Army general takes over Haiti

Namphy

Manigat

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Lt. Gen. Henry Namphy today declared himself president of Haiti after troops stormed the national palace and deposed civilian President Leslie Manigat.

"The future of democracy and liberty was at stake. The army must protect the superior interests of the country and must head the country," Namphy said in a speech broadcast late this morning on national television from the presidental palace.

"To this end, a military government has been formed with, as president, Gen. Henri Namphy," he said.

The coup ended four months of civilian government and put Namphy back in command of the nation he led for two years as head of a three-man junta. It came less than a week after a Manigat fired Namphy and tried to reorganize the military.

Namphy was surrounded by military leaders, including Lt. Gen. Jean-Claude Paul, who was the chief military ally of Manigat. The fate of Manigat, who was seized at his residence five miles north, was not known.

"The president betrayed your confidence and violated the constitution he swore to observe," Namphy said. "He took a path that led irrevocably to the most brutal form of dictatorship. To this end, he attacked the army and shook its high command to make it a docile instrument of personal power. He thus imperiled the conquest of Feb. 7."

Manigat was inaugurated president Feb. 7. The three-man junta, led by Namphy, that had led the nation for two years stepped down after Manigat took office. Namphy had been chief of the army.

Manigat retired Namphy as commander in chief of Haiti's 7,000-man army on Friday, charging him with insubordination in ordering the transfer of Paul — to an administrative post — and other high-ranking officers three days earlier.

A helmeted and fatigue-clad Namphy appeared on state-run television at about 1:30 a.m. in a broadcast from the palace shortly after the coup.

"The army will lead the country this way," he declared, waving an Uzi submachine gun and flanked by helmeted soldiers.

A man at Manigat's residence was on the telephone with the Miami News when soldiers moved in. Jean Lescouflair identified himself as director of the regional Information Ministry and a former Miami teacher.

Leaders will be discussing arms control

TORONTO (AP) — Leaders of the world's seven richest nations, having resolved or at least papered over disagreements on Third World debt and farm subsidies, turned their attention today to a discussion of President Reagan's arms control initiatives and other foreign policy concerns.

The officials began their second day of talks aimed at drafting a final political communique. The United States was pushing for inclusion of a proposal to prohibit airplane hijackers from refueling.

Senior officials from the seven summit nations had worked into the early morning hours today on the wording of proposals endorsing the U.S. arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union and a call for further negotiations to reduce non-nuclear forces in Europe.

Reagan, arriving for the talks, held in a windowless basement room of the Metropolitan Toronto Convention Center, was asked about a coup in Haiti which overthrew civilian president Leslie Manigat.

"We are assessing that right now," said Reagan. The president did not respond at all when asked for his opinion of a breakthrough agreement announced today with Japan which resolved a lengthy dispute over U.S. access to the beef and citrus market.

The landmark agreement calls for Japan to lower tariffs on beef and oranges over the next six years with U.S. officials predicting it could double the value of U.S. beef exports to the country, pushing them to more than $1 billion annually.

■ Political issues won't overshadow economic summit, related story — 7A

The 14th annual economic summit meeting between leaders of the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain, France, Italy and Canada began on Sunday and is scheduled to conclude with a final economic communique on Tuesday.

At the opening session, the Western leaders quickly decided to play down a contentious dispute involving farm subsidies and approved in principle a debt-relief package for the poorest countries of the world.

The leaders pledged in a statement after their first session Sunday afternoon to continue their close economic cooperation, which they credited for keeping the world economy out of a recession following the October stock market collapse.

Farms along border have enough water

EL PASO (AP) — Farmers throughout the United States and much of Texas are suffering through a drought, but in far West Texas, along the upper Rio Grande, rain is still considered an annoyance, officials say.

Although this year's runoff from mountain snows into the Rio Grande is 40 percent below average, the region's reservoirs and irrigation systems keep on watering the fields without need of a cloud ever crossing the desert sky.

Thanks to a streak of wet years before 1988 — from 1981 through 1987, the flow from the Rio Grande into Elephant Butte Reservoir totaled 78 percent above average — farmers in southern New Mexico and far West Texas are well-prepared for a run of dry years.

"I've been here a decade and I haven't seen a short-water year yet," said Edd Fifer, manager of the El Paso County Water Improvement District.

Both the El Paso and Elephant Butte irrigation districts rely on water stored at southern New Mexico reservoirs, and farmers in the district are guaranteed 3 acre-feet of water a year if it's available.

The last year that farmers had to make do with less was 1978, when only nine inches per acre were allotted.

Democrats say allegations against Wright GOP ploy

FORT WORTH (AP) — Democrats rallying to the support of House Speaker Jim Wright say allegations of ethical misconduct lodged against him are a Republican ploy to divert national attention from the GOP's problems.

"I don't think there's any doubt in the world that this is an attempt to try to spread the sleaze factor around," said Kathy Vick of New Orleans, a member of the Democratic Party Executive Committee.

"It's rough on him, and it's rough on us, but I think we've got to keep some perspective," she said.

Although publicly the Democratic congressman has exuded confidence he will be cleared of the allegations, brought by Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., friends and associates say he has been hurt deeply by the accusations.

"You hurt for him because he's hurt," said Craig Raupe, a Washington lobbyist and former aide who has been a friend of Wright's for nearly 40 years.

"It's probably the most serious he's been attacked...It's the most intense, most serious because it's being conducted by an entire political party in a critical election year."

The accusations pending before a House ethics committee have prompted speculation that Wright will be forced to give up his role as chairman of the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Sunday.

"He's convicted already in a lot of people's minds, and the rest of them just want to see how it plays out," said Claibourne Darden, a Democratic pollster. "He should gracefully and gentlemanly step aside."

However, Ms. Vick said she was confident Wright would chair the convention.

The ethics panel voted unanimously to look into six areas in which the 65-year-old Wright allegedly used his position to benefit himself and certain associates financially.

Some Democrats worry privately that the ethics case could harm the party.

"It's not helpful," said Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford.

The Star-Telegram conducted a phone-in poll asking whether the ethics panel was right in deciding to investigate Wright.

There were 808 "yes" votes and "677" no votes, but the poll was unscientific with one caller logging 81 "yes" votes.

Accusations against Wright involve a book publishing deal in which he received 55 percent of the royalties from a paperback published by a friend who did work on Wright's campaigns.

He is also being investigated for possibly lobbying on behalf of oil companies in which he may have had an interest and for pressuring federal officials on behalf of Texas bankers.

Wright has repeatedly said he is innocent.

The congressman's stamp is all over the 12th Congressional District in the form of federal dollars and defense industry contracts. But one of the most visible monuments to his clout is the Fort Worth Stockyards.

From 1974 through 1986, Wright helped secure more than $7.3 million from the Economic Development Administration to revitalize the area. Since then, Wright has drawn the ire of critics by securing another $11.8 million for future Stockyards development.

"I've never apologized for advocating Fort Worth projects," Wright said earlier this year. "There are people who say that's pork barrel. If I didn't think these were good for the United States, that would be pork barrel."

Decision expected from ECISD board on sex education program

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County school board members Tuesday night will decide if a comprehensive sex education program for all grades recommended by a 16-member task force should be implemented.

As in Midland schools, the program recommended for ECISD students "will emphasize abstinence (from sex) for teen-agers."

However, while recommending "the Sex Respect program" used in Midland schools be utilized "as resource material for program writing," the ECISD task force acknowledges the possibility some students may reject abstinence. Therefore, the task force recommends that students be informed about prevention of pregnancy through contraception and sexually transmitted diseases beginning in junior high school grades.

The ECISD Sex Education Task Force, made up of board members, school administrators, teachers, parents with children in school and community members, began studying the district's sex education program last fall and presented the recommended program to board members for consideration last month.

Included in the 11 recommendations presented to board members is the creation of the position of health supervisor, who would be responsible for both health and sex education.

As recommended, all students from kindergarten through sixth grade would be taught "concepts of self-worth and decision making (a drug-education program)."

Beginning in fifth grade, and continuing through sixth grade, students would be taught about physical changes at puberty and human reproduction.

Weather

Fair tonight with a low in the mid-60s. Tuesday's high in the mid-90s. Details on Page 2A.

JUN 20 88

WEATHER SUMMARY

Fair weather expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders can expect fair skies with the low in the middle 60s tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Winds will blow southeasterly 5-10 mph.

Tuesday will be much the same with the high in the middle 90s and winds increasing out of the southeast at 10-15 mph.

Sunday's high of 96 was 11 degrees cooler than the record high of 107 set for that date in 1951. The overnight low of 64 was 12 degrees warmer than the record low of 52 set for this date in 1973.

STATE

Summer-like weather greeted Texans on the first day of summer as a weak, high pressure system held its ground across the state amid fair skies.

A trough of low pressure in the central plains was trying to push into North Texas today, but was mostly only affecting the winds.

Some scattered clouds and patchy fog were present in the south and central parts of the state. Winds were mostly from the south and southwest at speeds ranging from 5 mph to 10 mph.

The National Weather Service forecast calls for more summer-like weather with generally partly cloudy skies and a chance of thunderstorms in the southeast. Daytime highs will be in the 80s and 90s with 100s along the Rio Grande. Overnight lows will be in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

Cloudy skies, isolated showers and thunderstorms lingered over much of the nation today after wracking parts of the central and southeastern United States with fierce winds and hail the size of softballs.

The storm systems produced severe weather Sunday afternoon and early evening but then dissipated.

In Georgia, strong thunderstorm winds blew trees onto power lines at Moran and downed several trees at Bolingbroke. The high winds also blew over a tin shed near Holly Ridge, La. In Minnesota, strong gusts brought down trees, a small garage and a barn.

Large hail hammered parts of Wisconsin. Martel reported hail the size of ping pong balls, Baldwin had golf ball-sized hail, and an area north of River Falls was blasted by hail as big as softballs.

Record highs were recorded Sunday in the Midwest and Plains, including 104 degrees at Lincoln, Neb., breaking a record of 103 for the date set in 1974; 95 degrees in Alpena, Mich., topping the 92-degree mark of 1964; and 103 in Sioux City, Iowa, beating the 99-degree record set in 1933 and 1953.

A tornado touched down briefly Sunday at McCook, Neb., but no damage or injuries were reported.

Skies were clear over Minnesota, much of Wisconsin and the central Plains early today; a few showers and thunderstorms persisted over northeastern Colorado and northwest Kansas. Isolated showers and thunderstorms lingered in the Southeast.

Today's forecast called for thunderstorms scattered from Maine across Vermont to New York; and showers and thunderstorms from Florida and Alabama into southeastern Texas, as well as from southern Idaho to northern Arizona and Southern California.

"We all feel we have made real progress in recent years. Our message is and should be one of confidence and optimism in dealing with the challenges confronting us," the leaders said.

In an effort to moderate their generally optimistic tone, the leaders interjected a note of caution in their joint statement, which was issued by Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

"There is no room for complacency. Difficult challenges remain," the statement said. "Our countries must develop further our economic coordination efforts. Sound policies must be continued."

U.S. Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III echoed the positive statement today, saying, "I think there is to some extent an air of satisfaction, but I must say I don't believe it's an air of complacency."

Baker, interviewed by CBS-TV, said finance ministers had engaged in an extensive discussion on inflation and that "the general consensus (is) that while we must remain vigilant, we think it is pretty well under control."

The U.S. official described the ministers as "pleased with the degree of exchange rate stability" that exists and have found "the world economy is in pretty good shape."

On the agenda today were two formal sessions and a dinner designed as a brainstorming session on long-range problems. Closing ceremonies are scheduled for Tuesday.

A 3,000-member security force has turned Canada's largest city into something of an armed camp. Guards were stationed on rooftops, patrolled Lake Ontario in speedboats and hovered overhead in helicopters.

Some 1,500 demonstrators, protesting a variety of causes, defied a police ban and attempted to march to the summit site on Sunday. More than 130 protesters were arrested when they hurled themselves over police barricades into the arms of riot control officers.

Reagan pronounced himself happy thus far with his eighth and final economic summit, a gathering the administration is hoping will spotlight Reagan's free-market economic policies.

"We are on the right track and we have to stay on it," Reagan was quoted by an aide as telling the government leaders during their first meeting.

Asked later why the initial session lasted 45 minutes longer than had been planned, Reagan told reporters, "We had a lot to talk about."

Previous summits have featured at times pointed criticism about America's huge budget deficits and failures of such countries as Japan and West Germany with huge trade surpluses to do enough to promote domestic demand.

But such talk has been banished from this gathering, in part because the world economy is doing well this year, with economic growth accelerating in most major countries and unemployment levels falling to the lowest levels of the decade.

The world leaders were also mindful that signs of disharmony between them has been blamed as a contributing factor in the collapse of stock markets last October. The Reagan administration in particular wanted to avoid any whiff of dispute lest another financial market tremor jeopardize Vice President George Bush's election chances.

At their first dinner Sunday night, the world leaders gathered at an exclusive country club on the shores of Lake Ontario to hear Reagan provide a briefing on his recently completed trip to Moscow.

A British government source said the dinner turned into a farewell party for Reagan.

"From us all, there were expressions of very warm thanks and praise for President Reagan's leadership and his achievements," said the official, who spoke on condition he not be identified. "There was a sense of occasion."

In the spirit of harmony, the administration, which would like to see a full elimination of farm subsidies by the year 2000, decided not to press this issue and will settle for language in the final communique which will direct the countries' trade ministers to continue negotiations on the matter.

WATER

An acre foot of water is the amount required to cover one acre to the depth of one foot.

"It really does spoil people," Fifer said. With plenty of water on hand, it's tempting to relax on water conservation practices. A dry year reminds people that every drop saved today may be needed later, he said.

But as long as water is left in Elephant Butte and Caballo reservoirs, farmers downstream don't have to pray for rain. In fact, rain is often an inconvenience.

Fields are watered at different times based on irrigation schedules, and dry up at different times. But a rainstorm means all the farmers will be demanding water at the same time a few days later. And a severe rain — such as the one that hit the Mesilla Valley in September 1987 — can damage crops.

At capacity, Elephant Butte and Caballo reservoirs can hold 2.4 million acre-feet of water — about four times the annual amount sent downstream for irrigation.

In recent years, extra water has been released downstream because the reservoirs were full due to the streak of wet years. This year, extra water was released from March 1 to May 13.

Farmers on the U.S. side of the river don't benefit from the extra releases because agriculture has adapted to the three-acre-feet guarantee. But some Mexican farmers have pumped the extra water left in the Rio Grande for their fields — and are upset that the water isn't there this year.

About two weeks ago, 40 to 50 farmers from Juarez demonstrated at the Riverside Dam in the Lower Valley, protesting the reduced amount of water available below the dam, said David Overvold, chief of the Water and Land Division of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation's Rio Grande Project.

The Bureau is obligated to deliver 60,000 acre-feet a year to Mexico from the Rio Grande according to a 1906 treaty.

The Hudspeth County Water and Reclamation District also relies on leftover water from the river, but district manager Matt Lochhausen said the farmers there still are getting enough.

In fact, the reduced flow in the river and excavation of the river channel in southern Hudspeth County has helped drain excess groundwater from the fields.

HAITI

He said Manigat was upstairs with government ministers discussing how to respond to Namphy's statement when soldiers arrived at about 3:08 a.m.

"I am hearing some noise coming like a machine gun," he said, lowering his voice. "They are entering the yard now...It seems like they are smashing the cars in the yard."

At 3:20 a.m. Lescouflair told the Miami News he could hear a security guard shouting, "Ne tirez pas! On sort!" ("Don't shoot! We're coming out!").

A few minutes later, someone was heard yelling "Hands up!" in French, the newspaper said. The last words from Lescouflair were, "Call my wife. Goodbye."

Haitian journalists close to the military said troops loyal to Manigat were killed when soldiers backed by three tanks freed Namphy from house arrest and then stormed the palace. Namphy had been held at his residence in Bon Repos, 15 miles north of the capital.

The front of the palace did not appear damaged and showed no sign of the battle that began Sunday night and raged into the early morning hours.

At 6:30 a.m., the number of soldiers patrolling streets was not unusually high. There were fewer cars and people than normal. Gas stations and some small service operations were open. Most stores were closed, as is normal at that hour.

Radio stations were not broadcasting news, only music, and international operators refused to accept calls.

One operator said Namphy ordered operators not to place calls, but it was possible to dial directly.

People on the streets were aware of what had happened, despite the lack of radio reports.

"It's not good for democracy, what happened, but it may be good for Haiti," said one 22-year-old unemployed laborer. "Maybe we cannot talk, but maybe we can work."

The fighting began after a 10-minute blackout at about 7:30 p.m. Sunday. The streets of this Caribbean capital became deserted. Automatic and heavy caliber gunfire broke out around the national palace.

Heard from a hotel two blocks away, it died down, then surged for 1½ hours again just after midnight.

SEX

The task force recommends that the elementary (K-6) sex education program be taught to boys and girls separately. The junior high program would separate boys and girls "for appropriate portions of the instruction." Senior high programs would "teach all materials in mixed groups."

Beginning in seventh grade, the course of instruction would include:

— decision-making skills, personal relationships, basic parenting skills and child development.

— anatomy and physiology of male and female.

— reproduction.

— teen-age pregnancy.

— prevention of pregancy, abstinence and contraceptives (risks, dangers, myths, limitations, correct information and that use as a birth control is not advocated).

— sexually transmitted diseases.

In grade levels 9 or 10-12, the instructional program would include:

— importance of the family and respect for parents' attitude toward dating.

— dating — need for self-control and standards, difference in male and female reactions on a date, ideas for avoiding problem situations and the advisibility of abstinence for teen-agers.

— future life goals require good, moral behavior.

— differences between love and infatuation.

— reproduction.

— marriage and family planning.

— contraceptives.

— sexually transmitted diseases.

In its 11 recommendations the task force says a preview committee should be appointed to review available visual-education materials and select those for use in the district sex-education program.

The committee, which would be composed of five or more members, would include teachers, consultants, administrators and members of the task force or other community representatives.

The task force further recommends the sex-education program "be totally scripted at all grade levels and teachers will follow these scripts explicitly in presenting the program to students."

Task force members also recommended special education students be included in regular sex-education programs "where suitable," with "special instructional" programs to be developed as required.

The ECISD board meeting will be held at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the school administration building.

Law barring discrimination in clubs upheld

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today upheld the New York City law barring discrimination against women and minorities by private clubs with more than 400 members, giving cities and states new ammunition in a growing legal assault on such practices.

By a unanimous vote, the justices ruled that the New York City law is constitutional, at least as it is written.

The law banning discrimination by public accommodations exempts "distinctly private organizations."

But it doesn't exempt non-religious groups if they have more than 400 members, provide regular meal service and regularly get their members' dues paid by non-members such as the members' employers.

The New York State Clubs Association, comprised of 125 private clubs and associations, challenged the New York City law soon after it was enacted in 1984.

The city had initiated proceedings against four men-only clubs — the 10,003-member New York Athletic Club, the 4,329-member University Club, the 1,900-member Century Association and the 1,600-member Union League Club.

Lawyers for the clubs association argued that the law wrongly creates an irrebutable presumption that such organizations are not truly private if they have more than 400 members and meet the other criteria.

Pentagon probe stifled by Justice, senator says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Republican senator is releasing evidence to back up his contention that the Reagan Justice Department stifled allegations three years ago that defense contractors and private consultants were illegally obtaining Pentagon weapons secrets.

Sen. Charles Grassley says the massive Pentagon bribery investigation now under way could have started much earlier during the Reagan administration.

The Iowa Republican said he planned today to read into the Congressional Record testimony that was blocked by the Justice Department in 1985 from being delivered to a subcommittee he chaired.

The October 1985 testimony alleged that private consultants were regularly receiving classified details about U.S. weapons systems, Grassley said in an interview Sunday with The Associated Press.

"The Justice Department could have pursued this aggressively more than three years ago but they didn't," he said.

The 2-year-old probe has focused chiefly on Navy weapons-buying. It became public last week when FBI and Naval Investigative Service agents conducted coast-to-coast raids on the offices of past and present Pentagon officials, private consultants and contractors.

U.S. Attorney Henry Hudson has said privately that perhaps as many as 200 indictments could be expected out of the investigation, a government source said Sunday.

In October 1985 Grassley was chairman of the Senate Judiciary administrative practices subcommittee, a panel which he used to examine defense procurement practices. Grassley is a frequent critic of what he calls widespread waste and abuse in Pentagon spending.

Grassley said Justice Department officials blocked the testimony of Robert Segal, a member of the Procurement Fraud Unit, a special Justice Department office set up to investigate waste in the military budget.

Segal was prepared to testify that private consultants regularly received classified Pentagon documents that should not have been available outside the government, Grassley said.

Segal also reported at the time that "many of these (defense) companies appear to have espionage units whose main function is to obtain copies of highly classified documents in order to give their companies a competitive edge," Grassley said.

Grassley said the allegations predated the current investigation. "This goes back much before what we're seeing now," he said.

Justice Department spokesman John Russell declined to comment Sunday on the senator's complaints.

President Reagan, attending a summit meeting of the leaders of western democracies in Toronto, refused to comment Sunday on reports that former Navy Secretary John Lehman Jr. may have warned his longtime ally, military consultant Melvyn Paisley, that Paisley was under investigation.

"I am not going to comment until we have all the information," Reagan said.

Lehman has not returned numerous phone calls from The Associated Press seeking comment.

Paisley, a former top Navy official and close friend of Lehman, has emerged as a principal target of the investigation. The FBI is looking at Paisley's dealings with a number of major defense contractors that hired him as a consultant shortly after he left his Navy job in April 1987.

Grassley said the scandal results from an atmosphere caused by "a business-as-usual, good-old-boy network where people move from the Pentagon to cushy jobs in private industry and everybody looks out for their friends."

Mississippi, Ohio again open to barges

Associated Press

Hundreds of barges resumed travel along the drought-shrunken Mississippi and Ohio rivers, congressmen and senators examined stunted crops in the Plains and a Sioux medicine man sought heaven's help to end the long dry spell.

"Gentlemen, start your engines; the rat race is on," a river boat pilot said over the radio after authorities reopened the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.

Showers and thunderstorms Sunday dampened many parts of America's parched midsection, including Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska, but provided little relief, the National Weather Service said.

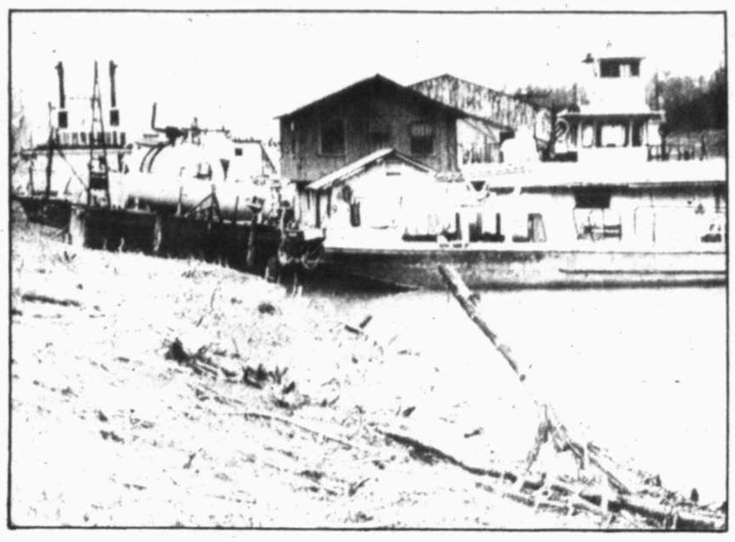

Hot weather aggravated the drought, with temperatures of 100 degrees and up recorded as far north as Minnesota. Today's forecast was no better: continued hot, dry weather over the Midwest and Plains.

Two counties of dry eastern North Dakota got up to an inch of rain during the weekend, but it came with hail as big as baseballs and 70 mph wind that flattened crops.

Sections of the Mississippi and Ohio had been closed for days so dredges could deepen channels made shallow by the drought, backing up an estimated 1,800 barges on the Mississippi and nearly 700 on the Ohio.

River traffic flowed most of Sunday, but was shut down for the night at one dangerous point on the Mississippi nine miles north of Memphis, Tenn., said Bill Schult, an Army Corps of Engineers spokesman.

The last of the barges stranded on the Mississippi should make its way through a newly cleared channel near Greenville, Miss., by tonight, said Petty Officer Dean Jones, a Coast Guard spokesman in Memphis, Tenn.

AP Laserphoto

Lack of rainfall has this boat dock on the Yazoo Diversion Canal at the Port of Vicksburg, Miss., partially out of the water. Tows have been forced by the Mississippi River's low water level to leave many of their barges parked along the canal until the water level rises.

At noon Sunday, 47 to 52 tows were waiting to go north or south through the channel, Jones said.

On the Ohio, 24 tows were able to pass downstream after the channel at Mound City, Ill., reopened Sunday afternoon, said Coast Guard Ensign Rick Johnson.

By sundown, 70 tows were waiting to head upstream or downstream, Johnson said.

Sunday's rainfall amounted to two-thirds of an inch or less, the weather service said.

"We got a half-inch," Doris Fruend said Sunday from the farm she and her husband, Lester, operate east of Merrill, Wis. "Well, the corn, it still curled — but it kept it alive."

Even had hard rain fallen, much of it would have rolled off because the ground is too dry, said weather service meteorologist Rainer Dombrowsky. Farmers need 24 to 36 hours of light rain, he said.

Six U.S. senators and two congressmen toured acre after acre of bone-dry farms during the weekend. In Menoken, N.D., Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., told farmers he would work on legislation to guarantee crop deficiency payments to drought-stricken farmers.

"When I walk out in a field and the greatest source of protein is grasshoppers, we've got a problem," Leahy, chairman of the Senate's Agriculture Committee, said Saturday.

North Dakota is suffering the most, and is expected to lose 40 percent of its farm income, according to the U.S. Agriculture Department.

Federal officials warned that the drought poses another danger: increased pollution in the nation's rivers, lakes and wells.

The millions of streams and rivers that carry off sewage, industrial wastes, agricultural chemicals and other toxins will have higher concentrations of the pollutants due to low water levels, said Ben Jones, assistant regional hydrologist for the U.S. Geological Survey in Menlo Park, Calif.

In Clyde, Ohio, Sioux Indian Chief Leonard Crow Dog pointed a peace pipe and blew an eagle-bone whistle toward the four compass points in a ceremony he says has never failed to produce rain.

"Four days from now, there's going to be thundering, lightning, rain," Crow Dog promised after Sunday's 30-minute ritual that attracted 4,000 spectators in the parched northern Ohio town east of Toledo. Early today, thunderstorms brought heavy rain to extreme northwestern Ohio, far from Clyde's parched fields.

Waste still flowing into streams may contaminate water

WASHINGTON (AP) — City, farm and industrial waste continues to pour into the nation's rivers and streams even as the waterways shrivel from drought, increasing the danger of contaminated water across the country.

Drought has reduced the Mississippi River to its lowest flow in years and dropped the St. Lawrence below normal for the first time in two decades, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.

Low stream flows are reported in the Northwest and Southeast, the Great Plains and in California — threatening drinking water and aquatic life, scientists warn.

Ben Jones, assistant regional hydrologist for the Geological Survey in Menlo Park, Calif., said "common sense would tell you that if you have less flow in a stream, there is less dilution of whatever components are being carried by that stream."

He cited recent complaints from Northern California that large concentrations of sewage discharge have appeared in streams.

Normally these streams have enough water to handle the treated sewage, Jones said. But because of dry conditions, the volume of sewage suddenly exceeded that of clean water.

In recent days the drought-induced low water in the Mississippi and Ohio rivers has attracted attention by stranding barges. But it also has concentrated pollutants in the two rivers, which take the runoff from much of the nation.

Bob Meade of the Geological Survey's Denver office recently returned from a water-quality survey of the Mississippi. He said one problem scientists found was a broken sewer in Memphis that was spewing thousands of gallons of "floatable solids" into the river.

Meade's detailed pollution measurements won't be completed for months, but he concurred with Jones that reduced river flows increase the concentrations of chemicals such as nitrates and herbicides.

Warm weather and low water levels lead to stress on much aquatic life, added Gary Pederson, a Geological Survey hydrologist in Atlanta.

Pentagon scandal reads 'like Class C script,' Jackson says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic presidential contender Jesse Jackson took aim at the growing Pentagon scandal, saying it reads "like a Class C Hollywood script."

In a speech here Sunday, Jackson criticized the alleged corruption and fraud in Defense Department weapons-buying, while summing up the accomplishments of his campaign.

Jackson is officially continuing his presidential bid, even though Michael Dukakis has a numerical lock on the Democratic nomination.

Dukakis and Republican George Bush took a day off from campaigning Sunday. The Massachusetts governor spent the day in Boston and the vice president was at home in Washington.

The defense investigation, a nationwide probe involving private defense consultants, Pentagon officials and defense contractors, was made public last Tuesday as agents searched 38 office and homes to find evidence of bribes and gratuities paid for disclosure of confidential contracting information.

The information allegedly gave recipients a competitive edge in submitting bids for contracts.

"This is beginning to read like a Class C Hollywood script," Jackson said in a speech to Citizen Action. "Key consultant working for Boeing receives a $100,000-plus bonus for going to the Navy...a golden handshake for future services. Scene 1."

Jackson continued his description of the federal probe: "Forty-five of the top 100 (defense contractors) under criminal investigation. The defense industry employs 6 million people — holding them hostage. A $150 billion business a year...Revolving door — contractors and the Pentagon."

The Democratic candidate said the military budget can be trimmed "without cutting our defense. This corruption, waste and cost overruns will not make us more secure."

Jackson also criticized spending money to defend Europe and Japan four decades after World War II. "Let Europe and Japan share more of their defense," he said.

Citizen Action describes itself as a national political organization dedicated to citizen participation in economic and political decisions. The group, which advocates primarily liberal causes, counts suburbanites and blue-collar workers among its 1.5 million members in 24 states.

The Democratic candidate, citing the frequently asked question "What Does Jesse Want?" said better queries would be "What has Jesse built? What have we built? What do we represent?"

Virginia fields black candidates in both parties

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A black Democrat is frequently mentioned as the leading candidate for governor next year. Now Republicans have tried to steal some of the opposition's thunder by nominating a black as their candidate for the Senate.

Lt. Gov. L. Douglas Wilder is a moderate Democrat favored despite his unannounced status to win the party's nomination for governor next year. If elected, he would become America's first black governor since Reconstruction.

Their fortunes are partly a product of circumstance, said Larry Sabato, a University of Virginia political scientist.

The state's voting age population is 16 percent black, large enough to be courted but not large enough for there to be racial polarization, Sabato said.

The GOP decided to try to woo blacks away from Democrats by nominating Dawkins, the first black Republican to run for Congress in Virginia since Reconstruction. Dawkins is best known for his unsuccessful bid for the party's lieutenant gubenatorial nomination in 1985, in an election eventually won by Wilder.

"It's a natural reaction to get to the massive black vote for Democrats," Sabato said of Dawkins' Senate nomination. "It makes it very difficult for the Republicans to win when they have to get an overwhelming white vote. They need to break down this barrier."

Dawkins, a 67-year-old retired minister who works as a lobbyist in Washington, was nominated June 11 in a three-way contest.

His rousing nomination speech, which mixed praise for God with criticism of Democratic flag-bearer Charles S. Robb, won the support of a large bloc of uncommitted delegates.

Wilder, a lawyer and former state senator from Richmond, said the nomination seemed to be "orchestrated to arrive at a point and that point is other than winning."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Spend some time regrouping and then go after what you really want. Clear the cobwebs away and you will find it much easier to increase cash flow, settle family affairs and build more fulfilling relationships. Cast off those old guilt feelings you carry from the past or you will never achieve top results. Focus on the future! A romantic relationship moves to a higher level of pleasure and understanding. Cover your bets and you will enjoy good luck.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Michael Gross and Meredith Baxter Birney of "Family Ties," pitcher Rick Sutcliffe, philosopher Jean-Paul Sartre, first lady Martha Washington, actress Jane Russell, artist Rockwell Kent, author Mary McCarthy, actor Monte Markham.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Bold moves are required to keep a favorite project in play. Involve people who are willing to make personal sacrifices to achieve a worthwhile goal. Avoid mixing business with pleasure.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your willingness to start at the bottom in order to reach the top again surprises. You know what you are doing but will have to convince others. Maintaining a relationship shows your new maturity.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Ask someone special to lunch and bounce an idea off him. Sort paperwork into piles by priority. Organization is a must if you hope to advance your career goals now. Work swiftly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Artists inspire you to make a change in your lifestyle. Your interests expand. Finding common ground will save a faltering relationship. Build for the future together. Shared goals are a powerful bond.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your mind may be far away. Better come down to earth and deal with a money matter before it escalates. A door opens today that was closed last month. Walk right in!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Harmony on the home front puts you in a cheerful mood. Tackle projects you can complete on your own. Put your best food forward. Buy yourself something extravagant. You deserve it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Hard work brings big gains now. Taking a realistic approach has paid off. Your creativity is at a peak. Make the most of it! Look for a hidden message in romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Keep an appointment with a doctor or dentist for a checkup. You need to do some serious thinking about your lifestyle. Change what you do not like! A good evening for entertaining.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You get the cooperation you need to see a plan through to completion. Pay more attention to your intuition; it will lead you to success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You can make important new business contacts today. A temporary alliance could serve your financial needs. Do not go overboard about someone you do not like. A romantic evening is in store.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Meditation leads to greater self-knowledge. Involvement with a business friend who has romantic intentions is not a good idea. A dream comes true! Celebrate with your favorite person. An important bond deepens.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone keeps a promise. Your faith in this person is restored! A teen-ager seeks your help; give it but do not be afraid to speak the truth. Mutual respect is vital.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A108752 ♡93 ◇A106 ♣A7
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—You need do no more, for the moment, than bid three spades. While partner's jump to three clubs was invitational, not forcing, your suit rebid is a one-round force. To jump would both crowd the auction and bypass three no trump, which could be your best game.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A108752 ♡93 ◇A106 ♣A7
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—You almost surely have a slam if partner has a heart control; indeed, you might even have a grand slam. To launch your investigation, make a cue-bid of five clubs. Note that, with spades as the agreed trump suit, you are not looking for a club contract but are probing for slam.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ92 ♡KJ6 ◇K92 ♣QJ8
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Your opening no trump promised a balanced hand of 16–18 points. You are minimum for such action, despite the fact that you have excellent support for partner's suit. He might have a complete bust. Trust him and pass.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ92 ♡KQ6 ◇K108 ♣K109
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Even though the same limits apply to your opening bid, this time you have a near maximum no trump opening with excellent support. You can show that by raising to three spades.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ92 ♡KJ6 ◇K92 ♣QJ8
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Despite your superb trump support, you have a minimum no trump opening bid. You can get this message across to partner by simply raising to four spades.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ2 ♡KJ6 ◇K92 ♣AJ103
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—This time you want to tell partner that you have good trump support and a maximum no trump opening bid. You do that by making the cheapest available cue-bid; in this case, four clubs.

Veterans meet with Jane Fonda

Fonda

NAUGATUCK, Conn. (AP) — Vietnam veterans held a conciliatory meeting with actress Jane Fonda, then began taking down signs promoting the sale of bumper stickers that read "I'm not Fond'a Hanoi Jane."

About 25 Connecticut and Massachusetts veterans met Saturday night with Fonda, who angered U.S. soldiers in Vietnam when she traveled to North Vietnam in 1972.

The meeting followed protests by some veterans of her plans to film part of a movie near here this summer.

Fonda apologized on national television last week for hurting veterans with some of her anti-war activities, including posing for photos next to a North Vietnamese anti-aircraft gun during the trip to Hanoi and saying prisoners of war were lying about having been tortured.

Brian Powell, who served in Vietnam in 1969-70, said Fonda told the veterans that "in her anti-war passion she did some things that were very stupid and very hurtful to Vietnam veterans."

Powell, 37, said Fonda's message was "she was not anti-veteran, she was anti-war."

Fonda said in a statement Sunday that she had wanted to meet with local veterans since January, when protests heated up over her plans to film "Union Street" in nearby Waterbury and in Holyoke, Mass.

Hoffman

CHICAGO (AP) — Activist Abbie Hoffman says he was booted off a Continental Airlines plane at O'Hare International Airport after a stewardess wrongly accused him of smoking marijuana in the lavatory.

Friday's incident occurred after Hoffman boarded a flight for Newark, N.J., the 51-year-old former Yippie leader said in a telephone interview Sunday from Northampton, Mass., where he was attending an anti-nuclear rally.

Hoffman said he went into the lavatory minutes before takeoff. Suddenly, fire alarm bells started ringing.

"Then the stewardess pushes in the door with her knee like a storm trooper, and starts shouting, 'You've been smoking marijuana!'" Hoffman said. "I said, 'Like hell, bring on the dogs. I'm not smoking anything.'"

Hoffman said he was ordered off the plane, was briefly questioned by an official, then allowed to board Continental's next flight to Newark.

Ned Walker, a Continental spokesman, said it was company policy not to release passenger names, but confirmed that a male passenger was ordered off the flight.

He said crew members and passengers "smelled a burning odor coming from the lavatory" after smoke alarms went off while the plane was refueling.

BOSTON (AP) — Humorist Erma Bombeck said she could sense many of the students attending Northeastern University's commencement were worried venturing out into the world for the first time.

"I tend to agree with...Woody Allen who, when he was asked if he wanted to live forever in the hearts of his contemporaries, said, 'I just want to go on living in my own apartment,'" Bombeck, 51, told a near-capacity crowd Sunday at Boston Garden.

The newspaper columnist and author encouraged the nearly 2,460 undergraduates to relish life's commonplace events during their pursuit of success.

"Success isn't some large plateau of champagne wishes and caviar dreams. Success is a condition that dwells inside of every one of you and surfaces in your life when you least expect it."

Jackson

NEW YORK (AP) — Elvis Presley's maroon nylon underpants, Michael Jackson's fedora and Bob Dylan's handwritten lyrics were among the mound of rock 'n' roll memorabilia that fetched more than $500,000 on the auction block.

The parcel of Presley's personal items, including the underpants, an electric razor, hairbrush and black socks, went for $605, said Laura Stewart, a spokeswoman for Sotheby's auction house.

A Gibson model J-200 guitar Presley used in the late 1950s and early 1960s sold for $27,500, the top price paid at Saturday's auction, Ms. Stewart said.

Jackson's autographed fedora sold for $4,125.

Dylan's handwritten lyrics for "I Want You" went for $8,800, a John Lennon gray wool suit fetched $3,300 and one of Lennon's guitar straps sold for $8,250, she said.

About 30 bidders and more than 300 spectators gathered to see 226 lots of memorabilia that sold for $533,477, Ms. Stewart said. The T.J. Martell Foundation for Leukemia, Cancer and AIDS Research received $127,600 of the proceeds, she said.

MOREHEAD, Ky. (AP) — Writer James Still, a chronicler of life in Appalachia, was honored by Morehead State University with its first Appalachian Treasure Award.

"I was astonished," Still, 82, said in a telephone interview. "It was a great honor."

The award, dedicated to promoting and preserving Appalachian culture, was presented Sunday at the 12th annual Appalachian Celebration, a summer festival featuring traditional music, dance, storytelling, peotry and arts and crafts.

Still, 82, has been called the "psalmist of the mountains" for his stories and poems about Appalachia. His first work was a 1937 book of poems, "Hounds on the Mountain." His first novel, "River of Earth," was published in 1940, followed by a book of short stories, "On Troublesome Creek," in 1941.

Spellman

ROCKVILLE, Md. (AP) — Former Rep. Gladys Noon Spellman was remembered by her colleagues as a tireless worker for Maryland who earned admiration across political boundaries before a heart attack left her in a coma on the eve of her final election.

Mrs. Spellman died Sunday at the Hebrew Home of Greater Washington after being in a coma for eight years. She was 70.

She never regained consciousness after suffering a heart attack Oct. 31, 1980, days before she was easily elected to a fourth term from the 5th District outside Washington D.C.

Mrs. Spellman, a Democrat, spent much of her three terms in Congress pushing hard for road improvements and benefits for federal workers.

"Her contributions have made life better for all Marylanders, not just those living in her district," said Bob Douglas, spokesman for Gov. William Donald Schaefer. "Mrs. Spellman was a determined, hard-working representative of Maryland who refused to give up."

INS compassion wise, humane move

The Immigration and Naturalization Service seems to be taking its softer image seriously. After a year of amnesty for undocumented aliens, during which the INS displayed a welcome new talent for diplomacy, the agency now is proposing that legal status be granted to the spouses and children of aliens who qualified under the amnesty program.

The question of what should be done about the families of undocumented persons was one of the most emotional issues of amnesty year. Under the law, only aliens who could prove they had been living in the United States before 1982 were eligible to apply for amnesty. But many thousands of husbands, wives and children entered the country after that deadline.

Although the law gave them no discretion in the matter, INS officials let it be known that no deliberate efforts would be made to split families by finding and deporting the illegal spouses and children of aliens who qualified under the amnesty provisions.

With the most recent move the INS has gone a step further with a suggestion that the waiting period imposed on resident aliens before they may apply for full U.S. citizenship be reduced from five years to three. Once the aliens have become citizens, they may petition for visas for their immediate family members.

INS spokesman Verne Jervis, referring to the legal status of aliens' families, makes the point aptly: "They'll be eligible eventually, so why not do it sooner?"

To be sure, there is an element of pragmatism in this latest amnesty compassion. The INS is keener than most to tie up the loose ends of amnesty, which have left it in the precarious position of having to make decisions by divining the mood of Congress, rather than by applying definitive laws. No doubt the sooner things are bundled together, the happier the INS will be.

INS provision for the spouses and children of those granted amnesty is to be welcomed as a humane and practical answer to a pressing social problem affecting as many as 200,000 persons. It deserves the bipartisan support of Congress.

Memo reports Bush role in drug war

WASHINGTON — The titular drug czar of the Reagan administration, Vice President George Bush, has fought the drug war with "little more than lip-service and press releases," according to a confidential summary of Bush's work over the last eight years.

Jack Anderson

The memo was secretly prepared by Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla., at the request of Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, the apparent Democratic presidential nominee. We have seen the memo, which zeroes in on the assignments President Reagan gave to Bush and how the vice president carried them out.

It smacks of electioneering and, no doubt, Dukakis will use it heavily in his campaign. But many sources on Capitol Hill, Republicans and Democrats, consider English to be a fair arbiter on the drug issue. The memo is based on exclusive information regarding drug enforcement programs, and on more than 40 congressional subcommittee hearings covering the drug wars between 1981 and this year.

"There has been very little substance behind the rhetoric," the memo charges, "and some of the major interdiction problems have yet to be resolved. The president assigned Vice President Bush to coordinate and direct Federal anti-drug abuse programs among the various law enforcement agencies. However, eight years later it is apparent that the task has not been accomplished."

The memo traces the almost frenzied efforts of the administration to combat drug trafficking with bureaucracy — creating coordinating agencies, appointing task forces and organizing policy boards. One task force with Bush at the head made promises that the administration didn't keep, according to this chronology from the Democrat's memo:

■ Jan. 28, 1982 — President Reagan creates the South Florida Task Force to coordinate drug enforcement efforts there and puts Bush at the head of it.

■ Feb. 16, 1982 — In a speech in Miami, Bush promises to use sophisticated military radar aircraft to track smugglers' planes.

■ Feb. 24, 1982 — Bush orders the Defense Department to devote 12 hours a day in surveillance by Navy E2-C aircraft. If the E2-Cs are not available, the vice president says he will substitute Airborne Warning and Control System aircraft, or AWACS.

■ May 1982 — By this time, two of the four E2-C planes have been transferred out of south Florida.

■ June 1982 — The E2-C flights are down to less than 40 hours a month, not the promised 360 hours. English announces he will hold a hearing "to examine surveillance coverage" and the flight hours go up slightly.

■ October 1982 — The General Accounting Office reports that "it is doubtful whether the (South Florida) task force can have any substantial long-term impact on drug availability."

■ February 1983 — House Republicans report at a congressional hearing that Bush will no longer be involved with the South Florida Task Force. English announces the task force will be disbanded.

■ March 23, 1983 — Reagan establishes the National Narcotics Border Interdiction System (NNBIS) and puts Bush in charge.

■ April 1985 — The NNBIS is merged with yet another administration drug program, the National Drug Policy Board. Bush is not on the board.

■ July 1985 — The GAO reports that while NNBIS was a good idea the results were "minimal, and the improvements NNBIS has achieved have fallen far short of substantially reducing the flow of illegal drugs into the United States." A Customs Service official tells a congressional subcommittee that if Bush gave him an order as head of NNBIS he would have to "discuss it with the agency and the department. We would not just follow orders, of course."

BACK IN BUSINESS — The world's most notorious terrorist, Abu Nidal, is back in business after a mysterious absence, and the popular wisdom is that Nidal is working with Mommar Gadhafi. But according to our intelligence sources, Nidal held back his terrorists for a year while he negotiated with the Palestine Liberation Organization about bringing his organization back into the fold. The negotiations failed and he is back in business, still running his own show. It is true he spent some time in Libya, but intelligence reports claim Abu Nidal is drawing most of his support from Iran with his minions based among the Iranian-backed terrorists in Lebanon.

MINI-EDITORIAL — For all its weaponry, the United States can't get the ammunition it needs for the war on drugs. Eli Lilly & Co. has declined to produce and sell to the government an herbicide called Spike, which can kill cocaine crops. Eli Lilly officials aren't saying why, but the State Department thinks the company is afraid that drug lords will retaliate against corporate types stationed in Latin America, according to The Washington Post. We can't blame Eli Lilly for wanting to stay out of a potentially deadly situation. But that's what a war is, and this isn't a war fought with uniformed men and heavy artillery. It needs the full support of corporate America, too. Corporations that worry about the lives of their employees in foreign outposts are missing the point. People are already dying.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, June 20, the 172nd day of 1988. There are 194 days left in the year. Summer arrives at 11:57 p.m. EDT.

Today's Highlight in History:

Twenty-five years ago, on June 20, 1963, the United States and Soviet Union signed an agreement to set up a "hot line" communications link between the two superpowers.

On this date:

In 1632, the English Crown granted the second Lord Baltimore settlement rights to an area surrounding Chesapeake Bay, most of which would later become the state of Maryland.

In 1756, in India, a group of British soldiers was captured and imprisoned in a suffocating cell that became known as the "Black Hole of Calcutta." Most of the men died.

In 1782, Congress approved the Great Seal of the United States.

In 1791, King Louis XVI of France attempted to flee the country, but was caught.

Baker angles for job

WASHINGTON — If Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III can help Vice President George Bush engineer a come-from-behind victory over Michael S. Dukakis to win the White House, he probably will claim the secretary of state's job as his reward.

Roberson

Baker won't say so publicly, but sources close to him report that he probably will resign his Cabinet position in mid-August — about the time of the Republican National Convention — to take over as chairman of the Bush campaign.

About resignation rumors, Baker joked with reporters last Wednesday: "You got your Baker resignation — I hope that's going to put an end to all these rumors." That was a reference to White House Chief of Staff Howard H. Baker Jr., who announced he will leave July 1 to go back to Tennessee.

The treasury secretary already is advising Bush on the campaign by telephone. "I've been doing that for 30 years. It's perfectly legal and ethical and I intend to continue doing it — on my time," he said.

Asked how much time he spends on the Bush campaign, Baker was ready with the answer: "Not very much. In three years I think I have participated in seven events that could be construed as supportive of that campaign — all on my own time."

The Baker-Bush friendship goes back to the 1960s when they were tennis partners and neighbors in a silk stocking district of Houston.

When Baker's first wife died, Bush asked the young lawyer to work in his 1970 Senate race, in part to distract Baker from his grief.

That unsuccessful campaign marked Baker's conversion from Democrat to Republican. While Bush lost the race, he was soon appointed U.S. ambassador to the United Nations by Richard Nixon.

When Bush became GOP national chairman, he brought Baker to Washington, too. Five years later Baker was running President Ford's presidential campaign in Washington. Baker also ran Bush's unsuccessful bid for the presidency in 1980 and ended up as Ronald Reagan's White House chief of staff.

While Bush has not spelled out a deliniation of campaign duties when Baker comes aboard, campaign staffers expect that Lee Atwater, the South Carolina political whiz kid who presently heads the team, will remain as campaign "manager," while Baker will be named "chairman."

A Bush campaigner said Baker's "presence, stature and experience" would be welcomed.

Robert S. Strauss, of Dallas, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee and a supporter of Michael Dukakis's presidential bid, predicted Baker would take over the Bush campaign and give the vice president a political "identity" that he now lacks. Said Strauss: "George doesn't know who he is."

Why hasn't Texas received a better deal from the Reagan years, after voters endorsed the president so warmly in 1980 and 1984?

Author Jerry Hagstrom, who has researched the country to document trends going into the post-Reagan era, said the reason is simple: "Because the Reagan administration has opposed any plan to increase the price of oil."

Hagstrom, author of a new book, "Beyond Reagan: The New Landscape of American Politics," explained that the Reaganites say intervening to prop up oil prices would be another form of protectionism. "But," he said, "the bottom line is, the low energy prices have helped keep inflation low, which has been the key to Reagan's popularity."

Hagstrom departs from tradition to place Texas in the Great Plains States, extending from Minnesota and the Dakotas through the center of the country, instead of the South or Southwest."

Is there any hope for the Great Plains states, devastated by low energy and crop prices?

"Yes, in two places," he said. "The first is in the Third World, if they can settle their debts and afford to import more food.

"And second, in the Plains cities like Minneapolis-St. Paul, Kansas City, St. Louis, Dallas-Ft. Worth, and Austin.

"They are some of the most dynamic cities in the country. Most of them aren't suffering from the loss of heavy industry and what manufacturing they have is modern."

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Knowing where to draw the line on carp

As far as I know, my late grandfather never read The New York Times. He read the Bible, The Market Bulletin, and a Sears and Roebuck catalog, but I just can't picture him dealing with the likes of R. W. Apple, Jr., William Safire and Flora Lewis.

Grizzard

I think he would have been astounded if he had ever picked up a Times as I did the other day and read a front page story about how scientists have been fooling around with his most unfavorite fish, the carp.

The Times story, displayed at the bottom left of page one opposite a George Bush campaign yawner, explained how scientists have taken a growth gene out of trout and have implanted it in carp thus making it possible to grow bigger carp.

"Who in the devil," my grandfather would have said, peering over the top of the Times, "would want a bigger carp?"

My grandfather was a kind and gentle man but there were a few things he hated.

Among these were opera singers on "The Ed Sullivan Show," Jehovah's Witnesses, and carp.

"Sorriest fish there's ever been, the carp," my grandfather would say. "It's too hard to clean and too bony to eat."

On one of our fishing trips to Sibley's Pond something grabbed my hook and down went my cork.

I ran backwards with my cane pole in order to pull my fish out of the water. But when I landed my catch on the bank, my grandfather took one look at it and growled, "All you got is a carp. Throw it back."

With that background, then, it should come as no surprise that when I read the Times story I, too, reacted, "Who in the devil would want a bigger carp?"

I talked to several fishing experts to find out. One, Charles Salter, fishing writer of The Journal/Constitution in Atlanta, told me Orientals treat carp as a delicacy.

He even said that during the Vietnam war, Lyndon Johnson sent fish experts to that country to help natives produce more carp.

Mr. Salter did, however, agree there has been some hostility toward the carp in this country and he also said the carp was difficult to clean. ("You have to bleed 'em," he said. Ugh.)

I also read a piece by veteran outdoor writer Charlie Elliot, who defended the carp saying if prepared correctly it makes a delicious meal and that carp are fun to fish for because they will bite anything, such as doughballs made of everything from cornmeal to powdered crackers, peanut butter, onions and Jello.

Perhaps I could have changed my grandfather's mind about the carp had the Times story broken while he was still alive.

"You know the Times," I could have said to him. " 'All the news that's fit to print.' "

"That's one thing," my grandfather likely would have said, "but 'all the fish that's fit to eat,' is quite another."

CHARLEY REESE

I'm going to cast my vote for George Bush

Sometimes Fate is kind and sometimes Fate knees you in the groin. This year's presidential choice is a groin shot.

Fate disguised as a presidential primary system has presented us with a choice between a politically inept middle of the roader, George Bush, and politically competent leftist demagogue, Michael Dukakis.

Charley Reese

It reminds me of a wisecrack. A cynical reporter had been assigned to cover a congressional race and I asked him who would be the likely winner.

"I don't know who's going to win,"he snapped, "but I can tell you who's going to lose — the people of that district."

Which man ends up in the White House will probably depend on which one makes the fewer blunders. Arrogance of staff which tends to rise like a rocket once the nomination has been won is a potential landmine in both camps.

For some reason, the kind of people who are attracted to political staffs tend, at best, to view the people as a minor inconvenience. This has nothing to do with party or philosophy. It's my observation that staff types for all practical purposes are interchangeable. At any rate, the more successful the campaign, the more arrogant the staff types tend to become until finally they begin to treat people like cockroaches. Many a political career has been ended or aborted by arrogant staffs.

The mistake I predict Bush will make is failure to understand how Ronald Reagan won two elections. Reagan was elected twice by Democrats. Democrats do not vote for Republicans because they are Republicans but because they are conservative, particularly on the so-called social issues like abortion, prayer in school, traditional family values, a tough attitude toward crime, and a strong national defense.

Typically, however, the moderate Republican, like Bush, tends to think he can attract liberal votes by being soft on those issues or rejecting them all together. Typically, moderate Republicans lose because if you are faced with a choice between a real liberal and a pale imitation liberal, why choose the imitation. No feminist is going to vote for George Bush no matter what he says nor is any blue collar Democrat going for Bush just because he wants a lower capital gains tax rate.

Dukakis, however, faces a problem of equal weight. The radical left in the Democratic Party has succeeded in the last two presidential elections in shoving the candidate so far left of center that many Democrats felt they had no choice but vote Republican.

Dukakis himself is part of that radical left but in the primary process, Jesse Jackson's bizarre radicalism has allowed him to project an image of a moderate. Dukakis is smart enough, I think, to welcome a fight with Jackson at the convention just to further disguise his own radical left beliefs. The leftist idealogues, however, may not be smart enough to participate in the ploy and may force Dukakis to run on his real beliefs.

If that happens, then Bush will have to stretch himself and reach new heights of ineptness to lose, a possibility I'm not ruling out.

The sad part is that if either wins and one surely will, Americans with traditional values will have to hunker down and work on a damage control. I'm going to vote for Bush simply because of the two, he's likely to do the least damage because he's the most likely to do nothing.

To compound the misery, we're going to have one of these two guys in the White House while we have one of the worst Congresses in all of human history crouched on the hill.

America, however, has endured bad hands dealt by faith before and we will surely survive a Bush or Dukakis administration. In the meantime, we can work on state legislative races to make sure we get honest congressional districts when the lines are re-drawn after the 1990 census.

Like a housewife, a citizen's work in a democracy is never done.

This economic summit won't focus on political issues

By BARRY SCHWEID

TORONTO (AP) — When leaders of the industrialized democracies hold summits, foreign policy issues have a way of pushing exchange-rate levels, interest-rate worries and other dry but vital financial concerns off to the side.

But for President Reagan's "last hurrah" — this is his final summit — the focus finally is on what these annual economic meetings were designed to be about: economics.

In fact, the joint statement of the leaders' views on world affairs was being released later today, leaving the rest of the summit clear for concentration on economic matters.

For the first time, a session on economic issues launched the summit Sunday after glittering arrival ceremonies. At the outset, Reagan made an appeal for eliminating agricultural subsidies — the hottest economic issue here — and will return to the topic before Tuesday's adjournment.

"Believe me, it's going to be discussed," the president told a reporter as he posed for pictures with the other leaders before dinner. He is determined to end the subsidies by the year 2000, and faces stiff European resistance.

At the opening session, British Prime Minister Maragaret Thatcher supervised a review of economic trends since the first summit was held in 1975.

And while global politics, including a report by Reagan on his talks in Moscow with Soviet General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev, were the theme at the leaders' dinner Sunday night, no tough international issue loomed for the three-day meeting.

In fact, in another agenda change, the talks today were beginning with a roundtable on the global outlook — without the distraction of non-economic issues.

WORLD

An Analysis

"We wanted to put the focus back on economics," said Derek Burney, chief of staff for the summit host, Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

That is not the way it has been in the past.

Last year, for instance, the Iran-Contra scandal shadowed Reagan's talks with the other leaders in Venice, Italy, and only at the last minute was a denunciation of South Africa's racial policy excluded from the windup communique. The war in the Persian Gulf between Iran and Iraq attracted far more attention than interest rates and growth projections.

In 1986, in Tokyo, terrorism took precedence over economics as Reagan and Mrs. Thatcher persuaded their partners to issue a forceful anti-terrorism statement.

In 1985, French President Francois Mitterrand kept the summiteers from endorsing Reagan's controversial program for a space-based missile defense, while in 1984 outgoing Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau sought futilely to persuade the leaders to support disarmament.

And in 1983, despite Trudeau's drive for nuclear arms reductions, Reagan won endorsement of the U.S. installation of new missiles in Western Europe.

World leaders can get worked up over economic issues as much as they do over terrorism and disarmament. At this summit, there could be a row over agricultural subsidies, with Reagan and Mulroney lined up against Mitterrand and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl in trying to phase them out.

But the issue may be bucked to the General Agreement on Trade and Tariff talks in Montreal in December.

There will be some serious debate about how to ease the debt burden on Third World countries.

Mitterrand is pushing a plan to cancel one-third of the official debt of the poorer countries in the context of a 10-year rescheduling agreement. Nigel Lawson, the British chancellor of the exchequer, is urging a different approach: converting some loans to grants and rescheduling and reducing interest rates.

But even in the economic sphere, the theme of Reagan's finale is: Don't rock the boat. The world outlook seems rosier than it has been in years, and with elections looming in the United States and in Canada, the host country, dry statistics and quiet discussion will be just fine with everyone.

Mulroney turns down free lunch

By SALLY JACOBSEN

TORONTO (AP) — Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, the genial host of the seven-nation economic summit, declined to partake in the food and drink pavilions set up for hungry reporters and delegates at the gathering.

Mulroney toured the "tent city," called Toronto Summit Square, where journalists can eat all they want, round-the-clock and free of charge.

Asked if he had come by for a free lunch, the prime minister reflected and replied: "Is there such a thing?"

The European Community, the dozen European nations that form a trading bloc, apparently doesn't like being taken for granted.

The community is the eighth, and often overlooked, delegation to the annual economic summit of industrialized democracies.

Willy De Clercq, the bloc's commissioner for external relations and trade policy, bristled when told a spokesman for another delegation had implied the EC worries, especially concerning agricultural subsidies, were given less weight because their leaders were not elected.

De Clercq told a news conference that the remark was a "a very, very characteristic example of lack of understanding and comprehension, not to say knowledge about what the European Community is."

"Elected or not elected, the only body who decides agriculture policy is the community as such ..."

"The reality is the reality and you can believe me that is the situation, if you like it or not, and I like it," said De Clerq.

Canadian reporters have drawn the word "scrum" from the rugby glossary and added it to the journalism lingo.

As Mulroney toured the press area at the Metropolitan Toronto Convention Center, he was surrounded by a mob of reporters waving microphones, snapping pictures and shouting questions.

"Mulroney is having a slowly moving scrum through the convention center," observed Paul Gessell, a reporter for the Ottawa Citizen.

Scrum, Canadians explained, is sort of like a wedge in U.S. football. The forward linemen lock arms and heads in a fearsome drive to resume play.

In journalism, it refers to an impromptu news conference.

As he left a welcoming ceremony with Mulroney, President Reagan was asked whether he was embarrassed by the banana yellow tie that Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III was wearing.

"It's Father's Day. It's the season for wild ties," Reagan replied.

If the Reagans haven't had time to consult their astrologer, they can read what the stars hold for him in a local newspaper, the Toronto Sun.

The daily's astrologer, Eugenia Last, is keeping track of the charts of all seven summit leaders.

On Monday, she said, the 77-year-old president's "need to portray stamina and strength will be his main concern."

The U.S. president "will have a great deal to offer," she said, adding that the "the likelihood of his being able to set a precedent remains to be seen."

She had more specific advice for Mulroney.

He should, she advised, "take immediate action moving toward his objectives in essence, plant the seeds of the future through suggestion, then sit back."

Former White House chief of staff Donald Regan wrote in a book this spring that Mrs. Reagan regularly consulted an astrologer about the president's schedule.

Reporters covering British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher were intrigued and somewhat insulted to hear security agents refer to some of them as being "contaminated."

Some sought an explanation of the pollution problem.

It turns out that after undergoing a rigorous security check, the reporters were supposed to be "quarantined" until the end of the event they were covering.

If the reporters came in contact with someone who had not yet been cleared, they were considered "contaminated" and in need of yet another security check.

Mulroney complained to Japanese Premier Noboru Takeshita that Japan refuses to allow direct commercial flights between Canada and Japan.

"We have very little land space. We have no room in our airports," Takeshita explained to the host of the 14th annual economic summit.

"That's OK, we'll use small planes," quipped Mulroney.

Toronto prides itself on having the toughest anti-smoking law in North America. Smoking is prohibited in all public buildings. Well, almost all.

The law has been eased this weekend to allow reporters, delegates and others attending the economic summit to pursue their habits in the Metropolitan Toronto Convention Center, normally considered a public building.

Israeli farmer bludgeoned to death

JERUSALEM (AP) — A 33-year-old Israeli farmer was bludgeoned to death at a collective farm near the occupied West Bank and authorities launched a search for Palestinian suspects, a police spokesman said today.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, speaking on Israel radio, vowed his government would make an "appropriate response...in due course" to the killing.

Eighteen Arab suspects were detained, the radio said.

Dozens of officers who rushed to the scene after the body was found today sealed off the entrances to several neighboring Arab villages, Etti Elinsky, a spokeswoman at the collective farm, said in a telephone interview.

Also today, the army closed three elementary and junior high schools in the occupied Gaza Strip, bringing to eight the number of schools closed since Saturday, Arab reports said.

The closures aim to end participation by Palestinian youths in the 6½-month uprising in the territories Israel seized in the 1967 Middle East war.

On Sunday, Israeli troops shot and wounded a 20-year-old Palestinian during a clash in the West Bank village of Salim. The incident followed a weekend of sporadic clashes in which two Palestinians were killed and 20 wounded.

The farmer's slaying would be the fourth death of an Israeli since the uprising began Dec. 8. At least 210 Palestinians have died in the rebellion, most by Israeli gunfire, according to U.N. figures.

Mrs. Elinsky said the victim, Eli Cohen, was found at the collective farm lying near his grape vines with a hole in his head apparently caused by a beating with a heavy steel object.

The farm is about 25 miles south of Jerusalem.

Police spokesman Rafi Levy said police suspected an Arab was responsible for the killing but declined to comment further.

Mrs. Elinsky said Cohen never returned home after leaving to spray his grape vines with insecticide Sunday evening. She said he was found this morning by another farmer.

She said Arabs were also suspected of committing several acts of vandalism on the farm in the last four months. In one incident, farmers found a black, green, red and white Palestinian flag in a field strewn with uprooted vegetables, Mrs. Elinsky said.

On Saturday, 160 grape vines were destroyed by fire, apparently by arsonists, she added.

Israelis have accused Palestinian arsonists of a rash of fires that have destroyed tens of thousands of acres in the past few weeks.

Also today, Israeli prison spokesman Johnny Tester said a Palestinian prisoner from the Gaza Strip was freed on bail after giving birth to a boy Friday. The Jerusalem Post said it was the first time a security prisoner had ever been released on bail.

The woman, Aisheh Said Odeh Al Kurd, 28, from the town of Rafah, was detained about two months ago on suspicion of taking part in an attempted bombing in a Tel Aviv suburb, as well as in incidents in the Gaza Strip, the Post said.

In Gaza, Israeli soldiers closed two of Gaza City's largest outdoor marketplaces this morning and ordered merchants to reopen in the afternoon.

The measure, which affected more than 100 fruit, vegetable and meat stands, appeared aimed at breaking the obedience of Palestinian merchants to underground uprising leaders, who have ordered stores shut in the afternoons.

Also in Gaza City today, dozens of Palestinians staged a sit-in in the Red Cross building in solidarity with Arab children involved in the uprising. The two-hour sit-in was in keeping with the latest underground leaflet, which called for a day to honor "Palestinian Children Martyrs."

Four killed when grenade hurled into market

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Suspected militant Sikh separatists hurled a homemade grenade into a crowded vegetable market in a New Delhi suburb this morning, killing four people and injuring about 40, police said.

The attackers struck as about 2,000 shoppers and vendors were gathered in the open-air market in the mixed Hindu and Sikh suburb of Tilak Nagar. Pieces of flesh and blood-covered vegetables lay in the mud left by overnight rains.

It was the second day in a row that Sikh extremists had mounted bombing attacks outside Punjab state, the main killing ground in their 6-year-old guerrilla and terror war for a separate homeland.

On Sunday, a bomb killed 15 people who were watching television at a market in Kurukshetra in Haryana state, north of New Delhi.

Police said the bomb was planted by Sikh extremists and apparently detonated by remote control. Afterward, police were placed on alert in six states and New Delhi.

Three of those killed in today's bombing of the Chowk Chandi market were Hindu men. The identity of the fourth could not immediately be determined.

Assistant police commissioner Ajay Aggarwal quoted witnesses as saying the grenade was thrown into the crowd from a cream-colored van containing four Sikhs, who are recognizable by their distinctive turbans and untrimmed beards.

Shoppers panicked, fleeing through the mud and the blood.

Aggarwal said there were no reports of religious tension in the Hindu-Sikh neighborhood immediately after the attack. Sikh assaults on Hindus in New Delhi and elsewhere in India sometimes trigger violent backlashes.

"People are aggravated, but we are taking steps to control the situation," Aggarwal said.

He said police had banned the assembly of more than four people in the neighborhood immediately after the attack.

Tilak Nagar was predominantly Hindu until 1984, when Sikhs started moving in after their homes were destroyed in anti-Sikh riots touched off when Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was assassinated by her Sikh bodyguards.

Over the years, more Sikhs have arrived from Punjab, the predominantly Sikh northern state where the militants have killed at least 1,333 people so far this year. Although the militants initially targeted Hindus, they have increasingly turned their guns on fellow Sikhs they consider informers or too moderate.

Sikh attacks outside Punjab state have claimed at least 46 lives since the first of the year. Most of the victims died in bombings.

About half those deaths occurred during or after the government's siege last month of Sikh militants holed up in the Golden Temple in the Punjab city of Amritsar. The siege ended after more than 40 Sikhs were killed and hundreds of others surrendered.

The Golden Temple, Sikhism's holiest shrine, had contained headquarters and arms caches of several Sikh separatist groups.

Although the government succeeded in clearing the temple of armed militants, the siege prompted fears the radicals would escalate attacks outside Punjab, where killings continued.

Sikh gunmen killed five people there in four attacks Sunday night, according to the United News of India and Press Trust of India. UNI also said security forces shot to death a Sikh extremist.

Duke's letters to American wife to be published

LONDON (AP) — The royal family's unfriendliness to the Duke and Duchess of Windsor after he abdicated the throne left the Duke deeply embittered long after their scandalous marriage, a series of letters published today show.

Calling his family a "smug, stinking lot," the Duke lauded his decision to leave court life in one of the letters published by the Daily Mail newspaper as an excerpt from an upcoming book.

"Let us enjoy our lovely, full life together far removed from the boredom, the restrictions and the intrigues of the royal family and the court," the Duke wrote to his wife while in London for the funeral of his mother Queen Mary in 1953.

"What a smug, stinking lot my relations are and you've never seen such a seedy worn out bunch of old hags most of them have become," wrote the Duke, who was the uncrowned Edward VIII for 11 months before abdicating.

His mother was as "hard as nails," he wrote another time.

The Duke and the Duchess used a series of codenames to refer to their relatives in the letters, such as "Cookie" for the Duke's sister-in-law Elizabeth, now the Queen Mother, and Shirley Temple, Junior for now Queen Elizabeth II.

According to the Daily Mail, the letters were given by the Duke and Duchess to their lawyers with the aim of eventual publication.

The newspaper published excerpts from 16 letters by the couple, mostly to each other, as the first in a series of installments from a book called "The Secret File of the Duke of Windsor" edited by Michael Bloch, to be published in July. It did not say how many installments would appear.

The Duke, who abdicated in 1936 because he couldn't marry the American Wallis Simpson, who had been twice divorced, wrote one series of letters to the Duchess during a trip to London for the funeral of his younger brother, King George VI, in February 1952.

At the time, he was informed that the 10,000-pound annual pension granted by his brother would be halted, the newspaper reported.

It said this violated the original agreement between the brothers that as long as the Duke gave up everything he had inherited he could have a lifelong pension.

Later, when the Duke made indirect inquiries about allowing the Duchess to attend the coronation of his brother's daughter, Queen Elizabeth II, the royal's private secretary said that that was impossible because it would add a "discordant note" to the celebrations, the report said.

Ex-newsman dies in wreck

Waha

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Eric Waha, an Associated Press newsman for 31 years and former Vienna chief of bureau for the news agency, has died in a single-vehicle car crash. He was 63.

A police report said Waha was alone in his car Sunday when it went off a country highway about 12 miles from Vienna and smashed into a tree.

Waha, a native of Vienna, joined the AP in 1953 and became Vienna bureau chief in 1965. He left Vienna in 1979 to become a representative of AP Dow Jones in Hong Kong.

He later returned to Europe where he served as AP correspondent in East Berlin for 2½ years before his retirement in 1984.

Waha, who was unmarried, is survived by a brother, Norbert.

Quake rocks Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A strong earthquake rocked the central Philippine island of Mindoro early today and initial reports indicated several buildings collapsed and people may have been killed, officials said.

"We received reports of collapsing concrete fences and several houses, but we have no details," said Raymundo Punongbayan, director of the Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology.

He said a local radio station on the island "reported deaths from the earthquake but did not give a figure."

Punongbayan said the tremor measured 5.4 on the Richter scale, struck before dawn at 4:21 a.m. (4:21 p.m. Sunday EDT) and was felt strongest in the town of San Jose, 160 miles south of Manila.

The Philippine National Red Cross said it had received a radio report from its chapter on Mindoro saying that at least three people were injured by falling debris. The report gave no other detail.

Lourdes Massing, the Red Cross' director for disaster relief, said she did not expect any further report from San Jose because of communications difficulties. There are no telephone connections from Manila to the island.

Liner crewman stabbed

PLYMOUTH, England (AP) — A crewman stabbed on the Queen Elizabeth 2 luxury cruise ship was airlifted from the vessel Sunday and police detectives boarded the QE 2 to investigate, authorities said.

The Filipino crewman, who was in his 30s, was taken by a Royal Air Force helicopter to a Plymouth hospital where he was in stable condition, police Constable Adrian Gale said in an interview. He did not identify the victim.

A Royal Air Force spokesman, who was not identified in keeping with regulations, said he did not know how the stabbing occurred.

Five detectives boarded the ship and would remain aboard as it sailed from Plymouth to Southampton, southwest of London, Gale said.

He said he did not know where the QE2 had sailed from before entering Plymouth Sound and the offices of Cunard, the vessel's owner, were closed.

Gale said the 67,000-ton ship paused in Plymouth Sound outside the port while the crewman was taken off.

FAA rule doesn't go far enough for some

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some aviation safety experts and the airlines say a new requirement aimed at easing the threat of collisions near airports still leaves commercial jets exposed to danger from small planes.

The Federal Aviation Administration rule announced last week calls for sharply expanding the airspace in which small, private planes must have equipment that tells controllers their altitude. FAA officials predict it will result in a significant increase in air safety.

But critics of the final regulation accuse the FAA of scaling back their proposed requirements too far by requiring the new equipment only if planes fly within 10 miles of airports in most parts of the country. Only at the busiest facilities will the equipment be required for 30 miles around the airports.

"We thought (the FAA rule) was going to go much further," Jim Burnett, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said in an interview. He called the aspect of the regulation that applies to 116 airports with moderately busy air traffic "clearly inadequate" to protect jetliners from small planes.

The Air Line Pilots Association, which represents 40,000 pilots, and the Air Transport Association, the trade group for the airlines, joined in the criticism, although FAA officials called the rule a significant safety improvement.

"It brought some improvement, but didn't go as far as it should have," said John Mazor, a spokesman for the pilots union.

The ATA issued a statement saying the new requirement for small planes, all of which does not go into effect until after 1990, "clearly does not go far enough...The potential for conflicting incidents (between aircraft) remains."

The FAA rule, announced last Thursday, was an outgrowth of the 1986 collision of a small Cessna and an Mexican airliner over Cerritos, Calif., in which 82 people were killed. The small plane had no device which would show controllers its altitude on the radar screen.

After the accident, aviation safety advocates and members of Congress began calling for private planes flying in the same airspace with commercial jets to have so-called Mode-C transponders that provide controllers with altitude information.

Last February the FAA suggested a sweeping rule that would have required the equipment on all planes flying within 40 miles of 254 airports and above 6,000 feet.

The suggestion unleashed a storm of protest, including 80,000 complaint letters to Congress and the FAA from private pilots, who argued their freedom to fly was being threatened. The devices cost from $600 to $2,000 per aircraft.

The FAA's final rule rolled back the number of airports covered to 143 and the airspace to a 30-mile radius around the busiest airports and a 10-mile radius around 116 mid-sized airports. In other airspace it lowered the floor for such equipment from 12,500 feet to 10,000 feet, but not to the 6,000 feet previously suggested.

The critics said they are not alarmed by the FAA narrowing its new requirements to more than 100 fewer airports. But they are critical of the FAA limiting the airspace in which small planes must have the Mode-C equipment to a 10-mile radius around 116 airports with moderately heavy air traffic.

"There will be a significant part of every approach (at these airports) where the airplane and passengers will be exposed to airspace where other aircraft will be operating with no requirement for them to report their altitude to air traffic control," said Stephen Hayes, a spokesman for the Air Transport Association.

The airlines and commercial pilots say it typically takes a jetliner about 25 miles to climb to 10,000 feet and that controllers often begin routing a plane below 10,000 feet about 30 miles from an airport.

Under the new regulations, commercial jets will continue to mix with private planes without Mode-C transponders for 15 to 20 miles in and out of these airports, said Hayes.

The airports with moderately heavy air traffic are those currently within so-called Airport Radar Service Areas, or ARSAs, for air traffic purposes plus two specially designated airports that also have no such restrictions but have a level of commercial traffic where the FAA had some concerns.

Burnett complained the same requirement should have been extended to the mid-sized airports as was imposed around 27 airports within 23 so-called terminal radar control areas, or TCAs.

This is a view of the headstone at the grave of author Jack Kerouac, in St. Patrick's Cemetery in Lowell, Mass. He will be honored this week in his hometown of Lowell.

Hometown to honor 'On the Road's author

LOWELL, Mass. (AP) — For nearly two decades the only memorial to "beat generation" author Jack Kerouac in his hometown was his grave, where fans left offerings like a bottle of burgundy wine, two cigarettes and a wilted rose.

This week, the first official Kerouac memorial in Lowell will be dedicated with a gathering of boyhood friends and writers like Allen Ginsberg who, with Kerouac, expressed disillusionment with mainstream America in the 1950s.

"Kerouac is to Lowell, as Thoreau is to Concord or Steinbeck is to Salinas (Calif.)," said Paul Marion, cultural affairs directors for the Lowell Historic Preservation Commission, which coordinated construction of the memorial. "It will be a focal point for the pilgrims."

In his early novels, Kerouac nostalgically portrayed this northeastern Massachusetts city of mills and ethnic neighborhoods. It became a brief sanctuary in his last years, when he was bloated from booze and unable to write. He died in St. Petersburg, Fla., at age 47 of a hemorrhage.

The $100,000 memorial is an arrangement of 3-by-8-foot granite panels bearing 15 passages from some of Kerouac's 20 books and essays, including the so-called Lowell novels "Doctor Sax," "The Town and the City" and the classic "On the Road."

Houston sculptor Ben Woitena said he arranged the panels in a cross and circle pattern to represent the strong Roman Catholic values of Kerouac's youth and his later exploration of Buddhism. The polished reddish-brown stone reflects the red-brick mills and canals that symbolized working-class Lowell to Kerouac.

The site is less than a mile from the French-Canadian neighborhood where Kerouac was raised and a block from The Sun newspaper, which fired him after a brief stint as a young sportswriter.

Saturday's dedication will highlight a week of Kerouac-related events, including poetry readings by Kerouac friends Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti.

Two of Kerouac's three wives, Edith Parker Kerouac of Detroit and Lowell-born Stella Sampas Kerouac, are expected to meet for the first time since Kerouac's funeral. Kerouac's 36-year-old daughter, Janet, also is to attend.

The memorial's focus on literature, rather than Kerouac's lifestyle, won over a contingent of residents who were opposed to a large tribute to Kerouac, whom they saw as a symbol or decadence and irreverence.

"It's good that they are finally remembering him for his works," said the Rev. Armand Morrissette, who was Kerouac's boyhood confidant and eulogized him at his funeral. "He was a man of great compassion and sincerity. He was much more than just a drunk."

"Kerouac saw all the world through Lowell. It was his reference point for all the people and places he wrote about in his life," Ginsberg said in a telephone interview. "To Jack, Lowell was a sacred place. It's fitting that Lowell, in turn, makes Jack sacred."

Kerouac, born Jean-Louis Lebris de Kerouac in 1922, spoke only the French-Canadian "patois" until grade school.

Although he often recalled his Lowell boyhood, Kerouac rarely returned after leaving in 1939 for Columbia University in New York City, where he was adopted into a circle of friends that included Ginsberg and William Burroughs. He did, however, make his home in Lowell for about a year during the mid-1960s before moving to Florida.

12-year courtship wins couple dream wedding

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — The wait has ended for Lena Sofia Bergstrand and Frank Young, who met nearly a dozen years ago in Sweden and carried on a transatlantic courtship before a fairy-tale wedding won through patience.

Forty fiddlers, the 80-voice Orphei Drangar men's chorus and musicians from the Gothenburg Symphony — all from Sweden — helped create the elaborate traditional Swedish wedding Sunday.

Bergstrand and Young said goodbye almost 12 years ago when he returned to the United States after a nine-month courtship during his exchange student days in Sweden. Both thought then their romance was over.

But they couldn't forget each other. They exchanged hundreds of telephone calls and letters between Albany, N.Y., and Johanneshov, Sweden, and got together about twice each year.

So when the minister read from the Bible that "Love is patient, love is kind," the passage had special meaning for the 27-year-old bride, an insurance company secretary in Sweden, and 28-year-old groom, a commercial pilot.

The ceremony, part of the 10-day "Midsummer, a Minnesota Festival of Music" at Hyland Lake Park Reserve, was "the kind of wedding celebration little girls dream about — filled with dancers, sweet music, pageantry, flowers and poetry," said Jan Strand, co-director of New Sweden Minnesota, part of the yearlong national celebration commemorating the 350th anniversary of Swedish immigration to the United States.

Celebration organizers chose Young and Bergstrand as winners of the wedding from among hundreds of applicants in the international competition, Strand said.

"Their story of young love kept alive across a dozen years and thousands of miles is a truly classic story of romance and commitment," Strand said.

The wedding festivities began with a procession led by standard-bearers carrying four U.S. and four Swedish flags. Horse-drawn Swedish hay wagons, colorful ethnic dancers, strolling musicians and folk fiddlers followed, and a carriage drawn by white horses held the bride and groom, who wore traditional Swedish wedding attire.

After the procession, a 1,500-pound, 60-foot Swedish Maypole topped with a rooster and the blue-and-yellow Swedish flag was raised by hand by about 24 men using crossed wood beams.

Then came the ceremony, attended by about 2,000 people of Scandinavian descent and other onlookers who covered the hillside overlooking the stage.

Organizers, who had invited the public and expected a crowd of 10,000, said the 98-degree heat kept many away. Nonetheless, some came in party dresses and Swedish folk costumes.

The groom and his two attendants wore moosehide knicker-type britches with wool socks, wool vests and heavy wool-lined jackets — and must have sweltered.

Bergstrand's wedding dress, and those of her two attendants, were made from fabric, materials and patterns sent from Leksand, Sweden, according to the folk-costume tradition of that area.

The wedding dress had a red silk brocade bodice, white linen damask scarf and blouse and black wool skirt, topped by a blue wool apron with a special glazed finish.

Florida residents ready to oust convicted rapist

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Word that rapist-mutilator Lawrence Singleton has moved to a quiet neighborhood here has triggered fear and outrage mirroring the reaction in six California towns he was forced to flee after his parole last year.

People are collecting petition signatures, and have called a meeting for tonight in hopes of getting Singleton to leave. A radio station and a car dealership have offered the Tampa native $10,000 and a one-way ticket to clear out.

"A lot of people around here are angry, hostile and afraid. We want to avoid vigilante behavior and mistakes," said Art Lawrence, a parole officer and father of two teen-agers in the Forest Hills neighborhood.

Singleton, 60, gave authorities a Forest Hills address last week in complying with state law requiring felons moving to Florida to register a residence. The address belongs to Singleton's brother, Walter.

Walter Singleton says his brother isn't living with him and won't reveal where he is. However, some residents are convinced Lawrence Singleton is living in their quiet, middle-class neighborhood.

Singleton was convicted of raping a 15-year-old hitchhiker, chopping her arms off with an ax and leaving her for dead near San Francisco in 1978. The gray-bearded former merchant seaman spent eight years of a 14-year sentence in a California prison.

"We have somebody with a record of brutality and perversion who has not surfaced," Lawrence said Saturday.

Diving team sets record for mapping underwater caves

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A four-man diving team swam through an 8,440-foot underwater cave system, setting records and mapping 40 million-year-old tunnels in an effort that claimed a companion's life last month.

"Here's to...Bill McFaden, who I'm sure would love to be here today," diver Parker Turner, 36, of Destin, said after he and the others emerged Sunday afternoon from their journey. McFaden, 32, ran out of air and drowned in a nearby cave May 15, as his companions tried to pull him to safety.

The divers swam through 1.6 miles of craggy limestone caverns from Sullivan Sink about 12 miles south of Tallahasee to Cheryl Sink.

They spent just over an hour breathing specially blended gases to decompress from the dive at depths up to 240 feet.

"My lungs are a little scratchy from breathing all that (oxygen). Other than that, I'm fine," said Turner, director of safety for the Gainesville-based National Association for Cave Diving. "It went real smooth. But boy, if you had a problem, it would have been distressing."

The previous record for the longest cave traverse was set in a 6,400-foot dive in Keld's Head, England.

Noted surfer's ashes scattered in Pacific

REDONDO BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The ashes of surfing pioneer Lewis Earl "Hoppy" Swarts were carried to sea on a surfboard and scattered in the Pacific Ocean after a service on the beach he roamed for 50 years.

About 15 surfers joined the crowd of 100 after dawn Sunday to hear eulogies to Swarts, who died June 9 of a stroke while on his way to a surfing contest in Northern California. He was 71.

Among those remembering Swarts, the father of organized surfing who developed the judging system used on the pro circuit, were Surfer magazine publisher Steve Pezman, ex-surfing champion Donald Takayama and lifelong friend Leroy Granis.

Don Anderson, a pilot and longtime Swarts friend, dropped a bouquet of flowers from an airplane during the service at water's edge.

After tributes to the accompaniment of Beach Boys music, Buz Swarts carried his father's ashes on a surfboard with about 15 other surfers for scattering offshore. Takayama paddled out with a wreath.

"There was hardly any surf all morning long and, just as they started paddling out, three or four waves about 4-foot (high) rolled in and some of the surfers rode them," said Granis. "It was beautiful."

Second Scout drowns in lake

NEW YORK (AP) — A 9-year-old Cub Scout who drowned in a Scout camp lake had been upset by the sight of a friend's unconscious body being pulled from the water, another camper said. The friend later died.

"He was saying 'I was supposed to go down to the bottom with him,'" Boy Scout Raymond Goffin said of Joel Nieves. "He was hyperventilating. He was really nervous."

Police could not say how Joel ended up in the water. He had been reported missing after friend Luis Ruiz' accident Saturday in the borough of Staten Island and was the subject of a search by more than 100 police officers and 50 volunteers.

Police divers recovered Joel's body from Ohrbach Lake on Sunday morning.

Surgeon also magician

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dexterity in the operating room translates into sleight of hand on stage for an orthopedic surgeon who spends some of his nights performing at a Hollywood magic club.

Dr. Jeff Berman, chief of orthopedics and director of sports medicine at Century City Hospital, has appeared occasionally at the Magic Castle for the past five years.

Berman, 36, makes coins disappear, reassembles a rope cut into pieces and does seemingly impossible things with playing cards.

Firefighters stop pumping water into chlorine plant

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Firefighters today stopped pumping water on the smoldering shell of a chlorine plant that burned for three days, emitting deadly fumes and keeping 4,600 people out of their homes, officials said.

Tests showed no dangerous levels of chlorine fumes around the four-story Advanced Laboratories plant, fire spokesman Giorgio Placanico said today. Swimming pool chloride tablets had been bursting in small explosions overnight, giving off yellow-green chlorine gas.

Fire Chief Raymond J. Sullivan this morning ordered firefighters to turn off the hoses for the first time since Saturday night.

"After the building drains, we will go in and evaluate the situation and decide on whether the neutralizing chemicals will be used," Placanico said.

Authorities said they were considering pouring a 52-ton mixture of sodium sulfate and boric acid on the plant today in hopes of turning the remaining tablets into harmless salt.

Security in the evacuated area remained tight throughout the night, but there were no arrests or reports of looting, said police Lt. Peter Dillon.

At its peak, the blaze caused a gas cloud two miles long and four city blocks wide, sending 275 people, including 22 firefighters, to hospitals with complaints of skin burns and respiratory problems. Only two people were hospitalized, and they were in stable condition today.

The last of three fires was brought under control Sunday morning, allowing more than 20,000 people to return to homes near the pre-Civil War factory. But the threat from fumes kept away 4,600 people living closest to the plant.

"They are resigned to the fact that they will be here through Monday," said Therese Theroux, administrator at Springfield Municipal Hospital, where 170 people, including 120 nursing-home residents, slept on cots. "It's obvious they are very distraught and anxious over this entire thing."

An elementary school, a high school, two housing projects for the elderly and the nursing home remained off limits, and anyone entering the neighborhood was subject to arrest, authorities said.

"All I can think about when I close my eyes is my bed sitting at home waiting for me," Priscilla Rodriguez, 40, said Sunday at the hospital, where she had been evacuated since early Saturday with her mother, three daughters, granddaughter, niece and nephew.

The fires in this city of 170,000 began Friday morning when rain blew in a factory window and ignited chlorine tablets in a hopper, authorities said. Chlorine is used in diluted form for bleaching clothes and cleaning swimming pools, but in its pure form is a flammable, deadly gas when mixed with water.

Firefighters put out the blaze after 1,800 residents were evacuated, only to have a second fire start that burned through the night, ousting 6,000 more residents.

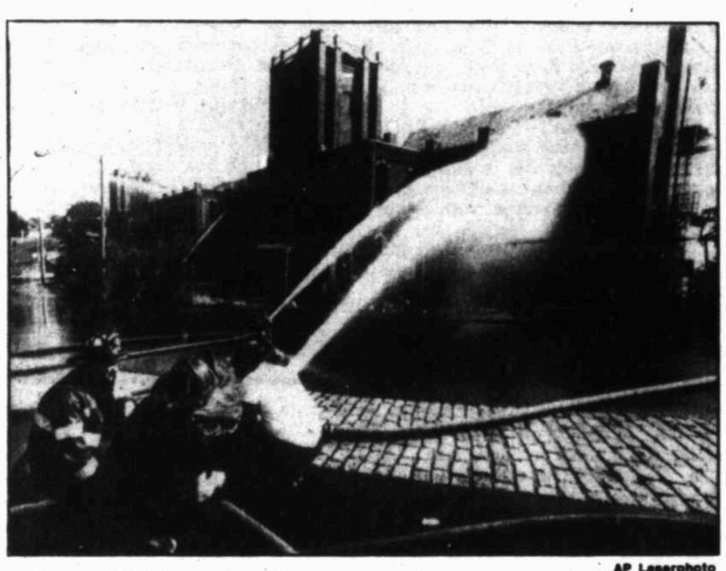

Residents began returning Saturday, but water-soaked barrels of chlorine exploded in midafternoon, throwing two firefighters against a wall and triggering the evacuation of an estimated 20,000 to 25,000 people within a mile of the plant and several thousand in Chicopee to the north.

At one point, flames soared 100 feet in the air, barrels of pellets exploded at a rate of six a minute and toxic gas drifted down city streets. Fumes could be smelled as far as Palmer, 15 miles away.

The core of the fire was a room containing 600 to 800 barrels, each filled with 300 pounds of pellets.

Firefighters, risking re-igniting the pellets, pumped 14,000 pounds of water per minute on the plant in an attempt to turn it "into a big swimming pool," Placanico said.

"If allowed to go on, the cloud would have stayed for weeks," said Sullivan.

Two-year colleges carving out role

ROCKFORD, Ill. (NYT) — The nation's community and junior colleges, sometimes dismissed as the poor relations of higher education, are carving a new role for themselves, delivering customized job training and technical education

From this manufacturing center in northern Illinois, where a new $8.7 million technology complex at Rock Valley College will help local workers learn about automation, to Portland Community College in Oregon, where 4,600 workers underwent technical training last year, two-year colleges have emerged in the last few years as important instruments of state and local economic development.

Clockwork

George Lane stands with one of his prize projects — a grandfather clock that stands in the couple's home.

ODESSA — Anything concerning art has piqued the curiosity of Theda Lane since she was a teen-ager growing up in Roswell, N.M. About six years ago, when she was nearly 63, her interest in art turned to carving, and she has concentrated on birds: humming birds, pelicans, toucans, roadrunners and, now and then, ducks.

George Lane, 69, who spent about 35 years with American Meter Co. before retiring, grew up around a lumber yard in Pampa and learned to love wood and the things that could be done with it. As a youngster, a friend taught him to repair clocks.

More than 25 years ago he brought his knowledge of clocks and love of wood together and began building clocks, as well as furniture, as a hobby.

The size of the clocks he builds ranges from chiming wall clocks to the large grandfather clock that stands in the living area of their East Maple Avenue home in Odessa.

George recalls that when he and Theda built their home in the 3700-block of Maple Avenue — 37 years ago — it was only the second house in the area. The first house in the area was that of the builder.

Members of the African American Men Against Narcotics march down Grand Avenue in Dallas Saturday in an effort to root out neighborhood drug dealers.

AA-MAN marches against drug dealers in South Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — For the second time in less than a month, a coalition of Muslims and Christians marched through a drug-ridden Dallas neighborhood chanting, "You better run, drug dealers, you better run."

The march Saturday by 25 members of African American Men Against Narcotics, AA-MAN, drew cheers from passing motorists and residents. A gunshot was heard at one point during the mile-long trek, but the march continued.

"AA-MAN is making war on drugs," said Fred Bell, who led the group with members ranging in age from teen-agers to men in their 50s.

"This is our community," said the Rev. Peter Johnson, pastor of the Aldersgate United Methodist Church and head of the Dallas chapter of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. "We have to wrestle it back from the criminals."

At one building, the group was confronted by barking dogs and irate residents.

"We don't sell dope here," exclaimed Pat Hampton, 19. "They've got no cause to come here."

Last month, AA-MAN picketed four apartment complexes where drugs allegedly are sold.

The Dallas movement has been compared to efforts in Washington, D.C., and Brooklyn, N.Y., where Islamic groups were criticized for vigilante-type raids against drug peddlers. But Dallas organizers say the only similarity between AA-MAN and the East Coast groups is their commitment to rid inner-city neighborhoods of drugs.

Children learn King's messages of hope

FORT WORTH (AP) — Inside the Mayfield Baptist Church, 41 children standing like soldiers at full attention recite a message that was delivered before they were born.

"I have a dream! I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed," the 8- to 12-year-olds exclaim in perfect unison.

The children belong to King's Kids, a group organized by a Fort Worth grade school teacher to study the life and works of Martin Luther King Jr.

Charmion Polk said she hopes the children, many of them from low-income and single-parent families, will be inspired by the words of King.

"I want them to know that there are areas other than the low-income area they live in, where they are surrounded by drugs and crime," Polk told the Dallas Times Herald in a story published Sunday.

"I know that I cannot protect them from that, but I can give them a better sense of self-esteem and a stronger confidence in themselves," she said. "We teach them to live as Dr. King did. We teach love."

The group recites King's best-known speeches in performances throughout the area, and recently returned from Atlanta, where they performed at three churches, including Ebenezer Baptist Church, where Martin Luther King Sr. had been pastor.

"I was just speechless, dumbfounded," said the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, one of King's closest associates, after their performance. "Their pronunciation was perfect, their enunciation was superb and their memory was just out of sight. I've never seen a group like them."

King's Kids' renditions of "I've Been to the Mountain Top" and "Desired Eulogy" stirred more than 400 people, including Coretta Scott King, during a February performance at Texas Woman's University in Denton.

Polk hit on the idea about three years ago when she started telling students about the civil-rights era and King's non-violent campaign for justice and racial equality.

"The children were thirsty for this knowledge. They'd heard about Dr. King but were hungry to learn more," said Polk.

She spent months studying King's speeches, biographies of his life and other civil-rights literature. Aided by a few parents, she organized a group of about 20 children, who came to her house twice a week for rehearsals and study sessions, and to watch videos of King in action.

"I usually watch videos to see his movements, and then I stand in the mirror and practice," said Kevin Eldridge, a 12-year-old student at Fort Worth Dunbar 7th and 8th Grade Center. Eldridge spent a month memorizing King's "I Have a Dream" speech.

"I think it actually helps," said Lula Webb, whose 11-year-old daughter, Latasha, made the honor roll at Dunbar 5th and 6th Grade Center after joining the group.

"It seems like Mrs. Polk inspired them to progress and to do good in school," Webb said. "She inspired them to do good not just in this, but in everything."

There is a waiting list for admission.

Man arrested in aggravated robbery of local restaurant

From Staff Reports

A 20-year-old man who had applied for a job several days earlier returned to a pizza restaurant and robbed it at riflepoint late Saturday, but was arrested less than an hour later, Midland police said today.

The man was expected to be formally charged with aggravated robbery later today, police spokesman Cpl. Jim White.

According to the police report of the incident, the man was armed with what was described as a "survival-type" compact .22-caliber rifle. At about 7:20 p.m. Saturday, he allegedly hid the weapon in the back of his pants under his shirt, and walked into the Pizza Hut, 4320 Andrews Hwy., White said.

He took his shirt off and draped it over the weapon, then contacted the assistant manager. He ran out of the store with an undetermined amount of money, reports said.

The man apparently had applied for a job at the same restaurant several days earlier, and was recognized by store employees, White said.

About 50 minutes later, the man was arrested without incident at his girlfriend's apartment.

Some of the money was recovered from an upstairs closet at the apartment, but the rifle has not been found, White said.

Police are also investigating the sexual assault of a 29-year-old Midland woman at a nightclub parking lot early this morning.

Investigators said the woman met a man at another club, and was invited into a large bus-type recreational vehicle. The vehicle was driven to the parking lot of Joey's II, 3704 W. Wall Ave., where the woman was assaulted about 12:45 a.m., police said.

The woman then called a girlfriend and went to the emergency room of Midland Memorial Hospital before police were notified.

The suspect was described as a white man in his late 30s, about 5 feet 10 inches tall, dark-haired with a beard, according to police reports.

The woman was not injured in the incident, reports said.

In other reports, Midland County Sheriff's officers are investigating the burglary of a residence over the weekend.

According to reports, a microwave oven valued at $300 and a videocassette recorder valued at $299 were stolen from a residence on County Road 1136 North, south of U.S. Highway 80.

The items were stolen between noon Saturday and 8 a.m. Sunday, after someone entered the front door, reports said.

Police Roundup

STATE IN BRIEF

Officials say protection of bird will hurt economy

DALLAS (AP) — U.S. Forest and county officials say the federally mandated protection of an endangered species of woodpecker might seriously harm the East Texas economy, but environmentalists said such predictions are unfounded.

U.S. District Judge Robert Parker of Tyler last week issued an injunction against the Forest Service, instructing it not to clear-cut timber — harvest all the trees in a given area — within 1,200 meters of red-cockaded woodpecker colonies. The ruling may affect up to 200,000 acres, or one-third of the state's federal forest land.

Texas Forest Supervisor Mike Lannan Sunday said Parker's decision could have a "severe impact" on the 12 East Texas counties that receive some of the proceeds from federal timber sales.

These counties receive 25 percent of the income from such sales — a total of $3.8 million last year. By law, half of the money is earmarked for schools, the other half for roads and bridges.

Environmentalists, who favor the selective harvesting of trees of different ages rather than clear-cutting, hailed the ruling as a major victory.

Ned Fritz, chairman of the Forest Task Force of the Texas Committee on Natural Resources — a plaintiff in the lawsuit against the Forest Service that precipitated Parker's ruling — disputed claims that the decision will harm the area's economy.

Fritz said that in Walker County alone, private timber growers use selective harvesting on at least 60,000 acres.

Inmate faces charges

PLANO (AP) — Charges were filed against a jail inmate who police said escaped while being taken to a hospital, commandeered a truck and took its owner hostage and then led authorities on a 50-mile chase.

Daniel Joseph Colom, 30, was being held in Collin County Jail on charges of attempted capital murder, aggravated kidnapping and escape filed by Plano and McKinney police, Collin County Sgt. Chuck Presley said Sunday.

An arraignment hearing was scheduled today.

Police say the Saturday chase began in McKinney and ended at Dallas Fort Worth International Airport, where Colom was arrested after crashing through a toll barricade and leading a high-speed caravan of patrol cars to a terminal.

Plano police Capt. Lyndon Payne said Colom was arrested Friday in connection with a Thursday jewelry store robbery in Plano, a suburb of Dallas.

Accountants polled on taxes

AUSTIN (AP) — While an individual income tax ranks second overall among accountants as a "good" tax, 73 percent of those responding to a poll predict that the Legislature will not enact an income tax.

Nearly two-thirds of the certified public accounts agreed that Texas needs to overhaul the present tax structure, with 59 percent saying it should be done even if economic recovery takes place.

The poll was taken as the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants prepared for a symposium.

Seven Colombians arrested in abduction of four people

HOUSTON (AP) — Seven Colombian nationals were arrested in connection with the abduction of four people who were held hostage for $4 million of cocaine, officials said.

The seven suspects, charged with kidnapping, remain in the Harris County Jail, FBI spokesman Charles Kearny said.

The Colombians are charged with abducting the three men and a woman while trying to reclaim 150 kilograms of cocaine the suspects believed was missing from an aborted drug deal three weeks ago, FBI special agent Andrew Duffin said.

He said a woman and her 22-year-old son were forced into a van at gunpoint from a business Friday and taken to a residence in northeast Houston. Two men already were being held at the residence, he said.

Authorities learned of the abductions after the alleged kidnappers released the woman with instructions to retrieve the missing cocaine, which Duffin said has a wholesale street value of $4 million.

During that time, the woman received several phone calls from the suspects, who told her that the lives of the remaining three captives were at risk, Duffin said.

The seven suspects, who had a cache of automatic weapons, were arrested Saturday without a struggle after more than 300 members of the FBI, the Houston Police Department and the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency conducted a massive manhunt of Harris County looking for the victims, Duffin said.

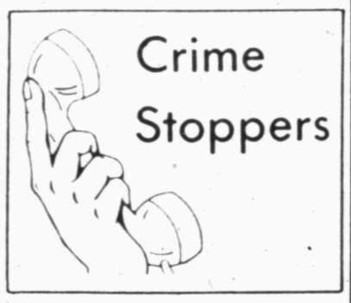

The FBI became involved Friday when it was learned the drug suspects were holding captives, Duffing said.

Crime Stoppers seeks data on Odessa robbery

Odessa Crime Stoppers is asking for the public's help to solve the aggravated robbery of the Arby's Restaurant, 1627 E. 8th in Odessa. On April 14 of this year at about 6:55 a.m. a man entered the rear door of the business and pointed a small-caliber handgun at an employee. The man then forced the employee to call the manager to the rear of the business.

The suspect then threatened the manager and demanded money. The employee was then locked in a freezer and the manager was forced to open the safe. The man took over $1,000 from the safe and struck the manager twice in the head with the gun.

The suspect was described as black, in his mid-20s, 5 feet 8 inches tall, weighing about 150 pounds. He was wearing a blue T-shirt, blue corduroy pants, and a white stocking over his head. The weapon was described as a small-caliber blue steel revolver.

Information about the robbery could be worth up to $1,000 this week only. Callers do not have to reveal their identity. Crime Stoppers can be reached at 333-TIPS in Odessa, and in Midland at 694-TIPS.

Big Spring woman killed in mishap

From Staff Reports

A 20-year-old Big Spring woman was killed early Sunday when she lost control of her vehicle on a highway north of the city, the Department of Public Safety reported.

Mindy Beth Vassar was pronounced dead at the scene at 7:30 a.m. by Howard County Justice of the Peace Bill Shankles, the DPS reported.

Ms. Vassar was traveling southbound in a 1985 Toyota two-door on U.S. Highway 87 about 14 miles north of Big Spring when the accident occurred about 6 a.m., according to reports.

The vehicle, which was traveling at a high rate of speed, drifted off the right side of the roadway and struck a small culvert, officers said. The driver then overcorrected, and the vehicle slid into the center median and overturned four times, coming to rest on the shoulder of the northbound lanes, the report said.

She was wearing a safety belt at the time of the accident, DPS reported.

CARVER

"There was nothing out here then," says Lane of the home located just a couple of blocks from 42nd and Grandview, one of busiest commercial intersections in the city.

Tracing her interest in art, Theda recalls that she and some of her girlfriends with similar interests helped out at the Roswell Art Museum when there was only one room, an office and storage area. Through the years, she says, it has developed into the massive complex it is today.

She has "always sketched and painted," and began formally studying art when she was 15.

Theda took lessons from Martha Kennedy, a southwestern landscape artist who lived in Roswell, and courses in portrait and sculpture for two years at the Frank H. Schill School of Art.

There also have been art courses at Odessa College under Arnold Leona and workshops conducted by Jan Herring of El Paso.

Over the years her paintings have been displayed in a number of "one man shows" at various locations in the Southwest, and her acrylic paintings have drawn considerable interest, as have her bird carvings.

Her works hang in private collections throughout the United States, including Alaska and Hawaii, as well as in the Pioneer Corporation's area collection.

The cabinet of the first clock George built nearly 30 years ago was made from the oak of a bed that had been in the family for years. That clock now stands in the home of his and Theda's youngest son, John, 38, an engineer for Mobil Oil, who lives in Midland with his wife and two children.

Their oldest son, Mike, 43, is a vice president with Rochester Corp., who lives in Virginia with his wife and two children.

George uses some power tools in building the cabinets for his clocks, but most of the work is done with hand tools.

He imports the clockworks he uses from Germany, primarily because the quality of work is better than others available.

He may spend a couple of months working on a clock's design and deciding what type of wood to use before he actually starts building the cabinet, which may take two to three weeks.

George figures he's built around 12 clocks in his spare time over the years. He's also found time to remodel the kitchen of his and Theda's home, including an overhead cabinet that hangs above a work table-cabinet island with beautiful solid oak work surface.

A seldom-used back bedroom Theda employs as a studio area contains a unique fold-away work table that becomes an attractive piece of furniture when not in use.

And, when they decided they needed a larger den-living area, they worked together and added an additional room, complete with large windows that provide a garden effect.

In carving her birds, Theda says she doesn't use designs, as some carvers do. She looks at pictures and thinks about the particular bird until an image and setting reside firmly in her mind's eye. Then she'll start carving, usually on a block of basswood George has cut for her.

The only power tool she sometimes uses is a small sander on a flexible shaft. Otherwise, she employs a pocket knife, to meticulously shape the feathers and other features of her birds. In addition to creating the birds, she carves bases — often with flowers — that the birds will be mounted on.

For about a year, she has been thinking about carving an eagle for the first time. She has just about worked it out and will probably start carving the three-quarter lifesize bird after she and George return from a trip to Virginia.

Her stock of birds is low right now because she sold most of them at the recent Fiesta del Arte show at the Art Institue of the Permian Basin.

Her birds have found ready buyers almost from the beginning, she says. The most popular birds are bob whites and bob white family groups, along with roadrunners, which she carves in different sizes.

But every now and then she exchanges her carving tools for brushes and paints. She used watercolors for a long time, then switched to oils and acrylics. But she returned to watercolors again when she and George joined Watercolor Horizons, a group which meets monthly for "paintouts" throughout the area.

They joined the group this year because "they're good people and good artists and it's fun," she says.

The Lanes are members of the Odessa Art Association and have worked over the years with Fiesta del Arte. They also try to build support for the art institute, which Theda says, is being renamed the Art Museum of the Permian Basin in an effort to create an image separate from UTPB.

Atlanta contemporary Southern city with historic past

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

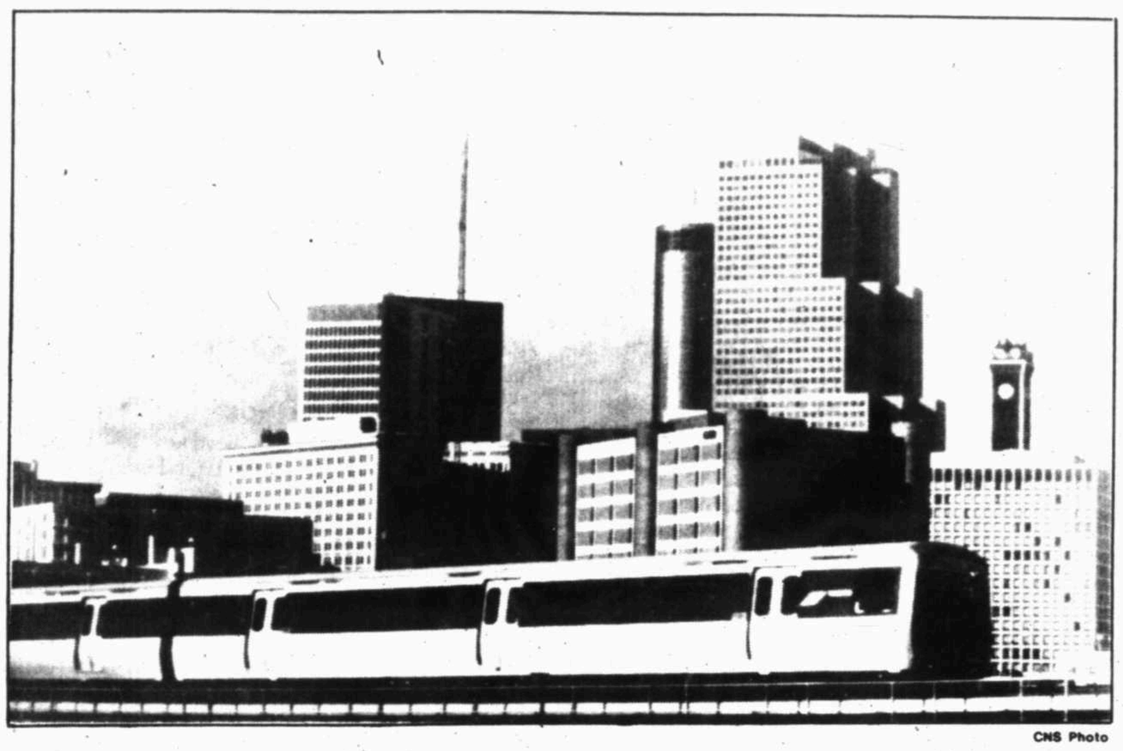

ATLANTA — When the Democrats converge here in July to select their presidential candidate, many of the first-time visitors among them will be thirsting for a taste of the Old South.

And that they'll get in ample portions in this, the home of the Braves and the Hawks.

Atlanta's Southern flavor is indeed pervasive, but it surfaces gently in a setting that may at first appear to be a 21st century megalopolis girded by thickly wooded hills that somehow eluded the building boom.

Tragedy and triumph are intricately woven into the history of what began in 1837 as a railroad hamlet called Terminus and now ranks as the cultural, business and industrial hub of the so-called New South.

Even if you take in only a few of the numerous local attractions, you soon realize that today's Atlantans — there are more than 7.5 million of them in the metro area — take pride in their social and economic accomplishments without overlooking the dark moments in their city's past.

CNS Photo

A fast MARTA car, named for Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority, whisks past the modern skyline.

AN IMPRESSIVE example of that willingness to shed light on tragedy as well as triumph is Cyclorama, a landmark that's widely regarded here as the most cherished Civil War memorial.

Housed in an imposing marble building in Grant Park, this three-dimensional panorama with narration and sound effects depicts in detail the fierce 1864 Battle of Atlanta, which sealed the fate of the Confederacy.

At the heart of Cyclorama is a rendering of the conflict — 42 feet high and 358 feet in circumference — painted in the 1880s by a group of European artists.

Replicas of bushes, tree stumps, weapons and broken railroad tracks and life-size figures of Confederate and Union soldiers — all expertly matched in color and texture with the canvas — were added in 1936 to make the panorama three-dimensional.

The more recent addition of special light and sound effects and a smoothly revolving viewing platform further enhance the feeling of actually witnessing the key events of the battle that made Atlanta the only American city to be destroyed in war.

Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman's army demolished more than 90 percent of the town on that muggy day, July 22, 1864. But soon the rubble was being cleared to rebuild what has become one of the country's more dynamic cities.

ANOTHER SIGHT that bears witness to Atlanta's progressive bent is a low-profile neighborhood a mile southeast of downtown's forest of glass and steel skyscrapers. The most prosperous and best known of the black communities here, what locals call Sweet Auburn, also was born from tragedy.

Racial disturbances were common in various parts of the nation at the turn of the century, and a particularly big one took place in Atlanta in 1906.

The event prompted most black businessmen and professionals to move their enterprises and houses from the central business distric a stretch of Auburn Avenue and s.. eral streets around it.

It became a wealthy black community and today is best known as the site of the two-story Victorian house where Martin Luther King Jr. was born 58 years ago.

The neat white-and-brown structure, the century-old Ebenezer Baptist Church where King and his father preached, the modern Center for Nonviolent Social Change and the late civil rights leader's marble crypt are the main components of the two-block-long National Historic Site that Congress created in his memory in 1980.

Both Cyclorama and the site honoring Dr. King offer poignant perspectives into the evolution of Atlanta and the South, and both are part of a Gray Line tour that no first-time visitor should miss. Those who have not seen the city in recent years should take the tour, too.

It also affords a glimpse of some of the great mansions in the city's northwest area, among them the Atlanta Historical Society's spectacular 1928 Anglo-Palladian Swan House.

The 25-acre complex includes historical exhibits, a gift shop, a restaurant and the Tullie Smith House, a restored two-story 1835 plantation home.

A POPULAR new attraction, the 30-acre Carter Presidential Center, has an exact reproduction of the Oval Office used by President Jimmy Carter, a Georgia native, as well as other exhibits and documents from his years at the White House.

At the center's museum, ingenious video and other audio-visual displays allow visitors to select options to some of the key issues faced by the Carter Administration. Mr. Carter then appears on the screen to comment on the responses.

An even newer visitor draw is the striking CNN Center that serves as headquarters for maverick Ted Turner's Cable News Network and Headlines News, located next door to the Omni Coliseum, where the Democrats will hold their convention. Behind-the-scenes tours of the network headquarters show how it gathers and broadcasts the news.

Subway station names are seldom indicative of a city's cultural offerings. But in Atlanta, one of them is.

First let me introduce you to MARTA, which stands for Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority and ranks as one of more efficient urban transportation systems in the nation.

The network's 124 bus routes feed into the 26 stations of two intersecting rapid rail lines, with sleek trains that run above and below the ground and link most of the major sites in the central area.

The station of interest to the culture-minded is Arts Center, which; like all other stops, has a letter-and-number code. In this case it's N5, meaning it is on the North line and the fifth from the Five Points hub where the East-West and North-South lines intersect.

Adjacent to the station and linked to it by a covered walk is the Woodruff Arts Center, the city's cultural showcase.

HERE THE acclaimed Atlanta Symphony Orchestra performs under Robert Shaw's direction in the 1,800-seat Symphony Hall. An outstanding and well-patronized venue for opera, ballet and repertory companies, the center also includes the 800-seat Alliance Theatre and the 200-seat Studio Theatre.

Adjacent to and part of the Center, the High Museum of Art is known for its fine collection of European and American paintings, sculpture and decorative arts. Stark and gleaming white, the building is an architectural landmark designed by Richard Meier.

The museum, which has an annex in the three-story glass-walled atrium of the Georgia-Pacific Center downtown, also offers a full schedule of concerts and workshops as well as traveling exhibits from around the world.

Just three blocks north of MARTA's Arts Center subway station, the Puppetry Museum traces the history of this whimsical form of theater art with what is said to be the largest private collection of foreign and American puppets in the country.

Like a vision from another era, the 4,548-seat Fox Theatre dazzles the eye with its gathering of onion domes and minarets and its art deco interior. Located downtown next to the North Avenue subway station, this 1929 movie palace now offers a variety of live music and stage productions as well as a summer series of classic films.

OTHER HIGHLIGHTS include the Atlanta Botanical Garden; the Monetary Museum at the Federal Reserve Bank; the state Capitol, with its gold-leafed dome; the Greek Revival Governor's Mansion; and the 137-year-old Oakland Cemetery, final resting place of Civil War soldiers from both sides of the conflict, along with such notable Georgians as "Gone With the Wind" author Margaret Mitchell and golf great Bobby Jones.

Atlanta also means great shopping and a wide variety of dining options. Two convenient locations in which to sample this abundance are the mall at Peachtree Center downtown and Lenox Square, an easy five miles to the north by subway.

One of the 12 in-town branches of Rick's Department Store, a haven of quality and personal service since 1867, leads the lineup of more than 200 stores, services and restaurants found at Lenox, the largest mall in the South.

My time in this gracious and dynamic town was up before I could go beyond some of the highlights. But I got more than a hint that some of the more alluring facets of the Old and the New South have Atlanta ZIP codes.

Trip through Missouri slow, pleasant

By WILLIAM ROBBINS
New York Times News Service

From Springfield, Mo., to Eureka Springs, Ark., is a trip of 100 miles but a journey across more than 100 years of history.

But don't even start unless you have plenty of time and patience. Motor homes lumbering around switchback curves will impose time to relax and enjoy deep hollows shrouded by treetops below green ridges sleeping in a distant haze and glimpses of lakes that glitter like diamonds through the gaps. The trip, a good Ozarks sampler, begins on U.S. Route 65 and runs south, then west, then south again. To the south, 43 miles along, lies Branson, with offerings ranging from ersatz hillbillies to authentic mountaineer arts and crafts.

Branson sprawls along State Route 76 where it crosses U.S. 65 and overlooks Lake Taneycomo. The town offers Silver Dollar City, a 46-acre amusement park developed on the theme of an old mining town with scenes ranging from a blacksmith shop to basket-makers, broom-makers, glass-blowing, a gunsmith shop and pottery- and quilt-makers (admission $15.80, $10.50 for children; 417-338-2611).

The town also offers lake cruises, good trout fishing, hillbilly and country music shows and, nightly at 8:30, a chance to see "The Shepherd of the Hills," an outdoor pageant based on the Harold Bell Wright novel of 1907 set in these same hills (admission $8, $10 and $12, half-price for children; 417-334-9141).

A couple of miles south of Branson is the School of the Ozarks, a college where students work for their education at dozens of tasks, from mopping floors and serving meals at the school's roadside restaurant and cafeteria to farming, tending a water-powered grist mill and guiding visitors to the school's Ralph Foster Museum (admission $2). The museum's displays include an extensive gun collection, exhibits on the old West and the American Indian and a broad variety of natural history exhibits.

About eight miles farther on, a 40-mile stretch of State Route 86 runs from Highway 65 west below Table Rock Lake through Mark Twain National Forest and scenes of tree-covered hills and hollows to State Route 23, which twists and turns south to Eureka Springs.

The destination is a town of winding streets along precipitous inclines built as a health spa around mineral springs in the late 19th century. It is perhaps best known for its craft shops, which cluster along its steep downtown streets, but it is also a treasury of well-preserved Victorian homes.

Eureka Springs also attracts many religious devotees with a figure known as the Christ of the Ozarks, executed in concrete and so tall that it towers above tree tops and is visible from many parts of the city, and an outdoor pageant, the "Great Passion Play."

Both were developed by Gerald L.THK. Smith, the late right-wing fundamentalist minister and anti-Semite. Admission is $7, $8 and $10; the play is given at 8:30 every night except Monday and Thursday.

Dairy Hollow House (501-253-7444) is a bed-and-breakfast place (dinner, too, if you like) set in the woods and run by Crescent Dragonwagon, novelist, author of children's books and a cookbook, who prepares local foods in a Continental style she calls Nouveau'Zarks.

Rates, including breakfast, run from $69 for one room to $119 for a suite. Dinners, for guests only till July, are $14 for a Peasant's Feast and $29 for her Haute Country Cuisine.

Careful planning eliminates travel worries

MEMPHIS (AP) — There are insurance plans, income tax plans, architectural plans and even game plans, but what the vacationer needs is a trip plan, says an expert on vacation travel.

"Without a solid plan of action, you could be cutting your long-awaited getaway short or, worse, you could end up with no vacation at all," says Steve Pike, Director of Leisure Marketing for Holiday Inns Inc., based in Memphis.

Pike offers these tips for people gearing up to wind down:

■ Pick up small, easy-to-pack bottles of your favorite toiletries to take along. If you're flying, carry medications, toiletries and cosmetics in a carry-on bag. If your luggage is lost, you'll have the necessities on hand.

■ When booking hotel reservations, either directly or through a travel agent, be sure to ask about special rates and amenities available to guests, such as recreational and fitness centers.

■ If you have an answering machine, do not leave an announcement that you are going to be out of town. Rather, let callers know that you will be checking your messages and will return calls as quickly as possible.

■ If you have a sophisticated fire or burgler alarm, take the time to show a friend or neighbor how to disengage the system.

■ When packing for a car trip, don't forget an emergency kit for a possible breakdown on the road. Such kits should include jumper cables, flares, fresh water, a bright handkerchief and first aid equipment.

■ Even if your car is apparently in perfect condition, have the battery, tires, oil, radiator and thermostat checked.

According to the American Automobile Association, in 1987, 19.5 million emergency road service calls came in from members complaining of battery and electrical problems, 40 percent; mechanical failures serious enough for towing, 38 percent; and flat tires, 10 percent.

Of the calls, 6 percent came from members who had either lost their car keys, locked themselves out or run out of gas. The remaining 6 percent involved a variety of problems, including overheating, transmission trouble and accidents.

■ On travel days, remember to dress in loose and comfortable clothing. A journey in confining outerwear can turn a pleasant adventure into an irritating experience.

■ If you have a citizens band radio, it can literally be a lifesaver, whether you are lost, experiencing car trouble or spot someone else in trouble.

Boat tours offer New York vistas

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Cool summer breezes off the water and the sparkling Manhattan night lights provide the environment for a relaxing and memorable viewing of New York's skyline aboard Circle Line's Harbor Lights Cruise.

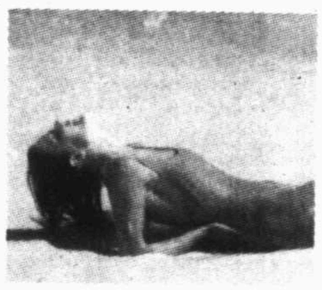

The 2½-hour cruise departs at 7 p.m. from Pier 83 at the west end of 42nd Street and returns at 9:30 p.m. each night through Sept. 4, except July 4 cruise. Circle Line's evening tour is priced at $15 for adults, $7.50 for children under 12, $13.50 for senior citizens and groups of 25 or more. Reservations are required for groups only. Hot dogs, sandwiches, soft drinks and beer are available on board.

Or if you have a whole day to devote to New York sightseeing and you're there on a Thursday, consider boarding at 10 a.m., viewing the city's skyline and such famous sights as the Statue of Liberty, Ellis Island and the Verrazano Narrows Bridge. Then you lunch at Long John's famous seafood house in Sandy Hook, N.J., at a buffet, before returning to dock at approximately 5 p.m. The Thursday cruise and buffet available through Sept. 1 are priced at $30.

Write to Circle Line, Pier 83, Circle Line Plaza, West End of 42nd Street, New York, N.Y., or call 10036-1095 (212) 563-3200.

DEAR ABBY

Man's discarded artworks missed 15 minutes of fame

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A reader recently wrote to you about a painting she and her husband had received as a wedding gift from "Andy," a coworker who was an artist. She said the painting was not to their taste, and asked whether she should return it to Andy or hide it in a closet.

I can relate to that because in 1956 I gave a job to an unemployed, needy artist. To show his appreciation, he delivered to my New York apartment some boxes of his artwork as a gift. Unfortunately, they were not to my taste, so rather than hide them away, I returned them, explaining that although they were not for me, I was sure that other people would appreciate them.

The artist understood and thanked me sincerely for not hiding his work in some dark closet.

And so today, the walls of my Encino home are NOT covered with the works of this artist, whose real name happened to be Andy — Andy Warhol! — MEL FERBER, ENCINO, CALIF.

DEAR MEL: I'm sure there is nothing I could say that you haven't already said to yourself.

DEAR ABBY: The letter written by "Perplexed," who received an oil painting as a wedding gift from a coworker, could have been written by me some 20 years ago.

When I moved into a new home, a friend presented me with a painting as a housewarming gift and said he hoped I would enjoy it. Like "Perplexed," I did not know what to do with it as it was "not to my liking." It sat on the floor, leaning against the wall in my living room for weeks. I would look at it daily and ponder its fate.

Then I remembered what my parents (rest their souls) said to me as I was growing up: "Accept with graciousness that which is presented to you, be it a reward or a gift, being mindful of the feelings of the giver." Today that painting hangs with pride in my living room, surrounded by some other paintings purchased over the years that have less meaning to me than the gift which was given.

The "artist"? You should see the grin on his face when he comes to visit! There is no price on that painting, but I treasure it more than the others. Tell "Perplexed" that there are many things in life that are "not to our liking," but we can make a difference in someone else's life by showing a bit of compassion. If they don't know what to do with their painting, send it to me and I'll find a place for it. Thank you, dear lady, and God bless. — GRANT MASTERS, CLEARWATER, FLA.

DEAR MR. MASTERS: What a delightful letter — with the Masters' touch!

DEAR ABBY: "Perplexed" wanted to know what to do with the painting she received from a coworker for a wedding gift. "This painting is not 'our taste,'" is the way "Perplexed" put it.

She should give the painting back to the artist, who obviously values it more than she does.

I am a commercial artist, and in World War II I did a number of watercolors in England, Belgium, France and Germany. I gave one to my sister and one to my sister-in-law. For a while, the paintings were displayed, then eventually they were taken down and I never saw them again.

Then a niece who lives in another city requested one, so I sent her one. When I visited her, my painting was not on display anywhere.

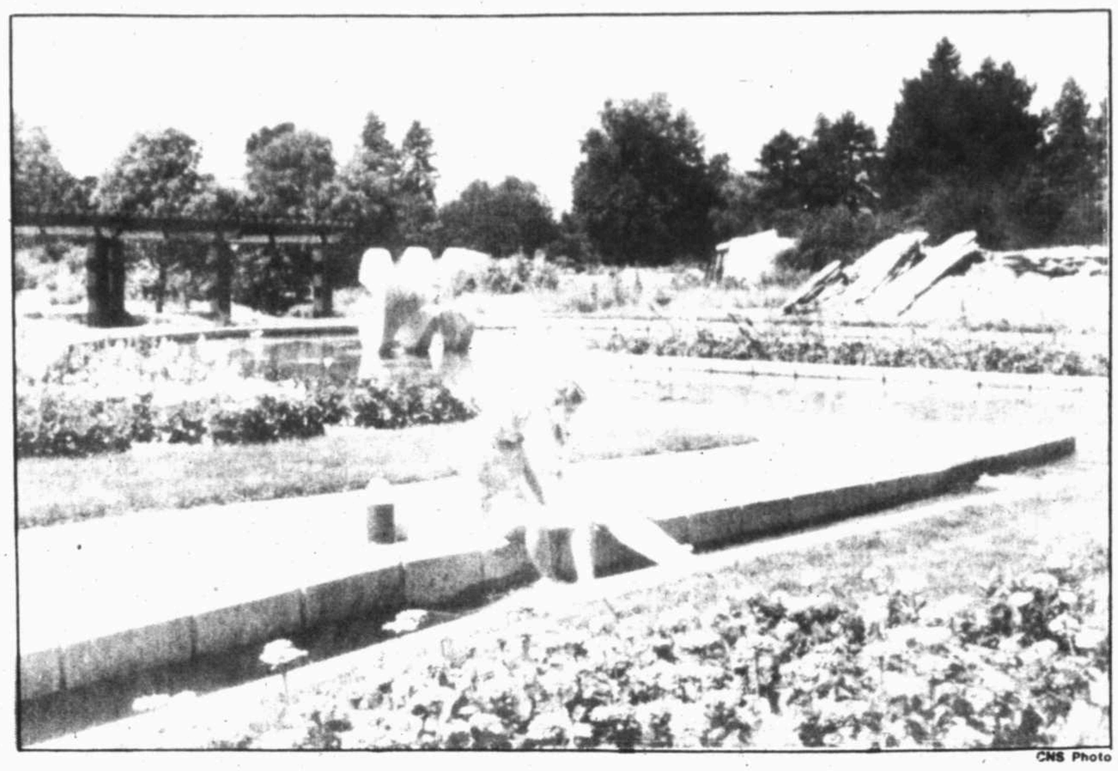

Abby, those paintings are priceless mementos of my four years in the Army. The day I give another one of my paintings to anyone (especially a relative), pigs will fly! — JACK IN CINCINNATI

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Denver: Rocky Mountain's mile-high city

By T.R. REINMAN

CNS Photo

Adults and children enjoy nature studies, lectures and walks among bright flower beds at Denver Botanical Gardens.

Denver's history has followed a series of booms and busts, right up to January 1987 when its beloved Broncos, who had sold out every home game for 17 years, lost the Super Bowl to the New York Giants.

More than 100 years ago Denver was the service center for a gold-mining boom that went bust. Not long after that, silver was discovered, then came the Panic of 1873 and another bust. More recently it was an energy center. More boom, then more bust. Employment dropped even as high-priced high-rises rose.

While times have been tough lately in the Mile-High City, there are signs of resurgence. The Denver Post was purchased for $95 million in September 1987 by a group which also bought The Houston Post and Dallas Times-Herald — two other papers in energy-dependent cities depressed of late, hopeful for the future.

But no matter what the economic climate was, or may be, the physical climate of Denver is exhilarating. When the sun shines in Denver — and the city's statistics claim more annual hours of sunshine than San Diego or Miami — there is the feeling that all is right with the world.

FROM THE sparkling skyscrapers in the heart of downtown to the gleaming gold-leafed roof of the state Capitol nearby; south on I-25 through the suburban sprawl of offices and hotels to the edge of the prairie; from Pikes Peak, towering above Colorado Springs 60 miles to the southwest along that ridge of the Rockies to the Flatirons, the landmark outcropping above Boulder 30 miles to the northwest; indoors, outdoors, all around the town; when the sun is out in Denver, it is only a boom town.

The keystone of the whole idea is the dome of the Capitol, which is modeled, as so many state capitols are, after the national Capitol. This one is covered with a mere 43 ounces of gold, hammered paper thin and applied most recently in 1982.

A kind of beacon atop a hill on the edge of the business district, adjacent to a gentrified neighborhood that features the museum-home of Titanic survivor and heroine "Unsinkable" Molly Brown, the dome fades with age.

When refitters were leafing it five years ago, they were forced down in a rainstorm. On the ground, they discovered a man "stealing" their gold. He had affixed a bucket to a downspout. Later, he explained, as he had been doing for years, he would pan the water for flecks of gold. He even produced a vial full of the stuff as proof. Colorado has put an end to that practice. The downspouts no longer extend to ground level.

That and dozens of other anecdotes are freely dispensed by friendly guides on the Capitol tour, which can be enjoyed in whole or in part several times each day.

Walking down the front steps of the building, you'll see two small bronze markers. The first was placed by students from the Colorado College of Mines, who calculated that spot to be one mile above sea level. The second, three steps higher, was placed by CCM students years later when their surveying equipment provided a more accurate reading.

WALKING SOUTH around Civic Center Park, a grassy mall that links the Capitol to City Hall, you'll find the Colorado State Museum. One exhibit depicts Denver as it was in 1860, before it was destroyed, first by fire, then by flood. Talk about a bad year.

Farther on is the Denver Art Museum, a 10-story sculpture in itself, shaped like a whimsical fortress, with its 28 sides wearing a glittering, jewel-like skin of special Corning glass. The pride and joy there is the American Indian Hall, which features the world's greatest collection of Indian art works.

From there it's only a couple of blocks to the Denver Mint, the nation's second-largest repository of gold bullion. The mint offers free tours, but no free samples.

That's easy to understand. What is not is the downtown grid, which stretches north and east from there. One story has it that when Gen. William H. Larimer laid out the town in 1858, he pointed the streets toward 14,000-foot Longs Peak. But when the city expanded, it went to a conventional north-south, east-west scheme. Today there are a lot of one-way streets converging at 45-degree angles.

To get a second wind, maybe the best thing to do is go to the magnificent Brown Palace Hotel and have a drink while you study the map.

The Brown Palace is a monument to Victorian design, with a harpist or pianist installed in the potted-palm filled lobby, which is at the base of six stories of wrought-iron balconies. What a refuge from the 21st century office buildings that surround it. Directly across Tremont Street is the Museum of Western Art, home to the cowboys and Indians of Remington and Russell and the dramatic landscapes of Bierstadt and Moran.

THE MILE-LONG 16th Street Mall begins at the Brown's front door. The $76 million walkway, also traversed by a nearly constant stream of shuttle busses, links the old with the new — the Brown Palace with the sparkling Tabor Center, a complex designed by the Rouse Co., which assembled Boston's Faneuil Hall, New York's South Street Seaport, and Baltimore's Inner Harbor development.

Once a frontier town, always a frontier town. Denver was laid out by Larimer who claim-jumped enough property to lay out the town, and named by him after the territorial governor.

In the 1970s Denver was once again a boom town getting ahead of itself, thriving on the oil and energy boom, almost inviting a bust.

But in the late 1980s, housing permits are rising again, and office space is filling up, as if the feeling is the bottom has been reached and there is nowhere to go but up.

"Pikes Peak or Bust!" was the cry that boomed back in 1858. And these days, when they're not shouting, "Let's Go Broncos!" that same sort of upward and onward cry can be heard again in the Mile-High City.

Journeys made easier with latest in travel guidebooks

By GEORGE L. ROSENBLATT
Hearst News Service

As assorted wildflowers color meadows, a whole blooming bunch of travel books has sprouted to my attention.

So here is the little book bouquet I have gathered for you. Each book has its own particular merit, but the quality that fences them all into the same meadow is probably their value in planning a trip.

Take, for example, "Festivals USA," by Kathleen Thompson Hill. The book lists what it calls "the best 1,000 festivals across the U.S.A." The listing is organized into seven geographically logical regions. Under each region, component states are listed alphabetically. And under each state, festivals are ordered by sequence of celebration.

The book balances an amazing assortment of interests in its listings, summarizing them in a clear, useable format and accompanying them with appropriate practical information. I especially like the three-plus page glossary explaining terms common to some communities and alien to others.

Whether you love or loathe such events, you will likely find "Festivals USA" — published in soft-cover by John Wiley at $12.95 — useful in planning where and when to be or not to be.

Whether you plan to be or not to be at the summer Olympics in Korea, two small guide books may come in handy. "Seoul — 1988 Olympic Site" is a surprisingly readable general guide to the city. The other, "Seoul Shopping Guide," can help visitors evade the frustrations implicit in the city's complex consumer cornucopia.

I am sure all of the prices the two quote require updating, but the principles and background in the books will likely remain valid indefinitely.

Both books are about 60 pages long. "Seoul — 1988 Olympic Site" costs $4; the shopping guide is $3.50. They were published by the Seoul International Tourist Publishing Co. You may may find them in book stores or obtain them from Charles E. Tuttle Co., Rutland, Vt. 05701; 802 773-8930.

Another Vermont-based concern, Northern Cartographic, publishes "Access Yosemite National Park," subtitled "An Atlas and Guide for Visitors with Disabilities." It is the first in a series of one-park guides the firm plans to publish over the next two years. It is also a powerful reminder that our national parks belong to "all" Americans.

"Access Yosemite" is obviously the result of painstaking research, observant thinking and genuine understanding, from the information it presents to the large-type, clearly illustrated, easily handled format in which it is presented.

While the atlas is aimed at an audience of broadly disparate disabilities, its appeal and utility easily stretches to the non-disabled public as well.

In discussing the effects of the park's higher elevations, for example, the atlas warns: "For a person who expends considerable energy using a wheelchair or other ambulatory assists, and for those with cardiopulmonary health problems, these effects may be exaggerated."

The 32-page, soft-cover Yosemite atlas costs $7.95. Happily, it is only the beginning of what promises to be a valuable series.

Meanwhile, a new "Road Atlas of France" may map out a major new route for Rand McNally, its only single-country atlas other than the U.S.A. and the U.K. While its large format may make it a little awkward for behind-the-wheel consultation, the atlas compensates by providing often hard-to-find information in extraordinary detail.

I like the book's street maps, placing 26 major cities into layout perspective; its French, English, German and Dutch directory of emergency phone numbers; its quick-reference overall maps of France. But what I especially like is the convenient juxtaposition of two distance charts on the inside front cover — charts that do not stop at the French border.

Whether you plan extensive motoring in France, require detailed reference maps or merely appreciate cartographic workmanship, the soft-cover "1988 Rand McNally Road Atlas of France" is a good investment of $12.95.

Breast Cancer Detection Unit Available to Area Women

An early read could save your life...

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of eleven women in the United states will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 women die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancer are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate. A mammogram can detect a cancer this small, e even before it can be felt. The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for a mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease). Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Academy of Family Physicians, American College of Obstericians and Gynecologists, and the American College of Radiology. Those guidelines are:

I. 35-40 years of age - One baseline mammogram.
II.. 40-50 years of age - A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.
III. 50 years of age and over. An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.
IV. Asymptomatic women under 50 years of age with significant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intervals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancer.
V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who is highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $50.00. The unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

Lakers catch Pistons at wire to force seventh game

By SAM GOLDAPER
New York Times

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The National Basketball Association record book is filled with the exploits of Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, including the most points scored in the regular season and the playoffs.

But few if any of the 41-year-old Laker's accomplishments will match the two dramatic free throws he made with 14 seconds remaining Sunday. Those points enabled the Lakers to edge the Detroit Pistons, 103-102, at the Forum and force a seventh and deciding game in the National Basketball Association final.

The game, in which the Lakers will try to become the first team since the 1969 Boston Celtics to win a second successive title, will be played here Tuesday night. Los Angeles has lost only seven games this season at the Forum.

But the Lakers will need to become the first team in history to win three straight seven-game series. It took them seven games to eliminate the Utah Jazz and the Dallas Mavericks in earlier rounds.

Joe Dumars was fouled by Abdul-Jabbar and made two free throws to build a 102-99 Piston lead. That left the Pistons a minute away from their first NBA championship.

But the Lakers came back with an 18-foot jump shot by Byron Scott.

The stage was set for Abdul-Jabbar to score his 13th and 14th points of the game.

A bruised and battered Isiah Thomas, who scored 43 points — including a championship-round record 25 points in the third quarter — to keep the Pistons' hopes alive, missed an 18-foot jumper with 27 seconds remaining. After James Worthy got the rebound, Coach Pat Riley of the Lakers called a timeout.

WHEN THE huddle broke, Magic Johnson, who scored 22 points and had 19 assists, and Worthy, who led the Lakers with 28 points, worked the pick and roll. When that failed, Scott went to the second option, posting up Abdul-Jabbar against Bill Laimbeer, who was matched up against him. Once Scott put the ball in Abdul-Jabbar's hands, he wheeled on the Piston center and threw a sky hook that was not working. Laimbeer hit him on the left shoulder, committing his sixth and final foul.

"He had to come over my shoulder to get to the shot," said Abdul-Jabbar, who was three for 14 from the field. "The officials made a good call. Once I got to the line, I just went through my usual routine and kept my mind clear. I just tried to concentrate on making them go down."

The coaching strategy continued, with the Pistons' Chuck Daly using his final timeout in an effort to set up the winning play. It called for Thomas to take the shot with the option for Dumars. With Thomas covered, Dumars drove the lane and missed the shot with 8 seconds left. Scott got the rebound and was fouled hard by Dennis Rodman 3 seconds later. Scott missed both free throws. However, the Pistons, who were out of timeouts, failed to get a shot off.

DESPITE their edge in the series, the Pistons were expressing some apprehension before the game.

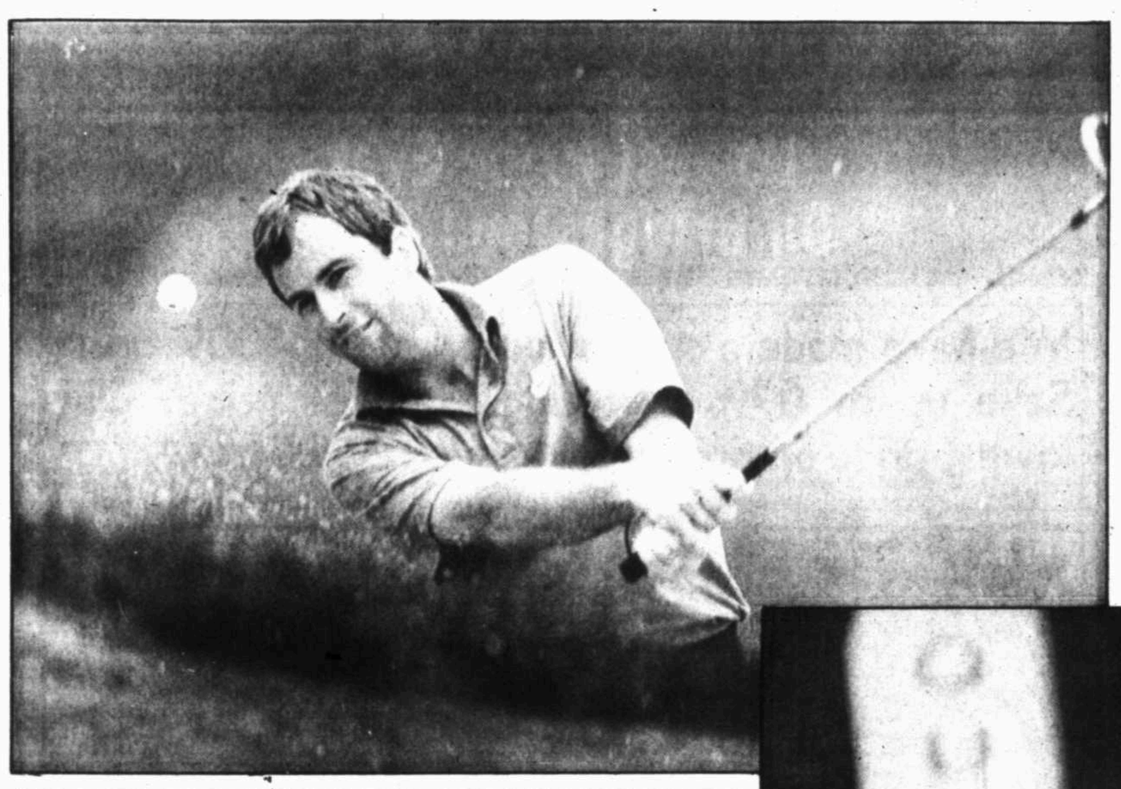

"It's going to be a tough game for us to win," said Thomas. "They're tough to beat in this building. The way they have been winning at home, this place is getting some of the mystique that once solely belonged to the Boston Garden.

"Everybody says we're the favorites. I think we're still the underdogs. We're the team that's trying to dethrone the champion in their own building. We're the team that is trying to upset history.

"Before this is over, the team that plays the better defense is going to win the championship. This has been a defensive series as opposed to an offensive one. Defense has carried us this far."

Then, breaking into one of his big smiles, the Piston captain and playmaker said: "And we need to do it is one more time and it's all ours. Would you believe we would be in this situation when the season began and everyone was saying it's going to be the Celtics and Lakers again?"

THOMAS' fears were justified in the first half as the Lakers enjoyed a 53-46 advantage at halftime. But the Lakers trailed during the entire first quarter before their offense and defense jelled.

Angels win on big inning

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

It seemed like a small thing at the time, but a slight bobble by El Paso second baseman Frank Mattox on what looked like a double play grounder by Midland Angel Eric Pappas in the fourth inning at Angel Stadium Sunday night cost El Paso 11 runs and a 13-5 Texas League loss.

Pappas' grounder looked like it was headed for a twin killing, but Mattox just slightly bobbled the chance and ended up only getting a force on Tom Alfredson at second base. Pappas was safe at first, beating out the relay attempt at the double play.

The the incredible happened. The Angels exploded for 11 runs with two outs to break open a 0-0 game. In all, the Angels sent 16 batters to the plate, scoring the 11 runs on seven hits, two hit batsmen, three walks and a strikeout that resulted in a passed ball.

"It's nice to know that running out a ball meant all those runs," said Pappas, who ended the night with two runs, two hits and an RBI in addition to his 11-run setup grounder. "It sure is an incentive to run everything out, but I've never seen 11 runs scored after two were out in an inning."

MIDLAND'S Jeff Manto followed Pappas' grounder with a two-run double to start the onslaught. Every Angel hitter scored in the inning with Jim McCollom and Pappas each scoring twice in the frame.

Manto had a chance for more run production in the fourth when he came up with a second time with two men on, but was hit by a pitch from El Paso reliever Jamie Briscoe. Manto then came up in the fifth inning with the bases loaded and was hit by reliever Keith Fleming to bring home another run.

Manto ended the night with three RBI, but with a couple of more swings, he could have had a banner RBI night.

"You just try to keep the same stroke in those situations with men on base," said Manto. "You get into a lot of problems trying to turn something more than you are supposed to.

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — One man was arrested, the sister of a golfer broke her leg, and thousands of people stormed past marshals to get a better view of the late action in the U.S. Open golf championship on Sunday.

No injuries were reported in a stampede of several thousand people up the 18th fairway after Curtis Strange and Nick Faldo, who will decide the championship in a playoff Monday, had hit their approach shots.

But one of the golfers and some spectators were shaken by the onrushing crowd, which had become unruly on the 17th hole of the tense competition, and broke through restraining ropes on the fairway at 18.

"Seventeen scared me because I could hear the stampede behind me," Faldo said.

"They're going to have to be strict wit the galleries," he added. "We don't want something like that to cost either guy the championship."

Strange said he was too worried about how he would get out of a sand trap at 18 to worry much about the crowd.

"We were very lucky," Sgt. Stephen Burke of the Brookline police said. "It was scary at first. But no one got hurt. The officers protected the players and it ended pretty quickly."

The spectators came all the way to the fringe of the green on 18, with about 15 people standing in a sand trap opposite the one holding Strange's approaching shot.

The crowd was estimaged at 32,000.

Danny White disputes claims

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Danny White Sunday disputed claims of wrongdoing after a newspaper reported his financially beaten truck accessories firm is the subject of a mail fraud investigation and creditor lawsuits.

The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story Sunday that White was subpoenaed to testify in a Dallas court in connection with a fraud suit filed by an investor in his pickup parts company, Kowboy Krome Accessories.

The investor claims White and his business partner defrauded him of a $30,000 stock purchase. Court records filed in the civil case indicate federal authorities are conducting a mail fraud probe of the company's activities.

The News said other angry creditors were questioning the activities of White and his partner, Paul Linford.

But White told Dallas radio station KRLD the company is trying to work with its creditors "to get everyone their money back — including my own." He added that newspaper articles were hindering the payback efforts.

Three putts for Strange, even with red shirt

By DAVE ANDERSON
N.Y. Times News Service

BROOKLINE, Mass. — Two days before this United States Open began, Curtis Strange was asked if he had any superstitions.

"No," he said quickly.

But in the old locker room at The Country Club before Sunday,s final round, Strange was putting on white golf shoes that were as familiar as his red shirt and tan slacks.

"Didn't you wear that red shirt the last day of the Memorial?" somebody said.

"Yep," he said.

"Any reason?"

"It just came out of my bag at the same time," he said, smiling but trying to be serious. But then he winked. "Wore it at Houston, too,"

So much for no superstitions.

THREE WEEKS ago, Strange won the Memorial at Muirfield Village by two strokes with a 67 in the final round. Four weeks earlier, he won the Independent Insurance Agent Open at Houston with a birdie on the third hole of a playoff with Greg Norman after a 67 in the final round. And Sunday, he was wearing the same red shirt he had worn in winning those two tournaments.

But Sunday that red shirt produced only an 18-hole playoff with Nick Faldo of England Monday for the 88th Open championship.

"You don't have to make all your putts, just the ones you're supposed to make," Strange had said after Saturday's third round when he took a one-stroke lead. "By the putts you're supposed to make, I mean the saving putts that keep the round going."

WITH the Open at stake on the green of the 185-yard 16th hole, Strange rolled in a 20-foot par-saving putt that gave him a one-stroke lead. But on the 381-yard 17th hole, he three-putted from 12 feet, missing a 5-footer for par.

For the first time in recent memory, two golfers were going to the tee of the final hole of the Open tied for the lead and playing together in the same pairing.

After a tee shot into the short rough on the 438-yard 18th hole, Strange plunked his approach into one of the bunkers in front of the green. But then he exploded out to within 18 inches to save par. With a chance to win, Faldo barely missed a 30-foot birdie putt. And so they will go out together again Monday.

Despite bogeys at the second and third holes Sunday, Strange regained a one-stroke lead with a birdie 3 at the 439-yard 10th hole after an 8-iron to within 10 feet. But then Faldo, who had parred 14 consecutive holes, sunk a 10-foot birdie putt at the 434-yard 15th. Now they were tied, with all of the other challengers no longer in contention. Now they were in a virtual three-hole playoff for the Open championship.

"You've got to control your emotions, control your golf swing," Strange had said. "And you better keep breathing because it's going to be tough."

AT THE 16th, Strange's tee shot hopped over the green into scruffy rough. He chipped weakly. But with Faldo having missed a par putt after having blasting out of a greenside bunker, Strange sank the par-saving 20-footer that provided him with the one-stroke lead that he squandered on the 17th green. And Monday Strange will again be trying to win that elusive first major title.

In golf, money truly isn't everything. Major championships are.

Bobby Jones inserted the word "major" into golf's vocabulary in 1930 when he won that era's four major tournaments: the United States Open, the United States Amateur, the British Open and the British Amateur for what was known as the grand slam. But soon the Masters and the Professional Golfers Association championship replaced the two amateur tournaments as "major" titles.

Ben Hogan reminded golfers of the importance of major titles when he swept the Masters, the United States Open and the British Open in 1953, then Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus kept talking about winning major titles. So did Tom Watson by winning five British Opens.

NOW, FOR all the millions a touring pro might make, if he hasn't won a major, he's not put up there on a pedestal. Tom Kite, for example, has earned more than $3.7 million, third on the career list behind Nicklaus and Watson, but he's often described as perhaps the best golfer who has yet to win a major.

And that was how some golf people felt about Curtis Strange, who has earned $3.4 million for sixth place, when he walked to the first tee Sunday in his red shirt.

"It's right there," somebody said to him Saturday night, alluding to his one-stroke lead after three rounds. "It's right there for you to win."

TED BATTLES

TV did a poor job of programming

Battles

By the end of the afternoon exhaustion had set in and for all the energy expended, nothing had been decided except that there would be a U.S. Open playoff today and a seventh NBA game Tuesday night.

At least there is consolation in the fact that they'll be on different days and the poor armchair spectator will be able to sit back and watch both in comfort.

Sunday's program planning was deplorable. Even switching channels at every commercial, you were bound to miss something.

Curtis Strange and Nick Faldo were neck-and-neck the entire way during 18 holes of the Open. Things were just as tenuous at the Forum for a while.

WHEN ISIAH Thomas went down with the badly twisted ankle, the beleaguered channel-hopper almost sighed in relief. It was the third period, the Lakers were ahead and without Thomas the Pistons had stripped a gear...so the NBA wouldn't be decided until Tuesday night.

Now the Open could be watched with the concentration it deserved.

Alas, one of the commercial interruptions prompted a channel switch just to see how badly the Lakers were beating the Pistons. As Jim Wacker would say, "Unbeleevable." The Pistons were not only in front, but Thomas was playing despite the broken ankle. What's more the "Greatest basketball team of all time", the one with the 41-year-old center, was about to be closed out in six games.

Of course, it didn't happen, but the Lakers have proven in the playoffs that "Greatest" might not be an apt description, but there's no arguing "amazing", and not in the context applied by Casey Stengel to the early day Mets.

HERE WERE two events that deserved complete, undivided attention, but were billed against one another.

Perhaps some feel the TV schedulers should be horse-whipped. Maybe, but it may not be too many moons before the armchair freeloader won't be subjected to such calloused treatment.

It probably went unnoticed, but last week a cable television channel in the northeast, outbid ESPN for the rights to NHL regular season games and the NHL playoffs. It was a crushing blow for a longtime hockey fan, who may receive no sympathy from those who have no interest in hockey, but what happens could affect all sports.

ESPN paid the NHL $24 million for its TV rights. The cable TV outfit doubled that sum and in order to get the games, fans at home will have to pay for the privilege.

If this gamble, and probably it's the biggest gamble of any sport, pays off, in the future, fans at home won't have to worry about channel switching. They'll make a choice, pay their money and watch, hopeful they picked the most exciting contest.

Boston's Roger Clemens is 8-0 on the road this season and has won 11 consecutive starts away from Fenway. In his eight road starts this year, Clemens has yielded seven earned runs in 68 2-3 innings — an ERA 0.92 — and has held opposing batters to a .181 batting average on 45 hits in 249 at-bats....

ANGELS——

The El Paso pitchers were having a lot of control problems tonight and that's just part of the game. I let the RBIs take care of themselves and just try to do the same thing every night.

Midland starter Mike Fetters (3-4) got the victory, but he struggled to get through the fifth inning, allowing four runs after the long waiting period from the 11-inning fourth.

FETTERS was relieved for three innings by Marty Reed, a former M-Angel who was making his 1988 debut. Reed gave up only one hit during his impressive stint. Vinicio Cedeno finished up, giving up an unearned run in the ninth.

The victory gives the Angels a 2-0 start in the second half and a happy frame of mind being in first place.

"Hopefully, this kind of game turns things around for us," said Manto. "I know we are playing with a lot more confidence. This is certainly a change and it's about time."

ANGEL DUST: Despite the win, Midland is 14-19 at home, owning the worst home record in the Texas League...El Paso's Rob DeWolf, who had three doubles and three hits Sunday, extended his hitting streak to seven games...El Paso's Gary Sheffield, who hit a two-run homer off of Fetters in the fifth, has seven homers and 17 RBI in his last 14 games. Sheffield now has 18 homers and the Texas League lead in that department, passing Manto, who spent his time dodging bullets instead of swinging for the fences. Sheffield also has 57 RBI, tying teammate Greg Vaughn for second place behind Manto, who now leads the league with 68 RBI...Midland's Tom Alfredson was the only Angel who didn't get a hit. Alfredson is struggling at the plate, hitless in his last 20 official at-bats. However, Alfredson walked twice, was hit by a pitch and scored a run Sunday...The Angels are wondering if a new set of game jersies, debuting Sunday, has anything to do with run production. At least, they look nice...Midland's Danny Grunhard had three hits and was robbed of a fourth in the third inning when El Paso's Matias Carrillo made a brilliant running catch in center...

TV——

Events such as the Open, Masters, NBA playoffs, Super Bowl and World Series may be next on the list, if fans respond to the NHL experiment.

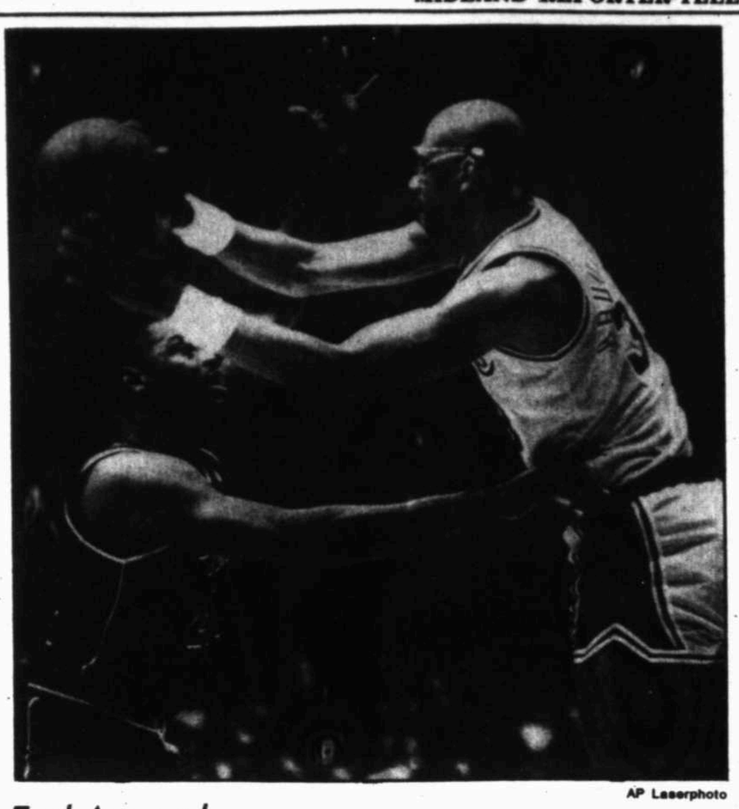

Of course, the major sports would perhaps prefer to keep their game on regular TV channels where it gets maximum exposure and presumably develops fans who eventually show up at the gate, but the enormous money potential for selling their product to the TV viewer might promise financial rewards that would represent an offer too good to be turned down.

Come to think of it, all that channel-switching Sunday....it really wasn't all that bad, was it?

Angels' Witt, Harvey blank KC Royals, 5-0

Associated Press

Mike Witt wanted to be there at the end.

"He wanted to stay in the game. He wanted to get the shutout," California manager Cookie Rojas said. "But I thought he'd had enough and that was it. That was the end of it. I'd already made my mind up that he was coming out."

AL

Witt, 5-7, allowed eight hits in 8 2-3 innings Sunday to stretch his scoreless streak to 21 2-3 innings as the Angels beat the Kansas City Royals 5-0.

Witt struck out five and walked two. Bryan Harvey relieved and got the final out.

Wally Joyner and Johnny Ray drove in two runs each as the Angels won their fourth straight and fifth in six games.

Indians 11, Yankees 3

CLEVELAND — Andy Allanson hit his first career grand slam and Tom Candiotti, 7-6, pitched a six-hitter to break a personal five-game losing streak.

Red Sox 15, Orioles 7

BALTIMORE — Marty Barrett had four of Boston's 23 hits, the most in the major leagues this season, and Mike Greenwell drove in five runs.

Blue Jays 6, Tigers 4

DETROIT — Jesse Barfield drove in four runs, including three on his second homer in two games, as the Blue Jays gained a split of the four-game series.

Twins 3, Mariners 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Gary Gaetti drove in three runs with a solo home run and a bases-loaded single, and Bert Blyleven won his third straight start.

The Twins have won five straight and 21 of their last 27 games. Seattle has lost seven straight games and 10 of 11.

White Sox 5, Brewers 0

MILWAUKEE — Dave LaPoint, 5-7, allowed three hits in seven innings for first victory since May 14 and the White Sox ended Tom Filer's 12-game, six-year winning streak.

Rangers 5, Athletics 4

OAKLAND, Calif. — Pete O'Brien homered off Rick Honeycutt, 2-1, in the 11th inning as Texas beat Oakland after losing in 14 innings Friday and 13 innings Saturday.

Dave Parker's pinch-hit home run off Craig McMurtry with two outs in the ninth had tied the score 4-4. McMurtry, 1-0, got his first AL victory with 3 2-3 innings of three-hit relief. Mitch Williams struck out Parker for his 10th save.

Cone loses no-hitter, but notches 8th win

From Wire Reports

After losing a no-hitter with two outs in the eighth inning, David Cone, 8-1, said he "felt a little disappointed." The Philadelphia Phillies felt even worse. Cone finished the game with a two-hitter as the Mets beat the Phillies 6-0 Sunday.

NL

With one out in the eighth, Cone hit Phil Bradley with a pitch, and one out later, Steve Jeltz hit a soft line drive into shallow center field to end the no-hit bid. The only other hit off Cone was Milt Thompson's single in the ninth

Pirates 3, Cardinals 2

PITTSBURGH — Bob Walk beat Larry McWilliams in a pitching duel of former teammates and Andy Van Slyke tripled in the go-ahead runs in the eighth inning as Pittsburgh defeated St. Louis.

Astros 6, Braves 4

ATLANTA — Craig Reynolds, Denny Walling and Terry Puhl each had run-scoring singles in the eighth inning off Atlanta relief ace Bruce Sutter as Houston rallied past the Braves.

Sutter, 1-2, was trying for his 11th save and seventh in seven consecutive save opportunities, but allowed five straight singles and left with none out.

Giants 5, Reds 3

CINCINNATI — Mike Aldrete hit a three-run double in the third inning as San Francisco beat Cincinnati to take sole possession of third place in the NL West. Mike Krukow, 5-4, pitched eight-plus innings for the Giants.

Cubs 9, Expos 3

CHICAGO — Andre Dawson hit a home run, triple and double and drove in three runs as Chicago beat Montreal to sweep the three-game series.

Dawson's double keyed a two-run first inning off Dennis Martinez, 7-7. Dawson hit his 13th homer with a man on base in the third and tripled home a run in the sixth as the Cubs extended their winning streak to four games and sent Montreal to its fifth straight loss.

Dodgers 12, Padres 2

Dodgers 5, Padres 4

LOS ANGELES — Kirk Gibson's run-scoring single with two outs in the 11th inning gave the Dodgers a doubleheader sweep Sunday. Orel Hershiser pitched a seven-hitter and four Dodgers hit home runs for a 12-2 victory in the first game.

Sports in Brief

Furlong wins LPGA playoff

HERSHEY, Pa. (AP) — Shirley Furlong parred the first playoff hole on Sunday to defeat Sherri Turner in the $300,000 LPGA Lady Keystone Open golf tournament.

Furlong's bunker shot on the 401-yard 18th hole left her with only a tap-in for par and the victory while Turner could do no better than bogey.

Furlong and Turner had finished regulation play tied at 205, 11 strokes under par. Furlong came from three shots off the pace with a the day's lowest round, a 65 that featured seven birdies, while Turner had six birdies against a lone bogey in a round of 66.

Bies wins Seniors

JERICHO, N.Y. — Don Bies ran away from the field with an eagle and three birdies in the first five holes on Sunday and went on to beat Bob Charles by two strokes in the $350,000 Northville Seniors tournament. It was Bies' first victory in only his 12th start on the over-50 tour.

"The pressure didn't bother me," Bies said. "I felt a little bit of it on the 18th hole (after his only bogey of the day, at 17) but I had a two-stroke lead."

Senna Detroit victor

DETROIT — The winning beat continued for Ayrton Senna and the McLaren-Honda team as the brilliant Brazilian overwhelmed teammate Alain Prost and the rest of the the field in Sunday's Detroit Grand Prix. Senna drove to his third straight victory on the treacherous street circuit in downtown Detroit, as well as his second consecutive victory and third of the season.

Sullivan triumphs

PORTLAND, Ore. — Danny Sullivan took the lead with a quick pit stop two-thirds of the way through the Portland 200 on Sunday and then pulled away in his brand new Penske PC17 for his first Indy-car victory in two years.

The 38-year-old Louisville, Ky., driver, wheeling a road-course version of the car he qualified on the front row of the Indianapolis 500 last month, beat runnerup Arie Luyendyk by 17.18 seconds. Sullivan's average speed for the 104 laps was 102.25 mph, with 10 laps run under a yellow caution flag.

Bodine winner

LONG POND, Pa. — Geoff Bodine won the $478,120 NASCAR Miller 500 on Sunday at Pocono International Raceway, a race marred by a serious injury to veteran driver Bobby Allison.

Bodine won the Father's Day race in 3 hours, 57 minutes, 49 seconds, at an average speed of 126.148 mph. Bodine, winning his first race in two years, beat second-place finisher Mike Waltrip by 8.13 seconds after 200 laps of the 2.5-mile tri-oval.

CROWD

One of the spectators, Charles Abdennour, was arrested and escorted from the course after Strange complained on the 12th hole that he had been confronted by Abdennour.

Strange said Abdennour is known to all of the players and has bothered tour professionals for years.

"Whenever we see him, we just have him removed," Strange said.

Bill Campbell, former president of the U.S. Golf Association, said Abdennour "has been thrown out every day of the tournament."

Abdennour, 28, who said he had hitchhiked to the tournament from Columbus, Ohio, was charged with trespassing and disorderly conduct by Brookline police.

In another incident, Barbara Curvino, sister of golfer Mark Calcavecchia, stepped in a hole near the ninth fairway and was taken to Faulkner Hospital. Officials there said she was treated for a fracture of the lower right leg and released.

WHITE

White's company manufactures chrome tailgates and other decorative "after-market" accessories for pickup trucks.

White and his partner raised cash for unsuccessful public stock offerings by trading on White's prominence as a professional sports personality, the newspaper quoted former employers and creditors as saying.

That public stock offering failed in May 1987, Linford said, when investors became nervous about reports that companies controlled by White accumulated $230,000 worth of unpaid bills for goods and services.

Bank records show about $42,000 of $167,000 raised for the stock offering was funneled into other accounts controlled by Linford, who ran the company. Once in Linford's other bank accounts, Linford used the money to pay for groceries, loans.

Douglas Walz chooses from a wide variety of Texas wines at Marty's, a large Dallas wineseller. As the popularity of Texas wines has grown, stores and restaurants have found it difficult to keep up with the demand.

Popular Texas wines getting hard to find

By WENDY E. LANE

LUBBOCK (AP) — The newly won celebrity of Texas wines has made the Lone Star libation hard to find on store shelves and restaurant wine lists.

While wine columnists around the country tout the high quality of Texas wines, those wanting to sample the bouquet of products from such wineries as Fall Creek, Messina-Hof and Llano Estacado may come up as dry as Chablis in their search.

In a recent column lauding the state's vintages, Vanity Fair magazine's wine critic, Joel Fleishman, mourned the shortage as "a great tragedy for wine lovers."

"It's very frustrating," said Alan Lagarde, a salesman for Marty's, a large Dallas wineseller. "I've gotten calls from New York and California wanting the wines."

The wines are in short supply to begin with and are popular on restaurant wine lists, Lagarde said.

Upscale restaurants in Dallas also are using the wines, which can range in price from $8 to $19, to concoct salad dressings, desserts and meat sauces.

"We have tremendous demand from accounts all over the country," said Bobby Cox, owner of Pheasant Ridge winery here. "People in the wine world are sensitive to something good that's new. They really get out there and seek it out."

The two most popular — and renowned — Texas varieties, Chardonnays and Cabernet Sauvignons, are in hottest demand.

"The American public has this insatiable demand for those grape varieties," said Lagarde.

But because those varieties are less mature in Texas vineyards, Cabernet Sauvignon and Chardonnay wines are in shortest supply.

"There's probably no way of knowing when we can begin to meet the demand for those varieties," said David Rice, consumer relations and marketing director for Fall Creek Vineyards in Tow. "We're meeting it so pathetically right now."

At Llano Estacado winery here, the supply shortfall is temporary.

All 700 cases of Llano Estacado's 1985 Cabernet Sauvignon sold out about a month ago, said the Lubbock winery's president and chief executive officer, John Lowey. The 1986 vintage won't be released until October, but more than 1,800 cases were produced.

The supply of the winery's 1986 Chardonnay will last only about another month, Lowey said, but twice as many cases will be available when the '87 vintage is released in October.

Pheasant Ridge is producing about six times as much 1987 Chardonnay as it did its 1986 vintage.

And Fall Creek usually sells out of a vintage around Christmas and new vintages aren't released until spring, Rice said.

But the failure to meet demand hasn't left wine producers crying in their Zinfandel.

"At least we know what wines to produce," Rice said. "It's a good position for us to know what the consumers want."

To help meet consumer demand, Pheasant Ridge and Llano Estacado have begun a program by which wine lovers can reserve cases of scarce varieties while the vintage is still in the barrel.

"These are people who are almost investing in the wine," said Bobby Cox, owner of Pheasant Ridge. "They're going to drink it, but they're looking at what it will bring somewhere down the road."

Llano Estacado has set aside about 100 cases of its 1985 Cellar Select Cabernet Sauvignon.

Democratic candidates look toward '90

HOUSTON (AP) — They talked about unity, but some thought about '90.

Every speaker at the two-day state convention talked about November and the importance of putting together a cohesive effort for the presidential race. For a few, those with their eyes on the 1990 ballot, it was a golden opportunity to make contact with party activists.

The state convention, with 5,288 delegates and 5,288 alternates, was the last major meeting of Texas Democrats until their 1990 convention, which will be after the primary.

The delegates took care of the presidential business with a minimum of rancor, if not with a maximum of speed. Of the 183 pledged national convention delegates from Texas, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis earned 72 and Jesse Jackson got 67.

For ambitious officeholders planning to stand for election to higher office in 1990, the 1988 convention was too good an opportunity to take sitting down. They stood up and spoke frequently — at black delegate meetings, at Hispanic delegate meetings and to the full convention.

As probable 1990 gubernatorial candidates, Attorney General Jim Mattox and Treasurer Ann Richards were among the more omnipresent. Both were warmly received by a variety of audiences, but some insiders gave Ms. Richards an edge on the applause and enthusiasm meter. She continued to reach out to women and minorities.

"Now are there any other white men who haven't spoken this evening? God knows we don't want to leave any of you out," she joked after she followed several white men as speakers at a fund-raising dinner.

She scored well with her trademark style of humor.

"I was told to be kind in this speech and it just makes me sick," she she said at the dinner, which was a tribute and roast of Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

A top Texas Democrat said Ms. Richards is expected to be invited to address the Democratic National Convention at Atlanta next month.

Mattox drew solid receptions at several events and his "Texas Tough" stickers were very popular. But Jesse Jackson, the current stump-speaking champion, stole Mattox's thunder at one event.

Just as a crowd of Jackson delegates stood to welcome Mattox after he was introduced, Jackson came in to the room.

Mattox wisely faded into the background.

"I was doing good there. But you saw my intellect, didn't you? They said, 'Go on. We want you to speak.' I was smart, I said, 'Now is the time to get off the stage,' " he said.

The convention also brought together Comptroller Bob Bullock, a declared 1990 candidate for lieutenant governor and state Sens. Chet Edwards of Duncanville and Hugh Parmer of Fort Worth, both of whom are considering the race.

"You fellows do a good job in the Senate," Bullock told the senators at the Hobby dinner. "And I hope you stay there."

Texas blacks look beyond festivities toward future

Associated Press

Texas blacks said people should look beyond the festivities of Juneteenth to assess the status of blacks 123 years after a Union general arrived in Galveston and proclaimed the emancipation of the slaves.

Across the state, Juneteenth, short for June 19, was celebrated Sunday with songs, picnics and parades.

Houston political activist Zollie Scales Jr. said that blacks must remember "where we have come from years ago."

Scales, 65, said that although blacks are better off today, "we still have a long way to go."

In Dallas, hundreds of people visited a display about slavery at the South Dallas Cultural Center.

In Galveston, Juneteenth celebrations were to continue throughout the week with a parade scheduled today.

The Emancipation Proclamation was signed by President Abraham Lincoln on Jan. 1, 1863, but Texas blacks did not receive word of their freedom until Gen. Gordon Granger arrived in Galveston in 1865.

Corpus Christi resident Coleta Jordan and her seven grandchildren were part of the Naval Air Station Corpus Christi's first Juneteenth celebration Saturday.

"They (Ms. Jordan's grandchildren) need to know where they came from and how they were treated," she said. "It was a rough life then. It's better now."

Organizers of the air station festivities said they hope the Juneteenth event will become a Corpus Christi tradition.

About 150 people turned out at the base for the day's events which included a slide show and presentation on the history of black Texans, a family barbecue and cookout, a fashion and talent show, and a dance.

In Dallas, a community parade drove five miles toward Kiest Park Saturday, where the fourth annual Family Day Celebration was scheduled Saturday and Sunday.

Houston Zoo cat exhibits closed until problems fixed

HOUSTON (AP) — Visitors to the Houston Zoo won't be able to see many of the cat exhibits until safety problems uncovered at the new $5.4 million facility are corrected, officials said.

Concern about safety problems at the zoo surfaced after the May 12 death of zoo keeper Ricardo Tovar, who was mauled by a Siberian tiger that broke through a door window.

Among the hazards under investigation are cages that were cited by the builder a year before the exhibit opened as being dangerous to the public, city records show.

In a March 9, 1987, letter to a city official, building contractor W.J. Hessert said: "There have been numerous meetings and discussions concerning the small cats exterior cage material and it has always been our position that the material seems inadequate to retain the cats and protect the public."

Hessert said in the letter he was most concerned about the black leopard cage, made of plastic coated wire with 4-inch-square mesh to contain the cats. The only barrier to keep the public away from the cats is a waist-high hand rail four feet from the cage.

"...By leaning over the rail a person can put their hand right through the mesh and into the cage," the letter warned. "A cat can reach out through the mesh and-or a child can climb through the handrail."

The designer of the exhibit, CRS Sirrine Inc., responded to the contractor's repeated warnings with a June 15 letter that said zoo director John Werler "was aware of the condition (and) that no action is required at this time."

City Parks Director Don Olson, chairman of the a force set up after Tovar's death to examine the cat exhibits for hazards, said Saturday he does not know why the city did not heed Hessert's warnings last year.

Olson said the task force discovered other safety problems in the cat exhibits, but declined to identify them.

"There will be some other corrections necessary," Olson said. "If I didn't think there were any, we would probably have already put some cats back out."

"We have them off display until we have done enough testing to determine that the exhibits are totally safe."

Long-distance firms attack fraud

By CALVIN SIMS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The nation's three largest long-distance telephone companies and the federal government have successfully stepped up their campaigns against the use of stolen telephone credit-card and access numbers. They are reporting an increased number of arrests and a significant reduction in illegal calls, which have been costing the companies hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

The carriers — AT&T, MCI, and US Sprint — are working with the U.S. Secret Service, which has become increasingly involved in investigating long-distance theft. The agency is responsible for enforcing a federal statute designed to fight fraud involving credit cards and computer-based operations.

"We have adopted a 'zero tolerance' mentality for telephone fraud," said Edward O'Malley, newly appointed vice president for systems integrity at the MCI Communications Corp. and a former agent with the FBI.

Since last October, Secret Service agents have arrested 112 people — many of them wholesalers who had been selling stolen access numbers in bulk to others who, in turn, peddled them to businesses and individuals. More than 4,000 illegal access codes were recovered. The three phone companies said the arrests have resulted in a dramatic reduction in the number of illegal calls.

"What we really want are the top guys," said Robert Fox, director of security for the US Sprint Communications Co. "We are not looking to throw the end user in jail. We just want them to pay for the calls."

FOR INSTANCE, Secret Service agents last month arrested 20 people in 18 states on charges that they had conspired to commit "access device" fraud and wire fraud. Unauthorized use of telephone codes in this case alone cost phone companies about $125 million.

Steve Ramsay, a Secret Service agent in Hawaii, where the investigation began, said the individuals were accused of illegally selling codes for $100 to $150 a month to hundreds or perhaps thousands of people. Ramsay said one of the stolen codes accumulated $73,592 in illegal charges in four days.

The maximum penalty for telephone-code fraud is 10 years in jail and a $50,000 fine.

The phone companies have strengthened their security staffs, hiring former federal investigators and security consultants. They have installed new software in their telephone networks that can more readily detect abuse of codes. And they have added equipment that thwarts electronic tone devices known as blue boxes that can be used to switch a caller directly onto a long-distance network.

Foley's to open new Texas stores

HOUSTON (AP) — Foley's department stores will open some new Texas stores by the end of 1992, the parent company of the Houston-based retail chain announced.

May Department Stores Co. of St. Louis revealed its plans Friday to open the new stores as part of its $3.8 billion, five-year capital expenditure program.

May Co., which acquired Foley's last month, said it will expand its department and specialty stores with 1,300 new outlets, primarily in existing markets. The number of new Foley's stores and specific markets was not disclosed.

Earlier this month, Foley's began laying off 800 workers systemwide in an effort to streamline operating costs.

A May Co. spokesman said funding for the new stores is part of its capital expenditures program and is unrelated to the Foley's layoffs.

Fifteen of the May Co.'s department store divisions will add stores, and more than half of the new department stores will be opened by Lord & Taylor nationwide, May Co. and Robinson's in California, Foley's in the Southwest, G. Fox in Connecticut and Sibley's in upstate New York.

The expansion plan calls for 82 new department stores, 44 discount stores and about 1,200 specialty stores to be opened over the next five years.

Texas Instruments adopts anti-takeover measures

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Instruments Inc. board members adopted a shareholder rights plan designed to repel hostile corporate raiders, officials say.

The action was taken Friday as a precautionary measure, company officials said, not in response to any specific takeover attempt.

Company chairman Jerry Junkins called the plan "an appropriate response to the risks posed by stockholder interests by various takeover strategies which can force stockholders of their investments without permitting them to realize the full value and potential of their shares."

Under the plan, each shareholder will receive a dividend distribution right for each share of common stock held. The right, when exercised, will entitle its holder to one one-hundredth of a share of cumulative preferred stock for $200.

Under certain conditions, TI rights holders will be able to purchase TI common stock or the common stock of the acquiring company at about one-half the market price.

The plan takes effect when an investor or investor group amasses more than 20 percent of TI's common stock, or announces a tender offer that would give a suitor more than 20 percent of the company's common stock.

Adopting shareholder rights plans has become a common manuever with major corporations concerned about unsolicited takeovers.

"A lot of hostile raiders are looking farther afield to companies that aren't traditional takeover targets," said Drew Peck, securities analyst with Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette in New York.

Jane Simonitsch says she's never bored by the variety of duties she has as vice president at First RepublicBank Midland.

Love of challenges helps Midland banker succeed

EDITOR'S NOTE: Up & Coming profiles are intended to recognize the numerous young and successful entrepreneurs and professionals in Midland.

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

In nine years at First RepublicBank Midland, a love for challenge has taken Jane Simonitsch from a clerk-typist to vice president to a finalist for a White House Fellowship.

"I'm continually looking for new challenges and new ways to make a difference," says Simonitsch, recently named vice president for business planning and administration at the bank.

In her new job, Simonitsch has a job description that is packed with challenge. Currently she is in charge of bank marketing and public relations, participates in long-range planning, and manages new accounts, supplies and other support areas.

Her love of challenges prompted her to apply for a White House Fellowship. To her surprise, she was a finalist, one of 30 people nationwide being considered for 11 positions. "I was very pleased that I applied, because the experience of getting as far as I did was neat. I wasn't one of the 11 chosen, but that's OK. It would have meant leaving my job for a year to go to Washington."

Sears revamps catalog unit

By ISADORE BARMASH
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — In a broad effort to reverse the sagging fortunes of its $4 billion catalog business, Sears, Roebuck & Co. has begun a reorganization under which buyers are being appointed exclusively for catalog items and a toll-free 800 telephone number is being tested for the first time.

The improvement campaign in the nation's biggest catalog operation comes at a time when the nation's retail sales are generally soft, in large part because of disappointing volume in women's apparel.

The growth of catalog sales has held up somewhat better than that of over-the-counter sales, but has also slowed in 1988 compared with the year before. Sears' catalog sales slipped as a percentage of its total merchandising group's results, from 17.9 percent in 1984 to 15.5 percent last year.

Facing a demand by consumers for more selective catalogs, Sears last year split its bulky catalog into two volumes — one for general merchandise, including apparel, and the other for "hard lines" like refrigerators and washers and dryers. It also offered new specialty catalogs, including one called "Changes" that concentrated on natural fiber women's apparel. The overall results were reportedly disappointing.

Earlier this year Sears began to separate its catalog operations from retail supervision and to begin changing the strategy of its direct mail business.

Now, about 40 buyers, and their assistants, are being appointed to operate exclusively for the catalog. In this way, Sears hopes to get better prices and merchandise more suitable to the catalog shopper, including goods not sold in the stores.

A separate marketing group is also being assembled under Everett L. Burkardt, who was appointed executive vice president for catalog and direct marketing in March.

Previously, Sears buyers had bought merchandise both for the stores and the catalog operation, and top supervision for both was vested in the chairman of the merchandising group. While the functions have been separated, Burkardt reports to Michael Bozic, chairman and chief executive of the merchandising group.

Sears also recently established a regional center for toll-free telephone orders, in San Antonio. It plans another one soon in Roanoke, Va., and a third in Greensboro, N.C. "By next year this time," said Ernest Arms, public relations director for the merchandising group, "we expect it will be national."

Sears' move into toll-free telephone service might appear to have come late. Arms said the company had thought that the catalog desks in many of its retail stores, as well as its catalog stores in smaller markets where there are no Sears stores, were sufficient. "But obviously we have now decided otherwise," he said.

William N. Smith, a retail analyst in New York for Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., said that Sears had lost market share to both local and chain operators in small Southern towns where it had always been strong.

"I think one reason was that it failed to keep up technologically with Penney's, which already has separate buyers and an 800 number," he said. "Sears, after closing two distribution centers, got into an order-and-delivery problem."

All catalog retailers now face another serious problem: higher postal rates, which could sharply increase operating costs. Kate Kestnbaum, director of the Kestnbaum Co., a Chicago management consulting firm in the catalog field, said that the increased postage cost is causing catalog companies to cut costs by using lighter or less expensive paper and by reducing the number of copies they distribute.

But Sears still issues about 15 million copies of each of its two semiannual general merchandise catalogs.

Japan, U.S. reach landmark agreement on food imports

TOKYO (AP) — A landmark economic agreement reached today calls for Japan to increase imports and lower some of its tariffs on U.S. beef and oranges over the next six years, U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter said.

Under the pact, Japan would nearly double its imports of beef by 1991 and phase out its Livestock Industry Promotion Corporation, which currently controls most beef imports.

To allow Japanese farmers time to adjust, Japan would be allowed to set tariffs of 70 percent in 1991, 60 percent in 1992 and 50 percent in 1993.

Yeutter said he expects the value of U.S. beef exports to Japan to double, at the least, to more than $1 billion a year as a result of the pact.

On oranges, Japan agreed to expand market access for fresh oranges by 22,000 tons annually, to 192,000 tons in 1990.

After that, fresh oranges from the United States would be permitted in unlimited quantities, at current tariff rates of 40 percent in season and 20 percent off season. Quotas on orange juice will also be phased out.

The United States also demanded and got compensation on tariffs for other farm products in return for concessions on allowing Japan to slowly phase out its tariffs. Included were liberalized restrictions on imports of grapefruit, lemons, frozen peaches and pears, pistachios, macadamias, pecans, walnuts, pet food, beef jerky, sausage and pork and beans.

The temporary agreement was signed by Yeutter and Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries Minister Takashi Sato. The two men were later shown on Japanese television signing the pact and shaking hands.

Yeutter said the official documents would be signed in Washington, hopefully in the next few weeks.

He said Japanese consumers would benefit from the pact through lower prices and an improved standard of living and called it "a landmark agreement in U.S.-Japanese economic relations."

Cabinet Secretary Minister Keizo Obuchi welcomed the agreement, telling a regular press conference today that "it reconfirms that the United States and Japan are able to solve their problems through joint efforts."

Negative tone drops futures price

From Staff and Wire Reports

A negative tone which spread over the energy futures market Friday, continued in early trading today, sending prices lower.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the July contract for West Texas Intermediate, opened at $16.34, 11 cents lower than Friday's close.

Last week's price settled at $16.45, losing 21 cents during the week's final session. On Thursday, the July contract rose 13 cents amid rumors that Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini had died.

The near-term contract for wholesale unleaded gasoline slipped 0.22 cent a gallon to close at 49.97 cents, and home heating oil declined 0.48 cent to finish at 43.64 cents a gallon.

The market had a bearish tone and seemed to be in search of a trading range, said Richard Redoglia, a trader for Merrill Lynch Energy Futures. He predicted that range would fall below $17.20 for crude, and could even dip below $16 a barrel.

There's "probably no reason to be an aggressive buyer," Redoglia said. "People will look at rallies as opportunities to sell in the short term."

Technical buying from early in the week had dried up, he noted.

Dollar calm ahead of summit news

LONDON (AP) — The dollar turned in mixed results today in calm early European trading as the market waited for news from an economic summit meeting in Toronto. Gold prices were higher also in slack trading.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.36 yen to a closing 126.09 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted fractionally higher at 126.15 yen.

—1.7537 West German marks, up from 1.7530

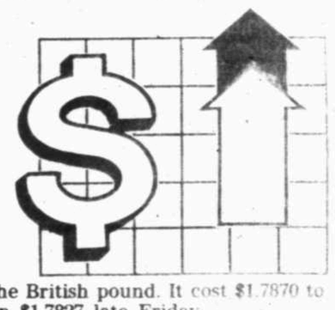

—1.4565 Swiss francs, down from 1.4575

—5.9135 French francs, up from 5.9120

—1.9706 Dutch guilders, up from 1.9695

—1,301.10 Italian lire, down from 1,301.35

—1.2103 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2130

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound. It cost $1.7870 to buy one pound, more expensive than $1.7827 late Friday.

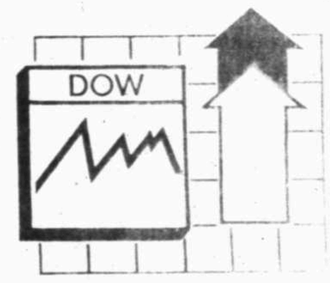

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $454.20 a troy ounce and at mid-morning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $453.90. Both were up from late Friday's bid of $450.00.

In Zurich, the bid price was $454.00, up from $450.40 late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $3.15 to close at a bid $455.30.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $7.24 a troy ounce, up from late Friday's $7.08.

Dow leaves broader market behind

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market finished mixed Friday amid the heaviest volume of 1988, which brokers attributed to dividend-capture strategies and the "triple-witching hour" expirations of futures and options contracts.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 9.78 points to close at 2,104.02. A late wave of blue-chip buying pushed the key index up just before the close, but the broader market remained depressed.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 642 issues up, 850 down and 450 unchanged.

Trading was the heaviest this year and the fifth busiest ever. Volume on the NYSE floor totaled 343.92 million shares, up from 161.55 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trading at regional exchanges and on the over-the-counter market, totaled 367.25 million shares.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased in value by $6.86 billion, or 0.26 percent, from Thursday.

The NYSE index was up 0.40 at 152.84.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials rose 0.84 to 312.80, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was 270.68, up 0.91.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index fell 1.37 to 305.70. The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market closed at 386.92, off 0.18.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Canada trade may be Japanese blueprint

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States would be happy to consider negotiating a free-trade agreement with Japan along the lines of the treaty reached with Canada, Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III says.

While there are no current discussions about such a treaty, it would fit into this country's overall strategy to break down trade barriers wherever they exist, he said Friday.

Meanwhile, the government's top trade negotiator left Friday for talks with Japanese officials, saying agreement appeared near on resolving a dispute over Japan's beef import restrictions.

Newsrack placement protected expression

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court has made it more difficult for communities to regulate the placement of newspaper boxes on public sidewalks.

By a 4-3 vote Friday, the court said placement of the boxes, called newsracks, is a form of expression in a public forum protected by the Constitution's First Amendment.

The decision struck down as unconstitutional a Lakewood, Ohio, ordinance because it gave the suburban city's mayor too much discretion in deciding which newsracks would be allowed.

Study determines Superfund ineffective

WASHINGTON (AP) — The "Superfund" toxic waste dump cleanup program is ineffective, inefficient and still choosing cleanup methods that may have to be redone later at great expense, a congressional study says.

"Technical evidence confirms that all too frequently, Superfund is not working environmentally the way the law directs it to," said the report issued Friday by the Office of Technology Assessment.

OSHA reinforces masonry standards

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Occupational Safety & Health Administration has tightened its regulations on concrete and masonry construction, saying its new standards will save the lives of 120 workers a year.

The new regulations, in the making since 1982, require additional bracing of concrete and masonry walls and more thorough testing of concrete.

The changes, announced Friday, were prompted by a 1978 accident in which 51 construction workers plunged to their deaths when scaffolding anchored in uncured concrete collapsed on a power plant cooling tower being built at Willow Island, W.Va.

Corporate decorum rules office, outside behaviors

Tip: Spaghetti out at power lunch

By BOB DART
Cox News Service

WASHINGTON — The handsome chap in a gray business suit, red power tie and dazzling white shirt was struggling valiantly with the spaghetti.

"That's it. Great. Great," coaxed the director.

"Go for it," urged the cameraman. The diner deftly spun the noodles on a fork, shielded his tie with a napkin and steered a sauce-laden mouthful toward its destination.

Spontaneous cheers broke out when the chewing began.

The set was a private dining room at the posh Four Seasons Hotel. The production crew was filming the "tricky foods" segment of a how-to videotape aimed at would-be movers and shakers and entitled "Power Polish."

"One rule: Never order spaghetti at a power lunch," said Marjabelle Stewart, a veteran author of etiquette books who is making this first videotape on manners for the upwardly mobile.

Naturally, she chose Washington for the taping. The top players of power games have long gravitated to the nation's capital. Polish and pomp are much a part of the ways and means of Washington as are lobbying and back-stabbing. Indeed, it all works together in politics.

"In the city of protocol, emphasis is placed on doing things correctly," said Stewart. But these same niceties are just as vital to men and women out to climb the corporate ladder anywhere, she said.

"Your manners reflect the character of the company you represent," said Stewart. "Family name, school affiliation, sex or race are no longer important, but the look of a good upbringing is essential."

Hence, the video on power politeness from the lady who has described herself as a "crusader for couth."

Born and reared in Council Bluffs, Iowa, Stewart was introduced to worldly etiquette three decades ago when she married an "international scientist" at the age of 17 and moved to Washington. "My training was at the Sunday dinner table and suddenly I was being wined and dined on Embassy Row," she said.

She learned quickly, and before long the cute curtsy and good manners of her own 4-year-old daughter were the talk of the neighborhood. She began teaching etiquette to other children. Among her early students were "the Nixon girls, Tricia and Julie," recalled Stewart.

Hugh Downs had some of her prim and proper pupils on NBC-TV's "Today Show." She co-authored a book, "White Gloves and Party Manners," with Ann Buchwald, wife of columnist Art Buchwald. That was 21 years ago. A career in courtesy had begun.

Since then, Marjabelle Stewart has written 14 more etiquette books, ranging from "Stand Up, Shake Hands and Say 'How Do You Do'," to "Your Complete Wedding Planner."

Pushing politeness, she has appeared on scores of TV programs, being interviewed by Phil Donahue and Johnny Carson and a host of other talk show hosts. Her etiquette program for children, "White Gloves and Party Manners," is taught in 800 cities.

But this is her first venture into videotapes.

Stewart said the project came about because so many corporations were hiring her to do etiquette seminars for executives. "In the race to the board room, nobody wants to stumble," she said.

A videocassette seemed like a good way to reach a wider market.

"It's so visual," she said.

Indeed, a tight shot showing every movement and bite as a diner tackles a huge lobster leaves a memorable image.

The art of eating can help with the one-upsmanship of a power lunch, said Stewart.

For example, an authoritative cutting of the stringy cheese atop French onion soup shows leadership qualities, she said.

An important tip for a salesman: "Bad manners can make the person eating across the table from you sick."

A lot of young women are moving up in the business world without knowing some of the basics of power lunching, Stewart said. Who picks up the check? What do you do if the other person is late? What should you order?

"Don't order something you've never eaten before," she warned.

The business world has always been a meritocracy. But in an era of computers and high tech and takeovers, the pace has picked up on the fast track. Executives can find themselves moving into new social worlds without having mastered the manners needed there, Stewart said.

"This is the only country in the world where it is your unalienable right to be well-bred," she said. "We are a how-to nation."

The video will be out at the end of May and cost $29.95. It lasts an hour and 20 minutes.

The scene at the taping was almost surreal. Stewart said she chose the Four Seasons Hotel because its Aux Beaux Champs restaurant is one of her choices as the nation's 10 best power lunching sites. Into this setting came a production crew seemingly ready to make a rock video for Whitesnake.

A chef had set up a table to the side and prepared the "tricky foods." Spaghetti. A broiled trout — head, tail, bones and all. A whole lobster. Corn on the cob. French onion soup. Hard rolls. Caviar. Every dish brought ooohs from the crew.

"A whole trout," said Stewart, "is one of the most challenging foods in the world to eat with style and grace."

The model diner followed her instructions.

"He has a bone in his mouth now," declared director Chip Venters, ordering a close-up.

The video features "don'ts" as well as "dos."

The favorite no-no was crumbling crackers into the soup.

Stewart envisions the video selling to families as well as executives. A busy mom or dad can pull dinner from the microwave, plop it on a TV tray, and call to kids to eat in front of the VCR.

Then everyone can learn manners, she said, "by eating along with Marjabelle."

Inappropriate picnic garb spells disaster

By LISA LEBOWITZ
Copley News Service

Every businesswoman is conversant in the dressing dilemmas surrounding office wear. When you take an outfit out of the closet, you ask yourself: Is it too sexy, too flashy, too feminine? Is it serious enough, formal enough? Does it convey a sense of authority?

After a week at a new office, you have a pretty good idea of what to wear every day. But what about once-a-year events, like the company picnic? Business dressing in a relaxed atmosphere poses pitfalls of a different kind.

"My first company picnic was a dressing nightmare," recalls one woman, now an account executive at a Chicago public relations firm. "I was just out of college and had only worked three weeks." The outing was a full-day affair at a public park, consisting of swimming, softball and a barbecue. Clothes were required for each event.

"I brought my normal Saturday clothes — a strappy sundress, a bikini and shorts. It was a major mistake. I was too uncovered and informal."

Veteran businesswomen emphasize that a casual event is still business, and you must dress appropriately. Just as a suit is the acceptable "uniform" in many offices, chinos or khakis, plus a polo shirt and a tank-style bathing suit are always acceptable casual wear, particularly if you work in a conservative industry like banking, law, real estate or finance.

In creative fields the rules are less rigid. Journalists, women in advertising and graphic artists say dressing is loose at casual business functions. "I wore a jean skirt and a T-shirt to our last picnic," says one reporter on a St. Louis paper. Other women wore T-shirt dresses, nice jeans or casual pants with a pretty blouse.

As in any business situation, you want to avoid the wrong kind of attention. Micro-miniskirts, short shorts or skin-tight biking shorts are best for another day. Likewise halter tops, bra tops, anything sheer or too cut out.

Do wear clothing that's comfortable for group activities like hiking or softball. As one New York banking vice president explains, "You don't want to disqualify yourself from activities because of clothing. If you're a member of a company, you need to be a team player at casual functions as well as at the office."

Pay special attention to footwear. Flat sandals, huaraches and sneakers are better choices than high-heel sandals or decorative flats that look pretty but give you blisters. And this is not the best day to break in a new pair of shoes. If there's a problem with fit, you'll find yourself spending more time applying Band-Aids than socializing with your colleagues.

When the picnic includes swimming, leave all revealing suits at home. White suits that turn transparent when wet, skimpy Lycra tanks, bikinis, anything too high cut in the leg or too low cut in the front or back falls under this category.

Although tank suits are accepted swimming garb, if you feel more comfortable in a suit that has a flattering skirt or gathers, wear that. But let modesty guide your choice.

To get from the locker room or bathhouse to the pool, you'll also need a cover-up. Fortune 500 women say a terry robe always is appropriate, as is any beach cover that's not too glitzy or cut out.

It is possible to err on the side of dressing too formally. Many companies have weekend training retreats that are filled with physically challenging, group-intensive activities. But the mood is casual, as at company picnics.

On a recent weekend, a successful female financial analyst observed that a colleague brought a silk dress to wear for dinner and evening activities. "After a day of rope climbing and tug-of-war, she looked out of place. Everyone else was in slacks and sweaters."

For weekend retreats and other casual functions, event coordinators may include a suggested dress section in the information packet. If not, ask a seasoned colleague whose dressing savvy you admire. She may be the best dressing source for your company function.

Items to bring to a company picnic: sunblock, a hat, an extra bathing suit (if you'll be swimming at more than one point during the day), a glove for softball (if you have one), a beach towel, a bathing cap (optional, depending on pool rules), a Frisbee (again, optional), sunglasses.

FRAUD

Officials of the long-distance phone companies said they were forced to act because the theft and sale of credit-card numbers and access codes had spread to almost every sector of society, from businesses to immigrants who called home to talk for hours to their families.

FRAUD COSTS long-distance companies about $500 million a year, or about 1 percent of the industry's total revenues, estimates the Communications Fraud Control Association, a Washington-based group that includes phone companies and law enforcement agencies.

Despite the progress, one has only to visit upper Manhattan to see that the companies are nowhere near eliminating the abuse. One recent day, people were lining up outside a phone booth near the corner of 160th Street and Amsterdam Avenue to hand over a few dollars to a street-corner entrepreneur who provided them with an illicit card number. "This is the only way I can afford to speak to my family in Puerto Rico," said one woman waiting in line.

Even as the phone companies install new communications technology to detect and stop the illegal calls, the phone-call pirates are finding new methods, including using personal computers and more sophisticated blue boxes, to gain access to the long-distance networks.

In their current campaign, the long-distance companies have fought back in several ways. AT&T, US Sprint and MCI have installed software in their networks to detect sudden increases in phone usage. For example, when a customer whose monthly bill is normally $40 suddenly has $400 worth of calls in a few days, the companies begin an investigation or cancel the code and assign the customer a new account number. Once the companies have detected a code-abuse problem they notify the Secret Service.

THERE IS A slight difference in the way phone credit-card numbers and access codes connect callers to long-distance networks. Customers of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. key a credit-card number into a telephone to gain direct access to its long-distance circuits.

But many AT&T competitors issue their customers access codes that require an extra step. The caller first dials a local phone number or an 800 number, keys in an access code and is then connected to the long-distance network. The call is billed automatically to the customer's account.

Most illegal codes are obtained by people with home computers who use special software programmed to try one possible access code or credit-card number after another until one works. Many phone credit cards and access codes have predictable patterns of numbers that make it easy for a computer to go through sequences rapidly until a connection is made.

Much of the fraud occurs at institutions like college campuses, military bases and prisons. Such theft accounts for 30 percent, or $150 million, of the total.

Operations like the one at the booth in upper Manhattan in which one-time illegal calls are sold account for about 20 percent, or $100 million, of the abuse, according to the fraud control group. Such calls are also sold from shops or apartments.

IN THE Port Authority bus terminal in Manhattan one recent day, young men lingered near phone booths to sell travelers the use of calling card numbers for a few dollars. "Phone card! Phone card!" a young man whispered to passersby. "Call anywhere in the world; talk as long as you want. Only three dollars."

Secret Service agents said many thieves obtain the credit-card numbers by eavesdropping as people at public phones give them to operators.

Access-code abuse is much higher in New York than in other cities. Rami Abuhamdeh, executive director of the fraud control group, said New York abusers rang up about $70 million in illegal phone calls last year. He attributed the high level to the large number of immigrants who use the codes to call their homelands.

BANK

Said Simonitsch: "I'm a person who likes to do a job well and I enjoy my work. Those two things have allowed me to progress professionally." She also credits the bank with giving her opportunities to advance.

Another help is the fact that she works with a variety of people — employees, customers and the community. "I get to see situations from several different sides of the fence, and I think that gives me a perspective I can use in my job."

She did not grow up wanting to work in a bank. In fact, she has a bachelor's degree in sociology from Colorado Women's College, and says she had wanted to work in the family services field. After college, she went to work as a bank teller while her husband began pilot training.

Unfortunately, her life took an unexpected turn when she lost her husband in an accident in 1978. "It changed my life," she says simply. It also taught her that "You need to move on with life, and don't let the bad things hold you back.

After his death, she moved to Midland because she had a brother who lived here. "I never thought I'd stay, but here I am, and I love it," she says. Born into a military family, she got used to frequent moves, and loved the challenge of seeing new places and meeting new people. But, she said, "where you life doesn't matter as long as family is around."

Simonitsch is not a typical career woman with specific goals and a specific time table. "My goals are to do the best job I can and to make a difference. I've never had set goals where I'm going to have this position by this date and then this position by this date. I want to do what I do well and to be happy in my job."

In that area, at least, she has succeeded. "I love my job. I have the best job in Midland," she says. "I think I'll be happy here as long as it's still stimulating and challenging."

Stock Market Loses

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market weakened this morning in light trading, with Wall Street brokers blaming the decline on fears of drought-spawned inflation and higher interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks lost 15.65 points by noon EDT to total 2,088.37.

Among broader market indicators, the New York Stock Exchange composite index of all listed issues fell 0.84 to 152.00. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index fell 0.89 to 304.81.

Losing issues outnumbered gains by nearly 2-to-1 on the NYSE, with 843 down, 432 up and 502 unchanged.

Volume totaled 54.74 million shares in the morning, vs. 251.16 million shares Friday morning, when dividend-related trading strategies and expiring contracts on futures and options drastically inflated the volume figure.

Anxiety over inflation and rising interest rates appeared to be key elements in stock weakness today, brokers said. Falling prices in the bond market pushed the yield on the 30-year Treasury bond up to 9.15 percent by late morning, compared with 9.09 percent last Friday and 8.81 percent last Tuesday.

Fear of a prolonged drought in the Midwest wrenched up commodity prices, another important inflation signal that contributed to the uncertainty on Wall Street, persuading large institutional investors to refrain from buying.

"The institutional business is nonexistent," said Philip C. Puccio, senior vice president and manager of institutional trading at Dillon Read & Co. in New York.

Some traders concluded that leaders of the seven industrialized democracies meeting in Toronto would tolerate higher interest rates, adding to a belief on Wall Street that tighter credit is looming.

Most-active issues included American Cyanamid, which rose 2⅛ to 53 on rumors that the company may be targeted in a takeover attempt. Kroger, another rumored takeover target, fell ¾ to 38.

Among blue-chip stocks, Du Pont fell 1⅜ to 88¼, IBM fell ⅜ to 117⅛ and Boeing fell ½ to 54⅜.

On the over-the-counter market, Farmers Group fell 4⅛ to 57⅜ on volume exceeding 1.5 million shares. Last Friday B.A.T. Industries was denied regulatory approval to buy the company, an unexpected setback.

LTV, union sign pact

DALLAS (AP) — A labor contract agreement between LTV Corp.'s aerospace and defense operations and the United Automobile and Aerospace Workers marks a return to good will between the union and company, officials said.

The new three-year, eight-month labor contract reached Sunday was made amicably two weeks before the July 2 expiration date on the old contract.

IRS recordkeeping under fire

By GARY KLOTT
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Hundreds of thousands of businesses that dutifully paid their taxes have apparently been receiving warning notices from the Internal Revenue Service asking why they did not file a tax return.

The discovery was made by government investigators as part of a congressional investigation into the effectiveness of the IRS enforcement program for tracking down businesses that have failed to file returns for income, employment or excise taxes.

What the investigators found was an enforcement effort that landed on target only about one out of four times, resulting in a large proportion of unproductive and needless investigations that "confuse and create extra paperwork" for many businesses. These businesses sometimes end up paying their accountants hundreds of dollars to straighten out such erroneous notices.

The General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, placed much of the blame on record-keeping problems within the IRS, according to an advance copy of its report. The GAO report, scheduled for release Tuesday, was requested by a House Government Operations subcommittee. The subcommittee on commerce, consumer and monetary affairs has been looking into ways to improve the detection of business delinquencies.

The IRS enforcement program for business nonfilers is no small effort. In 1986, the agency closed 3.7 million investigations, resulting in $5.9 billion in tax assessments. But its batting average was poor, according to the GAO's review of 1,976 sample cases. The analysis found that 73 percent of the investigations were unproductive, with no tax assessed.

In 15 percent of the cases, the GAO found that the IRS had erroneously issued multiple "employer identification numbers" to the same business. That caused warning notices to be sent to businesses that already filed returns because IRS computers have been programmed to make sure that a return has been filed for each identification number. A business is supposed to be assigned only one identification number and list only one on its tax returns. In 16 percent of the sample cases, the GAO found that the IRS had failed to accurately update its computer files with the results of previous nonfiler investigations.

Businesses themselves were to blame in 19 percent of the cases because they failed to follow IRS requirements to file employment tax returns even if no taxes were owed. Nevertheless, the GAO said some of these investigations could have been avoided by a simple change in the IRS computer program.

In a letter to the GAO, Lawrence B. Gibbs, the internal revenue commissioner, accepted the report's findings and pledged to implement its recommendations.

People who forgot to claim some allowable deduction on their 1987 tax return can easily correct the situation by filing Form 1040X — "Amended U.S. Individual Income Tax Return." The 1040X can be used to correct a variety of errors or ommissions on 1987 returns or even some previous-year returns.

But tax practitioners caution that each amended return undergoes special review by IRS personnel. "Anytime one files an amended return, it is subject to more scrutiny than the original filing," said Pete J. Medina, former IRS district director for Manhattan.

Medina, who is now a regional director of IRS relations at the accounting firm of Arthur Young & Co., said that IRS personnel review the reasons for each amended return, as well as the type and magnitude of the changes. "Large and unusual items are going to cause someone at the IRS to ask a question," Medina said.

Ivy Leaguers back long bonds

By PETER COY
AP Business Writer

ON THE MONEY

NEW YORK (AP) — Some of their colleagues on Wall Street call it crazy, but some Ivy League economists believe they have found an odds-on way to make money in the bond market.

The professors say investors should buy long-term bonds when their yield rises to a big premium over the rates available on short-term instruments.

In late May, for example, investors could have locked in a yield of 9.35 percent on 30-year bonds at a time when three-month Treasury bills were yielding a meager 6.24 percent.

It won't work every time, but usually buying in the long end of the market at times of wide interest-rate differentials will put an investor well ahead of someone who sticks to the short end of the market, the professors say.

"These are not risk-free strategies, but on average, you do better going to the higher-yielding instruments," N. Gregory Mankiw, a Harvard University economist, said in an interview this week.

Wall Street economists say it's not that simple. They say when long-term rates are much higher it's because people are expecting an increase in inflation, which will erode the price of the bonds and wash out the gains from the higher yields.

In short, Wall Streeters say the attractive yields on long-term bonds are only there to make up for the risk of inflation. Let the buyer beware, they say: The spread could get even wider.

But people like Harvard's Mankiw, Yale University's Robert Shiller and Princeton University's John Campbell say the conventional wisdom has it backwards.

Most of the time, they say, a big spread between long- and short-term rates is a signal that long-term rates are going to fall — not rise, as the Wall Streeters say.

When long-term rates fall, prices of bonds go up. That means the smart investor who bought bonds when the yield spread was big is doubly blessed by both high yield and capital appreciation.

From 1961 through 1984, the yield spread between the 30-year bond and the three-month Treasury bill averaged about 1.2 percentage points, Mankiw has calculated. Spreads tend to narrow if they get much bigger than that.

According to Mankiw's calculations, if the spread widens to as much as 3 percentage points, an investor has a two-thirds chance of making a profit by taking money out of short-term bills and putting it in long-term bonds.

A two-thirds probability isn't a guarantee, but it's better than most other bets available on the sunny side of the securities laws.

Even now, Mankiw says, the spread is wide enough — about 2.3 percentage points — to justify shifting to long-term bonds.

Why would such a straightforward strategy have escaped the notice of sharp-eyed economists on Wall Street? The Wall Streeters say the strategy is wrong.

Robert Brusca of Nikko Securities Co. International Inc. said history is not a reliable guide to the likely "normal" yield spread between long- and short-term rates.

Investors are demanding bigger spreads on long-term bonds these days because they are fearful of inflation, and that fear is likely to persist, he said.

"During the '70s, bond investors were burned and burned again (by inflation). The steep yield curve tells me that people have learned something," he said.

Lacy Hunt, chief economist of CM&M Group investment firm, said anyone who followed the academic theory would have missed "the greatest buying opportunity of this decade, and in fact the entire 20th century."

That was in late 1981, he said, when long-term rates briefly fell below short-term rates. The long bond's yield of 15 percent seemed relatively unattractive at the time, but it proved astronomical in light of the recession that followed.

Of course, the academics do not claim the idea will work every time. Also, Yale's Shiller said it's possible that the "normal" spread has risen above its historical average, making it harder to know when the differential is advantageous.

Still, it seems as if the yield-spread notion may be an idea whose time has come. Princeton's Campbell said Wells Fargo Investment Advisers, for one, has an asset allocation model based on it.

If too many people start exploiting the spread, it will snap shut and the opportunity will be lost, the academics say. For now, they say, there is money to be made. They have even dabbled around the edges themselves.

"It's always attractive to think that peple on Wall Street are smart and have figured everything out, but that's not always true," Shiller said.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

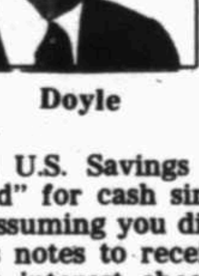

Lost bond certificates, missing interest checks can be tracked

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I purchased two Series HH, U.S. Savings Bonds, in August 1987 but have received no interest checks as yet. I assumed interest would be sent to me twice a year, as happens with another HH bond I have owned for several years.

Also, I have lost a HH bond I purchased several months ago. My local bank gave me the address of the district Federal Reserve Bank and told me to write there. I did, twice. My letters go unanswered.

What advice can you offer?

Doyle

A. You are correct about interest on HH bonds being paid semiannually, with checks mailed to the bond owners. Another bit of good news is that all types of lost U.S. Savings bonds can be replaced.

However, there is something awry with your tale. You can't "purchase" HH bonds. HHs are available only in exchange for Series E bonds, Series EE bonds and U.S. Savings Notes. They have not been "sold" for cash since Oct. 31, 1982.

Assuming you did turn in Es, EEs and/or savings notes to receive two HHs last August, the first interest checks from those bonds should have arrived Feb. 1. That's because the issue date for a HH bond is the first day of the month in which the exchange was made — Aug. 1, 1987, in your case. Unless you are very mixed up in your story, you're due to receive interest from those bonds every Feb. 1 and Aug. 1, until the bonds reach their scheduled 10-year maturities or are granted extended maturities.

To find out about the missing interest checks, write to Bond Consultant Branch, Bureau of the Public Debt, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328 or phone (304) 420-6102. That's also the place to contact to report the HH bond you lost.

A savings bond that has been lost, stolen, destroyed or mutilated can be replaced when the owner applies to that office, establishes ownership and fills out the necessary form. You'll speed up the reissue process if you provide the serial number, name, address and Social Security number on the original bond.

Q. In October 1987, I exchanged some old Series E bonds for Series HH bonds. At that time, the people at my local bank said HHs were paying 7.5 percent interest.

This April 1, I received my first semiannual interest check. It was for 3 percent — half of a 6 percent annual rate. About a month later, I read that U.S. Savings Bonds will earn interest at a 6.9 percent annual rate for the six months from May 1 through Oct. 31. Will my HHs pay that higher rate?

A. No. HH bonds issued since November 1986 pay 6 percent annual interest. Your bankers might have been confused by the fact that HHs issued from November 1982 through October 1986 pay 7.5 percent.

The 6.9 percent you read about is the "market-based rate" at which EE bonds held for at least five years and E bonds and U.S. Savings Notes will accrue interest for the six months ending next Oct. 31.

Interest builds up on Es, EEs and savings notes and is not collected until those securities are redeemed. HHs, as well as their predecessors — H bonds — pay interest semiannually and are not entitled to the market-based rate, which changes every six months.

Q. I have owned a number of $10,000 Series H bonds since late in 1976 and was receiving $451 semiannual interest checks from each one — until recently. My latest check was for $300.

I realize interest rates are down, but this decrease seems too much. Is it correct? Will all my H bond interest checks decrease that much?

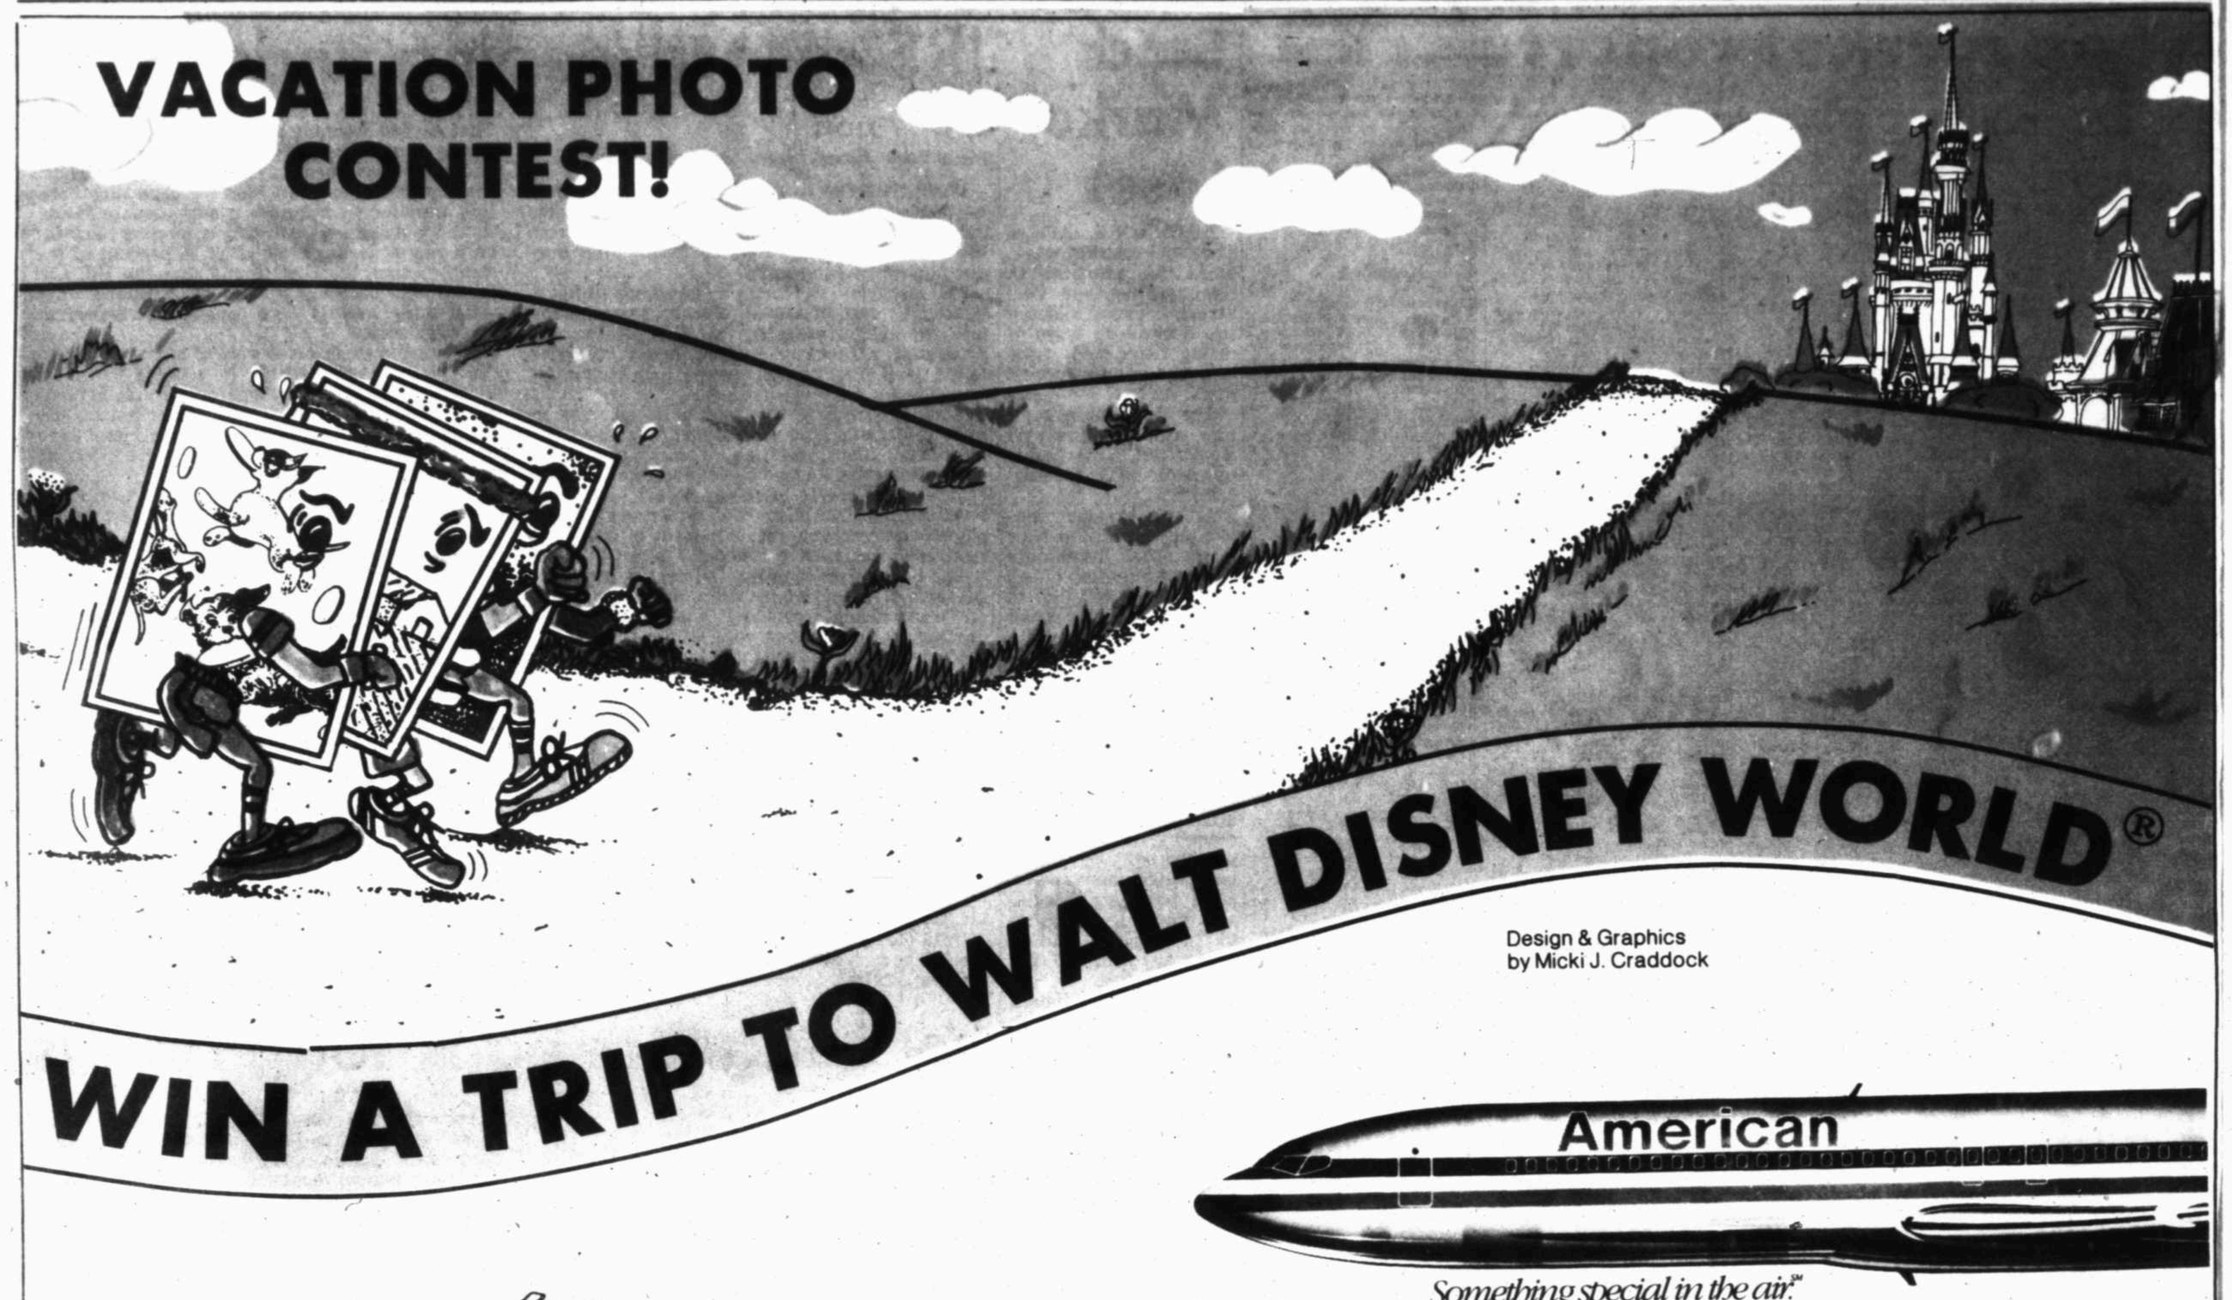

A. The short and unhappy answer to both questions is "yes." Your H bonds had 10-year original maturities. As each entered a 10-year extended maturity this year, its interest rate was cut to 6 percent.

The same thing has happened to all Hs entering an extended maturity period since November 1986.
