Sadat Calls Khomeini 'Insult' To God

CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said Tuesday Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini is aspiring to play God in Iran and his actions are a "crime against Islam, an insult to humanity, an insult to man's honor."

In an interview with Cairo radio and television marking his 61st bithday, Sadat also predicted a "hysterical" Arab reaction when Egypt and Israel establish full diplomatic relations in February.

He said Khomeini "is placing himself in the position of God in the Iranian constitution and is considered by Iranians as infallible."

"But I, as a Moslem, condemn all this and will not hesitate to resist it ... I declare to the whole world that what is happening in Iran is a crime against Islam, an insult to humanity, an insult to man's honor, an insult to every value God wanted to prevail on earth."

The Egyption president, born Christmas Day in 1918 in the Nile delta village of Mit Abul Kom, criticized other Moslem leaders for remaining silent while "the ugliest crimes are being committed in the name of Islam."

Sadat specifically lambasted Saudi Arabia for turning a deaf ear when Khomeini accused America of inciting the armed attack on the Grand Mosque in Mecca, "when a Moslem used Islam to deceive other Moslems."

He said the attack was a blow to Saudi Arabia's attempt to occupy a position of leadership in the Arab world.

Sadat described Khomeini as a man "motivated by grudge, hatred and a lust for vengeance. In the name of Islam, he is inciting Moslems to hit America. But are these the injunctions of Islam? Islam bids us to be good, loving, truthful, cooperative and brotherly."

He said the Arab reaction to the exchange of diplomats in February could take the form of a break in Egyptian-Sudanese relations and possible sanctions against Egypt Air, the national carrier, or against Egyptians working in Arab states.

With the exception of Sudan, Somalia, and Oman, Arab cou es broke off diplotelations with Egypt and suspended financial aid following t sgning of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty last March.

"It is being said that Sudan may break off relations when the Israeli ambassadors arrive in Cairo," Sadat said. "Well, if Sudan wishes to join our hysterical brothers, it is free to do so, but the exchange of ambassadors will take place."

Soviets Reject Plea Not To Veto Iran Sanctions

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union refused a Christmas Eve appeal by U.S. Ambassador Thomas Watson to promise they would not veto U.N. Security Council sanctions against Iran, diplomatic sources said Tuesday.

Watson requested and received a meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko Monday night, and diplomats in Moscow said he asked for a promise that Moscow would not exercise its veto when the motion came up for a vote.

Gromyko, however, refused to make any promises and the sources said the Carter administration was still not sure if the motion to clamp economic sanctions on Iran would pass the Security Council.

A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Moscow refused to confirm the topic of Watson's conversation with Gromyko except to say it involved "matters of mutual interest to both countries."

At President Carter's retreat in Camp David, Md., news secretary Jody Powell said the United States was uncertain of the Soviet reaction to the sanctions motion, which is intended to bring pressure on Iran to free the American hostages held in Tehran.

"The American message was very clear, but the Russian response was not," said a diplomat, who asked not to be named.

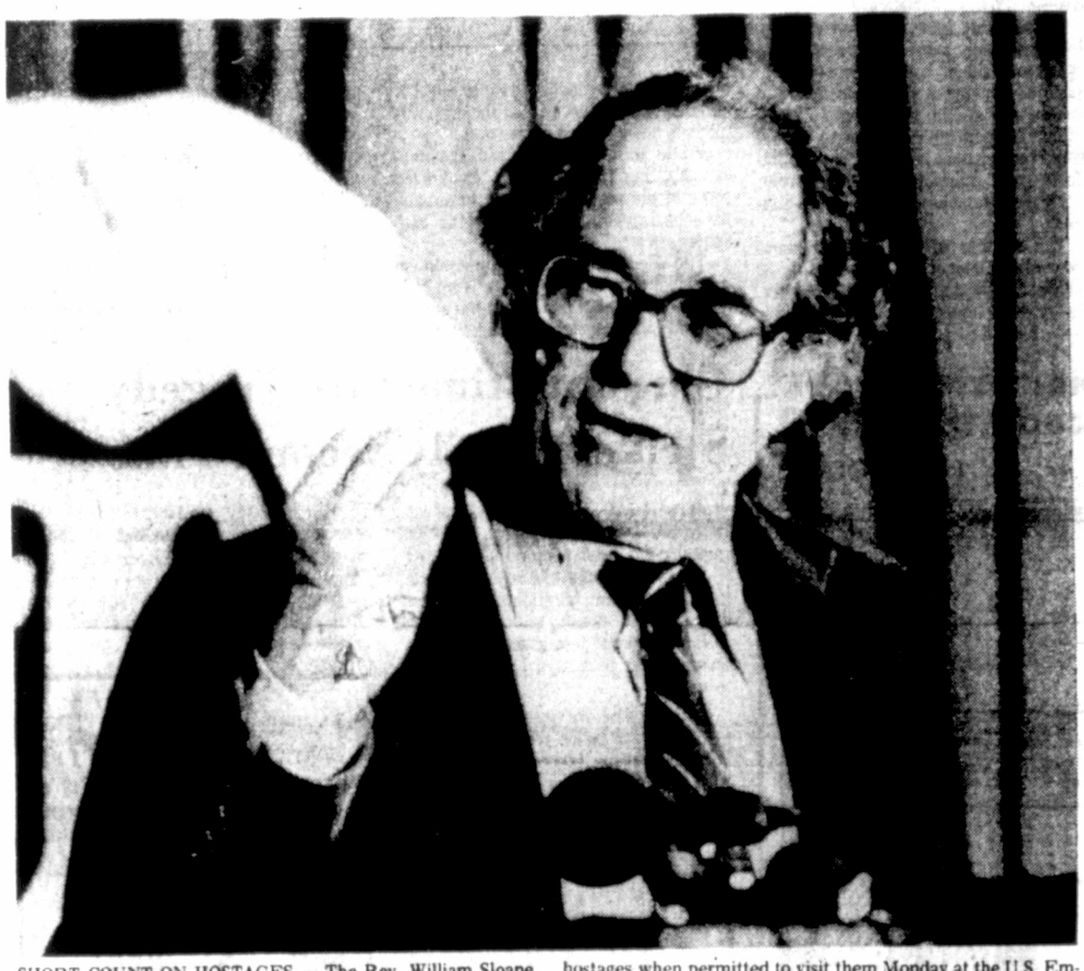

The same source said other Western diplomats had approached Soviet officials to gauge their reaction to the U.N. measure under consideration.

"They apparently received the same noncommittal replies," the diplomat said.

In November, there were reports that the United States had asked the Kremlin — through diplomatic channels — to request the assistance of Yasser Arafat, the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to win the hostages release.

The efforts failed.

Clergy Counts Only 43 Hostages

SHORT COUNT ON HOSTAGES — The Rev. William Sloane Coffin of Riversdide Church in New York City, gestures at a Tehran news conference Tuesday at the Intercontinental Hotel. The Rev. Coffin and his colleagues, the Rev. Thomas J. Gumbleton and the Rev. William Howard agreed they only saw 43 hostages when permitted to visit them Monday at the U.S. Embassy, although the U.S. State Department claims there are 50. The militants claim the clerics saw all the hostages. (AP Laserphoto)

Discrepancy In Number Unexplained

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — A mystery developed on Christmas Day over how many American hostages are in the occupied U.S. Embassy. Clergymen allowed inside counted 43 while the State Department and militant Iranian captors say there are 50.

Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh dashed hopes that had arisen for a Christmas-time release of some of the Americans, held prisoners in the embassy since Nov. 4.

Three American clergymen who paid a tearful five-hour Christmas visit to the hostages could not explain the discrepancy in the number of hostages. The Revs. William Sloane Coffin, Thomas Gumbleton and William Howard said they were permitted to meet with the captives in small, separate groups in different rooms and counted only 43.

Hands Not Tied

They said the rooms were decorated, cookies were served and the hostages' hands were not tied as earlier visitors had reported.

"Many were interested in the outcome of the National Football League," said Howard, the only black minister in the group and a Baptist from Princeton, N.J. "They were quite surprised to know that Tampa Bay was in the running."

Iran's Moslem leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, had invited the American clerics to make a Christmas visit and said priority should be given blacks because they were familiar with oppression. Howard is president of the National Council of Churches.

"Wept Together"

Gumbleton, auxiliary Roman Catholic bishop of Detroit, told reporters at a crowded joint news conference, "We shared in the Eucharist. We also wept together, because it was a very hard experience for them and for me."

The only two women hostages, Elizabeth Ann Swift, 39, of Washington, and Kathryn Koob, 41, of Jessup, Iowa, were in one of the groups that met with Gumbleton and he said they were "in good spirits."

Coffin, of New York's interdenominational Riveside Church, said of his meetings, "There were tears in their eyes, there were tears in our eyes."

Ship Grounded; 110 Rescued

By The Associated Press

A SWEDISH cruise ship hired by a Japanese company to make a science fiction film in Antarctica ran aground on submerged rocks or ice and dozens of passengers were rescued Tuesday by the Chilean navy.

Operators of the vessel, the Lindblad Explorer, said the only American aboard was actor Chuck Conners and he was among those rescued. They said the accident occurred Monday and the captain and 18 crew members remained aboard to make repairs.

Navy spokesmen in Santiago, Chile, said a helicopter joined the evacuation effort as 85 men and 25 women, most of them Japanese members of the movie's cast and film crew, were taken off the Explorer. They said there were no injuries and the rescue was carried out in "unusually fine weather" for the frigid Antactic.

Most of those rescued were taken aboard the Chilean navy's Piloto Pardo, which arrived at the scene around noon Christmas Day. Officials said about 34 crew members were flown to Argentina's Almirante Brown Antarctic base to stand by.

In New York, a spokesman for Lindblad Travel Co., which operates the vessel, said there were about 130 persons aboard when the ship "hit something" at about midday Monday. Half the people aboard were Explorer staff members and crew, he said, and the passengers were associated with Kadakowa Productions, the Japanese firm making the movie "Virus."

The spokesman said Connors, known for his "Rifleman" television series in the 1950s and 60s, was the only American aboard.

"Aground On Cliff"

Lars Cederqvist, a spokesman in Stockholm for the Swedish Brostroem Line that owns the Explorer, said the ship "ran aground on a cliff which was not in the nautical chart for the area."

The Lindblad spokesman said, however, that the vessel was not "beached." He said it ran against a submerged object and was floating while repairs were underway.

Cederqvist said there was no water leaking into the engine room, but the propeller shaft was flooded and the Explorer could not move under its own power. He said scuba divers in the ship's crew had investigated and water was leaking into the vessel in different locations. The Explorer was listing five degrees, he said, "which is almost negligible."

Chilean ships are standing by and a Norwegian tug and Soviet tug are en route to the scene, Cederqvist told Swedish reporters.

Passengers Calm

The Lindblad spokesman said the passengers remained calm after the accident and decided to celebrate Christmas Eve on board and be removed Christmas Day. He said only the outside wall of the 240-foot Explorer had been damaged.

The Explorer's position was given as 10 miles north of Paradise Bay in the Palmer Peninsula — about 150 miles away from America's Palmer Coast Guard station in Grahamland, Antarctica.

Lindblad's spokesman said the film crew went aboard Dec. 16 in Punta Are

One Killed, Two Hurt In Hit-And-Run

HOBBS, N.M. (Special) — State police here are investigating a hit-and-run incident that claimed the life of a Denver City man and injured two others Monday night.

Florencio Sotelo, 23, of Denver City, was killed in the parking lot of a local nightspot when an unidentified motorist ran over him twice, police said. He was pronounced dead at the scene by medical investigator Paul Mallory.

Two other men reportedly were injured, but their names and the extent of their injuries were not known late Tuesday.

Police said the incident occurred shortly before 10 p.m. (MST) in the parking lot of the club. The motorist reportedly drove out of the parking lot, circled back into the lot and hit the three men who were standing near a 1979 Ford pickup.

Sotelo was knocked to the ground and run over by the vehicle, which then backed up, running over the man again, police said. The driver continued to back in a "wide circle," and then fled the scene, according to police reports.

A spokeswoman said police do not have a description of the vehicle involved and have no idea about a possible motive in the incident.

Services for Sotelo were pending Tuesday night with Petterson-Roberts Funeral Home here.

Post Shootout Wounds Pair

POST (Special) — A Christmas Eve shootout here has left two local men in a Lubbock hospital and a third in the custody of the Garza County Sheriff's Office.

Pablo Soto, 34, of Post has been charged with aggravated assault in connection with a shooting incident that occurred about 8 p.m. Monday at a local nightspot.

Wounded were Antonio Sotelo, 50, and Lucio Rodriguez, 46, both of Post, according to Chief Deputy Donney Walker.

Sotelo was listed in satisfactory condition Tuesday at Lubbock's University Hospital with wounds in the chest, head and lower back. Rodriguez also was listed in satisfactory condition with a gunshot wound in the left knee.

Walker said two men armed with small-caliber pistols began shooting at each other at the club. Sotelo was also "pistol whipped," Walker said.

SHIP OVERTURNS

PRINCE RUPERT, British Columbia (AP) — Foul weather and darkness Tuesday forced suspension of a search for survivors from a ship which overturned in stormy seas off the northern coast of British Columbia, Canadian rescue officials said. Four hours after a radioed SOS from the 741-foot Japanese ore carrier Lee Wang Zin at 9:25 a.m. Tuesday, it was sighted — afloat but upside down — in an area known as Dixon Entrance, about 45 miles west of Prince Rupert.

Yule Traffic Deaths Surpass Prediction

A-J News Services

THE HOLIDAY death toll on the nation's highways surpassed the National Safety Council's predicted level even before Tuesday night, when most Christmas travelers returned home.

The council has predicted that between 450 and 550 persons would lose their lives on U.S. highways during the Christmas holiday period.

By Tuesday evening, 611 persons had been killed in traffic mishaps around the nation. The holiday period began at 6 p.m. local time Friday and ended at midnight Tuesday.

Those returning home from Christmas dinners and celebrations were finding hazardous driving or spot fuel shortages at the close of the long holiday weekend.

California led the fatality count with 66, followed by Texas with 47, Ohio 31, Florida 31, North Carolina 26, Illinois 23, Kansas 22, Pennsylvania 21 and Indiana and Georgia with 20 each.

(Death Toll Mounts On Texas Highways, Page 2, Sec. A)

No traffic deaths were reported in Alaska, North Dakota, Rhode Island, Washington state and the District of Columbia.

Last year, 456 persons died in traffic mishaps during a three-day Christmas weekend.

Inclement weather and drinking drivers posed the greatest threat to holiday drivers, the council said.

The worst single accident reported during the weekend involved a car with six passengers returning from a Christmas party.

Police said the vehicle smashed into the side of a freight train in heavy fog in Augusta, Kan., Saturday night. Five of the occupants were killed and a sixth was critically injured.

Last-minute Christmas shoppers added to the number of vehicles on the road in many areas and less than ideal weather hampered holiday travel.

A blizzard closed roads in much of California's Sierra Nevada and heavy fog, drizzle and rain cut visibilities through a wide area of the Upper Midwest and Great Lakes.

Sixteen Illinois traffic deaths had occurred in the Chicago area, where gasoline supplies have been tight because of a tanker truck-drivers' strike and a rapid transit walkout last week. Some panic buying was reported during the weekend and most service stations were closed.

Salvation Army Robbed; Aided Man Suspected

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — Salvation Army Lt. Cal Prouty is having a little trouble turning the other cheek.

It is not that Prouty was personally robbed by the young man whom he aided with food, clothing, a place to sleep and $10 to get a haircut so he could find a job.

It is what the man did do to others the Army traditionally aids at Christmas and to the Army's volunteers.

Prouty's bitter Christmas story began late last week when a man in his early 20s came to the Salvation Army seeking help.

"He had nothing — no money and no place to stay," Prouty said. "We got him emergency housing and clothes. I even gave him $10 from my own pocket so he could get a haircut and go out and look for a job."

On Friday afternoon Prouty was told one of the Army people ringing bells to collect funds for the needy had run into a little trouble, and he went to help.

While he was gone, thieves broke a window in the chapel and "went straight to the Christmas kettles" — the familiar black pots in which the Army collects its holiday donations.

"They knew just what they were looking for," Vancouver Police Detective Gil Eiler said.

Missing was $400 in cash. Nine of the kettles were smashed so they could not be used during the final days before Christmas.

"We figure we lost between $1,000 and $1,500 because those kettles were destroyed," Prouty said. "He stole not only from the Army but from the hard work and freezing bodies of those good people we have had working the streets these last few weeks.

"We were having a good Christmas until we heard about this. It just knocks the slats from underneath us."

Police were still looking for the young man Christmas Day but Prouty said his street sources told him the youth lft town with the money.

"It really wrecked my Christmas for me," Prouty said. "I'd gone the extra mile with this fellow — clothed and housed him and he turns on me like this. It's very disappointing."

Food, Fuel Dominate Lives Of Consumers In 1979

NEW YORK (AP) — Food and fuel dominated the lives — and the budgets — of American consumers in 1979, a year with what was expected to be the worst inflation rate in more than three decades.

The year started with rising prices and tight supplies of fuel because of troubles in Iran. It ended the same way.

Gasoline went over $1 a gallon in many places. Hamburger often topped $2 a pound. Americans learned to think in terms of alternatives: walk instead of drive, eat chicken instead of beef.

During the spring and early summer, the long gasoline lines brought suggestions that we swap "food for crude." The suggestions drew popular support, but officials were quick to point out that they wouldn't work: the United States needs Arab oil more than the Arab countries need American wheat.

As the year progressed, the focus of complaints shifted from gasoline to heating oil. Prices, particularly in northeastern states that rely heavily on oil for heat, were double last year's levels. Several states took emergency steps to make extra funds available so that elderly people on fixed incomes and other lower-income consumers would not be faced with the choice of eating or heating.

President Carter repeatedly blamed the actions of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries for a large part of the increase in the Consumer Price Index.

During the first nine months of the year, consumer prices increased at an annual rate of 13.2 percent and officials said there was little chance of any major change before the end of the year. A 13.2-percent boost in the Consumer Price Index would be the worst inflation rate since 1946 when the government lifted wartime controls and prices jumped 18.2 percent.

Food prices increased sharply during the first months of the year, boosted mainly by higher prices for beef. The rise in beef prices started in 1978, reflecting a decrease in the supply of cattle. According to figures compiled bythe American Meat Institute, the price of a pound of choice, ground beef went from an average of 81 cepts in 1977 to $1.11 in 1978 to $1.55 in October 1979.

Cattlemen, encouraged by rising prices being paid for their animals and by an abundant grain supply that means less expensive feed, are enlarging their herds. But it will be another year before the increased number of cattle turns into an increased number of steaks, roasts, etc.

The 1979 rise in meat prices slowed at about midyear. Increased supplies of pork meant lower prices for bacon, chops and hams and took some of the upward pressure off meat prices. But the government and the food industry disagreed over whether price drops at the farm level were being passed along to consumers.

By fall, food prices were going up again. There was a nine-tenths of a percent increase in the food component of the Consumer Price Index in September and a seven-tenths of a percent boost in October.

The Agriculture Department — which originally predicted that food prices in 1979 would increase an average of 6 percent to 10 percent — was forced to revise its figures repeatedly as a result of the higher-than-expected rise in the overall rate of inflation.

The actual increase in food prices for the year was estimated at about 11 percent — the worst since 14.5 percent increases in both 1973 and 1974.

Looking ahead to 1980, the Agriculture Department told shoppers they could again expect a food-price increase of up to 11 percent. The USDA economists said increases in the cost of labor and energy — used in everything from packaging to transportation — would be to blame for much of the rise.

All the price increases meant that Americans were making less money — in real terms — even when they were earning more.

The Commerce Department said that personal, pre-tax income went up eight-tenths of a percent in October, for example. But the Consumer Price Index in the same month went up 1 percent.

If they weren't worrying about eating, driving and keeping warm in 1979, consumers worried about finding a place to live — and finding a mortgage.

Government agencies, in an effort to slow inflation, boosted interest rates, trying to make it harder for people to spend by making it harder for them to borrow money. In some states, usury ceilings limited interest rates to a level where lenders said it just wasn't profitable to grant mortgages. In other areas, mortgage rates climbed to over 13 percent.

The number of new housing starts dropped in October to a level nearly 20 percent below the figure a year earlier. The price of homes sold during October also declined — down 7 percent from September to a median price of $61,900. Officials said, however, that the drop was likely to be only a temporary one.

While inflation challenged the consumer's budget, Congress challenged some of the regulators who traditionally have portrayed themselves as the consumer's protectors.

The Federal Trade Commission in particular came under attack from lawmakers who said it had grown too powerful and was interfering in areas better left to local authorities.

Separate bills making their way through the House and Senate as the end of the year approached put strict limits on FTC powers. oone provision would allow either chamber of Congress to kill any FTC Regulation over any industry. Among other suggested restrictions: a prohibition of FTC regulation of television advertising directed at children, a ban on proposed FTC rules concerned used car sales and a narrowing of the commission's antitrust authority.

President Carter, meanwhile, ordered 30 federal departments and agencies to upgrade their consumer programs and to come up with draft plans on how to accomplish the upgrading. The draft plans were published in the Federal Register early in December — along with questionnaires to allow consumers to give their response to the ideas.

If the earth's temperature heated up by only a few degrees and remained at that temperature, the ice of Antarctica and Greenland would melt and the sea level would rise nearly 200 feet. Coastal lands would be under water and the sites of many of the world's cities would be under the sea.

Consumer Movement Grows In 1970s

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

The American consumer movement grew up in the 1970s.

There were victories. New laws on everything from air fares to warranties. The establishment of the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the growth of citizens groups like the Consumer Federation of America.

There were defeats. Consumer activists were unsuccessful in repeated attempts to get Congress to establish a cabinet-level Office of Consumer Affairs. As the decade ended, the Federal Trade Commission was under attack for over-protecting the public, for over-regulating our life.

A 1978 report, "Consumer Protection: Gains and Setbacks," published by Congressional Quarterly Inc., summed up the situation like this:

"Perhaps the most significant achievement of the consumer movement has been an attitudinal change in the public. People are more aware of their consumer rights, more willing to complain about shoddy goods and services and more careful about where and what they buy in the first place."

When beef prices soared in 1973 and coffee prices topped $4 a pound in 1976, consumers organized boycotts. Shoppers also formed ood cooperatives and turned to warehouse stores and no-frills products to cut grocery bills.

Comparative shopping became easier during the 1970s. Supreme Court rulings and actions by the Federal Trade Commission paved the way for advertising by lawyers and other professionals. The Truth-in-Lending law required lenders to tell borrowers exactly how much they would have to pay for credit.

It has been almost 20 years since, during the 1960 campaign for the White House, John F. Kennedy promised to name a presidental adviser on consumer affairs. Kennedy's promise was fulfilled by his successor, Lyndon B. Johnson.

The woman Johnson named to the post — Esther Peterson — is back in the job today, rappointed by President Carter. Many of the early volunteers of the consumer movement also are in the government — former Ralph Nader associate Joan Claybrook in the Department of Transportation, former Consumer Federation of America hed Carol Foreman in the Department of Ariculture.

Nader himself was the focus of few arguments. Critics claimed that his organiztion had grown to be just as bureaucratic as the bureaucracy he challenged. some said he did more harm to the consumer movement than good and they cited his unsuccessful lobbying on behalf of an independent consumer protection agency.

The 1970s saw an expansion of cosumer activities within industry. A 1974 study of 149 major U.S. companies by the Conference Board, a nonprofit research organization, showed that all of them had full-time consumer affairs departments, all of them formed in the preceding six years. The Society of Professional Consumer Affairs Professionals, a Washington-based group comprised mainly of people employed in consumer affairs posts by businesses, had less than 100 members when it was founded in 1973; today, it has more than 700.

In a recent interview, Colston E. Warne, who is retiring as president of Consumers Union, the nonprofit testing agency, said that over the years that culminated in the 1970s, "There has been a measurable improvement in legislation and in the functioning of federal protective agenies. ... There has been a steady improvement in the identification of consumer problems."

The past 10 years has brought a host of recalls, voluntary and mandatory. Automobiles were recalled by the millions. The Ford Motor Co. was taken to court over the Pinto and Firestone faced multi-million dollar lawsuits in connection with its "500" radial tire. Toll-free telephone numbers were set up to provide information on potential defects in everything from coffee pots to hair dryers.

Warne said the 1980s will bring some changes. "The composition of the American living standard has altered," he said. "We're moving far more towards services and away fom physical goods. More of your dollar goes for individual services, medical services and what have you." The emphasis in the area of consumer protection, Warne said, will have to change from products to services.

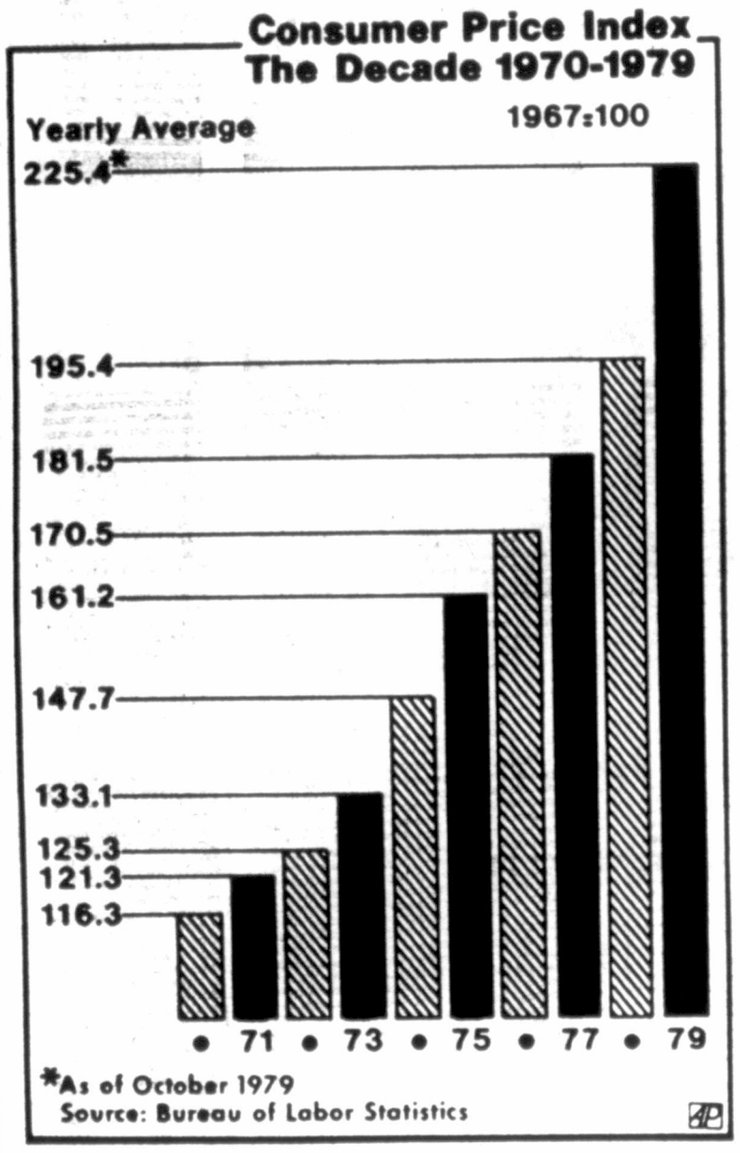

Consumers already have a wealth of information. Complaint guides, how-to books and publications telling you how to get the most for your money appear regularly on the best-seller list.

The Consumer Information Center was established by presidential order in 1970 to distribute federal publications. By the late 1970s, the center was distributing more than 25 million booklets, pamphlets, etc. a year, many of them free.

Another major federal effort of the past decade came with the creation in 1973 of the Consumer Product Safey Commission. Congress directed the agency to: Protect the public gainst unreasonable risks of injury associated with consumer products, help consumers evalute the comparative safety of products, and develop uniform safety standards for consumer products. Legislation passed in 1976 expande the commission's authority to give it the power to issue preliminary injunctions, prohibiting distribution of potentially hazardous products.

In its first three years of operation alone, the commission recalled more than 20 million allegedly unsafe items, but it has been criticized for not moving fast enough, particularly in the area of hazards posed by asbestos, and for wasting time and money developing standards for non-essential items like swimming pool slides.

The Federal Trade Commission, meanwhile, was criticized for doing too much and legislation was introduced in poposals to allow either the Senate or th House of Representatives to veto FTC rules before they become final and to restict the the agency's power in the area of unfair advertising.

Christmastime Fire Tragedy Strikes Family Second Time

MIAMI (AP) — For the second year in a row, fire spoiled Christmas for Miamipolice Sgt. Juan Santos and his family.

"Something like this is just bizarre," said Dade County firefighter Ed Baum, who helped douse both blazes and worked with the family to rescue sooty, water-soaked presents from a blackened tree.

Two days before Christmas 1978, Santos, a six-year police veteran, was badly burned and the home he had worked hard to build was badly damaged in an accidental gasoline explosion.

This year, on christmas Eve, a pan of hot grease ignited and the home, still being repaired, suffered even more damage.

"They were just recovering from last year and not having a Christmas," said Baum. "This year it was worse."

Baum said Santos "was pretty depressed." The family planned to spend the rest of the holidays with relatives.

Officials said last year's fire started as Santos was cleaning a new tile floor with gasoline. A spark from an electric buffer ignited the fumes. Santos was blown out a window and suffered burns over 40 percent of his body.

At the time, he had been working on his dream house — officials valued it at $250,000 — for more than a year. It was another six months before the family could move in.

This year's blaze caused an estimated $105,000 in damage, firefighters said.

Fire Lt. Charles Grana said the blaze this time occurred after Santos' wife, Zeida, 29, was distracted by a telephone call while preparing a Christmas Eve lunch for the couple's 7-year-old son. The grease ignited and she ran next door for help.

Neighbor William Rullman called the fire department, tried to fight the blaze with a garden hose, but intense heat and smoke forced him back.

Firemen said Santos was still wearing bandages on last year's burns when the house burned this year.

The first vaccination took place May 14, 1796, when Edward Jenner, an English doctor, drew off fluid from a blister on the hand of a milkmaid who had acquired cowpox from a diseased cow. He inoculated a healthy boy with the fluid which was given the name vaca, a Latin word for cow. This was the beginning of the prevention of smallpox by vaccination.

Wild Storm Advances Inland After Ravaging Pacific Coast

By TOM GILLEM
Associated Press Writer

A wild storm that ravaged the Pacific Coast moved inland Tuesday, leaving behind dead and missing, highways closed, 4,000 people without heat or electricity.

One man froze to death when his vehicle became stuck in a snow drift and another was killed when his four-wheel-drive vehicle skidded down an icy embankment.

Several others were missing in weather-related accidents, including five at sea and two men in a single-engine plane who tried to make an emergency landing in strong winds and rains.

In the mountains, snow continued to fall Christmas Day, and one ski lodge operator reported seven feet in two days and slope conditions changed from poor to excellent overnight.

"It's still snowing like hell," said California Highway Patrol dispatcher Mel Bren, stationed at Truckee near 7,200-foot Donner Summit.

"Donner is real bad," Bren said of Interstate 80, the main east-west route, which was closed for 40 miles Tuesday morning. "They've been working all night on it and probably will be working the next two days."

Fritz Draeger, information officer for Pacific Gas & Electic, said service had been restored to all but about 4,000 of the 400,000 Californians who were without electric power during the height of the storm, which slammed into the coast on Sunday with hurricane-force winds.

"One of the big problems was that a lot of our crews were off for the holidays," Draeger said. "We had to recall some of them, and we drew crews from other parts of the state."

Most of the remaining blacked-out customers were in the Santa Cruz Mountains, where 2,600 were powerless, Draeger said. Others were in Monterey County and along the coast in the Pebble Beach and rugged Big Sur areas.

A lightning storm in the Santa Cruz Mountains about 3 a.m. Tuesday knocked out additional transformers, he said.

Placer County sheriff's deputies said Jerry Alan Garcia, 32, of Foresthill, Calif., was found dead from exposure Monday night after he tried to hike to safety when his vehicle slid off a road in a rugged area about 19 miles east of his home.

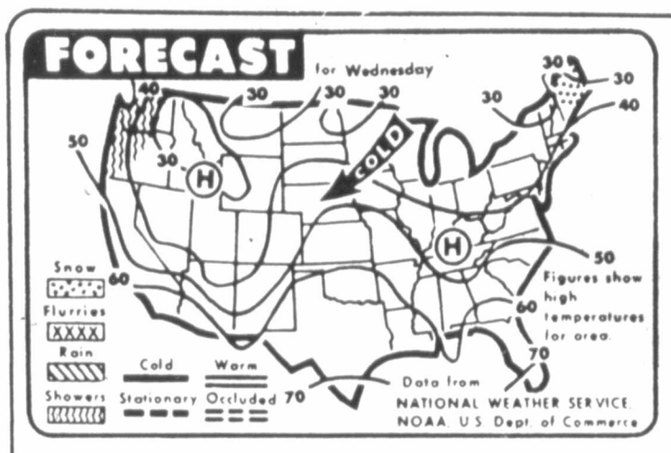

The Civil Air Patrol was searching near the Mendocino-Sonoma county line for the missing plane, which was diverted from an emergency landing at Cloverdale on Sunday because of the weather. The plane disappeared from radar screens while trying to land on a highway.

Cleanup efforts continued in the coastal areas in California, Oregon and Washington, where dozens of boats were damaged by high wind and tides during the storm's furry.

In San Francisco, ambulance services were seriously hampered Monday when rain flooded telephone cables, cutting off all but makeshift communications using an old switchboard for about eight hours.

CALM AFTER STORM — Three of 14 boats ripped from their moorings are aground on the sand and rock beach of Pillar Point 25 miles south of San Francisco Tuesday following a wild Pacific storm Sunday. These boats are all larger than 30 feet in length. Another six boats were sunk by heavy surf and high winds. (AP Laserphoto)

Much Of Nation Has Warm Christmas

By The Associated Press

Christmas Day in the East saw intermittent rain and warm temperatures, while a storm that roared inland from the Pacific dumped heavy snow in California's northern mountains.

There was rain at least intermittently Tuesday in the north Atlantic Coast and in the Tennessee and Ohio valleys.

New York had an unseasonably warm 61 degrees, the city's second-warmest recorded Christmas, and rain washed away what little trace remained of week-old snow.

A chinook wind in parts of California sent the temperature from 11 degrees to 39 in just half an hour and complicated travel by drifting snow.

Temperature extremes at 1 p.m. CST were 18 degrees at International Falls, Minn., and 75 at Miami, Fla.

Scattered showers were forecast today from the Virginia coast to New England and widely scattered rain and snow showers were expected from Arizona through the southern half of the Rockies.

Fog was forecast over parts of the Pacific Northwest, with cloudy skies over parts of the upper Midwest and sunny skies in most remaining areas.

Warm temperatures were forecast in south-central Texas, California, and from the southern half of the plains to the southern Atlantic Coast. Highs only in the 30s were predicted for the northern fringe of the nation.

Here is Tuesday afternoon weather in selected cities:

East: Boston 55 windy, Buffalo 38 rain, Caribou 34 snow, Charleston 51 cloudy, Cincinnati 37 cloudy, Cleveland 34 rain, Detroit 35 windy, Indianapolis 38 cloudy, Knoxville 41 cloudy, Miami 75 fair, Nashville 40 windy, New York 49 fair, Philadelphia 55 partly cloudy, Pittsburgh 36 cloudy, Richmond 53 cloudy, Washington 56 partly cloudy.

Central: Bismarck 24 snow, Chicago 37 windy, Denver 47 partly cloudy, Des Moines 29 foggy, Fort Worth 63 fair, Kansas City 32 hazy, Minneapolis-St. Paul 28 cloudy, New Orleans 61 fair, St. Louis 34 windy.

West: Los Angeles 59 partly cloudy, Phoenix 62 cloudy, Salt Lake City 47 partly cloudy, Seattle 44 partly cloudy.

Canada: Montreal 36 rain, Toronto 34 rain.

Weather Could Create Some Holiday Confusion

South Plains residents peering out their windows in search of a clue as to what holiday the world celebrated Tuesday most likely would have though it was the Fourth of July or at least Memorial Day. The 73-degree high recorded in Lubbock certainly would have fooled anyone looking for a hint of Christmas.

Wintry weather is expected to knock some of the punch out of the warm wave, though. A cold front should move into the South Plains late tonight, dropping some much needed snow across the New Mexico mountains and carrying a 20 percent chance for rain mixed with snow into the northern parts of the area.

Today's high should be about 65 degrees, warm enough for parents and children to play outside with their newly received gifts, before the front moves in.

Thursday is expected to be even cooler across the area, with high temperatures rising into the 50s during the afternoon, providing some weather appropriate for showing off those new Christmas sweaters and coats.

ERSATZ SNOW — The San Diego area has seen real snow only twice in the past 105 years, so Sea World Park annually produces its own Snow World for youngsters. This lad was part of an opening day activity in which handicapped children are invited to cavort in the chilly stuff. (AP Laserphoto)

Christmas Day Accidents Up Death Toll

By The Associated Press

More fatal accidents involving pedestrians and one-car turnovers sent the death toll from Texas traffic accidents higher as the Texas Department of Public Safety put more officers on the highways for Christmas Day, one of the most hazardous driving days of the year.

At least 46 persons had died in Texas traffic accidents in the 3½ days leading into Christmas Day, and, the DPS said, "That's on a parallel course" with earlier projections the total would hit 67 by midnight on Christmas.

Isabel Guel, 20, of Manvel was killed Christmas morning in an car-train accident about 2½ miles west of the Brazoria County community.

A 22-year-old Ector woman, Linda D. Smith, died early Tuesday when her car ran off the road about six miles north of Bonham.

A 55-year-old Lufkin man, Robert E. Jones, was killed Monday afternoon in a three-vehicle and pedestrian accident on U.S. 59, three miles south of Lufkin.

Marcelino Miranda, 54, of Lovington, N.M., was struck by a car Monday night on Texas 83, nine miles west of Denver City.

A 28-year-old Odessa man, David Allen Rose, was killed early Monday night when his motorcycle was hit by a car inside the Odessa city limits.

Percey James Lane, 23, of Waskom was killed shortly before midnight on Christmas Eve when his vehicle ran off Farm Market 134 and smashed into a tree four miles north of Jonesville in East Texas.

A 21-year-old Talco man, identified as Jimmy Wayne McGee, was killed at 6 p.m. Monday when his vehicle ran off Farm Market 1402 a mile north of Mount Pleasant.

Scattered Violence Erupts In Turkey

ANKARA, Turkey (UPI) — Scattered violence in Turkey's two major cities Tuesday killed two people and raised to 11 the death toll in two days of left wing demonstrations.

Police said they had arrested 4,850 people in Ankara and Istanbul since the violence began early Monday.

A member of the provincial executive of the right-wing National Movement Party was killed Tuesday in Ankara and a man was killed in Istanbul when his shop was bombed and sprayed with bullets.

Martial law authorities accused the left-wing Turkish Teachers' Association of fomenting the new disturbances and banned it along with another eight teachers' organizations of various political tendencies throughout the country.

At least nine people died in clashes across the country Monday between armed police backed by troops and thousands of left-wing demonstrators.

The trouble began Monday when a series of bombs exploded at youth hostels run by the National Movement Party, which Turkey's left-wingers consider fascist.

Thousands of left-wing demonstrators then took to the streets to mark the anniversary of bloody riots in eastern Turkey a year ago that forced the government to impose martial law in 19 provinces.

A New Hope For Portuguese

THE RECENT Portuguese elections in which the nation took a definite swing to the right passed hardly without notice.

But, while the small but key Western European nation still has its problems, the result of the voting was one more sign that things aren't bad everywhere.

In the five years since young military officers seized power in Portugal's "flower revolution," the country has had 11 governments. It now has its 12th and next year, its 13th.

THE ELECTION held just recently was an interim general election. The Portuguese Constitution requires that another one be held in 1980.

The government which has been in power, installed in July, has been headed by Prime Minister Maria de Lurdes Pintassilgo, the first woman ever to hold the post. She is a long-time Roman Catholic feminist who lives in a Lisbon commune with a group of women from Graal, a Catholic lay organization.

In the latest election, voters gave strong support to a coalition called the Democratic Alliance, providing it with the first majority in Parliament since Portugal's revolution.

Francisco Sa Carneiro, 45, the lawyer who leads the alliance said: "Not only have people voted for a change in government, but also for a change in society."

PORTUGAL'S 1976 constitution pledged to aim for a "classless society."

But Sa Caneiro, sounding much like Britain's Margaret Thatcher, said the alliance he heads proposed to open the socialized economy to foreign investment.

Economic issues have long dominated Portugal's politics, for the nation probably is the least affluent in Western Europe.

Real income lags behind inflation and unemployment is high, partially as a result of thousands of refugees who poured into Portugal after its colonies in Africa were lost.

THE COMMUNISTS have made much of the confusion, but even to the surprise of some observers in the U.S., the Portuguese people have managed to keep their heads, keep working in the predominantly agricultural and ocean oriented economy.

However, while the Socialists lost ground it was the Communist Party which gained, taking a record 19 percent share of the vote and 47 seats in the 250-seat Parliament, even making inroads in the conservative north.

While the election results definitely signal an overall turn away from the socialized past, if inflation and unemployment aren't brought under some degree of control, the growing Communist role could become a major headache in the future.

Portugal is one nation the U.S. should not overlook in its efforts to bolster an effort to become more democratic.

Private Capital Best Channel?

SINCE PRESENT U.S. policy fails to guarantee that American dollars will not be used to aid unfriendly, economically unstable countries, new evidence suggests encouraging private investment on a global scale as an alternative.

Most U.S. funds for multilateral development assistance are channeled through the international financial institutions comprising the World Bank Group.

Economist Susan Woodard of The Heritage Foundation in a study released this week writes that the World Bank has become too "bureaucratized," with too little to show for the vast amounts of expended funds.

In fact, the noticeably large increase in spending in the last decade has been accompanied by an increase in the hostility of the recipient, she points out.

INCREASED AID seemingly has led to more vocal criticism and demands for even more aid. Woodard stresses, meanwhile, that there is no indication the U.S. wishes to cease its role in worldwide development efforts.

"On the contrary," she writes, "the U.S. is cognizant of the economic and political importance of the Third World nations, both singly and as a region."

What is needed is a rethinking of commitments to foreign assistance and development efforts.

This involves encouraging private investment, she writes, which will of course "require organization and initiative on the part of the host governments as well as some risks for private ventures."

OBJECTIONS FROM the governments of industrialized nations which provide private capital investments undoubtedly will be heard as the (lesser developed countries') markets develop.

However, Woodard believes the private capital markets should be given an opportunity to prove their effectiveness and economic efficiency as a viable alternative to existing public development efforts.

"What is being challenged, or rather sought, is the most effective means through which U.S. aid resources can be channeled," writes Woodard, "to guarantee their optimal economic utilization."

While complete depoliticization of public aid is not probable, we might be better off directing our humanitarian efforts bilaterally. Our continued participation in multilateral institutions such as the Third World Group is not worth the price we pay in terms of sacrificed political principles.

ART BUCHWALD:

Experts Not Perplexed By The Decline Of S--

WASHINGTON—"Sexual anorexia," the loss of sexual desire, according to people who keep up on such things, is becoming commonplace in American society.

Apparently it is more prevalent in men than women. There are as many theories as to what causes it as there are sexual therapists.

One therapist blames it on Monday Night Football, which is now also shown on Thursdays and sometimes on Saturday nights.

"You can't expect someone who has listened to Howard Cosell for three hours to have a very strong sex drive," one therapist told me.

"What worries all the people who deal with sexual dysfunctions is that more and more sports programs are being put on the air during prime time, and more men are complaining of headaches when they're ready to go to bed."

A WOMAN sex therapist considers the new computer games a contributing factor towards sexual anorexia.

She said, "You can play practically any game from backgammon to tennis on a toy computer now, and I find most of my male patients are happier trying to outwit a stupid machine than indulging in the pleasures of the flesh.

"Recently I tried an experiment in my lab. I had a beautiful girl in a black silk negligee sitting on the bed. Across the room on a card table was a Simon Says computer game—the one that lights up in different colors and makes a lot of noise.

"Four of my five patients immediately went to the Simon Says computer and started to push the buttons.

"Well," I said, "at least the fifth person was healthy."

A small boy's father explained why people tap glasses before drinking a toast: "You can see the contents of the glass, you can feel the contents, you can smell it, you can taste it, but you cannot hear it—so you tap glasses to create a sound and thereby all five senses are made manifest!"

If kids don't get everything they want, they're lucky.

"I'M NOT sure. He confessed he was more attracted to the girl than to Simon Says, but that if I had offered him a radio-controlled robot he might have had second thoughts."

"Who would have ever dreamed that computers would replace sex?"

"I guess," she said sadly, "it's whatever turns you on."

Another member of the profession blames the loss of sexual desire on the proliferation of all the sex-oriented magazines.

"I can trace the decline and fall of the male sex drive directly to the increase in the publication of Playboy, Penthouse, Hustler and all the other imitations. Men are reading more about sex and enjoying it less."

"Why is this?"

"THEY FEEL that since they've read about it, they've actually done it. Many men can now fulfill all their fantasies at the newsstands for $2.50, which is much cheaper than paying for someone's taxi fare home."

One therapist (Washington has almost as many as California) told me that as men become more passive in their sexual drives, women become more aggressive.

"I have a lady friend who met a very attractive lawyer, and after a candlelight dinner and a visit to a disco, she said to him, 'Your place or mine?' The lawyer excitedly said, 'Mine,' and they played pinball until five in the morning."

"What's the answer to the problem?"

"Well, we know it isn't perfume," she said, "and it obviously isn't women's lib.

"WE DO know men's sexual appetites dwindle in direct proportion to the professional success of their mates.

"I would say the only answer is to return to a moralistic society where sex is considered forbidden fruit.

"Many of my colleagues will take issue with me, but if we indoctrinate young men with the fact that having a healthy sex life is a sin, they'll be inspired to give up their computer games and come to bed when they are called."

ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK:

Uncle Sam's On Run

EVANS

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia—Behind genuine sympathy for the U.S. in its Iranian agony and public endorsement of President Carter's tactics, there is this consensus among Saudi leaders:

What has happened in Tehran is further evidence that Uncle Sam is on the run, retreating throughout the world.

They view this not with maliciousness but with alarm. This underpopulated, fabulously rich kingdom of incalculable strategic importance is in an anxious mood.

While all Saudis from taxi drivers to princes were stunned when the Grand Mosque in Mecca was attacked by religious fanatics, leaders here also were shaken when their supposedly client state of North Yemen made an arms deal with Moscow.

Those two unwelcome surprises intensify a long-term sense of peril. Outflanked by radical Arab governments now that the shah of Iran is no longer there as a well-armed balancing force, Saudi Arabia approaches a decade when the Soviet Union will become a net energy importer and will be casting eyes on Saudi oil.

The strength and will of Washington, therefore, are vital to Riyadh. That in turn leads to ambivalence here over Carter's management of the Iranian crisis.

Except for dismay over freezing Iran's assets, there is no criticism of specific U.S. decisions. Rather, Saudis are relieved that precipitous military action did not inflame all of Islam against their American friends.

THE AMBIVALENCE is expressed quietly in apprehension over what the Iranian crisis suggests the President might do if this nation's fate were at stake.

We all watch developments in Tehran, one member of the Saudi government's inner circle confided to us. And we wonder whether he (Carter) will act firmly when the time requires it.

The doubt stems from dissatisfaction here with Carter's foreign policy. All Saudi officials begin with the grievance that the President has reneged on his commitment for a Palestinian homeland.

But less publicly, there is a laundry list of complaints (particularly among the Saudi military) about U.S. policies not related to Israel: Angola, Taiwan, the Horn (Cape of Africa)—and, of course, Iran.

Whatever Saudi troubles were with the shah, he is yearned for in comparison with Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini (described privately by one Saudi prince as fanatical, vindictive, senile).

THE OVERRIDING question: Are Khomeini's preachments finding fertile soil in Saudi Arabia?

There is no doubt of the mullahs' impact in the oil-producing Eastern Province, heavy with Shi'ite Moslems attracted to Khomeini's claimed international leadership of the sect.

Recent unpublicized demonstrations there by Shi'ites (some carrying machine pistols) drew a quick response from the National Guard, the Bedouin light infantry brought in to replace the police. The guardsmen opened fire, and some 15 demonstrators died.

This had no direct connection with the attack in Mecca by extremists belonging to the country's Sunnite Moslem majority, except for reflecting the magnetism throughout the region of Islamic fundamentalism, particularly among youth.

THAT THE world's most conservative social system is attacked by militants seeking a return to the 14th century is viewed by the regime as an aberration not likely to be repeated.

Yet, there are two disturbing elements. First, some National Guardsmen, including a few officers, belonged to the Mecca terrorist band.

Second, if the Mecca onslaught took Saudi intelligence by surprise, how can anybody be sure this will not be repeated?

On top of this comes North Yemen's arms deal with Moscow, after earlier this year receiving U.S. arms (at Saudi urging) to cope with aggression by Marxist South Yemen.

Saudi officials made clear to us they cannot tolerate the entire Yemen unified under communist control, whether by conquest or alliance.

WESTERN MILITARY observers believe Saudi troops, particularly National Guard units modernized under U.S. Army guidance, would make short work of the Yemeni.

But a country of only 4.5 to 5 million Saudis (out of a total population of 8 million) has restricted military options. There is not even a contingency for coping with leftist Iraq's huge army.

Prudent use of the Saudi treasury for community development can mollify the Shi'ite minority and certainly prevent a Saudi revolutionary climate on the Iranian model.

But failure of subsidies to develop a steadfast ally in North Yemen points to the limits of even unmeasured wealth. Nor can money satisfy the Russian bear's oil lust in the 1980s.

Only the U.S. alliance can ultimately protect Saudi oil, and that is why Jimmy Carter's performance on Iran is watched with anxiety from Riyadh.

ROBERT WALTERS:

Problems For GOP

WASHINGTON—Although the presidential campaign will be the stellar attraction in the center ring of next year's political circus, the struggle for control of many state legislatures will provide a fascinating sideshow.

The duel between Republicans and Democrats will be a crucial one because the legislators elected next year will be entrusted with the politically sensitive task of reshaping congressional districts for the next decade on the basis of the 1980 census of population.

Although blatant gerrymandering—the construction of geographically distended districts for partisan benefit—has been prohibited by court rulings, the party in control of a legislature still can exercise considerable control over that state's reapportionment process.

The Democrats currently enjoy majorities in both houses of the legislature in 30 states, compared with only 11 states for the Republicans.

Nebraska has a non-partisan unicameral legislature, and control is divided between the two parties in the remaining eight states.

THE REPUBLICANS have targeted more than two dozen legislatures where a shift of relatively few seats might give the GOP the control it seeks—and the party is seeking to raise millions of dollars to finance that effort.

Republican strategists have identified the lower houses of the legislature in Delaware, Illinois and Washington as well as New Hampshire's senate as chambers where they need a switch of only one seat to gain a majority.

Other targeted states include Ohio, Maine, Oregon, Alaska, Montana, New Mexico, Nevada, California, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Missouri and Connecticut.

Although the Democrats lack the money and manpower to mount a similar effort, some observers believe that Republican strength in many legislatures may have peaked last year.

In addition, the GOP could lose the slim margin of control it now holds in some legislatures.

PRESIDENT CARTER has quietly but candidly admitted that he played fast and loose with the facts about military manpower during a 1975 campaign speech before the Communication Workers of America national convention.

To illustrate his criticism of a top-heavy defense establishment, Carter claimed four years ago that the Navy had more admirals than ships and the Air Force had more colonels than planes.

When he appeared before the CWA convention this year, Carter was asked by a union member from Los Angeles if the situation had improved. The President said he didn't have current figures but promised a personal reply later.

Carter followed up with a handwritten note, explaining that there actually are two ships for every admiral in the Navy and 1.8 planes for every colonel in the Air Force.

Although those figures reflect some manpower reductions in recent years, the President said he was wrong in 1975. "The Pentagon states that my (earlier) information was not accurate," he admitted.

JAY HARRIS:

The Hard Lesson...

NOT ONLY is another year approaching its end, another decade is fading into the pages of time.

And instead of the unbridled hoopla that has marked the bowing out of other years and decades, the American people, as well as those abroad, are looking back on the 1970s and forward to the 1980s with mixed emotions.

Never again will the world will be the same...

And for whatever it is worth, the sobering fact is that, for better or worse, America is a land still seeking a sense of where it belongs in a changing world.

If 1980 is the Year of Decision, then many perceive the 1980s as the Decade of Destiny...

IF THOSE YEARS ahead seem somewhat murky to many, perhaps there is good reason.

To understand the future, one must be able to assess clearly the past. History is unrelenting. It always comes home to haunt those who fail to learn its lessons.

The past decade for this nation has been one of more or less "marking time" while much of the rest of the world has been undergoing vast changes.

This last year of the 1970s is a classic example. On balance, it has been a year filled with what many would term "bad news."

Not just unpleasant news, as with the kidnappings in Iran, shocks to the economy and national pride, but the whole equation of the Free World as opposed to those who would enslave it.

FOR MANY, the question which nags at the conscience perhaps the most is: Are we still the world's greatest nation?

With economic and military, legal and political ideas, as well as moral fibers long associated with the ephemeral quality of "greatness" under attack, the question remains, are we today a great nation?

Compared to most other governmental entities, the answer is obvious. Our problems are small compared to those in other lands.

Our modern, industrialized allies, who also are our economic rivals, teeter on the brink of Socialism or worse. Japan and much of Asia depend upon trade with the U.S. to survive.

And Western Europe must know that its freedom and fortune stand on the stilts of American armored divisions, air wings and tactical nuclear weapons, arrayed against a vast sea of Soviet tanks across the barbed wire of Central Europe. Without those American forces, the Iron Curtain might well reach to the English Channel.

FOR THE U.S. and its citizens, these hard facts portend equally hard lessons ahead.

No longer, no matter what the Vietnam War protesters may say, can the U.S. ignore aggressive ambitions of the Soviet Union and its "hired guns" from Cuba or its efforts to impose its policies and preachments on the emerging Third World...

A Third World which has its own ideas of its destiny in the scheme of things, economic, political and most of all religious.

While the wiser men of the OPEC know it is not in the oil cartel's ultimate interest to choke off the lifeblood of the economies of the West, there are those whose hatred transcends reason. To them the oil that brings in the dollars is blood money.

IT IS ODD indeed that the Third World's sheiks and Johnny-come-lately business advisers, educated in the ways of the West, know the import of geo-politics perhaps better than many of their counterparts abroad.

While millions can cite the latest figures on one's favorite pro football team, few until recently knew the import of a small, desolate place called the Strait of Hormuz at the mouth of the Persian Gulf.

While many could go into a week's worry over a dropped pass or blocked punt, few seemed concerned that a few well placed mines or bombs could close off that strait and oil to the West.

Or even more important, few still realize that the U.S. today must rely on foreign sources for nine of the 13 strategic minerals we must have to remain a great nation. Are there to be future boycotts and price piracy from the backward nations, or Soviet Union, who control these scarce minerals vital to U.S. industry and defense?

IT MAY BE, as some argue, that Americans are too hard on themselves...

Compared to the rest of the world, compared to our own past, today "we never had it so good." The worry is "Yes, but for how long?"

The past year, if nothing else, has brought some facts of life on the economic front home to the man in the street. The dollar has deteriorated at home and abroad. The price of gold has soared.

Inflation roars along at 13 percent or more, double what the Carter Administration said it would be. Interest rates, earned and paid, are at undreamed-of levels. How did it all happen? Edward J. Walsh, writing in his Point Of View for the U.S. Industrial Council, put it this way:

"The misguided American policies that precipitated the cataclysmic events of 1979 were not simple mistakes on the world chessboard: too much foreign aid spent here, a bad law there.

"Instead the shocks and setbacks to American interests were the result of a certain predilliction among policymakers that can be called a moral blindness:

A belief that, on on hand, hostile nations can be disarmed by American sweetness and light, and second, that American consumers do not know what is good for them, but lawyers of the federal government can enlighten them...If 1979 was full of tragedy, it was tragedy of philosophy and politics. And a further lesson that naive good intentions and a propensity for self-humiliation are not in the nation interests."

How did it happen? Simple. We let it!

L.M. BOYD:

Pass It On:

Q. WHO WAS that renowned ladies' man of yesteryear who gave each of his female conquests a pair of green gloves?

A. Believe you refer to Teddy Roosevelt's uncle, Robert Barnwell Roosevelt. He was a congressman and the founder of the American conservation movement. Claim is just about everybody in New York knew what the gloves meant except the ladies who wore them.

Many is the backwoods farmer who has set out steel traps to prevent the beavers from damming up the creek. And many is the beaver dam that has incorporated into its remarkable structure a number of those steel traps. That's right, the beavers use them efficiently.

Low-Key Christmas Observances The Rule Across Soviet Union

MOSCOW (UPI) — Roman Catholics and other Christians in the Soviet Union celebrated Christmas unobtrusively with church services and quiet family gatherings.

About 400 people gathered at Moscow's one working Roman Catholic church for a Christmas Eve service in Latin, Polish and Russian.

The official Tass news agency reported Tuesday that Christmas services were held "in all the 630 Catholic churches in Soviet Lithuania," the most strongly Roman Catholic area of the U.S.S.R.

The Russian Orthodox Church, which follows a different calendar, observes Christmas Jan. 7.

Tass also reported Lutheran Archbishop Edgar Hark led a Christmas service at the Dom Cathedral in Tallinn, Estonia.

The Church of St. Louis des Francais, located just off Moscow's Dzerzhinsky Square, home of the KGB security police, was packed to capacity for the 9 p.m. Christmas Eve service.

No cross stands atop the yellow-and-white, columned building, nor is there a sign outside to direct visitors. But even those trudging through the network of narrow streets behind Lubyanka Prison for the first time wre able to fall in with groups of regular worshipers.

The crowd packed the pews and filled the aisles of the ornate, 19th-century church. The pastor, the Rev. Stanislav Majeika, heard confessions in seven languages before the service began, then entered the sacristy and donned his red robes for the solemn high Mass, which he said in Latin.

Representatives of the Russian Orthodox hierarchy, including Metropolitan Yuvenaly of Krutitsky and Kolomna, set in the sanctuary during the mass in a traditional gesture of ecumenical spirit.

A choir sang traditional Christmas hymns in Polish and members of the congregation murmured responses to the Mass prayers in Latin. Diplomats and other foreign residents of Moscow were scattered through the church, but most of the worshipers appeared to be Russians or Poles.

Majeika delivered a homily in both Russian and Polish, reminding his listeners that Christmas was a season of peace in the church.

Throughout Lithuania, Tass reported, priests read a Christmas message of peace from Biship Liudvikas Povilonis. Bishop Julian Vaivod delivered the homily at the cathedral in Riga, capital of Latvia.

"Let us pray for the strengthening of the efforts of our country in its service of peace and justice," Vaivod said, according to Tass.

The Vatican estimates there are about 3.5 million practicing Roman Catholics in the Soviet Union. About 70 percent of those live in Lithuania.

Church Counts More Women At Services

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Worship profil of the 1.8-million-member United Church of Christ shows that more than 60 percent of those attending worship service are women and nearly one-third are over 60.

In addition, the profile, based on a three-year church membership study, showed that about half of those attending worship services in the generally liberal denomination had some college education.

While women outnumber men in all age categories in worship attendance, the absence of male worshippers was especially pronounced among those between the age of 20 and 40 and those over 60, the study said.

Dr. William J. McKinney Jr., secretary for research and evaluation of the church's Board for Homeland Ministries, said the predominance of women in the 60 and older category could be attributed to women's tendency to live longer.

In addition, the study found that the number of worshippers decreases proportionately with lowered age.

Persons in their 50s comprise the next-largest group of worshippers after those in their 60s, the study said, followed by persons in their 40s and on down the line, with teens being the smallest group.

Although 40 percent of the nation's over-15 population is 20 to 39, fewer than one-fourth of the churchgoers surveyed were in that age group. The UCC study also said that black churchgoers among its ranks tended to be largely middle and upper class, with 45 percent holding college degrees and 38 percent employed as professionals.

Other findings of the study:

—Almost 45 percent of the worshippeprs said they were either homemakers or retirees, 19 percent said they were professionals, 18 percent indicated they were in other white-collar jobs, 9 percent were blue-collar workers and 2 percent identified themselvs as farmers.

—Only 3 percent were divorced or separated, 70 percent were married, 17 percent were single and 10 percent were widowed.

—Some 17 percent of the churchgoers earned more than $25,000 annually and another 17 percent — two thirds of them over 60 — earned leass than $7,000 a year.

Cleveland's School Heads Endure Times

CLEVELAND (AP) — They are hissed and booed at meetings. Parents have demanded they resign. Education officials have called for a state take-over of their jobs. And there has been a sit-in at their offices.

Cleveland's school board members say they are bearing the brunt of criticism from the 11-week-old teachers' strike in Ohio's largest school system.

The board closed the schools for 92,000 students on Nov. 6, three weeks after the walkout by the 5,000-member Cleveland Teachers Union began.

But school officials and board members seem resigned to their unpopularity, and say the problems that led to the strike were unavoidable.

"This superintendent and this board are taking a beating primarily because of the sins of previous years," said John E. Gallagher Jr., board president.

"All the ills of the previous years have fallen on year 1979, and it has been a tremendous burden. ... And all parties know there was no way we could come out looking good," he said.

Superintendent Peter P. Carlin said, "The community has told the board, 'Get your house in order.' Well, the board has gotten its house in order for the first time in 10 years, and we still have an offer (a new contract for the teachers) on the table, a decent offer," he said.

The board has offered two contract packages to the teachers.

One would boost pay 7 percent retroactive to Sept. 1, with another 9 percent increase next September. The second proposal would provide a 10 percent increase Dec. 31 and another 10 percent boost Dec. 31, 1980.

CTU leaders recommended rejecting both offers, and are seeking a 27 percent increase over two years. Teachers' pay in Cleveland now ranges from $9,828 to $20,072 a year.

The results of a court-ordered vote by mail may be tabulated by Saturday.

Board members Joseph M. Gallagher and Mary Ann Geraci said the only solution to the current situation lies with the public, which is reluctant to vote taxes, and the state of Ohio.

"We haven't had a tax levy passed since 1970," Joseph Gallagher said. "Prior to that, the real estate tax took care of our Cleveland public schools.

"That's the way it's been for a century, and now the people are under the impression that the state should fund large city schools."

Mrs. Geraci said the school board will continue to bear the blame for what she calls an insoluble problem. "Something has got to give. Someone is going to have to give us more money," she said.

American Exchange Student To Be Released From Turkish Jail

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Loretta J. Dooley, 18-year-old American exchange student charged with drug smuggling, was ordered released on bail Tuesday in an unexpected Christmas present. But she returned to the gray and cold Sagmalcilar prison until the $1,500 bail is posted.

Miss Dooley of Tracy, Calif., is expected to spend another day or two in jail.

She appeared before the three-member Istanbul Second Criminal Court in the second hearing since she was arrested Aug. 1 with nine grams of hashish.

She exclaimed "Hooray" when an interpreter relayed to her, as she was guarded by two machine-gun-carrying soldiers on a wooden bench, that the chief judge heeded a defense plea for her release pending trial.

"This girl is only 18 and came to Turkey as part of an exchange student system which requires high intelligence as a standard," a woman lawyer argued during the one-hour session.

LORETTA J. DOOLEY

"Furthermore," the lawyer stressed, "today is Christmas and it is an important day for Christians throughout the world."

Miss Dooley embraced friends and American officials after the announcement.

In Tracy, her father, Vernon Dooly, said "it's a very merry Christmas," when told the news. He said he was sure the girl would be allowed to leave Turkey. Her next hearing was set for Feb. 5.

She has spent almost three months in the women's section of the 2,500-capacity modernistic prison complex on the outskirts of Istanbul.

In past interviews, she bitterly complained about conditions in her living quarters and said she was "even approached" by Lesbian inmates at one time. Prison autorities claimed everything was being done "to prevent unhealthy relations."

Miss Dooley, who arrived in Turkey as part of an American Field Service exchange scheme, was seized by narcotics police after a tip that she would attempt to mail hashish in an envelope.

In her testimony to the court, she denied that she ever tried to smuggle hashish but said the spiked cigarettes were "for my personal consumption."

She claimed the cigarettes accidentally got into the parcel addressed to her home address.

The prosecutor demanded a 10-year prison term for her on grounds she "attempted to smuggle," a charge that carries a heavier punishment than possession for personal use.

Tuesday's court session was also attended by 58-year-old Wesley Hogle, a contractor, and close friend of the Dooley family. He flew 19 hours non-stop to Istanbul "to do something for a friend," he said.

Carol Flores, 26, an industrial photographer who accompanied Hogle on the flight, cheered and cried when the judge ordered Miss Dooley freed on bail.

"I was very upset when I heard she was involved in this," she said, "but now everything will be all right. I don't know any better Christmas celebration than seeing a friend get out of trouble."

Legal sources also said Loretta may benefit from a prisoner exchange treaty now before the Turkish parliament.

Jailed Woman's Family Hears News Of Release

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Dooley got a long-awaited Christmas gift from Turkey Tuesday — the news that their daughter, Loretta, would be released on bail from Sagmalcilar Prison.

Miss Dooley, 18, was arrested Aug. 1 on charges of attempting to smuggle nine ounces of hashish out of the country in a mailed package.

"It's a very merry Christmas," said Vernon Dooley, her father, in a telephone interview from the family home in Tracy east of here. "We're not sure when she will be free. Whenever bail is set up, why, then she'll come home."

Eileen Dooley, Miss Dooley's mother, was overjoyed at the news, which she said was totally unexpected.

"We are extremely happy," she said. "This is something that nobody could have predicted. It's a very great Christmas present."

Vernon Dooley said he was sure his daughter would be allowed to leave Turkey. "We're pretty positive," said Dooley, who exclaimed, "Oh, Lord no!" when asked if the family planned to travel to Turkey to meet their daughter.

A Turkish judge made the surprise announcement Tuesday, saying Miss Dooley could be released after she posted bail of 75,000 Turkish liras — about $1,500.

Miss Dooley was living with a Turkish family under the auspices of the American Field Service, a student exchange organization, when she was arrested after a member of her host family told authorities about the package.

Miss Dooley admitted trying to mail the package. She said she bought the hashish from a street peddler for her own use and thought she was mailing regular cigarettes to her sister.

Conviction on the smuggling charge could bring a 10-year prison sentence, and the prosecutor has asked for the maximum punishment.

Dooley said nothing special was planned for the rest of Christmas Day. "We just have our family here, that's all."

But when Loretta gets home, said Mrs. Dooley, she has one thing planned. The family will "love her a lot," she said.

Antigua Yule Described By Visitor

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (UPI) — Although a thousand miles from home, Patricia Joseph's celebration of Christmas and New Year will not be too different from her family's holiday in Antigua.

Christmas is "Americanized" in the British-owned island in the West Indies, Miss Joseph said. Traditions of hanging stockings and tree trimming are much the same.

A student at West Virginia Wesleyan in Buckhannon, Miss Joseph is spending her holiday break in Charleston with Mrs. Lucia Webber and her two children.

On Antigua, the children look forward to a plump, jolly fellow dressed in red, Miss Joseph said. However, in keeping with British background, the Antiguan benefactor is known as Father Christmas.

"There is more Christmas caroling in Antigua," Miss Joseph said. "The carols are on every radio station."

And, she added, there is fierce competition for native Antiguans to come up with their own carols.

She said she felt there is a scarcity of carol singing in the United States and thinks that it makes for a lesser Christmas spirit.

"You have a a lot of decorations downtown," she said, "but somehow without the music..."

Christmas Day on Antigua is a quiet family day when presents are opened and a special meal is eaten. Christmas Eve is spent in town, she said, where the stores are open until midnight.

"They say it is for last-minute shoppers," Miss Joseph said, "but really people are just bringing their children into town for the Christmas spirit."

The only Antiguan tradition which may seem outlandish to Americans, Miss Joseph said, would be the sight of Jambull — a man covered with banana or fig leaves. Several men usually outfit themselves in the leaves, she explained, and travel the streets begging money from tourists.

Police, City Urge Blockage Of Reports

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The city of Portland and the Portland Police Association have asked a circuit court to block the release of reports on allegations of police brutality.

In a lawsuit filed Monday in Multnomah County Circuit Court, they said release of the records would violate the confidentiality between lawyers and their police clients.

Multnomah County District Attorney Harl Haas had ordered the release of some information in response to a petition from a television reporter.

Donna Wiench, a reporter for the news show Northwest Illustrated on KOIN-TV, had asked for the files last month to to determine how thoroughly complaints of police brutality, harassment and false arrest were investigated by city officials.

The city refused to comply with Haas' order, and went to court instead.

The suit contends the release of the documents would be an unreasonable invasion of the police officers' privacy, and would be "contrary to the economic interest of the public and to the public health, safety and welfare."

The suit also maintains the state's public records law, under which MissWiench requested the information, "is an unconstitutional usurpation by the legislature of the functions of the judiciary."

No hearing date has been set.

Coal Production To Reach Record

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Coal Association predicted Tuesday that the nation's coal production will reach a record 776 million tons in 1980, a 2.6 percent increase over this year. The increase will come mainly west of the Mississippi River, it said.

The NCA, an industry trade organization, estimated that coal production in the east would continue at 540 million tons in 1980, the same as in 1979.

But it predicted that western coal production would increase from 216 million tons in 1979 to about 236 million tons in 1980, primarily to fuel new power plants in the west and southwest.

Electric utilities are the major market for new coal production.

Weapons Race Continues Despite Lengthy Disarmament Talks

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A decade of unprecedented efforts by the United States and the Soviet Union to set negotiated limits on modern weapons has produced disappointing results and, ironically, is spawning a new arms race.

One bright spot in the picture is the U.S.-Soviet treaty to ban antimissile defense systems.

By 1972, both sides were convinced they could not construct an effective antimissile missile at an acceptable price to defend against incoming strategic rockets.

The two superpowers signed the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty at the 1972 Moscow summit limiting both nations to two antimissile defense sites. They since have reduced this to one site apiece.

However, the rest of the record is disappointing.

"Arms control has essentially failed," wrote Leslie Gelb, a leading advocate of arms control, in a recent issue of Foreign Policy magazine.

Here is the record:

•The SALT II treaty, conceived as a long-term pact to place an upper limit on the intercontinental weapons of the United States and Russia, was to supplant the "interim" SALT I accord and take effect by 1978. Two years later, it still has not been ratified by the Senate, where it is under attack by right and left as inadequate, unequal and unfair.

•The Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty took effect in 1970 and has been joined by 111 nations with the aim of stopping the spread of nuclear weapons. But half a dozen potential nuclear powers — Israel, Egypt, Pakistan, South Africa, Brazil and Argentina — have refused to adhere.

•The United States, Soviet Union and severl allies began talks in Vienna more than six years ago to reduce levels of troops and weapons in Central Europe. Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev recently withdrew token troops and tanks from East Germany, and the United States proposed withdrawing 13,000 troops if the Soviets withdraw 30,000. But no overall agreement is in sight.

•The United States, Britain and Russia agreed to limit underground nuclear weapons tests with yields above 150,000 kilotons, a "threshold" 10 times the size of the Hiroshima bomb. The Senate has not taken up the treaty completed two years ago and little progress has been made to ban all underground testing.

•The United States and Soviet Union held talks in June 1979 on limiting armaments in the Indian Ocean, but the Iran crisis has prompted the United States to take another look at the value of naval power in that area.

•The two superpowers discussed an agreement to limit or ban "killer" satellites which could knock out the other nation's spy, navigation and communication satellites. Progress depends on the SALT II Treaty.

•The United States and Russia have explored the idea of limits on conventional arms sales, but report no definite progress.

SALT II, meanwhile, languishes in the Senate six months after being signed by Brezhnev and President Carter.

In an effort to get the Senate to ratify SALT II when it takes up the treaty in February, the administration has told Senate "hawks" it will seek an augmented defense budget to modernize non-covered weapons.

Defense Secretary Harold Brown disclosed the White House will seek an overall military budget of $157 billion in fiscal 1981, with 4.5 percent increases in following subsequent years.

Former CIA Agent 'Out Of Community'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In the "community," when you are out, you arereally out.

So it was in the murky world of intelligence that present and former members Tuesday welcomed the withdrawal of the passport of former CIA agent Philip Agee, now living in West Germany.

One veteran intelligence officer said with conviction, "If I Can get him with my bar hands ... I'll kill him. I'll kill him."

Other comments were more restrained but conveyed the message that Agee is a man intensely hated by the twilight organization that Agee says is out to "get me."

The State Department Sunday revoked the passport of Agee, 49-year-old former CIA agent in Latin America and author of a book published abroad which, among other things, named ome 900 CIA agents serving in various foreign missions under diplomatic cover.

Agee said the CIA, the American government and the entire U.S. system is corrupt. He took ip residence in Hamburg and is a frequent visitor to Cuba.

Current and former members of the intelligence community in Washington welcomed as "long overdue" word of the revocation of Agee's passport.

Some comments were made off the record. On the record, others talked:

"I think it's overdue for the U.S. government to take a formal position indicating that Agee is in fact a defector from the United States," said Ray Cline, a former deputy director of CIA and former head of the State Department's Intelligence Bureau.

"He has been consciously lending himself to anti-American propaganda intelligence. There is little doubt in my mind that he is receiving instructions from either the Soviet or Cuban intelligence services as to ways to damage the internationl reputation and effectiveness of the United States."

David Pilips, former chief of CIA's Latin American operations, charactrized Agee as a "primitive who forfeited his right to call himself an American.

"The news that he has been stripped of his last pretense of citizenship is the best news CIA people have heard in a long time," he said.

Jack Blake, former head of one of the CIA's most sensitive departments and now president of the Association of Retired Intelligence Officers, said even while in service he had tried in vain to have Agee tried for treason.

"We in the CIA asked the Department of State two years ago on this matter, based on evidence vailable at that time. Documents in the case show that Agee is a turncoat to his own country and this should establish a basis for prosecution by the Department of Justice," Blak said.

Spokesman for the CIA had no official comment on the Agee passport decision.

Agee was told by a State Department representative in Hamburg Sunday the U.S. government was prepared "to provide him an identity card that would be good for a one-way journey back to the United States ... In the meantime, his passport is revoked."

Agee was told his "activities overseas had been designed in violation of his oath of office in his former employment, designed to exose U.S. intelligence activities and we had every reason to believe he would continue to do so."

Some Firms Exempt From OSHA Checks

WASHINGTON (UPI) — As a result of a change in the law, an estimated 1.5 million small businesses will be exempt from certain job safety inspections until Sept. 30, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration said Tuesday.

Dr. Eula Bingham, head of the agency, said the change limits OSHA's ability to conduct general safety inspections in exempted small businesses until the end of this fiscal year.

The exemptions are required because of an amendment to the agency's fiscal 1980 appropriations introduced by Sen. Richard Schweiker, R-Pa.

A business may qualify for the exemption if it employs 10 or fewer workers and is classified in an industrial category that has an injury and illness rate during 1977 of fewer than seven per 100 full-time workers per year.

Dr. Bingham emphasized that the right of workers in exempted firms to safe conditions at the workplace remains unchanged.

"Workers in exempted industries retain the right to make safety and health complaints, and OSHA can respond with an inspection," she said.

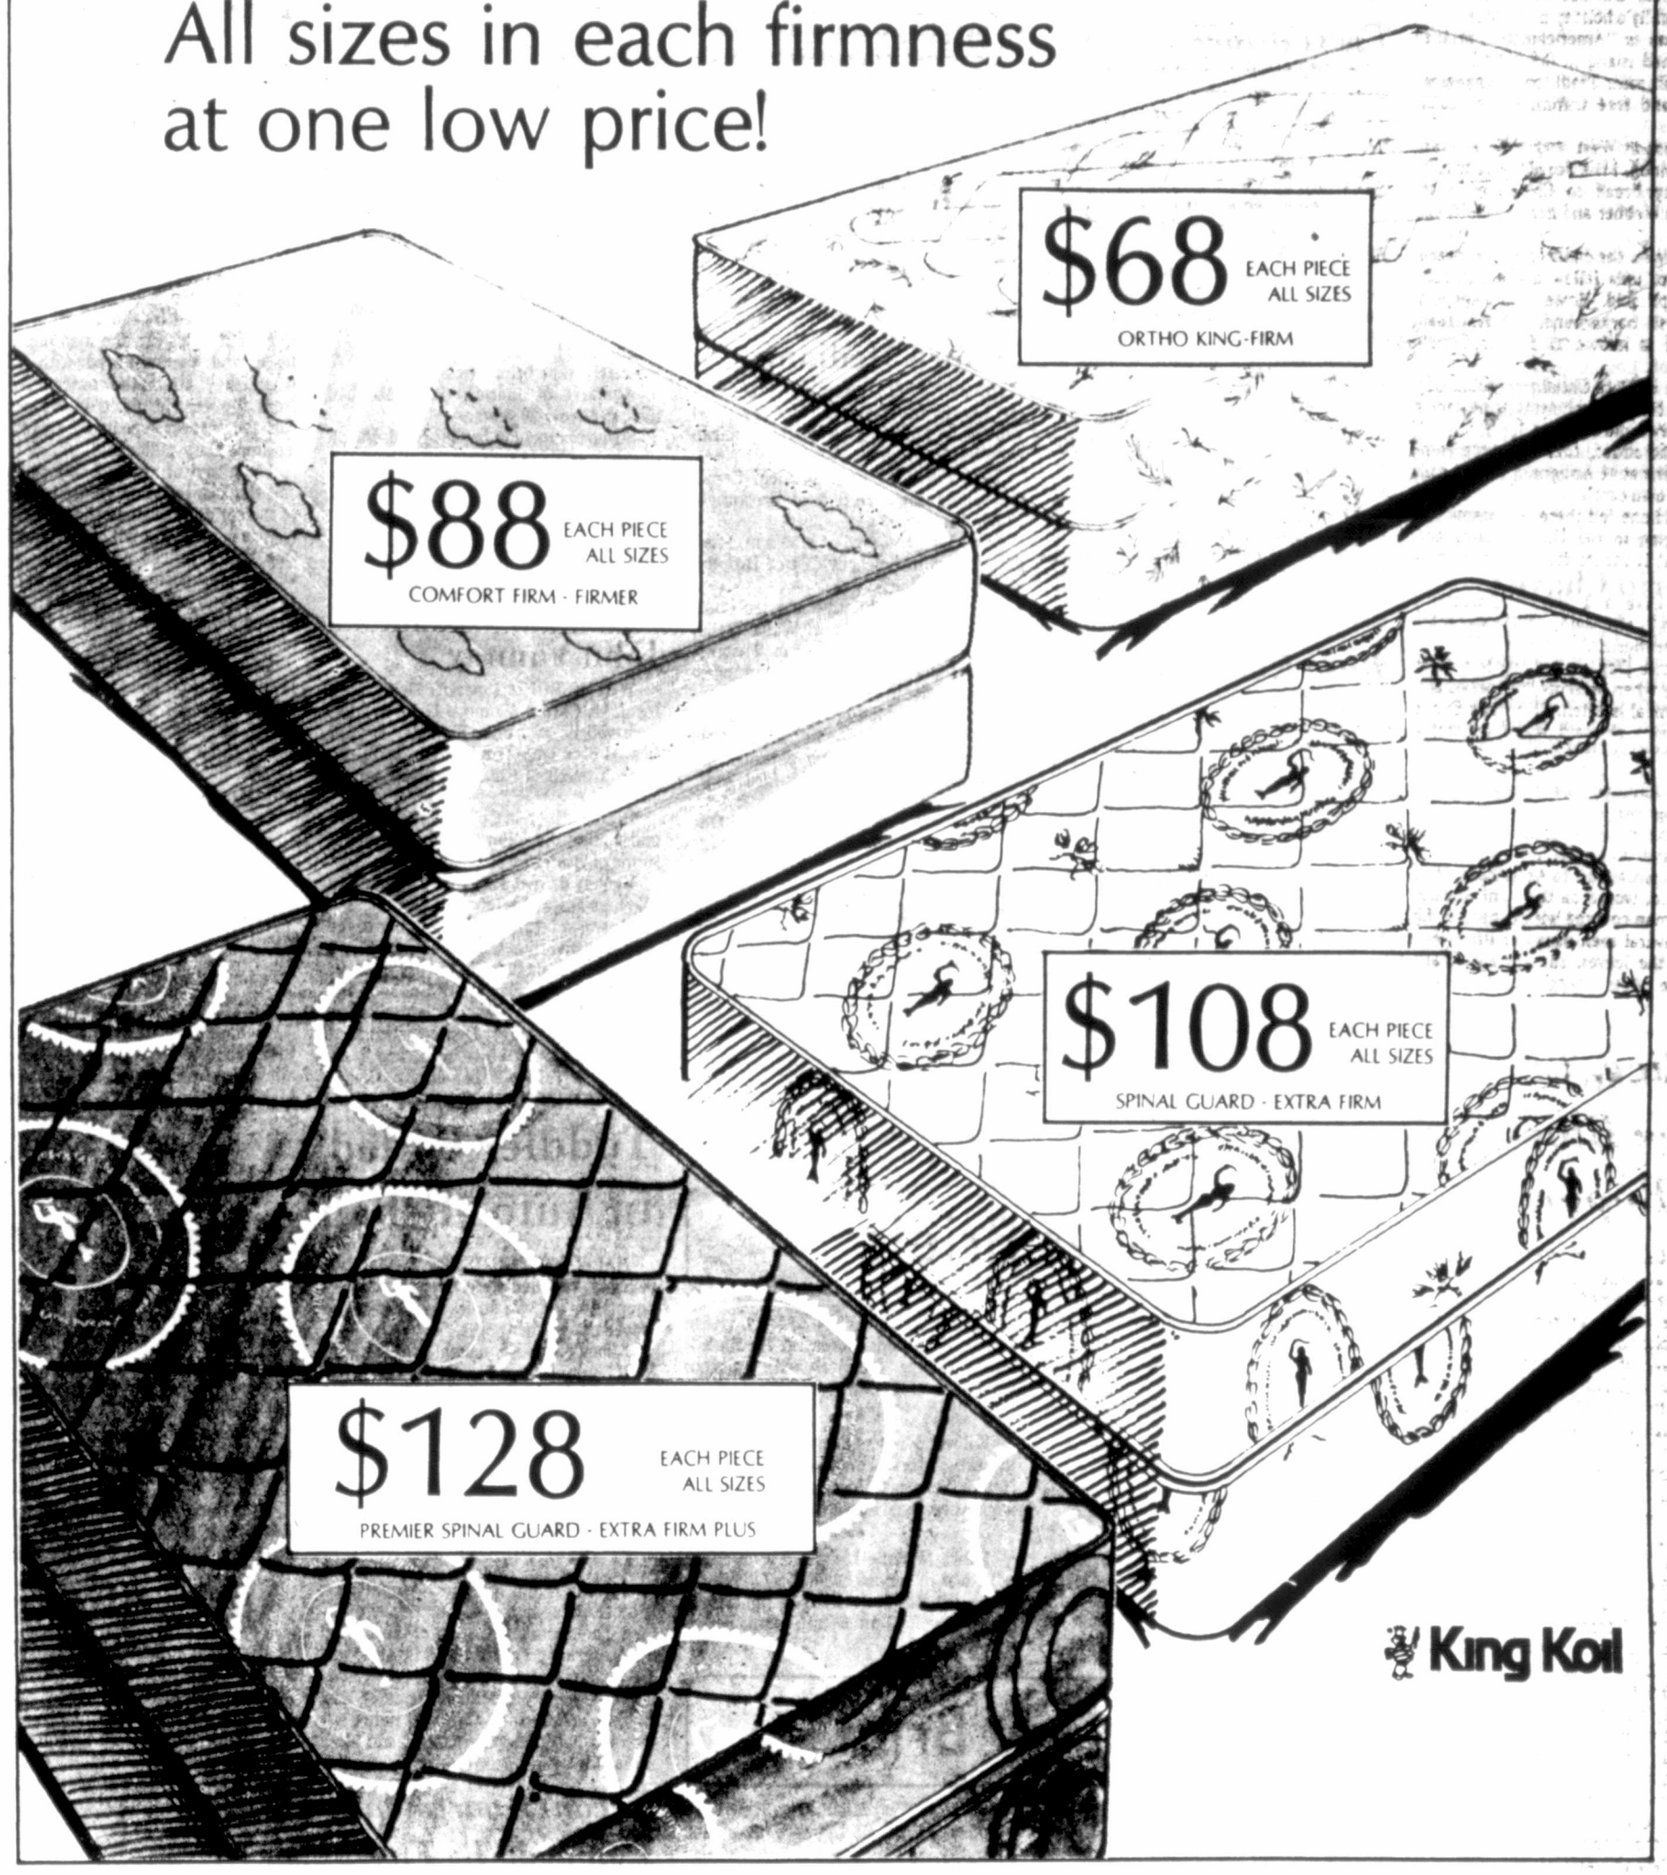

Dr. Bingham said OSHA has sent its field compliance staff a program directive explaining the amendment and its implications for scheduling inspections.

Field staff members are being instructed not to conduct any general schedule safety inspections of exempted businesses which have not employed more than 10 workers in the preceding 12 months.

Vacant Apartment Damaged By Fire

A vacant apartment at 401 N. Boston Ave. received minor damage as a result of a fire early Tuesday morning which fire officials believe may have been caused by arson.

Firefighters were called to the apartment about 3:29 a.m. and quickly doused the flames. Reports indicate firefighters smelled a strong odor of kerosene when they arrived on the scene.

The apartment received minor damage to interior walls.

JUPITER'S MOONS

The Planet Jupiter has 14 known satellites, although the last one discovered at the Hale Observatory is so faint that it has been lost. Four of the moons are large and bright, rivaling our own moon in diameter, and may be seen through a field glass.

Alleged Assault Lands Lubbock Man In Jail

A 30-year-old Lubbock man was jailed Monday night after he allegedly assaulted city police officers who attempted to subdue him.

The man was arrested after police were called to an East Lubbock nightclub in reference to a man wielding a knife and threatening the manager.

When officers arrived at the scene, the suspect allegedly attempted to drive away, and the car he was driving collided with a police car.

When asked by the arresting officers to get out of his car, the man initially refused and then scuffled with officers when they attempted to remove him from the vehicle. Once inside a patrol car, the suspect repeatedly kicked a restraining glass, police said.

Upon arrival at the Lubbock County Jail the suspect again refused to get out of the car and resisted officers who finally took him to the jail, reports indicate. One police officer was slightly injured when he was pushed into a parked car.

The club manager said the man had caused a disturbance and had threatened him with a knife.

In other activity, Rosa Rodriguez of 1809 6th St. told police she was sitting in the living room of her residence when two bullets were fired through the wall, one of which struck her in the left arm.

The incident occurred at about 10 p.m. Monday. The woman's wound was minor, police said.

A 29-year-old Oklahoma woman reported that her uncle had stabbed her left forearm several times as she was leaving a residence on 77th Street Monday, police said. The woman told police the stabbing occurred without any provocation. Charges had not been filed Tuesday.

George Karabinis, 28, of 1702 Ave. R, told police two men accosted him in an alley in the vicinity of 1800 17th St. late Monday night and took $140 from him. Karabinis said one of the men hit him in the face before the pair took his money and fled down the alley.

A 21-year-old city woman reported Tuesday a man with whom she is acquainted assaulted her and tore off her clothing near the intersection of 39th Street and Avenue A shortly before noon.

The woman told police the man had followed her when she left her 28th Street apartment in her car. She said the man forced her to pull over, got out of his car and attempted to pull the woman out of her car.

Unable to do so, the man reportedly beat her with his fists and kicked her several times in the face. Police said she received minor cuts on her face and shoulders.

Ricardo Aleman, 22, of 4111 N. Glove Ave., received a minor stab wound in the back when he was assaulted outside his home early Tuesday morning, police said.

The suspects in the incident reportedly had been in an argument with Aleman earlier in the evening at another residence.

Aleman's wife told police she, her husband and another couple had returned home after the argument when they heard someone kicking the front door of their home. Aleman was assaulted when he answered the door, police said. He was treated for the wound at St. Mary's Hospital and released.

Noerminia Basaluda of 1902 Sixth St. reported goods valued at $1,100 had been taken from her home between 7 p.m. Monday and 8 a.m. Tuesday. Items taken include a sewing machine, a television, clothing, linens and $200 cash, police said.

Stereo equipment, a television, several household appliances and clothing were stolen from the home of James Perea of 3722 26th St. between noon Sunday and 2 p.m. Tuesday, police said. The loss was estimated at $700.

Yule Dinner Attendance Lower Than Anticipated

Christmas dinner at the Salvation Army Lodge was not the event manager Danny Ketcham expected it to be this year.

Only 32 hungry mouths — down from last year's total of 69 — appeared at the evergreen-decked lodge for turkey dinner with all the trimmings, fresh fruit and gifts Tuesday, Ketcham said.

"We were anticipating up to 100," Ketcham said. He attributed the decrease in diners to $30 grocery vouchers distributed to needy families and singles by the Salvation Army.

"I think most people used the vouchers and cooked dinner at home," he said. Some 400 grocery vouchers were distributed this year, compared with 100 in 1978, according to Ketcham.

Although three families were among the diners at the lodge's Christmas celebration, most participants were single, Ketcham said. Children were given new toys, and everyone else got a gift and fresh fruit to take home, he said.

Authorities Looking For Man

Regional authorities are looking for a Lamesa man who surrendered himself to Slaton police after reportedly running a red light Monday, and then escaped from the police department booking room a short time later.

The 17-year-old was unattended when he slipped out a back door and garage door — left open by mistake — in the Slaton Police Department at about 5 p.m. Monday.

He reportedly was seen in Lubbock at 7 p.m. Monday near 24th Street and Avenue H.

The young man, who currently is wanted by Slaton police on charges of escaping custody and several traffic-related offenses, is believed to be heading back to Lamesa, police said.

HAITI

Visited by Columbus in 1492 and a French colony after 1677, Haiti attained independence in the 1804 rebellion begun by Toussaint L'Overture. In 1811, Henri Christophe proclaimed himself king in the north while the south continued as a republic. The nation was reunited in 1820, following Henri's death.

Woman Knows How Hostages' Families Feel At Christmas

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Kay Bosiljevac knows what the families of 50 American hostages are going through on Christmas.

Tuesday was the seventh Christmas Day she and her two children have spent without Michael Bosiljevac, an Air Force captain shot down over Vietnam in 1972.

Mrs. Bosiljevac, whose father is Omaha mayor Al Veys, said she and her two children, Susan, 9, and Michael, 7, have been in contact with the family of a hostage, although she declined to identify the family.

"We exchanged mutual concerns," Mrs. Bosiljevac said.

She said the families of the 50 Americans being held hostage in Iran "just cannot lose faith."

"They are American citizens, and they deserve our very best. The concern can't just last for the Christmas season."

"I know what they're going through," she said. "We've gone through it a long, long time. No matter what people say, it never gets any better."

But she said she is not bitter about her husband's disappearance and the U.S. government's work on behalf of MIAs. "I really am not."

Mrs. Bosiljevac is fighting to keep her husband alive, even if it is only in the way military records list him.

This Friday, she plans to ask U.S. District Judge Albert Schatz for a temporary restraining order to keep the government from changing her husband's status from missing in action to dead.

"So far there has been no accounting from the Vietnamese," Mrs. Bosiljevac said. "Live sightings of Americans have been constantly coming out of Southeast Asia. The government people say they want to ease the pressure for us by declaring them dead. But that gives no answer."

Mrs. Bosiljevac refuses to give up her fight to find out what happened to her husband. She has been to Southeast Asia twice, and maintains contact with organizations trying to find out what happened to the MIAs.

Many wives of American MIAs have accepted it when their husbands are officially declared dead. They start new lives, often remarrying.

"We're all human beings," Mrs. Bosiljevac said. "But I know without a doubt it doesn't change the reality that they have to know what happened."

The Bosiljevac family used to get Christmas greetings from President Nixon that said, "Our men will never be left to the good will of the enemy."

"Now we hear nothing," Mrs. Bosiljevac said.

"About the only thing that holds you together is your sense of humor and your faith in God."

'Real Risks' To Iran Hostages Charged

NEW YORK (AP) — A New York congressman said Tuesday that Rep. George Hansen, R-Idaho, is exposing the nation and the hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran "to real risks" by involving himself in the standoff there.

Hansen, who startled the White House and State Department on Nov. 21 by flying to Tehran on what he called a "mission of mercy," left Monday on a second unofficial trip to help free the hostages. He told an Idaho newspaper, however, that it was not definite he would be going all the way to Tehran.

Rep. Peter Peyser, D-N.Y., said he would call on U.S. Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti and the House Ethics Committee on Wednesday "to see if Congressman Hansen is violating either the Logan Act or the rules of the House of Representatives by his repeated intrusions into the foreign affairs of our country."

Message From Hostages Read To Families In Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — The words in the Christmas sermon came directly from Tehran, from one of the American captives: "Together with our colleagues held in silent hostage in Tehran, we are one with you this morning."

The message, transmitted through the State Department, was read to members of the families of 14 hostages gathered for the Christmas service at the Washington Cathedral.

"The promise of peace strengthens each of us as we face every challenge with courage and every disappointment with hope," said Bruce Laingen, the U.S. charge d'affaires in Iran who is being held captive in the foreign office in Tehran. His wife was among the worshipers.

His letter was incorporated by Bishop John T. Walker into his sermon. The Episcopal bishop then said:

"Yes, my friends, God is to be found in Tehran, in the embassy there and in the foreign office. He is to be found among the hungry, the imprisoned, the exiled.

"He is the light of the temporary darkness that surrounds those held. He is the light and the hope of those who pray dearly for their safe return home."

The hostages' family members were in the part of the great gothic cathedral known as the Chapel of St. Mary. They were bathed in soft light filtering through the cathedral's stained glass windows.

Afterwards, the wife of hostage Morehead C. Kennedy said she thought the service had been good for all the families and that she was pleased the hostages had received a Christmas visit by American ministers.

"I'm sure they had a very meaningful service lastnight in he compound,' she said, "and I'm sure they were all with us here today, in spirit with their families."

Cuba's Shaky Economy Prompts Speeches By Castro's Brother

HAVANA, Cuba (UPI) — Cuba is abuzz with speculation about the sudden emergence of President Fidel Castro's younger brother, Raul, as a spokesman on economic matters.

Raul, defense minister and an army general, surprised the audience at Havana's Karl Marx theater Oct. 28 when he ended a speech about a dead revolutionary hero with an attack on Cuba's economic woes.

Then, on Nov. 30 in the country's second city, Santiago, he said Cuba no longer could blame its economic problems on the U.S. blockade. He said Cuba would have gone bankrupt without Russian aid, now estimated at up to $9 million per day.

The complete texts of both speeches were widely published in Cuba.

What prompted the new role for the 48-year-old Raul is the island's shaky economy. Western sources say it is in its worst shape since the overthrow of the Fulgencio Batista dictatorship almost 21 years ago — a state of affairs Raul Castro all but conceded in his speeches.

Price increases for Cuba's traditional exports of sugar, coffee and tobacco have not kept up with the rate of inflation in the Western countries from which the island must import. Cuba still imports its basic foodstuffs — rice, beans and meat.

Despite severe food rationing, at times there are not enough staples to go around.

This has prompted anti-Castro graffiti for the first time. One recent wall writing, which rhymes in Spanish, said: "We want Batista with blood and not Fidel with hunger."

Raul Castro's new job apparently is to redirect the economy, especially the agricultural sector. While Fidel tried to use moral persuasion, Raul is expected to appeal more to the pocketbook.

Raul lacks Fidel's impressive presence and crowd-pleasing charisma but is the more disciplined of the two and probably the one with whom Moscow feels more comfortable.

Those knowledgable on the subject say Raul probably will come out with economic incentives, abandoning the traditional Marxist economy, as has been done in Russia. He conceded in his speeches that many brigade leaders connive with their workers to falsify production figures and that some agricultural laborers even work surreptitiously on government time for private landholders.

To increase production, Cuba might allow farmers to sell their produce directly at the market place, instead of to a state agency for distribution.

Two new factors in Cuba have tended to focus current discontentment.

One was the release, starting late last year, of 3,800 political prisoners, which has made everyone more vocal. People now are more fearless in their complaints.

The other is the visit of more than 10,000 Cuban exiles per month. Besides bringing in badly needed hard currency, the exiles — mainly from the United States — show by their clothing and general well-being a way of life which contrasts with that of Cuba and its rationing book.

An average person can smell 2,000 different odors. Trained sniffers differentiate some 4,000 scents.

Man In Masonic Hall Siege Captured

HELD HOSTAGES — Ernie Lassen talks with Massachusetts state policeofficers moments they grabbed him and took him into custody. Lassen had held Lester Strangman and Lout Gates, both Masons, at a Manchester area Masonic hall until they wrestled with him and escaped after only a few minutes. Lassen is from Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., and moved to Beverly, Mass., about six weeks ago. (AP Laserphoto)

MANCHESTER, Mass. (AP) — An armed, 33-year-old unemployed physical therapist who wanted to tell the world that "Masons kill people," was grabbed by police Tuesday after he took over a Masonic hall for more than three hours.

The man, identified by authorities as Ernie Lassen of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was grabbed by state police Lt. Robert Dunn as he delivered a long, rambling diatribe to television cameras some 50 feet away from the hall.

Police said Lassen, armed with a .22-caliber rifle, allegedly took two Masons hostage at the beginning of the siege, but they escaped after about 10 minutes.

"He said he did it today because he knew everyone would be home for Christmas," said patrolman Joe Aiello. "He wanted everyone to know that Masons killed people and he talked about ways to get oil in the United States without OPEC. He seemed a little confused."

"He told us his father was a Mason for 25 years and that they were vigilantes who killed people," said Aiello.

Police Chief Felix Radack said Lassen would be charged with breaking and entering and assault with a dangerous weapon. Arraignment was scheduled for Wednesday in Salem District Court.

Radack said the bizarre incident began around 9:30 a.m. when Lassen was discovered in the hall by Lester Strangman, a member of the lodge.

Lassen allegedly ordered Strangman to call the lodge's master, Lou Gates, and held the two men at gunpoint, police said. The men escaped after wrestling with Lassen.

One shot was fired in the tussle, Radack said, but there were no injuries.

Police, whose headquarters are next door to the lodge, were called and a state police special weapons and tactics team arrived.

The gunman refused to surrender, demanding that television crews be called to record a speech he wanted run nationally.

Dunn, who negotiated with Lassen through a window for more than three hours, finally arranged to have television crews film his statement from a safe distance. Dunn agreed to hold the microphone for the gun-wielding man.

Aiello said that during the negotiations, Lassen produced a tray with several cups of coffee which he handed to police. Aiello said the man kept his rifle by his side at all times.

The man was finally captured when he fumbled with papers he was using for his statement. Dunn grabbed him through the window while officers rushed through a back door to overpower him.

Count Of Hostages Develops Mystery

American group that was not formally invited by Khomeini, was allowed to enter the embassy compound later Tuesday. But he was stopped at a guardhouse, where he delivered a folder of Christmas carols, and did not see any of the captives.

Others in his eight-member party of clerics and professors met with Khomeini at his headquarters in Qom. Iran's official Pars news agency said one of the Americans, Thomas Hicks of Georgetown University, Washington, described the revolutionary leader as a "powerful, intelligent world character who has good thoughts and is well informed" on religious matters and international politics. The Pars dispatch on the interview with Hicks, who is a professor of Islamic studies, made no mention of the hostages.

State Department spokesman Howard Leeb said in Washington he could not unravel the mystery of the numbers. "About the only way I can figure it is that no one clergyman saw all the hostages," he said. "As near as I can figure they got together afterward and compared notes" on the number of prisoners held by Iranian militants demanding the return of deposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. The shah is now living in Panama.

Another State Department spokesman, David Passage, said: "We have on previous occasions requested a list of all the persons being held from the Iranian government. We have not yet received such a list. This discrepancy illustrates the importance of our getting such a list and confirmation from the Iranian authorities that all of the hostages are safe."

Hopes for early release of some of the Americans arose last week when a Tehran newspaper quoted Ghotbzadeh as saying some would be freed by order of Khomeini. The report caused outrage among the militants occupying the embassy, who said Khomeini had issued no such order, and Ghotbzadeh made a formal denial Tuesday.

Discusses Release

In an interview with the same newspaper, Kayhan, Ghotbzadeh said the ruling Revolutionary Council discussed releasing hostages, but made no decision.

Coffin, Howard and Gumbleton said they planned to compile a list of hostages they had met with and Coffin said they were assured they could return to the embassy to pick up personal messages from the hostages to their families.

By late Tuesday night they had not returned to the compound. They said earlier they had no travel plans and have been invited to meet with Ghotbzadeh this morning.

Meet Separately

A militant inside the embassy said there were 50 hostages and suggested the clergymen counted wrong because they were not allowed to conduct a service for all the hostages together. They met separately with the hostages in three different locations after they were admitted to the embassy compound shortly before midnight Christmas Eve.

Asked why the clergymen were not allowed to see the hostages together, the militant said, "Most probably some CIA agents were among them (the clergy)."

All three clergymen said the embassy visit was highly emotional.

Coffin told the hotel news conference the clergymen were never alone with the hostages and parts of the services were filmed by Iranian television crews.

Cite Security Reasons

He said the militants cited security reasons for not allowing them to deliver an ecumenical service as they had hoped to do. Instead, they met with groups of three to five hostages and conducted services in three places.

"We were divided according to where the hostages lived," he said. "I might add that part of the security measure is that they (the militants) are intensely conscious of the fact that nothing must happen to a single hostage or they really have failed."

Gumbleton, 55, said one of two services he performed with Algerian Archbishop Cardinal Etienne Duval, 77, was filmed for Iranian television and the militants read a statement on camera. Duval joined the Americans for the embassy visit.

'Fulfilling Experience'

It was a very fulfilling experience, Gumbleton said of the services. "I also have to say though that it was disappointing in another way. I felt it was a serious problem for me ... in the context of this pastoral visit there was also injected a public statement.

"To me this was a crossing from the pastoral to the political and I regret it. But it seems to me this whole visit will have been worth it."

Howard, 33, said several of the 21 hostages he met were Catholics who asked permission to confess to a priest. He said they hoped the militants would allow confessions before the delegation left Iran.

Coffin, 55, said he met with 16 hostages and Gumbleton with six.

Interested In Talking

Howard said of the hostages: "Many of them were not interested in worship per se but were interested in talking, and to me that was one of the highlights of our visit."

Warren Day, a spokesman for the clergyman, said the clerics would compile a list of names on the basis of the messages they planned to obtain at the embassy because "the situation did not lend itself to to taking them down right there."

Coffin said "virtually all the hostages" the clergymen spoke with said they had not been receiving mail but were given some of the tens of thousands of Christmas cards delivered in recent days from America.

Vernon Lyons, a Baptist minister from Chicago, presents his visiting card at the gates of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran Christmas Day in an effort to enter and visit the American hostages. Three Texas Women Escapees Captured

PUEBLO, Colo. (AP) — Authorities have confirmed that three women jailed here after a high-speed chase are escapees from the Texas state prison, authorities say.

Police arrested the three late Monday after ramming their car as they were trying to avoid capture, officers said.

The women, sent to the Pueblo City Jail, were held in connection with the robbery at knifepoint of a Pueblo woman, police detective John Sheehan said.

The three were identified as Sylvia Jean Brown, 37; Patricia Ann Watson, 32; and Mary Lou Santellana, 30, who escaped from the Goree Unit of the Texas prison in Huntsville, Sheehan said.

The fugitives were wanted by the FBI in connection with an Oklahoma City kidnapping. Miss Santellana also is suspected of committing armed robbery in Enid, Okla., authorities said.

Bond for the women has been set at $150,000. But Sheehan said the suspects would not be released on bond if Texas authorities choose to extradite them.

Officers began the chase after Nita A. Valdez, 30, reported she had been robbed of her purse Monday at the Northside Shopping Center.

The pursuit ended when officers rammed into the women's vehicle in order to stop it, Sheehan said. The car carrying the women had been stolen in Oklahoma City, he said.

No one was hurt in the collision, and the vehicles sustained only minor damage, he said.

"They will be charged with pulling armed robberies, forgeries and kidnapping," Sheehan said.

Rick Hartley, public information officer for the Texas Department of Corrections, had described the fugitives as "rough little cookies." He said they are considered dangerous because of their past records, which include robbery and aggravated robbery.

FBI began searching for the fugitives after the abduction of Regina M. Raymond, 21, and her 3-year-old son Cameron.

They were kidnapped in an Oklahoma City shopping center Sunday and released unharmed about nine hours later at the Wichita, Kan., airport, the FBI said.

Mrs. Raymond said she and her son were forced into the back seat of her parked car and then driven through backroads between Oklahoma City and Wichita. She said she never saw a gun, although one of the women claimed to have one.

Miss Santellana, tattooed with a star and a scorpion, is wanted in the robbery of Leona McMillen, 71. The alleged crime occurred in a supermarket parking lot Saturday.

Mrs. McMillen was hospitalized briefly after the incident for treatment of a minor cut on her finger and abrasions and bruises on her head.

The fugitives escaped from prison Thursday after removing an air conditioner in an office and crawling out of a prison window, authorities said.

Miss Brown and Miss Santellana each were serving 25 years for aggravated robbery. Miss Watson was serving 20 years for robbery.

Newspaper Refuses Iranian Ad

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Washington Post said Tuesday it refused to sell advertising space to the Iranian Embassy for a Christmas message from the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini because it referred to the American hostages as "spies and traitors."

Christopher Little, vice president and counsel for the Washington Post, said the embassy attempted to buy space on Monday to run a half page ad on Tuesday.

"... Simply for legal reasons and also a matter of policy, we will not run charges like that against individuals that are not substantiated," Little said.

Hossain Ava, the press attache for the Iranian embassy, said the message said Carter should tell the American people to "ring bells for the oppressed people of the world, not for the spies."

But he said the embassy could not alter the statement because they were "the exact words of Imam Khomeini."

"This is not the message of an ordinary person. It is the message of Imam Khomeini to the people of the world on Christmas Day," Ava said.

Ava said the embassy planned to try to buy space in other newspapers later this week.

Ship Grounded; 110 Rescued

The Chilean navy said the Piloto Pardo was heading for Punta Arenas, at Chile's southern tip, and would reach port in one or two days depending on the weather.

The Lindblad Explorer, built 10 years ago with a double hull for voyages through thick ice, makes regular tours of the Antarctic. It ran around off Antarctica in 1972 and about 100 tourists, including scores of Americans, were rescued without incident and flown to Buenos Aires, Argentina, and then home.

In Los Angeles, an American publicist for the Japanese film said Olivia Hussey, Glenn Ford, Robert Vaughn and George Kennedy also are performing parts in the movie. Dick Guttman said most of scenes have been shot in Canada, with others made in Japan and Antartica.

The film has a budget of $12 million and the plot involves a virus developed by the military that wipes out most of humanity, missing only a small group of people at the South Pole, he said.

Networks Refuse Film Of Visit

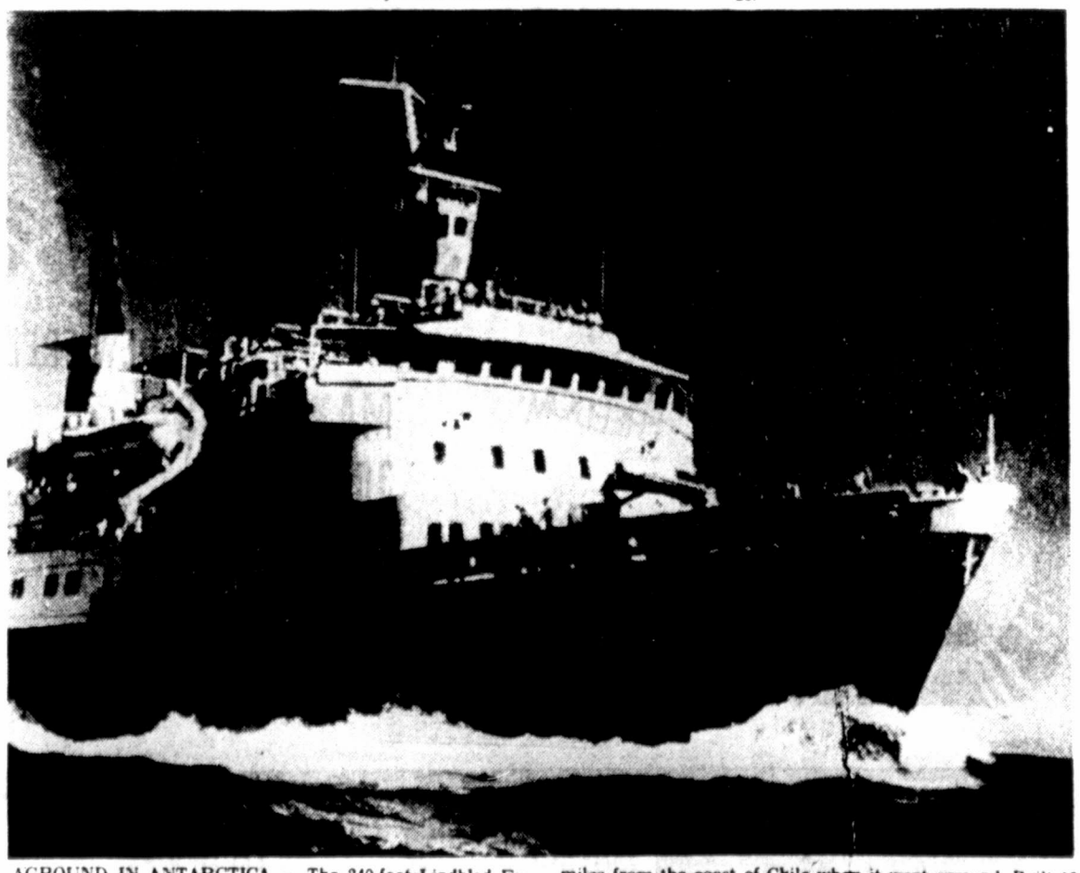

NEW YORK (AP) — The three U.S. commercial television networks refused to accept film of visits between U.S. clergymen and the hostages held in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran on Tuesday after Iranian militants demanded payment and complete editorial control.

ABC, CBS, and NBC said the film of the Christmas Eve services was made by the militant students holding the hostages.

The militants told the networks that all of the appoximately 50 minutes of footage — including a message from Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini to be read by one of the students — would have to be shown.

The networks were not permitted to preview the footage, which would have cost them $425 per minute.

The students also demanded that the film be aired all at once or in installments within a week, and they later stipulated that there be no more than two half-hour installments if the film was used, network officials said.

AGROUND IN ANTARCTICA — The 240-foot Lindblad Explorer, on a Christmas cruise to the bottom of the world, ran aground in Antarctica early Tuesday and the passengers were rescued by the Chilean navy. The cruise ship was roughly 1,000 miles from the coast of Chile when it went aground. Built 10 years ago, the ship ran aground at least once before, in 1972, again off Chile. AP Laserphoto)se

New York Cabbies Play Santa Claus

By The Associated Press

Six New York City cabbies played Santa Claus, and saved Christmas for a soldier who flew home from Germany without a cent.

In Greensboro, N.C., 40 Jewish volunteers filled in for Christian volunteers and regular staffers at three hospitals.

And in Christmas services around the country, from the National Cathedral in Washington to a rainy outdoor service in New Hampshire, prayers were offered for the 50 hostages held in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and their families.

When Pvt. B.F. Pearce arrived in New York Christmas Eve from Germany, he had planned to draw a month's wages at the military assistance counter. But it was closed, and he had no money for train fare home to Harrisburg, Pa., or for gifts for the 16-month-old baby he had never seen.

But cabbies at Kennedy International Airport gave him a free ride to the subway for Penn Station, and raised $34 to send him home.

In Washington, about 50 relatives of the American hostages gathered at the National Cathedral to hear a Christmas message from H. Bruce Laingen, the U.S. charge d'affairs in Iran.

"May that light of Christmas and that promise of peace strengthen each of us to face every challenge with courage and every disappointment with hope," said the statement, which had been sent to the State Department.

"We extend to you our grateful thanks for your support, your goodwill and your prayers — above all for your cathedral's vigil prayer for the ultimate triumph of reconciliation and brotherhood that is the promise of both the Muslim and Christian faith."

In Laconia, N.H., about 22 persons braved a downpour to attend an outdoor Christmas service to pray for the safe release of the hostages.

In Washington, Louisa Kennedy decorated a Douglas fir that her husband, Moorehead C. Kennedy Jr., one of the hostages, had planted in their backyard.

"There are still many blessings in this life we can celebrate, so we will be celebrating those," said Mrs. Kennedy.

In Ellicot City, Md., Ernest Cooke, father of hostage Donald Cooke, 24, said, "It will be a sober day for us, but certainly not a gloomy day or bad day. It is very difficult to deal with the emotions and feelings in this, but if you believe in Christ, it is easier."

In Bellevue, Neb., Christmas presents for Paul Needham will stay wrapped until the 29-year-old Air Force captain is released from Tehran.

His parents, retired Chief Master Sgt. Paul and Mary Needham, celebrated Christmas with their two grandchildren. "It is a very hard thing, but the grandchildren are seeing us through and we have faith that everything will work out," Mrs. Needham said.

In Loup City, Neb., Keith and Doris Moeller sent a box of homemade candy to their son Michael, 28, a Marine staff sergeant being held hostage.

"I had the satisfaction of making him homemade peanut brittle," Mrs. Moeller said. "That's his favorite."

But "the realization of where he's at" was making Christmas painful for the family.

To be nearby if developments in Tehran warrant his presence in Washington, President Carter canceled his traditional Christmas trip to Plains, Ga.

His mother, Lillian Carter said she felt "pretty bad" that he would not be home for the holidays.

Carter Spends Christmas At Camp David

CAMP DAVID, Md. (AP) — President Carter spent a quiet Christmas with wife Rosalynn and daughter Amy after sending a telegram to the families of the 50 Americans held hostage in Iran.

In the telegram, Carter said he is convinced "the rightness of our position and the strength of our determination assure that we will prevail" in the international crisis.

The telegram was sent to the families on Saturday and made public Tuesday by the White House.

A presidential aide said Carter and his family were "just spending a quiet family day" at the retreat in Maryland's Catoctin Mountains. No reporters were allowed onto the grounds.

In his telegram, Carter said, "This is a difficult time for you — perhaps the most difficult time that you and your family have ever experienced."

But he said their steadfastness and support of efforts to get the hostages freed are "an inspiration to all of us who are making every possible effort to achieve the safe return of your loved ones."

Rarely have Americans been so united and rarely has the country received such support from other nations as in the Iranian hostage crisis, Carter said.

Carter, who returned to his hometown of Plains, Ga., last Christmas, spent the morning opening gifts and telephoning other family members.

Earlier, the president worked on the federal budget and reviewed a preliminary draft of the State of the Union message he is to deliver to Congress on Jan. 23.

Outages Hit Thousands On Yule

By The Associated Press

Thousands of people spent at least part of Christmas Day without electricity, preventing the cooking of Christmas dinners and leaving decorations cold and dark, as blackouts caused by high winds and vandals struck parts of Connecticut, Michigan and California.

Two broken power line insulators, apparently damaged by gun shots, knocked out electricity in eastern Connecticut for about 6,500 homes in Colchester, Salem, Hebron and parts of East Haddam and East Hampton about 3:30 a.m., Northeast Utilities said.

Power was restored about 11:30 a.m. after the damaged insulators in a wooded area near Amston Lake in Hebron were replaced.

State police said they had no reports of any heating problems resulting from the power failure. Although weather was rainy, it was unseasonably mild with temperatures around 50.

Shorter power failures also were reported in Danbury, East Hartford and in New Britain, where a tree limb fell on a power line.

"We're just going to make the best of it," said Mary "Ski" Przyborowski in a telephone interview from her Colchester home. "It's made it kind of fun," she added.

The 18-pound roast beef she had begun cooking Monday night was not fully cooked when the power failed, so they planned to slice it like steak and finish cooking over the coals in the fireplace, she said.

A transistor radio provided Christmas carols for Elaine and Peter Hill of Colchester, who were celebrating the holiday with her father and a friend. She planned to cook a modest meal on their woodstove.

Gusty winds knocked down power lines in southern Lower Michigan, extinguishing Christmas Tree lights in scattered blackouts.

The two largest blackouts were in Taylor, where 1,600 customers had no electricity from 9 a.m. to noon, and in northeastern Ann Arbor, where 2,240 homes were out from 10:12 a.m. to noon, according to Detroit Edison.

Otherwise, said Edison spokesman Michael Maurer, "They're all over, five houses here, 10 houses there. The crews are very busy."

Wind gusts of 35 mph were common in southern Michigan, with some recorded at 40 mph before noon, the National Weather Service said. Winds died down in the afternoon.

Several thousand people remained without heat or electricity in northern California following the storm that roared in off the Pacific on Sunday and Monday.

Many Pilgrims Feel Bethlehem 'Touristy'

BETHLEHEM (AP) — For all Bethlehem's efforts to make Western pilgrims feel at home for Christmas, many walked away from Manger Square this year disappointed with the circus atmosphere.

Others, mostly older people or clergy, found spending Christmas at the traditional site of Christ's birth the moving experience they had expected.

There are no Santas, no reindeer and there has been no snow on Christmas Eve in memory. But there is a huge Christmas tree, plenty of flashing lights and recorded carols by anonymous choirs blaring from loudspeakers.

George Aulmann came from Munich, Germany to sing in one of a dozen choirs on Christmas Eve, but he said he preferred to be in snow-covered Bavaria. "It feels like being in a carnival. I am happy to be here, but I will be happy to go, too."

"It's too touristy and not like Christmas at home," said Carey Reardon, of Seattle, Wash.

About 10,000 visitors came to Manger Square Christmas Eve for the caroling and the good cheer. Several thousand appeared to be Bethlehem youngsters, although entry into the square was strictly controlled by the Israeli army.

Only a few hundred selected guests celebrated midnight Mass in the Church of the Nativity. When the choirs stopped and the Mass began to appear on a giant closed circuit television screen outside, the square emptied of all but the most devout and a few drunks. Only a handful remained to see the Roman Catholic Latin Patriarch of Jerusalem conclude the Mass by placing an effigy of the infant Jesus on the spot where tradition says Christ was born.

On Christmas Day Manger Square was once again the municipal parking lot overflowing with tourist buses.

From a distance, Bethlehem looks like the same sleepy town where Joseph and Mary sought lodgings. The barren Judean desert dipping down to the Dead Sea looks as it must have 2,000 years ago.

Once in town, neon lights announce "The Holy Manger Store," "Bethlehem Souvenir Enterprises" and a dozen more shops cashing in on history.

Elias Freij, the gentle but toughly independent mayor of the town which lives off tourism, looks hurt if you ask him about Bethlehem's commercialism.

"It's not true that Bethlehem is commercialized," says Freij. "Pilgrims come from the world over to pray in the Grotto of the Nativity. "They must eat, they must drink, they want to take home a little souvenir of Bethlehem. We must provide services for them," he says.

The yellowed stones of the 800-year-old Church of the Nativity lend an air of history to the shrine of the holy birth.

The manger itself is marked by a marble slab and a silver star. It is hard to see it was once a recess of a cave.

Ozark Resort Town Police Chief Specializes In Telling Lies

LYING CHIEF — John Tyson is no ordinary police chief. Not only does he spend his off-hours singing at schools and clubs, he is the town's foremost storyteller. His stories have led to his being named the town's champion liar. (AP Laserphoto)

EUREKA SPRINGS, Ark. (AP) — If you can believe him, police chief John Tyson says some people in this picturesque Ozark resort town feel he doesn't fit "the stereotyped image of a policeman."

"One person said Eureka Springs didn't need a singing police chief," says Tyson, who formerly worked in California and — in between passing out parking tickets — specializes in telling lies.

"I guess I don't fit the image of a jerkwater police chief," he said. "I quickly got a reputation for being flamboyant. But the truth is, I'm simply not inhibited."

At nights and on weekends, Tyson travels around northwest Arkansas playing guitar and singing in restaurants. He entertains occasionally at Carroll County schools and has a weekly radio show called "Mirror of America" in which he plays jazz and Broadway songs of the 1930s and 1940s.

His stage name is "Elvis McCloud," a name combined from the late rock 'n' roll singer and the television series about a New Mexico policeman working in New York.

The 35-year-old Tyson, who is slender, has sandy hair and a mustache, earned his reputation for lying when he recently won the Eureka Springs Tall-Tales Contest. His entry:

"An Arkansas mountain man came riding into a Texas town on a buckboard driven by four mountain lions. He was using live rattlesnakes for whips. The brazen mountain man. Then one of the Texans asked why he left Arkansas.

"'Because I was a sissy,'" he replied.

It's not a bad fib, says Tyson, but admits it's not original. "I just heard it somewhere and changed the places," he said.

Tyson became police chief mostly by accident. He came here on vacation in May and says it "was a matter of timing.

"The police chief was about to retire. I just applied for the job and got it," he said.

His first months in office have not been all smiles, however.

"I've come under some criticism," he said. "I was viewed by some of the locals as an outlander. I didn't fit the stereotyped image of a policeman."

But as Tyson got to know the community and the community got to know him, things eased a bit.

"I just treat everybody equally and people respond to that," he said. "I've gotten five parking tickets by my own people since I've been here."

He has a sign on his desk that says, "If I can pay Mine, you can pay Yours," a reminder that he will not play favorites.

"He's a good police officer," says State Trooper Chuck Medford. "He's well schooled and knows his business."

Tyson spent 10 years working for two California police departments that he does not want to name.

"I was getting cynical and a little apprehensive about getting shot. I was answering 15 felony calls a day," he said. "I feel real good about what I'm doing here."

"I've gotten five parking tickets by my own people since I've been here." A sign on his desk says, "If I can pay Mine, you can pay Yours."

Four Survive Twin-Engine Plane Crash

ESTES PARK, Colo. (AP) — Battling winds up to 70 miles an hour, rescuers Tuesday reached the wreckage of a twin-engine aircraft on a mountainside and reported that four of the five persons on board had survived a two-day ordeal.

A National Park Service spokesman said medics who reached the site, in a snowfield at the 12,000-foot level in Rocky Mountain National Park, reported that one woman aboard the plane was killed in the crash.

The names and hometowns of the victim and three ofthe surviors were not immediately available, but a 9-year-old girl who survived the crash was identified as Claire Krieger.

Larry Van Slyke, supervisory ranger, said the girl and two women survivors were flown to area hospitals by helicopter. He said the rescue of the fourth survivor, the pilot, was delayed because the man was trapped in the wreckage and apparently had suffered back injuries.

Because of the complexity of the rescue effort, Van Slyke said, authorities had not determined the cause of the crash or the means used by the survivors to endure the harsh conditions.

Colorado Civil Air Patrol Maj. Harry Blakeman said the downed plane was spotted Tuesday morning by a CAP search plane that was tracking an emergency locator signal first detected Monday.

The plane had left Longmont on Sunday en route to Nevada, but authorities said no flight plan was filed. The craft was located on Chippler Mountain.

A helicopter from KBTV in Denver dropped one medic near the site, and he managed to reach the plane after what the Park Service described as a "semi-technical" climb. Other rescuers arrived later by helicopter and on foot.

THE MAP ROOM

The Map Room, on the ground floor of the White House, was a secret war room during World War II. It was redecorated in 1970 at the request of President and Mrs. Nixon. Furnished in American Chippendale style, it contains four American landscape paintings and a portrait of Benjamin Franklin once removed from Franklin's Philadelphia home by a British officer quartered there during the American Revolution.

Boy Thought Dead Home For Holiday

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis. (AP) — Two weeks ago, Darven Miller was considered clinically dead after he fell through the ice on Duncan Creek. But on Christmas Day, the 11-year-old boy was well enough to spend a few hours at home with his family.

"He's up and around and playing. He's eating good, and everything else is just fine," said Ramona Britton, patient care coordinator at St. Joseph's Hospital.

"Really, the only reason he's hospitalized is for physiotherapy for nerve damage to his hands," Mrs. Britton said.

But for 20 minutes on Dec. 13, he seemed to be dead.

When he was brought to the hospital, his breathing had stopped, his pupils had dilated and his temperature was 87 degrees. He had been under water between 17 and 30 minutes.

"Our concern was, is he going to sustain himself and become an independent human being again?" said Dr. Bruno Rahn, the physician in charge.

He received mouth-to-mouth resuscitation and heart massage in the ambulance.

In the hospital, doctors wrapped the boy in a heating device that circulated 105-degree water around his body. His temperature started to climb.

Using a breathing apparatus, Adrenalin injections and electric shocks, doctors established an erratic heart beat. Then the boy's cardiopulmonary system started to work.

"First, when he starts to get a heartbeat back, you say, 'Oh, my God, he's been dead 20 minutes. What if he survives?'" Rahn said. "You can't play God. Here's a heart that wants to live, so you support it."

Then the boy's pupils started to respond to light, and he was on the road to recovery.

Now the only injury that remains is nerve damage in his hands, which doctors believe will respond to physiotherapy.

Last Of Murder Victims' Identities Established

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Police have identified the third murder victim found in the trunk of a car as Sheri Denice Averhart, 22, of Santa Rosa.

Three persons had been found early Friday shot in the head and stuffed into the trunk of a car in Orinda.

Identified earlier were Oran Leo Hankins Jr., 26, of Sacramento and Barbara Diane Lesenko-Spinelli, 28, of Benicia. Hankins and Miss Averhart were dead when the car was found, and Miss Lesenko-Spinelli died a few hours later.

Freed Marine 'Fidgety' Viewing Hostages In Iran Embassy

PRAIRIE VIEW (AP) — David Walker, one of 13 hostages released last month from the U.S. embassy in Tehran, got a watch, some cologne and "a lovely blue velour shirt" for Christmas, his mother said.

"We're having a beautiful Christmas. David and Diane (his fiancee) got me a negligee. It's burgundy, and oh, it's out of sight. Out of sight," said Arie Ruth Walker from the family home in Prairie View.

"Lord knows what else he got. Some things he hasn't opened yet. He hasn't been still long enough. He's over at his grandmother's now," Mrs. Walker said.

Walker, a strapping Marine sergeant, usually is on duty somewhere else in the world and was originally scheduled to be in Okinawa for the Christmas holidays.

But when he was taken captive with other Americans at the embassy in Tehran, six days before he was to go to Okinawa, all those plans went out the window.

His concern for the 50 Americans still held captive has cut into his Christmas enjoyment, he said.

"I still don't have the Christmas spirit. I feel uneasy just being home. It all goes back to my friends over there," he said earlier in the week.

"I said I wasn't going to leave the embassy. They said I had no choice. What a lot of people don't understand is, we Marines are really close. We live together, eat together, sleep together. We're just like a family. I feel like a part of my family won't be here."

Mrs. Walker said her son has been "very fidgety."

He watched television coverage, she said, of ministers holding Christmas services for various of the hostages.

"He didn't say anything, but you can tell he was very concerned. He doesn't give his opinion about it, at least not to us," Mrs. Walker said.

Walker has spent much of his 30-day leave working on his car and is anxious for Thursday, the day he is to report back for duty at Quantico, Va.

Mrs. Walker said she is happy to have had all 10 of her children home for Christmas but is conscious of her son's dilemma.

"It's kind of hard for David. He left quite a few friends back there. When he's here us we try to make him as happy as possible," she said.

David's brother, Bobby Glen, has spent as much time as possible in Prairie View since Thanksgiving, when David was released.

"We feel now he needs our love. When he leaves, we don't know when we'll see him again," he said.

"I'm not saying anything is going to happen, but sometimes it takes something to happen to get people closer together. Until then, you never realize how much they mean to you. I'd say this is a gift to have him home for Christmas."

Two Killed During Attack In Waco Suburb

VALLEY MILLS (AP) — Two men were killed and a third man seriously wounded by "two or three men" who stabbed them Monday night at an intersection in this Waco suburb, authorities said Tuesday.

The three graduated from Hico High School, although two of them had moved to Waco. They were said to be driving to Hico after getting off work in Waco.

The attack occurred at the intersection of Farm Roads 56 and 1637, officials said. The Bosque County sheriff's department got the report on the incident at 6:42 p.m. Monday.

The dead men were identified as Mike Kilgo, 23, of Waco and Ervin Haynes, 23, of Waco. Both were stabbed in the throat, officials said.

Loyd Roberson, 22, of Hico, underwent surgery Monday night after being stabbed in the back. He was reported in critical but stable condition in a Clifton hospital.

Bosque County Sheriff Dave Roberts led the investigation, with help from the Department of Public Safety and the Texas Rangers. Valley Mills sits on the boundary of McLennan and Bosque counties.

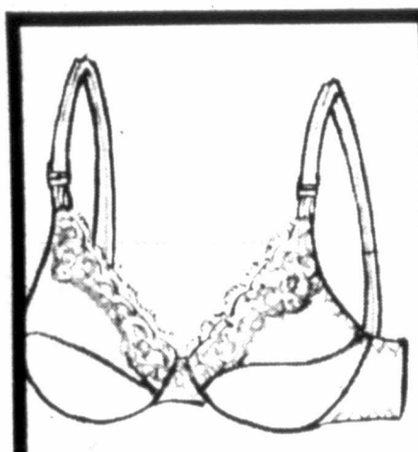

"The officials have no idea what prompted the attack. There are no witnesses, and the boy who survived hasn't been able to give an accurate description. He just said it was two or three men driving what he thought was a red car," said Ernest V. Meador, editor of the Hico News-Review.

Officials theorize two of the victims were outside their car at the time they were stabbed and that the third was sitting in the car or attempting to get out and fell out.

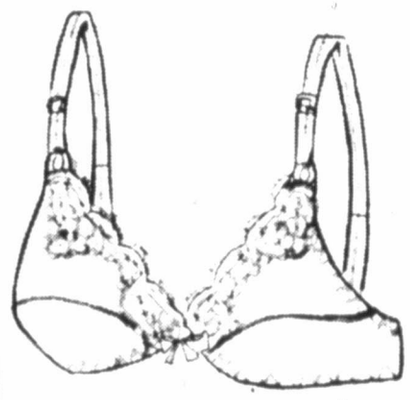

The first national political convention in the United States was held in 1831 by the short-lived Anti-Mason Party.

RESPECT DIGNITY OF CHILD — Pope John Paul II reads his Christmas address from the balcony of St. Peter's Basilica in the Vatican City Tuesday. Delivering his "Urbi ed Orbi" (To the City and the World) message, the Pontiff called on mankind Christmas Day to despect the dignity of the child. Honeymoon For Popular Pope May Be At An End

VATICAN CITY (AP) — John Paul II is ranked as one of the most popular popes in modern church history, but his worldwide flock doesn't always march to the same tune.

Now after 14 months in the papacy, the Polish-born pontiff is finding his authority questioned, clergy speaking out and even ignoring his will and his diplomatic initiatives thwarted.

As the first non-Italian pope in 455 years, relatively young at 59 and with a good deal of personal magnetism, the former archbishop of Krakow raised certain expectations among liberal Roman Catholics who perhaps overlooked the conservative stance of the church in his native country.

A staunch defender of human rights, he now stands accused of "inhumane policies" by Professor Hans Kung, one of the world's most prominent Roman Catholic theologians who was stripped of his teaching credentials by the Vatican for "contempt" of church doctrine.

Liberal theologians on both sides of the Atlantic have jumped to Kung's defense; 70 theologians in the United States signed a statement of support saying that Kung "is indeed a Roman Catholic theologian" — contrary to the finding by the Vatican's Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith which was approved by the pope himself. A crowd of 2,000 turned out to hear Kung when he lectured at his post in Tuebingen, West Germany, on the day after the Vatican decree.

Paul VI, now described by some as a conciliatory force, in fact was accused by liberals including several cardinals of running the church in an authoritarian manner for his uncompromising stands on priestly celibacy and birth control.

Pope John Paul II has held to the same positions, along with keeping similar bans on divorce and abortion, setting down his views in a speech to American bishops in Chicago in October. He reiterated his condemnation of abortion in a Christmas Day message Tuesday.

Last March, a Gallup poll survey of 1,405 Catholic households in the United States found that 73 percent believe the church should allow contraception, and church officials admit the birth control ban is widely flouted by Catholics.

Some churchmen say it was Pope Paul's birth control encylical "Humane Vitae" in 1968 that brought on open criticism of the papacy and a chipping away at papal authority.

"Except in core matters of faith, people today feel very free to disagree with the pope and still consider themselves good Christians and good Catholics," said the Rev. Harrie Verhoeven, the Rome-based Dutch superior general of the Sacramentine Order.

Some churchmen say that the 1962-65 Vatican Council created a new and open atmosphere in the church and that many Roman Catholics no longer fear excommunication for speaking out or questioning papal authority and teaching.

"It's not that Catholics don't listen to the pope," said one priest who works closely with the Vatican, "but since the council, there is a better understanding of exactly what is infallibility."

The Vatican describes the pope as spiritual leader of 720 million Roman Catholics in the world. But in Rome, the pope's own diocese and a city of 3 million baptized Catholics, less than a third go to Mass on Sundays. Pope John Paul in a recent visit to a Rome parish referred to "paper Catholics," an admission that those loyal to his authority are far fewer than official statistics would indicate.

In recent decades, the Roman Catholic Church has been swept by demands for a cutting of centralized power while dissenters have raised their voices both individually and in organized groups.

In an unprecedented gesture, Sister Theresa Kane, a leading American nun, boldly confronted the pope during his visit to Washington and appealed to him to admit women to "all ministries in our church."

The pontiff has urged nuns to look like nuns and wear their religious habits, but at a meeting here last month of mothers superior of religious orders, half were said to have shown up in ordinary street clothes.

He went to Ireland in September and made an eloquent plea to the "men of violence" to lay down their arms, but it fell on the deaf ears of Irish terrorists.

He dispatched his envoy to Iran to win the freedom of the Americans held at the U.S. Embassy on humanitarian grounds, but was rebuffed by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini who asked why the Vatican kept silent during the regime of the deposed shah.

Another challenge within the church comes from the traditionalist French Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, who was suspended from his priestly functions by Pope Paul. He just ordained 12 new deacons at his Swiss seminary in continued defiance of the Vatican.

But Vatican observers can also count the success and immense drawing power of the 59-year-old pope as he begins to put his imprint on the papacy after years of drift under Paul. He has taken up the mediation of a territorial conflict between Chile and Argentina, two predominantly Roman Catholic countries, defusing threats of armed conflict.

Pilgrims in Rome from Poland and elsewhere in Eastern Europe say they follow broadcasts on Vatican Radio and the U.S.-goverment financed Radio Free Europe on the pope's activities, which get bare mention in the communist-controlled press.

Christmas Message From Pope Focuses On Dignity Of Child

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II Tuesday delivered a Christmas message reaffirming the Roman Catholic church's opposition to abortion and urging society to respect the "dignity" of children. He then read Christmas greetings in 34 languages.

Under chilly and overcast skies, a crowd estimated by the Vatican at more than 50,000 packed St. Peter's Square for the pope's traditional "Urbi et Orbi" (to the city and the world) blessing from the balcony of St. Peter's Basilica, draped with a huge red, white and gold papal emblem.

Millions watched the blessing on a worldwide television hookup of 37 nations in North and South America, Europe, Asia and Africa.

The 59-year-old, Polish-born pontiff, clad in bright white robes and gold-trimmed miter and carrying a gold staff, delivered the 1,000-word message in Italian in firm and clear tones.

"The dignity of the child demands a very great sensitivity of conscience," the pontiff said. "For the child is that delicate spot around which the morality of families, of whole nations and of society, is either formed or broken."

In a clear reference to the church's disapproval of abortion, John Paul said the child is "a test of our respect for the mystery of life, upon which from the very first moment of conception the Creator places the imprint of His image and likeness."

Thousands of children, muffled up in wool hats and scarves, let loose balloons and waved streamers saying "Buon Natale, Papa" (Merry Christmas, Pope).

Thunderous applause greeted John Paul after he gave the apostolic blessing and began reading Christmas greetings in languages that including Swahili, Chinese, Arabic and all East European tongues.

In English, he said: "A blessed Christmas, in the joy and peace of Christ."

Prolonged applause and carol-singing by Mexican and Spanish girls twice brought the pope out on the balcony. The pope thanked the crowd in different languages and declared in Latin: "Christ is born for us, come let us adore him."

In his address, the pope noted that the world has observed 1979 as the Year of the Child and said the child is also "a great and continuous test of our fidelity to ourselves, of our fidelity to humanity."

"The dignity of the child demands the greatest responsibility on the part of parents and also the greatest responsibility

Hints From Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

Don't you just hate to try to remove the metal disc on votive candles along with the wax goop that's left in a decorative glass holder after the candle has done its do?

A candle shop owner told me the answer...

Put a teaspoon of water in the container before adding the candle. The "remains" will pop right out when the candle has finished burning. — Sandra R.

Three cheers for the candle shop owner. This trick really works, friends.

Just be sure your holder is glass. Since sizes vary, add enough water to barely cover the bottom of the holder. (It may take slightly more than a teaspoon.)

Should the holder be larger at the bottom than the top, use a table knife and gently break any remaining wax at the bottom in half. It will come out easy as pie.

Since so many of us are candle lovers, your hint is good to know, especially at this season of the year. Thanks! — Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

If you make too many biscuits, don't throw them away. Put them in a plastic bag, close it and put in the refrigerator.

When you want biscuits again, just take them out, put a little milk in a small bowl, then roll the biscuits around, one at a time, in the milk.

Place them in a pan or pie plate and put in a hot oven for a few minutes.

When heated, they taste as good as fresh. — Mrs. Robert McCain

• • •

DEAR HELOISE:

My favorite tip is for storing neck or head scarves.

I roll them neatly and insert them in cardboard tubes from toilet tissue rolls; then lay them in rows in the shallow drawers of a small chest.

Larger ones can go in paper towel rolls. Just enough peeks out the ends for instant identification.

Even stacked in a deeper drawer, the scarves are easy to see. Sure makes for tidy storage. — Josephine Stevens

• • •

DEAR HELOISE:

Tired of scratching away at blackened burner pans from your stove?

Simply soak them overnight in a solution of dishwasher detergent. In the morning go over them with a wad of nylon net.

Most of the baked-on accumulation will have slipped off and the rest vanishes with a small amount of scrubbing.

Voila! The pans are shining again. (But wear gloves to keep your hands nice.)

My husband, who shares our housework, taught me this one. — J.N.H.

Lucky you to have a husband who's not only smart but one who helps you around the house. (But I'm sure you already know that.)

Give him a hug and a great big thank you from me for a super hint. — Love, Heloise

• • •

DEAR HELOISE:

I've used your helpful hints many times and here's one for all your other readers.

It has to do with those expandable pegged wooden racks used for hanging coffee cups or as a clothes rack.

I have one hanging on my closet door and had problems with my clothes slipping off and falling to the floor.

I solved that by wrapping a rubber band around the end of each wooden peg. No more slips! — Mrs. Eugene Kowraoh

How smart you are! Thanks — Heloise

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK

I have always directed my Christmas column toward families who are caught up in a tinsel marathon of tree-trimming, stocking-stuffing, music-making, dog-barking and children-squealing.

They're so busy that sometimes I get only a glance before the garbage is wrapped in me. Occasionally, someone puts me on the back porch to catch the slush from boots. If I'm lucky I escape the licking flames when I get thrown into the fireplace with discarded wrappings and warranties.

So, I've decided to write to all of you today who have the time to read me...those who have just moved to an area and haven't made new friends...those who are alone because they can't afford the trip home...or those whose families have been splintered by distance or disinterest. And you are alone.

Let me tell you about my grandfather. He lived by himself in a little trailer in southwest Ohio until he died a few years ago. I always felt sorry for him when I visited at Christmas because he only had about five cards on top of the TV set, two or at the most three packages to open and a pitiful artificial tree with a single strand of lights that bubbled like they were going to boil over.

You would have thought those pathetic trappings were straight from the Sistine Chapel.

He'd pick up each card, trace the scene with his fingers and marvel, "This is pretty enough to put in a frame." Then he'd recite the message inside which he had memorized.

The boxes were another delight. He'd shake them and make a guess as to what they held and place them gently under the tree. Then he'd prime you for that big moment when he said, "I'm going to light the tree for you." My sewing machine had a bigger light.

The year before he died when he spent Christmas in the hospital, he raved the entire visiting period over a favor on his dinner tray — a styrofoam Santa Claus with a red gumdrop hat held on by a toothpick.

Every Christmas since then, I have had to ask myself: "Can I quote a single line from the stack of cards I receive? Can I visit without keeping an eye on my watch? Can I become childlike with excitement over a box that obviously holds a handkerchief? Can I live with my solitude without self-pity?"

God help me. I think my grandfather felt sorry for me.

MUSHROOMS

Never eat wild mushrooms, cautions Mary K. Sweeten, a foods and nutrition specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. They can be poisonous, and people die every year from eating those from unknown sources while on vacation.

To Your Good Health

By PAUL DONOHUE, M.D.

Dear Dr. Donohue: My name is (deleted) and I am doing a project for a class I have. Two other friends are helping. We are asking questions about drugs. For example, what's the most addictive drug? . . . We are a short class so we need the answers as soon as possible. — S.S.

You asked a lot of other questions. If you will give me a little more time I'll try to do better. If you don't, both you and I are going to flunk the course.

It is important to understand what addiction means. Psychological addiction (I guess we might call it mental addiction and get away with that) means that the drugs are needed in order to feel good. Without the drugs the addict is down all the time and has little or no energy.

Physical (and I guess we might call that bodily) addiction means that without continued use of the drugs bad things happen to the body. The addict suffers withdrawal symptoms without the drugs in his body. Sometimes, these are so severe that convulsions or even death may occur unless he receives treatment.

Heroin, morphine and methadone can cause physical dependence in a very short time when not used under a doctor's direction.

These are not the only addicting drugs. Sleeping pills, tranquilizers, alcohol and nicotine are all addicting.

The lesson for you and your classmates is to avoid all drugs unless they are needed for a special purpose. Morphine, for example, is a great pain reliever. If used wisely and sparingly it has a legitimate role in the medical treatment of pain. Used for anyting else it can be a great danger.

Please, S.S., give me more time. Then I'll try to answer all your questions. I don't want us to get a bad mark. Let me know how we do.

• • •

Dear Dr. Donohue: Has any data been compiled regarding body building and the effect on the heart of extra weight gain? We know some of the results of this hobby, but won't the heart suffer dramatically?

Our son has gone from 180 pounds to 220 pounds. He is 6 feet, 2 inches tall. He swears by body building. — Mrs. N.R.

Body building in itself does not harm the heart. If anything, it helps it, especially if it is accompanied by other exercise to develop the heart's efficiency as a pump and the lungs' efficiency as an oxygen reservoir. Activities like jogging and rope jumping are what I mean.

If body building turns your son on, nothing wrong. I assume that the extra 40 pounds is chiefly muscle. I have not been able to find any statistics covering the effect of body building on the heart.

NOTE TO M.M. — You are correct. I was wrong. One cup of whole milk provides 250 milligrams of calcium. A daily intake of 800 milligrams of calcium is more than adequate for an adult.

P.S. — The reader is a medical dietitian, so should know.

• • •

Dear Dr. Donohue: Is rheumaticus peliosis the same as rheumatic fever and can it cause a heart murmur? — L.M.

The correct medical name is peliosis rheumatica, also called "Schonlein's disease." It has nothing to do with rheumatic fever, but it's easy to see how the word "rheumatica" would throw you off.

This illness (peliosis rheumatica) is characterized by an allergic skin rash and redness along with swelling and itching. There is also joint pain and swelling (where the word rheumatica comes into it).

Peliosis rheumatica usually is what is called "self-limiting," meaning it subsides on its own, usually in from one to six weeks. Very rarely the kidneys may be affected, but not the heart or the heart valves, which may be damaged in rheumatic fever.

Many medical words and combinations of words sound alike and I'm sure give rise to similar confusions among patients.

• • •

Dear Dr. Donohue: I understand that osteomyelitis is inflammation of the bone. Isn't this a form of cancer? — B.N.

No. It is NOT a form of cancer. Osteomyelitis is bone inflammation caused by infection. There are many types, based on the type of infecting organism. By far the most common is staphylococcus (in about 75 percent of cases).

Much heart trouble is preventable. Write to Dr. Donohue, P.O. Box 11210, Chicago, Ill. 60611, for a copy of his booklet, "How to Take Care of Your Heart." Enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope and 35 cents.

Dr. Donohue welcomes reader mail but regrets that, due to the tremendous volume received daily, he is unable to answer individual letters. Readers' questions are incorporated in his column whenever possible.

Computers Help Students

NEW YORK (MNS) — Today teachers and parents are discovering a new educational tool that challenges the student to think creatively — the microcomputer.

Now that computers have become available, affordable and easy to use, they are becoming accepted and used as an exciting means of learning.

Students of all ages, from elementary school to college, can benefit from the microcomputer because it can be adapted to any level of learning, in virtually any subject. Its use develops and encourages the same skill in every student — the ability to think logically.

The greatest benefit a student can receive after only a few weeks of experience with the microcomputer results from writing original "programs."

A program has its beginning with an idea. This idea is nurtured by the student until it develops into a series of conconsecutive instructions for the computer to follow.

When the thought process is completed by the student and his idea has become a plan, the program is ready for the computer.

By creating and writing a program, the student practices logical thinking. Any incorrect step, illogical order or omission of a step results in either incorrect operation of the program of the program refusing to run to completion. The student soon realizes the importance of organized thoughts and actions.

Programs can be written for anything from a history review to a perfect menu for home economics planned by the computer. The programming procedure is standard — a step-by-step set of instructions demanding decision-making and attention to details, which is entered into the computer via the keyboard. A special easy-to-learn computer language called "BASIC" is used to write the programs and to "talk" to the computer.

There are pre-recorded programs available and ready to use before the student learns BASIC, or if the user needs the immediate access of a pre-written program.

No prior knowledge of computers or computer programming is necessary to operate a microcomputer. To operate the TRS-80 microcomputer, for example, you can simply play, or "load" a pre-recorded program on cassette tape into the computer rather than having to write an original program.

Most microcomputers are composed of the same basic parts and perform similar functions with variations. The TRS-80 Microcomputer System consists of a 53-key professional keyboard unit, a video monitor, a cassette recorder and a power supply.

Also included is a lightly written, yet extremely comprehensive instruction manual that gives the beginner programming information.

A student can never outgrow a microcomputer. As the student's needs expand, the microcomputer can expand with him. The TRS-80 can be converted to perform more complex tasks with greater power and speed. The conversion can be quickly and easily made.

A computer can only be as effective as its programming. Whatever benefits and information the computer can give, they must be initiated by the efforts of the programmer.

The computer, a means of using and expanding the knowledge of the students, does not create a dependency upon itself; rather, it encourages independent thinking.

This fall when you think of school, think of the microcomputer — an education in thinking.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: Our son fathered a little boy but did not marry "Loretta." He offered marriage but she refused, saying she didn't love him enough to live with him and felt the environment would be unhealthy for the child. My son is supporting the child, sees him often and is a good father.

To complicate matters, my daughter is very friendly with "Loretta." She also loves the youngster and invites mother and son to her home often. My husband has seen the boy a few times and he adores him, too.

I am being pressured from all sides to treat this kid the same as I treat our legitimate grandchildren. In other words, invite him and his unwed mother to our home and make them a part of our family.

Am I wrong because I feel "Loretta" is immoral and the child is not my real grandchild because his parents never married? I need your thinking, Ann. I am too emotionally involved to be objective. Please help me. — In Ohio

Dear Ohio: The boy is flesh of your flesh, blood of your blood. Even though his parents did not marry, he is indeed your grandson.

If you open your heart to this innocent child, your own life will be far richer. Please talk to your clergyman. I cannot possibly tell you in a few sentences all that you need to hear.

• • •

Dear Ann Landers: Some of my friends have trained their young children to answer every telephone call with "Who is this?" before Mommy or Daddy will come to the phone.

When I call a buddy to ask if he would like to play golf, or an employee to inquire about changing shifts, I find it pretty darned insulting to be cleared through a five-year-old "secretary."

Am I wrong to feel this way? If you agree, how would you handle the situation? — Irked In Austin

Dear Irked: I can understand your irritation when asked by a youngster to identify yourself. Actually, the fault is yours. The proper procedure when telephoning is to identify yourself at once no matter who answers. Example: "This is Mr. Jones. May I speak to your father, please?"

• • •

Dear Ann Landers: I am 20, my fiance is 19. We are getting married soon and we don't want to start a family until we are financially able to manage. We figure it should take us from three to four years.

I have been studying up on birth-control methods, trying to decide which is best for us. We can't afford to make any mistakes. Last week I came across a book on astrobiology which says a female can conceive ONLY during a two-hour period every month. According to the author, if a woman follows this method of birth control she will be 100 percent safe.

Please give me the address of a good astrologer with whom I can work out my chart. Thank you. — Soon To Be Married In Battle Creek

Dear Soon: Sorry, I don't want any part of this one. It's too risky.

If a woman's periods are even slightly irregular, she could find herself knitting tiny garments a lot sooner than she had planned.

Young Singer Sets Debut At KLLL Opry

Many singers admit their first musical discovery came in a church choir, and so it was for Michele Mason. Like other aspiring singers, Michele has not stopped in her quest to sing. But she has made her beginning at the age of 13.

Michele will be making her first performance at the KLLL West Texas Saturday Night Opry at 8 p.m. Jan. 12 in Municipal Auditorium.

Even before Michele began to sing in her church choir, she accompanied her father, who plays the guitar. It was her father who called and obtained an audition for her to appear on the opry. She made a tape and was interviewed at the Don Caldwell Studios, co-sponsor of the opry.

At school, Michael also has made an impact with her singing. She appeared in her school variety show in elementary school, after a teacher recommended her. At Mackenzie Junior High School she also performed in a variety show. Currently, Michele is a member of the all-region choir and is taking piano lessons to augment her singing.

Admitting she had an idol, Michele said she desires to be like Tanya Tucker. In fact, she has chosen Buddy Holly's "Not Fade Away," also recorded by Miss Tucker, for her performance at the opry.

"I want to be a singer. I don't want to be anything but that," Michele said. "I want to be known. I always watch the country music shows and wish I were there."

MICHELE MASON

Her mother is excited about her daughter's success. "I think she's great," said Mrs. Mason. "But I can't get used to watching her on stage. I get so nervous."

The opry will provide the largest audience for Michele. But the size does not seem to lessen her enthusiasm. "It's going to be fun," Michele said, "this is a dream for me."

As far as any other music in Michele's life, there is none. "I haven't thought about any other music," she said. "All I care about is country."

Performing at the opry along with Michele will be Don Caldwell, Jim Fullingim, Cecil D. Caldwell, David House, Tommie Anderson and Zelda Ellison.

An appearance will also be made by South Plains Bluegrass, Curley Lawler, plus Buzz and Jewette James, with the music of Bob Wills.

Newcomers Rex Thomas, Wesley Putnam and Charles Terry also will perform.

In addition, on stage will be the Opry Stage Band and The Maines brothers, with Steve Sever of KLLL serving as master of ceremonies.

Tickets are available at Luskey's Western Store and at the two locations of Flipside Records.

Federal Officials Authorize Moves To Help Small Savers

In the hopes of attracting more funds into housing, federal officials have authorized a new 2 1/2 year savings certificate.

The new certificate, according to Charley Pope, executive vice president of first Federal Savings and Loan, is tied to the rate being paid on 2 1/2 year Treasury Bills less one-half percent for savings institutions and three-quarters percent for less commercial banks. When interest is compounded, savers at savings and loans receive slightly more interest than they would on a 2 1/2 year Treasury security, Pope explained.

A series of regulatory moves designed to help the small saver — including the new 2 1/2 year certificate tied to the yield on Treasury securities — was announced jointly today by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the First Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Reserve Board and the National Credit Union Administration.

The new certificate replaces the 4-year variable rate deposit that was established effective last July 1. All fixed rate ceilings remain in effect, however.

The changes, which will go into effect January 1, also will increase the ability of federally insured depository institutions to compete for funds with market instruments which are not subject to interest rate ceilings.

Service Program To Be Studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hearings have been scheduled for mid-March on a proposed feasibility study for a program in which young people could volunteer for a year or more of non-military public service after finishing school.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said the subcommittee on child and human development, which he heads, will open hearings on March 13.

The 18-to 24-month study would be conducted by a special presidential commission to be created as part of legislation cosponsored by Cranston and five other senators.

Cranston said his subcommittee will "solicit a wide diversity of views from all concerned in a full and fair exploration of this entire issue."

Rhodesian Police Nab Berserk Gunman

SALISBURY (AP) — A man peppered the street with automatic rifle fire from a downtown Salisbury restaurant and held off police for two hours Tuesday until they they drove him out with tear gas and captured him, authorities reported. A dead man was found inside, killed by a bullet.

Police Superintendent Seamus Power said police shots and tear gas drove the guhman onto the front steps. He said the man had thrown down an automatic rifle of the kind used by the Rhodesian army but reached for something in a pocket and a police marksman shot him in the left shoulder. He was taken away in an ambulance.

Police did not disclose the identities of the two men. They said the gunman entered the restaurant after the Christmas lunch crowd had left and before the dinner hour. They said two waiters were setting tables. One fled and the other locked himself in a storeroom until police arrived.

There was no explanation for the incident. One police source said the man had gone "penga," the local word for berserk.

GET READY FOR The New Year (the easy way)
FLORENCE SUTTON LOST OVER 124 POUNDS AND 143 INCHES
Since I started Pat Walker's I have lost 124 lbs and 134 inches.
A lot has happened since my first picture appeared in the paper. I have lost more weight and I have even lost a 1/2 size in my shoe size.
Needless to say, I feel and look like a different person.
I made a New Year's resolution to do something about my weight problem. I think I have kept that resolution. I have tried a number of diets but the Pat Walker routine is one I could live with the rest of my life.
The biggest thrill I get is shopping for clothes and being able to pick and choose. When you wear a size 24 1/2 you don't have much choice, but size 8 you have a better selection.
If you have a weight problem this is the place to come.

Religion Became Diffuse, Varied In 70's Decade

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

Religion in the United State became more diffuse, varied and individualistic in the 1970s, with some setbacks to organized church life. It was a decade of anti-institutionalism and erratic new pathways.

They made for a jumbled, sometimes discordant religious pulse in an increasingly secularized atmosphere as the historic faiths struggled to sustain their followings and their ideals.

After a period of slippage, religion in the United States seems mainly in a "holding pattern" as the country turns toward the 1980s, says pollster George Gallup Jr. in summing up accumulated data about the decade.

"All signs point to the fact that the United States is suffering a moral crisis of the first dimension," he adds, with a spreading breakdown of standards indicating the coming decade "may not be a very pleasant decade in which to live."

Yet, with all the lumps that religion took in the '70s, including defections, ruptures and continuing turmoil over disciplines, it also experienced some exhilarating moments and new strengths.

Women gained increased stature in religious leadership, including entry into the Episcopal priesthood, the Lutheran and Southern Baptist ministries, and some of the Jewish rabbinate, all in the '70s.

They encountered a roadblock to the Roman Catholic priesthood in the 1977 Vatican declaration that they were ineligible because they lacked natural resemblance to Jesus, a stand reaffirmed by Pope John Paul II.

But the 1978 election of this new pope from Poland, the first non-Italian in 455 years and the first eastern European in history, his faith steeled under Nazism and Communism, gave a robust and heroic image to world-wide Christianity.

His rapid-paced travels, including his massively acclaimed rounds in six U.S. cities in October, were generally assessed as adding at least a brief spark to faith among peoples widely groping for it.

Theological ties expanded among the churches, Roman Catholicism, Eastern Orthodoxy and Protestantism, with a succession of major doctrinal accords, but with few concrete operational changes made to reflect the new agreements.

For the first time, however, the three major branches of Christianity had a "common Bible," tentatively achieved in 1973 and more fully in 1977, with notes indicating slightly varying views of a few subsidiary sections.

But wrenching controversy tore at the religious sphere over the 1973 U.S. Supreme Court decison legalizing abortion, with surveys indicating most Catholics and Protestants similarly want greater restrictions than the court permits on such operations.

At the end of the Vietnam war, which had been widely criticized in religious circles, "open door" contacts wer restored between religious leadership and the White Houe after a 10-year lapse.

But new federal regulations, impinging on religion, portended other church-state friction as the decade closed. Traditional faith also confronted challenges from an array of new ideologies and movements.

They arose profusely in the early '70s and still proliferated, often dying out to be replaced by others, an ever-changing miscellany of self-soothing techniques and insulating groups.

Both of eastern and western varieties, they often were in retreat from society's strains and responsibilities, some of them arousing wide conflict over indoctrination controls and "deprogramming" attempts.

In 1978, 900 members of one particularly authoritarian cult — The Peoples Temple — died in a mass murder-suicide at the bidding of their leader, the Rev. Jim Jones, at a Guyana jungle hideaway to which the group had migrated from California.

The historic religions weathered internal conflicts, with factions splitting from the Episcopal Church, the Presbyterian Church U.S. and the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod. Dissidence also hit Roman Catholicism in the Swiss-based Lefebvre movement with outposts in this country, resisting reforms.

But closer cross-denominational ties flowered in the effervescent "charismatic" movement, a mingled Catholic-Protestant effusion of fervor, prayer, Bible study and "tongue-singing" spontaneity that emerged near the start of the '70s, and widely seasoned the churches.

Other new strategies and cooperative works developed, including livelier Christian links with Judaism, sometimes frayed by tensions over Israel. Catholics and Protestants began jointly using their stock holdings to apply ethical leverage to corporate practices.

The so-called "electronic church," television stations and programs run by evangelists mixing entertainment with appeals for faith and funds, became a widespread phenomenon.

Past conflict between evangelical and mainline churches over whether faith should focus on "personal salvation" or "social justice" diminished, with both sides generally recognizing both aspects as important.

Catholicism simplified its annulment procedures at the start of the decade, later lifting its old rule excommunicating divorced, remarried Catholics and encouraging their church participation, though still barring them from Holy Communion without further solutions.

Most denominations suffered cutbacks in staff during the decade under economic pressures of inflation. Declines in memberships eroded most major Protestant denominations, and last year hit Roman Catholicism, also plagued by sharp drops in nuns and seminary candidates for the priesthood.

Affiliation with the historic religious bodies as the decade ended totaled 131 million, 60.8 percent of the American population, down from the peak of 64.3 perent in 1965 and 62.4 percent at the start of the 1970s.

America Takes Social Issues To High Court During 1970s

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

Abortion.
Capital punishment.
The war in Vietnam. Watergate.
Sexual equality. School desegregation.
Crime in the streets. "Reverse discrimination."

The 1970s carried these emotional, often divisive topics to the Supreme Court, offering further proof of the sagacity of French statesman and author Tocqueville more than a century ago when he noted that in the United States all social issues eventually are phrased as legal questions.

Because the answers are dictated by nine individuals, the decade's most important development was the court's new cast of characters.

President Richard M. Nixon, who campaigned hard against the court's liberal tendencies under Chief Justice Earl Warren, had an opportunity to name a new "law and order" chief justice, Warren E. Burger, in 1969.

In 1970 and 1971, the chance to fill three more vacancies gave rise to what some who paint with a broad brush still call the "Nixon Court."

Harry A. Blackmun in 1970 eventually filled the vacancy created by Abe Fortas' resignation, but not until the Senate beat back two other Nixon nominees — Clement Haynsworth and G. Harrold Carswell. In 1971 Lewis F. Powell Jr. was named to replace the retired Hugo Black, and William H. Rehnquist took the seat left by the retired John Harlan.

Each of the three new justices proved to be far more conservative in his view of the court's mission and in matters of individual rights than the man he replaced.

One of the Warren court's leading liberal lights, William O. Douglas, retired in 1975 after a stroke forced him to end the longest Supreme Court career ever. President Gerald R. Ford appointed centrist John Paul Stevens to replace him.

Stevens joined the four Nixon appointees, "swing vote" Justices Potter Stewart and Byron R. White and the Warren court's two liberal holdovers, William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall.

Throughout the decade, the court retrenched on matters of individual rights when such rights conflicted with societal interests. While turning aside repeated requests to overturn the Warren court's Miranda decision on the rights of criminal suspects, the court of the 1970s has added a list of conditions to those rights.

It also has narrowed individual access to federal courts and tried in a series of decisions to limit federal judges' discretionary powers.

But even with a majority that likes to play things close to the vest, the Supreme Court's aesome power repeatedly touched American life in profound ways.

In 1973 the court legalized abortions.

In 1972 it outlawed the death penalty as then applied in al states but four years later said death can be a proper punishment for convicted murderers.

In 1974 the justices forced President Richard M.Nixon to resign when they ruled unanimously that he had to surrender 30 White House tape recordings to Watergate prosecutors.

In 1978 and 1979, the court approved of affirmative action as a permissible tool to make up for past discrimination against racial minorities and women — even when such special help may hurt the educational and employment opportunities of white men.

In 1971 it refused to bar publication of newspaper articles based on classified government documents, the so-called Pentagon Papers, detailing the history of America's Vietnam war efforts.

Abortion, the death penalty and affirmative action remained major recurring themes of the decade — along wth school desegregation, sexual equality, obscenity and freedom of the press.

In 1971, the court used a North Carolina case to rule that busing of school children may be used to integrate schools. In 1973, the court used a case involving Denver's school system to extend its racial desegregation rulings to northern cities.

The court issued at least one major school desegregation decision in each of the last three years.

The Warren court long ignored the rights of women, but the current court in 1971 began a continuing examination of sexual equality. In a landmark ruling called Reed vs. Reed, the court that year struck down for the first time ever a state law as unconstitutionally discriminatory against women.

Many victories for women's rights followed, but the justices have stopped short of giving women all the constitutional protection it gives to racial, religious or ethnic minorites.

In a 1973 landmark called Miller vs. California the court redefined obscenity and said it was up to local communities o fit that definition to specific cases. Obscenity cases, too, have returned to the justices with regularity.

Press freedoms have ridden a Supreme Court roller coaster through the 1970s. They have thrived most notably in the court's Pentagon Papers decision and when it ruled in 1976 that courts almost never may bar publication or broadcast of information already obtained by the news media.

They suffered when in 1972 the court ruled that reporters have no right to withhold confidential information or the names of confidential sources from grand juries.

They suffered also in a series of decisions stating that the Constitution's free-press guarantees do not extend to press "access" — a series culminating last June when the justices ruled that judges have broad powers to exclude the public and press from pretrial hearings in criminal cases.

Government Draws Fire Of Polish Primate

WARSAW (AP) — Poland's Roman Catholic primate, Cardinal Stefan Wyszynski, said in his Christmas sermon Tuesday it is government "mismanagement" that forces Poles to stand in line at butcher shops and food stores.

He added that the government's failings were due to "sad inability rather than bad will." Poland is a predominantly Catholic nation ruled by a Communist government. Poor harvests in the past few years have resulted in food and meat shortages.

The outspoken cardinal also spoke sharply of recent international tension over modernization of nuclear weaponry by the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance and the stiffening attitude of the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact.

He condemned those who, "by words of peace on their lips ... try to camouflage treacherous plans, who produce and deploy arms on the continents..."

He implored the major powers to "let the Poles live at home in peace."

Christmas Message Focuses On Child

in every sphere of society," he said.

John Paul again returned to the question of disarmament, a theme he has discussed repeatedly in recent months. Recalling his speech to the U.N. General Assembly in October, the pope said:

"We must ask ourselves whether there will continue to accumulate over the heads of this new generation of children the threat of common extermination for which the means are in the hands of the modern states, especially the major world powers. Are the children to receive the arms race from us as a necessary inheritance?

"... At the end of this Year of the Child and on the threshold of the new year, let that Child (Christ) speak of the rights of every child, speak of every child's dignity, its significance in our lives: in the life of every family and nation, in the life of all humanity."

Railroad Santa Elated

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Santa Claus traded his sleigh and reindeer this season for a commuter train in New Jersey.

On Conrail's Raritan Valley Line from Newark to Phillipsburg on the Delaware River, a jolly man in a red suit and white beard and a bundle on his back has been passing out candy to passengers.

Actualy, it was engineer Richard Seng, 55, of Catasauqua, Pa., who has been playing Santa Claus for five years.

"When I worked on Saturdays I gave candy to the kids, so I decided to do the same at Christmas," he said. "I decided to dress up to help get people into the Christmas spirit. Plus it's a change for me. It's something different. You get tired of doing the same old thing every day."

The children on the line loved it. "That's Santa Claus! I know that's him!" yelled 4-year-old Carey Simmons of Plainfield.

"A lot of people look and then look again," Seng said. "They don't believe what they see. That's when I really get a charge."

Christmas Dolphin Born

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — It's a girl! Gabrielle, the Niagara Falls Aquarium's 22-year-old dolphin, gave birth on Christmas Day.

The calf, about 3½ feet long, tentatively was named "Christmas" by about 15 cheering spectators.

While dolphin pregnancies are believed to last about a year, officials at the aquarium had been saying "any day now" since October. Gabrielle began the initial phases of labor on Nov. 14 and had been having periodic contractions ever since.

'Santa' Violates Dress Code

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — When Gary Van Ryswyk got beind the weel of his bus wearing a Santa suit and carrying $20 worth of candy, he was just trying to bring some Christmas cheer to his passengers.

"The passengers loved it," said the driver for the Metropolitan Transit Commission. "When I got to intersections all sorts of people would honk. Little kids would come up smiling."

But when he got off the bus Monday, the MTC told him to stay off. He was suspended indefinitely for violating the dress code — dark green uniforms — and refusing to doff his costume.

"A Santa Claus suit has a big floppy hat, long sleeves and a beard that gets in your eyes. There is a big safety factor involved," MTC official Gary Abel said.

"I have a dress code that has to be followed," he added. "If I let someone wear a Santa suit, what would happen on Easter and Halloween?"

Scores On Nebraska Ballot

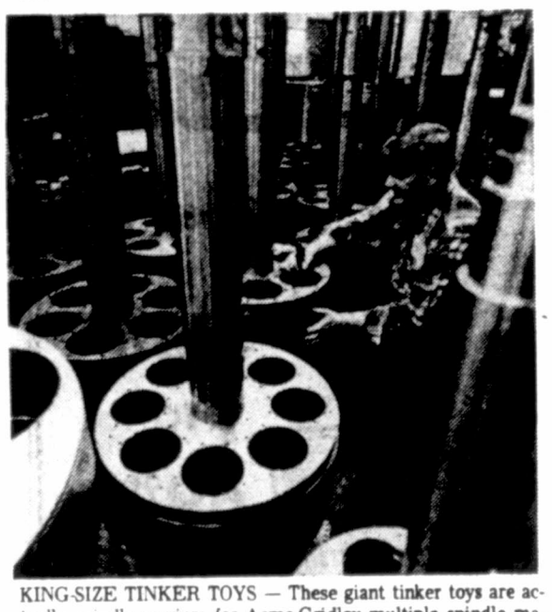

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — "Christmas" is a Democrat. And "Joseph" is a Republican who says he is "God's choice."

No joke. It's on record in the Secretary of State's office.

They are among scores of people who have notified Secretary of State Allen Beermann they are candidates for president.

In addition to Robert Christmas of Lansing, Mich., and Joseph Nowak of Moorestown, N.J., there is Joseph Andrew Robert Dominic Hendry Cloutier of Long Beach, Calif., Americus Liberator of Valentine, Neb., and Frank "Patriot Prophet" Starr of Hollywood, Calif.

Nationally recognized candidates automatically get on the May primary ballot in Nebraska. But by supplying the right number of signatures, almost anybody else can get on too.

Wrestling Teacher Protests

SOUTH WEYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — Diana Peckham isn't a sore loser. But when comedian Andy Kaufman wrestled her down in a nationally televised match, she said it wasn't a fair fight.

"I could have won legitimately, but it's his ball game and we had to play under his rules, which were one-sided," said the 26-year-old physical education teacher.

She wrestled Kaufman last week on NBC's "Saturday Night Live," answering his offer of $1,000 to any woman who could pin his shoulders in a three-minute match.

Kaufman, best known for his role as the mechanic Latka on the television series "Taxi," says he has beaten 45 women in wrestling matches.

Miss Peckham, a 6-foot, 160-pound teacher at the Norfolk County Agricultural School in Walpole, was one of several women who got an all-expense paid trip to New York for the challenge.

She said Kaufman used moves that are banned in amateur wrestling. Besides, the mat was smaller than regulation size and the referee was Kaufman's manager.

Her family also feels she didn't get a fair match. And they should know. Her father and coach, James C. Peckham, is athletic director at Emerson College and an Olympic wrestling coach. Her grandfather, Alex Peckham 74, was a professional wrestler in the 1930s.

Ten Most Watchable Listed

SAN DIEGO (AP) — What do actors Charles Bronson, Cary Grant, boxer Sugar Ray Leonard and talk show host Phil Donahue have in common? Watchability.

BRONSON

They're among 1979's "Ten Most Watchable Men," says the San Diego-based Man Watchers Inc.

Other winners were:

Erik Estrada of television's "CHiPs" — "Women would join the California Highway Patrol in record numbers if they thought they could share a motorcycle with him."

Actor Hal Linden of television's "Barney Miller," "a handsome and fascinating star;" actor Dean-Paul Martin, "destined to be America's newest male sex symbol;" British author Stephen Sheppard, "the Errol Flynn of the writing set;" actor James Woods, "built-in sex appeal;" and singer-actor Mac Davis.

'Bad Peanut' Out Of Jail

VACAVILLE, Calif. (AP) — William Carter Spann, President Carter's nephew and self-described "bad peanut" of the family, walked out of prison Monday into a waiting limousine.

Spann was paroled from the California Medical Facility, where he spent 3½ years on an armed robbery conviction.

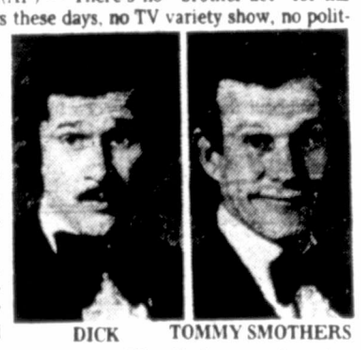

"Willie and I don't have a penny," his wife, Jane Frey Spann, said in a recent interview. "He doesn't have a profession or a job, and he hasn't gotten a cent from the family."

But he left prison in a limousine provided by the National Enquirer, and flanked by self-appointed bodyguards from the publication, which met Spann's demand to be paid for an interview.

And he has hired a literary agent, and hopes to earn money from interviews and lectures.

'Brother Act' Comes To End

BALTIMORE (AP) — There's no "brother act" for the Smothers Brothers these days, no TV variety show, no political satire.

DICK TOMMY SMOTHERS

Instead, they're starring in the national tour company of the musical comedy, "I Love My Wife," trying to establish themselves as actors.

After that, Tommy Smothers says he may turn to films, and Dick Smothers is interested in TV talk shows and production.

"We are still brothers," Tom said, "but we don't do the brother act anymore."

"We thought the act had run out the string," Dick said during a joint news conference here.

"On TV, we were starting to do imitations of ourselves," he said.

They don't see another "Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour" in their future, and they don't see themselves as political satirists either.

Asked to comment on the hostages being held in Tehran, Tommy Smothers said: "I really don't have a position. Things are going so fast nowadays. It's not like the Vietnam War era. Politicians are satirizing themselves. How do you make fun of someone who's already funny?"

Fun Trip To Egypt Ends; Boy Glad To Be Home At Christmas

EASLEY, S.C. (AP) — Sam Brown says his five-day trip to Egypt, compliments of President Anwar Sadat, was fun, but the 12-year-old is glad to be home for Christmas.

"There's no place like home," he said Tuesday.

Sam was invited to Egypt after he wrote a letter to Sadat telling the Egyptian president how much he admired him for making peace with Israel.

The boy was given a whirlwind tour of Egypt and taken to see many of the country's tourist attractions. But now Sam says he is anxious for a little peace and quiet.

"I would like to get back to normal. I was up early and went to bed late in Egypt and the press was everywhere. Now I'm hoping to have some rest," Sam said.

The boy arrived at Greenville-Spartanburg Metropolitan Airport shortly after midnight Monday, but was too keyed up to fall asleep when he arrived home and stayed awake until 5 a.m.

"I stayed up last night talking (to my parents) about my trip. I told them about the great temples I saw, the pyramids and the sound and light shows," Sam said.

He said he was "disappointed" that Sadat was unable to meet with him, but expressed "understanding" of Sadat's other commitments.

His family is still waiting to receive the gifts and souvenirs he brought home for them. Because of a missed airplane connection on the New York-Greenville leg of te trip, Sm's luggage is still in New York.

Among Sam's remembrances of Egypt are "two T-shirts with Sadat' face and a symbol of peace under them ... and all kinds of statues and stuff."

Member Of Church Choir Forms Ceramic Figurines Of Singers

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (UPI) — This group of carolers didn't sing on Christmas Eve.

And while they are not exactly portraits of the members of the First Presbyterian Church choir of South Charleston, the 32 figurines bear a strong resemblence — so much so that those individuals who know the choir members can pick out individuals by the coloring of the hair, eyes and clothing.

"They said they looked like them," Mrs. J. Otto Bonds said Tuesday. "The thing is, I had them placed as they do in the choir."

It was a "labor of love" for Mrs. Bonds — "a choir member for years and years" — when she started the project of making the entire choir in ceramic figurines.

Mrs. Bonds got the idea two or three years ago and started the tedious ceramic-glaze painting on the molding she had. She completed the "choir" last week — outfitted in old-fashioned Christmas attire.

She said she studied her subjects carefully, noting mannerisms of dress, coloring of hair and eyes. She took careful notes. Last July she began.

"This seems a little unusual because I kept it a deep, dark secret for so long," Mrs. Bonds said. "And I included personal things — the choir director had a mustache, so one had a mustache, one girl wears eye shadow, so one had eye shadow — personal things to identify them with."

Tassano, Frank- Baseball-P — July 3, 1953 — 28 41 18

Step 1 — Year of birth. Read down the left hand column to find the last number in the year of your birth then go across to the appropriate decade. For instance, if you were born in 1947, your number for Physical would be 21, Emotional 17, Intellectual 19. Note whether your numbers are preceded by an A or B; this will be used for Step 2.

Ruling Leaves France With Budget

PARIS (AP) — The government suffered a major embarrassment Tuesday after it was judged to have breached the constitution in the course of pushing the national budget through parliament.

The Christmas Eve ruling by the Constitutional Council, a sort of referee between the executive and legislative branches, left France without a budget for 1980 and dramatized a worsening split in the ruling coalition.

The unprecedented action by the nine-member body, long regarded as a docile servant of the government, came on top of a series of alleged scandals thathave bedeviled the French leadership this year.

The Council said Prime Minister Raymond Barre violated te constiution by failing to put the budget through the two votes required by law — a vote on the income section of the budget and a vote on the expenditure section.

After failing to obtain a majority in the National Assembly for the income section, Barre adopted the tactic of making the 499-member house vote on the budget as a whole. He won a majority by making the vote a test of confidence in his government — another way of in effect threatening to resign.

Ironically, the whole crisis was less the product of Barre's socialist and communist opposition than of his right-wing coalition partners, the Gaullists. Gaullist leader Jacques Chirac wants to challenge President Valery Giscard d'Estaing in 1981 presidential elections, and this has left the party with one foot in the government and the other in the opposition.

Barre's fiscal austerity programs, which have raised unemployment but failed to bring down inflation, have made him a favorite target of the Gaullists.

It was the Gaullists who led the battle against the budget by demanding that the government trim $487 million off its $117 billion in projected expenditures for 1980.

It was Gaullist Jacques Chaban-Delmas, Speaker of the National Assembly, who brought Barre's tactics to the attention of the Constitutional Council, and it was Gaullist Roger Frey who presided over the Council when it formed its verdict.

Barre, planning to meet with Giscard d'Estaing on Wednesday, vowed to come up with measures for getting the budget approved in time for the new year.

Most likely, said political observers, he will call an urgent special session of parliament and try again to push the income section of the budget through the legislature.

Last October, Giscard d'Estaing was accused by some French newspapers of accepting a gift of diamonds from Jean Bokassa, the self-crowned ex-emperor of the Central African Empire. Giscard d'Estaing insists the diamonds were worth far less than the press suggested, but has not denied accepting them.

Later, Giscard d'Estaing's Labor Minister, Robert Boulin, committed suicide amid press allegations — never proven — that he was embroiled in a questionable real estate deal.

Meanwhile, the chiefs of the investigative newspaper le Canard Enchaine have been formally charged with receiving stolen documents. One of these documents was Giscard d'Estaing's tax return which the paper published.

Several newspapers have branded the action against le Canard as a government-inspired blow to press freedom. Giscard d'Estaing denies he had anything to do with it.

Bengal Tiger Dies After Being Poisoned

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Despite three days of intensive medical care, Ben Boi, a 425-pound Bengal tiger at the Boise Zoo, has died from a piece of poisoned meat.

Zoo officials said Ben Boi was very friendly and probably walked up to the cage bars to greet the person who threw him the doctored meat. Officials said the tiger was "the showcase" of the zoo and was very popular with visitors.

Zoo keeper Dave Rhodenbaugh said he found Ben Boi unconscious early Friday.

But Monday morning, zoo officials said, the 5-year-old cat died of suffocation caused by the weight of his body on his lungs.

One Dead In Michigan Hotel Blaze

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — A Christmas morning fire at a residence hotel killed one man, left one in critical condition and forced 40 people out into the cold, authorities said.

Police said they received a call to the Paris Hotel on Dearborn's southeast side shortly before 5 a.m.

"When the fire department arrived, the back end of a three-story apartment (building) was in flames from the ground floor to the roof," said fire department Lt. Joseph Zielinski.

"Two males were taken out of the building. One was dead at Oakwood (Hospital in Dearborn)," he said.

The other man was transferred to the University of Michigan Hospital's Burn Center at Ann Arbor, where he was in critical condition with severe burns, a fire department dispatcher said.

Officials were withholding the names of the two men until relatives could be contacted.

Two residents of the hotel were treated for smoke inhalation, firemen said.

Authorities have not determined what caused the blaze.

About 40 people fled from the burning brick building and were left without a place to stay. Many lost the few possessions they owned, said one resident, Saad Nagi Caleh, 35.

"I'm lucky to be alive," he said.

The Red Cross was housing the evacuees at a temporary shelter.

Chrysler Paces Auto Industry's Decline For 1979

DETROIT (AP) — It's been a rough year for those who forecast the future of America's auto industry. Chrysler thought it would break even in 1979 and the price of a gallon of gasoline wasn't expected to hit $1 until 1985.

"All of us thought gas would get up to $1 a gallon by 1985. A funny thing happened: it moved up (by) six years," Chrysler Chairman Lee A. Iacocca said in an end-of-year interview. His corporation is well on its way to losing $1 billion for the year.

The auto industry was taken by surprise early this year when revolution shut down the oil fields in Iran, creating shortages and soaring prices for petroleum and spawning lines at U.S. gasoline stations.

Almost overnight, buyers who couldn't get cars big enough — Ford had to limit production of some V-8 models in 1978 to meet government fuel economy requirements — wouldn't touch them.

Small cars sold well for most of the year. Importers, glutted with inventories when the year began, moved in on a bonanza and a record 22 percent or more of the car market this year.

That market will total about 10.5 million cars, well short of the optimistic 11.1 million forecast.

In a replay of the start of the 1974-75 recession, layoffs in the Big Three work force of about 780,000 soared to 110,000 as the year drew to a close.

Faced with investment requirements totaling $160 million a month for two years that could not be deferred if the company hoped to meet legal requirements for cars in 1983 and beyond, Chrysler appealed to Uncle Sam for help when it reported its $207 million loss for April, May and June.

Chrysler, 10th-largst industrial corporation in the United States although smallest of the Big Three, will lose $1 billion this year, the most by a U.S. company ever.

That impressive number is just about what Ford Motor Co. will lose on cars and trucks in North America this year. (Ford, much bigger and more diversified than Chrysler, still should make money overall.)

Even giant General Motors Corp. is losing money now, and among the five U.S. producers, only small-car specialist American Motors Corp. is profitable (although Chrysler executives say AMC still loses money on its cars).

Chrysler originally asked for "advance tax credits" in cash to total $1 billion. That idea was shot down in Washington, and the company moved on to loan guarantees.

As its last action before Christmas, Congress approved $1.5 billion in guarantees on condition that Chrysler raise $2 billion on its own from workers, dealers, suppliers, states and cities and its creditors.

The bill required Chrysler's unionized workers to come up with $462.5 million in contract concessions, of which the United Auto Workers union alrady had provided $203 million in an October contract that for the first time broke traditional Big Three wage parity.

Whether Chrysler workers would ratify a contract making even more sacrifices — to total about $4,100 per worker — was the question hanging over negotiations scheduled to reopen early in the new year.

Earlier negotiations with Chrysler and the other companies wound up without a strike for the first time in 15 years.

The key to the settlements was agreement by GM to a schedule of handsome increases in pensions during the next three years. Although active workers were staying ahead of inflation, thanks to cost-of-living clauses, many retired UAW members had not. They exerted heavy, successful pressure in the union to put their needs first.

Those activists, however, did not win their slogan, "cost of living on pensions." The agreed-upon schedules were not tied to the Consumer Price Index or anything else.

The negotiations ended in a side agreement between the UAW and Chrysler that the union's president, Douglas A. Fraser, would be added to Chrysler's board of directors in another first for U.S. industry. (In other executive news, Henry Ford II gave up the office of chief executive of Ford Motor Co., making it the first time since 1906 that a Ford did not steer the company.)

The UAW strategy, after picking GM as the target company, threatened not a complete shutdown of GM but just plants making its popular cars, among them the three plants building the almost sold-out "X-car."

Those front-wheel drive, roomy, economical compacts introduced in April wrote one of the few sales success stories of the year. Delivery time for some models can still reach six months.

Another sales success was AMC's unique entry, a four-wheel drive car. The Eagle model forced AMC's Pacer, a hit of the last recession, out of production.

Other models new "from roof to road" were all intermediates or full-size cars that, although far more economical than models they replaced, hit the showrooms out of step with the mania for small cars.

The thirsty four-wheel drive market was battered and the recreational vehicle market — particularly important to Chrysler — practically disappeared.

One highly touted new car was a turbocharged diesel put together in a Florida shop and said to get 110 miles per gallon on the highway. Unlike most such phenomena, this one was tested by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency — and eventually certified for production (through the end of this year) at 54 mpg.

The new-car fleet as a whole advanced from about 20.4 mpg in the 1979 model year to about 21.4 for 1980. Federal regulators refused to let up on the big-gains-first schedule for reaching 27.5 mpg in 1985, and manufacturers now say the market's demands exceed the reguired 20 mpg this year and will continue to do so.

AMC made news elsewhere by selling a piece of itself, eventually to reach 22½ percent, to the French automaker Renault. Renault will provide up to $200 million in new capital for AMC to assemble Renaults here.

Such an arrangement could save Chrysler, and the trade weekly Automotive News reported on one occasion that Volkswagen would buy Chrysler. Both sides denied it. Chrysler says it is talking with VW and others about various joint manufacturing arrangements, but has received no merger offers.

State Department Blasted On Hunger

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., at a Christmas morning send-off of an airlift of emergency supplies to Cambodia, blasted the U.S. State Department for "quietly standing by while tens of thousands of people are starving to death in Cambodia."

The Democratic presidential hopeful also called for a Geneva conference to sort out the problems of getting relief to starving refugees.

Brown spoke on a Los Angeles International Airport ramp moments before a plane took off for Phnom Penh with 40 tons of food and medicine.

Operation California, a privately financed relief group that sponsored the flight, also put together the first American airlift direct to Phnom Penh at Thanksgiving.

"This relief mission today should be the Christmas message to the world that we are not going to passively watch a nation die," Brown said.

New Year Economic Outlook Continues Dubious

WASHINGTON (AP) — A year ago Americans faced the new year worried about worsening inflation, a possible recession and rising unemployment. They have the identical worries going into 1980.

Despite widespread predictions of a recession in 1979, one didn't occur and unemployment didn't increase. But forecasters say the recession has only been delayed and will show up for sure in 1980, driving unemployment sharply higher.

Inflation was much worse than even the most pessimistic forecasts in 1979, and hardly anybody voices optimism that it will improve significantly in 1980.

Here's a scorecard on what happened to the economy in 1979, compared to what the administration predicted would happen:

•Consumer prices increased during the year by 13 percent, nearly double the administration's January forecast of 7.4 percent and also higher than its July forecast of 10.6 percent.

•Unemployment was 5.8 percent of the labor force in November, below both the January forecast of 6.2 percent and the July outlook of 6.6 percent.

•Although the final figure won't be available until mid-January, economic growth as measured by the gross national product probably will be about 1 percent, midway between the January forecast of 2.2 percent growth and the July outlook for a decline of 0.5 percent.

The administration hasn't yet spelled out its economic outlook for 1980 as officials await a better reading on how much oil-producing nations will raise oil prices in the new year. Oil prices and supply will be the key factor affecting economic performance in 1980, just as they were in 1979.

The year 1979, in fact, became the year in which the nation's leaders freely acknowledged that the United States could have only limited control over its economic destiny as long as it was dependent on imported oil.

The fact was driven home once more near the year's end when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries failed to agree on a common price for its oil and some members of the cartel announced steep increases. Energy Department officials predicted the increases could add up to 8 cents a gallon to the price of gasoline and 7 cents a gallon to that of home heating oil.

Not only is the price of oil a major uncertainty for economic planners looking ahead to a new decade, but so is supply. Industrial nations during 1979 paid virtually any price that was asked in order to get oil.

The 60-70 percent increase in oil prices during 1979 was blamed for worsening the nation's inflation rate, and Treasury Secretary G. William Miller says the key to controlling inflation is restraining energy prices.

"The battle now revolves around energy," he said. "If there is continued escalation in prices, all of our other efforts ... will be frustrated."

Miller traveled to Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Abu Dhabi in November to urge them to maintain oil production at peak levels rather than cut back as they had said they wanted to do. He argued that major cutbacks could lead to an oil shortage that would cause another sharp run-up in prices and bring on a severe worldwide recession.

But he found the oil-producers mad as hornets over the U.S. decision to freeze Iranian assets in the United States and the best he could do was to get them to promise to consider the request.

If the outlook for oil prices and supply is uncertain, so is the outlook for a recession.

Economists both in and out of government were nearly unanimous in thinking a recession had started in the second quarter of 1979 when the nation's GNP declined by 2.4 percent at an annual rate.

But the economy crossed up the forecasters by rebounding smartly at a 3.5 percent rate in the third quarter as consumers bought heavily, despite record high interest rates. Housing sales were strong throughout the year, also defying predictions that high interest rate policies would result in a housing slump.

And instead of the rising unemployment that would have occurred under the recession scenario, unemployment was actually declining by year's end, dropping in November to 5.8 percent of the labor force from 6 percent in October.

Retail sales in November also were up substantially by 1.8 percent, more than reversing a 1.7 percent decline in October, a solid indication that consumers were still active in the marketplace.

"It's the case of the missing recession," quipped Chairman Charles L. Schultze of the President's Council of Economic Advisers. "It's out there somewhere, but nobody can find it."

The November decline in unemployment probably has put an end to consideration of a tax reduction early in the year, although one still is likely later if a serious recession materializes.

Economists now expect a recession to occur in the first half of 1980. Auto sales have slumped and there have been major job layoffs in both the auto and steel industries.

While most economists predict a mild downturn, barring new oil-related upheavals, Michael Evans of Evans Economics, Inc. foresees a more serious slump with unemployment rising to 8.2 percent by the end of the year.

Although there are uncertainties about almost everything else, the one forecast on which everybody agrees is that prices throughout the economy will continue rising at a nightmarish pace.

Lyle E. Gramley, a member of the Council of Economic Advisers, says inflation next year is likely to remain in the double-digit range, above 10 percent, although he foresees some slowing by the end of 1980.

Carter's wage and price guidelines program clearly failed in its goal of reducing 1979 inflation below the 1978 level of 9 percent. The 1979 inflation rate of 13 percent was the worst outburst of inflation since the years immediatly following World War II.

The administration claimed that inflation would have been even worse without the guidelines, but the claim had a hollow ring to Americans who had been promised better results.

With inflation the major cause, the purchasing power of workers' paychecks declined more than 4 percent in 1979, the biggest one-year decline in purchasing power in many years.

Fears abroad that the government either could not control inflation or would not control it led to another attack on the dollar during the fall. The Federal Reserve Board, under new Chairman Paul A. Volcker, reacted by pushing interest rates up steeply again on Oct. 6 to try to cool inflationary pressures.

While the dollar declined, the price of gold soared above $440 an ounce prior to the board actions, a clear indication that confidence in the dollar was waning. It rose above $450 in December because of jitters in financial markets over the impact of the Iranian crisis on the international economy.

There was one major change in the president's economics team during 1979. Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal, who had been criticized for encouraging a decline in the value of the dollar and faulted for stepping on toes at the White House, was dropped from the cabinet in July.

The new man at Treasury is Miller, who gave up his post as chairman of the money-managing Federal Reserve Board. Miller has a reputation as a team player who can be expected to work well with Carter's political advisers.

Carter named Volcker, a proven expert in monetary affairs, to succeed Miller as chairman of the independent Federal Reserve Board. Volcker quickly established himself as a take-charge leader by getting approval for a new procedure for managing the nation's money supply as well as engineering the sharp increase in interest rates on Oct. 6.

The Fed's banking lending rate, or discount rate, was increased to a record 12 percent, a level that would have seemed inconceivable just a few years ago. Prior to 1979, the highest the discount rate had ever been was 9.5 percent in 1978.

The high interest rates are intended to combat inflation by slowing economic growth. The policy failed in 1979, but 1980 is a new year.

Kansas City's Firemen Defy Court Order

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas City firemen, facing suspension or firing for ignoring a court order to end their five-day-old job action, have vowed to begin a complete work slowdown today in their fight with the city over pay.

Meanwhile, 325 policemen manned six fire stations Christmas Day. As of Tuesday, 120 firemen had been fired or suspended for refusing non-emergency overtime.

Firemen said they would stop making inspections around the city and would not attend regular training classes today. This, coupled with refusing non-emergency overtime, is the basis for the complete slowdown, they say.

Jackson County Circuit Court Judge Lewis Lombardo issued a temporary restraining order Christmas Eve calling for an immediate end to the job action and forbidding firemen from taking part in any other activity interfering with the orderly operation of the fire department.

Lombardo also scheduled a hearing on the matter for Friday.

As of Christmas Day, 12 firemen had been fired for refusing a second time to work non-emergency overtime and 108 had been placed on deferred three-day suspensions. The city has about 900 fire fighters.

John Germann, president of Local 42 of the International Association of Fire Fighters, said the union would decide today on a response to the court order.

The city last week offered the union a two-year 15 percent salary hike. The union rejected the offer, requesting a 20 percent raise effective next year, when fire fighters are due to switch from a 40-hour work week to a 48-hour week.

Starting pay for fire fighters is $12,132, and top base pay is $17,928.

Germann warned that the police would not be able to provide adequate fire protection. "It's probably about one-tenth as effective as with regular fire fighters," he said.

But Fire Chief John Waas said the fire department's manpower shortage had not reached a critical stage.

The firefighters suspended or fired will appeal the city's action, Germann said. He also said, "There'll be no agreement without amnesty" for those suspended or fired.

He said while "talk gets stronger and stronger about a strike ... we're going to hang in there and let them fire all of us."

Beginning Monday, union members say they will refuse to fill in temporarily for higher ranking colleagues who are absent as part of the job action.

Car Corrosion Caused By Salt, Gravel

WASHINGTON (AP) — All that salt and gravel may make winter driving easier, but it can be murder on the underside of your car.

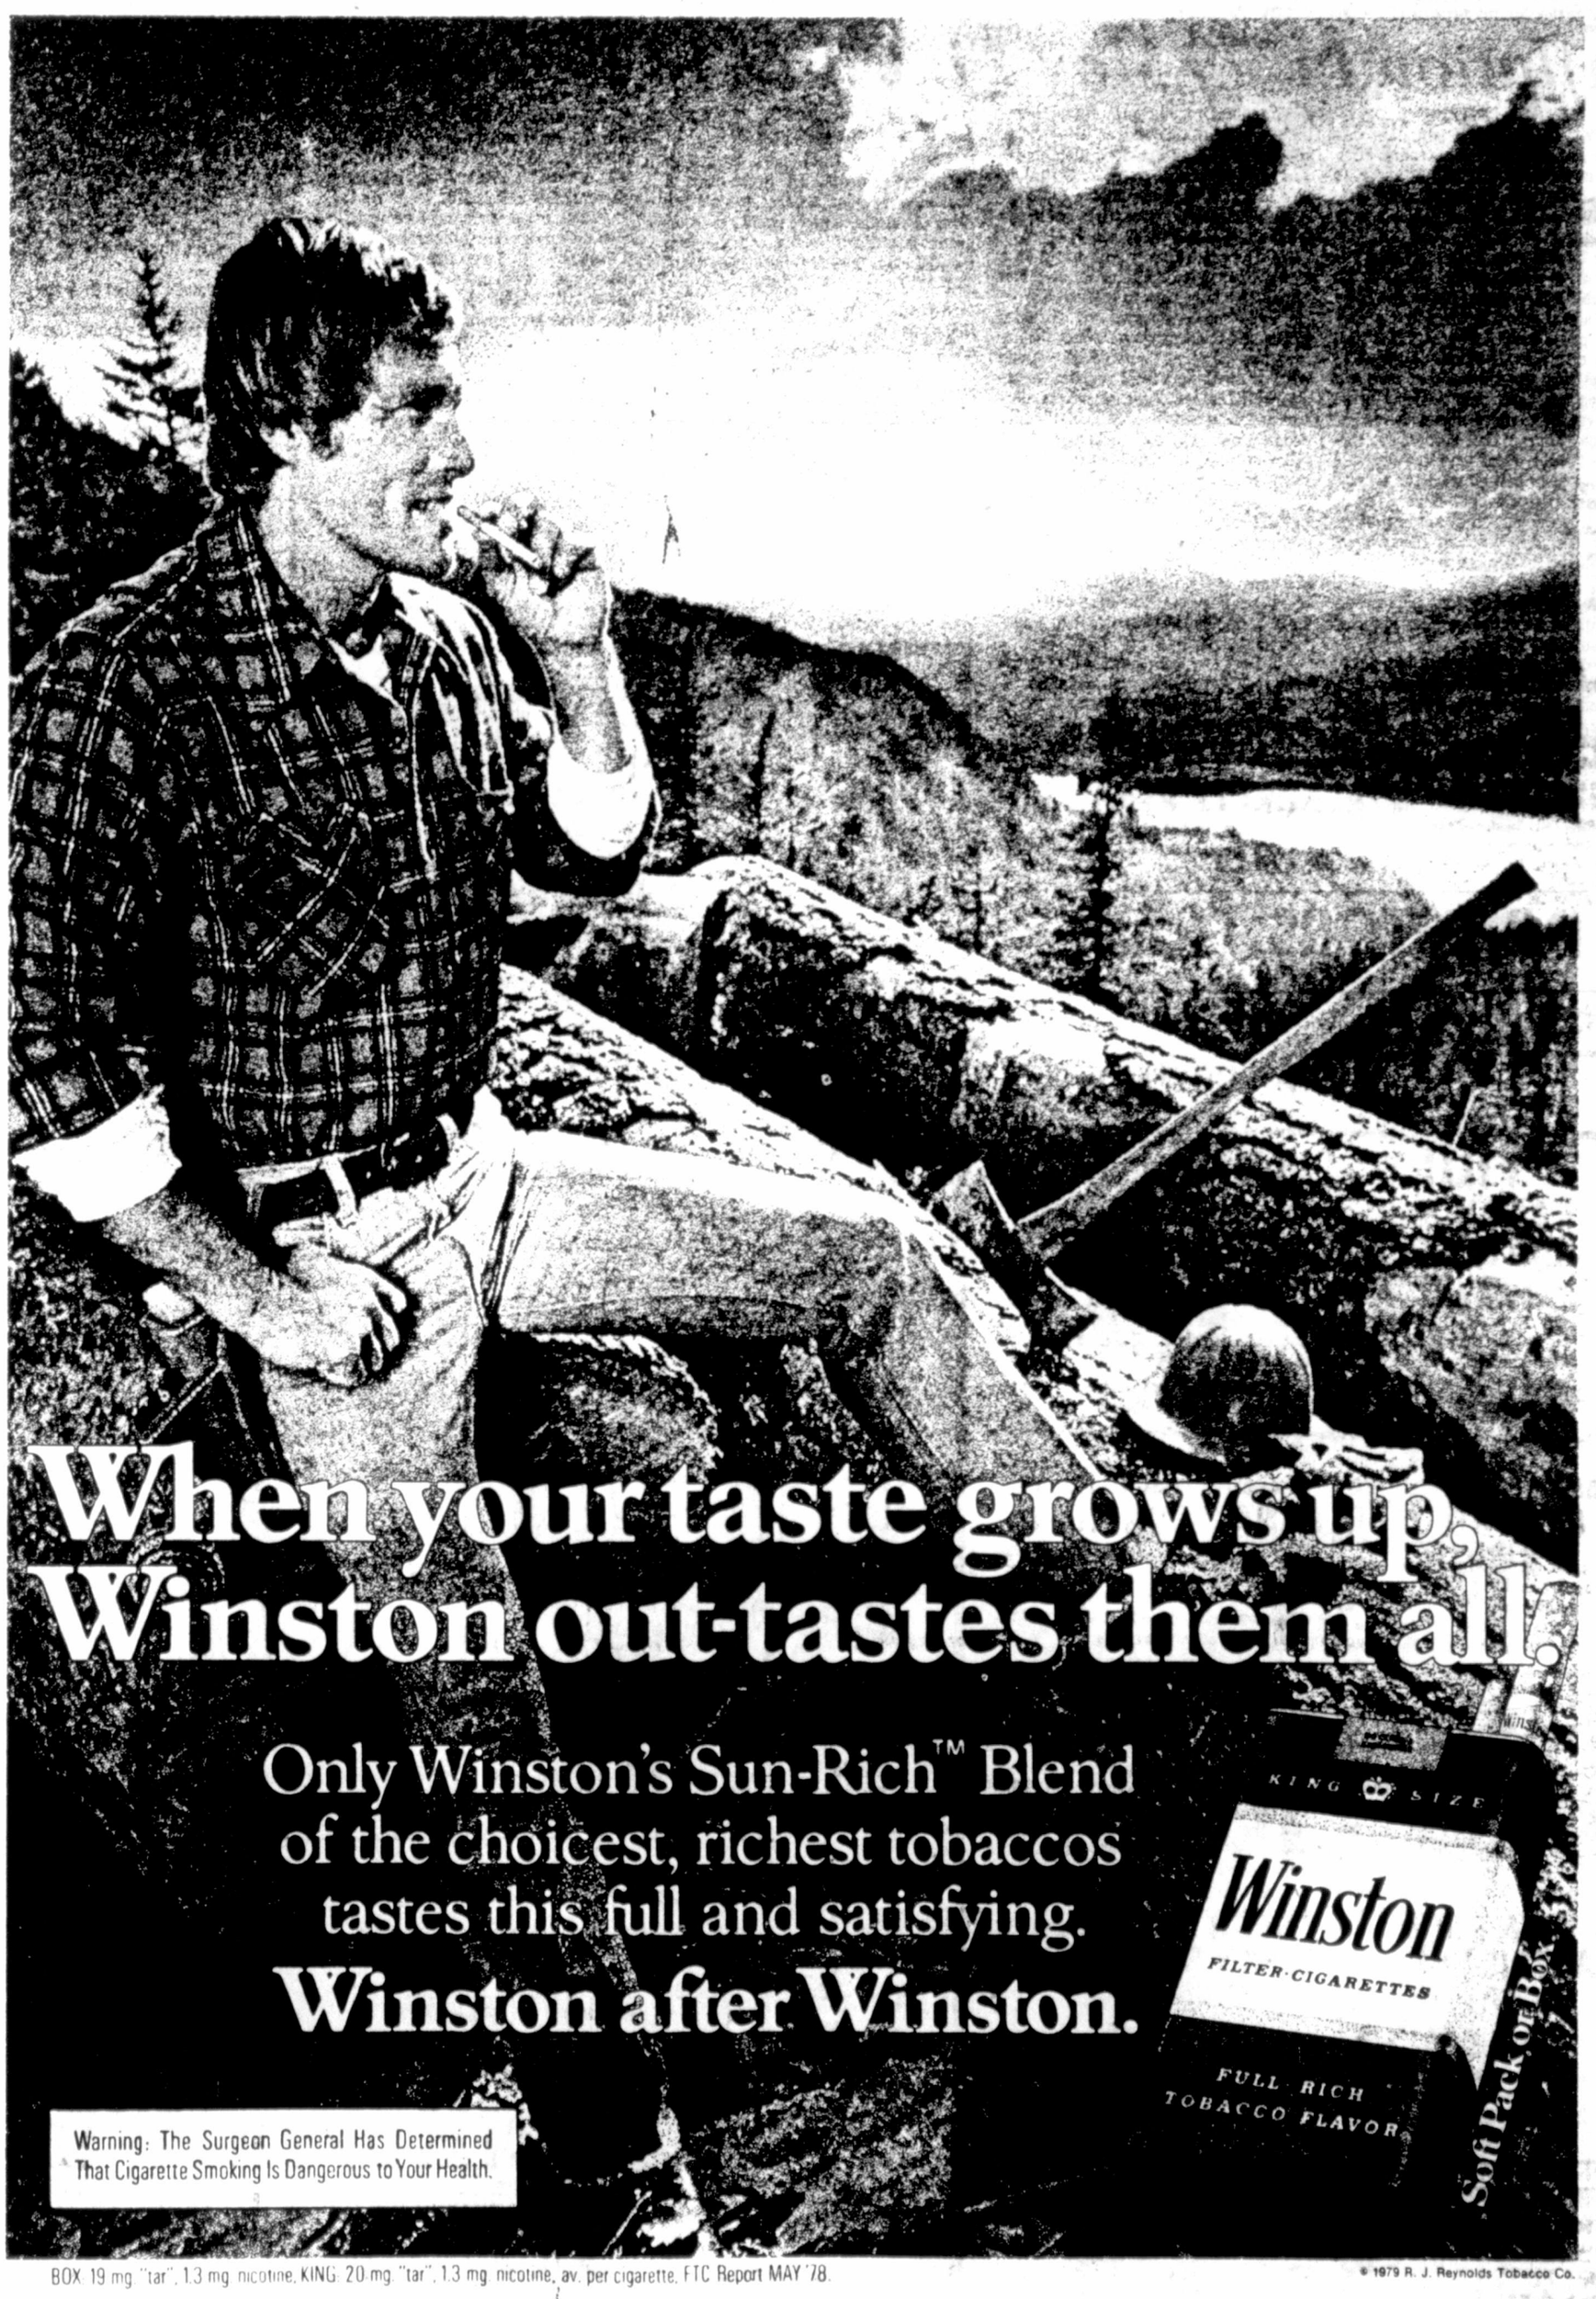

While there are thousands of cars 10 to 15 years old still doing yeoman service, many thousands of others — victims of corrosion — fill the nation's junkyards.

Any car can rust. And rust is a problem that often defies economical remedy because it is recognized too late.

Simply put, rust is the oxidation of metal due to the action of air and moisture. This process can be speeded up by the presence of chemicals in the air or on the highway.

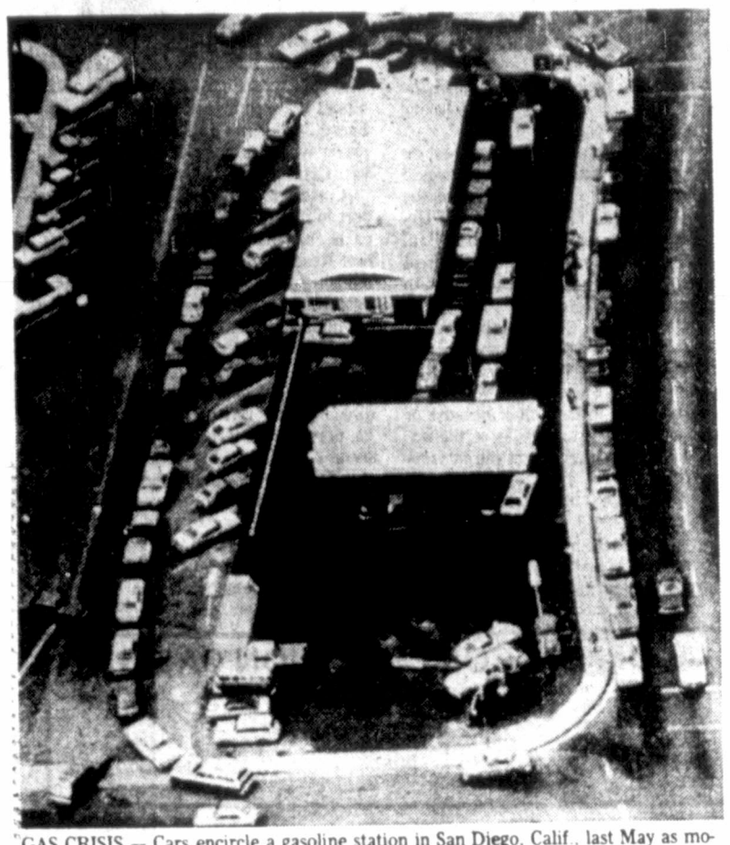

It is usually most noticeable and unsightly appearing in areas beneath the doors, in fender areas exposed to road splash and around the rear window.

But more potentially dangerous are the weakening of areas under floor mats and carpeting and the weakening of frame and cross members.

1979 Noted As Year Energy Shortage Became Real

GAS CRISIS — Cars encircle a gasoline station in San Diego, Calif., last May as motorists wait patiently to fill their tanks. Similar lines were seen elsewhere in the nation during the summer because of the fuel shortage. (AP Laserphoto)

WASHINGTON (AP) — Don't count on it, but 1979 may be remembered as the year people stopped asking "What energy crisis?"

It was the year the United States lost its oil imports from Iran — twice.

It was the year of gas lines, "odd-even," and dollar-a-gallon; the year of thermostat limits.

And it was the year of Three Mile Island, the nuclear power plant accident that brought Harrisburg, Pa., to the brink of evacuation and rocked the nuclear industry.

Oil prices, profits, and pressures for a "windfall profits tax" all soared in 1979 as energy continued to fuel double-digit inflation.

The United States' energy year opened and closed with trouble in Iran, where a revolution late in 1978 disrupted oil production.

Without Iranian imports the United States began 1979 with an oil shortage estimated at 800,000 to 900,000 barrels a day.

By mid-February, airlines began canceling flights for lack of fuel.

By March companies reduced deliveries of gasoline and heating oil to dealers, and the non-Communist industrial nations agreed to cut oil use by 5 percent. That amounts to one million barrels a day for the United States.

Iran's shipments resumed at a reduced level on March 3; but with tankers at sea U.S. petroleum stockpiles continued to shrink while motorists blithely kept driving.

They came to a screeching halt in May and June, in gasoline lines that started in California and quickly spread east, bringing frayed tempers and occasional I-was-here-first violence.

The lines were eased by "odd-even" schedules of alternate-day gasoline purchasing and by minimum-purchase rules barring "tank-toppers."

By late June, diesel fuel shortages and price hikes sparked a brief strike by independent truckers, but by July oil supplies were recovering and refiners, at government urging, began building a 240-million-barrel stockpile of home heating oil for the coming winter.

Meanwhile, the OPEC cartel raised world prices of crude oil step by step from $12.69 per barrel at the end of 1978 to a range of $18 to $23.50 on June 28.

By October, the average price reached $20 per barrel, a 57 percent increase in nine months, and it was to rise still further as Libya broke the OPEC ceiling by charging $26 a barrel.

A wave of increases rippled through the OPEC nations before the cartel met for a formal price-setting session on Dec. 17; and when it met, its members could no longer agree on any uniform price.

U.S. Energy Secretary Charles W. Duncan estimated the average foreign oil price at $28 a barrel in December and warned that OPEC's failure to agree on a price left its members free to charge whatever the importing nations were willing to pay.

Between the begining and the end of 1979, Duncan said, the annual cost of importing oil into the United States had increased some $38 billion.

On June 1, President Carter began phased removal of price controls from U.S.-produced oil in preparation for complete decontrol in 1981 as decreed by Congress.

Propelled by the inflation of both foreign and domestic crude, heating oil climbed from an average 53.7 cents a gallon in January to 81.4 cents in September, and gasoline topped one dollar a gallon in August.

While prices climbed, so did oil company profits. Third-quarter profits surpassed year-earlier levels by 118 percent at Exxon, 131 percent at Mobil; 134 percent at Conoco, 191 percent at Standard Oil of Ohio, and 211 percent at Texaco.

The reports heated up debate over the so-called "windfall profits" tax on oil companies. Carter wants the tax to accompany his program for phasing out price controls on domestically produced oil. Technically, the tax would be on the extra revenue, not profits. But without the tax, oil companies would keep more of the revenue as profit.

Carter proposed the tax July 15 to finance a 10 year energy program. Congress voted a trimmed energy package on Nov. 9 including $19 billion for synthetic fuel development, $1.35 billion to help the poor pay heating bills, and $1 billion for solar energy and conservation programs.

The removal of federal price controls from natural gas, voted in 1978, began in 1979 and industry spokesmen said it encouraged new drilling.

After five other companies gave up, Texaco and Tenneco announced promising discoveries of natural gas in wells drilled in the ocean floor off New Jersey, raising hopes for new petroleum finds in the previously-unexplored Atlantic offshore area.

And Mexico agreed in September to sell the United States natural gas at a price equivalent to that of heavy fuel oil, rather than the higher price of light fuel oil which it had demanded earlier.

Six U.S. pipeline companies applied jointly to start importing more Mexican gas in 1980.

Coal remained limited by a market — primarily industrial and powerplant boilers — which may yet expand, but only at a high price.

The Environmental Protection Agency imposed tough air pollution standards on new coal-fired powerplants last May; they would cost utilities some $35 billion by 1995, but make coal-burning plants environmentally more acceptable.

And coal got a grim boost from one of the year's most dramatic events, the nuclear powerplant accident at Three Mile Island.

At 4 a.m. March 28, Unit 2 of Metropolitan Edison Company's twin nuclear plants near Harrisburg, Pa., shut down in a bewildering series of mechanical and human malfunctions, releasing small amounts of radioactivity.

At first, operators thought they had the plant under control but as hours ticked by they found they had been tricked by their instruments and their training into mistakes that severely damaged the reactor's radioactive fuel core.

Repeated radioactivity releases and fear of a "meltdown" — the worst possible nuclear accident — prompted Pennsylvania's governor to recommend that small children and pregnant women leave the area for a few days. A general evacuation was considered, but avoided.

At year's end, Three Mile Island remained out of commission. Unit 2 was crippled, contaminated and too "hot" for inspection or repair; undamaged Unit 1 was kept idle, on standby for emergency use of its equipment if necessary.

Metropolitan Edison, purchasing replacement power at $25 million a month and facing estimates of four years and $320 million to clean up Unit 2, had to borrow $409 million to avoid bankruptcy.

Criticized for failing to guarantee safety, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission suspended new plant licensing while it considered further safety requirements.

The nuclear power industry, already stalled by rising costs and slowing demand, was stunned by the accident.

Virginia Electric Power Co. considered replacing two planned atomic plants with coal-fired plants.

Metropolitan Edison itself talked about giving up on its crippled reactor and substituting a coal-fired boiler on Three Mile Island.

The energy year staggered to an end, as it began, with a cutoff of oil from Iran, but this time with a difference.

On Nov. 4, a mob seized the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and took 50 hostages, demanding the surrender of the ousted shah of Iran, who was in the United States for medical treatment.

President Carter then halted imports of Iranian oil.

Inflation In '79 May Finish At 13 Percent

By KRISTIN GOFF

NEW YORK (AP) — Inflation this year, as measured by the consumer price index, is expected to finish at about 13 percent, the worst price spiral since 1946, when World War II price controls were lifted.

The latest report from the Labor Department, covering price increases in November, showed that prices had more than doubled in the last decade. The consumer price index stood at 227.50 last month, up from 112.90 at the end of 1969.

Does that really mean that your cost of living has more than doubled in the past decade? Some economists say no, that some items in the index are calculated in a fashion which tend to exaggerate price increases beyond what the average consumer experiences. Others argue that, while the index may not be perfect, it still provides the best measurment available on prices consumers have to pay.

Here are some questions and answers about the consumer price index and what it measures.

Q. What is the consumer price index?

A. It is the most widely followed measurement of inflation at the consumer level. The consumer price index, or CPI, is statistical measurement of changes in the prices of goods and services the government calculates are necessary to maintain a certain standard of living.

In 1967, the base year used in the index, the market basket of goods and services cost $100. By checking the prices of those same items, the government determined that at the end of 1969, those goods cost $112.90. Its latest monthly report showed prices had more than doubled to $227.50 as of November.

Q. What goods and services are in the index and how are prices gathered?

A. The marketbasket was based on a survey of spending patterns for an urban family and dates back to 1947 but has periodically been updated. It includes prices of a wide variety of items, including food, clothing, automobiles, home costs or rents, household supplies, recreational items, rent, fees to lawyers, doctors and even costs of barbers and beauty shops. Until 1978 the marketbasket the index included 400 items but it has since been broadened to include periodic checks of even more items in cities across the country.

Just as in a family budget, different "weights" or importance are assigned to spending for different items. For instance, housing costs are weighted to reflect a greater importance than entertainment expenses.

Q. Does the "marketbasket" of goods really reflect costs of a typical family?

A. The government intends it to, although the index is not designed to measure changes in quality. Frozen foods, for instance, may be of better quality than they were in the 1950s because of advances in food preparation. But the CPI only measures changes in pices.

Q. What is the criticism of the CPI?

A. Generally critics focus on two aspects of the index which, they argue, tend to exaggerate price increases.

The first is that the index doesn't reflect the way people act. If the price of beef increases, for instance, people are likely to substitute more poultry or other protein because of the higher prices. But the CPI index doesn't reflect that type of shift.

Secondly, there has been criticism that some costs in the index are calculated in a manner which exaggerates the effect on the average consumer. A recent report by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. noted, for instance, that "the housing component — excluding direct energy costs — was a major contributor to the increase in the CPI" because the index calculates new home prices and mortage rates as if consumers refinance their homes every month.

Increases in mortgage rates and new housing costs accounted for almost two-fifths of the increase in the index in the first nine months of this year, even though relatively few people actually bought new homes in any given month, the report said.

Q. If the CPI is so bad, why isn't some other inflation index used?

A. There are other measurements of inflation. In measuring the Gross National Product — all the economy's output of goods and services — a calculation known as the GNP deflator measures a very broad level of inflation throughout the economy. There also have been efforts to revise the CPI or come up with another indicator. But proponents argue that it remains the most comprehensive measurement of what prices consumers must pay to maintain their standard of living.

Changing the CPI also would be a difficult and controversial move because the income of millions of people is now affected by changes in the index. The CPI is used to determine cost-of-living benefits for recipients of Social Security, food-stamp and other government programs.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

By BILL DOYLE

Owners of U.S. Savings Bonds who have been confused by such things as interest rates and maturities are in for another hatful of unhappy surprises.

Those regulation-writing bureaucrats in the U.S. Treasury Department have complicated things still further — this time to a point where even an A student in mathematics and bond covenants may have trouble figuring them out.

What should have been a simple announcement from the Treasury — that savings bond interest rates are being increased — turned into a nightmare.

Instead of raising the interest on all savings bonds from 6.5 to 7 percent, the folks at Treasury decreed that the higher rate — still disgracefully low by current money market standards — will apply only to some bonds.

The first to get what the Treasury calls a 0.5 percent "bonus" will be the new series EE bonds which go on sale in 1980. Like the familiar series E bonds, the EEs will be bought at one price and redeemed at a higher price. The difference between the purchase price and the higher redemption price is the interest which has accrued.

But the EEs will only build up interest at 7 percent if they are held for at least 11 years — to their scheduled maturity dates.

And the tens of millions of Americans who now own E bonds will get their alleged "bonus" only if they hold their bonds for "11 years from the date of the first semiannual interest period that begins on or after Jan. 1, 1980." That's a quote from the Treasury Department's confusing release.

Because of complicated regulations previously built into the U.S. Savings Bond program, this means no E bond will collect 7 percent if it is cashed or reaches final maturity before January, 1991 — in some cases May, 1991.

Let's hope we all live that long.

The kicker, here, is that many E bonds will reach their final maturities and stop accruing interest long before 1991. Because the Treasury has refused to grant another "extended maturity" to older E bonds, the earliest Es will begin to mature in May, 1981.

That Treasury tactic was the unkindest cut of all to long-term and loyal E bond owners who planned to hold their bonds and start redeeming them after retirement, when they will be in lower income tax brackets.

The federal income tax on accrued E bond interest can be deferred until the bonds are redeemed or reach final maturity. Robert Carswell, deputy secretary of the U.S. Treasury, admitted to this column that the motive behind the refusal to grant further E bond extended maturities was "just taxes."

It's strictly a federal tax collection thing — because Savings Bond interest is not subject to state and local income taxes.

So much for E and EE bonds — some of which will eventually get 7 percent. Series H bonds, which have been sold since June, 1952, and the new HH bonds, which will go on sale in January, 1980, received no interest rate hike in the Treasury's latest dictum.

Interest on those bonds will continue to be paid by check every six months, at a maximum annual rate of 6.5 percent. Considering the much higher rates available elsewhere, it's an amazement that these bonds attract any buyers.

Truth to tell, the U.S. Savings Bond program is not going well. In the first 11 months of 1979, sales of E and H bonds totaled $6.5 billion. But redemptions topped $11.3 billion.

Small wonder — considering the way the program is being handled. Some readers who write to this column suggest that the Treasury Department people who draw up Savings Bond regulations either don't have both oars in the water or are trying to phase out the Savings Bond program.

Take your pick. Either choice is an unhappy one for the future of the republic.

Peace-Keeping Forces Take Rhodesian Posts

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — For the next two months, 500 soldiers sent here from five different countries to monitor Rhodesia's new cease-fire will live in ghost mines, deserted schoolhouses and clusters of U.S.-supplied tents with armed guerrillas as their only companions.

The troops — from Britain, Australia, New Zealand, Kenya and Fiji — are to monitor the camps where guerrillas are being urged to go by their commanders as part of the Rhodesian cease-fire agreement signed in London last week.

They are part of a 1,300-man strong monitoring force sent here from the British Commonwealth countries to oversee the cease-fire agreement between leaders of the Patriotic Front guerrillas and Rhodesia's biracial government.

The pact is aimed at ending a seven-year guerrilla war and bringing new elections and independence to the territory. Under the accord, black Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa stepped down, handing authority to Lord Soames, Britain's governor of Rhodesia during the interim period.

British Army Brig. John Learmonth, deputy commander of the monitoring troops, characterizes the task ahead as "u-nique in my experience.

"It is unlike normal United Nations operations because we are not here in a peace-keeping role and we cannot concentrate our forces into an effective fire force should the need arise."

Said a young British corporal who has fought Irish rebels: "It's not going to be easy. This is a far cry and far different from Belfast."

While British commanders have repeatedly stressed that the Commonwealth troops will not get involved in any fighting, officers privately echo the view of the young Briton who served in Northern Ireland: "If someone takes a pot-shot at me he'll get a full mag (magazine) right back — I don't care who he is," he says.

At the stroke of midnight Friday, when the cease-fire takes effect, most of the 500 soldiers will be monitoring 16 assembly camps for the Patriotic Front guerrillas led by Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe.

The others will wait at 23 designated rendezvous points where they will escort guerrillas to the assembly camps.

At the camps, 16 men under either a major or captain will sit for two months with the armed guerrillas watching for any breaches in the truce.

Other Commonwealth troops, in the comfort of barracks, will monitor more than 40 Rhodesian security force bases elsewhere.

"It's any bet whether it will hold or not," an Australian officer said. "I don't recall a cease-fire in a war of this nature where there weren't violations. You can say we're not unprepared for casualties."

British military commanders hope the first of the 16,000 guerrillas believed inside Rhodesia will start making their way to the assembly points late on Saturday — seven years and eight days since the outbreak of the war, which is estimated to have cost 20,000 lives.

"It's a big challenge an an exciting one for all of us," said Col. Dave Moloney, head of a 75-strong New Zealand contingent. "But it's not going to be any picnic. Everyone is going to have to play ball."

Within a few hours after the start of the cease-fire, at dusk Saturday, transport planes marked clearly with the white cross of the Commonwealth monitoring group will drop hundreds of American-supplied tents over the assembly camps for the guerrillas.

The Americans provided 300 tons of tents and poles, airlifted here in eight flights.

At each assembly camp — some at abandoned mines, schools and missions and government-built villages — a huge white flag will be raised above a large sign proclaiming "Commonwealth Monitoring Group." The flag and signs will be floodlit at night.

When the first guerrillas straggle into the camps they will be met by Commonwealth officers and guerrilla liaison officers at a desk, given a pack of ten cigarettes each, blankets, clothes if they want them, and some Rhodesian army rations of cornmeal, canned beans, tea, sugar and biscuits.

'Stop Smoking' Clinics Set By American Cancer Society

The Lubbock unit of the American Cancer Society will sponser a "Stop Smoking" clinic from 7 to 9 p.m. on Thursdays, beginning Jan. 3. The program will include four consecutive weeks of sessions, according to cancer society officials. All sessions are free.

Persons may register for the program by coming to the ACS office, 1902 Ave. M, Room 101, on weekdays prior to the beginning of the course.

The program will instruct smokers on the positive ways to quit the habit, concentrating on incentives and motives not to smoke, and creating new desires to give up cigarettes.

The program encourages participants to give up smoking for a 48-hour period, then, through group discussion, relates the problems and successes in quitting.

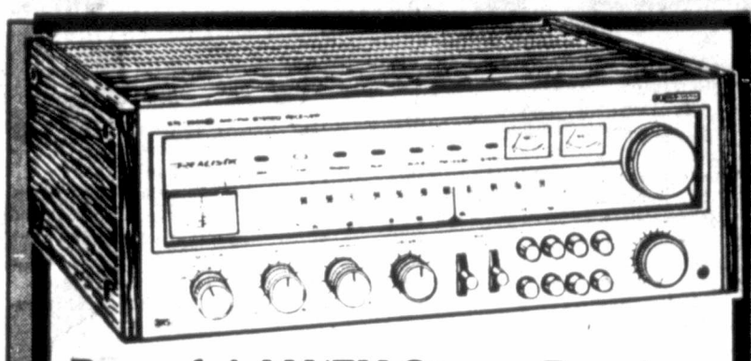

In addition, a doctor and other health care professionals will lecture on expected body withdrawals and coping with them. However, no unsightly or distateful materials will be presented in its course.

For further information, call the cancer society office at 762-0825.

Q.A. Electronic Technicians
DIGITAL & ANALOG

The introduction of new electronic systems has created openings in our Quality Assurance Department for Electronics graduates or job experienced pros interested in modern analog and digital systems including newly designed microprocessor based instrumentation.

An interactive approach between Analog Systems and Digital Logic, this work involves fabrication and testing with state-of-the-art digital and or analog equipment at component and systems level. End product is a minicomputer based D A hybrid system used for oil well logging in real time.

If you've had 2+ years of related experience or are a recent graduate in electronics, please send your resume in confidence to the Employment Supervisor. This just may be the opportunity you've been waiting for.

When Christmas time comes rolling by,
They say St. Nick takes to sky!
But what have we, this snowy year?
He drives a car- not his deer!
And so, dear friends, tis this we pray...
That he drives with care his 4-Door sleigh;
that he doesn't skid when the sky is sleeting
So he may bring this Holiday Greeting:
MERRY CHRISTMAS, HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Panthers Overcome Wildcats In Fiesta

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Three field goals by Mark Schubert plus a 12-yard touchdown pass by freshman Dan Marino lifted the Pittsburgh Panthers to a 16-10 football victory over stubborn Arizona Tuesday in the Fiesta Bowl.

Schubert hit on two 46-yard field goals and one of 36. Marino, in a passing drive, hit for the touchdown on a throw to Benjie Pryor. It was the third straight completion as Marino had hit on a 34-yard play to Mike Dombrowski and 24 to Ralph Still.

Arizona scored on a 38-yard field goal by Brett Weber and a 1-yard plunge by Hubert Oliver.

Oliver, a fullback, had set up the touchdown as he took a lateral from quarterback Jim Krohn and threw to Greg Jackson on a 46-yard play carrying to the Pitt one with 5:20 left in the game.

A crowd of 55,347 in Sun Devil Stadium then watched the Wildcats unsuccessfully try an on-side kick as Lynn Thomas fell on the ball for the Panthers.

Temperature was in the 60s under overcast skies for the annual Christmas-day bowl battle.

The Panthers, rated No. 10 in the Associated Press poll, led 6-0 at halftime before Weber's field goal closed the margin to three points.

The Pittsburgh touchdown drive included a fourth-down gamble at the Arizona 45 when Freddy Jacobs gained the needed yard by the length of a football.

Arizona's Cleveland Crosby threw Marino for a 9-yard loss, and a holding penalty left the Panthers with a second-down and 36 to go when Marino hit the first of his three passes ending with a score.

Pittsburgh, the eastern champion with a 10-1 regular-season record, was favored by eight points over Arizona of the Pacific 10 with 6-4-1. The Wildcats, usually a running team, came up with a surprisingly strong passing attack and their defense kept Marino in check much of the game.

Jacobs opened the first scoring drive for the Panthers with a 27-yard run and then added 10 more as Pittsburgh drove to the Arizona 30.

Two 15-yard penalties aided Pittsburgh in its second scoring advance. Dave Liggins, who had intercepted two Marino passes, was called for pass interference, and a roughing-the-passer penalty added 15 more against the Wildcats.

The teams were even in first downs, each with 20, and Arizona outgained the winners, 317-299. Marino, wearing a towel reading "Merry Xmas, Mom," went all the way for Pittsburgh, and Krohn did the same for Arizona, completing 17 passes for 180 yards with Oliver hitting one.

The Wildcats had a 17-yard touchdown pass to Alfondia Hill called back on an illegal-procedure penalty and had to settle for the field goal by Weber, a freshman who kicks barefooted.

The attendance for Fiesta Bowl IX fell just short of the record 55,727 set in the 1977 game when Penn State beat Arizona State, 42-30.

The game was the first Fiesta Bowl appearance for the Wildcats and the second for Pittsburgh, which lost, 28-7, to Arizona State in 1973. It also marked the fourth straight bowl appearance for the Panthers, who beat Georgia in the Sugar Bowl, Clemson in the Gator Bowl and North Carolina in the Tangerine Bowl.

Schubert was named offensive player of the game, and Liggins outstanding defensive player.

Kush Makes Pitch For Job

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Frank Kush, former Arizona State University football coach, said Tuesday he would like to stay in the sport.

In an interview with NBC-TV, Kush said, "My first choice right now would be to coach professional football or stay in college football.

He said that if he doesn't get an offer in the next few weeks, he would probably just wait for something to come up.

"If anybody's looking for a pro coach, I'm available," said Kush.

Kush's 25-year association with Arizona State ended last week when he reached an out of court, $200,000 settlement with the school. He was initially suspended on Oct. 13 after being accused of trying to cover up his alleged punching of a player in 1978.

After his suspension, Kush filed a $10 million lawsuit against Arizona State, contending he had been denied due process and was a subject of a conspiracy.

Hurley Hurdles Blue Past Gray

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Coaches in the Blue-Gray football game Christmas Day say the Gray's failure early in the fourth quarter to convert a key fourth down play deep in Blue territory was the turning point in the Blue's 22-13 victory.

The Blue was leading at that point 14-13, but the Gray had marched to the Blue 30-yard line when Rice running back Earl Cooper was stopped 2 yards short of the first down on the Blue 29-yard line.

After that, the Blue took over behind Syracuse quarterback Bill Hurley and added eight points in the final quarter to notch the 22-13 victory.

"When the Gray went for it on that fourth down and didn't make it, that was the key play of the game," said Harvard's Joe Restic, coach of the Blue squad.

Hurley, who played only the first and last quarter for the Blue, was selected as his team's most valuable player for the game. Auburn quarterback Charlie Trotman won the award for the Gray.

Hurley directed two Blue touchdown drives early in the game. Then after his team failed to score behind Utah State quarterback Eric Hipple, Hurley came back in to lead the Blue to eight more points in the fourth period.

With the Blue ahead 14-13, Hurley engineered a 67-yard march that ended when Yale running back Ken Hill fumbled while diving for the goalline. During that drive, Hurley had a 31-yard touchdown pass called back because of a penalty. But he kept the drive alive by passing 19 yards to Kansas State's Eddie Whitley and 11 yards to Iowa's Dennis Mosley.

After the Gray recovered Hill's fumble at the 2, Alabama State wide receiver Terry Greer was tackled in the end zone on a reverse play by Iowa defensive end Jim Molini.

After taking the ensuing kickoff, Hurley led the Blue team on a 49-yard touchdown march to seal the victory. Hill capped the drive with an 11-yard touchdown run with 2:32 left in the game.

Hurley, who hit 12 of 15 passes for 128 yards, scored the first Blue touchdown when he scampered 6 yards around left end.

Gridder Sawicki Rewards Bruce's Break

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) -How well middle guard Tim Sawicki, an outcast in Woody Hayes' regime, performs may determine if top-ranked Ohio Stae can sbut down third-rated Southern California's attack in the Rose Bowl.

The favored Trojans, 10-0-1, piled up an average of 466.9 total yards during the regular college football season. Two of the reasons for that success, All-American guard Brad Budde and center Chris Foote, will be blocking Sawicki.

"After watching the films," said the 6-foot, 218-pound Sawicki, "I have more respect for USC than Michigan because of their size. Budde particularly worries me."

Budde is 6-5 and 253 pounds. Foote goes 6-4 and weighs 250 pounds.

"I'll have to be just as intense as I was at Michigan, if not more so," said Sawicki, a senior from Mayfield, Ohio. "If I handle their center like I did Michigan's, I expect them to double-team me."

Ohio State's Big Ten Conference champions, 11-0-0, held seven of their opponents to one touchdown or less. Denny Fryzel, the team's defensive coordinator, says Sawicki was a major reason.

"Sawicki, Al Washington and Keith Ferguson (both linebackers) have improved the most since spring practice," said Fryzel. "Sawicki is such a competitor. Pound for pound, he's our toughest player. He's a fighter."

This season has been some turnaround for Sawicki after his three previous years under Hayes, who was fired in December, 1978 after slugging a Clemson player at the Gator Bowl.

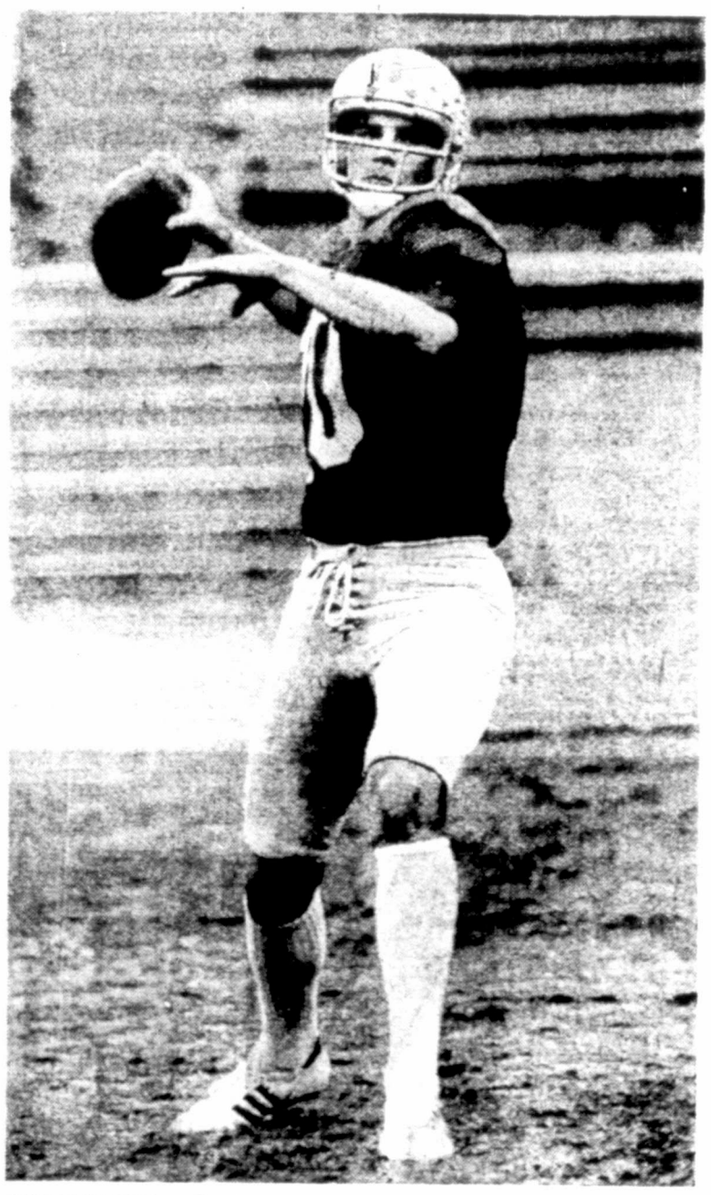

"We've had a lot of talent here over the years," said the Buckeyes' defensive star. "He (Hayes) could have treated the players with a little more respect. He said I had a social problem. I did do a lot of crazy stuff. But I wasn't that bad. I made my marks and I'm still in school."

Sawicki spent his time under Hayes practicing with the scrub teams. He played only a combined 39.5 minutes in 1977 and 1978. This season, despite injuries, Sawicki has logged 164.5 minutes.

"Coach (Earle) Bruce told me he had heard of my problems. But he wanted to wipe the slate clean. That was a break. Once I got in the starting role there was no way I was going to let it go."

Fryzel says Sawicki became so efficient that the last five Ohio State opponents were forced to double-team him this season. Despite that, the strong, quick senior made 56 tackles, 12 of them for losses.

Southern California's players enjoyed another day off Christmas. Bruce sent the Buckeyes through their second straight workout at Citrus Community College Tuesday. Both teams will practice today in preparation for their New Year's Day showdown.

Hot Cycle May Aid Volunteers

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Tennessee's Volunteers are hoping good luck runs in seven-year cycles for their football encounter Monday night with Purdue in the Bluebonnet Bowl.

The team left Tuesday night by chartered jet for Houston and the Astrodome, the domed stadium where Monday night's game will be played.

Tennessee is unbeaten in its two Bluebonnet Bowl appearances. The Vols defeated Tulsa 27-6 in 1965, then returned in 1972 to down Louisiana State 24-17. The 1965 contest was played at Rice Stadium in Houston and the 1972 match in the Astrodome.

Tennessee has racked up an 11-11 record in bowl games overall. Monday's game marks the first time the Vols will play a Big Ten team in football.

The Vols' last bowl appearance was in December 1974, when they defeated Maryland 7-3 in the Liberty Bowl at Memphis.

Several key Volunteer players hampered by injuries during the season are expected to start Monday night. They include quarterback Jimmy Streater and linebacker Craig Puki, both seniors, who both played during the season finale against Vanderbilt.

University spokesman Bud Ford said Tuesday that freshman cornerback Lee Jenkins, from Atlanta, Ga., isn't expected to play Monday. Jenkins, used mostly on kickoff teams, suffered a shoulder separation during workouts in preparation for the bowl.

"We're in good shape. Our last practice session was Friday," Ford said. The session was devoting to polishing up the game plan for Purdue, he said.

Tennessee coaches plan several team workouts in Houston, starting with one today.

The bowl climaxes the most successful season Johnny Majors has had in his three-year tour as Vol coach. His teams finished 4-7 in 1977 and 5-5-1 in 1978 before winding up 7-4 this season. Purdue carries a 9-2 season mark into Monday's game.

Gator Coaches Share 'Cradle'

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Miami of Ohio didn't get a football bowl bid this season, but its influence will be felt on both sides of the field when Michigan and North Carolina square off in the Gator Bowl.

Miami is known as the "cradle of coaches" and Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler and North Carolina Coach Dick Crum both have pedigrees from the school in Oxford, Ohio. Other coaching greats who started out at Miami include Paul Brown, Woody Hayes and Ara Parseghian.

"Strong fundamentals have always been stressed at Miami," Schembechler said during a break in preparations for Friday night's game. "I think you'll see that in both teams in the Gator Bowl. It's the only kind of football that wins games consistently."

Schembechler is in his 11th year as coach at Michigan, where he has compiled a 104-18-3 record. His Wolverine teams have been the only ones in the country to have been rated in the final top 10 by The Associated Press in each of the last 10 seasons.

That string currently is in jeopardy, however, as Michigan, 8-3, goes into the Gator Bowl game ranked 14th. It will need an extremely strong showing against the Tar Heels, 7-3-1, and a large dose of good will on the part of voting writers and broadcasters to vault back into the top 10.

"We're not worried about the polls," the Michigan coach said. "We just want to win this football game and a one-point victory would suit us just fine."

Schembechler has guided the Wolverines to one Big Ten Conference title outright, seven ties for the conference championship and two second-place finishes.

Under Schembechler, the Wolverines have been to five Rose Bowls and one Orange Bowl — losing all six post-season games.

"This is the first time our seniors have ever come to a bowl game without being at least co-champions of the Big Ten," Schembechler said. "And it also is the first time that they've ever lost their last two regular season games. That's just never happened before. We're hoping it motivates the seniors to provide the leadership we need down here."

Crum left Miami of Ohio to take the North Carolina job two years ago. In two seasons at Chapel Hill, he has compiled a 12-9-1 record. Between 1974 and 1977, Crum led Miami to a 34-10-1 record and victories over Georgia in the 1974 Tangerine Bowl and South Carolina in the 1975 Tangerine.

Crum and Schembechler have never opposed each other in a game before, but the two are old friends. When Crum was a high school coach in Ohio, he attended many of Schembechler's clinics at Miami.

"I got much of my offensive philosophy from Bo," Crum said. "When I had a good player, I'd always let Bo know about him. I have tremendous respect for him and his staff."

The Tar Heels, who have been practicing in Daytona Beach, moved their operations to Jacksonville on Christmas Day. The Wolverines, who have been working out at a high school field at nearby Jacksonville Beach, were scheduled to practice under the lights tonight.

ROSY OUTLOOK — Ohio State football coach Earle Bruce wears a topcoat adorned with rose decorations during his and the Buckeyes' arrival at Los Angeles International Airport Monday for the upcoming Rose Bowl game. McNamara Toasts Security

CINCINNATI (AP) — The commotion this holiday season at the home of John McNamara is being caused by his personal band — his family gathering at his home in Sacramento, Calif.

McNamara remembers it was doubly hectic last year. He had just been named manager of the Cincinnati Reds on Nov. 28 and his holiday schedule was cluttered with news conferences and reporters.

Now, after managing the Reds to a division title in the National League West, McNamara can look forward to a more traditional holiday season filled with family and friends.

He's also more secure in knowing that his contract has been extended through the 1980 baseball season.

"You know John Bench paid the supreme compliment," McNamara said in a telephone interview. "He said, 'After the year we went through, you never would have known there had been a change.'"

McNamara is impressed with the Reds' organization.

"The Reds are the most stable organization I have ever been associated with, and the city is so sports-minded," he said.

"As a visiting manager, I can remember walking to the ballpark from the hotel and enjoying listening to how the people always seemed to be talking about the Cincinnati Reds."

The Reds' management is equally impressed with McNamara. It's the manager's ability to communicate with people that most impresses Reds President Dick Wagner.

"The managing job is the toughest job these days," Wagner said, referring to the escalating player-agent contract negotiations and numerous problems associated with the highly paid athlete. "John took charge of a veteran club in a transition period to younger ballplayers.

"Baseball is a game to a great extent where the individual has to perform alone, whether it's a tough play at third base or having to strike out in front of 50,000 people. Yet that same player has to come back and play as a team player.

"John has the ability to get all 25 players playing and taking part. For example, to go along with (pitching coach Bill) Fischer's desire to have (Frank) Pastore on the ballclub.

"Maybe we pitched him too early and he was not patient enough. But John kept talking about him and we brought him back (from a two-month stay in Class AAA Indianapolis)."

Pastore responded by finishing the season in a strong fashion and pitching a four-hit shutout to help the Reds clinch their sixth division championship of the decade.

McNamara is not about to let himself or his club rest on what happened last year.

After digesting some Christmas turkey, he said, "I'm going out to the garage and start doing some calisthenics — some sit-ups and push-ups."

Ken Griffey Returns To Health, Negotiates

CINCINNATI (AP) — Ken Griffey's knee surgery four months ago should not affect contract negotiations with the Cincinnati Reds' star right fielder, according to club president Dick Wagner.

"His knee is excellent. He's well ahead of schedule," Wagner said.

Wagner and Tom Reich, the Pittsburgh attorney who represents Griffey, met for 45 minutes last week.

The two men quickly arrived at what Wagner termed "a serious negotiating posture" for another long-term deal for Griffey, whose three-year contract expired at the end of last season.

Wagner wouldn't say whether he expected Griffey to be difficult to sign.

"Obviously, a long-term contract takes quite a bit more effort than a one-year contract," Wagner said. "But it's kind of hard to say when we (will get back to negotiating) with the holidays."

Griffey could not be reached for comment on the negotiations in his behalf.

The 30-year-old Griffey is seeking an increase above the reported $250,000 a year which he received through the 1979 season.

His season ended prematurely with knee surgery Aug. 14. Despite knee problems, he batted .316 in 95 games, giving him four .300-plus seasons since becoming a regular five years ago.

Griffey was bothered by frequent swelling in his left knee after straining it in a game June 13 at Shea Stadium.

He was among the National League leaders in doubles, with 27, at the time he decided to let Dr. Frank Jobe of Los Angeles perform the operation to repair damaged knee cartilege.

"He is expected to be ready by spring training since he underwent the surgery in August," Wagner said.

The Reds already have several other players in various stages of long-term contracts. Dave Tomlin is signed through 1980; Dave Concepcion, Cesar Geronimo and Rick Auerbach through 1981; Johnny Bench and George Foster through 1982; Tom Seaver through 1983; and Dan Driessen through 1984.

Rich Partridge of Utah made a 91-yard punt against Wyoming in 1978.

TV Performance Mellows Sparky

CINCINNATI (AP) — Detroit Tigers Manager Sparky Anderson says his appearance this week on the television show "WKRP in Cincinnati" has given him a new appreciation for how scared a young ballplayer can be.

Anderson has been booed in both the American and National Leagues. He's also managed in World Series, but he said in a recent telephone interview that he was still scared when he was first rehearsing for his appearance, which was on television Monday night.

"Now I understand how a kid who comes his first year to the major leagues how scared he really is," Anderson said. "That's going to help me so much. Because that kid is petrified. And I was that scared, I want to tell you now. And what it does, it really makes you realize the fear that boy has. And I'll be able to help him much better now, where before you thought, 'Well, this kid, man, he ain't got no belly. He can't take it.'

"It really made me realize now what fear that kid has. How can he produce when he's so scared."

Anderson said he had never acted before, but since he was playing himself, the part sounded just right. In the story line, WKRP's station manager hires him to do a sports call-in show after he is fired by the Cincinnati Reds, but the program flops.

Anderson, who actually was the Reds manager until he was fired, said he made it through the production with the help of the other actors.

"That's the hardest job I ever did, because right up until Thursday, you're changing lines and you notice that you really have to work at it," Anderson said. "They were so good to me. They did everything to help me through it.

"The whole thing when I got done was like a sporting event to me because it was each guy pulling for each guy, and I learned something out of my managing from it. They really reached back for me, and that's the part I felt good about."

Anderson said he'd work all day at the studio, spent two hours at home every night memorizing lines, then practice them while he drove to and from work.

He said one time he was saying his lines in the car and a truck driver looked at him like he was a little crazy.

Anderson said the crew practiced all week and finally taped the show in front of an audience on Friday, Anderson said, crazy as it sounds, he wasn't as scared on the final run before an audience.

"I was so scared before I went out there, but it's funny. After you go out there — I guess it's from being an athlete — I think you perform better. You know it becomes now where you want to do well for those people."

Anderson said he enjoyed himself, but is not about to start thinking about an acting career.

"I would sometime like to go back on their show — sometime as a bit piece or something, to go back as a baseball manager, but I don't know about anything else," he said.

Oiler Good Health Ends Abruptly

By The Associated Press

Only a few days ago, the Houston Oilers were marveling at how lucky they were to be so free of injuries heading into the National Football League playoffs. Now, one game later, the heart of their potent offense has been ripped to shreds.

Earl Campbell, the NFL rushing champion for the second successive season, and quarterback Dan Pastorini, both suffering from groin injuries, are less than 100 percent and — if they play at all Saturday in San Diego — their degree of effectiveness is open to question.

That is one of four second-round playoff games. This one pits the surviving American Conference wild-card team (Houston beat Denver 13-7) against the Chargers, the AFC West champs. In Sunday's AFC playoff, the Central Division champion Pittsburgh Steelers host the East champion Miami Dolphins.

In the NFC, the Philadelphia Eagles, 27-17 wild-card winners over Chicago, visit Central Division champion Tampa Bay on Saturday and West champ Los Angeles is at East champ Dallas on Sunday.

Campbell, injured when he scored Houston's winning touchdown just before halftime, said of his groin pull, "It hurts when I move my leg up and down." But he added hastily, "I'll play. I'm not hurt that badly."

Pastorini's injury, suffered early in the third period, appears to be more serious. "I've seen Dan play with some hellacious injuries," said Coach Bum Phillips, "but I don't know if he can play Saturday or not."

If necessary, Phillips will start Rob Carpenter, who rushed for 59 yards in the second half after Campbell gained 50 in the first half, and Gifford Nielsen, who threw just four passes and completed two for nine yards as Pastorini's replacement.

"We'll have to do with what we've got," Phillips said. "If worse comes to worst, we'll punt and play defense," which is just about what the Oilers did against the Broncos.

The Dolphins, two-time Super Bowl winners, are returning to the scene of their 21-17 AFC title-game triumph during their perfect 17-0 campaign in 1972 — the only playoff game the Steelers have ever lost at Three Rivers Stadium. Since then they are 6-0 in postseason play.

"I think they're coming on much better as the season progresses," Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll said of the Dolphins. "They're playing excellent defense. Offensively, they've been kind of in and out a little bit, but they've been able to come up with the big play and drives when they needed them."

Coach John McKay predicted his Buccaneers "will win, and it'll be a low-scoring game." Of the Eagles, he said: "They are capable of beating the very best in football. They have beaten Pittsburgh and Dallas — the two teams everyone says will be in the Super Bowl.

"As a rule, a team that gets to the playoffs dies the first time. But the idea is to get in there and win," said McKay. "We're happy we made it. I won't be happy if we lost the game. But I'm not going to go out and slit my throat."

Dallas Coach Tom Landry says no NFC team has an inside track to the Super Bowl. "There is no dominant team. All you need is for the turnovers to go against you."

Los Angeles will be out to avenge the Cowboys' 28-0 victory in last year's NFC championship game, the most recent in a series of losses that has kept the Rams from reaching the Super Bowl. "Los Angeles just has too much talent not to get to the Super Bowl some day," Landry said. "I guess it has got to work in their favor. They will get to the Super Bowl eventually."

Colzie Plans 'Tough' Pass Coverage

MIAMI (AP) — Neal Colzie guffawed when asked if it were true that as a child, Jack Tatum was so mean his mother had to feed him with a slingshot.

"I wouldn't say anything like that," he said.

But then, proudly, Colzie unfurled a familiar black jersey — one of Tatum's Oakland Raider jerseys.

"That's my man," Colzie explained. "He knows how to play them."

Tatum's reputation is well-known, and the hard-hitting safety titled his autobiography, "They Call Me Assassin."

The spirit of Tatum and the memories of the Great Raider-Steeler War will be with Colzie this Sunday as the Miami Dolphins' free safety tries to stop Pittsburgh's superb receivers.

Colzie was punt returner and reserve cornerback for the Raiders in the fierce AFC championship games in 1975 and '76 and a memorable opening-day '76 battle between Oakland and Pittsburgh.

"Those games were very emotional, very emotional. That's part of the game. People complain, but you have to have that tough attitude. You just have to out into it tough and physical," Colzie said.

It takes physical coverage to stop Lynn Swann and John Stallworth, Colzie said.

"Both of them you have to play real close. If you let them run loose, they beat you deep and they beat you outside. If you play them tight and tough, I think you can stop them real good, real good... We (Oakland) played them physical, and we had them looking around, coughing up some balls.

"I doubt you can intimidate Stallworth as much as you can Swann, but they can be intimidated. I'm going to play them tough.

"Stallworth — I rate him the No. 1 receiver, even when he was playing behind Frank Lewis. I was always more afraid of him than I was of Lewis. Stallworth can take a blow and deliver a blow.

"He's not always crying like a lot of other receivers," Colzie said.

In the 1976 opener, a 31-29 Raider victory, Raider safety George Atkinson knocked Swann out of the game with a concussion, spurring Pittsburgh Coach Chuck Noll to label Atkinson part of the NFL's "criminal element."

Atkinson was fined $1,500 and later filed a $2 million slander suit against Noll. Atkinson lost the suit, but during testimony, Noll angered his own player, Mel Blount, by classifying him with Atkinson.

An alarmed Commissioner Pete Rozelle issued a league-wide warning that flagrant violence would not be tolerated.

In 1976, Colzie was offered $1,250 to play a role in "Black Sunday," a movie about a terrorist attack at a Super Bowl in Miami. He turned it down because he was asked to wear a Steelers' uniform.

"That's because I was a true-blooded Oakland Raider," Colzie said. "I would turn it down again today. I'm always against the team on top because I want to be on top.

"I'm looking forward to playing Pittsburgh because I like playing against the best. It seems to bring out the best in me, so I always like playing against Pittsburgh," he said.

The former Ohio State star, acquired by the Dolphins in the offseason, said he learned the importance of winning early in his career.

"I hate to lose. I guess I got that from Woody Hayes."

76ers Beat Washington On Head With Bench

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Bobby Jones came off the bench to spark a fourth-quarter surge that carried the streaking Philadelphia 76ers to a 95-92 victory over the Washington Bullets in a National Basketball Association game Tuesday.

Jones made five layups and two free throws in a nine-minute span as the 76ers built a 94-84 advantage and then held on for their 13th victory in 16 games.

The game was played before a Christmas crowd of 18,184 at Capital Centre and a national television audience.

Philadelphia's reserves scored all of the 76ers' points in the fourth quarter as Henry Bibby tossed in seven and Steve Mix added six. The Philadelphia bench outscored the Bullets' reserves 45-18.

Elvin Hayes scored 11 points in the second quarter when the Bullets took a 50-47 halftime lead and finished with a game-high 27 points.

Greg Ballard, starting in place of the injured Bobby Dandridge, added 17 points to Washington's attack. The struggling Bullets are now 9-9 at home and 14-17 overall.

Coach Dick Motta of Washington was ejected at halftime for unsportsmanlike conduct toward referee Dick Bevetta.

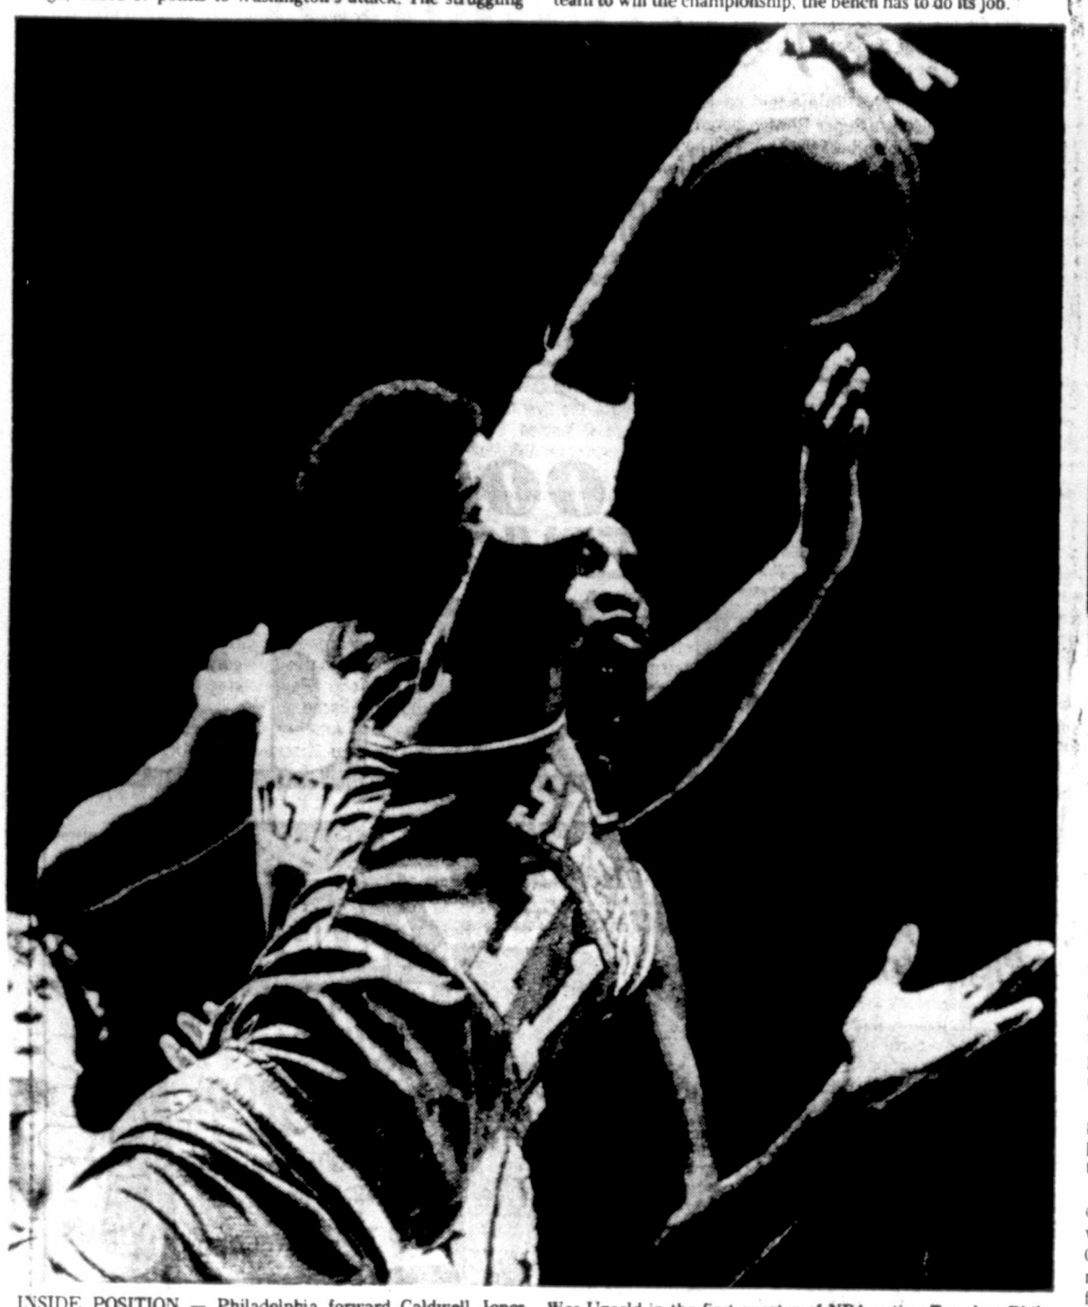

Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham said bench strength has been a key factor in the 76ers' recent surge.

"Our bench has been playing very well lately," Cunningham said. "Steve and Bobby are running well and this was Henry's best offensive performance in a while."

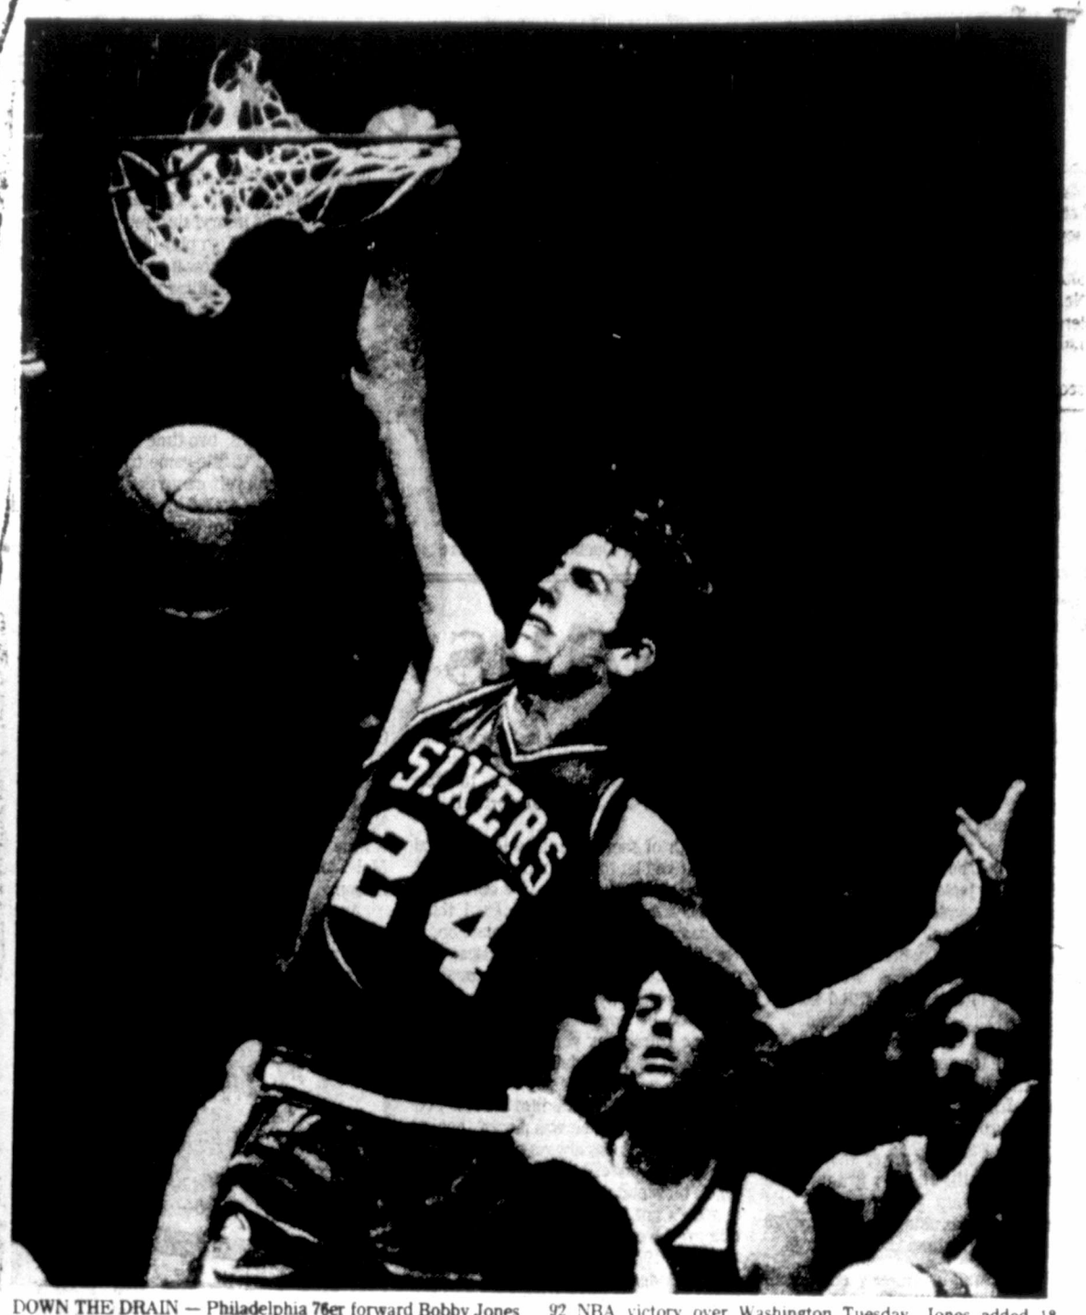

Mix and Jones, both starters in previous seasons and with other teams, said they were happy in their reserve roles with Philadelphia, which trails first-place Boston in the Atlantic Division by 1½ games.

"Steve and I have blended in very well," said Jones. "We gamble a lot on defense and, with our big men getting the boards, we're able to release early."

Mix added: "I enjoy this reserve role because Bobby and I can team up and go all-out on every play. We know for this team to win the championship, the bench has to do its job."

Hockey Brawl Upsets Participant

MONTGOMERY, N.J. (AP) — John Kaptain, at the center of a wild melee with the Boston Bruins at Madison Square Garden Sunday night, admitted that he struck a player but only in defense of his brother.

"I admit that I hit a player (Stan Jonathan) but it was a reaction — one of them hit my brother and I struck back at them. I honestly don't know if I hit the right guy. The one who hit my brother first might have been (Terry) O'Reilly," Kaptain said from his home.

The trouble began as the final buzzer sounded in the Bruins 4-3 National Hockey League victory over the New York Rangers. It was what players call a chippy game and the Rangers and Bruins were milling around the sideboards after the game. Suddenly, the attention turned to the crowd with O'Reilly leading a charge of Bruins into the stands.

"The next thing I know," Kaptain said, "a security guy is dragging me up the steps. But as soon as Peter McNab got there, he let go and got out of the way.

"McNab threw me over a seat and jumped all over me (Mike) Milbury took my shoe off and beat me over the head with it. Meanwhile, there were six or seven Bruins around my brother, pummeling him.

"I was worried about my father and trying to see what was happening to him," he continued. "An usher pushed him down some stairs. He has a heart condition and wasn't doing anything except trying to get everything stopped."

Jack Gutenplan, a friend of the Kaptain family, then attempted to come to the aid of John's father, Emanuel, 54, but was held off by security personnel.

"They punched him in the stomach," Kaptain claimed, "and hit him in the genitals. They treated him like a war criminal instead of a guy who was just coming to the aid of his friends. The Garden police were really excessive, even after we were taken out of the area. The New York City police were very professional and courteous, though."

He said the Bruin who shoved his stick into his brother's face started the fight. All four New Jersey men received summonses for disorderly conduct and must appear at a Feb. 22 hearing.

"I'm embarrassed and infuriated at the same time," said Kaptain, who added he is considering taking legal action.

Holiday Classic Set To Begin

NEW YORK (AP) — Two of the nation's Top Twenty college basketball teams will be featured in the 28th Holiday Festival Tournament which starts tonight.

Georgetown, ranked No. 17 in the country, will meet Boston College in the opener while No. 15 St. John's will play Lafayette in the nightcap at Madison Square Garden.

St. John's, making an 18th appearance in this traditional New York City tournament, is seeking an unprecedented fourth Festival title. The Redmen won the title in 1958, 1964 and 1972.

Georgetown, playing in its fourth Holiday Festival, won the championship in 1977.

NBA Rejects Struggle To Survive

ATLANTA (AP) — There's no such thing as a free ride with the National Basketball Association — even if you were a star back in college. Walter Daniels found that out. So did Sammy Drummer and Tico Brown.

Daniels, who last year became the University of Georgia's all-time scoring champion with 1,679 career points, was counting on a pro career after graduation. Instead, he's cooling his heels at his parents' home in Lizella, Ga., a last-minute cut by the Los Angeles Lakers.

Drummer and Brown, who led Georgia Tech to a 17-9 season last year, are playing professional basketball but not the kind they had anticipated.

Drummer, drafted fourth and later cut by the Houston Rockets, is serving with the international unit of the Harlem Globetrotters. Brown, picked in the third round by the Utah Jazz, toils far away from home for the Anchorage (Alaska) Northern Knights of the Continental League.

Although all three were rocked by their release from the NBA, Daniels appears to have been particularly shaken.

"It's taken a lot out of me," the 6-foot-2 guard said recently. "I damn near went off the deep end. At first I said to myself, 'I'm a failure, I'm a failure.' I said, 'Why me? I can play. I've got a good attitude. I'm not crazy.'"

But it took more than a positive attitude to make the Lakers, who had five returning guards and six guard draftees, including Earvin "Magic" Johnson.

"Of all the teams, the Lakers pick me. Man...," said Daniels.

An abundance of talent in the Rockets' camp also hampered Drummer, who averaged 23.7 points for Tech last season.

"When I went to Houston, they had 10 guys on no-cuts (contracts)," Drummer said. "All my life I wanted to play in the NBA. It hurt me a lot when I didn't make it. Now, I don't know if I'll try again."

For Brown, a 6-5 guard who averaged 15.9 points for the Yellow Jackets last season, the hardest part was the way he was released by Jazz Coach Tom Nissalke.

"When Nissalke told me I was waived he said I couldn't play big guard," Brown recalled recently. "If he hadn't said anything, I could have accepted that and went on to something else. But I don't like anybody telling me what I can't do. I had a high school coach who said I couldn't play.

"So that's one reason I'm here — to prove I can play big guard," said Brown, currently the Knights' second leading scorer with an average of 14 points per game.

"As a matter of fact, I'm playing big guard and forward, which makes me more valuable to the team."

As for a possible return to the NBA, Brown said, "I'm going to stay in the best shape possible, and with a little luck, who knows."

In 1961, the New York Yankee outfield of Roger Maris, Mickey Mantle, and Yogi Berra hit 136 home runs among them.

Vermeil Likes Philadelphia's Prospects

PHILADELPHIA (AP) -The Philadelphia Eagles appear to have at least two edges on the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in Saturday's second round game of the National Football League playoffs.

Philadelphia has playoff experience, plus Ron Jaworski gives them the the No. 3 quarterback in the National Conference against Doug Williams, rated 13th.

The Eagles are in the playoffs for the second straight year, losing in 1978 by a point to Atlanta, but last Sunday beating the Chicago Bears 27-17. The young Buccaneers, a three-year-old expansion team, are in postseason competition for the first time.

Only six members of the Tampa starting 22 players have ever been in a playoff game. Although Tampa Bay is No. 1 in overall defense statistically in the league, the pressure of playoff competition is an important intangible.

Eagles' coach Dick Vermeil refused to be boxed at his news conference Monday, when asked if the Eagles hadn't eliminated the stronger team Sunday in the Bears.

"I felt that way originally," Vermeil said. "But I can't say that right now. I haven't seen enough of Tampa Bay."

Vermeil admitted, however, that he felt better preparing for the Buccaneers, because the Eagles had gone over the hump in winning their first playoff game in 19 years.

"See, if we don't beat Tampa Bay it won't ruin the whole season," Vermeil said.

He had to be pulling the media's leg.

Vermeil would be very upset if his team lost to a rival with a 41 percent passer. He also wouldn't exactly be overjoyed being beaten by an expansion team. And he also would be outraged to be taken by a team coached by John McKay.

Vermeil and McKay had some torrid battles when the Eagles' boss was at UCLA, and McKay the head man at Southern California, two bitter cross-town collegiate rivals.

Comparing the quarterbacks, Jaworski wound up wth a touchdown-interception spread of plus six (18 TD passes, 12 interceptions). Williams had a minus six (18 TDs and 24 interceptions).

The Eagles' players were off Christmas Day. They resume practice today. Vermeil, however, didn't let Santa Claus deter the coach from his rounds. The Eagles' boss worked most of the day in his office at the stadium, studying Tampa films, and getting his game plan in hand.

The Eagles figure to be a favorite, despite the fact they are a wildcard team and Tampa Bay a division champion. The NFC East this year generally is considered stronger than the Central Division.

Bucs To Win, McKay Says

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Coach John McKay gave his Tampa Bay Buccaneers the day off for Christmas, and gave loyal fans a hearty "ho, ho, ho."

Then today, Thursday and Friday, it'll be back to the practice field as the Bucs to get ready for Saturday's playoff game against Philadelphia.

"We will win and it'll be a low-scoring game," said McKay.

The Eagles won't make it easy, McKay says. "They are capable of beating the very best in football. They have beaten Pittsburgh and Dallas — the two teams everyone says will be in the Super Bowl."

McKay met with his players on the practice field Monday. "I told them we made our goal and now we're going into the playoffs.

"As a rule, a team that gets to the playoffs dies the first time. But the idea is to get in there and win," said McKay. "We're happy we made it. I won't be happy if we lost the game. But I'm not going to go out and slit my throat."

McKay watched the Chicago-Philadelphia game at home on his big-screen television set, and taped it. He's already watched the tape 10 times, he says, trying to pick up flow and continuity. Actual game films won't be in Tampa until today.

The Bucs and the Eagles, he says, are a lot alike on offense — with one exception. And that's experience.

"Certainly we don't have the experience at quarterback or a Harold Carmichael," said McKay, talking about Ron Jaworski and his favorite receiver.

"But they like to run the football. They are much more experienced than us and we know that."

Watching the wild-card playoff game didn't show the Bucs' boss anything he didn't expect. "They pretty much went with what they've been doing best all year. Carmichael has caught 52 passes, not a fantastic number for an outside receiver. But he has 11 touchdowns which is very good. He's tougher to defend down at the goal line on man-to-man coverage."

But McKay says he has no special plans to defense Carmichael.

He thought the Philadelphia-Chicago contest was well matched. "I thought it was dead even. I gave Philadelphia credit for playing at home. And in the last nine games, they lost four. They did what the Buccaneers did, lose three in a row. It's not unheard of."

With four games left in the season, the Bucs needed only one victory to clinch the NFC Central Division title. They lost three straight before finally beating Kansas City 3-0 for the crown.

In those losses, Bucs' quarterback Doug Williams threw nine interceptions and last week complained of a swelling on his passing hand.

McKay dismissed that saying he knew nothing of any injury. "As far as I know there's nothing wrong with it," McKay said.

Foyt, Petty Lead Racing's Year

By The Associated Press

If anyone decides to make a movie about auto racing in 1979, the role of the sports car champion could be played by Paul Newman.

The superstar actor ought to be able to handle the role with ease. After all, he lived the part.

Newman, one of 6,000 amateur drivers in the Sports Car Club of America, won the national championship in C Production at Road Atlanta in October and also the B-Sedan championship of the Northeast Division, which is one of seven regional SCCA divisions.

But while Newman had a fine year, he was just a featured player in the world of car racing. The two biggest stars were a couple of old pros — A.J. Foyt and Richard Petty. Foyt won his seventh United States Auto Club national championship, while Petty won his seventh title in premier division of the National Association for Stock Car Racing.

Another king of the road in 1979 was Jody Scheckter of South Africa, who won the world championship for Formula I drivers.

Foyt won five of the seven races for Indianapolis-type cars, including the Pocono 500, and earned $295,808. He also won his third USAC Stock Car Division title, where he scored four victories and earned $49,851.

In bidding for his fifth Indianapolis 500 victory, Foyt finished second to Rick Mears.

The race was hit by controversy. USAC told six teams from the rival Championship Auto Racing Teams April 20 that their entries for the race were rejected because they "were not in good standing with USAC." CART filed suit and a federal judge ordered the six teams reinstated.

At year's end USAC and CART were still at odds, but a USAC spokesman said there was a lot of talk about settling the feud because people realized how badly it hurt championship racing in 1979.

Indy 500 tradition also was broken, when the USAC ruled in favor of an appeal that allowed two cars to be added to the field. That action gave the race more than 33 cars for the first time since 1933 when a record 42 started. The two extra spots went to veterans Bill Vukovich and George Snider.

Other USAC champions were Bonny Olivero, dirt-car divsion; Greg Lefler, sprint division; Steve Lotshaw, midget division, and Dennis Firestone, mini-Indy series.

Total USAC purse money was $3,325,905, with $2,047,194 paid in the seven-race National Championship Series.

Petty won NASCAR's Winston Cup on the final race of the season when he finished fith in the Los Angeles Times 500 at Ontario, Calif. Petty, who won five major races, beat Darrel Waltrip by 11 points and earned a single-year record $531,292. It was the richest NASCAR year ever, with purse money exceeding $5.6 million.

One of Petty's victories came in the the Daytona 500 when leader Donnie Allison and Cale Yarborough crashed on the final lap. Allison and Yarborough and Allison's brother Bobby, also a driver, got into a fist fight after the race.

NASCAR officials ruled Donnie Allison was solely responsible for starting the crash and placed him on six month's probation. They also fined the Allison brothers and Yarborough $6,000 for participating in the brawl. NASCAR later decided to spread the blame for the crash equally between Donnie Allison and Yarborough.

Two other NASCAR championships decided in the last races of the year were the Winston West, which was won by Bill Schmitt and the Baby Grand for small seconds, won by Larry Hoopaugh. Richie Evans won his second straight modified title and Gene Glover won the title for late model sports cars. Rookie of the Year in Winston Cup competition was Dale Earnhardt.

Scheckter, driving a Ferrari, succeeded Mario Andretti as world driving champion. Grand Prix victories for the South African included Monaco, Belgium and Italy. Scheckter's teammate, Gilles Villenueve of Canada, finished second in the driver standings.

Three top Formula I drivers called it quits in 1979 — former champion James Hunt of Britain retired in midseason; former champion Niki Lauda of Austria said he was bored with driving around in circles, and Jacky Ickx of Belgium returned briefly to competition before retiring again.

Ickx did win a professional sports car title in North America, winning Can-Am series in a Lola. The two Trans-Am titles were won by Americans, Gene Bothello scoring in Category I in a Corvette and John Paul taking Category II in a Porsche.

Another amateur champion was Catherine Kizer of Akron, Ohio, who became the first woman ever to win a national title, with a victory in the H-Production class.

Wildcats, Notre Dame Gear For Squabble

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The Kentucky-Notre Dame basketball game is always important, if for no other reason than tradition. But this year there is added significance.

A Kentucky victory in the Saturday night game at Freedom Hall in Louisville would make this the second finest December in Joe Hall's eight years as coach of Kentucky's third-ranked Wildcats.

No one expects Hall to play Santa Claus when Notre Dame comes to Louisville, and there were no loud protests when Hall said his players had to be back from their trips in time to practice at 8 o'clock Christmas night.

Notre Dame's Fighting Irish are scheduled to arrive in Louisville by bus Friday after working out in South Bend, Ind., and take shooting practice Saturday.

UK will hold a closed practice Friday in Freedom Hall before staging its annual public workout at 10:30 a.m. Saturday. Thousands of Kentucky fans traditionally attend that session.

Someone reminded Hall after Kentucky beat Purdue 61-60 in the UK Invitation Tournament final Saturday that he was 2-0 against teams from Indiana this season. The 'Cats beat Indiana, then the top-ranked team in the country, 69-58 a week earlier.

"We've got one more Indiana team to play," Hall said. "We don't want to make too much of that. We're just going to show up."

Hall's best December as UK coach was in 1977 when UK was unbeaten in December and went on to win 14 in a row before losing to Alabama on Jan. 23. UK won the NCAA championship that March.

The 1974 UK team was defeated at Indiana 98-74 in December, but Kentucky came back from that setback to upset an unbeaten Indiana team 92-90 in the NCAA Tournament. In 1976, UK's December was marred by a loss to Utah in the finals of the UKIT, though Kentucky went on to a 26-4 record.

Notre Dame assistant coach Danny Nee was taking notes while UK defeated Purdue Saturday.

For the Irish to win the coming game, he said, "I think we have to come in and execute, play 40 minutes.

"We've played a good 32 minutes down there, 34, but we've never put in 40.

"I think our staff knows and the players know that to beat Kentucky, you have to play 40 minutes of good solid basketball," Nee said.

McAdams Heads Panhandle Inductees

AMARILLO (AP) — Carl McAdams, a two-time all-America linebacker at Oklahoma University, will be inducted Jan. 27 into the Panhandle Sports Hall of Fame.

Also being inducted will be Johnny Allen, longtime coach at Carver High School in Amarillo, and George Ray Colvin, a former West Texas State University basketball great.

McAdams, who played high school football at White Deer, was all-America for the Sooners in 1964 and 1965.

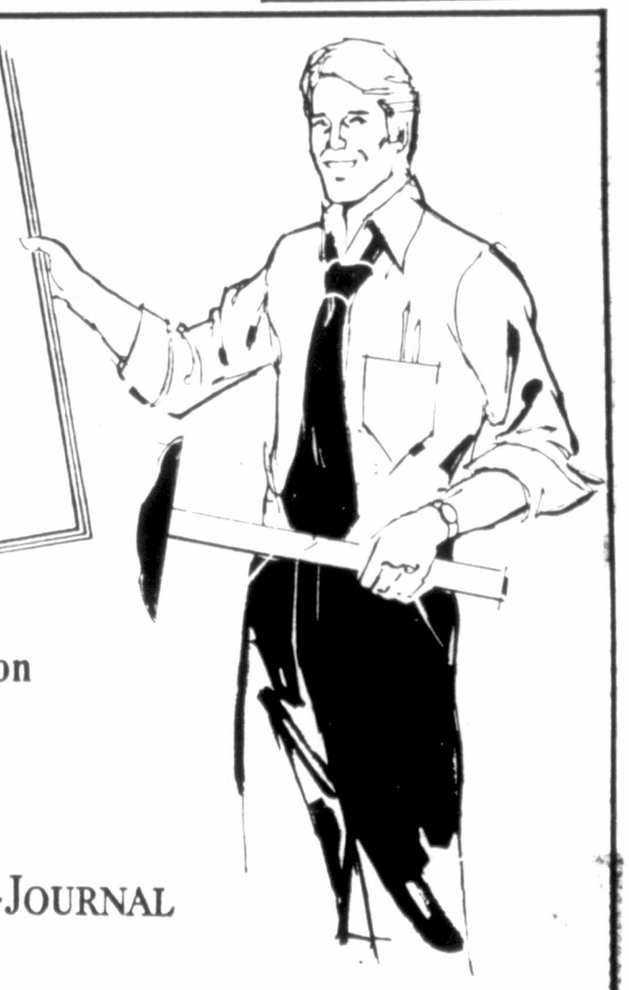

Induction ceremonies will be at 2 p.m. Jan. 27 at Amarillo College gymnasium. Athletes of the year and coaches of the year in each sport for the past year also will be announced.

Eligible will be outstanding athletes and coaches from the Texas Panhandle, as well as portions of New Mexico and Oklahoma.

Harry Carson Enjoys Soap Appearance

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — While his New York Giants' teammates lounged during breaks in the drudgery this season, Harry Carson could always be found in his familiar perch in the television room.

Carson, a sensitive, introspective All Pro middle linebacker, is a devoted soap opera fan. After the Giants dropped a heartbreaker to Dallas, Carson trudged into work the next day and confided he would much rather be home watching, "The Young and the Restless."

So when ABC contacted Carson about making a guest appearance on their daytime soap opera "One Life To Live," Carson agreed.

"I had a nice time. I was a little nervous at first but the cast members helped me out quite a bit," Carson said. The show was taped Dec. 17 and will air today. "I played the part of Frank Sparrow, a linebacker for the Cougars. I was the defensive captain. It was rather realistic."

Carson, 26, made his debut despite a painful groin injury suffered the day before in the Giants' season finale. He was selected for the part because news of his devotion to the soaps filtered to the ABC casting department. On the show, Sparrow is interviewed by the character Pat Ashley who "has a show kind of like Dinah Shore," Carson said.

A spokeswoman for ABC said Carson did a good job despite being extremely uptight. "He was so nervous," she laughed. "He didn't know what to do with his hands. He was tapping his foot while waiting for his cues. The other actors would come up and reassure him. He said he just felt out of his area of expertise."

Carson spent little time studying his five or six lines because he was busy preparing for the football game.

"I didn't want the script to be a distraction to the game. I looked it over but didn't study it. You have to set your priorities. The game was more important than being on the show," he said.

Carson, who will appear in his second Pro Bowl next month, a gig he is much more comfortable with, finally began memorizing his lines after the Giants lost 31-7 to Baltimore.

"It was kind of funny. Going to the studio I was reciting the lines and when I got in front of the camera, everything went blank. I started very nervous, but once I got through the rehearsal everyone said I was doing great."

The one-time appearance paid $600, but Carson doesn't think he's found a new niche.

"I told the people on the show that they'll stick to the things they do best, which is acting, and I'll do the things I do best, which is playing football," he said.

Where will Carson be when the show airs?

"I don't think I'm going to watch it," he said. "My biggest critic is me. I'm not going to say what happens on the show. I don't want to give anything away."

Twenty-seven National Football League teams can attest to that.

Buccaneers Miss Big Hannah

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — The Tampa Bay Buccaneers didn't have much more than his pedigree in mind when they converted Charley Hannah from defensive end to offensive tackle. He quickly became a top lineman.

And now he's their most missed player.

Hannah suffered a knee injury four weeks ago and is definitely out for this Saturday's playoff game with Philadelphia. The Bucs are hoping Hannah can play if they're still alive for the NFC championship game.

The injury interrupted Hannah's remarkable development at his new position.

"The only time I ever played offense in my life was in Pee Wee Football when I was 12 years old. I don't think I used much technique back then — just going straight ahead."

Bucs' Coach John McKay, desperately needing help for his leaky line and with no No. 1 draft choice ahead, decided late last season to make the unusual switch. McKay said he thought Hannah's size, 6 feet, 6 inches, 255 pounds, and more importantly, his desire, would enable him to make the transition.

Also helping was Hannah's brother John, New England's perennial All-Pro offensive guard.

"In the offseason, we'd talk a lot about the position, but a lot of it went over my head. I couldn't relate to the importance of a lot of things. When he'd talk about putting your foot down here, it didn't mean anything to me.

"But after training camp started, I got an idea of the little things about the position. We talked every week, and I started getting something out of it," Hannah said.

Hannah said brother John is "more explosive" than he is. John is three inches shorter and outweighs Charley by 10 pounds.

Hannah learned to play right tackle with rookie Greg Roberts next to him at guard. Roberts, the nation's Outland Trophy winner at Oklahoma, was snubbed in the NFL's first round because of his inexperience at pass blocking.

"The disadvantage of us together was that neither one of us knew what we were doing," Hannah recalled. "But the advantages were that we were patient with each other, we weren't looking down on each other."

With the two "rookies," the Bucs' line improvement was obvious early. Rookie Jerry Eckwood set a team rushing record in the first game, Ricky Bell broke it later in the season, and Bell became the first Buc to rush for 1,000 yards, totaling over 1,200. Quarterback Doug Williams was sacked only once through the first 10 games of the season.

Roberts had some problems as the season went on, though, and Hannah's injury considerably weakened the line.

"We miss Charley Hannah a lot," McKay said the other day. "He was the MVP of the offensive line this year."

In Hannah's place has been Darryl Carlton, a beefy Miami Dolphin castoff. Carlton didn't come close to stopping Kansas City defensive end Art Still in the Bucs' regular-season final, prompting McKay to snap, "Darryl doesn't get paid $70,000 for eating ham sandwiches."

Snider Forfeits Bone Crushing

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — At age 27, Malcolm Snider quit making bone-jarring blocks as an offensive guard for the Green Bay Packers and retired from the National Football League in 1974.

Snider, 32, still concerns himself with bones — as a resident in orthopedic surgery at the University of Wisconsin-Madison Clinical Services Center.

After three years with the Atlanta Falcons and three with the Packers, Snider left the game at an age when most players are reaching their prime.

"I didn't have my entire future wrapped up in football like a lot of players do," Snider said. "I always looked at pro football as something I'd like to do, but not for very long. When I first came into the league I figured on two years, maybe more. So I always knew I wouldn't play too long."

Snider, who played at Stanford, had been attending the University of Wisconsin-Madison Medical School part time since 1973.

The 6-foot-4 Snider, who at 225 pounds is 30 pounds lighter than his playing weight, completed his internship during the summer and has another three and a half years of study before becoming an orthopedic surgeon.

Although Snider was a starter on the Packers' 1972 National Conference Central Division championship team, he does not follow the sport closely.

"I probably haven't watched six hours of football all year," he said. "There are so many other things for me to do. I just don't have a lot of time to watch much football.

"Being a doctor is very fulfilling to me," Snider said. "I'm really looking forward to working with my patients and helping people."

Snider says the division championship continues to have a special place in his heart.

"The Green Bay years were great ones," he said. "In 1972, we won clutch ballgames all year long. I think I had more fun that year than any other since high school.

"Green Bay has an atmosphere that is like high school in a lot of ways. Everyone in the community roots for the Packers. I don't think I'll ever experience anything like I did in my three years there."

Snider said he prospered from the present college system of football.

"My father was a physician so I was always urged to achieve first in the classroom and then on the field," he said. "In high school and in college, I didn't run into a win-or-else situation.

"Unfortunately, too many of those situations exist. The perfect situation is a good blend of athletics and school, but so many college coaches have their jobs on the line that there is gross abuse of the principle of college football."

Snider said he quit football after deciding it was time to do something else.

"The way I look at it," he said, "I had one job that was exciting, stimulating and interesting. Now I've got another job that's just the same."

Jim Brown of Syracuse scored 43 points against Colgate in a 1956 football game, making six touchdown and seven extra points.

Steel Furnaces Dampered By Cooling Economy

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Steel furnaces roared at full blast for half of 1979 to meet brisk demand, but the fires were dampered later in the year as the economy also cooled.

The nation's steel industry poured nearly 13 million tons in May, the highest monthly total in five years. But by September that total was down to 10.5 million tons and expected to drop even more sharply in the fourth quarter.

"A lot of that happened since the gas lines of last summer," said one company economist who estimated that car and truck production in 1979 would be off by about 1.2 million units compared to 1978. Detroit uses about 20 percent of steel's shipments.

As 1979 opened, steelmakers predicted they'd ship between 100 million and 102 million tons, which would have made it the best period since the 1973-74 boom.

But the latest forecasts say shipments won't go very far above the 98 million tons that moved in 1978.

Steel's underlying problems remained — imports continued to penetrate the home market, and the American Iron and Steel Institute estimated capacity would shrink about 3 million tons to 155 million tons.

That was before the nation's leading producer, U.S. Steel Corp., announced in late November that it would close 16 operations in eight states, affecting 13,000 workers. The closings will delete about 1 million tons of U.S. Steel's ability to make raw steel.

Company Chairman David Roderick said the plants were being closed because they were no longer profitable.

That was the same reason that third-ranked Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. gave when it decided to close two facilities in Youngstown, Ohio, at a cost of 1,400 jobs.

Earnings for the industry through the first nine months were about $1.6 billion, an improvement over 1978's $945 million, AISI Said. But costs rose even faster.

National Steel, for instance, said operating expense for the January-September period jumped 22.2 percent over 1978 due to higher costs for energy, materials and labor.

One industry source estimated the gap between soaring costs and steel price increases to be about 3 percent.

"It was a year of profitless prosperity," said Eugene Frank, a veteran steel analyst with the brokerage house of M. Waddell & Towne.

Steel prices, to be sure, went up. The composite price of finished steel base in November was $411, according to Iron Age magazine, up nearly 10 percent since January.

In June, U.S. Steel boosted prices on all its steel products by 3.5 percent after receiving government permission to switch to a more liberal profit margin standard for setting prices.

But in a give-with-one-hand, take-with-the-other scenario, the Council on Wage and Price Stability said other steel companies would violate President Carter's voluntary anti-inflation guidelines if they matched the increases.

This "jawboning" technique has been used by Washington inflation fighters to talk down steel prices ever since President John Kennedy's celebrated 1962 showdown with the industry.

In this case, U.S. Steel couldn't very well sell products at prices higher than its competitors, so it was forced the roll back the increases.

Imports, meanwhile, were expected to decline from 1978's record 21.1 million tons to about 17 million tons this year. Consumption is likely to be about 114 million tons, or about the same as last year, analysts said.

Even though imports dipped, domestic companies still railed, calling them "disturbing," "disruptive," and "appalling." They repeated long-standing complaints that imports are priced below the cost of production and are "dumped" here, robbing American mills of volume necessary to make money and throwing steelworkers into the unemployed ranks.

Importers, however, dismissed the charges and said the availability of foreign steel helps fight inflation.

The government's controversial Trigger Price Mechanism, established in 1978 to control unfairly cheap imports by setting minimum prices, played to mixed reviews in 1979.

Vice President Walter Mondale, for instance, pronounced the government's efforts to aid the steel industry a success. "Profits are up so that the industry can expand. We have seen that jobs are safe, that the industry is protected against the unfair dumping from other sources," he said in a November visit to Pittsburgh.

U.S. Steel's Roderick, however, dryly observed that "the administration is very kind in its self-appraisal."

One important development in 1979 was congressional approval of the multilateral trade agreement. After five years of debate in Geneva, the agreement sets clearer standards against which international trade practices can be judged.

For instance, it will now be easier for a steel company to prove injury due to imports by seeking relief through a trade suit.

Imports, rising costs and stagnant profits, and government interference are all part of a larger problem that Roderick summed up in three words — "lack of capital."

Lewis Foy, chairman of second-ranked Bethlehem Steel Corp. and the American Iron and Steel Institute, said the industry "simply can't afford a really thorough-going modernization program.

"For some years we've been averaging close to $3 billion a year in capital spending. It's taxed our resources to the limit, but it hasn't been enough. Some people believe it will be in the range of $6 billion to $7 billion a year, for years to come," he added.

A good example of Big Steel's cash flow problem was illustrated when U.S. Steel got crucial environmental permits to begin building a brand new mill on Lake Erie.

But the company delayed the project because it doesn't have the cash for the $3.5 billion venture. It's been over 20 years since an American steel company built an integrated "greenfield" mill.

For the past two decades, the steel industry's profits as a percent of net worth have been far worse than all other manufacturing. In 1978, the industry's rate was 9.6 percent, compared to 16 percent for all of manufacturing.

"I wouldn't expect any surprises this year," said Citibank economist Bob Lewis. "Steelmakers may not be dead last as they have been so often, but they'll still be below average."

There were these other highlights in 1979:

•Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corp. sought and won federal guarantees for loans of $150 million to help the eighth-ranked steelmaker build a new rail mill in Monessen, Pa., and install mandated pollution control equipment at several other plants.

The government move generated stinging criticism from U.S. Steel and Bethlehem. "We believe the decision ... to help a private company finance a new steel facility violates the basic principles of our free enterprise system," Bethlehem's Foy said.

•Kaiser Steel, the West Coast's primary domestic producer, began discussions over the sale of a "substantial portion" of its assets to Japan's Nippon Kokan K.K. steel company, but said the two firms were unable to come to terms.

Kaiser has reported 13 consecutive quarters of pretax losses in its steelmaking operations and the company had long been the industry's most vocal critic of Japanese import penetration. The companies said, however, that "the close relationship" between their managements will continue.

•Major agreements were reached between several steel companies and the Evironmental Potection gency.

The biggest involved U.S. Steel, which said it would spend $400 million to clean up plants in western Pennsylvania and Utah. The mills are slated to comply with air and water rules by 1982.

Jones & Laughlin Steel began a $200 million modernization program featuring an electric furnace at its Pittsburgh Works. Environmental controls account for half of the cost.

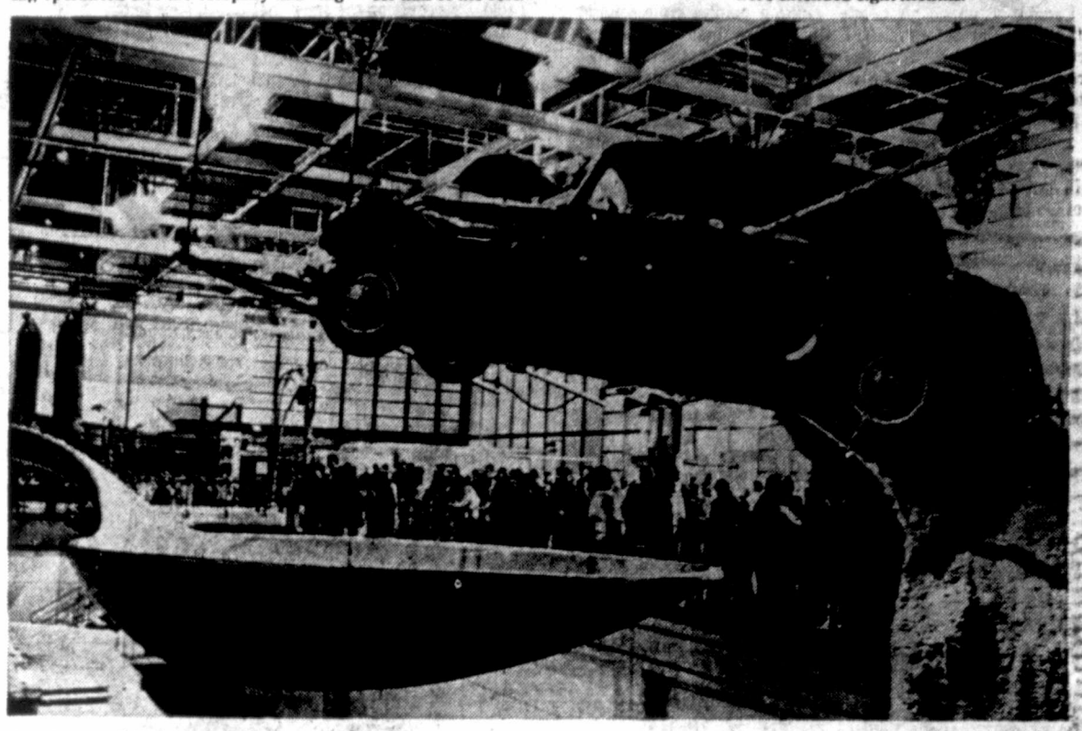

Bethlehem committed itself to remaining in flood-scarred Johnstown, Pa., although at a reduced workforce and announced plans to replace open hearth and blast furnaces with a cleaner electric meltshop.

The company also agreed to post a $16.6 million bond to assure that it will keep the compliance schedule.

•President Carter decided to phase out import quotas on specialty steel products, angering both the steel industry and the United Steelworkers union.

President Ford established the quotas to protect the industry from Japanese, Korean and European imports.

The quotas, set to expire in June, were extended eight months.

British Freighter Limps Toward Port

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A British freighter with a crew of 14 aboard limped toward port Christmas Day, although it was taking on water because of a 20-degree list, the Coast Guard reported.

There was no immediate danger to the crew, officials said.

Lt. John Byrd said a helicopter and a light plane dropped three pumps to the Eagles Cliff, and the 268-foot general cargo ship was expected to reach Houston today.

"The ship wasn't damaged on the outside," Byrd said. "Any water that's coming in is getting in through fittings that shouldn't have been under water and are normally open. We think we're pumping water out faster than it's coming in."

The Eagles Cliff was heading from Mexico to Houston when its cargo shifted for some unknown reason and the ship heeled over, he said.

It was moving at about 5 knots — less than 8 mph — and about one-third to one-quarter normal speed for a ship that size, he said.

Freight Trains Collide Early Christmas Morning

FIRTH, Neb. (AP) — Two freight trains collided early Christmas Day on Burlington Northern track near Firth in southeastern Nebraska, authorities said.

A railroad spokesman in Lincoln said one train was sitting on the track when another hit it from behind. The 5:30 a.m. collision was "more of a bump," the spokesman said.

Two men, described by a railroad official as hobos, suffered minor injuries in the accident.

Increased Production Costs Certainty For Farmers

Rising Production Costs Assured For Farmers In Coming Year

WASHINGTON (AP) — Among the few certainties for farmers in 1980 are rising production expenses and a likelihood those will bite deeply into profits.

In the absence of a dramatic softening of current inflation rates, some government experts think net farm income may decline by as much as 20 percent from 1979 levels.

Also, according to Agriculture Department experts, farmers will end 1980 much deeper in debt than they were at the start.

Other factors underlie the immediate economic issues for farmers. Some of them, such as the success and promise of exports, are relatively new. It was the decade of the 1970s, after all, tht saw ovrseas sales of grain and other crops set an unmatched string of records.

The fierce concerns about the future of the family farm, soil erosion and the federal government's role in agriculture, are much older. They are no less important because of age, and, in fact, have taken on new luster as farmers enter the 1980s.

But the most important uncertainties for agriculture in 1980 boil down to classic and familiar terms: Production and prices.

Farmers in 1979 set some production records that will be hard to match on a national scale, and in the case of corn — by far the most important U.S. crop — it was the second year in a row.

Consider that in 1978 farmers produced a record corn harvest of almost 7.1 billion bushels. For the first time in history, corn yielded an average of more than 100 bushels an acre — 101.2 — and few experts thought it was likely that 1979 could be as good.

But the Agriculture Department's latest estimate put the 1979 corn harvest at nearly 7.6 billion bushels and the average yield at 109.2 bushels an acre.

A record soybean crop, near-record wheat production, a bumper cotton harvest, record rice output and other huge outpourings of American farm prowess made 1979 a remarkable year.

Statistically, total U.S. crop production in 1979 measured by a government index was 143 percent of what it was in 1967.

Farmers excelled at their work, but they also — for the most part — had excellent weather during the growing season for the major crops in 1979.

Playing the averages, some authorities do not believe the weather will smile as broadly in 1980, that it would be stretching luck to anticipate a repeat of 1979. But many of those said the same thing a year ago.

Another major development in 1979 was a gradual turnaround in the cattle cycle. After reducing herds for for years, producers have started to rebuild their breeding inventories. It will take time, at least several more years, before much additional beef is added to supermarket counters.

Meanwhile, hog and poultry producers stepped up output. That helped dampen further sharp gains in cattle prices, and it resulted in hogs and poultry easing off from earlier peaks.

Still, according to USDA experts, no precipitous price declines are foreseen for livestock and grain, at least through mid-1980.

The government's reserve program, under which participating farmers initially stored about 1.3 billion bushels (mostly corn and wheat) to keep it off the market, has helped boost prices.

For example, wheat prices at the farm are expected to average $3.60 to $3.90 a bushel nationally for the wheat marketing year that will end next May 31, compared to $2.94 a bushel in 1978-79.

But grain prices after mid-year will depend much on the outlook for 1980 crops and the situation in the rest of the world, including the Soviet Union and other areas where short harvests can have a big impact on U.S. markets.

Farm income, as measured by the Agriculture Department, jumped sharply in 1979 to an estimated $32 billion from $27.9 billion in 1978, unadjusted for inflation.

The increase occurred for two reasons: increased production, mainly in crops, and higher prices.

One of the pitfalls in this assessment, however, is that those are based on national situations. Not every farmers raised bumper crops, not every farmer got good prices for what he sold.

But by and large, prices for crops and livestock — the two major categories — increased substantially in 1979. Thus, the "cash receipts" from the sale of farm products rose more rapidly than farmers' production expenses.

That meant the boost in farmers' net income, at least on a national scale.

But for 1980, the situation looks much less favorable at this time. Heres why:

"Crop and livestock prices are expected to at least maintain 1979 record levels through 1980, and cash receipts likely will rise to new record highs," USDA analysts told last fall's annual outlook conference.

However, the increase in cash receipts is expected to be relatively small. But farm expenses, fed by current inflation rates, are expected to rise further.

Although USDA experts say "any forecast at this time is very tentative," that points to farmers having less money after they pay their bills in 1980 — meaning a decline in net farm income.

Rising costs of energy and petroleum-related items such as fertilizer will have their effect. Machinery, manufactured feed, seed, trucks, building materials and other items are costs farmers cannot ignore.

Among the brights spots indicated for 1980, however, are exports which, for the 12th consecutive year, are expected to set new records, rising perhaps to $38 billion from $32 billion last year.

For 1980, at least, federal acreage curbs on the major crops of wheat and feedgrains have been lifted in anticipation of the continued huge world demand for U.S. grain.

On the policy front, the Carter administration already has been criticized regarding the prospective decline in farm income in 1980. And Congress will be urged to hike price supports and take other action to soften the crunch.

Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland held 10 hearings outside of Washington, D.C., recently to find out more about what is ailing farmers and how the so-called structure of agriculture might be altered to help smaller farms. Those findings will be a part of administration strategy in 1980.

Prospects for a decline in farm income will have other effects on the agricultural economy, including what some USDA officials see as a substantial slowdown in farmland prices.

Conceivably, they say, farm real estate prices in 1980 may gain only about 5 percent, compared to 16 percent in 1979.

But on paper, at least, farmers collectively will end 1980 with $989.9 billion in total assets, compared to $950 billion now, an increase of about 4 percent. A disquieting note, however, is that the same analysts predict farm debt will rise again to $182.5 billion against an estimated $157.8 billion at the beginning of 1980. That would be an increase of about 16 percent — quadruple the gain predicted for total farm assets.

Texas Tech Expands Dairy Herd To 72 With Additional 15 Cows

Texas Tech University has added 15 Jersey cows to its dairy herd, bringing the total number of adult milk cows used for teaching and research to 72.

The growth in the herd size at Texas Tech reflects an increase in commercial interest in milk production in the region and a subsequent increase in demand for trained managers.

The dairy herd, managed by the Department of Animal Science, is maintained at the Texas Tech University Northeast Lubbock County Field Laboratory at New Deal. The recent addition is a result of purchases from the Dempl Dairy in Plainview.

Dr. J. Mark Hellman of the animal science faculty is in charge of the dairy herd.

"Prior to the recent purchase, we had 55 Holsteins and two Jerseys. The 15 new Jerseys will complement our teaching efforts in dairy production," Hellman said.

Traditionally, Holsteins produce more milk than the Jerseys, but the latter variety produces milk which has higher butter-fat content. Breeding efforts are, however, combining the two qualities.

Texas Tech offers one course in dairy production. The herd is used primarily for that course, but it complements other courses in reproductive physiology and nutrition.

Quoting industry figures, Hellman said that combined milk production in the western half of Texas and the entire state of New Mexico is up by 93 million pounds for the first six months of this year as compared with the same period in 1974.

"While production in that area is on the increase, it is still below the more established milk producing regions in South Texas," he said.

Hellman was quoting figures released by the Associated Milk Producers Inc. (AMPI). Milk produced by the Texas Tech herd is sold through AMPI.

In the food industry the dairy group is second only to meat products in economic rank, and it is sixth among all manufacturing industries. Dairy products are almost universally used.

There are about 11 million dairy cows in the United States, and, while that figure has been on a gradual decrease, average annual milk production per cow has been on the increase.

Improvements in breeding, management and nutrition have resulted in an increase of about 150 pounds of milk per year per cow. An average cow produces about 11,000 pounds of milk per year.

"The total production in the country each year fluctuates around 123 billion pounds. The figures peaked in 1964 with 127 billion pounds," Hellman said.

Besides training dairy managers, the Texas Tech herd is also used for FFA and 4-H judging contests.

Registration For Early 1980 'Beeferendum' Set

WASHINGTON — Beef producers will vote early in 1980 on whether they want a nationally coordinated beef research and information program.

Assistant Secretary of Agriculture P R Smith said beef producers will be asked to register for the referendum between Jan. 28 and Feb. 6.

They'll vote by secret ballot Feb. 19-22.

The order issued by the U.S. Department of Agriculture authorizing the program provides for a beef board of up to 68 producers to administer the program. There would be as many as five non-voting consumer advisors to the board.

Each state or geographic area would be represented on the board in proportion to its share of the U.S. cattle industry.

The program would be funded by assessments based on the value of cattle sold. During the first two years of the program, assessments could be up to two-tenths of one percent of the value of cattle sold (20 cents per $100).

After two years, the board could recommend an increase up to five-tenths of one percent.

All sellers in the marketing chain would be assessed. They buyer at the point of slaughter would deduct the total assessment and forward it to the board. Any producer could request and receive a refund of the assessment paid.

Ray Fitzgerald, administrator of the department's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, said his agency will conduct the referendum. The department's Agricultural Marketing Service would monitor the program.

Rules for registering and voting in referendums have changed, noted Fitzgerald. He said the department determined that 10 days (eight working days) would be sufficient for all producers to register and that the four-day voting period would result in a more efficient voting procedure and reduce administrative costs.

A similar order, issued in 1977, although favored by 56.4 percent of voting producers, did not receive the required two-thirds approval. Since that time, the Beef Research and Information Act has been amended by Congress so that a majority or producers will be sufficient for approval of the order.

Following the change in legislation, beef industry organizations proposed a new order. A public hearing has been held in five locations. Based on the hearing testimony, the department issued a recommended decision and order in September.

Comments were accepted for 45 days and were considered in developing the order.

Producers may register and vote at local ASCS offices. Registration and voting can be completed by mail if information and ballots are requested in advance.

Copies of the order can be obtained from the Livestock, Poultry, Grain and Seed Division, AMS, Room 2610-S, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250.

Referendum rules can be obtained from local ASCS offices or from the Emergency and Indemnity Programs Division, ASCS, Room 4095-S, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250.

Electronic Marketing Service Logs Record Cotton Sale Day

Record cotton trading has been occurring over Telcot, the electronic marketing service owned by Plains Cotton Cooperative Association.

Now in its fifth season, Telcot trading could amount to 1,750,000 bales from the 1979 crop in Texas and Oklahoma, PCCA General Manager C.L. Boggs estimates.

Over 240,000 bales were traded through Telcot in a two-week period between Dec. 3-14, bringing the season's sales to approximately 560,000 bales.

An all-time record for a single day of trading on Telcot was achieved on Dec. 3 with 40,300 bales. The prior single day high was 28,000 bales attained in May 1978.

The principle of Telcot is to place sellers and buyers together via electronic means. Scores of cotton gins in Texas and Oklahoma have Telcot terminals. Some 40 buyers, whose offices range as far as Memphis, Tenn., also have terminals forming the buyers network. Using the gin "tubes," producers are instantly in touch with the buyers. Various options are available for offering cotton for sale, including crop contracting.

In addition to the marketing service, Telcot also transmits a variety of market data, including sales results as they occur. Enhancements made to the service cover gin bookkeeping and producer accounting.

'All-Purpose' Cotton Hearing Slated

The Cotton Subcommittee of the House Agriuclture Committee will hold what has been referred to as an "all-purpose" hearing Saturday at the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

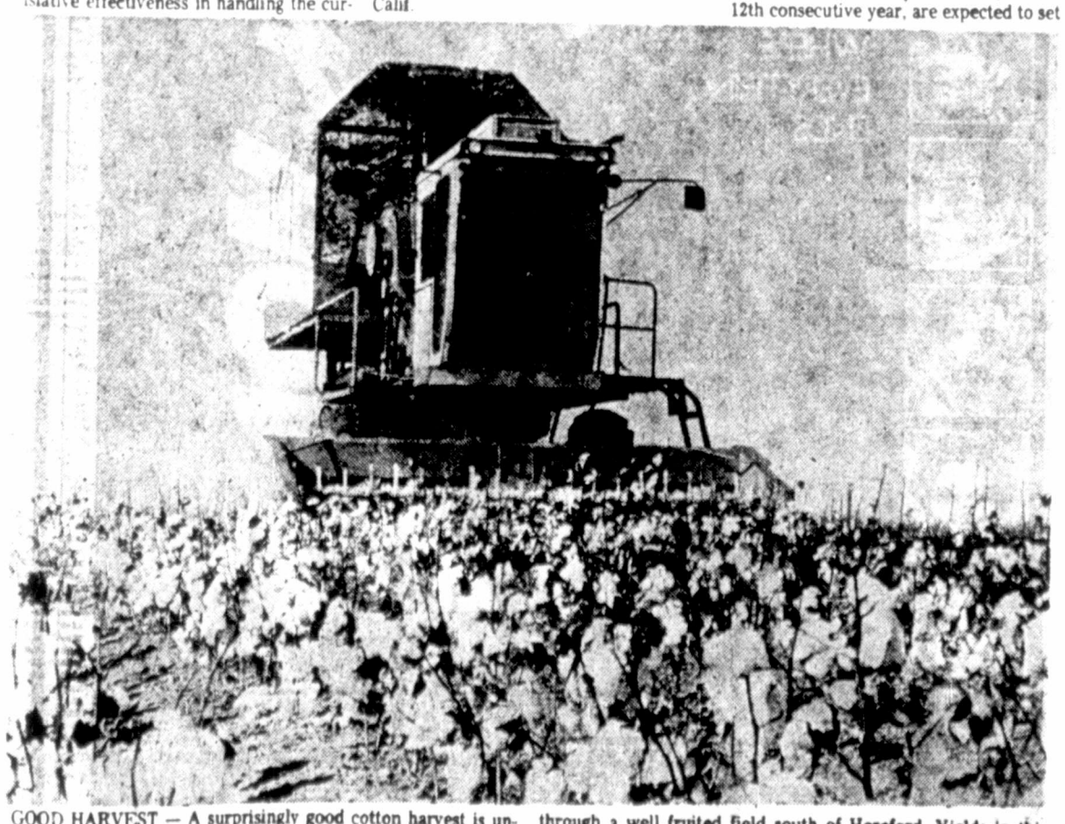

Hearings will begin at 9 a.m. and witnesses are being asked to limit oral statements to 10 minutes each. The hearing will conclude at 1 p.m. to allow subcommitteemen to meet plane schedules.

Subcommittee chairman David Bowen, D-Miss., said the committee expects to hear comment from all segments of the industry on "administrative and legislative effectiveness in handling the current cotton program, with emphasis on target price, loan and set aside decisions."

Bowen said the expansion of U.S. cotton export markets and future opportunities in the area, the farm structure issue, the impact of government regulations and the need for continuing government research efforts also will be discussed.

The chairman added that the seven members would welcome testimony on other matters of concern to the industry.

A similar hearing was held in Greenwood, Miss. Thursday and another hearings is scheduled for Jan. 4 in Fresno, Calif.

GOOD HARVEST — A surprisingly good cotton harvest is under way in Deaf Smith County, where an unusually late frost and good late-season growing weather gave the crop an opportunity to mature. The cotton harvester is shown moving through a well fruited field south of Hereford. Yields in this field were averaging about 1½ bales per acre. Agriculture officials say yields in the Hereford area should average about a bale per acre. (Correspondent Photo by Jim Steiert)

Food Grade Corn Producers To Seek $7.50 CWT In New Bargaining Talks

By JIM STEIERT
A-J Correspondent

HEREFORD — The High Plains Farm Bargaining Association set a new precedent in High PLains agriculture early thir year when it successfully negotiated acontract for food-grade corn produced in this region with Frito-Lay, Inc. of Dallas.

Negotiations with the food product firm marked the first success of collective bargaining by area farmers to secure improved markets for their comodities.

Now, with the 1979 corn crop in the bin for the most part, members of the HPFBA are setting out on a new effort to bolster the prices for locally produced food-grade corn, and they're telling prospective food corn growers that all isn't as it appears when the market offered for food-grade corn is a dollar or two above that offered by elevators for commercial-grade corn.

Members of the bargaining group met recently in Dimmitt to lay the groundwork for prices to be sought by food corn growers and came up with a basic asking price for good grade corn for the 1980 production year.

According to a letter to members from Weldon Davis of Hart, president of the bargaining association, the asking price for food corn in 1980 will be $7.50 per hundredweight for yellow and $10 per hundredweight for white.

"With corn markets down at this time, it is going to be difficult to interest Frito-Lay in corn at these prices and to be successful will require the cooperation of all farmers from the North Plains to the Rio Grande Valley," Davis wrote.

Two Hereford area producers who have been active in the bargaining association point out that even the asking price arrived at during the recent Dimmitt meeting may be on the low side when spiraling production costs, inflation and other factors associated with food corn production are taken into consideration.

Kenneth Christie of Summerfield, a member of the board of the bargaining group and a food corn producer here since 1968, and Charles Schlabs of Hereford, who has worked with the bargaining group but elected not to grow food corn because he felt the contract offered wasn't attractive enough, point out that there are many hidden cost factors for a producer to consider before he signs what might look to him like a lucrative corn contract.

"There are a lot of hidden cost factors involved in growing the quality of food-grade corn Frito desires. If you produce white corn you don't have the yield potential and you'll have 25 or 35 percent less corn to sell. You take a loss on yields and if the corn doesn't meet the standards on delivery and you get it turned down, you take a double loss because the only other thing you can do with it is take it to the feed yard," said Christie.

"A payment of $10 per hundredweight for white corn sounds like a lot more than it really is, and I feel like it will take at least that to get people to the point of even being interested in growing food corn," he added.

Schlabs pointed out that the shrinkage figured on food corn which exceeds the maximum moisture limits on delivery is also a major factor to be reckoned with by any prospective grower.

"The shrink is 2 percent for every point over 14 and you certainly wouldn't be getting $7.50 per hundredweight for yellow corn when the shrink was figured. The price sounds better than it really is when the shrink hits you. Off the truck with a moisture content of 22 percent, the grower would actually be recovering a price of only $6.50 per hundredweight on $7.50 contract corn according to last year's contract terms on shrinkage," Schlabs claimed.

The local spokesmen also contended that producers must recover 33 percent more for white corn than yellow to make up for the drastic difference in yields between the white and yellow varieties.

"You have to look toward the price of corn next year. There are higher production costs and the possiblity of getting the corn turned down. Many growers have made the mistake of looking only at the attractive food corn price above the commericial board price offered and haven't considered the shrinkage involved that actually gives you less per acre. Any producer is interested in what he can net back and with more shrionkage and less yield from food-grade corn, the only way you can make up for these shortages is with a more attractive price," said Schlabs.

According to Christie, proponents of grain alcohol production contend that corn is worth $8.50 per hundredweight as a source of raw mateial for conversion to fuel.

"We're asking $7.50 per hundredweight for yellow corn for human consumption. If we can't realize a premium for growing high quality corn for human consumption and can't make more money at it than growing corn for livestock feed, then we don't need to be involved in this pursuit," Christie commented.

The bargaining association members maintain that the futures market bears out their contention that corn should be worth more next year.

They cited figures showing corn worth 72 cents more on the 1980 December futures than on the 1979 December futures.

The local spokesmen explained the bargaining association hopes to bring about not only improved prices for the 1980 food corn crop, but also "more acceptable" grading standards concerning the product.

According to the bargaining association representatives, grading standards are currently a major bone of contention between area producers and the food firm.

"We're not anti-Frito, and we want to continue to do business with them if we can afford to. We've been in the minus column for a few years now under price and contract terms, though, and we're going to have to have $7.50 for yellow and $10 for white corn before we can even start to do business. The board of the bargaining association couldn't recommend that anyone sign any current contract, but hopefully the board can work out a contract that will be worthwhile to the growers. If we can't be paid a fair price for producing high quality food-grade corn, then I think it's time we abandon production," Christie concluded.

NBC's 'White Paper' Series Takes On Presidency Tonight

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC revived its "White Paper" documentary series in August with a two-hour examination of United States foreign policyn and returns tonight with a report on a subject at least as enormous, the presidency.

"It's so overwhelming," says Adrienne Cowles, who co-produced "The American Presidency" with Darold Murray. "You walk into the Library of Congress and, my God, volumes have been written on the subject.

"When you're talking about the presidency," she says, "you're talking about the institutions that affect the presidency, as well as the person who holds the office.

"There was a lot we did not deal with, the six-year term, for example. We tried to narrow the subject to the job, and how it affects and is affected by the person in office."

"The American Presidency" begins, essentially, with Franklin D. Roosevelt, and uses the war in Vietnam and Watergate as focal points.

NBC's "White Paper" series was begun in 1960, then discontinued several years ago. The two-hour program on foreign policy, with Garrick Utley and chief correspondent, was a critical success but a flop in the ratings.

A similar fate probably awaits "The American Presidency." The 90-minute documentary, 9:30-11 p.m., EST, is at least well-done; coming as it does the day after Christmas can't help the ratings.

David Brinkley is correspondent for "The American Presidency," and his sardonic style set a tone that allowed the producers to include clips of comic Mark Russell and Chevy Chase, the former star of NBC's "Saturday Night Live" show.

Beyond that, says Miss Cowles, few could match Brinkley in expertise.

"David has covered the White House since the time of Truman," she says, "and in the journalistic world, who knows more about the presidency than him?"

Brinkley wrote the script for "The American Presidency," and, says MisCowles, "I think it's wonderfully sophisticated and perceptive."

Dozens were interviewed for the documentary, and several, including former President Gerald R. Ford and Lady Bird Johnson, widow of the late President Lyndon B. Johnson, appear on film. Miss Cowles says former President Richard M. Nixon declined to be interviewed, and President Jimmy Carter was embroiled in the Iranian crisis and could not participate.

George Reedy, Johnson's press secretary and John Ehrlichman, Nixon's chief domestic adviser, comment thoughout "The American Presidency," as does Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn.

"These people often say the kinds of things you don't expect them to say," Miss Cowles says. "We asked them questions they aren't usually asked, and their answers often are kind of startling. I'm sure Sen. Ribicoff isn't often asked about the presidency."

Ehrlichman, to cite one instance, tells how Nixon and his aides would "sit around the White House and spend an hour-and-a-half talking about how to capture a minute-and-a-half on John Chancellor that night."

The documentary, in the end, asks, "Can anyone govern America?"

"Every four years," says Thomas Cronin, an authority on the office, "there is the view that the news president will be able to turn around the leadership difficulties in America. But the constraints now imposed on the American presidency make it more difficult to lead, make the presidency more and more a no win situation."

Gifts Happily Surprise Garbageman's Children

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Raymond Sansbury's seven children on Tuesday happily tore the wrapping off dozens of colorful Christmas packages that poured in from around the country after the $112-a-week garbageman was arrested for taking discarded items from a dump for Chistmas gifts.

"It's restored my faith in people," Sansbury said. "I didn't realize so many people cared, but people really do care about one another."

The youngest child, 4-year-old Tyrone, wandered around the four-room frame house Christmas morning with a new Teddy bear in tow as Sansbury, 33, and his wife, Edell, 28, looked on.

"He won't let it go, he's keeping it with him," Sansbury said.

His wife couldn't stop smiling as she watched the children open their presents. "This is a direct blessing from the Lord," she said.

Sansbury was arrested last week on a trespassing charge for picking up discarded shoes and clothing at a landfill in nearby Cheraw. For health and safety reasons, South Carolina law prohibits unauthorized persons from taking items from dumps.

After the arrest was publicized, gifts, cards and money have been sent to the family from across the country. By Christmas Eve, more than $2,200 in telegraphed money orders had arrived, and Sansbury said Tuesday he didn't know exactly how much he had received.

Hundreds of Christmas cards were piled around the house in several boxes, many containing checks and money orders, including $500 from entertainer Sammy Davis Jr.

"It's been quite a bit (of money)," Sansbury said. "I'm going to try to put most of it away and save it for the children's education. I want to try and put all of them through college after they finish high school."

The family also received a $100 gift certificate for groceries at a store in nearby Rockingham, N.C., and was treated to a $900 shopping spree Sunday at a Rockingham department store.

Mrs. Sansbury only took three dresses for herself on that trip, but said Christmas Day that she had everything she wanted.

"What I wanted most I have already gotten and that was happiness," she said. "I'm sure Christmases from now on will be happy, but not as happy as this one."

Sansbury said the public response has made him more optimistic about his Thursday court date on the trespassing charge. The misdemeanor carries a maximum penalty of a $100 fine or 30 days in jail.

Some callers have said they would pay the fine if Sansbury is found guilty, and others have offered free legal advice.

"I'm still nervous about it," he said, "but maybe now they'll forget the whole thing. I hope they will."

Baptists Oust Psychics 'Doing God's Work'

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. (AP) — A mother and a daughter say they have been banished from a Baptist church for reading a crystal ball and palms to tell the future and accepting cash for their services.

"I was called an abomination," said Lolaverne Stephenson Rubenstein. "I was called a sorceress. I was called a witch. I firmly believe I'm doing God's work."

Mrs. Rubinstein says she has read the palms of about 30 church members. Her daughter, who uses the name Fern Robin, also gives psychic readings, using a crystal ball.

They said elders of the Rockwood Baptist Church told them such activities are sinful. A vote at a church business meeting to banish them as members was 48-14, with 10 abstentions.

Nearly a dozen relatives of the women resigned from the church in protest. The family joined the Southern Baptist congregation 25 years ago. Mrs. Rubinstein and her daughter have been members 18 years.

The Rev. Sidney Scott, pastor of the church, declined comment on the expulsions. "We feel that it's an internal matter," he said. "In due time, the repercussions will subside."

A special church committee questioned the women in closed sessions Dec. 3 and 4.

"It was an inquisition," said Mrs. Rubenstein.

Broadcast Hours Subject Of Debate For Daytime Radio Stations

METROPOLIS, Ill. (AP) — Superman may be faster than a speeding bullet, but if he flies into Metropolis, Ill., after dark, no one will hear about it on radio station WMOK.

If a tornado bears down on the town of Highland, Ill., after sundown, listeners of WINU will get no emergency instructions on their radios.

The stations, like 2,300 others nationwide, are required by law to turn off their transmitters at sunset. The stations are known as "daytimers" and their owners have been fighting the Federal Communications Commission for 25 years over operating hours.

More than 700 towns like Highland and Metropolis are served only by an AM daytime station — no fulltime AM, no FM and no television, said Ray Livesay of Mattoon, Ill., long-time chairman of the Daytime Broadcasters Association.

"We think this is similar to saying you people can use our federal highways in the daytime, but at sunset you get off of them. They're for the city slickers not the country folks," said Livesay.

The "daytimers," which sign off as early as 4:45 p.m. in winter, cannot broadcast live high school games, and they have less commercial time to sell than their big rivals.

"The busiest time of the year, Christmas, we're on the air for the shortest period of time," said Virgil Smith, manager of WMOK in Metropolis. "We're only allowed so many commercials an hour, and people don't understand why they can't get their commercials on the air."

Highland has no daily newspaper and many of the 15,000 residents wonder why WINU is off the air from sunset to sunrise.

"In winter, irate parents call and want to know if the schools are open and buses are running," said WINU manager Glenn Bircher. "People think we're just too cheap to sign on earlier."

Livesay calls it discrimination, but does not believe the FCC will change the rules without pressure from citizens and Congress.

Lawmakers like Rep. Paul Findley, R-Ill., agree the daytime-only restriction hurts small town people.

"It deprives them of entertainment, news, emergency service and public information which they desperately need," said Findley. "The current system is not fair and must be changed."

There are 107 AM frequencies. In the late 1940s, broadcasters who wanted to build stations in small towns found that the six frequencies set aside for local, fulltime stations were full. Livesay and others accepted daytime licenses.

"It was sort of a governmental roof patching job," said Livesay. "They just started a haphazard, helter-skelter system of sticking stations on as daytimers."

By signing off at night, when radio signals travel farthest, daytimers do not interfere with the larger, more powerful fulltime stations.

Twenty-five stations, among the first to be licensed in this country, are called clear-channel stations. Many share their frequency with no other station at night, so they can be heard for more than 1,000 miles.

That bothers some daytimers.

Livesay said that when the first few clear channel stations went on the air, everyone depended on them because there was little local service in the large listening areas.

But the population moved west, towns grew and FM and television came into being. People depended less on the clear channels, Livesay said.

He said the daytime stations serve 46 million people and could provide better service by being on the air at night, even if that means reducing the range of the clear channel stations.

Not surprisingly, clear channel station managers disagree.

"There are millions of people out there who get no service other than what they get from the clear channels," said Len Hensel, manager of WSM in Nashville.

He and others at clear channel stations argue that people driving across the country need a station they can listen to for 1,000 miles or more, not local stations that fade in and out.

Three ways have been suggested to create additional spaces on the dial so daytimers could broadcast at night.

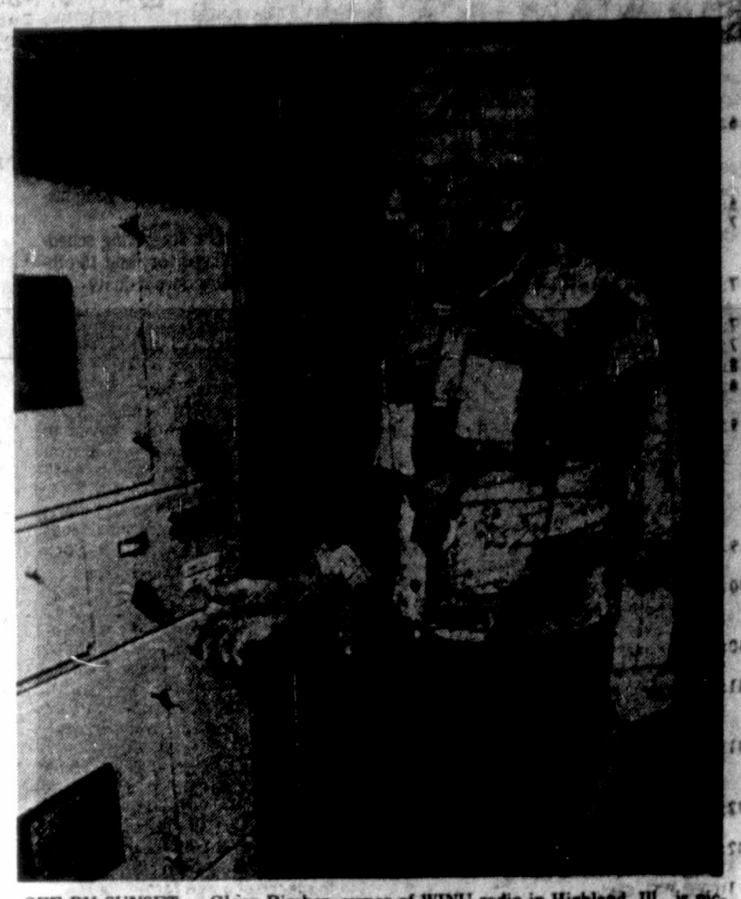

One would extend the AM band from 1600 to 1850, but listeners would have to buy new radios.

Livesay developed a plan to reduce the space between stations from 10 to 9 kilohertz to affect the power and range of the clear channel stations, but that would require approval in Canada and South America.

Another plan supported by Livesay would require the clear channel stations to share 11 fulltime frequencies.

The clear channel forces oppose any limit on their range, especially the plan to share frequencies with each other.

"I have no problem with the 2,300 stations broadcasting fulltime," said Hensel. "But, I'd rather they didn't do it at our expense."

Director Applies 'Geometric Lines'

BOSTON (AP) — His degree from the University of Florence is in architecture, and Franco Zeffirelli finds that training useful in directing stage plays, operas, films and television shows.

He said he uses the training more for design — he has designed plays and operas — but, "that kind of education gives you a lot of geometric lines to your thinking."

"I can put together fantastically difficult productions," he said, and he's been asked how he can do that in a few days.

"A lot comes from the mental training at the university," said Zeffirelli, who was born in Florence and lives in Rome.

Zeffirelli, who also has been an actor — "How many things can you do?" — set out to be an architect, switching for a fresh start "immediately after the war."

"I didn't want to spend my life building ugly buildings," he said at a recent news luncheon.

Zeffirelli is director of "Filumena," an Italian comedy playing at the Shubert Theatre through Jan. 6, before opening on Broadway. A hit in London, the show stars Joan Plowright and Frank Finlay.

He has directed Maria Callas in the opera "Tosca," Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton in "The Taming of The Shrew," the 1968 film "Romeo and Juliet" with Olivia Hussey and Michael York, the television classic "Jesus of Nazareth," and the recent film, "The Champ," starring John Voight, Faye Dunaway and Ricky Schroder.

"I can't tell you," he said when asked which medium he prefers. "I am like a sultan, you know, with three wives. You get to bed with one; she's the one. I really cannot make up my mind."

Zeffirelli said he measures success in terms of the number of persons who see his work, rather than the profit.

"I don't like to judge in terms of dollars," he said. "I like to judge in participation all over the world. Success means for me the number of people, the millions, who go to see my film."

Asked what is the hardest thing about directing, he said: "Responsibility, because you can harm or help people through your camera."

And, he warned that, "Especially in America, success is equally harmful as a flop." With a success, he said, "You might be tempted to consider yourself a bit above your place."

His answer is to "run away, whether it's a success or a flop."

Zeffirelli will direct the filming next year of "Mommy Dearest," based in part on Christina Crawford's biography of her mother, actress Joan Crawford.

Anne Bancroft has been cast in the film, which Zeffirelli said he wants to do in part because of his interest in the problems great stars have with their lives.

"All (great stars) tried to find a balance between their image as artists and their feelings as human beings," he said.

He described today's stars as "neurotic and damned," and said the men are worse than the women.

"They all died alcoholics. They destroyed themselves," he said of male stars of the 1930s, but added, "There are exceptions."

Of the book "Mommy Dearest," Zeffirelli said, "I don't think it's right to give audiences this image of Joan Crawford." He said he thinks it is his duty not to leave that image, and is using other sources in addition to the book for the film.

He described stars as "always desperately insecure," and said, "I'm fascinated by the opportunity to tell the story of one of these ladies or men."

RESTAURANT SOUP

"Restaurant" was originally the name of a soup invented in 1557 by a Frenchman names Palissy. The soup consisted of finely-minced fowl and broth highly spiced with cinnamon and coriander. In 1765 a tavern was opened in Paris under the title "Restaurant" for the purpose of supplying this soup.

Popular Acting Company's Shaky Finances Fails To Alarm Founder

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Tony Award-winning American Conservatory Theater, known as ACT to a legion of fans, suffers from a baffling paradox. Red ink in the ledger is spreading as fast as its popularity and international fame.

But Bill Ball, balding director of the group which began its 14th season in mid-October, focuses most of his energy on his actors and leaves high finance to others.

His main task, he said in an interview in a spartan office across the street from the Geary Theater, where ACT performs, is to keep his actors happy.

"I ask myself, 'If I give the actor everything he needs, what kind of theater will he create?' If he has employment security, challenging professional peers, good parts, variety in his work and — very, very important — he is always in training, the answer is he acts like gangbusters!"

The company has a staggering schedule of nine plays in repertory and 15 others in production. How does it do it?

UNWORRIED ABOUT MONEY — Bill Ball, director of the American Conservatory Theater, poses with an award won by his group. Although popular, the group operates in the red, a situation that fails to ruffle Ball. (AP Laserphoto)

"There's a secret to it," the 52-year-old Ball said merrily. "If you keep an actor busy, always working, he has to rely on intuition. He can't think or be afraid. And when you take away his fear and liberate his intuition, he is a glorious creature."

Ball stumbled onto his formula during a professional odyssey that led to a stint off Broadway in the late 1950s, where he won an Obie, the Vernon Rice Drama Desk Award and an Outer Circle Critics' Award. He directed Shakespeare festivals across the country before returning to New York to direct "Tartuffe" at the Lincoln Center and several productions of the New York City Opera.

His experience convinced him that traditional methods of mounting a play — hiring directors and actors for brief commercial ventures, was inefficient and demoralizing. He envisioned a permanent repertory company offering first-rate drama and ongoing training to its actors.

"It was an experiment. I didn't know how it would turn out and my dearest friends cautioned me that a theater and a school was too big a venture," he recalled. "And besides, they said, 'Who does repertory any more?'"

In 1964, Ball went home to Pittsburgh to establish his own company, but soon took the group on tour, where it was wooed by several cities.

San Francisco officialdom was most convincing. It opened its arms — and the Geary Theater — to Ball and his troupers in 1965. Later, ACT set up a school and offices across the street and eventually leased two smaller theaters for students, experiments and unabashedly commercial works.

And the company, which received a Tony last spring for outstanding contributions to the American stage, has grown. It now is the largest regional theater in the country, with 45 professional actors who teach and perform, along with more than 100 full-time students who depend on ACT's training and reputation to launch them in theater, television or movie careers.

Yet problems with financing continue. They are not helped, critics say, by Ball's insistance that tickets be priced within the reach of the average wage-earner. A front row seat in the balcony costs $9, a respectable orchestra seat is $11 and the worst seats in the house cost a mere $3.50, dirt cheap for a professional theater performance. Prices rise slightly on weekends.

Still, ACT manages to recoup 70 percent of expenses at the box office. For the rest, the company looks to government and foundation grants and public fund drives.

And it isn't only money that generates problems. Ball's approach to the theater also has drawn fire. In fact, it has been labeled superficial by critics. Ball dismisses suggestions that ACT's fare is too staid or lacking in political and social "relevancy."

"In Russia, the theater is used to say things that cannot be said straight out. If you want to make a political statement in this country, you can call a press conference or a demonstration," Ball said flatly. "That frees the theater to create art."

Comedian Moves To Long Awaited Home

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Comedian Bob Hope celebrated the Christmas season this year with something besides his usual television special — he and his family have finally moved in to the house he started building some eight years ago.

Family friends said Hope's wife, Dolores, moved into the modern, mushroom-shaped residence last Tuesday and that the couple was entertaining the families of their four adopted children over the holidays.

The house, in the exclusive Southridge area of this desert resort, reportedly has 14,000 square feet of interior space over several levels and is covered by a 25,000-foot-square roof.

Construction began in 1972, but on July 24, 1973, the home was gutted by a fire ignited by sparks from a welder's torch. The $500,000 loss was covered by insurance.

The outer structure has been under reconstruction since 1977, when a new building permit was issued for repairs.

ENERGY REMINDER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is another energy-saving reminder from the Department of Energy: Have your furnace serviced once a year. Correct adjustment could mean a saving of up to 10 percent in energy costs.

'Quick-With-A-Comeback' Blond Actress Dies

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Joan Blondell, the quick-with-a-comeback blonde who played opposite Hollywood's top stars in films of the 1930s and '40s, died Christmas morning at age 73.

Miss Blondell died of leukemia at 4:30 a.m. at St. John's Hospital, where she had been ill for several weeks, said Flora Marks, the actress's business manager.

Miss Blondell's son, television producer Norman Powell, daughter Ellen Powell and sister Gloria were at her bedside. A memorial service will be held Friday afternoon at Forest Lawn cemetery.

Although she moved into more mature roles in her later years, Miss Blondell made her reputation as a brassy but good-hearted heroine in dozens of comedies and musicals in Hollywood's golden years.

In her heyday, she exchanged wisecracks with such leading men as James Cagney, Edward G. Robinson, Spencer Tracy, Clark Gable, Leslie Howard, Erroll Flynn, Pat O'Brien and Robert Taylor.

"I was the fizz on the soda," she once said.

The daughter of a vaudeville couple in New York City, Miss Blondell started in the family act at age 3.

She parlayed her first major Broadway success — "Maggie the Magnificent" opposite Cagney — into a 1930 contract with Warner Bros. She made so many films that she later had trouble remembering them all.

Movies were hard work in those days, Miss Blondell recalled in her 1972 autobiography, "Center Door Fancy."

"We worked so hard and hardly had a day off," she once said. "It was much tougher than television. I know you hear to the contrary.

"When I started in the '30s, Saturday was a working day and we usually worked until Sunday mornning.

Although she once said that all she ever wanted was "to have one husband and house and one garden and a lot of children," in her younger days Miss Blondell lived the glamorous life of a movie star, with homes in New York and one in Hollywood.

She married three times. Her first marriage, in 1933, was to cinematographer George Barnes whom she described as "the first one to make us look beautiful on that old, harsh, black-and-white film." They had one son, Norman, and were divorced three years later.

Shortly after, she married singer-actor Dick Powell, father of her daughter Ellen.

They divorced in 1944 and in 1947, she wed showman Mike Todd. She worked with him on one film, "The Naked Genius." The marriage ended in 1950.

Miss Blondell said the 1945 film, "A Tree Grows In Brooklyn" began her transition from ingenue to more heavyweight roles.

"Elia Kazan let me have a moment or two of tenderness, of maturity, that nobody had ever given me before," she said.

In 1951, she was nominated for an Oscar for her supporting role in "The Blue Veil."

She went on to play a variety of character roles, both in films and one television.

For two seasons, starting in 1968, she was the bawdy salonkeeper, Lottie, on ABC's "Here Come The Brides." In 1972 she had a featured role on the NBC series "Banyon."

In 1978, she appeared in the film "Grease."

Her lifestyle in reccent years was quiet and unpretentious. She lived on a hilltop home in the Los Angeles suburb of Sherman Oakes and enjoyed babysitting for her grandchildren.

Here role in Banyon took her back to the Warner Bros. lot where she first became a star. The experience brought back memories, she said: "Since they were young memories they're happy ones."

Disturbance By Oregon Prison Inmates Quelled; Probe Slated

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — Two of six cellblocks at the Oregon State Correctional Institution were locked down Tuesday after more than 200 inmates set books and clothing on fire and pitched food into corridors in a Christmas Eve fracas.

State officials called the outburst "a rather significant disturbance," but reported no injuries to inmates or corrections officers.

"The place was a mess," said Dave Fiskum, spokesman for the state Department of Human Resources.

Fiskum said there was no damage estimate, but it appeared to be mostly a matter of cleaning up. There was some smoke damage, he said.

A lockdown means the 274 inmates in those two units are restricted to their cells. Forty-eight inmates were identified as instigators and placed in segregation, Fiskum said.

Corrections Division officials planned to interview inmates today to determine what triggered the uproar. OSCI Superintendent George Sullivan said it appeared to be a spontaneous rather than a planned event, according to Fiskum.

"The fact that it was Christmas might have entered into it," Fiskum said.

The trouble began with shouting and noise-making in one unit after inmates returned from a midnight mass, he said.

Then fires started, and inmates began hurling objects from their cells, Fiskum said. The chaos spread to an adjacent unit and, to a lesser degree, to a third one, he said.

Officials used fire hoses to douse the flames and quell the disturbance, he said.

Fiskum said overcrowding is an underlying problem. In the two locked down units, 274 inmates live in facilities designed for 129.

He said there are 737 inmates at the prison, designed to hold 476.
