Fire rages through park

■ Despite tough terrain, firefighters in the Guadalupe Mountains National Park in far West Texas remain hopeful they can contain a 6,000-acre fire on Sunday.

Associated Press

GUADALUPE MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK, Texas (AP) — Firefighters predicted they would control a 6,014-acre blaze Sunday in the national wilderness park despite rugged terrain hampering efforts by more than 750 firefighters.

All but the north side of the blaze was contained Saturday, and crews used air tankers to drop fire-retardant material on the flames while six helicopters doused hot spots from overhead.

"We are hoping for containment at 6 p.m. Sunday. We have released a few crews primarily because the fire line is on steep, treacherous terrain," said fire information officer Jim Payne.

He said the fire's advance into the pristine McKittrick Canyon was slowed by higher humidity, along with the helicopter and tanker drops and crews on the surface.

"Mop-up of the fire continues along its flanks," said Payne. "If the humidity stays up the way it has, and the bucket drops and the work the crews have done holds, we will be able to tie in the fire with a line all the way around it."

He said the blaze was 53 percent contained Saturday evening. Some of the 772 firefighters from 26 fire crews, from as far away as North Carolina and Alabama, are being released, said Payne.

High winds Friday pushed the fire into the canyon, containing sheer cliffs up to 1,500 feet high, "some of the steepest, most precipitous country in the world," he said.

But winds diminished Saturday to 10 to 15 mph, he said, helping containment efforts on the blaze. It was dubbed the Frijole Fire after lightning struck Frijole Peak on Monday afternoon.

Guadalupe Mountains National Park is just south of the New Mexico state line near Carlsbad Caverns National Park.

Payne said firefighters are hoping they can contain the fire before it travels too far into the canyon because of the endangered plants and animals at its bottom. Firefighters were flanking the fire, rather than fighting it from in front because of winds.

The fire appears to have caused less damage than originally thought to an area called the Bowl, which harbors the largest Douglas fir in Texas and several threatened and endangered plants and animals. The tree was saved, Payne said.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Actress Ruth Warrick's intervention into the firing of symphony conductor Ulf Bjorlin could have come off the pages of a soap opera script.

Ms. Warrick, who plays gracious but vindictive Phoebe Tyler Wallingford on the soap opera "All My Children," flew into Palm Beach Friday to defend Bjorlin, recently fired as conductor of the Greater Palm Beach Symphony.

Bjorlin was fired in May after the debut of his composition "Portrait of Raoul Wallenberg," which premiered in April.

Ms. Warrick co-starred with actor Cliff Robertson in the production.

Snake snacks

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — An elderly woman who noticed several of her cats missing now knows the culprit: a 10-foot python.

Exterminator Tom Rogers, who captured the snake and took it to the Louisiana Nature and Science Center, said he found the python curled up in a 55-gallon drum in the woman's backyard.

The snake was probably a pet that escaped or was let go when it got too big, said Ms. Coulson.

Weather watch

Saturday marked the end of the driest June in Midland County history.

The area received 0.01 inch of rain during month, besting the old record of 0.05 inches of precipitation in June 1951.

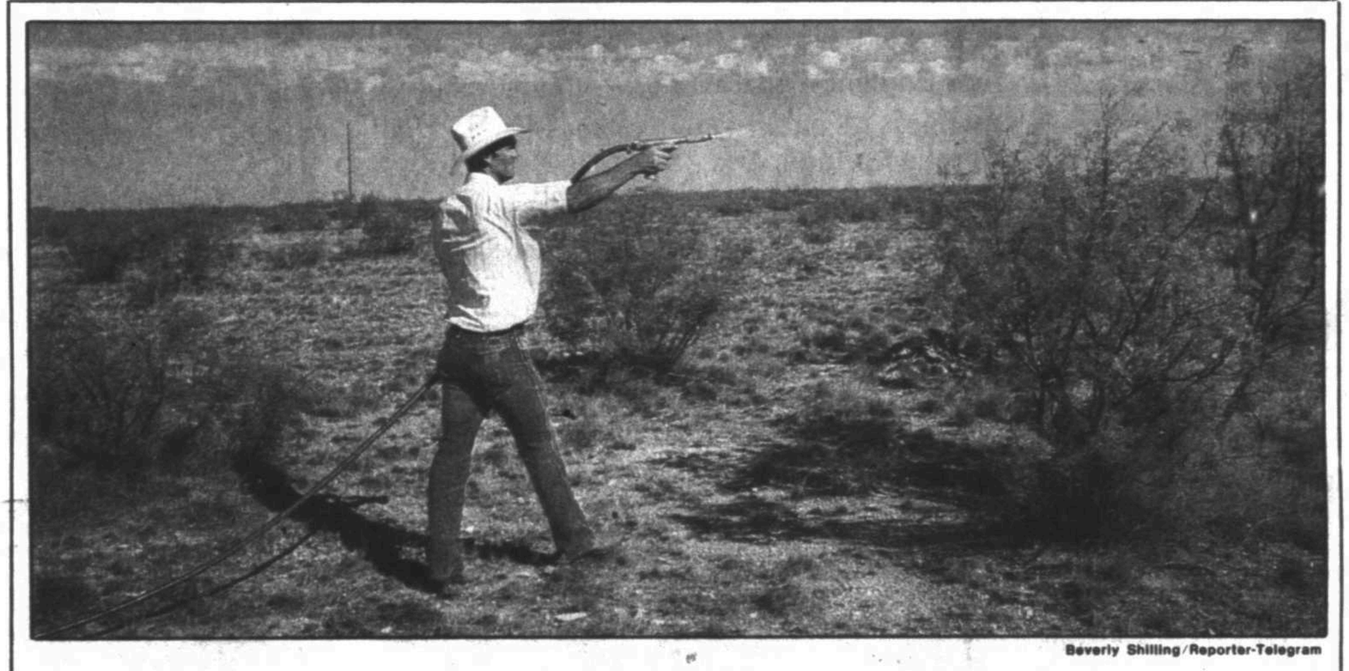

It has been 16 days since the last scarcely measurable precipitation.

Average June precipitation is 1.44 inches. At the midpoint of the year, Midland County is 1.27 inches below its historical average of 5.84 inches.

Spray it away

Midland rancher John Braun poisons mesquite in an effort to kill off the moisture-sapping shrubs and trees from his rangeland south of Midland. Mesquite is competing — and winning — against grasses for soil moisture in dry West Texas. Without adequate grass, livestock is sold off and the rancher is out of business.

Ranchland 'robbed' by thirsty mesquite

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The parched south Midland County countryside has lots of resilience as long as it rains every once in a while.

And rain or not, the hardy mesquite, like the irrepressible coyote, thrives.

While he's waiting on a rain, Midland rancher John Braun is doing the best he can to preserve what moisture is in the ground. His aim, like that of ranchers across the country, is to grow tall grasses for his livestock — sheep, goats and cattle.

"All I am is a grass farmer," Braun says.

Grass is his staple. Without it, he's out of business.

But, Braun knows for certain, he will be far from 100 percent successful — maybe 50 percent, give or take.

"You are always going to have mesquite," lamented Braun, who grew up ranching south of Midland.

Right now, he's on a methodical program to kill off the mesquite shrub with a concoction that poisons the moisture-robbing shrub-tree.

Thousands upon thousands of mesquites are on his spread. In some areas they turn the land into a forest. In that thorny forest, his Rambouillet sheep can easily can hide, cowboys on foot can get lost, a horse would be weary of treading, and a pickup truck would get scratched up pretty badly and bogged down.

"You can't find sheep in there," Braun knows from experience. "You don't want to go through there horseback. You get out here a hundred yards, and you'll get lost. You won't know where you are."

The grass is greener and taller along the dry draws, where grasses are nourished by the thicker topsoil.

Current conditions forcing renewal of area's old battle

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

On West Texas rangeland, the ubiquitous mesquite has earned an A+ in taking over the country.

It's a survivor.

Shrub or tree, depending on variety and size, the mesquite has spread across the land by wind, by cattle carrying the mesquite bean in their bellies, and by feed and wagon.

It's tough and multi-purpose: shelter and food for prairie-land denizens, shade for man and beast, building materials for birds and civilized man, and firewood.

Mesquite, tough as the coyote, plagues ranches and ranchers. It takes over the land and hinders the growth of range grasses by absorbing tremendous amounts of water.

Midland rancher John Braun is counterattacking. It's an old battle. And he is yet another warrior making inroads in the war against mesquite.

"He's also improving his grasses — making his grasses have more vigor and a little more seed production," observes Mike Rodgers, the new range conservationist for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service (SCS) for Midland County.

"Believe it or not," Rodgers says, "a whole lot of that seed will be carried across the fence onto his neighbor's (ranch)."

Braun is using a mixture of herbicide sprays designed to kill off mesquite while not harming grasses. Other poisons, liquid and pellets, have been used before. Some have been outlawed due to negative environmental impact. Ranchers have brought in bulldozers to uproot mesquite. But the cost became prohibitive. And uprooting mesquite disturbed the thin topsoil, particularly on marginal rangeland. Grasses had to be reseeded.

Braun, who ranches south of Midland, is "just one little island out in the middle of a whole bunch of folks trying to do something about" the mesquite, said Rodgers, a Texas Tech University graduate who has been with the SCS since

MMH, MCH may join blood banks

■ A joint blood bank serving Midland Memorial and Medical Center hospitals now under study could further a "spirit of cooperation" in the health service community.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

A proposed regional blood bank could could open a major artery between Odessa's Medical Center Hospital and Midland Memorial Hospital, if a study finds the idea feasible.

The blood bank would be the first-ever cooperative venture between Ector and Midland County hospital districts and could supply the Permian Basin with a reliable source of blood, said MCH associate administrator David Lopez.

Ector County Hospital District directors approved funding half the cost of the feasibility study for the blood bank at their Wednesday meeting. Midland County Hospital District directors gave the go-ahead for their half of the study at their May 30 session.

Consultants with Arthur Andersen & Co. will begin a three-month, $46,000 examination of the economic and medical potential of the bank in July or August, said Dr. Harold Ruben, MMH's executive vice president.

Midland County Hospital District has a blood service, the Permian Basin Blood Bank. Ector County Hospital District does not.

A record-keeping discrepancy that resulted in some donors giving blood after being placed on an ineligible list forced the MCH blood bank to close its doors Oct. 13, 1989, Lopez said.

Since then, the hospital has depended on the Permian Basin Blood Bank and several commercial blood banks to supply its need for 500 units of blood a month, said Nestor Reyes, MCH's blood donor recruiter.

Odessa donors have been contributing to the Permian Basin Blood Bank since their own bank closed, Reyes said.

The idea of a regional blood bank came up several months ago in a Midland County Hospital District committee meeting.

"One concern we had was the competitive situation," Ruben said. "Odessa would have a big footprint in the Permian Basin if it went to a for-profit blood bank status.

"Blood is a precious commodity and at that point there's no competition," Lopez said. He said a "spirit of cooperation" has existed between MCH and MMH for years.

Although Odessa is in greater need of a blood bank than Midland, the proposed bank would streamline operations for both hospitals, by consolidating staff, files and equipment in one location, probably between the two cities.

"If we were working together with the regional center, it would be two communities reinforcing each other," Ruben

AUSTIN (AP) — The sales tax, which Texas did without until 1961, has increased more in the last six years than during its first 23. Today the state sales tax rises to an all-time high of 6¼ percent, giving Texas the nation's fourth-highest rate.

The boost was approved by lawmakers and Gov. Bill Clements to provide more money for public schools.

It is the second tax increase approved by Clements since he campaigned on a "no-new-taxes" pledge in 1986. The Republican governor approved a sales tax increase to 6 percent in 1987 to help make up a $6 billion budget deficit caused by the 1985-86 oil price collapse.

Then, after vetoing one proposed tax increase, he approved boosting the rate to 6¼ percent to meet court-ordered public school finance reform.

"I had to agree to the quarter-cent sales tax (increase). I didn't like it when I did. I don't like it today. I don't like it tomorrow and I'm not happy about it, but, nevertheless, that's the way the system works," Clements said when he signed the latest tax hike into law June 7.

The sales tax is levied on most merchandise Texans buy and on many of the services they use.

By reaching 6¼ percent, the Texas levy now is tied with Illinois and trails only Connecticut, New Jersey and Washington state.

What's more, many cities levy an additional 1 percent tax, and some metropolitan transit authorities assess a 1 percent tax as well. In Dallas, Houston and San Antonio, the total sales tax paid by consumers is 8¼ percent.

Other taxes go up today, too.

The levy on a pack of cigarettes rises from 26 cents to 41 cents. The tax on other tobacco products, including snuff, chewing tobacco and smoking tobacco, rises from 28.125 percent to 37.13 percent.

The gross receipts tax on the sale of mixed drinks rises from 12 percent to 14 percent.

The new taxes were approved by the Legislature to help provide an additional $528 million for public education. The Texas Supreme Court has ordered the state to give more money to poor school districts.

The sales tax was 2 percent when it was first enacted in 1961. In 1968, it rose to 3 percent. The 1971 Legislature raised the rate to 4 percent, where it stayed until lawmakers boosted it to 4⅛ percent in 1984 to pay for school reforms.

In 1986, cash-short lawmakers raised the tax to 5¼ percent, and the 1987 Legislature fixed the rate at 6 percent.

The latest increase came amid continuing talk about the state's overall tax system.

Texas is one of a handful of states without a corporate or personal income tax. But since the oil bust of 1985-86, the state's reliance on sales taxes has increased every year.

In 1983, the 4 percent sales tax generated $3.3 billion, or 38.9 percent of all state tax collections.

In 1987, the sales tax generated $4.6 billion, or 45 percent of all tax collections. Last year, it brought in $6.9 billion, or 53.6 percent.

Projections for 1990 say the sales tax will account for about 58 percent of all collections, said Mary Jane Wardlow of the comptroller's office.

At the same time, oil and gas production taxes have played a shrinking role in the state budget.

In 1985, those levies accounted for 20.2 percent of all state revenues, or $2.1 billion. Last year, they counted for less than half that share: $1.2 billion, or 9.1 percent of the state's total tax take.

Mexican agents will work in United States

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mexican police will be allowed to operate in the United States under new guidelines that permit American drug agents to work in that country, a Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman said Saturday.

The guidelines amount to a reciprocal arrangement under which the Mexicans may send into this country the same number of police that the United States has operating in Mexico, DEA spokesman Cornelius Dougherty said.

In Mexico City, the Foreign Ministry on Friday night said the guidelines had been delivered to American officials. But the ministry denied U.S. reports that DEA agents would be allowed to carry guns in Mexico.

The government newspaper El Nacional said the guidelines would allow the United States to have 60 agents in Mexico and Mexico a like number in the United States.

Dougherty said that currently there were 40 to 50 DEA agents and support workers in Mexico.

The guidelines were produced in the aftermath of the abduction of Humberto Alvarez Machain, a Guadalajara gynecologist wanted in connection with the 1985 torture slaying of DEA agent Enrique Camarena Salazar.

Alvarez was arrested April 3 after being brought to El Paso, Texas, to face charges that he administered drugs to Camarena during the kidnapping, torture and murder of the DEA agent and his pilot.

The incident set off a strong reaction in Mexico. President Carlos Salinas de Gortari said May 25 that "it does not help in the fight against drug smuggling."

The Los Angeles Times reported in Friday's editions that the Mexican government has agreed to allow American agents to carry guns while operating in that country under the guidelines.

The foreign ministry's statement Friday night, however, denied that American agents would be allowed to carry guns in Mexico.

The Washington Post in Saturday's editions quoted Gustavo Gonzalez-Baez, a legal attache at the Mexican Embassy in Washington, as saying that "by no means will DEA agents operate with weapons in Mexico."

"We will not allow that, neither officially nor unofficially," he said.

State school abuse charged

DALLAS (AP) — Three employees of the Fort Worth State School have been charged with abusing nine mentally retarded clients.

Authorities say the abuse ranges from yelling profanities at the clients to pointing an unloaded pistol at one of them and pulling the trigger.

Police and family members of the retarded clients expressed disbelief and anger Friday over allegations that clients had been mistreated.

"I just don't see under what circumstances you'd hold a pistol up to an institutionalized person's head and dry-fire it," said Fort Worth Police Capt. Randy Ely. "We're kind of at a loss to understand why."

Ely said the abuse doesn't appear to be widespread, and police don't expect further arrests.

Customs arrests six

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Federal agents have arrested six people in connection with a drug smuggling operation based along the Texas-Mexico border.

Completing a monthlong investigation, the U.S. Customs Service also seized three vehicles allegedly used in the operation. The sixth suspect was scheduled to appear before a federal magistrate late Friday. He was arrested Thursday by Hidalgo County Drug Task Force Agents.

A seventh person also was indicted as a result of the investigation, customs officials said Thursday. He is now held in Houston pending extradition proceedings on a controlled substance charge in Louisiana.

Five men appeared Thursday before U.S. Magistrate Roberto Guerra, who ordered them held without bond pending a formal hearing. They were arrested on charges of conspiracy to possess and distribute 3,750 pounds of marijuana.

With the help of other law enforcement agencies, customs agents targeted suspects in the operation, believed to be based in Donna and Brownsville.

LULAC fights stations

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — License renewals of nine Texas radio stations, including two in this West Texas city, are opposed by two Hispanic groups that claim their managements haven't effectively hired minorities.

The League of United Latin American Citizens and the National Hispanic Media Coalition will also be opposing some Texas TV stations' licenses when they come up for renewal in 1993, an attorney said.

The two Hispanic organizations claim that El Paso classic-rock radio station KROD-AM, and hard-rock music radio station KLAQ-FM, along with four Houston and three Dallas radio stations, have poor track records in hiring minorities in the communities that they serve.

"We're filing a formal complaint with the FCC (Federal Communications Commission) on those two radio stations," said attorney John T. Garcia, who is the state district director for LULAC.

The names of the other radio stations will be released Monday, the newspaper reported.

Jury acquits 1, convicts two in gang rape

HEBBRONVILLE, Texas (AP) — Two San Diego men have been convicted of aggravated kidnapping by a jury that acquitted a third man in the abduction of a 19-year-old woman who was gang-raped at a South Texas ranch.

A state district court jury found Orlando Garza and Corando Perez, both 25, guilty late Friday night in the March 26, 1988 attack on the woman by as many as 20 men at the ranch where cockfights were being held.

Perez' mother buried her face in her hands after the verdict was read. The jury of six women and six men had deliberated about eight hours before returning a verdict to state District Judge Rogelio Valdez.

After Perez' attorney, Jose Luis Ramos, asked for a jury poll, Valdez asked each juror if the verdict reflected a true and correct decision. Each juror responded affirmatively. They acquitted Isidro Soliz, 28, in the abduction of the San Diego woman.

Jurors earlier Friday had sent notes to the court requesting information on when "the intent to abduct" began.

High mercury readings make tempers flare

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Tempers are simmering this summer, but not so much from the soaring heat as from watching the mercury rise, university researchers say.

While swimming pools and ice cream parlors beckon during the current heat wave, many people become aggressive just from reading the temperature level, according to Dr. Dennis Driscoll, a Texas A&M University biometeorologist.

"There's no doubt the heat makes us feel irritable and has consequences for the way we react to people," said Driscoll, who specializes in weather's impact on human behavior. "And yet, the knowledge that it is going to be hot can be as negative an influence as the heat itself."

The National Weather Service issued advisories last week warning of excessive heat in some parts of Texas. Temperatures through Monday were expected to reach the century mark in West Texas.

Staying mentally cool requires more than seeking airconditioned refuge and drinking lots of fluids, said Driscoll.

"Much of your thermal comfort depends on your frame of mind," he said. "That largely determines how you react to environmental conditions. And if the weather report says it's going to be especially hot, you may be uncomfortable whether it is or not.

"Or, to turn this around, many people consider it relaxing to sit in saunas and submit themselves to temperatures far beyond what they would experience in nature," he said.

People seem to react more to high readings than freezing temperatures, said Driscoll.

"We notice that civil unrest occurs more frequently during times of extreme heat," he said.

High in low 90s predicted

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies and a less than 20 perecent chance of rain with a high in the low 90s and 10 to 20 mph southeast winds, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight is expected to be mostly cloudy with a less than 20 percent chance of rain and a low in the low 70s, NWS said. Monday's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies with a less than 20 percent chance of late afternoon showers and a high in the low 90s, NWS said.

The record high for Saturday's date was 105 set in 1946. The record low of 60 for today's date was set in 1960, NWS said.

Saturday marked the end of the driest June in Midland County's history.

The area received 0.01 inches of rain during month, beating the old record of 0.05 inches of precipitation in June 1951, NWS officials reported.

Since NWS began keeping records in 1931, June has averaged 1.44 inches of rain, officials said. Overall this year, 4.57 inches have been recorded, with the historical average being 5.84 inches, they said.

STATE

Warm, moist Gulf air helped produce welcome rain for parched South and Southeast Texas on Saturday and a tropical wave was expected to push the precipitation westward.

Showers fell in an area generally south of Austin and Lufkin, totaling .28 inches at Port Arthur, .15 inches at San Antonio and .10 inches at Victoria, the National Weather Service said.

A high-pressure ridge extending from Louisiana into East Texas produced southeasterly winds in the Gulf of Mexico that pumped the warm, moist air into the Central Plains states.

The Associated Press also contributed to this report.

First City Bancorporation planning to cut 700 jobs

HOUSTON (AP) — First City Bancorporation of Texas plans to cut about 700 jobs over the next year, chairman A. Robert Abboud said.

The Houston-based banking company also said Friday that second quarter earnings would fall below analysts' expectations.

Abboud declined to say which cities would suffer the largest staff reductions, which will occur mostly in the operations division. But he did say that layoffs won't be necessary in most cases because the majority of the cuts will come through attrition.

First City, which has 20 bank charters — including one in Midland — now employs 6,600 workers in Texas. Abboud has run First City since a $1.6 billion federally-aided restructuring in April 1988.

First City will consolidate its operations division — which is scattered at different locations throughout the state — into three offices, Abboud said. He would not say where the offices will be.

Trading in First City was halted for more than two hours on the New York Stock Exchange on Friday morning awaiting the company's preliminary earnings statement.

First City's forecast of 75 cents to 95 cents per fully diluted share for the quarter fell below the $1.00 to $1.10 many analysts had predicted.

The company's second quarter period ended Saturday. Results will be reported in mid-July.

In the quarter ending June 30, 1989, First City earned $28.1 million, or $1.08 a share fully diluted.

In the first quarter this year, First City's net income was $90.1 million, or $3.72 a share fully diluted.

MESQUITE: Hardy shrub taking moisture

for the livestock. Braun runs some Hereford-Brahma crosses but prefers Charolais-Brahma-Angus crosses for more beef, good milk and sure hardiness associated with the wild tendency in the Brahma.

Old cottonwood trees, bearing a darker and broader canopy than the mesquite, become a cool, shady haven for the sheep and other critters, including snakes, lizards, turkey vultures, hawks, wild turkey and songbirds.

In other areas, which have been aerial sprayed and, more recently, hand sprayed for better economics, patches of mesquite are turning brown and brittle from effects of the herbicide, which doesn't harm grasses and wildflowers.

"Looking at this country," Braun said, scanning the horizon, "you can see how dry it is and how tall the grass is. You can see how much moisture mesquite does rob."

The ideal is pursued.

But the water-seeking mesquite is just one major obstacle to the ideal. Lack of adequate rainfall is another.

Getting rid of mesquite means more water for the grass which, to the rancher, is at least as good as money in the bank.

"There's other benefits of getting rid of mesquite," says Braun. "If you are running sheep in West Texas, they are hard to find on hot days. They like to hide under (mesquite) trees. A lot of times at roundups for shearing, we miss sheep."

Even if he could, Braun would not get rid of all of the mesquite. The shrub or tree is drought resistant, hardy, provides cooling shade for livestock, and can enhance the landscape.

And even if he tried, which he does, to get rid of the coyote, he couldn't. The critter, like the mesquite, is a survivor.

"The mesquite this year has cost me about as much as coyote predators have cost me," says Braun. "But then, I have sprayed an awful lot."

And it wouldn't bother Braun if more Texans, who seems to favor beef, would eat more lamb and mutton.

"It's lower in cholesterol than beef," touted Braun, who had rather raise sheep than cattle. It's just a "personal preference" not shared by all ranchers.

"Most people here think it's greasy," he says of lamb. "But charcoaled, it's not greasy. Charcoal a good (chop loin), it's better than a T-bone steak."

Coyotes, which often go after rodents and jackrabbits, do diet on lamb when the opportunity is handy.

"Our coyote problems start in September and October and stay pretty serious until about February," says Braun. "That's when they are leaving the dens. They're out (hunting for) food to take back to the pups. We haven't had too much trouble since then. But I'm just knocking on wood. It could happen at any time."

There's far more than drought, mesquite and coyotes to bring a rancher to his knees.

There are other predators, disease, stress, wool quality, and the supply and demand which dictates market prices.

"Two years ago, bobcats totally destroyed our goat population," says Braun. "We did not raise a kid. The government trapper trapped some bobcats. Now, we have a few kids left."

In some years, Braun has killed as many as 50 coyotes on his ranch. In other years, the kill has been half that.

"Why not let us try to kill them all?" Braun asks rhetorically. "We can't kill them all. They are like the mesquite; they can adapt. As we apply more and more hunting pressure on the coyote, try to take him out, all they are going to do is have a little bit better survival rate. You are never going to get rid of coyotes."

And there are some benefits to that. "They (coyotes) do help control rodents."

The predator population dropped this year due to the plague that killed off the prairie dog population a couple of years ago.

As a result, "there was nothing here for them (coyotes) to eat except sheep.

"Luckily, we chased them enough that they didn't want to mess with the sheep. I believe the coyotes moved northeast about 10 miles, and they are over there helping a neighbor."

Mesquite, like the coyote, has benefits on and off the range.

There are markets for coyote pelts — particularly for coats.

And there are markets for mesquite: wood for fireplaces and charcoal for grills.

"Whether it is economically feasible or not, I don't know," Braun said candidly.

On the ranch, Braun puts up with a lot; he enjoys the outdoors and the relatively independent life afforded by ranching.

Braun, who was born into a ranching family 44 years ago, "ranches because I want to. And I do it to make a profit."

"They're not many ranchers today that are making it just on the ranch. They need some other source of income — unless they live on the ranch and do everything themselves. I could make a living just out of the ranch without an oil income," Braun says. "I'm one of the fortunates."

"I like the freedom and the independence of getting out. You have to like the outdoors," he said of the rustic life.

"It takes a special person — like going across the pasture horseback" and caring for the land and all that it holds. "You have to be in tune with nature, because you sure can't change it."

Fire aid offered

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — Firefighters tightened a ring around one of California's most destructive brush fires Saturday, while first steps were taken to restore ravaged neighborhoods and federal assistance was offered.

BATTLE: Mesquite difficult to defeat

(From 1A)

1976. Before landing in Midland, he worked with ranchers and farmers in the Balmorhea, Jacksboro and Brownfield areas.

Year after year, ranchers throughout the Southwest have fought the mesquite which, through uprooted and poisoned, returns.

In that respect, it's like the drought: Once gone, it returns.

"The country itself is pretty well infested with mesquite and several other brush species — salt cedar and creosote brush," says Rodgers.

While the 40-year-old Rodgers lauds efforts by Braun and other ranchers to purge mesquite from the rangeland, he, like the farmers and ranchers, is aware of the more grave problem — drought.

When most all else is dead and gone, the mesquite with its moisture-seeking taproot is just about the last to survive. Grassland dies out. Ranchers sell off their livestock. Ranches are sold off. Some survive; eventually, new and sometimes smaller ranches crop up.

"We haven't had the rainfall. We have the high temperatures," observes Rodgers, who notes the survival qualities of the hardy mesquite shrubs and trees. "And they are sucking the water up."

Though rainfall is far overdue, ranchers will take what they can get whether too little or too much.

Too little just settles the dust. Too much rushes down draws and erodes soil. The ideal rainfall is soft and gentle day after day — a "good soaking rain."

"We need it in the spring to get us some grass growing," wishes Rodgers. "We're not getting it. We can survive a dry fall better than we can a dry spring."

Mike Rodgers

Rodgers notes this deduction from an academic study of rainfall statistics: "If you have a dry May, you'll have a 37 percent chance of having a wet September."

But, figured another way, Rodgers said: "You'll have a 63 percent chance for a dry September."

For the Midland area, June was a dust bowl — thoroughly dry except for a slight teaser. May was almost a solid scorcher: only a third of an inch of rainfall graced the plains. Barely a planting rain.

"I imagine, as times get hard for the rancher, he's not going to be spraying bush," Rodgers said.

His cash flow will be down and his primary concern will be for rain, which ultimately governs the fate of the ranching operation.

"Mesquite is a big-enough problem statewide," reasons Rodgers, "that some of these years, because of the crucial water problem that we have, you may see more and more incentive to farmers and ranchers to do more spray-work, more grubbing and more reseeding." That incentive might be through tax breaks and reimbursement of mesquite-control costs.

"People like John (Braun) really need a pat on the back, because they are the guys going out and doing the work."

Rodgers and other SCS agents learn from Braun and other successful ranchers and pass on the word to other ranchers.

When the rancher kills off mesquite and other detrimental shrubs and bushes to the benefit of grasses, "what really happens is that the watershed on that land is really improved," says Rodgers.

"The grass is back — holds that land back. He's preventing an awful lot of blowing, an awful lot of water runoff.

"Our technology is better. More people are aware of the environment. We are more conscious of soil-water conservation now, perhaps, than we have ever been before even though you'll find one or two guys out there that really aren't doing a whole lot towards real soil-water conservation."

Even so, the landowners, aware that the land will take care of them if they will take care of it, are "keeping cover on the land. They're not abusing it. Some of the practices they see their neighbors do are rubbing off on them."

Meanwhile, many ranchers are attacking the mesquite, worrying about the drought, and praying for rain.

BLOOD: Service studied

said. "We could be price competitive with larger for-profit groups like United Blood Services."

The high cost of blood testing and record keeping has put some independent blood banks out of business, making regional banks economically desirable, Lopez said.

Dallas, El Paso and San Antonio already have regional blood services, he added.

"It's a trend because of Food and Drug Administration requirements," he said. "Metropolitan areas rarely have independent blood banks, they've all gone to regional donor pools for economy of scale."

Blood from the Permian Basin Blood Bank is cheaper per unit than that bought from commercial banks, Lopez said.

He believes it is also safer.

"The incidence of AIDS is not as prevalent here as in San Francisco or New York," Lopez said. "If I ever need blood, I'd much rather get it from Midland.

Lopez and Ruben would like to see a regional bank incorporate outlying communities including Stanton, Monahans, Alpine, Pecos and Andrews, all of which must acquire blood from commercial sources.

The bank could allow donors to receive credits for the blood they'd given if they needed a transfusion, Lopez said.

Nancy Bacon, the administrative director of the Permian Basin Blood Bank, said MMH uses 400 units of blood a month. Added to MCH's need, she estimates the Midland-Odessa region needs 2,000 donors a month to keep up with demand.

With a regional blood bank, she said the hospitals could unify their donor drives and expand their pool.

"Between the two cities, we have over 200,000 people, which should easily maintain a good blood base," Bacon said.

She wants the proposed bank do screenings for rare blood antigens and other specialized blood needs, as commercial blood banks do.

"We've got a Texas frame of mind about this, we want to be the best," Bacon said.

Ruben said that if the study recommends a regional blood bank and both districts approve it, one could be established incorporating current MCH and MMH blood personnel and equipment within 18 months or two years.

NATO chiefs poised to reshape alliances

NATION

By Terence Hunt

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the tumultuous aftermath of the Cold War, President Bush and his NATO colleagues gather in London this week to chart the political and military future of Europe.

It is a meeting that none of them could have envisioned when NATO leaders last met 13 months ago to toast the 40th anniversary of the military alliance — four decades of keeping the Soviet threat in check.

But drastic changes in Eastern Europe have wrought dramatic alterations in the West's military federation as well.

The central issue of the meeting, slated for Thursday and Friday, strikes at the very heart of the Atlantic Alliance.

How can NATO, after four decades as a military alliance poised against the Warsaw Pact, transform itself into a mostly political organization following the collapse of communism in Eastern Europe?

On a related front, the leaders must deal with Soviet anxieties about East Germany leaving the Warsaw Pact to join with West Germany as one nation within NATO. Bush is floating the idea of a NATO statement of non-aggression toward nations of Eastern and Central Europe.

And, at the prompting of France and Germany, they will debate whether America and her allies should prop up Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and his crumbling economy. Bush does not like the idea of economic aid, but leaders of the 12-member European Community already have agreed in principle to provide some form of financial help.

"The politics of perestroika helps us all," declared West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl. And French President Francois Mitterrand said "Gorbachev's success is in the interest of everyone."

Bush told a news conference on Friday "It is hard for the American people to say: Why put X-billions of dollars of money into the Soviet economy when it's not reformed, when they're spending 18 percent of their gross national product on military and when they're spending an estimated $5 billion (annually) in Cuba? Some of our allies might be as concerned about that last point as we are."

The heavy agenda of the NATO meeting will spill over from London to Houston, where a smaller group of world leaders will meet at the annual economic summit of the seven largest industrialized nations.

East-West relations, and particularly the question of a financial bailout for Moscow, will dominate the three-day Houston meeting. Trade disputes and environmental problems also will be on the agenda.

Japan is expected to urge an easing of sanctions against China, but the United States opposes that now. An administration official said Beijing must relax its stand against pro-democracy forces before any adjustment is warranted.

But it is the dramatic changes in Europe that will dominate the London and Houston agendas.

The Berlin Wall has fallen. Free elections have replaced most of the totalitarian leaders of Eastern and Central Europe. And Red Army troops and tanks are preparing to go home.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III said "such change brings in its wake not only great hope but also great uncertainty and some danger."

Bush is concerned that NATO keep up its military guard, albeit with reduced firepower, as the Soviet threat diminishes. Yet Bush rejects the idea of getting rid of all nuclear weapons.

"I don't want to make Europe safe for conventional war," Baker said, echoing comments by Bush.

The secretary said NATO would not abandon its longstanding "flexible response" strategy of threatening to fire nuclear weapons first in response to a major Soviet attack with conventional forces.

The leaders are expected to order a review to develop a negotiating position for reducing short-range nuclear weapons in talks with Moscow. The Kremlin suggests that those negotiations begin this fall, but NATO insists that they take place only after an agreement to reduce tanks, artillery and other conventional forces in Europe.

NATO chiefs are expected to nudge negotiators from the East and West to wrap up the slow-moving conventional arms talks and pledge to make even deeper cuts in a later round of discussions.

To ease Moscow's fears, West Germany has proposed to keep NATO forces from what is now East Germany for awhile and to allow the Red Army forces to remain during that transition period.

West Germany also is offering Moscow $3 billion in bank credits and urging the West to contribute funds toward an even bigger assistance package.

The funds are viewed by some as a payoff to the Soviets to let East Germany go. "This is ransom, but it's a very good way to do business," said Michael Mandelbaum, senior fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations.

West Germans credit Gorbachev with kindling Eastern European reforms, particularly the long-sought goal of German unification, and they are concerned that a sinking economy might sink Gorbachev, as well.

The U.S. view is that it would be a waste of money to pump funds into an ineffective, state-controlled economy. Baker suggested that the summit partners in Houston should develop principles and guidelines for awarding aid to Moscow.

California fire worst on books

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — The birds came back at dawn singing of a new day as the people of San Marcos Pass returned to stand in mournful silence amid the rubble of their burned homes.

On the winding hillside streets with Spanish names, blackened skeletons of trees and grotesquely twisted shells of houses stood Saturday as mute testament to the fiery holocaust of the days before.

The acrid smell of smoke remained.

"This was my house. It was a beautiful house," said Margaret Morris, standing near a brick chimney, the only evidence that a structure once occupied the debris-strewn lot.

Mrs. Morris, her burned face and arms wrapped in bandages, was poking through bits of glass and metal for remnants of the Oriental art collection that was her pride and joy.

Last week's Great Santa Barbara Fire, as they are calling it, was one of the most destructive in California history. It leveled 438 houses, 28 apartment buildings, 13 businesses, two farms, a mobile home and 10 public buildings. Officials say the damage estimate could reach $500 million. Amazingly, only one person died.

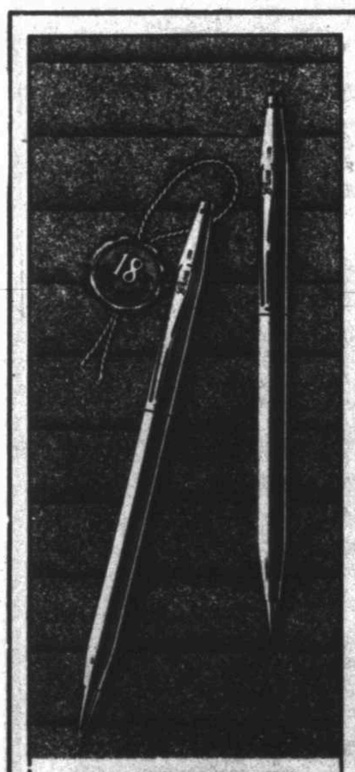

The Bel Air fire of 1961 destroyed 484 homes and the Berkeley fire of 1923 claimed 584 houses.

Traces of the 4,900-acre fire remained along the crest of the Santa Ynez Mountains Satruday morning, but authorities hoped to have it contained by nightfall.

Mayor Sheila Lodge says many residents fear fire in summer.

This year, a lingering drought made the threat worse, and it is far from over with an arsonist on the loose.

Fallout from Bush flip-flop uncertain

By John King

WASHINGTON (AP) — Walter Mondale knows well the political price for backing higher taxes. His advice to President Bush and other Republicans: prepare to pay.

"Republicans are going to have to stand up and confess that they not only have and will vote for taxes but that they haven't been telling the truth to the American people," the Democratic former vice president said in an interview last wee. "For that they should and will pay a price."

Mondale, whose underdog 1984 presidential bid was torpedoed by his support for higher taxes, said GOP credibility will suffer now that Bush has abandoned his "read my lips: no new taxes" campaign pledge.

"Public trust is a cherished commodity and they're going to find that harder to come by," said Mondale, who now practices law in Minneapolis.

Since Bush doesn't face reelection for more than two years, what personal political toll he will pay for his about face on taxes is uncertain.

Mondale and other Democrats say Bush could help himself in the long run if his decision leads to a comprehensive deficit-reduction plan and keeps the economy growing.

Still, many think Bush will be open to attacks that he lied in the 1988 campaign or didn't keep his word in 1990.

Much of the criticism is coming from within his own party, where there is little disagreement that Bush has dealt a serious blow to 1990 Republican candidates whose campaigns are anchored with a no-new-taxes pledge.

"Arrows have been flying, back, front, sideways, but that's what I get paid for," Bush told reporters Friday. "I can totally empathize with what they're going through."

Democrats have been letting the Republicans do most of the criticizing, and feel they have the upper hand in a tax debate for the first time in at least a decade.

"All of a sudden the Republicans don't have a gyroscope," said Michael McCurry, the Democratic National Committee spokesman. "Ronald Reagan and his 'we're the party of lower taxes' rhetoric was for a decade the gyroscope by which everyone else in the Republican Party got direction. George Bush shifts too much for him to be the guiding star of the party."

Republican candidates in tight races have been quick to criticize Bush's decision. More than 90 GOP House members signed a letter to Bush expressing shock at his announcement. And even Republicans not up for re-election this year are taking jabs at Bush.

"Now is simply not the time to cave in on taxes," said GOP Sen. Robert Kasten Jr. of Wisconsin. "If the president and the Democrats in Congress want to raise taxes they are going to have to get someone else to help them."

So intense has been the criticism of Bush within the Republican Party that there are rumblings about a conservative primary challenge to the president in 1992. While few expect such a challenge to occur, conservatives are adamant in their criticism of Bush's reversal.

"The White House is kidding themselves if they think this is going to go away quickly," said conservative activist Craig Shirley. "In one fell swoop he has thrown away the one issue that above all else defined the Republican Party."

How They Voted

KEY SENATE VOTES

Flag amendment fails in Senate. After much heated debate, the Senate June 26 failed to amend the Constitution's Bill of Rights to allow for laws banning flag desecration. The 58-42 decision was nine votes short of the two-thirds majority needed in both houses to pass a Constitutional amendment.

The amendment would have given Congress and the states the power to prohibit physical desecration of the flag.

Last week the House also rejected the proposed Constitutional amendment and Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., declared the chamber would not debate the issue any more this year.

Bentsen (D), Gramm (R).
Voting against:
None.

Senate reaffirms assault weapon ban. By a margin nearly identical to an earlier decision, the Senate June 28 again voted to impose a partial ban on some semiautomatic assault weapons. The 50-48 vote came during consideration of a massive anti-crime bill.

The Senate will resume consideration of the crime bill when it returns from its Fourth of July recess.

Bentsen (D).
Gramm (R).

Joe the magpie is going home to his owners, Bill and Mil Peterson of Omaha, Neb. Because of federal law, Joe was confiscated in June and placed in a zoo. However, a petition drive led to Joe being returned Saturday to the retired couple.

'Joe' free, returned to familiar roost

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A talking, coughing, barking magpie named Joe, seized from his longtime owners in a legal tangle over his protection, was heading home with a little help from his friends.

Two U.S. senators and 316 signers of "Free Joe" petitions got the bird sprung from a zoo and back into the care of a retired couple.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service confiscated Joe on June 11 from Bill and Mil Peterson, who adopted him 16 years ago after he fell out of his nest.

The couple didn't know the federal Migratory Bird Treaty, which protects a variety of bird species, included magpies. Newspaper coverage over Joe brought the unique pet to the attention of the wildlife service, which packed him off to the Grand Island Zoo.

The Petersons didn't give up. They collected petition signatures in support of Joe and enlisted the help of Nebraska's U.S. senators in getting a special permit to keep Joe.

Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan on Friday said Joe could go home.

"I was afraid they would destroy my bird," Mrs. Peterson said.

Joe, due home Saturday, often tells visitors "Come in" when he hears a tap on the Petersons' door. He calls "Mil!" when teased and "kitty, kitty" to the family cat, Snoopy.

Cleveland Vaughn, a Fish and Wildlife Service agent, said "Free Joe" supporters have been many — and vocal.

"I have never had so many calls in my life" he said. "My friends are saying to me 'Hello, Mr. Magpie.' Evening, my kids are teasing me, telling me 'You're picking on those poor people.'"

Vaughn said he received at least 100 calls about Joe at work and at home — about 75 percent in favor of handing over Joe to the couple.

The zoo will retain ownership of Joe, but the Petersons get custody, Vaughn said.

Craig Faanes, an ornothologist with the Fish and Wildlife Service in Grand Island, said Friday that this "is a specific solution to a specific problem. The law remains unchanged."

The law allows zoos and educational institutions to have these birds, but not private citizens.

"It just kind of mushroomed into something that I really didn't even think about," Vaughn said. "It makes me look like a very mean person, and then it makes my agency look also like an outfit that's out of control in some kind of way, and that wasn't my intention."

U.S. Sen. Jim Exon took the Senate floor early Friday in Joe's behalf.

"Let Joe the magpie go home," said Exon, who called and wrote Lujan for the special permit and sponsored a bill with Sen. Bob Kerrey to have the bird returned.

"As wonderful as the Grand Island Zoo is, for Joe, it is not home," Exon said.

Restricted NEA denies grants to artists

BOSTON (AP) — The National Endowment for the Arts, working under anti-obscenity funding restrictions, denied grants to four performance artists whose acts have strong sexual content.

The four artists, each of whom had received grants in the past, were initially recommended by the endowment's peer panel. Their grants were denied Friday by the NEA's 26-member council and Chairman John Frohnmayer. Fourteen other artists the panel recommended were awarded $104,000.

Frohnmayer, speaking in Portland, Ore., said the federal agency's survival is threatened by a handful of controversial art pieces. Two days earlier in Seattle Frohnmayer said "political realities" meant he would likely have to veto some grants recommended by the panel.

"A remarkable experiment that has lasted the last 25 years and has so enriched our country is indeed threatened ... because of 20 images out of a million we have funded," Frohnmayer told the City Club in Portland.

The NEA's 1990 appropriations bill included anti-obscenity restrictions adopted amid protests over works such as Robert Mapplethorpe's homoerotic photography and Andres Serrano's crucifix submerged in urine — both of which received federal funds.

Friday's decision prompted charges the artists were the latest victims in a movement to clamp down on artistic freedom.

"I'm outraged," said John Fleck, a Los Angeles-based performance artist whose pieces touch on such topics as AIDS, religion, the environment and homosexuality.

"I think there's a strong movement going on to wipe out different voices, to have a homogeneous voice that suits certain people's morals," Fleck said.

Last year Fleck received an NEA grant, but his application was rejected Friday along with those of artists Tim Miller, Holly Hughes and Karen Finley.

"We feel basically that it's like the wall is going down in Berlin while it's coming up here in the United States," said Michael Overn, who is Finley's husband and manager.

In recent weeks such venerable arts groups as the New York and Oregon Shakespeare festivals, the University of Iowa Press and the Paris and Gettysburg reviews have returned their 1991 NEA grants to protest the federal anti-obscenity guidelines.

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — One of the few people who believe William Shepard can topple Gov. William Donald Schaefer in the November election is his wife.

Shepard, a Republican, has until Monday to file for candidacy in the gubernatorial race against Schaefer, a heavily favored Democrat seeking a second term. Shepard chose his wife over at least two other possible candidates.

The decision, he admitted, is "a trifle hazardous." Some Republicans were quick to criticize.

"Politically, it's a disaster," said a former GOP chairman, Dr. Allan Levey, "because after the novelty wears off, the people of the state of Maryland are going to reject that totally as an alternative for Governor Schaefer."

Levey said he was so disturbed by the husband-wife concept that he would volunteer to serve as chairman of "Republicans for Schaefer."

"Aw, come on," the governor said, before adding, "That's very nice."

"Count on me to provide the best Homeowners insurance value in town."

Needlework, friends comfort Barry's wife

By Jill Lawrence

WASHINGTON (AP) — The woman who lured Mayor Marion Barry into a drug sting was on the stand, explaining that she screamed when federal agents arrested him "to release some of the pain for him."

It was too much for the mayor's wife.

She smiled so widely she almost laughed and shook her regal head from side to side in disbelief.

Did she think the witness was lying? Or merely foolish? With Effi Barry, it's hard to tell.

The mayor's reserved, enigmatic wife is spending most of his drug and perjury trial hooking yarn into a pastel design.

She's ready then, armed for whatever the day brings.

So far the trial has brought Rasheeda Moore and her sensational allegations that she and the mayor had a long-term affair and used drugs together more than 100 times over the last few years .

It has brought the notorious videotape, showing the mayor trying to fondle Moore in a bugged hotel room before taking two deep hits of crack cocaine, drugs and pipe compliments of the FBI.

It has brought one Virgin Islands woman calling the mayor a pig and another saying he forced her to have sex. It has brought Charles Lewis, another alleged drug-use companion, explaining that he often left the room when Barry had a female visitor.

"As we say in the islands," she said, "I didn't want to cramp his style."

"How can you do it? Why do you stay with him with all the things that have happened?" questioner Lark McCarthy blurted out during a Fox Morning News interview that was supposed to focus on Nelson Mandela's visit.

Mrs. Barry took the high road.

"Just as Winnie and Nelson have bought into a mission, my husband and I had a view and mission for the city," she said.

"For certain our years have not been without controversy, have not been without difficulty," she added. "But you take everything in stride. And getting through the trial is just something else to do. It doesn't sidetrack you."

Effi Barry, 45, has worked as a model, teacher, travel agent and environmental health inspector. As the mayor's wife she has focused on the arts, health education, teen-age pregnancy, AIDS and other family issues.

As the mayor's troubles have multiplied, Washingtonians have marveled at her loyalty and grace under pressure.

"I would be a liar if I said it's not a difficult time for our family," Effi Barry told reporters in brief remarks Friday. She added that "prayers have sustained us."

"She always says it's her spiritualism, it's her faith that carries her through. That's been her answer to me every time I've asked that question," said Barbara Harrison, a television reporter who has interviewed Mrs. Barry extensively.

Peggy Cooper Cafritz told the Washington Post in January that Mrs. Barry's strength comes from her love for her husband and "her undying love for Christopher," the couple's 10-year-old son. "She would lay down her life for him," said Cafritz, who is one of Christopher's godparents.

Ruby McZier, a lawyer characterized by the Post as a good friend, said a circle of supportive, protective women gives Mrs. Barry strength. "She knows she will not be allowed to fall on her face without us forming a blanket."

Moore is not the first woman who got into trouble over Barry, but she is the first to have betrayed him. Two female friends, Karen Johnson and Maria McCarthy, have gone to jail in the past six years rather than testify to a grand jury investigating Barry.

"I think that she was foolish to stay in this town," Effi Barry has said of Karen Johnson. "I think she should have gotten out of town for the sake of her own sense of dignity... and start a new life elsewhere."

NATION IN BRIEF

Mandela leaves U.S. for Ireland

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Nelson Mandela left the United States after a 10-day visit that he capped Saturday by telling a roaring crowd he would return to the United States in October to take up the cause of the American Indian.

Mandela said he had received letters describing the conditions of the American Indians, "and I can assure you they have left me very disturbed."

Mandela, his head shielded from a glaring sun by a brightly colored umbrella, spoke before an estimated 70,000 people at the Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum in the last major event of his eight-city tour of the country.

Saturday's speech was one of the first occasions Mandela had spoken about the plight of ethnic groups in the United States.

Brown blasts Bush

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The Democratic Party on Saturday declared a class war against the Bush White House, pinning hopes of a political edge on taxes and the economy to a blistering attack aimed at Bush's handling of the savings and loan crisis.

With the party Chairman Ronald Brown presiding, the Democrats formally adopted a partisan stance on the S&L bailout.

"The S&L crisis — and especially President Bush's continuing, total bungling of the cleanup — is right at the center of the debate over the future of our country," Brown said in a speech to the Association of State Democratic Chairs.

In an interview beforehand, Brown laid part of the blame directly on Bush, saying that as vice president Bush led a commission that recommended laxer regulation for the industry.

"We have found the one single cause for which George Bush is willing to break his 'no new taxes' pledge and guess what it is — to clean up a mess caused by America's wealthiest people — the bankers and speculators who ran the savings and loan industry right into the ground," Brown said.

Garcia out of prison

NEW YORK (AP) — Former U.S. Rep. Robert Garcia was released from a federal prison in Florida on Saturday, a day after his extortion conviction was overturned, his wife's attorney said.

Garcia was released Saturday morning from the prison at Eglin Air Force Base, outside Pensacola, Fla.

The Garcias, tried together, were found guilty in October of extorting $76,000 in payoffs and a $20,000 interest-free loan from Wedtech, the now-defunct South Bronx military contractor.

On Friday, a federal appeals court said it had found no evidence that Garcia threatened the Wedtech Corp. with economic harm.

Pilot killed in crash

GROTON, Conn. (AP) — A pilot crashed and died Saturday while attempting a stunt takeoff in an air show, state police said.

Russell D. Gage, 52, of Canton, Mass., was dead on arrival at Lawrence and Memorial Hospital in New London, a hospital spokeswoman said. Police said the plane crashed at 2:45 p.m.

Alan Loncto, director and announcer of the Northeast Airshows performance, said Gage had been attempting a stunt move known as a "roll on takeoff" when he crashed.

Seconds after taking off the plane plunged to the ground trailing a plume of smoke, crashing in a grassy area at the end of the runway, witnesses said.

Towboat capsizes

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A towboat capsized in the Mississippi River early Saturday morning and two crew members are presumed drowned, a Coast Guard spokesman said.

The other four members of the Mary Burk were rescued shortly after the accident at 12:45 a.m., according to Senior Chief Ed Moreland of the Coast Guard.

The river has been unusually high in June and was just under flood stage Saturday, Moreland said.

Proposal circulates

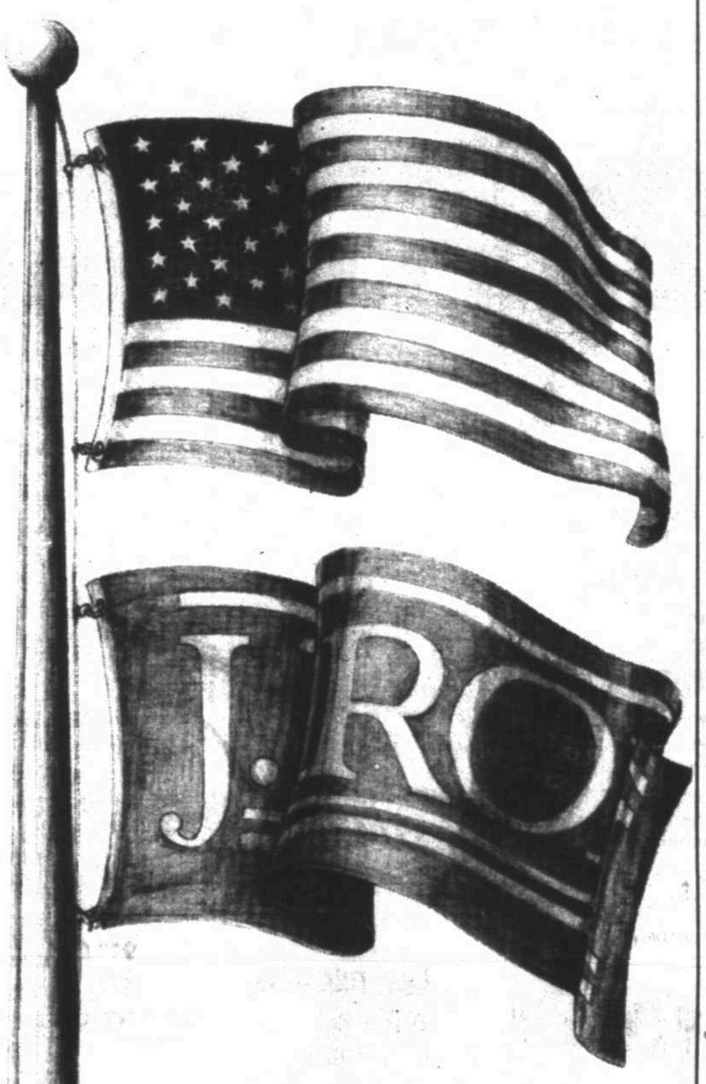

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration has proposed the eventual withdrawal of all the United States' nuclear-loaded artillery shells from Western Europe, The Washington Post reported Sunday.

The proposal was one of several backed by the U.S. and being circulated among allied governments for comment before their leaders hold a summit meeting Thursday and Friday in London, the newspaper said.

The gradual withdrawal of the nearly 1,400 short-range shells would help ease Soviet concerns about the membership of a unified Germany in NATO, the newspaper said.

In Kennebunkport, Maine, a senior aide traveling with President Bush told The Associated Press: "A number of issues are under discussion for proposal at the summit in London. But we're not going to provide any details."

Earthquake shakes Costa Rica

SAN JOSE, C[illegible]a (AP) — A moderate earthquake shook Costa Rica on Saturday, t[illegible]ering mudslides, cutting telephone and electrical service and sending frightened residents running into the streets in panic.

No injuries were reported in the 9:53 a.m. (EDT) quake that registered 5 on the Richter scale, officials at the seismological institute at the University of Costa Rica. It was centered 25 miles west of San Jose near the town of Puriscal.

The U.S. Geological Survey's National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo., measured the quake at 4.6 on the Richter scale.

Seismologist Federico Wendell said there had been no reports of injuries but the quake had caused mudslides that blocked some highways and brief outages of telephone and electrical service near the epicenter.

The Red Cross said a five-story apartment building in San Jose suffered structural damage and had to be evacuated. It said there were also scattered reports of broken windows and cracked walls from outlying areas.

Photographer may be banned from palace

To Western eyes, the picture — which appeared in all of Japan's major newspapers today — might have seemed to capture a spontaneous and tender gesture by a new bride.

But officials of the Imperial Household Agency, the caretakers of the royal family, were horrified.

Prince Aya, 24, the youngest son of Emperor Akihito, married graduate student Kiko Kawashima, 23, in an elaborate ceremony on Friday. At an official picture-taking session after the wedding, the newlyweds were preparing to pose with Aya's parents, Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko.

The prince's hair was a little ruffled, and the princess smoothed it.

"To make an extreme analogy, it's only natural, for instance, that one wouldn't take a picture (of the prince) with his pants down," said an agency official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

If it was taken "at the wrong time," he asked, "why didn't the chamberlains standing at my side say something then?"

Nakayama was barred from covering official post-wedding events today, and the agency said the ban may be permanant.

Although Nakayama works for the Kyodo news service, the Imperial Household Agency says it considers photographers authorized to take pictures of the royal family as "semi-employees" of the palace.

Since 1959, the two authorized photographers have been selected from the Tokyo Press Photographers' Association, an organization made of Japan's 11 largest newspapers and wire services. No foreign organizations are members.

Soviets make oil deliveries to Lithuania

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. (AP) — The Soviet government resumed oil shipments to Lithuania on Saturday, one day after the Baltic republic's parliament agreed to freeze its declaration of independence.

It was the Kremlin's biggest step toward lifting the economic blockade it imposed against Lithuania 10 weeks ago to force it to back off its independence drive.

"We're getting oil," dispatcher Alma Belskita of Lithuania's Mazhiekiai Refinery said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press in Moscow.

Lithuania is entirely dependent upon the Soviet Union for its oil and gas, which it receives at highly subsidized prices. The cutoff of oil on April 18 was one of the toughest actions President Mikhail S. Gorbachev took to make the republic of 3.8 million people rescind its March 11 independence declaration.

About 50,000 of the estimated 1.1 million workers in Lithuania lost their jobs due to the shortages of fuel and raw materials.

In Kennebunkport, Maine, President Bush praised Moscow's easing of the oil embargo. Bush and other Western leaders had been urging both sides in the conflict to compromise and negotiate.

"I'm very encouraged by that," he said.

Oil began flowing in at 7 p.m. Moscow time, Ms. Belskita said. She said the Mazhiekiai plant would begin refining the oil later and that it would not reach consumers for at least two weeks for technical reasons.

"We're glad there will be work," she said of the mood at the plant in northwestern Lithuania. It refines about 12 million tons of petroleum products a year, a quarter of it used in Lithuania.

The refinery employs 2,000 people, who were thrown out of work by the cutoff. The plant processed its last oil April 23 as the blockade exhausted reserves. The refinery produces gasoline for the republic as well as Estonia, Latvia and Byelorussia.

When the single pipeline feeding the plant from the Russian city of Polotsk was shut down, Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis said that was the Soviet Union's "economic coercion and economic warfare against a neighboring country."

Vilnius Radio and Lithuania's official news agency, ELTA, said Soviet First Deputy Oil Minister Lev Churilov promised to resume oil shipments in a phone call earlier Saturday to the republic's Council of Minister's, or Cabinet.

ELTA said Soviet officials asked refinery operators if they could accept the maximum amount of oil.

The Lithuanian parliament on Friday voted 69 to 35 to accept a compromise with the Kremlin. It placed a 100-day moratorium on its declaration of independence, taking effect once talks with Moscow begin. But it left in place all of the laws passed since then.

In exchange, Gorbachev promised to end the economic blockade and start negotiations with the republic, Lithuanian leaders said.

Landsbergis has not said when the negotiations might begin.

Lithuania and its Baltic neighbors Latvia and Estonia were independent from Moscow between the two world wars, but were forcibly absorbed back into the Soviet Union by Josef Stalin in 1940.

All three are seeking to secede from the Soviet Union, although Estonia and Latvia have taken a slower approach to independence than Lithuania.

Top Lithuanian officials said that in two meetings with Landsbergis last week, Gorbachev abandoned his demands that Lithuania completely rescind its declaration of independence.

South African defense minister criticizes Mandela

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — South Africa's defense minister lashed out at Nelson Mandela Saturday for touring the United States instead of working to end violence. He also questioned Mandela's commitment to peace and democracy.

In a highly critical speech, Defense Minister Mangus Malan said Mandela's refusal to renounce armed struggle was an obstacle to ending racial conflict. He charged Mandela's African National Congress was undermining peace.

"At this stage the ANC advocates stay-aways (strikes) which damage people's interests and needs. It is therefore against the people. It is anti-people," Malan said. "With their further demands they transgress the boundaries of democratic behavior."

He criticized Mandela for spending much of his time overseas instead of working for peace.

"At this point of time he is the most over-publicized politician in the world media," Malan said.

The defense minister's speech at the annual armed forces day parade was the harshest attack by a government leader on Mandela and the ANC since President F.W. de Klerk began major reforms in February.

Military officials said they did not know if de Klerk had cleared Malan's speech.

A top ANC official, secretary general Alfred Nzo, charged Saturday that the white-minority government was blocking efforts to find a peaceful solution to the country's problems. Nzo told a rally in the Johannesburg black township of Alexandra that the ANC could not renounce violence unilaterally.

"It means other people use us as target practice for their (gun) licenses. So long as other people have a license to kill, the ANC will call on its people to carry AK47 rifles," Nzo said.

In a separate development, police said a bomb exploded Friday night at the Johannesburg home of local anti-apartheid Democratic Party leader Clive Gilbert. There were no injuries and police had no suspects.

Malan, flanked by senior generals, said in his speech that the military could halt fighting, but only political leaders could build peace.

He said Mandela's statements overseas and his refusal to renounce the ANC's armed struggle were a major barrier to starting talks on ending white minority rule. He questioned the ANC's commitment to a peaceful solution to South Africa's racial divisions.

"Is it the objective to use negotiations as a cloak to replace the existing order by an ANC regime," he said.

Malan, a former general who reportedly has a strong following in the military, delivered the speech at a major display of troops, tanks, guns, planes and other equipment to mark the armed forces's 78th anniversary.

Mandela is under pressure by some South African and foreign leaders to formally renounce violence. He says he cannot renounce violence until the government meets conditions, including pulling troops out of black townships.

The ANC's military campaign is virtually nonexistent. But Mandela is reluctant to formally renounce the movement's armed struggle for fear of losing support among militant young blacks.

Top ANC military leader Chris Hani said Friday the ANC would maintain its military strength to ensure the government did not "fall back into its evil ways." He said ANC military training and expansion would continue.

WORLD in brief

Growing strike hurts Honduras

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Workers at a third U.S. company were threatening to join a growing strike that has paralyzed Honduras' only petroleum refinery and the huge Chiquita banana exporter.

President Rafael Leonard Callejas, who faces the worst crisis since taking office in January, said in a brief telephone interview Friday that he has appealed to other unions not to expand the walkout.

Callejas said he hoped "there will be a satisfactory resolution" to the growing number of strikes "for the good of the country."

Leaders representing hundreds of thousands of workers have threatened to call a strike in solidarity with 10,000 employees at Cincinatti-based Chiquita, who walked off the job Thursday demanding their pay of about $15 a day be increased 60 percent.

The 4,000 workers at Castle and Cooke, a subsidiary of Standard Fruit of New York, will strike beginning Monday if "Chiquita Brands doesn't accede to its workers' demands," said Mauro Gonzalez, president of the Standard Fruit union.

Hong Kong title a first

HONG KONG (AP) — In the sunset years of British rule over this last outpost of a colonial empire, Hong Kong finally has a baroness to call its own.

The title goes to Dame Lydia Dunn, who was awarded a life peerage in the Queen's Birthday Honor's list this month.

A key adviser to the colonial governor and a leading businesswoman, she becomes the first ethnic Chinese, the first Hong Kong woman and the second Hong Kong representative in the House of Lords.

As with everything that happens in Hong Kong these days, the honor is being evaluated in light of 1997, when Britain will hand over the territory of 5.7 million people to Communist China.

Dame Lydia, 50, believes her seat in the Lords will provide the colony another avenue to press Hong Kong's case to the British.

"I do not look at this in terms of a personal honor," she said during a recent interview at her posh downtown office. "I see this as a major gesture to Hong Kong by the British government ... to give Hong Kong every chance to air its voice in a more direct way."

300 villages flooded

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Heavy rains and overflowing rivers last week flooded about 300 villages in northwestern Bangladesh, stranding more than 600,000 people, news reports said.

The victims sought shelter on levees and patches of raised ground. Many were living on roofs of concrete houses after thousands of mud-and-straw huts were swept away, the Bengali-language newspaper Ittefaq, said.

"Many people have foodstuff with them, but there is no place to cook," it said.

On Friday, a second flood embankment on the Jamuna river collapsed in the Sirajganj district, 60 miles northwest of Dhaka, the United News of Bangladesh reported.

Dead fish removed

VERSAILLES, France (AP) — France called out the army Saturday to help clean up about 80 tons of dead fish floating belly-up in the Seine, apparent victims of river pollution following severe rainstorms.

A company of 70 soldiers was called in to help 200 rescue workers remove the fish, an army spokesman said.

The dead fish were strewn along an 18-mile stretch of the Seine west of Paris.

AP Laserphoto

East Germans crowd a new branch of West German Commerzbank which opened in Halle Saturday, in time for unification of the German currency today. The building was opened by West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, a former native of Halle.

EAST BERLIN (AP) — The German states united their economies and erased their borders Sunday while 10,000 East Germans waited in line for Western currency on the huge square where they toppled Communism.

A treaty that went into effect at the stroke of midnight transformed the nations into a single economic entity and began East Germany on its swift, difficult transition to a free market.

Fireworks exploded, toasts were drunk and the currency of the former Communist regime was flung into the air as the West German mark became the official money of a transformed East Germany.

All remaining border controls between the two nations were officially eliminated. Virtually overnight the Germanys merged their monetary, economic and social systems.

The economic unification marks the effective end of East German sovereignty and the most important step toward a single Germany. The German states now will work on a political treaty that will likely result in common elections and the creation of a single nation in December.

East Germany is expected to face widespread joblessness as its newly independent factories and businesses are forced to compete with the West.

At least 10,000 people lined up at the only bank known open at midnight, appropriately located on the Alexanderplatz, where massive protests helped bring down the former Communist government last autumn.

A deafening cheer broke out as the clock struck midnight and the doors to the West German Deutsche Bank opened and allowed people to draw on their newly converted savings accounts.

Andreas Schildberg, 16, strolled down Alexanderplatz throwing away East German coins and bills. "It's worthless anyway in a couple of minutes. It has always been worthless."

First in line was Hans-Joachim Corsalle, 41, who delivers coal for a living. He withdrew the equivalent of $1,200 in West German marks from his account to take his family on vacation.

"I'm used to standing in line," he said. "Yesterday, for instance, I waited in line for five hours to get enough gas for the vacation."

Fourth in line was Alexandra Meier, 19, who saw the day as the beginning of prosperity.

"I hope that we'll never have to stand in line again," she said. "Hopefully, we'll be able to buy whatever we want."

Banks nationwide scheduled special Sunday hours to mark the day that, to many, ranked in significance with the fall of the Communist government in October last year and the opening of the Berlin Wall a month later.

"Nobody is going to go home without his money," said Deutsche Bank spokesman Helmut Harmann. The line got longer.

In Philippsthal, on the border of the West German state of Hesse and the East German state of Thuringia, midnight came relatively quietly. Off-duty border guards fired several shots from a flare pistol to mark the historic day.

Holiday marks heritage

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Leading the way

Midland cowboy C.M. Edwards gets ready to rope a longhorn steer with his lariat on his ranch southeast of Midland. Edwards, 76, will lead the grand-entry parade in the third annual Midland Ranch Rodeo at 10 a.m. Wednesday at the Midland County Rodeo Arena east of town. In the 1930s and '40s, Edwards cowboyed for Midland rancher Foy Proctor whose memory is being honored in the Ranch Rodeo.

Third ranch rodeo among Fourth of July activities

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Rodeoing the old-fashioned way will stir up the dust in Midland on the Fourth of July — Wednesday — when the third annual Midland Ranch Rodeo takes center stage in the Midland County Rodeo Arena east of the city.

The Ranch Rodeo focuses on aspects of West Texas ranching heritage. Emphasis is on chuck-wagon cooking, cattle roundups, calf branding, team penning and steer roping rather than the popularized rodeo sports including bulldogging, bull riding and bronc-riding, associated with the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association.

The Midland Ranch Rodeo was conceived "to celebrate the ranching heritage of this country," explained Midland rancher Charlie Welch. Ranching "is what put this part of Texas to going."

The Independence Day Ranch Rodeo initially was organized by West Texas ranchers Ralph Powell, Candi Cowden and Welch. Proceeds from the event benefit the Midland County Livestock Association, which promotes youngsters' 4-H Club and Future Farmers of America livestock projects.

An old-fashioned prelude to the celebration will be a cattle drive headed up by working cowboys late this afternoon on a ranch north of Midland.

Ranch Rodeo will festivities will build to a Wednesday climax in the Rodeo Arena and Midland County Exhibit Building and grounds.

Ranch hands will bring their chuck wagons, know-how, and food stuffs — beef, beans, fruit cobbler, flour and the fixings for camp bread — to town on Tuesday. And they will bring their finest working horses, working stock cattle and tack. The cowpunchers will be outfitted in their natural garb: old boots and spurs, ten-gallon, hats, britches and calico shirts.

Exhibits of bits and spurs and Western arts and crafts will be set up.

And traditional country music, spiced with Western swing, will be played and sung by Jody Nix and The Texas Cowboys from 8 p.m. to midnight on Tuesday at Midland Center. Admission is $6 per person.

Nix, whose instrument is the fiddle, plays the sort of music made famous by Bob Wills and the Texas Playboys and by his father, Hoyle Nix, and The West Texas Cowboys.

The Ranch Rodeo will begin at 10 a.m. Wednesday. So far, nine West Texas ranch teams have signed up for the rodeo. The teams and their top hands owners are:

- Ralph Powell Ranch, Ralph Powell.
- Half Circle C Ranch, Candi Cowden.
- Lazy Z Ranch, Bobby Matthews.
- The C (Chicago) Ranch, Melvin Cotten.
- Charlie Bird Ranch, Charlie Bird.
- The Texas 10 Ranch, Hoot Leonard.
- Dean Ranch, Rocky Dean.
- Faudree Ranch, Stan Willis.

Four to five cowpunchers will be on each team, which will be competing in wild-cow milking, ranch cutting, calf branding, team roping and team penning.

"All these events are something you do on a ranch," said Powell. "This has nothing to do with professional rodeoing."

Family-oriented activities planned at Hogan Park

Staff Report

Plan now to be a part of the Old Fashioned Fourth of July Family Day in Midland's Hogan Park, a fun-filled day crammed with breathtaking activity starting at 9:30 a.m. and running until about 10 p.m.

Enjoy eye-popping entertainment from the city of Midland "showmobile" stage or take part in a flea market/garage sale, games and contests, food and drink concessions.

Shop the flea market/garage sales, where you just may find that treasure or item for which you have been looking. Call Dale Gravelle at 699-3330 or 699-4216 for more information or to reserve a 10-by-15 space for $15.

Entertainment will range from break dancing and rock music to Eastern dance and Tae Kwan Do. A variety of acts are scheduled from 11:30 to 9 p.m., when the group Donny Register and the State Line Band will take the Showmobile stage for a two-hour performance.

A number of community organizations will sell a wide variety of really tongue-tingling food, including nachos, potato patties, corn dogs, watermelon, barbecue sandwiches and soft drinks.

Organizations on hand to vend the concessions will include the Midland Jaycees, Midland Downtown Lions Club, Southside Lions Club, Lee High School Band and Orchestra Boosters, St. Ann's Youth Prayer Group and Confederate Air Force Women's Auxiliary.

Monthly night court possible

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Harry Stone he's not.

But if all goes according to plan, Judge Dean Rucker will be presiding over a night court of his own starting this month.

"I know night court probably brings up a lot of visions of ... 'Night Court' on TV," Rucker said, referring to the popular NBC situation comedy. "Unfortunately, I doubt that this will be quite that comical."

Rucker's night court will be a once-a-month affair, complete with a volunteer bailiff and court reporter. The court will hear only uncontested indigent divorce cases.

Those cases are now handled in 318th District Court, over which Rucker presides. Rucker said he and 238th District Court Judge John Hyde probably will take turns volunteering for night court duty.

Hyde said he condisers it part of his civic responsibility to donate his time to the court. He said lawyers are expected to do a certain amount of free or pro bono work and that judges should be expected to do the same.

"I don't think it's too much to ask judicial officers to donate time to this project," Hyde said. "I am pleased to offer whatever services I can to the project."

Rucker said the night court, which is the first of its kind in Midland, will probably hear between six and 10 cases each month. The cost to taxpayers will be zero, he said, because the lawyers, judges and court administrators involved have all agreed to donate their time.

Most of the attorneys involved are members of the Midland County Young Lawyers Association.

Jan Baker, association president and a Midland assistant district attorney, said night court is an outgrowth of the group's two-year-old pro bono legal clinic.

The clinic was begun in response to the need for free legal services for the poor, Ms. Baker said.

A caseload overflow at West Texas Legal Services (WTLS), a federally funded Permian Basin organization which provides free legal aid to qualified individuals, pointed up the need for more private attorney involvement.

Anne Smith, WTLS Private Attorney Involvement coordinator, said her organization has only two staff attorneys and depends on lawyers in the community to handle some of the indigent caseload.

The clinic works closely with WTLS in processing indigent cases, although cases are referred to the clinic from a variety of sources in the community. Casa de Amigos, for example, promotes the clinic among it underprivileged patrons.

Some 50 Midland attorneys participate in the clinic, with four or five attending each monthly session, said Young Lawyers Association member Russell Malm.

Malm, who this year's clinic organizer, said the clinic serves around 20 clients a month. Clinic lawyers meet with clients and take their cases through the judicial process just like they would for paying customers.

Clients must meet income guidelines to qualify for clinic services.

With the advent of night court, clinic lawyers will be able to take some clients to night hearings — an arrangement which Rucker said will have advantages for lawyers and clients alike.

"This prevents (the lawyers) from having to leave their offices during the day" and take time away from their paying clients or corporate responsibilities. "It prevents the indigent and the poor person from having to miss job interviews or put a potential job in jeopardy by having to take off during the day to come over here to court.

"Frankly, it's probably inconvenient for lots of people to have to take off work to come to court for court hearings. But it is probably doubly inconvenient for those who are trying to get out of poverty. And in a way, it's keeping them from helping themselves."

He said night court will have the added benefit of relieving some of the 318th's caseload.

"It will end up being a significant savings of work-week court time," Rucker said. He said he did not know exactly how much of the court's time is devoted to pro bono hearings.

Night court will be held at St. Mark's United Methodist Church, 1701 N. Main St., where the legal clinic also is held.

Ms. Baker said she hopes it won't just be members of the Young Lawyers Association trying night court cases.

"We'd like to encourage every attorney in Midland County, whether they're a young lawyer or not, to get involved in this," she said.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Have you ever left you home in the morning wondering if your belongings were safe?

If so, there are steps that can be taken to help prevent being burglarized.

"If the burglar wants to get in, they'll get in. That's very true," Midland Police Sgt. E.M. Camarillo said.

"But we also know and agree with the burglar that on top of being lazy they don't have time to spend on trying to defeat security (precautions)," Camarillo said. "Many times they go on and try to find an easier target."

For those wondering just how secure their homes are, the Crime Prevention division of the Midland Police Department offers a free home security survey.

"The purpose (of the survey) is to make suggestions on how to secure their doors, windows, skylights and gates in order to make it more difficult for the intruder to get in," Camarillo said.

The survey for apartment dwellers and homeowners takes only about 30 minutes or less for officers to conduct, Camarillo said. A business security survey also is available.

For the homeowner that participates in the survey and takes the prescribed security steps, a 5 percent reduction on home owners insurance is available.

"The deduction is recognized in the state of Texas by all insurance companies," Camarillo said.

Of all the security precautions that one can take, the best seems to be neighbors watching out for one another.

"The Neighborhood Watch Program is the only good thing going for us right now. It really helps us to prevent crime," Camarillo said.

"The people themselves have to act, to be aware and report any suspicious acitvity," he added.

Camarillo said that if someone wishes to start a Neighborhood Watch Program, the Crime Prevention Unit will supply all the information needed to do so.

Some recomendations to keep a home secure include:

- Lights — both inside and outside — should be turned on and off with a timer or by good friend when not at home. The timer should correspond with the occupants' normal schedule.
- Newspaper and mail delivery should be stopped with ample time before leaving for vacation. Two or three days before leaving is recommended.
- Call the police department and request a daily patrol-by before leaving on vacation.
- Always keep all fence gates locked.
- Mark all property with your drivers license number NOT a Social Security number.
- Doors should have a deadbolt lock with a 1-inch or longer throwbolt.
- Strike plates for deadbolts should be secured with 2-inch NOT 1-inch screws.
- Locks that can be opened from the inside should be more than 40 inches from glass.
- Windows should have a blocking device: Metal window should have auxiliary locks and double hung windows be pinned.
- Always keep garage doors closed and locked even while at home.

Parker & Parsley announces its acquisition of eight partnerships

Staff Report

Parker & Parsley Development Partners, L.P., announced Friday it will acquire eight limited partnerships affiliated with Houston-based Damson Oil Corp.

The P&P and Damson partnerships will be consolidated into a new corporation, Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co., headquartered in Midland and managed by existing P&P officers and staff.

The Damson acquisition will add about 1,300 company-operated wells with proved reserves of 7.6 million barrels of oil and 111.3 billion cubic feet (Bcf) of natural gas, according to 1989 year-end estimates. P&P operates 2,220 with 21.1 million barrels of oil reserves and 102.7 Bcf of gas.

As a result of the merger, Parker & Parsley will add seven gas processing plants with 523 million cubic feet of gas per day (MMcfgd) throughput to its three existing plants with a capacity of 27 MMcfgd.

The expected ownership makeup of the new entity will be 49 percent by Parker & Parsley limited partners, 11 percent by other P&P partners and 40 percent by the limited partners of the Damson partnerships other than Damson Oil Corp.

Damson Oil's interests, estimated at 10-12 percent of total partnership interests, will be liquidated, primarily in the form of oil and gas properties, gas plant interest, or, in some instances, cash and stock in the new company.

When the transaction is closed, which is expected to be by the end of the year, the new firm will grant an option to Damson to sell its gas plant interests and oil and gas properties in exchange for common stock.

The P&P and Damson partnerships will be ... headquartered in Midland and managed by existing P&P officers and staff.

Until the transaction is complete, P&P expects to continue quarterly distributions of about 45 cents per unit to partners in the limited partnerships.

"The new corporation anticipates retaining its cash flow for the purpose of additional investment in acquisitions, development drilling and secondary recovery projects to maximize shareholder value. Consequently, the new corporation is not expected to pay any significant level of dividends," the company said in its announcement release.

The company believes "the transaction will reduce general and administrative expenses of the new corporation compared to the unconsolidated partnerships because of economies of scale and because of the elimination of costs associated with preparing and distributing parntership tax information for the publicly traded partnerships" and expects the newly issued common stock to "reflect more accurately the underlying asset value of Parker & Parsley."

DEATHS

Midland delegates cheer on Williams

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

FORT WORTH — Midland delegates to the State Republican Convention basked in the glory Saturday as one of their own, Clayton Williams, formally accepted the party's nomination for governor and launched his general election campaign.

Midland County's 60 delegates wore distinctive red T-shirts proclaiming, "Midland — Home of the next governor of Texas," during the session that featured Williams' keynote speech.

County Republican Chairman Rick Davis said Williams made an "excellent speech" to outline his program and contrast his positions with those of the Democratic nominee, Ann Richards.

Bobby Burns, chairman of the county's alternates at the convention, said Williams hit an emotional chord with his speech and appeared to put his much-publicized verbal gaffes behind him.

"He's caught their imagination," he said of the more than 8,000 delegates and alternates who cheered Williams Saturday. "Midland has got to be proud," he said.

"It's tough to be humble," Davis added, noting that the county also claims Republican National Committeeman Ernest Angelo; Lou Brown, third vice president of the National Federation of Republican Women; Laverne Foster, treasurer of the Texas Federation of Republican Women; and Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, chairman of the House Republican Caucus, in addition to Williams and the president of the United States.

The president's son, George W. Bush, said the number of current and former Midlanders in Republican leadership positions is a good thing for the party and for the region.

"West Texans have great concern about their neighbors and a level of enthusiasm that gets them involved," said the younger Bush, who is chairman of the Victory '90 Republican campaign organization that will be coordinating statewide phone banks.

"I still consider myself a West Texan," he said, although he has taken up residence in Dallas.

Bobby Holt, a Republican fundraiser, said Midland's GOP leadership role dates back to George and Barbara Bush, who formed the local party organization shortly after they moved to Midland in 1952.

"It just grew and grew," he said. "They went literally from the grassroots to the Oval Office."

While he feels certain he would have been a Republican anyway, he said, "If (the Bushes) had picked Abilene or Wichita Falls, I might now be involved as much as I am."

Lou Brown said Midland may have played a greater role in spreading the Republican party through West Texas because of gerrymandering by Democrats in an attempt to dilute the Republican vote over the past 30 years.

"It's helped us bring more counties into the Republican fold," she said, as the county first was paired with Odessa, then with Lubbock and later in the 25th Senate District, which stretches to San Antonio.

"We'll be doing the redistricting this time," said County Precinct 4 Commissioner Winfree Brown, expressing the optimistic hope that the GOP finally will overtake the Democratic majorities in the House and Senate and name Craddick the House speaker.

In any event, the county commissioner said, having Williams in the governor's office would help.

Craddick said Midland has been a Republican mainstay since the early 1960s and has given the party a strong base in West Texas, but it also has tried to bring other counties into the party.

"We've tried to build the party by making sure all the areas were covered," he said, adding that he thinks the convention sends Williams into the campaign in good shape, particularly in his native West Texas.

Davis also was pleased that the convention focused on the down-ballot candidates, which he said reflected the maturity of the party as it has filled out the ballot. "We've gotten to see their faces and hear from them more than before," the county chairman said.

Retired District Judge Barbara Culver-Clack said the convention was "a howling success," although she pointed out that judicial rules prohibit her from endorsing a candidate, since she still works as a visiting judge on a part-time basis.

Texas GOP averts debate on abortion

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

FORT WORTH — Texas Republicans narrowly averted a schism within their anti-abortion faction, while a messy floor debate Saturday with pro-abortion forces never materialized, leaving delegates to rally around their candidates for a hoped-for November victory.

Midland millionaire and gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams brought the packed convention center to its feet with a speech that attempted to paint Democratic opponant Ann Richards as cut from the same liberal cloth as failed Democratic presidential candidate Micheal Dukakis.

"I say it's time to offer opportunity and incentive, not the regulation and hopelessness Ann Richards and the liberal Democrats have been offering up for years," he said.

Williams, a political neophyte, stressed his experience as "a proven manager" who founded 26 companies over 33 years in such "bedrock" Texas industries as farming, ranching and oil, in addition to telecommunications and banking.

"Ann Richards' experience is rooted in government — in the ivory towers of Austin, where political gossip and public postering are the main industries," he said. Richards is the current state treasurer.

Williams also voiced support for privitization of the state education system, advocating that parents have more choice as to where their children attend school. He also stopped the convention for a session of flag-waving, saying, "flag-burning makes my blood boil."

"In the 'New Texas' envisioned by Ann Richards, you won't have the right to know if your 13-year-old daughter is about to receive an abortion," he said. "Don't let Ann Richards tell you that your child's future is none of your business."

Williams had stayed out of the platform haggling on abortion, although he personally is against the practice.

Richards has said she sees no need to strengthen current abortion laws, including those on parental consent, which form a key provision of the new Republican abortion stance.

Late Friday night, the GOP platform committee faced defection of eight pro-life members over the abortion plank, enough to bring the matter to the convention floor. But leaders were able to alter language sufficiently to keep the eight inthe fold.

The Senatorial District 4 committee member, George Whiting of Beaumont, said Saturday he was ready to call the vote that would have thrown the issue to delegates, but he backed off because "it would have split the pro-life faction of the party in half," he said.

"I think it would have looked terribly bad for the pro-life movement if we couldn't have come together somehow," he said.

The compromise language says the party's goal remains a constitutional ban on all abortions unless the mother's life is threatened, but until that can be achieved, it offers support for seven short-term goals, including a ban on abortions from the second trimester of pregnancy on.

Whiting acknowledged that the platform still is contradictory, a criticim leveled during committee debate on Friday, but he said the compromise at least clarified the meaning of the short-term goals, which he said had been a problem.

"Even the committee was confused," he said.

As to the changes themselves, "I told them I couldn't live with it, but I'd vote for it," he said.

Portion of GOP platform listed

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The 1990 Republican Party Convention approved a party platform that, in part:

— Opposes repeal of the state sodomy law.

— Opposes a state lottery.

— Supports limiting to 12 consecutive years the length of time a person may serve in the state Legislature or the U.S. Congress.

— Supports maximizing local control of public schools including text book selection and curriculum development. Also calls for the dissolution of the Texas Education Agency.

— Supports a federal income tax deduction for families to send their children to private or home schools and calls for a constitutional amendment to prevent court involvement in public school finance.

— Opposes allowing homosexual men or women from adopting or receiving custody of a child.

— Supports a constitutional amendment banning abortions except when the mother's life is in danger and sets a legislative goal of restricting abortions.

— Supports a constitutional amendment to allow state and federal government to pass laws making it a crime to desecrate the U.S. flag.

Seismic cable reported stolen

Staff Report

Midland County Sheriff's Office officials are looking for whoever took an estimated $30,000 worth of seismic cables from a local business, reports said.

Jim Hodgson, a manager of Western Geophysical, 15 Barry Road, told sheriff's officials Friday that 100 cables, each about 240 feet long, were taken from the company's equipment yard, reports stated.

It is unknown when the cables, worth about $300 each, were taken, reports said.

RODEO: Jody Nix will perform

(From 1B)

Wild-Cow Milking: A mother cow that lost a calf is milked out. "One man will rope the cow. Two men will mug her — get ahold of her. The fourth man will milk her out," said Powell.

Ranch Cutting: "It will be judged on the way the horse and the cowboy (or cowgirl) works a herd of cattle — and cuts certain cows out," Powell said.

Calf Branding: "One man will rope a calf, bring him to two flankers, hold him down, and the fourth then will brand him."

Team Roping: "The steer will be cut out from the line," said Powell, and the team with the fastest time in roping the steer about the horns and back feet wins.

Media representatives will be invited to participate in ribbon roping, noted Powell. And there will be a calf scramble and boot scramble for the youngsters.

The concept of the Ranch Rodeo is "just all within the ranching heritage — promoting the true cowboy spirit of the whole ranch," explained Candi Cowden.

And women belong on the frontier range as naturally as do men. "The woman was just as big a part of the ranch as the man," Ms. Cowden said.

"There have been women on ranches since there have been men on ranches. And more and more, women are playing a bigger part in the daily work of a ranch rather than just cooking for the crew or tending to the household chores."

Mother to explain missing detector

FORT WORTH (AP) — The mother of two toddlers who died in a fire will have to explain why the apartment's smoke alarm was missing, an official said.

Arlen Carnes, 3, whose body was burned almost beyond recognition died at 9:03 a.m. Friday at Brownwood Regional Hospital. His sister, 2-year-old Dedra Carnes, died later in the same hospital.

Their mother, Katrina Carnes, 26, was in critical condition at the Brownwood hospital late Friday.

A fourth person in the duplex, Donnie Smith, escaped through a bedroom window but suffered second- and third-degree burns.

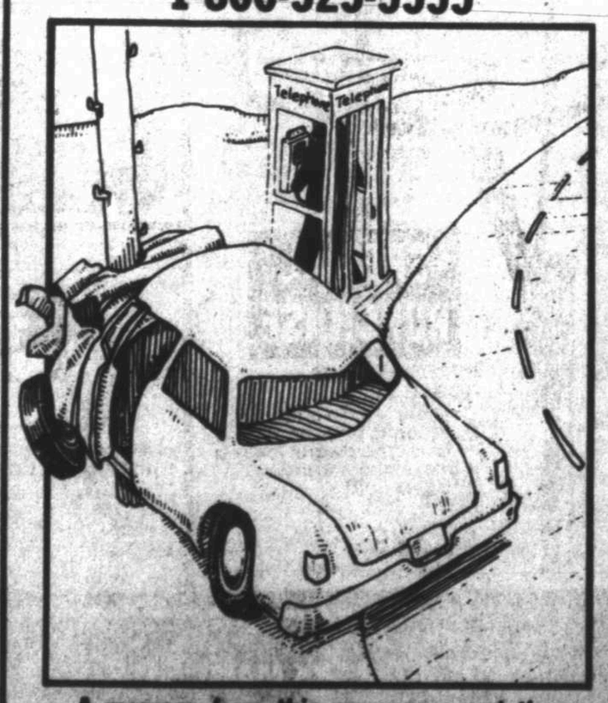

"We don't know whether the children were asleep when the fire started, but the remains of a mattress were on the living room floor when we came in," said Brownwood Fire Chief Kenneth Taylor.

The fire was ruled accidental and a lighted candle was the probable cause, Brown County Fire Marshal Emmett Mathews said.

The smoke alarm had been removed from the charred apartment, Mathews told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

"We don't know why yet," he said. "She had a break-in there a few days ago, and it could have been stolen then."

George Foster

Man completes FBI academy

Staff Report

Capt. George Foster of Midland County Sheriff's Department, graduated from the FBI National Academy on June 15.

FBI Director William S. Sessions announced that law enforcement officers of the 161st Session of the National Academy were honored in graduation ceremonies at Quantico, Va.

The 228 officers receiving diplomas were represented by the elected class spokesman, Deputy Inspector Roland J. Jones of the States of Jersey Police, St. Helier, Jersey, Channel Islands.

The ceremonies concluded 11 weeks of police investigation and management skills training for officers from 48 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, American Samoa, 25 foreign countries, four military organizations, and one federal civilian organization.

A total of 23,174 graduates have completed study at the FBI National Academy since it began in July 1935. Of this number, more than 14,000 are still active in law enforcement work. Many have gone on to assume executive level positions within their departments.

James W. Greenleaf, Associate Deputy Director of the FBI, was the principal speaker at the ceremony. During his presentation Greenleaf focused on the need for cooperation between law enforcement agencies.

Foster will return to his duties in the sheriff's department, where his is in charge of records, dispatch and administration.

Misplaced line only stitch in time

At the Greenwich Observatory in England, there are two brass lines set in concrete in the ground. One is the Greenwich Meridian, the prime meridian, the zero point from which all the earth's longitudinal divisions are measured. The other, a few feet away, marks where the observatory mistakenly used to think the prime meridian was.

We were reminded of this by the recent publication in Nature, the British scientific journal, of a study suggesting that carbon-dating, the method scientists have relied on for more than a generation to determine the age of the oldest once-living things on earth, may not be accurate. Indeed, the older the object dated, the more inaccurate the carbon method seems to be. For a piece of coral 20,000 years old or so, which researchers retested using new methods, carbon-dating was apparently off by about 3,500 years.

That's not an insignificant error. Looked at one way, it's the equivalent of mistaking a 56-year-old for 65, something neither the person in question nor the Social Security Administration would probably take lightly. But looked at another way, how seriously would one be misled if a great-great-great-great grandparent were misidentified as great-great-great-great-great?

There's no record of ships being lost at sea because of the Greenwich measuring error; nor should this new mistake, if it is a mistake, cause anyone to reconsider which came first, the dinosaur or the lap dog.

It should serve, rather, as a reminder of how imprecise some of our high-tech notions of precision really are — and of the many instances in which that doesn't matter at all. In counterpoint to those pedants and bureaucrats too bemused by test scores to socioeconomic indicators figured out to the nth place, it's good to recognize that sometimes "long ago" and "far away" are all one really needs to know.

Berlin, Bonn jockeying for position

BERLIN — The smiles of November when the Berlin Wall fell have been replaced with clenched-jaw anxiety on both sides of the wall. These cities — once united and then divided — must merge again. All the backslapping and hugging that accompanied the opening of the wall has yielded to jockeying for position.

Anderson

Already West Berlin Mayor Walter Momper is scrambling to persuade the West German government in Bonn to keep up the huge subsidies that have kept the western half of Berlin afloat for years.

In behind-the-scenes discussions, Momper is using the "now more than ever" argument to keep the money flowing.

For years, visitors have remarked on how prosperous West Berlin looks for a city that is cut off from the outside world. "Looks" was the key word. The appearance was at least half illusion.

The subsidy of West Berlin by the West German government over the years has amounted to more than $60 billion — in excess of $30,000 per Berliner. Literally half of West Berlin's budget came from Bonn. In addition, the city offered phenomenal incentives for businesses that would place their headquarters there, with university benefits, subsidized air fares and other perks. Now there is mumbling in Bonn about cutting off Berlin and letting it fend for itself.

Predictably, Momper and other city officials would rather not.

There is a bit of personal pique going on in angry arguments between federal and city officials in closed-door meetings. Bonn likes being the capital of West Germany, but is unsuited for the job of capital of a unified Germany. It only got the Western capital designation at the end of World War II because the premier German city, Berlin, fell 110 miles inside the Soviet-occupied zone.

An intense lobby of politicians and journalists in Bonn are upset at the prospect of having the seat of government moved to Berlin. Bonn would die almost overnight, and the people who are settled in there are lobbying against the change, which our German sources predict will be made anyway.

Optimistic West Berliners are guessing that the political unification of the city will come as early as December. In any event, the de facto unification occurs Monday with the full conversion of the East German currency to West German marks.

In the East, the single monetary system is causing great consternation. We talked to East Berliners waiting in lines around the city for applications to convert their bank accounts. Most were worried that they won't survive in the capitalist system of the West. They had seen the high prices in the Western stores and wondered if they will be able to afford even the basics.

Many are worried that they will not have jobs since they worked at state-run factories that, by Western standards, are grossly overstaffed and underproductive.

There are the deeper fears born of pride. The East Germans are about to go from being the most successful people in the Eastern Bloc to the underclass of Germany. West Germany vies with the United States and Japan for the title of top industrialized nation. Will there be room for the poor cousins from the East?

On the other side of what is left of the wall, West Berliners have their own doubts. They don't need an infusion of workers from an underemployed underclass that doesn't know the meaning of "workaholic."

Already West Berliners have a bad case of "relative fatigue" from hosting their wide-eyed Eastern cousins long past the time when they were welcome. "They have a lot to learn," one unwilling host complained.

RICK BROWN

Who will people blame for tax hike?

AUSTIN — Whatever action Texas Republicans took on the matter of taxes as they met in convention this weekend, the fact remains a president ostensibly from Texas set them up for a potentially embarassing fall.

The big surprise is that taxes should be an issue for Republicans at all, so successfully, and skillfully, has the GOP played the issue over the past decade.

Brown

Since Californians 12 years ago approved the tax rollbacks of Proposition 13, Republicans have presented themselves as the party best equipped to hold the line on taxes — even as school districts and cities took up the slack with higher local levies.

It was a strategy of do-nothingness, with President Ronald Reagan — a Californian, take note — as the do-nothingest of the do-nothings.

The signs of a new times were already cropping up before President Bush made his pronouncement on taxes this past week.

Californians earlier this month approved a new proposition, numbered 111, in which they doubled their own gasoline taxes to pay for a highway system that many say has deterioriated badly.

Analysists weren't necessarily hailing a new era of free-spending after the vote. They said it could be an indication the electorate has become disposed to approving more taxes for specific improvements in specific areas.

Such an attitude ultimately may be the one Texans take toward a slew of tax increases that go into effect today. They included a quarter-cent hike in the state sales tax, a 15-cent-per-pack increase in the cigarette tax and a 2 percent hike in the mixed drink tax.

The increases come in the name of education, an area in which we aren't exactly leading the country, for all our Texas braggadocio. They also come after months of haggling between the Democratic Legislature and Republican Gov. Bill Clements.

I say we as a citizenry may ulitimately take our taxes in dribs and drabs as we understand the need for them because the jury is still out on whether that's happening right now.

The timing of his statement wasn't the best as far as state Republican leaders were concerned. This weekend's convention was their best shot at presenting their ticket in a favorable light at a time when they're itching to take on majority party status.

There were to be a few skirmishes over the abortion issue at the convention, but nothing so central to the party's definition of itself as confusion over taxes. That had all been settled years ago by Reagan.

Bush brought all that into question this past Tuesday when just after breakfast with congressional Democrats, he issued a statement that seemed in direct contradition to the linchpin position of his 1988 election campaign. His words flew in the face of his famous "Read my lips: No new taxes" declaration.

His written statement said: "It is clear to me that both the size of the deficit problem and the need for a package that can be enacted require all of the following: entitlement reform; tax revenue increases; growth incentives; discretionary spending reductions ..."

The key phrase is "tax revenue increases," and we are likely to hear quite a few interpretations of what it means. Ultimately, it will mean higher taxes.

But, as I say, the state political toll won't be known until the November election. The Republican gubernatorial candidate, Midland millionaire Clayton Williams, toyed with coming out for taxes early in his primary campaign, but quickly toed the Republican line after his more experienced opponents hooted him down.

Ann Richards, the Democratic candidate, says she thinks a state economic expansion will preclude the need for more taxes.

Neither candidate can take specific positions on issues that cost money for fear the other will level accusations of being a spendthrift

Which is the ulitimate shame of this campaign. We will have no enlightened debate on what needs the state truly has until we take the yoke of "no new taxes" off our candidates.

And on that count, Bush may have done a favor for Republicans and Democrats alike.

Rick Brown heads the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau. Opinions expressed in his column do not necessarily reflect those of the newspaper.

RUSSELL BAKER

Wagner's 'Ring' opera needs rewriting

Dear Herr Wagner: We have studied your so-called "Ring" cycle of four operas, all 17 hours of it, and propose the following changes to make it suitable viewing for Americans:

Baker

1. Rewrite opening to eliminate the insensitive treatment of dwarfs embodied in the character of the dwarf Alberich. The Rhine Maidens' calling him ugly and toadlike is offensive to dwarfs, as is the suggestion that a dwarf cannot be sexually interesting to mermaids. Having Alberich steal the Rhine gold imputes criminal instincts to dwarfs.

We suggest changing the plot to make Alberich so irresistible to the Rhine Maidens that they compete to give him the Rhine gold. However, if your plot requires Alberich to steal, you must enlarge him to avoid any hint of dwarfism. Better make it clear, too, that he is an Episcopalian, perhaps by costuming him in a prep-school blazer.

2. As now written, Wotan, the chief god, may be interpreted as irreligious, since you portray him as greedy for expensive real estate, quick to swindle his contractors out of their pay, and willing to trade his sister-in-law to giants in exchange for their labor.

Incidentally, the suggestion that giants will accept a beautiful sister-in-law in lieu of cash is an insensitive slur on giants and must be cut. We suggest you shrink the giants and make it clear that they are Episcopalians.

To avoid offending the most boycott-prone religious groups, we suggest cutting all references to Wotan's being a god. You may make him, instead, the boss of a big crime family, and an Episcopalian.

3. Eliminate sexist portrait of Fricka as a jealous, nagging and murderous wife determined to make Wotan's life miserable unless he agrees to kill his bastard son. Instead, you might make her a working mother whose big angry-outburst number accuses Wotan of not doing his share around the house.

Then, instead of forcing Wotan to kill his son, the scene ends with Wotan trudging off to wash the dishes in tribute to Fricka's feminist power. Make it clear Fricka is not an Episcopalian.

4. Speaking of bastard sons (see above), a little philandering is perfectly acceptable to today's audiences, but when Wotan's bastard son Siegmund and his bastard daughter Sieglinde engage in incest to provide a grandson for Wotan — well, although these are Episcopalians we are dealing with, even Episcopalians can have their feelings hurt.

5. No more overweight Siegmunds, Herr Wagner, if you persist in having him lose the big fight with Hunding. Health bigots in the audience will go home saying Siegmund lost because he was too fat to fight. Encouraging an inference that rotund people can't fight is insensitive to the feelings of the overweight.

7. Speaking of endangered species, cut Siegfried's killing of the dragon. If you used a modern setting, you wouldn't have him kill a spotted owl, would you?

Yes, we realize the dragon has to be killed because he is sitting athwart the plot-essential gold, and that Siegfried has to kill the guard to get the gold, but you don't need a dragon for this job. Have an Episcopalian guard it.

GEORGE WILL

Heaven on earth seeing Bush eat his words

WASHINGTON — Different people have different ideas of Heaven. Will it feature, as one poet supposed, eating pate de foie gras to the sound of trumpets? Perhaps. But for many Democrats, Heaven on Earth is watching George Bush eat his words to the sound of snickering from a cynical public that never thought he meant them.

Will

The cynicism of high-level Republicans here is such that they are happily proclaiming (yes, proclaiming; yes, happily) that Bush's changed position regarding taxes, even if the change is real, will not do real political damage because most people assumed he was being cynical all along. And how do you suppose senior Republicans acquire such cynicism? Presidential leadership.

"Read My Lips — I lied," roared the New York Post, aflame with a rage altogether as bogus as Bush's too-tricky-by-half statement on taxes. Bush can neither speak effectively nor keep silent with dignity, so he made his carefully crafted, and crafty, tax statement in a terse (three paragraphs) written message. It was dropped into the press corps like a scrap of wastepaper furtively discarded on a street by a litterer with just enough conscience to be uneasy about littering but not enough of conscience not to litter.

This method of communicating his message did nothing to make the message seem candid, which even a cursory reading reveals it not to be. Disdaining the leadership task of explaining himself, he said only that the statement "speaks for itself." Indeed it does, loudly and damningly.

From sea to shining sea the press took the bait. The Washington Post headline said Bush "calls for new taxes." The Los Angeles Times said he "backs a tax increase." Never have so many fat trout been hooked on such a small fly.

It says "it is clear to me" that deficit reduction requires, in addition to spending cuts, "tax revenue increases." Democrats, who were busy demanding that Bush include the words "to me," evidently did not notice the labored nature of the locution "tax revenue increases." Such language signals a refusal to use other language. In this case the eschewed words are "tax increase."

Clearly "tax revenue increases" can refer to increased yields from existing taxes as a result of economic growth; or the billions Bush anticipates (as Dukakis did) from improved enforcement of existing taxes; or a short-term spurt of revenues from a cut in the capital-gains tax.

Republicans are panicked by the tax issue, as a Democratic operative understands: "A lot of Republicans are going to have to wake up tomorrow and find another reason for running for office." Many Republicans are reassuring themselves that Bush has not said anything new, or that he is, with admirable deviousness, misleading everyone. Republicans are so dependent on taxaphobia for their political identity, they are telling one another that Bush is a cynic.

John Sununu, Bush's Doberman, who flaunts his cynicism so that his employer's will be less noticeable, told some Republicans that Bush has not committed himself to anything new.

George Mitchell, Democratic leader in the Senate, insists that Sununu did not mean what he said and that Bush said what he clearly did not say.

Given the signals of cynicism sent by Bush, Sununu and Gingrich, and so avidly seized upon by grateful Republicans, sensible Democrats assume Bush's statement is designed to lull Democrats into proposing tax increases. At that point Bush will deny accurately, if not honorably, that he never said such a thing.

Democratic realists think the press, by misreading Bush's statement, may force him to mean what he flinched from saying. If not, Democrats will sit mute until Bush proposes a tax increase. If he does, his only idea, taxes are icky, will be nullified.

If he does not, the deficit-reduction process will pit Democrats emphasizing defense cuts against Republicans emphasizing entitlement cuts: tanks against wheelchairs, closing military bases or closing rural hospitals. And Bush probably cannot have the grand passion of his life, a capital-gains cut, without proposing an increase in the income-tax rate for the rich.

In Heaven, 'tis said, all will be made plain. How tiresome. If everything is made plain, what will there be to talk about? Such a Heaven sounds hellish. For now, in Washington, nothing is clear, except that cynicism is realism.

LETTERS

Overpopulation not cause of starvation

This was the straw that broke the camel's back. A friend of mine showed me an environmental magazine where the writer explained how overpopulated the earth was with humans and how this condition was, in essence, the cause of starvation, famine, low quality of life and environmental imbalance.

This is a myth: The fact is there is more land and resources than people. Believe it or not, we could put the world's population of approximately 4.5 billion people in a city the size of Texas, leaving the world empty and still have a population density less than many cities.

The cause of starvation, famine and low quality of life is not overpopulation, but the dehumanizing economic, social and sometimes religious belief systems held by the governments and peoples in these areas. The Indian government for years has been trying to re-educate people in various areas not to give food to rats and cows (considered gods), when it could be given to starving children. Formerly prosperous African nations full of hard-working people, minerals and fertile lands have become impoverished since adopting socialism. Dr. Rousas J. Rushdoony states "socialism always creates ultimately an imbalance between the number of people living and their food supply, which results in hunger or famine." Interestingly enough some of the most overpopulated areas of the earth are Singapore, Japan and Hong Kong where a relatively free economic market exist as well as a large degree of prosperity.

What really should concern us is that the "overpopulation myth" is being used to justify medical killing whether it is the already accepted and institutionalized abortion or the up and coming "active" mercy killing or euthanasia. Let's be honest and frank. Countries, past and present have sanctioned medical killing because a dead human is easier to handle than taking care of a live one. JoAnne Lynn was quoted in Newsweek in an article concerning the "Suicide Doctor" Kevorkian, "it seems more appealing to have people dead than to provide more costly care, than to have them in good housing with good nursing care." We should be aware that those arguments used to justify abortion ("unwanted," finacial burden, quality of life, overpopulation) are the exact same arguments being discussed in some areas concerning the elderly. Remember, in a few years the elderly will be a majority of our population. With a shaky Social Security system and increased health care costs something will have to be done.

Proverbs 14:12 states "There is a way which seems right to a man, but the end is death." Medical killing, whether it is abortion or active euthanasia may "seem" like the logical answer to the "overpopulation myth," health care cost and starvation, but it is not. What we need is a reformation in the spiritual, medical, economic and social fields which will get us back to the basics that encourage healing and life, not death.

Letters Policy

The Reporter-Telegram welcomes letters on various topics. We prefer typed or printed letters. Typewritten letters should be double-spaced and should not exceed two pages. Shorter letters are preferred. Handwritten letters must be legible. They should be signed and contain writer's address and telephone numbers, home and work, for possible verification. However, only the writer's name will be published.

Libelous letters or letters deemed in bad taste will not be published. We do not publish anonymous letters, letters addressed to particular groups or the general public ("open" letters) or copies of letters sent to others. We reserve the right to condense and correct spelling, grammar and punctuation. Letter writers ordinarily are limited to one publication per month. No particular day of publication can be promised, but to appear in a Sunday or Monday newspaper, letters must be received by 8 a.m. Friday. Otherwise, letters must be received two full days prior to publication. Letters may appear any day of publication.

Views expressed are the opinions of the writers. By publishing letters, the Reporter-Telegram does not imply that information presented as fact is accurate.

Bush should stop giving money away

Just as expected, in the way of the politician, President Bush has now erased his "read my lips" from the tape and now says that he must raise taxes.

Just as expected the stated reason is that it must be done to reduce the national debt.

Just as can be expected not one dime of the increased tax money will be applied to the debt. Congress cannot be trusted to do that.

In fact, Congress cannot be trusted at all.

Perhaps if George Bush and the Congress would stop giving away billions of dollars of the public money to foreign countries, all of which is unconstitutional, the American taxpayer would have a much less burden.

Now read the lips of the Constitution of the United States with respect to the disbursement of the public money. The powers of the Congress are set forth in Article I, Section 8, the very first paragraph of which states: "The Congress shall have Power to lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States.." Nothing therein gives the Congress the power to give money to any foreign country, no matter how just the cause.

Section 8 further provides "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law..." Any such appropriation made inconsistent with the first paragraph of Section 8 is simply unconstitutional. There is nothing anywhere in the powers vested in the President (Article II) that gives George Bush the wherewithall to even promise to give any foreign dignitary, for the benefit of his country, any of the Treasury Department's funds, again, no matter how just the cause.

Calling Mandela hero 'abomination'

I am outraged that the news media in this country continues to tout Nelson Mandela as a hero. Is there no small amount of intellectual honesty in the news media's reporting of the Mandela matter?

More than a few mere inconsistencies in what we hold as morally acceptable are apparent in Mandela's praise for not only known terrorist dictators responsible in the killing of our own service people but also a recalcitrant communist dictator 90 miles from our shore. In reply, Mandela answered that the internal affairs of these countries were not his concern just that they have supported him in his cause. Why shouldn't we tell Mandela that we'll do the same and not be concerned about the internal affairs of South Africa?

Mandela and his leftist African National Congress are bent upon the socialization of South Africa's industries and banks. This will simply add South Africa to the long list of failed and destitute African countries.

In all probability the media will one day be able to dutifully report of the one-man, one-party dictatorship that will rule South Africa after the African National Congress gains power.

Mandela is certainly no hero of mine and to call him one is an abomination of the word. An unbiased polling of the American people would demonstrate a like attitude.

Airport treatment embarrassment

I had just participated in an excellent state convention of the Texas Press Women in Midland and had been enjoying the special displays in the airport as I waited for my flight to Dallas when I approached the airport security check before joining my traveling companions. The guard asked me to open my briefcase because the X-ray had revealed something they wanted to check. No problem; I opened the case.

As the guard locked, I innocently asked what she was looking for. A knife. I began to show her where my Girl Scout knife was, but no, that wasn't it. I lifted the papers in the case, and there was my trusty x-acto knife which I use in place of scissors to clip articles and at work to do paste-up. They were very interested in my x-acto knife; I was quite surprised that a simple tool would get them so bothered. They were quite secretive; I was too trusting. They violated all my rights against unlawful search and seizure as a U.S. citizen.

They confiscated the blades out of my knife. I protested. No offer was made to reimburse me or return the blades at the end of the flight. What they stole may have been monetarily insignificant, even sentimentally insignificant. The principle of seizure remains much the same as in Third-World countries that have public officials who must be bribed to get reasonable treatment.

Did the blades actually pose a more serious threat than the knife in my briefcase? Not until I began to get angry at the stupid delay was any mention of drugs made. They thought I might be smuggling cocaine in the x-acto knife. Aha. That made some sense. Especially when they told me that they do not confiscate blades out of razors because they are a personal hygiene item.

I had a great time at the convention and a wonderful impression of the warm hospitality of Midland until I reached the airport security. The aggravation, embarrassment and shoddy treatment have left a distinctly bad taste in my mouth and an unwillingness on my part to return any time soon.

A Thinning Obsession: Readers Respond

In conjunction with "A Thinning Obsession," the recent five-part series, readers are invited to express their opinions about society's current fascination with dieting.

Do Americans really believe it's impossible to be too thin? Are Americans obsessed with losing weight? Does our society treat overweight persons like second-class citizens? What do you think?

Letters received by Tuesday, July 17, will be considered for publication in our new reader-participation feature, "Sound-Off." They should be addressed to Anntoinette Moore, Associate City Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, PO Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702.

The special community forum will be published Sunday, July 22.

Article inaccurate, unjust portrayal

Having had several opportunities to hear Dr. Carl Frailey lecture on the south Midland County water problem, I recognized in David Morris' article in the Sunday, June 17 edition an unjust and inaccurate portrayal of data as well as an unfair and obviously biased portrayal of Dr. Frailey's competency.

The choice of words used in the byline and the implications derived by using half quotes, reflects little integrity in reporting. This method of reporting is alarming as it fails to present the readers, and the voting residents of Midland with accurate information.

Not having been involved in the survey, nor involved as a resident of the problem area, the data presented suggests, as Dr. Frailey says, more attention should be administered. But equally important, I encourage the Midland Reporter Telegram to take a stronger and more responsible stand in using the gift of "freedom of speech."

CAF's demand, remark pompous

I was still smarting from the CAF's pompous remark "Midland will give us anything we want" when I read in a recent MRT story about the even-more pompous demand by the CAF of having exclusive rights to air shows at the airport, and the fact the city can't hold another air show within 90 days prior to a CAF show.

Folks, I predict that's only a sample of who's going to run things at the airport, and further predict that by the time they open on Dec. 7, 1991, most Midlanders, including the city fathers, will wish they had never heard of the CAF.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, July 1, the 182nd day of 1990. There are 183 days left in the year. This is Canada Day.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 1, 1867, Canada became a self-governing dominion of Great Britain as the British North America Act united the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

On this date:

In 1535, Sir Thomas More went on trial in England, charged with treason for rejecting the Oath of Supremacy.

In 1863, the Civil War Battle of Gettysburg began.

In 1943, "pay-as-you-go" income tax withholding began for American wage and salary earners.

In 1966, the Medicare federal insurance program went into effect.

In 1968, the United States, Britain, the Soviet Union and 58 other nations signed the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty.

In 1969, Britain's Prince Charles was invested as the Prince of Wales in a ceremony at Caernarvon Castle.

In 1982, more than 2,000 couples, members of the Unification Church, were married in a mass ceremony at New York's Madison Square Garden by the church's founder, the Rev. Sun Myung Moon.

In 1983, R. Buckminster Fuller, the inventor and philosopher who designed the geodesic dome and preached technology as the salvation of humankind, died in Los Angeles at age 87.

Court's flag ruling not reason to be thankful

Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — We will celebrate this coming Wednesday the 214th anniversary of our Declaration of Independence.

Hearst

With one exception, we have much for which to be thankful. With the collapse of communist totalitarian domination in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, the promising prospects for unprecedented reductions in nuclear and conventional weapons, and the most cooperative relations between the two superpowers since World War II, we can stop worrying about the danger of nuclear war between our two countries.

We can instead look forward hopefully to creation of a new European economic, and eventually political, era that should assure prosperity and stability for America, Europe and most of the industrialized world in the 21st century. Those are the most important reasons why we can be thankful on the first July 4th of the 20th century's last decade.

The one exception to my thankfulness was the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling for the second time within a year that freedom of speech guaranteed in the First Amendment of the Constitution means freedom to burn or otherwise desecrate the American flag.

The Supreme Court has interpreted freedom of speech to mean freedom of "expression" and freedom of expression as freedom to burn the flag. The First Amendment of the Constitution does not mention the word "expression." It mentions only freedom of speech.

I do not believe our Founding Fathers intended that freedom of speech could be interpreted as an expression of the right of unpatriotic radicals to burn in public places, including the steps of our national Capitol, the symbol of our independence, our freedom, and the bravery of those who died or were maimed for life when they were fighting to protect our liberty.

The anti-flag ruling of the Supreme Court last summer in effect overturned the flag protection laws in the 48 states that had them. Then, three weeks ago, the court handed down a 5-to-4 decision throwing out a federal flag protection law on the ground that it also violated the First Amendment.

This put new energy in the move to amend the Constitution to protect the flag. However, both the House and the Senate failed to approve a constitutional amendment that would remove flag burning from First Amendment protection. Even though a majority in both chambers voted for the amendment, the measure failed because a two-thirds vote is required for constitutional amendments.

The five Supreme Court justices and the minority of the Senate and House of Representatives who voted against protection of Old Glory ignored the will of a strong majority of the American people. A recent USA TODAY poll showed 69 percent of the public wants a constitutional amendment to ban flag burning. The same poll showed 66 percent said a candidate's view on flag burning will be a key factor in how they vote in this fall's election.

It makes me wonder once again whom the five Supreme Court Justices and a minority of senators and congressmen think they represent. Obviously, not a majority of the American people, nor, I am convinced, the view of our Founding Fathers or most of the presidents throughout our history.

In a proclamation issued Feb. 21, 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt said:

"The flag of the United States of America is universally representative of the principles of the justice, liberty and democracy enjoyed by the people of the United States.

"People all over the world recognize the flag of the United States as symbolic of the United States."

That the Stars and Stripes is the traditionally sacred and inviolable emblem of our country was eloquently enunciated by Henry Ward Beecher, one of the most renowned clergymen of the 19th century. In an address in Plymouth Church in May, 1861, he said:

"A thoughtful mind, when it sees a nation's flag, sees not the flag, but the nation itself. Whatever may be its symbols, its insignias, (one) reads chiefly in the flag the government, the principles, the truths, the history, that belong to the nation that sets it forth."

If a vacancy occurs during his term among the five justices who voted for burning the flag, President Bush will undoubtedly appoint a replacement who will shift the Supreme Court majority in favor of interpreting the Constitution in a way that protects our national emblem. That will be a good reason to re-elect him.

Meanwhile, let us show our contempt for the flag burners and our respect for the Stars and Stripes by displaying on July 4th the flag in front of every public and private building and from the window of every apartment. Let America be bedecked from end to end by Old Glory on Wednesday.

EDUCATION

MISD teachers attend seminar

Midland Independent School District was represented at the first of four Classroom Management and Discipline Summer Institutes at Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos by Carla Kay Brooks and Roberto A. Rangel, teachers, and Wilfred Ray Schulze and Mike Seerey, assistant principals. The quartet prepared an action plan before the June 22 conclusion of the institute to deal with the myriad of problems confronting educators — drugs, gangs, cults, child abuse, suicide, etc.

Two arrests clear $127,000 rustling crimes

TYLER (AP) — The arrests of two men have cleared cattle thefts across Texas and Oklahoma that totaled about $127,000, authorities here said.

John Wesley Wright of Mesquite remained jailed Saturday in Smith County Jail in lieu of $75,000 bail set by Peace Justice Mary Guthrie on felony theft charges.

Joseph C. Carroll of Murchison posted a $25,000 bond on the same charge, sheriff's officers said. The two men's arrests earlier this month led to recovery of at least 200 head of Texas cattle in Oklahoma City, said Lt. Gregg Wilson.

Agents from the Texas Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association who entered the investigation said the pair allegedly stole large numbers of cattle from at least eight counties, including $36,000 worth from Smith County.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Summer II registration follows holiday

By H.A. Tuck

Students and employees get a brief break from the hectic summer term on Wednesday for the Independence Day holiday. Those taking Summer I classes then have two days of classes, Thursday and Monday, prior to their final exams on July 10.

• • •

Tuck

Pre-registration for Summer II classes got underway last week, with a good turn-out. Persons wishing to take classes during Summer II should obtain time permits this week on Monday, Tuesday, or Thursday. Hours are 7 a.m.-4:30 p.m. in the Student Services Office, Administration Building. Registration will be held Wednesday, July 11, with classes starting the following day. Summer II ends on Aug. 15.

The head count for Summer II always is less than for Summer I, but the enrollment should be in the range of 600-700 students for the session.

All MC employees, plus many other local residents, were saddened by the sudden death June 25 of Ellen Gonzalez, secretary for the Fine Arts Division. An employee of Midland College for the past ten years, she served as a liaison between the college and such groups as the Thouvenel String Quartet, the Young Artists Competition, the Midland Community Theatre, the Midland Arts Association, the Midland Opera Committee and others which used the Allison Fine Arts Building.

Ellen taught hundreds of persons to dance through Continuing Education classes which she taught in her spare time. She also was my long-time table tennis partner for campus tournaments. We extend our sympathy to her family for their loss.

Because of the Fourth of July holiday, no Continuing Education classes start this week. But there are some great ones beginning the week of July 9. There are three sections of Beginning Lotus 1-2-3 (one in the morning and two in the evening — all on Tuesday and Thursday), Success Skills for Office Managers, Organizing An Effective Day, Beginning Typing, and Intermediate Typing.

Just come by the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building to register, or call 685-4518 for more information.

Trinity offers SAT classes

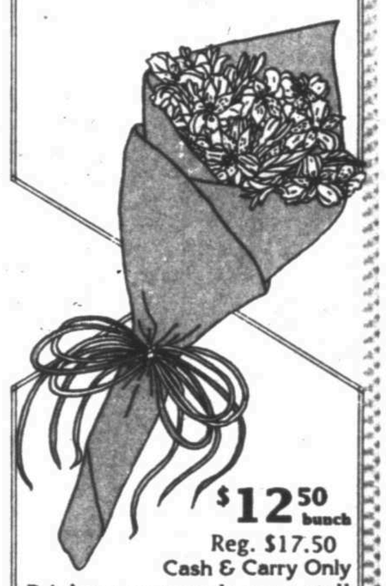

The Kaplan PSAT/SAT Preparation Course will be offered this summer at Trinity School July 30 through August 10.

The class is limited to 14 students. The Kaplan Course does not increase scores, which depends on the effort of the student; however, those who enrolled in the 1989 class had increased scores of 170 points. For information regarding enrollment, call 697-3281 or come by 3500 W. Wadley.

Registration permits for MC's 2nd summer session available

Staff Report

Three days remain to obtain time permits for Midland College's second summer session registration.

The Student Services Office in the Administration Building will be issuing permits on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday. Hours are 7 a.m.-4:30 p.m. all three days. All college offices will be closed on Wednesday for Independence Day.

Time permits assign specific periods for students to report on Wednesday, July 11, for official registration. Those persons who fail to obtain time permits will have to wait until the evening portion of registration to be processed and registered.

Summer II classes begin Thursday, July 12, and conclude on August 15. Summer classes are conducted Monday through Thursday.

"Persons attending summer classes, as well as regular sessions, must have transcripts from all colleges or universities previously attended, or from high schools if they had not previously attended college," noted Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar. "If they don't have transcripts, they should contact our office as soon as possible so we can assist them in obtaining transcripts."

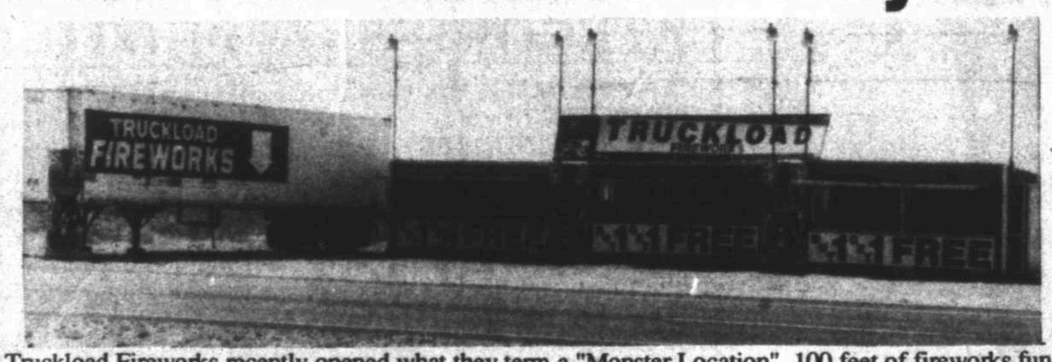

Cates noted that transcripts are required even for those students regularly attending other universities and just taking one or two classes at Midland College during the summer.

Information also may be obtained by calling 685-4501.

Five business-oriented topics subject of July short courses

Staff Report

The Continuing Education Department of Midland College will be offering five short courses beginning the week of July 9. Courses are as follows:

"Beginning Lotus 1-2-3" will be taught in three different sections: Tuesdays and Thursdays from 9-11 a.m., July 10 through Aug. 9; Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5-7 p.m., July 10 through Aug. 9; or on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7-9 p.m., July 10 through Aug. 9.

This beginning course in Spreadsheet applications will introduce the student to using Lotus 1-2-3 in solving consumer and business-oriented problems. "Hands-on" experience with IBM compatible personal computers is emphasized. Topics include an introduction to computer hardware and software; data input; spreadsheet development; and creating and printing graphs.

Prerequisite is completion of Computer and You or previous experience with personal computers. Text available at Midland College Bookstore. Recommended textbook is Student Edition of Lotus 1-2-3. Class limited to 14 students. Course fee is $45.

Rebecca Bell will be teaching "Success Skills for Office Managers" on Tuesday, July 10 from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Participants will learn how to be an effective administrator in all areas of the organization including work processing, business writing , office data systems, public relations, communication systems and management principles.

Techniques for enhancing a positive impact through mannerisms, habits, and dress will be discussed. This seminar will focus on communication skills that produce measurable results, and participants will learn to set realistic short-term goals that will contribute to long-term achievements.

Common sources of conflict in the workplace will be reviewed, and strategies for effective conflict resolution will be taught. Also included will be methods for reducing tardiness, absenteeism, and turnover among office workers. Participants will discover ways to operate effectively when the boss is gone and how to succeed with job responsibility. Plus, this seminar will enable participants to better handle office politics and deal with the "multiple boss" syndrome. The course fee is $30.

"Organizing An Effective Day" will be taught on Wednesday, July 11 from 8 a.m.-noon. Participants will learn how to strengthen organizational skills by becoming an effective daily planner. This seminar will offer practical suggestions on better time management by showing ways to identify priorities and plan effectively. Participants will discover techniques to cope more effectively with daily stress at home and work in order to increase productivity. Course fee is $15.

"Beginning Typing" will be taught on Mondays through Thursdays from 5:30-7:35 p.m., July 12 through Aug. 15. This course is designed to teach the keyboard, machine parts, basic letter forms, copy placement, and tabulation.

Students are given timed drills during class meetings to encourage speed and build accuracy. Textbooks and typing paper are needed at the first class meeting and are available at the Midland College Bookstore. Enrollment is limited to 8 students per section. Course fee is $78.

"Intermediate Typing" will be taught on Mondays through Thursdays from 5:30-7:35 p.m., July 12 through Aug. 15. The student will further develop skills and techniques acquired in beginning typewriting. The student will type mailable correspondence, technical business papers and reports, tables, legal forms, and other office type problems.

For more information on these and other Continuing Education short courses, come by the Office of Continuing Education in the Administration Building or call 685-4518.

Summer move may force re-enrollment

Staff Report

Parents of elementary students in Midland public schools may need to re-enroll their children.

If a resident has moved during the summer from one "elementary cluster" to another cluster, then the student needs to be re-enrolled at the new home school before the school year begins.

For more information, parents should contact either the child's former school or the appropriate new campus on or after Aug. 6.

Rodeo grew from cowboy competition

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The old Western rodeo, which pits the skills of the cowpoke against the rambunctious wildness of the critter, "grew out of authentic cowboy activities, whether it be roping or riding," said Byron Price, a West Texas native who is executive director of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City.

Rodeoing was a "natural outgrowth of competition between real cowboys on the ranch" back in the late 1800s, Price said.

"It was not until showmen like Buffalo Bill began to show the possibilities of creating a sport for the entertainment of the general public that it (rodeoing) became what it is today and evolved into more of a professional sport probably than a reflection of actual cowboy activities — except roping and riding is still involved."

Buffalo Bill, the show name of the American West's frontiersman-marksman William Frederick Cody, was popular in the United States and Europe in his "Wild West" shows in the late 1800s.

Traditional rodeo sports include bareback bronc riding, saddle-bronc riding, bull riding, calf roping, steer wrestling or bulldogging, team roping, steer roping, and barrel racing.

But most of those sporting events, particularly bronc riding, bull riding, bulldogging and barrel racing, are not on the cowboys' or cowgirls' lineup of routine ranch chores.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Byron Price, executive director of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame, is a cowboy in spirit if not in fact.

Most likely, the cowpunchers will be mending fencing, repairing windmills, checking out the water tanks, rounding up the cattle in pastures, looking after the mother cows and their calves, and among other jobs, rounding up the calves at branding times, and taking the steers to market.

"I think that (the ranch rodeo) is a real positive development," said Price, 41. "It brings rodeoing back to its original concept and has much closer affinity to the real life of a cowboy and the real cowboy skills than what you see produced for in some of the larger arenas, like the Houston Astrodome."

Now, Price conceded it is indeed "wonderful" that the American West heritage is presented to a larger group of people by way of rodeo sporting events promoted by the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association.

"But for those of us who grew up out in this part of the world," Price said, "it's comforting to see that they are paying a little bit of attention to the real working cowboy" through the ranch rodeo.

In recent years, ranch rodeos have been promoted in the Southwest. The Texas Ranch Roundup is into its 10th year at Wichita Falls and will be held Aug. 17, 18 and 19 in the Wichita County Mounted Patrol Arena to benefit the North Texas Rehabilitation Center.

In Abilene, there is the Western Heritage Classic Ranch Rodeo, which was held last May in the Taylor County Expo Center.

"Some of the (ranch-rodeo) events are closer akin to actual things that happen on the ranch, such as team penning and team branding," Price said.

"Drifting cowboys have always been a part of the mosaic of ranch life," reflected Price, who is son of an old working cowboy, Bill Price, "who now outfits cowboys" in his Western-wear store in Lubbock.

"And rodeo cowboys are very much like that (drifters). They are trying to make the next show. There's some bit of romance to that. Perhaps that's an outgrowth of the old historic rodeo: the desire to make money, to compete, and to be good at what you do."

"But as most of the old-timers would tell you, being able to be a rodeo star and ride a bull for eight seconds doesn't make you a cowboy."

Midland Rodeo was big event in 1930s

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The old Midland Rodeo was "staged in a manner to curry your favor," Midland newspaperman T. Paul Barron wrote in 1938.

The rodeo, staged in the $60,000 Midland Fair Arena that was built in 1935 just east of Fairgrounds Road at its intersection with old U.S. Highway 80, played until the early 1960s. Then it faded away.

The grandstands had seats for 5,500 spectators.

In 1938, the fourth annual rodeo was "pointing toward the world championship type of rodeo, such as is staged each year at Cheyenne, Pendleton, and Calgary."

The Midland Rodeo purse and prizes in 1938 totaled $5,000. (By 1955, the purse was $12,000.)

"The 1938 Midland Rodeo is calculated to appeal to the pleasure seeker, the admirer of colorful pageantry, and the critic of professional Western sports," Barron wrote. Rodeo events included calf roping, saddle-bronc riding, steer riding, wild-horse racing, bareback bronc riding, bulldogging, and boys' calf roping.

"The colorful cowgirl sponsors' contest, the competition of junior cowboys, the fun-provoking antics of oilmen 'gone Western,' the extraordinary special attractions of arena and ground stage all depict the strenuous efforts and elaborate expense to which Midland Fair officials have for your (the spectators') pleasure," Barron assured rodeo-goers.

Midland rancher Clarence Scharbauer was president of the Midland Fair Inc., sponsor of the rodeo, in 1938. A.C. Francis was vice president, Foy Proctor was vice president, and J. Homer Epley was secretary.

'Rodeo' a Spanish term for cattle roundup

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Rodeoing, which merely reflects the working and, sometimes, wild character of ranching, originated in the Southwest in the 1800s when cowboys, horses and cattle came together in roundups.

They still do.

And in the old wild West Texas town of Pecos, the organized competitive sport of rodeoing reputedly first shot out of the ranch chutes and into the public arena.

Rodeos came out of the American West of the 1800s when cowpunchers, as they still do, roped and branded cattle following roundups.

The rodeo originated in the development of the cattle industry.

"Once or twice a year, the cattle were rounded up on the ranges and driven to various market towns," U.S. Rep. Ron Coleman of El Paso told the U.S. Congress in 1983 on the 100th anniversary of the West of the Pecos Rodeo, which reputedly is the "oldest rodeo in the entire world."

The 1990 West of the Pecos Rodeo will be staged this week — July 4-7 at 8 p.m. in the Pecos Rodeo Arena.

In those early rodeo days following roundups, cowboys were paid off and celebrated. Sometimes, Coleman said, they would bet wages on their ranching skills, such as roping, bronc riding, and steer wrestling.

Today, the standard rodeo events are bareback-bronc riding, saddle-bronc riding, bull riding, calf roping, steer wrestling or bull-dogging, and barrel racing.

"The sport of rodeo has its traditions in the courage of the men and women."

The cowboy hangs on, above, as the Brahma bull tries to throw the rider in the 1941 Midland Rodeo. Other action saw a young cowboy trying to bring a calf to its knees, left, and a cowboy roping his calf, below.

Wimbledon slowed by scare

■ London's terrorist bombings put a fright in those attending the lawn tennis championships, as play was interrupted by a bomb scare and evacuation at Centre Court.

AP Laserphoto

Stefan Edberg had some trouble Saturday but still managed to pull off a five-set victory.

Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — A wild first week at Wimbledon, begun against the backdrop of a bombing in London, ended with a bomb scare that cleared Centre Court and a surprise trip home by Steffi Graf.

Thousands of fans were ordered to leave and a doubles match was halted Saturday in perhaps the first evacuation of Centre Court in history.

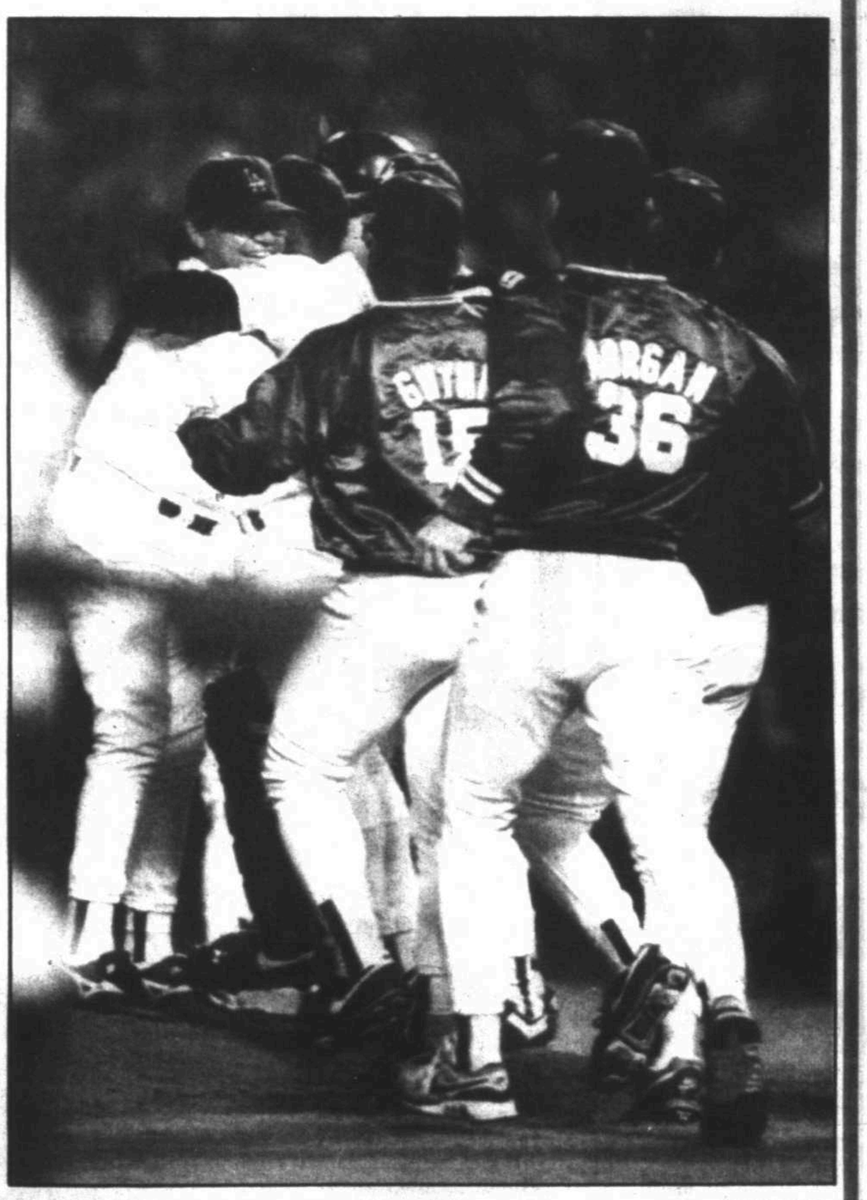

The suspected bomb — a briefcase left under a seat — turned out to be harmless, just as a camera case did Wednesday during a search that halted play on three outside courts.

Graf, the women's two-time defending champion, avoided the chaos and the controversy surrounding her family problems. Graf, questioned repeatedly about her father's involvement with a model under investigation for allegedly

One evening, two gems

■ With Fernando Valenzuela and Dave Stewart reaching near perfection on the mound, baseball has provided us with five no-hitters this season — before the halfway point.

Associated Press

If it's a no-hitter for Dave Stewart, this must be April. If Fernando Valenzuela pitches one, this must be 1981.

Surprise, surprise.

Stewart

Valenzuela

Stewart, unbeaten (19-0) and at times virtually unhittable in the season's first month since 1986, pitched the first no-hitter of his career Friday night.

Valenzuela, whose career seemed to be over two years ago, joined Stewart in the record books hours later.

Together, they became the first pitchers in this century to throw complete-game no-hitters on the same night and the first to do it in different leagues.

Stewart, a 20-game winner the last three seasons for the Oakland Athletics, beat the Toronto Blue Jays 5-0. Valenzuela, never able to match the Cy Young Award performance of his rookie season with the Los Angeles Dodgers and struggling since a shoulder problem threatened his career in 1988, shut out the St. Louis Cardinals 6-0.

That a crowd of 38,583 at Dodger Stadium rooted for Valenzuela was no surprise. But Stewart (10-6) had a little trouble believing the support he got from 49,817 at Toronto's SkyDome.

"They started joining me in the ninth after the first out," said Stewart, who started his career with the Dodgers. "It was hard not to notice. At first I thought they were rooting for their guy to get a hit. Then they started to come over to my side."

Stewart, only 4-6 since going 5-0 in April, said the SkyDome "is a great place to play. The fans are intelligent and they treat you with respect."

Valenzuela got immediate respect in the major leagues when he shut out Houston as an emergeny starter on Opening Day in 1981.

Carter three-hits Wichita

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

The fans had the wave working Saturday night at Angels Stadium and while the surf was up, Glenn Carter put the Wranglers down.

Carter gave up just three hits and went the distance as the Angles beat Wichita 8-2, pulling the Wranglers back into a tie with Midland for last place in the Western Division of the Texas League with 4-6 second-half records.

The win also evened the present six-game series at 2-2.

The Midland righthander, who entered the game with a 6.62 ERA and just one win in eight previous decisions, gave up just one earned run. He struckout four and got 15 Wranglers on fly ball outs.

"I'm just fortunate that Mother Nature wasn't letting the wind blow out there tonight," Carter said. "A couple of those balls that we caught would have been out of here if we'd had the wind blowing out."

Wind or no wind, a couple of balls did get out of the park Saturday, and the 2,505 fans who turned out for helmet night tipped their caps at both.

The Midland offense jumped on loser Ricky Bones (4-3) early and hard. Four Angels scored in the first inning, three of them when Luis Aguayo propelled his third home run of the series over the left-field wall with John Skurla and Howard Nichols aboard.

And Nichols, who is 9-for-15 since joining the club last Tuesday, added to the lead with a cloud-seeder that led off the third.

"I just feel lucky, and you've got to be lucky," was all that Nichols would concede. "This is a good team, and I'm just glad to be playing baseball with it."

The Wranglers got both their runs in the top of the third inning when Tim Wallace received one of Carters two walks in the game and Brian Cisarik smashed a two-out single to center that got by Mark Davis and rolled all the way to the wall. Both Wallace and Cisarik came all the way around to score on the error.

But after Mike Humphreys followed with Wichita's second base hit of the game, Carter settled down and got out of the inning on a harmless ground ball to Nichols at first. Humphreys, by doubling to right center in sixth, was the only Wichita batter to reach base after the third inning.

"Getting those four runs in the first helped a lot," said Carter, who won 15 games a year ago for the Angels Class A farm team in Quad Cities, Iowa. "The guys gave me something to work with and played great defense behind me.

"I got off to a slow start this year, and I've been really down. This is the first time that I've ever experienced failure.

"But after the last El Paso game, I started working on my curve. I think I've got it back, and I feel like I can beat anybody when I have my curve ball. I've got my confidence back now and I think I'm going to keep it right where it is."

"This is the kind of game that Glenn pitched all the time last year," said Angel

Nicklaus sparkles on way to lead

Lee Trevino

N.Y. Times News Service

PARAMUS, N.J. — Nostalgia's superstars took their places Saturday for what promises to be a classic finish at the U.S. Senior Open.

While Lee Trevino slowed down with a one-over-par 73, Jack Nicklaus made up six shots with a 67 for a three-round total of nine-under-par 207 and took a one-shot lead over Trevino, Gary Player and Jim Dent going into Sunday's final round.

"I didn't play very smart golf," said Trevino, who bunkered a 6-iron approach on the final hole to make his fourth bogey of the round. "I misread a lot of putts, and I should have hit a 7-iron into the middle of the green on the last hole instead of going for the pin.

"I shot 73, but I hit the ball just as well as I did the other two days. It's what golf is all about."

Player, who began the day tied with Nicklaus, shot a four-under-par 68 on the heels of his sizzling 65 on Friday.

Trailing the second-place trio by two shots at six-under-par 210 is the two-time Senior Open champion Miller Barber, who at age 59 shot a five-under-par 67.

In Sunday's final pairing, Trevino will play with Dent, and Player and Nicklaus

???? Trivia Teaser

Sunday's Question — Name the Milwaukee Braves outfielder who tore up the National League for a month injury en route to the 1957 pennant drive after Bill Bruton's injury, but played only part of the next season before returning to the minors.

Saturday's Answer — Louisville's Guy Hecker was the only pitcher to win a major league batting title with a .342 mark in 1886. Note: Not only did Hecker pitch every other game in the custom of the times, but he played the outfield or first base when not on the mound.

WACO (AP) — Midland High offensive lineman Joe Phillips has been named to the pre-season 1990 high school Super Team by Dave Campbell's Texas Football magazine.

Phillips, a 6-6, 245-pound lineman, was the only player chosen from District 4-5A on the first two teams.

Midland Lee offensive lineman Justin Firkins, who was All-State a year ago, was not named to the list.

Lee's Jake Young, who just completed his tenure at Nebraska where he was an All-America selection, was picked to Campbell's second team All-Decade squad, along with Odessa Permian's Lloyd Hill, who will play for Texas Tech this year.

Texas Football also listed Odessa Permian as the No. 5 team in the state and no other 4-5A squad was picked among the Top 20.

Big Spring was tabbed as the No. 9 4A team in the state while District 4-4A foe Monahans was named as the No. 18 team.

Groveton running back Rodney Thomas, who led the Indians to the Class AA title in 1989, and A&M Consolidated quarterback Tommy Preston, who paced the Tigers to the Class AAAA finals, headed the Super Team selections.

Thomas rushed for more than 2,900 yards, and Preston led Consolidated to its first playoff berth in 30 years.

They are joined in the first-team backfield by running backs Kevin Adams of Houston Spring Woods and Eric King of Houston Waltrip and wide receivers Mike Miller of Sugar Land Willowridge, Kenny Harrison of Port Arthur Jefferson and Bryan Brown of Grand Prairie.

Super Team members head up Texas Football's annual Top 300 list of outstanding college prospects. The Greater Houston area dominates the list with 117 players, followed by Dallas-Fort Worth with 80, East Texas with 31 players, Central Texas with 27, San Antonio/South Texas with 20, West Texas with 15 and North Texas with 10.

Five schools — Dallas Carter, Cypress Creek, Bay City, Sugar Land Willowridge and Houston Yates — have five players each on the list. Richland, San Antonio Jay, Deer Park and Lufkin each have four representatives.

Oh Yeah

Inky's heroics save Texas

Rangers win fourth straight after ninth inning rally

Associated Press

Incaviglia foiled an inning-ending double play with his dive into first base Saturday as the Rangers rallied for three runs in the ninth inning for a 6-5 victory over Jeff Reardon and the Red Sox.

"No, it wasn't close," Boston manager Joe Morgan said of the 220-pound Incaviglia's hard-nosed effort. "He can run, and his grounder took a big bounce that slowed the force at second."

Jeff Huson tied the score with a two-run single off Reardon (3-2) in the ninth and Rafael Palmeiro kept the rally alive with a single off Dennis Lamp for a career-high 5-5 game.

"Reardon just didn't have it," Morgan said after using his bullpen ace for the fifth time in six days. "He said he felt good, but I guess he just has been worked too much this week. He's definitely out of there tomorrow."

The Rangers outhit the Red Sox 17-9, including a solo homer by Harold Baines, while beating the AL East leaders for the second time within 15 hours.

Athletics 9, Blue Jays 4

Bob Welch became the first 13-game winner in the major leagues and Dave Henderson hit a pair of two-run doubles as Oakland beat Toronto, handing the Blue Jays their sixth straight loss.

Welch, following teammate Dave Stewart's no-hitter against the Blue Jays on Friday night, allowed four runs on nine hits to win a career-best 10th straight decision. Welch (13-2) had five strikeouts and one walk.

Dave Stieb (10-3) lasted only 1⅓ innings, making a quick exit for the second straight start. He allowed six runs on four hits, walked three and struck out two.

Stieb did not retire any of seven batters in his last outing, a no-decision against Boston. His ERA prior to facing the Red Sox was a league-leading 2.26. It wound up Saturday at 3.39.

Yankees 10, White Sox 7

The Chicago White Sox' season-high eight-game winning streak ended when rookie Jim Leyritz drove in four runs with his first two major league homers and a single and New York held on for a victory.

The loss knocked the surprising White Sox out of first place in the American League West, one game behind the Oakland Athletics.

Roberto Kelly also homered and Mel Hall, who drove in a run in the second inning, had three singles in the Yankees' season-high 16-hit attack.

Indians 4, Angels 1

Tom Candiotti won his fourth straight decision and Doug Jones pitched two scoreless innings for his 100th career save as Cleveland beat California.

Jones, who has 22 saves in 27 opportunities, had blown his previous three tries for No. 100. He gave up two hits.

Candiotti (9-3), who is 4-0 over his last five starts, gave up an unearned run and six hits in seven innings. Chris James provided most of Candiotti's support with a pair of RBI singles.

Orioles 6, Twins 0

Bob Milacki won for the first time in five starts with a three-hitter and Cal Ripken tied the American League record for consecutive errorless games by a shortstop as Baltimore shut out Minnesota.

Milacki (4-4) struck out four and walked two in pitching his first complete game of the season and winning for the first time since June 3. Minnesota's Scott Erickson (1-1), pitching his second game since being called up from Class AA Orlando on June 21, gave up only five hits in 7⅓ innings, but walked six, hit a batter and was charged with five runs, three earned.

Tigers 5, Royals 3

Cecil Fielder hit his major league-leading 26th home run and Tony Phillips had a three-run shot as Detroit beat Kansas City and snapped an 11-game losing streak in Royals Stadium.

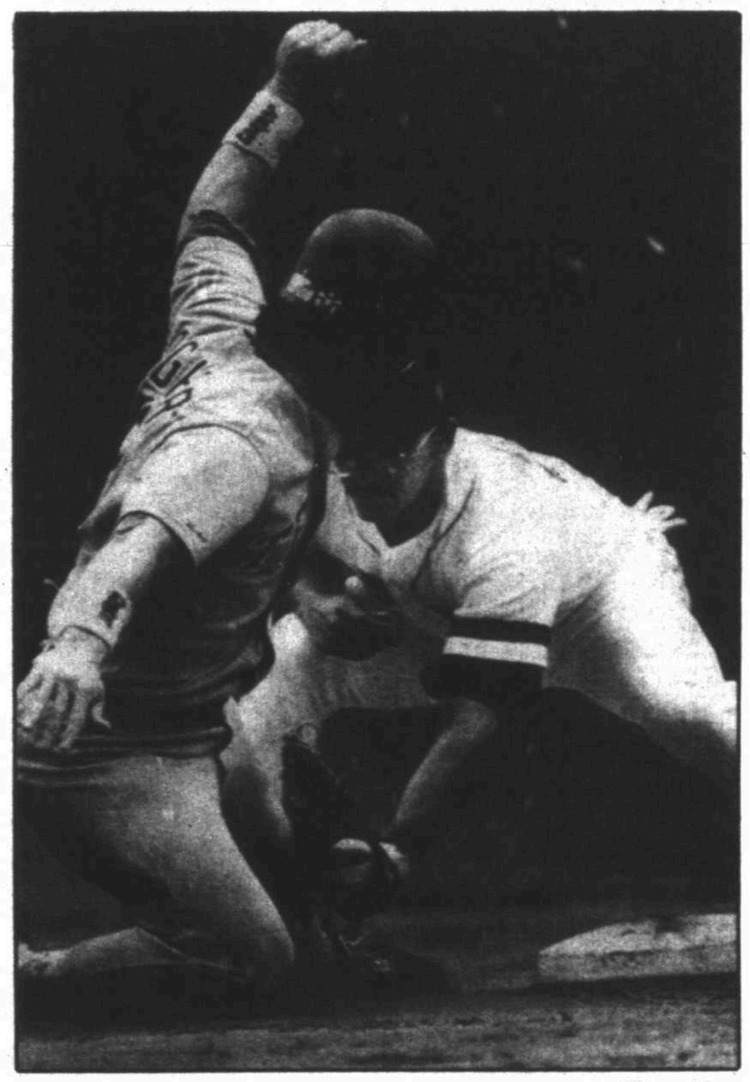

Fielder, without an RBI in nine games or a home run in 11, hit a 1-0 pitch from Storm Davis over the left-field fence to give Detroit a 5-0 lead in the fifth. The Tigers had not won in Royals Stadium since Aug. 2, 1988.

Detroit starter Dan Petry failed to last five innings despite the 5-0 lead. Ed Nunez (2-0) relieved following Danny Tartabull's two-run double in the fifth. Davis (2-6) yielded all five Detroit runs and seven hits in five innings.

Mariners 6, Brewers 2

Jeffrey Leonard hit his first two home runs in exactly a month and Seattle scored four times before the first out and beat Milwaukee for its fourth straight victory.

Astros take their time winning on road in June

Associated Press

Thirty days hath June, and the Houston Astros needed every last one of them to get a victory on the road.

Rich Gedman hit his first-ever National League home run as the Astros snapped a 13-game road losing streak Saturday night with an 8-3 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

"We got the monkey off our back tonight," Houston manager Art Howe said.

Mike Scott (6-7) gave up six hits, allowing three runs, two earned, in six innings as the Astros won their first road game in June on the last day of the month. Juan Agosto pitched three innings for his first save.

Franklin Stubbs hit a three-run, inside-the-park homer in the seventh to put the game away as Ron Jones hurt his left knee chasing a sinking liner to right field. The ball bounced past him, he couldn't get up and Stubbs circled the bases.

"Scotty gave us six good innings," Howe said. "Stubbs gave us that big inside-the-park homer to make it easier. We haven't been getting too many breaks on the road. Finally, we did get one."

The Astros have won six of their last eight with eight games remaining in a road trip leading to the All-Star break. Stubbs said some players were putting a little extra pressure on themselves during the road streak.

"We have been playing well the last seven or eight games," Stubbs said. "There's no reason we should go on the road and lose."

Back-to-back, two-out doubles in the second by Craig Biggio and Eric Anthony gave Houston its first run.

Cubs 7, Padres 3

Dwight Smith's tie-breaking homer sparked Chicago's four-run seventh inning and reliever Steve Wilson pitched six shutout inning as the Cubs beat the San Diego for their fourth straight victory.

The slumping Padres have lost four straight games and six of their last seven.

Wilson (2-5) allowed three hits, struck out three and walked three. Bill Long retired the side in the ninth.

After Smith led off the seventh with his fifth homer off starter Andy Benes (6-6) to give the Cubs a 4-3 lead, Ryne Sandberg walked and moved to second on Mark Grace's grounder. Andre Dawson was intentionally walked and Rich Rodriguez relieved.

Rodriquez walked Marvel Wynne to load the bases and Calvin Schiraldi came on. But Luis Salazar spoiled the move with a triple down the left-field line to clear the bases.

Reds 7, Mets 4

Cincinnati ended the Mets' 11-game winning streak as pinch-hitter Joe Oliver broke an eighth-inning tie with a two-run double to help the Reds beat New York.

The Mets, 21-8 in June, were trying to set a club record for consecutive victories. New York also won 11 straight in 1969, '72 and '86. Also ending was Darryl Strawberry's career-high 18-game hitting streak.

Jeff Musselman (0-2) replaced David Cone with the Mets leading 4-3 to start the eighth and walked Paul O'Neill leading off. Pinch-hitter Billy Hatcher forced O'Neill at second and advanced to third on Luis Quinones' pinch single to right field. Ron Oester tied the game with an infield single to second and after Wally Whitehurst relieved, Oliver doubled to put the Reds ahead.

Oester entered the game in the sixth when second baseman Mariano Duncan was ejected for arguing after he struck out.

The Reds, who have come from behind this season for 23 of their 46 victories, added a run in the ninth on Eric Davis' 11th homer.

Pirates 4, Giants 3

Bobby Bonilla ended a long slump, then hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning as Pittsburgh rallied from a 3-1 deficit to beat San Francisco.

After Andy Van Slyke led off with a single, Bonilla hit a 1-0 pitch from reliever Mark Thurmond (1-2) well beyond the 365-foot sign in left field for an opposite-field homer, his 17th.

The Pirates cut the Giants' lead to 3-2 in seventh when Wally Backman's two-out double off John Burkett scored Jose Lind from first base.

San Francisco had taken a 3-1 lead in the sixth on a two-out, two-run double by Rick Leach off Rick Reed.

Bob Kipper (2-1) pitched 1⅔ scoreless innings in relief to earn the victory as the Pirates won for the second time in eight road games. Stan Belinda earned his third save by shutting out San Francisco over the final 1⅓ innings.

Braves 7, Expos 6

Dale Murphy snapped a 1-for-35 slump with a three-run homer to highlight Atlanta's five-run third inning as the Braves beat Montreal for its fourth straight victory.

It was the fourth consecutive loss for the Expos, who fell 2½ games behind first-place Pittsburgh in the National League East.

Stillwell suffering kidney stones

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — It was a kidney stone that felled Kurt Stillwell, not the herniated disc that was first feared, and the shortstop could be back in the lineup on Sunday, the Kansas City Royals said.

Stillwell was taken from Seattle's Kingdome last week in severe back pain. The original diagnosis of back trouble could have necessitated surgery and sidelined Stillwell for months.

"When I had blood in my urine it pretty well pointed to a kidney stone," Stillwell said. "All I know is I was in serious pain from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Thursday. That day was pretty much a blur."

Two share lead at PGA's Hartford Open

Associated Press

CROMWELL, Conn. — Brad Fabel mixed a little luck with some skill on Saturday, and the result was a share of the third-round lead in the Greater Hartford Open.

On the 14th hole, Fabel put too much muscle into a chip shot, but the ball hit the pin and dropped six inches from the hole. Instead of a possible bogey, he had a tap-in for par.

Two holes later, he sank a 45-foot wedge from off the green to turn a possible bogey into a birdie.

"It just trickled in," Fabel said of his chip shot. "I couldn't believe it. I hit a good shot, but I didn't have anything to do with it going in."

Those shots highlighted a round of 67 that earned Fabel a share of the lead with Nolan Henke, who also shot 67 by getting birdies on the last four holes. They are at 199, 11 under par for the par-70, 6,531-yard Tournament Players Club of Connecticut course.

A stroke back were Wayne Levi and John Cook, both after 67's on Saturday, and first-round leader Chris Perry, who shot 68. Eighteen golfers are within four strokes of the lead.

Fabel and Henke have yet to win on the PGA Tour, but a victory by either would be keeping with the Greater Hartford's recent history. Three of the last five GHO champions achieved their first victory in this event.

Henke, 25 and in his second year on the PGA Tour, admitted being surprised at his success this week.

"I'm just trying not to think about it," he said.

Fabel, at 34 a six-year pro, started with the last group of the day and had bogeys on the third and fifth holes.

"I was a little nervous," he admitted. "I just kept telling myself to stick to my routine."

He fell back into his routine with a birdie on the 343-yard, par-4 seventh.

"That settled me down," he said.

Fabel was tied with six others at 10-under when his 7-iron tee shot on the 172-yard 16th found the rough to the right of the green. He had a good lie in the taller grass, however, and used a wedge in order to get the ball over a bunker and onto the green.

Henke didn't need any spectacular shots after falling to 7-under with a bogey on 14.

"My putting was a little off until the final four holes, then they just started falling," Henke said.

Levi, second at Hartford twice in the last three years, had been winless for five years until capturing the Atlanta Classic and Western Open this season.

"Experience means a whole lot" in the final round of a tournament, said Levi, who should know. "These guys who are the top aren't like (Curtis) Strange, (Tom) Kite and (Greg) Norman, who could get hold of this thing and run away with it."

Heavy rain overnight and a wind shift caused only slight changes in the course conditions, and most golfers said the fairways and greens remained firm.

Second-round leader Bob Eastwood, who had to return to qualifying school last fall when he lost his playing rights after 18 years on tour, shot 72 on Saturday to fall back to 7-under 203.

Paul Azinger, who won the tournament in 1987 and 1989, shot his third 68 of the tournament and is five shots back.

Johnston hoping to avoid golf devils

Associated Press

KITCHENER, Ontario — Cathy Johnston leads after three rounds of the du Maurier Classic. Patty Sheehan knows what that's like.

"Golf demons play havoc with your mind on Saturday nights," said Sheehan, four strokes behind Johnston, who has never led an LPGA tournament and particularly not one of the four majors.

"I know exactly how she's going to feel. It's not the most comfortable feeling, but it's far better than being (four) behind."

Johnston fired her second straight 3-under-par 70 for a 14-under 205 total to lead Sheehan and Patti Rizzo, tied at 209. Sheehan shot a 70 on Saturday and Rizzo a 73.

"I always thought I would never be able to hold up under the pressure," said Johnston, winless in five years on the pro tour.

LPGA

"But I'm swinging well and playing well."

Johnston planned to relax on before the final round over the undulating, 6,415-yard Westmount Golf and Country Club. But $90,000 first prize and the prestige of a major victory are enough to make anyone jittery.

Rizzo, however, said Johnston will have to falter before anyone else think of winning. And Johnston has stayed solid after an opening-round 65, which tied the competitive course record.

"Cathy's playing really good," Rizzo said. "I'm just going to give it my best shot."

"She is playing the lights out," Sheehan said.

After a "pretty boring" front nine in which Johnston played par golf, the 1981 PGA National Junior champion caught fire on the back nine with four birdies and a bogey to break away from Rizzo, who had shared the lead from the third hole.

Liselotte Neumann of Sweden also shot 70 and was alone in fourth at 9-under 210.

Beth Daniel, Missie McGeorge and Silvia Berteotti were each at 8-under 211. McGeorge shot the day's low round, 67. Berteotti had a 69 and Daniel 71.

Betsy King, winner of the Nabisco Dinah Shore event, the first of the tour's majors, was tied with Pat Bradley and Jody Anschutz at 7-under 212. King shot 71. Anschutz and Bradley each had 70.

Tina Tombs Purtzer was the low Canadian with a 216 total after shooting a 70 on Saturday.

WIMBLEDON: No upsets as Week 1 winds down

From 1C

No. 2 Martina Navratlova, an eight-time Wimbledon champion, also reached the fourth round by beating Karin Kschwent 6-1, 6-1. Navratilova will meet No. 14 Judith Wiesner, who beat Laura Gildemeister 6-2, 7-5. No. 4 Gabriela Sabatini also won and will face Nathalie Tauziat.

Ivan Lendl, the men's top seed, had his match with Bryan Shelton suspended by darkness after each had won a tiebreaker while playing on Court One during the Centre Court bomb investigation. The match will be resumed on Monday.

Ominous, whipping winds up to 30 mph bent trees around Wimbledon, played havoc with balls and carried the threat of upsets from court to court.

Two seeded men, Stefan Edberg and Michael Chang, barely managed to avoid the rash of upsets that knocked out No. 4 John McEnroe and five other men's seeds in the first round.

Chang on Centre Court and Edberg on Court 1 each faced his moment of truth and walked away a winner, finding the right shots at the right times in fifth sets against foes who seemed to have them beat. Now Chang and Edberg will meet in the fourth round, each having narrowly avoided defeat.

Chang, who won the 1989 French Open by beating Edberg in a five-set final, is a master of the five-setter, winning six of seven in his brief career, including four in which he was two sets down. This time the 18-year-old escape artist eluded the grasp of hard-hitting Australian Mark Kratzmann to win 3-6, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2, 6-2.

"I never like to be down two sets to love, but sometimes you have to deal with it," Chang said. "One thing I've learned is to never give up until the last point is over. If you have the slightest chance, you have to take it. When I'm down two sets, I really try to concentrate. I really try to get that (third) set. In my mind, if you get the fourth set you're even and the fifth set is up for grabs."

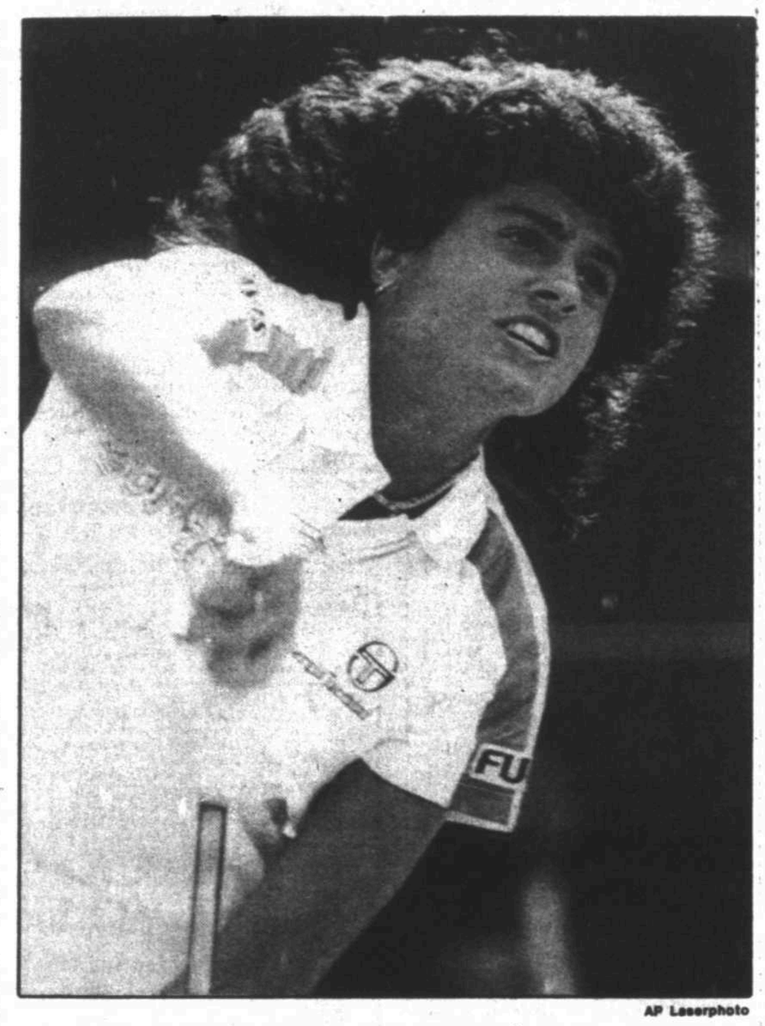

Kratzmann beat Chang in a tuneup tournament last week in Manchester, and was "up for the match," said Chang, the 13th seed. "He really played well throughout the whole match. I think the difference was that I started to handle his serve a little bit better toward the latter stages of the match."

No. 3 Edberg, 17-11 in five-setters, came back to stop a brilliant effort by Israel's Amos Mansdorf, 6-4, 5-7, 3-6, 6-2, 9-7.

In the long final set, the 5-foot-9 Mansdorf served as if he were Boris Becker, booming five aces and eight service winners against Edberg while yielding only three points during his first seven service games.

Edberg had trouble holding his own service twice but managed to avoid breaks as he pushed the set to 7-7. At Wimbledon, tie-breakers are not played in the final set.

TREVINO: Trails after one-over

From 1C

will be the final twosome.

The stage is set for the championship's three greatest stars and its longest hitter battling for the biggest prize in senior golf.

Nicklaus' round included a 40-foot putt for an eagle-3 on the 522-yard par-5 6th hole, and long birdie putts on the 16th and 17th holes.

"You cannot play an attacking game on this golf course," said Nicklaus, who has won two of the three senior events he has played in. "I knew if I just stayed patient and kept plugging, I would get back in the golf tournament.

"I had the feeling I was going to play better as the tournament went along. I think we're going to have a fun day tomorrow."

Player missed a four-foot putt on the 17th hole that would have given him a share of the lead. But he saved a par from a greenside bunker on the final hole with a 15 foot putt.

"I had the opportunities to play a very low round," said the 54-year-old Player. "I feel like 68 is about the worst I could have shot. I look forward to tomorrow very much. I think 13 under or a 67 from me will do it tomorrow."

On a perfect day for scoring, much of the field had an easy time over the rain softened Ridgewood Country Club.

But Trevino, who began the day with a one shot lead over Dent, opened the door just enough with an indifferent opening nine.

After a birdie on the par-5 second hole, he bogeyed the 439 yard third hole.

He recovered with a birdie on the fourth, but bogeyed the 289 yard par 4 sixth hole.

He closed out his up and down front nine with a 3 putt from 25 feet on the par 4 ninth to turn in one over par 37.

On the back nine, he missed 10-foot birdie putts on the 15 and 17th holes and bogeyed the par-4 16th and 18th.

In contrast, Player turned in 33 and Nicklaus in 35.

Nicklaus began to hunt in earnest when he birdied the par 4 11th hole to pull within two. He followed with a birdie on the par five 13th hole and a 20-footer for a two on the par-3 15th. He made a final birdie with another 20-footer on the par-5 17th.

"I knew I was going to have to keep shooting in the 60s to beat Jack," said Trevino, whose first two rounds were 67 and 68. "Now I've got to do that and shoot a little bit better than he does tomorrow to beat him."

Cowboy owner's gas, oil contract called 'unique'

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — The contract awarded to Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones by Arkla Inc. in 1982 was unique, the president of Stephens Production Co. of Fort Smith says in a deposition.

The deposition by Billy Walker was released Friday by the state Public Service Commission and is part of the commission's investigation of the deal between Arkla and Jones' Arkoma Production Co.

Walker said he's never seen another contract like the one Arkla Inc. gave Jones, a friend of Sheffield Nelson, the Republican gubernatorial candidate and president of Arkla when the deal was struck.

Arkla sold its interest in certain gas rights to Arkoma for $15 million plus Arkoma's commitment to spend $30 million to develop wells. Then gas prices dropped after deregulation in the mid-1980s and Arkla was locked into buying expensive gas from Arkoma.

The investigation by the PSC centers on whether the transactions meant higher rates for Arkla's customers.

"...that's, I believe, the only gas contract I've ever seen in which only the seller has got a right to renegotiate the price," Walker said in the deposition.

Designed Specially for the clear coat finishes applied to new (1987-1991) vehicles

Auto manufacturers generally instruct you not to compound or use wax on your car if it has a "clear coat" or Polyglycoat® finish. That's because these contain elements that could harm this finish. The Blue Coral® Clear Coat Protection Process was developed to enable new car owners to enjoy the "new car shine" of a fine waxing, enhancing and even extending the beauty of your car's paint & finish. It cleans, smooths, shines, strengthens, and protects your finish...you'll be absolutely delighted with it!

Will U.S. be good host?

By GEORGE VECSEY
N.Y. Times News Service

ROME — Sitting around the Termini station the other day, I was observing trains every few minutes, fans carrying banners, the babble of languages, soccer headlines everywhere, and steaming caffe latte.

"Oh, boy," I thought to myself, "I bet the 1994 World Cup in the U.S. will be exactly like this, except for our gap in languages and soccer and caffe latte and railroad trains."

Particularly railroad trains.

I hate to break the news to World Cup visitors, but U.S. public officials have been trying to kill passenger trains for decades, and have nearly succeeded.

After a month in Italy, I can't help but wonder if the United States was a good choice for the 1994 World Cup.

The president of FIFA, Joao Havelange, wants to send Luca di Montezemolo, the director of the Italian operation, to be his delegate to the 1994 U.S. States organizers, which would be as palatable as an IRS agent sitting in on the board meetings of a savings and loan outfit.

FIFA is obviously nervous about having awarded a World Cup, for the first time, to a nation that has little enthusiasm for soccer but does have television facilities, hotel chains, good telephone lines and big corporate bucks.

Having covered three World Cups in Spain, Mexico and Italy, I am increasingly aware that only the innate love of game carries the World Cup through its moments of confusion.

Some socially conscious Italians think it is appalling to spend money on services for soccer games while black water runs from the taps of the poor in Naples.

But the basic hospitality of Italians and the excitement over the World Cup means that at the very last frantic moment, some telephone operator or traffic cop or bus driver makes something happen.

Also, where is the United States going to find the vast reservoir of well-bred young men and women who speak three or four languages and consider it a kick to be around the World Cup for a month, graciously assisting players, team officials, security agents and even scruffy, cranky journalists?

The 1984 Summer Games worked in Los Angeles, but that was one worldly city getting volunteer help for two weeks.

Also, in the United States, the Olympics have much more prestige than the World Cup, judging from the current low television ratings and yawns from home and general absence of Americans in Italy.

The Italian tour operators botched that one, making the event seem overpriced and overbooked. Also, a lot of people want to avoid loutish soccer fans, English or otherwise.

Perhaps the silliest thing I have heard from American organizers was the glib assertion that grass will grow in domed stadiums. Never has.

The American organizers know and love the game, but they must act like door-to-door salesmen trying to sell encyclopedias to the yokels.

Oh, well, if that city doesn't get a World Cup match, it can always bring in the Great American Tractor Pull and Pickup jamboree.

The United States organizers are on more solid ground in thinking they can do better than the Italian organizers, who allowed tickets to get into the open market, resulting in half-empty stadiums in Naples but escalating prices in Rome. (Going rate for the final game: $2,400 or 15 times original price).

Still, how many parents of 9-year-old midget league players will pay $50 a ticket so Jonathan and Debbie can see South Korea vs. Belgium?

Italy, Argentina advance to Cup semis

Associated Press

ROME (AP) — Salvatore Schillaci has gotten into quite a habit. Italy needs a game-winning goal and Schillaci supplies it.

If he keeps it up, the hosts just might steal away with a record fourth World Cup.

Schillaci scored his fourth deciding goal in five games as Italy beat Ireland 1-0 Saturday night to advance to the semifinals. The Italians, who have not yielded a goal in the tournament, will find defending champion Argentina there.

"I'm happy and satisfied and I hope to continue this ride," Schillaci said.

For once, Argentina showed it can win without Diego Maradona's help. Maradona had a mediocre game and an even worse penalty kick shootout, missing with a weak effort. Still, Argentina advanced to the semifinals, winning the shootout 3-2 over Yugoslavia on Saturday after 120 minutes of basically dull, scoreless soccer.

On Tuesday, at Naples, where Maradona is a hero for leading Napoli to the Italian League title, Argentina will play Italy.

Schillaci ended Ireland's first World Cup with a goal in the 38th minute. It also snapped a 18-game, 19-month unbeaten string for the Irish.

"Schillaci is offering extraordinary performance," Coach Azeglio Vicini said. "He should be admired for his courage and consistency."

The goal came on a brilliant passing display. Giuseppe Giannini made a creative run down the middle and passed to his left to Roberto Donadoni. His blistering shot was stopped by goalie Paddy Bonner, but the rebound fell to Schillaci, with Bonner down at the side of the net.

Schillaci didn't miss.

Earlier, Maradona did. Still, the Argentines came through.

"Argentina was all heart today," Maradona said. "To beat Argentina, they will have to rip the cup out of our hearts."

Maradona nearly did that to his coach.

"When Diego missed the penalty kick, my heart stopped," Carlos Bilardo said. "I don't have too many good shooters in penalties and for Diego to miss is something I would think not possible."

Miss he did, hitting his shot directly at goalie Tomislav Ivkovic. That evened things because Yugoslav star Dragan Stojkovic hit the crossbar with his team's first attempt.

"It was a great disillusionment, a tremendous anger," Maradona said of his failure. "It was an ugly error. We can all make mistakes. Thank God Goycochea saved me and Troglio."

Pedro Troglio also hit the crossbar directly after Maradona's kick, and Yugoslavia seemed in good shape. But Argentine goalie Sergio Goycochea, the backup who has played since the opening moments of the second game, then made two saves and Gustavo Dezotti's kick was the decider.

"First, we must think about ourselves," Bilardo said of facing Italy. "We must get ourselves fit. We must get Diego fit. I don't know how he goes out on one leg and plays."

Maradona has had a sore ankle for more than a week.

Yugoslavia played with 10 men for 88 minutes after Refik Sabanadzovic received two yellow cards.

"It is very difficult to play with only 10," Yugoslav coach Ivica Osim said. "We were very unfortunate.

"We did many good things during the game, but we were tired by the heat at the end and we lost concentration when we had to take the penalties."

Neither team did much in regulation and overtime. But Argentina's Jorge Burruchaga put the ball into the net in the final moments of extra time, only to have referee Kurt Rothlisberger disallow the goal for a hand ball. Argentina argued vehemently to no avail and television replays were inconclusive.

Walter Zenga's fifth straight shutout for Italy brought him within 48 minutes of the World Cup record for scoreless minutes, 498 by Peter Shilton of England.

"I'm very happy that we're among the top four teams in the world, and I would be a liar if I wouldn't say I'm happy I haven't been scored on yet," Zenga said. "But if I had to trade off between letting in a goal and playing in the final, I'd gladly let in a goal."

The defeat ended a wonderful run by Ireland, in its first World Cup.

"We enjoyed it, it was a good five weeks," Ireland manager Jack Charlton said. "We have great players, great heart and great tactical ability. They did as well as they're capable of and I'm very proud of them. We put the Irish team on the map."

On Sunday, it's West Germany against Czechoslovakia at Milan, England vs. Cameroon at Naples. In both cities, security has been beefed up considerably after several incidents involving English fans, German fans, Italians and police in various areas of the country.

Some 2,000 British fans were camping around the port city Saturday, and at last 3,000 more were expected for Sunday's match. Total police deployment in Naples on game day was expected to be about one officer for every expected English fan, police officials said.

German Juergen Klinsmann and Briton Gary Lineker, two of the top strikers in the tournament, expressed supreme confidence in themselves and their teams.

Unlike Lineker, who has just one goal in the tournament after leading the 1986 World Cup with six scores, Klinsmann has been a star thus far. He expects his outstanding play to continue, even with his partner, Rudi Voeller, suspended for Sunday's match.

"I am in top form. I hope to keep it through the July 8 final in Rome," said Klinsmann, who plays for Inter of Milan.

SHEA STADIUM: A night at Shea like a stroll in the park

By GERALD ESKENAZI
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The endlessly blinking scoreboards at Shea Stadium have a naive charm. The following appeared on the screen together:

"The Mets Welcome Nelson Mandela."

"The Mets Welcome Thrifty Car Rental."

It was a dark and stormy night, but the fans were excited and young. The Mets, after all, were the hottest team in baseball, and a little rain delay wasn't going to dispel the high spirits.

There is the feeling of a park setting at Shea, which was built in an open area not far from the site of the 1964 World's Fair. So the people who came there on this particular weekday evening recently looked as if they could have strolled in after taking a walk in the park. Fathers and mothers toted bags filled with baby-care paraphernalia. Teen-agers wore tank shirts and cut-down shorts.

There was an electronic bombardment all night, the scoreboard constantly spewing out information and the video screen welcoming every Kiwanis Club in the Northeast, every temple, every birthday boy.

Because of the weather, and a late crowd, there were no frustrating tie-ups on the Grand Central Parkway as cars pulled into the traffic circle at 6:10 p.m. An attendant, handed a $5 bill, returned 50 cents in change along with a cheery "Thank you, sir."

You can't always sit where you want, even in a seat that hasn't been sold. To a fan who wanted to buy a seat for the upper stands in right field, the ticket seller replied: "We sell from home plate out. I've got something good near first." The seats were $6, the price for the least expensive reserved seat.

The Mets' policy is to stop anyone they suspect is bringing in beer or soda. Two fans who walked in together, one of them carrying a gym bag containing a bottle of soda, simply walked past the security officers. Later, Bob Mandt, the Mets' vice president of operations, was asked about those people walking in.

"We blew it," he said. "We should have searched the bag."

Mandt added that the Mets had put 2,000 workers, including ushers and vendors, through a program designed to help them spot fans with drinking problems and learn how to deal with them. "We also asked the police to crack down on tailgate drinking in the parking lots, which always was illegal but was never enforced," Mandt said.

In addition, security officers receive a list before each game indicating where special groups are sitting. If there is a collection of fans from a tavern, for example, a security official pays the area a visit.

Of course, a fan needs a scorecard, which at Shea costs $1.50. The program seller also had a box of short, pointy pencils stamped "New York Mets."

"Are the pencils free?" the salesman was asked.

"Yeah," he said. "At Yankee Stadium you pay for a pencil, but it's got an eraser on it."

This is a carryover from the time the Mets used to charge a quarter more for their programs than the Yankees did, so provided the pencil free. Now the programs cost the same.

Leon Hess, the Jets' owner, objected to Shea's toilets before moving his team to cleaner restrooms in another state. But on this night, Shea's toilets seemed clean, at least they were an hour before game time.

The Food Court has a sign that reads, "No beer sold after 8th inning. Limit 4 beers per person."

"Does that mean four beers all night, or just at one time?" the young man behind the counter was asked.

"Four at once," he explained. "But if you come with someone you can each buy four beers."

That means a person can buy eight beers for himself if he wishes, a sobering thought. On the other hand, no beer is sold two hours after the scheduled starting time, even if there's a rain delay.

At dinner time, someone asked a vendor for a well-done hot dog. The young woman behind the counter saw none on her grill, so she went to another to bring one back. She earned a quarter tip. (In the old days, you left a nickel and the vendors, in gratitude, shouted "Subway!," the cost of a ride home.)

The food stands have television monitors so fans won't miss any action. A nice touch, present at both Shea and Yankee Stadiums.

At 7:10, fans were heading for the stands. An usher came over to several. "How you doing?" he asked with a smile. "This way. You're up." Way up. The seats were in Row Q. The usher cleaned off the seats with a cloth, both top and bottom. He replied "Thank you" for the $1 tip.

Unlike the Yankees, who swapped ushers for extra security officers two years ago, the Mets have kept their ushers.

"As far as I'm concerned, an usher is an added amenity at ball games," Mandt said.

Immediately, fans are hit with the noise of planes from La Guardia Airport, so loud the seats could have been on the runway.

The announcer, competing with the planes, told the fans: "Thank you for waiting through the rain. We anticipate a start time of 7:50."

Billy Joel's "We Didn't Start the Fire" was played, and fans were asked to watch a fellow named Ira Heller sing the national anthem a capella.

A message of warning before game time on the scoreboard: "Ground Rules for Fans! No use of foul or abusive language. Help us make Shea Stadium the place to go for great baseball in a safe environment."

In recent years, both the Mets and the Yankees have made a point to remind fans to behave responsibly. The ambience of the parks changed in the mid-1980s, many fans complaining of a trend toward foul language, excessive drinking, and a lack of civility by both employees and spectators.

David Cone, the pitcher, got two strikes on the game's first batter. Back in Row T, a beefy man wearing a Mets cap and T-shirt started to clap. Loudly.

Although the game had barely begun, something was quickly apparent: movement. People were constantly going up and down steps, adults standing up to pay vendors, youngsters searching for bathrooms.

The scoreboard said the visiting groups included: "St. Demetrius Junior High School Astoria" and "Kosher Little League."

There were two strikes on Pedro Guerrero. The fan in Row T was applauding like mad. Guerrero was frozen by a curve ball, strike three.

"Gotcha," the scoreboard responded.

A foul ball was hit into the stands behind first base. As soon as the ball landed, everyone in that area started to wave, knowing that cameras had followed the flight of the ball and they now were on television.

YANKEE STADIUM: In Ruth's house, a mix of then, now

By GERALD ESKENAZI
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — "Buy me some peanuts and Cracker Jack. I don't care if I ever smoke crack." It was sing-along time, the seventh-inning stretch at Yankee Stadium. A young man with wildly flowing red hair, seated in Row L in the topmost stands behind home plate, was giving a 1990s twist to an old standard.

There is an edge, call it a New York edge, in going to a baseball game at the House that Ruth Built.

A sense of agitation permeates the event. The stadium is filled with sound: an immediate reaction to onfield activity by Eddie Layton, the witty organist; a demand for crowd noise from the scoreboard; a seemingly constant rock litany over the speakers.

All this contrasts with the staid and the permanent: the majestic columns that gird the far walls in the outfield; the imposing voice of Bob Sheppard, the announcer; the monuments to Ruth, DiMaggio, et al.

Although the stadium was gutted in the mid-1970s, it has retained the sense of the classic old park, but with the luxury of no obstructed seats. The uneven distances to the left- and right-field walls, the real grass, the retired numbers, those stately columns, all lend an importance to games there, as well as a tie to the good old days.

What goes on inside the stadium is like the city in so many ways, a mingling of the civil and the nasty.

Arriving by 6:10 p.m., almost an hour and a half before game time, makes parking easier. The lots aren't full then, and you don't have to put the car a few blocks away near the Hunts Point Market. There, it has been reported, young men approach you and say: "Watch your car, Mister?" The "or else" is unspoken.

There are two ways to park at Yankee Stadium: The outdoor lot is $7, and you get out much more easily, or there is indoor parking for $4.50.

"Open your jacket," a security guard commanded. The guard looked the lad over, not touching him, content that nothing was concealed in the folds of arms, shirt, or pants.

Attention was then turned to the father. He held a tote bag that contained a plastic bottle filled with water. The guard didn't open the bag, but felt it with both hands and pronounced: "OK."

Why would a couple of solid citizens be stopped and questioned?

The next day a call was placed to the stadium anonymously and the question asked. A man who identified himself as Bill Squires, the stadium's operations director, responded.

"People sneak things in their children's jacket," he said. "Bottles and cans. You can envision what it's like if a full bottle of soda comes flying out of the stands. We don't mean to offend anybody. It's just for people's protection."

After a fan enters the stadium, the first item he can buy is a scorecard. It costs $1.50. At Shea Stadium, the pencils were free. Here, each stubby pencil costs 25 cents. Each was stamped "New York Yankees." And each had an eraser.

For many fans, the first stadium stop is Monument Park, beyond the outfield. It is an imposing place, where people, mindful of the sign "Please keep to your left," file silently past the portraits of Ruth, the Pope, and others who appeared in the great park. Security guards were prominently placed.

The Food Court is on the lower level, a favorite stopover before taking seats. It is a big, open area, festooned with color photographs of current Yankees. The food is eclectic: Mexican Delights, New York Deli Dog, Beers of the World.

A fan asked for a hot dog, New York-style. These jumbos were all wrapped in aluminum foil. The woman behind the counter took one. But when she was told that the fan wanted it well-done, she put that one back. She picked up another, squeezed it through its foil wrapping, and said: "Here."

People find their own seats at Yankee Stadium. At one of the entrance ramps to the upper deck, an employee was asked by a fan, "Where are these?" He expected to be escorted to the seats. Instead, the worker pointed skyward and said: "Up there."

Some seats were dirty and could have used the cleaning the Shea usher gave them.

"One of the big quirks about coming to the stadium is that we're in the Bronx, and people are paranoid about that," explained Bob Pelegrino, the Yankees' director of special events. "We took out the people who show you to your seats and added security."

Martin takes Myrtle Beach

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — Mark Martin passed Tommy Ellis on the final lap when Ellis ran out of gas and won the NASCAR Grand National stop at the Myrtle Beach Speedway on Saturday night.

Martin, a regular on the Winston Cup circuit, held off L.D. Ottinger by less than a car length to capture the $11,525 first prize in the $78,558 race.

Ellis, who started from the pole, led for the first 199 laps of the 200-lap race over the .538-mile track. His tank ran dry on the final lap as he exited the second turn and finished seventh.

Ottinger, in an Oldsmobile, earned $6,591 for second. Kenny Wallace finished third, followed by Bobby Dotter. and Joe Nemechek.

Chuck Bown, who was ninth, retained a 130-point lead over Bobby Labonte, the 10th-place finisher, in the Grand National series standings.

After 16 of 31 scheduled races, Bown has 2,366 points while Labonte has 2,236.

Ellis had won the 27th pole of his career and second of the season. The Grand National series' career pole leader was seeking his first victory in 1990.

Ellis, third in career victories with 21, has not won in his last 27 Grand National races.

LeMond second in tour prologue

Associated Press

POITIERS, France (AP) — Defending champion Greg LeMond shook off a winter full of distractions and a spring full of question marks on Saturday with an impressive opening performance at the Tour de France.

LeMond finished a driving second in the 4-mile prologue, just four seconds behind French short sprint specialist Thierry Marie.

"There were some questions whether I would come back," LeMond said. "But I've been confident for two weeks."

He should be. In just four appearances in the Tour, he has won twice. The other times, he finished second and third.

On Saturday, Marie won the opening sprint around the high-tech theme park called Futuroscope in 7 minutes, 49 seconds. But LeMond, rigged up again with special handlebars, was right behind the winner.

Stephen Roche, the 1987 winner, was 14 seconds behind LeMond in 10th.

France's Laurent Fignon, who lost to LeMond by eight seconds in last year's thrilling final time trial, was 15th Saturday, dropping 15 seconds to the American. Fignon won in 1983 and 1984.

Third went to Mexico's Raul Alcala in the same time as LeMond. Another six seconds back was Francis Moreau of France and Belgium's Eric Vanderaerden was sixth, 12 seconds behind.

All the main competitors used the special triathlon handlebars that force the rider into a more aerodynamic position. LeMond used these in winning the last-day's time trial in 1990.

AP Laserphoto

But Saturday LeMond came out with a new, improved model, that looks like an upside-down Y, developed by a former ski coach to simulate the downhill tuck position.

"I am extremely pleased with the time today," LeMond said. "I was hoping for the top three and it's my best performance in a Tour de France prologue."

Last year, LeMond was fourth in the opening time trial, giving the first indication that he was back from two years of ailments.

Now, after publicity demands and a virus cost him valuable training time over the winter, he had to rush to get into shape for the one race he pointed for all year.

"There is a point I have to go past from bad to good," LeMond said. "Sometimes it takes longer than you think. But now I feel good."

He has another week of relatively flat racing over the next seven stages before the mountains come.

There are two days in the high Alps before the Tour covers more flatland along France's southern coast.

JEWELS: Five this year

From 1C

It started a phenomenon known as Fernandomania. Later, when he proved to be mortal on the mound and a shoulder injury kept him from pitching in the 1988 World Series upset of Oakland, Fernandomania waned.

"I've had good games in the last two years," the 29-year-old lefthander said. "Even in September '88 I came back and pitched. I feel good."

His no-hitter was the fourth during June, the most ever in one month in the major leagues.

Texas' Nolan Ryan, 43, became the oldest man to throw a no-hitter when pitched one against Oakland on June 11. Nine days earlier, 6-foot-10 Randy Johnson of Seattle had become the tallest pitcher to throw a no-hitter.

ANGELS: Rodriguez happy

From 1C

Angel skipper Eddie Rodriguez, who managed at Quad Cities last year.

"This just proves that those numbers of his, that 1-7 record, doesn't mean a thing. He's just had trouble putting it together, but hopefully this will be the start of the turnaround that puts him back on track.

"I'm happy for him," Rodriguez added. "This might be the happiest I've been all year."

Bones, the Wichita starter who was 1-0 with a 1.89 ERA in his three previous outings versus the Angels, could not have been happy as Midland upped the ante to 7-2 with a two-run sixth.

Mark Davis, who had a single and three walks, drew a base-on-balls to get things started in the sixth. He moved to second on Dave Sturdivant's single, and both runners advanced on Jeff Barn's ground ball. Davis then scored on a wild pitch by Bones, and Sturdivant came in on a sacrifice fly by Kevin Davis.

Bones never returned after finally retiring the Angels in the sixth. His replacement, lefthander Todd Hansen, stymied Midland in the eighth. But he allowed a run on back-to-back doubles by Barns and Kevin Davis in the ninth.

All the while, Carter was cruising. Out after out was recorded through the air until the ninth when the last one pressed Mark Davis up against the wall in dead center field.

Phillies' Jones tears up knee

Jones, who missed most of last season when he tore the same tendon in his right knee, was scheduled to undergo surgery late Saturday night at Methodist Hospital.

Jones sustained the injury in the seventh inning while chasing a sinking line drive in right field by Franklin Stubbs. The ball bounced past him and Stubbs with a three-run, inside-the-park homer while Jones was on the ground, unable to get up.

"When he tried to stop he said he heard a snap," Phillies manager Nick Leyva said. "It's a shame. I really feel for Ronnie."

Citizen participation is critical to police effectiveness. Do you care about your neighborhood enough to help protect it?

The Case of The Tucson Tip-off.

They started talking to each other about what they could do. They got fed up. About 400 people went to the police for advice. They learned about surveillance. They got to know their beat officers. Citizens and police became partners in crime prevention. In just three weeks, 17 arrests were made and burglaries went down 30%. And Tucson is only one case where people successfully worked to beat crime. To find out more, write: The McGruff Files, 1 Prevention Way, Washington, D.C. 20539-0001. You can make a difference. You can help...

SPACE TO SPARE

By JILL HANCOCK

A stone fireplace in the formal living room, two walls of bookcases in the library, a workable island in the efficient kitchen, a deck area that is adjacent to the outdoor pool and four spacious bedrooms are only a few of the wonderful amenities that are displayed throughout this week's featured home.

Targeted to families craving space, this home is located in Plantation Hills and other lures include a garden room, an elegant dining room and an enormous laundry area. A busy, active family will enjoy the design of this home because the floor plan allows lots of space for any activity or hobby that a family member might have.

A CIRCLE drive leads up to the front door and matching side panels. Both are highlighted by an inlay of leaded glass. The tile foyer has two tall windows that frame the front yard, in addition to brightening this part of the home. The foyer flows into the formal living room. A rock fireplace is inset along the right wall with an adjacent built-in cabinet. Bookshelves above the cabinet can be used for displaying family photographs and art objects.

A French door, with windows on both sides, opens onto a large room that can be used as a family room, garden area or a game room. It will be hard to determine how to use this multi-functional room!

Please see SPACE/2D

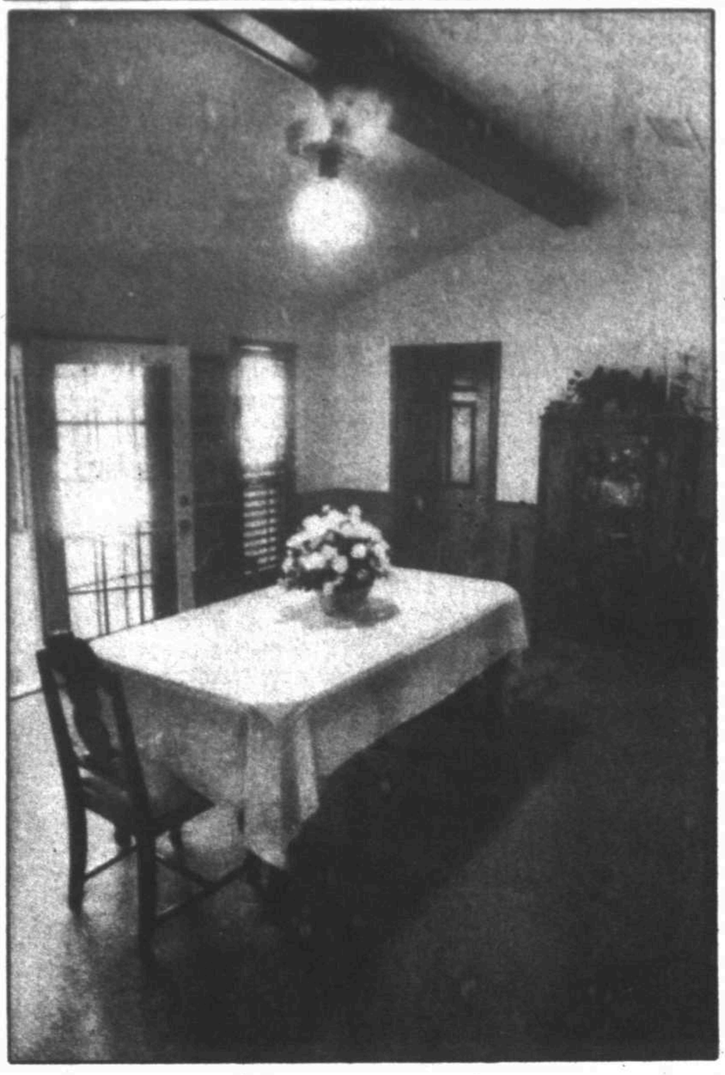

The breakfast room is centrally located in the home. It is adjacent to the kitchen and connects the formal living and dining rooms.

The master bedroom is an excellent example of the quality amenities that are displayed throughout this four-bedroom home.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

A skylight above the island and a garden window allows for lots of sunshine into the functional kitchen, top photo. The kitchen opens into the breakfast area.

The outdoor pool, above, is the ideal place to help endure the hot summer days. A sliding glass door in the garden room leads to the hot tub and pool. A covered deck is situated at one end of the pool

SPACE: Home has rooms to meet family's needs

(From 1D)

The foyer extends to the right of the living room into a hallway that opens into the breakfast area and the library. Floor-to-ceiling bookshelves line two walls in the library and a window overlooks the front yard. A person will love escaping to this room in order to read a favorite book or to practice a music piece on the piano.

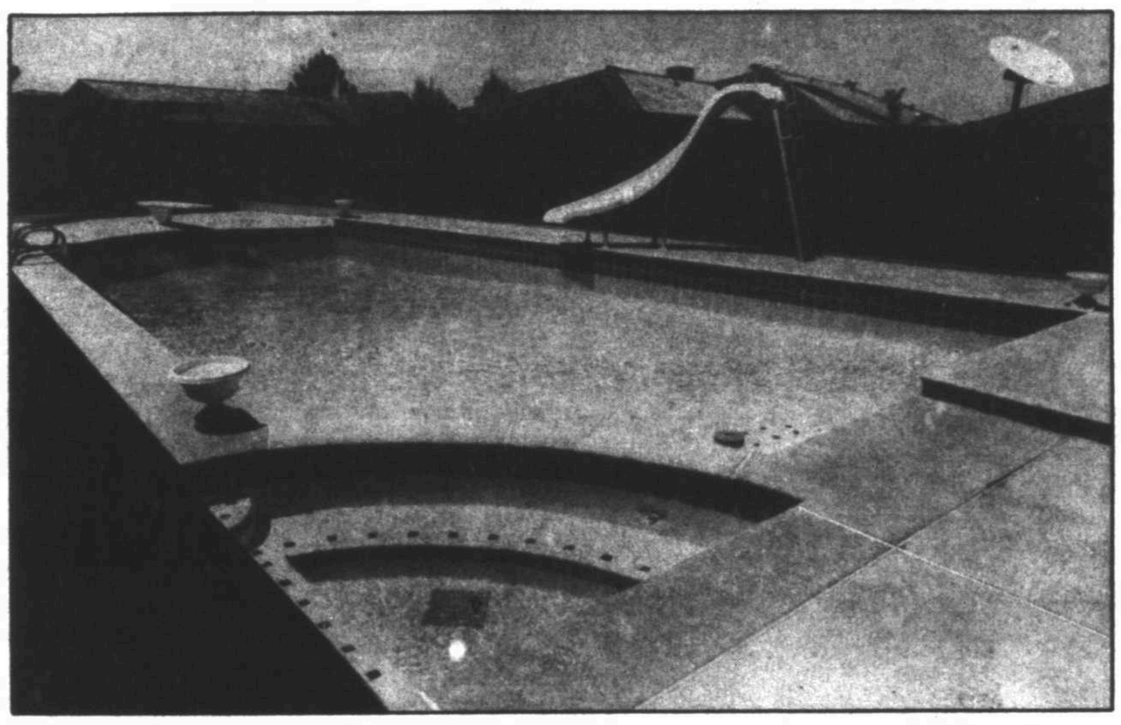

Situated behind the formal living room, access can be made into the breakfast room from a doorway in the living room or in the hallway off of the foyer. Family members will be drawn into this room because of its location and appeal. A cathedral ceiling that is lined with stained beams accents the parquet floor. A walk-in pantry is situated along the right wall.

The adjacent kitchen is designed around a useable island with a Jenn-Aire cooktop. Bar stools line one side and a butcher block top helps to make this area very functional. A garden window above the sink displays house plants and provides a view of the large side yard. The other appliances include a Whirlpool microwave, self-cleaning oven and dishwasher. A skylight above the island allows for lots of sunshine. A desk is inset along the right wall and shelves above soar into the ceiling for organizing cookbooks and household items.

The formal dining room is tucked away next to the breakfast room and kitchen. A paneled wainscoting, vaulted ceiling and shutters make this room intimate for formal dinner parties or large family gatherings. A door opens onto the garden room.

A large bath with a shower is located in a corridor next to the kitchen. The corridor also leads into a huge laundry area that features space for a freezer, a cabinet with a sink and an area for sewing. One door opens onto the side yard. A basketball court and a large grass area make this yard perfect for children of any age. Another door opens into the rear-entry, two-car garage with automatic door openers.

A hallway in the left corner of the living room leads to the home's four bedrooms. The master bedroom is the first room in this corridor. A French door allows access to the garden room and beyond to the outdoor pool and spa. The contours of the cathedral ceiling are also lined with stained beams.

Two doorways provide entry into the master bath that has two separate vanity and dressing areas. An oversized tub is placed in the center of the U-shaped bath and skylights above brighten the area. The bath is decorated in blue and peach and it also has two customized walk-in closets.

The hallway leads to the left of the master bedroom to three rooms that share a hall bath. Each bedroom features tall windows and spacious closets. The bath has a two-sink marble vanity and a separate bathing area with a bathtub that has glass doors.

The other amenities in this traditional home include plantation shuttered windows, a sprinkler system, ceiling fans, a cedar closet and an intercom system.

Century 21 Midtex is offering this home for $169,900.

Handbook offers advice

College Station, Texas–When Jack was looking for an apartment, he shopped around and compared, checked the reputations of property managers, inspected each apartment and talked with tenants. He also read and completely understood the lease before signing.

Sound picky? Maybe so, but the chances are good that Jack will be satisfied with the apartment he rented and probably won't have any unpleasant surprises. Neither will his landlord.

Both landlords and tenants can avoid many problems by using a handbook prepared by the Real Estate Center at Texas A&M University. The Landlord and Tenant's Guide gives a balanced view of the landlord-tenant relationship in Texas.

The handbook considers practical solutions to problems that occur when selecting and inspecting the property, agreeing to the lease, moving in and out , paying rent and resolving disputes. Tenants can use the handbook's inspection and lease checklists when selecting rental property.

Melton, Boyd discuss RE/MAX advantages

RE/MAX is the only real estate organization designed for the top producers in real estate. RE/MAX of Midland is part of a growing network that is designed for professional full-time agents.

Melton

"There are many advantages of becoming an agent with RE/MAX," stated Jan Melton. "The two things that set RE/MAX above the rest are being in business for yourself, thereby receiving the highest possible commission. In the Midland office, the agents receive 100 percent commission."

Boyd

The other reasons that Melton feels are important to note are being able to negotiate your own commission rate, carrying commission if desired, building an investment portfolio without paying your broker a commission, being creative with advertising, unlimited advertising and mailouts and pride of owning your own business."

At RE/MAX, agents are truly in business for themselves, but not by themselves. "The RE/MAX concept has become a fresh model for the entire industry and it has provided a framework for individuals within the business to function as entrepreneurs themselves," said Carolyn Boyd.

This concept was formulated in the early 1970s by Dave and Gail Liniger, who were eager to help the real estate industry grow with the times. They realized that the successful agents were tired of giving their brokers up to one-half of their earned commissions. Combined with the need agents had for support services such as image, advertising and referrals, the Linigers devised a system that provided the best of both worlds.

From the high-percent-commission ideal came the idea of the high commission concept so agents could keep virtually all their earned income. From conventional companies came the benefits of administrative support. By combining the best advantages of both approaches, RE/MAX could offer real estate agents the best of both worlds. The RE/MAX concept allowed salespeople with initiative to be entrepreneurs without undue risk.

"In many real estate offices, you have what is called the Prato principle, where 20 percent of the people are doing 80 percent of the business," explained Boyd.

"Our office has only the top producers in the Midland market," she continued. "Just last year we had three agents, Jan, Dennis Rambo and myself given the President's Club Award. Three other agents — Joyce Brickey, JoAnn Gaddy and Sandy Scott were given the Executive Club award by RE/MAX of Texas in the Vanguard area. That includes cities which have only one RE/MAX office."

RE/MAX of Midland is currently offering an incentive program for agents who want to join this independent professional team during the month of July. Information can be obtained by calling Jan Melton or Carolyn Boyd at 697-8232 for a private consultation.

AmWest, Langston Realtors join forces in Meadowpark

By Jill Hancock
Advertising Feature Writer

A unique market in new construction is being created in Midland and with the influx of relocating families, the timing of this endeavor could not be better. Located in the Meadowpark subdivision, plans are being made to attract builders and buyers into this quiet residential area.

AmWest Savings Association and Langston Realtors are working together to market this subdivision to families who are moving into Midland and want a well-built, quality home in an exclusive neighborhood. "Meadowpark offers an executive lifestyle to buyers who are looking for a custom home requiring a minimum of exterior maintenance required," stated Kenneth Mitchell, senior assest manager and vice president of AmWest Savings. "AmWest assumed ownership of this property last year and have enlisted the aid of Langston Realtors to help market and sell the lots in this area. Our goal was to secure a good local broker who would become thoroughly involved and Langston Realtors is an important element in our 'team concept' for this neighborhood."

Mitchell also stated that AmWest hopes to get several Midland area builders involved in this subdivision. One of the reasons that it chose Marilyn Wier, a Langston associate, to handle the marketing of Meadowpark was because she has a great deal of enthusiasm for this area and Mitchell felt she could convey this excitement to builders and buyers.

A definite need exists in Midland for new construction in a competitive price range, according to Wier. "The existing homes in this area have the amenities that buyers are looking for in today's market, but the advantage of Meadowpark is that the existing lots are very reasonably priced, thereby enabling buyers a quality built home in a popular area of town," stated Wier.

Some of the main attractions a person observes driving through Meadowpark are the beautiful landscaped common areas, cobblestone streets and the recreational facilities that include a clubhouse, pool, tennis courts and a play ground. Meadowpark also has a very active homeowners association whose members work hard to maintain a quality neighborhood environment.

AmWest is hoping to secure a strong core group of builders interested in this subdivision. One builder, Jim Leonard already has a custom home under construction. Other builders who have expressed an interest in Meadowpark are Jerry Young, Dick Hamilton, Robert Graham, Mike McPherson, Kelly Young, Mark Payne, Bill Tolbert, Jim Rasnick, Paul West and Gilbert Bates.

A four bedroom home presently under construction at 605 Meadowpark is an example of the new activity occurring in this subdivision. Leonard is the builder of this lovely home which features two living areas with a dual fireplace, as well as a lot of amenities — plantation shutters, a landscaped yard with a sprinkler system, lush carpeting and tile flooring.

"The homes in this area all have the custom features that are seen throughout Polo Park and Saddle Club South, but at a better price," explained Leonard. "I serve on the Planning and Zoning Commission and I can't see anything in the near future in new construction that is as competitive as Meadowpark. I have also acted as a developer and I feel certain that it would be impossible to duplicate the amenities that this subdivision has to offer at the existing lot prices."

Wier agreed that many of the newer developments are not including plans for clubhouse facilities due to the expense. "Meadowpark is unique in its design because it is very accessible because of Loop 250 and "A" Street, ClayDesta and Midland Park Mall. It has no thru traffic so the design is great for families with children. It also is located adjacent to the planned site for the new junior high school."

In addition to the home that is under construction, Jerry Holt, another Langston associate, is the listing agent for 605 Meadowpark. Holt also sold the house next door in less than 30 days. His customer were the Kleckners, a family that had been transferred from Houston with Oryx Energy. They were interested in this area because of the low cost and the recreational facilities.

"We were attracted to Meadowpark because of the well-maintained, open expanse of the common area which are great for kids. I have two boys, ages five and seven, and these common grounds provide a wonderful area for them to play," explained Jim Kleckner. "We also like the quality of construction in these homes and the open floor plans."

More information about Meadowpark can be obtained by calling Marilyn Wier at Langston Realtors at (915) 682-9495 or 1-800-231-2483.

Don Harvey associate gives timely moving tips for relocating families

Thousands of families will change their residences in the last half of 1990 and there are some important things they should know about moving their possessions, according to corporate relocation studies.

"Moving a household will be less complicated if you have a reliable moving company," said Norma Barnes, an associate with Don Harvey, Realtors. Ask neighbors, friends, fellow workers and your real estate broker for recommendations, Ms. Barnes advises.

- Plan your move for regular working days. This will avoid overtime charges imposed on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.
- Try to avoid scheduling your move on the first or last few days of the month. These are the busiest days for moving companies.
- Be ready when the mover sends an estimator to your house to show him or her everything that is scheduled to go.
- Walk with the estimator through the house to make sure he or she lists everything. Don't bypass closets, storage rooms, attic, basement or garage. The mover has to know exactly what is to be moved in order to have the proper packing and loading equipment on hand.

Norma Barnes

"There are some things of which a person moving must be aware of in order to prevent problems," stated Ms. Barnes. A moving company's normal services, in addition to transporting household goods, include:

- Supply cartons
- Packing loose items from cartons
- Removing all packed items from cartons
- Disconnecting and connecting appliances

ICC regulations state all services signed for on the bill of lading must be paid for even if that service is not performed. "So," says Ms. Barnes, "do not sign for any item that is not performed and be sure to read the bill of lading carefully."

Some of the services do not include in a move are:

- Removing drapery rods or items affixed to the walls
- Installing electrical or plumbing items
- Removing or installing an outside antenna

"Certain items must be prepared by the moving family," Ms. Barnes concluded. "These items include removing gasoline from all gas-powered equipment (lawn mowers, chain saw, generators, etc.) Refrigerators and freezers must be defrosted at least 24 hours before loading."

The key to a successful move begins with making sure you've got the best available people to assist you. Norma Barnes has been an associated with Don Harvey, Realtors since February of 1981. Don Harvey, Realtors is the largest volume real estate company in Midland. When you have need of real estate assistance, compare Don Harvey's track record and let them tell you why they achieve the highest average productivity per associate of any company in town.

Langston

"Just like the 'good old days'," was the term used by at least two associates in our office last week in describing Midland's current real estate market. A significant increase in sales for the first five months of '90 as compared to '89, firming prices, stabilized inventories and fewer days on the market are all indications that the residential market is certainly well on its way back from the "bust" days of 1983-84.

This news is especially gratifying and presents an even more encouraging picture of Midland's economy — when one consider that markets in the Northeast, California, Florida and other areas of the country are weakening instead of strengthening.

One of the associates who described today's home sales as "Just like the good old days" had just finalized her second full price contract this month. The other agent was in the midst of negotiating three contracts on the same listing. So, sellers, there is good news!

And buyers, let me hasten to add that there is good news for you too, in that there are so many good properties, in all price ranges on the market. Some of our favorites are Billie Sherman's Corporate and Pat Paxton's listing in Plantation and Vista West. These homes are nearly new, beautifully planned and decorated and within walking distance of Santa Rita! Plus, they are priced between $88,900 and $114,900.

I myself have two unbelievably lovely executive homes that are brand new to the market. The first is Bryant and Brenda Williams' gorgeous, practically new home in Saddle Club Estates. Light and bright yet elegant Bermuda architecture make this four-bedroom, five-bath beauty especially inviting. One can sit around the pool, on the lovely large patio, in the spacious high ceiling living or in the fabulous country kitchen and just envision cool tropical breezes and long, lazy days! This home also features a study for him, office/sewing for her, four car garage, formal dining and divine decorating.

My second new listing is Mark and Susan Abendshein's truly elegant two story home in older Midland. The charm of a winding staircase, hardwood floors, pairs and pairs of French doors, immense breakfast room with fireplace and gorgeous brick galleries/patios is heightened by the most updated of kitchens, study retreat and luxurious master bath. This home has four or five bedrooms, formals, den, playroom and unbelievable storage.

Greentree has attract a lot of recent buyers, but many lovely homes are still on the market are or new to the market in this coveted area. From Island Circle to Sequoia to Greentree Boulevard, we've offering in a wide range of prices. Call one of our agents for a full inventory; then consider the pleasures of golf course/country club living.

Now for some office bragging: The "Ecology Conscience" in our office are being encouraged by secretary Lucille Cummings. We have started our own recycling center with separate containers for various types of recycable materials. We have dispensed with our styrofoam cups and are using biodegradable ones. Have a safe 4th of July.

MBR gives ideas for keeping cool during the hot days of summer

Q. What can I do to cut down on cooling costs for the summer months?

A. With the hot summer months upon us, properly insulating your home is vital to controlling utility costs. Heating and cooling costs can be reduced by knowing how to adequately insulate ceiling, walls and crawl spaces of your home.

To determine if your home needs more insulation, check with friends and neighbors who have similar homes and find out what their energy bills are. If you find that your energy bills are higher than others in your area, it may be because you have inadequate levels of insulation.

You can measure the level of insulation by looking at the R-value of a particular material. An R-value is the measure of a material's resistance to heat transfer. The higher the number, the better a material will be insulate.

The Center for Energy and Mineral Resources recommends Texans insulate their homes with R-values of R18 to R27 for walls and crawl spaces. Generally, higher values are best for the northern part of Texas, and lower values are best for South Texas residents.

While adding insulation to your walls can be a difficult and costly venture, increasing the level of insulation in your attic is not as difficult and relatively inexpensive. According to the National Association of Home Builders, increasing insulation in your attic can save you between five to 10 percent of heating costs. However, the savings you make will be determined by climate, amount of existing insulation and other factors pertaining to your home and lifestyle.

Before choosing the best insulation material for you, know the options. There are four basic forms of insulation: Batts and blankets, loose-fill and blown-in, foam-in and rigid board. Materials most often used for insulation include: glass fiber, rock wool, cellulosic fiber, vermiculite, perlite or one of a variety of synthetic forms.

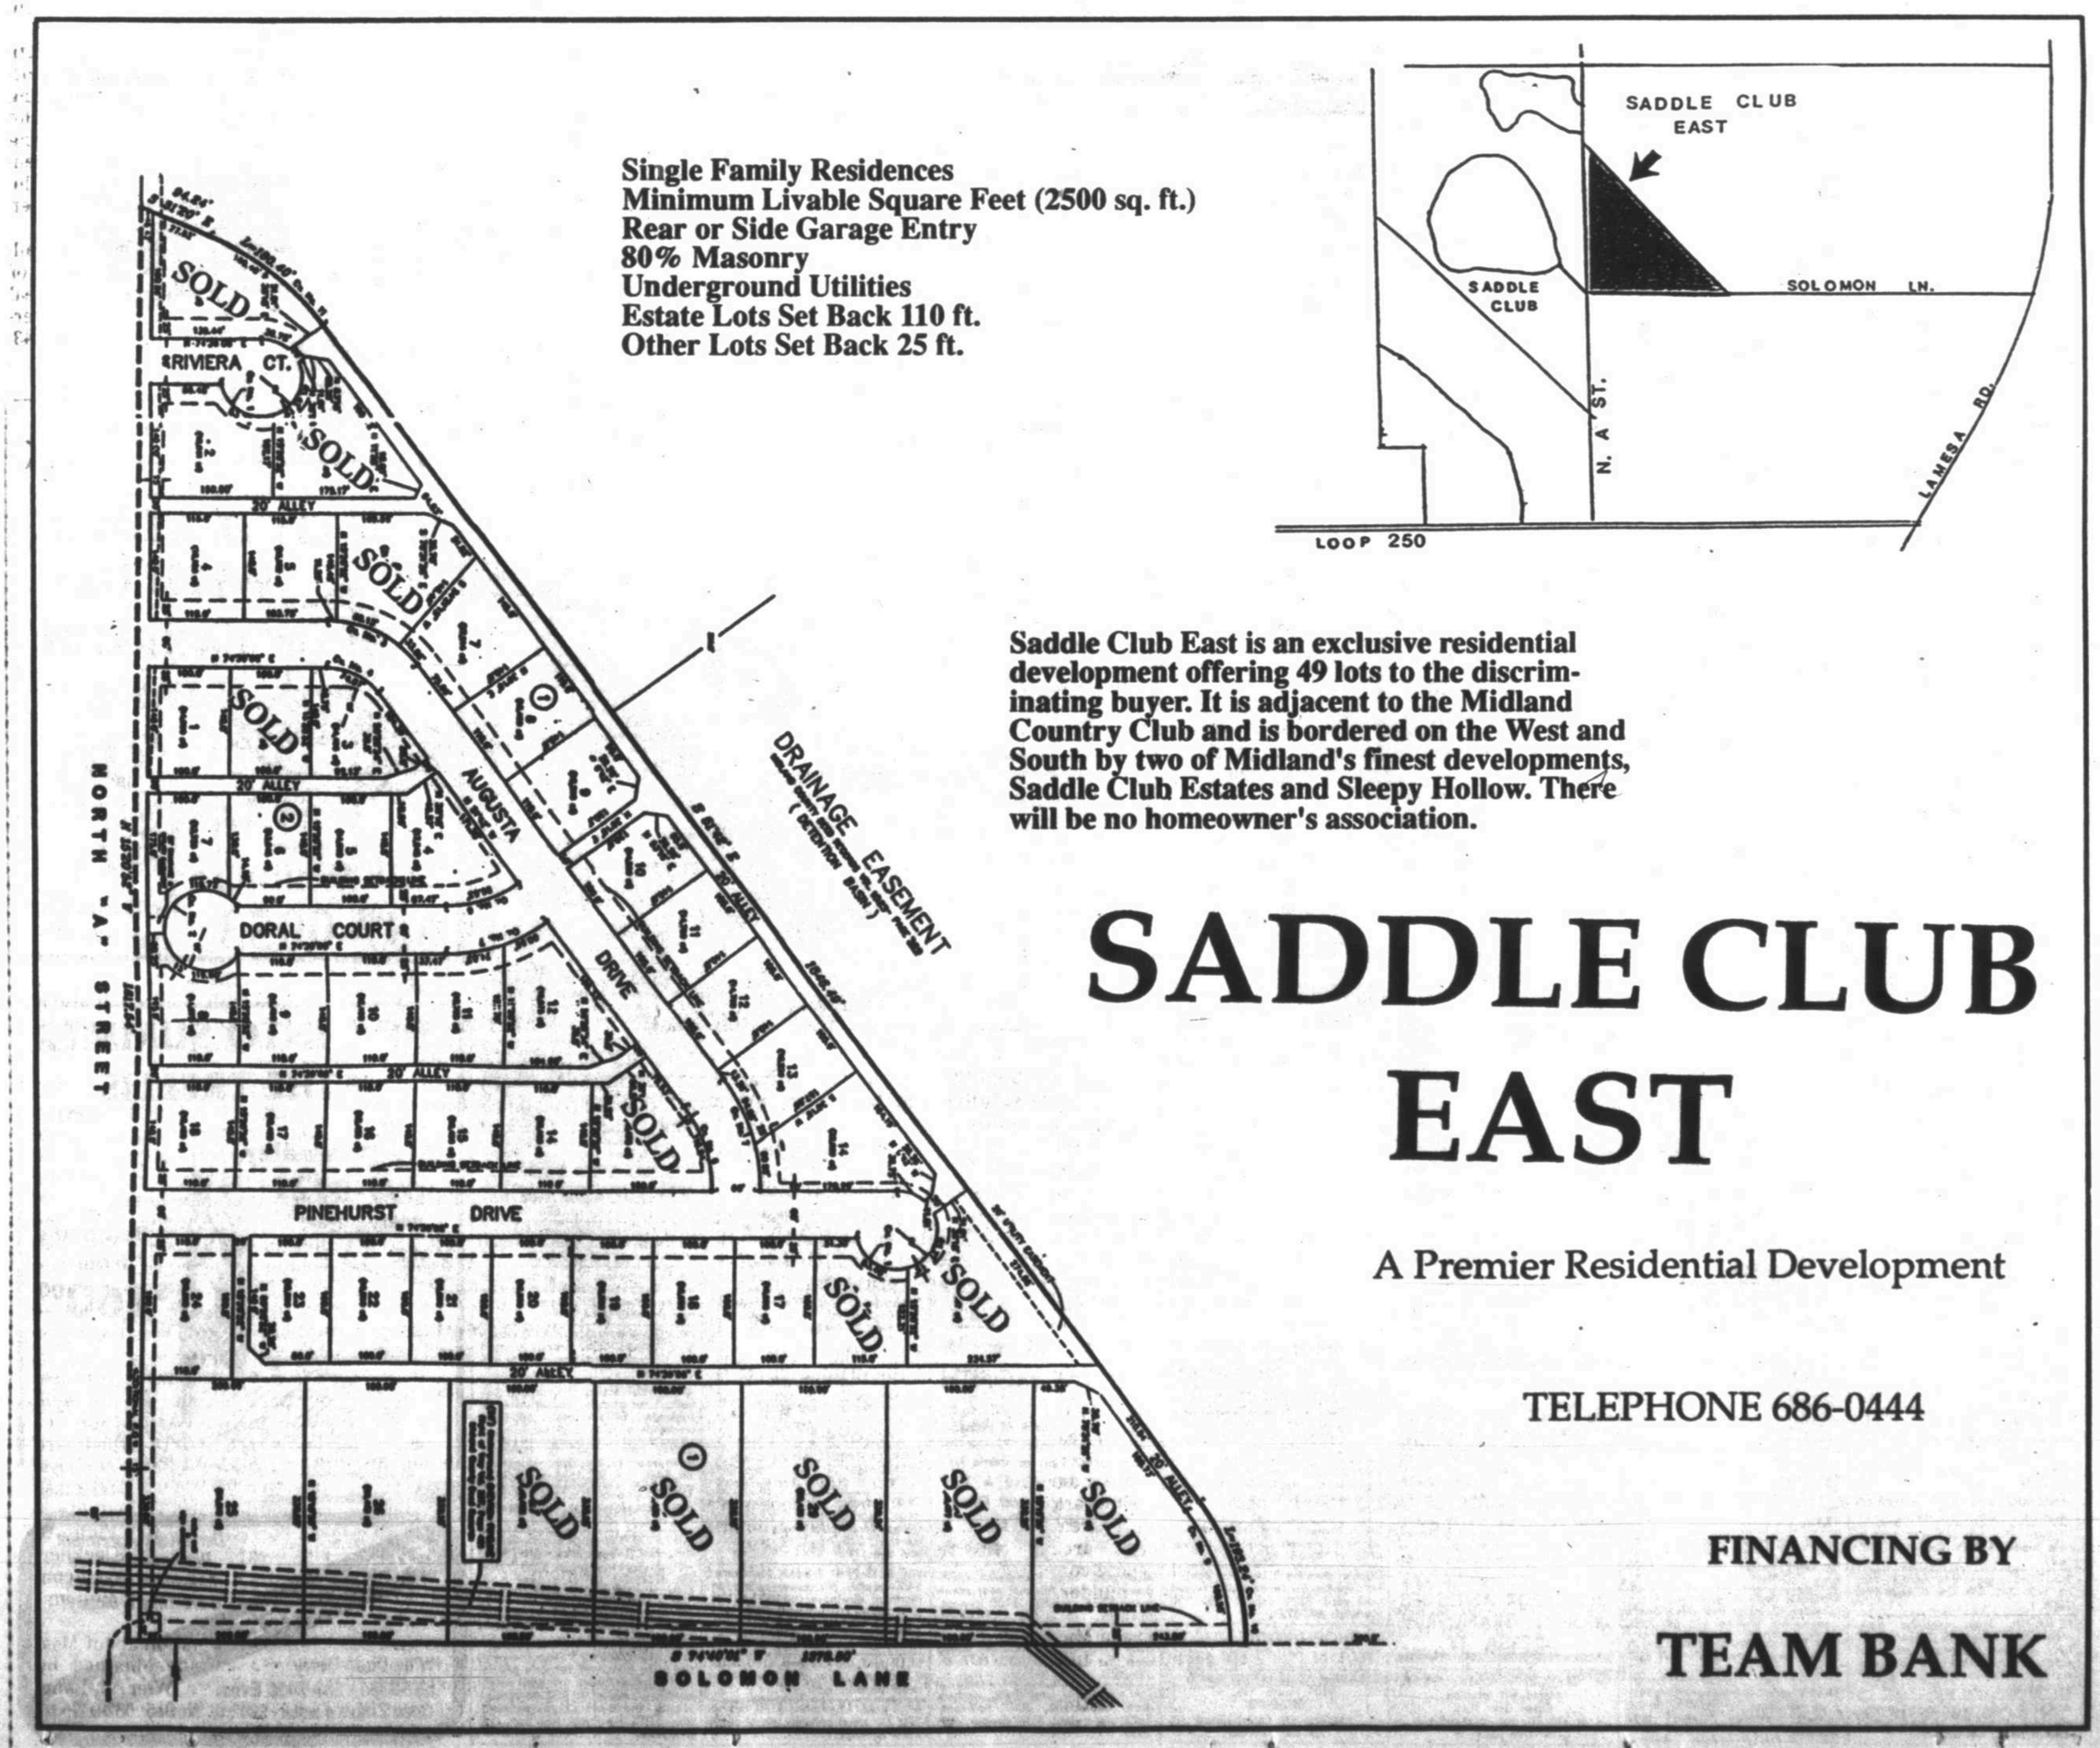

All of these various types and forms of insulation are acceptable. To get the most for your money, shop for the best price for the R-value and your particular insulation needs.

When you are ready to install the insulation, make sure you are wearing protective clothing, an air-filter mask and safety goggles. Allow enough ventilation and make sure you have good lighting.

If you are installing insulation in the attic remember to leave enough space for air flow though the vents. Do not cover exhaust fans or other exposed ceiling vents. Make sure that attic insulation is at least three inches away from recessed light fixtures and other heat sources to avoid fire and smoke hazards.

The Midland Board of Realtors hopes that these guidelines will help you cut your cooling bills. Remember that there are other ways to save energy; such as, insulating hot water pipes and water heaters.

The Center for Energy and Mineral Resources at Texas A&M University is an excellent source to learn ways to save energy and money in your home. For more information on keeping utility costs low, write to the Center for Energy and Mineral Resources, Texas A&M University, College Station, Texas 77843-1243.

TIGHT PURSE STRINGS HINDER RESEARCH

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifth of a six-part Sunday series giving an in-depth look at the fight against cancer. The series is a special Hearst project which was written by Faith Keenan of our Washington bureau with photographs and graphics prepared by staff members of the San Antonio Light. The series has a wide scope, from stories on the state of medical research and the human suffering brought by the disease to the politics of federal research money.

Next Sunday's final presentation will feature an article written by secretary of Health and Human Services Louis Sullivan about cancer research and people's changing behavior.

By Faith Keenan

WASHINGTON — Research funding has taken on a new urgency in the cancer war as federal purse strings tighten and other diseases such as AIDS claim increasing portions of the research budget.

As a cure continues to elude scientists, the public is wondering what they are getting for their dollars and why they should continue to bankroll research.

Scientists say that while much progress has been made, they have much more to learn about the basic cell workings and what goes wrong to cause cancer. They need money — lots of it — to do it.

But public skepticism and federal belt-tightening are not the only reasons science wizards are complaining.

To a certain extent, the researchers and the health bureaucracy have been their own worst enemies.

Changes in funding procedures at the National Institutes of Health have extended grant periods for established scientists and dried up the pool available for new researchers.

Although the National Cancer Institute's budget has increased almost annually from $230 million in 1971 to $1.6 billion in 1990, the pool available for new grants has dropped dramatically in the last two years.

In 1987, 40 percent of all approved grants at NCI were funded. The amount dropped to 25 percent in 1989 and is expected to be 20 percent in 1990, said Dr. Brian Kimes, associate director of NCI for cancer centers, training, and resources.

"It's a crap shoot who gets funded," said Dr. Mark Smulson, professor of biochemistry at Georgetown University in Washington. "Science should not be a roll of the dice."

The effect, say cancer specialists, is that young scientists may be discouraged from entering the field.

"It's tragic today if a new researcher writes a grant, the chances are less than 1 in 5 it will get funded because of spending limits," said Dr. Emil Frei, director and physician-in-chief of the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston.

"It's going to have a dampening effect on the field, particularly in terms of new people coming in with new ideas. And that's crucial."

WHILE MORE money has been committed to ongoing projects, the cost of doing research has outpaced inflation, causing the dollar amount of grants to rise steadily. The NIH as a whole funded about 5,200 new grants in 1987. The total number it expects to fund in 1990 is 4700. Dr. David Korn, chairman of the National Cancer Advisory Board and dean of the Stanford University School of Medicine says cancer research has become a victim of its own success. Advances made in the last 10 to 15 years have opened new avenues for research, but money is not available to pursue them all.

"Biomedical science is in a period of enormous growth," said Korn. "The demand on funds by the growing number of well-trained investigators with good ideas has seriously outstripped the growth in funds."

And across-the-board cuts mandated by the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law have eaten into all federal expenditures.

Other funding sources, such as foundations and pharmaceutical companies still make up only a tiny fraction of overall spending on research, scientists and administrators say. Biotechnology companies are likely to support only "sure bets" because of their need to generate profits. Research that may or may not yield results five or 10 years down the road will not put dividends into shareholders' pockets in the immediate future.

And other diseases have caught the attention of Congress, thereby depleting budget increases for the cancer institute, scientists say. AIDS is the most obvious competitor for funds, but a recent survey by the congressional Office of Technology Assessment found that scientists were divided over whether AIDS was taking money away from research on other diseases.

Federal funding for AIDS research, education and prevention increased from $5 million in 1982 to $1.6 billion in 1990, nearly matching the $1.7 billion appropriated for the National Cancer Institute.

AIDS is receiving huge dollar infusions the way cancer was following the National Cancer Act of 1971, said Kimes.

"It brought new money into the system and has not hurt institutes in the sense of decreased budgets, but has affected them in getting budget increases," he said.

Others have criticized congressional budgeting for AIDS, saying the money should support basic research that will benefit all diseases. "AIDS has starved other research that doesn't fit under the AIDS label," Korn said. "As substantial increases in appropriations were earmarked for AIDS, the numbers left for non-AIDS research was exceedingly little."

Some scientists say the AIDS bandwagon has produced "mediocre" research in some cases and prompted many scientists to search for a way to include AIDS in their funding proposals.

"The problem is, we live in an era of competing priorities," said Dr. Stephen Kahl, an assistant professor of chemistry at the

Midlanders travel to Europe for annual tour

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Forty-five persons recently participated in Norma Gotcher's annual "Taste of Europe" tour, which included Germany, Austria, Italy and Switzerland and was highlighted by the famous Passion Play in Oberammergau, which began in 1634 and is reenacted every 10 years.

McKnight-Harrison

After landing in Munich, Germany, the first few days of the two-week trip were spent in Austria, including a day in beautiful Salzburg, the "Sound of Music" city, with its medieval castle overlooking the city.

Montecatini Terme, the famous Italian spa known for its mud baths and mineral waters, was headquarters for a few days, with day trips to Florence and lovely old Siena, famous for its arts and architecture. By way of Pisa, the group traveled to Lake Como in the Italian Alps.

Then going over Bernina Pass on a narrow-gauge train, by lakes and glaciers, they continued on to St. Moritz and then to Lucerne, which is beautifully situated on the shores of a large lake. They also enjoyed visits to Interlaken, the internationally famous holiday town, and Berne, capital of Switzerland.

Another highlight of the tour was the hotel high atop Mount Rigi. Its only access was by cable car, and Norma tells us there is no way to describe the beauty of the vast expanse of snowcapped peaks viewed from the hotel windows.

The group ventured into the tiny principality of Liechtenstein and on to Innsbruck before returning to their departure point of Munich for the trip home.

Among the travelers were Joyce Brickey, Caroline Brown, Ona Burns, Mary Margaret and Fred Byrom, Bernice and Jim Clay, Frona Danner, Aida Dunlap, Patsy Hinchey and son, Doug, Mary Layton, Marj Lewis, Mary McMannis, Wynona and Bob Schmucker, Elma and Ben Sepulveda, Ellen Palmer, Charlotte Starr, Marylue Thompson, Susan Toliver and Marge Woods.

A BIG "WELCOME HOME" to Verta and Ike Lovelady, who recently moved back to Midland after an absence of five years. They are residing in a townhouse in Manor Park.

The couple lived in the West Texas area, including Midland, Odessa and Lubbock, for approximately 40 years before moving to Sun City West in Arizona and more recently, Albuquerque, N.M.

Their daughters, Linda (Mrs. Gerald) Epstein and Connie (Mrs. Stuart) Rappaport, both reside in Albuquerque, as do their five grandchildren.

The photograph was taken over a year ago, and Sloan is now a sophomore at the University of Texas-Austin and a member of Phi Gamma Delta fraternity.

The article explores the reasons why Austinites — despite the city's recent economic slump — choose to remain there. The son of Mary and Charles Teeple IV, Sloan is quoted as saying, "I wouldn't even consider living anywhere else."

WEDDING WEEK PARTIES for Rachal Pearson and Todd Eriksen, who were married June 23, began with a tea in the Odessa home of Ingrid (Mrs. Phillip) Zeeck. Co-hostesses were Mary (Mrs. Tom) Mann, Mary (Mrs. Kingdon) Hughes, Virginia (Mrs. Hal) Rachal, Chan Driscoll, Nancy (Mrs. Buddy) Anguish, Maurice (Mrs. Richard) Hughston and Sandra (Mrs. George) Staley.

A family picnic was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mignon and Bruce Pearson. It was hosted by the bride's brothers, sisters and spouses, Terry and Guy Hall of Midland, Catherine and Blaine Hall of Dallas, Donna and John Pearson of Napa, Calif., and Louisa Basile of Danville, Calif. Guests also included early out-of-town arrivals for the wedding.

Heather Dunbar hosted a luncheon at her home on Club Drive for the wedding party. The rehearsal dinner, a Mexican supper party, was held at the home of Janet and Bob Pollard. Also hosting were Mary and Jim Rasmussen, Shirley and Monty Gist, Sue and Pete Snelson, Pat and Tom Schneider, Tillie (Mrs. G.R.) Carter, Doris and John Redfern and the groom's parents, Millie and Allan Eriksen of Colton, S.D.

A wedding day brunch was hosted in Venezia Restaurant's Fountain Room for the out-of-town guests. The host couples were Nookie and Bob Bybee of Houston and Margaret and Wesley Measday of Yuma, Ariz., aunts and uncles of the bride; Sarah Lew and David Grimes, Jere and Bus Hubbard, Camille and Bill Leifeste, Fran and Dick Saxe, Bonnie and George Van Husen and Ann and Don Wambaugh.

A bridesmaids luncheon hosted by Jane (Mrs. D.J.) Sibley of Austin was held at Midland Country Club. The bride's parents entertained out-of-town guests at a Continental breakfast the day after the wedding.

A recipe shower was given by Clyde (Mrs. John) Cross and Marguerite (Mrs. S.P.) Crain earlier in June in the Cross home.

The bride wore her mother's wedding dress for the 8 p.m. ceremony in First Presbyterian Church. The Lone Star Brass played at both the wedding and reception in the ClayDesta Atrium.

Gene-mapping is a controversial topic

By Faith Keenan
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The human genome project — better known as gene-mapping — is barely off the ground and still 15 years away from completion. Yet controversy already is building as society debates how we will use information collected in the herculean effort to lay out the human cell's nearly 3 billion letters of genetic instructions.

The crux of the growing debate is whether the project will lead to a promising new world where most genetic diseases will be identified and cured or to a frightening one of "mad" scientists creating a super-human race.

The project's proponents hail the attempt to produce a precise road map that will direct physicians to ways that would possibly prevent or cure anything from shyness to cancer — as long as the condition is genetically based.

Opponents see it, at worst, as an open door to defy nature by genetically engineering people. They also say it could become a potential blueprint for 21st century-style discrimination based on the core of life — a person's DNA, which determines physical traits as well as mental ability and susceptibility to disease.

In between are scientists who say the project is stealing valuable funds from potentially more vital basic medical research.

THE GENOME project is a $3 billion international effort to pinpoint the location of the 50,000 to 100,000 genes in a cell. It will also sequence the estimated 3 billion bases, or sub-units of genes, that control cell functions.

The National Institutes of Health and the Department of Energy are providing the bulk of funding for the project.

Dr. James Watson, who shared a Nobel Prize with Francis Crick for identifying the double helix structure of DNA, heads the effort. Now in the twilight of his career, he sees it as the opportunity to identify the genetic defects that are the root cause for about 3,500 diseases and that are partially responsible for others such as cancer, depression, and hypertension.

He cites the history of cancer research in justifying the project. "For the last 20 years we were getting nowhere (in trying to understand cancer) until we could find the genes that cause it," Watson said.

"We knew it was a disease of bad genes," and identifying some of those genes has created an "enormous success story," he said. Other diseases such as Alzheimer's "might be solvable if we can get the genetic structure," Watson added.

CRITICS OF the project don't dispute the potential value of its findings. They're concerned about how the findings will be used. "Understanding predisposition to shyness, stroke, cancer, etc., surely is a good," said Andrew Kimbrell, counsel to the Foundation on Economic Trends in Washington. The group was founded by Jeremy Rifkin, the perennial critic of potential abuses in biotechnology.

"Concerns are raised about genetic privacy, eugenics (selective breeding to control characteristics of future generations) and discrimination. After the project, we are all going to be disabled. We may have a predisposition to shyness, criminality, etc.," he said. "Who should see this? Employers? Insurance companies? Universities? Your spouse? There are immense privacy questions here and little in constitutional law to prepare us for this."

Kimbrell charges that the information can be used "to encode the prejudices of any given society" by creating a super race that "has nothing to do with survival, but with cultural prejudice."

Another question he raises centers on abortion.

"On what basis do we use genetic testing to determine who's born and who's not?"

The answers remain to be worked out.

Watson hasn't overlooked the ethical concerns but says it's more immoral not to complete the project.

"The main ethical issue is whether the scientific community uses it's knowledge to get at disease," he said. "No one should have the right to look at DNA and whether I want to look at it myself is my right."

FUNDS: Congress funding strategy questioned

(From 1E)

University of California at San Francisco. Kahl believes support for his research on a radiation treatment was cut because NIH and the Department of Energy did not deem it a high priority.

"An enormous amount of funding is going into AIDS. People in neutron capture therapy have asked, 'Isn't there some way we can treat AIDS with this stuff?'" he said..

Scientists generally scorn government's attempts to designate money for disease research.

"It's silly for the political process to try to direct money," said Korn. "Specific discoveries won't come by putting money into a bucket labeled with the name of a specific disease."

The lament is one often heard from scientists who accuse Congress of adhering to a "disease of the month" appropriations strategy. Congress must approve funding for the NIH. And while it historically has granted the institutes more money than the president requests, legislators often have pet projects that they would personally like funded.

"There's concern that the cancer program has not moved forward rapidly," said a House subcommittee aide who handles NIH appropriations. "It's a frustration everyone feels. We all know there's a lot of work to be done."

Besides AIDS, Alzheimer's disease and aging have been the recent congressional favorites. Last year, a new Institute on Deafness was created with strong backing from Capitol Hill.

'We're on the threshold of incredible discoveries — if the money is there.'

— Dr. Mark Smulson
Georgetown University

And gone are the stalwart supporters of cancer research like Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee until his political defeat in 1980.

"We haven't had the equally ardent defenders that we had 10 or 15 years ago," said Kimes.

Researchers also criticize the new Human Genome Project, a multi-year, $3 billion effort to map the body's 50,000 to 100,000 genes, for sapping money from other research.

The squeeze couldn't come at a worse time, cancer specialists insist.

"We're in a renaissance for understanding disease," said Smulson. "Our understanding of the nature of cancer is so close to the truth, now it's unbelievable. We're on the threshold of incredible discoveries — if the money is there."

DNA used for positive identification

Copley News Service

Fingerprinting is old-fashioned. That's because of the new DNA-matching technology used to identify people.

DNA is the biological compound in every cell that makes us unique. And it's not just the cops who are using DNA ID.

Parents can now deposit samples of their children's DNA at Lifebank Inc. for future positive identification purposes. For $200, the New Jersey company will store the blood samples for 18 years and decode the DNA as an identifier.

And who is using this service? Lifebank's Karen Wexler says parents who worry about kidnapping and future custody court battles are buying into the DNA bank.

Typing genes to blood cells has implications

WASHINGTON (AP) — Experiments have shown for the first time that human blood cells carrying foreign genes will zero in on tumors, opening a new strategy for treating cancer, according to researchers in late May.

The preliminary study, conducted on seven patients, is the first approved attempt at human gene therapy — inserting potentially helpful genes inside the body in places where nature failed to put them.

The experiment was intended to show that the approach was possible. Physicians introduced a bacterial gene that had no effect on the patients' cancer.

Soon, however, they plan to equip patients' blood cells with a gene that delivers a powerful natural cancer-killing substance known as tumor necrosis fractor. The researchers hope that will cure the disease by blitzing the tumor with extremely high levels of toxic proteins.

"This is the first study in which foreign genes have been introduced into humans with survival of those cells," said Dr. Steven A. Rosenberg. "This is meant to pave the way to introducing genes that can improve the survival of cancer patients."

His pilot study showed that not only did the cells survive, they homed in on tumors and produced a foreign protein there.

'This is the first study in which foreign genes have been introduced into humans with survival of those cells. This is meant to pave the way to introducing genes that can improve the survival of cancer patients.'

— Dr. Steven A. Rosenberg
National Cancer Institute researcher

ROSENBERG OUTLINED his results at the annual meeting of the American Society of Clinical Oncology. A more detailed report is scheduled to be published in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Dr. Robert Young of Philadelphia's Fox Chase Cancer Center noted that while biologists have isolated genes that make potentially useful substances, transferring that kn?0s been difficult.

"The introduction of foreign genes and transferring them into human cells and putting them back into humans is an extremely important observation," Young said of Rosenberg's work. "The potential of doing this and asking therapeutic questions is now possible."

Rosenberg, a National Cancer Institute researcher, developed a cancer treatment known as adoptive immunotherapy intended to harness the body's own cancer-fighting chemicals to control the disease.

His first results, using the protein interleukin-2, attracted wide attention when they were announced five years ago. Follow-up research showed only a small minority of patients, perhaps 5 percent to 10 percent, respond with complete reversal of the disease.

The latest work is an attempt to boost the power of those natural chemicals by delivering them directly to the tumor. At the meeting May 22, Rosenberg described the results of experiments over the past year on his first five patients.

FIRST, DOCTORS removed so-called tumor-infiltrating lymphocytes from each patient. Those are cancer-hunting white blood cells that had invaded the tumors of patients dying of melanoma, a form of skin cancer.

Then, doctors isolated a gene that gives bacteria the ability to resist the antibiotic neomycin. They put that gene into a crippled virus, which in turn c arried it into the patients' white blood cells.

Finally, they multiplied the blood cells in test tubes with interleukin-2, a growth hormone, injecting 200 billion of those cells into each patient.

Because the cells carried a bacterial gene, doctors could track them through the patients' bodies. They found that the manipulated cells persisted in the blood for up to 189 days.

They performed biopsies on two patients and found the cells in the tumors, making the bacterial protein, 64 days after the injections.

All of the patients treated were expected to die within three months. Two of them responded well to the boosted levels of tumor-infiltrating cells, and the melanoma has disappeared in one completely for 10 months.

Rosenberg said the experiment worked just as his team had hoped.

"There were no suprises in this," he said. "I am looking forward to trials that hopefully will help cancer patients."

He said he and colleagues had already succeeded in inserting the gene that makes tumor necrosis factor into human blood cells. Those cells make 100 times higher levels of the protein than are ordinarily present.

Rosenberg said he hoped to win approval within a few months from several regulating committees so he can try the next step on melanoma patients.

LIFESTYLE POLICIES

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of the Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

Announcements of pageant winners will only be published for teenage pageants and older. Photographes will be published only for winners, not runner-ups. These announcements are published Thursdays. Deadline is 5 p.m. Monday.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Breast cancer, diet may have connection

Copley News Service

Previous studies have suggested that women who get breast cancer seem to have fattier diets than their healthier counterparts, and a study from the Tufts University School of Medicine may explain the connection.

After eating a low-fat, high-fiber diet, 16 of 17 premenopausal women had lower blood levels of estrogen than they had while on a standard Western diet.

The experimental diet lowered fat calories from 40 percent to 25 percent and raised dietary fiber from 10 grams to 40 grams a day.

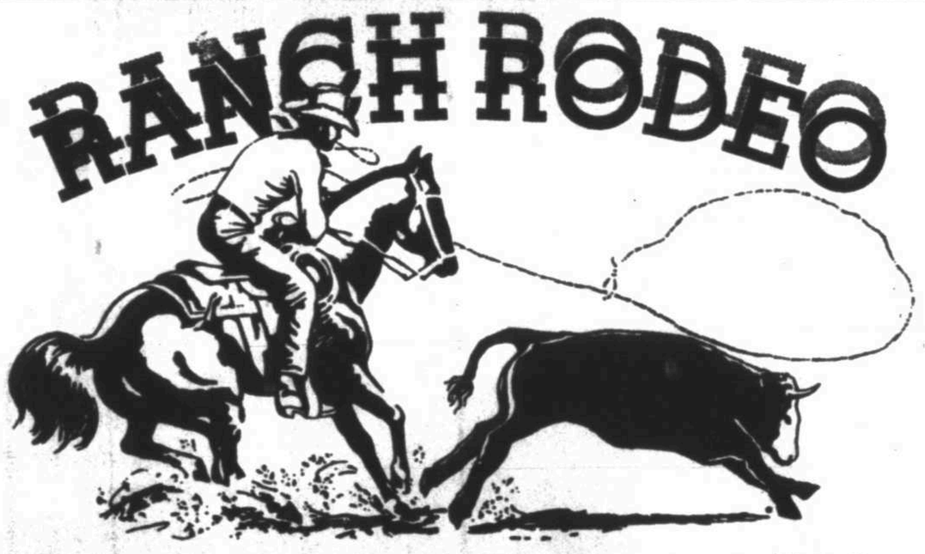

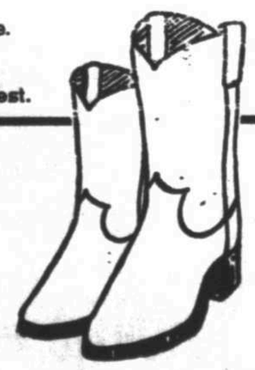

Still unanswered: Did the reduced fat, the elevated fiber or other factors affect estrogen levels?

Overweight hazardous

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Excess pounds can be hazardous. Medical research shows the death rate for people who are 25 percent overweight is 1.7 times normal. For those 40 percent overweight, mortality rates increase to 2.2 times normal.

Chocolate needed

Copley News Service

Like 90 percent of the U.S. population, you may just be low in chromium.

Although we need only 50 to 200 micrograms daily, nutritionists have found that most of us don't get nearly enough. And our bodies need the nutrient to stabilize blood sugars and insulin.

Jeffrey Fisher, author of a new book called "The Chromium Program," says chromium does more than just cancel sugar cravings. It actually helps fight body fat by building muscle and lowering cholesterol.

Pantyhose are enriched with vitamins

Copley News Service

Taking vitamins has taken on a new meaning for women in Japan. That's because the Kanebo cosmetic company has created vitamin-rich pantyhose.

Hiro Jimbo, president of Kanebo USA, says the nutritional nylons contain millions of mineral-rich seaweed and vitamin microcapsules. When the capsules come in contact with a pair of legs, they crack open and the skin sucks in the vitamins.

Jimbo says it keeps legs moisturized, smooth and younger looking.

ANNIVERSARY

Couple celebrates anniversary with trip

The couple was married June 27, 1940, in Marshfield, Mo. They have two children, Judith E. Brown of Midland and Robert M. Garst Jr. of Irving, as well as five grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

The family lived in Stafford, Kan.; Tulsa, Okla.; Tyler and Fort Worth before moving to Midland with Stanolind (now Amoco) in 1954. They lived in Midland until 1968. Garst was division landman and producing property negotiator for Amoco in Houston, and retired after 38 years. They returned to Midland in 1979, where Garst served as vice president land for Flag-Redfern Oil Company until 1986. He is managing partner of The Garst Company.

Bridegroom has more to say about 'the big day'

NEW YORK (AP) — Planning a wedding is no longer the province of the bride, no matter her age or the number of marriages. The bridegroom increasingly has a say, including what his bride will wear.

Marcy Blum, president of M.L.B. Associates, a special events and wedding planning firm, says of her clientele, "80 to 90 percent of the couples plan together." Which gives her a chance to assess their future. "I can tell early on whether a marriage will fly by how couples react to each others' needs," she says.

Judy Kuriansky, a clinical psychologist and author of "How to Love a Nice Guy," says today's couples are more creative in their efforts to make the marriage work and women are "choosing better. They won't settle for just any man. I see a trend that relationships are more stable."

Dr. Helen Fisher, an anthropologist who specializes in the evolution and future of human sexuality, also says women are the difference. "We have the chance now to make the most interesting marriages in the history of western civilization because women are well educated."

And for those that aren't so interesting?

Dinosaur Days

The Dimetrodon, which lived in this area 250 million years ago, is part of the eight robotic-replica exhibit of dinosaurs on display through Nov. 25 at Dellwood Mall. "It had a huge sail fin on its back," said Carey Behrends, deputy director of the Petroleum Museum. "The Dimetrodons were not actual dinosaurs as such — they were pre-dinosaur" and lived before the age of the dinosaurs. Behrends said that a lot of these Dimetrodons have been found in Texas and Oklahoma.

Behrends said between 70,000 and 120,000 people are expected to visit the exhibit, which opened Saturday, during the five months it is in Midland. "Dinosaurs are of major interest to a lot of people. I think all kids know something about dinosaurs. They are certainly tied into the geology of the area," he said. "Dinosaurs are a very big part of science."

The other robotic animals in the exhibit are seven dinosaurs that lived from "the mid-Permian Age (230 million years ago) through the late Cretaceous (66 million years ago)," he said. "You really cannot perceive that much time." Also included is

At Wit's End

'Wild blue yonder' gets wilder every day

By Erma Bombeck

The airlines are a great example of being concerned with things that never really happen. Here they are, worried sick about keeping the door of the cockpit locked and secure from passenger interference, and the captain of a British Airways flight is sucked out of his seat through the windshield.

Bombeck

Most of the airline rules seem reasonable enough, but when you look at the big picture, they're a drop in the bucket. A stewardess took away my needlepoint scissors on a flight once and gave them to the captain for safekeeping. "Terrorists," she explained. An hour later, she passed out steak knives to everyone on the plane.

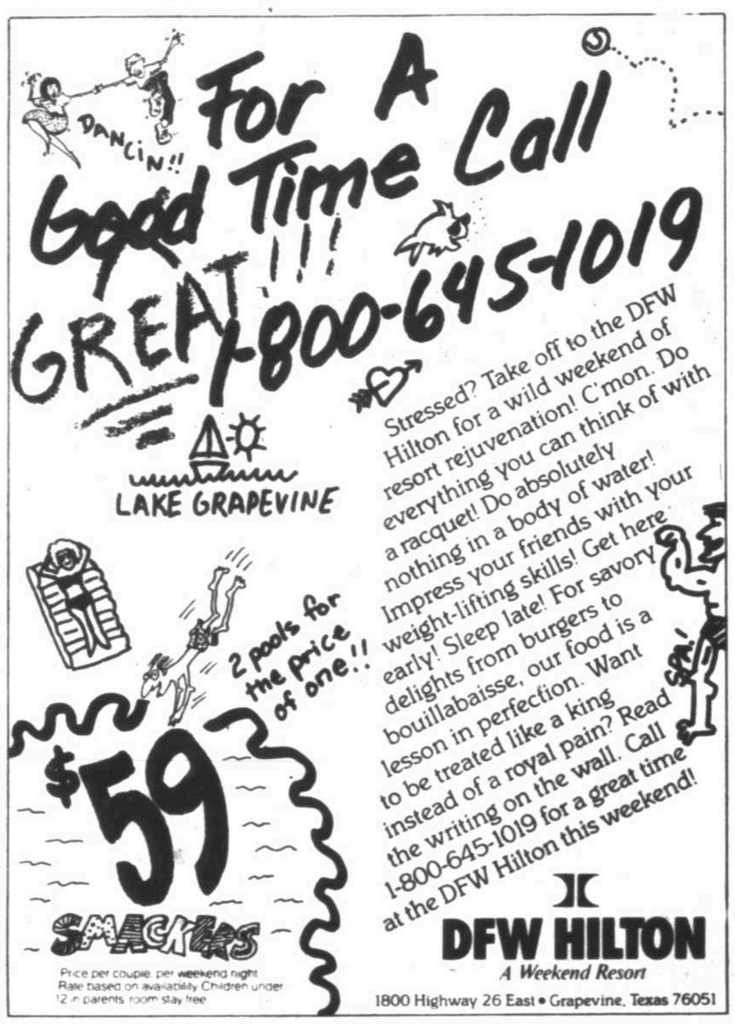

I read with some regularity about hijackers who board an aircraft with undetected bombs and guns. Yet when one of my teenage sons brought back a Masai spear as a souvenir from Africa, security came aboard, escorted him off the plane and checked the spear through with the luggage. I had to wonder, When was the last time Great Britain was attacked by spears?

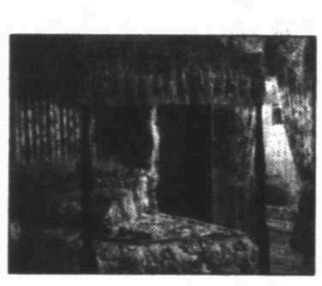

In recent years, airlines have become paranoid about anything fitting under the seat in front of you. They say in the event of a problem, your aisle must be clear. Yet no one gets excited when the person in front of you throws back his seat, reclines in your lap for three hours, and your snack tray has to be surgically removed from your stomach.

Every day I wait for a headline that reads, "Man Not Upright in Seat Injured During Landing." Or, "Woman Demands to Be Taken to Akron. Holds Knitting Needles to Head of Hostage."

The airlines are only trying to take good care of us. I know that. All I'm saying is that when I read where wings and wheels of planes fall off in midair, cracks appear in the fuselage, and a check of flotation cushions reveals they don't really flotate, I have to wonder about the priorities. Every day the "Airplane" movies seem less like comedies and more like documentaries.

DINOSAURS: Exhibit on display

a "full-scale Tyrannosaurus leg and head," he added. "The leg stands 10 feet 8 inches high. The head alone is seven-and-a-half feet long."

The dinosaur replicas in the exhibit "are about half-size of the largest of the species they are representing," Behrends said, "so they could be life-sized" in relation to some of the smaller of the species.

In any event, the animals in the display are huge. "The largest dinosaur here is 28 feet long," Behrends said. "That's a good-sized animal."

The dinosaurs ruled the Earth millions of years ago, long before the first humans arrived and any history was recorded, so re-creating the animals takes a lot of hard work, painstaking research and imagination.

Dinamation International Corporation from California, the creative force behind the dinosaur exhibit, uses up-to-date technology to model the robotic dinosaurs after the real dinosaurs that have been extinct for millions of years.

ACCORDING TO an article in Smithsonian magazine, Chris Mays, president of the company, founded Dinamation International in 1982 after viewing robotized dinosaurs in Japan.

"The dinosaurs (built by Dinamation International), however, are not the same as the original Japanese prototypes," the article continued. "Their appearance is far truer to the scientific facts and they are far more sophisticated in their mechanics. ..."

Dinamation International's dinosaurs, in fact, are designed according to the most current scientific teachings, the magazine article said. "Creation starts with the paleontologists who decipher the fossilized archives of the eons. Paleontology is a sort of forensic biology and it has come of age in the past 20 years. With an ever-growing catalog of devices and methods, these students of the dead are conjuring up more and more skin and flesh, and placing it back onto the bones of ancient creatures."

Questions these scientists must answer in order to build a truly life-like robotic dinosaur, include: what did the animals eat, how did they give birth to their young, how much did they weigh, how did their bones and muscles move, and many others.

— Carey Behrends, deputy director Petroleum Museum

"To meet these standards," continued the article, "Dinamation retains a Who's Who of paleontology. The board of advisers lists such luminaries as Bob Bakker, adjunct curator of paleontology at the University of Colorado; Harley J. Armstrong, curator of paleontology at the Museum of Western Colorado; and George L. Callison, professor of biology at California State University Long Beach. If they are not enough, the company brings in whatever other experts are needed. Callison, a specialist on small dinosaurs, is also Dinamation's science adviser and thus has continuous influence as the creatures emerge from the drawing board, the machine shop, the sculpting studio and the molding area."

AFTER MONTHS of research, many more months are spent by scientists, artists, engineers and technicians who bring the animals to life.

After the long process of building a dinosaur, the magazine article continued, "Then comes the matter of programming the creature's actions, including the sounds it will make: they are whatever Homo sapiens can rationalize, for fossils are mute. The programmer takes the snarls, roars, coughs and yowls of today's tigers, anteaters, alligators and so on, runs them through a digital sound system, and lo, the utterings of dinosaurs."

The dinosaurs, including those in the Petroleum Museum's exhibit at Dellwood Mall, represent some of the most ancient of creatures, but are powered by some of the most modern techniques, including electronically controlled movements and urethane foam "skin."

The exhibit in Midland, which, Behrends said, is a traveling exhibit, is part of Dinamation International's network of such exhibits, some of which "have traveled to the Smithsonian ..."

Other cities in Texas that have hosted these exhibits include Dallas, San Antonio, Corpus Christi, Houston and other communities in West Texas, according to Behrends.

"They have different animals going around the country. Depending on how much space and material you want to put in with it (the exhibit), adds up to what the final exhibit will be," Behrends said. "We're adding mountains, special lighting, that will add to the effect of the final display."

THE EXHIBIT "starts with a cutaway Tyrannosaurus Rex out in the front lobby where people can work with joy sticks and make the animal move," Behrends said.

In addition to the dinosaurs, the exhibit includes a dig-a-fossil box, rubbings, puzzles and other hands-on displays. In presenting DinoSafari, the Petroleum Museum is being assisted by First City Texas in Midland, the Midland Reporter-Telegram, the Odessa American and KMID-TV.

Tickets are $4 for adults, $3.50 for seniors 65 and older; and $3 for children aged 3-11. "Special group rates are available, and discount tickets are available," Behrends said.

"Net proceeds will be matched by an anonymous Texas-based donor," Behrends said.

For information on reduced rates, call 687-6868. Coupons are available at participating Taco Villas and Furr's Supermarkets.

The exhibit is open 10 a.m.-6 p.m. Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays; 10 a.m.-8 p.m. Thursdays; and 1-6 p.m. Sundays. "It's closed Mondays and Tuesdays; except the week of the Fourth of July, we will be open the full week," Behrends said.

Dinosaur exhibit at Smithsonian breaks tradition

N.Y. Times News Service

One of the reasons a visit to the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., is so popular is that it's (almost always) free. But the institution's Museum of Natural History is breaking protocol.

They will charge admission for a special exhibit of animated dinosaurs that runs through Sept. 3. But, this exhibit is a special case.

"They roar," said Tom Harney, public-information officer for the museum. And they move and make other sounds, which is why it was an expensive undertaking that the museum couldn't exhibit without charging admission, he said. "It's one-half million or $1 million. All the bills aren't in yet."

The display, by Dinamation International Inc. of San Juan Capistrano, Calif., features 18 prehistoric animals and takes visitors on a chronological journey from the beginning of dinosaurs to their extinction. "You see the dinosaurs in the environments they lived in in these various periods," Harney said.

Admission is $4 for adults, $2 for children under 12. Toddlers under 3 get in free. There are two days each month when no admission is charged, the second and fourth Tuesdays. Seniors pay $3. For advance tickets, call (800) 448-9009.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: For four years, I was in love with a married man. He's very handsome, well-to-do and a wonderful lover. I was single, and still am. We had to sneak around to see each other because if his wife caught him, she'd take him to the cleaners. Their marriage was in bad shape when I met him, so it's not as though I broke up his home. I can't count the times he moved out after a fight. But he always went back — "money" or "the kids" were his reasons.

Well, she finally gave him a divorce. I thought, "Hooray, now we don't have to sneak around anymore." Wrong! He still says it's not wise for us to be seen together in public.

Why? He's not married anymore. Abby, I can't understand this. He doesn't give me a reason; he says, "It's better if we're not seen together in public."

When I mention marriage, he says, "It's too soon." Abby, I love him and have never looked at another man since he came into my life.

What would you do if you were in my shoes? — BAFFLED IN BALTIMORE

DEAR BAFFLED: I'd run like the devil was after me — then I'd start to wonder who the other woman was.

DEAR ABBY: Why do the news media report that someone is "elderly," when age has absolutely nothing to do with the news item? Example:

On television: "Hotel fire in Miami claimed many lives. Most were elderly."

In the newspaper: "A house at such-and-such an address is on display for its artistic decorations. It is owned by an elderly woman."

Abby, are elderly people different or less valued than other humans? Talk about discrimination! Elderly people pay taxes, spend money to keep the economy going and make doctors richer. So, does being elderly make them less of a citizen?

I suggest that the media just report the news and leave out the word "elderly." What do you think? — OFFENDED

DEAR OFFENDED: Sorry you're offended; there's no need to be. Describing someone as "elderly" is not intended as an insult or put-down. It merely gives the reader more information about the person referred to in the news item. And in some cases, were it not for the age, it wouldn't be newsworthy. Example: "15-year-old girl to wed elderly man." The story went on to say that the groom was 78 years old. A news item simply stating that a 15-year-old girl was getting married would not have been newsworthy.

DEAR ABBY: I am a young man about to get married for a second time. (My first wife and I were divorced.)

My question: Can I use the same wedding ring twice? The ring belonged to my mother, who passed away. My father gave it to me, and I used it for my first marriage. After the divorce, she gave it back to me.

My ex-wife and my fiance are good friends. Please advise. — WEDDING RING

DEAR WEDDING RING: It's more than just a wedding "ring" — it's a family heirloom. Tell your fiance the history of the ring, and ask her how she feels about it. The decision should be hers.

Ancient Marrakech combination of old, new

By Philip Sousa
Copley News Service

MARRAKECH, Morocco — You don't just visit here, you feel the place with every sense.

Marrakech's centuries-old Djemaa el-Fna looms as the country's most extraordinary market square, while the venerable La Mamounia ranks as the poshest hotel in Africa. Worlds apart in every other respect, the market and hotel are just a few blocks apart within the pink-hued 12th century stone walls girding the original town.

Long a gateway to the Sahara, Marrakech sits in a fertile valley, the Atlas Mountain range as a backdrop. The city's population exceeds half a million.

West of the medina or old quarter, which dates back to 1062 and is a maze of narrow streets and alleyways, the Ville Nouvelle, with its wide avenues and gleaming buildings, is as modern as its designation implies.

Marrakech, a name derived from the Berber word for swift market, is one of Morocco's four Imperial Cities, so designated because at one point in history each served as a capital of this North African kingdom with more than 25 million inhabitants.

The others are sparkling and modern Rabat, today's administrative center and thus the official residence of King Hassan II; historic Meknes, near the Roman town of Volubilis, where King Idriss II founded the first independent Moroccan kingdom in 786 to 828; and ninth century Fez, oldest of the foursome and to this day the country's most important intellectual, cultural and religious hub.

FOR MOST foreigners, Marrakech is the best place to explore and savor the contrasts of Morocco.

I had arrived from Europe late in the day, the perfect time to make the transition from the jet age to the ancient heart of town.

Check-in at Hotel de la Mamounia was a blur of exotic elegance and swift service. My palatial room was a pleasing mix of art deco furnishings and such conveniences as a modern marble bath, a minibar and a 14-channel color television.

Tall doors opened onto a small balcony. At that late hour, a huge moon showed rows of blossoming trees in the hotel's 17 acres of tropical gardens. A few hundred yards away, looming like a black stage prop, stood the minaret of the Koutoubia Mosque, the city's tallest and most famous landmark.

Exploring was next on my agenda.

AT THE hotel's regal entrance, where intricately decorated slender columns support a large fan-shaped glass overhang, the "Bonjour, Monsieur!" greeting of a doorman, who was clad in a smart old-warrior's white tunic, served as a reminder that for the better half of this century much of Morocco was a French protectorate.

Along the way, other men of various ages materialized. In several languages, some invited me to use their carriages. All said they were guides. But with words I could not understand, the fellow who had first approached me sent them all away.

The equivalent of three or so blocks away, we were alone on a dirt and stone pathway leading to the Koutoubia Mosque. I decided to give him a try.

I asked him how much he charged to guide tourists.

"Don't worry about money now," he said. "But if you have American cigarettes, I'd very much like to have one."

I KNEW my way around, or so I thought. And I also knew that it was best to get an official guide through the local tourist office, rather than choose one of the folks who bedevil tourists throughout most of the kingdom.

Swarms of so-called guides are as much a Moroccan staple as tipping and mosques closed to non-Moslems.

But a good guide is mandatory when visiting the old core of any of this country's cities and towns, the medina.

So Aziz had a client.

"I wish I could take you to the top," he said, pointing to the three golden spheres atop the Koutoubia's minaret. "If you were Moslem, you could climb to the top and see the whole city."

Aziz knew his history.

The Koutoubia was built in 1158 during the reign of the Almohads dynasty, he said, adding that many of the features of the mosque's towering minaret, such as the decorative panels on each of its four sides, have inspired those in Moslem temples throughout Morocco.

Set back from the street on a field of salmon-hued stones with patches of bare soil of a similar color, the structure seemed to float in a quiet world of its own. Yet we were within sight of the bustling Djemaa el-Fna square.

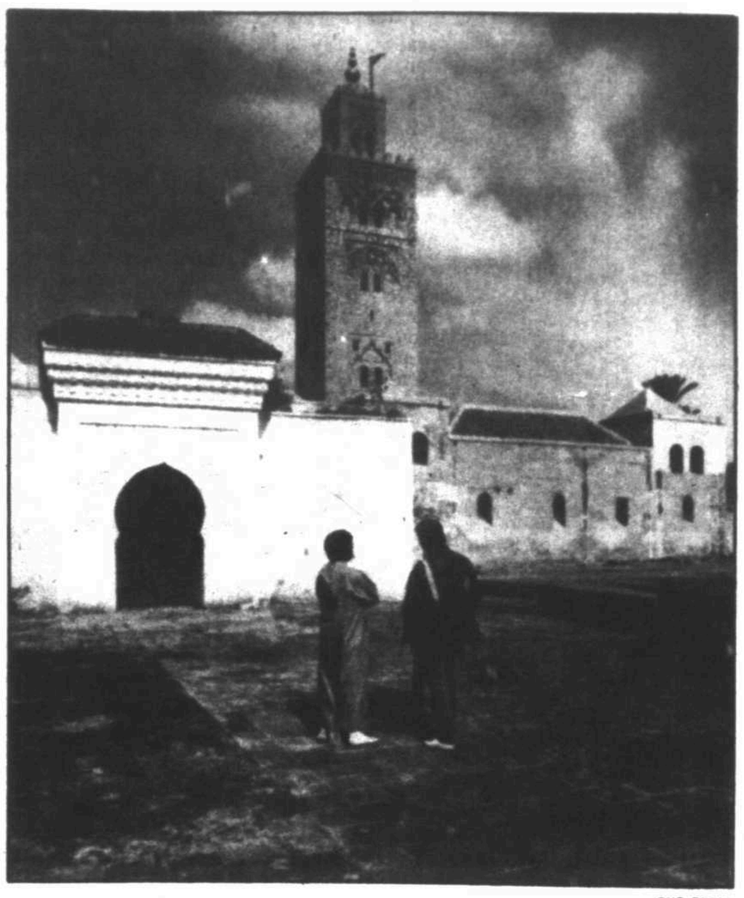

AZIZ SUGGESTED a swing around Djemaa el-Fna. But I wanted to do that later on my own. I asked him to take me instead to the nearby medina, where on a previous visit I had been helplessly lost several times.

This is the biggest traditional market or souk in the country.

"The quality here is also the best," Aziz said as we entered the maze of twisting alleyways filled with crafts and goods.

Again, he was accurate.

Just off Djemaa el-Fna, whose shape is anything but square, we meandered slowly by the potters' souk. But soon we were in a river of humanity, a slow-moving but strong current of men, women and children — lots of children — which at times would sweep us along. Those around us included folks from tribes in the hinterlands, affluent-looking Arabs in flowing robes, cloaked sages, sunburned tourists and young touts.

CNS Photo

A towering minaret with decorative panels that have inspired those found in Moslem temples throughout Morocco distinguishes Marrakech's 12th-century Koutoubia Mosque.

Because the medina is one of Marrakech's major attractions, it is on every tourist's itinerary and thus it is a major gathering place of guides and hustlers. Several approached me, but a few quick words from Aziz made them vanish.

On we walked by the textile souk; the sections for wool dyers, jewelers, basket weavers and carpenters; and the odorous domain of the leather workers. Especially exotic was the spice souk opposite the carpet market on tiny Rahba Kadima square.

Several common threads course through this medina:

Crowding the narrow lanes that link the various souks, little shops sell everything from traditional leather slippers with toes pointed upward to gem-studded scabbards and expertly carved miniature chess sets.

NO DOUBT sensing I was close to sensory overload, Aziz guided me out of the area, past the 16th century Medersa ben Youssef, once the largest theological institution in the kingdom, and the adjacent Ali ben Youssef Mosque, built 400 years earlier than the school.

The agreed-upon tour over, I offered Aziz some money.

"Thank you, but no," he said. "We will be together again."

With a smile, he disappeared before I could utter a word.

Stepping into my stately, orderly and peaceful hotel was like returning from another era.

Dinner that night was at El Bahja, one of the Hotel de la Mamounia's three restaurants. In a setting out of the Arabian Nights, this restaurant specializes in native dishes. My choices included harira, a thick soup with lentils, mutton, veal, onions, tomatoes and lemon; couscous, a blend of spicy semolina and a sauce of meat and vegetables cooked over broth; and pastilla, flaky pastry filled with poultry, almonds, saffron and sugar.

Another dining option in the hotel is Caleche, a handsome grill room facing the poolside patio. Instead of booths it has beautifully refurbished former carriages fitted with tables. The hotel's other restaurant is Gastronomique, an elegant room devoted to gourmet French cuisine.

AS I HAD expected, Aziz was waiting for me on the sidewalk the next morning.

We spent time at the Ville Nouvelle, with its modern shops and trendy boutiques, but devoted most of the day to Dar Said Palace, home of the very worthwhile Museum of Moroccan Arts; the Saadian Tombs, the resting place of more than 60 rulers from that dynasty; and several other former royal residences in and around Marrakech.

The El-Badi Palace, though mostly in ruins, is the most famous. It was built in the 16th century by the Saadian rulers, who used imported marble and precious materials from many lands.

Our last excursion over, it was time for Aziz and me to part ways.

He thanked me with a smile, but would not accept any money.

"A cigarette and the promise that you will come back is all I want," he said.

He got both.

IF YOU GO

■ Location: Morocco is on the northwestern tip of Africa, with shores on both the Atlantic Ocean and the Mediterranean Sea; it borders Algeria on the east and Mauritania on the south.

■ Surface area: 274,460 square miles, or slightly larger than Texas.

■ Access: The main international air gateway is Casablanca. Royal Air Maroc, the national carrier, has non-stop service from New York to "Casa" — as residents call their city — twice weekly; a third flight started in late June. There is also direct service from Paris, London and other European cities to such popular Moroccan destinations as Marrakech, Agadir and Rabat.

■ Entry formalities: American and Canadian citizens must have a valid passport, but no visa or vaccinations are required for stays of up to three months.

■ Currency: The monetary unit is the dirham, which comes in 5, 10, 50 and 100 bills and coins of 1 to 5. Because regulations prohibit the import or export of dirhams, all exchange transactions must be done within the kingdom at a bank or hotel. At the time of this writing the exchange was approximately 7 dirhams to one U.S. dollar. Exchange rates are pretty uniform throughout the country.

■ Credit cards: All major credit cards are accepted in the major hotels and in many stores. However, banks do not make cash advances against credit cards; too, cash and bargaining are the rule in the souks or markets and in the smaller shops.

■ Sightseeing: When exploring, it is best to do so with the help of a legitimate tour guide arranged for through your hotel, the local branch of the Moroccan National Tourist Office or the syndicat d'initiative, semiprivate tourism organizations in all major towns.

■ Best value: Package holidays available through Air France, Royal Air Maroc and other airlines offer the best value and are the most convenient — especially on a first visit to the country. American tour operators with experience in Moroccan holidays include Abercrombie & Kent, Flag Tours and Maupintour.

BUSINESS DIGEST

'Green' products

NEW YORK -- American consumers may say they are concerned about pollution, but most won't put their money where their mouths are -- by paying more to buy environmentally sensitive or "green" products, according to leading demographers and marketers.

"Only a small minority of Americans have it as a top-of-mind (consumer) issue," said Judith Langer, president of Langer Associates Inc., a New York research organization.

Even so, there is a sense among Langer and her colleagues that environmentalism will increasingly become an issue that business will need to address.

"The whole issue of environmentalism is going to be the issue of business of the '90s," said Gregory Schmid, senior fellow, Institute of the Future of Menlo Park, Calif., which studies issues and trends.

Life saver holes

HOLLAND, Mich. (AP) — The folks at Life Savers have pulled a new product out of the air. They announced plans Tuesday for nationwide marketing of Life Savers Holes.

"Everybody thinks they're really the hole from Life Savers, but they're not. They're made to be a hole," said Richard Whittington, manager of the Planters-LifeSavers Co. plant here.

It is the only plant in the United States that makes Life Savers and has been producing the hole-shaped candy for test marketing since late last year. Regular Life Savers, which have been around since 1912, are molded around a rod, eliminating the need to punch out the trademark hole in the middle.

The pellet candies will be sold beginning in mid-November in plastic packages that look like rolls of Life Savers, but with a flip top.

The six varieties: the traditional Five Flavor, Sunshine Fruits, Butter Rum, Pep-O-Mint, Wint-O-Green and Spear-O-Mint. The suggested retail price is 50 cents, company officials said Tuesday.

The company, an affiliate of RJR Nabisco Inc., says the candies, especially the mint varieties, are designed to compete with Tic-Tacs and Sugarfree Certs.

Elcor's rain

Elcor Corp. says heavy rains in the Southwest have temporarily reduced roofing installations resulting in a lower level of sales for the company, and a loss of 10 cents per share. For the first nine months, ending March 31, Elcor, formerly based in Midland, reported net income of $3.6 million or 51 cents per share.

Postal critic

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service has quit advertising in a U.S. Chamber of Commerce publication which criticized its proposed postage increase.

A $21,000 full-page ad was pulled from the June issue of the "Nation's Business" magazine, and the agency said this week that it has suspended plans to advertise in future issues.

"We are outraged at the Postal Service's attempts to gag its critics," Tracy Schreft, director of the chamber's Small Business Center said in an interview Wednesday. "But we won't back down."

Credit cards can be path to destruction

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a three part series covering debt relief. In this segment writer Sue Gutierrez tells the story of how one couple became hopelessly in debt. Next week, she reveals how credit counseling was able to rescue them. Part three covers bankruptcy.

By Sue Gutierrez
Staff Writer

Steve and Shelly were like many American couples enthusiastically pursuing the American dream. They had two college degrees, two jobs with growth potential and plenty of high hopes for the future.

But somewhere along the line the hopes of Steve and Shelly (not their real names) were crushed by mounting credit card expenses, loss of a job and angry bill collectors. "Getting a harassment call at 7:00 am doesn't get your day off to a good start," Steve says.

They say their purchases were fueled by wants and impulse buying rather than needs. "They were never planned purchases, usually spur of the moment buying," Steve says.

With an annual income of over $45,000 their income supported their wants for awhile. "We were better off when we were first married and I was a teacher making only $600 a month. We had no credit cards and we knew we couldn't spend money because we didn't have it. Even then we managed to put $1000 into a savings account," he says.

But after acquiring that first gas charge card the others came easily. "It was like the flood gates opened," he says. With two Sears cards, an American Express card, Dillards, Penneys, Discover, Montgomery Ward's, a Visa card and eight gas cards Steve and Shelly were able to rack up well over $12,000 in credit card bills alone.

"In my job I travel a lot, that's why I felt like we needed so many gas cards. I might drive 300 miles in one day, so I need money for travel," he says. Steve noted that the automated teller machines also became silent enemies, spitting out money so often and easily that it was hard to keep track.

The couple says the impulse purchases included such necessities as tools, appliances and furniture. "When I went to the store to buy a router bit, it couldn't be a steel bit, it had to be a carbide bit, which lasts longer, but costs three or four times more. If I couldn't find a tool in the garage I'd just go buy another one," Steve says.

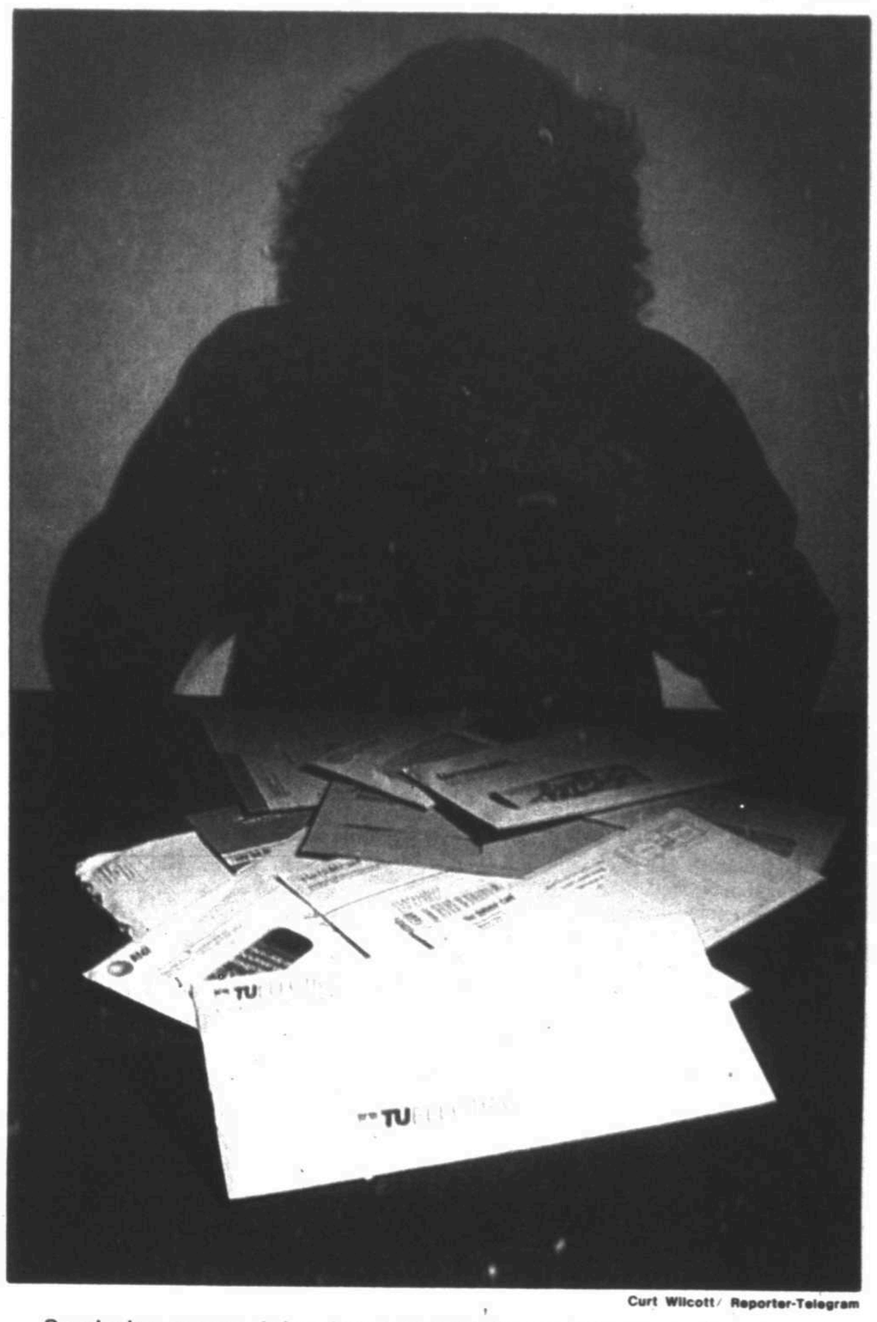

"For awhile all we were able to pay was the interest on the bills, but that didn't stop the phone calls. They don't care what your problems are and you try to tell them that they're not the only ones that want their money," he says.

The couple noted that one credit card was set aside with a zero balance to be used as back-up identification. "The only bill we made sure we paid on time was the mortgage payment. We didn't want to lose the house," he says.

As Steve related the story of their near downfall he admits that he was the root of the problem. "We have two kids, have been married for ten years and I guess when it came to finances we just didn't communicate. She did the books and I never even opened the bills. I just wasn't interested and I made most all of the purchases," Steve says.

"I was never taught financial responcibility. My father was in the military and to this day I couldn't tell you how much

Pondering a mountain of unpaid bills is monthly agony for many families who sometimes get into debt over their head.

Church expansions boosting economy

■ To accomodate growing congregataions, a number of churches have recently begun or completed expansion projects, giving an economic boost to local contractors.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

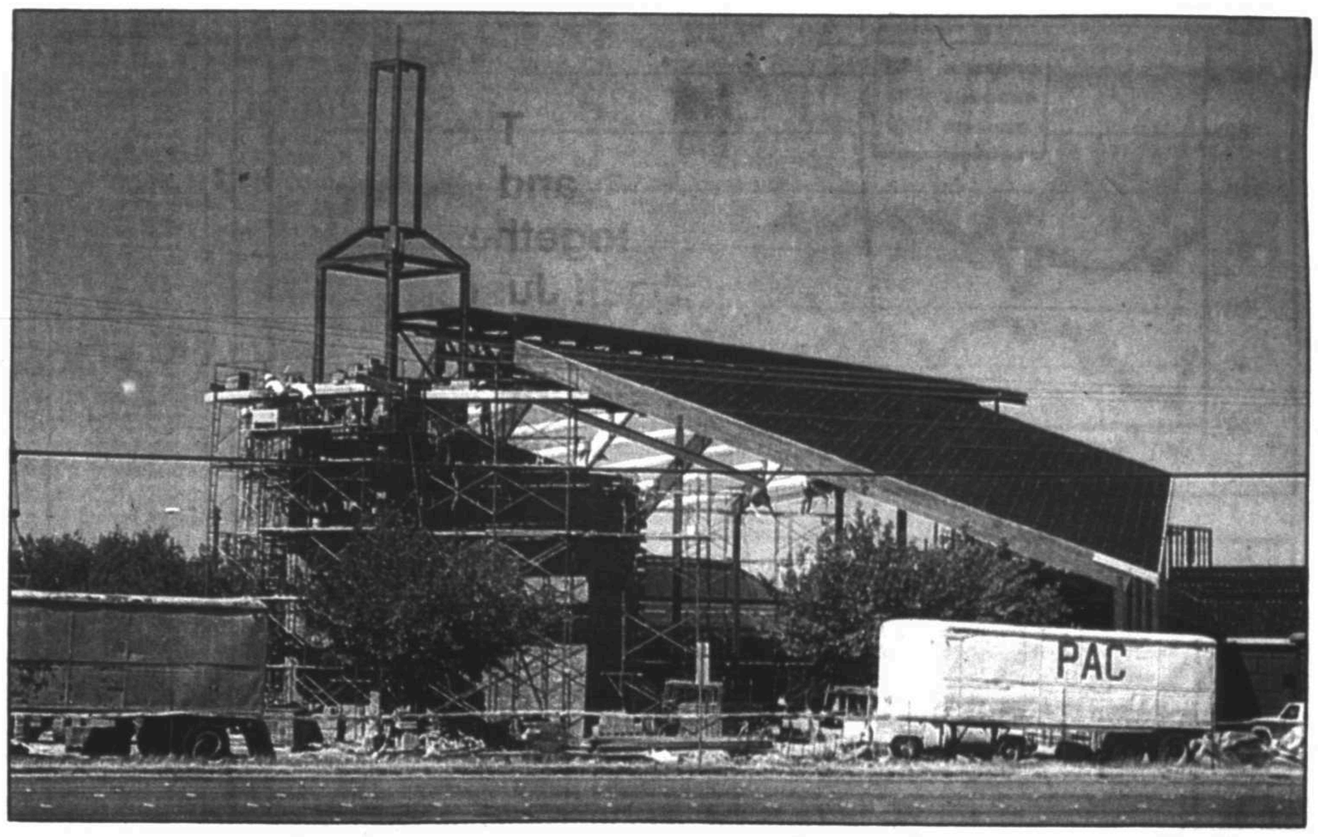

In addition to the spiritual boost Midland churches give their members, several churches are giving an economic boost to some building contractors.

Since November 1989, approximately $4 million in building permits for church renovations have been taken out. These permits range from simple electrical work to retaining walls to the building of a new sanctuary or education building.

Bob Poer, administrator for the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity, observed that, to him, it seemed every church was having some work done. His church recently spent $375,000 to build a new multi-purpose education building. He said the expansion was done because of an increase in membership, especially among those under age 13.

One of the largest projects, which got underway a month ago, is a new sanctuary and education building for First Presbyterian Church, located at 800 W.

Church expansion projects, such as this $1.2 million expansion at Trinity Presbyterian, 2800 Louisiana, have been a boost to local construction companies during a construction slowdown.

Young entrepreneurs serious about yogurt

DALLAS (AP) — Julie and Bill Brice parlayed $10,000 and a couple of little stores into a nationwide frozen yogurt chain in 12 years with the help of their father and lots of determination.

In 1978, the former Southern Methodist University students came up with the improbable name of "I Can't Believe It's Yogurt!" and sank $10,000 from their college funds into the yogurt business.

Now it's paying off in sweet dividends.

Julie is the president and chief executive officer of I Can't Believe It's Yogurt! Ltd., while Bill works as chairman and CEO of Brice Foods Inc., which has its headquarters in the Dallas suburb of Carrollton.

From their first two stores just north of downtown Dallas near SMU, the business has grown to 362 stores in 40 states. There also are some 50 yogurt dispensing machines at supermarkets, hospitals, schools and government cafeterias.

Recently, 16 stores opened in Taiwan, and test marketing has begun in the United Kingdom. The Brices hope to open more stores in Europe and Asia.

The Brice Foods plant daily turns out 25,000 gallons of frozen yogurt in 30 flavors, including sugar-free and nonfat yogurts.

American Airlines stocks Brice yogurt desserts on many of its longer flights, and if the Brices have their way, the Dallas Zoo soon may be carrying the delight.

Some say the Brices' tenacity and attention to quality has made the business an international, much-copied success. But their father gave them their first taste of the business world.

■ RIG COUNTS MIXED as the Permian Basin count fall and the U.S. count rises.

Baker Hughes Inc. reports that the U.S. rig count jumped 22 to 1,021, its second consecutive increase.

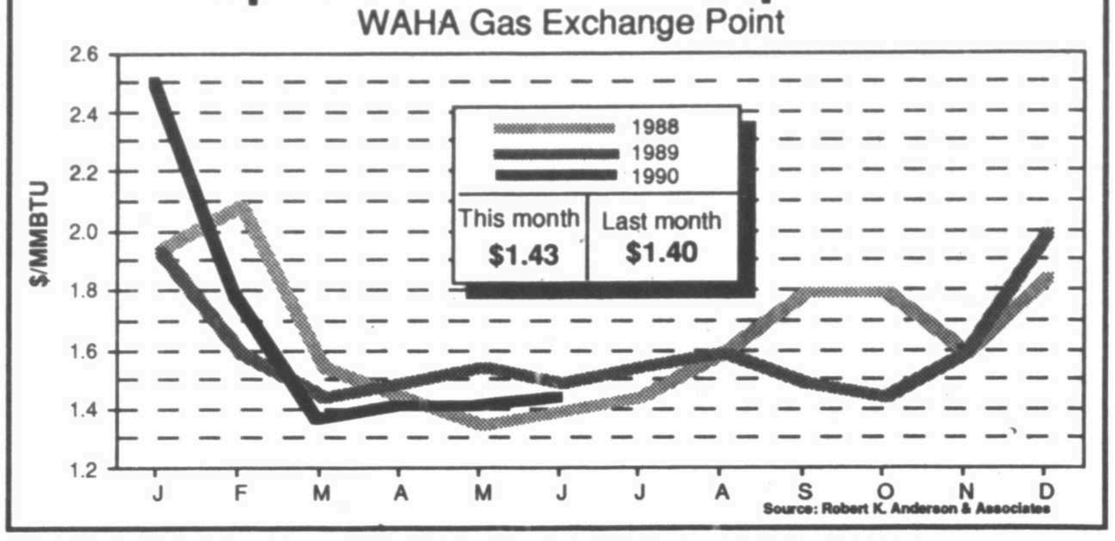

At the same time, the Permian Basin count fell five to 128 after rising four the previous week.

Among major oil-producing states, Louisiana showed the biggest gain for the week, adding 16 rigs, followed by Texas, which added 10 rigs. Other states posting gains; Ohio, Pennsylvania, Wyoming, Michigan.

Zapata plans offshore rig sale

HOUSTON (AP) — Zapata Corp. officials said the Houston-based company plans to sell its entire offshore drilling fleet to stave off bankruptcy proceedings.

Zapata Chairman R.C. Lassiter told shareholders attending the corporation's annual meeting Tuesday the proposed sale of the company's 12 rigs is "a watershed event" prompted by the continued offshore drilling slump.

"It would mean leaving the business that gave the company its start," Lassiter said. "Would we be making a mistake to get out of the drilling business at this point? For Zapata, the answer is no, because I believe the recovery is going to take longer than Zapata can wait."

Zapata's announcement came the same day President Bush, who co-founded Zapata in the early 1950s, announced he is closing much of the East and West coasts to additional offshore oil exploration. Bush no longer has an interest in the company.

Company officials declined to with whom they are negotiating on the sale, but several industry sources said the most attractive bid is from a Norwegian group offering Zapata about $310 million and a three-year contract to continue operating the rigs. The group is believed to be led by Norwegian investment syndicator Christian Kongli and the Fearnley Group, an Oslo investment banking firm.

The fleet includes five jack-up rigs — all built since 1981 — that can operate in water depths of 180 to 300 feet.

It also has six semisubmersibles built between 1974 and 1977 capable of working in water depths of 1,500 to 2,000 feet. The other rig, built in 1984, is capable of operating in arctic environments.

Venezuela Corp. seeks billions of foreign dollars

HOUSTON (AP) — Venezuela is seeking billions of dollars in foreign investment funds to expand its energy industry through 1995, the nation's top energy officials said.

Venezuela, a major South American producer and influential OPEC exporter, hopes to increase its oil production capacity from less than 3 million barrels a day currently to 3.5 million by 1995 and 4 million by 2000, Guevara said.

Venezuela hopes to obtain about $5 billion of the $20 billion it expects to spend on the expansion from the United States and other foreign investors, he said.

Lubbock father, son find success in futures investing

By Ray Westbrook

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Bill Kingsbery of Lubbock was looking for a liquid investment instrument for the clients of his financial counseling firm when he heard of a successful futures venture.

It proved to be so successful he adopted the field as his own.

Kingsbery and his son, Ted, have one of the nation's largest private futures funds operations, the company they organized under the name of FutureFund.

"In 1978 I met a man who managed futures, and I became an investor in one of his managed futures accounts," Kingsbery recalls. "He did such a good job with that, I thought this could be the instrument that I was looking for."

Kingsbery said he and his son had been looking for a way to decrease the risk in managed futures.

"So, we started investigating private futures funds where the investors could pool their money and have their money traded by a professional trader who had a track record of success," he said.

"Since then we have raised about $8 million in cash, and that has grown to nearly $21 million now," Kingsbery said, adding that it has provided $12 million in profits to investors, 95 percent of whom are from the Lubbock area.

Ted Kingsbery explained that a futures fund is similar to a stock mutual fund, except that professional managers or professional traders trade futures instead of stock.

The younger Kingsbery said the benefit of pooling money into one fund comes from the access it provides to the best traders.

"They won't trade small amounts of money," he said. "Most of our traders have a $1 million minimum. Unless we give them $1 million (to work with), they just won't trade our account."

He said, "We report to the investors on the performance, and they can add or withdraw from their account."

Futures were initially formed to serve farmers but have grown to include financial "commodities," or contracts, he said.

"The concept works in, for example, international currencies," Kingsbery said. "If you are doing a deal with Japan and you have to pay them in three months in yen, then you can lock in the rate of the yen-dollar rate right now to pay them in three months using the futures market."

He said, "The concept is the same. It is for hedging any exposure you have in the future."

About 54 percent of all futures trading is now in the form of financial contracts, making up a greater proportion than agricultural commodities, according to the financial advisers.

The company started its first fund in November 1981. "Our first funds were $500,000. Now the last funds we have been raising have been basically $1 million funds," Bill Kingsbery said

"Last year we realized — since all our traders are doing international work — that this is becoming very rapidly a global economy," he said.

That aspect is moving the company into the international market arena.

According to Kingsbery, Lubbock clients have been benefiting from trading "in this globalization of the financial world."

Kingsbery said, "We have made a lot of our profits this year with our Liberty Global Fund in London, Paris and Tokyo markets. It gives people in Lubbock access to the London, Paris and Tokyo exchanges."

According to Kingsbery, futures trading is unique because it offers potential for profit whether prices are going up or down. "Therefore, investors can make money in times of inflation or deflation," and "especially in volatile times."

Kingsbery said, "Most people don't realize that managed futures have outperformed all of the Dow Jones and outperformed stocks and bonds together."

AP Laserphoto

An industry chart shows these average annual rates of return for futures in the 1980s: 73.1 percent in 1980; 17.8 percent in 1981; 27.7 percent in 1982; 6.0 percent in 1983; 21.4 percent in 1984; 21.3 percent in 1985; 6.3 percent in 1986; 52.9 percent in 1987; 9.4 percent in 1988; and minus 1.1 percent in 1989.

Reflecting on reasons for the growth in the Lubbock company, Kingsbery said, "Ted and I complement each other. I have the experience of being in the investment business so long (30 years), and he has given his time to the national organizations in this new industry."

Ted Kingsbery has served as a director of the National Futures Association.

Penney's upgraded image attracting shoppers

N.Y. Times News Service

Corinne Adams buys sheets and towels at JC Penney, but she favors Ann Taylor and Saks Fifth Avenue for her own clothes. "I don't expect to find brands at Penney," she said.

This is an all-too-familiar — but changing — story for Penney. Despite a push in the 1980s to add trendy clothing, modernize stores and eliminate hard lines such as hardware and paint, the nation's fourth-largest retailer continues to fight its image as a frumpy purveyor of underwear, pantyhose and curtains.

When it comes to fashion, some shoppers still view Penney as more akin to Sears, Roebuck & Co. than to more fashionable department stores such as Macy's and speciality chains such as the Limited.

But Penney, which operates the nation's second largest catalog business and a cable TV home shopping network, is also making fashion strides in its stores. It still lacks many of the most popular brand names, such as Liz Claiborne clothing and Estee Lauder cosmetics. In recent months, however, it has nabbed Henry Grethel, Vanity Fair, Warner, Palm Beach and Oshkosh B'Gosh and several other national brands.

An unexpected ally for Penney has been the financial uncertainty facing some of the nation's department store operators. With Federated Department Stores Inc. reorganizing in bankruptcy court, and R.H. Macy & Co. Inc. struggling with its huge debt, Penney's strong balance sheet and improving image has lured some vendors who previously wouldn't sell to the Dallas-based chain.

"What I am endeavoring to do is to sell in the better specialty stores and the better department stores where my name will not be promoted with continual sales," said New York designer Henry Grethel.

Last winter, he said, he was disturbed when his menswear was marked down heavily by debt-laden chains trying to boost sales. He said Penney has assured him that won't happen in its stores.

But the Grethel dress shirts and a comparable Penney brand, called Stafford Executive, are both priced at about $30 each. The retailer explained that the Grethel name seeks to attract label-conscious shoppers who hadn't patronized Penney, while the private label caters to its existing customers.

"We think that Penney, with their commitment to selling better merchandise not on a promotional basis, is positioning itself to be a force in the department store business," Grethel said.

Executives of Palm Beach Tailored Clothing Co., Vanity Fair Lingerie and Warnaco Intimate Apparel Group agree, saying Penney's improved image among shoppers prompted them to begin selling to the chain.

"We found that the perception (among consumers) was moving quickly toward Penney as a department store," said Peter J. Velardi, Vanity Fair's chief executive officer. "They don't think of Penney as a chain store anymore."

That's certainly the story Penney executives are telling potential vendors and financial analysts who follow the company's stock. They say Penney, which has more than 1,300 stores, mostly in malls, is well on the way to becoming the first "National Department Store."

The "department store" identity separates Penney from Sears, the nation's largest retailer, which is considered by analysts to be a general merchandise chain because it offers a broader selection of merchandise, including hardware and lawn and garden products.

Penney executives say their target shopper is the middle- to upper-middle-income woman who already shops in Penney for home furnishings and basic clothing for herself and her family.

But unfortunately for Penney, this same shopper often wants fashionable name brands that the chain doesn't carry. And this, obviously, cuts into potential sales for Penney.

Retail analysts said adding more brands is essential to Penney's overall financial health.

Still, it trails other department store chains in sales per square foot, a crucial measure of retail productivity.

he made. Money issues were not discussed," he says.

Shelly, on the other hand, notes that as a child her mother was in charge of the bill paying and had no qualms about asking her to help. "My job was to read the bills off to my mother, so I knew how much my father made and what our expenses were," she says.

Although many of their purchases were household related Shelly says they don't have a house full of expensive furniture. "Our son has a nice new dresser, but our daughter has to put her things in a card board box. We couldn't just go to a garage sale and buy used bedroom furniture for the kids, because you have to pay with cash and we just didn't have it, so we had to buy new," she says.

Stress levels began rising when the phone calls started pouring in at all hours of the day and night. "They'd call early in the morning and I'd leave the house in a steam. It would really set the kids off. They'd call during dinner. Harassment doesn't do anything to pay the bills, but you've got to feel for these people, I wouldn't want their job," he says. "The reason we're in debt is because we charged these things and we owe them the money," Steve says. Unfortunately they said they were never offered alternative payment plans.

As tensions mounted and the calls continued Steve and Shelly yearned for relief and nearly sought refuge in bankruptcy court. "The minute we mentioned bankruptcy their whole attitude changed. They said we could work something out if we just stuck with it," he says.

When they started noticing that their son was having trouble in school and Steve's work performance was dropping sharply they knew they needed to do something or risk causing permanent damage. "The stress was causing abuses that we knew would just get worse. Somedays I'd just drive around worrying and not make a single sale," Steve says.

Steve and Shelly said they did not talk about finances to friends or family and had no idea where to turn for help, when they heard about credit counseling which was able to rescue them from the pits of depressing debt.

SCOTT BURNS

Investors find big isn't always better

By Scott Burns

Burns

There are facts.

And there are beliefs.

Sometimes beliefs survive the facts.

One good case in point for investors is the idea that small companies will regularly outperform large companies. Not only is there historic data and logic to support the idea, but there is a certain romance to it. The small bedeviled underdog will do better than the Big Guy.

Kind of a nice idea. The foundation of reliable films from the sweet melodramas of Jimmy Stewart to weapons management spectaculars such as Die Hard II.

But things aren't that way NOW.

Last year the Standard and Poors 500 index provided a total return that was more than DOUBLE the return of the Wilshire index of 4500 stocks. Investors and investment managers who strayed from the 500 were harshly punished.

As indexing — putting together baskets of stocks to duplicate the performance of an index such as the Standard and Poor's 500 — has become more popular with pension funds, some analysts argue that the increasing amount of cash flowing into those stocks has created a self-fulfilling prophecy. More money flowing in means higher prices, higher prices mean better performance. That, in turn, attracts still more investment money.

If that's the case, then we should start to see a gap between the pricing of large company stocks and their underlying performance. In other words, the price to earnings ratios of large companies should be high relative to their actual earnings growth while the price to earnings ratio for small companies should be low relative to their actual earnings growth. If that has happened, we should expect that daring small investors who commit to undervalued small companies will one day reap large rewards while those who stick with large companies will be punished.

Is that what is happening?

Probably not.

To test the idea I used ValueScreenII, a software and database product from ValueLine, the New York investment publishing and advisory firm, to build a profile of our largest and most valuable companies and our smaller companies. Starting with a database of nearly 1600 major publicly traded stocks, I divided it into the Top 100 and the Bottom 1100. Here is what I found:

■ PE RATIO. The top 100 companies had an average PE ratio of 14.9, only slightly more than the 14.0 ratio of the Bottom 1100 companies.

■ RETURN ON EQUITY. The Top 100 companies had a return on shareholders equity of 17.8 percent, significantly higher than the 13.6 percent ROE of the smaller group.

■ FIVE YEAR EARNINGS GROWTH. The Top 100 companies had a five year compound growth rate of 11.9 percent, giving them a good lead over the 9.1 percent of the smaller 1100.

■ DIVIDEND YIELD. The Top 100 provided an average yield of 3.5 percent, higher than the 2.5 percent yield of the smaller group.

■ RETAINED EARNINGS AS A PERCENT OF NET WORTH. Earnings retention determines how sustainable future growth is. Here, even though the large companies offered a higher dividend yield, their sustainable growth rate was 11.6 percent, nearly a full percentage point over the 10.7 percent of the smaller companies.

In fact, the story goes further. The average institutional holdings of the Top 100 stocks were 37.5 percent... LESS THAN the 39.2 percent institutional holdings in the Bottom 1100 stocks! All things considered, institutional money can keep piling into these mega companies for a long time before it is time to start taking money out of the big stocks and to force feed it to the small.

Is there any caveat to this?

Yes. The earnings growth rates of the two portfolios are going in OPPOSITE directions. The earnings growth of the Top 100 is falling while the earnings growth of the Bottom 1100 is rising. The five year earnings growth of the top companies, for instance, was 11.9 percent but the earnings growth for the last recorded quarter was only 6.6 percent; with the small companies it was a five year rate of 9.1 percent rising to 16.6 percent for the last recorded quarter.

What does it mean?

NCNB Texas snapping up failed S&Ls

By Leslie Wayne
N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — As the government sells off hundreds of failed savings and loan associations, its biggest customer is right here in Texas, where so many of the problems began.

NCNB Texas, the distant outpost of a leading North Carolina banking company, is sweeping through the Texas countryside, buying sick savings units at a healthy clip.

NCNB Texas' strategy of picking up valuable deposit franchises and leaving the troubled loans in government hands has enabled it to become the biggest bank in one of the nation's biggest banking markets.

And, in doing so, the bank has set a formula that is expected to be followed by other banks as they bid on the hundreds of savings units — an estimated 800 in the next four years — that may soon come up for sale.

"We're interested in building a banking franchise in Texas," said Timothy P. Hartman, who became chairman of NCNB Texas when it was created in 1988.

And that is in addition to some $6.9 billion in newly acquired core deposits from failed savings units that have given NCNB Texas a toehold in towns like Cedar Hill and Greenville as well as cities like Houston and San Antonio.

So far, banks have been the biggest buyers of savings units. Of the 110 sold by the Resolution Trust Corp., the government entity disposing of savings assets, a total of 81 have been acquired by banks — and 18 by NCNB Texas, more than anyone else. The remaining 29 have been bought by other savings institutions.

One by one, these sales are quietly bringing about a shift in financial assets from savings associations to commerical banks. Indeed, these sales are shrinking the industry: for every bank that buys a savings unit, one less savings unit exists. Its deposits and some of its loans become bank property.

"The acquisition process of NCNB and many other banks is a very significant indicator of the future of the thrift industry," said Bert Ely, a savings industry consultant.

Bob Solberg
Division Manager, Texaco USA

The Midlander has always been dedicated to fitness and excellence. Many companies have the same philosophy for their business. Therefore, we were pleased, but not surprised, when TEXACO made The Midlander their choice for wellness.

"Texaco wants its people to enjoy the best quality of life possible. And to us an important part of quality includes being physically fit. That's why we joined a quality health facility — it's all a part of helping people be the best they can be."

Texaco's been around long enough to know that wellness and productivity go hand-in-hand. And with the variety of fitness options we offer, The Midlander was an obvious choice for a company that's interested in providing its employees the opportunity to lead healthier, more productive lives. That way, everyone wins.

California Realtors turn to gimmicks

By E. Scott Reckard

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hey buddy, want a free Rolls-Royce?

All you do, see, is buy this 7,000-square-foot mansion in Brentwood: brand new, pool, spa, sauna, stupendous views, five bedrooms, seven baths, maid's quarters, three quarters of an acre.

Just $3.8 million, $1.1 million off the original asking price. We'll also throw in a convertible 1990 Corniche III at no extra charge.

That deal, outlined this month in a Hollywood Reporter advertisement, is an extreme example of home-sales gimmicks in expensive California areas. Reality has hit realty after the remarkable boom in sales and prices in the late 1980s.

"We've never seen as many incentives as now," said Mike Silverman, a veteran Beverly Hills broker who has sold houses for celebrities like Judy Garland and Pia Zadora. "All the brokers are scratching their heads. Everyone has been spoiled by all of these good years."

During 1988 and much of 1989, home prices soared at a clip of more than 20 percent per year in areas like San Francisco, Los Angeles, Orange County, Ventura and Santa Barbara. In many cases, all a broker had to do was list a house to sell it, usually at a premium price.

Now, despite booming price increases in cheaper inland areas, the median price of a California home actually fell from $201,034 in April 1989 to $197,107 in April 1990, according to the California Association of Realtors.

There's a glut of homes on the market, too. In the San Fernando Valley section of Los Angeles, the Realtors' group said 13,561 homes were for sale in May, a 56 percent jump from last year.

Responding to the slowdown, developers have been cutting prices. They're also paying closing costs, picking up months of house payments, or offering "trade-in" programs to help sell a buyer's old home.

Some buyers are even getting free vacations, fully furnished homes or upgrades. Brokers who list expensive properties for sale are offering luxury cars and $10,000 bonuses to agents who close deals.

"Maybe the idea of the Rolls will get somebody else up here. I just want to get my money out," he said.

Ellis said his Rolls-Royce gimmick has generated no serious offers so far.

But Silverman, the Beverly Hills broker, said he's been able to peddle luxury homes by offering offbeat perks.

He'll fly buyers around in helicopters, cater meals, and pay round-trip tabs to New York and Hawaii to sell homes. He gift-wrapped one house, and swears another sold when a hungry buyer went to an open house because it had a free lunch.

"It gives a little pizazz to the promotion," Silverman said. "I read an ad that said: 'For sale. Important fish tank. Included with the fish tank is a three-bedroom house.'"

"A lot of times it just makes people suspicious," Kay Pick, a Silverman agent. "They figure there must be something not quite right about the deal."

"The best incentive is to price the house right," said Fred Sands, the founder of California's largest one-owner real estate brokerage. "For a while there, you could price a house 30 percent over market value, and in six months prices would catch up. You can't do that now."

Fisher-Price agrees to new labels

NEW YORK (AP) — Fisher-Price has agreed to place warnings on packages that its Little People figures present a choking hazard to children, the state attorney general has reported.

The toy, sold separately and as part of various Fisher-Price play sets, have been linked to the choking deaths of at least five children nationwide and left one child severely brain damaged, Attorney General Robert Abrams said.

The company also agreed to pay the state a $25,000 penalty, Abrams said.

The East Aurora-based toy company agreed to place labels on all packages containing Little People beginning next month.

NATIONAL STRENGTH WITH A PERSONAL TOUCH

CHURCHES: Need more room

(From 1G)

Texas. Jack Howard, assistant to the pastor, explained that the church is over 100 years old and the current sanctuary was over 30 years old.

Not only are they renovating the sanctuary and installing a pipe organ, they are building a two-story 20,000 square-foot education building to house Sunday school and preschool classes. This is necessary, Howard said, because of growing church attendance.

He predicted total costs of renovations to First Presbyterian will approach $5 million, which is coming from the church's 1,700 members. The church had a fund-raising drive to attract pledges for the past three years.

Templeton Construction is handling the project, and Templeton superintendent Harvey Fuchs said he has 15 people working on the job and expects it will be completed around the first of the year.

Odessa-based J.W. Cooper Construction Inc. has done a thriving business with Midland churches, having finished three church renovation projects — First United Methodist Church; Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; and the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity. The company has begun its fourth project, a new sanctuary for Trinity Presbyterian at 2800 Louisiana.

John W. Cooper IV, senior vice president of the building firm, said that now is a good time for churches to build, because they're getting good prices due to the slowdown in construction.

"It's a very advantageous time for anybody to be building, and I think the church officials are being wise stewards of their money."

John Ochsner, chairman of Trinity Presbyterian's building committee, agreed that now was a good time to build, saying that construction and interest rates were most reasonable right now. His church's program is expected to cost $1.2 million, not including a new pipe organ.

Like First Presbyterian, Trinity is getting the funds for the new sanctuary from its congregation and donations from current and past members.

Trinity's new addition will include the sanctuary, a parlor and office complex on the east end of the present facilities.

Most church officials use an increase in population as their explanation for expansion. Dick Campbell, owner of Campbell Construction, suggested that the effects of the boom years of the late 1970s and early 1980s are finally reaching the churches.

He said that, in boom time, construction work goes in three stages. The first stage is in the private and business sector, with business expanding and adding office space, and residences.

The second phase is municipal — adding to city and county facilities, and to the schools.

Then come the churches, said Campbell. "At least, that's the way I've observed this happening."

He said that, for the past several years, a majority of his business has been for non-profit organizations such as the schools and churches, and some remodeling on existing homes and commercial space. Among his projects has been building the MRI facility for Midland Memorial Hospital; a new sanctuary for Midland Lutheran Church and remodeling for Saint Ann's Catholic Church; and the expansion at Casa de Amigos.

He expressed concern that some companies are so desperate to work, they will submit a bid with little or no profit, something alluded to by Templeton's Fuchs.

Currently, Campbell is busy building a new family life center for First Christian Church. The church is embarking on a three-phase expansion, according to Brent Cantrell, associate pastor.

First is the family life center, which will contain a gymnasium, kitchen and fellowship hall. It will hold between 350 and 400 people. It's expected to be completed next March.

The second phase is renovating the former fellowship hall into classrooms, which is expected to be completed in August. The third phase is various repairs on the existing facility.

All told, Cantrell said the church is spending around $700,000 on the renovations.

The most ambitious and long-term expansion project was recently completed by First United Methodist Church, which began its three-phase expansion in 1985, according to Bill Weir, minister of programs for the church.

The first phase was building a new music department and childrens' playground, which was completed three years ago. The second phase was a new fellowship hall and classrooms, which was completed in September 1989. The final phase was a new activity center and classrooms, which was completed the end of May. All told, the program cost over $4 million, which came from contributions and pledges by church members, and from oil and gas royalties paid to the church foundation.

He said he feels the church was fortunate in getting a good price on the construction, aided in that respect by the economic slowdown, even though the slowdown did hurt in obtaining pledges.

Planning to build an entirely new church is Abundant Life Worship Center, which has broken ground for a new church at Princeton and Idlewilde. Church member Tommy Nelson said the church will probably be built in three phases, with members doing much of the interior work. General contractor is Scooter Rotan of Scooter's Mechanical, and target date for completion is early fall. Nelson had no figures on cost of the church.

YOGURT: Entrepreneurs now moguls

(From 1G)

"It occurred to me that nothing would give them a quicker and better insight into whether they really wanted to be entrepreneurs than running a small business," says lawyer and businessman Bill Brice Sr.

Coincidentally, a client of the Brice law firm had a couple of little stores he wanted to sell, and the younger Brices made what seemed to be a goofy gamble on frozen yogurt.

In the 1970s, many Americans deemed yogurt a type of hippie food. But as the country moved into the health-conscious '80s, the frozen yogurt idea caught on.

Admittedly, the Brices started out a step ahead of most young entrepreneurs; they had a $10,00 nest egg. Their father insisted that if the business failed, it was their loss and not his.

Stacks of history

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

In recent weeks, the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library staff members have had their hands full juggling 12,000 books to be ready for an open house Friday.

"It's like playing a game with a deck of 12,000 cards," said director Richard Mason.

And these cards have to be stacked in correct order.

By the time of the open house, Mason said, Melba McCaskill, Yvonne Smith and Joetta Harris will have completed the "monumental project" of moving and classifying the books. He paused, adding, "We need to find some way to give them a medal. That's more than 600 boxes. We stopped counting after 600."

Expansion is the reason for the task. More than 4,300 square feet have been added to the 5,430 sq. ft. Haley Library.

"We are nearly doubling our size in order to provide for the next 50 years of growth at Haley Library," Mason said. "We will have a state of the art archives complete with fireproof and stormproof environment and absolutely secure vaults for rare books and for art work.

"In addition, we have moved more than 12,000 books into our new wing which enables us to consolidate our holdings into one central area, which is more convenient for the researcher and for the staff who services the researcher."

Part of the archives will have restricted access for researchers, Mason said.

"We will have comfortable sitting for researchers to utilize original manuscripts — old letters, business records. Essentially, the people who utilize this will be in a comfortable but closed environment which allows them access to the material, but also maintains adequate security for the archives."

The library's open house will continue throughout working hours — 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. — Friday.

"If people want to come by during their lunch hour, we'll be happy to show them around," Mason said.

Throughout the day, staff members will be available to take visitors on tours through the library.

"We would love for individuals who are curious about the library, but who have never had an opportunity to visit to come by."

During the open house, a book published by the Haley Library, "What a World of Wonder," will be available for sale. Sixteen authors have provided recollections of J. Evetts Haley Sr. Haley also has a piece in the book. The library is publishing a limited Midland edition for $50, a hardback for $25 and paperback for $10. Some of the authors will be on hand to autograph copies of the book.

The expansion has allowed the Haley staff, Mason said, "to consolidate our manuscript materials into one workroom and then to free up space which originally was used to house our book collection, which we will now utilize for exhibits and also public meetings. For example, the United Daughters of the Confederacy will use this as a meeting room as do the Sons of Confederate Veterans."

The Haley Library also has plans to present more public lectures, similar to the recent "Lone Star Horizons" symposium on Father's Day.

Among the goals for the Haley Library is one to acquire 12 to 15 quality research collections over the next 15 years, Mason said.

"We currently have three. We can't collect everything for everybody, but what we can do is provide some high quality research materials to serious students of the West. The three collections that we have are Mr. Haley Sr.'s, the Erwin Smith Photograph Collection and the Robert Mullins Lincoln County War materials."

The Haley Library is currently evaluating a fourth collection.

"We are in negotiation with an individual in Tucson, Ariz., who is an authority on the Indian wars. He has in excess of 4,000 volumes of books — a book library — as well as a very substantial collection of manuscript material pertaining to the U.S. military-Apache wars.

"This national level collection broadens us geographically and topically. The majority of these books supplement us rather than duplicate our holdings. They strengthen us in areas where we're weak and expand our geographic scope to include the greater Southwest and the frontier in general."

"We're a research library. Our goal really is to further historical research, but 99.8 percent of the people who walk through our doors are interested in a museum experience so we try to have authentic displays shelved with the books and to host occasional exhibits that will satisfy the majority of our visitors."

Interest in LBJ book grows

By Bill Modisett
Staff Writer

That "LBJ book" is now all the rage back East — and it isn't "Means of Ascent," Robert Caro's plodding and detailed study of Lyndon Johnson's political climb from the oak-covered hills of central Texas to the presidency of the United States.

Caro's book, released earlier this year as the second volume in a trilogy on the late president, is popular in its own right and has stimulated interest about the Johnson years, but that quest leads many readers back to Caro's first book on Lyndon Johnson — "The Path to Power," published in 1982.

Yet the startling revelations detailed in Caro's biography were not the first to expose Johnson's consuming quest for power. That distinction belongs to Midland historian J. Evetts Haley for "A Texan Looks at Lyndon: A Study in Illegitimate Power."

Haley's alert to the people of Texas and the nation was published 26 years ago this summer as Lyndon Johnson was waging his campaign for election to the Oval Office. Surprisingly, the book — which revealed Johnson's striking liberalism, unquenchable thirst for power and ruthless tactics to gain that power — was ignored by state newspapers until a brief notice on the front page of The Wall Street Journal sparked a flood of outrage — against the author.

Although the assertions in the book by the West Texas rancher and historian were well documented, Haley "was virtually ostracized in the town of Canyon" where he lived after the book was published.

The book was popular initially and there were 7 million copies sold or on order, according to Haley, although cancellations after a "hate campaign" was launched against Haley by the Johnson forces eventually reduced total sales to about 5.5 million.

Well-known as a historian, Haley's reputation for truth and accuracy has grown through the years and he now stands to gain even more from publication of Caro's books which substantiate allegations first made in "A Texan Looks at Lyndon."

After living away from Midland for many years, while involved in ranching operations, Haley and his wife returned in the 1970s and built the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, named in honor of the historian's first wife. The library, which features 16,000 books on

A LOOK AT THE BOOKS

On the presidency

"As President, Johnson has continued the craven appeasement of the criminal Castro, continues to sell out American fighting men in Vietnam, aplogizes for the American students. who ran up the flag over our territory in Panama, and negotiates with the gangsters there who refused to abide by their nation's solemn treaty of the past."

"From the earliest beginnings of Lyndon Johnson's political life — from his days at college when he had captured control of campus politics — his tactics had consistently revealed a pragmatism and a cynicism that had no discernible limits. His morality was the morality of the ballot box, a morality in which nothing matters but victory and any maneuver that leads to victory is justified, a morality that was amorality."

On power

"For nowhere in the millions of Johnson's words that embody the Johnson record can recognition of any postive legal, moral or Constitutional limitation upon his concepts of and lust for power be found. With Johnson, authority needed, if politically prudent and possible, is authority assumed. This is explicit in his record. This is a basic in illegitimate government."

"State office had no interest for him, he reiterated whenever the subject was brought up; years later, when John Connally was leaving Washington to run for Governor of Texas, Johnson would ask him, 'What the hell do you want to be Governor for? Here's where the power is.' "

On winning

"Johnson made another frantic telephone call to Parr, who indicated that he might pick up what they needed in Precinct 13 at Alice. Thereupon his henchmen 'recanvassed the returns,' reporting on September 3 the 'corrected' total of 202 additional votes for Johnson and one for Stevenson. Thus Lyndon went into the lead by 87 votes out of nearly a million actually cast."

"For a President to preserve as a personal memento a photograph showing the notorious Box 13 in the possession of his political allies — a photograph which by implication proves that someone was indeed in a position to stuff it — is startling in itself. For him to display the photograph to a hostile journalist is evidence of a psychological need so deep that its demands could not be resisted...."

On the ego

"His egomania is reflected in the proliferation of his LBJs to include his wife and daughters, ranch, radio-TV business, plane, flag and dogs — though his present little Beagle Johnsons are cutely called "Him and Her."

"In 1946, Mrs. Johnson became pregnant again, and on July 2, 1947, Lucy Baines Johnson was born. Johnson was later to joke that the two daughters were given the same initials as he and his wife had because 'it's cheaper this way, because we can all use the same luggage,' but to an aide with whom he was as intimate as he was with Horace Busby, he would be more frank: 'FDR-LBJ, FDR-LBJ,' he told his young assistant. 'Do you get it? What I want is for them to start thinking of me in terms of initials.' "

'Always the Bride' comes to MCT

A Readers' Theatre production of "Always the Bride" will be presented at 8 p.m. July 21 at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

The play, by Ken Girard of San Marino, Calif., is the winner of the 1990 McLaren Memorial Comedy Playwriting Contest, according to contest chair Mary Lou Cassidy.

"Always the Bride" beat 159 entries from across the United States.

In addition, Girard has offered to give a mystery-writing seminar for MCT members while he's in town for the Readers' Theatre. He had given workshops for the Writers Guild, the Dramatists Guild and Mystery Writers of America.

The seminar will be held July 21 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at Midland Community Theatre. If interested in attending, please register with Janet George in MCT's business office, 682-2544.

The author will be the guest of American Airlines and the Midland Hilton for the production. Don Bachman will direct. There will be no charge for the production, but donations may be made to the McLaren Memorial fund for next year's competition.

Girard wrote mysteries, dramas and comedies for Sears Radio Theatre, NBC Mystery Theatre and Mutual Radio Theatre form 1978 through 1981. He created and produced the mystery series "Darkness" for National Public Radio in 1979 and was the sole writer for the 1982 Bob Hope Comedy Special.

Canyon's lead singer believes persistence always pays off

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Canyon lead singer Steve Cooper believes in persistence.

"There's always the one main thing that makes the difference with any artist — persistence," Cooper says in a recent telephone interview. "Everyone's not going to like your music, so therefore you can't spend your whole life trying to make someone like your product. You just try to make your product the best you can, whatever field you're in.

"There are lots of hurdles out there. There's people trying to find ways to make you fail — the competition's incredible. But, there's room for everyone, maybe not at the same time. You stay in there and fight it."

Canyon plays the Midland-Odessa area Tuesday night at an early July Fourth Celebration at Twin Cities Speedway, off Coors Road between Midland and Odessa. The concert and dance is sponsored by KNFM Radio and Magic 102. Part of the proceeds go to MDA. The event includes racing and fireworks. Gates open at 6 p.m. The event begins at 8:30 p.m.

In 1989, Canyon was named by Billboard as the "Top New Group" of the year in the magazine's annual World of Country Music special issue. More recently, Canyon's latest video, "Carryin' On," moved to No. 1 on the country television charts. Albums to the group's credit include "I Guess I Just Missed You" and "Radio Romance," both on 16th Avenue Records.

'There are lots of hurdles out there. There's people trying to find ways to make you fail — the competition's incredible. But, there's room for everyone, maybe not at the same time. You stay in there and fight it.'

— Steve Cooper, Canyon lead singer

He recalls the years of nights spent on tours filled with truck stops, hotel rooms and suitcases and the message he gave himself time and again.

"Two hours of glamour and you got 22 hours of a lot of hard work," Cooper says. "We've been home eight days in the last three months. I'm not complaining, I'm explaining. It's all worth it when you walk up in front of that crowd, when you play music and they respond. You're not tired, not sick anymore — that day anyway. It makes it all worth it.

"We love our job and career and the people. The people make the career. Without the people there would be no Canyon, Alabama or Kenny Rogers."

The five-member Dallas band traces its beginning to 1980 when Cooper and Johnny Boatright met by chance at a supper club in Tyler. The two became a duo until they were joined by bassist Randy Russell Rigney. Then, in 1987, Jay Ellis Brown on keyboards and Keech Rainwater on drums joined the group.

"I'm really talking about the young country," Cooper says.

In 1987, Canyon sent a three song demo tape to Nashville. The group received two offers from long established major Nashville labels and an offer from the newly formed 16th Avenue Records.

"We knew we would be a priority with 16th Avenue Records," Cooper says. "With the other labels we would be of minor importance. And we didn't want to take a number when we came in the door for meetings."

Today, Canyon is experiencing the new problems which come with success.

"The expenses never quit. The more popular you become, the more money you have to spend to stay that way.

"People come to the show to see not just music but a show. That does not necessarily mean Las Vegas dancers, but a good light show, good sound equipment. You've got to stay up with the times. You've got to spend it to make it."

LBJ: Interest in his period grows

(From 1H)

Southwestern history with an emphasis on the cattle industry, recently completed an expansion project and is preparing to hold grand opening ceremonies July 5 and 6 to coincide with Haley's 89th birthday.

Now that the public mood of outrage about the book is gone, there appears to be growing interest in the Johnson years from the standpoint of historical perspective. Richard Mason, director of development for the facility, noted that in recent weeks the library has received about 30 to 35 requests for copies of "A Texan Looks at Lyndon." Most of the requests, he said, have come from Washington, D.C., Virginia or Pennsylvania and appear to be a result of interest generated by Caro's books.

Copies of Haley's book priced at $2 each, also are purchased regularly by visitors to the library and, according to Mason, the library is now studying the feasibility of publishing a sixth edition of the book.

While the Caro biography is much more detailed than Haley's book, the assertion of Lyndon Johnson's ruthless drive for power remains intact. In fact, if anything the first two volumes of Caro's biography substantiate what the Midland historian brought to the attention of Texans and others in 1964 — that LBJ was "not so much a product of Texas as of the strangely deranged times that have set the stage for his ambitious desires, his vanity and monumental egotism, his vindictive nature and his evil genius. In an age of mass action and managed news,

'The true historian as a moral man is under a dual compulsion; that not only of seeing but of recording the truth. ...'

— J. Evetts Haley

slanted to special privileges and pragmatic ends, Johnson emerged, not as a product of the rough but sunlit Southwestern hills, but of political sophistication, cynicism and expediency. ..."

In his earlier "The Path to Power," Caro documented Johnson's manipulative bent noting, "During his first Senate campaign, in 1941, men handed him (or handed to his aides, for his use) checks or envelopes stuffed with cash — checks and cash in amounts unprecedented even in the free-spending world of Texas politics — and with these campaign contributions, which totaled hundreds of thousands of dollars, he waged the most expensive senatorial campaign in Texas political history, a campaign so expensive that it amounted to an attempt to buy a state. It was not, however, the use of money in his own campaigns that was to have the deepest significance for Lyndon Johnson's political career — and for American political history — but his use of money in the campaigns of others. ..."

To an extent the outrage directed at Haley for publication of "A Texan Looks at Lyndon" can be attributed to the timing. President John F. Kennedy had been assassinated in Dallas the year before and Texans were still sensitive about that black mark against their state.

Lyndon Johnson also was a native Texan with a good ol' boy grin and handshake who held himself out as representative of the conservative values in the state. As a result, many of the state's residents no doubt felt an allegiance to him because of that fact.

There was prevalent in the South and Southwest a desire to elect a man from one of those geographic regions to the presidency, and Lyndon Johnson, as the sitting vice president, seemed the obvious man for the job in the eyes of many Texans. In the 1964 election, Johnson won a landslide victory over Republican nominee, Sen. Barry M. Goldwater of Arizona.

Asked in an interview whether he ever experienced any regrets about writing the book, Haley replied, "No regrets whatsoever."

Despite the 1964 furor created by publication of "A Texan Looks at Lyndon," Haley's credibility as a historian was outstanding, buoyed by publication of more than 20 books, including "Charles Goodnight: Cowman and Plainsman," "Jeff Milton: A Good Man with a Gun," "Fort Concho and the Texas Frontier," "Rough Times — Tough Fiber" and others.

He also has published literally hundreds of magazine and newspaper articles. It is his fidelity to truth and historical fact that has earned him the place as a premier historian.

In large measure that credibility was cemented following publication of Haley's first book, "The XIT Ranch of Texas and the Early Days on the Llano Estacado" published in 1929.

After publication, the Spikes family from Lubbock filed nine libel suits totalling $2.2 million against Haley, Judge James D. Hamlin and Capitol Reservation Lands. The plaintiffs contended that information in a chapter entitled, "A Long Fight for Law," was erroneous and that Haley had not adequately checked his facts. But at the conclusion of the week-long trial, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants. The defendants then settled with the other plaintiffs for $17,500 to obtain an agreement that no future suits would be brought by the plaintiffs.

Over the span of five decades, Haley's other books and articles detailing early-day Texas history reaffirmed his commitment to truth and accuracy.

As the author indicated in the conclusion of "A Texan looks at Lyndon," "The true historian as a moral man is under a dual compulsion; that not only of seeing but of recording the truth. ..."

Haley did exactly that 26 years ago, and now, however belatedly, perhaps the historian will receive the credit he deserves.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

The Sun Country Gentlemen Barbershop Chorus performs at the Museum of the Southwest's Summer Sunday Concert at 7:45 p.m. today.

The 28-voice barbershop chorus led by Tom Laney will sing a program of familiar songs including Southern tunes, favorites from the turn of the century, patriotic music and love songs.

Laney, assistant conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale, also teaches high school music and English and is music director of Our Savior's Lutheran Church. A featured soloist with local musical groups, he also plays Henry VIII at madrigal dinners and is the symphony Santa Claus.

Those attending the free concert are asked to bring lawn chairs or blankets to sit on.

The next concert will be July 9 with pop music by Stuart-James Project.

Midlander sang Weill

Baritone Edward Pleasant, a native of Midland and former Texas Tech University School of Music student, performed a May concert at the Unitarian Universalist Church in Stamford, Conn., that featured the New England premiere of Kurt Weill's "Flight of Lindbergh."

New York City Opera associate conductor Steven Gross conducted the Weill work, which was composed as a radio cantata in 1929 to commemorate Charles Lindbergh's 1927 transatlantic flight.

Pleasant, a recipient of Texas Tech University's Hewitt Vocal Award, earned both Bachelor's and Master's degrees at Tech. While attending school, he appeared in such roles as Don Alfonso in "Cosi fan Tutte" and the Father in "Hansel and Gretel."

Fourth festivities planned

The chamber of commerce is planning a beach volleyball tournament, a fishing tournament, a baseball throw titled Ryan Express, games, food and arts and crafts booths.

"Finishing the day, we will have a hamburger supper with entertainment before settling back to watch the fireworks display by the volunteer fire department," says Ettic Walker, chamber manager.

Those interested in reserving a booth need to call the chamber office, 1-728-3403, or go by 157 W. Second. Cost is $10. Electricity is limited.

To sign up for the beach volleyball or for more information call Susan Anderson, 1-728-8416.

O'Keeffe held over

The photographic exhibition "Georgia O'Keeffe: The Artist's Landscape, Photographs by Todd Webb" is being held over at the Museum of the Southwest.

The exhibit now will be shown through July 15 according to Gary Hood, curator of art, at the museum. It was scheduled to close at the end of June.

"Fortunately, for the Museum, a change in the travel schedule for the exhibition enables us to keep these excellent photographs on display for the enjoyment of our visitors," Hood said.

The exhibition is sponsored by the Texaco Philanthropic Foundation.

Wecker's painting entitled "Tracy's cats" won an honorable mention award in the non-professional watercolor category in the "Fifth Annual Fiesta in Realism," C. Russell Myers Memorial Art Exhibit, sponsored by the San Angelo Art Club.

This exhibit was held during June at the Kendall Art Gallery, San Angelo.

The event is sponsored by the West Texas Jazz Society. Ms. Jenkins is a jazz pianist, vocalist, composer and arranger. Showtime is 8 p.m.

No general admission is charged for members. General admission for non-members is $15. Reserved seating for members is $10 and for non-members $25. For more information or to make reservations call 682-2988.

Mingus work available

NEW YORK (AP) — Charles Mingus was a composer, bass player and pianist. He also was something of a jazz historian and keeper of the flame, infusing his compositions with the structures and innovations of others such as Duke Ellington and Fats Waller.

'Godfather, Part III' ends most shooting

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Godfather, Part III," one of the most talked about movies of the year, has finished principal photography in Italy, New York and Atlantic City.

The last in a trilogy about the fictional Corleone family poses a challenge for filmmaker Francis Ford Coppola since both "The Godfather" (1972) and "The Godfather, Part II" (1974) won best picture Academy Awards.

"The Godfather, Part III," which is scheduled for release at Christmas, begins in 1979. Michael Corleone (Al Pacino) is trying to legitimize the family's dirty money.

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

For Carole Joyce, painting has been a lifetime love.

"I've been painting all my life," says this North Hollywood, Calif., resident. A commercial art graduate from the American Academy of Art, Ms. Joyce walked away from art for 10 years. Then, in 1979, she began taking brush-up design courses at Valley College.

"I've worked twice as hard to catch up," she said. "I realized if I didn't get back into it, I'd be a bitter old woman thinking of what I could have done."

Ms. Joyce will be in Midland July 8 for a showing of her work being held at the Northeast YMCA, 2300 Butternut Lane, from 4:30 to 9 p.m. She is considering doing a demonstration at the showing.

The art show and sale is a fundraiser for the Scholarship Fund for the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs Inc. Ms. Joyce, the artist commissioned to do the chamber's African-American History Month poster for next February, is an out-of-state member of the MBCE.

Her paintings can be found in DuSable Museum of African-American History, Chicago, and the 43rd Street Gallery, Los Angeles. In Texas, her work can be purchased through Flowery Ideas by Robin, Midland, 682-2864.

Although Ms. Joyce finds her "work is constantly changing," she also notes that her style of painting "hasn't changed much" since she was young.

Her preference is painting people, especially blacks.

"I paint blacks because there is a demand for that. When you go to art shows, people ask for things. When I was painting black people, they told me they enjoyed seeing black images."

Ms. Joyce says she particularly enjoys painting women and children.

"I'm not a controversial type of painter. I don't enjoy painting subjects that are upsetting to people. I don't have anything against that type of work. It's fine for people who enjoy doing that."

Ms. Joyce, a member of the California Confederation of Arts, the San Fernando Valley Art Club and the Fine Arts Federation of Burbank, has worked for The Los Angeles Times Newspaper for 15 years.

In addition to her degree from the American Academy of Art, Ms. Joyce has attended Colorado State University, Denver, L.A. Valley College and Burbank Creative Arts Center. She finds an education in art is just a beginning for an artist.

"What you learn in school is going to help you to be a better artist during your lifetime. What you learn in art school is how to solve problems. But, it's a continual process."

Midlander elected to statewide post

Finley

The progression from this office to vice president for business affairs to president elect to president is automatic. The student membership of Texas is 15,200 and the teacher membership is 2,040.

Mrs. Finley is a private piano teacher and has taught piano and theory here for the past 31 years. She has served on the TMTA Theory Committee from 1971-1985 and was the state's theory coordinator from 1985 to 1988. During the past two years, she has served on the Texas Music Teachers board of directors, the Texas Certification Committee and as chairman of the state's Theory revision Committee and coordinator of Convention Activities.

A private teacher of piano and theory, Mrs. Finely is nationally certified and has been approved by the American College of Musicians of the National Guild of Piano Students.

World Pacific Records returns

NEW YORK (AP) — Capitol-Blue Note has announced the return of World Pacific Records, the sassy label that introduced American audiences to Brazilian and Indian music.

The first new World Pacific LP is "El," introducing Brazilian star Gonzaguinha. There also are three reissues: "The Legendary João Gilberto," "Seduzir" and "Toniho Horta."

Other new Blue Note reissues include: John Coltrane, "Like Sonny," an early example of Coltrane's quartet; Bud Powell, "The Bud Powell Trio Plays," containing 16 works never before collected for American release; Louis Armstrong and Duke Ellington, "The Complete Louis Armstrong & Duke Ellington Sessions," an excellent arrangement of Ellington compositions and Armstrong's sextet; Count Basie and Tony Bennett, "Basie Swings-Bennett Sings"; and Maynard Ferguson, "Maynard '61."

Gallery 1114 hosts show of invited artists

"The idea of multiple realities - inner perceptions versus outer surfaces, human potential versus human experience — is the thematic core of this show," says a release from Gallery 1114.

"Alpine artist Charles Bell's drawing, paintings and paper pieces mirror his Big Bend world as he sees it and feels it," the release says.

Buckley, a Midland photographer, says of his work, "A person's life can be made up of multitude of realities. I have attempted to combine my different visions."

Clifford, who has just completed his master's work at Texas Tech University, has mixed media serigraphs and collographs in the show. These works are, he says, "Childlike. images derived from storybooks, nightmares and experiences within my adult life."

Gallery 1114, 1114 N. Big Spring St., is an artist supported center for contemporary art. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Presidential Museum offers workshop

ODESSA — The Presidential Museum is offering its second summer workshop of the year from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. July 28.

The workshop, which is open to third- and fourth-graders, begins with a scavenger hunt. Students will explore the museum galleries in search of donkeys, elephants and a number of unusual, funny and informative facts about U.S. presidents and First Ladies.

Then, students will turn back the clock and return to the early pioneer days in Texas. With the Museum's "Home to Texas" exhibit as a backdrop, students will create a patchwork piece that will join together with their fellow students to create a unique patchwork quilt of paper.

Students are asked to bring a brown bag lunch. The museum will provide refreshments and puzzles and games to play during lunch.

Fee for the day is $3. Registration fees need to be brought to the Museum, 622 N. Lee St., during its public hours of Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Phone registration cannot be accepted.

Registration is limited to 40. For more information call 1-332-7123.

DINO SAFARI

Life-like robotic dinosaurs will be stalking Dellwood Mall, June 30 through November 25, in a Petroleum Museum project called DinoSafari. Take a journey through the ages.

You are invited to inspect the exhibition at a special DinoSafari Preview Party, Thursday evening, June 28, 1990.

Meet your friends and associates for a casual evening with cocktails at 6:30, followed by dinner at 7. After an informative tour of the exhibition you will be enlightened by the renowned paleontologist, George Callison, Ph.D., sceintific advisor to Dinamation International, fabricators of the dinosaurs.

Join the Petroleum Museum for this premier exhibit of the year. Reservations are required. Admission to Preview Party $50 per person. DinoSafari will be open for public viewing Saturday, June 30.

Texas House resolution honored Midland-Odessa Symphony

The House of Representatives of the 71st Texas Legislature, 5th Called Session honored the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale for its "many noteworthy contributions" by adopting House Resolution No. 41 on May 10.

H.R. No. 41 commends the symphony for its role as the first Texas orchestra outside the Dallas area to perform in the Eugene McDermott Concert Hall of the new Morton H. Meyerson Symphony Center on Sept. 30.

The members of the House of Representatives felt that this performance was the appropriate occasion for the symphony to receive "the special legislative praise and recognition it truly merits."

The resolution highlights the symphony's unique cultural bridge between the two West Texas cities of Midland and Odessa and points to the Symphony as a source of civic pride for West Texas residents.

Introduced to the House by Republican Tom Craddick and signed by Speaker of the House, Gib Lewis, H.R. No.41 points to the Meyerson concert sponsored by NCNB Texas, as "the successful marriage role in building a bridge between the arts and the business community to enhance the quality of life in the region."

Maestro Don Th. Jaeger, music director and conductor, will conduct two Van Cliburn competition winners as soloists, Jose Feghi, 1985 Gold Medalist and Ralph Votapek, 1962 Gold Medalist, in Concerto for Two Pianos in D Minor by Francis Poulenc, and Concerto No. 1 in C Minor for Two Pianos by J.S. Bach.

Information concerning travel arrangement to the performance from outside the Dallas area and ticket information for this special concert can be obtained by calling the symphony office at 563-0921.

Clyde Heron retrospective on show in Odessa

Comprising 16 of Heron's original works in the mediums of pencil, watercolor and oil, this exhibit focuses on the military and ranching heritage of the West.

The works, "Rain Clouds, A Welcome Sight" and "Raid on Eagle Springs Run" will be on display provoking the imagination of visitors. Heron's work is noted for its dedication to historical accuracy in the time frame, geographical location and in the case of the military, accuracy in uniforms and accoutrements.

Born in Admore, Okla., Heron migrated to West Texas in 1949 and settled in Odessa in 1967. Heron attended the Art Students' League in New York and has studied under water colorist Mario Cooper of New York and Bud Biggs of Dallas.

In addition to these works on display, two additional works of Heron's can be seen on permanent display in the museum's galleries. They include the portraits of Presidents Lyndon Johnson and Gerald Ford.

The Presidential Museum, located at 622 N. Lee, Odessa, is open Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Admission to the museum is free.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, JULY 1, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Family affairs will get the lion's share of your attention in the coming months. An August vacation will recharge your batteries and strengthen family ties. Unexpected good fortune in October gives you a chance to build savings. Your good judgment will help you avert business losses as Christmas approaches. Avoid crude and insensitive people. It is vital you choose allies who share your high ideals. Resist the pleas of someone who tries to make you feel guilty.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: comedian Dan Aykroyd, actress Karen Black, Princess Diana of Wales, dancer Leslie Caron.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A surprise involving a member of the opposite sex is featured. Creative sparks are ignited, turning a hobby into a potential source of income. Family gatherings evoke happy memories.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You find it difficult to forget old prejudices. Seize a golden opportunity to turn a negative situation into a positive one. Join loved ones for relaxed fun in the backyard or park.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not be swayed by a family member's arguments in favor of a financial proposal. Rely on your own good sense to reach the right decision. Travel by car as little as possible today.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Participating in team sports provides a happy diversion. Include your mate. Spend some time readying your wardrobe for the busy week ahead. A telephone call from home folks brightens your evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Attend church in another neighborhood and discuss only pleasant subjects at a family gathering. Refuse to be provoked into an argument. Romance shows new promise. Avoid overindulgence.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your schedule will be crowded today. Be flexible. Someone may ask you to help out in an emergency; do what you can. Romance enjoys highly favorable influences.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are in the mood for fun! Step back and take a broader view of your life. Family matters require careful handling. Relatives and friends can have a beneficial effect on your thinking.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Someone who lives at a distance deserves to hear from you. Procrastination will only make a difficult situation worse. Reach out to others and your self-confidence will grow. Loved ones agree to your plans.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Love blossoms anew between you and an old sweetheart. Homemakers need part of the day to catch up on chores. Comfort a child who seems upset. Your actions mean more than words.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could have unexpected company. Do not show your dismay. Grin and bear it! A child's imagination needs to be turned free. Treasured items disappear, but what is lost will be found.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Memories seem better when you enjoy them alone. Your friends are better companions than certain family members. Patience is essential when dealing with a parent-child squabble. Try not to take sides.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A mistake can be rectified. Mate helps get you back on your feet. Accept the suggestion of a loving friend. Go over budget with family members before revising it. Set a good example.

When defending a no-trump contract, there's a good reason why bridge gurus suggest you return partner's suit. If you do and fail to beat the contract, you will be held blameless. But if you don't, thereby allowing declarer to make his contract, you will have shattered partnership confidence. Having made that statement, bear in mind this is not a command etched in stone, just a general recommendation. If the situation demands it, by all means do what you think is right.

Despite the fact that South's spade stopper can, at best, be described as sketchy, we like his decision to bid three no trump. There was always the chance his partner might have spades stopped; that the defenders might not lead a spade; and if they did, that they might be unable to take more than four tricks in the suit.

West led the jack of diamonds. Declarer played low from dummy and East won the king. It was easy to work out that declarer had two diamond stoppers, so from East's point of view it seemed declarer would come to nine tricks before West could get the diamond suit going. Since West would have to have an entry to run diamonds anyway, East found a plan whereby West's entry could be put to use to result in the contract's demise.

At the second trick, East shifted to a spade into dummy's K J 10 tenace. Declarer could not come to nine tricks without clubs and there was no way to set up the suit without allowing West to gain the lead with the queen. A spade from West then allowed East to cash four tricks in the suit for a two-trick set.

Folklorist won't tell coyote tales out of season

By Hilary Groutage

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — Barre Toelken will tell you a Navajo coyote story in January, but no amount of prodding will get it out of him in June.

"They have to be told in the winter or you will screw up the weather pattern," he says.

The traditional tribal moratorium on coyote yarns begins with the first lightning strike in the spring. Then mum's the word until the first killing frost of autumn.

Toelken, 55, has spent years collecting and studying the folklore of the Southwest — tales, folk songs and ballads that echo ever fainter down the decades. To many modern minds, his obsession is, well, puzzling.

"There is still a notion that folklore is baloney. I don't know any other field that has to explain itself any more than we do," Toelken says. "If someone says they are a doctor or a plumber, people say that's fine. But when I say I'm a folklorist, people say, 'That must be wonderful for your children, but what do you do for a living?' "

Toelken "does" folklore as a professor at Utah State University. Although his doctoral degree is in medieval literature, he became enthralled with American Indian culture in 1954 when he and a group of friends left college to mine uranium on the Navajo reservation in southeastern Utah.

"We started out driving down there on weekends and got more interested in living among the Indians than going to school," he says.

After uranium mining played out, Toelken was invited to stay on the reservation at Montezuma Creek with a Navajo family by the name of Yellowman. It was during that first winter that he learned about coyote stories, which are not all humorous but always carry a moral.

"Instead of lecturing people, the Navajos tell stories about a coyote," he says.

At first, he was simply entertained by the tales. But as his studies in folklore progressed, he returned to the reservation and made several tapes of the stories after agreeing never to repeat them during the summer.

Storytelling is an integral part of the study of folklore. For Toelken and others, it reveals elements of society not recorded anywhere else.

"Folklore is about the live part of the culture rather than the dry part you get through the books," he says. "The values and ideas important to a group of people are often too abstract to talk about, and when they are told in stories they are more vivid in their explanation."

Toelken says Navajos aren't the only people who use stories to explain themselves. Mormons, for example, tell stories about three Nephite men from the Book of Mormon who have been allowed to roam the Earth for ages, never dying.

In the stories, he says, the three sometimes perform heroic acts such as saving a child's life when no other adult is around. In some versions, they appear as people in need. When the faithful help them, they are blessed.

Folklorists, Toelken says, are not in the business to determine the truth of the stories they study, but focus on the purpose they serve for the people who tell them.

While the Nephite tales may promote faith among Mormons, coyote tales are sometimes used to explain nature. One tells that the animal's eyes are yellow because a coyote once threw his eyes high in the air so he could see long distances.

"Of course, it didn't do any good," Toelken says. "And then he had to use (yellow) pine pitch to make them stick again."

The stories often carry a health message. "From the Navajo point of view, the religion is based on health and anything out of balance creates sickness," he says.

But collecting coyote stories is not without hazard. Last fall Toelken was asked to be a patient in a "blessing way" ceremony on the reservation aimed at promoting harmony in a person's life and warding off "skinwalkers," or witches.

"Witches take language apart and analyze it. My scholarship of Navajo coyote stories was making people nervous," he said.

Middle-aged Cleese won't slow down

By David Dishneau

CHICAGO (AP) — Sixteen years ago in "Monty Python and the Holy Grail," John Cleese mined the Middle Ages for laughs.

But in his own middle age, the British writer and actor believed for a while that his style of comedy had become as outdated as the medieval customs the Python film parodied.

The international success of his 1988 comedy, "A Fish Called Wanda," erased some of the self-doubt, Cleese said in a recent interview in Chicago. But the experience taught him something.

"If you're doing anything creative, you have to assume that you do not know that you know," he said. "The moment you think you know — 'I know how to do this, I know how to make comedy films work' — the day you think that, you're dead.

"But if you really wonder each day if you can do it, if you know that each day you're starting from scratch and you can fall on your face at any moment, then I think you have a chance of going on and doing good work."

At age 50, the multi-faceted Cleese clearly intends to go on, building upon the successful work he's done in the past.

During the next 12 months, Cleese plans to finish co-writing a second non-fiction book with British psychiatrist Robyn Skinner and oversee the production of some new corporate training films for Video Arts, a lucrative London-based company he helped found in 1972.

The founders sold Video Arts to its management in November but Cleese still writes and acts in the humorous films and remains "our creative guru," said Ann Boland, general manager of the company's U.S. subsidiary, based in the Chicago area.

By mid-1991 Cleese expects to begin work on a movie reuniting him with his "Wanda" co-stars Jamie Lee Curtis, Kevin Kline and Michael Palin. Cleese also said he hopes to work once more with Charles Crichton, the elderly director of "Wanda," which Cleese wrote and produced. He wouldn't disclose details of the film, except that it will be a comedy.

One thing Cleese's plans don't include is a break in the frenetic pace he has set since 1963 when, after earning a law degree from Cambridge University, he instead pursued an acting and writing career.

His work with the Cambridge Footlights, an amateur stage group, led to appearances in several BBC comedy shows including "Monty Python's Flying Circus." The 1969 series was exported to the United States and introduced American viewers to the absurd and irreverent deadpan humor of Cleese, Palin, Eric Idle, Terry Jones, Terry Gilliam and Graham Chapman, who died in October.

The TV program spun off a series of Python stage shows, books, records and films that served as launching pads for solo careers for the troupe's members.

He expanded his stock of comic characters by creating ill-tempered hotel owner Basil Fawlty in the mid-1970s British TV series "Fawlty Towers," but Cleese also has played everything from Shakespeare's Petruchio to an Old West sheriff in Lawrence Kasdan's 1984 film "Silverado."

And although he won an Emmy in 1987 for his guest performance as a psychiatrist on the NBC-TV series "Cheers," Cleese views himself primarily as a writer.

"I've often noticed that something in me slightly bristles when people say I'm an actor," said Cleese, whose original screenplay for "Wanda" was nominated for an Academy Award and won Italy's equivalent of an Oscar.

His real-life role as a psychotherapy client piqued his interest in psychiatry and led to his co-authorship with Skinner of "Families and How to Survive Them," which was published in 1983. The sequel will be titled "Life and How to Survive It."

Cleese has been divorced twice and has two children.

He said he nearly gave up comedy three or four years ago after some comedians he had recruited for an Amnesty International benefit — people who had influenced his own style — got very few laughs from the hip young London audience.

"I thought, 'Well, maybe at the age at 46 or 47, I am now out of contact with the people who are 22 to 26 who have been the best of my audience,' " Cleese recalled. "And then when I did 'Wanda,' I realized, 'Well, no, they still go to it, they still like it.' "

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard Lewis, whose comic angst is about life under a black cloud, says he visits a psychiatrist twice a week for a soul cleansing.

Life's foibles, anxieties, traumas and fears — real and imagined — are all comic fodder for Lewis. And he unloads all his emotional baggage in "I'm Doomed," a comedy special on HBO on Saturday.

In that show, Dudley Moore, Angie Dickinson, O.J. Simpson and Robert Goulet participate in a group therapy session with a psychiatrist, played by Richard Dmitri.

It's the third HBO special for Lewis, whose comedy series, "Anything But Love," also starring Jamie Lee Curtis, was canceled by ABC.

"Should I leave in the part about fear of angina?" he says. "Or should I cut that out and leave in the weeping?

"My problems aren't scripted. They just pour out of me. My act is therapy for other people. They can all go away feeling they're better off than I am."

"The first four or five years I did observational comedy," he says. "But I always wondered why should I tell people what I see. My family did that to me for years. Then I started therapy, and one day I woke up in black pajamas and changed my act. My act changes all the time because my life changes."

Lewis had eked out a living as a stand-up comic in the 1970s, then turned his attention to writing. He was a staff writer for the CBS series "House Calls" and wrote a television movie for himself called "Diary of a Young Comic."

"What I was doing was waiting for David Letterman to come to his senses and get his own show. Letterman knew me so well he said just come on and sit down. I've been on about 50 times, and my career took off after that."

"That was a monumental thing for me," he says. "They had my picture plastered all over Manhattan with the words 'Sold Out.' I had to wonder what that meant.

"I do all new material so I can't do more than five or six appearances a month. It's too taxing. I bring on a paper with about a hundred problems written on them. For Carnegie Hall I had two papers, each one about 7 feet long."

Lewis had a small role on Alan Arkin's short-lived series "Harry" and was in the movie "The Wrong Guys." He auditioned for the role in "Anything But Love."

"Jamie Lee and I had this instantaneous reaction to each other," he says. "It's really sad that the show's gone off. We never got to consummate the relationship. It built on the sexual tension.
