School-funds bill

AUSTIN — The Texas Senate approved a proposed constitutional amendment Thursday to reform school funding, but Speaker Gib Lewis said there aren't enough votes to pass it in the House. "Dealing with a 150 (House) members with their own ideas is a lot different than dealing with 31 (Senate) members and their ideas," said Lewis, D-Fort Worth. A two-thirds vote of the Legislature is required to put a proposed amendment before voters. Lewis said he expects the full House to consider a proposal next week./1D

Halcion decision

DALLAS — A jury Thursday awarded the family of a convicted murderer up to $2.15 million after deciding the sleeping pill Halcion helped the man kill. But the actual damage award, which still must be approved by a judge, is likely to be less because the jury split the blame for the killing among the man, his doctor and Upjohn Co., maker of the drug./1D

Contact-lens risk

CHICAGO — People who wear disposable contact lenses are up to 14 times more likely to develop eye ulcers, which can lead to blindness, than wearers of non-disposable soft lenses, according to a study released Thursday. But the wearers may be to blame, not the lenses, said Dr. Terrence P. O'Brien, a colleague of the researchers. He said many wearers bring on problems by failing to properly care for disposable lenses and not paying attention to recommended limits on wearing times. The study is the first to explore risks associated with disposables, which were introduced in 1988.

Continental refuels flights into Midland

Airline schedules three daily non-stop departures

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff writer

After a four-year hiatus, Continental Airlines will be zooming between Houston and Midland three times a day beginning Jan. 21.

Continental, the carrier that is now emerging from Chapter 11 protection, said the decision to return to Midland made sense from a business standpoint.

"Midland is very key to the short-haul markets for us," said Don Welsh, vice president of customer service. "The fact that the airline has been going through re-organization does not stop the process of trying to build a carrier that will make us solid and profitable."

Continental's three daily non-stop departures to Houston Intercontinental Airport will leave Midland International at 6 a.m., 11:30 a.m. and 7 p.m. with return flights at 9:45 a.m., 5:27 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

Carroll Thomas, the airport's head of business development, said he was elated by the news.

"This give us excellent, direct, non-stop flights to three key international hubs," said the former mayor, "Intercontinental, Dallas-Forth Worth and Denver."

Thomas said the return of Continental, which terminated its ties with Midland in October 1988, also means a return to better times for the airport,

President-elect's at home in scene

By Karen Ball
Associated Press writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — President-elect Clinton looked right at home and just plain happy to be there as he walked into a room full of TV lights for his first formal news conference since winning the election.

He smiled a lot as he fielded 40 minutes worth of queries. Someone asked if he was starting to feel a little over-

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — President-elect Clinton confidently detailed a crowded blueprint for action on Thursday, saying he would quickly reverse President Bush's abortion and Haiti policies and create more than a half-million jobs in his first year.

In his first formal news conference since the election, Clinton also promised his transition and administration would have the strictest ethical guidelines in history and pledged to meet voter demands for "aggressive and prompt action" to revive the economy.

"The clear mandate of this election from the American people was the end of politics as usual and the end of gridlock in Washington and the end of finger pointing and blame," the 46-year-old president-elect said, urging Republicans and Democrats in Congress to embrace his busy agenda.

Republican congressional leaders who had been critical of Clinton in the campaign held their fire as he took his initial policymaking steps as president-elect. Senate GOP Leader Bob Dole's aides said he had no comment.

An aide to House Minority Whip Newt Gingrich said the Georgia lawmaker was not in "the business of badmouthing the president-elect just for the sake of it."

New UTPB president visits campus, vows involvement

Charles A. Sorber plans to do a lot of listening before he makes any concrete decisions as president of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin (UTPB).

"That's the key. To let the people have their say, to gather information from everywhere you can get it and then put the goals to use," he said while visiting the campus Thursday.

But Sorber, who was appointed to the job last week, won't be a hands-on president until at least early May.

"It's almost physically impossible for me to be here before that time because of moving constraints," he said. "But I

Workers unearth dinosaur bones from N. Texas ranch

By Anita Baker
N.Y. Times News Service

WEATHERFORD — Tons of hard sandstone containing the bones of a 113-million-year-old dinosaur were pulled from a 15-foot-deep creek on a Parker County ranch.

Tentatively identified as an acrocanthosaurus, an early cousin of the Tyrannosaurus rex, it is the most complete dinosaur skeleton and the biggest meat eater found so far in Texas, said Louis Jacobs, director of the Shuler Museum of Paleontology at Southern Methodist University.

A crane was used on Wednesday to remove rocks containing the remains of what scientists suspect was a 2- to 3-ton beast that stood 14 to 18 feet tall and was 40 feet long.

Foghorn blues: Booms become beeps in San Francisco Bay

By John Howard
Associated Press writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Beep Beep, go the newfangled fog warning gadgets the Coast Guard installed on San Francisco Bay. Nuts, say traditionalists who want a return to the old foghorns that moaned through the mist.

"The foghorns are really mournful and romantic — they're Sam Spade sidling down the Hyde Street hill in the dripping fog," said Wayne Wheeler, president of the San Francisco-based U.S. Lighthouse Society.

Last week, the last of San Francisco Bay's bellowing sentinels on Alcatraz Island was replaced by a high-pitched, electronic beeper. The Coast Guard says the beepers are cheaper and more reliable.

But even the city's board of supervisors wants the old horns back.

The Coast Guard was surprised by the reaction from the board and the public. "We knew there was some interest but we didn't anticipate the level of interest we've seen in the last week," said Mike Van Houten, assistant chief of the Coast Guard's Aids to Navigation Office in Long Beach.

The Coast Guard isn't likely to replace the beepers, but might let someone else operate an old foghorn, he said.

In the 19th century, mariners navigating the foggy bay were guided by shore-based steam horns, trumpets, bells, whistles and almost anything that made noise. At the turn of the century, air-powered sirens were developed.

Later, the ponderous two-note foghorns became popular and held sway for decades, offering the baritone "BEEE-ohhhhh" that Wheeler says "became part of the city's ambience."

"They're the old Lifebuoy commercials," Wheeler said. "Who wants to hear a beep every 10 seconds at night?"

At one time, more than four dozen traditional horns boomed throughout the bay, from the Oakland Estuary to Old Lime Point below the Golden Gate Bridge.

But the last of the hooters was removed from the southern tip of Alcatraz

Clinton shows command of details, nuances on wide range of topics

By R.W. Apple Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Words are George Bush's enemies; President-elect Bill Clinton showed on Thursday that they can be his friends.

That was the dominant impression of a presidential style in embryo as it emerged from Clinton's first full-dress news conference since his victory 10 days ago. Whatever one thought of the substance of what he said — and there was plenty of room for argument, because he stated his view bluntly in some cases — the man from Little Rock left not the slightest doubt that the White House will get its syntax tightened when he moves in next Jan. 20.

Clinton has no experience in the federal government, and Bush made much of that in his losing re-election campaign. But the Arkansas governor showed a command of the details and nuances of a wide range of topics, from Haitian refugees and Washington lobbying to the savings and loan scandal. He sounded as if he had been dealing daily with such issues for a long time.

■ Assessment

Of course, the trademark windiness, which the country experienced during the 1988 and 1992 Democratic conventions, made an occasional reappearance. And skeptics noted his tendency, displayed during the campaign, to rely on stagy mannerisms, like biting his lip and lowering his eyes in a show of modesty.

But where Bush often favored an elliptical approach, Clinton took most questions head on: Yes. No. I haven't decided yet. I've decided but I'm not going to tell you yet.

The president-elect made it clear that he would take his time making appointments, whatever his critics said, but he also made it clear that his would be an activist administration, with the top man more deeply immersed in the minutiae of governing than any, perhaps, since Lyndon B. Johnson.

Asked whether he felt overwhelmed by his new responsibilities, Clinton, a real government-lover, answered, "No, I'm having a wonderful time."

All of this offers signposts to the future. An American politican's style, knowledge and composure when standing behind a lectern, fielding reporters' questions, can be every bit as important in this country as a European politician's ability to answer questions posed in parliament, or a corporate chairman's capacity to handle the queries of his stockholders.

The press conference is one of the few occasions when the nation gets a look at a president in a situation over which he has only partial control, at best, and his early outings help to form an impression that lasts and lasts.

Press conferences have helped make some presidents and break others. The coltish charm and quick wit of John F. Kennedy, the easy familiarity of Gerald R. Ford and the effortless command of that old theatrical pro, Ronald Reagan, helped them put their ideas across.

Richard M. Nixon's evident defensiveness and nervousness, Johnson's chronic whining and exaggeration and Bush's spaghetti sentences all got in the way of effective communication. Clinton manages, somehow, to put together long, involved sentences on the spur of the moment without tripping over his tongue. Here, unedited, is what he said on Thursday about the sort of person he wants to manage his foreign policy:

"I want a secretary of state who understands that we have obligations of continuity and obligations of change, and that basically the pillars of our national security and foreign policy ought to be a different but still very strong defense, a commitment to global growth and economic regeneration here, and the fulfilling of our responsibility as the world's sole superpower to try to promote democracy and freedom, and restrain the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction."

Bush's sentences, on the other hand, often do not parse at all. Here, for instance, is the beginning of his reply to a question about tax cuts at a news conference a year ago, on Oct. 26, 1991:

"I think it's understandable, when you have a bad — economic numbers come in from time to time, mixed, I must happily say, with some reasonably good ones, other people get concerned. I'm concerned. But I don't want to do — take —I don't want to say to them, 'Well, you shouldn't come forward with proposals.' "

The president-elect also indicated a preference for grander, more official settings than those favored by Bush, who liked impromptu sessions in the White House briefing room. Clinton is not yet in office, but he opted for flags and formality, like Nixon and especially Reagan, although the president-elect told reporters he was "a real sort of informal person."

Like Kennedy, Clinton clearly intends to project a picture of youth and vigor, not least to differentiate himself from Bush and the Republicans. He told a friend last week that the president lost "partly because he seemed worn out." To reinforce his youthful image, he brought Vice President-elect Al Gore out to stand behind him, mute, during the entire news conference. Like Reagan, who also lacked a military record, Clinton wants to project a bit of the John Wayne, tough-guy swagger.

He claimed no broad mandate for any of his specific proposals, like the middle-class tax cut or slashing the military budget. But he did see in the pattern of election returns a public demand for an end to partisan squabbling and legislative gridlock. He heard that from individual voters and read about it in his private polls throughout the campaign.

Which is why he turned the other cheek to Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, the acerbic if able Republican leader in the Senate; why he pledged again to appoint Republicans to senior positions, and why he praised Reagan's skill at legislative packaging and Bush's success in keeping the National Security Council and the State Department on the same track.

While Clinton stated firmly his determination to change the Pentagon's policy toward homosexuals, which he can do with a mere stroke of a pen, it has always been his style to make a great show of consensus-seeking with a legislature that often fought him.

FOGHORN: Many miss bellowing sentinels

(From 1A)

Island as part of the Coast Guard's modernization of its navigation aids. Several other beepers already were positioned around the bay.

The beepers are virtually maintenance free and the compressed-air horns are not as reliable, the Coast Guard said. "They are much more labor intensive, the parts are not standardized and they break down all the time," said Van Houten.

The beepers have an audible range of one mile, Van Houten said, slightly less than foghorns. Like the foghorns, they are intended to help the recreational boater and small-craft owner rather than larger vessels that have radar and other navigational equipment, he said.

San Francisco's board of supervisors voted unanimously Monday to urge the Coast Guard, federal recreational officials and the county to work together to keep the old foghorns in operation. Alcatraz Island is part of the Golden Gate National Recreation Area.

The board's resolution was sent to Mayor Frank Jordan for his signature.

"His position is that if there is absolutely no cost to the city and county of San Francisco, he would sign the resolution. But that's the caveat — no cost," said Jordan spokesman Bob Forsyth.

Wheeler's group has offered to provide maintenance and repairs if the Coast Guard return the foghorn to Alcatraz.

The Coast Guard would be willing to turn over one or two of the decommissioned foghorns to the city or any other group that wanted to reintroduce them, but it's not considering replacing any of the electronic beepers, Van Houten said Thursday.

Ideally, Wheeler said, there should be three foghorns "tooting around the bay" two on Alcatraz and one on the Golden Gate Bridge. "It would be a goodwill gesture to the people of San Francisco," he said.

Unfit Honecker goes to trial; prosecutors have tough job

BERLIN (AP) — Former Communist leader Erich Honecker went on trial Thursday for the killings of East Germans fleeing to the West. But the illness of an elderly co-defendant forced the court to recess until Monday, demonstrating how difficult the prosecutors' job will be.

The criminal case is considered the most important in Germany since the Nuremberg war crimes trials against Nazi bosses after World War II.

For many Germans, the trial represents a final reckoning with the ousted and disgraced East Berlin regime, which Honecker headed from 1971 to 1989. But many others think it serves no purpose.

Outside the Berlin District Court, former East German political prisoner Rolf Richter hung up a flag from his now-vanished country, with the words "Send Honecker to Bautzen" written on it. Bautzen was the Communists' most notorious prison for political foes and people caught trying to escape.

About two dozen Honecker supporters also gathered outside the court, where a dozen police vans stood by to prevent trouble.

"Freedom for Erich Honecker and Erich Mielke," one woman shouted into a megaphone.

Mielke, one of the six defendants, is the 84-year-old former chief of East Germany's dreaded secret police.

Although his lawyers claim he's deathly ill with liver cancer, the 80-year-old Honecker did not appear frail. He smiled occasionally as he took his place inside the dark, cramped courtroom.

Dressed in a natty blue suit and maroon tie, he posed for photographers and briefly waved to one supporter who gave the Communists' clenched-fist salute.

"Did you bring enough film along?" Honecker asked one photographer, as three of the shooting victims' relatives sat nearby.

Disease boosts death toll in Monrovia

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — With tears choking her voice, the young mother begged outside a clinic, "Please, please open the gates. My baby's dying."

But it was already too late. Four-month-old Juah Sonpon died minutes later of measles, another victim of the four-week-long guerrilla siege that has cut off Monrovia's supplies of clean water, food and medicine.

Rebels loyal to guerrilla leader Charles Taylor have been shelling Monrovia's port daily, frightening away ships carrying food and medical supplies to the besieged capital.

The last U.N. ship arrived two weeks ago, carrying 4,000 tons of corn and soya blend for malnourished children. Dockers had offloaded only 500 tons when the shelling resumed, and the captain returned the ship to sea.

"We've got a ship with 3,000 tons of rice that has been standing off the port for days, and the United Nations is still negotiating, trying to persuade its captain to come in," U.N. spokeswoman Kathy McManus said.

On Thursday, Taylor issued a radio warning that his fighters would attack any ship that approached Monrovia's port. "Anytime we suspect a ship is coming into the Free Port, we will attack the port for 24 hours," Taylor said.

Taylor's guerrillas, who are now within three miles of downtown Monrovia, fired rockets on the port Monday night, hitting a warehouse inside the port, another just outside and a civilian home. Two civilians were killed. On Tuesday, a missile exploded into a container in the port.

McManus estimated the U.N.'s food supplies would last another two weeks. Many of the 200,000 refugees from the besieged suburbs, who have crowded into schools and other public buildings in Monrovia, receive just one cup of rice every two days.

The rebels have also targeted James Spriggs Payne Airfield, Monrovia's only operating airport. Since rockets began falling just yards from the runway two weeks ago, only one chartered airline, which charges twice the rates of scheduled airlines, still flies into the capital.

A chartered Boeing 707 carrying medical supplies and personnel for the Belgian branch of Doctors Without Borders was diverted to neighboring Ivory Coast last week after Taylor warned any aircraft would be targeted.

The plane was carrying badly needed cholera treatment kits. U.N. and other relief agencies fear the measles epidemic in the city could be followed by outbreaks of the highly infectious disease.

The measles epidemic, carried by refugees from northwestern Bomi County, has grown from 380 reported cases in August to 600 in October, according to U.N. Children's Fund representative, Carl Tinstman.

No one can say how many children have died, certainly dozens.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Expect sunny skies, 60s

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high in the upper 60s and southeast winds at 5-15 mph. Tonight should be clear with a low in the mid-30s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Saturday should be mostly sunny with a high in the lower 70s.

After an overnight low of 38, Thursday's high reached 66, compared to the record high for that date of 84 set in 1938. The record low was 15 set in 1976.

STATE

Cold and dry air filered into North Texas on Thursday, helping prevent the formation of clouds and keeping afternoon temperatures cool.

Winds were from the north at 10 to 20 mph with gusts over 25 mph at some locations. Gusts of more than 30 mph were reported at Waco about 2 p.m., at DFW Airport at 3 p.m. and at Tyler at 1 p.m.

The National Weather Service said the winds were in response to a combination of a surface high pressure center over the rockies and a surface low pressure center over the great lakes.

Temperatures rose only into the lower 60s by 3 p.m. despite abundant sunlight.

The weather service said conditions should be clear and mild through Saturday, with highs in the 60s and lows in the 30s.

Across South Texas, temperatures had dropped into the 50s at midevening. A cool dome of high pressure continued to build into the area in the wake of a cold front that moved across the region earlier in the day.

The high temperature in Texas on Thursday was 78 at Brownsville and McAllen, ahead of the cold front that moved across far South Texas in mid-morning.

Skies were clear over the Panhandle on Thursday except for a narrow band of mostly high clouds. Temperatures over West Texas today should be in the 60s and 70s in the afternoon, with nighttime lows in the 30s and 40s.

NATION

Rain fell across much of the nation on Thursday, causing some flooding in Indiana. Snow fell across the Great Lakes region.

A tornado watch was in effect for parts of Alabama and Georgia for much of the day, and the National Weather Service reported a twister touched down in Brantley, Ala. There were no reports of damage or injuries.

In Mobile, Ala., 2.5 inches of rain fell in 90 minutes.

At midday, rain and thunderstorms extended from northwest Florida to southeast Louisiana, from east-central Missouri to west-central Illinois, across the Atlantic coast states, the Ohio Valley, the lower Great Lakes, the Appalachians and the Tennessee Valley.

The eastern Gulf of Mexico states, the Mississippi Valley and the Rocky Mountains also received rain.

In west-central Indiana, flooding prompted school officials in Parke County to close three schools and about 100 residents in nearby Clinton were evacuated. A small area of Terre Haute was evacuated because of a fuel leak into the sewer system.

Elsewhere, snow fell in western Upper Michigan, western Wisconsin, northern Minnesota and the northern Rockies.

Heavier rainfall during the 6 hours ending at noon CST included nearly 3.6 inches in Biloxi, Miss.; 3 inches in Mobile, Ala.; 1.8 inches in New Orleans; and 1.37 inches in Key West, Fla.

There were no reports of measurable snowfall during the same 6 hours.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

CLINTON: President-elect taps transition team

(From 1A)

The aide, Tony Blankley, added: "Clinton campaigned as a centrist. We would like to help him govern from the center or right of center."

As Clinton fielded questions at the Old Arkansas Statehouse, Vice President-elect Al Gore stood nearby but said nothing. Afterward they headed to the Governor's Mansion to resume work on their transition plans.

Clinton called the news conference to announce 48 additions to his transition team, a mix of political and policy advisers, men and women, charged with helping Clinton build the first Democratic administration in a dozen years.

"They reflect my commitment to assembling the most qualified and diverse group of people available, including men and women with broad experience, some of whom served in the campaign and others who are just joining us now as we move toward governing," Clinton said of his picks.

The president-elect then answered questions on an array of topics, from his general economic and foreign policy priorities to his specific plans to provide jobs and deal with nuclear proliferation, as well as his feelings on the heavy security and intense media attention that came with his election.

"I'm having a wonderful time," Clinton said. "It is an enormous responsibility, but I asked for it, and it's an indulgence to feel overwhelmed by it. ... I'm just going to give you my best effort every day."

He spoke quietly and seriously throughout most of the 40-minute, nationally televised question-and-answer session, but took a few occasions to joke and one to angrily denounce the Bush administration search of his State Department passport files during the campaign.

If he hears of people doing anything like that, he said, "I will fire them the next day."

Clinton shed little new light on his agenda, but did offer a portrait of his priorities in the economic and foreign policy arenas and a glimpse at some of the steps he is likely to take in his first days as president.

Clinton said he would lift the Bush administration ban on abortion counseling at federally funded clinics and revise Bush's Haiti policy to allow refugees now summarily returned to their country to petition for political refugee status.

Clinton's announcement of a new policy toward Haitian boat people drew qualified praise from a Haitian official. Marlene Dorfeuille, director of the Permanent Secretariat for Haitian Refugees called it a more humane approach.

But she also called it "an open invitation to a mass exodus" of boat people to the United States.

There also was praise for Clinton's announced plan to end the ban on gays in the military. "We hope this act is but the first of many that the Clinton administration will take to counteract the prejudice and discrimination that still inflict so much pain on so many Americans," said a statement from The American Jewish Committee.

On the economy, Clinton said he remained committed to his campaign pledge to offer a middle-class tax cut; to provide an investment tax credit for new factories and equipment, which he predicted would create some 500,000 jobs in his first year, and to accelerate spending on road, bridge and other infrastructure work he said would create additional jobs.

"I expect to keep the focus on these economic issues," Clinton said. "The American people understand that these problems are of long duration and there won't be any overnight miracles. But I think they expect aggressive and prompt action and I'm going to give it to them."

As for other domestic priorities, Clinton listed universal health care, campaign and lobbying reforms, and his proposal calling for national service to pay off college loans.

He said he was charting a security and foreign policy agenda that "keeps the defense of this country the strongest in the world and deals with the necessity to downscale."

His administration, he said, will be "pursuing our continued efforts to reduce nuclear weapons with Russia and with other nuclear powers; working hard to stop the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, nuclear, biological and chemical; keeping the Middle East peace process on track and doing whatever I can to make sure there is no break in continuity; and doing what I can to strengthen global economic growth in terms of resolving outstanding matters with Mexico, hopefully resolving the outstanding (trade) issues in Europe and proceeding with a cooperative strategy with the other major economic powers to promote global growth, something which will help us very much."

After announcing the transition staff additions, Clinton said Cabinet and other senior appointments would have to wait a bit, while he studies whether to make dramatic changes in the direction of major government agencies.

SCENE: President-elect looks at home, happy

whelmed by the enormity of his new responsibilities.

"No, I'm having a wonderful time," Clinton said, laughing and obviously meaning it. That response even sparked a smile from Vice President-elect Albert Gore, who stood silent, stiff and stern-looking behind him for the duration, nodding in agreement as beads of sweat formed on his forehead.

Clinton, on the other hand, looked cool and relaxed, and healthier than he has in months. Gone were the bags that sagged under his eyes for the last, grueling weeks of campaigning.

He wore a classic blue suit with a red tie — but it wasn't totally conservative. His tie had a blue paisley decorations on it. He stood under a chandelier with a presidential-looking eagle atop it, and U.S. and Arkansas flags were in the background.

Clinton started off by welcoming the 100 or so reporters and TV journalists to the Old State House, which he called "my favorite building in our state."

The news conference was held in the former House chambers, where, as the lore goes, a state representative was killed in a knife fight in 1837 in a dispute with the House speaker over the bounty on wolf pelts.

The president-elect called some reporters by name as he took their questions — something he rarely did as a candidate. Journalists stood up to question him.

He looked like he could settle right in to this sort of thing. When someone asked for more specifics about his ethics guidelines, Clinton demurred, saying "otherwise we won't have anything else to do the next time we meet." He sounded like he couldn't wait.

He joked a few times, too. He was asked how often he'd be seen in the streets of the nation's capital, and the questioner noted: "Little Rock is not Washington."

"Thank goodness," Clinton cracked. Another questioner asked about Ross Perot and whether Clinton would invite him to the economic summit.

"Well, I expect he'll have a chance to get under the hood," sounding as though he had no intention of inviting his former rival.

UTPB: University's new president visits campus

hope to be visiting often by December and be involved in what's going on."

Sorber's immediate concerns include developing a "mission statement" based on input from his new staff and the community. He said he is confident the community will support whatever decisions he makes.

"I've had the opportunity to talk with a number of folks and I know that listening is the key," he said. "When a university responds to the needs of a community, a community will respond to the university. I've been around long enough to know that."

Sorber, who will be UTPB's fourth president, has been dean of the School of Engineering and a professor of civil engineering at the University of Pittsburgh since 1986.

He said it's too early to expound on any of his goals but promised that UTPB students will receive "the highest-quality education."

"When I arrive, I want to identify new programs. I want to move this institution forward and make it among the best. We will settle for no less," Sorber said. "I'm a very positive person, I believe there is nothing we can't do."

Sorber said he is honored to be selected to the post.

"In an institution's history, you seek different types of leadership," he said. "... That I was selected at this point in history for this university means a great deal."

His wife, Linda, is an attorney in Pittsburgh. She has passed the bar exam in three states, including Texas.

Sorber received bachelor's and master's degrees from Penn State University and a doctorate in engineering from the University of Texas at Austin. He has written or co-written more than 130 articles, reports, abstracts and conference proceedings, as well as nine chapters in books, on a variety of technical subjects.

He is also a member of the American Academy of Environmental Engineers and is president-elect of the Water Environment Federation. He has served on the Commission on Information Technologies of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges, the Presidential Business Development Mission to Poland and the Engineering Deans Council of the American Association for Engineering Education.

AIRLINE: Continental to resume Midland flights whose boardings have been down in recent years.

With the addition of the Houston-based carrier, Thomas said the number of available flights out of Midland will increase by 21 percent.

Welsh said the Permian Basin's oil and gas industry was one factor in the airline's decision to return to Midland. "We just feel the business opportunities are very good here."

A second factor was the recent signing of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"There's a lot of opportunities for the Midland-Odessa area as part of that agreement," he said.

Continental joins United Express, which began providing flights to Denver Stapleton International earlier this year, along with Southwest Airlines and American Airlines.

In addition to Midland, Welsh said the airline is planning to resume service to other smaller cities as part of its long-range business plan to increase its hub traffic at Intercontinental.

"We've already built our long-haul markets out of Houston and our desire now is to come in and build our short haul (routes) up," he said.

Thomas said Continental's 57 foreign destinations also will give Midlanders access to Europe, Russia, the Middle East, South America and Mexico.

Two days ago, Continental was refueled back to fiscal health when the airline announced plans to accept a $450 million proposal from Air Canada and Air Partners L.P.

Together, the investment group will control 55 percent of airline's equity and 65 percent of its voting stock.

BONES: Discovery produces new piece of puzzle plant-eating tenontosaurus dinosaurs were uncovered in 1988. The two species roamed portions of Parker County, about 30 miles west of Fort Worth, about the same time.

Since the 1940s, five generations of the Hobson family have climbed on what was once a rock ledge that eventually collapsed, knowing all along it contained remains of some large animal. But it wasn't until two years ago that they learned it was a dinosaur.

"I remember when we were growing up, Grandma and Grandpa would want us to see the 'dinosaur,'" said Helen Spivey, granddaughter of Ben and Roxie Hobson, who first bought the ranch in 1929.

"You could see part of it, but you had to have a good imagination," she said. "Grandpa had it (imagination). He could see it."

Philip Hobson, her brother, lives on the 800-acre ranch west of Weatherford where the bones were found. He also had thought it might be a dinosaur, "but I was surprised to learn that it was something this rare."

The find was called very unusual by Jacobs, who is working with the Fort Worth Museum of Science and History to recover the bones.

The find also provides a much-needed piece of the puzzle from the early cretaceous period, Jacobs said. Dinosaur bones are plentiful from eras both before and after, but not during that time, he said.

The latest find has made Parker County a prime hunting ground for dinosaurs from that era, he said.

Once its legs are fully exposed, researchers might be able to determine if this type of creature left its footprints in the Paluxy River near Glen Rose, Jacobs said. The bed of the shallow river contains fossilized dinosaur footprints.

From pieces embedded in stone, experts speculate that most of the skeleton has been preserved, said Jim Diffley, assistant science curator with the Fort Worth Museum of Science and History. Portions of a jaw, ribs, leg and tail can be seen jutting from the stone.

The reassembled bones of the animal will be displayed at the museum but not for at least three years, he said.

Officials can't confirm the type of animal until more bone is exposed. If it has a spiny ridge running down its back, then it's likely a acrocanthosaurus. But they have not ruled out the possibility of having found an entirely new species of dinosaur.

The meat eater lived during the early cretaceous era, several million years before the Tyrannosaurus rex made its ferocious appearance.

When the Hobson reptile roamed Texas, seas lapped at the edges of Parker County and an extensive network of rivers flowed through the area, much as rivers now empty into Galveston Bay.

"It was a real pleasant place to live — warm, but pleasant," Jacobs said.

The low-lying area was broken with hills and contained early versions of conifer trees. Flowering plants were just emerging and tiny mammals scurried under the claws or feet of giant dinosaurs.

Now, the bones lie in a recently cleared field, surrounded by live oaks, briars and grasses.

Once the rocks are "pared" down to smaller sizes, the bones will be taken to SMU to be cleaned, a process expected to last about two years. The bones will then be reassembled for display at the Fort Worth museum.

On Wednesday, Ben Hobson, 4, climbed on the rocks, probably for the last time before workers begin breaking them apart. Future generations will only be able to see the bones in a museum display.

Philip Hobson, owner of Hobson Air Conditioning in Weatherford, first alerted SMU and museum officials to the find during a barbecue given at James Doss' nearby ranch. The barbecue celebrated the excavation of the tenontosaurus discovered there.

The exposed jawbone of the animal immediately told researchers the animal was a meat eater. About three weeks ago, officials began encasing the exposed bone in plaster and making plans to remove it from a creek.

War, weather keep aid from Bosnians

By George Jahn
Associated Press Writer

TRAVNIK, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Saimea Buric shivered in line to receive barely enough food to keep her alive, even though aid-packed warehouses would normally be only a few hours' drive away.

But Bosnia is at war, and nothing is normal.

"Sometimes there's enough, and sometimes there isn't," said the 26-year-old refugee, clutching her summer jacket closely against a gust of bitter fall wind. "We're hungry most of the day."

Travnik, 40 miles northwest of Sarajevo, has for weeks been a first haven for thousands of refugees fleeing fighting further north.

As Mrs. Buric, her two children and hundreds of others wait for hours for a helping of watery rice or spaghetti — their only meal each day — relief workers fight to get food aid to them and others even worse off.

But for every truckload or planeload that reaches its destination, another seems to be blocked by war, weather or worsening roads. And there is little hope of change.

With past cease-fires usually collapsing within hours, there was little reason to believe that the latest, which took affect early Thursday, would be any different.

While the truce seemed to hold initially in most areas, there already were reports Thursday morning of heavy clashes around Mostar in western Herzegovina.

With fighting blocking most good roads, relief officials say the arrival of winter will make the already hazardous dirt roads they now use nearly impassable. Winter weather also is likely to force cutbacks of airborne aid to Sarajevo, the besieged Bosnian capital.

Ron Redmond, spokesman for the Geneva-based United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, warned last week that "the situation is very desperate and it may already be too late for some people" weakened by hunger and without shelter.

Fighting in recent weeks contributed to a drastic cut in food deliveries — less than half of the 9,000 tons a week needed to care for all of Bosnia's needy.

"It seems that for every step forward we are forced to take two steps back," said Fabrizio Hochschild, who coordinates most of the U.N. agency's land-routed aid from the Croatian port of Split.

Aileen Robertson, a nutritionist with the World Health Organization, said field surveys indicate that the average Bosnian has lost 8 percent to 10 percent of his body weight since the war began in April.

"If this trend continues, the (weakened) population will become increasingly susceptible to disease" and epidemics, particularly in crowded refugee centers, she said.

The arrival of winter will make conditions even more desperate because people need more calories when it is cold, Ms. Robertson said. She said tens of thousands were at risk in isolated areas where the fighting has cut them off from aid.

But even getting aid to Sarajevo and other parts of central Bosnia considered approachable can be a nightmarish task.

"We have to go down goat paths with semi-trailers," said Norwegian convoy leader Hans Wendelbo, as his men loaded their trucks at the U.N. refugee agency's main warehouse at Metkovic, a Croatian town 70 miles south of Travnik and normally less than three hours away by car.

Now that drive sometimes takes more than two days. Wendelbo, a political scientist, and his drivers — a cook, two soldiers, a civil defense worker, an oil-rig specialist and a farmer — spoke of sometimes hairy experiences slowing them down.

One trip on the "goat path" — a tortuous seven-mile dirt road between Tomislavgrad and Jablanice — took nine hours because of traffic snarled by approaching local truckers on a road often barely wide enough for one-way traffic.

Bandits ambush food convoy

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Bandits ambushed a relief convoy in Somalia, but guards and a security force organized by townspeople angered by looting fought back and saved most of the American grain, an aid official said Thursday.

At least four people were killed in the ambush Wednesday, said Rick Grant, the spokesman for CARE International in Somalia's capital, Mogadishu.

All but one of the escaping trucks turned back and did not make it to Baidoa, one of the southern Somali towns hit hardest by famine.

"It's absolutely heartbreaking," Grant said.

Efforts to aid the victims of drought and civil war in Somalia have been repeatedly thwarted by marauding gunmen. Tons of food fill warehouses in Mogadishu while thousands starve in rural areas, because it is not safe for aid workers to make deliveries.

"We simply can't get the food out," said Grant, who is from Toronto.

By U.N. estimate, at least 300,000 people have died in Somalia's famine, one of the worst on record.

Speaking by satellite telephone, Grant said it appeared four of the Somalis hired by CARE as guards and drivers for the 34-truck convoy were killed and five wounded. He said there were unconfirmed reports from Baidoa putting the death toll on both sides between 15 and 40.

It was not known where the bandits came from, but aid workers told reporters earlier this week that about 200 militiamen loyal to one of Somalia's chief warlords, Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid, recently entered the area.

Women take over building for shelter

ZARAGOZA, Mexico (AP) — Women from farming communities have taken over an abandoned customs building and informed Mexico's president that they plan to make the structure the area's first women's shelter.

The international bridge that once led to the building is gone, along with the building's windows and doors. The building is tucked beneath a new international bridge.

Griselda Rodriquez, the daughter of a Juarez valley farmer, and other women hope to replace the missing fixtures and staff the building with paid and volunteer lawyers, psychologists and social workers.

The shelter, dubbed the Mexican Ministry for Women, would help low-income women who have been abused.

Memorial says we'll remember warriors

That was a particularly fitting Veterans Day observance held in Midland on Wednesday, as various civic leaders — some of them also veterans who had experienced the horrors of war — took turns reading the names of 203 soldiers from the Permian Basin who were either killed or listed as missing in action in the Vietnam War.

It was fitting not only in the respect that Veterans Day this year coincided with the 10th anniversary of the opening of the Vietnam War Memorial in Washington, D.C., but also that it fell during the local campaign to raise money for construction of the Permian Basin Vietnam Veteran's Memorial. In that sense, the ceremony was a kind of welcome home for those veterans of the Vietnam War from this region.

John Philbeck, president of the memorial committee, said it best when he observed that, "It means thanks for what you did. . . We are deeply in debt to you and we have not confused the warriors with the war."

The drive for contributions from Permian Basin residents to build the memorial, tentatively scheduled for opening ceremonies next Veterans Day, is a worthwhile one. The Vietnam War was an extremely divisive one that created conflict at home in the United States while our fighting men were in Southeast Asia embroiled in a bloody, confusing, and despised "politicians' war." As a result of the divisiveness, many Americans did confuse the warriors with the war, and returning veterans were not greeted with parades and fanfare. In fact, in many cases they were verbally assaulted for their involvement in the war. That was a tragic mistake. Many of those young men did not want to serve because they did not agree with the war, but they recognized their duty to country and took up arms anyway. Many of them never returned to face the wrath of their countrymen. In the Permian Basin, 203 were in that sad category.

Of course, Veterans Day is observed to honor all those who have served in the armed services of this country — not just those from a single war. Americans have every right to be proud of all those who fight for their nation and to honor all those who lay down their lives for this country.

The Permian Basin Vietnam Veteran's Memorial will be our pledge to never confuse the warriors with the war again.

School financing system needs Legislative change

Because this was an election year, the Texas Legislature and state leaders wasted too much time before tackling the job the state Supreme Court ordered them to finish by next June 1. That is reform the state public school financing system in a constitutional way.

The special session should submit a constitutional amendment or perhaps alternative amendments from which voters could choose. The goal would be to make possible a statutory solution to the equalization problem that has caused the courts to overturn three school-funding laws.

It is clear that constitutional changes are needed, since no other solutions seem politically feasible.

There is much to debate about the three top officials' (Gov. Ann Richards, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and House Speaker Gib Lewis) proposed statute and proposed state funding. But that could wait, if necessary, until the regular legislative session in January.

In this special session, lawmakers should concentrate first on mustering the two-thirds votes required to submit constitutional changes. They should take action on this no later than Nov. 21 so the changes can be considered by voters on the Jan. 16 statutory election date.

(On provisions of the Fair Share plan) Subject to slight amendments, perhaps — in the equity standard, for instance — these are provisions the legislators and voters should approve. They are necessary ingredients of any plan likely to win approval of the Legislature and satisfy the courts.

The details of state fund distribution and the adequacy of funding are more debatable items. But they should be argued after voter approval has been obtained for the necessary constitutional changes.

So submit these changes quickly, lawmakers.

EC, U.S. need to avoid getting into trade war

After four years of patiently working to liberalize world trade, it is a bitter irony that part of President Bush's legacy might be a trade war with Europe.

The U.S. government took a well-deserved but potentially costly shot at irrational European Community farm policies last week, announcing tariffs to be levied in 30 days on a variety of European farm products in response to illegal subsidies by the EC that hurt U.S. farmers.

Europeans might retaliate with punitive tariffs on their own, and so the war could spiral on, truly damaging worldwide economic growth at a time when all Western countries are suffering the economic blahs.

European leaders can help their consumers and their economies by keeping cool heads and refraining from retaliation. The United States should be ready to offer a face-saving out to nip this trade war in the bud.

'92 campaign would flop on Broadway

WASHINGTON — If the 1992 political campaign were on Broadway, it would have closed after opening night. The U.S. Constitution, however, required us to sit through it until the bitter end.

The plot and performance of the actors and actresses in this national drama ranged from the sublime to the ridiculous, punctuated by doublespeak and distortion. It was long on pathos and short on pageantry.

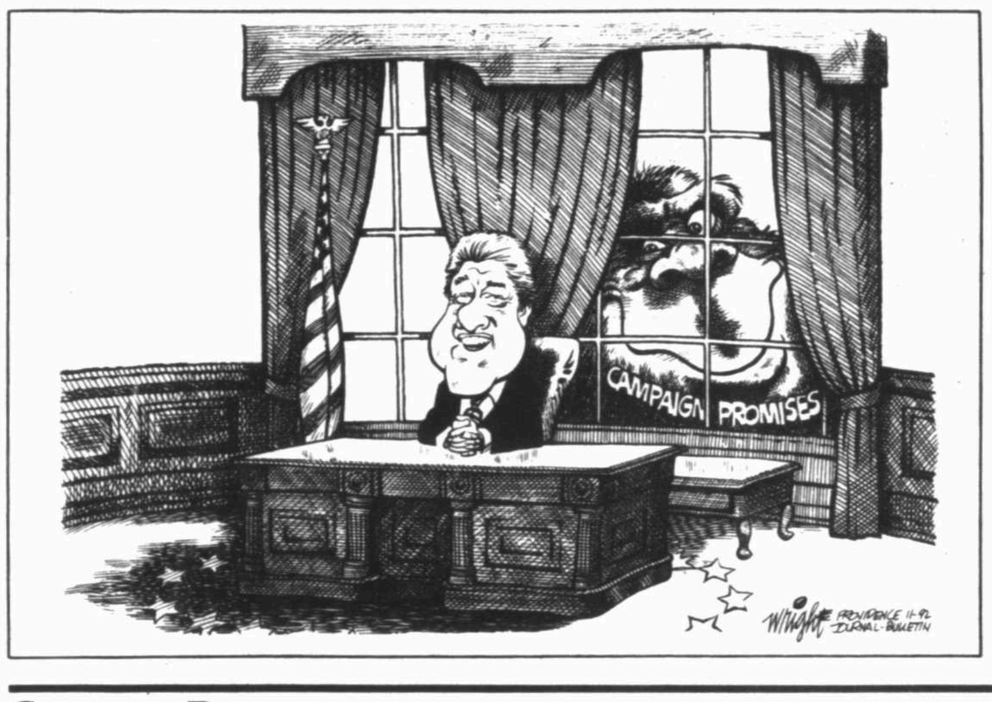
But rather than tar all of the candidates with the same brush, we've singled out some of the most egregious examples of absurdity.

FAMILY VALUES: If there was one narrative that animated the election, it was the mantra "family values." In fact, sometimes it was unclear whether Republicans sought the presidency or the priesthood.

Attorney General William P. Barr, the nation's top law enforcement officer, even took to the pulpit to pillory movie director Woody Allen's sex life. In a speech to a Roman Catholic group last month, Barr took Dan Quayle's sniper attacks against Hollywood a step further. Barr said that Allen's explanation of his affair with Mia Farrow's adopted daughter was a graphic illustration of the rampant permissiveness that he said is weakening the country's moral fiber.

If so, then Barr wins honorable mention because — as long as we're speaking of moral fiber — he's currently embroiled in the Iraqgate cover-up scandal.

BACK-STABBING: Sen. Fritz Hollings, D-S.C., eked out re-election after a robust Republican challenge. In an act of senatorial courtesy, South Carolina's Republican Sen. Strom Thurmond declined last summer to campaign for Hollings' foe, Tommy Hartnett, explaining that he had to stay on friendly terms with his Senate colleague.



Hollings, however, was not as courteous. He told reporters that he expects Thurmond to stay in the Senate until he dies. "He's the cock of the walk," Hollings said. "He's got a chauffeur . . . and a car. He'd be totally lost if he got out at his age."

If Thurmond retired, Hollings said, the 90-year-old senator would not "have a home, a hometown, and would quickly discover he doesn't have any real friends."

CHUTZPA: Rep. James P. Moran Jr., D-Va., disclosed that he twice tried marijuana as a young man, no great revelation in itself. But his disclosure came less than a day after he smeared his Republican challenger for using pot and cocaine as a teen-ager. Moran made a distinction between himself and Kyle E. McSlarrow, saying that cocaine is a more serious narcotic. Trying to put out the fire, Moran later explained: "In the first place, it wasn't as a teen-ager, but I'm not going to get into that, because it shouldn't be a major issue in this campaign." By the time this flap had subsided, there was no doubt that Moran — unlike President-elect Clinton, had actually inhaled.

IMPERSONATING AN OUTSIDER: It seems like everyone running this year ran with the moniker of the "outsider." Two decades after serving as a middleman for two convicted Watergate burglars in the days immediately following the break-in, Republican Bob Bennett ran successfully for the Senate in Utah on a vow to turn "politics as usual" on its head.

THE EMPTY DRESS: The Year of the Woman — enough is enough. After this election, there are as many "empty suits" in Washington as there are "empty dresses." Just to prove that female politicians can be every bit as phony as their male counterparts, consider the example of Democrat Lynn H. Yeakel, who lost narrowly to Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa. Yeakel branded Specter a "waffler" during a waffle breakfast at a restaurant. When she was asked by reporters to detail his waffling, she replied, "I think — let's see. Hang on a minute — let me think about that — do you mind? Just for a second."

Bush's presidential defeat is his own fault

George Bush has only himself to blame for losing the election. A weak economy helped evict him from office, but primarily it was his lack of response to the bad economy that did him in.

Poor Bush never got it. The final days found him insisting there was no recession. That says a lot about Bush. To Bush, the economy was the statistics. If the Department of Commerce statistics said things were better, to Bush they were better. That's because he himself was totally insulated from the economy and has been since the day he was born.

Reese

Of course the rest of us judge the economy by our experiences and by the experiences of our family, friends, and community. But Bush had no community. He had no hometown. He was either in the White House, at Camp David, or in Kennebunkport. His friends and family were all similarly insulated from the economy by virtue of wealth and position.

A second factor is that Bush really is an empty suit, a man with no convictions, no philosophy, no vision, no real interest in governance. He had the born aristocrat's vague feeling that he ought to be in charge of something because of who he is, but once in charge, there was really nothing he wanted to do all that much.

That's how a man goes from 90 point approval rating in the spring of 1991 to defeat in the autumn of 1992. When he had all that political capital, there was nothing in particular he wanted to spend it on. And he didn't. And, like political capital always does when it isn't used, it dissipated.

Even Bush admitted inadvertently he had no record, because he spent the entire campaign attacking his opponent. He wasn't even smart about it. It was not smart for a man who broke his own promise not to raise taxes, who has a lifetime career of flip-flopping on issues, to adopt as a campaign theme, "Trust me." Bush's strong point was experience, not trustworthiness.

Finally, Bush did what all Rockefeller Wing Republicans have always done — betray their conservative base and foolishly hope they can compete with liberals. They can't. If I'm going to get big government anyway, I'd rather get it from people who actually believe government ought to benefit as many people as possible rather than benefit a small elite. If I'm going to get stuck with heavy government regulations anyway, then I'd rather they apply as well to the big businesses. If I'm going to get tax increases anyway, then I'd rather they be reasonably fair. If I'm going to get deficits anyway, then I'd rather the borrowed money be spent on American kids rather than on subsidizing big business.

In other words, as soon as Republicans abandon conservative positions, there's no reason to vote for them.

One time too often, Bush and Jim Baker, the cynical twins, thought that conservatives — told to go to hell in between elections — would choose a Republican over a Democrat anyway. Not this time, baby. You cynical, say-anything-but-mean-nothing-do-nothing-transnational-Wall-Street-lapd ogs are outta there and hooray for that. Don't forget to take Dick Darman and Nick Brady and the rest of that awful crowd with you. Don't bother to turn off the light when you leave.

Bush has three things to show for his presidency: lost American jobs, lost opportunities, and dead Iraqis. Nothing to be proud of.

Americans had the good sense to see that Bill Clinton, whatever his faults, is the better choice for president. Clinton at least still believes in the idea of progress and in the idea that government can be made to work for the benefit of the people.

He will be a far better president than Bush was capable of being.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Conservatives should find one like Reagan

When he coached the Texas Longhorns, Darrell K. Royal, a conservative's conservative, allowed before one bowl game that his team, tactically speaking, would "dance with who brung us." No trick stuff, just the fundamentals that underlay past triumphs.

If Republicans finally can remember who brung 'em — and if their two-step isn't too rusty — Bill Clinton four years hence could be in for his first taste of the private sector.

Murchison

Conservatives and right-leaning moderates, who carried the Republicans to the top under Ronald Reagan, helped cast them to the depths under George Bush. Bush wouldn't dance with them. Many turned sullenly to Ross Perot. Clinton recaptured "Reagan Democrats" by the freight-car load. To vote for Bush, numerous conservatives discovered they needed two hands — one for ballot-punching, the other for nose-holding.

Bush, throughout his presidency, seemed not to realize who had brung him. He kept scanning the dance floor for new partners. Budget director Dick Darman, who convinced the president to welsh on his no-tax pledge, comes disagreeably to mind.

But this is scarcely the moment to beat up on George Bush. This is the time to start foraging about for a conservative standard bearer in 1996. "Moderates," centrists, progressives — none of these will do.

Forget it. Find somebody as nearly like Reagan as possible. The hottest prospect currently is Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp. Kemp, the former Buffalo Bills quarterback and supply-side congressman, has a lively intelligence and a better-than-average grasp of free-market principles. He is best known these days for promoting economic opportunity through support of enterprise zones and tenant-owned housing.

Pat Buchanan may or may not hit the comeback trail in '96. I sense that Pat is regarded more as a symbol of protest than as a serious contender for the presidency, but he speaks honest truths eloquently, and my car bumper still sports his sticker.

William Bennett, the former drug czar and education secretary, would reportedly love to be president, but Bennett, like Buchanan, has never held elective office and is regarded by some conservatives as a self-promoter.

Dan Quayle, a smart and principled man, inspired conservatives for more than George Bush did, although the Nov. 3 debacle hurt him. His personal popularity ratings, thanks to the media, are undeservedly low.

Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas? Gramm has been sitting out the ideological wars lately. Conservatives are starting to wonder whether he is still one of them. Just thought I'd mention it, Phil.

If we are unsure who conservatives need, it's clear what they don't need — fratricide. For instance, they don't need but have Kempites (economic conservatives) bashing Buchananites (social conservatives). Both men bring vital perspectives to the debate. Kemp says the poor — witness Los Angeles — need more economic opportunity. Buchanan — witness Los Angeles — says we need more prisons. Both are right. It's stupid to ask which are you for — family values or lower taxes and deregulation? Intelligent people are for both. Prissy progressive types waste time maundering about The Rise of the Christian Right, as orchestrated by Pat Robertson and exemplified supposedly in the supposed debacle of the Republican National Convention. Better the Christian right any day than the pagan left.

Nor need abortion sunder social and economic conservatives. A responsible conservative position is: strike down Roe vs. Wade — a judicial abortion if ever there was one — then let the states, as before 1973, thrash out abortion policy. If this angers Republican feminists, too bad. These nice ladies seem not to care who ruins the economy, so long as he lets women control their bodies.

I didn't say patching up the conservative coalition would be easy, I said it was essential — and a winning proposition to boot. Ronald Reagan, conservative, could have walloped Bill Clinton, centrist liberal. What a shame he didn't have the chance!

Threat to Endangered Species Act eases with Clinton

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — With Bill Clinton on his way to the White House, the Endangered Species Act seems to be on safer ground — and that's good news for the Snake River sockeye salmon, not to mention the rare Furbish Lousewort.

The 20-year-old law, which protects more than 600 rare species of plants, fish and wildlife, has been under intense attack from the Bush administration, especially as it applies to the northern spotted owl.

The White House has been intent on trying "to substantially gut" the law, said William Stelle Jr., a staff worker of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. He and most environmentalists believe the assault will stop under Clinton.

Environmentalists say a significant weakening of the law by considering economic effects, as Bush has urged, could threaten some species already under its protection — such as the Snake River sockeye, listed last year. The Furbish Lousewort, an herbal plant found in Maine, has been considered endangered for more than a dozen years.

Stelle and environmental leaders believe there will still be a contentious congressional debate next year over the law, especially as it applies to the northern spotted owl, whose survival has threatened thousands of logging jobs in the Northwest.

But the law's detractors will have lost one of their strongest allies in Bush.

"A Clinton administration is going to come in and basically say the act is okay and so let's not get bogged down in major changes," predicted Sharon Newsome, vice president for resource conservation at the National Wildlife Federation.

With the defeat of Bush "a long and bruising fight" has been averted, she said.

Bush has made no secret that he intended next year to push vigorously for changes in the law, which he feels is too heavily weighted toward protecting plants and wildlife at the expense of people.

'A Clinton administration is going to come in and basically say the act is OK and so let's not get bogged down in major changes.'

— Sharon Newsome, vice president, National Wildlife Federation

"The law is broken. It must be fixed," Bush proclaimed in the final weeks before the Nov. 3 election as he campaigned in Oregon. "It's time to make people more important than owls."

At the Interior Department, planners had already begun crafting legislative proposals to require that economic considerations such as job losses be given more prominence when a decision is made whether to protect a plant or animal.

Environmentalists argue that the law already allows for economic issues to be raised as part of an appeals process added in 1977. That year Congress created a special appeals committee, which can sidestep the law if certain public interest concerns are demonstrated.

During the campaign, Clinton sided with environmentalists.

"Science should be the sole criteria in determining whether species should be listed as endangered," he told the League of Conservation Voters.

On a visit to Oregon, Clinton promised a "forest summit" early in his presidency in hopes of working out agreements and programs to ease some of the impact of the spotted owl protection plan on loggers while still protecting the owl.

The listing of the spotted owl as endangered in 1990 produced the clearest case yet of economics and jobs colliding head-on with the desire to preserve the environment, in this case the historic old-growth forests of the Northwest.

The Interior Department under Clinton is almost certain to be more friendly toward the species-protection law than it has been under Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan.

While Clinton has yet to name any of his Cabinet, several people rumored to be likely choices to replace Lujan are Colorado Sen. Timothy Wirth and former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, both strong supporters of the law and ardent environmentalists.

In contrast, Lujan repeatedly has called for the law to be changed and complained bitterly that he was hamstrung in the spotted owl case because the law allowed only biological and scientific issues to be considered in deciding whether a species should be protected.

Gay sailor reclaims job under court order

MOFFETT NAVAL AIR STATION, Calif. (AP) — Keith Meinhold, kicked out of the Navy after revealing he was gay, reclaimed his job as a sonar instructor Thursday under court order.

"This is the day I've looked forward to," Meinhold said as he walked onto the military base with his uniform in a paper bag.

"I'll be proud and honored to wear the uniform of my country again."

The 30-year-old petty officer's reinstatement wasn't the first time the military has been forced to take back an openly gay soldier. However, after a judge renewed a reinstatement order this week for Meinhold, President-elect Clinton announced plans to end the military's half-century ban on homosexuals.

"Part of the reason this case is so important is because of the attention it has generated, and because of the political climate in which it has arisen," said Benjamin Schatz, a lawyer for the American Association of Physicians for Human Rights, a San Francisco-based gay-rights group.

Meinhold was honorably discharged in August after going on national television and saying he was gay. He said Thursday many of his former superiors and coworkers at Moffett knew for several years he was homosexual.

Dozens of reporters surrounded Meinhold as he entered Moffett, 40 miles south of San Francisco.

"I have had wonderful support from people from all walks of life — this has been very empowering," said Moffett, from Palo Alto.

Moffett spokesman John Shackleton said Meinhold's duties with Patrol Squadron 31 will be the same as before he was discharged.

The military's rationale for excluding homosexuals is the same one used earlier by the military to exclude blacks, Schatz said. President Truman revoked the ban prohibiting blacks from being integrated into the military in 1948.

The Pentagon said homosexuality undermines discipline and morale. The ban has led to dismissal of an average 1,500 military personnel a year.

Opposition to reversing the policy has come from deep within the military, retired soldiers and even Clinton advisers.

Two of the Pentagon's most senior officers — Gen. Colin Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Gen. Gordon Sullivan, the chief of staff of the Army — have repeatedly declared their opposition to any change in the policy. Both are expected to continue in service under Clinton.

Last week, U.S. District Judge Terry J. Hatter Jr. of Los Angeles ordered the Navy to take Meinhold back pending resolution of his lawsuit challenging the ban.

Study: America ignores safe sex, millions risk AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are not practicing "safe sex," leaving millions at risk of infection by the AIDS virus, according to authors of the largest national sexual survey in more than 40 years.

The survey results, to be published Friday in the journal Science, indicate that heterosexual Americans are not taking seriously the risk of AIDS and that the vast majority with multiple partners are engaging in sexual intercourse without condoms.

AIDS has been most prevalent in the United States among homosexuals and intravenous drug users. But Joseph Catania, a University of California, San Francisco researcher and an author of the study, said that with so many people not using condoms or other protection, "it is just a matter of time before it will spread widely into the heterosexual community."

For the survey, more than 10,000 Americans were questioned by telephone about their sexual practices. Respondents were selected by a random digit dialing system and represented people between the ages of 18 and 75, married and single, living in major cities and in rural areas.

"This is the first of a kind," Catania said, because it concentrated on behavior related to the risk of sexually transmitted diseases, such as AIDS. He said it was the first large scale survey on human sexuality in the U.S. since the Kinsey report in 1948.

"Kinsey asked a lot of questions we didn't ask, but the Kinsey study is not a representative sample and this one is," he said.

Among the findings:

— Seven percent of respondents said they had had multiple sex partners in the previous year. Ten percent of those with added AIDS risk factors said they had had multiple partners.

Respondents considered at high AIDS risk were those with multiple sex partners, those with a high risk primary partner, intravenous drug users, blood transfusion recipients and hemophiliacs.

— Among those with multiple sex partners, 17 percent used condoms all of the time.

Epifanio Galindo pushes freshly packaged bales of cotton onto a truck at Midland Co-op Gin.

Cotton farmers yield better crop

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

Cotton farmers' payoff for a year's toil of deep plowing, discing, listing, planting, knifing, hoeing, cultivating, harvesting and praying comes to fruition at cotton-ginning time.

The screaming, churning and whistling mechanized gins of tin and steel are turning out 500-pound bales of lint — cotton after it has been cleaned, dried, cleaned again, ginned, and packaged for warehousing and selling to textile mills here and abroad.

"The cotton is grading better this year — good, white cotton," said Charlie Wright, general manager of the Midland Farmers Cooperative, where the gin is laboring 24 hours a day and turning out up to 18 bales an hour.

The co-op gin, which is the only cotton gin in Midland County, may process about 15,000 bales this season, Wright said.

The yield will be better than last year's 11,000-bale crop, which was hampered by prolonged wet weather. But it won't be the bumper crops of 1979 and 1989, when the yield for each of those years was in the neighborhood of 22,000 to 23,000 bales.

In those years, the timing was almost perfect for rains at planting time, rains during the growing season, and warm-to-hot weather in the maturing and harvesting times.

"Good planting rain and moisture (during the growing season) is about all you can ask for," Wright said.

For their efforts, some Midland farmers recently got 61 cents a pound for their lint. Depending on farming practices, that may be a break-even price, profit-making price, or a net-loss price.

Unlike much of the cotton-growing season, the farmers are not hoping for rain now — harvest time. "But it sure would make things a lot less dusty," Wright said.

Southeast of Midland in the Midkiff community, the Midkiff Farmers Cooperative cotton gin is running "fast and furious," said Rocky King, the co-op's general manager.

"We've ginned about 12,000 bales and have got a bunch left," said King, who expects to gin between 25,000 and 30,000 bales before he shuts the gin down for annual repairs at year's end.

His most recent high-yield ginning season came in the 1989 crop, when he ginned 28,000 bales. "We just had a good growing season" that year.

King said the quality of this year's cotton — the staple, the whiteness, the strength — is good. "It's the highest quality we've had for the last 12 years," he said.

The Midkiff gin processes cotton from Glasscock, Midland, Upton and Reagan counties.

"It's real clean," King said. The average yield is 1½ bales to the acre.

Despite some replanting due to damaging hail in late May and early June after the first planting, the crop is doing well.

King said the 61-cent-a-pound price is "about break-even for us" in the Midkiff area, where most of the cotton is irrigated. Most of the Midland-area crop is dryland cotton.

"With a little better yield, hopefully everybody will pay out," King said.

South of Lubbock, well within the South Plains of Texas, cotton is faring well, said Don Johnson, executive vice president of the Lubbock-based Plains Cotton Growers Inc.

"Considering the start we had and the problems we had going back to last year and the lateness of the crop this year, we're real pleased with the way it's turning out," Johnson said. "I think we'll have a much better crop than most of us had anticipated as late as August of this year."

Although farmers "never get an ideal situation," farmers south of Lubbock and well into the Lamesa and Midland areas and over to Big Spring and Seminole are "going to end up with a pretty good crop," he said.

The 1992 yield for that southern region is estimated at about 1.4 million bales. The average yield is about 2 million bales.

But north of Lubbock and into the Texas Panhandle, the yield is dismal.

Cotton production is down from 700,000 bales in 1991 to about 90,000 bales in 1992 because of unseasonably heavy rains that damaged young crops, Johnson said. Many farmers replanted in grain crops.

For those farmers who do have cotton to sell, the U.S. markets project good news: a healthy demand for lint by the textile mills. The domestic demand for natural fibers, such as cotton, wool, and mohair, for clothing is on the upswing.

But the downside of the good news is on the worldwide market, which is experiencing a cotton glut. China, Russia and Pakistan are contributing heavily to the overproduction of cotton.

"The use of cotton is the highest it has been in the U.S. for years," Johnson said. "The domestic consumption is real good. The world market is what is hurting the price. China, Russia and Pakistan jumped on the band wagon. Imports are killing us. We're in a world-market situation. There's not much way around that."

Sides prepare for MC lawsuit on redistricting

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Local minorities want a voice in selecting Midland College board trustees and are prepared to fight the issue in court, according to San Antonio attorney Rolando Rios.

Rios, the attorney representing local black and Hispanic organizations, was in Midland Thursday meeting with prospective witnesses and preparing to go to trial.

"Midland College is willing to go to court before it lets minorities elect candidates of their choice," Rios said.

But MC officials had a different view.

"We have a track record of always having minority representatives on the board," said MC Board President William Kleine.

Midland County LULAC (League of United Latin American Citizens), and the umbrella organization for several black and Hispanic groups, FOCUS (Federation of Citizens United to Serve) filed a lawsuit against MC trustees in June.

The minority organizations have filed the lawsuit to force the college to change its at-large system to one of single-member districts.

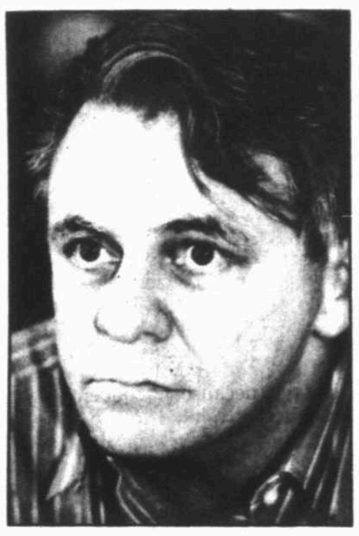
Kleine said the MC board was unanimous in its decision to keep the at-large system. The board has retained the Austin law firm of Bickerstaff, Heath & Smiley to represent it in contesting the lawsuit.

Trustees and MC administrators have contended that the college's board has always been multiracial, with one Hispanic, one black, and seven Anglos serving.

"Yes, but how are those minorities picked to serve on the board?" asked Isabel Jimenez, past president of the local chapter of LULAC.

"Almost all minorities on the board have been appointed by the almost all-Anglo board. No minority on that board has ever been selected or elected by minorities to represent them," she said. "We are asking for the right to select our representatives, not to be told who to elect."

In the college board's 20-year history, four of the five blacks and Hispanics serving were initially appointed by the board. William Howard, a black now on the board, is the exception. All of those appointed also have been later elected to the board, and some re-elected. Some faced opposition and some have run unopposed.



Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Attorney Rolando Rios

"Why is Midland College prepared to go to the length of spending maybe half a million dollars to fight this? Is this institutionalized racism?" Rios said.

But Kleine said, "We are representative. Anyone who wants to run (for MC trustee) can run whenever they want to run."

Kleine said the board is confident in its decision to contest the lawsuit to remain an at-large entity. "We think we are in a good position," he said.

College administrators have said they are attempting to be responsive to the needs of residents in sections of Midland with heavy minority populations. The college recently opened a satellite center in south Midland to offer college courses to persons who might not have transportation to the campus.

"That satellite was developed after the lawsuit was filed," Ms. Jimenez noted. "And members of the minority community have said that they want to go to the college campus. We want to go where the library and labs are. We would rather see a van available to pick up and drop off people about four times a day."

Ms. Jimenez said the satellite duplicates services such as adult basic education courses already offered by Casa de Amigos.

"Minorities who want to attend college want full access to the college," she said. "Scholarships to help pay for tuition and books would be a better use of money for minorities. So many people

Odessa strip clubs' lawsuit claims police harassment

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

Two Odessa strip clubs — claiming law enforcement officials are acting illegally — filed a federal lawsuit Thursday seeking relief from a recent crackdown by authorities.

"We have a classic case of police harassment ... The harassment arises where the conduct of the police officers and government entities amount to bad faith" arrests and prosecutions, said Gerald Hopkins, a Houston attorney.

The Crazy Horse Saloon, a topless club, and The Red Slipper, a totally nude bar, claim violation of 14th and First Amendment rights, Hopkins said.

Since the crackdown began on Oct. 20, there have been 53 arrests at various clubs: 40 arrests for public lewdness, three for public lewdness and prostitution, two for promotion of prostitution, six for public intoxication and two for disorderly conduct, police said. Most were women.

"I don't mind them coming in and doing their job legally. It's when they cross the line and do it illegally," said Tom Mamiya, general manager of the Crazy Horse Saloon.

"We had to file this lawsuit because law enforcement was going too far," he added.

The lawsuit describes specific arrests, including an Oct. 29 undercover operation by officers posing as a bachelor's party at The Red Slipper, which does not serve alcohol.

The officers "were themselves engaging in criminal activity, to wit, public lewdness, prostitution, public intoxication, serving alcohol to minors, and theft," the lawsuit states.

The officers drank two cases of beer and gave drinks to two girls under 18 years of age, the lawsuit claims.

"Some of the officers became highly intoxicated and repeatedly grabbed the girl's legs, thighs, breasts, buttocks and genitals ... Some officers repeatedly solicited sex for hire. ... All girls refused," the lawsuit states.

After identifying themselves as officers, one officer removed $150 in cash from a register at the manager's objection, the lawsuit maintains.

Eight women were arrested for public lewdness and/or prostitution.

"You (the police) are arresting people for exactly what you (the police) are doing," Hopkins said. "They (police) were doing exactly what the statute says public lewdness is."

And the women were not, he said.

Public lewdness laws state the offense must involve an act of sexual intercourse, deviate sexual intercourse, sexual contact, or certain acts with an animal or fowl.

Sexual contact is defined by the law as "touching of the anus, breast, or any part of the genitals of another person with intent to arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person."

The lawsuit included affidavits by dancers stating that officers had grabbed the women without consent.

Any contact by dancers does not constitute sexual contact, Hopkins said.

"Touching him (a customer) on the shoulder is not against the law," he said.

As for allegations of prostitution, the officers were guilty of soliciting prostitution by offering the women money for sexual gratification, Hopkins said.

Because of the crackdown, some of the clubs may be forced to close becaus of a substantial drop in income, the lawsuit states.

Mamiya said business at the Crazy Horse Saloon is down more than half since the crackdown began at the onset of the Permian

City's sales tax rebates are up

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

Sales tax payments to the city this month increased compared to last November as did year-to-date totals, according to recently released figures from State Comptroller John Sharp.

County sales tax rebates also took an upward turn from the same month last year, although year-to-date comparisons remain down.

The November payments are taxes collected on September sales that are reported to the comptroller in October by businesses filing monthly returns. Sales taxes are reported to the comptroller on a monthly, quarterly or annual basis.

The city received a payment of $1,013,250 this month, a 5.73 percent increase from the $958,374 paid in November 1991.

Year to date, the city has collected $8,444,445 or 2.04 percent more than the $8,275,283 collected in the same period last year.

Meanwhile, the county received a payment of $513,611 this month, which is a 3.35 percent increase from the $496,947 paid in November last year.

So far year to date, the county has collected $4,727,580, a 3.18 percent decrease from the $4,883,046 collected in the same period in 1991.

Statewide, a total of $162.2 million in sales tax payments were dispersed this month to 1,068 cities and 106 counties. That figure shows a 5.8 percent increase from payments a year ago.

Broken down, the cities received $147.8 million, a 7.7 percent increase from the $137.2 million paid out in November 1991. Counties were given $14.3 million in payments, a 10.5 percent decrease from the $16 million paid the same month last year.

KMB urges planting live Christrmas trees

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff writer

A local civic group hopes to help keep Midland beautiful this Christmas season by encouraging citizens to plant live Christmas trees and recycle pre-cut trees.

The campaign, which Keep Midland Beautiful started last holiday season, is an attempt to promote preservation of the environment by reducing landfill waste.

Two years ago, discarded Christmas trees took up 400 cubic yards of space in the city's landfill. With the cost of digging one landfill pit expected to rise next year to $1,250,000, city officials say they can't afford to use the space.

Susie Foy, KMB administrative assistant, said the city will provide two facilities for mulching, a chopping process making the tree suitable for fertilizer. Discarded trees can be dropped off for two weeks after Christmas at Hogan Park or Wild River Canyon, 5200 Princeton, to be mulched.

"We want to raise the awareness and let people know they have these options," Ms. Foy said. "It can really help make a difference."

In conjunction with the event, Keep Midland Beautiful will sponsor entertainment from Dec. 7 to Dec. 12 to promote their cause. All of the activities are to be held at Centennial Plaza; live Christmas trees will be donated by local nurseries.

Monday, Dec. 7, will be Tejano night, featuring Ballet Folklorico and Pancho Claus. Tuesday, Dec. 8, will be Karaoke night, featuring pre-recorded Christmas music where the audience sings along, providing their own entertainment. On Wednesday, Dec. 9, events include seven groups, including children's choirs, senior citizen choirs and ballet groups.

Radio stations KCDQ-102 and KGEE 100 will broadcast live on Thursday and Friday, rspectively.

KMB and the city is sponsoring the entertainment.

Man found dead in road

ODESSA — The Odessa Police Department is still investigating the death of an Odessa man who died Wednesday as the result of a possible hit-and-run accident.

According to a police report, the Odessa Fire Department received a call about a person lying in the roadway in the 2500 block of E. 8th Street. An ambulance responded at 11:38 p.m. and, upon arrival, found a male in the westbond left lane. Paramedics were unable to detect any signs of life, according to reports.

The Police Department was notified and officers went to the scene. Preliminary investigation indicated that the man was a victim of a hit-and-run accident. The fatality investigation team was called and assumed the investigation.

The man, identified as 37-year-old Marvin Wright Jr., was pronounced dead at about 1:10 a.m. by Justice of the Peace Dennis Bright. He ordered an autopsy, which was expected to be performed Thursday by Ector County Medical Examiner Dr. Sparks Veasey.

MC: College says it will fight redistricting lawsuit would like to go to college who can't afford it or don't have the transportation."

Rios said he filed a redistricting lawsuit against Odessa College that resulted in single-member districts. The nine-member OC board voluntarily changed from an all at-large system to all single-member districts last spring.

"The college went into redistricting together with Ector County Independent School District and the hospital board," said OC spokeswoman Susan Hammons.

"We have seven single-member districts set up like ECISD and two super districts, where the representatives divide the county and each cover half," she said. "The super districts overlap all the other districts."

"I don't see what the college has against single-member districts," Rios said. "Midland Independent School District changed to single-member districts and the sky hasn't fallen."

In 1986, MISD lost a lawsuit forcing single-member districts. A 1984 lawsuit at the city level resulted in the present system of 4-2-1 — or four members elected from districts, two at-large members and one mayor elected at large.

The Midland County Hospital District elects all its board members from individual districts.

"The (MISD) school board shows that single-member districts work. We have good representation on the school board and minorities are included on decision-making committees," Ms. Jimenez said.

"I don't see why the college wants to spend all this money when education resources are so limited," Rios said. "We have offered to try and settle this out of court, but Midland College has no interest. The city of Dallas just spent $4.2 million to lose a districting suit."

College representatives said they were unsure of what it would cost the college to fight the lawsuit, tentatively scheduled for a January court date.

MC President David E. Daniel said the legal fees would be paid from the college's operating funds. "If they are not sufficient, then it will be the board's decision to take money from the college reserves," he said.

Bob Phillips, MC vice president of business services, said legal fees are not a budgeted item. "There will have to be some transferring of funds and shifting around to get it into operating funds," he said. Phillips said the college had "a little more than $3 million in reserves."

Rios has credited winning several redistricting lawsuits with the federal courts "finding a problem with at-large systems."

"I don't see why the college thinks they are immune or unique to letting minorities elect candidates of their choice. The Constitution is not that shallow," he said.

"The college has always had good minority representation," Kleine responded. "I don't think appointments are an issue. We have always had minorities on the board, and suddenly, after 20 years, they (plaintiffs) think there wouldn't be (representation)."

Kleine said the college's track record of being a multiracial board supports the board's position.

"With single-member districts there might be less of a chance for minorities to be elected to the board," he said.

"With single-member districts we would have better representation all over Midland," Ms. Jimenez said. "We sure wouldn't have four members of the board all living in one voting precinct like we do now. Southwest Midland isn't even represented by the board."

Minorities who have served on the MC board, according to information from the college, is as follow:

HISPANICS

■ Gloria Hinojosa — Appointed in 1973, as were all trustees when the board was formed. She was later elected a number of times. She had opponents vying for her position.

■ Charlene Romero-Wurtz — Appointed to fill Gloria Hinojosa's unexpired term Ms. Hinojosa resigned when she moved from Midland. Ms. Wurtz, who ran unopposed, was elected to the board in 1992.

BLACKS

■ Rev. Horace Doyle — Appointed in 1973 when the board was formed, as were all trustees. He was later was elected, running unopposed in the 1974 election.

■ John Cooper — Appointed by the board to fill the late Doyle's unexpired term. He was then elected several times, and has had opposition.

■ William Howard — Elected to the board in 1992, ran unopposed.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Accidents

Staff report

Two accidents on Andrews Highway Thursday evening sent three Midland residents to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center.

The first accident occurred at approximately 5:30 p.m. at the intersection of Andrews Highway and Midland Drive.

According to police, a 1984 White Pontiac Fiero, driven by 39-year-old Brenda Roberts Boyd, failed to yield the right of way as it turned out of a parking lot eastbound on Andrews Highway. The Fiero was struck on the passenger side by a 1980 Volkswagen Rabbit, driven by Monica Lynne Evans, 17. The Rabbit was headed west on Andrews Highway.

Both Ms. Boyd and Ms. Evans were treated and released at Memorial Hospital, according to reports.

In a second incident, a 1986 Nissan pickup, driven by 30-year-old Jerrold Lee Jenkins of Midland, was westbound on Andrews Highway at 6:30 p.m. A 1982 Pontiac Transam, driven by 32-year-old Steven Warren Edwards, was eastbound.

According to police, the two vehicles entered the intersection at Godfrey from opposite directions. The Transam turned left in front of the pickup and was struck.

Edwards was treated and released at Memorial Hospital. He was charged with failure to yield right of way, driving while intoxicated and driving with no insurance.

Traffic death

ODESSA — Odessa police are still investigating a two-vehicle accident that killed a New Mexico woman Thursday evening at the intersection of 8th Street and Cresent.

According to a police report, at approximately 5:17 p.m., a 1966 GMC step-side pickup was westbound in the 1400 block of 8th Street. A 1983 Chrysler Diplomat was eastbound in the 1300 block of 8th Street.

The Diplomat failed to yield the right of way and made a left turn in front of the pickup. The pickup struck the passenger side of the Diplomat.

Ruth Wandell Ellis, 64, was transported to Medical Center Hospital, where she was pronounced dead.

At press time, police did not have the names of Ms. Ellis's husband, who was driving the Diplomat, or the driver of the pickup.

STRIP: Odessa clubs file lawsuit against harassment

(From 1B)

Basin Oil Show.

"The Oil Show is (to the clubs) like Christmas is to the shopping malls," Hopkins said.

And "respectable people" are now afraid to come in because of recent arrests, Mamiya said.

Police said the crackdown is ongoing.

"They are going to continue to watch and make arrests as necessary," said Odessa police Cpl. Sherry Sparks. "If it's a continuing problem we will continue to look into it."

The enforcement effort is the result of joint task force that consists of the the Ector County Attorney's Office, Texas Attorney General's Office, Odessa Police Department, Ector County Sheriff's Office, Texas Alcohol Beverage Commission and the Permian Basin Drug Task Force, Ms. Sparks said.

Hopkins said the crackdown was an alternative to the city of Odessa's unsuccessful attempt to pass a local sexually oriented business ordinance.

"They can't get an ordinance passed so what they do is, quote, strictly enforce existing laws," Hopkins said.

The lawsuit requests a temporary restraining order to stop the crackdown pending a final judgment.

Hopkins said he expects the order to be considered by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton sometime next week.

Odessa City Attorney Joel Roberts said policy prevents comment on pending litigation.

"I can say we will file an answer that generally denies the allegations," Roberts said.

Ector County Attorney Tracey Bright did not return calls Thursday.

Named as defendants in the lawsuit are: the city of Odessa; Mayor Lorraine Perryman; City Manager Jerry McGuire; Police Chief James Jenkins; unnamed police officers; Ector County; County Attorney Tracey Bright; Sheriff Bob Brookshire; and unnamed sheriff's deputies.

In addition to the two clubs, eight women, who are or were employees of the clubs, are listed as plaintiffs in the lawsuit.

Alleged addict kills his father to get drug money, police say

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston man described as a heroin and crack cocaine addict has been charged with capital murder in the death of his father, who police say was slain so his son could get drug money.

"He needed a fix," homicide Sgt. Glen Matthews said of Ted Earl Tompkins, 42.

Tompkins was charged Wednesday in the death of his father, Jack Tompkins, 79.

The elder Tompkins was found seated in his easy chair on Saturday, apparently two days after he was slain.

Matthews said that the younger Tompkins is a heroin and crack cocaine addict with a history of drug and theft arrests.

After the killing, Matthews said Ted Tompkins was seen trying to sell a color television, a microwave oven and a .22-caliber rifle taken from his father's house.

"It's coldblooded, whether he just lost it or it was intentional. Drugs do funny things to people," he said.

The elder Tompkins died of a single wound to the back of his head from a blunt object, police said. His wallet had been emptied and was placed on his face.

Matthews said he didn't know how much money had been taken. Neither the murder weapon nor the rest of the stolen items have been found, he said.

Ted Tompkins had been released from prison a few months ago, and since then had stayed "under bridges or with relatives when they would let him," Matthews said.

Neighbor Leslie Vaughan said, "He kind of got crossed up in his life and went to jail a bunch of times."

The elder Thompkins "was a nice old man," Vaughan said. "He kind of kept to himself. He was just living out his last years. He was just sitting in his favorite chair, and he was hit from behind. I can't believe his son would do that to him. That's a real shame."

Disabled man sues 5 Austin businesses to gain access

AUSTIN (AP) — A man who uses a wheelchair has sued five Austin businesses alleging that people with physical disabilities are being denied access to doorways, restrooms, pay telephones or parking spaces.

The lawsuits, which allege violations of the Americans with Disabilities Act, were filed by Chuck Weir, an assistant city attorney in San Antonio.

Weir, who was paralyzed in a diving accident in 1982, said he filed the lawsuits last week in state district court in Travis County in an effort to force the businesses to renovate.

■ More state news/ 1D

The federal disability law required businesses with more than 26 employees to make their services accessible to people with disabilities by Jan. 26, 1992. Businesses with 10 or fewer employees must become accessible by Jan. 26, 1993.

"The ADA is a major civil rights act intended to open the doors that have been closed to disabled persons in the past," said Ginny Agnew of Austin, Weir's lawyer. "The doors need to be opened literally and figuratively to persons with disabilities, and that's the goal of these lawsuits."

The lawsuits name Blockbuster Video, Luby's Cafeteria, an Eckerd drugstore, a Coco's restaurant and Miller Blueprint Co.

Officials at Luby's, Blockbuster Videos and Coco's restaurants said they had not seen the lawsuits and declined to comment, the Austin American-Statesman reported Thursday.

Bob Miller Jr., manager of Miller Blueprint office supply and graphics store, said his store has just finished renovation plans.

He said the store missed the January deadline because "we've been trying to gather information on how to do it properly and get it done kind of all at once."

Gene Ormond, public relations director for the Jack Eckerd Corp. in Clearwater, Fla., said the company has "done a complete study of our 1,700 locations in 13 states to see which locations comply with the ADA guidelines."

If changes are required at the Eckerds in Austin, they will be made during the next scheduled renovation there, Ormond said.

Ms. Agnew and Weir said they have no plans to pursue legal steps if the five companies agree to make necessary modifications and present a reasonable work schedule.

"We want to see the buildings changed," Ms. Agnew said.

Weir said he and Ms. Agnew are preparing "a stack of lawsuits" against other Austin and San Antonio businesses that allegedly are inaccessible.

Couple finds infant's body in their yard

HOUSTON (AP) — Police Thursday were investigating of the death of a newborn girl whose body was found stuffed inside a plastic bag.

A southwest Houston couple discovered the body in the front yard of their townhome late Wednesday night, spokesman Rick Hartley said.

The infant probably was less than a day old and was wrapped in a sheet and a small baby blanket inside a plastic grocery-type bag.

Authorities did not immediately determine how the infant died, Hartley said.

Foundation donates $1 million to library

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's Ray C. Fish foundation Thursday donated $1 million to the George Bush Presidential Library Center, to be built on 90 acres at the Texas A&M University campus in College Station.

"It's the first $1 million gift we received and it's the first major gift from a Texas foundation," said Perry Adkisson, who is coordinating planning for the library.

Only private funds may be used to meet the library's $42 million price tag.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Early-morning confusion gives way to positive actions. Cement a relationship by apologizing for a mistake. Be careful not to get mired down in details.

TODAY'S CHILDREN: Despite their brave show of independence, these Scorpios need people desperately. Although they like to appear happy-go-lucky, they are actually very serious-minded. Born scholars, they will probably walk off with or a scholarship to the college of their choice. Their childhood habit of asking "Why?" carries over into adulthood. Medicine, science and theology all hold special appeal for these inquiring minds.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠

Votmai Tinkinov, the Russian emigre, considered himself an unlucky player. Other club members were of the view that he would do better if he gave some thought to the play before flying up with the first card he could lay his hands on, but there was no way to curb Votmai's impetuosity.

The modern tendency is to open one no trump with a balanced hand, even though one suit is unstopped, and the Russian was nothing if not au courant with the latest methods.

North showed a keen appreciation of the value of two aces and a six-card suit by leaping all the way to game.

West led the king of spades, and to Votmai the hand was a piece of cake. He shot up with the ace, led a club to the king and the fact that East discarded a diamond didn't phase him in the least. Only after cashing the queen and ace of clubs and finding himself forced to win the fourth club in hand did declarer realize his predicament. Two clubs withered on the table, since there was no entry to them "I should have known," muttered Votmai. "Unlucky Friday the 13th!"

Partly true, but much of South's ill fortune was of his own making. The fact that clubs might be blocked should have been considered, and preventative measures could have been taken.

Declarer should duck the first spade. Since no shift is any better, West might as well continue the suit (if West shifts, declarer can lead a second spade), and declarer should duck again. Now a club can be discarded on the ace of spades and, after winning the third club with the table's ace, three more club tricks are freed for the taking.

Michael Caine tires of '1-sided writings,' pens autobiography

NEW YORK — Michael Caine got tired of reading what others have written about him. So he has writen an autobiography.

"A dozen biographies had been written about me, and even the ones that were pleasant gave a one-sided picture of my life," the Academy Award-winning actor told The New York Times in an interview published Thursday.

The result: "What's It All About?" The title comes from the theme song of the 1966 hit comedy film "Alfie," in which Caine starred as a Cockney playboy charming to women but lost in life.

The 59-year-old actor is already thinking about his second book: a fictional thriller.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Actor Gary Coleman is leaving Colorado for Hollywood hoping to rejuvenate his career. But he's going without his $150,000 train set.

Coleman

He donated it Wednesday to a Colorado Springs miniature railroad club.

Coleman, 24, best known for his role as Arnold in "Diff'rent Strokes," which ran from 1978 to 1986, gave his cherished collector's set to the Pikes Peak "N" Gineers Club.

"I've always wanted to share my enthusiasm with the hobby and to share my layout without having a whole bunch of people come through my house," Coleman said.

The 20-by-30-foot rig occupied a specially built room in Coleman's house in Highlands Ranch, a Denver suburb he's called home for the past five years.

The set will be displayed at a Colorado Springs shopping mall. Club tours will raise money for the National Kidney Foundation. Coleman was born with an atrophied right kidney and lost the other at age 5. He's undergone two failed transplants and immunosuppressive drugs stunted his growth at 4-feet-8.

NICE, France — The boyfriend of Princess Stephanie of Monaco, accused of assaulting a shepherd in 1990, skipped a judicial hearing Thursday but must appear before the court soon, court sources said.

Daniel Ducruet, 29, bodyguard to the princess before becoming her boyfriend last year, is accused of attacking Francis Clary when the 45-year-old shepherd's car blocked a road near the Valberg ski resort.

Clary said he was turning his car around when Ducruet jumped out of his car and ran toward him.

Clary said he thought Ducruet needed directions and opened the door. Instead, he said, Ducruet punched in him the face, breaking his nose, splitting his lip and injuring an eye that later required laser surgery. He was hospitalized six days.

The princess, who is expecting to give birth to Ducruet's baby this month, lives with him in her luxury high-rise in Monaco.

The couple have said they plan to marry but have not set a date.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Betty Page's time and slim figure have passed, along with adulation for the label "pinup girl" bestowed on the popular ex-model in the 1950s.

But in the interest of preserving history and good impressions, Page, who vanished from public view more than 35 years ago, will be heard but not seen on TV's syndicated "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous."

"I don't want to be photographed nowadays because I've grown old, fat and ugly and nobody would be interested in seeing me," said Page, 69. "I would rather be remembered as I was when I was young."

The interview by the show's host, Robin Leach, will be accompanied by photographs of Page in her prime.

A Nashville native, Page walked away from her modeling career at its peak though she remained a cult figure to many fans.

The only information the show gives about her whereabouts is that she's alive and well and living in the United States. The Tennessean newspaper has reported, however, that family members said she lives Southern California.

LIHUE, Hawaii — After raising money for victims of Hurricane Iniki, performers Crosby, Stills and Nash, Bonnie Raitt, Jackson Browne and Jimmy Buffett came back to the scene of the storm and treated them to a free concert.

The five-hour show Wednesday came on the eve of the two-month anniversary of the storm, which devastated the island of Kauai. Iniki was blamed for three deaths and caused close to $2 billion damage. Among the victims was Graham Nash, who lost one of his two Kauai homes to the hurricane.

The fund-raising concerts Sunday and Monday in Honolulu brought in nearly $500,000.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Rupert Murdoch, chairman of News Corp. Ltd. and Fox Inc., received the National Conference of Christians and Jews' annual Entertainment Industry Humanitarian Award.

Comic actor Chevy Chase and MCA Chairman Lew Wasserman presented the award to Murdoch during the group's 29th annual awards Wednesday.

Guests included Corbin Bernsen and Luke Perry.

FAMILY MATTERS

Recovery from grief of divorce takes time

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: My wife of almost 18 years decided that she didn't want to be married to me anymore. She said that she was sick of trying to make our marriage work and that it was over. I'll admit that I hadn't been the best husband in the world, but I still don't think that I was all that bad either. I've never hit her or abused her or anything like some of the things I've heard about.

May

I talked to our pastor and he wanted me to get her to come to counseling. She came three times and all she would do is talk about how hard it had been for her to be married to me. When he would ask her for specifics, she would get mad and say that I was just "dominating, controlling and wouldn't talk to her." He suggested several things for us to try to do, but she wouldn't do any of them. The day after the third visit with the pastor, she said that she had talked to a lawyer and that he was drawing up the divorce papers and that I had better get a lawyer.

That made me very mad and I probably said some things that I shouldn't have said. We have two boys, 14 and 12, and she was taking them away from me. I'd been a good father to the boys and it broke my heart that she did this to them. I tried talking to them about what's wrong with their mother. The oldest didn't want to talk to me about it and wouldn't say anything. My youngest told me that mother just seemed upset and was real hard. He said that he didn't want us to get a divorce and usually cried when we talked about it. I told him to tell his mother that I didn't want a divorce either, and that she was the one breaking up our family.

Anyway, to make a long story short, she did get the divorce, half of all we had when we were married, and I have to pay child support. I don't mind paying for my boys, but I didn't want this divorce! I'm still angry at her over this. One of the women who I'm dating now told me that I should write you about helping me get over this. I agreed to do it and here it is. What can I do to get over my anger at what she did to me? STILL ANGRY

DEAR STILL: I am glad you wrote because there are some actions you can take to help you deal with your anger and hurt over the divorce. Dealing with divorce is an adjustment process which does not occur suddenly, but progresses over time. In Dr. Bruce Fisher's book, "Rebuilding," he suggests a 15-step process of adjustment to dealing with the loss of a love. The steps include:

■ Denial (it'll never happen to me): Until you can accept the ending you will have difficulty adjusting and rebuilding.

■ From Loneliness to Aloneness: It is natural to feel extreme loneliness when the relationship ends, but you can learn from the pain.

■ Guilt vs. Rejection: Dumpers end the relationship while dumpees have it ended for them. Dumpers start their adjustment process while still in the relationship, but dumpees start adjusting later.

■ Grief: You need to work through grief's emotions in order to let go of a dead love relationship, not just think your way through.

■ Anger: You need to learn to express your divorce anger constructively and not involve your children in it.

■ Letting go of the emotional corpse: You need to stop investing emotionally in your dead love relationship. This is much harder for dumpees.

■ Self-concept: You can learn to feel better about yourself and gain strength to help you adjust to this crisis.

■ Friendships: You can learn to develop friends of both sexes without becoming emotionally or sexually involved.

■ Leftovers: A common leftover problem is an unresolved need to rebel against prior constraints from your family of origin.

■ Love thyself as they neighbor: Many people need to relearn how to love themselves in order to love more maturely.

■ Trust: By learning to build a basic level of trust within yourself you can experience satisfying emotionally close relationships.

■ Sexuality: You can develop your personal morality to express your unique sexuality.

■ Responsibility: Equal responsibility relationships are more flexible and able to adjust to stress and change.

■ Singleness: A period of singleness enables you to build confidence in your own personal growth.

■ Freedom: By working the rebuilding blocks you can build a more meaningful relationship in the future.

This is only one idea of the divorce adjustment process. You may wish to contact the churches in our area that have divorce adjustment programs — Golf Course Road Church of Christ, First Baptist Church and First United Methodist Church. I also encourage you to continue talking with your pastor. Divorce is a profound spiritual death and needs to be processed as such.

Support groups 'uniquely American'

By Veronique de Turenne
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Shakespeare's Hamlet saw ghosts, hated his stepfather, chatted with a skull, committed murder, faked madness and died in duel.

What he needed to get him through a few bad days was a support group, or two or three.

The troubled Danish prince might have gotten a lift from Ups and Downs in suburban Van Nuys, a group for manic depressives. A session with Neurotics Anonymous in Los Angeles and Ventura counties could have cut short some of his brooding behavior. Letting It Go, a Van Nuys association for people who struggle with anger, might have saved an Elizabethan life or two, while a membership in the North Hollywood Dementia Support Group could shorten by an hour or two the running time of the famous play.

Or he might have dropped by the New Hope, Pa., library recently to attend the latest in support groups, one for psychic channelers. More than 40 people attended the group, which was founded when a man who channels for an angel named Raphael received a celestial order to hold meetings.

Members include healers, psychics, time travelers and an Air Force veteran who serves as a conduit for the likes of Sammy Davis Jr., Redd Foxx, John Wayne and Elvis. They talk about their interest and share their experiences.

"It's a different kind of group," said Matt Rue, chairman of the New Hope zoning board and a member of the planning commission. His wife, New Hope's librarian, is a skeptic.

"The people in the group believe. We exchange information. There are people who talk with departed ones," Rue said.

Although people come from Philadelphia and New York to take part in the group, Californians so far have been absent.

"Maybe at the next meeting," he said with a laugh.

SUPPORT GROUPS, a phenomenon that sociologists call uniquely American, have become an integral part of life in the United States. More than 15 million people attend about 500,000 different groups each week. The California Self-Help Center currently lists 4,600 groups in the state. Los Angeles County hits the jackpot with 2,600 self-help organizations.

Support groups became extremely popular in the late 1960s and early '70s, then waned. A self-help renaissance took shape in the '80s, culminating in the current boom of do-it-yourself therapy groups.

Essentially cost-free peer counseling, the groups cover subjects ranging from acoustic neuroma (a hearing disorder) to xenophobia (fear of strangers). Participants meet to talk about their particular problems, share experiences and offer solutions.

"We are a nation of joiners," said Wayne Plasek, a professor of sociology at California State University, Northridge. "We tend to be leery of experts and so rely more on other people for help."

'People have a lot of different concerns and try to find someone who shares the same problems they have. Ideally, they get a sense that they are not alone.'

— Roger Cantu
information specialist, California Self-Help Center

Support groups offer an antidote to loneliness, experts believe.

"People have a lot of different concerns and try to find someone who shares the same problems they have," said Roger Cantu, information specialist at the California Self-Help Center. "Ideally, they get a sense that they are not alone."

The center's listing includes such mainstream groups as Overeaters Anonymous, Parents Without Partners and Alcoholics Anonymous, the original support group.

More unusual groups include Gauchers, a group for left-handed people, a breast-feeding support group, meetings for transsexuals and transvestites, and one for UFO abductees.

WHILE SOME groups may sound silly, a closer look reveals women and men who are sincere in their need for comfort, solace and understanding.

Jackie Pia, a Saugus resident, is an active member of a support group for people with multiple-personality disorders. Members are people in deep emotional pain.

"We get together and talk about the here-and-now things that are bothering us and our alters (additional personalities)," she said. Her own 48 distinct personalities, developed as a defense to a childhood of sexual abuse, have fused, she said. "I'm on my way right now to visit a multiple who is in the hospital. If it weren't for our support group, she wouldn't have anyone taking care of her."

More than 800 people receive the group newsletter, Pia said.

Priscilla Renteria founded Parents and Siblings of Murdered Children for San Fernando Valley residents in her situation. The mailing list is now 130 people.

The tone of the group is not consistently grim, Renteria said. For every new addition, there are members who have worked through their problems and continued with their lives.

SOME SUPPORT groups provide social opportunities, such as the San Fernando Tip Toppers, a club for women 5-feet-10 and over and men 6-feet-2 and over. Members talk about the trials of being tall in a not-tall world. They also hold dances, go to plays and organize field trips.

"For women, being tall seems to be more of a hangup — they tower over everyone," said Mary Case, a spokeswoman for the group. At 5-feet-10, she's considered short among her peers. "The first time I walked into a Tall Club, I was called a little ball of fluff. I had never been called little in my life. I knew I had come home."

DEAR ABBY

Bride fears crying child will ruin wedding

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You have covered this topic numerous times in your column, but it just happened to me and I am stuck for a solution.

Van Buren

Our wedding is coming up soon, and we just received a response card on which the couple had penciled in " — and child."

Abby, their child is under 2 years old and the father is a colleague of my fiance. We both fear it would be rude if we asked the couple to please leave their child at home.

On the other hand, we do not want a crying child to ruin our formal church wedding. What other course of action can we take? — IN A BIND

DEAR IN: Because I'm sure you wouldn't want to offend your fiance's colleague, you could make arrangements to have someone look after the child in the church basement — or another room in the church — during the wedding ceremony. But first, you must inform the parents of your plan, and hope they agree to it.

Don't be surprised if they insist on having their child with them during the ceremony. People who are brazen enough to "pencil in" the news that they are bringing their child without asking permission to do so are capable of declining your offer to provide a sitter.

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago, I read a letter in your column expressing sadness over the readiness of drivers to exchange obscene one-fingered salutes and the general lack of courtesy. She wanted to know if there was some way to promote courtesy and goodwill.

We all make errors in driving, either in judgment, lack of attention or knowledge. In the spirit of harmony, I am suggesting we might promote a language of hand gestures to communicate messages other than anger or irritation.

Your column reaches so many people, I am sure your readers could add to or improve on these. We need to make traveling our highways a pleasant and safe experience.

Thank you for anything you can do. — DODIE RUEGEMER

DEAR DODIE: How about a nod, a smile, and mouthing the words, "Thank you"?

DEAR ABBY: Please tell your readers that it is rude to stare. I am a 28-year-old adult who stands 4 foot 6 inches tall. I hate it when ill-mannered adults, and the children they raise, glare and gawk at me. It is painful and it hurts.

We "little people" thank you for the article that helped our organization a few years ago. I, too, was inspired. Please print it again. — LITTLE PACKAGE

DEAR LITTLE PACKAGE: Thank you for pointing out that making others, whatever their height, weight, ethnicity or adversity, feel they are the object of curiosity is insensitive and inappropriate. And thank you, too, for giving me the opportunity to offer little people a wonderful resource: Little People of America — a nationwide voluntary organization that is dedicated to helping people of short stature. It provides fellowship, moral support and helpful information through informed gatherings, chapter and district meetings and nationwide conventions. The basic requirement for membership is height no more than 4 feet 10 inches. "L.P.A." has more than 4,000 members. To contact them and/or join one of 40 chapters nationwide, write: Little People of America Inc., P.O. Box 9897, Washington, D.C. 20016.

DEAR ABBY: I am sick of hearing about the "poor addicts." What about their victims whose lives they ruined? What about the elderly who are afraid to go out alone? What about the people who have been terrorized and robbed because some addict had to support a habit he or she voluntarily chose to begin? No one forced them to take drugs — they had a choice. What kind of choice did their victims have? None!

My wife was one of those people who believed she could help a drug addict. For eight years, she stood by this animal — then one day, for all her kindness, he took a hammer and crushed her skull, leaving her to die!

I found her two hours later. She suffered massive brain damage and her entire left side is now paralyzed. So much for trying to help a drug addict. With all the available information concerning drugs, there is no excuse for anyone beginning the habit. These are people who care only for themselves.

My wife was a teacher. She worked with disadvantaged children, but her teaching career ended when she was assaulted. How sad that society lost a woman who had dedicated her life to helping others. She had even taken children into our home to care for along with her own. You may use my name. — ARTHUR M. ROCKWELL JR., WYNANTSKILL, N.Y.

DEAR MR. ROCKWELL: What happened to your wife was a senseless tragedy. My heart goes out to you.

Service provides helping hands for parents

By Sally Williams Cook
Associated Press

'I'm not the kind to have someone else run my household. But after you have a baby, you experience total sensory overload. Christine knew just what to do so that Gil and I had total freedom to admire and enjoy our new baby.'

— Rhoda Bodzin
new mother

The first few weeks after Rhoda Bodzin and Gil Gross welcomed their son, Spencer, into the world, they were able to sit back and enjoy every coo and movement their newborn made.

So did Abby Hauser and husband, Pierre, after their infant daughter, Olivia, was born. The Hausers are also the parents of 15-month-old Charlotte.

Unencumbered by the usual chores of shopping for diapers and groceries, and phoning the pediatrican, these two families enjoyed delicious, healthful meals, and were able to focus on each other and the baby.

These couples hired Christine Kealy, president and founder of In A Family Way, a doula service based in New York City. Doula, from the Greek meaning "mother to mother," is an old concept. But it is relatively new in the United States.

"I'm not the kind to have someone else run my household," Bodzin said in a telephone interview. "But after you have a baby, you experience total sensory overload. Christine knew just what to do so that Gil and I had total freedom to admire and enjoy our new baby."

Added Abby Hauser, "Pierre and I actually had time for ourselves, a rarity for new parents. Christine seemed to be everywhere at once without being in the way. Christine had all the right touches to make us feel pampered and cared for."

For $15 to $25 an hour, a doula will come to the family's home, care for the other children, shop, cook, do light housekeeping and discuss subjects such as breast-feeding and choosing a post-pregnancy wardrobe.

While no formal training is necessary, "being a mother is an essential criteria," Kealy says. Most doulas know basic first aid and Lamaze, a training program for natural childbirth. Many have a nursing background.

Kealy, the mother of three children and a former elementary schoolteacher, says a good doula should be able to disappear into the background. "We don't give advice, we share experiences with families."

She has taken clients to specialty stores and helped choose maternity wardrobes. She has performed hand-and-foot massages on new mothers, cleaned floors and bathrooms — and cooked up a storm. Before she departs, she often paints a watercolor of the new baby, frames it and presents it to the parents.

MotherLove is a New Jersey-based doula service that also offers lactation consultation and labor support, as well as household services.

"We stress that we are nonmedical support," says Debra Pascali, who founded MotherLove in 1987. "Although, there have been a couple of occasions when our doulas have identified a baby that isn't well and needs hospitalization."

Pascali is a former childbirth educator and vice president of the National Association of Postpartum Care Services. She employs 40 doulas and has five branches in the New York-New Jersey region.

"In our society, a woman has a baby and is expected to go right back to work," Pascali says. "But if a mother isn't nurtured, she can't possibly take care of her baby."

Pascali favors an early discharge plan that would allow new mothers to leave the hospital 24 hours after giving birth but would also provide 20 hours of a doula service at home at no extra cost.

"In Scandanavia and different parts of Europe, a doula is built into the health plan," Pascali says. "The United States really lags in supporting women after giving birth."

Children learn good manners

Associated Press

Getting your children to be pleasant dinner companions takes patience — and some creativity. The following tips from Better Homes and Gardens magazine will help them understand basic etiquette.

■ The best time to start teaching table basics is when a child graduates from a high chair to the dinner table. Show your child, with regular reminders, how to use a fork and spoon and to say "thank you" when handed things. Teach the child that throwing food, yelling, spitting and hitting are not acceptable.

■ Promote mealtime as family time. To give everyone a chance to talk about the day's happenings, go around the table taking turns talking. This builds speaking and listening skills and helps each person to feel important. Encourage a positive conversation — no complaining, teasing, or scolding at the table.

■ Encourage kids to try at least one small bite of each different food. No one likes all foods, so if a food isn't accepted after a taste, don't force your child to eat it.

■ Use rhymes, riddles, or mental pictures to help kids remember basic manners. Placing a napkin in the lap before eating becomes "nap in the lap." For elbows, try this old-time verse: Sally, Sally (use your child's name), strong and able, take your elbows off the table.

Clinton gets big push from senior voters

Exit polling, surveys show 51 percent of those over 65 voted for democratic candidate

By Howard Goldberg

NEW YORK (AP) — President-elect Clinton got a lot of help on Election Day from those 65 and older, who gave him a majority of their votes, unlike any other age categories in the three-way race.

Exit polling by Voter Research and Surveys for four television networks found that among those over 65, 51 percent voted for Clinton, 38 percent for President Bush and 10 percent for Ross Perot. Among voters overall, Clinton won 43 percent, Bush 38 percent and Perot 19 percent.

Being over 60 didn't make voters less likely to support Bush, but it did make them more likely to vote for Democrat Clinton and much less likely to join forces with independent Perot, polls showed.

Pollsters noticed long ago that those who came of age during the Great Depression are more likely to be Democrats, to support the party of Franklin Roosevelt over that of Herbert Hoover. The aging of this group has squeezed out an advantage the Republicans once had among seniors.

Explaining Perot's shortfall among those over 60 is more difficult.

Older people are "more settled in to a pattern of caution," said Everett C. Ladd Jr., director of the Roper Center for Public Opinion Research. "In the American system that means supporting one of the established parties."

Perot called on supporters to take power away from established institutions in the name of "the people." His strongest support, by age, was among those 25-29.

Older voters may have been more likely to stick with the Democrats and Republicans, despite widespread misgivings about the standard-bearers, because "they came of age when party meant more than it does now," Ladd said.

In 1980, exit polls showed a drop-off in support for third-party presidential candidate John Anderson in the middle age groups. Now, many of those people are over 65, the last bastion of strong party affiliation.

The more than 15,000 voters who filled out the national exit poll were asked not only their age but also their employment status. Of the one in eight who said they were retired, 51 percent voted for Clinton, 36 percent for Bush and 13 percent for Perot.

A dramatic turnaround in Bush's support among retirees was evident in a separate VRS exit poll taken in Florida. Retirees accounted for one of every four Florida voters, and 53 percent went for Clinton, compared with 36 percent for Bush. Four years earlier, Bush had won 57 percent of Florida retirees, according to an ABC News exit poll.

Bush won Florida again this year, but by only two percentage points.

One race in which retirees bucked the electoral trend was in California, which elected two women to the U.S. Senate. An exit poll showed that retirees favored conservative television commentator Bruce Herschensohn over liberal U.S. Rep. Barbara Boxer, the Democrat who won. But retirees backed the more moderate Democrat Dianne Feinstein over Republican Sen. John Seymour.

One footnote about the importance of age in the presidential election: Though much was made of the generational difference between Bush and Clinton, only 9 percent of voters in the exit poll said the age of the candidates was very important to their choice. Two in three of those voters went for Clinton.

DNA repair enzyme is defined

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — Researchers said they have determined the shape of an enzyme that repairs damaged genetic material in cells, a discovery that could someday help scientists fight cancer and better understand aging.

"Understanding the structure of this enzyme will help us better understand how it recognizes and repairs damaged DNA," said molecular biologist John A. Tainer, who led a team of scientists at The Scripps Research Institute who made the discovery. Their work was reported in the journal Science. "Ultimately, this should also help us deal with cancer and aging since unrepaired DNA generates mutations that are responsible for cancer and degenerative disease." DNA is the source of genetic information tells a cell how to do its job so the body functions properly. The enzyme the Scripps scientists studied is one of about a dozen that work in cells spotting DNA damage, chemically cutting it out and then marking the gap.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Family, medical systems failing

By Steve Edwards

QUESTION: What are "border grannies?"

Edwards

ANSWER: It's not a new problem, but is a growing trend. The problem is who classifies as "border grannies." The border granny usually is a very elderly woman who arrives in an emergency room with little more than the clothes on her back. The family or person who brought her there then mysteriously disappears, never to return to the hospital.

Granny does not want to go to a boarding home or a nursing home. Depressed, feeling forgotten and often neglected, she wants to stay home and be independent. The hospital emergency room must then find a place for her. She'll most likely wait a long time and then go to a nursing home. Upwards of 200,000 geriatric patients per year are dumped in emergency rooms.

Why is this happening? Two of our systems are failing — our family system and our medical system. Sadly there's not quick and easy solution in sight.

Granny's family members are often over the age of 65. They lack the energy, the resources and sometimes the family commitment to care for granny any longer. It's abominable that America has placed our elderly in such a position. Instead of being viewed as great resources, our elderly have gradually dropped to the bottom of the list of valued people.

Our medical care system is our second failure. We lack the physical and monetary sources to care for the elderly. Unless you are wealthy, getting into a nursing home or paying for private duty care is a very substantial concern.

But the problem is larger. The present system cannot accommodate the number of elderly today. Yet the number of elderly needing some help will rise from 7.1 million in 1990 to 13.8 million by the year 2030. The number of persons needing nursing home care will increase from 1.5 million to 5.3 million during the same time period.

We have the course of a few short years to deal with an overwhelming problem. In the future, health care programs will need to focus on community programs such as adult day care and supportive housing for the elderly. There is the need to further address caring for the elderly in non-institutional settings.

The days ahead will prove most challenging as communities deal with these serious issues. We are in the right place at the right time in terms of providing solutions to these problems. Hopefully, we have and will continue to choose the right future directions.

Above all, there is the constant need to contribute our energy and best thinking to dealing with the problems of how to care for our elderly.

We care and cannot let them down.

QUESTION: Can you name or describe some assistive devices that can help the frail elderly in eating?

ANSWER: There are numerous assistive devices or helpful hints that your older loved ones or friends can use when eating. For example, there are many ways to adapt spoons so that they may be more easily used by persons with certain disabilities. Simply bending the handle or increasing its diameter by wrapping it with plastic foam or cloth may help. Increase the size of the handle, increase the grip. The more complex adaptions such as the finger ring, swivel spoon and spoon extension are available commercially.

Use of a plate guard, which clamps on to the edge of a dinner plate, can eliminate a lot of "chasing" food around the plate, especially if you have the use of only one hand. These are available in plastic and in metal for about $5. There are many ways to keep a plate or bowl in position on the tray or other eating surface. Some individuals have used the safety strip meant for use in tubs and showers on the bottoms of dishes. Any sort of textured cloth, especially sponge cloth, helps to keep dishes in place. Even a lump of non-drying clay could be used for this purpose.

If your grasp is weak, special cups may be easier and safer to use. Many have special types of handles. Most are made of plastic and are lighter in weight.

Peacock resigns

ABILENE — Ronnie Peacock resigned Thursday as football coach of Abilene Christian University after two seasons with the Wildcats.
Peacock, 42, was 1-9 in his first year and guided the Wildcats to a 3-6 mark this year, including 2-4 in the Lone Star Conference.
"I believe it is in the best interests of me and my family and the university that I resign," Peacock said.
Athletic Director Cecil Eager said a search for a replacement will begin immediately, but said the school didn't have a deadline.

CFL expansion

TORONTO — Commissioner Larry Smith unveiled plans on Thursday to expand the Canadian Football League by as many as four teams — three in the United States — possibly as soon as next year.
Smith said the league would like to add teams in San Antonio, Sacramento, Portland and Montreal in time for the 1993 season, but cautioned that the CFL's first expansion since 1954 wouldn't take place until strict criteria are met by the would-be franchises.
"We're not going to make a silly decision to jump on the wagon for 1993," he said. "If it's not right, we're not going to do it. If it's not right, we'll wait for the next year because that'll give us more lead time."

4-5A after another sweep

■ San Angelo, Odessa Permian and Abilene Cooper represent District 4-5A as the state football playoffs begin.

By Terry Williamson
Sports editor

Class 5A bi-district football playoff action begins today in what District 4-5A hopes is a weekend that will produce a second consecutive three-game sweep of District 3-5A.

San Angelo's Bobcats (6-4), making their third consecutive playoff appearance after a trip to the Big School semifinals last year, starts the weekend off with a long trip to Amarillo to face the Tascosa Rebels (7-3) at Dick Bivens Stadium at 8 p.m. today.

Odessa Permian (8-1), playing the role of defending Small School state champion, is next in line, meeting Amarillo Palo Duro's Dons (7-3) at 1 p.m. Saturday in Lubbock's Jones Stadium. That game is part of a 5A bi-district doubleheader as 4-5A's other playoff entry, Abilene Cooper (7-3), faces Amarillo High (9-1) at 4:30 p.m., also at Jones Stadium. One $8 ticket will allow you to see both of those games, provided you don't leave the stadium between games.

San Angelo vs. Tascosa

The Bobcats own a 2-0 record over Tascosa since 1961 and a 1966 playoff meeting between the two schools went to San Angelo by a 37-6 margin.

The tough hurdle for the Bobcats in this one is a long trip and the ever unpredictable weather of Amarillo. The Bobcats, the state's leading offensive team, averaging over 460 yards per game, depends heavily on the running and passing of quarterback Ben Montgomery. Weather can be an important factor for the Bobcats in any game.

However, San Angelo coach Dan Gandy says his team is ready.

"We're going up there with the idea of winning the game, regardless of the weather conditions," Gandy said, "but it looks like it might turn out to be a little cool, but nice. We're not making a big deal out of the long trip. In West Texas, you get used to making long bus trips."

San Angelo is 14-5-2 in eight previous playoff games since 1961. The Bobcats have won two state championships in 1943 and 1966.

Texas A&M knocks off Houston

■ The Aggies remain unbeaten with a 38-30 win over the Cougars.

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The Texas A&M Aggies had just enough tricks and big plays to keep their national championship hopes alive.

Playing before a national television audience Thursday night, the fourth-ranked Aggies remained one of only three unbeaten and untied teams, but they failed to put away an outmatched Houston squad.

Greg Hill had third quarter touchdown runs of 10, 9 and 4 yards that finally shut off Houston's upset bid and rallied the Aggies to a 38-30 victory. The Aggies (10-0 overall, 5-0 in the Southwest Conference) won their 19th consecutive regular-season game and stayed with No. 1 Miami (8-0) and No. 2 Alabama (9-0) as the only major college teams in the country with unblemished records.

Texas A&M didn't get its first lead until 3:41 remained in the third quarter when Hill skirted the right side for a 9-yard touchdown on a drive keyed by a 32-yard pass from Corey Pullig to Tony Harrison.

A&M's improved passing game helped put the Aggies in control on the next series when Pullig, a freshman, threw a 39-yard pass to Brian Mitchell at the Houston 4 and Hill scored his third touchdown on the next play.

But the Cougars didn't go quietly. Jimmy Klingler completed a 73-yard touchdown pass to Ron Peters with 7:02 to play. And after a 95-yard kickoff return by A&M's Billy Mitchell set up a 1-yard Rodney Thomas touchdown, Klingler found Peters again for a 42-yard touchdown with 4:09 remaining, making it 38-

MCS meets Eagles for playoff tilt

By Joe Wyatt
Staff writer

The Dallas Winston Academy Eagles have tasted defeat three times in 1992, losing each time to a team that ultimately reached the playoffs.

Tonight, at Elmer Gray Stadium on the campus of Abilene Christian University, the Midland Christian School Mustangs hope to bring that total to an even four.

District I champion MCS (8-0) and District 4 runner-up Dallas Winston (5-3) are set to collide at 7 p.m. in the opening and quarterfinal round of the Texas Association of Private and Parochial Schools (TAPPS) state six-man football playoffs.

The Mustangs are out to defend the TAPPS championship they won a year ago, and James Blake, head coach of the undefeated MCS squad, refuses to sugar-coat the obvious.

"They (Eagles) are the type of ball club that if we play them 10 times we should win 10 times," Blake said.

"I've always been honest with the kids. Some people say that's a mistake, but I believe these kids are at a level of maturity where I can be honest with them.

"If we play our type of game, we should win."

The Mustangs' type of game is both explosive on offense and stingy on defense. MCS scores at an average clip of 51.3 points per game while giving up just 19 points an outing. Both figures are tops among TAPPS teams.

"We're basically a running team, but we can run a spread offense," said Clay Gunter, who shares time with Wes Adams at tailback, where MCS averages 11 yards per carry. The Mustangs get an additional seven yards a try from fullback Kyle Jackson.

MCS spread things out against Christoval on Oct. 2 as quarterback Andy Awtry fired six TD passes — four in the first quarter alone — and the Mustangs

Expansion teams can get stars

Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Florida Marlins and Colorado Rockies will have their choices of some respectable players in Tuesday's expansion draft, including National League saves leader Lee Smith, slugger George Bell and Gold Glove second baseman Jose Lind, according to published reports.

Others left off the protected lists by the 26 major league teams include Danny Tartabull, Bobby Thigpen, Ellis Burks, Kevin McReynolds, Glenn Davis, Shawon Dunston, Steve Sax, Charlie Leibrandt and Mark Lemke.

Each club had to submit a list Monday of 15 players who are exempt from the draft. Only the Marlins, the Rockies and the commissioner's office received the full lists, and the names on them were not to be made public.

Even though the lists were supposed to be cloaked in secrecy, a few names leaked out after they were handed in. It was revealed that the World Series champion Toronto Blue Jays had exposed Jack Morris and Kelly Gruber, that the NL champion Atlanta Braves had left off Kent Mercker, that the New York Mets left off Eddie Murray, and that Carlton Fisk, Tim Wallach, Bryan Harvey and Bob Walk also were available.

But in stories in the Chicago Tribune and Rocky Mountain News on Thursday, all 26 protected lists were published.

Other familiar players who can be drafted include pitchers Mitch Williams, Mike Harkey, Pete Smith, Steve

Chaps struggle with Pima

■ Midland College extends its record to 5-0 with an oft-difficult 94-77 win over the Aztecs.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

When the losing coach is happier with his team's performance than the winning coach is with his, something's not right.

Midland College did run its record to 5-0 with a 94-77 win over Pima College, of Tucson, Ariz. Thursday night at Chaparral Center, but the Chaps had to struggle virtually the entire night to secure the outcome.

"It's a good thing we weren't driving a bus. We would've gone off a cliff," MC head coach Steve Green said of his team's effort. "To expound on it any more would be to give them an excuse. There's no substitution for effort and we're learning that the hard way.

"Norman Vincent Peale is the only person who could find a positive in that game. It'd take him to convince me there's a brighter day tomorrow, but when I first see the outdoors (Friday), it's gonna be real dark."

So put it out with his team's effort was Green that he scheduled an unprecedented 5:30 a.m. practice for today.

"I really felt we had a chance to win this game," Pima head coach Mike Lopez said, "but we got away from our structure in the second half. We didn't score for about four minutes in the second half."

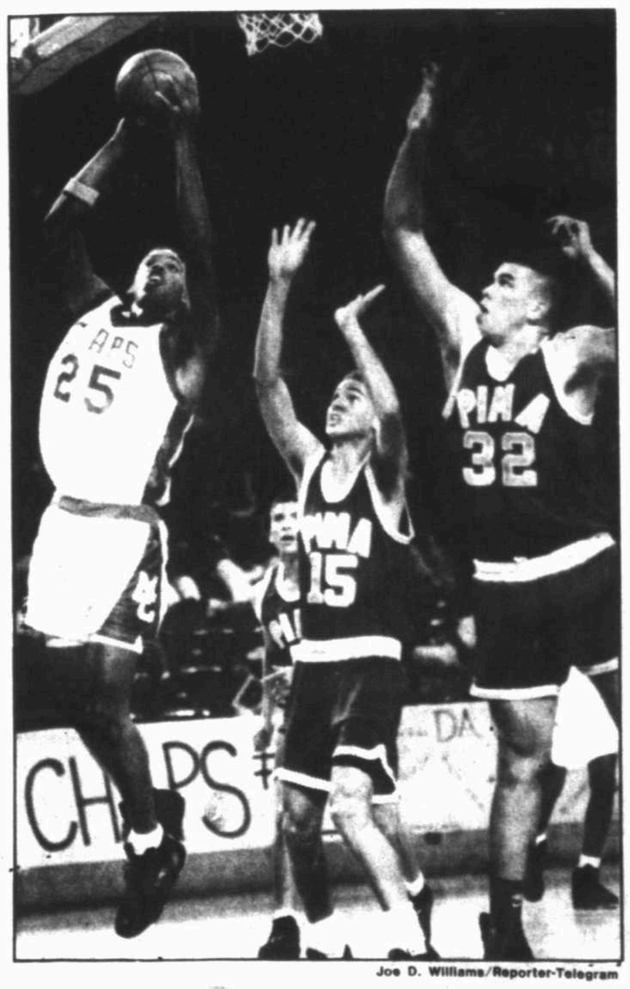
If it was the second half that did in the 0-1 Aztecs, it was the initial part of the first half that kept the game as close as it was for as long as it was.

MC, with its starters on the bench just five minutes into the game, failed to take control of the game at the outset, allowing the Aztecs to stay close. Pima played MC so close in the first 20 minutes, they found themselves with a 43-40 lead at halftime.

And Pima's leads weren't by just a couple of throw-away points here and there. The Aztecs led at one point, 28-16, and never surrendered the larger side of the score to MC for the last 10:15 of the first half.

"The first five minutes is the most important part of a basketball game," Green said. "And we didn't do a thing. We've got to take control of what's happening. We didn't take control against Ranger or against Southwestern Christian, and we didn't take control tonight.

"(Pima) passed it and passed it and got us on our heels. I have an appreciation for what they did, but I also have an utter distaste for how we reacted to it.



Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Midland College forward Kirk Ford (25) gets over Pima's Derek Hersha (15) and Horacio Llamas (32).

"You hate that our positives are overshadowed by the total bad performance. There were some bright spots, but there are bright spots right before and after an eclipse, too."

While the Chaps were able to hold their own offensively, it

MCS: Mustangs set out in defense of TAPPS title

(From 1C)

avenged their only loss of the 1991 campaign with a 66-54 victory over the University Interscholastic League's state runner-up team from a year ago.

"We're trying to set a school record and win state," said end Lathan Houghton, noting MCS has never had an undefeated season. "Our confidence comes from each other. When someone messes up, we pick him up."

It's that kind of attitude that Blake says makes his Mustangs such a good team, even though they boast just three seniors.

"This team has a great attitude and gets excited about things," Blake said. "Six-man football is a fun game anyway. A lot of people get to carry and catch the ball. But blocking and tackling is still the name of the game.

"This team gets it done because it's a family and we treat them like a family. There is talent here, to be sure. But when you put together a family, with a great attitude and some talent, it makes for a great combination."

It's a combo that opposing teams have been trying, but failing to beat since Christoval downed the Mustangs in October of 1991. MCS has reeled off 16 straight victories since that loss, including the triumph over the Christoval Cougars this season.

"I'm not sure if beating them (Cougars) was a turning point or not, but it was sure a step up for us," Wes Adams said.

The next step up is presently being blocked by Dallas Winston. But for how long?

Division I programs for frosh finally shut down

Associated Press

NEW YORK — One of college football's longest-running traditions comes to an end Friday when the Ivy League plays its final schedule of freshman football games.

The Ivy League is the last Division I conference to maintain a freshman football program that's separate from the varsity.

"I'm kind of sorry to see it go," said Columbia athletic director Dr. John Reeves, whose freshman squad hosts Cornell in one of three scheduled games. "I thought freshman football distinguished Ivy League athletics from other athletic programs."

The Ivy Group presidents voted last year to discontinue freshman football as a separate sport due to a combination of factors including economics and the quality of competition.

"The immediate contributions from well-qualified student-athletes will benefit our developing programs," Reeves said. "Also, it will be good to have one cohesive unit."

Freshman football dates back almost to the inception of the college game because it was felt that first-year players were not skillful enough to compete on varsity squads. Later, academic considerations became a factor for maintaining the teams, allowing incoming freshman to get used to scholastic requirements while facing a reduced football commitment.

However, the NCAA allowed freshman to play varsity football in the early 70s, signalling the demise of the separate squads.

4-5A: Permian begins defense of state crown and all were playoff meetings (1984, '85 and '87). Permian has had several pre-season scrimmages with the Dons over the years, however.

(From 1C)

Mojo is making its second consecutive playoff bid, but hit the jackpot last year with a state championship by beating San Antonio Marshall last year in the Small School finals. Palo Duro lost to Midland Lee last year in the bi-district round.

"You never look past anyone in the playoffs," notes Permian coach Tam Hollingshead after seeing his team struggle to a bi-district victory over Tascosa last year. "I'm just glad we're not playing in Amarillo again. The weather can kill you up there."

Permian owns an impressive 65-11-5 record in the state playoffs in 19 playoff trips. The Panthers also own six state championships, unmatched by any 4-5A team.

Permian's junior running back John Williams, one of only two 4-5A backs to break 1,000 yards in regular season play (1,573 and 16 TDs), is a big part of the Panther offensive attack while defense remains the name of the game in Odessa with Sam Brooks, Scott Cherry and Michael Comer leading the way.

Cooper vs. Amarillo High

The two teams have never played, partly because Cooper's playoff experience is limited. The Cougars own a 5-3-1 playoff record and haven't been state bound since 1979 when they lost in bi-district.

In four previous trips to the playoffs, Cooper's best run came in 1967 when they reached the state finals against Austin Reagan, only to lose a disputed 20-19 decision to Austin Reagan in the finals.

Second year Cooper coach Randy Allen played on that 1967 team. He notes that Jack Mildren scored what looked like the winning touchdown on the last play of the game with a quarterback sneak, but it was ruled short of the goal. Allen insists that Mildren had goal line chalk across his chest when he got up from the pile.

"We all thought we scored," Allen said. "But we didn't win on the scoreboard, so it doesn't count. There's nothing you can do about that."

The toughest job for Cooper is lack of playoff pressure experience and the Cougars enter the playoffs on a two-game losing streak (Permian and Lee). Amarillo High's only loss is to Permian early in the season.

The only other back over 1,000 yards in 4-5A is Cooper's Mike Rose with 1,206 yards.

The Picks

San Angelo 31, Amarillo Tascosa 21: No team in the Region I Big School bracket has a better record than 7-3 and Tascosa is one of them. However, the Bobcats have played a much tougher schedule (Temple, Killeen, Permian, Lee and Cooper) and should be prepared to face this challenge. The weather will hold.

Odessa Permian 42, Amarillo Palo Duro 7: This is Mojo's time of year and no team prepares better for the playoffs. You may dispute that remark, but the record is on the side of the statement. And playoff statements are what Permian does best.

Amarillo High 24, Abilene Cooper 18: Other than Midland Lee in 1983, 4-5A newcomers to the playoffs have had trouble in the first round. It's hard to get the feel of the playoffs until you've been there. Cooper's players don't have a clue what it will be like at 4:30 p.m. Saturday.

FIGHT: Bowe has 30-pound advantage over champ

(From 1C)

Tape of the match confirms Bowe's contention that he did not quit, but that the referee acted too hastily.

"So far I've proven them wrong," said Bowe, who has a 31-0 record with 27 knockouts. "People said I didn't have any determination. I hate to lose."

Bowe, however, has yet to win a situation where the moment is a fight for the most valuable individual prize in sports. And the man he is facing is a champion of bulldog tenacity.

"I realize he hasn't been tested mentally for what is about to come," said Holyfield, 28-0 with 22 knockouts.

"Riddick Bowe is a young fighter who has made strides between fights like you've never seen before," said 82-year-old trainer Eddie Futch, who has worked with 17 world champions including Joe Frazier and Larry Holmes.

"I'm a big guy who is determined," Bowe said. "I'm going to show him I know more than he thinks I know."

The 25-year-old Bowe, 6-foot-5, is the youngest and tallest opponent Holyfield has had in a title fight. Two of Holyfield's defenses were against George Foreman and Holmes, both in their 40s.

Holyfield weighed in at 205 pounds, the lightest the former cruiserweight champion (190 pounds) has been for five heavyweight title fights. Bowe weighed 235 pounds.

"I'm not the strongest fighter, I'm not the quickest fighter," Holyfield said, "but if I put it all together I might be the smartest fighter."

Holyfield, however, has shown that when he gets hit he can turn into a brawler, which could be dangerous with an opponent such as Bowe.

Critics point to Holyfield's narrow escape against unheralded Bert Cooper, who took the fight on late notice as a substitute for Francesco Damiani. Holyfield was knocked down in the third round, but he stopped Cooper in the seventh on Nov. 23, 1991.

"Everbody who follows boxing is not fooled by the Cooper fight," said George Benton, Holyfield's trainer. "Everbody knows great fighters can get knocked down. Cooper is a swinger — a wrecking ball.

"Bowe is a sharpshooter. I would think Cooper is more dangerous. Cooper swings from the floor. Bowe tries more punches."

Benton feels the way to beat Bowe is to fight him and not let him use his good left jab to set up combinations.

"Bowe is the type of fighter who respects fire power," Benton said. "That's what you have to throw at him — fire power. I've known for a long time that Bowe is not a guy who walks right in and throws punches. Fire power slows his fire power.

"The kind of fire power Evander has is a machine gun."

While Bowe will be facing the unexperienced pressure of a major fight, Holyfield could be carrying a piece of psychological baggage he's not carried into previous matches.

In his victory by a decision over Holmes on June 19, the champion was cut for the first time when hit by an elbow in the seventh round. The wound over the right eye required 12 stitches.

Baseball arbitrator reinstates Steve Howe

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Steve Howe, the first player banned from baseball for life because of drugs, was reinstated Thursday by arbitrator George Nicolau.

Howe, 34, was suspended June 8 by then-commissioner Fay Vincent following the left-hander's seventh incident related to drugs or alcohol. Howe was with the New York Yankees at the time of the suspension, which followed a guilty plea in U.S. District Court in Missoula, Mont., to a misdemeanor charge of attempting to buy a gram of cocaine.

Howe was 3-0 with six saves and a 2.45 ERA for the Yankees last season. He became a free agent Sunday, the last day of the free-agency filing period, but his agent said Howe would prefer to re-sign with New York.

"He can sign a contract subject to conditions set forth in the arbitrator's decision," said Eugene Orza, associate general counsel of the Major League Baseball Players Association. Orza added the drug testing and aftercare would be part of the conditions.

Nicolau, baseball's permanent arbitrator, heard the case following a grievance filed by the union of behalf of Howe. Nicolau provided the parties with a draft of his opinion, but it will not be made public until it is finalized.

"One of the principal underpinings for the decision was the arbitrator's belief that the underlying medical or psychological problem was a mitigating factor as far as what the severity of the sanction ought to be," deputy commissioner Steve Greenberg said.

"It makes baseball look silly and I think there'll be a lot of adverse reaction," said Vincent, who resigned Sept. 7. "I don't think there was any doubt about my having just cause. I think the arbtrator substituted his judgment for mine, and the arbitrator was wrong. ... I think it's a bad development for baseball. Why is eight different from seven?"

Howe, attending a conference at Sarasota, Fla., could not immediately be contacted. The pitcher's lawyer and agent, Richard Moss, said Howe would prefer to re-sign with the Yankees.

"I've already had a conversation with (general manager) Gene Michael, and if we can work out an apprioriate agreement, that's where he wants to be," Moss said from Los Angeles. "Clearly, Steve has wonderful camaraderie with his teammates. In addition, the Yankees' front office has been extremely supportive through this turmoil, and you don't forget those things."

The Yankees welcomed the news. "We are pleased for Steve and his family," the team said in a statement. "Perhaps all of us have developed a greater sensitivity to those who seek our support. We wish the Howes well, and look forward to watching Steve display his talents during the 1993 baseball season."

Vincent suspended Howe indefinitely following the pitcher's plea in a Montana court. Howe grieved Vincent's ruling and Nicolau ordered the commissioner to be more specific.

Vincent then imposed the lifetime ban, writing in a five-page decision that Howe "has finally extinguished his opportunity to play major league baseball." The players' union again grieved, leading to Thursday's ruling.

"We're gratified with the award," Moss said. "There's not a lot that anybody can say about the case until the opinion comes out. I'm confident once that comes out, people can understand what happened and why it happened and can be a little more sympathetic to Steve Howe."

On Aug. 18, Howe was sentenced to three years probation, fined $1,000 and ordered to perform 100 hours of community service as a result of his criminal case. He pleaded guilty to attempting to buy a gram of cocaine from a drug informant.

Howe was arrested on Dec. 19, 1991, following what prosecutors said was an attempt to buy $100 worth of cocaine from an informant outside a Kalispell, Mont., automobile dealership. Authorities later added a second charge of cocaine possession in nearby Whitefish, Howe's offseason home.

Wilkins scores 30 as Hawks upend Spurs

Associated Press

NBA

SAN ANTONIO — Dominique Wilkins scored 30 points Thursday night, including 11 in the final eight minutes, leading the Atlanta Hawks to a 104-97 victory over the San Antonio Spurs.

Travis Mays added 19 for the Hawks, while Mookie Blaylock and Kevin Willis each had 16.

The Spurs were paced by David Robinson's 20 points and 19 from Antoine Carr. Sean Elliott and Lloyd Daniels contributed 16 apiece.

San Antonio was 1 for 16 from 3-point range, with Elliott making one of his six attempts and Daniels going 0 for 5.

Leading 92-88 with 2:28 to play, Atlanta got back-to-back field goals from Wilkins to go up by eight.

After Dale Ellis' layup, Blair Rasmussen scored and added a free throw to give Atlanta a 99-90 cushion with 1:12 to go. San Antonio came no closer than six the rest of the game.

Wilkins scored 13 first-half points and Atlanta used an 11-0 run late in the second quarter to take a 51-44 lead at the half.

San Antonio committed 14 first-half turnovers and Robinson scored only four points before picking up his third foul midway through the second quarter.

Pistons 95, Heat 88

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Detroit's Joe Dumars spoiled the homecoming of former Piston John Salley.

Dumars scored eight of his 29 points in the fourth quarter as the Pistons rebounded from a heart-breaking overtime loss at Chicago one night earlier.

After six full seasons with the Pistons, including their two NBA championship years, Salley was traded to Miami during the offseason for Butch Morris and a first-round draft pick.

But Salley picked up his fourth foul with 3:03 left in the third quarter and wasn't a factor in the outcome. Salley scored just two of his 11 points in the second half.

Rony Seikaly scored 11 of his 29 points in the fourth quarter for Miami and reserve Kevin Edwards had 18 points in 31 minutes, including a string of five straight baskets in the second quarter.

Two free throws by Dumars tied the game at 78 with 5:21 left to play.

The Pistons' defense then forced a 24-second violation and a turnover by Edwards under the Miami basket on the Heat's next two possessions.

Timberwolves 88, Nets 84

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Doug West scored 24 points and the Minnesota Timberwolves held on for a win over New Jersey, spoiling the home debut of Nets coach Chuck Daly.

Minnesota used three runs to build a 19-point third-quarter lead in its second straight victory. It handed New Jersey its third straight loss despite a 27-point performance by Drazen Petrovic.

Minnesota blew all but two points of its big lead and needed a clutch 17-footer by Chuck Person with seven seconds left to stave off New Jersey, whose performance had fans booing early in the third quarter.

However, New Jersey used a 21-10 run in the final nine minutes of the third quarter to get within 71-63. The Nets stayed within striking distance most of the fourth quarter and made their final run after West hit a driving layup to give Minnesota an 86-78 edge with 1:55 to go.

Magic 127, Bullets 100

ORLANDO, Fla. — Shaquille O'Neal scored 31 points and grabbed 21 rebounds as Orlando outrebounded Washington 69-34 and captured a victory.

Magic guard Scott Skiles also had 14 points, 12 rebounds and 11 assists to record his second career triple-double.

The Bullets led 8-3 in the opening four minutes, but the Magic ripped off the next 19 points to pull away. Washington never got closer than 10 points the rest of the way.

O'Neal, the 7-foot-1 rookie from LSU, worked against 6-9 Charles Jones most of the game. He had little trouble getting to the basket. O'Neal made 12 of 19 shots and personally outrebounded the Bullets' starting five 21-15.

Suns 102, Jazz 91

SALT LAKE CITY — Charles Barkley scored 25 points and Cedric Ceballos had 24, leading the Phoenix Suns over Utah.

Phoenix held the Jazz to just 37 percent shooting. The Jazz, 37-4 at home last season, have lost their first two home games this year.

The Suns took their largest lead at 68-49 with 8:20 left in the third quarter. Utah closed to 71-65 with 2:59 remaining in the quarter, but got no closer.

Phoenix led 80-69 at the end of the period. The closest Utah came in the fourth quarter was 82-74 with 7:30 to go.

SuperSonics 114, Lakers 102

SEATTLE — Gary Payton scored seven points and Shawn Kemp five during an 18-3 run in the final four minutes, leading the Seattle SuperSonics over the Los Angeles Lakers.

Payton's layup off a feed from Michael Cage put the SuperSonics ahead to stay at 100-99 with 3:28 left. Seattle outscored the Lakers 34-18 in the fourth quarter.

Derrick McKey led Seattle with 27 points, including eight in the final period. Kemp added 19.

Sedale Threatt scored 25 points for the Lakers and Byron Scott scored 19.

EXPANSION: Each team gets to select 36 players

(From 1C)

Farr and Mike Schooler; catchers Damon Berryhill, Mike LaValliere, Don Slaught and Matt Nokes; infielders Charlie Hayes, Billy Ripken and Randy Milligan; and outfielders Ivan Calderon and Dave Henderson.

Many of the players left unprotected are high-priced veterans, several of them coming off injuries. The Marlins and Rockies, who also are free to sign free agents such as Barry Bonds, Joe Carter, Ruben Sierra and Greg Maddux, have indicated they will not build by spending big bucks.

Most likely, the two new National League teams, who will each draft 36 players, will fill out their rosters with younger, less expensive players. And, if Colorado and Florida decide to go that way starting with pitching, there will be some good prospects available, such as Cincinnati's Chris Hammond, Montreal's Jeff Fassero and Texas' Scott Chiamparino and Brian Bohanon.

There also is the possibility that the Marlins and Rockies will draft players, then trade them.

Smith led the NL with 43 saves last season for St. Louis. Bell had 112 RBIs for the Chicago White Sox, and Lind of the Pittsburgh Pirates, recently won his first Gold Glove as the NL's finest fielding second baseman.

Each of the established 26 major league teams will lose one player in the first round of the draft. AL clubs then will be allowed to protect four more players and NL clubs can protect three more, and again each club will lose another player in the second round.

After AL teams protect four more players and NL teams protect three more, the Rockies and Marlins will pick in the third and final round. All NL teams will lose one additional player, while only eight AL teams will lose someone in the third round.

All players in each organization are available in the draft except those on the protected lists, plus those with no big-league experience who have less than three years' service if signed at age 19 or older, or have less than four years' service if signed at 18 or younger.

In addition, all players with no-trade clauses and all veterans with 10 years of major league service, including the last five seasons with the same club, must be included on protected lists, unless they have waived those rights.

Goddard 8th ends season with win

ODESSA — The Goddard eighth-grade football team of the Midland-Odessa Conference captured a 20-8 victory here Thursday night over Odessa Bowie.

The victory enables the Goddard squad to finish the campaign with a 7-1 mark, second in the conference. Goddard's only loss was by two points.

AGGIES: Texas A&M stays in the hunt for a national title

(From 1C)

30.

A final Cougars drive ended on downs near midfield with about 30 seconds left.

The Aggies tricked the Cougars in the second quarter with a 25-yard touchdown run on a "fumblerooski." Left guard Tyler Harrison picked the ball off the ground and ran around right end for the score.

But Klingler escaped the aggressive Aggies pass rush and completed a 23-yard touchdown pass to Fred Gilbert, leading the Cougars to a 17-10 halftime lead.

The Aggies pulled even in the third period when a roughing the kicker penalty allowed Aggie coach R.C. Slocum to erase a 35-yard field goal by Terry Venetoulias and go for the touchdown. Greg Hill weaved 10 yards with 9:55 left for the TD.

Tony Harrison keyed the drive by splitting double coverage and catching a 36-yard pass from Pullig to the Houston 42.

After Harrison's touchdown run, Klingler completed consecutive passes of 55 yards to Ron Peters and 35 yards to Keith Jack and set up a 1-yard run by Lamar Smith, who charged into the end zone behind Jeff Tait's block.

Majors era may be over at Tennessee, paper reports

Associated Press

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — The Johnny Majors era at Tennessee is almost over, the Knoxville News-Sentinel reported Friday.

The newspaper said an agreement has been reached for the university to buy out the remaining two years of Majors' contract, bringing an abrupt and surprising end to Majors' 16-year tenure at his alma mater.

The newspaper said Majors would be replaced by offensive coordinator Phillip Fulmer, 42, who guided the team to a 3-0 record to begin the season while Majors was recuperating from heart surgery.

Majors will coach the No. 23 Vols in the last three games of the season, the paper said.

Both the News-Sentinel and The Tennessean, Nashville's morning newspaper, cited unnamed sources in reporting Thursday that Majors, 57, has agreed to a financial deal presented by university president Joe Johnson and athletic director Doug Dickey.

A buy-out clause in Majors' contract says the university's liability extends only to his base pay of $96,000 a year, not to radio and television revenue and other perks that bring his annual package to about $311,000.

The News-Sentinel said the buy-out is believed to be worth more than twice the base salary.

Johnson and Dickey limited their public statements Thursday, saying only that negotiations were under way. Neither would confirm whether a buy-out was in the works.

Majors declined Thursday to comment about his contract status.

"I'll talk about Memphis State and our team," he said. "That's the most important thing about this week. I have nothing to elaborate about my contract or my status personally."

Majors has been on the hotseat since returning from heart surgery. Without him, the Volunteers had an unexpected good start to the season, upsetting Florida and Georgia when both were ranked above Tennessee.

Majors returned and the team won one game with him in the press box and one when he coached from the sidelines. Then the Vols lost to Arkansas, Alabama and South Carolina and fell from No. 4 to No. 24 in the AP poll.

Now the team is 5-3, ranked 23rd and virtually eliminated from the Southeastern Conference race entering Saturday's game with Memphis State.

Contract negotiations had begun before Majors had bypass surgery Aug. 25.

Majors is in his 16th year at Tennessee, where he starred as a player, finishing second in the Heisman Trophy balloting in 1956 to Paul Hornung.

He left a national championship program at Pittsburgh to a warm welcome home at Tennessee in 1977. Only recently has his status been clouded by questions about his health and by the Vols' string of three losses.

Majors has a 113-62-8 record at Tennessee. Since 1989 the Vols have won or shared two SEC championships and been to New Year's Day bowl games three consecutive years.

Tennessee has been to a bowl game in 11 of Majors' 15 seasons, and is in the running for one this season.

Committee recommends no Husky forfeitures

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The Washington Huskies' biggest victory of the season came in a Los Angeles hotel room Thursday.

A Pac-10 Conference committee recommended the Huskies not forfeit any of the eight games quarterback Billy Joe Hobert played in, meaning Washington still has a chance to play in the Rose Bowl.

The recommendation now goes to the Pac-10 Council, which meets Sunday in San Francisco. The council's recommendation will then be forwarded to the presidents and chancellors of the Pac-10 schools, who will make a final decision Tuesday.

Hobert was declared ineligible Tuesday after a published report prompted an investigation by the Pac-10 and Washington that confirmed he had borrowed $50,000 from the father-in-law of a friend last spring.

Hobert had taken the loan with no collateral, apparently relying on his pro football earning potential.

"The University of Washington is encouraged with the recommendation of the review committee," Washington athletic director Barbara Hedges said in a statement. "We will await the outcome of the Council's recommendation to the presidents and chancellors."

A negative recommendation would have ruined the Huskies' season and cost them a chance at earning a Rose Bowl berth for the third straight year.

Instead, Washington (8-1, 5-1 Pac-10) will keep its half-game lead over second-place Arizona, at least until Saturday when the Huskies host Oregon State and the Wildcats visit Southern California.

Asked if the news gave the Huskies a boost, Washington coach Don James said, "How could I not answer that without a positive answer?"

James said the coaching staff and players had carried on as usual in preparation for the game against Oregon State, a 34-point underdog.

"We really didn't dwell on it. We've asked the players not to," James said after practice in Seattle.

James would not allow his players to comment on Thursday's recommendation.

"There's a certain amount of maturity with this team," he said. "That's part of my job. You can't have a lot of loose cannons."

"It was a very difficult decision, although it was unanimous," said Douglas Hobbs, one of the three-member panel which made the recommendation. "The critical factor for the committee was its belief that the outcome of athletic contests are best settled on the field. We're better off sticking with the result rather than engaging in hindsight."

The committee met behind closed doors at a Los Angeles hotel for 4½ hours Thursday before its recommendation was announced. Other committee members beside Hobbs were Ted Leland, athletic director at Stanford, and Patricia Drapela, senior woman administrator at Oregon State.

Hobbs said the evidence was not compelling enough to recommend that Washington forfeit the eight games Hobert played in.

"We could not find any evidence at all that Washington knew about the loan and unless we were prepared to engage in 20-20 hindsight, we were unprepared to say they should have known," Hobbs said.

Hobert said he spent the $50,000 in three months, using it to pay bills, for entertainment and to buy cars, guns and a stereo.

The investigation found that the loans were improper because:

—a promissory note signed by Hobert included payback terms based on his future earnings as a professional football player;

—the loans were not from an established family friend;

—Hobert's professional potential played a part in the decision to provide the loans.

NCAA rules prohibit a player from accepting a loan based on his future earning potential as a professional athlete, or from receiving a loan that is not ordinarily available to other students.

Prices slump

NEW YORK — Futures prices for oil and refined products dropped Thursday on news that Iraq's deputy prime minister wants to ask the U.N. Security Council to lift economic sanctions, including an oil-export embargo.

In a letter to the council president, Tariq Aziz asked to speak to the council at its Nov. 23 meeting.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in December settled at $20.21 per barrel, down 26 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Local crude purchasers lowered their posted price 25 cents to $18.75, the lowest level since early April.

Natural gas prices were higher, with contracts for delivery in December settling at $2.443 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 4.5 cents.

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, lower-grade sour crude for delivery in December settled at $18.16 per barrel, down 26 cents.

News service

IBM and NBC said they plan to test the market with a desktop news service that would essentially turn a personal computer into a television, providing news and information on demand.

The project will use technology developed by Numedia Corp., another partner in the venture, that makes it possible to collect news information in both text and video form on a personal computer. The information, which can be indexed to a user's specific needs, can be stored and replayed on the computer monitor.

International Business Machines Corp. will attempt to sign a number of companies as subscribers to the pilot program of the service, NBC Desktop News. NBC and IBM said a leading drug company had already signed on, but both declined to name the company.

Jobless claims drop to 2-year low

■ Report is latest sign that 'employment situation has stabilized,' one economist says.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The number of Americans filing new claims for jobless benefits fell to a two-year low in late October and remained under 400,000 for the sixth straight week, the government reported Thursday.

Economist Thomas F. Carpenter of ASB Capital Management in Washington said the report was the latest sign that "the employment situation has at last stabilized."

"The claims numbers suggest that the hiring phase of the economic growth cycle is on the verge of kicking in," Carpenter said. "It won't kick in in a big way, but it will start kicking in."

The Labor Department reported first-time applications for unemployment insurance fell by 5,000 to 355,000 in the week ended Oct. 31, the lowest since claims totaled 354,000 in the week of Aug. 4, 1990. Many analysts had expected claims to rise.

Initial claims, which peaked at 530,000 on March 23, 1991, at the depths of the recession, have numbered less than 400,000 since Sept. 26.

Not included in the report, however, were 20,869 new claims filed under a special emergency unemployment program. That total was down from 23,497 for the week ended Oct. 24 and the lowest since 20,754 applications were filed in the week of Sept. 25.

The emergency program numbers, unlike the national figures, are not seasonally adjusted.

Many analysts believe the unemployment rate should improve if claims hold below 400,000. The rate fell for the fourth straight month in October, hitting a six-month low of 7.4 percent.

Others say the economy will have to grow faster than the 2.7 percent annual rate in the third quarter to generate substantial job growth. Only 27,000 jobs were created in October, for instance, less than half of September's 72,000 loss.

Still, the closely watched four-week average of new claims also dropped to a two-year low in the week ended Oct. 31. It fell from 371,500 to 364,500, the lowest since the average was 356,000 on July 14, 1990.

Many analysts prefer to track the four-week average because it smooths out the volatility of the weekly reports.

Twenty-nine states and territories reported decreases in weekly claims; 24 registered increases.

States reporting the largest decreases were Ohio, 2,914; Missouri, 1,748; New York, 1,146; California, 894, and Iowa, 662.

Missouri attributed its decrease to fewer layoffs in the transportation industry, while New York said it had fewer seasonal layoffs in a variety of industries. There was no explanation for Ohio, California and Iowa.

States registering the largest increases were Michigan, 2,666; Illinois, 1,354; South Carolina, 894; Kansas, 743, and New Mexico, 644.

Michigan noted an increase in layoffs in the automobile industry, while Illinois reported more layoffs in the trade and service industries and in manufacturing.

The other three states offered no explanation.

The national figures are adjusted for seasonal variations, but the individual state figures are not.

Airline fares set new trails in complexity

By Jane Baird
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Travelers normally have difficulty keeping up with rapid fare changes in today's fiercely competitive air-travel market, but fares turned byzantine in their complexity this week.

For example, a consumer who buys a 14-day advance, round-trip ticket from Houston to Los Angeles on Continental Airlines would pay $260 today, the last day of a special discount to selected cities, $400 on Friday and $420 on Saturday, when a fare increase is scheduled to go into effect.

That is, of course, if the fare increase does indeed stick. Continental and many of its competitors have twice postponed the increase that would push up unrestricted fares by $10 to $30 and excursion fares by $5 to $15.

The 21-day advance fare from Houston to Los Angeles, however, stays the same at $290 and the seven-day advance at $340.

Meanwhile, Continental is matching another discount program by Trans World Airlines just for travel during Thanksgiving.

Hispanic Market Expo's no longer Econ 101

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Visit the Se Habla Espanol Hispanic Market Trade Show & Media Expo and you'll find players in a fierce contest to serve an expanding market bigger than many Latin American nations.

"This show used to be about seminars like Economics 101. That's no longer the case," said Kathleen Jones, marketing director for Hispanic Business magazine, organizer of this week's show at a Los Angeles hotel.

The fifth annual expo billed itself as the only national Hispanic market trade show. It featured workshops on measuring TV audiences, marketing to "the new affluents," using supermarket scanner data, and the North American Free Trade Agreement.

That's because the trade agreement will create a common market with 110 million Spanish-speaking residents of Canada, Mexico and the United States.

Even without the free-trade agreement, companies are eyeing a domestic Hispanic population of about 25 million with a purchasing power approaching $200 billion.

"This is a bigger market than many Latin American countries. And it's right here. All you need is to understand it," said David Hausmann, executive vice president of Hispanic Market Connections Inc. of Los Altos.

"International companies, like Coca Cola, Sara Lee, Pillsbury, realize the importance of the domestic and world market," said Jim Loretta, senior vice president of Strategy Research Corp. of Miami. "They know that if they don't go after it, the Japanese, Germans, French and others are going to be there."

Demand for information about the Hispanic market is a boom industry for data companies like Hausmann's, which, despite the recession, has seen its business grow an average of 25 percent annually in recent years.

Clients include Nynex, American Honda Motor Co., Wells Fargo Bank and Mexicana Airlines.

Mexican companies, too, are realizing the potential of the U.S. Hispanic market and are jockeying to position themselves as trade barriers are reduced under the trade agreement.

Hispanic Market Connections recently did a study for a Mexican candy manufacturer interested in the U.S. market.

"They want to establish a beachhead in the Mexican-American market. We considered several factors — test packaging, design concepts and taste tests," Hausmann said.

Smith: GM is using Ford as benchmark

NEW YORK (AP) — General Motors Corp. is using Ford Motor Co. as a benchmark in deciding how far to cut the size of its white- and blue-collar work forces, chief executive officer Jack Smith said today.

"They've got good numbers, they're worth taking a look at," Smith said today during a break in a meeting with securities analysts to update Wall Street on the leading automaker's massive cost-cutting program.

Smith said he could see the salaried work force shrinking further — to as low as 60,000 — by the end of the decade. GM is in the process of cutting 20,000 salaried employees by the end of next year. That would leave the automaker with 71,000 white-collar workers by that time.

On the blue-collar side, GM is sticking with its estimate of having 250,000 hourly workers, down from 304,000, by the end of 1995.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Taking dividends keeps fund shares intact

By Bill Doyle

Q: I will need to draw money from my mutual fund investments to supplement the Social Security benefits. I will start receiving in January. I own shares in a bond fund, an equity fund and a money market fund.

What will be the best way to go about it? Should I take a specific dollar amount from each fund? Should I begin taking all the dividends, which I am now reinvesting to buy more shares? Or should I draw out a percentage of each fund?

Doyle

A: If you want to keep your investments reasonably intact, instruct each fund to start sending you checks for the dividends. That way, the number of shares you own will remain unchanged.

By doing that, the values of your accounts in the bond fund (which holds bonds as investments) and your equity fund (which holds common stocks) will rise or fall in line with the ups and downs in market prices of the securities those funds hold. The value of your money market fund won't change, because the share prices of such funds remain constant.

Money market mutual funds pay dividends monthly. So do most bond funds. Equity funds pay dividends either quarterly or annually, depending on each fund's policy.

Systematically drawing out a fixed-dollar amount or percentage will work fine, unless the amount you take out of a fund exceeds the fund's "total performance" — dividends and change in share value. When the latter happens, the value of a fund account starts dropping.

Most mutual funds have systematic withdrawal plans through which shareholders who have signed up receive checks regularly — usually monthly. The money for those checks comes first from dividends, then from capital gains distributions and, if necessary, from shares redeemed.

As long as the check amounts are not larger than a fund's total performance the account's value does not fall. But when withdrawal exceeds total performance, the account's value will shrink and eventually reach zero.

The generally recommended withdrawal rate is 6 percent for most funds. But don't set your withdrawal sights that high on money market funds. Most money market funds currently are yielding less than 3 percent.

Q: I invested $20,000 in a municipal bond fund that pays tax-free dividends. Now, I find out this is not right for me, as my income is so low I am in the 15 percent federal income tax bracket. From your column, I learned tax-free income is suitable only for people in the 28 and 31 percent brackets.

If I redeem my fund shares now, I will have to pay a 5 percent contingent deferred sales charge. Besides that, the fund has a 12b-1 charge.

Should I close out the account now, or wait five years?

A: The typical contingent deferred sales charge, also known as a back-end load, starts at 5 or 6 percent and drops one percentage point annually.

At this point, you might as well hang on until that charge drops to 4 percent — 12 months after you made that unwise investment.

Q: It is obvious you do not like mutual funds with 12b-1 fees constantly charged against fund assets. However, if a fund has good investment performance because it can hire better analysts with the 12b-1 money, doesn't that make the charge worthwhile for fund shareholders?

A: No! No! No! A 12b-1 fee does not pay analysts and other professionals who manage the fund and its investments. Funds with a 12b-1 fee use the money to pay for advertising and marketing of fund shares.

Fund management people are paid from the management fee, also called the "advisory" fee, levied on every mutual fund — with or without a 12b-1 fee.

Jury rules sleeping pill Halcion helped man kill

DALLAS (AP) — A jury Thursday awarded the family of a convicted murderer up to $2.15 million after deciding the sleeping pill Halcion helped the man kill.

But the actual damage award, which still must be approved by a judge, is likely to be less because the jury split the blame for the killing among the man, his doctor and Upjohn Co., maker of the drug.

The Dallas County jury reached the decision after nearly two days of deliberation in the nation's first civil trial over the drug's alleged side effects. Similar cases are pending around the country.

"We do disagree with the decision ... and we will pursue all available means of recourse," Upjohn spokeswoman Kaye Bennett said.

The lawsuit was filed by William Freeman, former Fort Stockton assistant police chief and his family. They said Halcion altered Freeman's personality and caused him to kill his friend Donnie Hazelwood in 1987. He is serving a life term in prison for the murder.

The Food and Drug Administration has reviewed Halcion several times since it was approved for use in 1982. It has become the most widely prescribed sleeping pill in the world.

An FDA advisory panel said in May the drug was safe but should carry stronger warnings about potential side effects.

The jury said 30 percent of the blame is with Freeman's doctor and 20 percent is with Upjohn. The jury held the company negligent but said it didn't act with malice.

Freeman began taking Halcion in early 1985 after back surgery, according to testimony in the five-week trial.

Freeman's personality gradually changed, relatives testified, and he started experiencing amnesia, psychosis and paranoia, some of the drug's reported side effects.

Freeman, who was convicted in 1989, stopped taking the drug while in prison. Relatives said his personality returned to normal.

Senate OKs school finance proposal

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Senate approved a proposed constitutional amendment Thursday to reform school funding, but Speaker Gib Lewis said there aren't enough votes to pass it in the House.

"Dealing with a 150 (House) members with their own ideas is a lot different than dealing with 31 (Senate) members and their ideas," said Lewis, D-Fort Worth.

A two-thirds vote of the Legislature is required to put a proposed amendment before voters. Lewis said he expects the full House to consider a proposal next week.

Although there are several school funding ideas proposed in the House, Lewis said, "Nobody's got a 100 votes." But he said lawmakers still are trying to reach a consensus.

Just hours after the Senate passed its proposal, a House committee passed a different measure.

The initial proposal approved 29-2 by the Senate would allow local property tax money to be redistributed statewide from wealthier to poorer school districts.

The current system, which transfers funds among districts within counties, has been ruled unconstitutional by the Texas Supreme Court. The court gave lawmakers until June 1, 1993, to fix the system.

The Senate proposal also would require that 95 percent of state and local education money be equitably distributed based on school districts' local property tax rates. In addition, it would set up a state bond program to help build classrooms.

Sen. Carl Parker, sponsor of the Senate proposal, said he's not "just all proud" of it. But he called it practical in light of strong opposition to such proposals as a statewide property tax.

Parker said the House committee's substitute would not pass the Senate.

The House version would take out the equity standard in response to concerns from poor school districts and others. To address concerns of wealthier districts, the House proposal also would limit how much local property tax money could be redistributed.

School officials have said state leaders' reform plan would result in large property tax increases because it does not anticipate sufficient state funding to even account for enrollment growth.

Parker said his measure wouldn't mandate local tax increases, but that school districts would have to get the money somewhere to continue current funding levels.

He said he hoped the proposal would provide incentive for Texans to "push us to do what's right, and what's right in my opinion is for the state to be the primary source of support for a state (education) system."

Parker predicted his amendment would end up in a conference committee to work out differences with whatever is passed by the House.

"The worst thing that we could do in this called (special legislative) session is nothing, and I would go a long way to avoid that eventuality," said Parker, D-Port Arthur.

State leaders have said they believe the Supreme Court will close the public schools if lawmakers don't meet the June deadline.

But Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, said the so-called Robin Hood approach of transferring local property tax money isn't the way to go. He said the Legislature should look at other alternatives.

"We're digging the same hole deeper and deeper, and bigger and bigger, and it's still the same hole," he said. Leedom and Sen. Cyndi Krier, R-San Antonio, voted against the proposal.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said the 29 senators who approved the measure showed their willingness to get the issue moving and negotiate with the House.

He also said he was optimistic about chances for House approval.

Officials take step in 'Iraqgate' inquiry

By Elaine Sciolino
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department has taken the first step toward appointing an independent counsel to investigate the government's handling of a politically sensitive bank-fraud case involving Iraq, the official leading the department's internal inquiry said on Thursday.

The official, Frederick B. Lacey, a former federal judge who was appointed by Attorney General William P. Barr last month to help him decide whether to appoint an independent counsel, said in an interview that allegations of wrongdoing by American officials were serious enough to move on to the next phase of the investigation.

Barr accepted that recommendation, Lacey said, and directed him to complete his inquiry by Dec. 8 and give him a final recommendation on whether Barr should seek the appointment of a special prosecutor. An independent counsel would be named by a panel of Federal Appeals Court judges.

Lacey made his recommendation to Barr on Oct. 26. He said that he was making his disclosure in response to news-organization inquiries about the status of his investigation.

Lacey's recommendation is a further embarrassment for Barr, who has resisted appointing a special counsel in the bank-fraud case and has expressed reservations in general about the law under which such prosecutors operate. By accepting Lacey's recommendation, Barr, in effect, acknowledged for the first time the possibility of criminal wrongdoing by Bush administration officials in the scandal involving the Atlanta branch of the Banca Nazionale del Lavoro.

While the escalation of the inquiry will not guarantee the appointment of an independent prosecutor, it was a significant procedural hurdle. In August, in his response to the House Judiciary Committee's demands for an independent counsel, the attorney general refused to begin a broader inquiry on the ground that the allegations of wrongdoing were not specific enough to warrant further investigation.

Barr appointed Lacey, a retired federal judge from New Jersey, last month under increasing pressure from Congress and from a ferocious struggle over the government's handling of the multibillion-dollar bank-fraud case among the Justice Department, the Central Intelligence Agency, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

From the moment he was named, Democratic Party lawmakers said that only a judicially-appointed prosecutor would have the independence to conduct a credible investigation of accusations that the Justice Department stifled the fraud inquiry to cover up an administration policy of aiding Iraq before the Persian Gulf war.

In a letter to Barr on Oct. 26, Lacey said he had not determined whether any American government officials had broken the law, but suggested that the case had progressed considerably since August. He said accusations made by Sen. David L. Boren, the Oklahoma Democrat who is chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, had convinced him that there was "sufficient and credible evidence" to move to the next stage in the process of appointing an independent counsel.

"I gave the attorney general my letter recommending that under the independent counsel statute the response to Senator Boren warranted in my judgment that a preliminary investigation be commenced," he said.

The next day, Barr authorized Lacey to begin the process, he said. Barr also told him to make his recommendation by Dec. 8, seven days before the Ethics in Government Act, which authorizes the appointment of independent counsels, expires.

On Thursday, Justice Department officials would not comment on Lacey's letter or Barr's decision to accept the judge's recommendation.

Boren said Lacey's recommendation did not go far enough.

"While this is a useful step, I continue to believe that the attorney general must act immediately to appoint an independent counsel," he said in a statement through his spokesman, Dan Webber. "It is the only way we can hope to get an aggressive resolution of the many disturbing questions surrounding the bank case."

The case involves charges against Christopher P. Drogoul, a banker accused of masterminding a scheme to extend billions of dollars in loans and credits to Iraq from the Atlanta branch of an Italian-owned bank in violation of the bank's regulations. Some of the loans were used to finance Saddam Hussein's weapons programs. At issue is whether the CIA fully cooperated with the Justice Department and prosecutors in the case, and whether the Justice Department bungled the prosecution.

In an extraordinarily blunt letter to Barr last month, Boren, who is also a lawyer, asserted that the Justice Department and the CIA had misled prosecutors, a federal judge, and the American people in the bank-fraud case.

He listed four reasons why Barr should reverse himself and appoint an independent counsel: the recent discovery of classified documents relevant to the case; the strong public criticism of the prosecution by Federal Judge Marvin H. Shoob, who headed the case but refused himself because of his strong opinions; a CIA admission that, at the strong urging of the Justice Department, it produced what the senator called a "misleading" letter to the prosecutors; and the announcement by the CIA and the Justice Department that they have started investigations of the case.

Boren told reporters on Thursday that his committee was expanding its own investigation into the case to include the questioning of White House as well as Justice Department and CIA officials.

Police seek men in connection with shooting death of officer

NEW YORK — Investigators are searching for three men who were seen with an off-duty police officer before she was shot to death Wednesday and dumped in a marshy lot near Kennedy International Airport, police said Thursday.

The three men are not suspects now, but investigators want to question them about what happened to the officer, Milagros T. Johnson, after she left a nightclub in Queens by herself between midnight and 1 a.m. on Wednesday, a police official said.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, also said it appeared possible that Officer Johnson, 25, made it to her home in Cambria Heights and then left again that morning.

A day after her body was discovered, shocked Police Department officials sent at least a score of detectives through neighborhoods in Queens and Brooklyn, searching for any witnesses or clues that might help explain the death of a woman described as a model officer and whose father was a police veteran who headed the department's Civilian Complaint Review Board.

And yet, while police had answered some questions about what the killing was not, they had frustratingly few answers to the primary ones: who killed her and why?

"I don't have the answers right now," a police spokesman, Lt. Raymond A. O'Donnell, said Thursday. "I wish I could tell you, but I just don't know."

Officer Johnson, who would have turned 26 on Sunday, was shot to death in her car sometime early Wednesday morning after she left Nobody's Pub, a nightclub on Northern Boulevard near the 109th Precinct station house, where she worked.

Her body, nude except for an overcoat placed over her head, was discovered by a jogger at 8:05 a.m. in an overgrown marshy lot beside Hook Creek in Rosedale. Her car, a 1992 Nissan Pathfinder, was found in East New York a few hours later.

O'Donnell said investigators had not yet discovered a suspect, a weapon or a motive. Police found the officer's purse, as well as bloodstains and teeth fragments, but he said he could not say whether investigators believed she had been robbed. And he said the officer's badge and .38-caliber revolver were missing, but it remained unclear if she had them with her when she died.

A spokeswoman for the Medical Examiner's office, which conducted an autopsy on Wednesday, said the officer died from three gunshot wounds to the head — shots, police said, fired from a .25-caliber handgun that has not been recovered.

The spokeswoman, Ellen Borakove, said the office did not yet have the results of tests to determine whether she had been sexually assaulted.
