Iraq softens on siege

■ Documents discovered by inspectors contain 'gold mines' of data proving Iraq lied, Gen. Colin Powell says.

Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — Iraq said Wednesday it was willing to release 44 U.N. arms inspectors who have been detained for two days for refusing to surrender documents detailing the country's secret nuclear weapons program.

The inspectors will be released if they agree to provide Iraq with a catalogue of all the documents recovered from files at an Iraqi nuclear energy building, according to a letter sent by Iraqi Ambassador Abdul Amir al-Anbari to Security Council President Jean-Bernard Merimee, the French ambassador.

The detention of the inspectors was the most serious in a series of conflicts between Iraq and U.N. inspectors. The Security Council is attempting to force Iraq to comply with the Gulf War cease-fire resolution, which orders Baghdad to destroy its weapons of mass destruction and desist from building or acquiring new ones.

British Ambassador Sir David Hannay told reporters that based on the letter "it appears as if a settlement has been reached on the release of the U.N. inspectors."

There was no official announcement, however, of an end to the siege in Baghdad, where the inspectors have been camped in a bus and six cars outside the Iraqi Atomic Energy Commission building, surrounded by soldiers.

El Salvador, rebels reach broad pact

■ President Cristiani predicts end to 11-year-old civil war by year's end.

N.Y. Times News Service

UNITED NATIONS — The Salvadoran president, Alfredo Cristiani, and five guerrilla commanders reached a broad agreement Wednesday on the country's political and economic future that was seen as a major breakthrough in the search for peace in El Salvador.

Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar, who convened negotiations between the two sides in New York 10 days ago, said it was his "firm expectation" that what is called the New York Agreement would break the deadlock in the negotiations. He said negotiations would resume Oct. 12 for a cease-fire.

Cristiani, in an interview shortly before departing for San Salvador, predicted an end to the country's 11-year-old civil war by the end of the year.

Schafick Handal, leader of the Salvadoran Communist Party and spokesman for the five insurgent groups, said the agreement was of "great transcendence" and constituted "a new victory of democracy in El Salvador." He said it represented social and political advances made possible by the 11 years of civil war.

The agreement, which climaxes a negotiating process begun 18 months ago under the auspices of the United Nations, covers a broad range of security and economic issues having to do with the reintegration of the guerrillas of the Hospital board acts to broaden area care base

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Broadening Midland's health-care community was the focus in Wednesday's meeting of the Midland County Hospital District's board of trustees.

The directors approved co-managers of revenue bonds to finance planned expansion of Memorial Hospital & Medical Center; discussed a regional blood center; authorized trading in an linear acceleration for Allison Permian Basin Cancer Center and buying a new one; discussed indigent-care costs; and listened to an informal rundown on the hospital's possible partnership with physicians in operating Surgi-Care Center.

The directors named the brokerage houses Edward D. Jones & Co. and Rauscher Pierce Refsnes and banks NCNB and First City Texas to manage approximately $20 million revenue

National health plan a hot issue

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Whether hospitals and physicians like it or not, some form of national health care is on the horizon.

It's a heated issue. One debated in cities and boardrooms across the United States from California to Washington D.C.

Although an estimated 70 percent of all Americans are insured, 33 million are not. And that doesn't count the millions more who fall between the cracks in a category referred to as "underinsured."

Already on Capitol Hill a war is brewing between the Bush administration and federal lawmakers over the necessity of some type of national policy that will provide health care for the masses.

Just what's been discussed up to this point is a mish-mash approach that has proposed mandates of private employers to offer some form of health insurance as well as expansion of the federal-state Medicaid program; and a federal/state pool that would provide insurance to the "medically underinsured."

While much has been made of the Canadian-styled system, most lawmakers as well as health-care experts believe the answer lies somewhere in the middle of the road.

National health care was first introduced as a bill in 1977. The proposed bill — the U.S. Health Care Service Act — would have established a national system that would provide free medical, dental

Blood bank is hospital's best-kept secret

HealthCare in the '90s
CRITICAL CROSSROADS

If blood is the gift of life, than Midland Memorial has been showered with presents.

Between 6,000 to 8,000 units of blood will be donated this year at the Permian Basin Blood Center located in the basement floor of the hospital off Illinois Street.

"A lot of people say they feel better (healthier) after they give a unit of blood," said Roger Johnson, the bank's technical director. "I don't know what to attribute that to, other than they feeling of having helped someone."

The center — regulated by the Food & Drug Administration — is a total self-supportive operation, depending on walk-ins and blood clubs for its daily supply.

"But our main source of blood is the clubs," Johnson said. "We have about 122 in this area."

Nationally, just 3 percent of the population give blood each year. "And that's pretty low. I think a lot of people think about it, but some just don't feel comfortable doing it."

Yet giving blood is a simple process — one that takes just 20 minutes to complete.

According to Johnson the process also serves as a mini-health screen test that can alert donors of possible problems such as high blood pressure.

Johnson said those considering giving blood must be in good health and weigh at least 110 pounds.

Biospherians count down to start of 2-year adventure

ORACLE, Ariz. (AP) — Against a backdrop of laser lights and tribal music, four men and four women bid goodbye to friends and families Wednesday before being sealed for two years in a glass-enclosed, self-sustaining mini-world.

The crew of the Biosphere II project went through a day of interviews and celebration in advance of C-Day — as in Closure — set for shortly after sunrise today.

The eight crew members — they call themselves biospherians — will spend 24 months sealed in the 3.15-acre geodesic-framed compound, barring serious illness or major mishap.

Crew members range from ages 27 to 67. Two are from England, one from Belgium, the rest from the United States.

"We've toodled around the harbor, we know it's gonna float, we know it's gonna sail," said Jane Poynter, 29, who will run the intensive farming operation. "Now we have to see, can we make it sail for two years, and beyond that, for a hundred years?"

The crew will try to replicate the earth's environment — raising their own food and recycling all air, water and wastes — to test space colonization technologies. And they'll have in-person contact only with each other.

Space Biospheres Ventures, developer of the private, for-profit project financed by entrepreneur Edward P. Bass at a cost of perhaps $150 million, expects to draw up to a half-million visitors annually and has applied for some 50 design patents.

It has incorporated several man-made climatic zones, called biomes, under the double-laminated glass: 85-foot rain forest with waterfall, savannah, ocean with coral reef, fresh-to-saltwater marshes and high-humidity desert.

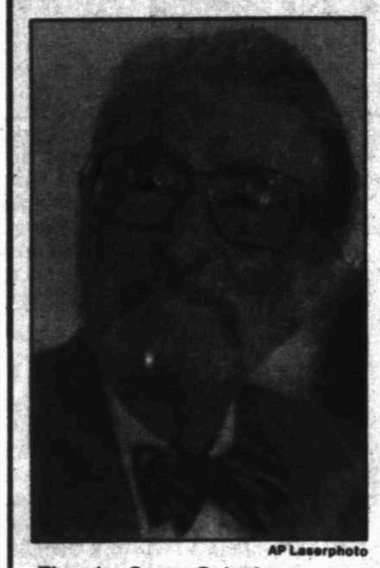

The biomes are packed with 3,800 plant and animal species, from bananas, peanuts and papayas to wheat and potatoes, talapia fish and hummingbirds, butterflies and pygmy goats.

"I have keen anticipation to get to that final moment, and then we can get to that two years of hard work," Bass, who generally refuses to talk to reporters, said Tuesday night during last-minute

As much as 4 inches of rain drenched New England on Wednesday, and the Rio Grande River flooded farmland in southwest Texas. It continued to feel like summer in Florida — for at least part of the day.

Locally heavy rain from thunderstorms included 2½ inches at Worcester, Mass. There were reports of 3 to 4 inches of rain across southwest Connecticut.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours ending at 1 p.m. CDT included a 1⅛ inches at Bangor, Maine, and Conord, N.H., 1¼ inches at Portsmouth, N.H., Houlton, Maine, and Chicopee Falls, Mass.

Levees protecting farmland along the Rio Grande River were broken near Presidio, Texas, flooding fields and destroying crops. A state highway was closed between Presidio and Lajitas, the National Weather Service said.

A railroad bridge between Presidio and Ojinaga was damaged by flooding, the weather service said.

Thunderstorms moved across the Northern California coast Wednesday morning, causing power and telephone outages in Salinas, the weather service said.

At midday, showers and thunderstorms extended from Florida and Georgia across New York and New England, over east-central Alabama, upper Michigan and northern and western lower Michigan, eastern Wisconsin, northeast Illinois, northwest Indiana, southeast Minnesota and California between San Francisco and Santa Barbara.

SIEGE: Decision to give way comes suddenly

(From 1A)

As tensions rose earlier in the day, the United States began moving Patriot anti-missile units to the Persian Gulf in case the U.N. Security Council orders military escorts for U.N. teams searching Iraq.

Iraq gave the Security Council written assurance Tuesday that it would no longer interfere with search flights by U.N. helicopters — another demand of the United Nations that Iraq bowed to after much obstruction.

U.N. officials said Iraq might be tested in four or five days with a search for Scud missiles in western Iraq.

An unofficial translation of the Iraq's letter concerning the inspectors asked the chief U.N. weapons official, Rolf Ekeus, to go to Baghdad to work out the details "of remedying the current situation."

If Ekeus does not go to Baghdad in 48 hours, "the Iraqi authorities insist that the Iraqi side and the inspection team jointly draw up a record of all the documents and photographs taken by the team before the team is authorized to remove anything from the site."

Iraq said it would not acknowledge the validity of any document or photograph not entered in the joint catalogue.

Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said the documents discovered by the inspectors contain "gold mines" of data proving Iraq lied in its repeated denials that it has a nuclear weapons program.

The Security Council has insisted all along that the inspectors be released, and warned Iraq of the consequences, as have U.S. officials.

The leader of the U.N. team, David Kay, refused to comment on the Iraqi letter but said early today, Baghdad time, that he continued to be "optimistic." He spoke in an satellite phone interview with The Associated Press.

Kay said in an interview at sundown Wednesday that the Iraqis briefly beefed up the force surrounding the inspectors, with 200 soldiers outside the fence around the lot and others in buildings overlooking the site. But overnight only about 80 soldiers were surrounding the area, he said today.

The Iraqis allowed other U.N. officials to deliver food and water to the team, who were in six cars and an air-conditioned bus.

"We're proceeding as one might expect when you go on a sudden and unexpected camping outing in the middle of a parking lot in Baghdad," Kay told Cable News Network.

PACT: President, rebels reach broad agreement

(From 1A)

Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front into civilian life.

Under the agreement, the rebels will be able to seek appointment to a new civilian-controlled police force without discrimination and the government will protect the right of guerrilla families to hold on to the land they have occupied.

A peace commission will also be set up to oversee the carrying out of the accords.

Rep. Robert G. Torricelli, D-N.J., who is chairman of the Western Hemisphere Subcommittee of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, telephoned from Washington to say that the "pace of the breakthrough caught everyone by surprise." He predicted that it would lead to a cease-fire within weeks.

Cristiani said only a handful of issues, mainly having to do with the reform and reduction of the armed forces, remain undecided before a cease-fire. He said there was already consensus on some of them.

"As I said in my speech Monday, 1991 will be the year of peace," he said, referring to his address to the General Assembly.

Perez de Cuellar announced the accord after a brief signing ceremony in his offices.

The five guerrilla commanders and a government delegation led by Cristiani's chief of staff, Oscar Santamaria, and the Deputy minister of defense, Col. Mauricio E. Vargas, signed the agreement.

The guerrilla leaders are Handal, Joaquin Villalobos, Salvador Sanchez Ceren, Eduardo Sancho Castaneda and Francisco Jovel. Sanchez is also known as Leonel Gonzalez, his nom de guerre, Sancho as Ferman Cienfuegos, and Jovel as Roberto Roca.

Critics have maintained that Cristiani, who has been under great pressure from the Salvadoran armed forces and his own political party not to give away too much, will have difficulty keeping his commitments in terms of the behavior and reform of the armed forces, but the U.N. mediator, Alvaro de Soto, discounted that.

De Soto, the secretary general's representative in conducting the negotiations, said he had "no reason to doubt that the armed forces will accept it."

He noted that Vargas was here for the negotiations and had signed the accord and that the defense minister, Gen. Rene Emilio Ponce, had been regularly consulted.

The accord, which complements earlier accords on human rights protection and political reform, has these main points:

■ A National Commission for the Consolidation of Peace will be set up to oversee the carrying out of the accords. It will consist two members each from the government and guerrilla front, plus representatives of the political parties, the church and the United Nations.

■ The armed forces will be "purified" on the basis of the evaluation of its members by an ad hoc commission. In settlement of a long-contended point, the guerrillas agreed to a government request for two army officers to take part in the deliberations, without a vote.

ADVENTURE: Crew prepares for 'Closure Day'

(From 1A)

preparations.

Reproduction among all the species but the humans will be encouraged.

Sex, however, certainly has not been ruled out. The Biosphere's head, Margret Augustine, says that what the crew members do after working hours will be their own business.

Each biospherian is likely to spend about four hours daily on farming and other chores to maintain the complicated machinery driving the Biosphere — billed as the world's most airtight structure. Another four hours a day will go to scientific work.

Psychologists say the group's focus on goals — and sufficient comfort — likely will keep them from getting on each other's nerves too badly.

Pre-closure celebrations scheduled for much of Wednesday included American Indian dances and urban music, a cocktail reception under the stars and a laser light show.

But there was last-minute negative news as well.

The contractor that built the wave-making machine for the Biosphere's mini-ocean asked a judge Wednesday to allow it access to the supposedly sealed project to inspect the equipment. Pacific Aquascape Inc. of Huntington Beach, Calif., failed to win an emergency order, but is pursuing its claim in federal court that it's owed $321,000.

There have been persistent questions about the project's scientific validity. The latest surfaced in reports that a prestigious consultant, Smithsonian Institution marine specialist Walter Adey, had cut his ties to the project, fearing that his field of synthetic ecology could be discredited.

He was quoted as saying it was unlikely the system would support humans for two years.

Adey's office said Wednesday he was on an expedition and could not be reached.

Biosphere II spokeswoman Kathleen Dyhr said Adey's contract had expired but that as far as she knew, Adey had not severed his relationship with the Biosphere project.

The eight crew members will be residents of some of the world's most expensive apartments.

Their multi-story habitat includes a gourmet kitchen, tiled in white-and-black, replete with a halogen stove. Similarly, the office-lab-clinic-workshop-recreational setup boasts state-of-the-art equipment — from videoconferencing, computers, faxes and phones, TVs and VCRs to exercise equipment.

BOARD: Meeting focuses on broadening base bonds for the proposed expansion of Midland's Memorial Hospital & Medical Center.

(From 1A)

The major expansion is to bolster the hospital's support services, including the emergency department, out-patient services, imaging center and the clinical laboratory.

The board also noted the need for a regional blood center, which would be mid-way between Midland and Odessa and be jointly operated by Memorial Hospital and Medical Center Hospital in Odessa.

The center would ensure availability of blood for patients throughout the region.

"Some people have been trying to come into this market, taking away our population's blood supply and selling it for profit elsewhere," Tom Bruner, board member, said following the meeting. "We don't want a foreign corporation coming in here," he said. "We want to have our own local blood supply controlled by our own people."

Blood collected here stays here and is not shipped outside the state, Bruner said.

Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, hospital board president, permitted Edna Walger, founder-president of Citizens Against Taxpayer Abuse (CATA), to pose questions to the board, which often focused on indigent care and hospital profits and expansions.

Mrs. Walger asked if the hospital was negotiating to buy or to buy into Surgi-Care Center near the hospital.

Joseph I. O'Neill III, chairman of the hospital's board of trustees, confirmed that the hospital is negotiating a partnership with doctors who own the center, which O'Neill later said would complement the hospital's Abell-Hanger Medical Pavilion.

"We will be partners with Surgi-Care just like we are in partnership with doctors in MRI (Magnetic Resonance Imaging)," O'Neill said. "That will afford us another off-campus place to serve the people of this community."

O'Neill did not discuss any financial proposals since the partnership is still under discussion.

"It makes good business sense, in our opinion, to be partners with good doctors who feel loyal to this hospital in order to serve this town," O'Neill said.

Afterward, O'Neill said that hospital-physician partnerships are a "very common practice" throughout the nation.

In the Surgi-Care proposal, the hospital would own 60 percent of the center and physicians 40 percent.

A wholly doctor-owned healthcare unit would equate to a "conflict of interest," and "doctors (would) have control of the patients and patient costs" in seeking profitability, O'Neill said.

"A physician-owned facility can gouge its on patients," he said.

Midway in the session, CATA's Mrs. Walger, as she repeatedly has before, focused on the hospital's indigent-care costs; the hospital's profits, which also are called excess revenue; the hospital's expansion plans, and the hospital's three-tier hierarchy, including the board of governors, board of trustees and board of directors.

"Decisions are made by the (appointed) board of trustees and are implemented by this (elected) board" of directors, Mrs. Walger said.

"I really feel we are treading over the same territory time after time," Wiesenfeld told Mrs. Walger. "You seem to fail to grasp some basic concepts about what we are doing, how we make our decisions, and what indigent care is all about."

And Wiesenfeld suggested that if Mrs. Walger is "going to be a critic, an effective critic, it behooves you to become as knowledgable as possible" about the hospital's practices and operations.

"I'm trying to, Dr. Wiesenfeld," Mrs. Walger said. "I'm trying desperately to understand what's going on here. I really am."

Afterward, in the hallway while the board was in executive session, Mrs. Walger said, "The taxpayers are willing to take care of our indigents but not at elevated prices. I want a list of what went up" related to patient costs.

And Mrs. Walger said she has no ill will toward anyone associated with the hospital.

Tax revenue pays for less than 70 percent of indigent-care costs at the hospital, Bruner had noted. The shortfall is absorbed by the hospital's excess revenue — profits.

O'Neill said the hospital's not-for-profit status means the hospital is not "investor-owned, whereby the investor hopes to make a profit and takes those profits out of the hospital."

Rather than being in the business of making money for profit's sake, the hospital must "make a profit to pay for expansion, to pay for debt, to grow with the health needs of the community," O'Neill said.

"Profits go to pay for indigent-care deficits, brick and mortar, and operations. It stays in the hospital as surplus. It is reinvested. It (the hospital) is owned by the tax district, and the tax district, of course, is the taxpayers."

Miners storm government palace, battle police

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Thousands of coal miners, angered by steep food prices and a plunging standard of living, attacked the government palace and fought police Wednesday in battles that left three dead and at least 60 injured.

After a day of rioting, the president announced he would form a new government "of national openness," but later ordered the army and Interior Ministry to protect state property and restore order, according to state television.

The miners, who had commandeered trains in central Romania to bring their demands to Bucharest, stormed the government building and fought police with firebombs, clubs, rocks and axes.

The injured in fighting that spread through downtown streets included 34 policemen, the Interior Ministry said.

President Jon Iliescu and Premier Petre Roman later informed the Supreme Council of National Defense they would move to form a new government to restore order, according to state television.

It said that the council, headed by Iliescu, decided to send troops to the capital, claiming the miners were threatening the security of Romania and "the lives of high-ranking government officials ... constituting terrorist acts."

Earlier, the miners had threatened to remain in Bucharest until the government resigned.

"We are not going to leave this town until Roman resigns," said Miron Cosma, the leader of the miners. "The responsibility for the dead is his."

It was the largest and most violent protest in months against Roman's tough market-oriented reforms, which have resulted in a sharp price increases.

Romania was already one of Europe's poorest countries in the wake of Nicolae Ceausescu's decades of Communist dictatorship.

In the melee at the government headquarters, helmeted miners threw firebombs at the building, starting small fires. Police responded with tear gas, and choking clouds hung over the building.

A photographer for Rompres said Roman was in the government building at the time of the assault. The miners forced their way in and demanded to meet him.

But they were pushed out by police and gathered at a square about half a mile away. Fresh battles erupted after they marched through downtown Bucharest, attracting at least 10,000 other people as they filed to University Square in the heart of the city.

Tear gas billowed over the square as police sought to disperse the crowd. Some of the miners threw firebombs and smashed windows of private shops.

Body found in glacier believed to be 4,000 years old

Laserphoto

A mummified body lies in Austria's Tyrol mountains after it was exposed by a glacier and discovered by hikers last Thursday. Scientists examining the body estimate that it was a man from the early European Bronze Age, about 4,000 years ago.

INNSBRUCK, Austria (AP) — A man whose 4,000-year-old mummified body was discovered on a glacier's edge wore tattoos, dressed in leather and packed a knife, scientists said Wednesday.

Researchers called the Sept. 19 find by hikers an archaeological sensation, and said it could offer a rare glimpse into life in the Bronze Age, a time when men ate meat and stone-ground meal, judging from the mummy's chiseled teeth.

"We are absolutely sure this body is 4,000 years old," said Konrad Spindler of the University of Innsbruck's Institute for Pre-and Early History.

From an examination of the body and implements found with it, scholars dated the "Iceman from the Similaun" — so named by Austrian newspapers for the glacier where he was found — to the early Bronze Age, roughly 2,000 B.C. in the Alps, he said.

He said items found with the corpse were not purposely buried with it, but were carried by the living man. They included a flint stone, pieces of leather and fur clothing, and shoes.

Hikers in the Tyrolean mountains in Western Austria near the Italian border stumbled across the remarkably well-preserved man sticking out of the glacier at about 10,000 feet and notified local police.

Spindler said the man appeared to be between 20 and 40 years old and was "a good mountain climber." He wore winter clothing of leather and fur stuffed with hay at the time of his death, he said.

Colored tatoos are visible on the corpse's skin, in the form of crosses and lines, but their meaning was not immediately clear.

The corpse's teeth, many of which are still in place, are worn down, typical of a time when people lived mostly on a diet of meat and stone-ground meal, which often had tiny bits of stone mixed in, Spindler said.

Health Care in the '90s CRITICAL CROSSROADS

Entrepreneurial ventures attract more federal scrutiny

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

'You tell me why it's all right for a lawyer to own it (a venture), with the doctors running it, but it's not all right for doctors to do the same and make a profit?'
Dr. Larry Oliver, a Midland nephrologist

Two months ago, the federal government announced it would begin taking a closer look at hospitals and physicians who have a working interest in clinics and other health-care related businesses.

That's because the Department of Health and Human Services issued new rules that will sharply limit the practice of Medicaid/Medicare referrals as part of a new "safe harbor" policy.

HHS claims that at least 25 percent of all independent clinics and laboratories are owned in whole or part by physicians and hospitals.

In Midland, such practices are common, although physicians interviewed for this series said they are not abusing the system, and, in fact, are entitled to invest in such ventures like anyone else.

"In every profession, whether its oil, law or some other business, there are going to be a few bad eggs. I know there are physicians who abuse the ability to self-refer and become interested financially in projects where they can gain monetary reimbursement," said Dr. Williams McGavran, a Midland neurologist and part owner in a number of ventures locally.

However, McGavran said the public should take assurance in the fact that a vast majority of physicians are ethical people, either because they choose to be or realize the federal government is closely monitoring them.

"Do I send patients to the imaging center that I own a small percentage in? Yes, I do. I own a little percentage in that, the other MRI (magnetic resonance imaging) machine, Physicians and Surgeons (Hospital) and Surgicare. . . . in spite of that, I continue to do most of my work outside the entities that I own a part of," he said.

Dr. Larry Oliver, a Midland nephrologist, and chairman of Midland Memorial Hospital's utilization management review committee, said a number of investment-related businesses in Midland already have been reviewed by Medicare.

"And they found them to be in compliance," Oliver said. "You tell me why it's all right for a lawyer to own it (a venture), with the doctors running it, but it's not all right for doctors to do the same and make a profit?"

He said if the government wants to review a particular practice as well as its billing procedures, then "Let them do it. Let them review those facilities instead of talking about closing them down. Let them prove the guilt, before finding them guilty."

Under the new rules, investors in such businesses may be subject to possible prosecution and exclusion from Medicare/Medicaid payments unless they meet certain criteria.

Among the guidelines set: No more than 40 percent of a given business can be owned by doctor(s) or hospitals in a position to make referrals and no more than 40 percent of the revenue may come from referrals made by investors.

One such arrangement, which involves Midland Memorial and a group of four radiologists, is Diagnostic Imaging Associates located in the Medical-Surgical Building next door. There, MMH has a 75 percent interest.

But, according to Harold Rubin, MMH's chief operating officer and acting interim president, the hospital has mechanisms in place to make certain that excessive use of equipment isn't occurring among those who own a percentage.

"In other words, we have physicians checking on other physicians. It's a check and balance system," Rubin said "I don't know of any industry that has the kind of inspection level that we do."

Joseph I. O'Neill III, president of MMH's board of trustees, said one reason the hospital has entered into co-op ventures has to do with "cherry picking," whereby private entrepreneurial ventures pick off the hospital's most profitable operations.

"Then what you're stuck with is Medicare, Medicaid and indigent care and that can spell nothing but absolute disaster," O'Neill said. "The alternative for us has been to enter in partnerships with doctors, where they get a piece of it and we (the hospital) do. . . . What you have to understand is, there are certain things the hospital can make a profit on in order to cover its losses."

Agreeing was Ray Branson, MMH's former president and chief executive officer.

"We made a decision where if it was reasonable and feasible, we would work with physicians to address their desire to participate in certain, income-enhancing ventures."

Branson said that's one reason the hospital was able to bring an MRI to Midland, even though that investment eventually was duplicated by another private group of physicians.

Dr. Terry Tubb, a Midland plastic surgeon, said he sees nothing but pluses from such ventures, noting that they enhance competition as well as drive down costs.

"A lot of things (MRIs and other pieces of equipment) wouldn't exist unless there was financial participation on the part of physicians," Tubb said. However, he admitted that, like anything else, there's always some danger of abuse where self-referrals are concerned.

According to the government, in the last decade hundreds of partnerships and joint-ventures have been formed involving MRIs, CATscans, X-rays, laboratory services and other businesses involving medical equipment.

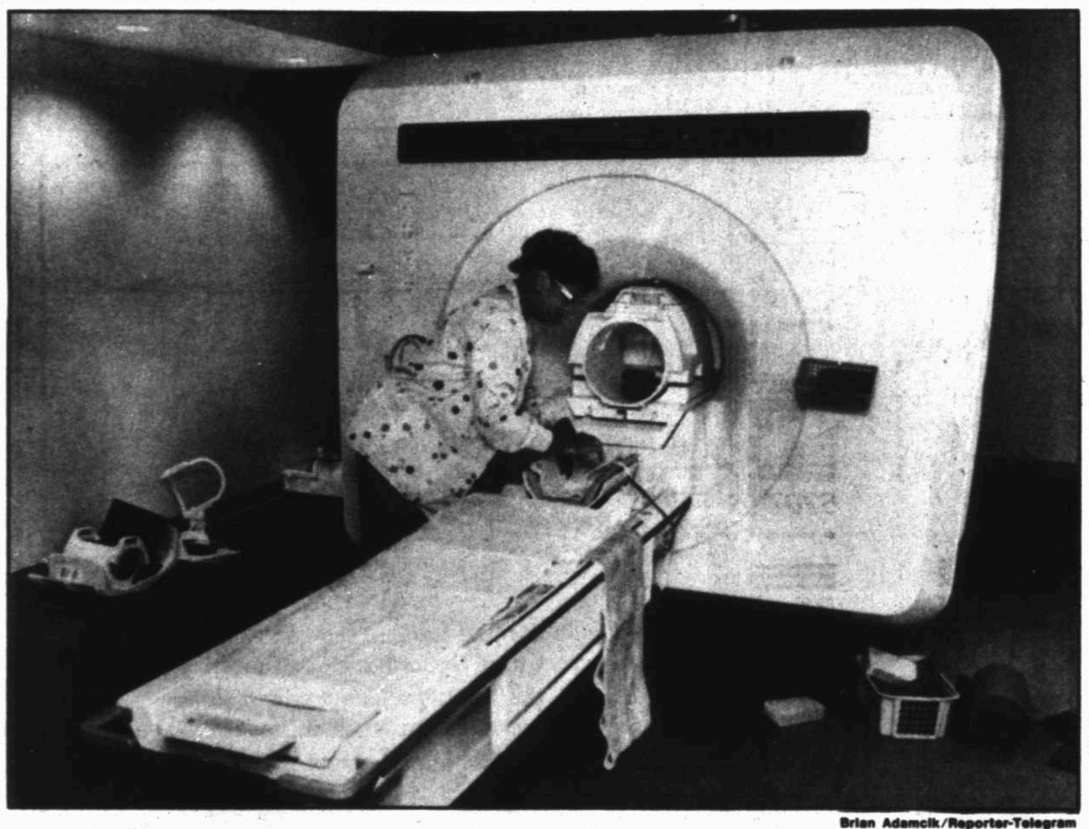

Dr. Chris Hall, a Midland pathologist, said he can understand why referrals can be a problem, especially where the investor is the physician making them. "I think it is a serious problem. Personally, I believe the problems produced by entrepreneurial ventures in medicine far outweigh the advantages."

Hall said there are those who will argue that. "They'll say things like, if it wasn't for that (entrepreneurial) spirit, Midland wouldn't have two MRIs. Well, in my opinion, Midland doesn't need two MRIs, much less another in Big Spring. In a radius of 40 miles, we have three. . . . That's way out of proportion."

ISSUE: National health care becomes hot topic with lawmakers and mental health care as well as supplemental services to all U.S. citizens.

The program was to be financed through a health service tax on individuals and employers with additional funds coming from federal coffers.

Through the years, many similar proposals have come and gone, all being dismissed as either too costly or too large to effectively manage.

Locally, physicians admit the writing is on the wall.

Although many have mixed feelings about such a system, a majority interviewed for this series said they believe medicine should remain part of the free enterprise system, with assistance coming from a combined federal/private partnership.

Some feel that one reason the U.S. health-care system is out of control is because of attorneys, which they claim have raped the system and forced physicians to routinely over-test patients.

"What we need are more doctors practicing law," said Dr. Larry Oliver, a Midland nephrologist, jokingly. "That would balance out the system. You can't have lawyers practicing medicine."

Oliver and others have suggested that if their livelihood becomes a government-paid job, they prefer to leave the profession.

"For those of us now in practice, we'll probably opt to do something else because we won't continue to work 12 to 14 hours a day. It's not to say others don't (work that long), but physicians do work very hard. Others also don't have the liability overhead we face."

Dr. Terry Tubb, a Midland plastic surgeon, said the cost of health care would drop by 20 percent immediately if the legal system would just get out of medicine.

"If they (the government) would harness the malpractice monster and get it off the backs of doctors, you would see (health-care) costs drop considerably." Tubb thinks it's time to look at arbitration as a means of settling disputes with patients.

Midland cardiologist Dr. Brian Mohr said that when doctors are sued, it's usually not so much that a mistake was made as anger vented by the patient or family. "Believe it or not, most of us try to practice good medicine. I used to tell people I didn't do things out of fear for malpractice. . . . Now, being in the business for 33 years, I find myself doing things just in case I might need to support my position if a family becomes upset."

Still, Mohr isn't totally against the idea of some form of national health care, although he admits he doesn't have a clue as to who should pay for it or, for that matter, manage it.

Ray Branson, former president and chief executive officer of Midland Memorial Hospital, said he believes the country already is headed for a mandate with universal care.

"I don't want anyone to interpret that to mean there will be a socialized system, but I think there will be some requirements on employers in terms of coverage they'll have to provide for their employees."

Branson said talk of a Canadian-styled system is just that — talk. He said those discussing such ideas should take heed, because in Canada, the one thing residents don't have is immediate access to acute health care.

"We're a spoiled nation. Our standards are so high that some people don't realize the quality they have, and that includes paying patients as well as indigent ones. The attitude across this country is 'we want quality care, but we don't want to pay for it.'"

Joseph I. O'Neill III, president of MMH's board of trustees, agreed. "We're the only business in this country that by law is required to sell our services for less than cost, and that can't go on forever."

Dr. Chris Hall, a pathologist, said the same holds true for employers who are tired of looking at premium increases of 15 percent to 20 percent each year. "I think it's pretty clear at this point that there's going to be some type of major reform before the year 2000."

Oliver believes that what needs to be done before a national health bill takes hold is a major overhaul of the Medicare and Medicaid systems, which are now mired in mountains of paperwork and red tape.

"Cutting reimbursements to hospitals and physicians isn't the answer," he said. "What I think will happen is, these programs will evolve into a national health-care system. If they (the government) do it right, I think it can work."

Dr. William McGavran, a Midland neurologist, said what he fears most is regulation of his profession. "Why are we one of the few professions that are regulated? The public is just standing by and letting this happen. They think, 'Oh, this is good. My medical bills will go down.' But what they fail to realize is, other professions are next."

McGavran said he also doesn't like the idea of a national system where the federal government decides his patient load as well as who he can operate on.

"When those rights are taken away from me, I will close my doors. I will not practice medicine under those restrictions. I am already a volunteer servant . . . I will not be an indentured one."

BLOOD: Area's center is self-supporting

(From 1A)

donors are asked a number of health-related questions, after which a drop of blood is taken to determine whether or not they're anemic.

From the screening area, donors move to a couch, where their arm is sterilized and prepared for insertion of a needle.

"We encourage people not to look. . . . The needle is fairly large and very sharp, but it's very quick and feels just like a poke. There's a little pain, but it doesn't last long."

Only one unit is taken during a sitting, which is equivalent to 450 milliliters or about one pint.

Afterward, the blood is taken to a lab where it is spun down into red cells, plasma, and, if needed, platelets that are used in a coagulation process to repair damaged vessels.

Nationally, 11 million units of blood are collected each year.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Blood typing and matching is done by the blood bank's technicians.

In Midland, the blood center collects its units through blood club memberships, which involve a number of area businesses and churches and other civic organizations.

Each club gives blood twice a year and in turn receives credits from the blood center.

Those credits are then used against the cost of a hospital bill, should a fellow club member undergo surgery or require a transfusion.

"There's always a need for blood," Johnson said. "And that's why the blood clubs are our mainstay."

The blood center operates two vans that visit the clubs on a rotating basis as a means of making donations as convenient as possible. And because Midland Memorial services the communities of Stanton, Andrews and Monahans, twice-a-year donations are sought from those areas as well.

Johnson said those giving blood shouldn't fear contracting HIV, the AIDS virus.

He said the needles used are not opened from the time they are shipped to the hospital until they are actually needed. Used needles, blood bags and other paraphernalia associated with the lab are then incinerated.

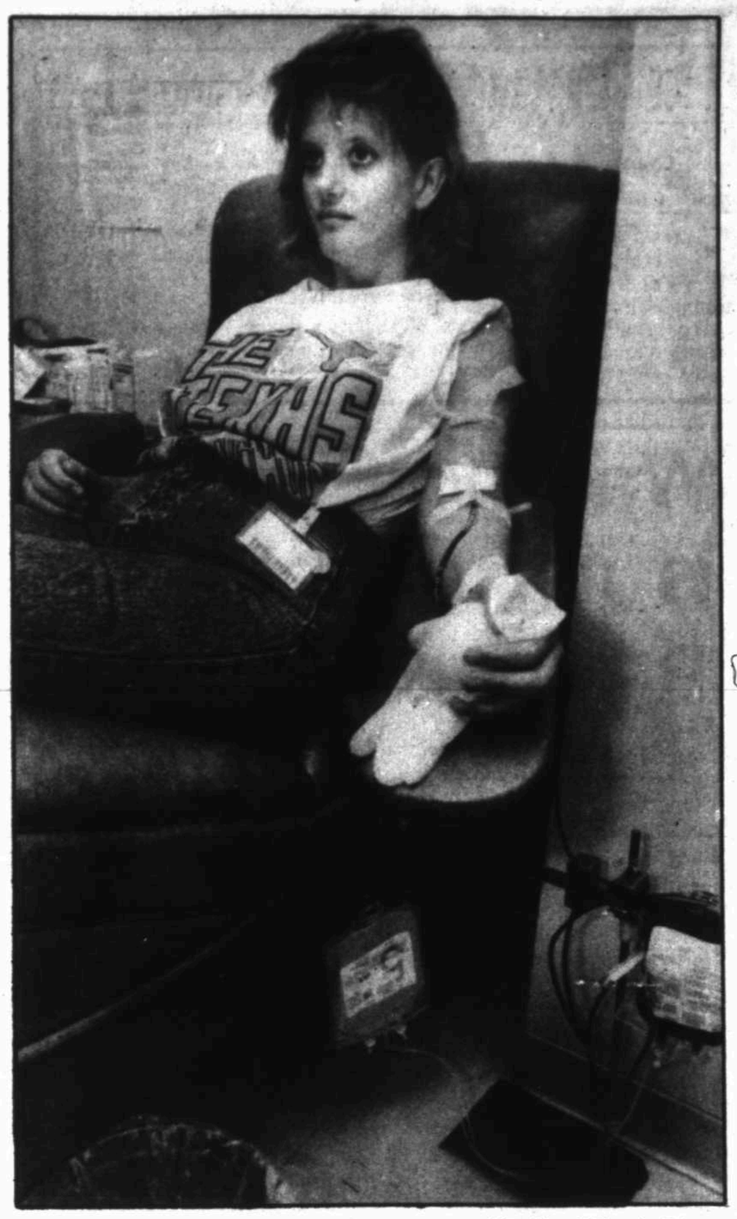

"You cannot get AIDS from donating blood," he said.

Johnson said it's a satisfying experience to know that when a trauma case comes in, the supply and right blood type are there.

"They're (surgeons) always glad it's on hand and we feel we're able to be a major contributing part of saving a life," Johnson said.

The Permian Basin Blood Center is open Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.; Tuesdays and Thursdays from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.; and Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Groups interested in becoming a blood club can contact Heather Pregger, the center's donor recruiter, at 685-1636.

Warning Saddam is not effective

President Bush's decision to send two Patriot missile battalions back to Iraq earlier this week underscores the ugly reality he is facing there. Iraqi troops have not permitted United Nations inspectors to leave that country with evidence they say they have found showing that nation's attempt to manufacture nuclear weaponry.

Someone who doesn't want to call it quits is still running the show in Iraq, and that someone is Saddam Hussein. Now Bush has decided to send in the Patriot battalions as a way of coaxing Saddam to do the right thing.

Bush's plan earlier this year to call off the troops after Iraq had been reduced to rubble — no doubt made in the expectation that any sane, reasonable leader would acquiesce due to the massive destruction wrought by the international force — failed to consider the war from Saddam's perspective.

For example:

■ The Iraqi people were never Saddam's concern. He wasn't concerned about his image in the press, but rather with mocking Uncle Sam and Western values. It did not matter to him if Iraq was blown off the face of the map and all Iraqis slaughtered. He figured, correctly, that the continued destruction of the Third World country and its people would work to his benefit in the long run.

■ Saddam is not and never has been a respectable member of the so-called world community. That's why Bush's decision to get the United Nations into the fight was puzzling to some Americans. Why would Saddam suddenly respect an organization he had never given any respect to?

■ Saddam really has not "learned" anything yet from the Persian Gulf War. It was the Iraqi people who died, not Saddam, and buildings can be rebuilt. Saddam still operates on the principle that the meanest dog gets the biggest bone, and anyone who really believes that he'll abide by U.N. resolutions should think back to his eight-year war with Iran. Remember the poison gas he used against the Iranians in direct violation of the Geneva accords? More than likely, he quit fighting Iran so he'd be certain to have plenty of "cannon fodder" to put against the United States which he knew he'd tangle with eventually.

Sending the battalions back to Iraq is a good move. The Iraqis have already made it clear that they're not going to take their introduction into the modern world without a fight. But this time Bush should understand that "paddling" Saddam won't be effective. He has to be physically eliminated as a threat.

Drivers should stop for emergency sirens

I would like to address a situation that I have witnessed too often. Saturday, Sept. 21, there was an accident involving a pickup and an ambulance. It is my understanding the pickup ran a yellow light and was hit by the ambulance.

On Sunday, Sept. 22, I watched yet another pickup pull out in front of a firetruck in route with lights and sirens going. Another potential accident. Come on, people!

I can remember a time when all vehicles pulled to the side whenever a siren was within hearing range — and I'm not that old! Now it seems to be considered fun to try to beat the wailing vehicle and there are unnecessary accidents and delays for that fire/ambulance crew to get to their destination. This crew never made it. Folks, when these guys are "running hot" somebody is in trouble.

What happened to the gesture of showing a little respect to these guys? Their job is tough enough, dealing with life and death situations, without some joker playing games with them in the middle of the street!

I've heard some bad comments about the response time of the emergency medical vehicles. I wonder why! Keep in mind that without Emergency Medical Service (EMS) and fire departments a lot of us would not be here.

Luckily no one was seriously injured in that accident, but the point is we could have lost three young people and two of Midland's finest over a lack of judgement. Please be aware out on the street. These guys are here for us, let's show them the respect they are due.

You know, a few years ago Midland received worldwide publicity for its caring and compassion during a severe crisis. Where did it go? Too bad that caring and compassion can't be carried over into everyday life.

Please think abou it. that firetruck/ambulance crew could be on their way to your house or your crunched up car someday.

Bill Mims remembered for caring, compassion

Bill Mims was a man of enormous stature who will be greatly missed by all who knew him. He was a positive influence in the lives of thousands.

For 21 years, his deep and reassuring voice answered the Crisis Intervention/Suicide Prevention hotline with, "This is Bill Mims, how may I help you?" His insight and communion soothed countless troubled souls. Yet few callers knew that Bill was a paraplegic with his own serious problems, which uniquely enhanced his ability to understand and counsel others ... and that he did, night after night and year after year.

Truly, Bill was a caring person who made a significant contribution to his fellow man. We are fortunate that Bill Mims shared his life with us.

Nigerian crooks branch out to U.S.

WASHINGTON — In 30 years of waffling between democracy and military dictatorships, some Nigerians have learned the lessons of capitalism too well. Long regarded by law enforcement agencies as some of the best in the business when it comes to credit-card scams, Nigerian crooks are branching out. The latest con involves separating American businesses from their money in ways that are notable for their brashness and ingenuity.

Anderson

The con is simple. The American company gets a letter from someone claiming to be a functionary in a Nigerian government-run corporation — for example, the Nigerian National Petroleum Co. The writer says that his agency happens to have a pot of money sitting around from an unfulfilled contract from one of the many former military and civilian governments that have ruled Nigeria since it got its independence in 1960.

The money usually amounts to millions of dollars, and the Nigerian proposes a way that he can keep it, but he needs to dummy up documents showing that the money was actually spent on legitimate goods and services. That's where the American company comes in.

Asking for the "strictest confidence," the Nigerian asks the American company for blank invoices, company letterhead and the name and numbers of company bank accounts. In return for this information, the Nigerian promises to give the American company a share of the booty, usually 30 percent. In some cases, the letter asks the company to send a small fee or "commission" to cover the expense of transferring the money to foreign bank accounts.

Some of the letters are well-written, but others are notable for their atrocious English grammar. The details differ enough from letter to letter to suggest that they were written by different entrepreneurs. The number of such letters now in circulation suggests that at least one con artist has managed to get money out of American bank accounts using the blank invoices and stationery of a naive American business owner. That person's success, or rumors of it, apparently have encouraged others.

A State Department official told our reporter Jan Moller that the department gets three or four inquiries every day from Americans who have received the letters.

The scam is almost prosecution-proof because it sucks the American company into an illegal act. Any company that buys into the scam can hardly go running to U.S. authorities after being taken to the cleaners.

The Commerce Department has issued an advisory, warning American companies against falling for the offer. That advisory acknowledges Nigeria's longstanding reputation for con artistry, especially when it comes to fraudulently obtaining entry visas. But, the Commerce Department says that the latest raft of cons is more serious because it threatens to undermine Nigeria's efforts to set up legitimate trading links with overseas partners.

The increase in fraudulent schemes comes at a bad time for Nigeria, which is in the middle of yet another transformation from military to democratic rule. Officials at the Nigerian Embassy are skittish, fearing the bad publicity will smear the whole country. The Nigerian government claims to be taking steps to stop the scams, and recently issued its own warning to American businesses to be on the lookout for easy money offers.

The Central Bank of Nigeria issued the same warning after several people tried to collect from the bank the money promised them by the scam artists.

LEFTOVERS — Not all Soviet personnel are pulling out of Cuba. More than 2,000 Soviet communications and intelligence technicians are staying behind at a secret installation called Lourdes, one of the Soviet Union's largest eavesdropping centers. Its operations are so secret that it is off-limits to Cubans, except for a few trusted intelligence officials. The facility has always had its electronic ears tuned to the United States, but the mission is changing from military espionage to industrial spying. The Soviet Union has ordered this and other listening centers around the world to concentrate on finding out what scientific and technological advances are in the works.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The Environmental Protection Agency has been fooling around with a ban on the pesticide parathion for 10 years. For more than 20 years, the EPA has been gathering statistics on poisonings, nerve damage and death of farm workers exposed to parathion. Yet it is still used. Most recently, the EPA got the sole manufacturer of parathion in the United States to agree to limit its use to just nine crops, out of the 90 that it had been licensed for.

Almost 33% of children paupers by age 18

WASHINGTON — The judge, told why Linda Marrero's parents chained her to the radiator in their Bronx apartment, reduced the charge. Besides, Linda, 15, says her parents were acting in her best interests. She is what is called an "at risk" child. The New York Times details the long trek through the social services labyrinth that convinced Linda's parents that her problems "were not going to be solved through government." In the two years since she dropped out of sixth grade she had taken to disappearing into the New York nights where gunfire resonates. She was gone days, then weeks, doing drugs, returning battered. In July, when drug dealers returned her at gunpoint, demanding money, her parents chained her.

Will

The most important point about Linda is how lucky she is. She has a father at home, and a mother who said to him, "Go buy me a chain and two locks." Imagine how it is for single mothers when the siren of the street calls.

In 1960, 5 percent of American births were illegitimate. In 1988, 26 percent were, including 63 percent of black babies. This behavioral change is the main reason almost one-third of all children are paupers at some point before they are 18.

In 1965, Pat Moynihan wrote:

"From the wild Irish slums of the 19th century Eastern seaboard, to the riot-torn suburbs of Los Angeles, there is one unmistakable lesson in American history: A community that allows a large number of young men to grow up in broken families, dominated by women, never acquiring any stable relationship to male authority, never acquiring any rational expectations about the future — that community asks for and gets chaos."

Moynihan's anticipation of today's urban chaos was written when some dry data were signaling a dangerous disjunction. The welfare of children was no longer varying directly with the labor market.

Before then, when unemployment declined, so did new welfare cases. But suddenly dependency was an independent variable, increasing irrespective of the economy's performance. As Lawrence Mead of New York University says:

"The inequalities that stem from the workplace are now trivial in comparison to those stemming from family structure. What matters for success is not whether your father was rich or poor but whether you had a father at all."

Last February, Moynihan wrote a passage for a Democratic report about children being the largest portion of America's poor and so many of them being paupers at some point. He wrote: "All this is new. This circumstance did not exist during the New Deal era, half-a-century ago. It did not exist during the era of the Great Society, a quarter-century ago."

Some Democratic staffers "corrected" what they assumed was an error, so Moynihan's passage read: "This circumstance was not as recognized during the New Deal, a half-century ago, nor during the era of the Great Society."

This crisis has come upon us at a time when, and partly because, children are a direct concern to only a minority of adults. This, too, is new.

A century ago only 20 percent of American households were without children under 18. Today 65 percent are. So only a minority of adults, and a minority of adult incomes, are involved on behalf of children. Government policy reflects the fact that children now are a minority interest.

Some promises are made to be broken

The first casualty in any economic downturn is truth. Promises made in good times are promises broken in bad ones.

Popover found this out when he was pink-slipped from Dumbo, Inc., a conglomerate specializing in everything from soft pillows to soft real estate.

Buchwald

Popover went in to see Rankle, Dumbo's sixth president in two years. Rankle had a sign on his desk, "The Buck Stops Here So Why Don't You Take a Flying Leap?"

Popover said, "I left a good job at Giraffe Computers to come with Dumbo and it was my understanding that I would be here for a minimum of 10 years. What's with this pink slip?"

"Who led you to understand that?" Rankle asked.

"Parrish did. He flew all the way to Atlanta to talk me into joining Dumbo."

"You and I know that Parrish isn't here any more.

"He was hit by a corporate freight train."

"But won't you honor his word, which he made in the name of the company?"

"We wouldn't even honor the raincoat he left in his closet. What you didn't know about Parrish was that when it came to recruiting people, he always had his fingers crossed. He even promised two people the same space in the executive parking lot at a time when none existed."

Popover said, "Maybe so, but when he left the company his successor McDougall told me that whatever Parrish promised he would accept as an obligation by the corporation."

Rankle told him, "That was after McDougall fell off his horse playing on the company polo team. The board felt that he was never quite right after that. Do you expect us to accept the word of someone who landed on his head in Palm Beach?"

"McDougall may have landed on his head but he was a man of honor, which is more than I can say for you."

Rankle responded, "Just because you've been fired is no reason for you to be rude."

"Does it mean anything to you that Parrish made me quit my job in Atlanta, sell my house, pull my kids out of school and start a new life here in New Jersey? He wasn't the only one to assure me that I had a future with Dumbo. Xeres, the executive vice president under Cornish, also told me that I would see the company into the 21st century."

"Xeres was Dumbo's practical joker. No one ever took him seriously. Look, Popover, you're a fine businessman, that's why we hired you, but when things go sour someone has to stick his head in the gas oven. The people on the 40th floor who make the big cutback decisions have to clean out the people on the 25th floor, so that the 40th-floor people have a safety net. The only way for management to accomplish this is by handing out pink slips. We don't like staff who always complain and we expect some loyalty from those who are getting the ax."

Popover persisted, "Where I come from a promise is a promise."

Rankle replied, "This is 1991. A person's word is not his bond. Every promise has to be in writing, and even then it's meaningless if we tell our lawyers we want to fight it. When things pick up, Popover, you will be the first person we're going to rehire."

"How can I believe that?"

"Popover, you have my word on it."

Four die in Georgia shootout; ultimatum issued

TBILISI, U.S.S.R. (AP) — In the worst violence in a month of growing political tensions, rebel national guardsmen on Wednesday battled troops loyal to President Zviad Gamsakhurdia. The predawn shootout left four dead and five wounded.

After the gunbattle, Gamsakhurdia gave his opponents until 6 p.m. Thursday to lay down their arms or face arrest. However, some government ministers held talks with opposition leaders to try to defuse the crisis.

Elsewhere in the Soviet Union, thousands of protesters rallied for a third day in Tadzhikistan's capital, Dushanbe, to protest what they claimed was a coup by hardline Communists trying to regain control of the Central Asian republic.

The protesters demanded the resignation of President Rakhman Nabiyev, an old-style Communist who was installed on Monday.

The violence in Georgia erupted just hours after Gamsakhurdia clamped a state of emergency on Tbilisi, the Georgian capital, to try to halt mounting opposition demands for his resignation.

The conflict pits the 52-year-old Georgian president, who is a former dissident, against a growing opposition movement led by intellectuals, including some of his former allies.

They object to Gamsakhurdia's efforts to restrict press freedom and his dictatorial manner since he won popular presidential elections in May with 87 percent of the vote.

Gamsakhurdia said the shootout in Tbilisi occurred about 3 a.m., when about 40 opposition national guardsmen attacked the administration building of the city's electric power station, which was guarded by loyal militiamen.

The president said the opposition forces were trying to seize the building to shut off power to downtown Tbilisi, including his headquarters in the parliament building.

A communique from the city's military commander said four people were killed, including two loyalist militiamen and two opposition guardsmen. It said five were wounded — one from the opposition and the rest loyal to Gamsakhurdia.

Another man was found dead early Wednesday in a doorway about 100 yards from the television center, but it was unclear if he was shot during the fighting or died of unrelated causes.

Various accounts of the events circulated among opposition leaders, who were holed up in the well-guarded TV center they seized Sunday. It is little more than a mile from parliament, which was also heavily guarded.

By the end of the day, the most widely circulated opposition version came from former Prime Minister Tengiz Sigua.

Klaus Barbie, 'Butcher of Lyon,' dies at age 77

LYON, France (AP) — Klaus Barbie, the Nazi war criminal known as the Butcher of Lyon for his Gestapo activities in occupied France, died of leukemia Wednesday night in the city he plagued during World War II. Barbie was 77.

Barbie

Barbie died at 9 p.m. at Jules-Courmont hospital, according to the Rhone regional government. His lawyer, Jacques Verges, had said recently that Barbie was suffering from terminal leukemia.

Barbie was convicted of crimes against humanity in 1987 and sentenced to life imprisonment after escaping justice for four decades.

There were unconfirmed reports he would be buried by the graves of his wife and son in Bolivia, where he lived in exile under an identity provided by U.S. intelligence, part of a Cold War calculus that allowed some Nazis to slip out of Europe.

For France, Barbie was a living symbol of the brutality of the 1940-44 German occupation, of the wartime collaboration, and the persecution of Jews in World War II, in which the French themselves played a role.

Nazi hunter Beate Klarsfeld, who with her husband Serge exposed the fugitive in Bolivia in 1972, said, "He was lucky to reach a ripe old age, whereas his victims died horrible deaths."

But she said in a telephone interview at her Paris home that "It's a consolation to us that he was brought to trial and condemned to life imprisonment."

Campaign starts for United Way

■ To help meet 1991-92 goal of $2.753 million, Parker & Parsley announces $50,000 challenge grant: for each new dollar contributed, the company will match up to $50,000.

By Darren J. Waggoner

Community leaders gathered Wednesday at Midland Center to learn the United Way of Midland's strategy in the war against hunger, poverty, homelessness, illiteracy, abuse and neglect.

The 1991-92 fall campaign kickoff luncheon centered around a World War II theme, "Allied for Victory — the United Way," and an estimated 550 people turned out to see 23 companies perform World War II-themed skits while reporting results of their pilot fund-raising efforts.

"Each company involved makes a huge commitment by allowing their employees to put some of their time to work for the United Way," said Campaign Chairman K. Michael Conaway, who is senior vice president of Texas Commerce Bank. "They

New animal facility short of funding

■ Council authorizes animal control department to advertise for bids for new computer system and cat cages.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

About a month away from its completion, Midland's new animal control facility is facing some difficult financial choices.

"They've got to do the parking lot and the floors. Then we'll put up the pens and finish a few things. It should be ready about a month from now," said Animal Control Director Coy Willis.

He said moving to the $491,000 building, located off Fairgrounds Road about a half mile north of Highway 80, will be like going "from the 19th century to the 20th century."

Officials say anything would be better than animal control's current location, which is plagued by unsanitary and dangerous conditions that make it a health hazard for the employees as well as the animals. But the new building's construction contract — drafted after officials learned the original design would have cost $750,000 — left out some key items.

It did not include security fencing or curb and gutter work on the parking lot, leaving the facility vulnerable to vandalism and flooding. The facility was also left with an inadequate computer system, too few animal cages and aging furniture in a state of disrepair.

"Our dilemma is there are a lot of different needs and there's just not enough money," said Assistant City Manager Susan Thorpe.

Willis' request for additional funding met with skepticism at a recent City Council briefing session. Now a citizens advisory group and city staff are trying to rearrange expenses to pay for some necessary items.

At Tuesday's meeting, the council authorized advertising for bids for a computer system and cat cages, expenses estimated at a total of $36,000. But councilmen did not allocate money to make the purchases.

A new computer system would allow four users at once, compared with the current system's one. Willis said it would help the data entry staff catch up on licensing information that is now eight months behind.

At-large Councilman J.D. Faircloth said the computer, expected to cost $22,000, is too much for animal control's needs. He voted against advertising for bids, and argued the department could get by with less in the city's tight financial times.

"Nobody disputes they're eventually going to need it," Faircloth said. "But in the interest of saving money, right now I think anything would be better than what they have. I don't think they need that system now."

At-large Councilman John Castro disagreed.

"My attitude is when you build a new building, you should fix them up with what they need," Castro said. "When only one at a time can work on the computer, you're selling yourself short productivity-wise."

FDIC to close local office by April, liquidator says

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Tuesday's Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. auction, one of the smallest held since the agency's arrival in the Permian Basin in 1983, is a sign of the FDIC's dwindling presence, according to the managing liquidator.

Bob Carman said the Midland FDIC office is expected to close by April 1992.

With receipts of just more than $200,000, the sale grossed more than the inventory's appraised value. The auction is the last to be held at the FDIC facility on Highway 80.

"Our office here is with the division of liquidation, and we handle failed commercial banks. There's not been one handled out of this office since September of last year. Generally, the economy has stabilized, though at a lower level of activity than in years past, and there's no problems on the horizon. We've done our job and it's time to move along," he explained. "We intend to wrap things up by no later than April 1992. Any liquidation activity not wrapped up here by then will be transferred to San Antonio."

He added that the Midland office has already transferred a number of employees to San Antonio. How many of the current 140-member staff will transfer "depends on who's willing to move," Carman said.

He said the FDIC's exit from Midland — it was at one time one of the top five employers in the city — is a positive sign. "Our assessment is the (Midland) economy has improved (to a degree) that it's no longer necessary that we maintain a presence here."

'I like American people,' Bulgarian pianist says

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Bulgarian pianist Lyudmil Angelov finds "West Texas is much more American than Florida.

"I know that America has a lot of faces, but I think all of Europeans get their first impressions when they are children so they get their first impression from all those cowboy movies. That's what is interesting for them and especially for me when I came here."

The pianist, whose schedule calls for him to perform in Florida this weekend before returning to Europe and performances in the Netherlands and Germany, is the guest artist for the Midland-Odessa Symphony's opening 1991-92 classical concerts. His arrival here this week marks his third trip to the United States and his first performances with an orchestra here.

Angelov, who was born June 27, 1961, into a family of musicians in Varna, Bulgaria, won first prize in the Palm Beach International Piano Competition last year in Florida. There he met Don Th. Jaeger, conductor of the MOS and artistic director of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale. His second visit to the United States was to accept his prize of playing a solo recital at Lincoln Center in New York City.

"I felt very, very — friendly — accepted by the audience, and, for me, it was a great experience," Angelov said of his New York debut.

Although Angelov has not found the United States to be "completely different from Europe" as he expected, he is "not disappointed" in what he has found here.

"I like American people," he said, searching for the words to express what he found to be the chief difference between the two cultures.

"I think the biggest difference is everything moves. Everybody and everything moves, and this movement determines the lifestyle of Americans. That's the biggest difference.

"In Europe, people like to live with their traditions, to remember their parents and everything coming from the past, and this creates a sort of static lifestyle.

"I am not definitely for one or the other lifestyle. I remain European."

Angelov, who began piano lessons when he was 6, participated in the 11th International Chopin Competition in Warsaw, Poland, in 1985. He was the first musician from his country to receive a prize in the competition, which included 124 competitors from 34 nations.

During the 1987-88 season Angelov performed the entire Chopin repertoire. His 8 p.m. performance today at Odessa's Bonham Junior High is a work by Chopin — Concerto for Piano No. 1 in E minor, Opus 11.

He found himself a "bit tired" at Tuesday's Midland performance.

"I played about 4 a.m.," he said, referring to the time difference between the two countries. "I'm satisfied by myself and the orchestra and Mr. Jaeger."

He described the MOS as "a good orchestra. That's first. Of course, they need some more experience and more time being together and playing together, then they will be an excellent orchestra. Because an orchestra has to be grown — as a little child. It's not so easy, and it takes a lot of time."

In addition to performing with the MOS, Angelov performed a recital Wednesday night at Midland's Petroleum Club and spoke with orchestra students at area high schools. He talked with students about the importance of early training.

"For me, it's very important these first years for a musician to have a good teacher" and "to be surrounded with other children who are playing."

Angelov, who decided at 16 he wanted a career as a professional pianist, credits his musician parents and "a very good music education system" in Bulgaria with providing him with the opportunity to become a musician.

This system which extended into supporting the arts has been affected by the fall of communism.

"Now we have freedom, but we have much more problems creating our professional life in the field of the arts. All those years the government was supporting financially all the arts and music, but now — no more money."

Angelov, who speaks several languages including English, Italian and French, said Bulgaria had about 15 large orchestras, numerous chamber orchestras and six or seven opera houses.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Bulgarian pianist Lyudmil Angelov is scheduled to perform tonight in Odessa.

"No matter what was the quality of a musician, he had his job and he was playing. Now, the good ones will stay and play. The others will have to find another job. But, of course, it's better to have freedom and such economical problems than to be dependent like it was. All the time to think about what will they say — the party leaders, the administration that ruled the artists' lives and music life."

Although Angelov expected the government in Bulgaria would collapse, he was surprised by the swiftness of the change.

"I thought it will be at least two or three years later. Bulgaria was always isolated. Bulgaria was the only country that the people were so quiet, so peaceful. That was the only country, before this general change, there was no protest, not like Poland, Hungary or Czechoslovakia."

When asked what made the Bulgarian people more accepting of life under communist rule, Angelov said, "It's hard to explain. The Bulgarian people can live either badly or very good. For them, it's not so important.

"If they have enough to eat, and they have their house and their cars and everything, they are not interested in having something more. That was the generation that was being built by the communists. It was a kind of manipulation of social consciousness."

should be commended."

The goal for this year is $2.753 million. Last year, the United Way raised about $2.72 million, which exceeded the goal of $2.5 million. The total reported at Wednesday's event exceeded $630,000. "We have already reached 23.1 percent of the goal through the pilot campaign. That is quite a feat," said Conaway.

To help meet the increased goal, Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. announced a $50,000 challenge grant. For each new dollar contributed during the United Way campaign, the company will match, up to $50,000.

"Parker & Parsley is proud to support United Way of Midland. With more than 400 employees, we are one of the largest employers in this area," said Scott Sheffield, president of Parker & Parsley. "The management of our company believes that Midland is a good place to live, to work and to raise our families. United Way benefits not only our employees but every citizen in our city."

Bill Dingus of Exxon Co., U.S.A. served as the master of ceremonies. Dingus made light-hearted fun of the skits and kept the crowd laughing throughout the event.

Conaway played the role of Gen. Dwight David Eisenhower, supreme commander of the Allied Expeditionary Forces in Europe in World War II.

Also in costume was Max Holman, United Way board president and retired West Texas Division manager for Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. Holman dressed as President Franklin Delano Roosevelt and even adopted FDR's aristocratic accent.

Campaign-report luncheons are scheduled for Oct. 10, Oct. 17 and Oct. 24 at Midland Centennial Plaza. A USO Victory Show will be the theme for the finale, set for Nov. 7 at Midland Center.

The 17 Midland agencies that the United Way provides funds for are: American Red Cross, Big Brothers-Big Sisters, Boy Scouts of America, Boys and Girls Club of Midland, Casa de Amigos, Community and Senior Services Inc., Family Services of Midland and Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program, Freewill Foster Home, Midland Need to Read Inc., Midland-Lee Youth Centers Inc., Midland Rape Crisis Center, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and their Children, Permian Basin Girl Scout Council, Petro-Plains Camp Fire Inc., The Salvation Army and select YMCA programs.

ANIMAL: Lot for parking to be incomplete and up-to-date, Willis said it should generate more money for the facility. It will also help staff keep up with future funds as well, he said.

"We send out license reminders, and right now it's at least one year and eight months before we find out" if pet owners have done anything about renewals, Willis said.

Faircloth has advocated a review of the department's fees. He said raising the costs to pet owners may be a way of boosting the facility's income.

Willis said animal control's citizen advisory board is expected to restructure or increase fees to provide more revenue for the facility.

While animal license fees should generate more than $100,000 for the general fund next year, only $1 out of every $5 pet license goes to the shelter's operations. The other $4 go into the city's general operating fund.

With 20,000 pet owners who average more than one pet each, animal control's part of the fund has amassed $32,000 in the year and half since it was initiated.

Officials said with a few changes in the system, they fully expect to get the computer system and cages. But a completed parking lot and furniture may have to wait.

Castro said animal control's current situation is no surprise.

"All we did was build a building," he said. "The rest was, 'We'll get it as it comes.'"

Once the shelter is adequately prepared for its work, Castro said he hopes "we won't have to do more for them for 20 years."

Faircloth said the new building — clean, sanitary and brightly painted — may encourage people to adopt more animals and generate more revenue.

"Really, anything beats what they've got now," the councilman said. "And this is built for growth. We've tried to save money, but we've provided for the safety and health of our employees."

problems that began in the early 1980s have been resolved.

Noting that the FDIC had already closed its office in Lubbock and transferred staff and assets to Midland in 1988, he pointed out that "Our job is temporary in nature. We go where there are economic problems and bank situations and then move on."

The FDIC became a major presence in the Permian Basin in 1983 following the failure of the First National Bank of Midland, which had over $1 billion in assets. At the time of its failure in October 1983, FNB was the state's largest bank, and second largest bank in the United States to fail.

Several light meals detour gallstones

By Jean Carper

If you are dieting — or even if you're not — it's probably better to eat several times a day rather than once or twice a day. That is, if gallstones are a concern.

That's the suggestion from a new study by James Everhart, M.D., a scientist at the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases. He tracked 4,730 women over a 10-year period and found gallstones more frequent in those who dieted or fasted, particularly for 14 hours or more.

Carper

That means, says Dr. Everhart, if you eat breakfast at 7 and then don't touch food until after 9 at night, your chances of gallstones go up compared with people who eat again within eight hours. Skipping breakfast also can be a gallstone hazard, because it prolongs the fasting period. Further, the longer you go before eating, the greater the gallstone odds.

Dr. Everhart explains the gallbladder needs the stimulation of food to contract regularly, keeping cholesterol dissolved so it does not form into stones.

The study also found that a eating a low-fiber diet boosted odds of gallstones.

MORE KUDOS FOR TEA

Why are Japanese smokers less likely to get lung cancer than American smokers? Maybe because the Japanese drink so much green tea, suggests Dr. Fung-Lung Chung, a researcher with the American Health Foundation in New York.

His tests on mice show that a potent cancer-causing agent in tobacco, known to induce lung cancer in smokers, is partly neutralized by a compound in green tea. Mice that drank either green tea or the concentrated tea compound in water had 30 to 45 percent fewer lung cancers than mice drinking plain water.

Other recent studies done in Japan and the U.S. show that drinking green tea also helped block skin, small intestine, forestomach, lung and liver cancer in mice. Dr. Hirota Fujiki, an official with Japan's National Cancer Center Research Institute calls the protection "dramatic."

Although no one can be sure whether tea is anti-cancer in humans, Dr. Fujiki believes "drinking green tea could be one of the most practical methods of cancer prevention available to the general population at present."

Green tea is sold in Asian food markets and often served in Asian restaurants. Plain black tea, popular in the U.S., also contains the anti-cancer compound tested, but in smaller amounts.

GRAPESEED QUESTIONS

A recent report in this column suggesting that grapeseed oil, a salad and cooking oil, might benefit cholesterol brought a number of questions. The main one was: Where can we buy it?

First, the background: David Nash, a cardiologist at State University of New York Health Sciences Center in Syracuse, had 23 men and women eat 2 tablespoons of grapeseed oil a day for a month. Their good-type HDL cholesterol, thought to protect against heart disease, jumped an average 14 percent. Their triglycerides, another heart hazard, sank 15 percent.

Grapeseed oil, pressed from seeds leftover from wine making, is increasingly being imported from Europe and sold in specialty food stores, such as Zabar's in New York City, and by some smaller grocery chains across the country. But it is still hard to find.

One brand I could find information on is "Bonavita," imported from France by Liberty Richter Imports, 400 Converse Blvd., Carlstadt, NJ 07072.

Jean Carper's column is distributed by King Features Syndicate.

Cholera sweeps into Central America

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — A cholera epidemic that has killed nearly 3,000 people in South America has moved into Central America, claiming more lives and threatening the countries' fragile economies.

Public health officials are scrambling to teach basic hygiene, especially in slum and rural areas where sanitation is poor and people mistrust the central.

Because governments in the region began preparing for a possible onslaught of the disease in January, when cholera appeared in Peru, health officials say the effects shouldn't be as severe as in South America.

"We have had five or six months to prepare so we are not that worried," said Fanny de Estrada, executive director of Guatemala's Chamber for Exporters of Non-Traditional Products.

Still, exports of fruit and vegetables are down and tourism has dropped since cholera was first reported in Guatemala July 24. The commerce amounts to hundreds of millions of dollars in the region.

Since then, 120 cases have been confirmed in Guatemala and 115 people have been diagnosed with the disease in neighboring El Salvador. About 40 cases have been confirmed in Panama, and at least two deaths have been reported in each of those countries.

Farther north, Mexico has recorded at least 700 cases of cholera and a dozen deaths since June.

The outbreaks are the first in those countries in decades. Epidemiologists say they reflect a worsening of sanitary conditions because of population growths and poverty.

Cholera, known as the disease of the poor, is a bacteria-borne illness that spreads where there is poor sewage treatment and unsafe water.

No cases have been confirmed in Costa Rica, Honduras or Nicaragua.

In Nicaragua, the ministry of health warned that heavy casualties are likely if cholera strikes. Only 40 percent of Managua's 1 million inhabitants have access to flush toilets.

In Honduras, municipal leaders have ordered plans for mass graves to be dug outside the capital of Tegucigalpa.

In Guatemala, the government has been educating restaurant owners and exporters on the value of safe water and has mounted diplomatic and public relations offensives to reassure buyers.

Health officials in Guatemala City, San Salvador and Tegucigalpa have raised the level of chlorine in their water supply systems.

Although the United States doesn't ban imports from cholera-stricken countries, exporters stand to lose millions of dollars because of lengthy inspection processes. Also, many wholesalers are not purchasing products like seafood, a common carrier of cholera, because of consumer fears.

Peru lost $200 million in fish and seafood exports and $70 million in tourism dollars in the first three months of the outbreak.

After the disease struck Guatemala, Costa Rica temporarily blocked exports from that country pending implementation of sanitation programs.

"In my town, this is affecting all business here including restaurants and hotels, among others, because our seafood is one of the main things that attracts tourists here," said Cristobal Hernandez, mayor of the Guatemalan port town of San Jose.

In all, Guatemala stands to lose up to $200 million in yearly seafood and vegetable sales and tourist revenues.

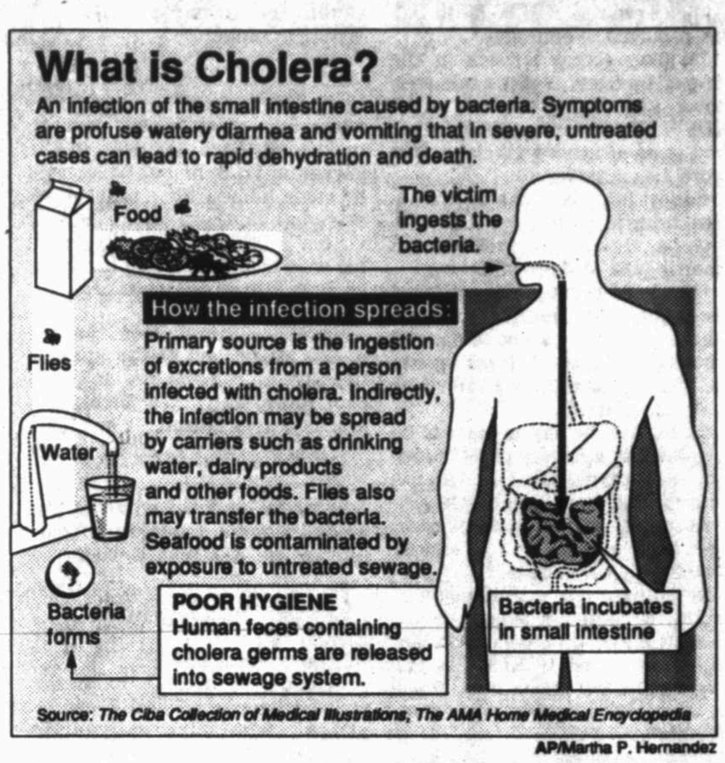

In Panama, an embargo of seafood, bananas, and certain vegetables could cost the country $160 million, government officials say. In Honduras, more than $75 million in yearly seafood exports could be lost.

Coffee and sugar growers worry that a widespread outbreak could affect the labor force needed to harvest such crops. Health officials estimate that as many as 131,000 people of working age could be infected by the disease.

Most crops are harvested by hand and agriculture is the backbone of all Central American economies.

The U.S. Agency for International Development has launched a $9.5 million project to improve water systems, provide latrines and health education.

Some $60 million will be spent in establishing commissions in each country to garner supplies of medicines, chlorinate water, treat sewage and educate the people.

Scientist sees link in sudden infant death syndrome

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Seal pups' habit of holding their breath for long periods while sleeping may hold clues to sudden infant death syndrome, which kills thousands of human babies each year, a researcher says.

Marine biologist Michael Castellini of the University of Alaska said seals' breathless sleeping spells are tied to adult seals' ability to stop breathing for up to two hours while diving.

But the pups don't do it well, showing the same high, erratic heartbeats that some studies have linked to SIDS, Castellini said.

The seals survive and eventually develop better heart control. If scientists can figure out how they do that, Castellini believes, they could help save humans.

Castellini plans to test his findings about northern elephant seal pups on other seal species next spring.

Research, however, is split on whether SIDS is connected to erratic heartbeats and apnea, or breath-holding.

"We really don't know what's happening to those babies when they die," said Marian Willinger, health scientist administrator at the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, in Rockville, Md.

"There may be a relationship between Dr. Castellini's work and understanding sudden infant death syndrome. But it's still a theoretical one."

SIDS strikes about 7,000 babies, usually 2 to 4 monhts old, in the United States annually. The babies die while asleep and unexpectedly, without known links to disease. Researchers believe there may be numerous causes for SIDS.

The seals survive and eventually develop better heart control. If scientists can figure out how they do that, Castellini believes, they could help save humans.

Public Notice

On June 28, 1991, Southwestern Bell Telephone Company (Southwestern Bell) filed an application with the Public Utility Commission of Texas (Commission) to add a new optional service offering for business Private Branch Exchange (PBX) Trunk customers called Digital Loop Service. The application has been assigned Docket No. 10461.

Digital Loop Service provides digital transmission of circuit switched voice and data communications between the customer's premises and the central office. This service allows the customer to use a 1.544 Mbps facility capable of delivering up to 24 line terminations. Southwestern Bell will provide Digital Loop Service within the customer's serving central office where facilities are available.

If approved by the Commission, the rates for the Digital Loop Service facilities will be $445 per month for each digital transmission loop arrangement which provides a capacity of up to 24 line terminations, plus $5 per month for each line termination and $9 per month for each channel termination. The proposed rate for the unlimited use of the central office varies from $12.25 up to $18.90 per month for each line termination depending on the rate group classification, determined by the customer's location. Southwestern Bell estimates revenue of $2.1 million from this offering during the first year.

As proposed by Southwestern Bell, customers who currently receive digital loop compatibility through facilities installed under a special construction agreement will have the option to receive their current digital loop arrangements pursuant to the Digital Loop Service Tariff or continue to pay their current charges until they make a change of location or account. Any increase in the number of line terminations to a customer's current digital transmission loop arrangement will be provided pursuant to the proposed Digital Loop Service Tariff; however, the customer will continue to have the option of paying current charges for the existing digital transmission loop capacity. Southwestern Bell's proposal to "grandfather" existing digital loop facility arrangements is subject to review and approval by the Commission.

Persons who wish to intervene or otherwise participate in these proceedings should notify the Commission as soon as possible, but not later than October 15, 1991. A request to intervene, participate, or for further information should be mailed to the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Blvd., Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757. Further information may also be obtained by calling the Public Utility Commission Public Information Office at (512) 458-0256. The telecommunications device for the deaf (TDD) number is (512) 458-0221.

Presbyterian church hires Railey

DALLAS (AP) — Walker Railey, a former Dallas minister still considered the chief suspect in the 1987 near-fatal attack of his wife, is the new chief of staff at a Los Angeles church, KDFW-TV in Dallas reported Wednesday.

"Walker Railey is back in the church business. Not as a minister, not as a Methodist, but he's back," KDFW-TV newsman Bud Gillett said in an afternoon special report from Los Angeles.

Railey has been named executive administrator for the 900-member Immanuel Presbyterian Church, the station said.

"I'm here because they offered me a job. They needed someone who knew what I know to do, and I needed a job, and we got together," Railey said in an interview with the station.

Railey said he has no plans to be ordained as a Presbyterian minister, but is taking classes to join the church that now employs him.

As chief of staff, Railey manages the church's finances and its $750,000-a-year budget.

In its interview with Railey, the station's reporter asked if the church is aware that Dallas police still want to talk to Railey in the lingering investigation into the attack that left his wife in a vegetative state.

"They know every single aspect of this story over the last four years. There is not anything, not anything, that was left unsaid," Railey said.

KDFW-TV said Railey later qualified his remarks to say he told leaders of all the news accounts, but nothing proprietary. Nothing, for instance, that police might want to know.

The Rev. Gary Wilburn, senior pastor of the church, said his church is delighted to have Railey on its staff.

"Walker is a terrific addition to this staff and meets all the qualifications of our church committee for administrative assistance I need to manage this place," Wilburn said.

"There was a 100 percent unanimous vote after interviewing him that he was the person we needed at this hour of our church's life," Wilburn added.

Railey was senior pastor of First United Methodist Church of Dallas when his wife, Peggy, was attacked on April 21, 1987, in the garage of their home. Railey said he came home from a night of research at Southern Methodist University libraries and discovered his wife near death. She had been choked into unconsciousness.

Railey has never been charged in the attack, but Dallas authorities said he remains the only suspect. Railey attempted suicide several days after the attack and later refused to testify before a grand jury.

"I am as innocent now as I was when I was not employed," Railey said in the KDFW interview.

He surrendered his ministerial credentials, filed for divorce, gave custody of his two children over to church friends, and moved to California. He was linked romantically with Dallas psychologist Lucy Papillon, who also moved to California.

Last April, Railey delivered the Easter Sunday sermon at the 354-member First United Church of Santa Ana, Calif., which he began attending three months earlier.

Norman Kinne, Dallas County's first assistant district attorney, greeted that development with distaste.

"I wouldn't walk across the street to hear him preach. This is a man who took the Fifth Amendment rather than respond to questions designed to find out what happened to his wife; abandoned his wife and children; and flitted off to California," Kinne said last April.

Third-graders envision 'if I ran the school'

AUSTIN (AP) — In his "America 2000" initiative, President Bush has asked U.S. citizens to come up with ideas to reform education for the next century.

A group of third-graders at South Austin's Odom Elementary — the high school graduating class of 2001 — have responded with their own visions of the ideal school.

■ Brand Moore: If I ran the school, kids could have anything for lunch, and it would be free. I would let them chew bubble gum in school, and they would not get in trouble. If I ran the school.

■ Richie Kalaher: If I ran the school, I would put a rattlesnake in the school. I would put an elephant, a seal, a shark and a whale in the school. If I ran the school.

■ Elena Gomez: If I ran the school, I'd let the kids write on the walls and be crazy just like me. I'd let the kids dance around the room. I'd let them take off their clothes and shoes too. I'd let them stand on the desk. If I ran the school.

■ Stephanie Reza: If I ran the school, there would be a monster movie theater. There would be pool tables in the gym. We could bring our pets to school. I don't run the school, but that is what I would do.

■ Valin Zamarron: If I ran the school, everyone would make lots of noise, jump, play, run around, even bring their toys. There would be a gigantic river flowing through the school, and all kids get free rental tubes. There would be big water slides almost everywhere.

Ex-nuclear plant workers file lawsuit

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — More than 100 former nuclear plant workers have filed a lawsuit claiming they suffered damage from fumes inhaled during construction of the South Texas Project and Comanche Peak nuclear plants.

A total of 109 plaintiffs represented by 16 law firms are suing 30 companies, including San Antonio-based H.B. Zachry Co.

The businesses named as defendants are the builders and operators of the plants and Exxon, Dow, Shell and other companies that made the chemicals the plaintiffs claim poisoned them.

H.B. Zachry played no part in construction of the South Texas Project and played a limited role as a subcontractor in the Comanche Peak plant, said spokeswoman Cathy Obriotti Green said.

The suit seeks unspecified damages for past and future suffering and additional punitive damages against companies that made and used the chemicals.

Panel goes behind closed doors to debate Gates

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Intelligence Committee took its deliberations on Robert Gates behind closed doors Wednesday, and a Democratic senator said Republicans have "circled the wagons" to protect President Bush's nominee to head the CIA.

Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., said he has "severe problems" with conflicts that have emerged during more than a week of hearings between what Gates says he knew about the Iran-Contra affair, and what others involved say he knew.

But at this point, with a committee vote on the nomination expected in the next few weeks, the facts may not matter much, he said. "My observation is that the Republicans have closed ranks, circled the wagons, and made their decision to support him no matter what," DeConcini said.

Implicit in that decision is a judgment that the Reagan administration's Iran-Contra scandal, in which arms were sent to Iran and the profits diverted to aid Nicaragua's Contra rebels, no longer has any political weight with the public, he said.

Some Republicans agreed.

"Do I think we are incessantly pursuing Iran-Contra to the graves of all of us? Yes," said Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., a panel member. "Do I believe we should let Iran-Contra dominate what we say and think and do forever? No."

The Nation

And the committee's senior GOP member, Sen. Frank Murkowski of Alaska, said "Iran-Contra has been around so long you almost need a scorecard to say who was where at what time."

He said rather than worrying so much about the past and what Gates can remember or not remember, the committee should focus on the present oversight and future needs of a radically changing intelligence structure.

Committee Chairman David Boren, D-Okla., has been strongly supportive of Gates, and committee Democrat Alan Cranston of California said he was "presently inclined to vote for Gates" as well.

"You just can't be expected to remember everything you heard or did or said five years ago," Cranston said.

In Wednesday's closed-door session, Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., pursued the question of Gates' role in U.S. aid to Iraq from 1984 to 1987, including providing intelligence and other help that gave Baghdad a tactical advantage in its war with Iran.

Bradley contends that the aid amounted to an unauthorized action which was not properly brought to the attention of congressional intelligence oversight committees, and that Gates had a role in keeping the information quiet.

The aid began in 1984, according to intelligence sources who spoke only on condition of anonymity, and was escalated in 1986, when Gates was the No. 2 official at the CIA. It included targeting data for Iranian military and economic pressure points, and line drawings made from U.S. spy satellite photos.

AIDS commission report hailed as a national call to action

WASHINGTON (NYT) — AIDS activists, city and county officials and some members of Congress hailed the second annual report of the National AIDS Commission Wednesday as a national call to action.

The Bush administration said the report, which criticizes the president for alleged lack of leadership in dealing with the AIDS epidemic, said the report would be studied.

"This report is a call to action," said Boston Mayor Raymond L. Flynn, president of the United States Conference of Mayors. "For those who would lead our country in a time of domestic crisis, let them answer this call."

The report listed 30 separate recommendations, ranging from removal of restrictions on sex education to provision of national health care coverage, to head off what commissioners warned could become a "relentless, expanding tragedy in the decades ahead."

Although nearly 180,000 people have died of the disease in the past 10 years, the toll will nearly double, to over 350,000, in the next two years, members of the commission said.

The national strategy outlined by the recommendations would require substantial increases in appropriations for AIDS research, as well as additional funds for Medicaid and Medicare and money to help state and local governments deal with costs of the epidemic. The commission rejected as impractical calls for mandatory AIDS testing for health care professionals.

The 12-member independent body, whose members are appointed by the president and Congress, criticized President Bush for failing to speak out more often on the dangers posed by the epidemic and said Congress has failed to provide enough money.

"In the past decade the White House has rarely broken its silence on the topic of AIDS," the commission declared. "Articulate leadership guiding Americans toward a proper response to AIDS has been notably absent."

White House press secretary Marvin Fitzwater said the administration believed it had responded "aggressively" to the AIDS crisis.

"We certainly agree with the commission's report in terms of its seriousness and the fact that it is a major health problem that this nation has to deal with," Fitzwater said. "The government-wide spending related to AIDS in fiscal '92 will be over $4 billion....

"This is a new problem in an historic sense," he said. "We've been trying to deal with AIDS for probably less than a decade. Enormous resources are being put into it, and we will take this report and try to improve the system as best we can."

Rep. Roy Rowland, D-Ga., author of the legislation that created the commission, said the country had been "wasting resources and wasting time" in dealing with "the most deadly plague in modern times."

Kimberly Bergalis was one of five patients to be infected with the AIDS virus by her Florida dentist. She is slated to testify before a congressional comittee today on mandatory testing of health care workers.

Administration condemns Yugoslavia

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Bush administration charged Yugoslavia's military on Wednesday with unacceptable aggression against separationist Croatia, causing death to citizens it is constitutionally supposed to protect.

"A lot of blood has already been lost, but it is time for all parties to commit themselves to resolve their differences in the future in a peaceful way," Secretary of State James A. Baker III told an extraordinary meeting of the United Nations Security Council.

"All parties, especially the Serbs and Croats need to stop the fighting," he said.

While the United States appreciates the concern of Serbs about their future in the event of Yugoslavia's disintegration, Baker said, "We cannot land will not accept repression and tghe use of force in the naem of those concerns."

In exceptionally strong terms, Baker said the government of Serbia and the Yugoslav federal military "bear a special and indeed growing responsibility for the for the grim future which awaits the people of Yugoslavia if they do not stop the bloodshed and reverse the violent course now being pursued."

The Security Council session was called to approve an arms cutoff to Yugoslavia and all factions that have brought the country to the verge of civil war.

"The aggression within Yugoslavia ... represents a direct threat to international peace and security," Baker said as the Bush administration set aside diplomatic understatement to register unmistakable disapproval of the drive against Croatia.

"This crisis in Yugoslavia has descended into open warfare," Baker said. "This violent conflict threatens all the peoples of Yugoslavia with terrible economic and social strife, with a sharp deterioration in the most fundamental human rights and freedoms, and, above all, with massive bloodshed and loss of life."

Baker urged the council to support peacemaking efforts of the European Community and the Conference on European Security to bring about an effective ceasefire and to appoint arbitrators to resolve the dispute peacefully.

He also backed the proposed arms embargo, warning that the conflict threatens to spill beyond Yugoslavia's borders.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	2 ♠	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠

Sometimes there is more than one way to make your contract. Consider this hand from a team match.

At both tables North-South reached four hearts on identical auctions. North's three-spade cue-bid was a replacement for Stayman and asked about hearts. The heart game was duly reached, although three no trump would have been a simpler contract as the cards lay.

At each table the lead was the king of spades, and both declarers took the ace immediately. Both followed with the queen of trumps and then a trump to the king to discover that there was no unfriendly trump distribution.

The declarers used this entry to dummy to lead a club to the king. When that held, they crossed back to the table with the ace of trumps to lead another club. Both Easts took the ace and continued a club.

Since East did not return a spade, it confirmed that West held six spades for the overcall. Thus West, who had followed to two hearts and three clubs, could not hold more than two diamonds.

Here the declarers parted ways. One cashed the ace and king of diamonds and then exited with a spade. West was able to win two spade tricks, but then was forced to yield a ruff and sluff by playing another spade, so declarer was able to avoid losing a diamond and conceded only two spades and a club.

The other declarer cashed the ace and king of diamonds and led a third round. This time it was East who was forced to yield a ruff-sluff by leading a minor suit, enabling declarer to discard a spade while ruffing on the table. Here, the defenders collected just one trick in each plain suit. In both cases the game rolled home.

Elizabeth Taylor collapses after tour for new perfume

HOUSTON — Elizabeth Taylor, who became dizzy and chilled during a promotional tour, may be suffering from pneumonia, according to a doctor who examined her.

Taylor

Ms. Taylor, 59, nearly fainted during a tea Tuesday at a department store and was taken by ambulance to Methodist Hospital.

Dr. Afsa Meredith, a Houston lung specialist who was invited to the tea, was asked to examine the actress in her dressing room.

"She was cold and clammy and she was shivering," Meredith said. "And her color was very bad. Apparently she had taken some medication that morning and standing under those hot lights, she suddenly felt very dizzy and nauseated."

Ms. Taylor was examined and released from Methodist and flew back to California.

"She's fine," her publicist, Chin Sam, said Tuesday. "It's just really dehydration and exaustion."

Meredith disagreed and said she thought it might be another bout of pneumonia, from which Ms. Taylor suffered last year.

Neither the actress nor her publicist could immediately be reached for comment Wednesday.

LOS ANGELES — Former President Reagan is trying to make sure there will be something to read when his presidential library opens next month.

Reagan

At his urging — and if President Bush approves as expected — 6.3 million pages of routine White House documents, including greeting and get-well cards, will be available to scholars shortly after the Nov. 4 opening, officials said Tuesday.

The plan was to keep all papers private for three years so archivists at the $60 million library in Simi Valley could categorize the documents without interference.

But the newspaper headline: "Nothing to Read at Reagan Library" seemed to turn the tide.

"I was told that the headline did stimulate some action here," Ralph C. Bledsoe, library director said of a February story in the Los Angeles Times.

"When he (Reagan) realized that there would not be as much here for the research community as the tourists, he said, 'Let's open as much as we can.'"

BANGKOK, Thailand — Mother Teresa was in Cambodia to check out problems of the needy, the official Cambodian news agency SPK reported.

The 81-year-old Roman Catholic nun met Saturday with Chea Sim, the powerful chairman of the National Assembly, SPK reported Tuesday. The report was seen in Bangkok on Wednesday.

Mother Teresa arrived in Phnom Penh on Sept. 17 as a guest of Hun Sen, the prime minister of the Vietnamese-installed government.

Chea Sim told the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize winner that more than 20 years of war have left many needy. He also asked that Mother Teresa's Calcutta, India-based Missionaries of Charity donate aid to victims of recent floods in Cambodia that destroyed more than 247,100 acres of rice, the news agency said.

SWARTHMORE, Pa. — Novelist James Michener attributes much of his success to his college days, so he's sent his alma mater a $5 million thank you note.

The college hasn't decided yet how to spend the money, Swarthmore President Al Bloom said Tuesday.

"This is a very adult experience and upon it I have built my whole intellectual life," Michener said recently of his education. He graduated from Swarthmore in 1929.

Michener, 84, gave the school a $2 million unrestricted donation in 1984. He said at the time the donation was a "repayment" of a $2,000 scholarship he received to attend the school, plus interest.

Michener's books include "Hawaii," "Centennial" and "Tales of the South Pacific," for which he won the Pulitzer Prize in 1948.

LAS VEGAS — The new breed of Las Vegas show goers may wear tank tops rather than tuxedos, but they're just as tough as they were three decades ago, comedian Bob Newhart says.

Newhart, who returned to the stage at the Las Vegas Hilton on Tuesday night after a nine-year absence, said some things never change.

"You learn pretty quick in Las Vegas," he said of his comedy routines. "If it doesn't work, it isn't there the next night. On TV, if it fails, you can always put a laugh track on it."

"I knew the town had changed, but I didn't know how much," Newhart said. "I started here when nearly everyone wore tuxedos. Now they come to the shows in tank tops."

Newhart played more than 20 years at six resorts here before he quit to devote his time to television.

Lawyers argue tabloid charge

N.Y. Times News Service

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Charges against a supermarket tabloid that identified the alleged victim in the William Kennedy Smith rape case should be dropped because state officials repeatedly released the woman's name themselves, an attorney for the Globe argued Wednesday.

The Boca Raton-based newspaper is charged with violating a state law by twice printing the name of the 30-year-old Jupiter woman who says Smith raped her March 30 at the Kennedy's Palm Beach estate.

But the fight over two misdemeanor charges filed by State Attorney David Bludworth has escalated into a constitutional clash between a free press and the right to privacy.

Attorneys for the Globe want to show that the woman's name was well known before the tabloid published it. They subpoenaed attorney David Roth, who represents the Jupiter woman, to testify that he had appeared on three national television shows to discuss the publicity surrounding the case.

Roth, who agreed to answer only questions that would not violate attorney-client privilege, said he has never publicly spoken the woman's name. He also said he set up a brief interview between his client and a Palm Beach Post reporter.

Aggie dies

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — A freshman placekicker for Texas A&M University collapsed before practice Wednesday and died later at a College Station hospital, school officials said.

James Glenn, 19, a walk-on player from Clear Creek High School in League City, was pronounced dead at 4:20 p.m. at Humana Hospital-Brazos Valley, said Alan Cannon, Texas A&M's sports information director.

"Words cannot describe the pain and sorrow felt by the football team, coaching staff and the entire Texas A&M family at the loss of this fine young man," said head coach R.C. Slocum. "His family is in our thoughts and prayers."

Cannon said Glenn, 5-feet-11 and 167 pounds, was "just loosening up" about 3:45 p.m. Wednesday before the Aggies' scheduled practice was to begin when he suddenly collapsed on the field.

Coaches notified the university's health center and workers began administering cardiopulmonary resuscitation until an ambulance arrived.

"James received immediate attention from the Texas A&M training staff," said Dr. Jesse Parr, a team physician.

"They were performing CPR just as soon as the young man dropped. Once he was in the ambulance, they continued trying to revive him. But he never regained consciousness," Cannon said.

Buffs, Badgers begin league play

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Area Football

It may be another tune-up week involving non-conference play for most area teams, but the real run for the yellow roses begins in District 6-2A Friday where all eight teams begin intra-league play.

"I've never been in an eight-team league before. You sure get to district play in a hurry," said first-year Stanton head coach Bill Grissom, whose Buffaloes visit Wall at 8 p.m. in a 6-2A opener.

Another 6-2A confrontation finds the McCamey Badgers playing host to Eldorado at 8 p.m. Elsewhere in the loop, Forsan (0-3) meets Ozona (0-3) and Coahoma (3-0) tackles Iraan (2-1).

In other games involving area teams Friday, Big Spring hosts Snyder; Andrews visits Levelland; Lamesa hosts Brownfield; Greenwood travels to Alpine; Rankin hosts Van Horn; Garden City goes to Wink and Midland Christian entertains Three Way.

But for McCamey and Stanton, non-conference games are history. And each team is hoping that grueling pre-district schedules pay dividends down the road.

"We were real pleased to play the tough schedule that we've had," said McCamey head coach Randy Adair, whose Badgers sandwiched a win over Wink between shutout losses to 3A foes Reagan County and Alpine.

"We played a couple of teams that challenged us and helped to point out our weaknesses," he said. "Both Alpine and Reagan County beat us 27 to zip, but both are picked high in their 3A districts and we felt competitive against them."

Prough

Kelly

Grissom echoes those pre-district sentiments.

"We've had a real tough non-conference schedule. All three were real good football teams," said Grissom, whose Buffaloes will be looking for their first win Friday after dropping a 20-7 decision last week to Greenwood.

"We learned a lot about ourselves playing those teams. They showed us where we needed to improve."

Both Stanton and McCamey have their work cut out for them as Eldorado and Wall enter league play with perfect 3-0 records.

Allen Prough and Jim Bob Kelly lead the Stanton attack. The pair has combined for 500-plus ground yards in the first three games. Kenny McCalister has nine catches for 190 thus far, and quarterback John Eric Wyckoff tossed for 155 yards last week.

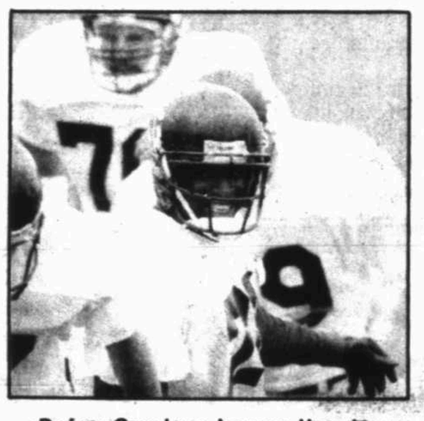

"The kids are responding well to what we're teaching and more than anything else we've convinced them that they can compete," Grissom said. "We've had a great effort the last couple of weeks, and

Sanders takes on 2 pro sports simultaneously

■ Deion Sanders enhances his two-sport image by trying to help the Atlanta Braves in their drive for the NL West title.

Associated Press

Deion Sanders began the day at a Falcons practice ...

... and ended it in a Braves doubleheader.

ATLANTA — Deion Sanders' excellent adventure began for real Wednesday when he practiced with the Atlanta Falcons, rushed to the ballpark in a helicopter and stole a base in his return to the Atlanta Braves.

"It's been exciting," Sanders said after the Braves beat Cincinnati 2-1 in the first game of a doubleheader, tightening the NL West race. "I'm usually asleep about now. I feel like I need some No-Doz."

Sanders, named the NFC defensive player of the week earlier in the day, will try to play most of the remaining Braves games while maintaining his duties with the Falcons. The Braves expect to use him mainly as a pinch runner.

He arrived at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium in the second inning and got into the game in the ninth inning with the score tied at 1. He went in to run for Mark Lemke after a one-out single off Norm Charlton, and got a huge ovation.

Sanders stole second on a 1-1 pitch to get the possible winning run in scoring position, but remained there as Francisco Cabrera struck out and Keith Mitchell lined out. The Braves won in the 10th, pulling them within 1½ games of divi-

A long winning streak is going to end Saturday when top-ranked Florida State meets No. 3 Michigan in Ann Arbor.

The Seminoles have the nation's longest winning streak at nine, while Michigan and Miami are next with eight in a row.

"This could be the game of the year in college football," said Florida State coach Bobby Bowden. "This is the kind of game that everybody wants to be part of. High rankings, big stadium, national TV — it's all there."

Florida State has yet to be tested, winning its first three games over BYU, Tulane and Western Michigan by a combined score of 140-39. Michigan, on the other hand, passed a major test by beating Notre Dame 24-14 two weeks ago.

Both teams have balanced offenses and aggressive defenses.

Michigan's attack features quarterback Elvis Grbac, running back Ricky Powers and receiver Desmond Howard, who has scored six of the Wolverines' eight touchdowns this season.

Florida State's offensive leaders are tailback Amp Lee, fullback Edgar Bennett and quarterback Casey Weldon, the nation's top-rated passer. The Seminoles also have a deep and talented group of receivers.

Michigan's defense was impressive against Notre Dame, limiting the Irish to 78 yards on the ground and holding them scoreless for the final 22 minutes. But the task will be even harder against Florida State, which may have the most versatile offense in the Staff Report

Midland High's tennis team cracked the state rankings Wednesday, as the Bulldogs took the 19th spot in the bi-weekly poll issued by the Abilene Reporter-News and Texas Tennis Coaches Association.

The Bulldogs are 2-0 in District 4-5A team tennis action, and take to the courts again at 4 p.m. today at Odessa Permian.

So far in league play, all six of the MHS boys players are unbeaten in singles competition and Shawn Whelan, the No. 1 girls player, has yet to be defeated by a district opponent.

The district is a team tennis stronghold, with three representatives making the Top 20. Abilene Cooper holds down the No. 2 spot, while Abilene High came in at sixth.

Fort Bend Clements is currently the No. 1 ranked Class 5A team in the state, with Cooper, Clear Lake, Richardson Pearce, Harlingen, AHS, Klein, Tyler Lee and San Antonio Churchill rounding out the Top 10.

Bronchos look for answer in wishbone

Here it is the week of the intra-city, District 4-5A openers and sports writers are again reporting that Odessa High has not beaten Odessa Permian since 1964.

Price

The question that obviously begs to be answered, then, is will this finally be the year the Bronchos break that string?

Once again, Permian is listed among the state's elite, claiming the No. 5 spot in the Associated Press' Class 5A poll. The Panthers have outscored opponents 129-15 on the way to a 3-0 record, despite another ugly off the field incident that came to a head last week when five players were reprimanded after assaulting a fellow student in the Ratliff Stadium parking lot at a junior varsity game.

But OHS, coming off a 7-3 district co-championship season last year, is 2-1 and has put up some pretty impressive numbers of its own.

While Mojo has put its traditional whippings on El Paso Irvin, Tyler John Tyler and Amarillo High, the Broncs have beaten Amarillo Palo Duro and El Paso Eastwood by a combined score of 86-20. Their sole loss was a 56-41 shootout at the hands of Killeen, currently ranked No. 9.

Permian owns a 28-3-1 lead in the series, with the tie coming in 1980, and downed an eventually playoff-bound OHS team 24-6 last year amid the furor of "Friday Night Lights" and the University Interscholastic League's banishment from the playoffs.

But something tells me the Bronchos might just have a chance this time. Though the Panthers have the league lead in points scored (129 to OHS' 127) and average offensive yards a game (392 to the 373 of the Broncs), OHS has switched to a wishbone offense that has proven to be fairly explosive with running back Brad Givens.

And if Permian's record against a wishbone team like Midland Lee is any indicator, the Bronchos could give Mojo fits Friday.

Lee has won four of its last five games against Permian, losing only in 1989. That, by the way, was the year Lee went to an I-formation to take advantage of Farris Strambler, who broke just about every Rebel rushing record on the books. But the Rebs lost to the Panthers 17-13, as Permian went on to a 15-0 state championship season.

It may have just been coincidence that Lee's only loss to Mojo in the past half decade was the year it abandoned the wishbone, because that may have been the finest Permian team ever.

But since 1983, when Lee first went to the wishbone and beat Permian in the regular season and the playoffs, the Rebels own a 6-4 edge.

First-year OHS coach Bill Barron probably wasn't thinking about Lee's wishbone when he opted for that offense in West Odessa. And the Rebels' success over Permian in the last few years could as easily be attributed to Lee's talent and the rivalry between the two teams as any particular offensive scheme.

But, you never know. The Bronchos might just feel that a new offense is what will be needed to finally put them on heavy side of the scoreboard Friday. At least, they hope it will.

Blue Jays take 2½ game lead

Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — First-place Toronto completed its West Coast trip with a 7-2 victory over the California Angels on Wednesday as John Olerud hit a three-run homer that capped a six-run rally in the fifth inning.

The Blue Jays, who beat California 3-0 in 10 innings Tuesday night, began the day with a two-game lead in the AL East over the Boston Red Sox, whose twi-night doubleheader at Baltimore was rained out.

Toronto, 4-5 on the road trip, begins at three-game series against Minnesota in the SkyDome on Friday night. Six of the Blue Jays' final nine games are against the Twins.

Mark Langston (17-8) failed to hold a 2-1 lead and was rocked for seven runs and eight hits in five innings.

Jimmy Key (16-11) was shaky early but settled down after the third and blanked the Angels over the next four innings. He allowed six hits in seven innings, struck out two and walked one.

Rangers 7, Mariners 1

SEATTLE — Nolan Ryan gave up one run and three hits in eight innings for his 314th victory as the Texas Rangers beat the Seattle Mariners.

Kevin Reimer hit his 19th home run and Ruben Sierra hit his 23rd, while American League batting leader Julio Franco had one hit in four at-bats to keep his average at .341.

Ryan (12-6) tied Gaylord Perry for 13th on the all-time victory list, four behind Phil Niekro in 12th spot. Ryan gave up a single to Alvin Davis to lead off the second inning and singles to Dave Cochrane and Omar Vizquel to lead off the eighth.

American

He lost his shutout in the eighth when Harold Reynolds' fielder's choice groundout scored Cochrane from third base. Mike Jeffcoat pitched the ninth inning.

Ryan struck out eight, giving him 5,495 for his career. It was his 731st career start, third on the all-time list.

Athletics 8, Royals 4

OAKLAND, Calif. — On the afternoon after Oakland was eliminated from the AL West race, Rickey Henderson and Mike Gallego homered as the Athletics beat Kansas City.

The A's three-year reign as AL champions ended Tuesday night with a 5-4 loss to Kansas City that dropped Oakland 12 games behind first-place Minnesota with 11 games remaining.

On Wednesday, Bob Welch (12-12) allowed five hits in 6 2-3 innings, ending his four-game losing streak since Aug. 22. He struck out a season-high eight and walked four. Dennis Eckersley got two outs for his 42nd save in 50 chances.

Indians 6, Tigers 4

DETROIT — Cleveland's Doug Jones remained perfect as a starting pitcher as the Indians defeated the Detroit Tigers.

Jones (4-7), the Indians' career saves leader, was making his third major-league start. He gave up 10 hits, walking one and striking out five in seven-plus innings.

Jones came out after Cecil Fielder led off the eighth with a single and Eric Bell relieved. Steve Olin got the last three outs for his 14th save.

It was the Indians' first victory in six games at Tiger Stadium this season, but assured them of winning the season series against Detroit. They were 6-0 against the Tigers in Cleveland.

Yankees 8, Brewers 6

MILWAUKEE — Roberto Kelly hit a three-run homer in the 11th inning as the New York Yankees beat the Milwaukee Brewers.

Steve Sax led off with a single against reliever Don August (9-8) and advanced to second on a sacrifice. August intentionally walked Don Mattingly before Kelly hit his 18th homer to snap the 5-5 tie.

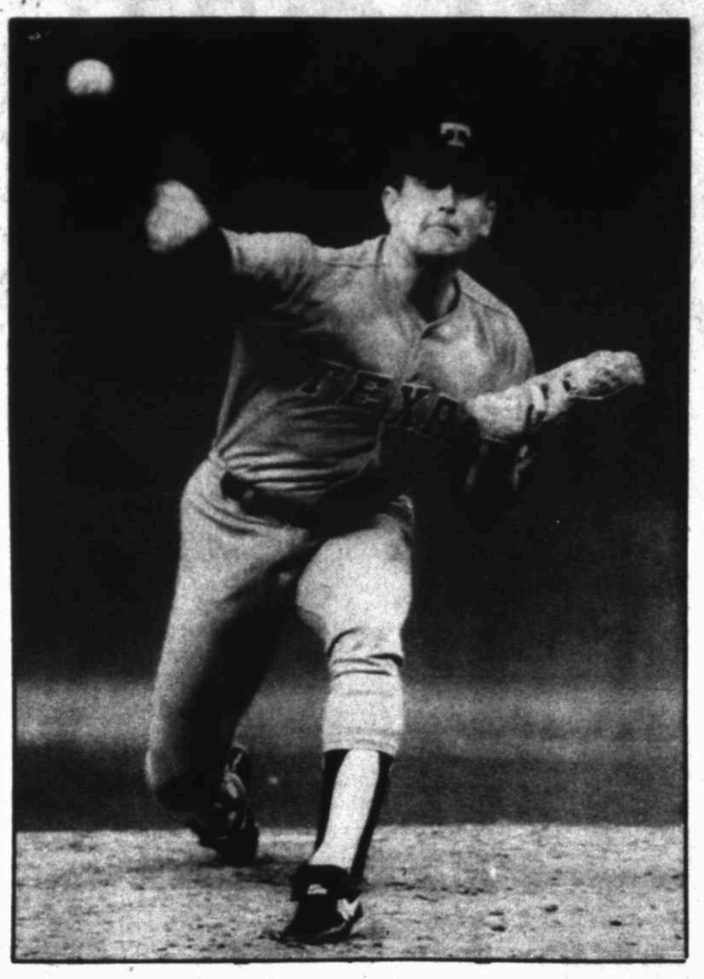

Alan Mills (1-0) pitched two innings for the victory.

White Sox 6, Twins 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Scott Fletcher drove in two runs with adouble and sacrifice fly, leading an early onslaught from the bottom of Chicago's order, as the White Sox kept the Minnesota Twins from clinching a tie for the AL West.

Things still look bleak for the White Sox, who trail the Twins by eight games with 10 to play. Minnesota's magic number remains three.

Alex Fernandez (9-12) survived a shaky start to win his third successive decision, allowing seven hits and one run.

Nolan Ryan picked up career win No. 314 Wednesday as the Texas Rangers downed the Seattle Mariners 7-1.

Houston hails Scott on no-hit anniversary

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Mike Scott took a final stroll down memory lane in the Astrodome Wednesday night.

Five years ago to the day, Scott pitched the centerpiece game of his career, a no-hitter that clinched the NL Western Division pennant for the Astros against San Francisco.

The Giants were again the opposition Wednesday night but Scott, who has missed the entire season with an elbow injury, was only there for the memories.

"The timing couldn't have been better because most of the guys I've played with have gone different directions and I can say I threw my last pitch as an Astro," Scott said. "That's something four or five years ago I said I wanted to do."

From 1985 through 1989, Scott was one of the most dominating pitchers in the major leagues. He had an 86-49 record over that span, made three All-Star teams and won the Cy Young Award in 1986.

His career seemed near an end in 1984 when he finished the season 5-11 with a 4.68 ERA. But he spent the off-season learning the split-finger fast ball from San Francisco manager Roger Craig.

"Roger happened to be between jobs then," Scott said. "If he wasn't, I wouldn't be throwing the split finger or be here right now."

Craig became the most frequent to complain that Scott scuffed the ball but it was all part of the game, Scott said.

"If his players think something's going on he has to go out there but I have no animosity to the guy at all," Scott said. "I'm indebted to him for teaching me the pitch. It's part of the game. There are a lot of games going on out there."

In 1985, Scott rebounded with an 18-8 record, 3.29 ERA and 22 strikeouts. His new pitch kicked in late June and he won 13 of his final 15 starts.

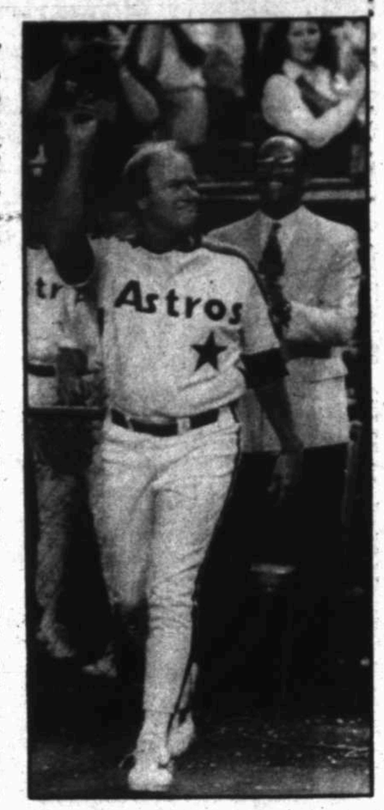

The magic continued in 1986 when he had an 18-10 record and led the majors with 306 strikeouts, 275.1 innings and a 2.22 ERA. In addition to his no-hitter, Scott won two games from the Mets in the NL playoffs.

In those two games, Scott allowed eight hits, one run and struck out 19.

Scott became the fourth pitcher in Astros history to win 20 games in 1989, finishing with a 20-10 record. Scott was the opening night pitcher in 1990 but finished with a 9-13 record, his lowest victory total since 1984, and 3.81 ERA.

Scott pitched as if something was wrong most of 1990 and came out of his final start on Sept. 25.

Scott pitched seven innings this season and closed out his career with an 0-2 record and 12.86 ERA.

Mike Scott soaks up the crowd's adulation.

Braves split pair with Reds

Associated Press

ATLANTA — The Atlanta Braves wound up a wild day that included Deion Sanders' return and two arrests by splitting two 10-inning games with Cincinnati on Wednesday night.

The Braves, who began the day two games behind NL West-leading Los Angeles, won the doubleheader opener 2-1 on Ron Gant's double, but lost the second one 10-9 when their two-run rally in the final inning fell short.

Los Angeles played later at San Diego.

Atlanta's day started when rookies Brian Hunter and Keith Mitchell were arrested in separate, early-morning drunken driving incidents. They both returned to the team in time to play in the first game.

Sanders also came back, rushing to the rescue on a helicopter that took him from Atlanta Falcons' practice to the ballpark. He got into both games as a pinch runner in the ninth inning, stealing a base in the opener and getting forced out in the second game.

Giants 2, Astros 1

HOUSTON — John Burkett pitched six strong innings and the San Francisco Giants beat Houston, ensuring the Astros' first losing home record since 1975.

Houston is 37-41 at the Astrodome with three games left. The Astros had most consecutive winning marks at home in the majors.

Burkett (11-11) gave up one run on five hits. He struck out eight and walked none. Jeff Brantley pitched three innings of one-hit relief for his 13th save.

National

Darryl Kile (7-10) allowed two runs on four hits in seven innings. He struck out six and walked five.

With the score tied at 1 in the seventh, San Francisco loaded the bases with one out when Mike Felder walked, Darren Lewis reached on a misplayed sacrifice and Will Clark walked. Matt Williams then grounded out to second, scoring Felder.

Houston took a 1-0 lead in the first when Craig Biggio singled, Jeff Bagwell walked and Luis Gonzalez singled.

The Giants tied it in the fifth. Willie McGee singled and scored on a double by Will Clark that was misjudged by Gonzalez in left field.

Phillies 5, Cubs 4

CHICAGO — John Kruk drove in five runs with a pair of homers, including his third career grand slam, and the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Chicago Cubs.

Helped by a 17 mph wind blowing to right field, Kruk hit a solo home run in the third inning. His grand slam in the fourth was his 20th home run of the season, matching his career high, set in 1987. It was the third multihomer game of Kruk's career, his first since Aug. 4, 1987.

Andre Dawson, Rick Wilkins, and Hector Villanueva hit solo home runs for the Cubs.

Tommy Greene (13-7) won his fourth consecutive start, allowing three runs and five hits in six innings. Mitch Williams got three outs for his 30th save, setting a club record for saves by a lefthander. Al Holland set the previous record in 1984.

Shawn Boskie (4-9) gave up five runs and nine hits in five innings. He remained winless as a starter since June 12.

Dawson his his 29th homer in the fourth, Wilkins hit his sixth homer in the fifth and Villanueva hit his 12th home run in the sixth. Ryne Sandberg hit a sacrifice fly in the seventh off Danny Cox.

Expos 7, Cardinals 2

ST. LOUIS — Rookie Brian Barnes scattered 10 hits in his first complete game of the season, leading the Montreal Expos over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Barnes (5-6), a 23-year-old lefthander, struck out seven and walked none. He lost a bid for his first career shutout in the ninth on Tom Pagnozzi's RBI groundout and a run-scoring wild pitch.

Bret Barberie hit a two-run double tht capped three-run fourth inning. Rheal Cormier (3-5) hit Kenny Williams with a pitch, Larry Walker singled and Andres Galarraga was walked intentionally to load the bases. Mike Fitzgerald hit an RBI single and Barberie followed with his two-run double to right field.

Padres 8, Dodgers 2

SAN DIEGO — Andy Benes won his 10th straight decision, Fred McGriff hit his 30th home run and the San Diego Padres finally won against a contender, routing the error-prone Los Angeles Dodgers.

The loss cut Los Angeles' lead in the NL West to 1½ games over Atlanta, which split a doubleheader against Cincinnati.

DEION: Pitching gives Sanders trouble

(From 1C)

sion-leading Los Angeles.

"I was nervous out there," Sanders said. "It was tough. I hadn't seen pitching for so long and it took me awhile to get used to his motion."

Sanders spent the first half of the season with the Braves, batting .193. He left to join the Falcons when they started training camp, but decided this week to help out the Braves, who recently lost leadoff man Otis Nixon, the stolen base leader in the majors, to a 60-day suspension for using cocaine.

Sanders said he didn't talk to Falcons coach Jerry Glanville on Wednesday about his double duty.

"I heard some of the front office may be discouraged over this, but not the coaching staff," he said. "I just practiced as usual."

Sanders' first two-sport day included no small amount of ribbing from his Falcons teammates, who professed to be amazed at the media horde covering the team's practice.

"Wow. All these people just 'cause we're playing New Orleans," marveled Mike Kenn.

"Yeah, ain't it great?" added Glanville.

As Sanders went through calisthenics, catching and pass coverage drills, his teammates kept up the ribbing.

"You gonna hit a home run tonight? No? Well you might get a sack," joked Aundray Bruce.

Assistant coach Jimmy Carr dogged Sanders through practice, proclaiming, "I'm gonna stay with Deion. I'm gonna get my picture on TV."

"All these guys are giving me some grief," Sanders said in a three-minute news conference between showering and heading for a Falcons team meeting.

Sanders even managed to watch a couple of minutes of the Chicago Cubs baseball game on a locker room television while a crowd of reporters gathered around his empty locker across the room.

But a player tipped the media that Sanders was hiding under a floppy hat, and the questioning began.

Sanders said it won't be a problem playing two sports: "You've just got to switch your mind over. I have a small role in baseball. I can handle it."

Former Texas QB defends Gardere

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Longhorn quarterback Todd Dodge, who was booed and cheered at Texas, says he understands the pressure starting Texas quarterback Peter Gardere is feeling in a 0-2 season.

Dodge, who was a letterman in 1983-85, said, "I know what he's feeling because I went through a similar situation. I had success and was booed during the same season. You can say all you want, but it's tough. After a while, it starts to weigh on you."

Dodge, now an assistant football coach at McKinney High School, also said the criticism of Gardere is unfair.

Gardere, 14-7 as a starter, said Tuesday of Texas fans, "They're never satisfied."

AREA: Steers host Snyder

(From 1C)

that's all we can ask for. Now we just need to win one."

Alfredo Rodriguez has been the main cog in the McCamey running machine, averaging 5.9 yards a burst for 211 yards so far. Wide receiver Jimmy Salinas has four grabs for 100 yards and QB Andy Stinson is 17-of-34 for 229 yards and two TDs.

The Badger defense is led by linebacker Billy Lynch's 34 tackles. End Rene Renteria has 16 tackles and Salinas has chipped in 13.

"We're convinced that we can surprise some people in our district," Adair said. "We know Eldorado is undefeated and a good football team. They use an eight-man front similar to what Reagan County and Alpine used, and it gave us some trouble.

"We don't expect a lot of surprises, but they are very versatile and use a lot of formations. We've got to be sound and play our positions."

■ Andrews at Levelland (7:30 p.m.)

The Mustangs, coming off a 31-3 romp over Midland High, take a 3-0 mark into Levelland. Andrews limited the Bulldogs to just 82 yards of offense last week, and the Mustangs have out-scored opponents 107-17 in the first three games to move to the state's No. 10 slot in total defense. Andrews averages 143 yards allowed per game. As many as 10 backs cart the ball for Andrews, including 184-pound fullback Zach Miller, who scored four touchdowns in a season-opening win over Wolfforth-Frenship and stands 10th among Class 4A scorers with 36 total points. Levelland comes in 2-1 for the season, including a 37-14 win last week over Seminole. The Mustangs crushed Seminole 49-0 two weeks ago, as Miller scored two more TDs.

■ Snyder at Big Spring (8 p.m.)

The Big Spring Steers continued their roll through non-conference opponents last Saturday with a 39-6 trouncing of Lubbock High that raised their record to 3-0. Quarterback Gerald Cobos completed 10-of-20 passes for 161 yards and a pair of TDs as Big Spring's multi-faceted offense churned out 383 yards against the 5A Westerners. The effort moved the Steers into 15th place among Class 4A offenses, averaging 341 yards per game. But Snyder played the Steers to a 14-14 tie last year, and the Tigers are 2-1 thus far. It's the final non-district tune-up for Big Spring, and with an open date falling between Snyder and the start of the District 3-4A schedule, the Steers have no reason to look past the Tigers this time out.

■ Brownfield at Lamesa (8 p.m.)

Lamesa's winning ways were halted last week at Crane, where the Golden Cranes played the Golden Tornadoes to a scoreless tie. But the Tors remained undefeated with a 2-0-1 record, and their defense has the ability to stop most anyone. Lamesa has allowed just six points during its first three games, while getting off to a 2-0 start behind 49 points. Brownfield dropped a 27-7 decision last week to Seagraves, so the Lamesa wishbone could get well in a hurry.

■ Greenwood at Alpine (8 p.m.)

The Greenwood Rangers got by neighboring Stanton 20-7 last week to improve to 2-1 for the season as Irvin Welch ran for a pair of second-half TDs. Alpine, which downed McCamey 27-0 last week, is also 2-1 in the early going. Joe Kilgore and Eric Clutter lead the Greenwood offense, which averages 18.3 points a game. Greenwood won this battle last year, beating the Bucks 28-7

■ Garden City at Wink (8 p.m.)

The Bearkats retained their No. 1 ranking in Class A football with a narrow 22-21 come-from-behind victory over No. 8 Rankin. It was Garden City's first win over the Red Devils in four tries, and it marked the successful return of tailback James Soles from knee surgery. Soles, who compiled over 2,000 yards last season, used his first 1991 outing to rack up 131 yards on 25 carries. Wink, 0-3, has allowed 103 points thus far and will be facing a Bearkat team that has scored 119 points so far, that's 39.6 points a game.

■ Van Horn at Rankin (8 p.m.)

Nobody expects Rankin (2-1) to fold its tent after last week's loss to Garden City, especially not Van Horn. District 5-2A Van Horn, 2-1, is coming off a 29-0 loss to Iraan. The Rankin Red Devils already dusted Iraan 21-15 in the season opener and will be playing at home for the second straight week, so the Eagles' bus trip home could be a long one.

■ Three Way at Midland Christian (7:30 p.m.)

Midland Christian gets a second straight home game when Three Way comes to town, and the Mustangs will be looking to keep their unbeaten string alive. MCS is 3-0 in the early going, and the Mustangs latest victory was perhaps their most impressive. MCS pulled off a rare six-man shutout, dropping Allen Academy 24-0.

Higgs not sure how Smith's return will affect him

Associated Press

MIAMI — Mark Higgs, the third leading rusher in the NFL and perhaps the Miami Dolphins' most pleasant surprise this season, finds his job in jeopardy.

Higgs stepped in when Sammie Smith, Miami's top running back the past two years, sustained a sprained left knee Aug. 10. Smith missed the first four games but rejoined practice Monday and is eligible to come off injured reserve for Sunday's game against the Jets in New York.

"I'm not saying I expect to come in and just take over, because Mark has done a real good job," Smith said Wednesday. "But at the end of the last year I felt I was one of the best in the league. I just want to get back in there and pick up where I left off."

Smith said he's rusty and out of shape, but the knee feels good. A decision on whether to activate him for the Jets game will be made later this week.

With Smith's return pending, he and Higgs are wondering how coach Don Shula will parcel out playing time. Shula himself isn't sure.

"We're going to have to see," he said.

The 5-foot-7 Higgs, a fourth-year pro with only one career start before this season, has made a strong case for staying in the lineup. He topped 100 yards in the first two games and now has 371 yards in 94 carries for a 3.9 average. Shula absolved him of blame for the team's problems on offense the past two games.

But Higgs sounds almost eager for a reduced role.

"We have a double threat in the backfield now. We'll probably rotate in and out, and it'll keep us both a lot fresher," Higgs said. "I just want to get a chance to run the ball, like, 10 times a game. That would be OK with me."

Smith, however, would prefer not to share playing time. He averaged 15 carries a game in his first two seasons and likes a heavy workload.

"I feel like I helped this team out tremendously last year," Smith said.

Prices hold

NEW YORK — Crude oil prices finished little changed Wednesday, as traders discounted an OPEC agreement to increase oil production 1 million barrels daily.

Analysts said the market moved up and down in light trading partly because of instability surrounding Iraq's refusal to adhere to United Nations demands.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in November settled 2 cents higher at $22.21 per barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Crude opened lower, rallied, then fell again.

Natural gas prices were higher, with contracts for delivery in November settling at $1.899 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 1.0 cents.

Dollar falls

NEW YORK — The dollar fell in quiet domestic trading Wednesday after posting gains overseas.

Analysts attributed some dollar selling to an Iraqi promise to allow unimpeded helicopter flights by United Nations nuclear inspection teams. The move by the Baghdad government helped ease some trader concerns about a possible renewal of conflict in the Middle East.

Market slips

NEW YORK — The stock market pulled back a bit Wednesday, showing little follow-through from Tuesday's strong close.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 18.56 on Tuesday, slipped back 8.05 points to 3,021.02.

OPEC sets production output

■ Oil ministers tentatively agree on ceiling of 23.65 million barrels of oil a day.

Associated Press

GENEVA — OPEC ministers tentatively agreed today to raise their oil production ceiling by a million barrels a day in a move likely to hold crude prices relatively steady in the coming months, officials said.

"We have an agreement," Gabonese Oil Minister Augustin Hervo-Akendengue said after a 2½ hour closed-door meeting of the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

However, it was unclear whether Saudi Arabia, which produces roughly a third of all OPEC oil, would stick to any production agreement. The kingdom said it intends to keep oil flowing freely until the end of the year, regardless of a cartel ceiling.

Gabon's representative said the ministers settled on producing 23.65 million barrels a day in the October-December period, the demand level OPEC experts have forcasted. That would be more than a million barrels above the group's current informal cap of 22.3 million.

But actual production is already closer to 23.65 million, and the agreement is not likely to have a pronounced effect on prices.

Nevertheless, market pressures may allow oil to reach OPEC's proclaimed target price of $21 per barrel. Prices have been rising recently on market worries about heavier demand with the onset of cold weather in North America.

The average price of a several kinds of crude oil monitored by OPEC was $19.24 a barrel last week. It was $18.78 in the previous week.

Iran, Algeria and others pressed for an accord that would guarantee an increase in prices to the cartel's target of $21 a barrel by year's end.

"I expect it (but) I cannot be certain we will get it," Nigerian Oil Minister Jibril Aminu said of prospects for prices to reach the benchmark.

Several delegates confirmed there was an agreement in principle on the 23.65 million barrels a day output ceiling, but said some details still needed to be worked out. They were to resume talks in the late afternoon.

The ministers said that since all countries — including Kuwait, which is still suffering from the shocks of the Gulf War — would be included in that cap, big producers such as Saudi Arabia and Iran might have to cut back output to get prices up to their target of $21 a barrel.

"Any ceiling that guarantees $21 — I accept that," said Iranian Oil Minister Gholamreza Aqazadeh.

But Saudi Arabia, in strong statements, said it intended to pump 8.5 million barrels of crude a day, with or without OPEC's approval.

"Nobody has got to approve what Saudi Arabia produces," the kingdom's influential oil minister, Hisham Nazer, said today.

Tandy Corp., Matsushita announce joint venture

■ New corporation, to be known as PTCC Inc., will manufacture personal computers.

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Tandy Corp. and Matsushita Electric Industrial have formed a joint venture to manufacture laptop and notebook-type personal computers, officials of the companies announced Wednesday.

Production is scheduled to start by next February at an existing Tandy site in Fort Worth that initially will employ about 100 people, officials said.

The joint venture corporation will be known as PTCC Inc., and will make products to be marketed by Tandy and Matsushita companies under the Panasonic, Tandy, GRiD and Victor brand names, officials said.

The plant will have the capacity to make more than 10,000 computers monthly.

Robert McClure, president of Tandy Electronics, said the new venture will allow the two companies to leverage their "considerable manufacturing expertise."

"The combined strengths of the world's largest consumer electronics company and America's premier manufacturer and retailer of PC-compatible computers will be significant in the market," McClure said.

Fort Worth-based Tandy and Matsushita will own PTCC equally. Proprietary technology of Matsushita and Tandy will be licensed to the joint venture company, and technologies developed by PTCC will be shared by the companies.

Tandy already was making personal computers for Matsushita that are sold in the United States under Matsushita's Panasonic label.

Matsushita also sells products in the United States under the Quasar and Technics brand names.

House condemns Fannie Mae salaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House on Wednesday condemned as excessive the multimillion dollar salaries paid by Fannie Mae as it approved 412-8 a bill revising regulatory structures of government-sponsored financial enterprises.

The bill adds new capital requirements and makes other regulatory changes for the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae), the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. (Freddie Mac), and the Federal Home Loan Banks.

Those enterprises were established and chartered by the federal government to help the flow of credit to private home buyers, but both are now entirely owned. They enjoy significant government benefits including exemption from state and local taxes.

The measure would revise the charters of the enterprise to establish affordable housing goals. It establishes a regulator at the Department of Housing and Urban Development to see that the corporations meet higher capital requirement levels.

Factory orders decline

WASHINGTON (AP) — Factory orders for durable goods and sales of existing homes both fell in August, according to reports Wednesday that prompted concern about the sectors that had been seen as leading the economy out of recession.

"The reluctant recovery does not look too durable at the moment," said John M. Albertine, head of a Washington economic forecasting firm.

Daryl Delano, an economist with Cahners Economics in Newton, Mass., concurred. "There's reason to fear the recovery has stalled," he said.

But Michael Boskin, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, told reporters the economy is growing in the July-September quarter and played down the August decline in durable goods orders.

Noting that orders posted a record gain in July, Boskin said the two months taken together reflect "a solid gain." He acknowledged, however, a need "to see an improvement in the consumer sector."

The Commerce Department said orders for durable goods fell 3.8 percent, to a seasonally adjusted $125.9 billion, from $130.8 billion in July. A sharp drop in transportation orders led the declines in most major categories.

"We have severe doubts about whether the surge in manufacturing can be sustained given the drop in consumer confidence and the weakness in domestic automobile sales," Albertine said.

The New York-based Conference Board reported Tuesday that its widely watched consumer confidence index dropped in September for the third straight month. At the same time, sales of North American-built vehicles continued to fall below year-ago levels.

The National Association of Realtors on Wednesday said sales of existing single-family homes fell 2.1 percent in August to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.25 million, down from 3.32 million a month earlier.

The report also showed that sales in July actually plunged 7.5 percent, steeper than the 6.7 percent decline first re-

INVESTORS' GUIDE

All exchanges have arbitration procedures

By Bill Doyle

Q. You occasionally refer to arbitration procedures to which investors can take complaints against brokers and brokerage firms. Please provide more details.

How is the procedure initiated? Who chooses the arbitrators? Is their decision final?

Doyle

A. All securities and commodity exchanges have arbitration procedures, as does the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD) and the Municipal Securities Rulemaking Board MSRB). NASD regulates the over-the-counter trading of stocks off exchanges. As the name indicates, MSRB sets rules for tax-free bonds issued by states, cities, etc.

The American Arbitration Association (AAA), headquartered in New York City; U.S. Arbitration and Mediation, a franchised Seattle-based chain, and Judicate, a Philadelphia firm, also hear and settle customer-broker disputes. But the vast majority of such hearings are handled by NASD and the New York Stock Exchange.

It should come as no surprise that non-securities industry arbitration panels are widely perceived as being sympathetic to investors rather than to those companies sponsored by the exchanges and NASD. At last count, investors won about 60 percent of the time at AAA, against some 50 percent of the time at industry-sponsored forums.

To get the ball rolling on a complaint, contact the arbitration director, NASD, 33 Whitehall Street, New York, NY 10004; the counterpart at NYSE, 11 Wall Street, New York, NY 10006; or AAA, 140 West 51st Street, New York, NY 10020-1203.

Each arbitration panel is chosen from a list submitted to the parties of the dispute, who can challenge and replace at least one panel member.

The arbitration panel's decision is final. So, when you go the arbitration route, make sure your case is well prepared.

Q. Is legal representation required when an investor takes a dispute with a broker to arbitration?

A. It's not required. But you would be playing with fewer than 52 cards in the deck if you show up without a lawyer experienced in such matters. You can be sure the broker will have one.

Q. Where are arbitration hearings of customer-broker differences held? Are they costly?

A. The hearings are held all around the country, for the convenience of both sides. NASD conducts them in some U.S. 50 cities. AAA has 35 offices nationwide.

An investor's biggest expense usually is a lawyer's fee. And there are NASD and NYSE "hearing deposits," ranging from $30 to $1,800, depending on the size of the claim. AAA charges a $300 minimum fee, while claims of $5 million and more cost $14,250, plus one-tenth of 1 percent of the amount above $5 million.

Q. On the advice of a broker at a large firm, at the age of 71, I invested half my nest egg in an oil and gas stock, at $11.875 per share. I received only three dividends before they were discontinued. The shares are now down to $3.

I have since learned, at that time, the brokerage paid extra high commissions on those shares in a sales drive. Further research showed me the stock has always been very risky. When I complained, I found out the firm's so-called "compliance department" is as unethical as the broker.

Would you advise me to take my case to the American Arbitration Association?

A. Of course. Advising a senior citizen to put 50 percent of his wealth into a speculative stock fractures the "suitability rule" to a fare-thee-well.

Q. I have taken note that many brokerage firms hide the fact that their brokers are brokers. The one who gave me the financial "business" is called a "financial consultant." Isn't that illegal?

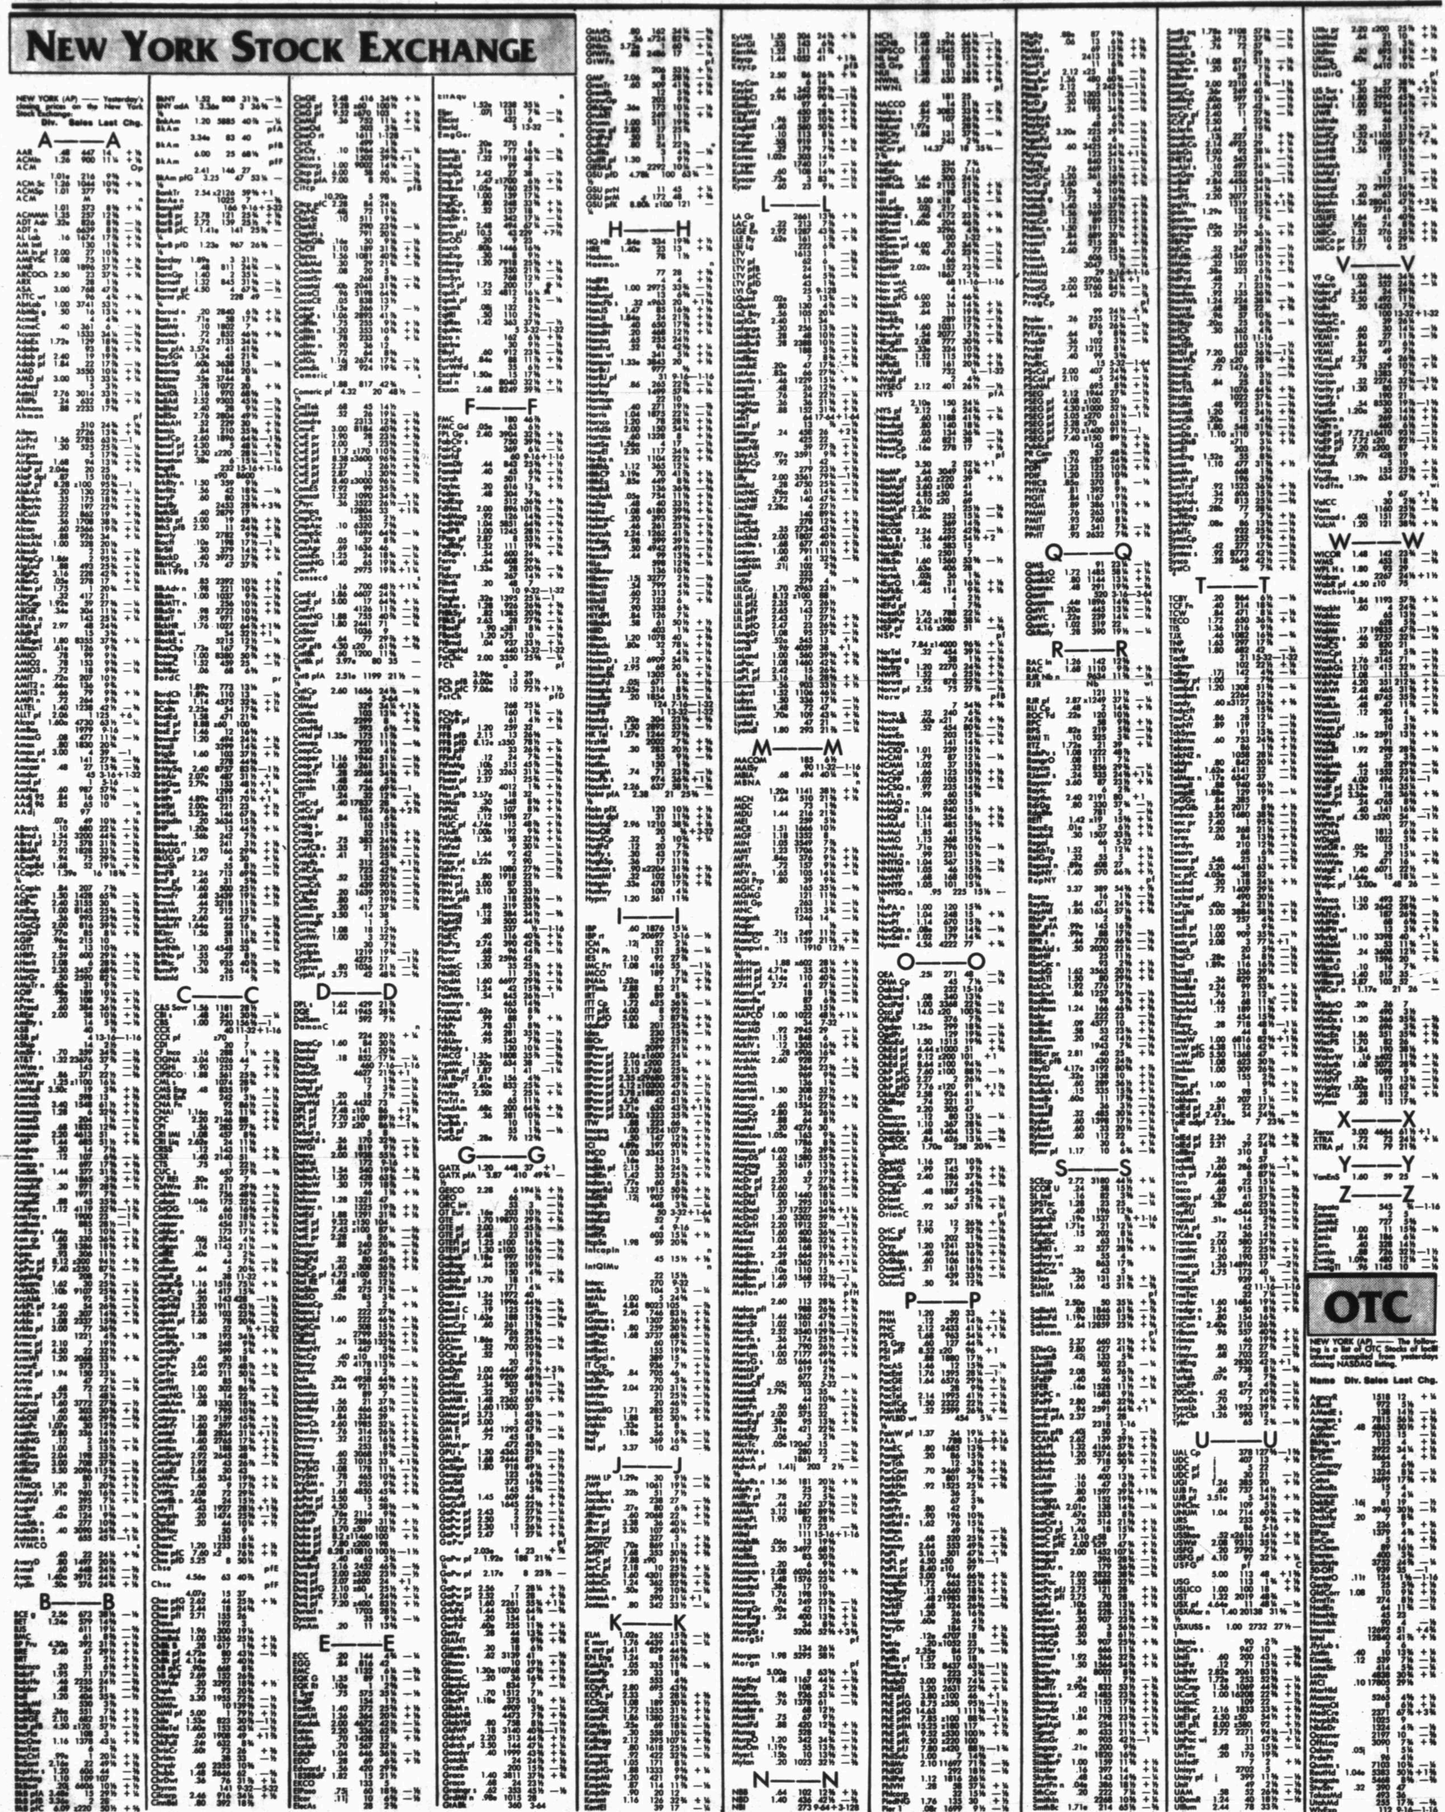

A. Nope. You can call it deceptive. But it doesn't break any law. It's beyond my ken why so many brokers and their firms run away from the title "broker" — a perfectly good word.

I hark back to the time they were known as "customers' men."

ECONOMY: Recovery stalls, economist says

(From 5C)

ported last month. New home sales also fell in July, according to government figures.

Until July, sales of new and existing homes had risen every month since the housing recession bottomed out last January.

Durable goods orders had jumped a revised 11.7 percent in July, the biggest gain since the Commerce Department began tracking them in 1958. Orders first were estimated to have advanced 11.2 percent.

Still, it was just the third advance since the beginning of the year and the August relapse meant orders for the first eight months were down 0.4 percent from those of the same period of 1990.

Durable goods, usually expensive items expected to last more than three years, are considered a barometer of manufacturers' production plans. A decrease could result in a cutback in production and a loss of jobs.

Delano said most of the good economic news recently has been from the production side, including the manufacturing and housing sectors. But, he added, this activity is slowing because of a lack of demand from consumers, who represents two-thirds of the nation's economic activity.

"People are still concerned about jobs and income," he contended.

The durable goods report showed that transportation orders plummeted 9.2 percent in August, the first decline since April. A large decrease in aircraft orders offset gains in other equipment including automobiles.

Transportation orders had jumped 27.1 percent in July, three-fourths of which was due to the aircraft industry.

But even without the decline in the transportation category, overall orders still were down 1.6 percent.

Designers show relaxed styles

ANNE KLEIN II

Sportswear has come a long way since Anne Klein reinvented this all-American style of dressing in the 1960s, when blazers, trousers, sweaters and raincoats made up the separates repertory.

In the spring collection of Anne Klein II, this has been expanded to include T-shirts, very short and very long skirts, shorts, bras, chunky patterned sweaters, leggings, shorts, jump suits, bras and, of course, jackets.

Not just blazers, of course, though they are still with us in oversize versions.

There are also jackets that curve close to the body and jackets that blouse and have drawstring waists like parkas. There are jackets with delicate crocheted edges, jackets cut like truncated trench coats, baseball and motorcycle jackets, and that hardly exhausts the list.

There are dozens of jackets in the collection, designed by Louis Dell'Olio with Maurice Antaya and Helen Wong.

Some are for work and some are for play and the line between the two is not well defined.

The jacket is, however, the key ingredient that pulls the various separate pieces together to make an outfit. The pieces do not have to match or be in the same mood.

A brilliant printed skirt can be paired with sober tops. Clean checks or bold stripes are paired with sober solid colors or vivid prints. It's not that there are no rules, but the rules are flexible. For work, a tailored mode; for play, anything goes.

The bulk of the collection is priced at $150 to $350, about half the prices of the regular Anne Klein collection.

The different looks that can be put together is almost limitless. A long jacket with a short skirt is as acceptable as a jeans jacket, in beige linen, say, with flowered shorts. Striped seersucker separates could be bound for the office or the playing fields.

For decoration, in lieu of jewelry, an extra sweater can be tied around the waist, or as an alternative, a flowered sash. A gray cotton T-shirt that looks like cashmere is an attractive component of many outfits.

Color is as variable as shapes, including white for shirts and dresses, navy for jackets, plus orange and green for vivid separates. It's clear that fashion is nondictatorial.

This is most evident in the sprinkling of long skirts that vary the many short, snug styles. The prettiest is a gracefully full brownish plaid shown with a crisp white shirt. The skirt reaches almost to the ankles.

Sneakers are acceptable footgear along with thong sandals and ballet slippers. The shoes, of course, set the tone for the collection: comfort is the prevailing theme. This is fashion with a friendly base.

CALVIN KLEIN

Calvin Klein's first problem was to make clothes women would wear on weekends that had the same understated look as his main collection but a totally informal feeling. The second was to demonstrate both the similarities and the differences between the casual clothes and his regular collection.

Klein decided that a fashion show was the way to do it, and so this month in his showroom, he presented the collection he calls Sport.

It reflected, he said, the way women really dress in their leisure time. It is also considerably less expensive than his regular, more formal collection. Prices are in the $50 to $360 range, with some suede jackets going up to $700. Jackets in his regular collection would be double that.

So how do women really dress on weekends? According to Klein, they wear lots of jeans, including cut-offs, and leather jackets. When the jeans are white denim and the jackets black, the results are sharp and classy as well as casual.

The jackets don't have to be black leather with zippers. They can be denim or chamois, which has a look of quiet, understated luxury.

"It all depends on the woman and her attitude," Klein said. "Casual dressing has a broad dimension, and I'm showing clothes that reflect the way people actually dress on weekends."

While jeans are a keystone of the collection for next spring, the designer pointed out that "everything doesn't have to be denim." He is quite enamored of the washed linen and washed cotton separates: "They are casual and relaxed, and they offer the same kind of comfort."

The way he showed the clothes, with boots, chain belts and jackets worn open over bare skin, had the racy look of his recent advertising. But the styles are not just for bikers and their admirers. White minidresses, shorts and mini-trenchcoats are weekend fare for women whose activities are no more strenuous than shopping or walking on the beach.

Not all the clothes are short. Interspersed among the bonafide jeans and the minidresses are some skirts and dresses that stop at about mid-calf level. Tops can be sheer T-shirts over bras or midriff-baring stretch bras worn as outerwear.

Do these long skirts represent the wave of the future?

Klein is not about to be lured into any daring hemline pronouncements.

"Women are already wearing them," he said. "Sometimes they just feel like putting on a longer skirt in the country, so they do. That doesn't mean they don't like short skirts or shorts. It's just an alternative way of dressing."

And that may be the way longer clothes will edge into the fashion picture, softly and with style.

RESTIVO

Mary Ann Restivo has long been a favorite designer of working women. When the "dress for success" formula of sober gray and navy suits was the rage, she managed to give her clothes a twist that made them look feminine and individual. She had a soft and gentle touch.

Her spring collection has gone considerably further. Actually, it will take her fans comfortably through summer.

The key ingredient of the new season is color. Tangerine and aqua are two of her lively shades and she doesn't mind mixing them up. Loose linen coats over easy matching dresses are a stylish alternative to suits for spring dressing. Blazers are taken out of the classic category with big colorful embroidered buttons or are made in striped silks in cocoa, orange, yellow and lilac.

Obviously, Miss Restivo believes there is no need for a woman to be self-effacing at work.

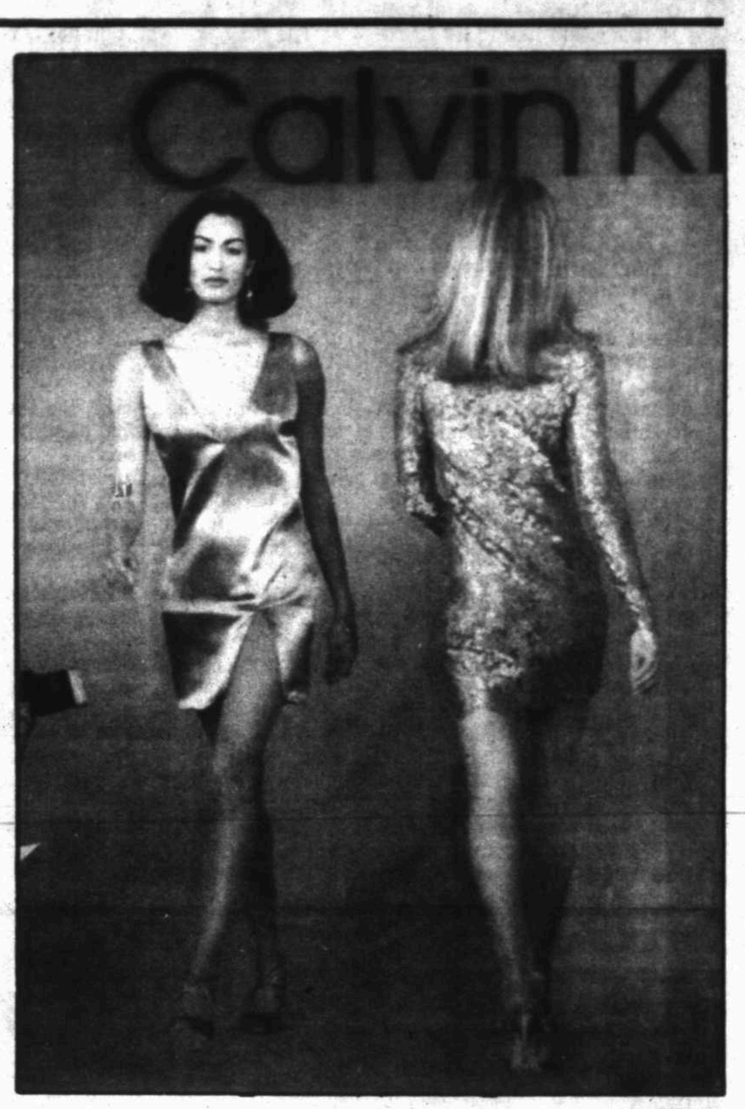

Her casual clothes for hot weather have another kind of charm. A lively group of jackets is based on a print that suggests a Miro painting. For play, it is shown with black shorts.

A skirt could be a substitute at work. One jacket has a guitar embroidered on the back.

Stretch tights give a contemporary look to many of the jackets. Some are shown with bras that have the traditional underwear stitching. Bare midriffs are in.

But bareness is balanced by longer skirts. Miss Restivo drops the hem on a few styles, including a white silk shirtwaist dress that would be fine for work and a watermelon silk-and-cotton halter with a full ankle-length skirt. The halter would be fine for summer lunches and parties.

Miss Restivo has made an effort to keep her prices down. Jackets are $300 to $350; skirts are $120 to $150.

Fashions from Chanel keep up with 'the times'

By Valli Herman
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The 1990s version of Chanel came back to Hollywood and it fit right in with the fantasy of glamour, elegance and high style.

In celebration of designer Coco Chanel's first visit to Hollywood in 1931, the Blue Ribbon of the Music Center, the center's prime support group, held a benefit fashion show Monday at the 20th Century Fox Studios. More than 700 guests were invited to dine, dance and view the new collections created by Chanel's latest head designer, Karl Lagerfeld.

As famous models such as Linda Evangelista and Claudia Schiffer paraded down the runway in denim, acrylic harness boots, fishnet body stockings and loads and loads of chain belts and necklaces, it was clear that this isn't the prim and proper fashion house that it used to be. Chances are that the rich and famous will be pouring into the boutiques for the new looks.

"The idea is that a lot of things can be mixed," said Arie L. Kopelman, president of Chanel Inc. "You see a lot of people wearing a Chanel jacket with jeans."

And that's exactly how Lagerfeld built the collections.

If designers take their cue from Chanel, several key trends are likely to emerge in the coming months:

- Harness boots: These short, square-toe boots often used for motorcycle riding came in every variation, including a clear acrylic boot trimmed with patent leather straps and gold chains and worn with evening gowns.
- Platform shoes, with a half-inch sole platform, preferably in gold to go with the gold-quilted purses and caps.
- Patent leather as the new leather. Lagerfeld uses it as trim and accent on wool boucle jackets, leather and metal jewelry.
- Bronze as the new evening color, either in sequins or chiffon.
- Evening gowns with short skirts made full by modified petticoats. The pouf skirt returns in several variations for evening, some copying the pannier skirt associated with Marie Antoinette.
- Fake leopard fur trim on cuffs, collars and on hats.
- Chiffon, chiffon, chiffon, tulle, tulle, tulle; gathered, draped, layered and bunched into roses all over a short skirt.
- Denim as a couture fabric, in fringed miniskirts and jeans, and even the famous quilted Chanel purse.
- Fishnet hose, worn over tights that coordinate with a monochromatic outfit.
- Plain old five-pocket denim jeans get the Chanel treatment with an all over covering of nickel-sized golden medallions.
- Feathers are the new fur.
- Leggings worn with ankle-length tunics slit to the waist.

One last trend, full-length satin ball gowns paired with quilted leather motorcycle jackets, harness boots and rapper-worthy chain belts and necklaces probably won't catch on, according to that ubiquitous fashion arbiter, Mr. Blackwell.

"I don't think the Chanel customer will relate to this," he said.

And on the boots with the ball gowns?

"It was bawdy, bulky, harsh and butch."

As for the rest of the show: "I think if a young customer looks at this, Chanel will have a totally new resurgence."

Historic TV wear gives costumers a challenge

By Valli Herman
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Lots of people in this world like to let television costumers know that clothing makes a lasting impression on the memory of viewers.

"If we use something that isn't accurate, we'll get 1,000 letters," said Lyn Paola, co-costumer supervisor for the new ABC drama "Homefront." Paola has learned from doing other period costume shows that imitations of the clothes don't work, especially on military uniforms.

"There are a lot of old soldiers watching TV. Even on a couple of Vietnam things I have done, even the technical advisers couldn't get everything right," she said.

This fall, television costumers will be put to the test of historical accuracy every week with the debut of three new period shows.

On ABC, "Homefront" tells the stories of Midwestern men and women during the late 1940s. NBC's "I'll Fly Away" is a drama about a Southern lawyer, his family and his black housekeeper dealings with the social changes of the '50s. Even comedy is capable of flashback with "Brooklyn Bridge," set in 1956, on CBS.

Outfitting a set of characters every week for a television show challenges any costumer, but adding period clothes to the formula makes the job harder, even for the actors.

"Footwear is always a problem," said Tom McKinley, the costumer for "I'll Fly Away."

"The Reebok revolution has taken over," he said.

ACTORS ARE painfully aware of the changes, especially the kids who star in "Brooklyn Bridge."

"The shoes are the worst," said Aeryk Egan, a blond 13-year-old who plays Warren Butcher. "I put my foot in those loafers and they are so-o-o tight."

Finding the right look in the right style is also hard, according to Adam LaVorgna, 10, who plays the smart-talking Nicholas Scamperelli.

"Those high-tops, those are the hardest," said LaVorgna. "They're a 2½ and I wear a 4½."

Ah, the sacrifices for one's art.

The hardships are not for lack of trying on the part of Linda Bass, the costumer for "Brooklyn Bridge."

"I have a network of vintage stores I use from Long Beach to Canoga Park," she said.

"But it's really hard to dress kids in period (costumes). Kids wear out their clothes and they don't last long enough to be recycled," she said.

Sometimes, they don't make it through rehearsal.

"I put on this shirt and I was throwing a ball, and I heard r-r-rip," said Jake Jundef, who co-stars as Benny Belinsky on "Brooklyn Bridge."

"I told them I was really sorry I ripped it. But they said, 'That's OK. They're from the '50s,'" he said. Surely to a 14-year-old like Jundef, the 1950s must seem like an impossibly distant, exotic time.

But not to Marion Ross, who stars as grandmother Sophie Berger in the show. She loves her character, but not the clothes she has to wear.

"I don't look in the mirror," Ross said.

DRESSING IN period costumes often transports actors to the past, partly because the clothing requires different posture, movement and even a different way of getting dressed.

Paola, of "Homefront," is a stickler for details.

"In the pilot, we used original underwear on everyone. It helped give the real shape to the bust," she said. "After that, the principles will still be wearing the authentic underwear — bras, stockings, suspender (garter) belts and a few corsets. They have to feel right," she said.

The clothing of the 1940s may look more appealing to some eyes, but to the wearers, it is often more challenging.

"It was definitely harder to get dressed," Paola said. "Most dresses go over the head with a side zipper on the left.

"I find a lot of the extras put the clothes on the wrong way. They put the dresses on backward because the zippers are in a different place, on the side instead of the back."

Even within the seemingly innocent accessory lurks a potential spoiler.

"The worst problem we have dealing with the clothes is the hats. The actors and actresses aren't used to wearing hats," Paola said.

"I gave them to people to wear at home so they could get used to it," she said.

As with many vintage garments, their prime wearability is long past.

"The clothes are old, so the thread is rotten," Paola said. "We have to remake everything."

THE SCARCITY of children's clothing has forced McKinley of "I'll Fly Away" to find adult's outfits and drastically alter them. The process is still faster and cheaper than starting from scratch.

Even when the sizes are equivalent, a 10 is not a 10, even a mere 10 years apart.

"Every single thing gets altered," Paola said. "Shapes have generally changed. People on the whole were smaller then," she said.

Just to confuse matters more, clothes now are overblown by the oversize trend. Not many items, no matter how similar they are, can be borrowed from the present.

"With this show, I'm even more aware of how oversize everything is. If I buy a shirt from a store, I buy it one or two sizes smaller to get the shoulder seams where they are supposed to be so they fit like '50s clothes," McKinley said.

Paola has had a little more luck finding new items that are convincing as vintage goods.

"Sweaters pretty much haven't changed," Paola said. "I go into little old ladies stores for them. Head scarves come in similar prints. Gloves, too," she said.

Ironically, the interpretations of mid-1930s vintage fashions currently in vogue look too modern, according to Paola.

"I don't buy the copies because the fabrics and the prints are too different," she said.

The demand for the vintage looks is further complicating matters for most of the costumers.

"I'm seeing (vintage) dresses for $200, that were $35 two years ago," Paolo said.

If the retro trend continues to interest the entertainment industry, the world may be in for a surprise. Just think, it could only be a matter of months before the 1970s come back to haunt us, on stage, screen and in our own homes.

DEAR ABBY

Blended family creates happy wedding

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have read so much about divorced parents creating problems at their kids' weddings that I had to write and let you know what happened at mine.

Van Buren

My parents divorced when I was 2 years old. For years, I heard Mother and Dad badmouth each other. And I went for years without seeing my father because of their dislike for each other.

Then, when I was in my early teens, my parents started mending fences, and I got to know my father better. I soon realized that Dad wasn't such a bad guy after all.

OK, I am now 21 and have just married a wonderful young man. Dad got married last year and the hostility between my parents just seemed to evaporate!

I got the nicest present anyone could have given me. My mother and my stepmother gave me a surprise bridal shower — together! Mom insisted that Dad give me away at my wedding, and she and Dad stood together at my side to give me their blessings.

My stepmother insisted that Mom and Dad sit together at the wedding dinner. My parents laughed and danced together and everyone had a super time. I didn't have to ask anybody to please be nice for my sake. There were genuine good feelings. I get emotional just thinking about it. Sign this ... DREAMS CAN COME TRUE IN TEXAS

DEAR DREAMS CAN COME TRUE: What an upper your letter is! Your parents (and stepmother) showed rare maturity, sensitivity and generosity. Few children of divorced parents are as fortunate. Lucky you!

DEAR ABBY: This is the first time I have written, but I thought you might find this letter of interest.

When my daughter informed me more than a month ahead of time that she and her husband planned to give me a big 80th birthday celebration, I remembered a letter that appeared in your column several months ago, from a woman who requested that all of her "gifts" go to the local food bank.

Well, the party was a huge success. More than 70 guests attended, and 145 pounds of food and $137 in coins and checks were donated. My photograph appeared in the local paper and I received bouquets of flowers from the local flower shop and radio station — with congratulations for having given my "birthday gifts" to the food bank!

What a wonderful feeling to know that I have helped the hungry through these very difficult times. It was so worthwhile.

It would make me very happy to hear that many others would do the same. Just sharing the occasion with my wonderful friends was present enough for me. — HELEN IN OTTAWA, CANADA

It's time for 'closure' on latest buzz word

By Erma Bombeck

It seems every decade has its buzz words. We went from "meaningful conversation" to "entering into a relationship" to "bonding" and "quality time." I don't have a clue what any of them really mean, but if you say them with enough authority, people think you do.

Bombeck

The latest word to pop up in every conversation is "closure" — the bringing to an end of something, a conclusion. You can't get out of a "relationship" until you've had "closure."

These words don't stay in vogue long. Next week it will be something else, so you have to get mileage out of them while you can. That's why I've been closuring myself to death.

I told my husband I wanted a closure on his closet. He'll never be able to turn the light on in there until he has said goodbye to bell-bottom jeans and fishing waders with a hole in the toe. There has to be an end to saving all those skinny ties and running shorts with safety pins in the elastic waistband. He has to ask himself, "When was the last time I snorkled with one fin?" Do it!

I sent a message of closure to each of our kids and told them they had to bring to an end their love affair with old report cards and attendance ribbons. If they're not ready for closure in my closets where they store this stuff, then they should take the stuff to their apartments to think about it. I told them it was time to stop living in the past and clinging to old achievements. Get a life!

Ed, a mechanic at the garage I go to, was next on my closure list. For the last few years, Ed has been trying to find out why my car squeaks when I put on the brakes while it is in reverse. It never happens when Ed puts the car in reverse — only when I'm at the wheel alone. So far, Ed has vacationed in Palm Springs and bought a Stairmaster for his wife trying to find my squeak. If it is not found within the next three months, I suggested to Ed, he should accept the fact that he cannot find the problem and let me go. I have a leak in my water softener and a grinding sound in my disposal that needs my attention.

My husband regards all of this closure business as if it is some kind of a joke. He threw open the refrigerator door the other night and said, "If you're really serious about getting on with your life, you should say your final goodbyes to this bottle of Tabasco sauce that's been in the door for eight years or this leftover that lunges at me every time the light goes on."

I need time to heal first.

Dr. Seuss, author, dies at 87

N.Y. Times News Service

Theodor Seuss Geisel, the author and illustrator whose whimsical fantasies written under the pen name Dr. Seuss entertained and instructed millions of children and adults around the world, died in his sleep on Tuesday night at his home in La Jolla, Calif. He was 87.

Geisel had been suffering from an infection of his jawbone that had become acute in recent months, said Jerry Harrison, who oversees Random House Books for Young Readers, Geisel's longtime publishers. Harrison said the exact cause of his death was unclear.

"We've lost the finest talent in the history of children's books," Harrison said in a telephone interview, "and we'll probably never see one like him again."

Geisel's work delighted children by combining the ridiculous and the logical, generally with a homely moral. "If I start out with the concept of a two-headed animal," he once said, "I must put two hats on his head and two toothbrushes in the bathroom. It's logical insanity."

Geisel's first book, "And to Think That I Saw It on Mulberry Street," appeared in 1937. It was followed by such classics as "Horton Hatches the Egg" in 1940 and "The Cat in the Hat" in 1957.

MOONLIGHTING!

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
