Michener feels out new novel's subject

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Garbed in a khaki-colored safari shirt, the author used gentle gestures as he spoke about his writing.

He had just arrived from touring an oil rig. His throat parched, he drank a soda in his Midland hotel room.

The corners of his mouth slowly turned upward as the familiar questions were asked.

When novelist James A. Michener decides to write, he begins by researching his subject — once to get a general feeling, back again for a more in-depth view and finally to get into the heart of the land.

Michener, a renowned writer of 26 major works — including "Hawaii," "The Source" and "Iberia" — is beginning a book about Texas. He arrived here Sunday for a three-day visit "just to look around."

His "look" included a tour of an oil rig and chats with some 60 Midland families.

"I've been in every corner of Texas except Corpus Christi and Midland. This trip corrected that," the 76-year-old author said in an interview Tuesday afternoon.

"The oil business plays a big part in this state. I have to be careful not to stay in the San Antonio, Dallas, Houston triangle.

"The outside reader may not know the difference, but a Texas reader would. That's why I'm here."

The book, which will be titled by the publishing company, is expected to be completed by Texas' 150th birthday celebration in 1986. But for now, Michener is in the first of three phases of research.

"It takes a minimum of three years to write a book. In the first year you can do other things. You're feeling your way."

Because Texas is contiguous to Mexico, the dramatic changes in politics and the growing population, Michener chose this state for the subject of his book.

"I think you've been very lucky. You're a lucky state. There have been some very dramatic changes here."

While Michener said he loves politics and even unsuccessfully tried his hand at running for a congressional seat in 1962, Texas politics bewilders him.

"I'm over-awed by the Texas politics," he said. "They're very rough and I'm not sure I understand it, but it's fun."

"The oil business plays a big part in this state. I have to be careful not to stay in the San Antonio, Dallas and Houston triangle."
— James Michener

Comparing his Texas subject to his Colorado novel "Centennial," Michener said his next book will "be at least as long; maybe more contemporary."

But, Michener won't forget Texas' wildlife.

"I love wildlife and I take it very seriously. I would not want to write about any major area without including the wildlife. In Texas, the armadillo, quail, turkey, all wildlife is distinctive to the land."

Although he has a home in Pennsylvania, Michener is living in Austin while researching his book.

"I have to be where there are good books and lots of them," he said, referring to his research.

While he's always done his own research, Michener said this time he has two young graduate students — one well-versed in Texas history, the other in Mexico history — to "help me find the books I need and caution me."

Michener books have sold more than 26 million copies in 53 countries — not one failing despite some critical reviews.

"I really have no fear of doing anything in my writing. It gets no easier, if anything it gets harder. But it's a very joyous occupation."

He said America needs writers desperately.

"It needs women writers and writers from minority groups," the Quaker-trained Michener said. "We want variation. Everybody knows what guys like me can do. They want to know what black writers and woman writers can do.

"When you write 800 pages on a serious theme that 10 to 12 million people read, you really don't need more than that," he said, explaining what he has tried to accomplish in communicating his enthusiasm to others.

Three of his early books, before he turned novelist, are still classics in education: "Who Was Virgil T. Fry?" "The Unit in the Social Studies" and "The Beginning Teacher."

Following Japan's 1941 attack on Pearl Harbor, Michener enlisted in the Navy and served on 49 South Pacific islands, providing the setting for his first novel, "South Pacific."

Of the many books which became movies and two television series, Michener said he was the proudest of the 26-hour "Centennial" production filmed in Colorado.

City Council 'computes' police department's needs

Although Midland's Police Department was a topic of discussion during Tuesday's City Council meeting, the conversation centered more on "computers, bytes and software" than on "crime, busts and hard core."

The council listened to a report from Ray Kendall, who's been studying police operations for the past year with an eye toward increasing efficiency by computerizing Midland's "cop shop."

Kendall, a First National Bank senior vice president who volunteered his time for the study, said equipment and programs needed to bring the department out of the "pen and paper" age and into the world of high technology would cost between $400,000 and $700,000.

He said the system must be capable of handling a variety of administrative functions, paperwork and information, including: computer-aided dispatching, traffic accident and criminal offense reports, arrest processing, records management and some Municipal Court information.

Kendall said that because "I wouldn't want to put the Police Department in the data processing business," the computer vendor must also supply the equipment, programs and training for police personnel.

After reviewing the department's needs and studying Dallas-area police departments which use computers, Kendall solicited proposals from computer vendors.

Eight vendors submitted plans for proposed police computer systems. Kendall said further study narrowed the list to four. Of the four proposals, Burroughs, Sperry Univac and NCR proposed systems involving terminals linked to a large, mainframe computer. The fourth company, Community Technology, proposed a system incorporating stand-alone, mini-computers.

He said that if a Burroughs computer malfunctioned in the police department, the city's data processing equipment — also Burroughs hardware — could be relied on for support.

But Kendall said the important consideration in choosing a computer vendor is not the equipment, but the computer programs available.

"What equipment it runs on really doesn't matter," he said. "For the police to be comfortable on it and use it, that's what's important."

Kendall said depending on the vendor chosen, the system's components and estimated price ranges would include: equipment, $250,000-$300,000; programs, $100,000-$300,000 and installation, $50,000-$100,000.

Annual expense for equipment and program maintenance, supplies and a salaried programmer would be an additional $74,400-$112,800, according to Kendall.

He recommended the city's next step, if it's still interested in computerizing police operations, should be to narrow the eligible computer companies to two and review each closely before choosing a system.

Kendall said it would be about 15 to 18 months after selecting a company before a computer system could be installed and operating.

The council instructed Kendall to continue pursuing the project.

Mayor G. Thane Akins, after thanking Kendall for his effort, said, "I think, without a doubt, this is the path we want to go."

Lufkin bank sues Midland's FNB in loan buy-back dispute

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

Texas National Bank of Lufkin has filed suit in a state district court against First National Bank of Midland for failure to disclose information about a loan recipient and for failing to keep a buy-back agreement on a certificate making up the loan.

The bank, located near Houston, said that FNB used "unconscionable action" when it sold Texas National a $50,000 "Certificate of Participation."

The suit asks for $50,000 plus $7,500 in interest and $15,000 in attorney's fees, said the Lufkin Daily News today.

Guy McCrary, spokesman for FNB, said that his bank had not seen the suit. With no idea of the suit's content, he could not comment on it from FNB's viewpoint.

First National is one of the 10 biggest Texas banks, and one of many energy banks suffering from the weak oil and gas economy. It has recently made efforts to shore up deposits and renegotiate major loans made to financially troubled oilmen.

The Midland bank, according to the suit, did not disclose information about the solvency, prior loan relationship, nor indebtedness of the person receiving the loan.

The loan is believed by some sources to have been made to a former executive of a large independent oil company in Midland.

"...Their failure to disclose such information," the suit said, "was intended to induce (Texas National) into a transaction into which (the bank) would not have entered had the information been disclosed."

The suit said FNB officials promised to buy back the certificate — at any time — when requested to do so by Texas National. The suit said FNB failed to do so.

Lufkin attorney Parker McVicker, who filed the petition, told the Reporter-Telegram that he had few comments outside of the documents. He added, "It seems to me we wouldn't have a problem — and Texas National would be $50,000 richer — if First National Bank would just buy back this certificate like it said it would."

McVicker said, "We filed the lawsuit because of (First National's) failure to buy back a participation on one of their larger borrowers out there."

The papers were filed May 23 in State District Court-Angelina County. Sheriff Dallas Smith will be charged with getting the papers to the bank.

The suit, as filed, consists of a 2½ page legal petition. Other documents are being prepared by the Lufkin attorney.

Trustees debate eligibility rules

Students in Midland may have the highest academic standards in the state — but they may have the worst athletic and other competive teams in the district if a policy discussed Tuesday is approved.

Some trustees felt Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi's recommendation, made during a regular Midland Independent School District Board meeting, is strict enough.

Others, however, felt it wasn't.

On April 12, trustees expressed an interest in placing academic requirements on junior high and freshman students involved in other campus events besides academics. High school students already are governed by University Interscholastic League eligibility requirements.

According to Dr. Duane H. Moore, assistant superintendent of instruction, placing eligibility requirements on junior high and freshman students would make the transition to high school restrictions easier.

THE RECOMMENDATION presented by Moore suggesting seventh through ninth graders would be eligible to participate in extra-curricular activities if they had passed "at least three courses the previous semester, two of which must be in the academic area," was promptly dismissed by trustees as too lenient.

Trustee Joyce Sherrod pointed out a student could make all D's and F's and still be eligible.

Administrators were told to revise the policy and return with more demanding requirements.

Tuesday's recommendation would make students in the seventh through ninth grades ineligible to participate in activities including athletics, band, choir and debate, but excluding elected offices such as cheerleading and student council, if they fail two courses.

Under the recommendation:

—Students may have one F and continue participation in extra-curricular activities. Grades would be monitored by the appropriate person, whether choir or athletic director.

—Eligibility would be recertified each six-weeks period.

—A student failing two courses would be ineligible to participate in competitions each week until the second failing grade is pulled up.

—Seventh grade students would be able to participate the first six-weeks "by virtue of having been promoted."

According to Baressi, placing students on weekly probations would be a good motivational factor. Any excessive length of probation would be discouraging to the students.

Mrs. Sherrod, a former teacher, and Trustees Ann Page and Gary Hopper said they disagreed with the proposed policy.

ONE FAILING grade is too many.

"If you changed that to read no F's, I could easily go along with it," Mrs. Sherrod said. "I feel we have plenty of opportunities available to all students to improve their performance — no matter what their ability is."

"Our main purpose is to present a really good academic background for our students," Mrs. Page said. "By saying it's OK to fail, you're going to have students doing it."

"I believe a student will perform at whatever level you set for them," Mrs. Sherrod said.

The National Weather Service forecasts showers through Thursday from the Southwest to the Northeast. Most areas will be warm.

Chance for thunderstorms noted

The farmers' quest for a good planting rain may be realized tonight or Thursday if the weatherman's odds pay off.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport has forecast a 20 percent chance for thunderstorms tonight and Thursday.

Farmers and ranchers have been without substantial moisture since January, when most of the year's 1.67 inches of moisture came in the form of snow, sleet and freezing rain.

For tonight, the weatherman is predicting a low in the mid-60s. Winds are to be southerly at 10 to 15 mph through Thursday. High Thursday is to be in the upper 80s.

Tuesday's peak temperature of 93 degrees only approached the record high of 102 degrees for the date in 1964. The overnight low was 64 degrees, while the record low for the date was 50 degrees in 1954.

At least seven die in Nile mishap

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A Nile River steamer with 627 people aboard caught fire and sank today in muddy, crocodile-infested waters. Authorities said more than 500 people were picked up by rescue teams and at least seven people were killed.

Interior Ministry spokesman Fakhreddin Khaled said rescue efforts continued 11 hours after the sinking and said there were at least 500 known survivors.

There was no immediate word on what caused the fire, which broke out before dawn on a boat filled mostly with Sudanese and Egyptian passengers traveling south to Sudan.

Mustafa Abdel-Ghafour, general-secretary of the Southern Aswan governate, said he had received a report that some passengers swam ashore and others were being picked up by military helicopters.

Abdel-Ghafour said about two dozen police boats, two army helicopters and about 50 military frogmen had joined the rescue effort, along with fihsermen from nearby towns.

He said 10 doctors flew to the scene with medicine and first aid equipment, and the government sent food and blankets for survivors.

The police sources said the steamer, on a shuttle service between Aswan in southern Egypt and Wadi Halfa in northern Sudan, carried 599 passengers and a crew of 28.

The sources said 547 of the passengers were Sudanese and 48 were Egyptians. The steamer, an old vessel owned by the Nile Valley Co., a joint Egyptian-Sudanese firm, left Aswan on Monday for the 200-mile voyage to Wadi Halfa, a Sudanese river port just south of the border, the sources said.

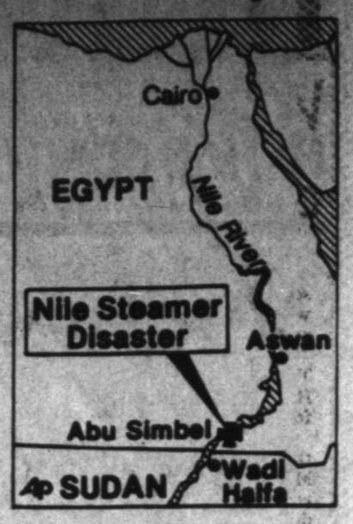

Shortly after 3 a.m. today (8 p.m. Tuesday EDT), they said, fire broke out on board, gutting the steamer and causing it to sink.

The sources said the ship went down about two miles south of the famous Abu Simbel temples of ancient Egyptian Pharaoh Ramses II.

The area where it sank, the sources said, was infested with crocodiles.

Abu Simbel is about 150 miles south of Aswan.

The steamer was named 10 Ramadan, after the lunar Moslem calender date of the start of the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, which at the time coincided with Oct. 6. Ramadan is the Moslem holy month of fasting.

MX approval 'wise, courageous'

Reagan hopes Senate will follow House example

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says House approval of the MX missile is a "wise, courageous step forward for America," and he looks forward to a similar victory when the Senate votes on the giant new nuclear weapon.

The 239-186 House vote Tuesday "sends an important signal to the world: Americans are uniting in a common search to protect our security, reduce the level of nuclear weapons and strengthen the peace," Reagan said. "We now look to the Senate to send this same message."

The Senate was scheduled to vote this afternoon on whether to go ahead with development and testing of the 10-warhead missile Reagan calls the "Peacekeeper."

In a preliminary test of sentiment, the Senate voted 59-35 Tuesday against a Democrat-sponsored attempt to delay a decision until Reagan agrees to an MX basing plan that would involve either moving or hiding the missile from a Soviet first strike.

It was a remarkable turnaround in the House, which last December voted 245-176 against production money for the MX.

Both MX supporters and critics credited Reagan's intensive lobbying with turning around the House vote. The president was calling wavering congressmen until less than an hour before the vote, said White House spokesman Larry Speakes.

Reagan met with dozens of congressmen in the past 10 days and telephoned others. "There has been intense lobbying, particularly by the president," said House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr.

Reagan won some votes by pledging his commitment to arms control efforts and promising to review U.S. proposals to make them compatible with the recommendations of a White House commission on the MX.

Rep. Norman Dicks, D-Wash., said he had changed his mind and would support the missile because of Reagan's "good faith initial effort" to support arms control. "I am convinced the president is personally committed" to trying to reduce the levels of weapons, Dicks said.

The House vote frees the Pentagon to spend $625 million in research and testing money that was approved, but frozen, last December when Congress rejected an administration MX basing plan for a second time.

Still to come in the next few weeks are House and Senate votes on whether to go ahead with production of the missile.

After the December defeat, the White House commission appointed by Reagan proposed putting 100 MX weapons in existing Minuteman silos near Cheyenne, Wyo. It also recommended development of a new single-warhead missile and a change in arms control aims to limit warheads rather than launchers.

During more than three hours of debate, House critics charged again and again that the latest basing plan would not protect the weapons from a Soviet strike and said it would move the world closer to nuclear war.

But supporters responded that the MX is needed to demonstrate American resolve and force Soviet concessions in arms control talks between the two superpowers.

The MX missiles "can be eloquent testimony to our will" to upgrade America's aging land-based deterrent, said House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill.

Echoing Reagan's view, Rep. Dan Daniel, D-Va., said "This may very well be the last opportunity to force the Russians to the bargaining table."

But Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Ore., said, "this is the moment the genie leaves the bottle unless we exercise our good judgement and keep it in the bottle."

MX opponents argued that the missile was unnecessary because of other new nuclear weapons being developed and deployed by the United States, including the Trident submarine, cruise missiles, and the B-1 and Stealth bombers.

Supporters countered that, however, by saying that only the MX would have the necessary accuracy to threaten the Soviets' growing land-based missile force.

The MX will give the United States "a near certain ability to destroy targets they (the Soviets) consider vital," said Rep. John Porter, R-Ill.

Showers develop

By The Associated Press

A weak low pressure trough pumped unstable air into Southwest Texas today, producing showers and thunderstorms from near Abilene to San Angelo, while light fog developed in southern sections.

Scattered rainshowers were also falling over the Davis Mountains near Alpine. Elsewhere in the state, partly cloudy to cloudy skies prevailed except for a band of clear skies from Austin to Laredo on the Rio Grande.

Afternoon and evening showers and thundershowers were expected to develop in northern, central and western sections of the state through Thursday. Temperatures could reach above 100 degrees in the desert southwest.

Local businessman arrested

A Midland businessman has been arrested in connection with last week's armed robbery at a downtown investment brokerage firm.

Being held this morning in Las Vegas, Nev., was 36-year-old Willie Byers, who gave authorities an address of Route 3, Midland.

He was arrested in Las Vegas Tuesday night on a warrant issued by Midland police, according to Det. Lt. Early Luckey of the Midland Police Department.

Byers, owner of Wild Willie's Video Parlors, is charged with Friday's armed robbery of Glenn Little, president of Little & Co. Investment Securities at 300 W. Wall Ave.

Little told police a man came into his office about 9:15 a.m. Friday and took $900 in cash after cocking a large caliber handgun and pointing it at Little's head.

The man told Little the money was owed him by the company that employs Little's wife.

It is not known if Byers will waive extradition or when he will be returned to Midland, according to Luckey.

One killed, another hurt in accident

ODESSA — One man was killed and another injured in a two-vehicle accident near here about 8:30 a.m. Tuesday.

Pronounced dead on arrival at Medical Center Hospital was Eleazar Bracamonte, 61, of Juarez, Mexico. In stable condition this morning at MCH was 30-year-old Dale Leroy Delzer of 700 N. Golder, Odessa.

Bracamonte was southbound on U.S. Highway 385 and attempting to turn left onto Texas Highway 158 when his 1980 Chevrolet Suburban and a 1982 Ford pickup truck driven by Delzer collided at the intersection.

Delzer, who suffered broken bones, was northbound on 385 at the time. Bracamonte's body was taken to the Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home in Odessa.

Midland woman injured in mishap

A rural Midland woman was in serious condition at Midland Memorial Hospital this morning after the car she was driving went out of control and rolled over early Tuesday afternoon.

Betty Flowers Porter, 46, of Route 7, Midland, suffered a broken back and a broken left leg in the accident, which occurred at 1:25 p.m. Tuesday on the Garden City Highway.

According to the Department of Public Safety, she was westbound in a 1982 Datsun when a passenger, 3-year-old Michael Porter, grabbed the steering wheel. The car veered off the road and rolled over one time, throwing her from the vehicle.

The boy, believed to be her grandson, was released following treatment for minor injuries, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

Man stable after suffering shock

A Big Spring man was in stable condition at Midland Memorial Hospital after suffering a severe electrical shock while working on power lines at the intersection of Big Spring Street and Golf Course Road this morning.

Weldon Trammell, a 34-year-old employee of Caldwell Electric Co. in Big Spring, was at work about 9 a.m. when he apparently touched a primary line that reportedly sent 7,200 volts of electricity into his head and out his left hand.

A spokeswoman for the firm, which does contract work for Texas Electric Service Co., said company officials were not immediately certain what caused the accident.

Police respond to pawn shop alarm

Police responding to a burglar alarm at Alamo Pawn Shop, 2705 W. Wall Ave., shortly after 4 a.m. this morning found that a rear door had been pried open and about 30 handguns had been stolen. No dollar loss was immediately available.

In a burglary complaint to police, Timothy Hardin of 5101 N. A St. said $2,100 worth of camping gear and household goods was taken from a storage shed at 3600 N. Big Spring St. The burglary occurred sometime in the past two weeks.

"When they're out there working in everyday life, running track isn't going to help them," Hopper said. "I can't go with an F and I want (the policy to include grades) seven through twelve."

According to Baressi, MISD's high school standards already are stricter than others in the district because MISD requires more academic courses for graduation.

HE POINTED OUT Ector County Independent School District trustees recently raised their graduation requirements to 20 credits. MISD already requires 22 credits and more solid courses.

"I'd like to caution the board on several areas," Trustee Parker Humes said. "I think all any of us wants is a fair chance to compete. But I don't want to be responsible for tying their (coaches') hands and then firing them for not having a good record.

"Also, I agree on how important extra-curricular activities are in getting people involved in school and, on marginal students, keeping them in school...

"Joe (Baressi) has got a good recommendation here," Humes continued. "He's making (requirements) more strict than anyone in our district. But let's give them a fair chance to compete. Now, I'm talking about athletics, but I'm also talking about keeping the students in school."

Trustee Joe Golding agreed.

"Our standards already are as strong as everybody else's in the district," Golding said. "And I, like Joe (Barresi) feel they're stronger because we require more solids. But I don't ever want to place our students in competitive whatever with a disadvantage.

"ONCE A STUDENT reaches the age of 17, he can drop out," Golding continued. "I think we have lots of students on that level they continue to go to school because of (involvement in other activities)."

Golding said the number of students dropping out would increase. Not only is that disadvantageous to those students, but the district loses state funds based on average daily attendance.

"And money is important now," he said.

"Do you feel we have the right to make ours (requirements) more stricter than any other school district?" he later asked Mrs. Sherrod.

"Yes," she said, adding "extracurricular activities for too long have been in the forefront of academics," and that has been "a national disease."

Humes pointed out the number of football players who were "marginal students" and "probably wouldn't have seen the doorstep of a college," had it not been for football scholarships.

Mrs. Page maintained if a student really wanted to participate in athletics or any other activity, there should be enough motivation to seek ways to improve academic grades.

"I know for sure there was one football player everyone wanted to play," Mrs. Page said. "I know for a fact that students escorted him to class to make sure he'd meet eligibility requirements and I think that's positive."

Mrs. Sherrod said students who go to class and express interest in making good grades will improve academically. She added tutoring services offered at no charge by members of the National Honor Societies could be used and that the entire high school counseling program must be revised.

"WE HAVE THE system," she said. "All we need is to have the students commit (themselves to academic efforts)."

While some trustees said they felt elected offices shouldn't be placed under the academic requirements, other said they should.

"I think we should have it consistent," Mrs. Page said.

"I think an elected office is different from an elective you choose to take," Golding said.

Mrs. Page said a cheerleader is the same as an athlete. Those running for cheerleader must train themselves and then they decide to place their names in front of the student body.

Trustee Ron Britton, in an admittedly unusual move, suggested a compromise.

He recommended all elected offices and elective activities be included in the proposed policy. Also included would be a clause stating the policy sets the minimum standards but other organizations may have higher academic requirements.

He also suggested allowing a phase-in period, giving all students eligibility the first six-weeks in the fall. Stating he is against allowing any F's, he suggested letting students who fail one course maintain eligibility next year as a phase-in to the policy. Next March, the board should be allowed to vote on whether to implement the "No F" ruling.

"I think there ought to be some flexibility to give students time to respond," he said.

Under Britton's compromise, students in the seventh through twelfth grades will be included in the basic standards.

Baressi said he would re-draft the recommendation and present it at the June 14 meeting.

Students in all grade levels equal or better their test scores

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Results of the California Achievement Test indicate Midland Independent School District students continue to improve their test scores each year.

"Without exception, in every grade level and in every subtest, we have equaled or bettered last year's test," Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi told school trustees during a regular meeting Tuesday.

Also of interest was the indication that test scores of minority students were improving, Trustee Parker Humes pointed out.

"When we went into this whole desegegration bit, this is one thing we said we were going to do," Humes said. "And we've brought the minorities up without pushing the Anglos down."

"It's a positive trend," Dr. Duane Moore, assistant superintendent of instruction, said. "The test scores are as high or higher than they've been during this period of time."

During the past six years, students who are classified in the high group, or having IQs of 115-150, have grown and now double the amount of students in the middle (IQs of 96-104) and low group (IQs of 60-85).

"Six years ago, that was a complete reversal," Moore said.

According to reading scores made by third graders in 1977-78, Anglos gained one-year, three months in achievement. Black third graders gained at a nine-month level and Hispanic students gained at a one-year level. This year, results from scores of third graders show more even gains: one-year, two-months for Anglos, one-year, one-month for Blacks and one-year, two-months for Hispanics.

In math, tests taken in 1977-78 by third graders showed a gain of one-year, three-months for Anglos, seven-months for Blacks, and eight-months for Hispanics. Today's third graders showed achievement gains of one-year, three-months for Anglos and one-year, two-months for Blacks and Hispanics.

District totals showed Midland students scored higher than the national norm. While the norm is 100 on the cognizant skills index (CSI) Midland students scored as follows: third graders, 103.9; fourth graders, 104.3; fifth graders, 105.2; sixth grade, 103.9; seventh grade, 103.4; eighth grade, 103.7; ninth grade, 106.6; and tenth grade, 103.3.

Actual achievement gains met or passed anticipated gains at all levels, the report indicated. Also improving was the number of students in the lower percentile of each grade.

Moore attributed the high scores to the quality education provided by teachers, the committment of administrators and the community.

Administration holds no great expectations for summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even with an agenda crowded with such weighty issues as economic recovery, poor nations' debts and Soviet trade, the Reagan administration is billing this weekend's economic summit as a humdrum event.

"If Williamsburg goes as we expect, it will be a 'dog-bites-man' story, not the more dramatic 'man-bites-dog' story that would make good headlines," says W. Allen Wallis, under secretary of state for economic affairs and a key planner of the summit of the leaders of Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, West Germany, the United States and the European Economic Community.

The intention is to avoid building up expectations that won't be met — and to avoid a re-run of last year's Versailles summit which was marked by acrimony and disappointing results.

"It is not a summit likely to disappoint expectations because, alas, there are no expectations of great things at that summit," observes Shridath Ramphal, secretary-general of the Commonwealth, an association of nations once known as the British Commonwealth.

Former State Department official Robert Hormats says the administration may be downplaying the event too much.

"Williamsburg runs the risk of a collective attempt to do too little" and could be a "missed opportunity" for the leaders, says Hormats, who helped plan the previous eight summits.

"The world is looking to Williamsburg, not for miracles or quick-fixes, but for a sense of direction, common resolve to strengthen the world economy, and a strategy for doing so," he said in congressional testimony Tuesday.

In a key departure from the past, administration planners, acting under orders from the president, say they haven't drafted a possible communique that could be released by the participants at the end of the gathering.

This close to a summit, Wallis jokes, previous planners were on the third draft of a final communique.

"President Reagan has felt that too much time in summits is devoted to language and, not being fortunate enough to be an English major, he doesn't like to deal in such precise terminology and the like," explains Treasury Secretary Donald Regan.

"Accordingly, he would rather have the discussions and then later have the communique reveal what was said, not have to say certain things because that's what's already in the communique," he adds.

There will be a final statement that is expected to evolve from the discussions held over the 2 12-day meeting.

The statement will likely say, at the very least, that the leaders intend to work together to ensure the fledging economic recovery continues.

Woman astronaut says 'women can do any job they want to do'

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Sally Ride, scheduled next month to become America's first woman astronaut in space, says it's time "people realize women can do any job they want to do."

Ms. Ride, who appeared at a news conference Tuesday with her four crewmates for the seventh flight of the space shuttle, chided reporters for focusing so much attention on her gender.

"It's too bad this society isn't farther along and this is still such a big deal," said the 31-year-old Ms. Ride. "It is time in this country that people realize that women can do any job they want to do."

Ms. Ride was the target of most questions even though her crewmates — mission commander Robert Crippen, 45; pilot Frederick Hauck, 42; mission specialist Norman Thagard, 39; and John Fabian, 44 — were also present.

To a reporter who asked if she wept when things went wrong, Ms. Ride asked, "Why doesn't anybody ask Rick (Hauck) these questions?"

She added that she reacts to problems just as "anybody else on the crew does."

Ms. Ride, who is married to astronaut Steven Hawley, said she worked with men while earning a Ph.D. in astrophysics at Stanford and is accustomed to being treated as an equal.

"I don't think I have been deferred to in any way," she said. "In fact, 'Cripp' (Crippen) won't even open doors for me anymore."

"I learned that right away," Crippen said.

The mission, the second for the spacecraft Challenger, is scheduled for launch June 18 and will last six days.

During the mission, Ms. Ride and Fabian will launch two communications satellites. They will also use a robot arm to release and recapture a free-flying experiment satellite twice.

Sally Ride

Ms. Ride's responsibilities also include acting as flight engineer. She will sit in a chair between Crippen and Hauck during the launch and landing phases of the mission and will monitor the spacecraft's systems.

Thagard, who is a medical doctor, was added to the mission only a few months ago to conduct experiments on space adaptation syndrome.

Horses died of malnutrition, vets say

MARSHALL (AP) — Several horses found on a Camp County ranch died of malnutrition, not a contagious viral infection, two veterinarians testified in federal court.

Dr. Herman Bruechner of Mount Pleasant and Dr. John Morton of Brownsboro testified Tuesday at the trial of Pittsburg rancher Joe Corbett, charged with abandonment and inhumane treatment of three wild horses. Testimony was to resume today.

The three were among 38 dead horses and dozens of malnourished ones discovered last November. Federal authorities seized the horses and kept them at Black Beauty Ranch in Brownsboro until they were healthy enough to be distributed to area ranchers.

Bruechner said he found no evidence of the infectious disease "equine infectious anemia" in 13 horses he examined at Corbett's ranch. He said none of the horses had enlarged spleens or small hemorrhages on their mouths or noses, the usual symptoms of the viral infection. The disease is transmitted by insects and results in anemia, weight loss and weakness.

Defense attorney Edward McFarland asked Bruechner whether the horses could have contracted the disease from two infected animals previously in the herd.

Bruechner replied that while such evidence normally would indicate a possibility of infection, the horses' condition led him to conclude they were not infected.

The doctor also said he found four to five pounds of sand on the land. Starving horses often eat sand and parasite infestation often results from malnutrition, he added.

McFarland has argued that disease and environmental changes, not intentional mistreatment, caused the wild horses' deaths at the Camp County ranch.

McFarland asked Morton why the horses were not given blood tests to check for the disease, commonly know as "swamp fever."

Morton said the horses were not tested because they did not have symptoms of the disease.

Tissue samples taken from three dead horses also revealed no evidence of the virus, he said.

House, Senate agree on PUC

AUSTIN (AP) — House and Senate differences in operations of the Public Utility Commission have been ironed out by a 10-member conference committee but each house must give its final okay.

The compromise was adopted 8-0 Tuesday to continue operations of the PUC for the next 12 years with a special attorney to represent consumers in electric, telephone, water and sewer rate hearings.

The measure includes a prohibition of automatic increases in electric utility bills for fuel costs, creates a public utility counsel to represent consumers in electric and telephone rate increase hearings, and requires regional public hearings on rate increase requests.

It does not include an elected PUC body as advocated by Gov. Mark White. The three members will be appointed by the governor subject to confirmation by the Senate.

Neither does the compromise bill touch on regulation of natural gas utility rates, which currently lie with local governments and the Texas Railroad Commission.

"I believe this is a good bill that will serve our people well now and in the future," said Sen. Ed Howard, D-Texarkana.

The final approval of the compromise was delayed by a House resolution asking the conference committee to consider shifting the regulations of water and sewer utility rates from PUC to the Texas Water Commission. The Senate did not approve a similar resolution.

Since the proposal to transfer water and sewer regulation was not in either the House or Senate bills the 10-member conference committee could not consider it without a special resolution from each house.

Senate passes bill requiring reports on prisoners' deaths

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill that would require reports within 20 days on anyone who dies while in the custody of local or state law enforcement officials cleared the Senate on Tuesday.

Senators passed the House-approved measure on voice vote and sent it to the governor to be signed into law.

Sen. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, said the bill was needed because "there have been a number of deaths at facilities in the past, and it is important to get the information to the attorney general."

Doggett said Attorney General Jim Mattox supported the bill.

House OKs liquor import bill

AUSTIN (AP) — The House on Tuesday tentatively approved a measure that could cut into the long-time practice of crossing the Mexican border to buy booze to bring back into Texas.

Rep. Charles Evans' bill would allow only Mexican-produced alcoholic beverages to be brought into Texas.

The bill won 86-41 approval, but faces another vote before Senate review.

In committee hearings earlier this year, Texas liquor distributors testified in favor of the bill. Supporters complained that some beverages are far cheaper in Mexico. For example, a blended foreign whiskey selling for $6.95 in Juarez, Mexico, costs $11.29 across the border in El Paso, according to a bill analysis.

Senate approves 'nightcap' sales

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate approved a bill Tuesday that would allow the late-hour sale of beer and mixed drinks in five more counties.

Sen. Tati Santiesteban, D-El Paso, said the counties affected would be Cameron, Hidalgo, Jefferson, Lubbock and Nueces.

Currently, for a county with a population of less than 300,000 to qualify for sales from mid night to 2 a.m. every day, it must be done by order of the commissioner's court or adoption of a city ordinance by the governing body of the city.

The bill would lower the population to 200,000.

Senate OKs raising allowance

AUSTIN (AP) — Senators approved a proposa Tuesday that would raise legislators' dail expense allowance during legislative session from $30 to $75 a day.

The proposed constitutional amendmen already has cleared the House and will be submit ted to the voters at a statewide election on Nov. 6, 1984.

Tax bill may require special session

AUSTIN (AP) — Chances for a special session of the Legislature to take up a tax bill appeared stronger than ever today, although Gov. Mark White — the only man who can call one — has not said yet what he intends to do.

He has insisted on a 24 percent pay raise for schoolteachers and wants a tax bill to pay for it. He's shown a willingness to tax anything from gasoline to alcohol, from movie tickets to cigarettes.

For the regular session, which ends Monday night at midnight, time has simply run out for White's plan.

But Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, the chairman of the only legislative committee authorized to consider a tax bill, said he would help White get a tax bill through during a special session, probably in July.

"I had a meeting with the governor (Tuesday) and volunteered my services to help him put together a package if we did have a special session," said Schlueter, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

"If the governor worked closely with the members of the Legislature and allowed us a time frame to get ready for a special session, very possibly and very likely there would be an agreed package," he said.

Earlier Tuesday, White accused House members of "putting alcohol and tobacco in front of education" and hinted he would call them back into session if they did not OK his tax plan.

White's criticism came a day after major portions of his latest proposed tax package were shot down by Schlueter's committee.

"We've laid out all these alternatives for them. I am waiting for them to act. I don't understand what objection they have to taxing alcohol in the House. They have steadfastly put alcohol and tobacco in front of education," White said.

Schlueter said it was "virtually impossible" to approve a tax bill during the remaining days in the regular session.

But White said there was still enough time. "I'd like to see them get their work done within the time alloted by the constitution. We hope we don't have to keep them after school."

Gov. Mark White

The Legislature meets in regular session for 140 days every odd-numbered year, but the governor has the power to summon lawmakers back to the Capitol any time he wishes for up to 30 days at a time. During special sessions, lawmakers may only consider items submitted by the governor.

Quarantine could cost $100 million

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas cattle industry could lose between $80 million and $100 million this year because of a breeding cattle quarantine ordered by federal agricultural officials, an industry official says.

But the Texas Senate could abort the planned quarantine by passing legislation later this week that would bring Texas in compliance with federal regulations.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture Tuesday announced a quarantine to be imposed June 1 because the state lacks legal authority to test herds suspected of having brucellosis, a bacterial disease that causes abortions in cattle.

If implemented, the quarantine could result in higher beef prices at the supermarket in about one year, officials said.

Frates Seeligson, president of the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, said the quarantine could mean $80 million to $100 million in lost revenues for the Texas livestock industry.

"If they quarantine the state, a purebreed man or registered producer would not be able to move cattle out of the state or into a foreign country," he said. "Obviously, the animals would all have to be sold right here in Texas. And because there would be more here, then the price would go down."

OTHER RANCHERS SAID, however, that the possible impact of a U.S. Agriculture Department order will not be known until its regulations are published and distributed as scheduled today.

"We must go forward with eradication of this costly disease. It's important to both the livestock industry and to public health," said S.M. True Jr., a Plainview farmer and president of the Texas Farm Bureau.

"An embargo of Texas cattle would have drastic economic results for Texas producers," said True.

Fred McClure, legislative director to U.S. Sen. John Tower, said the quarantine "can have an impact nationwide on the meat supply...but it might take a while to work its way through the system."

"Down the road it could" have an impact on the meat supply, McClure said. "You're talking about months down the road. Almost definitely it would be a year."

On Monday, Tower urged the Senate to approve the brucellosis bill, which would bring the state's prevention program into compliance with federal regulations.

Senate passage of the brucellosis legislation would mean that "the quarantine would undoubtedly be avoided. It's really an issue that is now in the hands of the state legislature," McClure said.

THE LEGISLATION is two votes short of the 21, or two-thirds majority, required to bring it before the full Senate.

The bill's sponsor, Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, said he believes the quarantine announcement will give him the necessary votes. Glasgow said he will try to bring the bill to a vote Thursday or Friday after his colleagues have time to assess the impact of the USDA's action.

Ranch industry groups have been divided on the bill, some opposing it as an costly and unneeded intrusion into their business.

The Legislative session ends Monday at midnight, 24 hours before the quarantine would take effect.

Doug Zabel, a spokesman for Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, said, "the timing is certainly curious on the thing. They announced it today with just a few days left on the Legislative session. But it will not take effect until the day after."

Also known as Bang's disease, brucellosis causes abortions or weakened offspring to livestock, and poses no danger to consumers of meat and pasteurized dairy products.

THE USDA SAID the disease can be transmitted as undulant fever to slaughter plant workers and others in contact with infected animals or their freshly killed carcasses.

Larry Mark, a spokesman for the USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, said other states expressed concern to the federal agency about the cattle situation in Texas.

"We are concerned with breeding cattle from the standpoint of the disease spreading to other cattle," said Mark.

Mark said the quarantine is "not going to cause any shortage in meat supplies for the consumer."

A cattle auctioneer said many ranchers are uncertain of the impact of the planned quarantine until the USDA publishes the brucellosis regulations.

"It depends on what the regulations are," said Phil Fletcher, general manager of the Amarillo Livestock Auction Co. "The way we operate now, most heifers have to be vaccinated, go to a quarantined feedyard or be bled and Bangs tested and cleaned.

"It looks as if they go to full-fledged regulations from the USDA, it could hurt our small heifer sales," Fletcher said. "The primary thing we need to do is to find out what the final regulations are to be."

Brows rise as clothing, drinking habits change

NEW YORK (AP) — Back in 1949, America's highbrows wore fuzzy tweed suits. Now they wear turtlenecks and jeans. Watching the ballet was fine then, but films from India and Japan are preferred now.

Of course, the lowbrows wore old Army clothes and watched Westerns. Now they favor T-shirts and TV game shows.

Russell Lynes is at it again.

The societal explorer who invented those classifications re-examines America's taste buds in the June issue of American Heritage magazine. And he offers a modern version of the chart he concocted 34 years ago for Life magazine.

In that chart, and in an essay for Harper's magazine, Lynes categorized Americans as Highbrow, Upper-Middlebrow, Lower-Middlebrow and Lowbrow — all according to taste.

The upper-middlebrow, for example, wore a Brooks Brothers suit and regimental tie while the lower-middlebrow preferred a splashy tie with a double-breasted suit.

Now, Lynes says, the upper-middlebrow favors blazers and gray flannel slacks. The lower-middlebrow? "What would you say to a Madras jacket?" Lynes asks.

For entertainment, "Live from Lincoln Center" replaces theater among today's upper-middlebrow and "Johnny Carson" has unseated musical extravaganza films for the lower-middlebrow.

Drinking habits have changed, too. In 1949, it was not important for a highbrow to buy expensive wine when an "adequate little red wine" would do, Lynes wrote. Now a good jug wine is preferred, he says.

Chilled white wine has replaced the martini among the upper-middlebrows, and the lower middlebrow prefers red wine on ice. The lowbrow drink in 1949 was beer; now its light beer.

Highbrow reading material included avant garde literature; now highbrows read The New York Review of Books. Upper-middlebrows read novels now, like "The World According to Garp," while lower-middlebrows read "all those how-to books on sex, cats and so on." Lowbrows read The National Enquirer.

In the category of useful objects, the upper-middlebrow's silver cigarette box is gone. "What shall we substitute? A Cuisinart? Souvenir ashtrays from European restaurants? I think so," Lynes says.

The highbrow now finds the full-size Oxford English Dictionary useful. His and Hers towels remain the lower-middlebrow's object; the lowbrow now has the CB radio.

Lynes, 72, writes a regular column for Architectural Digest. He was managing editor of Harper's for 25 years and among his books are "Snobs," "Guests," and "The Tastemakers."

The reaction to his chart 34 years ago "was a nice demonstration of how self-conscious people are about their taste," Lynes says.

Business students to invest

When business students studying investments at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro make their investment decisions next fall, they will be backing them up with $10,000.

It will be the first time UNC-G students have used real money in the portfolio-management course, says David Shelton, dean of the School of Business and Economics.

"Making investment decisions in the classroom with real money will be very effective," Shelton said. "It will make the students very aware of what they're doing and make them make better decisions."

The $10,000 is a gift to the school from Greensboro businessman Michael Weaver. The course will be offered beginning next fall through the Master of Business Administration degree program.

Without the use of real money, students in the course would be assigned to do research on investments, then simulate the purchase of model portfolios.

The 35 graduate students in the portfolio-management class will be allowed to invest the entire $10,000. Any profits from their investments will remain in the fund. At the end of the semester, the account may be liquidated and the money placed in a money-market fund.

The money also may remain invested during summer and semester breaks.

"If the fund is wildly successful over the years, say it grows to 10 times over the original amount, the surplus could be used to buy books and other supplies for the class," Shelton said. "Or it could be reinvested. We'll look at that when the time comes."

The course is one of only two such courses offered in the state. A similar course is offered at UNC at Chapel Hill, which Weaver said convinced him to offer the same type of learning experience to Greensboro students.

"It (the money) made a big difference in the students' enthusiasm in class," said Weaver, president of W.H. Construction Co.

Shelton said instructors will set up guidelines for investments, then let students make their own decisions. He said investments will be made only after necessary research.

Investment committees will be formed in the class to do research and monitor portfolios. Professors will critique the results.

"It's like playing poker for pennies or matchsticks," Shelton said. "The pennies add a whole lot of interest to the game."

Experts track AIDS discovery, events

NEW YORK (AP) — Here is a chronology of events in the discovery and tracking of AIDS, the acquired immune deficiency syndrome:

1979:

Doctors in New York and California begin seeing young homosexual men with Kaposi's sarcoma (a rare cancer usually found only in men over 50) and a rare form of pneumonia caused by a parasite called Pneumocystis carinii. The cases are believed to be unrelated.

1981:

April — Doctors realize for the first time they are dealing with an emerging epidemic. They alert the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

June — The CDC reports five cases of Pneumocystis pneumonia have been found in homosexual men. Two have died.

July — The CDC reports that 20 homosexual men in New York and six in California have been found to have Kaposi's sarcoma.

August — 70 more homosexual men have been struck by either Kaposi's sarcoma or Pneumocystis pneumonia.

December — A report in the New England Journal of Medicine traces the diseases to a mysterious breakdown of the immune system in the patients.

1982:

March — Doctors in San Francisco report outbreaks in homosexuals of two other rare cancers — Burkitt's lymphoma and squamous carcinoma of the tongue.

June — Other unusual cancers are found in homosexual men. The CDC warns the disease is reaching epidemic proportions in heterosexuals and homosexuals. Doctors speculate that drug use and frequent sex with strangers are contributing factors.

July — Immune breakdowns reported in Haitian immigrants and hemophiliacs. By now, 450 cases of the immune disorder have been reported.Thirty-nine percent of the victims have died within one year of diagnosis; 70 to 80 percent have died two years after diagnosis.

August — The National Cancer Institute sets aside $2.2 million for research on the disorder.

September — Immune disorders found in many otherwise healthy homosexuals.

October — Dr. James Curran, head of CDC's AIDS task force, says researchers suspect AIDS is caused by a virus.

November — CDC warns health care workers to wash their hands, wear gloves and take other precautions when handling lab specimens from people suspected of having AIDS.

December — Doctors speculate AIDS is caused by unknown virus imported from Haiti.AIDS found in 20-month-old boy who had received blood transfusions.

1983:

January — Evidence grows that some apparently healthy people are AIDS carriers. Heterosexual relations believed to transmit the disease.

February — AIDS-like illness found in monkeys. Scientists say this could speed search for cause and cure.

March — Researchers find hormone imbalance and various other physical signs that could lead to methods for early diagnosis of AIDS.

April 28 — Speculation that AIDS is caused by African swine fever virus, imported to United States by New York homosexuals vacationing in Haiti.

Judge orders film disclaimers off

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A federal judge has ordered the government to stop requiring disclaimers on three Canadian films about nuclear war and acid rain that the U.S. Justice Department considered political propaganda.

The films are "If You Love This Planet," an Academy Award winner on the medical consequences of nuclear war, and "Acid Rain: Requiem or Recovery," and "Acid From Heaven," which describe the damage caused by sulfur dioxide mixed with rain. All were produced by the National Film Board of Canada.

Critics of the disclaimers accused the government of reacting to Canadian criticism of pollution from U.S. industries and debates over the nuclear arms race.

After a hearing Monday, U.S. District Judge Raul A. Ramirez granted state Sen. Barry Keene's request for a preliminary injunction against requiring the disclaimer.

The disclaimers, ordered under the 1938 Foreign Agents Registration Act, were required to say that the films were prepared by registered foreign agents and the contents were not necessarily approved by the U.S. government. Distributors must report the names of theaters and television stations that show the film.

A suit similar to Keene's has been filed in Washington, D.C., by the American Civil Liberties Union.

Another planet believed sighted

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post New Service

What may be the first planet so far found outside the solar system has been sighted in the Milky Way Galaxy by a team of University of California, Santa Cruz, astronomers.

The Santa Cruz team is calling the object TIRC (pronounced turk) for T-Tauri Infrared Companion. If subsequent research confirms it as a planet, it will be one more like Jupiter or Saturn than Earth or Mars. It would provide science with a glimpse into how some planets are formed, a process that has generated endless theory but is based on very little hard evidence.

TIRC appears to be a gigantic, gassy companion to its sun, a star known to astronomers as T-Tauri, which is some 450 light-years away from the solar system. One light-year is the distance that a photon, traveling at a speed of 186,000 miles per second, will cover in a year's time; it is approximately 6 trillion miles.

Working from optical, radio and infrared measurements made in the last year or two by colleagues at the Lick Observatory outside Santa Cruz, the Very Large Array radio telescope in New Mexico and the Mauna Kea telescope in Hawaii, respectively, UC Santa Cruz theoretical astronomer Douglas N.C. Lin realized that the companion object was too cool and too faint to be a second star.

From its temperature and its luminosity, Lin calculated the mass of the object and determined that it was approximately 10 times denser than Jupiter — the biggest planet in the solar system — but still not enough to be a star.

"It's not dense enough at its core for nuclear fusion to occur," Lin said, "and if fusion reactions do not take place, then by definition it isn't a star. It's a planet."

Other scientists received the claim of planethood for TIRC with cautious approval. "It's a stronger claim than others that have been made in the past," California Institute of Technology Professor David J. Stevenson said, "because at least they've seen something directly."

Patrick Cassen, chief of theoretical studies for the space agency's Ames Research Center near San Francisco, added: "It's a reasonable guess on Doug's (Lin) part, but it's premature at this point to call it a planet. It could still turn out to be a very small star."

But the data received so far suggest that Lin's claim may be valid. The observations from the telescopes point to an object that has a diameter of perhaps 275,000 to 325,000 miles, which would make it three or four times larger than Jupiter, but with perhaps 10 times more mass. Its photosphere — that shell from which photons of visible light are scattered — is on the order of 25 million miles across, which would make it about 30 times larger than the sun's comparable layer.

"Don't get the two confused," Lin cautioned. "The photosphere is what we see. The object itself is a lot smaller than that." Venus, for example, has an atmosphere that is bigger than the planet itself, but it is the Venusian cloud cover that is seen from Earth and not the planet's surface itself.

"(TIRC's) photosphere has a temperature of about 800 degrees Kelvin (around 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit) and a luminosity about 1 1-2 times that of our own sun," Lin said in a telephone interview Monday.

School secretary fired for appearing nude

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio (AP) — An elementary school secretary who appeared nude in an amateur photo section of the June issue of Hustler magazine has been fired by the city school board.

The decision to fire Mary-Kate Haney, a 20-year-old secretary at Highlands Elementary School, was made by the board Monday afternoon in an emergency session.

By permitting the publication of "her nude photograph and text concerning certain aspects of her sexual conduct," she exhibited "immoral conduct, neglect of duty and failure of good behavior," said a board statement.

Ms. Haney's lawyer, James Lagos, was refusing comment on the case Monday, said a secretary at his law firm.

"I think the board feels school children shouldn't come into contact with something like this," said board President Sam Lambert.

He said that if Ms. Haney's job did not require contact with children, the board might have made a different decision.

She was suspended last Wednesday, the day after Highlands Principal Richard Yontz was told about the photo by a telephone caller.

Her photograph appeared in amateur photo section of the men's magazine. The section pays $50 per photo that is published.

Hustler usually does not pay legal fees for people who pose in the magazine, said David Kahn, the magazine's general counsel.

Town is 'Greenwich village on Danube'

SZENTENDRE, Hungary (AP) — Greek-style music pouring out of amplifiers permeates the center of town. But the sunshine, if there is any, is nowhere near as intense as the Greek sun. The waterfront is not the Aegean or the Adriatic, but the Danube. The announcements that alternate with the music are in Hungarian.

The town is Szentendre, population 17,000, about a dozen miles upstream from Budapest.

Why the Greek music? One could chalk it up to the almost zany reality of Szentendre that makes it a sort of New York Greenwich Village on the Danube. It's a very active artists' town, with museums galore and stores selling all kinds of craftwork.

But this is also a medieval Greenwich Village, whose narrow, cobbled streets, many open only to pedestrians, baroque and rococo houses in all colors, and churches of many architectures, including the Orthodox "onion dome," carry centuries of history into the present.

The Greek music isn't as zany as one might think, either. For the Greeks played a role in the history of Szentendre, as did the Serbs, Bosnians, Dalmatians and Albanians. They all fled to the region from the advancing Turks in the 15th, 16th and 17th centuries. The Serbs particularly were a dominating influence in the town's artistic heritage, although only a handful remain in the area.

Szentendre — named for the apostle St. Andrew — first appears in records in 1146. The first church, we're told, was built in the 13th century. Until the early 14th century, the town was owned by the bishops of Veszprem. The people of the region grew fruit, especially grapes. But even then, some arts and crafts were produced.

In the late 19th century, blight hit the grape crop, and Szentendre turned to small industry — but also became Budapest's fruit bowl, growing a wide variety of fruit for the nearby city.

But for the average visitor, it's the center of town and the banks of the Danube that are the focus of attention.

Hungarians pour into town for a jaunt on a weekend by train or on the Danube riverboat from Budapest. Their T-shirts with legends like "University of Georgia" and "San Jose, California" contribute to the Greenwich Village atmosphere.

So do all the handicrafts for sale, including those draped across the front steps and front door of one of the famous churches. And so does the fact that people spend so much of their time just walking around and looking — and, of course, eating. The restaurants tucked into the baroque houses often have back yards for dining al fresco, and serve Greek and Serbian as well as traditional Hungarian cuisine.

A band may set itself up outside one of the eateries. And on summer evenings, there may be an outdoor play on the main square.

The visitor seeking to get away from the bustle can go into one of the churches or museums, including the Serbian Orthodox Cathedral and the Greek Orthodox Church. One museum is a collection of Serbian ecclesiastical art. Others give a good idea of how Hungarian artists reacted to such movements as impressionism.

And perhaps the most popular museum is the home of the Hungarian ceramics artist Margit Kovacs, who died in 1977 and whose work is collected there. Her philosophy as an artist: "Everybody breathes his soul into his work, his laughter, his joy and his grief. And how wonderful."

She found all three, but it's her sense of humor that predominates. She can depict pure woe — but she also saw the humor of the folk custom of paid mourners at a funeral. And her "Noahs," "Ulysses" and "The Miraculous Catch," all showing people in neat, tubby boats, make one think of "Rub-a-dub-dub."

Finger points to suspect

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A 29-year-old man was charged with second-degree burglary after officers found his severed finger at the scene of a break-in, police said.

Jack Howard of St. Louis was listed in satisfactory condition Monday at City Hospital, where he remained in police custody in lieu of $2,000 bond, authorities said.

Police said officers were unable to catch a fleeing suspect when they responded to a burglar alarm at the New Fashion Wig Shop near downtown early Sunday morning. But officers found blood near a broken window at the shop and later discovered a severed finger near the door.

Famous beer hall gets major face lift

MUNICH, West Germany — The world's most famous beer hall, Munich's historic Hofbrauhaus, has fallen into such disrepair that the state of Bavaria is spending $1.2 million to restore its facades and interior wall paintings.

The Hofbrauhaus, built in 1897 and owned by the state, has been the watering hole for millions of Bavarians and visitors from all over the world. In 1920, it was the site of the first mass meeting of Adolf Hitler's newly founded Nazi party.

Munich beer halls date back to the Middle Ages, but the first Hofbrauhaus was built at the present site called the "Platzl," Bavarian slang for small square, 175 years ago.

In 1808, the Royal Bavarian Breweries Administration decided to move its dark-beer brewery to the Platzl. Before that, the dark beer had been produced at the Munich residence of the Duke of Bavaria and was meant to quench the enormous thirst of the Wittelsbach court.

But the old brewery, which was founded in 1589 by Duke Wilhelm V, could not keep up with rising demand over the years and thus the Hofbrauhaus was established.

The royal brewery, which is what Hofbrauhaus actually means, was fitted with a taproom for guests. That prompted complaints by other Munich brewers who attacked the selling of beer as a misuse of a royal privilege.

The monarchy, however, swept away the complaints and even expanded the Hofbrauhaus.

"An honest man could peacefully sit there and relish the drink of the house directly from the tap," a chronicler reported in 1828.

A Munich painter of the times has provided a vivid account on how the Hofbrauhaus looked in 1864. The first room, he said, was the favorite meeting and drinking place of artists, scholars, students and civil servants. It was called the Blue Hall for its dim lights that hardly shone through the thick layers of smoke filling the room.

Then there was a larger room frequented by hard-drinking bourgeois types and a smaller one called The Chapel. From 90 to 100 buckets of beer, each containing about 15 gallons, were drunk daily by the mug-swinging clientele.

"The local people went to the royal brewery hall for its supply of original healthy and cheap beer, while visitors from afar liked the peculiar atmosphere of the place," reported a witness of the times. He noted that the price of beer in the Hofbrauhaus used to stay below that of other breweries in town.

But sometimes, the Hofbrauhaus ran out of beer and it had to be closed temporarily. Then the drinkers had to look for another brand and regularly fell to complaining about stomach aches.

By 1897, the snug old Hofbrauhaus had become too small again, and architects designed a new one that was to impress everyone by its sheer size.

On Feb. 24, 1920, in what Hitler later called the first mass meeting of his party, Hitler announced the party program of the German Workers Party, which was later named the National Socialist German Workers Party, to a crowd in the festival hall of the Hofbrauhaus. Hitler was then in charge of the party propaganda.

During the meeting, disorder and fistfights eruped as the Nazis fought out their differences with political enemies.

The beer palace today can seat 4,000 and sells up to 2,800 gallons of beer per day as well as about 10,000 meals. On quiet days, beer consumption dwindles to a mere 750 gallons, according to Michael Sperger, the present proprietor of the beer hall.

The Hofbrauhaus today is visited by people from all corners of the world. The beer hall has become a favorite hunting ground for souvenir snatchers, some of whom even take away the white and blue table cloths or the richly ornamented wooden chairs.

Syria ready to sit tight with troops

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — The Syrian government adamantly refuses to accept the Lebanese-Israeli troop withdrawal agreement and foreign diplomats believe Syria is prepared to sit tight with its 40,000 troops in Lebanon to sabotage the agreement.

Well-informed sources do not expect the Syrians to take any tough retaliatory actions against the Lebanese government of President Amin Gemayel, preferring instead to let the world speculate about Syria's next move.

Senior officials in the Syrian government are known to believe they can subvert the withdrawal agreement simply by remaining in Lebanon and taking no further action. The agreement signed by Israel and Lebanon does not take effect until Syrian and Palestine Liberation Organization forces withdraw from Lebanon.

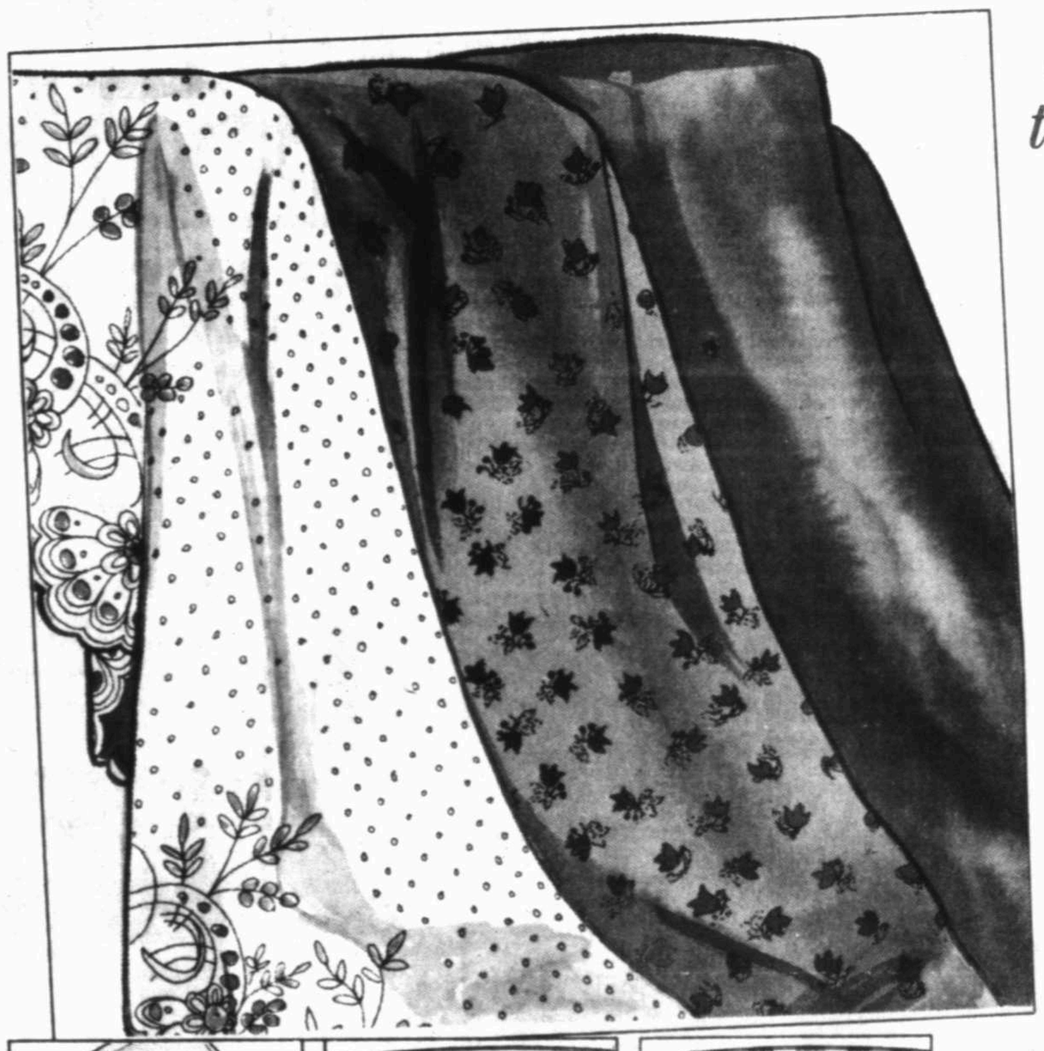

"The Syrians feel they have the cards now," said one diplomat, who asked not to be identified. "They don't believe there is any pressure on them to do anything at all for the moment."

Diplomats from several embassies, speaking on condition their names not be used, said the Syrian refusal to receive U.S. special Middle East envoy Philip C. Habib demonstrated that Damascus is in no hurry to withdraw its troops.

Sources with contacts in the Syrian leadership say the government has decided for the time being against such retaliation as banning imports from Lebanon or trying to drum Lebanon out of the Arab League.

The Brooklyn Bridge spans New York's East River Tuesday as it has every day since it opened one hundred years ago on May 24, 1883. With the Manhattan skyline highlighted by the twin towers of the World Trade Center, a helicopter hovers over the tower on the Brooklyn side. A day of festivities which began Tuesday morning with a parade across the bridge, will conclude with a spectacular fireworks show once night falls.

Millions say happy birthday to bridge

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 2 million people jammed both banks of the East River, bright with reflections from New York's biggest fireworks display, for the 100th birthday of the city's enduring home-grown monument — the Brooklyn Bridge.

Yachts and fishing boats swarmed Tuesday beneath its stone towers and steel cables as proud residents and curious tourists crammed streets, fire escapes, rooftops and piers to pay homage to the 19th-century engineering marvel whose Gothic lines have been likened to the great cathedrals of Europe.

The day of festivities began with a parade of 15,000 people and ended with a rendition of "Happy Birthday" at the foot of the Brooklyn tower, where seats at the South Street Seaport cost $75.

On May 24, 1883, the day the Brooklyn Bridge opened, Montgomery Schuyler wrote in Harper's Weekly: "It so happens that the work which is likely to be our most durable monument, and to convey some knowledge of us to the most remote posterity, is a work of bare utility; not a shrine, not a fortress, not a palace, but a bridge."

On the centennial, Mayor Edward Koch said: "The Brooklyn Bridge represents the city of New York like no other facility (or) monument ... It has a character, a strength that is the mirror image of the people of this city."

Police said more than 2 million spectators turned out to witness the celebration, patterned after "People's Day" in 1883 when the bridge connected the then-independent cities of New York and Brooklyn. Its 5,989-foot span made it the largest suspension bridge in the world, and it connected the nation's largest and third-largest cities.

Many pedestrians wore Victorian dress on Tuesday, and 85 yachts, fishing boats, tugs, ferries and fire boats — spewing red, white and blue plumes of water — sailed under the span.

Koch, speaking at a rededication ceremony that opened a night of festivities that climaxed with the fireworks show, read a telegram from President Reagan praising the bridge.

For 35 minutes, spectators watched fireworks burst above them, bright enough to light the harbor. A waterfall of white and green sparks cascaded from the bridge deck and fountains of orange rockets soared from the twin stone towers.

The bridge was bathed in multicolored light, highlighting the intertwining network of cables and soaring arches that prompted poet Hart Crane to call it "harp and altar."

The bridge has been a subject for artists since its inception. John Mackie Falconer painted "Fireworks at the Opening of the Brooklyn Bridge" in 1883. Andy Warhol's "Brooklyn Bridge, 1983" was commissioned for the centennial celebration.

Mayor indicted for 'domestic matter'

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Saying it was a "domestic matter" and never should have gone so far, Mayor Vincent A. Cianci Jr. has vowed he will be cleared of charges he kidnapped, beat and threatened to kill "another man" in the life of his estranged wife.

"I feel that any accusations made against me are erroneous and I will have my day in court," Cianci said Tuesday at a City Hall news conference after a grand jury handed up a six-count indictment against him.

"This is a personal, domestic matter and probably, in my opinion, should not have gone as far as it has.

"I will continue to operate the city government the best way I know how," he said, adding he would not quit the city post he has held for nine years and does not expect a recall election.

City Councilman Malcolm Farmer III said the council could suspend the mayor if he is convicted, but not solely on the indictment.

The grand jury handed up indictments charging the 42-year-old mayor with two counts of extortion and one each of kidnapping, conspiracy to kidnap, assault with a deadly weapon and assault and battery.

The indictment alleged that on March 20, Cianci and a Providence policeman who served as his driver forced Raymond DeLeo to the mayor's East Side apartment, where he has lived since early March when he separated from his wife of 9½ years, Sheila.

There, the indictment said, Cianci attacked DeLeo with a burning cigarette, a fireplace log and an ashtray, threatening to put a bullet in his head and destroy his business and personal life unless he signed an affidavit.

Authorities refused to explain the alleged affidavit, but a law enforcement official who asked that his name not be used said it was connected to Cianci's pending divorce.

The Ciancis were granted a divorce in Family Court on March 15. Their petitions cited irreconcilable differences as the reason for the breakup of their marriage. The divorce becomes final June 15.

The second extortion charge alleged the mayor threatened Lenore Siegel Steinberg, of Palm Beach, Fla., a friend of the Ciancis, to force her to give a statement about Mrs. Cianci's alleged relationship with DeLeo.

The grand jury also indicted Patrolman James Hassett, the mayor's driver.

Providence R.I., Mayor Vincent A. Cianci tells newsmen at a Providence City Hall news conference that he will not resign. He made the statement after being indicted Tuesday on charges of kidnapping, beating, and threatening to kill a contractor, who reportedly was having an affair with Cianci's estranged wife.

Donald Nash, center waits with attorney Lawrence Hocheiser, right, to hear the jury's verdict on murder charges. Nash was found guilty in New York on Tuesday on four counts of murder as the hired hitman who killed a federal witness and three CBS technicians on a West Side Manhatten pier last year. Justice Clifford A Scott is shown in background.

'Never a question of guilt,' says juror

NEW YORK (AP) — A juror said there was "never a question of guilt" for a man convicted of slaying a federal witness and three CBS technicians and conspiring to murder another person in what prosecutors said was an effort to cover up a massive fraud.

Donald Nash, 47, of Keansburg, N.J., displayed no emotion as he was convicted Tuesday of four cold-blooded slayings on a lonely New York City pier, gunning down Margaret Barbera, 38, and the three CBS employees who came to her aid on April 12, 1982.

"It was never a question of guilt. It was just the degree of guilt," said juror Raymond Coletti after the Manhattan Supreme Court panel convicted Nash following an eight-week trial.

The technicians gunned down at the parking lot atop Pier 92 in Manhattan were Edward Benford of Hawthorne, Leo Kuranuki of Great Neck, and Robert Schulze of Clifton, N.J.

The jury, which deliberated for 13 hours over two days, also found Nash guilty of conspiring to kill Miss Barbera's friend and co-worker, Jenny Soo Chin, a 46-year-old Teaneck, N.J., woman who disappeared on Jan. 5, 1982, and is presumed dead.

Nash faces a sentence of 25 years to life on each of the four murder convictions, and up to 25 years on the conspiracy count. He is to be sentenced by Justice Clifford A. Scott on June 22.

Defense attorney Lawrence Hochheiser, who said he felt "terribly shaken" as the verdict was announced, told reporters it would be appealed. He had called only one defense witness, an eye doctor, arguing that Nash's poor eyesight made it unlikely that anyone would hire him as a hit man. He also questioned the validity of the prosecution's forensic evidence.

Hochheiser said Nash told him, "You did the best you could, don't worry."

Assistant District Attorney Gregory Waples would not say whether his office would prosecute Candor Diamond Co. owner Irwin Margolies, whom he accused in court as the man who hired Nash to silence Miss Barbera and Mrs. Chin as potential witnesses to a multimillion-dollar fraud.

Miss Barbera had agreed to testify against Margolies in a federal investigation of his firm. She was killed before she could testify, but the probe led to fraud charges for which Margolies is serving a 28-year prison sentence.

Waples, who said Nash stalked Miss Barbera before killing her, said the most crucial evidence was a telephone call to Miss Barbera's unlisted home number from the phone of Nash's nephew about five weeks before the slayings.

The nephew, Thomas Dane, testified that he didn't make the call but that his uncle often used his phone.

"To me, that did it," juror Felix Irizarry said of the call. "That did it for all of us."

Coletti said other major factors in the jury's decison were evidence that Nash had bought a silencer, and .22-caliber shell casings found near the technicians' bodies, in Nash's van, in Mrs. Chin's car and on Nash's and Dane's property.

The murder weapon was never recovered, but a ballistics expert testified that the shell casings were all fired from the same gun.

Health bill for jobless goes to House floor

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite objections from President Reagan, legislation providing health coverage for jobless Americans is going to the House floor with what appears to be broad bipartisan support.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee approved 34-8 Tuesday a bill setting up a federal-state health insurance program for the unemployed.

The full House is expected to act on the legislation soon, Rep. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., said following the committee's vote.

Saying the measure "reflects broad, bipartisan consensus," Waxman predicted Congress would have legislation before Reagan by July. He also predicted Reagan would sign such a bill despite the president's opposition to spending any new federal money not specifically offset by new revenues.

Waxman called the bill "a measure to provide basic coverage to the 10 million jobless Americans and their families who have lost their health insurance and have no other coverage."

Rep. Edward Madigan, R-Ill., a co-sponsor of the legislation, said it "reaches out for people who are not welfare-class people — working men and women of America on hard times for the first time in their lives."

Under the bill, states choosing to participate would receive federal matching payments varying in amount from 50 percent to 109 percent, depending on the state's unemployment rate.

States with unemployment rates of less than 6 percent could not participate as a whole. However, they could designate areas of high unemployment to participate.

The program provides coverage for nine hospital days and 10 physician and clinic visits per year and full prenatal and delivery care. Persons choosing to enroll would pay a premium of 2 percent of their weekly unemployment compensation payment.

The bill would cover people receiving unemployment compensation as well as those who have exhausted their jobless benefits within the last two years. Those with exhausted benefits would not pay a premium.

The committee added a provision specifying that the program not pay for abortions except in cases where the mother's life is in danger — the same restriction that now applies to the Medicaid program.

The bill includes $100 million for direct federal grants to hospitals that serve large numbers of unemployed workers and their families.

It also requires that by October 1985, all employers with 25 or more workers who provide group health insurance must continue basic coverage for at least three months following layoff.

The Senate has made room in its budget resolution for a $1.8 billion, two-year program of health insurance for the unemployed.

Pregnant drug abuser to continue therapy

BALTIMORE (AP) — A judge has ordered a 26-year-old pregnant woman to stop taking narcotics that could harm her fetus, or face a possible fine and jail sentence.

Baltimore Circuit Judge Joseph H.H. Kaplan issued the order at a hearing Tuesday. The woman, now in her final trimester of pregnancy, agreed to allow the judge to be provided with weekly urinalysis and other medical reports.

The case began last month when a doctor sought a juvenile court order requiring the woman to take herself off drugs in order to ensure the health of her fetus. Because the case was first filed in juvenile court, neither the doctor nor the woman were identified.

According to the doctor's petition, the woman already has a daughter who was born premature and in poor health as "a direct result of the mother's willful abuse of drugs during her pregnancy."

The doctor said that during the first pregnancy, the mother consumed "substantial amounts of Quaalude, Valium, cocaine and morphine."

nation in brief

Paper, money lead to arrests

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Investigators in Operation Jackpot, a federal drug task force operating for less than a year, say they followed trails of paper and money to obtain indictments against 40 people.

For 11 months, the operation has probed the financial records and business transactions of two major drug rings that smuggled more than $.00 million worth of marijuana and hashish into the South, U.S. Attorney Henry D. McMaster said Tuesday.

"This is big and it paid off," said McMaster, who said 12 of 40 people named in two indictments have been taken into custody, with warrants out for the rest and more arrests expected.

'Parents should decide race'

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A legislator says parents, not the state, should describe the race of their children, introducing a measure that would scrap a law that classifies people as black if they have only 1-32nd of "Negro blood."

Rep. Lee Frazier of New Orleans, a black lawmaker who introduced the measure Monday, said if the Louisiana law is repealed, state agencies would still be able to keep statistical records as they do now, but "it will be up to the parent to tell the clerk what race the child is."

On May 18, a judge ruled against Susie Guillory Phipps, a fair-skinned descendant of a black female slave and white planter, who challenged the validity of a birth certificate that listed her parents as "colored."

Robbery takes place at polls

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Despite a holdup at a polling place, the only voter on the premises got up after the robbery, brushed herself off and finished voting, officials said.

State Attorney General Ed Austin said the holdup Tuesday in a housing project was "more than a robbery, it's an obscenity." State officials said they had never heard of a robbery at a polling place.

The three masked men threatened a deputy elections supervisor and stole purses from three female poll workers and the voter, officials said. "No one was hurt, just shook up," said elections supervisor Harry Nearing.

Threat may have helped heist

ST. PETERS, Mo. (AP) — A bomb threat at a shopping center may have been a diversionary tactic for an armored truck robbery, the third such heist in the St. Louis area in eight days, officials said.

Three men forced their way Tuesday into the back of a Security Armored Car Service Co. truck, the same company that was hit by holdups on Monday and May 16. At least one shot was fired in the latest robbery but no one was hit, police said.

At about the time of the robbery, police were told a bomb had been placed about eight miles away at a shopping center. No bomb was found, but the center is the same location where police found a bomb in a parked car on May 17 after an anonymous tip.

Police said they have no evidence that the robberies are related.

Commission to get new director

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights will get a new staff director as part of a commission shakeup soon to be announced by the White House, according to sources.

Linda Chavez, staff director of the American Federation of Teachers, will be appointed to the top staff post at the civil rights commission, sources said Tuesday.

The sources, who spoke only on condition that they not to be identified, said Ms. Chavez was a Democrat who has been critical of the use of racial quotas in hiring. She would succeed John Hope III, who has been acting director for two years.

Broker against some institutions

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Los Angeles broker who has set up 157 off-shore banks in Caribbean or Pacific nations says he deplores the use of such financial institutions to launder money or evade U.S. taxes.

Testifying Tuesday after he was subpoenaed by the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, Jerome Schneider, said he buys and sells banks in nations where bank secrecy laws protect U.S. depositors from the scrutiny of the Internal Revenue Service.

But Schneider, president of WFI Corp., said he wouldn't knowingly sell off-shore banks to criminals or people trying to evade U.S. taxes.

A staff report of the subcommittee's investigation says bank secrecy laws make it impossible to determine the number of offshore banks owned by U.S. citizens and corporations.

More states to campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fifteen more states will participate in this summer's Drug Enforcement Administration campaign to wipe out homegrown crops of marijuana, according to the federal agency's acting head.

Francis M. Mullen Jr. said Tuesday that a total of 40 states will participate in the campaign to seize and destroy cannabis plants. The National Guard will help state and local police in 10 states this year, Mullen said.

Last year's campaign in 25 states netted 2.5 million cannabis plants, Mullen told the House select committee on narcotics.

Nuclear reactors being built

WASHINGTON (AP) — Small nuclear power reactors that can be launched into space are being developed by a new program under way at a space agency laboratory in Cleveland, according to a federal researcher.

Henry O. Slone of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Lewis Research Center told a House committee Tuesday that the reactors could be used for extended space probes and interplanetary expeditions.

Slone predicted the small nuclear power sources would be ready for use by the mid-1990s.

Insurance rates could increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women would pay an extra $836 million a year for automobile and life insurance if Congress passes legislation to remove gender as a rate factor, an industry representative says.

ILO discusses Poland's denial of Walesa meeting

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer

GENEVA, Switzerland — Two years after his triumphant speech about the growth of union freedom in Poland, Solidarity chief Lech Walesa is again at the center of debate over labor trouble in his homeland.

This time, however, delegates to the International Labor Organization convention here are discussing Poland's refusal to let ILO officials visit Walesa in Gdansk, the Baltic port where Solidarity was born during shipyard strikes in August 1980.

Solidarity, the first independent labor movement in the Soviet bloc, has been outlawed since October, and Walesa has been relegated by the Polish government and media to the role of a "private person" no longer representing anyone but himself.

The situation underlines the changes wrought after martial law was imposed in December 1981 to end 16 months of labor unrest and social upheaval sparked by Solidarity. Thousands of union activists and supporters were arrested.

During the coming week, the ILO's Freedom of Association Committee is expected to recommend formation of a rare commission of inquiry to study Poland's labor troubles.

Poland has refused to guarantee ILO officials access to Walesa, Western diplomatic sources say, so ILO Director-General Francis Blanchard decided against sending a representative there to make the study.

An ILO official, speaking on the condition he not be identified, said, "Blanchard was not willing to send someone to Poland under the conditions attached by the Poles to visit. There's no point in sending someone there if they can't do their job."

The discussions this year are in sharp contrast to the heady days of 1981, when Walesa arrived in Geneva as chief of a Polish labor delegation and met privately with Blanchard in his plush offices.

Walesa then told a capacity audience at the ILO meeting that Poland could solve its problems without "foreign intervention" and declared "there is no way back" from social and political reforms begun when Solidarity was formed. He acknowledged a prolonged ovation with "V" for victory signs.

Bronislaw Geremek, a top advisor to Walesa who accompanied him on his visit here, is now under arrest in Warsaw for organizing a meeting May 6 between Walesa and leaders of other unions outlawed along with Solidarity last year.

The refusal of the ILO to meet the Poles' current conditions and the refusal of the Poles to guarantee access to Walesa has led to a standoff, and the Freedom of Association Committee is now considering forming a commission to study Poland's labor troubles from the outside.

ILO officials, while acknowledging that a commission of inquiry may not yield any immediate results in Poland, comment that such a step could lead to a "substantive" report that would be circulated to all the ILO's member states and released to the public.

Union members get prison terms

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Five Solidarity members have received prison terms ranging up to two years following their conviction for "disturbing the normal functioning" of an internment camp, the official news agency PAP reports.

A sixth member of the outlawed independent union, Radoslaw Sarnicki, 19, drew a suspended one-year sentence, was fined $118 and placed on three years probation, PAP said Tuesday.

The six defendants had alleged they were beaten by guards on Aug. 12, 1982, at the Kwidzyn internment camp in northern Poland where they were held after the December 1981 imposition of martial law.

During the March 3 trial at a civilian court in the Baltic city of Elblag, defendant Zygmunt Golawski testified prison guards "savagely beat" about 40 inmates who protested cancellation of their relatives' visitation rights.

The PAP report said the defendants "actively attacked intervening functionaries of the camp staff, threw objects at them, blocked the gates to camp housing, and disturbed the normal functioning of the camp."

Defense lawyers said five guards involved in the beatings are under investigation, but no charges have been announced against them.

Some of the protesters, including Sarnicki, were reportedly hospitalized for months afterwards, witnesses said.

The stiffest sentence went to Golawski, 27-year-old son of a leading member of the nationalist organization, "Confederation for an Independent Poland." He was sentenced to two years in prison and fined $290, PAP said.

Miroslaw Duszak, 26, was sentenced to two years and fined $174. Two other men, Andrzej Bober, 35, and Adam Kozaczynski, 32, received 18 month sentences and were fined $174. Wladyslaw Kaludzinski, 36, was sentenced to one year imprisonment and fined $174.

Sources close to the defendants said all six men were released to spend between one and two weeks with their families before returning to custody.

In another development Tuesday, the Communist government gave new signs of its concern with public reaction to the fatal beating, allegedly by police, of high school senior Grzegorz Przemyk.

The government television service reported that a classmate of Przemyk, Wojciech Cejrowski, charged he was roughed up by police who questioned him Monday about his schoolmates' reaction to Przemyk's death.

Syrian forces attempt to intercept Israeli warplanes over Lebanon

By The Associated Press

Syrian warplanes tried to intercept Israeli reconnaissance planes over Lebanon today and fired air-to-air missiles at them, Israel's military command said.

It was the first reported encounter between the two countries' warplanes since Israel ended its military advance into Lebanon last fall.

The Israeli planes returned safely to base and the air force was continuing its patrols in Lebanese air space, according to a brief communique from Tel Aviv which gave no further details.

The incident occurred at a time of rising tension between Syrian and Israeli forces facing each other in Lebanon. About 25,000 troops from Israeli and 40,000 from Syria are based there, and leaders of both forces have suggested recently that the other side is preparing for war.

In another development, PLO chief Yasser Arafat blamed Libya for engineering a mutiny against him, and some of his troops said Syria also is helping the rebel Palestinian factions based in Lebanon.

At a news conference Tuesday near the PLO rebels' base in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley of eastern Lebanon, Arafat said rebel leader Mohammad Moussa had been "deceived" by the Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy.

Neither Arafat nor his military deputy Khalil Wazir, known as Abu Jihad, would say whether they thought Syrians were involved in the mutiny. But after the news conference, several Palestine Liberation Organization officers and men said Syria was cooperating with the rebels.

One officer said the rebels were armed with heavy weapons that Libyan transport planes landed at Damascus in the last few days.

Others claimed Libya's ambassador to Syria delivered more than $7 million to Abu Saleh, one of the mutiny leaders.

The mutiny began two weeks ago when five officers from Arafat's faction of the PLO, Al Fatah, crossed the Syrian-Lebanese border and said they were taking command of a Fatah unit in the Bekaa Valley.

The rebels said they were no longer taking orders from Arafat because they felt he was making peace overtures and because they disliked his choice of commanders.

The rebels refused an order last Saturday from the Fatah executive committee to end the mutiny.

Arafat insisted the mutiny had been contained and the mutineers discredited among the Fatah rank and file.

He claimed the mutineers numbered about 150 officers and men. Palestinian supporters of the mutiny claim hundreds have joined it, but other sources put the figure at about 90.

The area is controlled by Syrian troops, and some Fatah sources say Syrian officers have warned they would protect the mutineers if Arafat's men attacked them.

In other Mideast developments:

—A poll published today in the Israeli weekly "Koteret Harashit" indicated there is widespread doubt that the troop withdrawal treaty with Lebanon would ensure the security of Israel's northern settlements.

The poll said 48 percent of the 1,184 Israelis surveyed believed the agreement would not guarantee peace for the region, 44 percent believed it would and 8 percent did not respond.

—The privately owned Central News Agency in Beirut said Saudi Arabia is trying to arrange a "mini-Arab summit," attended by Syria, Algeria, the PLO, Kuwait, Tunis and Lebanon, to discuss the presence of Syrian and PLO troops in Lebanon. The refusal of those forces to withdraw has jeopardized the U.S.-mediated agreement in which Israel agreed to pull its troops out at the same time as Syria and the PLO.

South Korean opposition politician continues his fast

Kim Young-sam

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Opposition politician Kim Young-sam has vowed to continue his week-old hunger strike to back demands for democratic reforms, even though he was forcibly taken from his home to a hospital by a score of policemen, sources said today.

Sources said Kim, who began his fast May 18, refused to undergo medical examinations, including blood and urine tests, and declined to take injections. The sources, who asked not to be identified, said the 55-year-old Kim also insisted he would continue to refuse food.

Kim's wife earlier had reported 20 to 30 plainclothes police agents entered their home in Seoul this morning and demanded he get into an ambulance to go to a hospital. She said that after an hour of arguing, her husband was carried out and taken to Seoul National University Hospital.

Mrs. Kim said before he was taken from the house, he told her he would continue to fast as long as he remained conscious. She said he also called on the government to reflect on what he called "undemocratic doings."

Kim headed the now-defunct New Democratic Party and was considered a leading presidential candidate in 1980. But he was placed under house arrest by the military government in May 1980 during a crackdown on anti-government demonstrations.

Party would join arms talks

LONDON (AP) — The Labor Party has revised its vow to scrap Britain's nuclear arsenal unilaterally and now promises to join the U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms negotiations in Geneva if it wins the June 9 election.

Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher accused the socialist Laborites of abandoning their own election platform. "They are trying to get away from it as fast as they possibly can," she told a news conference Tuesday.

Labor's platform pledges to halt deployment of U.S. cruise missiles in Britain this winter, expel U.S. nuclear bombers and submarines from British bases and dismantle Britain's force of four submarines equipped with Polaris nuclear missiles.

But deputy party leader Denis Healey told reporters in Newcastle the submarines would be made a subject for East-West disarmament talks.

Botha demands clarification

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Foreign Minister Pik Botha has demanded that Mozambique clarify its relationship with the African National Congress following South Africa's air strike on suspected ANC guerrilla bases in the neighboring country.

"The Mozambican response is awaited," Botha said Tuesday night, telling reporters he wanted an elaboration of remarks by Mozambique Foreign Minister Joaquim Alberto Chissano.

At the United Nations, Chissano said Marxist Mozambique would continue to support the ANC and that his government "will continue to fight" until white-minority rule and apartheid are torn down in South Africa.

Leftists plan new government

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist insurgents say they will create a revolutionary government in a northern province and are urging thousands of peasants who fled the rebel stronghold to return.

The Popular Liberation Forces announced Tuesday over the clandestine Radio Farabundo Marti the formation of a "Regional Governing Junta" for Chalatenango province.

The rebel faction also said it is establishing civil registries to issue birth, marriage and death certificates and launching a civic action program. It did not provide details during its broadcast from "somewhere in Chalatenango."

Church leaders visit Caracas

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Nicaragua's top Roman Catholic leader, Archbishop Miguel Obando, paid a surprise visit to Caracas to discuss tensions in Central America with Venezuelan President Luis Herrera Campins.

A government spokesman said Obando, who has criticized Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government, met with Herrera for 90 minutes Tuesday after arriving on a visit that had not been announced in advance.

The archbishop also met with Netherlands Prime Minister Rodolphus Lubbers, who is on a three-day visit to Caracas, and former Venezuelan President Rafael Caldera, who is the presidential candidate of the ruling Social Christian party in the upcoming December elections.

Loans to Brazil are delayed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The payment of $1 billion in loans to Brazil will be delayed while major commercial banks and the International Monetary Fund examine the country's failure to meet certain conditions, a newspaper says.

The Washington Post today quoted unnamed banking sources as saying the payments scheduled to be made next Tuesday will be delayed about a month while the lenders determine why their economic conditions have not been met.

But a spokesman for the IMF said Tuesday night, "I think it is little bit premature" to say that the fund would withhold its share of the payments.

The spokesman, who asked that his name not be used, said that the IMF would send a team to Brazil "in the early part of June" to discuss the nation's payment problems. He emphasized that he was unable to speak for the commercial banks, but added "we will continue consultations with Brazil."

Kremlin accepting proposal?

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — A senior Soviet diplomat today said the Kremlin is prepared to accept in principle two of President Reagan's proposals for reducing the chances of accidental nuclear war, but added that such an agreement would not warrant a U.S.-Soviet summit because the proposals are not "disarmament" steps.

Refuting suggestions that a "private talk" might prove useful, the Russian diplomat said there is "no point" in even discussing a summit between Reagan and Soviet leader Yuri Andropov until there is a genuine breakthrough in the intermediate (INF) or strategic (START) nuclear arms reduction talks.

Too many questions could turn off romantic partner. Those who form new partnerships will prosper. A change of residence is possible. At work, be a stickler for the facts.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The more you rely on yourself, the more successful you will be. Attention to detail gives you the edge over the competition. Do not attempt to combine business with pleasure tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your home life is affected by an unusual experience. Read between the lines. Move ahead with confidence if starting a new relationship or job.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A business trip will be very successful. Read travel folders and make plans for a summer vacation. You make friends who can give you important new insights. Be courteous to strangers.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Indulge yourself with a small luxury or treat. It will boost your morale! The work environment is friendly. A chance meeting will add glamor to an evening out.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Speak openly to someone who tries to waste your time. You need to remain calm during a temporary financial crisis. Help arrives from an unexpected quarter but there could be strings attached.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 21): New concepts or information help you move ahead. You can look forward to having greater authority. Those in charge are impressed by the way you handle delicate matters.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are attracted to someone at work. Contracts can be signed with confidence, but the money involved will be slow to arrive. Plan accordingly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Business picks up. Work as a team and you will overcome all barriers. Amateurs may not have all the facts. Deal with professionals whenever possible. Curb a tendency to be selfish.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Show finesse and higher-ups will be impressed. Guard against being too optimistic. Otherwise, you could let down just when you need to put on a burst of energy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Family members agree to your plans for fixing up a jointly owned vacation cottage. Stay out of an argument between two close friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A favorable time for resolving a sticky personal problem. Do not neglect your artistic talents. Act more friendly when handling business transactions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Romance can be very special today. Go all out to achieve the results you want. Anything less than your best will be unacceptable. Your income gets an unexpected boost.

'Taxi' ends tonight

NEW YORK (AP) — The Sunshine Cab Co. was an ironic shingle for the misfits in "Taxi." There wasn't a success story in the bunch. In five years, none of the drivers found a road paved with anything more than harsh reality and hard knocks.

"It's a lot like life," says Ed. Weinberger, one of the creators of the award-winning comedy, which has its final-original episode on NBC tonight: "Nobody made it out."

Yet, together, the characters forged a friendship and camraderie that hadn't been seen in network comedies since "The Mary Tyler Moore Show."

That warmth was their success, and the program's cancelation by two networks in two seasons can't take it away.

When the meter stops ticking tonight, the program that won the Emmy for best comedy three years in a row will be replaced by "Buffalo Bill," about an egotistical talk-show host on a television station in Buffalo, N.Y.

This time, the closing notice will stick. NBC salvaged "Taxi" from ABC's scrapheap after the 1981-82 season, but the producers now have gone off to different projects.

There was quite a furor when ABC canceled "Taxi" last season, thus losing its one comedy with grit and grown-up wit. The fact that it failed on NBC in three timeslots will substantiate, for some, ABC's decision. But ABC never came up with anything better in ratings and certainly not in quality.

"NBC did what it had to do," says Weinberger. "I regret it, but I respect it. It was a business decision. They treated us fairly and gave us a shot. There's no kicking or screaming this time. We felt at least NBC respected us. At ABC, I didn't think it mattered to them that they were canceling a quality show."

Because of the fifth year on NBC, "Taxi" did 22 more shows and went over the magic 100-episode mark. "You want over 100 episodes when you make your syndication deal," says Weinberger.

Even if "Taxi" lost some fares the past few seasons, it still produced programs that were funny and touching. Precisely because life was a series of fender-benders for the oddballs in "Taxi," our lives became, by comparison, a bit brighter.

Since they had won the Board-A-Match team event at the Fall Championships, they will be seeded through to the finals of the trials to select the 1984 United States team for the World Olympiad team championships.

In one of the early rounds of the Vanderbilt, the winners met Trump Coup Tommy's team. They found themselves trailing early in the match when Tommy aggressively pushed to slam on this hand. Tommy's two club opening was a whisker weak, and his decision to drive to slam after partner's positive response showed either touching faith in his partner's ability or belief in a Supreme Bridge Player.

West led the queen of clubs, taken in dummy as declarer discarded a heart. Declarer cashed the ace-queen of diamonds, then came to hand with a club ruff. He discarded dummy's jack of hearts on the king of diamonds, then led a heart to the king and East's ace. East thought it would be a good idea to try to protect his queen of trumps for the setting trick, so he continued with a heart. Dummy ruffed, and declarer discarded a heart on the king of clubs when East declined to ruff.

Declarer ruffed a club with the ten of trumps, a far-sighted play! Next came a heart ruff with the ace of trumps, followed by the nine of trumps from dummy. If East covered, declarer would win and be left with nothing but high trumps, so East played low. But thanks to his earlier play, declarer was now able to remain in dummy by underplaying the eight of trumps. A club from dummy now completed the trump coup — whether East ruffed high or low, declarer would make the last two tricks by ruffing as cheaply as possible.

Balancing act

In the past concerning calls for a balanced budget amendment, it's been our position that Congress' time would be better spent enacting spending legislation in a responsible fashion. That position was based on the premise the nation's elected representatives would recognize the dangers inherent in uncontrolled spending and take action to reverse the trend. No such luck.

Now we agree a balanced budget amendment is needed, in fact is essential if this nation's economic house is to be put back in order. But the bill has to have teeth — be something the esteemed members of Congress can't circumvent easily.

One bill which appears to satisfy that requirement has been introduced in the U.S. House by Congressman Kent Hance, D-Texas, and Charles Pashayan of California. The bill essentially mandates that any spending measure Congress approves that would necessitate government borrowing be approved by three-fifths vote of each house. The amendment would prevent the federal government from borrowing a dime unless approved by three-fifths vote in each house, except in time of war.

When he introduced the bill, Hance, whose district includes Lubbock and much of the High Plains, said, "Today I rise once again to call attention to a problem of immense proportion. Earlier this afternoon, the House nodded its approval to raising the public debt by $99 billion to a staggering $1.389 trillion. In view of that kind of deficit spending, Mr. Speaker, I think it is time for this body to give serious attention to bringing fiscal responsibility back to government."

Amen.

Fiscal responsibility hasn't been in evidence in the Congress for a good number of years. That's confirmed by every vote to spend money the government doesn't have -- money that can only be obtained by borrowing. What that means is the government takes money away from the private sector, drying up money for plant expansions and employee increases that translate into real growth of the economy.

Government borrowing also means committing future generations to today's bills and a high tax burden for today's employee force. In a word it's irresponsible.

But the balanced budget amendment offered by Hance and Pashayan contains a number of teeth to bring responsibility back to the Congress. It requires a three-fifths vote in each house to override the spending limit. The vote will be recorded, which means those who vote to override will be subject to public judgment. The bill recognizes the need for emergency spending in time of war.

Intention of the bill is to return the federal government to pay-as-you-go status. It's past time.

Another View:

Demos throwing dirt

Bipartisan congressional support for William D. Ruckelshaus' cleanup of the Environmental Protection Agency appears to have been awfully short-lived.

In fact, the new EPA administrator wasn't even sworn in before the House, denying any sinister motives in the coincidence, welcomed him with a double-barreled blast. As President Reagan was noting the beginning of a new chapter in EPA history with "Mr. Clean Bill Ruckelshaus," the House was voting unanimously to cite former EPA official Rita Lavelle for contempt of Congress for not obeying a subpoena to testify about the controversial Superfund program.

Then, on Mr. Ruckelshaus' second day on the job, House Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., released a memorandum from Ms. Lavelle to White House aide Michael Deaver, which the congressman claimed proved that decisions on the awarding of Superfund cleanup grants were politically motivated.

The document did, indeed, include suggestions from Ms. Lavelle that certain political candidates could benefit by the timing of cleanup announcements. But there was no incriminating response from any White House officials. And "for some unknown reason," according to Rep. Dingell, the Lavelle recommendations also were not followed up by the president.

Could the reason be that Rep. Dingell's attempts to smear the White House with a "sewergate" tag are getting rather desperate and farfetched?

We have to agree with Rep. James T. Broyhill, R-N.C., the senior Republican on Dingell's committee. He has accused his chairman of trying "to rekindle partisan political flames recently doused by the president's vigorous and decisive actions."

Mr. Ruckelshaus is a seasoned political veteran who must like challenges. Otherwise, he wouldn't take a substantial pay-cut from his $220,000 corporate position at Weyerhauser in Seattle to try to revive an agency beset with internal problems and hounded by vengeful environmental activists and ambitious Democrats.

He also has said he has been given the "basic tools for success" from the president as well as instructions to "operate in the sunlight" in his mission to restore public confidence in the EPA. If the Dingell cheap-shot is any indication of the Democrats' response, there's a good chance that it won't be the Reagan administration with mud in its face before long.

ART BUCHWALD

Memoirs turning into best seller

I was walking by my son's room the other day and heard him typing.

"What are you up to?" I asked him.

Art Buchwald

"I'm writing my memoirs on what it was like to be your son."

This pleased me, and I said, "I hope I come out all right in the book."

"I'm sure you will," he said. "Hey, Dad, how many times should I say you took me out in the barn and whipped me with your belt?"

"I never took you out in the barn and beat you with a belt! We don't even have a barn."

"My editor said in order for the book to sell I'm going to have to write a lot of stuff about how you beat me up and locked me in my closet when I did something wrong."

"I didn't lock you up when you did anything wrong."

"I know that, but he wants a story like the ones Gary Crosby and Christina Crawford wrote about their parents. He says the reading public wants to know about the private life you lead, as opposed to the public image you have. All the kids are writing one now and they're best sellers. Would you mind if I portrayed you as a rotten father?"

"Do you have to?"

"Of course I have to. I got a $10,000 advance and they don't put up that kind of money unless you really blow the whistle on your parents. You should read chapter two. I tell how you made everyone laugh at a speaking engagement, and then you came home drunk and dumped us all out of our beds and made us scrub the floor."

"I never did that and you know it."

"Gosh, Dad, it's only a book. My editor loves it — almost as much as chapter three where I have you beating up Mom."

"You've got me beating up your mother?"

"I don't say you really hurt her. But I tell how we kids used to hide under the blankets so we couldn't hear her screaming."

"I never laid a hand on your mother."

"I can't say that. My editor said people are not going to plunk down $15.95 for 'Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm.'"

"Okay, so I strapped you with a belt and I beat up your mother. What else did I do to you?"

"I'm just getting into the sex stuff in chapter four. Do you think if I wrote you used to bring show girls home at 3 o'clock in the morning people would believe it?"

"I'm sure they would. But don't you think that's going a bit far, even for a best seller?"

"My editor suggested the idea. You don't have a big reputation for messing around, and this would really come as a surprise to the reader. It can't hurt."

"It can't hurt you, but it sure as hell can hurt me," I yelled at him. Don't you have anything good to say about me in the book?"

"I had a chapter on how you bought me my first bicycle, but my editor made me take it out. He said people might get confused after the stuff I wrote about you dumping a bowl of mashed potatoes on my head at Christmas time because I gave you some lip."

"Why didn't you write I threw you in a cold shower with all your clothes on because you only got a B in math?"

"Hey, that's good. I'll say I got pneumonia and you never even bothered to visit me in the hospital."

"You'd sell out your own father for $10,000?"

"It's not just the money, Dad.

"My editor says if I let it all hang out Barbara Walters might even interview me on '2020.' I wouldn't have to live in your shadow any more."

"Well, if it means that much to you, go right ahead with the book. Is there any way I can help?"

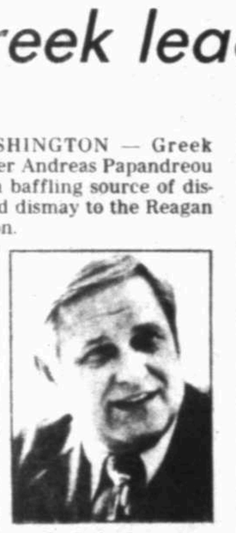

"Yeh. There is one thing. Could you buy me a word processor? If I could speed up my typing I could have it out by Christmas. I'll pay you back as soon as my agent sells the book rights to the movies."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Greek leader's antics confusing

WASHINGTON — Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou has become a baffling source of discomfiture and dismay to the Reagan administration.

Jack Anderson

He has a perturbing habit of denouncing the United States in full-blown rhetorical outrage. Yet he served in the U.S. Navy during World War II, went on to teach at Harvard and other U.S. universities, became an American citizen and married an American. His children are U.S. citizens.

Administration officials don't know whether to believe his words or trust his background. Why do they care particularly? Because a new round of negotiations got underway this week on renewal of the leases for U.S. bases in Greece.

The bases are vital to NATO's defenses in the eastern Mediterranean. But in last year's election campaign, Papandreou's Socialist Party promised to get rid of the "imperialist" U.S. presence. It was a good, xenophobic campaign tactic that appealed to leftist voters, including the Greek Communists.

Some intelligence analysts figured Papandreou's shrill attacks on the United States were simply a political ploy that would be dropped once he gained power. Now they're not so sure.

They were startled at his intemperate reaction when Assistant Secretary of State Richard Burt expressed support for increased military aid to Turkey last month during an official visit there. Actually Burt said nothing more than he had voiced on earlier occasions in Washington.

But Papandreou responded with a great public show of indignation. He lambasted Burt and withdrew Burt's invitation to visit Athens.

Among intelligence analysts, there are now two diametrically opposed theories about Papandreou's actions:

One is pessimistic. It views Papandreou as a man trapped by his own anti-American campaign rhetoric — someone who, as one source put it, has painted himself into a corner. He promised so long and so persuasively to get rid of the U.S. bases in Greece that he doesn't dare renege. That means the renewal of the leases is doomed.

The other view is optimistic. Those who favor it cite Papandreou's American background. This, they argue, suggests that his anti-American bombast is hogwash and that deep down he realizes that Greece needs U.S. aid more than we need the bases. In this view, Papandreou's public flogging of Burt was just part of a horse trader's technique for getting a better money deal on the bases.

The pessimists, of course, wonder if Papandreou's American connections — well known to Greek voters — haven't forced him to be determinedly anti-American as proof of his independence.

COPPING OUT?: The Pentagon, trying to pare a few bucks from its multi-billion-dollar budget, has run head-on into critics on Capitol Hill. The economy in question involves the Pentagon's hopes of hiring rent-a-cops and private firefighters to handle security duties at military bases, instead of civilian employees of the Defense Department.

In recent years, Congress has forbidden the military to hire outside police and firefighters, but the legislation runs out Sept. 30. Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., has introduced legislation to ensure that these vital services remain in the hands of government employees. Why?

Reason One: Federal employees don't have the right to strike. Employees of private contractors do — and in the past they have done just that.

Reason Two: Publicly-paid firefighters are more likely to assist neighboring communities in an emergency.

Reason Three: The Pentagon cost-cutters haven't convinced congressional critics that the move to private security contractors would actually save the taxpayers any money.

• • •

POLITICAL POTPOURRI: Is Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., having a name-recognition problem? A reporter trying to call his campaign headquarters in Washington, D.C., had to spell Cranston's name twice to the directory-assistance operator. She then explained, "I'm sorry, I'm not from this area." Meanwhile, the competition has snagged some hopeful phone numbers. Both Sens. John Glenn, D-Ohio, and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., have numbers ending in "1984," and former Vice President Walter Mondale's number ends in "1600" — as in 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

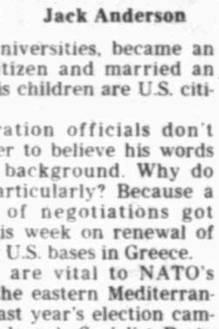

— John Anderson, the independent candidate for president in 1980, was spotted at a self-service gasoline pump in the capital the other day — clad in house slippers and driving a beat-up old Fiat. The onetime Illinois Republican congressman said pumping his own gas was "a good way to get back at those A-rabs." He said he won't know if he'll run in 1984 until he sees the results of a survey his pollster is doing.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Honduras' Marxist threat grows

WASHINGTON — Honduras appears to be the Sandinistas' next target.

William Giandoni

Events in Honduras seem to be falling into the pattern that Cuba elaborated some five years ago and which has been used to spark revolutionary outbursts in other Central American countries.

In mid-1978, as Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders has said repeatedly, "Cuba launched upon a new aggressive strategy in Central America, uniting violent factions, first in Nicaragua, then El Salvador, then Guatemala, committing them to the destruction of their established governments."

Neither Honduras nor Costa Rica, the other two Central American nations, were targeted then.

Honduras apparently was not considered of strategic importance at the time, and Costa Rica was being used as a conduit through which Cuba and others delivered arms and equipment to the Sandinistas who were fighting the Somoza government in Nicaragua.

Now, though, the situation has changed radically in Central America.

The Sandinistas triumphed in July 1979, after, in the words of former Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo, the United States "pulled the rug from under" Anastasio Somoza.

But Honduras and Costa Rica, both of which sympathized with the broad-based revolutionary movement in Nicaragua, have become alarmed at evidence that the Marxists who dominate the Sandinista government are embarked on "a revolution without frontiers" in Central America.

Both Honduras and Costa Rica are cooperating, within the limits of their possibilities, in an effort to at least contain the Nicaraguan revolution within its borders. Both deny any hostility toward Nicaragua.

However, the fact that the frontier areas of Costa Rica, to the south of Nicaragua, and of Honduras, to Nicaragua's north and west, are both sparsely populated and lack even adequate road communications with the rest of the country, has made it possible for anti-Sandinista guerrillas to launch attacks into Nicaragua virtually at will.

The enemies of the Marxist regime in Nicaragua appear to be using a military strategy similar to that the Sandinistas themselves employed against Somoza in 1978 and 1979. At that time the Sandinistas operated in and through the very same regions from which they are now being harassed.

Jaime Wheelock, the Sandinista agriculture minister who often undertakes diplomatic missions abroad, admitted as much when he returned from a recent visit to Costa Rica. But whereas he seemed to concede that Costa Rica, which has no army, could be excused, he had harsh words for Honduras, which not only has an army, but also has been receiving some military assistance from the United States.

In any case, the morning of April 8, one of the government-controlled stations in Managua, Radio Noticias, broadcast a report that "four Honduran political-military organizations announced the creation of a Unified Revolutionary Coordinating Board to go ahead with the struggle in Honduras."

The Nicaraguan newscaster said that the announcement had come from Tegucigalpa, capital of Honduras, but Honduran spokesmen here said that it probably originated in Managua.

Subsequently, the official Sandinista newspaper, Barricada, carried a story, assertedly from Tegucigalpa, that identified the new group as "the National Unity Directorate of the Revolutionary Movement of Honduras," and quoted it as saying that the Honduran and U.S. governments "have turned Honduras into the counterrevolution's rearguard."

A State Department spokesman described the components of the directorate as "pretty radical leftist organizations," that trace their origins to the Honduran Communist Party and to the Salvadoran insurgents. In the past, at least one of the groups was involved in terrorist activity but, as of mid-May, there had been no violent actions perpetrated in the name of the unified group.

Reagan administration wants Congress to reduce age for prosecution

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is asking Congress to reduce to as low as 14 the age for prosecuting a person in federal court as an adult.

Thursday's testimony by James Knapp, deputy assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's criminal division, was greeted with skepticism by some members of the Senate Judiciary subcommitees on juvenile justice and criminal law.

"I don't know of 14 and 15 year olds involved in the assassination of federal officials or involved in drug rings," said Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., chairman of the juvenile justice subcommittee. "That may be, but let's have the facts." Knapp promised Specter the Justice Department would produce the information, saying the government officials need "to strengthen our authority to proceed against juveniles who commit serious federal offenses."

Knapp said about 20 percent of violent crimes and 44 percent of serious property crimes are committed by persons under 18.

Ex-rail worker buys rail

NORTH TONAWANDA, N.Y. (AP) — To visit Andrew Conklin you drive over a set of railroad tracks, swing left and go to the foot of Somer Street to a small wooden building that used to serve as a Conrail freight yard office.

At a desk by the front door is Devan Lawton, who is Conklin's superintendent of operations and only full-time employee.

Conklin sits at a desk toward the rear. "Welcome to our world headquarters," he says with a grin.

Conklin is the president and sole owner of Tonawanda Island Railroad Inc., a short line that moves freight cars onto sidings at two lumber yards and an industrial firm.

Until he retired in November 1981 after 40 years of railroading, Conklin was superintendent of Conrail's bustling Buffalo Division and responsible for the movement of trains over 1,100 miles of track.

"In a peak daily period," he recalls, "we had 51 freight trains, 17 locals and 105 switch engines handling over 10,000 freight cars."

AFTER LEAVING all that, retirement didn't sit well with Conklin. He grew restless. And finally in January he bought a 1½-mile stretch of track that had been abandoned by Conrail last summer.

His Tonawanda Island Railroad began operations on Valentine's Day.

Conklin, now 61, said the switch from being a Conrail superintendent to owning a little railroad "is just like being Admiral Nimitz one day and being the captain of a tugboat on the Niagara River the next day. But it's all mine, and I'm really very happy over it."

Conklin has one piece of equipment — "old number 22" as he calls it. Old No. 22 is a seven-ton trackmobile about the size of a bulldozer and powered by a four-cylinder diesel engine. It can run on pavement with four rubber tires or, by lowering four steel wheels, it can run on tracks and pull as many as four freight cars. Conklin bought it from the Mobil Oil Corp., which used it for switching cars at its Buffalo refinery that is now shut down.

"When I see that trackmobile moving and pulling two cars, my heart just goes to pounding," says Conklin.

LAWTON, a former fireman and locomotive engineer with the Erie Lackawanna Railroad, runs the trackmobile. "I do everything," he says. "I paint the building, run the engine, maintain the right-of-way, and handle public relations."

Tonawanda Island Railroad begins beside the A.E. Gombert Lumber Co. The track passes across a busy road, then climbs a slight grade and goes over a short bridge that connects the mainland with Tonawanda Island in the Niagara River.

On the island, one siding curls off to the right to the R.T. Jones Lumber Co. Four other sidings branch off to the left to the International Filler Corp., which uses wood shavings to make a powder used in plastics.

Conklin hopes to acquire more idle track in this city between Buffalo and Niagara Falls. He figures the revival of rail service may lead to new tenants at abandoned industrial and commercial properties formerly served by rail.

"I'M EATIN' LESS SUGAR AND LOVIN' EVERY BITE!"
He's eating new Quaker Halfsies.
New Halfsies is one of the sweetest ways we know to get your kid to cut down on sugar. It's the cereal with only half the sugar of most other sugar-coated cereals—one teaspoon per serving— that's 50% less!
But even though we cut the sugar we didn't cut the taste. Halfsies still has a whole lot of sweetness your child's going to love! How did we do it? With just a smidgen of NutraSweet,* a new nutritive sweetener. Doesn't touch the taste...or the nutrition. Halfsies gives your child all the wholesomeness of corn and rice, plus 9 essential vitamins and minerals.
New Quaker Halfsies. You're going to love half the sugar.
And your kid'll love every bite!

NPR faces budget cutbacks, layoffs

WASHINGTON (AP) — A budget cutting proposal that would sharply reduce National Public Radio's entertainment and news programming was scheduled to be considered today by the organization's board of directors.

About one-fifth of NPR's staff would be laid off as early as Friday under the proposed budget, which would cut spending for dramatic and musical programs from $1.87 million to $400,000.

The plan, announced Tuesday during a telephone conference call between local public radio affiliates, was based on projections that NPR's deficit has risen this year from $5.8 million to $7 million.

The spending plan would preserve two award-winning news programs — "All Things Considered" and "Morning Edition" — but only with the layoffs of 20 news employees.

Financial problems have forced NPR to lay off more than 50 employees since March. Acting President Ronald Bornstein said the proposed additional layoffs would leave NPR with about 325 employees.

"It is obvious the financial position of NPR has weakened to the point that the organization is in a perilous state," said Bornstein, who took over as NPR's acting head after the resignation of President Frank Mankiewicz earlier this month.

Barbara Cohen, NPR's vice president for news, was critical of the spending plan that would leave her with 19 reporters, down from 28 at the start of the current fiscal year.

"Clearly we will be able to cover fewer hard, breaking news stories," she said. "And I don't think we can maintain the quality of the programming we have now.

Telethon plagued with problems

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES -- The national Democratic Party's upcoming 17-hour Memorial Day weekend telethon has been plagued with problems from its inception.

Party Chairman Charles Manatt yesterday tried to turn the latest irritation into a plus by flourishing a letter to President Reagan, warning him to "get your party under control."

Complaining in the latter of "dirty tricks" and "a return to the Watergate era," Manatt was delighted with the national publicity he won for the telethon by taking on the president over a Republican mailing that urged GOP loyalists to "let the Democrats know you support President Reagan by calling the toll-free number they use."

Manatt described the mailing to thousands of Republicans as "sabotage" to "jam" the telethon's phone lines.

The White House had no comment "at this time," and a spokesman for the Republican National Committee said they were only letting supporters know they, too, could comment.

Republican national chairman Frank Fahrenkopf, who issued the Mailgram, said in it that the telethon would feature "Hollywood left wingers" in a "savage and self-serving Democrat attack." He implored supporters to "let them know you do not buy their distortions" and asked each to "rush an emergency contribution" to the Republican National Committee to offset money the Democrats might raise.

The Democratic National Committee, said Manatt, is considering lodging a complaint with the Federal Elections Commission based on a violation of civil rights, claiming the GOP is hindering the Democrats' freedom of expression.

To that, California Republican Party chairman Ed Reinecke said, "I think Chuck Manatt is using this to generate a controversy to get a little better press," and called the whole incident "political nonsense."

Reinecke, a Watergate figure whose conviction was overturned, promised "nothing" was going on in the way of Republican phone banks to jam the telethon phone lines.

While Manatt was expressing outrage, one of the Democrats' own unwittingly almost sabotaged the telethon.

Kentucky Gov. John Y. Brown, chairman of the "Celebrate America" telethon to be broadcast on NBC begining Saturday evening, reportedly delayed so in setting it in motion that Democratic National Committee troubleshooters were dispatched to Los Angeles to rescue the event.

Committee investigates cheating in academy

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. (AP) — A cadet honor committee at the Air Force Academy has started an investigation to determine if members of a mathematics class cheated on a project, officials say.

Capt. Bob Morris, an academy spokesman, said Tuesday that the probe was started Monday by the Cadet Honor Committee, a 47-member group of cadets chosen by their peers. If the committee finds sufficient grounds, it will convene an eight-member Cadet Honor Board to decide whether a violation of the Cadet Honor Code occurred.

The code states, "We will not lie, steal or cheat, or tolerate among us anyone who does."

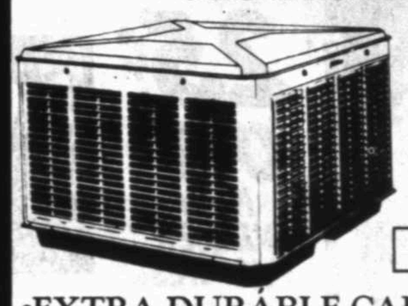

Morris said it is possible that alleged collaboration by members of a math class working on a computer programming project was not intentional, but a misunderstanding of ground rules for the project.

"There doesn't appear to be any connection between the several separate incidents" of alleged collaboration, Morris said. He declined to say how many cadets are subject to the probe, although a source told The Denver Post that 20 cadets were involved.

Students found by the honor board to have cheated could be expelled.

In the academy's 29-year history, there have been two major cheating scandals. The first, in 1965, ended with the resignations of 109 cadets after a probe into mass cheating during academic tests. An additional 39 cadets were forced to resign in 1973 when an honor board found them guilty of academic cheating.

Midland hopes turn to ash

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

What started out so promisingly ended up in three days of frustration as Tulsa again took the bats out of the Cubs' hands for an 8-5 win at Cubs Stadium Tuesday night in the final game of the season between the Texas League foes.

After winning the first two games, Midland lost three straight, just like the series in Tulsa, and now languishes 19-24 for the first half with Shreveport's Captains looming 7 p.m. tonight for the first of six games.

Whereas, Monday's loss was one of squandered opportunities, the Cubs didn't get that many chances Tuesday against Dennis Long, making his first start of the season.

"WELL, I never went over five innings before," the rangy righthander from the University of Connecticut admitted after the game. You'd never have guessed it from the results. Going into the ninth he had retired 13 in a row, had a four-hitter going and led 8-3.

He gave up a lead off single to Randy LaVigne and triple to Tom Lombarski and was lifted for Tony Hudson, who was tagged for a sacrifice fly and hits by Jim Walsh and Don Hyman before he got out of it.

"We've had so many pitchers going up and down the last week or so, Marty (Manager Marty Scott) said he'd give me a couple of starting chances on this road trip," Long said. "This was the first one."

And if his next is anything like it, he may become another Dave Dravecky. Two years ago, Dave spent the first half of the season in the Amarillo bullpen. Injuries forced him into a starting role and now he's one of the pitching mainstays of the San Diego Padres.

LONG, WHO had just hoped to go six or seven innings, said the secret to his success was mixing a sidearm curve and fast ball. "And in the middle innings my slider was effective. I just tried to keep from showing them the same pitch twice in a row."

Right fielder Dan Murphy provided the bat support that gave Long his lead, a single in the first two set up an unearned run, a sacrifice fly in the third, a run-scoring single in the fifth and rbi triple in the seventh.

For the final four games, Murphy was 11-for-17 against Midland with nine rbi.

Still, it was anybody's game going into the ninth. Doug Welenc, 1-6, turned in his best outing of the season, and trailed 4-2 with two of the runs unearned.

Bill Johnston, the pitcher acquired from Reading, Eastern League, in the Willie Hernandez for Dick Ruthven trade between Chicago and Philadelphia, came in in the ninth and suffered a rude Texas League baptism of fire, two walks, two wild pitches, both letting runs score, and two hits good for four runs.

The big blow of the ninth was Kevin Buckley's two-run homer.

While the defeat kept the Cubs reeling, it was not without its redeeming aspects...Welenc's pitching and Mike Anicich's continued stirrings at the plate. Mike hit his second homer and tagged two other balls hard. And Johnston, probably throws the ball harder than any other Midland pitcher.

CUB PRINTS—To make room for Johnston, the Cubs farmed lefthander Neil Bryant to Salinas in the A California League. "It will give him a chance to start down there," Manager Tom Harmon explained. Bryant, with Amarillo last year, pitched for Reno in the California League two years ago...Darryl Banks, 6-2, goes for Midland tonight while Ray Soff, 2-0, gets his first starting chance in one of Thursday's doubleheaders against Shreveport. Ron Richardson, 1-3, will start the other game...Johnston had five saves and a win at Reading this season...Randy LaVigne and Long were not only teammates at U.Conn., but "Randy was the best man at my wedding," says Long...

Recordless Mears still has memories

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rick Mears has lost his records, but they can't take away his memories of victory and near-victory at the Indianapolis 500.

Mears, 31, missed recording his second victory here last year by only .16 seconds — coming in second to Gordon Johncock in the closest finish of the race's 67-year history.

His victory came in 1979 and Mears says the significance of the achievement didn't really sink in right away.

"At that time ... I hadn't really thought about it. All I was doing was running a race, and I wasn't thinking about it being the Indy 500 or any other race," recalls Mears, who will make his sixth Indy start Sunday from the outside of the front row.

Starting on the inside — the pole position — will be rookie Teo Fabi, who broke Mears' year-old one-and four-lap track records in qualifying. In the middle is 14-year veteran Mike Mosley.

"It never really dawned on me until about a week afterwards, and then it started soaking in that it was the Indy 500 that we won," Mears says of his 1979 victory. "It definitely was a thrill."

Mears arrived at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway in 1978 when he became the first — and until Fabi did it this year, the only — rookie driver to qualify at better than 200 mph.

"There's not a lot of people who get that opportunity to be able to come into this race for the very first time and actually feel they have an opportunity to win it," Mears said of his rookie effort.

"And we did have an opportunity. We were running fifth all day long, in that area, just running a comfortable pace, keeping everybody in sight — just like the way we did the next year, and the next year it paid off — we lost an engine the first year.

"So we did have, actually, an opportunity to win that race the very first time out, and that was quite a thrill in itself, but it wasn't our turn."

In 1979, it was Mears' turn, both in qualifying and in the race.

Fabi now learning to slow down

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Teo Fabi spent last week trying to go fast. This week, the man who will start Sunday's Indianapolis 500 in the pole position is learning to slow down.

"There's nothing to do. It's very quiet at the moment," said Fabi, who set one-and four-lap records in placing his March on the pole position for the 67th running of the race.

THE INDIANAPOLIS Motor Speedway is closed every day this week except for Thursday, when the drivers have their final pre-race practice. That is the only time any of the 33 starters get onto the track between the end of qualifications and the race.

"I'm just waiting for the race. I'd like to race today," Fabi said, adding that he's been watching a lot of television in the apartment where he is staying this month. "I'd like to go back to Italy, but it's too far and there's not enough time." If he feels any pressure building for the race, which draws more than 350,000 people, Fabi is hiding it.

"No, I'm not nervous," he politely said Tuesday before the American Dairy Association of Indiana presented him with $1,500 and a plaque in recognition of being the quickest rookie in Saturday's time trials.

Fabi, 27, had an average speed of 207.395 mph in a Cosworth-powered March, with a quick lap of 208.049. The veteran road racer from Milan, Italy, is only the second Indy newcomer to qualify for the pole position. Walt Faulkner accomplished the feat in 1950.

"We're not making any changes, just the engine," Fabi said about the work chief mechanic Barry Green and his crew are doing. "I'm not that involved. I don't have much to do, just a lunch, a news conference and things like that."

Fabi has also been playing the role of tourist, visiting the Speedway Hall of Fame and walking through downtown Indianapolis.

"I went to the museum to see the cars," said Fabi, who went unnoticed there as he looked at the huge silver Borg-Warner trophy that contains a replica of the face of every winner at the 2½-mile oval. "Yes, I do think it would be nice to have my face on the trophy."

The 5-foot-5, 140-pound Fabi plans no mad dash for the lead when the flag drops to start the race.

"This is a very long race," he said. "With the yellow flags (caution periods that bunch up the field), you don't need to go for the lead on the first lap, so maybe I'll take a conservative race," he said.

GORDON JOHNCOCK, who defeated Rick Mears by .16-second in the closest finish in the race's history last year, earned more than $290,000 from the record $2 million purse awarded last year. But Fabi says it's not money nor glory that has brought him to Indianapolis for what he calls "the biggest moment of my racing career."

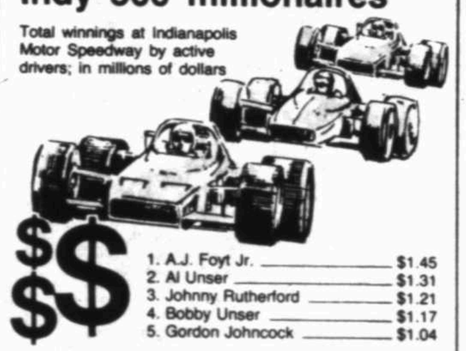

Fabi, an aeronautical engineer when he's not racing, said he decided to drive here because he was unable to get a good ride on the Formula One circuit. He competed in Formula One last year after finishing second in the 1981 Can-Am series with four victories and seven pole-position starts while driving for Paul Newman. Green was his chief mechanic that season.

Fabi will be starting the race next to veteran Mike Mosley with 1979 winner Rick Mears on the outside of the front row.

"I have an idea on the mind," he said. "Just let the first guy go and try to follow him. Then, I'll try to race just the last half-hour. I think Mears and Mosley are the biggest opposition, so I will just watch and follow them to see what's happening."

Craig Morton gets call to lift Denver Gold

DENVER (AP) — New Denver Gold Coach Craig Morton, an 18-year veteran of play in the National Football League, said an upbeat, "wide-open" approach would be needed to turn around the slumping United States Football League team.

"There have been too many negative things going on," said Morton after his appointment was announced Tuesday at a news conference called by Gold owner Ron Blanding. "One thing we've got to do is get this thing back on a positive note."

The fledgling team's first head coach, former Denver Broncos coach Red Miller, was fired by Blanding last week after the Gold lost its fourth straight game. On Sunday, the Gold lost to Los Angeles 14-10 under interim coach Charley Armey, and dropped to 4-8.

During that Sunday game, Denver fans protested Miller's ouster with signs and red clothing that gave a discernable red hue to the crowd.

Morton quarterbacked for the Broncos of the NFL for six years under Miller's guidance. Morton retired at the end of the last season.

"As soon as I heard that there was a possibility that he (Morton) was interested in it (the job), he was my No. 1 choice," Blanding said.

He rejected reporters' intrepretations of the hiring of the popular Morton as a public relations gimmick, saying he was unconcerned that Morton has never coached professionally.

Morton also dismissed questions about his lack of coaching experience: "I'm not worried about it. I've had 18 years in the NFL and I've played under Tom Landry, Red Miller and Dan Reeves — three good guys to learn from."

Asked how long it would take him to become accustomed to his new role, Morton quipped, "About a half hour."

Morton said he was signed for a 26-month contract, the terms of which were not disclosed. And he was asked if his close friendship with Miller would suffer because of the new job.

"I hope it wouldn't affect it at all," he said. "We have different ways to go in life. I'm going this way. I don't think he'll begrudge me (the decision)."

Another injury bites Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Although Philadelphia leads the Los Angeles Lakers 1-0 in the National Basketball Association championship series and has won nine of 10 playoff games, health and injury problems are preventing 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham from enjoying himself.

"We have not had a dull moment in the playoffs. If it's not one player, it's another," Cunningham said Tuesday after learning that his No. 1 backup at center and power forward, Clemon Johnson, would miss Thursday's second game because of a urinary tract infection.

Johnson joined Moses Malone, Julius Erving, Andrew Toney, Clint Richardson and Bobby Jones on the list of Philadelphia players who have been hampered by injury or illness since the regular season ended.

"It's something you have to overcome," Cunningham said. "You just have to move on. I have confidence in the other players. We had injuries during the season and you have to have players ready to contribute."

Cunningham said seldom-used Earl Cureton and possibly rookie Mark McNamara would replace Johnson as relief for Malone at center and Marc Iavaroni at power forward.

"Earl has more quickness and has been involved in a few more playoffs than Mark, so he probably will play more than McNamara," Cunningham said.

Cureton has played in only three of Philadelphia's 10 playoff games, for a total of six minutes. McNamara has seen action in one postseason game for one minute.

"I know I've got my hands full," Cureton said.

One of the Lakers that Cureton might guard is Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the second-leading scorer in NBA history. But Cureton said he believes he has an advantage over Abdul-Jabbar in quickness and in getting up and down the floor in a running game.

"But nobody likes playing Kareem," Cureton added. "I'll try to front him, make him work as hard as he can."

Lakers Coach Pat Riley, whose team is trying to become the first team in 14 years to repeat as NBA champions, also has plenty of injury problems to contend with.

Bob McAdoo, the Lakers' top frontcourt reserve, missed the first game with a bruised thigh and is questionable for Thursday's contest. Guard Norm Nixon, who scored 26 points for the Lakers in Game 1, still is bothered by a bruised left shoulder.

Riley said the second game "may be the most important. Philadelphia wants to be in the driver's seat. They don't want to go to Los Angeles 1-1."

Erving said Cunningham told the team "to play like we're behind 0-1. He said to forget last weekend and pretend our back's against the wall and, if we lose, we'll be 0-2."

Cunningham said the 76ers should approach the first two games as a package deal.

"Psychologically, we won't be ahead in the series unless we win the second game," he said. "We can't play like frontrunners yet."

Cubs' Harmon has a way of staying in dog house

Some people can carry on an affair right before your very eyes without anyone ever suspecting.

That's the way it was over the weekend when Texas League President Carl Sawatski was in Midland for what was supposed to be his annual visit.

It looked like just a good old-fashioned bull session, a tall tale swap fest when Sawatski visited the Cubby hole office of Midland Manager Tom Harmon.

I forget whether it was Tom or Carl who brought up the name of American Association President Joe Ryan. Both immediately broke into laughter. Tom obviously at the memory of slow-talking Joe and Carl at the prospect of the story he was going to hear.

"WHEN I was playing in that league, I used to get blamed for everything, whether I did it or not," Harmon began, stuffing a fist-sized wad of Work Horse into a balloon that served as a cheek.

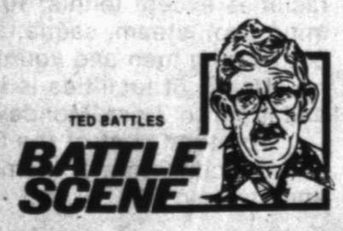

"Like the time the umpires got locked in the dressing room."

"Tell me about it, Tom," Carl egged him on.

"It was actually Jose Martinez, who is with Kansas City. They had a lock that was hanging on a hook. Martinez went by, saw it hanging there and couldn't resist temptation. He just pulled the door shut and snapped the lock."

Tom appealed to the heavens at the unfairness of it all, "And who do they call into the president's office?"

"That's the way it happens sometimes. You get a reputation and pretty soon you are getting blamed for everything," sympathized Carl.

"Apparently, Mrs. Ryan was in another room as I tried to explain to Joe what had happened, and overheard the conversation," said Tom. "After it was over, I understand, she said to her husband, 'How could you accuse a nice boy like that of such a crime.'"

IT WASN'T until I'd left the informal scene that the pieces began to fall into place and I realized that what I had witnessed was an impromptu Texas League inquisition, hearing or whatever, laden with treacherous undercurrents and menacing overtones.

The reasoning: Harmon had been thumbed out of a game a few weeks before and Sawatski had come to Midland to let him know that if any umpires got locked up in their dressing room, he would know the identity of the culprit and take appropriate action.

Once again, Tom had been an innocent victim. Actually, it had been some rowdy fans near the dugout who had cast unkind innuendoes at the stalwarts in blue, but it Harmon who was given a "cease-and-desist" warning. He even tried to explain, that he had no control over the opinions and actions voiced by paying customers. And, those expressions of opinion were not necessarily endorsed by the management, although in this case, he admitted, they did not seem without justification.

Of course, one violent wave of the arm and Harmon was banished to the solitary confinement of the clubhouse.

A NIGHT after Carl left town, Harmon again was in the umpire's dog house. This time it came on a play that is called about as often as the first baseman pulling off the bag too soon or a runner being called out on an appeal for failure to tag up after a catch.

That doesn't mean the call was a wrong call, but one it has become the custom to politely ignore, like those phantom double plays or walking in the NBA.

Usually, for a runner to be called out for interference as he goes to second to break up a double play, he must pursue the relaying infielder to the skin of the grass with a crow bar.

As it turned out Monday, it was a costly play for Midland. It took away the run that Midland would have scored, even if the double play had been completed, returning the runners to second and third. If the run had counted, Midland would have tied it at 5 the next inning, thus altering the game's strategy.

Tom had legitimate grounds to be upset, but remarkably kept his emotions under control, witness, both umpires showed up for the start of Wednesday's game on time.

Boston Celtics go up for sale

BOSTON (AP) — Boston Celtics owner Harry Mangurian says he wants to sell one of the most successful teams in National Basketball Association history because of a strained relationship with his landlords at Boston Garden.

And he expects potential buyers to be plentiful.

"Over the last five years that I've been with the Celtics, I would say I get a call once a month to see if I'm interested in selling," Mangurian said. "So I would think there would be buyers out there."

Mangurian went public Tuesday with his intention to sell the team and said "nothing" would change his mind. He claimed he's dissatisfied with the way the Celtics have been treated by the Delaware North Companies of Buffalo, N.Y., who own the Garden and the Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League.

Mangurian became sole owner of the Celtics for the 1979-80 season. He was co-owner with John Y. Brown, now governor of Kentucky, of the Buffalo Braves of the NBA in 1977-78 and the of Celtics in 1978-79.

"I plan on selling the Boston Celtics, and the main reason is that I don't want to be the person that moves the Celtics out of Boston," Mangurian said. "Our relationship with the Garden people has literally fallen apart.

"Hopefully, a new owner could cope with these people, but I can't."

Sam Gifford, a spokesman for Delaware North, said: "This is the first I've heard of this." He said he didn't know of any negotiations or disagreements between the Celtics, winners of 14 NBA titles, and the Garden's owners.

Mangurian said: "I would think that anyone who bought this team would have to be acceptable to Red. That would be a prerequisite."

Horner, Turner take war to court

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Braves third baseman Bob Horner testified Tuesday that team owner Ted Turner told him in 1979 to fire agent Bucky Woy or expect to earn "the bare minimum" for the next five years.

Horner took the stand in the second day of the U.S. District Court trial of Woy's $17 million damage suit against Turner.

Woy filed the suit three years ago following newspaper articles in which Turner said Woy was "guilty of manslaughter" in connection with the death of Braves General Manager Bill Lucas. The suit contends Turner defamed Woy's character and interfered with his business relationship with Horner.

Lucas died of a massive brain hemorrhage and cardiac arrest May 5, 1979, during bitter negotiations between the Braves and Woy over Horner's contract.

The allegations stem from statements Turner made June 4, 1979, to The Atlanta Constitution and The Atlanta Journal.

"I don't want Bucky coming around my organization killing anyone else," Turner was quoted as saying in the June 5 editions of the Atlanta Constitution. "In my opinion, Bucky Woy is guilty of manslaughter."

Turner was quoted in the same afternoon's Atlanta Journal as saying the arbitration controversy, "killed Bill Lucas."

Horner said he went to see Turner after reading The Constitution article June 5. He said Turner was "ranting and raving" when he issued the salary threat.

"When your owner tells you after half a year (in the major leagues) that you'd better fire your agent, you give it serious consideration," Horner said.

Under cross-examination by Denny Webb, Turner's lawyer, Horner testified he recently signed a four-year, $5.5 million contract with the Braves despite retaining Woy as his agent.

"You would have to say that Ted has backed off his threat to only pay you the minimum, hasn't he?" Webb asked.

"A little bit," replied Horner, drawing some laughter in the crowded courtroom.

McLain denies TV station allegations

DETROIT (AP) — Former Detroit Tigers pitcher Denny McLain says reports linking him to drug smuggling and loan-sharking were prompted by a Florida official he was helping a federal agency to investigate.

McLain Tuesday denied the allegations, calling them "lunacy — just like 'Charlie's Angels.'"

McLain told the Detroit Free Press and Detroit television station WDIV he intends to file suit against Tampa, Fla. television station WXFL, which aired the reports that a federal grand jury is investigating McLain's links to a conspiracy to smuggle cocaine. WXFL also reported the panel is probing a 1982 Florida civil suit contending McLain was involved in loan-sharking.

"(The station) better be right," he said, "or I'm going to own me a TV station."

The source of the accusations is "a very, very high official in the state of Florida," McLain said, refusing to name the official or the federal agency involved.

He said he went to the federal agency after a representative of the politician "hit First Fidelity (Financial Services Inc., whose Tampa office McLain ran) for a big cash campaign contribution."

"This (representative) milked us for $60,000 or $70,000," McLain said, adding that he was upset "they wanted another $40,000 to $50,000 in hundreds. I'm talking cash money."

The politician had been "feeding" the accusations to the TV station to discredit McLain, but "it will all come out some time in the future," he said.

Blue Jays, Luzinski roll fives

Toronto wins fifth straight; Greg hits fifth homer

By The Associated Press

Red-hot is the best way to describe the Toronto Blue Jays and the Chicago White Sox's Greg Luzinski.

Both are on rolls of five — a five-game winning streak that has thrust the once-lowly Blue Jays into first place in the American League East and a five-game home run streak for Luzinski that has him within one game of the AL record for hitting a homer in consecutive games.

Buck Martinez drove in four runs with a pair of doubles and Roy Lee Jackson pitched 3⅔ innings of one-hit relief to lead the Blue Jays to a 7-6 come-from-behind victory over the Detroit Tigers Tuesday night. Toronto took a one-game lead over the Boston Red Sox, who lost to Chicago 12-4, and the Baltimore Orioles, who dropped their fifth in a row, this one by a 6-1 score to the Minnesota Twins.

"The players aren't making a big deal out of it (first place)," said Jackson. "It's great for the fans, but it's too early in the season to be concerned with it."

Luzinski's home run was one of five hit by the White Sox as they pounded Boston.

"I can remember hitting home runs in two straight games, but nothing like this," said the man known as The Bull. "I've never had a streak like this, especially as bad as I've been going."

Luzinski also had two singles and despite his streak of power is hitting only .213.

The Blue Jays, whose pitchers had hurled three consecutive shutouts, pulled out their victory over Detroit after trailing 5-0 after the second inning. They scored four times in the third, capped by Martinez' pinch RBI double, and took a 7-6 lead with three runs in the fifth.

After Toronto loaded the bases, Martinez hit a bouncer down the third-base line. Third baseman Howard Johnson fell down, trying to move to his right and the ball rattled around in the left-field corner and got past Larry Herndon as all three runners scored.

"Being in first place means that when you're on top you can create your own destiny," said Martinez. "You don't have to be concerned with what other people are doing. It's awful early, but with our pitching staff we're not going to have any big skids."

American League

White Sox 12, Red Sox 4

Ron Kittle and Jerry Hairston hit three-run homers to key an eight-run first inning. Besides Luzinski, Carlton Fisk and Lorenzo Gray also connected, giving the White Sox 14 home runs in their last five games. Jerry Koosman was the winner in his first start of the season, allowing four runs and eight hits in six innings.

By homering in five successive games, Luzinski set a club record and is one short of the AL mark of six straight. The major league record is eight straight by Dale Long of Pittsburgh in 1956.

Twins 6, Orioles 1

Ron Washington drove in three runs with a single and double and John Castino and Tom Brunansky cracked solo homers as Minnesota handed Baltimore its fifth straight setback. Bobby Castillo allowed six hits while outpitching Scott McGregor and hurling only the second complete game of the season for the Twins and the second in a row. Frank Viola pitched an eight-hitter against Baltimore Monday night.

Angels 7, Yankees 6

Bobby Grich's bloop single with two out in the bottom of the 10th inning capped a two-run California rally. The Yankees appeared to have the game won when Ellis Valentine hit a line drive at right fielder Oscar Gamble with two out and two on. But Gamble dropped the ball for an error after apparently losing it in the lights as the tying run scored. Grich followed with his bloop hit off Gamble's glove.

Graig Nettles, Gamble and Roy Smalley homered for the Yankees, with Smalley's 100th career homer in the top of the 10th giving them a 6-5 lead. Fred Lynn homered in the bottom of the eighth for the Angels to tie the score 5-5 after New York had gone ahead with three runs in the top of the inning.

A's 8, Brewers 7

Bill Almon was credited with a steal of home for the winning run in the eighth inning when Milwaukee catcher Ned Yost failed to hold the pitch on a suicide squeeze that backfired. Almon and Jeff Burroughs opened the inning with singles off Jamie Easterly and advanced on Dwayne Murphy's sacrifice. Mike Davis missed the ball attempting to bunt on a suicide squeeze, but so did Yost. Almon, breaking from third, crossed the plate as Yost fumbled for the loose ball.

Yost homered for Milwaukee while Davey Lopes hit his third in two games for Oakland.

Indians 6, Mariners 4

Mike Hargrove's two-out, two-run single highlighted a four-run ninth-inning rally that negated a club record four stolen bases by Seattle's Julio Cruz. Hargrove lined a 3-2 pitch from Seattle relief ace Bill Caudill up the middle to score the tying and go-ahead runs after singles by Julio Franco, Rick Manning and pinch hitter Broderick Perkins loaded the bases. Pinch hitter Bake McBride flied out but Caudill walked Toby Harrah on a 3-2 pitch for the first run. After Hargrove's decisive single, Andre Thornton singled to score Harrah with an insurance tally.

Rangers 2, Royals 2

Larry Parrish's homer gave Texas a 2-1 lead in the top of the fifth, but George Brett singled in the bottom of the inning and scored on a triple by Hal McRae before rain stopped the game.

Ruthven finds Cub location

Dodgers push Phils' scoreless streak to 35 innings

By The Associated Press

Chicago Manager Lee Elia wasn't too excited about the location of Dick Ruthven's pitches. But he was pleased about the location of Dick Ruthven — on the Cubs' roster.

Ruthven, in his first start for the Cubs since being acquired from the Philadelphia Phillies for reliever Willie Hernandez last Sunday, pitched 6⅓ innings in Houston Tuesday night — matching his longest stint of the season.

"I had 10 days' rest," he said. "I knew I could go at least that far. I knew the Cubs had a good bullpen. I think this is a good team and we're going to surprise a lot of people."

Ruthven limited the Astros to six hits and two runs and contributed a run-scoring single in Chicago's 5-4 victory, his first win since April 27. Bill Campbell saved it for him.

"I've seen him have better stuff, locationwise," Elia said of Ruthven. "But that's about all you could ask for, particularly with all the excitement about being traded. We needed a starter badly."

"It has been a hectic couple of days," Ruthven acknowledged. "It wasn't a pretty game — other than the outcome — but I'm satisfied."

The Cubs got a second-inning run on Ron Cey's fifth homer and scored twice in the fifth with Ruthven's single and Larry Bowa's triple knocking in the runs. They made it 4-0 when Keith Moreland raced home from first on Jody Davis' single to left.

The Astros got two runs in the seventh, shortstop Dickie Thon's third throwing error gave the Cubs the decisive run in the top of the ninth and Campbell came on to slam the door on the Astros in the bottom of the ninth after Lee Smith gave up a two-run double by Kevin Bass.

National League

Dodgers 3, Phillies 0

The Phillies' scoreless streak reached 35 innings as Alejandro Pena of the Dodgers tossed a four-hitter at them for his first complete game in the majors.

"I've never seen anything like this since I've been in baseball," said befuddled Pat Corrales, the Philadelphia manager. "All we're doing is lowering our averages and the other teams' earned-run averages. It's a shame, because we're getting some very good pitching."

Loser Larry Christenson allowed only three hits in seven innings and struck out eight batters.

Pirates 6, Braves 5

Pittsburgh's Larry McWilliams was cruising along with a four-hit shutout when the Braves jumped on him and reliever Kent Tekulve for five runs. McWilliams wasn't surprised. "After all," he said, "I used to be one of them and I know what they can do. When they get the momentum going, it's hard to stop them."

Giants 6, Mets 2

San Francisco's Mike Krukow allowed seven hits — two of them home runs by Dave Kingman — to beat the Mets for the seventh consecutive time and build his career record against them to 12-3.

"Dave Kingman hit three homers off me in my rookie year," said Krukow, a five-year veteran. "Today was four and five." Jack Clark and Chili Davis homered for the Giants.

Cardinals 7, Reds 1

Dave LaPoint pitched an eight-hitter for his first complete game in the majors and George Hendrick drove in two runs as St. Louis halted its four-game tailspin.

Bruce Berenyi walked the bases loaded in the third inning and Lonnie Smith and Hendrick each hit an RBI single, the only runs LaPoint needed.

Expos 5, Padres 4

Bryan Little singled, took second on a grounder and scored on Warren Cromartie's single in the 13th inning to give the Expos their victory over San Diego. It was Cromartie's third time up with a runner in scoring position, and the first time he brought one home.

"Not too many people get three or four chances, so happily I was able to come through one of those times," Cromartie said. "It was a couple minutes before midnight and I know we all wanted to go home."

Cogan seeks to erase Indy doubts

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — No matter how many times you watch the videotape of the aborted start of last year's Indianapolis 500, it's startling to see Kevin Cogan's car suddenly begin to act like a pool ball with lots of spin applied.

The cars, 11 rows of three, appear to be heading for the start-finish line in orderly fashion, picking up speed as they approach the starter. Without warning, Cogan's car — tucked between pole-sitter Rick Mears and four-time race winner A.J. Foyt on the front row — runs amuck.

It darts right, striking Foyt's car on the left rear wheel and bringing an awful shriek from the perhaps 150,000 people that can see the front straightaway at the huge track. Then, with Cogan as an unwilling rider, the car richochets across the track, narrowly missing a collision with eventual race winner Gordon Johncock, but winding up directly in front of accelerating former Indy winner Mario Andretti.

The ensuing crash puts the cars of both Cogan and Andretti out of commission. There are no injuries, but the melee behind the front row results in another crash involving Indy rookies Dale Whittington and Roger Mears, Rick's older brother.

Cogan, who qualified for Sunday's 67th edition of the Indy 500 at more than 201 mph and will start the race on the inside of the eighth row, says he took a bad rap for accident.

"I know what happened, and you know darn well a guy who knows as much about racing as George Bignotti isn't going to hire somebody who couldn't handle himself on a racetrack," says the 27-year-old Cogan, referring to his new boss and a man who has been chief mechanic on more winning cars at Indy than anyone else.

Immediately after the crash, Foyt, Andretti and some other veteran drivers said it appeared Cogan simply had lost control of the car when the turbocharger kicked in and the tires spun as he tried to accelerate for the start.

However, Cogan insists that a part in the drive train of the car shattered when he hit the throttle, leaving him without any way to control the direction of the car when the power was applied.

"I saw the pieces of that PC valve, and some other people saw it, too," Cogan said. "And that came off the left rear of the car, where there was no other damage. They were laid out on a white towel on the (tool) bench in the garage, then, all of a sudden, the towel and the pieces were gone. I don't know why."

The Penske Racing Team, for whom Cogan drove in 1982, never denied there was a broken part. But neither did they come out strongly in Cogan's defense. The relationship between the young driver and the team deteriorated quickly from that point on, with Cogan leaving at the end of the 1982 season.

"It's strange," Cogan said. "I came here in 1981 in a car that wasn't all that good, qualified it 12th and finished fourth. Then I come here in a fantastic car last year, qualify second and, when all hell breaks loose, everybody says it's because I didn't have enough experience."

McEnroe, Lloyd jump into French net fray

PARIS (AP) — Americans John McEnroe and Chris Evert Lloyd, both seeded second, are idle for the first two days of the $1.3 million French Open tennis tournament, courtesy of the schedule-maker.

McEnroe, a New Yorker who has won three tournaments this year, decided at the last minute to enter the 83rd edition of the French Open, the first Grand Slam event of the year. He is here despite a doctor's warning that he could further aggravate his shoulder injury and risk his chance at Wimbledon, which starts June 20.

THE 24-YEAR-OLD McEnroe, a three-time U.S. Open champion and one-time Wimbledon winner, was to play his first round match on the red clay courts of Roland Garros Stadium against Ricardo American [illegible] ranked 149th in the computer.

[illegible] he has not played eight [illegible] championship to a [illegible] not [illegible] Borg [illegible] Connors [illegible] has won the women's title [illegible] four times since 1974. But [illegible] favorite at this year's event is Martina Navratilova, who is going [illegible] her second consecutive French title.

Navratilova, undefeated this year, easily made it through her first-round match Tuesday. The Prague, Czechoslovakia-born American needed only 45 minutes to crush American Mary Lou Piatek 6-1, 6-1.

In other first round matches Tuesday, two more seeded players fell.

The most spectacular upset came in a two-hour, 32-minute battle between No. 9 seed Vitas Gerulaitis and Hans Simonsson, a 22-year-old Swede ranked 79th who eliminated Gerulaitis 6-4, 6-4, 2-6, 6-1.

Gerulaitis was the second seeded player to fall in the first round. Poland's Wojtek Fibak, No. 13, was eliminated Monday by Frenchman Bernard Fritz.

Amy Holton, 18, of Dayton, Ohio, staged the third upset among the women with a 6-2, 7-6 win over fellow American Bonnie Gadusek, the No. 13 seed. Americans Zina Garrison, No. 11, and Ann Smith, seeded 14th, were eliminated Monday.

All other seeded players survived their first-round matches Tuesday.

CZECH IVAN Lendl, No. 3, defeated Pedro Rebodello of Chile 6-4, 6-1, 6-3, while Argentine Guillermo Vilas, No. 4, downed Romanian Florin Sergarceanu 6-1, 7-5, 6-1 and No. 6 seed Yannick Noah of France beat Swede Anders Jarryd 6-1, 6-0, 6-2.

In other matches, No. 7 seed Jose Luis Clerc of Argentina ousted Libor Pimek of Czechoslovakia 3-6, 7-6, 6-3, 6-1 and Czech Tomas Smid, No. 15, defeated Italian Claudio Panatta 6-1, 3-6, 6-3, 1-6, 6-1.

Chicago's Cey earns NL award

Ron Cey of the Chicago Cubs, who hit .555 with three home runs and eight RBI last week, was named National League Player of the Week Monday...

Toronto pitcher Dave Stieb, who beat Milwaukee 2-1 in 10 innings and four-hit Baltimore 6-0 last week to become major-league baseball's first eight-game winner, was named Monday the American League Player of the Week...

A hearing for Boston Red Sox infielder Julio Valdez, charged with statutory rape of a 14-year-old girl, was delayed today when his attorney asked for more preparation time. Valdez, 26, appeared before Judge Julius Huston in Roxbury District Court, but the teen-ager, who told police she had sex with Valdez, was not present.

Outfielder Cesar Cedeno has been suspended without pay for three days and fined $100 for missing the team plane after he refused to fly home from Chicago with the Cincinnati Reds because he didn't have a first-class ticket. Cedeno, who was not available for comment after the suspension, said beforehand that he thought Reds Manager Russ Nixon was punishing him. "Everyone else can hurt around here and it goes by fine. Obviously, he doesn't believe that I'm hurting ... He wants to punish me for some reason," Cedeno said.

Football

The Dallas Cowboys today announced the signing of No. 1 draft pick defensive end Jim Jeffcoat of Arizona State to a series of one-year contracts. Jeffcoat's contract was expected to exceed $100,000 a year as the Cowboys' top pick.

Investors pledged to bring a USFL franchise to San Antonio next spring have been given the use of Alamo Stadium rent-free for two years. The investment group, led by South Texas millionaire Clinton Manges and San Antonio attorney Pat Maloney Sr., has promised to spend $2 million upgrading the 22,300-seat, school-owned stadium by next spring...

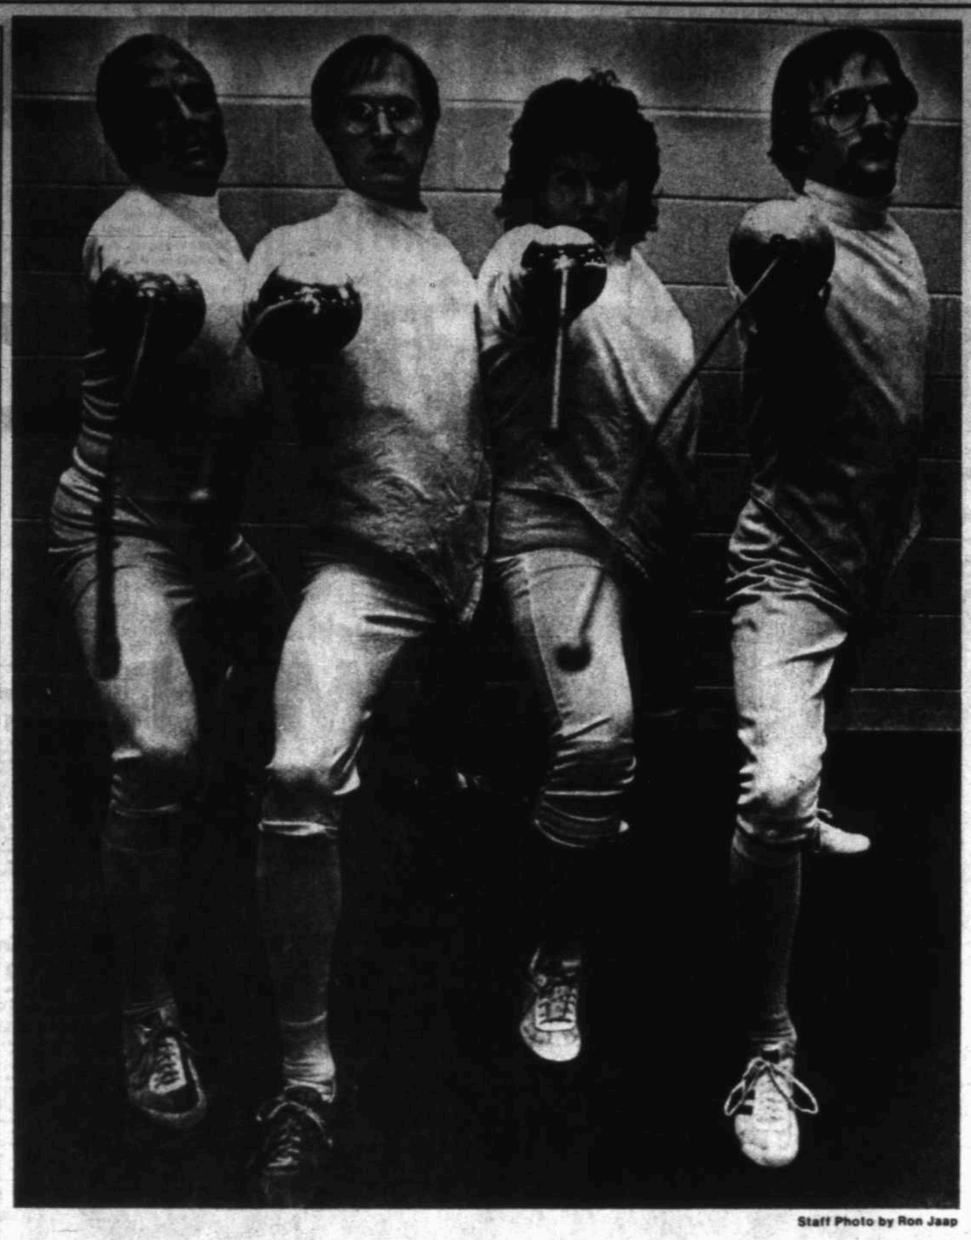

Basketball

San Antonio Coach Stan Albeck, who has led the Spurs to three straight NBA Midwest Division championships, is being recruited for head coaching jobs by New Jersey and San Diego, two newspapers reported Tuesday. The Nets and Clippers both want Albeck, who also has served as head coach for the Cleveland Cavaliers, to take over their National Basketball Association clubs, the San Antonio Express said. "The job is Albeck's if he wants it," unidentified sources in San Diego told the newspaper. "(San Diego general manager) Paul Phipps is telling people Albeck is the man they want."

Golf

So many applications have been received for next week's British Amateur Golf Championship at Turnberry that William Hoffer, a member of the U.S. Walker Cup team, mistakenly was sent a telegram saying he couldn't play. "We immediately got in touch, apologized, and assured him that, as a member of the Walker Cup team, he was guaranteed a place at Turnberry," said Keith Mackenzie, secretary of the Turnberry's Royal and Ancient Golf Club...

Kyle Coody, the son of 1971 Masters champion Charles Coody, has signed a letter of intent to play golf for the University of Texas. Coody led Abilene Cooper to two Class 5A state titles and finished second in individual play this year.

'Touche' San Francisco

Three Midlanders and one Odessan will represent the LaBelle Fencing Club at the National Championships in San Francisco June 3-8.

The National Championship is the highest level of competition short of the Olympics with approximately 300 competitors representing every state. The winners of Nationals will likely represent the United States in the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics.

COMPETING FOR LFC will be Robert Walter, Orlando Temple and Venita Sandefer of Midland and Mike Husband of Odessa. They qualified at the divisional tournament held in Midland in March.

There are three different mens' and womens' categories of competition for the fencers: foil, epee and sabre. Temple qualified for Nationals in all three weapons while Walter qualified in foil and epee; Husband in foil and sabre and Sandefer in foil.

Each weapon has a different technique and a different target area. The epee evolved from the dueling weapon with the entire body as the target. Touches are scored with the point of the blade.

The foil was designed as the practice weapon for epee with the target being the torso. The sabre descended from the cavalry weapon and touches are scored by cutting with the side of the blade or with the point against the upper half of the body.

TO WIN a bout in all three weapons, five touches on an opponent must be scored.

Club members have been practicing without the benifit of a coach and have relied on clinics in various parts of the country to obtain guidance with a heavy portion of the coaching coming from Nick Toth, a former Olympic fencing coach from Colorado Springs, Colo. Three times a year, LFC members travel to the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs for lessons with Toth.

Calvin Griffith: Lonely dinosaur

By ROSS NEWMAN
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

"Sure, I see Clark Gable and Paul Newman and Robert Redford, all those movie stars, making it, but, those movies are going to be bringing in money for years. How many Gables and Newmans and Redfords we got in baseball?"
—Calvin Griffith

MINNEAPOLIS — Clark Gable is dead, of course, but that doesn't always matter to the owner of the Minnesota Twins, who is sitting behind a cluttered desk in a cluttered office at the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome.

It is from this embattled outpost that the man known as the last dinosaur, the only owner still to make his living strictly from baseball, wages his war against George Steinbrenner, Gene Autry and their free-spending brethren.

It is a lonely and isolated battle for a rather lonely and isolated man. Calvin Griffith, 71, points to the pictures on the walls and says there are times he seeks communication and companionship with the white-haired man visible in most of the pictures.

The late Clark Griffith was Calvin's uncle, his guardian from the time Calvin was 11. He was a Hall of Fame pitcher who became owner of the Washington Senators (known then as the Nationals) and who taught his nephew the tight-fisted operating style for which he is renowned.

Calvin Griffith dropped out of George Washington University in 1935 after three years "because they didn't teach baseball there." It was Clark Griffith who taught Calvin what he wanted to know, who sent him to farm clubs in Chattanooga and Charlotte for his grass-roots education and who willed 52 percent of a team that had finished out of the first division in 20 of 35 years to Calvin and his sister, Thelma.

Clark Griffith died in 1955. The grief was deepest for Calvin Robertson Griffith, who had only fragmentary memories of his real father, the man who married Clark's sister Jane and who died in Montreal in 1923 at 42.

Clark Griffith, penurious enough to inventory personally every piece of the club's equipment but generous enough to provide for the widowed Jane and her other five children after they followed Calvin and Thelma to Washington, provided what love and warmth Calvin now remembers.

Calvin Griffith stares at those pictures and says those days with Clark Griffith were among his happiest. He says that he did everything possible to fulfill his childless uncle's wishes and hopes. He says that he considers Clark a deity, and, in fact, when he comes to a troubled time, a certain feeling comes to him, a belief that they are in some form of metaphysical contact.

"I sit down and say, 'Unc, what do you think?' and my mind goes through a lot of the conversations we had and I feel him taking me in the right direction," Griffith says, his gaze shifting from the pictures only when a visitor asks if it would have been Clark Griffith's desire that he stay in the game amid all the abuse he has taken, amid all the changes.

Calvin Griffith shakes his sizable head and says, "Ed Barrows, Connie Mack, my uncle, they wouldn't tolerate it. They wouldn't be in the game now. I've heard him ask me why I've never gotten out. The only thing I can say to answer that is that it's been my life and that it's a hell of a challenge right now what with the union and arbitration and all that stuff. Unc wouldn't approve of it, but I hope he'd be satisfied with the way I've handled it. Goddamn. What do you do when you retire, anyway?"

Rod Carew. Larry Hisle. Lyman Bostock. Dan Ford. Bill Campbell. Dave Goltz. Butch Wynegar. Roy Smalley. Doug Corbett. Rob Wilfong. Roger Erickson. The highest-salaried Twins and potentially due even higher salaries. All traded or allowed to pursue free agency.

The legacy: A team with a 1982 average salary of $67,300, compared to the league average of $242,000. A team that made baseball history last September by starting nine rookies. A team with a regular lineup that averages slightly more than 24 years of age and one year of major league experience. A team that had baseball's worst 1982 record (60-102) and worst attendance (921,186).

Rod Carew believesthe Twins can't possibly win with the current philosophy.

He cites "too much pressure" on young players who are not ready for their assignments and who know that (1) "No matter what they do they won't be compensated," (2) the owner won't plug the holes with proven and helpful veterans and (3) they will eventually have to move on — after, they hope, lasting the six years necessary to become a free agent.

"I hate to see it happen because it's a good town with a great facility," Carew said. "I spent 12 years there. My roots are there. I enjoyed the town and I enjoyed playing there.

"The travel accommodations, medical treatment and equipment were all first class. I would have signed for less to stay, but Calvin came to me and said he couldn't pay me what I should be making and so he would do the next best thing for me, which was let me make my own deal somewhere else."

Seattle bank hauling Texan to court

By SCOTT MAIER
Hearst Feature Service

Clinton Manges, a reclusive Texas oilman, rancher and multimillionaire, had just emerged from years of bitter financial stuggles when Seattle-First National Bank began loaning him money in 1979.

Manges had lost ownership of two banks after federal authorities questioned insider loans to him and his associates. A Texas court had found him delinquent on state, county, and school taxes. Manges had fought millions of dollars in claims and unsatisfied judgments.

The oilman's extensive history of legal problems dates back at least to 1965, when he was convicted on a felony charge of providing false information to get a loan from the Small Business Administration.

In a civil lawsuit filed earlier this month in federal court, Seafirst contends that Manges once again committed fraud and misrepresentation to obtain a loan.

Seeking $100 million in actual and "exemplary" damages, Seafirst alleges that ranch lands Manges provided as collateral were already pledged in dealings Manges had with others. The lawsuit also accused Manges and his family of a sham foreclosure of ranch lands designed to stop Seafirst from collecting its money.

SEAFIRST DECLINED to say whether the bank was aware of Manges' tangled affairs at the time the loans were made.

"As far as what research we did involving a customer is pretty confidential," said Katie Weiss, a bank spokeswoman. Seafirst will not discuss other aspects of the dispute because the matter is in litigation, Weiss said.

Manges has filed a countersuit seeking up to $1.5 billion in damages. Manges alleged that Seafirst had engaged in misappropriation of funds, improper banking practices, slander and libel. The countersuit also named The San Antonio Light, the Hearst Corp., and Seafirst attorney Richard Fuqua.

Manges contends in the countersuit that Seafirst officials promised to defer payment on the loans until an unrelated lawsuit had been settled. Manges also alleges that Seafirst has refused to provide proper accounting and documentation of the loans.

After securing a number of smaller loans from Seafirst in 1979, Manges received a $16.9 million loan in November 1980 "to meet urgent business and commercial cash needs," according to the Seafirst suit. Seafirst acknowledged that some of the documents securing the loan were prepared after the agreement had been executed.

IN FEBRUARY 1982, Seafirst loaned an additional $15.3 million to Manges. Five months ago, Manges received another $1.7 million from Seafirst. In all, the bank contends in its lawsuit that Manges owes more than $40 million in borrowed funds and interest.

Seafirst's negotiator of the earlier loans was John Boyd, the Seafirst senior vice president who led the bank's entry into the field of energy lending. Under Boyd, Seafirst also bought $400 million in energy loans from Penn Square Bank, which was closed last year. Boyd and other high Seafirst executives later left the bank. Boyd could not be reached for comment.

Seafirst announced last month that it will merge with BankAmerica Corp. following enormous losses from its $1 billion energy portfolio. Seafirst lost more money last year and in the first quarter of 1983 than any other bank in the nation.

Manges did not answer calls made to his office in Freer, Texas. However, Pat Maloney, his attorney and longtime associate, was willing to talk about the loans.

As owner of huge oil and gas holdings, Manges was an obvious person for Seafirst to approach in the bank's aggressive drive to expand its energy portfolio, Maloney said. Manges, despite his wealth, occasionally has cash-flow problems because he is reluctant to sell his holdings, Maloney said. One of those cash-crunch times was probably when Manges borrowed money from Seafirst, the attorney speculated.

MANGES' DEALINGS with the Seattle bank were cordial and businesslike from the start, said Maloney, who participated in many of the early meetings with Seafirst officials. He said Manges and Seafirst officials had a free and frank exchange of information.

"I was terribly impressed by their (Seafirst officials') competence and thoroughness. They made all the right inquiries," he said.

With a fortune and a huge ranch to back his business transactions, Manges was an extremely low-risk borrower, Maloney insists. Manges was subject to numerous court suits because of his vast holdings, Maloney said.

'He's bigger than 10 corporations and, as a result, he attracts a lot of litigation. He's a lawyer's dream," Maloney said. When asked if his client's assets exceeded $500 million, he said, "Oh hell, I think so."

In an ill-fated commercial venture 18 years ago, Manges got into deep legal problems over a government loan he received to buy used cotton gins. On Oct. 8, 1965, Manges entered a guilty plea to the felony charge of making a false statement to the Small Business Administration, court records show. He was fined $2,500.

THE SBA CONVICTION involved an application for a $295,000 loan for four cotton gins that proved unprofitable, the Houston Chronicle reported. Manges says that he pleaded guilty to get the matter behind him.

"I was busted," Manges told the Chronicle. "I was worn out. All I had to do was pay the fine and I was through with it."

After the SBA debacle, Manges went on to build a fortune. In less than a decade, he acquired majority ownership of two small Texas banks and purchased the expansive Duvall County Ranch. But his legal and financial difficulties were far from over.

The Comptroller of the Currency, the federal watchdog on banking, objected to Manges' acquisition of controlling interest in Groos National Bank because of the rancher's criminal record. In 1971, the comptroller barred Manges from participation in the bank's affairs, an order later overturned by a federal appellate court. In 1973, examiners discovered a large number of "high-risk" loans to Manges' family and business associates, according to court records. The bank agreed to stop lending money to Manges.

Three years later, the comptroller ruled that Groos National Bank engaged in unsafe or unsound banking practices after bank examiners discovered Manges had more than $175,000 in bounced checks and overdrafts. Manges sold the bank in 1978.

FEDERAL REGULATORS also were deeply concerned about insider loans to Manges by another bank he owned, First State Bank & Trust Co.

According to an investigation by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC), the bank had issued more than $4.1 million in Manges-related loans, charged-off loans, and overdrafts. The loans to Manges and his interests amounted to 22 percent of all of the bank's loans and 173 percent of the bank's capital and reserve accounts, according to a congressional report.

After the bank refused to clean up the loans, the FDIC canceled the bank's deposit insurance coverage, the first time since 1940 that the agency has used this Draconian measure, according to Business Week. The action prompted an 11-day run of withdrawals, and the Texas Banking Commission stepped in and closed the bank.

Manges contends that the FDIC action was engineered by his political enemy, former Treasury Secretary John Connally, according to news reports. Connally has denied the allegation.

Manges was entangled in numerous other battles over his finances in the years immediately preceeding the Seafirst loans. Among them:

IN 1977, creditors claimed Manges had defaulted on an $8.6-million loan, The Associated Press reported. Manges came to terms with his creditors less than 24 hours before 118,000 acres of ranch lands were to be sold at auction to satisfy the claim.

Also in 1977, The Associated Press reported that there were 17 civil suits filed in Texas district courts claiming that Manges owed millions of dollars in overdue bills, most for oil field services.

In 1978, Manges was sued by one of his attorneys for non-payment of $32,450 in legal fees. Alleging that Manges was a disreputable businessman, the lawsuit estimated that the rancher had $1.9 million in unsatisfied judgments and $2 million in pending suits. The dispute was resolved out of court. Maloney said the amount of unsatisfied judgements probably was overstated.

In another civil action, a county judge found that Manges and the Duval County Ranch Co. were delinquent on more than $1.2 million on several years of county and school taxes dating back to 1971. Manges' attorneys initially argued that a portion of the taxes had been paid, but withdrew that claim when evidence was offered that the tax certificate showing payment was a fake, according to a trial-court finding.

AN APPELLATE court upheld the county judge's decision, but ordered the lower court to reduce the amount owed on the back taxes. Maloney said tax payments had been withheld because the original assessments were unfair.

In 1977, a Duvall County grand jury indicted Manges on felony charges of "theft of service" involving alleged false payment to an oilfield firm. The charges were dropped in 1979 on grounds of insufficient evidence and because full restitution had been made, according to a court clerk referring to the Manges file.

In a civil suit, a Duvall County Ranch tenant alleged that Manges had bribed O. P. Carrillo, a county judge later removed from the bench for unrelated offenses, to obtain favorable treatment in court.

According to a 1975 investigation for the Texas Judicial Qualifications Commission, Manges had given the judge $14,415 in cash and stock in exchange for a house worth $7,000.

Although not admitting culpability, Manges agreed last month to pay approximately $200,000 in an out-of-court settlement of the dispute, Maloney said. The settlement was for damages not directly related to the bribery allegation, he added.

MANGES WAS ONE of Texas' biggest contributors to political candidates last year, donating about $900,000 to various campaigns, the Houston Chronicle reported.

The contributions were in part due to Manges' deep dissatisfaction with the treatment he's received by judicial and other government officials, said Maloney, who served as treasurer of Texans for Good Government, a political action committee largely funded by Manges.

Records filed with the Texas Secretary of State show that one contributor to Texans for Good Government was Y. C. Chao, then a Seafirst executive helping arrange the Manges loans. Chao donated $1,000 to the fund last spring, the same time that Manges gave $550,000 to the political action committee, records show.

Pipeliners' gas bill going through legislative mill

By SARAH MCCLENDON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — A new gas bill will be presented for final drafting in a House sub-committee Wednesday which Rep. Tom Loeffler, R. Hunt, Texas says "is slanted in favor of the inter-state pipeline carriers rather than the producers."

The bill is offered by Rep. Phil Sharp (D.-Ind.) chairman of the House sub-committee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels, on behalf of consumers. But Loeffler points our that any bill which might help the pipelines to get an advantage is not altogether going to help the consumer.

This bill did not appear on the legislative horizon until Monday night. Congressmen from gas-producing states thus spent most of Tuesday trying to analyze the measure.

Rushing the bill to the House sub-committee upset well-laid plans of congressmen of both political parties to let the Senate Energy Committee act first, on the theory that this might be the best way to get House action on a favorable bill.

"The new bill has many provisions which will not be favored by independent producers," cited Loefler.

"The Sharp bill violates the principle of sanctity of contracts which has always been a major concern of mine, and is a step toward recontrol."

The Sharp bill will be marked up quickly Wednesday or Thursday, if the author has his way. But it might not see action by the parent, Energy and Commerce committee of the House, if Chairman John Dingell of Michigan, a Democrat, decides not to do so. So far, there has been no evidence that the House Democratic leadership will then bring the Sharp bill to the House floor for action. The fact that there is no concensus among the gas industry as to the future of legislation makes this a difficult one for many congressmen.

There are two Texans on the sub-committee, Rep. Ralph Hall (D.-Rockwall) who knows the oil and gas business, and Rep. Jack Fields (R.-Houston) who has many of the big pipelines in his constituency.

The Sharp bill would keep the decontrol features now existing in law as planned by 1985, with moderate or new gas and deep gas slated for decontrol and old gas, now cheap, being planned to stay that way permanently.

Under "market-out" practices of the industry, the Sharp bill would encourage pipeline owners, Loeffler believes, to abrogate their contracts in hopes of having to pay less for gas, while producers would not "market-out" for fear of being paid less. But either party can market-out," so the circumstances would encourage the pipeline owner to do so.

There is prohibited under the Sharp bill the present practice of including indefinite price escalator clauses in contracts. Present practice permits pricing to be tied to alternative fuels like No. 2 and No. 6 heating oils or to be fixed at the average of three prices paid by other gas companies.

The Sharp bill would also change the present "Pay-and-Take" practices of the gas industry. Now the piepline under individual contracts may be required to pay 80 to 90 percent of his contracted take even if he does not at that point have a market for the gas or does not find it convenient to take it. Under the Sharp bill, the pipeline would not be required to pay more than 50 percent in advance. This could play havoc with many a producer's arrangements for keeping a steady income to pay his bank.

During discussion on the Sharp bill, it is planned for some member of the sub-committee to offer as a substitute the Reagan administration's bill for decontrol of 1/2 natural gas as a measure with less adverse effects on the producer, Loeffler pointed out. He said gas-producing states are watching progress with intense concern.

MGF reports big loss

MGF Oil Corporation announced Tuesday a net loss of $10,263,000 or 62 cents per share for its first quarter 1983 operations. A year ago the company showed a net loss of $783,000 or 6 cents a share for the same quarter.

Revenues for the contract drilling and exploration firm were $20,356,000 compared to $27,734,000 a year earlier in the same quarter.

Last week, MGF said it had finally succeeded in restructuring a significant portion of its $120 million bank debt after several months of negotiations with its lenders. The company also said it was considering a debt-for-equity swap later this year involving subordinated debentures.

President R.O. "Jack" Major continued to blame the company's problems on the depressed contract drilling market and an increase in interest expense.

Drilling revenues at MGF decreased 60 percent in the quarter, to $6.6 million, compared to revenues of $16.8 million in the first quarter of 1982.

Only a third of the company's rigs are in use, Major said, compared to 72 percent in 1982 at this same time.

Major noted that a portion of the costs incurred in the contract drilling operations in the first quarter were due to the Company beginning to stack approximately 75 percent of its rigs as a result of the decision to reduce MGF's drilling operation to a workable 8 to 12 rigs. MGF currently has stacked 19 of its 46 rig fleet, and additional rigs will be stacked in the next few months.

Currently, MGF has 5 rigs working.

During the three months ended March 31, 1983 MGF incurred interest charges of $7,753,000, none of which was capitalized, while for the comparable period in 1982 interest charges of $7,753,000, were incurred, of which $3,257,000 was capitalized.

Oil and gas sales for the quarter increased 25 percent to $12,136,000 from $9,724,000 in 1982. The average price of oil sold by MGF in the first quarter was $30.21 compared to $33.73 in 1982. Sales of natural gas averaged $2.80 per thousand cubic feet, compared to $2.60 per thousand cubic feet in 1982.

Working capital provided by operations (cash flow) for the quarter was a deficit of $427,000, compared to a positive $4,629,000 in 1982. Major said that he expects MGF's cash flow to improve slightly over the next few quarters as a result of lower interest charges due to its recently announced secured bank debt restructuring, a reduction in contract drilling costs due to the non-recurring costs of stacking rigs in the first quarter, and the continued reduction in general and administrative expenses.

Bank crosses threshold today

Interim organization of Community National Bank, the first bank to locate on Midland's south side, was completed today.

The bank will be located on a large lot — bounded by Florida, Terrell, California and Mineola streets. Preliminary charter approval from the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency has been given to open a national bank at the location.

Organizers, who will serve as interim directors of the bank, are Midlanders involved in business, industry, and agriculture.

They are: Earl R. Bruno, J.D. Crawford, Louie G. Koonce, Kenneth A. Peeler, Roy W. Rotan, Marshall E. Surratt, C. Donald Tergerson, and Thomas D. White Jr.

Community National Bank will begin life capitalized at $2 million. In late summer, the bank will open, housed in temporary quarters until the permanent bank building — including parking and drive-ins — has been finished.

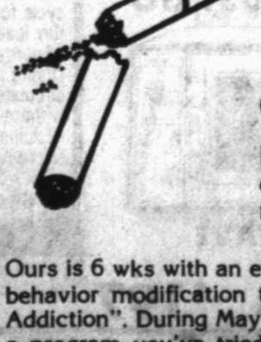

Security, as well as convenience to Midland and rural Midland County, will characterize the new bank, the organizers said.

DOE can't account for money, equipment for SPR

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Energy cannot account for millions of dollars of equipment purchased for the nation's Strategic Petroleum Reserve, Congress was told Tuesday.

Government auditors said they also have doubts that the department now has the ability to pump oil out of the storage caves in Louisiana fast enough to avoid critical shortages if there is another world supply disruption such as a war in the Middle East.

Auditors for the General Accounting Office and the Defense Contract Audit Agency as well as the Energy Department's inspector general told the energy subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee that the department let extensive cost overruns by contractors go unchallenged and failed to inventory about $500 million of equipment purchased for the reserves.

Much of that cannot be accounted for, auditors said without giving a specific figure.

Kevin Boland, associate director of the GAO, said department officials issued letters of credit to some contractors allowing them to draw on government funds without supporting vouchers in violation of normal government procurement standards.

Department officials said in reply testimony that normal financial controls took a back seat to a preoccupation in the late 1970s with "getting oil in the ground," as fast as possible.

But they said the department in the past two years has established mechanisms to keep better track of the $14.5 billion that Congress has appropriated for the project since its inception since 1975 following the Arab oil embargo of 1973-1974.

"Decisions were made that, in retrospect, were not very good decisions," said Richard Furiga, deputy assistant energy secretary in charge of the reserve. "Some of the problems are still going on, but we know about them and we are doing something about them."

James Richards, the Energy Department's inspector general, said the reserve program office in the department frequently failed to follow up on challenges filed by his office and the Defense Contract Audit Agency to expenses submitted by contractors.

Both Richards and Paul Evans, Atlanta regional director of the defense audit agency, described the relationship between Energy Department officials in charge of the reserve and the auditors hired by the department as adversarial.

Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., the subcommittee chairman, charged that the program "has been plagued by mismanagement, poor planning and loose financial controls since its inception."

"An attitude that rejects criticism and claims success despite report after report which pinpoint a varity of sever problems ... can only undermine the public trust invested in this massive project by Congress," Synar said.

Boland said the department spent $13 million on a computerized instrumentation and control system "most of which is not operable."

"This raises some concern about DOE's ability to successfully sustain a major drawdown of the oil reserves in the volumes that could be needed," he said.

Boland said major equipment breakdowns limiting the use of the reserves in an emergency could occur if the system had to rely for several weeks on manual operation to pump out 3.5 million barrels of oil daily.

Curtis Johnson, manager of the project for the Energy Department, disputed Boland's contention, saying 4 million gallons of water and brine are now being pumped out daily as part of a project to increase the capacity of the reserve.

About 324 million barrels of oil are now stored in the caves and the Energy Department is continuing to fill them with oil at a rate of 220,000 barrels a day. Officials estimate that filling the reserve to its 750 million barrel capacity will require a total investment of $27 billion to $30 billion.

Record offshore lease sale expected today

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A hefty crowd of oilmen was expected for today's lease sale of drilling rights in the Gulf of Mexico — the first mass sale in one of the nation's richest producers of natural gas and oil.

The total amount bid was to be announced by Interior Secretary James Watt, who had the idea of offering all unclaimed waterbottom — about 7,000 tracts of about nine square miles each — instead of the traditional 100 to 200 tracts.

He said last week he expects a record sale. That would mean more than the $2.677 billion bid in a Gulf of Mexico sale in 1980.

The Interior Department's Mineral Management Service said it had received 1,015 bids by Tuesday, second in number only to the 1,045 bids received on 651 tracts in 1970.

"Bidding is all over the central Gulf," Harry Sieverding, acting regional supervisor, said Tuesday. "But there is not as much interest in superdeep water."

The waterbottom ranges from the coastlines of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama out to water 9,000 meters deep. Those deepwater tracts carry a 10-year lease period, compared to five years for acreage nearer shore.

John Rankin, who directs Mineral Management Service, said he expects at least 400 tracts to be leased. That could net up to $3 billion in lease payments to the federal government — not counting later royalty money.

The price per tract was expected to be lower than that of previous sales, causing consumer groups to complain that the government is selling its resources too cheap.

Tony Benson, regional exploration director for Amoco, said the government is getting a good deal by attracting more companies to buy more leases.

The semi-annual sales have drawn increasingly fewer bids in recent years due to the slump in the industry and the stiff competition for the relatively few tracts offered.

A similar mass sale has already been held for the Atlantic coast, and another is planned in August for waters off Texas.

Until now, companies nominated tracts, and the government assessed the areas' environmental sensitivity and development potential, then offered some of them for sale — often only 25 percent.

"When I started in the tire business, I needed a bank that would stay with me. Texas American Bank has for 20 years."

Don Flatt, Executive Vice President

Bill Williams, President, Owner, Bill Williams Tire Center

When Bill Williams started banking at Texas American Bank back in 1963, he had ideas of starting his own tire business. He needed a bank that would start with him and stay with him.

Now Bill is president of both Bill Williams Tire Center, a B.F. Goodrich dealership, and West Texas Bandag Recapping, Inc., a tire recapping business serving the trucking industry.

Over the years Texas American has worked closely with Bill to meet the financial needs of his growing business. This long-standing relationship continues today with Don Flatt, Executive Vice President and Manager of Our Commercial Lending Division.

Bill stayed with the tire business and came out a winner. Staying with winners is what makes Texas American a great bank.

Let's talk business.

White House worried about security at 1984 Games

Anti-terrorist authority retained for special report

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — The White House has retained retired Army Col. Charles A. Beckwith, leader of the ill-fated 1980 Iranian hostage rescue mission and an authority in anti-terrorist matters, to write a special report on the status of security planning for the Los Angeles Olympics, it was disclosed here earlier this week.

Law enforcement officials in Los Angeles and Olympics President Peter V. Ueberroth all confirmed the report, which came first from an intelligence source.

Orders for the Beckwith inquiry were said to have been given by Michael K. Deaver, deputy White House chief of staff, who is President Reagan's liaison with the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee.

The White House was said to want to determine, before federal involvement in the security effort grows, the exact status of the preparations so as to be sure that federal participation will be adequate.

The Reagan administration recently requested Congress to appropriate $69.1 million to finance federal security efforts at the 1984 Games. However, $50 million of this was for military contingencies and some White House staff members have questioned whether the right amount is adequate.

The intelligence source said that officials in Washington want to be certain that the Olympic security effort is going well since the ultimate responsibility and blame, if anything were to go wrong, would fall on them.

If there are deficiencies, he said, the time to find them out is now. Beckwith's essential job, this source said, is to expose any deficiencies so that quick corrective action can be taken by the highest authorities.

Part of Beckwith's comprehensive study will concentrate on anti-terrorist preparations in which the federal government could particularly assist, security sources said.

Over recent months there have been periodic reports, many of them speculative, about the possibility of an international security incident at the Games.

Ueberroth said Monday, "We will support Col. Beckwith with all the information he needs (to do his report)." Beckwith, who heads Security Assistance Service of Texas, Ltd., of Austin, was not available for comment.

However, it was learned that Beckwith has been specifically told to:

—Review and describe current and projected preparations for handling security at the Games.

—Assess present security operations.

—Evaluate the status and adequacy of estimates for handling any specific incidents that may occur.

—Evaluate current requests for federal support.

—Recommend solutions to any problems that he finds.

One security official said the Beckwith report would also explore such questions as command responsibility in case of any serious incidents during the Games.

Woman outlasts 30 others to win new car

RED BANK, N.J. (AP) — A 31-year-old woman who kept one hand touching a new car for almost 70 hours outlasted 30 other people to win the $6,000 automobile.

Marilyn Bennett of Eatontown kept her hand on the 1983 Plymouth Colt for 69 hours, 44 minutes to win the endurance contest sponsored by a local radio station and an auto dealer.

The contest, which started Friday night with 31 people touching the car, ended at 4:44 p.m. Monday when Tom Skrzot, 29, of Red Bank was disqualified.

"He was falling asleep and leaning all over the car, and that was against the rules," said Vince Santarelli, assistant program director of Long Branch's WMJY-FM.

Contest rules required participants to keep at least one hand touching the painted surface of the car at all times, with 10-minute breaks every two hours. Contestants were not allowed to eat while touching the car, although drinking was permitted.

The biggest danger to contestants was falling asleep and having their hands drop from the car. Some contestants lay beneath the car in sleeping bags, with elbows resting on chests to allow their fingers to touch the side.

Diane Degenfelder, left, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Degenfelder, and Kendra Cox, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Cox, were named by the American Association of University Women as outstanding girls of the month for March and April, respectively. Ms Degenfelder, a senior at Lee High School, has received two academic letters and a PTA academic award. She is a member of the 100 Club, Junior Council, Rebelettes, Young Life and Nike. She serves as treasurer of the National Honor Society and JETS and secretary of Medical Explorers. Ms. Cox, a senior at Midland High School, has received an academic award and two first place awards in foreign language. A member of the student council for two years, she has taken Spanish all four years in high school and accompanied a church youth group on a trip to Mexico as an interpretor.

Carolyn Armendariz and Kirk Alan Wooldridge are recipients of scholarships from the Midland Woman's Club for 1983-84. Miss Armendariz, a senior at Lee High School, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Armendariz. Wooldridge, a senior at Midland High School, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Wooldridge.

Lemur snatched from zoo

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A rare ruffed lemur has been stolen from its cage at the Los Angles Zoo just four weeks after its birth, a zoo spokeswoman said.

The kitten-sized animal needs six to eight feedings a day and probably will die if not returned to its mother immediately, said Lora Lamarca, curator of education.

Someone slipped into the closed zoo past security guards Monday night and cut a hole in the lemur cage with wire cutters.

Oldest minerals unearthed

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Australian scientists claim to have found minerals formed 4 billion years ago, as much as 400 million years earlier than the oldest previously known minerals.

The Australian National University research school of earth sciences, which published its finding in the current issue of its journal, said the newly discovered zircons were formed only 300 million years after the birth of the earth.

The report said the oldest previously known minerals were found in Greenland in 1973.

The zircons "bring us to within 300 million years of the estimated age of the earth itself, an age estimated from the dating of meteorites," the article said.

The zircons once were part of igneous rock which had weathered and eroded with time, freeing the zircons, which became part of the sediments deposited on the earth's original crust, the article said.

Court upholds conviction

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Court of Criminal Appeals recently upheld an appeals court decision ordering a new trial for James Allen Johnson, convicted in Midland County of unlawfully carrying a handgun on licensed premises.

Johnson received a two-year sentence.

The court said it agreed with the appeals court ruling that Johnson was entitled to have the trial court "submit jury instruction on the defensive theories of necessity," but disagreed that the trial court should have instructed the jury regarding self defense (as the appeals court had concluded should have been done).

Security taken seriously at second US Festival

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

DEVORE, Calif. — Just behind the hills south of Glen Helen Regional Park, site of next weekend's US Festival, workmen are starting construction on the holding pens sheriff's deputies will use if music fans get too rowdy during the four-day event.

The temporary jail cells are a small, but necessary, part of the preparations for handling up to 200,000 fans a day who officials think could be attracted by the long Memorial Day weekend and big-name acts like David Bowie and Van Halen. No one is expecting trouble, but security plans are are being taken more seriously than for the first US Festival, held last September at the park 65 miles east of Los Angeles.

More than 1,600 sheriff's deputies and private security guards are assigned to the festival, which begins Saturday. That does not include undercover officers who will be watching for drugs and the dozens of traffic officers who will help fans get in and out of the festival grounds, located near the intersection of two freeways north of San Bernardino.

Increased security was promised by the organizers, Unuson Corp., the non-profit group started by former Apple Computer designer Steven Wozniak, after last year's festival. There were no major problems at the first festival, but after local residents complained San Bernardino County officials insisted on more control this time.

"WE ARE NOT going to allow violation of the law," Capt. James Ferronato of the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Dept. said. "We are going to make those arrests that good judgment tells you to make."

One task will be keeping the revelers separated from the 1,000 townspeople of Devore, adjacent to the festival site. Although some merchants profited nicely from the first festival, relations between the organizers and local residents have been strained.

About 200 residents jammed into a meeting last week to complain about what many consider an unwelcome invasion of their small town.

Tommy R. Farris, owner of Devore Country Feed Store, angrily told Supervisor David L. McKenna, "You're stealin' from us so you guys can have more money (from services fees and free-spending rock fans)." Farris and other merchants sought unsuccessfully to be compensated for the business they expect to lose.

After the residents demanded better protection, a private security company was retained by festival organizers, under the terms of an agreement with the county, to provide security in town.

Residents also convinced officials to close the Devore Road off-ramp to festival traffic and build a separate access road for residents only. Special ramps on Interstate 15 were scheduled to be built to handle festival traffic.

YET SOME OF the residents simply don't find the rock music to their liking.

"They have hired music that definitely brings antisocial behavior," said Mary Salva.

The county is expecting a substantial financial boost for its troubles. One county official predicted the festival would bring $10 million to $20 million in sales to county companies and up to $50 million in publicity. The county assessed a $425,000 fee for use of the park and required the organizers to reimburse all of the costs for police, fire and other public safety services.

Unuson is also hoping the better security will help reduce its losses. Unuson will not reveal exactly how much it lost staging last year's Labor Day weekend festival, but Wozniak reportedly lost $4 million from his personal fortune bankrolling the event. This year, the festival will cost $18 million to stage, slightly more than the previous year

To save money Unuson concentrated on stopping the rash of unauthorized vendors and gate crashers that appeared at last year's event.

'Taxi' blows its horn one final time

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — The Sunshine Cab Co. was an ironic shingle for the misfits in "Taxi." There wasn't a success story in the bunch. In five years, none of the drivers found a road paved with anything more than harsh reality and hard knocks.

"It's a lot like life," says Ed. Weinberger, one of the creators of the award-winning comedy, which has its next-to-last original episode on NBC tonight. "Nobody made it out." The last new show is scheduled for June 15.

Yet, together, the characters forged a friendship and camraderie that hadn't been seen in network comedies since "The Mary Tyler Moore Show." They were the kind of cabbies who would pick you up in a rainstorm.

That warmth was their success, and the program's cancelation by two networks in two seasons can't take it away.

When the meter stops ticking tonight, the program that won the Emmy for best comedy three years in a row will be replaced by "Buffalo Bill," about an egotistical talk-show host on a television station in Buffalo, N.Y.

This time, the closing notice will stick. NBC salvaged "Taxi" from ABC's scrapheap after the 1981-82 season, but the producers now have gone off to different projects. Weinberger and his partner, Stan Daniels, have created a new comedy, "Mr. Smith," about a talking orangutan. It will be on NBC's fall schedule on Friday night.

THERE WAS QUITE a furor when ABC canceled "Taxi" last season, thus losing its one comedy with grit and grown-up wit. The fact that it failed on NBC in three timeslots will substantiate, for some, ABC's decision. But ABC never came up with anything better in ratings, and certainly not in quality.

"NBC did what it had to do," says Weinberger. "I regret it, but I respect it. It was a business decision. They treated us fairly and gave us a shot. There's no kicking or screaming this time. We felt at least NBC respected us. At ABC, I didn't think it mattered to them that they were canceling a quality show."

Because of the fifth year on NBC, "Taxi" did 22 more shows and went over the magic 100-episode mark. "You want over 100 episodes when you make your syndication deal," says Weinberger.

Even if "Taxi" lost some fares the past few seasons, it still produced programs that were funny and touching. Precisely because life was a series of fender-benders for the oddballs in "Taxi," our lives became, by comparison, a bit brighter.

This is not to say that "Taxi" was consistently brilliant. In the past two seasons, the show took a wrong turn whenever it showcased Latka (Andy Kaufman), the foreign grease monkey, and his alien rituals. This violated the show's spirit of producing identifiable and realistic human comedy.

BUT, GENERALLY, "Taxi" described the human condition poignantly, better, in fact, than it depicted genuine New York cabbies. Without a black or Hispanic in the front-line cast, "Taxi" was more Hollywood's version of a New York cab company.

The only character who really resembled a hack was Alex Reiger (Judd Hirsch), a seen-it-all type with a laissez-faire attitude. He also was most content to being a cabbie forever. Tony (Tony Danza) wanted to be a boxer, Elaine (Marilu Henner) saw herself as a fashionable art dealer and Bobby (Jeff Conaway) was a New York actor.

Conaway left the series midway but made a return visit to the garage — this time Bobby was a struggling Hollywood actor. "Anything else would have seemed phony," says Weinberger. After all, this was a show about potholes, not paved superhighways.

Which brings us to the delightfully des. Diminutive Danny De Vito made this cynical, hateful taxi dispatcher as unredeeming as they come. He took perverse pleasure in belittling his fellow losers, hiding his insecurities and personality flaws in an acidic tongue.

Computer wizard promises to tell all about rock festival

Steve Wozniak

DEVORE, Calif. (AP) — Computer wizard Steve Wozniak complains there are big differences between the computer business and the rock music industry.

"There are a lot of scams going" in the music industry, said Wozniak on Monday as he made final arrangements for this weekend's US Festival of rock 'n' roll and country music.

Wozniak, who's using some of the millions from his Apple Computer Corp. for an encore to the first US Festival last Labor Day weekend, suggests this may be his last such venture if it doesn't turn a profit.

"Twenty times a day my wife tries to get me to promise I will not do another one," said the computer expert.

"The rock 'n' roll business is not like the computer business, which is really easy, straightforward and upfront," he says. "In this business, everybody is always trying to get something out of somebody else and trick them out of it."

He would not be specific, but promised to tell all after the festival.

This year's four-day event reportedly is budgeted at $18 million and UNUSON officials estimate they need at least 750,000 ticket buyers just to break even.

LONDON (AP) — Soraya Khashoggi, ex-wife of multimillionaire arms dealer Adnan Khashoggi, wants a London court to jail her third husband, 23-year-old American playboy Arthur Rupley.

In papers filed by her attorneys before the High Court on Tuesday, Mrs. Khashoggi, 41, accuses Rupley of violating a directive issued by a judge last month not to try to contact her. She says he has been pestering her with telephone calls. He told her he was desperate and going to take his own life, Mrs. Khashoggi said.

She asked that he be jailed for contempt. The court took the matter under advisement.

Mrs. Khashoggi married Rupley in July 1982, a year after she lost a $2.4 billion suit stemming from her 1974 divorce from Khashoggi, one of the world's richest men.

Her marriage to Rupley went on the rocks within eight months, and Mrs. Khashoggi filed for separation.

Rupley's attorneys admit he has telephoned his wife, but they say he said he has been tricked into calling her as part of a plot to gain his consent for custody of her two children.

HOUSTON (AP) — Actress Carol Wayne, alleging she was fired from a Dallas theater's production of "Cactus Flower" at the insistence of actress Elke Sommer, has filed a $2.75 million suit against the theater and Ms. Sommer.

She says she was promised $2,500 per week from March 16 through April 18 and was supposed to get the use of a model car and condominium.

The suit contends that Grandmothers Productions Inc., which operates Granny's Dinner Theater in Dallas, breached her contract and had her ejected from the condominium.

Ms. Sommer made unflattering statements and urged that the dinner theater fire her, Ms. Wayne also says in the suit.

John Wall, a vice president of the Dallas corporation, said Ms. Wayne was fired after two rehearsals "because she was not right for the part." He said Ms. Wayne was paid two weeks salary.

'Star Wars' conclusion returns as producer's best

The long-awaited conclusion of George Lucas' "Star Wars" trilogy, "The Return of the Jedi," opened to crowded theaters today, leaving a galaxy of fans with stars in their eyes and producers predicting box office receipts out of this world.

"The ending was super — it was apple pie and motherhood all over again," said David Smith of Fort Worth, who attended a benefit premiere Tuesday evening in Dallas, of the 11 previews for charity around the country. "They set it up very nice and kept all the surprises for the end."

On the West Coast, some theaters began showing the movie commercially at midnight, and New York theaters planned to open early. The film was slated to open at 900 movie houses coast-to-coast.

The opening of "Jedi," which winds up the saga started in "Star Wars" and "The Empire Strikes Back," was timed to coincide with the sixth anniversary of the premiere of "Star Wars."

Despite mixed reviews, advance sales for "Jedi" were booming and telephones were busy at theaters Tuesday as fans mapped strategy for an early look at the latest installment in the adventures of Luke, Leia, Lando, Han and company.

The $32.5 million film got a generally enthusiastic reception from its first paying audiences Tuesday night at the benefit premieres in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago, Denver, Dallas, Boston, Cleveland, Flint, Mich., Tucson, Ariz., Oakland, Calif., and Toronto.

"It was absolutely fabulous," said Mrs. Paula Kamisher, who with Annette Schmidt came to the movie in Los Angeles with their two sons, both cancer patients at UCLA Medical Center. "It's one of the best I have ever seen."

At Lucas' request, the benefits were for children-oriented charities.

Capacity crowds at three screenings in Los Angeles paid $25 a ticket, raising $70,000 for Concern II, part of a private charity for cancer immunology research for children, officials said.

In some cities the film already had been seen at promotional screenings. Reviewers, while lauding the impressive array of special effects and a gallery of new characters, have qualified their approval with criticism that the film's ending is too happy — and suggestions that the "Star Wars" aesthetic may be getting shopworn.

The movie reveals Luke Skywalker and Princess Leia as brother and sister and portrays the villainous Darth Vader as Luke's father. The film ends with Vader showing his good side by saving his son from death at the hands of the evil emperor, and the good guys winning the three-movie war by destroying the Empire's Death Star spacecraft.

"Jedi" is "by far the dimmest adventure of the lot," said Vincent Canby of The New York Times.

But other advance viewers were more generous.

Students complain about White House

MERCED, Calif. (AP) — Some eighth-graders at a central California elementary school were less than impressed by the maintenance at the White House.

David Bliss helped write a report to accompany a slide presentation on their visit this month to the nation's capital.

"The White House needs to be repaired because when we were there the paint was chipped and the wood was damaged," Bliss wrote.

ABC wins again in ratings race

LOS ANGELES (AP) — ABC for the second straight week won the television ratings, but CBS clung to a narrow lead in the May sweeps.

ABC took first place in the network standings in the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings for the week ended May 22.

The top show of the week was NBC's "Motown: Yesterday, Today and Forever," a tribute to 25 years of music from Detroit.

ABC won with a rating of 15.4. CBS was second with 14.9 and NBC was third with 13.6. The networks say this means that in an average prime time minute 15.4 percent of the country's TV homes were tuned to ABC.

Despite two victories by ABC and one by NBC, CBS held a narrow lead in the May sweeps in the Nielsen and Arbitron ratings. CBS won only the first week. In the Nielsen ratings, CBS has 15.2, ABC has 14.9 and NBC has 14.6 for the first 25 days. In the Arbitron ratings, CBS has 15.2, ABC 15.1 and NBC 14.6 in the first 26 days.

The sweeps are periods during which more comprehensive ratings are taken to determine the advertising rates for local stations.

CBS has maintained a lead because of an advantage it has gained by the midweek start of the sweeps. Its strongest nights are Thursday, Friday and Sunday, which are counted to its favor by the midweek start. In addition, CBS' weekly losses were by very narrow margins.

ABC won the February sweeps in a big way, thanks to "The Winds of War." CBS was several points behind in second and NBC lagged far behind in third place.

CBS had five of the week's Top 10 shows. Its highest-ranked was "Alice." ABC had three shows, with its highest-rated show "Hollywood's Private Home Movies" in third place. NBC had two shows in the Top 10. Besides its first place "Motown" "The A-Team" finished sixth.

Here are the week's 20 top programs:

1. "Motown: Yesterday, Today and Forever," NBC, a rating of 22.8 representing 18.9 million homes.
2. "Alice," CBS, 21.0 or 17.4 million.
3. "Hollywood'd Private Home Movies," ABC, 20.7 or 17.2 million.
4. "Magnum, P.I.," CBS, 19.2 or 15.99 million.
5. "The Love Boat," ABC, 19.1 or 15.91 million.
6. "The A-Team," NBC, 18.8 or 15.6 million.
7. "60 Minutes," CBS, 18.5 or 15.4 million.
8. "The Jeffersons," CBS, 18.4 or 15.3 million.
9. "Trapper John, M.D.," CBS, 18.2 or 15.1 million.
10. "Hart to Hart," ABC, 17.4 or 14.4 million.
11. Movie-"Travis McGee," ABC, 17.3 or 14.4 million.
12. "9 to 5," ABC, 17.1 or 14.2 million.
13. "Parade of Stars," ABC, 16.8 or 13.99 million.
14. "It's an Adventure, Charlie Brown," 16.7 or 13.91 million.
15. "One Day at a Time," CBS, 16.5 or 13.7 million.
16. "Three's Company," ABC, 16.4 or 13.6 million.
17. "Hill Street Blues," NBC, 16.3 or 13.5 million.
18. Movie-"Death on the Nile," ABC, 16.0 or 13.3 million.
19. "Remington Steele," NBC, 15.9 or 13.2 million.
20. "Knight Rider," NBC, 15.8 or 13.1 million.

School Association protests 'classy' stripper

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — A stripper entered a business school class and performed a "sexually demeaning" dance, and the incident demands disciplinary action, the Teaching Assistants' Association at the University of Wisconsin says.

Action should be taken against "persons responsible for sending the stripper into Professor (George) John's class, and against Professor John for failing to exclude sexually demeaning activity from his classroom," the group told Chancellor Irving Shain in a letter.

Old wine may be worth $40,000

MENTOR, Ohio (AP) — Daniel Zivko didn't know much about wine, but he seemed to recall "they made good wine in Bordeaux." So he bought a dusty collection of bottles for $500 which may turn into a $40,000 windfall.

Zivko and his wife went to a sale of furnishings at the mansion of Edward W. Moore in Kirtland last fall, hoping to pick up some art objects at reasonable prices.

A wine expert was reported to have appraised the wine and liquor collection, including about 880 bottles of wine, at $700.

Zivko, who works for a subcontractor doing energy audits, picked up one bottle marked Haut Sauternes 1912 Bordeaux.

"I pulled it out of the case and held it to the light," he recalls. 'It was a light amber color and gleamed like a topaz.

"The Haut Sauternes meant nothing to me, but from somewhere in the back of my mind, I recalled that they made good wine in Bordeaux."

He offered $450 for the collection, and was talked up to $500.

His wife, Lynn, was not happy. "She almost killed me," says Zivko. "Everything was just covered with dust, and I wondered where I could put all those dirty crates and bottles," Mrs. Zivko said.

The Zivkos took about 100 of the bottles home with them, stopping along the way to buy a couple of wine books.

Among the bottles was an 1899 Chateau Haut-Brion. That vintage, one book said, was outstanding.

The Zivkos were later told by Alexander C. McNally, who runs the annual Heublein Inc. auction of rare wines, that 390 bottles of their wines would bring between $25,000 to $40,000 at auction.

So the Zivkos plan to auction off their wine Thursday at the Beverly Wilshire hotel in Los Angeles, and they'll learn exactly how much their $500 investment was worth.

MISD principals change chairs

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

In a confusing change of chairs brought on by the opening of two new schools, six Midland Independent School District teachers and intern-administrators were overlooked for promotions to principals of elementary schools.

Tuesday, a principal from another school district was appointed principal of a Midland elementary school despite opposition of two school trustees, who said they felt it was against a policy implemented by the school district last year.

During a meeting of the Midland Independent School District trustees, John McAfee, a four-year elementary school principal from Terrell, was appointed to Bunche Early Childhood Center, replacing Beverly Ihinger. Mrs. Ihinger was moved to Lamar Elementary to replace Roberto Banda, who was moved to Crockett Elementary.

Crockett's former principal, Larry Wilkinson, was moved to Bowie Elementary during the last meeting. He replaces Royce Austin, who was appointed principal at the new Santa Rita Elementary School.

Also involved in the shuffling of superiors was Clyde Hobbs, a teacher at Travis Elementary, who was appointed to fill the position at Emerson Elementary vacated by principal Joe Cummins. Cummins was appointed to serve as principal at the new Quanah Parker Elementary School.

Last year, in an effort to provide management training and possible promotions for in-district personnel, an intern program was established. Six MISD teachers were placed at overcrowded elementary schools where they could receive experience in management roles.

None of the six who were reassigned to the schools, where they serve as assistant administrators, were involved in the swaps and switches.

"I think Dr. McAfee is overly qualified for this position," said Trustee Joe Golding. "I think he's an outstanding man. My problem has nothing to do with his qualifications.

"My problem has to do with the intern program we started last year," Golding continued. "We hire them and place them at an elementary school with no guarantee that they'll be principals — and I understand that.

"But my problem is hiring someone from outside the district and bypassing five or six others.

New truck route system for Midland rolls forward

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

A new truck route system moved a step closer to becoming law Tuesday as the Midland City Council approved on first reading an ordinance expanding the city's local truck route and prohibiting unnecessary truck traffic on portions of seven residential streets.

In other action, the council approved an ordinance which would require a six-month waiting period before a person who is denied a special temporary mobile home permit can reapply for the permit. The council also voted to amend the Neighborhood Service District zoning classification to permit self-service fuel sales with a specific use permit.

During its meeting in City Hall Council Chambers, the council voted 5-0 — with Councilman Steve Davidson absent — to approve the proposed trucking ordinance. The ordinance incorporated some compromises reached during a May 13 meeting between city representatives and local truck operators.

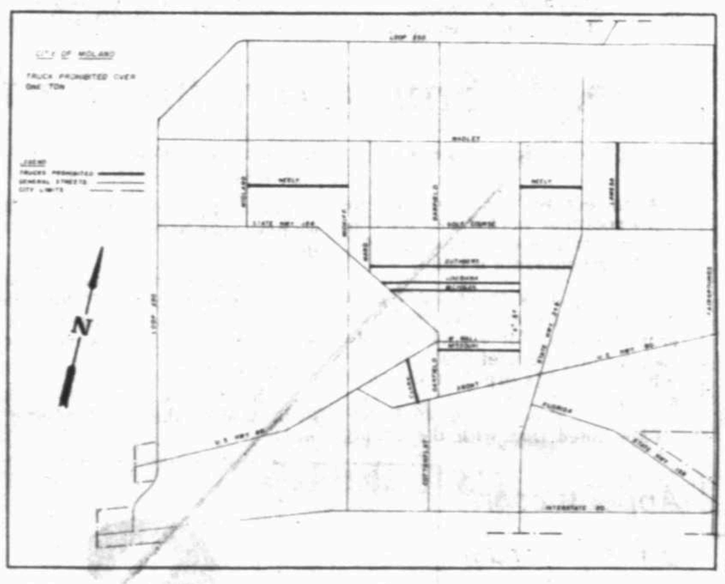

The ordinance establishes "truck routes" for trucks having three axles or more, and those carrying hazardous materials, which are not doing business inside the city.

THE "TRUCK ROUTES" include: Loop 250 from Interstate 20 to Fairgrounds Road, Interstate 20 from the west city limits to the east city limits, Fairgrounds from the south city limits to Loop 250, Texas 349 from I-20 to the south city limits, Texas 349 from Loop 250 to the north city limits and Texas 158 from I-20 to the east city limits.

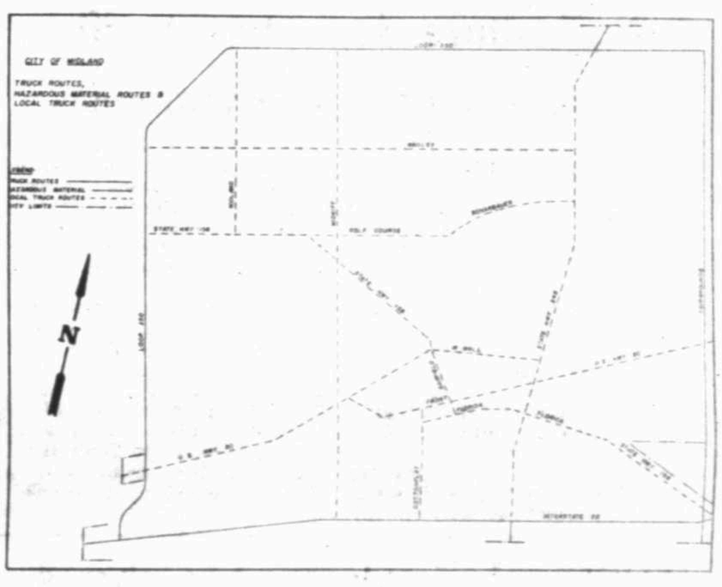

"Local truck routes" also are provided for trucks with three axles or more making deliveries, pick-ups or doing other business inside the city. Trucks may depart from the "truck routes" to use the most direct "local truck route" to their destination.

The ordinance also states that a trucker operating on a "local truck route" should carry a log book or other evidence of his starting point and destination to help justify his use of the route. Although absence of such evidence is not a violation, the ordinance states that it will "create a presumption such person is unlawfully operating...upon a street or roadway which is not designated a truck route."

The "local truck routes" include: Wadley Avenue from Loop 250 to Texas 349, Texas 158 from Loop 250 to West Wall Avenue, U.S. 80 from Loop 250 to Fairgrounds, West Wall from U.S. 80 to Texas 349, Texas 158 from Texas 349 to Fairgrounds, Florida Avenue from Texas 349 to Cotton Flat Road, Midland Drive from Texas 158 to Loop 250, Midkiff Road from I-20 to Loop 250, Cotton Flat from I-20 to U.S. 80, Garfield Street from Texas 158 to Florida, Texas 349 from I-20 to Loop 250, Scharbauer Drive from Texas 349 to Golf Course Road and Golf Course from Scharbauer to Texas 158.

A new city ordinance, if passed on second reading, would prohibit trucks more than one ton from traveling on the streets marked in bold lines.

The map outlines which streets local delivery trucks can use and routes for trucks carrying hazardous materials.

TRUCKS WITH a standard maximum load capacity of more than one ton are prohibited from sections of seven streets under the proposed ordinance. Public Works director Fred Baker said traffic studies indicated the streets, which were built for residential traffic, are bearing through-city truck traffic.

Baker indicated more streets could be added to the "no truck" group in the future.

Councilman Tom Sloan said the city's ordinance is designed to help save money on street repairs. "We're not trying to work a hardship on anyone," he said.

Mayor G. Thane Akins, addressing Postal Service representatives at the meeting, jokingly said their carrier's creed should now read "neither rain, nor sleet...nor city ordinances."

The ordinance permits trucks more than one ton to travel the "no truck" streets while doing business on those streets. It also exempts residents who live on those streets, provided they enter the street at the point nearest their destination on the streets.

New traffic signals installed on U.S. 80

The state highway department has announced that new traffic lights will be installed and operating today at two locations in Midland County and one in Ector County.

The Midland County signal lights — both west of Midland Regional Airport — will go up on U.S. Highway 80 at its intersection with OIME road and at the intersection of U.S. 80 and Coors Road.

The new Ector County signal will be located at U.S. Highway 385 and Yukon Road. It will be coupled with an advance flashing warning light north of the intersection.

Each of the signals will be located in areas where motorists are unaccustomed to stopping, and the highway department is urging drivers to use special care at the locations.

The signals — necessitated by high traffic loads — will be traffic-activated, meaning traffic on the main highway will be stopped only when there is actual cross-traffic on the side road.

Driver responsibility and alertness will be required for the signals to function at their peak efficiency, according to the highway department.

Sheriff Smith lays 'neck on the line'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Sheriff Dallas Smith is making a firm offer to the Midland County commissioners: He'll replace the deteriorating courthouse roof, do a good job and save the taxpayers money.

The sheriff told the commissioners to weigh the risks against the rewards.

"I'll lay my neck on the line," he offered Monday. "It won't leak when we get through." The sheriff said he could do the job for about 50 percent of what a commercial roofer would charge and would do better work.

Smith proposed to use jail labor and his deputies to re-roof the courthouse just as he had offered his services to remodel the eastside basement of the courthouse. Commissioners indicated they were pleased with the remodeling work.

"It's a big undertaking," Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis noted.

"It is indeed," said the sheriff, who told the commissioners that his proposal "is an offer. It's not a request."

The present 16,000 square foot roof was installed about 10 years ago when the courthouse was expanded and renovated.

"I've learned a lot about roofs in the last couple of weeks," said Smith. "They're not easy to repair."

The sheriff recommended a new roof for the courthouse. "There's not much hope in patching it."

Sheriff's Lt. Bill Decker, who supervised remodeling of the basement's eastside, studied the roof's condition and explored both repairing and replacing the roof. He recommended the roof be removed and replaced, estimating the job to cost $29,000.

Commercial roofing could cost up to $100,000, Decker said.

In gaining roofing expertise, the sheriff suggested his prisoners follow the "learn-as-we-do concept" by repairing roofs on other county buildings before taking on the courthouse.

Unlike the basement remodeling, roofing work is "more of a liability potential," said Smith. There's a "higher potential of somebody getting hurt."

"We don't have any more liability than anybody else," said Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig. "...It's pretty obvious it's a dangerous undertaking."

Said Commissioner Win Brown: "Other counties are doing this (working prisoners)." In some cases, prisoner are "driving around town unsupervised."

Cautioned Smith: "If something happens, we are going to be sued."

Brown told Smith he was "quite impressed" with the sheriff's proposal and research.

"I like the concept," said Brown. "It would be a way of getting the job done at minimal cost." He recommended that additional research be carried out before the commissioners decide on a roofing approach.

"Do y'all want to make a big Band-Aid patch or do you want to build a new roof?" asked the sheriff. "If the roof had been done properly (10 years ago), we wouldn't be doing this now."

MMH board votes to accept bid for revenue bonds

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Although disappointed with the medium grade revenue bond rating for Midland Memorial Hospital's 77-bed expansion, the board of directors Tuesday voted 4-1 to accept the only bid received for the revenue bonds.

During a called meeting, the board accepted the sole bid from Rauscher Pierce Refsnes Inc., the account manager, at 10.826 percent overall interest for the Baa-rated revenue bonds. Other members of the account included: First Southwest Corp., Merrill Lynch, E.F. Hutton and Rotan Mosle.

In April MMH officials went to New York, seeking a revenue bond rating from Moody's Investor Services and Standard & Poor's Corp. While Moody's announced its rating Monday, Standard and Poor's declined to give MMH's revenue bonds a rating.

"I think it had to do with the accounting changes we made in the last several years," said president of MMH directors Tevis Herd in a telephone interview this morning.

"I think it had something to do with the fact that we broke even the last two years," he said. "We didn't lose any money, but we didn't make any.

"They (Standard & Poor's) felt the last six months (of our financial statements) was a good indication that we'll be operating in the black, but they didn't want to rate us on the last six months," he added. "They told us that if we kept doing what we're doing right now that in 18 months we'd get an A rating, but not now."

Following a short consultation during the public meeting, the MMH board of trustees' finance committee gave its recommendation to the directors.

"We recommend acceptance of bid," said finance committee chairman Tom Bruner.

In a telephone interview after the meeting, Bruner declined to say how he voted in the finance committee recommendation. But, during the meeting, he spoke for the group, saying the bid should be accepted because the beds are needed and the interest rate is lower than the 12 percent predicted a year ago.

Directors discussed in March and voted in April to finance the $15 million 77-bed expansion with revenue bonds as opposed to general obligation bonds, which require voter approval.

During the March discussion, former director Dr. Henrie Mast said there was a slight advantage to financing this type of project with general obligation bonds — the interest rate is lower.

Mast told the directors a Crane hospital sold general obligations at a 7.32 percent interest rate and he anticipated MMH's revenue bonds would be ½ to ¾ of 1 percent higher.

But Tuesday, Herd said the 10.8 percent interest rate was the result of "instability in the bond market the past three days."

Pat Estes, MMH's senior director who voted against the bid, said she was "very disappointed we didn't have a better rating.

"I have to reiterate the need. I know we need the beds. We're in a tight bind, but I'm very hesitant to go with this bid."

The district sold the revenue bonds for $19,875,000 which are payable solely from and secured by the hospital's gross revenue. While the estimated project cost is $15.1 million, the remaining cash will be put in a reserve fund as a cushion. The project is expected to be completed in 1985.

"We're disappointed with the rating," said Herd, referring to the Baa from Moody's.

"We would have preferred to have a higher rating, but this is not a poor rating. It's just one step below what we were expecting."

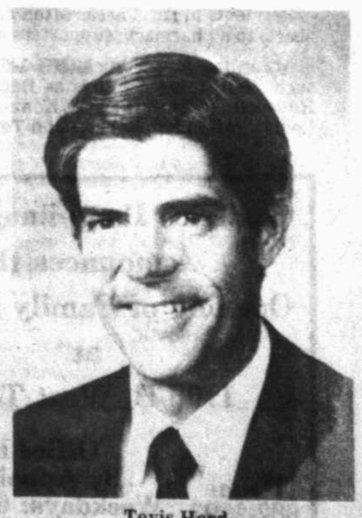

Moody's ratings for bonds includes: AAA, the best quality; Aa, high quality standards; A, upper medium grade; Baa, medium grade; Ba, speculative; B, lack characteristics of desirable investment; and so forth to a C, which is the lowest rated class of bonds.

The purpose of Moody's ratings is to provide investors with a simple system of gradation.

When bids are put on the open market, as they were Tuesday at MMH, several investors usually bid competitively for high-rated revenue bonds. Under a relatively stable market, the Baa bond brings about ¾ of 1 to 1 percent higher interest rate than the A bond.

According to Moody's, "Bonds which are rated Baa are considered medium grade obligations...Such bonds lack outstanding investment characteristics and in fact have speculative characteristics as well."

MMH's financial adviser Joe Smith, representing First Southwest Co. of Dallas, said the revenue bonds were given a Baa rating because Moody's focused on the hospital's 1981 through 1982 financial statements. Smith said these audits reflected a somewhat dimmer financial picture than the 1983 figures.

Tevis Herd

"They look at everything, but they (Moody's) are reluctant to look at unaudited figures," Smith said.

City council may start new insurance program

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

With employee insurance claims nearing $1 million for the 12-month period ending June 30, Midland City Council voted Tuesday to investigate the possibility of starting a self-funding insurance program.

At the same time, the council voted to raise the deductible for major medical and dental coverage from $100 on each to a $200 total deductible. An agent with the city's employee insurance company, American Security Life, told city staffers that if the deductible wasn't raised, the company might have been forced to ask for a 27 percent increase in premiums for the 12 months beginning July 1.

David Hunter, city personnel director, said Tuesday the city of Midland and its employees will pay a projected $1,104,710 in premiums during the 12 months ending June 30. During the same period, claims and administrative expenses paid to the insurance company are projected to total $1,080,136.

Because of soaring medical care costs and an increase in the number of city employees, Hunter said, paid claims ballooned from $486,084 two years ago to $784,385 last year.

He said that, although the projected $1,080,136 in claims this year includes administrative expenses, total claims will easily exceed last year's amount. Claims this year have been further inflated by about five large claims of $25,000 or more, Hunter said.

The city's loss ratio — the ratio of claims to premiums — has reached 98 percent, according to Hunter. He said the insurance industry considers a "good" loss ratio to be around 85 percent.

In past years, when paid claims fell sufficiently short of the premiums collected, the insurance company has refunded a portion of the claims which the city then placed in a fund to meet future insurance expenses.

Hunter said the reserve fund is virtually depleted now because paid claims are gradually outstripping premiums. Last year, life and medical insurance claims each surpassed premiums by about $30,000.

Employees now pay 40 percent of the premium while the city pays the remaining 60 percent. An employee's monthly payment for family coverage — including medical, dental and life insurance — ranges from $59.82 to $67.48. Combined with the city's share, the average monthly rate for family coverage ranges from $136.57 to $154.07.

A 27 percent increase in premiums for an employee paying $59.82 would have meant an additional $194 in annual insurance expenses.

Hunter said the new $200 combined deductible begins June 1. Under the new system, employees must incur a combination of medical and dental expenses totaling $200 before insurance payments take effect.

City employees were notified of the insurance changes being considered via a May 4 memo.

City Manager James Brown also told the council that the city may be able to save money by "rowing our own boat" — contracting with an insurance program administrator to operate a self-funding group insurance program while retaining control over premiums and claim payment.

Brown said an insurance program administrator could cost as little as $58,000 annually, while administrative fees payed to the insurance company totaled about $120,000 last year.

By operating its own program, Brown said, the city would also retain control over the investment of premiums not consumed by claims.

The council voted 5-0, with Councilman Steve Davidson absent, to approve the deductible change and to authorize advertisement for bids on a self-funding insurance program.

Agriculture department official meets with conservationists

Richard D. Siegel, U.S. Department of Agriculture deputy assistant secretary for natural resources and environment, will meet with Midland conservationists in a stopover at Midland tonight.

Siegel, who is touring West Texas ranches and farmland, will be at the Midland Hilton's pool area at 7 p.m. today, according to Dick Hagelstein, district conservationist for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service (SCS) in Midland.

Siegel, 43, a Washington, D.C., lawyer, was appointed to the USDA post in May 1981 by the Reagan administration. He works with Assistant Secretary of Agriculture John B. Crowell Jr. in directing policy for the national forest and national soil conservation program. The two agencies under their supervision are the U.S. Forest Service and the U.S. Soil Conservation Service.

His prior government service includes his being an associate minority counsel for the U.S. Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, 1971-73; legislative counsel to Sen. Richard S. Schweiker, R-Pa., 1969-71, and special assistant to Schweiker when Schweiker was in the U.S. House of Representatives, 1966-69.

MISD principals change chairs

"I think we need to re-evaluate the interns," Golding said. "If they are not qualified (to fill the position as principals), let's get some that are."

Trustee Gary Hopper agreed.

"I'm also going to vote against (the appointment of McAfee)," he said. "I believe we should give our local people a chance. I agree we didn't promise them (they'd be principals), but I don't see how we can go out and encourage our local people when we go out and hire from outside of the program."

Trustees Parker Humes, Ron Britton, Joyce Sherrod and Ann Page approved the appointment of McAfee, which was passed on a 4-2 vote.

"I think that the intern is a young program," Britton explained. "It's just gotten a start."

He pointed out the condition of the economy brought in 95 applications for the Midland High School principal post, vacated by Jack Stone when he was appointed to a new position entitled Director of Staff Development.

During the last couple of years, advertising of the position would have brought in only a few applications, Britton said.

"Any time anybody comes up for a promotion, we've got to have the best people for the job," he said. "I don't think it's anything against the interns."

Bill allows doctors to dispense drugs

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bill sponsored by Midland Rep. Tom Craddick, giving doctors practicing in rural areas without a pharmacy permission to store and dispense prescription drugs to patients, has passed the Senate by a unanimous vote and now goes to Gov. Mark White for consideration.

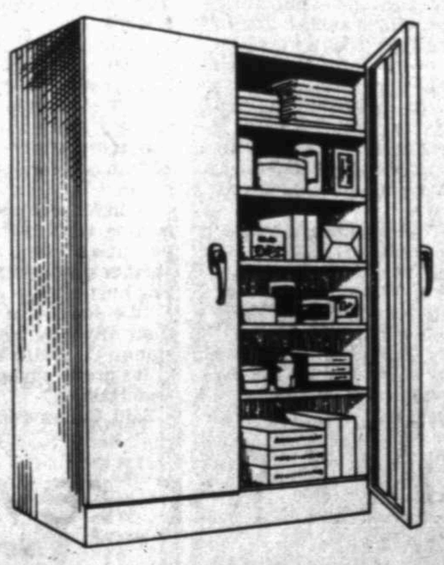

HB 1474, which passed the House on a voice vote in April, defines rural areas as those being outside an incorporated town, or a city with less than 2,500 residents.

The measure, sponsored in the Senate by Sen. Ray Farabee of Wichita Falls, states that licensed physicians would be allowed to charge a separate fee for the drugs and not be required to obtain a special license.

Residents in rural areas often do not have easy access to a pharmacy, supporters of the bill say.

According to Craddick, HB 1474 would affect such West Texas counties as Borden, Glasscock, Hudspeth, Irion, Jeff Davis, Kennedy, Kent, King, Loving, McMullen, Roberts and Terrell.

Proposed truck route system for Midland rolls forward

The "no truck routes" include: Neely Avenue from A Street to Texas 349 and from Midland Drive to Midkiff, Cuthbert Avenue from Ward Street to Texas 349, Louisiana Avenue from Texas 158 to Lamesa Road, Michigan Avenue from Texas 158 to A, Missouri Avenue from Garfield to A, Clark Street from U.S. 80 to Wall and Lamesa from Golf Course to Wadley.

After a second reading June 7, if approved, the ordinance will become law a few days later.

THE CITY re-examined its mobile home application procedures after a woman who recently was denied a permit announced she wished to reapply.

Assistant City Manager Fred Poe said the ordinance amendment was not designed to block Carolyn Mitchell's reapplication, but rather to eliminate a barrage of reapplications in future cases.

Poe said it was discovered that under city code, a person could continually reapply for the permit because no limit existed on the number or timing of reapplications.

Ms. Mitchell recently was denied a permit for a mobile home for her son in her backyard at 1105 W. Missouri Ave. Her reapplication attempt was denied by the City Council.

THE COUNCIL also approved a request by Woodmont Corporation to waive the sidewalk requirements along Loop 250 in Midkiff Plaza, south of Loop 250 and east of Midkiff.

An ordinance establishing stop signs at the intersections of Dormard Avenue and Pecos Street, Indiana Avenue and Pecos and Colorado and Gist Avenues was also approved.

In addition, the council instructed Richard Lyons to secure a letter of credit for an estimated $1,100 worth of curb and sidewalk construction on a piece of land, part of a vacated street, now owned by Lyon and a neighbor.

The council waived a bonding requirement for the project, which is for a piece of property on the west side of Rocky Lane, north of Leisure Drive.

Finally, the council postponed a public hearing to consider, on appeal, a request by T.C. Tubb and Dee Anderson for a zone change on a 1.6-acre tract of land at the southeast corner of Wakefield Road and the I-20 service road.

Sheriff Smith lays his 'neck on line' over roofing job

Architect Walter Pate said the "only roof that works" well is a convex roof "which gets the water off." The courthouse roof is flat.

"I don't think there's any good way of going over a bad roof," the architect said. For a roofing material, he said he preferred cold tar, which "holds up better than asphalt."

Pate noted that with the county doing its own roofing, "you have no warranty."

"Some of the (other) warranties we have sure have been lousy," said Brown.

Smith queried the commissioners. "Do we want a roof?" he asked. "It's easier for me if I don't have to mess with it and not worry about the bad publicity."

"I think it's a marvelous idea," Craig said of the county doing to work.

Commissioner Durward Wright said the county "may see better prices" on roofing materials than in recent months.

"I have reservations," said Davis of the sheriff's proposal. "I'm for saving the taxpayers every dime..., but you ought to really joust this thing around...I'm not really gung-ho about it. I'm for it."

Speaking on behalf of what he termed the "Midland County Roofing Co.," Smith said he's not "so sure that we can't do better than most roofing companies around here."

"I see no problem," said Brown.

"Dallas is not trying to sell a deal: I want to build a roof," the sheriff said of his own proposal. "...I'll help."

"They did such an outstanding job with the law library (in the courthouse basement)," said Ahders. "If Decker says they can do it, they can do it."

Added the sheriff: "It's that time of year for us roofers. Got to work when it's hot."

Appeals court affirms murder convictions

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals today affirmed the capital murder convictions of two death row inmates.

In unrelated cases, Michael Evans of Dallas and Jeffery Griffin of Houston were charged in double murders.

Evans was convicted of shooting Elvira Guerrero to death on June 26, 1977. Miss Guerrero had been robbed during a Sunday picnic.

Red poppies to be sold by ALA

On Friday and Saturday red crepe paper poppies, a reminder of the sacrifice of countless thousands of Americans in four wars, will be offered to the public by members of American Legion Auxiliary Unit P19 in Midland.

The familiar red paper flowers are hand-made by the veterans in 'Poppy Shops.'These shops, in which disabled and hospitalized veterans make the poppies petal by petal, are run by Auxiliary volunteers as part of the physical and psychological therapy program for the veterans.

The poppies are purcahsed from the shops by the Auxiliary and offered to the public for contributions to help veterans. Funds collected from the annual Poppy Day event are used by the local Unit to aid needy veterans and their families in the community and in hospitals throughout the state.

The poppy memorial flower was adopted by the American Legion Auxiliary in 1920 and since that time programs have been conducted throughout the United States each year.

Legion Auxiliary volunteers will havde the poppies at First National Bank building, Walgreens, Gibsons, San Miguel Square and Dellwood Plaza.

Food illnesses harm economy

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

What do restaurant meals, church picnic suppers snd home-canned food all have in common? They each hold the potential for spreading food-borne illness.

Every year, we are particularly concerned that people who do home canning be aware of the dangers associated with poor food handling procedures.

The problem goes far beyond home-canners since medical authorities claim that food-borne disease is the second most common cause of short term illness in the county.

Food-borne illnesses also have severe economic consequences.

According to the Journal of American Medical Association, March 1983, the total cost of a 1978 outbreak of botulism among 34 New Mexico restaurant patrons is now estimated at $5.8 million. Most of that money went for legal settlements and attorney's fees.

Outbreaks of serious food-borne illness linked to restaurants are more likely to lead to legal action than mild outbreaks or those resulting from social group epidemics. It should be noted that food-borne illness from all sources is estimated to cost Americans millions each year in medical costs and lost work time.

The culprits in most food-borne illnesses are bacteria:

— Salmonellae bacteria can be found in red meats, eggs, dried foods and dairy products. Salmonellosis is transmitted by eating contaminated food or by contact with infected persons, insects, rodents or pets.

— Clostridium perfrigens are somewhat heat resistant and may be found in stews, soups or gravies. The illness is transmitted by eating food in which unusually large numbers of the bacteria have multiplied because of inadequate cooking or cooling.

— Staphyloccocus (or staph) bacteria are transmitted by food handlers who carry the bacteria and by eating a food containing a heat stable toxin from the bacteria. The toxin can be formed in hams, custard-filled foods, cream pies, unrefrigerated cooked meat and dairy products.

— Clostridium botulinum bacteria are normally associated with inadequate heat treatment in home-canned foods.

Some of the most common factors contributing to food-borne disease are contaminated raw food; inadequate thermal processing, canning or cooking; an infected person; improper cooling or hot storage; and the lapse of day or more between preparing and serving food.

To prevent food-borne disease from home cooking, it is recommended that you begin by examining all food cans and jars. Never buy food in leaking, bulging, or severely dented cans, cracked jars, or jars with loose or bulging lids, due to the risk of botulism.

Careful attention to food temperature, especially in warm weather, will also reduce the possibility of food-borne illness.

When shopping for food, it is recommended that you pick up meat, poultry and dairy products last and get them home and into the refrigerator or freezer promptly.

Set the refrigerator temperature at 35 to 40 degrees Farenheit and freezer temperature at zero degrees or lower. Also check frequently to make sure the temperatures are being maintained.

It is also suggested that meat and poultry be thawed in the refrigerator or, for faster results, in a watertight package under cold water.

When it comes to serving food, make sure hot foods be kept hot, and cold food cold until eaten, and that leftovers be refrigerated promptly to maintain safe temperatures.

Cleanliness is also extremely important in preventing food-borne illness.

Most people know to wash their hands before preparing food but some neglect to wash after handling raw meat or poultry and then go on to touch other foods.

Washing utensils, containers and work surfaces both before and after they come into contact with raw meat or poultry is also recommended.

The same principles apply to food eaten away from home. Be sure to select restaurants that have high standards of cleanliness.

Also, make sure that hot and cold foods are kept at proper temperatures, especially at picnics, socials and other outdoor warm-weather gatherings.

DEAR ABBY

Consolation words only cruel

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "Linda in Lancaster" telling about some of the cruel comments she heard after losing her 14-year-old son. Six years ago my 14-year-old son was killed in an accident. I also heard some cruel comments from people who thought they were comforting me.

My son was a slow learner. Not retarded – just slow. My sister-in-law said, "You're better off. Now you won't have any more 'problems' to deal with, so don't feel sorry for yourself." (I will never forgive her.)

At the time of my son's death, there was no one to talk to about my feelings. It was easier just to keep quiet – easier on others. Everyone assumed I was "adjusting nicely."

Recently my mother casually mentioned how much my son had resembled me. My guard was down and I broke down and cried. Her comment: "I thought you'd be over that by now."

Abby, I'll NEVER be "over it"! I'll just keep my guard up more closely now, especially when people ask, "How many children do you have?" We originally had two, but I thought that by answering "One," I wouldn't have to talk about the one we lost. Bu that doesn't work either. When I say "One," I'm asked, "Why only one?" (Can you believe it?)

I feel for Linda. Thanks for letting me get this out of my system. In my heart I'm still ... THE MOTHER OF TWO

DEAR MOTHER: Please accept my condolences. You most certainly should talk about the son you lost. And if you feel like crying, go ahead and cry until you're all cried out. (Tears are healing.) Don't keep this raging resentment bottled up inside you, pretending to be "adjusting nicely."

You are still hurting because you haven't allowed yourself to express your normal feelings: the anger, the pain, the grief of losing a part of you. You need to do that.

Please get in touch with a wonderful support group called Compassionate Friends. (Check your phone book.) They can be enormously helpful to people who have lost a child.

About your sister-in-law: She probably meant well, but she showed herself to be shallow, unfeeling and thoughtless. Forgive her.

DEAR ABBY: I noticed that the U.S. post office has issued a 17-cent postage stamp with a picture of a woman on it. Her name is Carson. Who is she? Someone said she's Johnny Carson's mother. Is that true? – TRUE OR FALSE

DEAR TRUE: False! (Johnny Carson's mother's name is Ruth.) The stamp was issued to honor Rachel Louise Carson, an American biologist and science writer (author of "Silent Spring"). She died in 1964.

Xi Alpha Mu names officers

Beverly Acker

Beverly Acker has been recently elected president of Xi Alpha Mu Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi. Other new chapter officers are Peggy Brown, vice president, Virginia Earhart, recording secretary, Judy Jehring, corresponding secretary, and Ann Tayrien, treasurer.

The chapter — one of five Midland Exemplar level chapters of Beta Sigma Phi — emphasizes social, cultural and service activities. Monthly socials are held each year for members and friends.

Cultural programs are presented at meetings twice a month from September through May, and include such varied topics as child rearing, personal growth, home decoration, book reviews, careers and music.

Local service projects include purchasing gifts for foster children in the care of the Midland County Child Welfare Unit and, with other Midland chapters, providing scholarships to Midland College for girls from Midland high schools.

Jerrianne Campbell Young, above, is the newly elected president of the Permian Basin Chapter of Phi Mu. Other elected officers are Dana Kalinek, vice president, Cindy Zoller, secretary, Lillian Mayfield, treasurer, Elaine Henderson, panhellenic representative and Paula Beshears, social service chairman.

MIMOSA SALAD

1 pound snap beans
2 large hard-cooked eggs
Tomato-base French dressing
Salt and pepper to taste

Tip beans; scrub under cold running water. In a food processor with the ¼-inch (4mm) slicing disc, slice beans. Steam just until tender; drain and cool. Remove yolks from eggs; cover and refrigerate yolks. In the food processor, with the medium shredding disc, shred egg whites; mix with beans; cover and refrigerate. At serving time, add enough French dressing and salt and pepper to bean mixture to give good flavor — we used ¼ cup French dressing; turn into a shallow serving dish. Hold a kitchen tea strainer over bean mixture and with a spoon, press egg yolks through it, rotating the strainer so yolks cover surface of salad. Serve at once. Makes 6 servings.

Cream cheese brownies

SNACKTIME FARE
Brownies & Beverage

NEW CREAM CHEESE BROWNIES

My version of a popular recipe.
Cream Cheese Mixture, see recipe
2 ounces unsweetened chocolate
½ cup butter
2 large eggs
¾ cup sugar
¼ cup dark corn syrup
½ cup all-purpose flour
½ cup coarsely broken walnuts

Make Cream Cheese Mixture and reserve. In a medium saucepan over very low heat stir the chocolate and butter until melted and mixture is only warm. Add eggs, sugar, corn syrup and flour; with an electric beater at low speed beat until blended. Stir in nuts. Turn into a wax-paper lined buttered 9 by 9 by 2-inch cake pan. Drop spoonfuls of the reserved Cream Cheese Mixture at 9 equidistant intervals over batter; run the tip of a small metal spatula (inserted about ¼ inch deep) as many times as necessary over top to form a marble-like pattern. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean — about 25 minutes. Loosen edges; turn out on wire rack; remove paper; turn right side up with another rack. Chill. On a cutting board, cut into bars or squares.

CREAM CHEESE MIXTURE

In a small bowl beat together until blended 2 tablespoons butter and a 3-ounce package of cream cheese (both at room temperature), ¼ sugar, 1 large egg, 1 tablespoon all-purpose flour and ½ teaspoon vanilla.

Greening cuisine should lift calorie counters

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

Calorie watchers should get a lift from a new cookbook, a diet aid dedicated to the "greening of the American cuisine."

"The Golden Door Cookbook" (Forman Publishing, Los Angeles, $24.75) was put out by Deborah Szekely, who served on fitness councils under presidents Nixon and Ford and who operates the Golden Door Health Spa in Escondido, Calif.

There are delectable hors d'oeuvres, tempting breads, hearty roasts and fancy desserts. They may seem a far cry from the usual Spartan diet fare, but all are low in calories.

The main taboos in the book are salt, sugar and beef. The reader is also advised to decrease intake of fats, whether they be saturated or unsaturated.

Ms. Szekely, who has been working in the food field for 42 years, is keenly aware of the fact that diet dishes must look attractive and taste good to be successful.

Above all, she notes, where possible the ingredients should be fresh. When you browse through a supermarket, for instance, shun the brightly colored bottles and boxes and head for the fresh fruits and vegetables and eggs and cheeses.

"Fortunately," she says, "tantalizing flavors satisfy the appetite, even though their quantity be small. When you eat dull food, more and more of it is required for satisfaction."

Sugar and salt are the chief villains in the book. Ms. Szekely points out the ironic situation today where many people conscientiously cut down on their purchase of sugar, then proceed to stoke up on sugar-packed soft drinks. Better to quench the thirst, she says, with fresh fruit.

She strongly advises the reader to avoid salt, noting that most of us get all the sodium our systems require, since many cheeses, canned foods and baked goods contain salt.

Cheddar buns

CHEDDAR BUNS

Made with yeast, but no kneading necessary.
1 envelope dry yeast
½ cup warm water (105 to 115 degrees)
2 oz. coarsely grated extra-sharp cheddar (½ cup)
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 large egg
2 tablespoons butter, melted
1¼ cups fork-stirred all-purpose flour

In the large bowl of an electric mixer, sprinkle yeast over warm water; let stand 5 minutes to dissolve. Stir in cheese, sugar, salt, egg, butter and 1 cup of the flour. With the mixer on low speed, beat until cheese is well distributed — about 2 minutes. With a wooden spoon, gradually stir in remaining flour to form a dough; mix well. Fill 12 greased muffin-pan cups (each 3 inches across top and 1⅛ inches deep) about half full of dough; cover and let rise in a warm place until doubled — about 1 hour. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until golden brown — about 12 to 15 minutes. Serve hot. Makes 12. -(AP)

Zucchini vichysoisse for summer taste treat

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

Roast Lobster with Vanilla Butter Sauce? Can this shocking sounding combination of flavors be the invention of one of France's great chefs? Yes, indeed — the creation of Alain Senderens, and the recipe for it is in his cookbook, "The Three-Star Recipes of Alain Senderens" (Morrow).

Odd as the combination may sound, noted gastronomes are more than ready to order it and other highly original dishes served at "L'Archestrate," Senderens' three-star Paris restaurant.

Senderens, along with several other French chefs, is one of the creators of "nouvelle cuisine," a style of cooking that has been with us about a dozen years. It has fewer calories than classic French cuisine and offers unusual combinations of food.

Like some of France's other famous chefs, Senderens is involved in more than his Paris restaurant. He is adviser to the Restaurant Maurice of New York City's Parker Meridien Hotel, where some of his delectable dishes may be sampled.

I had lunch at the Maurice Restaurant when the Parker Meridien opened several years ago and Senderens himself supervised the food preparation. The menu included his celebrated Lobster, Mango, Duck and Basil Salad. The recipe for it is in his cookbook.

Recently Senderens held a Saturday morning seminar in the kitchen of the Parker Meridien for a group of students from the Culinary Institute of America, and I attended. It was fascinating to see him prepare a delectable dish of julienne vegetables and scallops — to watch him test the tenderness of the shellfish with a touch of a finger.

On the following Monday night, friends invited me to be their guest at the first of a week of gala dinners, supervised by Senderens in person, at the Parker Meridien. The food was fabulous, from a lobster fricasee with asparagus and caviar to venison noisettes with a raspberry vinegar sauce — sophisticated fare. But the dessert of pineapple fritters was well within the reach of everyday home cooks and the recipe for it is in his cookbook.

For summer use, we think you'll enjoy his Zucchini Vichysoisse. Here's our slightly adapted version of the recipe.

ALAIN SENDERENS' ZUCCHINI VICHYSOISSE

2 pounds zucchini
1 small (3-ounce) potato
2 quarts water
2 teaspoons coarse salt
Pepper
¾ cup heavy cream
4 teaspoons mixed chopped parsley, chervil and chives

Peel the zucchini; cut in half lengthwise; scoop out the seeds with a spoon. Cut each half into 2-inch lengths. Peel the potato; cut into ½-inch cubes. Bring the water and salt to a boil in a large saucepan. Add the zucchini and potato; boil for 13 minutes once the water comes back to the boil.

Drain the vegetables, saving the cooking liquid. Cool for 5 minutes, then place the vegetables and 1 cup of the cooking liquid in an electric blender. The remaining liquid is not used in this recipe. Blend to a smooth puree; season with extra salt and the pepper. Pour into a bowl; cool for 10 minutes.

Rinse out the blender; blend the cream in it for 10 seconds. Fold the beaten cream into the puree as you would beaten egg whites. Taste for salt and pepper; pour into a soup tureen; chill for at least 2 hours. When ready to serve, sprinkle with the chopped herbs.

Makes 4 servings.

(Adapted from "The Three-Star Recipes of Alain Senderens" by Alain Senderens with Eventhia Senderens — Morrow.)

Zucchini yogurt casserole

Lawyer gives own dessert recipes

Copley News Service

"I cook at home for one basic reason: I enjoy it," says attorney John Lima.

"I remember the importance my mother placed on pies and pastries; my making pies at 12 years old was only natural. And my grandmother was trained as a professional chef in Europe. Unfortunately, she guarded all her secret recipes. Baking desserts has always been my favorite form of cooking because I have a high rate of success with them. There is something about creating attractive food and producing dishes people appreciate that gives me satisfaction."

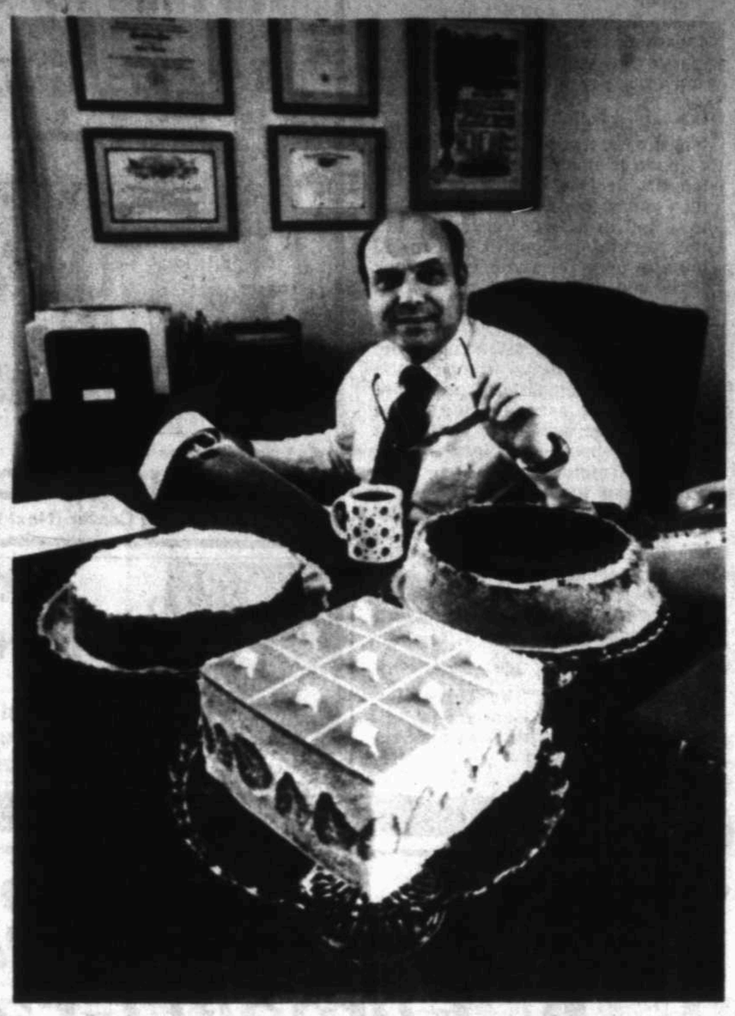

Lima, whose work includes domestic, personal injury and criminal cases, says he sees no bridge between his profession and his baking passion.

But once he is home, he assumes the role of cook along with his wife Carolyn. Together they have baked foods as simple as apple pie (literally), and as intricate as wedding cakes (their largest fed 350 people).

For the Bagatelle, a French pastry featuring genoise sponge cake, a pastry cream and fresh strawberries, Lima has devised a plastic open-ended cube so that he can properly arrange the cake layers and berries.

How does this man spend his free time when not in court or creating a new baked delicacy? "I 'scan the sheets' (read the announcement flyers and newspaper calendars) looking for cooking classes and/or attend classes for new ideas."

Lima shares his recipes for three favorite desserts.

LINDY STYLE CHEESECAKE

Crust:

1 tsp. butter
1½ cups all-purpose flour
One-third cup sugar
2 tsps. lemon peel, grated
One-third cup butter, unsalted
2 egg yolks, beaten
½ tsp. vanilla

Lightly butter 10-inch springform pan with tightly fitting sides. Cut parchent paper circle to fit bottom and strip of parchment paper to fit inner sides. Set aside.

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Combine flour, sugar and lemon peel. Cut in butter until mixture is crumbly. Add egg yolks and vanilla, mixing well. Pat one-third of crumb mixture onto lined pan bottom (sides removed). Press down with rolling pin. With sides still off, bake in preheated oven 8 minutes. Cool. Reassemble pan sides to bottom and pat remaining crumb mixture evenly around sides extending about ¾ up sides. Set aside.

Filling:

5 (8-oz.) packages cream cheese, softened
3 tbsps. all-purpose flour
¼ tsp. salt
1 tsp. lemon peel
1 tsp. orange peel
¾ cup sugar
½ tsp. vanilla
4 large eggs plus 2 egg yolks
¼ cup heavy cream

Preheat oven to 450 degrees. Cream cheese in mixer bowl until light and flufy, about 5 minutes. Mix flour and salt together and then mix with sugar and peel. Blend in vanilla, then eggs and yolks one at a time. Stir in cream. Pour into the prepared pan. Bake in preheated oven 12 minutes. Reduce to 300 degrees and bake 50-55 minutes more. When done, a clean knife inserted 1 inch from center will come out clean. Do not overcook; as with all custards, overcooking will cause excessive cracking and weeping.

Turn off oven and prop oven door open several inches. Allow cake to cool 30 minutes. Remove to wire rack and cool 10 minutes more. Cake should have shrunk somewhat. Run spatula around inside of rim and loosen sides of pan by releasing catch on side. Let cool another 30 minutes before removing pan sides.

NOTE: Cake should cool 1 more hour before topping and then should be refrigerated at least 2 hours to ripen and age before serving. Let cake set out about ½ hour before slicing and serving.

Raspberry Topping:

3 cups fresh or frozen raspberries (thawed)
1 cup water
¾ to 1 cup sugar, depends on tartness of fruit
3 tbsps. cornstarch
2 tbsps. lemon juice

Crush 1½ cups raspberries in saucepan and add water. Cook over medium-highheat 2 minutes and strain or pass through food mill. Combine sugar and cornstarch in another pan and gradually stir in the hot raspberry syrup.

Add the lemon juice. Cook, stirring, until thickened. Cool to room temperature. Top cake with remaining whole raspberries and spread cooled glaze over all. Chill thoroughly before serving. Serves 12 to 16 people.

CHOCOLATE TRUFFLE CAKE

The original version of this cake appeared in Bon Appetit, September 1979, as a Jacques Pepin creation. The cake is rich, consisting of four alternating layers of genoise and biscuit (sort of a cookie) filled and frosted with a rich chocolate cream (Creme Ganache). Assemble the desert on a 10-inch round cake board (or other size to match genoise pan).

Chocolate genoise:

Oven: Preheat to 350 degrees.

Use 10x1-inch round cake pan (or pizza-type pan) generously buttered and floured, shaking out excess. Line bottom with parchment paper.

3 eggs, extra large, or 4 large/medium eggs
½ cup sugar
½ cup all purpose flour
1 tbsp. cocoa (Lima prefers Droste's brand)
2 tbsps. unsalted butter, melted

Blend eggs and sugar well in bowl of mixer. Set pan in bowl of warm water aout 1 minute, whisking constantly. Remove pan when mixture is just tepid. Beat at high speed for 8 to 10 minutes (mixture will triple in volume and resemble meringue of whipped cream). Combine flour and cocoa and sift over beaten eggs, folding carefully as you sift. Fold in melted butter. Do not over-fold! Pour batter into prepared pan and spread evenly. Bake until genoise tests done; about 18 to 20 minutes.

When done, remove pan to rack and cool in pan 30 minutes. Use knife to loosen from sides of pan. At end of 30 minutes, invert genoise onto rack and remove pan; cool completely.

NOTE: When completely cool, genoise can be wrapped in plastic wrap or put in plastic bag and will keep for 2 to 3 days.

Chocolate biscuit:

Two cookie sheets (12 inches or more wide) Note: Use the kind without sides.

12 oz. semi-sweet chocolate
One-third cup hot water
3 cups all purpose flour
1½ cups butter, unsalted

Preheat oven to 425 degrees. In small bowl pour water over chocolate and str until chocolate is melted.

Combine flour and butter in mixer; mix about 10 seconds. Add melted chocolate and blend until it forms a paste (about 15 seconds).

Divide evenly between two (ungreased) cookie sheets and using a large sheet of parchment paper, press and spread the paste into 11-inch circle on each cookie sheet.

Bake in hot oven, watching carefully to prevent burning (12 to 18 minutes). Note: Check frequently, as chocolate mixtures burn easily, and a dark color will cause a burned flavor throughout.

When done, remove sheets to cooling racks, and using genoise pan as guide, cut out 2 circles same size as genoise.

Carmel chili

1 pound ground beef
4 large scallions, finely chopped
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
16-ounce can stewed tomatoes
8-oz can tomato sauce 1 cup red wine
2 tablespoons chili powder
½ teaspoon oregano
½ teaspoon cumin
Salt and pepper to taste
16-oz can dark kidney beans

In a 4- or 5-quart saucepot, cook beef, scallions and garlic, stir until beef loses its red color. Skim off excess fat. Stir in tomatoes, tomato sauce, wine, chili powder, oregano, cumin and salt and pepper. Bring to a boil; simmer — about 45 minutes. Stir in beans, cook 15 minutes longer. -(AP)

Swedish tradition: Smorgasbord

Copley News Service

The smorgasbord, a time-honored Scandinavian tradition, is thought to have been originated by Swedish country people, getting together to have a little Swedish fun.

Originally, the smorgasbord consisted of a small number of appetizers and was served as a first course prelude to the main meal. It could, however, be expanded on special occasions to comprise a whole feast in itself. This is the form with which most Americans are familiar.

Smorgasbord means simply "bread and butter table," but it is so much more than that! A variety of meats, fish, hot dishes, salads, bread and cheese may be served. But Scandinavian etiquette demands that first, and always first, one must sample the herring!

Today's recipes should give you a few ideas to get started. And with your microwave there to help, the smorgasbord has never been easier to prepare. Swedish Meatballs are a traditional must and the New Red Potatoes are sprinkled with that Scandinavian favorite, dill. Serve Rice Pudding hot or cold. You might make both the pudding and meatballs in advance and simply pop in your microwave to reheat at serving time. That should leave you plenty of time to sample the herring!

SWEDISH MEATBALLS WITH GRAVY

½ cup crumbled bread or dry seasoned bread crumbs
⅓ cup milk
1 lb. ground beef
1 egg, slightly beaten
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper
¼ tsp. ground allspice
½ cup onion, chopped

For gravy:

3 tbsps. flour
One and one-third cups beef bouillon
One-third cup pan drippings (from meatballs)
Dash salt and pepper
1 tsp. chopped fresh parsley or dill for garnish

Place crumbled bread or dry bread crumbs in bowl and cover with the ½ cup ilk. Soak for 15 minutes. Mix ground beef, egg, seasonings and onion together with moistened crumbs. Shape mixture into 1-inch balls and arrange in glass baking dish or pie plate.

Microwave 8 to 10 minutes, rotating dish twice during cooking time and rearranging meatballs to cook evenly. Rest 5 minutes, drain fat and make gravy. Pour gravy over meatballs, top with parsley or dill and microwave for 1 to 2 minutes to heat through. Serves 4 to 6.

Gravy: Pour fat from meatballs into 1-cup glass measure. Skim fat off top until one-third cup drippings are left in bottom of measure. Place 3 tablespoons flour into 4-cup glass measure, blending in bouillon a little at a time until smooth. Add pan drippings and seasonings. Microwave 2 to 3 minutes, stirring every minute, until gravy boils and turns brown. Cook 1 more minute, stirring halfway through. Pour over meatballs as directed above.

RICE PUDDING

2 cups milk
2 slightly beaten eggs
½ cup sugar
1 tsp. vanilla
¼ tsp. cinnamon
Dash nutmeg
½ cup quick-cooking rice
½ cup raisins
1 tsp. grated fresh lemon peel

Pour milk into 4-cup glass measure. Microwave for 3 minutes, or until hot. ombine eggs, sugar, vanilla, cinnamon and nutmeg in 1½ quart glass casserole dish. Mix well. Stir in rice, raisins, lemon peel and hot milk. Set casserole in a baking dish with 1 inch of hot water in the bottom. Microwave for 2 minutes then turn to defrost or low setting and microwave for 8 more minutes. Stir, moving cooked portion to center, and microwave on defrost another 8 to 10 minutes, until knife inserted in center comes out clean. Serves 4 to 6.

BAKED NEW RED POTATOES

4 to 6 medium-sized new red potatoes
Butter or margarine
Dash salt and pepper
Fresh or dried dill weed, to taste

Scrub potatoes and pat dry. Pierce each in several places with fork, to allw steam to escape while cooking. Place one or two thicknesses of paper towel in bottom of microwave. Set potatoes on towels, several inches apart, and microwave 8 to 9 minutes for 4 potatoes, or 10 to 12 minutes for 6 potatoes. Turn and rotate potatoes once or twice to ensure even cooking. Baked potatoes should be tender when squeezed. Split each open, top with butter or margarine and a sprinkling of salt and pepper. Set out fresh or dried dill to be sprinkled on as desired. Serves 4 to 6.

Tattered recipes still old favorites

By JAMES R. GRAY
Hearst Feature Service

Tucked away in the back of a favorite cookbook or littering a corner of the kitchen where the recipes collect are advertising cookbooks – those promotional publications put out by manufacturers to boost the sales and use of their particular brand of product, be it lemons, seafood, baking mix, cheese, pasta or what-have-you.

Handed out free or at a minimal charge, these ad cookbooks occupy one of the lowest rungs in the culinary hierarchy. How can they possibly be worth anything if they're designed to sell soup?

Well, perhaps they're not Craig Claiborne's latest tome, and they're certainly not French kitchen standards, but these throwaways have their place – as any cook who has cherished a battered copy of a chocolate cake recipe from a 20-year-old booklet can tell you.

One of the oldest hands in the promotional recipes business is Kraft, which for 35 years has used its products to create a dizzying array of meals across America. The Kraft booklets were produced as an offshoot of the cheese-condiments-and-salad dressing firm's sponsorship of TV programs.

Meanwhile, here's a sampling of recipes from the two cookbooks. First, from the Kraft book, there's a different approach to macaroni-and-cheese mix, a cool cucumber salad, a handy chicken dish and a fluffy souffle. From the Bumble Bee book, there's a fascinating fish soup, a cheesy-pasta-tuna casserole, a tasty sandwich and a Southern-style stew with oysters:

TASTY TOMATO-MAC SALAD
(Serves four to six):

One 7 1/4-ounce package macaroni-and-cheese dinner
1 cup chopped tomato
1/4 cup green onion slices
1/4 cup salad dressing or mayonnaise
1 teaspoon dried basil, crushed
1/4 teaspoon salt
dash of pepper

Prepare dinner as directed on package. Add remaining ingredients; mix lightly. Chill. Add additional salad dressing before serving, if desired.

COOL CUCUMBER MOUSSE
(Serves six to eight):

2 envelopes unflavored gelatin
1 cup cold water
1/4 cup vinegar
2/3 cup mayonnaise
3/4 teaspoon salt
1/8 teaspoon pepper
2 cups shredded cucumber, drained
1 cup whipping cream, whipped
1 tablespoon grated onion
lettuce

Soften gelatin in one-half cup cold water; stir over low heat until dissolved. Stir in remaining water and vinegar. Cool. Gradually add to combined mayonnaise, salt and pepper, mixing until blended. Chill until partly set; fold in cucumber, whipped cream and onion. Pour into lightly oiled five-cup mold; chill until firm. Unmold on serving plate; surround with lettuce.

Beer connoisseur uses esoteric evaluation

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

One of the most ambitious books on beer ever written is "The Connoisseur's Guide to Beer" by James D. Robertson (Caroline House Publishers, Inc., 272 pages, $25).

Robertson, it seems, is part analyst, part enthusiast with a wit that can be as dry as Heineken's aftertaste. He makes the whole evaluation of this beverage business an esoteric exploration of the beer's ingredients and taste. The result is a sort of "What Every Beer Drinker Should Know About His Favorite Beverage — And More."

He describes in detail more than 1,100 beers available in the United States and Canada and lists their ratings (on a scale of 0 to 90) by "an experienced panel of tasters."

Pity poor Belhaven, brewed in Dunbar, Scotland, which received the lowest rating by the panel — 1. Writes Robertson of the Scottish ale: "Clear copper nose, like an old sweaty sock. ... Flavor gets worse as it slides across the palate, with the lingering aftertaste the worst of all."

Sweaty sock, huh? Robertson can also regale you with tongue-titillating lines like: "austere pine needle and celery seed malt aroma."

Or: "Skunky aroma with motor oil overtones, flabby semisweet flavor with a bitter finish."

And did you know that some beer contains aromatic hops that suggest such sensations as clover, verbena, sage, parsley, orange or orange peel? Leave it to Robertson to perceive them in his unbridled bid to distinguish one from another.

Here are some beer-based recipes which yield delicious results for dishes ranging from appetizers to desserts. Many of the dishes come from "A Taste of the West from Coors," available by sending $7.95 to Coors Cookbook, P.O. Box 10227, Des Moines, IA 50336.

Beer cooking tips

Here are some pointers for using beer to add flavor to your cooking.

Use beer as the liquid in batters for deep-fried foods such as fish and seafood or vegetables.

To give roasts a unique and delicious brown glaze, baste the meat with beer frequently during roasting.

Taking your cue from the Germans, cook sausages in beer instead of water.

Cook potatoes in equal parts of beer and water to give potato salad a subtle European flavor.

Substitute your favorite brew for wine or water in meat sauces and marinades. In addition to giving the meat an attractive color, the beer acts as a natural tenderizer.

Add beer to stews and pot roasts. It enhances the flavor and produces a hearty-tasting gravy.

TAVERN CHEESE SPREAD

2 cups finely shredded cheddar cheese at room temperature
2 tbsps. butter or margarine, softened
1 tsp. prepared mustard
½ tsp. prepared horseradish
¼ tsp. pepper
½ cup beer

In blender container, combine cheese, butter, mustard, horseradish and peppr. Heat beer just to boiling; pour over cheese. Blend till mixture is smooth. Spoon into bowl. Chill. Let stand at room temperature about 1 hour before serving. Makes 1 cup.

RABBIT IN MUSTARD SAUCE

¼ cup all-purposee flour
¼ tsp. ground nutmeg
1 1½- to 2-pound ready-to-cook rabbit, cut up
2 slices bacon
8 to 12 whole boiling onions
1 cup beer
1 large bay leaf, crumbled
1 tsp. instant chicken bouillon granules
¼ tsp. dried thyme, crushed
½ cup light cream
2 egg yolks
1 tbsp. prepared mustard
2 tbsps. snipped parsley

Combine flour, nutmeg and dash pepper; coat rabbit with mixture. In 10-inchskillet, cook bacon till crisp; drain, reserving drippings in pan. Crumble bacon; set aside. Brown rabbit in reserved drippings about 5 minutes on each side. Add onions, beer, bay leaf, bouillon granules, thyme and crumbled bacon. Cover and simmer 50 to 60 minutes or till meat is tender. Remove meat, onions and bacon to platter; keep warm. Strain pan juices; add water, if necessary, to measure ½ cup liquid. Pour juices into small saucepan. Beat cream with egg yolks, mustard, ¼ teaspoon salt and dash pepper; stir into pan juices. Cook and stir till thick. Do not boil. Pour sauce over meat; sprinkle with parsley.

Makes 4 servings.

SAUSAGES SIMMERED IN BEER

2 pounds frankfurters (or other smoked sausages)
1-2 cans beer
2 large onions, sliced
2 large carrots, sliced
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce

Place frankfurters in large saucepan. Add enough beer to cover. Add remainig ingredients. Bring to boil, lower heat and simmer gently 5-10 minutes, depending on size of sausages. Serve on toasted buns or as main dish with sauerkraut. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

CHOCOLATE LAYER CAKE

2 (1 oz.) squares unsweetened chocolate
One and two-thirds cups sifted flour
¼ tsp. salt
1½ tsps. baking powder
¼ tsp. baking soda
½ cup shortening
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
¾ cup beer

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease 2 8-inch layer-cake pans and dust lighty with flour. Melt chocolate over hot water. Cool. Sift together flour, salt, baking powder and soda. Cream shortening, gradually adding sugar; beat until light and fluffy. Add 1 egg at a time, beating well after each addition. Stir in chocolate. Add flour mixture alternately with beer, mixing until well blended. Turn into pans. Bake 25 minutes, or until cake tester comes out clean. Cool 5 minutes in pans, then turn out onto cake rack. Let cool completely before frosting. Layer with whipped cream or butter frosting.

White beans inexpensive

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

Thrifty cooks who are aware of food values know that dry white beans provide a lot of nutrients for their comparatively low cost. As a result, new recipes calling for these legumes are escalating.

One of the most interesting of these recipes uses marinated cooked Great Northern or small white beans as a stuffing for tomatoes. Over the years we've collected a good many recipes for bean salads, but this one was new to us — as it may be to you. When it was tried in our kitchen, it was relished.

BEAN-SALAD STUFFED TOMATOES

2 tablespoons olive oil
4 teaspoons white wine vinegar
⅛ teaspoon salt
Cracked pepper to taste
1 and 2-3rd cups (about) cooked or canned Great Northern or other small white beans
8 medium-small (about 2 pounds) tomatoes
¼ cup finely chopped red onion
2 tablespoons minced parsley

In a medium bowl, whisk together oil, vinegar, salt and pepper; fold in beans; marinate at least 1 hour.

If necessary, shave bottom of tomatoes so they will stand straight; cut a thin slice from the top of each; scoop out seeds and pulp to make shells; turn upside down to drain.

Fold onion and parsley into bean mixture. Stuff tomatoes with bean mixture, using about ¼ cup for each.

Makes 8 small servings.

Teacher likes to blow his own horn

AP Laserphoto

Dr. Neill Humfeld, a music professor at East Texas State University in Commerce, demonstrates his "straightened out" trombone. Humfeld uses the special Texas long horn to convey the importance of good breath support. The horn measures 109 inches, and is playable.

COMMERCE, Texas (AP) — Neill Humfeld likes to blow his own horn — not the kind that are synonymous with the University of Texas and Longhorn steers in the Lone Star State, but musical ones.

Humfeld, an East Texas State University music professor, uses a long horn to reach out to members of his brass section.

The horn is a straightened trombone that measures 9 feet, 1 inch from mouthpiece to bell.

Humfeld, a member of the ETSU faculty since 1958, conducts trombone clinics throughout the United States, including one at the International Trombone Workshop at Belmont College in Nashville from May 30 to June 3.

"The most important concept teachers must convey to their students is to produce a tone with good breath support," Humfeld said.

"I'm a graphics person, and I want to show how far a person has to blow to play a trombone," he said. "I make the students aware that they must fill up a tube at least nine feet long and then project that sound even farther to an audience."

He said that when he realized that a trombone was 109 inches long in the first position, he "conceptualized it as a 'herald trombone' with no crooks."

Humfeld has tried several techniques in illustrating the importance of blowing "through the horn," including having a student look down a 109-inch ribbon stretched horizontally from his face to the other side of the room.

Last year, he mentioned his "herald trombone" concept to Walter Pace and Larry Price, repairmen at McKay Music Co. in Sulphur Springs.

"I asked them to straighten out a trombone so I could use it for teaching," Humfeld said. "All I wanted was a trombone 109 inches long. It didn't matter if I could play music with it.

"They adapted a Model 6 Bach Tenor Trombone to my request, and it was far more than I expected," he said. "The instrument does play, its pitch is good and it is tunable. But it is really a strange feeling to play a note and hear it come out halfway across the room from where you are sitting."

To play the horn, Humfeld must use a stand to support it. To move the instrument to each of the seven positions, he must shuffle back and forth on a chair with rollers.

The instrument, which is worth about $650, can be disassembled and transported in a specially made carrying case.

Humfeld said he does not intend to perform a recital with the instrument, but he "might work out a solo.

"As a teaching device, it really makes the point come through," he said. "It's a gimmick, but it's a gimmick that works. It gets people's attention. While I give a presentation, I set it behind me so that the audience or class can see it."

Humfeld, 55, has played the trombone since he was 8 years old. He has bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Kansas and master's and doctorate degrees from the Eastman School of Music where he studied under the late Emory Remington.

Besides teaching at ETSU, Humfeld is a trombone clinician, soloist and technical adviser for the Bach Instrument Division of the Selmer Corp.

He helped establish the International Trombone Association and served on its board of directors 10 years and as president from 1980 to 1982.

At ETSU, he organized and developed a trombone choir which has performed nationwide. He also has served as director of bands.

Students' newscast not elementary

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The newscast's theme music blares through the studio and the producer cues anchorwoman Maria Barron, who smiles confidently at the camera and launches into one of today's top stories.

"The librarian has asked that all students return their overdue library books," she reads, "before school lets out for summer."

Maria is the 11-year-old co-anchor of TPC News, a bilingual weekday morning show broadcast live to students at Gardendale Elementary School.

The theme music is "It's a Small World." The studio, the school library.

The anchors, weather girl, requisite sports guy and camerawoman all are fifth-graders, directed by 11-year-old production manger Jessica Gonzalez. And Jessica means business.

She and co-anchor Sonia Rodriguez, 11, went to Kelly Air Force Base to cover President Reagan's May visit after school district officials spent two days wrangling for White House credentials.

"We met a lot of the media out there, including Sam Donaldson of ABC, and they were just shocked," Jessica said. "We take the news very seriously."

"They always think of kids just as kids," Sonia said, shaking her head in agreement.

TPC News has it all — "news, weather, sports and much more," as a frequent promo promises the 800 pre-kindergarten through sixth-grade students.

A typical 15-minute color newscast mixes school, city, state, national and international news, ranging from the Tylenol poisonings to the teachers' softball team, with weather and sports tossed in.

The students arrive well before school and stay after each day for production meetings and newscast critiques — all for no credit.

TPC News, or Tamez Production Co., is supervised by teacher Elia Tamez, who has donated hundreds of hours to the show.

"Doing this has greatly improved their articulation, their vocabulary and their comprehension," she said. "They also are much more poised."

Scientists track unusual fish

NEWPORT, Ore. (AP) — Seen a Popeye catalufa lately? Oregon State University marine scientists want to know.

They are asking coastal residents and commercial fishermen to help them document unusual fish or other sea creatures torn from their usual haunts by a weather phenomenon known as El Nino.

Researchers want people to note the circumstances of their discoveries and save the creatures for identification in El Nino Fish Watch '83.

Warm-water fish outside their usual ranges have been caught near Newport, and scientists say sightings of uncommon sea birds and mammals also are likely.

Arkansas city's fire chief doesn't want his firefighters' blood to boil

PINE BLUFF, Ark. (AP) — Ask the chief what makes a firefighter keep chasing flames, and he'll tell you the job gets in your blood. Chief Ray Jacks wants to make sure his crew's blood doesn't boil.

Crew members lined up recently, rolled up their sleeves, stretched out their arms and watched while a registered nurse and an emergency medical technician measured their blood pressure.

Most of the 77 tested were fine, but Jacks said two had levels high enough to require bed rest or medical attention. Each week, the EMT checks others with slightly high or borderline blood pressure, Jacks said in a recent telephone interview. He said he hoped to establish a routine program of checking all firefighters.

Heart attacks, the chief said, are the No. 1 killer of firefighters. According to statistics from the International Association of Fire Fighters, heart attacks are responsible for almost half of the deaths in the line of duty. The association says there are 58 deaths per 100,000 firefighters compared to 23 for police officers.

"If you find the high blood pressure and treat it, you prevent heart attack, strokes, diseases like that," said Sue Love, a registered nurse with Professional Home Health Care of Pine Bluff, who administered the tests.

Heirs pool fortunes to open museum

DETROIT (AP) — The grandson of Henry Ford and the daughter of the late United Auto Workers President Walter Reuther have pooled their fortunes to convert an auto tycoon's mansion into a Hare Krishna Society museum.

"I gave my whole inheritance to the society," Elisabeth Luise Reuther said Monday. "I want to give Krishna consciousness to people."

Ms. Reuther and Alfred Brush Ford, of San Francisco, a grandson of the Ford Motor Co. founder, spent $2.5 million to convert the 40-room mansion, which is to open Wednesday as a museum.

The 56-year-old mansion formerly was owned by the late Lawrence Fisher, founder of Fisher Body Co. and Cadillac Motors, said Ford.

Ms. Reuther, 36, who is married to another member of the Krishna group, said she and the 32-year-old Ford, whose Krishna name is Ambarish Das, pooled their money to buy the estate in 1975 and donated it to the Hare Krishna movement.

Ms. Reuther, who goes by the "spiritual name" of Lekhasravanti Dasi and wears a sari and nose ring, says she joined the Krishnas in 1973, three years after her father and his wife, May, were killed in an airplane crash.

She says Krishna faith stresses service to God and Spartan living, which coincides with her father's philosophies and teachings.

"I'm doing this for my spiritual master (the founder of the Krishna movement), but I also feel that simultaneously, I'm also fulfilling the values that my parents taught me," she said

About 60 Krishna followers worship at the Detroit center, Ms. Reuther said.

Seclusion may cause illiteracy

MILAM CREEK, W.Va. (AP) — Children in this remote hollow must make their own way to a school bus stop four miles away, but one resident says many never do — and never get an education.

Marie Adkins, whose family lives in a 200-year-old log house, said her own daughter, 16-year-old Leslie, has missed 757 of 1,370 school days during the last eight years. "We're seeing children 16 and 17 who are not attending school and probably never will," she said.

At fault, said her husband James, is the state's "Two-Mile Rule," which gives students "walking pay" to reach a bus stop if they live more than two miles from the nearest route.

In Wayne County, a rural area about 20 miles south of Huntington in western West Virginia, the amount is 75 cents a day for children who walk to bus stops and $1.50 for parents who drive their children to them.

Adkins said the two-mile rule appears to encourage students from remote areas, but in fact is a way for schools to avoid responsibility.

"The state of West Virginia has disavowed any obligation to their education," he said. "If you live two miles beyond the nearest bus stop, the state says it is not responsible for your education. That's terrible. That's depressing."

Mrs. Adkins said the county should buy off-road vehicles to pick up children in remote areas. Many of those illiterate children, she said, "will be on welfare rolls all their lives."

"When you compare that cost up against the cost of a four-wheel-drive bus, what do you have?" she asked.

But school superintendent Mose Napier said the county is meeting its responsibility by offering walking pay, and that the rest is up to families such as the Adkins because they choose to live in such a remote area.

"The fact is, the road where they live is absolutely impassable 12 months out of the year to school buses and nine months of the year to four-wheel drive vehicles," Napier said Monday.

"It is inaccurate to say we won't pick up children. We'll send that bus 20 miles further to pick up a child if we can. We go to other mountains, through creeks. One bus forges a creek 28 times a day to bring 35 children to school," Napier said.

The Adkins' 12th-grade daughter, Leslie, has missed school more than half the time during the past eight years because of illnesses, mechanical failures and weather, her father said. Through home study, she has managed mostly A's in her classes, although a teacher said the senior may not be reaching her potential.

"Leslie can come in class one day a week, take a test and finish near the top of the class," says Ruby Dyer, her English teacher. "I don't know what she would accomplish if she were able to attend every day."

The teen-ager said she feels "like a hermit when I've been out of school for a couple of months. I'm a little anti-social for a while.

French booming in English Canada

TORONTO (AP) — More and more English Canadian children are going to school in French — immersed in the language all day long — with study in their native tongue put off at least until fourth grade.

To the delight of those who have pioneered and pushed French immersion schooling for more than 15 years, the children who took part in the experiments seem to learn history, mathematics and science just as well as students in traditional programs.

More surprising, their performance in English rates higher than that of children taught in English from the start.

"It's quite clear from the results of the research that you can have what you would normally get out of an English-only education, plus you learn French," says Merrill Swain, head of the Modern Language Center at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education and co-author of a recent book that surveys Canadian research on immersion schooling.

"A lot of people who would have been afraid to try something as drastic as immersion programs seemed to be 10 years ago are no longer afraid of it," she said in an interview.

There is certainly no fear among the first-graders clustered around teacher Ginette Giroux and an apple-cheeked youngster named Daniel in a French-language version of show-and-tell at Allenby Public School in north Toronto one morning.

Daniel is showing off a toy yellow garbage truck and responds bravely as he is peppered by questions in French from his classmates, who didn't know a word of the language until they started last year in kindergarten.

Upstairs, a fourth-grader, waving his hand to respond to a question, slips and says, "I know, I know," in English, but when called on he answers in fluent French.

French immersion schooling started in the mid 1960s in Montreal, where the English-speaking population is a minority, and spread to Ottawa, where in recent years many civil service jobs have been reserved for bilingual applicants.

But now the immersion classes are booming all over the country, even in areas where there are scarcely any native French speakers. A report by the federal Commissioner of Official Languages counted nearly 70,000 students in French immersion classes this year, including some in each of Canada's 10 provinces.

Of Canada's 24 million people, about 6 million have French as a first language and more than 16 million have English, according to the latest census.

Between 1971 and 1981, the number claiming to speak both languages increased to 3.7 million from 2.9 million. While more than half the bilingual Canadians are native French speakers who have picked up English, the trend is toward more English Canadians learning French. The number of bilingual English speakers outside Quebec increased by 78 percent in the 10 years before 1981.

Allenby was the first school in Toronto to offer French immersion classes in 1971. The program is now available in 35 Toronto-area elementary schools.

Edward Rutherford, Allenby's principal, says about two-thirds of the parents in the well-to-do neighborhood surrounding the school choose to enter their children in French immersion classes.

Normal English classes are also available. The immersion and regular students participate together in sports, choir, recess and other activities, invariably in English.

French immersion students in Toronto live in an environment of English television, newspapers, signs, family and friends.

By the time they begin English studies in fourth grade, most are able to read the language as well as other fourth graders, Rutherford said. "But their writing is atrocious."

It turns out there is no cause for alarm.

"They become very inventive," the principal said. "By grade 7, their written English is superior."

The research by Merrill Swain and her co-worker, Sharon Lapkin, found that students immersed in French in early grades routinely overtake pupils who study English from the beginning.

This phenomenon, they wrote, "can perhaps be explained by their knowledge of two different language systems, a knowledge which permits them to compare and contrast French and English and heightens their overall linguistic awareness."

In other subjects, such as math and science, French immersion students have about the same test scores — even when tested in English — as pupils in the regular program.

TV techniques save man

WESTWOOD, Mass. (AP) — Four young men risked death to save a man trapped in a burning car, pulling him free just before the gas tank exploded, then used a technique they saw on television to extinguish the flames on his body, authorities said.

"These kids deserve a lot of credit," said Fire Lt. Robert Wood after the rescue of Richard Salerno, 21, of East Falmouth. "There is no question they saved his life."

David Langdon, 19, of Dedham, pulled Salerno from the flaming wreck on Sunday, and with the help of friends rolled the burning man on the ground to help put out the flames. Salerno was reported in critical condition today at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston with third-degree burns over 50 percent of his body.

"I guess I knew to roll him on the ground from seeing it on television," said Langdon, who was burned himself during the rescue. "His arms and the upper part of his back were burning. We tried to keep him talking by asking him his name and address."

His father, Frank, said the teen-ager saw the technique illustrated by comedian Dick Van Dyke on a series of TV public service announcements.

Langdon, 18-year-old John Kenney, 19-year-old Patrick Sullivan and another friend saw the fire after the car hit a utility pole about 50 yards from a Westwood restaurant, where they had stopped after their high school graduation party.

The flames were so high, they first thought it was a bonfire. "Then someone said, 'Oh, my God, there's somebody in there,' and we all rushed over to the car," said Sullivan.

Salerno was in the back seat surrounded by flames, Sullivan said.

"He must have been thrown into the back seat when he hit," said Langdon. "We had to reach through flames to get him. It never occurred to us that the car might blow (up) until we were around 20 yards away, and it did."

Third condor egg about to hatch at San Diego Zoo

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A third California condor is about to hatch at the San Diego Zoo after surviving "very traumatic circumstances" when it was abandoned last month by its parents, zoo officials say.

The chick, struggling to break free of the egg, had knocked a half-inch sized hole in its shell, and was expected to emerge from the egg today or Wednesday, said Jeff Jouett, a zoo spokesman.

To help the chick along, a tape of a shrieking mother vulture was played every two hours and bird keeper Cyndi Kuehler tapped the outside of the shell with a pen.

"We assume a mother condor would hit the egg with her beak to see what's going on and to encourage the bird to come out," Jouett said. "When we do that and play the tape, the chick gets excited and the whole egg rocks."

Jouett says the chick's show of vitality and enthusiasm has "greatly lessened" the concerns biologists had early in April, when the egg was brought to the zoo for incubation after being rescued from its cliffside nest in the Ventura County mountains.

Members of the federal Condor Recovery Team snatched the egg after the condor couple, in a feud over incubation rights, left the nest for five hours, allowing the egg to get cold during a critical period of development.

Jouett said biologists detected signs of internal bleeding in the light blue egg, laid March 31. There was concern the embryo might not survive, he said.

But once it was placed in the zoo's incubator, the embryo began making a "surprising" comeback, Jouett said.

"This particular egg had a lot of problems with hemorrhaging. Eggs rarely come back from that degree" of damage, he said. "Individually, this chick has certainly made a maximum effort to survive and has withstood some very traumatic circumstances."

Despite its apparent healing, biologists were concerned that unseen damages may have occurred during the egg's development.

"We have to wait until the bird comes out of its shell so we can look at him," he said. "There may be subtle damage to the digestive system or nervous system that we can't see right away, but it may become apparent during the first week of the condor's life."

A fourth condor egg being incubated at the zoo is due to hatch later this week, officials said.

The captive hatchings are part of a federal and state program to save the endangered California condor from extinction. Only 19 to 20 of the huge carrion-eating birds are left in their native mountain habitat. There are five condors in captivity, including Sisquoc and Tecuya, first of the rare birds to be hatched in captivity.

Regents urged to start Texas A&M law school

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M is a better school than outsiders think and not as good as its students believe, a report to the university's regents concludes.

The 250-member Target 2000 committee advised regents Monday to add a law school, reorganize their management teams and redouble their efforts in research.

George P. Mitchell, who headed the committee, said the University of Texas is whipping A&M badly in research and the University of Houston is moving up fast. Mitchell is chairman of the board and president of Mitchell Energy & Development Corp.

The panel was appointed by the A&M System Board of Regents to propose plans to be implemented by the year 2000.

"Texas A&M University should establish a college of law to prepare specialists in agriculture, business, real estate, patent, maritime and international law and other legal specialties in which Texas A&M offers strong related disciplines," the report said.

Cost of the improvements would be an estimated $1 billion above the regular appropriations and the special support provided by the Permanent University Fund.

The committee also said the school should establish an undergraduate program in the fine arts and develop a high technology focus in the College of Medicine that ties medical education to technical Ph.D. programs in other colleges of the university.

The size of the student body, the report said, "should be monitored to insure that growth is never allowed to interfered with the higher objective of academic excellence."

The committee recommended that the size of the graduate student enrollment be increased to compose about 25 percent of the total enrollment.

Engineers, scientists join to prevent work for defense

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — At an age when his friends were taking their driver's tests, Warren Davis got a top security clearance to help develop the nation's first missile warning system.

Now, after more than two decades of defense work, Davis has begun a new project, working with other engineers and scientists who don't want their skills used to create the nation's military hardware.

Davis, 41, is a founder of High Technology Professionals For Peace, a group of 300 self-described "technologists" opposed to the continuing arms race and its impact on the scientific community.

The group holds regular meetings, and spreads its word to college campuses through lectures and pamphlets. It has even started its own employment agency to find non-military jobs. Two-thirds of its members live in Massachusetts, but it has members worldwide.

"You have a responsibility, like a parent giving a gun to a child," says Davis. "Technologists have been giving guns to politicians who have not used them wisely."

Another member, MIT physicist Barton Lane, says the group also is concerned with the practical problems involved with defense work.

Young engineers, working within the cloister of security clearance, can find themselves out of touch and unemployable when the bubble bursts on defense spending, as it did in the early 1970s, he says.

"Graduating seniors aren't aware of the boom-and-bust nature of defense work," says Barton. "They don't realize the implications of getting a security clearance."

The group has written a brochure called "The Campus Defense Information Package" about the pitfalls of defense work. It is being distributed on 500 college campuses.

Davis, who now works as a consultant in medical research, also gets the message across by speaking at college campuses. He draws from his own experience.

A high school junior when the Soviet Union launched its first Sputnik, Davis was enrolled in a special Ford Foundation program for bright, young science students.

After a summer of intensive classroom training, Davis was given a part-time job with a defense contractor working on a missile early warning system.

"It was heady stuff," he recalls. "We got the feeling the Soviets were way ahead of us and we were the vanguard that was meant to catch up with them."

Davis earned a doctorate in physics and worked on the Polaris, Poseidon and Minuteman II missiles, but became disillusioned about the research, which he says is creating more sophisticated weapons to do battle with other advanced machines.

"If war breaks out, it may be well that most of the population in this country will be dead by the time the computers carry out the war," he says.

Davis said he got the idea to form the group when he was looking for a job.

"A friend who was working for GTE told me he would get $1,000 in his pocket for bringing me in," he said. "It was for the MX missile and I became very upset about it. I decided I would like to go to GTE and wave a $1,000 bill in front of some engineers and get them to leave."

Instead, Davis and a dozen colleagues formed High Technology Professionals in 1981, holding meetings every other week that a member describes as "group therapy sessions."

"If you're working on the MX missile at AVCO (a Wilmington, Mass., firm) you certainly aren't going to be talking to people there about your doubts," said one member who asked not to be identified. "It helps to talk about this with other people who have changed their careers."

The organization also set up an employment agency to find members jobs outside the defense industry, but it has had little success, placing only one job.

Jury suggests life in prison

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — A jury has recommended that Patrick Lizotte spend the rest of his life in prison without the possibility of parole for murdering his high school psychology teacher last year.

Lizotte, 18, stared blankly at a table before him when the six-man, six-woman state District Court jury returned the sentence Monday in the penalty phase of his trial.

Last week, the same jury convicted him of first-degree murder for fatally shooting Clarence Piggott, 54, and of two counts of attempted murder for shooting Valley High School students Marty Jamison and Jose Garcia.

Farmettes planned for states

SWEDESBORO, N.J. (AP) — Depression-style "farmettes" — new homes with just enough farmland to help feed a family — are selling so well in New Jersey that developers say they may try the idea in other states.

"There's a tremendous movement back to the rural areas," said Robert Strudler, a senior vice president of U.S. Home Corp. of Houston, one of the nation's largest home-building firms.

Each farmette in a development usually has more than five acres of land for raising crops or animals. Owners who sell more than $500 worth of farm products annually can qualify under state law for tax savings through lower assessments for farmland.

In the 24 hours after U.S. Home opened its model farmhouse in this southern New Jersey community, more than 700 people listened to the firm's sales pitch for the homes, which range from $75,000 to $120,000, including the cost of the land.

"We opened up yesterday, and we sold 10 homes," U.S. Home Vice President Mike Mallott said Monday.

U.S. Home, which owns 488 acres of property here, is selling homes on tracts ranging from 1.5 to 11 acres, although only those with more than five acres can qualify for the tax break.

"What we're trying to do is show what you can do on a farm of five acres in terms of raising your own food," said Strudler. "It's a tremendous new market which gives recognition to a reversal in the trend."

The company took the name of the development, Five Acres and Independence, from the title of a book by Depression-era author M.G. Kains who wrote about how Americans could start their own farm to become self-sufficient, said Mallott.

"We'll probably be taking it around the country as a concept," said Strudler.

He said his firm plans to build another farmette community in Texas. He also said negotiations are under way to purchase land in central Florida.

Pat Quinn, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Agriculture, said the farmette plan "saves the land from being turned over to another use. We're in the business of saving farmlands and retaining farming as a viable industry."

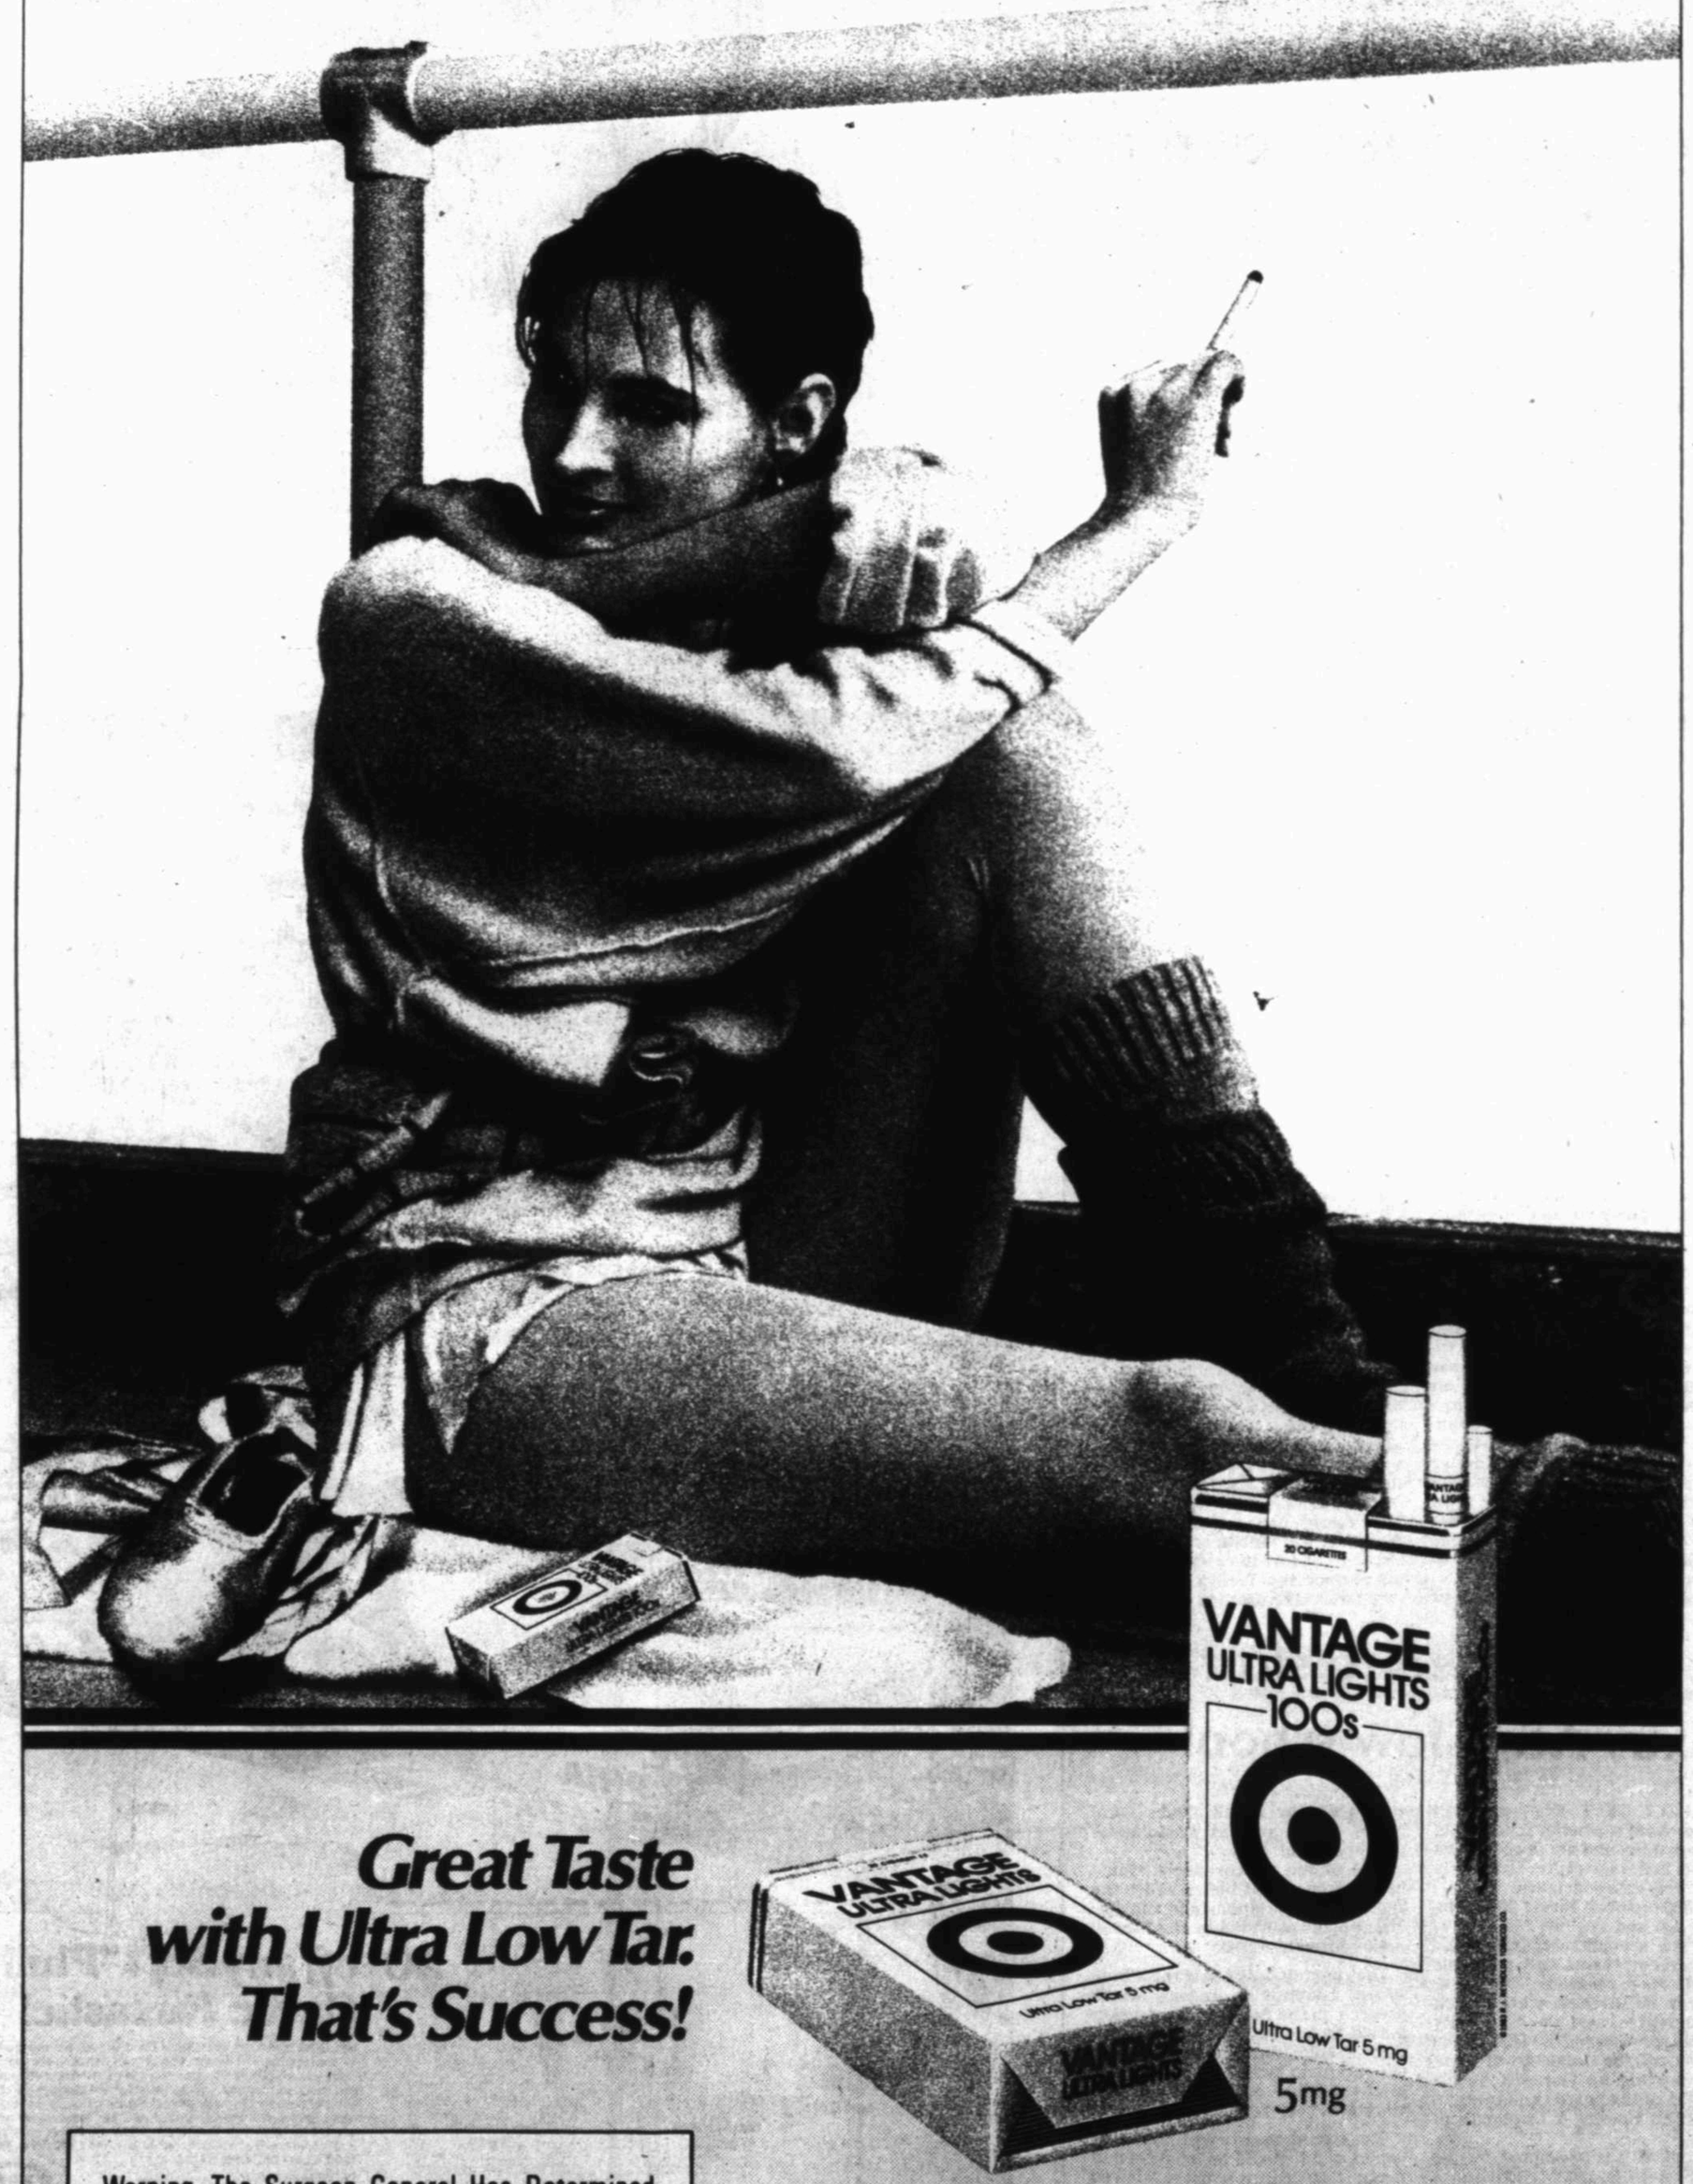

Holiday may be dangerous

CHICAGO (AP) — Between 350 and 450 people nationwide are expected to die in traffic accidents during Memorial Day weekend, the National Safety Council said today.

About 380 people could be expected to die in a normal three-day period this time of year, the council added in a statement.

The safety council also estimated that between 17,000 and 22,000 people may suffer disabling injuries in traffic accidents over the Memorial Day weekend.

Storage of spent nuclear fuel

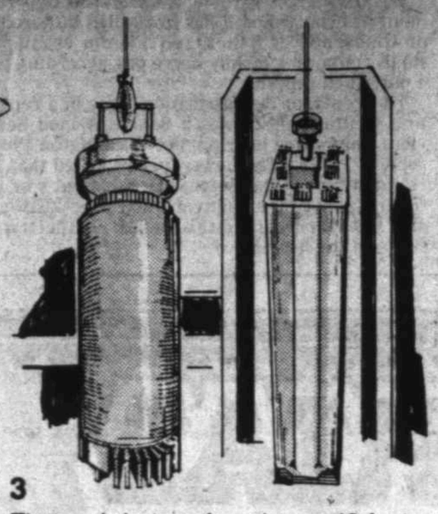

The transfer process at General Electric's Morris, Ill., facility

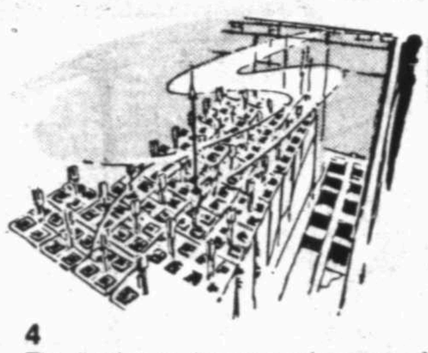

1
Spent fuel is received at the Morris facility in special shipping casks. The casks, which are mounted on trucks or railcars, are heavily shielded containers designed to withstand accidents without radioactive leakage.

2
A 125-ton crane is used to lift the cask and position it for cleaning and unloading.

3
The cask is transferred to a 48-foot-deep unloading pool where the top is removed from the cask. The spent fuel bundles [sealed corrosion-resistant metallic tubes containing uranium oxide fuel pellets] are then removed from the cask by crane and put in a storage "basket."

4
The basket is then moved to one of two 30-foot deep storage basins by crane and latched to a structural gridwork. The spent fuel is covered by 14 feet of water in the basins, which are constructed of reinforced concrete and a stainless steel liner.

Classic 1914 contest reenacted in cross-country road odyssey

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

EL PASO — History repeated itself after a fashion Sunday when drivers with an eye for adventure arrived here at the end of the second leg of the Great American Race, a cross-country odyssey worth $100,000 to the sportsman who can pilot his vintage automobile the fastest.

The 72-car field left Southern California Saturday on a 2,800-mile run to Indianapolis, evoking memories of a classic 1914 road race from Los Angeles to Phoenix. Motivated by the size of the purse, more than a few drivers who will spend nearly half of the $100,000 just for a shot at victory.

One team, for instance, is accompanied by a 65-foot-long tractor-trailer rig carrying spare parts and equipment to help make any emergency repairs that should be needed on its entry, which predates 1942 — a requirement for participation in the event.

The prize money, put up by race sponsor Interstate Battery Systems of Dallas, would hardly even make the down payment on many of the cars that are being put through the rigors of maintaining a required 50 m.p.h. average on the seven-day run to Indianapolis.

But there is another end to the spectrum. Without the help of friends, families and some unusual fund-raising methods, quite a few of the entrants could not have come up with the $5,000 entry fee and the thousands more it is going to take to make the seven-day run across the country.

Some of these entrants would think they had a big budget if they were doing the race on that much-publicized pair, a wing and a prayer.

FOR EXAMPLE, it was literally a community effort on the part of Wofford Heights, a town of 800 residents 40 miles east of Bakersfield, Calif., that put Lloyd Mayes and John Rutledge on the road in their 1939 Packard convertible.

"We were talking to a couple of the big Las Vegas hotels in March about sponsoring us, but they needed six months notice," said the 50-year-old Mayes, a retired machine shop owner.

"While I was waiting to hear from the hotels, I started talking with some of the businessmen in our town, and pretty soon I had a couple of good cash sponsors," Hayes said.

The town's efforts did not end there. As late as last Wednesday night, residents gathered at Ewings, a local restaurant, for a dinner and auction. The restaurant donated the meal and, with a variety of items successfully put on the block, $2,400 was raised.

In all, Hayes and the 52-year-old-Rutledge, who is an insurance agent, managed to scrape together $7,500 of the $17,000 they estimated it would cost them to run the race.

And it seems to be paying off. Hayes and Rutledge started the second leg of the event Sunday — a nearly 500-mile run to El Paso — in ninth place.

"We've never been in one of these kind of things, but we're having a fantastic time," Hayes said.

There are at least 40 people in The Dells, Wis., with more than a passing interest in how Clay Nichols and Ed Hall, who describe themselves as "just a couple of old-car nuts," do in the race.

"I WAS TALKING with a fellow who owns a bar in town about entering the race last March and he said, 'We ought to be able to find 25 guys who would put up a $100 each,' " said the 62-year-old Nichols.

They did. In fact, they had 30 people signed up the first week and picked up a few more along the way, including some from Hall's hometown of Kansas City, Kan.

"They're going to get half of whatever we win," Nichols said. And that could amount to some money because he and Hall had their 1941 Lincoln Zephyr running "right among the top handful" as they approached Phoenix on Saturday night.

"But we blew a tire about five miles out of town, and that cost us 21 minutes," Nichols said. "That tire was new in 1981, and it can sure make a fellow a little disgruntled that they can't build something that will last more than 5,000 miles."

Rabid commitment is about the only way to describe Don Woller's approach to the Great American Race.

"I found out about the race on March 24, I entered on March 25 and I bought my car on March 26," said the 38-year-old resident of Lamar, Colo.

The car, a 1939 Ford two-door sedan, offered Woller a serious challenge: It had been sitting abandoned for 15 years and was, he said, "a total disaster."

But on May 7 — 500 hours of his own time and some $6,000 later — the car was ready. "Most of that time started each night at 6 p.m. and went until past midnight," said Woller, who owns an auto wrecking company.

TO RAISE THE $12,000 Woller and his wife Gloria, who is the navigator, figured they needed to run the race, he made up 200 "limited edition" belt buckles that picture his car. He sells them for $65 each, and so far has sold 73.

Perseverance was needed by Dennis Holland of Costa Mesa, Calif., and his navigator, Wayne Stanfield of Santa Ana, Calif.

When the engine for their 1909 Buick racer was not finished by Saturday in time for the race's Saturday morning start, they had their crew push them across the starting line in order to become officially entered. Then it was back to the shop to have the motor installed.

After an all-night trip, Holland and Stanfield were waiting in line Sunday morning in Phoenix to start the run to El Paso.

"We got done about midnight, so we only ran it about 15 minutes," Holland said. "But it sounds great, so we'll break it in on the way to El Paso."

Rules for the event allow drivers to throw out the times from any one of the race's seven days, so Holland and Stanfield are still in the running even though they did not complete the first leg.

Sims' amendment passes Senate

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A proposed constitutional amendment sponsored in the Senate by Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, authorizing fewer justices of the peace and constable precincts in counties with populations of less than 30,000 has passed the Senate by a 31-0 vote.

HJR 91, which now goes to Gov. Mark White for consideration, amends current law which provides that all counties can have at least four justices of the peace.

Sims' resolution states counties with populations of more than 30,000 can have from four to eight precincts, counties with populations between 18,000 and 30,000 can have from two to five precincts, and counties with populations of less than 18,000 can have no more than two precincts.

The resolution passed without debate.

Teachers' union criticizes Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's largest teachers' union today accused President Reagan of making a "disgraceful assault" on their profession with his call for pay based on merit instead of seniority.

Mary Hatwood Futrell, the National Education Association's secretary-treasurer, sharply criticized Reagan's reaction to the National Commission on Excellence in Education's call for reforms in the nation's schools.

She made her remarks in testimony prepared for delivery to a House Education and Labor subcommittee.

Reagan declared in a college commencement address Saturday that "we just haven't been getting our money's worth" from the schools. He said teachers "should be paid and promoted on the basis of their merit," and he criticized their unions for opposing merit pay plans.

Reagan reiterated his belief that providing tuition tax credit for private schools and restoring prayer in public schools would improve education. He also told the graduates at Seton Hall University in South Orange, N.J., that more federal money is not the answer.

Ms. Futrell, who is running unopposed to succeed Willard McGuire as the president of the 1.6 million-member union at its convention in Philadelphia in July, said, "It is shocking and sad that a president makes absurd responses to a serious and thoughtful national report."

She invited Reagan to visit public school classrooms and "talk to teachers who are making $17,000 to $20,000 after 10 years of teaching to see if he thinks the public is getting its money's worth."

'Nerve gas shell stockpiled'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department has confirmed it has stockpiled hundreds of thousands of 8-inch and 155mm artillery shells containing deadly nerve gas, according to a published report.

The Pentagon's confirmation came in a reply to a written question at a Senate Armed Services Committee hearing, the Washington Post reported today. The newspaper reported that a relevant part of the Defense Department's written response was inadvertently unclassified and published earlier this month in the transcript of the hearing.

The newspaper quoted a congressional aide as saying at least 10 percent of the nerve gas shells are stockpiled in West Germany.

Congress has been asked to authorize $48.1 million to begin production of new 155mm binary chemical shells, which are considered safer because they contain two non-toxic chemicals that form a lethal mixture only when the weapon is fired.

Both the United States and the Soviet Union signed a 1925 Geneva protocol that outlaws the first use of chemical weapons.

IRAS: 'A star is born'

Hearst Feature Service

A recent discovery by an infrared satellite has revealed clues to how a star is born and may provide a glimpse into the origins of our own solar system.

The Infrared Astronomical Satellite (IRAS) found two "protostars" — stars in an early stage of development — while they were still shrouded by a cloud of gas and the dust from which they were formed.

It's the first time a protostar has been detected before it sheds its cloud cover.

The protostars, about 500 million light years from Earth and not yet a million years old, were detected in two dark clouds called Barnard 5 and Lynds 1642 in the Milky Way Galaxy.

By comparison, our sun and the solar system that formed around it are estimated to be 4.6 billion years old.

The discovery, announced by officials of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena Tuesday, gave scientists a sneak preview of a protostar before it emerges as a fully developed, relatively faint star much like the sun.

"With an optical telescope they (the protostars) would look like a dark cloud obscuring the more-distant stars," said JPL scientist Charles Beichman, a member of the IRAS team. "IRAS enables us to see the stars forming within the cloud."

IRAS made the discoveries by detecting faint infrared glows, indicating the presence of stars, within Barnard 5 and Lynds 1642 nebulae.

The formation of a star begins with a nebulae. Fragments of these clouds collapse into protostars, attracting surrounding material.

Senators consult heavens

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — With no help in sight from other quarters, senators looked to the stars for help in guiding them out of their budget quagmire.

The Senate Budget Committee had been making little headway in its search for a compromise on a federal taxing and spending blueprint. So Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., shoved aside tables, charts and amendments to read Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., the committee chairman, his daily horoscope.

"New approach brings desired results, especially where bargaining session is concerned...Some rules will be relaxed. You'll meet dynamic person who aids in resolving dilemma."

Could that "dynamic person" be Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., who just then was trying to negotiate a compromise?

The forecast was so close to political and legislative reality that Domenici, a Taurus, told Boschwitz: "Come on, you're making it up."

Boschwitz insisted it was the real thing.

Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, made an extremely generous offer.

An outspoken hawk on defense issues, Garn was trying to persuade Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., that the new B-1B bomber, which Johnston opposes, would be test-flown on schedule in late 1984 or early 1985.

"This airplane will fly," Garn declared. "I'll bet my honorariums against yours."

Garn, according to financial disclosure forms filed last week, was one of the top earners in the Senate, reporting $60,799 in income from speeches and articles. By contrast, Johnston filed reports on honorariums of $34,650 over the same period.

Still, Johnston didn't take Garn up on his offer.

Meanwhile, Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., then observed that because of Garn's long advocacy of the B-1, perhaps the first one off the assembly line should be named in his honor.

"We'll call it the bald eagle," subcommittee chairman Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, suggested. The smooth-topped senator joined in the laughter.

McDonnell Douglas plans to create drugs in space

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

HOUSTON — The McDonnell Douglas Corp. announced earlier this week that it plans to build a factory to manufacture drugs in the gravity-free environment of space.

The factory, actually a 2½-ton device that will fly in the cargo bay of the space shuttle, will produce a "breakthrough" drug that cannot be manufactured on Earth, a McDonnel Douglas spokesman said. The drug-making process, which involves chemical separation, has already been tested successfully on shuttle flights.

Eventually, the company plans to take the factory out of the shuttle and leave it in space for six months or more at a time. Shuttle crews would bring up raw materials and remove the finished products.

For competitive reasons, the spokesman refused to say what the new drug would be or how much McDonnell Douglas and its partner, the Ortho Pharmaceutical Division of Johnson and Johnson, would spend on the project.

"It would be a breakthrough product, something not available now," David Richman of McDonnell Douglas said. "It would treat a disease that is caused by a deficiency of a protein in the body."

Up to now, the commercial use of space has been limited to communications satellites. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has talked about the potential advantages of manufacturing certain products in the absence of gravity, but this would be the first attempt to do so.

THE KEY TO the plan is a process called electrophoresis, in which biological materials are passed through an electric field, which separates them by their surface electric charge.

On Earth, gravity interferes with the separation and severely limits the concentrations of materials that can be passed through the system.

McDonnell Douglas flew an electrophoresis experiment on the fourth flight of the shuttle last summer and again on the sixth flight last month. On last month's flight, 718 times as much material was passed through the machinery as could have been achieved on Earth, with an improvement in separation of 4.28 times, Richman said.

As a result of this success, he said, the company began designing an automated production prototype, which it expects to send into space aboard the shuttle in 1985. This system would have 24 times the capacity of the current experimental machine.

"Our program has progressed much more quickly than we would have expected," Richman told reporters during a series of briefings for the next flight of the shuttle, which is scheduled to lift off June 18 from Cape Canaveral, Fla.

THE EXPERIMENTAL electrophoresis machine is scheduled to go into space again on that flight and on the subsequent flight, set for August. Next year, it is expected to produce material that McDonnell Douglas and Johnson and Johnson plan to take to the Food and Drug Administration for permission to begin new-drug trials.

"Our goal, of course, is to get enough test data on products to get FDA approval in 1986 or '87," Richman said.

However, he said, a free-flying satellite that could be serviced by the shuttle will not be ready by then.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Licorice can't sweeten sex life

Dear Dr. Solomon: My brother-in-law tells me that his sex life has improved 100 percent since he started eating licorice. Is this possible? I used to eat licorice when I was a kid, but I don't remember that it ever affected me that way. — Stuart, Providence, Rhode Island

Dear Stuart: A panel that investigated a number of over-the-counter ingredients has reported to the Food and Drug Administration that none of them has an aphrodisiac action — that is, none enhances sexual performance. Such claims, the panel said, are false, misleading, or unsupported by scientific evidence.

The best assurance of a satisfactory sex life for both men and women is overall good health.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know from having read your column for years that you are against fasting or any other gimmicks as a means of losing weight. But unless a person is already starving, all fasting will do is make him lose some fat. So what's wrong with that? — Sol, Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Sol: If you review what I have written about fasting, you will see that I did not completely rule it out as a means of wieght reduction. What I have said is that when it is indicated, it should be carried out under strict medical supervision.

As for the possible adverse consequences of fasting, "losing some fat" is an oversimplification of what happens when a person fasts. For example, the results of a study at the Hadassah-Hebrew University Medical Center in Jerusalem, Israel, showed that fasting increased blood viscosity (resistance to flow) by 16 percent. This can be dangerous for many people.

More recent research at the same institution has shown that fasting can lead to an increase in free fatty acids, and this constitutes a potential cardiac hazard.

Rev. Taylor salutes Rev Taylor

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Almost everyone likes a winner, and the Rev. Richard Taylor, leader of Kansas' anti-liquor and anti-gambling forces, is no different.

Taylor sent congratulations earlier this week to an unlikely recipient — a racing quarterhorse. The horse, named Rev Taylor, recently won a race at Eureka Downs, and the occasion prompted a short letter from the state's leading opponent of pari-mutuel wagering.

"It's a lot of fun to run and win," said Taylor, who leads Kansans for Life at its Best. As the group's legislative lobbyist for more than a decade, Taylor has helped block proposals to legalize trackside gambling in Kansas.

Congress wants stricter sentencing

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the six witnesses related their harrowing tales of murder, brutality and violent men released from prison, only one member of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee was there to listen.

But Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. was visibly moved on Monday when the witnesses described the murders of loved ones. When they left out painful details, he nudged them to tell more.

The Senate Judiciary Committee is considering legislation that would eliminate parole and set guideline sentences for specific crimes.

The proposals would apply to federal laws, but backers believe states would then follow suit.

One witness, Washington Redskins kicker Mark Moseley, told Kennedy how his sister, Pamela Carpenter, was raped and beaten to death in October 1979 in Livingston, Texas.

Her killer, Moseley said, was a man who raped three other women and had been paroled less than two months earlier.

"We have to try to find some way to make people aware of the parole system," Moseley said. "There's no way this person should have been on the street."

Another witness, Roberta Roper, of Upper Marlboro, Md., became active after her daughter's murder in a group that lobbies for stricter sentencing.

Mrs. Roper's daughter Stephanie was a 22-year-old college student when she was kidnapped, raped repeatedly, tortured and then shot to death on April 3, 1982. When the two killers received sentences that would make them eligible for parole in 11 12 years, Mrs. Roper decided to become a public advocate.

The Stephanie Roper Committee has swelled to 5,000 members and already won part of its program in the Maryland legislature.

Leah Burnett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J.P. Burnett of 4011 Tanner, is the recipient of The Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR) Good Citizenship Medal, presented to an outstanding student at each junior high. She is a student at Alamo Junior High.

Rewrite on handicapped rule for newborns hits snag

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

WASHINGTON — A Reagan administration task force struggling to redraft a controversial rule on hospital treatment of handicapped newborns has become caught in an unusual political and legal minefield.

Bound by President Reagan's commitment to a strong "Baby Doe" rule, officials from the Justice and Health and Human Services departments are debating whether the rule could broaden civil-rights protections in ways the administration would like to avoid.

The officials also are trying to be conciliatory toward doctors' and hospital groups that mounted a successful legal challenge to the administration's first rule on handicapped newborns, while assuring "right-to-life" advocates that the new regulation will be just as tough as the original.

A new version of the rule is expected soon, but final decisions have not been made, government sources say. If the administration appeals the lower court decision as expected, it must submit its brief this week.

At the same time, Congress is moving to revise the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, seeking to add protections to handicapped newborns in hospitals.

The administration's original regulation required hospitals to post signs warning that failure to feed and treat handicapped newborns is against the law. It was published in March without the customary 60-day public-comment period. At the same time HHS also set up a hotline to take anonymous complaints of violations.

"We're not going to give up," HHS spokesman Claire del Real said. She said the court's procedural objections would be overcome by publishing a new notice of proposed rulemaking and allowing public comment. But there were differing accounts as to whether the substance of the new rule would be different.

U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, a member of the administration task force, said he thought there would be "a preamble that is more explicit about the intent of the rule" and how it might be applied.

Evan Kemp of the Disability Rights Center said last week that he had seen a draft rule containing an explanatory section that gave examples of the standards the government would want to see applied in cases of Down's Syndrome, a genetic condition causing mental retardation; spina bifida, a spinal defect which can cause retardation or paralysis, and anencephaly, a deadly condition in which crucial parts of the brain are missing or malformed.

Dr. Koop said the "greatest concern" was that Down's Syndrome babies with correctable defects not be "starved to death." In a "Baby Doe" case in Bloomington, Ind., last year, an infant died after its parents and a doctor, with the backing of the state's highest court, asked that food and treatment be withheld.

But there are cases, Koop said, such as anencephalic babies, "where the child should be kept comfortable and treated humanely and let nature take its course."

Medical groups have complained that the government did not specify how the rule would be applied and expressed concern about federal intervention in medical decisions.

Earlier this month, government officials met with representatives of the American Academy of Pediatrics, the American Hospital Association, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists and Children's Hospital here. Participants described the session as "sincere" and "productive."

One person at the meeting reported that HHS Undersecretary John A. Svahn, the chairman of the task force, said the new regulations would be designed to meet both the "concerns of the court" and the "concerns of hospitals and the medical profession." The groups argued that the best approach was to set up individual hospital ethics committees to advise parents and doctors when difficult situations arise.

Task force members also have met with "right-to-life" advocates, who say that nothing short of the "hotline" procedures will suffice. They also feel that, to be effective, the new regulation must reiterate HHS's policy that the receipt of Medicare and Medicaid funds automatically subjects hospitals to such civil-rights laws as Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

400-year-old park full of amusement

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — For four centuries the season opening of the Dyrehavsbakken Amusement Park has been as sure a sign of spring as the greening of the cool beech forest that surrounds it.

The 60 rides at the oldest amusement park in the world include such space-age attractions as beeping video games, slot machines and a 180-degree cinema. As usual, its beer halls, dance clubs, restaurants, games and arcades — 120 attractions in all — are dressed up in new trappings put in place during the off months of Denmark's dreary winter.

Dyrehavsbakken means Deer Park Hill. The locals call it simply Bakken. It is a carnival of Scandinavian life style with an international touch.

"Bakken is where the Danish common folk can have fun," says Hjoerdis Andersen, the park's spokeswoman. Nevertheless, she estimates that as many as half of the 2.5 million people who visit the park during its annual five-month season are foreigners.

"A lot of tourists refer to it as 'the other Tivoli'," she said, referring to the meticulously landscaped Tivoli Gardens in central Copenhagen. "but Bakken is much different. Tivoli is more snobbish, and you have to pay admission. Bakken is free, and has more big attractions."

Nestled in the southern end of a vast deer park for which it's named, Bakken is about six miles north of central Copenhagen in the elegant suburb of Klampenborg.

The park traces its history directly to the jugglers, fortune tellers and jesters of Renaissance Denmark. According to tradition, Bakken traces its origins to the discovery of a spring there by a girl named Kirsten Piil in 1583.

Both body, spirit subject of torture

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

COPENHAGEN, Denmark — Recognizing that torture victims' agony endures long after the period of physical abuse, a group of Danish doctors, nurses and physiotherapists has pioneered a method of treatment for the tortured involving extensive rehabilitation of both body and spirit.

"The purpose of torture is not primarily to obtain information," said Inge Kemp Genefke, medical director of the program based at Copenhagen's University Hospital. "It is to destroy the victim's personality, to break him down, to create guilt and shame, to assure that he will never again be a leader. These psychological consequences are even worse than the physical ones, although those are often serious also."

VICTIMS SUFFER from deep depression, chronic anxiety, poor concentration, severe headaches, sexual problems, fatigue and other symptoms. Many have been beaten badly on the head, heart and stomach and are fearful, usually unnecessarily, that they will be permanently debilitated.

Most of these aftereffects can be eased over several months with specially designed sensitive care. But left alone, they can linger for a lifetime.

Since 1980 Genefke and her colleagues have treated several dozen torture victims from a broad spectrum of countries including Chile, Iraq, Afghanistan, Iran and several African states.

Most simply arrive in Denmark as refugees and learn of the program from the grapevine. They are handled two or three at a time, as limited space allows. Their political opinions, Genefke said, are irrelevant.

SURPRISINGLY, the team found that little research had been done with this particularly vulnerable category of patient, similar in some ways to survivors of World War II concentration camps. But those earlier victims were not subjected to the more advanced torture methods.

Experience shows, for instance, that standard hospital tests such as electrocardiograms and CAT scans, in which the patient has to be immobilized, or therapeutic devices like the whirlpool can induce terrible memories of electrical torture or submersion to the point of drowning in vile liquids.

The tortured find waiting intolerable, Genefke said, since they associate it with the time in prison when the anticipation of pain filled them with dread. They are uncomfortable in small rooms and find it exceedingly unpleasant to have their blood tested.

"They have seen enough of their own blood," said a nurse.

Dentistry is occasionally used as a means of torture, so this, too, needs to be handled carefully.

Even sympathetic doctors or physiotherapists need to prove that they can be trusted, since victims say that in the more sophisticated torture chambers, techniques designed to cause maximum harm with minimum evidence are often supervised by white-coated "specialists."

THE AIM OF TREATMENT is not to enable victims to forget. That is impossible, according to Finn Sommier, who is, like Genefke, a neurologist.

"But we can change the way they remember," he said. "We can help them understand that it was not they who should be ashamed, not they who are guilty. It is the torturers who are defeated, the ones who tried to destroy them."

Buoyed by its apparent success on a relatively small scale, the program is about to embark on a new phase. On Tuesday, in a modest office building near the hospital donated by the Danish government, the International Rehabilitation and Research Center for Torture Victims will open its doors as a separate institution.

Although raising operating funds from other governments and foundations has been a problem, Genefke and her associates say that with about $1 million a year — they have raised only about $200,000 — they could treat 200 patients.

Even that would represent only a small fraction of the world's torture victims. Amnesty International, the human-rights group, estimates that torture is used in 60 countries. Each year, about 500 political refugees arrive in Denmark, and about a hundred of them have been tortured. This is the group from which the patients have been drawn.

"Every day we have to turn away letters that come in looking for help," said Genefke, a doctor-administrator who became interested in the field a decade ago when Amnesty asked her to interview victims.

THE LONG-TERM HOPE is that the center can help train others in the treatment of torture victims. Toward that goal a U.N. voluntary fund for aiding the tortured has been established, with limited funds mainly from Scandinavia. The first seminar, for people from 10 countries, took place here recently, and others are planned for later in the year.

Genefke said that there are three basic principles in the treatment of torture victims. The first is that psychotherapy and physiotherapy, such as massages or care for old wounds, must be done at the same time.

For this purpose, patients spend several weeks in the hospital. They are extensively but gently interviewed while a treatment plan is developed. No drugs are used to counteract the nervous symptoms, she said, because these merely mask the problems.

Secondly, victims should never be separated from their families. Often, spouses or children have suffered nearly as much as the victims themselves from fear and humiliation. It is hard for couples to reestablish their relationships, while so much of the suffering remains trapped inside. A special unit works with the children and sometimes with spouses.

"As father gets better," Genefke said, "we find that the children tend to get better also."

The third principle is to avoid anything that might imitate or recall torture. This appears to be a major insight of the program because doctors and therapists were unaware of how much that goes on in a hospital atmosphere can be reminiscent of torture — straps, electrodes, the need to provoke pain in search of physical damage.

PRIVASY ALSO is important. One of the victims recently suffered a severe setback after a long and emotional interview by a journalist. As a result, the doctors decided to end that sort of access to the patients.

The recovery rate is very high, Genefke said, because as a rule the victims are strong people and relatively young. They tend to be political activists in the 20-to-45-year age bracket with a clear sense of purpose. Their response to the torture experience is to feel shattered, she explained, which is normal.

"We don't have to search for the causes of their psychological problems," said Sommier. "We don't pity them. We talk to them at length to find out exactly what has been done to them to best decide how they should be treated. The fact that they have clear political goals, a desire to change their country, is a big help."

Researchers have found that as the victims regain their confidence, they show greater curiosity and begin to adjust to Danish life, including learning the language. Few have jobs when they enter the program, but Genefke and the others say that victims are usually able to begin working in a matter of months.

REVIVING THE SPIRIT also permits the victims to reassert their political identities.

"This allows them to justify what has happened," said Sommier.

For Genefke in particular, the satisfaction of guiding the tortured back to a reasonably happy life is tempered by her frustrations with the difficulties of raising money.

While her program is firmly ensconced at University Hospital and has enough money to begin its work in the new building, mainly with outpatients, funds remain in very short supply.

Scientific paper describes treatment of torture victim

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

COPENHAGEN, Denmark — A scientific paper published earlier this year describes a typical case treated by the International Rehabilitation and Research Center for Torture Victims.

The victim's name and nationality were omitted in the paper. He was a 42-year-old man who had been subjected to torture for several months, four years before he was admitted to a hospital.

He was beaten on the body, ears and feet, tortured with electric devices and forced to watch others being tortured. His head was held in a "bathtub" filled with urine, excrement and vomit until he nearly suffocated. He was suspended by his arms for hours.

His main problem when he arrived at the hospital was severe headaches. He also suffered from sleeplessness, anxiety attacks, depression and severely hampered memory. His family, especially his 9-year-old daughter, also had problems.

Doctors found that damage to soft tissues in his skull were one cause of the pain. He was treated with radiant heat, followed by massages of the neck and shoulder and the tissues were allowed to heal. He had in-depth conversations with doctors, and his daughter was seen by a pediatrician.

After two months of therapy the headaches disappeared, and they had not returned when he next was examined a year later. He reported that he had only occasional nightmares and said he now felt himself again.

Life slow in clove-scented Tanzania

Letter from Zanzibar

EDITOR'S NOTE: The republic of Tanzania was established in 1964 with the merger of the island of Zanzibar with the mainland area of Tanganyika. Here's a report on Zanzibar, a "speck of sand and coral" that has been largely overlooked by the 20th century.

By JAMES PEIPERT
Associated Press Writer

ZANZIBAR, Tanzania — In this hot, lazy time of year in Tanzania, life slows to the pace of the giant tortoises that lumber around the weedy grounds of the Peace Memorial Museum.

The clove crop, the main export of this soporific isle with a long and sometimes wicked history, has been plucked, dried, bagged and piled high in the tin-roofed warehouses of the old dhow port, where ivory and slaves were once the most profitable cargoes.

Mounds of newly cut coconuts bask in the tropical sun beside a pothole-pitted road that runs north from Zanzibar Town, for centuries East Africa's main entry point and the launch pad for missionaries and explorers like Dr. David Livingstone who opened the Dark Continent.

Most Zanzibaris retire to the deep shade of the banyan and mango trees and quaff the cool coconut milk through a neat hole cut in the top of the husk with a sharp machete.

IN THE TOWN, whose coral stone buildings, twisting lanes and carved wooden doors date from around 1725, thirsty shoppers jostle in line at the market for glasses of iced lime juice ladled from an aluminum pot by a sari-clad Indian matron.

"When the flute plays in Zanzibar, they dance on the lakes," says an old proverb in Swahili, the Arab-rooted lingua franca of East Africa.

The proverb comes from the days when Zanzibar's sultans and merchant princes controlled a trading empire that stretched from the Indian Ocean coast to the great lakes of central Africa — now known as Victoria, Tanganyika and Malawi.

Sailors from Liverpool to New Bedford, Java to Shanghai, sampled the pleasures of Zanzibar harbor. "Everything is found in Zanzibar, the best of all, near and far," says another Swahili jingle from the island's halcyon days of the mid-19th century.

THE CONNECTICUT town of Ivoryton got its name from the manufacture of piano keys and billiard balls from ivory shipped through Zanzibar. The Swahili word "merikani" means the cheap cotton cloth imported to Zanzibar from America's mill towns.

But aside from laying claim to Africa's first color television system — introduced in 1973 — and East Africa's first traffic lights, this speck of sand and coral off mainland Tanzania has been largely overlooked by the 20th century and seems to slumber in an earlier age.

The square-rigged sailing ships which once called here have long since died out. But wooden dhows with triangular lateen sails have plied the coasts of East Africa and Arabia for centuries, and still frequently stop in Zanzibar to take on cargoes of cloves, mangrove poles and coconut oil.

Though boasting pristine beaches of white sand fringed with gracefully curved coconut palms, Zanzibar has never attracted many tourists. Most of those who do come are young Europeans or Americans trekking around the world.

One reason Zanzibar never entered the package tour age was a bloody revolution in 1964, only 32 days after independence from Britain.

THE FIREBRANDS, led by a self-proclaimed field marshal from Uganda named John Okello, ousted the sultan and slaughtered about 5,000 Zanzibari Arabs. The winner of the ensuing power struggle was a former merchant seaman, Abeid Karume, who turned Zanzibar into a xenophobic police state.

Karume agreed to merge his island fiefdom with mainland Tanganyika to form the Tanzanian republic, but he kept local autonomy.

Political enemies gunned down Karume as he played cards in his party headquarters in 1972. He was succeeded as president by university-educated Aboud Jumbe, who has kept Zanzibar socialist but moderated Karume's policies.

Now that Zanzibar is more open, it's fairly easy to get to the island aboard an Air Tanzania Fokker Friendship which makes the 20-minute hop across the Zanzibar Channel from the Tanzanian capital of Dar es Salaam.

The Tanzanian Friendship Tourist Bureau spies out likely tourists at the airport and will arrange a tour of the island — a stately progress in a 1955 British-made Austin that hardly ever exceeds 20 mph even on the rare stretches of good road.

THE APARTMENT BLOCKS which are rent free, and a Coca-Cola bottling plant, which has closed for lack of imported syrup, are dutifully pointed out. But relics of Zanzibar's past glories, and iniquities, are what interests most visitors.

There's the Bububu Express, built in 1905 during a fit of railway mania by Arnold Cheney and Co. of New York, to take people seven miles up the coast, past the burned-out ruins of a sultan's palace, to the village of Bububu.

The little train huffs along, usually slower than people and their donkeys could walk, spewing sparks from its stack and endangering the thatched roofs of trackside huts.

A stroll through the Stone Town, a warren of crumbling buildings with carved-wood balconies, is a kaleidoscope of light and shadow. Shafts of sunlight illuminate patches of cobblestone but fail to reach the dusty nooks of antique shops that are like the attic of a well-traveled granny.

Also on the tour is the Slave Cave, a natural cavern in the coral limestone north of Zanzibar Town. Slaves from the mainland were landed on the nearby beach, marched in chains to the cave and hidden there until transshipment by dhow to Oman and Arabia.

Queen Victoria's Britain was then the power behind the sultan's throne and was trying to stamp out the slave trade, which was worth about $100,000 a year in duties to the reigning Zanzibar monarch.

Thanks to Livingstone and other missionaries who raised a public outcry in Britain, the slave trade was outlawed in Zanzibar in 1873, and the Anglican Cathedral Church of Christ Zanzibar began abuilding on the site of the notorious slave market.

TODAY THERE'S a brass plaque under a stained-glass window, dedicated to Livingstone and other missionary-explorers.

The People's Park in front of the Arabian Nights palace, now a museum, is a pleasant place to take the evening sea breeze. But it was once a no-man's land in a military contretemps that merits a place in the Guinness Book of Records.

In August 1896, a rash young prince of the royal house tried to usurp power upon the death of Sultan Hamid.

Water pours off flukes on the tail of a rare North Atlantic right whale, spotted in the Bay of Fundy near New Brunswick, Canada.

One whale of a tale

All eyes scan the sea, eagerly awaiting a telltale blast of water or the unsignaled surfacing of an enormous black body from the placid Atlantic.

"Whale about a mile ahead!" comes the cry from the bow.

There is a rush of activity aboard the 30-foot Nereid; people grab cameras and Kathy Hazard opens the throttle and steers toward the beast which is one and a half times as large as the ship.

For the next nine hours, the Nereid will track 15 of the nearly extinct North Atlantic right whales in this bay between Maine and the Canadian provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Right whales once roamed the North Atlantic. But over the centuries most were wiped out by whalers, who considered the mammals the "right" whales to hunt because they swim slowly, float when dead and offer large yields of oil and baleen, the precursor of plastic.

Scientists believe there are at most 200 right whales alive today. Groups of five or six have been spotted off the coasts of Massachusetts, Georgia and the Carolinas, says Scott Krauss, 28, who heads the research expedition sponsored by the New England Aquarium in Boston.

The Bay of Fundy, where Krauss and colleagues discovered the whales two summers ago, is the only spot known to have a large concentration — 61 counted last year — and the only place researchers have found calves.

"We're trying to find out whether this is an essential habitat for the right whale — whether they require the area for survival," explains Scott.

The whales are "close enough to the edge" that they may be destined for extinction, he says. "But it may be that you can protect their critical habitat" and allow the populations to build back up.

"The Bay of Fundy is a unique habitat for whales, porpoises and seabirds, but that fact is not well known," Krauss says.

On this trip, which began at Lubec, Maine, the easternmost point in the United States, the Nereid passes numerous porpoises, a finback whale, and puffins, gannets and other sea birds.

Kathy Hazard, who studied bowhead whales in Alaska for six years, idles the Neried 20 feet from the 45-ton whale. Apparently unfazed by the attention, the whale lumbers through the water as Krauss and Matt Hare snap photos.

Team members Wendy Van Dyke and Jim Cox, a family physician from Athens, Texas, take notes on the whale's behavior and physical markings. This one is given the name "White Tip," for the two white tips on its two tail flukes.

The boat will follow "White Tip" for five hours, watching him flip his flukes as he "courts" various females.

The average adult right whale is 45 to 50 feet long and weighs about a ton a foot. Right whales have rotund black bodies, and many have white bellies.

Like its close relative, the bowhead, but unlike other whales, the right has no dorsal fin. It is the only whale with lumps of thickened skin — known as the "collosity" — on its head. Each collosity is unique, enabling researchers to tell the whales apart.

Krauss says little is known about rights — scientists still aren't sure how long they remain pregnant, how long females nurse their young or how often they mate: crucial questions in determining their chances of survival.

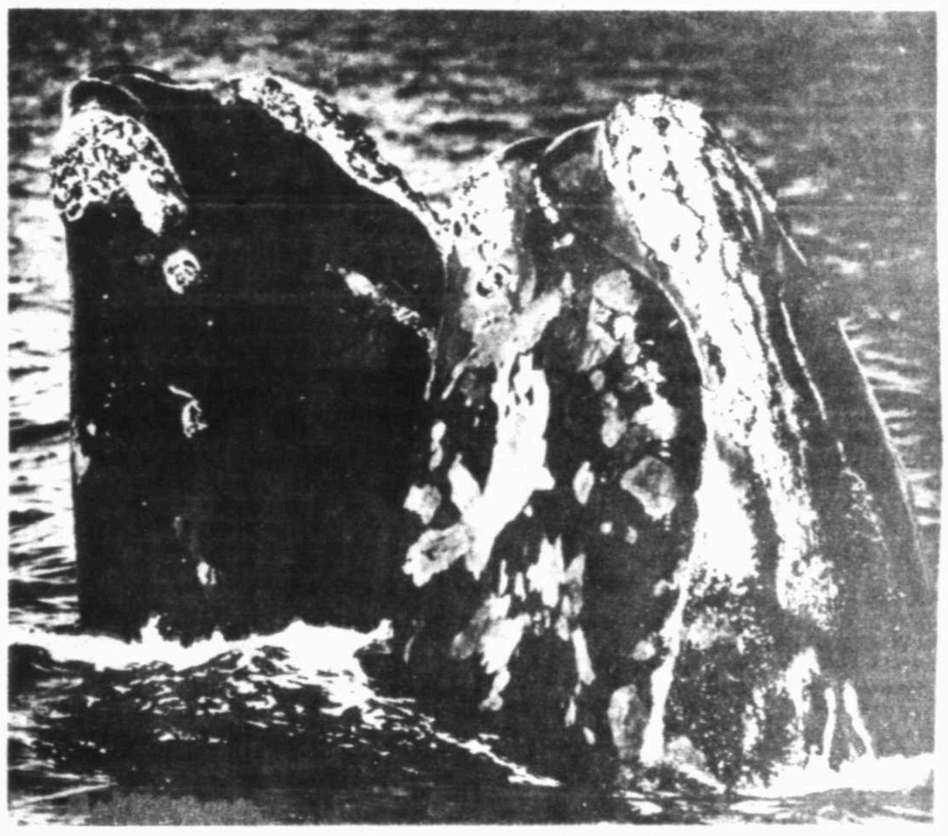

Nor do researchers understand the meaning of most of their behavior, such as "tail lobbing," or "flipper slapping" — in which the mammals slap their tails or flippers on the water.

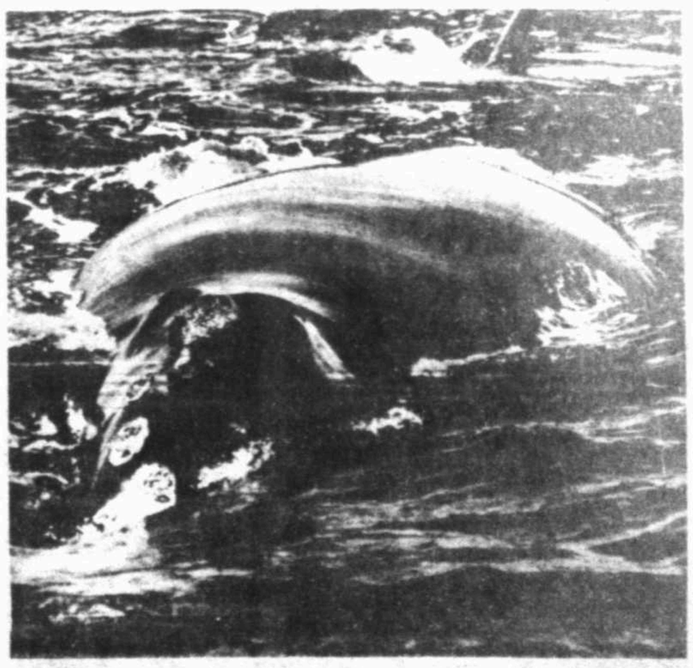

"But it's sort of like Big Brother — we just keep watching those right whales and one of these days we'll know more," Krauss says. The research project will continue for at least three more years.

The information is to be used by federal officials in deciding whether the Pittston Co. should be allowed to build a controversial oil refinery along the bay in Eastport, Maine, which would mean heavy tanker traffic through the whales' area.

Krauss also says Point Le Preau, a new nuclear plant on the New Brunswick coast, will be dumping hot, but not radioactive, water into the bay and that might affect the mammals.

Court ruling could close schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, accused by university president Bob Jones III of murdering religious freedom, may have dealt a death blow to some religious schools.

The nation's highest court repudiated the Reagan administration's legal views Tuesday, ruling by an 8-1 vote that the federal government rightly denied tax breaks to racially discriminatory schools.

"The government has a fundamental, overriding interest in eradicating racial discrimination in education — discrimination that prevailed with official approval for the first 165 years of this nation's history," Chief Justice Warren E. Burger wrote.

Burger said the administration was wrong when it told the Internal Revenue Service to stop withholding tax-exempt status for such private schools.

President Reagan, asked at a White House ceremony about the ruling, said, "We will obey the law."

Tuesday's decision is a serious blow to many private schools that depend heavily on tax-deductible contributions from individuals. Those contributions are not as attractive when not tax deductible.

The high court had been told that without such special tax treatment, many religiously affiliated schools would have to close down.

President Reagan had explained the administration's break from a 13-year IRS policy as an attempt to rein in bureaucracy, not to promote racism. Administration lawyers said Congress never authorized the IRS to combat racial bias by denying tax breaks.

With only Justice William H. Rehnquist dissenting, the Supreme Court said the administration was wrong. Such tax-exempt status properly was denied Bob Jones University in Greenville, S.C., and the Goldsboro Christian Schools in Goldsboro, N.C., the court said.

Bob Jones University bars interracial dating and marriages for its students, and the Goldsboro schools refuse to admit blacks. The policies are based on religious beliefs.

"We're mourning the death of freedom, religious freedom," said university president Jones, an ordained preacher. "It's been murdered by the Supreme Court today."

"We'll pay the taxes we have to pay, and trust the Lord to sustain this institution," Jones said.

National and state flags were flown at half-staff at the university Tuesday.

William T. Coleman Jr., the prominent black lawyer and civil rights advocate specially appointed by the Supreme Court to defend the IRS policy, praised the ruling.

"I think the court has said for the first time that racial discrimination in any form whatsoever in educational institutions is against national policy," Coleman said. "The government cannot directly or indirectly support it."

For Bob Jones University and the Goldsboro schools, that indirect support amounted to about $1 million a year in tax breaks.

Jones mourns 'death of religious freedom'

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — The president of Bob Jones University says the U.S. Supreme Court killed religious freedom in the same way it sanctioned "the murder of unborn children," by ruling the school can be denied a tax exemption because of its racial policies.

At a news conference, Bob Jones III said his fundamentalist Christian institution would not change its policies because of the high court, which ruled Tuesday that tax breaks may be denied to racially discriminatory schools.

"The ruling will not change one thing we do in our school except that we will pay taxes," he said.

The Supreme Court voted 8-1 to back an Internal Revenue Service decision stripping the 6,000-student university of its tax-exempt status because of its ban on interracial dating and marriage.

Jones said flags at the school were flying at half-staff.

"We are mourning the death of freedom — religious freedom — which was murdered in the same way the Supreme Court decided to allow the murder of unborn children and to take Bible reading and prayer out of public schools," Jones said.

The Supreme Court justices "have made themselves enemies of heaven and Jesus Christ. I fear for this country and for my children," he added. "Government interests now supersede religious interests. The state is God and religion plays a secondary role to the state."

About 75 students attended the news conference but none would respond to questions. University officials said students had been instructed not to talk to reporters.

The only change foreseen at Bob Jones University, says Bob Jones III, is that the school will now pay taxes.

Notes say official sought job with satellite firm

WASHINGTON (AP) — A congressman says he has evidence suggesting that a top Commerce Department official who resigned amid conflict-of-interest allegations had "agressively" pursued a job with a firm hoping to do business with his agency.

The official, Guy W. Fiske, has acknowledged having contacts with the firm, but said they were only "preliminary."

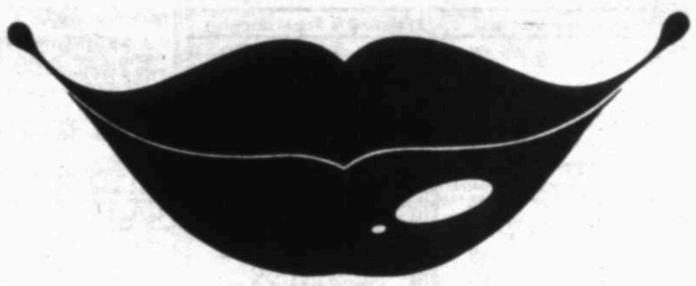

In a letter to the Justice Department dated Monday, Rep. James H. Scheuer, D-N.Y., said notes by executive recruiter Blair Murphy suggest that Fiske, was "actively and aggressively pursuing employment" with the Communications Satellite Corp. as late as March.

While deputy commerce secretary, Fiske supervised a now-stalled administration plan to sell the government's land and weather satellites to private industry. Comsat had lobbied for the sale and was considered the likely buyer.

Fiske, who resigned this month in the face of a Justice Department inquiry into the alleged conflict of interest, could not be reached for comment on the letter by Scheuer, chairman of the House Science and Technology environment subcommittee. Fiske's lawyer did not answer the telephone at his office.

Fiske has denied any impropriety, claiming he was only an "expediter" of the sale proposal and saying the job discussions "never reached the point of actual negotiations for any position of employment."

However, one of Murphy's notes last September quotes Fiske as saying he wanted to be Comsat president, not executive vice president, the job Comsat was considering him for. Another note last March says Joseph Charyk, Comsat president, had become concerned about Fiske's "aggressive position" on the proposed sale.

ATTENTION BUILDERS

of our new home inventory has closed or is now under contract in the last six weeks. Four of our builder clients are now involved in lot acquisition, plan approval, etc. to begin many new homes.

But while these new houses are being framed we need additional homes to show our customers and sell!

We presently market homes in the Wydewood, Superior, Fairmont and Green Tree sub-divisions.

Our firm features a unique combination of years of experience and education in advertising, marketing and promotional strategies with a proven sales record in residential property and a thorough, on-going knowledge of new home finance.

If you need assistance in marketing your residential products give us a call, or drop by our office in San Miguel Square (next door to Mortgage & Trust).

Exquisite 2200 and over square foot patio homes in north Midland's Meadow Park Addition.

5% Interest Available

Luxurious living quarters featuring all the amenities you expect in a custom home.
