Commissioners OK $14.8 million budget for 1989

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County Commissioners today approved a $14.8 million 1989 budget, which is $1.6 million higher than the present spending plan.

To help fund the budget, the commissioners are to set the tax rate next week — at 2 p.m. Tuesday — in the Midland County Courthouse.

"Virtually, our budget is unchanged other than those things that were mandated by higher offices," Commissioner Durward Wright said.

While the budget represents a $1.6-million increase over the current budget, it does not convert into a property tax increase, Commissioner Win Brown said today after a brief meeting in the commissioners courtroom.

The property tax rate will be lowered by 26 percent to produce about $6 million for the county. The county's tax base is nudging $4 million.

Less income produced by the property-tax decrease is offset by the one-half-cent county sales tax, which is expected to generate $4.3 million in funding.

The county's other revenue comes from fines, license and permit fees, library fines, Fairview Cemetery and other income.

"The county really is operating on bare bones" Brown said of the budget. "There are no frills."

Main increases in the budget are in the Sheriff's Department, many of which are mandated by the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, Wright said. Those increases include hiring more jailers for the number of inmates. In addition, the county is building a 192-bunk jail via a $3.8 million bond issue.

The county's Public Safety and Corrections budget, which includes the sheriff's $2.64 million budget, totals about $3.5 million.

Also included in the budget is a 3 percent cost of living increase for county employees, which represents about $200,000 of the total budgetary increase; and $700,000 in debt service on the new jail.

200 meet with police about east-side rape investigation

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A teeming crowd of 200 met with police Thursday evening to discuss the search for the elusive eastside rapist.

The worried throng streamed into the city's newest YMCA for more than a half-hour after the scheduled 7:30 p.m. start of the meeting. The response surprised organizers, who struggled to find enough folding chairs.

"This is a tremendous turnout," Police Chief Richard Czech told the standing-room-only crowd at the east-side facility. "It certainly shows the community cares about what's going on."

While storm clouds swirled in the skies outside, the mostly female assembly, many with children and some cradling infants, at first politely listened to the chief's reassurances.

"Most of all we want to calm you down, to let you know the danger is not as bad as you might think," Czech said. "We want you to know that police officers are out on the street. They are out there when you are sleeping."

The rapist has committed two sexual assaults since June, has attempted two others, and police say he may have committed more than a dozen burglaries since that time, all on the east side of town.

He has not struck since August 10, and usually "goes under" when faced with publicity, according to police.

He always carries a screwdriver that he uses to break into homes between 1 a.m. and 5 a.m., and has always been masked, according to investigators.

In each case, the women have been alone or with only small children in the house.

During the meeting, police revealed that officers have worked undercover in the area since June, and have questioned and photographed pedestrians stopped in the area during the rapist's active hours, between midnight and 6 a.m.

Czech admitted the area was "plagued" by worry, and called the rapist "one of the more dangerous types of persons."

The rapist was scared off after two of the intended victims confronted him with weapons. One woman shot at him with a handgun, while another pulled a butcher knife from under her pillow, according to police.

"We do not encourage you to use force," Czech noted. "If you feel comfortable using a weapon, I'm not going to discourage you."

Police Lt. Jerry Compton, who heads the crimes against persons unit, told the crowd the attacker has been profiled by police as a "power reassurance rapist — which fortunately is the least violent."

"He is the one who should run if he is resisted," Compton said of his behavior. "But he is a human being," and might not react predictably, he added.

"This guy picks easy victims, he picks them through voyeurism," Compton said. Some investigators have described him as a "peeping Tom" who may be roaming the east side every night looking for targets.

"He doesn't know them (victims) personally," Czech said. "But he knows what's going on in that particular house."

The large crowd and a public address system that wouldn't work added up to a restlessness in the room when members of the large crowd started quizzing police.

Rainfall puts area over monthly total

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Gray skies packing heavy thunderstorms and moderately strong winds dumped more rain in the area Thursday than is average for the entire month, a weather official said today.

"You combine all these things and anything can happen," said National Weather Service meteorologist Jack Nunan of the four fickle weather systems hovering over an area stretching from eastern New Mexico to Texas.

It's normal for Midland-Odessa to record a little more than two inches of rain in September, Nunan said.

But barely two days into the month, nearly three inches of rain here and seven inches in Odessa fell Thursday night.

Local lawmen say no major accidents had resulted from the heavy rains and flooding by mid-morning, but urged drivers to exercise caution when driving.

"If people would be careful and use common sense there wouldn't be any problems," said Midland Police Cpl. Jim White.

Three cars were submerged in three-foot-deep water this morning at the Interstate 20 underpass at Cloverdale Road, said Midland County Sheriff's Department spokeswoman Peggy Miller.

"It's pretty deep and these people try to drive through it," added Ms. Miller.

Investigators say engine thrust, wing flaps may be factors in crash

GRAPEVINE (AP) — Investigators are pointing to possible problems with Delta Flight 1141's engine thrust and wing flaps before it crashed on takeoff, and they hope to get answers from the crew and their recorded cockpit conversations.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators said Thursday a flap indicator handle in the wrecked cockpit was found in the wrong position for most takeoffs, raising questions whether the plane's wing flaps were set properly.

Incorrectly set flaps led to the fatal crash of a Northwest Airlines flight last summer. The Delta Air Lines flight's indicator handle, however, could have been accidently jarred during or after the crash, investigators said.

The Boeing 727 got no more than 30 feet off the runway at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport before it crashed Wednesday, witnesses told the NTSB. Thirteen people were killed.

Pilots in planes waiting on adjacent taxiways told investigators "a white flame or vapor" came from the left engine, said NTSB member Lee Dickinson.

A cockpit tape recording recovered from the burned wreckage revealed that the pilots talked about engine trouble seconds before the crash, he said.

Further reviews of the tape and of the flight data recorder were planned today at the NTSB's Washington laboratory.

The Delta jetliner crashed as it tried to take off for Salt Lake City with 108 people aboard. Ninety-five people survived the crash and resulting flames, most by escaping through emergency exits or torn-open areas of the fuselage. Thirty-three remained hospitalized Thursday.

■ Related stories, Page 2D

Medical examiners said the 13 died from smoke inhalation. Many were trapped when an emergency door wouldn't open.

Today, that door was getting closer examination by investigators at the scene. They opened, examined and photographed it as well as other parts of the burned fuselage, inside and out.

The plane's flight engineer, Steven M. Judd, told investigators that right after the plane took off the crew "began experiencing problems keeping the plane stable and in the air," The New York Times reports in today's editions.

Pilot flying same route as Flight 1141 aborts takeoff

GRAPEVINE (AP) — The day after 13 people died in the crash of Delta Flight 1141, a pilot flying a similar jet on the same route aborted takeoff when a panel indicator warned of a possible engine problem.

Six people who were among the 95 survivors of Wednesday's tragic crash at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport were aboard the second Boeing 727, also Delta Flight 1141, that returned to the gate on Thursday.

"He was only at a maximum of 20 knots...which is pretty slow for an airplane," said Glenda Johnson, a Delta Air Lines spokeswoman in Atlanta. "Then he (the pilot) gets an indicator on the panel that there is a momentary disruption of air flow" in one of the engines.

On Friday, for the first time in two days, Delta 1141 departed DFW apparently without incident. The flight was airborne at 8:49 a.m. CDT, a few minutes behind schedule.

Delta officials at the terminal declined to talk to reporters, but several passengers who regularly take Flight 1141 said the plane was only carrying about half as many passengers as usual.

Wednesday a Boeing 727 carrying 108 passengers crashed and burned shortly after takeoff. Federal investigators said the aircraft may have experienced an engine malfunction as it left the runway.

Delta officials said no maintenance problems were found in the engine of the Boeing that took off Thursday. But the turnaround sent a jolt of apprehension through many of the passengers.

"We figured this would be the safest flight we could ever take today," said passenger Louise Cox, of Baton Rouge, La., as she waited to board another 727 for Salt Lake City. "Evidently not."

Walesa tries to persuade miners to return to work

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa met today with striking miners in southwestern Poland to persuade them to return to work, and hundreds of port workers in Gdansk protested a management decision to fire strikers.

Five other enterprises remained on strike after Walesa appealed for an end to the work stoppages that began Aug. 16. Walesa said ending the strikes would open the way for talks with the government on workers' demands, including legalization of Solidarity.

Mine spokesman Antoni Pilny said Walesa accompanied by an aide and his parish priest, the Rev. Henryk Jankowski, arrived at the July Manifesto mine and began talks with the miners, who launched the recent wave of labor unrest.

The striking miners said they would not stop their strike unless Walesa came to the mine to explain his decision calling for an end to strikes.

The Solidarity leader had hoped to settle the strike by telephone, Walesa's wife, Danuta, said in a telephone conversation.

In Gdansk, 700 workers gathered at the port this morning after management told about 400 involved in the strike action not to return to their jobs, Gdansk Solidarity spokesman Bogdan Borusewicz said.

Management told the workers to file applications for reinstatement but finally allowed most of the protesters to return to work, the spokesman said.

Strike committee leaders were negotiating with port authorities to secure formal reinstatement. No agreement had been reached, he said.

In the Baltic port of Szczecin, striking dock workers resumed talks with management over pay issues. Striking bus workers there sent a letter to Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak asking for his help to obtain a guarantee of job security for strike leaders.

Walesa called for an end to strikes after meeting Wednesday with government officials to discuss the labor unrest — Poland's worst in seven years.

In the meeting — Walesa's first with ranking officials in six years — the government agreed to discuss the outlawed Solidarity trade union movement and other worker issues in return for an end to the strikes.

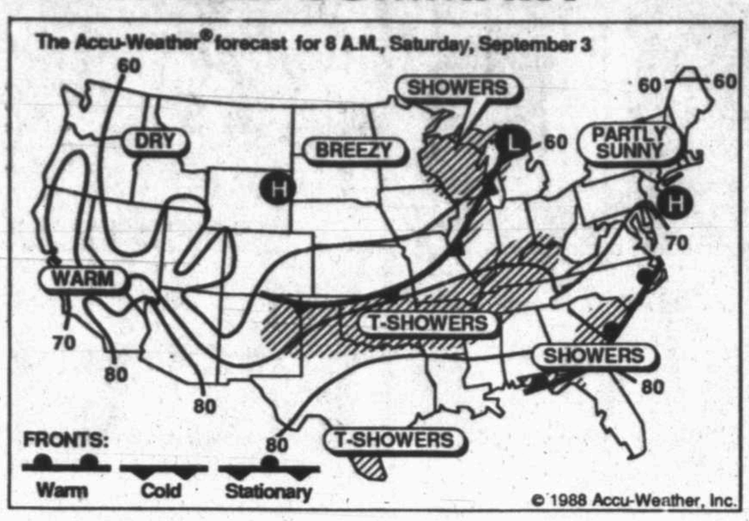
WEATHER SUMMARY



STORMS

FM 307 at I-20 was deluged this morning, prompting Texas Department of Public Safety officials to shut it down, said spokesman Jimmy Rhoads, adding however, "it doesn't take a whole lot of rain for it to close."

Standing water in the areas of Golf Course Road, Andrews Highway and Scharbauer Drive hindered morning drivers, White said.

No flash-flood watches were issued for Midland-Odessa, Nunan said, although that was the case in Amarillo and much of the Panhandle Thursday night.

Skies should clear for Labor Day festivities, but not until Saturday afternoon, Nunan said.

A 40 percent chance of thunderstorms and heavy rains will continue into the afternoon Saturday, with chances of clearing conditions increasing from then on, Nunan said.

NATION

Downpours in Minnesota increased pressure in storm sewers enough to blow manhole covers off.

Rainfall totaled more than 2 inches across parts of Texas, leaving standing water in Lubbock and water-covered streets in Big Spring and Odessa. In New Mexico, heavy rain caused streams to overflow.

Thunderstorms drenched Ely, Minn., with 3 inches of rain in two hours, leaving basements flooded and streets under water. Though manhole covers popped, the waters rapidly subsided after the storm passed.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered along the Gulf Coast and parts of Georgia, Missouri, Tennessee, Kentucky, Oklahoma, Kansas and Colorado.

Today's forecast called for scattered showers and thunderstorms in Florida, Georgia, Alabama, the Tennessee Valley, the lower Mississippi Valley, Oklahoma, Texas and New Mexico. Similar storms were expected from lower Michigan and Wisconsin into Kansas. Showers should be scattered in northern Maine and norther parts of the upper Great Lakes.

High temperatures were forecast to be in the 70s in the upper Mississippi Valley, parts of the northern Plains and upper Great Lakes, northern Maine, the central and southern Rockies, and along parts of the California coast; in the 90s in Louisiana, Florida, parts of Texas, and the Pacific Northwest; and upwards of 100 degrees in the desert southwest and the inland valleys of California and Oregon. The remainder of the nation should be in the 80s.

The nation's temperatures at 3 a.m. EDT ranged from 41 degrees at Yellowstone, Wyo, to 90 at Yuma, Ariz.

Gunman takes four hostage in bank

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Two gunmen took four people hostage inside a bank this morning, police said.

"Apparently they've broken a window in the back part of the bank this morning and were waiting inside for the employees to come in," said Officer Douglas Anderson.

Police surrounded the single-story granite building, and SWAT team members were posted to either side of the front door of the downtown Third National Bank branch after the hostages were taken about 8 a.m., police said.

Sgt. W.O. Smith said police negotiated with the gunmen by bullhorn at the back of the building. Police had been unable to reach the hostage takers by telephone.

It was not known if the hostages, thought to be three women and a man, had been injured, Anderson said.

The curtains in the building were closed.

"What it boils down to is a give and take, just like any type of negotiation situation," said Anderson. "You give up something to get something."

Bakker's deal for PTL postponed

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — The expected announcement that Jim Bakker had signed papers to regain control of PTL was abruptly postponed today.

PTL's bankruptcy trustee said Thursday Bakker was expected to sign a deal today to pay $165 million to buy back the TV ministry he lost in a sex-and-money scandal, and that the evangelist could be back on the air by Sept. 9.

But a news conference this morning was canceled by a PTL spokeswoman who declined to give her name. She said the contract would not be signed until Tuesday at the earliest.

A source close to the negotiations, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said today a number of points still had to be worked out, including what to do with Heritage Ministries, the newly formed non-profit organization that includes the religious operations of the theme park and TV complex.

The proposed sale of the ministry and its Heritage USA religious theme park would be subject to approval by a federal bankruptcy judge. Bakker's $165 offer, if it is formally submitted, would be larger than other offers for the property.

Bankruptcy trustee M.C. "Red" Benton, who had been expected at the news conference, was not at PTL headquarters today, and had returned home to Winston-Salem, N.C., the spokeswoman said. Calls to his home went unanswered.

A woman in the office of Jim and Tammy Ministries, who declined to give her name, said Bakker was not there and referred questions to his attorney.

Last year, Bakker resigned from PTL and lost his ministerial credentials with the Assemblies of God denomination after revelations about his sexual tryst with church secretary Jessica Hahn and allegations of financial wrongdoing.

Benton and Ryan Hovis, a Bakker attorney, said Thursday the contract would be signed this morning.

Victims of plane crash recalled by kin, friends

DALLAS (AP) — A young couple who had just adopted a young daughter, a newlywed about to celebrate his birthday and an elderly couple exalted for their community work were among the 13 victims remembered the day after the crash of Delta Flight 1141.

The Tarrant County medical examiner positively identified all the victims Thursday morning. All had died of smoke inhalation and some were burned beyond recognition.

While relatives and friends of the 95 people who survived were calling the crash a miracle, loved ones of the 13 victims made funeral arrangements.

The first funeral service for crash victims was scheduled for today for Thelma and Philip Vogel of Dallas. The couple dedicated their lives to philanthropic ventures.

Mrs. Vogel, 67, was the founder of the Dallas Jewish Coalition for the Homeless. The agency, which brought together more than 25 Jewish organizations in the city, raised about $200,000 to renovate a downtown building to pr vide a day-care center for children of the homeless.

Philip Vogel, 69, a certified public accountant, was a past president of the Jewish Community Center and a member of several Jewish organizations.

Dallas Mayor Annette Strauss, who worked to get the shelter open, said she was saddened to hear of the Vogels' deaths. "They were just real fine people and they both did a lot of good for the community," Strauss said.

A funeral for the couple was scheduled at 1 p.m. today at Shearith Israel in Dallas.

One of the victims, Jerry Scott Owen, had recently accepted a new job. The 29-year-old Sanger resident and his second wife Linda Corbitt Owen, were to celebrate their first anniversary in November.

"There was tremendous opportunity for a man of his potential," said Richard Stevenson, a vice president of Chicago-based Waste Management, Owen's employer. "He seemed very sincere...very religious and soft-spoken."

Barbara and Patrick Morgan of Richardson were high school sweethearts in Eugene, Ore., and married in 1980.

The two were flying with their adopted daughter to visit friends in Missoula, Mont. when they died Wednesday. "He was just a number one citizen," said Morgan's stepfather, Pat Nelson of Eugene, Ore.

Funeral services for the family were scheduled for 3 p.m. Saturday in Roseburg, Ore., 70 miles south of Eugene.

Frank and Jean Nix and Edmond Fadal had all gotten out of the plane before they realized that Marian Fadal was still trapped in the blazing fuselage, a Fadal relative said. Fadal, suffering serious burns, tried to reenter the plane to save his wife, but was restrained by Nix because of the intense heat and smoke.

Mrs. Fadal, 65, died in the crash. Fadal, 63, was listed in critical condition Thursday with burns over 55 percent of his body. Frank Nix, 66, and Jean Nix, 54, were both listed in fair condition.

Funeral services were scheduled for 2 p.m. Saturday in Waco.

Also killed in the crash was Miller Browne, 55, of Dallas, who was on his way to a vacation in Montana. "He loved to fly; it didn't bother him at all," Evan Browne said of his father.

Glenn and Jennifer Campbell, of Joshua, were on the way to Montana to visit his sister. "Yesterday was so awful, not knowing," said Krista Howell, who worked with Mrs. Campbell. "Today, we've all just been wandering around. We are just...We just can't believe it."

POLAND

Workers at the Stalowa Wola steel mill in southern Poland began leaving the plant at 7 p.m. Thursday after receiving a telephone appeal from Walesa and a message from the Roman Catholic episcopate, a strike committee spokeswoman said.

At least 3,000 strikers were in the Lenin shipyard on Thursday in Gdansk, where Walesa works as an electrician. They hoisted Solidarity banners as members of their strike committee led them out.

Eight years ago, Walesa led a strike there that gave birth to Solidarity.

Poland's communist authorities recognized Solidarity in an agreement signed Aug. 31, 1980 but declared martial law in December 1981 to suppress the first independent union in the Soviet bloc. Solidarity was officially outlawed in 1982.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban praised Walesa's efforts to end the labor unrest.

Several people voiced fear of retaliation. A few said the large number of open vacant homes in the area gave the rapist places to duck away from police patrols, and one woman complained that police waited too long to go public.

"I don't think the police are doing enough," said 19-year-old Rhonda Jeffrie. "I think it's going to come down to a citizen getting him.

"Are they (police) taking too long to get there or what?"

Ms. Jeffrie, who lives with her sister, said police also may have become too eager to catch the rapist, while other crimes — and criminals — are ignored.

"Are they so desperate for this person that if he rapes tonight, they'll blame him for everything?" she asked.

Kay Scott, who lives in her east side home with her two children and three dogs, said she was happy with the police effort.

"I was concerned, I wanted to learn as much information as I could," she said. "At first I didn't take it seriously, but the more I heard, I got concerned."

The rapist is the talk of the east side, Ms. Scott said.

In one of the lighter moments of the night, one woman wondered aloud how far inside her home the rapist had to be before she could shoot him.

"If you kill him," Lt. Compton told her, "we'll come out and wish him luck in his future endeavors."

Czech also warned the crowd that the rapist uses only a screwdriver to break into homes, and he urged them to "make sure your doors (and windows) lock well."

Sgt. Lalo Camarillo of the crime prevention unit also attended the meeting, and told the group that police routinely perform free home security surveys.

"Just call us, and we will come out and look at your locks, your windows and doors, to make them as secure as we can," Camarillo said.

Increased patrols, continued use of undercover officers, and information from citizens will be the factors that catch the rapist, according to police.

But many in the crowd said they felt differently.

"I believe he is going to break in on the wrong person," said Patricia Moore, 22. "And then he is going to get it."

"Just before the crash, there was some talk of engine problems," Judd added, according to the Times, which attributed Judd's statement Wednesday to an anonymous source.

Judd and the two other members of the cockpit crew remained hospitalized today. Investigators said they had not recovered sufficiently to undergo full-scale debriefings, but that they hoped to interview First Officer Wilson Kirkland today.

Control tower personnel said the jet may have taken longer than usual to become airborne and that it may have lifted off at a sharper angle than is considered normal, the investigators said.

"Obviously, one of the questions that we will be trying to get an answer to is why the airplane did not lift off the runway until about 8,500 to 9,000 feet down the runway...It was too long a distance for a runway takeoff," said Dickinson, noting that the plane should have begun to take off between 5,500 feet and 6,000 feet.

Dickinson said investigators also received maintenance records on the plane Thursday.

The flap handle, on the console between the pilot and the first officer, indicates whether the flaps are in the proper position to provide the lift needed for takeoff. Dickinson said the handle was found in the up position, opposite where it should be for most takeoffs.

But he said the handle could have been pushed into the wrong position by the impact or during the evacuation of the crew.

"It could have been kicked. It could have been moved. It could have been any number of things," Dickinson said.

Flight crews of nearby planes told investigators they had "no clear indication of the flap or slat positions," he said.

Federal investigators determined that the flaps and slats of a Northwest Airlines MD-80 were not properly set for takeoff when that plane crashed Aug. 16, 1987, at Detroit Metropolitan airport, killing 156 people.

But in Washington today, U.S. Transportation Secretary James Burnley also said the evacuation of the flaming aircraft through the cockpit made it "entirely possible that that handle got moved in some fashion. We don't know.

"It's the kind of thing where you've got to be very skeptical and suspicious of the preliminary indications," Burnley told reporters.

"Obviously as we saw in the terrible crash in Detroit a year ago, if you don't have your flaps extended properly it makes all the difference in the plane's ability to take off. So, it is a relevant issue. But again, I would not jump to any premature conclusions."

Earlier, Dickinson told reporters the crew was warned of trouble by the "stick shaker," which rattles the jet's steering mechanism when a problem develops.

"This indicates the plane may be approaching a point where it won't be able to fly," he said. "Shortly after that, there was some conversation about an engine problem."

But he stressed that the warning could have stemmed from something besides an engine problem.

Dickinson said none of the jet's three rear-mounted engines showed signs of external damage, including the right one, which wound up separated from the fuselage.

"It is possible for an engine...to belch out the rear something that would look to people like fire and smoke and yet to have no visible damage," said Bernard Loeb, deputy director of the NTSB's bureau of accident investigation.

All three of the JT-8D engines eventually will be removed and examined by their manufacturer, Pratt & Whitney of Hartford, Conn.

The same flight Thursday from Dallas-Fort Worth to Salt Lake City was aborted when the pilot detected a problem with his plane, another Boeing 727. Most of the 102 passengers, including six survivors of the crash Wednesday, left about two hours later on another jet, Delta said.

ABORT

Thursday's flight carried 102 passengers plus a crew of seven, according to Delta spokesman Henry Conley in Dallas. Conley said that to his knowledge, all on board the aborted flight got on a replacement plane. The flight, scheduled to depart at 8:31 a.m., finally left Dallas at 10:42 a.m.

Although officials said those aboard were never in any danger, passengers waiting to board the replacement plane appeared shaken.

"It was a routine take off until we got almost to the end of the runway," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Don Burkhalter of Jackson, Miss., where the flight originated. "Then we heard what sounded like bumps and the pilot decelerated. He said there was a problem with the 'compressors,'" Burkhalter said.

"The captain said, and this is a quote, 'It's just one of those things.' We just laughed."

It was a nervous laughter, said Burkhalter, who was on his way to Fresno, Calif., with his wife.

"The captain feels that he had what is called a compressor stall," said Delta spokesman Bill Berry from the airline's Atlanta headquarters. "There was a crosswind blowing across the runway. That can interrupt the smoothness of the airflow that goes into the engine, creating a temporary loss of power. That is very likely what happened."

Under normal circumstances, a pilot would "simply increase thrust to see if everything continued to perform right. But based on the incident that happened yesterday, the captain was extremely cautious and elected simply to come back to the gate and let maintenance look at the engine," Berry said.

On any day, he emphasized, captains "have got to go by their years of experience. If they don't like what they feel, if they've just got a gut feeling, it's their responsibility not to do anything."

Delta declined to release the name of the pilot.

"When he (the pilot) said 'Get your bags and get off,' it didn't take me long," said G.W. Estelle of Baton Rouge.

"We didn't think anything about taking the plane at first, but when they said they had a problem...I was proud to get off," he said.

Waiting to board Thursday's flight — before it was aborted — a survivor from Wednesday's crash talked of the difficulty in lining up to get on Flight 1141 a day after.

"It's pretty hard," said Ronald Black, 30, of West Monroe, La. "You've got to do it sometime. Can't live in Dallas. I've either got to go home or go hunting. I've gotta fly either way, so I might as well go hunting."

Burkhalter said the two survivors from Thursday's flight he talked to appeared relatively calm, although one said "he was a little nervous," Burkhalter said.

George Snelling, 30, of Dallas, missed Wednesday's flight because of a faulty alarm clock.

Waiting to board the same flight Thursday Snelling said, "I'm a little apprehensive, but when the time's up it's up and I would have been on the plane yesterday," he said.

Snelling added, "Statistically, I feel like I've got a better chance on this plane than any in the last seven or eight years."

Ms. Johnson said the Federal Aviation Administration would not investigate the aborted takeoff and it would not need to be investigated internally.

Computer crash halts astronauts' simulated shuttle flight mission

STATE

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — A simulated shuttle mission designed to test the Discovery astronauts' trouble-shooting skills was halted just before a mock landing because of a real-life computer crash.

The five astronauts were preparing to end their 56-hour mission Thursday afternoon by simulating a shuttle landing with a flat tire when the computer crash cut the rehearsal short.

"I'm sure they'll be looking at it to see why it went down, but nobody here considers it to be a big problem that the simulation ended early," said NASA Johnson Space Center spokesman James Hartsfield.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials stressed that there was no problem with any kind of computer used in actual flight control.

JSC officials said the Discovery crew handled all the simulated problems posed to them during a dress rehearsal for the first shuttle flight since the Challenger explosion 2½ years ago.

Discovery's launch is slated for late September or early October, although NASA has not yet set an exact date.

The 56-hour mock mission began about an hour late Tuesday morning because of an earlier problem with the shuttle simulator.

But other glitches faced by the Discovery crew were intentional, as commander Rick Hauck, pilot Richard Covey and mission specialists David Hilmers, Mike Lounge and George Nelson were placed in situations designed to test their ability to solve a multitude of problems that could encounter on an actual mission.

Shortly after launch Tuesday, the astronauts were forced to alter their course and enter a low orbit after NASA trainers staged a main engine failure.

On Wednesday, Nelson and Lounge had to go outside the orbiter to fix a stuck tilt-table needed to deploy a $100 million communications satellite. That simulation was done in a water tank, spokeswoman Barbara Selby said.

Houston firefighters and emergency personnel lift a construction worker from the site of a trench cave-in which killed his co-worker.

One man dies, another rescued from cave-in HOUSTON (AP) — Firefighters rescued a man who was buried up to his neck in dirt after more than five hours of digging, but they were unable to get to a second man in time to save him.

The two men were trapped about 20 feet below the ground Thursday afternoon when a trench they were working in caved in, authorities said. The cave in occurred at about 1:30 p.m. near the Galleria in west Houston, and the first man wasn't pulled safely from the trench until shortly after 7 p.m.

Authorities said the 51-year-old dead man was found later Thursday. His name had not yet been released.

Dozens of people who had gathered at the cave-in site near the city's busy Westheimer street cheered when firefighters rescued the first man. He was then rushed to a local hospital and authorities said he was in good condition.

The 46-year-old man, who had been talking to firefighters throughout the ordeal, needed some assistance when he climbed a ladder out of the caved-in trench.

Firefighters' efforts to free both men were hampered by wet ground that threatened to cause other cave ins.

Deputy says he feared sheriff's revenge

SHERMAN (AP) — A former Orange County deputy has testified that he did not tell other authorities about now suspended Sheriff James Wade's involvement in a drug laboratory because he feared he would wind "in the bottom of the Sabine River."

Former deputy Donald Duhon gave the testimony Thursday in Wade's drug conspiracy trial. The trial was moved from Orange County to Sherman because of extensive pre-trial publicity.

Duhon testified that Wade gave him marijuana and told him about being involved in a methamphetamine laboratory operation. Duhon, 30, also said he and Wade had a "very close" relationship and that Wade arranged for him to get an apartment, with Wade keeping a key.

Some evenings at the apartment "James Wade would be there. He'd have supper cooked," Duhon testified.

Wade, 43, is on trial for a 10-count federal indictment that includes conspiracy to make and sell drugs and embezzlement from the county's drug investigation fund.

Donnie Flowers, 27, is named in the indictment as one of three unindicted co-conspirators.

The former deputy testified that Wade introduced him to Flowers and told him about a methamphetamine laboratory operation he had with Flowers. Wade described the lab as a good way to make money, Duhon told the jury.

Duhon, who said he resigned from the department in January after the FBI investigation of Wade began, testified he didn't report Wade's involvement with drugs to other authorities because he was scared.

"I was afraid if I ever said anything, I would end up in the bottom of the Sabine River," he told the jury.

Duhon also testified that Wade helped him get a job as a deputy and vouched for him to be exccused from taking a drug detection test at a physical examination after he told Wade he had smoked marijuana.

After being hired as a jailer on Jan. 27, 1987, Duhon said he did not actually work as a jailer and was promoted to deputy about two weeks later.

"I spent a lot of time with the sheriff running errands," he said.

Duhon said he became crime prevention officer, organizing neighborhood crime watch programs, speaking to school groups and working as department spokesman with the news media.

U.S. District Judge Howell Cobb excused the jury for the Labor Day holiday until Tuesday morning.

Prosecutors to appeal dismissals

LUFKIN (AP) — Prosecutors plan to appeal a court's decision to clear three Sabine County lawmen of murder charges in the alleged beating death of a jail inmate arrested Christmas night.

The 12th District Court of Appeals dismissed the indictments Wednesday against Hemphill Police Chief Thomas Ladner, 41, and Sabine County Sheriff's deputies Bill R. Horton, 58, and James M. "Bo" Hyden, 35, ruling that the charges against them constituted double jeopardy.

The three were acquitted July 15 in Hemphill of violating the civil rights of Loyal Garner of Florien, La., but the Smith County district attorney's office filed murder charges against them because Garner died in a Tyler hospital.

"It was certainly a disappointment to us here," District Attorney Jack Skeen said of Wednesday's dismissal. "We thought that we would be able to try the murder cases here in Smith County."

Skeen said he plans to appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin.

The Tyler appellate court decision reverses a July ruling by 241st District Judge Joe Tunnell dismissing claims made by the defendants that a second trial would constitute double jeopardy. Tunnell ruled that the acquittal did not exempt the lawmen from murder charges and ordered them to stand trial.

"Of course I'm very pleased to hear about the decision," John Seale, Ladner's attorney, said Thursday. "I talked with my client this morning and I'm very happy for him and his family."

About 1,000 Dallas residents protest movie

DALLAS (AP) — The first Dallas showings of "The Last Temptation of Christ" attracted about 1,000 Christian protestors to the soldout movies.

"They're a pretty good group of people," said Dallas Police Sgt. Ray Beaudreault, in charge of a tactical squad at the AMC Prestonwood 5 Theater in far North Dallas, where the show began Wednesday.

"They had opposing viewpoints," he said. "It's just democracy in action."

The Christian protestors were met by a smaller group of demonstrators protesting them.

A beefed-up private security force helped Beaudreault and nine other Dallas police officers make sure nothing got out of hand. Police reported no incidents.

The vast majority of the protesters, including a group of several hundred people from Christ for the Nations church, located in the Dallas neighborhood of Oak Cliff, were opposed to the film.

Russ Houck, a talk show host on an area Christian radio station, said: "It (the protest) allowed people to stand up for him (Jesus). It allowed the people who produced this kind of trash to realize we're not going to take it anymore."

The movie opened last month in Austin and Houston, where it was also met with protests.

Gov. Michael Dukakis is given a pin by Irving Hemmingway, who is dressed as Uncle Sam, during a campaign visit to San Jose, Calif., Thursday.

Ex-campaign manager back in Dukakis camp

Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis, trying to regain momentum for his presidential campaign, today planned to bring back into his campaign staff the campaign manager who admitted helping torpedo the campaign of party rival Joe Biden, a campaign source said.

A Dukakis campaign source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Dukakis plans to announce that former campaign manager John Sasso will return to the campaign as vice chairman.

Sasso, who engineered Dukakis's successful campaign to recapture the Massachusetts governorship after a term out of office, directed Dukakis' presidential campaign until resigning in September 1987.

The resignation came after Sasso admitted he had circulated to reporters a videotape demonstrating Biden had borrowed, without attribution, deeply personal remarks of a British politician, Neil Kinnock. Only two days earlier Dukakis had said he had been assured none of his campaign staff members was the source of the videotape.

Sasso's return was described by the campaign source as "just strengthening the team." But it was certain to be viewed as an acknowledgment that Dukakis' campaign — which has been criticized as seeming to flounder in recent weeks — is in need of help.

Meanwhile, both Dukakis and Republican nominee George Bush took advantage of the timely concerns — the opening of school and a summer haunted by the specter of waste-strewn shorelines — to go after voters before the official Labor Day opening of the campaign season.

"While they've invested billions in Star Wars, we've developed a regional network of star schools," Dukakis said Thursday in California while contrasting his achievements as Massachusetts governor with the inaction of the Reagan administration.

"Where was the man who now says he wants to be the 'education president'?" Dukakis said in Oakland. "He was playing hooky. He was nowhere to be found."

He charged the Reagan administration has eliminated remedial math and reading programs for 500,000 poor children, cut teacher retraining, and "led an assault on college loans and grants."

He said that in Massachusetts he had quadrupled scholarship assistance to low- and middle-income students and invested in Professional Development Centers to help teachers update their skills.

The Reagan administration sought cuts in the remedial programs in 1981 but was unsuccessful. In an April 1988 report, the Education Department said the number of children in remedial programs had dropped from 5 million in 1979-80 to 4.5 million in the 1985-86 school year.

Dukakis was planning to continue that emphasis during appearances today in Portland, Ore., and Spokane, Wash., as he courts the Reagan Democrats — Democrats who voted Republican in the 1980 and 1984 presidential elections.

Bush, after a rally Thursday into Dukakis' backyard, where he charged the governor failed to act swiftly against pollution in Boston Harbor, continued his campaign as a "lifelong environmentalist" on the Delaware and New Jersey shores. Dukakis called Bush's newfound commitment an "election-year conversion."

Bush also criticized Dukakis for promising to end the dumping that has left medical waste cluttering New Jersey beaches, when Dukakis himself as governor asked for federal permission to dump waste off New Jersey.

"The stealth candidate is at it again, making promises on one hand but hiding his secret record on the other," Bush said.

The 1985 Massachusetts request to the EPA was for temporary permission to dump 106 miles offshore where New York and New Jersey were dumping already. A compromise arrangement allowed Massachusetts to dump farther out beyond the continental shelf.

Speaking in Norwalk, Conn., Bush called himself a "Teddy Roosevelt Republican" on the environment. Roosevelt was an avid conservationist responsible for setting aside millions of acres of forests and launching irrigation and reclamation projects.

Aware that Republicans and the Reagan administration in particular are a target of unrelenting criticism by environmental groups, Bush declared nonetheless, "We're not going to give this constituency away to the Democrats."

Bush's incursion in Massachusetts was more than physical. A Boston Herald poll released published Thursday showed he and Dukakis to be neck and neck in Massachusetts. "Fantastic," Bush said, when given the news.

The Herald survey found Dukakis and Bush tied in the state at 42 percent each. The poll of 400 likely voters conducted Wednesday had a five percentage point margin of error.

California Guard copter crashes, killing crew of six

BARSTOW, Calif. (AP) — A California Air National Guard helicopter on a training exercise crashed and burned on a ridge of a Mojave Desert mountain range, killing all six crew members, authorities said.

The crew of the HH-3 search-and-rescue helicopter that went down Thursday was made up of four Guardsmen and two Air Force officers on a training mission from George Air Force Base, said Sgt. 1st Class Carolyn Hamilton, spokeswoman at National Guard headquarters in Sacramento.

"We do not know the cause of the crash. That is being investigated," said Air Force Tech. Sgt. Jorge Caballero.

The helicopter was from the 129th Air Rescue and Recovery Group based at Moffett Naval Air Station, about 35 miles south of San Francisco, and was participating in a training exercise at George when it went down, Ms. Hamilton said.

The helicopter was almost obliterated by the crash and fire, authorities said.

The Air Force officers were identified as 1st Lt. James R. Dooley and 1st Lt. Patrick L. Henry, both of the 27th Tactical Air Support Squadron, said Air Force Sgt. Sarah Hood. Hometowns and ages were unavailable.

Names of the other victims were withheld for notification of relatives.

The helicopter, a craft called a "Jolly Green Giant" with a capacity of 25 passengers and 16 litters or 5,000 pounds of cargo, picked up the Air Force crewmen at George for search and rescue training, Caballero said.

The crash site was about about 30 miles northeast of the base and 18 miles southeast of Barstow in the Cinder Cone region of the Rodman Mountains, said San Bernardino County sheriff's spokesman Jim Bryant. Barstow is 95 miles northeast of Los Angeles.

Burned Yellowstone Forest

Over 550,000 acres in Yellowstone National Park have been affected by 52 different fires that have started during the summer. Only about half of the vegetation has burned within most fire perimeters. The sizes and shapes of the fires are estimates.

Residents of town near park flee 'slop-over' fire

Associated Press

Residents of a tourist town outside Yellowstone National Park fled overnight as a "slop-over" wildfire moved to within 1½ miles. Elsewhere in the West, campers were barred from the woods as the Labor Day weekend opened.

Wildfires also burned over hundreds of thousands of acres in California, Idaho, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Wyoming.

In West Yellowstone, Mont., residents and tourists filled their gas tanks as flames to the west lit up the sky with an orange glow Thursday night.

"There are some pretty nervous people, no question about that," said Dawn Whitman, a gas station owner.

The threat came from a quarter- to half-acre "slop-over" of a 109,100-acre fire inside the park. As the flames progressed, residents watched smoke billow high into the air. Explosions periodically shook buildings.

Earlier Thursday, Yellowstone's south gate reopened for the first time in almost two weeks, leaving all park entrances and roads open.

In eastern Oregon, recreational users were banned from 3.8 million acres of state-protected land beginning today. Already closed are 2.8 million acres in western Oregon.

In Idaho, lighter wind allowed firefighters breathing room on the worst of 17 blazes, but activities were restricted in several forests over the Labor Day weekend. Tight controls also were placed on campfires in Washington state.

"It's like sitting on a time bomb," said Scott Phillips, recreation officer for the Sawtooth National Recreation Area in central Idaho. "If we can get through this weekend without a conflagration, it will be a miracle."

Progress was reported on two other major series of fires in northeast Washington, but the forecast was for hot and dry weather over the weekend, and U.S. Forest Service spokesman Paul Hart said, "All these fires are real worries because any one of them can blow up."

Crews battling five forest fires in California's mountain ranges hoped to contain the blazes by today, but forest fire danger will remain high throughout the holiday weekend, they predicted.

Despite tinder-dry conditions, this year's fires have been much smaller than last year's because there haven't been strong winds.

Harley Greiman of the U.S. Forest Service warned, however, that more lightning and temperatures in the 90s in the mountains are expected during the Labor Day weekend, adding to the danger.

'Gung-ho' Navy officer acquitted of charges in death of rescue trainee

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — A "gung-ho" Navy lieutenant accused of dereliction of duty in the drowning of a rescue-swimmer trainee was acquitted in the court-martial he sought in an effort to exonerate himself.

"All I can say is the military (justice) system worked," a smiling Lt. Thomas Torchia said after the verdict Thursday night. "The system that charged me found me innocent."

A four-officer panel found the 32-year-old Princeton, Ill., man innocent of two counts of dereliction of duty after deliberating 3½ hours in the weeklong trial.

Torchia was in charge of the Navy Rescue Swimmer School at the Pensacola Naval Air Station when Airman Recruit Lee Mirecki, 19, of Appleton, Wis., died March 2 in a training pool.

Instructors threw a panic-stricken Mirecki back into the pool after he climbed out and shouted that he wanted to quit the voluntary training, witnesses said.

Mirecki, who had a phobia about being pulled under water, suffered a fear-induced heart attack before drowning, a Navy pathologist testified in Torchia's trial.

A panel may be selected today for the court-martial of a second defendant, Petty Officer 2nd Class Michael Combe, 28, of Tempe, Ariz., who is accused of holding Mirecki's head under water. He faces more serious charges of involuntary manslaughter, battery and conspiracy to commit battery.

Torchia had been offered unspecified non-judicial punishment, but turned it down and sought the court-martial in an effort to clear his name.

If convicted, he could have been fined two months' pay, been reprimanded and lost seniority for promotion. The penalty would have put Torchia's career on the line, said a defense lawyer, retired Navy Capt. Ferdinand Salomon.

Torchia said he plans to stay in the Navy, and expects a new assignment soon as an aviation maintenance officer.

Torchia, whom a prosecutor described as a "gung-ho rescue swimmer," said he hoped the highly publicized Mirecki case hadn't caused people to lose faith in Navy training, which he called the best in the world.

NATION IN BRIEF

Court won't halt fines

YONKERS, N.Y. (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court has refused to halt mounting daily fines against the city for blocking a federal housing desegregation plan, a decision the mayor says could cause Yonkers "to plummet to bankruptcy."

But in a ruling issued Thursday night, the court temporarily spared the four city councilmen who oppose the plan from going to jail until they have time to ask formally that their cases be fully reviewed, U.S. Supreme Court spokeswoman Toni House said.

The justices stayed a lower court ruling that had upheld contempt citations against the four councilmen, who had faced a resumption of $500-a-day fines and the start of jail terms this weekend.

The city's fines for failing to comply with the desegregation order were put on hold until today, pending the Supreme Court's ruling. The fines will now resume against the city, Yonkers Mayor Nicholas Wasicsko said.

The fines started Aug. 2 at $100 and doubled daily. The city had paid $12,700 before receiving its first stay from an appeals court, which upheld the contempt finding last Friday but granted an additional one-week stay. It also capped the city's fines at $1 million a day.

Vets' group knocks study

CHICAGO (AP) — A veterans group criticized a new report by the federal Centers for Disease Control that suggests most Vietnam GIs escaped heavy exposure to the poison dioxin, unless they handled the herbicide Agent Orange.

"This study seems to be pretty much the same data that was released a year ago, only a year ago it was portrayed rather differently," said Barry Kasinitz, a spokesman for the 35,000-member Vietnam Veterans of America.

The CDC last year concluded that exposure to dioxin could not be determined using military records of troop locations and spraying of Agent Orange, which contained the deadly poison.

"Now...they are jumping to the conclusion that very few people were exposed," Kasinitz said.

Give trails back to campers, hikers

The National Park Service may finally be prepared to admit that people weren't meant to share hiking trails with all-terrain vehicles — those overgrown motorbikes that come with three or four wheels and a built-in animosity for the environment. It's not just the incessant racket with which these infernal machines destroy the serenity that most people come to the parks to find. And it's not the obvious danger to innocent hikers that comes from putting unlicensed drivers of all ages from preschoolers on up behind the throttle of several hundred pounds of steel and rubber.

What has the park rangers ready to give up on their attempts at peaceful coexistence with the ATVs is a matter of economics. In the Northwest, federal fisheries experts report that ATV riders splashing down scenic mountain streams have torn up the salmon beds and done millions of dollars worth of damage to the annual harvest of the commercial fishing industry. The Sierra Club estimates that for every mile a single ATV travels in fragile desert environment, it dislodges 3.3 tons of topsoil, thereby increasing the potential for erosion and disrupting natural vegetation that may take a hundred years or more to recover.

Overall, the U.S. Geological Survey concludes that ATVs are far more destructive to public lands than strip mining. At least strip miners, the USGS points out, are required to restore the resources they damage.

Spokesmen for the ATV manufacturers acknowledge the destruction but argue that it's just a few "idiots" who are giving all ATV users a bad name. But even if that's so, park officials contend that they wouldn't be able to stop the worst kinds of abuse if they had double the current number of rangers patrolling the backwoods. Besides, the managers point out, as a practical matter it doesn't make sense to spend a lot of time and money trying to enforce the rules on ATVs when the maximum fine a violator will ever have to pay is only $500.

Although ATVs are generally allowed on most public lands that are open for recreation, they are banned in wilderness areas. Some congressmen, therefore, suggest that the way to control ATVs is to expand the wilderness areas. Converting parklands and other federal properties currently under the administration of the Bureau of Land Management to wilderness, however, is a time-consuming and often politically difficult task. And once the land has been set aside as wilderness, it's also closed for other productive uses such as grazing or mineral extraction. As a result, trying to attack the problem that way just amounts to letting the ATVs spoil things for everyone else.

There is, of course, a simpler solution: Ban the machines from all the parks.

Uncle Sam should collect war debts

WASHINGTON — By collecting some aging IOUs, the U.S. government could shrink the budget deficit by half, without raising taxes or cutting spending.

Jack Anderson

All it would have to do is reopen old war wounds, some dating as far back as World War I.

The United States is owed a gargantuan $91 billion in debts from foreign countries — ones that are unlikely to ever be fully recovered. That breaks down to $27.4 billion arising from World War I, $1.2 billion from World War II and $62.4 billion from the post World War II period, according to an unreleased report prepared by the Congressional Research Service. Our associate, Michael Binstein, has seen that report. The figures are current up to 1984, which is the most recent comprehensive accounting of the debt. It has undoubtedly grown since then.

Foreign governments borrowed $12.4 billion from the United States during World War I. Accrued interest on those loans is $17.8 billion for a total debt of $30.2 billion from that war. But some of the debtors have made payments amounting to $2.8 billion, leaving $27.4 billion still owed and most of it delinquent. The countries which have fully repaid their World War I debt are Cuba, Finland, Greece and Liberia.

The billion-dollar deadbeats from World War I include this country's best friends.

The nations owing us the most are Great Britain ($12.5 billion), France ($9.1 billion) and Italy ($2.7 billion.) Germany's World War I reparations to the other allied nations of $2.2 billion is as politically charged as the war itself.

The National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Policies summarizes the problem. Germany's repayment is tied to the problem of war reparations — the money Germany owes other countries for damage done during the war — and to other debts owed between European countries stemming from the war. The amount was dictated by the victorious nations in the Treaty of Versailles. Seventy years later, the issue of German war reparations remains unsettled, and many European countries say they won't make their payments on war debt to the United States until it is settled, since they had intended to use their reparations from Germany to pay back the United States. The United States never believed that there was a connection — they figured countries should pay their debts regardless — but that didn't convince the Europeans.

The Lend-Lease Act of 1941 gave the president the power to assist another country in its defense, if the defense seemed vital to U.S. security. That act is the source of most of the World War II debt. The borrowers have said the United States implied that the assistance was its contribution to the war and would not have to be repaid. The net value of lend-lease assistance amounted to more than $40 billion. Five countries owe about 97 percent of the $1.2 billion that remains unpaid. They are the Soviet Union ($678.8 million), Great Britain ($325.5 million), China ($116.1 million), Indonesia ($26.4 million) and Iran ($23.3 million).

A quick glance at that list shows that some of the countries are no longer bosom buddies with the United States and some are in no position to pay.

Since World War II, the bulk of foreign debt can be blamed on military assistance, non-military foreign aid and trade financing. Debt stemming from the Export-Import Bank Act, the various foreign assistance acts, the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act, the Commodity Credit Corporation and other small programs amounts to more than $62 billion.

The five biggest foreign welfare cases have been Israel, Egypt, Turkey, India and Pakistan. The debts range from Israel's $8.5 billion to Pakistan's $1.9 billion. Together, those five nations account for about 62.3 percent of the $33.4 billion of the principal owed under the various foreign assistance legislation.

America has been a generous banker to the world but has not been a very thorough collection agent, especially when extraordinary political circumstances get in the way. For that reason, the government will always find it easier to go back to the taxpayers for more rather than lean on foreign countries to pay their debts.

ON SECOND THOUGHT — Worried U.S. officials are taking a second look at what they thought was a harmless, bloodless coup attempt in Guatemala last May. At first U.S. intelligence analysts thought only two of the 84 units in the Guatemalan army had staged the coup and were led only by disgruntled junior officers. Now, our sources say, more units were involved and Guatemalan President Vinicio Cerezo Arevalo may have made the situation worse by his response. Cerezo insulted the military by calling it a labor union. He also hesitated to punish the people who plotted the coup, which gave his country the impression that he would not stand up to the military. Cerezo didn't make any friends by comparing himself to Chile's Salvador Allende. His people must remember that Allende's socialist government was ended by just such a coup, and that Allende killed himself as a result. Cerezo's response did little to boost his stock with the military and the important private sector.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The fuss surrounding Dan Quayle's service in the National Guard dredged up an ugly side of American political advertising — the practice of telling the voters something that is "accurate" without telling the whole truth. Quayle's 1980 Senate campaign featured a brochure which, to the average reader, implied that Quayle's National Guard unit had been called up for heroic active duty. That active duty, it turns out, was basic training and the annual two-week summer stint all guard members do. Quayle's 1980 campaign manager defended the brochure. "It is accurate," he told the Washington Post. Sure, it's accurate, just like car dealers are accurate and vacuum cleaner salesmen are accurate. But the smart buyer looks beyond accuracy for integrity. It's too bad the buyer has to beware when shopping for a statesman, too.

Koch New York's gourmet hot dog!

NEW YORK — Mayor Ed Koch is our most celebrated hot dog.

When Jesse Jackson met Koch at their summit here, the preacher knew he had met his match — an oldtime revivalist of poetic rhyme mixed with rapid-fire political satire.

Every day, His Honor serves up life and politics with a relish unequaled almost anywhere. His opinions spice up every sleepy Monday with fried-onion comments on hosts of issues. On Tuesday, he adds a string of sauerkraut with his fun-on-a-bun street-corner New Yorkese. He scrapes up only mayo on bland Wednesdays but pops up with peppery political potshots each tempestuous Thursday. On Friday, when he's really hot, Koch serves up jumbo dogs with the works.

In the immortal words of orchestra leader Lawrence Welk, I think he's "wunnerful, wunnerful!"

A lot of New Yorkers don't share my sweet smell of burning political comment on awakening each morning. But I already know that the three-term sage of south Manhattan will make my day. Because the mayor has a bigger mouth than George Steinbrenner, the mighty-mouth owner of the New York Yankees, and Donald Trump, the motor-mouth of New York's fast-buck crowd.

Who would call the Rev. Jesse Jackson a liar and a coward? And then tell his fellow New York Jews: "You'd have to be nuts to vote for him!" Hundreds of thousands of black voters gagged.

"Crazy Eddie!" that's who. Not the "Crazy Eddie" of hot merchandising deals but the bachelor mayor of our Gracie Mansion.

Harlem Rep. Charlie Rangel took offense. The black veteran of two decades in Congress said he might run against the bald eagle. Hizzoner called Rangel a Teflon tiger and challenged:

"Put your energy where your mouth is. I'm fed up. Run, Charlie, run!"

How can anyone knock a guy like Koch? He's the best play on or off Broadway. I rock and roll with laughter sitting down.

When I finally stopped laughing, up comes the mayor with more relish. Like when he pushed hundreds of mini-meal and other pushcarts off many Manhattan street corners. Hizzoner said they made the city look like the Middle East.

Koch finally backed down when the pushcart owners one-upped him by saying: "First, crack down on the corner crack sellers."

The mayor proposed a typical New York solution for each spot — a lottery. He finally settled for first-come, first-to-serve.

The Lord Mayor then blew town. He went to northern Ireland with John Cardinal O'Connor to pray for peace in Ulster. The result of his mission was war in New York.

With the bravado of the best Irish blarney, Eddie blasted British rule before Ireland's Catholics. Later, his feet firmly planted in London, Koch claimed British troops were peacemakers — not an occupying force. New York's Irish compared him to a Good Humor man — playing with too many bells.

It was splendid entertainment. Millions of us loved it. Eddie was a breeze off the rivers in the sizzling summer.

Stung by the Irish, Ed then attacked the city's thousands of beggars. In his finest form, he told New Yorkers: "It's a scam!"

Then, Koch put the squeeze on the squeegee men — the quick-quarter artists who wash windshields while cars wait at Lincoln and other tunnels. He has sent the law to wipe out the squeegies.

Hizzoner is not heartless. He was later moved to sympathy — for the city's trees. When one of them falls to sickness, Koch says he listens. We must save our trees. Ed stood tall.

Then, Koch moved to speed up the closing down of 47 city welfare hotels. He's now looking for apartments for the homeless. It's costing taxpayers $1,800 a month to house a welfare family of four in local hotels. Some 99.7 percent of us can't afford $1,800 a month in rent. A lot of New Yorkers call the program a multi-million-dollar ripoff — and worse. Ed doesn't relish that.

Hizzoner's latest pickle is defending his private chef. It seems the $51,450-a-year culinary craftsman may have been running a private catering business out the kitchen door of the mayor's offical residence. When faced with the heat, the chef quit. But Koch's epicurean eloquence was undaunted:

"I will miss his zucchini — sauteed with garlic and onions, lukewarm or cold, with lots of olive oil."

Now there's a hot dog with gourmet taste.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Sept. 2, the 246th day of 1988. There are 120 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On the morning of Sept. 2, 1945, local time, Japan formally surrendered to the United States in ceremonies aboard the USS Missouri in Tokyo Bay. World War II was over.

On this date:

In 1666, the Great Fire of London broke out. The fire claimed thousands of homes, but only a few lives, in the several days that it burned.

Unpacking old memories makes move better

The only time you really get an idea of just how much stuff you've accumulated over the years is when you unpack after a move.

Grizzard

I've just moved into my new address, and, for days now, all I've done — with more than a little help from a friend — is go through boxes.

It's amazing how many belongings I have I had totally forgotten about.

Like the ashtray I've found. I don't smoke anymore but the ashtray is still a keepsake. It came from the Turquoise Room lounge car that once rolled proudly along on the legendary Super Chief passenger train that ran between Chicago and Los Angeles.

It was the train of the stars, and the Turquoise Room was where they entertained themselves during the two-and-half-day trip.

I've carried on a love affair with passenger trains for years, and a friend saw the ashtray in an antique store and thought of me.

Good friends do that sort of thing.

I found my old God and Country award I received when I was in the Boy Scouts. You had to learn a lot of Scripture by heart, and the old Methodist preacher, long dead now, pinned my award on my shirt one Sunday morning in front of the entire congregation.

It was a proud moment.

I even ran across a tie the Atlanta Braves gave me when I was executive sports editor of the Atlanta Journal in the early '70s.

The Braves gave away 715 of those ties to commemorate Hank Aaron's 715th home run, which broke Babe Ruth's record.

Each tie was numbered. I was given tie number 500.

I recall thinking myself very special for being giving tie number 500.

I also found an old photograph of me with the late Bear Bryant, the legendary Alabama football coach. I was wearing his houndstooth hat in the photograph.

I seem to recall all that had to do with some Jack Daniels the Bear and I got into one afternoon at the Atlanta airport.

I even found my old softball glove (I retired from softball in 1974 in the twilight of a dismal career), a T-shirt that read "Not tonight, dear, I have a deadline," an old Mills Brothers album I hadn't played in years and my high-school yearbook from my freshman year. (I was skinny and my ears poked out.)

I found a quilt my grandmother made for me when I left home. She made the quilt despite arthritic fingers. She was afraid I'd leave home and not have enough covers.

Mommy Willie's been gone a long time. It's hard to believe.

I found an old divorce decree dated 1971. She got the dog.

In another box was a photograph my friend Browny Stephens took of me, his young son, and another friend named Warren Newman after the four of us had successfully canoed the Buffalo River in Arkansas for five days.

We are wet and nasty and unshaven in the photograph, but the trip had been a complete success. Warren didn't turn over with the beer.

Browny's son is grown now, and Warren was killed in an automobile accident not long after the trip.

The boxes are disappearing now and I've found new places for my old stuff, most of which I'll forget about again in a very short time.

But unpacking some old memories was a pleasant enough experience, almost pleasant enough to make me forget how much they charge to move you these days.

Almost.

CHARLEY REESE

Some Jews can't make tough peace choices

A certain sign of immaturity is to desire contradictory goals. For example, a child wants good grades but also wants to avoid studying. A woman wants to lose weight but also wants to keep on eating more calories than she burns. A man wants hard muscles but doesn't want to exercise.

Charley Reese

In nature, no contradictions exist. Unfortunately, many Americans are too immature to abandon the child's habit of wishing for mutually-exclusive goals.

I've noticed some American Jews, for example, who are upset with Israel's tough response to the riots and sabotage on the West Bank. They want an Israel in the place where it is but they want an Israel that is soft and democratic and makes symphonies and great breakthroughs in medicine.

They don't want an Israel which cracks people over the head, shoots them, blows up their houses, sends commando units to assassinate enemies, and maintain one of the toughest armies in the world.

But they can't have both. If Israel is to survive in the place where it is located, then it must have an exceptional army, an efficient and ruthless intelligence service, and politicians courageous enough to act firmly and decisively against the country's enemies.

Given its location and circumstances, Israel has no choice. There are about 2,500 fighter planes which can be over Israel in a timespan between 5 minutes and 20 minutes. The Israelies have just over 600 fighter planes to deal with them. The manpower and the resources of the countries opposed to Israel's existence are for all practical purposes unlimited.

The West Bank is the high ground in Israel and if Israel abandons it without a firm, enforceable peace with neighboring Arab countries, that high ground will be used, as it was prior to 1967, as a launch pad for attacks against the rest of Israel. If Israel does not control the 700,000 Arabs, the West Bank will become what Lebanon is — a murderous state of anarchy.

The choice is quite simple: an Israel tough and hard enough to do what has to be done to survive or no Israel at all.

Many Americans suffer the same unwillingness to pay the proper price for what they want. They want certainly to continue to enjoy the prosperity and comfort that independence and our Constitutional government provide. But they don't want to maintain the armed forces necessary to keep us independent. They don't want to pursue and punish the people inside the country who are working for its destruction. They don't want to dirty their hands with covert actions designed to keep our outer line of defense in friendly hands.

Well, as I said, in nature contradictions do not exist.

We either pay the price required for our continued independence and freedom or we lose them. No one can eat and fast at the same time. No one can survive an attack and be a pacifist at the same time. No one can deter an attack with forces which can't defeat the attacker.

The mature person when he is in the process of deciding what he wants, looks at the price, and in deciding on something, also decides to pay the price. A mentally unhealthy individual will resort to fantasizing and rationalizing in the false belief that his mind-games can have some effect on the reality outside his head.

Fortunately for my own peace of mind, I was brought up not to harbor illusions nor to believe that you can consume and save the same item at the same time.

I harbor no ill feelings toward any other country but if they are a threat, direct or indirect, to the continued independence and freedom of my country I'm perfectly willing to overthrow their governments, bomb them into a molten glass exhibit, or do whatever else is required to preserve my own country.

Life consists of making choices and living with the consequences. We ought to make our choices realistically and get on with it.

Archaeologists find evidence of ancient battles in Golan

By NICOLAS B. TATRO

AFIQ, Israeli-Annexed Golan Heights (AP) — With the thud of modern artillery in the background, archaeologists are uncovering evidence that the Golan Heights was as fierce a battleground in biblical times as it is today.

"The battles between the Arameans (of ancient Syria) and Israelis were governed by the same geopolitical considerations as today: Whoever holds the high ground has a strategic advantage," said archaeologist Moshe Kohavi, head of a Tel Aviv University expedition excavating four sites in the Golan Heights with the help of American, Japanese, Finnish and Israeli volunteers.

The sites are the Leviah Enclosure, a wedge-shaped promontory over the Sea of Galilee with gorges on three sides and high walls on the fourth; Tel Hadar, where a large royal "winter palace" has been unearthed on the eastern shores of the Sea of Galilee; Tel Soreg, a hilltop town on the Ein Gev river; and Rogem Hiri, which has been nicknamed the "Stonehenge of the Golan."

Afiq, a kibbutz where the archaeologists are based, preserves the name of the biblical Aphek, the 9th century B.C. battleground where the Israelite King Ahab's chariots and foot soldiers defeated the army of Ben Haddad, the Aramean king, who had conquered much of Israel after sweeping across the Golan.

"Ahab fought for the same advantage as we do," said Kohavi, alluding to Israel's battles with Syria for the Golan in 1967 and 1973. Israel annexed the 42- by 15-mile territory with its 20,000 residents in 1981.

Although ancient sites dot the map of the Golan, most are unexplored. The Syrians put the area off limits as a military zone and foreign expeditions have for the most part avoided it since 1967 because it is still disputed.

"THERE ARE MORE ancient sites than modern ones," said Matti Zohar, a Hebrew University of Jerusalem archaeologist working with Kohavi's expedition.

Evidence to support the Golan's historical status as a battlefield comes mainly from the cities' construction, especially the high walls.

An iron arrowhead was found at Tel Hadar and a dog-shaped bronze finial, the top of a standard, was found at Tel Soreg.

"Weapons and armor were precious because they were made of metal," Kohavi said. "It was very expensive and was not left lying on the battlefield. What is found is usually discovered in caches or in tombs but this is rare."

City walls, the main entrance, private houses and public buildings at Leviah indicate it was a city spread over 20 acres rather than a fort or large cattle pen as previously believed. The emphasis on walls and natural defense gives insight into life during the Bronze Age, 3,000-2,000 B.C.

"The people lived in large cities, probably war-like ones, and they chose their sites for strategic reasons," Kohavi said of a half-dozen similar sites in the Golan. "There was apparently no major power to pacify the area."

"These were large fortified cities that probably fought each other like the Greek city states," he said, standing on the ancient city's stone gate and sweeping his hand toward three large squares stretching across about 100 yards, where Israeli students from the Technion University in Haifa were digging out rows of stone that were the walls of ancient houses.

LEVIAH WAS AN exciting find, Kohavi said, because it "proves that the Golan was a thriving population center" as early as the 4th century B.C. "and not a fringe area as had been believed." The pottery and building style also indicated links with ancient Lebanon.

Only a few miles from Syria, the distant rumble of tank and artillery could be heard as Israeli troops conducted maneuvers. "We can't escape from what's going on in today's Golan," said Kohavi.

Throughout the Old Testament period the Golan Heights, a volcanic plain 1,650 feet above the Sea of Galilee, was the focus of a power struggle between the Kings of Israel and the Arameans who were based near modern-day Damascus.

Its importance was recognized by King David, who sought to neutralize the power of the ruler of the Land of Geshur, as the Golan was known, by marrying his daughter Maacah. Their son Absalom later led a rebellion against David.

Kohavi, seeking the first archaeological evidence to confirm the biblical stories, believes one seat of Geshur government may have been Tel Hadar, which was in a no-man's land between Israeli and Syrian armies before 1967, and sits on a rise surrounded with weeds and barbed wire near a crowded summer resort.

Archaeologists have unearthed a large royal "winter palace" there on the eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee. The palace, which covered two acres next to what is now an amusement park, was destroyed by fire at the end of the 11th century B.C. The most visually striking aspect of the dig are granaries in the palace's basement. An archaeologist bent and picked up pieces of burnt grain more than 25 centuries old to show a reporter.

A BULLDOZER helped remove large basalt stones from around the entrance to the ancient palace. Among the finds were two delicately carved legs to a basalt stoneware pot and a perfectly preserved long-necked beer jug that was twisted and partially melted by the intense blaze.

At Tel Soreg, midway between the Sea of Galilee and Afiq, volunteers sifted the remains of the settlement that was continuously inhabited for 2,000 years and is believed by some to have been the biblical Aphek, a possibility Kohavi discounts because it was too small to match the biblical descriptions.

The Golan's battles even touched Tel Soreg, though it was out of the path of armies marching across the plateau two miles away. "When the Arameans and Israelites were fighting, the residents of Tel Soreg built a high wall for defense," in the 9th and 8th centuries B.C., he said.

Zohar is trying to unravel the mystery of Rogem Hiri, which the Druse Arabs have named the "stone heap of the wild cat."

The four concentric circles of stone walls with a 6½-yard-high mound of stones in the middle has been likened to Stonehenge, the Neolithic stone circle in England. Like Stonehenge, it may have been an astronomical observatory; the entrance marks the point of sunrise on the longest day of the year.

"It has to be a burial site," said Zohar, standing on the central heap of black volcanic stones.

Tokyo officials prepare for possibility of killer earthquake

By MARI TAKETA
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO — Sixty-five years after a killer earthquake and ensuing firestorms ravaged a crowded Tokyo, officials are alerting people of the possibility of another massive one.

They say it could come anytime between now and the next 20 years and is expected to pack enough power to split the ground.

The authorities are using the Sept. 1 anniversary of the 1923 Great Kanto Earthquake to organize information fairs and earthquake drills — and keep up vigilance among residents accustomed to frequent, mostly harmless earthly shudders.

"We're constantly doing PR (public relations)," said Takeshi Yanagida of the Tokyo city government's Disaster Countermeasure Bureau. "Most people know enough to turn off the gas and keep emergency supplies of food, water, money, underwear.

"In the event of a second Great Kanto Earthquake, what authorities can do is limited. We need help from the people."

Much of Japan lies along a major fault at the juncture of mammoth tectonic plates shifting slowly across the earth's surface. Small earthquakes shake the country every day, most of them unnoticed by humans. But to scientists maintaining a 24-hour watch, they are signs of building pressure that must eventually culminate in a powerful release.

The resulting quake, they say, will likely register an 8 on the open-ended Richter scale — the Mexico City quake of 1985 measured 8.1 — and will strike under or near the Kanto plain surrounding the capital or along the crowded, 170-mile Tokai belt linking Tokyo and the western city of Nagoya.

"In the worst-case scenario, the quake will come on a winter evening when people are cooking their dinners, a day with a dry northeasterly wind of about 22 kilometers per hour (14 mph)," Yanagida said.

Powerful enough to buckle walls and knock people off their feet, it could set off fires from gas ranges and heaters that would burn half a million homes, destroy one-third of Tokyo's living and office space, kill 37,000 people and injure 78,000 more, scientists say. A quake along the Tokai belt could kill up to 100,000.

The tolls, while disastrous, would still be only a fraction of the human cost of the 1923 disaster.

Two minutes before noon on Sept. 1, 1923, the earth rose in a violent upheaval. (Experts say that if the Richter scale had been developed at the time it would have registered 7.8.) The earthquake toppled houses and scattered embers from cooking fires, sparking deadly firestorms that swept the capital region's rickety, densely packed neighborhoods. When the embers had cooled, as many as 140,000 people had perished, mostly in the fires, and billions of dollars worth of property lay in ruins or badly damaged.

Masatoshi Rachi, then a 13-year-old farmer's son in eastern Tokyo, recalled watching the firestorms approach after his family's house had withstood the tremor.

"All around, sparks were falling like rain. People were climbing onto their roofs and wetting them down," he said.

"Those who had lost their homes were setting up barracks, finding space with relatives. Our house, which fortunately didn't burn, was so full there was only room enough for people to sit — 70 or 80 in all, relatives and strangers."

Rachi is now 78. Tougher building standards, fire and changes of business have forced him to rebuild his home five times. Each time, though, he has taken care to reinforce beams — and to prepare a parcel with stores of water, food, a flashlight, medicine.

Rachi was not alone in learning lessons from the 1923 disaster. The government restricted use of building bricks, stiffened regulations on securing window glass and encouraged pioneering architecture and engineering that allow skyscrapers to roll and sway instead of buckling during tremors.

It sent teams to study the devastation after the 1971 Los Angeles quake, when highways collapsed, and the one that shook Mexico's capital three years ago bringing on massive confusion among families searching for their missing.

Tokyo now has sturdier supports for its elevated highways and is experimenting with a wireless system for emergency communications. Recent experience has taught the Japanese they are likely to be safer indoors during a quake.

But despite the funds the government has poured into earthquake prediction, "The truth is, we're not 100 percent sure we can predict the big one," said Hirofumi Yokoyama of the Meteorological Agency's Earthquake Prediction division. "We can be maybe 80 percent certain.

"The system is such that we should be able to predict a large Kanto quake two or three days in advance," he said. "We can't tell exactly when, but we can say about where."

With luck, the information will be enough to prevent a full-scale repetition of the catastrophe 65 years ago.

"In the worst-case scenario, the quake will come on a winter evening when people are cooking their dinners, a day with a dry northeasterly wind of about 22 kilometers per hour (14 mph)."

MADD seeks weekend of abstinence

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Faye Higgins has a message for anyone planning to drink and drive this Labor Day weekend. And, she wants it taken seriously.

"Drunk driving kills our families and friends at an alarming rate," the head of the Midland chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) said. "It remains the most frequently committed crime in the nation, and the one which is treated the most lightly."

Ms. Higgins joined city, county and law enforcement officials for the launch of "Drive For Life," a campaign to reduce alcohol-related traffic injuries and fatalities. MADD and Volkswagen United States, Inc. sponsors the drive, and Thursday's announcement was made at Rogers Ford-Volkswagen in Midland.

Traffic fatalities, which the Department of Public Safety will count from 6 p.m. Friday until the Labor Day weekend "officially" ends at midnight Monday, are tragically high during the holiday period, Ms. Higgins said.

This year, the DPS predicts 35 persons will die on the state's highways, and have assigned extra troopers to the stretches of interstate highways, including I-20 through Midland-Odessa.

"Because of that, we're asking people not to drink and drive on Saturday," she said. Attendees were asked to pledge not to drink and drive Saturday by signing a petition at the dealership.

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas, Police Chief Richard Czech, Sheriff Gary Painter, DPS Sgt. Andy Eubanks, County Attorney Mark Dettman, and Olivia Wilson and Chuck Roades from the District Attorney's office joined the launch.

"We want to improve the public awareness about the increase in alcohol-related traffic deaths," Neil Florer, vice-president of Rogers, said of his dealership's involvement in the campaign. He called "tragic" the fact that 66 persons are killed in the U.S. every day in alcohol-related accidents.

Thomas said drinking and driving, as much as drunk driving, is the problem that must be corrected.

"People who consume alcoholic beverages don't consider themselves drunk when they drive," the mayor noted.

Before he read a poem entitled "Shining Star" with the loss of life as its theme, Czech reminded those in attendance why drunk driving needs to be eliminated.

"It is a foolish waste of life," the chief said. "We need to do something about it."

As part of the campaign, all law enforcement vehicles in the Midland and Odessa area will shine their headlights.

Painter, a former DPS officer, read from a list of persons who had been killed in Midland and Ector counties by drunk drivers.

"These are just some of the names," he said after he read the two dozen names aloud. "I hope each one of us would have some kind of contribution...something to reduce drunk driving."

After a moment of remembrance for "loved ones not here," Ms. Higgins, whose son Joseph was killed four years ago in an alcohol-related accident west of Midland, led the group outside the dealership.

There, bunches of red and white balloons were released into the windy sky, another reminder of the victims.

Ector County students down from last year's attendance

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A total of 24,179 students swarmed backinto Ector County Independent School District schools Thursday to begin the 1988-89 school year, according to Chuck Hornung, ECISD communications director.

The total is approximately nine-tenths of one percent below last year's first day attendance figure of 24,395.

Hornung attributed the lower turnout to the fact the first day of school fell in the middle of the week and preceeds the Labor Day holiday. School officials expect school attendance totals "will peak toward the end of September. That's just been traditional," he said.

The decrease in total enrollment was recorded in Ector County junior high and high schools, with a total drop of slightly more than 5.7 percent.

The total number of students attending the area's six junior high schools Thursday was 5,242, down nearly 3.3 percent from last year's 5,420.

The city's two high schools had a total of 4,166 students attending first day classes, down more than 2.4 percent from the previous years 4,276.

Ector County's 19 elementary schools, however, saw a slight increase in first day attendance figures compared to last year, Hornung said. Total attendance at all elementary schools was up nearly one-half of one percent, from 14,699 in the 1987-88 school year to 14,771 for the first day of school this year, an increase of 72 elementary school students.

In formulating the budget for the 1988-89 fiscal year, ECISD administrators projected a total enrollment for the year would reach 26,191. First day attendance figures are 2,012 students below this estimate.

For the 1987-88 fiscal year, ECISD administrators estimated total enrollment figures would reach 25,734. First day enrollment for last year was 24,395, a total of 339 below the projected figure.

More prisoners expected in Reeves County after management change

PECOS (AP) — The federal Bureau of Prisons is wasting no time in sending more inmates to a prison owned by Reeves County now that management has been handed from the sheriff to a Tennessee-based company.

The Bureau of Prisons told Nashville-based Corrections Corporation of America on Thursday that it planned to send another 50 or 60 prisoners to the Reeves County Law Enforcement Center soon, CCA spokeswoman Peggy Wilson said.

CCA administrator Sandy Estes began managing the prison Thursday, ending a three-month power struggle between Sheriff Raul Florez and the Bureau of Prisons over how the county-owned, 532-bed detention center should be run. On Thursday, 446 inmates were at the detention center, Ms. Wilson said.

The LEC, which is run by the county as a money-making enterprise, houses Bureau of Prisons inmates — mostly illegal aliens and non-violent federal prisoners — and U.S. Marshal's prisoners awaiting trial in federal courts.

The LEC is separate from the county jail, and there is no exchange of prisoners between the two.

In the spring, the Bureau of Prisons said it had little confidence in Florez's management ability, and announced it would stop sending long-term prisoners to the LEC and would send only short-term inmates.

The bureau became even more concerned after Florez replied to bureau officials with a letter filled with slang and containing profanity, BOP spokesman Wally Blinde said.

"The letter, in tone, complexion and nature of the reply, was totally ans wholly unprofessional," Blinde said after receiving the letter in June.

County commissioners felt pressured to change the LEC's management, though Florez contended that he was supposed to run it under state law because it was a legal extension of the county jail. After the county approved the contract with Nashville-based CCA, Florez said he had no objections.

Commissioners selected CCA after reviewing proposals from three prison-management companies. Ms. Wilson said the LEC's 100 employees will stay on.

Under terms of the agreement, CCA will receive a $36,000 monthly management fee and will be reimbursed for operating costs of up to $279,000 a month, County Attorney Scott Johnson said.

The county receives $31 a day for each federal prisoner and $33 a day for each U.S. Marshal's prisoner. That money goes to pay CCA and what's left goes into the county's coffers.

"ESL is for residents whose native language is not English. The classes are taught at three levels, depending upon the fluency of the student upon entering," said Cindy Turland, coordinator of the Midland College Adult Learning Center.

All the ESL classes are free and may be entered at any time.

Participants must be at least 16 years of age.

Midland College ESL classes are taught in room 132, Occupational-Technical Building from 9 a.m.-12 noon Monday through Thursday. Classes start Monday, Sept. 12. Levels I, II, and III are offered at Midland College.

Casa de Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane, will have Levels I, II, and III on Tuesday and Thursday from 7-9 p.m. starting Sept. 12.

Level I only will be taught at the Boys and Girls Club of Midland, 110 E. New Jersey, beginning Sept. 19. This class will be from 6:30-8:30 p.m. Monday and Wednesday.

The Level I class is Beginning English. It provides students with the ability to function in an English-speaking environment through both conversations and lab exercises.

Level II ESL is an intermediate level program which helps students advance from a need-oriented vocabulary to one with greater English fluency.

The Level III class provides the student with the language skills, both verbal and written, to pursue vocational or academic goals.

For more information on the local ESL classes, contact the Midland College Adult Learning Center, Occupational-Technical Building, or call 685-4566.

Back in old days, avoiding trouble sometimes got boys into it

Todd

Back in the old days, which sometimes seem less distant than yesterday, life for us boys was not so complicated.

It wasn't all that simple, I suppose, but it wasn't particularly helter-skelter like it seems to be today. We did one thing at a time.

We just tried to avoid trouble even as we got smack-dab in the middle of it.

Like placing nickels on the railroad track, watching the steam locomotive and the rest of the train pass by and trying to find the redesigned coins.

Or soaping up the rails on an upward slope and watching the locomotive spin its driving wheels and let off steam.

Or throwing mud balls at passing cars and getting caught with the evidence.

Or striking a misplaced kitchen match in a hay barn, backing off, and watching the fire from afar, while cotton pickers, including mother, and the tractor driver, dad, suspend their chores. They were more alarmed than entertained.

Or breaking a phonograph record and my guilt being affirmed by my silence.

Or sneaking off with a classmate to light up a Lucky Strike cigarette on the east side of the school.

Or getting whacks from the principal for being a member of the school's unofficial Three Musketeer team which, in a brazen moment, made leaping jumps from the first-floor window of a single-story building.

Or getting lost in a wooded field while hunting with a double-barrel shotgun and worrying the folks at Christmas time.

Or dropping a cast-iron pot into the cistern next to the front porch.

Or tricking my little brother to smell ground pepper in a flower and really getting "the works" from our parents.

Or building a raft out of bois d'arc fence posts, setting it adrift in the pool, and going down with the ship.

Or almost drowning after going under a time or two in enticingly cool waters at Broken Bow after the inner tube slipped away.

Or eating too many sweet little pills from a tin taken from Grandmother's medicine cabinet and sitting on the pot the next day. The school bus passed on by.

Or driving my older brother's 1946 Chevrolet coupe off a country road, into a barrow ditch, and putting a nick in my younger brother's head.

Or allowing my old 1954 Chevrolet sedan to slip off another country road after midnight and, after walking away, almost getting shot by a night hunter who mistook my friend and me for a couple of deer.

Or concealing a girlie magazine under a mattress, where mother found it in her bed-making chores. Daddy's punishment was swift.

Or talking back to my civics teacher who gave extra grade points to those football players after the team won a game.

Or almost driving a road roller into the side of brick grocery store.

Or soaking my hair with so much lanolin-based Wildroot hair cream that the girl I was trying to impress was, I'm sure, not enamored.

Or mistakenly tossing the burning match, rather than the lit firecracker, just to play the "big boy" role in front of some girls and suffering embarrassment and a throbbing hand.

Or bawling after a big boy, Sonny, packed cotton in my little cotton tow sack to half-full when I enjoyed the pretense of it being "full" — though obviously quite fluffy full.

In those early days, I don't know about the girls — what they did or didn't do. They were over there, and we were somewhere else doing whatever boys do and don't tell about. Then, there were those other things.

STUDENTS

In the 1986-87 school year, administrators projected total enrollment would be 26,383. By Sept. 18, 1986, enrollment peaked at 25,680, which is 703 students below actual estimates for that year. In the 1987-88 school year, enrollment peaked Oct. 29, 1987 at 25,800, a total 66 more students than initially projected.

Hornung today said school administrators expect projections for this year will be met when enrollment peaks around the end of September. He said the first day of school was generally "uneventful," except for the normal problems experienced in trying to coordinate such things as first day bus schedules.

Midland public schools begin classes on Tuesday.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Summer Mummers season ends Saturday

From Staff Reports

The 40th annual Summer Mummers closes Saturday at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

The script for the 40th anniversary production is the late William S. Davis' "Banditry on the Border" or "They Came to Acuna."

While living in Midland, Davis authored seven other melodramas, including "Peril on the Pecos" and "Rascality on the Rig," both of which were produced twice in Midland and at two Irish theater festivals.

Davis, a Midland resident from 1958 to 1964, was elected the first Republican representative to the Texas Legislature from West Texas in 1962, at which time he was employed by Exxon as a petroleum engineer.

Those attending the 1988 Mummers can expect to find the Wadley Avenue detour playing a part in the "movieola" portion of the melodrama. They will also see scenes filmed at the Pecos River by Loving, N.M.

Creating the film footage, staging the melodrama and the olio — a series of short sketches which play after the show — is a major MCT project.

"When added all together, the Mummers is quite possibly the biggest function that MCT is involved in both in income generated and volunteers recruited and trained," says Mummers' producer, Doug Heck.

For reservations call Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111. Tickets are priced at $6.50 and $8.

Temple school makes national education report

WASHINGTON (AP) — When fifth grade students at Meridith Magnet Elementary School in Temple were ready to read Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island," a classroom was transformed into a deck of a pirate ship with broken barrels, skull and crossbones and gold ducats.

"We don't stop with textbooks and worksheets," principal Bonnie Martin said Thursday.

The humble school and its bold methods were noted in a report issued this week by Education Secretary William J. Bennett. In it, he summarizes his views on what should be taught to the 32 million youngsters enrolled in kindergarten through the eighth grade in 81,000 elementary and junior high schools.

"Whether the book is 'Charlotte's Web,' 'Misty of Chincoteague' or 'Robin Hood,' the teachers at this school bring an enthusiasm to their classrooms that makes children savor the experience of reading good literature," the report said. "In fact, Meridith teaches its 540 third, fourth and fifth-graders to love learning."

Bordered on three sides by housing projects and on a fourth by a pasture where cattle often stray, the Meridith Magnet Elementary School inspires a love of learning among its students, say federal educators who singled out the Temple school for its invigorating curriculum.

"We try to bring education alive for children," Martin said. "We make children excited about learning. This is a go-getter school."

In singling out Meridith, the report notes that while the school is in one of Temple's poorest neighborhoods, it has become an oasis where students from all backgrounds, including some from the wealthiest neighborhoods in the district, find a sound and challenging curriculum.

The report said the student body is a mix of white, black and Hispanic children, and that four out of 10 come from disadvantaged homes. Yet 97 percent of the fifth-graders showed they had mastered necessary reading skills in a recent statewide test. The average score among all Texas schools was 18 percentile points lower.

"Meridith Elementary stands as an example to the country of what Texans can do when they put their minds to it. They have a right to be proud and we're proud of them," Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said Thursday.

Every school day begins with a silent period, so students can read from a book of their choice, the report said. Students carry the book with them throughout the day in case they have a spare moment to read. The hallways and classroom walls are covered with displays of their art and writing, "reminding everyone that good work brings with it a sense of accomplishment."

Each spring, the school sponsors a host of science activities as part of its Super Science Spree, including visits by the local television weatherman, a spider expert, a bee keeper, veterinarians, doctors, dentists.

"They tell the class how science relates to the real world, how it will relate to the careers they'll choose later," Ms. Martin said.

The students, whose first day back was Thursday, are now in the midst of celebrating the Summer Olympics.

There will be a parade of flags, a reading marathon "to continue the flame of reading," and each morning will be a reading alert and everyone — even custodians and cafeteria workers — has to put down what they're doing and read for 10 or 15 minutes, Ms. Martin said.

Meridith Elementary School Principal Bonnie Martin, center, stands among her students during the first day of school. Meridith Elementary was among seven schools singled out by U.S. Secretary of Education William Bennett for having a strong curricula.

Report says Red River clean-up project would make water useful

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen says a study of salt pollution in the Red River indicates a fully funded clean-up program would render the water potable and useful to municipalities, industry and agriculture.

An evaluation panel of the Red River Chloride Control Project said in a report released by Bentsen this week that salt springs along the river have made it and Lake Texoma "virtually unusable as sources of water for irrigational, industrial and municipal use."

At the same time, the report said projected population and industrial growth rates for the Red River Basin, which extends from Oklahoma and Texas to Louisiana and Arkansas, show that increasing demands for water will exhaust all present sources in the near future, thus requiring the use of Red River water.

"Currently, virtually all the good quality stream water within the region has been appropriated, thereby limiting further irrigation, municipal and industrial development," the report said.

Although some water for irrigation is being taken from Red River and Lake Texoma, the report said the poor quality of water has reduced the average crop yield, lowered crop values and damaged land and equipment.

"Existing industrial and municipal treatment facilities, piping systems, water heaters, and other household appliances are also being damaged by the high chloride level," the report said. "If contributing salt springs are controlled, the Red River could be made usable along its entire reach, thereby diminishing the need to develop other sources of supply."

Congress in the mid-1960s authorized the Red River salt water control project, mandating that Texas and Oklahoma finance the cleanup of manmade sources of chloride pollution while the federal government would handle the natural sources, said Bentsen, D-Texas.

Bentsen said the two states have done their part and have spent $60 million. "But a few years ago the federal government began trying to renege on its end of the bargain."

Drought puts spotlight on underground irrigation

BAD AXE, Mich. (AP) — When the country's worst drought in half a century hit this summer, desperate Michigan farmers kept co-op extension agent Jim LeCureaux's phone ringing.

Many wanted to know about his tests of a low-cost irrigation system that also controls flooding and sharply boosts crop yields.

Hard times have given LeCureaux a ready audience for his pitch about the wonders of subirrigation.

"It's not a new concept. It's just being refined," he said from the office of the Huron County Cooperative Extension Service, which serves farmers in the tip of Michigan's fertile Thumb region, a wide peninsula jutting into Lake Huron.

In controlled studies last year, subirrigated corn fields produced up to 60 more bushels an acre than non-irrigated fields, LeCureaux said.

This year, sugar beets were added to the studies.

"It sure helps in dry seasons," said LeRoy Kretzschmer, who uses subirrigation on about 200 acres of the 1,800-acre farm he and his brothers operate near Caseville. It is one of two county sites where pilot studies are being conducted this year.

"We're kind of going little-by-little now, but eventually, if this works out, we'll irrigate more," he said.

Kretzschmer and LeCureaux are part of a network of researchers, agricultural agents and farmers who are fine-tuning an irrigation technique first used in 19th century Europe.

Subirrigation is a two-phased water control system that uses underground pipes, drainage ditches and pumps to keep just the right amount of moisture in the field.

"The idea is very old," said Jim Fouss, a researcher at the U.S. Department of Agriculture's lab in Baton Rouge, La. A form of subirrigation was employed in New York's Central Park in 1858, he said.

"If the drainage system that you use during wet season can be used to put water back on, then you essentially get it for free," Fouss said.

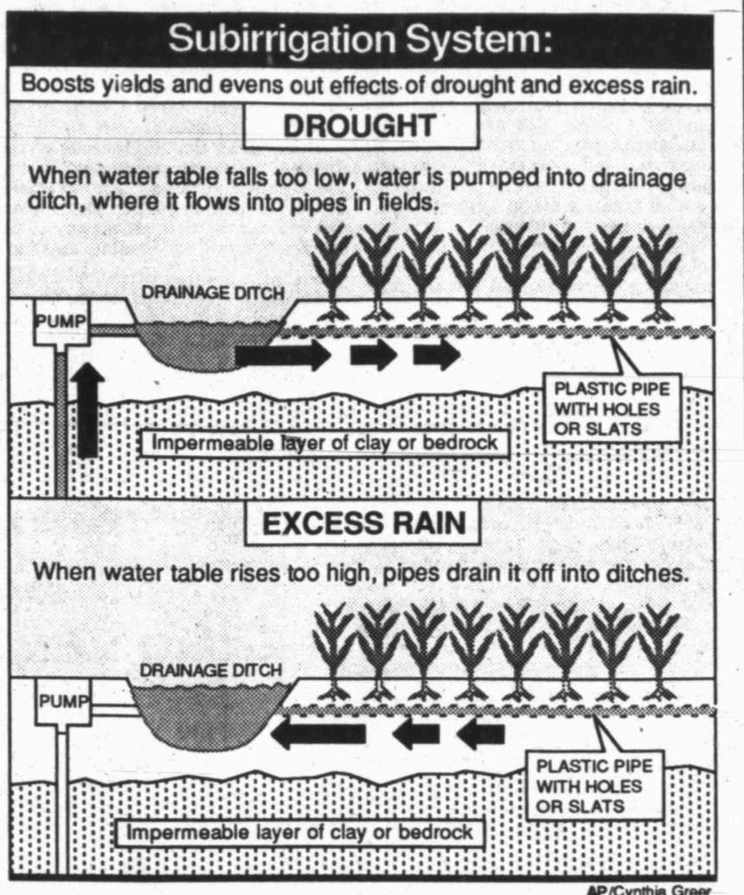
Ironically, subirrigation is a system for putting water into fields that once were considered too wet to farm.

About 100 million acres of U.S. farmland need some kind of drainage in order to grow crops effectively, according to Fouss, who is working to design computer rain forecasts to help run subirrigation systems.

Typically, the land is low and flat, with a layer of bedrock or clay within a few feet of the surface, creating a high water table.

The soil remains saturated from the spring rains and snowmelt, often forcing farmers to put off planting until late in the growing season. The same problem often occurs in the fall, making it difficult or impossible to harvest the crops.

These soil conditions are common along the Atlantic seaboard, in the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri river basins and in portions of the Great Lakes region, including Michigan's Thumb.



AP/Cynthia Greer

But as quickly as farmers installed underground drainage on their land, they began encountering another problem — drought.

Farmers in Georgia and the Carolinas ran into this problem when large-scale drainage projects went in 40 to 50 years ago, said Claude Phene, a U.S. Department of Agriculture scientist in Fresno, Calif., who did early subirrigation research while working at a USDA lab in Florence, S.C.

Farmers who installed underground drain pipes to remove enough water in order to plant in the spring often would find their crops parched for water by summer. But by damming up some of the runoff in the drainage ditches, they found they could put water back into their fields through the same pipes.

By hit or miss, farmers discovered that by conserving a certain amount of water in drainage ditches, they could maintain proper moisture in the plants' root zones during drier summer weather as water flowed back into the fields.

In prolonged dry weather, however, drainage ditches couldn't hold enough water to keep the soil moist, so some farmers began pumping water into the ditches from streams or wells.

Because of the expense of installing miles of heavy tile pipes, subirrigation made sense only for high-value crops such as vegetables. Now, with the development of lighter plastic piping and laser-guided installation equipment, the system has became feasible for use on field crops as well, Fouss said.

"It's not a major irrigation practice yet, but it's grown quite a bit in the last 10 years," Phene said. The appeal of subirrigation, he said, isn't so much that it raises yields but rather that it smooths the ups and downs.

"We want consistent production, a sustainable yield. We're not trying for the maximum yield," said George Merva of Michigan State University, who is conducting research on the most effective water levels for subirrigating corn and soy beans.

He and other researchers say it isn't yet clear how widely subirrigation can profitably be applied.

Although this year's drought has had disastrous consequences for many farmers, it might also prod some into seeking greater independence from natural rainfall, LeCureaux said.

This year, farmers are willing to listen.

"If you're looking for a teachable moment," he said, "you've got her."

Farm bankruptcies expected to surge within next six months

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Bankruptcy court officials predict the drought will force hundreds of Midwestern farmers who might otherwise have survived financially to abandon their fields after the coming harvest.

After a sharp drop in bankruptcy cases in the first half of 1988, courts throughout the Farm Belt expect a surge in bankruptcy petition filings in the next six months, even with help from the huge federal drought assistance bill, according to officials in Iowa, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

"The figures looked so promising, but with what's happened this summer we're not going to bump along with this low figure," said Ann Manley, chief clerk of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Madison.

Michael Duff, an assistant to the U.S. Department of Agriculture's assistant secretary for economics, said farm bankruptcies linked to the drought would increase nationwide later this year, stunting an economic upturn in the farm economy that began in late 1987.

"Last year debts were actually less than receipts and land values stabilized. But historically, anytime you have a drought the numbers go up and down," Duff said. "There were probably a number of farmers on the line, having a make-or-break-you year and they probably will go bankrupt or quit.

"We don't have any way of knowing how many, but it will be a national kind of problem," Duff said.

The Madison court, which handles bankruptcy petitions involving individuals, businesses and farms for 44 of Wisconsin 72 counties, received 154 petitions from farmers the first seven months of the year. That compared with 293 for the same period last year.

Since 1985, farm bankruptcies have made up 13 percent to 16 percent of total cases in the Madison district. There were 420 in 1985, 511 in 1986 and 448 last year.

"I'll predict filings will more than double by the end of the year," Ms. Manley said. "We'll be around 400 again."

Barbara Everly, chief clerk of the U.S. Bankruptcy court in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, said she expected a 20 percent increase in bankruptcies this winter.

"You're not only talking about farms, but it may be the final blow for implement dealers and service stations and the convenience stores in those small farm communities that have been on the edge," said Everly.

As in Wisconsin, Everly said farm bankruptcies in Iowa so far this year have fallen well below previous levels. She said climbing land values in the state and an improving farm economy had eased financial woes.

Local pork producers can cast ballot in national referendum

On Wednesday and Thursday the nation's pork producers will make what is likely to be their most important single business decision of the year. A vote on the pork referendum will determine the future of the present pork checkoff which provides funding for the many promotion and research programs that benefit pork producers.

All pork producers and eligible family members are encouraged to cast a ballot in the referendum at their local county extension office on either of those two days. Any person who has raised two or more hogs for sale since Nov. 1, 1986, is entitled to vote.

The National Pork Board, made up of 14 pork producers and one importer, is responsible for the collection and disbursement of funds collected under the pork checkoff program. Acting on recommendations from producer policy development groups, the board determines how checkoff funds are used in the areas of pork promotion, research and consumer education.

Approximately 70 percent of checkoff funds are invested in major promotion programs that reach millions of consumers each year. High voter turnout in the referendum will help ensure the continued funding of highly successful programs like "The Other White Meat" campaign and development of the America's Cut premium boneless pork chop.

Recent independent surveys indicate that the checkoff is favored by more than 70 percent of pork producers. The nation's producers are unified as never before and it is imperative that they all take the time to vote.

The referendum will be the best opportunity for producers to voice opinions on the 100 percent pork checkoff and set the stage for the futur of the pork industry.

FAMILY MATTERS

Affairs dangerous to marriages

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: My best friend recently found out that her husband was having an affair. When she confronted him with it, he told her that he would end it immediately. They are still living together, but she is very unhappy. He just tells her that it's over and that he is sorry and that it will never happen again.

I can't understand why she stays with him. Shouldn't she do more than just forgive and forget? She seems very depressed and unhappy to me. He tells her that she needs professional help. I think he's the one that needs the help. She was fine before he had an affair. What do yo think? ANGRY

DEAR ANGRY: Any kind of extramarital sexual relations can be extremely destructive to a marriage. The overwhelming emotions felt by both spouses must be dealt with or the marriage will suffer even more.

Several issues associated with the affair must be addressed, such as:

■ Time: Was it "one-night stand," an encounter with a paid professional or a long-term, ongoing relationship?

■ Degree of emotional involvement: Relationships without love are perceived as less threatening to a marriage than those with strong emotional bonds.

■ Sexual activity: The seriousness of an affair is often measured in sexual terms by one or both spouses.

■ Single or bilateral: Sometimes, affairs involving both spouses occur at the same time, including relationships in couples with "alternative lifestyles."

■ Heterosexual or homosexual: Many primarily heterosexual individuals choose to have homosexual affairs. AIDS makes this a particularly devastating issue.

Resolving these issues is one of many steps that the couple must take.

An affair is one of the most significant threats there is to a marriage. It often takes months or years for the trust, comfort and stability that once existed to be reestablished.

I encourage both your friend and her husband to seek professional counseling. This difficult issue must be resolved for the marriage and the spouses to survive as individuals within the marriage.

DEAR FAMILY: I have been having a hard time keeping my 4-year-old playing by himself. He's not happy unless I am right there with him. I enjoy playing with him, but I have other things and children that I must take care of. Do you have any suggestions? WORN OUT

DEAR WORN OUT: Invite a friend over to play with your son. Most 4-year-olds are social and enjoy playing with their peers, but not necessarily with their siblings. Parents often have to create a social circle for their younger children.

Often, I have found that parents with older children try to introduce activities that are too complex to their younger children. Adjust the activity, if necessary, to suit your son's skills and interest level.

And most important, show support for your son and his activities — give him lots of hugs and smiles for more than just results.

DEAR READERS: The "Playing With Parents" program will begin 5-7 p.m. Sept. 15 and will be every Thursday thereafter at the Museum of the Southwest. Just drop in with your 1-month to 3-year-old child and make a toy. It's fun and it's free.

Asthma complicated condition

Associated Press

Although asthma is often thought of as a childhood condition due to a single allergy, such a narrow characterization is inaccurate, according to a physician at New York University Medical Center.

"Asthma may begin at any time during adult life, including after 65," said Dr. David L. Kamelhar, clinical assistant professor of medicine. "It is seldom the result of a single allergy. Some people are sensitive to only one irritant, such as cats or feathers, but such individuals are the exception.

In most cases, many factors can trigger the condition. In addition to furs and feathers, these include foods, medications, extreme cold, exercise and emotional upset.

Defining asthma as strictly an allergic problem is now deemed too narrow. An article in an upcoming issue of the center's Health Letter explains that asthma is currently described as "reversible airflow obstruction due to hyperreactive airways." Airways refers to the bronchial tubes.

Hyperreactive need not mean allergy in the classic sense. "You might think of them as 'ticklish' airways," Kamelhar suggested. They may react to a range of stimuli, including tobacco smoke and such smells as perfumes.

Even the wheezing often associated in popular thinking about asthma is not necessarily accurate, Kamelhar noted. The temporary breathing difficulty experienced by people with asthma may be evidenced by wheezing — a whistling sound, heard especially on exhalation — but it can also give rise to coughing or stridor, a wheezing sound from the upper airway on inhalation.

Although reversible, asthma is a serious illness. Many symptoms can be relieved by bronchodilators, which are taken either orally or as inhalants. Antibiotics and, in some cases, corrective surgery may be needed. "Any breathing difficulty should be medically evaluated," Kamelhar cautioned.

Smokeless cigarette to be marketed

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Distributors in St. Louis, Phoenix and Tucson will be the first to test-market a new smokeless cigarette developed by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., company officials said this week.

Betsy Annese, director of public relations for the Winston-Salem-based company, said the three cities were chosen as lead markets for the new cigarettes, called Premier, because they have "the right mix of retail outlets and a very good distributorship network."

"From Oct. 1 to Oct. 15 they'll be sold just like any other cigarette," she said, adding that the price per pack will be about 30 cents higher.

The company will use a variety of advertising messages, she said. One of them will tout the new product as "Premier — the Cleaner Smoke."

But the company is not making any health or safety claims.

"We're not claiming this is a safe or safer cigarette," she said.

A health claim would invite regulation by the Federal Food and Drug Administration.

"If a product is sold with claims to make cigarettes safer, it is a medical device" subject to FDA approval, said William Grigg, an FDA spokesman.

Company officials say the new cigarettes contain a high-tech packet of tobacco extracts, which is heated, but not burned. The result is a cigarette without odor and only a trace of ash or environmental smoke that could irritate people nearby.

Grammar misuse needs 'hotline' to find solution

By DAVID GRIMES
New York Times News Service

"Good morning. You've reached Grammar Hotline. How may we help you?"

"Oh, thank goodness I got through. Grammar Hotline, you've got to help me. I'm holding a garage sale this weekend, and I need to get some crude, hand-lettered, utility-pole signs up as quickly as possible. My question is, how many times am I required to misuse the apostrophe?"

"Lots. In fact, galloping apostrophe misuse is the grammatical trend these days. Fortunately, a garage sale sign gives you many opportunities to be fashionably incorrect. Start by saying, 'Garage Sale. Many item's for sale.' Then list the stuff: 'Childrens' clothe's, tables' and tableclothe's, household good's and odds' and end's.' Also, don't forget that quotation marks are also quite 'hot' these days."

"Good morning. Grammar Hotline. How may we help you?"

"Yes. I would like to be a political speechwriter. Are there any special grammatical rules that I should be aware of?"

"Yes, indeedy. To be a successful political speechwriter you not only need to know how to say absolutely nothing in as many words as possible, you need to use the words 'unique,' 'crossroads' and 'character' exactly 103 times per speech. The best speechwriters are able to use all three of these words in a sentence, such as: 'Clearly, the upcoming election offers voters the unique opportunity to stand at the crossroads, evaluate the characters who are running for office and determine that, yes, monarchy might not be so bad after all.'"

"Grammar Hotline."

"Hello. I'm an English professor at Yale, and I'm wondering if you could clear up something for me. When I'm transposing a gerund from the nominative to the predicative case, do you favor dropping the preposition or dangling the participle?"

"Either way is fine, as long as you don't get caught."

DEAR ABBY

Dusting chores kick up storm of controversy

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I retired about a year ago. Since that time, I have had the opportunity to observe how my wife goes about her housewifely duties — much to her annoyance.

We now have an ongoing disagreement about whether she should dust first or vacuum first. I have brought up that question among our friends, and you cannot believe the arguments it generates.

I say she should vacuum first because vacuuming raises the dust, which can be disposed of by dusting. My wife took the other side: Dust first — then vacuum.

Not to be sexist, most men opted for vacuuming first.

I would like to hear from you, Abby. And perhaps your readers would let you know in what order these chores should be done.

Please don't say, "If you kept yourself busy, you would not care about the order one dusts and vacuums." — JAMES R. PETERSON, CINCINNATI

DEAR MR. PETERSON: Shucks, you stole my answer. But now that you've shown a sincere interest in improving the efficiency of the domestic routine, why don't you take over the vacuuming and dusting yourself? Then you can do it your way, and you'll have nothing to argue about.

But to answer your question, the last time I cleaned house, I vacuumed last (what a memory!). Readers?

DEAR ABBY: Occasionally you print quotable pieces that are worth clipping. Please consider this. I found it in a newsletter published by the Nebraska Coalition of Women. Unfortunately, no author is credited. — KRIS CAVOSIE, OVERLAND PARK, KAN.

EQUALITY DAY

For every woman who is tired of acting weak when she is strong, there is a man who is tired of appearing strong when he feels vulnerable;

For every woman who is tired of acting dumb, there is a man who is burdened with the constant expectation of knowing everything;

For every woman who is tired of being called an "emotional female," there is a man who is denied the right to weep and to be gentle;

For every woman who is called unfeminine when she competes, there is a man for whom competition is the only way to prove his masculinity;

For every woman who is tired of being a sex object, there is a man who must worry about his potency;

For every woman who feels "tied down" by her children, there is a man who is denied the full pleasure of shared parenthood;

For every woman who is denied meaningful employment or equal pay, there is a man who must bear full financial responsibility for another human being;

For every woman who was not taught the intricacies of an automobile, there is a man who was not taught the satisfaction of cooking;

For every woman who takes steps toward her own liberation, there is a man who finds the way to freedom has been made a little easier.

DEAR ABBY: I really would like to have an answer to a dumb question: What is leap year, and how often does it come? Thank you. — CHRIS

DEAR CHRIS: There are no "dumb" questions in my book, so, please, don't apologize. Leap year is a year in which there are 366 days, instead of 365. It occurs every four years. The extra day is added to the month of February, giving it 29 days instead of the usual 28 days.

Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy and how to handle the pain of growing up. It's all in Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage and handling are included.

Professional party planner offers hosting tips

Hearst News Service

Renny Reynolds has planned million dollar parties for brokerage services, only to have the firm cancel at the last minute. He's been screened by security at the White House, and created a wonderful centerpiece for the President's table at one party, only to be told to cut down on the size. It blocked camera access to the President.

None of it fazes Reynolds, a New York party designer. However, that often isn't true for others giving a party.

Party nerves can be traced, at least in part, to the fact that "they're putting their lifestyle on the line to their friends. That's really one of the key problems," Reynolds says. "The point of entertaining is not to be pretentious about the way you live. Instead, it should be a time for both hosts and guests to have fun."

Reynolds is devoted to the concept that every party should have a theme. It can be an elaborate ethnic event, or it can be as simple as choosing a particular food and then serving it in a variety of different ways.

"The point of entertaining and the point of my business is to create a visual background," he adds.

To do that, a number of factors come into play.

Lighting is one that "is terribly important," Reynolds notes. "You can never use enough candles, even in the summertime."

If the party is indoors and lamps will have to be used, he suggests changing bulbs to a pale pink rather than the bright white normally used. Lamps that throw the light up toward the ceiling also produce a better party atmosphere, he says, because lighting is not so direct and the lamps will create interesting shadows.

On the table or tables, a number of things can be done with odd possessions that usually just sit around the house. Collections can be put to use in original ways, and "that makes it more interesting and personal." In one case, he rolled the silverware for a dinner in napkins, then put the rolls in the back of a toy truck. The remainder of the truck was filled with flowers.

An outdoor party offers other opportunities. Reynolds says in some cases he would suggest doing each cocktail table in a different color, with cloths reaching to the ground. Ribbons can be attached to tree branches throughout the yard or around the patio, and color added to those by tying small Chinese lanterns to the bottoms of the ribbons.

Creating excitement about a party can start with the invitations, which may go out as early as three to four months before the event. Reynolds says the invitations always should be in the hands of guests three to four weeks before the party to keep the event from having a last-minute appearance.

"Having a written invitation always makes a party seem more special," he adds. It means some extra effort on the part of the host, but "with more effort, there's more excitement on the part of the guests. They will see an effort is being made. They appreciate that."

The little slips that invariably will occur during any party are just that — slips. Reynolds suggests passing the unexpected off with a joke, because with more experience, "you realize what fun it can be. You learn to be more flexible when the unexpected occurs.

Some of Reynold's suggestions to speed that process along are contained in a guide to entertaining. It outlines a schedule using the 88 minutes before a party to make the final preparations, and was developed in conjunction with California Coolers. Persons interested in the brochure should send a written request to California Cooler Guide to Summer Entertaining, P.O. Box 1080, Louisville, Ky., 40201.

Commentators for pro golf have tough job

By DAVID GRIMES
New York Times News Service

Ask people to list the most exciting sports on TV, and golf will usually rank somewhere between major league baseball rain outs and the Olympic Napping Event.

This is a pity because golf is really quite a lively game, considering the participants do not (generally) tackle one another, hit each other with curved sticks or leap on each other from the top rope before applying The Sleeper Hold.

It's just that golf's exciting qualities do not come through well on TV.

The reason for this, I think, is that the golfers you see on TV are highly skilled professionals who make terrific shots time after time.

It is difficult to come up with interesting commentary when the golfers are this good:

First commentator: Well, Kenny, he's 380 yards from the hole and I understand he's hitting a seven iron.

Second commentator: Yes, he should have no trouble with this one.

First commentator: Sure enough, Kenny. It went right in the hole. That puts our leader 137 under par and he's still got the back nine to play. We'll be back with more golf after this message from Smith Barney. They make money the old-fashioned way: They do a lot of commercials.

Because professional golfers are so good, most of a telecast consists of watching golfers stride purposefully from one perfect shot to the next.

To break the monotony, commentators sometimes go off in desperate searches for drama.

First commentator: Oh-oh, Kenny. Looks like he can't decide whether he wants to putt or chip this ball.

Second commentator: I think he's ready to make up his mind. He's choosing his club ... I think ... I think ... Yes! Yes! He's going to chip it! No doubt about it, he's definitely going to chip it!

First commentator: Incredible. Let's see that again on the replay.

Coming up with insightful commentary like this eventually takes its toll on golf announcers.

One of the first faculties they lose is their ability to use adverbs.

First commentator: Kenny, he hit that shot beautiful. He's improved his ball-striking considerable over the front nine, where he was hooking everything wild into the concession tents.

Second commentator: Thanks for the report, Rossie. You've summed it up very succinctly.

First commentator: You mean succinct, don't you?

Second commentator: Oops. Sorry.

Eventually, a golf commentator's mental deterioration gets so bad that he feels compelled to remind viewers of the obvious:

"Second place is OK, but you know he'd rather finish in first."

Fortunately, all these qualities will serve the announcers well when they leave golf and take jobs as TV weathermen.

There's a place for everything — even waste

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I cannot believe that for the first time in my life, I am in the right place at the right time. Listen to this.

The hottest career for women in 1988 is — the envelope, please — hazardous waste expert! Salaries range from $30,000 to $70,000.

Is this crazy or what! Hazardous waste is my life. I've been disposing of it since the day I was married.

You're looking at a woman with 39 years of experience as the top shoveler in the business.

The trick of disposing waste is that no one knows where you put it. No one wants to know.

I discovered that after the birth of our first baby. Everyone wanted a diaper changed on the spot, but no one wanted to take responsibility for relocating the used diaper. Who got stuck? Moi!

For years, I got rid of the No. 1 hazardous waste in the country: boys' gym shoes.

You can't just dump those little suckers in the ocean and expect them to float out to sea. No siree.

If I had deep-sixed 'em, they'd have washed up on the exact beach where the kids were. The kids would claim them and start wearing them again.

First, you have to sneak in during the dead of night and get them off the feet of the boy and then bury them.

They rank (no pun intended) right up there with gym clothes that have been in a locker for nine months.

I'm not padding my resume, but I've had to cart away chicken bones left under a bed while we were off on a two-week vacation, a cage holding a dead horned toad, which took us a month to find under the wet towels, and a collection of rocks covered with moss and seaweed entombed in an RV for three weeks.

I read stories in the papers all the time about these so-called experts roaming around the world with barges full of garbage looking for a place to dump it.

I never had that problem. All I had to do to get rid of anything was to put a broken toy on top of it and place it at the curb. By nightfall, the box was dragged inside, up two flights of stairs and stored.

My finest hour was probably leftovers. I had some real risky stuff in there.

Some of them used to get restless, and I could never turn my back on them. They weren't something you could get careless with.

I'd dump them carefully in newspaper, zip-lock them in plastic bags, then encase them in a large garbage bag before sealing them in the garbage can.

Dogs would fly in at reduced air fares to get to it.

Actually, I may be overqualified. —

Itch in left ear is linked to hiccups

NEW YORK (AP) — Hiccups usually aren't of great concern but there was a case in which a woman complained of hiccuping as often as five times a minute with a persistent itch in her left ear.

When doctors examined the ear, according to Discover magazine, they found an ant in it. The ant had irritated a branch of the vagus nerve that runs from the brain, through the ear and down into the abdomen where the diaphragm is located.

Hiccups are caused when the diaphragm tries to cough out an irritant. When the ant was washed out of the ear the hiccups stopped.

Well-established 'Dogs have advantage

Weather could play spoiler for both teams, though

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

The Lubbock Monterey Plainsmen have a long road to hoe. They are coming off a 2-8 season and have only four defensive and three offensive starters returning.

Add to these pitfalls the fact that the Plainsmen open tonight with the Midland High Bulldogs — a team that will show no mercy as it begins it's quest for a second straight winning season.

And then there's the weather which could be a factor not only for Monterey, but for the home team Bulldogs, as well. Friday morning, forecasters were calling for a 50 percent chance of rain and thunderstorms tonight with locally heavy rainfall possible. Muddy conditions, if they do become a reality, could keep scoring on the downside for both teams.

First-year Monterey head coach Bob Brown readily admits his Plainsmen are at a distinct disadvantage going into the game, but will still be as competitive as possible.

"When you've had a change of philosophy, it takes the kids awhile to adjust," Brown said. "The fact that (Midland High) has a well-established coaching staff and a well-established program is a definite asset to them and a definite disadvantage for us."

Leading that established coaching staff is fifth-year man Doug McCutchen, who trys to bring to the Bulldog football program another winning year after last year's 6-3 mark.

"I'll tell you one thing," McCutchen said, "(Monterey) is a lot better football team (than last year). They've got lots of kids back that have been there. Even though they're under a different system, they're probably a lot more enthusiastic."

Monterey, a 4A school, did, in fact, defeat Abilene High in its most recent scrimmage game.

The Plainsman offense will be led by junior quarterback Drew Webb. Running out of a multiple-T offense, Monterey utilizes three backs, including senior halfbacks Greg Powell and James Rodriguez, and senior fullback Ed Crites.

For the Bulldogs, tonight's game will be the first true test of what could be a potentially explosive offensive combination. Senior halfback Dwane Roberts, who finished fifth in District 4-5A in both receiving and rushing last year, is joined by senior quarterback Russell Page and junior halfback Will Sowders in the backfield.

Forming the wideout spots are seniors Shaun Savas at split end and Max Reyes at flanker. As juniors, the two combined for 453 yards receiving last season.

Size-wise, the Bulldog defensive front (averaging 220 pounds) far outmans a smallish Monterey offensive line (203 average), while the Bulldog offensive line and Monterey defensive front are almost even.

What the rather large Bulldog offensive line must do to have the upper hand over the Plainsmen is contain the Monterey running game. According to Brown, his is one of the best.

"Our backfield is as good as I've had a chance to coach," said Brown, a former coach at Joshua. "They're real talented kids that play the game well. Our offensive line is not that big but it has some quickness," with senior tackle David Welton (210) and junior center Greg Cushman (205).

As for the Bulldogs, according to McCutchen it has been a tough week.

"It's been difficult," McCutchen said. "Coaches have been tied up in in-service. That kind of hampers us as far as our practices."

McCutchen said that some things are difficult to determine when looking at a team only through a scrimmage-type situation, but he did add that he expects the Monterey defense to be "a lot different, but I don't expect their offense to be much different."

McCutchen said the most important thing for Midland High is being able to adapt to the changes that have occurred in the Monterey program, some of which are known to the 'Dogs, others of which aren't.

"(With Brown) being a new coach, we don't know what to expect. They can go back and look at our films because we haven't changed. They

Challenges small and large

Area Football

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Many area high school football coaches get a good chance to gauge their team's progress with games against larger or smaller schools.

This week is no exception. Several area schools open their regular seasons tonight with games against foes in the class directly above or below.

For example, Class 3A Lamesa faces Class 4A Levelland; Class 2A McCamey faces Class 3A Kermit; Class 3A Crane travels to Class 2A Reagan County; and Class A Rankin hosts Class 2A Iraan.

In other games involving area teams, Andrews travels to Wolfforth Frenship; Greenwood hosts Denver City; and Stanton opens at home with Seagraves.

OF COURSE, some of the numbers involved aren't as lopsided as the class designation might indicate. For example, Lamesa's enrollment of 650 students isn't all that much lower than Levelland's 750. In fact, the Tors were in Class 4A until this season, when declining enrollment finally brought about the switch to Class 3A.

Levelland coach Buster Leaf, the former McCamey mentor, said the class difference is no difference at all as far as the Lobos and Tors are concerned.

"Levelland has played Lamesa for years in the first game of the season," Leaf said. "The competition should be very equal, because we're really not that much bigger.

"The kids at Lamesa should have a little more renewed excitement because of dropping to 4A," Leaf added.

HOW ABOUT that, Clyde Noonkester?

Noonkester, the taciturn Lamesa coach, said the Tors and Lobos could be stepping into their own private Twilight Zone tonight.

"There's a lot of unknowns," he said. "It's the first game of the year and they have new coaches."

Leaf enjoyed tremendous success at McCamey, but he realizes that Levelland, 1-9 last season, may be a different story — at least in the beginning.

"It's not a little challenge, it's a major challenge," Leaf said.

THOUGH RANKIN has dropped to Class A this season, the Devils' 130 students is only one less than the 131 credited to Iraan by the 1988-89 Texas Sports Guide of the High Schools and Colleges.

Arbitrators rule against swimmer

Associated Press

DENVER — A distraught Angel Myers was denied her request for reinstatement to the U.S. Olympic swimming team.

A three-member arbitration panel rendered its decision after a closed door meeting Thursday night that stretched into the early morning.

"I'm really disappointed," said a teary-eyed Myers. "I didn't expect it to turn out this way."

Myers, expected to be a strong contender in five swimming events in Seoul this month, was removed from the Olympic team Sunday after failing two drug tests, which she said detected a birth-control prescription, not steroids as officials claimed.

The swimming star said she spoke to the panel for only 10 minutes.

"I told them the truth," Myers said. "To my knowledge, I have not taken any anabolic steroids. I was asked directly whether or not I had taken any anabolic steroids. I told them the truth. I didn't."

Myers was accompanied by her father, Kirt Myers, who testified earlier, and F. Wilson Myers, her uncle and a Birmingham, Ala., lawyer.

The arbitrators had been asked to render a decision in time to meet the deadline of 11 a.m. EDT today when U.S. athletes must be certified with the Seoul Olympic Organizing Committee, according to Ray Essick, executive director of U.S. Swimming.

Myers had attempted to be retested at a United States Olympic Committee-approved lab in Indianapolis, but was denied the opportunity.

Testimony revealed that Dr. Donald Catlin, head of the USOC lab at UCLA, had discussed the Myers case with the head of the Indianapolis lab. After talking with Catlin, the Indiana lab refused to test Myers, saying it could not afford to have its USOC accreditation taken away.

Jack Berryhill, Myers' Denver attorney, said 10 testing samples had been taken on five different dates within 1½ weeks right after the U.S. Swimming Trials in Austin, Texas. He said "they were all positive for certain substances that could indicate the presence of steroids."

"We would've liked the opportunity to have a second opinion by a second independent source."

Berryhill questioned whether the substances found were steroids or components of Myers' prescription.

Barron Pittenger, USOC's executive director, who would make the final decision on Myers' reinstatement, wouldn't comment on the ruling, but said he had "no objections to her (Myers) being reinstated."

Smoking ban in effect at games

From Staff Reports

Officials with the Midland Independent School District Athletic Department remind football fans that due to a measure recently passed by the Midland School Board smoking will not be allowed in the stands or restrooms at Memorial Stadium during games this fall.

Athletic director Gil Bartosh also announced that all forms of tobacco are prohibited in the stand and restrooms.

Tobacco usage, though, will be permitted underneath the stands.

Athletic officials also released season ticket figures Thursday afternoon and new records were set by fans of both schools.

Midland Lee backers bought 3,221 tickets for four Rebel home dates, the first being next Friday against Del Rio.

Midland High fans purchased 1,091 tickets, breaking the old record of 1,035 set in 1985. The Bulldogs have six home dates this season.

Nip in the air means it's time for football

Williamson

Did you feel that nip in the air this week?

Right on cue. The signal for football season. The rite of fall.

Midland Lee might have a hard time believing that football season is here with a trip to Killeen today where temperatures have been soaring off the marker this summer. But the fans and players in Midland welcomed any brief respite from the Dog Days of August.

If you have never played football, you can never understand what that first cool front means. I'll never forget a day in the summer of 1963 while in a practice uniform of the Snyder Tigers.

We took to the practice field that summer day with the red stuff hovering at the 105 degree mark. (Note: That was a long time ago and the temperature may have climbed a bit over the past few years.) You often hear about the lack of humidity in West Texas, but it was hot and muggy on that particular day, even though there wasn't a cloud in the sky.

We had this drill back then, known far and wide as Bull in the Ring. It was the bane of our football existence at Snyder High. The day coaches pulled out that drill was the day you prayed for death. Death was a better alternative than Bull in the Ring. In fact, it was the preferred fate.

Of course, or there would be no story, this particular day was set for Bull in the Ring. You hear all these stories about how certain kids live for contact. I guess I just never met one of them because I never saw anyone who enjoyed Bull in the Ring.

They put a guy in the middle of a ring of players and the coach points at a player to come out and hit the guy in the middle. Sometimes he would point to two or three players at a time. The beloved object was to get a solid hit on the guy in the middle when his back was turned, thus reducing him to mere ashes.

By the time you got out of the ring, usually by crawling, you hated the coach, the player/players who hit you and the world in general. It was your first real taste of what the word "survival" means. Only a tour to Vietnam added to the meaning.

Well, like I said, it was hot this day and I knew it was my last day on earth after Bull in the Ring. I felt like I was going to pass out and was hoping I would. I couldn't seem to breathe. It was like someone stole the air.

But at that precise moment a cool front hit. The temperature dropped from 105 to the mid-70s in about 15 minutes. It was a bit like being reborn.

To this very day, the first cool front always gives me a good feeling. And with that feeling here are the first picks for District 4-5A.

Midland High 21, Lubbock Monterey 18: The Plainsmen will be salty early since they had no spring training and an extra week this summer to work. Monterey was impressive against Abilene High in a scrimmage, but the 'Dogs have some weapons to throw out ...

Killeen 28, Midland Lee 24: In two previous meetings between these teams only 25 points have been scored, but these two could be offensive powers this year. Unfortunately, this may be a little early for an inexperienced team like Lee to handle before school even starts ...

Odessa Permian 40, El Paso Austin 0: The Panthers are without star running back James Miles due to a bad knee, so that will keep the score down ...

Amarillo Palo Duro 22, Odessa High 12: A tough early test for the Bronchos, who don't need to be playing against a district favorite at this point in time ...

Austin LBJ 28, San Angelo 14: LBJ is favored to win the District 25-5A title this year even though it is the seventh smallest 5A school in the state. Still, they have 14 returning starters back. This could be a tough outing for the Bobkitties ...

Abilene High 21, Wichita Falls Rider 7: Midland High will be watching this game with interest since the Bulldogs have a date with Rider later this season ...

Brownwood 30, Abilene Cooper 20: Cooper has no defense and Scotty Pugh. That means points on both sides of the ball ...

If these predictions hold true, the league will experience a 3-4 record on opening day, and when was the last time we ever saw that from this league?

Detroit manager Sparky Anderson makes an unpopular decision with pitcher Doyle Alexander, lifting him in the Tigers' loss.

Parrish leads Bosox

AL Roundup

By BILL BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

Joe Morgan predicted Larry Parrish would hit his first home run since July 20, and the Boston Red Sox designated hitter made his manager look prophetic.

"He must be psychic or something," Parrish said of Morgan after his two-run homer lifted Boston to a 4-2 victory over California on Thursday night. "He told me I'd hit one tonight."

The victory cut second-place Boston's deficit in the American League East to one game behind the Detroit Tigers, who lost 6-2 to Milwaukee.

Parrish's 10th homer of the season — and third for Boston — gave the Red Sox a 3-2 lead and keyed a four-run sixth inning off Terry Clark, 6-3.

"I think he tried to get the (0-and-2) pitch away, but he made it too good. Too much plate," Parrish said. "It was good for me and good for the club. Anytime I get a chance to help the club, I'm happy about that."

"He left the ball out over the plate to Parrish," California manager Cookie Rojas said. "It should've been a 2-1 game, but he made that pitch too good."

With Boston trailing 2-0 on Wally Joyner's two-run homer in the fifth, Dwight Evans led off the sixth with a single off Clark. Evans moved around to third base on a pair of groundouts before scoring on Todd Benzinger's single.

Parrish followed with his line-drive homer to left-center field. Jody Reed then drew a walk and scored as Mike Brown lost Rich Gedman's drive to left in the lights for a run-scoring double.

"Detroit is all but trying to give this thing to us," Gardner said. "We've got to keep plugging away. We're in a pennant race, and if we win, it doesn't matter who gets the victory or how long guys get to pitch."

The win snapped a three-game losing streak for the Red Sox, who were swept by Oakland in their prior series.

Blue Jays 5, Rangers 1

Toronto's Jimmy Key held Texas to six hits in eight innings and Ernie Whitt homered for the Blue Jays.

Key, 9-4, struck out five and walked two before being relieved by Tom Henke to start the ninth. Scott Fletcher's RBI infield single in the second inning accounted for the Rangers' only run.

Knuckleballer Charlie Hough, 11-15, who gave up six hits, four walks and five runs in 5 1-3 innings, held the Blue Jays hitless for 3 1-3 innings until Whitt ignited a three-run rally by connecting on a 2-0 pitch for his 11th homer.

Later in the inning, Rick Leach hit an RBI single and another run scored on the play as right fielder Ruben Sierra booted the ball for an error.

Royals 5, Twins 2

Kansas City right-hander Mark Gubicza held Minnesota in check for the second time in five days and Jamie Quirk knocked in two runs.

Gubicza, 17-7, who struck out a club-record 14 Twins on Aug. 27 to defeat them 4-1, allowed nine hits in his latest victory, with eight strikeouts and no walks.

Kansas City took a 4-0 lead with three runs on five hits in the fourth inning off Bert Blyleven, 9-13, making his 600th career start. Frank White, Quirk and Bill Pecota hit RBI singles during the inning.

The Twins broke Gubicza's shutout in the sixth on a one-out triple by Kirby Puckett and Kent Hrbek's third straight single. Puckett added an RBI single in the eighth for Minnesota's second run, giving him 60 multiple-hit games this season.

Quirk's seventh homer of the year, leading off the seventh, made it 5-1.

Brewers 6, Tigers 2

Milwaukee beat Detroit as Mike Birkbeck and Chris Bosio combined on a four-hitter and Rob Deer hit a two-run single to highlight the Brewers' five-run fifth inning.

The first-place Tigers, who have lost eight of their last 10, didn't get a hit off Birkbeck, 10-6, until the fifth.

Birkbeck, 8-1 with eight straight victories since being called up from the minors July 2, gave up four hits — including a two-run homer by Lou Whitaker — and walked one in 5 1-3 innings.

Midlander first in national tourney

From Staff Reports

Midland golfer J.J. Jaeger fired a 6-under par 66 Thursday to take over first place in his flight at the 1988 DuPont World Amateur Handicap championship in Myrtle Beach, SC.

Jaeger is in the 17.0-18.9 handicap group and is one of only 24 first place finishers. Tournament officials said as many as 2,180 linksters have taken part in the tournament which is being played on 37 courses in and around Myrtle Beach.

Play continues today in the tourney.

Diablos win West ...

Texas League

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Frank Mattox had three hits, including a double, Thursday night to lead the El Paso Diablos to a 4-3 victory over the San Antonio Missions and advance to the Texas League championship series against Tulsa.

Tulsa defeated Shreveport, 2-1, to take the Texas League East title and advance to the championship series against West champ El Paso.

San Antonio scored first in the third inning when Manny Francois walked and eventually came home on a throwing error.

Mattox, Mario Monico and Greg Vaughn slugged consecutive singles and George Canale walked to score the first run for El Paso. Todd Brown followed with a sacrifice fly and Fred Mitchell's RBI single increased San Antonio's lead to 3-1.

Mattox doubled in the fourth and the margin moved to 4-1 when Vaughn drove him home with a single.

The Missions scored in the sixth inning when Jose Mota walked, Wayne Kirby doubled and Ed Amelung hit a sacrifice fly. The final run came in the seventh when Francois' sacrifice fly drove home Luis Lopez, who had walked.

... and it's Tulsa in the East

SHREVEPORT (AP) — Outfielder George Threadgill drove in both runs as the Tulsa Drillers defeated the Shreveport Captains, 2-1, Thursday night to advance to the Texas League championship series for the first time since 1982.

Threadgill, who was 3-for-4 and stole a base, had run-scoring singles in the fifth and seventh innings.

Shreveport's only run came on a second inning homer by Deron McCue.

John Barfield was the winning pitcher. Dean Freeland, who was 11-11 in the regular season, was the loser.

Tulsa, the Texas League East champion, will meet El Paso in the best-of-7 league championship series with the first game at Tulsa Sunday.

JIMMY PATTERSON

Who'll win what this year (maybe)

Patterson

It is the time of year when all sportswriters feel the urgency to make picks concerning the upcoming football season and the end of the baseball season.

I might as well join the crowd. It is, after all, what I get paid to do.

First of all, before the football picks, look for the Mets and Oakland to be in the World Series. As to who will come out on top between those two, who knows. Pitching wins in the long run, but Oakland's firepower has, often times, been overwhelming.

Not to mention, the Athletics have at least four major post season awards virtually wrapped up: Tony Larussa (Manager of the Year), Jose Canseco (Most Valuable Player), Walt Weiss (Rookie of the Year) and Dennis Eckersley (Fireman of the Year) should take home post-season trophies.

Detroit should win the AL East and the Dodgers the NL West, but the Mets and Athletics are strong, strong favorites to make it to the Fall Classic.

Now, on to football ...

First, the Southwest Conference.

The guys in the SWC seem insistent on rebuilding an image left tarnished over the past few years by wrongdoings and booster shenanigans.

If the Texas Aggies can escape an unfavorable ruling by the NCAA in two weeks, they will again run away with the conference. The Aggies, shame on them, are faced with penalties for such indiscretions as giving free T-shirts and caps to prospective recruits.

Despite their boring performance against the Cornhuskers in the Kickoff Classic last Saturday, the Ags will rebound, go 3-0 for the remainder of their non-conference schedule and follow that up with a 7-0 SWC mark to finish 10-1 on the year, good for a Top 5 finish.

I'd like to think the Red Raiders will finish second. I'd like to think that, but I'm not bold enough to write it just yet.

As for the national title, whoever wins Saturday's Miami-Florida State game will win the title; whoever loses will finish second; Nebraska will finish third, A&M fourth.

Oklahoma? Forget it. Maybe somewhere between 15 and 20.

Fot the NFL, this is always fun as well as a risk.

AFC EAST: Buffalo by default. What used to be the most exciting division is now in a shambles.

AFC WEST: Denver. The Broncos picked up Tony Dorsett to add to an offense which already has John Elway and otherwise return almost unscathed from their scalding defeat in the Super Bowl last January. Look for San Diego to have one of the worst teams in recent NFL memory.

AFC CENTRAL: These days, in one of the best divisions, the winner is strong enough to go to the Super Bowl, but won't. I say that because Cleveland should go to the Super Bowl, but won't win the division, thanks to the upstart Houston Oilers. How do I know? I don't. I just picked Houston for shock value. Honestly the Oilers do have what it takes to win the Central, which should make Dallas fans fume. (For a ghood read, check Sports Illustrated's NFL issue and the story on Mr. Everything, Bernie Kosar, of Cleveland).

NFC EAST: Washington in a repeat. The Giants are an easy wild-card choice thanks to a wimpy schedule. New York has to play Detroit twice in three weeks. Can't get much wimpier than that. But, the Giants still have to play Washington twice.

Dallas? It would take a column all to itself to explain how come they will finish no higher than fourth.

NFC CENTRAL: Minnesota by a landslide. Chicago is history, what with Walter Payton retired, Willie Gault in a Raider uniform and Wilbur Marshall in Washington. As for Tampa Bay, Detroit and Green Bay, maybe they should apply for entrance into the USFL ...

NFC WEST: With Joe Montana and Steve Young throwing to the likes of Jerry Rice, there's no way anyone could pick against them. So I won't. But New Orleans will give them a run for their money and, thus, grab the other NFC Wild Card position this season.

AFC CHAMPIONSHIP: Denver over Houston.

NFC CHAMPIONSHIP: Minnesota over San Francisco.

SUPER BOWL: Denver will finally shake its "Can't Win the Big One" label, claiming a close one over the Vikings.

All these predictions make all the sense in the world to me, which is probably why at season's end, none of them will end up being right.

Trojans, Peete ambush Boston College Eagles

Top 20

By DAVE O'HARA

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Quarterback Rodney Peete and the eighth-ranked Southern California Trojans let the Boston College Eagles do the talking.

So, on their first trip east since a victory at Pitt in 1974, Peete and his teammates let talent prove itself.

"We heard all week they were going to stuff us," Peete said Thursday night after leading USC to a 34-7 romp over BC in a 1988 opener.

Frustrated in a 23-17 loss which ended a 10-game winning streak last Sept. 19 in Los Angeles, BC vowed vengeance in a renovated Alumni Stadium before a crowd of 32,000.

The Trojans, who used the victory over the Eagles as a springboard to the Pac-10 championship and a trip to the Rose Bowl last season, simply pounded BC into submission in a nationally televised mismatch.

Peete, a fifth year senior with enormous talent, said the Trojans "talked about" BC comments. "But we're not a team that puts everything up on the bulletin board."

Indeed, the Trojans do not. They just put things up on the board that counts, like the scoreboard.

Peete, one of the nation's premier quarterbacks at a school noted for producing great runners, picked apart the BC defense.

He burned the Eagles with two scoring passes of more than 50 yards in the teams' first meeting in history a year ago. This time he took a shorter route.

Peete completed 12 of 19 passes for 173 yards and one touchdown in leading USC to a 21-0 lead before BC scored on a 60-yard pass play from Mark Kampaus to Tom Waddle just before the half.

Then, Peete hit on 9 of 14 passes for 98 yards in the second half, going overhead only to complement his powerful gang of runners who hit the line 53 times for 229 of the Trojans 502 yards.

Owner of a dozen USC passing records, Peete tied another with his 37th career TD pass to Gary Wellman just before BC's only score.

His overhead wizardry played a part in each of USC's other scores. He later said he suffered a cramp in his throwing arm for a while. BC never noticed. There was no cramp in his style.

"I don't think Rodney Peete played any differently than he did last year," BC Coach Jack Bicknell said. "He is a great player. He got the ball off just in time every time. Our defensive line just couldn't get to him and he displayed a great short passing game."

Bicknell, whose Eagles dropped to 5-6 last year after the loss to USC, was disappointed and concerned over "a very frustrating game for all of us."

"I think USC is a better team than the one we played last year," Bicknell said. "We just didn't play very well. The offense didn't play well, the defense didn't play well, and I didn't coach very well."

USC Coach Larry Smith felt his Trojans played "pretty darn well" — even if he and his staff got "greedy" at times.

"I thought we played very, very hard," Smith said, even absolving Peete for throwing interceptions on two long passes.

"Rodney played a fine game, he was really sharp early," Smith said. "We made a few mistakes, but that was the coaches who were being greedy.

"We kept our game under control and I'm pleased with our fire."

"Southern Cal played an excellent game and proved why they are ranked among the best teams in the country," Bicknell said. "I think the key to their success was the short passing game."

USC was so dominating that it only had to punt once while holding BC to 253 total yards, including 65 on the ground. The Trojans ran off 87 plays, 30 more than the Eagles.

Junior Aaron Emanuel, a backup fullback, scored two touchdowns, the first on as short run with the game just 3:17 old, the other on a pass from place-kick holder Chris Sperle after a high snap on a field goal attempt in the third quarter.

Quin Rodriguez booted field goals from 33 and 39 yards in the first half and Leroy Holt added an insurance touchdown on a short run in the fourth period.

In another game Thursday night, Wyoming edged mistake-prone Brigham Young 24-14 as Randy Welniak tossed two touchdown passes and ran for a third score.

The Cowboys went 8-0 for the WAC crown a year ago and opened defense of that title with a stellar defensive effort in their first game of the 1988 season.

Brigham Young lost starting quarterback Sean Covey to a mild concussion late in the first half and backup Ty Detmer threw three third-quarter interceptions on consecutive drives.

Wyoming's Dave Edeen sparked the defense with five sacks and one interception.

Twelve other members of the Associated Press Top Twenty are in action Saturday, headed by a nationally televised night game (CBS-TV, 9 p.m., EDT) between last year's No. 1 and No. 2 teams — runnerup Florida State at defending national champion Miami. It's the first time the top two teams from the previous season have opened against each other.

In this week's rankings, however, Florida State is No. 1 and Miami No. 6.

Lynn reports late after trade to Tigers

By JIM IRWIN

DETROIT (AP) — When Detroit General Manager Bill Lajoie traded for veteran outfielder Fred Lynn, he thought he was getting pennant insurance.

As it turns out, it will be a short-term policy — one that expires when the Tigers' regular season ends.

Lynn, caught up in circumstances partly of his own making, missed by 10 minutes a deadline for joining his new club. That means he won't qualify for postseason play if Detroit wins the American League East title.

"Sure, I'd like to be eligible, but I'm looking forward to next year," said Lynn, who went 1-for-4 as designated hitter Thursday night in Detroit's 6-2 loss to Milwaukee. "I came to a team that's a contender now, and I expect it to be a contender in the future."

Southern California's fabled traffic jams play a major role in this convoluted story, which Lynn recounted to virtually the entire Detroit sports press corps upon his arrival Thursday at Tiger Stadium.

Lajoie had been talking to the Baltimore Orioles since July about acquiring Lynn, 36, a 14-year major league veteran who was expected to shore up Detroit's sagging offense. Lajoie closed the deal between 7 and 8 p.m. EDT Wednesday, swapping three minor leaguers to be named later.

Lynn learned of the deal in Anaheim, Calif., where the Orioles were playing the California Angels. He initially rejected the trade, citing a no-trade clause in his Baltimore contract, then changed his mind.

Having missed a commercial flight to Chicago, where Detroit was beating the White Sox 9-3 on Wednesday night, the Tigers chartered a Lear jet in hopes of getting him to Chicago's O'Hare Airport by midnight CDT — the postseason eligibility deadline.

It's 25 miles from Anaheim to Ontario (Calif.) International Airport, where the jet was waiting. Lynn found himself waiting, too — in a rented car caught up in a full-blown, early-evening traffic jam.

"It was rush hour, and you can't get anywhere at that time without a helicopter," he said. Lynn said he reached the airport an hour and 15 minutes later, parked the car on the runway and headed for O'Hare.

"We took off about 7 p.m. L.A. time," Lynn said. "They projected the flying time at about four hours, two minutes ... We got up to about 40,000 feet, up in the thin air, and really pushed the thing."

Despite tailwind-aided speeds reaching 500 mph, it became apparent that Lynn wouldn't reach Chicago before the deadline. There was an out, however: Lynn still could qualify for postseason play if the pilot at least made radio contact with the O'Hare tower by midnight CDT Wednesday.

He couldn't.

Lynn said they began trying contact O'Hare about 11:40 p.m. CDT but were too far away.

"Maybe if we'd had a telephone instead of a radio on board, we could have reached them," Lynn said. "It was about 12:10 a.m. (CDT Thursday) when we finally made contact, and we landed about 20 minutes later.

"We did everything humanly possible to get there ... (but) the tailwinds just weren't big enough for us."

A resigned Lajoie said the 24-man playoff roster he turned in Thursday didn't include Lynn's name.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will triumph often — always when you least expect it. Experience is what counts in moving toward your career goals. Your money tree shows signs of substantial growth beginning in October. Find more interesting companions and less tedious activities. True happiness for you means being fully immersed in a new work project! A relationship that was teetering on the brink finds more solid footing. You learn an important lesson that will benefit you the rest of your life.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: violin maker Nicolo Amati, actress Eileen Brennan, cartoonist Mort Walker, basketball coach Dick Motta, auto designer Ferdinand Porsche.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): This should be one of those days you wish would go on forever. Outdoor fun draws the family closer together. An unexpected call or visitor adds an extra dimension to your activities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are able to love with more enthusiasm. A good day to polish the car, wash windows or clean up around home. Get ready for a great weekend! Accept a last-minute invitation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make a schedule for yourself and treat household chores the way you would a project at work. Recruit other members of the family and you will be finished quickly. Heed a reluctance to go out tonight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Let others take the lead while you sit back and relax. A good book may be better company than an old beau. Build a relationship with someone who will always be there for you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Find a new "watering hole" for weekend visits if your usual companions encourage bad habits. Protect your good name. You can pull off a financial coup next week if you plan carefully.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An attempt to help someone could backfire. Keep accurate financial records. Let the dust settle before pursuing a matter further with a foe. Your personal desires could interfere with your duty.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New social contacts bring you greater prestige and could open the door to exciting romance. Keep your car in good repair to avoid expensive bills later.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not give yourself any extra worries. Deal with a problem realistically. A trade-off will let you make a love relationship work. Your creativity is at a peak. Use it for financial gain.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are able to handle almost anything that comes along this weekend. Keep your own counsel. Travel is OK, but would prove more rewarding later in the year.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A change of pace will lift you out of a melancholy mood. Intellectual exercises conducted now will give you a sharper edge later. Your financial fortunes could suddenly soar. Build savings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Not a good time to be outspoken. Mend your fences with a wealthy family member. Short-term agreements are best for what you have in mind.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your search for an antique could reach a satisfactory conclusion today. Look for clothing bargains for the whole family. Keep entertainment costs down. Entertaining at home lets you get more for your dollar.

Recently, we have shown several examples of deceptive plays that do not need to be elaborate to succeed. Once in a while, however, a player must weave a very tangled web if he wants to trap an opponent.

It is difficult to fault North-South for reaching an inferior slam. As little as the jack of spades instead of the queen-jack of clubs would have made the venture sound indeed.

West led the jack of diamonds, and the only legitimate way for declarer to hold his trump losers to one is to play an opponent for a doubleton ace of trumps, then lead through him up to an honor and play low from both hands to the next trick. The technical name for this maneuver is the Obligatory Finesse. However, that wasn't possible here, but declarer succeeded in pulling the wool over the defender's eyes and so came home nevertheless.

As the first move in his canvas of false images, declarer covered the jack with the queen. East put up the king and declarer won. Next, he cashed the ace of clubs before leading a low spade toward dummy's king.

Let's move into the West seat. From that vantage point, declarer had played as if he had a doubleton diamond and a singleton ace of clubs. He was now trying to get to the table with the king of spades to get rid of his diamond loser, or losers, on the good clubs. West was having none of that, so he shot up with the ace of trumps to try to cash the ten of diamonds. Finis.

Springsteen, Gabriel, Sting will tour to raise consciousness for Amnesty

LONDON (AP) — Amnesty International says it hopes to raise the conscience of youth when Bruce Springsteen, Peter Gabriel, and other rock stars launch a worldwide concert tour dedicated to human rights.

The six-week tour, which opens tonight at London's Wembley Stadium, will go to 20 cities in North America, Asia, Hungary, Africa, and Latin America.

The $23 million extravaganza is to mark the 40th anniversary of the United Nations Universal Declaration on Human Rights. Organizers expect sell-out crowds but stress that raising money is not the sole intention.

"This tour is not about charity, it's about justice," said Jack Healey, head of the U.S. division of the organization, which monitors human rights abuses and won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977.

"What we're talking about is human rights and the seriousness of the issue...there's too much torture, too many people being killed," he said.

The pop stars taking part are both realistic and romantic about playing for human rights.

"When I was younger I thought maybe you could pick a guitar up and you could change the world," Springsteen, 38, said at a news conference Thursday.

"I don't really believe that any more. But I do believe you can save a life," he added. "Someone comes to the show, they hear the message, they hear what we are singing about, they go home, they write a letter and someone gets out of prison early. That's pretty good."

Springsteen is sharing a bill on the 35,000-mile tour with Gabriel and Sting, American folk singer Tracey Chapman and Sengal's Youssou N'Dour.

More than 1 million people are expected to see the concerts live, with television audiences of many more.

Ticket prices vary from rich to poorer countries — $37.60 in London and $3 in Budapest, Hungary. The final concert is scheduled in the Argentine capital, Buenos Aires, on Oct. 15.

The U.S. sports goods manufacturer Reebok has underwritten the cost of the tour, and organizers say they hope it will break even.

"This is definitely not for fund-raising," said Healey, who put together a two-week American tour called "Conspiracy of Hope" in 1986 featuring Gabriel, Sting and an Irish group, U2.

It convinced him that rock music works for human rights. Amnesty's U.S. membership rose by 100,000 to 250,000 in the year following the tour.

The organization has a worldwide membership of 750,000.

Every audience member will get a card with the text of the U.N. declaration on human rights. Spectators will also be able to sign slips of paper saying they uphold the declaration. At the end of tour, Amnesty plans to deliver these to the governments of the nations visited.

Amnesty's venture is the latest using rock music to raise consciences.

Irish rock singer Bob Geldof's Live Aid concert in 1985 raised millions of dollars for the starving Ethiopians, and this year thousands turned out to mark South African black leader Nelson Mandela's 70th birthday with a London concert.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Clint Eastwood's movie about jazz great Charlie "Bird" Parker will have its U.S. premiere in a Kansas City suburb, and two men who performed with the late saxophonist plan to be there.

Actor Forest Whitaker, who portrays the Kansas City native in the movie "Bird," is scheduled to attend the Oct. 9 premiere in Overland Park, Kan., with Max Roach and Dexter Gordon, organizer Dellia Young said Thursday.

Bruce Springsteen and Sting

Gordon and Roach played with Parker, a Kansas City native who helped create be-bop and died in 1955 at age 34. Gordon himself starred in a jazz movie, "Round Midnight."

Ms. Young said she was not permitted to say whether Eastwood, who produced and directed "Bird," would attend the premiere. "Clint Eastwood wants to focus on his star," she said. "It is verboten to say if he will be there."

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Nobel Prize-winner Luis W. Alvarez, a brilliant, wide-ranging physicist who helped develop the atomic bomb and a controversial theory that asteroids or comets wiped out the dinosaurs, has died at age 77.

Alvarez died at his home in this San Francisco Bay college town late Wednesday after a long battle with cancer, it was announced Thursday.

Alvarez

Colleagues described Alvarez as a scientific Renaissance man whose colorful career took him from wartime radar systems to UFO sightings, secrets of an Egyptian pyramid and an analysis of the assassination of President Kennedy.

"Luis Alvarez was a stunningly creative individual," David A. Shirley, director of Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory, said Thursday. "His discoveries and inventions spanned an amazing range of the frontiers of man's knowledge over more than half a century."

Alvarez, who worked at the laboratory and the University of California, died of complications from operations for esophageal cancer, laboratory spokeswoman Mary Barberia said, quoting the physicist's widow, Janet.

His health had declined since surgery for a benign brain tumor last fall, the spokeswoman said.

Alvarez won the Nobel Prize in physics in 1968 for developing the liquid-hydrogen bubble chamber and for discovering numerous atomic particles with the device. The chamber is filled with a transparent liquid so that charged particles and their collisions can be studied by photographing the bubbles and boiling that occur along their paths.

In the late 1970s, Alvarez made headlines with the theory that asteroids or comets striking the Earth 65 million years ago killed the dinosaurs by kicking up huge, dense clouds of dust and smoke.

Jobless rate up as hiring boom ends

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's unemployment rate rose to 5.6 percent in August as four months of hiring booms on factory assembly lines and in retail stores came to an abrupt halt, the government said today.

The Labor Department said the number of jobless Americans jumped by 226,000 to 6,851,000 in August while the number of those with jobs rose by only 121,000 to 115,180,000.

The 0.2 percentage point increase from July's civilian jobless rate of 5.4 percent followed a 0.1 percent rise from June's 14-year low of 5.3 percent.

Most of the increased joblessness was suffered by adult men, with their unemployment rate rising 0.4 percentage points to 4.9 percent. The jobless rate among adult women, meanwhile, fell from 5.1 percent to 4.8 percent, the Labor Department said.

A separate survey of business payrolls — which many economists consider a more reliable indicator of the economy's health — showed 219,000 new jobs in August, well below the 400,000 average monthly increase in June and July.

The last time the civilian unemployment rate was at 5.6 percent was in May.

The goods-producing side of the economy lost jobs for the first time since last January, with employment in manufacturing dropping by 5,000 after a 70,000 jump in July.

The Labor Department said small employment gains in printing and publishing and export-related industries such as machinery and electrical equipment were more than offset by 9,000 job losses in textile and apparel plants and smaller declines in several other manufacturing industries.

Employment in oil and gas drilling also declined slightly, but it rose a minuscule 3,000 jobs in construction.

On the services side of the economy, large monthly increases in retail trade hiring — 80,000 in July alone — slowed to just 23,000 new jobs last month, virtually all in grocery stores.

Other recent high-growth job areas also slowed. Business services such as temporary help firms added just 16,000 new workers, compared with average monthly increases of 60,000 through the spring and early summer.

Texas unemployment up

AUSTIN (AP) — The unemployment rate in Texas for August was 6.8 percent, up 0.5 percent from July's 6.3 percent rate, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reported Friday.

"The number of persons employed and the number unemployed both grew during the month," said Nic Santangelo, chief of economic analysis in the bureau's Dallas office.

Santangelo said the number of people employed in Texas last month totaled 7.8 million. The number of unemployed was 567,000. He said that gave Texas an August labor force of 8.4 million.

"Although many persons obviously found work, that were about the same number that did not," Santangelo said.

Santangelo said that compared to a year ago, the unemployment rate declined by 1.5 percentage points. It was 8.3 percent in August of 1987. But he said the slight increase this August broke a trend of five consecutive monthly declines in the Texas unemployment rate.

"What we're seeing is a Texas economy that continues to improve, but at a slow, agonizing pace," he said.

"There is nothing really statistically big in these numbers this month. All it is, is just normal summer volatility. We've got a very dynamic labor force out there, kids moving in and out of school, in and out of work. And not only kids, but the college level youth as well."

Gov. Bill Clements' office had no comment on the latest report .

Buyers lower posting 25 cents

From Staff and Wire Reports

Soft spot market prices were reflected in West Texas Intermediate postings Thursday as many crude buyers lowered their prices 25 cents per barrel to $14.50.

Among the companies dropping their WTI posted price were Permian Corp., Phillips Petroleum Co., Enron Oil Trading & Transportation, Sun Marketing & Refining Co. and Conoco Inc.

Near-month futures contracts slipped further in early trading this morning, sliding 6 cents from Thursday's close of $15.08.

Contracts for October delivery of WTI fell 10 cents per barrel Thursday. Other contract months also dropped.

Contracts for refined petroleum products finished mixed. Wholesale unleaded gasoline for October delivery rose 0.36 cent to finish at 44.71 cents a gallon.

Analysts said strength in the near-term gasoline and heating oil months prevented further losses in crude oil. They attributed the recent gains in refined products to poor refinery economics. Outdated equipment, for example, has lowered refinery capacity, keeping supply and demand nearly equal, they said.

"Refining capacity has been pared down to the point where refiners are having problems just keeping up with day-to-day demand," said Jayne Ball, commodity oil broker with Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

Analysts said crude oil recovered from midday lows after responding to reports that the United Arab Emirates would exceed the quota set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

In recent days, oil futures prices weakened after reports that OPEC's 13 member nations were exceeding their collective quotas by more than 3 million barrels.

"All this overproduction in a market where demand factors haven't been substantial tends to be a price weakening factor and the market goes down," Ms. Ball said. "UAE claims it's going to have production up to 1.9 million barrels per day, more than double its quota, which is about 990,000 barrels."

Three more Texas banks closed

DALLAS (AP) — Bad real estate loans were among the factors that led banking regulators to close Commercial State Bank of San Augustine, the largest of three Texas banks that failed this week.

The closings brought to 93 the number of bank failures in the state this year.

State banking commissioner Kenneth W. Littlefield closed Commercial State Bank, which had assets of about $25.9 million. The FDIC was named receiver of the bank, which reopens today as a branch of Hamilton National Bank, Hamilton.

First National Bank of Atascocita in Humble reopened as a branch of First Interstate Bank of Texas NA of Houston, and Pioneer National Bank of Arlington reopened as a branch of Deposit Guaranty Bank of Dallas, the FDIC said.

Littlefield said an examination disclosed unsafe lending practices, including a large concentration in speculative real estate loans in the Dallas area. The recent examination showed loan and related losses of more than $3.6 million, which rendered the bank insolvent.

He said many of the bank's loan problems were a result of loan participations purchased from Northwest Bank of Dallas, which was declared insolvent in January.

Commercial State Bank's insured deposits and fully secured or preferred deposits will be transferred to the Hamilton bank. The FDIC said it arranged an insured deposit transfer because it was unable to determine the value of assets.

When Commercial State Bank closed, its deposits totaled about $24.9 million in 4,700 deposit accounts, including about $25,000 in 11 accounts that exceeded the federal insurance limit of $100,000, the FDIC said.

Deposits in the failed bank up to the $100,000 limit will be available Friday. Checks drawn on the failed bank's accounts, up to the insurance limit, will be honored, the FDIC said.

Insured depositors in the failed bank can automatically continue to bank at Hamilton. However, they should visit the acquiring bank during the next several weeks to discuss their relationship, the FDIC said.

Administration of the transferred insured deposits will be funded by an equivalent cash payment from the FDIC. The acquiring bank is paying the FDIC a premium of $151,110 for the right to receive the transferred deposits and will purchase $16.1 million of the failed bank's assets, including about $1.08 million in small loans, the FDIC said.

First Bankers gets capital boost

From Staff Reports

A capital infusion from its parent company may keep Midland's First Bankers Trust & Savings Association from being part of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board's "Southwest Plan" of thrift restructuring.

The association reported a loss of $1,559,708, or $1.54 per share, during the first half of 1988. For the second quarter, the loss was calculated at $1.09 per share, a total of $1,102,766.

Also during the quarter, the association's parent company, Southern Union Financial Corp., recapitalized the thrift through a stock distribution to the shareholders of Southern Union Co. on May 20.

As a condition of the distribution of the 1,009,654 shares, Southern Union was required to increase First Bankers' net worth to the minimum level required by the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp.

First Bankers' management has submitted an operating plan to the FHLB of Dallas in hopes of not being included in the mergers and acquisitions of the Southwest Plan.

The operating plan "is premised on First Bankers neither acquiring nor being acquired by another financial entity," according to a statement prepared by management.

The association has also petitioned the FSLIC to not have sanctions levied against it as a result of miscalculations of minimum net worth requirements at the thrift during the last five quarters.

The calculations made at the time of the Southern Union stock distribution and capital infusion were among those incorrectly made and the company noted in its press statement that there was an immediate capital deficiency of $334,000 at the time of the transaction.

The capital requirement for the savings and loan at mid-year was $4,848,000.

Continued unfavorable economics for thrifts makes it unlikely that First Bankers will be able to turn around recently sustained losses "in the immediate future," the company statement reads.

However, efforts to move toward profitability are being made, including increased efficiency through updated computer systems and evaluating personnel and branch office locations. The association has offices in Midland, Odessa and Stanton.

August boom fails to come for retailers

By JOYCE M. ROSENBERG
AP Business Writer

A hoped-for August recovery failed to materialize for the nation's biggest general retailers, according to sales figures released Thursday.

Wall Street analysts differed on what caused the disappointing results, with some blaming hot weather and others citing women's continued uncertainty about fashions.

In August 1987, apparel retailers fell into a now year-old slump as women refused to buy shorter skirts and fashions they perceived as boring.

In their reports, several retailers recorded sales increases under 3 percent — meaning the stores were losing ground to inflation, which has run at an annual rate of 4.5 percent so far this year.

The nation's largest retailer, Sears, Roebuck and Co., said its sales for the four weeks ended Aug. 27 totaled $2.45 billion, up from $2.3 billion.

K mart Corp. reported sales for the four weeks ended Aug. 24 of $1.97 billion, up from $1.85 billion.

Grocery prices to reflect drought

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas consumers may have a harder time finding grocery specials once retailers get past their Labor Day marketing efforts and prices more closely follow the effects of the drought, a state agriculture agent said.

Although stores will probably still feature special prices on some items, the sales should be less frequent and prices will likely be higher than usual for September.

"The drought has had a direct impact on meat, poultry and egg prices and the late summer produce," said Dr. Dick Edwards, an agricultural economist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service at Texas A&M University.

"It's also caused havoc in food retailing, because marketing programs which include special pricing, promotions, advertising and coupons are planned months in advance. Many fall promotions won't be started because of uncertainty of available supplies," he said.

For September, Texas Agricultural Extension Service economists and marketing specialists report the following "best buys":

Vegetables — Plentiful supplies of potatoes from the Texas High Plains and other producing states make weekly specials likely. Onions, carrots, cauliflower, green peppers and lettuce are also in good supply, but prices may not reflect it.

Fruit — Apple and pear crops are smaller than last year's record harvest, but prices should be at or just above last year's 49 cents per pound.

Meat — Beef prices dropped slightly in July because of herd sell-off, but the effects are lessening and animals now being processed were fed on higher priced grain. Specials will probably be limited to low-price cuts.

Poultry and eggs — Chicken prices will continue to increase because of higher feed prices and loss of flocks due to heat. The last remaining bargain may be the leg-thigh quarter, averaging 59-69 cents per pound, although last year the going rate was 29 cents per pound.

Furr's chairman looking to become cafeteria king

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — To Michael Levenson, the all-American standby of the cafeteria restaurant occupies a perfect niche in the often volatile restaurant industry.

"It's not a juicier hamburger, it's not a faster pizza. It's not a fad," said Levenson, chairman and chief executive officer of Furr's-Bishop's Cafeterias Inc. "And it's a reliable stream of cash flow."

The cash-rich, low-debt balance sheets of the cafeteria segment drew Levenson to acquire Furr's-Bishop's and has made Dallas-based Wyatt Cafeterias Inc. his acquisition target for the past two years.

Levenson said Thursday he won't give up trying to buy Wyatt, but refused to specify his plans if his latest overture is rejected. The closely held company has revenues of about $190 million and 120 restaurants nationwide.

After first offering to buy the company in May 1986, Levenson made several bids for Wyatt. On Wednesday he sweetened his offer for Wyatt to $188.1 million in cash and securities from an earlier $179.3 million bid.

The latest $91.25 per-share bid came after Wyatt rejected Levenson's $87 per-share cash offer in favor of one from a Wyatt management-based employee stock ownership plan that would pay $84 per share.

Shareholders are scheduled to vote on the ESOP offer Sept. 6, and Wyatt management hasn't yet responded to the latest Furr's-Bishop's offer, Levenson said.

"If we don't get the Wyatt's deal that doesn't mean we're out of the business of buying cafeterias," said Levenson, who owns a small stake in Wyatt. "We're going to grow this company."

The cafeteria business captured the 38-year-old Levenson's attention after he bid unsuccessfully on companies such as Midland-based Texas American Energy, Aloha Airlines of Hawaii and Tesoro Petroleum Corp. of San Antonio.

"When I began studying the restaurant industry, the cafeteria segment of the restaurant industry stood out with some real unique features," he said.

Convinced he had discovered a gold mine, in 1987 he acquired Furr's Cafeterias and Bishop Buffets, based in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, from K mart Corp for $237.5 million.

He then converted Furr's-Bishop's into a limited partnership, got it listed on the New York Stock Exchange and sold 11 million units at $10 apiece. The partnership has promised to pay a cash distribution of $1.30 this year.

Furr's-Bishops is the second largest operator of cafeterias in the nation, with 126 operating under the Furr's name in 10 states and 26 under the Bishop's name in seven states.

Narrow range contains dollar price

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was little changed today, trading within a narrow range on European markets as dealers awaited the announcement of U.S. employment data. Gold was lower.

Foreign exchange dealers said in early trading the dollar recovered slightly on support from the Japanese yen which had broken through a critical resistance point of 137.00 yen.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.05 yen to a closing 136.75 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 137.00 yen.

Other dollar rates in Europe at midmorning, compared with late Thursday's rates:

—1.8745 West German marks, down from 1.8795

—1.5815 Swiss francs, down from 1.5835

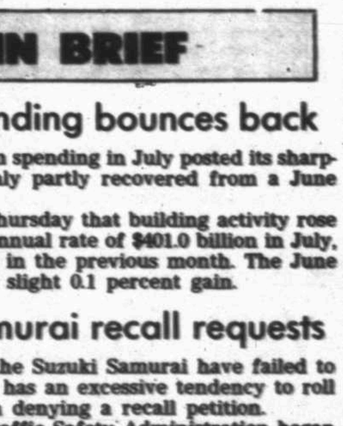
—2.1182 Dutch guilders, down from 2.1205

—1,397.50 Italian lire, down from 1,398.50

—1.2370 Canadian dollars, unchanged.



In London, the British pound fell to $1.6695 from $1.6730 late Thursday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $429.40 a troy ounce, down 10 cents from late Thursday's bid. At mid-morning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a lower recommended price of $428.95.

Dow dips temporarily below 2,000

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market took a spill Thursday as traders waited warily for the latest government report on employment.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 29.34 points to 2,002.31, trading briefly below 2,000 at its lowest levels of the day.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 3 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 374 up, 1,072 down and 496 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 144.09 million shares, against 130.48 million in the previous session.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $27.04 billion, or 1.03 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped 1.61 to 146.68.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

July construction spending bounces back

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction spending in July posted its sharpest increase in four months, but only partly recovered from a June slump, the government reports.

The Commerce Department said Thursday that building activity rose 1.2 percent to a seasonally-adjusted annual rate of $401.0 billion in July, following a revised 1.5 percent drop in the previous month. The June figure was originally estimated as a slight 0.1 percent gain.

Regulators refuse Samurai recall requests

WASHINGTON (AP) — Critics of the Suzuki Samurai have failed to demonstrate the sport-utility vehicle has an excessive tendency to roll over, federal regulators have said in denying a recall petition.

However, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration began proceedings Thursday to establish standards to protect drivers of all light-duty vehicles "against unreasonable risk of rollover."

FHLBB extends thrift talks with Bass group

WASHINGTON (AP) — Regulators extended by a day their talks with the Robert M. Bass Group of Fort Worth, Texas, on a federal rescue of American Savings and Loan Association of Stockton, Calif.

In a statement released Thursday, M. Danny Wall, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, described the negotiations as "intensive" and said any announcement would be delayed by 24 hours.

Industry sources say the proposal involves a contribution of about $500 million from the Bass Group and up to $2 billion in promissory notes from the bank board.

American sues 'abusive' frequent fliers

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — American Airlines says it hopes lawsuits it filed in three cities against individuals and companies will help end alleged abuses of the airline's frequent flier program.

"We simply cannot tolerate this situation," airline spokesman Lowell Duncan said Thursday.

American's frequent flier program, called AAdvantage, stipulates that customers earning free flights and other benefits cannot sell their tickets to others. Members of the program may give awards to anyone they choose, but the airline has repeatedly reminded people that the awards can not be sold, purchased or bartered.

JOBLESS

New employment in health services, which the government predicts will be the largest area of job growth in the 1990s as the Baby Boom population ages, slowed to 22,000 in August. It also had been rising an average 30,000 a month in the past year.

"The labor market showed less strength in August than earlier in the year," said Labor Statistics Commissioner Janet L. Norwood. "Looked at over a somewhat longer period, however, the rate has hovered in the 5.3 percent to 5.6 percent range since last March and is 0.4 percentage point below the leval a year ago."

Ms. Norwood said one encouraging sign was that the number of people working part-time involuntarily because they could not find full-time jobs "returned to the bottom of the 5.2 million to 5.6 million range within which it has been fluctuating for more than a year."

"The proportion of working-age persons holding jobs remained at its record level of 62.3 percent," Ms. Norwood told the Joint Economic Committee of Congress.

Other data in the report, however, suggested that the economy might be slowing. The average workweek declined by 20 minutes to 34.6 hours and manufacturing overtime fell by 0.1 hours to 3.8 hours a week on average.

That sent weekly earnings down nearly a full percentage point as average hourly wages for non-supervisory workers held steady at $9.24.

In the past 12 months, the Labor Department said, wages have risen an average of only 3.1 percent, decreasing the buying power of workers, after taking inflation into account, by half a percent.

A separate calculation that includes the 1.7 million uniformed armed forces in the job market showed a jobless rate of 5.5 percent last month, up from 5.4 percent in July.

The government offered this other figures on unemployment in August:

Whites, 4.9 percent, up from 4.7 percent in July.

Blacks, 11.3 percent, down from 11.4 percent.

Hispanics, 8.4 percent, up from 8 percent.

Teen-agers, 15.8 percent, up from 15.2 percent.

Black teen-gers, 15.8 percent, up from 15.2 percent.

Private analysts had anticipated the overall jobless rate might rise prior to today's report.

"I think we're going to be stuck near 5.5 percent for the rest of the year," said Roger Brinner of Data Resources Inc., a Lexington, Mass., economic consulting firm. "Employment is not going to fall; it's just not going to rise as fast as it has been."

Brinner, like other economists, believes too many people, many of them with only marginal skills, have been hired in recent months in relation to the rate of economic growth.

"We may be at the point where we have absorbed most of labor's skilled capacity," said Charles Renfro, chief economist for the forecasting firm of Alphametrics, also of Bala Cynwyd. "Anything less than an uptick in the jobless rate will be a real danger sign that the economy is overheating."

Bruce Steinberg, an economist for Merrill Lynch, noted that new claims for unemployment compensation rose slightly last month, an indication of increased layoffs in some areas.

Steinberg believes there is still room for the jobless rate to fall over the next several months, "but not in August."

Although he never earned a college degree, Levenson became the president of a family-owned bank in Carlsbad, N.M., but was soon lured away by the burgeoning oil and gas industry.

"Just being able to walk along and pick up the crumbs the Exxons of the world dropped and left would make you rich beyond your wildest dreams," he said.

After buying and selling oil and gas leases during the late 1970s, his attention next was drawn to the takeover attempts within the oil and gas industry of fellow West Texan T. Boone Pickens Jr. of Amarillo.

Levenson said his unsuccessful runs at companies helped establish his credibility in the New York financial community, enabling him to consummate the deal for Furr's-Bishop's.

For the second quarter this year, the cafeteria company posted revenues of $70.9 million, a more than 6 percent increase over the same quarter of 1987. Furr's-Bishop's had earnings of $2 million, or 12 cents per share, the partnership's first quarter in the black.

Levenson predicts the company's revenues will total $273 million this year and that Furr's-Bishop's will post a profit.

He said he's confident he's in the right business, citing the lack of foriegn competition and relative isolation from costly high-tech development in the cafeteria business.

"Cafeteria companies have survived the Great Depression, they survived World War II, they survived the oil crunch and every boom and bust in the agriculture market," he said.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Well-run mutuals can help overcome load costs

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Is my thinking clear on the following?

Assume I wish to choose between two mutual funds. Fund A charges a 4 percent commission load on the purchase of its shares and has annual operating expenses of one-half of 1 percent. Fund B is a no-load fund and has 1 percent annual operating expenses. Both funds pay exactly the same dividends and their share values rise or fall equally.

If I invest in Fund A, I will recoup the 4 percent load within eight years — because of its lower operating cost. True or false?

Doyle

A. Almost true. In your example, it would take a bit more than eight years to overcome the load cost. That's because, with a 4 percent load, only 96 percent of the money you pay into Fund A would be invested to buy fund shares.

Other than that, your thinking is a bit cloudy. All mutual funds have annual operating expenses. Many no-load funds have operating expenses equal to or lower than load funds.

A well-run mutual fund with a cost-conscious management can keep those expenses, known as the "expense ratio," below 1 percent of the fund's assets.

When you spot a mutual fund with an expense ratio much above 1 percent, it's usually because that fund has a 12b-1 plan through which management dips into fund assets to pay distribution costs of selling shares.

This column has always warned readers to steer clear of mutual funds with 12b-1 plans. There are plenty of true no-load funds — with no commission charge at the time of purchase, no 12b-1 plan and no rear-end load when shares are redeemed.

Q. Every mutual fund prospectus now carries a relatively simple table detailing the fund's annual operating expenses. That information is very helpful to me, and I'm sure many other investors.

But what about variable annuities? To my mind, they are the same as mutual funds. Shouldn't they have to make the same disclosure?

A. Relief is on the way. The Securities and Exchange Commission, which has regulatory authority over mutual funds and variable annuities, recently proposed rule changes to "require a tabular presentation of fees and expenses near the front of variable annuity prospectuses."

When the amended rules are adopted, every variable annuity prospectus will detail expenses along the lines now required for mutual funds.

Q. The prospectus a mutual fund salesman recently handed me does not contain a table of the fund's expenses, such as you have written about. I asked him about this and he said, "It's not required." Why?

A. That prospectus must have been printed before May 1, the date on which the new disclosure rules went into effect. A mutual fund usually revises its prospects annually — typically at the beginning of its fiscal year.

If that particular fund's fiscal year ended, say, March 31, its current "effective" prospectus probably is dated April 1. In that case, it won't have to print a prospectus containing the new expense table until until April 1, 1989.

Q. I read an article about the tremendously high cost to investors of commodity funds — in commissions, operating expenses and other fees. Is the SEC going to require commodity funds to reveal those costs in tabular form?

A. Nope, because the SEC has no jurisdiction over commodity funds. Those funds, which invest in commodity futures contracts, are regulated by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. The CFTC has been far more lenient than the SEC.

Geodyne buys production interest

TULSA (SWN) — Geodyne Resources, Inc. has completed an acquisition of interests in producing oil and gas properties for $7.2 million and has signed an agreement to acquire interests in additional producing oil and gas properties for $17.5 million on behalf of partnerships it sponsors through PaineWebber-/Geodyne Energy Income Programs.

The two transactions include interests in a total of 313 producing oil and gas wells, having total proved reserves for the partnerships' interest of approximately 22 billion cubic feet of gas and 1.1 million barrels of oil. Average daily production attributable to partnership interest is 8.3 million cubic feet of gas and 448 barrels of oil. The properties are located in 12 states. Neither seller wished to be identified.

The transactions bring year-to-date property acquisitions to approximately $47 million. Earnings from the $7.2 million acquisition will be recognized during Geodyne's second quarter ended August 31, 1988. The company also expects to recognize earnings from the $17.5 million acquisition in the second quarter, subject to final purchase price adjustments and closing of the transaction.

Protesters interrupt de la Madrid's address

AP Laserphoto

Mexican President Miguel de la Mardrid, center, is interrupted during his sixth and final state-of-the-union message Thursday at the National Legislature. The men behind him are unidentified.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The unprecedented chaos in Congress while President Miguel de la Madrid delivered his last address to the nation drew a blizzard of criticism and praise, with some calling it offensive and others saying it was just democracy in action.

Opposition delegates interrupted de la Madrid continuously Thursday in a series of displays never before seen in Congress, which has been absolutely controlled by the Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, for 59 years.

The outbursts included chants of "Fraud!" and "Mexico!" Opposition delegates waved what they said were burned, invalidated ballots and staged a walkout that almost degenerated into a brawl.

De la Madrid maintained his composure throughout the 3½-hour speech as he sought to sum up a six-year term that began in near bankruptcy and is ending with economic reform and political controversy.

"Let us be tolerant, even in the face of the insults of our political adversaries," he said, departing from his prepared text after the walkout.

The noisy demonstrations "showed the delegates' courage" in demanding explanations, said Democratic Front presidential candidate Cuauhtemoc Cardenas, who claims fraud cheated him of victory in the July 6 elections.

The general secretary of the PRI, Manuel Camacho Solis, praised de la Madrid's coolness and condemned the protesters for "immaturity" and "anti-democratic practices."

Fidel Velazquez, the crusty 87-year-old labor leader who heads one of the strongest sections of the governing party, said he'd never seen anything like it. "But then, we never had such silly opposition before," he added.

Later, a Democratic Front delegate, Salvador Miranda Polanco, announced he was changing his loyalty to the PRI in part because he "does not agree with fascist ideologies."

A presidential spokesman, who in accord with standard practice could not be named, was more sanguine.

The speech was interrupted regularly from the beginning, but the climax came when leftist Democratic Front delegates led by Sen. Porfirio Munoz Ledo walked out amid shouts of "Traitor," "Get out, Judas," and assorted obscenities.

Munoz Ledo, who was once president of the PRI, was kicked in the rear and hit in the neck by two PRI state governors. A governing party legislator grabbed Munoz Ledo and asked, "What is happening to you? This is not the time, brother."

The galleries, filled with PRI supporters, wives and military brass, roared disapproval and governing party delegates chanted "Mexico!" to drown out the opposition.

"We are walking out in protest because they refused to let the voice of the opposition be heard," Munoz Ledo declared. De la Madrid's speech, he said, was full of "falsehoods and inaccuracies."

Members of the rightist National Action Party demonstrated but did not walk out. Party leader Abel Vincenio Tovar said he "respected the gesture" but preferred less "hysterical" means.

He criticized the PRI for packing the house. His party, with 101 delegates, was allowed to invite a total of four spectators, he said.

"When the ruling party doesn't have the backing of the people, they have to bring their own supporters," he said.

The same fractious Congress must, in the next two months, certify the election of de la Madrid's successor, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, who did not attend. Salinas is scheduled to take over Dec. 1.

The most strident objections came when de la Madrid spoke of the controversial July 6 vote, which he praised as "historic," but there were also interruptions as he spoke of his economic reforms.

The reforms reduced state control of the economy, kept the nation out of bankruptcy and controlled inflation, but also reduced the average Mexican's buying power by about 50 percent.

De la Madrid's own election reforms broke the governing party's stranglehold and allowed opposition strength to grow. Before Miranda's announced switch, the PRI held 260 seats in the Chamber of Deputies to 139 for the Democratic Front and National Action's 101.

Nine arrested in Zia crash probe

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — A newspaper said today that an air force squadron leader and eight other people have been arested in connection with the plane crash that killed President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq.

Jang, an Urdu-language daily, quoted "informed sources" as saying the nine were arrested Thursday night at Islamabad Airport, which doubles as a military airbase.

It did not name the suspects, identify them further, say where they were held, or detail their alleged involvement in the case. Government offices were closed today, the Moslem Sabbath, and officials were not available for comment.

Zia's personal C-130 transport plane took off from Islamabad on Aug. 17 to the southeastern city of Bahawalpur, where he watched a demonstration of the U.S. M-1 Abrams battle tank.

The four-engine turboprop exploded after takeoff on the return flight and crashed. All 30 people aboard were killed, including Zia, U.S. Ambassador Arnold Raphel and several top generals.

More than 20 Pakistanis have been arrested in the crash investigation, which government officials said is focusing on sabotage.

Jang said an airport security officer and some civilian aviation officials had also been detained but were released before the Thursday arrests.

No formal charges have been filed.

Pakistani newspapers have carried unsourced reports that investigators suspect the plane either had a bomb on board or was hit by an anti-aircraft missile. U.S. teams are assisting in the probe but officials said no cause has been determined.

A Cabinet minister meanwhile told senators Thursday night that Zia was aware that "a foreign country" had formed a hit-list of top Pakistanis in order to create chaos.

Mohammed Aslam Khattak, whose portfolio includes communications and railways, said the list included Zia, himself and "the leader of a political party."

He apparently was referring to opposition leader Benazir Bhutto, head of the Pakistan People's Party.

Ms. Bhutto said police have posted armed guards at her Karachi villa since Zia's death.

Khattak did not say which foreign country was involved but officials have blamed a series of terrorist acts over the past two years on Soviet-trained agents of Afghanistan's communist government.

Pakistan backs Moslem guerrillas fighting to oust the Afghanistan government and the Soviet troops who support it.

Exiled Allende relatives allowed to return to Chile

New York Times News Service

SANTIAGO, Chile — President Augusto Pinochet Thursday ended the enforced exile of many relatives and close associates of former President Salvador Allende Gossens, the Marxist overthrown by the armed forces 15 years ago.

The measure, announced two days after Pinochet won the formal support of other military leaders to seek a new presidential term, allows 339 people to return home from dozens of countries to which they scattered after the coup.

First to test the new liberty was Allende's youngest daughter, Isabel Allende Bussi, who arrived here Thursday after 15 years in exile.

She said she planned a visit of about three weeks and would take part in the activities of groups trying to defeat Pinochet in the one-man plebiscite scheduled on Oct. 5.

The president's opponents are cautiously confident of their chances to vote him out of power, based on Chile's tradition of strong political, social and legal institutions.

Isabel Allende apparently had advance word of the announcement Thursday. Minutes after Pinochet told the news to reporters here, she boarded an Argentine Airlines flight in Buenos Aires that landed in Santiago in early afternoon.

"I am here to demonstrate my right to live in my country," she said.

Police guard funeral service for IRA rebels

LOUGHMACRORY, Northern Ireland (AP) — Police guarded a funeral service in this village today for two IRA guerrillas killed by British soldiers, and rioting occurred for a second night in Catholic west Belfast.

Black flags were hung on telephone poles and pro-IRA slogans were scrawled on walls in Loughmacrory, 45 miles west of Belfast.

Brothers Gerard Harte, 29, and Martin Harte, 21, were to be buried after a service at St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, and 26-year-old Brian Mullin's funeral was to be held Saturday at the nearby village of Dunmoyle.

Police said they were shot and killed in a British army ambush Tuesday and that the trio was plotting to kill an off-duty soldier.

Dozens of police with riot shields and batons deployed in the village and along the road to the Harte family home, apparently to prevent the IRA turning the funeral into an anti-British show of strength.

In Belfast, a police spokesman who demanded anonymity said police fired plastic bullets to disperse rioters during violence in Roman Catholic areas of the city that flared Thursday night and continued early today.

Police said that in rioting earlier Thursday in a west Belfast IRA stronghold, three people were slightly injured and taken to the hospital when troops fired plastic bullets at a hostile crowd.

Police said the rioting in Belfast late Thursday and early today was not on the scale of riots that broke out Wednesday.

In those riots, gangs of young IRA supporters set fire to a bus, two vans and more than 35 cars, and hurled gasoline bombs and rocks at security forces while a gunman fired on the city's New Barnsley police station.

Dozens of burned out vehicles still blocked some roads in the area Thursday night as groups of youths gathered at street corners, talking and drinking beer while police and army patrols cruised by.

Police said the three slain IRA men were armed, masked and driving in a stolen car when they were ambushed. They said Gerard Harte was the commander of the IRA's Mid-Tyrone unit and that Martin Harte was responsible for selecting IRA targets from the ranks of the police and the Ulster Defense Regiment.

Airports tighten security against Olympics terrorism

TOKYO (AP) — Asian airports have tightened security to prevent acts of terrorism during the Summer Olympics in South Korea this month.

Authorities in Japan, Taiwan, Southeast Asia and all the way to Australia, in addition to South Korea itself, are clamping down on possible threats they believe could come from communist North Korea, the Japanese Red Army, South Korean radicals or a host of other quarters.

"Experts in terrorism are justified in concerning themselves with every eventuality and every precaution should be taken to preclude any threat, no matter what the source," Edward Derwinski, U.S. undersecretary of state for security assistance, said recently in Washington.

Amid fears that terrorists could try to enter South Korea from Japan, airports throughout Japan have intensified checks of passengers and their baggage, frisking individuals twice and sending them through two metal detectors before boarding planes.

Japanese authorities have deployed special X-ray machines that can detect plastic explosives, and immigration and customs personnel have been increased to check of passports and carry-on baggage.

Japanese airlines are stepping up inspections of liquor bottles, as explosives in such a liquor bottle were believed responsible for the destruction of a Korean Air jetliner near Burma in November, killing 115 people. A self-confessed North Korean agent said she planted the explosives on board to disrupt the Sept. 17-Oct. 2 summer games in Seoul and presidential elections in South Korea last year.

Armed guards have been assigned to ferries operating between Japan and South Korea, and Japan's coast guard is deploying some 80 percent of its patrol boats and planes to the Sea of Japan to thwart potential smuggling of explosives and weapons into South Korea.

Several known or suspected Japanese Red Army members have been arrested in recent months, some travelling on false passports. One of them, Osamu Maruoka, was carrying a one-way ticket to Seoul, South Korea's capital.

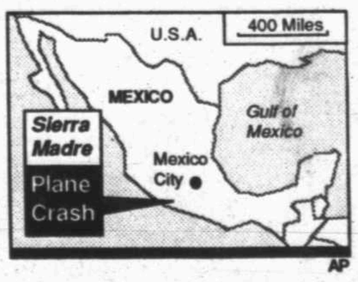
Bodies from Mexico air crash identified

LAZARO CARDENAS, Mexico (AP) — Helicopters delivered the remains of 21 people killed in a fiery commuter plane crash to friends and relatives waiting at the airport in this Pacific port.

About 300 people gathered Thursday night to identify the victims, who died when the aircraft plunged into the western Sierra Madre mountains Wednesday, said Victor a Bauza Orosco, a Red Cross worker.

"It's difficult. The bodies are badly deformed, and some arrived in pieces, only limbs. Others are thoroughly burned," he said.

Rescue workers said all 21 people aboard the twin-engine plane — including 18 passengers and three crew members — died when the plane fell into the rocky, heavily forested terrain near the town of Arteaga, about 200 miles southwest of Mexico City.



AP

Aviation officials said the Brazilian-made Bandeirante aircraft of the Aerofederal line disappeared after leaving Uruapan, about 180 miles west of Mexico City, for the 100-mile flight to Lazaro Cardenas.

Gen. Carmelo Teran, chief of staff of the 21st Military Zone — whose members participated in the rescue — said the bodies and wreckage were found within a radius of about 50 yards.

He said the plane crashed at the juncture of two mountains. Most of the passengers were from Uruapan.

A helicopter of the Federal Electricity Commission spotted the wreckage at 9 p.m. Wednesday, but rescuers could not fly into the area until late Thursday morning, after trees were cleared in the dense forest. Teran said rescuers climbed two or three hours through the rugged terrain to reach the crash site, which was three to four miles from the nearest road.

The starboard engine from Delta Flight 1141 rests in the field south of the runway at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport Thursday. The wreckage of the plane, which crashed Wednesday, can be seen in the background.

Survivors bear emotional scars

DALLAS (AP) — Some of the survivors who escaped from the fiery crash of Delta Flight 1141 are nearly recovered from their physical injuries, but many said Thursday that the emotional scars of the tragedy will haunt them for a long time.

Michelle Christensen, 25, of Dallas said she had a hard time sleeping Wednesday night because she couldn't reconcile her fate with that of those who were killed. "I kept thinking, 'Why them and not me?' "

Thirteen people died Wednesday when the Boeing 727-200 aircraft went down shortly after takeoff in a grassy field near Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport. But 95 survived.

Late Thursday, 30 remained hospitalized, most in stable or good condition at four Dallas-area hospitals. Eight were released from hospitals on Thursday, bringing to 65 the number of those treated and released.

Ms. Christensen, director of marketing for Krupp Realty in Dallas, had been flying home for her parents' anniversary when the crash occurred. She said she took another flight about six hours later — although she was nearly petrified with fear.

"I was scared out of my mind and crying all the way up," she said. "But once we got up in the air, I felt all right. I was afraid if I didn't fly right away, I never would again."

Robert Coester, 39, of Carrollton, a Dallas suburb, said he will be most bothered by his unsuccessful efforts to rescue passengers trapped in the back of the burning plane.

Suspect engine widely used by aircraft makers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Investigators examining the Pratt & Whitney JT8D engine as a possible cause of Wednesday's Delta Air Lines crash are scrutinizing a powerplant with which the aircraft industry has conducted a quarter-century love affair.

Almost 12,000 of the engines have been sold since the Federal Aviation Administration approved them in 1964. Today, they are used by 350 airlines, governments and corporations and are more widely utilized than all other commercial jet engines combined, Pratt & Whitney spokesman David Long said Thursday.

"It's one of the more reliable engines on the market today," said James P. McFadden, aerospace analyst for Merrill Lynch Capital Markets in New York.

Even before Delta Flight 1141 plunged to the ground Wednesday shortly after takeoff from Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, the government had named the JT8D as contributing to two major accidents that occurred in 1985.

Thursday, National Transportation Safety Board member Lee Dickinson said recordings of cockpit conversations on Flight 1141 before the accident revealed discussions of engine problems and noises indicating a stall may have been imminent.

Witnesses reported seeing flames streaming from an engine just before the crash. Thirteen people were killed, but nearly 100 survived the fiery wreck.

Despite those blemishes, the engine is so reliable the government uses the frequency rate with which they break down in flight as the benchmark against which new engines are measured.

So far this year, the JT8Ds have shut down in flight 0.012 times per 1,000 hours of flight, Long said from Pratt & Whitney offices in East Hartford, Conn.

According to Jay Pardee, manager of the FAA's engine certification office in Burlington, Mass., some engines have been known to shut down one or two times per 1,000 hours of flight.

"It's a goal we require all new technologies to meet," Pardee said

All Boeing 727s — Flight 1141 was a 727 — use three of the engines mounted on the rear of the aircraft. They are also used on many Boeing 737s and McDonnell Douglas DC-9s. In addition, McDonnell Douglas MD-80s use JT8D-200s, an advanced model of the engine.

Pratt & Whitney estimates that in all, the engines have flown more than 400 million hours in nearly a quarter-century of service.

"For an engine to be around for 25 years says a lot about its acceptance," said McFadden of Merrill Lynch.

But problems with the JT8D have been blamed by government officials as contributing to two major air accidents in 1985.

In Manchester, England, in August of that year, the engine's combustion chamber cracked and burned through on a British AirTours jetliner during takeoff. Fifty-five people died when the plane caught fire.

The accident sparked widespread inspections of combustion chambers of older, high-use JT8D engines as well as a requirement for more frequent inspections to check for cracks.

The next month, a Midwest Express DC-9 crashed in Milwaukee, killing 31 people, in an accident that was blamed on a fracture of the engine spacers, which separate the turbine blades. Afterward, the FAA ordered owners of planes with the engines to conduct inspections looking for cracks, and to replace the spacers periodically.

Post-crash fires from jet fuel remain a problem

WASHINGTON (AP) — After more than a decade of research, the government and the aviation industry still are trying to find ways to reduce the danger of post-crash fires such as the one that swept Delta Air Lines Flight 1141.

In recent years the Federal Aviation Administration has ordered airlines to install fire-blocking material on airline seats and last month the FAA and industry reached agreement on more stringent flammability standards for aircraft cabin walls, ceilings and storage bins.

These improvements will give passengers several extra minutes to evacuate a burning aircraft, but the industry's entire fleet of commercial jets will not have all the improvements until the early 1990s.

Neither the FAA nor the airlines, however, have been able to come up with a way to reduce the danger of igniting jet fuel, resulting in an explosive fireball such as erupted after the crash of Flight 1141 on Wednesday at the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport.

Ninety-four of the passengers and crew survived the crash, with many escaping through the split-open fuselage. Investigators said most of the 13 fatalities resulted from burns or inhalation of toxic smoke and fumes and not the impact of the crash.

Four years ago the Federal Aviation Administration was on the verge of requiring airliners to use a special fuel additive which its supporters said would stop aircraft fuel vapors from igniting in a crash.

Although the anti-misting additive suppressed the spread of fire in repeated static tests, a highly publicized crash of a remote-controlled Boeing 720 in the California desert failed miserably in November 1984 as the deliberately crashed jet was engulfed in flames.

The failed test came only weeks before a regulation requiring the additive was to have been announced and doomed any further attempt by the FAA to require airlines to put the additive into their fuel.

The FAA had estimated at one point that as many as 135 lives a year could be saved if the polymer were used. A British company, Imperial Chemical Industries, had invested more than $15 million in developing the additive prior to the test.

Eleven months after the test the FAA announced that "the concept is not practical for day-to-day airline operation in the foreseeable future."

"There hasn't been any research done by the FAA on (the anti-mist polymer) since the crash test in 1984," said agency spokeswoman JoAnn Sloane.

Concern about the danger of fire after crashes has been raised by aviation safety experts for years. Research into ways to reduce the threat gained momentum in 1977 after the fiery collision of two Boeing 747 jumbo jets on a fog-bound runway at Tenerife in the Canary Islands killed 553 people.

In recent years, the FAA has explored other methods aimed at reducing the danger of fuel fires, but no new regulations are anticipated soon.

Last year Congress directed the FAA to conduct a special one-year study on ways to prevent fuel-fed explosions after a plane crashes, including the feasibility of strengthening fuel tanks and adopting a system where fuel tanks automatically are sealed off if a fuel line ruptures.

Crash brings back bitter memories of earlier one

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — The crash of another Delta Air Lines flight in Dallas has brought back unhappy memories to the families of victims of the Flight 191 disaster three years ago, some of whom are still waiting for settlements.

That August 1985 flight from Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport slammed into the ground while approaching the airport, killing 137.

Dorothy Alford, whose daughter Frances was one of three flight attendants from South Broward to perish on Flight 191, had just turned on her car radio Wednesday when she heard about the latest crash.

"I couldn't even drive," said Mrs. Alford, who lives in Garden City, N.Y. "My heart goes out to the people today," she said. "You never, never forget."

Mrs. Alford said she and her husband have not settled their case with Delta.

The Alfords' is one of about 60 still outstanding from the crash, said Fort Lauderdale attorney Eugene Steele.

He said 70 have been settled for an average of about $1 million each.

Steele has nine cases pending among his 11. He reached a $1 million settlement in 1986 for Broward County Court Judge Zebedee Wright, whose wife Kathleen Cooper Wright, a former Broward School Board member, died of injuries sustained in the crash.

Three of his remaining cases are on behalf of the Wrights' three children. They were filed about two years ago after Steele was unable to reach a settlement with Delta's insurer, U.S. Aviation Underwriters.

"Under Florida law they weren't going to be able to collect because they're adults, but under Texas law they could collect so we filed in Texas," Steele said.

"What's happening is typical as far as the cases go," Steele said. "Basically a person has to decide if they want to take less money and an early settlement or wait a couple of years and try the case."

In Fort Worth, a spokesman for U.S. District Court Judge David O. Belew Jr. said about 20 cases for compensatory damages from the Delta 191 flight filed there have yet to be decided.

She said those cases won't be decided until the completion of Delta's case against the U.S. government, which the carrier blames for failing to provide accurate weather and air traffic reports.

Belew has heard some Delta cases including the one in which Hollywood widow Kathy Reynolds and her chidren won $605,000, about one-sixth of what they sought from a federal jury in the death of her husband Paul Reynolds.

"She's in no shape to talk to reporters," her attorney, Bill Hoppe said of her reaction to the latest crash. "She's pretty upset about this."

Others did not want to recall their memories for publication.

"He's very upset and doesn't want to discuss the event today," said Lisa Greene, whose son Gilbert Greene, survived the 1985 crash. "It's not a topic we can discuss freely."

Lisa Greene said her son, 24, recently graduated from Florida State University and was working in an administrative capacity at a construction business. It was just over a year ago that a federal jury in Fort Lauderdale awarded $700,000 to Greene. Delta had reportedly offered to settle for $150,000.

Greene, portrayed in initial news accounts as virtually unscathed, sued for medical costs from psychological stress and a back injury. His family has since moved from Cooper City to Davie.

DAIHATSU:
The word on the Street.

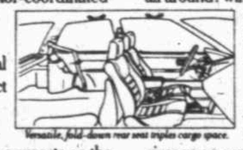
Everyone is looking for the next performer. And right now they're talking about the new hot car from Japan: Charade by Daihatsu. Read the chart and you'll see Charade's record of wins around the world. A winning combination of quickness and handling for over a decade. The more we test it in racing, the better it works on the street.

- Car of the Year Japan
- Four-time Rally Champion East Africa
- Three-time Rally Champion Monte Carlo
- Rally Champion New Zealand
- Rally Champion Malaysia
- Rally Champion Finland
- World Economy Record Paris
- World Economy Record Singapore
- World Economy Record Australia
- Car of the Year Thailand
- Most Popular Car in Australia

Not only do you get proven performance, but Charade gives you quality and workmanship that you thought came only in more expensive cars. The level of luxury is unprecedented for a small car. Think of it as luxury condensed.

Daihatsu Charade winning in Monte Carlo, January, 1988.

The interior reflects style and craftsmanship. It is perfectly color-coordinated throughout. Door trim incorporates seat material on top and carpet material on the bottom for a perfect interior match. There's a rich cloth liner overhead. And the fold-down center armrests on the CLX add extra comfort.



Versatile, fold-down rear seat triples cargo space.

Every Charade comes with tinted glass all around: windows and mirrors. For an extra touch, there are swing-out quarter windows in the rear.

Charade is low and wide for a small car. The extra width gives you a surprising amount of interior room. Charade's wide track gives you far more stability on the road than other small cars, especially when cornering.

Wide stance for stability.

Charade is quick, with multi-point EFI, fully independent suspension and stabilizers in front and rear. The five-speed transmission is butter-smooth for easy shifting.

Charade is affordable to buy and affordable to own. Daihatsu Charade has an EPA rating of 42 MPG highway and 38 MPG city. That is one of the best mileage ratings in the country.

Get behind the wheel of a winner! Test drive Charade today! Daihatsu may be new to America, but we've been in business in Japan since 1907. The name is pronounced Dī-hot-sue. It means Large Enterprise.

Charade has been tested, raced and proven around the world. It is the logical evolution of a dedication to performance. You know what they say, "Racing improves the breed."

You'll think the world of Daihatsu.
