A salvage crane lifts the pleasure boat Marchioness from the bed of the River Thames in London Sunday after it sank following a collision with a sand dredger. At least 27 people are feared drowned.

Gas prices may continue to decrease

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dire forecasts of summer gas lines and higher prices aren't materializing, and analysts say prices at the pump may be headed even lower as the vacation season draws to a close.

Although consumers are paying about 15 cents a gallon more this summer than last, nearly all the increases came in the two months following the Exxon Valdez oil spill last March. Since June, retail prices in most areas have slipped slightly.

On June 13 the consumer group Buyers Up, a division of the Ralph Nader-founded Public Citizen organization, issued a report saying tight supplies and rising demand would lead to higher prices and possibly 1970s-style gas lines by early August.

Christopher Dyson, author of the report, said then that he expected prices to jump about 10 cents a gallon during the summer, mainly because of a supply squeeze.

In fact there have been no reported shortages of gasoline, even in remote areas with heavy tourist traffic, according to Joseph Koach, executive director of the Service Stations Dealers of America. He noted that many industry groups, as well as the Bush administration, had disputed Buyers Up's prediction.

"They've got to have egg on their faces," Koach said.

Dyson, in an interview last week, acknowledged his report was off the mark, but he said the nation still faced a precarious supply situation and that a refinery or pipeline accident could throw the retail gasoline market into crisis.

Some other analysts in June agreed with Dyson's view that a supply crunch was possible, but none went so far as to predict motorists would face backups at the gas pump.

Dyson said he had "totally underestimated" the refining industry's ability to sustain an exceptionally high rate of production throughout the season.

"That was the major reason our prediction didn't come out as it should have," Dyson said. He also did not expect the high rates of summer oil production by major foreign producers that pushed down prices for crude used to make gasoline.

U.S. refineries have run nearly full blast this summer, using an average 89.8 percent of available capacity in June and 90.3 percent in July. The July figure was the highest for any month in 11 years, according to the American Petroleum Institute.

The risk of shortages also was eased by a lack of growth in gasoline use. The Energy Department said demand in the first half of this year was unchanged from a year earlier, although it says growth will resume soon. Last spring it had predicted about a 1 percent increase for this year's first half.

Summer usually is the peak period for gasoline consumption, and demand normally tails off by September.

Jan Lundberg, a private energy forecaster based in Fredericksburg, Va., said the recent slump in gasoline prices "is clearly due to an unexpectedly weak summer driving season" that he said could mean the economy is entering a recession.

Lundberg and other analysts say prices are likely to continue dropping this fall, although the pace and depth of decline will be determined in part by the willingness of wholesalers and station dealers to pass on savings from lower crude prices.

The Energy Department says it expects the average price of imported crude oil by summer's end to be about $17 a barrel, or about 10 percent lower than last spring. Theoretically that would mean a decline of about a nickel a gallon at the pump, although many factors, including state taxes, could change that.

The department said in a recent report that 12 states have raised gas taxes this year.

Marion Stewart, an energy analyst at the private National Economic Research Associates Inc., said in an interview that he expects retail gasoline prices to fall "at least a few cents a gallon" in the next several weeks.

Thames being searched for bodies

LONDON (AP) — Salvage crews today searched for bodies in the River Thames and in a pleasure boat that sank in a late-night collision with a barge. Police said at least 27 people were killed.

Eighty-four people survived the accident early Sunday under Southwark Bridge in the heart of London, but authorities were uncertain exactly how many were aboard the privately chartered Marchioness, setting for the 26th birthday party of businessman Antonio Vasconcellos. He is among the missing.

Police detained the captain and second mate of the Bowbelle sand-and-gravel dredger and released them overnight. Police said they would be questioned again today.

"We are looking at offenses such as possible unlawful killing and any related offenses," said a police spokeswoman on condition of anonymity. Unlawful killing is a British charge similar to manslaughter.

Authorities also examined taped radio messages to river navigators for clues into the cause of the accident.

The Independent, a London daily, reported an apparent disagreement between the captains of the 90-ton Marchioness and the 1,475-ton Bowbelle over which vessel should pass first under the bridge's central span.

The paper also quoted a veteran crewman as saying the Bowbelle rammed another Thames passenger boat five years ago and nearly sank it. The Thames is one of the world's busiest commercial rivers, used by more than 32,000 vessels each year.

Police still were unsure today how many people were on board when the pleasure boat was struck in the rear and run over by the Bowbelle while on a five-hour overnight cruise. Police said today that 25 launches were scouring the Thames for bodies.

As the tide dropped today, the hull of the 85-foot Marchioness became fully visible, resting on a mudbank with its top deck sheared off and its dance floor exposed. Crews had pulled the boat there from the center of the river where it sank.

One launch brought families of some victims to the scene to drop flowers on the water.

Police said Sunday that the boat, which did not have a passenger roster, was licensed to carry 149 passengers and two crew. They said the death toll could be up to 60, which combined with the 84 known survivors would put the total number aboard as high as 144.

Aviatrixes recreating 1929 National Women's Air Derby

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Sixty years ago, those daring young aviatrixes in their flying machines flew into Midland in the First National Women's Air Derby.

The 2,200-mile flight in August of 1929 climaxed in glory for the winner, 24-year-old Louise McPhetridge Thaden in her open-cockpit Travel Air, but ended the life of one of the derby's 20 pilots.

Susan Dusenbury, a 40-year-old Airborne Express DC-9 pilot, is recreating that historic flight as she flies the Wright J5 Travel Air biplane in which Ms. Thaden won the derby in nine days of flying from Santa Monica, Calif., to Cleveland, Ohio.

"This derby symbolizes the dramatic achievement that women have made in aviation," said Ms. Dusenbury.

Ms. Thaden, who in 1928 had set an altitude record of 20,260 feet in a Travel Air, was more than the derby's victor.

"She represented the spirit of all women aviators — of their abilities and of their courage," Ms. Dusenbury said.

Ms. Dusenbury will land the biwing 1929 Travel Air D4000, — restored by William "Dub" Yarbrough, a retired U.S. Navy captain — accompanied by chase aircraft, at noon Tuesday at Midland International Airport.

At the Midland airport's Rich Air South fixed-base operation, Ms. Dusenbury and others traveling the flight of the 1929 derby will be greeted by, among others, members of the Purple Sage Chapter of The Ninty-Nines, an international organization of women pilots.

"It was really a man's world back then," said Janet Koonce, a Midland pilot who is chairman of the Purple Sage Chapter.

Tayrien to be considered for athletic director

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

Texas Tech recruiting coordinator Jack Tayrien will be recommended for the open position of athletic director (AD) of the Midland Independent School District when the school board meets Tuesday, MISD officials said.

If the trustees approve Superintendent Joseph Baressi's recommendation as expected, Tayrien, a former Midland Lee head coach, will succeed outgoing AD Gil Bartosh who announced his retirement in June. Bartosh's retirement becomes effective Aug. 31.

"We're going to consider the recommendation of Jack Tayrien on Tuesday," MISD personnel director Tom Holland said Sunday. "It's not over until the board officially approves the recommendation."

The recommendation that Tayrien be named the district's head of athletics was made Saturday after the board met privately with Tayrien and the other four finalists, Midland Lee head coach Earl Miller, Alamo Junior High principal David Adams, Ennis Independent School District athletic director Rommie Maxey and Paris AD Mike Long.

"Our recommendation is going to be made Tuesday in executive session. What transpired Saturday was the interviews of five finalists," Baressi said. "Tom (Holland) and I have invited Jack to be present (at Tuesday's board meeting)."

Voyager getting ready for close encounter with Neptune

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — After a 12-year, 4.4 billion-mile space odyssey, Voyager 2 converges this week on mysterious Neptune, the most distant and last unexplored planet due for a visit by a spacecraft from Earth.

"It's almost like being on a ship of discovery like Marco Polo, Magellan and Columbus," says Jurrie van der Woude, a spokesman at the NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

"For most of us, this is the last picture show, the last foreign shores we visit in the solar system."

The robot probe was programmed to fire its thrusters today to set a final course for Thursday's close encounter with Neptune and Friday's flight past Triton, the largest moon.

Confirmation of the trajectory change wasn't due until four hours and six minutes later — the time it takes for Voyager's signals to reach Earth, even at the 186,000-mile-per-second speed of light.

Cable television stations will carry live NASA broadcasts of photographs from the planet.

On its approach to the solar system's fourth-largest planet, the picture-snapping space probe already has discovered four moons in addition to Triton and Nereid, which had been discovered from Earth, as well as two partial rings of debris orbiting Neptune.

Voyager also discovered Neptune has a magnetic field; hurricane-like storms dubbed "scooters" with 400-mph winds; 2,700-mile-wide bands vaguely like Earth's jet streams; and a 8,100-by-4,100-mile Great Dark Spot, probably a huge storm like Jupiter's Great Red Spot.

NASA listed Voyager's position today as 2.743 billion miles from Earth and 3.211 million miles from Neptune, approaching the planet at 42,310 mph. Since it was launched in 1977, Voyager 2 has traveled a curving path totaling 4.4 billion miles.

With no one planning a mission to Pluto, Neptune is the last unexplored planet that will be visited by a spacecraft from Earth in the foreseeable future.

Kansas man receives death sentence for murder of Pecos County deputy

From Staff and Wire Reports

FORT STOCKTON — A Kansas man has been sentenced to die by lethal injection for the 1988 fatal shooting of a Pecos County Sheriff's deputy who was struck by a warning shot the man fired.

Charles Edward Smith, 23, of Deerfield, Kan., took the stand during the trial and told jurors he never meant to harm Deputy Tim Hudson, only to scare him.

But a jury found Smith guilty last week of capital murder in the Aug. 20, 1988, death of Hudson, 60, a law officer for 30 years.

Smith showed no expression when the death sentence was read Saturday, said Assistant District Attorney Albert Valadez.

Smith and another man, 32-year-old Carroll Bernard Smith of Houston, walked away August 14, 1988 from the Reception and Diagnostic Center of the Kansas Department of Corrections in Topeka and came to Texas, according to officers.

The fatal episode began at 11:45 p.m. at a Gulf service station in Bakersfield, 35 miles east of Fort Stockton. The Smiths pumped the gas into a red van with California license plates, then sped off without paying, officers said.

Hudson spotted the vehicle about 12:10 a.m., and began the chase on Interstate 10. Five miles west of Fort Stockton, the deputy attempted to pass the van on the left.

At least three bullets from a .357-caliber Magnum revolver were fired at Hudson's patrol car.

Mattox picks up funds from ex-White backers

DALLAS (AP) — Of those who backed former Gov. Mark White in his 1986 re-election bid, most have put their money on Attorney General Jim Mattox this time around, according to a computer analysis of major campaign donations by The Dallas Morning News.

Mattox has raised at least $1.65 million from former supporters of White, more than double the $726,000 contributed to the campaign of State Treasurer Ann Richards, who is Mattox's primary opponent in the battle for the Democratic nomination.

The News analyzed campaign donations of $500 or more made between July 15, 1987, and June 30, 1989, as reported to the Texas secretary state's office by the campaigns.

Ms. Richards already has opened her campaign. Mattox has made it clear he will oppose her, but has not formally declared.

Among those giving campaign money to Mattox are many of White's former big money contributors, including Houston trial lawyer Joe Jamail, Port Arthur lawyer Walter Umphrey and Tyler oilman Royce Wisenbaker.

Glenn Smith, campaign manager for Ms. Richards, called Mattox's success among White's largest backers "another indication that Jim Mattox is a big-money, old-style pol."

Tom Green, who is Mattox's fundraiser, said most of White's supporters turned to Mattox because "Mark White givers look to experience, to who can run a rough and tough campaign and come through it, and who has the ability to raise funds. They know Jim can."

Dwayne Holman, who was White's campaign manager, said Mattox worked harder for the contributions.

"He's asked more often and louder. He's persistent. He ain't going to leave until he gets the check. Ann is a little more ladylike."

The analysis raised questions about the support White could expect if he decides to run again for governor, as some of his close associates have predicted.

The News said White, in a telephone interview, said he is convinced his former financial backers will return to him if he enters the race.

The News said its analysis showed:

- Mattox raised twice as much money from lawyers and real estate developers than has Ms. Richards, who had more success among bankers, stock brokers and educators.
- Mattox received more than $100,000 from such traditional Democratic Party contributors as organized labor, but Ms. Richards received almost $50,000 from the national Democratic Party and women's political action committees.
- Ms. Richards raised far more money from out of state than Mattox. Of her $1.8 million in major contributions, about 20 percent came from outside Texas. Of the $3.2 million Mattox had in major contributions, 3 percent came from out of state.
- Ms. Richards' strongest areas of support came from Houston, Dallas and Austin, with few major contributions in other parts of the state. Mattox fared best in Dallas and Houston and in the Democratic strongholds in East Texas, South Texas and along the Gulf Coast.

Some getting fired up over Conroe's anti-smoking policy

CONROE (AP) — Some parents and teachers are steaming over a new rule that prohibits the use of tobacco products on any school property — including the football stadium on Friday nights.

The policy infringes on their rights, they complain.

"I have a bad habit," said Jeanne Morgan, a mother of three Conroe school students and a member of a smokers' rights group.

"I can't quit. I don't want to quit. But you can bet I plan to smoke at football games and on school property," she said. "I'll go to jail if I have to, but I'm going to smoke on school property. I have a right to smoke a cigarette."

But if she or anyone else smokes on any school property after Oct. 9, they'll be violating the new policy.

The school board unanimously approved Superintendent Richard Griffin's recommendation for the total tobacco ban, which proponents say is healthy in the broadest sense of the word. Critics, including some non-smokers, describe the ban as oppressive.

Griffin is convinced that parents and teachers — like it or not — will respect the spirit of the policy and voluntarily comply.

"This is not a casual rule we established for the sake of establishing rules," Griffin said. "The No. 1 goal of public education is the health and safety of the children. That comes before even a good curriculum."

Conroe teachers, who now are allowed to smoke in designated areas on the district's 27 campuses, will lose those areas under the new rule.

The policy extends all the way to the district's outdoor football stadium, where a spectator will not be allowed to smoke, dip or chew, even during a tense fourth-and-one situation on the playing field.

Griffin said visiting schools will be notified of the local policy well in advance of upcoming football games and will be expected to honor it.

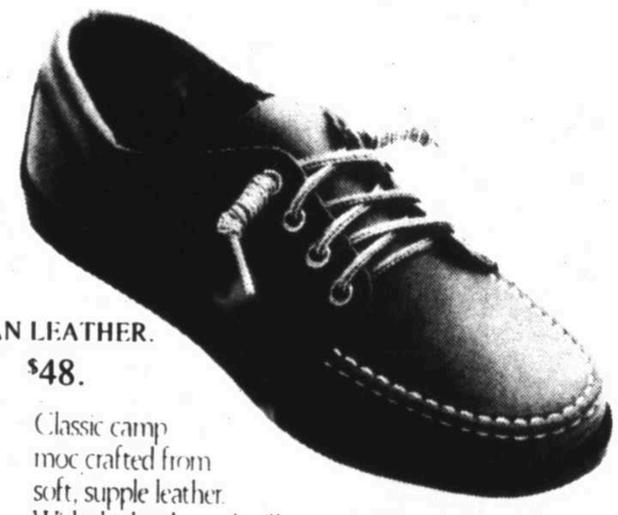

School board President Rob Eissler said the district's new policy is a logical extension of that prohibition.

"One of the overriding factors is the example that this is going to set for the kids," Eissler said. "The biggest message we can give to kids is action, because action speaks much louder than words."

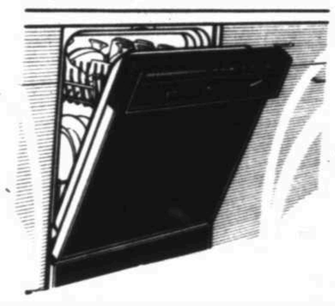

Many smoking teachers grumble privately that the school is not a church, that it's for teaching and not for preaching.

"The school board seems more concerned about the morality of teachers than morale of teachers," one teacher said.

Bakker proclaims 'faith in God' as he goes to court

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A small federal courtroom became the stage today for the latest episode in the Jim Bakker story — his trial on charges he cheated his PTL ministry out of $4 million to finance a lavish lifestyle.

"Our faith is in God," Bakker proclaimed as he arrived at the courthouse accompanied by his daughter, Tammy Sue Chapman, and attorney George T. Davis. "I'm glad to have my daughter with me."

The television evangelist, ousted from his PTL empire two years ago by a sex-and-money scandal, entered the courthouse and said nothing more to reporters waiting outside. Shortly after Bakker entered, a crowd of about 70 prospective jurors was ushered into the courtroom for jury selection.

Bakker is charged with eight counts of mail fraud, 15 counts of wire fraud, and conspiracy to commit mail and wire fraud. If convicted on all counts, he could be sentenced to 120 years in prison and fined more than $5 million.

Wearing a dark, well-tailored suit, Bakker and his daughter arrived in a small, blue sedan — a contrast to the limousines he once used. His wife, Tammy Faye Bakker, stayed in Orlando, Fla., where Bakker transplanted his ministry, to carry on their daily live broadcast without her husband, a ministry spokeswoman said last week.

Outside the fortress-like granite courthouse, there were no Bakker supporters in sight. There were no Bakker detractors, either.

But there was 22-year-old Michael Williams, a former PTL supporter and lunch truck operator who said he was there to "get a little bit of my money back" by selling coffee and breakfast biscuits to journalists and passers-by.

Opening arguments were scheduled to begin in a week, but defense attorneys have renewed their motions to move the trial out of Charlotte and the Western District of North Carolina because of pretrial publicity.

U.S. Magistrate Paul Taylor rejected a similar motion earlier, saying publicity had died down in the two years since Bakker left the PTL ministry he founded. But Taylor said lawyers could renew their arguments before U.S. District Court Judge Robert Potter during jury selection.

Bakker is charged with eight counts of mail fraud, 15 counts of wire fraud, and conspiracy to commit mail and wire fraud. If convicted on all counts, he could be sentenced to 120 years in prison and ordered to pay more than $5 million in fines. Mrs. Bakker isn't charged.

Bakker and his attorneys have declined to discuss their defense strategy.

But the evangelist has said he knew little about PTL's finances. "I was a pastor, and a businessman I was not."

Bakker, who left the PTL television empire during a sex-and-money scandal in 1987, relocated earlier this year to a nearly empty shopping center in Orlando. The show is carried by several television stations.

The Bakkers have asked viewers to contribute $1 million for a defense fund. In a letter to supporters two months ago, Mrs. Bakker said half of that amount had to be raised by the end of the month.

Officials of Jim and Tammy Ministries have declined to say how much has been raised.

Louisiana detective firm sues Swaggart ministries

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A local detective agency has sued Jimmy Swaggart Ministries for non-payment of a $47,519 bill for an unspecified investigation. A ministries spokesman, however, disavowed the debt.

Carroll Security Consultants' recent suit in state district court claimed the ministries authorized the agency to do investigative work and send its bills to a Texas man. Owner William Carroll said he was later told the ministries was not paying "because they didn't have the money."

However, ministries spokesman Emile Weber said the agency was working for the Texas man and not for the television evangelist. Weber also is Swaggart's attorney in the matter.

But Carroll Security's attorney, Larry Anderson, said he has a copy of a letter in which the ministries' attorney — Stone, Pigman of New Orleans — authorizing them to perform investigative work for Swaggart, his wife Frances and the ministries.

The letter is dated Dec. 29, 1988, and Anderson said the first work was actually done by Carroll on Dec. 19, 1988.

Though the nature of Carroll's investigation was not disclosed in the suit, Carroll said his agency had worked on behalf of Swaggart Ministries for several years, doing polygraphs, background and screening of new employees, and other security work.

Carroll also said he had been hired by a North Texas benefactor, who he did not identify, to find out how Swaggart wound up being photographed with admitted prostitute Debra Murphree outside a suburban New Orleans motel.

The scandal that followed the motel incident resulted in the loss of Swaggart's Assemblies of God affiliation, dwindling television viewership, a loss of students at Swaggart Bible College, and financial hard times for the once-thriving ministries.

Carroll said the work that is the subject of the unpaid invoices was a new investigation and not the same job paid for by the Texas benefactor. Most of this work was done in the last week of January through early March 1989, he said.

Records filed with the suit show the first billing was in January, soon after a New Orleans-area telegram service employee, Catherine Kampen, alleged in Penthouse that she performed bizarre sex acts as Swaggart watched.

Swaggart denounced the article as a lie and vowed to sue Penthouse. No suit was filed, but legal action is still being considered, said ministries attorney Bill Treeby.

Carroll said he and detective Joe Oster "received specific instructions from (Swaggart's co-pastor Jim) Rentz" to begin the unpaid job and to first bill Stone, Pigman and then the Texas law firm of Dennis S. Brewer Sr.

Brewer, from Irving, Texas, is a member of the board of directors of Swaggart Ministries.

Anderson said he has check stubs that prove the ministries was paying for the work.

"Every check we received was drawn from the ministries. Some were hand-delivered, some I went out and picked up from (Swaggart's secretary) Linda Westbrook," Carroll said.

Weber, Swaggart's attorney on the matter, told Anderson the ministries did not have the money to pay the bills, Anderson said.

Film producer dies in stunt opposed by town's official

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Film producer Toby Halicki, who won a cult following with car-crash movies, was killed when a water tower fell prematurely during preparations for a stunt that local officials initially had tried to prevent.

Toby Halicki

Halicki, 48, of Gardena, Calif., was killed Sunday during filming for the movie "Gone in 60 Seconds II," Tonawanda Police Officer Michael Thorp said.

The collapse of the 141-foot water tower apparently caused an attached cable to snap and knock over a telephone pole, which fell on Halicki, Thorp said.

An emergency medical technician and a nurse worked to save Halicki, but he was pronounced dead on arrival at Kenmore Mercy Hospital. Thorp said Halicki died of internal injuries.

Halicki, who also was directing and starring in the film, had fought with local officials for two months for permission to topple the water tower. He was allowed to go ahead only after obtaining $8 million worth of insurance.

Tonawanda Town Supervisor Ronald Moline had accused Halicki of "flying by the seat of his pants." Moline did not return a call for comment made to his house Sunday.

In an interview with The Associated Press just hours before his death, Halicki denied his stunts were unsafe and said he thought town officials were out to "mak my life as miserable as they could."

A native of nearby Dunkirk, N.Y., his given name was Henry B. Halicki but he was known as Toby.

He returned to the area three months ago to shoot segments for the sequel to his 1974 cult movie "Gone in 60 Seconds," in which Halicki played a car thief. The title refers to the time it takes a professional thief to steal a car.

The movie was called a cinematic demolition derby, and more of the same kind of action was planned for the sequel.

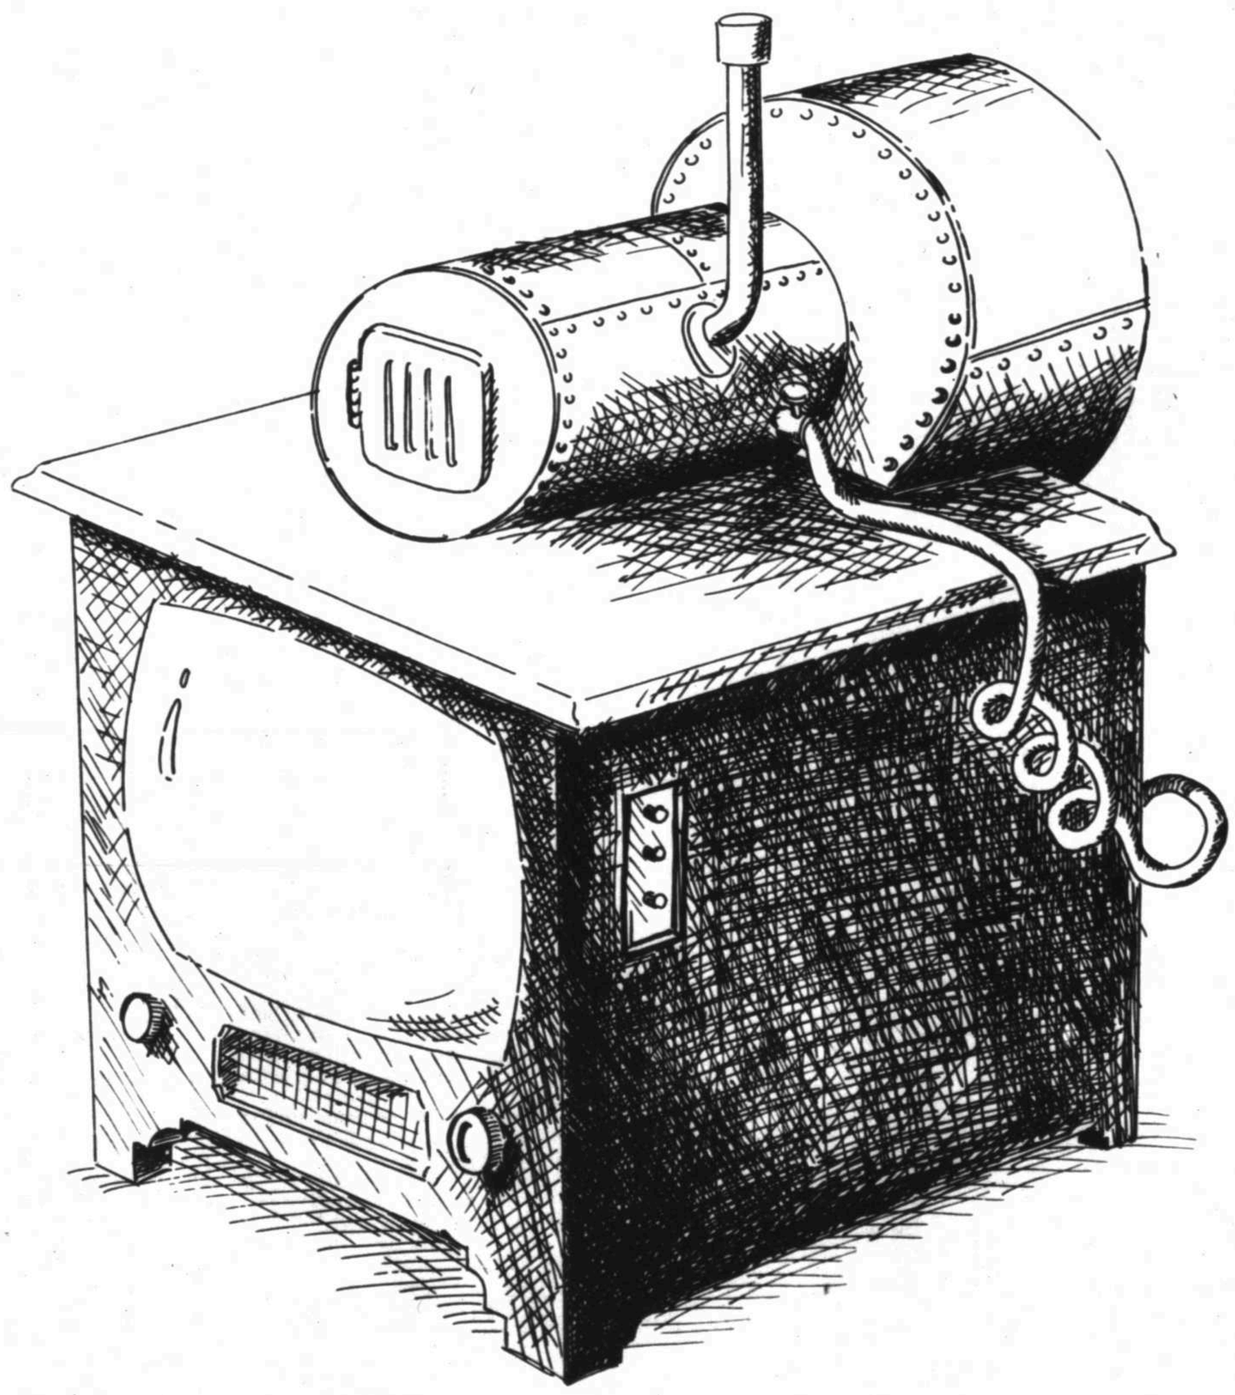

Halicki was filming a sequence in which a tractor-trailer was to slam its way through a series of cars before ramming the water tower.

Things they never told you about a heat pump.
Fact #9
A heat pump will not work well enough by itself to keep you warm all winter.
Someone selling you a heat pump will either attach it to your natural gas furnace or even try to sell you a new furnace you probably don't even need. All because a heat pump won't do the job by itself.
If you need a new air conditioner this summer, get a modern high-efficiency air conditioner. But don't let 'em mess with your furnace.

Use the right energy for the right job.
Steam has a lot of uses, but it just can't do the job when you want to run your television set.
An electric heat pump can't cool your home as well as a high-efficiency electric air conditioner. And it can't warm your home as well as a natural gas furnace.
Think of winter this summer. Nothing heats your home like Energas, West Texas' best energy value.

Odessa oilfield worker dies in accident

From Staff Reports

A 32-year-old Odessa oilfield worker died this morning of head injuries he suffered in an accident, authorities said.

The man's name was not released because family members had not been notified, Sgt. Sue Rudie of the Midland County Sheriff's Department said.

The accident occurred before 8 a.m. just south of the Midland-Upton county line on FM 1788, sheriff's dispatcher Ken Ellis said.

The worker was employed by RV Tool Inc., Ms. Rudie said.

DEPUTY

Hudson was hit at least once. He was unable to fire his weapon or radio for help. Moments later, other deputies found his body at the scene.

The Smiths abandonded the van, set it on fire, and stole a tractor-trailer near Coyanosa as law enforcement agencies throughout the area joined in the search, investigators said.

They were arrested a short time later near a roadblock set up by law officers.

Smith's alleged accomplice in the crime, Carroll Smith, has not been tried. He was an unwilling participant in the shooting, according to his attorney, Theodore Hargrove III of San Angelo.

The death sentence will be automatically appealed to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Hudson, who had been with the Pecos County Sheriff's office since 1985, previously worked for law enforcement agencies in Midland, Monahans, Stanton, and Hobbs, N.M.

DERBY

"If it had not been for the women who were courageous enough to buck the system, there wouldn't be as many women pilots as there are now."

"Back then," noted Ms. Koonce, "they (pilots) didn't have all the (electronic) things in the airplane to tell them where to go. They flew by the seat of their pants."

The pilots' "sophisticated" navigation tools in 1929 included the compass, road maps, "dead reckoning" over mountains and deserts, and just plain luck.

"They flew by the railroad tracks and the names of towns on barns to tell where they were," Ms. Koonce said. "All they had was ground references back then."

Aviatrixes in the 1929 race included Amelia Earhart, who in 1932 became the first woman pilot to fly solo across the Atlantic Ocean, Gladys O'Donnell, May Haizlip, Pancho Barnes, and Marvel Crosson.

Ms. Thaden, who grew up in rural Arkansas, won the race in 20 hours and 19 minutes. She was married in 1928 to Herbert Von Thaden, an engineer and ex-Army pilot, who then was building a single-engine Thaden T-1 Argonaut monoplane.

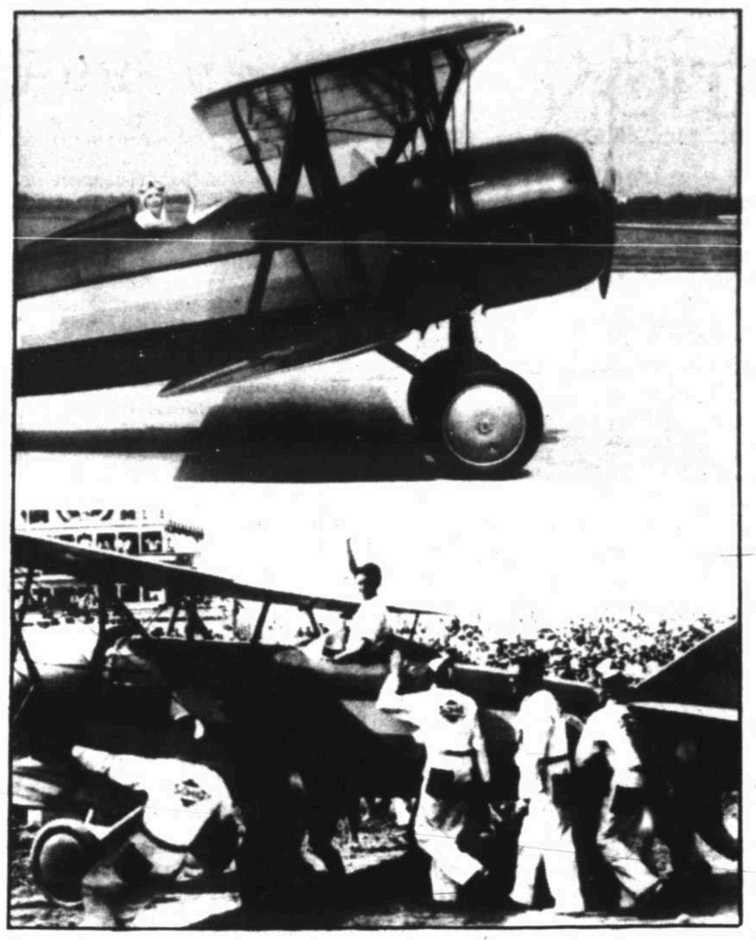

Flying to the Cleveland finish in second place was Gladys O'Donnell in 21 hours and 21 minutes. Amelia Earhart came in third place in 22 hours and 12 minutes.

Flying escort in his Lockheed Vega named "Winnie Mae" was Wiley Post, a pioneer in high-altitude flight.

The 1929 derby was not without tragedy.

Marvel Crossen, 25, died in the Arizona desert after she bailed out of her disabled Travel Air biplane and her parachute failed to open.

Claire Fahy withdrew from the race after her OX Travel Air was damaged in a forced landing. Another disappointment came when May Haizlip started the race a day late due to the late delivery of her airplane.

Airborne Express pilot Susan Dusenbury, top photograph, will be flying to Midland in the restored 1929 Travel Air biplane in which Louise Thaden won the First National Women's Air Derby in August of 1929. In the bottom photograph, Louise Thaden waves from the airplane in which she won the 1929 air race.

Along the route, which took in Phoenix, Ariz., El Paso, Midland, Abilene, Fort Worth, Wichita, Kan., and Cincinnati, Ohio, there were many forced landings, often caused by mechanical troubles, and delays attributed to dust storms and by some pilots getting lost.

Amelia Earhart's Lockheed airplane nosed over at Yuma, Ariz., and busted its propeller. Blanche Noyes was forced to land her airplane in a pasture west of Pecos due to a fire in her airplane's baggage compartment. Ruth Elder made a forced landing in a cattle pasture near Muskogee, Okla.

In Midland, the women fliers were honored by the Rotary Club at a luncheon on Aug. 22, 1929. In the meeting, Midlander Paul T. Vickers welcomed the pilots and cited Midland's "air-mindedness, its unique airport (Sloan Field), and the (new) airmap," according to the Midland Reporter-Telegram, which kept pace with the derby by way of Page One stories and photographs.

The derby's victor, Louise Thaden, who was born in 1905 and who died in 1979, set a 20,260-foot altitude record in a Hisso 180-horsepower Travel Air. In 1929, she flew the Travel Air more than 22 hours to set a solo-duration flight record. And in that same Travel Air, she set a speed record of 156 miles per hour.

In August 1929, Ms. Thaden and Frances Marsalis, flying a 220-horsepower Curtiss Thrush in New York, set a refueling-duration record of 196 hours. Tales of the so-called "Flying Boudoir" provide one of the more colorful episodes in aviation history.

Ms. Thaden in 1934 set a light-airplane speed record of 100 kilometers in a 90-horsepower Porterfield. And in 1934, she made another air-speed triumph in a Wright 420-horsepower Beech Staggerwing biplane.

It was in the Staggerwing that Ms. Thaden became the first woman pilot in history to win the Bendix Transcontinental Air Race in 1936. In 1938, she set another speed record in a D-17 Beech.

Ms. Thaden, like Amelia Earhart, was a charter member of the 1929-founded Ninety-Nines, which is a sponsor of the 1989 recreation of the 1929 derby.

Other sponsors include the Experimental Aircraft Association; the Staggerwing Museum Foundation, and Airborne Express. Ms. Thaden's avaition honors include the Bendix Trophy, the 1936 Harmon Aviatrix Trophy, and the OX-5 Club's Broderick Award to the Outstanding Aviatrix.

VOYAGER

Neptune, usually the eighth planet from the sun, currently is the ninth and most distant. Pluto follows an elongated elliptical orbit and is closer now.

At 11:59 p.m. EDT Thursday, Voyager makes its closest approach to Neptune by skirting 3,000 miles above the planet's cloud tops — much closer than its encounters with Jupiter in 1979, Saturn in 1981 and Uranus in 1986.

Sunday was the 12th anniversary of the spacecraft's launch from Florida on Aug. 20, 1977. The Neptune encounter is the climax of the $865 million, twin-spacecraft Voyager mission, which also saw Voyager 1 explore Jupiter in 1979 and Saturn in 1980.

Sending Voyager to Neptune was like "sinking a 2,260-mile golf putt, assuming the golfer can make a few illegal fine adjustments while the ball is rolling across this incredibly long green," according to "The Voyager Neptune Travel Guide," written by mission planning manager Charles Kohlhase and his staff.

About 170 researchers from around the world are at the laboratory for the Neptune encounter. They will share ultimate exhilaration as front-row observers for humanity's first close-up look at the planet, a blue-green ball nearly four times Earth's diameter.

But their excitement is tinged with nostalgia because Voyager's Neptune encounter will be the last planetary flyby for a U.S. spacecraft. Future probes will orbit their target planets: Magellan at Venus, Galileo at Jupiter and the Mars Observer.

Up to 8,000 photographs from Voyager's two television cameras and discoveries by 10 other science experiments are expected to pour in so quickly that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration will conduct daily news conferences.

Some scientists have said the planet may have 50 or more ring arcs, different than the complete rings encircling Saturn and Uranus.

They also say Neptune's magnetic field may create auroras like Earth's northern lights, and also may trap orbiting radiation belts similar to Earth's Van Allen belts.

Today's course correction was designed to assure Voyager can aim a radio signal at Earth when the probe starts to pass behind Neptune.

By measuring changes in the signal, scientists hope to determine Neptune's atmospheric pressures, temperatures and chemical makeup; whether ring arcs are made of dust, sand, pebbles or boulders; and how material is distributed inside Neptune.

Poachers kill conservationist

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Conservationist George Adamson was found dead at his home in a game reserve where he taught lions born in capivity to survive in the bush. Reports today said he was shot by animal poachers.

Adamson and his late wife, author Joy Adamson, helped popularize wildlife conservation. Joy, who wrote the celebrated book chronicling their work, "Born Free," was killed in 1980 in the Shaba Game Reserve by a young servant in a wage dispute.

Eric Callaghan of the British High Commission confirmed the 83-year-old Adamson, a Briton, was found dead at his camp in the Kora National Reserve on Sunday.

Members of Kenya's wildlife community and associates of Adamson, speaking on condition of anonymity, said they understood Adamson had been shot to death by Shifta, roaming bands of Somali tribesmen who are believed responsible for most of the animal poaching in Kenya.

Neither police nor Adamson's lawyer would comment on those reports. Police Commissioner Philip Kilonzo and Wildlife Director Richard Leakey flew to Adamson's camp in the northeastern reserve this morning to investigate.

BOAT

But today, police backed off any specific number, saying, "It's not known how many are still missing." Scotland Yard said it increased its count of survivors by six today after discovering three people had gone home from the accident without telling police and three others were hospitalized.

The Marchioness sank within minutes and carried underwater scores of revelers who were drinking and dancing below deck.

British journalist Nicholas Hastings, who was attending the party, survived the sinking.

"Suddenly there was a small jolt. Somebody screamed," he said. "The first thing that ran through my mind was that we had hit something in the river. But as I turned around I could see the emormous, looming hull of the dredger that had hit us. It was right on top of us."

Among the missing too was the riverboat captain. The party-goers, many in their teens and twenties, included friends of the Portuguese-born Vasconcellos and figures from the worlds of modeling, photography and finance.

Divers resumed searching at dawn for others either washed away by the strong current or buried in mud, and found a body near where the boat had gone down, increasing the toll to 27, Scotland Yard said.

Transport Secretary Cecil Parkinson cut short a Florida vacation and returned to London today to head the investigation.

The Independent, quoting unidentified river authority sources, said the last radio conversation between the captains "was a discussion as to which should pass through the central span of Southwark Bridge...It appears there may have been a disagreement."

Only vessels as big as the 260-foot Bowbelle, one of the largest registered on the Thames, have right of way through the central arches of the river's bridges, and pleasure craft should keep to the second or third arches near the bank, the newspaper said, quoting a Port of London Authority source.

Pleasure craft "are bloody awful on the river. They continually cut corners to save a few minutes," it quoted the unidentified source as saying.

MISD

Baressi said board approvals of recommendations for employment cannot be considered formalities, and added "I would never take the board for granted."

A statement regarding Tayrien's status at Texas Tech was expected to be released today by the university's athletic department.

Neither Tayrien nor Holland would confirm or deny that Tayrien had been offered the post, but Tayrien said the only obstacle in the offer becoming official is the announcement by the Texas Tech athletic department and the appointment by the Midland school board on Tuesday.

"I can officially tell you that something will come out of (the Texas Tech) office (Monday)," Tayrien said.

Tayrien was promoted to Tech's recruiting coordinator April 1, 1989; in 1988 he had served as running back coach.

Tayrien formerly was secondary coach at Tech in 1986 after moving from the Lee head coaching job to the Lubbock university.

As head coach at Lee, Tayrien led the Rebels to a 22-5 record in 1984-85.

An Odessa native, Tayrien began his coaching career as an assistant at Big Spring in 1961. In 1969, he left to become head coach at Lockney. After two years, Tayrien then was named head coach at Frenship where he remained for the next three seasons.

Tayrien also served as athletic director at Bishop High, a school near Corpus Christi.

Tayrien joined Spike Dyke's staff at Midland Lee in 1980 and was promoted to head coach following the 1983 season.

Tayrien played high school football at Odessa High under then-head coach Hayden Fry.

He and his wife, Ann, have two daughters, Shawn Milam and Leslea.

Palestinian's death brings complaint

JERUSALEM (AP) — Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij said today he has filed a complaint with Israeli authorities over the alleged killing of a Palestinian in the city by security officers disguised as tourists.

Freij said in a telephone interview that the shooting incident Saturday allegedly involving disguised officers "is a very serious incident, and I think the government is required to give an explanation."

The action, he said, could have a chilling effect on tourism in the Holy Land, which already has been badly affected by the 20-month uprising.

There were conflicting reports on the incident in Bethlehem's central market, near the Church of the Nativity that marks the traditional location of Jesus' birth.

Freij said Bethlehem residents who witnessed the incident said two men and two women, wearing backpacks and carrying cameras, opened fire on demonstrators in the market, killing Radi Mahmoud Salah, 18.

An army spokesman said soldiers opened fire after they were attacked with stones, and that four Palestinians were wounded.

The spokesman, who cannot be identified under military rules, said the army was unable to locate any body or to confirm reports that a Palestinian had died.

A spokeswoman declined comment on the allegation that security forces posed as tourists.

Doctors at King David Hospital in Bethlehem said Salah was fatally shot in the chest.

"As Arabs, we welcome tourists," Freij said. "It is our national duty to provide them with the best services. But when elements with guns try to disguise themelves as tourists and kill people, it could create suspicion among the Arab community over who is a genuine tourist."

Freij noted Israeli security forces have disguised themselves in the past, in some cases by putting press signs on their cars, but that this was the first reported incident in which they pretended to be tourists.

Also today, both the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip were shut down by a general strike called to protest an arson attempt on Jersalem's Al Aqsa Mosque two decades ago. Hospital officials said troops wounded three Palestinian children in a clash on the West Bank.

Shops and schools were closed, and public and private transportation ground to a halt, according to Arab reports.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Fire breaks out on Mexican ferry

TOPOLOBAMPO, Mexico (AP) — Passengers rescued from a burning ferry in the Gulf of California say panic broke out on board after an overheated engine exploded in smoke and flames.

All 299 passengers and 56 crewmen made it into life rafts and were picked up by another ferry. Only two minor injuries were reported in Sunday's fire.

"We couldn't breathe, we were almost asphyxiated by the smoke," passenger Fermin Camacho Lopez said after reaching the port of Topolobampo.

Survivors interviewed by Notimex, the government news agency, said there was a terrified rush for life rafts when passengers saw the smoke and flames.

Elvia Valenzuela said the Mazatlan had stopped at sea in bad weather for several hours for engine repairs prior to the explosion and fire.

"It was a nightmare," she said.

The ferry was 26 miles from Topolobampo when an overheated engine exploded in flames at 2 a.m. PST Sunday, the director of the national ferry service, Antonio Rosado Echanove, told Notimex.

Despite the efforts firefighting boats from the Mexican Navy and the government petroleum monopoly Pemex, the Mazatlan could not be saved, he said.

"Everything has been lost, including the luggage of the passengers," Rosado Echanove said.

Woman 'weds' dead fiance

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Evangeline Guico said her marriage vows Sunday, then sprinkled holy water over her fiance as he lay in a casket.

Miss Guico, 21, who is two months pregnant, was to have wed 21-year-old Marlon Manalac on Sept. 26 after a three-year courtship. But on Tuesday, Manalac was found shot to death by an unknown assailant in a Manila suburb.

Manalac's father, police Maj. Alfonso Manalac, decided to go ahead with the unusual ceremony, which took place at the family residence.

A minister of the Aglipayan Church, a Philippine denomination that broke with Roman Catholicism, agreed to officiate after the Roman Catholic Church refused to sanction the "marriage."

Manalac's brother stood in for him at the ceremony.

"Marlon loves Vangie very much, and we want to pursue his promise wherever he may be right now," Maj. Alfonso Manalac told reporters.

Utahan arrested in Manila

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A Utah woman was arrested at the international airport Sunday after authorities found 70 handguns in six containers she brought with her on a flight from San Francisco, an official said.

Dominique Adams said she was promised a job in the Philippines if she took the containers to Manila, air force Capt. Francisco Tayer said.

The weapons consisted of .45-caliber, .38-caliber, and .25-caliber pistols packed in six containers whose markings identified the contents as auto parts, Tayer said.

Ms. Adams, 22, of Salt Lake City, told investigators a man identified as Carlos Padilla gave the boxes to her in San Francisco, where she boarded the Philippine Airlines flight to Manila, Tayer said. Padilla's nationality was not known, Tayer said.

Ms. Adams told reporters she was introduced to Padilla by a friend, Jill Hasson of Provo, Utah. Ms. Adams said she had left her 3-year-old daughter in Padilla's hands and that she was worried for her child's safety, Tayer said.

Her brother, Joseph Adams of Spanish Fork, Utah, said he learned of his sister's detention from broadcast reports Sunday. He said he last saw his sister when she dropped by last week to say she was leaving for California to train for a new job.

He said that he understood that his niece was left with her roommate in Salt Lake City.

Search for MIAs ends

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The United States and Vietnam have ended a joint search to try to resolve the fate of about 1,700 Americans still listed as missing in action in Vietnam from the Vietnam war, according to a report Sunday.

Radio Hanoi said the search, conducted by U.S. and Vietnamese specialists in three central provinces, began July 31 and ended Saturday.

The search was the seventh and last under a program to obtain information on 70 "priority cases" in accordance with an agreement reached by the two countries in August 1987, the broadcast said.

It said the teams operated in the provinces of Quang Binh, Quang Tri and Thua Thien-Hue.

Paper says hostages can be used to stem intervention in Lebanon

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — An Iranian daily said today that holding Western hostages can be used as a way to prevent foreign intervention in Lebanon, according to Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency.

The report came a day after a pro-Iranian group holding Joseph Cicippio and another American threatened to kill the hostages if the French navy intervenes in Lebanon.

"To prevent foreign intervention, a lever in the hands of Lebanon's Moslem combatants was the susceptibility of Western governments vis-a-vis the hostage issue," the Abrar newspaper said in an editorial.

The pro-government daily assured the Lebanese Moslems that their "struggle" would culminate in the establishment of a state based on "their will as the country's majority," according to IRNA, monitored in Nicosia.

The pro-Iranian kidnappers of 16 Western hostages held in Lebanon are Shiite Moslems — Lebanon's largest single sect — seeking to create an Iranian-style Islamic republic to replace the Christian-dominated system.

Iran has denied it has any direct control over the fate of the hostages.

Urging the West against involvement in Lebanon's politics, Abrar referred to the 1983 attacks by Shiite zealots against the French and American military units in Beirut, which killed nearly 300 troops and led to the withdrawal of the multinational peacekeeping force from Lebanon a few months later.

IRNA said the Iranian newspaper described the withdrawal of the peacekeepers from Lebanon as the "escape of the American and French forces."

On Sunday, the Revolutionary Justice Organization threatened to kill Cicippio and Edward Austin Tracy if there is intervention by France, which dispatched two warships to the eastern Mediterranean reportedly to evacuate 7,000 French nationals from war-battered Lebanon if the need arises.

"America, which is spurring France, should realize that any foolhardiness by the French fleet will expose the life of its hostages to danger," the Shiite Moslem group said in a statement.

The handwritten message in Arabic, delivered to the independent newspaper An-Nahar and a Western news agency in Beirut, was accompanied by a photocopy of a photograph of Tracy the group released Aug. 1.

The group recently threatened to kill Cicippio unless Israel released kidnapped Shiite cleric Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid.

President Francois Mitterrand of France said Sunday that his nation's forces had no intention of intervening in Lebanon.

Moslem leaders, including the pro-Iranian Hezbollah, or Party of God, have said France may be preparing for a military intervention to help Christian forces who are fighting with the Syrian army and its Moslem allies.

Hezbollah is believed to be the umbrella group for Shiite extremist factions holding most of the Western hostages in Lebanon.

10,000 people detained in wake of assassinations in Colombia

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Military and police forces raided estates of top cocaine chieftains and detained 10,000 people nationwide as they tried to put the squeeze on Colombia's powerful drug underworld, authorities said.

There were no reports, however, of any drug cartel bosses arrested in the emergency crackdown, which follows the assassinations of a leading presidential candidate, a national police colonel and a magistrate.

Sen. Luis Carlos Galan, the 46-year-old Liberal Party candidate, was buried Sunday after hundreds of thousands of people took to the streets in a public display of grief.

Meanwhile, thousands of judges and magistrates who walked off the job last week to protest inadequate security from hitmen hired by drug traffickers have called off the strike to join the fight, a spokesman for the jurists said.

In 298 raids across the country since Galan was slain Friday night, police and soldiers detained 9,896 people, seized 330 weapons and 1,023 vehicles and confiscated four tons of cocaine paste, the Defense Ministry said in a communique Sunday night.

Among the sites raided were buildings and ranches in and around the city of Medellin that are owned by Pablo Escobar, reputed to be one of the world's biggest cocaine traffickers.

According to the ministry, at one ranch owned by Escobar, military forces detained 52 people and seized 2,000 head of cattle, 100 pigs, 3,000 gallons of gasoline and several cars and trucks.

Properties owned by the family of Jorge Ochoa and by Gonzalo Rodriguez Gacha, two other top reputed cocaine dealers, also were raided, the ministry said.

Galan was gunned down at a political rally in Soacha, a town 20 miles south of Bogota. His killing capped a wave of drug-related assassinations that also included a national police colonel in Medellin and a Bogota magistrate.

Later Friday, President Virgilio Barco declared a state of siege and announced emergency decrees empowering the government to summarily extradite drug traffickers, several of whom are sought by the United States on smuggling charges.

He also gave police extraordinary powers to arrest and seize the property of suspected dealers, stiffened penalties and established special protection for the country's judges.

Speaking at Galan's funeral in a packed central cathedral, Barco declared: "We pray to God to give each of us, each Colombian, all the courage and all the fortitude that we need to face the challenge of terrorism.

"Once again, this time moved by sadness, I call for international solidarity to fight this international organization," he said. He called the cocaine underworld "a gigantic and powerful organization such has never existed in the world" and described Colombia as "its biggest victim."

Galan had survived previous attempts on his life. Police said drug traffickers offered $500,000 for his death.

Russia as ally? Change in wind

Most Americans probably will agree that the changes Mikhail Gorbachev has brought to the Soviet Union in a few short years are mind-boggling and potentially taking that nation down a road of reform that will shape the future of its relationship with the United States and other nations. But could the Soviet Union once again join hands with the United States as an ally?

That titillating question is one considered by William S. Lind, director of the Center for Cultural Conservatism at the Free Congress Foundation and president of the Military Reform Institute, in the summer issue of Policy Review.

Interestingly, Lind asserts that not only may the Soviet Union once again be allied with the United States but that alliance may become vital in a potential struggle pitting countries of the northern and southern hemispheres rather than the eastern and western.

"While we have valiantly and correctly fought the Cold War to save the West from Soviet expansionism," writes Lind, "we must now recognize that communism is but one threat to Western civilization, and that others are growing."

He then notes the resurgence of militant Islam and the development of the narcotics culture in Latin America as major threats to the security of the United States.

Asserts Lind, "The West's chances of defeating and indeed of surviving these threats may depend heavily on our ability to reconstitute a West that includes Russia. A communist Soviet Union is and must be our enemy, but Russia should be our friend. Before the Bolshevik Revolution, Russia made major contributions to the West in literature, in culture, and in science. Even under the weight of Soviet oppression, Russia has sometimes shone through, especially in literature. If the Gorbachev reforms continue and are institutionalized, there is at least a chance that the Russia of Solzhenitsyn and Shcharansky will triumph over communism and resume her rightful place as part of the West, an ally in the defense of Western culture and civilization."

For an American society reared on distrust of Russians, such a change may be difficult to fathom and even harder to accept. Yet the wheels of change are turning in the Soviet Union whether Americans are ready or not.

It is noteworthy that Americans have in George Bush a man who, in light of his diplomatic demeanor and willingness to adapt to new situations, appears capable of meeting the difficult challenges of these times.

Another View:

Woodstock leaves bad legacy as well

Twenty years ago, 350,000 people filled a muddy field in upstate New York and so created a legend and a moment known as Woodstock. The moment proved to be so compelling to the Sixties generation and to the media entranced by the Sixties that Woodstock has been said to have defined a generation.

Let's hope not.

As the Woodstock Generation gathered in the rain that summer of 1969, American men and women were fighting a desperate war in Vietnam. Americans in VISTA, the community volunteer organization, were fighting poverty and desperation at home. In the South, American men and women were dealing with the aftermath of the great civil rights battles of the early Sixties. Much of the nation was still numb from the events of the year before, the year of the Tet Offensive, the killings of Martin Luther King Jr. and Robert Kennedy, a year so intense that writer John Hersey called 1968 the Year of the Triphammer.

So it is hard for us to remember 1969 as the flowering of a generation. Instead, Woodstock in memory and in the photos now recalled from musty files seem more quaint than eternal. And perhaps unwittingly, the moment seems to have given us a terrible legacy.

The sexual and experimental openness that Woodstock represents has matured into an epidemic of drugs and sexual diseases. It is unfair to blame Woodstock alone for the social diseases of the Eighties, but drugs, licentiousness and alcohol are as much a mark of Woodstock in memory as is the rain, the music and the flower children. If the Woodstock Generation is proud of breaking the social barriers of the Sixties, then the generation also should be ashamed of its legacy in the Eighties.

Instead, let's remember the summer of 1969 in another way. For those now in middle age, it was a summer of passage, from the intensities of the Sixties to the frivolous Seventies and the ominous Eighties. We have passed through war, deposed a president, faced drugs and terrorism in the decades since Woodstock. But the generation that came of age in 1969 deserves a better image than Woodstock, and the Sixties a better memory.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Aug. 21, the 233rd day of 1989. There are 132 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Thirty years ago, on Aug. 21, 1959, Hawaiian statehood took effect as President Dwight D. Eisenhower signed an executive order proclaiming Hawaii the 50th state of the union.

On this date:

In 1680, Pueblo Indians took possession of what is now Santa Fe, N.M., after driving out the Spanish.

In 1831, former slave Nat Turner led a violent insurrection in Virginia. (He was later executed.)

In 1858, the famous debates began between senatorial contenders Abraham Lincoln and Stephen Douglas.

In 1878, a group of lawyers, judges and law professors founded the American Bar Association at the Saratoga, N.Y., town hall.

In 1931, Babe Ruth hit his 600th home run as the New York Yankees beat the St. Louis Browns, 11-7.

In 1940, communist revolutionary Leon Trotsky died of wounds inflicted by an assailant the day before in Mexico City.

In 1944, the United States, Britain, the Soviet Union and China opened talks at Dumbarton Oaks in Washington that helped pave the way for establishment of the United Nations.

In 1945, President Harry S. Truman ended the Lend-Lease program that had shipped some $50 billion in aid to America's allies during World War II.

In 1963, martial law was declared in South Vietnam as police and army troops began a crackdown on Buddhist anti-government protesters.

In 1983, Philippine opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino Jr., ending a self-imposed exile in the United States, was shot dead minutes after returning to his native country.

In 1986, more than 1,700 people died when toxic gas erupted from a volcanic lake in the West African nation of Cameroon.

Tass has taken big journalistic strides

MOSCOW — Time was when a story from the Washington bureau of the official Tass news agency would begin: "Yet another falsification has been offered by the White House."

Jack Anderson

Tass is still far from Pulitzer Prize material, but it has taken enormous journalistic strides under glasnost, and Leonid P. Kravchenko is the man with one foot in the party and the other stepping into legitimate journalism.

Kravchenko, the director general of the new and improved Tass, ruefully summed up the past as a "credibility problem." We met with him for a rare interview in his modern office on Moscow's Boulevard Ring Road. He is fighting the image of the old days when Tass was perceived only as the mouthpiece of the Central Committee.

The crash of a pilotless Soviet MIG-23 fighter in Belgium on July 4 is a prime example. The old Tass would have claimed the plane was stolen by the CIA and crashed deliberately.

The new Tass sent a reporter to the Supreme Soviet to collar the defense minister for the story, printed that the pilot had bailed out and left the plane on automatic pilot, and then printed the official Soviet apologies to the countries that had been endangered.

Kravchenko claims the number of "official" stories appearing in Tass has dropped to only 10 percent of the total copy since he took over in December. Western readers who follow the wire service closely believe that the party line still takes up more than 10 percent of the ink, but they acknowledge that Tass has come a long way.

Kravchenko surprisingly admitted that some of the more boisterous non-state Soviet newspapers helped free up Tass for real reporting.

Last April 9, government troops put down a peaceful demonstration in the Georgian capital of Tbilisi with clubs, sharpened shovels and poison gas. At least 20 people were killed. Tass, in Kravchenko's words, published "a very laconic statement" about the incident.

Then the feisty weekly "Moscow News" blew Tass away with a story and pictures showing what Kravchenko diplomatically described as "an unskillful use of force." Using that as a wedge, Tass published another report giving a more accurate picture of what happened.

We asked him how he covered nationalist movements in the Baltic states of Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia. "Not very well," he quickly acknowledged.

The new Tass master called it "a kind of jeweler's work" meticulously figuring out how to tell the story without going too far. He cited the Soviet constitution at one point. It bans "propaganda that instigates national strife."

It was one of those neat little Leninist holdover phrases from the Soviet state founder who only abided journalists as "agitators, propagandists and agents of the state."

Kravchenko directs the second biggest news agency in the world, after Reuters. He has more than 8,000 employees who produce a total of 4 million words each day, he said, or the equivalent of 750 newspaper pages.

Tass has offices in 113 countries, which is more than Reuters or any other agency. The smallest outposts are manned by at least two people.

Even the new Tass is not the information purist that the numbers would imply. The vacuum-like KGB is the destination for much of what Tass gathers in the name of news. In the 1950s, a Soviet defector told U.S. intelligence sources that 80 percent of Tass's personnel were spies. Today, according to our CIA sources, the percentage is "much less."

Kravchenko admits Tass still puts out "background reports" for official eyes only. Our sources say the daily version for general consumption is called "White Tass."

A limited-circulation version called "Red Tass" includes criticism of the Soviets that is gleaned by Tass correspondents worldwide. The secret "Green Tass" includes anything deemed to have intelligence value.

We revealed several months ago that Iran's Revolutionary Guards had arrested and tortured Iran's former United Nations Ambassador Mohammed Mahallati. He suffered a heart attack during the torture and was hospitalized.

His colleagues in the United Nations are still wondering what became of him. Our sources in Iran say Mahallati has recovered and has been given a scholarly assignment with a strategic studies center in Tehran.

His tormentors have never been punished, but they have lost some of their power since the death of their protector, the Ayatollah Khomeini.

• • •

As a parting idea, outgoing Customs Commissioner William von Raab suggested $5 million rewards for information leading to the capture of major drug traffickers.

Washington, D.C., is trying a smaller program offering $10,000 for information leading to the capture of murder suspects.

Both programs have their detractors — people who retain the quaint notion that there are more dignified ways of dealing with scum.

Women want males to keep their shirts on

I know an important issue when I see one, and if making a rule that men can't play tennis with their shirts off on public courts isn't something to get fired up about, John McEnroe is a choirboy and Martina Navratilova doesn't look like Hulk Hogan's sister.

Lewis Grizzard

Here's what has happened in Atlanta.

The city recently turned over several of its tennis facilities to a private tennis management company.

Said company promptly said male players cannot play shirtless on the courts.

Why?

"Women players have complained," said a company spokesman.

My tennis career ended four years ago after 16 years of mediocre, yet fulfilling, play because I could no longer brush my teeth with my right arm, much less serve a tennis ball.

Tennis can take a terrible toll on the body.

I'm not certain how many sets of tennis I played, but I am certain most of them I played without a shirt.

I was a regular at a city-run facility, the Bitsy Grant Tennis Center.

Few men played with a shirt on at Bitsy because Bitsy himself, a former world-class player, didn't play in his.

You couldn't go out and tell the late, great Bitsy Grant to put on his shirt, because the place was named after him.

And Bitsy, stubborn as he was, wouldn't have worn his shirt if ordered to do so in the first place.

Let me assure you playing tennis without a shirt is beneficial.

It's a great way to get a tan without having to go to some beach and lie around on the sand which gets in your swimsuit and makes you terribly uncomfortable.

And speaking of uncomfortable, both men and women athletes will tell you of a horrible condition known as nipple-burn, and I'm being serious here.

Your tennis shirt, after a set or two, becomes drenched in perspiration and turns heavy and abrasive and rubs against your nipples, and the resulting pain is indescribable.

Women athletes can overcome this by wearing a bra or using tape for protection.

Men don't have such options. If a man puts on a bra, he might get to the finals in the women's club championship, but male players likely would avoid him. And as far as the tape thing goes, there's the matter of chest hair.

And women complain about seeing a man shirtless on a tennis court?

Do they complain when men go shirtless at the beach? Can't I walk through a city park without wearing a shirt and catch no grief? Can't I jog along city streets shirtless and offend no one?

And what about this? Can't Jim Palmer pose with nothing on but his underpants on giant billboards without women complaining? Of course he can, and now we are at the bottom of all this.

If all men had bodies like Jim Palmer, women wouldn't care if we played tennis without our shirts.

But most women don't have legs like Kim Basinger, either. So let's see how they like playing tennis in long pants.

Your serve.

CHARLEY REESE

Congress shouldn't direct scientists' research

If you think there is a problem in the Congress telling artists how to paint or sculpt, then you should be a thousand times more concerned about Congress telling scientists how to conduct their research.

Charley Reese

You can make a reasonable argument that Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., knows as much or more about art as the fellow who put a crucifix in his urine. I prefer that Congress get out of the business of funding art altogether. But whatever it decides to do is of no great import. Art is a decorative and recreational minor aspect of human existence, and just as we could live without Coca-Cola we could live with Helms's taste in art.

Science, however, is a serious matter — often, in the fields of biomedical research, a life and death matter. We should not allow lawyers and politicians to tell scientists how to conduct their research.

The issue has arisen because of a few publicized examples of fraud or plagiarism by researchers. Congress has begun to hold hearings on "scientific misconduct."

The clear and present danger is over-reaction by politicians resulting in overkill by regulators.

Dr. Howard K. Schachman, professor of molecular biology, University of California at Berkeley, made a quite sensible presentation before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Science, Space and Technology.

"It is regrettable," he testified, "that under the label of scientific misconduct, mistakes and inferior science have been linked with intolerable acts such as fabrication of data. We must distinguish between actual fraud or scientific misconduct and errors which may be unavoidable or may result from poor laboratory practices ... "

His point is a good one. No one does or should condone fraud or plagiarism. Scientists, however, being human, make honest mistakes and have honest differences of opinion when evaluating data.

Some scientists, he pointed out, are sloppy but highly creative and original. Others are neat and methodical but less imaginative. Both make contributions to human knowledge.

The fear is that in going after fraud or plagiarism the government may set up — typically I'm afraid — such a mass of nit-picking regulations that the more creative scientists will be either driven out of research or driven to distraction.

For example, one part of a proposed definition of scientific misconduct said "and other practices that seriously deviate from those that are commonly accepted within the scientific community for proposing, conducting or reporting research."

Dr. Schachman pointed out that brilliant, creative, pioneering research deviates from that commonly accepted within the scientific community. By definition, I would add. The pioneer goes where the majority doesn't.

As vain a hope as it might be, what is needed is moderation on the part of government. Fraud and plagiarism should be vigorously rooted out, but in devising laws or new regulations, Congress should listen carefully to the experts in the field.

I often mock excessive reliance on experts and I have no hesitation in jousting with so-called experts on foreign policy, social policy or defense strategy. Errors in these fields are readily spotted by anyone with common sense and some background.

The hard sciences are a different matter. If someone presents a paper on intestinal lipid absorption, metabolism, and transport or on cellular and molecular genetics, us lay folks — and that includes Congress — are in no position to argue. We lack sufficient knowledge.

More importantly, we are not qualified to critique their lab work and data collection. Only other scientists in their own field can do that.

The bottom line is that in this area Congress should consult closely with organizations like the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology and, for once, listen to the people who know what they're talking about.

Gene and Myrtle Wood recall when they traveled to Texas separately by covered wagon at the turn of the century, crossing Indian territory and enduring the hardships of travel in a harsh land.

Couple recalls coming to Texas in wagons

WOODWAY, Texas (AP) — Gene Wood's mother hid him in a dresser drawer when Indians approached her family's Indian Territory home around 1908.

That's just one of the adventures Wood has had during his 82 years.

"Of course I don't remember that one — I was just a baby," Wood said recently in Woodway, where he lives with his wife, Myrtle. "The Indians just wanted to water their horses. But when Mama saw them coming, she got scared and hid all the kids. She put the least one in a dresser drawer. That was me."

Soon after Wood was born in 1907, his parents moved in a covered wagon from the Texas Panhandle to Indian Territory, now Oklahoma. His dad, the late William Steven Wood, was deputy sheriff in Stratford.

A few years later, his wife-to-be, then 4 years old, began her own covered-wagon adventure, moving with her family form Arkansas to West Texas.

"My daddy was a telegraph operator for the railroad. I guess he just wanted to move to Texas," said Mrs. Wood. "Mama packed our dolls in the sewing machine drawers, and we couldn't play with them until we got here."

Her parents, the late Ed and Bertha Gentry Yarbrough, had eight children, including one who died at the age of 6 months.

"We came in two wagons...I have no idea how long it took us, but I imagine we didn't make more than 20 miles a day," she said. "We crossed the Arkansas River on a ferry; I remember how scared Mama was."

Her only memento of the trip is a small, blue enamelware cup now hanging in her kitchen.

The family stopped at farmhouses along the way and asked to do laundry. "My sister remembered the people were always glad to see us and always let us wash. While Mama washed, my brothers would chop wood and do chores for them."

Thornburgh says troops one option in drug war

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Dick Thornburgh said the United States should consider offering military help to the Colombian government in its fight against drug terrorism, but the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee opposed the use of troops.

Thornburgh

"I think we have to look at any request that we get for either law enforcement or military assistance seriously," Thornburgh said Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet The Press."

"You now see an aura of terrorism rather than simply narco-trafficking," he said. "The assassination of a presidential candidate, of the chief of police in Medellin, of other judges and top officials have really brought that country to its knees as far as enforcing its own laws" is concerned.

"I don't think we ought to respond, as some suggest, willy-nilly with a military response," Thornburgh said. "But I do think that's an option that we have to keep open."

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said today he would support sending some type of American police force to assist in Colombia, but he would draw the line at sending in U.S. troops.

"There should be absolutely no safe haven for these narco-terrorists, and we know where they are most of the time," Biden said on NBC's "Today" show.

"The idea of sending down Marines en masse to invade Colombia at the invitation of the Colombian government I cannot see," Biden said. "The idea of sending down, if you will, the international version of SWAT teams to help train and be part of operations to try to arrest, to spirit these people away and bring them back to the United States for trial, I can see."

The comments by Thornburgh and Biden followed a statement Saturday by President Bush that he was ready to meet with Colombian President Virgilio Barco "at the earliest convenient moment to consider a coordinated approach" to the drug problem.

Barco said Friday he was using emergency powers to reinstate an extradition treaty with the United States so that Colombian drug traffickers may be tried on drug charges originating in this country.

Barco issued the order after Sen. Luis Carlos Galan, a leading presidential candidate, was killed in a shotgun attack that police blamed on drug lords. At least 10 other people were wounded in the attack.

The latest violence, which also included the killing of a provincial police chief Friday, also led to the arrest of nearly 10,000 suspected drug criminals Sunday in Colombia.

"The numbers of the major kingpins we're looking at (for extradition) are a dozen or so," Thornburgh said Sunday.

"If in Colombia they feel, hypothetically, that they may have reached the point where they can no longer operate under the rule of law and have to use the rule of force, then they're going to require all the help they need," Thornburgh said.

"We've begun discussions with the State Department and with the United States attorneys who are handling these particular cases so we will be in a position to act when any one or more, we hope, of these major cartel traffickers are taken into custody in Colombia," he said.

In another television interview today, Thornburgh said Bush's drug strategy, scheduled to be announced Sept. 5, "will be directed to making the user of drugs far more accountable than we have in the past."

"Every cocaine sniffer or crack smoker in this country bears some responsibility for the assassinations that took place in Colombia, just as they bear responsibility for the crossfire that occurs in our streets here in the United States," the attorney general said on "CBS This Morning."

"Without the demand for drugs here in the United States, there would be no drug traffickers, there would be no violence, there would be no concern that has now become worldwide."

Thornburgh also contended on "Meet the Press" that federal investigators have the right to examine the telephone records of reporters in an effort to find the source of leaked information from government sources.

Thornburgh said investigators would be "well within constitutional bounds" if they sought reporters' telephone records.

Two teens arrested in man's death

NEW YORK (NYT) — Two teenagers have been arrested in the death of a homeless man who was electrocuted earlier this month after four youths accosted him in an Upper West Side subway station, police said Sunday.

One of the youths was picked up Sunday morning by Transit Authority detectives in a housing project a few blocks from the Broadway IRT station at 103d Street where the man died, said Albert O'Leary, a spokesman for the transit police.

The other teen-ager was seized Friday "hanging out" near the station, O'Leary said.

He said the police are continuing to look for two other suspects.

Ricardo Colon, 35, a homeless man with drug arrests, died about 3:45 a.m. on Aug. 8.

NATION IN BRIEF

Two survive 66 days at sea

ALAMEDA, Calif. (AP) — A husband and wife said they survived 66 days at sea on raw fish and purified water after whales rammed and sank their pleasure boat off the Central American coast.

William Butler, 60, and his 52-year-old wife Simone were taken to a hospital in Golfito, Costa Rica, after being rescued by a Costa Rican Coast Guard crew Saturday afternoon, about 30 miles off that city's Pacific coast, said U.S. Coast Guard spokesman Egbert Vallecillo.

"They are weak but they are expected to recover," said Vallecillo, who said he spoke to Butler by phone from the U.S. Coast Guard's Pacific Command headquarters in Alameda, 10 miles east of San Francisco.

Butler told Coast Guard officials their 40-foot pleasure boat, the "Siboney," was attacked and sunk by "several" whales on June 15, about 1,200 miles southwest of Costa Rica.

Hog sale aids injured boy

KALISPELL, Mont. (AP) — A hog that normally would sell for about $100 at auction brought $4,150 when bidders opened their hearts and wallets to help an injured 12-year-old boy.

Ted Ernst had hoped to show his hog at the Flathead County Fair. But less than two weeks ago, he fell 60 feet from a tree and was paralyzed from the waist down.

Ted is in a Missoula hospital, learning to get around in a wheelchair. His younger brother, Jesse, showed the hog instead.

After explaining why Jesse was handling the animal for his brother on Saturday, the auctioneer opened the bidding on the 240-pound hog at $2 a pound.

The bidding finally stopped at $4 a pound — for a total of $960.

But then people in the crowd started yelling out donations to help pay for Ted's medical bills. The donations rolled in for about 20 minutes — totaling $4,150.

'Pit stop' foiled getaway

DENVER (AP) — A prison break by two men whose wives whisked them away in a hijacked helicopter was foiled later when one of the men heeded his wife's plea for a pit stop.

That led to a gunbattle and chase through a tiny Nebraska town where the two couples eventually were detained.

The women rented a helicopter Friday and forced the pilot at gunpoint to fly into the Arkansas Valley Correctional Facility in southern Colorado.

Avowed homosexual forces issue at Baptist seminary

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Kevin Kouba, an avowed homosexual who has been dismissed from the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, says he agonized over whether to confront the seminary community when he was forced to leave.

He could simply have withdrawn quietly from Southern, and the matter would have quickly died.

His decision to acknowledge his homosexuality stemmed, he said, from his hope that he can help change seminary attitudes about unconventional sexual lifestyles.

"There comes a time when the safe thing to do is not always the right thing to do."

In his fight to remain at the seminary and eventually lead music in a Southern Baptist church, Kouba has forced the seminary community to confront a controversial lifestyle many consider sinful.

Kouba, 32, contends his dismissal from the seminary in Louisville because of "homosexual activity" was discriminatory.

"That's what really bugs me, that I'm being told that I can't do what I think God wants me to do," Kouba said.

He contends that he was dismissed from the seminary after being assured at a July 13 hearing that he would not be "expelled" for being forthright. He was forced to withdraw the next day, Kouba said.

"I fell for it. And I felt that I could be honest with them," said Kouba, who estimates that he has spent about $6,000 toward the seminary degree he was scheduled to complete next May.

Elisabeth Lambert, vice president for student services, and other seminary officials declined last week to discuss the case, citing privacy rules and the fact that Kouba's case is under appeal.

Kouba already has lost one appeal of his dismissal, in a hearing before a disciplinary council consisting of Lambert, a member of the student ethics board and a faculty member.

His next appeal will be Wednesday before the seminary's joint discipline committee, which is made up of the six officers of the student government association, six faculty members and Lambert.

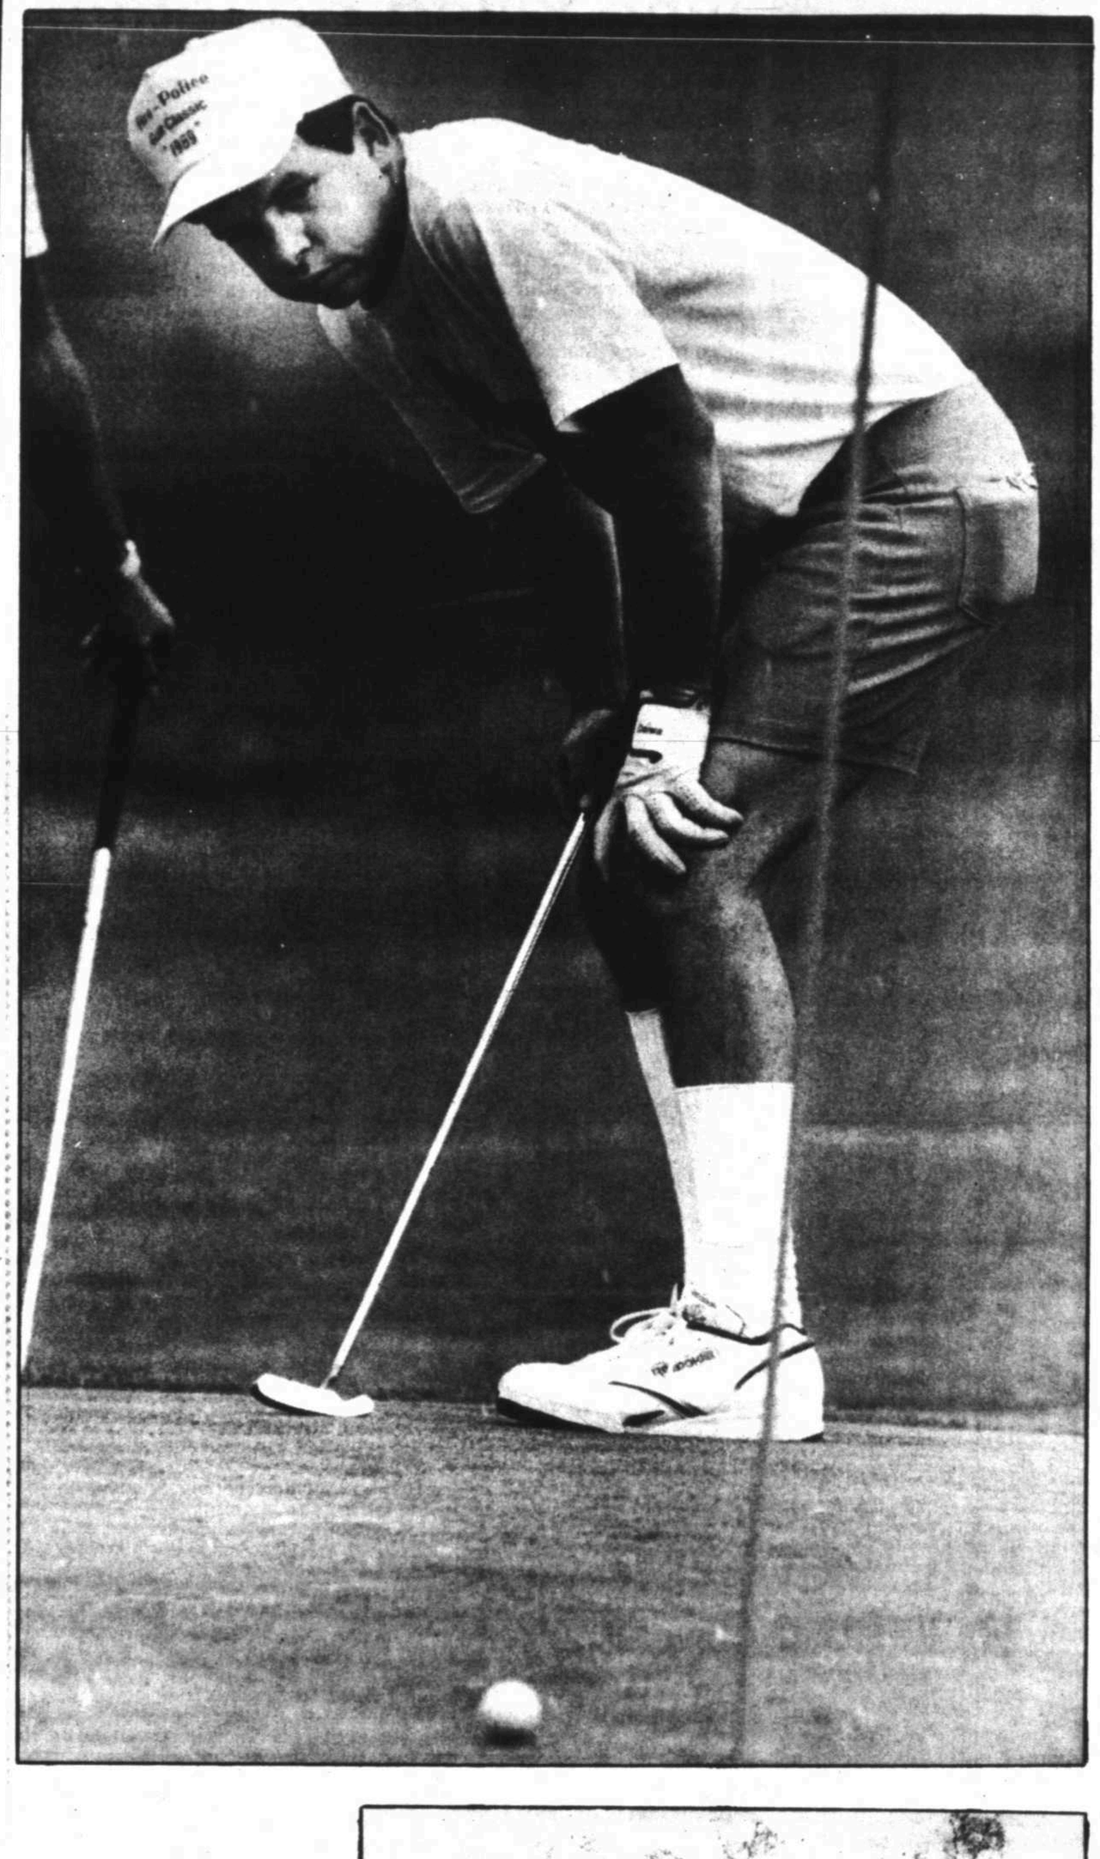

If the committee denies Kouba readmission, he can make a final plea to seminary president Roy Honeycutt.

Both Kouba and David Tribble, a homosexual former student at Southern, say homosexual students comprise at least 10 percent of the seminary's 3,200 students.

Police Detective Mike McClain accepts a "high-five" from a fellow player after sinking a putt.

Legal Eagles

On a hazy, warm afternoon last week, 55 Midland police officers and firefighters clamored to a grassy area north of Wadley Avenue. But it wasn't in response to a major disaster.

It was tee time.

And the third annual police and firefighters golf tournament "classic" at Hogan Park was a rousing success, according to one organizer. The tournament was launched as a way of getting the two groups of professionals together off-duty, said police spokesman Cpl. Jim White.

"Firefighters and police officers do jobs that are so closely related, and we do things the average person can't relate to," White said. "I know it sounds corny, but we are putting our lives on the line and we are in harm's way. I thought it would be good if we could meet each other while playing a round of golf.

"We see each other a lot, but when they are fighting fires we are away directing traffic or something. We have a lot of professional contact but not social contact."

Police officers and firefighters were grouped together during the tournament, which ended with a friendly barbecue at the Hogan Park Pavilion, White said.

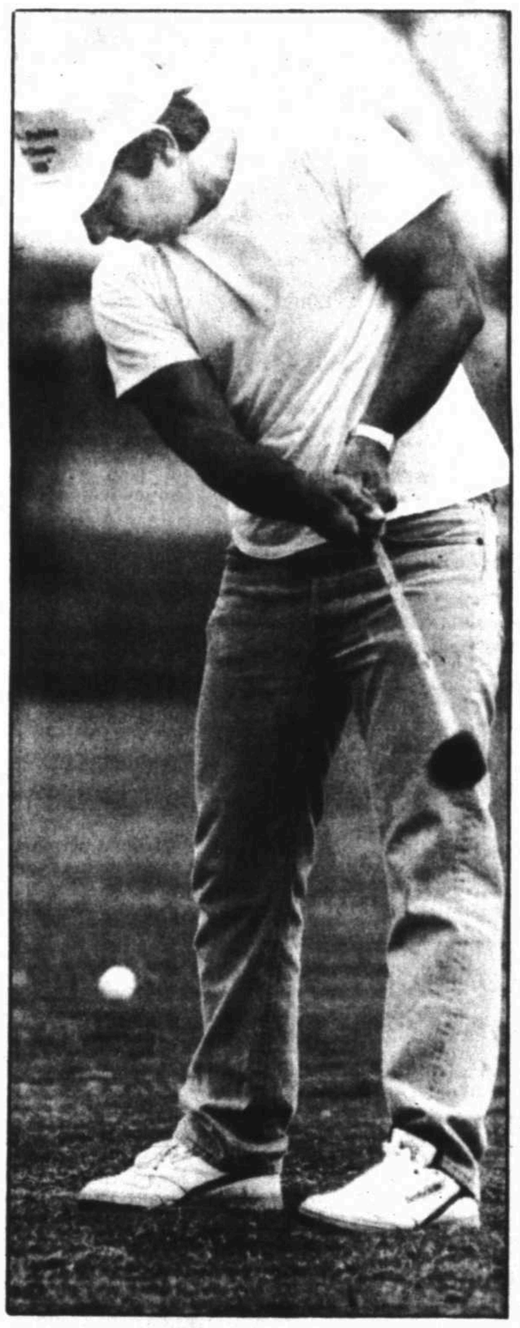

The supper was financed with entry fees paid for by the golfers.

Organizers of the tournament said 31 police department employees, including civilians, participated. The fire department nearly matched that with 24 participants.

While much of the chatter on the course concerned the quality of play, the job did come up, according to White, who played with Police Chief Richard Czech, Assistant Fire Chief Dean Williams and Assistant Fire Marshal Lon Dominguez. Fire Deparment Capt. Manuel Olivas helped plan the event.

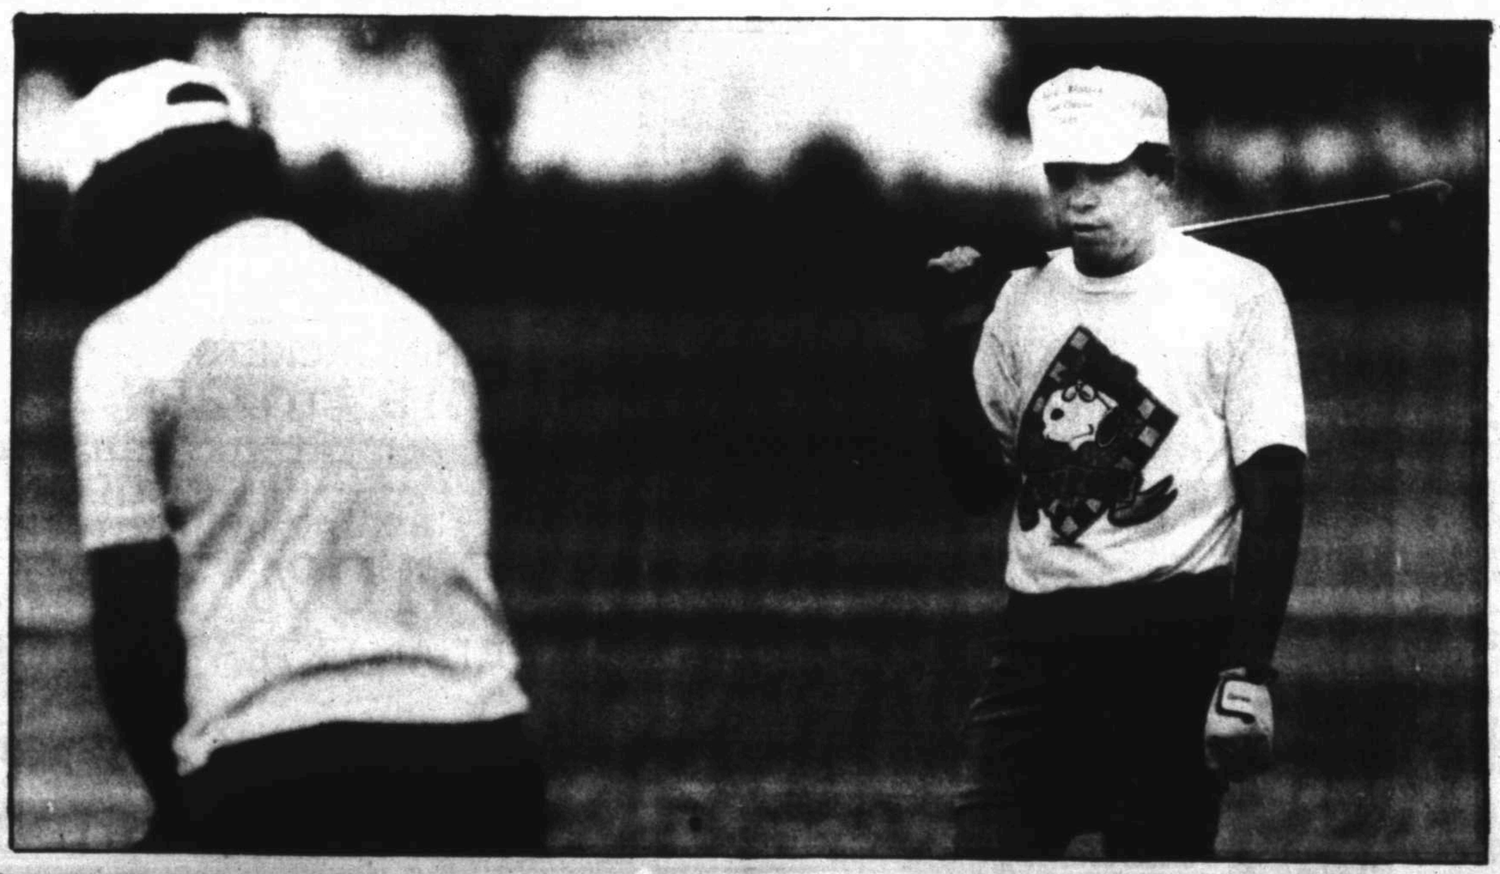

There was some spirited competition, White said.

Right, Benton later found himself in the mesquite-covered rough at the Hogan Park course, but successfully returned to greener pastures. The golfers reported more than a few balls were lost.

Detective Ricky Benton, left, offered advice to a fellow golfer. The experience level of the players ranged from part-time duffer to shot makers that wowed onlookers. Above, Detective Sgt. John Anastasio takes a swipe at the ball during the Police/Fire Department "Classic" tourney.

Defense calls government villain in I-30 condo case

LUBBOCK (AP) — A defense attorney called the government the villain in the prosecution of seven men accused of looting five savings and loans of $135 million in the so-called Interstate 30 condo case.

More argument along the same lines continued today, the defense's last day of final arguments in the largest S&L case to go to trial.

D.L. "Danny" Faulkner, James L. Toler and five others are accused of reaping millions of dollars in profits from illegal real-estate transactions that contributed to the downfall of five thrifts, including Empire Savings and Loan Association of Mesquite.

Attorneys for former Empire chairman Spencer Blain Jr. blamed federal regulators for the thrifts' downfall and if the thrift had not failed, there would be no trial.

"I'm frightened," said Blain's attorney, Billy Ravkind of Dallas. "I'm frightened because I'm defending a Texas banker. I can't try this case in a vacuum."

Ravkind and fellow attorney Deborah Goodall of Dallas said the government's main witnesses were all liars and should not be believed.

"In law enforcement, sometimes you have use rats and vermin," Ravkind said. "If you're dealing with a dope case, you have to deal with a doper. A preacher wouldn't do any good. Once you discover you can't control your rats, you get rid of them. But the prosecution didn't."

Ravkind specifically was referring to star witness, Clifford Sinclair, an admitted liar and perjurer who is serving a 13-year sentence in a related bank fraud case.

Friday, the first of two days of final arguments for the defense, Toler's attorney told the U.S. District Court jury that the government has wasted six months of the jurors' lives by marching a parade of liars to the witness stand to testify against the defendants.

"If we're playing a game of 'Let's put people in jail for making a lot of money,' we're wasting our time, because lots of money was made here," attorney Mike Fawer said during an emotional, 105-minute summary. "But Mr. Toler and his partner did nothing illicit in earning that money."

Fawer said the government did something illicit by calling to the witness stand alleged co-conspirators Sinclair and Larry Hutson. Both pleaded guilty on fraud charges in connection with the case.

Leland's death expected to hurt Hofheinz's campaign for mayor

HOUSTON (AP) — The death of Rep. Mickey Leland leaves mayoral hopeful Fred Hofheinz without one of his strongest supporters and Mayor Kathy Whitmire without one of her greatest detractors.

Many observers believe the death of the popular Houston congressman is a major blow to the bid by Hofheinz, who formerly served two terms as mayor, to unseat Mrs. Whitmire.

"You've got an effective campaigner who felt it was time for a change at City Hall," said Hofheinz strategist James Carville.

"Nobody could communicate that with the passion that Leland could. You can't take one of your best players on the team and lose him. This is a tragedy. You can't read anything good into it."

Leland had endorsed Hofheinz and made no secret of his dislike for Mrs. Whitmire, who is seeking her fifth term. By the same token, Mrs. Whitmire had been critical of Leland, although since his death she has only offered praise.

Gov. Bill Clements has not set an election date to fill Leland's seat, but Bob Stein, a Rice University political science professor, said if the governor sets the election for Nov. 7 it will be an advantage for Mrs. Whitmire.

The mayoral and Houston City Council elections are set for Nov. 7.

"Hofheinz not only loses the Mickey Leland support he was counting on, but loses his other supporters because they are running for office," Stein said.

Lubbock senior wins high school flutist competition in New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The 4,000-member National Flute Association concluded its 17th annual convention here Sunday with the installation of new officers and international competition won by a flutist from Hong Kong.

About 2,000 members attended the four-day convention, a highlight of which was Sunday's Young Artists Competition. Philip Dikeman, an Ann Arbor, Mich., native who is principal flute of the Hong Kong Philharmonic, won the competition among an estimated 90 or so flutists from around the world.

Maria Harding, a senior at Coronado High School in Lubbock, Texas, earlier during the convention won the High School Competition over about 60 other students from across the United States and Canada.

"There is a lot of misconception about the competition between the agencies, but there is some," he noted. "When we get together, I'd like to keep the competition on the golf course and away from anything else."

The tournament has drawn more employees each of the last two years it has been held, according to organizers.

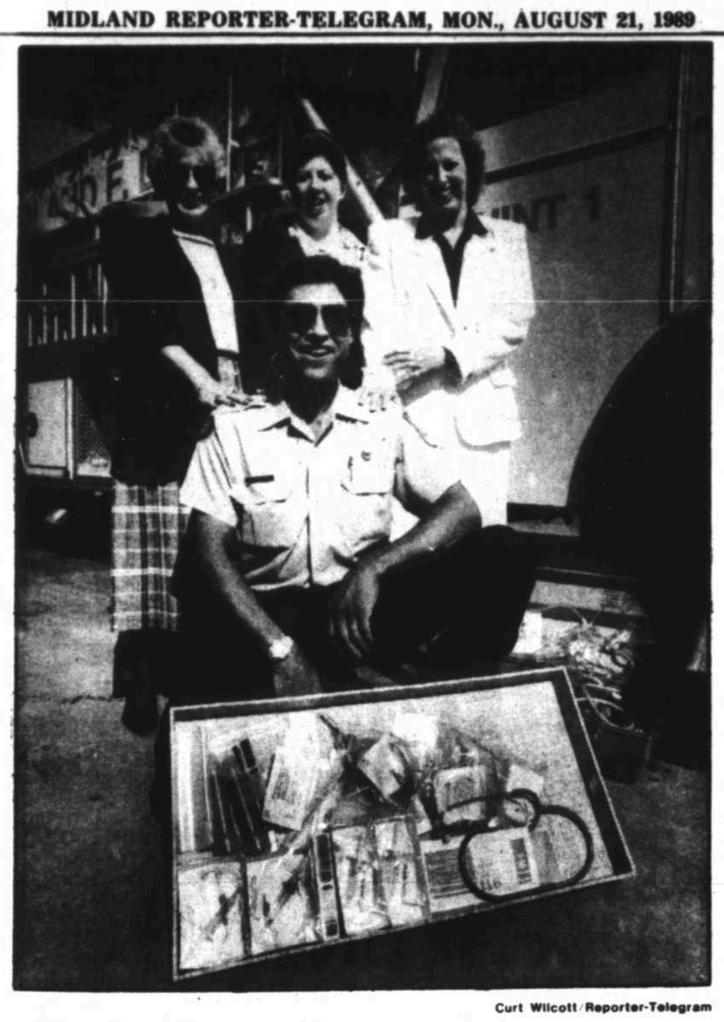

White, a golfing nut who only recently began playing regularly, held his tongue when asked about the scoring on the Hogan Park course.

"The level of play lacked a professional quality," he said. "For the most part the players are occasional. We didn't have any casualties but we lost a lot of golf balls. I don't think the ponds out there are as deep as they were before we started playing."

Health primary concern

In Jakarta, Indonesia, fourth-graders are being trained as "little doctors" to "help children to help themselves and others to lead a healthy life," reports the World Health Organization.

Since 1980 some 200,000 fourth-graders have been taught the basics in primary health care.

New observatory near Houston likely to be a star

HOUSTON (AP) — When the new George Observatory opens to the public, stargazers won't have the benefit of McDonald Observatory's clear West Texas skies, but its Fort Bend County location will make it one of the most accessible in the country.

"Only a few nights a year do we have the sky quality of West Texas," said Carolyn Sumners, director of astronomy and physics at the Houston Museum of Natural Science. "But what we do have is 3 million people one hour away."

Officials are preparing for an October opening of the museum's George Observatory, which is being billed as the best-equipped public astronomical facility between the Davis Mountains of West Texas and the Atlantic Ocean.

The centerpiece of the $1.2 million observatory is a 36-inch telescope purchased from Louisiana State University in 1988 after the school redirected its research program to remote observatories throughout the world.

The telescope will be trucked in this week for installation in the nearly complete observatory, about an hour's drive southwest of Houston in the middle of Brazos Bend State Park.

"This is the largest observatory facility ever built where the primary focus is use by the public," Ms. Sumners said.

Once the telescope is installed and the observatory is complete, volunteers will conduct free public tours. Visitors will be allowed to peer through the giant telescope each Saturday night.

Experts say the view should be excellent from the location in a forest clearing inside the 5,000-acre state park, although it won't have the benefit of the clear skies over McDonald Observatory.

The new facility will be perched in the darkest corner of Fort Bend County and surrounded by vast expanses of rice fields and farm country.

"This will be the biggest thing in astronomy in the Houston area for 20 years," said Nat Shapiro, observatory project manager.

While the McDonald Observatory houses 107-inch and 84-inch telescopes, the one made available for public use is a 24-inch instrument.

The new observatory's (36-inch) telescope is the largest that can be efficiently used in a high-humidity environment, Ms. Sumners said.

Odessa disturbance gets out of hand

From Staff Reports

Officers of the Odessa police tactical team were called in when an apparent family disturbance in the city got out of hand early Sunday, a spokesman said.

A 41-year-old man was expected to be charged today with aggravated assault in connection with the incident, Cpl. John McAhon said.

At about 2:30 a.m. Sunday, officers were called to the 1300 block of Zeneta Street. Witnesses at the scene told police a woman, later identified as 30-year-old Peggy Jean Sundown of 1305 Zeneta, had been assaulted and dragged into the residence by a man, McAhon said.

Officers tried to contact the woman and the man inside the home, but got no response, the spokesman said.

The tactical team was called, and the team negotiator was able to talk the man into giving himself up about 10:45 a.m. Sunday, McAhon said.

"The motive in the situation was a family argument which escalated," he noted.

Ms. Sundown was taken to Medical Center Hospital where she was treated for her injuries, McAhon said.

Mother struggles to forgive husband who killed daughter

DALLAS (AP) — The family of an 11-year-old girl who was killed when struck by her father's van as he arrived home from work, apparently drunk, is struggling with a mixture of emotions, the child's mother said.

Jennifer Summerall and her friend, Pandora Wilson, 12, died after being hit by the vehicle Friday, police said. Clarence R. Summerall has been charged with involuntary manslaughter in the girls' deaths.

"Right now, we're just trying to learn to live without Jenny, all of us as a family," said Shirley Summerall, who is a nurse at a private clinic.

"We're trying to love each other and get through each other's feelings. Jenny is gone, but she'll always be in my heart."

Mrs. Summerall, 42, said she has forgiven her husband, but she's unsure when she can see him face-to-face again.

"It's too soon to tell when he can come back," Mrs. Summerall said. "He's a good father and he loves all his daughters. But right now, I'm deeply hurt. It's going to take some time."

Mrs. Summerall said her husband has been staying at a friend's house since being released from Lew Sterrett Justice Center on $4,400 bond.

Jennifer died Friday night at Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas and Pandora died Saturday afternoon.

The father, 45, accompanied the couple's oldest daughter, Melissa Summerall, 20, Sunday afternoon to the funeral home where Jennifer's body lay.

Mrs. Summerall said she talked to her husband earlier Sunday for the first time since the accident.

Traffic investigators contend that there was a strong odor of alcohol on Summerall's breath when he was arrested about two blocks from his home. Police said he was speeding when his van veered into a ditch and then back onto the road, hitting the girls as they were riding bicycles.

Mrs. Summerall said she got home from an errand about 20 minutes after the accident.

"Someone came up to me and said you should come down the street, to the accident," she recalled. "But the paramedics already were there and I didn't think I was needed. But they said, 'No, it's your daughter who has been hit.' "

When she got to the scene, the news was even more shocking, Mrs. Summerall said.

"They (paramedics) told me my husband was the one that had hit my daughter," Mrs. Summerall recalled. "I fainted."

Mrs. Summerall said she still does not understand exactly what happened, but said her husband tried to explain when they talked on Sunday.

"He told me he was trying to avoid hitting them, and he ended up in a ditch, then he hit them," she said. "He says he tried to avoid hitting them and it didn't work."

She said she did not ask him how much or why he had been drinking.

"It was never brought up," she said. "I'm a Christian. We're both Baptists. I don't know what purpose it would have to ask at this point. It's a bad time to bring up whether he was drinking."

Melissa Summerall said her father has been distraught since the accident.

"He was in total shock," she said. "He didn't even know where he was at."

Group fears beer firm won't control partying

FORT WORTH (AP) — A beer company's widely promoted, multimillion dollar beer bash, planned Sept. 3 in six Texas cities, is an irresponsible move that sends a confusing method to teen-agers about alcohol, opponents say.

About 20 groups have formed a coalition to express their reservations about the message being sent to young people from Randy Quaid's big Texas party in two weeks.

The coalition, led by Texans' War on Drugs, is growing increasingly apprehensive that the parties could get out of hand, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported.

"There is a growing concern that what Miller is doing with this campaign is sending a very confusing message to young people about alcohol," said Bobby Heard, youth coordinator for Texans' War on drugs. "What they're doing is irresponsible."

The groups, which met in Austin last week, said they just want to ensure it is a safe and responsible gathering.

Heard said the coalition won't try to cancel the event. The Dallas party is Sept. 3 and includes concerts by the Who, Stevie Ray Vaughan, and the Fabulous Thunderbirds.

The Miller Lite party also will be staged in Corpus Christi, Houston, San Antonio, Midland-Odessa and Mercedes, culminating an unusual single-state, multimillion-dollar, 16-month marketing campaign featuring humorous commercials starring Quaid. The parties are being billed as a benefit for Texas Special Olympics, which is guaranteed $1 million.

The groups' leaders hope to persuade Miller to mention in its advertising that people under 21 won't be allowed to drink at the party and that if they do, they'll be kicked out.

The groups also plan to put public pressure on Miller and other alcohol beverage makers to tell young people that drinking can be harmful to their health.

"Our concern is that alcohol is the No. 1 gateway drug for young people," said Heard, who is a 21-year-old student at the University of Texas at Austin. "They start out drinking alcohol."

Miller officials say any concern that the events may be irresponsible gatherings is misplaced.

"We are implementing all aspects of our responsible party plan,' said John Shafer, manager of consumer affairs for Miller Brewing Co.

He said a 24-page plan has been developed by a private consulting firm that calls for issuing color-coded ID bracelets for those who want to buy beer and giving free soft drinks to "designated drivers" over age 21.

Taxi stands will be set up at all sites, and private security and on-duty police officers will work with volunteers to report underage or excessive drinking, he said.

But Karen Thorell, state administrator of Mothers Against Drunk Driving, said she thinks the Miller plans fall short.

"The bottom line is that we feel it's going to be impossible to control (so many people), many of which will be under 21," Ms. Thorell said.

Some expect as many as 100,000 to 150,000 to attend the events scheduled in Dallas.

STATE IN BRIEF

Expense forces Wichita Falls abortion clinic to close

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — The expense of flying in doctors from out of town forced the closing of Wichita Falls's only abortion clinic, the clinic's administrator said.

Reproductive Services couldn't afford to bring in doctors from Dallas and other cities and it closed two weeks ago, leaving a gap in services that will affect poor and young women in the area, former clinic administrator Tamara Johnson said.

The clinic, which opened in 1980, had performed as many as 100 abortions per month, she said.

The closing "will push a lot of women into parenthood when they're not ready, they're not prepared, or financially can't afford another child," Ms. Johnson said.

Marilyn Chrisman, president of Nova Health Systems, which operated the abortion clinic for nine years, said she hated "to abandon the people in the area."

"We were never able to break even in Wichita Falls," Ms. Chrisman said. "It was expensive to get doctors."

Ms. Johnson told the Wichita Falls Times Record News that local doctors refused to work at the clinic because they feared community backlash.

Victims wait for counseling

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Some child abuse victims and their families are forced to wait up to a month before receiving evaluation and counseling in a pilot treatment program because of the backlog of cases, program officials said.

Known as Children and Adolescent Sexual Abuse Intervention Services, or CASIS, the program was designed to provide medical care and counseling to children and their families a week to two weeks after abuse is revealed.

However, because of the volume of cases reported, victims have been placed on a waiting list for up to four weeks before they can be accepted, the San Antonio Light reported today.

CASIS medical director Dr. Nancy Kellogg said the clinic is overwhelmed by its approximately 60 cases a month. The clinic doctor evaluated 400 children for sexual abuse last year, which totals about half the child abuse cases treated in San Antonio hospitals.

Two die in fight outside bar

HOUSTON (AP) — Two men died of wounds after a melee outside a bar in which about a dozen friends of a shooting victim chased down his assailant, beat him with pool cues and then stabbed him, police said.

Both of the wounded men died at Ben Taub Hospital, police said. Authorities have been unable to locate any of the people involved in the incident.

Investigators said the men involved in the early Sunday morning beating and stabbing all fled the scene at the Larkin Lounge in northwest Houston before police arrived.

Club offers toast with toasts

DALLAS (AP) — The toasts now come with toast at one trendy Dallas nightclub, which has installed a new toast bar for its hungry hipsters.

The new Club DV8 offers toasted bread and more than 150 toppings, including the Woodstock Feast, which is topped with oatmeal and a psychedelic mix of three toppings of one's choice.

Some of the menu items provide food for thought, such as the Exxon Ecologist. That's toasted white bread, topped with sardines and honey.

Old expressway's overhaul may pave way for change

DALLAS (AP) — If a reconstruction project is successful, the oldest and most outdated Texas highway could lead the way for dramatic changes in the way the state handles its roads.

The overhaul of North Central Expressway — practically a fossil among freeways — will begin in January after almost 20 years of consulting, controversy and cajoling.

Changes on Central's northern leg, between Interstate 635 and downtown could determine plans for highways in the future, said John Kelly, North Central project manager for the Texas Highway Department.

"We don't have the land or the money to just keep building new highways," Kelly told The Dallas Morning News. "We've got to start managing them better for a longer period of time. And we might as well start here."

Crews will rip up existing concrete and plunge much of the new roadbed into a 25-foot-deep trench. By necessity, the engineers may have to abandon one of their most basic tenets: the long-held view that highways have a useful life span of only about 20 years, Kelly said.

The unusual depressed-roadway design does not lend itself to double-decking in the future and probably cannot be widened again, he said.

"We're going to have to find ways to get through the construction and then preserve the improvements we make," he said.

Kelly said the highway department will have to encourage people to use Dallas Area Rapid Transit buses more often, develop electronic traffic signboards to warn motorists about problems ahead, station wrecker trucks to move disabled cars and hire off-duty police officers to patrol the highway.

Some of the measures — especially the signboards and the highway department's promotion of mass transit — are likely to become standard fixtures statewide, he said.

"This is something that the highway department can do and will have to do in urban areas of Texas," he said.

Built in 1949, Central was designed to someday shuttle a then inconceivable 110,000 vehicles daily. Sections of the often grid-locked roadway routinely handle 153,000 vehicles per day.

Over the years, it has become a stream of metal and mayhem through the area's densest urban corridor.

By modern design standards, nearly everything is wrong with Central. Most of the roadway has a roller coaster profile, climbing and dropping among the expressway's 19 cross streets, six under, 13 over.

The entrance and exit ramps are perilously short and in its 9.3 miles, Central has interchanges with three major thoroughfares that dump additional traffic onto the overburdened road.

Eight years of even greater snarls are guaranteed as traffic is diverted onto two-lane frontage roads while sections of Central are rebuilt.

The new roadway should be complete by 1997 and will carry 225,000 cars daily, Kelly said.

New forfeiture law's potential reach debated

DALLAS (AP) — After a new law takes effect in October, Texas law officers will have sweeping power to seize money and property from alleged drug dealers and people suspected of a variety of felonies.

Prosecutors and others applaud the greatly expanded forfeiture law as a powerful tool in crime fighting.

But opponents warn the law has great potential for abuse and cuts at the very roots of constitutional rights, bypassing the criminal justice system.

"Clearly, the potency of this legislation has a dark side," said Carl Reynolds, general counsel to the Texas Senate's Committee on Criminal Justice.

"It's a very frightening tool in a society that values personal property as much as ours does," Reynolds said.

Supporters counter that abuse will be rare and judges will not stand for flagrant misapplication of the law.

Eventually, a judge or jury is supposed to decide whether a seizure is legal, so suspects do get a day in court, said Tim Cole, counsel for the Texas District and County Attorneys Association.

"We're talking about seizing the property of individuals where you can't get a conviction," state Rep. Dan Morales, D-San Antonio, said after his forfeiture bill was passed during the recent special legislative session.

Only money or property, such as cars and houses, that the government believes were used in commission of a crime or derived from criminal activity can seized.

Based on a prosecutor's or police agency's strong suspicions, a person could be deprived of money or property, and then be forced to argue why it should be returned.

The state's expanded law applies to anyone suspected of a felony.

"Properly used, it can be a very effective law enforcement tool," said Terrance Reed, a Washington lawyer who has practiced extensively in the forfeiture arena. "But Congress and the state legislatures have made the laws so broad that they are subject to abuse."

In a criminal case, the prosecution must convince the jury of a suspect's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. But forfeiture proceedings are civil cases, and the standard of proof is a much lighter: "a preponderance of the evidence."

But Scott Wallace, legislative director of the Washington-based National Association of Criminal Defense Attorneys, called such talk: "Sentence first, trial later."

He said even if the government loses its case, the owner will have been deprived of property at least for some time.

Under the new statute, state and local law enforcement agencies will be allowed to keep at least part of what they seize.

Digital onslaught adds up to overload

By LAURA ACCINELLI
Copley News Service

One day Alexander Graham Bell said, "Mr. Watson, come here, I want you," and telephone numbers were invented.

Then technology turned haute, and computers started spewing numbers in a seemingly endless stream.

Life hasn't been the same since. In some ways, it's getting harder.

Consider the accoutrements of modern society: telephone numbers, computer access codes, Social Security numbers, ever-changing addresses, expanded ZIP codes, lengthened license plates, driver's license numbers, credit card numbers, PINs, FAX numbers, telephone credit card numbers, long-distance access codes, car-phone numbers, beeper numbers, electronic lock combinations, assorted account numbers, not to mention earned-run averages.

In these days of ever higher technology, with its intricate machines and electronic devices, we're inundated by numbers, often diminished to digits, even dependent on them — and somedays trying to remember them all is enough to numb the sanest sort into a big, fat zero.

Numbers are simply harder to recall than, say, where the car is parked or what's-his-name. And to round off the problem, most government and business bureaucrats are "enumerating" our lives with a greater concern for modern machines and convenience than human memory and personal privacy.

"The advent of the Computer Age, with all of its improvements, has raised knotty privacy and civil-liberties problems," says Paul Hoffman of the American Civil Liberties Union. "The downside to numbers is, once we're reduced to them, there's access to our privacy."

CNS Graphic

MANAGEMENT CONSULTANT Jack Nilles, an expert on the social impact of high technology, worries about the problem from another angle. "If everybody's genetic code worked like a digital computer's, we'd have perfect memories. But people just cannot hang on to all of these numbers without writing them down somewhere." And that makes people vulnerable.

The thing about numbers is, they're abstract and not visual, says Robert Bjork, a specialist in human memory at the University of California at Los Angeles. Numbers don't lend themselves to imagery, the way most people store and sort information in their minds. Most of us don't assign personalities to numbers — thinking, for instance, of the number seven as a skinny man with a mustache.

"If I say 'banana' to you, that's a rich thing," Bjork says. "You have lots in your memory tied to it. You have the image of a shape, a color, it's something to eat, people slip on a banana peel, certain animals like bananas.

"But with 259, for example, you can't bring to bear the same imagery power. So possibilities are fewer with numbers, and most people retreat into a fearful, helpless attitude about remembering them."

THERE DO exist, of course, those prodigious phenoms who can carry pi — that infinite figure representing the ratio of a circle's circumference to its diameter — to 40,000 decimal places by heart. All human memory is capable of such super stunts, says Bjork, which is nice to know. Yet most of us are fretting about whether to pick up groceries on the way home from work rather than investing all of our time and energy into developing strategies for memorizing the Manhattan phone book, he says.

"Memory is a long-term repository of all the information advancing our life," Bjork says. "It's the data base on which we do most anything else." In other words, without memory, you may be able to get out of bed in the morning, but you'd have no idea what to do next. And you'd have no language ability.

Still, with billions of bits of information stored in our long-term memories, the usual capacity for short-term memory is only seven items. If Bjork, in one of his lab tests, were to say a sequence of seven items, most people would probably be able to repeat it correctly. But after seven, memory starts to fail quite rapidly because few have developed a system for remembering.

Disruptions don't help. If you look up the number of the local pizza parlor, rehearse it as you cross the room to dial it and someone interrupts you — as inevitably happens — then most likely the number will vanish.

What works best for committing a number to memory, Bjork says, is grouping the digits into patterns. What's key to having it on your mind when you want it, however, is mental practice retrieving it. Studying a number doesn't help much nor does using it over and over again. He suggests simply taking a bit of time every now and then and recalling the numbers in your life as you would your loves.

SOME COMPANIES help their customers by negotiating with the phone company for numbers that correlate to the letters on a telephone dial pad to spell out something with meaning. For example, the final four digits of the telephone number for a radio talk show could be 8255, which spells T-A-L-K.

For the most part, however, the numbers giving access to life in the high-tech age are coming faster without rhyme or reason.

"The worst aspect of modern society is that the powers that be aren't making things any easier with intelligent planning and cooperation," Bjork says. If a system were designed effectively, he says, area codes could overlap with ZIP codes and even with the three-letter codes assigned to airports such as LAX for Los Angeles, SFO for San Francisco and LGA for New York's La Guardia. Three numbers in one.

If separate items are linked in some way, they become far more meaningful, Bjork says, and therefore easier to remember. "Now the post office is trying to tack on four more digits to the end of ZIP codes, and the motivation has to do with the machines. No one is giving any thought to making all of these numbers easier from a human standpoint."

Retention isn't the big problem. Humans are phenomenal storage devices: Once information is in, it's there forever. Some information we don't keep, such as background conversation or what we see on the way to work, Bjork says, because we don't do what's necessary to put it into storage.

But we aren't so facile as retrievers. And if there's too much information in the memory, Bjork says, it can weaken our ability to get what we need for today.

"WE TEND to think good memory is remembering everything and bad memory is forgetting something. But it's an adaptive process. If we remembered everything, we'd be in incredible chaos."

Memory experts give tips on dealing with numbers

Copley News Service

Does the number 918527195216390921l2 say to you, "A beautiful naked blonde jumped up and down?" It does to Harry Lorayne and Jerry Lucas, authors of "The Memory Book."

They tout a method devised by memory experts to convert numbers into words or pictures, making them easier to remember.

The system assigns the 10 basic consonant sounds to the 10 numbers: 1T,D; 2N; 3M; 4R; 5L; 6J (Ch, Sh, soft G); 7K (hard G,C); 8F,V; 9P,B; 0Z,S (soft C).

Of course, you must remember which letters match which numerals. Naturally, there's a technique.

You'll know 4 equals an R by thinking of the word "four," which ends in an R, or, say the authors, that the match for 5 is an L by thinking of your hand, and when the five fingers are spread, the thumb and forefinger form the letter L. And so on.

If you sound out the number 65, you'll be using a J and an L. So 65 becomes a striking picture of — jelly! Jelly's infinitely easier to recall than 65, tests have shown. And 651210 is — jelly doughnuts! Which makes you think of 790, as in K-P-S, as in cops.

15862 (T, L, V, Sh, N) is Te-Le-Vi-Si-oN. Could just as well be "Do-L-Phi-Chi-N," which is a rare cross between a dolphin and a sea urchin and found only in the waters off Atlantis.

Say you're a salesman and you need to remember that the lamp is on sale for $40.11. You picture a ReSteD or RoaSTeD lamp. Creativity comes with which vowels you personally select to flush out the consonants.

Another method offered by Jacquelyn Wonder and Priscilla Donovan in "Whole Brain Thinking" is building patterns into numbers. Here's how it works.

Consider the number 375253. Figure, 3 into 75 equals 25 followed by the same number you started with.

Now try your memory with this simple test:

1. Is your front-door knob colored gold, silver, bronze or another color?
2. What color was your front door two homes ago?
3. What two letters are missing from a telephone dial?
4. What number equals the letter L?
5. What color is the upholstery in your car?
6. Does 790 like doughnuts?
7. Does your watch have Roman or Arabic numerals? Is it missing any numbers?
8. Of the penny, nickel, dime or quarter, which has the date below the bust? Which has a building on the reverse side?
9. When was the last time you took a drink?
10. When was the last time you needed one?

If you can answer most of these questions, your powers of attention are above average. If you can't, it means you're not registering details you see everyday. The secret to a good memory is the ability to capture information, says memory man Alan S. Brown in "How To Increase Your Memory Power."

DEAR ABBY

Parents' divorce 'disgraces' daughter

EDITOR'S NOTE: Abby is off on a two-week vacation, but she left behind some of her favorite letters taken from her best-selling book, "The Best of Dear Abby."

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am absolutely beside myself with the news my parents gave me this morning. They drove over here and calmly announced that after 44 years of marriage they are getting a divorce! I honestly believe they have taken leave of their senses.

They have had their differences like all married couples, but they have never separated — not even for one day. I can't imagine what has come over them.

Dad says that since he is 70, if the good Lord gives him another five years he wants to live them in peace. Mother, who is 69, says she feels the same way.

I suggested a larger apartment with two bedrooms, frequent separate vacations, a trial separation — anything but divorce. But they insist they have thought it over and this is what they both want. Abby, they have children and grandchildren who love and respect them. How can parents disgrace their families that way? — THEIR DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: Your parents have a right to make their own decisions, for their own reasons, without loss of love or respect from their children and grandchildren. And if they terminate their marriage after 44 years, where is the "disgrace"? Perhaps they stayed together as long as they did out of consideration for you. They need compassion, not criticism.

DEAR ABBY: My friend and I have a difference of opinion. He says Damon and Pythias were homosexuals. I say they were straight. Can you check this out and let us know? — C AND B

DEAR C AND B: I wrote to 12 leading universities. Their responses included yeses, noes and maybes.

I think the chairman of the English Department at the University of Chicago summed it up very well:

"Dear Abby: You asked if Damon and Pythias were gay. In dealing with characters of such remote antiquity, who exist more in the realm of legend, it is sometimes difficult to find much evidence on the most intimate details of their private lives.

"Damon and Pythias were famous for their devotion to each other, and they were Greeks. Beyond that, I think whatever they did was pretty much their own business, and even if I knew, I wouldn't say.

"One less-than-eminent authority said to me, 'I think Damon was OK, but I'm not so sure about Pythias.' Sincerely, Stuart M. Tave"

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a fine man and an excellent provider, but he has some odd ideas. For example, when we go out for an evening, he orders a vodka martini with eight olives. Then one by one he puts the olives in his nose and sniffs out the juice. (He claims it clears his sinuses.)

I don't mind when he does this at home, but when he does it in public, I want to crawl into a hole. Do you think he should see a psychiatrist? — RADIOLOGIST'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Yes, but he should find one who drinks martinis with a twist of lemon so they won't fight over the olives.

The facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Children's books help make going to school easier

By JUDITH WITTY
Copley News Service

As millions of 5- and 6-year-olds troop to school for the first time, their ambivalent mommies shed tears for lost innocence and breathe sighs of relief for built-in baby-sitting.

Then each one immediately worries about how well her child is adapting, or if Junior will make it home safely.

Several smart manuals from the juvenile presses can prepare the parent and child for launching this fall. If nothing more, reading these safe-and-sane suggestions to a kindergartener will reassure Mom.

Fifty years ago, Munro Leaf (whose "Ferdinand" is legendary) tackled the subject with his "Safety Can Be Fun." Leaf does make it fun. No one has improved upon his presentation, so Harper Trophy keeps reissuing the book in paperback (48 pages; $3.95; ages 4-6).

Leaf constructs his lessons around "NITWITS — and this book is full of them." The Bathroom Nitwit turns on the hot water before the cold in his shower, and the Never-Wait Nitwit doesn't stop at street corners for the traffic lights.

Leaf's irrepressible line drawings show a worst-case scenario; the Firebug Nitwit is stiff with shock while holding electrical lines in each hand.

It's the same satire that made Leaf's "This is a Watchbird — watching you" a household phrase years later. Leaf (or his editor) has updated the child safety book to include the newer dangers of oversize plastic bags and high-speed cars. There is no doubt kids will remember the bug-like Nitwits when they cross the street.

"The Look Out! Book," a new guide to street safety by Canadians Cindy Blakely and Suzanne Drinkwater, is colorful but can't compare (Scholastic; 32 pages; $5.95; ages 4-7). The authors, both mothers, employ easy-to-read language and zany drawings by Barbara Klunder to hammer home safe conduct in a non-threatening way.

Beeper, their friendly porcupine, blows the whistle on any health and safety violations he finds in the pictures, whether running into the street after a ball or climbing into a car with a stranger.

The trouble is that Beeper gets too prickly and begins to sound like Mother. His numbered rules are good ones, essential to staying safe, but nothing turns kids off more quickly than a long list of dogmatic "dos" and "don'ts."

The centerfold is a primitive board game (furnish your own dice) that makes Candyland seem complicated. Much better is the final spread of "What if ...," posing sticky situations that parents and children can work out together.

For older children, those who have managed to make it to and from school for some years, Claudine Wirths and Mary Bowman-Kruhm have put together a marvelous manual they title "Where's My Other Sock?"

In a lively and sympathetic tone, the two teach "super slobs" to organize their lives so they can go off quietly each morning with their lunches and homework securely in tow (Harper & Row; 128 pages; $13.95; ages 10-14; publication date: October).

These are the educators who brought us "I Hate School," a 1986 American Library Association "Best Book." The two never preach, and they anticipate the resistance of scatterbrains to read the book, much less change their ways.

Their wise format is hypothetical questions and answers in quick takes, merrily illustrated by Molly Coxe. The tips and tricks to taking control of life are easily accomplished. Their first secret is to "break all big problems into little ones. Little problems are easier to solve." Then they tell you how.

In the unlikely event that the resident adolescent refuses to read the guide, Mom and Dad will find it useful in organizing their own schedules.

Educator teaches from experience

By BRUCE COOK
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — They call them educators.

You have seen these guys quoted in the newspaper, or maybe caught them on TV, and they talk a kind of education-speak, a jargon that does not have much to do with any sort of written or spoken English you may ever have read or heard in the past.

Listen to them talk about getting youngsters to read, or about showing illiterate adults how to "break the code," and they make it sound as if they were presenting figures on plastic production or something.

You wonder how long it has been since one of these guys actually has seen the inside of a classroom.

Well, that is not Mike Rose.

Although he is the associate director of the Writing Programs at the University of California, Los Angeles, and has the kind of credentials it takes to prove that he is a bona fide expert on language and literacy, Rose is not that kind of educator.

He is the real thing: a teacher, a writer, a one-time Los Angeles street kid who has lived the kind of life his students have lived, one who stumbled and fell a few times on the trip to his present spot.

It is his personal history that led him into work with those he calls "America's underprepared."

"I've always operated at the intersection of social issues and intellectual problems," he said.

That was how Rose summed himself up during a recent conversation.

THE OCCASION for the interview was the appearance of his book "Lives on the Boundary" (Free Press; $22.95).

It is about as far from the usual book on reading and education as Rose's career has been from the usual.

That stands to reason, for the book is really a kind of career autobiography, the story of his education and a summary of his work at that intersection.

He will tell you he did not really set out to write the book he did.

It grew from some writing he was doing just to please himself.

"I was doing some sketches of where I grew up," he said, "and then some sketches of people I had taught. When I read them over, the overlap was clear to me.

"And I thought there might be some subconscious pattern to this because, after all, we do what we do for all kinds of complex reasons. I kept right on going, and the personal stories began to interweave, and I saw this might be the way to go if I wanted to write a book — and I did."

Rose, the son of Italian immigrants, came to Los Angeles from Altoona, Pa., when he was 7.

He attended parochial schools and studied just enough to get by, garnering a lot of C's along the way.

But when he was in his last year of high school, he was roused out of his lethargy by a teacher named Jack MacFarland.

"Look," said Rose, "I used some false names in that section on growing up. But Jack MacFarland, his was definitely a real name. He was extraordinary, a beatnik 10 years behind time. He had no kinds of credentials. He just wanted to teach. And he sure knew how to do that."

In his five sections of senior English, MacFarland's reading list began with "The Iliad" and ended up with Hemingway.

HE REQUIRED an essay just about every week. And his lectures were prepared, crafted and not given off the cuff, Rose said.

"What really impressed me about Jack MacFarland, though," continued Rose, "was the way he held his own in the class. There were some pretty tough guys in that bunch.

"And, growing up, I'd never seen anyone so capable of using his intellectual gifts to protect himself. He was very adept, very capable of handling them, and he did it with his mouth."

MacFarland took a personal interest in young Mike Rose, managed to sell him on going on to college, then he got him accepted on probation at Loyola University.

It changed his life.

For the better, Rose is certain — although at times it was a struggle at Loyola, making up for lost time.

He won the fight, though, and went on to graduate school at UCLA.

"Entrance to graduate school replayed some of the themes I experienced in my freshman year at Loyola: the sense of being out of my league, with a bunch of strangers around me," Rose said. "The teachers at Loyola were there to teach, but UCLA was a research university. At the time I was thinking of going right on into that kind of university teaching myself. But the longer I was there, the more I realized this was not the kind of life of the mind I wanted to pursue. It was too detached. It didn't provide the kind of reward I wanted."

And so, he left graduate school after receiving a master's degree, having decided not to continue into the doctoral program.

WHERE DID he go?

Into the Teacher Corps. He calls it, "my first step into any kind of meaningful work."

Rose was assigned to a team in El Monte, and there he learned to use what were then considered "experimental methods," teaching children to read and write — using pictures, telling stories, getting away from primers and rote methods.

"The skepticism about traditional ways of teaching reading and writing was starting to build. There were books appearing that questioned it, books like 'The Way It Spozed to Be' and Jonathan Kozol's 'Death at an Early Age.' It was in the air. I felt I was there at the right time," Rjose said.

There was something else in the air at that time, and it was the Vietnam War.

Some returning veterans found it impossible to get anything but menial jobs because of deficiencies in reading and writing skills.

Rose joined a Veterans Administration program to teach reading and writing to Vietnam returnees.

"These were people at the other end of the pipeline," he said. "Their lack of skills was the result of poor education. It was really in that program where my commitment to this kind of remedial education developed. And it is easy to see why. Work with adults is more complicated. On the one hand they have a history of failure in schooling. They've been dispirited. On the other hand, many of them have a rich history of world experience, a knowledge of life, that can be a tremendous resource for a teacher," he said.

CHIP ANDERSON, the educational psychologist who fashioned the veterans program, eventually went on to UCLA to head the University Educational Opportunity Program, which relied strongly upon tutoring by seniors to help freshmen make the transition into university-level studies.

He brought Rose over to UCLA to systematize the program.

Rose explained although the students are close to the age of many of the veterans, the problems experienced by the two groups are much different.

"The students at UCLA haven't experienced failure. These are really students who have had successful school careers. Maybe they went to inner-city schools where they were the brightest kids in their classes — and now they're facing what I faced in my first year of college. A program like this helps them not be alienated," Rose said.

Reading aids designed for adult audience

New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Adult illiteracy is a problem that has been placed high on the nation's social agenda.

First lady Barbara Bush has declared her particular interest in seeing it solved (or at least ameliorated), and so you may expect to see and hear about it more and more in the coming months and years.

Mike Rose's years of teaching reading and writing to Vietnam veterans convinced him that, in teaching adults, curriculum and materials take on added importance.

"With adults," said Rose, "you've got to find ways to counter the awful history many have had with school."

And you will not do that by trying to get them to read the same — or similar — little books as those they failed with as children, he said.

"Instead of using Dick-and-Jane primers," Rose said, "I tried to get them to tell their own story. If they can't write it out, then I got them to talk it into a tape recorder and then had it transcribed. Then they've got something to read that they wrote themselves."

It is adult; it is theirs; they feel they should be able to read it, he said.

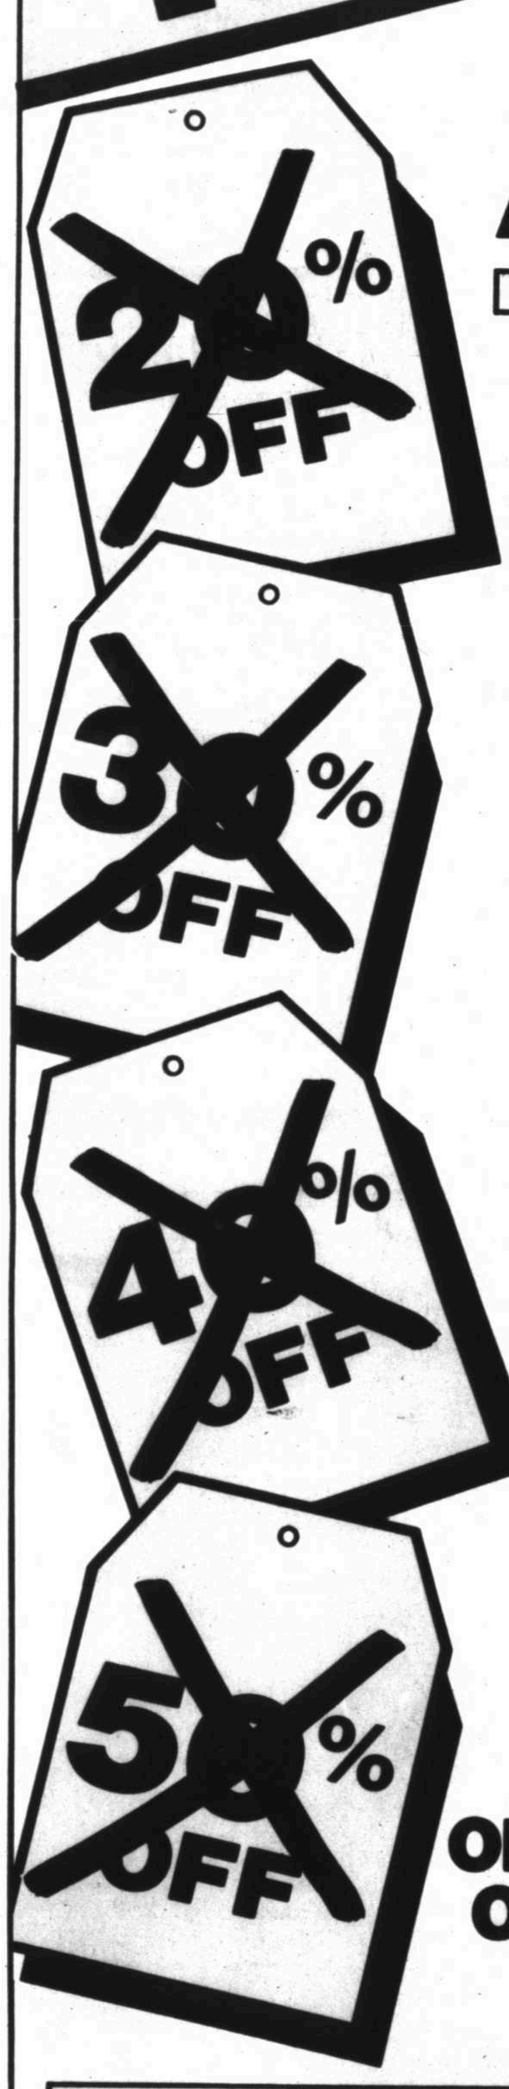

The Literacy Volunteers of New York City offer another solution to the problem of providing adult materials to adults with limited reading ability.

They are publishing two new series, "Writers' Voices" and "New Writers' Voices," small paperback books specifically intended for adults with limited reading ability.

The first release in the "New Writers' Voices," "Speaking Out on Health," is a collection of short pieces written by adult literacy students about health problems they experienced.

These books are priced at $2.95. Inquiries may be directed to Literacy Volunteers of New York City Inc., 666 Broadway, Suite 520, New York, N.Y. 10012.

Angels regain first place

Midland sweeps doubleheader in Wichita

From Staff Reports

WICHITA, Kan. — The Midland Angels moved back into first place in the Texas League West after a doubleheader sweep of the Wichita Wranglers Sunday.

Midland won 6-5 and 3-1 in the two games; the Angels have now won six consecutive, tying their season high. Midland (31-29), is in first by one game over the Wranglers (30-30), first half champions in the Texas League. El Paso remains in third place, two games out after a 3-0 blanking by San Antonio last night.

The two teams play a doubleheader today and Tuesday and close out the series with a single game Wednesday. Today's twin bill starts at 5:15 p.m.

Sunday's double bill was made necessary due to the National Baseball Congress tournament which used the Wranglers' home field for some of its games.

Today's and Tuesday's games are makeups from first-half rainouts. Although the games postponed were first half games, the results count in the second half standings.

Game One
Angels 6, Wranglers 5

Down 5-3 in their last at bat, the Angels batted around in the top of the seventh to go ahead by the final count, 6-5.

Mark Howie hit a two-run double, scoring Gary DiSarcina and Chris Graves to tie the game at five. Jeff Barns's single to right scored Howie for the game-winning run.

After taking the one-run lead, Midland reliever Jeff Richardson retired the Wranglers in order in the bottom of the seventh for his 10th save.

Midland started off with a bang as leadoff batter Chris Graves knocked a solo home run over the right-center field fence, but the 1-0 lead would not hold up long.

In the bottom of the first, Wichita jumped ahead 2-1 as Warren Newson and Paul Faries reached on back-to-back singles and advanced to second and third on a wild pitch by starter Frank DeMichele. Newson reached home on a Kevin Garnber single and Dan Walters hit a sacrifice fly, scoring Faries.

Wichita increased its lead to 3-1 in the bottom of the second as Tony Pelligrino hit a lead off double and came in on a Charlie Hillemann single.

Even Ryan feels importance of 5,000th strikeout

By ARNIE STAPLETON
Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — After five no-hitters and 40 other major league records, no wonder it takes a lot to excite Nolan Ryan.

But the Texas Rangers right-hander said his seldom-seen emotional side is bound to emerge when he records his 5,000th career strikeout.

He is six away, and the milestone is expected to be reached in his next start, Tuesday night.

The game at Arlington Stadium between the Rangers and the Oakland Athletics has been sold out since Thursday.

Ryan joined the Rangers as a free agent in December, returning to the American League after a 10-year stint with the Houston Astros. And as usual, he hasn't shown much emotion this year.

But he has certainly given fans around the league a lot to get excited about.

Ryan, 14-7, is having one of his better seasons. He leads the league in strikeouts with 219. He got an All-Star Game victory July 11 in Anaheim, Calif., where he first developed into an overpowering pitcher. And he has tossed two one-hitters, his 10th and 11th lifetime.

Ryan has also taken no-hitters into the eighth inning four times this year, but each time he came away empty. He also came away without any abiding bitterness.

In June, he came within four outs of a no-hitter against the Cleveland Indians. "Of course I'm disappointed," he said afterward. "I'd like another one.

"But right now the only number that means anything to me is 5,000."

Ryan, the all-time career strikeout leader at 4,994, is on course to lead the league in strikeouts for the 11th time.

His 41 pitching records is itself a record.

But Ryan concedes his 5,000th career whiff will definitely be something special.

So does everybody else in baseball. Larry Kelly, the Rangers' assistant director of media relations, spent 125 hours putting together a list of Ryan's strikeouts spanning his 23 big league seasons.

"Right now the only number that means anything to me is 5,000," Nolan Ryan.

He started with Ryan's first victim, the Atlanta Braves' Pat Jarvis on Sept. 11, 1966. The catalog continued through numbers 1,000 (Oakland Athletics' Sal Bando), 2,000 (Detroit Tigers' Ron LeFlore), 3,000 (Cincinnati Reds' Cesar Geronimo) and 4,000 (New York Mets' Danny Heep).

Brad Mills of the Montreal Expos was the victim on April 27, 1983, when Ryan surpassed Walter Johnson's all-time strikeout record of 3,508. It was the only time that Mills struck out against Ryan.

Kelly's research showed that Ryan struck out Claudell Washington more times — 36 — than any of the other 1,060 batters he has fanned.

Ryan has struck out 858 more batters than runner-up Steve Carlton. California's Bert Blyleven ranks second among active pitchers with 3,431 strikeouts — 1,563 behind Ryan.

Ryan has struck out 17 members of baseball's Hall of Fame, and 42 players who have won Most Valuable Player awards in their leagues.

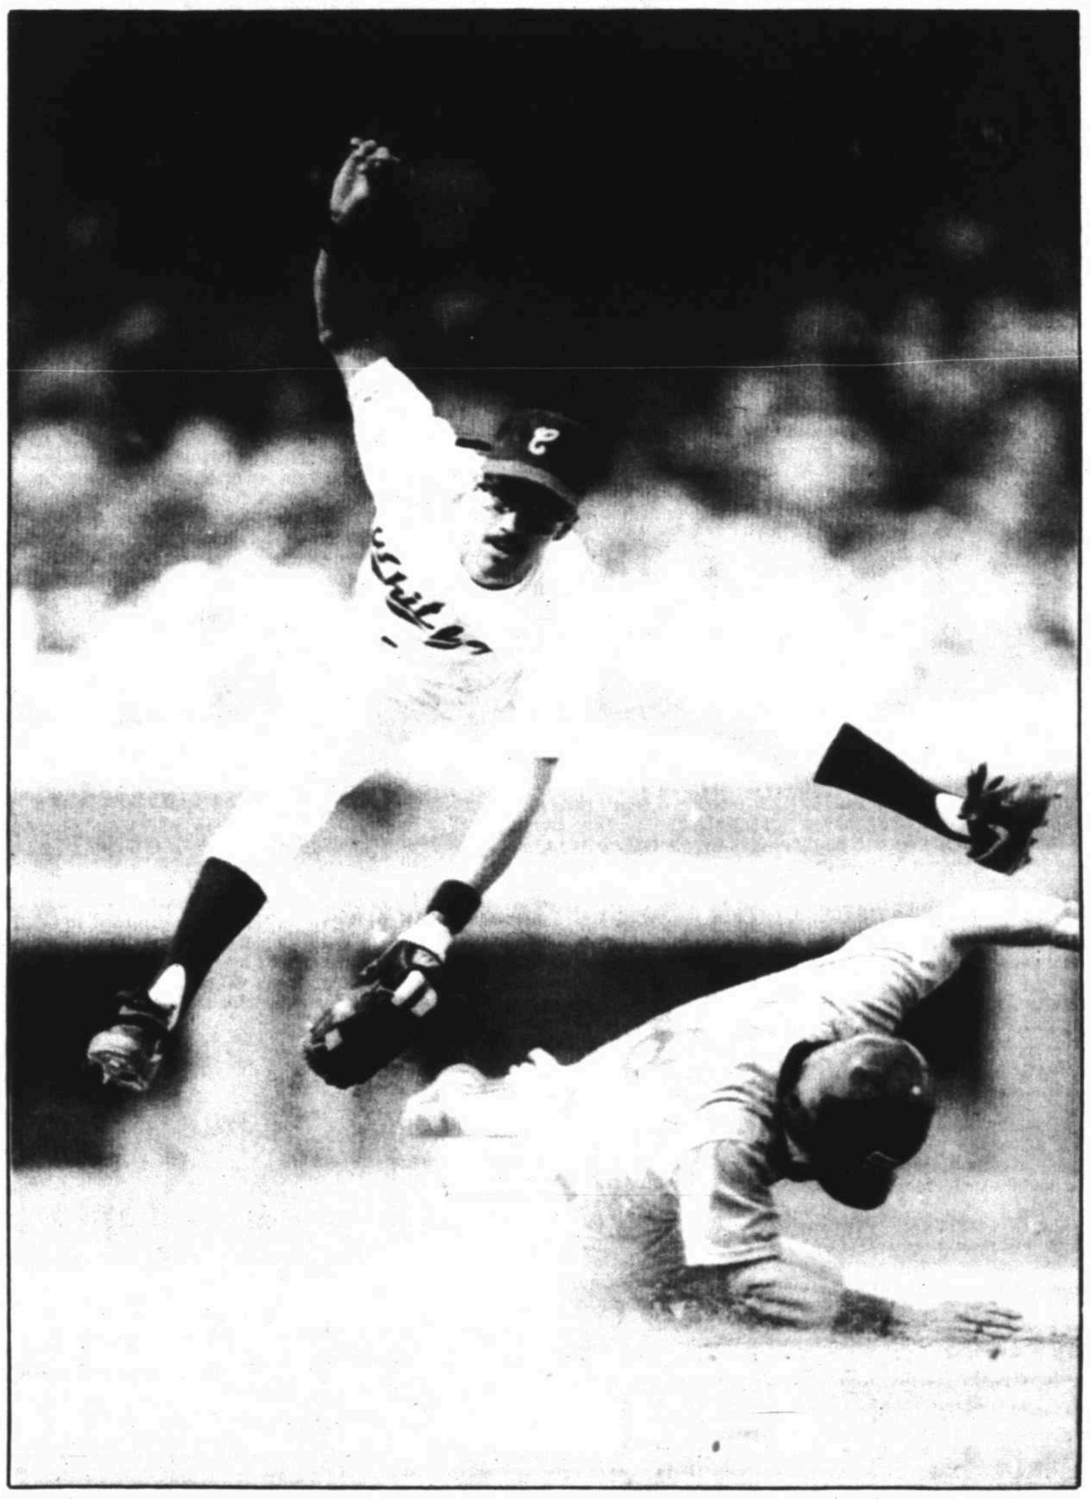

During his stints with the California Angels, New York Mets, Astros and Rangers, Ryan struck out six different father-son combinations, including Ken Griffey Jr. and Sr.

In his latest start, Ryan struck out eight in a 3-1 victory against the Seattle Mariners.

Afterward, Ryan said he was pleased he would get a shot at the milestone in front of the home crowd, including his wife, Ruth, and his two boys and daughter, who hedged their bets and did not travel with Ryan to Seattle.

"I'm glad it worked out like it did," said Ryan, who yielded one run on three hits through 7 1-3 innings against the Mariners. "I'd like to do it Tuesday night."

If he fails to send down six on strikes Tuesday, Ryan's rotation turn would come Sunday, Aug. 27, at home against the California Angels.

Walsh: Worth the wait

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Steve Walsh looked like a million bucks — no, make that $11 million — during Saturday's 27-20 victory over the Los Angeles Raiders.

The former University of Miami star, picked in the supplemental draft, seems determined to give fellow rookie Troy Aikman, the NFL's $11 million man, a run for his money and the starting quarterback job.

The Cowboys have won both their exhibition games and Coach Jimmy Johnson faces a tough decision, one he plans to make after Dallas faces Denver on Saturday.

After a shaky start, Walsh completed five of six passes in 43 seconds late in the first half, driving Dallas to a touchdown and a 13-3 lead.

"You are rushing around in the two-minute drill and I like that," Walsh said. "The defense is confused. I feel in control. I like that."

So did Johnson, who saw the Steve Walsh he knew so well from his college days.

"I am not concerned about the people who have doubts about Steve Walsh," Johnson said. "I know what Steve Walsh can do, and we saw it again tonight.

"I have seen it for a long time. I know him. He puts the ball in the end zone. He has done this for as long as I've known him."

Walsh's 72-yard drive at the end of the second quarter was the highlight of the game. He completed four passes to running backs and hit wide receiver Scott Ankrom in the right corner of the end zone for an eight-yard touchdown.

"I got a rhythm with that drive," Walsh said. "It felt good. It's the kind of thing that makes you look forward to practice, that makes you want to get back out there."

Walsh finished 11-for-21 for 166 yards and two touchdowns with one interception.

Even Aikman, who went 4-for-8 for 45 yards while playing the third quarter and one series in the fourth, admitted after the game that Johnson might have a tough decision choosing a starting quarterback for the Sept. 10 opener against New Orleans.

Much of Aikman's success Saturday could be attributed to fullback Daryl Johnston, who scored two second-half touchdowns.

Jones to add Jordan to 'Ring of Honor'

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Dallas Cowboys' owner Jerry Jones will end a long-running controversy with the induction of former linebacker Lee Roy Jordan into the NFL team's Ring of Honor this season, according to published reports.

The Dallas Times Herald, in its report Sunday, quoted Jones as saying former Cowboys coach Tom Landry may be inducted this season into the Ring of Honor. Landry was the only coach the Cowboys had from their inception in 1960 until this year, when Jones bought the team and brought in Jimmy Johnson to replace him.

The newspaper quoted Jones as saying Landry will be honored in some way this season at Texas Stadium.

Induction of the former All-Pro linebacker would end a long debate about whether he deserves the honor. A feud between Jordan and former Cowboys' president Tex Schramm was partly responsible for his exclusion.

Jordan met with Schramm last fall in the hope of ending the quarrel, but Schramm made no move to add Jordan to the elite group.

Former Cowboys Don Meredith, Bob Lilly, Don Perkins, Chuck Howley, Mel Renfro and Roger Staubach are the only members. Their names are inscribed prominently in Texas Stadium.

Asked if Schramm's exclusion of Jordan inspired the selection, Jones said: "I can't imagine (Jordan) not being in there before. I have been told there was a controversy involving Tex. But I don't know anything personally about the controversy."

Jordan said Saturday that Jones had not contacted him about being inducted.

"This is terrific," he said. "I have said all along it would be a thrill for me to be in there. You don't plan on it, just like you don't plan on the Hall of Fame or all-star games. But it makes you feel recognized."

Jordan, who played with the Cowboys from 1963-76, played in five Pro Bowls and three Super Bowls.

Jones said he has admired Jordan since the early 1960s, when Jordan played at Alabama. Jones was a redshirt at Arkansas in 1961 when the Razorbacks played Alabama in the Sugar Bowl.

"He represents to me the type of player ... that we need to have on our football team," he said. "He was a great leader. And everyone knows how the great Bear Bryant felt about him.

"He was the kind of player, man and individual that we just hope that we can have more of in the future,"

Bass leads Astros to Cub-clubbing

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Willie Randolph made it a good day for the National League West. Ernest Riles and Kevin Bass made it grand.

Randolph started off the afternoon with a three-run homer with two outs in the top of the ninth inning Sunday, sending the Los Angeles Dodgers over the New York Mets 5-4.

A few minutes later, Riles hit a grand slam with two outs in the top of the ninth, rallying the division-leading Giants over Philadelphia 5-2.

And about an hour later, Bass hit his second home run of the game, a grand slam with two outs in the bottom of the ninth, as Houston beat Chicago 8-4.

"I don't have a chance for any chart-busting numbers, but I can be a lift for this team during the pennant race," said Bass, who missed most of the season with injuries and has only three homers.

The slams by Bass and Riles kept San Francisco two games ahead of Houston. The Astros won their fourth straight and handed Chicago its first three-game sweep since June 26-28 against Pittsburgh.

The Cubs, with rookie Jerome Walton hitting in his 30th straight game, stayed 2½ games in front of New York in the NL East.

Elsewhere, it wasn't so wild. San Diego stopped Montreal 5-2, St. Louis beat Cincinnati 8-1 and Pittsburgh held off Atlanta 7-6.

Houston, trying to get Mike Scott his major league-leading 18th victory, took a 4-3 lead into the ninth at the Astrodome. With two outs, Ryne Sandberg hit his second home run of the game, off Danny Darwin, and it was tied.

AL Roundup

Rafael Ramirez, who drew a rare walk Friday night that forced home the winning run in the ninth inning, this time got a leadoff walk in the ninth from Les Lancaster, 3-1. Mitch Williams relieved and walked pinch-hitter Craig Reynolds and hit Gerald Young with a pitch, loading the bases with no outs.

Bill Doran struck out on a 3-2 pitch but Bass followed with his third career slam.

Bass, who was on the disabled list from May 28 to Aug. 11 with a leg fracture, homered left-handed in the third inning and right-handed in the ninth. It was the third time Bass homered from the both sides in a game, tying Chili Davis' league record.

"It was fun, but the way I have been swinging right-handed, I didn't expect it," Bass said.

Darwin, 11-3, tied a team record for relief wins in a season. Sandberg has hit 24 home runs this year, including 11 in the last 22 games.

Giants 5, Phillies 2

Riles, who entered the game in the eighth as a pinch hitter, hit his first career grand slam and sixth homer of the season off Roger McDowell, 3-6. The Giants loaded the bases on a walk, a hit batter and an obstruction call.

Jeff Brantley, 7-1, got the victory. The Phillies took a 2-1 lead in the seventh on consecutive RBI doubles by Ricky Jordan and Charlie Hayes.

Dodgers 5, Mets 4

Randolph's first homer since last Aug. 29 rallied Los Angeles over New York, only the third time in 60 games the Dodgers have won when trailing after eight inning.

The Mets lost for the third time in 13 games.

Behind 3-1, pinch-hitter Lenny Harris singled with two outs and Alfredo Griffin followed with a bunt single. Randolph, who made the last out as the Dodgers lost the first two games of the series, homered off Don Aase, 1-4, and Jeff Hamilton added an RBI single for a 5-3 lead.

Padres 5, Expos 2

Ed Whitson got his career-high 15th victory and Mark Davis tied for the major league lead with his 31st save as San Diego sent Montreal to its 17th loss in 22 games.

Whitson, 15-9, gave up four hits in 6 2-3 innings. Davis finished, matching Chicago's Mitch Williams for the save lead. Bryn Smith, 9-8, lost his fifth consecutive decision.

Jack Clark hit a three-run homer, his 17th, to put the visiting Padres ahead 5-1 in the eighth.

Cardinals 8, Reds 1

Todd Zeile and Tom Brunansky each homered during a six-run fourth inning that led St. Louis over Cincinnati.

Zeile, promoted to the majors on Friday, led off the fourth with his first home run. He later singled and went 4-for-9 in the weekend series at Riverfront Stadium.

Pirates 7, Braves 6

Billy Hatcher homered, Jay Bell hit a two-run triple and Pittsburgh scored three times on three Atlanta errors.

The Pirates went ahead 3-1 in the fourth inning on throwing errors by shortstop Andres Thomas, first baseman Darrell Evans and catcher John Russell.

Hatcher, acquired Friday from Houston for Glenn Wilson, hit a solo homer in the seventh for a 7-4 lead. Thomas hit a two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth to make it close.

Giants bury Chiefs

NFL Roundup

Jeff Rutledge threw three touchdown passes Sunday night, leading the New York Giants to a 45-7 exhibition rout of Kansas City in Marty Schottenheimer's home debut as Chiefs' coach.

Phil Simms, the Giants' regular quarterback who played for the first time this season after ending his holdout last Monday, turned things over to Rutledge after teaming with Odessa Turner on a 73-yard touchdown play for a 14-7 lead early in the first period.

The Giants, 2-0 in exhibition play, scored 21 straight points in the second quarter for a 35-7 halftime lead.

Lee Rouson's 1-yard touchdown plunge capped a six-play, 49-yard drive on the Giants' first possession.

The Chiefs, 0-2 in the preseason, tied it at 7-7 on their first possession when Ron Jaworski engineered a 12-play, 80-yard drive climaxed by his 9-yard touchdown pass to Darren Chandler.

But two plays later, Simms combined with Turner for a 73-yard touchdown. Turner broke Kevin Ross' tackle after catching a short pass and raced downfield to start the rout.

After Greg Cox intercepted Jaworski on the Chiefs' 33, the Giants needed just four plays for their next score. Rouson carried four consecutive times for 8, 4, 20 and one yard, putting the Giants on top 21-7 with 12:33 left in the second quarter.

Rutledge, who completed all eight of his passes for 156 yards, hit David Meggett for 34 yards before hitting Turner for a 29-yard touchdown to make it 28-7, then found Zeke Mowatt on a 20-yard touchdown strike with 33 seconds to go in the half.

Rutledge's third touchdown, a 43-yarder to Mark Ingram with 5:11 left in the third period, made it 42-7. Raul Allegre kicked a 54-yard field goal with 3:11 to play.

Jets 19, Eagles 10

Pat Leahy, whose first extra-point attempt was blocked in the third period, kicked a 26-yard field goal with 6:06 left, lifting the New York Jets over the Philadelphia Eagles.

The scoring drive was directed by third-string quarterback Kyle Mackey, whose playing time was extended when starter Pat Ryan suffered a sprained left knee late in the first quarter and did not return.

Mackey threw a 13-yard touchdown pass to K.D. Dunn with 4:45 left in the third period, making the score 10-9, but Jerome Brown blocked Leahy's conversion kick to prevent the tie.

Philadelphia threatened to extend its lead by reaching the New York 20 early in the fourth quarter, but Don McPherson's pass intended for running back Heath Sherman was intercepted by linebacker Jackie Walker at the 18.

Mackey kept the drive going on a third-and-19 with a 28-yard completion to rookie Tony Martin, moving the Jets to the Eagles 28. The drive reached the Philadelphia 8 before sputtering, and Leahy kicked the field goal for a 12-10 lead.

A.D. Brown's 4-yard touchdown run with 2:04 left to play clinched New York's first exhibition victory after two losses and gave the Eagles their first loss after two preseason victories.

Both teams committed turnovers on successive possessions in the first quarter, but the Jets turned Erik McMillan's interception of a pass by Randall Cunningham into a 46-yard field goal by Leahy with 2:25 left in the period.

Cunningham, who played all of the first half and one series in the second half, led the Eagles on a 66-yard drive that he kept alive with a dive for a first down on a fourth-and-1 at the New York 2.

On the next play, Anthony Toney scored on a pitch with 57 seconds left before halftime for a 7-3 lead. Max Zendejas added the conversion.

Moore leads A's in shut out of Twins, 5-0

NL Roundup

Tony La Russa doesn't want to decide who his best pitcher is, and why should he?

"My biggest pet peeve right now would be for someone to ask me about who should win the Cy Young between Mike Moore and Dave Stewart," the Oakland manager said. "Any talk of that nature would be counterproductive. I know all they're thinking about is the team generating some wins."

Moore tied Stewart for the American League lead in victories at 16 in leading the Athletics past the Minnesota Twins 5-0 on Sunday. Moore allowed four hits in eight innings in winning for the eighth time in nine decisions.

"Cy Young? I'm not even thinking about it," Moore said.

But Stewart, who did not win the Cy Young in 1987 and 1988 despite 20-win seasons, is thinking about it. In fact, he's thinking about Moore winning it.

"Nobody in the league is pitching like Mike Moore right now. Nobody," Stewart said. "He's the Cy Young man, hands down. After what's happened the last two years, the award doesn't mean a bag of beans to me. I'm just proud to be on a staff with more than one pitcher going for the Cy Young Award."

In other games, California blanked Cleveland 1-0, Kansas City defeated Seattle 5-4, Baltimore beat Toronto 7-2, Milwaukee stopped Boston 6-3, Detroit outslugged New York 7-6 and Texas defeated Chicago 7-1.

"Everyone said Oakland made a big mistake paying him so much money, because he wasn't established," Minnesota's Kirby Puckett said of Moore. "And all of a sudden, here he is. He came to a team that went to the World Series last year, and all he can do is help them."

Oakland, which remained two percentage points behind California in the AL West, has 15 shutouts this season. The Angels lead the majors with 16.

Allan Anderson, 14-10, had his five-game winning streak snapped as he lost for the first time since July 19. Anderson allowed six hits and three runs in six innings.

Oakland scored three runs in the first on RBI singles by Terry Steinbach and Mark McGwire sandwiched around Dave Henderson's RBI double.

Jose Canseco hit a two-run homer in the eighth off David West, Canseco's seventh home run of the season.

Rangers 7, White Sox 1

Charlie Hough, who lost to Seattle last Tuesday despite throwing a one-hitter, pitched a five-hitter at Comiskey Park. Hough, 8-12, walked four and struck out five in his fourth complete game.

Ruben Sierra hit a two-run homer, his 21st, and Steve Buechele a solo homer, his 13th.

Steve Rosenberg, 3-9, lost his fourth straight decision since July 17, giving up five hits and five runs in 4 1-3 innings.

Angels 1, Indians 0

Kirk McCaskill, 13-7, pitched a four-hitter and struck out seven for his league-leading fourth shutout and Wally Joyner hit a sacrifice fly in the seventh inning.

Bud Black, 9-10, pitched a three-hitter for the visiting Indians but was hurt by third baseman Brook Jacoby's error in the seventh.

Kent Anderson's leadoff grounder went through Jacoby's legs and Anderson wound up on second. Johnny Ray sacrificed and Anderson beat Joe Carter's throw home after Joyner's fly to center.

Royals 5, Mariners 4

Bo Jackson homered and hit a two-run triple in the Kingdome as Kansas City won its sixth straight. Seattle has lost five straight for the first time since July 23-27, 1988.

Steve Crawford, 2-0, allowed one hit over five shutout innings and Jeff Montgomery got the last four outs for his 11th save.

Orioles 7, Blue Jays 2

Pete Harnisch, 3-6, won for the third time in nine starts since July 17 as Baltimore stayed in first place in the East. The Orioles, who lead the division by a half-game over Milwaukee, were in danger of falling out of first for the first time since May 26.

Harnisch, 3-6, gave up two runs and seven hits in 6 1-3 innings. Mark Thurmond finished with one-hit relief for his fourth save.

Dave Stieb, 12-8, dropped to 0-5 in 13 career starts at Baltimore. Mike Devereaux hit a two-run homer for the Orioles.

Brewers 6, Red Sox 3

Charlie O'Brien's three-run homer capped a four-run sixth-inning rally off Mike Smithson, 6-12, at County Stadium as Milwaukee won for the ninth time in 10 games.

Jaime Navarro, 4-5, gave up two hits in 1 1-3 innings and Tony Fossas finished with 2 2-3 innings of perfect relief for his first major-league save.

Tigers 7, Yankees 6

Fred Lynn homered off Eric Plunk, 4-3, to snap a seventh-inning tie as New York dropped to 0-3 since Bucky Dent replaced Dallas Green as manager.

The Yankees finished a 3-7 road trip while the Tigers won three straight for the first time since May 29-31.

ANGELS

Danny Grunhard brought in Midland's only run in the top of the third, scoring on a ground out by Scott Cerny.

Midland tied it at three in the fifth when Chris Cron singled home Graves. It was Cron's 99th RBI, still tops in the league.

The Wranglers scored single runs in the fifth and sixth before Midland returned for the win in the seventh.

Game Two
Angels 3, Wranglers 1

The two teams were scoreless until the fifth when the Angels scored two runs. Scott Cerny singled home Jeff Barns and, on a relay throw home, Wichita's Tony Pelligrino threw wild, allowing Graves to score.

Wichita scored a single run in the bottom of the fifth when Tom LeVasser scored on a single by Warren Newson.

Midland added its third run in the sixth when Danny Grunhard hit an inside-the-park home run off the centerfield fence.

LEE ROY

Jones said. "He was one of the most colorful and interesting people that I've ever seen in my life."

Jordan recently revealed that he is a candidate to replace Alabama Athletic Director Steve Sloan, who resigned last week.

Jordan's rift with Schramm began a week before the 1973 season when the linebacker walked out during a contract dispute, leaving no other middle linebacker.

Jordan said he had been hurt by Schramm's refusal to renegotiate.

"I stood up to leave his office one day, and I told him I would play without a contract that year," Jordan said. "He just gave me a backhanded wave and told me to play without a damn contract. I told him I had never been hit so low. I told him I wasn't trying to get what (Dick) Butkus was playing for."

The two rarely talked after that, although it didn't take long for Jordan to get a new contract. Twenty-four hours later, he was back on the team.

Before Jones bought the team in February, Schramm said he had no intention of adding Ring of Honor inductions soon. He had planned to keep it a small group.

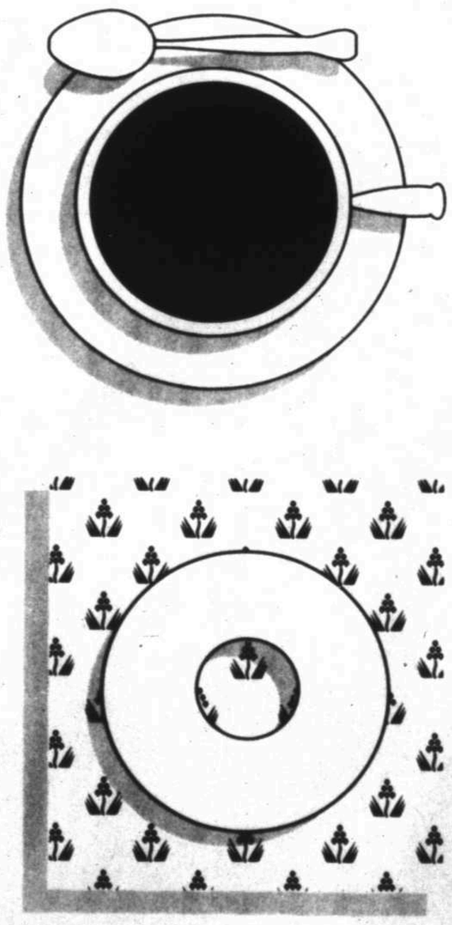

Future inductees would have to be players with Hall of Fame credentials, Schramm said.

Asked if he ever expected to make the Ring of Honor, Jordan said, "Even after I met with Tex, I didn't think so. But I didn't have any animosity. A lot of people said I should have my feelings hurt. But it was a one-man selection committee. It still made me feel good that people always brought it up."

TUESDAY, AUGUST 22, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will gain both financially and professionally if you take the direct route in handling your responsibilities. Self-reliance brings all kinds of rewards! Resist an urge to plunge recklessly into an unknown area in September. You will not have to go it alone on the home front. A longtime relationship gets back on track. Travel will be helpful.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: writer Ray Bradbury, composer Claude Debussy, coach Bill Parcells, author Dorothy Parker, slugger Carl Yastrzemski, actress Valerie Harper, tennis star Mats Wilander, actress Cindy Williams.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Rely on your instincts when making important decisions. Past mistakes could work to your advantage now. A new relationship takes on deeper meaning. Be careful not to rock the boat with too many demands.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Work behind the scenes today. Doing your own research will help you feel more confident. Get better organized and it will be easier to meet deadlines. Dining in luxurious surroundings holds special appeal tonight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Some lucky breaks are in the making. You will soon find the best solution to a chronic problem. Avoid acting in haste or on impulse. Direct confrontations are best sidestepped.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good intentions and cooperation abound today, making it easier for you to accomplish your goals. A hobby could lead to a lucrative new career. Investigate marketing possibilities. Exercise to relieve tension.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Heed your intuition, but act on important decisions after conducting careful research. Try to attend to overdue household chores before day's end. Tell mate in advance if working late. Romance flourishes on consideration.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid discussing any subjects that might create domestic discord. A new relationship promises lasting happiness. Know your own heart before asking partner for a commitment. Rash promises are easily broken.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Express your wishes and see if you can persuade others to abide by them. Contact with old friends boosts your morale. Curtail spending. Non-essential items can wait while you build savings.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Overseas contacts are helpful in putting over an unusual business venture. Ending an emotional entanglement with an older person will be difficult. Be firm. Watch what you say to influential acquaintances.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A change of lifestyle is a big step in the right direction. Teamwork is favored. Continue to fight against negative thoughts. There is no reason to feel insecure. You have the right stuff!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep up the good work and you will boost your earning power. Employers promote those who show initiative. Reveal your bright ideas to those in authority and you will win new respect.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good day for promoting business transactions. Help comes from an unexpected quarter. You receive a favorable response from those in power. Strike while the iron is hot; arrange a special meeting.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Revise the family budget if you want to build savings. Two heads are better than one when making long-term decisions. Heed the suggestions of those who know you best. Love conquers all.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ1075 ♡543 ◇A ♣AK6
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	Pass	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.— We would not fault you greatly if you elected to bid four spades. However, if partner has as little as three spades, a singleton heart and the queen of clubs you are virtually a laydown for a small slam. We would opt for a double followed by a jump to four spades to show our powerhouse and slam interest.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠763 ♡AKQ105 ◇AQ ♣A87
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♣	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have an awkward hand. A jump to three hearts overstresses the quality of your suit, and four clubs on three-card support is unthinkable. Since North's two-over-one response promises a rebid, dampen your ardor for a moment and settle for a raise to three clubs. You can make a move toward slam later.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠63 ♡AQ1063 ◇72 ♣AQ98
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner's bid is forcing, so don't even consider passing. The only two bids that come into consideration are two no trump and two hearts. Since a lead through your suits won't prove fatal, we prefer two hearts, leaving partner the option of bidding no trump if that's where the hand belongs.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠765 ♡Q5 ◇J762 ♣8763
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Dbl	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—The two things you can't do is pass—you need to add the K-Q to your diamond holding for that—or bid one no trump, which promises some 7-10 points. We know some players who would bid one spade, but partner has asked for our longest suit and we would duly respond with two clubs.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK6 ♡K93 ◇AQ854 ♣83
What is your opening bid?
A.—There are those who believe you may not open one no trump with a low doubleton. However, that's contrary to modern practice. If you don't open one no trump, you present yourself with an insoluable rebid problem no matter what partner responds.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK83 ♡QJ8 ◇KJ4 ♣863
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Don't shilly-shally. Partner has a minimum, balanced opening bid and so do you. If you even considered anything other than three no trump, you see something in this hand that has escaped us.

Close missed '60s rebellion by being in Up With People

NEW YORK (AP) — Life in the 1960s wasn't so wild for Glenn Close, who spent five years with the well-scrubbed singing group Up With People, the Silent Majority's answer to the Beatles.

Close

"We were supposed to be the other side of Berkeley, you know, sing some songs and the world will be a better place," Close, 42, said in the September issue of Fame magazine.

"It was very idealistic but very controlled, very controlled. I was absolutely sincere; it was totally naive," she said.

"I had no emotional or spiritual equipment to know what I was doing, I was too young."

Close, who stars in the upcoming "Immediate Family" with James Woods, said the group enabled her to travel around the world, but she still feels she missed something in those days.

"I never had a '60s rebellion period. I wish that I had," she said.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Jerry Lewis is using his old movies to reach a very special member of the younger generation — this year's Muscular Dystrophy Association poster child.

Lewis

Five-year-old Ashley Antolak, of Athens, met the comedian for the first time in December in Las Vegas, shortly after being selected to be the poster child.

Barbara Harber, Ashley's grandmother, recalled asking Ashley about Lewis on the girl's return from the trip. "Granny, he's kinda funny," Ashley said.

"Tell it to his banker," Mrs. Harber responded with a laugh.

But Ashley's mother, Donna, said it was clear that Ashley didn't know exactly who Lewis was. When Lewis found out, he decided to send Ashley videocassettes of three movies from his cinematic heydey in the 1960s, "The Bellboy," "Cinderfella," and "The Nutty Professor."

"I figured what better way is there to bridge the gap between our generations than through the universal language of laughter," Lewis said.

So when Ashley was asked about Lewis in a recent interview, she could say with some authority, "He's funny." But is he as funny in person as in his movies? "No, not really," she said.

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC News' Peter Jennings, who earlier this year earned best television anchor accolades, dropped out of high school in the 10th grade and says that until recently he would avoid talking about his lack of a formal education.

Jennings

In the September issue of Esquire magazine, Jennings says he read nothing but comic books as a child and that he was an impetuous, cocky boy used to getting his own way.

He said he regrets not having studied literature or economics. He said his spelling is poor and he's unfamiliar with grammar rules.

He says when pressed on the subject of his education, he would say he attended Carleton University in Ottawa. The truth is he attended Carleton's night school for all of a week.

When he sees his remarks quoted in newspapers and magazines, he said he tells himself, "There goes a product of no education."

Jennings was literally born into broadcasting. His father was the first radio news broadcaster in Canada and later became general supervisor of programming for the Canadian Broadcasting Company.

Voted best news anchor by the Washington Journalism Review, Jennings said his motivation is still largely personal.

"I think I still — to a great measure — want to impress my father," he said.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Rodney Crowell, nominated last week for four Country Music Association awards, says he won't "count any chickens" before they hatch, but he thinks he deserves an award.

Crowell is one of the leading nominees for the Oct. 9 ceremony along with Ricky Van Shelton and Hank Williams Jr.

"I don't believe in false modesty," Crowell told The Nashville Banner Thursday in an interview from Los Angeles. "I definitely thought I was deserving. Had I not been acknowledged, I would have probably been disappointed and bitter."

Crowell, husband of Rosanne Cash, was nominated for best male vocalist, best song for the hit "After All This Time," best single and best video.

LONDON (AP) — Kenneth Branagh and Emma Thompson, two of the most highly praised of Britain's new generation of actors, are no longer just costars. They're man and wife.

They were married Sunday at Cliveden, a historic stately home 25 miles west of London. The half-hour service included readings from Samuel Pepys and William Shakespeare.

"It was very nerve-wracking and was much worse than being on stage — but much more fun," said Branagh, who wore a suit of navy blue linen.

The couple met when they starred in the British Broadcasting Corp. TV series "Fortunes of War."

FORT WORTH (AP) — A report that "Lonesome Dove" and "Last Picture Show" author Larry McMurtry had visited a small Dallas theater and brushed elbows with the cast was wrong, according to his sister.

It wasn't McMurtry, but just another impostor, said Judy McMurtry McLemore.

She told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that McMurtry spends about half of his time in New York and is there now.

"It's funny about the guy in the play," she said. "There are two other people running around who also claim they're Larry McMurtry."

The latest fake, who was using another name, said the McMurtry surname was just a pen name. He also claimed he stays in California most of the time, but was back to visit his parents in Fort Worth.

"That man should have done his homework better," Ms. McLemore said.

She said the real McMurtry lives in Archer City in northwest Texas, has not been to Fort Worth in years, and that his parents don't live in Fort Worth. His father died 12 years ago and his mother lives in Wichita Falls, she told a Star-Telegram columnist.

PETERBOROUGH, N.H. (AP) — Stan Brakhage, one of the most influential filmmakers of America's avant-garde cinema, is this year's recipient of the prestigious Edward MacDowell Medal.

It was the first time in 30 years the medal has been given to a filmmaker.

Another Baby Bell settles with union

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Striking telephone workers in California and Nevada returned to work today following a tentative three-year contract agreement offering modest pay increases and health-care cost controls.

"Our members are comfortable with this contract and they're feeling very good about what they've won, what they feel they fought very hard for," said Jessie Wilson, president of Local 9415 of the Communications Workers of America.

Most of the 42,500 telephone operators, repair people and factory workers for Pacific Bell and the Nevada Bell Telephone Co. were back on the job or already scheduled for their next shift, Pacific Bell spokesman Richard Fitzmaurice said today.

Meanwhile, the strike at Bell Atlantic, which covers six mid-Atlantic states and Washington, D.C., moved a step closer to agreement Sunday when the company's Pennsylvania subsidiary settled with one of two striking unions.

Strikes continued at NYNEX, serving New York and the Northeast; and at Ameritech, which covers five Midwestern states. No talks were scheduled in those two strikes.

The three continuing strikes involve more than 150,000 workers.

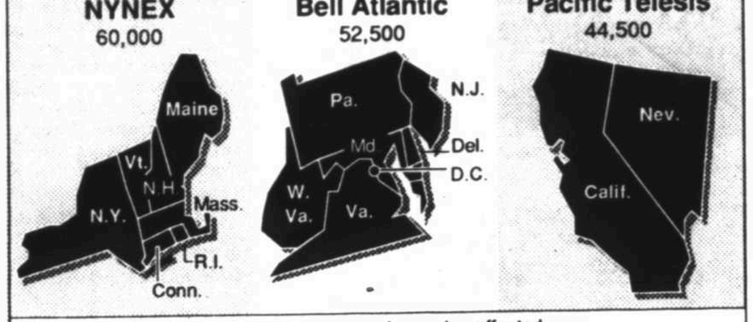

On Sunday, workers at Pacific Bell and Nevada Bell Telephone Co., subsidiaries of Pacific Telesis, began relieving 17,000 supervisors who took over day-to-day operations following the walkout 16 days ago.

As at the other strikebound companies, managers had been working 12 hours a day six days a week to

Manhattan developers seek places to build

AP Laserphoto

Developers continue building skycrapers such as the Merrill Lynch building in Manhattan, an already full island that isn't getting any bigger.

NEW YORK (AP) — In Manhattan, where even the air is for sale, developers are wheeling and dealing to keep building higher and denser on an island that isn't getting any bigger.

Donald Trump wants to use the rights he owns to land under the Hudson River to create the world's tallest building. Across town, the owner of the air space above Grand Central Terminal has been battling for more than 11 years to convert it to glass, steel, and cash on the ground.

"It's a logical extension of the cleverness of New York City developers' lawyers," says Steve Robinson, co-chairman of Westpride, a community organization fighting excessive development. "They push the limits, they invent new mechanisms, they try anything that may have a shot at working, because there are so many dollars at stake."

Dozens of office and apartment buildings are going up in New York's midtown area alone, especially around Times Square.

Under the city's complex zoning laws, the sale of air rights has become commonplace. It works this way: An investor owns, say, a five-story building in an area where 10-story buildings are allowed. He or she "sells" the unused air space to a neighbor, who then gets the right to build a 15-story building. With air rights purchases and other maneuvers, such as offering to build public plazas or low-cost housing in exchange for waiver of size restrictions, developers have managed to put up bigger buildings than the zoning law would otherwise allow. But such actions have raised cries of foul.

"On street corners all over Manhattan ... you have disproportionately large buildings going up," said Sandor E. Katz of the Women's City Club of New York, a civic organization. "There needs to be some absolute limit on the amount of additional floor area that can be imposed on any one lot."

Civic groups are focusing on Trump City, the billionaire developer's massive West Side project. Katz

Houston office buildings sell at record pace

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston office buildings are selling at a record-setting pace, with a six-month total nearly as high as all of 1987, according to a new real estate study.

The Coldwell, Banker & Co. realty firm says the 43 office building sales in Houston during the first half of 1989 compare with 12-month totals of 64 last year and 45 in 1987.

"The final total for this year is likely to be the highest on record," said David Alsmeyer, a real estate researcher for Coldwell Banker.

"There weren't that many building sales back in the boom days of the early 1980s," he said. "People were mainly building instead of buying back then."

Three large deals now in the works could easily make this a record year for major office building transactions in Houston, industry experts agree.

Japanese concern plans Hollywood film company

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joining a growing list of foreign companies seeking a slice of the Hollywood pie, Japan's JVC announced that it will invest more than $100 million in a new motion-picture production company.

The joint venture, Largo Entertainment, will be headed and co-owned by Lawrence Gordon, the former president of 20th Century Fox who oversaw such films as "Cocoon," "Jewel of the Nile," "Commando," "Aliens" and "The Fly," it was announced Sunday.

The company will develop and produce up to eight studio-budget movies a year, Gordon said. Films will be distributed to U.S. theaters by one of the existing major studios.

"I want to make films that will play throughout the world," Gordon said. "Most things that play well here will play well overseas."

Largo represents the first major move by a leading Japanese company in the production of high-budget Hollywood movies. But JVC's gambit is just one in a series of Hollywood purchases made by overseas players.

Entertainment is one of the nation's largest exports, with a net positive trade balance of about $5 billion annually. Sparked by such rosy financial health, the deregulation of European television and booming foreign electronic sales, foreign players have been flocking to Hollywood.

Mexican mine closed in union, government clash

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico's largest copper mine is idle after the government rebuffed the sweeping demands of the miner's union by closing the Cananea Mining Co.

A bankruptcy judge granted the state-owned company's petition to declare Cananea insolvent Sunday night and soldiers were sent in to guard the mine, one of the world's largest copper producer.

The head of the union local, Froylan Murrieta Loreto, told Notimex, the official news agency, the miners had left peacefully when soldiers showed up.

Soldiers "intervened" to take care of hazardous materials, including 70 tons of dynamite, stored on mine premises, the national development agency that owns Cananea, Nafinsa, said.

Cananea, one of the world's largest copper mines, has a long history of labor conflict and tensions have been particularly high since the government decided to sell it to private investors.

The mine, 25 miles south of the Arizona border, employed more than 3,000 miners.

Murrieta Loreto also said that the national union head, Napoleon Gomez Sada, hoped to speak directly with President Carlos Salinas de Gortari about the Cananea closure.

Gomez Sada had threatened a strike on Aug. 28 if the contract negotiations were not resolved. The negotiations began June 24.

The confrontation between the government and Gomez Sada, one of the last of Mexico's strongarm union bosses, has been closely watched.

For Gomez Sada, winning concessions that mine officials said would

Two computer shows on calender

By PAUL H. PAUSE'

There are two local computer shows coming up that should be of interest to many readers.

On September 10-12, the Permian Basin Graduate Center will host a two-day symposium on the practical use of microcomputers in the oil and gas industry. The conference, "Finding Oil With a Computer: Case Histories, Tools, & Techniques," will be held at the Midland Center (105 No. Main, corner of Wall and Main St., across from the Hilton).

An exhibit hall of industry representatives will be open to the public both days of the meeting. Hardware and software vendors will be displaying and demonstrating the newest applications. This will provide an exciting educational opportunity to examine, compare and contrast a variety of hardware and software packages. In addition to several local groups, companies from Denver, Dallas, Oklahoma City, Austin and Houston will be demonstrating state-of-the-art systems. Schlumberger Well Services of Midland will host a coffee bar in the exhibit area throughout the symposium. The exhibit hall will be open to the public, without charge, from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Monday, and from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Tuesday.

Kata McCarville, president of the Computer Oriented Geological Society, will be the keynote speaker at the meeting. More than 20 other papers are scheduled for presentation. Topics and titles include:

Field Studies: "A Computer Aided Geological Characterization of the Yates Fm., No. Ward Estes Field, Ward and Winkler Cos., Texas" (Rod Stanley, Chevron, Midland); "Hydrocarbon Assessment and Fracture Detection Using Open-Hole Logging Data, Fullerton (Dev.) Field, Andrews Co., Texas" (Kevin Schepel, Exxon, Midland); "Integration of Commercial Databases Into Autocad - a Case History, Emperor East Field, Winkler Co., Texas" (Sam Flarity, Home Petroleum, Houston); "The Computer's Value in Prospect Generation — An Example From Indian Basin Field, Eddy Co., New Mexico" (Shirley M. Kendrick, Consultant, Midland).

Log Analysis: "Shaly Sand Analysis with LOGAN" (George Asquith, Texas Tech, Lubbock); "Determination of Facies and Petrophysical Parameters from Well Data" (Richard Anderson, Atlas Wireline, Houston); "Porosity Calibration of Neutron Deflection Logs, SACROC Unit" (Tom Swulius, Chevron, Houston); "Circumferential Borehole Imaging Log" (Gary Murrill, Atlas Wireline, Midland).

Crude oil prices rise 10 cents

From Staff and Wire Reports

Crude oil futures rose 10 cents this morning and rested at $18.90 per barrel.

In New York on Friday, oil futures ended a lackluster week by finishing mixed with no major developments to influence prices.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the September contract for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, rose 12 cents to close at $18.80 per 42-gallon barrel. Contract months for later delivery were narrowly mixed.

Among refined products traded on the exchange, unleaded regular gasoline for September delivery edged up 0.38 cent to 52.73 cents a gallon.

Heating oil futures for September slipped 0.01 cent lower, settling at 51.03 cents a gallon.

Analysts said the market was driven mainly by technical factors in the absence of news on oil supplies or production.

"It just fits into technical wiggle and jiggle," said Peter Beutel, assistant director of the energy group at Elders Futures Inc.

The oil market has been in the summer doldrums for some time. Traders are looking forward to Labor Day for a pickup in activity and beyond that to the next scheduled meeting, on Sept. 23, of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Dollar steadies while gold declines

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was steady today in early European trading calmed by a lack of upcoming major U.S. economic news. Gold prices were lower.

Foreign exchange dealers said they expected the U.S. currency to trade within a relatively narrow range for the rest of the session, with an underlying upward trend.

They also predicted range-trading over the next few days in the absence of any major U.S. economic indicators. The next noteworthy announcement is the revision of second quarter U.S. gross national product figures next Monday.

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound. One pound cost $1.5685, more expensive for buyers than Friday's late $1.5655.

Earlier in Tokyo, where markets close before Europe's business day begins, the dollar closed at 143.35 Japanese yen, down 0.17 yen. In London, the dollar traded at 142.80 yen.

Gold opened in London, the major market, at $365.15 a troy ounce, down from $366.65 late Friday. At midmorning, the city's bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $365.50.

The Zurich price was $365.30, down from $366.75.

Earlier in Hong Kong, gold closed at $366.79 bid, down 22 cents.

Silver bullion traded in London at $5.22 a troy ounce, down from $5.25.

Stock market closes with late rally

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market closed higher Friday, ending with a rally after a relatively quiet session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 8.34 points to finish at 2,687.97, a gain of 3.98 points on the week.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 7 to 6 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 776 issues up, 661 down and 544 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board totaled 145.81 million shares, down from 157.56 million in the previous session.

Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 174.245 million shares.

Stocks opened weaker in response to a slide in the bond market after a Labor Department report on consumer prices that raised concern about the inflation outlook over the next few months.

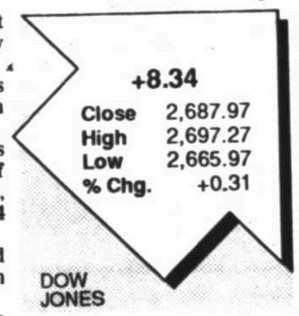

The Labor Department's Consumer Price Index rose 0.2 percent in July, in line with the market consensus.

But without food and energy costs, the most volatile components of the index, consumer prices rose a heftier 0.4 percent, raising inflation worries.

Stocks firmed slightly at midday as bonds turned higher and by late afternoon prices were strengthening.

But uncertainty about the impact of the the so-called "double witching hour" — the expiration of stock-index futures and options that don't expire quarterly — dampened the rally.

Volume remained low throughout the session with computerized program strategies dominating most of the activity, said Weeks.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Unisys to eliminate 6,000 jobs

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Unisys Corp. says it will cut more than 6,000 jobs — or up to 8 percent of the computer company's worldwide workforce — by the end of 1990 under a restructuring plan.

The plan announced Friday represents an acknowledgement by the hard-driving chairman of Unisys, W. Michael Blumenthal, that the growth plans of the nation's third-largest computer maker were overly ambitious.

Unsafe landings attributed to inexperience

NEW YORK (AP) — Unsafe landings occurred on two Eastern Airlines flights recently because of inexperienced pilots hired to replace strikers, the Air Line Pilots Association contends.

But both Eastern and the federal agency responsible for air safety disputed the claims Friday.

The union representing pilots at most major U.S. airlines said the incidents involved "hard landings" at airports in Atlanta and Chicago. The airplanes were damaged in both cases but there were no injuries, the pilots union said.

Generic drugs to be closely inspected

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government will strengthen its inspection force for dealing with generic drugs — adding $18 million for more field inspectors — as part of a plan to cope with burgeoning revelations of fraud in the industry, sources have said.

The Department of Health and Human Services also will seek legislation allowing the Food and Drug Administration to remove drugs from the market if fraud is proven to have occurred in the substances' approval, the sources said Friday. FDA officials have argued that they have no legal power to halt the sales of drugs in such cases.

Company gets 'bum rap' over name

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The company calls itself Fluorocarbon Co., but the way investors were reacting you'd think it was called something else: a pariah.

Since the mid-1950s, the company has been making expensive custom seals, gaskets, bearings and the like from Teflon and related plastics — materials known as fluorocarbons.

"They are as safe as peanut butter," said Peter Churm, Fluorocarbon's chairman.

But try telling that to investors who've heard about chlorofluorocarbons, the compounds used in aerosols and refrigerants that are believed to eat holes in Earth's protective ozone layer.

Said Churm: "This has been developing over the last few years, and finally in the last six months we were getting calls from brokers who would say, 'We're not going to put any of our clients in your stock because it takes too long to explain that you're not the bad guys.'"

Churm decided to ditch the name and let the public pick the new one.

Contest entries are due by Aug. 31. The winner should be announced by the end of September. The prize is 100 shares of Fluorocarbon stock, which has been trading at about $16 a share.

Churm said more than 1,600 letters have arrived at the company's headquarters in Laguna Niguel containing 6,000 suggested names.

"One guy said instead of Fluorocarbon, make it Flour Garden," Churm said. "One letter came from a lady who said, "If you really want to clear the air, name it Not Cloroflourocarbon Inc.'"

Another wag wrote, "If you're so concerned about health and the environment why don't you name it the Oat Bran Co."

"This has been developing over the last few years, and finally in the last six months we were getting calls from brokers who would say, 'We're not going to put any of our clients in your stock because it takes too long to explain that you're not the bad guys.'"

Peter Churm, Fluorocarbon chairman

Churm said the new name will probably sound a lot like the old, an idea endorsed by Robert Berglass, the chairman of Dep Corp. in Compton.

Sales of Dep's Ayds weight-reduction candy had fallen more than 50 percent because of publicity about the affliction AIDS before the company repackaged the product this year and renamed it Diet Ayds.

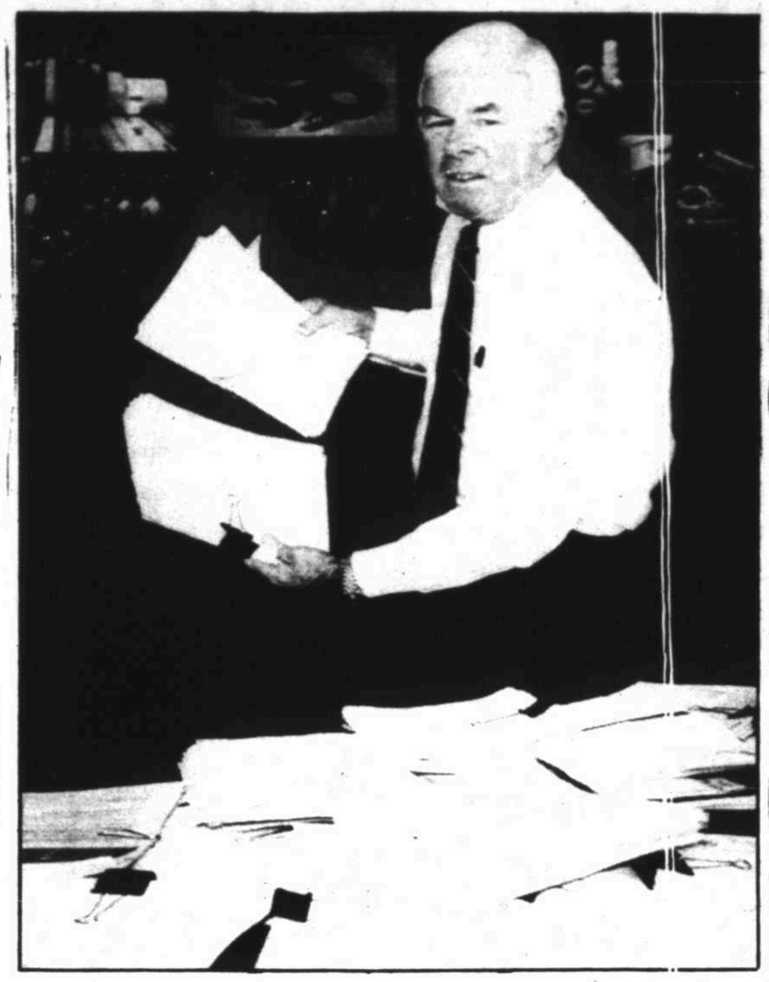

"We wanted to soften it without completely changing it and losing the name identification," Berglass said.

He said sales are moving back up.

Fluorocarbon also should revise instead of abandon its name, he said.

"Change it to Fluorotef, because their biggest product is Teflon, isn't it?" Berglass suggested.

"That's a good name," replied Churm. "But he's too late. Somebody else already came up with it."

The course will be held in the auditorium of the Graduate Center, 105 W. Illinois. The instructor, Mark Maslyn, a co-founder of the Computer Oriented Geological Society, has a master's degree in geology from the Colorado School of Mines and more than 10 years experience in oil and gas exploration.

The course, designed to be an introduction to computer-based exploration and productivity techniques for explorationists and managers, will cover building a scout ticket database, gridding, contouring, computer exploration techniques, trend surface analysis, and expert systems.

For more information, contact the Graduate Center at 683-2832.

On September 20-21, the local chapter of the Data Processing Management Association will sponsor the 10th Annual DPMA Computer Show. Computer-related vendors, mostly local, will be displaying various hardware and software systems with an emphasis on the general business and home computer user. More on this show next time.

Australia's Qintex Group bought MGM-UA for $1 billion earlier this year, and Rupert Murdoch's News Corp. already owns Fox. British broadcaster Television South PLC bought TV producer MTM a year ago for 310 million. Italian investors Giancarlo Parretti and Florio Fiorini control the struggling Cannon Group.

There has been speculation for months that Sony Corp. was set to purchase a Hollywood studio. The Japanese communications giant's involvement in film production is limited to SVS Films, a small producer of low-budget movies.

JVC is the U.S. arm of Victor Co. of Japan Ltd. Japan's Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. Ltd., which makes Panasonic and Technics products, owns 50.8 percent of Victor.

Victor will operate Largo through a new subsidiary, JVC Entertainment Inc.

"We are pleased to be introduced to American film making through the eyes and ears of Mr. Gordon," JVC Chairman Seiichiro Niwa said in a statement. "He is a man whose vision and experience are fully compatible with our goals and needs."

Gordon said in an interview that Largo would open its doors today at Gordon's small office on the Fox studio lot. He said he would begin to fill staff positions this week and the company's first movie should be in theaters by late 1990.

amount to a 330 percent increase in wages and benefits, could have been a show of strength to shored up his control of the union.

Many observers expected Gomez Sada, who has run the miners' union for 30 years, was going to "meet his Waterloo," as the respected financial daily El Financiero put it, in the Cananea negotiations.

Salinas has taken a tough line with other union bosses in his campaign to modernize the Mexican economy by eliminating union featherbedding and corruption and increasing worker productivity.

In January, only a few weeks after his inauguration, Salinas jailed the longtime head of the oilworkers' union and most of the top leadership and sent in troops to protect refineries from sabotage.

In a statement issued Sunday night, Cananea said it simply could not afford to meet the union demands. It said layoffs would begin immediately.

A lengthy resume of the situation repeatedly mentioned low productivity and high production costs.

Cananea has incurred heavy debts in its attempt to modernize. Two deals to sell the mine have collapsed and, according to reports in the financial press, the government felt the mine would be more attractive to buyers without an expensive union contract.

The mine, founded by an American entrepreneur in 1899, produced about 160 tons of copper a year. About 40 percent was exported.

The town of Cananea's 25,000 residents are heavily dependent on the mine and the government tried to soften the blow of the closure Sunday by promising programs aimed at diversifying the local economy.

BUILD

calls it "the most dramatic single example of the kind of monstrous result you can get by the accumulation of development rights."

Westpride targeted it from early on.

"If we are able to have an impact on what Trump proposes, then other developers in the city would begin to get the signal," says Robinson.

On 76 acres of old railroad yards along the Hudson River between 59th and 72nd streets, the largest undeveloped land parcel in the city, Trump City would include a 150-story structure and 13 other buildings ranging from 13 to 60 floors. Besides offices, hotel space and apartments, there would be an 800,000-square-foot shopping mall.

Westpride says the 7,600 housing units would heavily overburden the neighborhood's schools and sewers, and that the tower, the world's tallest, would cast a shadow across the Hudson River and Central Park. Trump's people say there are plenty of sewers and schools, and that the shadow would not be that obtrusive in a city full of skyscrapers.

Trump wants to transfer to his shoreline property the development rights he owns to 19 acres under the Hudson River, a holdover from the days when waterfront industry extended onto the piers.

William Valletta, counsel to the Department of City Planning, said that the city's zoning law allows a lot's overall size — including underwater rights — to be the basis for determining the size limits of a building.

On the East Side, developers are hoping to use the air rights created by the space above the Grand Central commuter train terminal to build the city's fourth-largest skyscraper nearby.

In 1978, the Supreme Court backed the city in blocking Grand Central's owner, the Penn Central Corp., from building a 53-story office tower atop the landmark train station.

But the court said it might reconsider if Penn Central found it couldn't use the leftover development rights on the station site or get compensation by transferring them.

In 1983, Penn Central contracted to sell up to 1.5 million square feet of air rights to 383 Madison Associates, which wants to use about half of the rights for a 74-story building at its address several blocks away.

The zoning law allows such transfers from a landmark to an adjacent lot. Penn Central owns the underground land, used for train tracks, between the terminal and 383 Madison, and it and the developers hope the rights to this land will qualify the properties as adjacent, thus facilitating the transfer.

maintain service for PacTel's 13.2 million customers. There were minor delays in operator-assisted calls, installations and repairs.

After several marathon sessions, a draft of the tentative pact was drawn up early Sunday and formalized later by negotiators.

Workers won increases in wages, bonuses and other payments that will raise overall salaries by 11 percent over three years, Wilson said.

Pay currently ranges from about $228 a week for some operators to $650 for some skilled technicians, according to union figures.

The proposed contract would grant wage increases of 3.1 percent for the first year, 3.7 percent the next and 2.6 percent for the final year.

PacTel also won agreement to set up a network of doctors and hospitals to provide health care for employees. Workers would pay $10 for most visits while receiving free preventive care. Employees would have to pay more if they seek treatment from doctors and hospitals outside the network.

Company efforts to get employees to share part of their soaring health-care costs have been a major factor in several of the strikes.

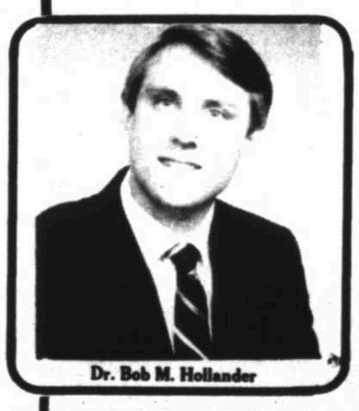

The contract also contains a no-layoff clause and provides added family benefits, such as a $2,000 reimbursement for adoption costs and tax benefits for dependent care.

The contract must be approved by the membership, but a ratification vote isn't expected to be completed until Sept. 22, said Lynn Jimenez, a spokeswoman for Pacific Bell.

Company officials complained there had been 450 "serious acts of sabotage or vandalism" during the walkout. They said rewards of $10,000 to $25,000 for information leading to an arrest and conviction remain in effect.

Small Missouri town called Las Vegas of country music

BRANSON, Mo. (AP) — When Roy Clark first visited this community nestled in a lush Ozark Mountain valley eight years ago, the country music entertainer couldn't believe his eyes.

Vehicles bearing license plates from nearly every state stretched bumper-to-bumper for miles on the winding main strip, creeping past miniature golf courses, go-cart rides, water slides and arts and crafts shops swarming with tourists.

Clark also noticed long lines of people waiting to get into country music theaters where local performers sang, put on skits and told corny jokes in a wholesome, family atmosphere.

"I was amazed. I said, 'What is this doing here in the middle of nowhere?'" Clark says.

The Grammy-winning guitarist and co-host of television's "Hee Haw" had stumbled on what local promoters call the country music show capital of the world.

With about 20 glittery theaters lining Missouri 76, better known as 76 Country Music Boulevard, Branson is also billed as the Las Vegas of country music — but with an emphasis on family.

"You can see more Nashville stars in Branson than you can in Nashville or anywhere else," boasts Bill Jones, executive manager of the local chamber of commerce.

The list of performers appearing in Branson this summer reads like a Who's Who of country music: Barbara and Louise Mandrell, Mel Tillis, Ray Stevens, Dolly Parton, Mickey Gilley, Tammy Wynette, Janie Fricke, Pat Boone, Conway Twitty, Ricky Skaggs, Rodney Crowell, the Gatlin Brothers, Sweethearts of the Rodeo, Highway 101, Ronnie Milsap, Tom T. Hall, Porter Waggoner and Moe Bandy.

ENTERTAINMENT

City officials estimate that at least 3.25 million people saw country music shows in Branson last year during the peak June-August tourist season. Several theater owners say business is even better this year, and Clark is considering staying open year-round instead of closing in the winter months.

"I found out after I became acquainted with Branson that everyone else in life knew about it but me," Clark said. "I run into people in almost every state who say they plan Branson every year as part of their vacation."

Branson has a population of 2,500, but on a typical summer day tourists swell the southwest Missouri town to 30,000 or more.

Jones predicts that 5 million people will visit Branson this year, up 1 million from 1988. That's more people than annually visit Yellowstone Park or the Grand Canyon.

Vacationers are drawn by the breathtaking mountain scenery, the camping, fishing and boating available at several huge lakes nearby, and two old-time theme parks, Silver Dollar City and Shepherd of the Hills.

And, of course, they come to hear country music. From theaters seating a few hundred people to an outdoor ampitheater with a capacity of 15,000, Branson offers more than 40,000 seats for country music shows.

Clark liked what he saw in Branson and spent $12 million to build a 1,200-seat theater and a 191-room hotel and convention center featuring a smaller Las Vegas-style showroom.

He was the first to regularly feature top-name entertainers. Soon Freddy Fender, Boxcar Willie and Danny Davis and the Nashville Brass opened theaters along the heavily developed strip, where land is scarce and commands more than $2,000 a square foot.

"It's no longer possible for anyone to come in and start a theater on a shoestring," Jones says. "It's now become big business and big money."

Clark, who plays about 30 dates a year in his own club, compares Branson to the atmosphere that existed in Nashville, the recording capital of country music, 50 years ago.

"Not to take away from Nashville, but Nashville is commercial," said Clark, relaxing in his plush travel bus after a matinee performance at his Roy Clark Celebrity Theatre.

"Here, the music industry is treated in its true art form. I've often said the most fun I've ever had in my life was when I played for free. You're not performing, you're just playing country music. That's sort of the attitude of country music in Branson."

Several of the shows are family operations. The Mabe family has run and starred in their Baldknobbers Hillbilly Jamboree for 30 years, initially starting with 25 folding chairs. Today the Baldknobbers play to packed audiences in a 1,700-seat theater.

"There was a lot of worry about the future of these family run theaters when the big-name stars came to the area," said Tommy Bilyeu, a member of the Baldknobbers' show for the last 20 years. "But the more shows that come in, the more our business grows."

Branson's country music success can be partly attributed to its central location.

"Our major market is the haven of country music, the Midwest and Southwest," Jones said. "People from Texas, Iowa, Oklahoma and Louisiana through the ages have been our big drawing cards."

Man seeks to honor life of original 'Uncle Tom'

OWENSBORO, Ky. (AP) — Wooden thumb screws, neck collars, a ball and chain lie on Joe Sparks' floor, part of his collection of slavery memorabilia and his research into the life of an escaped slave who was one of the inspirations for "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Sparks' unusual collection began in 1967 because of a local story he read about former slave Josiah Henson. Besides collecting memorabilia, he has worked to see Henson honored in the western Kentucky county from which he fled in 1830 with his wife and their four children.

Sparks, a 60-year-old electrical contractor, led the effort to have U.S. 60 from Owensboro to the Hancock County line designated in June by a state marker as the Josiah Henson Trail. The route passes the site where Henson lived as a slave.

"It kind of got me," Sparks said of Harriet Beecher Stowe's novel of slave life, which he read after he became interested in Henson. The novel, a best-seller when it came out in 1852, has been credited with fostering anti-slavery sentiment in the decade before the Civil War. Mrs. Stowe met Henson in 1849 and said that his story was an inspiration for the novel.

"Here was a man who lived here for that period of time and who became famous because of an internationally famous book," Sparks said.

He has playbills of productions of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," first-edition copies of the novel, comic books and children's editions of the novel. He also has ownership papers on slaves, and items of restraint he has picked up at flea markets and through antique trade magazines.

"You have to know what you're looking for," Sparks said.

Henson was born into slavery in 1789, and worked on plantations in Maryland and Kentucky. He was ordained a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1828, and earned money preaching to try to buy his freedom. After he made a down payment of $275 toward his $400 price, the plantation owner raised the price to $1,000.

Henson, his wife and children escaped Kentucky in September 1830, by rowing across the Ohio River. Two weeks later, they walked into Cincinnati. They reached Canada in October 1830 and eventually settled in Dresden, Ontario, where Henson became a noted educator and abolitionist.

Sparks, president of the Josiah Henson Historical Society in Owensboro, has proposed developing the old Amos Riley Plantation, where Henson served as an overseer, as a historic site.

The plantation house no longer exists on the privately owned land, and a soybean field covers the ground where Henson's slave cabin stood, Sparks said. He used old property deeds to map the boundaries of the plantation, which once encompassed thousands of acres.

Vereen comes back from drug-induced edge

By LARRY NEUMEISTER

NEW YORK (AP) — Ben Vereen hit bottom in December 1987, when a car crash killed his 16-year-old daughter, Naja. He mixed drugs and alcohol, not caring "if I woke up or not." Another daughter brought him back from the edge.

"Naja wouldn't want you to do this to yourself," 18-year-old Malaika told him.

"That got through like a blade — zap!" recalled Vereen, 42. "I realized I was still here and I had children and they needed me, and how selfish and arrogant of me to try to end my life. So I chose life."

But choosing life — quitting drugs — was just the beginning of an odyssey that took the entertainer back to his Brooklyn neighborhood and a chance encounter with his homeless, addicted sister, Lucinda Vereen-Batts.

Lucinda was on the doorstep, pregnant and addicted to crack, when Vereen returned a year ago to the house his mother left him when she died in 1984.

"I thought at first she was angry at me for the years that we'd been apart and I looked closer and realized that she was shaking," he said. "I said, 'Come honey, it's time to come home.'

"It was like a message, like the Lord was just bringing all of us together. Then I said, 'That's it. We're going to duke now.' I rolled up my sleeves and got in the fight."

Singer-dancer Ben Vereen takes a look around the Brooklyn, N.Y., streets where he grew up, during a visit last April. He has pledged to make his family's home a place for drug addicts to recover.

AP Laserphoto

Now Lucinda, too, is recovering, and Vereen has pledged to help win back his childhood streets in Bedford-Stuyvesant from drug dealers who had moved into the house that went unattended after his mother died.

The plan drew opposition from neighbors who didn't want recovering addicts on their street, but Vereen wasn't deterred. He is determined to tear down the house and rebuild it for a drug program, although he is uncertain of specifics, such as how many people it could help or what services would be provided.

On a recent visit, he noted that Herkimer Street had changed much in a few decades. Drug dealers had stripped the three-story home of windows, aluminum siding, even its street numbers. Pigeons flew in and out.

"I am stunned," said Vereen, who had lived there from ages 11 to 18 with his two sisters, long before dreams of stardom became reality — a Tony award for his role in "Pippin," acclaim for the TV miniseries "Roots," and standing-room-only performances in Las Vegas.

He stood silently and stared for a long moment. "This is the before. You can get the after pictures in a year or two," he said finally.

"This hasn't discouraged me at all. As a matter of fact, it has encouraged me. When you see that people have to steal the aluminum off of a building to get drugs, you've got to really get angry and get involved."

Within 100 feet was an open lot with abandoned trucks, cars and garbage. Just as someone might point out daffodils or weeds in a lawn, Lucinda described the lot where she had spent the most tragic moments of her last four years.

"That's part of the lot where we'd stay when I was getting high. That's where I found my friend dead. He got crushed stealing parts from under a car. I happened to go through there and found his body up under the car, under the rim where the tires had set on his chest.

"All of us crack users used to come here in this lot. We'd sleep in these," she said, pointing to abandoned vehicles. "They had a lot of homeless out here in the lot. Some still stay out here, still sleep out here in the trucks."

Vereen said he feels blessed that work "kept me camouflaged" and off the streets during his addiction. He began experimenting in the 1960s, when "it was cool to do drugs or smoke marijuana, take acid or things like that."

"If you're going to run with the crowd then you're going to do what the crowd does," he said.

Case Closed.

Is there anyone who has not heard the rumors of "sudden acceleration" and Audi? We doubt it.

What you may not know, however, is that the final chapter has just been written.

Because on July 11, 1989, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration officially completed its investigation and closed the file.

An investigation involving over 20 manufacturers, thousands of pages of test data and various other materials.

Their explanation? Pedal misapplication.

These findings coincide with similar investigations by the governments of Canada and Japan. As well as Audi's own analysis of the "sudden acceleration" incidents.

While there can be no happy ending to such a sad episode, the faith of our loyal owners and dealers has been justified.

Audi has been vindicated. Case closed.
