Joint oil venture stalls

Chevron-Soviet deal snarls on fear, politics

■ At issue is how foreign investors will fare as the Soviet Union tries to create a new union treaty, redefine power sharing.

By Francis X. Clines
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — The largest Soviet-American business venture ever, a Chevron Corp. plan to develop huge oilfields in Kazakhstan, has become enmeshed in this nation's traditional fear of capitalism and the new muckraking of its free press, leaving President Mikhail S. Gorbachev pressing to get the deal back on track to reassure skeptical foreign investors.

The proposed 25-year, multibillion-dollar venture between Chevron and its Soviet partners in the rich Tengiz oilfields is being restudied and renegotiated at the highest levels of the Gorbachev government after a series of critical newspaper articles that warn of capitalist greed exploiting Soviet resources under the guise of perestroika, Gorbachev's program of economic restructuring.

And people like former Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze are cautioning that the proposal for the oilfields near the Caspian Sea is being misunderstood at home while the world's business leaders follow it closely as a major test of whether the government can stifle the old communist bureaucray and make foreign investment inviting.

"It is no secret that the United States will judge our readiness to cooperate by the success or failure of this project," Shevardnadze wrote in a newspaper essay. He Lottery by July?

AUSTIN — State Comptroller John Sharp said Texans could be playing the lottery by July 1 if the game is approved by voters at the polls Nov. 5. Sharp said Thursday that scratch lottery tickets would initially be sold, and that more complex games would follow about six months later. The lottery is projected to bring about $460 million into state coffers during 1992-93. Gorman's losses

NEW ORLEANS — Marvin Gorman Ministries was growing fast in 1986 and could reasonably have been expected to make $52 million more over the next 19 years, an accountant testified Thursday. Daphne B. Clark of Lake Charles was certified Thursday as an expert witness in Gorman's suit./7A

Sex, blinds, video

TAMPA, Fla. — A couple videotaped having sex in their condominium will be prosecuted on misdemeanor disorderly conduct charges that have nothing to do with the tape, prosecutors said Thursday. Alfred Stephens, 36, and Janet Paddock, 32, won't face the original charge for which they were arrested last month: lewd and lascivious conduct in front of a child, a felony that carried a possible 15-year prison term. "It would have opened up a Pandora's box," explained lead prosecutor Hank Lavandera.

N.Y. feelin' groovy

NEW YORK — Hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers were feelin' groovy Thursday at a free rock concert by Paul Simon in Central Park. "There are people as far as the eye can see," Simon said in an interview before the show. An estimated 750,000 people attended the show, said Detective Joseph McConville, a police spokesman. The concert also was broadcast live on cable television and simulcast on 200 radio stations nationwide.

O'Brien: Reaching Kuwait fires is most difficult task

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

T.B. O'Brien's Midland-based company is at the forefront of the struggle to control Kuwaiti oil fires.

■ 'We should have all wells capped by the first of the year,' engineer says.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Although the end of firefighting efforts in Kuwait oilfields might be in sight, work there is far from over, according to the Midland oilman whose company is a primary contractor in the rebuilding.

T.B. O'Brien, of O'Brien-Goins-Simpson, gave members of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association a glimpse of the situation Thursday at the group's monthly Board of Directors luncheon.

"We should have all the wells capped by the first of the year," he said.

"We have not even begun recompleting any wells. About 60 percent of the (killed) wells will be redrilled, 300 to 400 worked over and 400 abandoned. We expect to be running about 15 to 20 drilling

Budget agency foresees $362 billion federal deficit

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Congressional Budget Office said Thursday that even though the recession has ended, the federal budget deficit will leap from $279 billion this year to a record $362 billion in the coming year, because of increased spending for banks and savings and loan associations and an "explosion of Medicaid costs."

The non-partisan agency said it "now projects much bigger deficits" than it did last winter, despite the budget package devised last fall by Congress and President Bush in an effort to reduce the deficit.

Congressional Budget Office Director Robert D. Reischauer praised that legislation last year, saying that without it the deficit would be even bigger. But in a report to Congress on Thursday he said, "The budget outlook now appears worse than it did in January."

"The deterioration in the budget outlook doesn't signify that deficit reduction measures enacted last fall are ineff-

Reeves lawmen investigate professed serial killer link

Staff Report

A Reeves County sheriff's deputy said he's investigating a possible link between an unsolved homicide near Balmorhea 18 months ago and an admission by a 34-year-old Texan who claimed he killed 60 people.

Deputy Charles Titus said he was leaving "no stones unturned" in the investigation of a drifter, Gerald Michael Decote, 31, who was found dead near Interstate 10 on Feb. 2, 1990.

"When a guy says he's killed 60 people and some of them were in Texas, you have to consider it a possibility," said Titus. "I have other leads I'm checking on . . . this is just one more."

Investment trading scandal blackens Wall Street's eye

NEW YORK (NYT) — The disclosure that Salomon Brothers' three top officals had known for several months about illegal bidding by the firm in the government securities market has moved an unfolding scandal from an embarrassment to a serious threat to the future direction of the investment house.

The view of traders and analysts on Wall Street seemed to turn markedly against Salomon, after the firm's disclosure Wednesday that John H. Gutfreund, chairman and chief executive, as well as Thomas W. Strauss, the firm's president, and John W. Meriwether, a vice chairman, knew in April about an illegal bid made by the firm.

The firm faces not only possible fines and sanctions, but also possible debarment as a primary dealer in Treasury securities,

The embarrassment strikes at the very heart of Salomon Brothers, in the $2.2 trillion government securities business where it forged its reputation and where it is one of the three largest firms.

Indian tribe files claim for West Texas land

AUSTIN (AP) — The state attorney general's office is examining a legal claim filed by an Indian tribe for hundreds of thousands of West Texas acres.

The 1,300-member Tigua tribe, one of the smallest in the country, filed a land claim in 1983 with the U.S. secretary of interior for a region that includes much of Texas west of the Pecos River.

The Tiguas claim that primitive paintings and wall carvings in caves at Hueco Tanks State Park prove they once inhabited much land in West Texas.

Ray Apodaca, governor of the Tigua Indians, said the tribe has documented its claim to huge tracts in El Paso's Lower Valley by using records of Spanish, Mexican and Texas land

Derrick barge sinks, killing at least 16

■ Rescuers fear four men trapped in underwater chamber have run out of air.

HONG KONG (AP) — A derrick barge carrying nearly 200 people capsized in typoon-whipped waters Thursday, claiming at least 16 lives and trapping four other men in a diving chamber, officials and Radio Hong Kong reported.

At least 168 survivors were pulled from the sea off southern China in an air-and-sea rescue effort complicated by huge waves and poor visibility, the radio reported Friday. Eight additional men were missing, it said.

Earlier reports spoke of 195 people on the barge, but Radio Hong Kong's figures totaled 196 people aboard.

The Singapore-owned barge was lashed by 75-mph winds and 25-foot waves from Typhoon Fred before going down.

Rescuers feared the worst for the four men in the diving chamber. At 6 a.m. Friday the oxygen supply in the chamber was believed to have run out, according to members of the barge's crew. But an hour later, efforts to rescue them continued, Radio Hong Kong reported.

The diving chamber was attached to the barge, which was floating just below the surface of the South China Sea, he said.

Two specially trained divers from Singapore were called in an attempt to free the men, said Trevor Berry, spokesman for the Hong Kong Maritime Rescue Center.

Willard R. Miller Jr., 31, of Houston, Texas, indicates he is alive and well after spending three hours in the waters of the South China Sea Thursday when the barge he and 195 other workers were on capsized.

The barge was working on an oil exploration project with China about 65 miles east of Hong Kong, which had been battered by the typhoon since Wednesday.

Brenda Lee, an information officer at the Hong Kong Marine Department, said it was not immediately clear if the typhoon was the only cause of the sinking.

Radio Hong Kong quoted one crew member as saying the ship tried to outrun the typhoon, but the report was not immediately confirmed by other survivors.

"I woke up to shouts around 8:30 a.m. saying the barge was going to flip," said Willard R. Miller Jr., 31, of Houston, the barge's tower operator. "I put on my life jacket and 30 minutes later we were all in the water."

"It started getting real rough last night and there were 14-foot waves around midnight," he said. "The CDs on the side of my bed fell on my face and I thought things were just not right."

Miller said he spotted a shark while floating for 3½ hours with other oil workers before being rescued. He said the shark did not attack the men.

People in the water helped each other survive, he said. "Communications is the main thing, continue talking."

"I got a momma and a couple of sisters in Texas, I got a fiancee in Singapore and I'm gonna make it one way or the other," said Miller.

Another survivor, Kevin Banks, 44, of Norfolk, England, described the experience as "the worst possible nightmare coming true."

The rescue effort, which continued through the night, included a small flotilla and British military and Chinese helicopters.

'It started getting real rough (Wednesday) night and there were 14-foot waves around midnight. The CDs on the side of my bed fell on my face and I thought things were just not right.'

Relatives talk to hostages; Say in London

LONDON (AP) — Relatives of three Western hostages in Lebanon broadcast radio messages to them Thursday, speaking for the first time with real hope that the captives may be listening.

Peggy Say, sister of hostage Terry Anderson, sought to establish contact another way. She arrived here Thursday to meet freed hostage John McCarthy, "just to talk about Terry and to enjoy John's company." She hopes to see McCarthy next week.

McCarthy, a Briton, was held with Americans Anderson and Thomas Sutherland and Church of England envoy Terry Waite, and reported they now are allowed to listen to the radio and receive uncensored news magazines.

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, is the longest-held hostage.

McCarthy, freed Aug. 8 after more than five years in captivity, brought first confirmed word Waite is alive, and news that the two Americans are in good health.

"I think there is nothing better I could say than, 'Keep the faith,'" David Waite told his brother, who was on a mercy mission trying to secure the freedom of Western hostages when he disappeared in Beirut on Jan. 20, 1987.

Anderson, 43, was kidnapped on March 16, 1985. Scots-born Sutherland, 60, a naturalized American who taught at Beirut University, was taken three months later.

Second team of chemical inspectors arrives in Baghdad

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — U.N. chemical weapons inspectors arrived Thursday in a continuing program to determine Iraq's capability of producing mass destruction weapons.

The 21 inspectors will stay six days and examine three sites, chief inspector Jean-Paul Peroz of France reported.

He said he went immediately to one site to determine how the inspection would be conducted, but gave no details.

It is the second chemical weapons inspection team to come here.

Iraq must destroy its nuclear and chemical weapons and its long-range missiles under the April U.N. cease-fire resolution that ended the Gulf War.

U.N. officials accuse Iraq of cheating in disclosing its weapons of mass destruction. President Bush threatened to resume military strikes if Iraq fails to comply fully with cease-fire provisions.

The United Nations is using a U.S. surveillance plane to fly over Iraq to monitor compliance.

Iraq wrote U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar in protest, calling the flights a violation of Iraqi airspace, The Baghdad Observer reported Thursday.

Marxist hard-liners retain power in Laos

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Communist Laos on Thursday adopted a constitution that promises some free enterprise, but veteran Marxist revolutionaries maintained the grip on power they have held in Laos since 1975.

The constitution, Laos' first in 16 years of communist rule, gives the president even greater power and guarantees the Lao People's Revolutionary Party primacy in the political system.

It was passed on the last day of a three-day session of the Supreme People's Assembly, according to a broadcast of the official Lao radio, monitored in Bangkok.

Reflecting the shifting agenda of Communists in neighboring Vietnam and Cambodia, Laos' two most important allies, the new constitution provides for private property and competitive reforms.

The assembly that passed the constitution elected longtime strongman Kaysone Phomvihane as president, and picked Gen. Khamtay Siphandon to succeed Kaysone as premier.

Kaysone, Khamtay and assembly president Nouhak Phoumsavan have long monopolized power in Laos, starting out as Pathet Lao guerrilla leaders fighting the U.S.-backed government in Vientiane, the capital.

In Vientiane, the now-aging troika was popularly known as "The Iron Triangle."

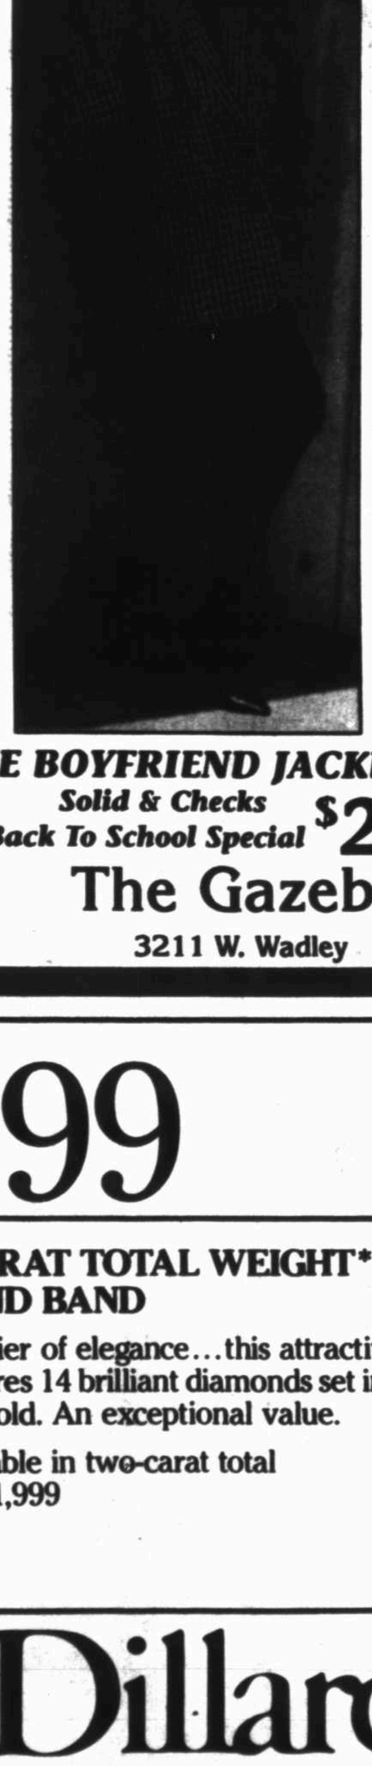

The 70-year-old Kaysone had presided as premier since 1975 and has led the Laotian Communist Party since 1955. The constitution sets the presidential term at five years.

STALLS: Major U.S.-Soviet oil venture is enmeshed in fear, politics

said that in his most recent trip to the United States, he found political and business leaders pointing to the proposed Chevron deal as a test of Soviet resolve to move toward market capitalism.

In endorsing the Chevron venture, Shevardnadze said Soviet skepticism was understandable since "it has been dinned into our heads since childhood that capitalists do nothing but rob other states by buying up their wealth for peanuts." But he wrote that the Soviet government had invested 2 billion rubles in developing the Tengiz fields since 1979 "with no payoff at all" under a communist system notorious for wasting resources and abusing the environment.

"Should we continue to 'develop' our natural resources in the same barbaric way or should we turn for help to knowledgable and skillful people equipped with advance technology and experience in running a business and making a profit?" he wrote, raising the Chevron deal to a prime test case of Gorbachev's vows to shed the past and find maximum profit in the nation's resources.

His warning was carried this week in Moscow News, the free-wheeling independent newspaper that also has focused on the privacy of the negotiations over the oil proposal, calling it a "dirty deal" that would mean a hundred-billion-dollar windfall for Chevron with the nation being "plundered and sold for a mere song."

Among other things, the controversy has apparently featured an odd tandem of opponents in the Kremlin bureaucracy disclosing critical internal documents to news reporters in an attempt to stop the plan. Chief among the documents were two Internal Ministry studies recommending against the proposal. Gorbachev reportedly overruled those traditional ministry views in his determination to push the bureaucracy toward capitalist innovation.

A critical question is how foreign investors will fare as the nation tries to create a new union treaty and redefine power sharing between the republics and the central government. Kazakhstan's authorities already are openly mustrustful of Kremlin officials in the Chevron deal and vowing to take greater control of it.

Chevron officials, after gingerly complaining about press distortions and denying accusations that bribes had been paid to clear the way for the plan, have been declining to make further comments.

(A Chevron spokesman, Larry Shushan, said in a telephone interview from the company's San Francisco headquarters: "Because we are currently in negotiations, and negotiations are in something of a sensitive stage, we don't feel it's appropriate to comment on the status of the joint venture."

(In an interview published on Aug. 5 by an industry trade magazine, the Oil and Gas Journal, the president of Chevron Overseas Petroleum Inc., Richard Matzke, said: "It would be a terrible mistake to imply that this thing has fallen apart. We've been hunkered down in the trenches the past month until the dust settled over events we don't think were really directly related to our project.")

The proposed joint venture is generating attention not only for its large scope and potential profits but also for its attempt to create a pioneer business venture even as the Soviet economic rules are being rewritten in an environment of the greatest political flux.

One economic goal in this period is to decentralize authority to the republics, including Kazakhstan, yet leave the central government in Moscow in a position to encourage credibility among outside investors. Still unknown is precisely how the central government and the Kazakhstan government might share in the Soviet profits from the proposal.

The Tengiz resources, which some specialists say could produce profits well in excess of $100 billion, beckon as the Soviet government suffers increasing shortages of hard currency export profits, in part, because of dated oilfield techniques that leave it unable to compete in the world market.

The deal may be no less important for the United States as an additional hedge against the power of the OPEC oil cartel in the volatile Middle East.

The latest negotiations involve Deputy Prime Minister Vladimir I. Shcherbakov, Gorbachev's chief executive for economic change. He said in an interview that, prompted by the Soviet leader's personal order to deal with the controversy, progress was again being made on a deal that has been pursued for four years.

Shcherbakov said ministry opponents who had been quietly leaking their concerns to curious reporters were summoned to air grievances in negotiating fashion before Soviet supporters and Chevron officials in recent weeks.

Tonight will be fair with a low in the mid to upper 60s.

Saturday is expected to be fair with a high in the mid-90s.

After an overnight low of 63, Thursday's high was 86 compared with the record high for that date of 104 in 1969. The record low for today's date was 62 set in 1972.

STATE

Much of Texas remained shrouded in clouds Thursday, but torrential rainfall in North and South Texas had decreased to just scattered showers.

High humidity contributed to early morning fog in North Texas and the atmosphere over most of the state continued to be moist and unstable. West Texas remained sunny.

Winds were light and variable but southerly at 5 to 15 miles an hour in West Texas.

High temperatures were mostly in the 80s, warmer than Wednesday's rain-cooled peaks.

NATION

Rain was scattered across the South and up the East Coast on Thursday. Rain also fell in places from northern California to the upper Midwest.

At midday, showers and thunderstorms extended over southern and eastern Texas, across western and southern Louisiana, from west-central Mississippi across southwestern Georgia, over northern and western Florida, and from eastern North Carolina across New England and the northern Appalachians.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

of amazement about the magnitude of the violations Salomon had admitted.

"The matters disclosed are obviously very serious," said William R. McLucas, head of the enforcement division for the Securities and Exchange Commission. "There were clearly some matters that will have to bear scrutiny."

Some of the growing disenchantment was reflected in the precipitous drop in the firm's stock Thursday. Trading was delayed almost half an hour on the New York Stock Exchange, and the stock closed down $4.75, at $26.875.

The mood was also evident in a growing sense on Wall Street and in Washington that regulators would have to punish Salomon severely to maintain their credibility as a strict enforcer of the rules in its own market. Otherwise, one former government official said, American regulators could not continue to criticize lax enforcement by Japanese officials in their own growing securities and bank scandals.

Talk throughout Salomon and on Wall Street centered on which senior executives might have to resign for the firm to recover.

"People are very concerned about the stability of the organization with senior management in question, and whether these guys are going to be" able to stay, said Gary Goldstein, president of the Whitney Group, a Wall Street recruiter and consulting firm. "It has got to be a real problem for Salomon Brothers."

Even the key to the firm's success could now prove to be a strange liability, Wall Street executives said. Salomon's sharp elbows and tough business practices won it a top spot, but also won it many enemies along the way. And those people are now delighted at the firm's troubles.

A number of institutions that deal with Salomon also expressed concerns Thursday about their dealing with the firm, raising the specter that Salomon could start to lose some big business if the investigations being conducted by the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Justice Department uncover further wrongdoing.

"Our business dealings with Salomon Brothers are under review because of this," said Steven Kornrumpf, assistant director for New Jersey's division of investment.

Other officials made decisions to stay with the firm — at least for now. Edward V. Regan, New York state's comptroller, said the state would continue to do business with Salomon while the investigations of the firm continued. After those inquiries are completed, the state will review its investment relationship with the firm, he said.

The scandal has also prompted calls for legislative review. Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn., chairman of the Senate banking subcommittee on securities, in a letter Thursday to Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady, asked for a report on the roles of the Treasury, the Federal Reserve and the SEC in supervising Treasury auctions, "specifically with respect to the incidents involving Salomon Brothers Inc."

DEFICIT: 'Budget outlook appears worse'now

fective or not living up to expectations," Reischauer said in a telephone interview from Colorado, where he was attending a conference. "But very substantial additional measures will be required to put us on the path to the promised land."

Neither Congress nor Bush has displayed any desire to take such measures as increasing taxes or making further cuts in domestic spending, before the November elections.

If the deficit estimates are accurate, they imply there would be less saving, less investment and lower economic growth in the next five years, with the result that living standards would be slightly lower than they might otherwise be.

The budget office's estimates of future deficits are larger than those made by the Bush administration. In July, the White House Office of Management and Budget estimated the deficit would reach $348 billion in 1992. The main reason for the difference is that the administration assumed enactment of several tax and spending proposals that Bush has made.

Comparing Thursday's estimates with those made by his agency in January, Reischauer attributed the "gloomier outlook" to many factors: lower economic growth; lower personal incomes; lower tax collections; higher outlays for Medicaid, food stamps and unemployment insurance; bigger deficits; higher interest rates and therefore higher costs for interest payments on the federal debt.

This was the year when the government was to have a balanced budget, under to the law passed in 1985. But Thursday's report says that vision of a balanced budget in the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law "has faded even further into the future."

The budget office said it believed a recession began in the third quarter of 1990 and ended in the second quarter of 1991. But the agency also predicted the federal budget deficit's rising to $362 billion in the next fiscal year from $279 billion this year.

Reischauer's report notes that the amount of federal debt held by the public next year will, for the first time, exceed $3 trillion, or 51 percent of the gross national product, a percentage not seen since the mid-1950s, when the government owed huge sums that had helped finance World War II.

In a departure from its normal understated tone, the budget office said federal spending to clean up the wreckage of the savings and loan industry and to protect bank depositors "will reach a whopping $115 billion" next year. This represents a huge increase from spending for such deposit insurance in prior years: $22 billion in 1989, $58 billion in 1990 and $77 billion projected for this year.

"Deposit insurance is a mandatory obligation of the government," the report says. "Having promised to protect depositors, the government must honor its pledge."

The deficit would have been slightly larger this year if the budget office had counted borrowing by government-sponsored corporations created solely to raise money for the bailout of the savings and loan industry.

Reischauer's report warns Congress that delaying the purchase of insolvent savings and loan associations may substantially increase the eventual cost to the federal Treasury, by allowing the institutions to stay in business for several additional years.

Thursday's report said Congress and the administration were adhering to the fiscal discipline embodied in last year's budget agreement. But it noted the agreement "moved away from fixed deficit targets" in favor of other measures intended to promote "fiscal responsibility."

FIRES: O'Brien gives PBPA well-capping update

rigs and 15 to 20 workover rigs by the first of the year."

OGS is a main contractor in the battle to put out oilwell fires started by Iraqi forces being routed from the country.

There were murmurs from the audience throughout O'Brien's Cajun-tinged narration of a number of slides showing wells on fire, the darkness caused by the smoke, and various phases of work that goes into killing the wells.

He told the group that workers had begun work this week on wells burning in the western part of the country, and that early this morning they had killed over 300 wells. He estimated that there are about 400 wells left to be put out.

He said Kuwait has 55 billion barrels of oil reserves, of which 20 billion already has been produced, and estimated that the present well fires would cost the tiny emirate between 2 and 3 billion barrels.

"The Iraqis even shot out some of their own wells. I saw a couple of dozen or so on the north side of the (Iraqi-Kuwait) border, burning," O'Brien said.

He showed several slides of horizontally burning wells, and said these are the most difficult to put out because it is difficult to get to them.

"Killing the wells is not a problem; putting the fires out is not a problem. Getting to them to work on them is the problem. I've got 1,000 ideas on how to put the fires out. I don't have any on getting to them."

Another topic raised at the PBPA meeting that could prove to be as hot as the Kuwaiti wells is the check-off program proposed by several independent oil producers.

The program has been compared to the advertising and public relations campaign sponsored by the National Beef Producers.

Midland City Councilman Buddy Sipes, a PBPA director, told the gathering that, "We independent producers have an image problem. And yet, we sit here and lament our poor public image, but we're not willing to organize a public relations campaign to improve our image."

He reported that the Independent Petroleum Association of America has hired the public relations firm of Fleishman-Hillard of Washington, D.C., to help study and design a check-off program to be funded by an assessment of 2 cents per barrel of oil and .2 cents per Mcf of natural gas produced by independent producers.

The program would operate under the auspices of the Department of Energy, but largely be administered by local, state and regional producer associations such as the PBPA, IPAA, Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association and West Texas Oil & Gas Association.

Sipes said any legislation passed by Congress establishing the program would set strict limitations on where the funds would go, and limit administrative costs to 5 percent of the money raised nationally, with a 10 percent cap on state-level spending.

He estimated the assessment could raise $15 million for a public relations campaign, but said he feels it would be better to spend half that amount — at least early on.

He emphasized that no legislation has been proposed, that the program is only in the talking stages, and predicted there would be much debate about the pros and cons of such a program during the next few months.

thorities that he was responsible for 60 killings in 17 states, including Texas.

Titus said he contacted task force members investigating Evans' claims and was waiting to hear from them Thursday.

Decote, whose last known address was Kingman, Ariz., was found dead in the highway median about 7:45 a.m. by passing motorists. He had been dead about four hours and was shot from behind with a 9mm gun, once in the buttock and once about 5½ inches above the belt line.

Investigators believe Decote, last seen at an Ozona truck stop, had been hitchhiking when his killer gave him a ride.

There were no apparent signs of motive, including robbery, for the murder.

LOVE: Minister officiates at parents' wedding

ma, Tenn., where the newlyweds now live. "I've never been in love with anyone else."

"There have always been sparks," Roger Caldwell said.

The wedding was Aug. 3, with Kitts officiating.

The two had separated in 1966 when Karen Waterfill was a 15-year-old cheerleader at a high school in Anderson County and "one of the prettiest girls in school," Caldwell said. He was then a freshman at the University of Kentucky.

They had talked of marriage, but the pregnancy changed everything.

"We didn't talk after she got pregnant," Caldwell said.

Karen's mother told Roger to stay away from her daughter. Karen, who told her mother even then that she always would love Roger, went away to a Lexington home for unwed mothers.

On Sept. 11, 1966, she gave birth to a boy, who was adopted within a week. Each year, she marked his birthday by taking long drives by herself.

"I've had some bad, bad Septembers," she says.

A few months later Roger, who did not know the child's birthdate or sex, married another woman, joined the Air Force and left town. But he told his wife, whom he divorced in 1988 after they raised two children together, that he really loved someone else.

Karen eventually would say the same thing to two husbands, she recalled.

Earlier this year, Kitts, who is working on a master's degree in divinity at Cincinnati Bible College & Seminary, obtained a court order so the state social services department could track down his natural mother and see if she wanted to talk to him.

Spokesman Brad Hughes said the agency found Karen Williams, who was married and living in Frankfort where she was working as a secretary. She eventually agreed to meet Mark and to see if Roger would meet him as well.

In June, she called Roger in Tullahoma, where he is director of sales and marketing for Life Sensing Instruments Co. They agreed to meet on June 22 to discuss Mark Kitts' request.

He came to Kentucky and picked up Karen, and she says now that after she was in his car for five minutes she knew "we were in trouble." They cried and talked and started seeing each other. They met Mark on July 2.

Karen, who has a 22-year-old daughter and a grandchild living in Frankfort, filed for divorce — something she says she'd been considering anyway — and then Roger asked her to marry him.

Kitts did not linger on thoughts of what his life would have been like had these people married 25 years before.

"I've been very happy with my life," he said. "I don't wish it was different. We're trying to build a relationship on the future, not the past."

CLAIM: Tribe may consider legal action to regain land grants, as well as church and military records.

"The Republic of Texas, the State of Texas and the United States of America failed in their obligation to protect the ownership rights of the Tigua Indians," said Apodaca, chief administrator of a 66-acre reservation in the old mission town of Ysleta, now part of El Paso.

Apodaca said that, unless a settlement can be reached soon, the tribe will consider legal action against public and private property owners to regain the land.

Apodaca and other leaders were scheduled to meet Thursday in El Paso with representatives from the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs and assistant attorneys general to discuss the tribe's claim.

The property the Tiguas claim includes parts of El Paso, Hudspeth, Culberson, Jeff Davis, Brewster and Presidio counties. The state, as a landowner in the region, was considering selling some of its property, Apodaca said.

Reports of the possible sale alarmed the tribe and persuaded members to adjust their timetable for filing suit, said lawyer Tom Diamond. He is representing the Tiguas with some help from the Native American Rights Fund in Boulder, Colo.

Apodaca said the Tiguas are interested mainly in recovering what is now mostly vacant state land. He said his tribe has no plans to evict people who own homes and businesses in and around El Paso.

"I've had people call me up and say, 'Why do you want to take my house?'" Apodaca said. "I don't want to take their land. It would be ridiculous for us to ask 320,000 people to move. At the same time, we want what is legally ours."

Some of the land being sought includes the Hueco Tanks State Park.

■ Bahrain recalls navy units, protests to Qatar

MANAMA, Bahrain — Bahrain has protested neighboring Qatar's recent violations of its territorial waters and recalled its naval units on duty elsewhere in the Persian Gulf, official sources said Thursday.

Bahrain's 13-boat navy includes gunboats equipped with Exocet missiles that were ordered last month to help the United States escort merchant ships to and from Kuwait.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said all Bahrain Emiri Navy units had returned, but would not say whether they were on alert.

Diplomats said last week that a Qatari naval vessel on Aug. 3 violated Bahraini territorial waters and was chased away by coast guard patrol boats.

The two emirates have been squabbling over a disputed collection of islands for the 20 years since both gained independence from Britain.

The dispute flared up in 1986 when Qatari forces briefly occupied the Fasht al-Dibal reef, where a Dutch firm was undertaking reclamation work. Saudi Arabia has been mediating a settlement, but Qatar in July took the dispute to the International Court in The Hague.

■ Kuwait's largest commercial port reopens

KUWAIT CITY — The commander of U.S. naval forces in the Middle East says 1,276 mines sown by Iraq in the Persian Gulf have been collected but that the remaining mines — perhaps as few as 40 — present a continuing threat to shipping.

"My guess is there are about 40 more, maybe 50," said Rear Adm. R.A.K. Taylor. "And the last 50 are the hardest to find."

Taylor spoke at a reception aboard the American flagship USS LaSalle on Wednesday marking the official reopening of Kuwait's largest port to commercial traffic.

Shuweikh port, on Kuwati City's northern edge, was heavily vandalized by Iraqi occupiers. The oil-rich emirate, invaded by Iraq on Aug. 2, 1990, was liberated by allied forces on Feb. 26.

Taylor said 30 to 35 U.S. ships remained in the region, including a battle group in the gulf headed by the aircraft carrier Abraham Lincoln. At the height of the Gulf War, there were six carrier groups and over 150 U.S. ships.

■ Exiled dictator may be extradited from Brazil

ASUNCION, Paraguay — A judge revealed Thursday that he was considering a request to extradite exiled Paraguayan dictator Alfredo Stroessner from Brazil.

The extradition request would be part of a criminal suit filed against Stroessner and other members of his government by a man who said his wife died in police custody of "psychological torture."

Martin Almada said his wife Celestina died after she was handed his bloody clothes and made to listen to the screams of torture victims in nearby cells.

The suit was filed earlier, but Criminal court judge Felix Silva revealed Thursday that he was considering the extradition request as part of the suit. It was not clear what charges Stroessner could face.

The suit was also filed against former interior minister Sabino Montanaro and the police department's former head of investigations, Pastor Coronel.

Stroessner, 78, was ousted in a February 1989 coup. Most of his top aides fled or were jailed. He was given political asylum in neighboring Brazil.

■ Military chief retires, ending rumors of coup

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — The powerful military commander retired Thursday in a move the president said he hoped would end rumors of an imminent coup.

Gen. Mirza Aslam Beg, 59, announced his resignation as chief of staff at a ceremony. His successor, Gen. Asif Nawaz Janjua, 54, will assume his duties on Friday.

During the Gulf War, Beg had bitterly criticized Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif's support of the U.S.-led allied coalition and often seemed sympathetic to Iraq's Saddam Hussein. He urged a military alliance among Pakistan, Iran and Afghanistan to reduce dependence on the United States.

President Ishaq Khan's appointment of Nawaz Janjua was an effort to smooth Pakistan's troubled relations with Washington. Lt. Gen. Shamim Alam Khan, first in line for the post and a close asssociate of Beg, was appointed chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, a ceremonial post.

Relations between Washington and Islamabad have been strained over reports that Pakistan is seeking to build an atomic bomb. Washington suspended $573 million in aid to Pakistan last year.

Early-morning bombings shatter glass, calm

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A shadowy leftist group claimed responsibility for bombings early Thursday at IBM headquarters, a McDonald's and another popular restaurant in Mexico City, officials said.

The same group set off a powerful bomb that badly damaged a Citibank building late Sunday night. None of the bombings caused injuries, said Hector Pina, spokesman for the Mexico City Attorney General's office.

The 5:45 a.m. blast at IBM shattered windows from the ground floor to the top of the company's six-story Mexico headquarters building, said company spokesman Arturo Marin.

Bombs went off around the same time at a McDonald's on the city's south side and a Sanborn's restaurant at a busy intersection in the south-central part of Mexico City, Pina said.

He said the Revolutionary Worker Clandestine Union of the People Party, known by its Spanish acronym PROCUP, claimed responsibility in a call to a local radio station.

The bombings are unusual for Mexico, which has been ruled by the same party for six decades and enjoys a relative level of political stability envied by many other Latin American nations.

PROCUP traces its roots to the leftist guerrilla movements that flared up in Mexico in the late 1960s and early 1970s but were extinguished by a tough government campaign.

The shadowy group gained notoriety in April 1990 when it reportedly murdered two guards at the leftist daily newspaper La Jornada, whose staff had refused to publish a news release from the group.

The slayings provoked a series of controversial police raids on suspected members and sympathizers of the gruop. Several families swept up in the raids said later they had nothing to do with the group and accused authorities of a hysterical witch hunt.

The daily newspaper Uno Mas Uno said the caller who claimed responsibility for the Citibank bombing linked the incident to 11 PROCUP members jailed in the wake of the La Jornada murders. The caller said the 11 were being held incommunicado.

Pina, the attorney general's spokesman, said the 11 were in various jails and prisons and were not held incommunicado. The Interior Ministry refused to comment on the cases.

Police battle students trying to march to border

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Thousands of radical students hurling firebombs and rocks battled police in Seoul Thursday after they were blocked from marching to the heavily armed border to demand unification with Communist North Korea.

At the border village of Panmunjom, 35 miles north of Seoul, 700 North Koreans joined by two South Korean activists rallied in support of the protesters in Seoul.

In Seoul, fierce fighting erupted as groups ranging from 300 to 1,000 students shouting "Unification!" surged into downtown streets, hurling firebombs and rocks at riot police.

By nightfall, the number of protesters swelled to 2,000. Police fired tear gas dispersed them.

Police said they had arrested 750 students but released most later with warnings. Police also reported injuries but gave no figures. In one clash, about 20 police and protesters were seen bleeding from the face and head.

Thousands of students have held violent demonstrations over the past three days to demand unification of South and North Korea. The government has said the violence was instigated by North Korea.

The protesters were among 20,000 students holed up at two Seoul schools since Monday to mark a week-long "pan-national unification rally." Authorities had banned the rally as a pro-North Korean activity, and thousands of police ringed the schools.

The rally and street demonstrations were the largest show of force by radical students since earlier this year, when the beating death of a student protester touched off seven weeks of anti-government violence.

The unification rallies in both Koreas were timed to mark the 46th anniversary of the liberation of Korea from Japanese colonial rule Aug. 15, 1945. It is one of the few holidays widely observed in both Koreas.

Organizers said the rallies on both sides adopted a resolution demanding Korean unification under a federal system and the creation of a nuclear-free Korean peninsula.

The conflict threatened to jeopardize talks between the two Koreas, scheduled for late this month. The fourth round of high-level talks is to address the easing of military and political tensions.

In September, both Koreas expect to join the United Nations.

Public works equal votes: Mexicans reinvent pork barrel

CHALCO, Mexico (NYT) — So unpopular was the governing Institutional Revolutionary Party on the dirt streets of this poor satellite town in 1988 that the prospect of a visit from the party's presidential candidate, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, filled local officials with dread.

"There was real concern," recalled the mayor of Chalco, Marco Antonio Tapia Sanchez. "There was a risk that people would behave in a way that was, let us say, not cordial to the candidate."

What humiliation Salinas suffered actually came some weeks after his visit, when he was outvoted two-to-one by the opposition candidates. But by most accounts, the same Carlos Salinas can scarcely walk down the streets of Chalco these days for the mobs that form of adoring fans. And many of those streets are now paved.

The difference has been Salinas's reinvention of the classic pork barrel in an initiative he called the National Program of Solidarity. Since 1989, according to government figures, the program has drawn some $3.8 billion from the country's replenished treasury to lay sewer lines, string electric lines, refurbish schools, and pave streets throughout the country.

By putting responsibility for public works projects in the hands of neighborhoods and their chosen leaders, Mexican officials say the plan has also begun to rebuild the governing party's support at the grass roots. Two and a half years after the program began, officials say, the party is already identifying community leaders from the program to groom for local politics.

'Solidarity has worked for Salinas.'

— Federico Reyes Heroles, editor Este Pais

■ More world news/2D

As the explosion of Mexico's economic crisis of 1982 marked the onset of the world debt problem, Salinas's initiative may well be taken as a beginning of the end to Latin America's "lost decade." For most of the 1980s, social spending and political stability in Latin America were largely hostage to the region's dire economic difficulties. With the crisis only beginning to ease, Solidarity, as the program is known, has emerged as the biggest and costliest social program in the region.

In mid-term elections on Sunday, government officials are hoping that Solidarity will also prove the difference between the archaic, authoritarian party that was under siege for three years and one looking ahead to further political dominance.

Chalco has already hinted at what the polls might show.

Some townsfolk like to say that they were present when "the miracle" took place; Salinas gave a speech here called "The Proclamation of the Social Challenge," in which he hinted at his plan, and Chalco was near the front of the line shortly thereafter when he began spending more on public works than local residents could have ever imagined.

It was also in Chalco that Salinas's strategy was first vindicated at the polls: when Mexico state elections were held last November, his party was comfortably back on top. The PRI, as the party is known, drew 65 percent of the valid votes — five times more than its nearest rival, the leftist Democratic Revolutionary Party.

Critics assail the program as simply a more adept version of the giveaways that have long been the currency of Mexico's clientelistic politics. They maintain that it has distorted the work of existing institutions for short-term electoral ends, and seems to spend more on promoting its projects than it does on building them. But government opponents rarely question the impact that Solidarity has had on the views that the poorest Mexicans hold of their leader.

"Solidarity has worked for Salinas," said Federico Reyes Heroles, a frequent government critic who is editor of Mexico's first magazine devoted to the study of public opinion, Este Pais. "There is no doubt about that."

More than the amount of money spent, supporters of the program emphasize where the money has come from and how it has been used.

In a region where basic social services still often depend on printing money and foreign loans, Solidarity has paid cash. Amid the restructuring and reduction of Mexico's external debt and the sale or liquidation of more than 1,150 state-owned enterprises, the Congress has increased the program's budget from about $500 million in 1989 to some $2 billion this year.

Accountant testifies Swaggart's lies cost Gorman $90 million

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Marvin Gorman Ministries was growing fast in 1986 and could reasonably have been expected to make $52 million more over the next 19 years, an accountant testified Thursday.

Daphne B. Clark of Lake Charles was certified Thursday as an expert witness in Gorman's suit claiming that lies spread by fellow evangelist Jimmy Swaggart forced him to close his ministry and cost him $90 million in losses and humiliation.

Gorman has admitted an incomplete act of sexual intercourse with Lynda Savage, another minister's wife, and some petting with another woman.

Ms. Clark was the first witness called after Gorman completed his testimony.

State District Judge Julian Bailes of Natchitoches spent the first hour Thursday in private conference with all of the lawyers.

Gorman repeated earlier testimony about a meeting at which the Rev. Michael Indest told him that he had to meet with Swaggart to discuss allegations that he had affairs with several women.

"I said, 'I want to talk to the district superintendent.' He said, 'I don't trust Cecil Janway. Jimmy Swaggart is the only person I know who can handle this that I can trust,'" Gorman testified.

He said he agreed to see Swaggart only because Indest threatened to call his family and began to dial his home telephone number.

Phillip Wittman, one of Swaggart's attorneys, asked why he didn't call Janway from his car or office between the time he left Indest's office and the time he met Mrs. Savage's husband, the Rev. David Savage for the drive to Swaggart's home in Baton Rouge.

"Michael Indest had already told me what he'd do if I didn't talk to Jimmy Swaggart. I was trying to get time to tell my family," Gorman said.

Ms. Clark said that, going by previous annual figures and the income from Marvin Gorman Ministries' first five months in 1986, it could have brought in close to $4 million that year alone.

She said that, assuming Gorman could have kept preaching another 19 years, his ministry should have cleared $26.8 million, and the Houma and Lake Charles television stations he planned to buy another $25.2 million.

She said her figures for the growth of Marvin Gorman Ministries were based on what she considered a conservative growth rate of 15 percent, rather than the 26 percent growth rate shown from 1984 through 1986.

Loss figures for 1985 didn't tell the whole story, she said.

Ms. Clark said the main reason the ministries showed a deficit was that Swaggart chose to put about $1 million in money from his television ministry into a program to treat teen-age drug and alcohol addicts, rather than investing it, saving it, or putting it to some other use that would show well on the balance sheets.

"Had it not been for Teen Challenge, Rev. Gorman never would have had a deficit," she said. "The deficit was from ... the use of his discretionary funds."

Lee Butler, attorney for one of Swaggart's insurers, cross examined Ms. Clark, questioning the practice of not counting the Teen Challenge expenditures against the balance of money.

Ms. Clark insisted that money given to Teen Challenge should not be counted as an operating expense.

Butler questioned Ms. Clark's basing her estimates on operating expenses being 75 percent of revenue. He pointed out that a Tennessee accounting firm used by Gorman estimated that operating expenses over four years, 1982-85, averaged more than 92 percent of revenue.

She defended the estimates, noting that Gorman was turning more and more toward raising money for his ministry and beginning to devote less fund raising time to the Assemblies of God church.

Irwin buried with military honors

WASHINGTON (AP) — Astronaut Jim Irwin was buried with full military honors Thursday and remembered for his twin careers as a moon-walker and as a minister whose unmet goal was to find traces of Noah's Ark.

Irwin, 61, is the first to die of the 12 men who walked on the moon. His death in Glenwood Springs, Colo., from a heart attack last Friday came one day after the 20th anniversary of his return from the moon.

"He flew because he loved to fly," said the Rev. William Rittenhouse of Nassau Bay Baptist Church, near the Johnson Space Center in Houston.

Rittenhouse recalled that while riding across the lunar surface in a motorized vehicle, Irwin's companion, David Scott, commented about the magnificent mountains in the distance.

That prompted Irwin to recite a verse of scripture, "I look into the hills from whence cometh my help," Rittenhouse said. And then, realizing his words were being monitored at Mission Control, the minister added, Irwin said "We're getting a lot of help from Houston, too."

A military honor guard at Arlington National Cemetery in Arlinghton, Va., carries the casket of former astronaut Jim Irwin Thursday. Irwin's widow Mary Ellen and adopted son Joe Chau stand at right.

Rittenhouse recalled that on watching that scene on television, Irwin's mother said to him "Listen to him, Brother Bill, he's preaching to the world."

Irwin was born in Pittsburgh and graduated from high school in Salt Lake City. He was a 1951 Naval Academy graduate and a test pilot who rose to colonel in the Air Force. He is the 12th astronaut buried in Arlington National Cemetery.

Irwin's widow, Mary, and mother were among the mourners. His grave is next to that of two other astronauts, Virgil I. Grissom and Roger Chaffee, who were killed in a fire during an Apollo launch pad training exercise in 1967.

Present, too, were fellow astronauts Richard Truly, who now heads NASA as administrator; retired Gen. Thomas Stafford, and Al Worden, who stayed in the orbiting command module circling the moon while Irwin and Scott were on the surface.

From the moon, Irwin brought back a rock dubbed "The Genesis Rock" because, at 4.2 billion years old, it was the oldest material returned from the moon.

"He said it was as if it were in the palm of a hand held out for me, saying pick it up and take it back," Rittenhouse said. In the same way, he added, Irwin felt it was his lot to find Noah's Ark.

"Somehow he felt that if God wanted it to be discovered, he would be the man to see it," Rittenhouse said. Irwin founded the High Flight Foundation, an interdenominational evangelistic organization based in Colorado Springs, Colo., and made six trips to Mount Ararat in Turkey in search of relics of the ark.

Irwin is also survived by five children.

Palestinians slow to respond to Baker's invitation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Palestinian Arabs, the last holdouts, are still delaying their response to requests by Secretary of State James A. Baker III that they attend a Middle East peace conference with Israel, U.S. officials said Thursday.

The Palestinians are seeking a number of assurances, and discussed them with three American negotiators who met also in the area with Israeli and Jordanian government officials.

The American negotiators, Daniel Kurtzer and Aaron Miller of the State Department and Edmund Hull of the National Security Council, returned home Tuesday after more than a week in the Middle East.

They reported from Washington on Thursday to Baker, who is on vacation in Wyoming until after Labor Day. He hopes the peace conference can be held in October.

Palestinian participation as part of a joint delegation with Jordan is considered vital. The Bush administration would like Israel to negotiate on two fronts — with the Arab governments who seek territory and with Palestinians who live on the Israeli-held West Bank and in Gaza.

Baker left the Middle East two weeks ago with Israel and all its Arab neighbors agreeing to attend the conference, but with the Palestinians holding out. He sent Kurtzer, Miller and Hull back last week to go over with Israeli officials the assurances he had given Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

According to Shamir, these included a pledge that Palestinians from East Jerusalem would not participate in the peace conference and that the Palestine Liberation Organization would be excluded, as well.

Shamir's purpose is to make sure Israel's retention of East Jerusalem is not questioned during the negotiations.

PLO chairman Yasser Arafat welcomed the U.S. initiative, which is aimed at recovery by the Arabs of territory they lost to Israel in the 1967 Six-Day war.

Federal task force to determine if Evans telling truth

By Kevin Moran
Hearst News Service

The odyssey that landed Donald Leroy Evans in a Mississippi courthouse confessing to more than 60 murders began with a con job in Galveston, Texas.

Now federal officials are forming a task force to determine whether the parolee, being held in the kidnap-slaying of a 10-year-old homeless girl, could be attempting the ultimate con job by claiming that he's murdered scores of people across the nation.

Evans has told authorities that during a 10-year period beginning in 1977 he killed dozens of people, most of them women.

The gruesome tale, which if substantiated would make him the worst serial killer in the nation's history, unfolded after Evans, 34, told his attorney he wanted assurances that he would get the death penalty for killing Beatrice Louise Routh, a girl he picked up on a Mississippi beach.

"We're taking it seriously," said Jenny Smith, spokeswoman for the U.S. attorney's office in Biloxi, Miss.

"You're not going to see us doing a Henry Lucas thing," Police Chief George Payne told a news conference Thursday. That was a reference to the case of Henry Lee Lucas, arrested in Texas in 1983, who confessed to nearly 600 killings in 26 states. He recanted, however, and admitted only one slaying, that of his mother. He was convicted of 13 murders and received a death sentence.

The most deaths in the United States are attributed to Donald Harvey, a nurse's aide who received a life sentence after pleading guilty to 37 murders in Ohio and Kentucky, most of them in hospitals where he worked in 1986 and 1987.

Evans on July 26 took the car of a man who befriended him and left Galveston on the journey that ended with him in jail in Gulfport, Miss.

He had been paroled April 18 to Galveston after doing time in a Texas prison for sexually assaulting a Galveston woman in 1986.

He returned to Galveston to share an apartment with Gail Stewart, a University of Texas Medical Branch employee with whom he had lived at the time of the sex crime.

Evans buttered up neighbors with fresh fish dinners. He convinced them he was an ex-convict turned faithful church-goer and charity worker. But Evans wasn't so truthful about his criminal history with others.

He told one employer he was attending Chicago's DePaul University at a time when he really was in prison.

"He could sell his grandmother a $10,000 pair of tennis shoes," said Joseph A. Whitted, 27, a commercial deep-sea diver whose car Evans took and whose identity the former convict assumed when he left Texas. Police said Evans also took $150 he got from pawning some of his girlfriend's possessions.

Along the way to Mississippi, using Whitted's identity, he cashed checks on a bank account Whitted had closed months before.

Not only did Evans not return the car, he used Whitted's birth certificate, which was in a briefcase in the vehicle, to obtain a driver's license under Whitted's name.

Evans had given another name to the homeless girl's mother, but authorities here aren't surprised at the identity switch.

He was using the name "Jason Michael McGowen" when he was charged with the April 18, 1986, sexual assault of the Galveston woman. He pleaded guilty to the charge and was sentenced to 15 years in prison. He was paroled after five years.

Evans told acquaintances he was helping raise money to build a new school at a Lutheran church here.

Evans got a job May 9 as a desk clerk at the S.S. Galveston Motel. On his application, Evans said he graduated from high school in Brownsville, Texas, studied business accounting and English composition at DePaul for a year, then took design and drafting classes at a college in the East Texas community of Athens, near Tyler.

He listed research and study in theology and church history as an area of special study.

Galveston parole officials said they ordered Evans to leave the motel job because of the potential for his committing another sex offense in the motel.

Officials said Evans met all parole rules, including participation in a rehabilitation program for sex offenders.

A revealing account of Evans' early history is in a court-ordered evaluation by Dr. John W. Goodman of Galveston, who conducted three interviews with him before his trial in the rape case.

Evans told Goodman he had five brothers and three sisters, one of whom died of cancer at age 6.

He told Goodman he completed elementary school in Michigan and middle school in Ohio. He said he attended a year of high school in Brownsville but dropped out because of "difficulty with teachers and other students."

He said he received extensive counseling during his year of high school in Brownsville, and said he attempted suicide at 16 by using roach poison and drugs.

He said he later joined the Marine Corps but was discharged because of psychiatric problems.

Maj. Rick DeChaineau, a spokesman with the Public Affairs Office of the Marine Corps Headquarters in Washington, D.C., confirmed that Evans joined the Marines in San Antonio, Texas, on Sept. 30, 1975, at the age of 18, and was discharged less than a year later.

Evans was listed as a patient in Philadelphia from July 1976 until his discharge from the Marines on Sept. 2, 1976.

Court records state that Evans received psychiatric care in veterans hospitals in Illinois and Michigan in 1978 and 1979.

In prison, he wrote to Galveston State District Judge Roy Engelke, asking for psychiatric help.

"I'm not at all an idiot of any sort," Evans told Engelke. "I do have a mental illness and want very much to receive proper treatment in the veterans' hospital. But how can I when I can't trust a lawyer to prove my innocents (sic) so I can get treatment."

Step-uncle says Evans abused as child

WATERVLIET, Mich. (AP) — Relatives of a former Michigan man who has confessed to more than 60 killings — including one in his home state — said Thursday he and his siblings were abused by their mother.

But Donald Walker, the step-uncle of Donald Leroy Evans, said his nephew wasn't treated any worse than the others.

"The family didn't (say) that any of the children were overly abused. They were all treated that way," Walker said in a telephone interview from his Watervliet home.

Evans was the third youngest of nine children born to Juanita and Larry Evans in Watervliet.

"They can blame it on his child life but if that were true, every other person would be a serial killer. It's just the way some people are," Walker said.

Evans, 34, grew up in the rural Berrien County town in southwestern Michigan. Walker, married to the sister of Evans' father in 1967, said Evans lived in the area on and off after he was 10 years old.

"He just seemed to be cold. He could hurt somebody and it wouldn't bother him," Walker, 59, said of the nephew he hasn't seen in eight years.

The Detroit Free Press said Thursday that Evans told authorities he killed a man near Hartford, Mich., in 1979 or 1980. Evans claimed he dumped the body on the banks of the Paw Paw River in Van Buren County, the newspaper said.

State police Thursday would not comment on the report.

Evans' brother, Lawrence Evans of Augusta, Ga., told The Sun Herald of Biloxi, Miss., that Evans was a humorless child who grew into an angry and vindictive man.

As children, Evans and his five brothers and three sisters were beaten by their mother and their father ignored the abuse, Lawrence Evans said.

His mother could not be located for comment, although Walker said he believed she lives either in Illinois or Indiana.

Lawrence Evans said his parents separated in 1964, when Donald was 7 years old. Donald lived with his mother, but when his father remarried in 1970, he showed up on the doorstep, The Sun Herald said.

Donald Evans later turned into a drifter, said his stepmother, Florence Evans, who was reached by telephone in Sebring, Fla., where she and Evans' father now live.

Lawrence Evans said his brother was very intelligent, but he apparently attended school for the last time while he was in Columbus, Ga. Records there show Donald Evans dropped out in December 1972, when he was in the ninth grade.

Lawrence Evans said he has not seen his brother since 1981, when Donald threatened to burn down his grandmother's house — with his father and stepmother inside — because his grandmother left him out of her will.

NATION IN BRIEF

■ Report lists attacks abroad

WASHINGTON — There were more than 230 attacks against American targets around the world last year, according to a State Department report released Thursday.

Twelve U.S. citizens were killed, 17 were wounded and 26 were kidnapped, according to the report compiled by the department's Bureau of Diplomatic Security. The report said 22 of the 26 kidnapped citizens were released.

Most of the politically motivated violence — 156 attacks — occurred in Latin America; 31 attacks were in East Asia and the Pacific region; 21 in Africa; 17 in Europe; and eight in the Near East and South Asia.

The targets ranged from businesses owned by or affiliated with Americans to Mormon churches and buses carrying American schoolchildren. The assailants included drug dealers, terrorists and muggers.

The report was issued to inform the public about threats to Americans abroad.

■ Embassies to refuse $100 bills

WASHINGTON — Ben Franklin was one of the first diplomats in U.S. history, but his face is no longer welcome at American embassies abroad.

The State Department has ordered its overseas posts not to accept $100 bills for fear they might be counterfeit. Fifties are also viewed with suspicion.

U.S. posts abroad charge fees for passport renewals, visa issuance, library use and a variety of other services. The services are usually provided by junior foreign service officers.

"A cashier or consular officer is then stuck with a bad bill and has to pay for it out of his own pocket," said the official.

Problems with counterfeit $100 bills have led the Treasury to print millions of subtly changed C-notes with a tiny polyester thread imbedded in them to prevent their duplication by color copiers.

The Federal Reserve will start circulating the new bills in mid-August.

■ Man thinks he owns Kennedy home

PALM BEACH, Fla. — A disoriented trespasser who believed he won the lottery and now owned the Kennedy family estate was taken from the grounds of the seaside mansion to a mental health center, police said.

John Hurst, 28, propped a ladder to the second floor of the estate Wednesday and told the caretaker, "I'm looking for my wife. I think she may be up there," according to police reports.

He later told police his friends had told him he won the lottery and he believed the house belonged to him.

The estate, once the winter White House for President Kennedy, has been in the news this year after a woman reported she was raped there Easter weekend by William Kennedy Smith, a nephew of Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

Smith is scheduled for trial in West Palm Beach on sexual battery charges Jan. 13.

■ Swastikas painted on library

NEWTON, Mass.— Police are pulling out the stops to nab racist vandals after the city's sixth hate crime in as many weeks, including nine swastikas found Thursday painted on a brand-new public library.

"We can erase the sign but we can't erase the hate," Mayor Theodore Mann said.

Police Chief William Quinn said investigators have few leads in the recent series of crimes, but planned to pursue the latest case vigorously.

Nine orange swastikas, which measured 2 feet by feet, were painted on the library that has not opened yet.

The other incidents in Newton, a Boston suburb of about 80,000 residents, included swastikas painted on playgrounds, stop signs and a Jewish community center.

Earlier this week someone painted a single black swastika on the famous Plymouth Rock in nearby Plymouth.

Amish family members die in wreck

MOUNT GILEAD, Ohio — A man pleaded innocent Thursday in the deaths of six members of an Amish family who were killed in a crash of his pickup truck and their horse-drawn buggy.

Douglas A. Lyons, 26, of Fredericktown pleaded innocent in Morrow County Common Pleas Court to six counts of aggravated vehicular homicide and four counts of aggravated vehicular assault. Four other family members were injured.

He has been free on $30,000 surety bond since last Friday.

The State Highway Patrol said Lyons was traveling 50-60 mph in a 55 mph zone when his truck hit the buggy Aug. 5.

The patrol alleged that Lyons had been drinking and refused to submit to blood or breath tests.

Lyons was driving without a license, which was suspended last year after a conviction of driving while intoxicated. He was eligible to have the license reinstated, but did not pay the money necessary to do so.

■ Play to end with real wedding

BATH, Maine — Two actors are staging a play later this month that features a dastardly villain, lovely maidens, a hero and a wedding — their own.

Alice Kira and Mark Mannette, both of Portland, came up with the idea of mixing a play with a real wedding ceremony in February when Mannette proposed.

"We're both kind of unique individuals and not exactly traditional so we thought this would be a unique way to express ourselves," Mannette says.

The couple, both veterans of the state, says the play will have all the ingredients for a long-running stage extravaganza, with a wicked villain and a happy ending when the stars are united in matrimony.

The one-time performance on Aug. 25 won't be open to the public. About 150 to 200 guests are expected.

■ Kayaker paddles around Alaska

BARROW, Alaska — Not even the "beastly easterlies" stopped a kayaker from completing his trip around Alaska — after his third summer of paddling.

Paul Caffyn, 44, of New Zealand, reached the village of Inuvik on Canada's northwest Arctic coast Tuesday. He started from the southern tip of the Alaska Panhandle in 1989. Inuvik is about 200 miles from Alaska's border with Canada's Yukon Territory.

Caffyn told radio station KBRW in Barrow he averaged about 30 miles a day and, toward the end, encountered a lot of fog and wind he described as "beastly easterlies."

He also ran out of food, so the first thing he did after reaching Inuvik was eat. "I came in fairly lean," he said Wednesday.

Next summer, Caffyn plans to paddle from St. Lawrence Island in the Bering Sea across the Bering Strait to the Soviet Union.

Compiled from Reporter-Telegram wire services.

Dick Thornburgh

Thornburgh ready to hit campaign trail

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Dick Thornburgh ended a stormy three-year reign as the nation's top prosecutor Thursday, defending his record on crime and drugs while setting the stage for a Senate race in Pennsylvania.

"There is much of which we can be proud," Thornburgh told his staff during a farewell ceremony at the Justice Department. "We have done our level best to call 'em as we see 'em without fear or favor from any quarter."

Thornburgh, 59, leaves as the Justice Department is being criticized for dragging its feet in the investigation into the scandal-ridden Bank of Credit and Commerce International.

The department has also come under fire for stepping into a court case stemming from a protracted anti-abortion protest in Wichita, Kan.

"This department is constantly at the center of controversy and we reap more than our share of carping and criticism," said Thornburgh, who received a lengthy standing ovation after his speech.

Thornburgh has resigned in the hope of unseating Democratic Sen. Harris Wofford. Wofford was appointed to the Senate in May after the death of Sen. John Heinz, a Republican.

Thornburgh, who has been tight-lipped about his campaign plans, made only one reference to the race in his farewell speech, saying he was anticipating an "exciting campaign."

"Beginning tomorrow, I'll be out there as a campaigner," Thornburgh told reporters later.

He's expected to make public appearances in Pennsylvania next week, although he may not formally announce his campaign for a couple of weeks.

A former Pennsylvania governor and federal prosecutor, Thornburgh was named by President Reagan in 1988 as the highly touted replacement for Attorney General Edwin Meese, who was sullied by legal troubles. But Thornburgh's sometimes haughty manner won him enemies on Capitol Hill, and his appointments drew widespread criticism.

His first choice for civil rights chief was rejected as unqualified by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Four aides Thornburgh brought from Pennsylvania eventually left their positions under a cloud.

One of those, Henry Barr, was sentenced May 30 to 16 months in prison for using cocaine and lying about his drug use on his application to be Thornburgh's adviser on criminal law.

Guarding privacy must have limits

Employer intrusions into employees' private lives have provoked wide, healthy reaction. Now it's the reaction that risks going too far.

Some states, most recently New Jersey, have outlawed company rules against smoking at home, without disturbing a smoke-free workplace or anyone's right to charge higher health insurance rates for extra health risks. Other states have moved to protect personal lifestyle choices that don't affect job performance.

Now New York's Legislature has passed a bill prohibiting discrimination against workers for "legal activities" off the job.

This time, however, the worker protection sweeps broadly across long-disputed labor-management terrain. Gov. Mario Cuomo, who vetoed a similar bill last year, is prudently calling for further fine-tuning.

As in other states, New York's lifestyle battle is a blend of ideals and economics. Companies meddle in their workers' off-the-job activities chiefly because measures like incentives to lose weight or quit smoking tend to reduce costs. The American Civil Liberties Union proclaims the liberty of working Americans — in agreement with organized labor and cigarette makers.

New York's Assembly and Senate have approved a bill giving workers and the state attorney general the right to sue employers who refuse to hire or promote people because of engagement "in a legal activity during non-working hours."

Supporters say this insulates workers from unreasonable discipline for things like overeating or riding motorcycles that might be motivated by concern for health — or merely the boss's whim.

Business groups and the State Newspaper Publishers Association lobby against it. They argue that companies must retain leverage over some after-hours activities, like moonlighting for a competitor or marching in a demonstration against a company's product.

The bill, sponsored by Assemblyman Frank Barbaro and Sen. James Lack, has an exception to protect an employer's "legitimate conflict of interest policy" but only to the extent that those policies safeguard "trade secrets, proprietary information" or undefined "other proprietary interests." That's too narrow an exception for a broad and still novel right.

Proponents of these privacy measures are pressing the right questions. They don't contend that smoking is a civil right. They simply ask by what authority employers extend their supervision into the living room or kitchen. Employers, too, may argue their side.

Further clarification of the New York bill is in order before the New York governor acts. Properly defined, lifestyle laws can protect the legitimate interests of the worker and respect those of the boss.

Parks service halts horsing around

WASHINGTON — Horses seem to be for Vice President Dan Quayle what military aircraft are for White House Chief of Staff John Sununu. Both men enjoy riding at taxpayer expense.

Anderson

The latest controversy surrounding Quayle concerns a plan that was recently axed by the National Parks Service to triple the number of horse stables at Manassas National Battlefield Park. The park, which commemorates two famous battles of the Civil War, lies only a few miles from the White House and has recently become a favorite spot for the Quayle family to go horseback riding.

Manassas is currently the only battlefield park to have any stables at all, but this year the park service decided it needed more stables so it could train park police officers and Secret Service personnel who accompany the second family on their jaunts.

But as soon as the plan was announced, it set off a stampede. Historical preservationists charged that the plan trampled on the park's mission to restore the area to its appearance at the time of the Civil War. An equestrian center at Manassas in 1987 was rejected on similar grounds by National Park Service Director William Penn Mott.

Rep. Peter Hoagland, D-Neb., felt strongly enough to unsaddle the Interior Department's appropriations bill. No government funds to build stables at Manassas are permitted under his amendment. In a written statement accompanying his amendment, Hoagland disclosed a memo from the Secret Service. The memo cites the additional stables as vital for providing workspace for training the Vice Presidential Protective Division.

Hoagland, a member of the Subcommittee for National Parks, noted that the construction would come at a time when the park service is strapped for cash. Many parks have slashed visitor center hours, ranger salaries are notoriously low and many trails and facilities are in chronic disrepair.

Hoagland wrote: "It just does not seem right to find extra money for the horseriding activities by high government officials when the administration tells us they cannot fund the pressing needs of the public's parks."

A Quayle spokesperson told our reporter Jan Moller that Quayle had had no direct hand in proposing the new stables, and that this controversy is less about the riding program than the longtime fights over the use of historic battlefield parks.

Even before the congressional calvary came charging, National Park Service Director James Ridenour put the stables on hold, apparently upset over the adverse publicity it was generating for the Parks Service and the vice president. Perhaps he was remembering the flak from last autumn's Columbus Day weekend.

Those were the days of the infamous government shutdown, when Congress' inability to reach a budget agreement forced many non-essential government operations to shut down for the weekend in an attempt to save money. Though Manassas was one of the many parks to shut down that weekend, the three remaining rangers on duty were required to accompany the Quayle family on a riding excursion through the park.

CHARLEY REESE

Right to bear arms belongs to all people

There's a big move today to disarm the American people and deprive them of their Second Amendment right to keep and bear arms.

A familiar argument used is that the Second Amendment doesn't apply to individual Americans, only to the organized military like the National Guard. It's familiar, but it's stupid and you don't need to be a legal scholar to see why.

Reese

Let's look at the language:

"A well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed."

Well, as our first chief justice, John Marshall, once noted, the men who wrote the Constitution were intelligent men, pretty handy with the English language, and we have to assume they said what they meant to say.

If they had intended to say that only members of the militia have a right to keep and bear arms, they would have said so. What they said, to put it in modern English, is that one reason (but not the only reason) the people's right to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed is because the people make up the militia and the militia is necessary to the security of a free state.

Let's take the identical sentence structure of the Second Amendment and substitute different subjects.

Suppose the Bill of Rights said, "A thriving newspaper industry, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to speak and write shall not be infringed."

Would anyone but an idiot say that they meant that the only people who have the right of free speech are employees of newspapers? Of course not.

Suppose the Bill of Rights said, "A democratic legislature, being necessary to the continuance of a free state, the right of the people to assemble and petition shall not be infringed."

Would anyone but an idiot conclude that only legislators have the right of assembly and petition.

If I told you: good night vision, being necessary for a successful soldier, the right of parents to give their children carrots shall not be infringed, would you then conclude that only children planning to be soldiers should be allowed to eat carrots? Of course not.

In every other instance where the Bill of Rights employs the words, "the right of the people," it is understood that people means everyone. Only charlatans out to deprive Americans of one of their liberties, specifically the right to be armed, argue that "the right of the people" means only a narrow class of individuals in the Second Amendment but not in the others.

The men involved in the American Revolution and the new Republic were not as confused as people are today.

Sam Adams said, "The Constitution shall never be construed...to prevent the people of the United States who are peaceable citizens from keeping their own arms."

James Madison, replying to a critic who doubted the Republic would last, said, "Americans have the right and advantage of being armed — unlike the citizens of other countries whose governments are afraid to trust the people with arms."

Thomas Jefferson, explaining the new country to a European, said, "The constitutions of most of our states (and of the United States) assert that all power is inherent in the people; that they may exercise it by themselves; that it is their right and duty to be at all times armed . . ."

On another occasion, Jefferson wrote, "The strongest reason for the people to retain the right to keep and bear arms is, as a last resort, to protect themselves against tyranny in government."

You may not wish to own a firearm or ever need one, but you would be wise to follow Jefferson and Madison and not let some modern shysters and elitists deprive you of a important right. A right you can't defend is a right you don't have.

U.S. legal system needs strong reform

A man in Florida sues a styling shop for $10,000 over a bad haircut. A beauty queen sues for $9.5 million for being left off a pageant program.

Those are just two recent examples of a burgeoning national pastime: suing over just about anything. . . .

Vice President Dan Quayle is expected to present a laundry list of changes during a speech to the American Bar Association this week. . . .

Coming a few months after release of a massive study by the American Law Institute that recommends less radical but still significant changes, the proposals should provide a basis for attacking some of the system's abuses. . . .

State and federal lawmakers must discourage the lottery aspect of the U.S. legal system that lures frivolous claims onto crowded dockets.

Demos hostage inquiry is an act of desperation

It's late in the day to examine the charge that the 1980 Reagan-Bush campaign cut a deal with terrorists to prolong the captivity of American hostages until after the completion of the 1980 elections. There's a strong possibility that Bill Casey, 1980 Reagan campaign chairman and later head of the CIA, took the answer to this case to the grave with him.

There is an automatic appearance of political motivation in the probe, since it was announced by the Democratic leadership. The hostage issue may well be the single most painful and personal public policy issue with which Americans have had to deal since Vietnam. The moment the public gets the impression someone is manipulating this issue for political advantage, the response will be extreme anger. . . .

There's little to gain for the Democrats in this investigation and much to lose. It's the action of a desperate party.

Democrats lack vision for presidential race

The reason Sen. Jay Rockefeller bowed out of the presidential race — he was not "ready" — suggests why Americans do not think Democrats are ready for the White House.

It recalls the announcement by Sen. Bill Bradley a few years ago that he would not run because he needed more contact with the country "through unhurried travel."

Gelb

What do these guys want to do, memorize the Social Security regulations and spend another dozen years preening in Congress? Ronald Reagan didn't know his multiplication tables when he ran for president in 1980.

But he knew how to lead and what he wanted. George Bush also looks like more of a leader than any of the present Democratic challengers.

Americans had confidence in President Reagan because he had direction, conviction and ideas. Most of his beliefs turned out to be a disaster for the country. He and Bush abandoned the needy middle and lower classes for the greedy. But the middle class went along mainly because the Reagan-Bush team — more than Democrats — seemed to know where it was going.

Democrats have fallen by the presidential wayside not because they are liberals, but because they seem to have no coherent philosophy, no central thrust to bind their specific proposals, nothing to mark their leadership.

Beginning with President Kennedy, and with the brief exception of President Johnson's Great Society programs, Democrats deserted the liberal faith — government as the prime instrument to tackle national problems — for a muddled pragmatism. It has been downhill from there.

Democrats started to look like technicians. They presented themselves as the party that could provide specific answers to real problems — the five-point plan for this and the seven-point program for that and the 16 things wrong with Reaganomics. Everybody went to sleep.

Most people do not vote for platforms, but for presidents, for leaders and for general ideas. Leaders clear paths for specific solutions by creating majorities and knocking down obstacles. The most cogent programs for education or health or whatever falter unless embedded in a convincing political philosophy.

Winston Churchill, Charles de Gaulle and Franklin Rooseveit instinctively grasped that they must generate bow waves, not blueprints. President Carter was a brilliant detail man whose accomplishments suffered for lack of policy and purpose. Michael Dukakis sprang from a similar compassless pragmatism.

Today, Democrats like Bradley and Rockefeller convey tentativeness and self-doubt. Others like Sen. Al Gore, Paul Tsongas and Rep. Richard Gephardt come across as smart legislative mechanics, not as leaders.

Sen. Tom Harkin is a strong liberal with an unformed personal image. Mario Cuomo has been a governor of great talk and little action.

Without the power of conviction and direction, Democratic presidential hopefuls have been unable to resist the demands of special-interest groups. Democratic majorities in Congress reinforce this impression of Democrats as special pleaders.

In the process, the parties somewhat reversed historic roles. Democrats, traditionally the party of movement and ideas, appeared to become advocates for entrenched interests. Republicans, traditional defenders of the status quo and suspicious of activism, emerged as the party of change and creativity.

Democratic hopefuls would do well now to reflect on what they really believe. The American people will not place more faith in Democrats than Democrats place in themselves. Voters can smell self-doubt and muddle, and they can smell that no Democrat seems ready yet for prime time.

Italian police arrest third defendant in U.S. murder

By Linda Deutsch

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It was a perfect August day in Sardinia when John Hawkins' luck ran out.

Hawkins

There he was, young and handsome — some would say beautiful — returning from a date with one of his many lovers, heading for the fire-engine red catamaran he had sailed to the world's most glamorous ports.

And then the Italian police moved in.

There was a struggle, and the three-year worldwide race to evade California murder and insurance fraud charges was ended.

Hawkins, 28, one-time partner in the Ohio-based Just Sweats apparel company, was the missing defendant in a complex murder-for-money mystery.

The alleged scheme involved two of Hawkins' friends, who are in jail in Los Angeles. Dr. Richard Pryde Boggs was convicted in the 1988 murder of bookkeeper Ellis Henry Greene, whom authorities say he met at a gay bar and brought to his office to be killed.

Prosecutors say Greene resembled Boggs' friend, Melvin Eugene Hanson, who switched identities with the dead man.

They say Hawkins claimed the body, had it cremated, and moved quickly to collect $1.5 million in insurance on Hanson, his business partner in the bankrupt athletic clothing store chain, prosecutors said.

Just Sweats was founded in 1985 and sought federal bankruptcy protection in 1988.

There was poetic irony in Hawkins' capture. The curly haired, blue-eyed Hawkins, by all accounts a sexual chameleon, was turned in by a woman. A woman who loved him as many women had. A woman who learned that men had loved him too. Famous men.

"She was very, very angry," said Glendale police Detective Jon Perkins.

Hawkins, it was alleged, had skipped with an estimated $1 million of the insurance money, leaving behind his jailed friends and many lovers who kept silent.

"He was a master manipulator of people and friendships," Perkins said. "Because of their loyalty people would not give him up."

The 24-year-old Dutch woman had met Hawkins on Ibiza in 1990 and again in Amsterdam, Perkins said.

"Then she saw implications on this TV show that he was homosexual," he said. "She couldn't believe it."

She called the TV station in Amsterdam and was put in touch with "The Oprah Winfrey Show" and "America's Most Wanted," which aired a story about the fugitive. They called the police.

The U.S. Naval Investigative Service in Sardinia found Hawkins and his boat Carpe Diem, Latin for "Seize the Day."

Hawkins remains in custody in Italy while authorities discuss extradition.

Boggs, 58, a brilliant Harvard-educated physician, claimed at his trial that Hanson blackmailed him to sign a phony death certificate or he would expose Boggs' homosexual life and ruin his practice.

The hasty cremation made it impossible to establish how Greene died. Boggs said it was a heart attack; prosecutors suggested he was suffocated.

Boggs maintained his innocence, but the jury recommended life in prison without parole. Sentencing is scheduled for Aug. 30.

Hanson, 50, pleaded innocent and is scheduled for a preliminary hearing Aug. 29. His driver's license and birth certificate were found on Greene's body before it was cremated. When he was arrested entering the country from Mexico, authorities said he carried identification cards in 13 different names.

Boggs, a husband and father of four children, testified his marriage became a shambles after he realized in his mid-30s that he was sexually attracted to men. He met Hanson and Hawkins after he adopted a gay lifestyle, which he claims was the reason for his prosecution.

"We are prosecuting these people because we feel they conspired to commit a terrible murder," said Deputy District Attorney Albert MacKenzie. "Whatever their sexual preference or the victim's sexual preference is irrelevant."

Hawkins romanced beautiful women while selling his sexual services to rich and famous men, Perkins said.

"He was getting $5,000 a call," Perkins said. "If I told you the last guy he serviced in L.A., you wouldn't believe it."

At New York's Studio 54 nightclub where Hawkins was a bartender in 1981, he became the lover of the designer Halston and also of the club's owner Steve Rubell, Perkins alleged. Both have died.

In his years on the run, Hawkins changed his name frequently, dyed his hair and wore phony beards and mustaches, but did not undergo plastic surgery, Perkins said.

"He was too vain to change his face," the detective said. "He did have lip injections to make his lips fuller while he was in Canada." He said Hawkins also took steroids to add bulk to his 6-foot-1, 190-pound frame.

Computers measure tree moisture

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — A casual conversation between friends has led to what officials expect to be a more efficient and accurate method of measuring fire danger at Yellowstone National Park.

Park fire management worker Larry Johnson last year told Bill Parkhurst, a Wichita State University electrical engineering assistant professor, that his duties include checking deadwood for moisture to see how quickly it would burn should a fire begin.

Workers at the 2.2 million-acre park collect deadwood, bring it to the fire management office, weigh it, dry it in an oven and then weigh it again. The difference in the measurements provides information on how much water is there.

"What they needed was a method to be able to measure how much moisture is in the wood by computer," Parkhurst said.

The solution was a computerized weather station that gathers information from eight electronic probes inserted into wood. Parkhurst has been testing the device on wood he placed on the roof of a Wichita State University building.

Since eight readings can be taken simultaneously, the probes are inserted at different depths. Parkhurst said this allows data gathering on how long it takes for moisture to soak in and evaporate.

"If we have just a real quick rain, it just goes into the outside of the wood. A couple of days of wind will evaporate that," Johnson said. "But if there is moisture clear to the core, it will take a couple of weeks to evaporate out."

Eventually, Parkhurst and Johnson want to modify the devices to measure snow depth and density.

"The snowpack during the winter can determine how much moisture we start off with," Johnson said. "We need to know how much snow there is and how much water is in the snow.

"Snow can be very dry. Ten inches of snow may only equal 1 inch of water."

A computer model may be able to translate snow measurements into information usable in fire danger predictions.

Dick Bahr, assistant fire management officer at Yellowstone, said staffing and procedures change depending on the danger rating, five levels from low to extreme.

Lookouts at mountain stations 10,300 feet above sea level watch over the 3,472 square miles of park for newborn fires.

"We're in the extreme category less than 2 percent of the time," Bahr said. "That's when we can move into prohibiting campfires, all fire staff days off are canceled and everyone works seven days a week and longer days."

The cooperative agreement between Wichita State and Yellowstone is for five years.

Parkhurst is not sure how long it will take to perfect his device. Johnson believes it will take two or three years.

Black chamber clears audit, seeks funds

The Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs is once again eligible for money from the city, but there isn't much left.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Officials with the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, which emerged from a city-initiated audit with a clean bill of health, say they don't want to be forced to scrape the bottom of the funding barrel this year.

After removing the chamber from a preliminary 1991-92 funding list in mid-July, city councilmen announced an audit of the group's accounting and administrative controls. The process generated two recommendations: the chamber should include two signatures on every check, and should secure tax exempt status from the Internal Revenue Service.

"I feel satisfied. I'd have no problem funding them," said City Council member John Castro, who had requested the audit. Castro, who had originally lobbied for funding for the MBCE several years ago, sought the audit recently after receiving complaints from people formerly associated with the group.

Complaints included lack of structure in operations and loose record-keeping, although councilmen also cited a failure to use the right format for funding requests. MBCE board member Forest Allen, who has worked with the group four years, said the problem seems to be a communication breakdown.

"Surely there's a lack of understanding," he said. Chamber officials are apparently not aware of the right format for requests, Allen said. "What I think needs to happen is a dialogue and careful explanation of exactly what's needed — whether that comes from the city or from the chamber."

Fellow board member William Howard said the board plans to ask the council to restructure allocations to include the chamber.

"Whether the council will decide to reallocate the funds I don't know, but there's always the potential," said city spokesperson Rick Menchaca. He emphasized that the city cannot legally support operations of private organizations. Instead, organizations must request money as part of a contract for services provided.

Robynne Fuller, founding president and chief executive officer of the nonprofit chamber, said the funding problem has become a Catch-22: Lack of funding has stifled the group's ability to accomplish its goals, but lack of accomplishment is still cited as a reason for limited city funding.

"We don't have, haven't had, the funding we need," said Mrs. Fuller, who serves as chairman of the board in addition to her other duties. "Other chambers have adequate funding, but I think we've done a lot with really no funding."

"We've gotten very little ... city funding over the years," Allen said. "And we got into an audit situation over about $15,000, which, is a significant amount of money, but is not really when you're talking about starting up businesses and that sort of thing."

Removal from the funding list and the audit — the first of a chamber — were seen as a lack of respect by those associated with the chamber, Mrs. Fuller said. Menchaca said the city was simply taking

Pilot and designer Leeon Davis thinks his new design may be able to compete in the general aviation market.

Plane idea takes off

Aircraft designer returns to Midland with newest plane design

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Leeon Davis, an innovative aircraft designer-pilot, recently returned to Midland to demonstrate a prototype of his "dream plane," the V-tailed TX-1.

With the design, Davis is banking on winning over general aviation pilots in a market he believes is begging for "affordable" fast, nimble, and dependable aircraft.

He is zeroing in on that market.

Meanwhile, Davis, a pilot-mechanic whose engineering skills have won him acclaim in the air and on the road, is looking for investors in the aircraft in order to build production models.

"Simplicity is the idea," said Allen Frazee, an aeronautical engineer and airline pilot who is a partner in Davis' TXAIR Aircraft Development & Manufacturing Company in San Antonio.

"We see this as a boon to general aviation because of its potential as a trainer and as a personal airplane for the average man on the street," said Frazee.

Deemed to be "very economical" to buy and to fly, the all-metal TX-1 will "out-perform aircraft in its (two-seat) class," said Frazee.

The airplane, which Davis designed to be as lightweight as practical without losing structural integrity, will cruise at 150 mph on a 115-horsepower, four-cylinder Lycoming 0-235 engine.

The production aircraft will be aesthetically more pleasing than the prototype, said Frazee, a Utah resident who flies for Evergreen International Airlines.

Projected basic aircraft cost is $35,000.

Aside from the V-tail design, the low-wing monoplane is distinguished by its speed, which Davis credits to the aircraft's compact design, power, drag-reducing features and weight-reduction efficiency.

Unlike the more powerful and much larger and heavier Beechcraft Bonanza V-tail design dating back to the 1940s, Davis' TX-1 is less prone to fish-

School district officials review budget needs

By Myra Lee Salcedo

Board members of the Andrews-Midland County Education District began putting the wheels into motion Thursday night to operate as a full-fledged taxing entity.

Ron Stegall presented a report on tax rates which indicated the CED would need to generate $43 million annually in order to provide each district with the state-mandated 72 cents per $100 valuation.

The CEDs were formed to satisfy a state-mandated school reform plan which calls for a minimum tax rate of 72 cents per $100 valuation. If at that rate, the district yields less than $2,200 per student, it will be supplemented to that amount by other CED districts.

Stegall, chief appraiser with Midland Central Appraisal District, said Midland will provide 56 percent of the tax value of the total CED. Andrews will provide 40 percent and Greenwood 4 percent.

Each school district will collect the CED taxes in addition to its school district taxes. The CED taxes will then be sent to a central distributing office — which is yet to be named — and redistributed to each Andrews, Midland and Greenwood ISDs.

"I see no expense in the actual collection of taxes," Stegall said. "The expense will be in handling the redistribution." The appraiser said allowing each school district to collect its own taxes was the most appealing option since "the less current operations are disturbed, the better."

Stegall said, taking exemptions into consideration, that a tax rate of 77 cents would be needed to generate the required amount of revenue.

"That's based on a 96 percent collection rate for Midland and Greenwood and a 98 percent collection rate for Andrews," Stegall said.

The appraiser said the collection rates were "based on current collections."

Board members favored a calculation based on 77.5 cents with Stegall's recommended collection rates. But rates won't be set until the Aug. 29 CED meeting.

Baressi

"The CED needs to set its rate before the ISDs (Independent School Districts) can set their rates," said Joseph Baressi Jr., MISD superintendent.

MISD spokesperson Ted Miller said the school district will adopt its budget Aug. 30, the day after the CED sets its tax rate.

CED board members also discussed the entity's budget, which will be approximately $26,525.

"Since the CED is technically a school district, it will have to have a budget," Baressi said.

Baressi estimated that interest on collections could generate up to $16,000. He suggested each school district could pick up one-third of the tab.

The local CED accepted the bid from NCNB to serve as the entity's bank depository.

College plans business breakfast series

Staff Report

First in a series of breakfast sessions for business owners/managers and entrepreneurs is Tuesday at Midland College.

Although it is targeted for female and/or minority-owned businesses, it's open to anyone who wishes to attend.

The session begins at 7:30 a.m. in the Chaparral Room of the Student Center. Cost is $5 payable at the door.

"The program portion may be one of the fastest-moving anyone has ever experienced," said Jerry Lee Jones, chairman of the college's Business Studies Division. "A master of ceremonies will introduce a series of speakers, each limited to a maximum of two minutes. Speakers will be selected in advance, as many as eight or ten of them for each session."

Although the formal program will end at 8:30 a.m., those attending will be encouraged to remain for informal talks, exchange of business cards or other networking.

The breakfast is planned as a monthly event, scheduled for the third Tuesday of each month. There will not be a breakfast in December.

In addition to the Midland College Business and Economic Development Center, sponsors include the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Midland Chamber of Commerce, Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Students in Free Enterprise, SCORE/ACE, Texas Instruments and TU Electric.

Persons wishing to attend are asked to call 685-4657 on Monday for reservations.

Students have four days to get registration permits

Staff Report

Four days remain to obtain registration time permits for Midland College's fall semester.

Permits are being issued Monday through Thursday, Aug. 19-22, from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Student Services area of the Student Center.

The permits assign 15-minute periods for prospective students to report for registration on Wednesday, Aug. 28.

"We had a three-week early registration period from July 22 through Aug. 8, when 2,682 students signed up for classes and paid fees," said Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar.

Cates noted that those who don't obtain time permits will be enrolled only during the final two hours on Aug. 28. "By the time we get the non-permit students enrolled, many classes will be closed ... especially those at the most desirable times," he said.

First time college students and those transferring from other colleges or universities should contact the Student Services Office not later than Aug. 22 for information about entrance requirements.

Midland's oil places four on 100 richest Texans list

AUSTIN (AP) — The recession has barely dented the net worth of the richest Texans.

The annual Texas Monthly survey of the 100 wealthiest people in the state found 46 increased their fortune over the past year and 47 stayed the same.

The fortunes of four rich Texans decreased but not enough to fall out of the top 100, who had a minimum net worth of $130 million.

Three people fell of the list and were replaced by three others.

The number of Midlanders on the list remained at four: Clarence Scharbauer Jr., 66, whose worth is estimated by Texas Monthly at $280 million; Jack E. Brown, 66, and Cyril Wagner, 57, who the magazine says share a $500 million fortune; and Carlton E. Beal, 76, oil and gas holdings are valued by the magainze at $135 million.

The richest Texan is Ross Perot, the Dallas computer services and real estate magnate with a net worth of $3 billion, according to the magazine's list.

Perot is followed by Perry Richardson Bass of Fort Worth and his four sons who share a fortune of $6.3 billion. Bass and his sons transformed the inheritance of his wildcatter uncle Sid Richardson into an empire of energy, real estate and stock holdings.

Houston shopping center developer Jerry Moore is third with a fortune of $900 million.

Dallas investor Harold Simmons, second last year, fell to fourth after losing $840 million primarily because his holding company's value dropped after a failed takeover bid for Lockheed Corp. Simmons is reportedly eyeing other acquisition targets.

Scharbauer Brown Wagner Beal

Robert Dedman, chief of Dallas-based Club Corp International, was fifth with a net worth of $860 million.

The top 10 also include siblings Margaret Hunt Hill, Haroldson Lafayette Hunt III, and Caroline Rose Hunt of Dallas, who share $2.2 billion; Charles Clarence Butt of the San Antonio-based H.E.B. grocery chain, $650 million; George Mitchell, chief of Mitchell Energy in The Woodlands, $610 million; Roy Huffington, who sold Houston-based Huffco last year, $600 million; and Robert Lee Moody, Galveston banker and insurance company chief, $560 million.

Louis Beecherl, former head of TXO of Dallas; Jesse Upchurch, of Fort Worth-based Tandy Corp.; and Robert Rogers, a Tyler cable TV magnate, fell off the list.

They were replaced by Jubal Parten, a Madisonville oil man; Sybil Buckingham Harrington, an Amarillo philanthropist; and Will Farish, Houston oilman and friend of President Bush.

The largest jumps in fortune were made by high-tech businessmen. Bill Hayden, chief of Austin-based CompuAdd Inc., saw his fortune leap $200 million to $460 million.

John Moores of Sugar Land, chief of BMC Software, had his net worth increase $140 million to $410 million. And the fortune of Michael Dell, the 26-year-old founder of Austin-based Dell Computer Corp., rose $125 million to $265 million.

Losses were felt by Dallas oilman H.R. "Bum" Bright, down $30 million to $270 million; Lonnie "Bo" Pilgrim, the Pittsburg chicken king, down $10 million to $140 million; and Coastal Corp. chairman Oscar Wyatt Jr. of Houston, down $10 million to $130 million.

tailing, except in severe turbulence. The entire V-tail on Davis' TX-1 moves, which counters the fishtailing tendency, Frazee said.

As opposed to a conventional horizontal and vertical stabilizers, the V-tail design translates to less airplane weight, less drag and greater economy and speed.

"This is very efficient," said Frazee. "The simplicity of the design in the all-flying surface just kept the weight down back there."

Aerodynamically, the cross-country Davis airplane is "just a lot cleaner" and faster than conventional two-seat trainers, which cruise at 100 mph instead of the TX-1's 150 mph.

Davis and his partners (Frazee and Midland pilots John Weiler and Bill Wood) envision the TX-1 as a contender to compete with the aging Cessna 150s and 152s, the Piper Tomahawk and Beechcraft Skipper trainers.

Davis, who has been flying since his high-school days in Indiana in the mid-1940s, moved to Midland in the 1960s to work for Windecker Aviation, which was building the high-performance composite Windecker Eagle airplane in a general class with the all-aluminum Bonanza, Mooney, and Piper Cherokee Arrow.

In Midland, Davis got involved in the All-American Soap Box Derby and put aerodynamic design into soap-box racers.

In 1968, a soap-box racer he designed for his son, Harold, came in fourth place in the derby at Akron, Ohio. The next year, 12-year-old Steve Souter, driving a Davis-designed soap-box racer, "Red Torpedo," won the 32nd All-American Soap Box Derby.

The design, Davis said, was "10 years ahead in aerodynamics."

"Our cars were much, much smaller (than other racers), just like my airplanes are much smaller," Davis said. The Davis-designed race cars were built by their youthful drivers.

Davis, whose trademark is the V-tail design, has designed and built nine all-metal aircraft.

An earlier design, the single-place DA-5, in 1976 set an aviation closed-course distance record for aircraft under 1,102 pounds gross weight. He flew 2,265 non-stop miles without refueling to break Dick Rutan's 1975 record.

Davis had been forewarned that he "couldn't beat the record" set by the advanced-technology Veri-Eze. But with his "bumblebee mentality," Davis set a record. He had increased his DA-5's fuel capacity from 17 to 84 gallons.

Eight years later, in 1984, Jeanna Yeager broke Davis' record by 163 miles.

While designing another record-breaking airplane, Davis is breaking into the general-aviation market.

Today's general-aviation airplanes are, on the average, more than 20 years old, Davis said. "We need new airplanes.'

David Conoley, a Midland pilot who has flown 200 types of aircraft, flew the Davis-built TX-1 prototype.

"This airplanes handles delightfully," Conoley said. "Its sensitivity and lightness of controls is more like an aerobatic airplane, really, than the heavier production types."

"It's so efficient and fast compared to most anything I've seen or flown in. You would have to go back to the earlier designs of A-1Mooney to get something even close to the efficiency of this airplane."

AUDIT: Black chamber seeks funds from city advantage of a right to audit that is included in its contracts with all funded organizations.

"As funds become more competitive, we've got to try to see if we're getting the most out of our dollars," Menchaca said.

The MBCE received a total of $15,242 in city economic development funds between October 1989 and July of this year. With it, according to financial records, they purchased $4,942 in office equipment. The money also paid the major portion of salaries for a former director and the current part-time director.

This year, the 5-year-old chamber had requested $114,000 in economic development funds. With it, they planned to conduct a development study of a southeast Midland business district and fund two staff members — a full-time director and an administrative assistant.

However, only $28,100 is left in the economic development fund, city officials say. Hotel-motel tax monies, of which the chamber had requested $38,000 for cultural events this year, are completely depleted.

The cultural events money was planned to help fund a performance by Les Ballets Africains, a ballet troupe from Ghana, among other musical and celebratory events.

Two other chambers, the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and the Midland Chamber of Commerce, have been allocated city funds for the coming year. The Hispanic Chamber, under preliminary funding lists, is planned to receive $63,250 in economic development funds and $25,000 in hotel-motel tax receipts. The Midland Chamber is expected to receive $183,650 for economic development and $291,373 in hotel-motel tax money.

"The city tries to treat them equally," Menchaca said. "But with funding, there are more and more people wanting a piece of the shrinking pie. That economic development money is more competitive every year."

Both city and chamber officials agree the audit was not without result. The chamber will review its by-laws for possible revisions, including term limitations for officers, a concept not currently addressed. Mrs. Fuller, who has held her posts since founding the organization, said she will soon relinquish the presidency, but will retain chairman of the board status until the organization "has the support it needs."

Also as a result of the audit, the city is reviewing its record-keeping and audit policies for other organizations that request money. Menchaca said tentative plans are to begin auditing one of the three chambers each year, and to update files on the continuing status of each.

Bond denied

Staff Report

Six people arrested Saturday in connection with an alleged crack selling scheme were denied bond at a detention hearing by U.S. Magistrate Robert Sykes on Thursday.

Frederick Lyn Branch, 24, Jimmy Sherman, 25, Kevin Joe Hill (who had originally given lawmen a false first name), Gloria Ann Sherman, 23, all of Fort Worth, and Andrea Thompson, 29, and Arthur Levi Duson, 29, both of Midland, were determined to be a flight risk and a danger to the community and thus ordered incarcerated until their trial.

Sykes said he would still review a conditional release of Ms. Sherman pending confirmation of a previous marijuana arrest.

The six people were arrested following a two-month investigation that reportedly revealed the group was bringing crack cocaine from the Fort Worth area to Midland for sale.

During Saturday's arrests, lawmen seized 20 ounces of crack cocaine with a street value of $100,000 and a .45-caliber pistol.

A Drug Enforcement Administration agent testified at the detention hearing that the amount of crack confiscated indicated a well-established drug dealing group.

Hale appeals

An appeal to the recent sentencing of former Glenwood Administrator Bryan Allen Hale has been filed in U.S. District Court, court records indicated.

Hale, 47, who pleaded guilty to one count of using the U.S. mail to send obcene material, was sentenced on Aug. 1 to 30-months in prison, a $7,500 fine and a warning to stay away from children for three years after his release.

The sentencing resulted from plea agreement where four other charges were dropped.

Midland County cotton faces continuing risks

Cotton growers are challenged each year to attain high lint yields, and for farmers of Midland County, the clock is running on late cotton.

At this point in the growing season, a small percentage of this year's crop potential is already gone due to insects, weeds, drought and with everything Mother Nature can hit a field of cotton. It seems when one victory is achieved in the field, a new fight breaks out.

Kiker

As a crop becomes later, there are less opportunities for the crop to square, bloom and mature. From this point on, management is the key to a good crop; that and a little luck.

Charlie Wright, Midland Co-op Gin Manager, said that with all the elements of nature considered, he predicts that Midland County's cotton crop this year will yield the same amount and quality of cotton as last years crop.

He said Midland County farmers planted about 27,000 acres of cotton this year, and he estimated between 14,000 to 16,000 bales of cotton will be ginned.

Roy Graham, a 24-year cotton farmer in Northeast Midland County, said that with the help of Mother Nature, he plans to get over two bales of cotton per acre on his irrigated cotton and one bale of cotton per acre on his dryland cotton crop.

"The dryland cotton is looking good right now because of the recent rain we received, but we sure could use more rain, he said.

Farmers primary concern about insects this season has been the buildup of aphids and boll worms. Graham said his cotton has been sprayed for insects twice this year.

A 15-year cotton farmer in Southeast Midland County, George Anderson, Jr., said that his cotton this growing season looks like it will bring a profit.

Anderson said that by being timely with his operation, he thinks that this year's crop will be as good as last year's crop or better. "We have not had as much of a problem with boll worms this year as last, and that has helped."

Eleven hundred acres of cotton was planted on Anderson's farm, but due to the lack of rain when the cotton was planted, Anderson said he lost 300 acres of dryland cotton.

With this year's cotton crop later than normal, Wright said that the right type of weather and a late frost date is needed to produce quality cotton.

Wright said that irrigated cotton that is defoliated may begin to be harvested in late October, but the majority of cotton will begin to be harvested in November.

The cotton market at this time Midland County area is bringing 50 cents per pound of cotton, he said.

"Everything looks promising so far, Wright said, "But it all depends on how the elements of nature treat farmers until harvest."

Rusting in the field

Fungus attacks pima cotton, two counties declare disaster

By Suzanne Gamboa
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO (AP) — The dry, desert climate of far West Texas has always made area cotton farmers feel confident about their crop's yield. But a flourishing fungus that thrives on humidity has growers counting their losses.

Area cotton plants are virtually being starved to death by a fungus known as cotton rust. The fungus is produced by a spore found in Gramma grass. It becomes airborne and attaches to cotton plants in high humidity, forms pustules on plant leaves and deprives the plants of food.

"We're not used to here in this valley having many problems," Alfred Gonzalez, El Paso County extension agent, said Wednesday. "We have good weather, a safe water supply, very capable farmers and growers. We've had rust in the past but not to this degree."

The rust has affected so many plants that El Paso County Commissioners on Tuesday declared El Paso and Hudspeth counties disaster areas and asked Gov. Ann Richards to do the same. Officials estimated about $10 million of the annual $35 million crop has been damaged.

"We're not through with this thing yet. It will probably continue to get worse," Gonzalez said.

The National Weather Service in El Paso said the city actually is behind in rainfall for the year compared to last year's totals. In July, El Paso International Airport received 2.69 inches compared with 3.96 in July 1990. So far this month about 1.7 has fallen, compared with an average of 1.21 for the same period.

"But in this type of climate we're subject to sporadic rainfall and one area may have double the amount of another area. It's possible that's what's happening in the cotton growing areas," said Bruce Bradley, weather service specialist.

The majority of area farmers grow pima cotton, which thrives in a warm and dry climate. It is a lucrative crop, much of which is sold in Asia at $1.20 a pound for use in fine shirts and linens.

AP Laserphoto

The United States produced 359,000 bales of pima cotton last year, according to National Cotton Council statistics. Texas contributed 81,000 bales and Gonzalez said El Paso area farmers produced about 60,000 bales last year.

Cotton covers about 42,000 acres in El Paso with 36,000 acres of pima and 6,000 of upland cotton.

"Pima cannot be grown just anywhere in United States. Pima grows here because of the length of our growing season, April 15 through about October. The first frost is generally not until early part of November," Gonzalez said.

Cotton farmer Larry Madrid, whose father has farmed in the Fabens area for years, said he believes about 400 of the family's 672 acres are infested with cotton rust.

"This is the first time that I've seen it like this," Madrid said. "We've seen it other years but nothing like this. You can get a leaf right now and there's hardly a square inch on it that doesn't have a blotch on it."

Madrid said he won't know the extent of his losses until harvest time in October, but he's already scratched plans to buy a tractor with this year's profits.

Cotton broker Roger Pearson, of the Southwest Irrigated Growers cooperative, said last year about 1.3 bales per acre were collected in the area. This year, current predictions are fields will yield 1.1 to 1.2 bales an acre.

"We handle about 74 percent of total cotton grown in lower El Paso valley," he said. "Last year we handled 41,000 bales from there. This year we're looking at probably 20 to 25,000."

The lower yields mean the cooperative may have difficulty filling contracts and will have to get New Mexico and Arizona cotton farmers to pick up the slack, he said.

"What will happen is the grower has contracted with us to deliver certain qualities of cotton," Pearson said. "Our contracts take a range of qualities, but it has to be pretty good cotton. What's going to happen is their grades won't meet those contracts and hence the farmer does not get the original price he was looking forward to getting when meets that contract."

If Richards declares the counties disaster areas, farmers could be eligible for emergency funds and low-interest loans. Officials also are hoping for federal assistance.

County agricultural officials have said 90 to 100 percent of the cotton crop in Hudspeth and 25 to 50 percent in El Paso County have been damaged.

Hot, dry weather lifts harvests across state

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Scattered showers helped some portions of the state, particularly the Rolling Plains around Wichita Falls, while hot, dry weather boosted good harvests of many crops in most of Texas last week, according to the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

A slow, general rain falling in much of the Rolling Plains helped summer crop growth there, according to Dr. Zerle Carpenter, director of the Extension Service. As much as 6 inches fell on Shackelford County, and most areas received about an inch during rains at the end of last week, he said.

Melon harvests were under way in that area, and native ranges were in good shape, Carpenter said. Hay operations were also continuing.

Scattered showers also broke a hot, dry week in the South Plains around Lubbock, improving conditions there.

In the Coastal Bend area around Corpus Christi, a few showers also fell, interrupting some cotton harvesting. But the area has continued dry after heavy rains earlier in the year, and cotton could provide the best yields on record, Carpenter said.

Cotton crops in some areas of West Texas are looking good after hot weather and some healthy rains, but El Paso County is suffering from serious cotton rust problems.

Extension Service district directors also reported:

FAR WEST: Soil-moisture conditions varied widely, with surplus moisture reported in El Paso County. Cotton rust infecting crops there was causing defoliation, with yield losses of 75 percent or more expected in some fields. Several counties, however, reported excellent progress in their cotton crops. Onion and cantaloupe harvests continued. Most peaches have been harvested. Livestock were in fair to good condition. Fall goat shearing was in full swing.

Group sees increase in migrants on welfare

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — A legal advocacy group is seeing a sharp increase in the number of migrant farm workers needing welfare while they look for a job, its executive director said Monday.

Joseph Tafelski, executive director of Advocates for Basic Legal Equality Inc., said the caseload has doubled for the agency's Migrant Farmworker Program. Last year, the program handled about 900 cases.

Each year, 10,000 farm workers from Texas and Florida come to northwest Ohio to pick fruits and vegetables, mostly tomatoes and cucumbers.

Tafelski blamed the agency's increased caseload on the larger than usual number of migrant workers coming to northwest Ohio this growing looking for work.

"Many workers have come up here because of the poor weather conditions in Texas and Florida and other states. Over the last two months, we have had a lot more workers than usual, and a lot more of them have been out of work than in the past," Tafelski said.

"As a result, they are waiting around and looking for work. And during that time they need food, shelter, to keep them going," he said.

Many of ABLE's cases involve getting workers basic assistance, such as food stamps, while they are waiting for work, he said.

The legal advocacy group also handles other complaints, such as making sure migrant farm workers are paid wages due to them, he said.

The agency also visits migrant labor camps licensed by the Ohio Health Department. All migrant labor camps have to be licensed. There are 169 licensed camps in Ohio this year.

Under the new state budget, ABLE will get $125,000 annually over the next two years from the Ohio Human Services Department for its Migrant Farmworker Program. The agency received $135,000 for the program last year.

Services are provided at no charge to clients, he said.

Tafelski said ABLE has 14 people, including two staff lawyers. It has offices in Toledo, Bowling Green, Fremont, Findlay and Defiance.

"A big part of our function is to get out to the labor camps. We try to make it to every licensed labor camp in Ohio at least once a year to give people information on programs that are available to them and to see if they are having any problems and then take it from there," Tafelski said.

"Even though we didn't get all the money we wanted for the next two years, we'll still be out there helping farm workers. It's too important a program to stop now," he said.

Musical explores farm relations

TOKYO (AP) — A musical with the message that shared values of American and Japanese farmers can transcend a bitter trade dispute over rice is drawing large, approving crowds in rural Japan.

Audiences weep and laugh as the bicultural cast of "Labor of Love" air complaints Japanese and Americans often express about, but rarely to, each other.

"Wherever you look, everything's Japanese," sing members of a rice-growing Cajun family in Lousiana.

"We supposedly won the war, but Japan's buying Rockefeller Center, Columbia Pictures ... You guys come over here and buy everything, but we can't buy nothin'."

The musical, a joint presentation of a Japanese theater troupe and one from Seattle, is a rare artistic venture into U.S.-Japanese relations as the 50th anniversary of Pearl Harbor approaches.

Its theme reflects the widespread belief here that, if Americans understood the efforts of Japanese farmers to preserve their traditional lifestyle, they might stop demanding that Japan lift its protective ban on imported rice. The play also expresses deep sympathy for similar problems of American farmers.

Washington wants Japan to lift the ban on rice imports to help counter a perennial trade imbalance. Japanese farmers argue that their tiny plots, averaging less than two acres per family, cannot compete with large U.S. growers. Rice would account for less than 5 percent of trade between the countries if the market was opened, but is a symbol of the frustration Americans face in trying to penetrate other Japanese markets.

The musical is about Kenichi Suzuki, a young Japanese rice farmer who goes to Louisiana on an exchange visit and falls in love with Alicia Thibodeaux, spunky daughter of his Cajun host family.

Her father is unimpressed by the visitor, who kicks up his heels in new-found freedom and evinces no enthusiasm for farming.

Suzuki's family arrives and the men start trading jibes about the rice ban and other issues: auto workers, Pearl Harbor and Hiroshima. When a storm blows up, however, they put aside their differences and rush to harvest the rice.

In the second act, roles are reversed as the Cajuns visit the Suzukis in the terraced mountains of northern Japan.

The musical ultimately focuses on the love of family and the land shared by all farmers. The families discover they are in the same struggle to keep their land in an age of declining profits and waning government support.

For both, farming is "a labor of love."

Touring Japan, staying in traditional inns and performing in Japanese has been a series of shocks and similarities for the nine American performers.

Learning her Japanese lines in less than a month was "the hardest thing I've ever had to do ... but it's very, very rewarding," said Kristie Sanders of Seattle. "The people here give and give and give. Their attitude is great."

"We can't communicate too much, but we say a lot with smiles," said Patrick Ryan Sullivan of Titusville, Fla.

Local residents went from door to door, drumming up audiences in towns that hadn't seen a live theatrical performance in more than 10 years. The Japanese were impressed when the Americans stayed late after a performance to help pack up the set.

Theatrical affection oozed from the Americans. The Japanese actors gradually discarded their stiff formality and started hugging back.

"We were surprised when they hugged us," said Kinji Oyamada, who plays Kenichi, "but now we've grown used to it.

After the two companies, Furusato (Hometown) Caravan and One Reel of Seattle, agreed on the joint project two years ago, they planned to concentrate on the differences between the families. Visits to both countries yielded the opposite conclusion.

Abductors force man off bridge

DALLAS (AP) — Christopher Fish had a choice when he was kidnapped at gunpoint: jump or die.

So, thinking of his pregnant wife, he vaulted over the side of a bridge into the Trinity River Tuesday.

"They said I could either jump or get shot," Fish said. "All I could think about was that I would never see my baby born."

About two hours earlier, a man armed with a pistol got into Fish's car at a stoplight. Fish, whose wife Joanna is expecting their first child in February, was on his way to his truck-loading job.

The man, disgusted when no money was in Fish's wallet, drove Fish to an apartment complex where they changed cars and met a second abductor. Fish was placed in the back seat with a woman, who also apparently was abducted.

Fish was taken to a pay phone, where he was allowed to call his grandmother, Mildred Carrington.

"They told me to call my family and tell them that I loved them and that I was going to die," Fish said.

"He was scared to death," Mrs. Carrington said.

Fish later was allowed to make another call to Mrs. Carrington and managed to whisper street directions to her.

But before police could arrive, Fish was taken to the Westmoreland Road bridge over the Trinity in West Dallas, where the men gave him the ultimatum.

Fish immediately leaped 50 feet into the rain-swollen waterway. He nearly drowned but managed to get ashore a quarter mile downstream.

"I just put my foot up on the rail, took my chances and jumped," Fish said.

Police are looking for the abductors and the woman. Fish told investigators the woman, who is black and said her name was Lisa, was bound with fishing line.

So far, officers have been unable to come up with a missing person report matching her description.

6 youths escape Dallas center

DALLAS (AP) — One of six youths who escaped from a county juvenile detention center has been returned to the facility, authorities said Thursday.

Dallas police and the Texas Youth Commission continued their search Thursday for the other five youths.

The escape occurred Wednesday after a 17-year-old Mesquite youth and a 15-year-old South Dallas teen tricked a worker into unlocking the door to their sleeping room by saying they needed toilet paper, officials said.

When Kenneth Hudson, 52, opened the door, the boys rushed him, knocking him over a couch, said Randy Wadley, deputy director of institutional services.

Convicted killer gets execution stay

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals late Thursday blocked the execution of a San Antonio man scheduled for lethal injection after midnight for a robbery-slaying in which five men were shot.

The appeals court action came about seven hours before Rodolfo Hernandez was to be put to death. About an hour earlier, State District Judge Robert Pfeuffer in New Braunfels had refused to issue a stay.

Hernandez, 41, has been on death row since 1985, when he was convicted in New Braunfels of shooting five illegal aliens. One of the men died of his wounds.

Friday's execution date was his first. State attorneys were expecting the execution would not be carried out and that an appeals court would grant a reprieve.

"I guess because I'm not guilty somebody's got to hear me," Hernandez said in an interview this week.

Court documents indicate Hernandez told his sister he was a gunslinger, that Texas was overpopulated and that President Reagan had instructed him to get rid of some of San Antonio's illegal aliens.

Hernandez found the five Mexican immigrants who had stowed away aboard a train. He and his brother-in-law offered to drive them for a fee to Denton where they hoped to find work.

The five were each shot in a secluded area of Comal County.

Police traced the guns used in the shooting to Hernandez, a two-time convict who had been out of prison about nine months.

But Hernandez said the guns used as evidence against him at his trial had been given to him.

"I don't even use guns," he said. "I didn't know those guns had been used to kill anybody. They need to let me go. They need to find out who did it.

"I'm not going to say I'm incompetent or on drugs or an alcoholic," he said. "I don't want my case to fall like that. My case has nothing to do with that. I want the truth. They used some wetbacks that said I was the one that did it. I was shocked."

Man admits setting fires in four churches

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A man described as troubled and perhaps lashing out at God confessed to setting fires at three churches in San Antonio and one in Poteet, arson investigators said.

Alberto B. Morales, 35, of San Antonio was being held Thursday at the Atascosa County Jail in lieu of bonds totaling $195,000, officials said. He was charged with arson, evading arrest and seven counts of burglary of a building.

More arson charges were to be filed later, authorities said.

"You would describe him as a pathetic type of person," arson investigator Richard Bonnett said Wednesday. "You would probably feel sorry for him even though there has been all of this damage to the churches."

Morales has admitted to 22 burglaries, three of which involved arson at Catholic churches in San Antonio, said Atascosa County Chief Sheriff's Deputy David Soward.

Morales was arrested Saturday after a tavern was burglarized near Pleasanton. Police apprehended him in a high-speed chase. He later was questioned and admitted to the burglaries and the arsons, authorities said.

Bonnett said Morales may have developed a hatred for the church and God, "kind of blaming him for all the bad luck he sustained." He has a troubled background, and said his mother once tried to sell him for $15, the investigator said.

Woman gets six years in embezzlement

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas County jury sentenced a Dallas woman to six years in prison for embezzling $350,000 from her former employer.

Joni Pearl Arnold, 64, was given the term Wednesday after pleading guilty to stealing the money from Fred Hammond, owner of Hammond Investments. She had asked the jury for probation.

Mrs. Arnold was fined $10,000 and ordered to pay Hammond the entire amount as restitution.

"The evidence showed that (Ms. Arnold) was responsible for opening the mail and taking the checks payable to the company and depositing them in the company account," Assistant District Attorney Ted Steinke said.

"However, she was forging Hammond's name and putting (the checks) in her own name."

Prosecutors said that over the past five years, Ms. Arnold had spent $40,000 at Neiman Marcus, $39,000 on a professional decorator and $23,000 on maid service.

She also spent $14,000 on a movie video collection, $6,400 on chartered jets, $6,400 on a Thanksgiving weekend at a luxury Dallas hotel and gave $34,000 to her daughter and son-in-law, prosecutors said.

FAMILY MATTERS

Sharing experiences with safe group helps healing

By Jim May, Ph.D.

May

DEAR FAMILY: The letter in your column from SCARRED could have been written from me. My situation and feelings are identical to hers. I too have been married almost 20 years. I have grown children and have built a good life with my husband. However, I have not been happy in my marriage for some time. I too had a recent affair that ended in the same way SCARRED's ended. This has been very painful for me.

Just like her, my relationship with my husband has become extremely distant and superficial. I feel very isolated and alone. I simply cannot relate to my husband in an emotional or physically intimate way. We are both currently undergoing marital counseling and I am going through individual counseling as well. However, I truly feel that I have received the most help from confiding in friends and having them share similar experiences with me.

Dr. May, I don't know if it is possible, but I would very much like to talk to SCARRED or communicate with her in some way if she would be open to such communication. I am working through the exact situation and feelings she has described. I feel that communication between us would be valuable for both of us. I know her pain.

What I have discovered is that I have broken the bond of intimacy with my husband by deceiving him. I do agree that the spouse should be protected from this information but the feeling of intimacy can be rebuilt.

By sharing a secret relationship with a lover, the feelings of love and intimacy are intensified no matter how invalid these feelings are. By lying to a spouse the same feelings are destroyed. But if you start lying to the lover those feelings are also destroyed. True intimacy cannot be maintained when deceit is employed.

Dr. May, please consider my request to share my experiences with SCARRED. If possible, please let me know how to contact her. I will wait for your reply. SCARRED TOO

DEAR TOO: I cannot put you in contact with SCARRED. However, I agree with you that sharing experiences with a safe group is beneficial. I don't know of any local self-help groups specifically organized to address your situation, but you may want to consider attending an Adult Children of Alcoholics meeting (if that is applicable). Call 682-4721 for information.

I strongly encourage you to continue working hard in your therapy. Addressing the reasons for an affair takes hard work. Sex is not intimacy. People most often look for intimacy in a relationship — the honest sharing of who we are and how we feel — not sex. I believe in most cases with God's help we can find intimacy if it is safe to risk ourselves. Keep on the path to recovery that you are on.

DEAR FAMILY: I want out of my marriage but I can't afford to leave. I have worked most of our married life but I don't make anywhere close to what my husband makes. We have two children but only one is living at home now. She will be sophomore this fall. I would have to support her and myself on my salary, buy her a car and all those things.

There is no way that I can give her the things that she wants on what I would make and get from my husband. The thought of having to live with him for another three years is making me crazy. What am I supposed to do? My mother says that I should stick it out for (daughter's) sake. She says that (husband) isn't all that bad. She doesn't understand that just because a husband doesn't beat you that it's OK. What am I supposed to do for three years? STUCK

DEAR STUCK: Perhaps this is focusing on the obvious, but let's start with marital counseling. Contact your minister or priest or a professional marriage counselor and talk with him or her about your situation. You and your husband can find help, but it begins with honesty.

Naming the proglems that need to be addressed is extremely important. You cannot change, or even directly refuse to change, what you don't know. You can make a list of the things that create problems for you in your marriage. Make an appointment with your husband to discuss your list in a calm, non-judgmental manner. Find a time when you two are alone and have as few potential distractions as possible.

Try to stay engaged in the interaction long enough to address at least one of the more concrete problems. Agree on what you both are willing to do — then do it! People are usually stuck because of inaction. I believe it is far better to do something and then change direction if necessary than to do nothing. So my advice is to do something — whether it is counseling and/or self-attempts at change — rather than doing nothing.

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

Questions for this column should be addressed to Family Matters, P.O. Box 10485, Midland, 79702.

Some companies, workers, make themselves at home

By Renee Tawa
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Mr. Scrooge, that spooked curmudgeon-turned-nice guy, isn't the only boss out there whom the spirits have moved.

There are bosses who give money to couples so they can adopt children and to couples for their newborns. Bosses who try to get their employees to go surfing with them for a long lunch. Bosses who give two-month paid parental leaves for moms, dads and adoptive parents. Bosses who open accredited one-room schoolhouses at work for their employees' children.

For some, the 9-to-5 grind means clock in, clock out and go home; there's work, there's home, and never the twain shall meet. For others, their work and private lives are so intertwined that "family" also means boss and coworkers.

Work and home have meshed for Karen Palone, 30, a Ventura resident. Palone and her 5-year-old daughter, Danielle, get up together at about 6:30 a.m. to get ready for their day at the office. Some days they strap on their backpacks together and ride their bicycles along a 2½-mile ocean-front route to Palone's office, Patagonia Inc., a maker of outdoor clothing and gear with 520 employees. Palone goes to her job as an assistant to the company's executive officers, and Danielle goes to the on-site child-care center.

IT'S NO ACCIDENT that companies are looking beyond the bottom-line to the well-being of their employees, according to the authors of two recent books. In "Companies That Care" (Fireside; $12.95), authors Hal Morgan and Kerry Tucker write that it's hard enough to find good workers; companies want to do their best to keep them. That means they have to cater to two-income families that need child-care help and busy singles who want more out of the office than just a place to work.

Across the country, in every field, the authors found companies that go the extra miles for their employees. Five years ago, the authors said it would have been a stretch to come up with 50 companies with such fringe benefits. The book cites 124 companies. There are no exact numbers on how many businesses offer what the authors call "family-friendly" benefits, but Morgan said "a small but growing percentage" is doing so.

Morgan and Tucker said that the most family-friendly companies in America include Stride Rite Corp. in Cambridge, Mass., which provides an intergenerational day-care center for 55 children and 24 seniors; Hemmings Motor News in Bennington, Vt., which gives employees paid time off for involvement in their children's schools; and Arthur Andersen & Co. offices, which offers Saturday child care during tax season.

"I think we're just beginning to recognize a reality," said David Jamieson, co-author of the recent book, "Managing Workforce 2000" (Jossey-Bass; $27.95). "I think it's long been a myth that people parked their lives in a parking lot and then just went to work. I think companies often treated it that way, that your life has no business at work.

"THE REALITY is that it always has been there. It's a matter of whether it was legitimately dealt with and supported."

It makes it harder for employees to leave and easier for recruits to come aboard. "It's hard to think about going any place else," said Palone, the Patagonia employee who rides her bicycle to work with her daughter. "She's grown up with all the kids here. We have the same friends, whether they're big people or little people."

Patagonia, which also offers two-month paid parental leaves, is run by Yvon Chouinard, a man who sometimes takes off in the middle of the day to go surfing. His laid-back attitude makes for a workplace where "dress for success" means ensembles of shorts and thongs, the better to play volleyball with on the courts in back of the office.

"When I wake up in the morning, I can't wait to get here," Palone said. "It's a feeling a lot of people just don't get. For me, it's a way of life. I don't ever come to work dreading it or wishing I didn't have to go."

The employees' needs are the company's needs — it's all in the family, said Patagonia spokesman Kevin Sweeney. Sweeney, who is not a father, sometimes drops by the child-care center to play with the kids during lunch.

"That kind of stuff humanizes the workplace," Sweeney said. "It gives it a different feeling, a different texture."

IT'S ALMOST like working at home, said Dawn Fulton, 36, a graphic artist at G.T. Water Products, a maker of drain-cleaning devices in Moorpark with 32 employees. Recently, her 5-year-old daughter, Alyssa made a surprise visit to her office from the company's one-room schoolhouse, where the children raise strawberries and other fruits in a garden outside.

"The teacher came in with her and said, 'Do you have a minute to hear Alyssa read?' She crawled into my lap and just started reading," Fulton recalled.

It was the first time she had heard her daughter read full sentences from a book. "I was amazed, just tickle ! to death."

It costs G.T. Water Products about $40,000 a year to run the tuition-free school for 120 children, grades kindergarten through 12, said founder George Tash. The company also offers adoption aid up to $1,500 and a $500 gift to expectant parents.

It all pays off in the long run, Tash said. "They're more apt to want to keep their job and do a good job. It's more of a family affair around here than just a workplace."

Family workplaces are more like the Brady Bunch, where everyone pitches in, than the Simpsons, where a problem child runs amok. At Palo Alto-based Hewlett-Packard Co., the company's flexible work schedules mean that employees put in their eight hours whenever they want — and on the honor system, said Art Young, the company's corporate benefits manager.

PRIVATE BUSINESS is not the only area showing signs of changing times. When 20 percent of the workers in the Ventura County Planning Department became pregnant about the same time, everyone shifted work schedules to help the expectant mothers. Some mothers later got to work at home part time, said Keith Turner, planning department director.

"Obviously, what we did not want to happen when so many women got pregnant in the department at the same time was we did not want them to quit the county," he said. "We tried to do whatever we could to preserve them as county employees."

Syntex in Palo Alto also tries to keep its people happy. Syntex, a pharmaceutical and medical diagnostic systems company with 5,550 employees, provides a child-care center, fitness center, evening and lunch seminars on family issues and college scholarships to children of employees.

"People respond to being respected and treated as whole persons and not just as cogs in a production line," spokeswoman Linda Thomas said.

Foundation offers free spruce trees

Ten free Colorado blue spruce trees will be given to each person who joins the National Arbor Day Foundation during August, as part of the nonprofit foundation's Trees for America Campaign.

"Colorado blue spruces were selected for this campaign because of their may uses in the home landscape," said John Rosenow, the foundation's executive director. "They lend beauty to their surroundings with their silver blue-green color and compact conical shape. They can be used as individual ornamentals, an energy-saving windbreak, a privacy screen, or as living Christmas trees."

The trees will be shipped postpaid at the right time for planting between March 1 and May 31, 1992, with enclosed planting instructions. The six- to 12-inch trees are guaranteed to grow, or they will be replaced free of charge.

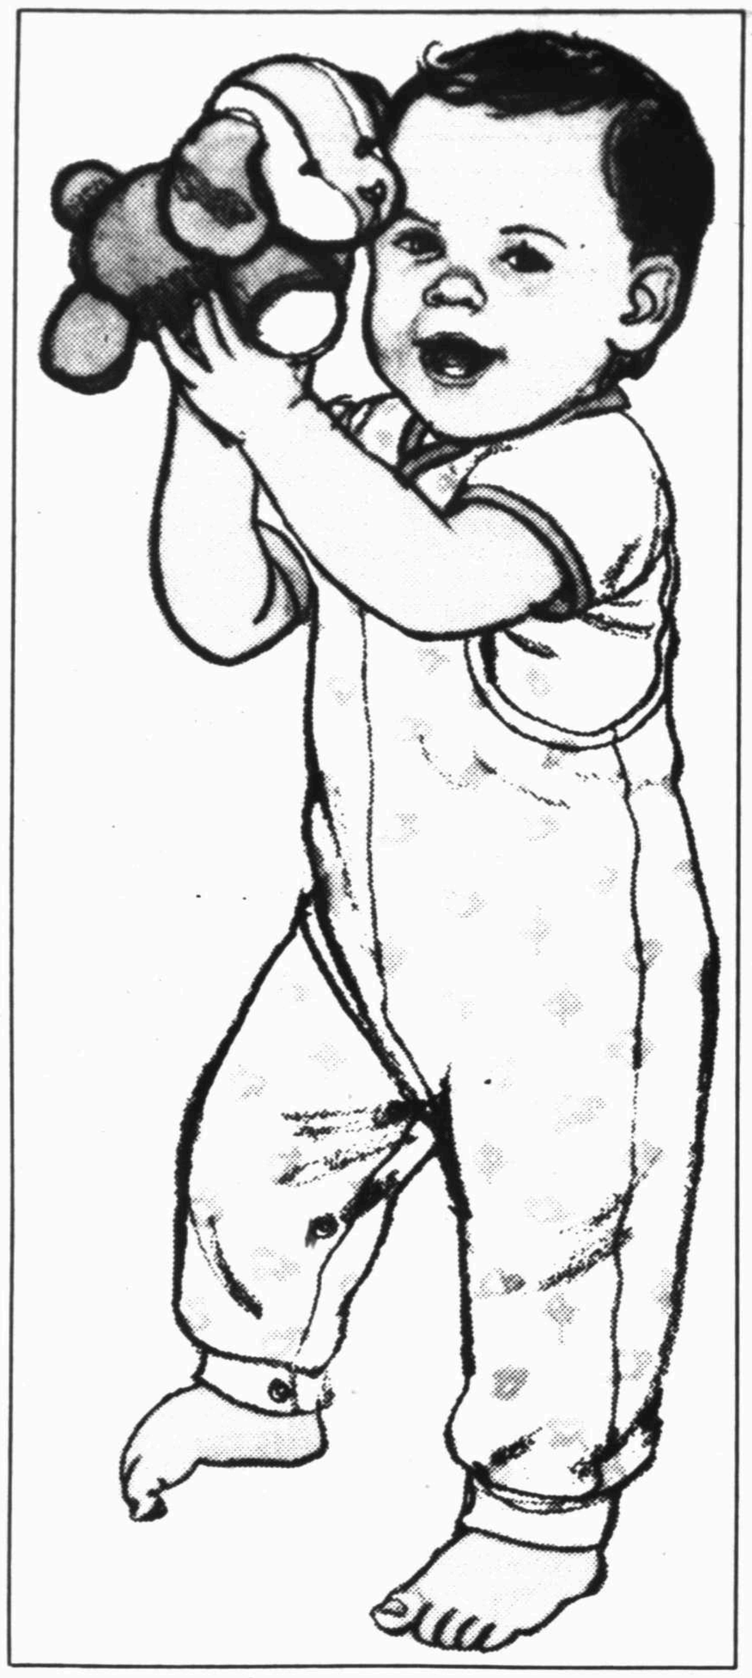

To become a member of the foundation and receive the free trees, send $10 membership contribution to Ten Blue Spruces National Arbor Day Foundation, 100 Arbor Ave., Nebraska City, Neb., 68410, by Aug. 31.

Is bare best for growing feet?

By Natalie Angier
N.Y. Times News Service

Parents beleaguered by the high cost of children's footwear may be relieved to hear that, in the opinion of many orthopedists, the best thing for growing feet is not that pair of adorable, miniaturized glow-in-the-dark running shoes, or the sensible, if aesthetically objectionable, Oxfords, or even the K Mart flip-flops, but rather no shoes at all.

In a new review that confirms and expands on what many pediatricians have been saying of late, Dr. Lynn T. Staheli, director of orthopedics at Children's Hospital and Medical Center in Seattle, has concluded that the children with the healthiest and most supple feet are those who habitually go barefoot.

The myth of the good, solid shoe is like the fallacy of communism, said Staheli. "People do better when they're free, and the foot does better when it's free," he said.

Staheli was led to make his conclusion by anthropological studies around the world of people who do not wear shoes.

"If you look at a place like China and you compare the feet of those who don't wear shoes with the feet of those who do, you find that the non-shoe-wearers have better flexibility and mobility," he said. "Their feet are stronger, they have fewer deformities and less complaints than the shoewearing population."

STAHELI SAID that in Western nations, children must often wear shoes to protect feet against snow, broken glass or the occasional hypodermic syringe on the sidewalk, among other things. But he said he believes that the more closely a child's shoe resembles the barefoot state, the better.

A child's shoe should be lightweight, flexible and shaped more or less quandrangularly, like the foot, he said. Above all, the shoe should not have the arch inserts or stiff sides once deemed necessary to lend the foot support. And whenever the ground is safe enough to do so, he said, parents should allow their children to roam around unshod.

The new report appears in the August issue of the journal Pediatrics, and it has been greeted with considerable approval.

"The bare foot is the ideal position," said Dr. Lowell D. Lutter, assistant clinical professor at Gillette Children's Hospital in St. Paul, Minn. "Children's shoewear has two functions: to protect and to decorate. Anything past that is an unnecessary use of resources."

Staheli, a respected pediatric orthopedist who himself has studied children's footwear, is particularly opposed to those shoes branded "corrective" or "orthopedic" and which some doctors still advocate as a method for straightening foot and leg deformities, like flat feet, pigeon toes, knock-knees or bowlegs.

But Staheli and many other orthopedists denounce that sort of medical intervention as unnecessary. For one thing, they said, there is no evidence that corrective shoes correct anything. For another, the supposed deformities correct themselves over time in the vast majority of cases.

"IN THE ORTHOPEDIC community, there's a real cynicism about orthopedic shoes," said Dr. Francesca M. Thompson, an orthopedic surgeon at Roosevelt Hospital in New York. "Mother nature takes care of nearly all orthopedic problems on her own. What a child needs is protection from cuts and things, not an ugly brown shoe."

Staheli recommends that shoes be thought of in the same way as any other item of clothing.

"You don't think of clothing as something that will influence the development of the trunk or the arms," he said. "It's worn for comfort, and the same should be planned for the shoe."

Some pediatric orthopedists disagree with Staheli, considering his an extremist position. They insist that there is still a place for corrective shoes in cases in which children's foot problems do not improve over time. Left unattended, they said, foot and leg problems in childhood can lead to considerable discomfort in adulthood.

"The author of the article has a vendetta" against corrective shoes, said Dr. Seymour Zimbler, a clinical professor of pediatric orthopedics at Tufts University School of Medicine in Boston. "With some mild deformities, I believe a shoe with some correctives has an ability to help, but it's difficult to prove."

Staheli said that his new review is not an attempt to undermine the children's shoe industry, but rather to summarize prevailing opinion about how the foot normally develops and how best to encourage its healthiest growth.

MOST BABIES are born with what look like foot abnormalities. Nearly all have flat feet, because the foot bottom is covered by a thick pad of fat and because it is only through walking that the intricate mesh of muscles and ligaments in the foot strenghten and pull upwards into a genuine arch.

Following 442 children in a study conducted several years ago, Staheli found that in most cases the arch is fully developed by 6 to 8 years of age.

Doctors emphasize that the joints and ligaments of the legs and feet are extremely flexible in a newborn and that they require several years to attain their mature shape and position. As the limbs develop, they may assume any number of unusual variations, nearly all of which are outgrown.

Many babies have feet that point inward, pigeon-style, usually as a result of having been cramped into the familiar fetal position for so many months in the uterus. Other children have hip bones or lower leg bones that rotate inward a bit more than they do outward, also causing the feet to point inward. Pigeon toes generally correct themselves by six months to three years of age.

Many other children begin walking with their feet rotated outward, more like a duck's than a pigeon's, but most will assume a more straightforward gait within six months of toddling.

The great majority of youngsters also begin to walk with a sort of ballet movement, striking the ground toe first and heel second, or even to remain on tiptoes. Most will master the normal heel-first stride by about 18 months of age. Bowlegs and knock-knees are also extremely common.

"Kids usually grow out of these problems by the age of 16," said Dr. Thompson, and often much earlier.

DR. THOMPSON said that one thing pediatricians can do to allay parents' fears is to explain the normal evolution of the foot. "Some of my friends were so plagued with mothers and grandmothers wanting their kids to wear corrective shoes that they had two T-shirts made up," she said. One of the shirts said, "Feet under construction," while the other proudly proclaimed: "My doctor says I'm okay."

Believing that the growing foot has a remarkable capacity to adjust itself, Staheli recommends that it be left to its own devices — that is, as few devices as possible.

He extends the barefoot analogy beyond the shape of the shoe to its material. It should be built of a porous, breathing material, like a leather upper or a breathable sort of canvas. The sole should be neither too slippery, he said, nor too gripping, because both textures can cause a child to fall.

The feel of the sole "should be similar to that of the skin," he said. "Take your hand and run it over the bottom of your foot," he went on. "The shoe should feel the same way."

He also believes that a good fit is extremely important and that shoes that are too big can be as bad as those that pinch. Although roomy shoes may feel comfortable, he said, they also tend to get stuck in crevices.

For those children who never do develop an arch, Dr. Staheli said he believes they, too, are likely to be fine with soft, ordinary shoes. He said that recent reports from the American and Israeli Armies have shown that flat feet are perfectly healthy feet, and are subject to fewer stress fractures than are high-arched feet.

BUT SOME DOCTORS feel that a small subgroup of flat-footed children may need a more supportive shoe. Lutter, of Gillette Children's Hospital, said he believes that about 10 percent to 20 percent of flat-footed children over the age of 3 will have leg pains, like shin splints.

"In those children who have an exceedingly relaxed flat foot, the barefoot model is probably not adequate," he said. For them, a shoe with a firm sole and built-in arches may help stabilize the foot and help prevent the muscles in the calves from being pulled downward by the overly relaxed muscles in their arches.

Dr. Richard Martin Jay, a podiatrist and director of foot and ankle medical education at Graduate Hospital, an affiliate of the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia, said he believes that a new generation of orthotic inserts, designed with many of the same engineering principals that go into components of today's expensive high-performance athletic shoes, can help to correct flat feet in children, or to at least prevent the arches from falling even further.

He has developed some of these orthotics himself and is now attempting to market them.

"I'm told I overtreat kids," he said. "I would rather do that than find out in 10 years that I undertreated them and now have to do surgery on them."

BUT THE MAJORITY of pediatric orthopedists believe that the attempt to correct flat feet is futile and unnecessary. Still, a number of them think corrective shoes or devices that attach to shoes may be useful to treat severe pigeon-toes or its obverse, out-toeing.

Pets locked in cars sometimes rely on kindness of strangers

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I just returned from my vacation and had to write this letter first thing. While vacationing in a national park, I saw several dogs locked in closed (or almost closed) cars while their owners toured museums, rode the tram, ate lunch, etc.

Abby, I recall reading in your column the facts about how fast a car heats up when left locked up on a hot summer day. Please publish these facts again soon. Maybe it will cause some thoughtless vacationers to reconsider before taking their pets on vacation with them.

While they may think it's the kind or convenient thing to do, they should decide while planning their vacation whether they are willing to leave at least two car windows partially open when they stop for even a few minutes. If not, they should leave their pet with a relative or friend, have a neighbor care for it at home, or board it in a kennel. These are by far the kindest options for people who really love their pets.

And if other tourists, sight-seeing in a national park, should observe a pet locked in a car with less-than-adequate ventilation, they should report it to the park ranger. — CONCERNED TOURIST FROM STILWELL, KAN.

DEAR CONCERNED: Thank you for a timely reminder to well-meaning, but thoughtless pet owners.

The Animal Protection Institute, P.O. Box 22505, Sacramento, Calif. 95822, sells cards that may be placed under the windshield wiper. They sell for only $3 per 100 cards.

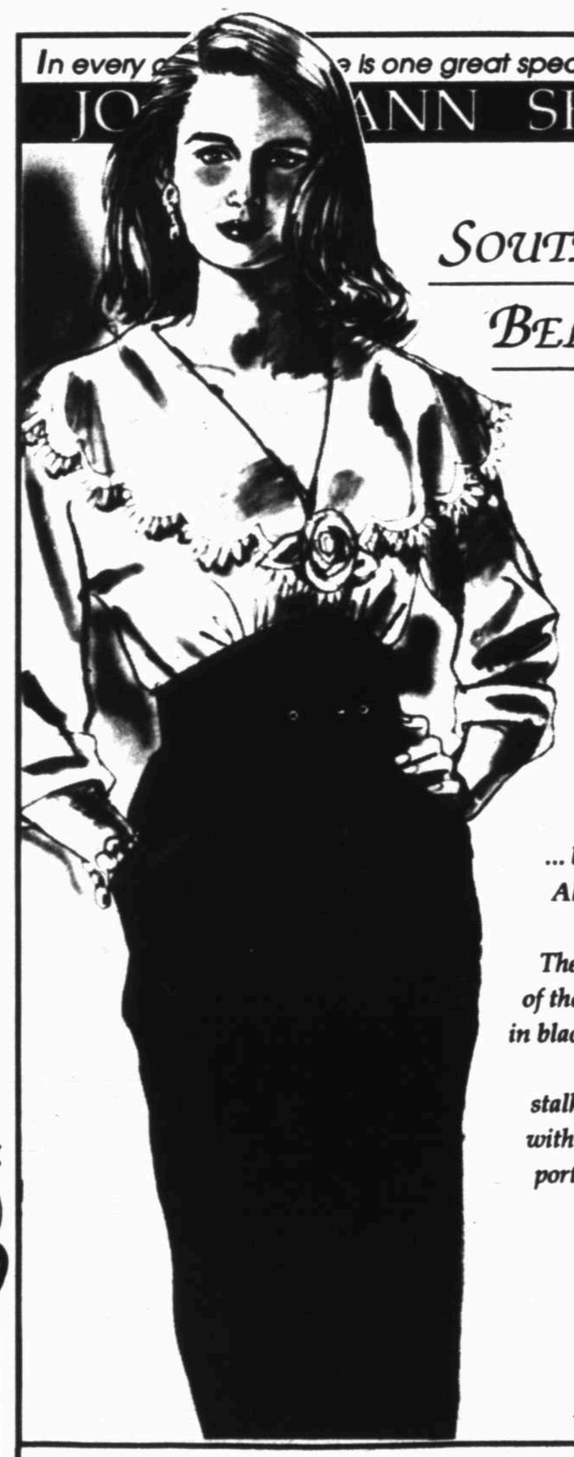

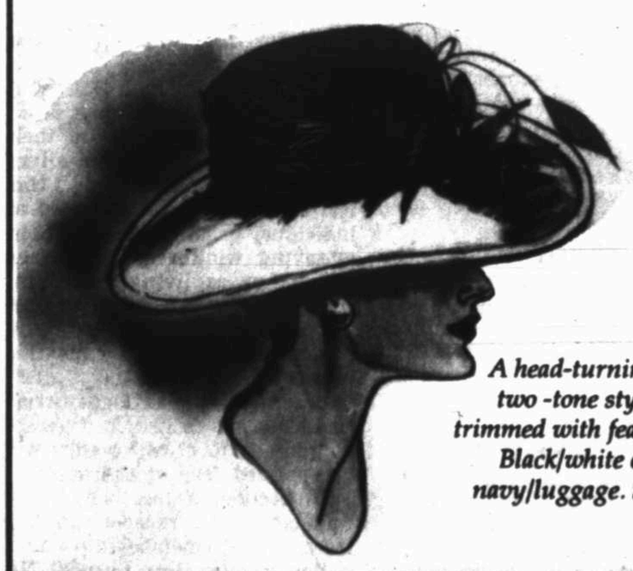

The message on the card reads: "YOUR DOG MAY BE DYING! We understand you meant to be kind by taking your dog with you today, but you could be risking your pet's life.

"On a hot summer day, the inside of a car heats very quickly. On an average 85-degree day, for example, the temperature inside your car — with the windows slightly opened — will reach 102 degrees in 10 minutes. In 30 minutes it will go up to 120 degrees. On warmer days, it will go even higher.

"A dog's normal body temperature is 101.5 to 102.2 degrees Farenheit. A dog can withstand a body temperature of 107 to 108 degrees Farenheit for only a very short time before suffering irreparable brain damage — or even death. The closed car interferes with the dog's normal cooling process, that is, evaporation through panting.

"If your dog is overcome by heat exhaustion, you can give immediate first aid by immersing him or her in cold water until body temperature is lowered."

County copes with aging population

By Jeffrey Bair

VERONA, Pa. (AP) — The four-wheel drive climbs twisty roads to the last of the houses getting this day's beef stew and pickled beets. Helen Stitt drives, Diane Clinton delivers.

"I like to get out and give them a smile for the day," says Mrs. Clinton, who grabs a Meals on Wheels lunch and heads for a porch in this Pittsburgh suburb.

"The meals sometimes are the things that answer the question of can they stay at home, or are they going to have to go to a nursing home," Mrs. Stitt says. "Maybe a program like this means a couple can stay together."

For more than a decade Allegheny County, comprising Pittsburgh and about 130 suburbs, was surpassed among urban counties only by Dade County, Fla., which includes Miami, in the number of people 65 and older.

The 1990 Census showed Allegheny was getting even older with an over-65 share of 17.4 percent, up from 13.8 percent in 1980. Dade showed an elderly share of 14.0 percent in the 1990 census, down from 15.7 percent in 1980.

The way Allegheny County meets the needs of its old people could be a blueprint for the rest of the country in the early 21st century, a researcher at Carnegie Mellon University says.

"Pittsburgh is facing now what we'll all face when the baby boomers start getting old, and there's a block of fewer people around to take care of them," says Harold Miller, associate dean of CMU's urban and public affairs school.

IN VERONA, the volunteer drivers deliver low-salt and regular lunches to nine houses in just under an hour, allowing for brief chats with a woman who lost both legs to diabetes and her sister, who's receiving her first delivery.

Mrs. Clinton notes a widower "was in the dark, watching TV and it looks like the light bulbs are burned out." He may need help cleaning house, so Mrs. Stitt plans to let the county Aging Department know so it can arrange for someone to stop by.

Octagenarian Emily Szymanski, center, dances with a group of children at the Vintage adult day care center in downtown Pittsburgh in February. The county that Pittsburgh is in, Allegheny County, has an elderly population of 17.4 per cent, surpassing Dade County, Fla., with highest percentage of elderly in urban U.S. counties.

The department's director, Charles Stowell, says stay-in-touch programs like this will keep governments from buckling under the needs of the county's 231,911 people who are at least 65 years old.

"Our purpose is to keep them out of the hospital as long as possible," Stowell says. To that end, the county funded about 590,000 home-delivered meals and paid one-tenth of the cab fare for about the same number of rides to medical appointments last year.

It's not just governments that must change to meet the new needs. At St. Justin's Roman Catholic Church, baptisms dropped to 22 last year from 168 in 1965.

"You get so used to ministering to the young," says the Rev. John Staab, "and suddenly you find you've become a ministry to the old."

St. Justin's used federal cash to convert its shuttered high school into apartments for senior citizens, one of 11 such projects in the county.

"It's everything I need, because I need to be with people," says Ruth Detig, 83, a retired teacher.

COMMUNITY LIVING can keep older people healthier through group exercise, something they may not get at home, says Dr. John Prendergast of Mercy Hospital, which is studying the fitness of the the building's tenants.

In another creative solution also growing nationally, sons and daughters drop mothers and fathers off at adult-day care centers, which report long waiting lists. Vintage Inc.'s downtown Pittsburgh center opened when the backlog hit 58 people at its first facility. The cost: $10 to $40 a day, depending on income.

In a room resembling an elementary school classroom, clients in their 70s, 80s and 90s gather daily for art, exercise and songs like "He's Got The Whole World In His Hands."

Many caregivers had quit jobs and took care of their parents "for two years or more because they thought there was nothing else they could do," says Arlene Apfel Snyder, the geriatric services company's executive director.

Vintage Inc. also started a six-day-a-week Meals on Wheels program in east Pittsburgh, up from the traditional five. "We had people squirreling away their Salisbury steak for a Saturday night," Snyder says.

There are four jobs in health care today for every one in metals, compared to a one-to-one ratio in 1980 when steel production, long the dominant industry, began to decline.

THE GRAYING OF the county, and the resulting demand for services, came not only from young adults who fled the steel depression but also because many of the old chose to stay.

Many who remained did so because of ties one or more of the 70 or 80 ethnic groups represented here, says Myrna Silverman, a professor at the University of Pittsburgh's public health school.

Another draw may be Pennsylvania's taxes, including no tax on pensions. Money magazine says among the 10 states most popular with retirees, Pennsylvania is second only to Florida in the taxes a couple, both 66, would pay on $34,000 in income.

Also, Pennsylvania allocates most of its lottery proceeds to programs like drug discounts for older people. Tim O'Shea, Stowell's assistant at the Aging Department, says a new program will pay up to $200 monthly to people who care for retirees.

Nostalgic disease may be recycling

By Henry Page, M.D.

Nostalgic for some old-time disease? Wearying over the present-day AIDS alarm? Then consider the possibility of TB once again becoming a problem. Luckily not as the old, feared "galloping consumption," but rather as a major public health problem, aimed in part at the senior citizenry.

Page

Lest we forget, it was just a wee bit over a century ago that the white plague ran rampant throughout the U.S.A., afflicting over 200 out of every 100,000 persons.

Then one of the great medical triumphs ensued, following the discovery in Germany (by Dr. Robert Koch) of the tubercle bacillus. This enabled the adoption of preventive measures, some of which probably violated present "constitutional rights," but not common sense. Add to this the development of several specific medications and the incidence rapidly diminished from 200 to 1.5 per 100,000.

TB sanitoriums and hospitals closed throughout the land and the problem dissipated into faint memory. However, this improvement was so recent that we find a large percentage of our aging population with healed scars of old, past infections. These scars show a propensity to break down and reactivate the old disease — explaining why 30 percent of newly diagnosed cases occur in persons over 65 years of age. In other words, a coughing grandmother can potentially infect her grandchild while bouncing it on her knee.

Another negative factor is the sudden influx of unhygienic, illegal immigrants crossing our borders without inspection and contaminating our core city population. Then, to put a little frosting on the cake, we now have a large number of individuals with gross immune deficiency, a condition making them susceptible to all types of both common and exotic infections, including Koch's bacillus. Therefore, it is no wonder that recently the incidence of TB is rising and in some border states special facilities are reopening.

Both the prevention and the treatment of Tuberculosis can easily be accomplished with proper patient cooperation. The crux of the problem is the act of thinking of it in the first place and then educating the populace so that it will cooperate. This proves difficult because of the disease's insidious onset with weight loss, weakness, cough and shortness of breath — are all found in many other conditions.

For heaven's sake, don't complain about the pasteurization of milk, one of the great preventative measures. For this we must thank France for Louie Pasteur, the father of microbiology.

Skin testing and chest X-rays constitute a small price to pay for protection against a world-wide organism. It has been said that the Germans call micro-organisms germs; the French term them parasites; and the Irish name them mike-robes!

Henry F. Page, M.D., F.A.C.P., is health and safety consultant to Midland Presbyterian Homes.

Richards hopes for short session

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards said Thursday she hopes lawmakers can quickly complete work in the upcoming special session on redistricting, prison construction and the problem of county jail crowding.

"I hope this is going to be a short session, and I think it can be," Richards said before a speech to her appointees to state boards and commissions. "We're going to push for it to be as short as possible."

This year's second special legislative session begins Monday, less than a week after lawmakers ended a 30-day special budget session. That followed a 140-day regular session in which lawmakers approved, among other items, comprehensive school finance reforms.

Richards said she has not yet put criminal justice issues on the official agenda for the session because she wants to be careful about how she words the item.

"Certainly criminal justice — prisons, jails — very much will be a part of the call," she said.

The governor controls the special session agenda, or call, and she so far has listed only congressional and State Board of Education redistricting for lawmakers' consideration.

"When you call a session, anything that is germane to a general topic can be introduced and discussed and considered ... If I am not cautious in the beginning about how I phrase the call, then we could have a whole lot of legislation come through here and be here for a long time," Richards said.

"I think these legislators want to come in and get this business done that must be done, and get on back home," she said.

In the special session that ended Tuesday, lawmakers approved a $59.45 billion, two-year state budget and a $2.7 billion increase in fees and taxes.

They did not approve new districts for the 15-member State Board of Education or for the U.S. House of Representatives. The districts are redrawn every 10 years, following the U.S. census.

Under 1990 census figures, Texas gains three new congressional seats in the U.S. House of Representatives, for a total of 30. The new lines have to be drawn before January, when political candidates must file for the 1992 primary elections.

On criminal justice, lawmakers last session approved a proposed constitutional amendment for voters to decide on Nov. 5 whether the state should issue $1.1 billion in bonds to build prisons.

Just before speaking to state boards appointees, Gov. Ann Richards said the next special session will be shorter.

Sharp says legislators used his budget ideas

AUSTIN (AP) — State Comptroller John Sharp said Thursday that Texas lawmakers avoided "the mother of all train wrecks" by adopting many of his recommendations.

Sharp said the Legislature meeting in the special session that ended Tuesday passed about 60 percent of the cost-saving ideas from an audit of state government.

"Realistically, we got a real good first start," Sharp said.

The audit report outlined about $4 billion in savings, and became the centerpiece of the 30-day special session.

Sharp said lawmakers would have been considering a $5 billion to $7 billion tax bill for the 1992-93 budget if they hadn't embraced many of the audit recommendations.

"What was going to happen was the mother of all train wrecks," he said.

But through agency mergers, fund consolidations, and legislation aimed at collecting more federal dollars, he said, the Legislature whittled the tax bill to about $2.7 billion.

Sharp said many of the Legislature's actions were in the face of stiff lobby opposition.

"The Legislature did some things that surprised some folks," he said.

But he added that some of the proposals slipped into law because "there weren't enough lobbyists to go around" to fight the nearly 1,000 recommendations.

"The opposition didn't have time to gel," he said.

Sharp said many of the Legislature's actions were in the face of stiff lobby opposition.

Sharp said his biggest disappointment of the session was the failure of a proposal to consolidate many of the professional licensing agencies into one agency. "I don't think industry groups ought to have their own licensing agencies," he said.

The measure he said he was most glad passed was the addition of 62 Texas Employment Commission workers to enforce state law that requires private sector employers to timely pay their employees.

"We had a real problem in El Paso," Sharp said referring to instances of garment workers who were refused pay.

On higher education, Sharp said the Legislature's $189 million cut was close to his proposed $212 million cut, but he added, lawmakers did not change the way public college and university officials spend the money.

During the session, Sharp had been critical of universities spending thousands of dollars on lavish office furnishings, and perquisites, such as country club dues.

Higher taxes anger motorists, bingo officials

AUSTIN (AP) — Bingo officials aren't feeling very charitable toward lawmakers who voted to raise their taxes, and motorists are fuming over the imminent state gasoline tax hike.

The higher bingo taxes "will kill us," said Glen Gardner, adjutant quartermaster in Texas for the Veterans of Foreign Wars. "It's a big slap in the face for the charities."

The increases are part of a $2.7 billion tax increase to fund a $59.45 billion budget that lawmakers approved Tuesday. Gov. Ann Richards has indicated she will sign both bills into law.

Edward Plodzik, president of the Association of Texas Bingo Licensees, said that within six months half the charities now licensed to operate bingo will stop holding games.

The bingo increases include raising the tax on bingo receipts from 2 percent to 5 percent; and imposing a 3 percent rental receipts tax on commercial lessors of bingo halls and 3 percent tax on bingo winnings.

"This is going to put most of the small, legitimate charities operating bingo out of business. Only the big for-profit operators will be able to afford it," Gardner told the Austin American-Statesman in Thursday's editions.

Meanwhile at the gas pump, some citizens were angered over the gasoline increase.

"I think it stinks," said Angela Stalbaum of Austin. "That's a big increase all at once. (Lawmakers) need to find another way to balance their budget, not from our pocketbooks."

Revenues derived from the gasoline tax are constitutionally dedicated with three-quarters going to highways and one-quarter going to schools. That seemed to soften the blow for some motorists.

Police chastise judge for freeing suspect

HOUSTON (AP) — Police are criticizing a judge for freeing a murder suspect, disputing the court's contention that police failed to get a warrant or advise the suspect of his rights before he confessed.

Marvin Bell, 22, confessed to shooting Sheriff's Deputy Robert Lee Dixon but earlier this week state District Judge Norman Lanford blocked the confession and a weapon from being introduced as evidence in Bell's trial.

"All these things were done according to accepted investigative standards, which, until this time, had been enough," said Capt. Bill Edison, of the police homicide division.

"I think there's every indication he was warned several times. If there were any mistakes made on our part, they won't be repeated," he said.

Bell allegedly shot Dixon sat while the deputy, who was off duty, sat in his car. Lanford said a proper warrant was not issued for Bell's arrest and he was allowed to confess before he received proper warning about his rights.

"The law's real clear on how people are supposed to be arrested and how they're supposed to be handled once they're in custody," Lanford said.

"This is the consequence they should expect," he added. "If they'd taken a half-hour to go 50 feet to the municipal courts and find any one of the 50 judges there, it would have cured the illegal arrest. Then the question would have been how much time Bell would have to serve."

"I'm not worried about criticism," Edison said. "I'm worried about a cop killer going free."

Dixon was shot five times as he sat in his Corvette at 4:30 a.m. talking to a 13-year-old girl.

Testimony in Bell's trial showed Bell and two companions were looking for prostitutes when they spotted Dixon's Corvette. Bell's friends testified Bell said he wanted to "get" the sports car. Gunshots were heard, and Bell told his friend the owner "wouldn't get out of the car."

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — NASCAR driver J.D. McDuffie, who died in a violent crash during his 653rd race, never won a Winston Cup event, but friends and colleagues remembered him as a winner Thursday.

"I know he went happy. I know he went the way he wanted to go — in a race car," former crew chief George Sekanina said during a funeral service at Grace Chapel Christian Church.

McDuffie, 52, of Sanford, was killed instantly Sunday when his Pontiac flipped into the air and smashed into a firewall and guardrail only five laps into the Budweiser at the Glen NASCAR Winston Cup race in Watkins Glen, N.Y.

At the church, black and white checkered flags and yellow and blue floral arrangements containing McDuffie's No. 70 race car number were placed at the altar.

Ganged up on

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Managers of a local shopping mall have banned customers from wearing Los Angeles Raiders paraphernalia, saying the clothes and hats are associated with gang activity.

People in Raiders T-shirts, pants or hats shopping at the Coral Square mall are told to remove them or leave, because the name "Raiders" is used by a Coral Springs gang, mall representatives said.

Schools in neighboring Palm Beach County and elsewhere around the country have also tried to implement a similar ban on silver-and-black Raiders items.

Real Raiders fans are fuming.

"It's ludicrous," said Ramon Collazo, a Coral Springs resident. "I said, 'What if they come out with a gang called the Dolphins? You're going to ban everybody from wearing Dolphins hats?'"

Angel wins becoming habit

Red-hot Midland has won 10 of 13 to retain first place

Staff Report

SAN ANTONIO — Midland batters played long ball while the Angels got the necessary pitching in a 5-4 Texas League decision over the San Antonio Missions here Thursday night.

At 28-22 in the second half, first-place Midland is now four games ahead of San Antonio in the Western Division.

In Thursday's game, the Angels scored all but one of their runs on home runs, as Kevin Flora hit a towering shot to left field in the third inning, Mark Howie yanked a two-run shot to center in the fifth, and Edgar Alfonzo sealed the win with a bases-empty blast into the wind at left-center in the sixth.

Those homers marked the first time this season any team has hit three balls out of V.J. Keefe Field here in a single game.

Midland got its other run in the first, as Tim Salmon drove Reggie Williams home on a fielder's choice ground ball.

Fili Martinez (4-4) threw six strong innings for the Angels, giving up one earned run in that span and leaving the game with a 5-2 lead. Clemente Acosta had a chance at the save, but was shaky in the seventh and gave up a two-run single to Tim Barker that closed the gap to 5-4.

After walking Jorge Alvarez with one out and giving up a base hit to Lance Rice that put runners on the corners in the eighth inning, Acosta was replaced by Doug Robertson.

Robertson struck out pinch hitter Adam Brown to get the second out of the inning, but he then walked .120-hitting Rex Peters on four pitches to load the bases. However, Robertson got out of the jam when Eric Young grounded out to shortstop.

In the ninth Barker flied out and Raul Mondesi grounded out to short to give the Missions just one out to work with. Steve Finken came through, as Midland third baseman Mark Howie was guarding the line and allowed Finken to reach on an infield hit into the hole. But Robertson rebounded to get Chris Morrow to fly out to left for the final out and Robertson's eighth save of the season.

The score could have more lop-sided in Midland's favor but for 12 stranded Angel base runners. Of that dozen, nine were left in scoring position.

San Antonio left 10 runners on base.

Midland has now won five games with three left to play in the 10-game road

Puerto Ricans dunk U.S.

Associated Press

HAVANA — It will be up to the NBA to bring gold to the U.S. basketball.

For the fifth time in as many major international competitions, a U.S. men's team will return without a gold medal. Puerto Rico saw to that Thursday night with a 73-68 victory over the United States in the semifinals of the Pan American Games.

Pan Am Games

This current U.S. team — the last made up of collegiate players with the NBA set to join USA Basketball for next summer's Olympics in Barcelona — had to face an experienced Puerto Rican team without its leading scorer and playmaker, Jim Jackson. The Ohio State star could only sit on the bench, his left foot in a cast with a stress fracture diagnosed on Wednesday.

Storms a factor, Daly not

■ Keith Clearwater scored a single-round record 18 points at the PGA International, while golf's new hero, John Daly experiences limited success.

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. — Keith Clearwater compiled the best score of his five-season PGA Tour career Thursday in the storm-delayed and incomplete first round of The International.

And his 9-under-par 63 doesn't count.

It will not go on the books or be figured into his season's scoring average.

Neither will a drive of about 400 yards by new PGA Champion and folk hero Long John Daly.

The weather — which caused a series of delays totaling more than three hours and left 72 players stranded on the course by darkness — had nothing to do with either Daly's drive or Clearwater's

Midland kids find they have a love for tennis

By Jimmy Patterson

Lamont Robinson, a 16-year-old junior at Midland Lee, recently opened the newspaper and found that a childhood friend had been thrown in jail on a drug offense. He was saddened by what societal ills had done to his friend.

Robinson, however, has taken steps to avoid becoming a victim of "the bad stuff", as he calls the drugs, alcohol and crime that has taken over so many of today's youth.

Robinson's proficiency in playing the violin in the Lee orchestra has given him hopes of earning a college scholarship in music.

And this summer, thanks to Roy Lee Smith, Don Clay, Gary Pierce and a handful of others, Robinson has picked up a new hobby: Tennis.

Smith, pastor of the predominantly black congregation at True Lite Christian Fellowship, and Clay, a member of the church, have donated their time. Gary Pierce, tennis pro at Ranchland Hills Country Club, has donated both his time and a box full of rackets.

About 30 kids, most of whom come from near poverty-level homes, have been meeting at the Lee Freshmen High School tennis courts four times a week this summer, learning how to play a sport that has been dominated by white athletes since its inception. According to Smith, 20 of the kids come from the church's membership. The other 10 just happened by the school one day and have been

Mattingly shaved from lineup for not cutting hair

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — On opening day of his first season as principal owner of the New York Yankees, George Steinbrenner surveyed his players as they lined up along the first-base line during introductions.

Taking an envelope from his jacket pocket, he jotted down a series of numbers. After the game, he gave the envelope to Ralph Houk, the manager, and instructed him to tell the players belonging to those numbers to get their hair cut. Houk, who would leave at the end of the season, would have no part of it and tossed the envelope into the trash.

Four years later, during the 1977 season, Thurman Munson, angry with Steinbrenner, defied club rules and grew a beard during a road trip. The reticent Munson bristled as the beard attracted more and more attention and questions and gave the owner an excuse to criticize Manager Billy Martin for supposedly losing control of his players.

'I'm overwhelmed by the pettiness of it. I don't consider my hair long ... To me, long hair is down my back, touching my collar. I don't feel my hair is messy. I feel I'm neat, not a sloppy type person.'

— Don Mattingly

Wishing to add no more fuel to the Steinbrenner fire that would consume Martin, Munson eventually shaved in a motel room in Syracuse, where the team was playing an exhibition game.

The Steinbrenner influence lives.

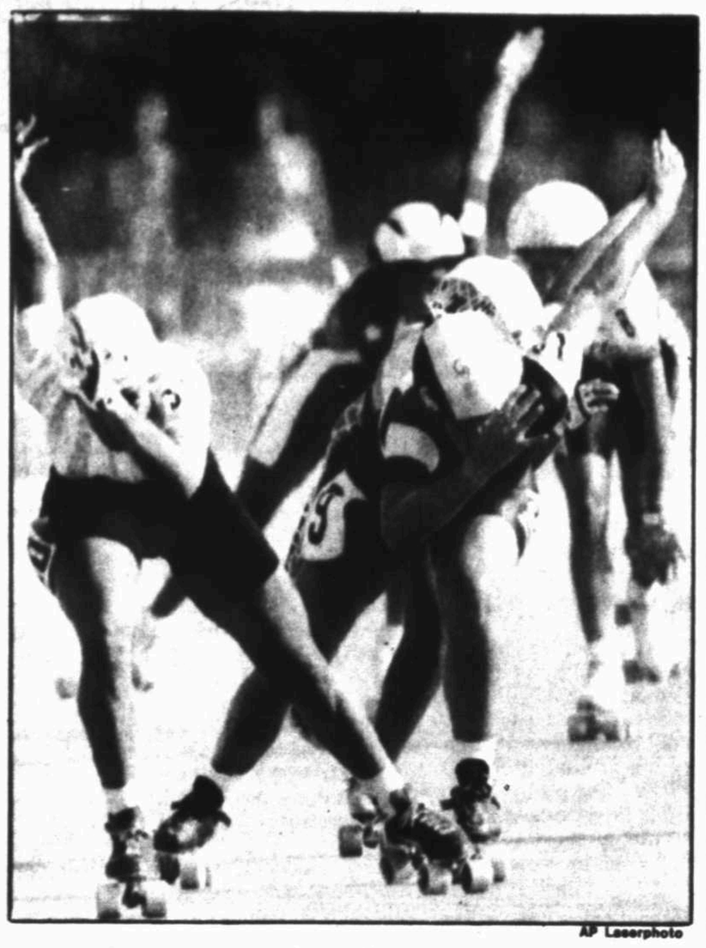

Don Mattingly, the team's best player, senior player and captain, was removed from the Yankee lineup Thursday because he refused to cut his hair.

He would not play again, Manager Stump Merrill told him, until he cut his hair. He would be fined $250, Merrill also told him, for not cutting it Thursday and an additional $100 a day until he did.

"I'm overwhelmed by the pettiness of it," Mattingly told reporters after he sat out the game. He also revealed that two months ago he asked to be traded, and repeated the request Thursday.

Merrill also talked to reporters, explaining what he said was his decision but one that obviously came from General Manager Gene Michael, who wasn't around to discuss it. As he spoke, Merrill sat at his desk, his head bowed. He appeared to be embarrassed and uncomfortable talking about the matter, but he

Parrish notches 300th homer

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Lance Parrish hit his 300th career home run and Mark Langston allowed two hits in seven innings as the Angels beat Minnesota for their third consecutive victory over the Twins.

Parrish became the 64th player to hit 300 homers when he connected in the third for a two-run drive off Scott Erickson (15-5). Parrish, who had only 16 hits in his previous 108 at-bats, has homered in three consecutive games, giving him 15 this year.

Langston (15-6), who struck out three and walked three, won for the first time in four starts since July 26, allowing a single to Dan Gladden in the first and an infield hit to Al Newman in the third. Chris Beasley and Mike Fetters finished the six-hitter.

Orioles 9, Rangers 2

BALTIMORE — Jose Mesa celebrated his return from the minors with a three-hitter and rookie Chito Martinez drove in four runs as the Orioles completed a four-game sweep of the Rangers.

Mesa (5-8), recalled from Class AAA Rochester earlier in the day, struck out a career-high nine and walked two in his first big league victory in 96 days. He had gone nine straight starts without a victory before being sent to the minors on June 30.

Yankees 5, Royals 1

NEW YORK — Scott Sanderson pitched four-hit ball for seven innings as the New York Yankees beat Kansas City to snap the Royals' four-game winning streak.

The Royals have won 22 of their last 28 games to get back into the race in the American League West, including three of four from New York. The Yankees won for only the sixth time in their last 26 games.

Blue Jays 4, Brewers 1

MILWAUKEE — Toronto stopped its longest losing streak in four years at seven games as the Blue Jays beat the Milwaukee Brewers behind Kelly Gruber's two-run homer.

Gruber, in a 3-for-26 slump, hit his 13th home run of the year in the fourth inning off Dan Plesac (1-5), putting the Blue Jays ahead 3-0. Plesac, a three-time All-Star as a reliever, was making just the second start of his major league career and the six inning-plus outing was his longest ever.

Mariners 8, Athletics 6

SEATTLE — The Mariners completed their first-ever four-game sweep at home, beating the Athletics on Jay Buhner's go-ahead sacrifice fly in the seventh inning.

Ken Griffey Jr. homered and doubled twice as the Mariners, formed in 1977, also finished off their first four-game sweep of the Athletics. Seattle won the season series 7-6, and the home team won every game.

Tigers 6, White Sox 4

DETROIT — Lou Whitaker and Alan Trammell drove in three runs each as the Tigers beat the White Sox and remained two games behind the first-place Toronto in the American League East.

The Tigers and Blue Jays open a three-game series Friday night in Tiger Stadium.

Red Sox 6, Indians 2

CLEVELAND — Ellis Burks hit a two-run triple and rookie Mike Gardiner pitched six strong innings as the Red Sox beat the Indians for their seventh victory in eight games.

GAMES: USA slowed by Jackson's injury

(From 1C)

Puerto Rico had beaten a U.S. team two of the last three times the countries met. U.S. coach Gene Keady had promised this would be a close game, unlike the last two U.S. victories in this tournament by a combined 104 points against the Bahamas and Uruguay.

When the game ended, Puerto Rican players and fans converged on the court as the U.S. non-gold run stretched again.

Now the United States will play for the bronze medal on Saturday against the loser of the other semifinal between Cuba and Mexico.

"We're not done yet. We want to win the bronze. That's the American way," Keady said. "We want to be the best."

They may have been for the first 35 minutes of the game.

The United States, which led 37-29 at halftime and 43-33 early in the second half, took its final lead of the game at 64-63 on a 3-pointer by Walt Williams with 4:48 left. It would be four minutes before the United States would score again, and by then Puerto Rico had a 71-64 lead and the packed crowd at Sports City Coliseum was cheering every move that gave it the advantage.

The scoreless streak had four U.S. turnovers and just one missed shot. But Puerto Rico made each possession count by running down the clock and never missing at the foul line. Edgar Leon's two free throws with 3:58 left and two more 1:01 later made Puerto Rico a perfect 16-for-16 from the foul line.

The United States finally broke the scoring drought on two free throws by Clarence Weatherspoon with 48 seconds left. Terry Dehere scored immediately when he stole the inbounds pass to make it 71-68.

Puerto Rico ran the clock down to 21 seconds before Dehere was called for an intentional foul. James Carter made one of two and, on the ensuing possession, he was fouled again and did the same for the final margin.

"In the second half their big guys took over and that really hurt us," Keady said. "We had the opportunities, we didn't use it. They're more used to international play. I hoped that wouldn't hurt us in the second half, but it did."

The United States finished with a 25-18 rebound advantage.

HAIR: Yankee slugger indicates he'll get a trim

spoke the company line.

"If someone from management tells you you need a haircut, you get a haircut," Merrill said.

Not necessarily so, said the Major League Baseball Players Association, whose lawyers Mattingly plans to consult.

"Even I might be able to defend this one, and I'm not a lawyer," said Mark Belanger, a union official. "It's so silly. It's like a power trip."

Merrill noted that players sign an agreement at the beginning of spring training regarding club rules. "For whatever reason, he chose not to adhere to it," the manager said of Mattingly. "We can't have that."

But, Belanger countered, the form players sign simply says they have read the rules. Then, he added, "It comes down to the club saying something like, 'You should shave every other day so you'll look good,' and the player saying, 'I don't want to because my face breaks out.'"

The Yankees' rules prohibit long hair, but they don't say what's too long. Mattingly took note of that fact, saying: "I don't know how much to get it cut. I had it cut two weeks ago, but I guess it's not good enough."

Merrill initially talked to Mattingly about his hair two weeks ago. "I didn't handle it as well as I could," Merrill said. "He expressed concern about it, and I gave him some time to think about it."

Mattingly said he had told Merrill he didn't really want to have it cut. "I thought there would be a point where they'd start taking money from me," Mattingly said. "I didn't mind that."

But Thursday became a deadline, and the two men had a brief conversation before the game that went something like this:

Mattingly: Am I in the lineup?

Merrill: Are you going to get your hair cut?

Mattingly: No.

Merrill: Well, you're not in the lineup.

"I was pretty much backed into a corner," Mattingly told reporters, speaking softly. "Cut it in an hour or don't play. I felt painted into a corner. I felt challenged. I'm kind of confused and surprised by everything that happened today. I'm a little upset."

Merrill didn't appear to be any happier than his first baseman. "It's a situation you're not proud to be in, but you're in it and you have to address it," he said. "If you have rules, you have to abide by them. Otherwise, why have them?"

But without a definition, long hair appears to be in the eye of the beholder.

"I don't consider my hair long," Mattingly said. "To me, long hair is down my back, touching my collar. I don't feel my hair is messy. I feel I'm neat, not a sloppy type person."

Mattingly's hair, which as he spoke was wet and not as full as it is when dry, was curling at the end and barely touching the top of his T-shirt. The way he spoke he seemed to be resigned to cutting his hair.

When asked what he would do he said: "Whatever I have to do to get back in the lineup; whatever I have to do to stay on the field the rest of the year, to show people I can still play and keep my value. I'll come to play tomorrow.

"If I have to get my hair cut a little ... I don't know. I like it the way it is. That's why I kept it. Today I made a decision. Tomorrow I'll have to make one."

Rookie takes his turn at Mets

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Rheal Cormier, in his major-league debut, became the Cardinals' first left-handed starter to win in 121 games in a 4-1 victory over the fast-sinking Mets.

The Mets have lost seven in a row, including three straight to St. Louis, and 19 of 23. The Cardinals completed their first sweep against New York since April 19, 1987.

Cormier replaced the injured Ken Hill in the starting rotation after being called up from Triple-A Louisville on Tuesday. He worked six innings and gave up a run on seven hits, becoming the team's first left-handed starter to win since Joe Magrane Sept. 25.

NL Roundup

Cubs 7, Expos 6

CHICAGO — Ryne Sandberg's sacrifice fly capped a three-run eighth inning as the Chicago Cubs rallied twice and beat the Montreal Expos to avoid a three-game sweep.

With Montreal leading 6-4, Shawon Dunston led off the eighth with a double, his fourth hit of the game. Jeff Fassaro (1-4) relieved Bill Sampen and walked Rick Wilkins. Jose Vizcaino sacrificed and pinch-hitter Chico Walker hit a run-scoring single to shortstop.

Mark Grace's grounder skipped past third baseman Tim Wallach for an error as Wilkins scored the tying run and Sandberg followed with his sacrifice fly.

Padres 1, Braves 0

SAN DIEGO — Greg Harris pitched a three-hitter for his second straight shutout and the Padres beat the Braves for their fifth victory in six games.

Harris (4-3), who pitched a six-hit, 1-0 victory against Cincinnati on Saturday, struck out six and walked two. He has pitched 21 consecutive scoreless innings and has not allowed an earned run in his last 25 innings.

San Diego got its run in the eighth off John Smoltz (8-13), who allowed four hits, struck out nine and walked two in his third complete game.

Phillies 6, Pirates 4

PITTSBURGH — The Phillies ended a 14-game losing streak against division-leading Pittsburgh, getting a three-run double from Dickie Thon in a five-run fifth inning to beat the Pirates.

Giants 4, Reds 1

SAN FRANCISCO — The Reds lost their cool and their 25th game in 35 as Paul McClellan gave up one hit in 7⅓ innings and the Giants defeated Cincinnati.

Before the Reds left the dugout for the fourth inning, starter Jose Rijo exchanged words with third baseman Chris Sabo, and the two had to be restrained by several teammates and manager Lou Piniella.

TENNIS: Sport helps Midland kids stay clean and busy back ever since.

"Tennis teaches such self-discipline," Smith said. "It challenges yourself. You're either your own best friend or your own worst enemy.

"The kids have really boosted our enthusiasm. They've been so excited about the program. Every evening when we get there, they're all there waiting."

The program is the brainchild of Clay, who says he wants to help try to "save souls through tennis."

"Tennis is a very gentile sport. Its value is not based on brutality or brute physical strength, but it encompasses all the things important in football, basketball and baseball."

One of the group's top priorities is just reaching children. "Getting to them before they get to that (drugs)," Clay said. So far, that goal has been achieved beyond expectations.

Instead of "laying around the house," as one boy remarked, kids in the program now have higher goals, all because of the program.

Twelve-year-old Titus Boyce, who, like most of the kids, had never picked up a racket before this summer, said he has learned to like the sport, and intends to keep playing.

"Not yet, but I will be," Boyce said, when asked if he was playing as well as he thought he could.

"If I didn't have this, I'd be at home and wouldn't have anything to do."

Fifteen-year-old Georvarsey "Geo" Mitchell, had to pick between playing in a basketball tournament Wednesday night at the Northeast YMCA or attending the tennis clinic.

"I like to be here," Mitchell said, as he held his tennis racket, anxious to return to the baseline. "That (basketball) can wait. I'll go there later."

Mitchell, who just moved to Midland from Andrews, plans to develop his game to the point of trying out for the Rebel tennis team. Mitchell, who also plays basketball, said he is impressed with the discipline being drilled into the kids.

"Some of the kids have foul mouths, but they know they can't do that here," Mitchell said. "And this'll teach them to catch themselves."

His 13-year-old cousin, Chris, is also grateful of having something to occupy his time this summer.

"It's a great influence knowing there's something like this to do other than sitting around planning to rob a bank or join a gang," Chris Mitchell said.

Smith echoed Clay's feelings by saying that if the tennis clinic helped just one kid, it would be worth it.

"I think it's going to save some of them from a lot of heartache and trouble," Smith said. "These kids are young and active and there's a lot of things they can get into, but they came here on there own."

Smith said he hoped that the program would become a "dominant part of the community ... not for any selfish reason, but for the kids."

All the volunteers involved said they would like to see more people — from local heads of business to other tennis pros — who would be willing to lend a helping hand.

Pierce, tennis pro at RHCC since 1985, first became involved in the project when Clay called him earlier in the summer, explained the program and asked if he could help in some way.

As luck would have it, Pierce had run across a box of old rackets a couple of months earlier, and without hesitation restrung and donated them to the program.

The rackets, which feature the autographs of former champions like Chris Evert, Bjorn Borg and Jack Cramer, are wooden and were brand new about 15 years ago. They are still in good condition today. To the kids who received them, "they're like gold," Pierce said.

"These kids didn't say, 'Hey, you're giving me an old wooden racket, they cherished the rackets. It was Christmas in August for them."

The youths involved will also become members of the United States Tennis Association for a year, and will also be given lessons.

Pierce had intended on merely donating the rackets and giving the kids a free lesson. But after his initial visit, Pierce said he was so overwhelmed that he intends to go back every other Friday.

"Every ear and every eye was on us," Pierce said of himself and his assistants, John Brennamen and former Midland High player Tracey Hopkins.

"After it was over, they followed us up to the van. Said they'd see us next week. It was kind of a mutual joy thing for us. They were the most polite kids I've ever met in my life. They are very deserving."

Added Clay: "Tennis is not a team sport. But we're a team out here."

Rainy days coming for Tyson

Fighter no longer appeals to image-conscious public

By Jim Litke
AP Sports Writer

Mike Tyson had better have a little money put aside, because that rainy day is approaching fast.

He has not been charged with a crime, but a county grand jury in Indianapolis begins hearing evidence Friday tied to an accusation of rape that could threaten his ability to make a living in the ring. If he fights and loses, his appeal at the gate could evaporate faster than a stack of chips in Vegas. His endorsement value already is less than zero.

"He'd better beat Evander Holyfield," said Lloyd Kolmer, who heads a New York-based sports and celebrity consulting and negotiating firm, "because that's about the only way he'll ever make another nickel."

"As far as we're concerned," concurred Nova Lanktree, who directs operations for Chicago-based Burns Sports Celebrity Service, "Mike Tyson might as well be dead."

Now those assessments might sound cold. But try to think of another figure in the wide world of sports whose image right now is nearly as loathsome. Agencies like those run by Kolmer and Lanktree spend a lot of time and effort doing just that — and they can't come up with any names to compile even a short list.

For instance, baseball's Wade Boggs and Pete Rose are both considered untouchables in the advertising and promotional business at the moment. And Jose Canseco, Dwight Gooden and football's Lawrence Taylor often show up at the head of the class just below that one.

But none of them are thought to be, as Tyson is, irrevocably banished from the banquet and commercial circuits that provide so many ballplayers with the adulation and walking-around change they seem to need so desperately after they leave the game.

"I wasn't even in this business when Paul Hornung and Alex Karras got caught in that football betting scandal, but look how both of them made it back," Lanktree said. "And I could even see where Rose, given the right set of circumstances, might make it back in a few years.

"But Tyson," she added, "never. I can't tell you exactly where the moral line is drawn on these things, but I can definitely tell you when somebody has stepped over it. And he has."

An athlete's image is shaped by many things, first and foremost by the ability to distinguish himself from the others in the same line of work.

Tyson's fierceness, his smiling-but-slightly menacing presence met that criterion almost from the very outset of his career. And it quickly became the underpinning for what looked like a long and lucrative career in the commercials and perhaps even the silver screen.

Remember the commercial for a soft drink in which ex-wife Robin Givens playfully snapped a towel at Tyson? Now remember how quickly that premise was sunk because people found out that the snapping didn't quit just because somebody yelled "Cut!"

The lesson here is that when you begin with an image out on the edge, you better have pretty good balance.

"Controversy is one thing," Kolmer said. "That's the reason the standard contracts in this business have 'moral turpitude' clauses in them.

"Companies can live with a setback. All you have to do is look at what happened to Bo Jackson. But what happened to Tyson ... is that he turned out to be even worse than the worst you could think of him. You don't come back from that."

It bears repeating here that Tyson has not even been charged in the incident at Indianapolis, and even if that should happen, he is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

It also is worth noting that while people like Kolmer and Lanktree know everything about how image is projected through advertising, and perhaps considerably less about the same phenomenon in boxing, their impressions are not without some value.

"If anything, this whole business in Indianapolis will only help sell the fight. Because a few more people will tune in to see him get his block knocked off," Kolmer said.

"He got beat once by (Buster) Douglas and he's had two bad fights against that guy (Razor) Ruddock. Now you're talking about the dirtiest game in sports and this is a dirty issue. But he better win. He's such an unpopular villain already that if he gets beaten up pretty good, people will be glad to be rid of him once and for all."

A spokesman in the Marion County prosecutor's office said the grand jury proceedings should be completed by Labor Day.

PGA: Clearwater fires bogey-free round

score.

It is the format and scoring system.

Clearwater's effort will be recorded as 18 points — a one-round record — under the modified Stableford scoring system used for The International.

Medal scores do not count in this unique event. Points are awarded for a player's performance on each hole: 5 for an eagle, 2 for birdie, zero for par, minus-1 for bogey and minus-3 for double bogey and higher.

Clearwater, who hasn't won since his rookie season of 1987, didn't make a bogey on the 7,570-yard Castle Pines Golf Club course and had nine birdies, including seven over one stretch of nine holes.

"The first round all year that I didn't feel I left anything on the golf course," Clearwater said.

"I putted better than I have in a long time. Everything that should go in, did go in," he said.

So did a couple that had no business falling into the cup. One was from about 70 feet, "up over a ridge, down and breaking several feet," Clearwater said.

That was on the 12th hole. On the 16th, he scored from slightly shorter range, about 45 feet.

The 18 points over 18 holes broke the record of 17 by Joey Sindelar in the final round of his tournament victory in 1988.

And, for whatever it's worth, it gave Clearwater the lead at the halfway point of the first round. In reality the lead means very little under this format.

Speed kills as Lendl falls victim to Rosset

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — One day after saying he didn't think wide body racquets and power tennis detracted from the sport, Ivan Lendl was run over Thursday by a serve that traveled at speeds up to 128 mph.

The owner of the serve, 6-foot-5 Marc Rosset of Switzerland, was solid off the ground but sonic with his serve. Blond, blue-eyed and baby-faced, Rosset was consistently clocked in the low 120s on his first serve. By comparison, Lendl, considered one of tennis' bigger servers during his decade-long reign, served mostly in the high 90s, once reaching 107 mph.

"It's pretty big," Lendl said of his 20-year-old opponent's serve after losing, 6-4, 6-4, in the third round of the Volvo International tournament. "The speed is a problem."

Having won his second-round match handily Wednesday against Arnaud Boetsch of France, Lendl had briefly addressed the subject of Power Boy Tennis, which is mostly an issue in the wake of Wimbledon, where a return of serve qualifies as a rally. Rosset, in fact, had one of his Wimbledon serves this year timed at 134 mph.

Oil rebounds

NEW YORK — Energy futures headed higher in moderate trading Thursday, as home heating oil took the spotlight with gains of nearly a penny a gallon.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, heating oil for September delivery jumped 0.96 cent to settle at 60.41 cents a gallon, while later contract months also gained.

Meanwhile, West Texas Intermediate for September delivery settled at $21.44 per barrel, up 17 cents, on the Merc. The contract had fallen 31 cents on Tuesday.

Natural gas prices rose, with the September contract settling at $1.288 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 0.05 cent.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK — The dollar finished higher Thursday against most major currencies as a strong report on U.S. housing starts outweighed the effects of a long-awaited hike in German interest rates.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 136.59 yen, up 0.19 yen from Wednesday's close.

In New York, the British pound finished at $1.6720, down from $1.6860 Wednesday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late rates Tuesday, included: 1.7490 German marks, up from 1.7375; 1.5355 Swiss francs, up from 1.5222; 5.9490 French francs, up from 5.9095; 1,310.75 Italian lire, up from 1,301.25; and 1.1436 Canadian dollars, up from 1.1432.

Bond scandal

NEW YORK — A stunning bond trading scandal with responsibility landing with the chairman of one of America's most powerful investment houses is giving Wall Street another black eye.

Salomon Brothers Inc. admitted to further violations this week of bond-bidding rules at U.S. Treasury auctions. Following the insider trading debacle of the 1980s, the new admission could help brand the new decade as one of vanishing trust in financial markets.

Governors glum

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly half the nation's governors say their states are in a recession, a pessimistic contrast to upbeat economic forecasts from the White House.

The governors say the outlook is poor but at the White House, the view is far more bullish on a certain recovery.

The governors responded to an Associated Press survey on the eve of the annual summer meeting of the National Governors' Association.

Large business takes big tax hit

Legislature's package includes state's first corporate income tax

DALLAS (AP) — Large businesses bear most of the tax increases passed this week by the Legislature but some are getting a break.

The $2.7 billion tax- and fee-increase package includes the state's first corporate income tax and applies the 6¼ percent sales tax to several more products and services, like packing materials, country club fees and concert tickets.

The income tax, included in a restructuring of the franchise tax, is the most troublesome change, business leaders said.

"We have changed the entire approach to legislating taxes by introducing that income factor," said Dane Harris of the Texas Association of Business. "Regardless of whether that rate is fair now, all future legislators have to do is change that rate to get more income."

The corporate income tax is "a foot in the door" for a personal income tax later, said Robert Howden of the Texas chapter of the National Federation of Independent Business. "We honestly believe that around the corner will be a personal income tax," he said.

In restructuring the franchise tax, the state's main business levy, lawmakers set a 4½ percent tax on corporate income that is taxable under federal rules.

Businesses must pay the income tax or the franchise tax, whichever is greater. The franchise tax, which applies to a company's capital assets, was lowered by the Legislature from $5.25 to $2.50 per $1,000 of capital value.

That move particularly helps energy companies that are rich in assets but have been losing money due to lower prices. Such companies will pay less in state tax.

At the same time, the move widens the base of businesses that will be taxed. But business leaders and state number crunchers said it's too early to precisely gauge how many businesses will be newly taxed and how many will save money by the change.

Comptroller John Sharp's office estimates the change in the franchise tax will bring in an additional $791 million during the next two years.

"The franchise tax is a little smaller than we'd been led to believe it would be," said Bill Allaway of the business-supported Texas Association of Taxpayers. "Since the very early part of the special session, the number always associated with it was about $1 billion."

Lawmakers did not extend the tax to partnerships, sole proprietorships or agricultural operations. Of the 2 million businesses in Texas, only about 150,000 to 200,000 are affected by it.

Slow pressure on bank board by Fed forced Clifford out

By Louis Uchitelle
N.Y. Times News Service

Clark M. Clifford's resignation this week from the chairmanship of Washington largest banking company was the result of a slow, tense three-month campaign by the Federal Reserve Board, which had become concerned that the international scandal surrounding the Bank of Credit and Commerce International could eventually cause the already weakened Washington bank to fail.

The movement to oust the 84-year-old Clifford, one of Washington's leading lawyers and lobbyists, from the chairmanship of First American Bankshares Inc. began in June and came to a difficult conclusion last Friday, with Clifford's formal agreement to resign, according to interviews with more than a half-dozen people involved in the negotiations.

The final vote to replace him took place in First American's board room, where a huge oil portrait of Clifford gazed down on the deliberations.

In effect, Washington's consummate lobbyist was lobbied out of the bank; no "golden parachute," no face-saving advisory job. The fear among Federal Reserve officials — increasingly shared by the bank's directors — was that if Clifford and his law partner, Robert A. Altman, stayed any longer as bank executives, depositor confidence might erode in a bank suffering losses from bad real estate loans.

The Federal Reserve's concern intensified late last week because of heavy withdrawals from First American's bank in Georgia.

"Mr. Clifford and Mr. Altman had made a decision a number of days earlier to step out of their positions as managers of the company, and in the interim, they participated in the effort to find a successor as chairman," Carl Rauh, one of Clifford's Washington lawyers, said Thursday.

But while Clifford had agreed to relinquish the chairmanship, he tried on Friday to remain a director, according to those interviewed.

After all, Clifford has said, he had

Panal: Japanese computer screens hurt U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Japanese sale of two types of advanced laptop computer screens at below-market prices has hurt U.S. manufacturers, the International Trade Commission ruled Thursday, paving the way for immediate imposition of stiff import duties.

The 3-1 decision by the independent commission will benefit the seven small U.S. companies struggling to market the so-called flat-panel displays in the face of heavy competition.

It will hurt some of the largest U.S. computer manufacturers that rely on Japanese screen imports, including IBM, Apple Computer Inc. and Compaq Computer Corp.

For consumers, the ruling could mean higher prices for a variety of products, including laptop and notebook computers, medical instruments, factory control devices and aviation equipment. The screens also have potential use in high-definition television.

Commissioners supporting the duties — Seeley G. Lodwick, David B. Rohr and Donald W. Newquist — said Japanese sale of the screens was squelching the U.S. manufacturing of a product originally developed in the United States.

"I have heard flat-panel displays characterized as the invention that got away, meaning that U.S. firms failed to turn the technology into a marketable product," Rohr said. "But there are a few of these firms still struggling to do just that. And as they are unable to meet Japanese prices, we have seen evidence of lost sales."

He cautioned, however, that the duties are no guarantee the U.S. companies will succeed.

"Only business savvy, hard work, imagination and luck will do that," he said.

Anne E. Brunsdale, acting chairwoman of the commission, voted against the duties, arguing that American companies haven't been hurt by Japanese pricing and that anti-dumping laws shouldn't be used to shelter them from tough competition.

The commission vote will result in the U.S. Customs Service imposing a 62.67 percent tariff on active-matrix liquid crystal displays and a 7.02 percent duty on electroluminescent screens.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

401(K) retirement plans can be good deal

By Bill Doyle

Q. My son feels insecure about having money deducted from his monthly paycheck for a 401(k) retirement plan. He is concerned about the safety of the institution holding the money. How can he ascertain the financial stability of the 401(k)?

Doyle

Presently, he is investing in a muni bond fund. Can you compare the results?

A. You are confusing me. Are you saying your son's 401(k) payroll deductions are going into a mutual fund that holds municipal bonds as investments? Or, are you saying he contributes to a 401(k) plan at work and has a separate investment in a muni bond fund.

If your son's 401(k) payroll deductions are going into a mutual fund that holds municipal bonds as investments, he's making a big mistake. Money put into a 401(k) or other qualified retirement plan, as well as the earnings on that money, remains deferred from income tax until it is withdrawn. It then becomes fully taxable. Dividends from muni bond funds are free from federal income tax. It makes no sense to have a muni bond fund in a tax-deferred retirement plan. Most mutual fund organizations won't allow it.

If your son contributes to a 401(k) plan at work and has a separate investment in a muni bond fund and your son is not quite rich, he's being far too conservative in his non401(k) investment choice — especially if he's young.

Because they pay low, albeit tax-free, dividends, muni bond funds are suitable only for people in the 28 or 31 percent federal income tax brackets. Folks in the 15 percent bracket, as most taxpayers are, get more keeping money from taxable but higher yielding investments.

A 401(k) is a good deal, available only when an employer sets up such a plan. It provides tax deferral and most companies match all or part of employees' contributions. Your son would be foolish to pass up an opportunity to participate.

However, literally thousands of institutions handle 401(k)s. "Sponsors," they are called. The typical 401(k) gives participants a variety of investment choices, such as a stock fund, a bond fund, a money market fund and the company's own stock. It's impossible to come up with comparative results over such a wide spectrum.

Tell your son to gather up and study literature on his employer's 401(k), which should be available at his place of work. Then, he will be able to see how his 401(k) investment choice stacks up against others.

Assuming your boy is not long in the tooth, my recommendation is that he put his 401(k) contributions and outside investments into mutual funds holding common stocks. That way, his investments should grow in value.

Q. Please compare the total costs of brokerage commissions, say 4 percent to buy and 4 percent to sell, individual stocks with a mutual fund's annual management fee, say 1 percent.

It appears to me the fund's annual fee becomes the more costly item with the passing of time. Am I missing something?

A. You're correct. Actually, the commission on most stock transactions is less than 4 percent. And mutual funds have other annual expenses, besides management fees — lifting their total "expense ratios" above 1 percent of fund assets.

The thing you are "missing" — or overlooking — is that a mutual fund is not an individual stock. A fund holds many different securities as investments and changes those investments from time to time. That provides the fund's shareholders diversification, under professional management.

That costs money and is where the management fee comes it. As the term indicates, that fee pays the people who manage the fund.

Q. In October 1990, we got shaky about the stock market and moved $45,000 out of two excellent growth-oriented mutual funds. We are very upset with our error in doing that.

We want to invest this money for some growth. Should we dollar cost average back into the two funds?

A. In your position, I would do exactly that. Dollar cost averaging — the simple process of investing the same amount of money in the same security at fixed intervals — means you buy more shares when prices are low and fewer shares when prices are high. It remains a tried and true way to outfox the market, while not trying to "make a killing."

Executive's missing four months; business closes, family worries

By Evan Ramstad
Associated Press writer

DALLAS — William K. Alley Jr. seemed to fit the same all-American mold as the baseball statues his company made for collectors across the country.

Married 17 years to his college sweetheart, Alley and his wife were expecting their fifth child. They lived in an affluent Dallas neighborhood and had a wide circle of friends.

His company, Hartland Plastics Co., was doing more than $1 million a year in business and about to release its third series of Hall of Famer statues.

Then he disappeared.

The 40-year-old Alley, known as Billy to friends and associates, was last seen March 1 leaving a New York hotel, where he was attending a toy and collectibles show. Three days later, when he didn't come back home, his wife reported him missing.

Since then, Hartland Plastics has stopped production, leaving some vendors unpaid and orders unfilled. His family has been supported by friends and relatives, as well as strangers and baseball collectors.

"Emotionally, there are times, and I would guess anyone would feel this way, when you think that he's dead," said his wife, Pamela Alley. "And there are times of just being totally bewildered because, if he isn't, then what are the options?

"And speculation has been sort of lethal. Your mind can become your worst enemy, the endless possibilities of what could happen."

New York police and a private investigator have no leads in Alley's disappearance.

On March 5, a similar episode occurred in New York. Malcolm Cheek, president of the St. Louis engineering firm Y&A Group, disappeared after checking into a New York hotel. He left behind millions of dollars in personal debt and a company burdened by credit problems.

Matt Welsh, vice president of production for Hartland Plastics, dismissed the idea that Alley deliberately left the company or his family.

"From all indications I had, he and his wife didn't have any problems. He loved her and his children," Welsh said. "I know he wouldn't do it for money. He had too much confidence in his abilities."

Still, few details of Hartland's financial condition can be gleaned from public sources.

At least one small lawsuit is pending against the company in state district ourt. Hager Containers Inc. of Dallas last spring filed for non-payment of $3,800 for boxes and labels shipped to Hartland in late February.

Mrs. Alley said she knows little about the business. Court records also show most of the family's assets were in her husband's name.

Earlier this month, Mrs. Alley sold Hartland Plastics to Dallas businessman Bill Dunlap after a state district judge granted her control over the couple's community property. Terms of the deal were not disclosed.

Pamela Alley holds one of the baseball statues made by her husband's Hartland Plastics Co. at her Dallas home recently.

Dunlap, co-owner of Case-Dunlap Enterprises, which produces sports-related and other promotional and souvenir items, said he planned to rename the company USA Hartland Inc. and resume production within three months. Hartland's 12 employees have been out of work since April.

Between 1957 and 1963, Hartland Plastics Co., then based in Hartland, Wis., sold ivory white, 7½-inch-tall statues of All-Stars at major league ballparks. The 18 Hartland figures, sold then for about $3 each, have become valuable with collectors.

American Medical's junk bonds outperform stock

By Floyd Norris
N.Y. Times News Service

Junk-bond buyers love American Medical Holdings Inc., the hospital company. But stock buyers seem much less enthusiastic.

The highly leveraged company Thursday issued the lowest-rated junk bonds to be sold since the collapse of that market last year. The issue, with a coupon of 13.5 percent, was a success and immediately traded at a premium.

But the companion stock issue was a more difficult sell. The price was scaled back, and the company sold fewer shares than it had planned. Even with those compromises, the issue was given a hostile reception.

Priced at $9.75 after the market closed on Wednesday, 25 cents under the closing price, the offering did not exactly blow out the doors. Most of the American Stock Exchange trading was at $9.625, and that was where the stock closed Thursday.

Still, the offerings were great news for the First Boston Corp., the lead underwriter of both issues, and not solely because it will collect underwriting fees. The money that was raised will largely be used to pay back $460 million in bridge loans that First Boston made almost two years ago, when an investor group led by Harry J. Gray, the former chairman of United Technologies, and including the Pritzker family, took control of the company.

Under Gray's direction, American Medical has sold off half its hospitals, slashed corporate overhead and done a good job of raising revenues, especially from outpatients. But it has been burdened by the heavy debt from the buyout, which left 20 percent of the shares in public hands.

Gray, 71 years old, served as chairman and chief executive of American Medical until June, when he stepped down and was replaced by Robert W. O'Leary, 48, who had been president and chief executive of the Voluntary Hospitals of America. Gray remains on the board and is chairman of its executive committee.

For the company, the good news is a new capital structure that will save $60 million a year in interest expense. But those who control the company were forced to pay a significant price for that benefit. The controlling partnership agreed to buy $42 million worth of stock,

TI, Japanese ponder HDTV

TOKYO (AP) — Texas Instruments Inc. of the United States and three Japanese semiconductor makers are close to an agreement on joint development of semiconductors for Japan's high-definition television system, officials said today.

TI, Fujitsu Ltd., Hitachi Ltd. and Sony Corp. are discussing joint design and manufacture of chips for the complex video decoders used in Japanese HDTV, Sony and Fujitsu officials said. They said details of the agreement still were being worked out.

The pact, if concluded, is likely to boost TI's sales in the Japanese market and deepen its ties with some of Japan's largest electronics companies.

"We are in the final stages of discussions, but we haven't signed an agreement yet," said a Fujitsu Ltd. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

She said the companies planned to greatly reduce the number of semiconductors needed in the decoders by redesigning them and combining the functions of several chips into single chips. Current decoders use about 70 chips and are the size of large desk-top computers.

Former Drexel chief to pay millions on junk bond claims

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. chief executive Frederick H. Joseph will pay between $3 million and $3.5 million to settle claims stemming from junk bond losses of failed savings and loans, regulators said Thursday.

Joseph is one of several Drexel insiders, including junk bond chief Michael R. Milken, who are being sued for $12 billion by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the Resolution Trust Corp.

As part of the settlement, Joseph has agreed to cooperate fully in the agencies' claims against Milken and others former Drexel officials. Milken, who is serving a 10-year prison sentence in a federal prison in California, headed the investment firm's junk bond operation in Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

He is both widely credited and blamed for the firm's spectacular rise and fall. Joseph was sued because his position under securities law made him a "control person" of the firm, the FDIC and RTC said in a joint news release.

Since passage of the 1989 S&L bailout law, the FDIC, which insures bank and S&L deposits, has assumed responsibility for pursuing the claims of any thrifts that failed in 1988 and earlier. The RTC, created by the 1989 law, is responsible for later failures.

A handful of big thrifts, most now failed, lost billions of dollars investing in junk bonds. Some are accused of participating in so-called "daisy chains" to trade the below-investment-grade securities among themselves at inflated prices. S&Ls are now barred from owning the bonds.

The agencies in January filed suit alleging a scheme by Milken and others involving "bribery, coercion, fraud and other illegal means." The suit accuses the Drexel officials inducing S&Ls to purchase the bonds and then manipulating the prices with the goal of earning monopoly profits.

In May, the agencies reached agreement with Drexel in separate bankruptcy proceedings. The government expects to realize several hundred million dollars.

Corporate paychecks come under scrutiny

By John Evan Frook
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Whatever the economic climate, it pays to be a top boss in a Los Angeles County publicly held firm. It pays to the average tune of $1.3 million a year.

An analysis of executive compensation conducted for the Los Angeles Daily News by the management consultant firm William M. Mercer Inc. shows that 150 of the top-paid executives in the county earned an average of $1,287,890 last year.

That's $619.17 an hour, or $24,767.11, based on a 40-hour week.

Running a big company such as Atlantic Richfield Co. or Northrop Corp. is worth twice what Dodger pitcher Mike Morgan will get for taking the mound this year.

Sex, moreover, is nearly as important in the executive suite as it is in Major League Baseball — only 10 of 500 executives surveyed were women.

Pay among the 150 most highly compensated executives surveyed ranged from $11.2 million for Walt Disney Co.'s Michael D. Eisner to $529,566 for Fremont General Corp.'s Louis J. Rampino.

Fifty of the 150 most highly compensated executives earned more than $1 million, while 18 executives topped the $2 million marker.

Want to make some serious dough? Rise to the top of the top. Of the 150 surveyed, 58 were chief executives and 19 of the top 25 were either chief executives or presidents.

Most compensation surveys rank executives on a national or statewide basis. The data for the Mercer survey was collected from proxy statements of 100 Los Angeles County public companies, representing the Los Angeles Daily News' annual survey of top-performing companies.

Public companies are required to disclose in proxy statements the salaries of their five most highly compensated executives. Most compensation packages in the survey were based on fiscal 1990 proxies.

The survey took into account salary, bonuses, stock option profits, stock awards, one-time hiring bonuses and moving allowances. It is considered a fairly conservative analysis of executive compensation, in that it includes only what was paid to the executive for services rendered during the year of the proxy statement.

The controversial severance package for Occidental Petroleum Corp.'s Armand Hammer, for instance, is omitted from the survey because it represents pay earned over decades at the Los Angeles-based company. Hammer, who died last December, is listed as having earned $2.4 million for fiscal 1990.

It also does not include pay packages for executives of privately held firms. Several top executives of those companies said they wouldn't have it any other way.

"All my friends and neighbors were well-acquainted with what I made and it caused some problems," said Winston Morrow, who has been a top executive at several public companies and recently retired as chairman and chief executive of privately held Ticor Title Insurance.

Morrow was critical of some of the huge salaries earned by executives.

"These staggering sums that one reads about are so far from the possible contributions of a single individual as to make it ludicrous," said Morrow.

Roger Hughes, chairman of the privately held Hughes Markets Inc., said huge executive salaries concern him because of the threat they pose.

"There gets to be a great disparity for a few at the top in comparison to the rest of the people at the company," said Hughes. "I feel there is some kind of a backlash by the troops, when they see all these dollars going to a select few."

As top executive of a $1 billion corporation, Hughes believes that executives should be motivated to produce over extended periods of time.

"(Public corporations) are very fragile, going from annual report to annual report," said Hughes.

CLIFFORD: Consummate lobbyist lobbied out done nothing wrong, and though two criminal investigations are looking at First American's relationship with BCCI, no one had accused either him or the bank of any crime.

The Clifford strategy was to remain as a director while his friend Nicholas deB. Katzenbach succeeded him as chairman. Katzenbach is a former attorney general and retired general counsel of International Business Machines Corp. The government and First American's directors agreed to Katzenbach, but they said Clifford could not remain on the board.

"It looked like old-crony time," said one of those interviewed. "It did not deal with the problem of Clifford's severing his ties with the bank."

Over the weekend, First American's directors — without Clifford and Altman — met with Katzenbach to work out an arrangement for him to lead the bank in its effort to untangle First American from the BCCI web.

Earlier, two other candidates for the chairmanship, Robert S. McNamara, the former president of the World Bank, and Paul F. Volcker, the former chairman of the Federal Reserve, had been rejected.

The announcement on Tuesday of Clifford's and Altman's resignations — emphasizing as it did the two men's concern for the bank's welfare — masked the struggle to oust them that had begun in June and had reached a finale in numerous meetings in the last two weeks, those interviewed said. The meetings took place at the Federal Reserve, at the bank and at the offices of various law firms.

The two men have maintained that they never knew BCCI had come to control First American. And they argued in effect that if they were forced to resign, the public perception would be that Clifford and Altman knew that BCCI had come to own the bank even though the Federal Reserve had forbidden such ownership in 1982.

"Clifford felt pretty bad," said one of those involved in the talks. "He had been chairman for a decade, and he was very proud of this new career in the final years of his life."

The effort to oust Clifford as chairman and Altman as president began last June when Charles McC. Mathias, a former Republican senator from Maryland and a First American director, had questioned Clifford about the $10 million he and Altman earned in a series of secret transactions involving First American stock.

The stock purchases were made with loans from BCCI in 1988 but not made public until this spring.

Mathias and other First American directors did not have the power to oust Clifford and Altman. Because both men controlled the bank's board, they could not be voted out; they had to agree to step aside.

Furthermore, the Federal Reserve itself must make a case that a management change is necessary to avoid a bank failure. Although the Federal Reserve never tried to formally draw such a case against Clifford, First American's problems resulting from Clifford's relationship to BCCI suggested that his continued stewardship could hurt the safety and soundness of the bank.

This suggestion from the Federal Reserve, reported in the off-the-record interviews with people involved in the negotiations, drew an angry comment from Rauh, Clifford's lawyer.

TAX: 'We've changed the approach'

(From 8C)

Most worrisome to manufacturers is the extension of the tax to boxes, containers, packaging and wrapping. Previously, a company that bought a box for use to contain a product it manufactured did not pay a tax on the box. After Sept. 1, the 6¼ percent state levy plus local fees apply.

"That was one of those hasty eleventh-hour proposals nobody anticipated and nobody took time to sort out," Harris said. "We think that's going to be a very, very negative thing."

Harris' group and several other business organizations reported several calls about the box tax. Likely to be hit hard by the tax are food manufacturers, including some of the state's large grocery chains that make and package their own brands.

Several box company executives said Thursday they were studying the tax with accountants.

The Legislature also raised the state gas tax by 5 cents a gallon but continued an exemption typically used by farmers and ranchers for off-road consumption.

The sales tax on new cars and trucks was raised from 6 to 6¼ percent.

"It's the worst possible time for purchasers of cars and sellers of cars to take another hit like that," said Tom Blanton of the Texas Automobile Dealers Association.

But he said the group didn't oppose the increase. "I guess we understand how the system works. We understand there was a desperate need for more money," Blanton said.

The Dutch pair of Bep Vriend and Carla Arnolds are among Europe's most effective. Although they managed only an eighth-place finish in the Women's Pairs event at the recent European Championship, they were in contention up to the end. Bep Vriend, East, found a pretty defense on this deal.

Four spades was a normal enough contract and was reached at most tables in the event. Even looking at all four hands, it is not easy to spot how the defenders can come to more than two club tricks and a trump.

East won the first two tricks with the king and ace of clubs, and the play to the first two tricks made it obvious that it was West who held the last club. But it was equally certain that there were no more tricks coming to the defense in the plain suits. To defeat the spade game, therefore, the defenders would have to score two tricks in the trump suit.

Since that might not be possible through sheer power, East decided to put pressure on declarer's trump holding. Despite the rubric "never give declarer a ruff and sluff," East continued with a third club. That didn't bother declarer particularly. It was simple enough to ruff in dummy and lead a trump toward the closed hand.

But now East's farsighted play bore fruit. She rose with the ace of spades and continued with a fourth club, and declarer became a member of the dead poultry society. Whether declarer ruffed high or low, West's jack of spades was destined to become the setting trick.

East's play of rising with the ace of spades immediately could have been crucial. It catered to the possibility that West had started with a doubleton queen of trumps, in which case the lady would have been promoted.

Cash says religion has kept him inspired during career

BELLINGHAM, Wash. — Singer Johnny Cash said during a concert interspersed with stories of his life that religion has kept him inspired during his 36-year career.

Cash

"I make my daily commitment to God. And so long as I keep the commitment, the day goes really good," said Cash, who performed two shows before an estimated 20,000 people Tuesday at the Northwest Washington Fair.

"If I try to break it and run everything myself, I usually mess it up. I study, I read the Bible, I do the best I can," said Cash.

The 59-year-old country singer was addicted to drugs in the 1960s and was jailed several times. In his autobiography, "The Man in Black," Cash said he overcame his addiction by recommitting himself as a Christian.

Reflecting that commitment, Cash performed such gospel-influenced hits as "Sunday Morning Coming Down" and "Pickin' Time."

"I got this song from a shoeshine man in 1956," Cash told the audience before performing "Get Rhythm."

"All I had was a dime in my pocket. A loaf of bread was 15 cents and a shoeshine was 10 cents. So I thought I'd go out looking good.

"I was expecting a fast, snappy job like the young folks do and he was going real slow, and I said, 'You don't seem to be doing too much snapping.' He said, 'That's the problem with the world today — there's too much snapping and not enough shining.'"

Cash is on a summer fair tour in the United States and Canada.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif.— Oscar-winning actor Karl Malden will serve a third consecutive term as president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Malden was selected by the Board of Governors for the 1991-92 term on Wednesday, the academy said.

Malden won a supporting actor Oscar for "A Streetcar Named Desire" and has appeared in dozens of other movies, including "On the Waterfront," "Baby Doll," "One-Eyed Jacks," "Patton" and "Nuts."

BATON ROUGE, La. — A federal judge has thrown out an irate fan's lawsuit against disgraced pop group Milli Vanilli.

Tracie R. Johnson, 28, never proved Arista Records Inc. schemed to defraud the public by selling recordings purportedly made by the lip-synching duo, U.S. District Judge John Parker ruled Tuesday.

Her lawsuit is one of at least 26 filed nationwide, claiming Arista cheated fans by implying that Rob Pilatus and Fab Morvan sang on the best-selling album "Girl, You Know It's True." The pair returned a 1990 Best New Artist Grammy won by the album.

Parker said the suit was "riddled with deficiencies."

Other cases are still in court; on Monday, a judge in Chicago rejected a proposed settlement that would have given fans discounts on future purchases.

NEW YORK — Luther Vandross, who's made a living singing songs of love, says his own romantic life is not what it could be because he spends so much time on music.

"As fabulous as my career has been, I sometimes wonder if my personal life has been compromised by such an uncompromising pursuit of my career," Vandross says in the September issue of US magazine.

The singer, whose latest hit album is "Power of Love," says meeting the right person has not become any easier as he's become more famous.

"It's pretty hard to meet somebody. You can go on a blind date, I can't go on a blind date," says Vandross. "So that gets very difficult over the years. ... I think personal lives are chance. If fate wants you to have it, you'll get it."

The rhythm and blues singer's hits include "Stop to Love" and Never Too Much."

NEW YORK — Aerosmith has accepted a "mega-offer" reportedly worth $30 million to leave its current label, Geffen Records, for Sony Music.

The deal with Sony's Columbia Records calls for four records for about $30 million, The New York Times reported today, citing unidentified sources involved in the negotiations. A Columbia spokeswoman refused to give specifics.

Bryn Bridenthal, a spokeswoman for Geffen Records, said the company decided against entering a bidding war for the rock group.

"We made them an offer and Sony made them one of those mega-offers and it did not make sense for us financially to make a counter-offer," she said.

Sony previously made waves in the record business when a signed a contract with Michael Jackson worth more than $65 million.

Aerosmith cannot switch labels until it produces two more studio records and a greatest hits album for Geffen.

Memorial ceremonies in Tokyo honor 3.1 million war dead

TOKYO (NYT) — A government-sponsored memorial ceremony marking the end of World war II was held in Tokyo Thursday.

Some 7,600 people, including Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu and Emperor Akihito, prayed for the souls of the 3.1 million Japanese civilians and military personnel who died in the war. Opposition parties and peace activists held their own rallies in various parts of the country.

Kaifu said at the ceremony, held at a indoor sports arena where an altar decorated with thousands of white and yellow chrysanthemums was set up: "I cannot help feeling sorrow at the thought of the 3 million or so war dead who died on the battlefield, at work, in the bombing or away from home after the war.

"It is our responsibility to relay their valuable sacrifices to the young generation, especially in this age of peace and prosperity," Kaifu said.

Following a minute of silence at noon to pray for the spirits of the war dead, Emperor Akihito, in addition to honoring the war dead, said that he prays for world peace and the continued prosperity of the nation.

This year marks the 46th anniversary of the end of the war and the 50th anniversary of the attack in December on Pearl Harbor. Reflecting the passage of time, many people attending the ceremony who lost relatives in the war were bent with age and there were fewer spouses and parents of the dead than ever and more middle-aged people who lost their parents in war.

Meanwhile, grass-roots peace groups and opposition parties, in their own meetings and rallies the same day, stressed the need to uphold their anti-war stances now that the gulf war earlier this year has shown that the Japanese too can be involved in battle.

Many also stressed that the Japanese should be aware of their role as the offensive party in the war. Most Japanese tend to think of themselves as victims of war, especially on Aug. 15 and on the anniversaries of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

"We should respond to public opinion in other Asian countries that hold Japan responsible for the war and launch a movement to compensate for the aggression," said Makoto Tanabe, chairman of Japan's biggest opposition party, the Social Democratic Party of Japan.

Security Council OKs $1.6 billion Iraqi oil sale

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The U.N. Security Council on Thursday authorized Iraq to export $1.6 billion of oil in a tightly controlled sale to finance desperately needed food, medicine and emergency supplies for its population.

The vote for the resolution was 13-1, with Cuba opposed and Yemen abstaining.

The council unanimously approved a separate resolution requiring Iraq to pay no more than 30 percent of its future oil revenues to victims of its Aug. 2, 1990, invasion of Kuwait.

A third resolution insists that Iraq comply with inspections to make sure it abolishes its weapons of mass destruction.

Thursday's passage of Resolution 706 means that for the first time since the council imposed economic sanctions on Iraq a year ago, nations can buy Iraqi oil. Exports could begin as soon as the council approves a plan by the secretary-general to manage the sales, which he has 20 days to deliver.

Iraq's government will have no control over its oil revenue. The United Nations will control oil sales, approve all sales and purchases, control an escrow account for oil revenue and monitor distribution of supplies.

This provision — the first time the United Nations ever managed a nation's trade and domestic distribution — was bitterly opposed by Iraq and viewed with grave suspicion by other Third World nations, who worried it could set a precedent for massive superpower interference in their affairs.

"The council is holding the Iraqi people as hostage and asking a ransom which is the oil resources of Iraq," said Iraqi Ambassador Abdul Amir al-Anbari.

Anbari said all sanctions should be lifted and blamed the United States for the suffering of the Iraqi people. He called the humanitarian situation "catastrophic."

He said the restrictive oil sale resolution "undermines Iraq's sovereignty as a free country. It gives foreign powers the right to control Iraq's natural resources, dispose of its wealth and dictate its trade as they wish."

But he stopped short of saying his government would refuse to sell oil.

U.S. Ambassador Thomas R. Pickering said, "Iraq is being given an opportunity to help its own people, with safeguards, given that the regime of Saddam Hussein cannot be trusted.

"This is not a resolution lifting sanctions. In fact it will strengthen the sanctions by preventing the Iraqi government from seeking political gains through the misery of the Iraqi people, which it has caused."

He said careful U.N. monitoring was a must because experience showed Iraq would divert money for unworthy ends. For 10 years, he said, Iraq spent 28 percent of its income on military equipment.

The oil sale would be made in three equal installments over six months. The actual value of the sale will be decided later by the Security Council and Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar. The ceiling was set at $1.6 billion.

The resolution does not order Iraq to sell oil, but permits all nations to import Iraqi oil.

Iraq had said earlier it would refuse to pump oil under the resolution's provisions. But most diplomats say Iraq urgently needs money because its economy is in shambles as a result of war and economic sanctions.

At the State Department, spokesman Richard Boucher declined to say whether the Bush administration would support using force against Iraq if it refused to make the oil purchases to buy food, medicine and other goods needed by its population.

Western diplomats claim Iraq still has not disclosed the full value of its gold and currency reserves, which also could be used to buy food and other civilian items.

Before the Gulf War, Iraq produced about 2.9 million barrels of oil a day, most of it for export. The United States bought about 440,000 barrels a day.

The council's five permanent members with veto power are: The United States, Britain, China, France and the Soviet Union. The other members are: Austria, Belgium, Cuba, Ecuador, India, Ivory Coast, Romania, Yemen, Zaire and Zimbabwe.

Serbs, Croats trade prisoners; fighting erupts in East Croatia

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Warring Croats and Serbs Thursday released dozens more prisoners as part of federal efforts to bolster an unraveling truce, but three people died in further ethnic bloodshed in eastern Croatia.

Members of a federal monitoring commission, alarmed by infractions that indicated the eight-day-old cease-fire might be in danger, hurried to the republic's Slavonia region to bolster the peace.

More than 200 people have died in fighting since Croatia declared independence June 25.

A fragile cease-fire took effect Aug. 7, but has been violated dozens of times, with at least 16 deaths in fighting since then between Croats and Serbian militants. Croatia accuses the Serb-dominated army of siding with the Serbs.

In the latest violence, Croatian television reported two civilians were found dead near the town of Petrinja, and a Croatian guardsman was killed in fighting around Kostajnica, 25 miles to the south, Croatia's Defense Ministry said.

The Croats two weeks ago lost control of Kostajnica, which lies south of Zagreb and is a key link between Serb-held areas in eastern and southern Croatia. They have since retaken it and have fought almost daily battles to keep it.

In Osijek, a town in the center of Slavonia, 43 Serbs were released from the local jail, Croatian interior ministry officials said. Thirty-four Croats were released in Borovo Selo, a Serbian base in Croatia's richest farming region. About 100 prisoners from both sides were exchanged earlier this week.

Osijek has been wracked with ethnic violence since early July. On Thursday night, the area suffered the worst mortar attacks in more than a week.

Mortar shells hit outer Osijek suburbs, forcing residents to spend the night in special shelters, the state news agency Tanjug said.

Artillery duels also were fought between the Croat-held village of Sarvas and the nearby Serb-held stronghold of Bijelo Brdo, and around the town of Beli Manastir.

On Wednesday, federal officials announced that the quarrelling leaders of Yugoslavia's six republics and members of the eight-man collective federal presidency would resume talks next Tuesday on the country's future.

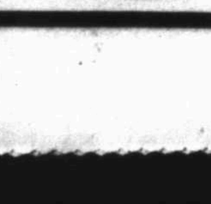

In the current altercation, Serbia — Yugoslavia's largest republic — says Croatia can leave Yugoslavia, but cannot take along the 600,000 Serbs in the republic, nor their territory.

Croatia has lost control of an estimated 18.5 percent of its territory, but vows not to cede an inch of land to the Serbs.

In a related development, Serbia followed secessionist republics Slovenia and Croatia on Thursday by devaluing the Yugoslav dinar by about 40 percent against the German mark.

The moves by the three most economically powerful Yugoslav republics constitute a blow to the federal government, whose market reforms are based on tight money control.

Washington man big fan of antique electric fans

By Robert M. Andrews
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — While the rest of Washington is gasping through another abominable summer, Keith Scripps is one cool dude.

He has a collection of antique electric fans that would blow you away, if all 150 of them were whirring at the same time.

"I'm not a big collector," he said recently. "There are some collectors, if you can believe this, who have over 800 fans."

Scripps owns beautifully restored models of the first oscillating fans made by Westinghouse, Emerson and General Electric between 1905 and 1911, their cast-iron motors gleaming with 12 coats of hand-rubbed enamel and their brass blades lacquered to a rich gloss.

Among the oddities in his elegant Washington condominium is a 1906 Westinghouse equipped with a couple of brass vanes that flip back and forth as they catch the wind of the blades, causing the fan to sweep from side to side.

Scripps' rarest possession is a 16-inch Robbins-Myers "feather fan," probably made in 1902, which features a clocklike mechanism with feather-shaped tips -- originally made of celluloid — that makes the fan oscillate.

"I've been fascinated by fans from the time I was 3 years old," said the 58-year-old scion of the Scripps newspaper publishing family.

"I used to carry a small electric fan around the house, from room to room," he said. "I wasn't supposed to plug it in, but of course I did, when no one was looking.

"I was kind of mesmerized by the blades, and I was intrigued by the mechanics of it. At 5, I could take a fan apart and put it back together again."

His parents, fearful he'd chop off his fingers, gave him two little fans with rubber blades for Christmas when he was 4.

"I've been fascinated by fans from the time I was 3 years old.
— Keith Scripps

"The next year, I wrote Santa Claus a long letter. It said, 'Please don't bring me any more rubber fans, only fans with sharp blades.' My parents didn't give me any more fans for Christmas."

In the late 1960s, Scripps bought eight antique fans at an estate auction in Charlottesville, Va., and began collecting in earnest.

Last month, he and his son, Prewitt, drove to Dallas to attend the annual convention of the 210-member American Fan Collectors Association.

"We took 35 or 40 fans along to trade or sell, and we came back with a carload of fans," he said.

Scripps is somewhat sheepish about his hobby.

"I didn't tell anyone for years," he said. "Some people think you're out of your tree."

But Scripps was relieved to discover that others at the Dallas convention secretly felt the same way. "They had this same fascination with fans as very young children," he said. "They'd say, 'I thought I was the only one in the world who collected fans.' "

Scripps said a rare antique fan might fetch $200 or $300 on the collectors' market and cost substantially more to restore to its original condition. Especially prized are late 19th-century models powered by batteries, water pressure or tiny kerosene lamps, or wound up like clocks.

When he was a young man, Scripps gave away the two rubber-bladed fans he received for Christmas as a child. "I shouldn't have done that," he said. "They're really hard to find now."

Water flow decreases in Wyoming park

THERMOPOLIS, Wyo. (AP) — One of Wyoming's natural wonders — massive travertine terraces formed over the centuries by cascading hot mineral water at Hot Springs State Park — appears to be dying.

A dramatic decline in the flow of the main spring that feeds the terraces has forced park managers to make tough choices on where the water will go. They've decided to maintain the water flow to the park's recreation pools and cut off water to half the terraces.

The result has prompted the state geologist to virtually write off the park as a natural wonder. A University of Wyoming geologist says, however, it's not that bad and proper management can preserve the terraces in some form.

The Big Spring, which pumped 13 million gallons a day in 1896 when the Indians sold the area to the government, now produces a mere 3.5 million gallons per day, according to park Superintendent Allen Cowardin.

"At the present time we have to conserve the water more and more," he said. "We have to drastically cut back. We can't do everything we want to with the water."

Neither Cowardin nor the geologists know what has caused the reduced flow, nor when it dropped so dramatically. However, they speculate that increased seismic activity and nearby uncapped private wells are adding to the problem.

Early this spring, Cowardin shut off the flow of water to half the travertine terraces, while maintaining the same diversions to the park's recreational hot pools.

As a result the terraces, which look like heaping gobs of melting ice cream, are drying out, killing the green algae that ribbons the formations. The lack of water also is preventing the natural build-up of mineral deposits.

Instead, the water is being concentrated over the southern half of the terraces, closest to the State Bath House and the Star Plunge and Tee Pee pools. Those pools and their huge water slides are the biggest tourist draw to Thermopolis, Greek for "hot city." Many believe the mineral baths have therapeutic value.

The superintendent acknowledged that by diverting the water, he is, in effect, sculpting the terraces to his own design.

"We're designing the terraces. Most people don't realize that, but we are," Cowardin said.

He said that from the days when cowboys pushing cattle through the area would dynamite holes in the terraces for makeshift bathing pools, people have left their mark.

"Man has had his fingers in this so heavily there's no way we can abandon it to nature," he said.

State Geologist Gary Glass said the issue boils down to priorities — either retain the natural beauty of the terraces or keep the bath houses full of water.

Five years ago, Glass recommended that the bath houses receive less water in order to save the terraces. The advice was not taken.

"My recommendation was they were mining the water and they had to cut back if they wanted to have water on terraces," he said. "They said, 'Oh, no, the spring has naturally declined.' I said it didn't look like that was what was happening to me — and unfortunately there is no answer."

During the past 100 years of state ownership, there has been no accurate or consistent monitoring of the spring flows.

Peter Huntoon, a University of Wyoming ground water geologist who supervised a master's thesis on the hot springs, said it's a "toss up" which is more important — the terraces or the bath houses.

"I think they have to make a careful balance between health aspects and beauty aspects," Huntoon said. "If you want to know the truth, right now I think they're doing as good as they can do with the water they have."

He suggested that park managers rotate the available water among the terraces every so often.

Cosmetic & Reconstructive Surgery

Q. Can breast implants interfere with the detection of breast cancer?

A. Modern mammography can detect most breast cancers before they are large enough to be felt and therefore is the best way to detect cancer early. Frequent self examination and regular physical examinations by the doctor are also very important in order to pick up those small number of tumors that may not be seen on an X-ray.

Depending on where the cancer develops in the breast, the presence of the implants could either delay discovery or in some cases actually make the detection easier. An implant usually complicates mammography by requiring special techniques and extra views to completely visualize all of the breast tissue. (The extra radiation is negligible and about equal to what one receives during a short plane trip.) These breast films must be done by a mammographer familiar with the proper techniques; "shopping center" screening clinics should be avoided. Studies on those few patients who developed breast cancer after augmentation suggest that diagnosis was not delayed any more than in those women without implants.

Cosmetic & Reconstructive Surgery

Q. I'm worried. There is a dark "mole" on my shoulder. What should I do?

A. Most dark "moles" are benign, but infrequently such may be a malignant melanoma, the most treacherous of skin cancers. The ABCDs which characterize a melanoma are: A-asymmetry, the left half doesn't match right. B-border, irregular. C-color, varying shades of tan/brown/black. D-diameter, greater than 6 mm or enlarges to this size. These variables are helpful but only microscopic examination after removal will identify the lesion. If the ABCD's rule causes suspicion, contact a surgeon or dermatologist experienced in the management of melanoma.

Weight Management

Q. I have given up all sugars in my diet, but I'm still not losing weight. Why not?

A. Every pound of weight to be lost requires a deficit of 3500 calories. This calorie deficit can be made from decreasing input (foods) and/or increasing output (exercise) calories. However, singling out sugars may be missing the primary calorie culprit. Focusing on fats versus sugars will create a greater calorie deficit per equal volumes. Fats provide 9 calories per gram, more than twice the calorie density of sugars at 4 calories per gram. Thus, a tablespoon of sugar provides 50 calories, whereas a tablespoon of oil provides 125 calories - a 75 calorie differential per equal volume. Thus, to maximize calorie deficiting, limit fat calories and add regular physical activity.

Family Dentistry

Q. I had to wear braces all through high school. Now my 6-year old's permanent teeth are coming in crooked. Can anything be done to correct this now so that she doesn't have to go through what I went through?

A. Most likely. As the first adult teeth erupt, at around age five or six, it can usually be determined whether the teeth will need to be straightened. (About 70% of adult teeth come in crooked.) The new eruption guidance techniques use the natural forces of the erupting adult teeth to guide them into proper alignment.

These new methods can correct such problems as crowding of the adult teeth; overbite (upper teeth overlap the lower teeth too much); and overjet ("Buck teeth"). The bands of elastic-like tissue that anchor the teeth to the jaw bone are initially soft and relatively flexible. Therefore, it is usually better to guide adult teeth into proper alignment as they erupt, instead of waiting until a child is eleven or so to begin straightening the teeth with braces.

While this technique cannot correct all problems, the great majority of children treated with eruption guidance will not need further orthodontic treatment.

Shiite leader calls for accounting of missing Israelis

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — With a proposed hostage-prisoner swap hinging on word of seven missing Israeli servicemen, Lebanon's top Shiite Muslim cleric called on Lebanese groups Thursday to release information about the Israelis.

The plea by Sheik Mohammed Mehdi Shamseddine — the first by a Shiite leader urging help in accounting for the Israelis — came as diplomatic efforts slowed for a package deal that would include the release of 11 Western hostages.

Israel has demanded a videotape or other solid evidence of the fates of the seven Israelis before it frees any of about 400 Arab detainees, whose freedom has been demanded by a pro-Iranian faction holding Western hostages in Lebanon. The task could be held up because a number of Palestinian and Lebanese groups may be involved.

"I ask the groups that have information on the missing Israelis to reveal the information to the U.N. Secretary-General (Javier Perez de Cuellar)," said Shamseddine, who heads the Shiite Islamic Higher Council in Lebanon.

Shamseddine told The Associated Press he seeks a speedy end to the hostage crisis, but said expectations of an imminent settlement were "over-optimisic."

> 'If there are Israelis still alive, their captors should turn them over alive. If they are dead, they should turn over their bodies.'
> — Sheik Mohammed Mehdi Shamseddine

"I believe there's no hope for any hostage release in the coming two or three weeks, although I hope I'm wrong," the soft-spoken cleric said.

Other possible complications are the demands from Shiite factions, Iran and most recently Syria for missing or imprisoned Arabs and Iranians to be included in a swap.

Also Thursday, Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati said Tehran will continue efforts to free Western hostages, but warned the captives cannot be freed until Israel is pressed to free Arab prisoners and a Shiite Muslim cleric.

"The solution of the problems ... is impossible except by pressuring Israel to free the Lebanese and Palestinian hostages, especially Sheik (Abdul Karim) Obeid," he said in a letter to his British counterpart, Douglas Hurd.

Some Israeli officials, meanwhile, issued harsh criticism Thursday of the hostage-takers and their purported sponsors.

"These terrorists, the Islamic holy warriors, are not people who are influenced by gestures," said Defense Minister Moshe Arens. "They are people who behave in a beastly, inhuman fashion, and the only language they understand ... will come from Tehran and Damascus."

In May, Shamseddine proposed an exchange of Lebanese and Israeli captives, guaranteeing that Western hostages would be part of the package. Nothing came of the offer.

Perez de Cuellar and Uri Lubrani, the Israeli negotiator he met with in Geneva Wednesday, also said they do not anticipate a full hostage release for days or weeks.

There are 11 Westerners listed as missing in Lebanon following the recent release of three captives. But there are reports a Briton and Italian may no longer be alive.

There are also various reports regarding the Israelis, some of whom have been missing since 1982.

The pro-Iranian Shiite Hezbollah, or Party of God, claims it holds two of the Israelis.

Ahmed Jibril, leader of the Syrian-based Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command, claimed in Damascus, Syria, on Wednesday that at least three of the Israelis are alive and four are presumed dead.

"If there are Israelis still alive, their captors should turn them over alive," Shamseddine said in the interview Thursday. "If they are dead, they should turn over their bodies."

Shamseddine said he was not aware which of the Israelis are dead and which are alive.

Uri Lubrani, Israel's chief hostage negotiator, said in Geneva Thursday his government would be "very flexible" about trading Arab detainees for hard information about the missing Israelis.

Ariel Merari, a terrorism expert at Tel Aviv University, called Shamseddine's call for release of information on the missing Israelis "meaningful and important."

Jail guards of Pablo Escobar fired at aircraft, report says

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Soldiers guarding the jail of surrendered drug boss Pablo Escobar fired at an airliner and a press helicopter over the past few months, according to a government report published Thursday.

The guards fired 16 shots on July 23 at an Avianca passenger jet which accidentally altered its course, the report said.

Two days before Escobar surrendered June 19, soldiers fired at a U.S. camera crew flying over the jail in a helicopter, the report said.

Neither aircraft was hit.

Colombian newspapers published excerpts of the report.

Attorney General Carlos Arrieta asked aviation authorities to prevent aircraft from flying over Escobar's jail, in the mountains surrounding the drug boss's hometown of Envigado.

As part of a deal to persuade him to surrender, the government promised Escobar that no planes or helicopters would be allowed to fly over his jail.

The drug boss was apparently concerned that his enemies would try to kill him in an air attack.

President Cesar Gaviria recently called for an investigation into irregularities at the jails housing Escobar and 17 other accused drug traffickers who surrendered in exchange for a government promise of leniency.

The local press reported earlier this month that Escobar and his colleagues have been hosting hundreds of visitors, many of whom themselves face felony charges.

But the attorney general's report said the visitation rights were being handled lawfully. It did not mention the visitors facing felony charges.

However, it did identify irregularities at another jail housing the three other surrendered Medellin cartel leaders, the Ochoa brothers, Jorge Luis, Juan David and Fabio.

Seven enlisted men arrested in massacre

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — The armed forces said it had arrested seven officers and enlisted men Thursday in connection with the murders of 11 people whose bodies were dumped on a roadside 30 miles from a naval base.

An armed forces communique said the Pacific Naval Base commander, Capt. Ruben Anibal Giron, was among those detained.

The bodies of 10 men and one woman were found Aug. 9 near Esquintla, a town about 30 miles from the base, with their hands were tied behind their backs. Each died of a single gunshot to the head.

Most of the victims were either customs agents at the port of San José, or truckers who hauled cargo to and from the port, which is a few miles from the navy base.

The communique did not say if charges had been filed against the suspects.

Artist reproduces Van Gogh artwork outdoors

LONDON (AP) — A young Scottish plant nursery manager has reproduced van Gogh's "Sunflowers," using bedding plants for paint and a 46,000-square-foot patch of wheat field for a canvas.

Andrew Scott's version of the 19th-century Dutch artist's masterpiece was planted by 20 volunteers working for 10 days in early July, mostly with donated materials. It required 250,000 plants and is best seen from the air. It is also visible from satellites, according to a press release.

Scott's van Gogh will be around for only another week or so, when the field will be plowed under and returned to agricultural use.

Until the 24-year-old Scott gets aerial photographs, the location of the field in Scotland remains a secret.

"I flew over it with a helicopter yesterday, my first time in a helicopter, and it looks good," Scott said in a telephone interview from Scotland. "It's probably needing a little while longer to flower, but it looks great as it is."

The volunteer planters will fly overhead Friday, he said.

Scott has received many compliments and much press attention for his rendition of "Sunflowers." But he's still waiting to hear from one connoisseur:

"It'd be interesting to see what Elizabeth Taylor thinks about it," Scott said. "But I don't know her number, so, oh well."

The actress owns van Gogh's "View of the Asylum and Chapel at St. Remy," depicting the asylum Vincent van Gogh entered after cutting off his ear.

The original "Sunflowers" was sold in 1987 at Christie's auction house for just under $40 million to a private collector.

Taylor bought her van Gogh in 1963 for about $165,000.

Van Gogh painted "Sunflowers" a few months before his death in 1890 at age 37. He told his brother he hoped to sell the painting for 500 francs, then worth about $125.

Van Gogh was supported by his brother, an art dealer who said the money came from sales of van Gogh's paintings. When van Gogh found stacks of his paintings under his brother's bed and realized his work wasn't selling, he committed suicide.

Unlike van Gogh, Scott doesn't count on his art to support him.

"I'm a commercial bedding plant grower. I grow bedding plants, I sell bedding plants. This was really just a bit of fun," he said.

"Once you get too serious with the commercial side of things, you lose track of what you're doing. There've been no commercial gains from this at all, which actually makes it nicer."

Scott's next project?

"I'm thinking about painting a hotel pink, but with flowers, everything covered with flowers except the windows. So in effect I'd be changing concrete into flowers. That appeals to me. But it would probably take a wee bit longer than planting a field."

U.N. committee wants Congress to allow early decolonization vote

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The U.N. Decolonization Committee on Thursday urged the U.S. Congress to permit an early referendum for the people of Puerto Rico to choose whether they want independence, statehood or to remain as a commonwealth.

The vote was 10-1, with 10 abstentions and four nonparticipants in the 25-member committee. The negative vote was cast by Norway.

Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon, in San Juan, thanked the Venezuelan government for introducing the measure and noted it was the first time all of the Latin American and Caribbean countries in the committee — Chile, Cuba, Trinidad and Tobago and Venezuela — voted for the resolution.

Efforts to organize a status plebiscite on the island fell through in February when the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee failed to approve a bill authorizing the referendum.

A bid proposal guaranty is to accompany the bid, thereby guaranteeing the good faith of the bidder and that the bidder will enter into the written contract. The guaranty is to amount to five percent (5%) of the total bid and must be in the form of cash or certified check, issued by a bank satisfactory to the City of Midland, or a bid bond. If in the form of cash or certified check, it is hereby expressly understood and agreed the City of Midland is given the right to retain such as liquidated damages if such bidder withdraws its bid anytime after such bid is opened and before official rejection of such bid, or, if successful in securing the award thereof, such bidder fails to enter into the contract and furnish satisfactory performance bond and payment bond. If a bid bond is submitted, it shall be executed on forms contained in these contract documents by a corporate surety authorized to do business in the State of Texas, acceptable to the City of Midland and accepted according to the latest list of companies holding certificates of authority from the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America. Proposals submitted without bid guaranty in the form of cash, certified check or bid bond for 5% of the maximum bid will not be considered.

The successful Bidder will be required to furnish a Performance Bond and a Payment Bond each in the amount of the contract, written by a responsible Surety Company authorized to do business in the State of Texas, and satisfactory to the Owner, as required by Article 5160, V.A.T.C.S., as amended by H.B. 344, passed by the 56th Legislature, Regular Session, 1959.

All lump sum and unit prices must be stated in both script and figures. The Owner reserves and right to reject any or all bids and to waive formalities. In case of ambiguity or lack of clearness in stating the prices in the bids, the Owner reserves the right to consider the most advantageous construction thereof, or to reject the bid. Unreasonable (or "unbalanced") unit prices will authorize the Owner to reject the bid.

Bidders are expected to inspect the site of the work and to inform themselves regarding all local conditions.

This project is an AIP Project. The proposed contract is under and subject to Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, as amended, and to the equal opportunity clause contained in these specifications. The Bidder must supply all the information required by the proposal form.

The successful bidder will be required to submit a Certification of Nonsegregated Facilities prior to award of the contract, and to notify prospective subcontractors of the requirement of such a Certification where the subcontract exceeds $10,000. Samples of the Certification and the Notice to Subcontractors appear in the specifications.

In all areas of employment woman and men will be afforded equal opportunity for employment. The employment of women shall not diminish the standards or requirements for the employment of minorities.

Minimum wages and labor rates for the construction of the proposed work have been established by the Secretary of Labor. A schedule of labor classifications and wage rates to be paid are included in the specifications and will be made a part of the contract. The bid form shall contain a statement that the prices bid are based on such wage rates.

This project is subject to Equal Opportunity, Affirmative Action, Minority Business Enterprise Contract Provisions, and other requirements stated in the Instructions to Bidders and other sections of the project specifications and contract documents.

POLICY. It is the policy of the Department of Transportation (DOT) that disadvantaged business enterprises as defined in 49 CFR Part 23 shall have the maximum opportunity to participate in the performance of contracts financed in whole or in part with Federal funds.

All bidders are proposers shall make good faith efforts, as defined in Appendix A of 49 CFR Part 23, Regulations of the Office of the Secretary of Transportation, to subcontract 10.0 percent of the dollar value of the prime contract to small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals (DBE). In the event that the bidder for this solicitation qualifies as a DBE, the contract goal shall be deemed to have been met. Individuals who are rebuttably presumed to be socially and economically disadvantaged include Women, Blacks, Hispanics, native Americans, Asian-Pacific American and Asian-Indian Americans. The apparent successful bidder (proposer) will be required to submit information concerning the DBE's that will participate in this contract. MOONLIGHTING!

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
