All systems are 'go' for shuttle launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — With jet stream winds slackening, Challenger was poised today to shrug off 2½ months of troubles and rocket into orbit as the second ship in America's space shuttle fleet.

Meteorologists signaled a go-ahead in midmorning and the countdown proceeded toward a liftoff at 1:30 p.m. EST.

About the same time, the four astronauts who will fly the $1.2 billion ship were awakened in crew quarters, ate the traditional launch morning breakfast of steak and eggs and underwent a brief medical exam before heading for the launch pad.

Wearing cotton coveralls and white space helmets bearing the NASA logo, the quartet slipped into Challenger's cockpit two hours before the planned launch and began checking the craft's systems.

The first aboard was the commander, Paul J. Weitz, 50, followed by Air Force Col. Karol J. Bobko, 45, the pilot, and mission specialists Story Musgrave, 47, a medical doctor, and Donald H. Peterson, 49, an engineer.

AS LIFTOFF neared, tens of thousands of people, many of them Easter vacationers, gathered at viewing points along nearby beaches, rivers and highways to observe Challenger's departure on a beautiful spring day. Police said the turnout appeared smaller than for past launches.

"A decision has been made that we are 'go' for launch," NASA spokesman Hugh Harris announced at 9:15 a.m., after scientists studied the data gathered by Air Force weather balloons that sampled the jet stream. Midmorning velocities at 45,000 feet were 105mph.

If the winds were too turbulent they could put dangerous stress on the orbiter during its ascent from the launch pad.

Starting before dawn, National Aeronautics and Space Administration crews filled the shuttle's peach-colored external fuel tank with 383,000 gallons of liquid hydrogen and 141,000 gallons of liquid oxygen.

The astronauts are to remain in orbit five days, thoroughly checking Challenger's systems, just as astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen did two years ago when they took the first shuttle, Columbia, into space for its inaugural spin.

"Our job is to certify Challenger for routine space missions," Weitz said recently.

OTHER THAN putting the new shuttle — slimmer and more powerful than Columbia — through its paces, the space travelers have two major assignments — deploying the world's largest, most complex communication satellite and executing the first space walk by U.S. astronauts in nine years.

Challenger's debut had been set for late January, but fuel leaks sprung in all three of its main engines and in a fourth brought in as a replacement. While engineers worked to fix a basic design defect in the engines, a wind storm raked the Kennedy Space Center on Feb. 28 and contaminated the satellite cargo with sand and dust, causing additional delay.

Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson, director of the shuttle program, told reporters Sunday that the 10-week delay in getting the ship off the ground "is not a great deal to pay for a space flight now to assure we get mission reliability later" when flights are scheduled every month. He said he had great confidence that Challenger's engine problems are over.

"We have four lives that are going on that ship," he said. "In addition to that we have the treasure of the nation and frankly, the hope of the space program, going on every time. If we had any real lingering doubt (about the engines), we wouldn't do it."

Launch director Al O'Hara described the lengthy countdown, which began Wednesday, as one of the smoothest ever in the American space program. He said the launch team was confident, adding: "We're anxious to add Challenger to our space fleet."

That fleet is to grow to three later this year when Discovery is delivered here from the Rockwell International plant in California and to four when Atlantis rolls off the assembly line next year. Each is designed for at least 100 roundtrips into space.

PACKED IN Challenger's 60-foot-long cargo bay is the 4,668-pound Tracking and Data Relay Satellite, the first of three forming a network to provide orbital tracking and two-way communications between Earth and as many as 26 orbiting satellites, including shuttles.

Musgrave and Peterson were to release the payload into its own orbit late today, 10 hours after liftoff, and a rocket was to propel it to a stationary outpost 22,300 miles high. Once unfurled, its solar panels will measure 57 feet from tip to tip and its gold-clad wire mesh antennas will become glittering spider webs in the sky.

"TDRS is the most complex satellite ever built; the system will revolutionize space communications," said Leonard Dwerkoski, engineering vice president for Spacecom, the private company that will operate the satellites for NASA.

A double space walk is set for Thursday afternoon, with the two mission specialists donning bulky space suits to step into the open cargo bay for 3½ hours to test tools and techniques for retrieving and repairing satellites on future shuttle missions.

A similar excursion planned for Columbia's fifth flight last November had to be canceled because of spacesuit problems.

Aiding the injured

Emergency medical technicians administer first aid treatment late Sunday to Officer Bruce Williams and a small child he is holding. Williams, the child and seven others were injured in the three-vehicle crash on Interstate 20.

Barges crash, explode

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Salvage crews scrambled to mop up crude oil leaking from two barges on the Mississippi River today as residents downstream from St. Louis kept a wary eye on a miles-long oil slick threatening their water supply.

The slick, between seven and nine miles long, came after two barges crashed into two bridges and exploded Saturday night, unleashing a stream of flaming oil that torched shoreline brush and two grain barges along the St. Louis riverfront.

The oil could contaminate drinking water for the 5,000 residents of Chester, Ill., about 55 miles south of St. Louis, officials say.

"We've got two half-million gallon tanks and that will last us two days if we need it," said Russell Rader, assistant superintendent of the Chester water plant. "There's no danger so far. But we'll just have to wait and see how much of it comes down.

"If it thins out enough, our filtering system may be able to handle it," he said.

Chester is believed to be the only municipality in the area which takes its water supply directly from the river.

Federal emergency response teams began assessing damage from the accident Sunday, after the flaming river halted river traffic for about 10 hours.

Coast Guard Lt.j.g. John Baker said the cause of the accident was not known, but said crews still were investigating the site.

"We are very concerned about the spill," Morris Kay, regional administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency said late Sunday. "But we don't know the exact impact it could have. We're working with the Coast Guard and will get a full report Monday."

Kay said "there could be fish kills" and indicated that property along the river bank could be damaged by the oil. But he said it was too early to predict what kind of problems might occur.

Kay said he thought community water supplies downstream from the accident might not be affected because intake lines generally are below the oil, which floats on the water's surface.

St. Louis, which also takes its water from the river, was not affected because the explosion occurred downstream from the city's water intakes.

A commercial salvage company hired by the owner of the towboat, Valley Towing Inc., of Memphis, Tenn., began pumping the remaining oil from the three barges still afloat Sunday night. No salvage plans had been made for one barge which sank, a Coast Guard spokesman said.

"We've got a floating fence up and have collected more than 2,000 gallons of oil," Baker said. "There's not much we can do about the one that sunk."

Another Coast Guard spokesman, Chief Petty Officer Telfair Brown, estimated that about 10,000 gallons of oil had spilled into the waterway Sunday. He called it a "bad coincidence" that the Mississippi was near flood stage after two days of steady rain, because the oil could spread into backwaters.

The towboat City of Greenville and four barges were heading downstream to an unknown destination laden with 2.73 million gallons of oil from a facility owned by Marathon Oil Co. at Wood River, Ill.

At least seven fires broke out after the accident, which occurred about 11 p.m., giving the riverfront an eerie orange glow that could be seen for miles.

Nine injured in accident

Police took a Midland man into custody after the car he was driving was involved in a three-car accident on Interstate 20 near Midkiff Road late Sunday, injuring nine people.

According to police reports, a car driven by John William Shalosky, no address available, was westbound in the eastbound lane of I-20 about 11:55 p.m., pursued by Officer Bruce Williams. Shalosky's vehicle collided with a car traveling eastbound driven by Daniel Jiminez Palomino, of 503 E. Mississippi Ave.

Police reports indicate Shalosky's vehicle then spun around and collided with the patrol car driven by Williams.

Shalosky and Williams suffered minor injuries and were treated and released at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Palomino and six passengers in his vehicle were also treated and released from MMH. Passengers in the Palomino vehicle included Inocensio Valenzuela, 26, Charlotte Valenzuela, 24, Concepcion Valenzuela, 2, and Yolanda Valenzuela, 1, all of Odessa. Other passengers were Jose Valenzuela, 22, of Odessa, and Sandra Juarez, 19, of 1206 E. Missouri Ave., Midland.

Policeman who shot 5-year-old boy has entered sanitarium, paper says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A policeman who shot a 5-year-old boy to death after mistaking the child's toy gun for a real one has been placed in a sanitarium, the Los Angeles Times reported today.

A close family friend told the newspaper that Officer Anthony Sperl, 24, of Stanton initially sought consolation from his family's parish priest after Patrick Mason was shot inside a darkened apartment March 3.

Sperl's moods zigzagged from highs of non-stop talking and pacing to lows of silent brooding, the friend said. When Sperl eventually spoke to a psychiatrist about the incident, he began having nightmares, the friend added.

The officer lapsed into a deep, silent depression, and on the advice of his psychiatrist, he entered a private hospital for the emotionally disturbed, said the friend, whom the paper didn't identify.

Sperl had been investigating a report that the child and his 29-year-old mother, Patricia Ridge, had not been seen in 10 days. The boy was left alone in the apartment while his mother worked because she said she couldn't afford day care. Because the apartment was sparsely furnished, Sperl thought it might have been burglarized or vacated, police said.

He heard a noise, kicked open a door, saw a figure holding a gun and opened fire. Patrick was hit in the neck.

When Sperl realized he had shot a child he rushed to the boy, and Patrick clung to Sperl's leg and looked up at him pleadingly, the family friend said.

"Oh my God, I shot the...kid," the apartment manager heard Sperl say, the Times reported. "What have I done? What have I done?"

Neighbor Luann Barnes, 42, said two police officers helped Sperl out of the apartment. Although Sperl was standing.

Pope John Paul delivers annual Easter sermon

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

VATICAN CITY — Celebrating Easter during an unseasonably cold and rain-soaked outdoor Mass at St. Peter's Square, Pope John Paul II, prayed Sunday for the worldwide victims of terror, violence, hunger and war.

The Vatican estimated that more than a quarter of a million people, most of them under umbrellas and bundled in winter clothes, crowded the huge square to participate in the two-hour Mass and hear the pope's annual sermon, "urbi et orbi" — to the city and the world — in his joint roles as Bishop of Rome and Supreme Pontiff of the Roman Catholic Church.

An additional 20,000 led in a hunger and peace march by Rome's Communist Mayor Ugo Vetere, were forced by police to discard their peace banners before entering the square.

In an unusual departure from his customary practice of directing holiday greetings to Christians in a variety of languages, the pontiff read "Happy Easter" or its equivalent in 42 languages including Bulgarian and Chinese, then unexpectedly inserted "Happy Passover" in Hebrew.

It was the first time in the memory of Vatican journalists that he had especially greeted the Jews on Easter.

Dressed in white and gold vestments and speaking from the balcony above the center door of St. Peter's Basilica, the pope asked fellow Poles in his native tongue to "dry your tears," but made no further references to the suffering that occurred under martial law in Poland, where he will visit in June. A group of Polish pilgrims carrying a large "Solidarity" banner cheered and applauded him. Although martial law has been officially lifted in Poland, Solidarity, the independent trade union remains suspended.

"O risen Christ, in your glorious wounds, accept all the throbbing wounds of the men and women of today," the pope prayed, "the wounds that are so much talked about in the media."

Then with only one reference to a specific country — Colombia, where 230 people died Thursday in an earthquake in the ancient city of Popayan, the pope prayed for the world's miserable and ill-treated.

"We are with you who suffer from misery and hunger...We are with you, the millions of refugees, ejected from your homes, exiles from your native lands. We are with you, all the victims of terror, locked up in prisons or concentration camps, consumed by ill-treatment or by torture.

"We are with you who have been kidnapped. We are with you who live in the nightmare of daily threats of violence or civil war. We are with you, young people who are discouraged at not finding work, a home or the social dignity to which you aspire."

The annual Easter ceremony, broadcast on live television to 33 countries, followed a weekend of church ceremonies. The pontiff marked Good Friday night in a torchlight ceremony at which he carried a wooden cross along the 14 stations of the cross.

NASA seeks space sickness cure

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - You're an astronaut arriving in outer space for the first time. You unbuckle to float from your couch and what's the first thing you do? Chances are 50-50 you'll get sick.

Astronauts on the Apollo, Skylab and Shuttle flights have been stricken with a problem newly dubbed space adaptation syndrome. No one can predict whom it will effect.

It causes cold sweating, dizziness, a lousy appetite, pallor and nausea. You may vomit, develop a headache and not want to do anything but sleep.

Once, the flight surgeon would have said you had "space sickness." Like sea sickness, but in space. He'd prescribe a medicine called scopdex, a combination of Scopolamine and Dexedrine. It's supposed to ease the nausea and chase the drowsiness.

But the difficulty was renamed because it is a problem of adaptation, not really an illness, said Dr. Philip C. Johnson, chief of the life sciences branch at the Johnson Space Center.

"We don't know what causes it," he said. "We've got a lot of theories, but we really aren't sure."

The difficulty, however, was serious enough to affect space missions. Officials worry that it could strike at a critical time and endanger lives. As a result, NASA is conducting a major effort to control it.

The illness strikes about half of the first-time space fliers. Pilots who can take five G turns in a high performance jet without a moment of queasiness have turned pallid, limp and miserable in space.

Story Musgrave, a physician-astronaut on the mission launching today, said he is almost immune to motion sickness in aircraft and on boats.

"But what does that mean to my immunity to spaceflight?" he asks. "I can't say."

Astronauts generally are reluctant to talk of their illnesses from space. They may ask for a private medical conference with a doctor on the ground and the physician prescribes medicine.

Under a new policy, the physician is required to report anything from the private medical conference that might affect the mission. A mission director will then release details.

Space sickness was first noticed in the United States with the Apollo spacecraft, the first craft large enough for space travelers to leave their seats. As soon as they did, some of them suddenly became ill.

The problem at first was frightening.

"They (the astronauts) didn't know was going on and we didn't know what was going on," recalls Johnson.

It soon became clear, though, that the sick astronaut returned to normal after a day or so and was not affected again during the flight.

Some believe it occurs because the brain receives new messages after leaving the accustomed gravity of Earth.

"The brain overreacts to a lack of signals from the otolith (inner ear) and from the positioning senses," said Johnson.

Scenes from the eyes add to the brain's confusion. Earth's horizon, usually in one place, is moving around.

Johnson said the rearrangement of fluids in the body also may be a factor. Fluids pool in the legs on Earth, but in orbit they collect in the head and thorax, changing the "body sense". Some astronauts report feeling like the head is floating free, unattached to the body, he said.

A series of tests that started on the fourth space shuttle flight and are continuing on the sixth may better define space adaptation syndrome. Eye and hand movement will be monitored to find clues to the signals the brain is receiving.

Astronauts being tested will don sensors on their face and then follow a series of lights with their eyes. Then they will fix their eyes on a point and move the head. The cycle will be repeated with the eyes covered.

Two astronaut-physicians, Dr. Norman Thagard and Dr. William E. Thornton, will make detailed studies in space when they fly on the seventh and eighth missions respectively. They were added to the crews for the express purpose of conducting medical tests on the physiological changes associated with the problem.

NASA hopes to find countermeasures and ways of predicting whether astronauts will get sick in space.

But Johnson said he doesn't think there will ever be perfect control. Men have been going down to the sea in ships for and medical science has yet to conquer sea sickness, he noted.

"We take the Navy view," said Johnson. "They (the astronauts) had better be ready."

Crowds don't gather to watch Challenger

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Beach bunnies and the Easter holiday competed with America's new orbiter for attention on Florida's Space Coast, cutting into the number of shuttle watchers gathering for today's maiden flight.

Prime parking sites sat empty along the Indian River across from the launch pad Sunday night, hours before the liftoff of Challenger. In the past these were filled a couple days before blastoff.

The sleek spaceship locked in its gantry 15 miles away wasn't drawing all the stares this time. Throngs of bikini-clad collegians on spring break at Florida's sun-drenched beaches in Fort Lauderdale and Daytona were getting their share.

At California Tees, a souvenir and T-shirt stand on the beach in Titusville, business was off but manager Jim Harris was optimistic.

"It's an afternoon launch; the latest ever scheduled," he said. "People can arrive late this time. Besides it's Easter Sunday and families have plans for church services and dinner get-togethers. And the college kids are going to stay on the beach as long as they can."

Retired crane operator Fred Russell had a more pessimistic view. "The first few shots the place was packed. You couldn't move up or down the streets," said Russell who can watch the launch from his backyard.

"I think the interest is starting to wear off. The numbers aren't here. It's like anything else; when it's new it's beautiful; everyone wants to see it. Then the thrill wears off. It's just like marriage."

Even authorities were split, with the Florida Highway Patrol predicting as many as 1 million visitors would cram the beaches, parks and causeways before launchtime and Titusville police doubting it.

In the 1970s, when the Apollo program put man on the moon, the special invitation-only guest list read like a who's who of politicians and movie stars.

Today, the invitees are more special guests than VIPS or celebrities, NASA said.

"They are the people who have an interest in a particular launch, or they're people who have an interest in an experiment on the shuttle, or they're people who have an interest in doing business on a future shuttle," says Arnold Richman, chief of NASA's visitors services bureau.

Among those expected for liftoff were singer John Denver, a number of congressmen and diplomats.

Tank car spills toxic chemical

Denver residents evacuated

DENVER (AP) — Small pools of acid were all that remained today of a mustard-yellow cloud of nitric acid gas that hovered over the Mile-High City after a railroad tank car spilled 18,000 gallons of the toxic chemical, officials say.

As many as 5,000 residents of a northwest Denver neighborhood were forced to leave their homes Easter morning after the tanker ruptured in a railyard about two miles from downtown.

Assistant Fire Chief Paul Spurgeon said some acid remained in the ruptured tanker and in small pools around the railyard and probably would be removed later today. He said that the 500-block area that was evacuated consisted primarily of factories and warehouses.

"The real hazard is gone now; it's been taken care of," he said Sunday night.

About three dozen people sought treatment at area hospitals for eye and throat irritations. Three firefighters sustained burns, all minor. No serious injuries were reported.

Nitric acid, used in the production of fertilizer, drugs and explosives, is highly irritating and corrosive to the lungs and mucous membranes.

The spill occurred at 4:15 a.m. Sunday near the intersection of Interstates 25 and 70, and portions of both highways were closed for several hours until crews could neutralize the spill.

Miles Slocum, an adviser for the Office of Emergency Preparedness, said the acid spilled from the tanker when a coupling from another railcar pierced it in a Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad yard.

As the acid spilled, it ignited a minor fire and sent a thick billowing cloud that caused explosions in some elctrical transformers, causing power outages in the immediate area.

"When I saw that cloud, it was just missing downtown," said Gov. Richard Lamm. "If it had been just 20 blocks more to the south and on a work day...well, people might have panicked."

"The kids were crying, 'We're not going to have Easter! We're not going to have Easter!,'" said Dorothy Young, who sought refuge with her 10 children at George Washington High School, one of eight schools used as emergency shelters. "I told them we've got to get out of here or we might die."

About 1,500 people gathered at George Washington, where a classroom was turned into a makeshift infirmary, but officials said they treated only minor eye irritation and respiratory problems.

By noon, crews had neutralized the spill with soda ash, using snowblowers borrowed from the Denver airport. By 2:30 p.m., the interstates were reopened and people evacuated at dawn began returning home, officials said.

Heavy, wet snow began falling in the area shortly after the acid was neutralized. "The snow made the conditions worse for people working in the area, but it didn't affect the stuff," said Spurgeon.

Some acid spilled into the city's sewer system, but officials said all had been contained and posed no danger to groundwater.

Security personnel remained at the scene overnight. Health and environmental officials were to determine whether the contaminated soil needed to be removed. In 1979, 17,000 cubic yards of soil was removed at the same railyard when about 3,000 gallons of acid spilled.

The Red Cross said about 2,300 evacuees sought refuge at the emergency shelters. Officials believed a similar number of evacuees went to stay with friends or relatives outside the area.

Local hotels were evacuated and a westbound Amtrak passenger train from Chicago to Salt Lake City was rerouted through Greeley, 50 miles northwest of Denver.

Weather puts damper on Easter celebrations across nation

By The Associated Press

Rain slickers replaced Easter bonnets on New York's Fifth Avenue and a spring blizzard buried parts of Wyoming, but the sun shone on the Atlantic City boardwalk, where celebrants strutted their finery on Christianity's holiest day.

In Wyoming, an Easter Day blizzard with winds up to 40 mph closed highways in the southern part of the state.

The last report from Cody, Wyo., according to National Weather Service forecaster Harry Gordon, was this glum message late Sunday: "The Easter Bunny is lost in up to 8 inches of wet, heavy snow."

By early today, 12 inches of snow had piled up on Cheyenne, with other sections reporting up to 13 inches.

Gordon, based at Kansas City, said the storm also hit Montana, Utah, Idaho and Nebraska.

The inclement weather didn't stop an Easter egg hunt for the blind in Salt Lake City, where blind children and their parents searched for plastic eggs that emitted a cheeping noise.

But what may be the nation's largest Easter egg hunt went off without a hitch in Homer, Ga., where more than 6,000 people turned out Sunday to search for 18,000 chicken eggs, 40,000 candy eggs and 50 prize eggs.

It was the 24th year that Herbert and Betty Garrison planted the eggs on their 40-acre farm.

"We've all had a big day," Mrs. Garrison said, adding that former Gov. Lester Maddox and Agriculture Commissioner Tommy Irvin made the trip to Homer. "We're planning our 25th now. Next year will be our silver anniversary and we're already working on it."

In New York, the traditional promenade down Fifth Avenue was reduced to a trickle of rain-coated spectators around St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Heavy rains, winds and gray skies kept most Easter duds packed away, but Hermine Price, 61, sported a wide-brimmed, flower-bedecked bonnet for her 21st Easter parade in Manhattan.

"I spent too much time making this hat to let it sit until next year," said Mrs. Price, who once made hats for a living.

In his address at St. Patrick's Cathedral, Cardinal Terence Cooke, archbishop of New York, recalled the special significance of Easter this year, the 1950th anniversary of Christ's resurrection, which has been proclaimed as Jubilee Year of Redemption by Pope John Paul II.

President Reagan, winding up a vacation at his Santa Barbara, Calif., ranch, joined the millions who celebrated the holiday by going to church.

In a weekend holiday message, Reagan called Easter "the triumph of life over death." He was expected back in Washington D.C. today for the tradition Egg Roll on the White House lawn.

Priest takes campaign to stop parish violence one step further

SAN ANGELO (AP) — A priest so concerned about violence in his parish that he asked church members to turn in their guns has taken his campaign to "put up or shut up" a step further.

St. Mary's Catholic Church will no longer rent its gym for dances, and parish dances will be held without alcoholic beverages, the Rev. Joseph Uecker said.

Uecker, who estimates the church will lose $3,000 in rental fees, says he wants a "put up or shut up" attitude to prevail among members of the church, and the parish council chose to take a stand.

In 1982 there were 29 funerals at the church. Five of the 29 parishioners buried were killed by guns. The church is located in the city's Hispanic section.

Roy Canava, 24, was gunned down in February at a local park. Earlier that day another Hispanic man was gunned down in broad daylight.

Uecker conducted Canava's funeral, and has since urged parishoners to turn in weapons to him and he has publicly deplored public drunkenness and lack of respect for fellowmen.

"Since the death of Roy Canava on Feb. 24...the time has come for us, as a parish, to take a step toward eliminating violence," Uecker wrote in an Easter letter to parishoners.

The decision banning outside rentals and alcohol was made by the parish council March 27.

Existing contracts with outside groups will be honored but no new contracts will be taken on, Uecker said.

The ban on alcohol at parish dances is not permanent, he said.

"The action of our Parish Council is a statement that we do not believe that it is possible, at this time, to have public dances with alcohol without the abuse of that alcohol," he wrote.

He said the decision is in no way a comment that alcohol and dancing are evil in themselves.

"We are fairly certain that Jesus himself enjoyed the wedding feast at Cana, which certainly included wine and dancing," he said.

"We believe that wine is also a part of God's creation and therefore it is good. We believe that dancing can be a very wholesome recreation. We categorically deny that drinking and dancing are evil in themselves."

Savitch's success not easy

From Wire Reports

STAMFORD, Conn. — She started out on a "Teensville" radio spot in New Jersey for $1.25 an hour, and then worked as a disc jockey "Honeybee" in a Rochester, N.Y., Beemobile.

Now Jessica Savitch, 34, greets 12 million network television viewers as NBC's Saturday "Nightly News" anchorwoman. She has graduated to a six-figure salary.

Some have chided Savitch for her meteoriic rise from CBS "gofer" to Houston reporter, Philadelphia co-anchor and finally NBC anchor — all in a span of 15 years when others rea h half that far in a lifetime.

Calling her the "blond bomb," they attribute her success to good looks or call it "tokenism."

But as Savitch writes in "Anchorwoman," it has taken perseverance and ability along with some luck and timing. And for a woman, she said, it takes just a little more of all the above.

"What happened to all the male chauvinists in America?" she said. "Did they all get religion and go away?

"They're still there. The same people who said there's no place for women in broadcasting are still in broadcasting today.

"I would like to believe that they were all touched with a magic wand of enlightenment. I'd also like to believe in the Easter bunny.

"But I don't really think that's going to happen."

Savitch has been criticized for "over-compensating" in her news delivery — for trying, as one competing network reporter put it, to sound "too much like a man" does.

"I don't think I've been any more aggressive or hard-hitting than any male," Savitch said. "That's the double-edged sword for women in America. If a man is incisive, aggressive, he's called a good journalist.

"If a woman is aggressive, incisive, she's called cold, unfeminine, brisk and worse.

"On the other hand, if you are feminine and soft, then you're called a lightweight in this business. You're called someone who really doesn't know what she's talking about.

"So it depends on which way you want to go. Do you want to be strong or do you want to be soft? It's tough."

Savitch decided to be tough while a student at Ithaca College in the early '60s, when she was allowed to join the college radio staff only after raising hell about being excluded.

"I didn't know until that point that there was such a thing as sexism."

"I come from a Judeo-Christian work ethic," she said, the eldest of three girls who grew up in eastern Pennsylvania.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠93 ♡AK872 ◇9543 ♣A6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—The one thing you should not do is rebid your hearts—that would show a six-card suit in this sequence. Since you can't rebid your own suit and don't want to bid no trump without a real stopper in the unbid suit, you have to settle for taking a preference in partner's suits. With equal holdings in his two suits, go back to his first-bid suit. Bid three spades.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠872 ♡6 ◇KJ6542 ♣AQ5
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—This hand has all the earmarks of a misfit, and when there is a misfit our advice to you is: "Get out of the auction as soon as possible." We suggest you pass. All too often, we have seen someone bid again with the South hand and end up going for a number.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q6 ♡K8 ◇AQ8542 ♣764
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
4 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Don't make the mistake of thinking you have a minimum response — you must upgrade your honors in partner's suits. In addition, partner has gone out of his way to show a strong hand with a singleton club. We think slam will depend only on how many aces partner holds, so bid four no trump—Blackwood. Even if partner shows only two, contract for a six diamonds with confidence.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K8 ♡K65 ◇J754 ♣8632
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	1 ♠	Pass	Pass
2 ♣	2 ♡	3 ♣	Pass
Pass	3 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Admittedly you don't have much in the way of point count, but what you do have is pure gold. Your vulnerable partner has contracted for nine tricks all on his own, and you have two key cards in his suits. Not to bid four hearts would be a gross dereliction of duty.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K92 ♡AKQ72 ◇J63 ♣85
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♠	2 ◇

What action do you take?

A.—You have balanced hand and a minimum opening bid, and it can be described exactly with one call — pass. Don't feel that it is incumbent upon you to tell partner that you have a five-card suit, good as it is, by rebidding two hearts. For all you know, your best score could come from doubling two diamonds. Leave the way clear for partner.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK95 ♡854 ◇AQJ96 ♣7
Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?

A.—If you are one of those players who overcalls one spade on this type of hand, we hate to have you for an opponent — but we don't feel comfortable playing with you either. Yet if you overcall two diamonds, you run the risk of losing the spade suit. We would double, intending to correct to diamonds should partner bid some number of clubs. Although a takeout double followed by a new suit usually shows a somewhat better hand, this action is definitely the lesser of evils, since partner should be aware that you might have an awkward hand to bid.

Contracting storm

As noted on this page little more than a week ago, contracting to private firms some of the public services traditionally reserved for government is a good means to save taxpayer dollars. In the case of the National Weather Service, though, contracting with private firms would be a serious mistake.

Not long ago, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration official James Winchester informed NWS Director Richard Halgren he may seek contractors to fill some of the weather service's functions, including network radar operations and upper air flow monitoring. That follows one of President Reagan's guiding philosophies: What government can do, private enterprise can do better and less expensively.

We're in total agreement — to an extent. There are many governmental services — even on the municipal level — which can be contracted to private firms for taxpayer savings and comparable or improved efficiency. Street cleaning, handled on a contractual basis in Midland, park maintenance and even fire protection are just a few workable examples.

But the unpredictability of weather — and the potential for harm that violent weather holds — make it imperative the service now being afforded the public be maintained at least at current levels and enhanced where possible. NWS employees in Midland and elsewhere fear that if weather services are contracted, quality will drop and thousands of lives will be endangered.

Midland is just one example of how the reliability of weather service could be compromised. Weather spotters, who watch developing storms in the immediate vicinity and stay in close contact with NWS forecasters in order to adequately warn the public, say they must have unwavering confidence in weather service employees. That's because the weather spotters go to the scene of the storms and their lives could be jeopardized if the information they're getting from the weather service is not the best possible.

Their lives would not be the only ones jeopardized if weather service employees in a contractual situation were not the best qualified, and that, too, concerns NWS workers. During the period from 1953 until 1976, there was an average of 708 tornadoes and 117 tornado deaths each year in the United States. The death toll might have been much higher if it were not for timely warnings of the imminent danger from the weather service.

There are other considerations, too. Farmers throughout the United States rely on accurate weather information, particularly forecasts, from the weather service. If the reliability of that information is undermined, severe food shortages could result.

One of the fundamental reasons for having a government, cited in the preamble to the U.S. Constitution, is to "promote the general welfare." The National Weather Service does that now and does it well. That responsibility must not be relinquished by the government.

Another View: Waiting out Watt

Interior Secretary James G. Watt has said that there are two kinds of people in the country. There are liberals, who oppose his rip-and-reap approach to nature, and there are Americans, who support him.

Now he needs a new category for high-level Republicans who think that he is doing more harm than good in President Reagan's service.

Twice in two weeks, important voices in his own party have said publicly that Watt has become a political liability with the high-handed way he has tried to shift the catchword in his department from protect to plunder.

Edward J. Rollins, the president's assistant for political affairs, said it first. Frank J. Fahrenkopf Jr., the new Republican national chairman, said it again Monday.

It would be comforting to think that such statements were signals to Watt that the president wanted his resignation, but there seems little chance of that. On the issues, Watt says, he and the president are "soul mates." The president is said to admire Watt's rough-rider style, and on Tuesday he defended both Watt and the administration's environmental record in a voice as close to anger as he ever lets it get in public.

And, no matter how sour most Americans are on Watt, he remains a symbol for the nation's hard-core conservatives. The White House is not anxious to alienate that group further.

Still, the fact that Republicans of the rank of Rollins and Fahrenkopf feel free to speak out about Watt as they do will help cut the secretary down to size. If the signal means nothing to Watt or the president, it will mean something to Republicans in Congress, many of whom can now safely vote with Democrats to keep Watt in line. As Rollins said recently, "Environmental issues cut across all partisan bounds."

This is not wasted on Watt. He often talks like an environmentalist these days, comparing his record in buying new parklands and in sprucing up existing national parks with that of the Carter Administration. But the statistics that he uses do not stand up, and he never mentions that he buys parklands only because Congress insists that he do so, and in the end it is all just talk.

It seems most likely that the nation will simply have to wait him out, because the president is not likely to throw him out. But at least he will just be drawing his pay and not drawing any more grand designs for selling off the oil on the outer continental shelf at bargain rates or opening up more wilderness land to mining and drilling.

Energy-stock fraud clips buyers

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Richard Thompson, a Philadelphia exporter, had $118,000 earning interest in a money market account in 1979 when he began investing in oil stocks through a broker named Maurice Savoy. Today, with the speculative boom in oil stocks turned to bust, Thompson's life savings have all but disappeared.

Thompson claims Savoy talked him into buying highly speculative stocks in petroleum companies without warning him just how risky the ventures were. When he finally grew suspicious of the broker's glowing sales pitch, Thompson taped one of their conversations without Savoy's knowledge. Here's how the broker tried to sell Thompson stock in the Zenith Energy Corp.:

Claiming to have hot inside knowledge, Savoy said: "This is all new stuff that hasn't been published yet...that was told to me by (a) friend. You don't get information like this. Nobody knows this deal."

Savoy told Thompson not to pass up the deal: "Look, I don't want to push you," he said. "I don't want you to do anything you don't want to do. I just think this is a golden opportunity that comes almost once in a lifetime."

Savoy said he had invested heavily himself: "Well, I already have 100,000 shares. And they said that's too much. So I bought some through my daughter this morning — 5,200 shares through her."

Thompson resisted this particular pitch, but his misgivings about Savoy came too late to save his earlier investments. Savoy died last year, but Thompson has filed suit against the reputable brokerage firm that employed Savoy. Prudential-Bache. The company, which faces four separate lawsuits stemming from Savoy's transactions, denies that the broker did anything improper.

Thompson's shattered dream of oil wealth is far from unique. Experts told my associate Donald Goldberg that hundreds of millions of dollars have been lost in speculative energy stock deals. Sometimes the investors who got burned suspect that they were victims of outright fraud instead of enthusiastic salesmanship. An example of this situation is New Frontier Petroleum Corp., formed in 1981 by the merger of four Canadian-based oil-development companies. Thompson, on Savoy's recommendation, invested heavily in these firms.

Shareholders of two of the companies have filed class-action suits, claiming company directors lied about the value of the stock and engineered the merger to manipulate funds to their own profit. The stocks of the four companies were offered by some of the most prestigious brokerage firms in the country. Impressive company literature and articles in industry publications boasted of important new energy finds.

Fueled by the favorable publicity, the companies' stocks soared. Between September and December 1980, for example, one of the companies' stock rose from less than $4 a share to $14.50. Today, stock in the merged company sells for about $1 a share.

Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., plans to investigate charges that the Securities and Exchange Commission has failed to protect investors during the oil speculation boom-and-bust. My sources say that the SEC has been aware of the controversial transactions for at least 18 months.

Footnote: Attorneys for New Frontier pointed out that the supreme court of British Columbia reviewed and approved the merger.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: The Justice Department's Task Force on Legal Equity for Women recently completed its review of federal statutes that discriminate according to gender. The list of sexist laws will be sent to the Cabinet Council on Legal Policy for recommendations and then to the White House for action. Next on the agenda are federal regulations. A review of these is expected to take at least another year. Strangely enough, the Carter administration did just such a review and left a report for Reagan officials. Inside sources say the Reagan people threw out the Carter review and started from scratch.

— William Chappelear runs a Washington, D.C., office supply company that did $250,000 worth of business with Sen. Ted Kennedy's failed campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1980. He wasn't too worried when the campaign ended still owing him $30,000. But after six months without payment, Chappelear turned the account over to a collection agency, which settled recently for $15,000. Chappelear has no hard feelings. "I'm willing to work with Kennedy (again)," he said, "if he puts the money up front."

INSIDE REPORT:

Security adviser balances his act

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

WASHINGTON — National security adviser William P. Clark, moving into a more influential White House role, put down two top aides of White House chief of staff James Baker on March 23, the day President Reagan made his hard-hitting defense speech.

Only hours before the speech, top Baker aide Richard Darman and White House communications director David Gergen asked Clark for a final copy of the speech to take into the Oval Office. Clark demurred. "I'll take the speech to the president," he told Darman and Gergen. "But we have to explain it to him," they countered. Clark said he would undertake that task, also.

That was Clark entering a new and more powerful role as the aide who has served Ronald Reagan the longest. Clark has confided to intimates that he "never" steps onto Baker's turf. Now he has balanced his act; no longer will he allow other White House aides to enter his domain.

BAKER TO DUPONT TO BAKER

Gov. Pete duPont, a rising Republican with political clout far beyond his home state of Delaware, caught Sen. Howard Baker's appeal that he run for the Senate next year and threw it back to the senate majority leader.

Summoned to lunch recently by Baker, who announced his plan to retire from the Senate last winter, duPont listened to an impassioned plea that he run for the Senate next year against Democratic Sen. Joe Biden. Baker's pitch: the best prospect in the country for a Republican to win a now-Democratic Senate seat is Delaware — if duPont would run.

DuPont is leaning against a Senate race, however. As Baker warmed up and reminded duPont of his obligation to party and country, duPont deftly cooled him off by asking: Well, Howard, if keeping Republican control of the Senate is so important, how come you aren't running for re-election? Baker's retirment opens the door to Rep. Albert Gore Jr., a Democrat, who is now the leading Tennessee prospect for Baker's seat.

REGAN TO REAGAN

President Reagan felt more heat than usual from the Republican congressional leadership at a White House meeting last week on the bitterly-fought issue of repealing the withholding tax on dividend and interest income.

Pressed against the wall by opponents of the new withholding law (who have the votes for repeal if they could get the repeal amendment up for a vote), Reagan was stunned by the intensity of the congressional Republicans. Sen. Strom Thurmond asked how many new internal revenue agents it would take to capture unpaid dividend-and-interest income taxes in an amount that would match the estimated take of the new withholding law.

The president called Treasury Secretary Don Regan to find out. Regan, a strong backer of withholding, did not bat an eye. "About 2,000 new agents, Mr. President," Regan told Reagan. So Reagan told Thurmond and his allies: No way. His only concession was that it might be worth exploring whether a tax-collection agency other than the banks might be found to enforce the withholding law.

BRZEZINSKI'S MEMOIRS

Former vice president and leading Democratic presidential hopeful Walter F. Mondale will soon read two double-spaced, typed pages of notes about Fritz Mondale culled from the newly-published memoirs of Zbigniew Brzezinski, "Power and Principle."

Ordered up by Mondale's chief of staff James Johnson, the notes record all the uncomplimentary — and some of the pleasant — things that Brzezinski says in his book about Mondale. President Carter's national security adviser and former vice president often clashed on issues involving Israel, the Middle East and defense spending.

Worried at first that Brzezinski's memoirs might contain disclosures or charges that would have a damaging impact on the 1984 campaign, Mondale operatives who have studied the excerpts think Brzezinski did no real harm. Brzezinski lost little love over Mondale and has dropped many hints since finishing his book that Sen. John Glenn, not Mondale, is his favored Democratic presidential hopeful.

PRESSURING PETE

Republican National Committee operatives have been advised by the White House to "cool it" in their campaign to pressure Sen. Pete Wilson for a strong endorsement of Republican Roger Hedgecock in the May 3 San Diego runoff mayoral election.

Wilson is the former Republican mayor who beat Jerry Brown, then governor of California, for the Senate last fall. But during his long tenure in City Hall, he developed a close bipartisan working relationship with Maureen O'Connor, the former city councilwoman and now port commissioner in San Diego. Along with that association went head-to-head political combat between Wilson and Hedgecock, the Republican county supervisor.

Pete Wilson flatly refused to yield to National Committee pressure to endorse Hedgecock. White House operatives ordered the pressure called off. Wilson's good will and utility to the administration as senator from California far outclasses the political importance of San Diego's mayoral race.

CHARLEY REESE

Englishman's comment revealing

An exasperated Englishman once remared that "God looks out for fools, drunks, and the United States of America." I hope that's still true. Otherwise I am pessimistic about the future of the United States, if not about the future of fools and drunks.

Charley Reese

We have three fundamental problems: (1) We don't learn from our mistakes; (2) the present political system is not producing capable leaders; and (3) we often are paralyzed by a lack of a coherent philosophy and an excess of democracy.

The Vietnam War should have taught us an old lesson. Gradualism in war does not work nor will the American people support a war that does not have a clearly defined goal.

But we didn't learn that. In Central America and in Lebanon we are repeating the past by gradually inserting ourselves into military situations with no clearly defined goals, no clearly defined plans for achieving those goals, and no real commitment to see it through. Naturally enough, there is no consensus supporting either move.

President Reagan is supposed to be the great communicator, but not even a good speaker can sell a point he doesn't have. The first step in communication is to know what it is you want to communicate. If the president knows, he's keeping it to himself.

My impression today of the president is of a good, decent man intellectually inadequate for the job. That in itself is no catastrophe. The catastrophe is that he has not had the common sense to surround himself with wise counselors. Like Nixon, he has surrounded himself with political and public relations types. Both types have a necessary role to play but it should not be determining the destiny of the world.

You would think we would have learned from the 1960s that if you don't clamp down on little campus totalitarians, academic freedom becomes meaningless, but we didn't. The U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Dr. Jeane Kirkpatrick was shouted off the stage at the University of California by a group backing the Marxist rebels in El Salvador. The student council could not even bring itself to write a letter of apology; the university has decided to take no disciplinary action. There seems to be a loss of civic courage.

The political process, now a multi-million-dollar media event, is producing for the most part people without convictions — slick, handsome, professional pols who approach public office as a profitable lifetime vocation. True, we get the kind of government we deserve but I'm not sure we can survive much more of it.

The Congress cannot bring itself to balance the budget or pass legislation to help us control our own borders. At a time when non-defense spending consumes nearly 75 percent of the budget, it cannot muster the courage to re-arm our nation in a sensible manner. It cannot find the courage to face the multination corporations which are bleeding America of its industrial base.

When states try to test children to make sure they are not graduating dummies, they are challenged in the federal court. We try to get criminals off the streets and federal judges put them back on the streets while lawyers representing them make a bundle.

We suffer from an excessive number of lawyers, more per capita than any other nation in the world. If all the litigation could be incorporated, Exxon would no longer head the Fortune 500 list.

If you stop and think about it, our society has grown lop-sided. We have too many people who sue, argue, comment, litigate, legislate, regulate, tax and investigate a shrinking minority of people who actually produce something useful. Yet our survival depends on that minority producing useful goods.

We seem to be at odds with ourselves, adrift, with no national purpose, with not even a near consensus on what our national purpose should be. That's why I hope the Englishman's comment is still valid. If God isn't minding the store either, we're in trouble.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Iraq's boom ends as foreign workers desert country

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The drain of the war with Iran and falling oil prices have brought an end to Iraq's construction boom and throngs of foreign workers who had come to reap its benefits are now streaming back home, Western diplomats say.

At the same time, the country's oil-supported economy has come under heavy strain.

At the height of the boom last summer the more than 2 million foreign workers made up more than half of the nation's labor force; 1.5 million Egyptians alone accounted for nearly 10 percent of the total population.

These workers sent home about $3 billion to $4 billion annually and symbolized President Saddam Hussein's policy of pressing ahead with development in spite of the war with Iran that began in Sept. 22, 1980.

Now, the departure lounge of Baghdad airport is crowded with Pakistanis in traditional baggy pants and Egyptians in native robes. There are few new arrivals.

One hotel worker from the Philippines said a new regulation went into effect in December under which the government cut back the hard-currency portion of his salary from 75 percent to 60 percent.

"It is now taking more than a month to transfer even this and it's causing hardship for my family back home," said the worker, who declined use of his name for fear of losing his job.

One Iraqi dinar is worth $3.20 at the official rate, but outside Iraq and on the black market it is worth only about half that.

In a further sign of the economic pinch, the government has let no new contracts, delayed payments for work already completed, failed to publish the national budget for 1983, and reduced the amount of currency foreign workers can take out of the country.

As a result, international businesses are scaling back their local offices and letting workers go after completing projects. One American company, for example, has cut its staff from 17 to four.

Before the war began with Iran, Iraq had $35 billion in reserves built up from the sale of its oil. Despite nearly $20 billion in aid from neighboring Arab oil states worried about Iranian expansion, the reserves now total only about $4 billion, diplomats say.

Perhaps the biggest blow was Syria's decision to close its borders with Iraq in February 1982, thereby cutting off the flow of 400,000 barrels of Iraqi oil a day through the a pipeline to the Mediterranean.

Syrian President Hafez Assad, who heads a rival faction of the Socialist Baath Party, accused the Iraqis of supplying anti-government Islamic fundamentalists in Syria with arms and explosives. Western diplomats say Syria is now acting as a conduit for arms sales to Iran.

Iraq's main source of income is from oil through a pipeline that runs through Turkey.

Man kills his three children

LOWER TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — A man accused in the Easter killings of his three children had been despondent about family matters, Cape May County Prosecutor John Corino says.

Walter Keresty, 26, faces three counts of homicide in the slayings of 2-year-old Heather Lynn and 8-month-old twins Jennifer Marie and Lorrie Lee in his home in Villas, a section of this Cape May County township, authorities said. Keresty was estranged from the children's mother, said police Capt. Larry Dalton.

Marine chokes on doughnuts

NEWPORT, N.C. (AP) — A 25-year-old Marine choked and died when he jammed three doughnuts into his mouth during a speed-eating contest, witnesses said.

Cpl. Richard Drown, of Green Springs, Ohio, was among 10 contestants in Saturday's doughnut-eating match, officials said.

He gobbled four doughnuts successfully, ate two more and, while swallowing those, gagged when he put three additional doughnuts in his mouth, observers said. Bystanders tried to force the doughnuts from his blocked airway, but were unsuccessful, officials said.

Recovery under way, survey says

NEW YORK (AP) — A survey taken by the National Association of Purchasing Management adds weight to a claim by the Reagan administration that a broad-based economic recovery is under way.

"The economy is not running at full bore, but (the recovery) is there and it's spreading," said Charles T. Haffey, a vice president with Pfizer Inc., and chairman of the association's business survey committee.

In the survey, released Sunday, 43 percent of the agents who buy raw materials for corporations reported a production increase in March — the biggest jump for any month since May 1977. The federal government had reported Friday that the March unemployment rate fell to 10.3 percent from February's 10.4 percent, a decline called "extremely encouraging" by Reagan spokesman Larry Speakes.

Thieves escape with 900 pounds of gold chains

NEW YORK (AP) — Thieves using a sledgehammer broke through a concrete wall and into the vault of a jewelry wholesaler in midtown Manhattan, making off with about 900 pounds of gold chains valued at $6 million, police say.

A police spokesman, Sgt. Edwin LeSchack, said late Sunday that the stolen chains together "would be as big as a couch or a car" and that investigators believe several people — or "one very strong guy" — pulled off the weekend theft.

The thieves entered the jewerly firm's offices by breaking through the wall in an adjacent office which was undergoing renovation, LeSchack said.

Police were mystified at how the thieves could have gotten the loot out of the building without being seen, he said.

Also a mystery was why the alarm system at the jewelry firm, Goldheart International Ltd., did not go off until 7 p.m. Saturday, only 15 minutes before police arrived after being alerted by a security firm.

LeSchack said it was unlikely that the mammoth heist had been carried out in those 15 minutes and that it could have occurred anytime after the offices were closed at 3 p.m. Friday.

He said it was not known whether the thieves had deactivated the alarm system or part of it. They did, however, disconnect all the firm's telephones, he said.

"We know how they got into the jewelry firm," said Detective Capt. Eugene Burke, "but we don't know how they got into or out of the building."

The exact amount of gold taken will not be known until the firm's owners complete an inventory, Burke said.

Boy thought pistol was a toy

MIAMI (AP) — An 8-year-old boy who picked up a loaded automatic pistol in a playground probably thought it was a toy until he pulled the trigger and saw a bullet rip through the head of a teen-ager and kill him, a detective said.

"He didn't know it was real. He thought it was a toy gun," Metro-Dade Homicide Detective Stephen Parr said. "I don't think he had ever seen a real gun before. The gun is very small, a silver-color, .25-caliber automatic."

The teen-ager, Robert Tony Dixon, died en route to Parkway General Hospital while the 8-year-old ran, crying, for his mother, authorities said.

No charges were filed in Saturday's shooting. Parr called it an accident.

Authorities said they don't know who left the weapon on the northwest Dade County playground, but Parr said it hadn't been there long when the child, accompanied by three young friends, picked it up.

"I'm sorry. I didn't mean to do it," the boy, accompanied by his mother, told police in a sworn statement.

"He was crying. He's quiet and reserved, very polite and intelligent," Parr said. "He asked me if Tony was going to be all right.

"He had tears in his eyes. I told him Tony was in the hospital in very bad condition and they were trying to help him," the detective said.

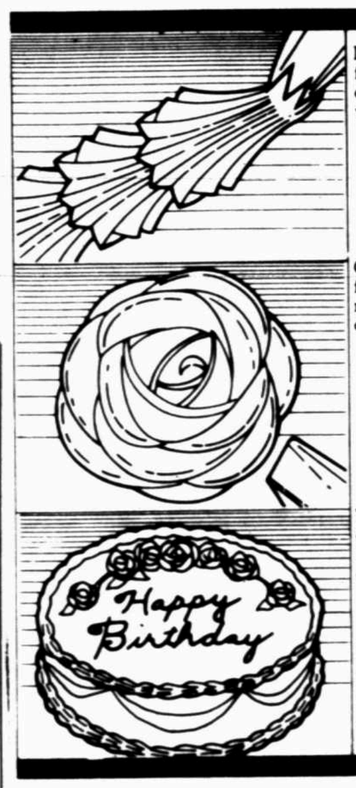

As the officer took the boy and his mother home, he received word that Dixon had died.

"I told the mother and she took him inside," Parr said. "I asked her to talk with him and explain that even grownups handle weapons and sometimes accidentally shoot other people. I wanted to alleviate any guilt he may experience."

Houston's Guy Lewis seeks first NCAA title tonight, but his Cougars may have to beat a Slow-Down to do it.

Houston's Lewis sees TCU again

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Houston Coach Guy Lewis looks at North Carolina State and sees Texas Christian University.

And that's enough to scare even Phi Slama Jama's normally fearless dunk artists.

"When I saw N.C. State playing in the semifinal game, the first thing I said was they looked just like TCU," Lewis said. "Now when I say that, these guys should know that means trouble. We had to fight for our lives three times against them."

The Horned Frogs bothered the top-ranked Cougars more than any other team this season. TCU lost three games to Houston by close margins, including a 62-59 setback in the finale of the Southwest Conference tournament.

In both regular-season games, Houston started slowly, trailed at the half and had to win at the free throw line for 54-51 and 74-66 victories. For the season, Houston has outscored its opponents by an average of 18.1 points.

A slow start is one of Lewis' concerns tonight when the Cougars take on the 16th-ranked Wolfpack for the NCAA basketball championship.

"I don't ever want them to think we can go out there loafing through a half and beat anybody, North Carolina State or anybody else," said Lewis.

Like TCU, N.C. State depends on outside shooting. But while TCU had one guard, Darrell Browder, who gave the Cougars fits, State has two — long-range shooter Dereck Whittenburg and playmaker Sidney Lowe.

"TCU has the great outside shooters just like N.C. State, but N.C. State also has a good inside game," Houston forward Clyde Drexler said.

Whittenburg led the Atlantic Coast Conference in three-point shooting this season, despite missing 14 games with a broken foot.

"I think we just have to play above the rim," said 7-foot sophomore center Akeem Olajuwon, who had 21 points, 22 rebounds, eight blocked shots and five dunks against Louisville.

Houston hasn't been beaten since Dec. 16, when it fell 72-63 to then-No. 1 Virginia in Tokyo.

That loss still stings the 61-year-old Lewis, who after 27 years of coaching and four trips to the Final Four is in his first championship game.

Rebels open gap in 4-5A

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Suddenly a gap is widening in the District 4-5A baseball race and if the 6-0 Midland Lee Rebels have their way, there will be no bridge built to close it.

Lee has a comfortable, though far from safe, two-game lead over runnersup Big Spring and San Angelo, both with 4-2 records.

The Rebel lead cannot possibly increase Tuesday with a win against cross-town rival Midland High at Memorial Stadium Field, but one of the teams in the chase would fall another game back. Big Spring and San Angelo will play for second place in Big Spring.

Elsewhere in the 4-5A, Abilene Cooper is at Abilene High and Odessa Permian is at Odessa High, all at 4 p.m.

4-5A Baseball

	Dist. W	Dist. L	Season W	Season L
Midland Lee	6	0	13	6
Big Spring	4	2	10	7
San Angelo	4	2	10	9
Odessa High	3	3	4	8
Abilene Cooper	2	4	11	8
Odessa Permian	2	4	7	8
Abilene High	2	4	7	10
Midland High	1	5	8	11

Thursday's Games

Midland Lee 6, Abilene Cooper 5; Abilene High 10, Midland High 9, 8 innings; Odessa Permian 10, Big Spring 4; San Angelo 2, Odessa High 1

Tuesday's Games

Midland Lee vs. Midland High at Memorial Stadium Field; Odessa Permian at Odessa High; Abilene High at Abilene Cooper; San Angelo at Big Spring.

UNTIL TUESDAY there was no gap for the Rebels to take comfort in. The Steers were also 4-0 and gave Lee trouble through the first five innings of their game, taking a 6-3 lead. Then, in the top of the sixth, out came the previously subdued Lee bats and before Big Spring knew what was happening, Lee led 8-6 and would increase that score to the final 12-6 margin in the last inning.

That Lee victory, plus a 7-6 win over Abilene Cooper Thursday, combined with a Permian 10-4 upset over Big Spring, has made the difference in the race.

Now Lee has the opportunity to complete the first half of 4-5A play unbeaten, if it can get past the trouble-plagued Bulldogs, who haven't won a league game since the opener against Permian and are finding base hits a rare commodity.

Cubs race toward Texas opener

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

George Borges, a young catcher Chicago picked up during the winter, did a crude swan into second for a stolen base.

"You'll see a lot of that this summer, I promise you," said Midland Cubs Manager Tom Harmon.

As Tom turned his head to the action, Borges was called out for losing contact with the bag after a successful steal.

"That's something I hope you won't see any of, back in Midland," Harmon added.

For a fan accustomed to 9-7, 15-13, 11-10 games back in Midland, the Cubs' pitching in Mesa was a revelation.

"Are they doing it with mirrors?"

"You've never had pitching like this before," Harmon stated.

"Wait a minute. How about 1975 when we had Mike Krukow, Denn. Lamp, Donnie Moore for starters and somebody named Bruce Sutter in the bullpen?

Even that couldn't make Harmon back off.

HARMON was born in Lubbock, but grew up in Fort Worth, played for the University of Texas and still lives in Austin. Pitching that looks good in San Antonio, Jackson, Tulsa, Little Rock and Shreveport can sometimes look woefully inadequate in Midland, Amarillo and El Paso, where you usually win if you can limit the opposition to five runs...wind and high altitudes have a way....

Still, Cubs' pitching never looked any better, or even as good, in the years Midland has been training at Mesa since joining the Texas League in 1972. No, not even that 1975 staff, which despite those who made it to the majors, owed much of its success to a couple of lefthanders who didn't make it, Bernie Beckman, now a coach with Toronto, and Steve Hamrick, retired from baseball. Beckman was 9-2 before being summoned to Wichita and Hamrick came in from Cornell to post a 7-2 record over the last half of the season. That's a 16-4 lefthander.

Bruce Sutter

While there may be some hand-me-downs from Des Moines before Midland breaks camp Thursday for Friday's Texas League opener in El Paso, the staff that is carrying the brunt of the exhibition schedule looks good enough.

Carlos Gil, for example, allowed just three runs in a stint of 12 innings in three starts. Others who have looked good are Stan Kyles, Ron Richardson, Jim Boudreau, Tony Buonatony, Rob Schilling, Joe Housey, Joe Pantaleo, Roy Soff and Tim Millner.

GIL WAS with Midland last year and compiled a 9-6 record. Richardson was 7-8 for Peninsula, Carolina League; Kyles, 11-5 at Salinas; Buonatony, 12-4 at Quad Cities; Schilling, 11-9 at Salinas; Housey, 6-11 at Salinas; Pantaleo, 4-3 at Geneva and Salinas; Soff, 10-7 at Salinas; and Millner, 2-4, 3 saves, at Midland; Russ Brahms, 6-3 six saves at Quad Cities. That's 78 wins and 55 losses, the kind of pace that can win pennants.

"We felt that some of those pitchers could have won in the Texas League last year," says Farm Director Gordon Goldsberry. "But we felt it was important for them to have good years in A ball to enable them to get their feet on the groun d, establish their confidence and a winning attitude."

Buonatony came into his own after 3-8, 2-6 seasons at Sarasota. Kyles began his career with a 1-4 record at Sarasota in 1979 and followed 2-5 at Geneva in '80, and 1-10 at Quad City and Geneva in 1981 before his 11-5 last year which got him a spring camp invitation from Chicago. Soff is a strikeout pitcher, 80 in 83 innings, out of Central Michigan U. whose most important statistic last year may have been his 11 saves.

BRUIN BREWIN'S—Rob Blyth, Midland's reliable reliefer for two years, gave up baseball during the off season as did outfielder Mike Kelley, who batted .309 for Midland last year...Other ex-Cubs giving up the game first baseman Jack Upton...Henry Cotto, who stole 52 bases with Midland last year, has been incapcitated most of the spring with a muscle pull in his thigh. So, although he was on the Chicago roster through the exhibition season, he never got an opportunity to flash his speed...

Baseball season opens with four games today

By Associated Press

Both Joe Altobelli and Dennis Martinez were trying to fill some big spiked shoes when the Baltimore Orioles opened their 1983 baseball season at home against the Kansas City Royals.

Altobelli has replaced Earl Weaver, a virtual legend in Baltimore, as manager of the Orioles. And Martinez was filling in as the opening day pitcher for Jim Palmer, the three-time Cy Young Award winner plagued with back problems.

Three other major league games were scheduled for today — Chicago at Texas and Cleveland at Oakland in the American League and the traditional National League opener in Cincinnati, where the Reds host the Atlanta Braves.

While referring to himself as the "new kid on the block," Altobelli insists he feels comfortable with the Orioles after spending 14 years in the organization. Altobelli, who has also managed the San Francisco Giants, was in the Orioles' minor league system from 1963-76.

Martinez, 16-12 in 1982, started last year's opening game for the Orioles, but was not the pitcher of record in Baltimore's 13-5 victory.

The 27-year-old Nicaraguan was nominated for the Opening Day assignment after Palmer's back began aching during the last week of spring training.

Larry Gura, 18-12 last season, is scheduled to start for the Royals. In his only previous opening-day assignment, Gura lost 5-3 to Baltimore in 1981.

Two men managing in the majors for the first time will be facing each other in the Oakland-Cleveland game — Steve Boros for the A's and Mike Ferraro for the Indians.

"I'm not going to say much to umpires," said Boros, replacing the fiesty Billy Martin who is known for umpire-baiting. "If I'm going to be patient with my players, I should be patient with umpires as well."

The Indians will have three new faces in their starting lineup: veteran Manny Trillo at second base, rookie Julio Franco at shortstop and George Vukovich in left field. All three came to Cleveland in the off-season deal that sent outfielder Von Hayes to the Philadelphia Phillies.

Rick Sutcliffe, 14-8 last year, will pitch for Cleveland against Oakland's Rick Langford, 11-16.

Doug Rader, another of the majors' new managers, looks for modest improvement at Texas.

"A .500 season would excite me," said Rader, thinking of the 98 games the Rangers lost last season. "That would be turning the corner for this franchise."

The game in Arlington will feature a pair of right-handed pitchers, Mike Smithson for the Rangers and LaMarr Hoyt for the White Sox. Smithson had a 3-4 record last season while Hoyt was 19-15.

At Cincinnati, the Braves will send Phil Niekro against the Reds' Mario Soto.

Pack may slow it down against Cougars

By HAL BOCK

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Phi Slama Jama could run into a Phi Slowa Downa tonight when Houston bids for its first NCAA basketball championship against North Carolina State.

N.C. State Coach Jimmy Valvano was charged with figuring out a strategy to deal with the sky-walking, No. 1 Cougars who put on a dunking clinic Saturday to eliminate second-ranked Louisville in the tournament semifinals. And the advice from most of the coaches, assembled here for their annual convention, was to slow the game down, to stall the dunkers.

"He's got to take the air out of the ball," said Lou Carnesecca of St. John's. "I think he'd like to keep the score in the 20s."

VALVANO wasn't prepared to go quite that far. "I wouldn't do that," he said. "This game is for the national championship."

But he wasn't about to have his team racing up and down the court with Houston.

What would the last game of the collegiate season be like, then?

"Shall we say a slower tempo?" Valvano offered. "We might not take a shot until Tuesday morning."

Well, it won't be that extreme, but State's shots were expected to come from the outside where long-range bomber Dereck Whittenburg operates. Whittenburg hit 48 percent of his three-point attempts in the Atlantic Coast Conference this season and his rainbows could prevent any nasty confrontations under the basket with the Jamas' main men — 6-foot-9 Larry Micheaux, 6-7 Clyde Drexler, and 7-0 Akeem Olajuwon.

"We've got to control the tempo," said Whittenburg, who scored 20 as the No. 16 Wolfpack ousted No. 18 Georgia, 67-60 Saturday. "We have to stop them from their run-and-dunk game and we have to take shots from the outside."

VALVANO roared at Whittenburg's use of the collective pronoun.

"'We.' I like that," he said to his senior guard. "Who's 'We?' Who's gonna take them?"

Sidney Lowe, Whittenburg's backcourt partner, said his pal is not shy about shooting, or anything else for that matter.

"Coach said the last pass Dereck made was at my girlfriend," he laughed.

Houston is favored by seven points, and Valvano, ever the innovator, suggested some ideas for the game.

"I'd love a clock," he said. "An eight-minute clock. I think Houston's dunks should count one point and Whittenburg should get three for his baskets."

Houston Coach Guy Lewis harumphed at that notion and the idea that State's discipline might cause problems for the Cougars.

"It takes discipline to dunk the basketball," he said. "I think the dunk is a more exciting shot and ought to be rewarded with another point itself."

If that were the case, the Cougars would have beaten Louisville even more decisively than they did, which was convincing enough at 94-81.

Valvano was almost stunned by their efficiency, especially on the dunks.

"I've never seen anything like that," he said. "The number of different ways they dunk. You almost hope they score on the first shot because when they miss, they rebound, dunk and you foul trying to get out of the way."

THE BURDEN under the basket for N.C. State must be carried by 6-11 Thurl Bailey, who had a big game against Georgia with 20 points and 10 rebounds. He then watched Phi Slama Jama dunk 13 baskets against Louisville and was suitably impressed. Impressed, but not intimidated, not after four years of working in the ACC against Virginia's 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson.

"After you play Ralph," Bailey said, "that's about all the intimidation you can stand for."

The Phi Slama Jama has won 26 games in a row.

In one almost frightening sequence after Micheaux had fouled out with 13½ minutes to play, they scored on four straight dunks including an acrobatic, double pump move by Drexler.

"A COUPLE of sixes or sevens and Drexler's was a 10-plus," said Valvano, offering his ratings of the show. "And they're able to explain them, too," recalling Drexler's detailed description of the drive.

Without Micheaux, Houston brought in 6-5 Benny Anders and went on a 21-1 tear that buried Louisville.

That display led some people to suspect that Houston might be unbeatable, especially against a long-shot team such as State, which had gone through a mediocre 10-loss season before getting hot in the ACC playoffs and the NCAA tournament.

"I can see us being beatable if we don't get out and play," said Lewis. "When we play with full intensity, we're as good as anybody. But I don't want them to think they can go out there loafing through a half and beat anybody, North Carolina State or anybody else."

Zahn,

Cougars to end long time boast

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

When it started out, the boast was that I was the only one in Midland to have seen a SWC basketball team play in the NCAA finals. When that went unchallenged, it was expanded to include the Permian Basin...then, all of West Texas.

When no one contested the claim, it was amended to include the vast area West of the Brazos. Still, no takers.

No one has yet challenged the assertion, few can even name the other NCAA finalist from the SWC, but now it all seems academic. Houston has gained the NCAA finals and, alas, the burden has finally been lifted, or so we thought, only to be replaced by an even weightier load...one which will not be advertised quite as frequently.

AFTER TONIGHT, I will have been the only one West of the Brazos who has seen a SWC team lose in the NCAA finals.

As you may have surmised, the opinion here is that tonight's finals should be a little more than a ritual, a formal coronation. Houston won the national championship with its win over Kentucky's No. 1 team, Louisville, which is justice befitting the original crime. It was Kentucky which beat Baylor in that long ago NCAA finals at New York's Madison Square Garden, the then capital of college basketball in 1948. On second thought, why limit it to college. It was the basketball capital of the world, period.

However, for a while Saturday in the second half it looked as though history was repeating itself and Rob Williams had come back from the NBA to haunt the Cougars, who last year reached the Final Four only to lose to eventual champion North Carolina. That was the game in which All-America guard Williams drew an unaccountable scoring blank.

LOUISVILLE had successfully repulsed Houston's fast start in the second half and come back to establish firm command of the situation, 51-45. The temptation was to close the books on the Cougars' bid this season when Larry Micheaux fouled out.

But then, Guy Lewis switched to man-to-man and what followed was what could have passed for a pregame showtime dunking display, only it's unlikely anyone has seen anything like in even in pre-game.

This was an embarrassing rout and the thought occured that Louisville was the No. 2 team in the country, yet TCU, which twice held Houston to three-point wins, wasn't good enough for the NCAA. Could the Cardinals have finished as high as fourth in the SWC?

TONIGHT IT'S Cinderella North Carolina State, the team that barely got by Pepperdine in its tournament opener.

The Wolfpack didn't even win the Atlantic Coast Conference, but if there is one league that plays the brand of ball that could foil the Cougars', it is the ACC. However, it mothballed its most effective weapon by using the 30-second clock during the regular season. Its Four Corner game is not what it once was. Besides, NC State never was one of the premiere exponents of the Four Corner.

The team with the Four Corner offense that could have given Houston the most trouble, North Carolina, has long since gone.

State's only hope it would seem, is to get an early lead and then spread it out in an attempt to immobilize the Cougars, but then there are those long arms and quick feet that make even that a suspect tactic.

Alcott claims Shore

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Two more women golfers have reached the elite class with $1 million in career earnings and Amy Alcott could be the next after winning the $400,000 Nabisco-Dinah Shore Invitational.

As the effervescent Californian played a steady, even-par round in high winds Sunday to win the $55,000 first prize by two strokes, both Nancy Lopez and Pat Bradley passed the $1-million mark.

They join Kathy Whitworth, JoAnne Carner and Donna Caponi in the $1-million club.

Alcott fired a 72 Sunday, giving her a 6-under-par 72-hole score of 282 as she won her third major crown since turning pro in 1975 at age 19.

She finished two strokes ahead of Beth Daniel, who soared to a 76 after leading the first three rounds, and Whitworth, who also shot 72 on her final trip over the 6,265-yard Mission Hills Country Club.

It also was the first of her 17 victories in her home area of Southern California.

Walker breaks loose

By Associated Press

Pin a star on the shoulder of New Jersey General Herschel Walker.

The 1982 Heisman Trophy winner had been a washout as the Generals lost their first four USFL games, but Sunday he looked like the devastating back who terrorized University of Georgia opponents for three years.

Walker rushed for 177 yards and three touchdowns to lead New Jersey to a 35-21 victory over the Arizona Wranglers.

"I felt it was just a matter of time. I reckon I've reached the turning point," said Walker, who broke the 100-yard barrier for the first time as a pro on 33 carries. "It was just a matter of adjustment to a more complex game. The 100 yards is no big deal."

Walker's 19-yard scoring run midway through the third quarter erased a 14-13 halftime deficit and put New Jersey ahead for good. He added a 4-yard scoring run in the third quarter and a 1-yarder with 6½ minutes remaining to help hand the Wranglers, 2-3, their second straight loss.

In other games, Los Angeles edged Oakland 10-7 and Philadelphia smashed Washington 34-3.

Alan Risher threw touchdown passes of 35, 7 and 62 yards to Jackie Flowers for Arizona, but was intercepted three times, twice by New Jersey cornerback Mike Williams. The thefts broke a string of 112 straight passes without an interception.

The 62-yarder cut a two-touchdown deficit to 28-21 with 12:05 left in the game, but Walker's 1-yard scoring run with 6:31 to go sealed New Jersey's victory before a crowd of 31,382 at Sun Devil Stadium.

Arizona Coach Doug Shively said his Wranglers "should have stopped Walker. I wasn't pleased with the way our defense played at all. Twenty-one points should win a game most of the time. I can't fault our offensive guys much."

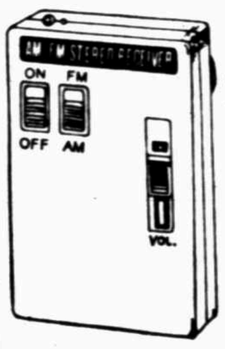

Rookie Allen Harvin, a rookie from Cincinnati who had been used primarily in short-yardage situations, took over for teammate and USFL rushing leader Kelvin Bryant in the second half and scored two touchdowns for Philadelphia in just over two minutes of the third quarter.

Bryant, who has been bothered with minor injuries, played only in the first half as the Stars took a 13-3 lead.

New business owners in Midland still optimistic

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

Texas Business/ Industry Week
April 1-7

Through the first three-quarters of 1982, Midland led Texas in the number of new business incorporations per 1,000 population, according to the Secretary of State.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce M-Squad regularly visits several new businesses a month to attend their ribbon-cutting or ground-breaking ceremonies.

If Midland was suffering from a so-called recession last year, and early this year, why in the world would anyone start a new business?

The reasons are as different as the people involved. None of the new business proprietors contacted by this newspaper mentioned money, although there's no doubt that factor entered into their decision to take the plunge.

Timing and personal reasons seem to be most important.

Yet, in a recessionary period, new opportunities are possible, according to one new proprietor.

"When the economy gets tough, creative juices begin to flow," explained Barbara Landers, who opened Country Collections just five months ago.

"People say 'I can do this a different way, or I can do it by myself.' Big businesses have been on top so long... This is when a small business can begin to grow.

"We opened in 1982 because the timing just seemed right," she explained.Mrs. Landers, along with husband Jim, owns and operates the Country Collections and Feed Barn Tea Room in Imperial Shopping Center. "I just thought 'Why not?' I wasn't getting any younger."

The business will be five months old April 8.

Timing was important to Mrs. Landers. She had had the idea of owning her own business for 20 years, and her children have now reached the age where she felt she could leave them for the long hours a new enterprise demands.

She attended several Small Business Administration seminars at Midland College before taking off with Country Collections. Their statistics and projections for Midland' economic growth, and the need for small, new, unique businesses here, prompted her to start working.

Long hours were the order of the day. "It's very easy to spend too much time here," she said. "The SBA seminar warned us it would take a lot of energy."

The store/tea room has changed constantly in the short time it has been open. The Landers have added additional seating, but resisted the chance to expand the store into adjacent space.

Troy Davis opened a photo finishing service March 7, and he says he expects to break even in April or May. A big reason he made the decision to start Troy Davis Photo Service was that he and his former partner disagreed, and Davis saw a chance to leave that business and form his own.

Midland's economy was also a factor.

"I was here and I knew what the economy was," he said. "If I was opening something that had to be financed, I might hesitate. If you have to borrow money, it's a touchy deal. But, I knew what the market was like."

Davis echoes the thoughts of other new proprietors when he says Midland's economy is not really in bad shape, and is improving.

"I'm pretty confident of the economy here," he said. "I don't want it like it was before — you couldn't get help. My accountant thinks, from what he reads, that the oil will start coming up in May."

In March, Tony Petty of Triangle Lumber saw a vast increase in the lumber business, perhaps evidence that Midland builders are on the move again.

Triangle opened its doors here Dec. 16. It is owned by three people, including Petty. Two have owned and operated a lumber business in Clovis, New Mexico, for 25 years.

"Business was not good there, and we saw all the activity in Midland here," Petty explained. "Then, when the financing came through, things started slacking off here. But, we went ahead. At first, we got nervous because we thought they'd overbuilt the market, but now, our business looks healthy."

It was harder to break into the Midland contractors market then the principals expected, but they see business picking up.

The manager of the Computer Patch, Sara Lipham, also sees Midland's economy on the way back up.

"We know people here want growth and expansion of quality businesses," she said. "We saw a need in Midland for personal and small business computers. We wanted to provide local service and support, as well as dependability. We have been able to expand due to our favorable acceptance," by the public.

Since opening in July 1982, the personal computer store has doubled its square footage in Plaza Center. The store is an outgrowth of the Computer Patch in Odessa, which has been open for six years.

The proprietors of Texas Reds, a barbeque place on Wadley, started their business for an oil industry-related reason: they were two landmen out of work.

Bob Burton and Clark Breeding opened Texas Reds Dec. 1 and have thus created new jobs for about 20 people.

Both have previous restaurant experience in Midland and Dallas.

"People are going to eat out anyway, and we just didn't feel like this town had enough quality restaurants," said Burton, who was the maitre d' at the Midland Petroleum Club at one time.

"We're operating right in line with our budget. This is where we are going to work, even if the land business picks back up," he said. "If things get really bad, we can always be the largest beans and cornbread soup line in Midland" he joked.

Industrial execs: Economy growing, production up

NEW YORK (AP) — A survey of industrial executives said the economy grew in March for the second straight month and a gauge of industrial production hit a six-year peak.

The survey by the National Association of Purchasing Management also said the number of purchasing agents reporting an increase in new orders was up from February.

The agents' confidence about the economy's future also picked up. Fifty-one percent said they were optimistic about the 12-month outlook for business conditions, while 11 percent said they were pessimistic. In November, when that question last was asked, 25 percent were optimistic and 21 percent were pessimistic.

The survey's overall results, released Sunday, appeared to support the Reagan administration's assertion that a broad-based economic recovery is under way.

"The economy is not running at full bore, but (the recovery) is there and it's spreading," said Charles T. Haffey, a vice president in the purchasing division of Pfizer Inc., and chairman of the association's business survey committee.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government says spending on new construction dipped 2 percent in February.

That means builders lost some of the ground they had gained in a robust 7 percent January increase.

Both private and government economists had expected the February decline. They said better-than-average January weather had pushed that month's figures upward while worse-than-usual weather had the opposite effect on building in February.

Further gains are expected this spring and summer.

Referring to the early-1983 surge as "January's weather-related boomlet," Commerce Undersecretary Robert Dederick said Friday he was not disturbed by the February figures.

Even with the new decline, he said, February's inflation-adjusted construction spending was 3.1 percent above the average for the fourth quarter of 1982 when the recession was coming to an end.

February spending for houses and other private construction projects actually rose 0.5 percent over the January level, but a big 11.3 percent drop in spending on public projects pulled the overall total down, figures in the report indicated.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ethyl Corp. and Du Pont Co. restrained competition in the market for lead-based anti-knock gasoline additives and must stop their illegal pricing practices, the Federal Trade Commission has decided.

In a 3-1 decision, the FTC said Friday that PPG Industries Inc. and Nalco Chemical Co. also reduced competition unlawfully through one pricing practice. Those companies were not included in the commission's cease-and-desist order, however.

"We are faced with an industry exhibiting strikingly poor competitive structure and performance and where the evidence shows particular practices have contributed to consistent uniform" pricing, Commissioner Michael Pertschuk wrote for the majority.

Du Pont, based in Wilmington, Del., said in a statement that it would seek court review of the FTC findings.

"We are convinced that our actions in conducting the lead anti-knock business have been entirely legal and ethical," said Richard E. Heckert, the company's vice chairman.

An Ethyl spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said the Richmond, Va.-based company would have no comment on the decision until it could be reviewed.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's report of a small drop in the unemployment rate in March was accompanied by other signs of a stabilizing job market.

The Labor Department said 10.3 percent of the civilian labor force was out of work, down from 10.4 percent in February.

A separate survey of manufacturing payrolls, which is not used in compiling the jobless rate, showed employment in that sector of the economy rose by 120,000 last month. It also said working hours increased by a half-hour a week.

Janet L. Norwood, commissioner of labor statistics, said the March reports showed "moderate improvement" in the job market. But she said the unemployment rate has to change by two-tenths of a percent to be "statistically significant."

Total employment, measured by the Census Bureau's survey of 60,000 U.S. households, remained near 99.1 million, increasing by only 40,000 nationwide. The report said 11,381,000 were unemployed, a decline of 109,000 from February.

The result was the fractional dip in joblessness in a civilian labor force of 110.5 million people.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Federal Reserve Board reported a $400 million rise in the nation's basic money supply for the third week of March.

There was no immediate reaction to the increase in the money measure called M1 because U.S. credit markets were closed in observance of Good Friday.

M1, which represents funds readily available for spending, has been growing at a faster pace than that targeted by the Federal Reserve. The central bank wants to provide enough money for economic growth, but does not want to flood the economy with money as that would reignite inflation.

In the week ended March 23, M1 rose to a seasonally adjusted $497.2 billion from a revised $496.8 billion in the previous week, the Federal Reserve report said.

"You are still eligible for one of the biggest tax breaks in history."

Robert D. Southerland
President

You can save hundreds of tax dollars on your 1982 return with an Individual Retirement Account from Texas American Bank.
The deadline for opening your 1982 IRA is your tax filing date, April 15th for most people.

Tax benefits now — and a sound, secure retirement plan later. And we charge no maintenance fees, as some insurance companies and brokerage firms do.

Shelter as much as $2,000 individually, or $4,000 for a married couple.

We have both a fixed rate and variable rate option, and you can authorize us to make automatic monthly transfers from your Texas American checking account directly into your tax-deferred IRA.

Let's talk business.

Expert appraises Diana's jewels

LONDON (AP) — The jewelry that Britain's Princess Diana wears when she's going somewhere special is not only dazzling, but worth nearly $1.5 million, a published report says.

Princess Diana

An unidentified expert on precious stones figured they're worth $1.47 million after studying photographs of the princess wearing her tiaras, pearl chokers, necklaces and earrings.

The Daily Express, which carried the report in Sunday's editions, said her finest jewels either are Spencer family heirlooms — Diana is a daughter of the 8th Earl Spencer — or were given to her when she married Prince Charles in 1981.

Prize pieces among Diana's gems include a tiara from mother-in-law Queen Elizabeth II, with 19 pearl drops hanging from a lover's knot of diamonds, originally in the collection of the queen's grandmother, Queen Mary. Its value was put at $882,000.

George Wallace

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Gov. George Wallace had an Easter Day hospital visit from evangelist Billy Graham which an aide to the governor described as "very quiet and simple."

"They both said the discussion was almost totally about spiritual matters," said Wallace's press secretary, Billy Joe Camp.

The visit, which lasted about an hour, had "a good effect" on the ailing governor, he said Sunday.

Wallace, 63, has been hospitalized since March 19 for treatment of chronic pain stemming from his legs, paralyzed since a 1972 assassination attempt.

The hospital stay is Wallace's third since beginning an unprecedented fourth term as Alabama governor. As of Sunday, he had been in the hospital for 30 of the 77 days since he took office.

Camp said Wallace "is doing fine," and his doctors hope he can return home early this week.

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. (AP) — Former Gov. William Milliken is out of the political spotlight, but he doesn't miss it at all.

"That's behind me," the longtime Michigan governor said. "In all likelihood, I will not be going back into political life as a candidate. I would not say 'never,' but it is unlikely."

In January, after 14 years as governor — the longest in Michigan history — the 60-year-old Republican drove himself from the state capitol in Lansing to his home in Traverse City, where he has leased an office in a renovated warehouse.

"The transition has been easy. I've had no regrets. I haven't looked back," Milliken said in a recent interview. "I enjoyed those years as governor, but there was one great negative. That was the lack of personal privacy.

"I know this seems like a small thing to most people, but it's wonderful to be able to get in a car and point it any place I like."

Milliken is remaining active as chairman of the board of the newly formed Center for the Great Lakes in Chicago and has accepted appointments to the corporate boards of Chrysler Corp. and Burroughs Co., both headquartered in the Detroit area.

Bob Dylan

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A photographer has filed a battery complaint against singer-songwriter Bob Dylan alleging that Dylan assaulted him when he tried to take the artist's picture, police say.

Gary Arlorian 30, of Los Angeles, told police that Dylan pushed him to the ground at Los Angeles International Airport about 2:40 p.m. Sunday just after Dylan stepped off an American Airlines flight, Sgt. John Chamners said.

The free-lance photographer told police at the airport substation that Dylan became "enraged" as he raised his camera and shoved him, Chamners said, noting, "This is only what the victim alleged."

A limousine took Dylan away from the scene immediately afterward, Chamners said.

Asked whether police had contacted Dylan, Chamners said, "It's not that big a thing. There was no reason to rush out. It'll go to detective (bureau) and I'm sure they'll try to get Mr. Dylan's side of the charges."

Weight watchers have standards to go by

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Weight-watching Americans don't have to rely on guesswork to figure out which diet foods and beverages are lowest in calories.

Federal regulations set strict standards for the calorie content of products which claim they'll help you lose pounds or keep them off. And knowing the rules can make that trip to the supermarket a little less confusing.

The standards for foods are set by the Food and Drug Administration; the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms regulates light alcoholic beverages like beer or wine.

Under the FDA regulations, a food that is labeled "low-calorie" can't contain more than 40 calories per serving and more than four-tenths of a calorie per gram. (That's equal to about 114 calories per ounce.) The limit on the number of calories per gram is designed to prevent rich foods like salad dressings, which are eaten in small amounts and therefore contain few calories per serving, from being described as low-calorie.

Foods labeled "reduced-calorie" must be at least one-third lower in calories than similar foods in which calories are not reduced, and they must not be nutritionally inferior to the unmodified items.

Labels of foods which naturally have few calories cannot carry the term "low-calorie" before the name of the product. Mushrooms, for example, cannot be labeled "low-calorie mushrooms" although the can could say: "Mushrooms, a low-calorie food."

All foods labeled low-calorie or reduced-calorie also must carry nutritional labeling giving nutrients like vitamins and minerals, the number of calories per serving and the serving size to which the figures relate. The information must be expressed in identifiable units of measurement — cup, slice, teaspoon or fluid ounce.

If a food label implies that the number of calories in a product has been cut, it must back up the claim with numbers. The label must, for example, compare the reduced-calorie version with the regular version, giving the number of calories per serving in each type.

Products which are labeled "sugarless" or "sugar-free" and are not low or reduced in calories must carry some sort of disclaimer indicating they are not useful for weight reduction. Suppose, for example, the sweetener sorbitol has been used instead of sugar in a "sugar-free" candy. Since sorbitol has the same calorie content as sugar, the label would have to say something like: "This is not a reduced-calorie food."

The words "diet" or "dietetic" can't be applied to foods unless the products meet the standards for low or reduced-calorie items, or if they are clearly intended for some special dietary purpose other than weight control. A food that is low in sodium, for example, could be described as "dietetic" as long as the label explained that it was designed for people on low-salt diets.

The word "light" or "lite" on a food usually means that it has fewer calories than normal, but it isn't always true.

Government sitting on gasoline coupons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Billions of government gasoline rationing coupons, printed nearly a decade ago during the Arab oil embargo, are gathering mold in Army Quonset huts at a cost of $70,000 a year.

It's a classic government foul-up, says Ronald Winkler, the federal official who inherited responsibility for the 4.8 billion coupons.

"No one believes that these things could ever be used, even if there was a need," said Winkler, deputy assistant energy secretary for energy emergencies. "But to dispose of the stuff is going to cost a quarter-million dollars."

The government has been looking for almost a year at ways to get rid of the black-on-white coupons, but has so far failed to decide on a method.

The problem is that each coupon, which is about the size of a business card, is stamped with a portrait of George Washington, similar to the one on the dollar bill.

"Consequently," says Winkler, "you have these little blank things with no serial numbers or any other means of control that are interchangeable with dollar bills in change machines. Whatever we do with them is going to require a lot of security."

Even so, he predicted that eventually "we'll either burn them or use them as some kind of mulch."

Many features of the coupons made sense when they were printed in 1974, the year after Congress passed the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act to assure that never again would there be mile-long lines of angry motorists at the nation's service station pumps. The gasoline shortages stemmed from the Arab oil embargo.

But the only time the government came close to actually using the coupons was in 1979 and 1980 when gasoline shortages again developed as a result of the Iranian revolution.

President Reagan opposed rationing during his 1980 campaign. As soon as he took office, officials began dismantling the program even before the underlying authority for it expired in September 1981.

Winkler said officials from the General Services Administration and the energy and transportation departments have been meeting on what to do with the coupons. He said he expects Energy Secretary Donald Hodel to make a decision in "a couple of months."

It is likely Hodel will decide to destroy them, Winkler said. "There may be some psychological reason why you would want to keep them, but I doubt it," he said.

Since the coupons were printed at a cost of $10 million to $15 million, they have been stored in seven Quonset huts on an Army depot at Pueblo, Colo. Last year, the Army billed the Energy Department $70,000 for the 15,020 square feet of storage space.

Winkler said even if there ever were a need for the coupons, it would be next to impossible to use them. And, he said, the coupons — which would be essentially like currency were they in circulation — could be easily duplicated on a copying machine.

"I don't know what the people were thinking of when they did these things," he said. "In order to use them, you would have to overprint them with some kind of serial number. That would cost a minimum of $15 million to $20 million.

"But they've been sitting out there for so many years and have molded under the humidity," he added. "So it would be really difficult to run them through the presses again."

Winkler still questions why the coupons were printed with black ink rather than some other color.

"I ran a couple of them off on a Xerox machine in my office," he said. "You'd have to be a real expert, which very few gasoline station attendants are, to tell which is a copy."

Seymour Berry, director of the Bureau of Engraving in the Carter administration, said the coupons were printed with a picture of George Washington so the public could compare the likeness with the Washington stamps on dollar bill to check for authenticity.

Officials to rule on Libya mansion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department says it may decide this month whether a Libyan diplomat should be permitted to buy a 25-room home in northern New Jersey.

The department has been grappling with the problem since mid-January when officials from Englewood, N.J., came here to argue that the purchase should be blocked.

"We've got no firm timetable, but I'd hope we'd have an answer in the next two or three weeks," Jim Wood, an attorney in the department's Office of Foreign Missions, said Friday.

In November, Al Treiki, Libya's chief delegate to the United Nations, bought the $1 million stone mansion in the affluent New York City suburb.

But officials from the Bergen County community claim the presence of diplomats from the North African nation will saddle them with added police costs.

They also have said Libyan ownership of the home will cost the city $14,000 annually in property taxes because diplomats are exempt from such levies.

The United States broke off diplomatic relations with Libya in 1981.

On Jan. 14, Englewood Mayor Steve Rothman, Administrator Bill Summers and Rep. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., met privately with department officials for 90 minutes.

They emerged saying U.S. officials had expressed sympathy for their position.

Gwen Woody, left, and Gloria Teichmann sign tickets in a police department briefing room to get a head start on their upcoming workshift.

Gloria walks about 10-12 miles each day, five days a week, in pursuit of parking violations. She says she wears out a pair of footgear about every six months.

Your time is running out

As she strolls the streets, pen in one hand and pad in the other, Gloria Teichmann cuts a figure that could be viewed one of two ways by most Midland motorists.

Those with freshly-filled parking meters might be reminded of the Statue of Liberty — a sentinel for justice, truth, the American Way — as she cradles her tablet in one arm and brandishes a ballpoint instead of a beacon.

But to drivers illegally parked, confronted by red "time expired" flags, yellow curbs and Gloria's scrawling blue pen, she may look more like a grandmotherly Grim Reaper.

"They always say we're the meanest two old ladies. It's not fair," said Gwen Woody, Gloria's friend and fellow parking control attendant, as they sat together in a police station briefing room before a recent workshift. "It's because they're doing something they aren't supposed to and we catch them."

Fortunately, according to Gloria, most people are fairly pleasant even after being ticketed. "You get some" who are abusive, she said, "but the rest make up for it.

"ONE CAN BE NASTY to you and you'll feel kind of 'Oh well, I'm sorry.' And then another one will bring your spirits right back up."

In fact, she said, meeting friendly folks and exchanging "good mornings" on downtown streets and sidewalks is one of the job's most attractive fringe benefits.

Gloria, a North Dakota native and long-time Midlander, is the veteran on a crew of six parking control attendants — four "walkers" and two scooter drivers — charged with policing parking violations in Midland's downtown.

After six years as a crossing guard at Sam Houston Elementary School, she and another woman were hired almost seven years ago as the city's first female parking attendants.

"I love it. It's still being outside. I don't believe I could work inside. I tried it one day and it almost killed me.

"We do have a few problems when they've got big dogs in the back of pickups. And it's always BIG dogs, with BIG teeth. But you know, you sure get good at flipping those tickets and hitting windshields.

"AND WE'LL GET the prettiest sun tan you ever saw. From here to here," she said with a laugh, chopping a sunburned hand against her wrist and bicep, "and from here to here," doing likewise at her neck and forehead.

Women were recruited for parking control when city officials decided they could no longer afford to tie up commissioned officers for full-time parking patrol, according to Gloria, 54, a mother of three and a grandmother twice.

"We were really an experiment," she said, adding that although her original partner and others have quit because of the leg-wearing walking involved, "we worked out pretty good, I think.

Gloria covers an average of 10-12 miles of pavement each day, five days a week. "We've had a lot come and go because they can't stand the walking. I have been offered the scooter a couple of times, but I like walking." Besides, she said, chuckling, "I think I'd wreck in that old scooter.

"This is good for me, walking. I'm as healthy as an ox. Walking and sweating, you sure use a lot of deodorant and hair spray. We should do a commercial.

"I'll tell you one thing, you need very good shoes."

She said she wears out a pair of footgear about every six months. She's suffered a stress fracture to one foot and recalls spending many nights soaking her feet during her early days on the job.

"If I knew then what I know now about taking care of your feet..." she mused. "I'd go home and soak every night. But you get used to it. And I got better shoes."

GLORIA AND GWEN, much like police desk sergeants and bartenders, said they've seen or heard just about everything during their years patrolling downtown.

They recalled one old man who often took catnaps while parked in no-parking zones and spit at them as he cruised the downtown.

Gwen remembered the following exchange with an Oriental gentleman whose vehicle was illegally parked in a freight loading zone:

"Do you know freight loading zone?" Gwen asked, getting only a shrug in reply.

"Do you know white curb?" Another shrug.

"Do you know $25 fine?" A nod.

"Do you know move?" A vigorous nod, followed closely by the man's departure.

Gloria said she's had people drop money from the fifth floor of a downtown building, hoping she'll feed the meter instead of issuing a ticket.

SHE'S ALSO JUMPED behind some shrubs after staring down the barrel of a gun, pointed innocently enough by a man studying a rifle taken from the back seat of a salesman's parked car.

"And then we have those people who accuse us of standing and waiting for their meter to run out," Gwen said, shaking her head.

Despite the many excuses offered by motorists for their parking transgressions, Gloria said she manages to write an average of 150-175 tickets during an 8 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. shift.

She said she'll probably work "forever, as long as I can walk. I don't think to the future. I just work everyday."

Gloria, who's ticketed her son on one occasion, said she plans to maintain a tough stance when issuing deserved tickets.

"Once I start a ticket, I issue it. They say: 'Please don't give me that ticket, Gloria.' I give it to them anyway. That's why they call us witches.

"Nobody likes to get tickets. I don't like to get them. But I have to give them. That's my job."

The red "time expired" flag is up and Gloria's off and writing another ticket. She writes about 150-175 tickets each day.

Gloria Teichmann, the veteran on the Midland Police Department's parking control attendant crew, prepares to issue another citation.

Gloria Swanson dies after brief sickness

NEW YORK (AP) — Gloria Swanson, the silent movie queen who became the epitome of Hollywood's long-gone golden years, died today at New York Hospital after a brief illness. She was 84.

A spokesman for the hospital said the actress died in her sleep at 4:45 a.m. She entered the hospital in mid-March, and though officials never revealed the reason for her stay, friends said at the time she had suffered a slight heart attack.

Miss Swanson began her career at age 15, retired in 1936 and then returned to the screen in 1949 to star in "Sunset Boulevard," the story of an aging, demented movie queen. She remained active professionally into her 70s.

A lifelong health buff, she attributed her longevity to good nutrition.

Her 1980 autobiography created a sensation because she discussed an extramarital love affair she said she had with the late Joseph P. Kennedy, the patriarch of the Kennedy family.

"If I didn't write about it, someone else certainly would," she later explained to reporters.

The petite beauty, whose personal life became as exotic and romantic as her movie roles, began her career as a bathing beauty extra in comedies and soon soared to stardom.

Among her six husbands was a French marquis. Hollywood writers called her "Glorious Gloria" and "Glamorous Gloria." Her beauty regimen was said to include washing her face in pure spring water, and she was partial to fur coats and red carnations.

She was born Gloria May Josephine Swanson in Chicago, the daughter of an Army captain. A year after her 1914 movie debut at Essenay Studios in Chicago, she went to Hollywood and appeared in Mack Sennett comedies.

When she was 19, director Cecil B. DeMille cast her as a sophisticated woman in "Don't Change Your Husband," the first of her many lavish productions.

"That was just like having a god come down from Olympus and shake hands with you," she recalled in an inteview. "DeMille was everything in pictures."

Her unusual photogenic qualities and style pushed the 5-foot-2, 95-pound actress to the top. Paramount Pictures signed her to a contract in 1921 and she made 10 films in two years.

At the peak of her career, she earned $25,000 a week.

Midland man in critical condition after shootout at southside lounge

A Midland man was in critical condition in Midland Memorial Hospital's critical care unit this morning after undergoing surgery for multiple bullet wounds he received in a shootout with another man Sunday morning at a southside nightclub.

Arturo Payan Franco of 1927 E. Pecan Ave. suffered eight bullet wounds after engaging in a gunfight about 1:30 a.m. Sunday inside the Mio Bario Pobre lounge at 1706 Rankin Highway, according to police department reports.

Witnesses said Franco and another man argued before pulling guns and firing on each other. Police responded to the scene to find Franco lying in a pool of blood near the backdoor of the bar.

An MMH spokeswoman said Franco was admitted to surgery about 3:35 a.m. Sunday. Police reports indicated he suffered wounds to the abdomen, chest and right knee.

A police department spokesman said no charges have been filed or arrests made in the incident.

Armed robber holds up gas station

ODESSA — Police here are looking for an armed robber who stole about $200 in cash from the Shamrock Service Station at 1100 N. Grandview Ave. about 8:30 p.m. Sunday.

An employee at the station reported that a Hispanic man wearing a blue and white bandana across his face entered the station brandishing a small blue pistol and told her to put all the cash in a paper bag.

After ordering her to move from behind the counter into a back room, he escaped east down an alley near the station.

The clerk described the man as being about 5 feet 5 inches tall, with brown hair and wearing a white shirt and blue jeans.

Office sponsors 'vertigon' for pilots

ODESSA — Area pilots will have an opportunity to experience vertigo and spatial disorientation under controlled conditions in a vertigon from 12 noon to 8 p.m. Tuesday at Shlemeyer Airport here.

It is being sponsored by the Lubbock General Aviation District Office.

According to Bud Noltensmeyer, accident prevention specialist, the vertigon is not designed to train pilots but only to familiarize them with unusual and false perceptions of vestibular origin which may occur in flight.

Bluebonnets blanket hills of Central Texas in springtime

LLANO (AP) — There's no spot in the world that can be as beautiful as the Texas Hill Country during springtime, especially after good early spring rains have washed away the dust and grime of a dry winter.

While traveling through this area recently, heavy rain-soaked clouds were keeping a close grip on the few high hills around Lake Buchanan and Lake Lyndon B. Johnson, so low at times that the clouds and mist would hide the rocky landscape from view.

Rain — some heavy and frightening — put the first flowing water into long dry draws and creeks. Small rivers of water spilled down the cracks and crevices of the huge granite rock outcroppings that pop out of the ground ever so often all through these parts.

The sweet aroma of the countryside, freshly watered by the rains and mixed with a wisp of wood smoke from a burning fireplace in the far distance, is payment enough for the pleasure of visiting this area.

Athletes' ex-wives write best seller

Hearst Feature Service

VERO BEACH, Fla. — The book is so hot that even Dodger president Peter O'Malley is looking for a copy.

"Home Games: Two Baseball Wives Speak Out" is the title of the collaborative effort by Bobbie Bouton and Nancy Marshall, former wives of pitchers Jim Bouton and Mike Marshall.

This is a steamy baseball book, based not so much in the locker room as in the bedroom. It also is an emotional chronology of the sometimes traumatic lives of two baseball players' wives, based on letters they wrote each other over the past two decades.

There are candid revelations about extramarital affairs, secret address books, groupies — essentially a confirmation of "Ball Four," the revealing and popular expose by Bobbie's former husband, Jim. But the emphasis of this book is on the gamut of emotions felt by two "starry-eyed rookie wives" married to professional athletes.

The unique interest at Dodgertown centers on Marshall, for two years-plus (1974-76) the Dodger bullpen ace and, based on horror stories still often told, the least-liked player ever to wear Dodger Blue. After all, as Nancy Marshall points out, Mike was even booed on Fan Appreciation Day at Dodger Stadium.

In her book, Nancy Marshall manages to take shots at the Dodger organization, the Dodger image, the "plastic society" of Los Angeles, the media which covers the team, former teammates of her former husband, their wives, and one pointed blast at Dodger vice president Al Campanis.

For all their personal disagreements, the Marshalls were unanimous in their disrespect for Campanis — the result of Marshall missing a team bus ride from San Diego to Los Angeles, choosing instead to drive the family car. Campanis wanted to know why Marshall was not on the bus; Marshall responded by saying:

"If I had looked out the bus window and seen my family get in an accident, I'd always think that if I had been with them, maybe it wouldn't have happened. If my family had been killed while I looked on, I wouldn't be able to live with myself."

According to the book, Campanis answered:

"I understand that, Mike, but it would be better than all of you getting killed."

WHEN CAMPANIS read the passage, he tossed the book away in disgust. "No comment," he said.

The following day, a team meeting was held during which captain Davey Lopes allegedly called Marshall some vulgar names for not abiding by team rules.

"Here are a bunch of grown men screaming at another teammate because he rode home with his family," she wrote. "This is heavy-duty stuff compared to poverty, murder, political assassinations."

Coming to the successful Dodgers from the lowly Montreal Expos, Nancy Marshall was taken back by the fact that "along with all that talent go some pretty healthy egos and some petty jealousies."

That carried over to the wives.

"It seemed as if there was always some underlying conflict going on among the wives this year (1974)," she wrote. "Some of them seemed more concerned about who was getting the front row seats, who was getting their pictures taken, etc. Cyndy Garvey was the brunt of a great deal of criticism about her capacity to always be in front of a camera. She has quite properly denied some wives' allegations that she sometimes has difficulty telling the truth. Frankly, I have trouble understanding why anyone gives a (bleep)."

Husband and wife also could not understand the fan-player relationship, which was underscored in Marshall's case when he was booed on Fan Appreciation Day, the year he won the Cy Young award.

"I think the fans resent the fact that he won't sign autographs or let them have any part of his life other than what he gives them on the field," she wrote. "Mike just can't accept being idolized or being made out to be anything more than what he is — a man who plays baseball for a living."

Marshall was the player representative for the club, and a volatile, vocal supporter of the Players Association. During 1975-76, he was embroiled in a controversy at Michigan State University, where he taught kinesiology, over the use of a physical education facility for personal training.

IN AUGUST 1976, the Dodgers traded him to the Atlanta Braves.

"There is no doubt in my mind they traded him because he just didn't fit the Dodger image," she wrote. "All the controversy Mike is involved in at Michigan State isn't the kind of publicity the Dodgers like. Peter O'Malley asked Mike if he was going to be able to settle his dispute with MSU with a handshake. When Mike said that wasn't possible, I'm sure that did it.

"The players (Tom Lasorda's boys, mainly) weren't helpful either. A reporter told Mike that Steve Garvey had admitted to him that he had gone to the Dodger brass and asked, for the good of the team, that Mike be traded. I don't know how good it was for the team, but it sure was a relief for Mike to be out of there."

Los Angeles was just one of 25 cities the Marshalls called home, so his time there takes up only a brief portion of the book. As years went on, the Marshalls' relationship deterioriated to the point where Nancy grew suspicious of her husband's every move. For instance, there was the time in Chicago in 1980 when Marshall was pitching for the Twins.

"When Mike left for the ballpark I turned into Nancy Drew again and hit the briefcase. Once again, we had the case of the 'duplicate address books' — one for general consumption, with all the legitimate names and numbers, and then the really important one. This time he had it all sectioned out by American League cities and in alphabetical order to boot. Know what I did? In between Kansas City and Milwaukee, I inked in Lansing and wrote in my name and telephone number. Then I repacked the car, and the girls and I drove the four hours back to East Lansing."

THE MAJORITY OF THE BOOK deals with how husbands and wives grow in different directions. It is a story of how love and trust is continually chipped away by infidelity, lies, game-playing.

DEAR ABBY

Kids who don't read become citizens who can't think

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I must comment on that exquisite little poem you ran titled, "I Had a Mother Who Read to Me."

I am in my late 80s, and I, too, had a mother who read to me. I, in turn, read to my four sons, who read to their children, and now my grandchildren are reading to their children.

Any woman who does not read to her children because she "has more important things to do" does them a terrible injustice. Being read to is the best way to inspire children to read on their own. There are thousands of children growing up today in well-to-do homes (not poor ones) who are practically illiterate. Their parents subscribe to no magazines, and if they take a newspaper, it is for Father to read the sports section. There are no books in the house, and they have never seen their parents read for pleasure.

Reading teaches children to think. An entire generation of children is growing up without having been taught to read, and therefore, they CAN'T think for themselves. How easy it would be for some power-hungry person with much charisma but little integrity to sway those illiterate masses any way he pleases.

Abby, I worry about the future of our great country. — CONCERNED GREAT-GRANDMOTHER

DEAR GREAT-GRANDMOTHER: I, too, worry. That's why I recommended "The Read-Aloud Handbook" (Penguin Books) as the best lifetime gift a parent can give a child. It tells parents how and what to read to their children in order to inspire them to read and think for themselves.

Those who are feeling the crunch of a depressed economy cannot plead, "Bread is more important than books." Your public library has a treasury of books — FREE for the borrowing. And the librarian will gladly help you select appropriate reading for children of all ages.

DEAR ABBY: What's the big idea siccing "Southern Fool" on Alaska? She's 31, has been mixed up with a married man for 12 years, knows he'll never leave his wife, and now she wants a man to call her own.

She's already proven she has no scruples about a man's marital status. So you advise her to get rid of her 12-year habit by heading north until she reaches Alaska.

Thanks a lot! My husband doesn't need a habit other than me, and neither does any other Alaska wife.

Let 'Southern Fool" get her act together where she is, or tell her to go someplace else. — HAPPILY MARRIED IN ANCHORAGE

DEAR MARRIED: I considered telling her to head south until she reached another well-known place, but this is a family newspaper.

DEAR ABBY: One peril of a man's calling his wife "mama" (a true story):

Many years ago in the courthouse in Pocahontas, Iowa, an elderly farmer, with the help of a clerk, was filling out a form.

One blank called for the first name of the wife, so the clerk asked the man what it was. The old man hesitated, and finally said, "You know, I've called her 'Mama' for so many years, I've forgotten her name." — HAROLD PETERSON, PORTLAND ORE.

DEAR HAROLD: OK, but I can think of far more "perilous" habits.

Quake victims beg for food, shelter as relief aid continues

POPAYAN, Colombia (AP) — Some tents for the homeless were selling for $400 each, supposedly free food was costing up to $2 a pound, and people were begging for medical attention in the aftermath of the earthquake which devastated this Andean city.

"I've been going from one place to another, asking these government people for a tent for three days," said Miriam Londono Sai, a mother of three children. "We need food. We're thirsty. All they tell me is to be patient or to go to another relief station."

The quake struck this historic city of 200,000 people early Thursday, destroying homes and a crowded cathedral, killing at least 240 people, injuring hundreds more and leaving three-quarters of the population homeless. The government relief office said 12,000 buildings, including many apartment houses, were destroyed.

Three more bodies found in the rubble of destroyed houses were taken to the city morgue Sunday, raising the official toll of recovered bodies to 197.

Earthquake relief aid that began arriving Friday from Canada, the United States, France and other countries was still piled up Sunday in warehouses under control of military authorities. The governor of the state of Cauca, Amalia Salazar, told reporters she hoped tents would be distributed by today, but had no explanation for the delay.

Quake jolts Indonesia, injures scores of people

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — A powerful earthquake jolted the city of Banda Aceh in northern Sumatra today, injuring scores of people and wrecking many buildings in the area, authorities said.

There were no immediate reports of fatalities. A police spokesman said the injured included students hurt by falling beams and stones when part of a building at an Islamic university collapsed, as well as school children and workers hurt when other buildings caved in.

He also said several buildings caught fire after the quake.

UPDATE

Persian Gulf nations meet to combat oil slick

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Representatives of eight Persian Gulf nations met today in the first joint effort to contain a massive Iranian oil slick which threatens the food, water and power supplies of nations which line the Gulf.

Khaled Fakhro, director of the Bahrain-based Gulf Mutual Aid Emergency Center, described the meeting as "technical." But it was expected to produce recommendations for a ministerial-level meeting planned for Wednesday in Kuwait.

Warring Iran and Iraq sent delegates to the meeting as well as Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, Oman and Bahrain. The eight nations are members of the Regional Organization for the Protection of Marine Environment.

The 2½-year war between Iran and Iraq has prevented efforts to cap the two offshore wells in Iran's Nowruz oil field, damaged in Iraqi bombing raids on Feb. 8 and spewing oil ever since.

Experts at the University of Petroleum and Minerals in Saudi Arabia estimate that 150,000 barrels of crude oil have spread over an area 240 miles long and 30 miles wide.

Dead fish were sighted on Bahrain's southern beaches today, and dead sea creatures washed up Sunday on the eastern shores of Saudi Arabia. It was not immediately clear whether they were killed by oil pollution.

Drinking water was selling here for $60 a bottle — twice the price of light crude oil. In Qatar, the price of mineral water shot up to $145 a barrel before the government intervened and and set the price at $38.50 a barrel — about what it cost before the crisis.

"Special precautions" were being taken to protect Bahrain's sea water desalination plant against oil pollution, and officials said the facility would be shut back 48 hours before any oil could reach the coastline.

The slick was reported 80 miles from Bahrain on Sunday night.

Regular helicopter and patrolboat reconnaissance was underway around the coastlines of Bahrain, and meteorological experts continued issuing reports on the wind direction in hopes of tracking the slick.

The Midlander is proud to announce the promotion of Joe Ellis to Executive Director.
