To IPAA session, it's big 'if'

Conferees debate wording of proposal

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

DALLAS — It may go down in the annals of petroleum history as the The Great "If" Debate of 1986 — an articulate discussion of a single word that could have a bearing on the defense of the free world for all time.

It started, here, in the General Session of the Independent Petroleum Association as a simple proposal to change "if" to "the" in one phrase, but that simple request uncapped the pent up division and anxiety that has been brewing in this organization since this summer when IPAA announced at its mid-year meeting in Nashville that it was continuing its stand against an oil import tax to stabilize collapsing oil prices.

■ The petroleum industry cannot compete in a free market, Schlesinger tells IPAA conferees. — 8B

Many came away from that meeting feeling that IPAA had lost touch with its members and predicting that a confrontation would follow. The confrontation came Tuesday, but it was not the nostril-flaring, verbiage war that some had expected as a result of this controversial issue that has divided oil industry ranks. Moreover, it proved to be a barrage of passionate and eloquent bouts, not so much over whether or not the group supported a crude oil tax, but how strongly it should say it supported it.

Triggering the venting process was a proposal made by Dallas oilman Frank Pitts to strengthen the language of a report released Monday by IPAA's Emergency Task Force, calling for a qualified endorsement of an import tax. Pitts contended that the recommendation was too qualified and should be made stronger by changing "if" to "the."

The simple word changes above in the Pitts version of Task Force recommendations triggered the IPAA controversy. The two actions referenced in the statment included a floor price and an oil import tax.

Cisneros backs Gonzalez in local campaign rally

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The man hoping to be the first Hispanic elected to a statewide office brought one of Texas' most-celebrated Hispanics, San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros, to Midland Tuesday to campaign for him and other Democrats.

Texas Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez, appointed by Gov. Mark White in 1984 to fill a vacancy on the bench, said he hoped people would look beyond his last name and elect him on the content of his record, his integrity and qualifications.

Gonzalez has served as Houston city attorney, U.S. attorney in Houston and Brownsville and Brownsville district court judge. Before his appointment by White, he had served on the Court of Criminal Appeals in both Houston and Corpus Christi.

"I have no doubt that those who know of my judicial experience will vote for me.

"However, there are millions of voting Texans who have not had the opportunity to vote for a Hispanic and who are not familiar with my qualifications.

"I am running scared," Gonzalez, whose campaign tour Tuesday alone included San Antonio, Austin, College Station, Waco, San Angelo, Midland and El Paso, said.

"The Tuesday election will be a close one. I expect to be up late Tuesday night watching the returns," he added.

"If the general election were a referendum on qualifications, Justice Gonzalez would be the victor," Cisneros said.

"But because of Justice Gonzalez' name, recent polls indicate he is tied at 30 points (with 40 percent of the those polled being undecided) with a perennial candidate whose name is more familiar to voters.

"Justice Gonzalez opponent is Waco attorney John Bates, who collects debts for a living," Cisneros added.

Bates said in an Oct. 23 interview he lost the race for Texas Supreme Court Justice once in 1982 and then again in 1984 to Justice John Hill.

He later said the Texas Supreme Court is sorely lacking in integrity and that basically, the bench consists of "a bunch of bought-off plaintiff's lawyers" who'll decide in favor of ridiculously high damages.

"I am not for sale," Gonzalez retorted.

"There are many of my opinions to be reviewed. I've found opinions in favor of both the defendents and plaintiffs.

"Bates is running a careless campaign and trying to confuse voters. Clements himself appointed me to the (13th) Court of Appeals," Gonzalez said.

"This is a critical election. It's one in which people are apathetic and not interested because things are so tough in Texas," Cisneros said.

"The Democratic ticket offers something to vote for. Gov. White has been one of the best governors we've had.

"If Bill Clements is elected, it will be a different kind of Texas. He'll slash, he'll cut and he'll begin to dismantle. The differences in the (gubernatorial) election are like day and night," Cisneros added.

David Mandell, president of the Midland Young Democrats, said the Hispanics are the "sleeping majority in Midland."

"They make up 15 percent of the county population, but only 2 percent of them are registered to vote," Mandell said.

County treasurer candidates see no overwhelming issues

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Although they say it's a race without issues, the County Treasurer's election is important because of the large sums of money entrusted to the office, say the two candidates running for the four-year seat.

"I don't think there are any issues. It's just a position of trust as much as anything else," says the incumbent Democratic candidate Dee Thompson.

With Republican Thomas Miller's challenge, Ms. Thompson is facing her first opponent in 16 years and her fourth contested race since she took office in 1958.

She faced seven opponents in 1958, two in the '62 race and one in 1970, she said.

Miller, a 50-year-old retired tax appraiser, says it's time to bring the treasurer's office into the 1980s with computers.

"In my opinion, the county treasurer's office needs more new updated technology. It needs to computerize. It could be computerized for very little money and bring it out of the 1950s and into the 1980s and 1990s," Miller said.

ELECTION '86

"It's basically a mechanical operation now and Midland needs better than that," he said.

But Ms. Thompson says computers are already used and have been used since 1968 in making out the county employee payroll and government reports.

To completely computerize the office and county would cost about $500,000, which is out of the financial reach of the county now, Ms. Thompson says.

"What he's talking about is an in-house computer and the county doesn't have any money to do anything like that.

"When the county has the money to get a computer, I'm sure they will go on it. What we've got right now serves our needs," she says.

Different management philosophies distinguish the two, Miller says.

"Different management philosophies and the capability of injecting new ideas to operate the office for the benefit of the taxpayer and commissioner's court is the difference," he says.

But Ms. Thompson says the difference between her and her opponent is experience.

"I just don't think he's had the experience for anything like this. Appraisers don't collect taxes, they just appraise property. I don't think he's qualified at all," she says.

Bell returning to U.S. after Nicaragua denies him talk with Hasenfus

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Former U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell flies home today after being barred from meeting a captured American mercenary to help prepare his defense.

Bell, who headed the Justice Department during the Carter administration, said the Nicaraguan government's refusal Tuesday to permit the meeting was a "'moral outrage."

Visibly upset, he told reporters, "You've got a person charged with serious crimes who cannot talk to his lawyer."

Eugene Hasenfus, 45, of Marinette, Wis., was taken prisoner by Sandinista soldiers Oct. 6 after the C-123 cargo plane he was on was shot down in southern Nicaragua while transporting arms to U.S.-backed Contra rebels.

The former Marine, held in a prison outside Managua, is on trial before a revolutionary People's Tribunal composed of a lawyer, a truck driver and a laborer. He is charged with terrorism, violating public security and conspiracy, and if convicted, faces up to 30 years in prison.

Bell, who practices law in Atlanta, said he would return today to the United States to prepare the defense but would fly back to Nicaragua on Sunday.

"They have got a strong case," Bell conceded. "They would be a lot better off letting me see him rather than create an international incident over a man not being able to talk to his own client. I don't understand it."

Hasenfus' Nicaraguan attorney, Enrique Sotelo Borgen, was allowed by the government to confer with Hasenfus, who was brought to the tribunal office by Sandinista soldiers. Also present were Hasenfus' wife, Sally, and brother, William.

It was the third time Sotelo Borgen met with Hasenfus since the government filed charges Oct. 20.

"I saw Mr. Hasenfus, I shook his hand and I told him I was sorry the government here would not let me meet with him," Bell told reporters outside the tribunal office, which is a half-mile from the U.S. Embassy. "He said he was sorry also, that he wanted to meet with me."

California girl becomes fourth to turn in parents for drug use

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A 10-year-old girl who told authorities her mother was freebasing cocaine has been taken away from her family and put in protective custody, police said.

The girl's call to the 911 emergency number from a pay phone Monday night resulted in the arrest of her parents and another man. It was the fourth such case in California in the last three months.

"She was very concerned for her mother's safety," Officer Margie Reed said. "I think she did it totally out of love."

The girl, who was not identified, climbed out a bedroom window and made the call around 7:30 p.m., said Sgt. Steve Frye. She told authorities she saw her mother freebasing, or smoking what she believed to be a purified form of cocaine, Frye said.

The call brought police to a brown frame house in suburban Reseda, where they arrested the girl's parents and a man identified as either their son-in-law or the boyfriend of an older daughter.

As they arrived, drugs and paraphernalia were being hidden behind the house, Frye said. The girl showed officers where the items were.

The mother, Barbara Cortez, 46, was arrested for investigation of possessing dangerous drugs, a felony, and remained in custody in lieu of $2,500 bail, Mrs. Reid said. Ernest Cortez, 55, and Jeffrey Smith, 27, were arrested for investigation of misdemeanor child endangering and released on their own recognizance.

Amended ordinance gives new life to plan to relocate senior center

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Community and Senior Services officials say they will continue with plans to relocate within a northwest Midland neighborhood after the City Council amended an ordinance Tuesday.

"We've begun the work on the application," said Dean Rucker, attorney and board member with the senior service agency.

Rucker said the agency will apply for a special use permit to relocate from 2000 W. Wall to the Fuhrman Estate house at Midkiff Road and Sinclair Avenue.

The council unanimously amended a zoning ordinance Tuesday to allow "senior citizen agencies" to locate within neighborhoods along with religious and educational institutions.

The council changed the wording of the amendment from "philanthropic" to "senior citizens agencies" after homeowners complained about the vaguely defined word.

Homeowners said they feared the amendment would ruin their neighborhoods by allowing anything from transient shelters to drug rehabilitation centers within their neighborhoods.

However, on Tuesday Mayor Carroll Thomas told a crowd of about 50 citizens that the council was also opposed to using the word "philanthropic" in the ammendment.

Booby traps in Texas, Florida create legal controversy

...in San Angelo, Texas

SAN ANGELO (AP) — A real estate broker says he wants to see the prosecution of whoever is responsible for setting a booby trap that stabbed him in the chest when he entered a carport door.

Jesse Kennemer, 66, suffered a 2-inch deep stab wound to the upper right chest Tuesday when he was struck by one of two butcher knives mounted to a sawed-off crutch that fell from the ceiling when he opened a carport door, authorities said.

Kennemer was treated at the Shannon West Texas Memorial Hospital emergency room and released.

Although he was reluctant to discuss the incident for fear of harming the police investigation, Kennemer said he "definitely wants the person responsible for the trap to be prosecuted."

"One of the knives hit me in the chest," he said. He said he was glad his wife wasn't with him because "she could have been hit in the face."

Kennemer said he owns the home, which is rented through the Public Housing Authority. He said he went there to check the condition of some furniture that was damaged from a leaking roof.

Police questioned a possible suspect but no charges had been filed by late Tuesday night.

Detective Barry Alwine told the San Angelo Standard-Times the knives, each about 6-inches long, were placed in the lower part of the crutch and braced with a brick.

"The crutch was hanging from the ceiling with mono-filament and rigged to fall when the door was opened," he said.

Leaving a Dade County, Fla., courtroom after refusing to testify in a Grand Jury probe of an electrocution death at his business is Prentice Rasheed, 43.

...In Miami, Fla.

MIAMI (AP) — A grand jury's refusal to indict a shopkeeper whose wire-mesh booby trap electrocuted a burglar is a signal to criminals "that people are going to stand up and fight back," the merchant's attorney says.

The Dade County panel said Tuesday that Prentice Rasheed wasn't justified in taking justice into his own hands by electrifying metal grilles above the door of his shop, but that there was no evidence he meant to kill anyone.

"Sure, I'm happy and relieved about the whole thing," Rasheed said Tuesday night, "but at the same time I don't feel anybody's mother, father, son or daughter should lose their life like that again."

Rasheed, 43, was arrested on a manslaughter charge after Odell Hicks, 26, was killed Sept. 29 when he touched the mesh. Rasheed has said he set the trap after his Central City Flea Market in the crime-ridden Liberty City area of Miami had been broken into eight times. The trap has been disassembled, he said Tuesday.

"The grand jury has spoken and...has spoken very forcefully," said a disappointed Dade State Attorney Janet Reno, adding she would not pursue manslaughter or other criminal charges against Rasheed.

"It's not justice," said Aretha Hicks, the victim's sister. "He got away with it, so people are going to think they can get away with it."

William Wilbanks, a criminologist at Florida International University, said, "In this particular case, justice may have been served, but in the long term, justice may not have been served."

IPAA

Jokingly, a lawyer present at the meeting took the floor and remarked that it did his soul good to see a debate over the substitution of a "the" for an "if." But the serious rhetoric that followed was hardly a joking matter.

Those who wanted the "if" to stand in the original language of the Task Force report, which was approved 32 to 1 Monday by the IPAA Executive Committee, said the wording was carefully designed to not back President Reagan into a corner with deadlines or strong language.

Gordon Sorrels, an IPAA director from Houston, said a stronger stand was needed because most of the press still feels that IPAA is ambivalent on the question of an oil import tax.

Another Houston IPAA member and an outspoken proponent of an import tax, Arliss Watts, warned that too many in the oil industry were "going down the tubes" and did not have time to wait on other remedies. "It's time to get on with the idea of an import fee," said Watts.

Bob Benson, a member of the Emergency Action Task Force, said the language was written primarily for the President, and written not to intimidate or alienate him. "We did not want to mandate solutions," said Benson, who added that the president was anxiously awaiting the report.

Benson said members of OPEC were also anxiously awaiting the final language of the recommendations, and that President Reagan may be able to achieve a stable oil price by negotiation without putting the burden of an oil import tax around the neck of industry.

"If this report was intended to send a message to Reagan or OPEC, we should send the strongest signal possible," said Joseph Ryan, with Denver-based, Davis Oil Co. and a supporter of Energy Secure Policy which advocates an immediate crude oil import tax. He added that nobody in the White House was a member of IPAA and that the organization should draft stronger language that reflected how its members felt. "We should have our say," he said.

RYAN'S CALL FOR removal of the "if" was echoed by IPAA Area Vice President, John Watson who said the recommendation as presently written sent the message that "IPAA is still on the fence."

Lee Davis, of Davis Brothers Oil Co. in Tulsa, offered documentation to support Ryan and Watson. He said that a CBS report that morning had used the phrase: "IPAA stopped short of recommending an import fee...," in reporting on the Task Force recommendations. "I feel our signals should be clearer," said Davis.

A represenative of the North Texas Oil & Gas Association urged the members to vote for language that would send a signal that IPAA was not divided on the issue of an oil import tax, but Jim Justice, president of the Louisiana Producers & Royalty Owners Association said his group was already split down the middle on the issue. "Our board is 11 for and 11 against an import fee," he said, and as a result our association is in shambles with memberships being canceled or downgraded.

One of the most passionate pleas for the "if" came from Shreveport oilman, Dalton Wood: "It would have been simple to take a poll on this issue, but the Executive Committee recognized the need for the Task Force to base its decisions on fact rather than emotion. We were told to lay aside our personal emotions, bias and problems and to think only about what was best for America. I did not hold much hope for any recommendation when we first started, but the more we began to focus on national security and what was good for the nation the more we began to agree. There were some of us strongly opposed to an import tax and others who thought it was long overdue."

WOODS WARNED THAT IPAA could not wrap itself in the flag and go to Washington with mandates to save the poor failing oil industry, because other industries had already done that to no avail. "We would go down in flames," he said. An oil import tax will never get off the gound unless the public realizes we have a national security problem." Woods added that the president was the one man that could help the oil industry and to alienate him with demands would make the changing of "if" to "the" no minor change.

Said Woods: "Maybe the president can save us from the need for an import tax, because when they ask us what price we want on an import tax and we tell them, I can guarantee you that that will be the price of crude oil for the rest of our lives, and maybe the lives of our children — even if it goes to $35 or $45."

Apache Corp. Chairman and founder of Energy Secure Policy, Ray Plank, disagreed: "I think the president would be disappointed if we do not stand strongly behind an import tax, when he must face a hostile Congress on the issue."

When the debate was concluded and the "ifs" outvoted the "thes" by a vote of four to one it was evident that there was near unamious support in IPAA ranks for an oil import tax, and that the main differences in the petroleum organization were concerned the degree of urgency which that support should be conveyed. A call for unamious support of the Task Force version failed by only one nay vote.

MIDLANDERS OBSERVING the proceedings were encouraged as was Texas Railroad Commissioner, Mack Wallace. Midland oilman Perkins Sams who has long favored an import tax, said he was pleased with the direction IPAA was going now, but movement in the new direction probably started too late. Charles Perry, president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, said IPAA was just now beginning to take up a position that PBPA has supported for almost a year, while Commissioner Wallance said he was encouraged to see that IPAA was calling for an import fee based on national security. Wallace has called for a strong domestic petroleum industry as a tenet of national security since 1983.

Vermont love story: Moose woos as Hereford moos

SHREWSBURY, Vt. (AP) — This is a love story, set on a scenic Vermont hillside. It is the story of a courtship destined for disappointment, but who wants to break the news to the 700-pound male?

It all began over the weekend when a bull moose wandered into a pasture in Shrewsbury and spotted Jessica, a demure brown and white Hereford cow.

The moose stood and stared at her, all day Saturday, all day Sunday, all day Monday and all day Tuesday. As word spread, residents of the area began driving up to watch.

A ~~state~~ game warden told the farmer, Larry Carrara, the moose will probably stay until the end of its mating season — which usually isn't until the early part of November.

Carrara said the moose and cow stand side by side, but do little else.

"They've nuzzled like they're kissing, but I ain't seen no action," he said.

The affair comes as no surprise to State Game Warden Donald Gallus of Mount Holly.

"It's unusual to see it, but it's not uncommon for them to behave that way," he said.

In 1976, a 900-pound moose spent several days trying to court the cows at a Worcester farm.

In 1977, a 1,000-pound moose stalked a Morrisville dairy farm and threatened anyone who tried to milk the cows. State game wardens tranquilized the moose and hauled it to a wildlife sanctuary near the Canadian border.

However, the moose escaped and kidnapped a herd of heifers from a dairy farm in nearby Holland. When two men found them, the moose chased the men up a tree.

There is also a story of a moose falling in love with a horse.

"They do get pretty dopey-acting when they're in this breeding mode," said Gallus.

Scott Darling, a biologist with the state Fish and Game Department, said today that when the mating season ends, so will the love affair.

"This animal will lose its interest — and head back into the woods," he said.

NEIGHBORS

Homeowner Midge Erskine, whose property abuts the Fuhrman Estate, said she and her neighbors are still opposed to the relocation of the senior center.

"All the landowners are against the use of the area as a senior citizen's center. It's an awful expensive office building," Ms. Erskine told the council.

The center is planning to relocate because the 2.7-acre lot is expected to be donated, Rucker said.

However, he said, "The land has not been made ours yet, but it is still being contemplated."

Rucker said he anticipates the agency will overcome expected neighborhood opposition to the site.

"We expect some concern from the neighbors about the type or extent of the operations conducted from the home.

"I believe we'll be able to relieve all of their concerns about what we plan to do," Rucker said.

He said most area homeowners are afraid the center will be used as a nursing home and it will cause a lot of traffic.

"The two concerns are we're going to be a nursing home, which is incorrect. We're not providing a nursing home.

"The other one is we're going to bring a great amount of traffic into the area. Both Golf Course and Midkiff are heavily traveled streets at the present time and the majority of CSS programs provide services out of people's homes, like 'Meals On Wheels,'" he said.

The traffic generated by the center will be minor, Rucker said.

The estate will serve mainly as an administration center to all of the agency's programs, he said.

"The whole program is fragmented now in various places within the city. This way all the programs will be in one place."

The centralization of programs may help reduce the cost of operating the center and the cost of such services as "Meals On Wheels," Rucker said.

The agency hopes to relocate to the estate by Jan. 1, he said.

The city also made it clear Tuesday, they were interested in seeing the center relocate.

"The city is very interested in receiving this estate (the Fuhrman Estate) on behalf of the senior citizens of the community," Thomas said.

No injuries noted in earthquake

SAN DIEGO (AP) — No damage or injuries were reported from a moderate earthquake that shook buildings and prompted dozens of telephone calls to police, authorities said.

The quake, which struck at 6:38 p.m. Tuesday, measured 4.7 on the Richter scale and was centered five miles southeast of downtown, said Dennis Meredith of the California Institute of Technology.

The U.S. Geological Survey's National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo., reported a Richter reading of 4.5.

Officer Rick Amos said police received no emergency calls due to the temblor, but calls flooded headquarters from people who reported feeling it.

An earthquake of magnitude 4 on the Richter scale can cause moderate damage in a populated area.

Mandell said the Democrats have waged an extensive campaign to get Hispanics registered in Midland and to teach them how to become a political force and make their vote heard. He added Gov. White had billingual literature with Spanish passages to appeal to the Hispanic voters as well.

"Historically, the Hispanics have not been educated in the political system and don't feel they're a part of it," Lydia Torres, State Board of Dental Examiners member, said.

"Consider our parents. Many of them didn't even finish high school, but we are becoming more educated. It all boils down to education," Ms. Torres said.

On the subject of apathetic Hispanic voters, Gonzalez said apathy exists everywhere and not just in the Hispanic community.

"Even though I've been endorsed by every major newspaper in the state, I know I'm in for a tough race," Gonzalez said.

Abortion clinic bombed

NEW YORK (AP) — A bomb exploded in an abortion clinic in midtown Manhattan early today, injuring two passersby hit by flying debris, police said.

The Police Department bomb squad received a phone call warning of the explosion about 15 minutes before the 1:40 a.m. blast at the fifth-floor Eastern Women's Center, said Sgt. Ed Burns. The caller did not identify himself.

One of the victims was taken to Bellevue Hospital, Burns said. The extent or nature of his injuries was unknown.

Soviet readers want to know why Gorbachev wouldn't budge on SDI

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet newspaper today said some readers have questioned why Mikhail S. Gorbachev insisted on a package deal on arms control at the Reykjavik summit and could not separate accords achieved from a dispute over "Star Wars."

Mikhail Ozerov, a journalist with the daily newspaper Sovietskaya Rossiya, said he had been asked about President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative when he spoke to the National Union of Filmmakers about his time at the Oct. 11-12 summit in Iceland.

Ozerov cited one unidentified questioner as saying he was puzzled over the Kremlin's insistence that Reagan should limit the development of SDI.

"Once we had made so many compromises at Reykjavik, maybe it would have been worth it to go for one more and not to put the stress on the Star Wars' program?" the questioner was quoted as saying.

Ozerov said the question reminded him of remarks in some readers' letters, one of which he quoted.

"Shouldn't we retreat after all in relation to SDI? If at least documents had been signed on some things in Iceland, then the situation would have got better, and not the other way around," he quoted a doctor in the town of Kirov east of Moscow as asking.

Soviet newspapers rarely suggest there is any popular doubt about important points of Kremlin policy such as Moscow's view that the summit broke up in disagreement over SDI.

Soviet Communist Party chief Gorbachev has spelled out that view three times, once in a news conference and twice on national television.

Echoing Gorbachev's television address last Wednesday, Ozerov noted that a package is a balance of interests and compromises.

"Judge for yourselves," he said. "Is it possible to open and close a door at the same time? In exactly the same way, it is impossible to limit the arms race and at the same time to create new, moreover principally new kinds of weapons."

Addressing Reagan's insistence that he would never give up his space-based missile defense program, Ozerov said, "does that mean that we have to accept this idea?"

He reiterated the Kremlin view that the world could become safer only through disarmament and not, as Reagan has argued, through SDI.

"That's why there can be only one answer to the question 'Shouldn't we retreat?'," Ozerov concluded. "Not at any price."

Ozerov's article — one of several appearing daily in the state-run media to restate the Kremlin view of the summit — came a day after a Soviet official said talks in Vienna between U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze could continue negotiations begun in Iceland.

Police suspect hand grenade in jetliner's plunge, papers say

TOKYO (AP) — Osaka police experts suspect a blast from a hand grenade placed in a lavatory by Japanese gangsters may be responsible for the wild five-mile plunge of a Thai jetliner, major newspapers reported today.

A government official today said investigators believed an explosion may have been responsible, but refused to speculate on whether a bomb was involved.

The Thai Airways International A-300 airbus was nearing the end of the flight Sunday when there was a loud "bang," the cabin filled with white mist — characteristic of a sudden pressure loss — and the plane went out of control.

Sent into a wildly bucking plunge, the plane tossed passengers and luggage around before the crew regained control and landed at Osaka. Sixty-two of the 247 people aboard the flight from Bangkok were injured, at least five of them seriously.

The accident reminded Japanese of history's worst single-plane disaster, which occurred last year when a Japan Air Lines jumbo jet crashed into a central Japan mountaintop, killing all but four of the 524 people aboard.

The Asahi, Yomiuri and Tokyo Shimbun newspapers said the Thai jet accident might have been caused by a grenade or similar device being smuggled into the country by Japanese "yakuza" gangsters who boarded the plane in Manila.

The Asahi Shimbun said that just before the plane was to land, a gangster became worried and tried to get rid of the grenade in a lavatory, where it went off by accident.

"Yakuza" are Japan's organized crime syndicates that run prostitution, drugs, racketeering and other illegal activities. Many are based in Osaka, the largest city in western Japan, and authorities say the Philippines is a key point of origin for smuggled arms and other contraband.

Dozens of mysterious small perforations were found in the Thai plane's damaged rear bulkhead, and officials have recovered what were described as tiny, jagged metal fragments that appeared to have been burned, as if in a blast.

The aircraft had no parts in the affected area that were made of such metal, and all fire extinguishers and other potentially explosive pressurized equipment had been accounted for, newspapers quoted unnamed investigators as saying.

Officials apparently are skeptical the accident was caused by any structural weakness in the plane, which had been in service only since Oct. 12.

The three mass circulation newspapers said police had identified the metal fragments as possibly coming from a U.S.-type fragmentation grenade, and were investigating two Japanese men who boarded Thai flight 620 at Manila, one of whom remained hospitalized from injuries suffered in the accident.

Kyodo News Service reported that passengers had described two men who were said to be smoking heavily, as if nervous, and advising others on which lavatories were empty.

An Osaka police spokesman, who declined to be named, refused to confirm or deny the newspaper reports.

Ex-Argentine officials face life prison terms

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The prosecution called for life prison terms for a retired army general and a former police chief accused of overseeing a state terror campaign in which hundreds of people were kidnapped, tortured and summarily executed.

Chief Federal Prosecutor Julio Strassera also demanded long prison terms for five other defendants on trial for atrocities, including a physician who allegedly took part in torture sessions, advising torturers to desist when the victim was near death or administering drugs to revive a victim for further torment.

Strassera, who argued the murder, kidnapping and torture cases against former Argentine junta members convicted and sentenced last year, made his recommendations for punishment shortly before midnight Tuesday at the end of his summation before the Federal Criminal Court of Appeals in Buenos Aires.

He asked for life terms for retired army Gen. Ramon Camps, former commander of the Buenos Aires provincial police force, and for ex-police chief Miguel Etchecolatz.

Strassera called for prison terms of 25 years for army Gen. Pablo Ricchieri; 22 years for police Corp. Norberto Cozzani, 20 years for police physician Jorge Berges, and 18 years each for police commanders Hector Vides and Alberto Rousse.

All seven defendants served in the provincial police force during the late 1970s, when the country's rightist military rulers waged a brutal campaign, called the "dirty war," against leftists and other suspected opponents.

According to an investigative commission set up by the 3-year-old democratic government, security forces during the military regime abducted and tortured at least 9,000 people. They are called "desaparecidos," or disappeared people, and are presumed to have been summarily executed and clandestinely buried, cremated or dumped into the ocean from military aircraft. Much of the repression took place in Buenos Aires province, the country's most populous, where Camps was named overall commander of provincial police by the military leaders who had seized power in a 1976 coup.

The rights trial is the first proceeding of its kind since the appeals court convicted five former ruling junta members, including two ex-presidents, of atrocities last December and sentenced them to prison terms ranging from 4½ years to life.

Camps and Etchecolatz were the only two defendants accused of murder.

The prosecution's recommended sentences were the maximum under Argentine law, which allows the death penalty only in special cases such as treason during wartime.

During more than three weeks of testimony ending in mid-October, prosecutors presented witnesses and other evidence in 280 specific cases. Many of those who testified were survivors of the repression or relatives of victims who described late-night abductions, torture in clandestine detention centers, looting of suspects' homes and other crimes.

Laurel says voters should choose timing of elections

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Vice President Salvador Laurel suggested today that voters be allowed to decide if they want presidential elections next year or if President Corazon Aquino should remain in office without elections until 1992.

Critics of Mrs. Aquino, led by Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile, have called for prompt elections, claiming she forfeited her legitimacy by scrapping the 13-year-old constitution promulgated under the ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

But a recently drafted constitution that is to be submitted to a referendum next year would keep Mrs. Aquino and Laurel in office until 1992.

At a news conference, Laurel said the debate can be cleared up by asking separately on the referendum ballot if Mrs. Aquino and Laurel should remain in office until 1992, or if presidential elections should be held next May. He proposed that the results be binding.

"I thought it would be more fair not only to the people, but also to Mrs. Aquino and myself to know what the people feel about our tenure," Laurel said.

"That's why I'd like to separate the question of tenure from the main body of the constitution so that the constitution will be judged exclusively on its merits and the question of tenure judged separately," he said.

Laurel has been targeted for some criticism for saying he is not sure he will support the constitution, drafted by a 47-member committee picked by Mrs. Aquino.

Four famous Anderson brothers put service station on the block

MILLVILLE, Pa. (AP) — The four Albertson brothers put their service station equipment on the auction block recently and planned to put their feet up and just relax, at least briefly.

Gas will continue to be pumped at the '40s-vintage, white-tiled station, but by Bill Saab of Millville, not the four famous Andersons — Bob, 65; Art, 63; Bill, 61; and Glen, also known as "Baldy".

The family's cozy style of doing business — the no-interest charge accounts and the hand-wiped windshields — was publicized last year in a host of trade magazines, on Paul Harvey's radio show and on NBC's "Today" show.

"They were right between Bishop Tutu and the Chancellor of West Germany, interviewed by Jane Pauley and Bryant Gumbel," recalled one auction-goer, as the tire irons, jacks, copiers and ice-cream chairs were hauled out for sale.

In the station's front office, Art, the gentle and genial brother, passed out free sodas to kids and talked of trips he'll take to Canada and North Carolina. There will be golf games with his friend, retired banker Paul Weatherill.

"Maybe I'll go to Europe, too," he said.

Baldy, who has a full head of hair and never found out where his nickname originated, says you can't just rock in a chair after working 70-80 hours a week. He will start work with Woolcock Oil Co., which has picked up the Goodyear tire franchise.

"It'll be a part-time job — 40 hours a week," he quips.

At the family business, the brothers worked from 5 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. They once stayed open until 10 p.m., but cut back the hours and closed Sundays after the gas crunch of the 1970s.

Bob, a perpetual-motion machine who seems to do three things simultaneously, will spend a few months closing out the books and then go big-game hunting. After that, he will consider the several jobs he's been offered.

Bill, who hasn't been well, says he plans to "just retire." But on the last, emotion-filled day, he admitted he'd miss pumping gas and meeting the people.

None of the brothers' children, Art's son, Mark; Bob's sons, Steve and John; Bill's daughters, Charlene and Ann; and Baldy's sons, Ray, Dave, Ed, George and Jim, wanted to follow in the service station business.

But the station provided all four families with decent livings and houses they now own, said Art.

Ethiopia teeters on brink of famine

By JAMES R. PEIPERT

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Rain softly patters on the patchwork of green fields around this highlands capital, an expected plague of locusts has not materialized, and the U.N. emergency office is closing up shop.

Two years after the outside world became aware of a devastating famine in this East African nation, Ethiopia is gradually rebuilding its food stocks and supply system.

But, by most accounts, as many as 2.5 million of its 42 million people will teeter on the brink of starvation for at least another decade unless the country gets a huge transfusion of long-term development aid.

An estimated 1 million people died in Ethiopia alone during the 1984-85 Africa famine. Hundreds of thousands of other Ethiopians were saved only by a massive outpouring of international aid.

"The situation today is less alarming and more within the possibility of control than in those nightmare days," the head of the government's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission, Berhanu Jembere, said in an interview.

But the Ethiopian official sounded a cautionary note.

"Despite misperceptions in some quarters that the crisis is over, we are still gripped by and continue to grapple with the problem of food shortage," Berhanu said.

Said the chief representative in Addis Ababa for UNICEF, Gregorio Monasta of Italy, "Ethiopia will remain a country in a situation of emergency for at least 10 years."

Michael J. Priestley, who heads the United Nations' Office for Emergency Operations here, pointed out that even in a normal year Ethiopia suffers a shortfall of 400,000 metric tons of grain, and about 2.5 million people go hungry. At the height of the famine about 8 million people needed emergency food aid.

"It's going to take a lot of recovery," said Priestley, a Briton.

Reflecting the diminished crisis, the U.N. emergency office, which opened in November 1984 to help coordinate famine relief, is closing at the end of this year. Priestley noted that staff members of the Addis Ababa office of the U.N. Development Program will still deal with famine aid.

Berhanu said his Relief and Rehabilitation Commission, the main government agency that coped with the famine, estimated that 6.7 million Ethiopians needed emergency assistance in 1986, amounting to 1.24 million metric tons of food.

Projections are impossible now, but better crops are likely in 1987, with decent rains.

"Providing there are no horrendous pest attacks, Ethiopia will have a good harvest," Priestley said in an interview. "You can say we are guardedly optimistic."

Plagues of locusts and grasshoppers infested huge swaths of Africa this year in the wake of rains that broke the drought. "We're beginning to feel we might have escaped," Priestley said.

But he said it would be "a fair guess" that at least 2.5 million Ethiopians will need emergency assistance in 1987 — the norm for the decade before the 1984-85 famine.

Cleric leaves Israel without finding missing technician

EDITOR'S NOTE — This dispatch was submitted to the Israeli military censor, who made a significant deletion.

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Anglican priest left Israel today after trying without success to find a friend who reportedly was kidnapped by Israeli agents after disclosing details of an alleged Israeli nuclear weapons factory.

The Rev. John McKnight said Israeli officials have refused to discuss the case with him since he arrived last week and "none of my phone calls have been returned."

McKnight, of Sydney, Australia, said he understood that his friend, Mordechai Vanunu, was being held in a top-security prison west of Jerusalem and would be charged with violating security by revealing state secrets. He said the trial might be held in secret and its results never publicized.

Israeli officials have declined comment on the case.

Vanunu, 32, a former nuclear technician, gained notoriety last month by giving the Times of London details of what he said was an underground nuclear weapons factory in southern Israel, including photographs taken with a camera he said he smuggled into the plant.

MIA 'technical talks' begin

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — U.S. military specialists investigating cases of Americans missing in the Vietnam war flew to Hanoi today for talks that the Vietnamese government had postponed for three weeks.

The "technical talks," the fourth round this year, were originally scheduled for Oct. 8, but the Vietnamese abruptly canceled them without giving any reason. The talks focus on the technical means of resolving the status of 1,786 Americans listed as missing in action from the war, which ended in 1975.

"We're really happy that the delay was such a short one," said Lt. Col. Joe Harvey, head of the four-man U.S. team and commander of the U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center, the Honolulu-based military unit in charge of settling the MIA issue.

The U.S. team also includes two officers of the center's Bangkok office and Thorne Helgeson, chief of the Army Central Identification Laboratory, also in Honolulu, which analyzes remains to see if they belong to any missing Americans.

Riot police seal off campus

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — An estimated 3,000 riot police Wednesday sealed off the campus of Konkuk University, where about 500 students occupied buildings in a sit-in following violent protests, school authorities said.

By Wednesday morning, more than 100 students were reported to have been taken into custody by police and at least 20 police and some students were injured, according to student sources and newspaper accounts.

Heed AIDS advice

The unmentionable disease, AIDS, is changing the way Americans approach sex, talk about sex and even educate their children about sex. The reason is simple: AIDS is a deadly disease with the potential of becoming a modern-day plague.

In fact, a recent report on AIDS from Surgeon General C. Everett Koop provides explicit information and sound advice. Requested by the White House, the 36-page report is the government's first major statement on what the nation should do to stop the spread of AIDS. In contrast to the misinformation being spread by supporters of California's Proposition 64, which will appear on that state's ballot next week, the Koop report is a valuable public-information tool in the fight against AIDS. Americans would do well to heed its advice.

The surgeon general urges parents and schools to shed their inhibitions and start engaging in "frank, open discussions" with very young children and teenagers about the dangers of AIDS. He emphasizes that, in the absence of any cure for AIDS or a vaccine to prevent it, the only effective way to slow the epidemic is to educate the public about how to avoid infection with the AIDS virus. He rejects the idea of compulsory blood-testing to identify infected individuals.

He also opposes proposals to quarantine or tattoo carriers of the AIDS virus, extreme measures many Americans undoubtedly would find objectionable.

Koop points out that the AIDS epidemic has already claimed the lives of almost 15,000 Americans and is expected to kill 12 times that number by the end of 1991. With proper education and information, he says, as many as 14,000 people who would otherwise die from AIDS in 1991 "could be saved."

The surgeon general's report also emphasizes that AIDS is "not spread by common everyday contact" — shaking hands, hugging, social kissing, crying, coughing or sneezing. Nor has AIDS been contracted from toilet seats, eating utensils, dining at restaurants — even if an employee there is infected — or from hot tubs, swimming pools or shared linens.

AIDS is spread primarily through sexual contact and the sharing of intravenous drug needles and syringes used for illicit drugs, Koop points out. "It is contagious in the same way that sexually transmitted diseases, such as syphilis and gonorrhea, are contagious," he adds.

Koop urges that education about AIDS start "at the lowest grade possible" in elementary school and be "reinforced at home" by discussions between parents and children. He also calls for increased educational efforts to reach teen-agers, blacks, people of Hispanic descent and virtually "every adult and adolescent" in the country.

There's little doubt there will be some resistance to Koop's call for education about AIDS in elementary schools. Too many people are opposed to any type of sex education, though experts in child psychology say such information can be given to young children if done so with great discretion. Some parents also will find it difficult to discuss AIDS at home. Perhaps a minister or teacher could help. But it's important that the information be accessible and that it be heeded. Literally thousands of lives will be lost needlessly if the information about this deadly disease and its prevention is not made available to all those old enough to understand.

Copies of the report on AIDS are available from the United States Public Health Service by writing to AIDS, Box 14252, Washington, D.C., 20044. It's important information that literally can save your life.

Quota of fraud

By next March 31 Japan's auto companies are likely to have easily sold the 2.3 million cars that they had fixed as their annual maximum to the American market, and with President Reagan committed not to seek an extension of import quotas they will be looking to greater sales in the year ahead. That doesn't portend a huge rise in Japanese imports, since the automakers almost certainly will agree among themselves on restraints in an effort to avoid igniting a protectionist reaction. But the Japanese will probably reach for a bigger market share, and that has people in the U.S. auto industry worried. Signs of that worry have emerged even at General Motors, which has traditionally opposed import quotas.

A few days ago GM Chairman Roger B. Smith suggested in an interview that quotas might not be such a bad idea after all. A day later, perhaps after someone recalled that GM even now brings in 150,000 Japanese-made cars to sell under its Chevrolet marque, the company issued a statement saying it hadn't changed its position after all. Meanwhile the United Auto Workers union, which led the successful charge for import quotas five years ago, was hailing GM's apparent switch. The UAW's position is understandable. It has seen its membership decline as U.S. auto production has fallen and as cost-cutting automation has increasingly taken hold at auto plants.

Even if Japanese imports don't rise next year U.S. automakers face increasing competition, at a time when their sales prospects may well have been undercut by the incentives they offered to clear out 1986 models. Sales of South Korea's Hyundai, which have already exceeded expectations, are likely to continue growing, and soon other Korean autos will join the import stream. Brazil, among others, is also preparing to enter the U.S. car market.

None of this was publicly foreseen when lobbyists for import quotas on Japanese cars got their way in 1981. The contention then was that U.S. car makers simply needed some breathing room so that they could tool up to better meet foreign competition. The bulk of that competition was and remains in smaller cars. Yet, after five years of quotas, only Chrysler has succeeded in producing well-received smaller models. That's a major reason why Ford and GM can't meet federal fuel economy standards, and have been excused from doing so by a sympathetic Reagan administration. The two companies blame their woes on a fickle public, which has shown a revived taste for their larger, poorer-mileage and, happily for them, more profitable cars. But the continued high sales of fuel-efficient foreign cars is proof that when quality and price are right, the public will eagerly buy.

A new effort to reimpose auto import quotas is likely next year. The bleak record of five years of anti-competitive quotas makes it safe to predict what a successful effort would mean. Consumers would again see a punishing inflation in car prices. They would again find their freedom of choice severely reduced. And once again, millions of potential buyers would find themselves priced out of the new car market. With quotas, the American car makers would undoubtedly improve their market shares and maybe even their profits. They would do so, however, only at the cost of fewer cars sold, which ultimately means more jobs lost. By every measurement, quotas have proven to be a continuing and costly fraud. Resurrecting them would only prolong the crime wave.

French blame bombings on wrong guy

WASHINGTON — French officials are deliberately misleading their own people and the international press about the true source of the terrorist bombings that have rocked Paris in recent months. The purpose of the deception may be to cover up a secret deal that the French hope will put an end to the carnage.

Jack Anderson

Responsibility for the indiscriminate bombings, which have killed 10 people and wounded 162, was claimed by a mysterious group that calls itself the Committee for Solidarity with Arab and Middle Eastern Political Prisoners. The conjunction "with" may be the key word in the title.

The demand that followed each bombing has been consistent: release of three terrorists held in French prisons. Two, Georges Abdallah and Anis Naccache, are Maronite Christian Lebanese; the third, Varadjian Garbidjian, is an Armenian Christian, born in Syria.

French officials from Prime Minister Jacques Chirac down have convinced the press that Abdallah is the key individual. He heads a small terrorist group, the Lebanese Armed Revolutionary Factions, but is charged with only minor crimes in France. The Czech-made pistol used in the 1982 murders of an Israeli diplomat and an American military attache was found in Abdallah's apartment.

But there's no other evidence on which to hold Abdallah for very long. With or without blackmail bombings, the French would have to set him free in a few years at most.

As for Naccache, who bungled an attempt to assassinate an Iranian exile leader, he is small potatoes. He doesn't even belong to a terrorist organization capable of a series of bombings.

That leaves Garbidjian. He is serving a life sentence, with no possibility of parole, for the 1983 bombing at Orly Airport outside Paris that killed seven people, including an American. Garbidjian acknowledged responsibility for the bombing.

Who is Garbidjian? He is a top leader — if not No. 1 — of one of the deadliest terrorist groups in the world: the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia. In the last decade, ASALA assassins have killed more than 70 Turkish officials, family members and anyone else who got in the way, and have wounded more than 300 in attacks all over the world. ASALA demands that the present Turkish government admit the genocide of hundreds of thousands of Armenians in the Ottoman Empire during World War I, and that an independent Armenian homeland be carved out of eastern Turkey.

Our sources, who are terrorist experts in various Western intelligence agencies, believe Garbidjian is the French prisoner whose release is the crucial demand of the Paris bombers. They point out that ASALA has the organization, discipline and agents in France to carry out the series of bombings that began last February.

In this scenario, Abdallah, the Lebanese terrorist, is just a red herring to divert the press from a deal over Garbidjian. In fact, a similar situation developed exactly five years ago.

On Oct. 25, 1981, ASALA launched a series of 15 bombings in Paris to win the release of an Armenian-American ASALA leader, Monte Melkonian, and better treatment for four other members charged with the takeover of the Turkish consulate in Paris, in which a security guard was killed.

Our sources confirm that the French cut a deal with ASALA in January 1982. The bombings stopped, Melkonian was set free and the four other ASALA prisoners were given light sentences. One subsequently committed suicide in prison; the three remaining were released last spring.

The truce blew up — literally — with the Orly Airport bombing. But Garbidjian told French investigators it was an accident: The suitcase bomb was supposed to detonate on board a Turkish airliner, not on French soil. The French were furious anyway, and sentenced Garbidjian to life.

Our inquiries into the Garbidjian connection have made French sources nervous. Meanwhile, though, Chirac has succeeded in selling the story that Abdallah is the reason for the bombings. (A lengthy article in the New York Times Magazine last week focused on Abdallah and didn't even mention Garbidjian.)

BIDDING BUDDIES: Government inspectors have uncovered suspiciously incestuous "competitive" bids and astronomical markups in emergency contracts for waste removal awarded by the Environmental Protection Agency.

One contractor jacked up the price of an item 15,900 percent above cost, according to an EPA inspector general's report reviewed by our reporter Robert Young. Fortunately, it was cheap to begin with: the use of a trash pump, which the inspector general figured at 10 cents per unit of time. The contractor charged $16.

The inspector general was particularly critical of EPA's relaxed attitude toward supposedly competitive bidding. Bid proposals were requested from 235 firms; six responded. What bothered the inspector general was that five of the six firms bid not only for the prime contract, but also as subcontractors with their competitors — which obviously entailed sharing of information among the bidders.

Strange events combine for Reagan 'edge'

WASHINGTON — By all the political trends and statistics of the past, the Republicans should lose control of the Senate on Election Day, but the guess here is that the president will pull them through.

James Reston

Incidentally, these contests for 435 seats in the House, 34 in the Senate and 36 governorships have, on the whole, been so devoid of honest debate and so stained by personal attacks and other dirty tricks that if the truth-in-advertising rules applied to political ads, many of the candidates would wind up in jail.

In midterm elections at the six-year point in a presidential second term, the smallest number of Senate seats lost by the party in power has been four — one more than the Republicans can afford to lose on Election Day.

Twenty-two of the seats in 34 Senate races this year are now held by Republicans, and even if the GOP won 18 of the 34 seats, the Democrats would still gain four and take charge of the Senate.

Throughout these campaigns, the administration has been mixed up in a series of embarrassing foreign-policy incidents.

It was caught in a calculated official campaign of "disinformation" or misinformation to mislead the world on its Libyan policy.

An American plane carrying arms to the rebels or, if you will, "freedom fighters" in Nicaragua was shot down with the U.S. survivor saying he was working with agents of the Central Intelligence Agency.

The administration swapped an American reporter for a Soviet spy and others and said it wasn't a swap, and the president went to a summit that wasn't a summit and the secretary of state said the results were a disappointment — later defined by the administration as a triumph.

Then came the Kitchen War. Like most wars, this one apparently got out of control. First, the United States kicked out 25 Soviet diplomats believed to be intelligence agents from the United Nations, the Russians expelled five U.S. officials, and Washington escalated the nuisance war by booting out another 55 Soviet diplomats.

What began as a policy of tit-for-tat or "flexible response" became more serious when Gorbachev resorted to a policy of massive retaliation by withdrawing the cooks, chauffeurs and babysitters at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, and the State Department finally called for a truce.

All this threatened to interrupt the U.S.-Soviet arms control talks, and provide the Democrats with ammunition in the elections, but the Democrats didn't get together either on economic policy or foreign policy, and these side events were dismissed as silly but not serious.

In fact, the president seems to have made an effective issue of all these recent tangles with the Russians.

Touring the country, he had three things going for him: the confusion of the Democrats, the promise of his arms control talks in Iceland, and money, lots of money, for the Republicans in a last week television blitz.

The Reykjavik conference was his main advantage. Despite some confusion about what actually transpired there in his talks with Mikhail Gorbachev, he managed to make clear that the Russians had not only come back to the conference table for fear of his Star Wars program, but had made the most promising concessions for nuclear arms control since the invention of the atom bomb.

The president's appeal to the voters was plain and simple: He was engaged in a series of negotiations that might after a generation result in a nuclear compromise. Accordingly, he argued: Please do not embarrass me in my last two years by turning control of the Senate over to the Democrats.

Some observers do not think this has been an effective argument; they say the voters are thinking primarily about local and not foreign-policy issues. But many others disagree.

George Kennan, for example, perhaps our most experienced analyst of U.S.-Soviet relations, who has opposed the president's Star Wars policy in the past, now sees the Reykjavik proposals as the presiding question of American and even of world affairs.

This is no time to quibble with the president over the disagreements at Reykjavik, he says, but it is a time to support the president and do everything possible to see that the promise of a nuclear compromise is continued.

Maybe this won't change the normal pattern of midterm elections, which goes against the party in power, but the president thinks it will, and on this fundamental question, as often before, the American people may give him what he wants.

ART BUCHWALD

Give Japanese a chance; give 'em Harvard!

When it comes to the Nobel prize, you never hear about the person who came in second. This year the runner-up for the economics award was Prof. Valentine Septable, who wrote the best-selling book, "Japanomics — The Sony In Us All."

Art Buchwald

Septable has been working on the theory that the Japanese are not 30 years ahead of America but 30 years behind.

It was this reasoning that led him to unravel the mystery of why the sun always sets on a Seiko watch.

To find out more about his school of economics I drove out to Septable's lab underneath the RFK Stadium.

The professor was taking the loss of the Nobel very calmly. "I may not have won the biggie, but I was voted 'Mr. Congeniality' by all the other economists. That meant more to me than being able to buy a new blackboard."

"Even if you lost," I said, "your work is not to be sneezed at."

"I'm very proud of it. It took me five years to build this model. He pointed to the top of it, which looked very much like a Benihana restaurant. "This is where the U.S. was 30 years ago and this is where it is now. Over here is where the Japanese are now, which is where the U.S. was 30 years ago."

"But if they are that much behind now," I said, "why are they so far ahead?"

"Very simple," Septable replied as he showed me photographs plastered all over the model. They were pictures of American manufactured products from the past.

He asked me, "Do you remember how it was in this country 30 years ago? We made wonderful cars, radios, refrigerators, hot water heaters and baseball mitts. Everything, including the mitts, seemed to work. The reason for this is that our workers knew what they were doing and management knew how to sell the product. We also had something else which has been lost, and that's QUALITY CONTROL."

"Where did it go?" I asked.

"Some say the Japanese stole quality control from us because we wouldn't pay them reparations for World War II. But this is not true. It was strictly our own economic decision that brought us down. Thirty years back the United States had two paths to follow. It could either stay where it was or move ahead and make everything out of plastic. We chose plastic. At the same moment Japan, who was not good at advanced technology, decided it had to stick with old stuff that wouldn't break. It didn't take long, as everyone's cars and appliances fell apart, for Americans to look Eastward for satisfaction. It was then the Japanese realized that to become number one, all they had to do was stay way behind the U.S."

"If the Japanese are 30 years behind us, how do we persuade them to catch up?"

Septable said, "It's quite simple. The American managers who brought us to where we are today all went to the Harvard Business School. What we have to do is get the Japanese to send their kids to Harvard as well. Only when all the centers of industry in Japan are manned by Harvard graduates will the U.S. be able to compete with Japan again."

I could see why Septable was runner-up for the Nobel prize. "Who would have thought the solution to our trade deficit is to make our foreign competitors earn MBA's at Harvard?"

Septable said, "It's our only chance. We have to hope when they return to the Empire the graduates will screw up Japan as much as the Harvard Business alumni have screwed up the United States."

Illinois nursery grows seedlings for forests

JONESBORO, Ill. (AP) — From a distance, the field looks like a dark green shag carpet. Actually, it's a blur of a million tiny white pine trees.

By spring, the seedlings will have arrived at farms and abandoned coal mines across the state as part of an effort by the Illinois Conservation Department to replenish depleted forestlands.

This is the 52nd year that Union Nursery near Jonesboro has raised trees for conservation projects. The nursery provides seedlings — at half its production cost — to restore 1.5 million acres that the U.S. Forest Service says need tree cover.

"If we don't get the job done, it's not going to get done," says Mel Gerardo, nursery manager. "We sort of feel like we're the front line of conservation in the state."

From its 40-acre location in the heart of the Trail of Tears State Forest, the nursery is turning out 1.5 million seedlings a year. That is down from 6 million seedlings raised annually during the heyday of the Soil Bank in the 1960s, when the government paid farmers to plant trees.

Union Nursery is one of two state-operated nurseries. Species raised include black walnut, hackberry, red pine, black cherry, white pine, red oak, sugar maple, mixed hickory, black locust, mixed oak and American plum.

The other nursery is near Havana and emphasizes trees that are better adapted to northern Illinois, as well as plants for prairie restoration.

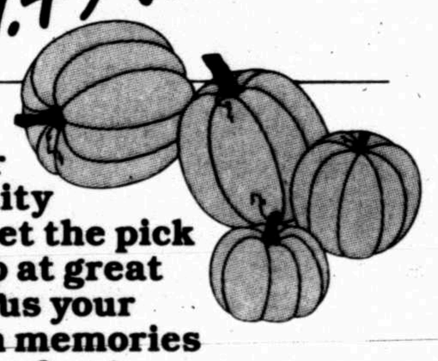

Union nursery originally was built to help replenish land the U.S. government bought for reforestation. When the Soil Conservation Service was established in 1944, attention was turned toward providing trees for windbreaks and conservation projects in Illinois.

The nursery program must continue, Gerardo says, or future generations will not have fine furniture woods.

"Our objective is to get that land back in trees, he says. "If a person has land that needs seedlings, we feel the price of the seedlings should not be a factor."

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Glasscock, Upton, Reagan, Crane, Gaines, Andrews, Dawson, Borden, Martin and Howard counties: Tonight, fair. Low in the middle 40s. Southeast wind 5 to 10 mph.

Thursday, fair. A high in the middle 70s. South wind 10 to 15 mph.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies and mild temperatures are being called for on Thursday by the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. The forecast calls for a high in the middle 70s.

The NWS is calling for a low in the middle 40s tonight with fair skies. Winds will be southeasterly at five to 10 mph shifting to the south at 10-15 mph on Thursday.

Tuesday's high was 13 degrees below the record high of 91 set for that date in 1950. Today's low was 19 degrees above the 27-degree record low set for this date in 1980.

STATE

A trough of low pressure stretched from the Trans-Pecos up through north Central Texas this morning, but because of a lack of moisture in the air, skies were clear over the entire state.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 40s and 50s. But it cooled down into the 30s in the Davis Mountains of West Texas, and it remained in the 60s in far South Texas and in several locations along the coast.

At 4 a.m., the extremes were 35 degrees at Marfa and 68 degrees at the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station, according to the National Weather Service.

The forecast for North Texas calls for fair skies tonight and partly cloudy skies Thursday. Lows should be in the 40s and 50s, with highs in the 70s and 80s.

West Texas should be fair through Thursday with lows in the 40s and highs in the 70s and 80s, the weather service said.

South Texas should see patchy morning fog over the coastal plains but otherwise should be clear to partly cloudy through Thursday. Highs should be in the 80s with lows in the 50s.

NATION

Temperatures dipped in the northern Plains and broad sections of the nation had fair skies today, but rain still fell on the Florida Peninsula after an overnight drenching.

High pressures centered over the northern Rockies and the Carolinas caused fair skies over much of the nation.

Clouds spread across the southern Atlantic Coast states and a few showers and thundershowers dotted the Florida Peninsula. Vero Beach had 2.96 inches of rain Tuesday evening.

Skies were mostly cloudy near the upper Great Lakes and light rain spread across northern Michigan.

Cool air pushed across the northern Plains, where temperatures dipped into the 20s to 30s overnight.

Gale warnings were issued along the Oregon coast.

Owners of loose pets can attend 'obedience' school

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

When Fido misbehaves, training school usually isn't far behind.

Now when Midland pet owners let their dogs and cats run loose, they may also face "obedience" school.

On Tuesday the City Council unanimously passed an ordinance giving pet owners a chance to attend "pet" school when they come bail their furry friends out of the shelter.

"We're trying to get people's attention on what their responsibilities are. You just don't put your dog out. The best place for your dog is on your property," said George Logan, community services director.

Loose dogs and cats, prohibited by the city ordinance, are impounded when found by animal shelter workers.

But owners can now choose to pay less to bond their pets out if they promise to attend pet school.

If owners choose to attend the school, they will pay a $10 registration fee in lieu of the $35 fee charged to bail unlicensed pets out of the shelter.

If their unlicensed pet is picked up a second time, owners lose the chance of attending school and pay a $70 fee.

Licensed pets are released for a $15 fee on the first pickup. Licenses cost $4 and can be bought at the shelter at 1601 Orchard Lane.

The two-hour pet school will include teaching owners the responsibility of pet ownership and showing the participants an 18-minute film, "Kiss Animals Goodbye."

The film will show the dangers of allowing pets to run loose, including the injuries they could receive and the health hazards they are exposed to, said Animal Shelter Director Coy Willis.

When pets run loose, many get killed or exposed to diseases and don't come back, Willis said.

The city hopes the pet school will cut down on the repeat pickups — about 25 percent of the 7,000 animals impounded a year, Willis said.

The school will also give those who are unemployed a cheaper shot at getting their pets out of the shelter, he said.

"Due to the economy, some people can't afford to come and get their animals out. We're doing more euthanasias," Willis said.

The oil slump is also affecting animals in other ways, with more cases of cruelty to pets being reported, Willis said.

"When the economy hurts, animals become a lower priority," he said.

Council decides to change airport parking fees

From Staff Reports

The cost of airport covered parking will go up, but the cost of uncovered parking will decrease, the City Council decided Tuesday.

Complaints about the airport parking fees initiated the change, said Deputy City Manger Fred Poe.

"We had complaints that we needed to reduce rates," he said.

The council also heard a request Tuesday to rename Front Street "Martin Luther King Drive."

Because the city cannot afford a total reduction, some airport parking fees will be increased while other will decrease, Poe said.

The airport covered parking fees will increase from $6.30 a day to $8 a day.

Uncovered parking close to the terminal will be reduced 30 cents from $6.30 to $6 a day and remote airport parking will be reduced from $3.30 to $3.25 a day.

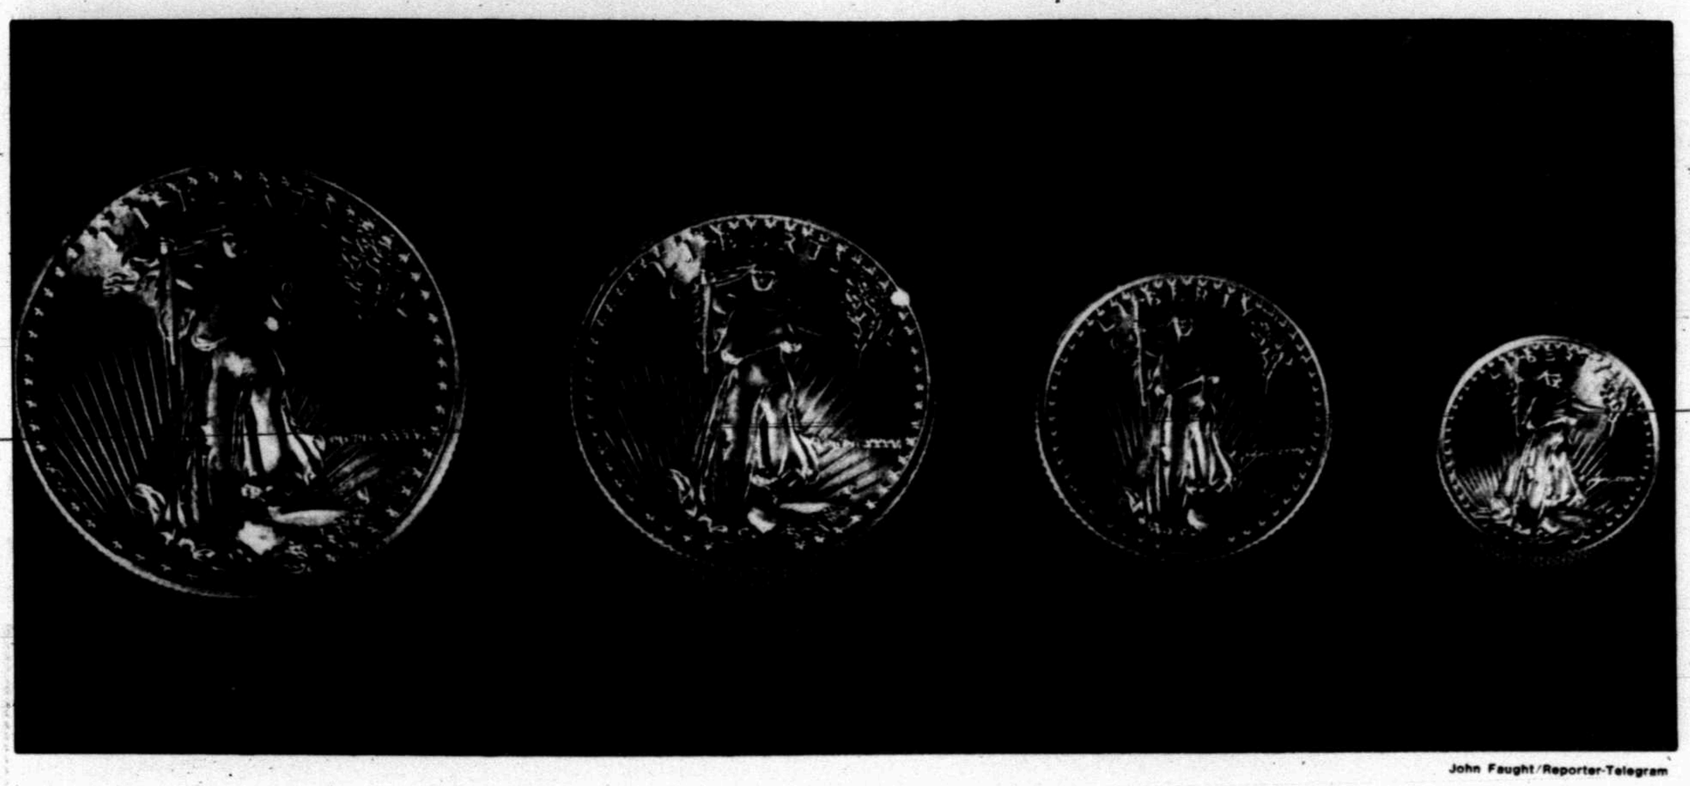

"We anticipate we will end up with the same revenues," Poe said.

If the city makes more money on the fee change, they may reduce rates further, Poe said.

In other action, former mayoral candidate Barbara Harris requested that Front Street be renamed Martin Luther King Drive. The council said it would take Ms. Harris's request under consideration.

"Midland is one of the few cities of it's size left in Texas which does not have a street named for the Nobel Peace Prize winner Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.," Ms. Harris told the council.

The United States Mint's series of four 1986 Gold coins, from the left, are the one-ounce $50-gold ounce $10-gold piece, and the one-tenth ounce $5-American Eagle coins were released last week. The piece, the half ounce $25-gold piece, the quarter gold piece.

Shop 'overwhelmed' by demand for gold coins

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The United States government has plunged into the world gold-coin market with its 1986 Gold American Eagle coins. The coins are minted in one-ounce, half-ounce, quarter-ounce and one-tenth ounce increments.

"We've been overwhelmed (by demands for the gold coin)," said Kim Culver, co-owner of Tejas Coin & Stamp Co. in Midland. "We've done probably a $100,000 (in gold-coin sales) in the past week."

"We've sold the heck out of it," added Lawrence Culver, Tejas co-owner.

The coin, which bears the likeness of Liberty Lady on the obverse (head) side of the 1907-1933 Saint-Gaudens Double Eagle $20-gold piece, may signal renewed interest in coin collecting, said Culver and Charles Green, owner of Village Coin Shop in Midland.

"It's combating foreign gold," said Green. "It's doing well. The price of the coin is going to go up."

Currently, the four-piece set is selling for about $1,000. Most of that is for the gold alone. Gold on the world market today was selling for $410.25 a Troy ounce. The closing price on Tuesday was $412. The one-ounce Gold American Eagle coin currently is selling for about $450.

The one-ounce coin, which is a $50 gold piece, contains 31.104 grams (one Troy ounce) of American gold; 1.018 grams of silver and 1.810 grams of copper. Its size is between that of the silver dollar and half dollar. Because of its higher price, the one-ounce gold coin is in more plentiful supply than the other gold coins produced by the U.S. Mint. The reverse (tail) side of the coin illustrates an eagle landing on an aerie.

The $25 half-ounce gold coin, which initially sold for $235 last week when it came on the market, has risen to $325 because of demands for the coin. The $10 quarter-ounce coin, which initially sold for $135, is up to $170 for the same reason. Both are almost sold out, said Culver. In more plentiful supply is the $5 one-tenth ounce coin, which initially sold for $55 but now is up to $70.

"It fluctuates about like bullion," Culver said of the one-ounce coin. "It's had a $25 swing."

> "I think it is a very good coin (Gold American Eagle coins) to own right now. I think it will become a numismatic coin...It is an excellent investment coin...(These coins are going to) bring back an interest in coins that won't be surpassed for years. It looks like the 1986 (gold coin) is going to be a numismatic coin; the 1987 (coin) may or may not be."
>
> — Charles Green, owner of Village Coin Shop

The U.S. Mint, which plans to produce gold coins in succeeding years, hasn't said how many of each coin will be minted in 1986.

"The trouble is, we don't know what the mint is going to do," Green said.

The Midland coin dealers noted that the value of the gold coins beyond their gold content ultimately will depend on the mintage and demand. The general rule is this: The lower the mintage, the higher the trading price.

"I think it is a very good coin to own right now," said Green. "I think it will become a numismatic coin."

Both Culver and Green said that demand for the coin is growing basically because it is American made. And depending on the mintage, the 1986 coin likely will hold more numismatic value than subsequent-year mintages simply because it represents the first general-circulation gold coin which the United States has minted since 1933, when the nation went off of the gold standard. The United States minted the commemorative Olympic Gold Eagle in 1984 and the Half Eagle Statue of Liberty coin in 1986. The Eagle is a $10 gold piece, and the Half Eagle is a $5 gold piece. The Statute of Liberty $5 gold coin initially sold for $175 and now is selling up to $525, Culver said.

Green said that the U.S. Mint originally estimated that it would convert 2-million ounces of American gold into coins this year.

"I personally don't believe that is going to be enough," he said. "I'm sure we will get all the coins we want in time. I'm not sure we will get all the coins we want before Christmas."

"It is an excellent investment coin," Green said, and is competing against the Canadian Maple leaf, the South African Krugerrand minted prior to 1986, the Chinese Panda, the Singapore Tiger, and gold coins of other nations, such as Great Britain, France, Switzerland, Hungary and Austria. The United States banned importation of the Krugerrand in protesting South Africa's apartheid.

Green said that introduction of the U.S. gold coins is "going to change the whole structure of investment gold."

"It's been long overdue," he said. "Fifty years is too long for this country to be out of the (gold) market." Green speculated that the U.S. gold coins will "bring back an interest in coins that won't be surpassed for years."

Green said that the Gold American Eagle coins are "not going to take the place" of the 1907-1933 Saint Gaudens Double Eagle $20 gold piece.

That coin, considered to be the "most beautiful" U.S. coin, was designed by Ireland-born American sculptor Augustus Saint-Gaudens (1848-1907). The Liberty Lady is depicted on the observe side. The reverse side depicts an eagle in flight.

"This will always be a numismatic coin," Green said. "It looks like the 1986 (gold coin) is going to be a numismatic coin; the 1987 (coin) may or may not be."

Jury debates if negligence caused death

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The jury in a $750,000 wrongful death suit filed by the parents of a jail inmate who hung himself in his cell will decide today whether a former Midland County Sheriff and two other employees should be held accountable for his death.

The suit, filed by Joe and Goldie Olguin, names former sheriff Dallas Smith, jail physician Dr. Patrick Leung, and former jailer Gary McLaughlin. It claims the men were negligent in failing to monitor the condition of Mitchell Olguin, even though they knew he would suffer severe withdrawal from heroin addiction in the county jail following his sentencing in a drug case.

Olguin, 23, was found hanging from a piece of blanket in his cell April 25, 1984, the morning after he had received a 25-year sentence following his conviction in state district court for delivery of cocaine.

In testimony Tuesday in Judge Vann Culp's 238th District Court, Leung and plaintiff attorney Michael McLeaish engaged in a lively banter about the quality of care Olguin, as a $1,000 a day heroin addict, received.

Several times Leung, following a question from McLeaish, shot back a question at the attorney, and more than once Leung complained that McLeaish was "trying to twist things."

Following questions from McLeaish, Leung told the five-man, seven-woman jury that he never actually examined Olguin, but relayed instructions about his medication and care through the jail nurse. He said he treated Olguin "in a routine manner for drug withdrawal."

Under questioning from County Attorney Mark Dettman, defense counsel, Leung characterized severe withdrawal from alcohol intake, commonly known as "DT's" (or delirium tremors) as more severe than withdrawal from heroin addiction.

"It is a real serious medical emergency," Leung said. "Vital signs, for one thing, must be monitored." He said the fact that Olguin had eaten a normal breakfast the morning of his suicide, as pointed out in other testimony, indicated the withdrawal effects were subsiding.

Earlier, McLeaish characterized the former sheriff's answers to his questions as "non-responsive." McLeaish quizzed Smith about the system of video monitors in the jail, and about why there were no monitors in individual cells.

Smith told the jury there was a monitor in the jail's padded cell, but it had been removed following an inspection of the jail.

Asked by McLeaish why he thought there was a monitor installed there, Smith said "It was there when I got there (in office)."

Dettman brought out for jurors the fact that Smith was appointed to the Texas Commission on Jail Standards by former Gov. Bill Clements, at that time one of only two county sheriffs serving on the commission which sets standards for county jails and other detention facilities statewide.

Secondary students making better grades, report shows

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland's secondary students are making higher marks in school than they did at the same time last year, officials said Tuesday.

Midland Independent School District trustees heard a report on secondary school grades for the first six-week reporting period, showing that 38 percent of the total grades earned were 90 or above, compared to 36 percent in the fall of 1985.

About 33 percent earned grades between 80 and 89 as opposed to 31 percent in 1985; 20 percent earned grades between 70 and 70 compared to 22 percent last year; and 7 percent earned grades below 70 compared to 9 percent the prior year.

Student grades also were better overall than those reported in 1984 before the implementation of education reforms.

In 1984, 35 percent of the total grades earned were 90 or above; 29 percent were between 80 and 89; 20 percent were between 70 and 79; and 11 percent were below 70.

The report also revealed that fewer Midland students are failing one or more courses.

The breakdown of total failing grades showed 22 percent of all Lee High School students failed one or more courses; 27 percent at Midland High School; 32 percent at Lee Freshman High School; 30 percent at Midland Freshman High School; 15 percent at Alamo Junior High School; 23 percent at Goddard Junior High School; and 25 percent San Jacinto Junior High School.

Last fall, officials reported 26 percent of all LHS students failed one or more courses; 29 percent at MHS; 30 percent at LFHS; 39 at MFHS; 27 percent at Alamo; 21 percent at Goddard and 26 percent at San Jacinto.

A pilot report on elementary school grades involving Long Elementary School fourth graders, Santa Rita Elementary School fifth graders and Travis Elementary School sixth graders showed 42 percent of the total grades earned were 90 or above, 37 percent were between 80 and 89, 17 percent were between 70 and 79 and 2 percent were below 70.

In analyzing failing grades, officials reported 12 percent of Long Elementary School fourth graders failed on or more courses, compared to 2 percent of the Santa Rita Elementary School fifth grade class and 8 percent of the sixth graders at Travis Elementary School.

In other business, trustees:

— Agreed to buy seven school buses for the 1987-88 school year to replace those on the district's 10-year rotation schedule.

— Appointed John Michael Seerey assistant prinicipal at Goddard Junior High School.

— Contracted with Midland College for an automotive mechanics program.

— Awarded bids for xeographic paper; carpet for MHS, MFHS and San Jacinto Junior High School; florescent lamps and reroofing the LFHS south wing.

— Approved football game reports.

— Heard a report on tax collections as of Sept. 30.

— Approved financial statements, cafeteria statements, bills payable, payroll and investments.

— Approved a request from the Church Recreation Council to rent the San Jacinto Junior High School gymnasium.

Testimony starts in trial of fourth suspect in man's murder

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Testimony began Tuesday in 142nd State District Court in the trial of the last of four suspects to be charged in the brutal 1982 beating death of a Midland furniture salesman.

Jackie Dorn, 32, of Midland is charged in the June 9, 1982 death of 45-year-old Wylie Randolph Wilson, whose body was found the next day in a pasture along County Road 160 in southeast Midland County.

Dorn is the last of four suspects in the killing to face trial. Elroy McKee was convicted of the crime and sentenced to life in prison in March, and James Robert Chambers received a 50-year sentence following his conviction in August.

Elroy's brother, Leroy, pleaded guilty to the robbery and was sentenced to 20 years in prison. The murder charge against him was dropped.

Patricia McKee, Leroy McKee's estranged wife, took the stand for the prosecution and told the seven-man, five woman jury that on the night of the murder she was living with Leroy in an apartment at the Kingsway Inn Apartments, 3801 W. Wall St.

She told prosecutor David Rosado that four men, Elroy, Leroy, a "Jackie" and a "James" came into the apartment with blood on their clothes one night in June 1982. She said Elroy McKee had some jewelry in a paper bag similar to that worn by the victim.

"He pulled it out and he showed it to me," Ms. McKee testified. She said three of the men were laughing about the incident and she said that on at least three different occasions, Elroy McKee said "we killed the mother—."

She identified the defendant as one of the men in her apartment that night.

But under strenuous cross examination from defense counsel Allen McFall, Ms. McKee seemed addled. She told McFall she testified at Elroy McKee's trial in March and at Chambers' trial in August, but could not remember how many times she had spoken to investigators or how many statements she had signed.

McFall asked Ms. McKee about specific testimony she had given in both trials about the night of the murder, none of which mentioned the defendant. He cited at least a dozen examples from parts of her testimony back to her, and asked her if she remembered the testimony. She looked confused on the stand and took long pauses before answering.

Earlier, C.J. Havrda, a Texas Ranger who assisted the Midland County Sheriff's office in the investigation of the case, testified that Jackie Dorn became a suspect in the case following statements the McKee brothers gave to investigators in Aug. 1985.

Havrda said the case was never closed but was thoroughly re-investigated following Gary Painter's assumption of the sheriff's office in Jan. 1985.

WTSU may owe money for president's new home

AUSTIN (AP) — In 1984, the state College Coordinating Board authorized West Texas State University to spend $494,900 in taxpayers' money to build a home for its president.

But the Canyon school wound up spending $991,000 on the 7,301-square-foot house, and state officials may want some of the money back.

"This is a very large overrun. No question about it. When you come to double, that's a huge overrun," said Kenneth Ashworth, the state's higher education commissioner.

To make matters worse, in Ashworth's eyes, the WTSU board did not return to the coordinating board to seek permission to cover the overruns. Apparently, the board just spent the money, according to Ashworth.

Ashworth's staff has recommended that WTSU pay $211,000 back to the state. Under the recommendation, WTSU would get a break because the coordinating board staff said $185,700 in overruns came on house-related projects that did not need coordinating board approval.

The $211,000 represents the overrun that is above the 20 percent tolerance allowed by the coordinating board.

In July, WTSU Vice President Clarence Thompson said his misunderstanding and misinterpretation of coordinating board policies on overruns caused the problems.

"It there's an error in judgment, it is mine," he told the coordinating board in July.

The coordinating board staff recommendation was developed after WTSU officials discussed the house with the board in July.

Ashworth said if the board approves the recommendation, WTSU would have to use privately raised money to reimburse the state. A coordinating board committee will review the recommendation Thursday, and the board is scheduled to rule Friday.

The money for the home came from funds left over from the now-defunct state property tax, money that can only be used for construction. WTSU had not had a president's home since 1972, when the previous one was sold for $8,000.

Ed Roach, president of the Canyon school, and his family moved into the new home this past summer. The president's wife says the house is very nice.

"I think when people see the home, they will think it is pleasant, but not extravagant. We tried to use simple things that will last," Darlene Roach said last August.

Roach recently told the Amarillo Globe-News, which began reporting on the overruns last year, that he did now know how WTSU would raise the $211,000 if the coordinating board orders the reimbursement.

"It's all very indefinite right now," he said.

On Tuesday, he was reluctant to answer any questions about the house and its cost.

"At this point I'm planning to go to the meetings Thursday and Friday. The staff has made a recommendation, and the board will pass on that recommendation. It's premature to speculate on the result," he said.

Ashworth said T. Boone Pickens of Amarillo, chairman of WTSU regents, has made a commitment that "if they are out of step with the state, they are going to get in step with the state."

Pickens was unavailable for comment Tuesday at his Amarillo office.

Ashworth said WTSU might not have won approval for the full amount of overruns even if school officials had complied with coordinating board rules and sought approval.

"I don't think there was bad faith involved. There was bad judgment involved," he said.

"Presidents' homes are always a problem," Ashworth said. "Presidents' homes are misunderstood. In most presidents' homes, it's like living above the store. The president lives upstairs with his family and the downstairs is used for parties for fund-raising" and other school-related functions.

"We've approved a large number of them. Frankly, they turn out to be very costly," Ashworth said.

Midland County sheriff's officers seize 50 pounds of marijuana worth $64,000

From Staff Reports

Midland County sheriff's officers armed with a warrant Tuesday raided a local residence and confiscated 50 pounds of marijuana valued at $64,000. One person, a 15-year-old juvenile, was taken into custody.

Sheriff Gary Painter said at about 3:10 p.m. five officers raided the house located north of County Road 132 east on the Rankin Highway. Painter said the juvenile was alone in the house at the time.

"We're looking for two more suspects, and expect more arrests soon," Painter said. "One we're looking for is a pretty big dealer of the stuff."

Painter said the raid culminated a three week investigation. He said the marijuana was found in a bedroom in three plastic trash bags. Two were filled with bulk quantities and the other contained smaller bags filled with the marijuana.

Police Roundup

In other reports, Midland police are investigating two auto burglaries.

According to reports, a .25 caliber automatic pistol valued at $150 and a radar detector valued at $75 were stolen from a vehicle in the 4300 block of Tanner Drive. The items were taken Tuesday between 2:30 p.m. and 5:40 p.m., reports said.

A cable box valued at $250 was reported stolen from a vehicle in the 400 block of Neely Avenue, police said. The complainant, Michael White, told officers the burglary occurred Tuesday between 6:30 p.m. and 8 p.m.

Japanese company executives tour oil industry-related plants

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Three representatives of the Sumitomo Corp. of America, a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Japanese Sumitomo Corp., spent the day touring seven primarily oil industry-related plants.

Sumitomo is the largest trading company in Japan and it has fully owned subsidiary companies throughout the free world and has offices or liaison representatives in many Iron Curtain countries as well as emerging countries.

Following Tuesday's tour, the three representatives held a news conference at Mission Country Club prior to having dinner with area business and Odessa chamber representatives.

According to Naoki (Neil) Azuma, tubular products manager of the Dallas Sumitomo office, the purpose of the visit to Odessa was to explore potential business opportunities.

The group, in addition to Azuma, included Toshinori (Ted) Nakanishi, Houston-based manager of specialty tubular products, and K. (Ken) Nishimura, vice president and manager for machinery and electrical development and the project development department.

Azuma said the group accumulated a great deal of information which will be correlated and evaluated to determine if business opportunities exist in the area for Sumitomo Corp.

Sumitomo Corp., according to Azuma, while considered a general trading company, is much more than that. The company buys and sells a tremendous variety of commodities, raw materials and manufactured products throughout the world.

However, a look at a chart of companies loosely gathered under the Sumitomo umbrella reveals it would be much simpler to itemize economic and business areas Sumitomo is not involved in.

Azuma said it would be reasonably accurate to describe Sumitomo as a "middle man," one who seeks out opportunities, or creates opportunities, to buy and sell.

He explained that Sumitomo is not, in the traditional American sense, a congolmerate, that Sumitomo as a holding company was liquidated after World War II so that each company involved became an independently managed and operated company.

An extensive brochure explaining Sumitomo notes that "spinoffs from the holding company also resulted in new lines of business — trading, real estate, construction, architecture and engineering."

Known informally as the Sumitomo Group, the group is a loose affiliation of 21 major companies as the core that embraces hundreds of organizations.

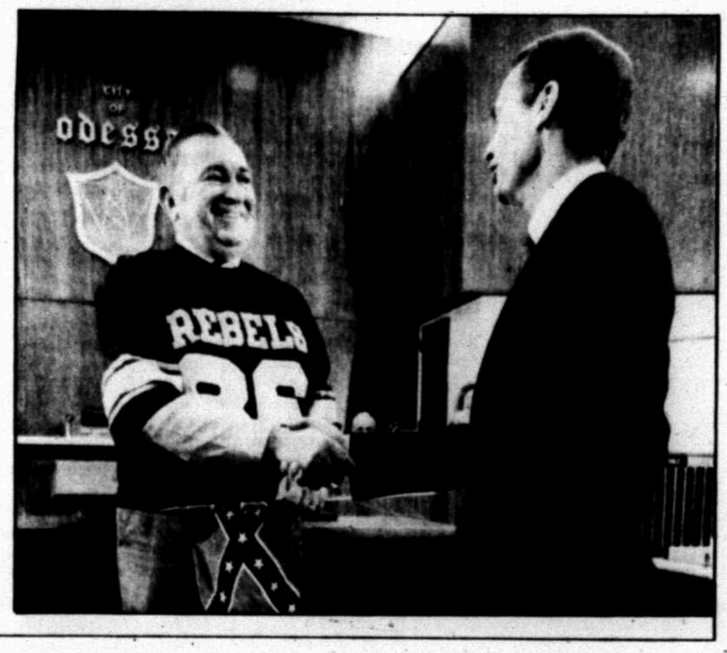

According to the brochure, "activities cover a business spectrum of production, distribution and finance in nearly every economic sector, serving industries and consumers throughout the world."

The history of Sumitomo reaches back some 350 years and is steeped in a tradition that has since its inception embraced the belief "that business must be based first and foremost on principles of integrity and sound management and not merely on the pursuit of profit for its own sake."

Lamar Smith wins endorsement from Ernest Angelo

From Staff Reports

Republican congressional hopeful Lamar Smith has won an endorsement from former Midland mayor Ernest Angelo Jr.

"For eight years, I had the honor of serving as mayor of Midland. I learned the importance for Midland of strong leadership in Congress," Angelo said Tuesday.

"On November 4th, I am voting for Lamar Smith to continue that leadership as our next congressman. Lamar is a committed, conservative Republican."

Smith, 38, said he is very pleased and the endorsement means a great deal to him.

"I will have to say that thanks to such good friends as Ernest Angelo, Jr., and (another) former mayor Thane Akins, I expect to carry Midland County on November 4th."

Arrest of Austin 'Door-Kicker' may solve residential burglaries

AUSTIN (AP) — The arrest of a 44-year-old parolee accused of being the "northwest Austin Door-Kicker" could solve as many as 100 residential burglary cases, police say.

Jerome D. Chaney of Georgetown was jailed Tuesday on two burglary charges and a court order revoking his bail on a third burglary charge filed in July, for which he never appeared in court, police said.

He is accused of stealing jewelry, firearms, appliances and other items after forcing — sometimes kicking — windows and doors open, said police spokesman C.F. Adams.

"It looks like over 100" cases, Adams said. "But to be able to clear them, with fingerprints and all, it looks like about 50."

Chaney was charged Thursday in an Oct. 23 break-in, and at about 10:30 a.m. Tuesday, officers arrested Chaney in Austin.

Ms. Harris said her request is an extension of a move three years ago to change Indiana Avenue into Martin Luther King Drive.

However, that request failed after protests from residents living on west Indiana Avenue, she said.

About 79 businesses line Front Street and it would cost about $45 each to replace and reprint the 41 street signs, Ms. Harris said.

Candidates' spending heavy for last-minute TV ads

STATE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Final-hour spending on television advertising is heavy in hotly contested Texas congressional races.

U.S. Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis, spent more than a fifth of his entire campaign fund on advertising during the first half of October, for commercials to be shown during the final days preceding the election.

Barton is one of a "six-pack" of freshman GOP congressmen who rode the tidal wave of support for President Reagan in the 1984 election. This year, facing a stiff challenge from Democrat Pete Geren, a former state director for Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, Barton spent more than $106,000 for those ads.

"I'll tell you, $100,000 doesn't buy you much television time in the Dallas market," Barton aide Cathy Hay said Tuesday.

Geren spent $72,555 during the same period in his challenge in the 6th District, which includes 14 counties and stretches from Fort Worth to Houston.

Records at the Federal Election Commission for the first two weeks of October — which is the final reporting period before the election — show campaign contributions for Geren equaled $61,241 while Barton took in $60,890. Overall contribution totals were $278,564 for Geren and $498,928 for Barton.

Also hearing the footsteps of a contender is Mac Sweeney, R-Wharton, who received some adverse attention when congressional staffers alleged he insisted they work on his re-election campaign. Sweeney faces Greg Laughlin in the Nov. 4 election.

During the early October reporting period, Sweeney took in $43,530 in campaign contributions to increase his overall total to $313,516. Laughlin received $22,570 for a total of $156,859 for the race.

A source of major contributions to Sweeney's campaign fund has been political action committees, known as PACs, each espousing its own views for a particular special interest.

Sweeney took in $13,518 in PAC money during early October for a total of $133,769 compared with Laughlin's $7,500 in October PAC money for a total of $49,800.

Among Democrats facing serious contenders are John Bryant of Dallas, who confronts Mesquite attorney Tom Carter in east Dallas' 5th congressional district.

The two contenders raised about the same amount of money in early October, with Bryant taking in $27,898 to Carter's $27,149. Overall, Bryant has collected nearly twice as much with $562,944 compared with $283,507. Much of Bryant's campaign chest comes from PACs.

Bryant outspent his opponent in October by an enormous margin, paying out $123,933 to Carter's $18,363.

Rep. Jake Pickle of Austin, first elected in 1963, is being challenged by former three-term Austin mayor Carole Keeton Rylander, who switched to the GOP to run against him.

Ms. Rylander's early October filing with the FEC had not arrived in Washington by Tuesday, but earlier records show her campaign collected $68,593 during the period from the Texas primary elections through September, compared to Pickle's effort of $308,613.

The veteran outspent his opponent during the same period by $528,031 to $75,904. Pickle, who did get his October filing in by the Oct. 23 deadline, showed an additional $115,300 collected in the first two weeks of the month and expenditures of $104,289.

Of Pickle's $957,465 in total campaign contributions, $362,668 came from PACs.

The final hotly contested race pits incumbent Ron Coleman of El Paso against accountant Roy Gillia. Coleman's early October filing didn't reach the House by Oct. 23. Gillia's showed he had garnered $30,605 during the first two weeks of the month and spent $30,267.

The filing also showed that Gillia took out $15,850 in personal loans to contribute to his election campaign.

White, Clements campaign staffs cleared in bugging

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Gov. Bill Clements says "somebody misbehaved," but a U.S. Attorney says it apparently wasn't anybody with either Clements' or Gov. Mark White's campaign staff.

"Right at this time we have no reason to believe that one of Mark White's or Bill Clements' campaign staff was involved in the bugging of former Gov. Clements' campaign headquarters," Helen Eversburg, U.S. attorney said Tuesday in San Antonio.

"But the investigation is continuing," she added. "That is all I can say right now."

Clements, meanwhile, said that, "Somebody has misbehaved. I haven't the slightest idea who it was and I know nothing about the details."

Asked if he would seek prosecution, he said, "I don't think it makes any difference what I suggest. They have violated federal laws and a federal grand jury will take whatever action they deem appropriate. I don't have anything to do with it one way or another."

And White would say only that "I know our campaign wasn't involved in it."

FBI officials have said they are concentrating their investigation on the private security company hired to sweep the offices of Clements chief consultant Karl Rove.

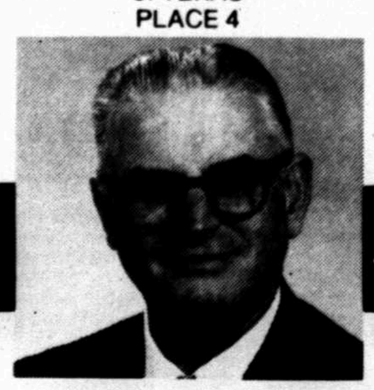

The FBI has subpoenaed the company records of Knight Diversified Services Co., which found the device behind an embroidered wall hanging in Rove's Austin office.

Stumping for Clements, Staubach finds fans haven't forgotten him

ABILENE (AP) — He repeatedly was introduced as "the man who needs no introduction." Roger Staubach, the former star quarterback for the Dallas Cowboys, flashes that all-American smile, shakes hands and signs autographs.

He is busy with his real estate company and family and enjoys the privacy away from the football field. Staubach has not played since 1979, but on Tuesday, he was besieged by fans while he campaigned for Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements.

Staubach did not get involved in politics during the 1970s when he led the Cowboys to two Super Bowls. In 1980, however, he sparked speculation of a political career when he campaigned for Ronald Reagan.

On Tuesday, during campaign stops through North Texas with Clements, Staubach said he was too busy to think about a political career for himself.

"I am not running for anything. My intentions are not to run for anything," Staubach said.

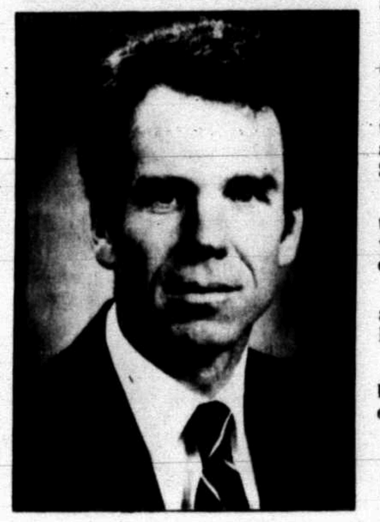

Staubach, who introduced Clements at most of the rallies, said politics and football are similar in that they're both very competitive.

"You just have to keep battling," Staubach said of both arenas. "It's a very thrilling experience to be in a campaign...but then you make decisions that a lot of people don't like. You just can't please everybody. I think that's the hardest part about politics."

Staubach, whose hair is beginning to gray, still looks like an athlete. He is trim. He still lifts weights and rides a bicycle.

He still wears a Super Bowl ring above his wedding band. His crooked left pinkie is still a reminder of the grueling days in the National Football League.

During campaign stops with Clements, fans asked Staubach to sign autographs and posed with him for photographs.

Roger Staubach

Fort Worth oilman Eddie Chiles introduced Staubach as "the man who needs no introduction" and then told about Staubach's accomplishments on the football field.

Staubach talked about his playing days and joked that he thought he could make a comeback because of the addition of running back Herschel Walker.

The former governor said Staubach would help his campaign.

"I think Roger has a great deal of respect from an awful lot of people from Texas and elsewhere," Clements said. "They respect him as a person and as an athlete and for his traditional values."

Clements even suggested that Staubach would be a good chief executive officer of the state.

"He'd make a great governor of Texas," Clements said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Three Fort Worth residents killed in head-on collision

MARLIN (AP) — Two men and a woman, all of Fort Worth, were killed in a head-on collision about 8:45 p.m. Tuesday 14 miles south of Marlin on Highway 6, officials said.

Robert Mabry, no age available, and his wife, Portis Mabry, 62, were in a light-colored Ford that collided with a pickup truck driven by Christopher Dickson, 24, Trooper Don Adams of the Department of Public Safety said.

The DPS had not been able to determine which car was going in which direction or in which lane the collision occurred.

The three were pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace E.R. Hardy shortly after 9 p.m.

The Maybrys were wearing seat belts but Dickson as not, DPS Trooper Tim Kelm said.

Man decapitated by train

WACO (AP) — Authorities said a 32-year-old man decapitated in a railroad yard Tuesday may have been intoxicated when he was struck by the train's engine and dragged beneath the locomotive.

Identification was found attached to the man's belt, but authorities had not confirmed his identity.

Justice of the Peace David Pareya of West said a pale filled with rags and window cleaner found near the train indicated the man was a transient who did cleaning chores to earn extra dollars.

"We're not sure if the man was put on the track or if he was asleep there," Pareya said.

The accident occurred at 1:45 a.m. as the train was passing through the Missouri-Kansas-Texas Railroad Co. yard in Belmead, north of Waco.

Executive sentenced

HOUSTON (AP) — An oil company executive will serve five years in prison for violating a court-approved federal order by operating an investment scheme that prosecutors said defrauded investors and contractors by as much as $8 million.

U.S. District Judge Ross N. Sterling also ordered Gary Corn, 52, vice president of the Houston-based Beard Energy Co., on Tuesday to repay the losses once the total amount is determined. Sterling asked investors and contractors to submit records of their dealings with Corn.

The judge sentenced the executive for contempt of court after ruling Corn disobeyed a 1977 agreement with the Securities and Exchange Commission in which the executive agreed not to mislead investors or sell unregistered securities. The contempt citation stemmed from Corn's sale of oil and gas partnerships and joint ventures.

Prosecutor Evan Spangler said the scheme involved as much as $8 million and 140 investors nationwide.

Franklin Beard, an officer of Beard Energy, has pleaded guilty to two counts each of securities and mail fraud. He is awaiting sentencing Nov. 5.

Rancher charged with theft

CAMERON (AP) — A Bosque County rancher knew his horse buyback plan was in trouble at the time he sold 1,000 horses in January 1984, a witness testified Tuesday.

Falls County rancher Louis Corpora said he believes Roland Jones Jr. intended to defraud him when Jones sold him the horses at $390 a head.

Under terms of a contract, Horses Unlimited, Inc., was to repurchase the horses 30 days later at the original price, plus 45 cents per horse per day, Corpora said. Horses Unlimited also was to supply feed and personnel to care for the animals, he testified.

Priests say church should encourage Hispanic culture

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Catholic Church should recognize Hispanics' leadership abilities and encourage their culture in worship to ease the shortage of Hispanic priests, two leaders of a national Hispanic priests convention say.

"The church has to answer the question, 'Do we want to have Hispanics in the church or don't we?'" said Father Albert Vazquez, vice president of the National Convention of Hispanic Priests. "We have to take care of these people for them to stay in the church."

Convention president Father Saturnino Lajo said Tuesday that Hispanics are being accommodated more easily in the mainstream of the church, but that more leadership slots could be filled by that ethnic group.

"We are able to be leaders of our people," Lajo said. "In some areas, Hispanics are still not recognized as real leaders, but only as helpers."

The two priests were attending the first day of the national convention, the second annual gathering of the nation's Catholic Hispanic priests.

Vazquez said that in 1980, Hispanics made up 30 percent of the nation's 50 million Catholics, but of the 48,000 priests, only 2 percent were Spanish-speaking.

He said the situation could worsen as Hispanics are expected to make up 50 percent of the nation's Catholics by the year 2000.

"The Hispanic priest is going to be at a premium," said Vazquez, vice president of the Mexican American Cultural Center.

Vazquez noted that progress is being made in integrating Hispanics into the church, with many seminaries requiring courses in Hispanic culture and with the number of Hispanic bishops now at 17.

Legislature needs to protect morale of colleges, school president says

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Legislature must renew its support of Texas' 49 public junior and community colleges to protect the "fragile as a bubble" morale of faculty and students, a Texas Public Community Junior College Association official said Tuesday.

Speaking to budget examiners from the Legislative Budget Board and the governor's office, E.W. Mince, president-elect of the association, said the state's share of junior college educational expenses has dropped from its long-standing 65 percent to about 57 percent.

"This 8-percent shift...represents a transfer of some $60 to $70 million in taxes and tuition to local taxpayers who already provide more than 200 million tax dollars over and above the regular taxes they pay to support the rest of the state's higher education system," Mince, president of Weatherford College, said. Over the past five years, he said, local junior college taxes have doubled while state appropriations have increased just 25 percent.

Mince spoke on behalf of the 49 public junior and community colleges, such as Midland College and Odessa College. The budget examiners who listened to his remarks will make their recommendations to the LBB and the governor, who in turn will issue proposed 1988-1989 budgets to the Legislature in January. Early estimates show lawmakers will face a shortfall of $5 billion to $7 billion if they wish to maintain current state services.

Mince said the junior colleges have increased local taxes and tuition and done their part to shave expenses.

"The colleges have made up the lost state funds in ways you are all too familiar with — hiring freezes and cutbacks, program eliminations, restricted travel; but these measures have not produced enough savings," he said. "The big items have been postponed repairs and upkeep, denied capital items, warmer and cooler buildings, and yes, several have involuntarily shared with state employees the experience of giving up long-awaited raises."

Mince called on the lawmakers to finance junior college programs completely using the formulas recommended by the Coordinating Board for Public Community Junior Colleges. Those formulas distribute state funds to each school based on the number of contact hours the schools' students have in the various courses offered. The proposed fiscal 1988 rates range from $12.21 per hour for career pilot programs to $2.97 per hour for cosmetology.

The colleges, he said, "are fragile as a bubble in one area: the morale and commitment of their faculty and students.

"Grass can go unmowed, paint may peel and parking lots may be standing in water. If faculty and students are enlivened, challenged and hopeful, the college can still be effective. The bottom-line reason we seek and need your support to get our funding up to full formula levels is that a college marches on its faculty's enthusiasm, commitment and creativity, and these resources cannot be long maintained without adequate resources."

Schools report lower failure rate

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Almost every school district in Bexar County is reporting lower failure rates this year, and high schools with the poorest performance in the past are achieving the greatest gains, officials say.

In the San Antonio School District, 40 percent of the 2,407 students failed one or more classes, an improvement of 12 percent since last fall, figures show.

"Everyone made a concerted effort — teachers, students and staff," Jefferson High School Principal Rode Gonzales said.

Scores from the first grading period of the year demonstrate the greatest achievement was reported by schools with the worst showing last fall. Schools with past failure rates above the 50 percent mark were able to drop below that level.

Only Memorial High School in the Edgewood School District with a 55 percent failure rate recorded more than half its students receiving at least one failing grade. School officials were not able to supply comparable figures from last fall.

Phone bills reveal private calls made from El Salvador

WASHINGTON (AP) — The office of a White House staff member overseeing U.S. support for Nicaraguan Contra rebels received telephone calls last month from a safe house in El Salvador used by Americans handling supply flights for the rebels, Salvadoran phone bills show.

During September, calls were made to two private lines used by Marine Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, a staff officer on President Reagan's National Security Council. Both lines were answered Tuesday by a tape-recorded message saying "you have reached a non-working number for the executive office of the president."

According to rebel and administration sources, North has been the chief White House contact with the Contra aid network over the past two years. From October 1984 until this month, U.S. government military assistance to the Contras would have been illegal, although two weeks ago, Congress approved resumption of direct U.S. military aid to the rebels.

An administration official, authorized to speak on the matter but only on condition of anonymity, said, "To his knowledge, Colonel North has never received any phone calls from the safe houses." But another source close to North said he would not necessarily know where calls were coming from.

Another source close to the Contra aid network said the bills could have been concocted by Nicaraguan intelligence agents. But two Associated Press reporters who have examined the documents said they appeared to be genuine bills from Antel, the Salvadoran government's telephone company.

The bills also showed calls to Stanford Technology Trading Corp. in the Virginia suburbs of Washington. Stanford is a company headed by retired Army Maj. Gen. Richard Secord, a former assistant deputy secretary of defense, who has been named in news accounts as helping arrange aid for the Contras from Saudi Arabia.

Secord has acknowledged giving the Contras advice, but "has steadfastly denied that he is a conduit or a middleman for Saudi Arabian aid," his lawyer, Tom Green, said.

Another number listed on the bills belonged to Southern Air Transport Inc. of Miami, a one-time CIA-owned company which had employed one of two American pilots killed when a C-123 cargo plane was shot down over southern Nicaragua on Oct. 5.

A third American, Eugene Hasenfus, was captured and said the air supply operation, which included dropping weapons and ammunition to Contra forces inside Nicaragua, was directed by two Cuban-Americans who worked for the CIA. The CIA, the Reagan administration and Southern Air have denied responsibility for the supply operation.

The AP has reported previously that the White House, through outside intermediaries, managed the aid network that was established in 1984 to keep the Contras supplied, using funds from private individuals and third countries. Sources from inside the administration, the Contra movement and the private aid network identified North as the central figure in the secret White House operation.

Other documents captured by the Nicaraguan military from the downed C-123 also linked the U.S. government to the plane's occupants.

Business cards were found belonging to P.J. Buechler, an official in the State Department's Nicaraguan humanitarian assistance office, and Robert W. Owen, a consultant to the office and a conservative activist whom sources identified as an intermediary between North and the Contras.

U.S. government sources said one of the pilots killed on the plane, Wallace B. Sawyer Jr. of Magnolia, Ark., had flown two flights for the State Department office that was responsible for distributing $27 million in non-lethal aid to the rebels. The sources said those two flights occurred Jan. 17 from Miami and Feb. 19 from New Orleans.

According to Sawyer's personal flight log, those flights were aboard planes registered or leased to Southern Air. Since 1983, Southern Air also emerged as a leading company flying logistical supplies for the Defense Department.

North replaces South as most segregated

DETROIT (AP) — The North has replaced the South as the nation's most segregated region, according to a researcher who says the "chocolate city-vanilla suburb" trends of the 1970s are unlikely to change.

Detroit and Chicago are the nation's most segregated cities in terms of housing for blacks and whites, followed by New York and Los Angeles, University of Michigan sociologist Reynolds Farley said Tuesday.

Washington, D.C., is the most successful in integrating neighborhoods, said Farley, who has spent three years analyzing 1980 U.S. Census Bureau statistics.

In addition, he said in a telephone interview from Ann Arbor, despite gains in education and economic status black-white segregation is typically nearly two times greater than that involving Hispanics or Asians.

Farley said he had little hope that most cities will become more integrated in the near future.

"With regard to residential segregation, the traditional patterns of racial isolation seem unchanged," he said. "A continuation of the trends of the 1970s offers no hope that the chocolate city-vanilla suburb pattern will be changing anytime soon."

Segregated neighborhoods are most common in cities with slow population growth, especially those established before the Fair Housing Act of 1968, which made it illegal for real estate agents to discriminate on the basis of ethnic origin, Farley said.

"In 1940 and 1950, segregation levels were much higher in the South, but that's not the case anymore," he said. "Higher segregation levels are in the northern cities. The differences are not fabulous, but that's the case."

He attributed the shift to growing populations in the Sun Belt, as well as forced integration in schools.

Farley devised an index in which zero represents complete integration and 100 complete segregation.

Detroit ranked 88 for blacks, 45 for Hispanics and 48 for Asians. Chicago was 88 for blacks, 64 for Hispanics and 46 for Asians.

New York rated 81 for blacks, 65 for Hispanics and 49 for Asians, and Los Angeles was 81 for blacks, 57 for Hispanics and 47 for Asians.

Washington was 70 for blacks, 32 for Hispanics and 31 for Asians.

Farley said the study did not investigate how or why segregation patterns developed, but other studies he conducted in the Detroit area did.

"It is quite clear that many whites assume that when blacks move into a neighborhood, it will become a completely black neighborhood, the value of the property will go down, and crime will go up," he said.

"And many blacks are reluctant to be the first blacks to move into a white neighborhood."

But, he said, segregation extends beyond housing, reaching shopping centers, parks, hospitals, restaurants, transit lines and especially schools.

Integration of schools, now common in small and medium-size cities nationwide, has been rare in larger cities, where public schools enroll few whites but many blacks and Hispanics, he said.

Among the nation's 25 largest central-city school districts only Columbus, Ohio, Indianapolis and San Diego had a majority white enrollment in 1980, he said. "Within these metropolises, white students are in the suburban ring or attend private or parochial schools."

Reagan works to increase bond with young voters

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — President Reagan had just thanked the La-Grange High School band up in the right balcony for its fine music when he was interrupted by several girls yelling, "We love you" in high-pitched unison.

"I love all of you, believe me," the president replied soothingly.

It was one of few ad libbed comments in what otherwise was a Tuesday of carefully scripted campaigning — from his well-honed jokes to the impeccably timed release of hundreds of red, white and blue balloons at the end of each speech.

But it fit well with a key, if little-noted, element of Reagan's campaigning as he bids to preserve the current GOP Senate majority: His effort to strengthen a bond with young people.

Spokesman Larry Speakes said the president, at 75 the nation's oldest president, makes his appeal because young voters have a strong identification with Reagan.

"We actually noticed it in 1982 and 1983 before we started polling on it," Speakes said.

But Speakes said the identification is more with Reagan personally than with the Republican Party, and that voter turnout in that group is historically low. Thus, Reagan weaves into his campaign speech several remarks designed to strengthen the bonds.

At times, his remarks are grandfatherly, as in his response to the girls in the high school band.

At times they take a different tone, as when he begins his speeches with a warning.

"I have a special message to all of you from my roommate," he said in identical words from Georgia to Alabama to North Carolina on Tuesday. That reference to first lady Nancy Reagan always gets a chuckle, and assures attention for what Reagan says next.

"When it comes to drugs, please, for yourselves, for your families, for your future and your country, just say no," the president implored.

At times, Reagan's message to young voters is overtly political.

"Every poll shows the age group 18 to 24 gives us our strongest support," he said in campaigning for Georgia Sen. Mack Mattingly. "But every poll shows just as clearly that it's the same aged group, 18 to 24, that has the lowest voter turnout.

"So to young people here: Exercise your sacred right as an American — participate in shaping history itself by going to the polls and casting your vote."

Reagan does not mention his own age when he makes this appeal.

In fact, the only reference to his years provided the only out-of-context moment of the entire day. And that came on a comment by Mattingly.

Recalling the 1980 presidential campaign waged by Reagan — who was only 69 then — Mattingly said a "young man traveled across the country" campaigning for lower tax rates.

FAA releases tape giving clues to Aeromexico crash

HAWTHORNE, Calif. (AP) — An American Airlines pilot passing 8,000 feet over a Los Angeles neighborhood gave controllers the first confirmation that an Aeromexico jet had gone down.

"I see a — uh — very large — uh — smokescreen off on the left side of (my) aircraft," the American pilot said. "It is a very large smoke — uh — column — uh — coming from it, and — uh — emanating from the ground.

"And at our altitude, at 8,000 feet, there's another smoke column vertically overhead. It looks like it, something smoked up ahead and then went down."

The Aeromexico DC-9 had crashed Aug. 31 after colliding with a private plane while approaching Los Angeles International Airport. The disaster in Cerritos, 20 miles southeast of downtown Los Angeles, killed 82 people, including all aboard both planes and at least 14 on the ground.

A tape released Tuesday by the Federal Aviation Administration showed the 35-year-old air traffic controller tried repeatedly to contact the Aeromexico plane and finally asked the American Airlines pilot to look for it.

The unidentified controller lost contact with the Aeromexico flight 3½ minutes before the conversation with the American Airlines pilot.

In that time, he repeated an order for a new heading eight times without receiving a response, the transcript showed.

Investigators say the controller was distracted by the pilot of a second small private plane that appeared in restricted airspace around the airport without permission and sought help from the Los Angeles tower.

The FAA is recommending a 180-day suspension of the license of the pilot of that plane but didn't blame the accident entirely on the distraction.

"I would say that it took part of his mental capacity at the time," the FAA's Jack McMillan said of the controller.

McMillan, who heads the quality-assurance staff of the FAA's Western region air traffic division, said the small plane that collided with the airliner appears in computer records from air-control radar.

Somebody always a winner morning after election day

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

An analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — No matter who ends up on the lists of winners and losers in next Tuesday's elections, leaders of both parties will stand up the next day and declare victory.

And, why not?

Remember November 1984? Not a time for Democrats to see much sunshine. President Reagan had just carried 49 states, getting particularly strong support from young voters and a healthy majority of the women's vote.

But Charles T. Manatt, then chairman of the Democratic Party, found the silver lining even in that election cloud: "We've gained in the Senate, kept our majority in the House and will never, ever have to face Ronald Reagan again."

This year, the contest by which people will judge which party won or lost, is control of the Senate. With the Republican margin in the Senate now 53 to 47, Democrats need a four-seat pickup to overturn that majority.

Sen. George Mitchell of Maine, chairman of the Democratic Senate Campaign committee, consistently predicts that in the next Congress the Senate will have a 53-47 Democratic majority.

His Republican counterpart, Sen. John Heinz of Pennsylvania, claims the GOP margin will remain about the same.

If the Republicans retain control, expect GOP leaders from Reagan to national committee chairman Frank J. Fahrenkopf Jr., to declare a rousing victory, a national mandate for continuation of the president's conservative policies and further proof the Republicans are on their way to being the majority party.

The comments also will be predictable if the Democrats regain the majority they lost in 1980. Party chairman Paul G. Kirk Jr., will proclaim the end of the Reagan era, the repudiation of the president's policies, and proof the Democrats are still the majority party.

But the outcome may not be that clear cut.

Expect the Democrats, for example, to claim victory if they gain Senate seats, but fall short of winning control.

If the lineup for the next Senate ends up 50 Republicans and 50 Democrats, with Vice President George Bush castiing the tie-breaking vote to keep the Republicans in control, it's easy to imagine Kirk claiming victory.

The Democratic chairman would point to the financial advantage held by most Republican candidates and to the campaigning done by Reagan. Despite that, he would claim, the Democrats picked up three seats...or two...or one...and cite that as proof the party retains strong support among the voters.

If the Republicans lose control of the Senate, Fahrenkopf can find some comfort in history. He'll point out that the midterm election in a president's second term normally is a disaster for the party in power.

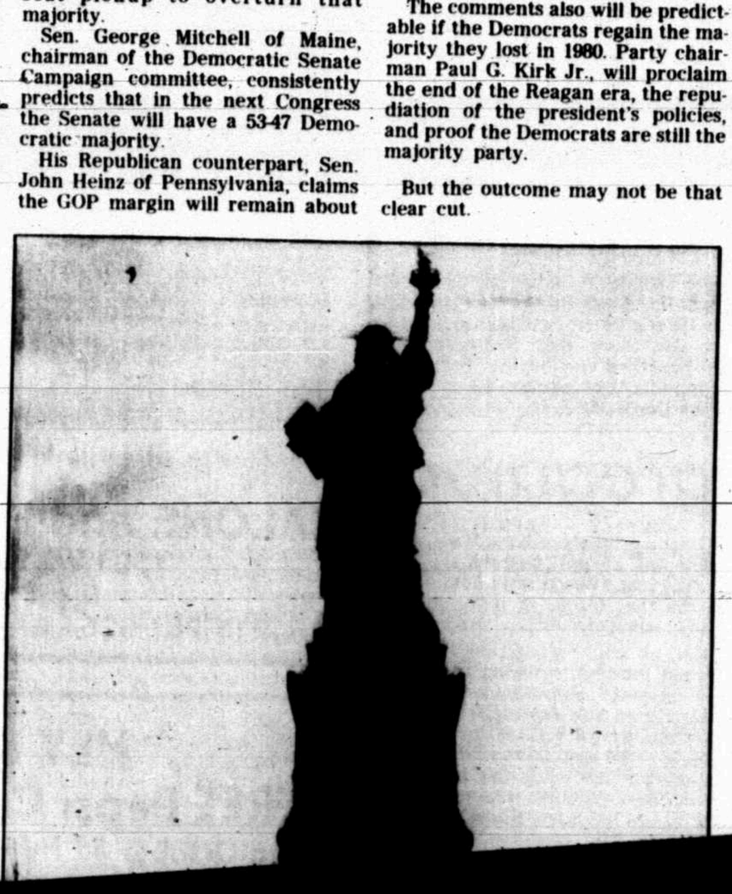

He will point out that the average sixth-year loss of Senate seats during the last 50 years was seven. So, any loss less than that would be a victory of sorts for the Republicans, right? Not necessarily. That average is boosted by the 13-seat loss the GOP suffered in 1958, when Dwight D. Eisenhower was president. Without that big year, the average sixth-year loss would be five Senate seats.

In House races, both parties are saying the Democrats probably will pick up about 10 seats, far below the average gain of 48 or so for the sixth-year midterm.

The important thing for party leaders who have to stand up the day after an election is to find something positive to day. And they certainly will.

An example of ingenuity might be the latest Election Update from the GOP Senate campaign committee. The pamphlet claimed that Asa Hutchinson, the Republican candidate challenging Democratic Sen. Dale Bumpers of Arkansas "is beginning to close the gap."

The poll cited to support that shows that Hutchinson, who was trailing Bumpers by 30 points in an August poll, has now cut the senator's lead to 25 points.

Statue of Liberty's 100th birthday celebration ends on somber note

By VERA HALLER

NEW YORK (AP) — The Statue of Liberty's centennial year ended with a somber rededication, the swearing in of 200 new Americans and a black-tie concert marking the Lady in the Harbor's real 100th birthday.

"It's hard to believe that our year of the Lady is over," Lee Iacocca, chairman of the Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation, said Tuesday. "To be honest, I'm still a little hung over from the Fourth of July."

Private industry workers' wages beat inflation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wage increases received by U.S. private industry workers in the past year are filling their wallets faster than inflation is eating away at their earnings, government figures show.

American workers have pocketed average raises in the past 12 months of 3.5 percent, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said Tuesday.

That figure represented a drop from the average 5 percent increases of a year earlier.

But it still left wage-earners ahead of inflation. Since June 1981, five months after President Reagan took office, workers in private industry have seen their pay checks rise 28.8 percent, BLS economists said. During that same time, consumer prices have risen only 21.7 percent.

White-collar workers fared better than their blue-collar colleagues when it came to winning improved salaries, the government said. White-collar employees received average 4.1 percent salary increases during the past year, while blue-collar workers saw average raises of 2.5 percent.

Both figures were not as high as they were a year earlier, when white-collar workers had received annual wage increases averaging 5.4 percent and blue-collar workers average raises of 4.3 percent, BLS said.

According to a survey of 4,200 businesses released earlier this month by the National Association of Manufacturers, times may be getting better for wage earners. The association found that employers anticipate wage increases averaging 5 percent over the next year.

Employers surveyed said they anticipate boosting the pay of their union production, maintenance and service employees by 3.6 percent over the next year. For non-union workers in the same job categories, the employers anticipate granting wage boosts of 4.9 percent.

Meanwhile, the government said that including increases in non-wage benefits, total employer costs for labor have risen 33 percent since June 1981, including a 1.1 percent increase over the summer and a total 3.6 percent jump during the past 12 months.

State and local government employees — led by teachers with annual pay hikes averaging 6.1 percent over the past 12 months — are getting increases nearly 60 percent larger than workers in private industry. Government pay raises averaged 5.2 percent over the past year, down from 6.0 percent the previous 12 months.

The average wage increase for workers in private industry in the two periods fell from 4.8 percent to 3.1 percent, the lowest since the BLS began calculating those figures in 1976.

Manufacturing wage increases fell from 4.4 percent to 3.2 percent, while workers in the private service-producing sectors of the economy saw their pay increases drop from 5.3 percent to 3.1 percent.

Non-union workers continued to outpace union members in wage gains — a trend that began in 1983 — but the gap narrowed significantly over the summer, according to the BLS figures.

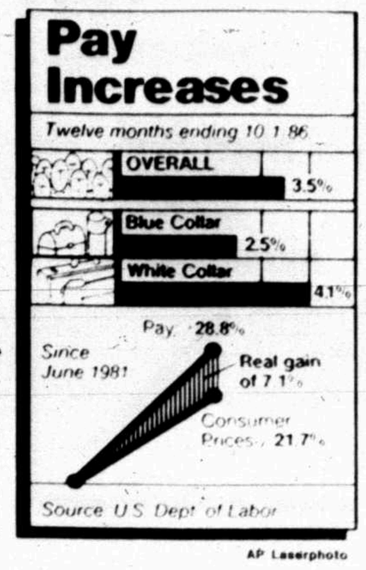

Wages for union members increased 0.6 percent over the three months ending Oct. 1, while rising 0.7 percent for non-union workers. Last spring, the increases for non-union workers were more than double those of union members.

For the 12 months ending Oct. 1, union wages rose an average 2.3 percent, compared with an average increase of 3.4 percent for non-union workers. Over the same period a year earlier, wages rose an average 3.6 percent for union members and 5.4 percent for non-union workers.

The BLS reported on Monday that the average first-year wage increase from all major union contracts signed so far in 1986 is only 1.3 percent.

But that figure includes large pay cuts taken by workers in the depressed steel industry and wage freezes in exchange for year-end lump-sum bonuses in about one-fourth of the contracts. About two-thirds of 1.8 million workers covered in the union agreements are getting average pay raises of 3 percent this year, the BLS said.

According to the latest available BLS figures, union members averaged about 30 percent higher wages in 1985 than non-union workers — $419 per week compared with $315 per week.

By region, the bureau said, the largest annual pay gains over the past 12 months have been in the Northeast, 4.3 percent, down from 5.2 percent a year earlier.

For other regions, the BLS reported average annual wage gains of:

— South, 3.2 percent, down from 4.9 percent.

— Midwest, 2.3 percent, down from 4.0 percent.

— West, 2.1 percent, down from 5.5 percent.

Government budget deficit up, reaching $220.7 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The budget deficit for the federal government reached $220.7 billion for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, an $8.8 billion increase over the previous year's deficit, the Reagan administration reported.

The government took in $769.1 billion in receipts and paid out $989.8 billion in expenditures, the Treasury Department and the White House Office of Management and Budget said in a joint report Tuesday.

That produced an $8.8 billion increase in federal red ink over the previous record deficit of $211.9 billion in fiscal year 1985.

There have now been deficits in 25 of the past 26 years, running up a total accumulated national debt of $2.2 trillion.

Servicing that debt cost U.S. taxpayer's $187.1 billion in fiscal 1986, another record and up from the $178.9 billion in interest payments in the previous year, the report said.

Law to protect investors

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new law should help protect investors from dishonest government securities brokers by setting up new standards and tighter controls, the White House said.

President Reagan, who signed the bill, said in a statement Tuesday the legislation establishes first-time requirements for registration, financial responsibility, customer protection, record-keeping and audits of brokers who deal solely in government securities.

In a separate announcement, the White House said Reagan also signed legislation which authorizes the construction of a memorial to Korean War veterans on federal land in Washington, D.C.

The president also signed a measure which authorizes the attorney general to contract with private law firms to collect debts owed to the United States, the White House said.

Oil cannot operate in free market: Schlesinger

DALLAS — The petroleum industry cannot compete in a free market, former Secretary of Energy, James Schlesinger told the Independent Petroleum Association of America, meeting here for its annual meeting.

The first Secretary of Energy in the Carter administration, the once bitter enemy of the oil industry told the gathering of oil men from around the nation that, while they had been attracted by the slogans of "free enterprise" and "free market" that was really not what they wanted or needed.

Said Schlesinger: "What you want is for government to establish a frame work in which you can carry out your business. You really don't want the rigors of an international free market." He said that sentiment was evident because of the organization's push for an import tax and recognization that a free market does not exist in the world oil market.

He warned the oilmen that when free enterprise economists talked about the [illegible] high cost producer in favor of the low cost producer, they were talking about the domestic oil industry. "U.S. production is mature, and you are the highest cost producers of oil in the world. There are no 130 billion barrel oil fields in the U.S., or wells with a daily flow of 50,000 barrels per day as in Saudi Arabia. They can produce oil for 50 cents a barrel, while it sometimes costs you $20 to produce a barrel."

Schlesinger said the U.S. oil industry was such a high cost producer, it simply could not withstand the rigors of a free market. He said the industry needed a device for keeping the excesses off the market and stabilizing prices whenever they occur.

The advisor to Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. and Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies reminded the petroleum group that that device was once the Texas Railroad Commission.

James Schlesinger

He said that historically there had always been a mechanism in the oil industry to adjust supply and demand, because without such a mechanism the oil industry is helpless. He added that responsibility for adjusting supply and demand had now passed to OPEC, because they had replaced Texas as the low cost producer in the world.

Taking a dig at the oilmen, the Harvard graduate reminded them that they once loved OPEC policies when its objectives were to raise prices, but now that its objective was to squeeze out marginal and high cost producers to capture market share they did not like it. At the same time he told them that the oil industry had historically recognized that a free market approach was not the right approach for the oil industry.

[illegible] stood the problems of a free market then, and were not touching faith in free trade. In your statement you now recognize that there is no free trade in the oil market."

In a more sympathetic note, Schlesinger said it was absolutely vital that the U.S. change its policies to maintain a viable domestic oil and gas industry: "The U.S. is the counterweight to the Soviet Union in the free world, it cannot become energy dependent, and it cannot depend on the Middle East for its energy."

He told of a private conversation with Shiek Yamani, Saudi Arabia's oil minister, at Harvard. Yamani told Schlesinger: "It is a crime what you are doing to your oil industry. I don't speak about the reserves, which may be replaced at some point in the future, but about your service industry. You are destroying your service industry which [illegible]

Marshall Surratt pointed out that "We need to look at what we can do beyond the city limits. How are we serving the area? I think Midland could and should become more of a distribution center. What, for example, does Lamesa need that it's not getting from Lubbock?"

Other topics included the current difficulty in getting funding for new businesses, and how to work with the other organizations who are attempting to diversify the area economy. Dr. Duane Leach, president of UTPB, said the most important thing was to first establish a data base, and offered the university's resources.

The group agreed to meet Nov. 25 at 7 p.m. at the Falcon Room of the UTPB Student Center.

what their interests are. Do you want to depend on the Middle East for your oil? I can assure you that you do not want to be dependent on that part of the world."

Schlesinger drove Yamani's statement home by explaining that Reagan's recent raid on Libya might not have been possible if the U.S. was 60 percent dependent on crude oil instead of 30 percent. He said the range of U.S foreign policy options decreased in proportion to our degree of dependency on Middle East oil. He also added that the outcome of the Iran-Iraq war could put the Ayatolla in the political drivers seat both in OPEC and the Middle East. "Do we want to be dependent on the Ayatolla for our oil?"

He explained that every administration since Nixon had opted for an energy independence policy, until the present administration had opted for a free trade policy. He added that an energy crisis under the Reagan administration would be even more severe.

Schlesinger suggested that one possible solution to stabilizing oil prices and saving the domestic industry would be to cooperate with other nations to establish a minimum sales price for crude oil. He also proposed that prices could be stabilized through the tax code, perhaps by increasing depletion allowances. "I would be in favor of an import fee if prices could not be stabilized by the tax code," said Schlesinger. He discounted the possibility of near term production agreements between OPEC and non-OPEC producers, but added that Britain appears to have shifted its policy on the prospect of mutual production restraints. Other solutions offered to stabilize prices and reduce U.S. dependency include: the substitution of natural gas for gasoline and higher taxes on gasoline.

"Natural gas is indeed a substitute for gasoline in fuel shortages, and we should remember that the tax on gasoline in most European countries is a dollar and more on a gallon of gasoline. They have long recognized the priority of energy in their economy."

Mobil announces expansion of gas marketing group

HOUSTON (SWN) — Mobil Oil Corp. announced the expansion of its gas marketing organization and centralization of contract administration within its Natural Gas Unit based in Houston. The gas unit is being expanded from 40 to 70 employees.

W.L. Luthy, manager, North American Gas, said the size of the marketing group is being increased to take advantage of current market opportunities and a new regulatory climate which will enable producers to make more direct sales to end users. This will permit Mobil to develop a more diversified customer mix for the future. Mobil, the third largest gas producer in North America, has the capacity to produce 3.6 billion cubic feet of gas a day in the United States and Canada.

"Essentially, we're laying the groundwork for making Mobil more competitive in the gas marketplace of today, the 1990's and beyond," Luthy said. "Today's natural gas market is characterized by an oversupply of gas. The expanded organization will help us sell a greater volume at current market prices. More importantly, however, we will be better situated for the future when prices improve as supply and demand come into better balance."

By 1991 Mobil expects up to 20 percent of its natural gas sales to be made directly to end users and local distribution companies on terms which are more favorable to producers than wellhead sales to pipelines.

In addition to a larger sales group which includes a direct sales function, the new organization will encompass two new units: Transportation and Exchange, a group of gas transportation experts, and Gas Supply, which will work with Mobil's domestic affiliates in determining the volume of gas available for sale and in packaging multiple sources of supply.

Federal government reports record deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government amassed a record $220.7 billion deficit in the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30 despite enactment of major deficit-reduction legislation, the Reagan administration says.

The government took in $769.1 billion and spent $989.8 billion, the Treasury Department and the White House Office of Management and Budget said in a joint report Tuesday.

FDIC head sees continuing bank failures

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The number of U.S. bank failures in 1987 should not fall sharply from this year's near-record total, the chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. says.

L. William Seidman said in remarks prepared for a general session of the American Bankers Association annual convention Tuesday that the FDIC's problem bank list now totaled 1,456, and was continuing to grow.

So far this year, 117 banks have failed or needed federal assistance to stay afloat, compared with a record 120 for all of last year, and Seidman said he expected another 30 or more cases by the end of 1986.

Average pay increases fall to 3.5 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Average annual pay increases have fallen from 5 percent a year ago to 3.5 percent over the past 12 months, the government says.

White-collar workers had received annual wage increases averaging 5.4 percent and blue-collar workers average raises of 4.3 percent over the same period a year earlier.

Reagan signs bill designed to protect investors

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has signed a bill designed to protect investors from unscrupulous dealers in government securities.

Reagan, in a statement Tuesday, said the legislation establishes first-time requirements for registration, financial responsibility, customer protection, record-keeping and audits of brokers who deal solely in government securities.

The president also signed a measure which authorizes the attorney general to contract with private law firms to collect debts owed to the United States, the White House said.

PUMPKIN PARTY FOR A SCARY, MERRY HALLOWEEN

Give your ghouly ghosts, menacing pirates, scary witches, silly clowns, and pretty princesses an extra special "treat" this year—an at-home Halloween party. Children revel in the spellbinding fun of this type of Halloween get-together, and will soon realize that the REAL "thrills and chills" of Halloween can be had just as easily at home as they can be out trick or treating.

There's no mysterious secret to a fabulous, bewitching party. Use a child's imagination to conjure up images of his or her favorite Halloween scene such as a haunted house or vampire's cave. To make the scary setting decorate your party room with grimacing pumpkins, lots of orange and black candles, and party streamers. Hang bouncing, creepy, plastic spiders and sticky cobwebs (available at party shops) throughout the room. Then, light a fire and put on some spooky, entertaining music before young guests arrive. Make sure you're in your costume as you slowly open your squeaky door and watch wide-eyed, excited youths eagerly rush inside.

Festive Halloween refreshments add free-spirited fun to this hobgoblin's holiday. Start by serving easy-to-eat, no fuss, Halloween munchies for gobblin' goblins. The Great Pumpkin Owl Cookie, freckled with chocolate morsels, is big enough so that children can break off pieces bit by bit and happily munch away. The Sliced Pumpkin Cookie Bites are light, crunchy sweets that could easily become year-round favorites. Tasty, cinnamon-sugared Goblin's Doughnut Drops may inspire a round of Halloween games and ghost stories, with the help of a "volunteer".

Serve these scrumptious treats with refreshing apple cider or a chilled orange punch. To make colorful (and deliciously edible) candle holders for your table, cut cores from brilliant red or golden apples, about 1/2-inch deep, with a melon ball cutter or sharp knife, smoothing edges to fit candles. Wrap bases of candles with plastic film and insert into apples.

Turn the party into a finger-food meal with Jack O'Lantern Sandwiches. Cut buttered bread, bologna and sliced processed cheese with a large round cookie or doughnut cutter. Cut "faces" in cheese with a small sharp knife. Layer meat, or other favorite sandwich fillings, on bread rounds and top with cheese "faces".

When parents drop by to pick up their children, offer them some Halloween hospitality with a mouthwatering wedge of Famous Pumpkin Pie.

Each of these Halloween desserts features natural, solid pack canned pumpkin, an excellent source of Vitamin A and other valuable nutrients—making them wholesome as well as delicious Halloween and year-round "treats".

Lamb's popularity growing

By PAUL BENSEN
Copley News Service

In the last few years, lamb has been enjoying a resurgence of popularity in this country. Many of the restaurants featuring nouvelle cuisine offer a variety of lamb dishes, often arranged with an array of lightly steamed vegetables. Supermarkets across the country are carrying a wider selection of lamb than they did three or four years ago, and prices for most cuts of lamb have stayed the same or even dropped in many markets during that time.

For the after-work cook, lamb can be the centerpiece for many dramatic and delicious dinners that can be prepared in half an hour or less. Today's recipes include a variety of quick and easy lamb dishes.

One is a very simple preparation for lamb chops that I often use when time is really at a premium but I still want to serve a special dinner. With a rosemary-based marinade that can be whipped up from ingredients found in almost every kitchen, the chops can be on the table in 15 minutes or so.

Greek-Style Lamb Kebobs are another super-easy preparation. The delicious dipping sauce can be made a day or so ahead, and most butchers will be glad to cut the lamb into cubes for you, so preparation and cooking (not counting the made-ahead sauce) take only 10 minutes.

Lamb Diable is a beautiful and easy way to prepare racks of lamb, and the recipe includes several vegetables steamed in beer and some of the sauce used to cook the lamb.

Lamb with Saffron and Almonds takes a bit longer to prepare than the other dishes, but most of the time is simply allowing the lamb to cook in its gravy, so you can be doing other things while the lamb cooks.

GRILLED LAMB CHOPS WITH ROSEMARY MARINADE

8 loin lamb chops
MARINADE:
2 teaspoons dried rosemary, crumbled
2 cloves garlic, minced
½ cup olive oil
⅓ cup soy sauce
Juice of 1 lemon
¼ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
2 tablespoons Dijon mustard (optional)

Do-ahead steps: Make the marinade and allow lamb to marinate (all-day or even overnight is fine).

Mix all marinade ingredients together well and marinate lamb chops at least two hours (overnight is fine).

Broil lamb chops in the oven or over charcoal, until meat is pink at the center.

The marinade may also be used as basting sauce while the lamb is cooking.

Total preparation/cooking time — 15 to 20 minutes (not including marinating time). Serves 4.

GREEK-STYLE LAMB KEBOBS WITH DIPPING SAUCE

LAMB KEBOBS:
2 pounds lamb (leg and shoulder cuts are best), cut into bite-size cubes
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 tablespoon Greek Seasoning
SAUCE:
1 cup sour cream
1½ cup plain yogurt
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
1 small scallion, minced
1 small clove garlic, minced
1 teaspoon dill weed
1 teaspoon chopped fresh parsley
1 teaspoon Greek Seasoning

Mix all ingredients and refrigerate at least one hour before serving. Use a dipping sauce for grilled lamb kebobs.

Do-ahead step: Make and refrigerate the dipping sauce.

Place lamb chunks in large bowl and toss well with lemon juice, olive oil and Greek Seasoning. Place lamb chunks on skewers and cook three to five minutes over charcoal or broil in oven until lamb chunks are slightly pink in the center. Total preparation/cooking time: 15 minutes.

LAMB DIABLE

2 racks of lamb — 2 pounds each after trimming, seasoned with salt, pepper, garlic and rosemary to taste

Brown the lamb on both sides under broiler. Turn oven down to 375 to 400 derees and bake for 20 to 25 minutes for medium-rare lamb. Potatoes, if desired, should be added at the start of the baking time.

SAUCE
1 cup strong lamb or beef broth
1 cup dry white wine
1 tablespoon shallots, chopped
1 tablespon parsley, chopped
2 tablespoons Dijon mustard
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
1 tablespoon butter or lamb fat

Prepare sauce while vegetables are steaming.

Melt butter or lamb fat in a sucepan, add shallots and garlic, saute until shallots are limp, then add broth, wine and mustard. Mix well and bring nearly to a boil. Add salt, pepper and parsley. Thicken sauce by whisking in 1 tablespoon or more of roux (equal parts flour and butter, stirred together over low heat), until sauce is the consistency of cream sauce.

VEGETABLES

Serve vegetables steamed in beer — with some of the sauce if desired, or plain. The lamb also goes well with tomatoes broiled with Parmesan cheese and new potatoes roasted in the pan with the lamb. Good vegetables for steaming are: broccoli, cauliflower, artichoke hearts, white or green asparagus, baby carrots or green beans. Rack of Lamb Diable should be served with at least four vegetables, in a variety of colors.

Carve the lamb, pouring lamb juice in sauce and arrange on platter with vegetables. Pour sauce over meat (over vegetables also, if desired), and serve. Total preparation/cooking time: 35 to 40 minutes. Serves 4.

LAMB WITH SAFFRON AND ALMONDS

1 3- to 4-pound leg of lamb
½ teaspoon saffron strands
1 cup yogurt
4 tablespoons olive oil
1 stick cinnamon
6 whole cloves
5 cloves garlic, minced
1 large onion, chopped
2 teaspoons fresh ginger, grated
1½ teaspoons cumin, ground
2½ tablespoons ground almonds
3 tablespoons boiling water
2½ teaspoons salt
Freshly ground pepper to taste
1 tablespoon fresh mint, chopped (optional)
½ cup water

Bone leg of lamb. Trim off skin and most of fat and cut meat into cubes abot 1½ inches on a side. (Note: Many butchers will prepare the lamb cubes for you if you order ahead.)

Soak the saffron in the 3 tablespoons boiling water until soft (eight to 10 minutes). Allow to cool, and with saffron still in the water, roll strands between your fingertips, using quite a bit of pressure to release saffron's color and fragrance into the water.

In large bowl, add the yogurt, saffron and salt and mix well. Add lamb cubes, stirring to be sure that the cubes are evenly covered with yogurt mixture. Cover and allow to stand while you prepare rest of the ingredients.

In a heavy saucepan with a tight-fitting cover, heat oil until very hot. Add cinnamon and cloves and fry for one minute. Add onion, ginger and garlic, reducing heat slightly and continue to cook for several minutes, until onion is soft and nicely browned. Do not allow onion to burn or harden. Add the cumin and stir in well for about one minute.

Remove lamb from marinade and add to pan, six or eight pieces at a time. Press all sides of the lamb chunks against the bottom of the saucepan, so that they brown a bit. Add the marinade and ground almonds. Stir the ½ cup water into marinade bowl to remove any remaining marinade, and pour into saucepan. Add pepper to taste. Stir, cover and reduce heat to low.

Cook, stirring occasionally, for one hour, or until lamb is tender and cooked through, and gravy somewhat thickened. Care should be taken that as the gravy thickens it does not stick to bottom of saucepan. The mint, if used, should be sprinkled into the saucepan about five minutes before the end of the cooking time. Serve with rice. Total preparation/cooking time: One hour, 10 minutes. Serves 6 to 8.

DEAR ABBY

Friend reveals he has AIDS

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I went to visit a good friend who said he had leukemia. After I got there and spent an hour or so talking to him, he broke down and told me that he had AIDS! Do you think that was fair? Don't you think he should have told me he had AIDS before I went to visit him so I could decide whether I wanted to go or not?

Even though we don't know where it comes from or how contagious it is, they say, "Be cautious." There is a lot of confusion about this disease so I hope you answer this in your column. If you do, please don't mention my name. — NO NAME IN NEW YORK

DEAR NO NAME: There is no conclusive evidence that AIDS can be transmitted any way other than through: (1) Sharing a contaminated needle with an infected person. (2) Intimate sexual contact. (3) Being born of a parent with AIDS. (The risk of getting AIDS from a blood transfusion is no longer a threat since all blood is tested for the AIDS virus before it is used in a transfusion.)

People with AIDS should tell prospective visitors the truth about their illness, even though it's not possible for a casual visitor to contract it.

DEAR ABBY: I am enclosing an article from your column that made a big difference in my life. I have carried it in my wallet for years and it helped me so much. I'm sure you can help many more if you run it again. — ST. PETERSBURG FAN

DEAR FAN: You get your wish. Here it is:

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of a wealthy widow who picks up the tab for an escort 20 years her junior who couldn't possibly afford to take her to the places she's accustomed to going? In his line of work he could never treat her on his salary.

There can't possibly be any romance in this combination, but he is attractive, flatters her, dances with her, and she seems to enjoy this set-up while he is taking her for all she's worth. Meanwhile all her friends are laughing at her behind her back. It's really pitiful.

Why can't some women realize there is more dignity in sitting home than buying an escort? — ON THE SIDELINES

DEAR ON: I take it you are sitting home. Perhaps this woman also sat home long enough to have concluded that she didn't like it.

All that is necessary for a successful relationship is that two people "need" each other. She needs him. And he needs her. And as long as they aren't hurting anybody, who am I to judge them? And who are you?

DEAR ABBY: I've just stepped out of my shower, ready to start my day, and it's car alarm time — just as it was car alarm time yesterday, and the day before. Car alarms seem to go off regularly for no reason whatsoever. It's highly unlikely that the same thief has been ripping off the same stereo in the same car for the past three days running.

Car alarms are not crime stoppers; they are noise polluters. What good are they if no one's around to respond to the "call"? (A friend of mine lost three car stereos, and her car alarm worked every time.) If someone wants to steal the entire car, he can just sit out the 30 minutes of siren with the rest of us — and THEN heist the wheels.

Please, ask your readers to consider those of us who are not trying to steal their car stereos. If they want to turn on the car alarm in their own driveways with their ears cocked for sounds of crime, fine, but a deserted car with its alarm blasting away should be a towable offense! — DAZED IN STUDIO CITY

DEAR DAZED: I agree. A car alarm is effective only if the owner is around to hear it. Ignored alarms are a headache, an earache and a pain in the posterior to all others within earshot.

THE BUTCHER

Steers simple, terminology complicated

By MERLE ELLIS

Steers used to be pretty simple critters, back in Grandma's day. They had a couple of front legs with shoulders attached, most of which were called "chucks," named after a famous butcher from Cincinnati, it's said. Eh, yup! Ol' Charlie Farquart was his name.

Then they had a couple of "rounds." Those were the hind legs. Never could quite figure why they called them rounds and chucks; every other critter has legs and shoulders but beef have "rounds" and "chucks."

Anyway, in between, there were a few T-bones and Porterhouse steaks, a rib roast or two and that was about it. Nothing fancy, a lot of good meat, but nothing too complicated in terms of terms.

All that has changed. I'm sure you've noticed! There is some strange and wonderful terminology used to identify cuts of meat in many meatcases these days. One market in my neighborhood outdoes itself in coming up with cute terminology to describe the component parts of a beef carcass. Who among you can tell me what it is — a "fluff steak," or a "velvet steak." Do any of you know from what part of the carcass doth come the "Diamond Jim Roast" or the "Butta Ball."

Don't feel dumb! Neither do most folks. Neither indeed would I except that I shop at that market most of the time.

The meat there is fine, but the terms they use to describe it are, to say the least, fanciful. And we, the consumers, are usually asked to pay a premium for those fancy terms. If you don't know some of the basics of animal anatomy, a couple of front legs, a couple of hind legs, a few T-bones, you're apt to be taken for an expensive ride in the meat-buying surrey-with-the-fancy-terms-on-top!

When beef is cut with the bone left in, the resulting cuts are still what they have always been. A T-bone is still a T-bone if it has a T-shaped bone. A chuck roast is still a chuck roast and sirloin steak is still a sirloin steak. It may be a "pinbone" of a "flat bone" sirloin depending upon the shape of the bone that's in it, but it is, whatever the bone, a "sirloin" if it comes from the sirloin section of the carcass.

When the bone is removed from a cut of beef, as is the case with most cuts in most meat cases these days, the terminology used to describe the cut gets a little carried away, and that can get confusing. For example: when the butcher takes the bone out of what would have been a T-bone or Porterhouse he gets two separate boneless cuts; the "top loin" and the "tenderloin" technically speaking.

But most markets don't stick to speaking technically. You'd be amazed at the terms used to describe those two boneless cuts of meat in markets around the country.

In some parts of the country the top loin is called a "New York strip" or "New York steak," but not in New York. They don't have New York steaks in New York City. There they sometimes call the cut "K.C. strips" or "Kansas City strips" — which they don't have in Kansas City. It does get a bit confusing.

Depending on how well your butcher speaks French, the tenderloin muscle may be labeled "tournedos," "Chateaubriand" or most likely and erroneously "filet mignon." Whatever it's called, you can be sure it's going to cost you a premium price. Fancy terms have a tendency to kick up the price on any cut of meat.

If you realize that steers are still pretty simple critters, and stick to the basics, you can eat the best the beef has to offer and save a small fortune in the process.

The market I shopped in last week had Porterhouse steak in the meatcase at $2.99 per pound. That's not "special" but it's not bad. Beef prices seem to be getting better for the consumer.

In the same meatcase, the two boneless component parts of the Porterhouse, the top loin labeled "New York strip" and tenderloin labeled "filet mignon" were selling for $3.99 and $6.98 respectively. You could save as much as $4 per pound by simply buying the Porterhouse steak and boning it out yourself. If you fed the bone to the dog or even tossed it, you'd still save substantially.

Today's consumer needs to realize that today's steers are no more complicated than they ever were. They still have a couple of front legs, a couple of hind legs and a few T-bones in between. Things may get called but a lot of fancy names but basically steers are still pretty simple critters.

Pita bread nutritious, habit forming

By JIM WOOD
Hearst News Service

Pita is more than a pair of baked gloves to protect your fingers while you eat falafel. It's an hors d'oeuvre, a sandwich for school or work, an easily made entree for a quick dinner.

It's also healthy, delicious and so versatile you can eat it with fruit, vegetables, dips or meat. A sort of mid-Eastern burrito, pitas are small, soft loafs, usually no more than nine inches across. Usually they have a pocket and they are made without shortening or milk and baked in a very hot oven.

Virginia Habeeb, whose family originally came from the Middle East although she grew up in West Virginia, has written "Pita the Great," a wonderful book that tells you how to make pitas in your own kitchen and suggests dozens of uses for them that never would have occurred to me.

"Low in sodium, fat and calories, pita is most often matched with yogurt, olives, cucumbers, tomatoes, bulgur, chickpeas, eggplant, sesame seeds, nuts and the natural sweeteners: dates, apricots, oranges, pomegranites, and quince, foods born of the earliest civilizations," Habeeb writes.

The great news is that they are simple to prepare, take only a few minutes and are so healthy you'll feel virtuous all day just eating one.

Habeeb, a former food editor at American Home, has written several books. Her clean prose style is interesting and informative. Her new book is one of those basic cooking works that should be around for a long time.

BUYING PITAS in the supermarket is cheap, convenient and a good way to try out some of the many fillings Habeeb details in her book. But for a new cooking experience that's fun and a sure way to earn a little success, try baking pitas at home.

WARNING: Pitas are habit forming. Although they definitely are not a threat to your health, you may find you'll be making a lot of pitas over the next few years if you try this recipe. Don't say you weren't warned.

Habeeb says pitas are different from most breads in that they are shaped first, and then, after that, they are allowed to rise. Her recipe lets the yeast do its work in the oven, cutting the time by up to two hours and assuring a good pocket.

BASIC PITA

2 cups warm water (90 degrees to 110 degrees)
2 envelopes (¼ ounces each) active dry yeast
½ teaspoon sugar
2 teaspoons salt
5 to 5½ unbleached all-purpose flour, plus flour for kneading

Pour the water into a large bowl and sprinkle in the yeast. Stir to dissolve.

With a wooden spoon, stir the sugar and salt into the yeast mixture; mix thoroughly. Gradually add 5 cups of the flour, stirring constantly until the dough is smooth. Slowly work in the remaining flour (up to ½ cup) with your hands, kneading until the dough is no longer sticky. Turn the dough out onto a well-floured board. Knead until it is smooth and elastic, about five minutes.

Shape the dough into an even rectangle and cut it in half lengthwise. Divide the dough into 24 portions for small pitas; 12 for larger ones. Shape each portion into a smooth ball. Place the balls on a floured surface and cover them with slightly damp towels while you roll out one ball at a time.

Gently press each ball flat with your fingers, keeping it well rounded. Flour a work surface and a rolling pin. Roll each round from the center to the outer edge, giving the dough a quarter turn after each roll, to form a perfect circle not quite ¼ inch thick (about 5 to 5½ inches in diameter for small pitas; about 8½ inches for larger ones.) Carefully flip the circles over to smooth out any creases that might prevent the pocket from forming.

Fifteen minutes before the loaves have finished rising, preheat the oven to 500 degrees. At the same time, place an ungreased baking sheet in the oven to warm.

As each loaf is rolled, place it carefully on a floured surface and cover with a clean, dry towel; do not let the surface of the loaves dry out. Let the loaves rise in a warm draft-free area, 30 to 45 minutes.

To bake, place four small pitas or one large pita on the hot baking sheet. Bake on the bottom rack of the oven until puffed and lightly browned on the bottom and almost white on top, about four minutes for small pitas and about three-and-a-half minutes for large; the pita will be soft and flexible. If desired, flip the loaves over after they have puffed and bake up to one minute longer to brown the tops. Be careful not to let the pita get crisp and brittle.

Remove the hot pitas from the oven and wrap immediately in clean, dry towels until cool enough to handle. Repeat this process until all the pitas are baked. Serve warm or at room temperature.

HUMMUS BI TAHINI

¼ cup tahini
⅓ cup fresh lemon juice
⅓ to ½ cup warm water
1 clove garlic, chopped
¾ cup dried chickpeas (garbanzo) beans), cooked and drained (see note) or 2 cups (1-pound can) chickpeas, drained and rinsed
½ teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper, to taste
Olive oil (garnish)
Chopped fresh parsley (garnish)

Put the tahini, lemon juice, water, and garlic into a blender or a food processor fitted with a metal blade. Cover and process until smooth.

With the machine running, gradually add the chickpeas, salt and pepper, processing until the mixture is the consistency of a very thick paste. If necessary, stop the machine and scrape down the sides with a spatula. The mixture will thicken when it is refrigerated, so if it seems too thick when you've finished processing it, add up to a half-cup more water and process again. Taste to correct seasonings.

Put the hummus into a bowl and refrigerate, covered, to chill. Before serving, drizzle with olive oil and garnish with the chopped parsley. Surround with freshly made pita cut into wedges.

To store, refrigerate, covered, for up to one week, or freeze for up to three months.

NOTE: To cook dried chickpeas, put ¾ cup dried chickpeas in a medium bowl, cover with water almost to the top of the bowl, and soak overnight. Drain, put in a saucepan, and cover with fresh water. Cover and bring to a boil, reduce the heat, and cook until soft, about one hour. Drain and cool.

How Mother Really Cooked

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Ask any number of young Americans in the food business if their mothers were good cooks, and there is a pause and then a small nervous laugh at the other end of the telephone conversation. The notion that every good cook must have learned at his or her mother's knee is a myth. But being loving sons and daughters these food professionals are not anxious to burst the bubble.

Their complaints about their mothers' culinary talents can be summed up in a word — overcooking. In fact, most of these professionals are ambivalent about their mother's cooking, to judge by the responses received from five of New York City's better known restaurateurs.

"My mother's cooking was heroic," said Robert Pritsker, chef-owner of Brive, a new restaurant on 58th Street near First Avenue. "That means she had no particular love, no particular talent, but an extraordinary desire to be a good wife and mother."

So despite the fact that Frances Pritsker of Providence, R.I., cooked string beans for 40 minutes until they were "Army-barracks green" and put sugar in everything, she had a positive effect on her son's attitude toward food. "I determined that eating was pretty much all there was to do in life," Mr. Pritsker said with tongue only partly in cheek, "and I haven't changed my mind."

For Karen Hubert's mother, an artist, cooking was another form of artistic expression. "I think she thought she was a very creative cook," said Hubert, host and co-owner with her husband, Len Allison, who is the chef of Hubert's on East 22d Street near Lexington Avenue.

"My mother's cooking fell into two categories," she said. "Either she cooked everything in the refrigerator in one pot or she'd discover one ingredient, and fall in love with it and put it in everything she made. There was the year of the pimento: mashed potatoes with pimentos, meatballs with pimentos, rice with pimentos."

Hubert added, as delicately as possible: "I didn't always like what my mother cooked."

Larry Forgione, on the other hand, has changed his mind about his mother's cooking as he has grown older. "At first, I used to think my mother wasn't a good cook, but the more I thought about it I realized she was," he said. "It was good honest food, but the accompaniments ... Like a can of mushroom soup and a can of green beans equals green beans in mushroom-cream sauce." But he remembers her pot roast, her mashed potatoes and oven-roasted potatoes with great fondness.

Despite his success as the chef-owner of An American Place at 969 Lexington Avenue, near 70th Street, Forgione has made no converts in his family. Although his mother no longer cooks vegetables for 40 minutes, she doesn't cook them al dente either, and she doesn't like the fact that her son serves veal pink instead of well done.

Each Thanksgiving when Charles Palmer goes home to Smyrna, N.Y., he goes directly to the kitchen "to take out the turkey because I know it's been in there since 6 a.m."

Virginia Joyce Palmer cooks everything for a long time, according to her son. Palmer, who is the chef at the River Cafe in Brooklyn, said his father was the real cook in the family. Yet there is one thing his mother still makes better than anyone else — chicken with dumplings.

And then there are the mothers who don't really cook: They open packages. Drew Nieporent's mother belongs in that category. Those old enough to remember the children's radio program "Let's Pretend" may recall the girl who sang "Cream of Wheat is so good to eat." That was Nieporent's mother, whose stage name was Sybil Trent.

"My mother's nickname was 'Snow Queen' because she was very good with frozen food," explained Nieporent.

Expressions such as "like mother used to make" have no relevance here.

Book simplifies Chinese cooking

By Verne Palmer
Copley News Service

"Classic Chinese Cooking," by Anna Kao (Walaby Books, $8.95).

The first of a series of cookbooks geared to ethnic cuisines, "Classic Chinese Cooking" is a compact, no-nonsense introduction to what many agree is the world's premiere cuisine.

Perhaps because of its august reputation, Chinese cooking is supposed by many to be difficult and to require special equipment and/or training. Not so on either count.

Anna Kao presents more than 100 dishes from China's six regional cuisines — among them such favorites as egg rolls, butterfly shrimp, orange sesame chicken, sweet-and-sour meatballs, fried rice, and stir-fried pork and bean threads.

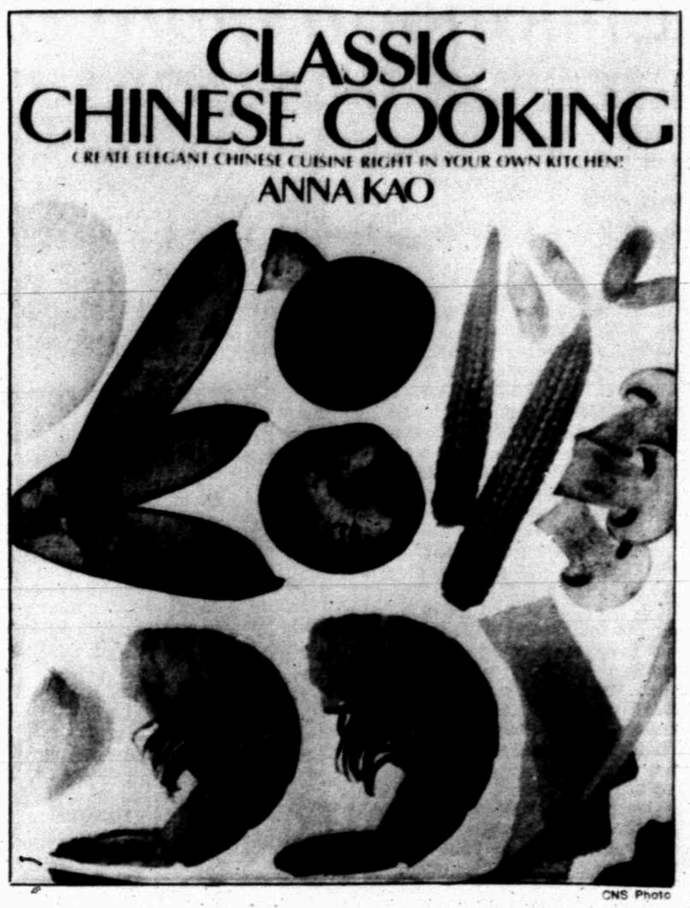

She also offers directions on planning and serving Chinese meals, cooking methods, marinating and seasoning, special ingredients and sources thereof and the how-to's of slicing, dicing, cubing, etc.

The text is clearly laid out, easy to follow and generously larded with "how to" line drawings.

BUTTERFLY SHRIMP
HU TIEH HSIA
FROM CANTON

1 pound large shrimp
1 teaspoon fresh lemon juice
1 tablespoon rice wine or dry sherry
1 tablespoon salt
1 tablespoon honey
Flour for coating
Peanut or other salad oil for deep-frying
Batter
½ cup beer or white wine
¼ cup cornstarch
¼ cup flour
3½ tablespoons sweet rice flour
⅔ teaspoon baking powder
⅔ thirds teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon garlic powder
¼ teaspoon soy sauce

CNS Photo

Shell and devein the shrimp, leaving tails intact. Wash and pat dry. Split lengthwise, but do not cut all the way through.

Combine lemon juice, sherry, salt and honey; mix well and toss with shrimp. Let stand 10 minutes. Toss shrimp with flour in a plastic bag to coat; shake off excess flour.

No more than a few minutes ahead of time, mix batter, making sure it is free of lumps.

Heat 2 inches of oil in a wok or 3 inches of oil in a deep-fryer to 375 degrees. Dip shrimp in batter by the tail and fry until light brown. Drain; serve immediately with a sweet and sour sauce.

WHAT'S COOKING

Childhood more difficult than in past

EDITORS NOTE: Families who previously have been named Family of the Year will be featured in "What's Cooking" prior to the announcement of this year's family, Nov. 18. This is the second of a six part series.

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

The Lynn Hunts, Midland residents for 20 years, were named Family of the Year in 1983. The family has five children. Sully, 19, and Kippy, 18, are students at Texas Christian University. Calley, 15, attends Midland High School, and Terry Lynn, 4, and Robert, 3, are preschoolers.

"We only had four (children) when we were Family of the Year," said Mrs. Lynn Hunt. Robert has been adopted since then.

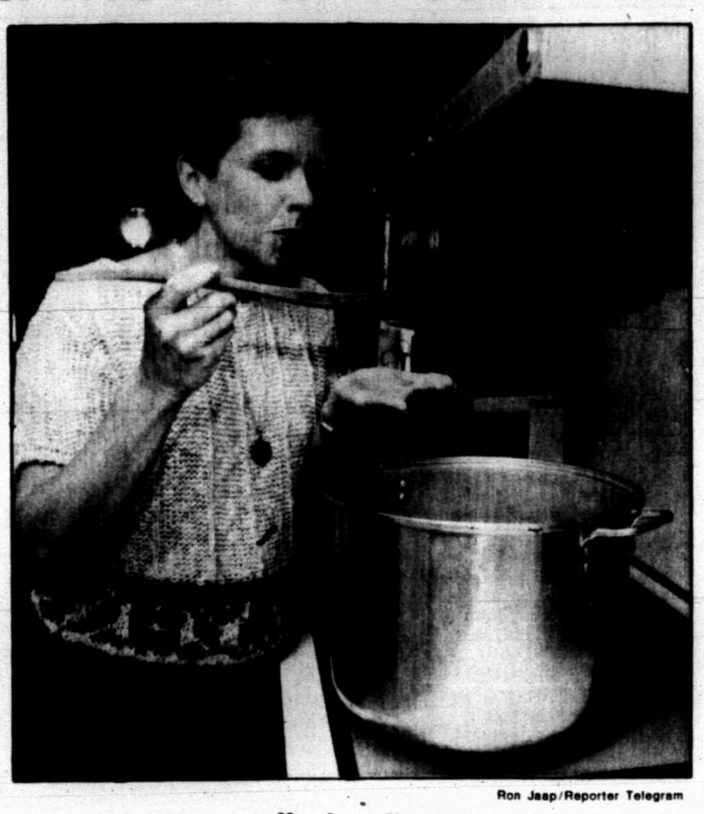

With such a wide age range among her children, Mrs. Hunt said she has found being a parent to small children is easier now. "The kids go to all the ball games with us — they don't slow us down at all." But their constant exposure to people older than they are hasn't stopped the small children from enjoying their childhood, she added. "They play as children and play real well together."

Parenting changes as children grow, Mrs. Hunt said. "I think it's hardest to be a parent to teen-age children because by that time you have taught them everything you can teach them about moral issues, religion; but by that time there is so much pressure from outside in the world.

"It's not easy to be a child today. You have to admire and respect them because they do have a lot of pressure to give into drugs and alcohol and so many of them don't."

Children, teen-agers and even adults still need guidance from their parents, she said. "I think probably a mother's love is the most unconditional love — outside God's love. I know I can still tell my mother anything and she will still love me. I would hope that's how my kids are, that they would know that."

Families of the Year, like most other families, have favorite home-cooked dishes. Here are some of the Hunts'.

Ron Jaap/Reporter Telegram

Mrs. Lynn Hunt

PORK CHOP CASSEROLE
4 pork chops
¾ cup rice
1 tomato, sliced
1 bell pepper, sliced
1 onion, sliced
1 can beef bouillon

Place raw rice in bottom of casserole. Brown pork chops in skillet; arrange on top of rice. Or remove chops from skillet, put rice on bottom; them replace chops.

Place slice of onion, tomato and pepper ring on top of each pork chop. Pour can of bouillon over vegetables and meat. Add water if needed to cover rice. Cover casserole and bake at 375 degrees for about an hour.

This casserole can be prepared ahead of time and put in the oven when ready to use. It may also be simmered on top of stove, covered, for about 30 minutes or until rice is tender.

CHICKEN OKRA GUMBO
1 spring fryer, about 2 pounds
1½ pounds fresh okra
1 fresh tomato, chopped
1 large onion, chopped
2 tablespoons shortening
3 tablespoons shortening
2 tablespoons flour
6 cups water
Salt and pepper to taste

Cut up chicken; dredge with flour, salt and pepper. Fry until brown. Fry okra with tomato and onion in shortening. Make a roux* in heavy skillet with grease from fried chicken and flour. Brown roux. Add fried chicken and vegetables. Stir a few minutes; add water, salt and pepper to taste. Cook for about two hours. Serves six.

"Gumbo is a great way to use leftover ham, turkey, duck, chicken, sausage, seabood or baron. Gumbo has many variations; all of these ingredients are interchangeable in the above recipe — the thickness of the gumbo depends on the amount of water. Gumbo is best served over mounds of hor rice in a large, flat soup bowl," according to Mrs. Hunt.

* Note: To make a roux, heat shortening in thick pot or skillet. Add flour and stir constantly until dark brown, being careful not to burn. If there is the slightest indication of overbrowning, dispose of the roux and start over. Even a slightly burned sauce will ruin a savory dish.

HOLIDAY SWEET POTATO
1 egg, beaten
1 (30 ounce) can sweet potatoes, drained
1 to 2 teaspoons cinnamon
¼ cup granulated sugar
2 tablespoons melted butter
¼ cup milk
Dash salt

Topping:
¼ cup butter
2 tablespoons all purpose flour
½ cup brown sugar
½ cup chopped pecans

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Combine first seven ingredients and beat until fluffy. Place in 8x8x2-inch pan.

To make topping, cream butter, flour and sugar. Add pecans. Spread mixture evenly on top of potato mixture. Bake about 50 minutes. Serve hot.

CHOCOLATE TURTLE CAKE
1 box German chocolate cake mix
1½ cups water
½ cup oil
½ can sweetened condensed milk

Beat ingredients thoroughly. Spray 13x9-inch pan with oil. Turn half mixture into pan. Bake at 350 degrees 20-25 minutes.

Melt:1 pound caramels
½ can sweetened condensed milk

Pour melted mixture over first layer of baked cake. Sprinkle with chopped nuts.

Pour other half of cake mixture over filling. Bake another 30 minutes.

Icing:
1 stick margarine, melted
3 tablespoons cocoa
6 tablespoons milk
1 box powdered sugar
1 cup chopped nuts

Combine all ingredients and pour over cake.

Comfort food can perk up mood

NEW YORK (UPI) — Where do you turn when your best friend is busy, your family has its own problems and your cat is sound asleep? Sue Kreitzman says you could do lots worse than turning to the kitchen.

The author of "Comfort Food" (Harmony Books, $6.95) believes strongly in food therapy, saying a bowl of hot steamy oatmeal or a hearty chicken pot pie will perk up your mood without breaking your budget.

The book and its 102 recipes are a distillation of what most people have known all along. Certain foods make people feel better. And even though the foods vary from person to person, there are some basic attributes that comfort food have in common.

Most of all they are warming to the soul, often stroking memories of security from childhood. Here, for instance, is one that, while a bit exotic, captures the essence of such solace.

ONION BREAD PUDDING
1 stick butter
1 tablespoon corn oil
8 cups thinly sliced onions
¼ cup dry vermouth
1 large clove garlic, split
6 ounces stale crusty French bread, cut into 1-inch chunks
2 cups grated Gruyere cheese
3 eggs
2 cups half-and-half
Salt and freshly ground black pepper

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees. In a heavy pot, melt 4 tablespoons of butter with the corn oil. Toss in the onions, cover and steam over low heat for 15 minutes.

Uncover the pot, raise the heat to medium and cook, stirring occasionally, until the onions are deeply browned and caramelized. Pour in the vermouth and boil until the liquid cooks away, scraping the bottom of the pot with a wooden spoon all the while.

Choose a shallow round 1½-quart gratin dish. Rub it thoroughly with the cut sides of the garlic clove. Discard the garlic.

Toss the bread and onions together, then spread them in the gratin dish. Melt the remaining butter and pour it over the bread. Sprinkle on the grated cheese.

Beat the eggs lightly and beat in the half-and-half. Season to taste with salt and black pepper. Pour the mixture evenly over the bread and cheese. Press the bread into the liquid with a spatula.

Let stand for at least an hour. (The gratin may be covered and refrigerated overnight, as long as it is brought to room temperature before cooking.) Bake for 30 to 40 minutes, until set, puffed and golden brown. Serve at once. Serves 6.

'Food fashions' offer variety of convenience foods

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Copley News Service

What's this, designer vegetables? Yes, and a lot more is going on in today's trendy new "fashions" in foods.

Supermarkets and food manufacturers are racing to keep up with new vitalized consumer demands for fresher, higher quality and simplified foods that contribute to health and fitness. In addition, they want to know what's in the food, as well as its nutritional values. Consumers are much smarter than they used to be and they deserve to be well-fed and well-informed. It's their money they're spending.

Some of the new innovations in foods are fascinating, and certainly different. Backyard gardeners who prefer to grow their own can buy seed packets for "designer" vegetables that produce blue potatoes, inside-out radishes or Agora eggplant from Italy, among others.

Some frozen food companies offer not only many elegant individual entrees on microwavable, table-ready plates, but offer suggestions on choosing just the right wine to accompany them, in case one is in doubt. Oriental dishes may include chopsticks and tea.

Breakfasts now come frozen, microwaved in moments and may include such favorites as biscuits, muffins, croissants, a variety of sandwiches and rolls, breads, waffles, bacon, eggs, sausages and even breakfast pizzas. They are often high in fat, cholesterol and calories, however, and they're not inexpensive, compared to doing it yourself.

Snacks, too, are available in individual containers that hold just enough food to keep hunger away. Crisp, fresh vegetables and dip, cheese and crackers, vegetable sticks, fruits, cookies, cereals and many appetizer-sized entrees are offered as snacks for individual consumption.

Desserts seem almost limitless in variety, and many products are now being sold in mini-sizes as samplers for those who only want a mini-sweet taste. No need now to waste money on the whole thing if you only want a taste!

Supermarkets are changing, too, and many now offer touch-screen store directories that not only give the location of products, but also dispense coupons for some brands. One tricky new way of using coupons is enclosing them in greeting cards, as one company is doing.

No longer must we tolerate the same old boring shapes of pasta. Now we have renditions in the shape of Miss Liberty and the state of Texas. It is also rumored that, in the future, one may even have his own monogrammed pasta.

Convenience stores, an $8 billion-a-year business, are adding microwave ovens to some locations for the use of customers who purchase microwavable foods to eat them right away. This may be a cheaper, easier alternative to fast food restaurants, for some people.

Diet foods of all kinds are widely available today from many different companies. Labels that say low cholesterol, low or reduced salt, low calorie and give extensive nutrition information, make it much easier for the millions of Americans who are on restricted diets for health problems.

Have you noticed how many supermarkets now carry flowers and plants? They are usually comparatively inexpensive and add to any home.

Cipriani brings Bellini to America

By JOHN DeMERS

NEW YORK (UPI) — According to legend, Giuseppe Cipriani invented the Bellini cocktail at Harry's Bar in Venice to help his pal Ernest Hemingway cut back on his martinis.

Efforts to help Papa often backfired, however, and Cipriani's appealing mix of white peach nectar and extra-dry Venetian champagne certainly followed suit. Whenever Hemingway was drinking more than atmosphere in Venice, he knocked back both Bellinis and martinis.

"While the Bellini was a total success as a drink," observed Marcello Indiati a quarter-century later, "it was a total failure with Hemingway."

Indiati, president of a gourmet mail order firm called Club du Faisan, has every reason to believe the Bellini will soon enjoy wider appreciation than ever.

With the help of technology developed just outside Venice in Treviso, the special mix of peach nectar, lime juice for tartness and black currant juice for color will be sold by Indiati as Pesca Bellini.

Club du Faisan will share the label with Harry's Bar.

All a would-be Hemingway will have to do is pour the liquid into a glass with dry sparkling wine — preferably the Venetian wonder known as Prosecco — and settle back to enjoy the result.

"The cocktail was named by Cipriani after a painter in the Venetian school, which of course was headed by Titian," said Indiati, who runs Club du Faisan from its headquarters in Sugar Loaf, N.Y.

"The hue of the cocktail is very soft, fitting in with the coloring and the spirit of these painters."

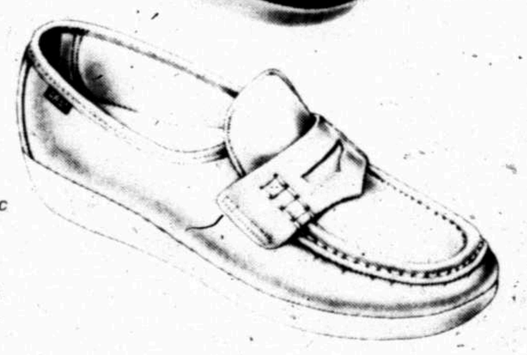

An 11.6-ounce bottle of Pesca Bellini will produce 8 to 10 Bellinis, depending on the bartender's sense of proportion.

The juices, for both the Bellini and the new Lampone Carnevale (created recently by Giuseppe Cipriani's son, Arrigo, using wild raspberry juice and lemon) are given their 12- to 14-month shelf lives without the use of preservatives.

Fast-food burgers successful in Czechoslovakia

By PAOLA JUVENAL

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The "Moskovski biftek" looks like a regular, all-American hamburger and tastes like one too, even down to the ketchup.

Nor is there anything to distinguish the "Arbat" from the McDonald's fast-food outlets to be found in nearly all Western capitals. The striped awnings, the screwed-down stools, paper cartons, plastic cups and even the waiters' uniforms look the same.

The Arbat — named after a Moscow shopping street — is the first fast-food restaurant to open in the Czech capital and is proving a huge success despite initial misgivings.

The decoration and equipment were supplied entirely by Western firms, an Arbat official, Vladimir Stetina, concedes. But, he says proudly: "All the products, from the buns to the ketchup, are made in Czechoslovakia."

The restaurant is on the ground floor of a building traditionally devoted to the promotion of Soviet culinary delicacies, although apparently, Arbat's only connection with Moscow is its name.

"Whatever we call it, 'hamburger,' 'bytki' (Russian) or 'karbanatek' (Czech), it is really only a minced steak," Stetina says: "The idea is to produce something the public likes and from that point of view, our hamburgers are far better than some I have eaten near the Statue of Liberty in New York."

Arbat was planned and launched by Interhotel, an organization that controls 50 percent of hotel accommodation in Prague. Its officials took advantage of the conversion of part of central Prague into a pedestrian area to create a popular restaurant offering quick service and moderate prices.

"The most profitable solution was fast food," Stetina says. "Of course, there were some objections; we went against certain habits. Elderly customers wanted knives and forks and china plates. But six months after the opening of Arbat, the results have exceeded our expectations and our turnover has increased by 253 percent."

The Czechs, whose traditional taste is for highly seasoned snacks washed down with beer, have apparently taken to french fries and tartar sauce (2,000 portions a day), as well as to milkshakes.

Salmon versatile food

By PAUL BENSEN
Copley News Service

Salmon, with its striking pink color and its adaptability to a variety of quick preparations, is a perfect choice for the chef in a hurry who wants to create a delicious, unusual and beautiful entree.

In the last few years many of the large national supermarket chains have added fresh seafood departments, so that salmon steaks and fillets are now as easy to buy in most cities as hamburger or chicken.

Atlantic salmon is always pink-fleshed and, generally, is sold fresh. Pacific salmon, from Alaska and the Northwestern United States, is sold fresh in western markets and is processed in the huge canneries that ship the tinned meat around the world. Some Pacific salmon, including the Chinook, may be either pink or white fleshed. The dog salmon, not generally available on the national market, has a characteristically yellow-colored meat, and is the lowest in fat of all the varieties of salmon.

Several restaurants I've visited lately serve mesquite-broiled salmon, usuallly with a lemon-herb butter or hollandaise sauce. Salmon steaks are a natural choice for grilling, since they hold together better on the barbecue than almost any other fish. A simple and delicious preparation is to combine your favorite barbecue sauce with a bit of melted butter and then lightly brush the salmon steaks with the mixture as they cook on the barbecue grill. Hollandaise is also a wonderful accompaniment to salmon, and one of today's recipes takes advantage of this happy marriage.

Removing the large bone from salmon steaks before serving leaves an open space in the center of the meat that can be filled with a mixture of lightly steamed vegetables chosen for colors and tastes that will complement the salmon. Some good choices are green beans, broccoli flowerets, cauliflower and julienned carrots.

Though today's recipes can only hint at the many ways to prepare this versatile fish, I hope they'll make salmon enthusiasts of you and your guests.

BROILED SALMON STEAKS WITH GARLIC BUTTER

4 salmon steaks, cut ¾-inch thick
⅓ cup clarified butter
3 medium cloves garlic, minced

DO-AHEAD STEP: Make the clarified butter/garlic mixture a day or more ahead, refrigerate and melt as needed.

To make the clarified butter, melt one stick of butter (4 ounces), being careful not to burn it. Remove the melted butter from heat and allow the solids to settle to the bottom of the pan. Pour off the clear butterfat on top and discard the solids.

In 1 tablespoon of the clarified butter, briefly saute the minced garlic until it softens; do not allow to brown. Stir the garlic into the rest of the clarified butter and reserve.

Brush the salmon steaks with the garlic-butter mixture and broil, turning once, until cooked through (4 to 5 minutes per side). Broiling over charcoal or mesquite gives especially good results, but your oven will do just fine.

Serving suggestion: Carefully remove the bones before serving, and fill the center of the steaks with steamed vegetables (see text). If desired, make some extra garlic butter for the vegetables.

Serves 4.

Total preparation/cooking time (including do-ahead step) — 15 minutes.

SALMON WITH ANCHOVY BUTTER AND HOLLANDAISE

4 salmon steaks or fillets, about 8 ounces each
1 recipe Easy Hollandaise Sauce (recipe follows)
Olive oil to brush salmon
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
4 anchovies, minced
¼ cup melted butter
¼ teaspoon paprika
3 tablespoons caviar (optional)

Blend together butter, anchovies and paprika until smooth.

Sprinkle the salmon with salt and pepper to taste and brush lightly with olive oil. Broil, about 4 inches from source of heat, turning once.

Meanwhile, prepare the Easy Hollandaise Sauce (recipe follows).

A minute or so before the salmon is finished cooking, brush with half the anchovy butter.

Remove the salmon to a platter, spread with the remaining anchovy butter and serve each piece topped with hollandaise. The caviar (optional) should be mixed with the hollandaise before serving.

Serves 4.

Total preparation/cooking time — 20 minutes.

EASY HOLLANDAISE SAUCE

2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
4 egg yolks
½ teaspoon salt
1 pinch white pepper
1 pinch cayenne
½ teaspoon dry mustard
1 stick unsalted butter

In blender or food processor blend lemon juice, egg yolks, salt, pepper, cayenne and mustard. Melt the butter in small skillet or saucepan until bubbling (it must be bubbling or the hollandaise will not thicken).

With the blender running on medium or high speed, slowly add the hot butter in a thin stream. Serve hot.

Makes about ¾ cup.

NOTE: For thicker hollandaise or to reheat, the sauce may be placed over hot water in a double boiler.

CHINESE STEAMED SALMON

4 salmon steaks, cut ¾-inch thick
3 tablespoons freshly squeezed lemon juice
2 medium cloves garlic, minced
4 tablespoons butter
2 medium scallions, including lower half of greens cut in matchstick-size pieces
Salt to taste

Salt the salmon steaks on both sides, place them on paper towels and allow to stand 10 minutes or more.

Place the steaks in an oven-proof bowl, dot with butter and sprinkle evenly with minced garlic. Place bowl in bamboo or metal steamer and steam, covered, 15 minutes. During the last 5 minutes of steaming, place the scallions over the salmon steaks and drizzle the lemon juice evenly over them.

Serves 4.

Total preparation/cooking time — 25 minutes.

Ingredient availability requires cookbook revision

Hearst News Service

It's not a new book — far from it. Instead, Diana Kennedy's "The Cuisines of Mexico" is a revised edition of an old favorite that's almost a classic among those who enjoy cooking and cookbooks.

The book, originally published in 1972, was chosen by Time magazine as one of the 12 best cookbooks ever. For preserving Mexico's traditional cuisines, the Mexican government awarded Kennedy the Order of the Aztec Eagle — the highest award bestowed on a foreigner.

The revision, according to Kennedy's preface, notes that in the original edition it was necessary to make a few concessions on ingredients, straying somewhat from the authentic cuisine. Now, due to increased availability of exotic ingredients, Kennedy says these concessions no longer is necessary.

The book is not for the casual cook who only wants to make tamales or enchiladas. It's for those who own a molcajete (mortar and pestle), a tortilla press and a comal (a tortilla griddle), or are willing to improvise. It's for people who buy and use a wide assortment of chilies and appreciate the subtleties of their flavors.

The book is written in a style, with comments and personal experiences

All in all, the book's a fine treat for a new generation of cooks with a serious interest in authentic Mexican cuisine. The book, published by Harper & Row, sells for $22.95. Here's a sampling of recipes:

SALPICON DE JAIBA

(Shredded crabmeat and chopped vegetables; makes enough to fill 12 small tortillas)

¼ cup peanut or safflower oil
⅓ medium onion, finely chopped
½ cup finely chopped celery
5 chiles serranos with seeds, finely chopped
1 cup cooked, shredded crabmeat
3 tablespoons finely chopped fresh coriander
Salt to taste

Heat the oil in a frying pan and cook the onion gently, without browning, until it is soft. Add the celery, chilies and crabmeat and fry until they just begin to brown slightly.

Add the coriander and salt and cook for 1 minute longer.

Serve with hot tortillas or use as a filling for tacos.

GUACAMOLE

2 tablespoons finely chopped fresh coriander
1½ tablespoons finely chopped white onion
2 or 3 fresh green chiles serranos, or to taste, finely chopped
1 teaspoon salt, or to taste
2 large ripe avocados (about 1¼ pounds)
½ cup finely chopped, unskinned ripe tomatoes
1 avocado pit
Scant ¼ cup chopped tomato
2 tablespoons finely chopped white onion
1½ tablespoons roughly chopped fresh coriander

Crush the coriander, onion, chilies and salt together and grind to a paste with a molcajete or mortar and pestle.

Cut the avocados in half, remove the pits and scoop out the flesh with a wooden spoon. Mash the flesh roughly into the base mixture. Stir in the chopped tomato.

Place the avocado pit in the center of the guacamole and sprinkle with the ¼ cup chopped tomato, the onion and the coriander.

If you don't have a molcajete or a mortar and pestle, Kennedy suggests "that you blend the base ingredients well in a blender and mash the avocados roughly into it."

CHILORIO

(Shredded pork filling for burritos)

2 pounds pork shoulder without bone but with some fat
1 teaspoon salt
Cold water to cover
8 chiles anchos
Hot water to cover
8 cloves garlic, peeled
⅛ teaspoon cumin seeds
¼ teaspoon oregano
6 peppercorns
½ teaspoon salt, or to taste
⅓ cup vinegar with water added to equal ½ cup
Lard as necessary

Cut the meat into 1-inch squares and barely cover it with salted water. Bring the meat to a boil, uncovered.

Lower the temperature a little and let the meat continue to cook until all the liquid has evaporated and all the fat has rendered out of it. When the water has evaporated and the fat has rendered out, but the meat has not browned — about 45 minutes — remove the meat from the dish and pound it in the molcajete until it is in shreds, or shred it finely with two forks.

Meanwhile, prepare the sauce. Slit the chilies open, remove the seeds and veins and cover them with hot water. Leave to soak for 15 minutes, then remove with a slotted spoon and transfer to the blender jar. Blend until smooth with the rest of the ingredients. The sauce should be thick, more like a paste. The blender will have to be turned on and off to release the blades.

There should be about ¼ cup of fat in the dish in which the meat was cooked. If not, make up to that amount by adding lard. Add the meat and mix the chili sauce well into it.

Cook the mixture over low heat for 15 to 20 minutes or until the meat is well seasoned and the mixture is rather dry, scraping the bottom of the dish so the sauce does not stick.

"It is customary to reheat chilorio with lard, which makes it rather heavy unless you drain some of the excess lard off at the end of cooking time."

TORTA DE CIELO

(almond sponge cake)

Butter
All-purpose flour
½ pound almonds
Hot water to cover
5 eggs, separated
Generous pinch of salt
½ pound (1 cup) granulated sugar
¼ teaspoon baking powder
1 tablespoon all-purpose flour
1 tablespoon brandy
A drop of almond extract

Line the bottom of a 9-inch springform pan with parchment paper. Butter the paper and sides of the pan well and dust with flour.

Pour hot water over the almonds so that they are well-covered and leave them to soak for at least six hours. Remove the skins — they should slip right off if they are not already off.

Preheat oven to 325 degrees.

Chop the nuts roughly and grind them a little at a time. They should be neither too coarse nor too fine. Set aside.

Beat the egg whites until they are fluffy. Add the salt and continue beating until the egg whites are stiff. Add the yolks, one by one, and continue beating until they are all incorporated.

Mix the dry ingredients together, and beating at low speed, gradually add them to the eggs.

Add the brandy and almond extract and pour the batter into the prepared pan.

Bake for 1¾ hours in the middle level of the oven. Let the cake get cold before removing it from the pan.

The moist, textured cake keeps almost indefinitely if stored in a cool, dry place — preferably not the refrigerator.

Yeast bread has country flavor

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Whole wheat flour, cornmeal and herbs give this bread real country flavor. Bake a loaf to serve with homemade vegetable-beef soup.

CORNMEAL HERB BREAD

1½ to 1¾ cups all-purpose flour
1 package active dry yeast
½ cup hot water (120 degrees)
1 5-ounce can evaporated milk
¼ cup honey
¼ cup cooking oil
1 teaspoon salt
1 beaten egg
1½ cups whole wheat flour
¾ cup cornmeal
½ teaspoon dried sage, crushed
½ teaspoon dried basil, crushed
¼ teaspoon dried celery seed
¼ teaspoon dried dillweed
1 beaten egg yolk
2 teaspoons sesame seed

In a large mixer bowl combine 1½ cups of the all-purpose flour and the yeast. In a bowl combine water, evaporated milk, honey, oil and salt; stir until salt is dissolved. Add to flour mixture; add egg. Beat with electric mixer on low speed 30 seconds, scraping bowl constantly. Beat on high speed 3 minutes. Stir in whole wheat flour, cornmeal, sage, basil, celery seed, dillweed and as much all-purpose flour as you can mix in with a spoon. On lightly floured surface knead in enough remaining flour to make a moderately stiff dough (8 to 10 minutes). Shape into a ball; place in greased bowl. Cover; let rise until double (about 1½ hours).

Punch down; shape into a ball. Cover; let rest 10 minutes. Shape into loaf; place in greased 9 by 5 by 3-inch loaf pan. Let rise until double. Brush dough with mixture of egg yolk and 1 tablespoon water; sprinkle with sesame seed. Bake in a 375-degree oven for about 30 minutes; cover with foil after 20 minutes. Makes 1 loaf (12 servings).

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Your goals move within reach when you open up and let others know where you stand. Be clear about what you want out of life and you will be offered important new opportunities and responsibilities. Your home life is less topsy-turvy than it's been in recent past. You make new financial gains. Originality is the key to business success and public recognition.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: 2nd U.S. President John Adams, poet Ezra Pound, pitcher Gaylord Perry, San Francisco reliever Scott Garrels, rock star Grace Slick, actor Henry "The Fonz" Winkler, Children's Workshop innovator Joan Ganz Cooney, actress Ruth Gordon, body builder Charles Atlas, WWII naval hero Adm. William "Bull" Halsey, New York Giants manager Bill Terry.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Expansion is the key to progress. Use your personal magnetism in both business and romance. Show your leadership skills. You may be asked to make a life-changing decision.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Avoid acting impulsively. Do not throw away an offer of security. A long-time friend offers valuable advice. Use it as a guideline only. Romance sizzles.

GEMINI (May 21- June 20): Put more energy into everything you do. Displaying too much independence could lead to arguments. Devote more time to a young person who needs gentle guidance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Speculation can be hazardous. Do not go along with a well-intentioned friend's financial advice. Postpone asking for a salary increase. Romance is rewarding.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Detailed work should be double-checked. Anything that requires team effort deserves to be promoted. Differences of opinion at home can be ironed out.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep calm even if others resort to panic measures. Higher-ups will be impressed by your show of initiative. You are completely in tune with romantic partner. Avoid bringing up controversial subjects.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A great day for sports, creative work and romance. Do everything possible to improve your mind through study. Devote more time and effort to achieving your personal goals.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Self-employed people can boost their incomes now. You feel better now that you have fewer restrictions. Your popularity is on the rise. Consult your mate about invitations.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good day for contacting those who wish to do business behind closed doors. Save money on home repairs by doing it yourself. Do not take risks in romance. Be appreciative.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Catch up on odd jobs before beginning a new project. Discuss ways to build savings with interested parties. Strengthen your business and personal relationships by repaying past favors.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good day for dealing with people who prefer staying out of the public eye. Secrecy is needed. A financial plan can be carried a step further. Your loved ones support you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Use any free time to work on artistic and creative projects. Now is the time to expand a business. A show of affection will help you strengthen a friendship. Plan a special surprise.

SEND OUT THE SIGNAL

Neither vulnerable. East deals.

	NORTH ♠ J 7 3 ♡ 8 ◇ Q 9 6 4 2 ♣ J 9 8 4
WEST ♠ 9 5 2 ♡ K 6 2 ◇ J 8 ♣ K 10 7 5 3		EAST ♠ 8 4 ♡ A Q 10 9 5 4 3 ◇ K 10 5 3 ♣ Void
	SOUTH ♠ A K Q 10 6 ♡ J 7 ◇ A 7 ♣ A Q 6 2

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
4 ♡	4 ♠	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡ Defense is a partnership affair. Watch two members of the old Goren team, Boris Koytchou and the late Harold Ogust, in action on this hand from the trials to select the 1962 U.S. World Championship Team.

Despite the fact that he was vulnerable and held only a five-card suit, South felt he was too strong to stay out of the auction, so he overcalled Ogust's four-heart opening bid with four spades. That ended the auction.

The normal lead from three to an honor in partner's suit is a low card, but Koytchou felt that it might be important for him to retain the lead. So he elected to lead the king of hearts. Ogust followed with the three.

That clearly was a suit preference signal asking for the lower of the other two unbid suits. So Koytchou dutifully led away from his king of clubs at trick two for his partner to ruff. Careful defense later netted the defenders a club and a diamond trick for down one.

At the other table South elected to double the four-heart opening and that became the final contract. South started with three rounds of spades, declarer ruffing. He crossed to dummy with the king of trumps to lead the jack of diamonds to the queen, king and ace. South returned a trump to cut down dummy's ruffs. Declarer then proceeded to run trumps and North, afraid that declarer held some clubs, clung to that suit and sluffed diamonds. As a result, declarer ended up scoring his three remaining diamonds to land his contract.

Bridge is a strange game. And the higher the level, the stranger it seems to become!

Leave them something to REMEMBER.

Texans will be able 'to get their kicks' with signs from famous Route 66

AUSTIN (AP) — Next month the state will auction 277 signs that once marked U.S 66, a highway made famous 20-odd years ago by the television show "Route 66," starring George Maharis, Martin Milner and a Corvette convertible.

Last year, the last Route 66 sign in Texas came down as the conversion of the old highway to Interstate 40 was completed. At one time, 177 miles of Route 66 crossed seven counties in the Texas Panhandle, as well as other states.

The signs, which have been in storage, are being cleaned for the sale. A label will be placed on each sign to certify it as genuine.

The signs will be sold Nov. 22 as part of a general auction of surplus state goods. Mail-in bids will be accepted if they are received by Nov. 14.

The highway department said in Oklahoma last year a similar sale netted between $40 and $80 a sign.

WEST JORDAN, Utah (AP) — Singer Marie Osmond wore white as she was married in an unheralded Mormon Church ceremony to record producer Brian Blosil.

The 27-year-old entertainer and Blosil, 33, of Provo, were married Tuesday in the Jordan River Temple by Paul H. Dunn, a member of the First Quorum of the Seventy of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, according to Kathy Gangwisch, Osmond's Kansas City-based personal publicist.

Dunn also officiated at Osmond's 1982 Salt Lake Temple marriage to former Brigham Young University basketball star Stephen L. Craig. The couple separated in 1984 and were later divorced.

Osmond and Blosil met in January at a party in Provo given by mutual friends, Gangwisch said. It was Blosil's first wedding.

Osmond wore a full-length white gown, decorated by delicate sequins and pearls with a high neck and long sleeves.

She won the Country Music Award Oct. 13 in Nashville for vocal duo of the year with Dan Seals for the hit single, "Meet Me In Montana."

Osmond has a 3-year-old son, Stephen, by her previous marriage.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Jean-Michel Cousteau, a lifetime ocean explorer and the oldest son of adventurer Jacques Yves Cousteau, says more progress is needed toward cleaning up the world's oceans and rivers.

"The real issue is, 'Are we destroying ourselves?' " the 49-year-old adventurer said Tuesday night in a speech on "Archaeology and the Sea" as part of a Florida State University Distinguished Lecture Series.

Cousteau said, though, that some progress has made on environmental issues.

"We have managed to outvote the Japanese and Russians on the whaling issue," he said. "We can look toward the bright days on whaling issues. I think the Great Whales are coming back as a result of this."

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sean Penn faces a Dec. 3 trial after his attorney entered an innocent plea for him to misdemeanor battery charges stemming from an altercation with a songwriter over Penn's rock star wife, Madonna.

Penn, 25, a star of "The Falcon and the Snowman" and other films, is accused of pushing songwriter David Wolinski off a chair in Helena's nightclub April 12, then kicking him. Wolinski, 37, told police Penn accused him of trying to kiss Madonna. The plea was entered Tuesday.

Another case involving Penn is pending. He is being sued for $1 million by free-lance photographer Lawrence Cottrell, who claims Penn beat him and another man when they tried to interview him in Nashville, Tenn., last June.

Penn was fined $50 and received a 90-day suspended sentence after pleading no contest to assault charges.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The Doobie Brothers hope to reunite next May for one concert at the Los Angeles Coliseum to benefit Vietnam veterans, one member of the rock 'n' roll group says.

John McFee said Tuesday in an interview that members of the group, which disbanded in 1982, have verbally committed to play together again at the concert May 24 or 25.

Concert promoters would like to line up other Vietnam-era groups, such as Creedence Clearwater Revival and the Eagles, for the concert, McFee said.

LONDON (AP) — Novelist John Braine, whose books, plays, films and journalism focusing on the gritty realities of life in Britain after World War II created an artistic upheaval in the 1950s, has died. He was 64.

His family said Braine died in a a London hospital after suffering a burst stomach ulcer.

Braine and playwright John Osborne and novelists Alan Sillitoe, Stan Barstow and Keith Waterhouse, among others, were dubbed by critics "The Angry Young Men." The tag came from Osbourne's first play "Look Back in Anger" in 1956 satirizing middle-class life.

Hallmarks of the "Angry Young Men" were northern industrial settings, portraits of working class life, a determination to portray bleak reality, a desire to broaden horizons and anger at society's restrictions, such as the British class system.

Rebels earn No. 7 rating

From Staff and Wire Reports

The Midland Lee Rebels, with a 24-14 victory over previously No. 2 ranked Odessa Permian, broke into The Associated Press schoolboy football poll this week at No. 7, behind No. 5 ranked District 4-5A foe San Angelo.

Immediately behind Lee is No. 8 Converse Judson, the team that defeated the Rebels in the 1983 state championship game while Permian fell into a tie for 10th with Houston Yates, the team that beat the Panthers for the 1985 state title.

Lee will face No. 5 San Angelo Friday night in San Angelo and that matchup is rated as the top game in the state. This will mark the second week in a row that the Rebels have been in the state's premier headline contest.

There were only three other losses among the 50 ranked teams in AP's weekly vote by a panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Astros' Lanier Manager of Year

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — Hal Lanier, who led a Houston team picked as a preseason also-ran and turned it into National League Western Division champions, was named today as Manager of the Year by The Associated Press.

Lanier, who was named Astros manager in the off-season after serving as a coach on St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog's staff for five years, received 53 votes in easily outdistancing Boston's John McNamara in the nationwide voting by sportswriters and broadcasters.

McNamara, whose Red Sox lost to the New York Mets in the seventh game of the World Series Monday night, received 14 votes.

Texas Manager Bobby Valentine, a rookie like Lanier, was third with 12 votes followed by Davey Johnson of the Mets with 10 votes.

New York Yankees Manager Lou Piniella, Pat Corrales of the Cleveland Indians and Gene Mauch of the California Angels each received one vote.

Herzog won the award last year and his aggressive style of baseball was reflected in Lanier's 1986 Astros, who lost to the Mets in six games in the NL playoffs.

"Whitey taught me how to run a pitching staff and I think that is a major part of managing," Lanier, who was the Cardinals' third-base coach in 1985, said. "I think I added to that a knowledge of how to recognize the talent we had and what we could do and couldn't do."

Lanier also transformed the Astros from a one-base-at-a-time attack to an aggressive running team in 1986. The Astros almost doubled their stolen bases from from 1985 stealing 163 compared to 96 the year before.

That was a key to the Astros' charge to their first divisional crown since 1980, when former Astros Manager Bill Virdon was named manager of the year.

"I knew we had more speed on the team than had been used," Lanier said. "And I feel that the players were ready for a change to the brand of baseball we wanted them to play."

Lanier drew skeptical looks in preseason when he forecast five Astros could steal 25 to 35 bases. He named Kevin Bass, Bill Doran, Billy Hatcher, Jose Cruz and Terry Puhl.

Doran led the team with 42 stolen bases followed by Hatcher with 38 and Bass with 22. Cruz and Puhl were slowed by injuries and did not figure in the new-style attack.

Lanier said the Astros also were assisted by several players having career-best seasons and he named Glenn Davis, who hit .265 and led the team with 31 home runs, and Bass, who hit a career-high .311.

"My philosophy is to give credit to the players who did the job," Lanier said. "A manager is only as good as his players and I'm glad I had this team for my first year as a manager.

"They gave me 100 percent from start to finish."

The players gave credit back.

"There were times early in the season where he would move a player over a little bit, and he'd be in the right spot to make the play on the next pitch," third baseman Phil Garner said.

"Right away, we knew he knew what he was doing. That goes a long way toward building confidence in someone."

"He's made me feel comfortable," Davis, only the second Astro to hit more than 30 homers in a season, said. "I respect him but I'm not intimidated by him. He's like a 10th person on the field."

The Astros battled the Mets before falling in Game 6 which lasted 16 innings.

"We had a great playoff, I don't think you could ask for much more excitement in the six games," Lanier said. "I think we're the same type of club as the Mets.

"In that last game we had the winning run on second base when the game ended. The Mets have done the same thing all year.

"They never gave up until the last man was out and neither did we."

Bridgeman, Cook among vets outsted

Associated Press

Veterans Junior Bridgeman and Jeff Cook were among the veterans cut Tuesday by NBA teams who have to be down to a 12-player limit by Thursday.

Bridgeman, an 11-year veteran from the University of Louisville, was waived by the Sacramento Kings, who acquired him in an offseason trade with the Los Angeles Clippers. The Kings also cut center Dan Federmann, a free agent from the University of Tennessee.

NBA

Cook, a 6-foot-10, 225-pound center-forward, has played seven years in the NBA. The Idaho State University graduate was injured with a broken wrist most of last year.

The NBA opens with nine games Friday night, and the 23 teams must have a roster with no more than 12 players.

In other roster moves Tuesday, the Chicago Bulls released former Loyola University star Alfredrick Hughes, who was cut by San Antonio earlier this year after a disappointing rookie season. He was the 14th pick in the first round of the 1985 draft.

The Phoenix Suns waived reserve forward Charles Jones and placed rookie center William Bedford and veteran guard Bernard Thompson on the injured list. Jones, the Suns' second-round draft pick out of Louisville in 1984, missed all eight preseason games this year with a stress fracture in his left leg. He was expected to be sidelined until at least January.

Bedford, the Suns' first-round draft pick this year out of Memphis State, injured his right knee in an Oct. 11 preseason game in Tucson, but is expected to return early next month. Thompson, who has two stress fractures in his left leg during the offseason, will be out until December.

The Indiana Pacers waived forward Bill Martin and put guard Kyle Macy on the league's injured list.

Martin, who played his college basketball at Georgetown, averaged 5.0 points in 66 games as a rookie last season. Macy suffered a fractured rib in preseason and is expected to be out for up to 10 days.

The Golden State Warriors placed veteran forward Peter Verhoeven and rookie guard Kenny Patterson on waivers, cutting their roster to 13 players. Verhoeven spent all of last season, his fifth in the NBA, with the Warriors and played in 61 games. Patterson played college basketball at DePaul.

Midland Lee Rebel Kristi Shelton comes up with a dig while teammate Michelle Lance looks on against San Angelo Tuesday.

San Angelo erases Lee's playoff hopes

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee's volleyball team flirted with a District 4-5A upset against the league leading San Angelo at the Lee gym Tuesday night before falling 15-8, 14-16, 15-6 to the Bobcats.

The Bobcats, now 10-1 in the league race, need only a victory over Odessa Permian Tuesday at home to clinch the 4-5A title. Midland High, 9-2, is also in the playoffs by virtue of a victory over Odessa High Tuesday night, but needs an upset by Permian to force a one-match playoff against San Angelo for the top district playoff berth.

Volleyball

Lee took a run at putting MHS back in the district title hunt, but wilted down the third game stretch after a tremendous rally in the second game.

The Bobcats took a workman like 15-8 victory in the first game, but Lee rallied from a 14-9 deficit in the second to win by a 16-14 margin.

A couple of soft spikes by Michelle Lant for points seemed to spark the Lee rally in the second game. San Angelo had match point at 14-9 and never got it.

Lee closed to 14-12 on the service of Susie Dunn and knotted it at 14 on Daphne Rhoads' service. Lee went ahead, 15-14, when San Angelo's Garlanda Freeze banged a shot into the net and Rhoads gave Lee the decision when she blocked a Bobcat shot that fell on the right side of the net.

The Rebels then battled the Bobcats to a 6-5 lead on another soft spike by Lant, but San Angelo steamed its way to the finish on the service of Freeze. Terri Washington won the match for San Angelo with what looked like a harmless dink the Rebels just couldn't return.

Sherrard so good, 'you can't overthrow him'

IRVING (AP) — Tex Schramm raised his fist in triumph when the Dallas Cowboys traded up to take wide receiver Mike Sherrard in the first round of the NFL draft.

"It's about time we finally did something right," said Schramm, who had been unhappy with the Cowboys' first-round mistakes the previous five years.

The Cowboys haven't been sorry a second since they took the speedy Sherrard, a rookie from UCLA who specializes in sensational catches.

"He gives something to our offense we've never had before," said quarterback Danny White. "He's so fast it's hard to lead him enough. And he has great hands. He makes the routine catches and he makes the great catches. It's impossible to overthrow him, and believe me I've tried."

Sherrard missed the first five weeks of training camp in a contract dispute but the Cowboys knew what he could do because of his extensive work at Valley Ranch in the off-season.

"He'll open up our offense," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "He'll take some of the double coverage off Tony Hill."

Sherrard still isn't being double-teamed by most clubs although he has caught touchdown passes of 22, 27, 36 and 39 yards.

"Teams don't give me a lot of respect deep and it's kind of funny because that's all I do is go deep," Sherrard said. "They kind of dare me to go deep."

Going deep, Sherrard caught five passes for 111 yards in a 37-6 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

"Mike can go deep and it helps loosen up the defense if we can throw to him four or five times during a game," said Dallas offensive coordinator Paul Hackett. "And he has great hands besides great speed."

The 6-foot-2, 185-pound Sherrard has excellent speed lines.

His mother, Cherrie, was a member of the 1964 U.S. Olympic team as an 80-meter hurdler. That was the same team that featured "bullet" Bob Hayes, who later became a Cowboys' receiver.

Hayes said, "You can see some similarities between her running style and Mike's."

Hill said Sherrard and running back Herschel Walker are the big reasons the Cowboys are improved this year.

"We are so diversified that teams can't key on one thing," Hill said.

Halloween is cancelled

The District 4-5A football schedule makers have no sense of holiday spirit. How can you make out a district schedule without Odessa Permian playing on Halloween night?

We might as well cancel Halloween due to lack of interest. There is no Mojo to rob little kids of their candy. The magician forgot his tricks. The witch has no broomstick to ride across darkened skies.

THE PUMPKIN has lost another tooth. The boogey-man is taking a rest. The ghost of District 4-5A past can't even carry his chains to a playing field.

The world has gone crazy. Halloween is without a monster mask. There are no dark alleys to fear. The jangling skeleton is locked in a closet.

This is the year that Halloween took a vacation. Spooks are on a sabbatical. Graves will remained closed. Theaters won't even show a "Friday the 18th, Part XXXII."

Midland Lee's sainted Rebels took the evil out of Halloween last week with a 24-14 exorcism of the Mojoless Panthers. The magic is gone. First place belongs to Bobkitties and Rebels on Halloween. It will be Oct. 31, 1986, the date that orange cats and maroon pranksters stole Halloween.

Joy replaces the forbidden haunts of the wicked monster of I-20. This is a celebration — not the dreaded ax choppings of the past. There is not a chainsaw in sight.

RATLIFF STADIUM'S lights will not spotlight the dreaded black this week. The lights will be out in Odessa. Halloween has moved to San Angelo for a gala affair. Even Odessa mayor Don Carter is wearing maroon these days.

Head busting will move out of the Permian Basin to the banks of the Concho, and at least, football fans in Midland and San Angelo are adjusting to the idea of there being no Halloween rather well.

A non-Halloween party of more than 20,000 is expected to gather in San Angelo without black cats to cross any paths. After all, if there isn't going to be a Halloween, that's no reason not to have a party.

The ticket grab began Tuesday in San Angelo and Midland as both offices were greeted with long lines of maskless fans eager for a celebration without interference from Mojo.

Forget Halloween. It just isn't going to happen this year. You can't have Halloween when Jack the Ripper is a no-show. But you can have a party. But even parties have to trim the guest list. Permian is uninvited, which is a bit like the Witch of the North not inviting the Boston Strangler.

MIDLAND HAS already requested more tickets from San Angelo, and Bobcat coach Jimmie Keeling said, "If you want a ticket, you better get one before the game. There seems to be some interest in this game."

Halloween died last week. Lee saw to that. All masks are now required to sport a smile. And now it's just a matter of finding out who will be able to giggle when the party is over.

And somewhere in the dark corner of Ratliff Stadium will be heard the wailing and woeful scream of a wounded black Panther — with no one to hear. It's the year Dracula bit himself in the neck.

A star for machine gun who talks like a man

"Top of the key to Baylor...Baylor yo-yo-ing in the front court...Give and go to Goodrich!...Bounce pass to West...Dribble-drive to the basket...He turns...He's fouled!...Oh, no, Mendy didn't call it! No harm, no foul...High post by Wilt...Turnaround fake by Jerry...He puts Cazzie in the popcorn machine...He shoots!...He scores!...Fall back, baby!"

A lot of my friends have their own pieces of sidewalk on Hollywood Boulevard. Spencer Tracy. Claudette Colbert. Mary Pickford. Gable. Doug Fairbanks. Bogie. Errol Flynn.

'Course, I didn't know all of them personally. But Tracy has been a friend of mine ever since "Captains Courageous." And Gable and Colbert crept into my heart in "It Happened One Night."

But now, guess who's joining Tracy and Gable and Katharine Hepburn and John Wayne? Guess who's going to join legends like Tom Mix and Iron Eyes Cody and Charlie Chaplin and Mack Sennett?

Francis Dayle Hearn is who. Chick Hearn. The world's greatest basketball announcer. The machine gun that talks like a man. The guy who did more than any other to take pro basketball out of the drafty gyms in Peoria and Altoona and put it on prime time.

EVERY basketball player signing a million-dollar contract should take off his hat stepping across that slice of sidewalk on Hollywood Boulevard they dedicated to Chick Hearn recently. It's a shrine of their biz if not show biz.

Basketball was a tough sell when Francis Hearn came along. I remember in the late winter of '61 going down to the Sports Arena where they were staging a playoff game between the then-St. Louis Hawks and the newly arrived – from Minneapolis – Los Angeles Lakers. It was a Sunday afternoon and they used to click off the attendance on a screen high above the arena floor. It read 2,800 that day as the teams took the floor.

Now, mind you, this was a playoff game. The division final. But not only were there few customers, there were hardly any other journalists covering games in those days.

But the Lakers had made a very important acquisition just before that series. In later years, they were to acquire Wilt Chamberlain, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, even Magic Johnson.

NONE, HOWEVER, was ever as important as the free agent they picked up that winter of '61. Chick Hearn and pro basketball made Romeo and Juliet, ham and eggs, gin and tonic look like unmatched opposites. It was like a river joining a sea. Caruso finding a song, Van Gogh a brush.

Any sport needs a lively nomenclature, word pictures that go into the language. Simple terms like bases loaded, circus catch, circuit clout, screwball and squeeze play all served to dramatize the grand old game of baseball which even became the national pastime, thanks to the fertile mind of some chronicler of press row.

Ted Husing took football out of its dock-fight image and invented secondaries, even tertiaries for its defensive postures, and talked of whole hosts of tacklers and coffin corner kicks until the game today is so full of colorful allusions it is almost liturgical in scope.

Chick Hearn did the same things for pro basketball, which had almost no language of its own when he came along. No more would divisional playoff games be played before 2,800 spectators after Chick hit the scene. They became the hardest tickets in town once Chick was out in front of the tent.

He didn't make basketball occult, he made it fun. He knew it as a player himself and he was far from a homer. Chick became almost a public scold when a player malingered. Or an ownership.

That's why he's got his gold star and his own section of sidewalk on Hollywood Boulevard. He didn't play the pro game but he sold it. As Elgin Baylor said at the dedication ceremony, "You made us stars. When you have a product, you need somebody to promote it. That was Chick."

THE HOLLYWOOD Walk of Fame is for entertainers, communicators, pioneers, builders. That's why Chick's there. He qualifies on all counts. That's why he finds himself across the street from Spencer Tracy and Claudette Colbert on Hollywood and Highland and not far from Adolphe Menjou and the forecourt famous of the Chinese theater.

He belongs to the ages now. Wallace Beery, Brian Donlevy, Cary Grant, Jimmy Stewart – and Chick Hearn. Pretty heady stuff for the ex-backcourt man from East Aurora and Peoria.

Pretty soon they'll be selling star maps to his home and he'll have a busload of people waving when he puts out the garbage in the morning. Papparazzi will be waiting in the bushes with poised shutters when he emerges to go to work. They'll want Robert DeNiro to do "The Chick Hearn Story."

Hollywood Boulevard is marbled with the names of men and women who helped build a multimillion-dollar industry. Chick Hearn is there because he's one of them.

Bowa gets call from Bigs, this time as manager

AP Laserphoto

Larry Bowa

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Larry Bowa, the former All-Star shortstop whose team won a minor-league title in his first managing job, was named manager of the San Diego Padres Tuesday, replacing Steve Boros.

Boros was fired as manager but will work in an unspecified job in the Padres organization, General Manager Jack McKeon announced Tuesday. Boros formerly was director of minor-league instruction for the Padres.

He took over as manager of the team three days into spring training when Dick Williams resigned and guided the Padres to a 74-88 record and a fourth-place finish in the National League West.

Bowa, the Padres 11th manager in the organization's 18 years, led the Padres' Class AAA farm club in Las Vegas to an 80-62 record and the 1986 Pacific Coast League title.

A shortstop who played 16 years in the major leagues, Bowa collected 2,191 hits for a .260 lifetime batting average before retiring after the 1985 season.

He passed on a $250,000 contract offer to play as a utility infielder for the New York Mets this season to begin his managerial career.

"I certainly feel that Larry has a chance to be an outstanding major league manager," McKeon said.

Bowa, 40, led the major leagues in fielding a record six times, won two Gold Gloves and set a National League record for most games by a shortstop (2,222), playing 12 seasons for Philadelphia, three for the Chicago Cubs and splitting his final season between with the Cubs and Mets.

Boros, 50, who was in Tahiti and unavailable for comment, had served as manager of the Oakland A's in 1983 and a portion of 1984. He was fired on May 24, 1984, after Oakland started the season with a 20-24 record. His record at Oakland was 94-112.

The Padres also announced that the coaching staff for 1987 would remain intact except for third-base coach Jack Krol, who will be offered another job in the organization. The newcomer to the staff is Greg Riddoch, who served as coordinator of minor league instruction after Boros became manager.

Bowa was twice suspended in May by PCL President Bill Cutler following ejections by female umpire Pam Postema. League reports said Bowa spit toward Postema in the ninth inning of a game to earn his first suspension and carried on a nine-inning verbal barrage against Postema in the next game.

Cutler said at the time, "I didn't think he'd be as bad as he has been."

Bowa contended Postema was in "a little over her head" as an umpire.

"She reversed three decisions on me and she was wrong on all three. I would have done the same thing if it was a man. It didn't matter if she was a man or a woman," Bowa said Tuesday when asked if he had any regrets about his run-ins with Postema.

After the incidents, Bowa calmed and there were no further incidents between the two.

"Don't expect me to be a choir boy. I never have been. But don't expect me to get kicked out of 50 games either," Bowa told a news conference.

Carter, Schmidt best at postions, again

Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Catcher Gary Carter and third baseman Mike Schmidt are rated as the best in the National League at their positions for the sixth straight year, according to ratings compiled by the Elias Sports Bureau that encompass statistics from the last two years.

Carter and Schmidt are the only players to be No. 1 since the rankings began. All but one NL player repeated from last year.

Dale Murphy of Atlanta was the top NL outfielder for the fourth straight season. Second baseman Ryne Sandberg of Chicago, shortstop Ozzie Smith of St. Louis and first baseman Keith Hernandez repeated for the third straight year and starting pitcher Dwight Gooden of New York was a repeater from 1985.

The only change from 1985 was that San Francisco reliever Scott Garrelts replaced San Diego's Rich Gossage.

Five American League players repeated from 1985. They were first baseman Don Mattingly of New York, second baseman Lou Whitaker of Detroit, shortstop Cal Ripken Jr. of Baltimore, catcher Lance Parrish of Detroit and third baseman George Brett of Kansas City.

Newly ranked No. 1 players in the AL were Texas designated hitter Larry Parrish, replacing Mike Easler of the Yankees; Boston outfielder Jim Rice of Boston, supplanting Dave Winfield of New York; and California reliever Donnie Moore, replacing Detroit's Willie Hernandez.

Detroit's Jack Morris, who filed for free agency Tuesday, was rated the No. 1 starter in the American League.

Moderation key to activity

The writing of this column finds me riding in the back of a National Car of Texas listening to Patsy Cline singing "Sweet Dreams." We are in the middle of Nebraska headed for Texas.

The last four days have been spent pheasant hunting in South Dakota. It would be reasonable to ask "what does this drivel have to do with sports medicine?" If you could see the inside of our car, you would understand.

Cecil has a sprained ankle, Royce's stomach is bothering him (us too), Bill's knees hurt, my neck is killing me and Ryan is doing his homework.

The great lesson to be learned here is moderation. To begin with, we drove 28 hours continuously (1,400 miles), slept two hours and then went hunting.

Pheasant hunting is not unlike hunting doves, meaning you have to walk. We are talking serious WALKING — miles and miles of it in rough pasture, corn and milo fields and heavily wooded draws. This type of terrain is just perfect for spraining ankles, aggravating arthritic knees and wrenching necks.

After the hunt (and considerable time spent cleaning birds) we'd get cleaned up and go into town to eat. By 10:30 or 11 p.m. (our appetites enlarged by our efforts and egos) we'd eat enough rich food (walleye fish, buffalo steaks and prime ribs) to keep an entire company of marines in a positive caloric balance for a month.

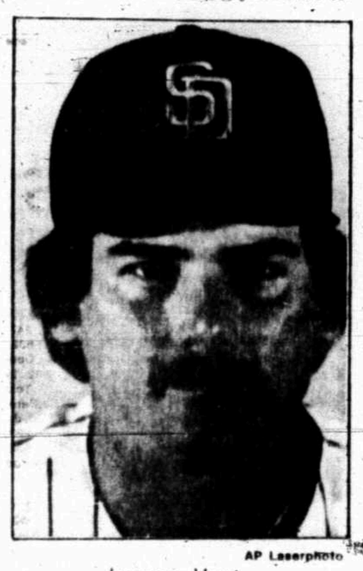

We'd generally finish the evening by telling each other lies for a couple of hours before turning in. After two or three hours of sleep, we'd get up and start all over again.

It is obvious, even to the novice, we were making several mistakes. The excitement frenzy that drives us to the hunt should be tempered by restraint. Instead of a 28-hour drive, we should have made the trip in two days.

Certainly we would arrive at our destination fresher. Second, we should have paced our hunting so as not to wear out a pair of Browning hunting boots in four days. Third, we should have left the rich food alone and eaten the bologna sandwiches we normally get at home.

I am going to preserve these simple tenets of wisdom and practicality until next year when, on the 28-hour drive, Royce, Cecil, Bill, Ryan and I can discuss them. Perhaps we'll realize moderation.

Lamarr Hoyt

Padres' Hoyt busted for smuggling pills

SAN DIEGO (AP) — San Diego Padres pitcher Lamarr Hoyt was arrested Tuesday night at the San Ysidro border crossing by U.S. Customs agents when he allegedly tried to bring hundreds of illegal pills into the United States, a Customs spokesman said.

Mike Fleming, public affairs officer for the U.S. Customs Pacific Region, said Hoyt was stopped as he walked across the border from Mexico about 7 p.m. PDT.

According to Fleming, an inspector got suspicious when he noticed a bulge in Hoyt's clothing and took Hoyt to a secondary inspection area for a pat-down search. The search revealed two plastic bags in Hoyt's groin area containing 322 Valium tablets, 169 Quaaludes, and 30 unidentified tablets, Fleming said.

This was Hoyt's third run-in with the law this year. The former Cy Young Award winner was detained at the border in February after U.S. Customs agents found illegal pills on him. Also in February, San Diego police stopped Hoyt and cited him for carrying marijuana cigarettes and a switchblade.

Later, Hoyt spent a month in a drug and alcohol rehabilation center.

Fleming said Hoyt was taken into custody by U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agents and Customs agents.

Midland Lee's Susie Dunn contemplates defeat after the San Angelo Bobcats eliminated the Rebels from the District 4-5A playoff race Tuesday at Lee Gym.

"At least, San Angelo had to come in here and fight for their lives. They didn't run over us," said Lee volleyball coach Janice Baulch. "Our girls are capable of playing with them, but I don't think we ever loosened up.

"We let San Angelo dictate the tempo of the game and we can't play that way. San Angelo has a fast-paced offense and we like the slower, methodical type game. We seemed to play our game in the second game and early in the third game, but I think mental and physical fatigue set in. The girls wanted to win so badly that they put a lot of mental pressure on themselves."

Lee will end its season Saturday on a trip to Abilene High. A Rebel victory would insure Lee, now 6-5 in the race, third place. MHS will host Abilene Cooper in a playoff warmup.

San Angelo coach Cynthia Williams is taking her Bobcat playoff berth in stride.

"We won't do anything special for the playoffs. Despite all the attention, it's just like any other match we play. You scout the team and then go back to fundamentals," said Williams.

Williams also took the near upset in stride, saying, "I wasn't a bit pleased that we let the match go three games, but that's the nature of the beast in volleyball. Lee played well and had some good rallies, but we should have put that second game away."

In junior varsity action, San Angelo rolled to a 15-1, 15-3 victory over Lee.

MIDLAND HIGH, with the help of San Angelo's win over Lee, clinched a playoff berth by beating Odessa High, 15-9, 12-15, 15-3.

The win still leaves MHS a game behind the Bobcats for the 4-5A title. San Angelo has a 10-1 record while Midland High is 9-2. San Angelo hosts Odessa Permian Saturday to end the season's play while the Bulldogs host Abilene Cooper at 2 p.m.

"The only way we can tie is for Permian to beat them and since we have no control over it we're not going to hope for it so we're preparing for Amarillo High in the playoffs," said MHS coach Sonja Pittman.

Amarillo High is the winner of District 3-5A while Amarillo Tascosa finished second and, if things stand, will play San Angelo.

In junior varsity action, Odessa High posted a 15-8, 4-15, 15-12 victory over Midland High.

Aggies' Crite breaks hand

Driesell resigns head coach job, accepts assistant AD

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Lefty Driesell's 17 years as basketball coach at the University of Maryland have apparently come to an end under less than amicable circumstances four months after the drug-related death of All-American Len Bias.

According to sources, Driesell signed an agreement Tuesday which would resolve the remaining nine years on his contract. Yet there seemed to be more involved than monetary considerations as separate news conferences scheduled for today indicated.

Soon after Chancellor John B. Slaughter called a 9 a.m. news conference to announce Driesell's move to another campus position, believed to be assiatnt athletic director, Driesell called his own conference to start one hour earlier.

With no compromise possible, Slaughter later changed the starting time of his conference to 10:30, allowing more time for media personnel and their equipment to be moved from one campus location to another.

Driesell's action didn't suprise Jim Kehoe, the retired athletic director who hired the coach in 1969.

"Why would he want to share the platform with the man who sacked him?" Kehoe asked.

Driesell and Slaughter declined comment. Driesell, reached at home Tuesday night, said, "I can't talk now. I'll see you at 9 a.m."

The coach met with his team late Tuesday at his home. According to players who attended the somber, 1 hour and 15 minute session, he bid a teary farewell.

Driesell's contract called for him to coach four more seasons and then work five years in another university capacity.

Ron Bradley, a Driesell assistant for three years, was expected to be named interim head coach for the coming season.

With the start of their season pushed back a month by Slaughter, the Terrapins don't open practice until Saturday, 17 days after the date allowed by the NCAA.

The new agreement, said to be worth more than $1 million, would resolve Driesell's status at the university while heading off a possible lawsuit for the remaining $2 million to $3 million he expected to make on the old contract.

Counting salary, endorsements, radio and television shows, and a summer basketball camp, Driesell reportedly earned more than $300,000 a year.

Despite a highly successful won-lost record, Driesell came under fire after the cocaine-induced death of Bias. Subsequent investigations disclosed drug use and academic shortcomings by other members of the team.

Driesell disputed some of the findings of Prince George's County State's Attorney Arthur A. Marshall Jr. and a special university task force appointed by Slaughter.

The embattled coach vowed to continue coaching, but finally succumbed to Slaughter's stand and agreed to terms of an agreement hammered out by attorneys over a period of weeks.

"A year ago, they thought enough of Lefty to give him a 10-year contract," Kehoe said in a telephone interview late Tuesday. "Now, he's not fit to be seen. They did nothing but demean and embarrass him for four months."

Bias died of cocaine intoxication on June 19, and Marshall tried to have Driesell indicted for obstruction of justice, claiming the coach sought to have Bias' room cleaned of drugs after he collapsed in a dormitory.

The grand jury voted on Aug. 26 to reject the suggestion by Marshall, but the proseeutor later lambasted Driesell for placing winning ahead of education.

"There are right and wrong ways to do things," Kehoe said, "and what they (the administration) did was indefensible. They had Lefty swinging from the yardarm, and his wife and kids were humiliated."

Kehoe questioned why Slaughter took so long to act after the grand jury vote, and said any damage to Driesell's image came from Marshall and a portion of the media.

Driesell took over a downtrodden Maryland program that had posted a 27-48 record during three consecutive losing seasons before his arrival.

Over the next 17 years, the Terrapins went 348-159 under Driesell, winning 20 or more games in 10 different seasons while competing in the tough Atlantic Coast Conference.

With a 526-224 record, Driesell is one of 17 coaches with at least 10 years at an NCAA Division I school to reach 500 victories.

"Lefty says he still wants to coach," Kehoe said. "At 54, he feels he's got another half dozen years, at least. He's not ready to sit around and answer telephones, and push position papers around."

Should he eventually accept a coaching job elsewhere, Driesell has told friends he would seek to reopen negotiations with the university to settle for a lesser amount of compensation.

Washington intercepts SWC defensive honor

Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — A couple of days before the Houston game, Arkansas cornerback Charles Washington was passing by the office of defensive coordinator Fred Goldsmith.

"We've got a big game coming up against Houston," Goldsmith told Washington. "You need to get an interception to keep up with the one from last year."

Washington, a fifth-year senior, reminded Goldsmith that he had made an interception in each of his three appearances against the Cougars. On Saturday night, in the Astrodome, he picked off two more passes and Goldsmith said, "Well, it looks like you went over your limit."

Washington's first interception came with 35 seconds left in the half.

Less than two minutes earlier, Arkansas broke a 6-6 tie on Marshall Foreman's 19-yard run. Washington's 32-yard return to the Houston 35 set up Kendall Trainor's 51-yard field goal and a 16-6 lead.

In the fourth quarter, he picked off a pass to set up the final touchdown in a 30-13 victory.

For his performance, Washington was named Defensive Player of the Week in the Southwest Conference.

Baylor quarterback Cody Carlson is the Offensive Player of the Week in the SWC. He threw for 312 yards and three touchdowns, including bombs of 72 and 86 yards in the fourth quarter, in a 28-17 victory over Texas Christian.

Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield said Washington made a terrific play on his first interception.

"The receiver is right on him," Hatfield said. "Somehow he heeps his balance and doesn't get knocked down. He pulls out of that and next thing you know, I think he's going to score."

Going from a tie to a 10-point lead in 2:11 was a big lift for the Razorbacks, he said.

"We were anticipating that they would try to get a big play," Washington said. "I was watching the quarterback. Once he threw, I just played the ball. When I caught the ball, I felt the guy coming over me. I reversed my outside shoulder and it worked. I had seen a lot of quarterbacks do it when they were being rushed. I tried it and it happened to work."

On his second interception, Washington said he and Nate White had a chance to intercept for a touchdown.

"I tried to yell at Nate to let the ball go because I had it, but he grabbed hold of the ball," Washington said. "I think he was kind of scared. I was the receiver."

Washington has been injured during much of his college career and he said the coaches had stressed in the spring that he would be needed this fall. He is the only senior among the top seven defensive backs — two of last year's starters, Greg Lasker and Kevin Wyatt, are in the NFL.

Washington also made six unassisted tackles against Houston. Goldsmith said Washington had become a better tackler than Wyatt.

The Washington Bullets reduced their roster by requesting waivers on guard Michael Adams. The former Boston College star signed as a free agent in May after playing in the Continental Basketball Association last season.

The Cleveland Cavaliers cut three players — rookie Kevin Henderson of Fullerton State and veterans Dwayne McClain and Willie White — to get down to the limit of 12 players. The final roster includes rookies Brad Daugherty, Johnny Newman, John Williams, Mark Price and Ron Harper.

Rookie guard Andre Turner of Memphis State was placed on waivers by the Los Angeles Lakers.

James Dolan and Troy Webster, both late-round draft picks in 1986, and Nigel Miguel, the New Jersey Nets' third-round 1985 pick, were waived by the New Jersey Nets. Veteran guard Pace Mannion was placed on the injured list.

The New York Knicks cut two rookies, guard Michael Jackson, a former Georgetown teammate of center Patrick Ewing, and forward Jerome Mincy of Alabama-Birmingham.

The Seattle SuperSonics trimmed their roster to 13 players by placing 6-foot-9 rookie forward Curtis Kitchen, a 1986 sixth-round draft choice from South Florida, on the suspended list. Sonics' spokesman Sam Tuttle said Kitchen left the team's training camp to go to Europe to play basketball.

The Los Angeles Clippers waived veteran center Ozell Jones and guards Jose Slaughter and Bobby Parks.

Musil scores first goal for Stars in 7-4 win

Associated Press

Frantisek Musil was a star for his native country. He probably won't ever be that again after defecting from Czechoslovakia, so the defenseman must concentrate on playing for his new home team, the Minnesota North Stars.

Musil, considered the best defenseman in Europe, joined the North Stars during the summer when Minnesota General Manager Lou Nanne aided in his defection. It took Musil eight games to get untracked offensively, but he began repaying Nanne and the Stars Tuesday night with his first NHL goal in a 7-4 victory over Calgary.

Red hot Dino Ciccarelli conneeted twice for Minnesota, and Brian Lawton had a goal and two assists. The Flames' Perry Berezan scored on a penalty shot in the second period.

In other games, it was Quebec 6, Los Angeles 2; Hartford 5, Pittsburgh 2; Toronto 2, Chicago 1; Washington 5, Vancouver 2; and the New York Islanders 2, Philadelphia 1.

North Stars 7, Flames 4

"It was a great feeling," the 21-year-old defenseman said after snapping a 3-3 tie. "I want to play the best and sometimes I make stupid mistakes. I was pressing a little bit.

"The first goal is the hardest. "I'm going to send the puck home."

Ciccarelli, whose 13 goals are one less than the total of league-leader Mario Lemieux of Pittsburgh, thought the penalty shot swung things in Minnesota's favor, even though Berezan beat goalie Don Beaupre on it.

"The big turning point was the penalty shot," Ciccarelli said. "They scored and maybe they sat back on their heels a little bit."

Berezan was pulled down from behind on a breakaway by defenseman Ron Wilson. He became the first Calgary player to score on a penalty shot since Jim Peplinski on Oct. 13, 1984. It was the first penalty shot Beaupre has faced in his seven-year NHL career.

Nordiques 6, Kings 2

Brent Ashton scored three goals in the second period for the Nordiques, as Los Angeles lost all five games on its Eastern swing.

Peter Stastny had a goal and three assists and Paul Gillis and Alain Cote also scored for the Nordiques. Jim Fox and rookie Jimmy Carson scored goals for Los Angeles.

The teams were tied 1-1 in the opening period, but Ashton then took charge. He converted Stastny's pass from behind the net into the tie-breaking goal at 3:24, then struck again with Quebec shorthanded at 10:36. He blocked a shot by defenseman Mark Hardy at the blue line and scored on a breakaway with a backhander past Darren Eliot.

It was Ashton again 21 seconds later, when he parked himself in front of Eliot and swept a pass from Stastny into the net.

"It was one of those games where you get a lot of chances and you try to take advantage of them," Ashton said. "Of course, I missed a few chances that I should have put in, but you take what you get."

Whalers 5, Penguins 2

Ray Ferraro scored twice in the third period and assisted on Torrie Robertson's game-winner for Hartford, which stopped everyone but Lemieux in handing the Penguins only their second loss in 10 games.

Robertson snapped a 2-2 tie at 4:26 and Ferraro completed his second straight two-goal game with breakaway scores at 9:58 and 15:51.

Lemieux scored twice and is on a pace to score 112 goals — the league record is 92 by Wayne Gretzky.

"We played a good game along the boards and checked them to limit their chances," said Ferraro.

"All we tried to do was try to keep the puck away from Lemieux," said Whalers Coach Jack Evans. "We didn't try anything special but I think, defensively, this was our best game this year."

Maple Leafs 2, Blackhawks 1

Russ Courtnall assisted on the tying goal and scored the winner for Toronto. Chicago scored just 29 seconds into the game when a bouncing puck glanced off the backboards and onto the stick of Al Secord, who flipped it past Leafs goaltender Ken Wregget. But that was it for the Blackhawks, who are last in the weak Norris Division at 2-6-2.

Courtnall cut through the middle of Chicago's defense, took a pass from defenseman Todd Gill and put a 15-foot backhander past goaltender Murray Bannerman for the decisive goal. He set up Tom Fergus' second-period score.

Courtnall said he came into the game determined to play better defense.

"The last few games, my line didn't play too well defensively," he said. "We were trying to do too many things individually.I had a talk with Coach (John) Brophy and I said I'd concentrate a little more on my play in our own end. I said I'd go out and work hard. I wouldn't promise to make no mistakes, but I said I'd put in a good effort."

Capitals 5, Canucks 2

Rookie center Michal Pivonka, another defector from Czechoslovakia, scored twice, giving him six goals in 10 games. Pivonka scored on a deflection in the first period and a rising snap shot in the second session.

The other Washington goals were by Lou Franceschetti, defenseman Rod Langway and Craig Laughlin, who scored into an empty net as the Capitals stretched their unbeaten streak to five games.

The Canucks, 2-6-1, went winless for the third straight game despite goals from Moe Lemay and Rich Sutter.

Islanders 2, Flyers 1

Rookie Brad Lauer scored his second NHL goal 26 seconds into the third period, knocking in a backhander with Flyers goalie Ron Hextall out of position for the winner. Duane Sutter also scored for New York, which killed off all five Flyers power plays. Ilkka Sinisalo had Philadelphia's goal.

"The puck came right to me and he (Hextall) was out of the play," Lauer said. "I was very excited at the time, it was a big goal."

Gotham fans turn out to celebrate Mets' victory

By RICHARD JUSTICE
The Washington Post

NEW YORK — A crowd that police estimated at 2.2 million lined eight blocks of lower Broadway, leaned from windows and filled sunny Manhattan skies with confetti Tuesday afternoon in a long, passionate salute to baseball's newest champions, the New York Mets.

Although the celebration ended on the steps outside City Hall and included Gov. Mario Cuomo, Mayor Ed Koch and dozens of other local politicians, it more closely resembled a neighborhood street fair than a formal parade.

"Thank you for making a dream come true," Mets catcher Gary Carter told the crowd.

By the time Carter grabbed the microphone for that brief message, thousands of teen-agers and office workers had been standing shoulder to shoulder for a near-magical two hours at City Hall plaza.

They listened to taped music by Frank Sinatra and the rock group Queen, occasionally shouting down a politician. Then, when the Mets' wives joined the party, they were led in a sing-along by golfer Nancy Lopez, the wife of Series most valuable player Ray Knight.

The day's biggest cheer was for Mets Manager Davey Johnson, who told the crowd: "I want to thank you for that wonderful parade. It was so much fun, we ought to try to do it again next year."

The Mets had showed up at Battery Park in lower Manhattan only hours after leaving Shea Stadium, where they beat the Boston Red Sox, 8-5, in Game 7 of the World Series Monday night. Many of them looked tired, but all seemed to drink in the appreciation for what Koch said was the largest turnout ever for a New York ticker-tape parade.

In fact, Koch was good-naturedly jeered and interrupted several times during a brief speech, in which he said: "We are the international capital of the world, but the Mets have made us a small town with love and affection for one another. Today, we're all family, and you guys did it."

He awarded each player a gold key to the city as they stepped from City Hall onto a odium. The last player to be introduced was Knight, who, in an emotional moment said: "One thing I'd like to say is that I'm playing with 24 of the most wonderful men I've ever been associated with. I've played 16 years, and I don't remember a team ever pulling together like this one."

After accepting the keys to the city, the Mets then showed off their franchise's second World Series trophy and the first since 1969. Carter, dressed in a neat, conservative suit, and first baseman Keith Hernandez, decked out in jeans and a Mets T-shirt, held the trophy aloft as thousands cheered.

"You fans are great," Hernandez said. "You made the difference in Games 6 and 7. Boston couldn't handle the Mets fans."

Outfielder Mookie Wilson also got a big ovation when he announced: "1986 — year of the Mets; 1987 — year of the Mets; 1988 — year of the Mets."

Tuesday marked the beginning of what is likely to be a long winter of banquets, commercial endorsements and accepting of congratulations. Some of that started Sunday with Johnson making a Rolaids commercial at Shea Stadium.

"They show me reaching for a bottle of Rolaids," he said, "and I say: 'I can't believe he walked the leadoff hitter.' I didn't have to rehearse for that one."

"The whole state of New York is proud of the Mets," Cuomo said Tuesday afternoon. "We're grateful, not just for their winning, but for the courage they showed us, for not giving up. They won 116 games, and I'm looking forward to their winning 117 next year."

Hearing that, Mets General Manager Frank Cashen must have grimaced and would only tell the crowd: "I promise you there's more to come."

Boston's baseball karma bad, '46, '67, '75, '86

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Are doors creeking in Kenmore Square? Do things go bump in the night on the Charles River? Is Faneuil Hall really haunted?

Clearly, the baseball karma is bad in Boston. If the rest of the town is free of evil spirits, Fenway Park is not. Consider the plight of the Red Sox, seventh-game losers in the World Series once more.

That's four times now — 1946, 1967, 1975 and 1986 — that Boston has reached the brink of Series success, and then dropped into the chasm of failure.

The moments are etched indelibly in Red Sox' fans memories.

— Enos Slaughter, circling the bases, running through a stop sign at third base, to score the winning run for St. Louis in the seventh game in 1946.

— Jim Lonborg, coming back on two days' rest, unable to coax one more victory from a worn-out arm and losing Game 7 to St. Louis in 1967.

— Joe Morgan's broken-bat single chasing home Cincinnati's winning run in the ninth inning of the final game in 1975.

— And now Calvin Schiraldi, ace of the Boston bullpen, victimized in consecutive games by the New York Mets to kill the Sox in 1986.

And that litany doesn't include the pennant playoff heartbreaks inflicted by Lou Boudreau and the Cleveland Indians in 1948 and Bucky Dent and the New York Yankees in 1978.

Is there any end to this aggravation?

The last time Boston won the World Series was 1918. You'd have to be about 75 years old today to remember that team and the ace of its pitching staff, a stylish left-hander named Babe Ruth.

Two years later, Red Sox owner Harry Frazee, seeking capital to invest in a production of "No, No, Nanette," sold Ruth to the New York Yankees. Some one should have told him, "No, No, Harry."

Ruth, of course, went on to become a baseball legend. "No, No, Nanette," also prospered. The Red Sox, however, did not. It was as if Frazee had angered the baseball gods by auctioning off a man who would become one of the most revered players in the game. And Boston, it seems, is still paying the price for the misdemeanor.

The fates really put the screws to Red Sox fans this time. They baited the trap in California, making it seem that the Angels, not Boston would be this year's victims.

Lions impress Alabama's Perkins

Backs good, but wow, Penn State's lines

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

College Football

As you might expect, Alabama Coach Ray Perkins was impressed by Penn State's football team, which trounced the Crimson Tide 23-3 last Saturday.

A few words from Perkins on the Nittany Lions:

"The key to their football team? They've got big, really fine offensive linemen and they've got big, really fine defensive linemen. You can talk about (tailback D.J.) Dozier and (fullback Steve) Smith, and those people are necessary, but to be a great football team you better have some great linemen on both sides of the football. They do and they can run. They're the fastest Penn State team that we've played, certainly.

"The offensive linemen have got real good feet and can run, the defensive linemen are strong and can run. Not to mention that they've got a fine set of linebackers, as well.

"They don't try to trick you. They'll run a reverse a couple of different ways, and stuff like that, but they do the same things that Penn State's been doing for years and years and years. They do a good job with the sprint draw and the sprint draw action and the sprint draw pass off of that.

"You try to figure out whether they're a great football team or not. At certain positions they might not have great players, but they've got real good players at every position and they do the things that it takes to win ballgames week in and week out. They don't do a lot of things to lose ballgames."

WHEN PENN State played Oklahoma in the 1972 Sugar Bowl, the scoreboard at old Tulane Stadium only had room for four letters of the team name and Penn State first appeared as "PENN." Coach Joe Paterno graduated from Brown University but he didn't cotton to having his powerhouse confused with an Ivy League team and by game day the scoreboard had been changed to "PSU."

A lot of coaches wouldn't mind being mistaken for Penn, which has won or shared the last four Ivy League championships and is shooting for No. 5 with a 6-0 record. The Quakers also have a 30-26 triumph over Division I-A Navy, under new Coach Ed Zubrow, who took over when Jerry Berndt went to Rice. "Ugly" and "nasty" are terms that have been used admiringly by rival coaches to describe the Quakers.

"They've been a team that's been able to show progress each week, and that was something we went into the season very concerned with," Zubrow says. "We felt we had a lot of questions to answer, frankly, going into the season and we've been able to answer them each week as we go along, but we feel we have an awful lot of room for improvement still. We don't have any idea yet how good a team we are going to be."

PRINCETON'S RON Rogerson, who has the task of trying to derail Penn this week, calls the Quakers "an exceptional football team," adding:

"If you want to compare them, I think they'd do very well in the Yankee Conference. They're big and strong in their offensive line, they have two or three of those guys in the 250-260 range. But the thing that's kind of frightening to me is that people who have played them have told me that as good as they look on film, they're quicker and they're bigger and they're better on the field.

"The two running backs, (Chris) Flynn and (Rich) Comizio, are exceptional. Defensively, I thought they'd be down a little bit this year but they're not in the least. They're tenacious, they're ugly, they play a real aggressive style of football. It's very difficult for me to find many loopholes in their team and in their program.

"They're an aggressive football team. They attack, they tackle with a vengeance, they swarm to the ball and it looks like before every defensive surge they all take a bite out of a piece of lemon and they come out on the field with their faces all screwed up."

Columbia's Larry McElreavy has coached in the Ivy League for 10 years, including a two-year stint at Penn (1981-82). He knows a little bit about the Quakers, who trampled his team 42-7 earlier this month.

"They are kind of un-Ivy Leaguish," McElreavy says. "You can detect the difference in the type of hitting, the type of violence that occurs on the football field, within different leagues. We've had a couple of times in a couple of our games when we've snapped the ball and you didn't hear a pad. There's supposed to be plastic on plastic. There's supposed to be noise.

"What Jerry wanted to establish — and Ed has done a nice job of bringing it along — was that the athletes that we were going to recruit there were going to be ones that wanted to play football and were going to work at getting physically strong.

"When you're physically strong you can hit harder. And they're physically very, very strong. They don't have fat kids. Their kids are big, but they started off as 215, 220-pounders, they got on the iron, they're 245-250 pounds of lean body tissue, not soft body tissue. And they all can run.

"We did some things at Penn that some of the other (Ivy) schools hadn't done. As an example, we did a hidden no-no by saying, 'You are required to go to the weight room.' Within the Ivies you're not supposed to say that, and I'm not being facetious at all.

"They don't like the idea that you're out for football because you want to be out for football. Your academics are first. They're first at Penn, also. But we got there and said, 'Listen, if you want to be part of this football program you're going to the weight room and you're going to squat and you're going to power-clean. You're not going to tell us you've got a bad back, or you've got this. You're going to do it if you want to be part of this football program.

"The first year or two it was kind of tough, but now they do it as second-nature.

"You can see what's happened to the league because the last five or six years they have not been competitive outside the league with one exception, and that's Pennsylvania, because they have established an attitude that, fine, we're an Ivy League school, we've got to put a shirt and tie on, we're good students, and so on, but we're going to attempt to play football and play it very, very well."

Kramer rebounds Vikings' future

Associated Press

Two years ago, after a dreadful 3-13 season, the Minnesota Vikings decided Tommy Kramer was their quarterback of the past and went looking for their quarterback of the future.

They zeroed in on Bernie Kosar, worked out a trade with the Houston Oilers to be able to draft the Miami, Fla. star, then discovered they had been outmaneuvered by the Cleveland Browns. The Browns ended up with Kosar via a special supplemental draft.

Two years later, Tommy Kramer, after 10 years in the National Football League and a stint four years ago in a rehabilitation center for alcohol abuse, is Minnesota's quarterback of the future. And doing just fine, thank you — including against Kosar, whom he outplayed last Sunday in Minnesota's 23-20 loss to Cleveland that was largely the fault of a botched punting game.

Despite that loss, the Vikings find themselves 5-3 midway through the 1986 season, and contending for at least a wild-card playoff berth.

The major reason is Kramer. In previous years an injury-prone, interception-prone quarterback, he seems to be jelling at 31 after an erratic career — on and off the field — in the all-but-impossible situation of succeeding Hall-of-Famer Fran Tarkenton.

He reached his peak two weeks ago by completing 12 of 18 passes for 239 yards and two touchdowns in a 23-7 upset of Chicago — the only loss this season for the Super Bowl winners. The week before, Minnesota had beaten the previous year's NFL champion, the San Francisco 49ers.

"I can't remember a game he threw any better than the Bears game," Vikings Coach Jerry Burns, who was the offensive coordinator for eight of Kramer's first nine years with Minnesota, said. "He threw very, very, well. But the best, I think, is yet to come."

It's not just the Chicago game — it's the last six which came after two games that were so bad that Burns suggested to Kramer that if his performance didn't improve, he might be replaced.

Now, midway through the season, Kramer stands second among NFC quarterbacks with a 56.2 completion percentage, 16 touchdown passes and just six interceptions in eight games. This from a quarterback who had 19 touchdown passes in all of 1985 while throwing 26 interceptions.

Kramer gives the credit to a more talented team, which is young and improving on defense and the offensive line and has added two deep threats in the last two years — Anthony Carter and Hassan Jones. Kramer also gets to throw long more often under offensive coordinator Bob Schnelker than he did under his short-pass oriented predecessor — Burns.

"You can look and say 'This guy's throwing a lot of interceptions,' but there a lot of reasons for interceptions," Kramer said. "It might be throwing under a heavy rush, bad comunications between quarterback and receiver, any number of things. Some are the quarterback's faults, some aren't."

Moreover, winning also contributes.

"It helps a lot when you don't have to throw the ball all the time — when your team is winning and you don't have to come from behind," Kramer said. "There's just more talent here and it makes everything easier."

Kramer also seems to have put his off-field problems behind him although he still has to answer the inevitable questions about his hospitalization, which took place in 1982.

"Once that label is put on you, there's nothing you can do to change people's minds," he said. "I've never been the type of person that worried or cared about what other people had to say about me. I've got to live my life."

DALLAS (AP) — Here are the highlights of this week's Southwest Conference football games:

TEXAS (3-3, 2-1 SWC) at TEXAS TECH (4-3, 2-2 SWC), noon, Raycom Sports Telecast — Texas Tech might have a bit of a physical edge after a welcome open date as the improving Red Raiders battle the Texas Longhorns for the 36th time. Texas started the series with a 12-0 win in 1928 and has a 29-6 advantage, including a 21-5 edge since the Red Raiders began SWC play in 1960. Tech's last win in the series came at Lubbock in 1980 by a 24-20 count, and coach Fred Akers' Longhorns have captured the last five games in the series. Tech has won four of the 12 games played at Jones Stadium. Saturday's game site. Akers is 94-41-2 (12 seasons) overall, 84-28-2 (10 years) at Texas, and 58-17-1 in SWC games. Tech coach David McWilliams, a standout defender for the Longhorns and 16-year assistant coach under Darrell Royal and Akers from 1970-85, is already over the .500 mark (.571) overall and has guided the Raiders to back-to-back SWC wins over Arkansas and Rice on the road. It has been over a month (Sept. 27 against Baylor) since Tech played a game at Jones Stadium. The return of senior quarterback Monte McGuire from the injured list against Rice gives the Red Raiders a trio of experienced quarterbacks while scrambling Bret Stafford (101-for-182 for 1,187 yards passing and 5 TD passes) presents special problems to Tech's defense.

RICE (2-5, 1-4 SWC) at ARKANSAS (6-1, 3-1 SWC), 1:00 p.m. — Arkansas hosts an inspired Rice team as the Owls seek to bounce back from a 45-10 loss to league-leading Texas A&M last week at College Station. The Owls and Razorbacks are meeting for the 62nd time in a series which stands 30-28-3 in Arkansas' favor. The Razorbacks of coach Ken Hatfield have held the upper hand in recent years, though, with five straight triumphs. Rice last won 17-16 in 1980 at Rice Stadium. Rice coach Jerry Berndt is 40-32-3 (eight seasons) at DePauw, Pennsylvania and RU (first year). UA's Hatfield is also in his eighth season as a college head coach at Air Force and Arkansas and is 50-38-2 overall, 23-7-1 (three years) at Fayetteville and 14-6 (.700 winning percentage) in SWC play. The Hogs are 9-3 in SWC play over the last two seasons. Rice is seeking to duplicate or better its two-win SWC production in 1985, which was Owls' best mark in conference play since the 3-5 record by the 1981 squad. The Owls have been among the league leaders in passing offense and are throwing for 212.3 (third in the SWC) yards per game. Tight end Ken Major (27 catches for 307 yards) is the prime target for the QB tandem of Mark Comalander and Quentis Roper. Arkansas relies on a high-percentage passing attack by QB Greg Thomas, who paces the SWC in completion accuracy (61.6 percent) and in passing efficiency (154.1). Thomas is just under the NCAA norm of 15 pass attempts per game (he has 73 tries for an average of 10.4 tosses per contest).

TEXAS A&M (6-1, 4-0 SWC) at SMU (5-2, 4-1 SWC), 2:00 p.m. — In a battle pitting two teams which have been in the Top 20 for most of 1986, the Aggies and Mustangs should certainly be primed for a SWC inseason classic. A&M eked out a 19-17 win at College Station last year en route to a 7-1 league record and the SWC championship, and the Aggies hope to keep rolling on their present conference course (12 wins in their last 13 SWC games). SMU has rebounded nicely from a 6-5 overall finish a year ago and needs a win to equal that victory output in just eight games this year. Two coaches with football roots deep in the heart of Mississippi meet again in A&M's Jackie Sherrill, who was born in Duncan, Okla., and finished high school in Biloxi, Miss., and SMU's Bobby Collins, who was reared near Laurel, Miss. The two coaches also have compiled some of the more enviable results at their respective universities as Sherrill has participated in 11 bowls as an assistant or head coach while Collins has helped guide 10 teams to post season bids as a head coach or assistant. Sherrill is 85-36-2 (12 seasons) overall, 32-19-1 (four years) at A&M, and 21-14-1 in the SWC. Collins has an overall mark of 90-41-3 (13 campaigns), is 42-11-1 (five years) at SMU, and is 29-7-1 in SWC play. The Aggies hold a slim 33-29-6 edge in the series and fell 28-20 to the Mustangs during their last visit to Texas Stadium in 1984. Saturday's game matches three of the top four SWC rushers (SMU's Jeff Atkins against A&M's Keith Woodside and Roger Vick), two of the top four SWC total offense leaders (A&M QB Kevin Murray and the Mustangs' QB Bobby Watters), and two of the league's top kicking specialists in placekickers Scott Slater of A&M and SMU's Brandy Brownlee.

TEXAS CHRISTIAN (2-5, 0-4 SWC) at HOUSTON (1-6, 0-4 SWC), 7:00 p.m. — Houston stays in the Astrodome two weeks in a row to take on a hungry group of Horned Frogs. This rivalry goes back only as far as Houston's entrance into the SWC in 1976. The Cougars downed the Frogs 49-21 in the Dome to inaugurate the decade old series, and UH holds a 9-1 lead over TCU. The Horned Frogs prevailed 21-14 in 1984 prior to advancing to the Bluebonnet Bowl, but UH scored a 26-21 victory at Fort Worth last season. The two head coaches have amassed an outstanding 279 victories in 40 seasons between them and are firm believers in the triple option philosophy on offense. UH coach Bill Yeoman is 160-104-8 (25 years) with the Cougars and 51-31-2 in SWC play. TCU coach Jim Wacker is 119-57-5 (15 seasons) overall, 15-24-2 (four years) at TCU, and 8-21-1 in league games. Houston linebacker Gary McGuire earned the distinction of being named National Defensive Player of the Week in Sports Illustrated for his efforts in a 10-3 defeat at SMU on Oct. 18. He had 22 total tackles (17 unassisted), deflected a pass, and caused a fumble to join A&M's Kevin Murray, who was National Player of the Week on offense in the same publication after throwing three TD passes in the Aggies' come-from-behind win over Baylor. TCU running back Tony Jeffery is pushing the 1,000-yard mark after seven games with 829 yards on 114 carries to lead the conference with an average of 118.4 yards per game. UH's QB Gerald Landry, alternating for much of the year with Mark Davis, is climbing the SWC career total offense ladder and hopes to return to action this week after an injury.

Tucson last chance for Tway to catch absent Norman

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — PGA Champion Bob Tway is down to one last chance in his effort overtake Greg Norman for the PGA Tour's money-winning title.

Tway, in pursuit of the absent Norman for two months, trails the Australian's record total of $653,296 by $5,516 going into the final official-money tournament on the tour schedule.

To catch Norman, Tway must win two matches in this week's Seiko Tucson Match Play Championship.

Tway, a four-time winner on the tour this season, faces Brett Upper in first-round play Thursday and, should he survive that, will play the winner of the Craig Stadler-Steve Pate match on Friday.

"It comes down to two matches, doesn't it?" Tway said. "If I play well, I have a chance. If I don't play well, I probably won't."

Although he missed the cut last week in San Antonio, Tway picked up ground against Norman and now is assured of the PGA Player of the Year title.

West German Bernhard Langer went ahead of Norman in scoring average, cutting two points off Norman's total on the complicated point system which determines the Player of the Year.

Norman has completed his American season with 86 points and that total cannot be increased.

Tway has 90 points, and that total cannot be decresed. No one else is within range coming into this, the last tournament in which Player of the Year points can be acquired.

The tournament offers $1 million in total prize money, $700,000 to the 64 regular tour players competing for the winner's share of $150,000, and another $300,000 to the 32 seniors playing in a separate bracket. The seniors winner receives $75,000.

The format has been changed to medal-match play, rather than conventional match play. Players must finish every hole. The winner of a match will be determined by an 18-hole medal score.

The regular tour players have single rounds Thursday and Friday, with two rounds set for Saturday and the semifinal and final matches on Sunday.

The seniors play once a day Thursday through Saturday, with semifinal and final matches on Sunday.

In addition to Tway, other leading figures include defending champion Jim Thorpe, Tom Watson, Langer, Lanny Wadkins, and 1986 multiple-title winners Dan Pohl, Ken Green and Ben Crenshaw, who scored his second victory of the season last week in San Antonio.

South African Harold Henning is the defending seniors champion in a field that also includes Gary Player, Don January and Bruce Crampton, winner of five senior titles this year.

The event will be televised by ESPN Friday through Sunday.

Rockets release three forwards in cut to 14

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Rockets trimmed their roster to 14 players by cutting forwards Hank McDowell, Sam Mitchell and Michael Payne from the basketball team.

Team officials announced the cuts on Tuesday.

McDowell, a 6-foot-9, 230-pound forward, joined the Rockets in 1984 and played in 34 games. He failed to make the team in 1985 but returned last February, following the departure of point guard John Lucas. He played in 22 games last season, averaging 9.3 minutes, 3.0 points and 2.2 rebounds.

Mitchell and Payne were third-round draft picks who failed to win positions on the team last year, although Mitchell came close.

The 6-7 Mitchell, a small forward who was also tried at guard, led the Rockets in scoring, with 21.7 points per game, in the Midwest Rookie Revue in San Antonio last summer. He played well in his limited opportunities in the preseason, scoring 18 points in 27 minutes. He also had four steals.

But to win a job as the backup small forward, he had to beat out No. 1 draft pick Buck Johnson.

Rookie makes Mavs; two cut to reach limit

DALLAS (AP) — Rookie guard Myron Jackson has made the Dallas Mavericks' 12-man squad, the NBA team announced Tuesday.

In reducing their roster to the league limit, the Mavericks also waived third-round draft choice Anthony Welch of Illinois and free agent Dennis Nutt of Texas Christian.

Jackson, 6-3, was the team's fourth-round draft choice from Arkansas-Little Rock. He averaged 2.2 points in eight preseason games.

Extra plays cause Landry to wear reading glasses

IRVING (AP) — Tom Landry's eyesight isn't getting worse. He's just trying to cram more plays on his game plan card and the type is getting smaller.

The Dallas Cowboys' coach has resorted to reading glasses on occasion this year, particularly at night and during late evening NFL games.

San Antonio cuts 7-foot-1 Brittain

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The San Antonio Spurs have waived Mike Brittain, the first of two second-round draft picks in 1985. Brittain, a 7-foot-1, 233-pound backup center from South Carolina, was the 29th player drafted in 1985.

Brittain was beaten out in preseason by Kevin Duckworth, a 6-foot-11, 290-pounder from Eastern Illionois.

Spurs General Manager Bob Bass and Head Coach Bob Weiss said Brittain had improved over last year but not enough to make the team.
