Tension mounts for final campaign days

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

The long presidential campaign entered its final hectic days today with Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale unleashing a television advertising blitz and President Reagan invading traditionally Democratic strongholds in a bid to lock up a landslide re-election.

Mondale doggedly insisted Wednesday that "we can win this thing" despite his own campaign polls that say he is 16 to 18 points behind the president with only four days until Election Day.

Campaign aides said the Mondale polling indicated no trend in his direction in the past several days.

Mondale's running mate, Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, echoed his upbeat message today when she told an early morning rally in Cincinnati: "We are now in the homestretch of this campaign. We're not only going to win, we're going to prove to Americans that we are not a selfish, self-satisified people."

The New York congresswoman added, "And we're going to prove one more thing — that the polls are wrong."

Following material embargoed for noon, EST.

Reagan opened his final 10-state campaign trip in Boston where he hoped to solidify his support in traditionally Democratic Massachusetts and also give a boost to Republican Senate candidate Raymond Shamie.

At a City Hall rally, the president planned to ignore Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's demand that he stop invoking the name of John F. Kennedy in campaign speeches.

In his prepared remarks, Reagan said he was a Democrat once, when the party's "leaders were men like Harry Truman — and later, men like Scoop Jackson and John F. Kennedy — men who understood the challenges of the times."

Kennedy's name had disappeared for a time from the president's oft-recited list of his heroes after Mondale uncovered a letter Reagan had written in 1960 comparing Kennedy's economic program to those of the Communists and Nazis.

End embargoed material

The president also was reading the polls, and he told workers at his national campaign headquarters in Washington on Wednesday:

"I go to bed at night and my last thought is: What if everybody is reading the polls and isn't going to bother to vote?"

Reagan campaign spokesman James Lake also sought to dampen expectations that a presidential landslide would trigger major Republican gains in Congress.

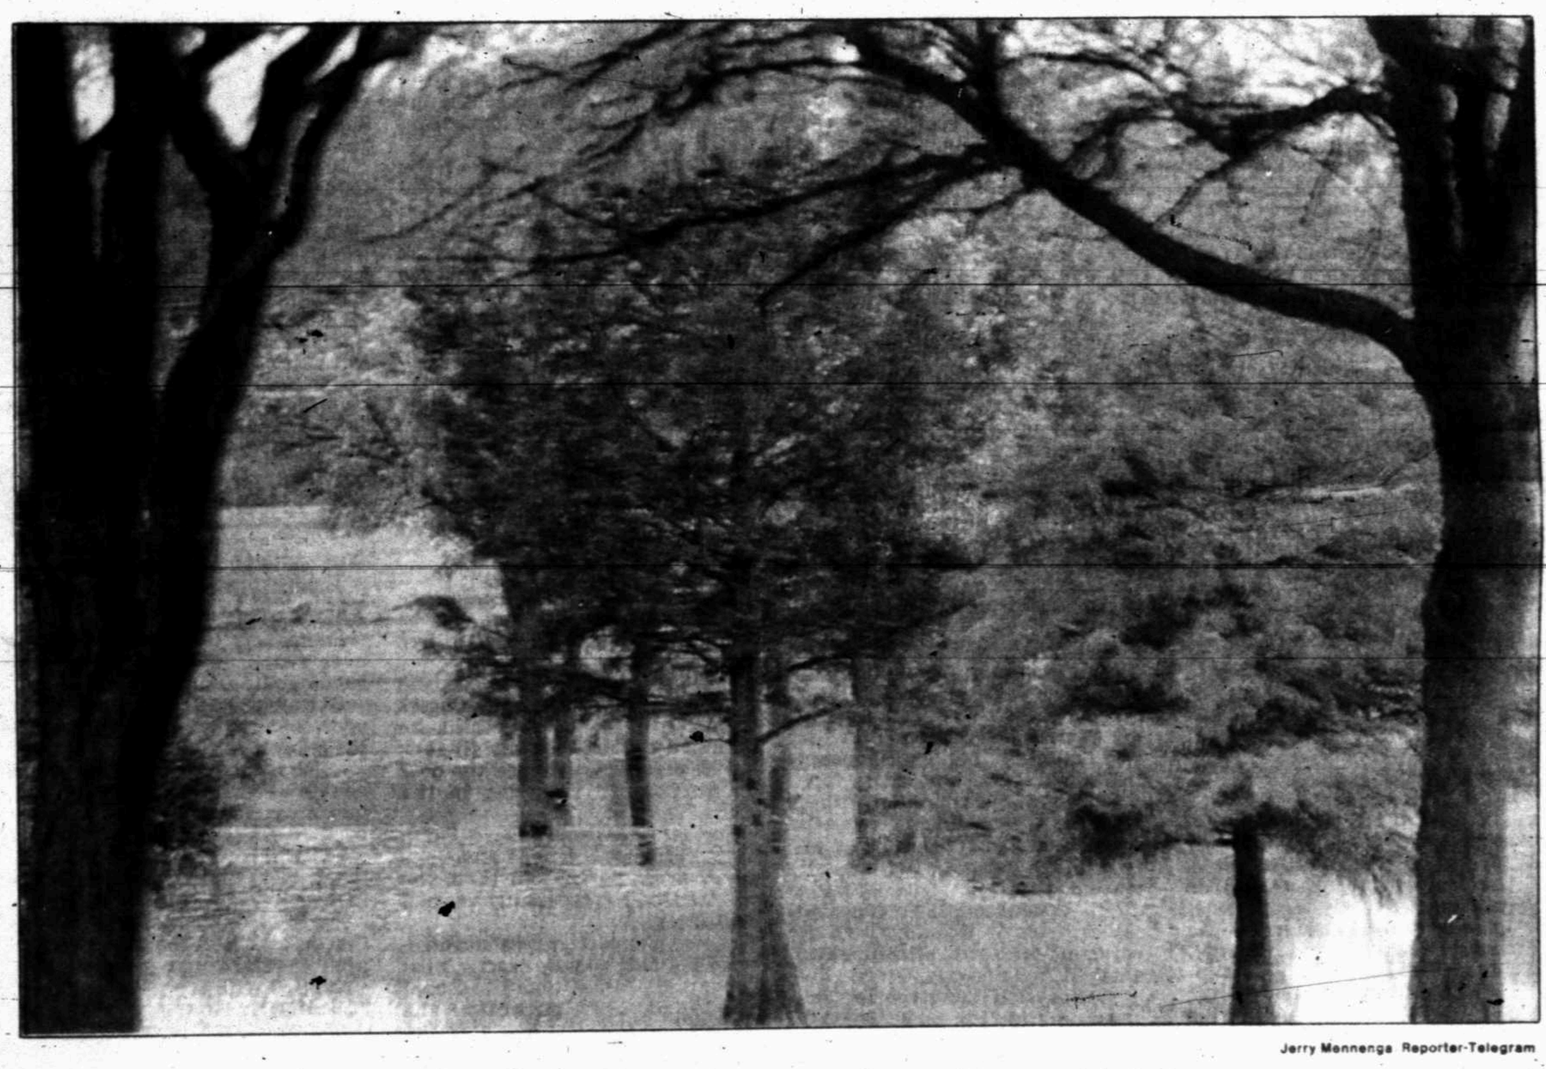

Lake told reporters traveling with the president that campaign officials would not be surprised to see the Democrats gain two Senate seats.

The final days of the campaign will see both presidential candidates appearing in Massachusetts, New York, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa and California.

Reagan also planned stops in Arkansas, Missouri and Wisconsin. Mondale was also scheduled to visit Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and Texas before returning to his Minnesota home Monday night.

Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro was campaigning today in Cincinnati before joining Mondale in New York City, then flying West to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and Los Angeles.

Vice President Geroge Bush was campaigning in New York before traveling to Toledo.

Rioting follows Gandhi killing

By STEPHEN R. WILSON

NEW DELHI, India — Vengeance-seeking Hindus set fires and beat up Sikhs across northern India today, venting their fury over the assassination of Indira Gandhi by two of her Sikh guards. At least 50 people reportedly were killed and hundreds injured nationwide.

Authorities ordered a 24-hour curfew in New Delhi and 15 other cities. Police in some places were given shoot-to-kill orders against the mobs and troops were summoned to the capital from neighboring states.

The United News of India said more than 60 people were killed nationwide. Hospital sources in New Delhi told police more than 50 people were killed and 600 injured in the capital alone.

The only government casualty estimate came from Home Secretary M.M.K. Wali, who told reporters nine people had been confirmed killed throughout India.

Despite pleas for calm from Mrs. Gandhi's son and successor, Rajiv Gandhi, the estimated crowd of 600,000 mourners filing past the flag-draped body of the slain prime minister in New Delhi became so unruly that police threw tear gas to restore order.

Mrs. Gandhi died Wednesday after being shot by two of her guards, authorities have said. The United News of India said she was shot 22 times.

Police in Punjab state arrested relatives and friends of the two Sikh guards, United News of India reported. One of the accused guards, constable Satwant Singh, was killed by other security men, and the second, sub-inspector Beant Singh, was wounded, authorities have said. A third guard, who did not fire, was arrested. He has not been identified.

Satwant Singh's father, two sisters and three brothers were detained in Gurdaspur district, 280 miles northwest of New Delhi, the news agency said. Two of his friends also were reported arrested.

Police arrested Beant Singh's father and three brothers in a village outside the northern Indian city of Chandigarh, UNI said. Police found Beant Singh's New Delhi house locked and neighbors said he had sent his family away five days before the assassination, according to the new agency.

The backlash in cities with Sikh populations was part of a surge of rioting, arson and looting by mobs of Hindus seeking revenge for the killing of the 66-year-old Mrs. Gandhi. The mobs burned Sikh-owned businesses, cars and buses, and beat Sikh men they found in the open.

There was a two-hour exchange of gunfire today between police and a "large group of people" in a building near the Home Ministry in New Delhi.

Deposition testimony of Smith's ex-wife revealed

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The former wife of Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith testified late last week in Dallas that Smith did not hit or physically abuse her, cause her to suffer a miscarriage or to be hospitalized while they were married.

However, she testified there was one incident in which he physically injured her after their divorce, although she said she believed it was not intentional.

In a sworn deposition taken last Thursday, Gail Ellen Commagere answered questions posed by Smith's attorney, Thomas Sims:

Q. "...Until you were divorced in 1982 — did Dallas Smith ever use any physical force on you?

A. Like hitting me?

Q. Well, let's start with hitting you. Did he ever hit you?

A. Not while we were married.

Q. Well, did he physically abuse you in any way while you were married?

A. Not while we were married.

Q. Did Dallas Smith ever cause you to have a miscarriage?

Editorial, Page 8A

A. No.

Q. Have you ever had a miscarriage?

A. No.

Q. Did Dallas cause you to be hospitalized for a two-to-three month period during the time you all were married?

A. No."

The deposition was taken as sworn testimony to be presented as evidence in a $4 million slander suit Smith filed last spring against Midland Police Chief Wayne Gideon for allegedly spreading rumors that Smith was a wife-beater. Smith charged that the rumors are what caused his defeat in the Republican primary in May.

Gary Painter won the primary by 60.6 percent to 39.4.

Contending Mrs. Commagere's deposition would prove the rumors were false, Smith has been quoted as saying he thought he would win if her statements were made public before Tuesday's election.

Smith told the Reporter-Telegram he and his attorneys had fought hard to have Mrs. Commagere's deposition taken before the election. He first used exerpts from the deposition in political campaign advertisements Wednesday.

When questioned that day about other exerpts of the deposition, of which the Reporter-Telegram has obtained a copy, Smith said the critical questions were resolved and other issues were simply divorce "bitterness."

"I think that this whole thing here boils down to Dallas Smith and his wife had an argument," Smith said Wednesday. "Wayne Gideon tried to embellish that argument and then in addition, when the deposition was taken, a number of items were put in here to try and discredit me.

"We have the angry wife who is mad because she got subpoenaed there to begin with, who tried to evade the subpoena and we're talking about things here that have nothing to do with the lawsuit, with what I did to (the former) Gail Mabee or not — it seems like that whole thing is lost," Smith said.

Colleges unite for passage of Amendment Two

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the seventh in an eight-part series looking at local contested races and the eight constitutional amendments. This seventh part deals with Amendment Two.

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Public colleges and universities in Texas often are competitive, yet all are united in seeking voter approval Tuesday of Proposition Two — a constitutional amendment to provide financing for all state-supported colleges and universities.

Proposition Two would establish a $100 million annual fund for all institutions outside the University of Texas and Texas A&M University systems while broadening participation in the bonding program of the Permanent University Fund (PUF) to include all UT and A&M units.

Developed as a compromise and passed overwhelmingly by the Texas Legislature in 1983, the proposal has been endorsed by the governing boards of all state-supported colleges and universities, the Texas College Coordinating Board, the Texas Student Association and the Republican and Democratic parties.

The resolution calls for restructuring the PUF, a $2 billion endowment derived from oil, gas and ranching leases on public lands, to include all components of the UT and A&M systems.

Presently, three components of the Texas A&M System and two of the University of Texas System benefit from PUF monies.

The proposal also would create a special higher education assistance fund to finance classroom needs at 26 Texas colleges and universities that do not share in the PUF.

Election '84

According to UT System Chancellor E. Don Walker, "If the amendment doesn't pass, you have eight U.T. institutions, one at A&M and 17 state-supported universities without any dedicated source of funds for capital improvements, for libraries, computers and so forth. There will be no money for this unless it comes from a direct appropriation through the legislature."

Adding emphasis to his support of the measure, Walker said, "If it doesn't pass, we will have serious problems within higher education in Texas.... Texas has the opportunity to raise the quality of education at every institution in the state."

Dr. Lauro F. Cavazos, president of Texas Tech University, praised the far-reaching effects of Proposition Two on universities outside the PUF.

"The dedicated fund (for non-PUF schools) would do far more than assure necessary construction, repair and maintenance that protects this state's large capital investments on college and university campuses," Cavazos said. "It is a fund essential for the necessary growth of library resources and the purchase of equipment and computer systems that undergird delivery of high quality academic programs important to all Texans."

Passage of Proposition Two will enable the state to provide its universities with tools to compete nationally for the best students and teachers, essential elements in attracting high-tech industry and investments, said Dr. Charles E. Bishop, president of the University of Houston.

"Research and scientific development have never been more important to the future of our country than at present," Bishop said. "It is essential that our colleges and universities improve our educational programs to provide the talent which will be needed and the knowledge that is necessary for the continued growth and development of our economy."

According to Steve Collins, an attorney representing the Texas Legislative Council, some members of the legislature oppose Proposition Two, claiming the need for dedicated construction funding for all universities is past. The original amendment was adopted by voters to handle the enrollment increases following World War II. Opponents say enrollment for the 1980s is predicted to stabilize or decline.

WEATHER SUMMARY

National Weather Service NOAA, U S Dept of Commerce

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts showers for Friday from Texas to the Northeast and for the Pacific coast and northern mountains.

Cool temperatures can be expected in Permian Basin

Temperatures will cool in the Midland area through Friday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Tonight's 20-percent chance of thunderstorms will be accompanied by lows near 40 and northerly winds at five to 10 mph.

Forecasters predict Friday's high to be in the upper 60s with continuing partly cloudy skies. Winds will shift to the east at five to 10 mph.

Friday's high of 78 was 11 degrees below the record set in 1934. The low of 62 recorded this morning was 31 degrees above the record set in 1972.

STATE

A strong cold air mass bore down on Texas today, with heavy thunderstorms predicted to accompany it over North, Central and East Texas.

Thunderstorms with heavy rains and strong gusty winds broke out before dawn from the Permian Basin to the Red River, with more expected as the cold air mass moved into the state.

The National Weather Service said severe weather could be triggered by the clash of three air masses over North Texas today — moisture from the Gulf of Mexico, the polar air mass moving into the state from the northern Rockies, and very dry air from the Mexican Plateau moving into the state from New Mexico. A strong upper air disturbance was expected.

The Weather Service said flash flooding could be a threat with rainfall as heavy as 3 to 5 inches in East Texas, including as far south as the Houston area, where the ground has not absorbed last week's rains.

Winds of 15 to 25 mph were forecast, shifting to the north with the approach of the colder air.

The forecast called for highs in the 50s in the High Plains to the upper 80s in South Texas, but readings were expected to drop by 20 to 25 degrees in northern parts of the state by sunset.

Temperatures are expected to drop into the 30s tonight in the north and the 60s in the south, with highs on Friday in the 50s in the north to near 70 south. Mostly cloudy skies are forecast for Friday.

Early this morning, most of Texas reported low clouds and fog as a southerly wind 10 to 20 mph drew moisture inland from the Gulf. Only the northern Panhandle and western Trans-Pecos sections reported clear skies.

NATION

Bitter cold gripped Montana and North Dakota today, winter storms threatened Minnesota and Washington state, and springlike conditions that spawned tornadoes in the Midwest set up the chance of widespread thunderstorms.

A tornado tossed house trailers as it ripped through a mobile home park in Carbondale, Kan., Wednesday, killing two people and injuring 10 others. Tornadoes also hit Oklahoma, where the National Weather Service said as many as three twisters damaged houses and vehicles, but caused no reported injuries.

Temperatures fell to below zero over much of eastern Montana and northwest North Dakota this morning.

The extreme northwest portion of Minnesota was under a winter storm warning and travelers' advisories were issued for the remainder of northern Minnesota, where freezing rain and gusty winds hampered driving.

The eastern half of Washington state was under a winter storm watch, with up to 8 inches of snow predicted in valleys and as much as a foot forecast for the east slopes of the Cascades. Elsewhere, rain moved inland from the Washington coast.

Late tornado tears through Kansas

By BILL VOGRIN
Associated Press Writer

CARBONDALE, Kan. — An unusual late-season tornado tossed and tumbled house trailers as it ripped through a mobile home park, killing two people and injuring 10 others.

The flurry of fall tornadoes Wednesday also hit Oklahoma, where the National Weather Service said as many as three twisters touched down and damaged houses and vehicles. No injuries were reported.

The twister that struck this eastern Kansas town Wednesday night gave residents little time to react.

"It happened so quickly it would make your head swim," said Mildred Boyer, 79, owner of the Mineral Springs Trailer Court in this town about 10 miles south of Topeka. "It got still. It got dead hot. It seemed like it came right down and dropped."

The tornado killed a middle-aged man who was found buried under debris, and killed a woman whose trailer home just outside the mobile home park was demolished, said Osage County Sheriff Robert Masters. The names of the victims were being withheld until relatives could be notified.

The 10 people injured at the mobile home park were treated at the scene for minor cuts, bruises and shock, said Osage County ambulance squad director Tony Bell.

Masters said he did not know the extent of the damage to the 16-trailer court, but said at least five of the homes were extensively damaged.

The weather service reported several tornadoes near Seiling and Chester in northwest Oklahoma.

"We may be talking about only one tornado, possibly two or as many as three in the same general area," said Mike Branick, a forecaster with the weather service.

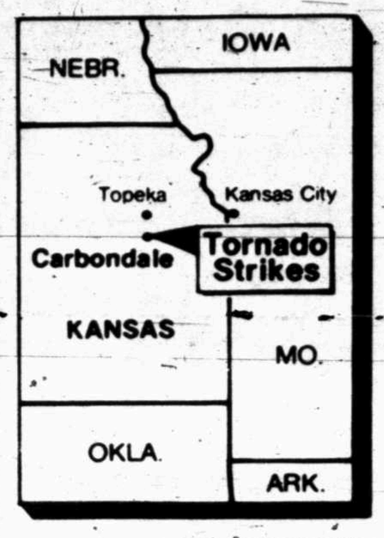

At least one home in Chester was destroyed, but its occupants escaped injury as the house collapsed around them, police said.

In Carbondale, Ray Barnes said he had been taking a shower and his friend, Tanya Pearson, had been watching television when the tornado struck.

Barnes said he ran from the bathroom to the bedroom and dived under the bed, while Ms. Pearson grabbed onto a couch.

The trailer was turned over repeatedly by the twister. Barnes ended up on top of his bed on a pile of debris, while Ms. Pearson found herself sitting in the grass next to the destroyed trailer, he said.

Victims of the tornado were told to go to a school where a relief shelter had been set up.

PBS puts woman face-to-face with hope

By REGINA SEGOVIA
Associated Press

NEDERLAND, Texas — Paula Pruitt Barnhart was born 26 years ago with half a face, the victim of a genetic disorder that left her with no bones in her ears, no outer ear on the left side and no bones or muscles in her jaw. Now, thanks to a Public Broadcasting System program on a team of surgeons that can rebuild faces, she says she has hope for a miracle.

For 24 years she had at least two operations per year, and hope. Hope that the next doctor who operated on her would give her a normal looking face, an ear, jaws that could move her teeth to chew.

"For 24 years they would throw me up on the table, operate and I would go through the pain. And I never got the results I hoped for," Paula said.

"I knew I was odd, but when I went to school and they laughed at me it really hit me that I was ugly. I was six. I ran home and cried all the way. My mother told me to tell kids that this was just the way God made me. She promised me that she would do everything she could to fix it. So every time I went in to have an operation I had hope. But each time it was never what I hoped for."

It was less than two years ago that Paula finally gave up her quest for a normal face. She had found a man to marry her. "We met in a bar, and you know it's dark in bars and he really couldn't see me."

At some angles it is difficult to pinpoint what it is about Paula's face that is different. Her long feathery blond hair hides the scars and the missing ear on one side. But if you look closely at her jaw you can see a slackness and notice it really has no muscle tone.

When she talks her mouth moves from side to side instead of up and down. It was the off balanced face that she said her husband, James, saw when they met in daylight. "We had a really long talk about it." But he didn't call her for two weeks.

"I was so depressed. I had been living in Houston for eight months and I was alone. I cried and thought he would never call again," she said. Finally, he called her back.

"Later he told me he had to really think about it. He didn't want to get into the relationship at first. He was just recently divorced and he was taking on a big responsibility."

Paula was pregnant before she learned her disease was genetic, that there was a 50 percent chance of passing it to her unborn child. She says she and her husband considered abortion.

When she told her doctor about the pregnancy and asked his advice he told her to go ahead with her life. "He told me he couldn't guarantee the operation anyway. He was very candid about it for the first time. Something snapped and I thought 'All this time they have just been experimenting on me.'"

For the next months Paula concentrated on her pregnancy. "I was all-consumed with my baby. I was determined to accept what I was, even though it gets harder for me to eat all the time. I can't chew my food. But I concentrated on being a mother and worrying about how he would come out. He was healthy and right after he was born I had my tubes tied. I just couldn't see taking that risk again."

Her sister, Charla, is a striking contrast of health. She looks younger, rosier, and is not scarred on the outside. But her concern for Paula dates back to high school. "Here I was going to all the dances. Paula never was asked. Finally when she was a senior she had her first boyfriend. It was hard, really hard to watch that happening to your sister."

When Charla saw a television program on public television that depicted the work of a team of Boston doctors that rebuild faces, she was ecstatic. "I jumped up and down. I saw little children that looked like Paula did in school and after they operated they looked normal. It was a miracle."

The entire family watched a rerun of the program during a Christmas dinner. Shortly after the program Paula called the Boston team and her medical records were mailed the next day. Two months after that she was sitting on a stool in the middle of a horseshoe-shaped collection of 20 doctors who discussed what could be done. "There were bone specialists, muscle specialists, ear specialists all talking about what could be done and in a very caring way."

Finally they offered her several options, operations that could to varying degrees help her.

"I think the show was called 'Everybody Deserves a Face,'" she said. "I just want the chance to be normal. They didn't promise anything, but they did say that what they wanted to do was very predictable. They said I could have one of them, or all of them. There was nothing pushy about it."

In July, Paula received a letter from The Children's Hospital in Boston's Craniofacial Clinic outlining how they planned to construct bones in her lower jaw, remove the deteriorating chin implant and advance her chin and redrape the soft tissue over the lower jaw.

They said they would also, in a second operation, be able to reconstruct her outer ear. Insurance will pay for most of the medical costs associated with the operation. But Paula, and at least one relative, will have to stay in Boston for a week after her week's stay in the hospital. She will have steel pins in her face and her teeth will be wired closed.

Money for the flight, the room, food and living expenses is what Charla hopes to raise for her sister. "We are hoping some of our old friends from Nederland High School will come to a dance for Paula. We plan to have the Blackwater Band at the Nederland Knights of Columbus Hall and if we can fill it up Paula will be set," she said. The dance is set for Nov. 9.

Charla also had an account set up in Paula's name at the Allied Nederland Bank for donations.

Reagan offices bombed

Associated Press

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — A explosion apparently caused by Molotov cocktail ripped a hole in the front of the Reagan-Bush headquarters early today, about 10 hours before President Reagan was scheduled to visit the city, police said.

The blast broke a hole about 1 foot wide and 2 feet high in the plate glass panel next to the front door, but caused no injuries or damage to the interior of the storefront headquarters, Rochester Police Capt. Art Reynolds said.

Police were called to the scene and saw the smoldering device explode while they watched from across the street, Reynolds said.

A witness, who called police, said that a person was seen fleeing from the site of the explosion, Reynolds said.

Reynolds said from the basis of the remains and the witness report, the device appeared to be a plastic container filled with gasoline inside a paper bag with a slow-burning wick.

"It looks like someone lit a Molotov cocktail," Reynolds said. The blast was reported about 4:25 a.m.

Michael Tarr, a spokesman for the Secret Service in Washington, said the incident would have no effect on Reagan's scheduled trip.

COLLEGES

Opponents also argue that constitutionally dedicated funding unnecessarily limits the legislative discretion to appropriate funds to specified purposes even though the need may not exist in the future, Collins said.

Under the current appropriations system, at least 12 institutions have received funds since 1956. Estimates indicate the amendment dedicates twice as much as is needed.

In addition, opposing factors claim the restructuring of the PUF may be agreeable in concept but the execution of the amendment is faulty. The amendment authorizes the legislature to expand the institutions eligible to benefit from the PUF bonds; that open door may eventually jeopardize the fund's ability to support the two leading institutions, Texas A&M and the University of Texas as genuine, nationally recognized institutions of the first class, Collins noted.

TESTIMONY

According to the deposition, Mrs. Commagere said an incident took place Nov. 6, 1982, in which Smith, in front of their three children, held her at arm's length around the neck and "taunted" her with a beeper that would summon police.

Gideon, who was present with his attorneys at Mrs. Commagere's deposition, said the transcript "is as I recall." He declined further comment.

Mrs. Commagere, who remarried and is living in Roanoke with her children, has an unlisted phone number. Her attorney, George Kolb of Dallas, told the Reporter-Telegram, "unless the court reporter made an error, it's accurate."

Mrs. Commagere, while questioned by William R. Moss, Gideon's attorney, said she was alone at her house when Smith returned their children after a visit. She testified she was standing outside when Smith told her he wanted "to show me what a financial bind I had put him in, and that I was going to sit there and listen to it."

She testified she asked him to leave, he refused and "grabbed my arm" and "drug me" into the house.

Q. "What took place, then, as you got to the house?

A. That's when he just kind of...that's when he held me by the throat and got my little beeper, and was...

Q. Describe for me what you mean by him holding you by the throat?

A. Well, he just got a hold of me like this (indicating), with his arm out straight.

Q. You are showing his hand around your throat, with his arm out straight?

A: Yeah. Then he had the beeper in the other hand."

Testimony indicated the incident took place in a hall and Smith had gotten the beeper from a closet.

Q. "Why did he get out the beeper, do you know?

A. He was just teasing me.

Q. What did he do with it?

A. He held it to where I could nearly get it, and sat there and said, 'Push it, push it, push it,' and I finally did manage to push it.

Q. I see. Was this taunting you in some way? You say 'teasing.'

A. Yeah, I guess 'taunting' is a better word."

She testified she was frightened and the children were screaming and crying during the 5-to-10 minute long incident.

Q. "What was he saying during this period of time?

A. Well, at one point he screamed to me to go get the gun he had given me, and shoot him, because he knew that's what I wanted to do. And then...and just irrational statements like that."

Mrs. Commagere said she could not remember whether "he let go of my throat, or I just ran," but as she went through the front door, Smith either slammed or kicked the door closed, smashing her fingers.

In response to questions posed by Thomas Sims, Smith's attorney, Mrs. Commagere said Smith was remorseful about hurting her and that he did not "intentionally" slam her hand in the door.

"He slammed the door to keep me in there. He didn't know my fingers were there. No. I don't think he slammed the door on my fingers, but he definitely slammed the door on purpose to keep me in the house," she said.

Further statements indicate Smith helped bandage her hand and when police arrived, she told them the children had accidentally pushed the beeper.

"I told police it was a mistake, because I didn't know exactly what they could do. Last time I had used the beeper on him, before the divorce was final, he had gone out there and told the police there was nothing they could do, that he lived there," she said. "And besides, I was upset, and I didn't want any more hassle in front of the kids, so he left me alone."

According to the deposition, Mrs. Commagere had first contacted Gideon after an earlier incident in which Smith had refused to leave while they were separated. When police responded to her beeper signal, they were told by Smith that they couldn't make him leave because he was the sheriff and he lived there, she said.

Mrs. Commagere said she called Gideon to apologize for pushing the beeper if the police couldn't take action and she "told him I didn't know exactly when to use it."

"Were you scared at that time?" Moss asked.

"Yes, sort of, because I had never seen him look so 'hateful,' I guess is the word," she said.

Gideon told her to use the beeper anytime she was frightened, she testified.

Mrs. Commagere said she first heard of rumors that Smith beat her in 1976, when Smith won his first term as sheriff.

When asked by Moss, she said she heard about them from her husband:

"Well, Dallas, himself, told me one time; then, I had a friend ask me if it was true."

"What did Mr. Smith tell you about it?" Moss asked.

"He just told me the opposition had started a rumor that he was a wife beater, and we laughed about it at that time."

Who was the opposition at that time?" Moss asked.

"Ed Darnell."

Smith said Wednesday, "I don't ever recall anything about" the rumor going around in 1976.

Other areas of contention addressed in the deposition include the following:

— Mrs. Commagere testified she couldn't remember if Gideon told her to contact the County Attorney to press charges after the incident with her fingers in the door. "I think it was what my lawyer told me, or that was my dad's idea," she said.

Smith said Wednesday, "Wayne Gideon took it to the County Attorney, that's where part of that started. That's where the appearance for the County Attorney began.

"When Wayne Gideon talked to the County Attorney, he represented it as something needed to be done because, afterall, I had caused her to have a miscarriage by a beating previously," Smith said. "That's what (County Attorney) Scott Henderson said."

Gideon declined this morning to comment other than to say, "such accusations are absurd."

— Mrs. Commagere testified that she was aware one of Smith's ex-deputies had sent out a letter to ham radio operators about the turnover rate in the department.

"What would Gail know about turnover in the department?" Smith asked Wednesday. "Why would Gideon's attorneys ask that? Wasn't that a political effort? What other reason would there be to ask her about turnover in the department?"

— Mrs. Commagere said during her testimony the only time she knew of Smith being involved in violence at his department was when he once came home with blood on his clothes. He told her he had hit a prisoner over the head with his pistol.

Smith said Wednesday the incident involved a violent prisoner who already had hospitalized one of Smith's officers. The man attacked a deputy after being arraigned, "and then swirled and kicked me in my thigh," Smith said. "I pulled my gun and hit him up on the side of the head."

Although Mrs. Commagere testified the man's "head was split open," Smith said "it cut him...he had to have, I think, three or four stitches."

Libel decision upheld

EL PASO (AP) — A state district judge has upheld a jury's decision in a libel lawsuit filed against The El Paso Times, ordering the daily newspaper to pay former Assistant U.S. Attorney James Kerr $3.5 million in damages.

The judgment issued Wednesday by State District Judge Edward Marquez also orders The Times to pay Kerr court costs in his case against the newspaper.

In March, a state district court jury awarded Kerr $3 million in punitive damages and $500,000 in actual damages.

Mass to be said honoring slain priest

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland today marks its most solemn holy day with an All Saints' Day Mass by Cardinal Jozef Glemp at a Warsaw cemetery that was expected to draw a large crowd to honor slain pro-Solidarity priest Jerzy Popieluszko.

On the eve of the holiday, an estimated 10,000 worshipers packed Warsaw's St. Stanislaw Kostka Church and the surrounding streets at a Mass for Popieluszko.

The Rev. Aleksander Seniuk told the crowd, which included Popieluszko's parents, that the outspoken priest had become "Solidarity's patron."

"Today Solidarity is handcuffed, but thanks to you, her chaplain, it is free with her soul as never before," said Seniuk, his voice booming over outdoor loudspeakers.

Popieluszko's body was found Tuesday in a reservoir in northern Poland, 11 days after his alleged abduction by three officers of the Polish secret police. An Interior Ministry spokesman said Wednesday the three would likely face murder charges.

The 37-year-old priest was one of the most vocal members of Poland's Roman Catholic clergy in advocating the ideals of Solidarity, the now-outlawed independent labor federation.

All Saints' Day is a national holiday in Poland on which millions of Poles traditionally travel to cemeteries to place flowers and light candles at the graves of loved ones. The day was expected to take on an added significance this year because of Popieluszko's death.

Popieluszko is to be buried Saturday at Powazki Cemetery in Warsaw, following a Mass at St. Stanislaw Kostka, his parish church.

There were no reports of unrest following the announcement that Popieluszko's body had been found, although some former Solidarity activists said they were watching to see whether the government provides a full explanation of the priest's death.

An autopsy was being conducted on Popieluszko's body by government medical experts along with medical and legal observers from the Catholic Church, but there was no indication when the findings would be made public.

Poland's Communist authorities have hinted the killing of the priest might be part of a wider-ranging conspiracy.

Western diplomats said a shuffle in the party ranks was likely in the wake of the slaying, but added that Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski's position seemed secure.

Meanwhile, activists in Warsaw were said to be drawing up plans to form an organization to monitor human rights abuses.

"There is a big call for at least monitoring of the acts of violence or the acts of breaking human rights," said Janusz Onyszkiewicz, Solidarity's former national spokesman, at an informal news conference outside Popieluszko's church Wednesday.

A group of leading intellectuals, educators and workers in the southwestern city of Wroclaw announced Tuesday the formation of a human rights group and said they expected other groups to form around the country following Popieluszko's killing.

The creation of a human rights watchdog group would be the first attempt by the opposition to form a new legal organization following the outlawing of Solidarity in October 1982.

In another development, two Solidarity activists were released from prison Wednesday after serving two-month sentences for taking part in an illegal demonstration.

One of the activists, Jozef Pinior, said in a telephone interview that he and Wladyslaw Frasyniuk were released from prison.

Frasyniuk and Pinior were arrested Aug. 31 during celebrations in Wroclaw marking the fourth anniversary of the creation of the Solidarity free trade union.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Council agrees to increase trade with Latin America

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Communist bloc nations ended an economic conference in Havana with an agreement to increase and diversify trade with Latin America, the official Cuban news agency reported.

Prensa Latina said in dispatches received here that delegates to the three-day Council for Mutual Economic Assistance meeting also pledged Wednesday to develop stronger economic ties with underdeveloped nations in other regions. The council, known as Comecon, is the Eastern bloc's common market.

Cuban President Fidel Castro told delegates the conference had demonstrated the superiority of the communist system.

"This doesn't mean that our system is the leader in all branches of the world economy," Castro was quoted as saying. "The advantage lies in the scientific and economic activity that assures the persistent and stable movement toward development, against the precariousness of the capitalist economic might."

Ten people die in hotel fire

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Fire swept through the midsection of the 15-story Ambassador Hotel early today and officials said 10 people were killed, including four who leaped from high windows.

Most of the dead were Filipinos but three Americans — Wilburt Olsen, 60, and his wife Joanne, 59, of Seattle, Wash., and Harry Jackson, described as an American married to a Filipino — were among 30 people treated for injuries, officials said.

The Olsens, staying on the 10th floor, were reported to have been treated for smoke inhalation, but Jackson was said to be among 11 people still hospitalized.

It was the second fire in a tourist hotel in the Philippines in eight days. Twenty-three people, including eight Americans at a reunion of World War II veterans, were killed in a hotel fire in the northern resort city of Baguio.

Officials said three women, apparently Filipinas, were killed when they leaped from the Ambassador's sixth floor, and a dead Filipino was found on the mezzanine roof. Firemen said the man jumped from the seventh floor. But witnesses said he was trying to climb down a rope of knotted bedsheets when he fell.

A man and a woman, both dead, were found clinging together in a hallway, officials said.

Hotel owner Simeon Chan said about 200 people were in the building, in Manila's Ermita tourist district, when the fire broke out on the seventh floor at 1 a.m.

Chan said it appeared the fire was confined to the seventh floor, but panic quickly spread among guests on other floors as thick smoke enveloped the hotel.

Police and hotel officials said only six of the 10 fatalities have been identified, and only two were foreigners.

Court convicts two nuns

HASSELT, Belgium (AP) — A criminal court has convicted two head nuns at a Roman Catholic hospital of forgery documents in an attempt to use hospital funds to build a new convent.

Jacqueline Vandormael and Maria Truyts were three-month jail sentences, with two months suspended, and fined 6,000 francs — the equivalent of $97 — after the prosecutor asked for light sentences.

Defendant to remain jailed

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — A federal court trying former military rulers on charges of human rights abuses has ordered a former navy commander jailed while awaiting the verdict in his case.

The order came Wednesday, a day after Admiral Armando Lambruschini was questioned by the Federal Court of Appeals. The court is trying nine ex-junta members in connection with the abduction, torture and presumed execution of thousands of civilians during a campaign against leftist subversion.

Lambruschini, a member of the ruling junta from 1978 to 1981, was jailed until the court decides whether to continue to keep him in custody. He will be held a block from the court in Buenos Aires where four co-defendants are in custody — former presidents Jorge Videla and Roberto Viola, Adm. Emilio Massera and Gen. Orlando Agosti.

Democratic presidential candidate Walter F. Mondale is surrounded at the Louisville airport by members of the media wearing Mondale masks. The Halloween prank occurred shortly before the candidate made a speech in downtown Louisville.

Mondale meets 'Mondales'

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale was standing casually in the doorway, listening while Rep. Don Edwards introduced him to the crowd outside in the California sunshine.

A reporter walked by as if to leave, and Mondale stopped him. "You know there's a speaker here this evening," he said with a twinkle in his eye.

The remark was typical of the self-deprecating humor the Democratic candidate has employed throughout his long campaign for the presidency, a style he usually reserves for private encounters but occasionally displays in public to disarming effect.

It surfaced again Wednesday when many of the reporters who travel with the Mondale campaign retinue decided to surprise him with a Halloween trick.

Someone special-ordered more than 100 masks in Mondale's likeness, and the idea was for reporters and even some aides to be wearing the disguises when he stepped off his plane in Louisville, Ky.

But one of Mondale's aides alerted him to the prank, and the candidate tricked the tricksters, stepping off the plane wearing a mask of his own.

Walter Mondale, meet Walter Mondale.

He paused briefly at the top of the stairs and made the type of thumbs-up gesture that has become his trademark, then quickly tore off the mask and threw it over his shoulder.

"That's the scariest thing I've ever seen in my life," he joked as he descended the stairs into a crowd of reporters still wearing their masks.

"It's disgusting."

Then, in good-natured response to requests, he stopped long enough to pose for pictures, Mondale without his mask, the reporters clustered around him wearing theirs.

Mondale used a slightly different type of humor the day before to make light of a potentially serious obstacle to his campaign in Illinois.

He had no sooner stepped off his plane in Chicago than he was asked about a rumored black boycott of the traditional torchlight parade through downtown later that evening, an event designed to whip up enthusiasm among party loyalists in the days before the election.

The boycott was another of the byproducts of the long, bitter war between the city's black Democratic Mayor Harold Washington and Edward Vrdolyak, chairman of the party in Cook County. Mondale began his answer by noting both men had shown up for a symbolic unity meeting the last time he was in town.

Then, tongue firmly in cheek, he added:

"I have a lot of hopes for my administration. I expect to find peace with the Soviet Union. I expect to find peace in Central America. And I expect to have some peace in Chicago. But I don't expect to get it all done in my lifetime."

The final days of the presidential campaign has spawned a new publication, circulation limited to the Democratic presidential nominee's traveling party.

The brainchild of deputy press secretary Dayton Duncan, the one-page sheet is named "The Plane Truth," advertised as "the Daily Newspaper of the Louisville Slugger (the name Mondale gave to his campaign jet) and Minnesota Fritz."

In daily doses, the paper lampoons three targets: President Reagan, reporters and members of Mondale's own staff.

Children killed trick or treating

CHICAGO (AP) — A car slammed into a group of trick-or-treaters crossing a street Wednesday night, killing two children and injuring three other people, police said.

Killed in the accident on the city's South Side were Julius Tillman, 10, and Demond Houston, 11, police said. Demond's brother, Troy, 12, was in good condition at University of Chicago Hospitals, and their mother, Carrie Jones, 36, was in fair condition at the facility, said spokeswoman Gretchen Flock.

The driver, who suffered a cut lip in the crash, left the car wrapped around the pole and went to a nearby apartment building, where he was apprehended by police, officers said.

The driver, identified by police as Gene Brown, 19, of Chicago, was booked on charges of leaving the scene of an accident and driving without a current license.

In a separate incident in Chicago, a teen-ager was stabbed and critically wounded Wednesday by a man wearing a Halloween mask of an old man's face, police said.

Kelly O'Neill, 17, was on her way home from school when the man stabbed her once in the lower back, police said.

In West Monroe, La., two youths wearing dark costumes were struck by a pickup truck when they stepped in front of the vehicle, authorities said.

"The truck was just before a stop, so it didn't hurt them," said Officer Warren Lee of the West Monroe Police Department.

He said Jodie S. Chriseol, 17, of Monroe, was wearing a camouflage suit and Jeanette L. Keene, 11, of West Monroe, was dressed as a witch when they stepped in front of the pickup truck.

Play informs children about sexual abuse

MANASSAS, Va. (AP) — While hundreds of elementary school children sat mesmerized, an actress called Judy told her young audience how her stepfather would "touch me in a way that felt really strange" before she went to bed.

"My new dad would read to me, but only if I was sitting on his lap," said Judy, the central character in "Hugs and Kisses," a 40-minute play that talks about "good touching" and "bad touching."

The traveling play, produced by Theater IV, a non-profit group in Richmond, is designed to teach children how to avoid sexual abuse and what to do if they are victims.

"Hugs and Kisses" generally drew praise from parents, educators and law enforcement officials in this community about 40 miles from Washington.

But some parents, objecting to the play's content, refused to let their children see performances at Coles Elementary School, said assistant principal Jane Wayland.

She guessed about 20 children out of approximately 600 weren't allowed to view the song-and-dance skit in which the five actors and actresses, all in their 20s, dressed in colored overalls and sneakers, pretending they were children.

BEFORE SHOWING the play, the school asked parents' permission, offered to show mothers and fathers a videotape and provided a training session for teachers on how to handle child abuse reports.

Theater IV and the schools also require that a social worker or juvenile police officer be present at performances to handle any children's complaints generated by "Hugs and Kisses."

Typical of the parents' reaction was that of Constance Schulz, the mother of four children and the wife of a real estate salesmen.

"I thought it was very well-done," said Mrs. Schulz, who came to see the play. Most of her friends supported the play, Mrs. Schulz said, although "some objected to the portrayal of the stepfather."

Frightened by statistics she'd heard about sexual abuse of children, Mrs. Schulz said the play gave her a perfect backdrop against which she could broach the subject with her children and talk frankly to them about their bodies.

Sgt. Ralph Ahrens, head of the Prince William County police's juvenile bureau, is also enthusiastic about the play, which began showing last September in Virginia school districts that requested the play.

As a result, Ahrens said about 28 children have come forward to report incidents, and two men have been arrested on charges of sexually molesting a total of six children. Both suspects were neighborhood men in their 50s or 60s, he said.

ONLY ONE REPORT has proved to be fabricated, Ahrens said.

The play, which invites students to join along in singing and clapping, tells the story of a young girl, Judy, who is moody, unhappy and cringes when her friends want to innocently hug or kiss her.

The other children can't understand her strange behavior.

Judy, played by Michele Wagner, tells the story of her stepfather and his "bad touching" that makes her feel creepy, unlike the good touching that a mother and father practice when they come home from work.

Not only does her stepfather touch her in a strange fashion, Judy says, he doesn't want her to tell anyone.

"Sometimes you can be hurt by people in your own family," says one of the play's characters. "Judy has a problem ... bad touching has become part of her life."

UNABLE TO BEAR her secret, Judy runs away. But a big loveable dog named "Hugs" guesses what's wrong, and he fetches Judy's friends and her teacher, Mrs. Sawyer.

Rockefeller spreads money in bid for office

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — John D. Rockefeller used to hand out dimes on the streets of New York. His great-grandson, West Virginia Gov. Jay Rockefeller, has expanded the practice considerably with his latest big-money campaign for public office.

Rockefeller's spending in his race for the U.S. Senate topped $9.2 million by mid-October, a rate that would top the $11.6 million mark he set four years ago while running for governor. Of the $9.2 million, $6.9 million came from his personal fortune.

Rockefeller refers to his massive infusions of political money as "aggressive" campaigning. Critics accuse him of something more sinister.

"It just borders on corruption," says Republican opponent John Raese, a millionaire newspaper publisher and business owner. "He's buying himself a seat in the United States Senate."

The original John D. Rockefeller handed out his shiny new coins to children along with an admonition to be thrifty. The beneficiaries of his great-grandson's largess are mainly television stations, media consultants and local political organizations that use the cash to hire an army of "election-day workers."

"The governor has tremendous amounts of personal wealth, and he's always felt like it's up to him to spend it the way he sees fit," says state Democratic Chairman Joe Bob Goodwin.

In 1980, Rockefeller saw fit to spend $11.6 million — almost entirely his own money — in a successful re-election campaign against former GOP Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr.

That race prompted a spate of bumper stickers saying, "Make him spend it all, Arch."

Moore apparently failed in that task. Rockefeller, prohibited by the state constitution from running for a third consecutive term as governor, has turned his sights — and his estimated $150 million fortune — on the Senate seat being vacated by Democrat Jennings Randolph.

Raese, who based his primary election campaign in part on the claim that he was the only candidate with the financial resources to battle the governor's green wave, now says he never meant to imply he could keep up — only that he would not "be blown out" as Moore was in 1980.

Raese, who also inherited substantial wealth, had spent only $755,000 on the Senate campaign by the mid-October financial statement filing deadline.

Rockefeller has taken the art of political advertising on television to new levels — or at least new locations.

Rockefeller commercials play regularly on out-of-state stations. Goodwin vehemently disputes suggestions that the tactic is designed to boost the 6-foot-6 governor's national stature, saying the out-of-state ads are necessary to reach all of West Virginia's roughly 1 million voters.

"He buys Washington and Pittsburgh television and that's very expensive," Goodwin said. "There are a lot of West Virginians who don't have access to West Virginia TV."

Rockefeller does not apologize for his spending, saying in one recent newspaper interview, "If I truly regretted it, I guess I wouldn't be doing it."

Lawyers pledge appeal to stop woman's execution

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — As lawyers pledged continued appeals to stop her Friday execution, Velma Barfield, who would become the first woman put to death in the United States in 22 years, said she wanted to die in her pink, cotton pajamas rather than prison garb.

Mrs. Barfield, 52, scheduled to die by lethal injection at 2 a.m. Friday for killing her boyfriend with poison, lost her third appeal of the week when U.S. District Judge Franklin Dupree on Wednesday refused to halt her execution.

Dupree then granted a petition to send the case to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., which was to hear arguments today. Mrs. Barfield's lawyers said they expected the case to go to the U.S. Supreme Court regardless of the appeals court's ruling.

She would be the third person executed in the United States this week and the 29th executed since the Supreme Court in 1976 allowed the states to restore the death penalty. Convicted murderers were put to death early Tuesday in Louisiana and Texas.

As the appeals continued, Mrs. Barfield waited in her cell 18 steps from the death chamber in Central Prison, where she told prison officials she wanted to wear her pajamas to the execution.

Mrs. Barfield, who says she became a born-again Christian while imprisoned, spent Wednesday reading and listening to religious tapes sent by Ruth Graham, wife of evangelist Billy Graham, said prison spokeswoman Patty McQuillan.

Meanwhile, up to 175 letters a day were pouring into Gov. Jim Hunt's office, said Brent Hackney, an employee in Hunt's press office. In all, Hunt had received 6,888 letters, with 4,003 of them favoring clemency, Hackney said.

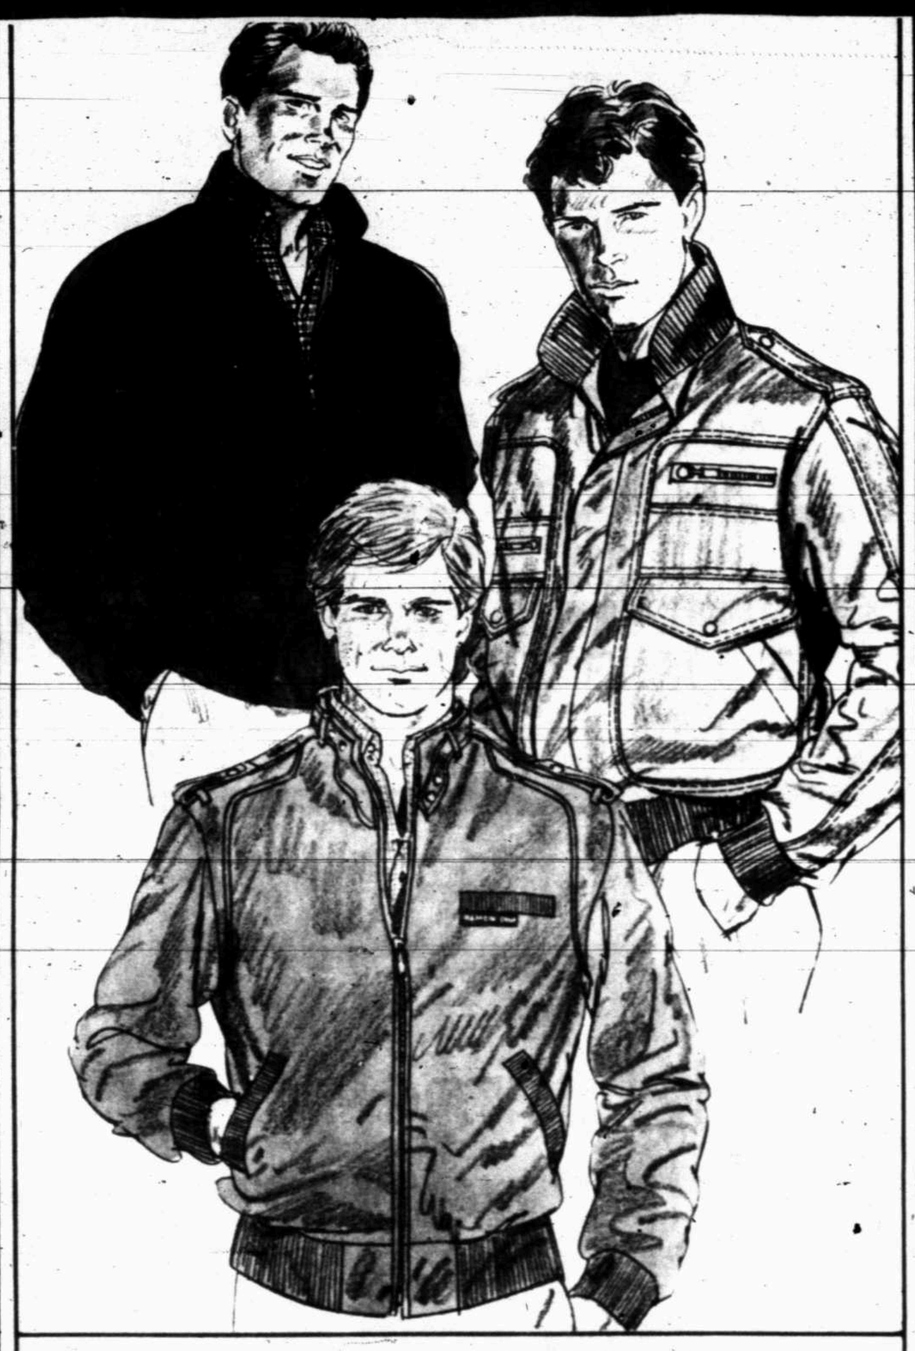

Mrs. Barfield — who confessed to killing three other people, including her mother, but has not been convicted in those slayings — lost appeals Tuesday in the state Supreme Court and in Superior Court.

Dupree on Wednesday rejected a contention that she was incompetent to stand trial in 1978 because she was withdrawing from a 10-year addiction to prescription drugs.

Stenographer faces jail for advice

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A stenographer who offered "do-it-yourself" legal advice is awaiting a recommendation from the Florida Bar as she prepares to serve a 30-day jail term Nov. 15 for practicing law without a license.

The state Supreme Court, which had sentenced Rosemary Furman to 90 days in jail and suspended 60 days, on Wednesday gave her the 15-day delay to get her affairs in order after the U.S. Supreme Court on Monday refused her appeal.

The state court did not rule on a motion to reduce the sentence further if Mrs. Furman closed her business, and bar spokeswoman Catherine Dickson said its board of governors was expected to issue a recommendation by Friday.

The bar had asked the court to stop Mrs. Furman from offering legal advice to people wanting to handle their own divorces, adoptions and name changes.

Prosecutors want charge dropped

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) — Federal prosecutors have asked a court to drop an unlawful flight charge against Indian activist Dennis Banks, jailed for riot and assault convictions from a 1973 disturbance.

U.S. Attorney Philip Hogen said Wednesday that pursuing the charge "would probably reopen some old wounds that hopefully are healing, and can heal."

The charge dates to January 1983, when Banks fled to avoid sentencing on the state charges.

Disease kills whooping cranes

WASHINGTON (AP) — A mysterious disease has killed five whooping cranes out of the 39-bird breeding flock maintained at the Patuxent, Md., Research Center of the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Autopsies and pathology tests at several labs have failed to pinpoint the cause of death, although there has been no evidence that pesticides or metals poisoned the birds, Dave Klinger, a spokesman for the service, said Wednesday.

Whooping cranes almost became extinct years ago, reaching a known low of 15 in 1941, but have come back the Patuxent breeding program. One hundred twenty-eight adults are known to live in two colonies in the West, and those are not believed in danger.

Teens' son dies of starvation

MARYSVILLE, Calif. (AP) — The teen-age parents of a 14-week-old boy who died of starvation said they couldn't afford to seek medical help and pleaded innocent to murder and felony child neglect resulting in death.

Yuba County Municipal Court Judge Donald Wahlberg this week ordered Dale Baldwin, 18, an unemployed cook, and his wife Jimeise, 18, both of Linda, held in lieu of $50,000 bail each pending a bail hearing Friday.

The couple said they were waiting to receive a state assistance card so they could take the child to a doctor, according to court documents. Their 2-year-old son John is in custody of the county Child Protective Services.

Ten youths charged with rape

RICHFIELD, Utah (AP) — Ten teen-agers living in a government dormitory for Navajo Indians were charged with gang raping a 14-year-old girl on a high school football field as her friend was held captive nearby.

Albert Whitehair, 18, and David Calamity, 19, were arraigned on rape charges Tuesday, and were being held Wednesday in lieu of $10,000 bond apiece. Eight minors were being held at the Central Utah Youth Home pending a juvenile court hearing on Monday.

The teen-agers were among a group of 30 dormitory residents who began taunting the two girls Saturday night, then raped one girl, police said, adding that no more arrests were expected.

Department defends peace plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department is defending President Reagan's 1982 Mideast peace plan against criticism by the U.S. ambassador to Israel.

Ambassador Samuel W. Lewis said in a talk at Tel Aviv University Tuesday that the Reagan plan "was a genuine effort," but that "the timing, in my opinion, was abysmal, the tactics of presentation worse and the outcome, so far, nil."

He also said Reagan wasn't fully committed to the 1978 Camp David peace accords negotiated by former President Jimmy Carter.

FBI investigates tanker blasts

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The FBI is investigating whether three fiery explosions aboard a petrochemical tanker that left eight crewmen injured and one missing were caused by a bomb planted during a labor dispute.

The FBI probe was prompted by the "highly suspicious" nature of the explosions aboard the SS Puerto Rican on Wednesday, and because the 632-foot ship was the focus of a dispute between five shipping companies and the Masters, Mates and Pilots Union, said Agent Robert Gast.

Since the ship had recently docked, there probably hadn't been enough time for combustible chemical vapors to gather in its tanks, "giving rise to speculation that there might have been a bomb on board," Gast said.

"It was such a violent explosion that it just peeled 50 feet of the deck right back," he said. "It is unusual that an explosion would affect the ship in that way. These are all factors that give rise to speculation."

Union spokesman Charles Landry said the "organization is demanding a full and complete investigation of this allegation and that our name be cleared from it. The allegation is an absolute, unequivocal lie."

The smoldering ship, reportedly listing, was towed to an ocean dumping site 25 miles south of the Farallon Islands, "just in case she sank," said Coast Guard Petty Officer John Reis.

Last Thursday, the loaded ship was met by a boatful of pickets. Inland pilots who honored the pickets refused to escort the Puerto Rican to the dock. Longshoremen then refused to help dock the ship and it remained stranded inside the Oakland Estuary.

Donald Fuller, port agent for the union, said members picketed when the five shipping companies balked at renewing a contract with the union.

"We intended to slow them down (by picketing), but we have no reason to blow up one of their ships," Fuller said. He added that no union pickets had been on board the SS Puerto Rican.

Voters can decide

We will be criticized for publishing today, prior to next Tuesday's general election, a report on comments made by the former Mrs. Dallas Smith during a deposition hearing held in Dallas last Thursday.

The decision was made primarily because the deposition itself was sought by an elected official who believed erroneous rumors were the primary reason for his defeat at the polls; who, further, believed another law enforcement official had spread those rumors and who therefore had filed a $4 million slander suit against that official.

These events had resulted in more than just local news interest.

Other factors included Sheriff Dallas Smith's statements that the deposition and public knowledge of its contents would enhance his chances for victory in his current write-in campaign.

The fact that he had used in political advertising, and we believe he was within his rights to do so, portions of that deposition during these final days of his campaign was also taken into consideration.

It is no secret that this newspaper has editorially supported Dallas Smith throughout his career as Midland County sheriff, most recently prior to this year's primary election. At that time we stated our reasons for doing so.

On Oct. 17th we endorsed in the general election Gary Painter, winner of the Republican nomination.

While we realize some contents of the deposition, which has been made a focal point by Dallas Smith in his write-in campaign, could have negative impact on his re-election effort, we believe parts of this testimony can, and no doubt will, be interpreted positively on his behalf.

While some would argue the report could have been more negative or more positive than it was, we believe it was as fair and objective as it could have been.

It now is for the voters — proponents and opponents of all three candidates — to decide who will be Midland County sheriff as of Jan. 1, 1985.

The danger in India

While India and the United States have not, in recent times, enjoyed the best of relations the assassination of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi by Sikh extremists can only be viewed as an international tragedy with the potential of having serious and dangerous implications as far as the world's most populous democracy is concerned.

That is true even though the U.S. has been at odds with Gandhi ever since her infamous crackdown on civil rights that resulted in political defeat and brief imprisonments prior to her eventual return to power.

Her failure to condemn Russia's invasion of Afghanistan and her friendship with the USSR are other factors. Even so, it probably can honestly be said that even during what were the darkest hours of her many years at India's helm, she acted in what she felt were her country's best interests.

And those actions do not diminish the respect Gandhi achieved as a leader, if not preeminent leader, of Third World nations.

Whatever our differences, she deserved more than to be shot down by extremist members of a religious sect that in total constitutes a major force in Indian political and military affairs.

As one observer has pointed out, "If the Sikhs of India's army cannot be trusted, then India has no Army."

Therein lies the real danger to India and for that segment of the free world for which India has long been a leader.

Another View:

Sen. Helms' legions

Embroiled in a tough campaign for re-election, North Carolina's Sen. Jesse Helms is boasting of endorsement by 22 U.S. ambassadors. To that startling, unprecedented partisanship by representatives of all the people, Secretary of State Shultz has made only mildly disapproving statements. He has reminded the ambassadors that their first duty is to the nation. In fact, their behavior is inappropriate in the extreme, even for non-career political appointees.

Helms held a press conference Thursday at which he distributed the endorsement by America's ambassadors to Mexico, France, Canada, Austria, Peru, Guatemala, Paraguay, South Korea, Barbados, Colombia, the Bahamas, Romania, Switzerland, Jamaica, Madagascar, Equatorial Guinea and Costa Rica, plus five others to international organizations. Two of them appeared with Helms to extol his "strong, close relationship with the Reagan administration."

The State Department reiterates the "traditional" policy of discouraging ambassadors from "participation in partisan political campaigns." The reason for that tradition is obvious: No single senator can set himself up as an authoritative voice for the nation abroad. When the nation's ambassadors take sides in election campaigns, they send confusing messages to the whole world.

That's especially true in the case of Helms. As energetically as he champions his state's tobacco industry, he lobbies for South Africa's white-supremacy regime and the violent right in El Salvador. He opposes ties with China and has done his best to thwart progress on arms control. Are those the views of the Reagan administration? Do the ambassadors endorse them along with the senator?

Even if he were to become chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Helms does not speak for the nation but for a faction of one party.

Barbie threatens to name names

WASHINGTON — Why hasn't Klaus Barbie, the notorious Nazi war criminal, been brought to trial by the French? Some of my intelligence sources doubt he will ever be.

Jack Anderson

The reason is simple and scandalous. The "Butcher of Lyon" has acquired a new title: "The Man Who Knew Too Much." Barbie has hinted from the start that he could blow the whistle on a number of Frenchmen — living and dead — who attained high positions in France after secretly collaborating with the Nazi occupation forces during World War II.

And the sad truth, I'm told, is that the deeper French investigators have dug into Barbie's grisly past, the more they've become convinced that his threats are not idle boasts.

The list of targets Barbie and his defense attorney have promised to expose as closet collaborators reportedly covers the political spectrum from far left to far right.

When Barbie was extradited from Bolivia early last year, the French raised howls of outrage over disclosures that U.S. Army counterintelligence officers had helped Barbie escape France after the war. The Justice Department investigated, confirmed the charges, and issued an official apology to the people of France.

But the French press, so quick to point the finger of shame at the United States, has become strangely quiet about the Barbie case. In a country where virtually all the major publications are identifiably loyal to one political party or another, this suggests that Barbie is believed capable of embarrassing every political group in France, from Gaullists to Socialists and Communists, if he were brought to trial.

France went through a long, agonizing period of soul-searching after the war, and eventually came to live with the undeniable fact that many French men and women had collaborated with the Nazis to one degree or another. The trial of a man as cynical as Barbie — and with so little to lose — could open up the old wounds.

President Francois Mitterrand's Socialist government at first was eager for a public trial of Barbie, believing he would embarrass only its political rivals. Now they're not so sure.

In fact, my associate Lucette Lagnado was told by some of the Americans who "ran" Barbie as an intelligence informant that he often boasted of the ease with which he had recruited French spies for the Nazis. He even bragged that he had agents inside the resistance movement itself.

Barbie's lawyer has hinted that some of the clandestine traitors his client knows about rose to prominence in postwar France. But it would be easy to bluff. Even high officials who know they are clean can't be sure that one of their colleagues wasn't a hireling of Barbie during the occupation. It's not a secret likely to be shared.

So Barbie sits in jail while the government ostensibly takes more time to prepare the prosecution case. The trial, at first scheduled for late 1983, then for sometime this year, is now vaguely planned for 1985.

Some State Department sources suspect the French are stalling in hopes that Barbie, now 71 and reportedly in frail health, will do them the favor of dying before he can start telling what he claims to know in open court.

STRICTLY PERSONAL: How did the House Intelligence Committee know what was in the now-famous CIA training manual for the anti-Sandinista guerrillas? Do the members read Spanish?

Some of them may, but to be sure of their facts, the booklet was sent to the Congressional Research Service, where a professional translator, Deanna Hammond, put it into English. Was she excited by the assignment? "I was simply doing my job," Ms. Hammond said.

What on earth led the State Department to move the U.S. Embassy to East Beirut, where it was promptly bombed?

It seemed like the right move at the time, though 20-20 hindsight proved that East Beirut was no safer than strife-torn West Beirut. The United States wasn't alone in viewing the suburban area of East Beirut as a place of refuge for threatened diplomats.

Most other embassies had also been moved to the eastern section of the city. And it wasn't just timorous Western nations, either. Saudi Arabia and Iraq had also moved their embassies to East Beirut. The unnerving truth seems to be that the American embassy would have been a target for terrorists no matter where it was located.

Is it true that the Soviets offer more scholarships to foreign students than the United States?

The Soviets bring seven times as many foreign exchange students into their country as we do. Needless to say, the Kremlin sees to it that the foreigners get a solid dose of Marxist dialectic with their other subjects.

GEORGE F. WILL

Who can best contain 'empire'?

WASHINGTON — The view from London's Waterloo Bridge — up the Thames toward Wren's dome on St. Paul's, down toward the House of Parliament — encompasses striking symbols of the West's attainments. But the bridge itself is now a symbol of the brazenness of the West's enemies.

George F. Will

Georgi Markov, 49, was walking across the bridge on Sept. 7, 1978, heading home from his work at the studios of the BBC External Services. Suddenly he felt a sting on the back of his thigh and, turning, saw a man bending to retrieve an umbrella. The man, with a foreign accent, murmured "I'm sorry."

Markov did not mention the incident to his wife, but early the next morning he suffered a raging fever and said: "I have a horrible feeling that this may be connected with something which happened yesterday." Markov, Bulgaria's leading man of letters before he defected, had received many threats and warnings. One warning said he would be poisoned by a substance, tested in Moscow, that causes a high fever.

Scotland Yard announced that doctors found in his thigh a tiny pellet containing ricin, a rare poison extensively studied in Eastern Europe. There is no known antidote. The pellet was a highly sophisticated bit of murder technology. It was made of a platinum-iridium alloy which the human body does not reject. It was the size of a pinhead and had four openings to hold the poison. A similar pellet had been used in an unsuccessful assassination attempt against another Bulgarian defector in Paris. A few days after Markov died, a lieutenant-general in Bulgaria's security force delivered a speech expressing "the deepest gratitude to our Soviet comrades-in-arms of the KGB for their constant help and comradely assistance."

You can read the book that got Markov killed. "The Truth that Killed" (published by Ticknor & Fields) is the autobiography he broadcast to Bulgaria, thereby enraging the regime. Markov's only child, who was just two when he died, asked her mother, "Why did daddy write those things if he loved us?" Her mother replied that daddy thought Bulgaria's rulers would not risk the scandal that might result from killing him. However, the real scandal is that there is so slight, and so fleeting, a sense of being scandalized by such crimes. The fact is illustrated by, and may have helped bring on, the so-called "crime of the century" — the Bulgarian plot to kill the pope.

The mills of Italian justice grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly small and are grinding to dust the pretense that the Turkish gunman acted alone. There is now not the slightest reason to doubt that his attack was organized by Bulgarians, who would not have undertaken such an audacious crime without the approval of the highest Soviet authorities.

None of this is news to anyone who has read Claire Sterling's book, "The Time of the Assassins." Her work on this case is the journalistic achievement of the age. Her most appalling evidence strongly suggests complicity by some democracies, including this one, in covering up the Soviet crime. The cover-up that Italian authorities are pulling apart, thread by thread, demands this action:

The U.S. Senate Intelligence Committee should call in U.S. intelligence leaders and march them through Sterling's book, page by page, asking why she singlehandedly learned so much more than the intelligence agencies, collectively, did. The Intelligence Committee should dwell on her accounts of attempts by U.S. agents to discourage her investigations. The real "crime of the century" is the complicity of democracies in suppressing evidence of the Soviet crime, lest relations between East and West become unpleasantly realistic.

What are relations to be with a nation like the Soviet Union, a nation now killing its dissidents by medical neglect? Describing the kidnapping, "in familiar urban-terrorist style," of the Sakharovs, The Economist (of London) says that the extraordinary fact is that this atrocity was not the work of a mere terrorist gang, but an action "approved by Soviet ruling circles," in violation of Soviet law and the equally worthless 1975 Helsinki human-rights undertakings.

It is serendipitous that the six-month anniversary of that kidnapping falls on the eve of the U.S. election. And it is splendid that the machinery of Italian justice has synchronized with the machinery of American electoral politics. This is the tenth consecutive election in which all issues should be secondary to this one: Who best understands the task of describing and containing the evil empire of which Bulgaria is a loathsome instrument? That issue is not the main reason why Reagan will win, but it is the main reason he should.

ART BUCHWALD

Where did parents go wrong?

This is not an easy time for many of my friends raised in the good old liberal tradition. Events are moving too fast, and they don't know what is happening to them.

I dropped in on Fred and Mira Staunchley the other night and could sense the tension in the air.

Art Buchwald

"What's wrong?" I asked Fred.

"Tommy came home for the week and announced he's going to vote for Reagan."

"I don't believe it," I cried. "He's only 22 years old."

"He says all the kids in his political science class are voting Republican," Mira said.

"That explains it. He's being subjected to peer pressure," I told them. "Where does he go to school?"

"Berkeley, California," Fred replied.

"Did he give any good reasons why he had gone conservative?"

"None that made sense to us. He said he would have a much better opportunity getting a job with a large corporation if he voted Republican. He mumbled something about it being a dog-eat-dog world, and he had to think of his future if he ever hoped to get in the upper income brackets before he was 30."

"He was such a good child before he went off to college," Mira said.

"Maybe he's putting on an act just to shock you," I suggested.

"It's no act," Fred said. "Mira found this under his pillow this morning."

"What is it?"

"'In Search of Excellence, Lessons from America's Best-Run Companies.' When she confronted him with it he just shrugged his shoulders and said if he was going to scratch and claw his way up the ladder he had to know what big business was doing."

"I don't know what we did wrong," Mira said. "We taught him to have concern for the poor and the disenfranchised. We took him to anti-nuclear demonstrations. He led a boycott of California lettuce when he was in high school. We had such high hopes for him. Our dream was someday he would be arrested for protesting a toxic waste dump."

"And he turned his back on everything you people believe in?"

"Not only that. He said we were bleeding hearts and didn't understand the real world. He told us there would always be poor people, and there were a lot worse things than a nuclear arms race. As far as the environment was concerned, he would have nothing to do with a movement that was impeding the economic growth of the United States."

"Did he say where he stood on school prayer?"

"He said we were a nation under God and there was nothing wrong with children praying before they started their classes. Then he gave us 10 minutes on having a Supreme Court that would not always come down on the side of the criminal."

"It sounds like this has not been one of your better weeks," I said. "Where is Tommy now?"

"He's upstairs watching Louis Rukeyser's 'Wall Street Week in Review.'"

"That's heavy," I said.

"It isn't the worst of it. Mira found four empty bottles of Perrier under his bed this morning."

"Maybe it's a cry for help. Have you suggested he see a psychiatrist?"

"He won't go because he says if he gets a job with a conglomerate he'll be passed over for Chief Executive Officer if they found out he had a mental health problem."

"I can feel for you," I told them. "But there are worse things in the world than having a kid who is going to vote for Reagan and George Bush."

Fred said bitterly, "Name one."

Stephens County officials call off manhunt for wealthy oilman's killer

CADDO (AP) — Stephens County authorities say they have called off an intensive manhunt for the masked killer of a wealthy Breckenridge oilman who was shot to death after he went out to check on a prowler.

The gunman shot 42-year-old Samuel Martin Rogers in his garage Wednesday, police said.

Peace Justice Sid Rhodes said the gun blast hit Rogers, owner of Delta Oil and Gas Co., in the throat and apparently severed an artery.

Rogers' house and surrounding buildings were equipped with a television security system, but the sophisticated system broke down Tuesday, authorities said.

James Cain, who took office as Stephens County sheriff today, said that although the investigation will continue full steam, he had no plans to renew the search.

"I don't feel there's anybody out there in the woods to look for," Cain said late Wednesday. "I think that fellow left the scene long ago."

Rogers' son, Joey, first saw the prowler at about 7:15 a.m. and called his father, Cain said.

"He (Rogers) went outside, and the prowler came from behind the vehicle," Cain said. "The prowler backed him up going into the house and Sammy lunged toward the door, and that's when he shot him."

Cain said that Rogers' wife, Pat, called for help. Rogers' daughter, Leslie, also was home when the shooting occurred.

Cain said more than 150 lawmen gathered Wednesday to search a heavily wooded area near the house for the assailant, who was described as wearing a mask and a camouflage suit.

The search involved a Department of Public Safety helicopter from Lubbock and several law officials who mounted horses to search the rough terrain.

Cain said Texas Ranger Gene Kea of Eastland was heading the investigation, and officers from the Palo Pinto, Young and Stephens sheriff's departments, DPS and Breckenridge Police Department were involved in the search.

Authorities said they believe the gunman may have had a car waiting nearby and had left the area before police arrived.

Federal officials issue arrest warrant for Houston man in copter robberies

DALLAS (AP) — Federal authorities have issued an arrest warrant for a Houston man in connection with the robbery of a North Texas bank where armed robbers made their getaway in a stolen helicopter.

James Richard Little, 40, is believed to have been involved in a robbery ring that committed other bank heists using aircraft to escape, George Lyford, an FBI agent in Las Vegas, told The Dallas Morning News Wednesday.

The warrant, issued this week in Dallas, is the first in the July 20 holdup of the Valley View National Bank, said Chief Deputy John Aston of Cooke County, where the robbery occurred.

Aston said he is also seeking indictments against two other Texas men in the Valley View case. Both have already been arrested in connection with a mid-September robbery of an Overton, Nev., bank that also involved an airborne getaway.

Aston said he is seeking indictments against Russell Earl Auzston, 36, of Conroe, and Charles R. Holden, 38, of Houston. Both men are being held in Nevada.

"We have other suspects, and we'll arrest them when we can," Aston told The Associated Press.

Little had not been arrested as of late Wednesday.

"It was a close-knit group," Lyford said. "It was a bank robbery-type gang."

In the Valley View robbery, a squad of robbers swooped down on the bank and held customers and employees at gunpoint while taking an undisclosed amount of cash.

The men were armed with automatic weapons and executed the six-minute robbery with military precision, authorities said.

Texas has most deep well waste injection sites

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Texas has more deep well hazardous waste injection sites than any other state, a Texas Department of Water Resources official says.

Bill Klemt, a geologist and chief of the Underground Injection Control section of the agency, said there are 170 such waste disposal wells in the United States. Of those, 100 are in Texas.

Klemt made the remarks in a report Wednesday to water officials attending a groundwater symposium. The three-day symposium was sponsored by the University of Texas and Texas A&M University.

Klemt said the hazardous wastes forced into the wells are pushed into deep underground aquifers.

Klemt said last year, 5.5 billion gallons of hazardous and nonhazardous waste was injected into Texas subsurface reservoirs.

There are four reservoirs that receive such hazardous waste in Texas, but all of them are below the level of aquifers that provide drinking water, Klemt said.

The injection well method of disposing of wastes evolved from the oil and gas industry in Texas, Klemt said. The use of such injection wells in the state dates back to the 1950s, he said.

Klemt said the water resources department imposes strict standards on the operators of the wells.

Well construction is closely monitored to make sure casings are not leaky. Injection pressures are limited and a thorough geologic examination of the area surrounding the well is required.

"If the well is properly designed and operated, waste disposal doesn't affect surface water," he said. "To my knowledge, no contamination of usable groundwater in the United States has occurred because of an injection well."

Earlier Wednesday, a Texas A&M professor told the group the "Superfund" cleanup of hazardous wastes is not working.

Kirk Brown, professor in the Soil and Crop Sciences Department, said of 900 Superfund cleanup sites, two thirds of them are threatening the nation's groundwater.

Sites where wastes from Superfund cleanup locations have been stored are now leaking wastes themselves, Brown said.

"There definitely is waste coming out of those (relocation) sites," Brown said.

"I think one day we will need a 'Super-Duper Fund,'" he said.

The Superfund was set up by Congress to provide money for the cleanup of dangerous hazardous waste dumps.

"There still are some sites today licensed by the EPA (Environmental Protection Agency) that will require cleanup," Brown said.

Brown said 50 percent of the nation's drinking water comes from groundwater. An estimated 2 percent of that groundwater is contaminated from one source or another, he said.

"If your well is in that 2 percent, it looks like 100 percent," he said.

As much as 20 percent of the drinking water aquifers in the nation are contaminated to some extent, he said.

One of the problems, Brown said, is the storage of hazardous chemicals in barrels.

Doggett, White charge GOP using polls to boost faltering campaign

HOUSTON (AP) — Democrat Lloyd Doggett and Gov. Mark White say Republicans in Texas are using polls of the hotly contested U.S. Senate race to "chill" Democratic support and boost a "faltering" Phil Gramm.

White and Doggett, who faces the College Station Republican in the race to fill retiring U.S. Sen. John Tower's seat, made the charges during campaign appearances Wednesday in San Antonio, Corpus Christi and Houston.

A recent survey by Republican pollster Lance Tarrance of Houston, released Monday, showed Gramm with a commanding lead of more than 20 percentage points. It was Tarrance who predicted victory for former Gov. Bill Clements less than a week before his defeat by White.

"I think you'll find that those polls are misleading and they're (the GOP) using those polls to chill the support for the Democratic ticket," White said.

"The former governor of Texas is not here today because of some reliance on those polls," he said. "I think (Doggett) has the momentum now."

Doggett went a step further, calling the Tarrance poll "outlandish."

"I think within the last day or so the Republicans have tried to pump up a faltering campaign for the Senate by coming out with polls that even the Republicans don't think are realistic," the Austin state senator said.

U.S. Senate candidate Lloyd Doggett takes the microphone from U.S. Congressman Mickey Leland, D-Houston, after he introduced Doggett to the crowd of Carpenters' Union members Wednesday in Houston.

Doggett does not release his polls, but concedes he trails Gramm in all polls.

Doggett visited just four cities Wednesday — he usually stops in six or seven a day — and ended his campaign day in Houston at a Harris County Democratic's get-out-the-vote rally, where he was joined by Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young.

"How America goes is determined by Texas," Young said. "How Texas goes is determined by Houston and who determines how Houston goes? You do."

Doggett has put such importance on the Houston area, where one-fifth of the state's voters reside, that he plans two visits the day before election and another election day.

Man charged in girl's killing tries to escape from Denton County jail

Trimmier

DENTON (AP) — A man charged in the slaying of a 13-year-old North Richland Hills girl, missing for three weeks, was in fair condition after being shot in an escape attempt, officials said.

Mark Robert Matthys, 23, was shot in the neck Wednesday by a Texas Ranger within a half-block of the county jail as he attempted to flee about 3:20 p.m., Denton Chief Deputy Jim Wilson said.

Matthys had just been moved to the facility from the North Richland Hills jail when he fled the booking room.

Texas Ranger Weldon Lucas felled Matthys with one shot from his pearl-handled .45 pistol as the suspect raced down McKinney Street, swerving into traffic and attempting to stop motorists.

"It looked like he was trying to get a hostage," Lucas said.

A Flow Memorial Hospital spokeswoman said Matthys was in fair condition Wednesday night.

Matthys, whose family lives in South Bend, Ind., was arrested late Tuesday and charged with capital murder in the death of Michelle Trimmier. Her body was found partially buried on a farm Saturday, 21 days after she disappeared from her home's front yard Oct. 6.

North Richland Hills Police Capt. Randy Shiflet said Matthys had been moved to the Denton jail after prosecutors determined he should be tried in Denton County, where the body was found.

North Richland Hills is in Tarrant County.

Matthys, who lived near the Trimmier house, was arrested in Roanoke, a south Denton County town of 1,800. He was arraigned before Peace Justice Kenneth Cunningham and held in lieu of $1 million bond.

Police said they were led to Matthys and eventually to the girl's body after receiving a telephone tip shortly after the girl was allegedly abducted.

A neighbor saw the girl talking to three teen-agers near a pale yellow car shortly before her disappearance, police said. The neighbor said she heard yelling and screaming but saw no one when she looked out her window.

Investigators said the girl's body was identified through dental records. The cause of death was under investigation.

Investigators said they warned the girl's parents, Sylvia and Mack Trimmier, last Thursday that hope was running out that their daughter would be returned safely.

Police department subject of investigation

KENDLETON (AP) — The Fort Bend County district attorney says he's looking into allegations that police in this tiny Southeast Texas town have been abusing suspects and improperly fining motorists.

All three members of the police force resigned after some records were seized by investigators, and the town council voted to dissolve the Kendleton Police Department until the investigation is completed.

"Those people have been in trouble since the day they formed that police department," District Attorney William Meitzen. "Trouble is nothing new for the Kendleton Police Department."

Meitzen said Tuesday he also is looking into allegations that the police department has misapplied funds and lost a safe containing money and receipts.

Meitzen said he started the investigation about three weeks ago and that affidavits have been taken from four people, including a woman who claims she was strip-searched by a male officer.

A man claimed he was assaulted and others say they were harassed, the prosecutor says.

Meitzen said investigators, armed with subpoenas, confiscated police department records on Monday, just five days after a safe in the Kendleton municipal court disappeared.

Shortly afterward, the three-man force resigned.

Kendleton Mayor W.M. McNeil said the safe was used to store money, receipts and other other documents from the municipal court.

Kendleton, a town of 600 about 45 miles southwest of Houston, has had a series of problems.

In 1981, county prosecutors investigated police-harassment complaints filed by citizens, but no action was taken

Last year, Meitzen investigated the disappearance of $5,000 in fines and bonds that were collected at the city jail but never placed into the city treasury. No indictments were returned in the case, and Meitzen said Tuesday that the issue "is a lost cause."

Rain squall stalls plane's engine

HOUSTON (AP) — A rain squall stalled one engine of a chartered jet carrying reporters covering Senate candidate Lloyd Doggett Wednesday afternoon, but the jet landed safely minutes later at Houston's Hobby Field, a campaign officials said.

The jet, a King Air 200, was carrying about 10 reporters following the the Democrat's U.S. Senate race, according to George Autry, Doggett's personal aide.

Doggett's entourage was following behind in another jet, he said.

Autry said the jet, en route from Corpus Christi, was about 15 minutes outside Houston when one of its two engines flooded with rain and stalled.

"We went through one small pocket of rain, and the right engine just sort of cut off," Autry said. "There was just this one jolt."

The plane landed minutes later without any problem, he said.

"We were more laughing about it more than anything else," he said. "The pilot was obviously capable and not worried. He did say it was the first time this had happened to him."

Chaps hit hardwood Saturday

MC cagers still looking for midterm

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

The Midland College basketball team that fans watch the first half of the season may be drastically different than the one Chaparral loyalists watch in the second half.

"We have two pretty good big kids who will not be eligible until after midterm," says MC Coach Jerry Stone. "And they could make quite a difference when they begin playing."

In pre-season scrimmages, capped by the annual eight-team Jamboree in Abilene over the weekend, Stone has "been playing everybody. So I really don't know what we'll look like when we open the season Saturday night against the Sul Ross JV."

IN ADDITION to five holdovers from last year's 21-12 team, Stone has recruited seven guards who show promise, but not much size.

The two big men, 6-7 Derrick Lewis from Fort Worth Southwest and 6-7 Eddie Frazier, Boston (Dorchester), are the players who could give the Chaps that completely different look at midterm.

One thing Stone promises is that the team "will have more quickness and will move around better. Last year we tried to play like we had in the past and we didn't have the personnel for it. We tried to play full court when we probably should have been playing more half court."

WHEN THE Chaps tip off against Sul Ross at 7 p.m. Saturday in the Langford Chaparral Center, the familiar faces will be 6-9 Teviin Binns; Zeak Williams, last year's starting point guard; forward-post Lawrence Chumbley; guard Vernon Coleman, and guard Chuckie Graves.

The newcomers are 5-4 Leland Wigington, Inglewood, Calif.; 6-1 Ricky Grace, Dallas Wilmer-Hutchins; 6-2 Wayne Sam, Wilmington, Calif.; 5-9 Deon Hunter, Dallas South Oak Cliff; 6-5½ Raymond Vavasseur, St. Martinville, La.; 6-4 William Ford, O.D. Wyatt, Fort Worth; and 6-4 Tony Wright, New York City.

"This team right now looks like the team we had three or four years ago when we used eight or nine players. It's a team that can be aggressive," notes Stone.

"In practice, Lewis reminds me a lot of a tall Puntus Wilson," the Chaps all-time scoring leader and an NJCAA All-American.

"Pookey Wigington is the smallest player I've ever recruited", says Stone, "He can't jump like Spud Webb (MC's 5-6 All-American) but he's a quick, exciting player with a good outside jumper and the ability to handle the ball well."

In early workouts under Stone and Reggie Franklin, beginning his third year as MC assistant, the squad has demonstrated a good attitude. "it has really been enjoyable, I guess because we have not reached the point where we have gotten tired of each other in practice."

For fans desiring a Sneak Preview, it will be Meet The Chaps night at the Chaparral Center, starting at 6:30 p.m. today. The tennis and golf teams will be introduced along with the cagers and the night will be capped off by an intra-squad scrimmage.

The Chaps first big test of the season will come next weekend in the annual Chaparral Classic, an eight-team tournament running Thursday through Saturday. The field will include Cisco, Odessa, Howard, Grayson, Weatherford from Texas and Barton County, Garden City of Kansas).

The Chaps also will play in the Waco tournament instead of going to Kansas for tournament play.

THE CHAPS, Stone feels, will be stronger, "but so will the entire league."

Four new coaches give the Western Junior College Athletic Conference an air of mystery. Dennis Spradling, one of the stars on Nolan Richardson's NJCAA champions at Western Texas College a few years back, returns to coach his alama mater; former MC assistant and Howard College star Archie Meyers is the new coach at Odessa; Ed Sparling, a former assistant at UTEP, succeeds Mike Mitchell at Howard; and Dave Campbell returns to New Mexico Military Institute after an an absence of several seasons.

Stone sizes up the race: "Amarillo College should be picked to win it all, OC has everybody back and Sparling has recruited some good people at NMMI and the Institute should be a factor as well as Howard and WTC."

Owls, Rangers face shootout

Area Roundup

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

As the rites of fall slowly become the pressure cooker of early winter, area high school football teams fall by the wayside while others gun for the two playoff berths allowed for each district.

And although coaching philosophy holds that the games are played one at a time, it isn't too early to anticipate the playoffs and some possible first-round matchups.

In District 8-AA, several teams still have a shot at the playoffs, but Friday's games will make or break some of the teams in the district race. Greenwood (7-1, 2-1) visits Reagan County (5-3, 2-1) in a pivotal battle.

In fact, the only team that has kept unbeaten in the district is Eldorado. They host McCamey this Friday, and the Badgers hit the road in a must-win situation. A loss would drop them to 1-3 and eliminate their playoff hopes. A year ago the Badgers were 11-4 before falling in the state playoffs to champion Boyd, 22-3.

The race shapes up like this: If Eldorado wins against either McCamey this week or Greenwood next week, they are in the playoffs. Two losses muddies the picture.

If Greenwood wins its' remaining two games, they would win the district title in their first year as a class AA team. If they lose twice, they're out of the race. A split would throw another wrench in the works.

McCamey is out of the picture if they lose again, and then they would need help from outside sources to have a chance. McCamey has lost to Greenwood (29-9) and Reagan County (15-14), so the Badgers would have to have both those teams lose twice.

Reagan County needs to beat Greenwood to give themselves a chance. A loss Friday puts them out of the running.

Stanton and Wall have been mathematically eliminated. Wall was the defending district champ, but even in a 1-6-1 season have been a factor in the race, upsetting Greenwood 25-14 for the Rangers' only loss of the year.

That should clear up the playoff picture, right?

IN DISTRICT 2-4A, the Sweetwater Mustangs staked their claim last week to the playoffs with an impressive 31-10 win over previously unbeaten Monahans.

The win almost guarantees them the playoff berth they lost on the last week of the season in 1983, but with three games to play anything can happen. The Lobos are still within striking distance with their 3-1 district mark, and they are currently tied with Fort Stockton for second place.

Lamesa, perhaps looking ahead to Friday's important game with Sweetwater, stumbled in a 3-0 home loss to San Angelo Lakeview last week. The win was the Chief's first of the year, and should Lamesa's Golden Tornadoes fall this week to Sweetwater they will most likely exit from the playoff picture.

Pecos is still alive and they are tied with Lamesa at 2-2 in district after a 41-0 whitewash of feeble Snyder.

Mojo owns 10-year streak against MHS

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

ODESSA — It's been a long time since Midland High has beaten Odessa Permian, 1973 to be exact. That was the year the Bulldogs took advantage of first-year head coach John Wilkins, winning 21-8.

That was the third and final victory the Bulldogs recorded in their 24-year series against the Panthers. The other two wins came in 1963, 34-12; and 1960, 24-16.

Though there have been close calls since that long ago game, Permian has managed to win 10 straight. Now, Mojo is on the verge of a record-breaking fifth consecutive District 4-5A championship, needing just one win in their final two games to clinch the title.

"WE FEEL, from a coaches stand point, it's a big game for us," said Wilkins. "We haven't convinced the kids yet, but it's going to be a tough game. It can mean winning the fifth straight championship which is a great accomplishment, something nobody has done before in this district. Nobody had even won four straight until we did last year. It's also important for us because you don't want to take a step backwards at this time of the season. You want to be going forward."

Win or lose, the Panthers are already guaranteed forward progress. Though they have yet to clinch the 4-5A title, they have clinched a playoff berth. The Bulldogs would like to postpone that title another week, but know they have their hands full.

"They have an outstanding team," said MHS coach Doug McCutchen. "They wouldn't be rated No. 1 in all the polls if they didn't. We've been underdogs in most of our games this year, so Friday will be nothing new to us. We'll still have to go out and play our game, cut out the mistakes on offense, improve the kicking game and play defense."

Even then, the Bulldogs could be out-gunned if the Panthers can take care of their own business.

PERMIAN IS dominating most 4-5A statistics. Quarterback Alton Holloway is No. 2 in passing with 993 yards. However, he is a runaway No. 1 in efficiency, completing a remarkable 78 percent of his passes, 62-of-80, for a district-leading 18 touchdowns.

On the other end of the pass, Holloway as the district's leading receiver in split end Greg Anderson, 30 catches for 503 yards and six TDs.

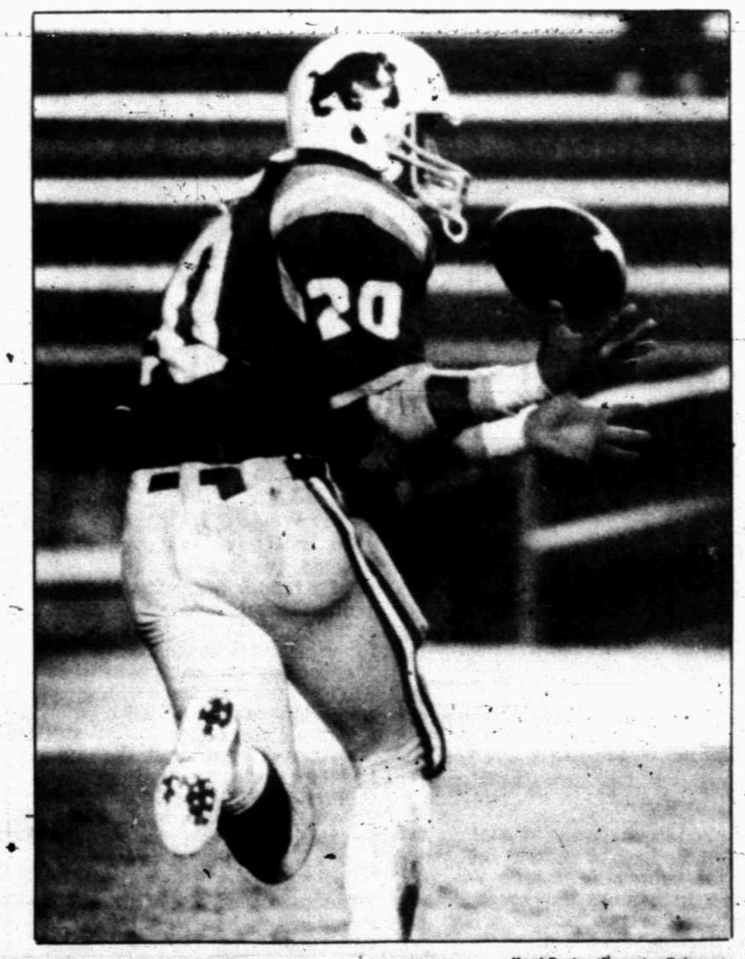

When not passing, Holloway has fullback Dal Watson, the No. 2 rusher in the league with 845 yards on 145 carries. Watson is the top touchdown scorer with 14, 12 on the ground and two receiving.

"I think the key to Permian's success is Holloway's effectiveness with the pass," said McCutchen. "We may throw more passes but they throw more effectively. They're not just completing the easy 10-yard passes but can also go deep. Holloway leads the league in touchdown passes.

"Dal Watson is doing a great job at fullback and they have some good offensive linemen doing the blocking," continued McCutchen. "Another reason they throw the ball so well is they have a fine group of receivers."

Wilkins hopes his team continues to mix the rush and pass as well as they have in the past, but sees a lot of trouble coming from Midland High's defense.

"We're going to do basically what we've been doing all year, mix the run anad pass," said Wilkins. "We've got to try and keep Midland off balance if we can. They're real sound in what their doing defensively. Of course, they've got a real good middle linebacker (Darrell Davis) and two real good defensive tackles (Brad Edgar and Steve Mizzles). They're not not outstanding players overall on defense but they're sound as a unit. They don't line up and give you anything. You have to take it from them."

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Midland High's Keith Byrd
...looking for daylight

DEFENSE HAS been Midland High's strongest suit this year, playing with a never-say-die attitude no matter the situation. In every game except Lubbock Estacado, the Bulldogs have trailed from the beginning only to see the defense stand up and fight off opponents, giving the offense a chance to get back in the game.

"They've done an excellent job," said McCutchen. "The young men have competed in every ball game. They've gone into every ball game looking to win. We came up short in three games but it's hard to say we lost three games because they played well enough in each to win."

Wilkins agrees and that's why he's concerned about Friday's game.

"They're only six or seven points away from being 7-1 themselves," said Wilkins. "They played San Angelo to a 7-6 score until late in the game and fought back from 14-0 against Cooper only to end up losing by five.

"I have a feeling Midland will try and throw the football more on us," continued Wilkins. "They've had some success moving the football on the ground also so they'll probably try and mix it up as well. We're going to have to play hard Friday night. If we don't, Midland High is going to beat us. They're good enough to do it."

WHEN THE Bulldogs have the ball, reactivated quarterback Matt Marcum, who came off the disabled list last week to lead the Bulldogs to three touchdowns against Cooper, can do a lot of damage with his passing.

Even though he missed two complete games this year, Marcum is ranked third in the district in passing — behind Cooper's Doug Hadley and Holloway — with 55 completions in 125 attempts (44 percent) for 788 yards and five touchdowns.

Marcum's primary receiver this year has been Davis at tight end, third in receiving with 24 catches for 426 yards and a TD. Davis is one of four receivers the Bulldogs have in the 4-5A reception Top 10. Allan Foret, Jake Madrid and Keith Byrd are all tied for seventh place with 12 catches (169, 137, 130 yards respectively).

"Marcum had a great week last week against Cooper," said Wilkins. "Midland High spreads their receivers out. They have a great athlete at tight end in Davis and send their backs out into the pattern. Foret has the great speed at flanker and their split end (Darren Thorpe, tied for 16th on the 4-5A list with eight catches for 118 yards) caught five passes against Cooper. We're extremely concered about Midland High's offense."

While Marcum was out with his hip injury, senior backup quarterback Jeff Alsup got a taste of playing time and McCutchen expects to use him against Permian.

"Marcum will probably be in first and Alsup will probably play some," said McCutchen.

Overall, the Bulldogs have remained healthy this season, something they desperately needed to do. For the Permian game, only one player is listed as questionable.

"I'll say, right now, William Hernandez is a question mark," said McCutchen. "He has a real sore arm but will probably play some. We'll probably go with John Cox, one or the other will start. John has been working at linebacker most of this week."

LOOKING BACK at the Cooper game, McCutchen pointed out something that he was very happy seeing: The team's intensity late in the game despite a sure loss.

Pitt's Foge Fazio lacking vote of football confidence

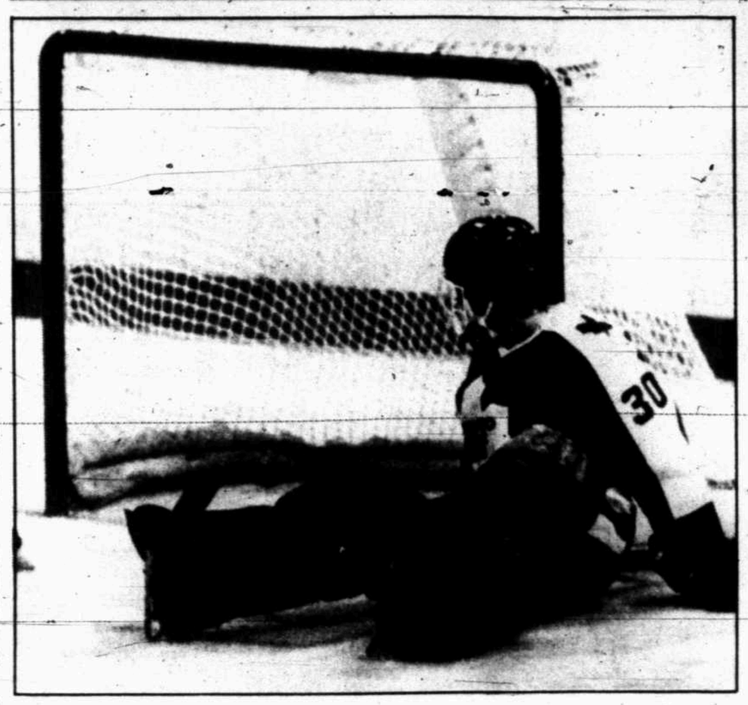

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Foge Fazio didn't have to wait until election day to learn he won't be getting a vote of confidence from University of Pittsburgh Athletic Director Ed Bozik.

"The problems are serious and we are concerned," Bozik said of Fazio's program, which seemed secure only 10 months ago when he was given a two-year contract extension.

Since then, the Panthers have compiled a 1-6-1 record and are 1-7-2 in their last 10 games. They have managed to defeat only East Carolina and were tied by Navy 28-28 last Saturday.

Fazio, at Pitt's weekly news conference Tuesday, had little comment on reports his contract would be bought out or that he would resign.

"I don't even want to talk about rumors. I'm not a quitter and the team is not quitters," he said.

Overtime loss cools Flames

Associated Press

Washington Coach Bryan Murray thinks the Calgary Flames will be one of the top clubs in the National Hockey League come playoff time. But that is small consolation for Flames Coach Bob Johnson.

"It's a tough one to swallow," Johnson said Wednesday night after the Flames dropped a 4-3 overtime decision to Washington.

"You hate to lose when you're winning with two minutes to go," Johnson said. "I thought we played pretty well after getting the lead. Then we made one mistake, they tied it, and the momentum really changed."

Butsy Erickson's goal with 1:36 left in regulation pulled Washington into a 3-3 tie and a goal by Mike Gartner 1:59 into overtime won it.

Until Washington's late rally, Calgary appeared headed for its eighth victory in 11 starts. Despite the Flames' inability to hold the lead, Washington Coach Bryan Murray was impressed.

"When you've had a chance to see all the teams in the league, you'll think they are among the top five or six in the league," he said. "I think they are going to give Edmonton a run in their division, at least in the playoffs."

Calgary spotted Washington a 2-0 lead, then stormed back with three unanswered goals. Eddy Beer's goal at 15:28 of the third period gave the Flames a brief advantage.

Nordiques 5, Whalers 3

Forward Tony McKegney scored three goals — his third career hat trick — and Dale Hunter collected four assists to spark Quebec.

Petar Stastny scored what proved to be the game winner on a short wrist shot at 8:46 of the third period. McKegney's third goal of the night provided icing with 3:22 remaining.

The victory snapped a four-game Quebec losing streak on the road. The loss kept the surprising Whalers in a first-place tie with Montreal in the Adams Division.

Sabres 3, Flyers 3

Philadelphia defenseman Brad McCrimmon scored with 4:21 remaining in the third period to cap a Flyers' rally from a 3-1 deficit.

Brian Propp scored the other two Flyer goals while Dave Andreychuk scored twice and John Tucker once for the Sabres.

The Sabres led 1-0 when Andreychuk scored in the first period and, after Propp tied it in the second, Tucker converted a penalty shot for a 2-1 lead. The shot was awarded when Brad Marsh fell on the puck in the Philadelphia crease.

Andreychuk netted his second of the night one minute later.

Propp pulled the Flyers within 3-2 when he cashed in on a rebound at 15:37 of the second period.

Penguins 7, Devils 6

Mario Lemieux scored on a breakaway to cap a four-goal Pittsburgh outburst in a 4:36 span in the first period but the Penguins then had to withstand a late New Jersey rally.

Wayne Babych and Warren Young added two goals apiece for Pittsburgh, which posted its third consecutive victory and sent the Devils to their third straight loss.

New Jersey defenseman Uli Hiemer scored three goals in helping the Devils come back from 4-1 and 7-3 deficits.

Blues 6, Maple Leafs 5

Brian Sutter's second goal of the night, at 1:08 of overtime, allowed the Blues to hold off Toronto.

The Maple Leafs, apparently finished after St. Louis built a 5-2 lead in the third period, evened the affair on goals by Bill Derlago, Russ Courtnall and Borje Salming.

Jorgen Pettersson and Bernie Federko scored power play goals for the Blues and Pat Hickey contributed a short-handed tally.

Kings 10, Canucks 3

Dave Taylor scored three goals for Los Angeles, which turned the game into a rout with five unanswered goals in the third period. Taylor's first shot of the game gave the Kings a 1-0 lead after only 24 seconds and his rebound shot made it 2-0. He secured his fifth career hat trick with a second-period goal that snapped a 3-3 tie and began a Los Angeles scoring assault against Vancouver goalie Richard Brodeur.

The loss was the ninth in a row for Vancouver, tying a club record. The Canucks' only victory this season was a 6-5 overtime decision over Los Angeles.

De Wit set to fight; opponent not chosen

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Olympic heavyweight silver medalist Willie de Wit of Canada, his weight increased by 10 pounds, will make his professional boxing debut here on Dec. 1 against an opponent to be named in the next 10 days.

De Wit will begin his professional career with a six-round bout as the main event of a six-fight card, Rod Proudfoot of Event Sport International told a news conference Wednesday.

"You can talk and say things but what we have to show is that we've made improvements," de Wit, now up to 210 pounds and looking fit and ready after two months of training in Burnet, Texas, said.

De Wit, 67-12 as an amateur, has been working on his defense, jab and relaxation. He said he's now ready to test his improvements and his ability to step up to six rounds. Amateurs fight only three rounds.

"What we have to find out now is how well he learned the lessons he's been taught," said Harry Snatic, de Wit's former trainer and present manager.

To do that, added Snatic, his opponent will have to be carefully selected. The opponent is expected to be a fighter who will test de Wit without beating him.

"This first fight is very important for us and our image," Snatic said. "I'm looking for an opponent who will go in the ring and box; someone who Willie can work his jab on and use his defense against.

"We don't want someone to go in and run for six rounds and not fight."

De Wit, a two-time world amateur heavyweight champion, lost the Olympic gold medal to American Henry Tillman.

Proudfoot said the card will also include Canadian Olympic boxers Billy Dunlop, now fighting as a light featherweight, and Peter Cunningham. They will be matched against American opponents.

The card will be held in the 17,500-seat Northlands Coliseum but only 8,000 seats will be available. The upper rows of seats will be curtained off.

"We're not naive enough to think we can sell 18,000 tickets," Proudfoot said. "This is a marketing strategy ... to induce demand."

Bulldogs win dual swim title

From Staff Reports

Swimming

BIG SPRING — The Midland High swim team finished the dual swim meet season here Wednesday with the Bulldog boys winning the District 4-5A dual meet title with twin victories over Big Spring and Odessa High.

Coach Jesse Marsh's boys become the second Tall City team to win a 4-5A championship this year. Midland Lee's cross country team won the 4-5A title last weekend in Big Spring.

THE MHS boys won a 50-33 decision over Big Spring and defeated Odessa High by a 52-31 margin, giving the Bulldog tankers a perfect 7-0 mark in district dual swim meets this year.

The MHS girls also swept Big Spring (49-25) and OHS (44-28) to finish fourth overall with a 4-3 dual record.

MHS won all but two events, winning both relays and individual races from Ricky Perkins, 160 IM; Jay Green, 60 Free; Gene Dockel, diving; Sam Perry, 100 Fly; Kyle Cook, 100 Free; Andrew Jordan, 500 Free; and John Brenner, 100 Back.

The MHS girls also won both relays and had individual victories from Stacy Barbee, 160 IM; Becky Simpson, 60 Free and 100 Fly; Kathleen Dunbar, 500 Free; Debbie Colson, 100 Back and Linda Stiles, 100 Breast.

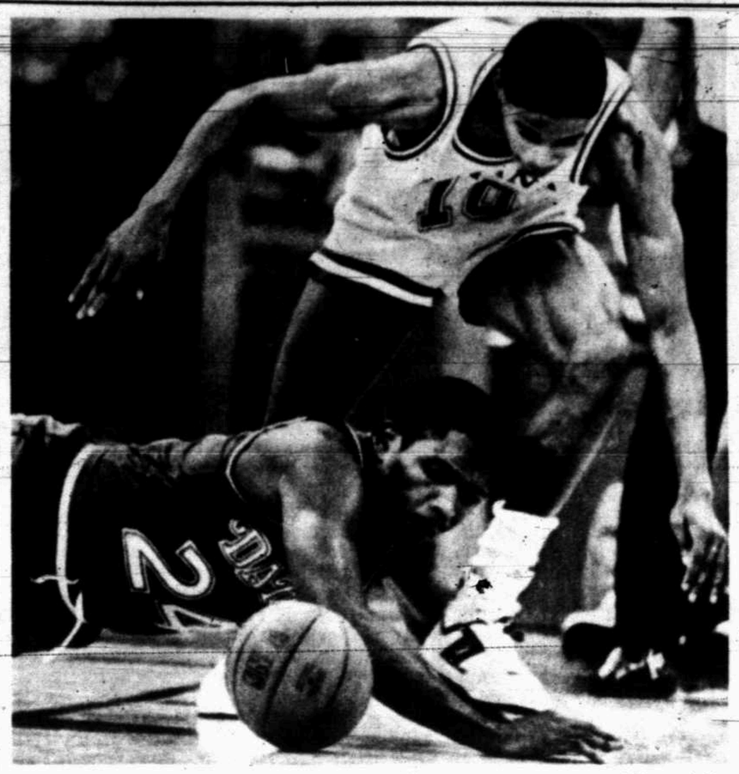

Midland High will begin its invitational swim season Nov. 16-17 when they travel to San Angelo.

IN OTHER swimming action this week, Midland Lee dropped a pair of dual meets to the San Angelo Bobcats Tuesday, the boys by a 48-35 count, the girls, 57-25.

Three Lee swimmers posted double victories in individual events. Alan Reed claimed top distance honors for the boys with run away wins in the 200 IM and 500 freestyle.

Caroline Reed was an easy winner for the girls in the 200 IM and 500 freestyle while Kelly Simmons placed first in the 100 butterfly and 100 backstroke.

Other first place Rebels in the meet were Frank Yarborough in the 100 freestyle, Roger Peets in diving and Nick Huppler in the 100 backstroke.

Stanley Wilson missing; drug problem feared

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cincinnati Bengals say they've sent troubled running back Stanley Wilson, whose whereabouts was unknown, to drug detoxification centers three times.

And the club was trying to contact the former Oklahoma star to inform him of a notification from the National Football League.

Neither the Bengals nor the league would comment on the contents of a letter from NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle until the Bengals tell Wilson about it.

"Shoot, he could be anywhere," Coach Sam Wyche said Wednesday.

"We're very concerned," said Mike Brown, assistant general manager.

Brown confirmed Wilson's problem has been drugs, according to The Cincinnati Enquirer. Wilson was sent to the Hazelden Foundation in Center City, Minn., immediately after the 1983 season, Brown said. Wilson was admitted there again last spring. On Aug. 26, the Bengals sent Wilson for four weeks to the CareUnit at Cincinnati.

"Last week, we had reason to believe Stanley had further involvement with drugs," Brown said. "We had a urinalysis taken, and we found out late in the week that the results were positive."

Wilson is on the injured reserve list after dislocating his left shoulder Sept. 27. The club indicated it wanted to activate him for last week's game at Houston. Wyche said he told Wilson he was suspended.

"Stanley's an excellent player," said Brown. "If he's fit, he's as good as we have at his position. But we're not going to play a player we know is involved with drugs.

"Even when it's not easy, we don't give up," said Brown. "Stanley completes the programs successfully; that's not the problem. The problem is he can't stay away when he gets out.

"This is not a simple thing. I'm not sure I understand all the problems associated with it. But some people don't rehabilitate the first time. Some don't rehabilitate the second time. Some don't rehabilitate a third time. Some never do," Brown said.

Majors seeks up front pay

Associated Press

If as many as a third of premier college athletes, especially football players, sign contracts with agents before the NCAA-allowed deadline — as one prominent agent claims — the questions become "Why?" and "What can be done?"

"Nowadays, the kids don't get anything," Tennessee football Coach Johnny Majors said. "It's not fair, because some of them come from homes where the parents can't afford to send them money."

Majors is one of many coaches and athletic directors who support the idea of paying the athletes up front, giving them perhaps $50 a month or maybe $1,000 a year to cover incidental costs.

"I think that's a possibility," Don James, coach of No. 1-ranked Washington, said. "I'd like to see the players get a little bit more. They do so much for their universities.

"There are problems involved here, though. Can an athletic department afford $50 a month for all college football and basketball players? Can an athletic department afford that amount for all its athletes, both men and women? It probably can't. So the key question would be: Is it (the money) going to be just for football?"

In early 1983, Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker left Georgia a year early and signed a multi-million-dollar contract with the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League after compromising his college eligibility by retaining an agent.

After losing Walker, Georgia Coach Vince Dooley said one of the problems was created by the NCAA itself when it changed its rules several years ago to halt schools from providing spending money and part-time jobs to athletes.

"Some of these fellows have no way of earning any money," Dooley said. "They can't have part-time jobs (during the school year), and if they need to go to school in the summer, they can't work in the summer."

In the last month, Jerry Robinson and Mike Quick of the Philadelphia Eagles and 1983 Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier have admitted violating NCAA rules by signing with agents during their senior seasons.

Leigh Steinberg, one of the leading agents, is the one who says one-third of the top collegians sign with agents before the NCAA deadline.

"The competition level among agents has grown enormously," says Steinberg, who adds that he has never signed an athlete with eligibility remaining. "The creation of the United States Football League means there are more jobs for college football players. And that has drawn new agents into the field. Now there are more agents than there are football players."

Many say Steinberg's estimate is too high.

"One-third sounds like an awfully large number," said Jack Davis of Oregon State University, who also is secretary-treasurer of the NCAA. "But that's not to infer that we believe there isn't a problem."

Temple football Coach Bruce Arians puts the number at 10 percent "at most."

George Andrews, a Chicago lawyer and sports agent, understands the player's situation.

"If a student is on scholarship, he can't have a job. If he's one of 12 children and his family is poor, there's no legitimate place where he can get funds," Andrews says. "That's why kids get into trouble — with gamblers, taking money from alumni or signing contracts with agents."

But Andrews says $50-a-month isn't enough. He suggests "$100, or $1,000 a year."

Those amounts aren't what cause the trouble, says Steve Morgan of the NCAA's enforcement department.

"Generally, the violations don't amount to things like $50 a month or so," he said. "It's usually bigger numbers than that. I don't think anybody is ready to provide big dollars, thousands of dollars."

Mavs fume over NBA salary cap

Maurice Cheeks gets degree from WTSU

Associated Press

General Manager Norm Sonju of the Dallas Mavericks betrays a tone of disgust when discussing the effects around the league of the new salary cap system.

"The whole purpose of some teams is to find ways of beating the cap system," Sonju says.

One thing teams are doing to get around the $3.6 million limit on salaries is to give huge signing bonuses, Sonju said. "The bonus can be prorated over the full term of the contract, even if it is paid immediately."

For example, if a player is given a $1 million signing bonus on a five-year contract, only $200,000 is counted against the team's payroll the first year even if the player gets all of the bonus.

The Mavericks, who have had seven first-round draft picks in the last four years, have three more in 1985, so they have had to keep especially close tabs on their salary situation.

"We have an established salary structure we are trying to stay within," Sonju said. "We're trying to run the team like a business and keep revenues ahead of expenditures."

There appears to be no limit to Dallas' penchant for planning ahead. Last week the Mavericks traded Bill Garnett and Terence Stansbury, each a former first-round pick, to Indiana for a 1990 or 1991 first-rounder.

NBA Notebook

SIX YEARS after joining the Philadelphia 76ers, Maurice Cheeks returned to West Texas State last summer to get his college degree.

"I was close, so I figured I might as well get it," Cheeks said. "It was a little hard getting accustomed to classroom work after being away so long, but I did it."

He said when teachers checked attendance and called out his name, heads would turn, as if to say, "Is that really him?"

THE MIAMI Sports and Exhibition Authority is pointing to a sold-out exhibition game last week between Washington and New Jersey as evidence that the Florida city could support an NBA franchise.

"This has to show the National Basketball Association we are sincere in wanting an NBA team," said Rick Horrow, executive director of the group, which was instrumental in arranging the game. "Having this game in Miami is the first step in our quest for an NBA franchise."

The sold-out game, however, was in 4,500-seat Knight Center, hardly the proper setting for an NBA team.

Proposals are expected to be filed next month concerning the construction of a 16,000-seat arena in downtown Miami.

THE INDIANA Pacers celebrated Halloween in grand style Wednesday night by showing the movie "Ghostbusters" after the team's game with the Dallas Mavericks and giving discounts to fans who got into the spirit of the occasion.

Persons received a $2 discount on $10 tickets to anyone dressed as a ghostbuster, ghost, Count Dracula, Frankenstein, witch or mummy; if they are a graduate of Transylvania University or if they are from Munster, Ind.

A critic might point out that the Pacers, who had the worst record in the league last season, provide more laughs than any hit movie.

SOME MILESTONES to look for this season: George Gervin needs 1,254 points to reach 25,000 for his pro career, a feat accomplished by only eight others; Gus Williams needs 57 steals (he had 189 last season) to become the all-time leader ahead of Randy Smith and Darrell Griffith needs 41 three-point goals (he had 91 in 1983-84) to become No. 1 ahead of Joe Hassett in that category.

Among coaches, Washington's Gene Shue needs 15 victories to become the third man to reach 700 and Dallas' Dick Motta needs 35 to reach the same plateau. Second on the all-time list is Portland's Jack Ramsay with 703, 235 behind Red Auerbach.

BULLDOGS

"There was 41 seconds left in the ball game (Cooper had the ball and the lead, 24-19) and we had young men still chanting on the sideline that we were going to win. We had no time outs left and were probably in the most hopless situation we could be in and they were still trying to win."

It's that kind of spirit McCutchen is hoping his 'Dogs take into Ratliff Stadium. It's the kind of spirit they've had all year and it will probably go down as the '84 team's trademark.

Crane was out of the playoff picture long ago. At 1-6-1, the last bright spot for the Golden Cranes was a 6-6 standoff with Ozona last week. Crane hasn't had much attack this season, a drastic turnaround from the 11-1-1 juggernaut of 1983. The Cranes get thrown in the fire this weekend when they host unbeaten Ballinger. The road doesn't get much better with a trip to Colorado City (7-1) due up next week.

One team that should have no trouble getting into the win column this week is Rankin. Buena Vista has already forfeited a pair of games this season because of injuries and defections from a team that had less than 20 players to start the season anyway. They decided to cancel again this week, so Rankin will improve its' mark to 2-6.

Auburn-Florida matchup heads college weekend

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The top eight teams in The Associated Press poll are heavy favorites this week and there isn't even a line on fourth-ranked Brigham Young against Texas-El Paso.

Apparently, the oddsmakers haven't learned that there's no such thing as an upset in college football these days.

But there is one game that figures to be very much in doubt until the final gun. That takes place in Gainesville, Fla., where 11th-ranked Auburn and No. 13 Florida meet for the 61st time.

THESE SOUTHEASTERN Conference rivals have played every year since 1945 and the series has become more heated each time. The home team has won each of the last eight meetings, four of the last five have been decided by a touchdown or less and more often than not the losers have come away blaming the officials.

This will be Florida Coach Galen Hall's first confrontation with Auburn since he was an assistant at Oklahoma and the Sooners trounced the Tigers 40-22 in the 1971 Sugar Bowl.

Hall is 4-0 since taking over as Florida's interim head coach three games into the season and he says that "this team handles off-field distractions like so much water off a duck's back."

The Gators, who never have won the SEC championship, are 2-point favorites over Auburn's defending champs. The pick is ... Auburn 21-14.

Last week's score was 39 right, 14 wrong and two ties for a percentage of .736; for the season, 320-111-11—.742. Against the line, last week's count was 19-16—.543; on the year, 131-122-4—.518.

California at No. 1 Washington (favored by 20): "Nobody believes it, but we look at the remaining season as an opportunity to win three football games," says 2-6 Cal's Joe Kapp. Two out of three ain't bad ... Washington 28-14.

NO. 2 Texas (by 14) at Texas Tech: The Longhorns could have a letdown after an emotional three-week stretch against Oklahoma, Arkansas and SMU ... Texas 20-13.

No. 3 Nebraska (by 26) at Iowa State: Oklahoma's Barry Switzer, an upset victim last week, says that "every one of those perennial lower-division teams (Iowa State is one) are playing exceptionally well against everybody." But this week the Cyclones run into a tornado ... Nebraska 42-14.

Texas-El Paso at No. 4 Brigham Young (no line): Will the Cougars' dream of a national championship turn out to be just a passing fancy? Not this week ... BYU 56-7.

No. 5 South Carolina (by 9) at North Carolina State: The Gamecocks are 7-0 and no team in the school's history has ever won more than eight games in a season. N.C. State started Georgia Tech's demise four weeks ago and is coming off a one-point loss to Clemson ... South Carolina 28-17.

No. 6 Miami, Fla. (by 29) at Louisville: The Hurricanes should be huffing and puffing and ready to blow somebody away after a week off ... Miami 49-14.

No. 7 Oklahoma State (by 20) at Kansas State: Pat Jones, in his first year as a head coach, is feeling the pressure of being in the Top Ten. Even facing a K-State team that has surrendered 123 points in its last two games, Jones says he doesn't "really feel good about much of anything these days." Wait until Saturday ... Oklahoma State 35-14.

MEMPHIS STATE at No. 8 Georgia (by 13): After five relative squeakers, the Bulldogs have won their last two games by a total of 57 points ... Georgia 27-17.

No. 9 Boston College (even) at Penn State: Doug Flutie, who has passed for 900 yards in his last two meetings with Penn State, needs 142 to become major-college football's all-time total offense king ... Boston College 28-24.

Missouri at No. 10 Oklahoma (by 6): The Sooners have scored only 23 points in their last two games against second-division teams and are in big trouble if quarterback Danny Bradley still is sidelined ... Oklahoma 21-14.

Virginia at No. 12 West Virginia (by 7): "When you become 7-1, you become a sitting duck," says WVU's Don Nehlen. Virginia is 5-1-1 and looking to make a big splash on the national scene. Make that a belly-whopper ... West Virginia 24-13.

No. 14 Florida State (by 5) at Arizona State: The Sun Devils have been as inconsistent as you can get — lose, win, lose, win, lose, win, lose. Upset Special of the Week ... Arizona State 34-30.

Mississippi at No. 15 LSU (by 12): Halloween night brought back memories of 1959 when the Tigers spoiled Ole Miss' bid for an undefeated season on Billy Cannon's famous 89-yard punt return. Trivia: Who punted the ball? Answer: Jake Gibbs ... LSU 28-14.

Indiana at No. 16 Ohio State (by 22): Indiana is 0-8 but only one loss was by more than nine points. The Buckeyes have struggled of late and are looking to beat up on someone ... Ohio State 45-14.

Wisconsin at No. 17 Iowa (by 13): The Badgers upset Ohio State last week but the Hawkeyes are starting to smell the roses in Pasadena ... Iowa 28-14.

No. 18 Southern California (by 6) at Stanford: Let's see if the Trojans are looking ahead to Washington. Second Upset Special ... Stanford 27-20.

Texas A&M at No. 19 Southern Methodist (by 13½): The Mustangs have dropped two in a row but the Aggies have really fallen on lean times ... SMU 28-14.

No. 20 Texas Christian (by 4) at Houston: TCU leads the nation in total offense, rushing and scoring and cracked the Top Twenty this week for the first time in 22 years ... Houston 30-27.

Tulane at Virginia Tech (by 5½): Third Upset Special ... Tulane 21-17.

Washington's Greg Ballard (42) and Milwaukee's Mike Dunleavy roll on the court as they go for basketball in NBA action Wednesday night. Ballard came up with the ball.

Dallas 'Blitzed' by sports column

DALLAS (AP) — A local businessman who led a failed bid to bring the Chicago Blitz football franchise to Dallas says he'll keep trying to give fans "a less expensive alternative" to the Dallas Cowboys.

He blamed both of Dallas' newspapers for the demise of an earlier proposal he said was almost nailed down.

Jody Tallal, an investment broker, announced Tuesday that a negative column by a Dallas sportswriter scared off an investor that was almost ready to buy 60 percent of the Blitz' United States Football League franchise.

"I am beginning to understand the allegations in the anti-trust suit concerning the effects of negative press on the USFL's ability to compete," he said.

The USFL has filed an anti-trust suit against the National Football League contending the established league is attempting to run the USFL out of business.

Everything was in place for the team's move to the Cotton Bowl — including Tallal's exclusive lease for a USFL team at the stadium — until a Dallas Times Herald reporter found out about the impending deal, Tallal said.

"We had always thoroughly intended to keep this whole affair confidential," Tallal said. The reporter found "that I was party to an exclusive option to lease the Cotton Bowl for USFL football games."

Tallal said he planned to join two businessmen — Kit Bradshaw, main owner of Christoffers Gourmet restaurant chain, and Paul Zarynoff, a sports management consultant from Atlanta — in a plan to acquire 40 percent of the Blitz.

The 60-percent partner — whom Tallal would not identify — was to be "a very conservative, locally based institution" that felt a football team "could be a good image-builder for them," Tallal said.

But the day that institution's board of directors met to consider the purchase, "a very negative article" appeared in a Dallas newpaper questioning whether Dallas could support the National Football League's Cowboys as well as the Blitz, Tallal said.

The Dallas Morning News said the negative article referred to by Tallal was a column by sportswriter Randy Galloway.

Boston rallies over Nets

Mavs escape lowy Pacers by one

Associated Press

The Boston Celtics received their championship rings, and when it counted in the fourth quarter, showed why they earned them.

The Celtics trailed injury-plagued New Jersey for most of their National Basketball Association game Wednesday night, then scored 10 straight points at the start of the fourth quarter to beat the Nets 116-105.

"We were very sloppy and didn't play well in the first half," said Larry Bird, who had 29 points, 13 rebounds and eight assists for the Celtics. "Then we started getting it together."

"It wasn't smooth," said center Robert Parish, who had 25 points and 15 rebounds for the Celtics. "You look at it and all you can say is that we worked hard and finally got into a groove. We got the kinks out. The adrenalin also was flowing very high."

Before the Nets-Celtics game, NBA Commissioner David Stern presented the Celtics with rings for last season's championship and their 15th title banner was hung from the rafters of Boston Garden.

Then Bird, the NBA's Most Valuable Player in both the regular season and the playoffs last season, scored just three points in the first period and 11 in the first half, and the Nets led 54-53 at halftime. He had 14 points in the third period, but the Celtics still trailed 86-83 going into the final 12 minutes.

Bird started the fourth quarter by hitting from the corner, passed to Parish for another basket, tossed in a 20-foot fallaway and then set up a fast-break layup by Quinn Buckner. Buckner, who had 13 points, quickly added a second basket, giving Boston a 93-86 lead.

"They strap you in a chair and explode a cyanide bomb underneath it," Nets Coach Stan Albeck said. "You can see it coming like a big cloud of smoke.

"The Celtics just outplayed us down the stretch. We got paralyzed and they made all the plays."

"One thing about this team: we always seem to play well at crunch time," said Dennis Johnson, who contributed 21 points.

NBA Highlights

The Nets, who have Darryl Dawkins, Albert King and Foots Walker on the injured list, were led by Otis Birdsong with 21 points, Darwin Cook with 18 and Mike Gminski with 17. They were hurt by the loss of guard Michael Ray Richardson in the sixth minute of the second period when he was ejected with two technical fouls.

Mavericks 101, Pacers 100

Rolando Blackman scored 28 points and defused a furious Indiana comeback by hitting the game-winning basket for Dallas with 16 seconds left.

The Pacers scored 10 straight points, six of them on two three-point plays by Steve Stipanovich, to tie the game 95-95 with 2:52 left. Two free throws by Stipanovich, who led the Pacers with 19 points, gave them a 100-99 advantage with 25 seconds to go before Blackman scored on a 10-foot jumper.

Blackman earlier scored nine points during a 13-2 Dallas run that helped it grab a 53-47 halftime lead. The Mavericks went on to lead 74-56 in the second half before the Pacers rallied.

Jay Vincent added 27 points and 17 rebounds for the Mavericks.

Bucks 105, Bullets 79

Terry Cummings and Paul Pressey scored eight points each during a 22-10 spurt in the third quarter that carried Milwaukee to victory over cold-shooting Washington.

The Bucks boosted their nine-point halftime lead to 68-47 with the rally. After the Bullets cut the deficit to 78-64, a 16-3 run by the Bucks clinched the victory.

Sidney Moncrief had 18 points and 11 rebounds to lead the Bucks, while Gus Williams had 20 points for Washington, which hit only 42.2 percent of its shots.

BYU will keep Holiday contract

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Brigham Young University will honor a Western Athletic Conference contract with the Holiday Bowl committee and play in the Dec. 21 bowl game if the Cougars win the the WAC football title, a school official says.

"We're contracted with the Holiday Bowl and that's the way it'll be," BYU Sports Information Director Dave Schulthess said Wednesday.

A Boston newspaper reported earlier this week that the Fiesta Bowl may invite the Cougars to play against Boston College or South Carolina for more money and a chance for the national title.

Schulthess called the story "typical media soufle" and said no one in authority from the Fiesta Bowl or NBC has been quoted as saying "they're trying to get us." He said "to my knowledge" no Fiesta Bowl official has contacted BYU.

The Holiday Bowl, held in San Diego, features the WAC champion and an invited opponent and BYU has played in all six Holiday Bowl games. The Cougars played in the Fiesta Bowl in 1974 before the WAC and Holiday Bowl entered into the contract.

BYU is unbeaten in eight games this year and has a 5-0 WAC record. The Cougars will play the University of Texas-El Paso at home Saturday and if they win they will clinch their ninth consecutive WAC crown. Wyoming is in second place with a 4-2 record.

The Boston Globe reported Fiesta Bowl officials planned to ask NBC to help sign BYU and offer each team $1 million to play in a potential title game on New Year's Day. BYU, ranked fourth in the nation, would receive $470,000 from the Holiday Bowl because it does not have a national television contract.

Paramount won't let Murphy get away

NEW YORK (AP) — The top brass at Paramount Pictures Corp. know a good thing when they see it, and aren't about to let red-hot comedian Eddie Murphy get away.

Murphy, who has already made such box office hits as "48 Hours" and "Trading Places" for Paramount, has signed to do a concert movie and five feature films for the studio, and plans to expand his own entertainment company under a new contract.

"I need a home-base in order to do what I wish to accomplish in this business, and I feel very comfortable at Paramount," Murphy said Wednesday in a statement released by Paramount.

Paramount plans to release "Beverly Hills Cop," the 23-year-old Murphy's first solo starring effort, beginning Dec. 7, and to release next summer a movie of his upcoming nationwide concert tour.

NEW YORK (AP) — City Council President Carol Bellamy said she wore a "two-piece suit" when she let herself be sawed in half to open a magic exhibit at Lincoln Center, but noted she'd like some help with a disappearing act.

"If the mayor disappears for 10 days, the charter says the president of the city council takes over," Miss Bellamy said Wednesday at a preview of "Magic: Past and Present," which opens today.

As he placed a wooden arch across her middle, magician George Schindler assured Miss Bellamy, "Nothing can go wrong. I used to do this to my sister — my half sister. She now lives in Dallas and Fort Worth."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Robby Benson, who starred in "Running Brave," "Walk Proud" and "The Chosen," underwent surgery to replace a congenitally defective heart valve.

Benson

Benson, 29, was doing "extremely well" after the surgery Wednesday, said UCLA Medical Center spokeswoman Cathy Dunn.

Benson began his acting career at age 5 on Broadway. He appeared in his first film, "Jory," in 1972, when he was 16.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Amanda Blake, who played Miss Kitty on the television series "Gunsmoke," is honorary chairman of the 1984 Great American Smokeout in Texas, and will ask smokers to kick the habit for a day.

Blake

Miss Blake said she smoked two packs of cigarettes a day for 20 years, but quit in 1976 after she was diagnosed as having mouth cancer. She said she is free of the disease after surgery.

Almost 36 percent of the 52 million American smokers tried to quit for a day last year, the American Cancer Society said. Eight percent made it the full eight hours and 4 percent still were smokeless one to 11 days later.

PARIS (AP) — Princess Stephanie of Monaco, the youngest child of Prince Rainier III and the late Princess Grace, was confronted by a man and woman who tried to kidnap her as she returned to her family's apartment in Paris.

The 19-year-old princess filed a police report Wednesday, saying that when the couple ordered her to get out of her car and into theirs on Monday night, she slipped away and into the home, said police and a palace spokeswoman.

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A group that held signs and Bibles aloft to protest a concert by Boy George and the Culture Club plans to picket concerts by other rock performers, including Neil Diamond and Bruce Springsteen, says the group's leader.

The protest by about 150 people Wednesday was organized by the Rev. David Diamond, who said his group was upset because a "self-professed drag queen" was being allowed to perform in the tax-supported LSU Assembly Center.

Controversial call kicks NBC into first place

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NBC's request that Nielsen prime time ratings for last week include 51 minutes of National Football League overtime kicked the network into first place in a revision protested by CBS, which had been first.

The A.C. Nielsen Co. agreed to NBC's request that it include part of Sunday's telecast of the Raiders-Broncos game that ran over into prime time on the East Coast, NBC spokesman Gene Walsh said Wednesday.

Nielsen also increased CBS' rating slightly by including the post-7 p.m. audience for the New York Giants-New England Patriots game on CBS, Walsh said.

About 100 stations were carrying football Sunday from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m., and the ratings for those stations were not included in audience measurements that came out Tuesday, he explained.

"Nielsen now has included those stations," he said. "The adjustment resulted in NBC winning the week."

ABC was not affected in last place.

Walsh said the original Nielsens gave NBC an 8.4 rating for the Sunday 7-8 p.m. timeslot, CBS a 24.0 and ABC a 12.2. The revised numbers for the same period gave NBC 19.3, CBS 26.8 and ABC 12.2.

That changed NBC's average rating for the week ended Oct. 28 to a 16.6, compared with CBS' 16.5 and ABC's 15.3, Walsh said. Previously, CBS had been declared the week's winner with a 16.4 rating, to NBC's 16.0 and ABC's 15.3.

Nielsen says a 16.6 rating means 16.6 percent of all homes with television — or about 13.9 million households — were tuned to NBC in an average prime time minute.

"The end result is NBC wins for the first time in an awful long time without sports or special programming," Walsh noted.

NBC, on the strength of early season World Series baseball broadcasts and improved ratings for new and returning shows, still maintained a season-to-date ratings advantage of 17.3 to CBS' 16.9 and ABC's 15.3

CBS, however, challenged the revised Nielsens, saying that while it agreed the football games should be included, NBC was getting credit for both football and the two shows that normally run from 7-8 p.m. Sunday, "Punky Brewster" and "Silver Spoons."

CBS research vice president David Poltrack said the Raiders-Broncos game, which lasted 3 hours, 51 minutes, ended at 7:51 EST and preempted "Punky Brewster" and "Silver Spoons" in the Eastern and Central time zones.

But in West Coast cities such as San Francisco, the Raiders-Broncos game began at 1 p.m. and ended at 4:51 p.m. PST, and "Punky Brewster" and "Silver Spoons" were broadcast from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. as scheduled.

But in order to measure football game audiences equally, Nielsen decided to pretend the Raiders-Broncos game began at 4 p.m. EST, Poltrack said. Thus, Nielsen counted the number of West Coast viewers who watched the 51-minute overtime period, plus those West Coast viewers who watched "Punky Brewster" and "Silver Spoons" between 7 p.m. and 8 p.m., Poltrack said.

"As a result of this procedure, NBC is now getting credit for 'Punky Brewster,' 'Silver Spoons' and football. So San Francisco is getting double counted. They should only count football in those markets where 'Punky Brewster' and 'Silver Spoons' didn't run," Poltrack said.

Neighbors meet in Mongolia

CROSSLAKE, Minn. (AP) — Joyce Peck lived in Crosslake almost 50 years, within miles of Bob and Joan Turner of Manhattan Beach, but they had to travel to Outer Mongolia to find that out.

Mrs. Peck said she was standing with her tour group just outside the capital city, Ulan Bator, when a woman from another group "came up and said 'You sound like an American, where are you from?'

"I said the Midwest and she said, 'Whereabouts in the Midwest?' I said Minnesota and she said she was from there, too, and asked me where from in Minnesota. I said you probably haven't heard of it. It's a small village in northern Minnesota called Crosslake. She just let out a scream and grabbed this man and said 'Look, dear, I found someone from Crosslake.'"

Indians star in play

NEW YORK (AP) — A drama about the urbanization of American Indians and the problems they continue to face will be presented at the Spanish Institute.

The two-week run of "The Ecstasy of Rita Joe," presented by the American Indian Community House, is the first production of the play in the United States with Native American actors in the cast.

Written by Canadian playwright George Ryga, the drama was first presented in 1969 in Quebec in French.

When there has been an exciting battle of wits between declarer and the defenders, you wish the contest could end in a draw. Unfortunately, the nature of the game dictates there must be a winner—and a loser.

South was too strong to open one no trump, so he opened one diamond and jumped in no trump at his next turn. North might have done better to rebid three diamonds rather than raise no trump. That would have brought a spade preference from South, and would have led to a slightly sounder contract of four spades.

West led the queen of hearts and continued the suit after declarer made a routine holdup. Declarer won the second trick and, since he obviously could not come to nine tricks without the spade suit, he entered dummy with the nine of diamonds to lead a low spade.

From East's point of view, it was obvious that his partner could not have an entry in a minor suit—the only hope was that West could gain the lead in spades. However, the heart suit would have to be cleared first, so East made the fine play of rising with the ace of spades to return a heart, won in the closed hand.

It was tempting for declarer to cross to the table with a diamond so that he could repeat the spade finesse. Fortunately, declarer realized if East held the queen of spades he could be permitted to win a trick with that card—East presented no threat to the contract; West was the defender who had to be kept off lead. So declarer banged out the king of spades, and his keen analysis was rewarded when the lady came tumbling down. Declarer ended up with two overtricks.

Labor pact new era of cooperation

By EDWARD MILLER
AP Auto Writer

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — Ford Motor Co. Chairman Philip Caldwell says the signing of a contract with the United Auto Workers marks a new era of "cooperation and not confrontation" between auto industry labor and management.

Caldwell, UAW President Owen Bieber, and dozens of company and union officials signed the three-year labor pact Wednesday at the 52-foot-long bargaining table at Ford world headquarters.

"We have just completed the second major negotiation in which we have had neither a strike nor a strike target date set," said Caldwell, who led Ford as it negotiated a 1982 concessions contract with the UAW at the height of the auto industry's worst slump since the 1930s.

But, while Caldwell spoke, the UAW was announcing in Toronto a strike tar et date against Ford — Nov. 9 — as the company and union bargain for a contract covering 14,000 Canadian workers.

A strike against Ford in Canada is considered unlikely at this point, however, given Monday's overwhelming ratification by the UAW of a pact with General Motors Corp. in Canada, and given Ford's willingness to settle under the general pattern of an agreement signed two weeks ago by GM and the UAW.

The three-year GM and Ford contracts, covering 350,000 and 115,000 American workers respectively, provide income protection on a scale unprecedented in U.S. industry.

Covered are workers with one year or more seniority who are displaced by automation or the subcontracting of work outside the company. Up to $1 billion was set aside for the program by GM and up to $280 million by Ford.

The Ford contract, unlike the one at GM, contains a three-year ban on plant closings.

The contracts don't keep GM and Ford from farming out work to overseas and non-union shops, as some union members would have liked.

U.S. energy use slashed

WASHINGTON (AP) — With most of the savings coming from industry, Americans are now using an average 21 percent less energy now than they did before the Arab oil embargo a decade ago, the government says in a new report.

By turning down thermostats, driving less and buying more fuel-efficient cars, machinery and appliances, Americans reduced energy use 4 percent to 6 percent in each of the three years after the 1979 Iranian revolution sent world oil prices soaring from $13 to $34 a barrel.

But with oil prices down to less than $29 a barrel last year and natural gas prices finally stabilizing, per capita energy consumption fell only 2.4 percent last year, the Energy Information Administration said.

In economic terms, the United States is using 25 percent less energy now than it did in 1970 for every dollar of goods and services it produces, after adjustments for inflation, the agency said in its annual report on energy conservation indicators.

The report, issued Wednesday, said conservation has reduced energy consumption in two ways: direct cutbacks on energy use such as driving less and lowering thermostats in the winter, and longer-term advances such as increasing insulation thickness and the fuel efficiency of automobiles.

For example, it said 1983 model cars on average were about 83 percent more fuel efficent than 1973 models.

Per capita energy consumption fell from 231.5 million British thermal units, a basic measure of heat, in 1982 to 226 million Btu last year, compared with a per capita consumption of 285 million Btu in 1973.

More than three-fifths of the drop occurred in industry, which now consumes 37 percent of all the energy used in the country, down from 46 percent of the total U.S. consumption in the 1960s.

The report noted that Americans sharply cut their traveling in response to the oil price shocks caused by the 1973 Arab embargo and the 1979 Iranian revolution.

But in explaining why transportation still accounts for 36 percent of the nation's total energy use — and 65 percent of its oil consumption — it said Americans resumed their pre-1973 and pre-1979 travel patterns within three years, offsetting the fuel savings from more efficient cars.

While new American-made cars last year averaged 24.2 miles per gallon, compared with 14.7 mpg for 1975 models, they still guzzle much more gas than European cars, at 27.7 mpg for 1983 models, and Japanese brands at 33 mpg.

Residential energy use, three-fourths of it for space and water heating, fell only 0.6 percent last year as prices for natural gas, the primary fuel for more than half of the nation's single-family homes, stabilized.

After natural gas shortages in the late 1970s sent prices of the fuel skyrocketing, residential energy use dropped 6 percent in 1979, an additional 8 percent in 1980 and another 6 percent in 1981.

Bank board names new president

Midland American Bank's Board of Directors recently elected Robert D. Southerland president and chief executive officer, according to Sam Hilburn, chairman of the board.

He is a 1961 graduate of Texas Tech, with a bachelor's degree in finance and a 1975 graduate of the Southwestern Graduate School of Banking at SMU. Southerland is a member of Trinity Presbyterian Church, where he is an elder and past chairman of the board of Deacons.

Professionally, Southerland was employed by Commercial Bank & Trust Co. in Midland in 1968. He was promoted through the ranks and was elected president of Commercial Bank (now Texas American Bank/Midland) in 1979.

He has served as president of the Midland and Permian Basin Chapters of the American Institute of Banking and as chairman of the Texas AIB State Committee. He has instructed numerous local banking courses and holds a graduate certificate from that institute.

Southerland also has a record of service to the Midland community. He has served as a director for the Chamber of Commerce, a member of the Planning & Zoning Commission, the Mayor's Commission for Local Community Development, ddirector of the Midland Boys Club, vice president and director of the Midland Jaycees, treasurer of the March of Dimes, president of the Lee High Bandoliers and a member of the Board of the Salvation Army.

He is currently treasurer and trustee of the Presbyterian Pan American School in Kingsville, Texas, a member of the Young Life Advisory Committee, Legislature Committee of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, the Texas Tech University Foundation and the Industrial Foundation of Midland, and treasurer of Phi Kappa Psi Alumnae Association.

Following the board of director's meeting, Mr. Hilburn stated, "Midland American Bank is proud to have Robert Southerland assume the management of our bank. His 22 years of financial and commercial banking experience and expertise will lend strength to the growth and development of our organization."

Mistakes by major U.S. banks become shareholders' burden

By ROBERT A. BENNETT
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Shareholders of the nation's major bank holding companies have begun paying, in some cases heavily, for their institutions' mistakes. These include enormous loans to energy, agricultural and real-estate businesses in the United States and to financially troubled countries in Latin America.

The costs to shareholders were apparent in the third-quarter earnings reports, released during the past two weeks. In some cases, the burden on shareholders was obvious, as in the case of the First Chicago Corp., which reported a loss of $71.8 million for the three months ended Sept. 30. First Chicago attributed the loss mainly to bad loans made to energy-related businesses and to agriculture.

But shareholders of other major banking companies also have been hurt, although less dramatically.

Under pressure from regulators and investors, most banking companies have been reducing their profits to bolster their reserves for loan losses.

A bank regularly puts money into a special account called the loan-loss reserve. The funds added to this account reduce the bank's profit.

When the bank decides that all or part of a loan will not be repaid, it charges that amount against the loan-loss reserve. This reduces the reserve but has no direct effect on the bank's earnings.

Only if the bank decides to replenish the reserve, as it usually does, are its earnings affected by loan charge-offs. To the degree that a bank puts more money into the reserve than the amount of loans actually charged off, the reserve is increased at the expense of net income.

Some banks have been diluting the ownership of their shareholders by selling more stock to the public at prices far below its book worth.

Stock prices of the major bank holding companies have been depressed for some time, partly in anticipation of what is beginning to happen now to bank earnings.

So far at least, the reduced earnings as a result of rising provisions to loan-loss reserves have not led banks to cut the dividends they pay, but that is possible in the future if large loan losses actually occur and cut into the reserves that are being established.

If bank regulators and investors insist that the proportion of reserves to total loans remain at or above current levels, the recent costs to shareholders will be permanent.

However, if the bulk of the problem loans are repaid and if regulators and investors become comfortable with a lower level of reserves, shareholders may recoup net income in the future.

"Folks who say that banks have been avoiding facing their problems haven't been watching what has been happening," said Lawrence W. Cohn, first vice president and bank-stock analyst of Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. "Banks and their shareholders have been taking hits in a variety of hidden ways." He cited several examples from the third-quarter reports.

The Chase Manhattan Corp., which owns the Chase Manhattan Bank, the nation's third-largest bank, received about $49 million in the third quarter as settlement for a lawsuit related to a $117 million after-tax loss sustained in 1972. But none of the $49 million went to Chase stockholders in the form of earnings.

Instead, the windfall was added to Chase's reserve for loan losses. Besides that $49 million, Chase also added $75 million to the loan-loss reserve, although actual loan losses, or charge-offs, were only $51 million.

Chase said the move was "in recognition of continuing uncertain conditions in certain developing countries." As a result, Chase's per-share earnings plummeted 38.4 percent, to $1.70, from $2.76.

The Manufacturers Hanover Corp., owner of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., the fourth-largest bank, sold securities it had carried for many years and recorded a $30 million gain. Again, its stockholders received none of that as earnings — it was added to the loan-loss reserve. Over the past year, Manufacturers Hanover increased its loan-loss reserve by $202 million, or almost 53 percent, to $584.2 million.

In addition, Manufacturers Hanover has sold large amounts of common and preferred stock over the last year. The common stock was sold at a price of about $40 a share when the book value was about $60.

"Book value" is simply a measure of how much of a company's net assets each share represents, so selling shares below book reduces the proportion owned by existing stockholders. What's more, dividends paid on Manufacturers' newly issued preferred stock reduced the amount of earnings available to the holders of common stock. As a result, although Manufacturers Hanover reported a slight gain in aggregate net income, its per-share earnings plunged more than 23 percent.

Even the Security Pacific Corp., consistently one of the most profitable of the nation's leading banks and considered especially well run, reduced its profitability in the third quarter by adding substantially to its loan-loss reserves.

The Los Angeles holding company, which owns the Security Pacific National Bank, took a $115 million profit from selling its headquarters building and put that plus an extra $35 million in its loan-loss reserve.

Security Pacific said the dramatic increase in the reserve was "in recognition of the continuing uncertainty with respect to the bank's credits to developing countries."

Like Manufacturers Hanover, the Chemical New York Corp., which owns the Chemical Bank, reported a slight increase in aggregate net income for the third quarter, to $77.2 million, from $76.3 million in the comparable period of 1983. But earnings on a per-share basis declined 5.3 percent. This reflected sales of common stock and increased dividends paid on preferred stock.

Other leading banks took similar steps, some in earlier quarters.

"Rather than giving the shareholders an extra dollar of earnings, they're adding it to the reserves," said James H. Wooden, vice president and bank-stock analyst at Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith. "All the banks are doing it. It seems to be a form of peer pressure."

Much of the pressure, however, has been coming from federal bank regulators, who have been stung by a number of recent bank collapses, particularly that of the Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Company of Chicago. Continental — once the nation's sixth-largest banking organization — required a $4.5 billion rescue by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Trailways asks for rate hike

AUSTIN — Trailways Lines, Inc. and its affiliated bus companies have filed an application with the Railroad Commission to increase intrastate passenger fares by 48.7 percent over current levels.

A public hearing has been scheduled at 9 a.m. Thursday, November 15, in the Railroad Commission's headquarters building at 1124 S. IH 35 in Austin.

Protests to the Trailways application should be sent to the director of the Commission's Transportation Division of Capitol Station, P.O. Drawer 12967, Austin 78711. Protests must be received at the Commission by Nov. 12.

Through its Transportion Division, the Commission regulates intrastate bus and truck companies. Before these companies can increase their rates or fares, they must prove a financial need for the change.

IPAA warns oil industry on tax law

SAN DIEGO — The Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) warned that any new congressional appoach to taxation must "proceed at a deliberate and careful pace" and that hurried enactment of tax reform could be devastatin to the nation and to oil producers.

In a recent issued at the association's annual meeting in San Diego, the Tax and Economic Policy Committees said that while simplification of tax laws appears attractive at least initially, any changes could hae "far reaching and long lasting consequences."

The IPAA committees noted that the threats of increased or modified tax plans take on added importance since the new congress will inevitably wrestle with ways to reduce the federal dificit.

The report notes that much of the complexity of the present tax system has developed in an attempt to achieve greater fairness. The committee said "the authors of tax legislation and regulations believe every business and commercial transaction no matter how personal or minor, is tax motivated. Thus, in an effort to foresee every possible interpretation and every conceivable means of structuring a transaction to avoid taxation, the drafters have added immensely to the complexity of the Tax Code.

"Those who desire to honestly comply with the tax and pay their fair share are confused and confounded. In frustration, some seek a way to avoid taxation when they otherwise would not or they innocently run afoul to the arcane tax provisions. Meanwhile, those whose intention from the outset was to evade taxes will find greater opportunity because of the increased complexity.

OPEC minister pens poem about plight

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — With the oil market threatening to cave in on OPEC, one Arab oil minister found time during the cartel's emergency meeting here to compose a poem about the predicament.

The eight-stanza poem was written in Arabic by Mana Saeed Oteiba, oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, and translated into English by OPEC officials. According to one couplet near the end:

Malicious enemies keep us in sight;
In OPEC's plight is their greatest delight.

Another section urges the cartel to remain unified despite outside pressures:

We are the crew who have the expertise
To warn against dangers of storms and gales;
If winds of dissension will blow our sails
And there appears no safe harbor in sight;
If conflicts plunge us further in our plight;
If different views will not unite to bind
Efforts, then our differences are blind
And our roaming ship is tossed and sunk.

Of the cartel members' tendency to cheat on their own price and production rules, Oteiba wrote:

Do not ask me to mention any name.
You know all the secrets and whom to blame!

Economic downturn keeps contract drilling costs low

SAN DIEGO — The current economic downturn in the domestic petroleum industry is having at least one positive side — a measurable reduction of drilling costs.

In a report released at the annual meeting of the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) in San Diego, the association' cost study committee notes "there is no better time to drill."

The committee reports that the cost of drilling has been stable for about a year and that the number of rigs available or drilling stands at 4,580.

The committee estimates "an increase in active rotary rigs in 1985 to 2,750 and the number of wells drilled to rise from 70,000 to 72,000. This pick-up in drilling will be a welcome sign to the service companies which have been undergoing difficult times."

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

Financial conglomerates may be scrutinized

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—House Financial Institutions Committee, in its interim report to the 1985 Legislature, recommends lawmakers keep a close eye on growth of financial service conglomerates and development of electronic funds transfer systems.

However, the report doesn't recommend specific legislative action at present, due in part to continued developments at the Federal level regarding financial institutions.

"Banking is no longer the sole province of banks," the report notes, commenting that banks face competition from, among other entities, "a phenomenon labelled financial services conglomerates."

Such conglomerates developed as a result of companies involved in other services diversifying during the 1970s, often by acquiring subsidiaries to offer "a host of services and products," including mortgage, commercial and installment loans; checking services, and various investment options, including money market funds.

The Sears Financial Network is cited as an example of the financial service conglomerate.

Currently, the report notes, "Texas law does not specifically focus on the operations of financial services conglomerates, with the possible effect that, as time moves on, the conglomerates (will) continue to develop in ways that the more highly regulated traditional financial institutions cannot."

For example, the report says, conglomerates could "circumvent" restrictions on "geographic outreach" of banks by structuring their operations to avoid doing business in a way which would come under bank holding company legislation.

Banks, the report says, have received some relief through "the emergence of a de-facto system of interstate banking," with growth of credit card operations and automated teller machine operations crossing state lines.

Electronic funds transfer systems are becoming more numerous, the report notes, with a diversity of state laws affecting the operations of national interchange networks.

Given the variety of state laws in existence, the report concludes, "Texas might be better served if it refrained from promulgating further legislation in this area and instead looked to the development of a national EFT interchange law."

The growing use of automated teller machines also raises questions regarding fraud, invasion of privacy and how to deal with problems of machine malfunctions, the report comments.

Electronic transfers are creating "an alternative to and permits the demise of the traditional paper payment system," the report says, and the Uniform Commercial Code needs to be revised accordingly.

The report also discusses use of subsidiary corporations by savings and loan associations, noting that while associations are limited in the types of activities they may engage in, their subsidiaries aren't nearly so limited.

Subsidiaries are authorized to engage in various real estate, insurance, development and investment function, and the growth in subsidiaries has been due to the fact that "the traditional business" of associates, particularly real estate loans and savings deposits, haven't generated adequate revenues in recent years.

The report makes no recommendations regarding subsidiaries, noting the Savings and Loan Department has reported improper use of them hasn't been a problem.

Also examined by the committee was the possibility of investment in commercial paper by the State Treasurer.

Wildcat spudded in France's Paris Basin

DALLAS—North Sea Sun Oil Co., Ltd. has spudded its first exploratory well in France's Paris Basin. The Cudot No. 1 is being drilled to a depth of 7,500 feet in the western portion of the Joigny license southeast of Paris.

A second well, the Beauregard No. 1, will be drilled later on the eastern portion of the license near the old Joigny field. The Joigny license area covers about 200 square miles (530 square kilometers).

Seismic work began last December and continued through June, with additional seismic activity planned for this fall. The seismic work has consisted of vibroseis, a non-destructive method using energy to vibrate the land surface. Companie General de Geophysique is the contractor.

Volunteers' time doesn't count for tax deductions

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — The swing sets were rusting and the sandboxes were rotting at the local playground, and a request went out for help.

The charitable organization that ran the popular gathering spot for the community's children had the money to buy the new equipment required. But it needed volunteers to set it up.

As responsible citizens, Ron, the construction worker, and his neighbor Hal, the accountant, answered the call.

Ron took on the task of designing the new playground and mobilizing a crew of other volunteers to get it built. Hal helped oversee the financial side of the operation, and pitched in with a wrench and hammer as well.

After a few weeks of intermittent hard work — including some time away from their regular jobs — the playground project was finished, to the satisfaction of all.

"Nice," exulted Hal as they took a last look at their handiwork and climbed into Ron's car for the trip home. "Kind of satisfying to see it finished."

"You bet," Ron replied. "And it's going to be even more satisfying when you do my tax return for this year. I figure all that time and trouble for a non-profit organization is worth some big deductions."

"Hold on," Hal said. "I hate to spoil your good mood. But there isn't much either of us can write off.

"We used your car to get there and back, and we have a record of the dates and mileage, so you can take that. And your power tool that broke the other day — when you get it fixed, keep the receipt. But that's about it."

"You accountants are a real fun bunch," Ron grumbled.

"Don't blame us," Hal said. "We don't make the rules — we just try to keep up with them."

Though this tale is imaginary, it is by no means fantastic. Countless Americans engage in volunteer work each year, in the process bumping up against some complicated tax rules whether they realize it or not.

In most cases, contributions of money to qualifying organizations are deductible on the contributor's income tax return. But if the commodity donated is time, it's usually a different story.

"A charitable deduction is not permitted for the value of services performed by volunteers, and no deduction is allowed for compensation lost while performing charitable services," the accounting firm of Deloitte Haskins & Sells observes.

"However, unreimbursed out-of-pocket expenses incurred when rendering services to a charity may constitute a deduction."

One typical such expense is the use of a personal automobile. Expenses directly related to the use of the car for charitable purposes can be taken in full if they are adequately documented.

Otherwise, the taxpayer can deduct mileage only at the miserly rate of 9 cents a mile, or 12 cents after 1984.

When travel on volunteer missions gets more elaborate, so do the tax considerations. If, for example, a volunteer attends a convention, the costs incurred are normally deductible only if the taxpayer involved is appointed to attend by the sponsoring charitable organization.

"Attendance prompted by one's own initiative or the sense of duty as a member will usually result in no deduction," Deloitte Haskins & Sells says.

The volunteer's motives in any given endeavor are another touchy question. "Where the motivation for rendering services to charity includes the anticipation of a direct benefit to the donor," the accounting firm points out, "the courts have disallowed a charitable deduction.

"The rationale used is that the services provided are presumed to be a direct payment for the benefit received."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

You can sell house, buy condo, remain debt free

Q. I am 61. My husband is 67. Our income is approximately $20,000 a year. We have $20,000 in six-month bank savings certificates, $2,000 in stock and a mortgage-free home valued at $57,000.

We are contemplating selling our home, which is too large for use now, and buying a condominium costing approximately $65,000. We are thinking about making a $15,000 down payment on the condo and putting the rest of the money from the sale of our present home into savings certificates.

Is this a wise plan, or should we keep our house and remain debt free? Also, will we be entitled to the once-in-a-lifetime exclusion from tax on the sale of our home?

A. You can sell your house, buy the condo and still remain debt free — simply by using all the money from the sale of your present home and some of the money you now have in six-month certificates to pay the condo's total purchase price.

You'll come out ahead that way, unless the interest you would get on the savings certificates is higher than the interest you would have to pay on a mortgage you would take out on the condo.

Don't make the mistake many people do of thinking that, because mortgage interest is deductible, you automatically are better off making a small down payment and investing your available cash. You would have to pay income tax on the certificate interest. So, when your money earns less than you are paying on your debt, you are a loser.

Yes, you qualify for the once-in-a-lifetime exclusion from tax on the profit from the sale of your home. But you don't have to take that exclusion. Because you will buy a more expensive principal residence within two years before or after the sale of you present home, you can postpone the tax bite on the sale until some later time when you sell a principal residence and buy a less expensive one.

My advice is to choose the postponement alternative. Save the once-in-a-lifetime exclusion until you have to use it.

Hospice staff believes in life up to death

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Most professing Christians believe in life after death. But Gail Wilson and Carol Armstrong, of Hospice of Midland Inc., also believe in life up to death.

Hospice of Midland, one of 1,500 organizations nationwide dedicated to the care of the terminally ill, is participating in National Hospice Month in November. It is not a dreary outfit.

"We don't dwell on the subject of death," said Carol Armstrong, director of volunteers. "Our direction of thought is that these people are living and we want to make them feel well and make each day just as good as it can be."

"This does not mean that we don't discuss death," said Gail Wilson, patient care coordinator. "When they are willing, we are willing."

"Willing" is a key word in the operation of Midland's Hospice. They are completely supported by private donations and primarily staffed with volunteers.

Many of these funds are supplied during the group's annual fund-raising drive which begins Nov. 26 and runs through Jan. 15. The Friends of Hospice Fund Drive, initiated last year, has helped Midland Hospice Inc. to be called "one of the two finest hospices in the United States" by world-renowned Hospice initiator, Dr. Richard Lamerton of London.

Operating out of one of Midland's old homes, donated by the Glass family, Hospice of Midland maintains services for its patients seven days a week, 24 hours a day.

"We've even had patients call us up at night when they didn't need us just to make sure that we would really be there," said Ms. Wilson.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

In honor of National Hospice Month, the group will be holding an open house on Nov. 15 from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. Visitors will be given tours of the facility. A large, portable display is also being planned, as well as appearances by Hospice staff members on area television shows.

Hospice of Midland Inc. is, according to Mrs. George A. Thomas, Chairman of Friends of Hospice Drive, "a fully licensed, non-profit agency whose goal is to help those who wish to die at home by providing palliative care for the patient, emotional and spiritual support to both the patient and family, and an active bereavement program for the family.

"It is a medically-directed, nurse-oriented program with services available 24 hours a day, seven days a week, at no charge to the citizens of Midland County," said Mrs. Thomas.

Hospice of Midland has a staff of eight and "over 100 volunteers" to take care of more than 100 patients a year. Currently, the organization is caring for 38 patients.

"Basically, our patients have six months or less to live," said Ms. Wilson. Ms. Wilson first got interested in Hospice when her own brother was diagnosed as terminally ill. Unlike most, however, her brother recovered and is in fine health today.

Wilson and other staff members often get referrals from a doctor about a patient. At that point a Hospice staff person visits the patient's home and makes an assessment of what is needed — occupational therapy, nutritional needs, number of visits required and other areas important to the patient's comfort.

After it is decided what is needed, volunteers and nurses work closely with the patient and family in making the last months of the patient's life as pain-free and enjoyable as possible. Hospice workers help prepare meals, iron clothes, educate the family on medication, talk, touch and hug.

"You can't work here and not be touched," said Lisa King, a Hospice nurse. "It has changed my whole way of looking at life and death."

Gramm denies Social Security charge

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

There were no new issues raised when Phil Gramm spoke to a rally in Midland/Odessa Wednesday afternoon. But afterward he denied a charge concerning Social Security payments made by his opponent, Lloyd Doggett.

"Social Security payments are 44 percent higher today than when the Gramm-Latta budget went into effect (three years ago)," Gramm said after the rally in the Executel at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Doggett had charged in a news release that due to Gramm's Social Security budget cuts the citizens of Midland County had lost an average of $771.

In his talk to supporters, Gramm listed Social Security as one of the issues in the heated Senate campaign — a race he said he can win according to the latest polls which show him ahead by 10 to 15 points.

"I intend to keep Social Security. My momma gets $333 a month in Social Security. I'm not gonna take that away from my momma. Mondale and my opponent have been trying to scare senior citizens to death about Social Security. It's not working," Gramm said.

The rally had been designed for the national media traveling with Gramm on his last swing through West Texas before Tuesday's general election. Volunteers from the phone bank had been calling people to show up and a band greeted the candidate.

Cody Ball/Reporter-Telegram

Republican senatorial candidate Phil Gramm reaches for another hand to shake during a rally Wednesday at the airport Executel.

With about 200 persons packed into a small room, the air became hot and the candidate began sweating before the television cameras' hot lights.

"Do you want to raise taxes or control spending?" he asked the crowd.

"Control spending," the group yelled back.

"So do I," Gramm said.

The next question came: "Are you for or against a balanced budget?"

"For!"

"So am I," he replied.

And so the questioning went on through the issues of strong national defense, inflation and interest rates until he ended on "the clear choice to go forward."

"I have a vision for the future, a vision where every child — no matter which side of the railroad tracks he was born on or what color — he can use his God-given talents to advance himself.

"That system has worked for me and my family. My momma had a dream for me. She prodded me every step of the way until I got a Ph.D. in economics," he said.

"I want every family to live out its dreams, to be limited only by their ability to get out and work for it."

Recalling the 1978 congressional race in which he won by 122 votes, Gramm urged the crowd to get the people out to vote.

"I'm not going to let my shirttail touch my back until this election is won," he said. Later, Gramm said the voters aren't going to elect him to the Senate on a coattail effect from President Reagan's race. Instead, Gramm said, he will be elected because of the bills he wrote as a congressman.

"We are right on the issues for here in Texas and in America. Our opponents are wrong," he said on his way out to the door to Lubbock and Amarillo before stopping for the night.

Jurors to deliberate Midland man's fate

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Jurors were expected to begin deliberations today on the fate of 20-year-old Pablo Galindo of Midland, who has been convicted of capital murder. Their choices have been narrowed to the death penalty and life in prison.

Testimony Wednesday dealt with Galindo's mental health, as the defense attempted to convince jurors that the defendant did not understand the consequences of his actions on March 24 when he shot a south Ector County man, then sexually assaulted his wife in the bedroom of their home, according to testimony.

Most of the day was spent with experts arguing about Galindo's mental health. One psychiatrist suggested further testing should be done to check Galindo for brain damage. Another said Galindo's personality fit the definition of a sociopath and that he posed a continuing threat to society.

Expert witnesses for the state and defense disagreed as to whether Galindo would be a continuing threat to society.

This is one of the three questions jurors will consider today. If all 12 answer the three questions positively, Galindo would be sentenced to death by lethal injection.

The three questons are:

— If there is a probability Galindo would pose a continuing threat to society by committing acts of violence.

— If Galindo's conduct caused the death of 28-year-old Mark Defee deliberately and with reasonable expectation that death would result.

— If evidence raised showed conduct by Galindo in killing Defee was unreasonable in response to the provocation, if any, by Defee.

Galindo's family asked jurors to give him life, rather than the death sentence, during the punishment phase of the trial. Jurors found him guilty of capital murder on Tuesday.

A Midland County probation officer testified that Galindo was sentenced to four years of probation after being found guilty of criminal mischief. A Midland man recalled for jurors the incident in which shots were fired into his Spruce Street residence in October 1983 from a car in which Galindo was riding.

District Judge R.L. McKim would not allow defense attorneys to include as evidence petitions attorney Michael McLeaish said bore the names of about 400 people asking that Galindo not be sentenced to death.

Commissioners discover financial adviser already hired

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

After a chance encounter between County Commissioner Win Brown and a San Antonio financial consultant revealed that improper procedures were being considered to finance the new county jail, the commissioners decided they needed to hire a financial adviser for the project.

Then they found out they already had one.

Having decided last week to hire Bob Davis of Kidder, Peabody & Co. in San Antonio, the commissioners discovered they already had a contract with Rauscher Pierce Resfnes Inc. of Midland. It was signed before the 1983 election on a bond issue to finance the jail, and even though the bond issue was rejected by the voters, the contract remained in force.

The county had been planning to build the jail with interim financing — borrowing money locally as construction progressed — and then paying those debts after the jail was completed by issuing certificates of obligation. But these certificates are prohibited from being used to pay debts, so the county will have to issue them up front to fund the jail.

At a special meeting of the Commissioners Court Wednesday, Rauscher representatives showed up to reassert their claim on the county's business.

"I do wonder where you all were when we were talking about it and it was in the newspaper," said Commissioner Wally Craig. "It really would have helped."

Joe Liberty of Rauscher blamed the problem on a communications breakdown.

"We were working under the understanding that you would call us if you needed advice on a particular thing. We want you to want to use Rauscher Pierce."

The commissioners apologized to Davis for not being able to hire him, and asked him to bill the county for the time he'd spent working on the jail project.

"Procedurally, this thing ought to be corrected," said Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis. "Sometimes it's hard to even find a contract around here."

The commissioners authorized County Judge Bill Ahders to negotiate a contract with the Midland law firm of Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder to act as bond counsel for the county.

They also opened six bids from general contractors for construction of the new jail. The two lowest bids were from Area Builders of Odessa ($6.3 million base bid, $8.5 million total) and HBF Construction of Midland ($6.3 million base, $8.4 million total).

The commissioners will select a bid Nov. 13 after receiving a recommendation from architect Walter Pate, whose firm is designing the jail.

Doggett counting on big Hispanic turnout

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Getting out the huge Hispanic vote for liberal Democrat Lloyd Doggett is at the heart of Texas' bitter, expensive race to fill the seat being vacated by 23-year Senate veteran John Tower.

Trailing Republican Phil Gramm by as many as 24 and as few as six points in the latest polls, the lanky, lawyerly Doggett is counting on both a massive turnout among the state's 1 million Hispanics registered to vote and ballots from President Reagan's supporters.

"This is a very tight race," Doggett said. "We're not planning a victory party election night, we're planning a victory brunch for Wednesday because we won't know who won until then."

The contest represents both a litmus test of where usually Democratic Texas now stands politically and a chance for the Democrats to regain a seat in the Republican-controlled Senate.

Gramm, a conservative congressman who co-sponsored Reagan's 1981 tax program while still a Democrat, has the president on his team and hopes to ride his coattails to victory.

He is running strong among rural conservatives and Texas' affluent urban population, yet says he is spending the last week of campaigning "under the assumption that this is close."

"You've got a clear-cut choice in this race between a conservative who supports traditional values and a liberal who's philosophically closer to the thinking of (Sen.) Ted Kennedy (D-Mass.) than the average Texan," Gramm says at campaign stops.

Despite the long-shot odds of upsetting Gramm, "Landslide Lloyd" Doggett, as the veteran Austin state senator calls himself after two razor-thin wins in a May primary and June runoff, appears confident.

He enjoys reminding voters of Texas Gov. Mark White's 1982 victory when an under-polled minority vote surprised political experts and helped the Democrat oust incumbent Republican Bill Clements.

A recent Houston Post poll showed a large portion of undecided voters — 14 percent — in a Houston area where 20 percent of the state's voters reside. That poll gave Gramm a 10-point lead, and said the area polled generally runs three to six percentage points more Republican than the state as a whole.

The wild cards in the race remain the nearly 1.5 million newly registered voters — 18 percent of Texas' 7.9 million registered voters — and Doggett's ability to draw Reagan supporters.

A recent poll released by the White House showed Reagan leading Democrat Walter Mondale in Texas by 30 points — a spread that would require Doggett to capture votes from nearly 30 percent of the president's supporters to win.

Doggett's appeal as the only native Texan — Gramm was born and raised in Georgia — and as both a friend to farmers and a foe of nuclear waste dumps in rural Texas may play in tiny towns, Garza County Judge Giles Dalby said.

Gramm, a former economics professor from Texas A&M University, has countered by trying to position Doggett alongside Mondale. But Doggett has kept his distance from the Democratic presidential nominee.

Gramm has outspent Doggett $7.6 million to $4.3 million, according to the latest Federal Election Commission filings, and has received $1.1 million from special interest political action committees, nearly doubling Doggett's $669,914.

Gramm's mother — Florence Scroggins Gramm — has even become an issue after a "hand-written" letter was mailed to thousands of senior citizens saying Gramm won't ever forget "those of us who depend on Social Security because I'll be there to remind him."

Ex-Democratic official heads local Reagan effort

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Harris Kerr, a member of the State Democratic Executive Committee until this fall, is heading up the Democrats and Independents for Reagan/Bush in Midland County.

It was his lack of involvement in the primary in another race that fired him up to do something this time, he said.

"What convinced me to do this was Kent Hance losing the Democratic runoff (for U.S. Senate). I woke up and realized if I had gone out and done something he might be the candidate." Lloyd Doggett won that runoff in a close race.

Kerr said he chose to support the Reagan/Bush ticket after hearing Democratic presidential candidate Walter Mondale speak at several conventions and after talking with the former vice president. "Mondale is so far out of the mainstream of the Democratic Party. My personal experience with Mondale is that he couldn't run this country."

David Godfrey, county chairman of the Reagan/Bush effort, said he recruited Kerr after learning the Democrat was dissatisfied with the state executive committee and its policies.

"It was a great coup for us to get Kerr as chairman of the Democrats and Independents. I think he will have an effect locally," Godfrey said.

Pesticide regulations' opponents outnumber supporters

AUSTIN (AP) — Opponents to proposed new state controls for pesticides outnumbered supporters at an extended meeting of the House Agriculture Committee, which was itself divided on the subject.

The public hearing was scheduled to continue today.

More than 60 witnesses registered to speak for and against the tentative new standards for pesticide use announced Oct. 19 by Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower.

In addition to the House hearing, the Texas Department of Agriculture will sponsor public hearings beginning Nov. 12 in Austin, Lubbock, San Juan, and maybe in the Victoria area.

Hightower was not at Wednesday's session, which at times attracted a crowd of about 200.

"No one has documented the need for these kinds of regulations," said S.M. True, a Plainview farmer and president of the Texas Farm Bureau. "To enact regulation before a problem is determined or if there is no problem, is wrong."

True said Hightower should wait until the Environmental Protection Agency sets pesticide application standards.

Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, said he thought "the Legislature should be the one to address pesticide controls, not just one individual. I think the Legislature better understands the need of the people of Texas."

"These regulations are good for both the farmers and the farm workers," said Roberto Leo, a San Diego vegetable farmer and rancher, who said he lost $35,000 in 1981 when weed-killer sprayed on a grain sorghum field drifted 15 miles and destroyed 800 acres of watermelons and 2,000 acres of English peas.

"I walked out there one morning and the vines were just lying on the ground," said Leo. "All the leaves were gone."

Leo said he and 15 farmers sued the aerial applicator but there was not enough insurance money to pay for the damage.

Rep. Rene Oliveira, D-Brownsville, said he realized Hightower's proposal needed modification "but if the job isn't done by the TDA, and I hope it will be, it will be done by the Legislature or it will be done at the courthouse."

True, who said the Farm Bureau represents 313,568 members, said "we believe that the TDA's function in the area of pesticides could more properly be one of education, information, supervision, and enforcement of existing regulations.

"In other words, the TDA should seek to increase proper pesticide use in a more constructive manner," True said.

"I feel that many people impacted by these regulations have not been included in your considerations," Saunders said.

Treasury Department tracks down orphaned heiress

DALLAS (AP) — In a case that state Treasury Department officials call one of the saddest and most novel ever, a long-lost heiress who was orphaned at the age of 13 has been tracked down in a small city in France.

"You'd expect to see this on 'As The World Turns,'" said Carol Fowler, chief of the department's locator unit.

Department officials make routine treks across the globe annually to find heirs of forgotten fortunes. Its locator unit is charged with hunting down the 2.5 million unclaimed property accounts in Texas.

But the case of Carole Lemoine Crockett has impressed even veteran treasury officials as one of the saddest and most novel cases they've ever handled.

Miss Crockett was orphaned in Dallas 13 years ago after her father murdered her mother and then committed suicide.

Dallas officials tracked her down recently to a small city in France, and she is soon to receive about $4,000 from the forgotten accounts of her deceased father.

"You've got a little baby born, a murder and a suicide — and then after many years the child's found and she gets the money," Ms. Fowler said.

FDIC houses burglarized

Almost $1,500 worth of furniture was reported missing from Rent-N-Own, 18-A Village Circle. According to Mario Muralez, the items included a glass top table with chairs, a six-piece living room set and two sets of wood and brass lamps.

Two musical instruments were reported stolen Wednesday from the band hall at San Jacinto Junior High School, 1400 N. N St. Taken were a piccolo and flute belonging to Mary Howell, 2605 Sentinel, and Larry Lusby, 105 Shanks Drive.

About $500 worth of liquor, cigarettes and soft drinks were reported stolen from Midland Drive Discount Liquor Store at 315-A N. Midland Drive, after a policemen noticed about 4:30 a.m. today that a window had been tampered with on the west side of the store.

Man found guilty in cousin's death

From Staff Reports

Darrold Lynn Hunt was found guilty Wednesday of murdering his cousin last June and was sentenced to 15 years in prison.

Hunt, 25, of 1801 E. Oak, was convicted by a one-woman, 11-man jury of shooting his cousin Gerald Lewis, 19, of 1906 Hudson, last June 20 near the Playmate Club at 200 N. Lee, according to Assistant District Attorney Jack Connors. Hunt was also fined $500 by the 238th District Court jury, which deliberated about two hours before reaching a verdict, and a little more than an hour on the punishment phase of the trial.

The defense, which had pleaded self-defense, asked for probation, while Prosecutor Janet Copeland had urged the jury to give Hunt a life sentence.

Bomb threat cancels UTPB classes

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Evening courses at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin were canceled about 5 p.m. Wednesday after university police were notified of a bomb threat at the campus.

According to UTPB Police Chief Jesse Chavez, university police and Ector County Sheriff's Department bomb experts responded to the threat following a telephone call from an unidentified woman who reported a bomb had been placed at an undetermined location on campus.

Chavez said authorities failed to locate any explosive device following a one hour and 45 minute search of the campus. He refused comment on all other circumstances behind the threat. There are no suspects, he said.

KERR

Kerr said he has been telephoning people he knew were mainstream Democrats and asking for their support for the Republican presidential ticket. The response has been 90-to-1 in favor, he said.

The precinct in which Kerr lives is "overwhelmingly Democratic," he said, but the percentage for Reagan/Bush is two-to-one.

Kerr admitted this will be the first Republican presidential candidate he's voted for, but he pointed out he won't vote a straight Republican ticket.

"I'm still a Democrat. I'm not a Republican," he said. "I still believe in the Democratic Party. But you have to work for the people you believe in."

MC presents Clarence Kincaid retrospective show

From Staff Reports

Midland College is presenting a retrospective showing of paintings by Clarence E. Kincaid Sunday through Dec. 2. The opening reception is from 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, MC campus.

Most of the paintings are from the Kincaid estate and have never been shown before. Others have been loaned by area collectors. Some are available for purchase.

Born July 22, 1927, in Oklahoma City, Okla., Kincaid was raised in the Texas Panhandle. He graduated from West Texas State University, attended University of New Mexico and received his doctorate from Penn State University.

The influences of the tri-ethnic culture of northern New Mexico is deeply ingrained in his work.

"The work itself has a strong design quality, careful craftsmanship and is always a sensitive, forceful statement of the subject," said Dr. Charles Stewart, chairman of MC's fine arts department. "Light tended to dominate his thoughts while painting, thus his work possesses a strong chiaroscuro quality found in some of the works of the High Italian Renaissance."

In speaking of his paintings a few years ago, Kincaid said, "Content is the distilled essence of what an artist wants to say. I personally search for content through an intensified identification with the subject matter."

While most of his works depict Southwest landscape forms, Kincaid often turned his attention to still life, portraiture and abstraction.

"A student of art history with a strong knowledge of painting styles, he considered and experimented with many schools and styles of expression," Stewart said. "While his research enriched his work, he deliberately sought to avoid any single style of expression or schema."

His work was handled for many years by the Baker Gallery of Lubbock, the Talisman Gallery of Bartlesville, Okla., and the Mission Gallery of Taos, as well as other galleries in the Southwest. He exhibited widely and had more than 21 one-man shows. Both private collectors and museums collected his works.

Over a 25-year period he received numerous commissions from the Ford Motor Company and his work was featured in six issues of the Ford Times Magazine. The publication selected a Kincaid watercolor as one of the outstanding paintings in the magazine's history and offered its readership prints in a nationwide promotion.

Another of his works was selected for the traveling international exhibition "Life in the United States." The Ford sponsored exhibit traveled throughout the free world in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

His teaching experiences ranged from elementary school through graduate programs in higher education.

"In spite of the acceptance of his studio production, Kincaid considered himself, first and foremost, an educator," Stewart said. "With kindness, knowledge and rare good humor, he was one of the most sought after teachers at Texas Tech."

In recognition of having attained national and regional distinction for his accomplishments in the classroom, in research, and in other creative endeavors, such as his paintings, the Board of Regents of Texas Tech awarded him the prestigious Horn Professorship in 1972. In addition, he found time to direct more than 150 art teaching films and filmstrips.

He retired from Texas Tech in 1982. Soon after retirement, four full-sheet watercolors depicting Texas Tech were published actual size in portfolio size. They are being sold by the Tech Ex-Students Association.

Kincaid died Nov. 28, 1983, at the age of 56. He is the subject of the November 1984 issue of Texas Trends, the official magazine of the Texas Art Education Association. A second retrospective exhibition is planned by the West Texas Museum in Lubbock for 1985.

Reagan policies have increased hunger, lawmaker says

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas lawmakers should spend $20 million next year to battle hunger caused by federal efforts to cut welfare fraud, says a legislator whose committee found a hunger level higher "than Texans would tolerate with an easy conscience."

A preliminary report issued Wednesday by the Senate Committee on Hunger and Nutrition blames President Reagan for weakening 1970s programs that provided great headway in the battle on hunger.

"In the 1980s, changes in policy have served to kick many legitimately needy persons off federal programs and procedural changes have resulted in situations where many eligible persons are kept off programs," the report said.

Committee Chairman Hugh Parmer, D-Fort Worth, said at a news conference the Reagan effort to eliminate welfare fraud "went far beyond" the level necessary. He said the committee found that the new rules forced rejection of 32 percent of the Texas applicants for food stamps, when only 7 percent should have been rejected.

"The Reagan policies, in fact, have resulted in people who need help not getting it," said Parmer.

A $20 million state appropriation would help up to one-third of Texans facing hunger, according to Parmer. He estimated that 350,000 children, pregnant women and elderly people in the state go without food at least one or two days a month.

Parmer could offer no estimate on how many of what he called the "new poor" are hungry. He defined the "new poor" as the unemployed whose benefits have run out but who do not qualify for other assistance programs.

'In a state with one of the lowest unemployment rates in the nation, it is shocking to learn of the thousands who are seriously hungry," the report said.

After a year of research, the committee said in the preliminary report:

"Texans have long prided themselves as citizens in a state of enormous opportunity; a state with an abudance of land and agricultural resources. Yet, in this state of plenty, hunger exists. There is more hunger in Texas than meets the eye; more perhaps than Texans would tolerate with an easy conscience."

There are "many faces of hunger in Texas," including "the face of a steelworker in Pasadena, who finds himself unemployed, and talks of suicide because he cannot provide for his family," according to the report.

Sikh leader: Gandhi 'wrote her own death warrant'

HOUSTON (AP) — The chairman of the Sikh Association of America says slain Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi "wrote her death warrant" when she allowed the assault on the Golden Temple, the Sikhs holiest place of worship, in June.

Mrs. Gandhi, 66, was killed by a barrage of bullets reportedly fired by her own Sikh bodyguards. She had been under close guard for months because of assassination threats following the assault, in which military and police sources said about 1,200 people were killed.

"My religion does teach me murder is wrong," Hardam Singh Azad said Wednesday. "But my religion also teaches me it is more wrong to accept the slaughter of masses of people and sit idly by and do nothing."

The Sikhs are fighting for their own state, which would have "nothing to do with the nation of India," he said.

"This is not terrorism," Azad said. "Two people killing a prime minister is not an act of terrorism. Active terrorism is what the government of India has been doing in the state of Punjab."

He said his reaction upon hearing of the assassination about 1 a.m. was, "Thank God, You exist."

Other Sikhs criticized the slaying.

Siri Singh Sahib Yogi Bhajan, described by his workers as chief religious and administrative authority of the ordained ministry of the Sikh religion in the Western Hemisphere, told his followers the killing made no sense.

"This is human insanity. It's not a matter of joy. More innocent people will be killed. Please don't take revenge," Bhajan said.

Azad said he hoped Sikhs would use less violent means in the future.

"We can accomplish the ousting of the government essentially in the same way the British" control of India was ended in 1947, Azad said, "through non-cooperation."

He said, for instance, the Punjab state must not allow irrigation water to leave its borders and must cut off hydroelectric power produced there.

"Now New Delhi is lit with that electricity," he said.

Azad said about 500,000 Sikhs live in the United States, about 100,000 of whom are not descended from Indians. About 200,000 live in California, he said, and 1,500 to 2,000 in Houston.

An overwhelming number of the Sikhs in Houston are engineers, he said.

Azad said his association is sending no weapons to Sikhs in India.

"We have made a conscious decision not to get involved in any of that activity," he said.

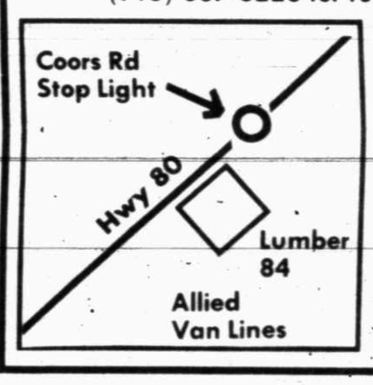

Sikhs in San Francisco passed out food in celebration.

"People are distributing cookies," said A.K. Bandey, one of the consuls at the Indian embassy in San Francisco. "We have received threats, yes. We have requested them (San Francisco police) to keep a lookout."

Milk bars bomb as nutritious substitute in taste test

By LINDA ANDERSON

"You never outgrow your need for milk!"

A lot of folks grew up with the saying. (It probably originated from people who sold milk, but many mothers quote it whenever children don't finish their milk.)

As a kid I loved milk, but as an adult I have almost stopped drinking milk. Sometimes guilt feelings arise because who knows what horrible things I am doing to my body by not getting enough milk in my diet — visions of bones crumbling like chalk and teeth falling out come to mind.

Now it seems the people at Pillsbury are attempting to come to the rescue of non-milk drinkers with "Milk Break Milk Bars." The chocolate-covered wafer bars are advertised as having "half a glass of milk in every bar." It sounded like a tasty way to get milk's nutrition without actually drinking milk. Goodness knows a wafer bar is a lot easier to carry to work or school than a glass of milk.

We tested Milk Break bars for taste, nutrition, price and advertising accuracy. Taste-testers were teenagers and children, with the help of one adult.

The product costs $1.79 for a box of six bars which, at an average of 30-cents each, is comparable to the price of candy bars. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

According to label information, the bars are available in milk, peanut butter, chocolate mint and chocolate flavors — which its advertising claims are "natural" flavors.

Label information lists the bars as containing 230 calories and 15 percent of the recommended daily allowance of calcium, 10 percent of the recommended protein, vitamin D and other vitamins and minerals.

Label advertising claims the bars have the vitamins, protein and minerals of milk and contains no artificial colors or perservatives. It also claims non-fat milk is used in the bars.

The teens and young children rated the bars "OK" — but managed to finish the box with no problem. In fact, they had a minor dispute over possession of the last bar.

The adult taste-tester was not so impressed with the product. And the bars didn't seem that special to me. They contain too many calories for the "wholesome goodness" of just half a glass of milk. And judging by ingredients listed on the label, the milk bars seemed to contain a lot of sugar.

Some people who don't ordinarily drink milk might find these bars a tasty way to obtain some of milk's good nutrition. But my children love milk, so following the label advice to "feel terrific knowing the family is getting the wholesome goodness of half a glass of milk in a delicious snack they'll really love" is not necessary.

If I want the nutrition milk has to offer, I may just try drinking it ...

BETTER BUSINESS

Bait-and-switch pitching is illegal

By LINDA TRUITT

The consumer, tired of high food bills, is attracted to a meat market's advertisment for 250 pounds of beef at 99-cents a pound. He rushes to the store to take advantage of the price. Upon arrival, the salesman tells him the ad was an "example only" and he cannot buy the advertised meat, but for $2.49 a pound he can get the best beef available.

Dazed by the sales pitch, the consumer writes his check for an amount that is double what he had planned to spend; he also has been the victim of bait and switch advertising.

Bait and switch advertising is a simple scheme. A store advertises fabulous but non-existant bargains to lure customers into buying similar, but more expensive, items. Once in the store, the salesman downgrades the advertised product while emphasizing the need for the consumer to buy something similar but more expensive.

There is a big difference between bait-and-switch and "upgrading" a sale. For example, the sales person may point out the better features of a similiar product in order to give consumers a comparison between the sale and regularly-priced merchandise. There is nothing unethical or illegal about this practice as long as the consumer is given the choice without sales pressure.

Another variation of bait-and-switch occurs when a store advertises brand name quality products at very low prices. When the prospective customers arrive at the store to buy the bargains, the sales personnel announces that the sale items are already "sold out" or "on order." The sales person then switches the customer to a cheap, inferior product — also at a "bargain price."

Consumers should beware of sales people who have reasons about why the "bargain" product is not available. "There aren't any left" is a standard statement. Others include "many customers who have bought it are dissatisfied;" "the product isn't any good;" "you can't get delivery for six months."

Sometimes it may be true that a sale item does not get into inventory to correspond with store advertising. However, the store probably will give customers a "raincheck" for the merchandise at the sale price.

Bait-and-switch advertising is illegal. If a consumer suspects he is a victim of this practice, he should contact the Better Business Bureau.

Frivolous finds spice fall markets

By MARCIA SMITH
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

A Boy George doll and an Ernest P. Worrell fan club membership have three things in common: They're utterly frivolous, they're available this fall and they are mentioned in the following story, along with some other fun stuff we rounded up.

(Oh, yes, they could be considered Christmas finds, if you're given to thinking that far ahead).

— BOY GEORGE DOLL: What's nice about the new Boy George doll is that he can wear Barbie's and Ken's clothes.

Yes, the gender-bender of the 1980s, now comes in doll size. The lead singer for Culture Club joins Brooke Shields and other dress-up dolls on the toy shelves. The hard-plastic, 12-inch Boy comes complete with white makeup, brunette braids and his famous "Colour by Numbers" outfit.

LJN Toys the doll's makers, plan to design a wardrobe for the fashionable Boy. The clothes are expected to be available sometime after the doll hits the stores in late November or early December, according to an LJN spokeswoman.

A more cuddly version of Boy — a 14-inch soft-body doll dressed in striped pants, polka dot shirt and bow tie — also will be available. Both Boys will sell for less than $20.

— SNOB: The object of this game is to be the first player to spend $10 million. SNOB players acquire and lose millions of dollars in oil wells, stock, yachts, jewels and Lear jets with an abandon even the rich would envy.

A Florida mother of three invented the game for those who dream of Saks but settle for Sears. Each player starts out with $1 million in a secret Swiss bank account, which they can spend on any number of extravagances — a ride on the Orient Express, a private Pavarotti concert, a 25-bedroom Spanish villa, a $130,000 Ferrari or an Oscar de la Renta ball gown.

The $45 SNOB game can be found in the American Express Christmas Catalog or in the following appropriately pricey outlets: Lord & Taylor, Bloomingdale's Tiffany & Co., Marshall Field's, Laura Ashley, Sakowitz, Saks Fifth Avenue, Cartier, Brooks Brothers and Elizabeth Arden.

— BEEFCAKE CALENDARS: It's the Year of the Hunk in the calendar trade. The best-selling pin-ups this year are of great-looking men, reports the Chicago Tribune, and the eager buyers are the girls next door.

The pin-up boys are outselling pin-up girls as much as 2 to 1, says Felicia McCann, buyer for the 700 B. Dalton stores, who expects 1985 to be a peak sales year.

Beefcake calendars began selling in 1982 with "Looking Good, The Men of USC" and "Buns." Today, as many as 93 different calendars celebrating the gorgeous male may be available. In 1985, you can buy "Hunks," "Studs," "Firemen," "Hunk-A-Day," "Up-front" and "Biceps."

And, of course, "Cop Cakes," a 14-month 1985 calendar featuring Dallas, Fort Worth and other area police officers in provocative poses. At least two of the men in blue lost more than their shirts as a result of their off-duty modeling; pressure from supervisors prompted two cops to resign.

To see what all the fuss is about, you can order "Cop Cakes," for $7.25 (plus $1 for postage) from: Hat'Gar Enterprises Inc., P.O. Box 3154, Fort Worth, Texas 76113.

— ERNEST P. WORRELL International Fan Club. You've seen him in TV commercials. Ernest P. Worrell is a know-it-all redneck with selling power.

Ernest P.'s long-suffering neighbor, Vern, may not care for him, but advertising's favorite good ol' boy has made a lot of fans. He has even got his own fan club and, Ernest points out, Vern doesn't.

For a $4.28 (!?) membership fee, Ernest fans will receive a photo of "yer ol' buddy Ernest," the "Kno-WhutImean News" newsletter, an Ernest bumper sticker and information about "other Ernest junk you can spend your money on."

To join, send check or money order to Ernest Fan Club, P.O. Box 23325, Nashville, TN, 37202.

— ROBOTS: What kid wouldn't love to have somebody wait on him hand and foot?

That somebody (not Mom!) could be Omnibot, one of three robots manufactured by the Tomy Corp. for fall sales. Omnibot ($250-$300), the most sophisticated of the trio, can serve as a personal butler — bringing the kids snacks or picking up their toys for them. He also can wake the kids in the morning, at a predetermined time with a prerecorded message.

Dingbot ($10) is the baby of the robot group. A mere five inches high, he skitters along, bumps into things, chatters to himself and moves his head as if he's reading his map and checking his bearings. Dingbot is recommended for kids 4 years and up.

Verbot is a voice-activated robot recommended for kids 6 and up. He can move forward, backward, turn left or right, pick up small objects and, when ordered to, can even smile. He sells for $65-$70.

— COSMOPARODY: "Shed Those Unwanted Brains" and "One Woman's Very Special Relationship with 700 Men" are just two of the offerings in the fall 1984, issue of "Cosmoparody," the magazine that takes a poke at Helen Gurley Brown's guide to turning mouseburgers into swinging Cosmo gals.

The "Cosmopolitan" parody also includes tips on finding a career in dominance ("Do You Have What It Takes to Make Grown Men Cry?"), a plug for Martin Balsam Shampoo and a step-by-step guide for a face transplant.

Improperly used heaters may cause fire

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — In 1982, the most recent year for which figures are available, 5,000 people were killed and 44,000 were injured in more than 676,500 residential fires.

Too many of those fires were caused by space heaters that were poorly made or sloppily used, according to Stuart M. Statler, a member of the Consumer Product Safety Commission. Between 1978 and 1982, he said, "the number of fire incidents was down 11 percent, but the number caused by small home heating devices was up 85 percent — we can't let that trend continue."

While there are no exact figures, Statler said that more and more of these heaters are being bought by people looking for ways to cut fuel bills. "We're not saying don't buy them," he said. "We're saying we want people to have some notion of what the relative risks are so they can make an informed decision."

The dangers of such heaters differ, depending on what fuel they use. The rules governing their use and manufacture differ as well.

The major danger of kerosene heaters, for example, is contact burns — 12,000 such burns were suffered by users in 1983, the commission said. In order to carry the Underwriters' Laboratories seal, kerosene heaters made after June 1984 must have protective grills and guards and a way to shut them off quickly in emergencies. A label must clearly specify that grade 1K kerosene — never gasoline — is the proper fuel.

Effective Dec. 1, the U.L. will require kerosene heaters to have a mechanism to prevent the wick from being retracted so low that the kerosene becomes too hot, causing an explosion. A wick that is too short could also allow incomplete combustion to occur, releasing noxious fumes.

Real 'Kids' have belly buttons

Hearst News Service

If you're buying a Cabbage Patch Kid for the holidays this year, the message from the U.S. Customs Service is: Make sure it has a bellybutton.

If the doll has a bellybutton, it's probably a real Cabbage Patch doll, said customs officials. If it doesn't, chances are it's one of the thousands of counterfeit Kids being nabbed by customs officials as they flow into this country from overseas.

"The counterfeits normally don't have bellybuttons and don't come in wearing dolly-sized diapers," said Mary Rasmussen, a supervisory import specialist with the Customs Service in Los Angeles. "Some of them look incredibly alike. But, if you have the two of them side by side, it's pretty easy to tell."

Counterfeit goods of every type and description are quietly slipping into this country, said Rasmussen. All too often, she added, these items — including jeans, watches and toys — are snapped up by unsuspecting consumers shopping for a bargain.

A counterfeit, according to the Customs Service, is an item which is "confusingly similar" to an item with a registered trademark.

Fishing trip cancels vacation

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: "Hurt Parents" said that every summer they travel a long distance to spend 10 days with their son and his family, and while they were there last summer, their hosts let the painters come in, which ruined the parents' vacation. I think I can top that.

Every other summer, my husband and I drive 1,500 miles to visit his parents.

Last summer, after four days, our in-laws informed us that they were leaving the next day to go fishing with friends! They said they were sure there were other places we would like to see, and they were giving us the opportunity to see them.

I was flabbergasted. Since we had no other plans, and couldn't afford to stay in motels and eat every meal out for the remaining six days, we came home.

Sharing a house with painters would have been a pleasure compared to what happened to us. Now, what do you think of that? — LAST TRIP HOME

DEAR LAST TRIP: I think you were treated shabbily. When I sided with "Hurt Parents," a surprising number of readers protested, saying, "Ten days is too long. Perhaps the son and daughter-in-law were trying to tell them that after three days, fish and houseguests begin to stink."

DEAR ABBY: This is in defense of "The Eldest," who wanted to exclude the family black sheep from her parents' 50th wedding anniversary. (The black sheep was a hooker, and "The Eldest" was afraid she'd hustle men at the party.) "The Eldest" asked her minister and he said, "Invite her. 'I' stands in the middle of pride."

We have one like that in our family. There are nine of us, and No. 8 has always been the source of untold grief to our parents. They always forgave her and helped her out of jams, and in return she is absolutely ruining what should be their "golden years."

No. 8 has been arrested for prostitution, shoplifting, falsifying prescriptions, credit card theft and forgery. She's unable to support herself, so my parents remodeled their basement into a nice apartment for her. She shows her appreciation by dragging home bums and bikers she meets in taverns and letting them spend the night. We all live in terror that one of these hoodlums will go upstairs and harm our parents.

Recently when another sister was married, she asked our minister if she should exclude No. 8, and the minister said, "Leave her out; we have one of those in our family, too, so I know how you feel."

So, if "I" stands in the middle of "pride," I'd like to point out that "U" stands in the middle of "stupid." And it's just plain stupid to let one black sheep spoil everything. — BEEN THERE

Company will pay for removal of Dalkon Shield

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Ten years and 11,000 lawsuits after A.H. Robins Co. took the Dalkon Shield off the market, it has offered to pay for the removal of the birth control device from any women still using it.

"Our effort grows out of concern for the health of these women, and quite frankly, our concern about the adverse publicity our company and the Dalkon Shield have received in recent months, which we firmly believe is unwarranted," E. Claiborne Robins Jr., president of A.H. Robins Co., said Monday in a statement announcing the campaign.

Robins said the company has prepared television commercials and newspaper advertisements that tell women using the intrauterine device to have it removed and to see their doctor if they are not sure what type of IUD they are using.

It is also notifying some 185,000 doctors an clinics of the program.

"Extended use of the Dalkon Shield and other IUD's may — I repeat may — increase the risk of infection."

More than 2.5 million Dalkon Shields were sold in the United States in the early to mid-1970s. Robins, a Richmond-based pharmaceutical company, withdrew it from the market in 1974 after a growing number of users claimed it was responsible for infections and spontaneous abortions.

In 1980, Robins recommended that doctors remove the device from patients still using it, and the U.S. Food and Drug Administration made the same recommendation in 1983.

Warning issued on dangers of hand-me-down nursery equipment

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Despite recently mandated safety improvements in cribs and other nursery equipment, hand-me-down equipment built before the regulations took effect continues to pose sometimes-fatal hazards to infants, the Consumer Product Safety Commission warned Monday.

Commission officials estimated that nursery equipment has caused 1,300 deaths since 1973 and results in 90,000 injuries annually. Cribs are the most dangerous equipment, they said, but strollers, baby gates and high chairs also jeopardize infants' lives.

"If a crib is more than 10 years old, throw it out," the panel's chairman, Nancy Steorts, advised at a news conference. Eleven years ago, the government ordered that crib slats be more narrowly spaced to prevent strangulation of infants.

Much of the equipment is handed down through families or purchased at yard sales, but some currently manufactured goods also were branded as unsafe.

Commissioner Stuart Statler demanded that the nursery equipment industry stop manufacturing accordion-like wooden gates, which have "scissored" children's necks and strangled them, and that they recall similarly designed "corral" enclosures, still in use in many homes although their production was ended in 1982.

He charged that manufacturers have refused to cooperate and said the commission is now in court seeking a mandatory recall of the "corrals." Action against the gate manufacturers will be considered within the next month.

"There are better products on the market now," Statler said, exhibiting a non-collapsing plastic gate with openings too small for a baby's head. He estimated that the gates have caused three deaths — the most recent three weeks ago — severe brain damage in one child and six "near misses." The enclosures have resulted in nine fatalities and 20 "near misses," he said.

Responding to Statler's allegations, Aaron Locker, counsel to the Juvenile Products Manufacturers Association, called the charges "rash."

Locker defended the industry's refusal to recall the wooden gates, saying they prevent children from falling down stairs. "You have to balance the removal of gates against the risk of broken limbs and broken necks," he said.

Locker also predicted that standards for the gates — jointly developed by the industry and commission officials — would be ready next year. He declined comment on the suit regarding the "corrals" because the case is in litigation.

Using a doll, commission officials demonstrated several common instances in which children are injured or killed by nursery equipment. These included:

— Entrapment of an infant's head in crib slats or headboard cut-outs.

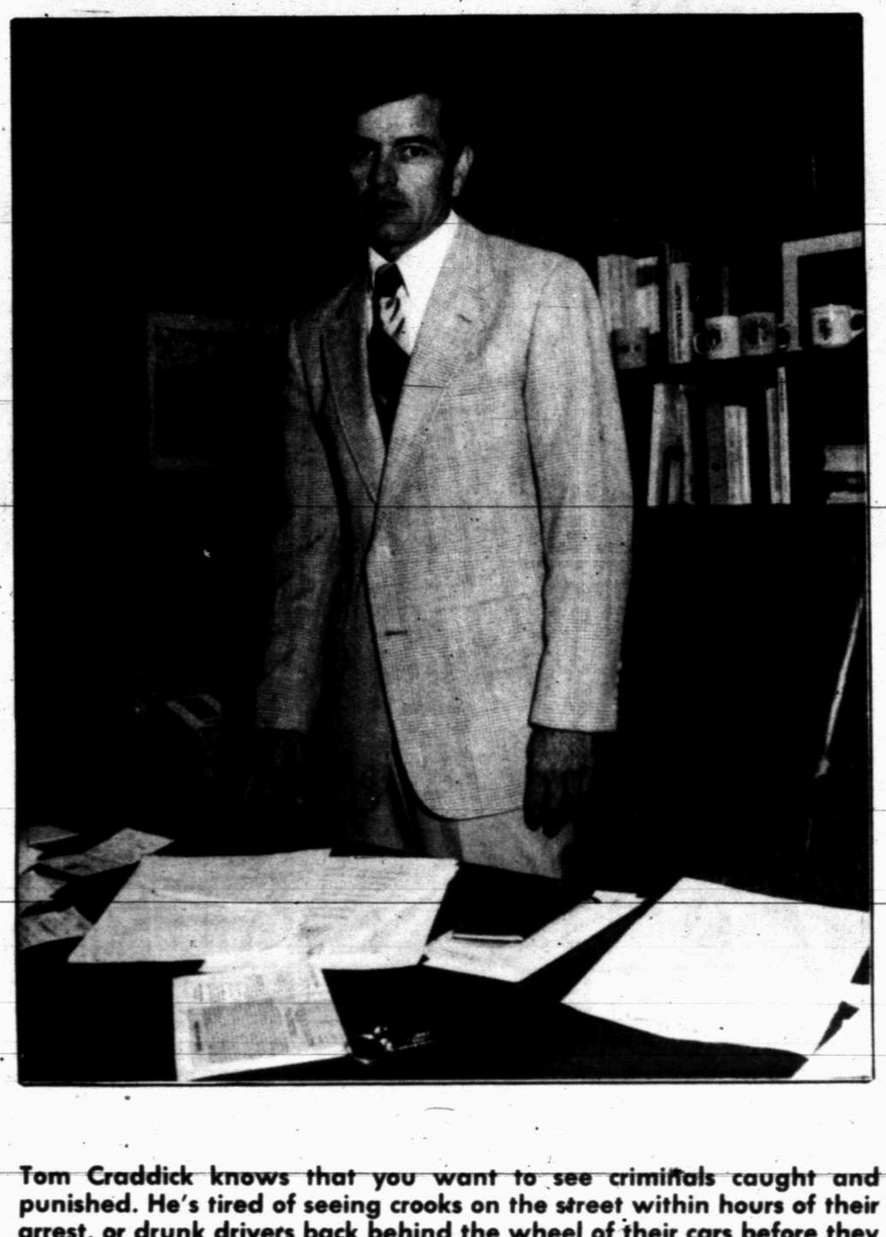

— Suffocation caused by loosely fitting mattresses that leave a space between the side rail or wall.

— Strangulation in high chairs that lack restraining crotch straps so that when a child slides down in the chair, he catches his chin on the waist strap.

— Suffocation in "drop-side" mesh playpens if the top rail is left lowered.

— Head injuries resulting from when toy chest lids snap downward.

— A fall down even one step by an unattended child in a walker.

Antibiotics' use in animal feed controversial

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. An argument arose last night as we were all sitting down eating a beautiful roast beef dinner. Please settle this for us: Are farmers still using antibiotics in animal feed? If so, why? Bob Carson, Santa Rosa, Calif.

A. About half the antibiotics manufactured in the United States are being fed to animals. Orville Schell's book, "Modern Meat," states that the Office of Technology Assessment, which is a research arm of the U.S. Congress, issued a report in 1979 noting that virtually all the commercially raised poultry, 70 percent of the beef cattle and veal calves and 90 percent of the swine raised in our country consume antibiotics as part of their daily feed regimen.

Are these animals sick? No, they are not. Then why are they being fed so many antibiotics? Nobody knows for sure why it happens, but animals fed these drugs grow faster and increase their metabolism.

The drugs also increase the absorption rate of nutrients in the animals' guts. "Frankly," said a Cyanamid salesman, "we don't quite know how or why they work. But I can tell you that if you took these drugs away from the farmer, you would be costing the consumer over half a billion dollars in increased meat prices."

There is a frightening theory that levels of antibiotic resistance are climbing and that organisms are capable of transferring this resistance from animals to humans.

According to Nutrition Action, a publication put out by the Center for Science in the Public Interest, President Reagan's beef comes from Harmony Farms in California and his butcher, Bruce Oxford, says that the President has been eating special beef for years, beef that is raised without growth hormones or antibiotics.

It seems that the only way to avoid eating antibiotics every day in your meat is either to raise your own cattle and chicken or become a vegetarian.

Q. Bread labeled "Sprouted Wheat" sounds lovely and very nourishing, but I'm probably being fooled by words and would like an explanation of what sprouted wheat is.

A. William Schmidt, president of Pepperidge Farm bread, states that sprouted wheat is produced when wheat kernels are soaked in water. The wheat germ or embryo, is the sprouting section of the wheat kernel. Sprouting the wheat doesn't add anything to the bread as far as nutrition is concerned, but some people feel that it affects the flavor and gives it a unique quality. And I agree, it makes for a lovely name.

Q. I have six children under the age of 12 and am writing to you as a last resort for information about breakfast cereals. I have been trying through a number of letters to cereal companies to find out the percentage of sugar in the various cereals.

This information seems to be the best-kept secret in America, for I have gotten nowhere in my efforts. Perhaps you can help: Of all the cereals, which are the five that have the highest percentage of sugar, and what is the percentage?

A. The Greater Cincinnati Nutrition Council, of 1400 Reading Road, Cincinnati, Ohio 45202, has a list of cereals and their sugar content.

This list was sent to me by Public Advocates of San Francisco, which is a law firm that is in the process of suing General Foods for false advertising, on the grounds that breakfast cereals should be more appropriately called breakfast candy.

Public Advocates contends, for instance, that Cocoa Pebbles Cereal contains 52 percent sugar, while a Milky Way candy bar contains only 20 percent sugar.

In answer to your specific question, according to the list supplied me, the following five cereals have the highest percentage of sugar: Sugar Orange Crisp, 68 percent; Sugar Smacks, 61 percent; King Vitaman, 58 percent; Fruit Pebbles, 55 percent; Apple Jacks, 55 percent.

Five cereals with the lowest sugar content are: Wheat Chex, 2.6 percent; Uncle Sam Cereal, 2.4 percent; Puffed Rice, 2.4 percent; Cheerios, 2.2 percent; Shredded Wheat, 1 percent.

Dear Readers:

In a previous column a reader wrote to me complaining about problems he had with a clogged drainpipe. He said only toothpaste and Ivory soap were used at that particular sink, yet for some reason a black plastic-type goo was accumulating in the drainpipe. A plumber had to free the clog with a mechanical whip. The reader asked if I could find out what could be causing this problem.

I consulted with Procter & Gamble, which theorized that his "goo" could be caused by a number of substances such as soap curd, body oils, cosmetics, hair from shaving and so on. A combination of soap and hard water, causing something called lime soap, was also indicated. The company advised using a synthetic soap such as Zest, and using liquid drain cleaners.

Following this, the same reader wrote again to say that his continual problem of the clogged drainpipe seems to have disappeared since the family stopped using Pearl Drops tooth polish. Someone had shown him an article written by a plumber which mentioned this particular product as being the specific cause of drainage problems.

To insure casting correct vote, bring glasses, light

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eye doctors are urging Americans to bring their glasses, and even small flashlights, when they head to the polls on Tuesday, to help make sure they cast their vote for the candidate they really want.

If this election follows the trend of past years, many people will pull the wrong lever, mark the wrong spot or punch the wrong hole in a computer card simply because they cannot see the ballot properly, the American Optometric Association says.

Indeed, in one state primary a few years ago, more than 5,000 voters pulled a lever opposite a blank space instead of next to a candidate's name, according to Federal Election Commission files.

The eye doctors say a major part of the problem is poor lighting conditions in many voting booths.

The chances of miscasting a ballot are greater for older voters, the optometrists add, because voting booths are not geared to older eyes.

For example, in a voting machine with the ballot on a wall, it is hard for many people to stand at a correct reading distance from the printing. And the angle at which the names are displayed makes it hard for wearers of bifocal and trifocal lenses to get the print into their line of sight.

And even where paper ballots are used, low light is a problem, with the elderly often needing as much as seven times the light of a 20-year-old, the optometrists said.

They urged voters who need glasses to make sure they bring them along to the voting booth, and suggested carrying a small flashlight in the event there isn't enough light.

In addition, the eye doctors suggested that older voters may want to make a point of voting during the less busy times, so they do not feel rushed while casting their ballot.

Ignoring arthritis pain dangerous

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — The worst thing people can do for their arthritis is to ignore it, cautions the Arthritis Foundation.

Ignoring the symptoms won't make your arthritis go away, it says, and could lead to very serious joint damage, crippling or even permanent disability.

Treatment for arthritis can help prevent disability and crippling if begun early, according to a spokesman.

But studies have shown most people wait an average of 4½ years before seeking medical care for their symptoms. During that time, irreversible joint damage can occur.

Adoptive parents winning benefits

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A year after winning equal rights as an adoptive parent, Carole Fezar is back at work following a hard-earned maternity leave, happily balancing her time between a full-time job and a 1½-year-old daughter.

She says she's glad she decided to fight for her maternity leave, a struggle that sparked a groundswell of support and action on behalf of adoptive parents everywhere.

Cynthia Landels of Phoenix, Ariz., fought for — and won — state unemployment benefits last December by basing an appeal, in part, on Mrs. Fezar's case.

And in Philadelphia, the municipal government has become the first in the nation to authorize adoptive leave.

"I did it not knowing exactly why it was right. But I knew it was right and I could validate what I did," said Mrs. Landels, 34, who had resigned as an account manager for General Mills because she was denied time off to care for her adopted 2½-year-old daughter.

"You wouldn't believe her," Mrs. Landels said of the daughter she and her husband got in June 1983 from El Salvador. "She's a normal, healthy, happy, little girl. She doesn't look like a refugee any more.

"The results are the proof that I did the right thing (by resigning). I wouldn't have known that if I'd gone back to work."

Others are thankful to Mrs. Fezar as well.

"It may have been happening out there quietly in many places, but this case helped to sharpen the focus. It raised an issue of equity. You shouldn't be penalized for adopting children. That's a service," said Laurie Flynn, public policy director for the National Adoption Exchange in Philadelphia, who has since convinced numerous employers to guarantee time off for adoptive parents.

On Oct. 31, 1983, a federal arbitrator sided with Mrs. Fezar, 40, a tax clerk in the borough of Ambridge near Pittsburgh who unsuccessfully had sought a one-year unpaid maternity leave to care for her daughter, Kristin Marie.

Arbitrator Carl Stoltenberg of Pittsburgh criticized the borough for restricting its maternity benefits to "a female borough worker who conceived and got pregnant."

"It is apparent that the term maternity does not singularly embrace conception and childbearing," he wrote, "but rather that it encompasses the duties and responsibilities of motherhood."

Stoltenberg directed the borough to immediately put Mrs. Fezar on maternity leave, dating back to her last day of work May 18, 1983. She returned to her job this past May, eager to put the highly publicized affair behind her.

"We won it and we had a point to prove. We'd just like it to die now," said her husband, Michael, 46, a chemistry professor who spent the past summer taking care of his daughter full time while his wife worked.

Borough officials, too, have quietly set aside the issue.

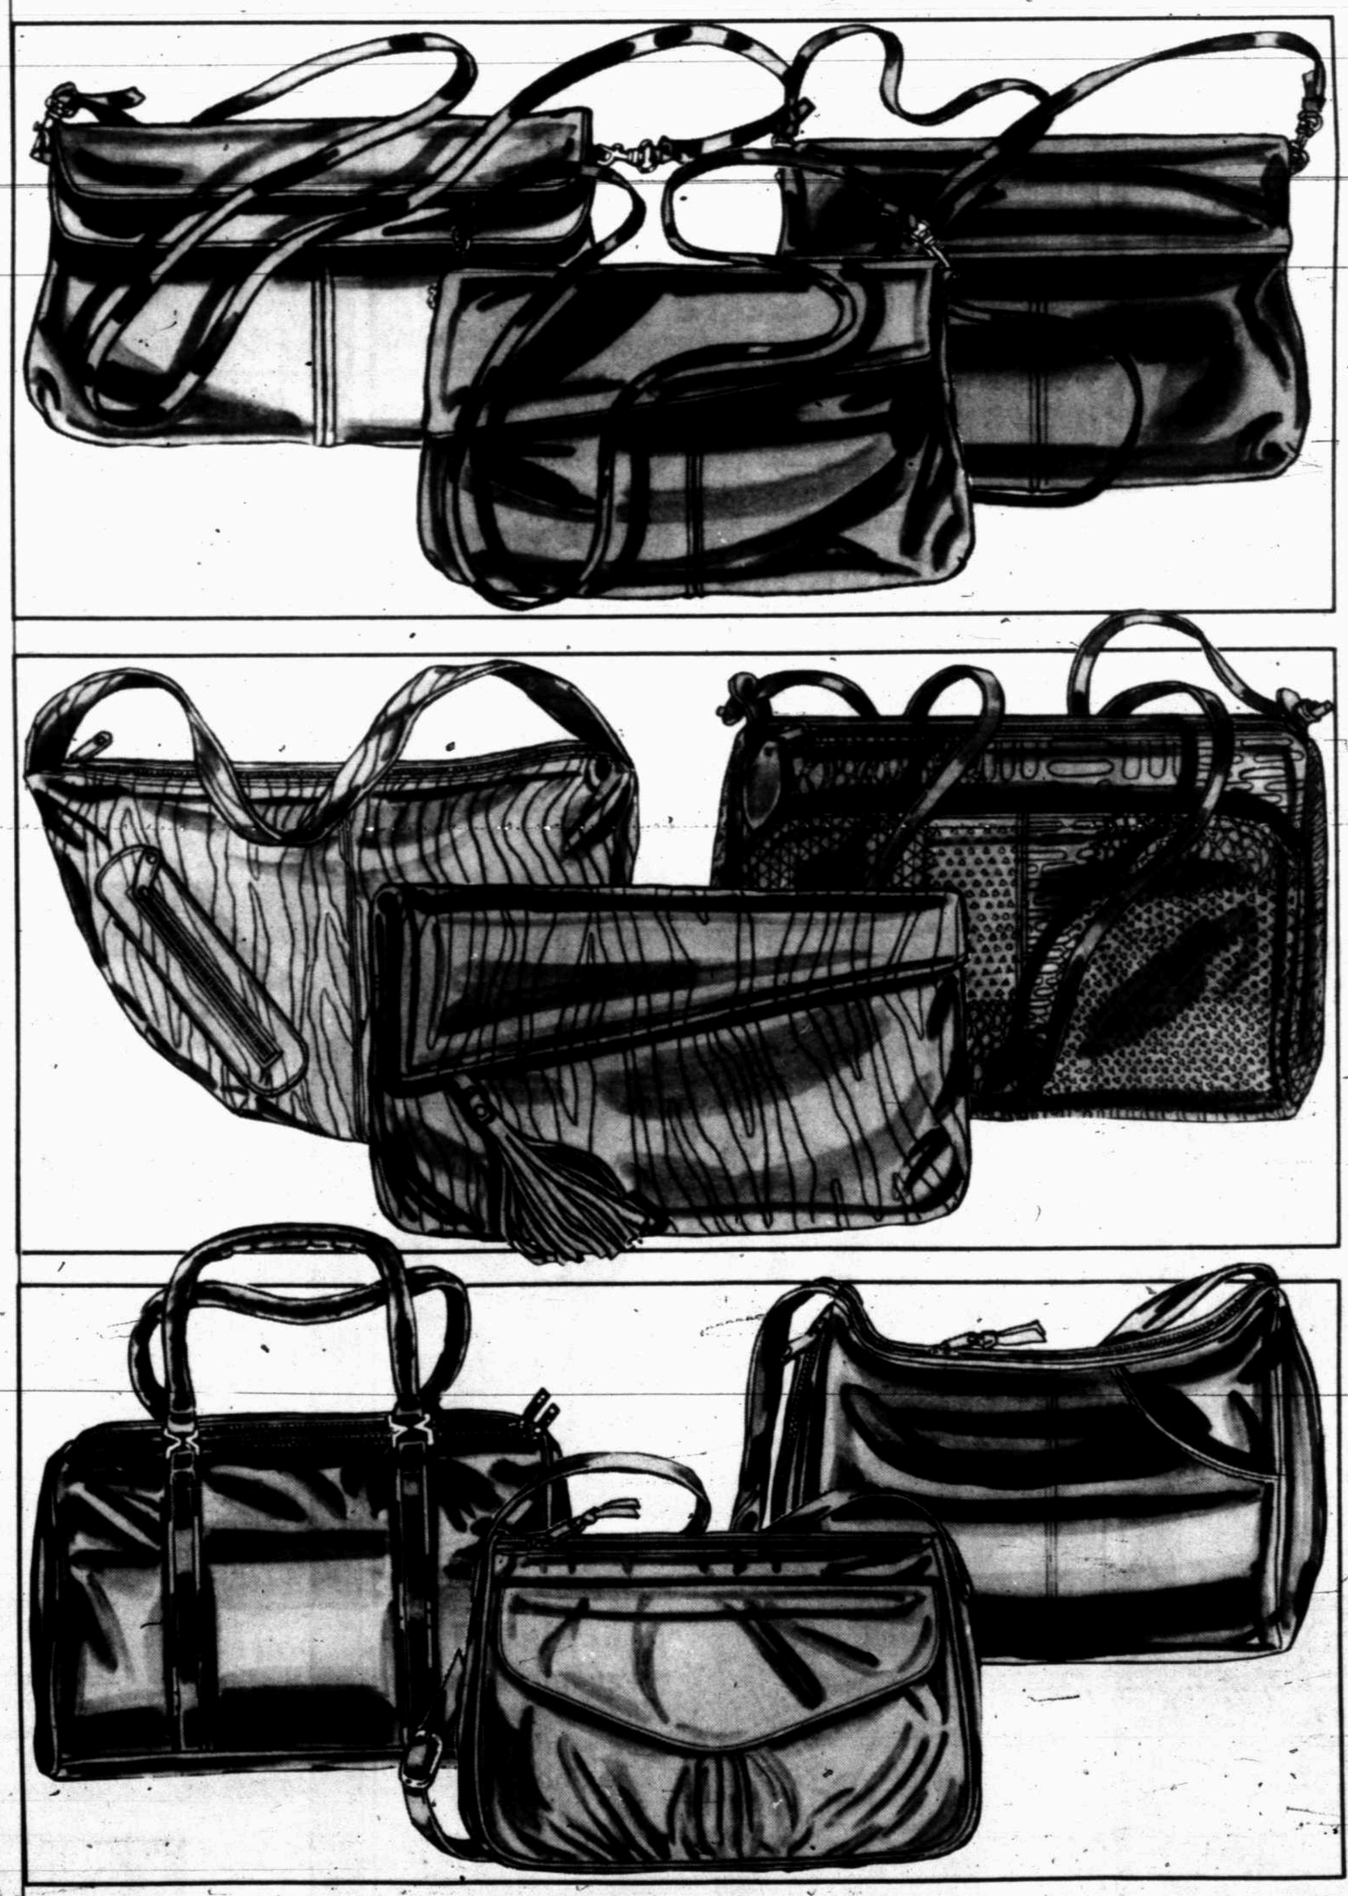

"It's something that is in the books and you live by it," said Andrew Krol, borough council president who initially opposed a maternity leave for Mrs. Fezar.

Ms. Flynn said she's spent the past year collecting such information as part of a federally funded project aimed at encouraging employers to institute adoption benefits.

So far, more than 50 major companies around the country have agreed to provide "some form of benefit policies to support family life."

MCT selected to stage new musical

ENTERTAINMENT

From Staff Reports

A new musical comedy "Tomran" opens at 8:30 p.m. Friday in Theatre One at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Midland Community Theatre has been selected from theaters in Texas, including professional theaters, to stage the premiere production of this new musical by playwright Dr. Andrew Edington and composer Harriette Flachmeier. "Tomran" is being produced by sponsors who hope that Paramount Pictures will move the musical from Midland to Broadway.

Edington is president emeritus of Schreiner College, Kerrville, and Mrs. Flachmeier is a professional musician living in Dallas. The Midland production will be directed by MCT's executive director, Don Bachmann.

The background for the story can be traced to 1867 when a group of adventurous men and women from the South found they couldn't endure the humiliating environment of Reconstruction and decided to begin their own community in another land. Two river boats carried them from New Orleans to Brazil. Eventually 3,000 Southerners steamed up the Amazon River and founded the settlement of Americana.

In Americana they and their descendants remained in almost complete isolation until 1943 when the crew of a U.S. naval vessel searching for a missing team of explorers was startled to discover, along the river, plantation mansions built in the style of the Old South. It is at this point that the story begins.

Heading the cast are Becky Engelstad as Tomran, Scooter Tilley as the Captain and Mike McLaren as the Consul. Supporting roles are played by Mike Wilson, Jim Bartlett, Marilyn Bassinger and David Hidinger.

Others in the cast include Brian Ameel, Billy Cook, Kenneth Busbin, Jay Hundley, Andy Salcedo, Cecil Beare, James Brazell, Marc Slattery, David Bowmaster, Rich Davidson, Nancy Cook, Charlotte Larson, Carol Cristiani, Judy Coleman, Martha Manulik, Sharon Perkins, Carla Davidson, Robin Palmer, Deanna Mutter, Leanna Beique, Crysti Scoville and Patricia Loftis.

Musical director for "Tomran" is Tom Roberts. Choreographer is Jerry Yoder and the set designer is David Layman. Stage manager is D.A. Plumlee.

Casting committee members were Marilynn Weaver, Clint Galloway and Penny Taulman.

For reservations call the box office at 682-4111.

Tom Ryan's "Visitation to Taylor Camp Country"

Midland artist honored at CAA awards banquet

PHOENIX, ARIZ. — Midland artist Tom Ryan was honored Oct. 20 at the awards banquet of the Cowboy Artists of America.

Ryan's work "Visitation to Taylor Camp Country," pastel and charcoal, was awarded the Gold Medal in the drawing and other media category.

The 19th annual sale and exhibition of the Cowboy Artists of America opened Oct. 19 at the Phoenix Art Museum to a packed house. Sales for the weekend totaled $1,407,000. First night sale counted for $1,302,650 of that amount.

The new works of the 23 CAA artists and three emeritus members were presented to a shoulder-to-shoulder crowd of more than 1,200 art collectors and members of the press representing 30 states and four nations. Prices on the 95 paintings and 24 bronze sculptures ranged from $950 for Bud Helib's small bronze, "A Test of Will," to $135,000 for R. Brownell McGrew's oil, "The Girl from Tse Zhiin Di Dloo."

Organized in 1965 by artists dedicated to the art of the American West and to the artistic traditions of Frederic Remington and Charles Russell, the CAA is credited with preserving and promoting quality Western American Realism.

Other winners in this year's show were Kenneth Riley, "Mandan Gold," winner of the Gold Medal in oil and Best of Show; Robert Duncan, "Going to Call the Buffalo," winner of the Silver Medal in oil; William Moyers, bronze, "Endurance," winner of the Gold Medal for sculpture; Grant Speed, bronze, "Ropin' Out the Best Ones," Silver Medal for sculpture; James Boren, watercolor, "Two Months 'Til Spring," Gold Medal for water solubles; Gordon Snidow, gouache, "The Quiet Before the Storm," Silver Medal for water solubles; Melvin Warren, pastel, "Old Timer of Tombstone," Silver Medal for drawing and other media; and Bill Owen was awarded the Colt Award.

Herb Mignery and Robert Pummill have been admitted to the CAA. Both artists will be exhibiting for the first time at next year's exhibition.

The 19th annual exhibition of the CAA will continue through Nov. 18.

Symphony chorale to sing works from 'Three Bs'

The Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale will present its free fall choral concert, "Three Great Bs of Choral Music: Bach, Brahms and Britten," at 8 p.m. Saturday in Odessa and 2:30 p.m. Sunday in Midland.

The Odessa performance will be at Crescent Park Baptist Church and the Midland performance at First Baptist Church. Both will be conducted by Dr. Stanley Engebretson, now in his sixth season as chorale director.

Throughout his tenure, the chorale has grown in quality and size, and membership now numbers over 130 singers. Engebretson also serves as director of choral activities at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, Odessa, and as music director of Memorial Christian Church, Midland.

Soloists for the upcoming performances from Midland are Beth Hanssen, Midge Anderson, Linda Kester, Scott Hammond and James Humphreys. Other soloists are Susan Dawes of Big Spring and Jane Debenport NS G.W. "Dub" Shepherd, both of Odessa.

Works to be featured on the concert include a motet by J.S. Bach, "Der Geist hilft unsrer Swachheit auf," followed by some of Brahms' lightest and most attractive works, the Neue Leibeslieder (New Lovesong) waltzes. Concluding the first portion of the concert will be a traditional favorite by Benjamin Britten, "Rejoice the Lamb." This animated English work utilizes both choir and pipe organ to their fullest potential.

Following the Britten will be several choral works of a lighter nature including folksongs by Stephen Foster, such as "Nelly Bly," "Skip to My Lou" and "Go 'Way Down From My Window," performed by the Pro Arte Singers, a chamber group from the Symphony Chorale. The concert concludes with some of the best loved traditional spirituals.

For more information call the symphony offices, 563-0921.

'Amadeus' overwhelms filmmaker

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Four years ago, Milos Forman was casting his film "Ragtime" in London when his agent took him to see a preview of a play by another client, Peter Shaffer.

"I had no idea what I was going to see," recalled Forman, 52. "I was overwhelmed by the play, and even then I was eager to make it into film."

The play was "Amadeus," which became a huge dramatic hit in London and then in New York. Shaffer, who also did "Equus," had delved into 18th century history to trace the relationship of the boy genius Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart and Antonio Salieri, a lesser composer who sought Mozart's destruction out of maniacal jealousy.

"I was fascinated by the story, fascinated and shocked by what I learned," said Forman, who spent his first 37 years in Czechoslovakia. "I knew Mozart by his music but not as a man. I didn't know Salieri at all."

'Prisoner' set to open at Permian Playhouse

ODESSA — Neil Simon's "The Prisoner of Second Avenue" opens at 8 p.m Nov. 9 at the Permian Playhouse.

Deaf girl's need for heart surgery rouses man to donate $10,000

By ALAN L. ADLER
Associated Press Writer

SAN DIEGO — Giovanni Ronci had never met Sylvia Olivera. But when he learned that the 12-year-old deaf and mute girl needed heart surgery that she could not afford, he walked into a San Diego TV station and plunked down $10,000 in $100 bills to pay for the operation.

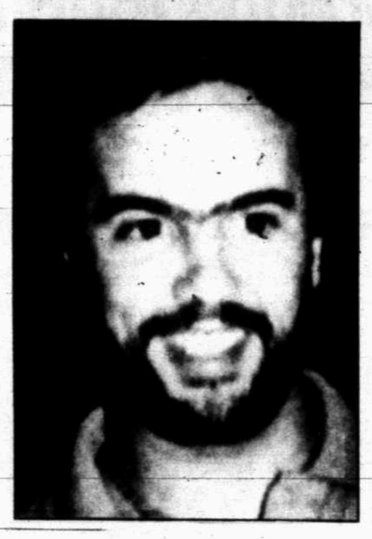

Ronci, who moved to California from his native Mexico City several years ago, said he just wanted to "give something back" for his 28 years of health and prosperity.

Ronci learned about Sylvia on Tuesday when a television news show did a report on her and after discussing it with his wife, sold a collection of Mexican gold coins to get the $10,000.

He delivered the proceeds in $100 bills to KGTV, "which had been trying to raise the money for awhile. I just felt like giving it to her."

Sylvia suffers from a birth defect called patent ductus arterosis, in which a blood vessel between the heart and lungs does not close as it should, said Dr. David Sahn, chief of pediatric cardiology at University of California San Diego Medical Center.

The condition can be corrected through relatively simple surgery, but if it is not corrected can lead to serious lung damage, Sahn said.

Giovanni Ronci

Ronci's gesture surprised Diane Reighard, who began a campaign to raise $10,000 for Sylvia's surgery after meeting the girl in May at the Rancho Sordo Mudo, a special care facility and school for deaf and mute Mexican children about 27 miles north of Ensenada, Mexico.

Ms. Reighard, working as a volunteer at the ranch with other church members, said Sylvia "walked up to me and took my hand and placed it on her chest. Those big brown eyes were looking at me saying 'Please help me.' She could tell there was something wrong."

Sylvia's father lives in Ensenada, but is too poor even to visit the ranch, said Ms. Reighard, adding she took an immediate interest in Sylvia in part because her 3-year-old son, Darrel, died of complications a year after open-heart surgery. That was five years ago.

"That's kind of another reason why this tugged at my heart strings," she said. She had raised $1,500 for the surgery before Ronci's donation.

The girl also suffers from hyperthyroidism, which has stunted her growth. She is 4-feet-5 and weighs only 57 pounds.

"I had been saying a lot of prayers," Ms. Reighard said. "There's somebody up there that listens. It was like Sylvia said in a letter to (Ronci): 'There are still some people out there that have a heart and thanks for helping to fix mine.'"

Ronci, who has two children aged 3 and 5, said "there was no tax deductible reason or anything like that" for his donation.

"I always wanted to save those coins to do something good," he said. "It felt so good I didn't think twice. I've always had everything and a healthy family so I wanted to give something back."

Heart attacks often undetected

BOSTON (AP) — More than a quarter of all heart attacks pass without the tell-tale symptoms of chest pain, and the victims never realize they have had the seizures unless the damage is detected later during a checkup, a study today shows.

Nevertheless, these silent attacks are as serious as the typically painful kind, and their victims are susceptible to such complications as heart failure and strokes.

The findings are drawn from the Framingham Heart Study, which has followed the health of 5,127 residents of Framingham, Mass., since 1948. Over 30 years, 708 men and women suffered heart attacks, but 30 percent of them were undetected at the time.

"About a quarter of all heart attacks that have occurred in the community in men and as much as a third in women were going unrecognized," said Dr. William B. Kannel.

Self-diagnosis discouraged if peptic ulcer suspected...

Dear Dr. Solomon: I think that I may have a peptic ulcer and I would like to know what the symptoms are so that I can know for sure. — Gabe, Newark, Dela.

Dear Gabe: If you think you may have an ulcer, I suggest you see a physician. Self-diagnosis can be a dangerous practice. The pain associated with an ulcer is not sufficiently distinctive to permit a diagnosis.

The pain of a peptic ulcer does not follow a single pattern. Some patients with ulcers have little or no pain, while other patients who have significant pain do not have ulcers. In general, the first symptom of an ulcer is pain in the upper abdomen that is relieved by eating or by taking an antacid. But this is not true in all cases.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If a woman has trouble becoming pregnant and decides to keep a temperature chart, how long must it be continued? — Mrs. J.L., Ogden, Utah

Dear Mrs. L.: A record of body temperature should be continued for at least three months if a meaningful indication of ovulation is to be obtained. Of course, if the woman has a fever in association with an illness during this period, that fact should be noted to avoid confusion.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have some growth of hair around the nipple of my breast. I would like to know if this is common and if there is anything that can be done to remove it simply and safely. — April, Milwaukee, Wis.

Dear April: The condition you describe is fairly common. Dr. Armando de Moya of Georgetown and George Washington Hospitals in Washington D.C., says that electrolysis is the only method that provies a permanent solution.

For Frank, Jackson, Miss.: According to Dr. Daniel Lieberman, of Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, the rate of success in the treatment of depression is greater when a combination of psychotherapy and medication is used. However, which medication and which type of psychotherpay must be determined for each patient individually.

Baby Fae's historic new heart came from San Antonio-bred baboon

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The heart of a San Antonio bred-baboon is beating in the chest of Baby Fae, but local research officials say they didn't realize their baboons would be used for the first cross-species transplant.

The first transplant of a baboon heart into a human infant, identified only as Baby Fae, was performed at Loma Linda University Medical Center in Loma Linda, Calif., last week.

The child, now 19 days old, was "just doing real well" Wednesday night, spokeswoman June Ochs told the San Antonio Light in a telephone interview from Loma Linda.

Dr. William J. Goodwin, director of laboratory animal medicine at the Southwest Foundation for Biomedical Research confirmed that "the infant baboon was produced here."

But although the foundation is the world's largest breeder of research baboons, officials there earlier this week were puzzled about any direct connection between the foundation and the transplant.

Goodwin said descriptions his foundation received about the Loma Linda research "did not particularly mention the fact of human transplantation."

Rather, it was described as involving a study of the effect of transplantation on the body's natural defense system, Goodwin said.

Nevertheless, he said, the change in direction at Loma Linda will not alter the foundation's provision of baby baboons.

"We would have no objection," Goodwin said.

Goodwin emphasized he felt that the research was properly being carried out and was "saving human lives."

The parents of the baby baboon used in the operation were brought here from Kenya, Goodwin said, adding that "we have been providing baboons to them since early 1983 for their transplant study."

Infant living 'one day at a time'

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Doctors hope Baby Fae, the infant with a transplanted baboon's heart, eventually will go home, but for now she receives her parents' caresses in a hospital as she battles the possibility of organ rejection one day at a time.

Immunological studies "show no indications of any rejection crises of any sort.... It's surprising. I'm very pleased," Dr. David Hinshaw, a surgeon at Loma Linda University Medical Center, said Wednesday.

Doctors said Baby Fae was guzzling formula on her sixth day with the transplanted heart, while her mother rocks her and calms her when she fusses.

Baby Fae is the world's longest-lived survivor of an animal-to-human heart transplant, having surpassed the previous 3½-day record of a South African accountant who received a chimpanzee's heart.

The nearly 3-week-old infant from Barstow, Calif., whose exact age and real name have been withheld, "is still in serious but stable condition," hospital spokeswoman Tami Wood said Wednesday. "She's very alert and moving around a lot. She has very healthy appetite. She really wants her food when it's time to be fed."

The infant, with a severe heart defect, was hours from death when she received the baboon's heart Friday, said doctors who performed the transplant at the Loma Linda hospital under the leadership of Dr. Leonard Bailey.

Baby Fae will continue receiving anti-rejection drugs "for a substantial period, perhaps indefinitely," said Hinshaw. "Our anticipation is certainly the child will go home like any other child.... We hope it would be as early as possible."

He said doctors were encouraged by the lack of a "hyperacute" rejection immediately after the transplant. Transplant patients often show signs of rejection seven to 10 days after surgery, he said, but "whether this will be true in this infant we just don't know."

Hinshaw noted there is no "threshhold" after which she will be safe from rejecting the transplant, but her chances improve with time.

"It's a day-by-day process," Hinsaw said. "Every day that goes by in a favorable way is in a sense a watershed."

Baby Fae's parents spend "a great deal of time" with the infant, said pediatrics chairman Dr. John Mace.

Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro hands out treats to youngsters dressed in Halloween costumes at the Racine Cooperative Nursery School during a campaign visit to the Wisconsin city Wednesday.

Creatures prowl for Halloween

By The Associated Press

Mummies walked and werewolves howled as Halloween revelers paraded in New York, partied where trick-or-treating was banned and gave up the ghost for the gospel in an Illinois town where it was "not a time for the devil."

Meanwhile, two children were killed and a half-dozen people were injured in traffic accidents or pranks gone sour. A service station in Tennessee was held up by three hobgoblins, and a Chicago teen-ager and an off-duty policeman in New York were stabbed by masked men.

More than 2,000 children took their Halloween candy to X-ray stations at Houston area hospitals and fire stations to prevent the repeat of a 1974 poison death that prompted laws against tainting treats.

Only one instance of a straight pin in candy was reported there. A handful of trick-or-treaters in Jersey City and Camden, N.J., including the children of Camden's police chief found pins and glass in candy. One tainted candy bar was found in Lincoln, Neb., during what police said was "one of the slowest" Halloweens in recent years.

In Frostburg, Md., authorities fearing tainted candy replaced trick-or-treating with a town party, while in Midland, Md., the traditional door-to-door gathering gave way to a parade.

Thousands of New Yorkers lined the narrow streets of Greenwich Village as spooks, goblins, Ghost-busters and other fantastic creatures took part in a loosely organized parade.

Marchers included an astronaut with a fishbowl helmet — with real fish; a bag of french fries, and a roach motel with a typically New York sign: "Going Co-Op. No Broker's Fee."

There also were two blind mice searching for a third.

In Du Quoin, Ill., Halloween gave way to "Hallelujah Night" as members of the Cornerstone of Faith Church treated 60 youngsters to a Gospel seminar, puppet show, music, games and refreshments.

"Satan, goblins, everything evil is represented at Halloween," said Steve Parry. "We want our children to think about the Lord and ... not a time for the devil."

"We are not against trick-or-treating as much as we are against what the costumes represent — witches and things of that type," said the Rev. Gerald Wright, pastor of the 100-member church in rural southern Illinois.

Colorado state folklorist David Brose, radio station KNUS talk-show host Chuck Podhaisky and psychic Yvonne Ciardullo spent the evening in an 84-year-old Denver mansion waiting in vain for a ghost to appear.

Col. A.E. Humphreys, who killed himself accidentally 57 years ago apparently while cleaning a shotgun, never showed up, but Ms. Ciardullo said during the live broadcast that she had communicated with him.

"Albert wants to stay ... he really does enjoy it," she said. "This is a place of joy. He is not going to harm anyone."

A 64-year-old woman in West Virginia was in critical condition after being struck in the head by a rock "about the size of a small fist" as she and her husband drove along a Mallory highway, said state Trooper G.R. Johnson. Three juveniles were questioned in what authorities assumed was a Halloween prank, Johnson said.

Three teen-agers in Nashville, Tenn., were arrested on charges they donned hobgoblin costumes and robbed a service station.

Ferraro challenges Reagan to debate

CINCINNATI (AP) — Relentlessly upbeat on a coast-to-coast campaign trek, Geraldine Ferraro told an enthusiastic crowd today that Tuesday's election will prove that Americans "are not a selfish, self-satisfied people" and, not incidentally, that the polls are all wrong.

The Democratic vice presidential candidate started her day by attending 7 a.m. mass on All Saints Day, a holy day of the Catholic Church.

She then greeted about 2,000 supporters at an early morning rally.

"We are now in the homestretch of this campaign," she told the crowd. "We're not only going to win, we're going to prove to Americans that we are not a selfish, self-satisified people.

"We're going to show that the arms race can be controlled and that the threat of nuclear war can be reduced. We are going to prove to all those who are excluded ... that together we can share the promise of America.

"And we're going to prove one more thing — that the polls are wrong," she told the crowd, triggering wave after wave of applause.

"I've got a good feeling about this state — I think we're going to win it," she said with Ohio Gov. Richard Celeste at her side.

After the rally, Ms. Ferraro boarded her campaign plane, bound for New York and a big rally with running mate Walter F. Mondale in the garment district of Manhattan.

On Wednesday, the New York congresswoman said President Reagan's questions about her fitness for high office aren't nearly as serious as the questions about Reagan's qualifications for being president for the next four years.

"If the president has any doubts about my substance, perhaps he and I could have a debate," she told reporters standing in the rain in Milwaukee. "I'm willing to sit down on the issues with him. I'm sure one of the networks will lend us a little bit of time."

In the four-state trip on Halloween, Ms. Ferraro called Reagan and his policies "scary every night of the year."

And she told an audience of more than 6,000 students at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill., that their enthusiastic reception should end doubts about young people's commitments.

"You know, today we hear young people don't care about others," she said. "You've just put that whole thing dead to rest."

But polls say the Reagan-Bush ticket is getting strong backing from young voters.

The Queens congresswoman was icily sarcastic as she responded to Reagan's comments in a Hearst News Service interview that she was chosen because she was a woman, not because she is qualified. She pointed to what the Democrats have called the Republican's embarrassing goofs and refusal to hold press conferences.

"Let me suggest also that I am not being hidden from the press," the three-term congresswoman said in Milwaukee.

"I'm not the individual who — during the course of the debate — indicated the only alternative to Marcos' government was communism, or that deficits have no effect upon interest rates, or I have not ever said that submarine-launched missiles are...recallable," she said, referring to Reagan.

Reagan contended that Mondale selected Ms. Ferraro as his running mate mainly because he was looking for a female candidate.

"This time it was reaching out, and I think that it looked to too many people that they were simply reaching for just that reason," Reagan said.

"I guess what I'm trying to say is that the (selection) must be based not just purely on the sex of the candidate, but must be based also on the qualifications of the candidate," Reagan added.

The first woman ever to seek national office for a major political party said she has shown her mettle in the campaign.

"Let me suggest I think I've proved myself as a national candidate not only through the three months of the national campaign, but also during the course of the debate," she told reporters.

Reagan worried about his lead

BOSTON (AP) — President Reagan embarked today on a final ten-state campaign trip from coast to coast, declaring he was worried that his broad lead in the opinion polls will keep supporters from coming out to vote on Tuesday.

Beginning the longest and busiest campaign trip he has made this year, Reagan scheduled a first stop in Boston, invoking once again the memory of a native son and Democratic hero, the late President John F. Kennedy.

Kennedy's name had disappeared for a time from the president's oft-recited list of his heroes after Democratic challenger Walter F. Mondale uncovered a letter Reagan had written in 1960 comparing Kennedy's economic program to those of the Communists and Nazis.

Ignoring Sen. Edward Kennedy's demand that Reagan stop invoking the name of his assassinated brother, the Republican incumbent said in remarks prepared for today's appearance at City Hall that he, too, was a Democrat once, when the party's "leaders were men like Harry Truman — and later, men like Scoop Jackson and John F. Kennedy — men who understood the challenges of the times."

Reagan, then an actor, campaigned for Truman in 1948, but he drifted away from the Democrats in the 1950s and emerged as a conservative Republican about the time Kennedy ran for president in 1960.

Today, in his speech designed to appeal to both the Republicans and Democrats Reagan will need if he is to achieve the landslide he set out for, he spoke not of ideology but of the American dream.

"As we strengthen our economy, strengthen the values that bind us, America will become a nation even greater in art and learning," Reagan said, "and greater in the love and worship of the God who made us and who has blessed us as no other people on earth have been blessed."

"America will never give up, never go back, never," Reagan said. "We were born to be a special place, between these two great oceans, with a unique mission to carry freedom's torch. To a tired, disillusioned world, we have always been a light of hope where all things are possible."

Despite the confident tone of his stump speech, Reagan had a different line for his campaign workers as he set out for Boston and then Rochester, N.Y., before turning toward the industrial and agricultural states of the Midwest.

"I'm as nervous as you are tired," Reagan told workers at his national campaign headquarters in Washington on Wednesday.

Mondale's jabs turning personal

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — With the election fast approaching and little to lose, Walter F. Mondale's criticism of Ronald Reagan is becoming increasingly personal, including a charge that the president has been spending his days "sleeping in the White House."

The Democratic nominee has been sharpening his rhetoric as his campaign skips across the country in the final days of the 1984 presidential campaign.

After a rally in Buffalo late Wednesday night, Mondale was scheduled to make his final joint campaign appearance with his running mate, Geraldine A. Ferraro, during a rally Thursday in New York's Garment District.

Mondale's aides said earlier in the campaign that a political decision had been made not to raise in any direct way the issue of Reagan's age, 73.

But over the last several days, Mondale has targeted not only Reagan, but Vice President George Bush, described by the Democrat on Wednesday as having a "character flaw."

In San Jose, Calif., and again in Louisville, Ky., Mondale noted the president's light campaign schedule and suggested Reagan was not awake.

"Ronald Reagan is taking the day off," Mondale told the crowd of thousands in Louisville. "He's sleeping in the White House."

"It's clear he's taking this election for granted," Mondale said later.

In Baltimore, Mondale said, "This president learned most of what he knows in Hollywood." He later added, "Mr. President, you don't know what you're talking about."

"He doesn't care about what it's actually like or what the facts are," Mondale said. "What he says and what he does are two different things."

Then in a reference to Reagan's urban policies at another Baltimore rally, Mondale said, "Mr. Reagan and his crowd are giving hypocrisy a bad name."

Rajiv 'reluctantly' entered politics after brother's death

Rajiv Gandhi

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Rajiv Gandhi, India's new prime minister, is a newcomer to politics but he is scion of a family that has played a leading role in the nation since its independence.

Although Rajiv showed little interest in politics through much of his life, the accidental death of his brother Sanjay in 1980, and his mother Indira Gandhi's assassination Wednesday have made the 40-year-old former airline pilot the leader of this vast and turbulent nation.

His grandfather was Jawaharlal Nehru, India's first prime minister. And his mother governed India as prime minister for 15 of the last 18 years.

Together, Nehru the father and Mrs. Gandhi the daughter governed India for all but five of the years since independence from Britain in 1947.

The family is not related to Mohandas K. Gandhi, whose civil disobedience campaign for independence made him widely regarded as the father of modern India by the time he was assassinated in 1948. Six months before his death, he helped make Nehru, one of his chief aides, the nation's leader.

Mrs. Gandhi came by the famous name when she married a politician and journalist named Feroze Gandhi.

The couple had two sons before the husband died in 1960, and Mrs. Gandhi groomed Sanjay, the younger by two years, as her successor.

Rajiv became a pilot for an Indian airline and led a quiet life. He met his Italian wife, Sonia, at Cambridge University when they were students in Britain, and is the father of a son, Rahul, and a daughter, Priyanka.

But when Sanjay died in a stunt plane crash, family and political pressures drew Rajiv, however reluctantly, into political life.

"This young man who had desultorily watched the political drama from the obscurity of the wings of the theater was hauled out and put in the center of the stage," wrote the well-known Indian author, Khushwant Singh.

"The way I look at it is that mummy has to be helped somehow," said the balding Rajiv after his brother's death.

"She had a lot of support from Sanjay and now it's not there. I can't really give her the sort of support he was giving her. I don't know anybody, I don't know much about politics, so there's no question of my stepping into his shoes."

But he did.

Rajiv compaigned tirelessly in the hot, dusty Amethi district, 300 miles southeast of New Delhi, and was elected to Parliament in 1981.

The soft-spoken, polite Rajiv quickly assumed his brother's mantle as India's second-in-command.

Appointed general secretary of the governing Congress Party by his mother, Rajiv shed his diffidence and became a political force, attracting a large number of supporters to his fold.

Rajiv found Maneka Gandhi, his brother's widow, a bitter political rival.

Maneka, evicted from her mother-in-law's residence in 1982 for allegedly aligning herself with political opponents of the prime minister, formed her own party and vowed to oppose Rajiv in the next national elections — scheduled for January.

Wearing homespun cotton wraps in the style of Mohandas Gandhi four decades earlier, Rajiv has toured the country extensively in recent years, addressing public meetings, holding discussions with officials and generally acting as another set of ears and eyes for his mother.

People cannot imagine India without Indira Gandhi

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — India without Indira? It seemed unthinkable.

For 15 of the past 18 years Indira Gandhi dominated India, symbolized it, represented it to a sometimes uncomprehending world.

For untold millions of Indians, it will be difficult to imagine their nation without the patrician widow who was known as Bharat Mata, "Mother of India."

"What will it be like without her?" asked one mourner outside the hospital where the 66-year-old leader died Wednesday, her body riddled by assassins' submachine gunfire. "For many of us she was India and now she is gone."

Mrs. Gandhi dominated the national media every day, her name a household word. When people spoke of India, they often said "she," identifying her personally, intimately with their government and their well-being.

Seldom has a national leader achieved such recognition, exposure or popularity. She was known to impoverished peasants and untouchables who traveled miles by bullock cart for a glimpse of her.

Newspapers recounted her daily remarks and her slightest deeds, from laying the cornerstone of a fertilizer plant to greeting a child who won a spelling contest.

She frequently was pictured on magazine covers, lately as the lonely stateswoman contemplating her nation's latest crisis and the myriad woes of her 730 million children. Almost every night state-run television and radio brought her into homes in every corner of this vast nation.

Even her governing Congress Party bore the initial "I" for "Indira" to distinguish it from opposition Congress parties.

Her favorite pastimes — listening to Beethoven and doing crossword puzzles — were well-known and Indians followed closely her family problems and bitter feud with her daughter-in-law and political foe, Maneka Gandhi.

Magazine readers devoured every word of her court arguments to gain a share of her deceased son's estate and to see her 4-year-old grandson.

As she campaigned for re-election she portrayed herself as the tough, powerful and proven leader who alone could chart India's course in an increasingly hostile world. Many people thought she was right and no opposition leader could match her stature.

She moved with the knowledge and confidence that she was Jawaharlal Nehru's daughter, heiress to the mighty political legacy of the independence struggle.

She was the son Nehru never had and he groomed her for power. She was his hostess, his confidante, present at his many meetings with heads of state, always learning, preparing herself.

She sat at the feet of Mohandas k. (Mahatma) Gandhi, who was not related to her, worked as a young independent activist and once hoisted the banned Indian flag in a demonstration against British rule.

Although she was educated abroad and schooled in Western ways, she remained a daughter of India. She was known to be a deeply religious Hindu, offering frequent prayers, occasionally consulting astrologers and wearing saris chosen for their auspicious colors for certain days.
