Eight injured in 4th Phillips explosion

FIRST TO SIGN UP. Wade Dalrymple, 20, of Pampa was the first young man to sign up for the draft today at the Pampa Post Office. Shortly before noon today, 26 had signed up. Postal hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., which has caused problems for working men to sign up. Draft registration, which had been declared unconstitutional Friday, was overturned and back on schedule Saturday.

Compiled from staff and wire reports
PHILLIPS — Eight persons were injured this morning when two chemical cylinders blew up at the Philtex plant here — the fourth explosion at the Phillips Petroleum complex in nine months, authorities said.
Three persons, critically injured, were transferred to Northwest Texas Hospital in nearby Amarillo, a hospital spokesman said.
They were identified by Phillips officials as Ed Huxley, 62, Box 1292, Fritch; Martin Nash, 60, 656 Evergreen, Borger; and Bruce Gordon, 28, Box 762, Borger. All three men were employed by Phillips Petroleum.
Huxley and Nash are presently listed in critical condition at the hospital.
The two chemists are expected to be transferred to Parkland Hospital Burn Unit in Dallas, according to emergency room personnel, after receiving initial treatment at the Amarillo facility.
Gordon, the third seriously injured person, a chemical engineer for Phillips, is undergoing surgery at Northwest Texas for leg and arm injuries he suffered in the accident, a hospital spokesman said.
Another victim identified by Phillips spokesman Norm Berkley as David Blakemore, 36, of 1417 Bluebonnet, was sent as an outpatient to an Amarillo ophthalmologist for treatment of eye injuries suffered in the blast. The man was suffering from debris lodged in his eye, a hospital spokesman said.
Two other less seriously injured persons, identified by Berkley as Roger Sepulveda, 30, of 410 Baylor, Borger; and Handy Dillard, 27, 15 Lamp, Phillips were taken to North Plains Hospital for treatment.
Berkley said two other employees were treated and released at the Borger emergency room, complaining of hearing problems.

It is known that one man was admitted to North Plains, but at press time today hospital personnel had not yet identified which men were released or admitted.
Two ethylene gas — ETO — cylinders blew out in separate explosions in the commercial products area of the plant, Berkley said.
It was not known what caused the initial explosion at 9 a.m. CDT, he said.
Sources at the hospital told the Borger News Herald one cylinder blew out, felling several workers. Others rushed to the scene and were injured when the second cylinder exploded while they were trying to help those injured by the first blast.
The newspaper said each cylinder contained 2,500 pounds per square inch of pressure.
The cylinders were pressurized, Berkley said, but he did not know to what degree.
"The cylinders just exploded," he said. "There was no flash at the standpoint of fire," he added.
A plant worker who wished to remain unidentified was standing about 50 yards from the plant area when the first explosion occurred.
"There was black and white smoke," he said, "then about 10 minutes later, it did it again."
"I was about ready to run," he added.
"It (the explosion) will be investigated, starting this afternoon," Berkley said.
Officials are coming from the main Phillips office in Bartlesville and will be here at any time, Berkley added.
The Philtex plant makes about 500 chemical products and is located just across the street from the Phillips refinery, the scene of two recent explosions, a company official said.

Several dozen houses also are located near the Philtex plant although none were damaged. Earlier this year, Phillips officials notified residents of the company town that houses near the refinery would have to be moved to make way for expansion of the refinery.
Many of the houses have been moved, but several others have not been, a Borger newspaper said.
Forty-two persons, many residents of the near-by homes, were injured in a Jan. 20 explosion at the refinery. A minor explosion rocked the refinery Jan. 24, but no one was injured.
In October 1979 two persons were killed and another 14 injured when an explosion released deadly gas in the refinery.
The Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) fined Phillips $19,000 after the October explosion, saying the company did not enforce the use of gas masks.
Phillips was fined another $1,000 after the January explosions when OSHA said the company failed to provide a safe work area for employees.
The company is protesting both fines.

Accident causes black-out

The juvenile driver of a pickup truck has been cited for failure to leave information at the scene of an accident and passing with insufficient clearance in connection with an accident late Saturday which ultimately blacked-out 1,500 homes in the city and knocked out cable television viewing.
The pickup truck involved in the accident struck a utility line pole which is the northwest Pampa power feeder, leaving 1,500 homes in one section of the city in darkness.

Draft registration underway despite legal question

WASHINGTON (AP) — Starting today, Uncle Sam wants 19- and 20-year old men to sign up for the draft, even though the law under which registration is resuming could be ruled unconstitutional before their next birthday because it excludes women.
After a flurry of late legal maneuvering, in which a federal court blocked registration only to be overruled by Supreme Court Justice William Brennan, the first of an estimated 4 million young men began filing out Selective Service information cards at post offices around the country.
The first phase of the registration will continue over the next two weeks. Within 90 days they will receive formal notice through the mail that they are registered for possible induction in the event of a national emergency.
Early response to the government's call was light today with postal officials reporting no lines or crowds. But some young men said they came early to get it over with.
"They're going to get me anyway so it ain't no use trying to hide," said Marvin Wallace, 19, of Baltimore. He, as well as other young men among the first group of registrants around the country said they signed up reluctantly.

For now, at least, it's only registration. There has been no draft since 1973, and President Carter has said he has no intention of asking Congress to reimpose one.
But registration, which was stopped five years ago, is expected to shorten by almost a month the time it would take for a call-up, officials said.
"With this, within hours of a military emergency we could start the induction process," Selective Service Director Bernard Rostker said in an interview Sunday.
This week's registration covers young men born in 1960. Those born in 1961 will begin registering next Monday and those born in 1962 are to register in January. After that, all young men must register upon reaching their 18th birthday.
During the registration the men are required to fill out a card giving their name, sex, date of birth, current address, permanent address and Social Security number. There also is a box they may check if they want to be contacted by a military recruiter.
Rostker predicted 98 percent of those required to sign up will do so. Others, including some draft critics, predict hundreds of thousands of youths will ignore the order or be unaware that registration is required.

Leaders of draft protest movements planned demonstrations across the country. Several peaceful protests, including one near the White House, were held over the weekend.
Draft critics vowed to set up shop at many post offices to urge registrants to place a gummed label declaring "I am registering under protest" on their cards.
The return to registration, approved by Congress earlier this year, was thrown into confusion Friday when a three-judge federal panel in Philadelphia declared the Selective Service Act unconstitutional because it does not include women.
Although Brennan on Saturday reversed the lower court's injunction against registration, questions about the law's constitutionality still must be resolved.
Daniel Weinberg, the attorney for the plaintiffs in the nine-year-old Philadelphia suit, said he expects his case to reach the full Supreme Court by fall with a decision late this year or early in 1981.
In explaining his order, Brennan indicated the Supreme Court could go either way in the case. But he said a failure to proceed with registration in the meantime could cause foreign policy and military problems, while the government could always just destroy the computerized information it has collected if the law eventually is found to be unconstitutional.

Draft critics said Sunday the confusion arising from the legal maneuvers, and to some extent problems the Selective Service has been having in promoting the plan, will cause as many as a half million young men not to take part.
"The (Philadelphia) case and Brennan's stay just guarantees that this registration will be a fiasco," said the Rev. Barry L. Chairman of the National Committee Against Registration and Draft, Lynn, whose group urges people to register only under protest. "1980 could be the year registration began and the year it ended."
But Selective Service officials, noting widespread news coverage of the court rulings in recent days, said the publicity will help pass the word and add to the number of persons who register.
"We don't start off with the notion that the population will not obey a lawful order endorsed by the Congress and President. We start off with the basis that they will register," said Rostker. "It is the law of the land."

Rains brighten Monday morning

Thunderstorms pounded the Panhandle early this morning, once again providing Pampans and other Panhandle residents with relief from the blistering heat that has lingered for so long.
According to Wendy Logan, weatherman for the National Weather Service in Amarillo, a cool front running diagonally northeast to southwest was the factor that provided the precipitation and the break in heat. The front, running from Perryton to Clovis, contains southerly winds which is bringing the moisture our way.
The wet weather is not expected to continue long, however, running only through tonight. Tuesday's conditions are expected to be dry, yet cool. "I'm afraid that it will begin to get warmer Wednesday," said Logan. "But at least we'll be happy for a while."

At 7 a.m. this morning, Pampa had received the smallest recorded amount of moisture with only 12 inch. Lefors had the most moisture with a recorded 1.35 inches, followed by Miami with 1.18 inches. Shamrock had 74 inch. Huggins received 71 inch, and Amarillo followed with 64 inch.
The forecast for today and later tonight calls for partly cloudy and cooler conditions with the high expected in the low 90s. There is a 20 percent chance of precipitation in the forecast for tonight. According to Logan, the Panhandle will become warmer on Wednesday with temperatures in the mid 90s, continuing through Friday. There is, however, no sign of 100-plus temperatures in the forecast.

Group meets to save Santa Fe line

A public meeting concerning the closure of the Santa Fe Railroad line running from Clinton, Okla. to Pampa, will be held at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, July 23, in the Roger Mills County Agriculture Pavilion in Cheyenne, Okla., according to Hollin Riemer, state representative for seven northwest Oklahoma counties including Roger Mills.
The meeting will be concerned mainly with attempting to get government funds to save the railway line, which runs through Custer and Roger Mills Counties of northwest Oklahoma and Gray and Hemphill Counties. Other topics concerning the railroad will also be discussed.
Gordon Fay, rail consultant for the Oklahoma Department of Transportation, Bob Stewart, Oklahoma Corporation Commissioner, and a representative of the Rail Division will be on hand to answer questions regarding the railroad, according to Rep. Riemer.
The meeting will be sponsored by a joint county advisory committee, consisting of individuals who reside on the line, headed by chairman Frank Tidwell of Cheyenne.
Anyone who lives on this line is welcome to attend this meeting.

Two city men are in Gray County jail and two other Pampans appeared in municipal court this morning on charges relating to a weekend incident resulting in assaults on two police officers and approximately $350 in damage to police vehicles.
John Calvin Alderson, 23, of Pampa is presently in county jail in lieu of $5,000 bond set Saturday by Justice of the Peace Marge Prestidge.
Alderson was charged with criminal mischief in connection with the slashing of tires on three patrol units of the Pampa Police Department. He was arrested early Saturday morning at Central Park.
Also in the custody of county officials is Ronnie Robinson, 26, of 400 N. Sumner who was arrested for public intoxication and disorderly conduct stemming from the same incident. Robinson however is being detained on a 1977 warrant for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle.
Two other Pampa residents, Ladonna Kaye Ward, 23, of 920 Osborne and 23-year-old Bruce Blackman of 426 1/2 N. Russell appeared before Municipal Judge Phil Vanderpool and pleaded guilty to charges of public intoxication. The two were fined $103.50.

Four arrested in Central Park melee

Blackman also pleaded guilty to charges of simple assault of a police officer. He was fined $203.50.
The bizarre chain of events began at 11:59 p.m. Friday night, Chief of Police J. J. Ryzman said, when Sgt. Charles Love observed a large crowd of about 40 people gathered outside of Red's Lounge.
The group reportedly was loud, and there appeared to be a fight about to break out, Ryzman said.
After calling for backup, he said, three police officers approached the crowd and told them to disperse because the lounge was closed.
"They (the crowd) then became verbally abusive," he said.
At this point, Ryzman said Robinson was "forcibly subdued" and arrested for public intoxication and disorderly conduct. Robinson later was charged with simple assault after he allegedly struck Officer J. D. Smith while in the jail area.
At the time of the arrest, he said, a witness told Sgt. Love that someone had cut the tires on the three patrol cars parked on the east side of the lounge.
Giving a description of a suspect, the witness said the man ran south on foot.

The units were immobilized until officers were able to change the tires, Ryzman said.
About 12:30 a.m., the department received several reports of a disturbance in Central Park. Officers observed about 30 people at the end of the park, he said.
Alderson was arrested at the scene and charged with criminal mischief, public intoxication and disorderly conduct. The suspect resisted the arrest, Ryzman said, breaking an antenna from a police vehicle.
Several people reportedly attempted to interfere in the arrest of Alderson, Ryzman said. Ward and Blackman were also arrested at this time.
Blackman received the simple assault charge when he reportedly struck Officer Patti Williams twice while at the scene.
Eleven law enforcement officers — off-duty police officers, a sheriff's deputy and two Highway Patrol troopers — were eventually called to the melee, the chief said.
Total damage to the police units including the three slashed tires and the broken radio antenna was estimated by Ryzman at approximately $350.

Officials to tell Carter of $2 billion farm losses

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown said today Texas crop and livestock losses because of the current "moderate drought" could reach $2 billion if adequate rain does not fall by Aug. 1.
Brown planned to meet later today with President Carter, who will be in Dallas for a political fund-raiser. He will fly with the president by helicopter to inspect crop and livestock losses in Denton County.
"I am going to ask the president to expedite every form of assistance he has at his disposal," Brown said at a news conference.
Included, he said, should be a moratorium on payments of federal farm loans, new loans to tide farmers through the drought and a speed-up in the emergency feed program.
Brown said losses have topped $1 billion and "are rapidly approaching the $2 billion mark."
A large part of the cotton crop will fail to "fruit up" and will be lost unless rain falls, he said.
"We need the rain in the next week or two," Brown said.
In a report prepared for the president, Brown said, "Without rain by August 1, many dryland crops will be lost, and the range and pasture grasses will have deteriorated to the critical stage."

The commissioner said the Texas economy loses $3.6 billion for every $1 billion in crop receipts that are lost. Cash receipts for cattle multiply throughout the general economy at a rate of $5 for every $1 received, he said.
"Conservative estimates on potential crop and livestock losses are $2 billion, which create a minimum deficit of $4 billion," Brown tells Carter in the report.
Brown said at his news conference the drought could have an impact on federal taxpayers because it will dry up surpluses in many commodities used in the school lunch program. Without those surpluses, he said, the government will have to pay prevailing market prices for the foods needed for the program.
He said Texas has 14 million acres of crop land that are not irrigated, including 66 percent of the cotton crop, two-thirds of the grain sorghum crop, almost half the soybean crop and 80 to 85 percent of the corn crop.
Many grain sorghum farmers are mowing their crop and baling it for hay because of the effects of drought, Brown said.

Texans breathe sigh of relief - temporarily

Texas coastal residents heaved a sigh of relief but the rest of the state sighed with disappointment as the season's first tropical depression brought scattered rain but could not break the grip of a month-long heat wave.
A weak cold front also brought scattered showers and thunderstorms to the parched Panhandle early today. Amarillo had 20 of an inch of rain, and Dalhart recorded 12 of an inch.
Forecasters said widely scattered showers and thunderstorms would lower temperatures somewhat in the eastern and northwestern areas of the state today.
The tattered remains of Tropical Depression No. 1, as named by the National Weather Service, kicked up isolated rain squalls Sunday from the Gulf Coast all the way to West Texas.
Freeport police reported minor street flooding as well as telephone calls from residents excited by the first measurable rainfall in a month.
"It's beautiful," said police dispatcher Linda Hunter. "We had some heavy rain, thunder, lightning — things we haven't seen in weeks."
Two funnel clouds were spotted in the Beaumont-Port Arthur area, but neither touched down and no damage was reported, according to sheriff's deputies.
Rain fell in isolated spots all the way to the Red River, and temperatures moderated somewhat from the blistering heat of the past month. However, meteorologist James Ott with the Fort Worth NWS office said the tropical depression will have no lasting impact on the state's weather.

Weather

Weather conditions call for a 20 percent chance of thundershowers today, continuing through tonight. Temperatures will dip to the high 80s and low 90s during Monday and Tuesday. Showers are also possible for Tuesday. The high for Sunday was 99 degrees.

SOUTHWESTERN BELL PROJECTS SET IN AREA

Southwestern Bell is undertaking several projects in the Pampa area totaling more than $763,000, according to Gary Stevens, manager.

A $923,000 toll cable between Pampa and Lefors will be completed this month. The cable, connecting central offices, is designed to reinforce long distance capabilities.

"The cable was needed to replace older cable in order to provide better facilities for area customers," Stevens said. The project was begun in May and is currently being tested.

In another project, Southwestern Bell is replacing conduit and burying new cable for a $560,000 project to service north Pampa. New lines will be buried out to the new hospital complex and the new Pampa Mall. The new cable will provide for anticipated growth in north and west Pampa.

"Any inconvenience to traffic along the construction areas will be minor," according to Stevens. Most of the project should be completed in early August. Additional plans call for replacing older cable and providing added facilities for new residential growth through 1981.

IRS SERVICE DIVISION REQUESTS NOTICE

If you filed your Federal income tax return by the April 15 deadline and have not yet received your refund, IRS wants to hear from you.

"We make a real strong effort to process all the returns filed on time so that taxpayers receive their checks before June 15," said Sharon Wrublesky, Chief of the Dallas District Taxpayer Service Division. "But when three million returns arrive at the IRS Service Center on the last three days of the filing period, there's bound to be a few returns that take a bit longer to process."

Taxpayers may call IRS Monday through Friday between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. toll-free at 1-800-492-4830.

Queen fights tears during state department reception

WASHINGTON (AP) - Fighting back tears, freed American hostage Richard Queen returned to the State Department today to a tumultuous welcome.

"You all know how much I love to be back," the 28-year-old diplomat said. "I wish there were 52 more with me."

Thousands of department workers crowded into a lobby to greet him. He was hugged by two secretaries freed from Iran in November. "This is just the first step back for the other 52," Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie said.

Queen told a news conference after the ceremony that he taught himself French during more than eight months in captivity, played penny-poker with a roommate and read hundreds of books from the U.S. Embassy library.

He said his captors "didn't care what we did as long as we didn't escape."

Queen, who can speak Farsi, said some of the militants were "really fine people" while there were "a few S.O.B.s."

He flatly rejected any suggestion that those who seized the embassy last November and have held it since were Communists.

"They were zealots, Islamic - and, as far as I know, students," Queen said.

Queen, who was released because he suffers from multiple sclerosis, returned to Washington last Friday and is undergoing treatment at the Georgetown University Medical Center.

President Carter met with Queen Saturday afternoon at the White House and reported later that Queen had been kept in a basement with "no light or fresh air" during much of his captivity.

Queen was held much of the time in a basement room he named "The Tomb," Carter said. Later, he was blindfolded and moved to another building.

The windows in the second building had been sealed but "there was a small crack between two bricks in the wall and he talked about the intense excitement he had the first morning that day broke to see a little glimpse of sunlight between two bricks," Carter said.

Carter asked how Queen was feeling and was told, "I'm doing better. Every day I feel better."

While Queen is undergoing tests and treatment, he is also being questioned by U.S. officials to learn how the other 52 hostages are being treated. There has been no indication of when those hostages, held since last Nov. 4, might be released.

Morgenthau, critic of U.S. involvement in Vietnam, dies

NEW YORK (AP) - Hans J. Morgenthau, a foreign policy analyst who gained national prominence in the 1960s as a critic of the United States' involvement in Vietnam, has died after a brief illness.

Morgenthau, 76, died Saturday at a Manhattan hospital. During his career, he taught political science at such universities as Harvard, Princeton, Yale, the University of California at Berkeley and the University of Chicago.

He had taught at the New School for Social Research in New York City from 1974 until shortly before his death.

Morgenthau, a Jew who was born in Germany, came to the United States in 1937 from Europe. The lawyer had fled his homeland in 1933 after the Nazis came to power. He became an American citizen in 1943.

He believed that the United States should follow self-interest, rather than world opinion, in making foreign policy.

"Never allow a weak ally to make policy decisions for you," he once said of diplomacy.

He also frequently opposed U.S. involvement in other nations' affairs, and argued that the risks of American participation in Vietnam outweighed any possible benefits.

"With unflinching consistency, we have since the end of the Second World War intervened on behalf of conservative and fascist repression against revolution and radical reform," Morgenthau wrote in 1974 after the exposure of the involvement of the Central Intelligence Agency in Chilean politics. "Such a policy can only lead to moral and political disaster."

Morgenthau was chairman of the Academic Committee on Soviet Jewry and spoke out against the Soviet Union's treatment of Jews, though he was an advocate of nuclear arms control and detente with the Soviet Union.

He also condemned terrorist actions by the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Morgenthau was fluent in English, French, German and Spanish. His works included "Scientific Man vs. Power Politics" in 1946 and "A New Foreign Policy for the United States" in 1969.

He is survived by a son, Matthew, and a daughter, Susanna. Funeral services were to be held today.

Anderson shuns carnival air surrounding presidential bid

WASHINGTON (AP) - John Anderson says sometimes he's so embarrassed by the sirens and the flashing lights accompanying his motorcades that he crouches down in his limousine seat and hopes nobody recognizes him.

He says he'll be relieved when "this period of public adulation or semi-adulation" is over and the last thing he'll miss is the hoopla that goes with campaigning.

In short, Anderson - who is just back from a grueling 11-day European and Middle Eastern tour - finds that running for president is not much fun.

The Illinois congressman knows that the trappings of campaigning, of just being seen, are absolutely vital if his independent effort is to succeed against the better financed, better advertised and better supported candidacies of Democrat Jimmy Carter and Republican Ronald Reagan.

But he doesn't have to like it. In fact, he says he is resigned to it. Anderson isn't impressed, for instance, with being treated like a combination of monarch and movie star, at the center of a traveling circus of television cameras, bands, gladhanders and autograph seekers.

"That kind of fame is so fleeting and so ephemeral that I don't kid myself one bit," he says. "The very same people that come to me and want my autograph, a year from now will have forgotten all about me."

Just before leaving on his foreign tour, Anderson paused, in an interview, to reflect on what impels a man to decide that he, among 225 million Americans, has what it takes to lead the country.

"You don't just wake up one morning and a great white light shines down from above and tells you you're qualified to be president," he says.

"When you have two candidates come along like Carter and Reagan, you do tell yourself, 'I certainly could do a better job of addressing the country's problems than they could and therefore why should I shy away from the challenge?'"

Having said this, Anderson worries that he might be misunderstood and adds quickly: "It isn't the kind of challenge that a man sees when he looks at a mountain and says this is a mountain that I simply must climb because if I don't I will go to my grave unfulfilled."

"That isn't the kind of challenge that the presidency offers to me. It is rather just a very pragmatic judgment that I spent my life really preparing for this - not consciously during all of that period - and that it honestly has given me the kind of depth of understanding and knowledge and perspective about problems that a president needs."

Order bans wining juries in Louisiana 21st District

AMITE, La. (AP) - Jurors sequestered in the 21st Judicial District may no longer have wine with their dinner - and they can blame a jury that rolled up a $630 food and liquor tab.

"New dining rules will permit jurors to a standard breakfast, a $3 to $4 businessman's lunch and a good dinner," Chief Judge Burrell Carter said recently.

Those meals will be eaten at the hotel where jurors are staying, rather than at local restaurants, he said.

Carter said he imposed the new rules after learning it had cost $1,605.09 to house and feed 12 jurors, two alternates, and two deputies serving as guards during a three-day trial last December.

The meal total was more than it cost to feed parish grand juries in December, January and February. Records indicate grand juries charged $612.22 worth of food - and no liquor - to the parish during those three months.

Litigations threaten company seeking hazardous waste dump

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) - A Texas company that wants to build a non-nuclear hazardous waste landfill west of Hatch faces litigation in that state, officials report.

The Malone Company recently met with Hatch officials to discuss the company's application for a special use permit. At that time, some Hatch area residents expressed concern about the company's proposal.

An official with the Texas Department of Water Resources said the Malone firm had been handed final judgment for unauthorized discharges.

Tom Kerns, a Galveston bay area inspector for the Texas agency, also said litigation from the Department of Water Resources concerning the Malone firm has been referred to the Texas attorney general's office.

Talks resume as newprint supply dwindles in nation

TORONTO (AP) - Representatives of 6,300 striking paperworkers and the world's largest newprint manufacturer returned to the bargaining table today with the hope of ending a strike that is depleting newprint supplies in the United States.

Spokesmen for the Canadian Paperworkers Union and Abitibi-Price Inc. said the two sides resumed talks today under J.D. Speranzini, an Ontario labor ministry conciliator representing the three provinces - Ontario, Quebec and Newfoundland - affected by the strike, now in its third week.

The union and the company agreed to resume full-scale negotiations after Speranzini brought them together last week for preliminary discussions.

Two previous rounds of talks broke down over union demands for improved pensions, job security and a cost-of-living allowance. Abitibi-Price workers averaged $9.15 an hour under the previous contract, which expired April 30.

The union, which represents 40,000 paperworkers in eastern Canada, has said it will regard a settlement with Abitibi-Price as the standard for negotiations with 200 other newsprint manufacturers.

Jury resumes deliberation in murder trail of lawyer

CHICKASHA, Okla. (AP) - A Grady County jury was to resume deliberations today in the first-degree murder trial of attorney Darrell Ellis, accused in the shooting death of his lover's husband.

In closing arguments Sunday afternoon, prosecutor Tony Burns pointed out inconsistencies in Ellis' testimony about how he came into possession of the alleged death weapon, a .38-caliber pistol.

Defense Attorney D.C. Thomas countered by implying law enforcement officials, including Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation agent Arthur Linnville, lied in their testimony against Ellis to cover up their own incompetence.

The prosecution contends Ellis killed fellow attorney Steve Stack out of jealousy because his lover, Sallie Shack, reconciled with her husband.

Stack was found shot to death along a Grady County road on June 27, 1979.

The alleged death weapon was found months later behind a stereo in Ellis' home. Ellis claimed during testimony Saturday he bought the gun from a mysterious ski-masked man.

Burns told the seven-woman, five-man jury that Ellis told the police in an early interview he wanted to buy the .38-caliber gun from the stranger because "he knew Stack had been killed with one."

Burns said until that point Ellis had never been told with what caliber gun Stack had been shot.

The jury began deliberations shortly before 5 p.m. and recessed at midnight.

Draft registration: Sign-ups Start Today
WASHINGTON (AP) - Starting today, Uncle Sam wants 19- and 20-year-old men to sign up for the draft, even though the law under which registration is resuming could be ruled unconstitutional before their next birthday because it excludes women.

After a flurry of late legal maneuvering, in which a federal court blocked registration only to be overruled by Supreme Court Justice William Brennan, an estimated 4 million young men are to fill out information cards at post offices large and small over the next two weeks.

Five Plotters Executed; Majlis Speaker Elected
Five officers died in the first executions of the military plotters against Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. Meanwhile, the new Parliament elected a militant Moslem cleric as its speaker, and Khomeini called on it to purge the government of those who are not "100 percent Islamic."

The five military men, a retired brigadier general and four air force officers, were executed at 1 a.m. Sunday by firing squad at Tehran's Evin prison, Radio Tehran reported.

Miners Say They Still Fighting New Junta
LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) - Miners in southern Bolivia said they were still battling the new military government and reported heavy casualties as sporadic gunfire continued in La Paz through the night curfew.

The junta that overthrew the civilian government on Thursday claimed in a communique it had eliminated all resistance. It threatened to fire all workers who did not abandon the general strike against its rule that began Friday.

Texas couple dies in Utah car crash

COALVILLE, Utah (AP) — Six young Utahans and an elderly Sour Lake, Texas, couple were killed when the youths went the wrong way on Interstate 80 and collided head-on with the couple's car one mile south of here, the highway patrol said.

Trooper D. Howard Madsen said a Volkswagen with three men and three women, all in their teens or early 20s, was westbound on the eastbound lanes about 4:30 p.m. Sunday when it collided with the Texas couple's Lincoln Continental.

Madsen said there were no

skid marks to indicate the drivers had tried to stop.

The six victims in the Volkswagen, all from the Salt Lake area, were identified today as the driver, William S. Parrish, 18; J. Allen Macari, 19; Georgia Kay May, 18; Melanie L. Parks, 18; Shane B. Peck, 20; and Jill Jensen, 19.

They were believed to have been swimming at Echo Reservoir just north of here.

The Texas couple was identified today by the Utah Highway Patrol as Allen

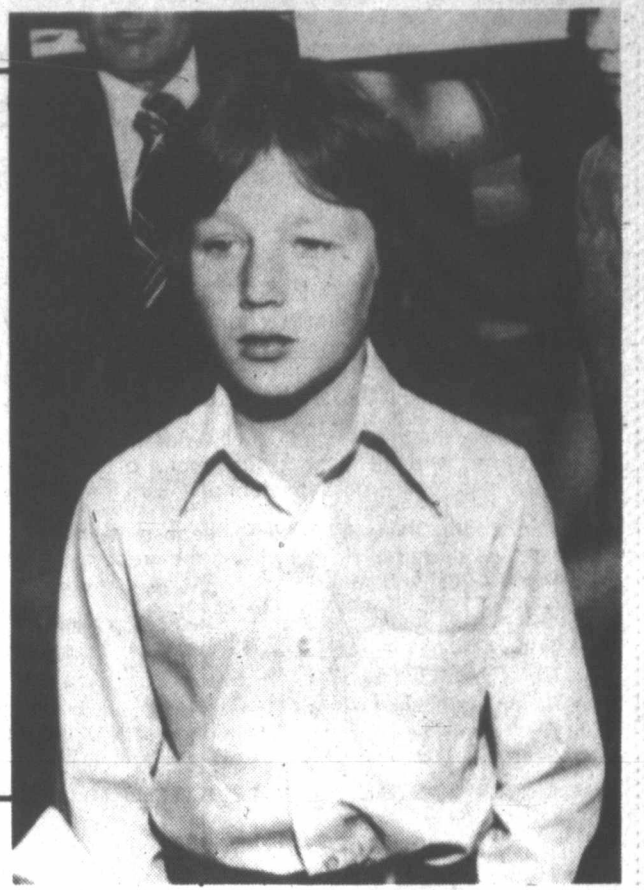

Mack West, 70, and Verdilee Harper West, 66, both from Sour Lake, Texas.

Madsen said witnesses differed as to whether the Volkswagen entered the divided highway, going the wrong way, at Echo Reservoir or at Coalville Junction.

He said only one person, a woman in the Volkswagen, was alive when officers arrived. An LDS Hospital helicopter was sent from Salt Lake but the crew was unable to resuscitate her, Madsen said.

SEEKING ASYLUM, Ukrainian-born Walter Polovchak, 12, says he doesn't want to return to the Soviet Union, even if it means never seeing his parents again. The boy, who came with his family from the Ukraine six months ago, learned last week that his father planned to return. Rather than go back, the boy is seeking political asylum in the United States. A judge is scheduled to make a final decision in the case later this month.

Executions begin purge of Iranian plotters

By The Associated Press
Five officers died in the first executions of the military plotters against Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. Meanwhile, the new Parliament elected a militant Moslem cleric as its speaker, and Khomeini called on it to purge the government of those who are not "100 percent Islamic."

The five military men, a retired brigadier general and four air force officers, were executed at 1 a.m. Sunday by firing squad at Tehran's Evin prison, Radio Tehran reported.

The five were among some 500 Iranians, many of them military men, who were rounded up a week ago on charges of plotting to overthrow the government.

Radio Tehran said a special Islamic court convicted the five men Saturday of plotting to "establish an American social-democratic system and bring back the treacherous fugitive Bakhtiar, preparing 35 to 50 jet planes for the operation and for bombarding the Imam's (Khomeini's) residency, bombarding other sensitive places and highly populated areas, and preparing printed material to be distributed in various cities."

Shahpour Bakhtiar was the last prime minister appointed by Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi before Khomeini's revolution overthrew him. Now an exile in Paris, he escaped an assassination attempt last Friday.

The new Parliament, or Majlis, elected as its speaker Hujjatolislam Ali Akbar Rafsanjani, a leader of the powerful Islamic Republican Party which controls the assembly. Many of the party's members want the 52 American hostages, who today spend their 261st day in captivity, to be tried as spies.

Blaze no threat to nuclear facility

A 1,000-acre range fire that began on Idaho National Engineering Laboratory land was contained after a decline in winds that had blown the blaze away from the nuclear reactor test site, officials said early today.

Meanwhile, in California, fire officials speculated that arson may have been the cause of a brush fire that charred more than 3,720 acres of dry timberland in the northern San Ysidro Mountains.

The fire at the U.S. Department of Energy testing facility in Idaho was believed started by lightning Friday night. Bill Casey, Bureau of Land Management district fire management officer, said that 75 BLM and Department of Energy firefighters contained the fire Sunday after winds dropped from 18 mph to less than 10 mph. The decline allowed firefighters to complete a fire line.

Fire officials had said Saturday that aerial observation showed a fire of 2,000 acres, but the high estimate was due to a lot of smoke and cut in half Sunday, officials said.

They said the fire had not been considered likely to threaten the INEL even if the winds shifted.

In California, the San Ysidro fire burned within nine miles of Chula Vista and was 95 percent contained by late Sunday, said Lona Holden, state Forestry Department spokeswoman.

Mechanical failures cited in helicopter deaths

FORT HOOD, Texas (AP) — Army investigators have concluded mechanical failure may be to blame for a helicopter crash that killed three soldiers here in January.

The report directly contradicts a statement issued by base information officers and recommends the Army's helicopter pilot training program be reviewed.

Documents from the investigation were obtained under the Freedom of Information act by the Temple Daily Telegram. The newspaper's findings were published Sunday.

A release from the III Corps and Fort Hood Public Affairs office said, in part, "all of the accidents have been caused as the result of human error rather than mechanical failure."

But the documents obtained by the newspaper, outlining an Army investigation based on reports from witnesses and an instructor pilot for the OH-58, said "there exists the possibility of some type of mechanical malfunction just prior to impact" in the January 11 fatal accident.

The report said that possibility could not be confirmed since the helicopter was damaged extensively in the accident.

In its report on the other OH-58 crash, the investigators recommended "that the U.S. Army Aviation School and Center, Ft. Rucker, Ala., be questioned about the adequacy of OH-58 pilot training and familiarization with regard to tail-rotor stall — how to avoid it, how to recognize it and, if encountered, how to recover from it."

Field sentries gobble up invaders

By VERN ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer
BURLEY, Idaho (AP) — They waddle down rows of crops gobbling up everything green but the plants they are hired to protect.

"They are eating machines. They live to eat," says Dennis Sewald of the Chinese weeder geese he introduced to Idaho this year as an alternative to chemical herbicides. "They are like a sheep dog that's bred to herd sheep."

The birds were developed 2,000 years ago in China to combat the bane of a farmer's life — the common weed. Recently they have been used by organic farmers in the Pacific Northwest and California, where Sewald, principal owner of Idaho Organic Farms, first saw them.

Weeder geese will eat their own weight or more in "greenery" every day, and Sewald says 1,500 of the birds will weed 500 acres of crops within a week. They are most effective in the spring "when the weed is a mouthful rather than a meal."

One of the advantages to using weeder geese, Sewald said, is that "they turn all the green into instant fertilizer."

Since Jan. 1, when Idaho Organic Farms received 8,000 day-old poultts from California, Sewald has leased the birds to two dozen farmers at $10 to $20 an acre after the farmer learns to handle the geese. The price is higher if Sewald must use his own handlers.

He said chemicals would cost between $75 and $150 per acre.

Sewald said response to the birds has been enthusiastic. He plans to have two 5,000-egg incubators at the company's Goose Creek Ranch and 125,000 birds by next spring. Fertile eggs and baby geese will be shipped to markets throughout the United States and some foreign countries.

Sewald hauls a flock of 1,500 geese around in a large white three-tiered trailer he designed and built. Trained leader geese walk up the ramp, the rest following, and three people can load the whole trailer in about 10 minutes.

Running the geese on crops that have been heavily treated with chemical herbicides and pesticides can be costly. Sewald lost 50 birds in less than 45 minutes when they started vomiting, "their heads flopping from side to side." Now Sewald tests a field with a dozen birds before he releases the whole flock.

WEED LOVERS ALL, these Chinese weeder geese, developed to strut down rows of crops and devour every weed in sight, converge with bill-smacking relish on some of their favorite fare held out by their owner, Dennis Sewald in Burley, Idaho.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coveting Commandment.

OPINION PAGE

Food stamp abuse embitters producer

Call him Joe. Call him Sam. Call him "Hey, you!" No matter. He has a title. He does custodial work. That's the nicer way to say he is a janitor. He works. He sweeps floors. He cleans the commodes.

But no matter. The important thing is he works. He isn't well as most. He is up in age. To go forward is a chore. He pushes on, though, pushing his broom.

He goes to the grocery store. He buys a bone to boil and a pound of beans, a package of tortillas and a box of rice.

He waits at the check-out counter for his turn. He sees the good things around him, in the baskets of the customers, the candy, the crusty, yeasty loaves of bread, the big beef roasts, the T-bone steaks, the half-hams, the expensive cherries and the cakes.

The woman ahead of him is checking out. Her bill comes to $110. Her basket had contained many good things, now in paper sacks ready to be carried out by the grocery boy, roasts and steaks, and sweets and asparagus in cans and much more. She paid for the goods with government food stamps. The government calls them coupons.

Joe shakes his head and pays his three dollars and a dime. That's all the money he has, until pay-day. But he will enjoy his rice and beans seasoned with the broth of the bone and consumed with his tortillas. He needs his strength. You see, it takes strength to work. Joe works.

Joe doesn't favor food stamps for anyone but the sick and lame. He sees the widespread greed of non-workers taking advantage of the working taxpayer. He says it is a shame, and he adds that he prefers to go hungry rather than accept the stamps. He is realistic. "The sick, old folks and the crippled need them. Those kind do not abuse the gift." Joe pushes on, pushing his broom. He hurts, and it's a pain to push. But he works, anyway.

The food stamp business is big business in some areas of the United States. It is pretty big in Odessa. One can see one food-stamp recipient trading stamps with another recipient for non-food items. One observes there is a growing "other world" of trade in non-food goods among the food-stamp recipients who are abusing the gift from the tax-payers.

One notes that in many business firms that are going after the business of the food-stamp recipients in a big way the prices are higher. The cash buyer pays the high price in "good" money, the food-stamp recipient pays the high price in coupons. Easy come, easy go, so the latter buys more. The person on cash can't afford to buy more. That is the scene quite often observed in the land's food stores.

Just the other day a South Texas grocery store was disqualified from the federal food stamp program for violations. It is a neighborhood store. The firm was charged with accepting food stamps for beer, cigarettes, paper products, a broom and laundry and cleaning supplies.

The disqualification, the USDA pointed out, will last only for one year. The owner may apply for reinstatement of the store in the food stamp program to take effect at or after the end of the disqualification period. But until the store is reinstated, the grocery may not accept food coupons.

A USDA official explained that food coupons by law can be used only to buy food for human consumption, including seeds and plants for use in gardens to produce food for the personal consumption of the eligible household.

Food stores participating agree in advance to abide by the law and regulations.

The food stamps flow like rivers of money in some areas. Some recipients have been heard talking among themselves and chuckling over their food stamp bonanza. These are bitter pills for the taxpayer to swallow. No wonder Joe just pushes on, shaking his head, pushing his broom. He works. He pays taxes, too, on his small income.

System of 'helping' makes poor passive

"Despite our best intentions the government programs we have supported have unwittingly made the poor dependent and created a new bureaucratic and expert elite that too often denies poor people the opportunities to help themselves.

In short, created a system of helping that encourages the poor to be passive rather than active, dependent rather than independent, recipients rather than producers, clients instead of people on their own work."

It sounds like the confession of a repentant liberal bolting to the right side. The words, in fact, are those of Sam Brown, a conservative of anti-war and anti-poverty activism in the 1960s who now heads the federal agency called Action, overseeing the Peace Corps and other programs oriented toward volunteerism.

Sam puts a great stock in the volunteer and self-help principles of the domestic version of the Peace Corps. He is frustrated with the all-embracing welfare system saps the will of its "clients" to earn their own way, an objective of the Vista program. He has coined a Catch-22 of the welfare state which has long been criticized by conservative advocates of reform.

By Robert J. Wagman
WASHINGTON (NEA) - A blue-ribbon presidential panel has been working for nine months on recommendations to change and update national immigration policy. This 16-member "Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy" is headed by the Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, the highly respected president of Notre Dame University and former head of the Civil Rights Commission.

The Carter administration has promised various minority groups that it will quickly implement the commission's proposals, which are likely to be presented by the end of the year.

The White House no doubt based that promise on its expectation that the recommendations would deal with things like visa quotas and improvements in Immigration and Naturalization Service operations. It did not anticipate that along with those proposals may come a bombshell: a call for national identification cards to be issued to all citizens and legal aliens.

The panel has heard many complaints from unions and other worker groups that illegal aliens are taking jobs away from Americans. The estimated 3 million to 6 million illegal aliens in this country now — plus the others arriving daily — clearly have a significant impact on urban job markets.

Current law requires employers to ascertain that potential employees are not illegal aliens; that includes asking aliens for the "green cards" documenting that they can legally hold jobs in this country. But employers complain that it is often difficult for them to determine citizenship or legal residency. In addition, they are frequently accused of discrimination for only challenging the status of Hispanics.

So, a number of commission members hit upon what is essentially a national system of worker identification cards. Proponents argue that employers could routinely ask all new employees for their cards to determine easily their immigration status without appearing to discriminate against any ethnic group. Employers would then be held responsible if illegals were hired.

To say this proposal has split the panel would be a considerable understatement. Some civil libertarians oppose the idea as a potential invasion of privacy — even as the first step toward a totalitarian state. Others oppose the proposal because it might be tied to Social Security, with Social Security numbers used on the new worker identification cards.

Hesburgh strongly favors the proposal.

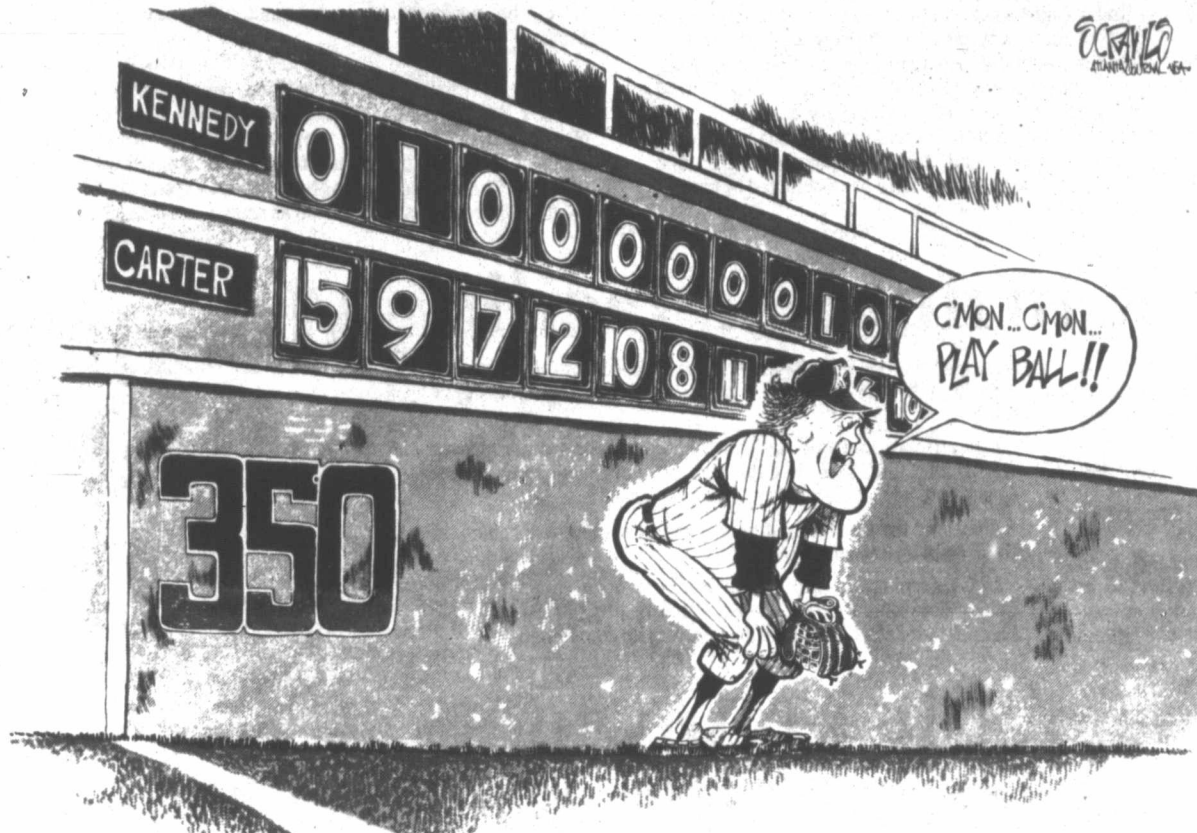

"With the number of illegal aliens coming in," he argues, "we must find some way to differentiate between those who are legally able to hold jobs and those who are not. And with the rising unemployment figures, it is clear that there are not an unlimited number of jobs available."

Strong opposition to the proposal is voiced by panel member Patricia Roberts Harris, secretary of health and human services. "We in this country have traditionally accepted the many strong arguments against a national identity system," she says. "This system would basically be the same kind that has always been rejected."

Mrs. Harris is also critical of the suggestion that the new system be tied to Social Security, which falls under her department's jurisdiction. "The prospects for fraud in such an ID system are so great that if it were tied to Social Security it might threaten the very stability of the entire Social Security system."

According to staffers, the commission is evenly divided on the question of ID cards. They predict more heated debate and a close vote.

It appears that the panel will recommend other controversial measures. Among them may be increasing from 250,000 to 750,000 the number of aliens allowed to enter this country annually, eliminating the current ceiling of 20,000 immigrants annually from any one country, and granting amnesty to the millions of illegal aliens already in this country, regardless of how or when they arrived. Battleneck

by Paul Harvey

We need a new word for something that's crippling our own military services: "battleneck."

Maj. Steve Ritchie, our Vietnam Air Force ace, remembers that there was rarely a time in his 339 combat missions when everything on the airplane worked.

The bottleneck — or "battleneck" — was blamable on two factors: inadequate maintenance. We did not have the skills on the ground to keep the fancy machinery of an F-4 Phantom up to snuff.

And also, in our haste to adopt and adapt the newest technology, we out-complicated ourselves. Our technology frequently failed under the rigors of saltwater, humidity, turbulence, sandstorms.

During debriefing after downing his fifth Mig-21, Maj. Ritchie was asked, "What was the most serious problem in combat over Hanoi?"

He replied, "General, we should not build another airplane, another missile, another engine, another radar — until we have learned how to build a simple UHF radio that works!"

In most missions over Hanoi there was a radio problem serious enough to degrade the mission and jeopardize lives.

Some of us have argued that we must not try to fight tomorrow's wars with boypower; that we can deter aggression only with reliance on the sophisticated technology which cuts the limitless hordes of Asia down to size.

However, all that sky-high technology is impotent if we lack the human skills to make, maintain and employ it.

Battleneck! Can you and I even begin to imagine the frustration suffered by the commander of a carefully planned mission when equipment failure costs unnecessary lives?

Americans got a taste of that when our mission to liberate hostages in Iran was aborted because three of eight helicopters malfunctioned.

Our Navy now admits that some of its highly sophisticated F-14 fighters are operational at any one time.

In the Air Force, for the F-15 Eagle, the figure is about 60 percent.

Battleneck!

What can be done about it: focus.

When Ritchie arrived in Vietnam the success rate for the Sparrow guided missile was 16 percent. That success rate was improved to 55 percent by upgrading load crews, ground crews and operators.

The same degree of "focus" that got us to the moon — a combination of creativity plus reliability and multiple backup — is necessary if our nation is going to hold the Red Bear at arm's length until he learns some table manners.

So there is no mystery about what our military needs to modernize itself — but where do we get these skills? That is the bottleneck.

You and I have considered previously the possibility of making our American military an elite corps of experts — similar to our astronaut corps.

It's obvious we would also need to improve the reliability of its super-weapons.

Under these circumstances involving national survival, for our industry or our military to be under duress to employ less than the best....

Well...you've really got to ask whose side we are on!

John B's real chance to win

By Robert Walters

ST. LOUIS (NEA) - One of the most intriguing pieces of fresh information about the chances of success for Rep. John B. Anderson's presidential campaign comes from a recent nationwide survey that didn't even mention Anderson's name.

The little-noticed public-opinion poll, conducted by the Gallup Organization, found that almost one-third of all registered voters interviewed would favor a new centrist party in preference to either the Republicans or the Democrats.

Perhaps most significant, the broadest base of support for such a new political enterprise is here in the Midwest — not in the East or West, where much of Anderson's backing has been identified in other public-opinion surveys.

The Gallup Poll asked respondents to choose among Republicans, Democrats and "a new center party that would appeal to people whose political views are middle-of-the-road, in between those of Republicans and Democrats."

The results showed the hypothetical center party was preferred by 31 percent, surpassed only by the Democrats' 36 percent. The Republicans were favored by only 20 percent, while the remaining 13 percent had no opinion.

A regional analysis, however, showed that the center party was the favorite of 39 percent in the Midwest, making it by far the most popular of the three choices in this region. In contrast, a center party was preferred by 27 percent in the South, 26 percent in the West and 30 percent in the East.

Anderson is uniquely positioned to take advantage of that sentiment because he is a Midwesterner who embraces a centrist philosophy that includes liberal positions on many social issues and conservative positions on most economic matters — an amalgam of ideology that probably is most responsive to the contemporary mood of the electorate.

Moreover, expanding Anderson's base of support into the nation's heartland would go a long way toward obliterating his image as the presidential candidate supported almost exclusively by the wine-and-cheese set on the East and West coasts.

On the other hand, Anderson several months ago specifically rejected the alternative of establishing a new political party, choosing instead to run as an independent.

And although he remains the favorite of 19 percent to 24 percent of all respondents in national public-opinion polls, Anderson is still an unknown quantity to most potential voters.

In a recent CBS News-New York Times Poll, an overwhelming 76 percent of those questioned could not identify a single Anderson personal characteristic or political position they liked — and 80 percent could not specify anything about him they disliked.

Even more striking, only 22 percent of those interviewed thought Anderson could win the November general election. Even among Anderson supporters, only about half claimed he could win.

But a recent ABC News-Louis Harris Survey concluded that "Anderson now possesses the potential for being the first independent to win the White House in American history."

That poll showed putative Republican presidential nominee Ronald W. Reagan with 39 percent, President Carter with 33 percent and Anderson with 23 percent.

But when the question was rephrased to include the assumption "that Anderson had a real chance of winning the presidential election in November," the race became much closer: Reagan, 35 percent; Carter, 31 percent; and Anderson, 29 percent.

The most dramatic figures were produced when the if-Anderson-had-a-real-chance-to-win standard was applied to the eight most populous Northern states — California, New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, New Jersey and Massachusetts.

The startling results: Anderson won those states with 36 percent, followed by Carter with 31 percent and Reagan with 29 percent.

If Anderson, in fact, carried those eight major states in the November election, he would have amassed 216 votes in the Electoral College — and that's 80 percent of all the electoral votes he would need to become president.

War ravaged town looks at registration

By GEORGE ESPER Associated Press Writer
BEALLSVILLE, Ohio (AP) — This is a slice of Middle America that has Mom and Pop stores and plenty of snuff and chewing tobacco on the shelves, rolling green hills, winding roads and a monument bearing the words from Psalms 46:9 — "He causeth wars to cease."

This is a hospitable town of 500, shy but warm, uncomfortable and cautious in the legacy that Vietnam left it by swallowing up seven of its young men, all graduates of Beallsville High, home of the Blue Devils. Proportionately, it was one of the highest casualty tolls of the war, and it focused national attention on the town.

But unlike Vietnam, the draft registration that begins today has stirred hardly an outward ripple of emotion or protest here, as it has in other areas of the nation.

This is a town where men chew Mail Pouch and Work Horse and Beech Nut and work hard in the coal mines and in the aluminum plant. On Sundays, they carry bags of charcoal briquettes from James Mellott's grocery store for their barbecues. Mellott puts the occasional bad checks he gets from customers on a bulletin board at the register to shame them.

In short, this is a patriotic town that got caught up in the wrong war. It takes duties and the law seriously.

"This town believes in doing what's right," says Harry Decker, the postmaster at whose tiny office the 19- and 20-year-old men will register. "You have to have people trained. I don't think it has anything to do with Vietnam. I think that was just a big unfortunate mistake. We shouldn't have been there in the first place."

The men registering today were boys during the height of the Vietnam war, too young to mourn its losses.

"It ain't nothing to run out of the country about," says Jack Burch, 19. "You gotta do it. You can't get out of it. People from all over the country lost their lives in Vietnam."

"If you got to go, you got to go," says Rick Tomolonis, who will be 19 in September. "But I wouldn't want to go. I'll just have to sign up. It isn't too bad, I guess."

"I don't like it, but I'll have to do it," said Wayne Bohall, 19, who works with his father as a carpenter. "But I don't want them to draft me."

Burch has a twin sister, Jacqueline, who won't have to register.

The young men here feel women should be required to register because they have been demanding equal rights.

"They should go," says Burch, who works part time for the town. "The way I feel, they keep me out of a job. They're hiring women everywhere."

Jobs are scarce in Beallsville. Competition is tough and the recession hasn't helped. Young men like Burch and Tomolonis are looking for jobs.

The economy is of more concern now than registration. Coal miners are being laid off because utility plants, faced with environmental regulations, are unable to burn the high-sulfur coal mined in southern Ohio. The aluminum plant has laid off workers, too, because of the decline in the auto industry.

Even those like Earl Pittman, who have been scarred by Vietnam and who lost sons there, either believe in registration or at least do not oppose it, citing the need for a strong America, the unrest in the Middle East, the American hostages held by Iran and the threat of the Soviet Union.

On a lazy, sunny Sunday, Pittman, 59, sat in his kitchen and wept, oblivious to registration, the draft and war. He was a lonely figure, a man who had no one with whom to enjoy a steak.

Pittman has lived and relived Vietnam so many times that he takes pills for his nerves. He says he is bitter because he lost his only son, Jack, one of the seven young men of Beallsville killed in Vietnam.

Pittman thinks it was all for nothing. The war tore his wife, Maegene, 57, to pieces. And on Mother's Day, five years after the loss of South Vietnam, she slipped into a coma and died in a nursing home, ending a four-year struggle with cancer.

Pittman hasn't thought much about current events, preoccupied with the tragedies of his own life. But he feels the United States needs a strong army. He is not against the draft, but is against fighting wars like Vietnam, into which his 20-year-old son was drafted.

"They didn't declare war," he says. "They'd take a hill one day and give it back the next."

Life goes on for Earl Pittman, for Beallsville and for Dan Kuhn, a 30-year-old Vietnam veteran who has two small sons and believes everyone should have to serve — but not in another Vietnam. Mellott doesn't think it's necessary to get into war.

There are reminders of the more pleasant occurrences during the Vietnam era, side-by-side with the sadness of that war.

A sign outside the high school boasts of a 10-0 record for the Blue Devils football team in 1970, the year the United States invaded Cambodia.

The cemetery, where some of the dead from Vietnam lie, is next to the high school. There is a stone memorial at the entrance with this inscription:

"In honor of those who served our country.
 "He causeth wars to cease. Psalms 46:9."

Syrian diplomat killed in Paris

PARIS (AP) — A Syrian who was former vice premier of the United Arab Republic, which comprised Syria and Egypt, was murdered in central Paris today, police said.

They said he was shot with one bullet in the neck from a silencer-equipped pistol, apparently as he arrived at the offices of his political magazine, Al Ahaa al Arabi, which means Arab Renaissance.

Police identified the victim as Salah Eddin al-Bitar, 68, who carried a North Yemeni passport. A police official said it appeared Bitar was unlocking the door of his offices when the killer came up behind him and shot him.

They said Bitar was one of the founders of the Baath Party, whose rival wings are in power in Syria and Iraq. He was ousted from official life in Syria in 1966 and had since lived in exile.

The magazine, of which he was editor-in-chief, was a theoretical journal opposed to the policies of both wings of the Baath Party.

Syria merged with Egypt in February 1958 to form the United Arab Republic but seceded Sept. 29, 1961, to form the independent Syrian Arab Republic.

Maryland seeks return of alleged Agnew bribes

BALTIMORE (AP) — The state of Maryland has decided to join a four-year-old suit seeking to force former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew and two former associates to turn over $206,000 allegedly received as bribes while Agnew was governor.

The suit charges the three men took money from concerns seeking state contracts between 1967 to 1969. It contends the alleged payments rightfully belong to Maryland taxpayers and should be returned to the state with interest.

The lawsuit, a class action brought on behalf of the state's taxpayers, stemmed from a George Washington University law class in legal activism. Financial backing for the suit, which names three Montgomery County residents plaintiffs, has come from the Washington-based Fund for Constitutional Government.

The action was based on information obtained by federal prosecutors during the investigation that led to Agnew's resignation as vice president in October 1973.

Bolivian miners continue resistance

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — Miners in southern Bolivia said they were still battling the new military government and reported heavy casualties as sporadic gunfire continued in La Paz through the night curfew. Troop convoys traveled the capital's streets all night.

The junta that overthrew the civilian government on Thursday claimed in a communique it had eliminated all resistance. It threatened to fire all workers who did not abandon the general strike against its rule that began Friday.

The mine workers' clandestine Democratic Solidarity Radio said the miners in the southern Santa Ana district on Sunday fought the troops sent there by the junta and captured three tanks. The broadcast reported "many casualties" and "a lot of working-class blood has been shed."

The miners' radio also reported heavy fighting in the mining city of Huanuni, and sources in La Paz said air force jets were strafing the miners. But other reports reaching La Paz said there were only minor skirmishes in the mining districts and that the troops returned to their barracks.

No confirmation was available of any of the reports.

The commanders of the three armed forces took over the government to prevent leftist ex-President Hernan Siles Zuazo from being elected president by the new Congress, but Siles Zuazo escaped and went into hiding. He sent a taped message to the news media Sunday calling on Bolivians to support the general strike and overthrow the junta.

He said the junta, which ousted interim President Lidia Gueiler and named the army commander Gen. Luis Garcia Meza as president, would make Bolivia "a huge cemetery in the very heart of South America. This regime of national destruction will not consolidate itself as long as there is a people ready to fight against it."

Siles Zuazo appealed to the Roman Catholic Church, the International Red Cross and human rights organizations to "demand the names of the dead, so the sad story of missing people in other countries under military regimes will not be repeated."

Siles Zuazo also accused the junta of "attempts to transpose the Argentine model to Bolivia via Argentine military advisers." Advisers from Argentina's right-wing military regime reportedly helped with the coup.

Some sources believe Siles Zuazo has taken refuge in the French Embassy or the residence of the French ambassador in La Paz.

Ex-President Victor Paz Estenssoro, Siles Zuazo's runner-up in the presidential election last month, also went into hiding after the coup, but diplomatic sources said he was found and arrested.

Credit card castles collapse in face of sweeping recession

NEW YORK (AP) — Five years ago, R.W. had a good job, a happy family life and a pocketful of credit cards.

Then came the effects of recession. A business loss. Some bad investments.

In the space of only a few months, R.W.'s world of credit collapsed. His debts added up to more than many people earn in a year. His creditors wanted their money. His wife talked about leaving.

"I was out of control," he recalled recently, sitting in his office at a Manhattan employment agency. To get out from under, he said, "I would have sold my soul to the devil."

R.W., who didn't want his name used, has paid off his debts. "We even have a savings account now," he bragged.

He cleared his financial slate with the help of the local Consumer Credit Counseling service, one of some 200 such non-profit groups operating under the umbrella of the National Foundation for Consumer Credit, 1819 H St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

R.W., 38, is a native New Yorker. After graduation from college in 1963, he served in the military and worked for a manufacturer before forming an employment agency with a partner.

"Financial success was important and it seemed easy. I was making $32,000 a year when I was 28," R.W. said. Credit also seemed easy. "I was getting credit cards mailed to me unsolicited."

By 1975, however, the recession had hurt the employment business. R.W.'s partner used company money to pay gambling debts. And

R.W. lost money in the stock market. "All my savings," he said. "I really started to have to scramble to pay my bills... I was so far behind, my debt was a solid, five-figure debt..."

When business had been good, R.W. lived well. During slow periods, he borrowed. If you think there's a good month coming, he said, "you don't reduce your spending. You use credit cards."

After his business failed, R.W. said, "there was a period when I was making zero." He finally found another job with a base salary of $12,000, but it wasn't enough. "When the checks came in they were all spoken for... We were getting dunning calls... I had lost my car. My wife said if we could afford it, she would leave."

The family visited a credit counselor who worked out a budget. R.W. gave the counseling service a fixed amount every month to be used to pay off his bills.

R.W.'s wife went to work. "My wife is quite extraordinary," he said. "She was a young girl. I swept her off her feet... promised her the world... Then, all of a sudden: Whammo! We're living like paupers. Chicken backs and spaghetti."

It took R.W. two years to pay his debts. "It was clearly a lesson. It was a lot of lessons. I'm paranoid almost about going out and spending money."

R.W. has been unable to get new credit cards, but he is not sure he wants them. "I'm a little bit afraid. I'm afraid that I'll fall back into that old pattern."

Tech trains teachers of multi-handicapped

If Helen Keller were a child today, she would enjoy the care of many Anne Sullivans.

Keller was an American author and lecturer who was blind and deaf from the age of 2. At the age of 7 she was put under the care of teacher Anne Sullivan, who helped her overcome her handicaps and achieve international fame.

Although multi-handicapped children such as Keller once were considered virtually uneducable, today their special learning needs are being met, thanks in part to a unique federally funded program at Texas Tech University's College of Education.

Now entering its third year with a new grant of $60,000, the nation's only program designed to train consulting teachers to work with the multi-handicapped blind has already graduated 15 specialists and has another 30 currently enrolled.

"We're training what are called consulting teachers for the multi-handicapped blind," said Dr. Virginia Sowell, project director and coordinator of visual handicap and learning disabled programs in the College of Education. Graduates of the 21-semester-hour program work with classroom teachers and serve as liaison personnel with state and private agencies that serve the blind.

Teachers are trained to work with severely multi-handicapped blind students as well as "academic blind who go through high school or college," Sowell said. Those completing the two-year course receive master's degrees in special education with certification to teach visually handicapped children.

Program graduates are working as Education Service Center consultants, as consultants to Texas school districts and with private schools serving pre-school age and blind children.

There is a continuing need for teachers trained to work with the multi-handicapped blind, Sowell said. Although she expects nine teachers to graduate from the program this year, many more than that are needed to work with visually handicapped students in the state, she said.

Skating fad sweeps West Germany

By DAVID WINTHORN
COLOGNE, West Germany (AP) — Cathedral squares, shopping malls and airports are instant arenas for a roller-skating craze sweeping West Germany.

Over the past six months, an estimated 500,000 Germans have adopted plastic-wheeled "roller boots" — as the skates are known in West Germany — with all the abandon of Americans who popularized the urban sport.

Cologne is the European center of the fad, and other hotbeds are West Berlin, Frankfurt, Munich and Duesseldorf.

Roller skating is starting to catch on among young adults in London and Paris, but it is still viewed in Rome as a children's pastime.

Dozens of German youths meet every day on a spacious granite-paved square at Cologne Cathedral to perform acrobatic leaps from homemade ramps set up on the church steps.

"The square at Cathedral St. Peter of Cologne is the show place of the West German roller-skating movement," Stern magazine reported. "Often several hundred roller-fans can be seen frolicking there."

The teen-aged daredevils and fans occasionally get noisy enough to disturb religious services. But Cathedral Provost Heins-Werner Ketzler has avoided complaining to police. "Word would go around that we priests have no understanding for the children," he told Stern.

To ward off collisions, fences have been erected around statues on the square belonging to the nearby museum of Roman antiquities.

Stern estimated that of the half-million roller-skating buffs in West Germany, about 50,000 live in Cologne, many of them teen-agers given skates by their parents at Christmas.

A good pair of shoe skates costs up to 200 marks, ($110) in Cologne's leading shop. Mail order houses offer strap-on models for 43 marks ($24.50).

Hertie, one of West Germany's biggest chain stores, sold nearly 350,000 pairs of roller skates from October to January, a tenfold increase over the same period a year ago, before the skating craze set in.

Marketing experts predict the roller-skating sales boom will continue through the summer in West Germany.

With most of West German inner-cities now pedestrian malls, skaters have become something of a menace to shoppers as they slalom through the crowds on their nearly-silent plastic wheels.

Collisions have occurred but there are no reports of serious injuries to skaters or pedestrians. Nor have there been any cases of rolling purse snatchers, as in New York City.

In Duesseldorf, police are considering barring skaters from the main train depot because travelers have complained about rowdies zooming around the halls.

Frankfurt's international airport, the continent's busiest, also is considering a ban on roller skating because of congestion in the passenger terminal. But the off-limits won't apply to the airport's basement nightclub, "Dorian Gray" — one of the country's biggest roller discos.

In downtown Frankfurt, police have already banned roller skating in the underground shopping area of a midtown subway station, saying the practice is too dangerous.

Munich police take a more tolerant attitude about downtown skating. "Roller skaters are mostly showoffs who want to be seen. It's just a harmless fad," a police spokesman said.

Pedestrian malls and the Staccus underground shopping center are favorites for Munich skaters, and young mothers on roller skates can be seen pushing baby carriages along the Isar river promenades in the Bavarian capital.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a faithful reader of your column in the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin. Recently you printed a beautiful poem titled, "Take Time," reminding people to take time to make friends, to read, to play, to share, etc. . . . All lovely thoughts.

Well, I own a jewelry store in Bridgeton, N.J., and I was so taken with this poem that I had my sign painter put it on a 14-by-22-inch showcard to display on an easel on my pay counter. The title was in big, bold letters.

One of my customers, attracted by the sign, read the title, took the words literally, and walked out with one of my Bulova watches!

Enclosed is a bill for $69.95, plus tax $3.50. Please remit $73.45 to Morton's Jewelry. Very truly yours,
MORTON H. LIEBERMAN

DEAR MR. LIEBERMAN: I pay my honest debts, but this isn't one of them. Fortunately you can write off this rip-off by charging it to promotion and advertising.

DEAR ABBY: Last year my husband and I bought a summer place (a condo) because we've always wanted to get away from the city and relax for a few months in the summer.

Now the problem: My husband's brother and his wife, who live next door to us in the city, visited us at our condo and liked it so much they made an offer on the condo right next door to ours!

I love my relatives and have never had any trouble getting along with any of them, but next door all the time?? I don't want to cause ill feelings between families, but is there no way to avoid this closeness 12 months of the year? Or do you think I'm being selfish and small?

NEEDS SPACE

DEAR NEEDS: You're being neither selfish nor small — just frank in admitting that you need more space. However, it will take some master diplomacy to discourage your relatives from moving in next door without offending them.

DEAR ABBY: I am a student at the University of Missouri and will graduate with a B.S. this August 1980. My friends tell me that I should not send out graduation invitations because I am an older student. (I am 45.) Is it proper for older students to send graduation invitations to friends and relatives?

MADE IT IN MO.

DEAR MADE IT: Proper? I'd say it's imperative. Congratulations!

DEAR ABBY: As a clinical social worker for the Pediatric Neurology Department at UCLA Medical Center, I will no doubt again be consoling parents who have lost children in swimming pool accidents.

These senseless drownings can be prevented if adults act responsibly. This means fencing pools, and never leaving children unattended near the pool or anywhere in the house where they can wander out-of-doors and into the pool.

Children should be taught to swim and how to climb out of pools. CPR courses are given free at local Red Cross chapters, fire departments and public health agencies.

Please give this space in your widely read column, Abby. MELISSA KLASKIN, L.A.

DEAR MELISSA: These tragic drownings that claim the lives of so many children take only a minute. The grief and guilt suffered by those in whose care the youngsters were left lasts a lifetime. Thanks for a timely reminder.

Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How To Write Letters for All Occasions." Send $1 and a long, stamped (28 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Letter Booklet, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

HOMEMAKER'S NEWS

AVOID SPOILAGE IN HOME CANNING

With more homemakers canning food at home now, "spoilage knowledge" is necessary. Three common causes of spoilage of home canned foods are inaccurate pressure canners, incorrect processing temperature and improper cooling of jars.

Check the pressure canner once a year to be sure it is accurate.

Note ways to be sure foods are processed at the correct temperature in the pressure canner:

- Test pressure gauge so that the temperature is at 240 degrees F. at 12 pounds pressure.

- Exhaust pressure canner 12 minutes after flow of steam from the petcock.

- Keep pressure accurate. Less than 12 pounds of pressure won't kill bacteria in vegetables and meats.

Homemakers using a waterbath need to have water boiling when jars are placed in the canner. Water should be one inch or more above the top of all jars throughout entire processing time, and it must be kept at a rolling boil.

Check timetable carefully for whatever product is being canned, and be sure to add recommended time for high altitude areas.

BE SURE HOME CANNING JARS SEAL

If you preserved foods in "loud mouth" jars that keep "talking" all year on the pantry shelf, help is at hand to prevent it happening again. These "talking" jars often spell spoilage.

Reasons jars don't seal and suggestions on solutions include:

- Small particles of food left on rim of jar. Remedy: wipe off top of jar with clean damp cloth before placing lid on jar.

- Sealing compound or lid doesn't seal. Remedy: lids may be old. Usually, they last five years. Some may have a year date on them, such as 1-75, to indicate the lid was manufactured in the first quarter of 1975 and should be used before the end of the first quarter of 1980. It's a good idea to mark date of purchase on the box of lids.

- Bent or rusty rings. Remedy: bent or rusty rings can cause the lids not to seal properly. Always remove rings when jars have cooled thoroughly and seals are tested. Rings are necessary for the processing, but are not needed after the seal is made. Rings left on can rust and become difficult to remove — so store them in a dry place in a container that prevents them from being bent out of shape. Examine rings before the start of each canning season and discard rusty or bent ones. Never use lids more than once, because they are designed for a one-time seal.

- Rings screwed on "too tight" or "too loose." Remedy: rings which are screwed too tightly on the jar do not allow space for venting (escape of air from the jar). This makes pressure build up in the jar, causing the lid — sometimes even the top of the ring — to buckle. Rings not screwed on tightly enough will not seal, because the compound is not pressed firmly enough against the top of the jar.

The main point to remember is to follow manufacturer's directions. Do not use lid tighteners recommended for zinc caps. Two-piece lids don't require tighteners.

PRESSURE CANNER TESTING

We will be testing pressure canner gauges next Thursday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the courthouse annex meeting room. We will also test gauges in McLean Wednesday from 2 to 3 p.m. in the McLean Senior Citizens Center. Bring your pressure canner lid and have it checked. It takes only a few minutes to test the gauge and this is a free service. We also have a good supply of preservation bulletins on canning, freezing, pickling and jelly making. Ask for your free copies at the Gray County Extension Office in the courthouse annex or call 669-7429.

DRYING FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

A demonstration on drying fruits and vegetables will be presented Thursday at 2 p.m. in the courthouse annex meeting room. The demonstration will feature information on equipment needed, procedures to follow, and samples of dried products. Drying bulletins will be given to those attending. Everyone is invited to attend this free demonstration sponsored by the Gray County Family Living Committee.

COOKING WITH HONEY

It is best to use tested recipes that were planned with honey as an ingredient. However, you may substitute honey for sugar by adjusting the amount of liquid. Deduct ¼ cup liquid from the amount in the recipe for each cup honey used. No adjustment in sweetening power is needed.

Cakes and cookies may remain moist longer when made with honey rather than sugar. Because it absorbs moisture, honey may present a problem when used in frostings, confections and crisp cookies.

You can use honey as the quick "fool-proof" frosting. Beat an egg white with a dash of salt in it until it's stiff enough to hold peaks, but not dry. Then pour in slowly a half cup of honey over the egg white, beating for about four minutes.

Remember to measure honey accurately. Thick honey sometimes rounds up over the top of the measuring cup. Heat extra-thick honey in warm water for easier pouring. Or, if you lightly grease the cup or spoon, honey will pour out more readily.

WARNING — honey should not be fed to infants under one year of age because of the potential danger of botulism.

Economic turnabout projected

NEW YORK (AP) — Some of the same people whose policies brought us an unexpectedly severe recession are now trying to convince us that the worst is over.

Citing a partial recovery of a huge loss in housing starts — one that still leaves that industry in a depression — President Carter said he is looking forward to economic recovery.

And simultaneously with news that the gross national product shrank at an almost unprecedented annual rate of 9.1 percent in the April-June quarter, the president's chief economic adviser forecast a turnabout.

Charles L. Schultze, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, said in the midst of the bad news that "I think the recession will slow down shortly and will turn around."

The impression left by these subjective views is that the worst of the country's economic troubles are behind it when, in fact, the worst may still be ahead.

Take unemployment, for example. Courtenay Slater, chief economist of the Commerce Department, expects that joblessness could rise to as much as 8.5 percent to 9 percent from recent levels of just under 8 percent.

And in inflation. One of the most discouraging aspects of the latest quarterly report is that during the second-quarter economic collapse, the rate of price increases rose instead of declining, as expected.

The truth is that no turning point has been reached, no matter how often or how effective are attempts to sweeten the bitter facts.

The Carter administration isn't the only one that has sought to cover the evidence in a pile of hope.

Fresh in the memory, for example, is the performance of Herbert Stein, Schultze's counterpart in the administration of Richard M. Nixon, who month after month sought to compromise the political impact of rising inflation by telling Americans that the worst was now behind them.

It wasn't, of course, and it isn't now. Even Schultze, who, like Stein, seeks to emphasize the positive in the midst of disaster, conceded last week that the turnaround he said he saw was far, far in the distance.

Almost contradicting himself, he forecast "a slow, slow recovery." He placed the time of that recovery in "next year," which seems to be a forecast of continued recession this year.

Those who are immersed in this recession should recall that when the Carter administration first conceded the likelihood of a recession they were assured it would be brief and mild. The president said so.

Source of mercury poisoning found

DALLAS (AP) — Mercury brought home by high school students has caused hazardous levels of mercury contamination in four houses at Jefferson, state health department officials said.

"I've been working in this area 33 years and this is the first time I've heard of anything like this," said W.T. Ballard, regional engineer for the Texas Department of Health.

Department inspectors began checking the small East Texas town after the David Kimbrough family of Jefferson was hospitalized in Dallas with mercury poisoning. David and Paula Kimbrough and their two sons were released Friday, after receiving injections of a drug to remove the mercury from their bodies.

The Kimbroughs had exhibited symptoms of mercury poisoning since March, shortly after they moved into their house at Jefferson. After a doctor confirmed they had been poisoned by the heavy element, Texas Department of Health inspectors quarantined the Kimbrough home and began checking other houses in the town.

Ballard said the apparent cause in each house is mercury brought into the homes by high school students.

"I would imagine they got it from a school laboratory," Ballard said Sunday.

"We've pretty well narrowed it down to four houses that do show some mercury concentration," he said. "They're not in the same block but they're not that far apart. They're going to need some cleaning up."

Gigolo says he did no wrong

HOUSTON (AP) — Stephen Robert Martin sits in the Houston city jail, charged with theft and forgery, but he insists he has done no wrong. If women want to spend money on him, he says, that's their prerogative.

"I haven't done anything wrong," Martin said during an interview at the jail. "If women want to go out to eat and dancing and go to bed, I'll do it. But it's at their expense."

Martin admits it — he is a gigolo. A handsome man with a British accent, Martin said he has been engaged about 50 times this year.

"Women are willing to spend money to have a good time," he says. "They want me for their company. They want to show me off."

Martin said he would often pose as an airline pilot to facilitate ending relationships. When he grew tired of a woman, he said, he would leave a note that he had to make a flight and a few weeks later would get a friend to write or call the woman telling her he had been killed or badly hurt in a crash overseas.

It ended for Martin last Monday when he was arrested at Houston Intercontinental Airport for questioning on charges of several forgeries and theft.

Martin admitted the theft. Police detective C.C. Dodd said: "He went from place to place, girl to girl. He must have had quite a line of bull."

Martin also is wanted for questioning by the Dallas Police Department, the FBI, the Immigration and Naturalization Service and Scotland Yard.

The sharply-dressed Martin said he posed as a flight engineer and "99 percent of the time, they (the airline crew) ask you to come up and sit in the jump seat. I always flew first class. I have had free flights to every country in Europe, any place you can name in Canada and almost every state in the U.S."

Martin said he had three rules: "If you see a woman being hurt, you help her. If a guy is hurting a woman, you teach him a lesson. And never raise your voice or hand to her."

Martin says he runs, swims and plays tennis daily, takes no drugs and drinks only good wines, cognac or Napoleon brandy.

His opinion of Houston women? "They are very easy. They are naive," Martin said. "They can get themselves hurt if they're not careful."

Ryan's only concern - winning

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston strikeout artist Nolan Ryan discussed his near record fifth no-hitter, his losing record and sore ankle and then pointed to the only statistic that really concerned him.

"I can live with my critics and I can live with the fact that I don't have a good record as long as we win," Ryan said Sunday night after he had pitched 6 1/3 no-hit innings but did not figure in the decision in the Astros' 4-3 victory over Montreal.

It was a vintage Ryan who befuddled Expos batters until the seventh inning when he tired and yielded his first hit to Andre Dawson, a single to right field.

"I've gone farther than the seventh inning and lost no hitters before so that's old hat for me," said Ryan, who shares the major league record of four no hitters with Los Angeles Hall of Famer Sandy Koufax. "I don't start getting excited until the ninth inning."

Ryan, 34, suffered an ankle injury last week and has been unable to run between starts. "That was a factor in my tiring tonight," said Ryan, 5-7. "My elbow also bothered me some and that was because of the ankle."

Ryan was untouchable until he tired, striking out a season high 11 batters and allowing only a second-inning walk to Warren Cromartie, before Dawson's seventh-inning single.

Ryan left the game in the eighth after walking Chris Speier and yielding run-scoring singles to pinchhitter Tommy Hutton and Ron LeFlore.

Joe Sambito replaced Ryan and got out of the eighth but yielded a game-tying home run to Ellis Valentine in the ninth for a 3-3 deadlock.

The Astros won it in the ninth when Expos reliever Fred Norman walked Jose Cruz to start the inning. Dave Bergman then bunted down the first base line and Cromartie threw wide to first base as Cruz ran from first to home with the winning run.

The Astros scored three runs off starter Steve Rogers in the second inning on a two-run triple by Jeff Leonard and a sacrifice fly by Alan Ashby. Enos Cabell also singled in the second for the only two hits off Rogers, who left the game for pinchhitter Hutton in the eighth.

Montreal's Ron LeFlore, who got the third hit off Ryan in the eighth inning, said Ryan's curve was his secret.

"His curve was great," LeFlore said. "When you look for the fast ball you just can't hit the good breaking ball and you have to look for the fast ball with Ryan."

Sports, politics mixed at Olympics

MOSCOW (AP) — Some say sport and politics don't mix, but they did today at the Summer Olympics. Reports surfaced that Afghan athletes had been searching for a way to defect. An American sporting religious slogans and multicolored hair was detained by police and an Italian gay rights activist was arrested.

Meanwhile, Karoly Varga of Hungary captured the gold medal in the prone-position small-bore rifle competition with 599 points, and swimmer Vladimir Salnikova of the Soviet Union posted the best time of the year at 15 minutes 8.25 seconds for the 1,500-meter freestyle to qualify for the competition in that event Tuesday.

Two members of the Afghan Olympic team, one claiming to be a brother of a team member who defected before the Games, have made repeated approaches to Western reporters at the Olympic Village, seeking help to obtain asylum from the British or American embassy.

An American embassy official confirmed that the embassy was aware that the Afghan athletes had contacted at least one reporter but said there was nothing the embassy could do.

This morning, Rollen Stewart of Cle Elum, Wash., was removed by security officers from outside the Olympic Press Center. Stewart, who is frequently seen at sports events in America and who also appears in Budweiser commercials, was greeting reporters outside the center when two grey-clad officials led him away.

Stewart, who likes to be called Rock 'N Rollen, was wearing a wiry-haired wig with rainbow colors and a T-shirt reading "Believe in Jesus" and "Repent Your Sins."

He was released after a talk with officials. "They might tolerate my hair, but I think the T-shirt worries them," Stewart said. "I'm a born-again Christian and I think they are a little touchy on the subject of religion."

At Red Square, in front of St. Basil's Cathedral, Enso Francone, 32, of Turin, Italy, was seized roughly by police and taken away in a sedan after he tried to chain himself to a fence in a demonstration against Soviet laws against homosexuality.

Michelle Ford of Australia qualified first in the women's 200 butterfly in 2:12.72, topping three East German women. The final in that event was to be contested tonight.

Tonight Nadia Comaneci, no longer a pig-tailed pixie but still perhaps the best female gymnast in the world, was beginning her battle with Nelli Kim of the Soviet Union, recalling their heroics from the Montreal Olympics four years ago.

On Sunday, the opening of competition, a Soviet swimmer became the first man from his country to win a gold medal in Olympic swimming competition, but his victory was somewhat devalued because of the absence of the American world recordholder in the event.

Urschels headed to All American Futurity

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. — For the second consecutive year, a quarterhorse owned by Dan and Jolene Urschel of Canadian is headed for the million-dollar All American Quarterhorse Futurity in Ruidoso Downs, N.M.

"Mighty Deck Three" is headed to the All American after winning Sunday's Rainbow Futurity in 19.94 seconds the fourth lowest time in the history of the 17-year race.

"Mighty Deck Three," ridden by jockey Jerry Burgess, got a good start out of the gate in the No. 4 position, and took an immediate lead which was maintained till the race's end.

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — Results of Sunday's racing at Ruidoso Downs, a 600-acre track:
First — 5/8 furlongs: Color Me Country 7.20, 4.20, 1.30; Nativio 14.20, 5.00; Rocket Fumes 5.90, 7-1, 1-1, 3-5.
Second — 3/4 furlongs: Cu A Little 12.40, 13.00, 6.00; Black Ullimo 24.00, 6.00; Unique Miss 6.00, 7-1, 1-10, 25-2.
Daily Double — $2.00
Third — 400 yards: Lucka Gray Chick 5.00, 4.20, 3.60; Chantia Charger 14.20, 7.00; Sand Venture 4.00, 7-1, 20-70, 9-1, 1-1, 9-9.
Fourth — 5/8 furlongs: Took A Native 14.00, 9.00, 4.00; O'Degay Boy 8.00, 5.00; Flash The Green 6.00, 7-1, 10-1, 1-1, 0-0.

Pearson unshakable in demands

DALLAS (AP) — Preston Pearson says his position on deadlocked contract talks with the Dallas Cowboys is unshakable. On the other side of the table, Cowboys President Tex Schramm says the same thing.

The net result is that the veteran running back is not at the National Football League team's pre-season training camp and won't be, he says, until he gets what he wants.

Pearson's contract with Dallas has expired and he said he will stay in Dallas until he signs a new one.

"At this point in my career," the 33-year NFL veteran said, "for the sake of my identity and pride, it wouldn't do me any good to come (to camp). What it boils down to is the fact I won't be there unless I have something in writing or a verbal commitment from the Cowboys."

Schramm said Pearson has been given the only commitment he's going to get.

Convention delegates need money, stamina to succeed

DETROIT (AP) — It takes stamina and money to be a political convention delegate.

One hundred and sixty delegates and alternates, with husbands and wives, are willing to testify that after five days at the National Republican Convention.

Seldom did any Texas delegate get back to the hotel, the old Book Cadillac, before 1:30 or 2 a.m. after maybe seven or eight hours sitting in a folding chair in Joe Louis Arena. For some, there had to be a nightcap in the bar followed by fellowship in another delegate's room.

"I haven't slept three hours any night since I have been here," a woman delegate moaned one morning.

As for the financial effect, quick estimate shows the Texans spent at least $160,000 for the trip, not to mention that spent by Texas newspaper and broadcast staffs.

The Texas GOP delegates were told to expect to spend $1,000 to $1,500 for the Detroit trip. Some spent less, but many spent more.

"If you worry about the cost you shouldn't come," said delegate Lee Nutter of Dallas.

"I have to worry about costs and I figure I am spending about $1,500," said Dave Lowry, delegate from Bedias.

Basically the airline cost to Detroit was $300 to $350 round trip, the hotel rooms $50 to $65 and personal expenses including meals about $50 a day. A number of Texans had suites that cost $175 to $225 a day.

One wealthy Houston delegate got a suite, brought his secretary along to continue his regular business routine and hired a Detroit driver and car to stand by at all times.

"I just ate at McDonald's," said delegate Michael Ellis of Daingerfield. "I'm hoping to get by for $770 to $800. I couldn't afford to bring my wife along."

Delegate Steve Lilly of Nacogdoches, who brought his wife along, figures the trip cost them $2,500. It is their vacation for this year.

Jean Bensmiller of George West said "we just don't eat breakfast to save money. We drove up here but it is still going to cost us at least $1,000 each.

"In addition it cost us about $100 to attend a special meeting of delegates and we probably spend $400 at the Houston state convention when we were elected ... but someone has to pay the price for good government. I've been a volunteer worker for the party for more than 20 years," she said.

A number of the Texas delegates ate at the drug store lunch counter instead of paying $5.95 for a buffet breakfast in the hotel dining room.

A bourbon and water in the bar went from $1.96 the day before the convention to $2.25 a day later. Several Texas delegates were seen carrying brown bags out of nearby a liquor store.

Mobilization plan includes more enlistment

WASHINGTON (AP) — While youths are registering for a possible wartime draft, the Pentagon is moving to expand voluntary enlistments in a reserve manpower pool that would be tapped for combat strength early in a crisis.

If it succeeds, the plan would provide what the military calls "pre-trained" men to bring Army regular, National Guard and reserve units to full wartime strength and to provide replacements for combat casualties in the first months of fighting.

So far, the idea has been tested on a very limited scale. But officials say they believe that, in a full-scale effort, they can enroll as many as 10,000 young men a year directly into the Individual Ready Reserve.

Since they would have completed basic training, these individual reservists would be available for overseas deployment in a war much more quickly than draftees, who are required by law to receive at least 12 weeks of such training after induction.

Individual Ready Reserve.

After three months of peacetime active duty for basic training, they would spend the remaining five years and nine months at their normal civilian pursuits. They would be obligated to undergo two brief periods of refresher training, but would not be required to drill regularly as is the case with members of the Guard and reserve units.

Some critics question whether this sparse training would produce useful combat soldiers when needed.

"It's a lot better than having nobody to call when we need individual fillers and replacements in a crunch," said one Pentagon official who asked to remain anonymous.

The plan for expanded voluntary enlistments into the Individual Ready Reserve carries no provision for any bonuses. So far as can be determined, no other tangible incentives are offered.

The Individual Ready Reserve, or manpower pool, has shrunk from a peak of almost 1.6 million before the draft ended in mid-1973. In those days, youths finishing two years as conscripts were placed on the ready reserve rolls for an additional four years to complete a six-year military obligation.

Since the end of the Vietnam War, the armed forces have been reduced substantially and men serve minimum enlistments of three years. This led to a steep drop in the reserve manpower pool, which totaled only about 396,000 last October.

Pentagon officials considered proposing a two-year extension of the six-year overall military obligation for future recruits as one way of replenishing the individual reserve pool. But they dropped the idea because, as one official said, "it places the burden on those who've served."

So defense manpower specialists turned to other options, including a $600 bonus for re-enlistment in the Individual Ready Reserve by men whose obligation has expired.

Moslems begin work on Islamic community

ABIQUIU, N.M. (AP) — Work has started across the Rio Chama on an Islamic community that could rival the size of this old Spanish village within a decade.

Moslem organizers in March signed a $1.3 million contract with rancher Alva Simpson for 1,000 acres, much of it irrigated land. Simpson already has been paid $300,000.

Construction of a 2,000-square-foot mosque, which will include seven small domes, was started about a month ago on one of the colorful sandstone plateaus overlooking Abiquiu.

Plans call for continuous expansion that could lead to placement of 100 students and more than 100 families in the community within 10 years. Along with the mosque, school and homes, plans call for boarding rooms for students and workshops for craftsmen. The organizers also hope to farm the 400 acres purchased along the river valley.

The entire 1,000-acre rectangular tract is bordered on the south by U.S. 84, just east of Abiquiu.

Total projected costs of the community are $5 million.

A leader of the project said this month that a primary goal of the community is to blend in with native residents. He said the Moslems hope to be regarded as friendly neighbors who will not impose religious beliefs, or anything else, on Abiquiu residents.

A group working on restoring the 16th century Santa Rosa de Abiquiu Church ruins is apprehensive about the plans.

"I don't like it at all," said Elfrido Lopez, 67. Lopez supervised a crew this month working on the church ruins, near the southeastern boundary of the Moslems' land.

He said he was concerned that the Moslems wouldn't get along with the people in the area.

"We don't want nothing like that in Abiquiu. I think all the people of Abiquiu are against it," he said.

Abdur Ra'uf Walter Declerck, secretary of Dar-al-Islam, a nonprofit corporation created last year in Santa Fe to pursue the project, says such concerns about the project are unwarranted.

"We want to get along with our neighbors," he said. "Basically, we're not that much different. We want to build something that is in harmony with the environment. We are not going to force our way of life on anybody."

Money collected for the project thus far has been from donations, Declerck said. He said the $300,000 paid for the land was raised by the Riyadh Ladies' Benevolent Society. Another $25,000 being spent on the mosque came from Egyptian contributors and a Saudi businessman has donated $29,000, which will be used to construct a water system.

He said the corporation will continue to rely on donations and is in no hurry to launch a formal money-raising campaign.

Declerck said New Mexico is an ideal location for the new Moslem community because "it has a good climate and good people."

"We're very interested in having a piece of land where we can live as Moslems together," he said.

Heat turns fun weekend into near disaster

HOUSTON (AP) — Relentless Texas heat turned a weekend frolic into a near-disaster when more than 100 children at a private, neighborhood swim meet had to be treated for heat-related illnesses.

"We had a mini-disaster out there," said Joe Mason of the Harris County Emergency Corps. He said 20 emergency medical personnel set up an aid station Saturday to treat the stricken swimmers.

"We treated between 95 and 100 people for heat exhaustion, heat cramps and shock before the meet directors decided to cancel the meet," he said.

Nearly all of those treated were swimmers, Mason said.

Four of the children were taken to Houston Northwest Medical Center where they were treated and released, a hospital spokesperson said.

Mason said the meet began at 8 a.m. and was cancelled about 4 p.m. at a pool in a private subdivision just outside Houston.

The meet was sponsored by the Northwest Park Region 6 Aquatic Association. About 500 children between the ages of 9 and 17 were entered.

"We had a few people we treated before noon," Mason said, "then they really started coming in as the temperature climbed."

The official high temperature Saturday was 96, but the thermometer climbed to 104 in some sections of town.

Mason said off-duty ambulance personnel were summoned and the pool's clubhouse was converted into a makeshift emergency room for the victims.

"We had one-to-one care in one area for the more serious cases," he said, "and then a place for the less severe cases and an area for people who were recovering."

Several members of the crowd watching the meet brought ice, blankets and fans to help treat the victims and a registered nurse volunteered her services, Mason said.

"Some of these people were severely prostrated," he said. "We were going constantly. One of our EMT workers was also treated for heat cramps."

Mason said some of the victims apparently were suffering from heat problems before they swam. "A couple of them had to be pulled out of the pool after they finished the race," he said.

"The competitive spirit of the kids caused them to go into the water even though they were suffering," Mason said.

Manned lighthouses rare on coast

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Radio signals are replacing lighthouses as guides for sailors on America's coastal waterways, but Coast Guard officials say the lighthouse still has a place as a navigation aid.

Most of the old lighthouses along the Louisiana coast have either been downgraded with smaller lights, taken out of service, or automated, said Coast Guard Lt. G.P. Shriver.

But the 8th Coast Guard District, based in New Orleans, still has one lighthouse with men on board among their three operating beacons.

"Southwest Pass is a manned light station," said Shriver. "It's pretty solitary — the crew of five splits up into two groups of two weeks. There's usually two people on the station."

Shriver said the lighthouse, which marks an entrance to the Mississippi River of 150 yards in width, is still kept as a beacon to guide ships into the channel. Its light shines into the Gulf of Mexico for 24 miles.

Duty on the Southwest Pass lighthouse is lonely, but there is worse duty in the Coast Guard, Shriver said.

"It's no worse duty than some of the ships that are away pretty much of the year, at three months a shot," Shriver said.

"It's mainly lonesome from boredom. You can only walk around the lighthouse so many times for two weeks, before you get bored real quick," said Shriver.

"We've got Loran stations, like French Frigate Shoals, where you spend a year there. That's nothing but a 300-foot strip of land, and that by far would be worse."

Loran is a radio locating system that depends on accurate signals from two separatstations to fix a ship's position.

The lighthouse has slightly softer chairs than you'll find in much of the Coast Guard, and amenities like television, radio, and a fishing boat, said Shriver. But crews still sleep on standard-issue thin mattresses, and fill out lots of paperwork.

"They get a couple of little extras there to try and make it a little bearable," said Shriver. "But still, it's not like living in downtown New Orleans. It's comfortable, and that's where we stop."

The lighthouse is the fifth to mark the entrance of the pass. Previous light stations have either collapsed or tilted in the Mississippi mud so badly they could not bear the weight of the heavy lens and thousand-watt lightbulb, said Shriver.

Shriver said manned lighthouses, like all lighthouses operated by the Guard, are becoming outmoded and are being replaced by modern navigational aids.

Loran-C radio systems and other position locating systems using satellites provide accurate benchmarks to guide skippers, and good Loran equipment can be bought for about $2,000, Shriver said. But there's still a place for the lighthouse.

"The big ships are still using them, but they use them more or less as landmarks than anything else," Shriver said. "I'd say it's really for the smaller vessel, for the actual light shining them back."

NAMES IN THE NEWS

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) — A telethon billed as a star-studded program to raise $1 million for the Richard Pryor Burn Foundation fell short of both celebrities and money.

Only $140,000 in pledges were made during the course of the 14½-hour show, which was aired Friday and Saturday, according to organizers.

Producer and co-host Redd Foxx said he developed back trouble prior to the show and was unable to appear. Co-host Sammy Davis Jr. was in Indianapolis, but did appear on tape.

Others who the producers said would appear, including boxer Muhammad Ali and author Alex Haley, also did not attend. But television actors Robert Guillaume of "Benson," Donny Most of "Happy Days" and Johnny Crawford of the old "Rifleman" series did appear.

The money raised will be used for research into burns and to provide financial aid to burn victims, said a spokeswoman for the foundation.

Comedian Richard Pryor, who suffered third-degree burns on the upper half of his body in an accident June 9, was in satisfactory condition Sunday at the Sherman Oaks Burn Center. He has had three skin-graft operations and is expected to leave the hospital in the next couple of weeks, a hospital spokesman said.

HYANNIS, Mass. (AP) — Rose Kennedy was surrounded by a platoon of grandchildren and was accompanied by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, her only surviving son, as she rode at the head of a "Rose Parade" to celebrate her 90th birthday.

Mrs. Kennedy, whose birthday is Tuesday, made no public remarks during a 10-minute ceremony before the Sunday parade.

But her son quoted his brother, the late President John F. Kennedy, in praising his mother. He said she was "the glue that kept our family together."

People came out of their houses along the parade route to watch Mrs. Kennedy's car slowly drive by. They applauded and shouted, "Happy Birthday, Rose."

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The deposed shah of Iran is feeling well enough to leave his hospital bed three times a day for short walks, one of his doctors says.

The former Iranian monarch, who is in the intensive care unit of Maadi Military Hospital, is still receiving high-calorie feedings through a tube leading from his mouth to his stomach, the doctor said Sunday.

"He is 132 pounds at least," said the doctor.

Pahlavi's weight reportedly had dropped to 110 pounds when he was admitted on June 27 with an abdominal infection, apparently a complication arising from his treatment for lymphatic cancer.

The doctor said he expected the shah's stay in the hospital to last three more weeks.

North Korea wants exchanges

PEKING (AP) — Rep. Stephen Solarz, returning here following a six-day trip to North Korea, said the North Korean government is eager to develop "cultural, scholarly and other exchanges as a way of breaking down barriers" with the United States, even without establishing diplomatic relations.

The Brooklyn Democrat, who goes on from here to Tokyo, also told a news conference Sunday that North Korea was willing to drop a demand that South Korea abolish its anti-communist laws as a condition for normalizing relations with the pro-Western South.

Solarz said that in a meeting with North Korean President Kim Il-sung, Kim said North Korea would accept family reunification, mail exchange and trade with South Korea. The country was divided into U.S.- and Soviet-controlled areas following World War II.

Military rule nears end

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Gen. Policarpo Paz Garcia handed control of the government to the new 71-member Constituent Assembly in what is viewed as a major move toward ending nearly a decade of military rule in this Central American nation.

The moderately conservative body is expected to name Paz Garcia, head of a three-man military junta that has ruled Honduras since August 1978, as provisional president until it has approved a new constitution and election laws. Paz Garcia will be directly responsible to the assembly.

After the constitution is written, the assembly will call elections for a president, Congress, mayors and city councils. It will also name a 13-man executive Cabinet, Supreme Court justices, provincial officials and heads of government agencies.

Indian bootleggers arrested

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Seven police officers were suspended for failing to arrest bootleggers and stop the sale of moonshine after illicit liquor killed five Indian laborers and blinded three others in suburban New Delhi.

Scores of residents marched Sunday to the local police office carrying the body of one of the dead men, demanding the arrest of the bootlegger, who escaped. They alleged that police personnel were involved in the area's bootlegging trade.

The three people blinded had refused to go to a hospital, fearing arrest, and instead tried home remedies by "swallowing margarine and cinnamon," local press reports said.

Hundreds drown in floods

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — At least 335 people have drowned and some 1 million evacuated from their homes in several Indian states because of torrential rains and flooding since the monsoon season began in early July, according to local news reports.

The reports Sunday said the flooding situation was becoming worse in the northern states of Uttar Pradesh and Bihar, Assam in the northeast and Gujarat in western India.

Toxic smoke hinders firemen

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Toxic smoke from burning animal hides hindered firefighters' efforts to douse the flames at a local tannery.

More than 60 firemen battled the four-alarm blaze, wearing oxygen masks to protect them from the deadly cyanide and hydrogen sulfide gases emitted by the burning skins. Officials said the fire at Southwest Wool and Hide Co. could have been started by a malfunction in the electrical system.

Three confess to rape

WILMER, Texas (AP) — Sheriff's deputies say three men have confessed they gang raped a teen-age mother who was stranded north of Dallas when her husband's car ran out of gas.

The 16-year-old girl, her 23-year-old husband and their 4-month-old baby were traveling to Hutchins early Sunday when the car ran out of gas. Three men pulled up and offered to help, the husband told police.

He gave the men — ages 18, 19 and 22 — $10 to buy gasoline. The young mother became suspicious and jotted down a license number, police said.

The men then returned and abducted the girl at knife-point after terrorizing her husband. Each man raped the girl twice, doctors said, and she sustained "serious injuries" but was not hospitalized.

'Gentleman bandit' in despair

SMYRNA, Del. (AP) — Even though he's serving time in prison, Ronald Clouser believes that his children received the harshest punishment for his crime of committing armed robberies — and nearly letting a priest take the rap.

It's been nearly a year since Clouser admitted he was the "Gentleman Bandit," a courteous crook who used a handgun to hold up stores in Delaware, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Authorities originally arrested the Rev. Bernard Pagano, a Roman Catholic priest who resembles Clouser, but let him go last August when Clouser confessed while Pagano was on trial.

Clouser, 40, a former resident of Brookhaven, Pa., says he began the holdups in the spring of 1979 while he was in the midst of a bitter custody fight for his three children. Though he was making $23,000 a year as a design engineer for the Postal Service, money was tight, he said, and he was struggling with a drinking problem.

"I had nothing to lose. I went overboard. A lot of men in my situation would have committed suicide," he said.

He is still despairing, he said, about his children.

"I sit idly by and think about my children possibly starving. My ex-wife is having quite a struggle financially. She lost her job six weeks ago," he said.

"I'm not justifying what I did. I got a sentence. But I don't think my children deserve to be sentenced and I don't think my ex-wife deserves to be sentenced," Clouser said.

Clouser faces five more years in the Delaware Correctional Center near Smyrna and an additional four to nine years in a Pennsylvania prison when he's done. He was sentenced to three to six years in prison for a New Jersey holdup, but that sentence runs concurrently with the one in Delaware.

He was tagged as a prime candidate for a work-release program by Delaware Superior Court Judge Andrew Christie, and he becomes eligible for the program next month.

But there's a good chance he'll be turned down because of his convictions in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Clouser, who works as a clerk in prison, contends both he and society would be better off if he were in a work-release program. He believes he could make a valuable contribution with his business administration training from the University of Pennsylvania.

Clouser says he has found religion in prison.

When he was committing the robberies, he said, "I guess I wasn't paying too much attention to God."

"I became obsessed with the idea of custody. God perhaps was trying to get my attention when He put me here and God was waiting right here when I hit bottom," he said.

When he is not in his Bible study group, Clouser says, he is lonely. He says he reads occasional visits from his children, two daughters and a son, because he hates to see them leave.

Hitch ride, go directly to jail

VIDALIA, La. (AP) — Three Concordia Parish jail escapeses picked the wrong road, the wrong car and the wrong time to hitch a ride, says Sheriff John Patrick.

"The road they were on is not traveled that heavily, but it leads to my house," Patrick said after he arrested the trio on a levee by the Old Mississippi River and escorted them back to jail Saturday.

The three, who had escaped Friday, surrendered quietly and were picked up by the marked cars.

Few people can make this claim

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

DETROIT (AP) — I have just done something I could tell my grandchildren about, if I had any and could find a chain strong enough to tie them to a tree with and make them listen.

I sat through every single sonorous second of the 1980 Republican National Convention, gavel to gavel, parked in one of those red chairs in Joe Louis Arena with no timeouts for station breaks, button-holding delegates at the hot dog stand, Preparation H commercials, poolside interviews with the candidate's family or attending to personal necessities.

No TV anchor team and not many delegates can make that claim. Not many would care to. Several times my presence threatened to outnumber the combined Rhode Island, Hawaiian and Guam delegations.

They say that except for the host Michigan delegation, Wyoming and Vermont were awarded the best seats because they pulled the most votes for Gerald Ford in the last presidential go-around. Actually, Guam, the Virgin Islands and the District of Columbia, way back in the low-rent district, had the favored locations. They could duck behind the bunting and get out from under that torrent of tedium.

One evening I sat through 7 hours and 36 minutes of activities: 28 introductions, 19 addresses, 9 remarks, 4 presentations, 7 resolutions, 3 standing ovations, two placard-waving demonstrations, 3 threats to have the sergeant-at-arms clear the aisles, 14 films, one invocation and one benediction (both of which ran longer than the shortest speech) and never did get to see the main act. The keynote speaker was postponed until next day for lack of time.

Sticking with the convention down to the final gavel, you get to listen to band leader Manny Harmon's entire repertoire of "California, Here I Come," "The Eyes of Texas" and "Under the Double Eagle," a numbing two dozen times an hour. And you hear the "Star-Spangled Banner" sung in ways that would have driven Francis Scott Key up the wall. Glen Campbell and best friend Tanya Tucker did a down-home version opening night.

From my vantage point, due south of the South Dakota delegation, I got to see a platform official whose only job was to run in a squatting position to the microphone and place a footstool under short speakers. Sure enough, on the last night he got his fingers mashed by an over-eager orator.

There were other easily forgettable moments in this four-day boreathon: TV blonde dazzler Susan Amont stressing the poverty issue by showing she could no longer afford a cloth bra; Wayne Newton swooning "Dixie" in dirge time in skin-tight formal duds, and the nervous speech introducer who promised us Reagan would "restore chaos out of order."

Like the 1960 Republican Convention, I could go on and on and on and on and on... But I won't.

During Republican Convention, most viewers watched 'Kung Fu'

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As one of America's political parties nominated its candidate for president, television viewers in Los Angeles watched reruns of "Kung Fu." A.C. Nielsen Co. reports suggest that most of the rest of America also tuned out the GOP last week.

That's too bad, really, because the Republican convention provided the most fascinating television of the year. Last Wednesday, TV and the Republicans co-produced some swell entertainment; neither party seems overly proud of the moment, though.

In retrospect, television seems inclined to minimize its role in one chaotic evening's events, in which the GOP seemed ready to create a Gerald Ford-Ronald Reagan "co-presidency." But be sure, TV gets a co-star billing in this drama.

This is irrefutable: The Ford-Reagan talks moved from the convention's back rooms to the nation's living rooms when Gerald Ford gave Walter Cronkite a broad outline of his envisioned "co-presidency," as Cronkite called it.

From that moment, television became part of the picture.

"If you don't see this story," said CBS' Dan Rather, "you're dead behind the eyes." Rather quoted Republican sources as saying the deal was nearly struck.

"The deal has been made," CBS' Morton Dean quoted a source as saying. NBC's Tom Brokaw asked Iowa Gov. Robert Ray: "Is it your understanding the deal has been struck?" Ray: "It is my understanding."

Because of television's presence, Ronald Reagan then had to close a deal with Ford or sustain some damage to his campaign. As ABC's George Will put it at the height of the euphoria:

"This convention would suffer a tremendous letdown (if the deal failed) and anyone then selected would be clearly second choice."

That happened, of course, and Reagan's second choice, George Bush, is now his running mate. Some say that when Reagan saw Ford negotiating his position with Cronkite, he cooled considerably on the matter of sharing his hoped-for presidency.

NBC's John Chancellor, who, with co-anchor David Brinkley, managed to maintain an admirable calm and restraint through the evening, downplayed TV's role:

"I think that television coverage of the convention had very little influence on events. The reason I say that is, the negotiations that Ford's staff with Reagan's staff began at 9 (a.m.) They continued for 14 hours. The convention went on the air at 7 p.m."

For the record, NBC, which had earlier seemed shut out of the story (being the only network without a Ford interview) was the first to report Bush's selection, barely beating CBS and Leslie Stahl.

ABC's Frank Reynolds and Ted Koppel were on the air for long, embarrassing moments musing about a Reagan-Ford ticket while everyone else at Joe Louis Arena knew it was going to be Bush.

Dan Rather spent the rest of the evening and much of the next day excusing himself for his part in the story. And one of Tom Brokaw's first stops, understandably, was at Governor Ray's seat. Ray said he thought he knew what he was talking about at the time.

Merit Blitz!

Low tar/good taste combination scores impressive
3-to-1 victory over leading high tar brands.

There's a low tar cigarette that's challenging high tar smoking—and winning.

The cigarette: MERIT.

High Tars Suffer Setback

Nationwide smoker research documents that smokers prefer MERIT.

Blind Taste Tests: In tests where brand identity was concealed, a significant majority of smokers rated the taste of low tar MERIT as good as—or better than—leading high tar brands. Even cigarettes having twice the tar!

Smoker Preference: Among the 95% of smokers stating a preference, the MERIT low tar/good taste combination was favored 3 to 1 over high tar leaders when tar levels were revealed!

Long-Term Satisfaction: In the latest survey of former high tar smokers who have switched to MERIT, 9 out of 10 reported they continue to enjoy smoking, are glad they switched, and reported MERIT is the best-tasting low tar they've ever tried!

MERIT is the proven alternative to high tar smoking. And you can taste it.
