DAILY BIBLE THOUGHT

GOD'S WONDERFUL WORKS—Many, O Lord my God, are the wonderful works which thou hast done; if I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered. Psalm 40: 5.

MILLIONAIRES AS MUNICIPAL RULERS.

Mayor J. Waddy Tate of Dallas will retire to private life May 1. Nine commissioners and a city manager will handle the city for at least two years to come. First, the commissioners called for an audit of all departments of the Dallas city government. Those who are familiar with conditions say they will face a deficit of a million dollars. A time-tested city manager has been called from Flint, Mich., to direct municipal activities. He is to be paid $15,000 for the first year. If he makes the grade his salary will be increased to $20,000 the second year.

As for the commissioners they elected Thomas L. Bradford mayor. He is the millionaire chairman of the board of the Southwestern Life Insurance company. There is another multi-millionaire in the picture. E. R. Brown was elected a councilman under the new council-manager charter. Col. Brown is vice chairman of the board of the Standard Oil company of New York and is also president of the Magnolia Petroleum company. Now the property owners of Dallas who have grown weary of the rule of practical politicians are hopeful that nine prominent business men who are commissioners and a city manager with a marvelous record to his credit will succeed in lifting Dallas out of its financial dumps or bog holes and make a showing in two years that will keep the practical politicians out of the city hall for all time to come.

CIGARET TAX ON THE WAY.

The three-cent cigaret tax has been passed by the legislature, and if it survives the governor's office and the supreme court, the smokers of the weed will be paying 30 or 31 cents for two packages of 20, rather than two-bits. Guesses on how much revenue the tax will bring range from two million to nine million dollars. No one knows. Neither do they know how much bootlegging the tax will launch, nor how many smokers will quit the cigaret for cigars, pipes, old-time chewing, or even for snuff.

According to David A. Weiss, a New York economist, during 1930, about 346,000,000 pounds of tobacco were used to produce 129,000,000,000 cigars; about 80 per cent of the $450,000,000 paid in taxes to the federal government by the tobacco industry during the year 1930 was paid on cigars. Furthermore, Economist Weiss reported that demand for other forms of tobacco had increased but "none of them has shown such progress as have cigars."

Facts and figures are interesting. Before the coming of the World war, cigars had the call. That is, more cigars were smoked than cigarettes. In 1915, 18,000,000,000 cigars were manufactured in the United States; in 1919, more than 53,000,000,000 cigars and now the prophets of the tobacco trade predict that if cigaret production maintains the rate of increase during the next 10 years that it exhibited in the last 10, the total cigaret consumption by 1940 will reach 300,000,000,000.

Economist Weiss has all the facts at the tip of his tongue. In 1864, cigars were first manufactured in this country "but it was not until 1885 that one billion or more cigars were turned out of the factories." After 25 years had been recorded on the dial plate of passing time, cigars began to rival cigars and then "within a brief five years more they changed the smoking habits of the American people."

It is no secret that third house leaders not speaking for the tobacco industry are hoping that the Berkeley bill will stand all the tests. They know the reason why. There will be sufficient revenue in sight, they believe, to provide for the departments of government and the rural aid fund for public schools. As for the cigaret smoker, every time he or she purchases a package it will be a contribution of three cents to the rural aid fund. Those who roll their own will escape the tax.

Queen Nicotine will not be dethroned. She is relegating the cigar, the pipe, the plug and the joy of the snuff dipper in the shades.

LETTING THE LIGHT SHINE—"IN EAST TEXAS"

Petroleum is a wonder worker. For 100 years East Texas failed to capture a big place under the sun—or on the map. Census takers reported a decreased population. Then rich petroleum fields were brought in and now East Texas is nationally as well as internationally known as a producer of mineral wealth. President James C. Kennedy of the Central and Southwest Utilities company of Chicago says that demand for electric power in the new East Texas oil field has increased 60 per cent in the first 11 days of April. Sen. Julian Gaiser says that the growth of population has been tremendous. Harry F. Sinclair says that the potential wealth of the recently discovered diggings is staggering to the mind.

As a sidelight 68,000,000 barrels of oil were exported from South American countries to the shores of the United States in a single year. Now a high authority says that it had been hoped to have gasoline stocks in the United States reduced to 40,000,000 barrels on April 1 but the supply now exceeds 46,000,000 barrels. Domestic demand for the year is estimated at 222,800,000 barrels or 1.5 per cent more than the demand of 219,589,000 barrels a year ago. According to The New York Times all the large oil importers have announced reductions in their imports of petroleum and its products and the voluntary committee of petroleum economics estimates that imports of gasoline will be reduced in the period from April 1 to Sept. 30 to about 6,600,000 barrels. It is expected also by the committee that the receipts of crude oil will be reduced by nine per cent from the 33,000,000 barrels imported in 1930 or to 30,000,000 barrels.

OTHER OPINIONS

HOW ADVERTISING AIDS PROSPERITY

Advertising pays. That has been uttered so frequently it is almost a platitude. From it has come the erroneous belief that only the advertiser benefits. It is far from the truth. It doesn't take into consideration that advertising as a whole is overwhelmingly honest.

You have a mill in the area in which you live, let us say. It employs 1,000 in normal times. Now only 700 are working. Why? Because there is not the demand for its products. That demand can be increased by advertising, and men will go back to work. The entire community, as well as the employer, will benefit. Producers will become buyers, and the welfare of the whole people, from millionaire to laborer, will be affected.

In 1929, $60,000,000 was spent to sell 5,358,000 cars, a cost of advertising of $11 a car. Without advertising it is reasonable to assume many less cars would have been sold. Thousands, perhaps millions, employed in the automobile industry wouldn't have had a job. Steelworkers, tire manufacturers, paint producers—all would have been affected.

The analogy can be applied to department stores, other types of stores—to industry as a whole.

We save our teeth because we read of benefits of using a toothbrush. We play healthful sports because we see sporting equipment advertised and recommended. We furnish our homes attractively because we see attractive furniture advertised. We are educated how to live more fully by advertising. And creating demands means that more men and women have jobs.

Just now, in a period of depression there is buying caution. People are saving their money, in some cases because they are unemployed and earning more, in others because of the fear of losing their jobs, in still others because they do not understand.

It would seem, regarding the matter from an unbiased viewpoint, that, since the average citizen reaps the greatest benefits, he should buy from the concerns which advertise. He should understand that it is one way he can help prosperity to return.

And wise executives, realizing that advertising does pay in more ways than one, should insist on volume advertising. It means business for them. It means more work for employees. It means they are contriving something to aid return of prosperity.—San Angelo Times.

fications. As for Alfred E. Smith, he will be forced to make a choice long before the coming of the national convention. Roosevelt and Young have been the loyal supporters of Smith in all his political battles. Now what will be done in a political sense when the showdown comes? Will he take to the woods, remain neutral, or pick his man?

Cong. Joseph J. Mansfield of Columbus is here in his wheel chair. Mansfield and Briggs of Galveston have been thrown in one district. This action of the lawmakers does not appeal to the gentleman from Galveston or the gentleman from Columbus. Having thoroughly amended the Metcalf house bill, the senate returned to the house its own creation as a substitute. In return for this favor the house refused to accept the bill as amended by the senate and now conferees will be named and the battle will be on. Final adjournment day is on the way. It may be necessary for the qualified voters to elect three congressmen at large next year. If so, there will be a mighty scramble for the three plums.

American legionnaires set aside a page in their official journal for tribute to the late Capt. Lewis H. Kenan, a soldier of two wars. Capt. Kenan and A. T. McKean had been friends or rather pals, for years. This is the McKean tribute to the Georgian who was a soldier in two wars. "To Capt. Lewis H. Kenan—We salute you as a scholar, a gentleman and a soldier. A Georgian by birth, a Texan by adoption, you were ever welcome in our midst. A veteran of two wars with records of honor; frank, honest and fearless, a dispenser of hyperites, genial, kind and tolerant, a friend of man. 'Tis thus. Again we salute you, captain and friend, hail and farewell."

In the Political Arena

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD

Jeppett Shouse likes to take the long chance—to figure quickly where the big stake lies and, having made up his mind, to move unwaveringly toward winning it, paying no attention to pious horror which his course arouses in the hearts of all the busy-footers," writes George Creel, "The Gentleman at the Keyhole" of Collier's Weekly. Mr. Shouse, long-faced and peevish, looks like a Presbyterian minister, and he is in fact the son of a minister; but he comes from Kentucky and has some of the blueness in his veins. I cannot conceive of his being so ill that he would not rise from a sick bed to go and see the Kentucky Derby.

The Gentlemen at the Keyhole continues: "Mr. Shouse is the kind of a man who can make up his mind instantly in favor of a bold attack. The new intrepidity which the democratic party has gained under his and Mr. Haskob's management is the best sign that it has a vitality it profits by the weakness of the republicans. He has a bold backer in the person of Mr. Haskob and the two of them have rolled up the small stake the democratic party had in 1925 after 10 years of bitter defeats into what was essentially a victory in 1930 and the excellent prospect of a victory in 1932."

Jeppett Shouse is a Kansas democrat who was born in Kentucky and is said to be the general manager of the chairman of the national committee and the democratic party.

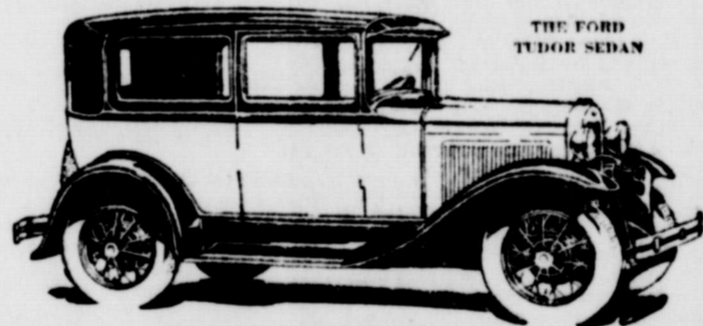

Democratic leaders on the Gold Coast, speaking of the Pacific Ocean and the Rocky Mountain states, invited Shouse to go to the far west for organization purposes. Shouse accepted. Now he is sheeling the acids in California, the home state of Herbert Hoover. California gained eight congressmen in 10 years. An allotment has been made by the legislature. That California known as Los Angeles has been given 11 members of the new delegation. That part known as San Francisco, or upper California, has been given nine members.

In 1926 the California grape growers were the wealthiest of the west. Then the making of grape concentrates was invented and the grape growers flourished as never before. They became the drivest of the drivest. Now Natl. Dir. Woodcock has ordered the presentation of the sellers of grape concentrates.

Jeppett Shouse opened the campaign of 1932 in the city of San Francisco. All the big leaders of the state and thousands of others welcomed him. He saw an opening, the opening made by the astute Woodcock—and he made his drive. Shouse is a quick action man. This is what he said: "This is neither the time nor the occasion perhaps to bring prohibition into the discussion but I ask you as self-respecting men and women if you are satisfied with existing conditions. How do you like the state of affairs in your great wine industry? It is true that is a subterfuge you are permitted a limited market for the products of your vineyards. Your fathers found it a great industry. You were gaining the markets of the world for California wines. There were no better people in the world, no more industries, public spirit, or enterprising folks than your vineyardists. How do you who respect their memories, feel at having their activities made criminal? How do you, in carrying out their work, enjoy being placed in a position of accepting as a political favor a limping inane, tortuous and twisted expedient to the detriment of your moral right?"

Jeppett Shouse is a marvelous campaigner as well as the best organizer on the democratic side of the political line. He was a McAdoo lieutenant in three memorable campaigns.

MAD MARRIAGE

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Gypsy McBride, 19-year-old New York typist, marries Jim Wallace the day after she meets him at the home of her wealthy cousin, Ann Trowbridge. Gypsy, just returned from a year and a half in Paris studying art, Wallace's fiancée has broken their engagement to marry a richer man.

Jim and Gypsy go to Forest City where Jim has a thriving law practice. His relatives snub Gypsy. Alan Crosby writes to her but she returns the letter unopened. Marcia Phillips, Jim's former fiancée, marries Brock Phillips, millionaire's son.

Monkeys pass and Brock Phillips is killed in a fall from a horse. Marcia returns to Forest City. She consults Jim about financial affairs and later tells him her marriage to Phillips was a mistake. Jim tries to remain loyal to Gypsy but sees Marcia frequently. Hurt because she believes Jim has taken Marcia Phillips to lunch, Gypsy accepts Frank Gibson's invitation to drive her home from a shopping trip. There is a collision and Gypsy's foot is injured. Another motorist takes her home and when they arrive there Gypsy faints.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XLII
There was a light burning beside the bed. Gypsy became aware of it and was slightly annoyed. The light was a nuisance. All she wanted was to go to sleep again. The covers felt soft and warm. She could drift back into slumber if it were not for the light. Sleep! What a blessing it would be to sleep forever!

She stirred and a twinge of pain shot through her body. The light remained there. She could reach out and turn it off but the exertion was unthinkable. Gypsy lay quiet for several moments. Vague thoughts began to trouble her. There was something she could not remember quite clearly. Something that had happened.

The girl opened her eyes. Why had she imagined anything was wrong? She was here in her own room. Everything was the same. Then she saw Matilda sitting in the shadow across the room.

"Matilda," she asked, "what time is it?"

The woman came to the bedside. "Don't you worry about the time," she said. "Do you feel better, ma'am?"

"My shoulder hurts," the girl said, "and my ankle. What's the matter, Matilda? What happened?"

"It was an accident. The doctor came and he said you were to lay still and try to rest. You'll feel better in the morning."

"Oh—I'm beginning to remember."

Gypsy lay silent for a time. An accident! She remembered that very clearly now. The crash in Frank Gibson's car. Yes, she remembered everything.

"You didn't tell me what time it was," she reminded the woman. "It's nearly eight o'clock. Ten minutes until eight. Don't you think you might sleep some more?"

Gypsy closed her eyes but she did not sleep. She was fully awake now. Presently she asked: "Where is Mr. Wallace? Did he have dinner on time?"

"It was ready but he waited until after the doctor came. He's been awful worried about you, Mrs. Wallace."

"Is he here now?"

"Down stairs in the library."

"Will you ask him to come up, please?"

Matilda cast a troubled look at her mistress, then went quietly about her room. Gypsy looked about her. Except for the orange-shaded lamp at the side of the bed the room was in darkness. She glanced down and saw that she was wearing one of her fragile, late-trimmed night gowns. It was a yellow one. She moved and felt the pain in her ankle once more.

There were footpicks in the hall. Jim Wallace's tall figure appeared in the doorway.

"Feeling better?"

"I think so."

"The ankle's sprained. Doc says if you're careful it will be all right in a week or 10 days. Have to stay off your feet for a while. The other bruises will make you feel stiff or a few days but they're nothing to worry about."

made up my mind this afternoon to go away."

"To go away where?"

"I don't know. Anywhere. I decided to go away so that you and Marcia Phillips—I mean so that I wouldn't be an obstacle to your happiness. I was going to tell you about it tonight. The sprained ankle doesn't need to make any difference. I can leave in a few days just the same."

"But where are you going? I haven't the faintest idea what you're driving at, Gypsy. You're not an obstacle to my happiness! You're—you must be delicious! Maybe it's the stuff Doc gave you to make you sleep."

The girl shook her head. "I know what I'm saying," she assured him. "You see, something happened this afternoon. I mean before I met Mr. Gibson. I was talking to Abbie Manley and she told me about seeing you at the Pine Grove Inn last Monday with Marcia Phillips."

"At the Pine Grove Inn? Gypsy, I tell you you're out of your head! I haven't been any place with Marcia Phillips. Did Abbie Manley tell you a yarn like that—?"

Gypsy sighed. "I told you it was going to be hard to explain," she said. "Abbie didn't mean to make trouble. She saw you and thought I was with you. I didn't even let her know it wasn't I. She said something about me having on a blue dress and that's how I knew it must be Marcia."

"But, good God!—I tell you I didn't have lunch with Marcia. I haven't even seen her all week! I'll tell Abbie Manley know what I think of spreading stories like this!"

"Don't, Jim! Abbie didn't mean any harm. I tell you she thought we were together. She thinks so. Only you must have been there. She said you were facing her and the girl had on a blue dress."

Wallace paused. "Monday," he repeated musingly. "Let's see where did I have lunch on Monday?" He frowned slightly. Suddenly a light seemed to dawn. "I know," he exclaimed. "Of course, I was with Bill Breckenridge and we went to the Pine Grove Inn. Breckenridge always eats there. After we had ordered his wife came in and joined us. She must have had on a blue dress. I don't remember that. But it's odd, Abbie couldn't have noticed there was another man at the table."

"Maybe she did. She didn't say anything about that thought. Oh, Jim, then it wasn't Marcia!"

The girl's voice died almost to a whisper. She was very pale and her dark eyes seemed to grow larger.

They looked at each other and in that steady gaze many things seemed to be said.

"It wasn't Marcia," Jim repeated after her. "So that's why you decided to go away?"

"I'm ashamed-facedly Gypsy nodded. If I thought you wanted me to," she admitted.

"Is that why you went for a drive with Gibson?"

Another nod. And like sunshine after a quick storm her face lighted with a mischievous smile. "I did that because I thought you didn't want me to."

Both of them laughed. "You won't try to run away again, will you?" Jim asked.

"Not with a sprained ankle," the girl told him. She was smiling but there were tears in her eyes.

Jim sprang to his feet. "I've no right to keep you talking like this!" he declared. "Doc said you were to get all the rest possible. Gave you something to make you sleep and here I am babbling like a monkey!"

"I don't think you're a monkey."

He reached down and took one of her hands, squeezing it. "I'll send Matilda back," he promised. "She's going to bring you something hot to drink and then you must try to sleep. I'll see you in the morning if you're awake. Good night."

"Good night, Jim."

He gave her a quick smile from the doorway before he disappeared. It was several minutes before Matilda returned, carrying a tray. She propped up pillows behind Gypsy and then set the tray before her.

"Smells good!" the girl said smiling.

"Not much of a meal," Matilda commented, "but the doctor said it was all you were to have. There's another cup of hot tea in the pot if you want it. If you say so," the woman hinted darkly. "I'll bring you a little mite of the roast. I could heat it."

"This will be all I want, Matilda," Gypsy assured her. "It looks delicious."

There was cream toast. There was a pot of tea and a dish of jellied fruit. Gypsy ate most of the toast and drank two cups of tea.

"I believe I can sleep now," she announced as Matilda took away the tray. A delicious sense of languor crept over the girl. She smiled as the older woman rearranged the pillows. Matilda touched a switch which turned the light lower. Gypsy's eyes were closed as the servant tip-toed from the room. Within 10 minutes Gypsy was sound asleep.

It was late next morning when she awoke. She started to sit up and aching shoulder muscles quickly reminded her of yesterday's adventure. It was 20 minutes of 10. Jim must have gone long ago.

She lay still until presently Matilda knocked on the door.

"Good morning ma'am. I hope you slept well?"

"Indeed I did."

"Mr. Wallace said you weren't to be disturbed. I looked in a while ago but you were sound asleep. Will you have your breakfast now?"

Gypsy considered "I don't know"

TEXAS TOPICS

AUSTIN, April 22.—The even-tempered, judicial-minded senator from Wichita Falls, Sen. Ben G. O'Neal, is a new member, but he has advanced not only to prominence among the recruits, but to the front rank of leadership in the entire body.

He sponsored through the emergency tax postponement law, long since approved by Gov. Ross S. Sterling, which saved the people unable to meet their heavy property taxes before Feb. 1, penalties aggregating over a million dollars and the ultimate loss of homes and farms.

Sen. O'Neal sponsored through the split tax payment bill in the senate to make a permanent state policy of semi-annual payments.

Strangely, the house that is supposed to most intimately bespeak the needs and watch out for the welfare of the local districts, stamped itself into a vote killing the split tax law. But the measure was put into shape for future action, these who had voted against it recalling before putting it beyond recall. The vote from back home probably will be heard in winning a reconsideration. The bill may be passed.

Its enactment would establish Sen. O'Neal as the outstanding man of his legislature in all around leadership. He has proven himself already one of the ablest lawyers and one of the strongest constitutionalists of the senate.

Sen. O'Neal defers to his father's practice in spelling his name. The name originally was O'Neal. The senator's father, either from thrift of saving time and ink and trouble, or from plain disregard of the other fellow's custom of capitalizing and spelling, adopted the form O'Neal. The senator says that form is all right with him—says time and both. So the name is O'Neal. F. H. except those who know him well, ever spell it right. Most of the letters coming to him read "O'Neal."

"Forget that Alphabet stuff," is the suggestion of Rep. Petch of Fredericksburg. He has given notice that hereafter he is Alfred Petch and not A. P. C. Petch.

County Judge Oscar C. Dancy has gained the nickname at highway commission hearings of "Concrete" Dancy. This not through any imputation as to mental agility. It is a tribute to his earnest and vigorous insistence upon getting permanent concrete roads in his county. And he has secured them.

New Judge Dancy has announced that the new concrete highway between Brownsville and Port Isabel will be beautified by the planting of hedges of yucca, or Spanish dagger, along it.

Highway crews will gather the plants that grow by thousands in the section and line the highway with them. Small sections of the same highway are now lined with palm trees. The yucca, blooming each spring, will give the visitors over the highway in the southern-most tip of the United States, a view not rivaled anywhere else in the entire nation.

A house member recently tied himself into this verbal knot in asking a question:

how we're to manage it," she said, "but I'd love to get into the tub for a good scrubbing first."

"If you'll put your arm around me I can help you walk," Matilda suggested. "We'll go easy like."

With Matilda's assistance Gypsy moved about the room "easy-like." She bathed, brushed her hair and changed the gown for a soft negligee.

Then she lay back on the chaise longue, backed by pillows and cushions, and breakfasted.

Dr. Hollingsworth came early in the afternoon and reported that his patient showed improvement. There were ugly purplish bruises hip. The cut on her forearm was hip.

The cut on her forearm was bandaged with tape. It would be 10 days, the doctor said, at the earliest, before Gypsy could put any weight on her foot. She must stay in her room, eat nourishing food and let nature do the healing.

Jim telephoned a little later and Matilda gave him this report. He left word that he would be home early.

Every afternoon for the rest of that week Jim Wallace arrived home at four-thirty. Gypsy looked forward to that hour all through the days that passed so slowly. She had never been ill. She had never spent so much time helplessly.

Nothing about Gibson's car being wrecked appeared in the Forest City newspapers. The third afternoon Gibson telephoned and Matilda informed him that Mrs. Wallace was not receiving guests. Later a note arrived. Gypsy gave it to Jim to answer. She had cautioned Jim not to tell anyone she was ill. There would be sure to be unpleasant complications.

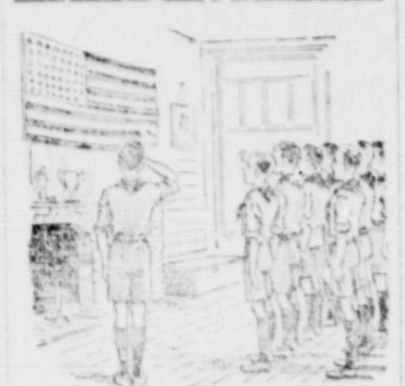

For seven days she remained practically a prisoner. She read, sewed—and watched the clock for four-thirty to arrive.

Gypsy was sitting before the window Thursday evening when she saw the green roadster turn into the drive. Five minutes later when Jim entered the room she looked up smiling.

"I've been watching for you,"

she announced. "You're five minutes early!"
Jim's face was serious. Without replying he crossed to where she was sitting. "Here," he said, "is something I think you should read."
He handed Gypsy a letter.

obey. When I reached my destination the matter was explained by the commanding officer. The orders came from London. The government had tired of accusations that I was stirring up trouble in Afghanistan. I was to be transferred immediately to another post. "Because it was through no fault of mine—the C. C. made it clear that there was absolutely no reflection on the work in camp—I was given the choice of three stations in India. . . . or returning by the next boat to England. I have been here ever since."

But it has not been easy for him to remain here either, he explained. On one occasion he was threatened with quiet dismissal from the air force owing to an incident in which he became involved through no fault of his own. An important visitor spoke to him because nobody else spoke his language. The matter was resolved as a breach of discipline. The conversation should have taken place "through channels."

"Fortunately the matter was arranged," he added pointing out that, after all, it was not in the interests of the foreign office, "that I should be made to leave the air force."

Of this number only 155 students are supported by government, or other scholarships, while the remainder went abroad at their own expense.

Japan, because of her proximity to China and her comparative low cost of living, continued to attract the largest number of self-supporting Chinese students, while America led in the number of government students. The following table shows the distribution among the various countries:

Country	Government	Self-supporting
G. Britain	11	34
America	71	101
Germany	9	75
France	5	168
Japan	38	788
Belgium	1	59
Austria	10	4
Total	155	1,329

Cities in the Canton area sent the largest number of students abroad. Chekiang ranks second with Kiangsu and Liaoning next.

Law was the most popular subject, 460 of them having chosen it as their major study. The others chose the following courses: Engineering, 217; Arts, 165; Science, 105; Medicine, 102; Education, 83; Commerce, 11; Agriculture, 63; Fine Arts, 56; and Military Science and Police Administration, 53.

Under the hoofs of grazing cattle . . . the destiny of the Southwest

Copyrighted, Edwin E. Smith

The pioneer cattleman who crowded the heels of savagery was of the breed which met emergency with resourcefulness, his word and honor needing no sureties. In the face of adversity he wrapped himself in his abounding fortitude and calmly awaited the opportunity to again forge ahead. Like the mesquite tree, he was the first to occupy the vacant space and, like the mesquite in a drouth, which dies back from the top but whose roots are deep in the soil, auspicious showers found him ready to again thrust out green boughs and luxuriant foliage.

But a new wealth was destined to turn the resourcefulness and energy of the pioneer cattleman and farmer into more lucrative channels. In 1894 traces of crude petroleum showed in a well that was intended to bring water to the City of Corsicana, Texas. Exercising an inherent pioneer progressiveness, a group of far-sighted citizens began drilling for oil. Their vision and foresight were rewarded when, in 1896, a producing well was brought in, marking the beginning of the first important oil field in the Southwest.

Within a few brief months a movement was started to build a refinery. On Christmas Day, 1898, the first still in the Southwest was charged at Corsicana by the J. S. Cullinan Company, which, through a series of developments, became the Magnolia Petroleum Company in 1911.

Before the accidental discovery of oil at Corsicana in 1894, the vision of a Jules Verne could hardly have conjured a picture of the Southwest thirty-seven years hence. Oil, like black magic, plus the same kind of resourcefulness and fortitude possessed by the early Southwestern pioneer, has brought untold wealth and prosperity to a land that would otherwise have been cattle pastures or cotton fields.

As oil transformed the cattle range into cities and oil fields of beehive activity, the founders of the Magnolia Petroleum Company kept pace with each new need for petroleum products. As the kerosene lamp replaced the ancient and troublesome tallow candle, bringing new convenience and pleasure to the ranchman and farmer, so was a new era of smokeless, cinderless luxury introduced to the traveler when, in the early part of 1901, the first oil-burning locomotive left Corsicana over the Houston & Texas Central, burning Magnolia fuel oil.

The Magnolia Petroleum Company, as the original refining company of the Southwest, like its pioneer predecessors, has grown with its responsibilities and opportunities until today we see the pioneer, who a generation back read his letters from home by the light of Magnolia kerosene, hurtling across his range in an eight-cylinder motor car, still served by Magnolia. . . . his needs supplied better than ever before by Socony Motor Oil and Magnolia Ethyl or Maximum-Mileage Gasoline.

This is the last of a series of historical sketches portraying the pioneer history of the Southwest, in commemoration of Founders' Month of the Magnolia Petroleum Company, pioneer Southwestern refiners.
