall. Bush took the attacks, but all the while he was secretly negotiating with Gorbachev to arrange a summit that was held aboard ship in Malta in December.

Senior officials acknowledged that Bush's latest troop cut plan was an attempt to keep pace with events.

Foley wants greater commitment at home

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's call for faster troop cuts in Europe drew universal praise in Congress and abroad today, but House Speaker Thomas S. Foley said Democrats want a greater commitment at home to allow the United States "to reclaim our place in the world."

Democrats are "in agreement that we ought to reduce our troops in Europe. I think everyone sees there is a change in need there," Foley said today on NBC's "Today" show.

"The question is, how are we going to fight the new battles of the new decade?" Foley said. "The challenges of the next decade, into the next century, are much more here at home."

"As Democrats, we're not satisfied with a trend that has seen this nation drop from first to sixth in standard of living," Foley said Wednesday night in the party's official response to Bush's first State of the Union message.

Gennady Gerasimov, the Soviet foreign ministry spokesman, said on ABC News today that the Soviets were "satisfied" with Bush's troop cut proposal "as a beginning."

"If that's Bush's bottom line, it is unfortunate," Gerasimov said, saying the Kremlin wants to remove all foreign troops from Europe.

In Brussels, Belgium, Manfred Woerner, secretary-general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, said Bush's plan underscore the American commitment "to maintain significant military forces in Europe as necessary to alliance security."

"These new steps take account of new political developments in the East while remaininig consistent with the needs of the alliance's strategy of deterrence," Woerner said in a statement.

"The allies are on board," White House Chief of Staff John Sununu said on "CBS This Morning."

In his speech Wednesday night, Foley promised that Democrats, who control both houses of Congress, will work with Bush "wherever and whenever we can" but will fight the president when necessary to protect "the people who go to work and pay the taxes."

He scoffed at Bush's call for a "meager" 2 percent rise in education spending, and said Democrats will battle the administration this year on legislation dealing with capital gains taxes, child care and clean air.

Sununu this morning criticized Foley's comments on proposed education spending, calling it "a perfect example of the quality of the criticism that's come forward. You had Speaker Foley on there talking about a 2 percent increase," Sununu said, maintaining that proposed spending for new programs is up 6 percent to 7 percent.

"The time has come for America to help herself, to rebuild, to re-energize, to reinvigorate our hopes, to gather together our talents and to reclaim our place in the world," Foley said Wednesday night.

But Bush's 11th-hour addition of the U.S.-Soviet troop-cut proposal was widely lauded by lawmakers who had been deriding his new budget just two days earlier.

"Just when you thought you had a Cold War budget — boom," said Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo. "I'm really delighted. There's hope."

"Very positive," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Rep. Les Aspin, the Democratic chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, said "the president should be congratulated" for the plan. "Trying to negotiate lower limits on forces deployed in Europe is clearly a good idea," said the Wisconsin Democrat.

Sen. John Warner of Virginia, ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee, said troop cuts would lessen tensions and "pave the way for an eventual peace dividend."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said that after hearing the speech "I felt better than I have in years."

"This was the real George Bush, talking about the real issues that concern the American people," said Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev. "I hope the people around the president don't try to interfere with what he's trying to do."

Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., said Bush's speech was full of "bold new initiatives" on military forces, education and the environment.

But many Democrats found plenty to criticize about Bush's domestic agenda.

The capital gains cut "is the clearest sign of the president's misplaced priorities," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. "Trickle-down economics is not the way to rebuild America's strength; investing in America does not mean tax cuts for the wealthy."

Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., said Bush's agenda contains "no bold initiatives, just tinkering," and little "to reverse the drastic trend to leave behind a vast portion of America."

On Social Security, "the president's position is going to be clearly the only acceptable political position — saying that nothing affecting benefits can be considered," said House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich of Georgia.

There was applause for Bush's statement that "the last thing we need to do is mess around with Social Security," but lawmakers wondered about such specifics as the budget deficit.

"You're for motherhood and apple pie when you oppose cutting Social Security benefits," said Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va. But on the budget deficit Bush's "credibility may take a beating," Robb aid.

Bush's announcement of six national goals for improving education was praised, but Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., said it wasn't backed up with the "genuine commitment" of money.

Hawkins, chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, said education took "one step forward, two steps back" in the Bush message.

And Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., said, "We aren't going to do all these things without additional sources of revenue."

Former Exxon Valdez captain Joseph Hazelwood, right, sits with his lawyer, Michael Chalos in Anchorage Superior Court Wednesday.

Attorneys seek Coast Guard records in Hazelwood case

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Attorneys for fired Exxon skipper Joseph Hazelwood are seeking transcripts of conversations after his tanker ran aground and other documents that the Coast Guard doesn't want to release.

The attorneys want records of alcohol tests administered to Hazelwood and members of the tanker crew the day of the crash; background information about crew members and two Coast Guard officials; records of ice conditions and communications between Hazelwood and the Coast Guard.

Anchorage Superior Court Judge Karl Johnstone was expected to spend part of today on the defense requests, then resume jury selection for the trial.

The Coast Guard, claiming sovereign immunity as a federal organization, has said it cannot be forced to provide information for a state court proceeding.

But Hazelwood's attorneys said they need the information for his defense, and that it has been given to state prosecutors. A companion request asks that information about the sobriety test Hazelwood failed after the crash be prohibited as evidence if the Coast Guard is not required to provide the details.

Potential jurors questioned on Wednesday said they read and heard little about the March 24 accident that spilled about 11 million gallons of crude oil into the Prince William Sound.

Many of the 15 people questioned also said they didn't necessarily believe the scant publicity to which they were exposed after the accident.

Hazelwood is charged with criminal mischief, a felony; and with operating a vessel while intoxicated, reckless endangerment and negligent discharge of oil, all misdemeanors. He could face seven years in prison if convicted of all the charges.

Jury selection began Tuesday. Johnstone expects to assemble a jury of 12 plus several alternates in time for attorneys to present opening arguments in the case on Monday. Fourteen of the 25 people questioned in the first two days of the selection process were excluded.

The court summoned 91 people as potential jurors in the trial, expected to last at least six weeks.

Those examined Wednesday and still in the running include a former oil spill worker, an airline pilot and a grocery manager.

Johnstone dismissed several people, including a church business manager he said had "too much contact and too many opinions" to remain under consideration.

Attorneys for Hazelwood and the state can exclude up to 20 candidates through peremptory challenges. They used six challenges Wednesday.

Those rejected in that manner include a former Exxon employee who called the company arrogant.

Committee delays vote on energy nominee

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's nominee to head the nation's troubled atomic weapons complex is faltering amid a newly disclosed investigation of an allegation that he lied to Congress.

The Senate Armed Services Committee delayed indefinitely Wednesday's scheduled vote on the nomination of Victor Stello Jr., a former top nuclear power regulator, to become assistant secretary of energy for defense programs.

Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and ranking Republican John Warner of Virginia recommended the delay after the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's inspector general told them his office is investigating Stello.

"We did not know how serious the allegations were regarding Mr. Stello," Nunn told reporters after a closed committee meeting Wednesday. "The committee voted not to come to a conclusion or vote ... until such time that we have at least an oral report from the IG (inspector general)."

Rep. Peter Kostmayer, D-Pa., has accused Stello, the NRC's former executive director, of making "willful misstatements" last fall to the House Interior Committee's investigations subcommittee that Kostmayer chairs.

Nunn said NRC Inspector General David C. Williams has said the investigation should be completed by April. Stello, the NRC's former executive staff director, is now hospitalized as the result of a skiing accident Jan. 10.

In the meantime, Nunn said he is not leaning for or against the nomination. "I'm going to wait until all the information is in," he said.

Not since Bush's ill-fated choice a year ago of former Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, to become secretary of defense has the armed services panel been so divided on a presidential nomination.

Environmentalists and anti-nuclear activists and their allies on the committee, led by Sen. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., accuse Stello of being too close to the nuclear industry to effectively supervise operation of the weapons complex.

> "We did not know how serious the allegations were regarding Mr. Stello. The committee voted not to come to a conclusion or vote ... until such time that we have at least an oral report from the IG (inspector general)."
> — Sam Nunn, committee chairman

The administration is showing no inclination to withdraw the nomination of Stello, who was picked for the job by White House chief of staff John Sununu, a vehement supporter of nuclear power.

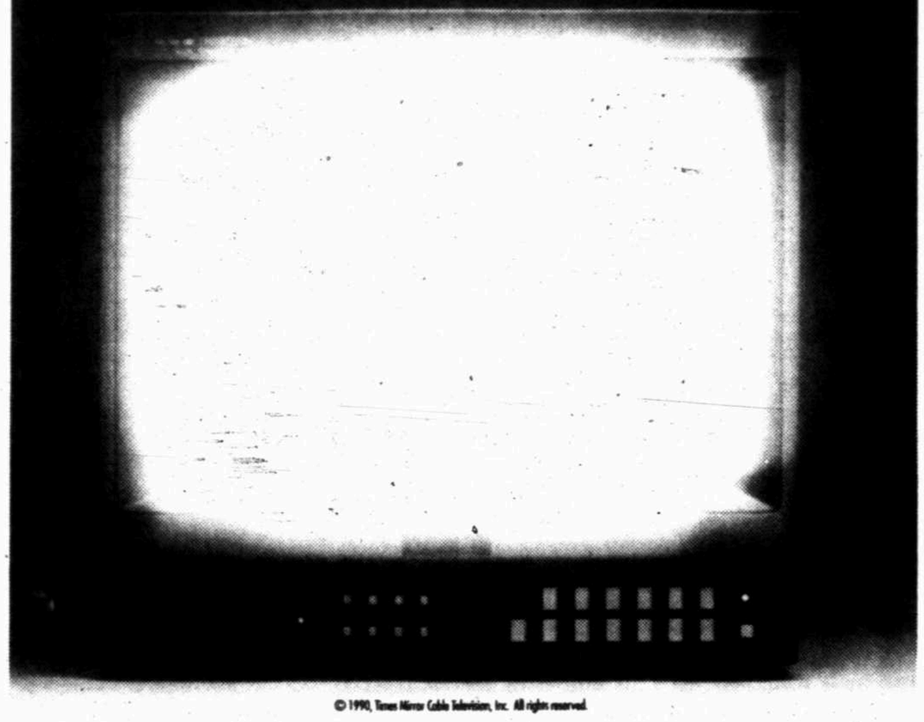

In a letter to the committee Tuesday, Energy Secretary James D. Watkins said he continues to have "full confidence" in Stello, who, in the absence of confirmation, is acting as Watkins' principal deputy in charge of the weapons program.

"No facts have been brought to my attention at this time which are not already part of the record before your committee," Watkins said.

Kostmayer's allegation centers on Stello's approval in 1988 of $6,000 to a technician at the Nine Mile Point nuclear power plant in New York state. The technician had alleged that NRC investigator Roger Fortuna was leaking confidential information to anti-nuclear activists.

They and some NRC officials have maintained that the payment to the technician, as an informant, was part of a vindictive campaign Stello waged against Fortuna, who was later fired, rehired and demoted.

Several seventh graders take SAT 'to see if they can do it'

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — Some teen-agers taking the college boards probably were surprised to see the person in the next chair had not quite reached puberty.

More than 35 percent of the 250,000 students who take the Standardized Achievement Test in January are 12 and 13 years old, said Roy Nicosia of the Educational Testing Service, which develops and administers the test.

The three-hour exam measures aptitude in math, vocabulary, reading comprehension and grammar and is used by 1,600 American colleges to help determine admissions, according to ETS.

Under a program called Project Talent, the test, usually reserved for juniors, seniors and the occasional sophomore, is open to seventh graders who excel in their schools.

Whiz kids who score well on the test get to take advanced classes during summer school.

"I'm a little nervous because I just feel I'm going to do bad, because it's for older kids, and I'm not going to be able to do it," said Jennifer Twomey, 12, a seventh grader at the Lincoln Middle School in Brookline.

Jennifer, who took the test Saturday, qualified for the talent search by scoring among the top 3 percent on an achievement test the town requires of its sixth graders, said Pam Capece, a Lincoln guidance counselor.

"I didn't even know people took the SATs when they were in seventh grade," Jennifer said. "When I found out about it I was excited. I wanted to see if I could do it."

Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore coordinates the talent search for 19 states in the Northeast and District of Columbia. Duke University, the University of Colorado and Northwestern University cover gifted students from the rest of the country.

Linda Barnett, director of talent identification at Hopkins, said most of the seventh graders take the test simply to see how they do.

"It doesn't carry the same kind of pressure that a junior or senior would feel. It's not going to affect whether they get into college," she said.

That's not to say 12-year-olds are too young to start thinking about college. The program was designed to better prepare the brightest students for the rigors of higher education, she said.

"We want them to start thinking about it so when they are juniors or seniors they don't say 'Omigosh, why didn't I take more math?'" Barnett said.

Not everyone agrees with that philosophy. Jennifer was one of 12 students eligible for the program from Lincoln, but not all qualified students participate, Capece said.

"It's a very hard test," said Capece. "It's extremely difficult, and a lot of children's parents don't want to subject their kids to standardized testing that they don't have to be a part of."

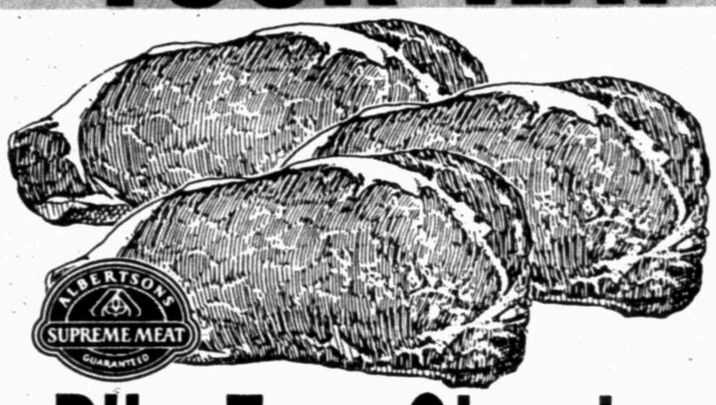

Jennifer said she was getting some tips from her 16-year-old sister Angela, a student at Brookline High School, who also took the test Saturday.

The top score possible in each of the two categories on the SATs, verbal and math, is 800. The average college-bound senior male scores 430 verbal and 500 math, while average junior and seniors score lower, said Barnett.

Ex-Mexican police officials indicted in Camarena slaying

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The indictment in the 1985 torture-slaying of a U.S. drug agent expanded to include two of the highest police officers in the previous Mexican administration and two powerful drug dealers.

They were among six new names in a 19-person indictment Wednesday that updates charges related to the slaying of Enrique Camarena Salazar and his Mexican pilot, and the killings of two U.S. citizens in Guadalajara, Mexico.

Herrera Ibarra

Manuel Ibarra Herrera, former head of Mexico's Federal Judicial Police, roughly equivalent to the FBI; and Miguel Aldana Ibarra, who headed the Mexican branch of Interpol, the international police agency, were charged with participating in a cover-up to protect drug smugglers in Mexico.

Both were officials in the administration of President Miguel de la Madrid, who completed his term in office last year. They were among 15 people named in the indictment who are not in U.S. custody.

Camarena and his pilot, Alfredo Zavala Avelar, were killed after the Drug Enforcement Administration agent led raids on marijuana plantations allegedly operated by Guadalajara drug cartel chief Rafael Caro Quintero.

As head of Interpol in Mexico City, Aldana had access to foreign police intelligence on drug and arms trafficking.

He also led Operation Pacifico, a drug task force. Camarena had investigated reports that Aldana leaked information about forthcoming police raids to drug traffickers, according to the book "Desperados," an account of Camarena's slaying by Elaine Shannon.

In Mexico, Aldana said Wednesday he would sue U.S. authorities for indicting him, the government news agency Notimex reported.

Aldana, who now heads a lawyers' association, led attempts to discredit Camarena after NBC-TV's "Drug War" miniseries broadcast last month. He reiterated his claim that Camarena was in the marijuana trade and may not really be dead.

Caro Quintero and Ernesto Fonseca Carrillo were sentenced by a Mexican court in December to 40 years in prison without parole for their role in Camarena's slaying, and 10 other men also were sentenced by Mexican courts.

But U.S. officials have said for some time they believed high-level Mexican authorities were involved in covering-up Camarena's slaying.

"We want the message to be clear that anyone who kills one of our agents will be hunted down and brought to justice by the DEA," said Ralph Lochridge, agency spokesman in Los Angeles.

Other new names on Wednesday's indictment included a Dr. Humberto Alvarez Machain; Mexican drug lord Miguel Angel Felix Gallardo; and Honduran drug kingpin Juan Ramon Matta Ballesteros, both of whom are already in prison.

Matta was sentenced last month to life in prison without possibility of parole by a federal judge in Los Angeles. His extradition to the United States from Honduras in 1988 sparked riots in which five people died and an annex of the U.S. Embassy was burned.

Gallardo's arrest by Mexico in April was applauded by U.S. officials as a sign President Carlos Salinas de Gortari was serious about the drug war.

In a sixth new indictment, Antonio Vasquez Ochoa faces two counts of committing violent crimes in aid of racketeering for the slayings of John Walker and Alberto Radelat on Jan. 30, 1985, in Guadalajara.

The indictment alleges Vasquez Ochoa and others participated in the slayings of the two Americans "to maintain and further the purposes" of the Guadalajara cartel.

Among those named earlier in the indictment was Ruben Zuno Arce, a millionaire Mexican businessman and brother-in-law of Luis Echeverria, Mexican president from 1970-76. Arce was arrested in Los Angeles on Dec. 9 and charged with committing violent crimes in aid of racketeering and conspiracy to kidnap a federal agent.

Prosecutor calls for new McMartin trial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The prosecutor in the nation's longest criminal trial says it will be an uphill fight to convict McMartin Pre-school molestation defendant Raymond Buckey at a new trial, but the case must be resolved.

District Attorney Ira Reiner insisted that neither politics nor public pressure influenced his decision Wednesday to pursue charges in the 6-year-old case.

> "This is not a political matter and it is not going to be treated as such. This case has gone on for many years. It must be resolved."
> — Ira Reiner, district attorney

"This is not a political matter and it is not going to be treated as such," said Reiner, a candidate for California Attorney General in June's election.

Buckey and his mother were acquitted Jan. 18 of 52 molestation counts after a 33-month trial. The jury deadlocked on 12 molestation charges and one conspiracy count against Buckey. Buckey, 31, will be retried on those charges.

"This case has gone on for many years," Reiner said. "It must be resolved."

Prosecutors said at least one child who did not testify at the first trial might testify at the second, but conceded they might lose as witnesses one or two of the five children named in the 13 counts. The judge has suggested dropping some of the counts to speed the March 9 retrial.

If convicted on all 13 charges, Buckey could draw no more than 36 years in prison, Reiner said. But most defendants serve about half of their sentences, and Buckey already has been jailed with bail for five years, the equivalent of a 10-year sentence.

Buckey said he was surprised by Reiner's decision, but expected acquittal.

"I believe the D.A.'s decision was based on political pressure from a few vocal parents of children not involved in this trial, rather than jurors' leaning toward acquittal," he said.

In the two weeks since the acquittals, parents whose children attended the now-defunct McMartin nursery school mounted a strident campaign for a new trial. They appeared on TV talk shows, called news conferences and recruited politicians who vowed to take the case out of Reiner's hands if he failed to follow through.

Reiner said his prime consideration was the feelings of parents and alleged victims, who now range from age 11 to 14½.

"This is a positive step for us," said Marymae Cioffi, a McMartin parent who led the campaign to retry Buckey. "I'm going to run home and tell my kids we get another chance."

Reiner said there remain "serious evidentiary problems," which he blamed on his predecessor, Robert Philibosian.

"This is an uphill battle. There's no question about that," Reiner said.

The former district attorney has said he takes no responsibility for the case, which he initially filed in 1984, with seven defendants under investigation.

Five had charges dismissed after an 18-month preliminary hearing. Only Buckey, and his mother, Peggy McMartin Buckey, 63, stood trial.

The trial was the longest and costliest in U.S. history. Taxpayers have spent over $13 million on the case so far.

Superior Court Judge William Pounders said the facts in the remaining 13 counts "mitigate in favor of a long second trial." He said he hoped the charges could be "scoped down" to shorten the proceedings.

Pounder urged a swift start because "the range of emotions is very high. ... There are a lot of people still sitting in agony. We should seek an end to this as soon as possible."

Buckey's attorney, Danny Davis, filed a motion denouncing the judge and seeking his removal for bias against him and Buckey. Another judge will have to rule on that motion, which could cause delays.

canteen (noun) — The definitions of canteen all have to do with providing food or drink. The word refers to a small flask used to store liquid, often used when traveling or camping. It can also mean a place of refreshment for armed forces personnel or a temporary or mobile restaurant used in emergencies. Following Hurricane Hugo, the Red Cross, the Salvation Army and others set up canteens to help feed the homeless and hungry. The word can be traced to Latin.

Super Bowl fever keeps game going

One has to wonder about that misnomer, the Super Bowl. Sunday's championship game between the two league winners, the San Francisco 49ers and the Denver Broncos, proved once again that as football games go, the Super Bowl falls far short of its impressive nomenclature.

It couldn't truly be called a runaway. That term implies that two teams start off fairly equal and one far outpaces the other during the contest. From the initial kickoff of Super Bowl XXIV, San Francisco played as though it could score almost at will while holding the Broncos to a meager 10 points. There was never even a realistic threat that Denver would gain the upper hand.

When the final second ticked away, the score was 55-10 — the most points ever scored in a Super Bowl game. San Francisco not only had achieved its fourth Super Bowl title, but was being compared with the Pittsburgh Steelers who ruled the gridiron in the 1970's under the outstanding quarterbacking of Terry Bradshaw. This most recent edition of the Super Bowl saw veteran 49ers quarterback Joe Montana complete 22 of 29 passes for a total of 297 yards and a Super Bowl record of five touchdowns. That is an outstanding performance to say the least.

But even before the game started, scores of football fans would have given San Francisco a lopsided edge over the Denver team, albeit holding out hope that the Broncos might pull off one of those miracle Super Bowl wins. Ah, America does love an underdog!

And Americans love their football, complete with halftime pageantry, pizza and popcorn in front of the television, post-game shows, and those oh-so-familiar beer commercials. The Super Bowl mania in this country has transcended the game of football. The point no longer is whether one likes football or whether the football game is a good contest; the point, rather, is to become part of the Super Bowl "event" and to have a good time.

The 49ers now become the team to beat, next season. Denver returns to Colorado appropriately humbled, and Dallas Cowboys fans still long for the days of Roger Staubach and Coach Tom Landry.

The game wasn't a good game, as football goes, but as for Super Bowls, with all their glitz and revelry, there's no doubt about it. It was great!

Another View:

Preserve the role

The political skirmish over President Bush's China policy is over — for now. With the Senate refusing to override the president's veto of legislation that would have guaranteed all Chinese students in this country sanctuary, it has preserved the role of the president as this country's foreign policy leader and defused a political time bomb.

Despite the rhetoric on the part of the Democrats in the House and Senate that this legislation was needed to protect dissident students in this country and make a foreign policy statement for freedom and democracy, this action was more politically motivated. In fact the action appears to have been formed more to hurt a Republican president in an election year than as a benevolent action on the part of Democrats who have kowtowed to such dictators as Cuba's Fidel Castro and Nicaragua's Daniel Ortega.

As Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas said, "It's not China policy, it's American politics" that was being debated.

The president has publicly promised all the Chinese students that they would not be sent home against their will, and he issued an executive order last year to enforce that promise. This congressional legislation was unnecessary and an invasion of the president's Constitutional role as America's foreign policy leader.

While it could be argued that Mr. Bush's timing was bad in sending National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft on a secret mission to China only a month after the Tiananmen Square massacre, it is his prerogative as president to do what he feels is most appropriate. Besides, it appears that his overtures to Beijing have been fruitful since the communist government has lifted martial law, released 573 dissidents, promised not to sell missiles to Syria, toned down anti-American propaganda, accepted Peace Corps volunteers and allowed a Voice of America correspondent back into the country.

How many of those events do the Democrats think would have occurred had China been isolated as they wanted? The president's policy is working and the Senate justifiably avoided interfering with Mr. Bush's role as chief architect of U.S. foreign affairs.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Feb. 1, the 32nd day of 1990. There are 333 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Two hundred years ago, on Feb. 1, 1790, the United States Supreme Court convened for the first time, at the Royal Exchange Building on Broad Street in New York. (However, since only three of the six justices were present, the court recessed until the next day.)

On this date:

In 1861, Texas voted to secede from the Union.

In 1862, the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," a poem by Julia Ward Howe, was published in the Atlantic Monthly.

In 1898, the Travelers Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., issued the first auto insurance policy, to a Dr. Truman J. Martin of Buffalo, N.Y., for $11.05.

In 1920, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police came into existence as the Royal Northwest Mounted Police merged with the Dominion Police.

In 1946, Norwegian statesman Trygve Lie was chosen to be the first secretary-general of the United Nations.

In 1960, four black college students began a sit-in protest at a lunch counter in Greensboro, N.C., where they had been refused service.

In 1968, in one of the most remembered images of the Vietnam War, Saigon's police chief, Nguyen Ngoc Loan, executed a Viet Cong officer with a single pistol shot to the head.

In 1979, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini received a tumultuous welcome as he stepped off a jetliner in Tehran, ending nearly 15 years of exile.

In 1979, newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst, whose prison sentence for bank robbery had been commuted by President Carter, left a federal prison near San Francisco.

Ten years ago: Six U.S. diplomats who had escaped from Iran with the help of the Canadian embassy met in Washington with President Carter.

Five years ago: Paul G. Kirk Jr. was elected chairman of the Democratic Party, defeating former North Carolina Gov. Terry Sanford.

One year ago: In his first diplomatic mission of the Bush administration, Vice President Dan Quayle began a trip to Venezuela and El Salvador.

JACK ANDERSON

Bush still behind beaming TV to Cuba

WASHINGTON — Fidel Castro wants Americans to know that he is serious about stopping the United States from beaming televised propaganda into Cuba. He recently invited a congressman and a few American broadcasters to Havana to show them that he means business.

Jack Anderson

Rep. Al Swift, D-Wash., accompanied the delegation of broadcast officials who met with Castro's top aides earlier this month. The topic of discussion was TV Marti, and the Cubans were clear on that subject. They will block any TV signals that Uncle Sam tries to send to Cuba.

That means the U.S. Information Agency is gearing up for a multi-million dollar TV broadcast that will have no viewers.

TV Marti is planned as a commercial television package with soap operas, movies and news. Castro calls it propaganda. And even if the programming did not contain blatant capitalist rhetoric, Castro would still see TV's view of Americana as propaganda designed to undermine Marxism.

The State Department plans to spend more than $7 million testing the project. The programs will be beamed into Cuba from a balloon hovering over Florida.

But Castro has the technology to deflect television signals, making TV Marti a multi-million dollar waste of time. His officials made it clear to Swift and the visiting broadcasters that Cuba intends to use that technology.

The United States has been broadcasting radio signals to Cuba since 1982 on Radio Marti. Castro has grudgingly put up with it. But Castro knows that TV is a more powerful medium than radio. A leader of the nation that may become the last stubborn outpost of communism doesn't need the frills of capitalism paraded in front of his people.

In the grand scheme of things, the TV Marti budget is not astronomical — just the price of a few homeless shelters or feeding thousands of abandoned crack babies or sending the graduating class of an inner-city high school to Harvard.

Apparently $7 million is a small price for the Bush administration to pay to make a point at home and abroad. Congressional sources told our associate Scott Sleek that the administration is pushing TV Marti to appease conservatives who are already disturbed about the warming of relations with the Soviet Union. They want to see the United States get tough with the evil empire, and Castro will have to suffice.

"In times of perestroika and glasnost," one congressional source told us, "it's a cheap way of showing he (Bush) is still fighting the Cold War."

Commercial broadcasters in the United States hope they won't have to pay for this bit of grandstanding. As we reported last year, the Cubans have gigantic radio transmitters that pack more power than anything in use in the United States.

Over the past year, Cuba has used those transmitters to interfere with commercial radio signals in the United States. Private radio broadcasters from Florida to Minnesota have complained about interference on the AM radio band by the Cuban transmitters. One Florida station lost advertisers because the interference kept programs and commercials from getting on the air.

Why is Cuba putting static on American commercial air waves? Broadcasters say it is Castro's message to Bush, that Cuba can cause trouble if TV Marti becomes a reality.

SUNUNU SURVIVING — White House Chief of Staff John Sununu is holding his own in a job that is a political lightning rod. If the president's policies fail, the chief of staff frequently takes the blame. Sununu didn't make a very graceful arrival on the scene, and he isn't a charmer by any stretch of the imagination.

Bush wanted to establish from the beginning that his Cabinet secretaries would have substantial authority, but that resulted in spats that gave the impression of an administration with too many chiefs and no leadership. Bush is gradually taking more control of decision making and that gives Sununu a greater role.

A smooth working relationship has developed between Sununu and Budget Director Richard Darman, and that has been helpful to Sununu, the Washington newcomer. Domestic Policy Adviser Roger Porter, Economic Adviser Michael Boskin, White House Counsel C. Boyden Gray and Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater have emerged as key players who take care of issues around the fringes.

GEORGE F. WILL

Judges like Leonard Sand physically dangerous

WASHINGTON — Just when you think no new folly can make city life more menacing, some moral exhibitionist, wielding judicial power and reeking of liberal self-approval, makes matters worse. Meet Judge Leonard Sand.

George F. Will

He recently ruled that New York City's ban on panhandling in subway stations violates the First Amendment because begging is "informative and persuasive speech." This latest trauma to the First Amendment suggests that any peaceful (although intrusive, annoying and even coercive) conduct that is accompanied by speech is constitutionally protected. This is especially so, says Sand with a flourish of sentimentality, if the speaker is among the (literally) unwashed.

"A true test of one's commitment to constitutional principles," says Sand in one of those self-flattering formulations of which judicial activists are fond, "is the extent to which recognition is given to the rights of those in our midst who are the least affluent, least powerful and least welcome." That advertisement for himself ("what a swell sensitive fellow I am") is nonsense as law or morality.

First Amendment rights do not vary inversely with the affluence of individuals. There is nothing novel about "time, place and manner" restrictions on speech (e.g., no sound trucks near hospitals). Yet the city's attempt to limit one of the unpleasant, even alarming, experiences of subway travel is deemed unconstitutional. Indeed, Sand says that the "unsettling" nature of beggars and their "message" is what turns their "conduct" into constitutionally "protected expression."

The question of what society owes in compassionate help to street people is, surely, severable from the question of what right the community has to protect a minimally civilized ambience in public spaces. However, that second question is rarely even reached because all today's controversies are cast as conflicts between individual rights and a cold, alien government. This is the mentality of severely individualistic liberalism. But conservatives, with their mindless execrations of government, also are blameworthy.

The community, dismissed (when thought of at all) as a fiction without standing, deteriorates through the "broken window" dynamic. James Q. Wilson of UCLA says that if a broken window in a building goes unrepaired, the remaining windows will be broken, because an unrepaired window sends a message that no one cares. Disorder and crime are linked in a developmental sequence. Disorder atomizes communities, dissolving the sense of mutual regard and obligations of civility.

Nathan Glazer of Harvard says that even non-obscene graffiti on New York subway cars tells riders they are entering an uncontrolled environment. Anxiety, wariness, avoidance and truculence increase.

John Leo, a columnist who lives in New York, has described the process, by which street people begin the destabilization process, that ends in "dead parks": "Sandboxes become urinals. Swings are broken. Every park bench seems to be owned by a permanently curled-up dozing alcoholic or perhaps a street schizophrenic. When the cycle is complete, the community withdraws, serious druggies and criminals move in. ..."

Beggars — many of them deranged by alcohol or other drugs or mental illness, and dangerous in fact or appearance — are human "broken windows." But in the social analysis spawned by liberalism, the individual is the only reality and the community is an abstraction without claims. This leads to the decriminalization of so-called "victimless behavior." Next comes some community-wrecking judge to discover that some of that behavior is a fundamental constitutional right. As Wilson says, such behavior (panhandling, public drunkenness prostitution, pornographic displays) can destroy a community faster than a gang of professional burglars.

Judge Sand was recently in the news when the Supreme Court reversed his imposition of heavy fines on Yonkers city councilmen. His purpose was to coerce the councilmen into voting to place public housing where he wants it. The Court objected to Sand forcing offficials to act with reference to their personal financial interests rather than the desires of constituents. In the Yonkers and subway cases, Sand's jurisprudence says: Representative government — the voice of the community — does not matter; what matters is judicial imperialism on behalf of whatever individual rights strike the fancy of any judge.

Judges like Sand are dangerous — physically dangerous — because their actions feed the anarchic impulse toward violent self-help. Harried, frightened citizens have begun assaulting, in one instance killing, beggars who, in an atmosphere of pervasive menace, are, or appear to nervous people as, dangerous.

Dangerous maybe. Litigious certainly. A news report reads: "Lawyers for the two homeless men who had challenged the no begging policy said. ..."

Not every American has a home but — first things first — everyone has a lawyer.

ART BUCHWALD

Parents suffering from kiddophobia speak out

Good morning, everyone. Welcome to TV's 'Fighting With Phil.' Today our topic of conversation is parents who are afraid of their children. We have with us Horace Plankton, Stanley Pluto, Andrea Peaches and Sally Peters, all of whom suffer from kiddophobia — the fear that their offspring will not love them.

Art Buchwald

"Horace, when did you first realize that you were afraid of your children?"

"When my son was 4 years old and I told him not to climb up on a ladder. He kept doing it and I screamed at him. His face turned red and he burst into tears. At that moment I said to myself, 'My God, what have I done?' I've been afraid of him ever since."

"What about you, Mr. Pluto?"

"I have always had this secret fear that if I do anything to discipline my daughter, she will reject me as a loving parent."

"And this causes you great anxiety?"

"Yes. If I ever thought that she was withholding her love from me, I wouldn't be able to sleep at night."

"Andrea Peaches of Great Neck, Long Island, has three sons and has been afraid of all of them since they were born. What seems to be the problem?"

"Well, Phil, I don't like to see kids sob — I never have. The minute one of my sons chokes up, I am certain that I have done something wrong."

"How old are they?"

"Thirty-four, 35 and 37. The one I worry about the most is my 37-year-old. When he was young he used to hide under the stairs and refuse to come out. It frightened me so much that I lowered milk and graham crackers to him so that he didn't think I was a terrible mother. He still looks hurt when he sees me."

"Stanley Pluto. What makes you fearful?"

"My son, Alan, is very sensitive and has a terrible temper. He wouldn't talk to us when we asked him to eat his oatmeal. His mother and I didn't press him because we were afraid that our relationship would never be the same."

"Sally Peters. Over the years you have suffered from your fear of children. Can you tell us what it all means?"

"My father was afraid of me when I was young. If he wouldn't let me watch television, I threatened to tie myself to the water heater. Naturally, I felt as if I had a lot of power. When my kids started growing up, I realized that they were pulling the same tricks on me as I had played on my father. I told them I wasn't buying it, so they began doing worse things like putting the baby in a shopping cart and running through the middle of the parking lot."

"Is your husband afraid of your children?"

"He's afraid of the boy — I am afraid of the girls."

"We will now take some telephone calls. Yes, Peoria."

"I'd like to question Mr. Pluto. My kid is 6 and I think he knows I am frightened of him because every time I tell him not to hit his brother, he does it anyhow. Is there some way of controlling this behavior without my son thinking that I don't love him?"

"It's very hard to convince a 6-year-old that you care for him after you have yelled 'no' at him several times. The first words a child learns to say are, 'You don't love me.' Most parents will cover their ears rather than hear their offspring say that."

"My question is to Mr. Plankton. Is it possible to be a good parent and not worry about whether your children love you or not?"

"In some countries it's possible — but not in America."

NATION IN BRIEF

El Salvadoran aid to be cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Salvadoran President Alfredo Cristiani was heading into high-level meetings here, the State Department today announced a proposed $55 million cutback in economic assistance to his country for fiscal year 1991.

The proposal would reduce economic aid to El Salvador from $284 million to $229 million, part of a general reordering of priorities the administration is undertaking in light of additional claims on the aid program in Panama and Eastern Europe.

Military aid to El Salvador would undergo a slight increase in fiscal 1991 to $91.4 million from the current level of $84.6 million.

The administration has been concerned that Congress may impose sharper cutbacks on El Salvador in response to continuing human rights abuses in that country.

Cristiani planned a session with members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee today before an early afternoon meeting with Bush.

Some in Congress favor making future aid to El Salvador contingent on bringing to justice those responsible for the November killings of six Jesuit priests.

But administration officials believe Cristiani may have defused a potential rebellion in Congress with the arrests a month ago of eight Army personnel, including a colonel, who were wanted in the killings.

Charles Dickens indicted

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The bank tellers of Christmas past are haunting Charles Dickens.

Dickens — a namesake but not a descendant of the author who wrote of Christmas ghosts in "A Christmas Carol" — was indicted Tuesday by a federal grand jury on charges of robbing three banks and trying to hold up a fourth during the holidays.

Dickens, 36, is accused of taking $1,776 from a PSFS bank on Dec. 21; $2,316 from a Germantown Savings branch Dec. 26 and $950 from the same branch on Jan. 2; and $1,305 from a Home Unity Savings and Loan branch Jan. 6.

He also is charged with unsuccessfully trying to rob the United Valley Bank on Jan. 2.

Dickens has been jailed without bail after a teller from an earlier holdup saw him three weeks ago in front of a bank. Court records show that other tellers have identified Dickens as the man who robbed their banks.

Hakim gets probation

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge today placed Iran-Contra figure Albert Hakim on two years' probation, fined him $5,000 and announced that the businessman has agreed to surrender his claims to "millions of dollars" taken in the affair.

U.S. District Court Judge Gerhard Gesell said the Iranian-born Hakim had secured the release of David Jacobsen, a U.S. hostage held in Lebanon, and is cooperating with Iran-Contra prosecutors in a new criminal investigative matter.

Gesell noted that Jacobsen, the former hostage, had written the judge on behalf of Hakim. The judge said that while others "have taken credit for" freeing the hostage, it was Hakim's conduct that actually achieved it.

"Very substantial funds — measured in the millions of dollars — which have been frozen" in Swiss bank accounts "have now been released to the United States by you," said Gesell.

Bigamy charge lessened

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — A woman charged with bigamy for marrying two men in eight months pleaded to the lesser charge of unlawful imprisonment and was put on six-months' probation.

When asked how he selected the lesser charge, Assistant District Attorney Thomas Lenkiewicz replied, "Obviously you've never been married," drawing a chuckle from spectators in the courtroom Wednesday.

"If bigamy is unlawful imprisonment, is a legal marriage lawful imprisonment?" mused James Resti, who represented Debra Sprague, 23, of Syracuse.

City Judge Jeffrey Merrill said if Ms. Sprague remains on good behavior for six months, he will dismiss the charge.

Ms. Sprague declined to comment, other than to say that she is estranged from both husbands. She left the court with a boyfriend.

Ms. Sprague was charged with bigamy in September 1988 for her marriage to Renzie T. Jay in July 1988. She had married William C. Sprague in December 1987.

Second drug recalled

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of a House investigations subcommittee wants the government to ensure that a lower-priced medicine for high blood pressure is available, now that both generic versions of a widely used anti-hypertension drug are off the market.

The second of two generic versions of SmithKline Beecham's Dyazide was recalled Wednesday by its maker, Bolar Pharmaceutical Co. Inc., which is under fire for allegedly giving false test data to the Food and Drug Administration.

Bolar also said it was recalling its 100 milligram extended-release phenytoin sodium capsules, a generic version of the epilepsy drug Dilantin made by Parke-Davis.

Greensboro celebrates sit-in anniversary

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The four blacks who were denied service at an all-white Woolworth lunch counter 30 years ago were greeted today by a black Woolworth vice president before sitting down to a breakfast of eggs, grits, bacon and coffee.

David Richmond, Franklin McCain, Jibreel Khazan and Joseph McNeil entered the store at 7:30 a.m. and, surrounded by dozens of reporters and onlookers, ordered from two women who had been working there on Feb. 1, 1960. Three of the men wore business suits. Khazan, formerly Ezell Blair Jr., wore a white robe with a headband around his dreadlocks.

They were greeted by Woolworth Vice President Aubrey Lewis, who noted that 30 years ago he, too, would have been denied service.

"I'm proud you had the courage to open the doors for a movement," Lewis said.

While the four waited for their meals, some onlookers began singing "We Shall Overcome." Outside the store there was more singing directed by the NAACP and some bystanders carried placards saying, "Feb. 1, 1960. It seems like only yesterday but it could be tomorrow" and "The only thing that's worthwhile is change — Remembering Feb. 1, 1960."

Back in 1960, public buildings in Greensboro had separate water fountains for whites and blacks. Theaters had separate entrances for blacks, who were forced to sit in balconies, away from whites. Blacks had to step to the rear on city buses.

When the four, all freshmen at North Carolina A&T State University, refused to leave the counter 30 years ago, their sit-in touched off protests in nine states and helped ignite the civil rights movement.

"We were scared," McCain recalled. "I just wanted a coke and a doughnut. That's all I wanted."

The four blacks who were denied service at the Woolworth store in Greensboro, N.C., 30 years ago meet at the same lunch counter. The four are, from left, Joseph McNeil, Jibreel Khazan, Franklin McCain and David Richmond.

"We did get some encouragement on the first day and we got it from quarters you wouldn't ordinarily expect it to come from," he said. "There was a little old white lady of oh, 75 years of age, who came over and placed hands on our shoulders and said to us, 'Boys, I'm so proud of you. The only thing I regret is that it didn't happen 20 years earlier.'

"That was really a source of inspiration to us."

Geneva Tisdale, a black working at Woolworth that day, said she never envisioned the scope of the events.

"I never thought they were serious," she said.

The other counter worker, Ima Edwards, agreed, saying, "I just thought they came in to try something. I didn't see it blossoming into this."

In his book, "Civilities and Civil Rights," Duke University historian William Chafe said the Woolworth sit-ins helped ignite the civil rights movement.

"The long road that would lead from Greensboro to Selma to Black Power and beyond had found its starting point," he wrote. Selma was the site of an important 1965 march for black voting rights.

Chafe's 1980 book was the subject of a panel discussion at the University of North Carolina-Greensboro on Wednesday night, the start of a five-day commemoration.

More than 100 people sign up to work on census

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

If Wednesday's signup for 1990 census enumerator jobs is any indication of the public enthusiasm for the event, citizens may be crawling all over each other to get counted.

Some 114 people filled rooms in the Midland City Hall basement and took the U.S. Bureau of the Census written test. The exam is required as part of the application process to become an enumerator or crew leader.

"It floored me that all these people were here," said Joe Garcia, bureau recruiting operation supervisor for this area. "It did surprise me. This is real good."

Garcia said the bureau will hire about 700 workers to take census information in Midland, Odessa, Lubbock and surrounding towns. Between 100 and 150 people will work in each county, he said.

Carol Wilson, 38, and a relative were two of those eager to join Uncle Sam's counting machine.

"It's going to be fun and interesting," said Mrs. Wilson, a local aerobics instructor. "I'm not in it for the money, but it always helps."

Unemployed Tone Green, 26, had a simple reason for signing up: "It's available."

Green, though, pointed out that working for the U.S. government will have its benefits.

"It's an excellent opportunity," he said. "There's decent pay compared to what else is out there. It's also a good opportunity to exhibit leadership."

Midlanders apparently have more enthusiasm toward census work this year than they had in 1980. By March 5, 1980, only 20 had applied, while 200 were needed.

Garcia attributed this year's census interest in higher unemployment than a decade ago.

"The economy is down and they also realize the federal money that's involved," he said.

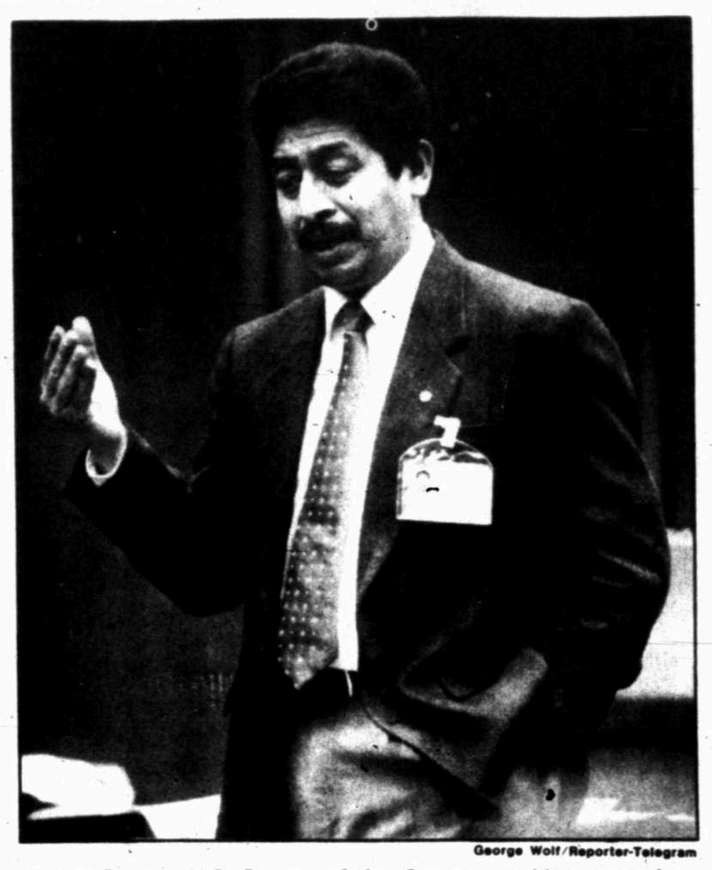

Enumerators will make $5.50 an hour, while crew leaders will be paid $6.25 an hour. Both will be paid 24 cents a mile for travel in their vehicles.

Garcia said usually one applicant is hired for every five who take the application exam, which tests math, reading and organizational skills.

"Some will not qualify," Garcia said. "Some will not pass the training. Some will refuse the job."

He said it is difficult to tell how many workers will be needed until the bureau concludes processing the census questionnaires mailed out in March. Starting

697-HELP provides information

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

Long-recognized for its community generosity and volunteer spirit, Midland had a weakness exposed by a recent Community Needs Assessment Survey.

While many human resource services are available to local residents, large numbers of Midlanders are unaware of the programs and agencies out there to help them, explained John Bourke, president of the Volunteer Center of Midland.

Bourke addressed media representatives this morning at a press conference announcing the 697-HELP hotline. This information and referral service is staffed by professionals at the Volunteer Center trained to handle any type of question on available support ranging from child day care to emotional support groups and legal services.

The hotline has been in operation for 11 months, but the center wanted to make sure all available information is as current as possible and that the "bugs" had been worked out of the system before making a major public announcement, according to Volunteer Center director Debra Johnson Mayes.

The hotline is answered by Volunteer Center personnel familiar with area agencies and information sources Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. An answering machine is utilized during hours the office is closed. Information will be available in both English and Spanish.

Information & Referral Midland, as the effort is known, is modeled after similar programs in Amarillo and San Angelo.

Charles Spence, chairman of the task force which conducted the Community Needs Assessment Survey, reported that lack of information is a major problem with almost one-fourth of survey respondents affected by a lack of knowledge of where to get information about human services.

"People of all races, economic status and most family situations indicated problems with information needs," Spence said the study found.

The Volunteer Center expects more than 200 calls per month to come in to the hotline service as

Celebrating Black History

Q. What is the most vivid memory you have of Midland?

Ramsoure

A. "Housing was very restricted when I came here in the late '50s. Most blacks lived across the railroad tracks, just two or three blacks had moved across the highway."

But things slowly had begun to change after the Supreme Court's 1954 decision which outlawed school segregation, and more blacks were moving north of "the tracks."

Then "white flight" came into play.

"Many of the whites who lived close to Austin Junior High (now Lee Freshman) moved out to the west side of town and opportunities became available for more blacks to move in."

But not all the whites left; some were attached to their neighborhood.

"Many Anglos who had not had any contact with blacks other than in employment situations, learned that blacks were just like anybody else" when they were living next door.

"There was sort of a bonding thing, it brought the blacks and Hispanics and Anglos together. It was the first type of any integration in Midland."

-- James Ramsoure, member of the Midland Independent School Board, 1968-74

Ramsoure, a native of Ironton, Ohio, has lived in Midland since 1958. He was a counselor at Carver until it closed in 1968, when he became coordinator of guidance services for MISD until his retirement in 1974. He holds a bachelor's degree from Alabama State University and a master's from Ohio State University. He and his wife of 52 years, Jane, have one child.

It's A Fact:

The first permanent structure for education of black youngsters was built in 1932 in the 1300 block of East Wall Street. In 1943, "Midland Colored School," as it then was known, became George Washington Carver Junior-Senior High School, in memory of the noted black agricultural scientist.

In recognition of Black History Month, the Reporter-Telegram will feature brief recollections of local black citizens on each Tuesday this month.

Boulter says energy policy needed to overcome reliance on foreign oil

By JULIE HILLRICHS

A sweeping overhaul of the nation's energy laws is needed if the U.S. is to overcome its growing reliance on foreign oil, a Texas Railroad Commission candidate says.

"George Bush believes in tax incentives: And if elected, I will help the president push for these incentives," Republican Beau Boulter, a former U.S. congressman, told reporters Wednesday.

Although Bush made no mention of a National Energy Strategy during his State of the Union Address Wednesday night, Boulter said the president's support for such a policy has not faltered.

"It's going to be a tough battle in Congress, but I'm convinced that we will win if we phrase it right and convince the consuming states that a National Energy Policy is central to environment protection, economic growth and national security," he said.

Boulter, who served on the House Energy and Natural Resources Subcommittee, helped develop the U.S. National Energy Policy Plank of the 1988 Republican National Platform.

During Boulter's term in Congress as chairman of the House Republican Energy Task Force, he claims to have led the fight to save intangible drilling costs during the 1985-86 battle over the Tax Reform Act.

He also co-authored with U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, the National Petroleum Security Act of 1987, a national energy strategy whose provisions included the repeal of the

MISD board may relax career ladder standards

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

About 100 more teachers probably will qualify for career ladder entry this year than last year if the school board approves plans to relax requirements, a Midland school official said this week.

"It appears that given the number of applicants that meet the qualifications, we will have more money available than we have applicants," said Tom Holland, Midland Independent School District executive director of human resource services.

Holland said he would ask the school board in February to "modify" career ladder requirements so that more teachers could qualify.

The career ladder is a state-mandated merit pay plan for teachers who score well on appraisals and take additional college and in-service training.

Holland predicted that board approval would mean more than 200 teachers could start the career ladder climb this year, up from about 100 last year.

"I would anticipate that we would have over 600 on the career ladder next year," Holland said.

There are 454 MISD teachers on Level II and Level III of the career ladder this year, MISD figures show.

Midlander being tried for aggravated assault

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Testimony continued today in the trial of Michael McCullough, who is accused of the severe beating of another man following an argument at a popular Midland nightclub.

McCullough, 21, is on trial for aggravated assault in Judge Vann Culp's 238th State District Court. Testimony in the case began late Wednesday.

Two employees of Club D-V 8, 4519 N. Garfield, told jurors today a "pushing and shoving match" was broken up and McCullough and assault victim Richard Stallings were thrown out of the club.

David Nolan, a club bartender, told District Attorney Al Schorre that Stallings entered the club at about 11:30 p.m. on June 8, 1989 and ordered a beer. A fight broke put a few a moments later.

Nolan said Stallings appeared to be sober when he was ejected from the club.

The bartender denied inquiries from defense attorney Kevin Bartley about Stallings' alleged use of a beer bottle in the fight.

Nolan and Kelly Jordan, Club D-V 8's assistant manager, said they were both surprised to learn Stallings' blood alcohol level that night was more than .29, nearly three times the level considered intoxication in

Mabee contributes to museum

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

DALLAS — A new aviation museum is being built at Dallas Love Field and the project has received a boost from Midland.

Midlander Joe Mabee, who is instrumental in the effort to bring the Confederate Air Force to Midland, has presented a grant to the Frontiers of Flight Museum through the J.E.and L.E. Mabee Foundation.

"I'm personally interested in aviation," noted Mabee, who added that his foundation also supports the CAF and the 99ers Ladies Squadron as well as other aviation museums.

Olin Lancaster, executive director of Frontiers in Flight, said the museum is grateful for Mabee's support.

He added that the museum is set to open sometime in April.

"Then we're going to redo it all over again," he laughed. He explained that a nationally recognized museum design firm, Krent/Paffett Associates Inc., has been hired to plan and execute a new exhibition that will

Todd

WOLCOTT — Back in those old West Texas cotton-pulling days when "cotton-picking" meant robbing those stalks of fluffy bolls and also meant a nice byword for "Tarnation!," cotton was being pulled by hand and not stripped by those high-dollar machines.

"I used to bring braceros in here and pull cotton," recalled David Davidson, an ex-farmer who quit plowing the fields to sell a newfangled piece of tractor equipment called "traction stabilizer."

Those were the days, Davidson recalled, when the United States admitted Mexican laborers into the country for seasonal agricultural work.

"They had a work card," he reflected.

Back in the 1950s, hoeing paid 50 cents an hour. But the braceros with strong backs and quick hands could make more money by pulling cotton for $1.55 a hundred pounds.

"A lot of them were good cotton pullers," recalled Davidson, 54. "Most of them would send money back home (to Mexico). You (the farmers) furnished the (bunk) house and the sack, and they had to furnish their own food and clothing."

Herman "Fritz" Lander, who, at 77, predates Davidson on the farm scene, recalled that "There were three guys from Mexico, and they pulled 1,000 pounds apiece" in a day's work.

"They were pretty few and far between," Davidson noted.

But those exceptional braceros, who could pull a 1,000 pounds of cotton in a day's work, often would pull off of the rows even before sun set if they made their self-imposed quotas.

But in the main, most braceros pulled 400 to 500 pounds in a day, "depending on how good the cotton was," Davidson said.

But that $15.50, which a bracero could make in a day if he pulled a 1,000 pounds of cotton, was good money back then.

"At that time, it was a lot of money," Davidson figured. "Back in the '50s, you could buy Levi's for $3 to $4 dollars a pair." Today, he figured, a good pair of work blue jeans can run about $24.95 for such a pair.

In those olden days of cotton-sacks, there was competition among the farm laborers. The competition often was between the braceros, all men, and the resident farm laborers, who "wanted to use their kids" on the farm.

"And the farmer, he was trying to make a living, too," Davidson recalled.

Then, somehow, the government, which had regulated the bracero program, got "so rough" with the program in the 1960s and started cutting it back that "they had to stop the whole business." As a result, some farmers were tempted to hire illegal aliens for farm labor. The government intervened. Then, more and more machinery moved in.

The changing situation encouraged more farmers to go the mechanized route, as mechanical cotton-strippers, like mechanical gang rotary hoes, were coming more and more into the farm scene. Still, there is some hand hoeing going on. But, "cotton-picking!," there just isn't much hand pulling or picking going on. Things change even down on the farm.

Man sentenced to seven years

From Staff Reports

A 39-year-old Garland man convicted of gunning down a Midlander was sentenced Wednesday to seven years in state prison and fined $5,000 by a jury.

Richard Ruth received the sentence from the same panel that convicted him of attempted murder Tuesday for the Aug. 8, 1989 shooting of John Pace. According to testimony in the week-long trial, Pace was shot in the parking lot of the Treemont Apartments, 5216 Treemont Ave., as he left for work.

But Ruth's attorney, Ted Kerr, asked the jury for probation.

According to Petty, Pace was attacked because of a child custody battle between he and his ex-wife, Beverly Hicks, who also was Ruth's girlfriend.

Ruth claimed he was near Amarillo, driving from New Mexico to the Dallas area, when the shooting occurred.

AUSTIN (AP) — Direct computer access to the secretary of state's office is available to the public — and law firms, banks, newspapers and private investigators are among 271 accounts, including some in Midland, using the CompuServe network, says Secretary of State George Bayoud.

"If you live outside Austin and want information about corporations, limited partnerships or Uniform Commercial Code financing statements, accessing our database may be your best bet," Bayoud said in a statement.

The system, in use since 1988, can be linked up with personal computers in 16 Texas cities — Abilene, Amarillo, Beaumont, Conroe, Corpus Christi, Dallas, El Paso, Fort Worth, Galveston, Houston, Irving, Laredo, Midland, San Antonio, Waco and Lubbock.

Customers post a deposit account with the secretary of state's office from which a $3 pre-search fee is deducted. The cost to use the network is $15 an hour.

Jordan said McCullough's vehicle appeared to follow Stallings south on Garfield Street after the two and another man were thrown out of Club D-V 8.

On Wednesday a physician testified Stallings suffered a broken jaw and fractured eye socket.

In his opening statement to the jury, Schorre said a near-defenseless Stallings was "worked over" by McCullough, after the two left the club. He asked the jury to anticipate a defense of self-defense.

But Bartley told jurors they would have to determine who was the aggressor in the incident. He characterized Stallings as a drunken troublemaker who "got exactly what he should have gotten" in the fray.

CENSUS

April 1, enumerators will visit the homes of those who do not return their questionnaires.

The primary questions will be simple: how many live in the home and what is their ethnic backgrounds?

To qualify for a census job, the applicant must be at least 18 years old or 16 with a high school diploma.

The person must show a Social Security card and driver's license and be willing to work between 30 and 40 hours a week, Garcia said. Those who only want to work between 20 and 30 hours a week are encouraged to apply, he said.

Enumerators and crew chiefs must go through two days of training classes and be willing to work mostly at night, he said.

Census officials will be back in Midland to take more applications Feb. 16. Tests will be administered that day at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. in the Texas Employment Commission, 501 N. Loraine St.

They were scheduled to be in Odessa today to administer tests at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Counting for the census actually began Jan. 22, when enumerators started counting military personnel, the homeless, shelter dwellers and college students among others living in special places.

Midland Councilman Jose Cuevas, chairman of a committee in charge of working in hard-to-count areas, said the push is on to publicize the census.

"We need to get the word out that everyone needs to be counted," Cuevas said. "I think right now is the critical point. We're a little bit behind right now, but we're going to work hard in the next 30 days."

It is important to get an accurate count because the figures will be used to determine state and national legislative boundaries and funding for federal programs among other things, he said.

"The whole city benefits," Cuevas added.

He emphasized that census information is confidential. Not even the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, Internal Revenue Service, welfare agencies, military or FBI can touch the records for 72 years, he said.

Needing funds to promote the event, Cuevas said he will request $25,000 from the city of Midland at the Feb. 13 council meeting.

Midland Independent School District officials will be asked to hold a poster-coloring contest and a balloon launch to publicize the census, he said.

Other promotional events will include speeches to various organizations in the city and a senior citizens dinner held to help the elderly fill out their questionnaires, Cuevas said.

BOULTER

Windfall Profits Tax, deregulation of natural gas, repeal of the depletion transfer rule, alternative minimum tax relief, tax credits for drilling and exploration, expanded definition of IDCs to include geological and geophysical expensing and tax credits for marginal well production.

Boulter proposes, if elected, to use Railroad Commission regulatory authority, expertise and advocacy capability to promote oil and gas price stability into the 1990s.

He also said he will strengthen Texas' position as the core producer of domestic energy and help develop a National Energy Strategy based on the principles in the 1987 Gramm-Boulter National Petroleum Security Act and current Bush Administration programs.

"My goal is to carry forward the outstanding agenda Kent Hance has brought to the Texas Railroad Commission...adding to that agenda my own expertise, my own ideas and my own receord as a leading energy voice in the U.S. Congress," he said.

CENTER

community awareness grows.

The 65 member agencies of the Volunteer Center as well as the churches and human service agencies of the center's Crosscheck program support the 697-HELP hotline by providing reliable, up-to-date sources of information, Ms. Mayes said.

The Information & Referral hotline is the fifth major program area for the center, which was founded in 1985. Other major efforts are directed at volunteer recruitment and referral; member agency assistance; volunteer support and recognition and the Crosscheck program, which centralizes tracking of individuals seeking assistance from multiple agencies. More than 800 people were on the program list during the first half of 1989.

Drug task force makes arrests

Associated Press

A six-month undercover drug operation led to 245 cases in six East Texas counties, with arrests continuing Thursday.

The Deep East Texas Regional Narcotics Trafficking Task Force and its member agencies were seeking to arrest 218 suspects charged in the cases, a release said.

The arrests in Angelina, Cherokee, Nacogdoches, Panola, Polk and Tyler counties began at 7 p.m. Wednesday. The cases involve crack and other forms of cocaine, as well as LSD, marijuana and methamphetamine, the statement said.

The drug sweep involved state, local and federal law officers.

Cherokee County Sheriff Dickson said at least 20 of the 39 suspects in his county were arrested within hours Wednesday night.

Truck explosion stalls traffic

HOUSTON (AP) — A stretch of Interstate 10 was reopened today after a tanker truck flipped and exploded, stalling traffic west of the Interstate 610 Loop for several hours, officials said.

The accident sent billowing clouds of black smoke and flames shooting some 40 feet in the air about 3 p.m. Wednesday after an 18-wheeler hauling naphtha overturned when trying to avoid a collision.

"It was an accident," said Larry Elimon of San Antonio, driver of the truck who escaped without injury. "Somebody cut somebody else off, somebody hit this lady's car and knocked it out of control and into the front of the truck."

Elimon said he kicked out the front windshield to escape the truck after it flipped over. He suffered a cut on his arm, but was not seriously injured.

A woman whose car was struck in the collision also suffered no serious injury and was able to flee the vehicle before the fire ignited.

'God's watchdog' angers town with bus' critical signs

By PATTI MUCK
Hearst News Service

ROSENBERG — Dorman McKinney, a short-order cook, fancies himself as "God's watchdog."

So when God tells McKinney to go "bark" at someone, McKinney says, he paints critical signs on the side of the converted school bus where he lives with his wife and son.

But those signs have angered people, who contend in court that he has carried free speech too far.

"I embarrass these officials when I expose them," McKinney, 61, said Tuesday of the accusations he paints on his bus about local judges, church leaders and county officials.

"My agreement with God is that only death will stop me," he added.

The latest secular attempts to stop him are three disorderly conduct charges filed against him. McKinney pleaded no contest and posted bond so he could appeal the charges.

"He has two constitutional rights at stake here," said American Civil Liberties Union attorney Bruce Griffiths, representing McKinney on his most recent charges. "He has free speech. He has a right to go very far in expressing his views in public. The mere fact they're offensive is not grounds for suppressing them.

"He has an additional and equally important right to practice his religion, which consists of making these kinds of signs and displaying them," Griffiths said.

The disorderly conduct charges stem from three complaints filed Dec. 15 when McKinney's signs, accompanied by Bible verses, referred to a local church as "a brothel" and called church members "fat cows" and "cowardly dogs."

The city has been working on a sign ordinance for nearly two years and a draft may be presented to City Council Feb. 6.

"He has a right to freedom of speech, and we're going to make sure we honor his right in every way possible," Mayor Larry Wilkinson said.

MISD employs 1,251 teachers.

The district pays $2,000 yearly bonuses to Level II teachers and $4,000 bonuses to Level III teachers, the maximum allowed by the state.

Holland said the district has more career ladder money this year because the state is requiring districts to spend $20 more per student on career ladder stipends.

MISD will spend $90 per student this year compared with $70 last year, Holland said. About $1.7 million is earmarked for MISD career ladder stipends, he said.

Midland High School economics teacher Hugh Franks, who is awaiting word on his application to Level III, said he thought lowering entry standards was an acceptable solution to the problem.

"I wouldn't see it as a dilution of the integrity of the program," Franks said Wednesday. "I think the entire program is somewhat unfair to begin with."

He said he would like to see as many teachers on the career ladder as possible, because the program would work better as a "salary embellishment" than merit pay to reward excellence.

Holland agreed that the career ladder has failed as a merit pay system, because appraisal scores for teachers have continued to climb since the career ladder was created by House Bill 72 in 1984.

"Over 90 percent of the teachers in the state of Texas are in the 'exceeding expectations' category or higher," Holland said, referring to appraisal results. "It's a testament to the fact that we have excellent teachers, but it's also a testament to the fact that the appraisal instrument is not making a discrimination between poor and excellent teachers."

Holland said he won't know until May exactly how many teachers will move up the career ladder this year.

Mattox doesn't think Richards front-runner

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox is rejecting a claim state Treasurer Ann Richards is staking on the position of Democratic gubernatorial front-runner.

Ms. Richards told The Associated Press Wednesday that she believes she can win the party's nomination and most likely will face Republican Clayton Williams in November "unless (Railroad Commission Chairman Kent) Hance can make some miracle here to make a runoff."

"I expect when it's all said and done, it will be Clayton and me. Polls are part of it, but it's also the feeling that you get on the road," Ms. Richards said.

Mattox told news reporters to wager on her prediction.

"We have made — and we will make — dramatic steps in our campaign. Compare our accomplishments with those of the treasurer. Compare acts of leadership, acts of courage, and I think that you'll find that her level of experience is pretty shallow and her level of accomplishments are not great by most standards," he said.

Mattox again urged Gov. Bill Clements to allow the upcoming special session of the Legislature to consider creating a state lottery.

He said the money such a game could generate would provide funds to meet a court order on public school aid and to speed up criminal justice improvements.

"They ought to go and get the lottery in place," Mattox said. "We can pick up $700 million in the first full fiscal year of operation if they'd all quit dillydallying around."

On the Republican side, a group of retired Texas Rangers endorsed Williams, saying they didn't mind the fist fights he's had.

"A man that won't fight, I think there's something wrong with him," said J.L. "Skippy" Rundell Sr., spokesman for the 16 retired Rangers who backed Williams for his support of law enforcement and anti-drug issues.

Williams, the Midland rancher-oilman who acknowledges two fights since his 50th birthday, said the lawmen's backing showed that his message is reaching Texans despite criticism from opponents that his cowboy style is more suited to the 1890s than the 1990s.

"A lot of the old-fashioned values that brought us to where we are in this great state are solid, they have a real foundation. The family's so critical, hard work, the old-fashioned work ethic of a day's work for a day's pay, and when a criminal commits a crime he ought to pay for it," Williams said.

Officials to fight death row inmate's release

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Harris County officials said they will fight the release of a death row inmate convicted a decade ago as the triggerman in the slayings of a Houston couple and their infant son.

Janecka

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals voted 5-4 Wednesday to order a new trial for Allan Janecka, who was convicted of being a hired hitman in the July 5, 1979, slaying of 14-month-old Kevin Wanstrath. He also was indicted in the deaths of the boy's parents, Diana and John Wanstrath, but was not tried on those charges.

The high court, which previously upheld the conviction in 1987, said the indictment against Janecka did not include the name of the person who allegedly paid him for the murder. The majority opinion said that affected his defense.

"They had strictly a murder case and not a capital murder case," Janecka said Wednesday from death row. "They didn't prove who hired or supposedly paid me any money or promised me any money."

But prosecutors were not as convinced about the merits for a new trial.

"I think the court is mistaken in saying that Mr. Janecka was not placed on notice of what he was charged with sufficient enough to allow him to prepare a defense," said Harris County District Attorney Johnny Holmes.

"I'm not questioning the ruling," said Johnny Bonds, a former Houston police homicide officer who doggedly pursued the case. "I'm disappointed in the ruling, but I just wish they'd done it sooner."

He said another trial could be difficult since some witnesses have died and others have relocated.

But both Holmes and Bonds said they do not want Janecka released pending a new trial. Holmes called the possibility of Janecka's release are "slim and none."

"He's a dangerous person," said Bonds, now an investigator with the district attorney's office.

Janecka said he was happy that his case was being reconsidered.

"My heart's pounding," Janecka said after a death row corrections officer told him of the Austin decision. "I'm anxious to see what's going to happen, but I'm going to take one day at a time."

In the case, Walter Waldhauser plea-bargained a 30-year sentence in 1981 for hiring Janecka to kill the Wanstraths, allegedly on behalf of a third man, Markham Duff-Smith.

Duff-Smith, brother of Diana Wanstrath, was accused of arranging the killings to inherit their estate but never was tried in the case. He was convicted and sentenced to die for arranging the October 1975 murder of his adoptive mother, Gertrude Duff-Smith Zabolio, who was found strangled in her Houston home.

Duff-Smith declined to be interviewed on Wednesday. He previously denied involvement in the deaths.

MARK LEAVERTON ENDORSES NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

As an oil and gas lawyer, I know that it is important to our community to have a judge with the experience to effectively preside in cases affecting the oil and gas industry. I know Nick Taylor both as a person and as a lawyer. A judge should possess at least four uncompromised traits: fairness, integrity, the experience that allows a common sense approach to resolve disputes, and the intellect to comprehend and apply the law in a broad range of legal matters. Nick Taylor is such a man, and I am proud to endorse him to be our District Judge.

Officers shot serving warrant

FORT WORTH (AP) — Two Fort Worth Police officers were wounded while attempting to serve a search warrant, a police spokesman says.

Spokesman Doug Clarke said Charles Lewis, 37, was in good condition at Harris Methodist Hospital early today. Ronald Brown, 34, was in fair condition, hospital spokeswoman Joan Mertz said.

Officers said two men and a woman were arrested after the shooting Wednesday. Their names were not immediately available, Clarke said.

One of the men, who is believed to have fired at the officers with a shotgun, will be charged with attempted capital murder, Clarke said. The other man, who was armed with a handgun, and the woman will be charged with illegal possession of a controlled substance, Clarke said.

Clarke said officers were attempting to serve a search warrant at a home where officers believed methamphetamines were being kept.

Colonias funds OK'd

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements has authorized the use of $15 million in federal funds for improving plumbing and connecting sewage systems in colonias along the Texas-Mexico border.

The $15 million, which could be used only with Clements' approval, was the full amount of water pollution control funds set aside for Texas in appropriations for the Environmental Protection Agency, according to a statement from the governor's office.

"With the release of this money, great strides can be made in improving living conditions in the colonia subdivisions," Clements said Wednesday. "Clearly, access to proper plumbing and sewage treatment facilities will go a long way toward halting the spread of diseases in these inadequately developed neighborhoods."

The Texas Water Development Board has been designated as the state agency to distribute the federal funds through loans, which will be available for residents of colonias in Cameron, Hidalgo, Zapata, Starr, Webb, Maverick, Val Verde, Terrell, Brewster, Presidio, Hudspeth and El Paso counties.

Texas voters in November also approved $100 million in bonds to construct water distribution and waste water treatment facilities for the colonias.

Group to lobby for fort

KILLEEN (AP) — A local group will have to raise $100,000 to $200,000 for a grass roots lobbying campaign against proposed cuts at Fort Hood.

Deactivation of the 2nd Armored Division and loss of 12,000 soldiers at Fort Hood is one of nine proposed military reductions that will affect Texas under Defense Secretary Dick Cheney's belt-tightening.

About 40 local government and business leaders from Killeen and nearby communities have formed KHAKI — Keep Hood Alive and Kicking Inc. — to fight the cuts.

Group spokesman Gaylon Christie said the group will determine the economic impact of cuts at the base.

The group will also be a clearing house for information for the public and the media, generate fact sheets, prepare groups to testify before Congress and possibly hire lobbyists in Austin and Washington.

There had been offers of funds Tuesday, Christie said, and an account will be set up at a local bank to handle the monies collected. He said people interested in contributing should contact their respective chambers of commerce.

White against closing bases

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Gov. Mark White, who's again seeking the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, says President Bush should keep all Texas military bases open to help fight the war on drugs.

"The last thing we should do is pull back troops from the front lines of the drug war we are waging here at home," White said in a telegram to Bush on Wednesday.

"We must put our military strength where we need it the most. That's why I am urging the president to consider this clear and present danger in any decisions made with regard to military base closures," White said.

Warbler may be protected

AUSTIN (AP) — The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has announced that it will propose that the golden-cheeked warbler, a tiny songbird that nests only in Texas, be given federal protection as a threatened species, according to the regional office of the National Audubon Society.

The listing process could take as long as a year to complete, the society said Wednesday.

Lawmaker critical of blimp groundings

AUSTIN (AP) — The U.S. Customs Service should have notified Congress that it had grounded blimps used to detect airborne smugglers along the Texas-Mexico border, says U.S. Rep. Jake Pickle.

The unmanned, football-field-long blimps contain sophisticated radar that help federal agents detect and intercept smugglers flying into the United States with South American cocaine and Mexican marijuana.

The balloons, tethered at altitudes of 10,000 to 15,000 feet, are touted as key in the Bush administration's war on drugs.

Pickle, who heads a congressional subcommittee that oversees Customs operations, told the Austin American-Statesman Wednesday he was appalled "that the U.S. Customs Service has invested so much in what may be another worthless system."

The Austin Democrat, who is seeking re-election to a 14th term in Congress, criticized customs for secretly removing two aerostats along the Rio Grande River after another blimp crashed near Eagle Pass on Dec. 29.

"During the past decade of gung-ho, cowboy management, customs officials seem to have lost sight of their heritage as this country's premier enforcer of international trade policies," Pickle said in a statement issued earlier this week.

Customs ordered General Electric, the balloon's manufacturer, to stop deploying the Texas aerostats, which cost between $11.5 million and $12.5 million each, after the Eagle Pass crash. The crash is under investigation.

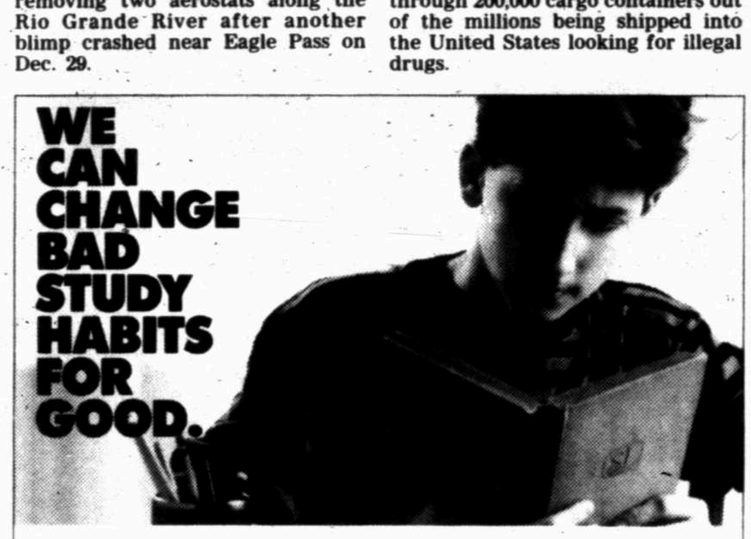

"I am disturbed that (the committee) was not informed about the mishap," Pickle said.

Customs originally planned to deploy 16 balloons from the Pacific coast to the Bahamas as an aerial fence to deter or disrupt smuggling routes used in the multibillion-dollar drug business.

During the past two years, Pickle noted, customs has spent "nearly $100 million annually, almost 10 percent of their entire budget, to rifle through 200,000 cargo containers out of the millions being shipped into the United States looking for illegal drugs.

East German backs 'united fatherland'

EAST BERLIN (AP) — East Germany's Communist premier today urged talks with West Germany toward an eventual "united fatherland" that would be independent of military blocs and governed by a joint parliament in Berlin.

The two Germanys must work out a common approach to reunification to calm the unease of their European neighbors, Premier Hans Modrow said at a news conference in which he unveiled his plan for unification.

The Communists, beset by a crumbling economy and a damaging Westward exodus of thousands of East Germans, until recently had opposed talk of reunification.

This week for the first time they endorsed the concept, and Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev softened his view, calling a united Germany inevitable.

Modrow said he could give no time frame for reunification because it depends on the pace of European unity and the attitudes of Germans in both states.

He said he would push for a slower tempo in inter-German relations to avoid instability, and called for an interim confederation with West Germany that could work out a measured and logical program for "growing together."

"Germany should once again become a united fatherland of all citizens of the German nation," Modrow said. "Responsibility, caution and understanding are demanded in order to ensure that there is never any danger to the lives and well-being of neighbors."

Modrow called for negotiations with Bonn soon to devise a joint plan on reunification, but made clear that he had not previously discussed his views with West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

He said elections in both Germanys would be necessary to seat a joint parliament in Berlin. And he indicated that in his view "joint executive bodies "could also function in certain areas."

Modrow said both states must "step by step" proceed toward neutrality.

Modrow's announcement appeared to reject a unity plan proposed Wednesday by West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who envisioned West Germany remaining loyal to the NATO alliance while making what is currently East Germany neutral.

Reflecting Bonn's optimism about eventual reunification, Genscher today praised as "an important step forward" President Bush's proposal for sharp reductions in U.S. and Soviet forces in Central Europe.

Bush's proposal Wednesday night in his first State of the Union address to limit each superpower to 195,000 troops in the region also was welcomed by West Germany's defense minister, Gerhard Stoltenberg.

He called it "a balanced combination of disarmament policy and unequivocal recognition of the West's defense readiness and alliance solidarity."

Proposed U.S. troop cuts would hit Bonn hardest

WEST BERLIN (AP) — West Germany would be dealt the hardest economic blow by the large-scale U.S. troop cuts in Europe that President Bush proposed in his State of the Union speech.

Bush proposed that U.S. and Soviet troops be reduced to 225,000 in Europe — down to 195,000 in Central Europe — because of the dizzying collapse of East bloc Communist regimes.

About 250,000 U.S. servicemen are based in West Germany alone, with another 55,000 in Britain, Italy, Turkey and Greece.

There was no immediate reaction from West German officials. Foreign Ministry spokesman Rainer Mueller said in Bonn that details of the Bush proposal would have to be studied before comment could be made.

The Cologne-based German Economics Institute reported in a July study that West Germany earns $5 billion a year from U.S. military expenditures. It warned that a troop pullout would mean "economic collapse" for regions that are heavily dependent on the American presence.

An extensive analysis of the U.S. bases was undertaken because of the growing public tendency to see American troops as a burden, institute director for economic and scientific affairs Otto Vogel said at the time.

There has been increasing support in recent months for troop cuts as a way to reduce tensions in Europe and move the German states closer to reunification now that the Communists in East Germany no longer have a monopoly on power.

Baku curfew could be lifted this month

BAKU, U.S.S.R. (AP) — The Soviet military commandant said today it may be possible to lift the curfew and remove some soldiers from Baku this month if the situation stays calm, and he welcomed talks with nationalists to help reduce friction.

Lt. Gen. Vladimir S. Dubinyak told the first foreign reporters allowed into Baku since Jan. 20 that one condition for lifting the curfew is an end to leaflets urging strikes to protest the military presence in the Azerbaijani capital.

Dubinyak was interrupted frequently by Baku residents, including Nadchov Nadzhavov, editor of the banned pro-independence People's Front newspaper. Nadzhavov charged that soldiers were sent into Baku in part to prevent the People's Front from making a strong showing in local elections.

He also accused President Mikhail S. Gorbachev of deploying the military to please hard-line Communists unhappy with the lenient treatment given secessionist groups in the republic of Lithuania.

"Gorbachev's hands are now bloody," he said.

In Baku alone, 139 people have died since Jan. 20, when soldiers were deployed to quell ethnic and nationalist unrest, the official Tass news agency said today. Tass said 106 of the dead were civilians.

The deployment was ordered after anti-Armenian riots in the city Jan. 13 spread across the southern republic and grew to include calls for Azerbaijani independence.

Military trucks and armored personnel carriers guard most intersections between Baku airport and the center of the city during the 11 p.m.-5 a.m. curfew. Soldiers wearing helmets and carrying automatic weapons stand by.

Armenian and Azerbaijani representatives are meeting in Riga, the capital of the Baltic republic of Latvia, to try to find a solution to their longstanding ethnic strife.

Dubinyak, the Baku military commandant, told reporters that there are "many positively inclined forces trying to normalize the situation and end the curfew."

Asked when this might be possible, he said, "I'm not certain, but maybe mid-February."

Dubinyak said regular army soldiers, making up 5,000 of the 17,000 troops now committed to Baku, could be sent home, military equipment could be removed from the streets, and the remaining Interior Ministry soldiers could patrol the streets without weapons.

Dubinyak also said he would welcome talks with the Azerbaijan People's Front. Defense Minister Dmitri T. Yazov has said in the past that the military is trying to crush the group as a nationalist movement.

Dubinyak said there had been no proposal for talks from the organization, but Nadzhavov interrupted to say talks could begin any time.

Nadzhavov also rejected the possibility of the military leaving this month.

"I can make the prognosis that they won't leave before the elections," he told reporters. The date for local elections is to be set this month, and they must take place within three months.

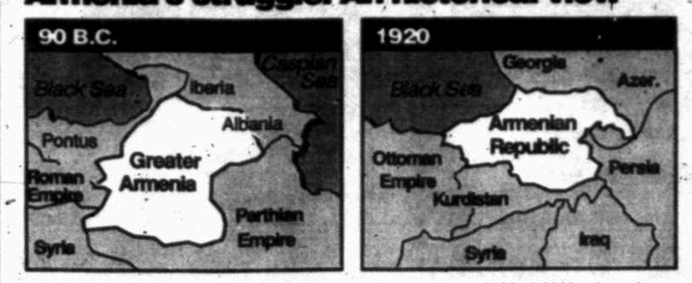

Nadzhavov said Gorbachev had given into reformers by not cracking down on the independence movement in the Baltic republic of Lithuania, and therefore gave into hardliners by deploying soldiers to crush the Azerbaijani movement.

Memories of Tbilisi prevented the military from making quick decisions, said Kolesnikov, an army representative serving under Dubinyak.

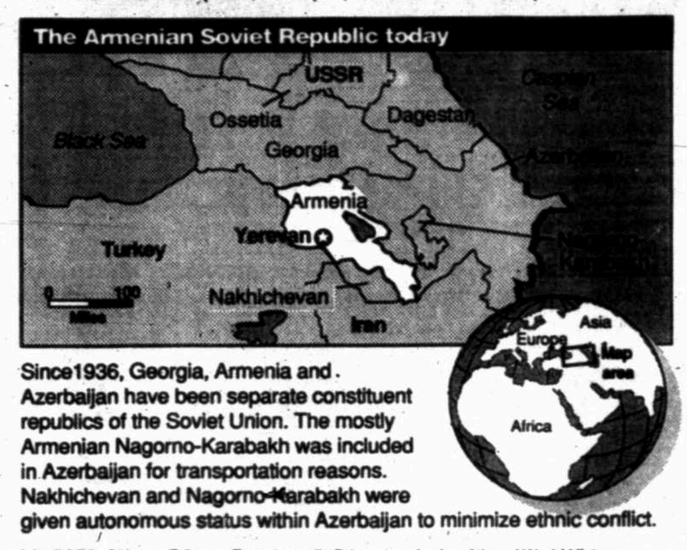

"We saw outrages," he said. "We saw instances of blood-letting."

Armenia's struggle: An historical view

Under King Tigran II (94-56 B.C), Armenia became the strongest state east of the Roman Empire. He had gained control over parts of Iberia (Georgia), Albania (Azerbaijan) and Parthia (Iran) by 83 B.C., when he accepted control over Syria, located along the eastern Mediterranean as far south as Ptolemais (Acre, Israel).

In the wake of World War I and Turkish massacres, the first independent Armenian state since the Middle Ages was proclaimed in 1918. The Allies briefly recognized independent republics of Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia in 1920. Later that year, Turkey seized part of Armenia and the rest became a Soviet republic.

Since1936, Georgia, Armenia and Azerbaijan have been separate constituent republics of the Soviet Union. The mostly Armenian Nagorno-Karabakh was included in Azerbaijan for transportation reasons. Nakhichevan and Nagorno-Karabakh were given autonomous status within Azerbaijan to minimize ethnic conflict.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Focus on creative self-expression and a possible business expansion. A romantic relationship will blossom when you act confident of your partner's love. A change in lifestyle will bring you a more rewarding social life. Expect to be attracted to the unusual in September. Investigate further before jumping into a questionable new career pursuit. Ask for what you have earned in October and you will be richly rewarded. Thanksgiving marks a turning point in your private life. You are ready for a permanent commitment.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Farrah Fawcett, violinist Jascha Heifetz, novelist Ayn Rand, comedian Tom Smothers.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work hard this morning so you can make a quick getaway this afternoon. Money could be the crux of a personal problem. A college-bound teenager finds a temporary job. Be supportive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Steer clear of a friend or relative's financial schemes. Attending a social function later today will offer you new business or romantic options. Do not be afraid to take calculated risks.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Communication with those in authority could be complicated or confusing. Your partner presents you with an interesting ultimatum. A child may turn rebellious for no reason at all. Be patient.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): After a difficult matter is sorted out, you may not be in a position to take further action. A personal relationship puzzles you. Intellectual pursuits enjoy the best influences.

LEO (July [illegible] Aug. 22): An invitation that never comes could leave you feeling left out. Stop worrying about things you cannot control. A financial tip from a close friend bears careful investigation. Someone could be misinformed.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Try to be objective about any problems that arise. It is best not to let negative thoughts smoulder. Say what you feel. Others appreciate your honesty. Give a loved one a second chance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A burst of energy and a stroke of good luck brighten your day. The one you adore will applaud your enthusiasm. Look for a way to recycle an old project to make new profits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It sometimes pays to play innocent; avoid getting involved in a sticky situation. Social plans are subject to change. Domestic disagreements can be averted if you make concessions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You could find yourself defending your philosophy of life today. Refuse to be rattled by someone belligerent. Romance grows more satisfying. Guard your money and valuables.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Moonlighting will bring in extra cash, but could disrupt family life. Your question — "Do I have enough energy?" — is valid. Seek the cooperation of your loved ones in keeping expenses down.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Others will surprise you when they listen approvingly to your ideas. The stakes are high, and you feel appreciated. A telephone call may hold romantic promise.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Expect the unexpected today. Drop-in visitors and mysterious messages are featured. Give yourself extra time to get to appointments. You love to play "devil's advocate" at meetings.

Opening lead: King of ♡ Don't be too eager to commit yourself to a specific line of play. A finesse that was destined to succeed at trick two will work equally well at trick 10 or 11!

North's preemptive jump to four spades worked extremely well. Because of the double fit in the red suits, five hearts by East-West would be defeated only one trick, but the vulnerability made it too risky for East to enter the fray.

West led the king of hearts and, when East followed with the deuce to indicate he was prepared for a switch, West shifted to the two of diamonds. It might seem that the fate of the contract now hinged on the club finesse, but declarer elected to postpone that decision until more was known about the distribution.

Declarer captured the king of diamonds with the ace, drew two rounds of trumps and ruffed the remining heart in dummy. Now came the key play—declarer led a club to the king and exited with a diamond. West won the trick with the ten, but the defense was in its death throes.

If West cashed the queen of diamonds, his forced red-suit return at the next trick would allow declarer to ruff on the table while disposing of a losing club from hand. If West put East on lead with a low diamond to the jack, that worthy would have an additional means of committing suicide—besides conceding a ruff-sluff, East could lead a club into dummy's ace-jack tenace.

What if West could win the third diamond and lead a club? Then declarer, having exhausted all other possibilities, would have to fall back on the club finesse to try to land the contract.

Gary Coleman's mom loses lawsuit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Gary Coleman defeated his mother's effort to take control of his $7 million fortune, despite her claim that she only wanted the best for the diminutive 21-year-old.

Edmonia Sue Coleman had asked a court conservator to take over Coleman's finances, saying the former "Diff'rent Strokes" star was unable to make decisions rationally because of the effects of a kidney disease and what she viewed as the bad influence of a close friend.

But Wednesday, Superior Court Judge Martha Goldin disagreed.

"The very things you claim he doesn't have, he's got," Goldin told an attorney for Coleman's mother.

Coleman's attorney, Charles Wake, said the actor was pleased.

"It was an emotional experience for him," said Wake.

Coleman, who played the precocious Arnold Jackson on the hit TV show, has filed a separate lawsuit alleging his parents and former business manager mishandled his money and funneled away more than $1 million for themselves. The lawsuit has yet to come to trial.

Coleman's mother said she is worried that her son is getting poor advice from his friend and former chauffeur, Dion Mial, with whom he lives in Denver.

Coleman was born with an atrophied right kidney and lost the other one when he was 5. He took immunosuppressive drugs for his condition and they stunted his growth at 4 feet, 8 inches.

DENVER (AP) — Lily Tomlin, who gained national fame in the early 1970s on the TV show "Laugh-In," says her career became more interesting when she began her "Search for Signs of Intelligent Life in the Universe."

Tomlin

Tomlin, who also has appeared in several movies, starred in the play on Broadway from 1986 to 1988, winning the Tony Award for best actress. She decided to take the show back on the road, including a two-week run in Denver.

Tomlin portrays a variety of characters in the play, each of whom searches for meaning in their lives and the lives of those around them. Their collective search, handled deftly with humor and honesty in Jane Wagner's script, emulates real life, Tomlin said Wednesday.

"The play is so human, so funny ... it's moving, satiric, sharp, insightful, compassionate. Everybody sees someone they know in the characters," she said.

HOUSTON (AP) — Winifred B. Hirsch, who with her late husband was one of the most prominent supporters of the arts in Houston, has died apparently after falling off her docked yacht. She was 82.

Mrs. Hirsch's body was found in the water next to her yacht at Seabrook Shipyard on Galveston Bay, police said Tuesday.

Sgt. W.R. Barton said investigators believe Mrs. Hirsch suffered a heart attack and fell overboard.

Mrs. Hirsch and her late husband, Gen. Maurice Hirsch, traveled around the world 27 times. He died at 93 in Hong Kong in 1983, during their last trip.

Mrs. Hirsch was a lifetime director of the Museum of Fine Arts, where she and her late husband founded and endowed the Hirsch Library.

She also was a member of the board of trustees of the Houston Grand Opera and most recently co-underwrote the current production on stage at the Wortham Theater of "Der Rosenkavalier." She also underwrote various performances of the Houston Symphony, of which Maurice Hirsch served as president for 14 years.

Mrs. Hirsch assisted in groundbreaking ceremonies last year for the Maurice and Winifred Hirsch Rehearsal Wing of the Shepherd School of Music at Rice University.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Jazz guitarist George Benson gave a pep talk to a would-be musician suffering a rare form of cancer. Then he backed up the kind words with a valuable gift.

Benson

When 22-year-old David Romito talked with Benson after a show here last fall, it gave him hope.

"Benson talked with me a long-time," Romito said this week. "He knew I was sick, of course, and said he knew somebody who once was given only six weeks to live — and the person is still living 10 years later."

Romito admired Benson's guitar, a six-string Ibanez, and the singer offered to send him an identical one. The instrument arrived at Romito's home last month, he said.

Romito plays guitar, sings and writes music. He was diagnosed in 1985 with rhabdomyosarcoma, a muscular cancer, but says he's continuing to focus on his musical career.

Former television actor Gary Coleman, left, leaves the Los Angeles Criminal Courts building Wednesday after Superior Court Judge Martha Goldin denied a request by Coleman's mother that a court conservator take over Coleman's finances. The judge ruled the actor was mentally capable of handling his $7 million in holdings by himself.

Mexican journalists take cover after gunfire erupted at a home where Mexican Federal Judicial Police were holding five journalists Wednesday in Ciudad Juarez. Two people suffered minor injuries from flying debris.

Mexican police hold reporters for 4 hours

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Journalists blocked city streets for at least four hours to demand the release of several colleagues apprehended while reporting on the arrest of a man who runs lottery ticket sales outlets.

The standoff Wednesday afternoon began after police apprehended journalists who went to the home of J.R. Rangel to report on his arrest.

"They were grabbing everyone who went into the house because they were trying to arrest people who were dealing with Rangel," said Julian Resendiz, reporter for the El Paso Herald-Post.

Resendiz said he almost entered the home but "someone waved at me and told me, 'Don't go in, don't go in,' " Resendiz said.

As word spread that the journalists were being held, other members of the Mexican media blocked the streets with cars and began honking their horns, Resendiz said.

The chaos brought more armed federal police who fired warning shots.

Resindez said he saw young man get hit by asphalt and an elderly woman hit with something else.

The four journalists were released at about 4:30 p.m. and officials took Rangel into custody.

South African leader, noted dissident meet

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — President F.W. de Klerk invited Nelson Mandela for talks today on how to clear the way for the black leader's release from prison.

The meeting — the second between South Africa's two most influential political leaders — was to come a day before de Klerk addresses the opening session of Parliament.

Mandela

The president was expected to make major announcements, possibly dealing with Mandela's release, the legalization of banned opposition groups and at least a partial lifting of the state of emergency.

A mass protest march is scheduled to coincide with the speech, and a magistrate today authorized the march despite the organizers' refusal to request permission.

Wednesday, in a major policy reversal, de Klerk ordered a judicial inquiry into allegations that police hit squads have killed anti-apartheid activists on the orders of high-ranking officers.

Activists have alleged for years that the white minority government's security forces were involved in the unsolved killings of more than 60 anti-apartheid figures.

De Klerk's aides and other senior officials refused to confirm or deny that talks with Mandela had begun. State radio reported de Klerk's invitation and said the talks were needed to "iron out problems" related to Mandela's release.

Mandela reportedly has demanded that his release be accompanied by the legalization of the outlawed African National Congress guerrilla movement and other concessions.

A luxury car arrived at the Victor Verster Prison Farm where Mandela lives at 4:30 a.m., then drove away at high speed across the countryside after meeting up with another car and minibus on the road outside the prison.

Journalists following the cars were chased away by authorities.

In addition to ordering the inquiry into the alleged police hit squads, de Klerk Wednesday ordered an investigation into the death of a 20-year-old black man found hanged in his prison cell.

The man, Clayton Sithole, was closely associated with the Mandela family, and there were unconfirmed reports he was a former lover of Mandela's daughter, Zindzi.

The Human Rights Commission, an independent group led by anti-apartheid activists, said de Klerk's decision to order the two inquiries was a result of sustained domestic and international pressure.

"There seems also to be an element of bringing to heel the security apparatus," it said in a statement today. "The erratic performance of the security forces suggests that there is disagreement and even rebellion against the government's new survival-motivated policy of presenting a clean image to the world."

De Klerk and Mandela first met on Dec. 13. Since then, both the government and Mandela's movement, the African National Congress, have given increasingly serious consideration to the possibility of negotiations.

Mandela has offered to serve as a mediator in getting such talks started, but he reportedly wants assurances the ANC will be legalized and the state of emergency lifted before he goes free.

De Klerk, who took office in August, has eased restrictions on anti-government protest and has offered to negotiate a new constitution that would include a political role for the black majority.

But he says he is not prepared to accept the ANC's demand for a one-person, one-vote system that would lead to black majority rule.

Mandela, 71, has spent more than 27 years in prison for his role in planning the start of the ANC's guerrilla campaign.

His release is seen as necessary before black leaders will negotiate with the government. Political unrest has increased recently, however, and there has been speculation the unrest would delay the release.

Tuesday, police used batons, rubber bullets and tear gas to prevent 1,000 blacks from marching on a stadium to protest a boycott-busting English cricket team's match against a South African university team.

The team is defying an international ban on sports contact with South Africa, and its tour has led to confrontations every place the players have gone, including their hotels, where black employees refuse to serve them.

De Klerk's decision to investigate the alleged police hit squads comes less than two months after he refused to appoint such a commission. The controversy began late last year when three former policemen said they participated in killings of government opponents under authorization of their superiors.

Yugoslavia's ethnic conflict worsens

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia (AP) — Protests by ethnic Albanians in the province of Kosovo have caused a backlash in other parts of the country, including demands by thousands of Slavs to be given weapons so they can go fight the Albanians.

State-run television said the province was on "the verge of civil war." Travelers today reported seeing large columns of army tanks heading toward Kosovo from the direction of Serbia.

Tanks also were deployed in February and March 1989, when trouble last flared in the region.

Three ethnic Albanians were reported killed Wednesday in Kosovo, bringing to 18 the death toll in rioting that began eight days ago in the poor southern province governed by the Serbian republic.

Fifty-four demonstrators and 44 policemen have been injured, said Jorgovanka Milojevic, a spokeswoman for the provincial government. A previous report that a policeman was killed was erroneous, the government said.

Authorities warned that traveling through Kosovo was dangerous, and there were reports of young ethnic Albanians armed with guns, stopping cars and checking identities.

The ethnic Albanians, who outnumber Slavs 9-1 among Kosovo's 1.9 million inhabitants, want to regain the autonomy lost when Serbia took control of the republic's police, judiciary and education system last year.

The ethnic Albanians are demanding an end to political trials, the release of political prisoners and the lifting of a year-old state of emergency.

Ethnic Albanian leaders of Kosovo's independent groups urged federal authorities to avoid a full-scale uprising by holding immediate talks with ethnic Albanians.

"Ethnic Albanians are not terrorists. They are subjected to terror by the state," a statement by the groups said.

Yugoslavia is a loose, multi-ethnic Balkan federation of six republics and two semi-autonomous provinces.

In addition to its ethnic and considerable economic troubles, the non-aligned Communist country is in the throes of a political crisis that principally pits Serbia, the largest republic, against liberal and Westward-looking Slovenia to the north.

Serbia is controlled by hard-line Communists who are resisting the democratic reforms the more prosperous Slovenia is already implementing. The dispute has led to a serious rift in the ruling Communist Party.

In the Montenegrin republic's capital of Titograd Wednesday, up to 100,000 Slavs rallied and some fired guns into the air. Some demanded they be given weapons and volunteered to go to Kosovo to fight the "Albanian nationalists."

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — Premier Georgi Atanassov, a holdover from the era of disgraced leader Todor Zhivkov, resigned today along with his Cabinet amid increased pressure to resolve Bulgaria's labor strife, an official source said.

The source spoke on condition of anonymity. The resignation was not announced publicly.

Also today, a spokesman for a reform-minded alliance in the Communist Party announced that his faction had given up trying to change the party from within and would break away to create a socialist party. The Alternative Socialist Alliance will formally create the Bulgarian Socialist Party at a special congress in Sofia on Feb. 11, said spokesman Nikolai Vassilev.

Atanassov's resignation had been widely expected because of several personal attacks on him during an emergency Communist Party conference under way. It was unclear when a new government would be formed.

For now, the country will apparently be run by the Communist Party leader and president, Petar Mladenov, and a rubber-stamp Parliament.

Mladenov has held out the possibility of sharing power with opposition groups before free elections, expected as early as May, but the makeup of the proposed government has not been made clear. The opposition Union of Democratic Forces has said the terms and power of such an interim Cabinet must be clarified before they would agree to participate in it.

Atanassov, a member of the Communist Party policy-making Politburo, became premier in March 1986. He survived the Nov. 10 ouster of Zhivkov, apparently because he sided with the Politburo colleagues who engineered the end of the authoritarian leader's 35 years in power.

But Atanassov was not able to come up with an effective solution for Bulgaria's economic problems or escape the shadow of Zhivkov, now under arrest on criminal charges.

Bulgaria has been hit during the last two weeks with uprecedented labor stoppages by workers demanding better pay. Demonstrators Sunday demanded Atanassov's resignation and a government of "national accord."

Teachers walked out as the congress opened Tuesday. Miners who struck last week resumed work Wednesday but continued negotiations with the government.

Doctors struck for one hour Tuesday, two hours Wednesday, and announced plans to quit working for three hours today.

Official media carried a report quoting agricultural workers as saying they would strike Feb. 5 unless the state paid adequate prices for their crops.

UIL releases new districts

Lamesa moves to 2-4A

From Staff and Wire Reports

AUSTIN (AP) — The University Interscholastic League today released new conference and district alignments that reflect recent enrollment changes. Among the changes was dropping three-time state football champion Austin Reagan from Class 5A to 4A.

Reagan, which has always been in the highest UIL division, won football in 1967, 1968 and 1970, and lost in the finals in 1973.

Reagan's arch-rival, Austin LBJ, remained in 5A — even though its lower enrollment qualifies it for 4A — at the request of school officials, who have that option.

Reagan opened in 1966 and LBJ in 1974.

Lamesa and Snyder were the only 5A or 4A West Texas schools affected, with Lamesa being moved up to 4A after playing in Class 3A for two years. Snyder, which formerly competed in District 4-4A, was sent to 2-4A along with Lamesa.

All Houston schools also will play 5A competition in 1990-91 and 1991-92 at the request of administrators, said UIL Athletic Director Bill Farney.

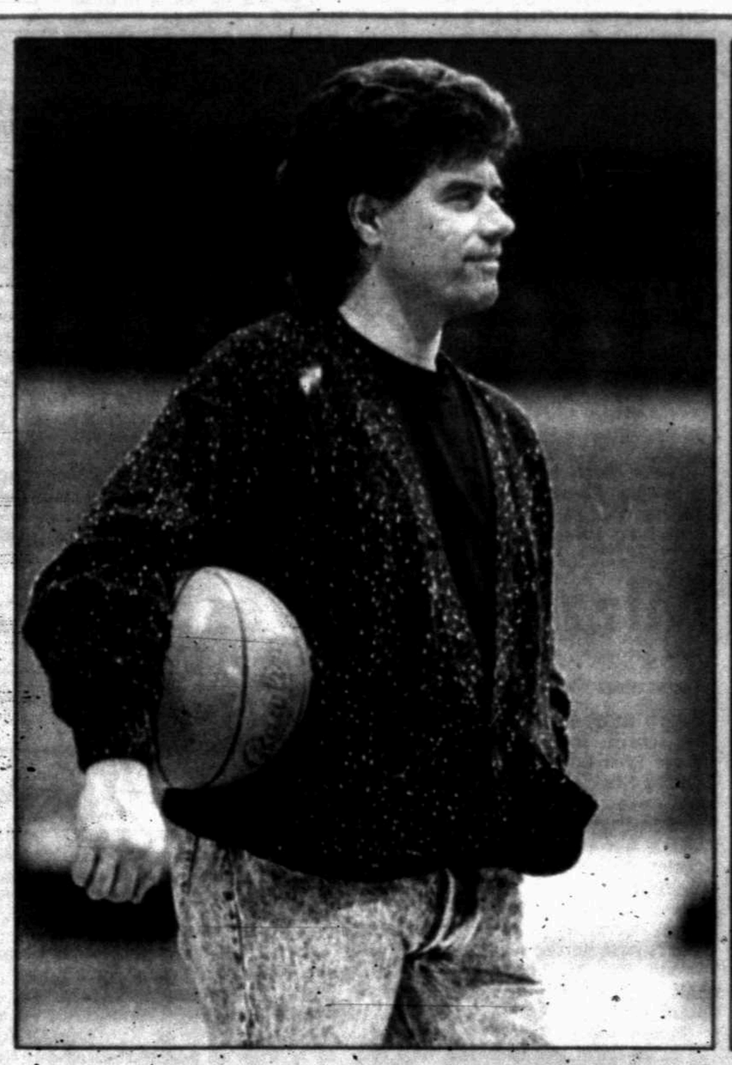

Laredo United South is a new 5A school, and the following schools moved from 4A to 5A: Cleburne, North Dallas, Houston Furr, Katy Mayde, Laredo Cigarroa, New Braunfels, Pflugerville and Rosenberg Lamar.

Schools moving from 5A to 4A include Amarillo Caprock, Austin Westlake, Brownsville Rivera, Dallas Roosevelt, Dallas South Oak Cliff, Dallas White, Fort Worth Arlington Heights, Georgetown, Greenville, La Marque, New Caney, Texarkana and Wichita Falls.

With Amarillo Caprock's move to 4A, District 1-4A was divided into two spearate districts. Lamesa will compete in District 2-4A with Levelland, Lubbock Dunbar, Lubbock Estacado, Snyder and Wolfforth Frenship. District 1-4A is comprised by Amarillo Caprock, Borger, Canyon Randall, Dumas, Hereford and Pampa.

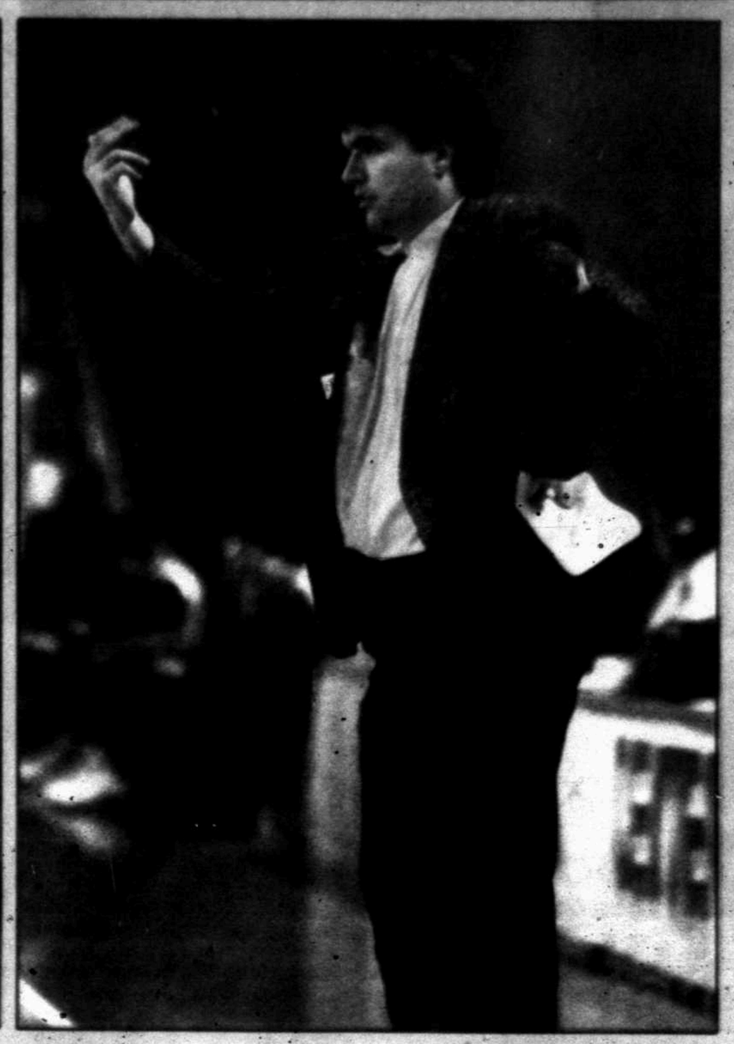

A few errors usually crop up in the first list released by the UIL, and schools were asked to call the UIL office in Austin if, for example, they have been omitted from the list.

Kelly Green tries to turn the Frank Phillips program around.

Green coaches gain experience

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Assistant Sports Editor

BIG SPRING — Three-hundred sixty-three days out of the year, Steve and Kelly Green are brothers.

The other two days they oppose each other.

The elder Green, 34, is in his second year as a head coach; Kelly, 27, is in his first year at Frank Phillips, his first head coaching job.

Both are new to the head coaching ranks and both prefer the Pat Riley look rather than the Don Nelson style of dress. But that's about where the similarities end.

Steve is able to play a very quick style game, heavy on offense, while Kelly is struggling with a turnover happy, low-point program in Borger.

Last November, in the first meeting between the two teams this season — and the first time the brothers have ever coached against each other — Howard defeated FPC, 104-83. Steve said he never told his Hawks to take it easy playing his brother. So the Hawks steamrolled FPC without so much a second thought.

"I didn't pay much attention to it, really," Steve said of coaching against his brother for the first time. "The fact that it was a conference game kind of took away from the fact that I was coaching against him. I had more important things to be concerned about. Same thing for him as well."

Kelly was impressed with his brother's group after the first loss.

"He's got such a good team right now. Even if he wasn't my brother, it's not much fun for me to go in there. But him being my brother makes it even worse. He doesn't need me to wish him any luck."

Despite Steve and Kelly's nonsense approach to the coaching business, theirs is a friendly, budding rivalry. But neither would expect the other to take anything lightly when they play. Howard will not coast against Frank Phillips, or any other team.

"Not at all," Steve said. "I'll never do that. I fear everybody I play is going to be good. I'll just try to beat (Kelly) worse. That's the only way I know how to play."

Both Steve and Kelly were point guards during their high school playing days in Miami, Oklahoma; Steve's team was 27-0 and won the national championship his senior season, 1971-72. Kelly's team struggled at 16-15, losing at regionals one year.

Both played for their dad in college, although at different schools. Steve played at Northeastern Oklahoma Junior College in Miami; Kelly played at Northwestern Oklahoma University in Alva.

Tony hangs 'em up

DENVER (AP) — Tony Dorsett has made it official: He is retiring after 13 seasons as an NFL running back.

But although Dorsett says it's official with him, it is not official with the Denver Broncos.

"I read Tony's comments in the paper, but I don't believe at this point that he has informed (Coach) Dan Reeves of that," Jim Saccomano, Bronco's spokesman, said Wednesday.

Dorsett, a virtual lck for the NFL's Hall of Fame after finishing his career as the league's No. 2 all-time rusher with 12,739 yards, sat out this past season after undergoing reconstructive knee surgery as a result of a training camp injury. It was his second season in Denver after 11 years with the Dallas Cowboys.

"I'm through," Dorsett told the Rocky Mountain News in a telephone interview from his Dallas home on Tuesday. "It's official. I don't have any immediate plans except to relax. I want to try to get my knee back to normal."

Dorsett indicated earlier this month that his career most likely was over, and said he hoped to get a job in broadcasting.

Saccomano said that it was understood in the Bronco's camp that this was Dorsett's last year with the team due to "age and a lot of factors," but Saccomano said he doesn't know if Dorsett has "visited with Dan Reeves yet."

"Not unlike if one person says to another: 'Gee I'm going to quit my job.' That's all well and good but you need to tell the employer," Saccomano said.

But Saccomano insisted that Dorsett's "unofficial official retirement" was not a problem.

He said Dorsett has always been candid with the media and Broncos officials and the announcement was just a matter of being out of town and getting a phone call from a reporter.

Expected to join Dorsett on the Broncos' retirement list was offensive guard Keith Bishop, who lost his starting job this season.

Coach Dan Reeves was scheduled to conduct one-on-one evaluations with his players on Tuesday. Dorsett, Bishop and injured linebacker Randy Thornton were the only players who didn't meet with Reeves. Thornton was excused.

Plan B means insecurity

Associated Press

NFL teams were scanning the lists of protected players today to see if there might be some more Grade A players among this year's crop of Plan B free agents.

Among those expected to be left unprotected when the clubs submit their lists of 37 protected players is a quarterback who wrote Super Bowl history just two years ago.

Doug Williams, who threw a record four touchdown passes in one period during Washington's 42-10 rout of Denver in the 1988 Super Bowl but currently is a back up to Mark Rypien, is convinced the Redskins won't protect him and his $1.2 million salary.

"I don't know if anyone wants me or not. But I'm positive it's going to happen," the 34-year-old Williams told the Washington Post.

Wide receiver Dennis McKinnon, a key member of the Chicago Bears' 1985 champions, upset management with his criticism of play-calling during a season in which the team didn't make the playoffs.

Others expected to be unprotected by the Bears include safety Maurice Douglass, punter Maury Buford, linebacker Jim Morrissey and defensive end Tony Woods.

Chicago's protected list is expected to include defensive tackles Dan Hampton, despite 11 knee operations, and William Perry, despite perennial weight problems.

Under the terms of Plan B, teams protect 37 players, including those on injured reserve. The rest are free to negotiate with other teams. The top 10 clubs may sign as many players as they have released up to 15, the middle eight teams may sign up to 25 and the remaining 10 teams may sign as many as they wish.

The most active team in the Plan B market a year ago was Green Bay, which signed 20 players. Eight made the roster and the Packers enjoyed their best season in 17 years.

Houston was the hardest hit, losing 15 players to the newly implemented system. Chicago and Cincinnati were the only teams that didn't sign any Plan B players.

A year ago, the New York Giants left running back Ottis Anderson off their protected list and, when he had no takers, he returned to the club at a considerably reduced salary.

When Joe Morris was sidelined with a broken foot, Anderson proved invaluable, rushing for 1,023 yards. Now both Anderson, 32, and Morris, 29, may be available, along with 32-year-old center Brad Oates. All were with the Giants' Super Bowl champions three years ago.

Philadelphia didn't protect wide receiver Gregg Garrity last year and may not do so this time, either. Wide receiver Ron Johnson, reportedly considering retirement, and cornerback Eric Everett are other possibilities.

Cowboys opt to keep draft picks

DALLAS (AP) — Jimmy Johnson made good on his promise that the Dallas Cowboys would retain all the draft picks obtained from Minnesota in the Herschel Walker trade.

The Cowboys on Wednesday exercised their rights to all eight draft picks in the trade meaning they will have Minnesota's first-round pick in April.

They offered the Vikings two mid-round picks for linebackers Jessie Soloman and David Howard and cornerback Isaac Holt. Minnesota had until noon today to made a decision.

The trade agreement between the teams states that neither the Cowboys nor Vikings can re-sign the three players even if the players are not signed by another team during the two-month Plan B free agent period.

Johnson also announced that defensive end Ed "Too Tall" Jones, defensive back Everson Walls and center Tom Rafferty will be Plan B free agents by virtue of being left off the roster of 37 protected players submitted to NFL headquarters today.

"We have exercised our rights in the Minnesota trade for Walker and the ball is in their court," Johnson said. "The Vikings have until noon Thursday to decide or Solomon, Holt, and Howard will become free agents."

Dallas now has Minnesota's first-round pick in the upcoming draft, two more first-round picks in 1991 and 1992, three second-round picks, one third-round choice and a sixth-round selection.

The trade with the Vikings stipulated that Holt, Solomon, and Howard must be released by Feb. 1 in order for the Cowboys to receive all the draft choices from the Vikings.

The Cowboys plan to leave those players unprotected unless they hear from the Vikings when they send the list to New York.

"We've done our deal with the Vikings," Johnson said. "We'd love to have all three players because they are quality but we also love to have the draft picks."

The Cowboys lost their first round pick by taking quarterback Steve Walsh in the supplemental draft.

Walsh was on the trading block and Johnson said "several teams have expressed interest and we've had discussions but nothing concrete."

The trading season begins on Monday.

Johnson said not protecting veterans Walls, Jones and Rafferty doesn't mean the Cowboys are trying to get rid of the players. "Just because we didn't protect them doesn't mean we don't want them," Johnson said.

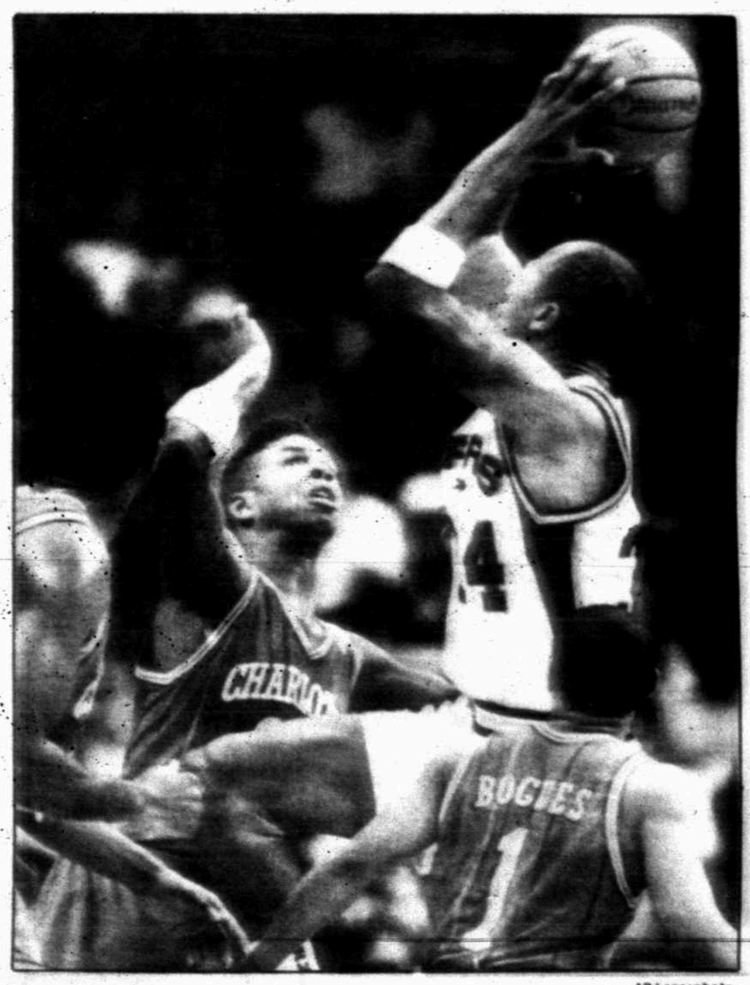

The players have until April 1 to test their value on the free agent market.

Johnson had a run-in with Walls during the Cowboys' dismal 1-15 season but Johnson said that wasn't the reason he was left unprotected.

"I'm not dissatisfied with Walls," Johnson said of the nine-year veteran. "It will give him a chance to check his value on the free agent market. There was no major trade value on him.

"I made my decision on what is best for the Cowboys. My relationship with players is one way — what can that player do to help the Dallas Cowboys? Of course, there is a danger a player might take it the wrong way."

"I figured it might happen," Walls said.

Thomas alleges drug use

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Bears are denying charges by former player Calvin Thomas that the team provided assistance to some potential substance abusers while ignoring others, a practice Thomas said was applied according to the player's value to the club.

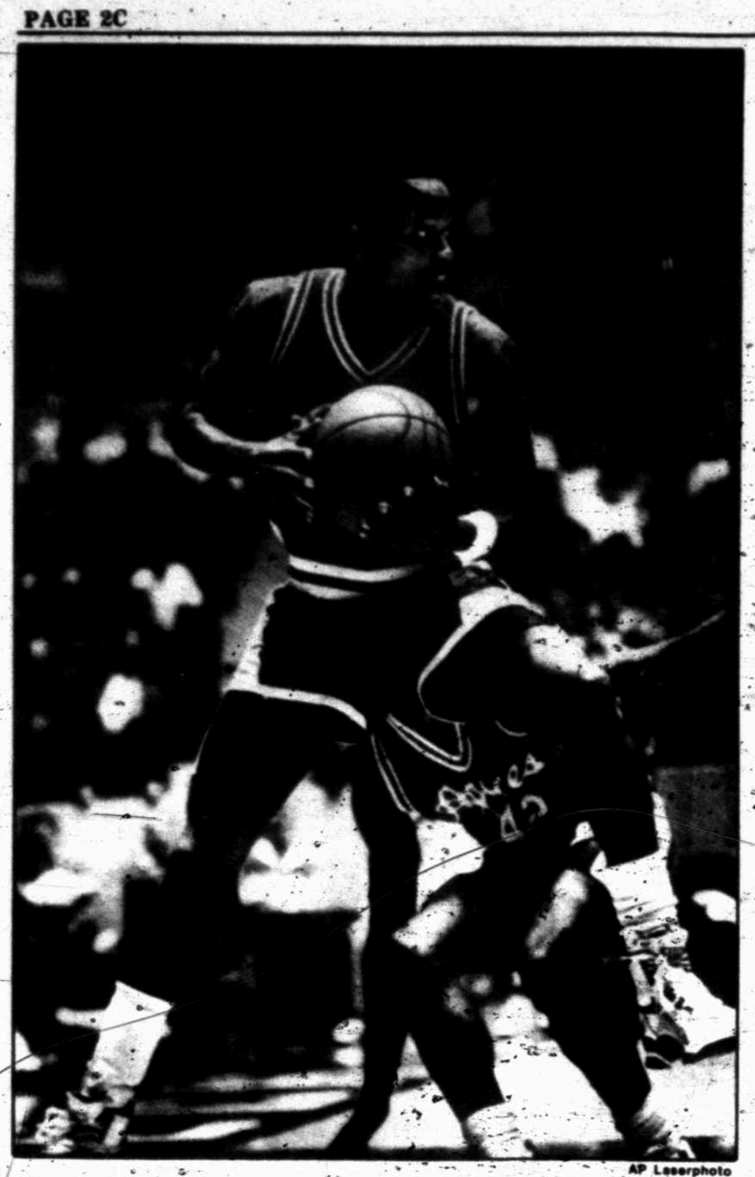

Thomas, a reserve running back who served a 30-day drug suspension two years ago and left the NFL soon afterward, said he saw four teammates getting high on drugs just days before a scheduled 1987 drug test.

But he said the players, who he declined to identify, steered clear of substance-abuse problems with the assistance of the team, help he claims he didn't receive.

Bears spokesman John Bostrom said Wednesday that the club was surprised to hear Tho-

Texas A&M's Tony Milton brings down a rebound in the Aggies' 101-85 win at Texas Tech Wednesday.

LUBBOCK (AP) — Tony Milton scored 25 points for Texas A&M as the Aggies stifled a Texas Tech comeback attempt Wednesday night and won 101-85, sending Tech to its 10th straight defeat.

The Texas A&M Aggies improved to 11-11 overall and 4-4 in the Southwest Conference. The Red Raiders equaled a school record for consecutive losses in dropping to 5-14 overall and 0-9 in the conference.

Texas Tech opened the second half down, 56-35. The Raiders narrowed the Aggies' lead to 10 points four times, but couldn't come closer.

Freddie Ricks scored 23 points for the Aggies, and Lynn Suber and Daren Rhea each scored 19.

Derex Butts led the Raiders with 14 points. Flemons scored 14, Steve Miles scored 12, and J.D. Sanders and Cleveland Phelps added 11 each.

SWC Roundup

Baylor 66, SMU 63

Dennis Lindsey scored 20 points to lead Baylor past Southern Methodist 66-63.

Baylor (11-8, 3-5 in the SWC) extended its winning streak to four and dealt the Mustangs (7-11, 2-6) their fifth loss in six games. The victory also broke SMU's three-game winning streak against the Bears.

John Colborne, who led all scorers with 24 points, sank a three-pointer to put SMU ahead 61-58 with 2:10 left. However, Lindsey, a sophomore guard who was 8-for-12 from the floor, hit a long jump shot to cut the lead to 61-60.

Kelvin Chalmers, who started in place of the injured Ivan Jones, dunked with 31 seconds to play for a 64-61 lead. Tim Schumacher added two free throws with nine seconds left.

It was the seventh homecourt loss of the season for SMU, which has won four times at Moody Coliseum this season.

Vernon Perdue had 16 points for SMU.

Arkansas 70, Rice 66

The Rice Owls gave No. 3 ranked Arkansas a raggedy ride and Razorbacks coach Nolan Richardson thanked them for it.

"I told our team it's better to have a raggedy ride than a smooth walk," Richardson said, explaining the Hogs' 70-66 victory.

The Razorbacks didn't have a smooth walk to their 10th straight victory.

The enthusiastic young Owls pulled within two points twice in the final 59 seconds before yielding.

"To be a good basketball team you've got to win games like we did tonight," Richardson said. "We got the win in a game we weren't emotionally into and not fired up for."

Todd Day scored 23 points, including a pair of crucial free throws in the final 20 seconds to help secure the victory.

It kept Arkansas unbeaten in Southwest Conference games at 9-0 and it is 18-2 on the season. Rice dropped to 9-9 and 4-4.

"Rice played good defense but we weren't moving and running our break," Richardson said. "This was a big game for them. It was like a national championship."

Arkansas plays at Texas on Sunday.

Associated Press

How to upset No. 1: Stop its leading scorer, shoot well and get the home fans howling.

Iowa State did all of that, and still lost to top-ranked Missouri 95-93 Wednesday night.

"It's a tough game to lose," Cyclones coach Johnny Orr said. "I thought we did a good job."

Iowa State (7-10) shot 65 percent from the field while holding Missouri's best scorer, Doug Smith, to 10 points. But the Cyclones could not halt Anthony Peeler or hold a four-point lead in the final 1:26.

Peeler scored 42 points, including 20 of 20 from the foul line, and fed Travis Ford for the winning basket with five seconds left. Missouri (20-1) won at Iowa State for the first time since 1984. The Tigers' 11th straight victory made them 6-0 in the Big Eight.

Peeler's two free throws with 1:26 left pulled Missouri within 91-89. He stole the ensuing inbounds pass, was fouled, and made both shots for a 91-all tie with 1:22 remaining.

Missouri then again stole the inbounds pass and Peeler made a cross-court feed to Ford, whose jump shot put the Tigers ahead. After Iowa State's Victor Alexander made two foul shots with 39 seconds left, Peeler passed to Ford, who made the game-winner.

No. 2 Kansas 90, Colorado 69

Kansas sent Colorado to its 47th straight Big Eight road loss and its 27th defeat in the last 29 meetings at Lawrence.

Rick Calloway scored 17 points for the Jayhawks (21-1, 4-1) in their 13th straight victory at home. Kansas led 29-14 midway through the first half and was never threatened.

No. 8 Purdue 91, No. 4 Michigan 73

Tony Jones' 23 points led Purdue to its ninth consecutive victory. The Boilermakers (18-2, 8-0 in the Big Ten) set a Crisler Arena record by making 70 percent of their field-goal attempts.

Purdue hit five of six from 3-point range and made 16 of 20 foul shots. The Boilermakers used a 13-0 burst to take a 68-52 lead with 14 minutes left.

Rumeal Robinson scored 17 points for Michigan (15-4, 5-3). The Wolverines had a 10-game home winning streak stopped.

No. 5 Duke 94, Clemson 80

Phil Henderson scored 20 points and freshman Bobby Hurley had 18 points and 11 assists as Duke won at home. The Blue Devils (17-3, 7-4 in the Atlantic Coast Conference) led by at least 10 points throughout the second half.

Elden Campbell scored 26 points for Clemson (15-5, 4-3). Three Tigers fouled out and four others had four fouls.

No. 9 Oklahoma 105, Nebraska 64

Oklahoma, behind Damon Patterson and Jackie Jones, grabbed a big lead early and easily won its 41st straight home game.

Patterson scored 20 points and Jones had 16 points and 13 rebounds. Skeeter Henry added 16 points for the Sooners (15-2, 4-1 in the Big Eight), who led 37-16.

No. 14 LSU 79, Mississippi 77

Chris Jackson scored all of his 28 points in the second half and Maurice Williamson made two foul shots with eight seconds left as LSU won at Mississippi.

Jackson, a sophomore guard, missed his seven first-half shots and sat out seven minutes with a wrist injury. LSU (15-4) is tied for the Southeastern Conference lead at 6-3.

No. 23 Xavier 90, Cincinnati 88

At Cincinnati, Jamal Walker's 3-point shot with seven seconds left in overtime rallied Xavier past its cross-town rival.

Xavier trailed by seven points early in overtime and Walker's shot gave the Musketeers (16-2) their only lead in the extra session. Walker and Tyrone Hill each scored 26 points.

Recruiter issues casting call

By DAVE PEGO
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Lots of people come to Dallas to go shopping, but Gary Quinn's list is a lot different than anybody else.

He is coming to the big city to look for football players and is going about it in a most unusual manner. He has rented a hotel room and invited anyone interested in playing for a small Kansas college to show up.

Quinn said he hopes to find 40 Texas players who can turn around the football fortunes at tiny Tabor College, an NAIA Division II school in Hillsboro, Kan. The school has recorded three consecutive 1-9 seasons.

Although Quinn already has been in contact with some players and invited them to meet with him at a Holiday Inn in North Dallas, he said all high school seniors interested in playing at Tabor are welcome to come.

Quinn, accompanied by a couple of assistants and a former player, will give a presentation about the college and its football program in the hotel room on Thursday night, then talk personally with those who are interested.

Tabor has recruited in Texas annually, but never with what essentially is an open casting call for players.

"But we need lots of players this year," Quinn said. "I'm going to be down there and try to chase them around. Tabor offers a good opportunity for young men who aren't going to get to go to a bigger school and play football."

Tabor plays in the Kansas Collegiate Athletic Conference. The league offers much of the hoopla found elsewhere — including crowds, bands and cheerleaders — only on a smaller scale. Last year, St. Mary of the Plain won the league title with a 10-0 mark.

Quinn, in his second year as head coach, sees Texas high school football as being the best schoolboy competition in the country, and hopes a busload of top recruits from here will make his team competitive.

"Texas players usually play pretty early in their careers at our school," he said. "A freshman, especially from Texas, has a chance to play for us."

Players who pass muster will be offered partial scholarships, along with a warning.

"We're a small Christian school, and they have to agree to a certain lifestyle," Quinn said.

BEARS

mas' allegation about drug use by his former teammates. He said the charge "will be treated by Bears management as unsubstantiated. Until evidence arises, the claim is seen as pure speculation."

"Also," Bostrom added, "the club completely denies the accusation that a coverup of players' drug tests occurred."

Thomas said he spoke out now to draw further attention to the league's substance-abuse testing program, which he characterized as supect, and the selective way in which it was administered.

His suspension was one of those questioned in a televised report aired during Super Bowl week that also was sharply critical of the NFL's substance-abuse program.

The report, by Washington television station WJLA, also said positive cocaine tests on three "star" white quarterbacks went unheeded by the league, and that contrary to the NFL's own stated policies, the three received no mandatory counseling or treatment.

NFL spokesman Joe Browne, who previously denied the allegations by WJLA, rejected Thomas' statements as well. "There was no preferential treatment," Browne said from Hawaii, where he was attending the Pro Bowl.

Under league policy, a first positive result subjects a player to counseling and "probable cause" testing, without the name being revealed to the public. A second-time offender is suspended for 30 days and undergoes drug-rehabilitation treatment. A third-time offender is banned for life, although he can apply for reinstatement one year after banishment.

Although Thomas said Tuesday he believed his four teammates had tested positive in the 1987 test, he softened that statement Wednesday.

He said Wednesday that he was uncertain whether they actually tested positive, but was sure they would have been notified of such a result. With that assistance, the players apparently managed to steer clear of violating the substance-abuse program.

"They were guys who had been on the team," Thomas said of the players he witnessed using drugs several days before the August 1987 test.

"I asked the guys, 'Don't you know this (test) is coming up?' They just kept on doing it.

"None of those guys were suspended," said Thomas, who also saw action as a special teams player during his six years with Chicago. "I don't know if they were told or what."

Thomas said he didn't learn of his positive 1987 test until he was called into the Bears' front office in September 1988 and told he was being suspended because of a second positive test result in 1988.

PLAN B

An official of the Los Angeles Raiders said there would not be many surprises on his team's list. Speculation that running back Marcus Allen and linebacker Jerry Robinson would be unprotected was erroneous, he said.

Atlanta is expected to make kickers Paul McFadden and Greg Davis free to talk with other teams. The Falcons will protect nose tackle Tony Casillas, who has asked for a trade.

Age and salary will likely be major factors in other Plan B decisions.

Buffalo defensive end Art Still, 34, guard Joe Devlin, who will be 36 next month, and nose tackle Fred Smerlas, 33 in April, are expected to be cut loose.

At Miami, the Dolphins are expected to expose outside linebacker E.J. Junior, signed as a Plan B free agent from Phoenix a year ago. The 30-year-old Junior has a $500,000 contract for next season.

He's expected to be joined in the marketplace by cornerback Paul Lankford, a six-year starter. Third-string quarterback Cliff Stoudt, cornerback Don McNeal and fullback Ron Davenport, all cut and then later re-signed by the Dolphins, also are expected to appear up on the list.

Seattle is expected to cut free 33-year-old safety Nesby Glasgow, who started for the Seahawks last season after being signed as a Plan B player from Indianapolis.

Backman's a Pirate, Cubs, Bielecki agree

Baseball

Associated Press

Wally Backman found a home he wanted and Mike Bielecki got the money he wanted.

Backman, let go by the Minnesota Twins after the season ended, joined the Pittsburgh Pirates on Wednesday. The free agent signed a one-year contract for $400,000, and he can make another $500,000 in incentives.

"Wally was anxious to get back to the National League," Backman's agent, Richard Moss, said. "He plays hard and aggressively. That's the style of play he enjoys. His alternatives were a couple of American League clubs and, given that situation, Wally clearly preferred Pittsburgh."

The Pirates plan to move two-time All-Star third baseman Bobby Bonilla, who committed a major league-leading 35 errors in 1989, back to the outfield, a move that could create more playing time for Backman.

Backman batted .231 with one home run and 26 RBIs in 87 games for the Twins last season. He spent 53 days on the disabled list with a rotator cuff injury in his left shoulder, and was pronounced fit several days ago after being examined in Honolulu by Dr. Peter Diamond.

Backman, 30, one of the catalysts for the New York Mets' World Series champions in 1986. But the platoon second baseman did not duplicate his success in the following two years and was traded to Minnesota before last season.

"Primarily, he'll be used as a utility player," Pirates general manager Larry Doughty said. "His background has shown him to be an outstanding second baseman and he will be used there on occasion to spell Jose Lind. But mainly, he will support Jeff King at third base."

Bielecki, who made $122,500 last season, agreed with the Chicago Cubs on a one-year contract for $675,000. Bielecki, 30, was 18-7 with a 3.14 earned-run average and was third in the NL in victories.

Bielecki was one of six players scheduled to go to arbitration who instead got one-year deals Wednesday.

Pitcher Juan Agosto and the Houston Astros settled at $850,000, a raise of $330,000; outfielder Chris James and Cleveland agreed to $560,000, a $330,000 raise; first baseman Franklin Stubbs and Los Angeles agreed to $450,000, a $105,000 raise, and outfielder Henry Cotto and Seattle settled at $425,000, a $175,000 raise. Chicago White Sox outfielder Daryl Boston settled his case late in the day.

There are 103 players remaining in arbitration. Hearings begin on Friday, with outfielder Bo Jackson of Kansas City.

Agosto, 32, was 4-5 with one save and a 2.93 ERA in 71 relief appearances.

James, 27, batted .243 last season for Philadelphia and San Diego with 13 homers and 65 RBIs. He was acquired by Cleveland in the Joe Carter trade.

Stubbs, 29, hit .291 with four home runs and 15 RBIs last season.

Union director frustrated

Still no baseball agreement in sight

Meanwhile, spring training gets closer with every day — as does the possible lockout of players by owners.

"I'm a little frustrated with it," union executive director Donald Fehr said after Wednesday's three-hour session. "Their strategy is to talk about their stuff. It's clear they are not of a mind to seriously discuss the players' proposal."

The sides meet today and Friday and will talk for three days next week before owners meet in Chicago and debate whether they should shut down spring training.

Owners have said they will not open training camps as scheduled on Feb. 15 unless the union agrees to some form of revenue sharing. Management's current proposal calls for the players to get 48 percent of the money from ticket sales and broadcasting contracts.

"We focused on the union's concerns regarding economic issues in addition to such issues as roster size and the waiver system," management negotiator Chuck O'Connor said in a statement. "In a subcommittee meeting later in the day, we reviewed economic data requested by the union and showed them how we arrived at that data."

The New York Times reported in today's editions the players also rejected the owners' proposal on collusion and the owners' negotiators withdrew it. The players want the next contract to be collusion proof.

The sides discussed the union's proposals on Wedneday but management continued to insist the Major League Baseball Players Association agree to its revenue-sharing proposal. Fehr said the union did not get any "meaningful" response to its proposal but he emphasized that the talks still were at an early stage.

"It's only Feb. 1 tomorrow," he said. "We're not at July 12. The season is not going to be canceled tomorrow, I hope."

The players are asking that the minimum salary rise from $68,000 to between $100,000 and $125,000, that the service time for salary arbitration be reduced from three years to two, that rosters go back to 25 players from 24 and that draft-pick compensation for certain free agents be dropped.

"They're not willing to agree to any of the suggestions we've made," Fehr said. "The reason, they say, is cost, but they can't quantify the cost."

Owners say they need revenue-sharing because they fear there will be a gap in income between teams from large and small cities. But they have been unable to tell the union when they think it will happen.

"We're looking for the rationale," Fehr said, adding that the owners' inability to pinpoint their problem "does take the urgency off it."

Shoemaker set for last ride

The 58-year-old Shoemaker, who has won a world record 8,833 races, will make his 40,350th start in the $100,000-added Legend's Last Ride, a one-time-only stakes over one mile on the grass, to be televised nationally.

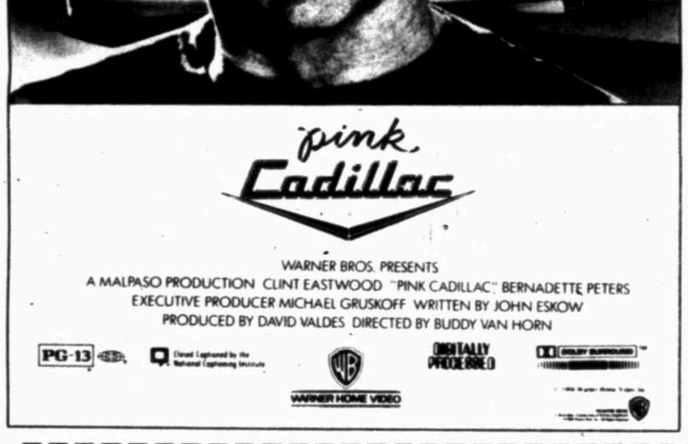

Patchy Groundfog worked three-eighths of a mile in 35 seconds under Shoemaker Wednesday morning, and afterwards the jockey he would ride the 7-year-old chestnut horse Saturday.

Official entries for the race will be taken Thursday. Shoemaker also will chose two alternates. If Patchy Groundfog is scratched, Shoemaker will replace the jockey named on one of the alternates. This is written into the conditions of the race.

Cummings' 52 stings Hornets

Associated Press

NBA Roundup

The Charlotte Hornets, with fewer victories than any team in the NBA, are trying to solve the problem the time-honored way — by changing the coach.

The Hornets might be better advised to try the the San Antonio Spurs' way. They changed the players and kept the coach, and already have won 29 games, eight more than all of last season.

Terry Cummings scored a career-high 52 points as the Spurs posted a franchise-record 18th consecutive home victory Wednesday night, beating Charlotte 129-95 to spoil the coaching debut of Gene Littles.

Cummings, acquired by the Spurs in the offseason, made 19 of 32 shots and 14 of 17 free throws and also had 11 rebounds.

"I didn't figure I would get that many," Cummings said. "I just wanted to come out and play my game. We played kind of ugly at the start, but things got better."

Cummings scored 19 points in the first quarter, but the Spurs led by just two points at halftime. San Antonio outscored the Hornets 32-15 in the third quarter to turn the game into a rout.

Littles was appointed coach of the Hornets, who have lost six consecutive games, a few hours before tipoff after Dick Harter was fired.

Cummings' performance was 13 points more than his previous career high and one point shy of the Hemis-Fair Arena record set by George Gervin against San Diego on Jan. 11, 1979.

Mavericks 98, Rockets 91

Derek Harper scored 21 points and Dallas won its seventh straight game by holding Houston scoreless for more than eight minutes down the stretch.

The Rockets led 88-83 lead with 8:36 to play, but they didn't score again until there were just 33 seconds left. Rolando Blackman and Sam Perkins each hit two free throws before Roy Tarpley's 20-footer at the 24-second buzzer put Dallas in front to stay, 89-88.

Houston was led by Otis Thorpe's 29 points and Akeem Olajuwon's 25 points and 12 rebounds.

76ers 112, Pacers 108

Philadelphia won its ninth consecutive game and pulled into a tie for first place in the Atlantic Division as Charles Barkley had 31 points and 16 rebounds against Indiana.

Barkley had nine points and eight rebounds in the fourth quarter, helping the 76ers open an 11-point lead, and they held off a rally by the Pacers that cut the margin to three on three occasions in the last 3:30.

Jazz 120, Clippers 101

Utah coasted to its 10th victory in 11 games, with Karl Malone scoring 29 points and Mark Eaton blocking eight Los Angeles shots.

The Jazz held the Clippers to 38 percent shooting for the first two periods, taking a 64-47 halftime lead. Utah went on to lead by as many as 26 points in the second half.

Warriors 135, Blazers 130

Mitch Richmond scored 28 points, including 15 of 16 free throws, as Golden State made 49 of 52 from the line to snap Portland's seven-game winning streak.

Clyde Drexler scored a season-high 38 points for the Blazers, who fell out of a first-place tie with the Lakers in the Pacific Division.

Timberwolves 110, Sonics 82

Tod Murphy had consecutive three-point plays during Minnesota's 21-0 run in the third quarter against Seattle.

The 21-point run, the 39 points in the third quarter and the Wolves' 35-point lead with 11:42 remaining in the fourth quarter all were team marks.

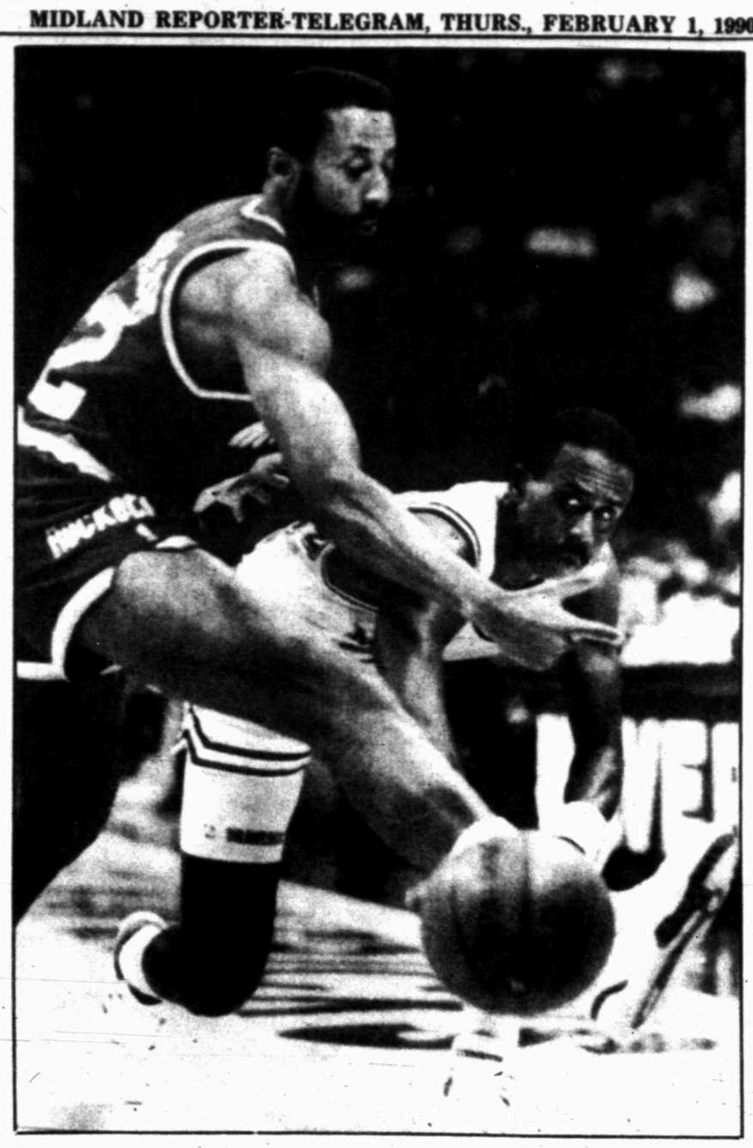

Celtics 97, Knicks 91

Larry Bird scored the game's last six points on free throws, extending his streak of successful foul shots to 59, as the Celtics beat New York for the 23rd consecutive time at Boston Garden since 1984.

Pistons 133, Bullets 109

Mark Aguirre scored 12 points and Vinnie Johnson 10 as Detroit outscored Washington 39-16 in the second quarter.

The runaway period gave the Pistons a 68-45 halftime lead, and the Bullets didn't threaten in the second half as Aguirre finished with 25 points on 10-for-14 shooting.

Miller wants TV to change

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Two weeks ago, as Peter Jacobsen prepared to hit the shot that would set up his first PGA Tour victory in six years, veteran pro and rookie television commentator Johnny Miller went against the norm.

Rather than rave about Jacobsen's consistency throughout the 90-hole tournament as his predecessors might have, Miller talked about how easy it would be for Jacobsen to "choke" the shot, a 3-iron over 200-plus yards of water, bunkers and other forms of disaster.

Jacobsen pulled it off, reaching the par-5 18th hole of the PGA West course in two, and needed only a two-putt from the fringe to earn $180,000.

Miller, who this week is playing in his 23rd Pebble Beach National Pro-Am, says it is time for television to change its method of covering professional golf.

"How people perform under pressure is a real issue which I'm willing to address," said Miller, who has a four-year contract with NBC and will do commentary on 19 tournaments this year.

Miller, who says he has been frank to a fault throughout his career, said he has been encouraged by NBC to provide more critical analyses of his colleagues.

"They want me to be reasonably controversial, to bring a new dimension to broadcasting that most people have not had the forthright or guts to bring," Miller said.

Miller said it is that kind of commentary that was needed during the British Open last July, when Greg Norman self-destructed on the final hole of a four-hole playoff with Wayne Grady and Mark Calcavecchia.

Norman, who had charged to a share of the lead with a final-round 66, began the playoff birdie-birdie and needed only a par on the short par-4 18th to win.

But Norman refused to play safe and hit a driver instead of an iron off the tee. The ball carried into a fairway bunker. His second shot found another bunker and his third sailed out of bounds. Norman didn't finish the hole.

"He had no business hitting the driver if it was going to reach the bunker. From there, he shouldn't have been swinging as hard as he did because from there he couldn't hit the green with one out of a million balls. That put him in the next bunker. From there he hits it OB and picks it up. That was a golden opportunity.

Mavs' top pick not happy with role

HOUSTON (AP) — His Dallas Maverick teammates say Randy White has to grow up and realize exactly what he has gotten himself in to.

White was a glamor boy in college at Louisiana Tech. A year ago, he was the American South Conference Player of the Year. He also was an honorable mention All-American.

And he was even being hailed, in numerous circles, as the next Karl 'The Mailman' Malone.

But the only mail the 6-foot-8 forward has been delivering these days is a permanent seat toward the end of the Mavericks' bench. And that's a very discouraging and frustrating spot for the eighth pick of the 1989 National Basketball Association draft.

"Randy's been frustrated since Day 1, and that's natural for a rookie," says Mavs Assistant Coach Garfield Heard, interviewed in Houston.

"But he's got to realize that he's got guys that's been in the league 10-12 years that's playing ahead of him, and it wouldn't be fair to those guys to sat them down, and Randy hasn't really beat them out yet.

"Unless you're a Magic Johnson, Larry Bird or Michael Jordan, you don't come in this league and play the first year. Besides, if Randy wants to get some playing time, he has to show us in practice that he's ready to play. If he does that, he'll get some time."

Lately, White has done more pouting than proving he deserves more playing time. He was fined $250 and reprimanded by the Mavs 10 days ago, and was also criticized by Mavs Head Coach Richie Adubato for failing to warm up for the second half and pouting on the bench during a recent game against the New York Knicks.

After Dallas defeated the Houston Rockets this past Saturday when every Maverick who suited up played but White, White was the first Dallas player dressed. He proceeded to put on his blue leather suit, hurriedly spray cologne on his body, and when repeatedly asked for comments about his situation, would only say: "I don't have anything to say."

White is averaging just 4.5 points, 3.2 rebounds and 13.1 minutes per game for the Mavs. He is shooting 40.7 percent from the field and 0.5 percent from the line.

White is playing behind Sam Perkins, Adrian Dantley and Herb Williams. He slid even farther down the Mavs' rotation when Roy Tarpley recently came back from his drug suspension.

In fact, since the Mavs are top-heavy on the front line, White may have a better chance getting extensive playing time with the Dallas Cowboys than he would with the Dallas Mavericks.

"It's really tough on Randy," said Dallas center James Donaldson. "But on a team like this we don't really need rookies coming in and playing and contributing right away. We've got a very experienced team, and a very deep and talented frontline.

" Randy just has to be man enough to take it (sitting) and not let it get him down to the point where he just can't concentrate on playing basketball any more."

White, in essence, has gone from being the Main Man in college to the Forgotten Man in the NBA. Sure, he has a fully guaranteed five-year, $4.1 million contract. But his patience about his lack of playing time is wearing thin.

NCNB will report local deposits

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

NCNB Texas will soon begin reporting local loans and deposits on an annual basis, according to Rep. Charles Stenholm (Dem-TX), who represents the 17th congressional district of Texas.

In an Associated Press story today, the congressman said the North Carolina-based bank chain had agreed to begin reporting local loans and deposit figures in Texas on an annual basis.

"They will report by June, or sooner if they can pull together the figures, and will do so annually," Stenholm said.

The date and time of the meeting to reveal the deposits and loans has not been made public.

Business reporters and others in Texas have complained about the local figures being withheld, along with the Dennises and other NCNB customers, who complained they could not get information.

"They assured me that they could not begin reporting loans and desposits immediately as some have demanded, because it was physically impossible but would do so by June and thereafter on an annual basis," explained Stenholm.

The remarks came in a meeting between Stenholm and NCNB Chairman Timothy Hartman and James R. Erwin, president of NCNB Special Assets Division.

Stenholm said he had also asked the NCNB officers to address the suspicions of many within the state that Texas money was being exported out of the state to make loans elsewhere.

"I was assured that that was not happening," said the Stamford congressman, "they presented me with a stack of testimony presented before the Texas Banking Commission which they claim refutes that suspicion." Stenholm added that he had not had time to throughly read the documents.

Matt Murphy, president of NCNB Midland said he was glad the local numbers were finally being made public, noting that they may be available by June 30.

Asked if there was a possibility that the bank might eventually make the numbers available on a monthly basis, Murphy said he doubted it. "This is a tremendous concession on the part of NCNB," he said.

The failure of branch banks to report local loans and deposits has been a sore spot with Texans since branch banking was instituted in the state.

"Branch banking is new to Texas, and we are not used to it yet," said Stenholm, who indicated he was less than happy with the reporting of loans and deposits on an annual basis and not a monthly basis. He said an

Southwest Airlines set to expand

Fuel prices prompt fare increase

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

DALLAS — Expansion appears to be the key word for Southwest Airlines in 1990.

Expansion of flights, expansion of its fleet and, unfortunately for passengers, expansion of its fares.

Herb Kelleher, chairman, announced that net income for 1989 was a record $71.6 million, up 23.5 percent from 1988 income of $58 million. Revenues climbed 18 percent to a record $1.015 billion from $860.4 million.

These record revenues brought Southwest "major carrier" status, defined by the Department of Transportation as a carrier with revenues in excess of $1 billion. "If it hadn't been for our philosophy as a low-fare, short-haul carrier, we'd have reached major carrier status in 1984 or 1985," Kelleher said.

The airline, based at Dallas Love Field, brought in media from around Texas as well as Little Rock, Oklahoma City and Tulsa, and arranged a satellite hook-up with Arizona and California journalists in Phoenix for a press conference to discuss the airline's record-breaking performance in 1989.

While he was pleased with last year's performance, Kelleher told journalists the sharp increase in fuel prices that occurred in December and early January is expected to depress first quarter earnings severely.

The increase, fueled with a industry-wide slump in passengers in early January is prompting the airline to raise fares moderately starting in February. Kelleher said the increases would average 4 percent, depending on the mileage. He declined to call the fare increase a fuel surcharge, saying "let's call it a more-or-less permanent fare increase."

He emphasized that he expects the airline's fortunes to improve considerably after the first quarter, citing the fact that passenger bookings are on the increase and fuel prices are decreasing.

The airline will be expanding its routes, inaugurating an Oakland to Burbank route in California on April 16. According to Kelleher, the new service to Burbank will expand system-wide on June 1.

Southwest's fleet is also expanding, with delivery of 10 new planes this year. Two Boeing 737-300 series and eight 737-500 series are being built for the airline, raising the fleet to 106. The new planes will bring increased flights out of Dallas, Houston Hobby and, most especially Phoenix.

Kelleher told journalists gathered in Phoenix that as the planes are added to the fleet and flights are added, he expects to increase Southwest's employment in Phoenix by 100 to 150 in the first half of the year, perhaps as many as 300 total in 1990. "This will bring our economic contribution in Phoenix to over $300 mil-

MARKETS

Oil futures prices retreat

From Staff and Wire Reports

Energy futures gave back gains made in Wednesday's session.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, March contracts for West Texas Intermediate were down 18 cents to $22.50 in mid-morning trading.

February unleaded gasoline, which fell 0.90 cent Tuesday, dropped another 1.02 cents to close at 61.71 cents a gallon.

Peter Beutel, assistant director of the energy group at Elders Futures Inc., said traders sold heating oil and gasoline contracts following a report late Tuesday by the American Petroleum Institute that showed higher-than-expected inventories of those products last week.

Beutel said crude prices rose as a result. "There was buying in crude against the sale in heating oil and gasoline," he said.

Dollar mixed in nervous trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mixed against other major currencies in Europe today after two days of sharp swings.

Gold prices were higher.

Foreign exchange dealers said there was a nervous air in the markets, with the dollar first falling and then rising during the morning.

The U.S. currency had not recovered from heavy selling on Wednesday following a denial by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev that he would resign as chairman of the Communist Party.

Exchange Rates

- 1.6780 West German marks
- 1.4945 Swiss francs
- 5.7000 French francs
- 1.8895 Dutch guilders
- 1,247.25 Italian lire
- 1.1862 Canadian dollars

The first resignation rumor had pushed the dollar sharply higher.

Dealers in Frankfurt said the dollar was likely to test new lows over the next few days in expectation of lower U.S. interest rates and the continuing strength of the West German mark.

Dealers in Milan predicted the dollar would remain in a narrow range until the U.S. unemployment figures were issued on Friday.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 144.50 Japanese yen, up from Wednesday's closing 144.40. Later, in London, it was quoted at the higher rate of 144.55 yen.

In London, the dollar rose against the British pound. It cost $1.6830 to buy one pound, compared with $1.6870 late Wednesday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $413.40 a troy ounce, up from $413.25 bid late Wednesday. At midmorning, the city's major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $413.25.

Stock market surges 47 points

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market surged Wednesday, reversing a five-session slide and ending the month on a bright note as interest rate concerns subsided.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials finished the day at 2,590.54, up 47.30 points. The Dow Jones industrials fell 219.60 points, or 5.9 percent, during January from an alltime high of 2,810.15 on Jan. 2.

Advancing issues outpaced decliners by a margin of about 5 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 1,116 issues up, 449 down and 411 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 189.66 million shares, up from 186.03 million in the previous session.

Stocks rallied at the opening on what some Wall Street analysts called a technical bounce amid oversold conditions, then moved steadily higher throughout the session. It was the first gain in five sessions for the Dow Jones industrials, which had fallen more than 72 points since last Wednesday.

"I don't think this is the start of an uptrend. This is properly termed a technical bounce," said Hugh Johnson, senior vice president at First Albany Corp.

Wall Street analysts said the catalyst for the rally was the bond market's strength despite an unexpected 0.8 percent rise in the December index of leading indicators. Consensus expectations were for a rise of about 0.5 percent.

Officials speed up bailout

Robson

WASHINGTON (AP) — Officials in charge of President Bush's savings and loan bailout, getting their second tongue-lashing in as many weeks on Capitol Hill, are assuring lawmakers they will speed up their work.

"I share your ... concerns about getting this job done," Deputy Treasury Secretary John E. Robson told critical members of the Senate Banking Committee, "and we're going to break our necks to see that we get it done."

The officials, a week after undergoing criticism from House members over the slow pace of their work, endured similar complaints from the senators Wednesday.

"Act decisively. Do what's necessary. Don't be timid," said Sen. Jake Garn of Utah, senior Republican on the Senate Banking Committee.

"Surely, surely there must be something you can do to speed up the process," he said, warning that further delay by the Resolution Trust Corp. will increase costs to the taxpayers.

The RTC has taken over 350 S&Ls to date, disposing of 42 of them. However, 33 of the resolutions were completed in the agency's first three months of operation and only nine since then.

"The pace was a little slower than some of us would have liked to have seen," conceded Robson, acting chairman of the RTC oversight board.

Sens. Donald W. Riegle Jr., D-Mich., chairman of the banking committee, and Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., were particularly critical of the administration's failure to fill many of the posts in the S&L bureaucracy nearly six months after enactment of the bailout law.

"It is impossible to understand how the thrift crisis can be successfully resolved with many of the key players not even in uniform ready to participate," Riegle said.

The administration has failed to appoint a new Office of Thrift Supervision director, two of the five members of the RTC oversight board, an inspector general for the RTC, four of five members of a board governing the 12 regional

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States has proposed that the International Monetary Fund sell about 3 million ounces of gold, which at current market prices could raise more than $1 billion, to buttress the global lending agency against the growing problem of delinquent payments by its members.

Reports that the Treasury had made such a proposal roiled the futures markets, pushing down gold prices.

A Treasury official said Wednesday night that the idea had been put forward in discussions among the fund's members over increasing the capital of the organization to meet expected increases in demand for its resources.

The U.S. position is that any decision on increasing resources must also address the problem of overdue payments by 15 of the agency's 152 member countries, the official said. The arrears total $4 billion.

Under the U.S. proposal, which does not have wide support on the fund's board, the countries in arrears would bear part of the cost from their failure to fulfill obligations.

The nations include some of the poorest countries in Asia, Latin America and Africa.

The plan calls for the gold holdings subscribed by these countries to be "mobilized," the official said. This could mean sales in the market or sales to other governments.

The IMF's gold resources have accumulated through original membership requirements under which a portion of a country's borrowing rights are paid in gold.

The 15 countries had paid in something less than 3 percent of the 103 million ounces of gold now held by the agency.

The fund last sold gold in the mid-1970s.

The agency had disposed of 50 million ounces, half of which was sold in the market and the other half to its members in proportion to their borrowing rights.

The purpose of the transactions was to raise money for a trust fund to help the poorest countries.

The U.S. proposal, the monetary officials said, does not have broad support on the IMF's board and is opposed by the agency's managing director, Michel Camdessus, a former governor of the central bank of France.

Oil workers nix Amoco job contract

DENVER (AP) — Leaders of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union have delayed an industry-wide strike but say they will strike individual companies should impasses develop in contract negotiations.

"It is our intention not to call a national strike," said Robert E. Wages, vice president and bargaining coordinator for the 40,000 member union. "We may give strike notices to certain companies," he said, referring to some 300 contracts which expired at 12:01 a.m. today.

The union rejected the oil industry's two-year contract offer Wednesday and continued talks with all companies on a 24-hour strike-notice basis.

The 40,000 oil industry workers covered through OCAW include 5,000 workers in the Rocky Mountain region, including 250 at Conoco Inc. and Total Petroleum Inc. refineries in Commerce City.

Calls to OCAW's Lakewood-based headquarters and officer's homes late Wednesday night were not answered.

In San Francisco, two OCAW locals agreed to a 24-hour rolling contract extension, with talks to continue until one party or the other gives 24-hour notice. The agreement was confirmed by Jim Payne, secretary-treasurer of OCAW Local 1-5, representing workers at Chevron, Tosco and Shell, and by Rick DeLege, president pro tem of OCAW Local 1-326, which represents Unocal Workers. Chevron and Unocal officials were

Thrift siezed hours before refinance

Cox News Service

PHOENIX — Arizona's largest thrift was seized by federal regulators only hours before its parent company planned to announce that agreements with seven lender groups were being signed to restructure the company's $624 million debt.

As a first step toward meeting its promise to infuse new capital into MeraBank, Pinnacle West had been negotiating to lengthen repayment periods on existing debt and was within hours of completing the agreements late Wednesday night.

"It's not done until it's done," Pinnacle West chairman Keith Turley said. "We are in the last hours of assembling the documents and signing them."

Pinnacle West's lenders included two groups of banks, one led by Bank of America and the other by Sumitomo of Tokyo. The groups are owed $150 million apiece.

A team of regulators moved into the downtown Phoenix headquarters of Merabank at 2 p.m. Wednesday in an attempt to stop the "unsafe and unsound" thrift's devestating financial losses and to prepare it for eventual sale.

They ousted a surprised MeraBank Chairman Gene Rice from control of the institution he has led since 1973.

"I was surprised at how it happened," Rice said. "Because they found no fraud, they did ask us to remain as a transition team. I'll be here one day at a time as long as they need me.

"The bank goes on," he said. "Customers are really in good shape. All funds are transferred to new accounts. All staff will be in place."

The $6.6 billion MeraBank became the sixth Arizona thrift to fall into insolvency, another victim in the collapse of the state's real estate and construction industries.

The thrift's seizure also marked the continuing decline of its parent company, Pinnacle West Capital Corp., which has been on the brink of bankruptcy because MeraBank has lost more than $400 million since 1988.

MeraBank was ready to restructure its debt. But, according to regulators, was seized because of continuing losses.

"Another big one bites the dust," said Bert Ely, a Virginia-based analyst of thrifts.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Leading indicators climb in December

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main economic forecasting gauge rose in December at its fastest pace in eight months, the government said.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday the Index of Leading Economic Indicators rose 0.8 percent in December, helping to move the forecasting gauge up 0.4 percent for the year. It was the weakest performance since the index fell 1.5 percent in 1984.

The rise for the year compared with an increase of 3.9 percent for 1988, and suggests the economy could be more sluggish this year than in 1989.

New home sales fell in 1989

WASHINGTON (AP) — New homes sales in 1989, held back in part by a 9.6 percent decline in December, posted their worst record in five years, the government said.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that new single-family homes were sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 629,000 units in December after jumping 9.3 percent in November.

Bid for Stride Rite Corp. scrapped

BOSTON (AP) — A group of investors has scrapped a $900 million takeover bid for The Stride Rite Corp., but refused to rule out another offer for the leading shoe company.

The decision Wednesday by Walsh, Greenwood & Co., a Greenwich, Conn., investment concern, came a day after Stride Rite rejected its $32-per-share offer and said it wanted to remain independent.

Eastern granted $50 million out of escrow

NEW YORK (AP) — A federal bankruptcy judge approved Eastern Airline's request for $50 million to be taken out of escrow funds to help finance its operations through February.

The approval Wednesday by U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Burton R. Lifland comes a day after a committee of Eastern's preferred shareholders advocated the liquidation or outright sale of the airline and said a $40 million advance should be enough to cover the next month.

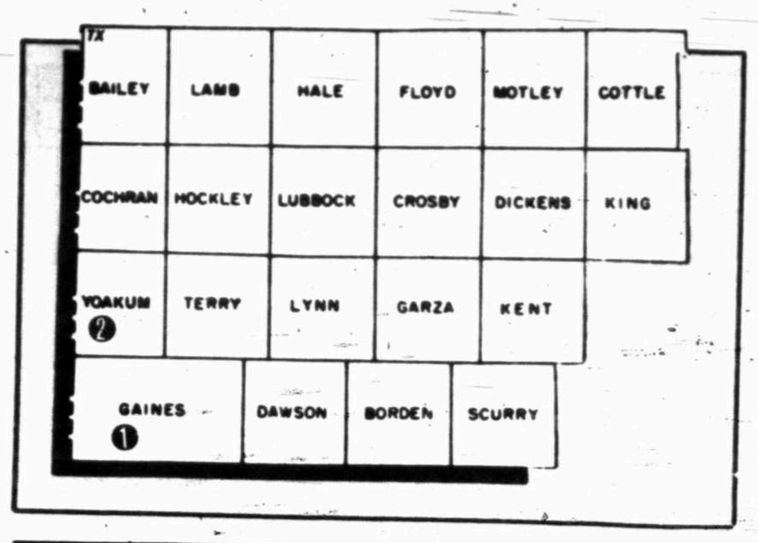

Bank of New England sells vehicle leasing unit

BOSTON (AP) — Bank of New England Corp., scrambling for cash because of large losses from bad real estate loans, announced it had completed the sale of a vehicle leasing business for $350 million.

The bank said Wednesday it had sold the U.S. portion of its McCullagh Leasing to GE Capital, a subsidiary of General Electric Co.

The business leases car and truck fleets in the United States and Canada, and Bank of New England said it expected to complete the sale of the Canadian portion next week for around $100 million.

Conoco unit tests two North Sea explorers

HOUSTON (SWN) — A Conoco affiliate has announced the results of two successful exploratory wells in North Sea block 9/18a, about 150 miles northeast of Aberdeen, Scotland.

Conoco (U.K.) Limited said appraisal well 9/18a-18, drilled to a total depth of 12,900 feet, tested an interval in the Jurassic sandstone and flowed 5,452 barrels of oil per day with an API gravity of 38 degrees.

Studies now are underway to determine the most cost effective method of developing the reservoir, which has been named the Buckland field after noted 19th century geologist William Buckland.

Exploration well 9/18a-21, located 5-1/2 miles south of the Buckland well, was drilled to a total depth of 6,500 feet. Tests on an interval in the Eocene sandstone flowed 4,030 barrels of oil per day with an API gravity of 21.9 degrees.

Belcher Co. units adopting Coastal name

HOUSTON (SWN) — The Coastal Corp. said that its six Belcher Co. subsidiaries are changing their names to more clearly identify them as affiliated with the Coastal parent company.

Effective January 1, 1990, The Belcher Co. of New York, Inc. will be renamed Coastal Oil New York, Inc. Also effective on the same date, Belcher New England, Inc. will change its name to Coastal Oil New England, Inc. and Belcher Refining Company of Mobile, Alabama will become Coastal Mobile Refining Company. Florida based Belcher Terminals, Inc. will be renamed Coastal Fuel Terminals, Inc. and Belcher Towing Company will become Coastal Tug and Barge, Inc.

Belcher Oil Co., Miami, Fla., will change its name to Coastal Fuels Marketing, Inc., effective February 1.

Conoco, Calco form coke calcining venture

HOUSTON (SWN) — Conoco Inc. and Calcined Coke Corp. (Calco) each have purchased 50 percent of the petroleum coke calcining business of BP Oil Co. and will combine those interests to form Venture Coke Company (Venco), a Conoco-operated joint venture company. Venco will be headquartered in Houston.

Assets included in the acquisition include four petroleum coke calcining kilns, two each at facilities near Lake Charles, La., and Moundsville, W. Va.

Alexander Energy wins two legal disputes

OKLAHOMA CITY (SWN) — Alexander Energy Corp. has been awarded favorable decisions in two significant legal disputes with combined net proceeds in excess of $350,000.

During the fourth quarter of 1989, the company emerged on the winning side of the Oklahoma Supreme Court decision in SKZ, Inc. et al vs Corporation Commission et al, which reaffirmed the "unit pooling" concept. As a result of the Court's decision, Alexander Energy will recover approximately $100,000 in suspended revenues and increase its recoverable reserves by 12,215 barrels of oil equivalents.

Subsequent to the 1989 year end, the company was a party to an out-of-court settlement of a significant gas contract dispute with a major purchaser. The company will receive net funds in excess of $250,000.

Plains Resources seeks one-for-five reverse split

HOUSTON (SWN) — Plains Resources announced that it would seek shareholder approval of a one for five reverse split of its common stock. Plains also said that it intended to list its common on the American Stock Exchange if shareholder approval of the reverse split is obtained.

The company said that it had filed a preliminary listing application with the Exchange and that the Exchange had issued a favorable eligibility opinion, subject to the reverse split.

The reverse split and subsequent exchange listing are intended to broaden the market for Plains' common stock and increase the company's exposure in the financial community. Both of these actions should provide a market that will more closely reflect the company's underlying values, Plains said.

Approval for the reverse split will be sought at a special meeting of shareholders to be held in February 1990.

DeltaUS emerges from Chapter 11 bankruptcy

TYLER (SWN) — DeltaUS Corp. has substantially completed its Plan of Reorganization under the provisions of Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code and has emerged from the Chapter 11 process approximately one year after filing a petition for reorganization on January 31, 1989.

Under the terms of the reorganization plan, as approved by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, 100 percent of newly issued shares of stock of DeltaUS Corporation and substantially all of the stock of Delta Overseas Drilling Co. (formerly a subsidiary of DeltaUS Corp.) were sold to Gordon P. Getty for a total of $13,500,000. Pursuant to the Court Order confirming the plan, all of the previously existing stock of DeltaUS Corporation was cancelled.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

How to invest $3,000

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I am a man, 72, in excellent health. I have $85,000 in certificates of deposit plus ample income from rental properties and mortgages. I have no stocks or bonds. Over the next 10 years I will have $2,000 to $3,000 extra funds per month from mortgages. I would like to invest that money so that it will provide income after 10 years. What do you suggest?

A. Zero-coupon bonds seem tailor-made for your financial situation. That type of bond does not pay interest semiannually as most bonds do. Instead, a "zero," as it is nicknamed, is issued at a deep discount — way below its face value — and is redeemed at face value when it matures. The difference between the two prices is interest, which builds up over the life of the bond.

Doyle

You can buy corporate, municipal or U.S. Treasury zeroes. As I write this, Treasury zeroes due to mature in 10 years are priced to yield better than 8 percent. At that rate your money would more than double in 10 years. By putting $3,000 a month into 10-year Treasury zeros, you'll take out more than $6,000 a month.

One hitch with Treasury and corporate zeroes is that you must pay income tax annually on the interest that accumulates, even though you don't collect that interest until the bonds mature.

You can duck that tax by investing in municipal zeroes issued by states and their political subdivisions and accruing tax-free interest. But municipals pay lower interest and are not as readily available as Treasury zeroes.

In your shoes, I'd stick with Treasury zeroes. And shop carefully at a number of brokerage firms and banks. The best way to do that is to compare yields of identical issues at different brokerages and banks.

Q. A 63-year-old widow, I have invested my principal, which presently amounts to slightly more than $900,000, equally in CDs and municipal bonds.

I live well, buy whatever I want, give to charities and family, but I have a growing concern that I should add to my principal more often than I do. After all, I could live another 20 or more years.

How well can I expect to live on my present nest egg down the road?

A. Extremely well, unless you have spendthrift habits and/or inflation takes off at a gallop.

You don't mention how much income that $900,000 is producing. For want of a better number, let's say your average interest is 8 percent. That's $72,000 annual income.

If you can't live well and enjoy life on that, you are awfully extravagant. And your letter indicates that tag can't be pinned on you.

If you like, you can spend a bit less and tuck more money away each year. More CDs would be a logical choice. You could put some money into common stocks as a hedge against inflation. But you then would be taking on risk, which there is no good reason for you to do.

My advice is to keep doing things as you have in the past. The chances that you will ever be pinched for income are so small they are virtually nonexistent.

Q. When I retire, my husband and I will have combined Social Security benefits of approximately $1,000 per month. Our savings will amount to about $40,000 and we will have about $60,000 equity in our home, which we could get if we sell and move into an apartment. Our monthly mortgage payments are $347.34.

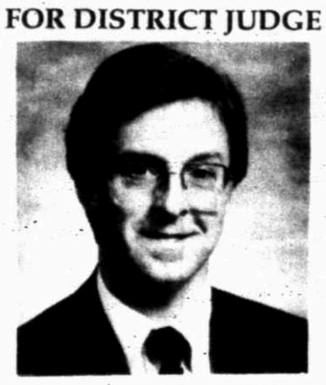

What are our chances of having a decent living on this?

A. They are far short of rosy. To get along, you will have to do some tight budgeting. However, many families live on less.

I advise against selling your home, unless you become desperately strapped for cash. Keep most of your $40,000 savings at work earning interest — in CDs or U.S. Treasury securities.

GARY D. DOUGLAS ENDORSES NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

As a lawyer and long-time resident of Midland who has a deep concern about the future of our city, I feel that the upcoming District Court election is extremely important. Over 80% of the cases in the 238th District Court are civil cases which demand a judge with a broad and diverse legal background.

Nick Taylor will bring to the Court the legal knowledge and temperament he has gained in 26 years of handling a wide variety of civil matters. It takes a fair-minded, knowledgeable and experienced lawyer to make a great judge. Nick Taylor is such a lawyer.

Earlier in the day the union's national bargaining committee decided not to call an industry-wide strike but to strike individual major companies should impasses develop.

Wages said the union would extend the negotiations because "there is at least some reason to believe all of the majors are interested in talking about the issues."

"That has not materialized," said OCAW spokesman Rodney Rogers. "With this 24-hour rolling notice in effect, tomorrow is another day. Talks are going on with every company this afternoon."

OCAW officials said the contract offered by Amoco Corp., the pattern contract for the industry, fell short on pay, health benefits and environmental concerns. Telephone calls to Amoco headquarters in Chicago were not returned.

Walkouts could be called at individual oil companies, the union said.

Major companies that could be struck include Amoco, Texaco, Chevron, Mobil, Shell, Atlantic Richfield and Unocal.

The union seeks $1.25 hourly wage increases in each year of the two-year pact, increasing companies health care premium contributions to 90 percent, establishing an independent environmental monitor at each plant, and industry support of legislative efforts to establish a national health plan modeled after Canada's.

Wages said the Amoco offer included annual pay raises of 62-64 cents an hour, and increases in family medical premiums of $45 the first year and $40 the second.

Wages said in some cases, the medical premium cash offer would increase company contributions to the 70 percent to 85 percent level, but noted that was the exception to the rule.

As for the union's push for a national health program guaranteeing universal medical care, Wages said the program would be modeled after the Canadian system rather than Britain's socialized medicine. He said money now being spent by employees and employers through private insurance health plans is adequate to finance such a tax-funded national program.

Federal Home Loan Banks and a new member of the board of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

"The urgency that was attached to this legislation seems to have evaporated with its passage," Sarbanes complained.

Robson said the administration has had some difficulty finding candidates whose business activities did not pose a conflict of interest. Also, he described the FBI clearance process as "draconian."

However, he said the administration was "very close" to naming a fourth member of the RTC oversight board and said the candidate for the agency's inspector general was undergoing background checks.

Robson also said if the $50 billion allocated to the RTC proved to be inadequate, the administration could ask Congress to "reallocate to earlier periods" $32 billion earmarked for post-1992 failures.

Commenting on other topics, Kelleher said:

■ Southwest wouldn't increase flights to Midland should the Confederate Air Force move its headquarters to the Tall City, despite possible increased tourism. "We didn't increase flights to Harlingen," he said.

■ The proposal for several Wayports to help relive congestion is "of no interest to Southwest because of our concept as a short-haul carrier. Wayports are for passengers making connections on long-haul flights. Besides, we're trying to get closer to the city, not further."

■ Southwest plans to look at resuming service to Denver once that city opens a new airport.

■ Has temporarily embellished its "Company Club" frequent flier program to offer members a free ticket for each flight, which can be used in April or May as well as September or October. He said this was in response to incentives by other airlines.

■ Does not oppose a proposed high-speed train between Dallas and Houston, as long as it's privately funded and not subsidized by the government. He expressed skepticism that the concept would work.

■ Feels there can be some tinkering with the Wright Amendment to benefit passengers and the airlines so that Love Field isn't thrust into competition with DFW Airport.

■ Would like to see the government release the $7 billion surplus in aviation funds gained from a portion of passenger fares for airport and air traffic control improvements.

Stenholm's comments were made in conjunction with the revelation that NCNB will dispatch a team to Abilene to confer with bank customers unhappy about the handling of NCNB loans since July of 1988.

He said NCNB had agreed to put together a team of four or five to come to Abilene and sit down with the borrowers, one on one, in an attempt to work with them.

Stenholm said the meetings are the result of a Jan. 12 meeting with 10 customers, including the Rogers Dennis family of Abilene, who started picketing NCNB banks here on Mondav.

Stenholm said he had been talking with L. William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., and with Hartman and Erwin about the problems within the Special Assets Division in Fort Worth.

The special assets unit is a bank specializing in handling bad debts. The Dennises, as well as other Abilenians, complained that their business loan is held by that bank even though their loans were not in arrears.

BANK

"It's way past time," he said, adding "there's still a loss in MeraBank for the feds."

"MeraBank had no capital, its losses were mounting and federal assistance was needed to meet new capital standards," said Bill Fulwider of the Washington, D.C.-based Office of Thrift Supervision.

A statement from Fulwider's office also said the thrift had "violated laws," but another government spokesman at MeraBank said the statement was mistaken.

Kevin Shields of the Resolution Trust Corporation, which assumed responsibility for MeraBank, said "no laws were broken."

"The law that was broken is that we don't have the minimum capital requirements," Rice said.

All branches will remain open for business. MeraBank will assume a new name, MeraBank Federal Savings Bank, reflecting the change in ownership, he said.

The thrift's 833,000 accounts and $4.5 billion in deposits were "transferred" to MeraBank Federal. All deposits remain insured to $100,000, Shields said.

"The RTC wants to keep this institution. It is having problems, but it has a good branch network, and we are not looking to lay off anyone," he said.

The government takeover "is a positive step because it allows us to take control, solve the problems and prepare it for sale," Shields said.

Merabank was purchased for $426 million by Pinnacle West in December of 1986. The thrift lost $209 million in 1988 and more than $190 million through the first three quarters of 1989.

Regulators reported MeraBank had $6.7 billion in assets and liabilities of $6.5 billion as of Nov. 30, 1989, leaving it with a negative net worth of $337.4 million.

Regulators placed MeraBank into receivership despite a pledge by the thrift's parent company, Pinnacle West, to inject $450 million into MeraBank by March 31 in exchange for a release from further obligation.

Regulators said they still expected Pinnacle West, which owns Arizona's largest utility, Arizona Public Service Co., to comply with the agreement. However, they said the infusion would still leave MeraBank far short of its capital requirement and said the thrift continued to weaken.

Low-fat milk lowers colon-cancer risk

That's the advice from new research showing that both calcium and vitamin D, found in milk, seem to lower the risk of colon cancer.

Carper

Men at high risk of colon cancer were given 1,250 milligrams of calcium every day for a week. Scientists at Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit found that the calcium reduced by about half the activity of enzymes in the colon that promote tumor growth.

At the same time, researchers at the University of California in San Diego discovered that people with high amounts of vitamin D in their blood were 70 percent less likely to develop colon cancer than those with low vitamin-D blood levels. The same researchers previously noted that men who drank a couple of glasses of milk daily over a 20-year period had only one-third the chance of colon cancer as non-milk drinkers.

This means, says Dr. Elizabeth Barrett-Connor, head of the University's department of community and family medicine, that calcium and vitamin D may work together against colon cancer.

Thus, she says, it makes sense to drink at least two glasses of milk a day. But make it low-fat. Researchers suspect fat promotes colon cancer.

A VALENTINE'S DAY REPRIEVE? — Sweets are not always forbidden for diabetics, says Dr. Joyce Wise, assistant professor of the University of Illinois at Peoria.

In a five-day test, she gave a group of insulin-dependent (Type I) diabetics two daily snacks of sugary foods, including cookies, brownies, granola bars and ice cream. Contrary to popular expectations, their blood sugar did not go up.

This does not mean diabetics can eat sugar with abandon, but a little may not be harmful, Dr. Wise advises.

She cited a British study showing no damaging changes in blood sugar among diabetics who for six weeks ate three tablespoons of sugar at meals instead of an equal amount of complex carbohydrates, such as cereals, breads and pasta. Seven other studies show essentially the same thing, she says.

The American Diabetic Association agrees to an extent. It recently raised its allowance of sugar, honey, molasses or other sweeteners per food serving from a half teaspoon to a full teaspoon.

Being allowed some sugar lessens a diabetic's sense of deprivation, says Dr. Wise.

YUM, YUM, BARLEY BREAD — Barley, the Biblical grain, can lower your blood cholesterol as well or better than oat bran, according to new research.

At Texas A&M University, Dr. Joanne Lupton studied 78 men and women with high cholesterol (250 to 300). Those who ate one ounce of barley bran every day for a month had an average 8 percent drop in cholesterol. Their cholesterol stayed down for five weeks after they stopped eating the bran. Dr. Lupton says it takes twice that amount of oat bran to get the same effect.

Dr. Rosemary Newman at Montana State University also noted that eating bread, cereal and muffins made with barley flour every day for four weeks depressed cholesterol in volunteers by as much as 15 percent. The dose: about an ounce and a half of barley fiber daily, equal to three slices of zucchini bread made with barley flour.

Barley was just as effective as oat bran, she says.

Dr. Newman has developed recipes for using cholesterol-lowering barley. Her cookbook, "New Ways With Barley," is available by sending $3 to the Montana State University Plant and Soil Science Department, Bozeman, MT 59717.

In a new study, she asked one group of women with the recurring vaginitis — also known as candidal or "yeast" infections — to eat plain yogurt every day for six months. Another group ate none. The yogurt-eaters had a three-fold lower incidence of vaginitis than the non-yogurt eaters. Women who ordinarily had three vaginitis flare-ups in a six-month period had only one or none when on the yogurt regimen.

Dr. Hilton called the results "dramatic." The only caution: The yogurt used in the test, the Colombo brand, contains the culture Lactobacillus acidophilus, which Dr. Hilton credits with fighting the infection. She says many national brands do not contain L. acidophilus. Others, such as Brown Cow, sold in health food stores, do.

If you're not sure, you might make your own yogurt using an acidophilus culture often available in health food stores, she says.

AIDS cases not growing at expected rate

By JAYNE GARRISON
Hearst News Service

Far from the hospital wards, the AIDS epidemic's statisticians are hunched over charts and computers, puzzling over a mystery.

New reports indicate that AIDS cases in the United States are not growing at the rate expected and feared, especially among gay men.

The debate over why the growth in cases has slowed — and by how much — is politically sensitive. Activists worry it will draw attention away from the suffering and needs of hundreds of thousands of people infected but not yet diagnosed with AIDS.

Some researchers fear the public will misunderstand and think the epidemic is over, when it is far from ended.

"We have to decide if this is an explosive epidemic or a contained epidemic," said Joel Hay, a health economist at the conservative Hoover Institution at Stanford University, who has long challenged government projections.

Nationally, where case tallies are influenced by the wide epidemic on the East Coast among drug users and minorities, the trend appears to have slowed the anticipated increase in new cases.

Reported cases rose from 17,452 in 1986 to 25,457 in 1987 — a 40 percent increase. So far 29,023 cases have been reported for 1988 — a 13 percent increase. Again, late reporting will boost the 1988 figure, but not substantially. Case reports for 1989 are incomplete.

The federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta is now lowering its projections of future cases by about 15 percent to accommodate this unexpected turn in the epidemic.

But, even if new cases nationally are rising more slowly, the toll is still climbing and, with it, so is the suffering.

Moreover, with about 120,000 cases reported nationwide, there still remain from 500,000 to 1 million people — from the most conservative to the more liberal estimates — infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) who could be expected to get AIDS during the next two decades.

"Why? This is what everyone is grappling with," said James Hyman, a researcher who attempts to model epidemics mathematically at the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico.

The answer could have profound implications for public health policy.

For instance, if only half the people thought infected nationally have HIV, then the cost of early medical care would not be $5 billion a year, as estimated, but $2.5 billion.

If the overwhelming majority of people were infected by 1983, before government prevention campaigns began, critics might question the cost effectiveness of the $438 million the U.S. Public Health Service is spending this year on prevention and education. Still, others might credit the spending for keeping new infections low.

There are four major theories to explain the statistics:

■ One, backed by Hyman and Andrew Moss of the University of California-San Francisco, is that gay men changed their sexual behavior, cutting their risk, by 1983 nationally and 1982 locally — before most people in this country had even heard of AIDS. At the same time, it's probable that not all gay men practiced risky anal intercourse anyway, nor did all drug users frequent shooting galleries. So the virus quickly saturated the groups at highest risk, and was largely contained there early in the 9-year-old epidemic.

■ Another, backed by researchers Mitchell Gail and Bill Blattner of the National Cancer Institute, is that treatment with the drugs AZT and aerosolized pentamidine in 1987 delayed progression to AIDS among enough infected people to throw off national projections.

■ Another by Dr. George Rutherford, an epidemiologist at San Francisco's Health Department, is that physicians and hospitals are not documenting all the AIDS cases they see.

■ Another theory, backed by Hay, is that researchers have overestimated the size of the epidemic from the beginning and are still doing so. Hay and colleague Frank Wolak contend that 442,000 to 519,000 people are infected but not yet sick with AIDS — half the CDC's estimate of 1 million. Based on low new infection rates known in San Francisco, they figure 10,000 people each year are now becoming infected — a quarter of the CDC's estimates.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Discovery of an obscure member of the swarm of chemicals that surround the body's reaction to injury and infection has raised hope that the pain of some kinds of arthritis may be quenched.

The newly isolated chemical, which is being called interleuken-1ra, or IL-1ra, may be useful in blocking the actions of a related substance, interleuken-1 (IL-1), scientists said.

By triggering a chain reaction in the bloodstream, IL-1 initiates the painful inflammation and swelling associated with rheumatoid arthritis attacks, scientists said.

Dr. Robert C. Thompson, vice president of Synergen Inc., a Boulder, Colo., biotechnology company, said human tests of a drug based on IL-1ra are expected to get underway later this year.

He said it would be at least three years before medications would be generally available.

Thompson and scientists from the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center in Denver disclosed last week in the scientific journal, Nature, that they had successfully isolated the chemical.

"I think we are just starting to see the tip of the iceberg of revolutionary new treatments for inflammatory arthritis based on these manipulations of the immune system."

— Arthur I. Grayzel of the Arthritis Foundation

In laboratory tests, the chemical inhibited chain reactions like those that precede rheumatoid arthritis attacks.

The discovery was hailed by the Arthritis Foundation as one that "could open a whole new approach" to treating the disease.

"I think we are just starting to see the tip of the iceberg of revolutionary new treatments for inflammatory arthritis based on these manipulations of the immune system," said Arthur I. Grayzel, a vice president of the Arthritis Foundation.

Thompson said this chain reaction begins when white blood cells detect an infection or injury, then synthesize IL-1 and release it into the bloodstream.

IL-1 seeks out certain cells that are capable of producing enzymes that in turn attack invading organisms, he said. Recognizing these cells, IL-1 attaches itself to them and stimulates them to produce the protective enzymes.

In addition to attacking foreign germs, however, these enzymes attack the body's own tissues. Converging at the site of an injury in order to protect the body from entry by infection, the enzymes cause swelling and inflammation, a price the body pays for its protection.

In inflammatory arthritis attacks IL-1 goes out of control and produces a destrucive horde of the enzymes, which attack bone and cartilage.

Strategy helps beat high heating bills

By MATTHEW L. WALD
N.Y. Times News Service

Millions of homeowners who shivered through the record cold spell of December were shuddering in January at a related problem: December's fuel bill.

It is too late, of course, to do anything about the cost of heating during December, but future bills can be spread out or reduced, experts say.

Anyone who pays a heating bill was hit with extra costs in December because the weather was 30 percent colder than a normal December in most of the East.

But homeowners with the biggest problem are those who use oil.

Oil prices, which have always fluctuated with the season at the retail level, have been especially variable this winter, rising by almost 50 percent in the cold weather.

So a homeowner who might have expected to use 200 gallons in December at $1 a gallon instead may have used 260 gallons and paid $1.40, for a total cost increase of 80 percent.

In contrast, natural gas prices do not vary seasonally for residential users.

They do vary seasonally for industrial customers or utilities that choose to buy on the or short-term market, but even utilities that play this "spot" market generally get only part of their supplies that way, so the impact on them is muted.

Gas prices vary from utility to utility. Consolidated Edison Co. of New York, which has among the highest gas prices in the country, is now selling gas at a price per cubic foot equivalent to $1.04 a gallon for heating oil, which is higher than home oil started the season but well below where it is now.

THE SIMPLEST way for consumers to avoid a high December fuel bill is to pay part of it at some other time of the year.

Most gas utilities and full-service fuel oil dealers will make this possible with a budget payment plan.

Plans differ in important ways, but in most cases the utilities estimate what the consumer's annual bill will be, based on past use and weather expectations, and divide it by 10, or 11 or 12. The customer then pays in equal monthly installments.

For fuel suppliers, which have year-round expenses, the advantage of this system is that it matches their revenue more closely to costs.

The plans can also amount to an interest-free loan from the consumer to the company if the customer begins paying in July for services he will not start using until October or November.

"There isn't any state law that would require them to pay interest," said Richard Kessel, the chairman of the New York State Consumer Protection Board.

On the other hand, if the heating company will allow customers to start the plan at the beginning of the heating season, the opposite is true: the company will be providing an interest-free loan to the consumer.

In either case, these balanced billing plans, or budget billing, as they are sometimes known, are not for everyone, Kessel said. They are most advantageous for "consumers who are on a really tight budget," he added.

If the budget plan begins in July and the worst of the heating season is not until January or February, the plan can be seen as a kind of layaway plan.

ALL BALANCED billing plans include a provision for an adjustment in the last month to cover overpayments or underpayments. Thus, Kessel noted, a budget plan does not protect against unexpected price increases.

Kessel cautions customers considering a budget plan to beware of a provision that allows for an adjustment in their payment at midseason.

Most heating oil dealers offer to start customers on a budget plan only in summer, so they can establish a credit balance before the cold weather sets in. Some gas utilities will allow customers to join at any time of year.

Ultimately, budget plans do not reduce the cost of the fuel used; at best they are neutral.

For consumers to realize a real reduction in costs, they must cut their demand for fuel by improving insulation in attics, walls and around windows, by improving their heating systems or both.

Free information on insulation is available by telephone from the Conservation and Renewable Energy Inquiry and Referral Service, at 800-523-2929.

In an oil heating system, one method of improvement is to change the burner.

Richard B. Herrlin, president of Schenck Fuels of East Hampton, N.Y., said many older oil furnaces are able to effectively use less than two-thirds of the energy available in a gallon of fuel oil

If an old oil furnace is to be replaced, consumers should consider a gas furnace, which is available with efficiency as high as oil or higher.

If the building does not already have gas service, for cooking or hot water, installing a gas line can be expensive. Suburban houses often require more than 100 feet of service line.

Investments in energy efficiency that seem to be no more than break-even propositions at today's energy prices may look like shrewd investments in years to come.

The consensus of experts, for the first time in several years, is that over the next few years oil and gas prices are going up.

Calculate changes in cost

N.Y. Times News Service

Are the conservation improvements you have made in the past helping you this winter?

You can find out if you have old fuel bills, a pencil, a pocket calculator and a local newspaper.

The newspaper probably lists a figure in its weather report for "degree-days," a measure of heating requirements. It is the difference between the mean temperature for a day and 65 degrees. If a day's mean temperature is 15 degrees, then the heating requirement is 50 degree-days.

The easiest measure of heating efficiency is gallons of oil or cubic feet of natural gas per degree-day.

If your area has accumulated 2,700 degree-days this season, and you have used 500 gallons of oil, then you used .185 gallons for each degree-day.

No matter what the year-to-year difference is in the weather, you can calculate, using old bills, how this compares with years past.

To determine degree-days for a year ago, natural gas customers can calculate from the temperature averages that are probably listed on their old bills.

Oil users will probably have to consult a public library for year-old degree-day figures, or their dealers might be able to provide them.

'Homemade' soup still not as good as Mom's

By LINDA ANDERSON

I'm a sucker for any food that is claimed to be "homemade" — especially if I'm not the one who has to home-cook it. And since Mom lives in another state, and the cook in my house happens to be me, that means I'm usually more than willing to sample anything that promises to be both "homemade" and easy.

Anderson

Guess what I found in the supermarket soup section — Campbell's Home Cookin' Soup. The label claimed the soup is "ready to serve," so naturally a couple of cans found their way into my grocery cart and eventually, my bowl, where I checked it out for taste, price and advertising accuracy.

Home Cookin' (leaving off the "g" was not my idea, and I think it's an annoying habit for a food company to get into) Chicken with Broad Egg Noodles soup cost 99 cents for a two-serving can (19 ounces). The other flavors of Home Cookin' soup cost more — such as the minestrone, which cost $1.38 for a two-serving can. (The soup also is available in one-serving cans.)

Label advertising claims the product has "no preservatives," but a look at the ingredients label reveals that the soup does contain salt, which I always thought was a preservative. Maybe they mean no artificial preservatives — after all, salt is a natural. But it must be quite a bit of salt, because the nutrition label lists the sodium content of one serving (or ½ the can) to be 1010 mg. That's a lot of salt for one bowl of soup.

The nutrition label also lists one serving of the chicken Home Cookin' soup as containing 110 calories, 11 grams of protein, 10 grams of carbohydrate and 3 grams of fat.

Other ingredients listed (in order) are: chicken stock, chicken meat, celery, carrots, enriched egg noodles, water, the salt previously mentioned, potato starch, monosodium glutamate, chicken fat, margarine, sugar, onion powder, natural flavoring, spice and dehydrated garlic.

The taste-test showed that, yes, the soup does have broad egg noodles, chunks of chicken and real slices of celery and carrots, not the usual microscopic little squares or flakes of vegetables found in ordinary canned soups.

But while the soup looked so much better that ordinary canned chicken soup, it didn't taste all that much better. Could-be the only reason it tasted any better at all is that it's "ready to serve," so you don't have to mix it with Midland water to cook it. Mom's homemade chicken soup is much better — and her's is really homemade.

Ticket deal has reader wanting scalpers' heads

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Sorry, I disagree with your compliance with the pair who wanted to sell $100 tickets to a sporting event to their co-workers for $400.

Van Buren

First of all, people who buy more tickets than they need to a sporting event, theater, rock concert, etc., are preventing others from acquiring tickets at the stated price. This may be OK under laissez-faire capitalism, but it strikes me as unconscionable and greedy.

Second, some cities have "ticket scalping" ordinances that make it a misdemeanor to sell tickets above the stated price.

Your comment, "The early bird gets the worm," was off the mark. It would have been better to suggest that the co-workers simply treat the "early birds" to a nice dinner to compensate them for their legwork, rather than encourage the early buyers to seek an unscrupulous profit. — JERRY P. IN SEATTLE

DEAR JERRY: Where were you when I needed you? Yours was one of the few printable letters I received in response to my inspired (?) answer in which I failed to mention that in most states, "scalping" is illegal.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 15-year-old girl. A few months ago, my 13-month-old brother, Ricky, had a life-threatening accident. Managing to get out the front door unobserved, he walked behind my mom's van just as she was pulling into our garage. Mom didn't see Ricky, so she pressed the button to close the garage door, then she went inside.

After looking for Ricky for about five minutes, we heard my sister who was outside scream. Mom and I ran out to see Ricky's head sticking out from under the garage door! When we got him out, he was limp, blue and not breathing. We thought he was dead.

After a two-week ordeal at Loyola University Hospital, Ricky came home and is as alive as ever. He was expected to die or at least have severe brain damage, but he is perfect.

I would like to thank the Loyola University Hospital staff, our neighbor, Sue Waite (who administered CPR), all our friends and relatives — and most of all my Heavenly Father for giving our family of seven a second chance with our littlest.

Abby, please tell your readers to be careful with their garage doors and to always watch them go down.

I don't want anyone else to have to go through what we did. You may print my name. — LINDSAY MITCHELL, NAPERVILLE, ILL.

DEAR LINDSAY: Thank you for writing. I alerted my readers to this hazard a few years ago, but your letter will remind them that electrically operated garage doors can kill a child, or a pet.

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow. After 46 years of marriage, I lost my precious husband.

Now, on the issue of what I prefer to be called, I couldn't care less. I don't care what people call me — just so they call me, come to see me and include me. I have never known such loneliness in my entire life. So, call me what you will, but please CALL me! — MRS. J.C. HILL

Cats get own video; Need new attitude

By ERMA BOMBECK

Don't expect Michael Jackson to lose any sleep over it, but there's a new video for cats on the market. The way it works, a cat plunks down 20 bucks and gets a 30-minute cassette of colorful birds chirping and fluttering provocatively across the TV screen.

Bombeck

Why am I not surprised? If royalty ever gets a foothold in America, it will materialize through cats. For years the Royal House of Fur has enjoyed a status never known in the animal kingdom. A feline is without doubt the most indulged, spoiled, independent pet to own a human.

I contend that most cats suffer from chronic PMS. They're unpredictable, moody, sometimes loving, sometimes hostile. They go when they want to go and come back when they are ready. They are stroked on their own terms. They invented self-esteem; there is not an insecure bone in their body.

I'm used to dogs. When you leave them in the morning, they stick their nose in the door crack and stand there like a portrait until you turn the key eight hours later. A cat would never put up with that kind of rejection. When you returned, she'd stalk you until you dozed off and then suck the air out of your body.

A dog can be chasing cars five miles away. When he is called, he comes panting and sweating, only to hear you say, "Just wanted to know where you were." Can you see a cat accepting that without reprisals?

And you don't want to live with a cat you've had neutered! There aren't enough diamond chokers in the world to buy back their affection.

I'm uncomfortable with cats. They make me feel insecure. My daughter knows this. Most young women get a guard dog when they get their own apartment. She bought two cats for Mom Insurance. She knows her mother would never set foot in the door.

If cats were human, they'd watch "Masterpiece Theater," drive a German import car, belong to a country club, melt Brie before serving, subscribe to The New York Times Book Review every Sunday and think Harley-Davidson was a law firm.

Dogs, on the other hand, would watch "Roseanne," belong to the Price Club, have a plastic liner in their pocket for their leaky pen and consider Pavarotti an Italian entree.

Cut energy costs by plugging leaks

Associated Press

In the search for comfort and lower heating and cooling bills, most people think of insulation first. But beyond a certain point, piling more insulation in an attic doesn't make sense. Better Homes and Gardens magazine suggests that once the insulation is sufficient, start looking for ways to seal air leaks.

If all the air leaks in a typical 1,500-square-foot home were added up, they would create a windowlike opening of 2 square feet. Through that hole, outdoor air comes rushing in at a rate that completely fills the house with new air every two hours. Making up for that lost hot air could cost anywhere from $50 to $150 extra per month.

With some careful sleuthing, however, one-third or more of the leaks in a home can be sealed.

To find out how leaky a home is, locate an energy consultant who will hook up a computerized fan door designed to pressurize the entire home. Check with the local utility or state energy office to locate qualified consultants. A fan-door test is somewhat expensive, usually around $100, and not yet widely available, so consider a self-test. Here are some clues to look for:

- Heating or air-conditioning ducts located in attics, crawl spaces or outside walls usually have more wallet-robbing air leaks than homes with ductwork in the basement.
- Fireplaces are big air leakers. Masonry fireplaces against outside walls often usher in cold air with a nasty creosote odor. On interior walls, fireplaces are more likely to be letting warm air out than cold air in.
- The type of insulation the house has can be a factor. Homes with blown, sprayed, or loose-fill insulation in walls and ceilings tend to be tighter than homes with insulated batts. Older types of blow-in insulation can settle, however. Batts make good insulation, but they can leave gaps.

Sealing should start with ductwork that runs through crawl spaces or attics. Check the connections for a proper fit, and tape joints with duct or foil tape.

In attics and crawl spaces, all penetrations for wiring and plumbing should be sealed. Expansive foam can fill gaps up to 1 inch wide, while caulked sheet metal should cover larger openings around metal flues.

Air can leak in wherever wood framing rests on concrete walls or slabs. To plug this common gap, squeeze in a continuous bead of caulk.

Sweepstakes odds are so-o-o long

By BOBBI IGNELZI

So you mailed in that sweepstakes entry promising millions of dollars? Well, don't quit your job and head off to Tahiti yet.

"Your chances of winning big are somewhat better than all the air disappearing out of your living room," says Columbia University statistics professor Herbert Robbins.

Here are the odds in three of the better-known sweepstakes, as listed in the Better Business Bureau Reporter:

Reader's Digest: Your chance of winning the $5 million first prize is one in 113 million, the same chance you have of winning the $150,000 prize. You have one chance in 56.6 million of winning either of the two $25,000 prizes, one in 37.6 million of winning $15,000, one in 11.3 million of winning in the $5,000 category, one in 2.26 million of winning $1,000, one in 452,000 of winning $200 and one in 2,993 of getting $20.

Publisher's Clearing House: Your chance of winning the $1 million super prize is one in 182.6 million. The odds you will win any of the lesser prizes aren't much better. Your chances of winning $60,000, $30,000, $15,000, $7,500, $5,000 or $1,000 are all one in 122.5 million. You have one chance in 12.25 million of taking home $500, one in 4.9 million of receiving $100, one in 2.45 million of winning $50, and one in 2,869 of claiming $5.

American Family Publishers: Ed McMahon makes winning $10 million sound easy. In fact, it's easy for one in 121.4 million persons. You have one chance in 30 million of winning either the $100,000 prize or the 865 other prizes worth $10 each.

Future possibilities already controversial

By LAUREL SUOMISTO
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

It's 1990, and nobody is strip-mining the moon for construction materials, lighting up the planet with solar energy from lunar stations or towing captive metallic asteroids into reach.

Trillions of dollars are out there, according to visionaries — or dreamers, depending on your point of view.

Under the 1967 Outer Space Treaty, ratified by all the space-faring countries, no nation can own the moon or any other celestial body. But nothing today prevents anyone from going up and helping himself to whatever is there, says University of Southern California professor Carl Christol, an expert in international law.

Don't hold your breath.

Legal and political uncertainties, technological challenges and plain timidity will probably keep enterprise out of space for a good while, no matter how much gold may be in the stars. The possibilities, however, remain staggering.

Some speak of multitrillion-dollar asteroids of nickel and iron that could meet Earth's needs for centuries.

At a recent conference of space scientists at California Institute of Technology in Pasadena, Jonathan Post, a Rockwell International Corp. scientist, stood up during the question period after a panel discussion on international cooperation and excoriated bureaucrats who use budget woes as an excuse not to fund space programs.

METALLIC ASTEROIDS are worth $1 trillion a cubic kilometer at current market values, and "quadrillions of dollars are available without going much beyond the orbit of Mars," said Post, a Voyager 2 engineer whose work at Rockwell's Space Division includes planning manned expeditions to other planets. Quintillions, if you go a little farther, he said.

And they say they have no money, he scoffed. "Isn't that like freezing to death while on top of a coal mine?"

"Somewhere around the second quadrillion, the market might be a bit saturated," Jet Propulsion Laboratory director Lew Allen responded drily.

Scientists have been talking for years about what space resources might be used for, but not much has been discussed in public lately. Budget constraints of the early 1980s and the 1986 Challenger disaster slowed the U.S. space program, but there are signs things are picking up again.

Chemist James R. Arnold, outgoing director of the University of California-sponsored California Space Institute in San Diego, predicted during congressional hearings on space law a decade ago that space mining could begin as early as 1990. He said in a recent interview that he is still convinced space industrialization is feasible.

At present, the likeliest near-term use of space resources is mining lunar iron for building the space and moon stations President George Bush has called for and extracting oxygen from moon rocks for rocket fuel, Arnold said.

Sending a payload into space costs around $11,000 a pound. Using moon-produced oxygen would save a lot of money, since oxygen for rocket fuel typically constitutes 80 percent of the space shuttle's weight at takeoff, he said.

THE FUTURE, however, holds much greater riches.

"Many meteoroids are pure iron-nickel metal with a little cobalt, gold and platinum in them for fun," Arnold said. "Asteroids unquestionably have water on them. I think there's no doubt someday we will be using asteroids."

David R. Criswell, a visiting scholar at the University of California, San Diego, just finished work on a NASA task force that looked into building solar power stations on the moon.

He and a colleague, Robert Waldron, recommended construction of 20 stations built with lunar materials that would convert solar power to microwaves and beam it back to receivers on Earth.

Such a system could supply sufficient electric power for the 10 billion people expected to be living on Earth in the middle of the next century, he said.

"There's nothing intuitive about the idea," Criswell said, noting that others have suggested orbiting solar power stations.

"It's a much smaller scale of construction if you do it on the moon."

The primary focus of the Lunar Energy Enterprise Task Force was on bringing lunar helium to burn in fusion reactors.

"When you burn it with deuterium, you do not produce much radioactivity and you can have very high efficiency," Criswell said.

ALTHOUGH SERIOUS people have looked into space resources over the years, private industry still isn't taking the idea seriously because most people don't have the training to appreciate the possibilities, he said.

Even NASA spends only a fraction of its money on such studies, with the result that not much work has been done. The lunar energy task force was the first in 10 years to look at large-scale projects, Criswell said.

"I guess the cost of Apollo scared people and it was used as an excuse" not to press onward, he said.

"Maybe it's like a baby crawling into another room and getting scared and running back to its mama's lap."

Bureaucratic barriers could also have something to do with the lack of progress, he said.

"The Department of Energy does not want to have anything to do with space. NASA does not want anything to do with global energy."

Still, Criswell said he was encouraged by the fact that NASA commissioned the study. In his view, surmounting technological problems is well within reach — what's needed is commitment.

Technological problems aren't the only ones to be solved before space resources can be used.

Uncertainty over political and legal aspects of exploiting space resources has helped create hesitancy. Nobody's really defined the rules. What if future rules are unfavorable to the company that spent billions on a space venture?

To some people, such as the visionary former NASA administrator Thomas Paine, the rules of space exploitation are self-evident.

"You own whatever piece you use, and whatever piece you use you put up the capital contribution to get," Paine said at a recent international conference of space scientists.

"I think that's a relatively straightforward economic question. The more difficult question is, what language are we going to speak on Mars?"

JUST 10 years ago, however, hordes of political goblins came out in the debate over the "Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies," commonly known as the "Moon Treaty."

Proponents said the Moon Treaty was a step toward setting up a framework in space for protecting the rights of nations and equitably dividing resources among everybody — something man has never quite managed to agree how to do on Earth.

Opponents, including heavyweight U.S. industrial interests, said the treaty would stifle space development by inscribing political uncertainty on the industrialization cards.

As of Dec. 31, 1988, only Australia, Austria, Chile, the Netherlands, Pakistan, the Philippines and Uruguay had ratified the Moon Treaty.

"It was not a very good treaty," said Arnold, the California Space Institute director.

Although the Moon Treaty was tagged as a radical Third World attempt to redistribute wealth, it was basically an attempt to implement an earlier agreement, the "Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, Including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies."

The Outer Space Treaty, as it is called, identified the heavens as the "province of all mankind," to be developed "for the benefit and in the interests of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development."

THE AGREEMENT also gave signators free access to space installations and outlawed military installations and weapons testing on the moon and other bodies.

Signed by most nations, including the United States and the Soviet Union, the Outer Space Treaty borrowed heavily from an earlier agreement that made Antarctica an international scientific preserve.

The Moon Treaty was an attempt to bring those lofty principles down to earth, so to speak.

The treaty called for negotiations to set up an international regime to ensure the orderly, safe development, rational management and "equitable sharing" of space resources. It said nations could take steps to prevent others from disrupting the existing environmental balance of the moon and other bodies.

It also contained a new concept, one used in the similarly ill-fated Law of the Sea Treaty — outer space as the "common heritage of all mankind."

U.S. industrialists were horrified.

Alarmed by the drift of Law of the Sea Treaty negotiations over oceanic mining rights, powerful interests such as the American Mining Congress and United Technologies protested that the Moon Treaty would open the way for Third World countries to use a one-nation, one-vote international regime to finagle legally binding ways of turning the "common heritage" concept into "common control."

Supporters of the treaty argued that an international regime could actually help give legal protection to U.S. interests if the "free access" to installations guaranteed in the earlier Outer Space Treaty got out of hand.

But enough concerns were raised to prompt then-President Jimmy Carter to consign the treaty to further study — and it was soon forgotten.

International effort utilizes zoos to help preserve world's ecosystem

By SUE REILLY
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Michael Dee and the L.A. Gaurs is not a rock group.

They are a zookeeper and two cows — part of an international plan to save the ecosystem.

Today, the gaurs — wild oxen native to India, Burma and the Malay Peninsula — are in their new home in the Melaka Zoo, on the southwest coast of Malaysia.

The young gaurs were packed up in individual crates and taken to Los Angeles International Airport for the 48-hour trip by air and land to Southeast Asia.

Although born in the United States, the gaurs have returned to the home of their ancestors.

"We aren't exactly going to be traveling light," joked Dee of his precious cargo before the journey.

Dee's joke had a skittish edge to it.

"I get nervous every time we have to move animals from country to country, even though I know it's for the best," he said. "It doesn't matter how big the animals are — and these oxen are about 1,000 pounds each — they are very fragile. Accidents can happen. You don't relax until they are safely in their new habitat."

AFTER SPENDING time at the Melaka Zoo, helping to get the two gaurs settled, Dee and Briscoe will head home with two new acquisitions in the Air Malaysia cargo department.

Two orphan elephants, which were rescued from the Malaysian wilds, are being brought back to the Los Angeles Zoo.

The animals, which weigh between 1,800 and 2,000 pounds, will be raised in the protected environment of the zoo.

Dee said this big-time animal airlifting is the result of three factors:

- The devastation of the natural environment of many animals.
- International concern over the survival of many species.
- The cooperation among hundreds of individuals, organizations and institutions — like the Los Angeles Zoo and other zoos worldwide — that are fighting for species survival.

Warren Thomas, L.A. Zoo director, said there are some powerful organizations in operation working to halt species extinction.

"The Los Angeles Zoo is a member of the Switzerland-based International Union for the Conservation of Nature that has committees overseeing the welfare of almost every known animal species in the world," said Thomas, who is on the international committee overseeing the African rhinoceros.

The zoo is also a member of the World Wildlife Fund, the International Species Inventory and the Species Survival Program, all of which keep members informed as to where animals are at surplus or needed, Thomas added.

"The transfer of the gaurs and the elephants are an example of how our participation in these organizations works for the benefit of the various species," Thomas said.

ALMOST FIVE years ago, Thomas was attending a committee meeting on the African rhino in Kuala Lumpur, home country of the committee chairman, Mohammad Khan.

"I mentioned that the L.A. Zoo would be looking for Asian elephants, and Khan said that was serendipitous. There were surplus elephants in Malaysia."

The elephants were dying from lack of grazing land and being killed by poachers when they strayed into agricultural lands, Khan told him.

The paperwork and red tape took years, but, next week, the elephants, accompanied by Dee and Briscoe, will arrive in Los Angeles.

Shipping the gaurs the other way was just coincidence, Dee said.

"The gaur is also threatened in Malaysia by lack of proper grazing land," Dee said. "In fact, they are almost extinct there.

"The Malaysians have some animals in captivity, but the gaurs are not breeding well in the zoo atmosphere, whereas our gaurs seem to do well in the zoo environment," Dee continued. He said the Los Angeles Zoo has a surplus.

"We offered to send them a male and female, which we did a while back, and, now, these two young females will complete our assistance program."

He added that the original Malaysian gaurs will be put in a more natural environment, where it is hoped they will breed. Eventually, they will be turned loose in protected areas of the national park system in Malaysia.

Both Thomas and Dee feel strongly about their species-survival work.

"THESE ANIMALS were not put on the planet for our pleasure, but as part of our very delicate ecosystem in which each plant and animal has its place. We destroy the system, and we eventually destroy ourselves."

Animals flown worldwide in jumbo jets

By SUE REILLY
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — So, how do you feel about sharing your airliner with a couple of 2,000-pound elephants?

Feel better about tigers?

How about rhinos?

If you fly commercially, you may already have been flying with the animals and never knew it.

According to a Lufthansa Airlines spokesman, certain 747s, called "combis," are routinely divided in the passenger compartment so the front part of the plane carries passengers and the back end — with the seats taken out — holds large animals in crates.

A partition is put in place so passengers never know.

In fact, carriers with combis — most of them foreign-based — are not eager for you to know what they are packing in that back compartment.

"Some people might get a little worried if they find out that there is a large or exotic animal or animals traveling in the back of the plane," said Joe Zucker, Lufthansa public relations manager, U.S.A. West.

Zucker emphatically added there never has been a mishap with the animals and that none has died or gotten loose from its crate or in any way threatened the lives of passengers or endangered themselves.

Still, there are those who — knowing they were sharing a plane with 15 orangutans — might worry about some serious monkey business. Like, where would the peanuts go?

Or, with a couple of elephants, that the plane might be rear-end heavy and never get off the ground.

Or, with a tiger, that you might be dinner instead of being served one.

Zucker said most U.S. carriers do not mix people and big pets. A spokesman for American Airlines agreed, adding it carries large animals in special cargo planes that are pressurized and able to meet specific standards for carrying the beasts safely.

But Zucker is proud of Lufthansa's record in animal airlifting.

"We have flown the Lipizzaners from the Spanish Riding School in Vienna all over the world. We have flown countless animals out of Africa to zoos in the United States.

"We have carried countless animals from all over the world to the San Diego Zoo. We have carried million-dollar horses to races around the world, and show horses from all over to Los Angeles and Seoul for the Olympics in 1984 and 1988.

"We've flown rhinos and elephants out of Zimbabwe to the States, and 15 orangutans from Malay to the U.S.

"Never a mishap," Zucker said.

62 killed as Aoun's forces battle Lebanese militia

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rival Christian forces fought from house to house under raining shells today in a showdown for control of Lebanon's Christian enclave. Police said at least 62 people had been killed and 216 wounded.

Hundreds of thousands of civilians huddled in basements and bomb shelters with dwindling water supplies as troops loyal to renegade Gen. Michel Aoun fought for a third day with militiamen of the Lebanese Forces.

Christian radio stations said a new cease-fire, the third in 24 hours, was called for 9 a.m. in response to renewed Vatican appeals.

But shellfire and bursts of gunfire persisted in Beirut's burning Christian sector well after the truce deadline, although police reported a slight decrease in hostilities that allowed some casualties to be evacuated.

Conflicting victory claims made it difficult to determine who held the upper hand in the fighting, which left fires raging out of control and morgues packed with bodies.

Lebanese Forces commander Samir Geagea blamed the confrontation on Aoun's "power lust," and Aoun blamed the United States.

"America has engineered this collision, but we shall surmount it soon," Aoun said in a statement on his television station. He did not elaborate.

The U.S. State Department Wednesday said Aoun should step down.

"Gen. Aoun must realize that his bellicose behavior does not advance the interests of the Christians or any other community but only benefits those who want to see Lebanon continue in anarchy and turmoil," the State Department said. "We reiterate our call for Gen. Aoun to step aside and to do it now."

The fighting in the Christian zone was the worst since February 1989, when Aoun's 20,000 troops last moved against the 6,000-strong Lebanese Forces. More than 80 people were killed and 200 wounded in that four-day conflict.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Firefighters put out engine blaze on ferry

LONDON (AP) — Firefighters airlifted to a ferry in the Irish Sea put out an engine room blaze Wednesday and the vessel, carrying 285 passengers and crew, was towed to port, the coast guard said.

No injuries were reported, and passengers remained on board rather than be evacuated by helicopter, said Sealink U.K. Ltd., the ship's owner.

The fire was extinguished by 14 firefighters who were airlifted by three helicopters to the 8,000-ton ferry, the St. Columba.

"It was quickly contained, the fire, fortunately," said a spokesman for Sealink, speaking anonymously in keeping with British custom.

The 385-foot-long ferry drifted without engine power in gale-force winds 12 miles off the Welsh coast before a tugboat arrived and towed it to the port of Holyhead. A coast guard lifeboat and helicopters escorted the vessels.

Saudi embassy officials die

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Gunmen killed three employees of the Saudi Arabian Embassy today, shooting one in an apartment near the embassy and the other two in a car they were driving nearby, officials said.

Police said all three victims were male Saudi nationals who worked in the embassy's visa section. They apparently had diplomatic status.

One or more gunmen entered the apartment near the embassy compound in central Bangkok and killed one of the employees, police sources said.

At about the same time, gunmen shot and killed the other two employees as they were driving an embassy car about half a mile away, near a residence of the Iranian Embassy, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The interior minister, Banharn Silpa-archa, said an undetermined number of gunmen worked in two teams and coordinated the attacks.

Police said the diplomat shot in the apartment was a second secretary named Abdullah A. Al-Besri. They identified the other two victims as Faha A. Albahli and Ahmed A. Alsaif, and said they worked as assistants to Al-Basri.

Haitian exiles can return

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Lt. Gen Prosper Avril says the political leaders he exiled last month in a crackdown on the democratic opposition are now free to return and take part in free elections he's promised for October.

"I hope they have learned their lesson," Haiti's military ruler told a news conference Wednesday at the National Palace. Two days earlier, he had lifted a 10-day state of siege.

When the emergency was declared on Jan. 20, police rounded up 50 opposition activists. Seven leading government critics were exiled. Most of the others later were released but said they were beaten, as did the exiles.

France, the United States, Canada and the European Community condemned the crackdown. France, a former colonial ruler and Haiti's major donor, suspended foreign aid and negotiations for $500 million more in assistance over the next two years.

Avril said Wednesday that the crackdown was necessary "to work rapidly to disarm" subversives.

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI

THE LIFE OF A BRAKE PAD

Dear Tom and Ray:

I am perplexed by my 1986 Acura Integra. I had the front brakes relined at 13,000 miles and the rear brakes done at 29,000 miles. Each time, it cost me $159. It is my contention that brakes pads should not have to be replaced that soon. Please help me to understand this situation. — Theodora

RAY: Mileage is not really a good predictor of brake life. The lifespan of a set of brakes is more closely related to how frequently and how strenuously they're used. A car driven by a wimpy driver like my brother, for instance, could go tens of thousands of miles without ever needing brakes — especially if it's only driven on the driveway ... er, I mean highway.

TOM: On the other hand, a car driven in city traffic by a nutcake like my brother — racing between stoplights — could easily need brakes after only 13,000 miles.

RAY: Are you the kind of person who sleeps late and then has to zoom through traffic to get to work on time? Is your secret desire to be a New York City cab driver or a pizza deliverer? These personality traits are better indicators of brake life expectancy than mileage.

TOM: But 13,000 is on the low side of the "brake replacement range." And it's our opinion that Honda and Acura brakes do wear out somewhat faster than other manufacturers'. The Integra could probably use heavier duty brakes, but a lighter duty foot on your part will do even more to extend the intervals between brake jobs.

Dear Tom and Ray:

We recently purchased a 1989 Chevrolet Celebrity with a V-6 engine. The engine is quiet at idle, but when we accelerate, we hear a humming or light groaning. The Chevy service manager's advice is "don't concentrate on the noise." He says we are making something out of nothing. What do you think? — Robert

TOM: The noises you refer to are heard in many Celebrities. When the car is running well, you hear the owner humming. This humming quickly turns to groaning when the car starts running poorly.

RAY: Actually, my guess is that the sound you're hearing is coming from the transmission. The GM transmission used in this car exhibits a lot of "growl," particularly on hard acceleration and particularly in low gear. If none of your neighbors has been missing a small dog, the growl probably is transmission noise. GM ought to improve it, but your service manager may be right when he says that they all do that.

TOM: Go back and ask the dealer to let you drive another new Celebrity. If you hear the same noise, you're out of luck; it means they really are all like that. If you don't hear the noise, insist that they fix your car. If they still refuse, contact the Chevrolet zone office in your region and see if you can get the zone manager to intervene on your behalf.

RAY: And if our advice turns out to be faulty, Robert, just don't concentrate on it.
