Kohl vows 'peace will emanate'

ERFURT, East Germany (AP) — In his first campaign stop in East Germany, Chancellor Helmut Kohl promised cheering crowds that "peace will emanate" from a united nation and West Germany's social security system will protect them.

Meanwhile, East Germany's deputy defense minister and chief of staff said today the two countries' armed forces should merge and be deployed on the entire territory of a reunited Germany.

"Every sovereign state has the right to defend its sovereignty," Manfred Graetz told the East German newspaper Junge Welt. "There are also neutral states that have armed forces. I believe that a future Germany must be allowed this right."

Graetz also rejected extending NATO's territory over what is now East Germany, but said he did not believe it could become a "no man's land."

His remarks could further complicate discussions over the military role for a united Germany. East Germany and the Soviet Union have insisted that the future state be neutral.

West Germany and its Western allies want the country to remain in NATO. The West German government has said no NATO or German troops should be stationed in what is now East Germany.

On Tuesday, most of the 90,000 people who crowded in front of Erfurt's cathedral for Kohl's speech chanted "Helmut! Helmut!" and "Our Chancellor!" Many waved West German flags.

Kohl was kicking off a conservative alliance's campaign for East Germany's March 18 elections, the country's first free vote after 40 years of Communist rule.

West German politicians, who themselves face the voters in December, are increasingly using East Germany's election campaign to promote themselves and their causes.

"There are fears in East and West of a Germany that would have 80 million inhabitants ... (and) be a tremendous economic force," Kohl said.

He also observed that a reunited Germany "will have to live with its

Area spared snow that hits Panhandle

From Staff and Wire Reports

A snow storm that blanketed the Texas Panhandle forced schools to close but wrought little damage other than a few jackknifed tractor-trailer rigs.

Meanwhile, Midland was spared the snow, although temperatures did drop below the freezing mark overnight and a light frost did accumulate on windshields.

Temperatures in Midland tonight should be in the lower 30s and Thursday's high is expected to reach into the mid-50s.

Observers in the western edge of the Panhandle said 7 to 10 inches of snow fell Tuesday, and the National Weather Service predicted that another 1 to 3 inches would fall by this morning.

Few Texas highways were closed Tuesday because of snow, though sections of several roads were almost impassable for a few hours because of jackknifed trucks, authorities said.

Moore County Sheriff Ted Montgomery said U.S. 287 south from Dumas was closed between 11 a.m. and 4 p.m. because of trucks that jackknifed on slippery highway, blocking traffic.

The sheriff said despite the heavy snow, only a few minor accidents occurred, with no injuries reported.

The weather service issued a snow advisory throughout the Panhandle Tuesday night and urged motorists to use extreme caution on the slick, hazardous roads.

E.D. Kelley, a dispatcher with the Dallam County Sheriff's Office, said late Tuesday the roads around Dalhart were treacherous. "They are passable but very dangerous," he said.

The Ochiltree County sheriff's department at Perryton also reported snowpacked and icy roads.

Many public schools in the northern two tiers of counties in the Panhandle either did not open Tuesday or closed early. Traffic was light on the highways.

"We've had more cancellations than we've had people staying," said Idella Randall, manager of Nursanickel Motel in Spearman. "People just can't get in, and if they get in, they're afraid they can't get out, so they cancel."

The snow was from an intense upper-level winter storm that moved slowly toward the east out of New Mexico, where authorities on Tuesday closed two highways westward out of Clayton, N.M.

City officials unsure about how sales tax could be raised

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

It may take months to determine whether the city of Midland would have to decrease property taxes if it raises sales taxes to pay for mass transit needs, City Attorney David Reagan said Tuesday.

A proposal to raise Midland's sales tax by a fourth of a cent will not likely appear on the May 5 ballot unless city administrators can soon unlock a vault of answers to legal questions, Reagan said.

City officials are researching a Texas Property Tax Code section which may require the city to decrease property tax revenues by the amount of sales tax money budgeted for mass transit, he said.

Another state statute allows the city to raise its sales tax to 8 cents. The city has a 7½ sales tax, with 6 cents going to the state.

Senate Bill 971 allows municipalities to use the additional tax revenues for mass transit, economic development or to lower property taxes.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, sponsored an amendment, which went into effect in 1989, allowing some cities wanting to use sales tax revenues for mass transit to use them for repairing or constructing streets and bridges.

City administrators have said they initially wanted to use a fourth cent for streets and bridges and another fourth cent for economic development. About $2 million would have been raised for each.

For economic projects, the city must use the entire half cent or whatever is left. The city had planned to put a proposal for fourth-cent sales tax hike for economic development on the August ballot.

However, they announced earlier this month that they would not pursue either sales tax plan if the tax code section requires that they reduce property taxes.

For Midland, that would mean lowering the rate from 62 cents per $100 valuation to about 54 cents.

Officials said they probably would

Gas producer loses suit to pipeline company

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Texas natural gas production company that says it is owed $21.3 million by a pipeline company lost a Supreme Court appeal Tuesday.

The court, citing the lack of a "substantial federal question," let stand a ruling that the pipeline company did not breach its contract to buy the gas.

The producer, Lively Exploration Co., said Valero Transmission Co., also based in Texas, broke an agreement to purchase all of Lively's natural gas.

Lively's lawyers said that from mid-1982 through mid-1985 the pipeline firm failed to take and pay for "the minimum quantity of gas required by the contract," an amount worth $21.3 million.

But a state court jury ruled in favor of Valero, and the decision was upheld in 1988 by a Texas appeals court in San Antonio.

The appeals court upheld the use of a Texas regulation aimed at preventing excess natural gas production. The regulation is intended to bar companies from producing more than its customers' market demand.

The appeal acted on Tuesday said the state rule is pre-empted by the federal Natural Gas Policy Act. The federal law deregulated the production and sale of natural gas and let market forces operate freely, the appeal said.

The Texas appeals court ruling "is an unprecedented threat to natural gas price deregulation because it invites the states to replace and second-guess the purchasing decisions of the market," the appeal said.

The case is Lively Exploration vs. Valero Transmission, 89-935.

In other Texas cases, the court agreed to settle a dispute over deadlines for filing lawsuits charging on-the-job discrimination.

The court said it will hear an appeal by Shirley W. Irwin, a handicapped former employee of the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Waco, Texas.

Irwin said the VA fired him illegally on April 17, 1986.

He sought help from the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. But the commission rejected his claim, delivering its decision to the office of Irwin's attorney on March 23, 1987.

The lawyer was out of the country on Army Reserve duty, and Irwin said as a result he did not learn of the EEOC decision until April 10.

Airline smoking ban to begin Sunday

WASHINGTON (AP) — Smokers on smoke-free airliners would be well-advised to do breathing exercises, doodle or take a nap, say groups who pushed for the 99 percent ban that takes effect Sunday.

The American heart and lung associations and the American Cancer Society said Tuesday they are offering free advice to air travelers who will have to do without cigarettes on all but about 28 of the 17,000 daily domestic flights.

Only flights of more than six hours to Alaska or Hawaii will have smoking sections beginning Sunday.

A wallet-sized tip card printed by the Coalition on Smoking or Health advises smokers to take along low-calorie snacks and to focus on positive thoughts of "clean air and a clear head."

It suggests: "Hold your breath while you count to four, and exhale slowly letting out all the air from your lungs. Slowly repeat these steps five times."

It also offers doodling or doing crossword puzzles as a means of keeping fingertips busy and proposes, "As a last resort, lean back and sleep."

The coalition unveiled its campaign to help smokers cope at a news conference with congressional sponsors of the new law and the Association of Flight Attendants, which pushed for the change.

"Chronic lung inflammation, respiratory and sinus problems, dizziness, nausea and severe headaches will no longer plague our members, their colleagues or the passengers who share their environment," said Juliette D. Lenoir, representing flight attendants.

Increased cancer risk, estimated in a Transportation Department study released last week, also would be eliminated, Ms. Lenoir said.

Rep. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., said he would move to ban smoking on trains and buses. He said although a majority of Amtrak passengers say they like the railroad's rules separat-

Condoms, octopus enter Smithsonian

By ROBERT M. ANDREWS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Last year the Smithsonian Institution acquired an old Pullman railroad car spittoon, Ray Bolger's scarecrow costume from "The Wizard of Oz," a giant Pacific octopus, 14 condom vending machines (with 108 condoms), 50 parking meters and 1,272 dry-mounted specimens of lice.

These and more than 700,000 other objects joined the vast collections of the Smithsonian, a sort of large national cigar box where Americans stuff their odds and ends, mostly odd.

Also carted into the Smithsonian's complex of museums and art galleries in 1989 were a sculpture made of grapevine roots, an Air Force C-130A Hercules cargo plane, a satin Chinese hanging scroll from the Ming dynasty and several thousand world's fair souvenirs dating to 1850.

The list includes 75 original paving bricks from the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, the original propeller nose cone removed from Charles Lindbergh's "Spirit of St. Louis" airplane because of a crack, and 2,500 fossils containing imprints of ferns,

Black veteran recalls treatment during war

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — James Charles Pitts Jr., a proud and tactful man, has been on the "cutting edge" of social change to bring about a better life for black people.

"You were the blade. You were forging ahead — if you wanted to be out front," said Pitts, a 72-year-old retired Midland science teacher.

With the tact born out of scientific observation and advice from his father, Pitts survived pre-World War II, the war, and post-war discrimination to rise above the pettiness of ignorance.

The black warrior — soldier, sailor, airman — in World War II was treated as if he were a second-class citizen, as if he were "back home" in a segregated society. He was set apart.

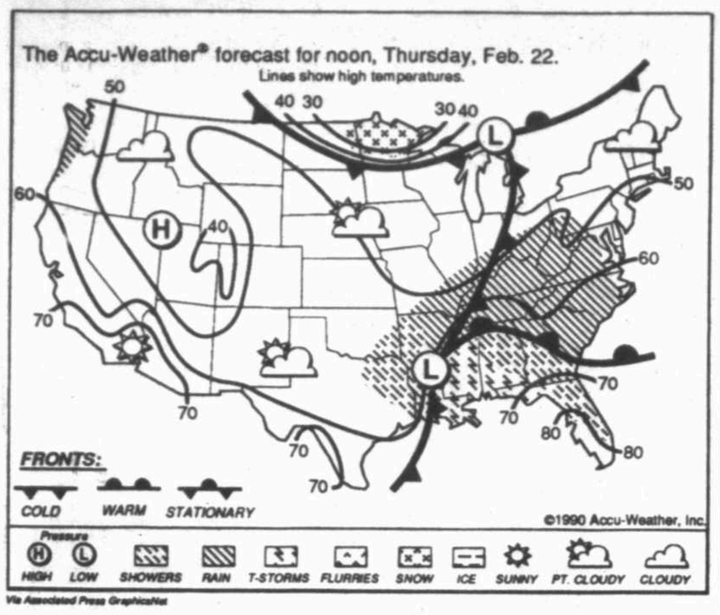

"Now, if you are reticent and don't care about progress, well," philosophized Pitts, "you just set back and let the tide flow."

Despite the programmed prejudice against minorities, including blacks and Hispanics, Pitts survived, even flourished, and, with an innate friendly disposition, learned how to prevail from lessons learned in

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, with the low in the lower 30s and winds from the north at 10-15 mph.

Thursday is expected to continue partly cloudy with the high in the upper 50s and winds out of the north at 10-20 mph.

Tuesday's high of 64 was 22 degrees cooler than the record high of 86 set for that date in 1986. The overnight low of 25 was nine degrees warmer than the record low of 16 set for this date in 1939.

STATE

Flash flood watches and warnings were posted for a large portion of Southeast Texas today and the Panhandle dug out from up to a foot of snow as a large storm center centered in New Mexico moved toward Texas.

Scattered thunderstorms, some intense, moved through South Texas this morning, prompting the National Weather Service to issue severe thunderstorm warnings for a large section of the area.

A flash flood watch issued for most of the Texas Hill Country was cancelled early today after heavy rains moved out of the area, although additional rain was expected.

A flash flood watch is in effect for the eastern third of North Texas for this afternoon and tonight. Snow flurries were possible in the Panhandle and portions of the South Plains. Showers and thunderstorms are predicted over Texas tonight, although the National Weather Service said it would be fair in the Permian Basin and far west.

NATION

More rain fell in the soggy Southeast while clear, milder weather in the Midwest and Northeast today preceded weekend predictions of arctic chill.

A cold front today brought flurries to the Northern Plains. Snow continued in southern Colorado and northern Arizona. The Cascade Mountains looked for accumulations of up to 10 inches by today.

High winds lingered in the Front Range of the Rockies and in Montana's upper Yellowstone Valley. Winds gusted to near 65 mph at Cut Bank on Tuesday.

The storm system that dumped snow in the West moved eastward today, changing from mostly snow to rain along a warm front from central Texas to southern Arkansas to Florida's Atlantic coast.

In the Northeast and Midwest this weekend, an arctic wind is expected to whip through both regions.

Rain in the Tennessee and lower Mississippi valleys so far this month is two to three times above normal — and more precipitation was forecast by tonight.

Man killed by bullet shot through his floor

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — A man sitting in his living room was shot and killed by a bullet that was fired through the floor of the apartment above his, police said.

Vernon Russell, 76, of Greece, a Rochester suburb, was shot Tuesday, said police Commander Michael Murray. Clifton Jackson, 52, who lives in the apartment above Russell's, was charged with second-degree manslaughter, police said.

Jackson pleaded innocent before Gates Town Justice John Pisaturo. He was sent to the Monroe County Jail in lieu of $5,000 cash or $10,000 bond.

There was no dispute between the neighbors, and Jackson did not intend to shoot Russell, Murray said. He declined to say why the firearm was pointed at the floor.

The sun fights through the fog early this morning as Midlanders awoke to freezing temperatures and a light frost on car windows.

SNOW

The weather service predicted that rain mixed with snow could fall on the South Plains around Lubbock with no accumulation today.

High temperatures in the Panhandle are expected to reach the mid-40s today and should be near 50 on Thursday.

Blowing snow cut visibility to near zero Tuesday morning at Dalhart and Texline in the northwest corner of the Panhandle.

"It's real bad," John Walker, owner of Texline Oil & Gas service station in Texline said around mid-morning Tuesday. "Snow plows are running and that's all I've seen. I come to work in a tractor this morning and I almost got stuck in it." He estimated 10 inches had fallen.

But by afternoon, roads were relatively clear and visibility had improved, residents said.

About 2½ inches of snow fell on Amarillo but caused few traffic problems, police said.

Elsewhere, 10 to 12 inches of snow was reported in Texline, 8 inches in Perryton, 8 to 10 inches in Spearman, 5 to 6 inches in Stratford, and 7 inches in Dalhart.

Mrs. Randall, at the Nursanickel Motel, said Spearman residents were happy about the snowfall.

"We need it bad," she said. "The ground is dry and the crops are parched."

ing smoking passengers by car, some complain that they have to pass through the smoking areas on their way to the dining car.

Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., said the smoking ban should be an incentive for smokers to "kick the habit."

"I think smoking ought to be done in the privacy of one's home or one's business where it doesn't affect others," he said.

Lautenberg and Durbin issued a summary of the government study which concluded that cigarette smoke in airline cabins could kill between 12 and 15 cabin crew members out of every 100,000 over the next 20 years, assuming they fly about 960 hours a year.

Frequent fliers also would be exposed to an increased risk if smoking had continued, said the study, which was commissioned before the smoking ban on airliners.

crabs and trilobites which lived in a northern Illinois swamp more than 300 million years ago.

Officials said the Smithsonian's holdings grew to nearly 138 million objects with last year's acquisitions, many of which came from private collectors like Clifford Krainik of Alexandria, Va., whose passion was ballooning.

The biggest recipient was the National Museum of Natural History. Its 674,817 new items included a pair of stuffed passenger pigeons from Colorado, a flying lizard from the Philippines, a football-sized Brazilian quartz crystal containing golden needles, 8,152 mounted specimens of wasps, 30 garments and household objects used by Tibetan nomads and a piece of petrified timber from Cyprus that has turned into copper.

TAX

not seek a sales tax hike for economic purposes until the mass transit sales tax proposal is approved.

"The question is since Midland does not have a mass transit system, does it have anything in its general budget that qualifies as mass transit budget, such as street repairs," Reagan said. "We don't think so, but we want to be very sure.

"There are no court cases that interpret that state statute."

James Nance, deputy director to the legal staff of the Texas Legislative Council, said the tax code may only apply to larger cities with mass transit departments, such as Dallas and Houston.

Assistant City Manager Keith Stretcher said the city will ask the Texas Attorney General's Office for an opinion on the tax code.

Not collecting the $2 million in additional sales tax revenues for transit needs would tighten an already constricting budget situation, Stretcher said.

"Besides using the funds to build streets and repair streets and bridges, they were also going to be used to take pressure off the general fund," Stretcher said. "That would have taken pressure off ad valorem taxes."

Meanwhile, Reagan said the city also is trying to set up a meeting with Montford to ask the senator to find out whether the city's sales tax plans would mean a property tax reduction.

"Montford's office has indicated that they did not intend for the property taxes to be reduced," Reagan said.

If it does mean lowering property taxes, Midland officials may ask Montford to introduce subsequent legislation.

But because Montford does not represent Midland, officials here also will seek the city of Lubbock's support.

"We're not going to approach John Montford unless we talk to Lubbock first," Reagan said. "That's just common courtesy. We need their support in talking to John Montford."

He said he is unsure when Midland's sales tax plans may ever find their way onto the ballot.

"This is going to take a long, long time," Reagan said. "We're talking about months on this. We're going to pursue this as quickly and diligently as possible."

PITTS

the science laboratory and in his old hometown of Jefferson in deep East Texas.

His father, a well-read school principal and thinker, advised his son early on: " 'When you have your hand in the lion's mouth, stroke him on the mane until you get it out.' "

And in studying zoology, Pitts had observed the one-celled paramecium paddling away with its fine hairs — cilia.

"And when he swam into an object that he objected to, (found) distasteful, what would he do? He'd back off, go around, go another direction."

That's exactly what Pitts did to serve his country in World War II.

Pitts recalled that earlier life on Tuesday at the Big Spring Veterans Administration Medical Center, where he was honored "for sharing his experience in his fight for civil rights." The citation coincided with this month's recognition of Black History Month.

By the time the United States got involved in World War II, Pitts already had earned two college degrees — a bachelor's degree from Prairie View A&M and a master's degree from the University of Southern California.

Today, as Pitts recognized, a man with his background would have been a prime candidate for an officer's commission.

But the U.S. Army Air Corps wouldn't have him. He had volunteered at a recruiting station in Texarkana, Texas, to be an aerial photographer.

He was rejected: "We can't accept you," he was informed. "There's no place for you in the Air Force." He was turned aside "because of my color."

So, Pitts took on a defense job in San Antonio, where he was trained as a civil aircraft-engine mechanic working for the government. Engines were shipped to the United States from war zones for overhauling.

"In only three months, you learned to tear down everything from an in-line Ranger to a twin-row radial (engine), Pratt and Whitney, and Wright Cyclone," said Pitts.

But after that training, he wasn't recognized as mechanic — not at first.

"When we reached the shops to go to work, they sent the Mexican trainees, the graduates, to sandblast. And they sent the blacks, including myself, to washing parts with kerosene. The other boys went on the disassembly line."

So, Pitts went to work, just like that survivor, the paramecium, does and just like his father had told him.

"In life, when you reach an obstacle, you don't let it discourage you," he said. "If it doesn't incapacitate you, you back off and try another approach to reach your goals."

He used writing skills to explain in a letter that he was a "qualified engine mechanic" and not a wash hand.

"It worked" and Pitts soon was working on engines.

A military major was "over the maintenance shop," recalled Pitts. "I had a civilian boss. He did the segregating — put us (blacks) in that oil, and put the Mexican men in that sandblast."

Though he got "deferment after deferment because I was working in defense," Pitts finally got drafted.

Even though Pitts was an aircraft-engine mechanic, the Army didn't assign him to aircraft maintenance.

He became a behind-the-lines clerk typist, supply sergeant, personnel sergeant major, and expert rifleman. Overseas, he served in North Africa and in Italy, where he worked with a port battalion which "supplied the troops up front" with food, clothing, fuel, oil, medicine, munitions, and other supplies and equipment.

Two squadrons of segregated black fighter pilots were assigned to pursuit squadrons in Italy.

Though American soldiers, sailors and airmen were risking their lives for their country's sake and to bring about world peace, they were not equal in treatment.

Pitts took exception to that.

"I resented the fact we were not allowed the same privileges. We had separate USOs (United Service Organizations) in Italy. Still, we were fighting for America — to keep America free.

"You were there to risk your life for a country that says, 'When you come home, you can't eat in my restaurants here. You can't use rest rooms as a decent individual.' "

Likewise, blacks still were relegated to the "hot seat" — the row or rows of seats above the engine at back of the bus.

"If the bus got too crowded, you (blacks) had to stand up."

On trains, passenger cars for blacks were just behind the baggage and express-mail cars behind the locomotive and coal tender. Those cars for blacks would get the better part of soot from the steam locomotive.

In mid-war, Pitts, in uniform, recalled being denied seating in a movie theater in Washington, D.C.

And even in the military, "You (blacks) were considered by others as 'less than,' " he said. "But if you had determination, you felt you were equal to or better than your oppressors."

In the war, blacks served in "subservient roles, generally in non-technical positions."

In the Navy, for example, blacks served as cooks, stewards and waiters.

But there were black heroes — probably far more than is recorded by history.

Dorie Miller was a hero.

He was aboard the battleship West Virginia as a steward during the Dec. 7, 1941, Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. Miller, who had no gunnery training, took the place of a dead machine-gunner and shot down four Japanese aircraft. For that feat, he was awarded the Navy Cross for heroism in combat.

But when he was killed when a torpedo blew up the aircraft carrier Liscome Bay in late 1943, Miller was still a steward.

"There were other heroes," Pitts said. "They were left out of the books. We don't know about them."

In looking back, Pitts briefly wondered "what if."

"What if America had utilized the talents of all troops equally? That's saying something.

"When the slaves were freed, what if educational opportunities had been equal for the slaves way back in 1865? They would have been prepared more admirably to fight in World War I and World War II," Pitts said.

Blacks were conditioned to believe that they were "less than. You (blacks) can't learn. You can't fly a plane. You can't steer a submarine. You can't learn meteorology, climatology, photography."

Pitts knew better, just as he does now.

Today, he and the world are witnessing more social changes. Pitts cited the recently freed South African black leader Nelson Mandela. "He doesn't aim for his people to dominate. They just want to share" freedom and opportunities with the rest of the world.

"When there is ignorance of another, there is going to be that — apartheid — racial-segregation tendency," Pitts said. "It (ignorance) breeds that."

KOHL

past, with the horrors that were committed in the name of Germany this century" and noted fears that it could again threaten its neighbors.

"I take these fears seriously. ... Peace will emanate from German soil," he said. Germans have been seeking to assure their European neighbors and the world that a unified Germany will not pose a military threat.

In Moscow, Mikhail S. Gorbachev proposed an international treaty on Germany reunification, saying his country "has an inalienable right" to ensure that it does not sustain moral, political or economic damage from a united Germany.

In an interview published in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda today, Gorbachev said a united Germany must respect Europe's current borders and only the four victorious Allies of World War II can determine Germany's final status.

Both Germanys are bound by treaties to respect their current frontiers, but a united country would not be, and some conservatives in West Germany have suggested reunification be sought within the 1937 borders.

In 1937, one-third of what is now Poland was German territory.

Kohl said he would seek massive investment by West German firms and extend Bonn's social security safety net to offset the economic chaos caused by what he called "40 years of red dictatorship" in East Germany.

"We have created in the Federal Republic (West Germany) a social security system that is exemplary in Europe," Kohl said. "We want this system for people in East Germany as well."

Prison boot camp a young offender's alternative

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A group of young men march across a dusty field, arms and legs moving to the rhythm of their voices carried along by the wind.

"We like it here. We love it here. We've finally found a home," they chant.

One is barely old enough to shave, another is dotted with monocolored tattoos. All races and sizes, they walk together in white, loosely fitting prison uniforms, four rows of ten, eyes straight ahead, moving as one.

The inmates at the Goree boot Camp in Huntsville are challenging corrections tradition.

Boot camps are a new idea for corrections in the United States. Styled after military basic training programs, they emphasize discipline and hard work. Capt. John Poitzeruse, supervisor at Goree, said the basic idea is to catch criminals when they are still young and impressionable, send them through the camp and try to change their lives.

In the past, sending first-time offenders to a traditional prison only made the inmates better criminals when they got out.

"We feel that, by them learning strict self discipline, they will be able to use that once they are out," said Poitzeruse, a veteran of 22 years in the Air Force, "So they can think before they act."

Inmates between the ages of 17 and 25 who have never been to prison and whose original sentence was 10 years or less are eligible to go to the Goree Boot Camp.

The camp marked its first year of operation last January. It can house 200 men; about 170 are now in residence.

The Texas Legislature ordered the Texas Department of Corrections to create a boot camp in 1987, but did not fund it, and two years passed before money was found in the TDC's general budget.

In 1989 the Legislature provided state funding for counties to build alternatives to traditional prisons, such as boot camps and substance abuse treatment centers. Travis County already has opened a boot camp, and Williamson County is planning to build a state-funded substance abuse treatment center in Georgetown. El Paso is considering a boot camp.

No more state-run boot camps are planned, Nunnelee said. The boot camp is a specialized facility and the bed space cannot be counted for use in statistics, he said. Numbers are extremely important to the TDC for use in court cases and for complying with legislation.

At Goree, inmates spend 90 days under the constant supervision of officers and drill instructors, all of whom have had military experience.

Mornings begin with 4 a.m. reveille. The convicts are given 30 minutes to prepare themselves and their living quarters for inspection.

They have 20 minutes to eat a bland but adequate breakfast. Morning formation is at 6 a.m. The men line up for visual inspection. Their personal hygiene, uniforms and living areas are scrutinized.

"After that they go to work," Poitzeruse says.

Hard physical labor is the philosophy at the camp, and it shows. Bands of men clear fields with hand tools only, work that could easily be done with one man and a tractor. Supervisors on horseback keep a close watch.

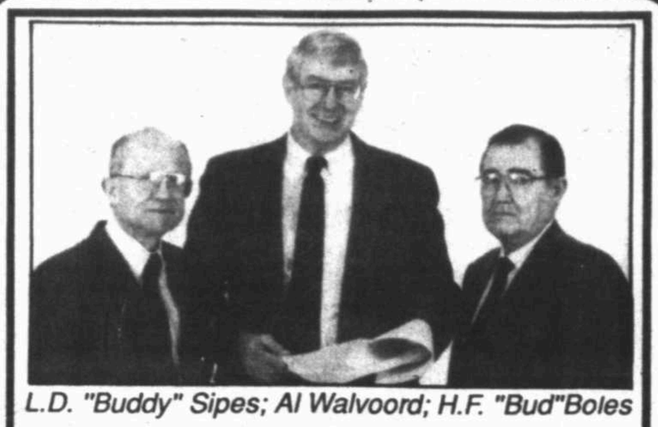

At lunch there is no talking. The men stand straight while going through the food line.

The men do not simply walk to their tables with their trays in hand. Like all other times throughout the day, each turn must be a perfect right angle. At the tables the men do not sit until ordered to do so by an officer or drill instructor.

NOTICE OF CONSERVATORSHIP OF ESSEX LLOYDS INSURANCE UNDERWRITERS

Pursuant to Article 21.28-A of the Texas Insurance Code, the Commissioner of Insurance issued an official order, No. 90-0222 effective February 15, 1990, placing Essex Lloyds Insurance Underwriters, Houston, Texas, in a state of conservatorship. This company is a domestic lloyds insurance company authorized to sell property and casualty insurance in Texas, including auto insurance.

The Commissioner of Insurance finds that pursuant to Article 21.28-A, Section 5, Texas Insurance Code, the company has requested and consented to the appointment of a conservator.

Under the order, the Conservator will assume control and operation of the company and will take all steps and legal measures necessary to preserve, protect, and recover the assets and property of the company. Efforts will be made to rehabilitate the company for the protection of its policyholders and the public.

If you are a policyholder of this company, your insurance coverage continues in effect for as long as you pay your premiums. If the company is rehabilitated, your coverage will continue as though nothing had happened. If the company is not rehabilitated, it may be placed into receivership or its business reinsured, and you will be so notified. In either event, contractual claim obligations will be paid by the company, by the reinsurer, or by the guaranty fund subject to the limitations provided in law. The guaranty fund provides protection for covered claims up to the amounts specified in Article 21.28-C, Texas Insurance Code.

Courses of action available to policyholders include continuation or cancellation of their policies. Policyholders who wish to continue their coverage need do nothing more so long as their premiums are paid. If premiums are due, policyholders should continue to pay them in the same amount and manner as in the past in order to keep their coverage in force.

To avoid possible loss of coverage, policyholders must continue to pay premiums unless and until similar insurance can be obtained from another company. Policy provisions with respect to filing claims remain in force and must be observed.

Claims will continue to be handled in the standard process as specified in the insurance contracts issued by the company. Policyholders will be notified if there is any change in claims processing or handling.

Policyholders' rights are governed by the Texas Insurance Code, State Board of Insurance rules, and by policyholders' individual contracts of insurance. Policyholders with specific questions regarding policy provisions should seek independent legal advice. No action is required by policyholders under Commissioner's Order No. 90-0222. If any action should be required in the future, policyholders will be notified.

This notice is published pursuant to Article 21.28-A, Section 5A, Texas Insurance Code (Acts 1989, 71st Legislature, Ch. 1082, Sec. 4.02, eff. September 1, 1989).

CAMP

After lunch come military drills and marching exercises. Inmates also attend classes on substance abuse and life skills training. After that they go through one hour of physical training with calisthenics and a two-mile run.

After the evening meal, the men pay their respects to the flag as it is taken down.

From 6 p.m. to 10 p.m. the inmates get a break from the program, Poitzeruse said. State prisons are under court order to provide inmates with at least four hours of "non-programatic" free time. The men play basketball, handball, volleyball and board games during this time.

Lights go out at 10 p.m. every night.

Drill Instructor Bobby Crowson said he sees his role often become like that of a father. "To a lot of them we are a fatherish figure, because they've never had one. All they know is what they pick up on the streets."

Williamson County District Attorney Ken Anderson said that although figures on the camp's rate of success or failure are not compiled, he feels boot camps are a good alternative to prisons for first-time offenders.

"Crime is not that difficult to figure out," he said. "The vast majority of criminals are not able to fit in society. If you can get them to have a stake in society, they won't do crime."

Anderson said he would like to supplement the 90-day boot camp experience with time at substance abuse and job training centers.

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — This can't really be the old-fashioned neighborhood pool hall that mothers warned their sons to stay out of.

There, at the bottom of the menu, is the polite admonition: "Shootz Cafe is a smoke-free environment. Thank you for not smoking."

Minnesota Fats could shed a few pounds at the Shootz, a yuppie bistro and billiards lounge where the customers chalk their cues over California wine spritzers, or chow down on gazpacho and a heaping antipasto of imported cheeses, prosciutto, sun-dried tomatoes and artichoke hearts.

"This is a clean, upscale billiards hall — no smoke, no drunks," says co-owner Ric Adamcik. "It's where mothers can tell their sons and daughters to go and have a good time. In fact, you can bring your mother along."

A former Army brat, Adamcik remembers sneaking into pool halls outside the gates of military bases for a forbidden peek at the pine-paneled, male-only world where players sucked on longneck Buds and jostled with hustlers and bookies over the seductive click and thump of billiard balls on green baize.

It was the kind of place where a guy could scratch, spit and talk dirty all night long, without a nagging whine from the missus.

"I remember that I didn't want to play in a place that smelled like that," Adamcik said. "It stank of stale beer and cigarettes. It was so smoky it made my eyes burn. It was full of guys with packs of Camels rolled up their sleeves and 'Momma' tattoos on their arms."

The cue racks at the Shootz Cafe hang on raspberry walls. The high-tech stereo system blasts New Wave music. Earnest young professionals in starched button-downs, power ties and wide suspenders bend over 14 top-of-the-line Brunswick tables of oak and brass.

For that "homey feel," Adamcik says, players awaiting their turn can relax on leather sofas around a roaring fireplace.

Billiards industry officials say the old-time pool halls are dying out. They have fallen victim to soaring rents, local anti-vice ordinances and state-run lotteries that have lured customers away from poolrooms that frequently served as fronts for illicit gambling enterprises.

More important, the growing affluence of Americans has produced a dramatic change in the way they spend their leisure time, says Mark Cord, executive vice president of the Billiard Congress of America, the industry's trade association.

"People don't want to spend the evening alone in a dingy place where there's a lot of drinking and gambling," Cord said. "Families are staying home or going out and doing things together. Smart business owners are making money by appealing to the family trade at a respectable place."

Cord says an estimated 35 million Americans are playing billiards regularly, a 430 percent boost since the mid-1950s. That makes it the second most popular family sports activity in the United States after bowling, he says.

The yuppie elegance of the Shootz Cafe is applauded by such billiards greats as Willie Mosconi and Minnesota Fats, who fondly remember the fabulous era of chandeliered salons in New York, Chicago, Detroit and other cities in the 1920s, before poolrooms turned into gambling dens during the Great Depression.

Mosconi, 76, who lives quietly in suburban Philadelphia, won 15 world billiards titles before he retired from tournament play nine years ago.

Minnesota Fats, whose real name is Rudolph Wanderone and was portrayed in the movie, "The Hustler," by the late Jackie Gleason, is over 90, still fat and still shooting pool.

"I can beat anybody on Earth," Wanderone said in a telephone interview from the Nashville, Tenn., hotel where he lives.

Tipping the scales at 200 pounds, Wanderone says his appetite knows no bound, not even gazpacho and artichoke hearts.

For District Judge

Pol. Adv. paid by the Committee to Elect Nick Taylor Judge.
1101 Petroleum Bldg. Midland, Tx. 79701

February 16, 1990

Dear Citizens of Midland County:

I want to take this opportunity to tell you about myself and why I am running for the position of 238th District Court Judge. This office is being vacated by the retirement of Judge Vann Culp, who has done an outstanding job.

After graduation from Harvard, I became an infantry officer and paratrooper in the U.S. Army Reserve. I then completed law school at Georgetown University. I had an interest in oil and gas law and taxation. This interest brought me to Texas where I worked as a roughneck and lead tong man for a West Texas drilling company prior to attending SMU for advanced legal studies of oil and gas law and taxation which I completed with honors. I have always believed that practical experience is just as important as academics.

I have been fortunate to have a successful law practice for 26 years. About 16 years ago I was recruited by Tom Sealy, Boyd Laughlin, James L. Pardue and William F. Pennebaker to move to Midland and head up the Corporate department of the Stubbeman, MacRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder law firm. My wife, Trinka, and I chose Midland as our permanent home. We have spent 16 of the happiest years of our lives in Midland. We have increasingly given of our time to community services.

In the 1980's I became concerned with the efforts of special interest groups to control the Texas judiciary. Our courts received adverse publicity on a national level and the public began to lose its respect for the judiciary. I also realized that few successful attorneys were willing to leave private practice and serve the community.

I have a strong conviction that the Court should be for all people. The primary function of the Court is to know and apply the law with integrity and fairness.

I have been concerned for the past few years with the rising crime rate in Midland, most of which is linked with the drug problem. Many of us have been victims of crime, including my family. I have volunteered my time to help solve this problem and I agreed to serve as President of the Midland Crime Prevention Commission after my appointment by the Midland City Council.

I have always believed that public service is the highest honor. This was instilled in me by my family. My father worked for the U.S. Government for 32 years concluding with his service as an Economic advisor in the executive office of President Eisenhower. My father's example was to forego all personal benefit in favor of public service.

I am offering my candidacy for District Judge because I want to serve this community with integrity and fairness. This community has given much to my family. It is time for me to step forward and make a contribution.

Please consider my candidacy in casting your ballot on March 13th.

Sincerely yours,

Nick Taylor

Havel calls on U.S. to keep Soviets on road to reform

AP Laserphoto

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States can best help Czechoslovakia, one of Eastern Europe's "wayward children," by keeping the Soviet Union on the road to reform and democracy, Czechoslovak president Vaclav Havel told Congress today.

"The more quickly and the more peacefully the Soviet Union begins to move along the road towards genuine political pluralism" and economic reform, "the better it will be — not just for Czechs and Slovaks, but for the whole world," the playwright-turned-president said in a speech prepared for delivery to a joint meeting of the House and Senate.

Havel, the first head of state from his country ever to visit Washington, also said he recognized the need for a continuing presence of U.S. troops in Europe. But he added: "Sooner or later Europe must recover and come into its own, and decide for itself how many of whose soldiers it needs...."

He also called for moving up the so-called Helsinki II conference now planned for 1992 and turning it into a European peace conference "that would finally put a formal end to the Second World War and all its unhappy consequences."

And Havel called for the removal of "as many Soviet (military) units as possible" from his country before national elections scheduled for June.

"Czechoslovakia is returning to Europe," he declared, vowing to coordinate that return with neighboring Poland and Hungary and the other "wayward children" of the former Warsaw Pact.

Turning philosophical, Havel said years of repression had given his countrymen time to ponder what is truly important, and said Americans can learn from that experience as well.

"The salvation of this human world lies nowhere else than in the human heart, in the human power to reflect, in human meekness and human responsibility," Havel told the lawmakers.

His speech came a day after Havel got a warm welcome from President Bush at the White House along with promises of freer trade between the two countries and incentives for new investment and economic development.

The Bush administration and leading lawmakers also have proposed expanding an aid program begun last year for Poland and Hungary to include Czechoslovakia and other countries emerging from 40 years of Soviet domination.

Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, has proposed sweetening the program with another $511 million next year and including new countries that meet certain tests for economic and political reform.

Havel did not directly address the question of aid, but at one point commented that greater stability would lead to reductions in U.S. military spending. "The millions you give to the East today will soon return to you in the form of billions in savings," he said.

On Tuesday, Bush called Havel, a 53-year-old playwright and political dissident before he was thrust into the presidency, "a man of tremendous moral courage, one of the heroes of the revolution of '89."

The president also said he was lifting U.S. restrictions that now limit trade with Czechoslovakia because of its communist history of inhibiting Jewish emigration.

That clears the way for negotiation of a trade agreement and the eventual award of most favored nation trading status, which would provide Czechoslovakia the most liberal access possible to American markets. In return, the Czechoslovak Parliament would have to enact a law ending the former communist government's restrictive emigration policies.

Bush also authorized the Export-Import Bank to operate in Prague and said he would support readmission of Czechoslovakia to the International Monetary Fund and World Bank. And he authorized sending Peace Corps volunteers to Czechoslovakia by autumn to teach English.

But in addition, Bush made it clear that he expects the western NATO alliance to remain a strong factor in Europe. Havel has called for disarmament throughout Europe.

Lawmakers say Chamorro can beat Ortega

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three House members just back from Nicaragua are predicting a stunning upset victory for opposition candidate Violeta Chamorro over leftist President Daniel Ortega in Sunday's national elections.

"If I were a betting man, I'd go with the longshot. I think she's going to upset him," said Rep. Gary Ackerman, D-N.Y., who made the trip with Reps. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., and Doug Bosco, D-Calif.

"I think she's got the votes," Ackerman said, basing his prediction on the responses of crowds at UNO rallies last week in the area around the capital of Managua and on conversations with citizens who appear confident of the election's integrity.

Ackerman said he went to Nicaragua sharing the widely held view that Mrs. Chamorro's campaign has been so weak and that Ortega's ruling leftist Sandinista party holds such a grip on the country that the election was no contest.

"I came away with a different perspective," he said in an interview.

An ABC-Washington Post poll released Tuesday indicated that Ortega held a 16 percentage point lead over Mrs. Chamorro, 48 percent to 32 percent.

The ABC-Washington Post poll was based on interviews with 925 likely Nicaraguan voters on Feb. 11-15. The margin of error was plus or minus 3.5 percentage points.

Polls have generally put the Sandinistas ahead. However, experts caution that polling in less developed countries such as Nicaragua is, at best, a tricky business.

Ackerman said the group was impressed by the vigorous campaign being waged by both the Sandinistas and the 14-party opposition coalition known as UNO.

"There's a real, genuine, knockdown, drag-out, hometown campaign going on," he said.

The Sandinistas have erected billboards showing Ortega holding a child and promising a better future for the country. Ackerman also said the Sandinistas are using telemarketing to make calls that feature a recorded message from "your president."

"One lady said she was called four times," Ackerman said.

While Mrs. Chamorro's side has few of those political trappings, she draws large, enthusiastic crowds at rallies, he said.

Guerrillas threaten U.S. interests in Colombia

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A pro-Cuban guerrilla group holding two Americans captive says it will attack U.S. interests in Colombia, and — if the United States intervenes — "there will be an uprising like in Vietnam and El Salvador."

The National Liberation Army declared "Death to gringos."

President Virgilio Barco called an urgent meeting of the National Security Council.

Earlier Tuesday, at Barco's urging, a federal court pardoned 35 members of another guerrilla group — the April 19 Movement — who were accused of taking part in the 1985 takeover of the Palace of Justice that claimed the lives of 95 people, including 11 Supreme Court justices.

The National Liberation Army is one of six guerrilla groups in Colombia and is under the command of Manuel Perez, a former Roman Catholic priest.

It sent a letter to the families of two Americans kidnapped last week by its guerrillas in the northwestern city of Medellin, according to Colombian news reports.

The Medellin daily El Colombiano published the letter Tuesday.

The letter was directed to the families of James Donnelly, a 65-year-old mechanical engineer from Detroit, and David Kent, a 40-year-old schoolteacher from Indianapolis.

The guerrilla group said it abducted the two men Feb. 13 to protest President Bush's visit to the port city of Cartagena Thursday to attend an anti-drug summit.

"Our position will change only when North America suspends its ways of intervening and of military aggression in Latin America," the letter said.

News accounts read on the radio identified some of the U.S. targets cited as Occidental Petroleum, Texaco and other U.S. oil companies and enterprises.

The Defense Ministry estimates the group has about 2,000 of the 10,000 guerrillas figured to be operating in Colombia.

The National Liberation Army blew up an electrical tower shortly before midnight Monday and blacked out most of Cartagena, the city of 530,000 where Bush met with Presidents Barco, Alan Garcia of Peru and Jaime Paz Zamora of Bolivia.

Insurgents then attacked a police station and five neighborhood police command posts, wounding five policemen, a national police communique said.

Also Monday, the guerrilla group set fire to equipment at a government oil drilling camp and fought two battles with police. One police officer and two guerrillas were killed and one policeman wounded.

A police communique also said Fabio Gomez, mayor of Almaguer in southwest Cauca state, and Colombian anthropologist Jesus Bolivar were kidnapped Saturday in Almaguer.

In the last 18 months the National Liberation Army has kidnapped 16 mayors. The guerrillas have been releasing the mayors after warning them to spend more money on projects for poor people.

The guerrilla group late Monday freed an American priest, Francis Amico Ferrari, 43, of Rochester, N.Y., who was kidnapped Thurday from his parish in the slums of the western city of Cali.

Sandinista defeat, victory could fracture opposition

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — An opposition coalition glued together from an atomized, fractious array of parties is posing the strongest challenge to the Sandinistas' rule since they took power more than a decade ago.

The United National Opposition, called UNO, now consists of 14 parties or party factions, all backing opposition newspaper publisher Violeta Barrios de Chamorro, a living symbol of the fight for democracy.

'Uno' is Spanish for one, but the Nicaraguan political tradition of uniting in the face of a common enemy seldom lasts long after defeat — or victory.

President Daniel Ortega, seeking re-election, has tried to drive a wedge into the opposition coalition by mocking the wide variety of parties comprising UNO — they range from the Communist Party to ideological opposites in the Conservative Party.

"This is such a mish-mash, it can give you indigestion," Ortega told delighted supporters at one rally. "Let (President) Bush eat it."

Can UNO hold together and govern through 1996, should it win Sunday's general elections?

"Yes. We have matured," Alfredo Cesar, an adviser to Mrs. Chamorro, said in an interview.

He said one reason is "we have a unanimously agreed to a government program.

"Dona Violeta is the second reason. Everyone in the coalition trusts she will comply with her commitment and put the program into place."

At least for now, everyone has something to gain by sticking together and everything to lose if they let mutual suspicions drive them apart.

But when the hoped-for spoils were being divided, at least one party was not happy.

The secretary-general of People's Social Christian Party stayed within UNO while its president joined a Social Christian alliance running separately.

The official reason was irreconcilable differences; the widely believed rumor was that the party president, Mauricio Diaz, did not think his party had been granted enough candidates for the 90 National Assembly seats at stake.

Nicaragua's political cast is full of splinter parties. Besides Ortega and Mrs. Chamorro, there are eight other presidential candidates.

UNO's vice-presidential candidate, Virgilio Godoy of the Independent Liberal Party, has been criticized within the coalition as arrogant and abrasive.

The power struggle won't be settled by the voters, because each party will be able to claim it was a major drawing card for Mrs. Chamorro's ticket.

Nicaragua's past doesn't offer much of a model for stability, said Jorge Eduardo Arellano, a history professor.

"There's no history here; there's only a caricature," Arellano said. Despite the idea of the Liberals and Conservatives traditionally dominating Nicaraguan politics, up to 10 factions existed at the turn of the century; six in the 1940s, he said.

The Somozas, who ran Nicaragua from the time of the death of Augusto Cesar Sandino in 1934 until they were toppled by Sandino's heirs in 1979, were able to use the internal dynamics of coalitions to divide and rule.

The Sandinistas themselves have displayed a party discipline that has proven their biggest strength.

"That's the really amazing thing, that the nine comandantes (top party leaders) have hung together for 10 years," a Western diplomat said.

Nevertheless, during their years as a guerrilla group, the Sandinistas split into three factions.

One advocated a prolonged guerrilla war; another favored educating the masses on Marxist theory and slowly building up urban discontent, the third was intent on seizing the first opportunity to push a mass insurrection.

The third faction was able to forge tactical alliances with angry Nicaraguans of all social classes to knock down Somoza in July 1979.

Despite that, the Sandinistas united to rule, although there have been rumored disagreements, notably over ending a cease-fire last November with the U.S.-backed Contra rebels.

The assassination of Mrs. Chamorro's husband, Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, was the spark that lit the Sandinista revolution, and the winners initially forged a junta that included non-Sandinistas, including Mrs. Chamorro.

The first hearing shall commence at 1:30 p.m. to consider the land use assumptions that will be used to develop capital improvements plans pursuant to which an impact fee or fees may be imposed for water and wastewater facilities.

The second hearing shall commence at 1:40 p.m. immediately following the first hearing to consider the land use assumptions that will be used to develop capital improvements plans pursuant to which an impact fee or fees may be imposed for roadway facilities.

Land use assumptions are projections of changes in land uses, densities, intensities and population which may occur within the City of Midland from the present until the year 2000. If approved, land use assumptions may be used to determine the need for capital improvements or facilities expansions to serve new development and to determine the number of service units anticipated within the areas designated on the accompanying maps for the following categories of public facilities.

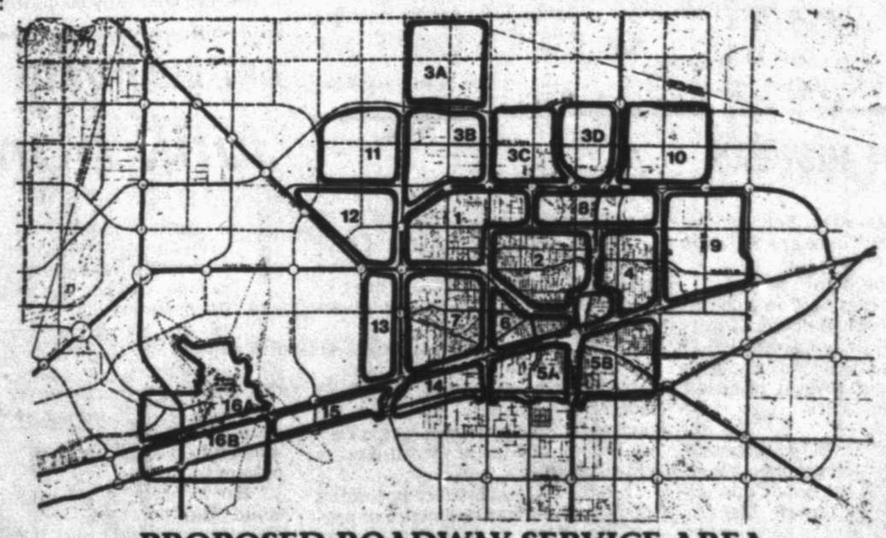

(1) water supply, treatment, and distribution facilities, or
(2) wastewater collection and treatment facilities.
(3) roadway facilities, including arterial and collector streets and necessary appurtenances.

This is a map of the service area for water facilities and for wastewater facilities to which the land use assumptions apply:

Welfare recipients aren't guinea pigs

The federal government has a plan that could get thousands of Americans off the welfare rolls and into some type of job, the only catch is that first the program has to be tested.

The concept of the program is sound, offering three months of additional health benefits and child care to welfare recipients who get a job. In theory, the extended benefits will encourage people to take and stay with entry-level jobs until such benefits become available.

Although the concept and the theory sound valid, like any theory, the government feels it has to be tested. The only trouble is the guinea pigs in this experiment are men and women with families.

The government wants to use a control group of 800 unlucky people in this "experiment" to see how successful the plan is. This control group will have to wait at least two years before they can participate in this new program.

Control groups might be needed in most scientific experiments but there is really no need for one in this situation. Statistics showing the unemployment record of welfare recipients are already available, therefore invalidating the need for a control group.

If every eligible welfare recipient participates in the test program, the rate of employment and therefore the success rate of the plan can be determined by comparing the number of participants in the program with the number who ultimately find a job and stay employed.

The purpose of the welfare system is to give a helping hand to those Americans who need temporary support. Unfortunately, in actual practice it has become a bloated bureaucracy that kills ambition and waste untold thousands of tax dollars.

Perhaps this plan can get some people off the welfare roles and onto productive private sector jobs. If it succeeds, the nation will benefit. But people aren't guinea pigs and this control group is a bad idea.

Clean air bill needed

It is imperative that the federal government act decisively and soon to clean America's air. All that is needed is political will, however large the order. The political will has so far eluded Washington.

Two clean-air bills are wending their way through the Senate and House. And President Bush has begun backpedaling on a tough proposal he made last summer to require alternative-fuel cars to be available in cities plagued by smog. His plan envisioned use of up to 1 million such cars by 1997 annually to "reconcile the automobile to the environment."

But, under special interest pressure, the administration is now proposing talks with Senate leaders on using "reformulated" gasoline to replace the alternate-fuel proposal. Unlike alternative fuels, natural gas, methanol, and the like, reformulated gasoline would not require additional equipment or engine modifications because many pollutants are removed in gasoline at the refining stage.

But Blake Early, a spokesman for the Sierra Club in Washington, D.C., asks, "How do you make sure people are using the reformulated gas in their old clunkers?"

The House and Senate should not follow Bush's lead and cave in to narrow special interests. The Congress should lead the way to cleaner air through use of alternative fuels and conservation. Clean air is one interest that's special to all of us.

Combating illiteracy

Our nation's economic well-being is tied directly to the quality of our work force. Competent workers in this rapidly changing, technology-driven world must be able to read and write.

Sadly, 23 million Americans are functionally illiterate — unable to read or write above the fourth-grade level — and 4 million of them are completely unable to read or write. That's what Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., told his Senate colleagues in urging them to provide funding for a campaign to eliminate adult illiteracy.

The Senate responded with 99-0 approval of $229 million in budget authority ($50 million in outlays) in fiscal 1991 for new and existing programs to promote literacy — programs long-championed by first lady Barbara Bush.

The measure now goes to the House, which has a literacy bill of its own pending before a subcommittee.

The education of job applicants will weigh heavily in the future. Already the average worker needs literacy skills at the ninth through 12th grade levels. Fortunately, Congress sees the need for a literate society — and is doing something about it.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Feb. 21, the 52nd day of 1990. There are 313 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty-five years ago, on Feb. 21, 1965, black activist Malcolm X was shot to death by assassins identified as Black Muslims as he was about to address a rally of several hundred followers in New York.

On this date:

In 1846, Sarah G. Bagley became the first female telegrapher when she took charge at the newly opened telegraph office in Lowell, Mass.

In 1866, Lucy B. Hobbs became the first woman to graduate from a dental school, the Ohio College of Dental Surgery in Cincinnati.

In 1878, the first telephone directory was issued, by the District Telephone Company of New Haven, Conn. It listed 50 names.

In 1885, the Washington Monument was dedicated in the nation's capital.

In 1916, the longest and bloodiest battle of World War I — the Battle of Verdun — began in France.

In 1925, The New Yorker magazine made its debut.

In 1947, Edwin H. Land first demonstrated his Polaroid Land camera, which used self-developing film that produced a black-and-white photograph in 60 seconds.

In 1972, President Nixon began his historic visit to mainland China.

In 1983, former Vice President Walter F. Mondale launched his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination at the Minnesota state Capitol.

In 1986, two weeks after becoming the first American convicted of spying for China, retired CIA analyst Larry Wu-Tai Chin took his life in a Prince William County, Va., jail.

In 1988, TV evangelist Jimmy Swaggart tearfully confessed in public that he was guilty of an unspecified sin, and said he was leaving the pulpit temporarily.

Ten years ago: A general strike began in Kabul, the capital of Afghanistan, in protest of the Soviet military intervention. Speed skater Eric Heiden won the fourth of his five gold medals at the Winter Olympic Games in Lake Placid, N.Y.

FDA hasn't learned lesson from scandal

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration managed to get through an embarrassing generic drug scandal without learning its lesson.

Jack Anderson

The agency still doesn't adequately track the approval process for new generic drugs, betraying the same sloppiness that allowed crooked FDA chemists to hustle gifts from drug makers in trade for preferential treatment.

In fact, four months after one of those chemists was fired, the FDA records indicated that he was still reviewing generic drug applications. He wasn't, of course. Charles Chang was awaiting sentencing for accepting gratuities from drug companies.

The FDA hadn't cleaned up its act enough even to remove Chang's name from the review roster.

Federal investigators who mopped up after the scandal found that two other departed chemists in addition to Chang were still on the records as reviewers. One FDA official who left the agency last May was still listed as the reviewer on 60 drug applications last fall. The report does not list those chemists by name, but an FDA source confirmed that one was Chang.

Our associate Jim Lynch obtained a copy of the investigators' draft audit, which for the first time documents the impact of the dishonesty and disorganization at the FDA. The report was produced by auditors for the inspector general for the Health and Human Services Department, Richard Kusserow.

The conclusions vindicate several drug companies that bumped their heads against a brick wall trying to get the FDA to investigate its own collusion and favoritism. Three FDA chemists and three officials of generic drug firms have been convicted of crimes related to stacking the deck in the drug approval process.

After looking at one single graph in the report, it is easy to see why Mylan Laboratories Inc. — a company that didn't bribe anyone — hired a private investigator to find out why its drugs were put on the slow track.

The FDA took almost three years to approve one of Mylan's drugs. Yet another company got approval for the same generic in less than six months. Chang's trial revealed that he received a bundle of gifts from the company on the fast track.

Time is money in the highly competitive generic drug industry. Some exasperated drug makers lost millions of dollars waiting for the inexplicable FDA approval process while their competitors breezed through.

The report shows in hard numbers what was happening. Barr Laboratories, for example, waited 593 days for approval of one of its drugs, while the same drug made by American Therapeutics Inc. was reviewed in 182 days. The Chang trial revealed that an American Therapeutics official had given Chang an around-the-world trip, furniture and other gifts.

Sources inside the FDA have expressed frustration that the agency is still disorganized. Ousted FDA Commissioner Frank Young has not been replaced. The inspector general's draft report says the FDA generic drug division still "does not track the progress of an application," nor does it "detect indications of possible manipulation of the generic drug review and approval process."

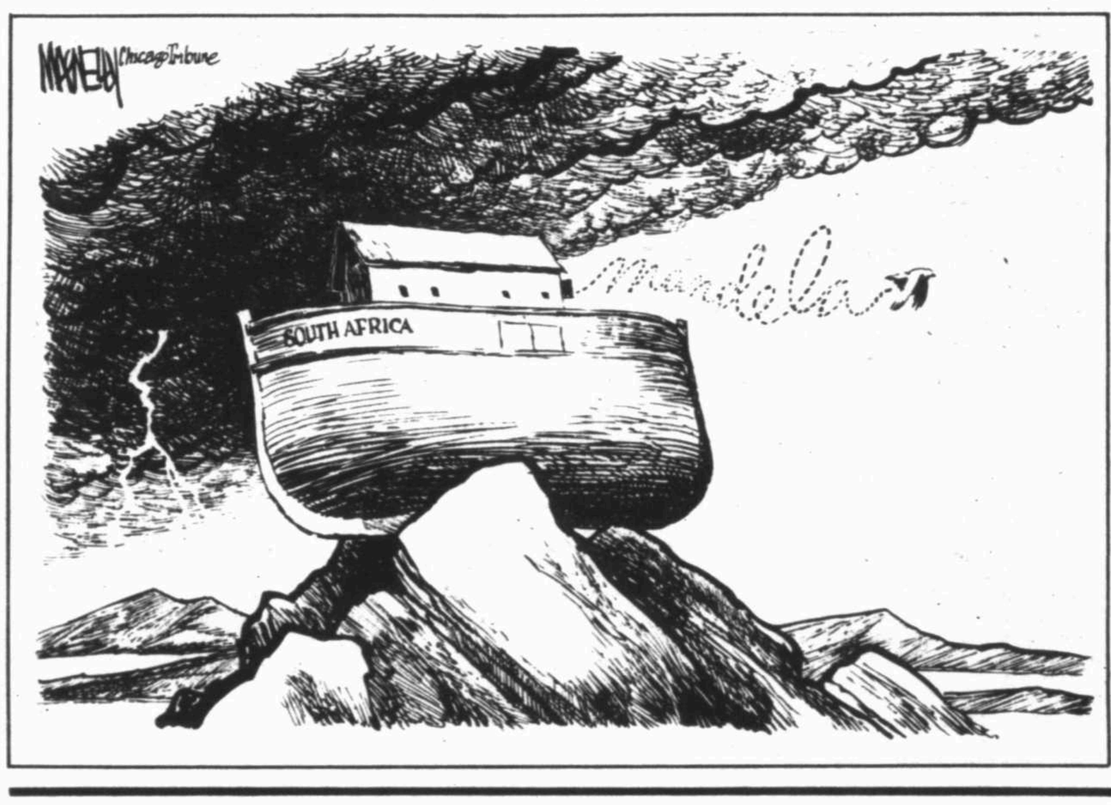

The FDA likes to think of the scandal as an unforeseeable surprise. The fact that fired chemists were still listed as reviewers for drug applications was "a technical oversight," according to an FDA spokesman.

The little oversights and surprises reflect a poorly managed agency that still won't admit its problems.

AVOIDING AIDS — The federal government is treating the AIDS epidemic like the common cold. Local health departments have difficulty meeting staffing requirements. Programs that attempt to motivate long-term changes in sexual behavior and drug use require a staff with specialized skills. Yet health officials' requests for more qualified staffers go unmet. Part of the problem is political. When the White House earmarks more money for safe-sex education or clean needle programs, it is attacked by the right wing for encouraging promiscuity and drug use.

Gorbachev may use economy to coerce Baltics

WASHINGTON — Mikhail Gorbachev's plaintive failure to stop the onrushing steamroller of Baltic independence by force of personality may lead to the use of Soviet economic power, particularly the oil weapon, to coerce the Baltic states into accepting his version of democratic self-determination and end further dissolution of the communist empire.

If Gorbachev really believes that the use of Soviet force in the Baltics would inflame the West against him and abruptly terminate perestroika, two strategies seem available to him. First: Block independence by using the economic weapon, coupled with bureaucratic delays easily imposed by endless debates back in Moscow. Second: Let the steamroller of independence roll on, using it as fresh evidence to support Gorbachev's claims on Western assistance while clamping down hard on rampant nationalism from Moldavia to Azerbaijan.

While some of President Bush's key diplomatic aides do not completely rule out the latter, despite its falling-domino threat to Gorbachev, the prevailing view here is that exploitation of the economic weapon is more likely. Yet far from devising a response that might include guarantees to make up for Soviet-imposed deprivations, the administration is only now conducting quiet studies.

The stench of economic warfare is unmistakably in the air. The Baltic states "cannot really be on their own in economic terms," Gennadi Gerasimov, the Soviet spokesman, told NBC's Meet the Press in late December.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

"You can see that (they) are getting our oil at very cheap prices," prices that are unavailable in the West.

Six days later in Romania came clear proof that Moscow has not lost the will to use its economic power inside its old Eastern European empire. Romania was unexpectedly offered a juicy prize of energy assets amounting to nearly 400,000 tons of oil for January and about 20 million cubic meters a day of natural gas. Now-executed Communist Party leader Nicolae Ceausescu brutalized his people even to the point of denying them enough oil to warm their houses in winter.

Although no quid pro quo has yet been announced for this beneficence (at a time the Soviet Union itself confronts potential oil shortages), officials here have an explanation: to strengthen its position in a Romania now threatened with possible violence that one high official here predicts could turn Bucharest into "Paris 1789." That was the year a French physician named Guillotin introduced the bloody killing machine that bears his name.

Gorbachev hopes the offer of oil will show that Soviet economic power can still help sustain Moscow's political position as post-Ceausescu Communist apparatchiks fight anti-communist newcomers in the battle for power. He may also be using the oil to extract a guarantee that Romania will not stir the political pot in Soviet Moldavia, taken from Romania in 1939.

For Gorbachev, stakes in the Baltics are infinitely higher than those in Romania. That was emphasized by former Reagan administration Pentagon official Frank J. Gaffney Jr., in a Jan. 8 analysis of Soviet economic warfare by the Center for Security Policy, a conservative think tank. Compared to Eastern Europe, he noted, the Baltic states "pose a far more significant challenge to the Soviet Union."

The full panoply of Soviet power to affect the economies in the three states illegally seized by Stalin in 1940 cannot be precisely measured, but oil is at the center. More than half of Lithuania's export earnings comes from petroleum products refined from Soviet oil. Even though a large portion of this hard currency from Western Europe ends up in the coffers of Moscow, Lithuania's total dependence on Soviet oil puts its economy under Moscow's thumb.

Latvia generates only one-half of its consumption of electricity, importing much of the rest from non-Baltic parts of the Soviet Union. In addition to Moscow's control over energy, those two Baltic states, along with Astonia, can take virtually no independent action in the Soviet command economy to build up, experiment with or maximize their own systems, either inside the Soviet Union or in new arrangements with the West.

No one can know how far Gorbachev might be willing to push economic blackmail against the rebellious Baltics, but a pledge of protection by the United States and its allies might discourage him. Yet all is quiet here as the Bush administration sweats out an embarrassing silence about possible economic warfare against the Baltics, the same silence that makes Baltic "independence" a forbidden White House word because Moscow does not want to hear it.

Junk bonds are what made America great

I arrived home and waited for an opportune moment to break the news to my wife. It came between the lentil soup and the meat loaf.

Art Buchwald

"Drexel Burnham went down the toilet."

She dropped the mashed potatoes.

"How could they? They're not a savings and loan."

"It's worse," I told her, "they deal in junk bonds, and if they dump them all on the market, Wall Street will lose its sense of humor. We have to find a way of keeping Drexel afloat so that the pension funds and brokerage houses won't go under."

I could see her getting angry. "If they were called junk bonds, why did people buy them in the first place?"

"Because they paid more interest than the dowdy run-of-the-mill bonds which have no sex appeal. Investors need adventure as much as anybody else."

"I don't understand why we needed junk bonds at all."

"The sharks needed them to raise money so one raider could buy another raider's company. Take R.J.R. Nabisco. No one could have bought it the last time around if Drexel Burnham hadn't raised the money to make the deal. Without junk bonds, takeover artists would never make a living. Unfortunately, Drexel got stuck with so many bonds of its own that now it's had to file for bankruptcy. This means that if Drexel owes you anything, you get 10 cents on the dollar."

"Why can't the government bail out Drexel?" my wife asked.

"It won't, although it has good reason to. The government is among the biggest holders of junk bonds," I told her. "It picked them up from all the savings and loans it took over. The S&Ls' safes were stuffed with bonds. But so far there is no bailout."

"Where was the government at the beginning when Drexel floated all the junk bonds?"

"It couldn't interfere," I said, "because you have to allow the system to work until there's proof that it doesn't."

"I read where people like Mike Milken made millions selling the Drexel bonds."

"Possibly he did, but we can't hold him responsible for the nose-dive. He took his money up front."

"I absolutely refuse to worry about one more financial institution whose main product is greed," she declared.

"You mustn't talk that way. Junk bonds made America what it is today. We can't turn our backs on Drexel Burnham because its paper is worthless. As Americans we must say, 'We didn't like what you did, and we didn't understand why you did it. Yet, we're ready to forgive and forget your mistakes because bailing out companies is what Americans do best.'"

"You really want me to say that?"

"That or something like it. You have to think of junk bonds as meat loaf. As long as someone wants meat loaf it has great value. But the minute no one wants it you can't even give it to the dog."

"Is that my lesson in banking for this evening?"

"All I'm trying to do is prepare you for the day when George Bush announces, 'I am asking every man, woman and child to contribute to the Drexel Burnham Meat Loaf Relief Fund.'"

She had the mashed potatoes poised to throw.

"All right, already. Don't help Drexel Burnham dig out from its junk bond mess! But remember this — if Mike Milken winds up sleeping in the park with the bonds as blankets, you will have to live with it for the rest of your life."

WORLD in brief

High-tech Navy struts for Cheney

YOKOSUKA, Japan (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney was treated today to a demonstration of some of the U.S. Navy's most sophisticated weaponry as he witnessed a simulated sea and air battle aboard an Aegis cruiser based in this port city.

Cheney, in Japan on the last stop of his two-week tour of Asian nations hosting U.S. forces, watched four huge blue computerized screens aboard the USS Bunker Hill simulate an attack on the American aircraft carrier Midway in the Sea of Japan.

Cheney dines tonight with Japanese Defense Minister Juro Matsumoto. He meets Thursday with high-ranking Japanese officials, when he is expected to discuss Pentagon proposals for a 10 percent to 12 percent cutback in U.S. troop strength in the Pacific Rim. Cheney is also seeking a sizable increase in Japan's $2.4 billion annual contribution to the $7 billion cost of basing America's 50,000 soldiers, sailors and marines in Japan and Okinawa.

Report 'pulls no punches'

WASHINGTON (AP) — China, Nicaragua and Iraq were sharply criticized by the State Department today in an annual human rights report to Congress that also documents beheadings and amputations in Saudi Arabia and floggings in Iran.

From student detentions in Liberia to disappearances in El Salvador, the 1,641-page report catalogues man's inhumanity to man in virtually every conceivable way.

In Burma, men forced to walk ahead of army troops in mine-infested fields are blown up. In Iran, prisoners are flogged and suspended from the ceiling, according to eyewitnesses and human rights groups.

Rep. Gus Yatron, D-Pa., chairman of the House human rights subcommittee, complimented the State Department for a report that "pulls no punches in assessing dismal human rights records of such dictatorial regimes as China and Iraq."

Bomb blast shakes town

LEICESTER, England (AP) — A bomb exploded near an army van in the center of Leicester just before rush hour Tuesday evening, injuring two people, blowing pedestrians off their feet and shattering windows, officials said.

No group claimed responsibility, but suspicion fell on the Irish Republican Army, which has been fighting to end British rule in Northern Ireland.

The explosion shattered glass in buildings and cars in the center of this city of 263,000 in central England.

Army installations in England have been IRA targets. In September, an IRA bomb killed 10 band members at the Marine barracks in Deal in southeastern England.

Black-white talks urged

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Nelson Mandela has attempted to calm fears among business leaders with an assurance the African National Congress would not impose drastic economic changes if it takes control, a newspaper said today.

Business leaders have been frightened by recent Mandela statements backing the ANC's plan to nationalize the economy.

A lawmaker of the liberal Democratic Party said today that the ANC and the governing National Party were moving too slowly and must accelerate efforts to bring about black-white dialogue on ending apartheid.

The ANC wants release of all political prisoners and an end to the state of emergency before taking part in formal talks.

Perrier soon on sale

PARIS (AP) — New shipments of sparkling Perrier water will arrive on French shelves March 1 bearing a special label showing they were bottled after last week's worldwide recall, the company said Tuesday.

Perrier representatives at the company's headquarters were unavailable to say when the bottled water might return to the United States and other foreign markets.

Traces of benzene have been discovered in Perrier samples in several countries, including the United States.

Army given control of Albanians

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — An ethnic Albanian demonstrator was reported killed Tuesday in Kosovo, and the federal government decided to give the army a direct role in maintaining order in the restive southern province.

State television said the demonstrator was killed in Titova Mitrovica, 28 miles northwest of Pristina, the provincial capital. It gave no details of the death, but reported "numerous injuries among demonstrators and the police."

Twenty-eight ethnic Albanians have been reported killed since January in Kosovo, an impoverished province of 1.9 million people where ethnic Albanians outnumber Slavs 9 to 1.

According to official figures, the same number of people were killed a year ago after Serbia made constitutional changes that gave it near-total control. Until then, Kosovo had been an autonomous province within Serbia, the largest of Yugoslavia's six republics.

In an emergency meeting, the eight-member national presidency decided for the first time to involve the army, which has been deployed in Kosovo since last year, in quelling the unrest.

A statement from the presidency carried by the official news agency Tanjug said it "has decided to partially engage units of the Yugoslav Peoples' Army in Kosovo with the aim of protecting constitutional order and preventing violence."

It said the "security situation in Kosovo has seriously deteriorated" because of the unrest, "which could have tragic consequences for all citizens in this province and for the country as a whole."

Parts of Kosovo have been under virtual martial law, particularly during the last month of renewed unrest.

Serbs in Kosovo said Tuesday they would take up arms to protect themselves if the central government did not act. Serbs claim harassment by the majority in Kosovo, which is adjacent to Albania.

Thousands of ethnic Albanians conducted strikes and stayed away from school Tuesday to protest the state of emergency in the region. Several thousand also demonstrated in Pristina and other towns, in some cases fighting with police.

Britain lifting new investment sanction

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — In the first major dent in international sanctions against South Africa, Britain has defied the rest of the European Community and will unilaterally lift a ban on new investment.

Britain's move Tuesday, following its failure to persuade other members of the 12-nation community to follow suit, underlined its reputation as a reluctant member of the European Community.

The African National Congress today accused Britain of breaking its word on economic sanctions and said the action was part of a pattern by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of favoring South Africa's white minority government.

"She has been quite prepared to be out of step with the rest of the world in her anxiety to accommodate the Pretoria regime," Pallo Jordan, the ANC's information chief, said at the guerrilla group's headquarters in Lusaka, Zambia.

Irish Foreign Minister Gerry Collins accused Britain of setting a "dangerous precedent" and added: "I would appeal to everyone here not to embark on such a course."

In contrast to the fallout over South Africa, the community's foreign ministers displayed marked unanimity over the upheavals in Eastern Europe, declaring that the Western trade bloc sees itself as a "mooring for a future European equilibrium."

They urged that the officials of 35-nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe begin meeting by no later than July to set up an East-West summit later this year.

Assurances by Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher of West Germany that a united Germany would not seek to dominate Europe and would respect existing frontiers appeared to soothe even the most wary, including Britain.

"It was the most open discussion we have had among the twelve on German unification," said British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd.

Genscher, however, left open the question of Polish demands for a treaty to enshrine Polish territory, one-third of which was part of Germany before World War II. He said the issue could be considered in six-power talks among the two Germanies and the World War II allied powers, the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France, and in the Conference on Security and Cooperation.

On South Africa, only Portugal supported Britain's in arguing that an easing of sanctions was warranted by the lifting of some restrictions by South African President F.W. de Klerk this month and the Feb. 11 release of black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela.

"She (Thatcher) has been quite prepared to be out of step with the rest of the world in her anxiety to accommodate the Pretoria regime."

— Pallo Jordan, ANC information chief

"It is not enough to sit back and say, 'that's encouraging, let's see what you do next'," said Hurd.

Collins said the community view was that the reforms "while welcome ... do not yet go far enough ... Perhaps there is agreement that we could look at our policy again when the state of emergency is lifted and all political prisoners are released."

The community agreed to send a fact-finding mission to South Africa comprised of representatives from France, Ireland and Italy. Hurd said the move would be interpreted as a "signal of the Twelve delaying rather than encouraging."

The new investment ban was one of a series of non-binding measures the community agreed to in 1986.

Britain has long opposed sanctions and now argues that its policy of seeking to encourage South Africa's white-led government to move way from apartheid has helped push de Klerk into reform.

Most other countries say he has moved because of the pressure of sanctions and resistance by the black majority, which is denied a vote in national affairs by apatheid.

Mrs. Thatcher is already under attack for what critics say is compromising British influence internationally by being out of step on South Africa and being hesitant about German unification.

Hurd indicated Tuesday that President Bush supports the British view that de Klerk deserves a response from the international community.

Hurd said Bush wrote to Mrs. Thatcher on Tuesday and said he is prevented by Congress from lifting U.S. sanctions.

Britain is the largest single foreign investor in South Africa, although several major British corporations and the London-based Barclays Bank pulled out because of pressure from anti-apartheid groups.

Puerto Rican Telephone Co. put on market

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon says the U.S. commonwealth's public telephone company will be sold to private investors and the proceeds used to improve education and public services.

"This means there won't be one school in Puerto Rico that is not painted, repaired," the governor said in his "State of the Commonwealth" address Tuesday. "That no school lacks desks, blackboards, chalk. That no child lacks books or the necessary supplies for an education."

Colon said the Puerto Rico Telephone Co. "is the only company which has enough value" to generate the money needed to revamp Puerto Rico's school system and the Caribbean island's infrastructure.

He said he would sell it for "no less than $2 billion."

It was not immediately known if there is a buyer for the telephone company.

Hernandez Colon was in New York City in January and met with the billonaire financier Donald Trump. The governor refused to provide details but said then they discussed ways to invest in education reform plans.

At the time, Hernandez Colon said Trump "was interested."

The governor said without elaboration that Telefonica Espanola, the Spanish telephone company, "is one of the enterprises that could be interested" in the long-distance service.

Hernandez Colon said he wanted to create two "perpetual funds" from the telephone company sale: a $1 billion fund for education and a $1 billion fund to modernize the island's highways, public housing, airports, waste dumps and energy operations.

'Unified' Germany differs from 'reunified' Germany

Commentary

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst News Service

PARIS — Are the Germans seeking unification or something far more ambitious and dangerous — reunification?

Journalists tend to employ the two words interchangeably when discussing the formation of one German state.

But diplomats warn that the words have very different meanings.

Diplomatic specialists say the difference could take on crucial importance during the coming months as the process of creating a single Germany goes on.

Didier Voscin, a French foreign ministry legal expert, says the appropriate term is unification because it connotes the merger of "the two German states as they exist at the present time."

The United States and other governments that support one Germany have agreed to that concept and to nothing else.

In the language of international law, reunification implies a return to the status quo ante, Voscin says, meaning a return to Germany as it was in 1938, before Adolf Hitler launched his forced annexations and military conquests.

In that case, a big slice of present-day Poland — the one-time German provinces of Silesia and Pomerania, an area nearly the size of East Germany — would be thrown into the hopper.

West German officials, starting with Chancellor Helmut Kohl, dismiss as nonsense Polish fears that a future unitary German government might lay claim to the area as rightfully German.

Bonn authorities have often stated that they have no intention of contesting the Oder-Neisse line, the post-1945 border between East Germany and Poland.

The trouble is that Kohl has persistently refused to commit that to writing.

Although he, like all previous West German chancellors, claims to represent the sole legitimate German state, he demurs from making a formal pledge on the eastern frontier issue because, he says, he lacks authority.

Formal resolution of the question must await a peace treaty that finally winds up World War II, Kohl says. He argues that only a government representing a united Germany can sign such a treaty.

The 35-nation Helsinki accords of 1975 accepted the "inviolability" of existing European borders.

But the Poles now find the pact less than a completely satisfactory guarantee, especially in view of what they see as Kohl's hedging.

Officials in Bonn privately insist the chancellor would have no hesitation about signing an agreement renouncing German territorial claims but for the political ammunition such an action would hand to extreme right wingers in next December's West German elections.

Natives of Silesia and Pomerania now living in West Germany comprise a sizeable voting bloc. They could be driven into the arms of the ultra-right wing, the officials warn, if Kohl were to be too explicit about the future.

If the West German authorities expected to reassure the Poles with that explanation, they need not have bothered.

Poland's non-communist Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki, on a visit to Britain last week, was quoted by the British Broadcasting Corp. as saying that if Kohl believes the far right can exploit the issue of the eastern territories and the alleged indignities suffered by the small number of ethnic Germans who are still there, it's all the more reason for Poland to be "disquieted."

Fifteen million Germans lived in what is now the western-most area of Poland until 1945 when most of them fled or were driven out after Joseph Stalin unilaterally handed the area of about 19,000 square miles to the Poles. It was intended as compensation for an even vaster territory, now the Western Ukraine, that the Soviets grabbed from Poland.

In Central and Eastern Europe, seizing sizeable hunks of other countries on one pretext or another has a long history.

Frontiers have had little permanence in the past. The Poles can be forgiven for fearing the same might again become true in the future.

World War II, as they need no reminding, began with Hitler's demand for control of Danzig, now called Gdansk, the birthplace of Poland's Solidarity labor movement and hometown of its leader, Lech Walesa.

A Polish diplomat here said there isn't much chance a future German regime would revive its claim to Gdansk because it's far to the east.

But he asked, what about about Szczecin, a more important city, which nestles right against the German border?

It used to be called Stettin and, until 1945, was completely German.

"I've never encountered a German, East or West, who refers to it by its Polish name," the diplomat says. "For them, it is and will always be Stettin. Frankly, I can foresee a day when they'll want it back."

East Germany wants reunification talks to begin now; Soviets seek world treaty

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail Gorbachev is calling for an international treaty on German unification, saying his country "has an inalienable right" to ensure it does not sustain political or economic damage from a united Germany.

In an interview published today in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda, the Soviet president said that he believes it is up to the Germans to decide the nature and timing of unification.

But he said a united Germany must respect Europe's current borders and that only the four victorious Allies of World War II can determine Germany's final status.

Emergence of a reunited Germany as a powerful economic and military force in Central Europe has aroused concern, particularly among the Russians and Poles, who lost millions of people to Nazi aggression and acquired territory after World War II that had belonged to Germany.

Kremlin spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov said today that the Soviet Union supports Poland's desire to join talks with the Allies and the two Germanys on unification. He spoke at a news conference in the Phillipines.

Progress toward reunification has accelerated in recent weeks. Premier Hans Modrow of East Germany, plagued by mass emigration and a crumbling economy, asked on Tuesday for immediate reunification talks under the formula worked out with the Allies last week in Ottawa.

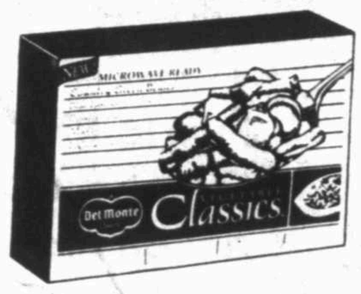

Gorbachev specifically mentioned Poland's western border. Kohl's failure to make a public pledge to respect that border prompted Poland to request the role in talks on unification between the two Germanys and the Allies.

About a united Germany's relationship with NATO and the Warsaw Pact, Gorbachev said the alliances retain a role as a new European security system evolves, and any disruption of the military-strategic balance is unacceptable.

Damaged I-20 may reopen in 2 weeks

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Several Highway Department and Public Safety officials inspect the site of Monday's fiery, fatal gasoline tanker crash Tuesday in Big Spring. The intense heat from the explosion of the tanker severely damaged the Interstate 20 eastbound traffic lane supports at right.

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

BIG SPRING — The 10,000 vehicles that daily travel Interstate 20 through this city could be "back on the road" within two weeks, according to Texas Department of Highway and Public Transportation engineers.

The five-mile detour currently facing interstate travelers as a result of the fiery crash of a gasoline tanker Monday could be replaced by two-way traffic on the westbound overpass by mid-March, said Michael Chetty, the resident highway department engineer in Big Spring.

"We feel we can repair and reinforce the columns affected by the fire within a couple of weeks and have all traffic back on the interstate," Chetty said this morning. Department safety experts from Austin were on hand Tuesday to examine the crash site.

In addition to reinforcing the column supports, the two-week construction period will be necessary to put in crossovers for eastbound traffic and place a concrete median barrier between the traffic lanes, Chetty said.

The relatively narrow bridge will not allow ample room for wide loads on the bridge once the barriers are in place, so oversize loads will be forced to detour until the severely damaged eastbound overpass can be replaced, which may take as long as a year.

The lack of service roads along the affected portion of I-20 complicated routing the temporary detour as well as planning for a more-direct bypass during roadway reconstruction, Chetty said.

The detour carries traffic away from the city, north on State Highway 350 and Farm-to-Market Road 700, explained Big Spring Police Capt. Melvin Fowler.

"The Snyder Highway-700 bypass route has the fewest control lights and was seen as the best route for the traffic flow, heavy as it is," Fowler said.

Unemployment rate rose slightly in January, TEC says

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Local unemployment rates bucked seasonal trends in January by posting only marginal increases, according to figures released today by the Texas Employment Commission.

In Midland, the unemployment rate rose .2 percent, from 5.3 percent to 5.5 percent. The January rate was a full percentage point better than January 1989, when the rate was 6.5 percent.

The Tall City's civilian labor force also declined, from 49,400 in December to 49,200. The labor force was 49,300 a year ago.

Lorna Biar, labor market analyst in the TEC's regional office in Midland, said part of the decline in the labor force, which helped the unemployment rate, was due to a number of Christmas employees laid off after the holidays who did not reenter the market. A number of them were college or high school students who returned to school, and mothers who only wanted to work during the Christmas season.

In addition, she noted, "There still may be people leaving the area, and the ones still here are more steadily employed."

Midland's total employment also fell from December to January, from 46,800 to 46,500, but was up from January 1989 when total employment was 46,100.

Total unemployment was up to 2,700 from 2,600, but was down from January 1989, when total unemployment was 3,200.

"Most metropolitan statistical areas (MSA), especially in this region, were up from a year ago," Biar observed.

In Odessa, the unemployment rate in January held steady at 6.3 percent and was down sharply from January 1989's rate of 8.9 percent. Odessa's civilian labor force was 50,900 in January, down from 51,200 in December; total employment dropped from 48,000 to 47,700, and total unemployment was steady at 3,200.

Updated rates for Midland in 1989 indicate the city's unemployment rate averaged 6 percent for the year, with the civilian labor force averaging 49,700, total employment 46,700, and total unemployment averaging 3,000.

The highest unemployment rate was 6.9 percent in July; the lowest was 5.3 percent, in December.

The labor force began the year at 49,300 and climbed to a high of 50,700 in July before ending the year at 49,400 in December.

Midland's ranking among the TEC's 27 MSAs fell from 11th to 14th while Odessa fell from 17th to 18th, tied with Galveston-Texas City and Killeen-Temple.

Bryan-College Station had the lowest unemployment in the state, 3.4 percent, followed by Austin with 4.3 percent, Lubbock with 4.4 percent and Amarillo and Dallas with 4.6 percent each.

Chief justice backs non-partisan elections

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

"Any system of judicial selection that we have is going to have an element of appointment in it and an element of election."

— Texas Supreme Court Chief Justice Tom Phillips

Supreme Court Chief Justice Tom Phillips Tuesday urged lawmakers to end partisan judicial elections in Texas during a campaign speech at Midland International Airport.

"I want a change in the way we elect our judges," Phillips told reporters during an afternoon news conference.

The 40-year-old Dallas native, who has been chief justice of the Supreme Court since his appointment by Gov. Bill Clements in 1988, said he wants the Legislature to explore a system where judges — after winning one open, non-partisan contest from individual districts — would run for re-election countywide on a "yes" or "no" ballot.

"That's the type of judicial elections that most states now use, and I think it's time Texas explore it," he said.

Phillips faces 49-year-old Daniel J. Rutherford, a San Antonio attorney, in the March 13 Republican primary.

Phillips said he couldn't predict what judicial redistricting plan the Texas Legislature would choose during a special session beginning Feb. 27. But he said he favors shorter and cheaper campaigns, and non-partisan elections.

"Any system of judicial selection that we have is going to have an element of appointment in it and an element of election," he said.

Phillips, a Harvard Law School graduate, said he doesn't necessarily endorse an appointive judiciary, but noted that 60 percent of all judges in Texas reach the bench by appointment.

Texas lawmakers initiated public debate over the issue of judicial selection last fall, after U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton declared at-large elections in nine Texas counties a violation of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

Bunton ordered non-partisan special elections in the nine counties named in the lawsuit filed by the League of United Latin American Citizens. They include: Midland, Ector, Dallas, Tarrant, Travis, Harris, Bexar, Lubbock and Jefferson.

But the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals set aside Bunton's order to allow the Legislature more time to devise a redistricting plan.

Phillips, who discussed merit selection of judges during the week-long trial in Midland, said most states have adopted a system of appointing judges who serve one term and then run in retention elections.

Phillips, who campaigned in 1988 for $5,000 caps on political contributions and spent $2 million on his 1988 race, said he also plans to limit contributions during his 1990 campaign.

His 2,881,110 vote total in 1988 was the fifth highest ever record in any Texas election between two major party candidates.

The winner of next month's GOP primary will go on to face Supreme Court Justice Oscar Mauzy, a Democrat, in the November general election. Mauzy has no Democratic primary opponent.

MC board seconds efforts to equalize school funding

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland College trustees have joined forces with 49 other Texas community colleges in supporting lawmakers' efforts to equalize public school funding, but they fear it will be at the expense of higher education.

Trustees voted unanimously Tuesday to adopt a resolution urging Gov. Bill Clements, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, Speaker of the House Gib Lewis and members of the Texas Legislature to keep their hands off the 1990 higher education budget.

"I would think that 50 community college boards making this resolution would get somebody's attention going into a special session," Midland College President Jess Parrish said.

Lawmakers will begin addressing public school finance and other topics during a special session that begins Feb. 27.

State officials have estimated the cost of equalizing public schools could reach $10 billion.

Parrish worries that higher education may be the only area with sums of money that large.

"I'm greatly concerned about the rest of this year, because it seemed like we saw them (lawmakers) come back and take away what had already been appropriated two or three years ago," he said.

Public school finance became an issue last year when the Texas Supreme Court decision in Edgewood vs. Kirby ordered the Legislature to develop an alternative plan for financing the public school system.

Parrish, who serves on the Legislative Committee of the Texas Public Community/Junior College Association, said lawmakers may opt to solve the public education issue entirely or merely "Band-Aid" the problem.

"My concern is that this is an elec-

Trinity School science teacher Jack Hickman shows second-grader Kristen Vasicek the proper way to use a band saw during a kite-building project this week. Hickman's workshop will be featured next month in a national elementary education magazine.

Trinity teacher builds learning with workshop

By DAVID MORRIS

Some of Jack Hickman's fondest memories are of childhood hours spent in his father's workshop, building things and taking things apart.

The workshop Hickman has since built at Trinity School, where he teaches art and science, is his way of giving pupils a similar chance to make something with their hands.

"One of the things I hope kids will get from this is that there are alternatives to television watching," Hickman said. "If someone could develop a lifelong inclination towards a hobby...or just to enjoy tinkering around rather than passively sitting in front of the TV, I think it's worthwhile."

Hickman's workshop, which he built with a $26,000 federal grant in 1987, has gained national attention. Instructor magazine, a 99-year-old elementary teachers publication, will feature Hickman and his "Curiosity Shop" in its March edition.

Debra Martorelli, Instructor executive editor, said the magazine will profile Hickman and three other elementary science teachers.

DEATHS

Coy H. Cavitt

Services for Coy Hubert Cavitt of Brownwood were to be at 1 p.m. today at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Alfred Johnson officiating and Delos Johnson assisting. Interment was to follow at Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Cavitt

He died Tuesday at a Midland hospital.

He was born Nov. 16, 1913, in Haskel County where he was reared and attended school. He married Ethel Deborah Schwartz on July 1, 1937, in Haskel. He worked for Peckam Refinery in Stanford and moved to Merkel in 1942, working for the civil service as an engine aircraft supervisor at Dyess Air Force Base.

Cavitt moved to Midland in 1946 and worked for Broadway Motors for 13 years. In 1958 he established his own business, Coys Automotive. He retired in 1979.

He was an active Gospel preacher for 17 years in various West Texas cities, including Brownwood, Blankett and Santa Anna. He was an elder and member of the North Main Street Church of Christ.

Survivors include his wife; one son, David Cavitt of Silverton; two daughters, Frances Smith and Cheryl Matchus, both of Midland; one brother, Lester Cavitt of Hamlin; one sister, Alma Cavitt of Andrews; 12 grandchildren; one great-grandchild; and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the Allison Cancer Center.

Pallbearers will be Phillip Smith, Scott Smith, Michael Foulds, Jerry Cavitt, John Cavitt and Stephen Cavitt.

John R. Burns Jr.

FORT WAYNE, Ind. — Masonic services for John R. Burns Jr., 75, of Midland are set for 7:30 p.m. today at the Klaehn Funeral Home's Wayne Street Chapel.

Funeral services are set for 2 p.m. Thursday at Trinity Episcopal Church in Fort Wayne with the Revs. William Gibson and Craig Kallio officiating. Burial will follow at Lindenwood Cemetery under the direction of Klaehn Funeral Home.

He died Monday in a local hospital.

Born April 8, 1914, in Morris, Okla., Burns had lived in Midland since 1974.

He worked for Big Chief Drilling Co. and later served as drilling and production superintendent for Warren American Oil Co. until his retirement in 1985.

He was a 32nd degree Mason and a member of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church in Midland.

Survivors include his wife Marguerite Burns of Midland; one son, John R. Burns III of Fort Wayne; four stepdaughters, Louise Fortien and Alice Schaefer, both of Ashland, Mass., Lena Rogers of Bellingham, Mass., and Lydia Taylor of Milford, Mass.; two brothers, Robert Burns and Aaron Burns, both of Carmi, Ill.; two sisters, Patti (Mrs. Lyle) Galbraith of Midland and Marjorie Stanley, Evansville, Ind.; and six grandchildren.

Memorials should be directed to the American Heart Association.

J.C. 'Bert' McFarland

Funeral services for J.C. "Bert" McFarland are scheduled for Thursday at Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Dr. James Denison officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Monday at a local hospital. He was 60.

He was born Sept. 28, 1929, in Fort Worth, where he grew up. He graduated from Arlington Heights High School in 1947 and attended St. Edwards University in Austin before moving to West Texas.

He married Ruth Vincent Nov. 8, 1958, in Lake Charles, La. He returned to Midland in 1962 and operated his own chemical and oilfield equipment business.

Survivors include his wife, Ruth Vincent McFarland of Midland; three sons, William McFarland of Midland, James McFarland of New York City, and David McFarland of New York City; and a sister, Isobel Riley of Chicago.

Elwood LeRoy Hisey

Funeral services for Elwood LeRoy Hisey are scheduled for 11 a.m. Thursday at the First Baptist Church with Dr. James Denison officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Sunday at a Midland hospital.

Blackwater Draw museum director to speak Thursday

From Staff Reports

The next meeting of the Midland Archeological Society will be at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the Marion Blakemore Planetarium, Museum of the Southwest.

Featured speaker will be Dr. John Montgomery, director of the Blackwater Draw Museum near Portales, N.M.

Montgomery is a professor at Eastern New Mexico University and director of Research and Excavations at Blackwater Draw, one of the most important archeological sites in North America. He is also the director of the Agency for Conservation-Archeology.

Montgomery studied at the University of Arizona and Texas Tech University, before receiving his Ph.D. in archeology from the University of Colorado at Boulder.

For the program on Thursday, Montgomery will show slides and talk about current research at Blackwater Draw, and focus on long-term plans for opening the site to the public.

Fire under investigation

From Staff Reports

Fire officials today were still investigating what caused a fire which gutted a Midland home.

A 1904 N. Keith St. home was almost completely destroyed Tuesday when the blaze broke out in either the living room or the bedroom about 11:50 p.m., officials said.

Neither Guillermo Mungui Higaredo, his wife nor child, who were living in the rented house, were injured.

Customs inspector dies

EL PASO (AP) — A U.S. Customs Service inspector died Tuesday night, a day after he was dragged several hundred feet by a van that charged through a border checkpoint.

Timothy McCaghren, 36, died at 8:30 p.m. at Thomason Hospital in El Paso, a nursing supervisor said. He had been in a coma since shortly after the incident Monday.

The inspector was dragged and thrown by the speeding van at about 4:45 p.m. Monday when the driver accelerated after being asked to open the van's rear doors at a Zaragosa Bridge inspection station.

McCaghren grabbed the passenger-side door as the van sped by, and hung on until the van turned from Zaragosa Road onto Border Highway in El Paso's Lower Valley, police said. He suffered multiple head injuries in the fall.

Bill Nowack, director of inspection and control division, said inspectors are not encouraged to physically take control of a vehicle to try and stop it.

Inspectors are instructed to notify the police or U.S. Border Patrol by radio when vehicles don't stop for inspection. "We remind our people of the high level of danger associated with the job," Nowack said.

Early Tuesday, El Paso police found the 1976 Dodge van involved in the attack, but the driver eluded capture.

"We have a strong suspect that we are looking at," police Lt. Paul Saucedo said. "We know where he lives, and where he hangs around. That is where we're focusing our search."

Men's discharge official

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Five Air Force servicemen discharged because of their alleged ties to the Ku Klux Klan will maintain full military benefits, but will be prohibited from re-enlisting in the Air Force or any other branch of the military, officials said.

Capt. Barbara Carr, a spokeswoman for Carswell Air Force Base, said Tuesday the administrative discharges of four of the servicemen became final Tuesday and the discharge for the fifth airman will be completed by the end of the week.

She refused to identify the airmen, saying to do so is prohibited under the federal privacy act. But one is known to be Sgt. Timothy Hall, who initially appealed his dismissal but withdrew his appeal Tuesday. His name is known because he was at the center of a Tarrant County sheriff's department internal affairs investigation into Klan activity by deputies.

It was the sheriff's department investigation that triggered Tuesday's Air Force dismissals.

ROAD

The continuing Department of Public Safety investigation has shed little additional light on the cause of the Monday evening accident that claimed the life of 37-year-old Michael Roy Stovall of Big Spring.

Stovall had just filled the tanker with gasoline from the Fina Oil & Chemical Co. refinery east of town when he lost control of the 1988 Freightliner tractor as he overtook a slower-moving car.

The rig ran along a guardrail in the westbound lane for about 300 feet before the rail collapsed and the truck went over the side, between the two overpass spans, plunged 30 feet and exploded.

DPS Sgt. Frank Woodall said investigators have interviewed the driver of the automobile which was traveling at about 50 mph at the time of the accident. The posted maximum speed limit in the area is 65 mph and there is no posted minimum speed limit, he said.

Woodall declined to speculate on why Stovall overtook the slower-moving vehicle faster than expected and had to swerve to avoid hitting the car, which started the chain of events.

A slight curve in the road just east of the accident site could have been a contributing factor, he said.

Monaghan cites street paving in re-election bid

From Staff Reports

District 3 Councilman Bob Monaghan said a southwest Midland with more paved roads with curbs and gutters weighs heavily on his mind.

Monaghan

Monaghan, 66, filed Monday for the May 5 election. If elected, it would be his second term as councilman for single-member District 3.

Monaghan said he wants to help push for paved roads, curbs and gutters for southwest Midland constituents, many of whom have grown accustomed to traveling bumpy dirt roads.

As of late Tuesday, no one else had filed for the District 3 position.

Monaghan said he sees economic development and city employee morale as the two main campaign issues.

"Economic development is what everybody thinks we need," he said.

A Midland resident since 1959, Monaghan is president of Cal-Mon Oil Co.

Monaghan is a Fort Worth native who graduated from Arlington Heights High School. He was a U.S. Army Air Force pilot from 1943 to 1945.

Monaghan earned a bachelor's of science degree in petroleum engineering from the University of Texas in 1948. He earned a law degree from that school in 1951.

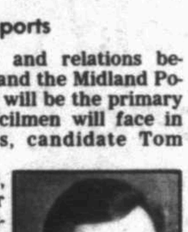

He has been in working in the oil business since 1948, when he worked as a roughneck for Magnolia Petroleum Co.

Monaghan and his wife, Virginia Ray, have three sons, Cullen S., Patrick and Robert Lee Jr.

District 4 council hopeful focuses on economic issues

From Staff Reports

The economy and relations between City Hall and the Midland Police Department will be the primary challenges councilmen will face in coming months, candidate Tom Johnston said.

Johnston

Johnston, 39, filed Monday for the council's District 4, a single-member seat. If elected on May 5, he would represent Midland's west side.

Johnston said he entered the race because he wants to do his part in shaping the city's future.

An accountant with Estoril Producing Corp. since 1982, Johnston has served on the Midland Planning and Zoning Commission for three years. He has been commission chairman the past year.

Johnston said city administrators and councilmen must study diversification so the economy does not deteriorate severely the next time oil boom turns to bust.

"I feel I understand a lot of the boom and bust problems in Midland," he said. "I want to help find solutions for the future."

A former Henderson Elementary School PTA treasurer and active First Baptist Church member, he is a 17-year Midland resident who is married and has two daughters, ages 12 and 10.

The former Midland Jaycees member moved to Midland from Lubbock in 1973.

Johnston also is a Vietnam veteran.

Attorney Robert Rendall, 36, a four-year councilman, has already announced that he will not seek re-election to his District 4 post.

"Instructor is always on the lookout for excellent teaching, and Jack happens to exemplify that" Ms. Martorelli said Tuesday from New York City. "Jack is a great example of an outstanding science teacher because he has found a way to merge science in the classroom with...the outside world."

Hickman and his pupils, most of them first- through fourth-graders, have used the workshop to build everything from kites and model planes to crystal radios and a small steam engine.

Vegetables grown in the Trinity garden and greenhouse are cooked by pupils in the workshop kitchen, which sports a microwave oven.

Workshop shelves, meanwhile, are piled with disemboweled electronic gadgets ranging from telephones to typewriters. Hickman said he encourages his pupils to take these items apart, figure out how they work and try to repair them.

"It's not a playroom," said Hickman, an on-and-off Trinity teacher for 15 years. "It does provide a non-threatening atmosphere (and) the opportunity to have a place to go to do whatever comes to mind."

Ms. Martorelli suggested that such explorations can show students how science is applied in the real world.

Hickman grudgingly acknowledged the possibility.

"Hopefully the things we're doing out here will relate to the science curriculum as well," he said. "I think if you got to the bottom line of the Curiosity Shop, it would have been to surround myself with materials and tools and information and ways to playfully put these things together in some interesting way."

Hickman said a chief benefit of the workshop is that it stimulates curiosity among his pupils, many of whom tend to take technology and engineering for granted.

Meanwhile, Hickman said, working with tools and producing things helps build pupil self-esteem and confidence.

"No telling what will happen when these guys get a chance to work with their hands," he said. "Very often you find that they have a very strong gift or talent that goes unrecognized in the 'mainstream' of education."

Hickman's pupils, about 120 weekly, seem to enjoy the chance to put down their pencils and pick up a saw or a screwdriver.

"I'm thinking of being a scientist," said 8-year-old Andrew Williams, who was building a kite in Hickman's class this week. Fresh from his turn at the band saw, Andrew said he looks forward to Curiosity Shop sessions.

"It really is pretty fun," he said. "We get to make a lot of neat things that I never even thought of making."

County residents still wait for results of water tests

From Staff Reports

Midland County residents are still awaiting results of water tests begun more than two weeks ago by the Texas Water Commission, which sampled 10 wells south of Interstate 20 in response to allegations that area groundwater is contaminated.

Ralph Johnson, TWC geologist in charge of the investigation, said today his office has received preliminary results for inorganic chlorides which do not show "anything out of the ordinary."

However, Johnson said one well in the test area, near South Midkiff and Cotton Flat roads, showed abnormally high chloride levels.

Johnson said he would advise the owner of the well to ask a physician whether to stop drinking the water, which contained 800 parts per million of chlorides.

Johnson said 35-400 ppm is "normal" for the area. He said the fact that only one well tested high might mean the well is improperly constructed.

"Basically, all this (test) reflects is just a general quality of water," Johnson said. "The metals and the organics is what we're mostly concerned about."

Johnson said he is awaiting test results for lead, chrome, mercury, harmful bacteria and volatile solvents.

These tests generally take longer than chloride (cation and anion) tests, Johnson said, but results are overdue nevertheless.

Terry Mills, TWC Houston lab supervisor, said further results might not be available for two more weeks.

Pat Laminack, a South Midkiff Road resident whose well was among those tested, said she wished the results would arrive.

"We're just waiting to get the results," she said. "I've been expecting them any day. I want to know if my water is safe or what."

SHERIFF'S DEPARTMENT TEXAS MIDLAND COUNTY

Crime Prevention Division

Business Owners of Midland County:

A very serious problem has been invading our community recently. This problem is suicide. For reasons unknown to most of us, some members of our community take their own lives. We can ignore this problem but it will not go away.

We would like to make the public aware of the seriousness of this matter and to inform everyone of the agencies in our area that can provide help to potential victims and their family or friends.

The Midland County Sheriff's Dept. invites everyone to attend a Suicide Awareness Seminar from 7 to 9 p.m., Wednesday, Feb. 21 at Midland College Allison Fine Arts Bldg. Auditorium. The guest speaker will be Jim Mysza with MHMR.

For more information contact Sgt. John McDaniel or Deputy Phillip Buys at 688-1014 or 688-1015.

Lois and Alan Purcell of White Settlement, Texas, near Fort Worth, smile at a press conference Tuesday afternoon after the conclusion of a 10-hour liver transplant operation on their daughter, Stormie Jones at Children's Hospital patient, having received her first liver six years ago.

12-year-old girl gets second liver

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Stormie Jones, the world's first heart-liver transplant recipient, returned to the operating room today because doctors feared she was bleeding internally a day after her second liver transplant.

The 12-year-old Texas girl's new liver was functioning, but a drop in blood pressure Tuesday night prompted doctors at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh to reopen the incisions at about 8:50 a.m., said hospital spokeswoman Lynn McMahon.

"They really are not considering this any type of setback," she said. "Stormie is doing very well. She is incredibly strong."

Ms. McMahon said doctors estimated it would take several hours to determine if she was bleeding and to locate the source.

Stormie had asked doctors for another liver weeks before they decided she needed one, according to her mother. She got her wish during Tuesday's 10-hour operation.

Tired of fighting problems with her first transplanted liver, Stormie said she needed a new one in November, her mother, Lois "Suzie" Purcell, 33, said at a news conference about an hour after her operation ended about 1 p.m.

"She tolerated the surgery very well," said Dr. Andreas Tzakis, who led a seven-member team of surgeons who performed the procedure. "It went very smoothly. She's a very strong child."

Hepatitis, not organ rejection, prompted doctors to decide Feb. 13 to perform a second liver transplant. Doctors discovered Stormie's first transplanted liver was being damaged by hepatitis caused by an unknown virus in early January, when she was hospitalized for treatment of an infection.

Symptoms of liver inflammation began to appear as early as four months ago, but Stormie became especially ill two weeks ago, suffering from weakness, jaundice and itchiness.

Her family was notified Monday that a suitable donor organ was available. The hospital declined to release information about the donor.

Stormie was overjoyed at the news and had no qualms about undergoing another major operation, her parents said.

"It's kind of like poker — you can't win if you don't play," said Stormie's stepfather, Alan Purcell, 27.

DANNY GREER ENDORSES NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

Danny Greer - Independent Businessman

I am endorsing Nick Taylor for District Judge because of his duelistic approach to the crime prevention effort in Midland. From the Judicial perspective, he supports a weekly drug testing program for those on probation. This is a positive approach due to the fact that a recent survey revealed that 90% of Midland's crime is drug-related; much of which is committed by repeat offenders.

From the community level, Nick contributes to and serves many organizations such as the Boy Scouts, in an effort to effect creative alternatives for our youth. Above all, Nick's high moral character is indicative of his dedication to God and of his conscientious obligation to the maintenance of integrity in the District Judges' office. I believe that Nick is thoroughly qualified judicially, conscientiously and morally.

All-white jury hears opening statements in skinhead trial

DALLAS (AP) — As a jury was being selected for the trial of five white supremacists accused of violating the civil rights of blacks, Hispanics and Jews, all visitors were made to pass through a metal detector and empty their pockets for inspection.

The six men, six women and two alternates — all white — were allowed to go home Tuesday, but U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders ordered them to return at 9 a.m. today for opening statements in the trial. In the meantime, he instructed them not to discuss the case or read anything about it.

Nine members of the 60-person panel were excused by Sanders for various reasons.

The "skinheads," white supremacists characterized by their closely shaved heads, are accused of vandalizing a synagogue and Jewish community center and chasing blacks and Hispanics out of a Dallas park in the fall and summer of 1988.

The Skinhead group first appeared in Dallas about two years ago when Sean Christian Tarrant, one of the defendants, formed a spinoff group called the Confederate Hammerskins, officials have said.

The indictment names Tarrant, 20, of Dallas; Jon Lance Jordan, 19, of Garland; Michael Lewis Lawrence, 22, of Tulsa, Okla.; Christopher Barry Greer, 25, of Irving, and Daniel Alvis Wood, 20, of Dallas. They are charged in the temple vandalism.

Greer, Tarrant and Jordan are named in a separate count of violence against blacks and Hispanics at Robert E. Lee Park in August of 1988.

Barry Kowalski, an attorney with the Justice Department Civil Rights Division, said after the indictments were handed up that the park attacks occurred because the skinhead group believed the park was a symbol of white supremacy that should not have been frequented by nonwhites.

Each of the federal charges carries a maximum fine of 10 years imprisonment and a $250,000 fine.

Federal prosecutors refused to discuss the case before trial, but U.S. Attorney General Richard Thornburg said after the indictments last fall that prosecutions of racial hate crimes "are major priorities" of the Justice Department.

Eleven other Hammerskins associates previously have been charged in the grand jury investigation. Three of those five adults and four of six juveniles pleaded guilty.

Wood, who was arrested in the vandalism on a temple, was sentenced to 10 years in prison and fined $5,000 by a state judge after admitting he sprayed swastikas and anti-Semitic slogans.

Pig Stands in hog heaven after rooting out imposter

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Pigstands of Texas is hoping to hog profits from the Hard Rock Cafe of Dallas' sales of "Pig Sandwiches." A federal jury decided the Hard Rock Cafe infringed on the San-Antonio-based Pigstands of Texas' servicemark — a pig with the words "Pig Sandwich" inside.

Pigstands claims it has the exclusive right to sell the "Pig Sandwich" and sued the Dallas Hard Rock Cafe, which has its own version of a "Pig Sandwich" on its menu.

The jury's decision, on Monday, brought an end to the week-long trial, which featured some unusual courtroom evidence — a glaring 3-by-4-foot red neon pig sign with "Pig Sandwich" lit in green neon. The 65-year-old sign has been on display at the Pigstands restaurant near downtown San Antonio throughout the company's history.

Pigstands attorney Louis Perkey claimed "Pig Sandwich" has been the mark of Pigstands for 70 years and is known to generations of Texans as such.

The battle began when Hard Rock Cafe began serving a "pig sandwich." The servicemark, similar to a trademark, of Pigstands of Texas has been an outline of a pig with "Pig Sandwich" written inside.

Hard Rock Cafe claimed the term "pig sandwich" can refer to any type of pork sandwich.

The Hard Rock Cafe now faces a hearing in March to determine how much in damages it will have to pay Pigstands for using the name "Pig Sandwich."

U.S. Magistrate John Primomo, who presided over the trial, said he will set a hearing on damages sometime after the middle of March.

"We are going to ask to be awarded in damages the amount they (Hard Rock Cafe) made in profits from the infringement," said attorney Louis Pirkey, who represented Pigstands and its president, Richard Hailey. "Since the infringement was willful, we will ask that the damages be increased."

Hard Rock Cafe of Dallas' attorney says his clients probably will appeal.

Candidate says race goes to the richest

AUSTIN (AP) — What do an accountant, a pastor, a lawyer and a janitor have in common?

Together with other unknown hopefuls, they are the so-called "minor" candidates.

In a campaign that is awash in millions of dollars in campaign donations, TV buys and high-powered polls, one of the minor candidates spoke out Tuesday.

Theresa Hearn-Haynes, a Democrat running for governor, said the race has become one of who can spend the most rather than a referendum on candidates' qualifications and positions.

"We cannot afford to allow unqualified, wealthy individuals to continue to occupy positions of power to the detriment of the taxpayers of Texas when education and training are necessary," said Ms. Hearn-Haynes of Houston.

Ms. Hearn-Haynes said she has a doctorate in law. Earlier this month, she was sentenced to three days in jail for criminal contempt after failing to appear for two court-ordered proceedings.

The contempt charge arose out of the candidate's lawsuit accusing Houston Lighting & Power Co. of racial discrimination in its residential rates.

At a news conference in the Senate chamber, she said campaign ethics and "media reform" are among her top priorities.

If elected governor, she said she would seek to prohibit the media from endorsing candidates or accepting advertising payments from candidates. She also wants to outlaw polls as well as the use of terms such as "leading, front-runner and major candidates."

Theresa Hearn-Haynes, one of seven Democrats on the primary ballot for governor, talks about coverage of political races. Ms. Hearn-Haynes said Tuesday at the Capitol Senate Chamber, that the governor's race has become one of who can spend the most, rather than a referendum on candidates' referendums.

AP Laserphoto

Earlier this month, Rev. W.N. Otwell of Fort Worth tried to participate in a debate of major Republican gubernatorial candidates in Houston. He was escorted out of the auditorium by security guards before the debate began.

Ms. Hearn-Haynes said she supports creation of a state lottery and dedicating 80 percent of the revenue to improve public school education.

She also is pro-choice on abortion and would increase funding to poor people for health care and housing.

"We must demand that our tax dollars first be spent to meet our basic needs," she said.

Ms. Hearn-Haynes said she has had trouble drumming up news coverage for her campaign because the media concentrate on candidates that spend a lot of money.

"This most important job of governor must not become for sale to the highest bidder," she said.

Democrats running for governor are Ms. Hearn-Haynes; State Treasurer Ann Richards; former Gov. Mark White; Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox; Earl Holmes, a retiree from Hawkins; Ray Rachal, an accountant from Stafford and Stanley Edward Adams Jr., a self-described "alleged white collar racketeer" from Austin.

The Republican field comprises Ed Cude, an insurance salesman from Houston; Texas Railroad Commission Chairman Kent Hance; Tom Luce, a Dallas attorney; Otwell; Royce Owens, a custodian from Merkel; Jack Rains, former secretary of state; and Clayton Williams, a Midland businessman.

Asbestos risk still concern, experts say

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The recent trend to downplay the danger of asbestos should be met with caution and skepticism on the part of the public, a group of scientists warns.

Articles in the past year in such publications as The New England Journal of Medicine, Science magazine and a Harvard University symposium downplay the risks associated with asbestos, panelists at the National Asbestos Conference said Tuesday. But, they stressed, the articles should be viewed with caution.

Warren Friedman, who coordinates the asbestos program at the U.S. General Services Administration, said there is ample evidence, also from recent studies, indicating that asbestos exposure does pose health risks, particularly long-term exposure. More studies are needed, he said.

Asbestos was used for years in buildings as a fire retardant and an insulator. Then, research in the 1960s said that inhaling asbestos fibers increases the risk of developing lung cancer.

Deputies shot on drug raid

CANTON (AP) — Three Van Zandt County deputies were shot late Tuesday while making a drug arrest at a residence north of Canton, DPS officials confirmed.

The deputies were members of the East Texas Drug Task Force and were serving search warrants at two rural residences near Edgewood at about 11:30 p.m., said Lt. Ray Ward of the Department of Public Safety.

Ward said the deputies were struck by gunfire as they entered an open door of one of the residences. One deputy returned gunfire, but no one was hit, Ward said.

Bush honors two engineers

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush presented the first Charles Stark Draper Award to two Texas engineers who developed the semiconductor microchip, an invention that "helped America change the world."

Jack S. Kilby and Robert Noyce, working separately in the 1950s, developed the microchip, also known as the integrated circuit.

"Integrated circuits have enabled us to do the unimaginable," Bush said at an awards ceremony Tuesday night at the State Department. "Now, it is unimaginable to believe we could ever live without them.

"The microchip ... helped America change the world."

The integrated circuit incorporates a large number of transistors on a single, tiny piece of silicon.

Kilby is chief technical officer of the Houston Area Research Center; Noyce is president and chief executive officer of Austin's Sematech, a research consortium of high technology companies.

El Paso mayor getting high marks on environment

EL PASO (AP) — The city's environmental problems have been given more urgency during the 10 months Mayor Suzie Azar has been in office and environmentalists hope it's a sign El Paso's pressing pollution problems will be addressed.

The city suffers serious environmental problems with poor air quality blamed largely on emissions and open burning in Ciudad Juarez, across the border in Mexico, illegal dumping and serious water contamination.

"El Paso has the lowest budget for the environment of any city in the Southwest," said political scientist Richard Bath of the University of Texas at El Paso. "You have to have high public officials who are concerned."

Ms. Azar puts air pollution near the top of her list, but said that's just one of several environmental concerns the city finally is being forced to deal with. Most of them are associated with the growth of border industry.

> "You have to have high public officials who are concerned."
> — Richard Bath, UTEP political scientist

As industries expand in Juarez, El Paso will have to be prepared for an influx of hazardous waste returning to the U.S. from American plants in Mexico.

Ms. Azar figures it's time for El Paso to take charge of cleaning up its own waste.

As mayor, she formed the Citizens Advisory Committee on Environmental Issues, and she hails passage of a hazardous materials ordinance that gives the city new power to monitor the storage of dangerous chemicals.

In fact, the citizens' committee actually was created to comply with the city's charter, and work on the hazardous materials ordinance began two years ago, under then-Mayor Jonathan Rogers.

Regardless, environmentalists still are pleased with Ms. Azar's stand.

"She has a conscience about the environment," said Joan Duncan, former president of the Wilderness Coalition. "We're just delighted to have anyone listen."

Bath, who studies the impact of politics on environmental issues, said just focusing public attention on the pollution problem was quite a feat.

And that is the area where Ms. Azar seems to be making her mark. Bath said she's the first mayor in recent memory to set up frequent forums and discussions with Mexican officials to attack the air quality problems from both sides of the border.

Failed business lands county judge in tax trouble

SAN MARCOS (AP) — Hays County Judge Don Rains owes more than $43,000 in delinquent property taxes, penalties and interest — most of it resulting from his ownership of a failed downtown San Marcos business, tax records show.

Both the San Marcos Consolidated Independent School District and the City of San Marcos have suits pending in state District Court seeking payment of taxes owed by Rains Tire and Service Center. Rains bought the business out of bankruptcy in 1982, when he left the Legislature after serving two years.

Rains, 47, seeking re-election to a second term as county judge, told the Austin American Statesman his tax troubles were "terribly embarrassing."

"It's no secret I'm in a financial wreck down there, and there isn't anything I can do about it," he said. "I was telling somebody yesterday that politics and Marine Corps boot camp are the two most humbling experiences anyone can have."

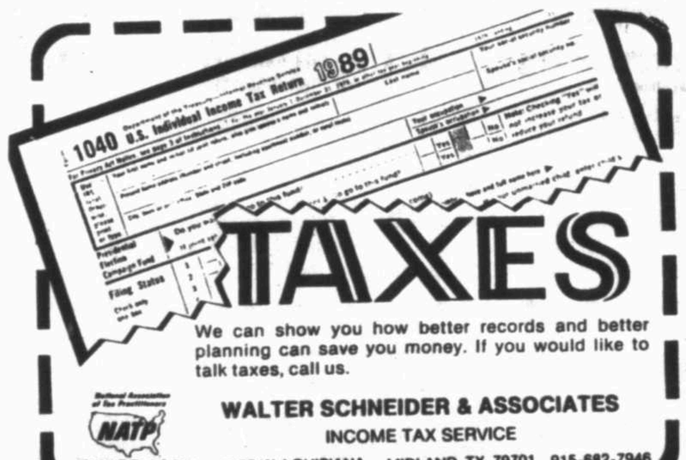

Rains said he sold the business in 1987 and had to take it back a few months later when the new owner couldn't turn a profit. After closing the store in 1989, he leased the building to a Wimberley tire store that closed it Jan. 31.

Rains said the 36,000-square-foot property was posted for foreclosure in December by the bank that is holding his 1982 mortgage, but the foreclosure has been delayed while he tries to renegotiate the loan.

The school district's suit is set for trial March 19 and could lead to a public auction of the property to pay $13,877 in taxes owed for 1985, 1987 and 1988, plus $6,325 in penalties and interest.

The city's lawsuit seeks $6,009 in 1987 and 1988 taxes and $2,967 in penalties and interest.

Rains owes 1989 taxes, interest and penalties of $8,779 to the school district, $3,214 to the city and $2,527 to Hays County. The 1989 taxes were due Feb. 1, but the taxing agencies wait until July 1 to turn the previous year's delinquent accounts over to a lawyer for collection.

We can show you how better records and better planning can save you money. If you would like to talk taxes, call us.

ELLA BARNETT ENDORSES NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

As an independent business woman, I want a Judge who has broad legal experience both in and out of the courtroom.

Nick's background in business and civil law is second to none. He will reduce the backlog of civil cases and save the courts and the litigants time and money.

The Midland City Council appointed Nick to head the Midland Crime Prevention Commission. While serving on that board, Nick worked out a plan to reduce crime. Our police tell us that 90% of crime in Midland is drug related. Nick plans to test probated criminals for drug use. If they stop using drugs, they stop robbing our homes. It's that simple.

Nick knows the law, but he also knows crime. He has the leadership that will make a great judge for Midland.

Field trip tantalizes taste buds

By JUDIE GLAVE
Associated Press

NEW YORK — For most kids, a school field trip means walking around museums looking at old paintings or the bones of long-departed creatures. Not for John Sullivan's fourth-grade class.

They get to cook.

"Oh, yuck. I think I squeezed it too hard," said Eric Mattes as a goopy glob of egg dripped down his hand.

The 9-year-old had never separated eggs before, but then, that's what the trip was all about.

"It's a real world lesson, I think," said Sullivan, who brought 18 fourth-graders from the Dalton School, a private school in Manhattan, to the expensive la Cite restaurant in Rockefeller Center for a Monday morning outing.

"They get to find out how things work in a restaurant in a major city," said Sullivan, adding, "It's the most exciting field trip I've ever been on."

The trip was courtesy of la Cite's owner, Alan Stillman, who is known to the Dalton school kids simply as Michael's dad.

Michael appeared delighted to share his kitchen expertise with his schoolmates and joined them in taking turns learning how to bread, fry and grill foods, and, more important to this crowd, whip up a little dessert.

The egg separating proved a tad tricky. Most of the kids ended up crushing the egg entirely or dumping the yolk in with what was supposed to be pristine egg whites.

"Now you've got to go fish," pastry chef Julie Marx, told one after another, showing them how to dip an egg shell into the blender to scoop up the unwanted yellow yolk.

She explained that it was important to have "clean whites" in order to make a perfect meringue and then switched the children's mixture with one of her own as they stood chattering, unaware the change was made.

"Is this high in cholesterol?" "How come it's OK to eat this when it's cooked and not now?" the kids fired at Marx as she whipped the egg white and sugar mixture into a fluffy white mound.

No one asked about calories.

Actually, Jonathan Block, 9, considers himself a fair-to-middling dessert maker. "I make stuff a lot," he said licking meringue from his fingers. "My favorite dessert is ice cream, bananas, chocolate sauce, cake, cookies and brownies" — together.

Meanwhile, at the other end of the kitchen, others were busy dipping, dredging and grilling.

The end result was a sumptuous repast of steak frites, emince de volaille friture and floating island for dessert.

Impressed? Well, don't be. Translated that's steak and fries, fried chicken strips and caramel-topped meringue; a simple fare that would cost a la Cite diner about $28.50, including a salad and soft drink.

The best part of the trip?

Eating, of course.

"We never get anything like this at school," said Betsy Mallow, 9.

Asked what everyone else at the Dalton School would be eating for lunch, Betsy and her friends replied in unison: "Slop."

Turkey recipe contest announced

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Turkey Federation is sponsoring a Turkey Lover's Recipe contest for young chefs between the ages 12 to 18. Contest deadline is April 15. The recipe must use at least 1 pound of fresh or fully-cooked turkey and must make four to eight servings.

Each recipe must be accompanied by two essays, each no more than 200 words in length. One essay must describe the nutritional quality of the recipe; the other must describe the proper food handling techniques to use when preparing and storing the recipe.

Send entries to: Turkey Lovers' Recipe Contest, National Turkey Federation, 11319 Sunset Hills Road, Reston, Va. 22090-5205. Judging will be based on taste, appearance, appeal and simplicity of the recipe, and on the content of the two essays. The grand-prize winner will receive $1,000 and an expense-paid, 2-day trip to Washington, D.C., accompanied by a parent or guardian.

Students try reading, 'riting, ravioli

Copley News Service

If your image of home economics is giggling girls slapping together simple baking-powder biscuits, your perception hasn't kept up with the reality in classrooms these days.

Instead, the boys sometimes outnumber the girls, and they are making sophisticated recipes like crab-stuffed ravioli with homemade dough and fresh herbs from the school garden.

In 20 years, you've come a long way, baby. But the problem is, not everybody knows that.

Education officials and home ec teachers are out to call attention to the changes. They say: Don't underestimate kids in the kitchen.

"We don't insult their intelligence," said foods instructor Lynn Alley, who teaches home economics classes at Diegueno Junior High School in Encinitas, Calif.

It was Alley who introduced her students to homemade ravioli — made by the students from scratch, which is more advanced than what most home cooks do.

"It was a recipe where we could use the fresh herbs we grow on the school grounds," said Alley.

In some of Alley's classes, boys outnumber girls.

"They're not concerned with image because in their lifetime they have seen their fathers happily cooking in the kitchen and have seen men cooking on television," said Alley.

"They can't remember a time when it was any different."

"I assume that they (her students) can do anything. They can work their way through complicated recipes if they are patiently taught."

To prepare all filling recipes:

Mix all ingredients for individual filling recipes. Using a food processor fitted with steel blade, add filling ingredients and pulse on and off until ingredients are just mixed and minced, but not pureed. Set aside and refrigerate until ready to make ravioli.

It is difficult to determine exact portions in recipes for fresh pasta as weather and egg size can make a difference. This recipe is meant as a guide. Add more or less flour to make a firm yet pliable dough. The class used a food processor instead of mixing by hand.

Beth Bergen, a seventh-grader, offers a plate of ravioli with fresh tomato sauce. The ravioli is a home economics project typical of the sophisticated cooking classes of the 90s.

CRAB FILLING

½ pound of crab, shelled and cooked, or canned drained crab meat
3 shallots, minced
½ cup ricotta cheese
1 teaspoon fresh tarragon, minced
1 to 2 tablespoons sour cream

CHEESE FILLING

¼ cup parsley, finely chopped
1½ cups ricotta cheese
1 cup Parmesan cheese, grated
1 egg
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
2 tablespoons fresh marjoram, chopped (optional)
½ tablespoon fresh chives, chopped

EGG PASTA DOUGH

2 cups all-purpose, unbleached flour
3 extra-large eggs

Food Processor Method: Put flour in bowl fitted with steel blade. Beat eggs together separately before adding them to flour. Do not add all the eggs at once because — depending on humidity — not all egg mixture may be needed.

Pulse machine until eggs and flour come together in mixture that resembles coffee bean-sized pellets.

Turn dough mixture out onto board and firmly knead it together into stiff dough. Before rolling dough into pasta sheets, allow it to rest, covered with kitchen towel, for at least 15 minutes. Follow directions with pasta machine for machine-rolled dough.

Making the ravioli: When dough has rested and you are ready to make ravioli, have at hand a spray bottle of water or a bowl of water and a pastry brush, as well as a ravioli cutter.

Roll pasta to thinnest setting on your machine and cut final pieces into lengths that are easy to handle, about 12 to 18 inches long.

Lightly dust each strip of pasta with flour and set strips on top of one another. Work with 1 strip at a time and cover others with kitchen towel.

Lay pasta on lightly floured surface, fold lengthwise to make a line, then open it up. Using line as a guide, place rounded tablespoons of desired filling just below line, leaving at least 2 inches between each spoonful. Spray fine mist over pasta, or paint strip of water around edges and between each spoonful of filling. Roll top half of pasta over filling. Press between each ravioli to form seal, forcing out air as you do so; then press around bottom and sides of strip.

Use ravioli cutter to finally seal and separate each ravioli; then set finished squares onto floured baking sheet. If they are not to be cooked right away, cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate until needed. If filling is not too wet, they should keep well this way for several hours. In any case, let ravioli rest 5 minutes before cooking.

When you are ready to cook ravioli, bring large pot of water to boil and, while it is heating, make sauce. Salt pasta water and add ravioli. Cook them at a gentle boil until they are done, about 2 to 4 minutes (sample a corner of one); then scoop them out and drain.

Serve with sauce and, if desired, additional cheese.

Nutritional ingredients researched

By MOLLY O'NEILL
N.Y. Times News Service

Like so many Alices in Wonderland, grocery shoppers now wander through a maze of products that seem to sing out: "Eat me. You'll feel better."

They buy a high-fiber this, an omega-3 that. They eat to heal. And scientists are scrambling to isolate additional components of common foods that can prevent or cure disease. Their findings will be big business.

Four years ago, Paul Stitt, a biochemist who owns Natural Ovens in Manitowac, Wis., began baking bread, cookies and cereal with flaxseed oil, which is rich in omega-3 fatty acids.

Since then, a study by Dr. Lilian Thompson of the University of Toronto found that in addition to its cholesterol-lowering ability, flaxseed oil caused a 50 percent reduction in pre-cancer cells in laboratory animals. Business at Natural Ovens has climbed 130 percent.

And, Stitt said, General Mills and Kellogg Co. have ordered flaxseed oil from him (he holds the patent for stabilizing the oil). The companies would neither confirm nor deny the purchases.

Instead of selling food based on what it doesn't do, like raising blood pressure or cholesterol levels, big food companies are increasingly developing and marketing products with what advertisers call "pro-active" health claims, extolling specific health enhancements.

"Pro-active health claims are the hottest food-selling tool today," said Martin Friedman, the editor of Gorman's New Product News, a trade publication.

"The fantasy is a pro-active, grab-it, zap-it, gulp-it health product. The big companies are looking at everything from folkloric food cures to ancient Chinese botanicals."

WHILE THE major food manufacturers are studying time-honored holistic cures with an eye toward a new class of processed food, researchers are trying to keep science ahead of food technology and marketing claims.

The National Cancer Institute has recently developed a $20.5 million program to study phyto-chemicals, minute compounds that are linked to cancer prevention and are found in some common foods.

In the next year, the institute will try to identify the specific cancer-fighting compounds in flax, members of the garlic family, citrus fruits, members of the parsley family and licorice root extract, all of which are thought to inhibit cancer.

Over the next five years, Dr. Herbert Pierson, a toxicologist who is directing the cancer institute's program, plans sequential laboratory and clinical research into the preventive potential of 20 other foods and to develop food products containing concentrations of phyto-chemicals.

In nature, the levels of phyto-chemical compounds vary widely from plant to plant. They can even be toxic. In science, "we can isolate and extract and regulate the beneficial compounds and formulate 'designer food' products that could fight disease," Pierson said.

OTHER SCIENTISTS warn that several generations of research will be needed to determine the full impact of phyto-chemicals, but they agree, as Pierson put it, "The future is prevention." And food products have a starring role.

"It's more cost-effective than looking for new drugs," said Pierson, who added that delays in the approval of new drugs and the high number of drugs that fail the screening process have forced science and the government to "look at food as a preventive medicine of the future."

Chris Lecos, a Food and Drug Administration spokesman, concurred. "There is a growing evidence that certain foods fight disease," he said. "We can no longer discourage the use of this information in labeling. We are looking at ways to regulate it."

Currently, health claims are used in labeling, but the FDA plans to have specific regulations governing that use written by 1991.

Meanwhile, Pierson is studying folkloric cures and cultural eating customs, which provide "thousands of years worth of epidemiological evidence of the healing properties of some foods." he said.

These are among the findings that prompted his interest:

- Preliminary studies by Danish researchers showed a low incidence of heart disease among Eskimos, and this prompted a University of Chicago study that in 1974 isolated the omega-3 fatty acids in fish, an Eskimo mainstay. Voila! Foods rich in the compound have a new selling angle.
- Observing a Polish folk cure, Dr. Victor Gurewich, a cardiologist at Tufts University, adminstered onions to 20 patients in 1982 and found that the onions triggered a positive shift in cholesterol levels.
- Intrigued by the low incidence of respiratory trouble in Los Angeles among Mexicans who smoke, Dr. Irwin Ziment, a professor at the University of California School of Medicine, has, over the past 10 years, begun to prescribe chilies as pulmonary strengtheners.

DR. JAMES Duke, an economic botanist for the Department of Agriculture who is assisting the National Cancer Institute in its phyto-chemical research, began to study the link between garlic and cancer after noting the amounts of garlic eaten in certain provinces of China and the low incidence of cancer there.

Questionnaire analyzes nutritional habits

NEW YORK (AP) — School of Nutrition at Tufts University is offering a questionnaire to help consumers learn more about nutrition. Until March 15, consumers can call toll-free, 1-800-PROMISE, to ask for the questionnaire, or write to: PROMISE Get Heart Smart Program, Box 9554, Clinton, Iowa 52736, before April 30.

After returning the questionnaire in a pre-addressed envelope, consumers will receive a personalized lifestyle analysis, based on controllable factors such as smoking, exercise and diet.

NEW YORK (AP) — Dietary guidelines developed by the federal government say Americans should avoid too much fat, saturated fat and cholesterol in their diets.

The "Eat Well-Be Well" cookbook (Simon & Schuster, $8.95), based on the "Eat Well-Be Well" television series shown on the Public Broadcasting System, features more than 100 recipes based on these dietary guidelines, which also include: eating a variety of foods; maintaining desirable weight; eating foods with adequate starch and fiber; avoiding too much sugar; avoiding too much sodium; and, if you drink alcoholic beverages, doing so in moderation.

To order a copy of the "Eat Well-Be Well" cookbook, send your name, address, zip code and $8.95 plus $1.50 for postage and handling to: Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., Health and Safety Education Division, One Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10010.

STUFFED CELERY

1 cup low-fat cottage cheese
1 tablespoon chopped green onion (about 1 small)
1½ teaspoons Dijon-style mustard
1 small garlic clove, minced
4 celery ribs, each cut into four 2-inch pieces
Paprika

In a small bowl, mix cottage cheese, onion, mustard and garlic. Fill each celery piece with about 1 tablespoon of the mixture. Sprinkle with paprika. Makes 4 servings.

Nutritional information per serving: 50 cal., 7 g pro., 1 g fat, 4 g carb., 2 mg chol., 335 mg sodium.

YOGURT-TOPPED POTATOES

4 small potatoes (about 1¼ pounds)
⅓ cup low-fat plain yogurt
1 ounce Cheddar cheese, shredded (about ¼ cup)
1 teaspoon chopped chives

Preheat oven to 450 degrees. Wash and dry potatoes, pierce with a fork. Bake on oven rack about 45 minutes or until fork tender. Cut each potato in half lengthwise without cutting all the way through the bottom. Top each with 2 tablespoons yogurt, 1 tablespoon cheese and ¼ teaspoon chives. Makes 4 servings.

Nutritional information per serving: 150 cal., 6 g pro., 3 g fat, 27 g carb., 10 mg chol., 70 mg sodium.

CHOCOLATE MOCHA CAKE WITH RASPBERRY SAUCE

CAKE:
2 cups sifted all-purpose flour
1⅓ cups granulated sugar
⅓ cup unsweetened natural cocoa powder
2 teaspoons baking soda
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup low-fat buttermilk
⅔ cup oil
2 teaspoons vanilla extract
1 cup strong hot coffee
Confectioners' sugar (optional)
SAUCE:
2 12-ounce packages unsweetened frozen raspberries, defrosted and undrained (about 3 cups)
⅓ to ¼ cup superfine sugar
1 to 2 tablespoons lemon juice, or to taste

Heat oven to 350 degrees. Grease and flour a 9-cup tube pan or a 13x9x2-inch baking pan.

In large bowl, combine flour, sugar, cocoa, baking soda, baking powder and salt. Make well in center; using spoon, stir in buttermilk, oil and vanilla. Stir in hot coffee.

Pour batter into prepared pan.

Bake for 60 to 70 minutes, until toothpick inserted in center comes out clean. Cool on wire rack 15-20 minutes; invert onto rack and cool completely. Dust with confectioners' sugar shaken through a wire strainer, if desired, and serve with raspberry sauce.

To make sauce, puree raspberries with juice in food processor or blender. Pour puree into wire strainer over medium bowl. Using wooden spoon, rub through strainer to remove seeds; discard solids in strainer. Stir in sugar and lemon juice. Refrigerate until ready to serve.

DEAR ABBY

Tall woman's view of short men falls wide of mark

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: "Tall in California" insisted in her letter that short men had a tendency to come on too strong in order to compensate for their shortness.

Van Buren

I was recently watching the TV special "Gandhi," which left me quite puzzled. Why was this short guy doing all these wonderful things for humanity?

Then I recalled the letter from "Tall in California," and it all became crystal clear to me! Gandhi was overcompensating out of frustration from being unable to date tall California girls.

And then there was Einstein, of course! I had always wondered why this little man of underaverage height bothered to completely revolutionize modern scientific thought with his theory of relativity. It should have been done by someone big and tall — like John Wayne. What a tragedy that we can no longer reach Gandhi and Einstein with this deep new understanding of human behavior and relieve them of their personality problems.

On the other hand, what wonderful news to find that if short men behaved just right, they may earn the privilege of dating tall girls. I'm sure Einstein and Gandhi, not to mention Picasso and Freud, would be drooling at the prospect of dating girls taller than themselves.

Really, if shallowness has any relation to height, how tall is "Tall in California"? — RONALD ANTHONY CROSS, SANTA MONICA

DEAR RONALD: She didn't say, but if "Tall" reads this, it will probably cut her down to size.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 92-year-old veteran of three wars: World War I, World War II and the Korean War. The U.S. Army recently mailed to me 13 medals, including the Bronze Star.

I have no heirs who would be interested in having these medals, so if you will suggest a manner of disposal, I would very much appreciate hearing from you. — LT. COL. THOMAS P. DICKINSON, ARMY RESERVE, GEORGETOWN, OHIO

DEAR COL. DICKINSON: I went right to the top for a solution to your unique problem and consulted Gen. R.G. Stilwell, whom I recently met through my involvement with the Korean War veterans.

Gen. Stilwell said: "I can attest that only a handful of Americans have served in all three wars, and those who are still living are very few indeed. Thus Col. Dickinson is a genuine American hero! In reviewing his service record, I learned that Col. Dickinson is, in fact, due two more medals — for a total of 15!

"If, as he says, his relatives are not interested in his medals, I am sure the people of Georgetown, Ohio, would be proud to acquire them. Although he may be too modest to propose it, those medals should be prominently displayed in his hometown to inform present and future citizens of Col. Dickinson's patriotism."

CONFIDENTIAL TO "RICHARD": Take it from Benjamin Franklin, who appropriately enough wrote in "Poor Richard's Almanack":

"Where there is marriage without love, there will be love without marriage."

DEAR ABBY: In my hometown, Chillicothe, Ohio, we were on a party-line telephone system (usually four families to a line) years ago. Are there places in the United States (or Canada) where such systems still exist?

One lady on our line was the wife of a World War II soldier, and she played around quite a bit with the 4-Fers she worked with at the shoe factory, if you catch my drift. I caught my straitlaced, righteous mother eavesdropping on this lady's conversations more than once — then repeating the conversation verbatim to the ladies at church. I wasn't adverse to listening in myself, being all of 8 or 9 years old.

Another subscriber on our line owned a mortuary. He got some strange and sad calls at all hours of the night. Those calls should have been private, but weren't. We had a large family, and somebody was always listening in.

Perhaps some of your readers who were on a party line still remember some of the things they heard. — CAROL LAW, LEUCADIA, CALIF.

DEAR CAROL: If anybody reading this has ever heard anything on a party line worth repeating, I'm sure we'll hear about it. (City folks have probably never heard of a party line.)

Borscht warms waning winter

Traditional Russian soup hot, hearty

By CAROL CUTLER
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

Speak of weather these days and you speak of treachery. Springlike one day, blustery the next, snowstorms in between. These are weeks to plod through.

It is just the time of year when a steaming, warming bowl of soup is the most soothing eating imaginable. In fact, some organization or other declared February as Soup Month. Well, it's as good a month as any. It's also a great month to have a party featuring soup.

Main-course soups make entertaining a snap. The biggest point in their favor is that they are best if done in advance — slowly, leisurely, at your total convenience. You even can cook soups in steps — the broth one day, adding vegetables or meats the next, then tossing in some last-minute garnishes or fish just before serving. Each chilling and reheating only helps intensify the flavors.

These thick broths also are inexpensive fare for entertaining. In fact, there is an old saying, "The poorer the country, the better the soups."

As Anne Volokh states in her excellent book, "The Art of Russian Cuisine" (Macmillan), "The least expensive and the most nourishing food, for centuries soups served Russian peasants as one-course dinner meals. Necessity is the mother of invention. With no chicken in each pot, but with a variety of vegetables, grains and occasional chunk of meat or fish — and with a lot of ingenuity — Russian cuisine has produced a number of superb soups."

WITH RUSSIA so much in the news these days, it seems especially appropriate to plan a soup party with a Slavic twist. Serve the preeminent Russian soup — borscht.

Volokh points out that borscht isn't really Russian, but a Ukrainian specialty. Whatever its accent, it's a great soup.

Giving the table a Russian look is fairly easy. An embroidered cloth is the best background, but lacking that, any patterned cloth will do. One can even use a length of patterned fabric tossed over a white tablecloth. Make the table even more colorful by using different colored napkins.

Many novelty stores sell the charming wooden Russian dolls. Usually they are in a series, one inside the other, diminishing from the largest, at about 6 inches, down to the baby, measuring just about an inch. The whole set can be paraded down the center of the table.

If the dolls, or similar Russian toys, aren't available, go with Mother Nature. Since beets are a major ingredient in borscht, buy bunches of them and arrange them in baskets as a centerpiece. Spray the greens with water just before placing the basket on the table. This will give them a fresher look and add a little glisten to the table.

Instead of a first course, serve zakuski with aperitifs. For special occasions, these Russian hors d'oeuvres are generally laid out in lavish array. They can range from luxurious caviar to humble sardines. An easy assortment to put together can all be bought at any well-stocked supermarket.

BE SURE to include different marinated herrings (wine, mustard and pickled); sardines, both plain and in mustard sauce; slices of smoked beef tongue or smoked pork and mustard; and deviled eggs.

Buy chopped liver from a good delicatessen, then dress it up by making a smooth mound of it on a plate and sprinkling with chopped hard-boiled egg.

Pickles are a must. That inclusion stems from the fact that Russians generally drink vodka with zakuski and like to nibble pickles between sips.

After the borscht, serve a little cheese. Choose any firm cheese that most closely resembles those available in the Soviet Union. Cheddar is fine, but instead of serving it with fancy crackers, use black bread and mustard.

Russians love ice cream, no matter how low the thermometer. That solves dessert. The very first flavored ice cream sold in the Soviet Union was vanilla ice cream with raisins. Go a step further and soak the raisins in rum or brandy before stirring into the ice cream.

Traditionally, borscht simmers a long time. In this version, ready to put on the table in 15 minutes, stronger sausage is substituted for beef. But any leftover cooked beef can be added.

SUPER-QUICK BORSCHT

6 cups beef broth
½ pound sausage, Polish kielbasa or similar, cut into ¼-inch slices
1 small bay leaf
Pinch thyme
1 (½-pound) can sliced beets, drained and cut into strips
Pepper
½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 tablespoon vinegar
Sour cream

Yields 6 servings.

Pour beef broth into pot and bring to slow simmer. Add sliced sausage, bay leaf and thyme. Cover and simmer 10 minutes.

With skimmer, remove sausage slices to soup tureen or to individual bowls. Add beets, pepper and Worcestershire sauce to soup. Cover and simmer 5 minutes. Add vinegar, give one boil and remove from heat.

Ladle borscht over sausage and drop a tablespoon of sour cream on top.

Children taught about of junk food

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. (AP) — Stumped for a way to beat your child's "junk food" habits? Parents can fight back.

Kay Stanfill, adjunct assistant professor of clinical dietetics, and Rachel Barkley, an assistant professor, University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center, offer the following suggestions to help parents steer their children toward good eating habits:

■ Talk with your child about the foods that go into the lunch box. Talk about foods that are nutritious and those that are not. Point out these foods in the grocery store.

■ Let children help in the preparation of lunch-box foods. Children are more likely to eat what they have helped to prepare.

■ Encourage children to try whole-grain and multi-grain breads for sandwiches, or vary the sandwich by using hot-dog buns, English muffins, bagels and pita bread made from whole grains.

■ Let children select vegetables, fruits and side dishes from the salad bar in the grocery store. Package them for the lunch box. Dried and canned fruits also are convenient and healthy choices.

■ Cookies can be a healthy choice if they contain wholesome ingredients. Choose fig bars, oatmeal cookies and graham crackers. Encourage older children to make their own cookies and cakes, using healthy ingredients, and freeze them in lunch-sized portions.

■ Use cheerful props to make lunches interesting. Add colorful napkins, a variety of containers or different types of straws. Avoid the same old lunch box every day.

■ Serve smaller portions. Provide a variety of foods in small portions, rather than large portions of one or two items. This helps children learn moderation and teaches them to consume a wide variety of foods.

■ Add new nutritious items to sandwich fillings that your children already like. You can add raisins, shredded carrots, crushed pineapple, chopped pear or apple, banana slices, sunflower seeds, chopped dates or celery to peanut butter or tuna salad. Add chopped celery and chopped or diced low-fat ham to light cream cheese filling.

Crunchy stir-fry takes on German twist

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Celery's fresh taste and built-in crunch make it a natural for stir-fry dishes. Combined here with low-fat pork and apples, and given a German twist with caraway seed, it makes a delicious main dish.

According to the folks who know celery best — the growers — the entire celery plant is called a stalk and is made up of individual ribs. One rib contains 9 calories and makes about ½ cup of diced celery. Celery contains 52 milligrams of sodium per ½ cup — more than other vegetables — but that's not enough to concern anyone whose diet is not strictly restricted in sodium.

GERMAN PORK AND CELERY STIR-FRY

½ cup water
1 teaspoon chicken bouillon granules
2 teaspoons cornstarch
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
2 cups sliced celery
1 cup sliced sweet red pepper
1 cup sliced onion
12 ounces pork tenderloin or boneless pork, cut into ½-inch cubes
2 tablespoons white-wine Worcestershire sauce
2 teaspoons caraway seed
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 cups apples cored and cut into ½-inch chunks

In a small bowl combine water, chicken bouillon granules and cornstarch until smooth; set aside.

In a wok or large skillet heat 1 tablespoon oil until hot. Add celery, sweet red pepper and onion; cook and stir 4 minutes or until vegetables are nearly crisp-tender. Remove vegetables; keep warm. Add remaining oil.

Add pork; cook and stir about 3 minutes or until pork is no longer pink.

Stir in reserved cornstarch mixture, Worcestershire sauce, caraway seed, salt and pepper; bring mixture to boiling.

Stir in apples and vegetables. Cook and stir until thickened and bubbly; cook and stir 2 minutes more.

Serve over hot cooked noodles, if desired. Makes 4 servings.

Nudity as selling tool is too common anymore

By ERMA BOMBECK

I received a catalog from a spa the other day with a buck-naked woman on the cover that made my National Geographic look like a coloring book for preschoolers.

Bombeck

I hadn't a clue as to what she was selling, but it got my attention. (Only because she weighed in at my birth weight: 93 pounds.) As I hurriedly pasted an address label over her, it occurred to me that I am receiving in the mail what librarians used to keep under the counter and wouldn't let you see unless you had a note from your mother.

Since I am on the international catalog mailing list, I must receive 12 or 15 catalogs a week. An increasing number of them are a staple away from a centerfold.

For the last several years, nudity has been creeping onto the American scene: some of it on television, most of it legitimized by advertising. It was subtle at first — a bare arm here or a leg there selling perfume. It looked a little erotic, but you were afraid to point this out to anyone for fear it was a Rorschach test that would label you a pervert.

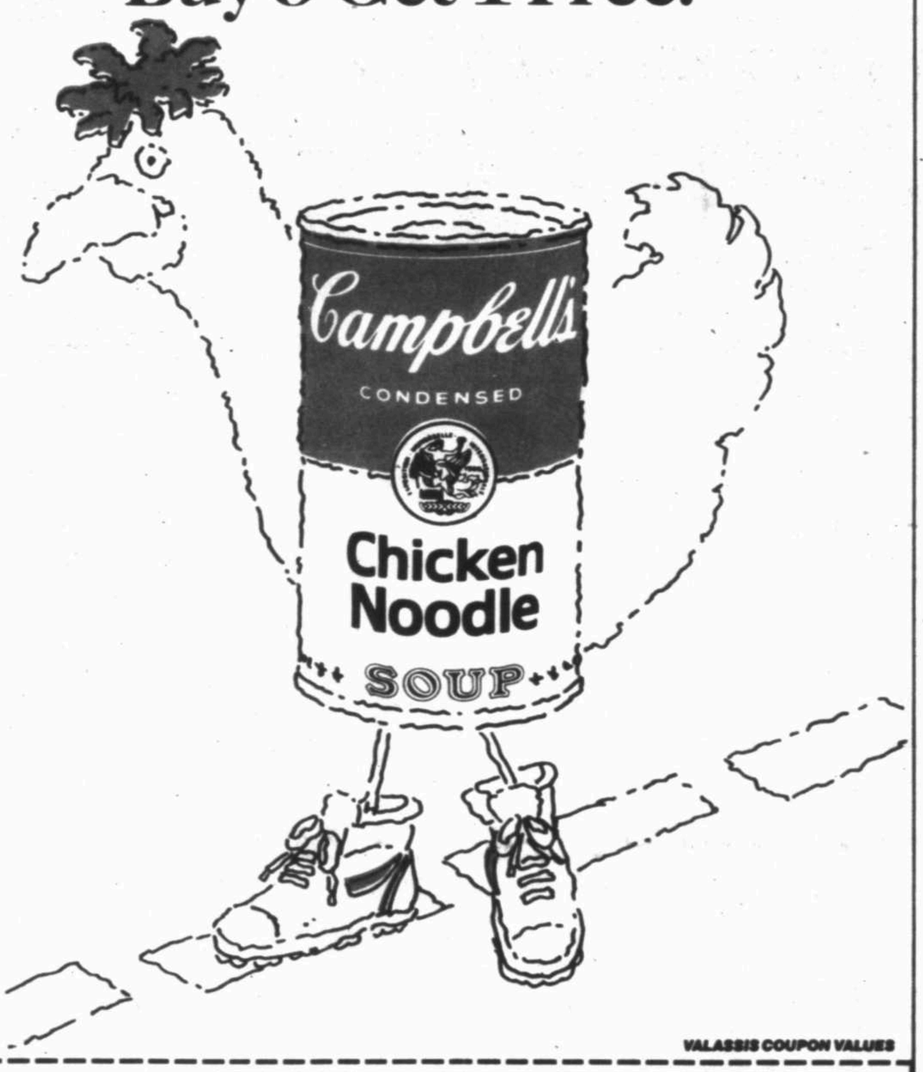

Shows like "Dynasty" had Alexis and Krystal flipping around all day in trashy lingerie that Donna Reed wouldn't have worn under a coat. Underwear went public. In ads, bras no longer were draped on plastic chests but on real women. The trend even extended to men. We went from a group of men dressed up like fruit to Jim Palmer, who went from pitcher to pitchman. This gave rise to the Victoria's Secret catalog of lingerie featuring men and women in such suggestive poses I expect any day to see a disclaimer, "Do not try this in your home."

Generally, the public is beginning to rebel against all this flesh. When nine women's magazines recently carried a nude, oiled woman selling a moisturizing lotion, the complaints rolled in.

I don't feel shock or titillation. I've diapered bigger bodies than that. It's just I don't know where the logic is behind the hype. Do advertisers honestly think women are naive enough to believe that a $15.95 tube of creme will put those kind of curves back in our highway or bring smoothness to 50 years of bad road? I don't even think about the creme. All I think about when I see this nude creature is: "What's her mother going to say when she sees this? How many photographers does it take to photograph a nude girl? Is she going to have a sand rash? Will my mailman put off his retirement again this year?" That's what inquiring minds want to know.

Bulldogs' post-season dreams fizzle

George Wolf/Reporter Telegram

Midland High's Earl McDonald, left, and Michael Wright anxiously await a fourth-quarter Bulldog comeback that never materialized Tuesday night in Big Spring.

San Angelo continues mastery over MHS with 96-89 win

By BILL PRICE
Sports Writer

BIG SPRING — Despite scoring 89 points, Midland High saw its basketball season come to an end as San Angelo sizzled the cords by shooting better than 50 percent from the field in a 96-89 District 4-5A second place playoff at Big Spring High School.

With the win, the 'Cats, now 19-13, earned the No. 2 playoff seed from 4-5A and the right to face District 3-5A champion Plainview at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Snyder. For MHS, the season ended with the Bulldogs posting a 21-12 overall record after tying San Angelo for second place in 4-5A with a 9-3 loop mark.

Even though San Angelo shot 39-of-68 from the field, the 'Dogs made a game of it to the end by making the Bobcats pay for their propensity for fouling. The 'Cats amassed 25 personal fouls and put MHS on the free throw line 40 times. The 'Dogs converted 30 of those free throws, as Rodrick Hickey made 14 of his 16 free tosses and was the game's high scorer with 32 points.

After defeating MHS twice in regular season play, San Angelo coach Boyce Paxton said he was just happy to get out of the game alive.

"It's tough to beat anybody three times and Midland has got a good team. Coming in here I was scared to death," Paxton said. "But I also had a lot of confidence in our kids. One of them always stepped up and made a basket when we really needed it."

The one Bobcat who took that step forward more than any other San Angelo player was guard Dewayne Lofton, who burned MHS for 30 points, 14 of which came in a frenetic third quarter.

After trailing 23-13 following the first period, the 'Dogs were behind by as may as 15 points before launching their comeback attempt. Hickey and post Johnny Mackey (seven second-quarter points) teamed inside and Scott Melzer hit four charity shots, as MHS brought the difference under 10 points at the half, 50-41.

Then in the third period, the 'Dogs almost took control of the game. Keith Gilbreath sank a pair of three-pointers on his way to eight points in the quarter, and the 'Dogs hit 9-of-11 from the line to come within two points (66-64) with 1:44 left in the quarter.

The Bobcats, however, were able to pull away again and were on top 76-68 with 20 seconds to go in the third, when a technical foul was assessed to MHS. When Bulldog Eric Jonhson entered the game, wearing a uniform number not on the scorekeeper's book, the 'Dogs earned an automatic "T".

Lofton hit both free throws on the technical, and with the ensuing possession, the 'Cats scored on a Chris Cardenas bucket to lead 78-68 going into the last quarter.

Even though MHS outscored San Angelo by three points in the fourth, the margin was too much to overcome as the 'Dogs threw up eight desperate three-point attempts in the last minute of the game.

Behind Lofton in scoring for the 'Cats were guard Chris Cardenas with 18 points, including two treys, Ty Brown with 14 and Joe Lavender with 10. Other Bulldogs in double figures were Melzer with 14 points, and Gilbreath and Albert Ray with 10 apiece.

"We just had exceptional guard play most of the night.. Lofton and Cardenas both had great games," Paxton said. "We made a few dumb fouls, but a lot of them were from just being aggressive on the boards."

"I guess the technical made a little difference. The scorekeeper got the lineups from San Angelo's bookkeeper. We had the right number in our book," said Bulldog coach Jack Stephenson. "But the kids played hard. I'm just not sure anybody, at least anybody in our district, could have beaten San Angelo tonight.

"The worst part of their game is defense and everybody knows that, but they did some things offensively as well as I've ever seen them do. They just shot the eyes out of it. I know one thing, if they play that well against Plainview, they don't have much to worry about.

Monterey girls blast El Paso Hanks

Lewisville, Lady Plainsmen meet at Chap Center Friday

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Editor

Chaparral Center proved to be kind to the favorites Tuesday night in an area girls triple-header playoff slate as Lubbock Monterey, Amarillo Tascosa and Borden County walked to easy victories.

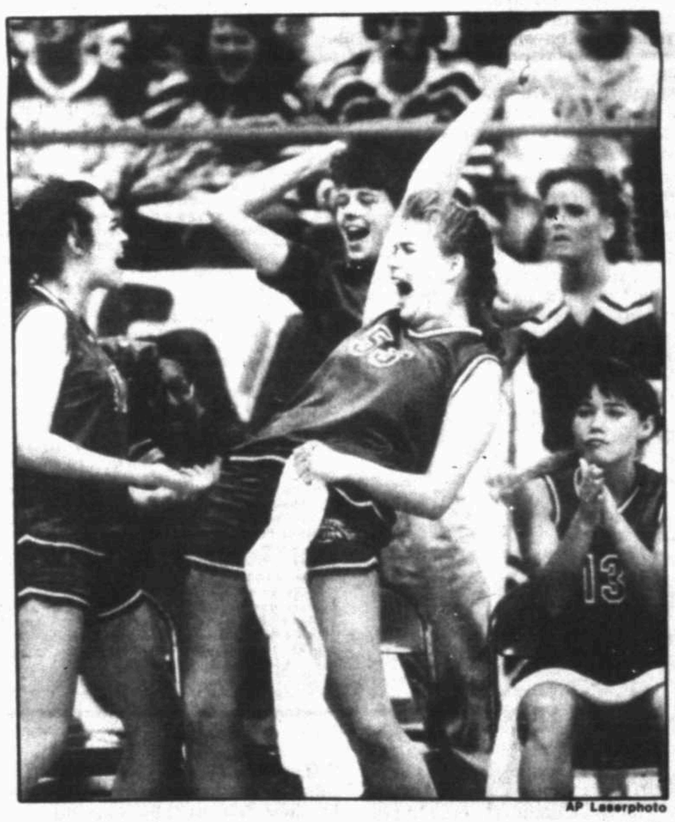

Monterey, running its gaudy record to 30-1, belted El Paso Hanks by a 67-45 margin while Tascosa, now 20-12 on the year, blasted El Paso Del Valle 83-45 in two Class 5A area games. That puts those two winners in Friday's Region I tournament, which will be held again at Chaparral Center.

Borden County, now 25-3, ran past Marathon 62-30 as the Coyotes won its sixth area title in 10 years and second consecutive area crown in the Chap with a similar victory over Marathon a year ago. The Lady Coyotes advance to the Class A Region I tournament in Levelland Friday where they have been beaten all five times in the first round of play.

Midland's Region I field was completed Tuesday as Mansfield beat Denton 66-35 and Lewisville beat Arlington Sam Houston 68-50 in two other area games. Mansfield, 25-5 on the season, will meet Tascosa at 6 p.m. Friday while Monterey will test powerful 29-2 Lewisville at 7:45 p.m. The two winners will play at 11 a.m. Saturday for a Final Four berth to the state tournament in Austin.

The Monterey-Lewisville match should be a dandy. Monterey's only loss is to 4A power Levelland while Lewisville has lost only twice, both times to Duncanville, which is No. 1 in the state

Pantherette record now one to beat

Associated Press

RICHARDSON — Coach Sandra Meadows is thrilled that her Duncanville Pantherettes set a state schoolgirl basketball record with their 93rd consecutive victory — but she sure is glad it's over.

"I'm relieved. It's been a real pressure situation for the kids, and I know it has been for me," Meadows said after the Pantherettes' historic 54-43 victory Tuesday night over North Mesquite in a Class 5A playoff game.

That erased Waco Midway's record of 92 consecutive victories, set in 1974-77.

"I didn't really think about it that much until it got within our grasp," Meadows said. "I hope it's going to give us the momentum to advance the rest of the way."

Senior forward Alison Muldrew led Duncanville with a game-high 22 points, including a pair of 3-pointers in the second half that held off rallies by the Lady Stallions.

"It feels great," Muldrew said. "But now we can go about our business, and shoot for the state championship."

The Pantherettes (33-0) are ranked No. 1 by the Texas Association of Basketball Coaches and have won two consecutive Class 5A titles. Duncanville has won 25 consecutive district titles, 22 of them under Meadows.

North Mesquite played the Pantherettes close throughout much of the first half, and led 11-10 after one quarter. The teams were tied 18-18 midway through the second period, but Duncanville went on a 9-1 run to take a 27-19 halftime lead.

Duncanville led by as much as 18 points, at 49-31, in the second half, and was never seriously threatened the rest of the way.

"I thought we did the best we could under the circumstances," said North Mesquite coach Donna Capps. "Duncanville has the control. They're not ever going to beat themselves."

Midland High defeats Abilene

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

All season long, the rap against the Midland High soccer team has been the Bulldogs' inability to get the ball in the net.

MHS put that rap to rest Tuesday in a 3-0 whitewash of Abilene High at Midland Freshman field that allowed the Bulldogs to move into a second-place tie with the War Eagles in District 3.

In other District 3 action Tuesday, San Angelo maintained its lock on first place by nipping Odessa Permian 4-3, while Abilene Cooper all but knocked Midland Lee out of the title chase with a 2-1 win in Abilene.

Midland High goes into Saturday's match with Midland Lee with a 4-2 district mark, while Abilene High is 3-1-2 after Tuesday's loss. The teams have the same winning percentage according to District 3 rules. Percentages are figured by giving one-half point into the win and loss column.

San Angelo continues to fly high with a 5-0-1 district mark after the first half of loop play.

MHS got the only goal it needed with a nifty move by Mario Rodriguez in the 31st minute, but the Bulldogs were in control long before that point.

Coach Tom Esikhati's team outshot the visitors 7-0 in the first half, and went on to outgun AHS 12-2.

After several early runs at the goal by left wing Shane Barden, Rodriguez got the 'Dogs on the board with a high kick over AHS goalkeeper Thomas Cotton that he started when his back was to the goal.

Barden followed with his eighth goal of the season just two minutes later, and added yet another in the 64th minute.

While Abilene High mentor Randy Allen blamed all three goals on defensive mistakes, Barden disagreed.

"That second goal was just me working it around their players," the senior said.

George wants chance at Buster

Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — If heavyweight champion Buster Douglas can't agree on terms to fight Evander Holyfield, George Foreman says he's next in line.

The 41-year-old former champion entered a Douglas press conference Tuesday and declared himself ready to fight for the title.

"That's why I'm here," Foreman said. "If Holyfield and Douglas fight, what does it mean? Nothing. If I win, you've got something to write about."

Foreman, who since his comeback began has been campaigning for a fight with Mike Tyson, said Douglas will do as a substitute.

"I'm not into money, I just want to fight for the title," Foreman said. "Now we've got a new fresh champion and everything is looking all right. That lets you know I'm right there in the running."

Foreman's appearance came as Douglas manager John Johnson reported no progress on discussions concerning a site and terms for a fight with Holyfield, which the new champion wants to have sometime in September.

Holyfield's promoter, Dan Duva, said in agreeing in principle to a fight with Douglas that the two should meet in June so as to "strike while the iron is hot."

Johnson held out the possibility that Douglas could fight Foreman if talks with Holyfield's handlers go nowhere. He predicted that a fight against Foreman would bring in about the same money as a Douglas-Holyfield match.

"We're not talking about a fight with George Foreman, but we all re-

Scott spurns Spurs at buzzer

Robinson's triple-double takes back seat to Laker's heroics

AP Laserphoto

San Antonio's David Robinson lets it fly against Los Angeles forward A.C. Green.

Associated Press

From Byron Scott's point of view, the game was over before it was over.

"When I let it go, I knew it was in," Scott said of his buzzer-beating 3-pointer that gave the Los Angeles Lakers a 115-114 overtime victory over the San Antonio Spurs Tuesday night. "If you were watching me, you know from my reaction that I knew it was going in. There was no doubt."

The Lakers and Spurs, two of the Western Conference's best teams, traded the lead throughout the fourth quarter and overtime, although San Antonio led 99-92 with 3:50 left in regulation.

"It feels good when you win one like that, especially against a capable team like the Spurs," Scott, who finished with 15 points, said. "Both teams played their hearts out."

San Antonio, playing its first overtime game of the season, took a 114-112 lead on Willie Anderson's jumper with 37.4 seconds left in the extra session.

David Robinson, who had 23 points, 16 rebounds and 10 blocks, rejected Orlando Woolridge's shot on he Lakers' next possession, but Anderson missed a jumper and Los Angeles inbounded the ball with 7.7 seconds left.

Magic Johnson passed the ball to Woolridge, who drove inside before passing the ball out. Scott was waiting for it at the top of the 3-point arc, 24 feet from the basket.

"We broke on defense," said Anderson, who won a game for San Antonio on Saturday with a buzzer-beating shot at Houston. "It all came down to the last play and it just went for the Lakers."

In other NBA games, it was Portland 104, Charlotte 94; Seattle 117, Orlando 102; Washington 110, Atlanta 107; Minnesota 97, Houston 92; Milwaukee 110, New Jersey 102; Phoenix 120, Boston 99 and Sacramento 99, the Los Angeles Clippers 90.

James Worthy, who led Los Angeles with 27 points, hit a 15-footer with 2.2 seconds left in the fourth quarter to tie the game at 106 and force overtime.

Robinson's bid to win the game at the end of regulation was blocked by Mychal Thompson.

"Maybe I'm a little biased, but I thought he got a piece of me," Robinson said of Thompson. "If the referee doesn't call it, it's a great defensive play."

Terry Cummings led all scorers with 30 points. He had eight in the fourth quarter, including a jumper that capped an 11-2 Spurs run and left the Lakers in a 99-92 hole.

Bucks 110, Nets 102

New Jersey lost its 14th consecutive game, the longest losing streak in the NBA this season, as Ricky Pierce scored 29 points for Milwaukee.

Pierce's performance offset a career-high 23-point, 26-rebound effort by Charles Shackleford for the Nets, who are two short of the franchise-record streak set in 1978.

Shackleford's 26 rebounds tied the NBA high in a regulation game this season, set Feb. 15 by Houston's Otis Thorpe. James Donaldson of Dallas had 27 rebounds in a triple-overtime game in December.

Shackleford had 21 of his 23 points in the first half. Purvis Short scored 20 points for New Jersey.

The Bucks got 12 points from Pierce in the third quarter and outscored the Nets 22-14 to take a 77-71 lead.

Timberwolves 97, Rockets 92

Minnesota won its fourth consecutive game behind Tony Campbell's 30 points and Sam Mitchell's steal and two free throws with two seconds left against Houston.

The Timberwolves, who have just 14 victories, have the longest winning streak by a first-year expansion team since New Orleans won four straight in 1974.

Mitchell Wiggins scored 31 points, including 20 in the first half, for the Rockets, who lost their third straight game. Akeem Olajuwon and Buck Johnson scored 22 apiece for Houston.

Suns 120, Celtics 99

Phoenix won for the 19th time in 22 games, including 14 straight victories at home, as Kevin Johnson scored 31 points.

Tom Chambers had 12 of his 25 points during a 26-10 third period run, and the Suns took a 95-75 lead into the fourth quarter.

Larry Bird scored 19 points, but only eight after the first quarter on 3-for-13 shooting. Robert Parish had only two of his 14 points in the second half and Kevin McHale finished with four on 2-for-11 shooting.

Kings 99, Clippers 90

Sacramento beat Los Angeles for the second time in two nights, with Danny Ainge scoring 30 points.

Wayman Tisdale had 23 points and 11 rebounds for the Kings. Charles Smith had 30 for the Clippers, who have lost four consecutive games.

Trail Blazers 117, Magic 102

Xavier McDaniel had 27 points and 10 rebounds and rookie Dana Barros scored 21 points as Seattle continued their recent road success by winning at Orlando.

Orlando had 17 turnovers that led to 30 points for the Sonics, who have won six of seven road games after a 2-17 start away from home.

Blazers 104, Hornets 94

Portland stayed 1½ games behind the Lakers in the Pacific Division as Terry Porter keyed a 15-0 run in the last four minutes with nine of his 22 points against Charlotte.

Bullets 110, Hawks 107

Jeff Malone scored 39 points and Bernard King 29 as Washington won its third straight game and handed Atlanta its 10th defeat in 12 outings.

and undefeated (see related story, right).

Monterey got 20 points each from Amber Simpson and Janice Farris while Tabitha Schumake had 19 against Hanks. But it was the two points from Diana Kersey that bothered Monterey coach Dale Pectol. Kersey averages 17 points per game.

"Kersey is one of our better players, but she was flat," said Pectol. "We'll have to have her on her game Friday when we play Lewisville. They are very good."

Hanks did lead Monterey two different times and held an 18-17 lead with 7:10 left in the first half. Monterey then reeled off 11 unanswered points to take control and steadily built on that 28-18 lead.

Hanks' Chandra Hooper had 17 points and Marlee Webb 12, but had little else to go with them as the Lady Plainsmen continued to roll. Hanks ends the season at 22-5.

However, Tascosa gave both Monterey and Lewisville something to think about with its 85-point explosion over Del Valle. Christina Uzzolino led the way with 14 points while Keisha Chatman had 13 and Angie Wilson 10. The Rebels, however, had nine players with seven or more points in a well balanced attack.

Del Valle got 13 points from Sandra Calanche and 12 from Traci Kirtley, but never led in the game. Del Valle exits the playoffs with a 21-6 mark.

Borden County, who has been in the area round of the playoffs in eight of the last 10 years, had no trouble with Marathon, but did trail briefly 4-2 early before reeling off 20 straight points as Marathon went 9:33 without scoring and 10:21 without a field goal.

The Lady Coyotes got 15 points from Lisha Stennadel and 14 from Amy Lewis while Randi Woodward added 11. Marathon's Roxie McGuire led all scored with 16 points. Marathon's season ends with a 23-5 record.

alize that if we couldn't come to reasonable terms with these people, that's a possibility," Johnson said.

Foreman further confuses the heavyweight title scene, with three promoters, at least four fighters and various hotel-casinos haggling over fight possibilities in a suddenly wide-open division.

"It shows you how big this is," promoter Bob Arum quipped. "Everyone wants a piece of it."

Arum, who has promotional ties to Foreman, also attended the Douglas press conference. For the past week, Arum has been trying to get his foot in the heavyweight division, which has been controlled for years by rival promoter Don King.

King had options in his contract with Douglas to promote his future fights, but Johnson claims King breached the contract by protesting Douglas' 10th-round knockout of Tyson. Under Nevada law, fighters cannot be held to options they were forced to sign to get a fight.

Johnson said he hoped to finalize a fight with either Holyfield or Foreman within days so the new champion can enjoy his new status and begin making endorsements and appearances.

"We want to close the deal," Johnson said. "If he (Holyfield) refuses the offers I've heard that have been made, then he doesn't want to fight. We'll go on to someone else."

Johnson held a press conference at The Mirage, where he and Douglas were flown by the hotel's chairman, Steve Wynn, Sunday night in Wynn's private jet.

Wynn has made an offer to host the fight at his resort, but Johnson said he also intended to negotiate with Caesars Palace, the Las Vegas Hilton and Atlantic City casino owner Donald Trump.

"They're being bombarded with different offers," Wynn said. "I think the best thing to do with this is let these fellows take their time before they make a decision."

One of those offers will come from Trump Plaza Hotel and Casino, which had the rights to a Holyfield-Mike Tyson title bout for June 18 before Tyson was stopped by Douglas in Tokyo.

Jack O'Donnell, the casino's president, said Tuesday that negotiations will begin within a week with Johnson for either a Holyfield-Douglas or Foreman-Douglas fight. O'Donnell said either fight would attract a site fee in the $12 million range, about what the resort had agreed to spend to land the Tyson-Holyfield bout.

DUNCANVILLE

More than 2,000 fans packed the Richardson Berkner gymnasium for the game, school officials said. Many of them rushed to the floor to celebrate the new record.

With :03 on the clock, Muldrew was fouled and fans chanted "93! 93!" as she sank both shots to close out the scoring.

Forward Jill Glenn led the Lady Stallions with 19 points. North Mesquite, which fell to 21-11, was the last team to beat the Pantherettes, back in 1987.

Duncanville tied the state record for consecutive triumphs with a 73-39 rout of Richardson Berkner Feb. 15.

The national record of 218 consecutive victories was set by Baskin High School in Baskin, La., in 1947-53.

Lamesa girls, boys take double loss in Levelland

From Staff Reports

LEVELLAND — Lamesa basketball teams had a tough time at the Texan Dome here Tuesday.

The Lady Tornadoes were eliminated from the Class 3A playoffs with a 70-49 loss to Dimmitt in second-round action. Meanwhile, the Golden Tornado boys dropped an 82-77 decision to Slaton in a battle for the top seed out of District 3-3A. Lamesa and Slaton had tied Denver City for the 3-3A regular season, but Slaton had knocked off Denver City Monday to set up Tuesday's showdown.

Neither Lamesa team had much success in the second half of their respective games. Dimmitt outscored the Lady Tors 17-2 in the fourth quarter to put away its 28th win of the season. Lamesa finished at 19-7.

Gloria Gauna led balanced Dimmitt scoring with 18 points, while Lamesa's Saresa Butler led all scorers with 22 points.

Dimmitt, 28-6, advances to the Region I tournament in Lubbock this weekend.

In the boys game, Lamesa led 51-46 at halftime, but Slaton outscored the Tors 36-25 in the second half to pull out the win.

Slaton's Corey Hogue led all scorers with 31 points, while Redd Hall and Bert Butler led Lamesa with 22 points each.

Comanche sends home Greenwood

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — The Comanche Lady Indians ran off nine unanswered points to begin the second half, and went on to eliminate the Greenwood Rangerettes from the Class 3A playoffs with a 63-47 area round win here Tuesday.

The teams were tied 26-all at halftime, but Regina Reeves scored 18 of her 27 points in the second half to give Comanche control.

Greenwood was scoreless from the field for the first four minutes of the second half.

Senior point guard Shelley Mackey was just about the whole show for the Rangerettes, with 20 of the team's 47 points. Mackey sank 13-of-14 free throw attempts. No other Greenwood player scored more than six points.

Comanche, 27-4, faces Tulia in the Region I semifinals Friday at Lubbock. Tulia was a 53-50 winner over Slaton.

Greenwood (47): Shelley Mackey 3 13-14 20; Kailynn Pace 3 0-0 6; Heather Donnell 0 2-2 2; Brandy Fowler 2 0-0 4; Wendy Smith 2 0-0 4; Kendra Underwood 1 3-6 5; Monica Myers 3 0-4 6. Totals 14 18-26 47.

Esikhati was glad to get some goals on the board no matter what the cause.

"The kids were shooting and following through," Esikhati said.

The Bulldogs augmented their newfound scoring punch by clipping War Eagle wings with a solid defense led by sweeper Justin Scharf and stopped Jeff Ehler. The outstanding defensive play helped make it a slow day for MHS keeper Bryant Mueller, who was never seriously challenged by the off-key Eagle forwards.

"Our forwards weren't in the game at all," Allen said. "We had played very well the last two or three matches, but..."

Loss of baseball spring training not that big a deal

By JIM LITKE
AP Sports Writer

Weep not for spring training.

More than a few people in the know (and even a few of the owners can take a bow here) already know what most of the rest of us will soon learn: That spring training is overrated, in addition to being overly long.

Rare is the Mr. October who kills himself trying to be Mr. March. Gone is the time when a horde of fatsos spilled southward before the season needing six weeks to burn off a winter of excess in the warm spring sun of Florida and Arizona.

There's one notable exception, but more on the more of Lonnie Smith later.

"When I played in the 1950s," former Brooklyn Dodgers shortstop and current Chicago Cubs manager Don Zimmer said, "there'd always be five or six guys coming into camp 15 pounds overweight, and some guys, (Roy) Campanella for instance, you'd only guess at.

"When I played, you put the gloves and the spikes in the cupboard, did whatever you did over the winter, and didn't take them out until it was time to head for Florida," he continued. "And when you got there, you lived in an old army barracks, with bunk beds, four to a room, and one television in the hall. A guy knocked on your door at 7 a.m., blew a whistle and you lined up for breakfast.

"Can you imagine guys today doing that? Lining up for breakfast?" Zimmer said, pausing to savor the irony.

"Of course, it's a rarity for a guy to come in like that (overweight) today. These guys find a way to stay in shape year-round, and with what they're making, plenty have got gyms in their house."

When pressed, Zimmer allows that he could field a representative team in as little as three weeks, but only because he has his eight position players and six reserves pretty well set. All figured prominently in the Cubs' NL East title-winning squad last season. At that, Zimmer pleads for extra time to find a dependable fourth starter in the rotation

Displaying a lawyerly bent, Tony LaRussa, manager of the world champion Oakland A's, concedes his players, too, could do well without all of the conditioning work, but reserves the final say.

"I've heard plenty of people say it's too long," he said, "but I think it's better to be ready and give them days off, if necessary.

"Besides, there's a big difference between position players and your pitchers. They have to be on the mound in game conditions five or six times, with four or five days between appearances. ... If I had to do it in a month, I could do it. But less than that," he added, "and it's risky."

Pitchers be damned, Walt Hriniak said. But then the Chicago White Sox batting coach, acknowledged to be one of the game's finest, is paid to think that way.

"I've always believed spring training basically was for the pitchers," he said.

"Meanwhile, plenty of hitters actually get stale. If they've been working out through the winter and swinging a bat, taking some batting practice, 20 or 30 at-bats facing a live pitcher ought to get it," he said. "Two weeks of games."

Forget the rookies trying to earn a spot and the rehabilitating veterans trying to keep one. Put aside, for the moment, even the staggering economic impact — a study by tourism officials three years ago in Florida, where 18 of the 26 teams vacation, estimated that more than $300 million flows into the state with the baseball migration — and what have you really lost?

Steve Carlton used to amaze onlookers and build up his pitching arm with karate exercises, including driving his left arm up to the elbow into a bucket of rice. But he's gone and nobody else has revived the technique.

Sandy Koufax of the Dodgers used to show up 10 pounds scrawnier than his usual scrawny playing weight, and while many around him cursed, ate with the gusto of two men. Boston's George Scott, another spring training fixture, took the opposite tack. He usually showed as though there were two of him and proceeded to field thousands of grounders wrapped in a rubber suit, ingesting little beyond the infield dirt.

But they're gone as well, and precious few of today's ballplayers have quirks to match. They don't need them.

"That's pretty much true," concurred Los Angeles manager Tommy Lasorda, "but that's because these guys come in in pretty good shape. When I played with Brooklyn, most of the guys lived in New York and if they got into a gym and shot some baskets once in a while, that was a workout.

"I'm not saying today's guys don't need the work. Weightlifting has nothing to do with baseball. You've still got to throw it and hit and catch it and you have to have time to do that.

"A few years back, Tim Raines (of the Expos) had a contract problem, missed all of spring training and hit a bunch of homers to start. But do you want to rely on that?

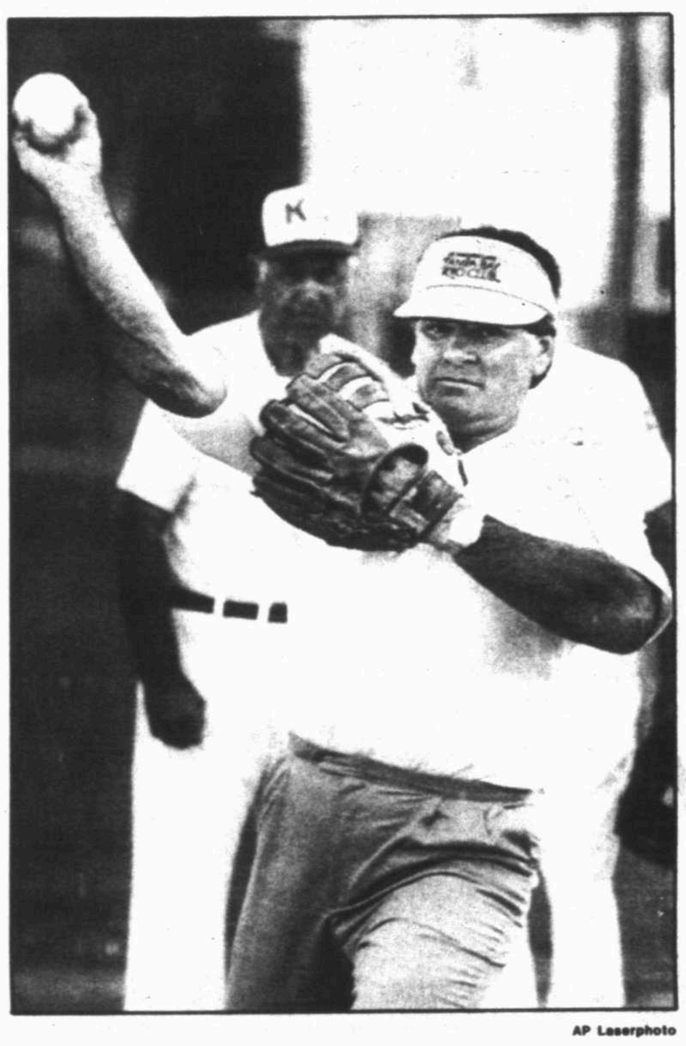

"I mean before a fight, a boxer boxes a lot. He runs for his legs, hits the heavy bag and the light bag, does exactly what he does in a fight. Baseball players have to hit and throw and catch it sometime, even if you hardly see the guys with the big problems anymore."

Ah, but what about Lonnie Smith? The Atlanta Braves' outfielder followed up one of the finest comeback seasons in memory by bringing back the grand old tradition of indulgence.

Remember the grainy films of Babe Ruth mugging for the cameras in spring training while devouring hot dogs? Smith started doing that last October, and with no spring training to shed the 35 extra pounds he loaded onto a 5-foot-9 frame, he checked into a fat farm in Smyrna, Georgia.

"My most strenuous exercise was Christmas shopping," is how he described his offseason to one interviewer, "and I got that out of the way by November."

Maybe six weeks isn't that long after all. Might have given Lonnie something to aim at.

Rose could be facing more cash problems

Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Sources familiar with an Internal Revenue Service investigation of former Cincinnati Reds manager Pete Rose say he may owe more than $100,000 in taxes from unreported income, a newspaper reported today.

The Plain Dealer of Cleveland, quoting unidentified sources close to a federal grand jury investigation of Rose, said sworn statements from witnesses interviewed by the IRS state he took cash earned at baseball card shows and stuffed it in suitcases and sacks.

The newspaper quoted the sources as saying Rose is believed to have failed to report to the IRS at least $250,000 in income between 1985 and 1987. Most of the money came from baseball card shows and memorabilia sales, the sources said.

Records from a card show held at a Cleveland motel in 1987 where Rose signed autographs for $8 each and was paid several thousand dollars are among documents being examined, The Plain Dealer reported.

Tracing records from memorabilia sales in which bats, balls and other items are traded has been difficult for IRS investigators who have attempted to locate people who bought items from Rose, the newspaper said.

Rose, banned from baseball for life last Aug. 24 for gambling, has been under investigation by a federal grand jury since at least last spring.

Roger J. Makley, a Rose lawyer, was quoted as saying he did not know what the IRS found during its investigation.

"They are continuing to look at each and every source of income Pete may have had," Makley told the newspaper.

William E. Hunt, an assistant U.S. attorney handling the Rose case, refused to discuss the investigation, The Plain Dealer said.

Asked by the newspaper when the federal investigation would end, Hunt said, "It will be done when it's done."

Lockout celebrates one-week birthday

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Today, the spring-training lockout reached a week. And, unless there is a settlement by Thursday, negotiators for baseball owners and players say the start of the regular season will be in jeopardy.

The 25th bargaining session Tuesday produced no progress on the key issue — salary arbitration eligibility. The sides will meet again today and Chuck O'Connor, chief negotiator for the owners, said management will make a new proposal.

Donald Fehr, executive director of the players' union, did not use the word "deadline," but set one anyway. He said that talks would break off after Thursday because his staff needs at least a week to travel and update players on the situation, and likely wouldn't be available to resume talks until March 5.

"By Thursday, it will be absolutely clear that camps will not open even on the mandatory reporting date, Feb. 28, and it will become virtually clear that the beginning of the regular season will be implicated," he said.

Asked if an extended break would endanger the start of the season on April 2, O'Connor answered: "We may be."

Players and management, meanwhile, are getting anxious for a settlement.

Cincinnati Reds third baseman Chris Sabo, working out with the University of Cincinnati team, said he might start looking for something else to do.

"If they lock us out forever, I'll just go get a job. I can do other things. I have done other things," Sabo said. "I wouldn't like it, but I could live with it."

Pirates manager Jim Leyland, at the team's camp in Bradenton, Fla., said he might return to Pittsburgh.

"I came down a week before spring training and it was nice to be able to do a lot of things, like go to Disney World if you wanted to," Leyland said. "But if this thing doesn't come around quickly we may just end up flying back. It just seems odd at this time not playing."

Whether they will play ball depends mainly on whether the negotiators can resolve their dispute on salary arbitration.

The union wants players with two years in the major leagues to be eligible for arbitration, as they were before the 1985 agreement. Owners want the level to remain at three years.

"It doesn't mean that's the only issue left," O'Connor said, "but that's the centerpiece.

"There are things you could do with minimum salary, rosters and waiver rules," he said. "That's what we're looking at."

Management has proposed minimums of $75,000 for first-year players, $125,000 for players with one to two years of service and $200,000 for players with two to three years of service. O'Connor said owners were looking at methods other than arbitration that would funnel money to younger players.

"If we thought there was something we could do that would be acceptable to the players, we would have turned it around long ago," Fehr said.

Yount, Brewers finish million-dollar details

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — The Milwaukee Brewers announced in December that Robin Yount had agreed to a three-year contract, but it took two months to work out the details of a complicated package for the American League MVP.

Now the Brewers and Yount agree again. On Tuesday, the figures were finally in on a $9.6 million contract that makes the veteran centerfielder the 10th player in the game to be paid an average of $3 million per season.

Yount's average of $3.2 million per season ties him with California pitcher Mark Langston for the fourth-largest contract in baseball behind San Francisco's Will Clark, Oakland's Dave Stewart and Kansas City's Mark Davis.

Clark will average $3.75 million, Stewart $3.5 million when a contract extension kicks in next year and Davis $3.25 million.

The Brewers now have two of baseball's highest paid players, although Milwaukee is one of the smallest markets in either league. Yount's teammate and friend, Paul Molitor, agreed to a three-year, $9.1 million deal on Monday.

Yount will get a $1.5 million signing bonus and will then receive annual base salaries of $2.7 million in 1990, 1991 and 1992 with $1.44 million of each year's base deferred with interest.

The filing of the contract was delayed as lawyers reworked language of $5.2 million in loans remaining from Yount's previous contract. The Brewers are guarantors of the loans.

Yount's agent, his brother Larry, wasn't available for comment at his Arizona real estate office.

Brewers owner Bud Selig and General Manager Harry Dalton were in New York for collective bargaining negotiations and not available for comment.

Selig was personally involved in negotiating Yount's contract.

Because his contract had not been worked out by last month's deadline for filing salary arbitration requests, Yount filed for arbitration as a mere formality.

Yount, 34, won his second MVP award last season, batting .318 with 21 homers and 103 RBIs. He won the award despite the Brewers' dismal 81-81 season. Yount won the 1982 MVP award in leading the Brewers to the World Series.

Yount filed for free agency in November before announcing in mid-December his plans to return to Milwaukee, where he broke in in 1974 as an 18-year-old shortstop.

Later in December, the Brewers announced Yount had agreed to terms on a three-year contract, but the details had not been worked out.

Yount will enter the 1990 season, when and if it starts, with 2,602 hits. He was switched from shortstop to the outfield in 1985 because of the shoulder problems.

History doesn't favor Mitchell

San Francisco precedent leads one to doubt that Kevin Mitchell will ever again match the 47 home runs he hit last season.

Willie Mays never again approached the 52 homers he hit for the Giants in 1965, dropping to 37 in 1966.

Orlando Cepeda hit 46 for the Giants in 1961 but never came close again, falling to 35 in 1962.

Same with Willie McCovey, who had 45 in 1969, 39 the following year and never surpassed 29 after that.

Schultz pushes for rule change on eligibility

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Now that the NFL has decided to let juniors into the draft, Dick Schultz wants to take it one step further.

Schultz, executive director of the NCAA, thinks that underclassmen who enter the NFL and NBA drafts should be allowed to maintain their college eligibility if they change their mind and decide to stay in school.

College football and basketball players should be permitted to use the draft to determine their worth in the pros, he said.

"Then if they don't like what they see and decide to stay in school, they should maintain their eligibility," Shultz told sportswriters attending the NCAA's annual college football preview on Tuesday.

Basketball and football players are the only ones who automatically lose their eligibility after entering pro drafts, Schultz said.

"The baseball player can be drafted, find out what he's worth and it doesn't impact his eligibility," Schultz said. "The same is true for a hockey player. But if a football player or basketball player wants to be drafted, they must submit their names to the league, and as soon as they do that, they lose their eligibility."

Last Friday, the NFL announced that it will change its longstanding policy barring juniors from the draft. However, players leaving school early will have to submit an affadavit to the NFL renouncing their college eligibility.

Any change in that policy would probably require a cooperative effort by the NFL and NCAA. But Schultz admitted that the NFL would be reluctant to eliminate the affadavit requirement because "it's a way of protecting clubs from losing draft picks."

Ten juniors have already announced that they will enter this year's NFL draft and as many as 30 underclassmen may follow suit. Alabama linebacker Keith McCants, Florida running back Emmitt Smith and several other juniors are expected to be first-round picks.

'Horns want latest Ryan

Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The University of Texas, a baseball power with a tradition of turning out major league pitchers, offered Reid Ryan a scholarship without ever seeing him pitch.

Maybe that's because the Longhorns know all about his father — major-league strikeout king Nolan Ryan.

"Every high school kid is a gamble," Texas recruiting coordinator Deron Gustafson said Tuesday. "You don't know how mature they are physically or mentally, or what they might do a year or two from now.

"But Reid's a pretty good one to take a chance on."

Reid Ryan, a 6-foot, 170-pound right-hander with an 86-mph fastball has verbally agreed to play next year for Texas, said Gustafson, son of Longhorns' coach Cliff Gustafson.

Years ago, when Nolan Ryan was a high school pithcer in Alvin, near Houston, the Longhorns offered him a scholarship. Ryan, however, signed with the New York Mets and now is the all-time strikeout leader, topping 5,000 last season with the Texas Rangers.

Ryan said his son, who also plays basketball, is "overall a better athlete than me. He's developed as a pitcher. I just don't think he's shown as much velocity at his age."

"People expect you to be the same as your father," Reid Ryan said. "I don't think I'll ever be like my dad, but I try to copy him. I'd like to pitch till I'm 43."

At Texas, Reid Ryan will join a baseball program that has won 1,111 games in Gustafson's 23 years, 19 Southwest Conference titles and national championships in 1975 and 1983. Texas also has finished second three times at the College World Series, including last year.

More than 100 of Cliff Gustafson's players have gone into professional baseball. Former Longhorn pitcher Roger Clemens of the Boston Red Sox is a two-time Cy Young Award winner, and Greg Swindell of the Cleveland Indians was a No. 1 draft choice in 1986.

On Reid Ryan's recruiting visit to Texas, his father threw out the first ball in the Feb. 3 varsity-alumni game, and Clemens started for the alumni.

"I've always wanted to come to Texas," Reid said. "Texas has always been my favorite because of the prestige of the program and a chance to be part of the tradition it has."

Deron Gustafson said, "I haven't seen him pitch, but people we count on and trust tell us his velocity has gradually picked up 3 to 4 miles per hour each year. His dad progressed that way in high school."

Texas' top recruits often opt for pro ball, as Nolan Ryan did, but Gustafson said "Reid has said and his dad has said he is definitely going to college.

"Nolan is secure enough financially that he realizes the importance of a kid getting an education."

TOP 25 ROUNDUP

Simmons one game away from 3,000

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — For Lionel Simmons, reaching 3,000 points gets easy from here.

Simmons moved within three points of becoming the fifth player in NCAA Division I history to eclipse the 3,000-point plateau after scoring 34 in 14th-ranked La Salle's 110-81 victory over Loyola of Maryland Tuesday night.

"I think I can score three points next game," Simmons said.

The Philadelphia native will get his chance Thursday night at home against Manhattan.

"I'm looking forward to it," Simmons said after moving past Oscar Robertson on the career scoring list. "I'm glad it's down to three. If it were 13 or 14 points, I'd be a little worried."

In other Top Twenty Five games, No. 11 Syracuse beat Boston College 105-69 and Memphis State stopped No. 16 Louisville 82-68.

Simmons has scored 20 or more points in 22 of La Salle's 24 games this season and is close to a sure thing.

That wasn't how Simmons felt five games ago.

"When I was 100 points away, I felt the pressure," Simmons said. "Everywhere I looked I'd see the countdown to 3,000. That's when I felt it."

After a shaky start, Simmons scored 12 points while La Salle was outscoring Loyola 24-4 in a 5:22 span after falling behind 13-9. La Salle led 55-29 at halftime and built its lead to 80-41 seven minutes into the the second half.

The victory, La Salle's 15th in a row, moved the Explorers to 13-0 in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference and 23-1 overall. Loyola fell to 2-12 in conference, 4-21 overall.

After throwing up an air ball on a 3-point shot and missing an alley-oop dunk in the opening minutes, Simmons went past Robertson with a reverse layup that gave La Salle a 29-15 lead with 9:18 to play in the first half.

A minute earlier, with a jumper from the left side of the lane off a rebound, Simmons had equaled Robertson's point total of 2,973, which The Big O scored in three seasons (1958-60) at the University of Cincinnati.

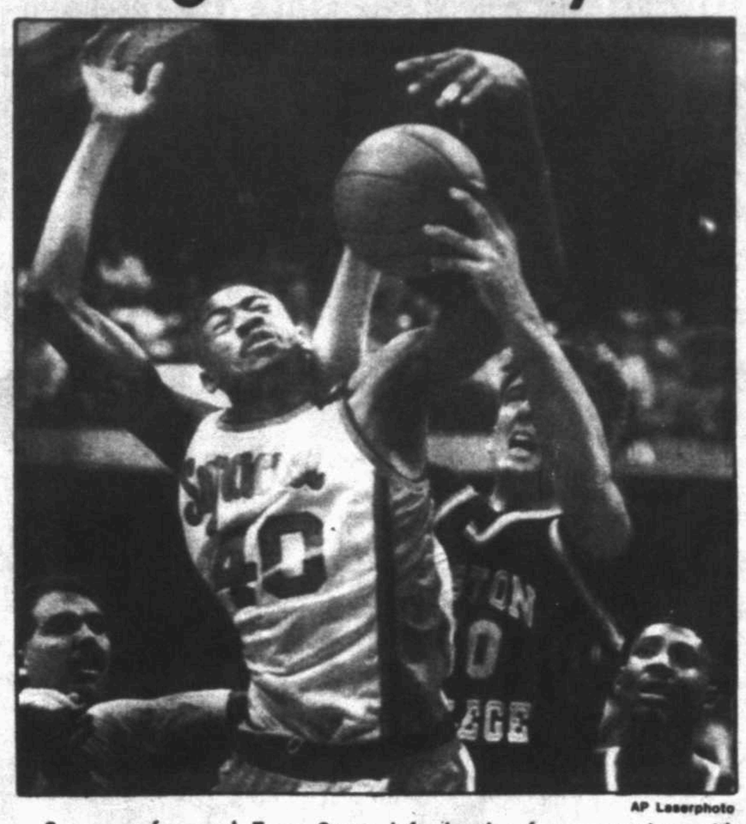

LSU's Pete Maravich set the Division I points record of 3,667 points in three seasons (1968-70).

Freeman Williams of Portland State (1974-78) is second with 3,249 points, fol'owed by Harry Kelly of Texas Sou...ern (1979-83) with 3,066 and Hersey Hawkins of Bradley (1984-88) with 3,008.

Simmons was pulled from the game with 8:23 to play to ensure that No. 3,000 will be scored in Philadelphia.

"I went to high school in Philadelphia," Simmons said. "Having Philadelphia part of me my entire life, it's only right to do it in my hometown."

"His 3,000 points aren't tainted," La Salle coach Speedy Morris said. "He doesn't get 50 points against teams we blow out. He knows it's not Lionel Simmons' team. He's got a great supporting group with him."

No. 11 Syracuse 105
Boston College 69

Derrick Coleman scored 21 points and Syracuse held Boston College to just one field in the first 7½ minutes of the second half to win at home.

The Orangemen (19-5 overall, 9-4 Big East) ended a two-game losing streak and reached the 100-point mark for the first time since Dec. 19, a span of 15 games.

Syracuse used an 11-1 run to break away from a 43-39 halftime lead. Billy Owens had 17 points and LeRon Ellis for Syracuse and David Hinton scored 18 for Boston College (7-16, 1-12).

Memphis State 82
No. 16 Louisville 68

Ernest Smith scored 18 points and Memphis State broke away early in the second half to defeat visiting Louisville.

Tied at 38 with 19 minutes left, the Tigers (16-9, 7-5 Metro Conference) went on an 11-1 streak. Louisville got no closer than seven after that.

Elliot Perry scored 15 points for Memphis State, including eight straight foul shots in the final 1:32. Felton Spencer scored 19 points for the Cardinals (20-6, 9-2).

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Focus on large-scale business ventures. Good timing is the secret to your success. April will be memorable for romance and socializing. Be careful not to slack off at work. A career goal moves within reach. Be on the lookout for terrific investment opportunities. A well-to-do friend offers valuable assistance. Do not be too proud to accept!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Boy Scouts founder Robert Baden-Powell, tennis star Michael Chang, President George Washington.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Long-standing family conflicts can be handled diplomatically. Face up to your responsibilities. Listen when a child asks for help. Your creativity will return, boosting you to a position of power.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A verbal free-for-all is a positive force, opening up new avenues of communication; the entire family benefits. Write down your original ideas. Big changes lie ahead. Handle romance with kid gloves.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take your time when making important decisions. Try to consider all the alternatives. Thoughts of unpaid bills can create tension. Get together with fun people and forget about things you cannot change.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): This may be a day when sensitivities run too high for comfort. Use your wonderful sense of humor. Romance is volatile — just the way you secretly like it! Social demands keep you busy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Couples find greater peace of mind once they talk things out. Pour on the charm and you get your way! A telephone call lifts your spirits. Avoid getting involved in your neighbors' affairs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Make the most of a golden opportunity. New financial gains are indicated. Athletic endeavors leave you breathless but healthier. Be more realistic when it comes to the family budget. Postpone luxury purchases.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Play down any personal differences with your co-workers and teamwork will be easier to obtain. Confusion over a financial matter could cause strife at home. Find out the exact figures involved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Take time out to solve a financial problem. The possibility of deliberate deception cannot be dismissed. Keep in close touch with faraway business contacts. Parents would welcome a visit or call.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Talent and hard work still offer the best route to success. Distant affairs could put a dent in your cash flow. Do not jump the gun before everything is in place. Traditional values prevail.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Channel your nervous energy into good works. Your imagination and enthusiasm make you unstoppable today. Handle people with more tact. A social event is very much to your liking. A romance could ignite.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Life seems particularly exciting now. An original idea is likely to get a fair hearing. Those in authority will be impressed. Give serious thought to revising a budget. Mate or partner is supportive.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your work on behalf of a charity or community cause gives you new self-confidence. The good will generated today will pay off handsomely at work. Additional financial rewards are possible soon.

Opening lead: King of ♠

The average player looks no further than his aces and kings. The expert takes considerable pains over his spotcards as well. We would bet that 99 percent of declarers would fail in their heart game because of not realizing how important a card dummy's eight of diamonds is.

The auction was routine. Given normal breaks the contract would have presented no difficulty. As it was it required superb technique by South to succeed.

The defenders started with three rounds of spades, declarer ruffing the last. South carefully led the ten of diamonds to the queen, then returned to hand with the queen of trumps to lead the nine of diamonds, going up with the king. Since he had a sure trump trick West refused to ruff, but declarer's careful preparatory work now paid off handsomely.

After coming to hand with the king of trumps, declarer led a diamond and took the marked finesse of the eight. East had no recourse. If the defender refused to ruff declarer would simply continue diamonds until East did, and the ace of hearts would still be in dummy as an entry to any uncashed diamonds.

So East did as well as possible by ruffing and shifting to a club. Declarer was not tempted. After shooting up with the ace, South crossed to the ace of hearts and cashed the good diamonds, discarding two clubs from hand.

Note that had South not unblocked both the ten and nine of diamonds East could defeat the contract by refusing to ruff the third round of the suit. Declarer would be in hand and would be an entry short to take advantage of the high diamonds. Alternatively, East could ruff the second round of diamonds and the suit would be blocked.

Costner spoons up Hasty Pudding award

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Actor Kevin Costner says the Man of the Year honor from Harvard University's Hasty Pudding Theatricals is one of his first awards, and he treats it "with more reverence that you might think."

Costner, who has starred in such films as "Bull Durham," "No Way Out," "The Untouchables," and "Field of Dreams," received the traditional Hasty Pudding pot from the undergraduate theatrical group Tuesday, then fell right in with the college hijinks.

"My father was terribly concerned that this kind of thing would happen as a result of acting," Costner quipped after donning a red-sequinned bra with a baseball motif over his tuxedo. He accepted kisses from men in drag before a whooping crowd of 300.

The theatrical group said some of Costner's lesser known roles caught its attention.

"What first attracted our eye was the soul-searching in such films as "Night Shift" and "Sizzle Beach U.S.A.," joked Sharon Owyang, a junior and one of the show's producers.

Costner, who lives with his wife and three children in La Canada, Calif., is the 24th recipient of the annual Hasty Pudding pot, joining the ranks of such alumni as Paul Newman, Johnny Carson, Robert Redford and Bill Cosby.

Actress Glenn Close was named the club's Woman of the Year last week, an honor that Kathleen Turner received in 1989.

Costner, 34, began his career as a janitor, sweeping stages until he gradually began working with film crews and taking acting lessons at night. He got a big break when his wrists and hair appeared in the early 1980s hit movie "The Big Chill," in which he played a dead man whose suicide brings together a group of old college friends.

Most of that appearance ended up on the cutting room floor, but the film's director cast him in another role and his star has been rising ever since.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — CBS Records honored singer Michael Jackson as the label's biggest money-maker of the 1980s, when fans bought more than 110 million of his records.

Jackson

"I have to say now, no album sells itself," the 31-year-old singer said at a Tuesday news conference. "It is up to the people to buy it."

In a typically truncated speech, the gloved one thanked "all the children of the world," several record industry executives and his parents.

Jackson's output in the decade included the era's two largest-selling albums, "Bad" and "Thriller."

Tommy Mottolo, president of CBS Records, said, "If I stood here 10 years ago and told you any artist would accomplish what Michael Jackson accomplished, you would probably have laughed me off the stage."

"Thriller" was the first album to generate seven Top 10 singles, including the title cut and "Beat It."

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Former talk show host Morton Downey Jr. is asking a federal bankruptcy court for protection from numerous creditors, including banks, businesses, restaurants and jewelers, according to court documents.

Downey lists liabilities of nearly $2.4 million in a petition filed Friday in U.S. Bankruptcy Court seeking protection under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy law.

Downey attorney Brian D. Spector would not comment on whether Downey's financial troubles were related to the demise of "The Morton Downey Jr. Show," which featured the host ranting and taunting guests. The program was canceled after two years.

Spector said his client, who lives in suburban Englewood, was out of town and that he would advise him not to comment.

Downey's creditors include more than 75 banks, businesses and agencies — including New York boutiques and restaurants — a New Jersey limousine service and New York City's Parking Violations Bureau, court papers said.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The star of "Tonight Live Starring Freddie Roman" at Trump Castle says his show's success has helped him in many ways.

"For the first time I feel like I have a job," Roman said this week. "I've never gotten to stay in one place for more than six weeks since I started in show business."

"Tonight Live" begins with Roman delivering his monologue before presenting the night's talent. He interviews each act, six days a week, and steps into the audience for a question-and-answer session that gives him a chance to do some improvisational comedy.

"Tonight Live" has been doing so well that its original three-month stint has been extended, with the show now scheduled to run until Labor Day. The casino is in discussions with a cable television station to put together a "best of" show to air monthly, Roman said.

Roman has been a frequent guest on television's "The Merv Griffin Show," and "Mike Douglas Show." His last film appearance was in 1987's "Sweet Lorraine," starring Maureen Stapleton.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The 32nd annual Grammy Awards offered a chance for a reunion of sorts for the three surviving Beatles at the Shrine Auditorium.

Two former members of the Fab Four, George Harrison and Ringo Starr, were in contention for Grammys tonight and the third surviving member, Paul McCartney, was chosen in advance to receive an honor for his lifetime achievements.

Former Beatle John Lennon was killed in a December 1980, attack by a deranged fan.

Harrison, as part of the all-star Traveling Wilburys, was up for album of the year and best vocal rock group performance for the LP "Traveling Wilburys Volume One."

Economic slide may have halted

N.Y. Times News Service

Greenspan

WASHINGTON — Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board and the dominant force in economic policy making, told Congress on Tuesday that the economy's "weakest point may have passed" and that the nation could expect "moderate economic expansion" this year.

In testimony much more explicit than remarks he made three weeks ago, Greenspan told a House subcommittee that Federal Reserve officials expected the economy to grow by 1.75 to 2 percent in 1990.

In the previous testimony he had said for the first time since the slowdown began in the fall that the chances of recession had diminished.

Tuesday's forecast, while slightly more favorable than the consensus of private economists, is significantly less optimistic than the Bush administration's projections.

By the administration's own reckoning, a growth rate in the range Greenspan suggested would result in a budget deficit in the next fiscal year at least 25 percent higher than the administration is anticipating.

Greenspan's report on monetary policy and the economic outlook, which is required by law every six months and which is watched carefully by the financial markets, implied that the central bank would not move soon to lower interest rates further.

Prices in the stock and credit markets fell sharply Tuesday, in apparent reaction to the prospect that the Federal Reserve is not planning to ease interest rates because of its favorable economic assessment.

The Dow Jones industrial average was off 38.74 points, and the Treasury's benchmark 30-year bond fell more than $20 for each $1,000 of face value. Its yield jumped to 8.66 percent, from 8.46 on Friday.

Testifying before the Subcommittee on Domestic Monetary Policy of the House Banking Committee, Greenspan made these other points:

—The government never had an "inclination" to bail out Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., the brokerage house that specialized in high-yield "junk bonds" and that collapsed last week.

—The trend toward junk bonds got out of hand in the late 1980s, but such high-yield bonds, which provide financing for high-risk ventures, have a "logical niche in the system."

—The high level of corporate debt in the United States threatens economic expansion.

—The inflation and unemployment rates should remain steady in 1990, with inflation running at 4 to 4.5 percent and unemployment in the fourth quarter at 5.5 to 5.75 percent.

—The American economy is influenced much more from abroad than in the past, but interest rates here primarily reflect domestic economic conditions.

—The money supply, by the most common measure, will be allowed to grow by 3 to 7 percent, the same

Oil prices show weakness

From Staff and Wire Reports

April contracts for West Texas Intermediate have opened on a bearish note.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the contract was down 25 cents to $21.89 in midmorning trading. It fell 11 cents Tuesday, closing at $22.14. May contracts closed at $21.93, down 11 cents.

The March contract expired Tuesday on a down note, falling 23 cents to $22.19.

Prices have been pressured by supply and demand concerns.

Analysts said the five-cent spread between the March and April closing prices did not bode well for future price expectations.

"It's not a bullish signal for the spread to be as weak as it is," said Tom Bentz, director of futures trading for United Energy Inc.

Bentz said the small difference suggested weakness in demand.

"If demand were up March would have been a strong premium over April," he said.

Among refined products, wholesale unleaded gasoline for March delivery rose 0.21 cent to 60.20 cents a gallon after losing 0.65 cent in the prior session. All other contracts finished lower.

No. 2 heating oil for delivery in March slipped 0.10 cent to 57.38 cents a gallon, April declined 0.11 cent to 56.70 cents and May dropped 0.25 cent to 55.62 cents a gallon.

Energy analysts said activity in the energy pits was relatively light with many traders in London for the International Petroleum Exchange convention.

Cool weather in the Northeast gave heating oil futures a psychological boost midway through the session, but buying dried up amid expectations that demand has weakened while inventories have climbed.

Analysts said March gasoline got a lift from a report about an explosion at an Amoco Oil Co. terminal in Whiting, Ind. A truck loading liquefied petroleum gas into a storage tank caught fire and exploded, killing two people and injuring three others, authorities said.

The explosion was not expected to disrupt product shipments, traders said.

Transportation up but Midland living lower

From Staff Reports

Despite a sharp increase in transportation costs, Midland's cost of living dipped 0.1 percent in January, reversing December's decline. Annualized, the Tall City's rate of deflation would be 1 percent.

Odessa's cost of living rose 0.2 percent, equaling an annualized inflation rate of 2.3 percent.

Declines in clothing, taxes and food away from home offset increases in costs for transportation, health care, food at home, housing and utilties.

The sharpest increase was seen in transportation, which climbed 4.1 percent in January after declining in December. A second month of higher gasoline prices, coupled with higher automobile maintenance costs, was responsible.

Restaurant prices showed the sharpest drop, falling 3.3 percent in January, due to lower prices for main dishes prepared with chicken and beef. This category has fallen 10.5 percent in the last year, with a 15.2 percent drop sen in the past six months.

Consumer prices are highest in seven years

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices shot up 1.1 percent last month, the biggest gain in 7½ years, the Labor Department said today in a report that reflected sharp increases in fuel and food costs lingering from December's record cold weather.

The seasonally adjusted increase in the Consumer Price Index, the government's primary gauge of inflation at the retail level, was the largest since a similar 1.1 percent gain in June 1982. The steepest gain last year was a 0.7 percent rise in April.

The increase represented an annual rate of 14.1 percent.

The jump, following 0.4 percent advances in both November and December, was foreshadowed by a 1.8 percent surge in wholesale prices in January. But analysts said the spurts should be short-lived and inflation should return to more moderate levels in following months.

"Increases in food and energy prices accounted for over 60 percent of the January advance," the Labor Department said. "Record monthly increases were recorded in the indexes for fuel oil and fruits and vegetables — up 26.3 and 10.2 percent, respectively — and gasoline prices rose 7.7 percent."

Fuel oil prices rose only 0.2 percent in December.

Natural gas and electricity costs increased 0.3 percent in January following a 1.5 percent hike a month earlier.

Dairy prices, however, were up 2.4 percent after increases of 2.2 percent in December, 1.7 percent in November and 1.4 percent in October. Analysts said the price hikes were due to last year's drought, which caused many farmers to slaughter milk cows.

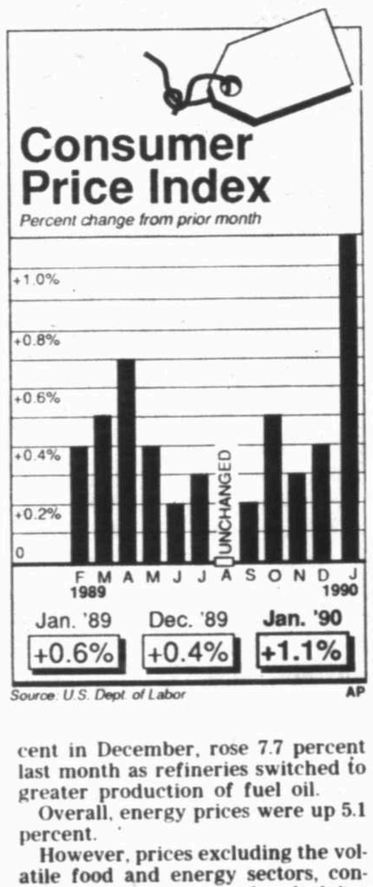

Gasoline costs, which fell 2.1 percent in December, rose 7.7 percent last month as refineries switched to greater production of fuel oil.

Overall, energy prices were up 5.1 percent.

However, prices excluding the volatile food and energy sectors, considered a better gauge of underlying inflationary pressures, were up only 0.6 percent. That compared with a 0.3 percent gain in December.

"A small residual influence from the winter also should keep food and

Dollar's decline surprises traders

LONDON (AP) — Foreign currency dealers today said they were surprised when the dollar fell in early European trading, after Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan's suggestion that the Fed won't lower interest rates further.

Gold prices rose.

The West German mark strengthened against the dollar and the yen after weak stock markets in New York and Tokyo undermined confidence in those currencies, dealers said.

"It is mostly a technical movement. Fundamentally there is no special reason to be short on dollars at the moment," said Jens-Uwe Fischer, senior trader at Manufacturers Hanover Trust in Frankfurt.

Paul Brewer, a senior dealer at Salomon Brothers International in London, said: "The trend still seems to be one of weakness despite Greenspan's comments, which should have lent some support to the dollar."

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.57 yen to a closing 145.15 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 145.25 yen.

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound, and was quoted at $1.7143, compared with $1.7040 late Tuesday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $421.40 a troy ounce, up from $419.75 bid late Tuesday. At midmorning, the city's major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $420.60.

Silver was unchanged in London at a bid price of $5.35 an ounce.

Stock market plunges 38 points

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market dropped sharply Tuesday as an upward trend in worldwide interest rates troubled traders.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials lost 38.74 points to close at 2,596.85. At one point during trading the widely watched barometer was down nearly 50 points.

Declining issues outnumbered gainers by about 4 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 327 up, 1,257 down and 388 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 147.30 million shares, down from 166.84 million in Friday's session. The market was closed Monday for Presidents Day.

Analysts said the tone for the session was set by rising interest rates in Japan and West Germany as U.S. traders returned after the three-day weekend.

U.S. interest rates followed the trend, rising sharply. Prices of long-term government bonds plunged as much at $16 for each $1,000 in face value, increasing their yields to the 8.66 percent-8.70 percent range.

Midland firm gets grant

by SUE GUTIERREZ
Business/oil writer

Microgravity Research Associates, Inc. (MRA), a Midland based company has won a Phase II Small Innovative Research grant from NASA to develop and commercialize advanced semiconductor materials.

MRA said the two-year, $500,000 grant will support the startup of a small production facility in Huntsville, Alabama, where such materials as Gallium Antimonide, Gallium Arsenide, and Indium Gallium Arsenide will be produced in bulk wafer form. MRA says the crystal growth technology is expected to surpass any other that has been demonstrated to date.

Russell Ramsland, Sr., a spokesman for the firm, says he is excited about the project: "It's on the cutting edge of technology. These semiconductor crystals are used in computers, laser technology and high tech space projects."

The company expects the crystals to open up new areas of electronic device designs and performance for lasers, sensors and detectors, solar cells, integrated circuits, and optical switching. Five major U.S. corporations have already indicated their interest in purchasing experimental materials to test out in various electronic devices they have under development.

Sony buys into Texas chip plant

SUNNYVALE, Calif. — Advanced Micro Devices is selling a Texas semiconductor plant to Japan's Sony Corp. in exchange for $55 million and an unusual inside look at how Japanese companies manage chip factories.

Under the agreement announced Tuesday, Sony will take over two AMD facilities in San Antonio and hire about 650 AMD workers there.

The Tokyo-based giant intends to refurbish one idle production line and use it to make advanced memory chips called SRAMs. The deal gives Sony its first U.S. chip-manufacturing outpost.

AMD, based in Sunnyvale, will keep receiving the chip output of the other San Antonio plant. It also will assign engineers to watch how Sony sets up and manages the refurbished factory to get the highest possible productivity.

International alliances have become common in the semiconductor industry, but experts said that the AMD-Sony deal is one of the first in which Japanese know-how will flow to the United States, rather than vice versa.

"You cannot succeed in this business if you are not in control of your production processes," said Jerry Sanders, AMD's chief executive.

"We will do whatever it takes to make sure that we are part of the oligopoly that survives in the 1990s."

Sanders has been one of the most-outspoken critics of Japan's behavior in the semiconductor industry.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Smoking costs U.S. $52 billion, Sullivan says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Health Secretary Louis Sullivan said smoking costs the country more than $52 billion annually in health care costs and lost productivity.

In testimony Tuesday before the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, Sullivan also called on advertising agencies to join anti-smoking efforts by renouncing tobacco ads and said television stations should donate free air time to help educate viewers about the dangers of smoking.

Minorco to buy Freeport-McMoran Gold

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Freeport-McMoran Gold Co., which operates two gold mining operations in Nevada, has agreed to be bought by Minorco SA for about $705 million, officials said.

Minorco, a European-based natural resources group with principal interests in mining and processing metals, will commence a tender offer of $17 a share for Freeport-McMoran Gold, which is 61 percent owned by Freeport-McMoran, Inc. of New Orleans. The deal was approved by the Freeport-McMoran Gold board, the companies said Tuesday.

FBI investigating US Sprint

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — US Sprint said the FBI is investigating a former employee's allegations that the long-distance company obtained confidential information about competitors when it bid successfully for part of a $25 billion government contract.

The Manor Club apartments, 5009 Rio Grande, have been renamed SANTA FE APARTMENTS.

Management explains that the property manager, Lexford Properties, felt Santa Fe was a more appropriate name than Manor Club.

Few changes, other than some new landscaping and repainted outside trim, are expected at the complex.

FURR'S CAFETERIA, Midkiff and Cuthbert, which recently held a grand reopening at its extensively remodeled building, has added convenience to its menu.

Included in the remodeling was the addition of drive-through lanes — two for customers to place orders and four for orders to picked up. Todd May, senior assistant manager, says the windows are opening serving hours — 10:45 a.m. to 9 p.m. — and anything on the cafeteria's menu is available for take-out.

In addition, customers with fax machines can fax their carry-out orders to Furr's so the food will be ready for pick-up when they arrive. The fax number is 694-4437.

The State Board of Insurance has published a new booklet to assist purchasers of general liability insurance as they decide whether to buy coverage through purchasing groups.

Purchasing groups, mechanisms created by Congress for coverage of businesses and professional people, are subject under federal law to less state regulation than ordinary insurance companies.

The booklet may be obtained free from the Insurance Board's risk retention unit.

Stock Market Loses

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices regained ground this morning after opening sharply lower in response to a plunge on the Tokyo Stock Exchange and elsewhere overseas. The U.S. markets also were depressed initially by figures showing a jump in inflation.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was down 18.02 points to 2,578.83 at noon EST. The Dow had been down as much as 30 points shortly after the market opened.

Losers outnumbered gainers by about 3 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 367 up, 1,029 down and 444 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 82.96 million shares as of noon.

In Tokyo, the key Nikkei Index plunged 1,161.19 points, or 3.15 percent, to 35,734.33, its third-worst drop ever. The index was pushed down primarily by computerized stock selling by foreign brokerages in the last half hour of trading. Other overseas exchanges echoed the decline.

This morning, the Labor Department said the Consumer Price Index for January rose 1.1 percent, its biggest jump in 7½ years. However, the department said, hikes in food and energy prices, which are subject to seasonal increases, accounted for about 60 percent of the rise.

IBM price slashing affect Compaq sales

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Price-cutting by International Business Machines Corp. cut into sales of Compaq Computer Corp. in the last quarter of 1989 and caused Compaq to lose some ground in the market for midpriced desktop computers, a Compaq executive said Tuesday.

Michael S. Swaveley, president of Compaq's North American operations, said in a telephone interview that IBM had set prices for several computers as much as 15 percent below comparable Compaq models.

"We have no intention of getting into a price war with IBM," he said, adding that he was uncertain that IBM would renew the price cuts.

He said Compaq's response would be to spend heavily to develop products that offer technical advantages not available from other computer makers.

National surveys of computer dealers conducted by Storeboard Inc., a research firm based in Dallas, showed that IBM's share of the personal computer market for business fell to 32 percent in 1989, from 34 percent in 1988.

Compaq was second, with 26 percent in 1989, and 24 percent in 1988.

Apple Computer Inc. was third, with 11 percent of the market in both years.

At a news conference in Paris on Tuesday, Compaq said its sales outside the United States increased by 62 percent last year, to $1.3 billion. Of the total, 93 percent was derived from sales in Europe.

Compaq's total sales in 1989 were $2.88 billion.

TI develops its first high memory chip

RICHARDSON, Texas (AP) — Texas Instruments Inc. has produced its first memory device that is capable of storing 16 times as much information as the current generation of widely sold memory chips, which store 1 million bits.

The "first good one" was produced at TI's Dallas chip research and manufacturing complex on Feb. 12, Robert W. England, vice president of TI's semiconductor group, said Tuesday.

On Feb. 13, IBM said that it had built its first 16 million-bit memory chip.

TI is the largest U.S. maker of memory chips for sale in competition with other merchants of such devices. IBM makes memory chips for use in its own computers and other products.

TI's newly-developed memory devices are only prototypes for internal use in developing commercial equivalents, the company cautioned. The internal samples must undergo further testing for reliability and development to improve design, before being ready for sale, England said.

The chips won't be available in commercial quantity for 18 more months, he said. IBM said its chips won't be ready for commercial use for 18 to 24 months.

TI proved last week it can store and retrieve 16 million bits of information on a single chip, a key milestone in the development process.

The TI and IBM announcements come as a boost to the U.S. memory chip business.

The memory chip market has been dominated in the last decade by Japanese and Korean companies. In 1988, Texas Instruments ranked sixth among the world's makers of memory chips. The top five were all Japanese corporations.

U.S. fortunes are improving somewhat. Motorola Inc. has re-entered the memory chip business — using a Japanese design — and has climbed into the No. 2 position among U.S. makers.

TI, Motorola and Micron Technology Inc., the No. 3 domestic producer, accounted for 14 percent of the worldwide market in 1989, according to In-Stat Inc., an industry tracking firm. During the year, the Japanese accounted for 70 percent of production.

The latest development in the memory chip industry places the U.S. in competition with the Japanese, TI's England said.

"On 16 megabit, we're even right now," he said. "We haven't found anyone that's way ahead of us right now."

And, said In-Stat vice president for technology Dean McCarron: "Being realistic, the Japanese are probably ahead of us, but probably not by much."

The 16-million-bit chip is based on a TI design, but is in part an outgrowth of an alliance with Japanese chip producer Hitachi Ltd.

Congress warned to keep eye on computer security

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A study by the investigative arm of Congress has concluded that government regulators need to pay closer attention to the security of computer systems used by the financial markets.

Although there have been no reported incidents of tampering with these systems, the General Accounting Office said additional internal control measures were necessary to lower the risks that such an event would ever occur and the amount of damage that they might cause.

The GAO study was requested by Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., who asked the agency to investigate whether these computer systems were vulnerable to computer viruses. Viruses are potentially destructive programs that secretly spread between computers.

The results of the study were released Tuesday in anticipation of a congressional hearing Wednesday.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Dealing with bankruptcy notation on credit report

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Next month, it will be time to erase a seven-year-old bankruptcy from my credit report. Will that notation be dropped from my file automatically or must I apply to have that accomplished? I have been debt-free for seven years and love the feeling. Never again will I buy beyond my budget.

A. Let's start off with the bad news. Your bankruptcy can be listed on your credit report for three years longer than you evidently believe. Credit bureaus, which provide credit reports to banks, charge card companies, stores and such, are permitted to list most negative financial information, such as bad debts, for seven years — and bankruptcy for 10 years. That's a provision of the Fair Credit Reporting Act of 1971.

Doyle

That federal law makes another exception. When a credit report is used to check the credit worthiness of someone applying for a loan or life insurance policy of $50,000 or more or for a job paying at least $20,000, the seven- and 10-year time restrictions do not apply. In practice, however, credit bureaus stop reporting most adverse information after seven years and bankruptcy after 10.

That brings us to a small item of good news resulting from your bankruptcy. When 10 years have passed since you reneged on your creditors by filing for bankruptcy, all mention of that disgraceful event will disappear from your records at credit bureaus. You won't have to lift a finger to have that accomplished.

There's a simple reason for that. Credit reports involving trillions of entries are kept on computers programmed to purge each negative item by the seven- or 10-year deadline. That's easier and far less expensive than erasing each item individually.

Q. After mention of my bankruptcy is wiped from my credit record and I apply for credit, won't a prospective creditor find it strange that a 50-year-old woman has no credit record?

A. Undoubtedly. This is a credit-prone nation. Potential creditors check credit reports and cock eyebrows when there is nothing there.

But you can begin to build a worthwhile credit record before your bankruptcy disappears from your credit file. A handy way to start is by building up a savings account, taking a passbook loan against it and repaying it promptly. Your bank should go along with that because it will have the money in your account as collateral for the loan. An amount equal to the loan will be frozen in your account. The bank can't lose and will collect interest.

Also, see if you can borrow money from your employer or a credit union and repay it through payroll deductions. Try to obtain a credit card from a local store at which you are a longtime customer.

Above all else, pay your bills — including utility bills — on or a bit ahead of time. Stay out of hock.

Q. Credit applications usually ask, "Have you ever declared bankruptcy?" When notation of my bankruptcy is removed from my credit file, will I be able put down a "No" answer?

A. Not if you answer truthfully. Credit bureaus won't list the bankruptcy on your credit reports after 10 years from the date of your bankruptcy. But that won't change the fact that you once went financially belly up.

Q. Can you provide the names of banks that will let me apply for a credit card if I am willing to pledge a certificate of deposit as collateral?

A. No. This column never points readers toward particular banks, brokerage firms or other financial organizations. However, you should have no trouble getting the type of charge card you want.

Just start calling banks and ask if they issue secured credit cards. That type of card provides a line of credit equal to all or a fraction of the money you have on deposit at the bank. If you don't meet your credit card bill, the bank withdraws the money from your account.

A 10.3 percent hike in water rates led a 3.9 percent increase in residential utility bills. Gas rates and electric rates each rose 0.5 percent.

New Federal tax rates helped this category fall 2.2 percent; the category fell 1.1 percent a year ago. Social Security or FICA, rose .14 percent, and federal withholding taxes fell an average 2.3 percent. Taxes are measured as a part of the cost of living each January.

After being stable last month, health care costs rose 0.3 percent as prices for non-prescription medicine reversed December's decline and rose.

Grocery prices continued December's increase and rose 0.3 percent last month. Increases in prices for produce, meat and shelf items offset declines in prices for alcoholic beverages.

After rising in December, clothing costs slipped 0.2 percent in January as lower prices for children's clothing offset higher price tags for both women's apparel — which broke a two-month decline — and men's wear.

range that was set last summer.

Addressing the outlook for the economy, Greenspan said the anemic growth rate in the fourth quarter of last year, a half of 1 percent, may have marked a turning point.

From recent data, he said, "one can infer the beginnings of a modest firming in economic activity." He added: "While we cannot be certain we are as yet out of the recessionary woods, such evidence warrants at least guarded optimism."

Greenspan said that an inflation rate in the neighborhood of 4 percent was too high and that the Fed was determined to bring it down.

An annual growth rate of 1.75 to 2 percent would be about the same as the 2.4 percent rate in 1989, if the agricultural rebound from the drought in 1988 is discounted, he said.

PRICES

energy prices up in February," said Donald Ratajczak, director of economic forecasting at Georgia State University. "However, our projections indicate that price moderation in these areas is likely later this year."

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan — in congressional testimony Tuesday that sent financial markets into a tailspin — also said January's consumer price increase was temporary and that a reversal "is apparently under way."

Greenspan termed the January price spurt "horrendous" and said the risks of higher inflation in the present circumstances were "larger than we should be willing to tolerate."

Analysts interpreted Greenspan's comments as a signal that the Federal Reserve is intent on pursuing a tight-money policy in an effort to restrain inflation and thus will not move anytime soon to push interest rates lower.

Ramsland said that interest in the technology has been slow to develop in this country, but the Soviet Union has started up a very ambitious program at the Ioffi Semiconductor Research Institute in Leningrad: "The Russians are way behind, but they're working on catching up."

"MRA had hoped to establish its facility in the West Texas area. Midland originally put the deal together and many have an interest in the project, but we just couldn't get the funds together," Ramsland said.

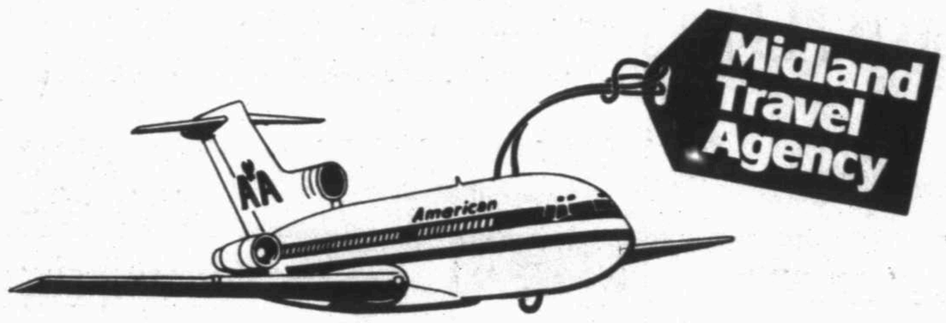

The administrative and staff functions will remain in Midland, but the high technology labroratories will go to Huntsville, where NASA has extensive operations.

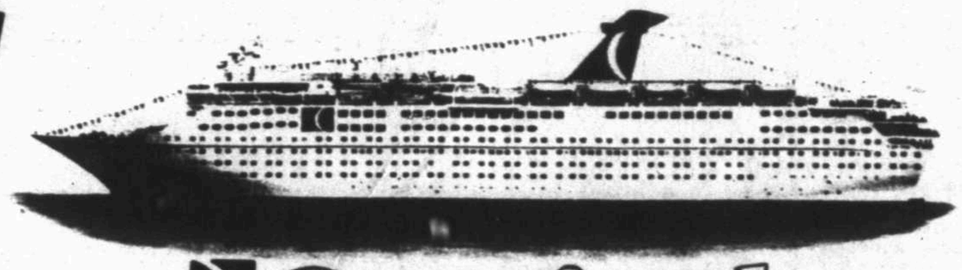

At that facility, MRA will locate its furnaces and other equipment which it developed at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. It will also move two scientists and their families into Huntsville to oversee the startup operations.

Tokoyo stock index takes nose dive

TOKYO (AP) — The Tokyo Stock Exchange's key index fell more than 3 percent today in its third biggest single-day dive ever and worst since the worldwide stock market crash in October 1987.

Traders blamed heavy computer-guided selling by foreign brokerage firms for the decline and said there was no panic-selling.

Amid concerns about possible interest rate increases, the index already had fallen a total of nearly 565 points on the previous two trading days.

The Nikkei Stock Average of 225 selected issues, the most widely followed index on the exchange, fell 1,161.19 points, or 3.15 percent, closing at 35,734.33.

It was the index's sharpest decline since a plunge of 1,203.23 on Oct. 23, 1987, following a round-the-world stock market crash. The largest single-day plunge in Tokyo was 3,836.48 points on Oct. 20, 1987.

The dollar meanwhile rose moderately against the yen.

Analysts and dealers said today's abrupt drop was largely due to waves of computer-guided selling by foreign brokerages in the last half-hour of trading. The computers figure out when to buy or to sell to profit from price differences between shares changing hands immediately and those promised for delivery in the future.

With most investors on the sidelines, the analysts said, a lack of buy orders allowed the index to fall sharply. They said market sentiment was not necessarily as pessimistic as the plunge indicated.

"The market has been very quiet since the beginning of the year, and it was even quieter today," said Keiichi Nishida of Kidder Peabody Securities. "Then came a large volume of index-linked program selling by foreign brokerage houses. It is no wonder the index droped so sharply. At least, I can say today's sharp decline was not a result of panic-selling."

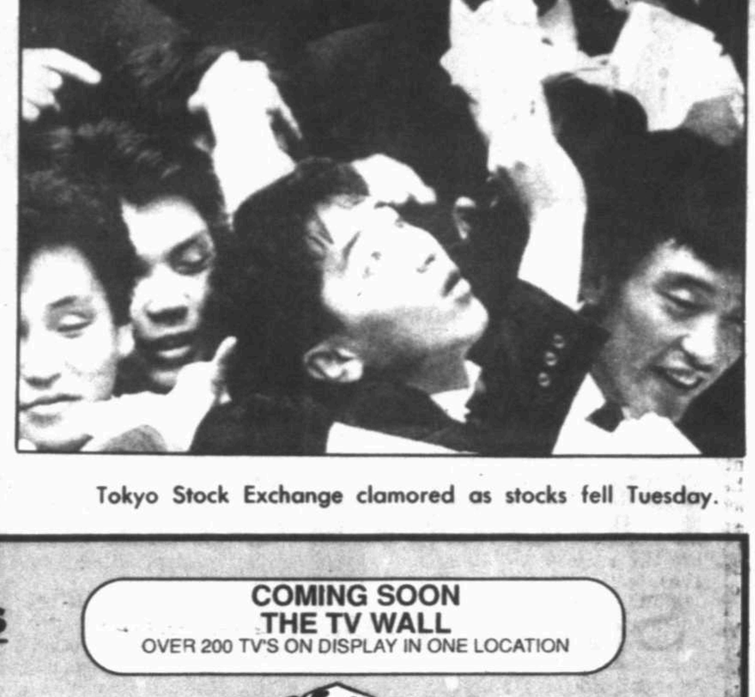

Volume traded on the first section of the exchange, where most major shares are listed, was estimated at 430 million shares, up slightly from Tuesday's 335 million shares.

Analysts also attributed the market's weakness to widening speculation that the Bank of Japan would raise its official discount rate, the interest it charges for loans to commercial banks. Higher interest rates tend to dampen stock investment.

"There is general agreement in the market that the official discount rate is going to be raised, but because of upcoming overseas travels by Bank of Japan Gov. (Yasushi) Mieno, the timing of the increase is unclear," said Michio Katsumata of Nomura Securities Co. "So participants are worrying about when it will be raised and by how much."

Robert Alan Feldman of Salomon Brothers added: "It appears the institutions have finally woken up to the fact that interest rates are up and will continue to be up."

In the currency market, the dollar closed at 145.15 yen, up 0.57 yen from Tuesday's close of 144.58 yen.

Tokyo Stock Exchange clamored as stocks fell Tuesday.

Drexel gives out bonuses before fall

NEW YORK (AP) — Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. paid some top executives bonuses of more than $10 million just weeks before its parent company filed for bankruptcy protection, a newspaper reported today.

The New York Times, quoting unidentified Wall Street executives, reported that the bonuses overall totaled as much as $350 million. The newspaper said several people inside the company confirmed the individual bonuses of more than $10 million.

Year-end bonuses are standard practice on Wall Street, although Drexel has been known for paying huge bonuses.

Drexel spokesman Steven Anreder declined to comment on the size of individual bonuses. The payments were determined last year and were part of running the firm's business, the Times quoted Anreder as saying.

"If we didn't have bonuses, we wouldn't have had anybody working for us," he said.

Representatives of Drexel's creditors said they would examine the bonus payments to determine if they could be recovered as part of the Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceedings.

Creditors may face a hurdle in trying to recover any bonuses because Drexel's securities subsidiary, which paid the bonuses, wasn't covered by the parent company's bankruptcy filing.

Eye care important to most

By JOHN A. BOLT
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) — While most working Americans think eye care is important, few take the time to have their vision checked annually, according to a national survey that found almost two-thirds of adults willing to swap a day of vacation for a free eye exam and pair of glasses.

"We found a disparity between the level of importance Americans place on their eyes and the conscious efforts made to maintain healthy eyes," said Nick Tortorello, chairman of Research & Associates Inc. which conducted the survey for Pearle Inc., the nation's largest eyeglass retailer.

"Although 70 percent are very concerned with potential blindness, only one-third of the population has their eyes examined at least once a year."

"When you first ask people about eye care generally, people don't think about it right away," Tortorello said. "But once you start talking to them about it, all of a sudden they realize they shouldn't play as much Russian roulette" with their eyes.

The random telephone survey of 1,005 working Americans — 64 percent of whom wear glasses — was conducted last fall and released Tuesday. Research & Associates said the findings can be projected to the entire adult population. The margin of error is plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Sixty-nine percent of the respondents said an annual eye exam should be covered by their health insurance; 35 percent said their own plans cover exams and 31 percent said eyeglasses are covered.

Tortorello said he was most surprised by the results which showed workers were willing to give up other health care benefits to get the vision protection: 64 percent said they would swap one day of vacation, 58 percent would exchange two days and 36 percent would forego mental health coverage.

In addition, 69 percent said they would be very likely to take advantage of routine eye exams if they were covered by insurance, compared to 67 percent who would have a comprehensive physical.

Sixty-three percent said yearly exams should be encouraged by employers and 53 percent "strongly agreed" annual exams would reduce costs in the long run.

The most feared cause of blindness is the sun: 71 percent said prolonged exposure to the sun presents "a great deal of danger" and another 24 said it carries "some danger."

Other worries were excessive exposure to smoke, 88 percent combined; excessive exposure to smog and prolonged exposure to computer screens, 85 percent each; prolonged exposure to television screens, 84 percent a great deal of stress and prolonged exposure to video games, 79 percent each.

Navy doesn't find espionage evidence in deaths of 3 sailors

SEATTLE (AP) — The Navy has found no evidence of espionage as a factor in the fatal shootings of two sailors at a top-secret base, the slaying of a pawnshop clerk and the apparent suicide of a third sailor.

But a lawyer for the third sailor's family, who raised the possibility of spy involvement, said Tuesday that Naval Investigative Service agents "apparently are just not talking to the right people."

The lawyer, Larry Scruggs Jr. of Milwaukee, also said in a telephone interview he believed his safety and that of the sailor's survivors had been jeopardized since he raised the espionage issue. He refused to identify his sources on that question or disclose the reasons for his safety concerns.

Lt. Cmdr. Keith Arterburn at the Trident nuclear submarine base at Bangor, about 20 miles west of Seattle, said Scruggs refused to give Navy investigators his sources and never previously mentioned any fears for his personal security.

"I've been, in my opinion, very cooperative with the Naval Investigative Services investigators," Scruggs said. "There are some things I cannot disclose at this time because of concern for my sources and my clients."

Relatives of 23-year-old Shyam David Drizpaul, whose body was found Jan. 17 in a motel near Vancouver, Wash., said they hired Scruggs because they did not believe the police and Navy accounts.

Authorities believe that Drizpaul, a Guyana native who lived in Milwaukee, killed David Allen Parker, 21, of San Diego, and Scott Anthony Seely, 18, of North Ridgeville, Ohio, at the base on Jan. 16, and a few hours later fatally shot Julie Lynn Tuscher, 24, at the Charleston Pawnshop in Bremerton.

The clerk's brother, 28-year-old Alan Michaels, who was critically wounded in the pawnshop shooting, identified Drizpaul as the attacker and said he took a gun from the store that was found with the body at the motel.

The Navy believes Drizpaul committed suicide.

Scruggs believes Drizpaul was killed.

A Navy statement said 35 investigators had conducted more than 500 interviews, talking to some people more than once, and had only a few people still to contact in the case.

"The investigation has not disclosed any indication of espionage or espionage-related activity," the Navy statement said Tuesday.

"That's pretty much settled," Arterburn said.

Scruggs said Drizpaul apparently had a girlfriend identified to the lawyer only as Cindy, who worked evenings, attended school by day and may have obtained sensitive information on the Trident, a key component of the nation's nuclear deterrent.

Scruggs said the woman was mentioned by sources in Milwaukee and the West Coast, including some "who actually saw a photograph of this individual."

Navy investigators have been unable to find anyone who said Drizpaul had a girlfriend, nor has the name Cindy been mentioned in interviews in connection with him, Seely or Parker, Arterburn said.

He added that he had never heard before of any picture.

A motel housekeeper, Marcy Plonski, initially told a reporter she saw a woman's long evening jacket in the room where Drizpaul's body was found, but Navy investigators found no sign of any outerwear except "a man's tan trenchcoat."

Camel caravan helps to bring anti-drug message

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Balloons wafted skyward and helicopters hovered overhead on a recent Saturday as a colorful caravan of camels, cars and a horse-drawn cart kicked off a Middle East campaign against drugs.

Saudis in the parking lot of the Malaz Sports Stadium cheered as the caravan began its five-day tour of the capital. It continued on to 11 other Saudi cities and then begin touring other Arab countries in the region.

The Riyadh vice governor, Prince Sattam, and U.S. Ambassador Charles W. Freeman Jr. took part in the festivities.

The 600-yard caravan is made up of five trucks, 25 sedans, an armored vehicle, a horse-drawn cart carrying a marching band, eight camels and police cars.

The stadium parking lot was filled with white tents containing visual displays, books, stickers, and pamphlets on drug abuse. The U.S. Information Service helped provide anti-drug leaflets for the helicopters to drop.

Helium-filled balloons, brightly colored flags and streamers brightened the atmosphere. Helicopters circled overhead.

Leaflets will be distributed to the public, and theatrical events, with drug abuse as the main them, will be performed by Saudi actors.

While Saudi Arabia's drug problem is minor in comparison to most Western countries, the kingdom has responded swiftly to curtail drug imports. Three years ago, King Fahd issued a royal decree mandating the death penalty for drug smugglers.

Since then, 21 people have been publicly beheaded for drug offenses and, according to the National Commission for Combating Drugs, drug abuse and trafficking have decreased by 50 percent.

"The decision to execute drug smugglers has had a major impact," said Maj. Gen. Ibrahim al-Maiman.

Reagan testimony 'favorable'

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Poindexter says former President Reagan's testimony is favorable to his case, but the former national security adviser wants to delay its release until after a jury is sworn in for his Iran-Contra trial.

Twelve news organizations on Tuesday suggested in a court filing that the videotape and transcripts of Reagan's testimony Friday and Saturday in Los Angeles be made available as soon as possible.

Iran-Contra prosecutors told U.S. District Court Judge Harold Greene, who is presiding in the case involving Poindexter, that they have "no objections" to releasing the videotapes and transcripts of Reagan's deposition now.

But Reagan's lawyers filed court papers asking that the tapes be withheld until the end of the trial.

Poindexter's lawyers maintained in court papers that Reagan's testimony "is favorable to the defense." But the former president did not support Poindexter in connection with key portions of allegedly false letters which Poindexter sent to Congress in 1986, according to sources familiar with Reagan's testimony who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Poindexter's letters embraced the White House's denials the previous year that National Security Council aide Oliver North was raising money or providing military advice to the Contras.

In his initial answers about the letters, Reagan focused on portions which stated the NSC staff was complying with the spirit and the letter of the Boland Amendment barring U.S. intelligence agencies from providing military aid to the Contras.

Reagan, in his deposition in Los Angeles, supported those sections of the letters. The ex-president has said publicly he did not regard the NSC as being subject to the restrictions of the Boland Amendment.

However, under cross-examination by Iran-Contra prosecutor Dan Webb, Reagan's attention was drawn to other statements in Poindexter's letters referring to the earlier information provided to Congress. That information included the denials that North was fundraising or supplying military advice.

Reagan agreed with Webb he didn't recall seeing those earlier responses at the time Poindexter's letters were sent to Congress, according to the sources. The earlier responses led to a guilty plea by ex-national security adviser Robert McFarlane to misdemeanor charges of withholding information from Congress.

Poindexter's lawyers maintained in court papers that publicizing Reagan's testimony now would have an "incalculable impact" on prospective jurors.

Disclosing Reagan's testimony prior to the March 5 trial date could result in Iran-Contra prosecutors rejecting prospective jurors who otherwise would be favorable to the defense, lawyers for Reagan's former national security adviser said.

They also said the testimony should be made public only "after the jury in this case has been sworn and instructed regarding trial publicity."

Alternatively, Poindexter asked that the media before the trial be provided only with a transcript of Reagan's testimony and that access to the videotape be deferred until the jury is sworn in.

In their own filing, Reagan's lawyers asked that copies of the tape not be disseminated until the end of the trial, and that public access to Reagan's testimony "be limited to reviewing the videotape at a location under control of the court."

Any earlier distribution of copies of the tape "goes far beyond the requirements of the First Amendment and may damage irreparably the rights of the defendant and the former president," the former president's lawyers argued.

The news organizations told Greene that Cable News Network Inc. would act as pool representative for distribution of copies of the videotape to the news media.

In addition, the news organizations suggested, transcripts should be released at the same time as the videotape through a commercial copying center selected by the news media.

Rescuers recover one body from lake

MAMMOTH LAKES, Calif. (AP) — Divers recovered the body of a man who ran across the ice of Convict Lake in an attempt to rescue a group of teen-agers and camp counselors who had fallen into the frigid waters.

While his wife watched from their balcony, U.S. Forest Service ranger Clayton Cutter, 31, fell into the water as he tried to aid the victims, who were bobbing and thrashing in holes broken in the ice, officials said.

"Just watching those heads bobbing up and down was too much," said Chris Baitx, 31, chief of the Long Valley volunteer fire department. "We figured we should have waited for the rescue team. But when people are bobbing up and down, you know what's next."

Cutter's body was found Tuesday, but the bodies of three teens from a nearby camp for young offenders and three of the adults who tried to rescue them were still missing in the lake, authorities said.

The 30-member recovery team included divers from Washoe County, Nev., military personnel and helicopters from China Lake and Sacramento, and an ice boat from the Truckee Fire Department.

A diving team from the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department planned to aid the search today.

The recovery could be hampered because the extreme cold may force the bodies to the bottom of the lake, which is 140 feet deep at its deepest point, said Mono County Sheriff-Coroner M.A. Streineck Jr.

Twelve teen-agers and two adults from Camp O'Neal, a residential facility for troubled youths, had been on a holiday outing Monday when four youths fell through the ice. Four adults — including two camp counselors — perished as they attempted to rescue the others.

For those watching from the shore, horror turned to hysteria as the tragedy was compounded again and again.

"It was a bad scene and it just kept getting worse," Baitx said.

Baitx also slipped beneath the splintering sheets of ice while attempting to rescue the victims, but he was pulled to safety. He was hospitalized overnight.

"I had to beat the ice out with my hands," Baitx said. "I was sure I was gone. I was thinking of my wife and kids and are they going to be OK, because I'm history."

The still-missing adults included the two camp counselors, Dave Meyers, 53, and Randy Porter, age unknown, and Vidar Anderson, 58, a volunteer firefighter. David Christopher Sellers and Shawn Rayne Diaz, both 15, also were among the missing. The name of a missing 13-year-old boy has been withheld.

Two other youths fell into the water, but survived: a 15-year-old boy who was treated for hypothermia at Centinela Mammoth Hospital and released and a teen-ager who clambered out of the water on his own and didn't require treatment.

A paramedic plunged through the ice when he tried to reach the teen-agers and went down three times before a diver pulled him out. He was hospitalized overnight.

The eastern Sierra Nevada ski resort community of 5,000 residents, about 250 miles north of Los Angeles, was stunned by the tragedy.

"We are a close-knit community and this accident touched everyone. ... Any kind of tragedy like this has a tremendous effect on our town," said Town Manager Paul Marangella.

The privately operated probation camp is for young people convicted of relatively minor offenses.

Convict Lake, just south of the Mammoth ski resort, got its name from a shootout between a posse and convicts in the late 1800s.

Sailor who JFK saved during war dies at 84

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Patrick Henry McMahon, the wounded sailor John F. Kennedy tied to his back and towed to safety after PT-109 was crushed by a Japanese destroyer 47 years ago, has died, family members said Tuesday. He was 84.

McMahon died Sunday at a convalescent home in nearby Encinitas.

"He thought the world of President Kennedy — he called him skipper," said McMahon's stepson, William H. Kelly of Pascagoula, Miss.

As the oldest member of the PT-109 crew, McMahon was nicknamed "Pappy."

The Wyanet, Ill., native was 37 when he enlisted in the Navy. Although he was exempt due to his age, he was determined to serve after Kelly, then 19, signed up with the Navy the day after the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941, his stepson said.

"He felt, 'If my son is in there, I couldn't face him after the war if I was sitting around the house having a beer,'" Kelly said.

McMahon was assigned to PT-109 as a machinist's mate 1st class, serving under Kennedy, then a 26-year-old lieutenant junior grade and skipper of the patrol-torpedo craft.

Over the years, McMahon told the story many times of the night of Aug. 2, 1943.

The crew of PT-109 was patrolling Blackett Strait in the Solomon Islands when a Japanese destroyer burst out of the darkness and smashed into their boat, slicing it in two.

Two of PT-109's 13 crew members died instantly. McMahon suffered burns on his face, chest, arms and legs and was unable to swim because of the pain, Kelly said.

Kennedy carried McMahon on his back, holding on to his wounded shipmate by clenching his life-jacket strap in his teeth. Other crew members held onto a plank from the sunken boat. Four hours later, the exhausted survivors reached Plum Pudding Island.

"Dad was burnt so bad," Kelly said. "He thought he was holding (Kennedy) up so he asked the president, 'Just leave me. I'll be all right by myself.' But of course, he would not think of it."

Finding little food and no drinking water on the island, the group left four days later for Olasana Island, requiring another swim of several hours. Kennedy again towed McMahon.

A few days later, with the help of island natives, American forces rescued the PT-109 survivors.

McMahon recovered from his burns and was discharged from the Navy in November 1945.

After the war, McMahon went to work for the U.S. Post Office. He started as as a letter carrier, and eventually became postmaster in Cathedral City near Palm Springs.

McMahon retired in 1975 and moved to Encinitas, where he spent the past 15 years.

Kelly said Kennedy and his stepfather stayed in touch after the war and through Kennedy's presidency.

"I remember a couple of times when he was president and came out to Palm Springs, the Secret Service would call dad, and they would sit in the limo and talk for a few minutes," Kelly said. "The president would always ask him if there was anything he could do for him and my dad always said, 'Mr. President, you've done enough for me. You saved my life.'"

When Kennedy was assassinated in 1963, Kelly said, "It was like a member of the family had died.

"He really was just devastated. It took my dad weeks, months, to get back to normal. He thought about (Kennedy) every day."

McMahon also is survived by his wife of 62 years, Rose; daughter-in-law Merlene Kelly and four grandsons.

A prayer service was scheduled for today in Encintas.

NATION IN BRIEF

Weather improving for shuttle launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Weather conditions improved slightly today for the scheduled secret military launch of space shuttle Atlantis and NASA said the countdown was clipping along at a smooth pace.

Air Force forecasters said today there was a 60 percent chance that winds and dense, wet clouds over the Kennedy Space Center will prevent the early Thursday liftoff, but that outlook is an improvement from an earlier prediction of 70 percent when experts said there was a chance of thunderstorms.

Air Force spokesman Capt. Ken Warren said the threat of thunderstorms has receded, but brisk winds and thick clouds with some rain could pose the major problems.

Early today, a service structure which provides workers access to the space shuttle as it sits on the launch pad was rotated away from Atlantis and parked to one side.

Atlantis' crew is commanded by Navy Capt. John O. Creighton. Air Force Col. John H. Casper is the pilot and the others are mission specialists Marine Lt. Col. David C. Hilmers, Air Force Col. Richard M. Mullane and Navy Lt. Cmdr. Pierre J. Thuot.

Barry's treatment to continue

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayor Marion Barry, who was indicted last week on cocaine possession and perjury charges, will continue his substance abuse treatment at a South Carolina hospital, top city officials say.

The mayor, who has been receiving treatment for what an aide described as an alcohol problem, planned to enter the Fenwick Hall Hospital near Charleston, S.C., as soon as today, sources said.

Barry decided to enter the new program at the urging of his wife Effi, one city official said Tuesday.

Meanwhile, Barry's attorney, R. Kenneth Mundy, was granted a one-week postponement of the mayor's federal arraignment on three felony perjury and five misdemeanor cocaine possession charges. In his motion, Mundy said the mayor's treatment would be interrupted if he had to return to the nation's capital for a court appearance.

Judy Smith, a spokeswoman for U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stephens, said Barry's appearance will be required at the arraignment, now scheduled for Feb. 28.

Mundy has said the mayor will enter innocent pleas to all charges.

Barry enrolled at the Hanley-Hazelden Clinic in West Palm Beach, Fla., four days after his Jan. 18 arrest on a misdemeanor cocaine possession charge.

Union calls for federal Flag Day

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Federation of Federal Employees says President Bush should "stand behind his words and embrace the flag" by making Flag Day a federal holiday.

In a statement Tuesday, the union said it has written the president, who has often expressed his devotion to the American flag, urging him to give government employees the day off.

Flag Day is June 14.

Although it is printed in the calendar, "it comes and goes every year with little or no recognition," said James M. Peirce, president of the union.

Bush has advocated a constitutional amendment to bar desecration of the flag in response to a Supreme Court ruling that burning a flag was a protected form of free speech under the First Amendment.

SPELLING BEE 1990

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1990 Regional Spelling Bee March 31 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through March 30. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

prŏd'ĭ-gəl

prodigal (noun or adj.) — People who shop until they drop, spending their money foolishly and extravagantly, can be called prodigal. The word also refers to those who waste their money and resources and then return home repenting, as in the Biblical parable of the prodigal son. The original Latin word meant to "drive away" or "squander." The word also has a positive meaning when used to describe a generous act, as when a teacher spends a prodigal amount of time with a student who needs extra help.
