Capt. Nusbaum is certain doing a good work and the old expression that "Life is what we make it" is no more true reference to the individual than it is with reference to the community. Charm and Art in Paris Gowns

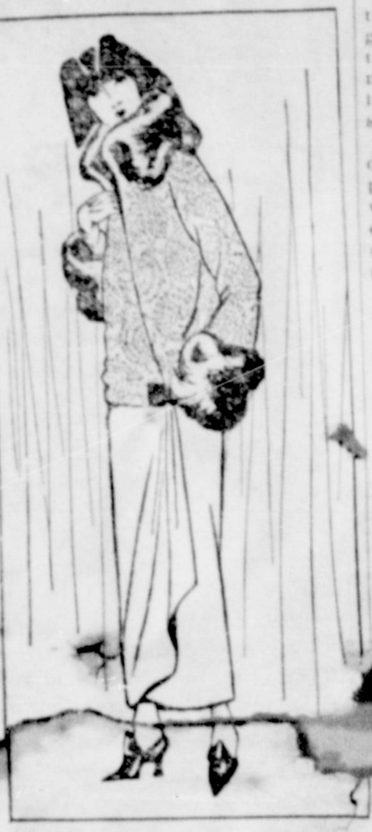
This is the most interesting fashion season that Paris has known for some time, writes a correspondent in the New York Times. The silhouette is a changed affair and for that reason there is no suggestion of monotony or sameness about any of the new clothes or the details of trimming and decoration. Not only have the general lines been changed, but none of the accessories have been permitted to keep their character of a year ago.

We have entered a new era, led by the hand of the Parisienne experienced in the art of dress, and reluctant as we may be to join the procession our presence there seems inevitable. At any rate, there are few who will be able to resist the lure when they behold the new frocks with their graceful charm and artistic appearance.



Example of Short Coat, Fur-Trimmed and Worn With Draped Dress.

Speaking of colors, they have been used with rare perfection. It is not only that the brighter and the more illusive colors have been chosen for the season's frocks, but they have been put together in such a way that they bring out each other and create a picture not approached for many a long day.

Sleeves are long and wide, although some of them are tightly fitted with portions that branch out and break the straightness of the silhouette. Skirts continue to be long, with many floating panels and as much draping as the figure can possibly carry.

There is a great deal of fur trimming, always in an original manner, not only for coats and suits and street dresses, but for the filmiest and sheerest of frocks as well. There are ribbons and flowers and much silver and gold. There is any amount of embroidery done by hand in the most fascinating designs and intricate stitches. In fact, embroidery has been developed until at times it is used to cover the whole surface of a dress or a wrap. And this general mode has led to the materials which are embroidered in their weaving with allover patterns and quilted designs.

There is more variety in the daytime dress this season than in any other field of costuming. The couturiers seem to have run wild in making new things and new designs, in carrying out their own pet ideas, as it were. At the showing of each selection more beautiful frocks than the last seemed to appear until one became bewildered in trying to decide which was the best.

Chanel shows dresses that are particularly simple and young. The waistlines are never indicated by a belt but only by folds of the material. Contrary to the rule of most of the other houses, Chanel makes the decolletage square. One remarks, as elsewhere, the tendency to the fondness for straight lines. The skirts are at times plaited with waistlines remaining plain and untrimmed so that the skirt of the frock is apparently the most interesting feature.

At Paul Caret's the panels take their places on each side of the go[illegible] giving a fuller and more ample line to the skirt. At times they are placed near the back of the skirt, resulting in a long and decidedly graceful silhouette.

Jean Paton shows a number of dresses of olive green velours [illegible] plain brule trimmed with dyed [illegible] wool. The skirts are straight, adorned with the floating panels, two or more attached at the waist according to taste.

One is surprised to find that most of Poiret's skirts are straight of line and narrow of width, contrasting with his usual inclinations.

Favors Gray Models.

Lucien Lelong [illegible] decided [illegible] ing for gray mo[illegible] shades of tan. [illegible] vet is gorgeous [illegible] of s[illegible] lin[illegible] of [illegible] tion [illegible] Je[illegible] neck [illegible] one [illegible] On the right side [illegible] panel hanging fr[illegible] skirt is a [illegible] lined with white [illegible] in the waist and [illegible]

At Premet's [illegible] serge. [illegible]ll of the serge frocks are straight and narrow. One model of black serge is lightened by a collar and wristbands of white crepe, braided and rebraided with crepe of orange and brilliant green. The majority of the afternoon gowns have round necks with large collars which reach over the shoulders like a bertha.

One exquisite frock of myrtle green relies for its trimmings upon an embroidered pattern of tiny beads [illegible] celain in marigold yellow. This is, [illegible] effect, most unusual and charming.

At Madeleine et Madeleine there is an attractive gown for the jeune fille of beige kasha with an adjustable corsage which fastens in the back with huge buttons. This frock has an ample skirt which reaches well below the ankles. A serge dress has a skirt full and long with a short waist and sleeves tied at the elbow and falling bouffants.

At Martial et Armand's one sees as always a number of the transformation dresses. There is one of white crepe with panels of black crepe which fall from the shoulders and may be removed to show a tightly fitting skirt of white. Another has a removable skirt of black marocain which is made over green jersey. This can be detached and used as a cape. Many gowns have girdles which form large geisha bows at the back.

With Scarf of Crepe

At Drecoll's there is a dress with a scarf of crepe that is draped from the shoulders and caught at the waist with a wide band of fur, falling again in a floating panel to the edge of the skirt in back. This panel may be detached and twisted about the neck, forming a scarf. A gown of black crepe de chine carries no other trimming but a long queue of black fox which is hung from the waist down one side.

One cannot help but notice that Beers' skirts are slightly shorter and narrower than the skirts shown elsewhere. Charlotte likes very much to combine unusual colors. On an afternoon gown of maroon one finds a broad girdle of scarlet and panels of the same draped over either hip. Another dress of maroon crepe has huge full sleeves of muslin, intricately embroidered with red beads in a quaint, peasant style.

Renee remains faithful to the Russian blouse, with the waist always full and long. A fanlike panel draped from the shoulders or from the waist gives more ample lines to the silhouette, a means which is frequently resorted to rather than the actual widening of the skirt.

At Molyneaux's simplicity dominates, with skirts that are not long, nor yet excessively short; at about the length, that is, which the American women as a whole have long favored. The waist at this house, too, is shown by a low girdle. A gown of copper colored velvet is embroidered with steel beads, and has one long sleeve, and the other arm remains bare. Pointed necks for the decollete frocks replace the bateau line at this house.

Gingham Corsets.

Gingham corsets are certainly something new in the world. You can get them in all the delicate checks or plain material in all the delicate colors. They have elastic tops and are finished in a tailored style. They are said to launder satisfactorily.

capering a tall, handsome young man, garbed in the fashion of the day, passed with long and careless strides from one end of the saloon and out toward the upper deck.

Admiring eyes were bent upon him; and one lady turned to her partner and said:

"Oh, please, Colonel, tell me who he is."

The Colonel placed his right hand on the bosom of his ruffled shirt and bowed. "Miss Lucy," he said, "it would be one of the satisfactions of my life to gratify your more than natural curiosity, but that pleasure is denied me. I can't tell you who he is."

And then—because the Colonel had sighed his own sentimental distress in the presence of Miss Lucy and because her curiosity concerning the young stranger stirred a jealous qualm—he ed: "He looks like a Yankee to me."

The young man was a Yankee. And because he was journeying to the South upon a grim and terrible mission, the gayeties of the ballroom had grated upon him and he had sought the solitude of the upper deck. Yet it was this moment that Fate chose to bring him face to face with one who was to change the whole course of his life.

For as he turned into a long passageway, aflame with light but deserted, there suddenly entered at the ar end a girl thrilling in litheness and lmost barbaric in dress. In swift un-

ful of roses in red glare

ward the upper deck.

For a time he stood gazing down upon the never-solved mystery of night on the Mississippi. The fiddles were going again, and he heard slippered feet whispering over the floor, but it emed to him that this scene of gay- was forced, like a melancholy reminded him of a book of ns in tatters, of a love-letter in d ink.

Built about one of the smokestacks was a shanty of boards called the "dog house." Turning a corner of the shanty, the young man stumbled against some one; a man growled in resentment.

"I beg your pardon!"

"I should say you do!" A young fellow of unusual height and of humorous slimness came forth out of the shadow. The boat was landing, and a turpentine-torch on the shore revealed him, pale and long of face, with collar cut low and chin standing high.

"Yes, sir," he added, "and although it may not be necessary on this occasion, yet if you knew who I am, you would apologize some more."

"Ah, you don't say!" replied the Yankee, smiling. "And as you seem to be fond of the music of apology, will you please tell me who you are?"

"I can do that easy enough, but I don't wish to frighten you."

"You are considerate. But the fact is I rather enjoy the sensation of fright."

"Then tremble: I am Liberty Shottle."

"What, you don't mean that you are really Liberty Shottle!"

"I swear it."

"Well, well! And now will you please enlighten me as to who Liberty Shottle is? And why do you suppose that people who have heard of you, tremble in your presence? What have you done?"

"Sir, modesty puts a clamp on me. . . . And now would you mind telling me your name?"

"Not at all. My name is Virgil Drace."

"You don't say? Well, well! But I never heard of you, either." Now they laughed, the joyous and unsuspicious mirth of youth. They stood looking down upon the deck-hands, loading freight, listening to the stream of the second mate's profanity, who swore his emotion by the stars, the moon, the river, the universe; and when the Leona was on her way again, the fiddles going, the muddy roustabouts singing, Liberty Shottle and Drace seated themselves on campstools, eagering toward swift acquaintance, the friendship of two natures far apart in aim and principle.

"If you've got two cigars, I'll join you in a smoke," said Shottle. "Thank you. You see, my people, what few of them are left, say that I don't exist. They haven't cast me off, or anything of that sort, but being of staid habits themselves, they swear that I am too unreal to exist. Lord, what is the world but queer? What's your game?"

"I haven't any—any game," parried the Northerner. "But what are you doing on this boat yourself?"

"I'm going down to New Orleans," replied Liberty, "to see how long I can stay there. I had a pretty fair job a couple of months ago teaching a school near Memphis. They liked me, too. I've got a sheep's hide from Chapel Hill university, North Carolina, with all the wool singed off and the board acknowledged my qualifications, but they caught me shaking dice with the boys and told me that as there were some branches of learning they didn't care to have instilled, I'd better get a professorship in some higher institution. Have you been in there?"

Liberty Shottle waved his hand; and Drace, thinking he meant the ballroom, answered him:

"Only passed through. I've been rather worn with that sort of thing."

"Oh, you think I meant the ball! I meant the poker-room."

"Yes, I sat in there for a time."

"How did you come out?"

"Not very well. Lost two hundred."

"You speak of losing two hundred as lightly as if it were a matter of breath instead of blood. Would you mind holding my hand till you say it again? Two hundred! Why, you know, a fellow would teach bullet-heads and sissies for two months for two hundred dollars . . . . Now, let me lay down a proposition: lucky tonight. I lost fifteen dollars, all I had, but I'd just got up to the point of ing when I lost my last dollar. e more ante, and it would have y way. I saw it coming, but a blundering-fool bended it off. Now, here's my scheme, and it's a good one: you want your two hundred back; you stake me to a hundred, and I'll go in there and make a cleaning. Don't refuse, now, until you have let your mind digest the situation. Most of the errors in this life come from snap judgment."

"Ah, you think you can win, because you lost?"

"My dear Virgil, there is, you might say, a psychology in everything. Who wins a fight? The man who believes he can't? No, the man who knows he can. And I know right now. Why, I'd stake my life on it. You give me the hundred and stay right here and wait. As for my honesty, I can give you references—the mayor of New Orleans and Judge Hebbins of Memphis—but he died last week. No matter — I'd jump into the river and let the paddle-wheel beat me into sausagement before I'd deceive you. Liberty Shottle, that's my name!"

Drace leaned back and laughed. "Liberty, a thing astonishing to me is going to happen. I'll stake you to the hundred."

No superstitious devotee ever received from the priest of the gods a libation with more of emotional strain than Liberty Shottle evinced when he closed in tight clutch on Drace's adventurous hundred. Then he bowed and disappeared.

Drace sat musing, and soon he began to wonder why he had been so weak as to give $100 to this peculiar fellow, a stranger. Well, Liberty had amused him. Made him laugh, and in this world there is more money spent for the promotion of laughter than for the relief of tears.

Presently Shottle returned. He sat down and though physically he was light, the camp stool groaned beneath him. Drace waited. The Leona blew her great horn and all the world seemed to tremble. When the sound had died, echoing miles away, the gambler coughed lightly and groaned. Drace wondered why he should be tickled over any one's misfortune but he felt a merry tingling in his blood.

"This boat's got a good bass voice," he remarked.

"Bass voice! Do you know what I'd like to do? I'd like to bore a ten inch hole in her bottom and let her go down."

"You must have lost, Liberty."

"Alfred Drace, with the compliments of Stephe la Vitte."

Captain Nusbaum Introduced to The Knox City High School

Tuesday morning the students of the high school accembled in the study hall for the opening exercise. When Mr. McKeown came in followed by Captain Nusbaum. This was a surprise to all the students. Then introduced Captain Nusbaum.

After Mr. McKeown introduced him and he failed to come forward and say anything, we were all surprised. Finally he began smiling, and he then told us he was only waiting for us to clap our hands. Which we did very heartily. Captain Nusbaum then explained to us how much it helped a speaker if the people would clap their hands and show him he was welcomed. Then he explained his work in our town and told us how he wanted the High School students to take part and help him in his work during his stay here. He also explained why he was called Captain. It is because of his wonderful work in the Red Cross during the world war.

Captain Nusbaum told us of his stay in the little town of McLean, and how the High School students joined him in his work. After he left their town he received twenty two letters from the bays and girls, telling him how he had helped them in some way. Captain Nusbaum prizes these letters very highly and said he would keep them as souveniers. He closed his talk with several funny little jokes, which made all of us laugh.

Captain Nusbaum is spending a week in our town giving a series of lectures on Community Service. He will give a lecture every night during the week. Sunday's lectures will be of a religious nature. Captain Nusbaum's home is in El Paso but the High School students are going to make Captain Nusbaum feel that he is at home when he is in Knox City. And we are not going to let Captain Nusbaum leave our town without giving him the impression that our school has just as much "pep" and can show as much interest in his work as the McLean school. We are going to put forth every effort to have him say when he leaves here "Knox City and McLean High School" instead of McLean alone. And showed our appreciation by giving fifteen rahs for Captain.

Agent Martin to Knox City

We are very sorry to learn that our friend and fellow citizen V. G. Martin and estimable family are to leave Rochester Mr. Martin is moving to Knox City where he will hold his position as agent for the Orient at that place. He tells us that he has been unable to procure a dwelling house at that place and he will leave his family in Rochester for some time yet.

Mr. Martin has made many friends in the short time that he has been here who join us in regretting his departue from our town. He is a very capable and efficient Station agent and at the same time is a sure enough good fellow. We are sure that his good qualities will soon make him one of the leading citizens of our suburb on the North.—Rochester News.

The Ag Club

While here last week, Mr. Rutland, Assistant State Supervisor of Vocational Agriculture, made an interesting talk to the High School, on the opportunities in Agriculture. Mr. Rutland also made a talk to the Agriculture class, on project work carried along with the study of Agriculture, and showed the advantages of carrying more than one project. He also offered suggestions on experiments.

The part time night class will start in the near future with a membership of twelve. The number of applications has been received and an effort is being made to allow an increase. The classes will meet in the Ag laboratory at the high school probably on Monday and Wednesday night for four weeks. A more definate announcement will be made in next weeks paper.

The Animal Husbandry class finished the judging of dairy cattle last week. While the plant production class continued work on the Plant Production experiment plots.

A miniture piano which had been ordered for the primary department arrived Wed. morning. The Grammer Grades Glee Club are especially delighted as they will now have a definite place to practice in the primary room. The little folks are also tickled to get the piano as it affords them much pleasure to sing their little songs to accompaniment. It is very suitable for use in the primary grades since it is only 3 feet a 7 inches high. The teacher is able to watch the expression of the children as she plays at the same time they are able to watch her directions. The piano was bought in the name of Public School Music Department.

Greyhounds vs. Goree In Basket Ball

Following the basket ball game with the Goree girls against K. C. girls on home court Friday afternoon the Greyhounds played Goree. Fast work was shown on both sides although the Greyhounds had only one week of practice they held the Goree team successfully throughout the game. The first score was made by Bolin of K. C. Immediately following this play Carpenter made two field goals. Later Pate made another field goal. The next play was a goal in Goree's favor making the score 7 to 2 in the first eight minutes of play. The Greyhounds and the opposing team worked hard.

There was lots of "pep" and support given by the pupils of High School which kept our boys in good spirit and when the whistle blew at the close of the first half the score stood 13 to 2 in favor of the Greyhounds.

Goree came back in the second half with the determination to redeem herself but the Greyhounds were the stronger team and still kept them well in hand. Many of the second team men were introduced during this half but still the final score was 23 to 10 in favor of the Greyhounds.

The Grammer Grade Glee Club is planning to initiate three new members during the coming week. One member elected is to fill the place vacated by Vernon Pate who has moved away. We are very sorry to lose Vernon but we feel that we have a very fine vocalist in Joe Pate his successor.

The Glee and Choral Clubs are assisting Captain Nusbaum, in his community service by helping him put over some humorous stunts.

Captain Nusbaum was favorably impressed by the size and works of our Glee and Choral Clubs.

He made this statement that we should be proud of these Clubs, because, it was the largest, he had seen in his circuit. And even exceeded school of an enrollment of three thousand.

SCHOOL NEWS---

Last Monday morning in chapel, postmaster J. E. Clark, made a talk to the entire school, on civil service. He gave some statistics as to the number of letters and parcel post packages mailed in the United States every year. The statistics showed that the number of letters mailed in one year, if placed end-wise would reach around the world seven times. Mr. Clark showed the correct way to address a letter and gave some valuable information on mailing packages and saked that every one who has a Christmas package to mail this Christmas to come early and mail the package in order to avoid the rush during the first few days before Christmas.

On Tuesday morning after an interesting lecture by Captain Nusbaum Miss Amerson told the Sophomore class to bring pencil and paper to class. Every one expected a "pop quiz" but a greater surprise awaited them. We were given forty minutes in which to Write up a report suitable for a newspaper on Captain Nusbaum's remarks. Miss Amerson made the work more interesting for us by telling us the best report would be printed in the School News for this week.

The second year cooking class served their second dinner Monday evening Nov. 6. Red, the color scheme was carried out very effectively in table decorations, light shade and menu.

The guests besides the Board of Trustees and Supt. McKeown were Mr. E D. Jamison, Dr. J. M. Green, Mr. T. P. Frizell, and Mr. S. M. Clonts.

Good Things Still Coming

The good things are still coming our way. Brother J. W. Boyle of Plainview called at our home one day recently and left a nice package turnips and greens, and Bro. C. C. Applewate brought us a bushel of nice peaches.

To these good bretheren we desire to expresr the sincere grattitude of our hearts for their kind remembrances.

Dublin Now Called Ballaclee.

Just why the provisional government should have changed the name of the capital from Dublin, apparently Celtic in origin, if not in spelling, to the Baile Ath Cliath, which is the postmark on all letters which are received today from the recent war area of Sackville street, is somewhat puzzling. Dubhlinn, the black pool, a reference to the Liffey, is said to have been given as a name twenty centuries ago, and was used by the Danes. The new name is pronounced Ballaclee, the town of the hurdle ford, derived from the somewhat marshy crossing paved with wooden hurdles at the point where the coast road from Wicklow to Tara, then the capital of Ireland, passed over the River Liffey.—Montreal Family Herald.

"I understand you won all the money in the party last night."

"Yes," said Cactus Joe, "but it didn't do me any good. I simply had to divide it around or else break up the poker game."

It's as hard to live up to a good reputation as it is to live down a bad one.

More Light on Congress.

When members of the house return they will be able to see their way much clearer to pass legislation and have a brighter outlook upon their work in the house—entirely aside from the way in which many of them may have their eyes opened while campaigning back home. The reason is that Elliott Woods, architect of the capitol, is having the lighting system of the house thoroughly renovated. In the house ceiling there will be 45 frames of piping six feet square, strung with 20 lights, each, making a total of 900 lights to guide the members on their legislative way.—Washington Star.

The Only Way.

"Do you believe that it is possible for a man to live on $20 a week?"

"If his credit is good, yes."

About all you have to do to make a boy hate any particular kind of food is to tell him it is healthful.

Are you among these thousands?

THOUSANDS of people keep on trying, year after year, to build health from food that has been robbed of certain elements required for perfect nutrition.

If your food doesn't contain the mineral properties that go to build up nerve, tooth and bone structure, there is no other means by which you can get these vital elements.

This is one reason why so many well-informed people eat Grape-Nuts—the food that enriches the blood, and builds sound, healthy bodies.

Grape-Nuts is made from whole wheat flour and malted barley—baked for 20 hours, which develops the natural richness of the grains and makes for ready digestibility.

And Grape-Nuts is perfectly delicious—served with milk or cream, or made into an appetizing pudding for dinner.

Get a package of Grape-Nuts from your grocer today, and give the family a help to health.
