Volcker: Congress must cut budget deficits

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress must make substantial progress toward reducing federal budget deficits or risk jeopardizing "our hard-won gains and the bright promise of our future," Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker warned Friday.

In some of his toughest comments on the deficit issue, Volcker said that it would be folly to be lulled into a false sense of security by the strength of the economic recovery. He said the recovery has been financed in large part by volatile for-ign investment.

Volcker, in an appearance before the Senate Budget Committee, repeated his contention that at least $50 billion in deficit reduction was needed to assure domestic and foreign financial markets of the U.S. government's resolve to get its house in order.

The budget President Reagan sent to Congress earlier this week would reduce the projected deficit by about $50 billion, to $180 billion, in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

"We have severe imbalances in the economy and we have to begin dealing with them," Volcker said. "We have been able to reconcile the imbalances at home by drawing savings from abroad. I don't know how long we can go on this way."

Volcker said the growing foreign investment in this country, while helping finance the government's debt, had hurt farmers, steelmakers, the heavy machinery industry and others who were either dependent on export sales or were facing stiff competition from imports.

The stampede by foreigners to invest in the United States has pushed the dollar to record highs against other foreign currencies, Volcker said, hurting farmers and industries which have to sell their more expensively priced goods overseas.

"There are large imbalances in our economic performance and points of severe strain here and abroad," Volcker told the senators. "Until those underlying problems are adequately addressed, we will be putting at risk our hard-won gains and the bright promise for the future."

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the committee, voiced concern that Volcker's comments might go unheeded given the economy's strong performance in the past two years. Domenici said "the people are very optimistic...and this makes it difficult to suggest they should take a big dose of medicine" in the form of sharp budget cuts.

Volcker said the economy's recent performance was based on "things that can't last." He said the next recession could be triggered prematurely by a sudden drop in foreign investment.

In his testimony, Volcker said preliminary figures showed foreign investment supplied 23 percent of net savings in the United States in 1984, up from 12 percent the year before.

Volcker did not predict when the next recession might occur, but he did note that it would be unusual, given the history of business cycles, not to have an economic downturn before 1990.

Volcker, as he has in the past, said it was more important to cut government spending to reduce the deficit rather than raising taxes because of the negative effect tax hikes have on the economy.

Prison inmates frostbitten because of blanket shortage

BRAZORIA (AP) — Three Texas prison inmates are recovering from frostbitten feet because the prison system is short of blankets and experiencing delays in fixing broken windows, officials say.

"All we can do is try to remedy what happened and go on from there," said David Moya, warden at the Clemens Unit in Brazoria County. "It's a shame what happened."

Clemens inmates Fredrick Harrell and Wintchell Louis said in interviews Thursday that guards ignored their requests for more blankets during a recent spell of cold weather.

Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Phil Guthrie said Harrell, Louis and the third prisoner, J.D. Hooper, suffered "first-degree frostbite," but that none of the men required amputation of their toes.

Guthrie said Harrell had the worst injuries. "After my feet started swelling and froze up, that's when they issued out the second blanket," Harrell said. "I had asked before then but I was told I couldn't have but one."

Harrell and Louis said they were given Tylenol to ease the pain.

Hooper was reported in a prison hospital in Galveston for ailments unrelated to the frostbite.

According to Moya, who termed the situation "regrettable, deplorable," the Clemens Unit is so short of blankets that guards have initiated shakedowns of prisoners' cells to uncover extra blankets.

Corrections Department Maj. Gary Mohr said inmates burn blankets in cans to heat their cells.

The cold has been a problem because of delays in replacing smashed windows in the unit. Guthrie said glass ordered in October was delayed.

U.S. protests treatment given to Korean dissident, Americans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration protested to the South Korean government Friday over the roughing up of returning exile Kim Dae-jung and the group of Americans, including two congressmen, who accompanied him.

Neither Kim, his wife, nor the Americans were injured in the airport incident, but Rep. Edward Feighan, D-Ohio, said Korean security agents acted like "a band of thugs" — pushing, shoving and even punching them.

Also roughed up were Rep. Thomas Foglietta, D-Pa., Patricia Derian, a former assistant secretary of state for human rights, and Robert E. White, former ambassador to El Salvador. They were forcibly separated from Kim in an airport melee after they insisted on accompanying him.

At the State Department, deputy spokesman Edward Djerejian said the U.S. Embassy in Seoul has protested to the South Korean government, demanding both an investigation and an explanation.

"We had hoped for a trouble-free return...obviously this did not happen," Djerejian said.

Kim, 59, who returned home after two years of U.S. exile, was placed under house arrest after he and his wife were forcibly separated from the Americans by Korean security forces.

Moments after Kim left the plane, police pushed him and his wife into an airport elevator, shoved two American congressmen and several people aside and drove the couple to their Seoul home by back roads to avoid crowds gathered along the main highway to welcome the popular opposition leader.

U.S. officials were particularly incensed that American embassy representatives were barred from meeting Kim's plane at Seoul's Kimpo airport, although they could have been assured in advance they could.

Rep. Feighan said through his office here that the security agents acted like "a band of thugs." Ms. Derian said the incident amounted to "thuggery at its height."

The State Department spokesman said Washington had been assured in advance that embassy representatives could greet the Kim flight, which "might have prevented the

Kim Dae-jung gets rough welcome

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Exiled opposition leader Kim Dae-jung returned home Friday to a rough welcome by police, and immediate house arrest. The United States, South Korea's principal ally, formally protested mistreatment of Kim and an American delegation.

Some of the prominent Americans who accompanied Kim on the trip from the United States demanded that President Chun Doo-hwan's forthcoming visit to Washington be canceled, but the Reagan administration said the trip was still on, at least until what happened at the airport was clear.

Moments after Kim left the plane, police pushed him and his wife into an airport elevator, shoved two American congressmen and several people aside and drove the couple to their Seoul home by back roads to avoid crowds gathered along the main highway to welcome the popular opposition leader.

Some of Kim's supporters said he was beaten. He told foreign reporters later: "Police used violence against me. They pushed me. I felt as if I was beaten."

His wife, Lee Hee-ho, told a reporter earlier that people were shoved and pushed but not beaten.

incident. "There were understandings we thought we had with the Korean government that were not carried out," Djerejian said.

Administration officials said the incident won't cause a cancellation of President Reagan's invitation to South Korean President Chun Doo-hwan to come to Washington in April for a meeting at the White House.

FDIC foreclosing on just five properties

From Staff Reports

Rumors of massive foreclosures earlier this week by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. were scotched Friday when an FDIC official said the agency had foreclosed on only five properties prior to the monthly property auction at the Midland County Courthouse Tuesday.

The rumors were apparently touched off by a Tuesday night television interview with Stanley A. Clark Jr., the FDIC managing liquidator in Midland. In the interview, Clark said the FDIC had been involved with 11 of 73 foreclosed properties auctioned that day, according to KOSA-TV reporter Jesse Grimes. Apparently, some viewers thought Clark had said the FDIC was foreclosing on 73 properties, and the rumors began spreading. "Obviously it's a distorted rumor," said Clark's assistant Joseph Ferlo Friday. The FDIC was not even involved in 11 foreclosures, let alone 73, Ferlo said.

"We were really involved in five foreclosure actions. The majority of the properties involved were vacant subdivision lots," he said. Some single-family dwellings and one piece of commercial property were also involved. "But to my knowledge I don't believe any were occupied."

A check of the file at the Midland County Clerk's Office Friday showed that 71 trustee deeds had been posted for this month's auction.

Anti-abortion group, representative promote abortion regulation bill

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Abortion regulation legislation Texas lawmakers will be studying in the upcoming session was promoted Friday by West Texans for Life and State Rep. Kelly Godwin.

State Rep. Tom Craddick and Sen. Bill Sims also support the legislation, Orson Guenther, president of the pro-life group, said at a press conference in Odessa.

"There are no more restraints on an abortion clinic than a beauty salon," said Guenther. "And I've never heard of anyone dying from a haircut."

The proposed legislation has been introduced in committees in both branches of the state Legislature, according to Godwin, who represents Odessa.

Texas is one of 11 states without legislation in response to the 1973

U.S. Supreme Court ruling that struck down state anti-abortion laws. Before the decision, abortion was illegal in the state.

Dana Frazee, executive director for the Permian Basin office of Planned Parenthood, suggested that other states' abortion regulations were not as broadly written as the legislation introduced to lawmakers by State Rep. L.B. Kubiak and State Sen. John Sharp.

"I feel we need to pass this regulation," said Godwin, who also said abortion should be illegal. "I've heard no opposition to it."

But Ms. Frazee said Planned Parenthood currently opposed "any kind of anti-choice legislation," noting the Supreme Court decision called for abortion to be the choice of women, not dictated by law.

"This is a matter that should not be in the state Legislature," she said, suggesting it was an issue to be resolved by the courts.

About 97 percent of all abortions are "convenience abortions," said Godwin.

As written, the bill would require:

— Abortions be performed by physicians.

— Pregnancy determination before the operation.

— "Informed consent": counseling to inform those considering abortion of the risks to their lives and mental and physical consequences of the operation.

— Examination of "fetal remains" to check for the possibility of complications after the operation.

— Sanitary disposal of the remains.

— Statistical reporting of abortions to the Department of Health.

BILL

It also requires parental consent preceding abortions by minors and regulation of abortions after the first 13 weeks of pregnancy.

Abortions after a physician has determined a "reasonable likelihood" the fetus could survive outside the womb would be illegal, except under emergency exceptions.

The 18-page document detailing the proposed law also covers punishment for violations and other issues related to abortion.

"It is not intended to sway her," said Guenther. "It is intended to show her what is going to happen."

"It really is for the woman's protection," said Martha Fregia, vice president of the area pro-life group.

But pro-choice groups can be expected to raise some opposition.

"It is a private matter," said Ms. Frazee. "It will be kept that way, no matter what the Legislature does."

Ferlo said it was unlikely the agency would ever foreclose on as many as 73 properties in one month.

"I don't foresee us ever being in a position to foreclose on that many properties at one time. We don't have the manpower."

Dole announces sale of Conrail to railroad

WASHINGTON (AP) — Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole announced Friday she has decided to sell Conrail to the Norfolk Southern Corp., selecting the railroad from among three bidders for the government-owned freight line.

Mrs. Dole said the selection of Norfolk Southern "will leave Conrail in the strongest financial position...best preserve service to Conrail shippers and...give the taxpayers the best rate of return possible."

Mrs. Dole said the sale, if approved by Congress, would include a number of guarantees that Conrail is not resold or broken up for at least five years. The agreement also requires Norfolk Southern to divest itself of tracks in parts of New York, Ohio and Indiana to assure that shippers continue to have alternate rail routes once the merger is completed.

Norfolk Southern offered $1.2 billion and a variety of other considerations, including foregoing certain tax benefits, for the government's 85 percent interest in the freight railroad. Conrail workers own the other 15 percent, but Norfolk Southern plans to purchase that holding for $350 million.

"I ask Congress to act without delay," Mrs. Dole said at a news conference. "...After almost a decade of government stewardship, Conrail is prepared to join all other major freight railroads as a for-profit, private-sector company."

The selection is expected to be heatedly debated in Congress, which under the law must approve the sale. Some congressmen have raised concern that the merger of the two railroads would harm competition.

If a Norfolk Southern-Conrail merger is approved, it will create the country's largest rail system stretching from Boston and Montreal, Canada, in the Northeast to as far south as Jacksonville, Fla., and New Orleans and west to Kansas City and Chicago.

The railroad will have more than 34,000 track miles and 75,000 employees. The combined operating revenue from freight hauled by the two railroads in 1983 totaled $6 billion.

Robert B. Claytor, chairman and chief executive officer of Norfolk Southern, was at Mrs. Dole's side during the announcement, and said, "We hope to take Conrail into our family as a full partner...We think it will be a great day for the whole railroad industry."

But a spokesman for CSX Corp., which is Norfolk Southern's chief competitor, said Mrs. Dole's proposed sale overlooks "the massive adverse competitive effects, the unanimous concerns of labor and ultimate impact of reduced service."

"We will continue to oppose the sale...and are confident Congress will reject the choice," said Tom Hoppin, a CSX assistant vice president in a statement issued from the railroad's Richmond, Va., headquarters.

Mrs. Dole's choice is expected to attract strong opposition from some labor unions as well when it debated in Congress. Richard Ilroy, president of the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks, said a Norfolk Southern acquisition of Conrail "will create havoc...devastate the lives of thousands of rail employees, disrupt shippers and destroy competition."

Fred McCaffrey, an aide to Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., said the senator would offer legislation to block the sale until an effort is made to sell the railroad to the public through a stock offering.

In a written statement, Heinz said, "I had hoped the secretary would change her mind about a public offering. She apparently decided on a course of 'damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead.' The choice of Norfolk & Southern will be extremely controversial and might result in a legislative stalemate."

But Mrs. Dole reiterated her opposition to selling Conrail through a public stock offering as advocated by Conrail chairman L. Stanley Crane.

She called the Norfolk Southern bid "a bird in the hand" while arguing that there has been no definitive proof that Conrail could be sold in a public stock offering.

With the Norfolk Southern "I know who I'm dealing with," Mrs. Dole said, calling the Norfolk, Va.-based rail holding company "a highly profitable company which prides itself in having the highest operating and maintenance standards in the industry."

Conrail was created after the bankruptcy of the Penn Central and six smaller railroads left the Northeast without rail service in 1971. It began operations in 1976 but lost money in its first five years of operation as the government poured about $7 billion into it.

School officials file complaint after threats

From Staff Reports

San Jacinto Junior High School officials say they filed a criminal complaint against two Midland youths and a Midland woman following a disturbance shortly after noon Friday. The incident involved alleged violent threats against an English teacher, school principal Jim Kelly said.

Kelly declined to specify the extent of the charges, but said a 13-year-old San Jacinto student, her 16-year-old sister and 17-year-old sister-in-law were apprehended by school authorities about 12:20 p.m. following the incident that resulted after placing the student on a "five-day, home-based suspension for alleged disruptive behavior; primarily the threat of violence against another student."

The student — whose name was not released — was "told to get her parents to pick her up, but she reentered the building, walked into an English classroom and told the teacher she was going to give her brother lunch money."

The teacher — whose name also was not released — "advised the student to leave the money in the school office according to normal procedure. The youngster refused and began to direct profane language at her," Kelly reported.

The teacher "proceeded to bring the youngster to the office. At that point, the student became belligerent and violent," he noted.

Meanwhile, Kelly said, he observed the two other subjects — who had been waiting in an east-side corridor — approach the instructor "making the same inappropriate threats and using profane language." Their names also were not released.

"I separated the three away from the teacher and told the teacher to go back to the classroom because she had other students to attend to," said Kelly. "Then I tried to get the youngsters to leave the school. They refused, so I called the police."

Midland police refused to confirm the incident, calling it a juvenile matter.

Bodies of men killed in Friday blaze identified

From Staff Reports

The bodies of two men found Friday morning in a blazing building have been identified as those of a 27-year-old Midland man and a 31-year-old Odessa man.

Carter Hudson Monahan, of 1900 W. Loop 250, and Cecil Kern Woodlock Jr. of Odessa died of smoke inhalation in the early-morning fire at Midland Window Co. near the OIME Inc. plant off West U.S. 80, according to preliminary reports.

Autopsies were done on both men Friday afternoon, according to Midland Assistant Fire Marshall Bobby Williams. He said no foul play was suspected.

Extensive damage and burn patterns led fire investigators to believe the blaze was a slow-burning one, said Midland Fire Chief James Roberts.

The fire apparently began in a smoldering plastic trash can on the first floor of the garage-type shop, Williams said. The source of the fire has not been determined.

The men were found on the floor in two rooms of a living area where the shop's front office. The bodies were taken to Thomas Funeral Home.

Another 7:30 a.m. blaze Friday destroyed a mobile home off of U.S. Interstate 20 between FM 1280 and FM 1270. The trailer, occupied by Connie McDaniel, was owned by Tusha Buildings, 7800 W. U.S. Highway 80.

Extinguished with 4,000 gallons of water, the fire was believed to have started when a pan of grease on a stove ignited, fire department reports said.

PROTEST — Odessan transferred to MCH

From Staff Reports

A 23-year-old Odessa man was transferred from Midland Memorial Hospital to Medical Center Hospital in Odessa after his car overturned Friday morning in a two-vehicle collision west of Midland.

Michael Mitcham was listed in stable condition Friday night, according to a nursing supervisor at MCH. Mitcham, southbound on FM 1788 at 9:30 a.m., had pulled into the intersection of State Highway 158 when his 1985 Ford van collided with a 1984 Chevrolet pickup driven by Lawrence Hill, 34, of 3210 Lockheed, according to Department of Public Safety reports.

Hill, who was traveling west, locked the brakes of his vehicle which skidded into the left side of Mitcham's van, reports said. Both vehicles left the road and Hill's car overturned.

DPS reports indicated Hill suffered a concussion and multiple abrasions and Mitcham suffered a broken pelvis. The house supervisor at MMH said Hill was treated and released at the emergency room.

The accident was investigated by DPS Trooper Hilan Priddy of Midland.

Gardendale man injured in mishap

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 29-year-old Gardendale man who was injured in a three-vehicle accident Friday night was listed in stable condition late Friday in Medical Center Hospital here.

The man, Shawn Barker, suffered head injuries when his 1976 Jaguar was involved in the accident at U.S. Highway 385 (Andrews Highway) and Yukon Road near the Ector County Coliseum shortly after 8 p.m., according to the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Barker's car, which was southbound on U.S. 385, collided with a northbound 1982 Ford pickup truck driven by Joe Stewart Jr. of Odessa when the Barker car turned left onto Yukon. The pickup then spun around and struck a 1982 Oldsmobile driven by Jerry Bob McCollom of Odessa. The McCollom car was stopped for a red light on Yukon at time of the mishap, the DPS reported.

The accident was investigated by DPS Trooper Joe Lopez.

Charity trust withdraws request for hospitals because of probe

HOUSTON (AP) — Hermann Hospital Estate, a charity trust under investigation for alleged misuse of funds, has withdrawn requests to build two new hospitals in affluent sections of Harris County, officials say.

Hospital trustees voted earlier this week to withdraw "certificates of need" for the two proposed hospitals "in light of the current ongoing investigation," hospital spokeswoman Joan Carroza said Thursday.

Estate trustees had hoped to build a $24.5 million, 102-bed hospital in an affluent section of north Harris

County and a $22 million, 92-bed facility near a fashionable subdivision in the western part of the county.

Hospital representatives did not appear Thursday at a Texas Health Facilities Commission hearing to argue why Hermann should be licensed to build the north Harris County facilities.

Two other hospitals were competing for the license.

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox's office was investigating the plan to build the two new facilities in its inquiry to determine whether the estate, which was established in the 1914 will of oilman George Hermann, has been operated as a charitable trust to offer health care to the poor.

Last week, former estate general manager William B. Ryan was indicted on charges he stole more than $200,000 in estate funds by writing checks to nonexistent firms or people and endorsing them.

A new grand jury was empaneled Friday to conduct the investigation, but Assistant District Attorney John B. Holmes said he did not know what evidence would be presented.

Judge sets competency hearing for condemned man

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A state district judge has set a Monday hearing to hear a doctor's mental competency evaluation of a convicted murderer who says he is ready to die.

Stephen Peter Morin, who faces death by injection March 13, says he does not want to pursue any appeals. Morin, 37, was convicted of the 1981 slaying of Carrie Marie Scott, who was shot to death outside a San Antonio restaurant.

Morin also faces death sentences for the December 3, 1981, strangulation of Janna Bruce, whose body was found in a culvert near Corpus Christi, and for the Nov. 6, 1981, slaying of Denver waitress Sheila Whalen.

Monday's hearing will be before State District Judge David Berchelman, who set the execution date on Thursday.

"I have accepted Jesus as my savior," Morin told the judge during the sentencing hearing. "I'm ready to get on with the execution."

Retired prison guard, film consultant dies

ABILENE (AP) — Franklin D. Fisher, a retired Kansas prison guard who helped design the props for the hanging scene in the movie "In Cold Blood," was a firm believer in strict law enforcement and capital punishment, his daughter-in-law says.

Fisher died Wednesday at a Veterans Administration hospital in Phoenix at the age of 85. Services are scheduled for Monday in Leavenworth, Kan.

As a corrections officer, Fisher participated in the 1965 hangings of Richard Eugene Hickock and Perry Smith, who were convicted of killing four members of the Herbert W. Clutter family — a case portrayed in Truman Capote's best-selling book "In Cold Blood."

The Clutters were shot to death on Nov. 15, 1959 at their farm residence in Holcomb, Kan. Hickock and Smith, both ex-convicts, entered the home through an unlocked door, found little of value and left after killing the family.

Investigators struggled with the case until Floyd Wells, a prisoner at the Kansas State Penitentiary at Lansing, revealed that he had once told a fellow inmate that Clutter kept $10,000 in a wall safe at the home.

Smith and Perry were arrested in Las Vegas, Nev., and returned to Kansas to stand trial. They were hanged in 1965 after five years of appeals.

Fisher had firm — and differing — opinions of each killer, his daughter-in-law, Jane Fisher, said in an interview.

"The blond (Hickock)...he felt like that one was the meaner of the two," said Mrs. Fisher, an Abilene resident.

Fisher believed that a bad childhood and a broken home, pointed Hickock in the wrong direction, but that didn't excuse him from punishment in his eyes, Mrs. Fisher said.

"He really didn't feel like the dark-headed one (Smith)...he really didn't feel that he was really a bad guy," she said. "(Fisher thought) the other one was bad to the core."

Fisher worked in the Kansas prison system from 1937 until his retirement in 1965, said Sherman Crouse, a retired warden who now resides in Lansing.

Crouse said he recommended Fisher for the job of technical adviser for the 1967 film and the former guard advised producers about the scaffold and the harnesses used in the execution scene. Fisher also had a brief role in the film.

'Dome home' mistaken for UFO, nuclear power plant

By MARY ANN KREPS

ZABCIKVILLE, Texas (AP) — In this small German-Czech town best known for its sausage house and the Ocker Brethren Church, the Huber home has become the new topic of conversation.

Some folks, on first seeing the mushroom-shaped dwelling, thought it was an unidentified flying object.

The late Jerome Green, who ran Green's Sausage House just across the highway, got a kick out of telling people it was the start of a nuclear plant.

But to Walter and Lillian Huber, it's home.

The Hubers live in a concrete dome home a few miles east of Temple off Texas Highway 53. They say the house, built by their son Paul, is the first of its kind in the state.

After five months in the house, the elder Huber says, "I don't want to live in anything but a dome."

The dome is an insulated concrete shell which the younger Huber says is fireproof, termite proof, rot proof and provides "superior protection" from earthquakes and tornadoes.

"They're so strong, you can't demolish them," he said. "Because of the curve slope, air — a tornado — just goes right over it. I'd rather be here than any place else in a tornado."

But the real beauty of the concrete home, says Huber, is its ability to maintain a constant temperature with little help from heat or air conditioning.

"Concrete — just like the earth — is always going to be the same temperature, year round," Huber said.

One of the most fascinating things about the structure is the way it's built. A foundation is laid and an air form — fiberglass, reinforced vinyl — is inflated with tons of air pressure, like a balloon, Huber said.

A four-inch-thick coat of polyurethane is sprayed on the inside of the air form and fiber-reinforced concrete is sprayed inside the polyurethane. Once the concrete is cured, the air form is peeled off, Huber said, leaving the concrete shell.

The polyurethane on the outside of the structure is a fairly new concept in housing insulation, Huber said. "I don't think the Lord goofed when he put fur on the outside of the bear," he said.

A quarter-inch thick cement-type coat is sprayed on the outside of the polyurethane to protect it from fire, since it is flammable, he said.

The concept of a dome home is not original, Huber said. Air forms were first used by the military in 1940 for temporary shelters. A man in California built structures by pouring concrete on the outside of the air forms, Huber said. And in the 1950s, some builders pounded dirt into a dome, poured concrete over it and dug the dirt out, Huber said.

"Volumewise, the circle is the best way to go," Huber said. "A dome takes a third less surface area, so that's 33 percent less in building materials."

The Hubers purposely built their dome home on a visible plot of land off the highway to attract attention — and, hopefully, business. At-tion it has gotten.

Curious passersby frequently stop to ask questions and request a tour, said the elder Huber, a semiretired preacher. The Hubers love showing off their son's handiwork, but sometimes the traffic gets to be too much, he said.

Grand jury indicts woman who dumped baby in trash

FORT WORTH (AP) — A prosecutor's attempt to explain the legal process to new grand jurors has resulted in a murder indictment being returned against a young mother who dumped her newborn baby in a trash can.

Shelly Sain Clower, 22, was indicted on murder charge Thursday by a Tarrant County grand jury. In December, another grand jury had declined to indict the woman.

"It is, in fact, a very strange story," Assistant District Attorney Steve Chaney said.

Ms. Clower is accused of strangling her newborn son after giving birth in a Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport restroom on Aug. 31. Police said a maintenance worker found the body when he emptied a trash can.

Ms. Clower, who was at the airport to catch a flight to Louisiana, was arrested a few days later. She is now believed to be in Louisiana, since she was released when the first grand jury did not indict her.

Chaney routinely conducts orientation sessions for new grand jurors, and said he mentioned the case as an example of how juries sometimes reject indictment requests from prosecutors.

"They were really curious" about the case, Chaney said, explaining that he did not intend to reopen it when he discussed it with the new jury.

"This is just a tragedy," her attorney, Barry Sorrells of Dallas, said Thursday. "Everybody felt like justice was served by the wisdom of the first grand jury."

Man convicted in attempted mercy killing facing prison

HOUSTON (AP) — A Humble man convicted in the attempted mercy killing of his comatose father could face three years in prison after a state appeals court upheld revocation of his probated sentence.

The 1st Court of Appeals on Thursday affirmed a ruling last year by State District Judge Ted Poe ordering Billy Ray Clower, 29, to serve his prison term.

Defense attorney Jack Zimmermann, who submitted the appeal, said Friday he did not know if he would appeal the latest ruling to a higher court.

Clower was convicted in a highly publicized trial of shooting his father, Robert Clower, once in the head in March 1983. The elder Clower, 65, had been comatose three months at the time of the shooting and died April 2 without regaining consciousness.

Poe revoked the probated sentence in May 1984 after finding Clower had violated terms of his probation, including leaving Harris County without permission and driving while intoxicated.

Clower was arrested by Euless police officers March 3 on charges of driving while intoxicated. Euless is a small town in Tarrant County, about 250 miles north of Houston.

Defense attorney Jack Zimmermann appealed the revoked probation, contending there was no evidence his client was drunk because no sobriety tests were given and videotapes of Clower's arrest were destroyed.

Nevertheless, Judge Lee Duggan Jr. wrote in the two-page appeals ruling, the videotapes would not have affected charges that Clower violated his probation by leaving Harris County without court permission.

"The appellant invites us to speculate that his absence from the county was not a determining factor in the trial court's decision to revoke his probation," Duggan wrote. "We decline to do so."

STATE IN BRIEF

Teen-ager accused of lying to grand jury sentenced

DALLAS (AP) — A teen-ager accused of lying to a grand jury that was investigating a controversial police shooting has received a five-year suspended sentence.

Victor Franklin, 18, was sentenced Thursday by State District Judge Larry Baraka after he rejected the defense's argument that Franklin, who is black, had been the victim of "selective enforcement."

Baraka, Dallas County's first black criminal district court judge, said he was convinced Franklin lied to the grand jury last year.

After sentencing Franklin to five years in prison, Baraka suspended the sentence provided Franklin successfully completes three years probation.

In November, Franklin told a grand jury that he saw Dallas police Sgt. Melvin D. Cozby, who is white, strike Michael Todd Frost in the head with a nightstick and shoot him twice, including once in the back when his hands were cuffed.

But medical authorities testified that Frost, who is black, had been shot twice in the chest and showed no evidence of having been beaten.

Official admits difficulties

ARLINGTON (AP) — The Comanche Peak nuclear power project has a history of construction and engineering mistakes, and changes at the plant will be made under the direction of independent consultants, a top official of Texas Utilities says.

"Comanche Peak has been down a rather rocky road in the last several months," said Michael Spence, president of Texas Utilities Generating Co. "Construction has been under way for 10 years now. Over that 10-year period of time, there have been construction and engineering deficiencies that arose, and we have aggressively worked to clear those up."

Spence made the comments Thursday at a public meeting before a panel of six senior Nuclear Regulatory Commission officials.

Spence said that resumption of licensing hearings on the plant will be delayed because of a consultants' appraisal, which will increase the estimated $4.56 billion cost of the plant.

Jail search nets contraband

EL PASO (AP) — Contact visits for El Paso County Jail inmates have been restricted following a shake-down that netted a large amount of contraband, including numerous types of homemade knives, Sheriff Leo Samaniego says.

"We can no longer jeopardize the lives of the people who work here and the inmates," Samaniego said Thursday in announcing an end to the monthly contact visits allowed each inmate.

The sheriff's ban on the visits came after a three-hour cell-to-cell search of the jail Thursday morning.

Samaniego said the shake-down was prompted by the discovery Tuesday of a homemade knife in a crawl space above the jail's basement kitchen.

Man nominated for UN post has lengthy secret government career

WASHINGTON (AP) — With his nomination as U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Vernon A. Walters will move into the spotlight for the first time after a lengthy government career devoted almost entirely to secret activities.

Walters will bring unique assets to his new assignment. He speaks eight languages and, as President Reagan's chief diplomatic troubleshooter since 1981, has visited well over half of the United Nations' member countries. He also was deputy director of the CIA under Presidents Nixon and Ford and, during a 36-year Army career, rose to the rank of three-star general.

Walters, 68, has served presidents of both parties but his pronounced anti-communist views have won him particular favor with Republican administrations. His opinions on global issues appear to parallel those of the outgoing incumbent, Jeane J. Kirkpatrick.

After sitting out the Carter administration, Walters was called out of retirement by Reagan in 1981 and was named ambassador-at-large. In that role, he has visited more than 100 countries both hostile and friendly, averaging 10,000 miles a week during some hectic periods. Most of his missions have been undertaken without announcement.

During one eight-day endurance test, his itinerary read like a travel agent's dream: Washington-South America-Africa-Europe-Los Angeles-Washington.

Admirers say Walters has a talent for establishing good relationships with foreign leaders and creating a strong presence.

These qualities have enabled Walters to soften the impact of the messages, usually unpleasant, he has been asked to deliver to foreign leaders. It has not been unusual for Walters, as an example, to inform a government that U.S. assistance is being cut.

"The local authorities take care of the easy problems," he said in an interview last year. "One of my chief tasks is administering extreme sanction, just before the patient dies."

Walters' skill at languages was developed during his schoolboy education in Europe. Besides English, he is fluent in Spanish, French, Portuguese, German, Italian, Dutch and Russian.

Dispatcher plays detective, finds unconscious woman

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The caller could gasp out only the words "Rovey" and "41" before passing out, but that was enough for fire dispatcher Nick Scott. He did some fast detective work and got aid to the woman within 20 minutes.

"I was just doing my job. We were just lucky," Scott said Friday after being hailed as a hero for his part in Thursday night's rescue.

After the caller collapsed, Scott turned to the Fire Department's computer to figure out the most likely address. He then sent paramedics to the address and listened through the victim's dangling telephone receiver for sirens indicating help was close.

Helen Williams, 61, was unconscious when paramedics arrived at her home, but they revived her and she was released after treatment at a hospital for an irregular heartbeat.

Scott, 22, who is just starting his fifth year as a fire dispatcher, said nothing like the call had happened to him before and there was nothing in Fire Department training manuals about handling such a situation.

"I can't say explicitly, but I may have gotten the idea from a television show," he said.

"We're taught to ask the address, what's wrong, the phone number and then keep the caller on the phone," Scott said. "Most of the time, people give us all that without asking."

Democrats won't be speechless in face of GOP threat

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democratic leaders have quit trying to restrict after-session television coverage of the House floor, and are switching strategy to make use of the free TV time the same way Republicans do.

For the past year, Republicans have spoken at length to an empty chamber and a national cable audience of millions at the conclusion of each day's regular session.

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., tried to discourage the practice by ordering the TV cameras to pan the near-empty chamber, and by having a statement crawl across the bottom of the screen during these times stating that the House

Man would obey judge's order, if he could read it

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The land-lord's agent knew it was an order from a judge. He wanted to obey it. He just couldn't make out the judge's handwriting.

"I am requesting that you send this to us typewritten so that the instructions can be read," Louis F. Keough Jr. wrote to Common Pleas Court Judge R. Stanton Wettick recently.

"I called your office to have it read to me and, after spending 20 minutes on the telephone with various people, I was advised to hire an attorney because they could not understand it either," Keough told the judge in his letter.

Keough, property manager for a Duquesne real estate firm, said he was trying to comply with Wettick's order in a landlord-tenant dispute.

Wettick, who says he writes and signs up to 150 civil court orders on Friday, says Keough may have been thrown by the Latin phrase at the end of the order.

was no longer considering legislation. But Republican activists kept on speaking to the cameras.

Democrats had considered ways of revising House rules to restrict what now is a right of any member to speak at length on any subject at the end of the day's business session. But several days ago, they gave up for good.

Instead, they're lining up squads of their own speakers to match Republicans speech for speech, on through the night.

"We're going to have to learn to live without sleep," said Sen. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., chairman of the House Democratic Caucus.

Lately, Republicans and Democrats have been using the so-called

"special order" time to scrap over the contested election in Indiana's Eighth District, where a candidate has yet to be seated.

In the Senate, Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., who opposed a proposal to televise the Senate last year advanced by then-Majority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee, is now proposing a limited version of the old Baker plan.

Baker's successor, Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., has indicated opposition to moving forward at this time with a Senate-TV plan.

Byrd's proposal would permit certain sessions to be televised — but only if the majority and minority leaders agreed in advance. And the time for the on-air debate would have to be equally divided between Democrats and Republicans.

"Television is going to be in the Senate — sooner or later, it's coming," Byrd said. "Unless we get television, we're going to continue to be the invisible part of government."

The Senate paused from its business the other day to pay tribute to Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., as outgoing chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee. Goldwater left the panel to become chairman of the Armed Services Committee.

Unanimously, the Senate passed a resolution praising Goldwater for "unstinting devotion to national security" and for "setting a standard for diligence, dedication, bipartisanism and fairness."

Man convicted of murder in sidewalk driving incident

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — A 21-year-old man accused of driving down a crowded sidewalk on the eve of the Summer Olympics and killing a 15-year-old girl was convicted Friday of first-degree murder and 48 counts of attempted murder.

Danny Lee Young rocked back and forth at the defense table, appearing unconcerned with the proceedings as the jury's verdicts were read in the Santa Monica Superior Courtroom of Judge Jacqueline Weiss.

Young also was convicted of 20 counts of great bodily injury, accusations that accompanied 20 of the attempted murder charges.

Because Young pleaded innocent and innocent by reason of insanity, a second phase of the trial will determine if he was sane during the incident. He faces a maximum of 106 years with parole eligibility after 53 years.

Young was accused of guiding his car down the crowded sidewalk in Los Angeles near the Olympic Village at UCLA last July 27, sending pedestrians flying like bowling pins.

He said he drove down the sidewalk because he was frustrated with his songwriting career.

Detroit brewery to close

DETROIT (AP) — Stroh Brewery Co., the nation's third largest brewer, announced Friday that it is closing its plant here, where chairman Peter W. Stroh's family began brewing beer 135 years ago.

Stroh, the sixth generation of his family to lead the nation's largest family-owned brewery, said the decision is "the most difficult thing imaginable."

"I've worked with this company for 35 years," he said at a news conference. "I worked as a boy with many of the people whose lives will be affected by this decision."

The Detroit brewery, whose work will be phased out beginning in the spring, employs 890, and some 100 employees are now on seasonal lay-off, Stroh said.

The closure will reduce the company's Detroit payroll by approximately $40 million a year, Stroh said. Stroh Brewery's headquarters, employing 750 people, will remain, as will its 25-person ice cream plant, the company said.

Hooky scheme discovered

MIAMI, Okla. (AP) — Nineteen Miami High School students have been arrested in an alleged scheme to forge doctors' signatures on stolen notepads so they could play hooky.

"Students are pretty smart. They'll figure out ways to do these things," said Miami High School Principal Jerry Graham.

Graham said some of the students, aged 15 to 18, were suspended from school. All of the teen-agers were released to their parents' custody after the arrests this week.

Three of the students who are 18 were charged as adults with contributing to the delinquency of minors.

Efforts to enter mine stalled

PRICE, Utah (AP) — Efforts to re-enter the Wilberg Mine, where 27 workers were entombed by a December fire, were delayed Friday by a rise in pressure inside the mine, officials said.

Pressure inside East Mountain apparently was rising as the pressure dropped outside.

Did cough drops send man over the edge?

DENVER (AP) — It began as a big game hunting trip in the Rockies for a group of friends, but ended with gun threats, a stabbing and Robert Eugene Low's arrest while raving about the devil. His lawyer blamed the altitude and cough drops, and a judge agreed.

The lawyer, Michael Miller, said Thursday the case, which he calls the "Cough Drop Caper," was one of the most bizarre he's seen.

"This man came to me saying, 'Hey, I've done this. I don't know why I did it,'" Miller said of Low, who lives in Springfield, Mo.

"He had no history of emotional breakdown. He was under stress at work and started taking Hold cough drops in large amounts, amounts far exceeding the dosage."

Assault charges against Low were dismissed at the end of a December trial when a judge said prosecutors didn't prove "intent" — that Low meant to stab and kick fellow Missourian A.D. McCowan.

Now the case is on appeal to the Colorado Supreme Court by prosecutors challenging the cough drop defense.

In addition, McCowan is suing Low for $1.5 million.

The hunting party left Missouri as friends, but during the 10-hour drive to Colorado, Low consumed one cough drop after another, possibly more than 100 in all.

Upon arrival at a base hunting camp at 11,000 feet near Creede, trouble began.

Low, according to testimony at his trial in Del Norte, began talking about religion and the devil — unusual topics for him, friends recalled. Low then accused McCowan of being the devil and threatened to shoot him.

Other members of the hunting party quickly disarmed Low. But he pulled a knife and stabbed McCowan in the back, according to testimony.

When friends took Low's knife, Low kicked McCowan in the face, splashed gasoline on a tent, sat inside and set it afire.

Sheriff's officers arrested Low the next morning on a charge of first-degree assault.

Mineral County Sheriff Phil Leggett said Low "appeared perfectly normal."

Leggett did recall seeing cough drops at the camp. "I'm not sure how many there were," the sheriff said, "but there were quite a few. More than a normal person would take, a whole lot more."

Dr. Robert Huffaker of the Colorado State Hospital examined Low shortly after the attack and decided Low was suffering from an organic delusional syndrome.

Hold cough drops are produced by Beecham Products Inc., and each lozenge contains 5 milligrams of the chemical dextromethorphan, described as non-narcotic and not habit-forming.

During the trial, Huffaker and Dr. Frederick Lewis of Denver, who had been hired by Miller to examine Low, testified that the dextromethorphan, perhaps aggravated by the rise to mountain elevation, had caused the delusions.

Ann Terputac, a product information specialist for Beecham in Pittsburgh, said she had no knowledge of the Low case and refused to answer any questions about the case by telephone.

A spokesman said Beecham has a policy of not discussing its products outside the company.

The claim was comparable to the "Twinkie defense," which resulted in a manslaughter verdict for Dan White, charged with killing the mayor of San Francisco and a San Francisco County supervisor.

White's lawyers claimed he suffered severe mental depression caused in part by a high-sugar diet.

Locomotive rolls out of the past

By BILL MARVEL

ON BOARD THE 8444 (AP) — The temperature outside is in the high 30s, not cold enough to leave a ring of ice around roadside puddles, but cold enough to condense breath into steam and turn steam into fluffy, rolling clouds. The sun has barely cleared the horizon and folks in the scattered houses along the Missouri Pacific tracks have just begun to stir.

The woman in the pink terrycloth robe stepped onto her porch a minute ago to get the morning paper. She was just bending to pick it up when a strange sound came to her on the morning air. From the south, the direction of Houston, a rhythmic shuffling, dim and distant, has been swelling to a crescendo. Now she stands frozen, half standing and half stooping, staring across the road at the tracks.

Something large and black bursts out of the screen of pines and brush and, with a low, moaning hoot, goes striding by, wrapped in steam and smoke. Something she has not seen for decades, had even forgotten existed.

"You can always tell the ones who are seeing it for the first time," says Lowell Turner. "They're the ones with their mouths open and their eyes bugging out."

Turner is standing in the open door of the baggage car, about five cars behind Union Pacific 8444, one of the half-dozen or so active steam locomotives left in the United States. The engine and its train are on the way from the New Orleans World's Fair back to Omaha by way of Houston, Fort Worth and Kansas City.

BUT ON this Saturday, the day started before dawn at Westfield, a wide spot on the railroad north of Houston, and will end at dusk in Fort Worth. Turner is director of operations, projects and services for the Union Pacific and this is his train.

"We have 11 cars. We figure we can move 12 to 14 anywhere we want to. We try to keep the speed under 60, but it can go faster."

The 8444 is a splendid specimen of its kind. Built in 1944, engine and tender are just shy of 100 feet long. This is not a quaint little teakettle, used to ramble up and down branch lines with daisy pickers. This is a big mainline engine, painted black as engines should be, with 80-inch wheels and a lot of flailing machinery right out there in the open where you can see it. In its heyday and in its own territory, the 8444 (then the 844; a diesel usurped the engine's original number) could run away with a train of 20 Pullmans or a half-mile of freight.

But this is not its own territory. The 8444 is usually based in Cheyenne, Wyo., for excursions out of Denver and Omaha. What in the world is it doing in the piney woods of Southeast Texas?

"It's also here to establish our presence in Texas," explains Mark Davis, the Union Pacific's on-board publicity man. Davis is handing out brochures back in the dome car. According to one of those brochures, the Missouri Pacific has been part of the Union Pacific since a 1962 merger.

IN FACT, the 8444 and its train are a rolling publicity machine for the railroad. When the train pulls into Bryan the engine is mobbed. Parents boost small children up the ladder into the cab and old men stand beside the station, leaning on canes and staring silently. The Bryan fire department unrolls hoses to give the 8444 a drink. Railroad water tanks disappeared along with the steam locomotives and this is a necessary service.

The engine's 80-inch drivers have operating officials here a little nervous. Large wheels have a tendency to climb up and over the rails when the curves are too sharp and the curve away from the Bryan station is very sharp. And so the rails have been greased to ease the way. Despite this, engineer K.A. Staples doesn't think it will be a slippery start.

Staples, who is from Omaha, is one of three engineers who travel with the 8444. When he isn't driving the big engine, he is the railroad's superintendent of locomotives. "These engines have been clocked at over 100 miles an hour," he said, "but we don't go over 60. We want it to last a long time."

Across the cab is Jim Duncan, a UP fireman. Duncan explains — over and over, to each visitor — that the 8444 burns No. 6 residual fuel oil, not coal. No shoveling here. When he isn't a fireman on the 8444, Duncan is an engineer on a diesel. But he likes this engine. "It's kinda like a sports car," he says. "We've been kind of playing with it, blowing the whistle, producing a lot of smoke. It's a very forgiving engine."

Duncan has been as far as Portland, Ore., and New Orleans with the 8444. "We get around a little bit. We're just like the Budweiser horses."

WITH TWO blasts from the whistle, 8444 is under way again. Back in the lounge car, Walter Dean is serving drinks to those who boarded in Bryan and talking about the old days. Dean has spent 43 years in UP dining car service.

"I worked the City of San Francisco, the City of Los Angeles, the City of Portland. I started in 1941 when we had 250 men. Walters and cooks. Now there are only two of us left. Sometimes it scares you when you think how many have gone." In his days on the City of Los Angeles, Dean served the stars. "Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Cary Grant, Loretta Young."

ANZUS defense pact threatened by dispute over nuclear warships

By BARRY RENFREW

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — For decades a little-publicized defense pact with New Zealand and Australia was one of the United States' firmest alliances in a world of shifting loyalties. Then a dispute over nuclear warships suddenly strained the old friendship.

Despite some angry words during the past week as a result of New Zealand's decision to ban nuclear-powered and nuclear-armed ships from its ports, the three countries have left the door open for reconciliation.

There also has been little apparent damage to U.S. strategic interests.

New Zealand officials say visits by nuclear ships make their country a target for nuclear attacks, and the 34-year-old ANZUS alliance was thrown into disarray when New Zealand refused a second American request to send the destroyer U.S.S. Buchanan on a visit after naval exercises in March.

After New Zealand's refusal, the United States withdrew from the Sea Eagle naval exercise.

Prime Minister David Lange, elected last July, said the ship violated his government's ban on nuclear-powered or nuclear-armed vessels because Washington would not give an assurance that it did not carry nuclear weapons. The United States refuses to confirm or deny if any of its ships carry nuclear arms.

The U.S. State Department said New Zealand's action threatened the survival of ANZUS, and that defense and intelligence ties might be severed. In Honolulu on Thursday, U.S. officials said they had canceled a Feb. 18-23 visit by New Zealand's Select Committee on Defense to U.S. Pacific Command headquarters.

The invitation, extended by Adm. William Crowe Jr., commander in chief of U.S. military forces in the Pacific, was withdrawn in Wellington by U.S. Ambassador H. Monroe Browne, according to command spokesman Maj. Terry McCann.

"We felt that a visit now would not be appropriate," said U.S. State Department spokeswoman Sondra McCarty. "We hope that it might be possible at a future date to invite the committee again."

New Zealand has said it will not abandon its position and blasted warnings of trade retaliation from Congress. "I regard it as unacceptable that another country should by threat or coercion try to change a policy which has been embraced by the New Zealand people," Lange said.

However, President Reagan said Thursday after talks in Washington with Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke that the alliance was "very sound and very solid."

"We consider New Zealand a friend. It is our deepest hope that New Zealand will restore the traditional cooperation that has existed between our two countries," Reagan said.

A U.S. State Department spokesman said defense cooperation with New Zealand would suffer, but "this does not mean that we are treating New Zealand as an enemy and are seeking ways to retaliate."

Lange said Friday that Reagan's remarks "underline and support my own unshakable conviction in the vigor and strength of our broadly based relationship with the U.S."

ANZUS was further troubled when Hawke decided en route to the United States to withdraw permission to allow U.S. aircraft to use Australian bases while monitoring long-range tests of the MX nuclear missile. Hawke's advisers told him he would be defeated on the plan in his party's parliamentary caucus.

However, the differences with Australia and New Zealand caused little apparent damage to U.S. strategic interests.

Study shows Soviet slowdown in defense spending

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — A new NATO study says a slowdown in the growth of Soviet defense spending, first detected by alliance experts a year ago, may signal a shift in the Kremlin's economic priorities.

The study estimates that Soviet military spending rose at a 2 percent average annual rate, after inflation, from 1977 through 1983. That is half the reported growth rate for the previous seven years.

By comparison, U.S. defense spending rose a 4 percent a year — not including the inflation rate — in the 1977-83 period, after falling more than 5 percent annually in the prior seven years, according to Pentagon figures.

A summary of the NATO study, shortened to keep some of the conclusions secret, was made available to news organizations this week by West German officials at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The main reason cited for the reduced Soviet rate of spending was a recent dropoff in military hardware deliveries, attributed partly to cyclical factors, technological problems and economic ills.

"It is not clear, however, that these factors alone, or even in combination, fully explain the slowdown, and it is not possible to assign weight to any of the possible explanations," the summary said.

It said that while there was no available evidence of a formal Kremlin decision to reduce the spending growth rate, "such decisions — explicit or implicit — may well have been made."

The study suggested such decisions may mean Moscow wants to place more emphasis at this stage on revitalizing the Soviet economy.

Bulldogs bite back

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

For a team that saw its playoff hopes greatly diminished in a loss to San Angelo last Tuesday night, the Midland High Bulldogs certainly did a good job of gaining a little revenge over Abilene Cooper, 75-66, at Chaparral Center Friday night.

Cooper dealt the Bulldogs an upset in the first half, but the Bulldogs came out of the starting gate with fire in their eyes to take a 40-17 lead over the stunned Cougars while moving their season record to 19-10 and 7-5 in District 4-5A play.

MHS coach Jack Stephenson was a little surprised that his club did play as well as it did to open the game.

"That was a tough one for us to lose to San Angelo Tuesday," said Stephenson. "I know I was flat as a pancake before the game. Tuesday was a big letdown and I expected it to be a tough thing for our kids to recover. I thought they played well considering the circumstances."

Even with the big 23-point cushion, and later 25 points in the third period, the Bulldogs almost ended up holding on. Cooper narrowed the margin to 58-50 with 3:27 left to play as Stephenson used his bench extensively in the second half.

"I told the kids after the game that the first half was the best we have played since the El Paso Irving game in our tournament and that it was the worst second half we've played since we played Cooper the first time," said Stephenson.

But Matt Sears quickly put an end to the Cougar dreams of a comeback with two unanswered buckets for a 62-50 lead and the rout was on again.

DARRELL DAVIS led all scorers with 16 points, one of his worst efforts of the district campaign. He hit only eight of 21 shots from the field and was one of nine in the fourth quarter when he finally fouled out.

But with Davis you have to measure bad nights with tongue in cheek. No one had more points. He did have a slam dunk that ignited the Bulldogs early in the game, but he should have stayed with the dunk since he later missed a couple of easy layups.

Sears and Elvin Mackey each had 11 points and were the only other Bulldogs in double figures, but 12 of the 17 MHS players who played got in the scoring act.

To the credit of the Cougars, Cooper didn't give up despite the first half results. Leo Williams, who had only three first half points, ended the night with 13 while Fred Starks led Cooper with 15. Jay Estes, who had one point in the first half scored 12 more in the second half for 13.

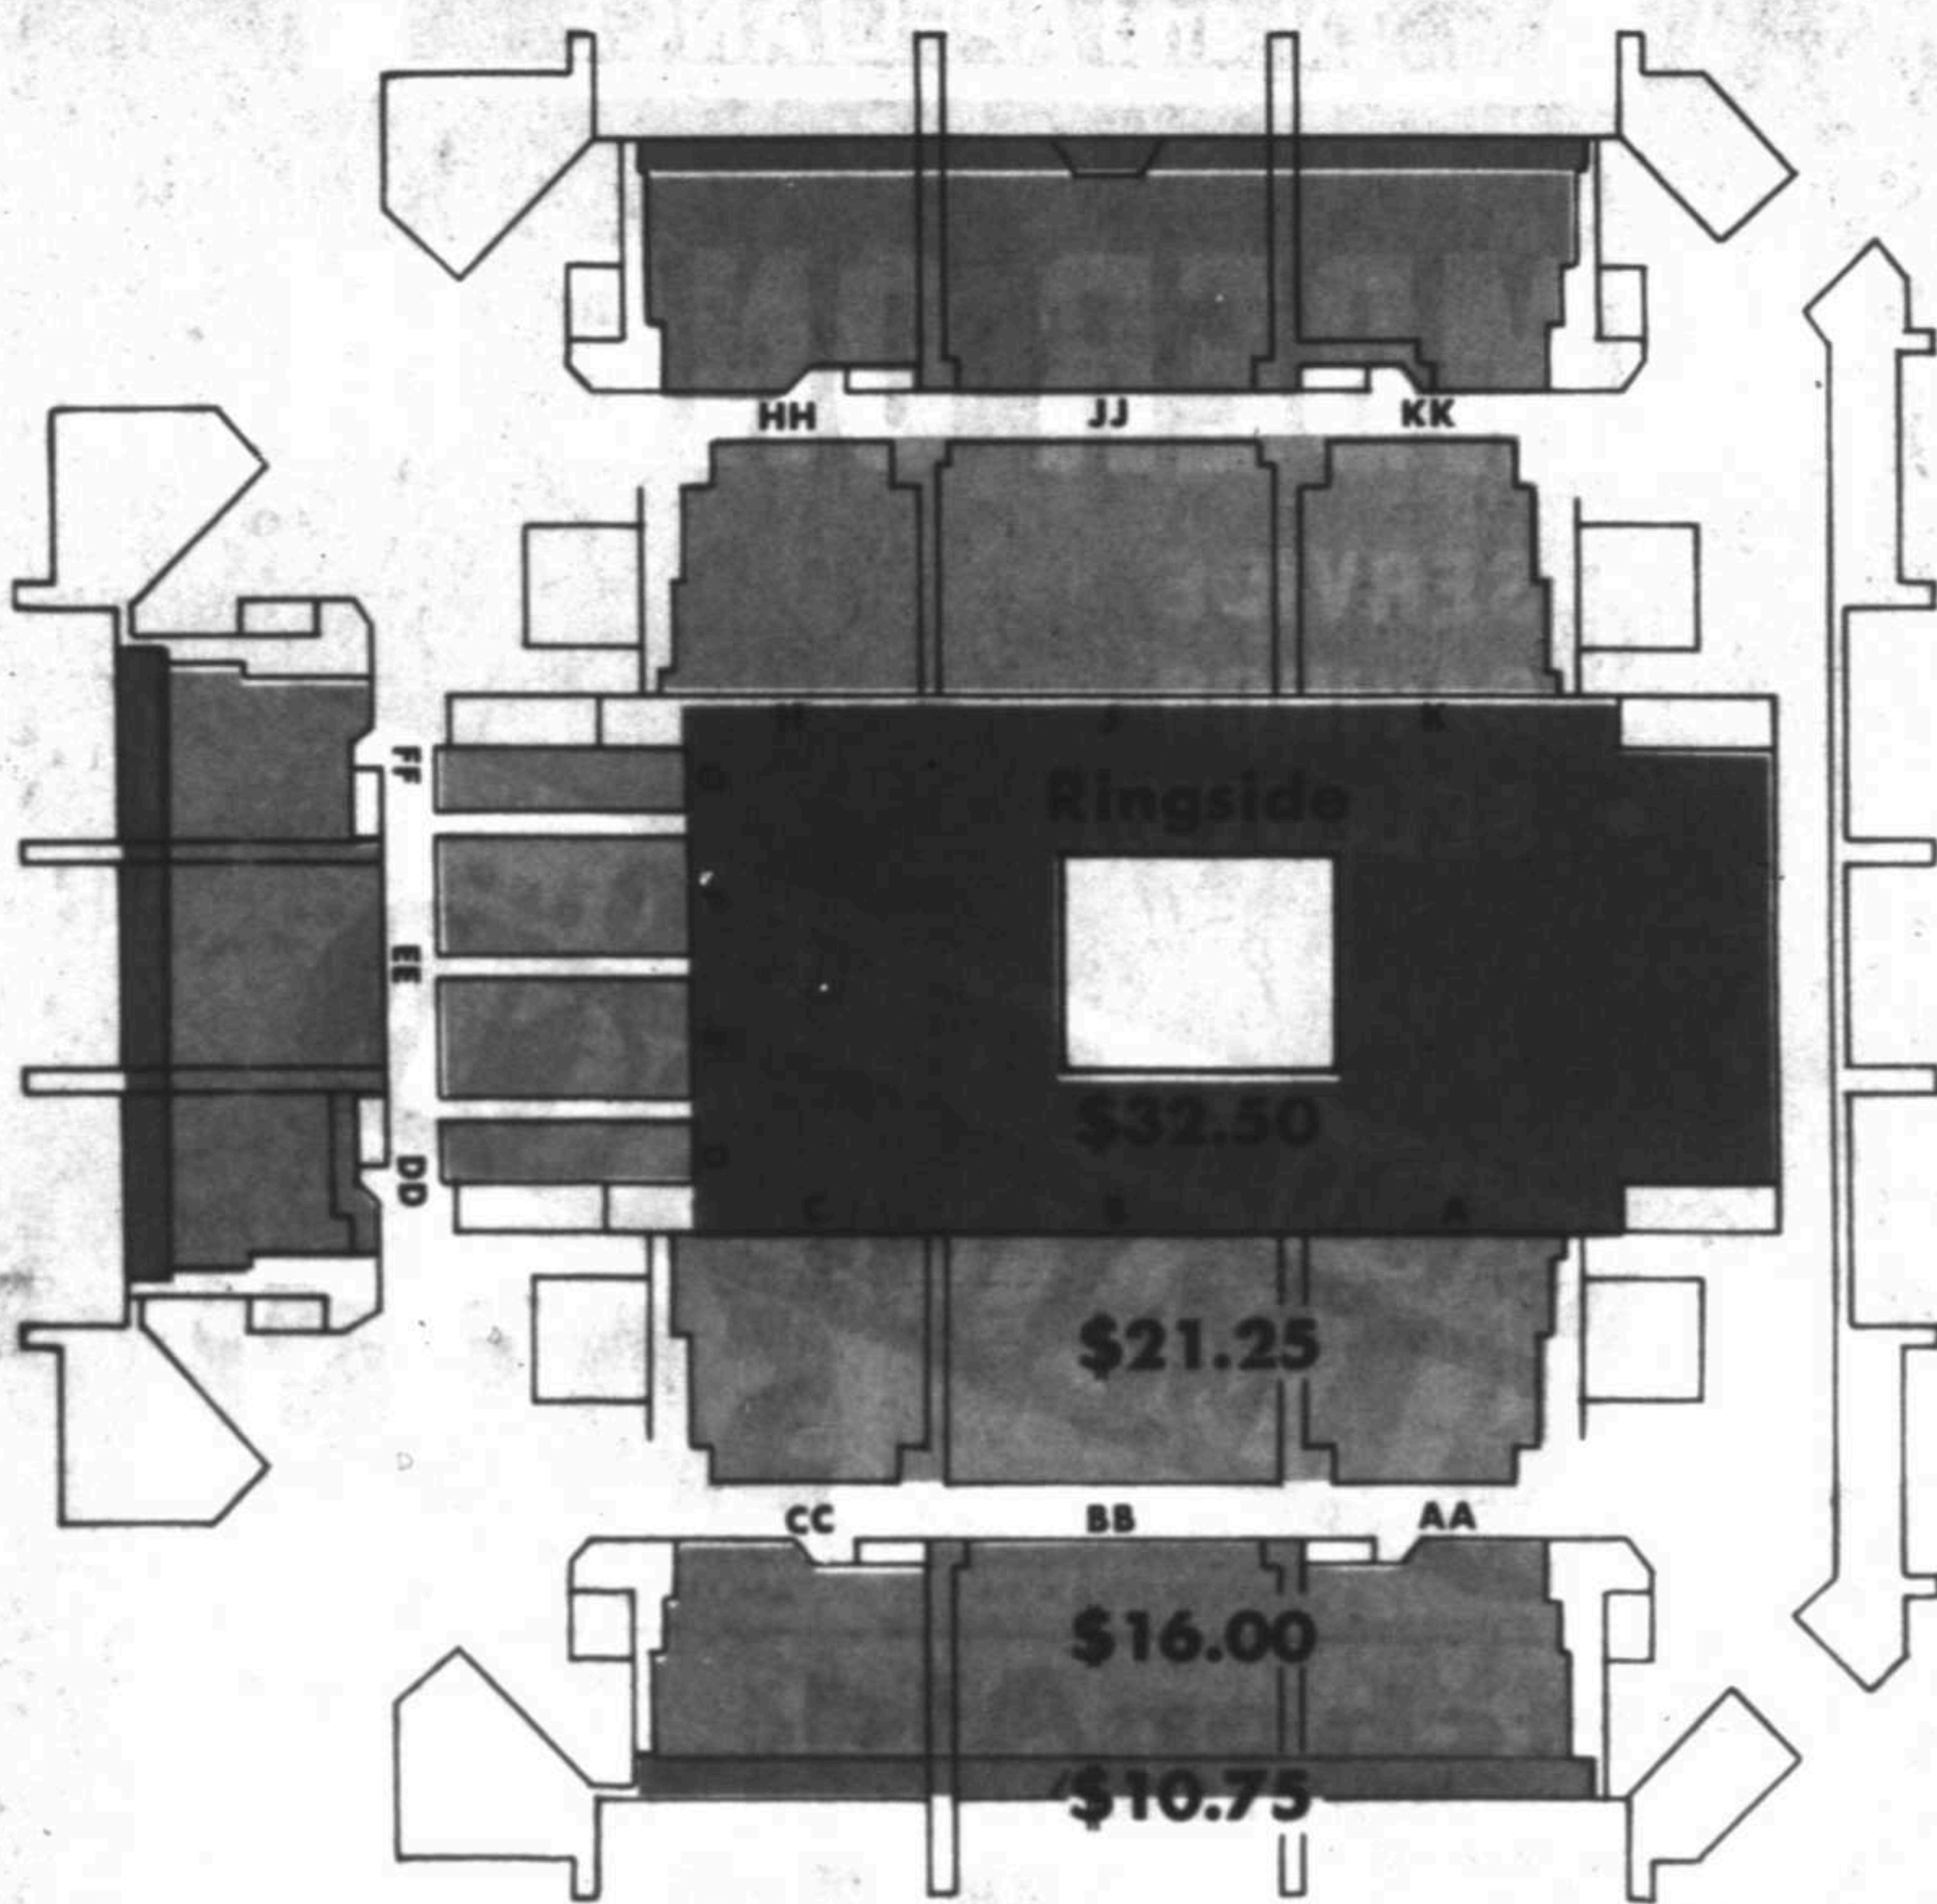

Cooper outscored the Bulldogs by a 49-35 margin in the second half, but there was just too much ground to gain in this one.

MIDLAND HIGH is still in the race for a playoff berth, but either Midland Lee or Abilene High would have to lose their last two games for that to happen.

"Anything could happen," said Stephenson, "but right now we can still finish the season with 20 victories with one more win and I think that would be a good year. I know we plan on having a heck'va game against Permian Tuesday."

Lee girls get needed win

Rebs, 'Dogs in playoff for playoffs

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

It was a case of one team needing a win, and the other just wanting one.

And when the Midland Lee girls basketball team needed to play playoff-type basketball, they did, sticking it to visiting Abilene High, 68-44, Friday night.

Leading the Eagles by just seven, 34-27, at intermission, the Rebels came bursting out of the lockerroom to score the first 10 points of the second half and outscore undermanned Abilene 16-2 in the third quarter.

"We were just thinking about getting ready for the playoffs, I guess," said forward Becky White, who scored three buckets in the first three minutes of the final half.

The Rebels, 11-3 in district play and 18-9 overall, aren't exactly in the state playoffs yet, they earned the next best thing with Friday's win.

Lee will face Midland, a winner over Abilene Cooper, Monday at 8 p.m. at the Chaparral Center in a District 4-5A playoff for second place and a trip to bi-district playoffs. Odessa Permian took the district title with a 12-2 record.

Abilene fell to 5-9, 9-17 with the loss. White led Lee with 20 points while Teena Sisemore had 11 and Valencia Wallace added 10.

Abilene, playing without point guard and second leading scorer Jennifer Wolfe, received a game-high 24 points from Treena Jackson, but little else from a thin bench.

"I thought we played well in the first half," Lee Coach Shirley Stephenson said. "That number 44 (Jackson) is just a fantastic player, that was our problem. Maybe she got tired in the second half."

"Also we had much more control defensively in the second half. We weren't reaching out as they went by us."

Lee's Rebels place playoff hopes on back burner

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — The Midland Lee Rebels had to put the thoughts of District 4-5A playoff hopes on the back burner here Friday night after an 87-74 boys basketball setback to the Abilene High Eagles.

The Rebels, who entered the game with a one-game lead over the 4-5A field, could have nailed down at least a 4-5A playoff with a victory over the Eagles. Now Lee is in a tie for first place with Abilene High, both with 9-3 district records and two games left to play.

The night could have ended in a three-way tie for first place, but Odessa Permian (7-5) upset 8-4 San Angelo by a 75-67 margin in Odessa Friday.

Now if Lee loses its last two games and both AHS and San Angelo win out, the Rebels could miss a playoff berth altogether.

The Eagles had a lot of scoring punch against Lee Friday. Cliff Johnson led the way with 19 points, but Mickey Russell had 17, Joe Agnew 17, Kirt Robinson 15 and Greg Lowry 11 in a four-pronged attack.

Raymond Morney got 18 points for Lee while Derek Westbrook had 17. Tyrone Thurman added 12 points and Lee Dixon had 11 off the bench. Lee's leading scorer on the season, Brian Marcynski, had only eight points on the night.

The Eagles jumped on Lee early, taking a 24-17 lead in the first quarter and a 46-29 margin at the half. Lee won the second half, but could only get to within nine points of the Eagles at 66-57 with six minutes left to play.

Lee has a date with Odessa High Tuesday and Midland High Friday while the Eagles end with what appears to be an easier schedule with Big Spring and Abilene Cooper.

Terry Williams hit for 22 points to lead Permian in its upset over San Angelo while Danny Servance had 19 and Jimmy Davis 17. San Angelo got 17 points from Ottoway Perryman, 15 from David Hulse, 13 from Brian Ross and 10 from Willie Blakey.

San Angelo ends the season with a games against Abilene Cooper and Big Spring next week.

In the only other 4-5A game played Friday night, Odessa High defeated Big Spring by a narrow 76-63 margin as Keith Smith led the Bronchos with 22 points and Allan Bailey contributed with 20. Benard Williams led Big Spring with 19 points.

The district now looks like the infighting will go down to the final game next Friday night. Lee, Abilene High and San Angelo will be the principal figures that will be watched, but Midland High, Cooper, Big Spring and Odessa High, the lower teams in the standings, will determine the final outcome.

Next Friday's Midland High-Lee matchup at Chaparral Center should be a dandy with title implications written all over it.

BOB BRUNDAGE

Who are the champions?

Consider for a moment, if you will, all the boxing organizations that offer world championships. There's the World Boxing Association, World Boxing Council, International Boxing Federation...

Now, stop and consider who the title holders in each weight classification are. There are so many of them it boggles the mind trying to tell them apart. In some cases, the hearts and minds of the vast majority are with one guy while two or three others claim the same distinction.

Take Larry Holmes, for example. Though his championship isn't unanimous, when you talk about the heavyweight champ it's Holmes. Nobody considers the other guy — or are there three? — very much.

The sport of boxing is quick to hand out a "World Championship" but few fighters are unanimous picks by all organizations. Let's see, the list is pretty short I think. There's Marvelous Marvin Hagler. There's Michael Spinks. There's uh, uh...

In a way, it's kind of ridiculous. After all, there can only be one world champion. Let's label these guys what they really are: World Co-Champions or World Tri-Champions, whichever the case may be.

LEVELLAND BOXER Rockin' Robin Blake, a lightweight fighter with a 26-2 record who is going to fight 22-1 Adolfo 'Chile' Medel today at Chaparral Center at 2 p.m., wants to own the World Championship. It's his dream.

Let's take a hypothetical situation: Blake beats Medel and earns his rematch fight with Harry Arroyo and wins the IBF crown. He'll then be known as a World Champion.

In actuality, he'd be a co-champion. I won't think of him as the champ until he holds all the crowns. I guess I'm just harder to please than most people.

ONE THING in boxing's favor is the World Championship is at least open to the world. I've yet to see the National Football League, National Basketball League, National Hockey League, Major League Baseball...open their doors to the world.

Other football leagues are around. There's the United States Football League and the Canadian Football League. Yet, the San Francisco 49ers are called World Champions.

There are basketball teams in nearly every country of the world and yet the Boston Celtics are called the defending World Champions.

The NHL doesn't include Russia or other countries other than Canada in their elite little group but they call the Edmonton Oilers World Champions.

How about Mexican, Puerto Rican and Japanese baseball leagues? The Major Leagues didn't play these leagues but the World Champions are located in Detroit.

Granted, except for an extremely fluky year, each of these teams would still hold their crowns. But, they didn't prove on the field of play outside of their own little groups.

So, who really are the World Champions?

O'Meara hits 66 to gain tie for first place

HONOLULU (AP) — Mark O'Meara, winner of last week's Bing Crosby National Pro-Am, took advantage of ideal playing conditions for a 6-under-par 66 that lifted him into a tie for the second round lead Friday in the $500,000 Hawaiian Open.

O'Meara, golf's No. 2 money-winner last season and off to a fast start this year, completed two trips over the Waialae Country Club course in 133, 11 shots under par.

He was tied for the lead at the tournament's halfway point with former U.S. Open champ Andy North, who had a second round 67.

"I don't think we'll ever see a golf course that plays any easier than this one did today," said O'Meara, who has yet to make a bogey in the tournament.

"The greens were soft, the breeze was minimal and there's very little rough," O'Meara said.

Jim Simons, one of four men poised a single shot off the lead, agreed.

"What a day," he said after a compiling a 66 in temperatures reaching near 80 degrees. "The weather was just perfect. The golf course was just sitting there."

Simons was tied at 134, 10 under par, with former U.S. Open and PGA title-holder Larry Nelson, Larry Mize and Scott Simpson.

Mize had second consecutive 67 and would have been tied for the lead but for a self-imposed penalty on his 14th hole. He drove under a tree, attempted to "move a leaf from behind the ball and the ball moved ever so slightly," he said.

He called the stroke penalty on himself that left him one shot back.

Simpson had a 68 and Nelson posted the best round of the tournament, an 8-under-par 64.

BOB EASTWOOD, who won two 1984 PGA Tour events, and Dan Pohl were another shot back at 135. Pohl had a 68 and Eastwood shot 67 on the course that winds through palm trees to Pacific beaches.

pion who shared the first-round lead, could not keep pace, however. He had a 71 that dropped him back to 137. Tom Watson, playing in the same group with Sutton, had a 69 and finished two rounds at 140. Masters champion Ben Crenshaw was 71-140.

Jack Renner, who finished first and second in this event in the last two years, struggled to a 74 and failed to qualify for the final two rounds with a 145 total.

Arnold Palmer, 55, was another victim of the cut at 74-148.

O'Meara made his round on a domination of the par-5 holes. He played them four under, including an eagle on his fourth hole, where he hit a 2-iron within 6 feet of the flag.

"I hit 16 greens yesterday and 17 greens today. I'm driving the ball very well, playing the par-5s very well. I just feel I'm playing very well," he said.

Carpenter sets record

Associated Press

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Bob Carpenter was more excited about the crowd reaction than his record-tying performance.

Carpenter scored two goals as the surging Washington Capitals defeated the Los Angeles Kings 6-1 Friday night. Carpenter tied the National Hockey League record for most goals by an American-born player in a single season.

"Never in my wildest dreams did I think there would be a reaction like that," Carpenter said after scoring his 41st goal. "I was proud to do it here, and the reaction really got to me. In a Canadian city, it wouldn't have meant anything."

Carpenter, in his fourth season, contended the only time he thought of the mark set last season by Joe Mullen of St. Louis was when he was reminded by questions by members of the media.

"It's just a milestone," he insisted. "That's the way I've got to look at it. I don't feel any pressure. I work as hard as I can ... to give anything less than that is my fault."

Carpenter had gone three games without a goal, his longest drought of the season, before tying the record.

Oilers 5, North Stars 3
BLOOMINGTON, Minn. — Willy Lindstrom scored twice in the third period to snap a 2-2 deadlock and ignite the Edmonton Oilers to a victory over the Minnesota North Stars.

NHL Roundup

Lindstrom broke the tie at 5:03, taking a pass from Dave Semenko in front of the North Stars' net and flipping a backhand past Minnesota goalie Don Beaupre.

Semenko assisted Lindstrom again at 8:21, passing out a pass in front of Minnesota's net to Lindstrom, who guided it in for his 11th goal of the season.

Edmonton tallied first, at 4:45 of the second period, to take a 1-0 lead. NHL scoring leader Wayne Gretzky won a faceoff and shot the puck back to Paul Coffey, who pumped in his 21st goal from the slot.

Steve Payne got the first of his two power play goals for Minnesota at 8:30 to tie the score 1-1. Keith Acton hit Payne with a pass and he knocked it in from the left circle. Acton set Payne up again for his 21st goal 2:27 later. This time Payne scored from the top of the left circle.

Mike Krushelnyski picked up his 33rd goal of the season during a scramble in front of the Minnesota net at 10:30 of the second period to tie the score 2-2.

Mark Messier got Edmonton's

final goal at 15:42 of the third period when he beat a defenseman and walked in on Beaupre.

Scott Bjugstad scored the final goal for Minnesota, with three minutes, on a 20-foot slapshot.

Canucks 5, Jets 5 (OT)

WINNIPEG, Manitoba — Randy Carlyle and Dale Hawerchuk took advantage of a major penalty to Vancouver's Thomas Gradin by scoring power-play goals in the final 32 seconds of regulation time, giving the Winnipeg Jets a tie with the Canucks.

Stan Smyl's second goal of the game at 10:18 of the third period snapped a 3-3 tie and Petri Skriko scored at 16:37 to give Vancouver a 5-3 lead. But with 2:01 remaining in the third period, Gradin was assessed a five-minute major penalty for high-sticking Hawerchuk in the face.

The Jets buzzed around the Vancouver net and Carlyle blasted a shot from the point past Vancouver goalie Richard Brodeur at 19:28 to make it 5-4.

Hawerchuk then scored his second goal of the game and 36th of the season at 19:42 to send the match into overtime. The Jets' power play continued for 2:59 of the overtime period but they couldn't get the winning goal.

White, Howe match Sarasota 139s

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Donna H. White chipped in on two consecutive holes and Lauren Howe had a pair of birdies for 5-under-par 139s to share the second-round lead Friday in the $200,000 Sarasota Classic.

White, winner of this Ladies Professional Golf Association event in 1983, had a 2-under-par 70. She had a chance for sole possession of first place before she bogeyed her final hole.

Howe, one of four first-round leaders with 68s, shot a 1-under 71 Friday.

Tied at 4-under 140 were Patty Sheehan, Patty Hayes, another of Thursday's co-leaders, and JoAnne Carner, fresh off her victory in the Elizabeth Arden Classic.

Sheehan fired a second-round 71. Hayes turned in a 72 and Carner had a low-round 69.

Betsy King, 1984 leading money winner on the LPGA circuit, and Lynn Connelly, another first-round leader, were at 3-under 141. King's 69 also tied the low round, while rookie Connelly shot a 73.

Dot Germain, the other first-round leader, fell far off the pace with a 77 for 145.

White, who believed she had only chipped in once all of last year, has now done it three times here in two rounds.

Her first chip-in Friday was for an eagle-3 on the 485-yard ninth hole. Then she went to the par-4 No. 10 and did it again, this time for a birdie. White began the day at 69, one shot behind the leaders. She bogeyed two of her first four holes in the second round.

Howe played the back side first and made the turn even-par for the day. She had bogeyed her ninth hole then three-putted the very next hole for another bogey. Howe was still 1-over-par for the day, 3-under for the tournament, before her birdies on the final two holes.

Four times on the first five holes she chipped within three feet of the cup to set up par-saving putts.

Val Skinner made the tourney's first hole-in-one, sinking a 7-iron shot on the 159-yard fifth hole.

SW Louisiana rips Pan Am

EDINBURG (AP) — George Almones scored 27 points Friday night to lead Southwestern Louisiana to its seventh straight victory, a 76-60 decision over Pan American.

The Ragin' Cajuns' three-guard offense produced 60 points, with Drexel Allen adding 19 points and Cedric Hill 14.

SW Louisiana improved its record to 16-8. Pan American, led by the 14 points of Dan Williams, fell to 10-10.

USL led 30-27 at halftime. Then the 6-4 Almones hit 11 straight free throws in the second half and finished with 11 of 12.

The 16-point victory margin was USL's smallest in the seven games since coach Bobby Paschal began starting three guards.

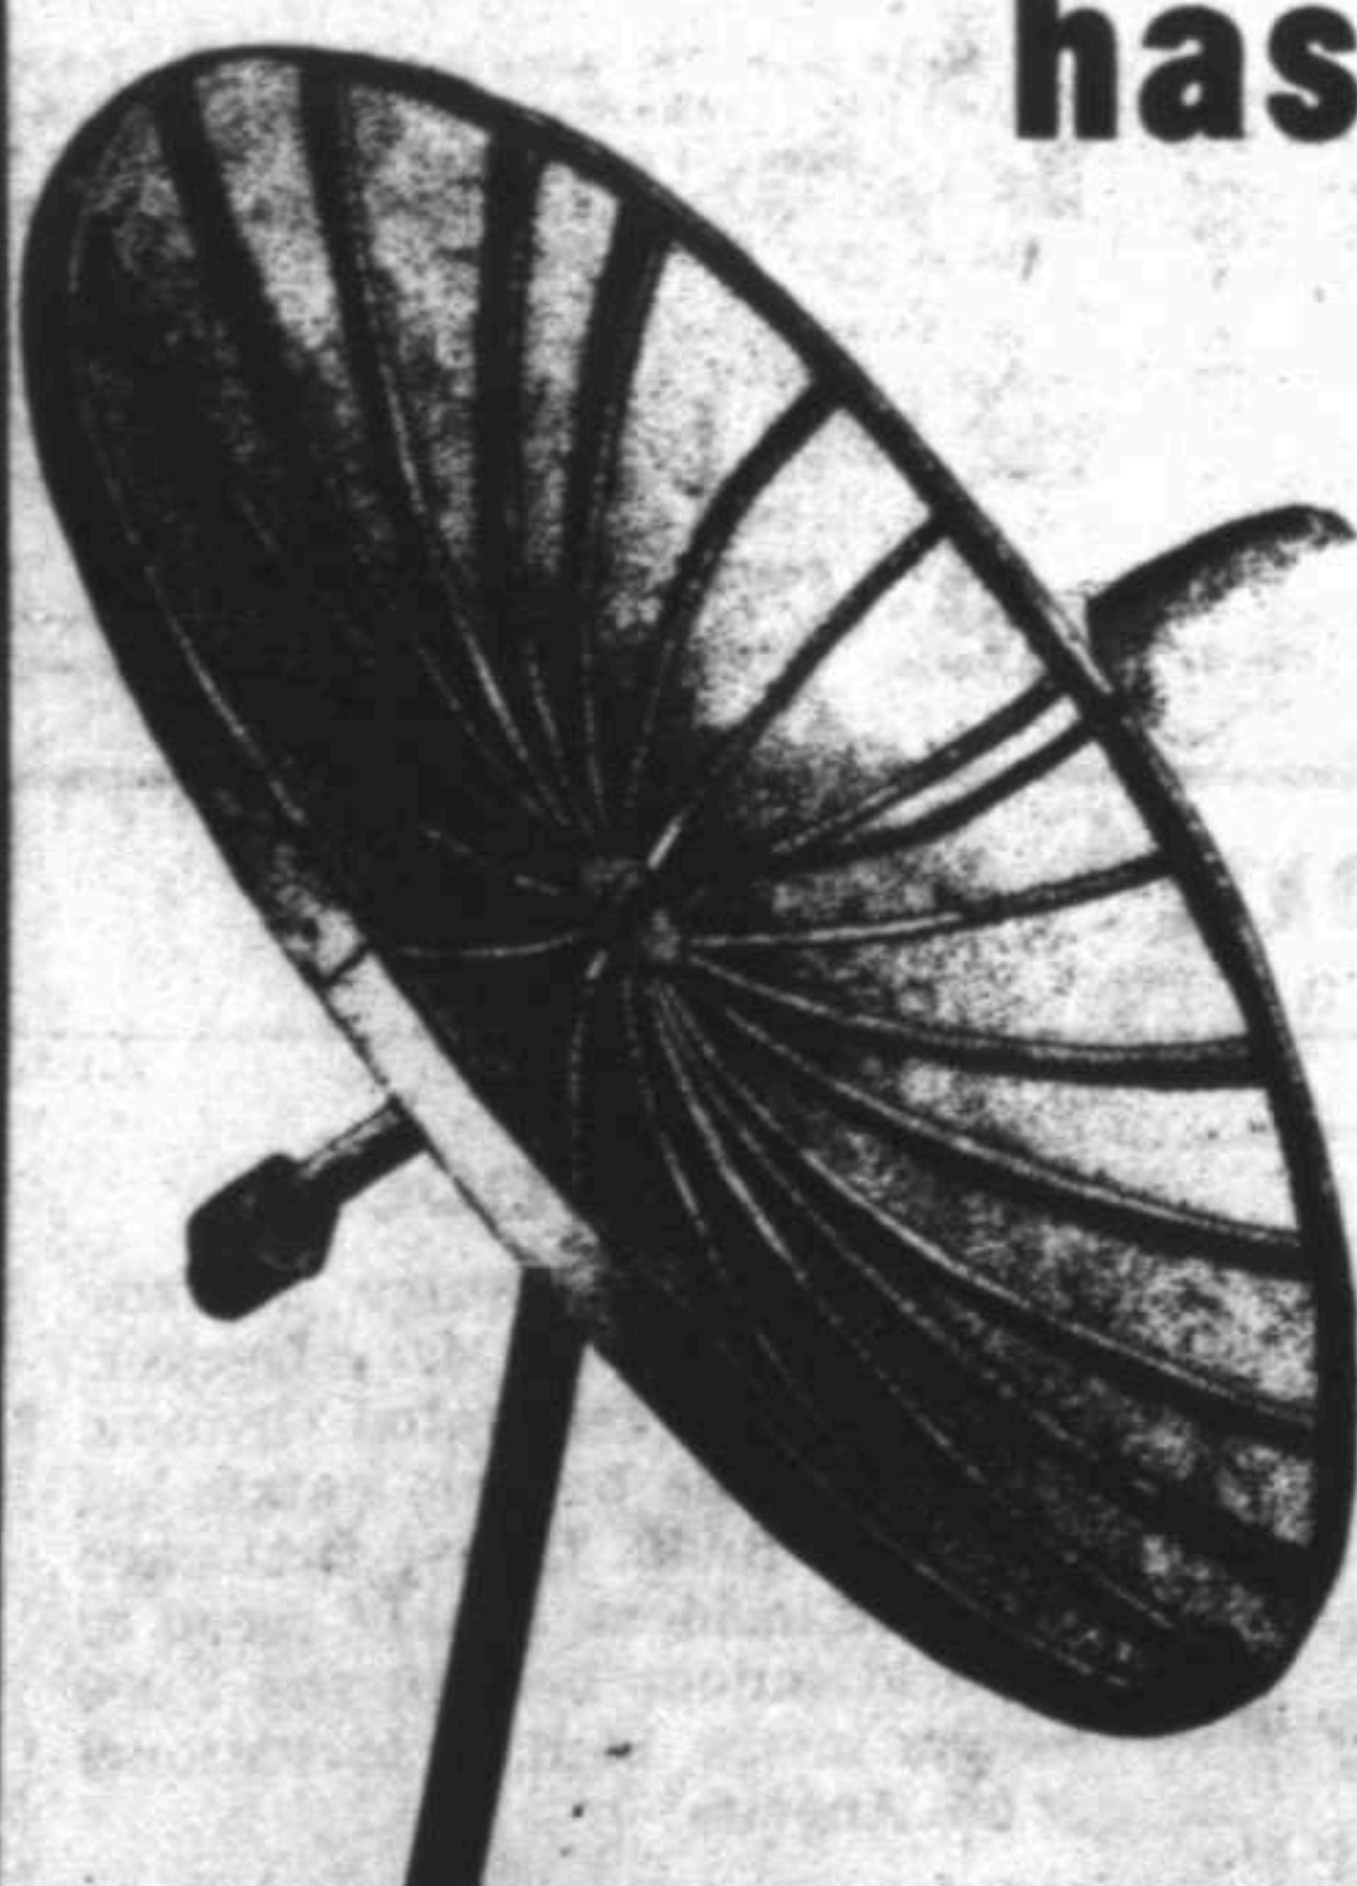

Three Broncs fouled out trying to guard Almones and the 5-10 Allen. Almones grabbed eight rebounds and hit 8 of 12 field goals.

Eastern, union reach tentative agreement
MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines reached a tentative contract agreement with its machinists union Friday, another step toward forging a new financial plan for the carrier, which is in technical default on $2.5 billion in loan and leasing agreements, officials said.
"We went through a lot of trauma in the last several weeks," said Charles Bryan, president of the International Association of Machinists District 100, Eastern's largest union with 12,000 members. "We have gotten a two-year contract."
The company, in technical default in loan and leasing agreements with some 60 institutions, has already reached agreements with its two other major unions, representing pilots and flight attendants.
The tentative agreement was needed before the airline could force a 1965 financial plan that would satisfy the creditors, to which it owes $2.5 billion. When details of the pact have been hammered out, it must be ratified by the union's membership.
Russ McGarry, one of the machinists' negotiators, said the pay increases would be "along the lines" of those agreed to Thursday by the pilots, who are getting a 3 percent raise Feb. 1, and a previously negotiated 2 percent raise in April.
In addition, the union won a commitment from the company to discuss granting productivity bonuses that could boost members' pay, Bryan said. Also on the table in future talks with the company will be a proposal by the union to have a portion of members' salaries on the size of Eastern's gross revenues, he said.
Neither Bryan nor other machinists' officials would provide more details of the tentative agreement at a hastily called news conference Friday night. Negotiations on details of the pact will probably resume Monday, a union spokesman said.
"We're very pleased. I think there's no question that Eastern will return to profitability this year as long as we have the full cooperation and positive attitudes of the workforce," said Eastern Airlines spokesman Bob Hunter.
He said all three labor agreements were similar and they follow the recommendations made by Eastern labor consultant William J. Usery.

Southern Miss put on probation

FOOTBALL — Southern Mississippi's football program has been given a one-year probation for recruiting violations, the NCAA announced Friday. The NCAA's official news release said the Committee on Infractions had actually imposed a two-year probation with sanctions on television appearances and expense-paid recruiting visits.

But the penalty was reduced to one year, beginning immediately, and the television sanction was lifted "based on the prompt disciplinary actions taken by the university ... as well as the university's commitment to develop full information," the NCAA said in a news release. The NCAA said the school would not be allowed to exceed 60 expense-paid visits by football prospects in next year's recruiting season. Normally, 95 visits are permitted.

Additional terms for rescinding the second year of the probation include the firing of an unnamed assistant football coach and the freezing for the 1985 calendar year the salary of head football coach Jim Carmody.

BASEBALL — Catcher Rich Gedman, who has been asking for $550,000 in arbitration after his best season last year, agreed to terms on a one-year contract with the Boston Red Sox. Gedman, 25, signed before a schedule arbitration hearing Saturday in New York City.

Gedman hit .299 in 133 games last season, slugging 24 home runs and driving in 72 runs. His homer total was the second best by a Red Sox catcher. The left-handed hitter led American League catchers in average and extra-base hits and was second to Lance Parrish of Detroit in home runs and runs batted in.

SWIMMING — West Germany's Michael Gross, a double gold medalist at the LA Olympics, was timed in 7 minutes, 38.75 seconds in the men's 800-meter freestyle Friday for a world's best clocking in a 25-meter pool. Gross, 19, accomplished the feat during the opening day of the Arena Swim meet. Swimmers from 32 countries are participating in the three-day meet. Gross was the gold medalist in the 200-meter freestyle and the 100-meter butterfly during last summer's Olympics.

BASKETBALL — Auburn basketball Coach Sonny Smith announced Friday he was resigning at the end of the season. Smith made the announcement at a news conference.

Marshall U measuring shot for world record

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — It was a desperation heave, a one-in-a-million toss. Bruce Morris' basket from an estimated distance of 92 feet still had the Marshall University campus buzzing Friday.

With three seconds left in the first half of Thursday's game with Appalachian State, Morris grabbed the ball near the Mountaineers' basket after teammate Skeeter Roberts had blocked a shot.

The 6-foot-4 senior guard then rifled the ball like an outfielder throwing to home and the ball swished through the net at the other end with one second left in the half. Marshall went on to a 93-82 victory.

On Friday, school officials were trying to determine if Morris' shot is the longest field goal in basketball history. He delivered the ball just in front of the baseline and the court at Marshall's Henderson Center in Huntington is 94 feet long.

"We're trying to determine the exact way to measure it," said Mac Yates, Marshall's sports information director.

"We're trying to get into the Guinness Book of World Records since there is no such thing as an NCAA record on the longest shot."

Prior to Morris' amazing heave, the longest documented field goal was by Les Henson of Virginia Tech against Florida State on Jan. 24 1980. Henson's shot traveled 89 feet, 3 inches.

"To Henson's credit, his shot won the game," said Yates. "Ours didn't win the game, but we're trying to see how long it was. It's our understanding that the court at Florida

State was only 90 feet long.

"We're just trying to determine where we are supposed to measure it from and how we document it for Guinness."

Yates was besieged by inquiries and said he was forced to take his phone off the hook Thursday night. He said his office has been in contact with nearly every major television network looking for tape of the shot.

Morris was as flabbergasted as anyone when his shot swished through the basket.

"I probably couldn't hit the backboard from there in a million tries," he said. "I saw it curving toward the stands and then I saw it curving back into the basket."

"The Lord put that one through. That's all there is to it. I was in shock at halftime."

Muhammad wins decision against Booze

NEW YORK (AP) — Eddie Mustafa Muhammad, the former World Boxing Association light heavyweight champion, fighting for only the third time in two years, pounded out a unanimous 10-round decision over Tyrone Boozie Friday night at the Felt Forum.

Muhammad, 32 years old, called it a tough fight, but the fight might have been one of the easier parts of his day.

Friday morning, Muhammad came in at 181 and had to lose a pound in order to make the contract weight. Then, four men from the sheriff's department showed up at the weigh-in and took him off to court.

Daniel Kornstein, Muhammad's former attorney, was at the fight Friday night and said he had sued the fighter for $35,000 in back legal fees. Muhammad said he would have to return to court Monday.

"My career consists of inactivity and controversy," said the former champion, who vowed to actively seek a rematch with Michael Spinks, the undisputed champion.

Spinks took the WBA title from Muhammad on a 15-round decision July 18, 1981. A rematch scheduled for July 17, 1983 was canceled when Muhammad weighed in 2½ pounds over the 175-pound limit, then refused to try to make the weight.

Muhammad, who was flabby around his middle, scored the harder punches throughout the bout and was especially effective to the body. He also landed some solid left hooks but said the thumbless gloves, which he was using for the first time, bothered him and robbed him of some of his power.

JIM MURRAY

Way to go Brambilla!

It was the most heartening news I'd read since Berlin fell. It should have been on Page 1.

There it was, right in the middle of the sports section. "Tennis Umpire Walks Out on Players," it said. Hurray!

I didn't know whether to throw my hat in the air or throw a party. But I'd been waiting a long time for this day. For the life of me, I don't know why it hadn't happened 10 years ago. I know if I'd been in a tennis ump's chair it would have.

You see, Umpire Luigi Brambilla just got fed up with the bad manners of those pampered popinays who pass for tennis players nowadays. They had snottily asked the official if he was paying attention. They contemptuously kept playing while he pondered the insulting question.

Brambilla climbed down from his chair, saluted the players — and walked out. Bravo, Signor Brambilla! Way to go, paian! Molto bene!

Of course, you can hold your applause. The fabric of tennis was not long in getting into its hand-kissing position again. "Umpire Who Walked Out During Match Is Suspended," read the next day's headlines.

Well, that's the way it goes in today's society. You try to defend yourself against the cretins and they put you in handcuffs. The game is rigged in favor of the tyrants. So is the world. The thugs are in charge.

SIGNOR BRAMBILLA has been demoted and put in charge of new balls or let calls or something. Nobody did anything to the players involved, of course. Can't have any vigilanteism in the umpire's chair.

The match was not conducted in the highest standards of officiating," grandly groveled Ken Farrar, the chief of supervisors for the tennis council.

We'll be the judge of that, thank you, Ken. You're not speaking for us.

"He should have answered the player's question," you warn sternly.

He probably should have fetched the player a klop in the ear, if you ask us.

Tennis' craven knuckling under to the Bowery Boys who populate the sport is nothing new. It's a way of life. They are as responsible for the new wave of vulgarity in the game as any curly-haired Little Orphan Annie with a tennis racket they let get away with it.

The trouble was not that the match was not conducted in the highest standards of officiating, but that it was conducted, as usual, in the lowest standards of sportsmanship.

SO, WHAT'S to be done about it? Now that The Umpire Strikes Back as a palliative has failed, and has invoked only swift and sure retribution, does the tennis establishment carry on as before? Does it sit and accept the slurs and sneers and degradations and go on taking it from schoolboy dropouts in gym suits?

I took the problem to Charlie Pasarell, the tennis promoter. You will remember Charlie Pasarell as the best player ever to come out of Puerto Rico and one of the best ever to come out of anywhere. Charlie was No. 1 in the U.S. in 1967, was a member of five Davis Cup teams, twice U.S. indoor champion, and a quarterfinalist at both Wimbledon and Forest Hills.

Charlie's game was tenacity and indomitability. He played in the longest tennis match in Wimbledon history, a 22-24, 1-6, 16-14, 6-3, 11-9 back-breaker against Pancho Gonzales in 1969. He played a 6-hour 23-minute doubles match, the longest one ever played.

The trouble with Charlie," Jack Kramer once summed up, "is, you have to kill him to beat him."

Charlie's trouble was, not his game, it was his timing. He came along at UCLA at the same time as Arthur Ashe. That was a little like finding yourself doing a scene with Spencer Tracy, Shirley Temple and a puppy.

But, Pasarell's career didn't recede with the last drop volley at the net. Charlie faced life with the same attitude of undiscourageability as he did match-point against Pancho Gonzales. Now the director of tennis for the Landmark Land Development company, and a renowned teacher and game "doctor," Charlie will be staging the prestigious Pilot Pen Tennis Classic at the La Quinta Hotel Tennis Club in the desert Feb. 18-24, a $375,000 tournament which expects an attendance over 42,000, a cable TV audience and one of the outstanding celebrity audiences this side of an Oscar night. The seed isn't bad either — Jimmy Connors, Yannick Noah, Johan Kriek and the magnificent Swedes.

But, Charlie came up in a tennis era when it was not only impolite to throw a tantrum, it was suicidal — career-wise, that is.

"You were kind of the guest of tennis in those days, pre-Open tennis," he explains. "A little temper was okay but just a little — 10 seconds or so. It was out of the question to hold up the match 15 minutes, denounce the chair, order the linesmen removed, or play the boor."

When tennisists became millionaires, they also became churls. Not the first time that has happened.

BUT CHARLIE the promoter isn't sure what can be done about it. "It's not like baseball or basketball. You can't kick a man out of a game. In baseball, or basketball, if you do that, a substitute comes in to take his place. There is no substitute in tennis. If you kick a player out, what about the people who paid $50 a seat and drove in from the suburbs? Promoters hate to refund money because of umpires."

Charlie's solution is simpler. "Look at it this way: the one thing the top player needs more than money is appearance in the super tournaments, the U.S. Open, Wimbledon. If he doesn't make those, he's second rate. You just can't keep your image as a top player if you don't play in those. If they were to bar a player from those for conduct unbecoming a gentleman I think you would see a drastic improvement in manners overnight."

No one expects to act on Charlie Pasarell's suggestion. They would rather play without an umpire. In fact, they would rather play without a net.

In the first half, Abilene led only once, 2-0, as the Rebs scored the next 10 points to lead, 10-2. The Eagles clawed to within one, 22-21, on four straight free throws by Regina Jackson with just 3:49 remaining in the half.

But a basket by White and a pair of free throws by Wallace put the Rebs back in charge, 26-21.

Abilene Coach Carlos Ratliff disagreed with many of the fouls called on his players and was tagged with a pair of technical fouls at 4:10 of the third period to give him three on the night and an ejection from the Eagle bench.

"I just don't think they were competent," Ratliff said of the officiating crew. "Ever since we went to playing on Friday nights, the girls have gotten the leftovers from the boys' games."

"I feel sorry for the girls on both sides because it just isn't fair to them. They're not giving the kids a fair shot on either team. (Lee) is a 10 point better team than us, not the 25 or 30 we showed tonight."

Lee ran away with the junior varsity game also on Friday with a 65-42 pasting of Abilene. Penny Pruitt led the Rebs with 11 points, but teammates Tangi Carter, Vicki Smith and Joan Whately each added 10 points to pace Lee.

Ford's latest role departure from his past heroics

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A key scene in the new movie "Witness" depicts the razing of a barn in Pennsylvania Amish country. One of those wielding a hammer is the star, Harrison Ford.

"I always knew someday I'd make more than $12.50 an hour for doing this," he cracked.

The Chicago-born actor, who did carpentry while waiting for acting jobs, can draw $1 million or more for each movie he makes on today's market — and for a good reason: As Han Solo and Indiana Jones, he has starred in five of the greatest money-makers of all time.

"Witness" is something of a departure from Ford's usual breakneck heroics. He plays a Philadelphia cop who hides on an Amish farm from corrupt fellow officers who are trying to kill him. While there he falls in love with a pretty widow (Kelly McGillis) and befriends her son (Lukas Haas).

The role offers Ford a far wider range of emotions than his action films.

"Yes, you might say there's more range in 'Witness,' but that's the easy part," he said in an interview. "When you have more range, it's far easier to seduce the audience because you have more tools to work with. The more limited the character, the greater the challenge. For instance, how much does anyone know about the family background of Indiana Jones?"

And what was Indiana's family background?

"Ah-ha, that's the next sequel: 'Indiana Jones Goes Home.'" quipped Ford.

He may have been jesting, but he admitted that "the boys," meaning director George Lucas and producer Steven Spielberg, were "champing at the bit" to film the third in the Jones saga, with November as a possible starting date.

Ford said he has made more money from the "Star Wars" films than from the two Indiana Jones movies ("Raiders of the Lost Ark" and "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom"). He signed the latter contract six years ago, before his box office clout.

But Ford will not renegotiate his contract and demand more money.

"I'm not disposed to renege on an agreement," he said stonily. "I believe in doing what I say I will do."

That's the Harrison Ford style, on screen and off. Behind those intensely blue eyes is an old-fashioned sense of rectitude that has governed his acting career from his beginnings. He grew up in the Chicago suburbs, his father an advertising man, his grandfather a vaudeville actor. At Ripon College in Wisconsin, Ford found that drama helped him deal with his intense shyness.

Columbia Pictures found Ford at a Laguna Beach playhouse and signed him to a $150-a-week contract in 1966 during the twilight of studio contracts. He played small roles in such films as "Dead Heat on a Merry-Go-Round" and "Luv." Then he was tossed into Hollywood acting pool.

"I did a lot of television, usually as the guy who couldn't make it or the sensitive younger brother of a bank-robbing duo," he recalled. "I also missed on a couple of series; thank God they weren't picked up."

In "Witness," Harrison Ford plays a policeman who is hiding out from corrupt fellow officers, who want to kill him.

"I was once told that I was a movie actor, not a television actor. I don't know what that means, exactly. I do think that television work, with its short schedules and tight budgets, can be stimulating for an actor. But films offer more freedom and challenge."

Married at the time with two young sons, Ford read books about carpentry and soon was remodeling homes and building furniture. "It saved my life to have another way of making a living," he remarked. "Carpentry gave me the possibility of choice, the ability to turn down roles. That way, I didn't wear out my face on television."

The turning point came in the seminal film "American Graffiti." Ford played the out-of-town hot-rodder. He became part of the Lucas team, and "Star Wars" and "Raiders" followed.

Ford seems to have fallen victim to the typecasting syndrome, since he is firmly identified not only in one, but two action roles.

"Witness" may seem like an advance in complexity in his film roles," he said, "but I have been able to do other complex parts as well. They just haven't been as successful artistically or commercially as the other films." His other movies include: "Heroes," "Ten From Navarone," "Hanover Street" and "Blade Runner."

Ford and his second wife, Melissa Mathison, screenwriter of "E.T. — The Extra-Terrestrial," have a home here but spend their free time at a hideaway in the Rockies. But Ford has left his carpentry behind him.

"I make an occasional piece of furniture and I've got a couple of building projects that I visit now and then," he said. "But no, you'll rarely see me nowadays with hammer and nails."

State Senate won't protect Chessie

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Even if the giant, serpent-like creature called Chessie really prowls the waters of Chesapeake Bay, the elusive critter will do so without the protection of the state Senate.

The senate's Economic and Environmental Affairs Committee rejected a resolution to promote Chessie's protection, refusing to go on record as recognizing even the "possible existence" of the creature. "I'm not convinced it's out there," said Sen. Norman Stone. And even if it is, he added, the Department of Natural Resources should be able to take care of it.

Chessie has been described by those who claim to have sighted it as an aquatic animal 35 feet long, "round as a telephone pole, snake-like or eel-like, and with humps and an elliptical head."

Lawmakers were not impressed when they were shown a videotape that some researchers claim shows Chessie swimming near Kent Island. "I can't see it, so I can't vote for it," said Sen. Arthur Dorman.

Family restoring last surviving mill in Bell County

TEMPLE, Texas (AP) — Most of them now stand in ruins, their walls tumbled down, their dams broken by floods, their mill races choked with weeds and debris — mute witnesses giving silent testimony to the changes that have swept through Bell County.

But there once was a time, between the Civil War and the Great Depression, when the streams and rivers of the county were dotted with flour and grist mills.

The Salado Creek was a popular source of power for the mills, with a total of nine being built along its banks.

Today almost all of them are just memories, forgotten names in history books or on historical markers glimpsed through the windows of passing cars.

Only one remains today that even resembles its former glory — Stinnett's Mill, located 3 1/2 miles northeast of Salado.

Stinnett's Mill was built in 1868 by William H. Stinnett. It is the sole surviving mill left in the county, according to current owner Forrest Gist.

Gist said he attributed the reason for the mill's longevity to its construction site.

The mill was built on a small rise about 100 yards from the creek itself, so the floods that destroyed or damaged the other mills never touched it. A dam 1/2 mile upstream diverted water into the mill race, which carried it to the mill to power the grindstones.

Gist, 47, has been restoring the mill ever since he bought it in 1968 from Ruth Berry Brown of Salado. Even after 17 years of restoration, he said there is still work to be done.

"When we bought it, it was virtually falling down," he said, adding that for him and his family — his wife, Linda, and three sons — the restoration has been "pretty well a full-time job."

"Everybody works on it," Gist said. "It's a family project."

To find materials for the job, Gist said he has traveled as far as Waco and Taylor to get doors, lumber and fixtures from old buildings being torn down.

One addition, an elevator, Gist got from the old Johnson Piano Co. building in Temple.

"We scrounge around, picking up stuff for it wherever we can," he said. "It's hard to find materials that retain the same architectural flavor of the original mill."

But much of the original mill remains.

Gist said he even found one of the original grindstones, which is mounted in a wall around the outside of the mill. He said he found it being used to cover an old well near the mill.

The grindstone is not really a single stone, but several shaped pieces that fit together — held in place by a wide metal band — to form a large stone wheel.

The Stinnett's Mill grindstone was "French cut," which Gist explained meant small grooves radiating outward from the center of the stone were cut by hand into the stone's face. As the grain was ground, the grooves would carry it to the outer edge of the stone where it fell into collectors.

When not working on the mill, Gist works on his other passion — art. He has turned part of the building into an art gallery and studio, while the rest has been converted into a home.

Gist mentions the possibility of putting the mill up for sale, but almost immediately seemed to change his mind.

"Mostly the talk of selling the mill is just an incentive to finish it," he said. "I don't think we'll sell it; we got too much invested in it."

The county's first mill was the Childers-Shanklin Mill built in 1847 by Robert Childers, one of the first settlers in the area. It was located on the Lampasas River three miles southwest of Belton, near the present-day Camp Tahauva.

In 1856, G.W. Shanklin bought the mill and built what is supposedly the best water race in Texas, which is still standing today.

The mill location later became a stagecoach stopping point and a crossing place for the famous Chisholm cattle trail.

Perhaps the best known mill in the county is Summer's Mill, on Salado Creek between Belton and Holland. It was built by John Meyers in 1866 with parts brought by oxteam from Houston.

The original mill was destroyed by a flood in 1921. It was rebuilt, and later was turned into a restaurant.

Restaurants are usually a combination dining area and lounge. The music played in the dining area is often a refined soothing type of music. But from the lounge area usually comes a louder, harsher music.

Soon the sounds begin to compete for the attention of the listening ear. In the Christian's life, there is the constant conflict of sounds trying to compete for attention and action. The determining factor of Christian discipleship is determined by the voice we heed.

Whose do you heed?

Walesa calls for end to repression, terror

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity leader Lech Walesa called Friday for an end to repression and "propaganda terror" in Poland following the conviction of four secret police officers for their roles in the murder of a pro-Solidarity priest.

Walesa, in his first public reaction to the trial, criticized the government's handling of the case and said authorities had failed to alleviate public fears about injustice in Poland.

A panel of judges in Torun on Thursday convicted three secret police officers of kidnapping and murdering the Rev. Jerzy Popiełuszko and sentenced them to prison terms of 14 to 25 years. Their commanding officer received a 25-year sentence for instigating the crime.

"We would like to recognize this trial as a sign of the good will of the authorities toward accord, of the advantage of the force of law over the right of force," Walesa, 41, said in a statement read by one of his aides. "But new facts occurred which make us doubt it."

He cited the government's refusal to allow Seweryn Blumsztajn, a prominent Solidarity activist, to return to Poland from three years' exile in France. Police stopped Blumsztajn at Warsaw airport Tuesday and put him on a return flight to Paris.

"There are still Poles who are denied equal rights in the homeland because they hold different views," Walesa said.

Blumsztajn went to the Polish Embassy in Paris on Friday to apply for a new passport. He was accompanied by his lawyer, Beatrice Deryn, and representatives of France's three main trade unions.

He said afterwards a consular official told him his problem in Warsaw had been "purely one of formality" and he had to wait for an answer from the Polish capital. The official did not say when the answer would come.

Walesa said in his statement: "I call for an end to illegal acts against citizens, humiliating human dignity, repressing people because of their views. I call for an end to propaganda terror."

"The trial...revealed the horrible truth about the work of those services (the security apparatus) as well as the mentality of those people," said Walesa, winner of the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize. "Let's not forget that a Polish priest was killed by the functionaries of the state authorities."

Capt. Grzegorz Piotrowski was sentenced to 25 years for playing the leading role in the murder. Lt. Leszek Pekala received 15 years and Lt. Waldemar Chmielewski 14 years for murder. Their superior, Col. Adam Pietruszka, received a 25-year sentence for instigating the crime.

Walesa's statement was read over the telephone by Henryka Kinaszewska, a Walesa assistant, from the southern skiing resort of Zakopane, where Walesa was vacationing with his family.

Walesa said he did not want to comment on the verdict, but added, "Forgiveness for such a cruel death, committed with pre-meditation in a planned, business-like manner, would only have complete moral value if there was a revival in our public life."

"There is a need for forgiveness, but there is also a need for results in struggling against evil," he said. "If this doesn't happen, the chance created by this trial will be missed."

The verdict against the four secret policemen was reported on the front pages of all major state-run newspapers Friday without government reaction or comment.

Roman Catholic Church authorities also refused to comment on the verdict and said the nation's bishops would develop a statement on the trial at a meeting Wednesday and Thursday.

Western diplomats said it appeared likely the four defendants would appeal the verdicts to the Supreme Court, and said there was a possibility the prison terms could be lowered by the high court.

One diplomat, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said the 25-year sentence for Pietruszka was a "political" decision that was not supported by evidence.

"There was no concrete proof that he instigated the killing," the diplomat said. "The only proof was that he may have been involved in a coverup, which would warrant maybe five years."

Nicaragua's President Daniel Ortega announces the devaluation of the Nicaraguan currency in Managua, Nicaragua, Friday.

Nicaragua devalues its currency in austerity move

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Nicaragua devalued its currency Friday as part of an austerity plan intended to patch up an economy battered by civil war and the isolation imposed by the United States, once its main trading partner.

Joaquin Cuadra Chamorro, president of the Central Bank, and Finance Minister William Huppper also said the left-wing Sandinista government will freeze spending, eliminate subsidies on basic foods and transportation, and put government employees to work at state-owned factories and farms.

Huppper named the top priorities as defense against U.S.-backed rebels fighting from bases in Honduras and Costa Rica and increased income for the poorest Nicaraguans.

The official rate of Nicaragua's cordoba had been 10 to the U.S. dollar, with a sanctioned "gray" parallel market exchanging the currencies at about 28 to the dollar. But a dollar has been buying up to 500 cordobas on the black market, which Cuadra Chamorro said was a serious factor in the economy.

He said the new exchange rate for "visible exports" is 28 to the dollar. Three rates were set for "invisible exports" — 28, 40 and 50 to the dollar.

He did not define the two categories, but visible exports generally are tangible goods and invisible ones are services.

The rate for non-essential imports will be 20 to the dollar, for non-essential exports 28 and for capital goods 40. He gave no rate for "essential" exports or imports.

Cuadra Chamorro said details will be disclosed in the next few days, and the old 10-1 exchange will be honored for contracts signed before Friday.

The 10-1 rate had been in effect since 1978, a year before the Sandinistas overthrew the right-wing regime of the late President Anastasio Somoza.

Cuadra Chamorro said exchange houses, which were closed in 1983, will be reopened as a means of blunting the rise in the black market rate.

"With the exchange houses we hope to eliminate the rising level on the black market, which is essentially speculative," he said.

Huppper announced elimination of government subsidies that had been in effect since 1980 on public transportation and such goods as rice, beans, sugar and cooking oil.

He said "unscrupulous businessmen" were benefitting from the subsidies at the cost of the people.

Chinese find mates through government matchmaking

PEKING (AP) — With a shower of colored confetti, 30 Chinese couples who found love through a government-backed matchmaking drive were married Friday in a celebration of high hopes and Communist Party-approved ballroom dancing.

Hundreds of relatives and friends were invited to witness the mass wedding in the Stalinesque Peking hotel, hosted by the Peking Women's Association and the national magazine China Women.

"We wish you success, love and happiness," Dong Zhenmel, Deputy Director of the women's association, told the brides and grooms, who had met each other at association-sponsored events.

Wearing Western suits and red silk flowers in their lapels, the men filed into an ornate ballroom arm-in-arm with their mates, who sported the latest Chinese women's fashions, from snug-fitting denim and high leather boots to red felt slit dresses.

After bystanders sprinkled them with confetti, the couples bowed once to the heavenly spirits, once to their parents and once to each other, and the simple ceremony was complete.

"We feel lucky and grateful to the party and government," said bride Yan Huihan, a 34-year-old shop clerk who wed Zhang Yiqiang, 32, a worker at the Friendship Clothing Factory.

Asked what they will do now, Zhang said, "Learn from each other and help each other."

The couples, mostly in their late 20s and 30s, sat beside parents and friends at tables piled with cookies, peanuts, jasmine tea and rolled candies.

Entertainment ranged from an amateur guitarist who crooned "My Chinese Heart" to a three-piece band from a local People's Liberation Army unit that pumped out Chinese disco.

After a while the couples got up to dance, a reflection of official approval for an activity proclaimed abhorrent and lewd only a few years ago.

Foreign and Chinese reporters invited to the wedding were asked by some couples to take family photographs. A Yugoslav journalist was so impressed with the ceremony he donated two bottles of French wine and a carton of American cigarettes to the celebrants, who gratefully divided them up.

The wedding was part of a campaign begun last summer to help unmarried singles find compatible mates, a growing problem in China because of the lack of social meeting places.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Police shoot, fatally injure teen 'joyrider' in Belfast

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Police shot and fatally wounded a teen-ager driving a stolen car in Belfast. Police said he tried to run down an officer but local residents said he panicked and was trying to get out of the car when the police opened fire.

It was the 13th time since 1979 that a so-called "joyrider" has been shot to death by security forces in the Northern Ireland capital and the second time in less than a month.

Police said 19-year-old Gerald Logue, a Roman Catholic, was shot Thursday night when he drove directly at a Royal Ulster Constabulary officer after being chased and then stopped by a joint police and British army patrol in a Roman Catholic enclave in west Belfast.

However, local residents who said they witnessed the shooting maintained that Logue made no attempt to run down the officer, but had panicked and was trying to get out of the vehicle when police opened fire.

Elephants kill five people

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Wild elephants killed at least five people and injured several others in the hills of southeastern Chittagong last month, the official news agency Bangladesh Sangbad Sangstha reported Friday.

The agency said the estimated 18 elephants also destroyed crops in the hills close to the Indian state of Tripura.

The wild elephants usually come out of the jungle at night and destroy crops, gardens and houses, the agency said.

Abuse at 'epidemic levels'

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Cocaine abuse has reached "epidemic levels" in North and South America and is spreading in Europe and Southeast Asia, a World Health Organization panel of experts reported Friday.

Calling cocaine "the most dependence-producing drug available," the group urged the WHO to give the problem "highest priority."

Israel cracks down on West Bank Arabs

By DAN FISHER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

JERUSALEM — Israeli authorities have instituted a tougher policy toward disturbances on the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River in the wake of two fatal attacks on Jews there within the last two weeks.

The measures include harsh prison sentences for Arabs convicted of attacks on Israeli vehicles, immediate collective punishment in areas where there are stone-throwing or other incidents and increased army patrols in the region.

In an interview published Friday, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin warned that if the West Bank unrest gets any worse, the authorities will use "all forms of punishment permitted by the law, including expulsion, administrative arrest, and destruction and sealing of homes."

Despite the coincidence of the two fatal attacks, Rabin and others insist that there has been no general deterioration of the security situation on the West Bank. Army figures indicate that the number of disturbances during each of the last three months is well below the same period a year ago.

The crackdown is thus seen here as motivated at least as much by political as by security concerns.

Both Rabin and Prime Minister Shimon Peres have proclaimed a generally more conciliatory line toward the Arabs since Israel's national unity government took office last September. And West Bank Jewish settlers and others representing Israel's potent political right wing have criticized both men as too soft.

When David Pinhas, 44, died on Jan. 31, six days after he was burned by a Molotov cocktail hurled into his car near Kalkilya, the settlers called for Rabin's resignation. Then, four days later, an unknown assailant ran up to Cpl. Aharon Avidar, a reserve soldier who was on guard duty in Ramallah, and killed him with a single pistol shot to the chest.

"The choice is to surrender to their goal, which is to destroy the state of Israel, or to mete out severe punishment, such as long terms in our jails or (expulsion) over the border," Knesset member Geula Cohen of the rightist Tehiya Party said of Arab troublemakers earlier this week.

In addition to protecting their political right flank at home, Peres and Rabin are clearly concerned that Israel's unilateral withdrawal from southern Lebanon will be misread by other Arab states as a sign of weakness.

The pullout comes amid a sharp increase in attacks on Israeli troops in southern Lebanon by Shia Muslim guerrillas. And, as a senior military source said: "The Arab media is the focus of massive propaganda aimed at the West Bank, urging them to take lessons from south Lebanon."

Army figures show that there were 33 serious attacks on Israelis in the West Bank last month, including 23 incidents involving Molotov cocktails and three involving firearms.

A hint of the tougher official line came on the day Pinhas died of his burns. A military court in Ramallah sentenced two Arab youths, aged 14 and 17, to eight and seven years imprisonment respectively, for throwing Molotov cocktails at a bus occupied by Jewish passengers last October. There were no injuries and no damage in the incident.

"I asked for stiff punishments because lighter sentences have proved ineffective in stopping the stone-throwing on the roads," the prosecutor, Maj. Yair Rabinovich, said. "It is unthinkable that the roads of Judea and Samaria (the biblical names for the West Bank) should be unsafe for travel."

Even though three years of each youth's sentence was suspended, the punishment was the most severe for an offense of that type in at least a decade, according to Israeli sources.

South Africa announces change in segregation laws

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government announced Friday it will open 44 business districts to merchants of all races, changing rules that have segregated black and white traders for more than 300 years.

The proclamation by Chris Heunis, Minister of Constitutional Development and Planning, follows two weeks of actions by the government apparently aimed at showing it is gradually dismantling apartheid — the country's institutionalized racial separation.

The system's opponents say the latest gestures are cosmetic because South Africa's white government still insists on fundamental segregation, such as in housing and education, and they deny the vote to the 22 million blacks.

Heunis said 44 unspecified business districts around the nation will be declared "open," meaning people of any race can operate businesses in them. He did not say when the proclamation would go into effect.

Until now, only whites have been allowed to operate businesses in areas designated "white," which comprise 87 percent of the country. Blacks, the great majority of the population, are the principal consumers and are free to shop in white areas.

Only a small percentage of blacks are believed to have the means to open businesses in the white districts.

"Organized business takes the view that all business activities everywhere should be open to all races," said Nigel Mandy, the white director of Johannesburg's Central Business District Association.

Midlander ordained

Former Midlander David Devore Whiteley was ordained Feb. 3 at the Second Presbyterian Church, Concord, N.C., as a minister for the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.

A 1974 graduate of Midland High School, Whiteley received his undergraduate training at Tusculum College, Greenville, Tenn., and Austin College, Sherman. He graduated from Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., in May 1984.

He worked as assistant director of a church camp in Old Fort, N.C., during the summer of 1984. Then, he accepted the call from the Second Presbyterian Church to serve as its minister.

Resignation explained

DENVER (AP) — Former United Methodist Bishop James Armstrong, who in late 1983 resigned suddenly both as a bishop and president of the National Council of Churches, says he found that "acknowledgement of guilt is not enough."

That, by itself, "leads down an alley to a dead end," he said in a lecture at the Iliff School of Theology, his first public address in the 14 months since his abrupt resignations. He said admitting guilt must be followed with wholesome self-acceptance, forgiveness and grace.

The "benefits of grace come from beyond ourselves," he said.

Christian concert

The Liberty Baptist College Singers, Lynchburg, Va., will perform a free concert at Midland Baptist Temple, 3001 N. A St., at 7 p.m. Monday. As an outreach of the Thomas Road Baptist Church and Liberty Baptist Schools, the LBC Singers travel over 100,000 miles annually performing in churches, high schools, shopping malls, service clubs, prisons and area wide rallies. Past performances have included Disneyworld and Disneyland, congressional prayer breakfasts and rallies in 35 state capitols as well as being featured frequently on the Old-Time Gospel Hour with the Rev. Jerry Falwell.

POSITIVE THINKING

We're body, mind, soul

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

From earliest times philosophers have recognized that man is body, mind, and soul; and to have good health these need to work with, not against, each other. Plato wrote, a long time ago, "Neither should we ever attempt to cure the body without curing the soul." Moderns are just now catching up with this wise philosopher of old.

Through modern medicine we know that many illnesses originate in the emotions or thoughts. Unhealthy thinking can be, and often is, externalized in unhealthy bodily states.

A leading clinic made a study of some 500 cases. They found that 383 of these people were ailing not because they had had accidents or had contracted organic diseases, but because, according to a doctor's picturesque description, "Those patients were draining back into their bodies the diseased thoughts of their minds."

In fact, our health largely depends on what we harbor in our minds. Three important rules of health follow from this and apply to all of us.

The first rule is to keep free of any kind of guilt. Wrongdoing can actually plant the seeds of sickness in the soul. Then that illness proceeds to adversely affect the mind, and, in time, the body. So, if you have a feeling of guilt, you should get rid of it in order to feel healthy. Preachers have always said this; now many doctors are seconding the motion.

Let me tell you the interesting story of a man whose wife wrote to me saying, "If you ever come to our city, I want you to see my husband."

This man had formerly been successful in business, active in civic groups, popular and outgoing. Then, he had begun to feel bad, for no visible reason. He lost his vitality. Finally he got so that all he did was sit and stare. The doctors diagnosed his condition as a nervous breakdown. One doctor wisely remarked that the patient must have something on his mind and might begin to mend if only he would talk about it.

Eventually my engagements did take me to that city and I saw him. His manner was dull and apathetic and at first all he would say is that he felt ill. Finally, I asked him, "Isn't there something you have not yet unloaded? Why not come clean and tell it to me?" Then, bit by bit, out came some of the things which he had done in life which he considered wrong and sinful. When at last he had told everything, he sat back, spent.

I made a heaping motion with my hands. "What are you doing?" he asked curiously.

"Heaping up all that part of your past that has weighed so heavily on your mind. Quite a mass of evil and sick stuff, isn't it? How could you expect to feel well with all that on your mind and soul?" I then suggested he ask the Lord to forgive him and make him well again. He did so, then and there, praying aloud like a child. It was a moving experience to listen to him. We sat in silence a few moments.

He stood up, stretched his arms out, raised himself up on his tiptoes, brought his arms up over his head, took a deep breath and said, "My, but I feel good!" That was the beginning of his return to rugged health.

Along with keeping free of guilt, try to practice daily mental hygiene. Dr. Sara Jordan of the Lahey Clinic said, "Every day give your mind a good shampoo." Systematically empty your mind of all hate thoughts, defeat thoughts, mean or negative thoughts. Displace and replace them with faith and love thoughts. To have good health, think healthy thoughts.

The third basic rule of health is to affirm the life force. God not only created you, but constantly recreates you. God's life force is in you. The more you consciously affirm this, the more powerfully it will flow in you.

Anderson will begin his three-month interim ministry at the 10:50 a.m. service Sunday at First Presbyterian Church, 800 W. Texas Ave. His topic will be "The God of Our Ancestors."

According to Deane H. Stoltz, chairman of the Men of the Church committee, efforts are being made to have the largest attendance of men in the 100-year history of First Presbyterian Church on hand to welcome the new minister at the Monday dinner.

John M. Wetzel is chairman of the ticket committee.

Anderson, a former moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U.S., has spoken here on several previous occasions.

Anderson received his bachelor of arts degree from Austin College, Sherman, and his bachelor of divinity degree from Union Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va. He was awarded a master of theology degree from Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Austin.

'Old 614' rides West Virginian rails once again

By PAIGE ST. JOHN

CHESAPEAKE, W.Va. (AP) — Folks at Green's Exxon already miss "Old 614," but a New Jersey company says it won't be long before a new generation of steam locomotives rides the nation's rails.

American Coal Enterprises of Lebanon, N.J., fired up Old 614, a modified 1948-vintage steam locomotive, as a test to see if what used to be considered old-fashioned might be the way of the future.

The 30 days of tests that ended earlier this month were a step in a locomotive-design project that government and industry officials believe could make the country more self-sufficient in energy and put unemployed coal miners back to work.

Sally Ward, a company spokeswoman, said the old locomotive passed the test proudly, even hauling coal cars up a West Virginia mountain that defeated a modern-day diesel engine.

Old 614 made its test runs on the Chessie System railroad's 100-mile Huntington to Hinton line. The railroad's chairman, Hayes Watkins, has pledged to buy the first commercial version of a modern steam engine.

The locomotive was a hit wherever it went on its trials.

"I'd like to see things like that come back," said Opal Green, the 72-year-old proprietor of an Exxon gasoline station and informal community meeting place here.

"It was a beautiful sight," chimed in Carol McClure, 35, one of thousands who marveled at Old 614 steaming by.

Ms. McClure said rail buffs, many armed with cameras, flocked to the tracks.

"One man was taking pictures with his camera and he kept backing up and backing up to get the train in the picture," she said. "He backed up so much he fell clear over the hill, all the way down."

But Ms. Ward says the company's prototype will lack one of Old 614's most crowd-pleasing features: the enormous, billowing cloud of smoke and steam characteristic of the old locomotives.

"The ACE 3000 will look more like a diesel train, but with a steam whistle," she said. "It won't have a steam cloud like the old ones, because pollution laws don't tolerate that kind of thing anymore."

Even so, enthusiasm for the project is high in Chesapeake and other West Virginia coalfield communities, where the railroads' switch to diesel fuel in the 1950s touched off a massive economic depression.

Company officials say their new locomotive's principal advantage will be its low fuel costs, since coal is about 10 times cheaper than diesel fuel. The projected price tag of the ACE 3000 is $1.7 million, $700,000 more than the going rate for diesel engines.

A Chessie System spokesman said train fans from around the country called seeking times and places they could watch for the locomotive.

"It had to have improved West Virginia's economy, with all those people coming to watch the train go by," said Milt Doelinger of the railroad's Washington, D.C., office.

Governor picks state of court over state of union

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin looked a bit uncomfortable when a reporter asked for his reaction to President Reagan's State of the Union Address.

It seems Martin didn't watch his fellow Republican's nationally televised speech Wednesday night.

"I'm afraid I have to admit to you that I was watching N.C. State beat Clemson," Martin said Thursday during his weekly news conference. "OK, it's out," he added, laughing along with the roomful of journalists.

Martin attended the basketball game at Reynolds Coliseum on the North Carolina State University campus in Raleigh, and was applauded when his presence was announced over the public-address system.

The Wolfpack defeated the Tigers, 69-57.

Martin said he did read newspaper accounts of Reagan's speech, and that his administration will analyze the president's budget proposals for their possible effect on North Carolina.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Jailed financier C. Arnholt Smith fought for five years to stay out of prison on grand theft and tax evasion charges, using a number of legal ploys, including a plea of indigence.

Appeals exhausted, he began his one-year sentence last November.

But it turns out the 85-year-old former owner of the San Diego Padres baseball team who was once considered among California's most-successful money barons isn't completely broke.

His name appeared among the hundreds of others this week in a San Diego newspaper listing of a state controller's legal "Notice of persons appearing to be owners of unclaimed property."

A computer check revealed that Smith still has a personal savings account with Crocker National Bank, which took over after Smith's own U.S. National Bank folded.

Smith's total on deposit: $89.00.

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — An Omaha rock group founded by lawyers is singing the legal blues to a British band that shares its name.

Both bands are called The Firm, but the Omaha group claims it had the name first and is threatening to take the matter to court.

"For them to call themselves The Firm has nothing to do with what they are or who they are," says bass player Bill Eustice, one of four Creighton University Law School students who formed the Omaha band in 1979.

The Omahans say they are willing to give up their name — for a price. If they aren't compensated, group members say, they will seek a court injunction to ban the British band from the Omaha area.

In addition to concerts, the injunction would prohibit record sales and appearances on the MTV cable music channel in areas where the Omaha band is known.

The British edition of The Firm released its first single, "Radioactive," a few weeks ago. Its first album, called "The Firm," is due to be released this week.

The British group includes rock stars Jimmy Page, a former guitarist with Led Zeppelin, and Paul Rodgers, who used to sing with Bad Company.

The Omahans say their demands are reasonable.

"All I want is an autographed Les Paul (guitar) from Jimmy Page," joked Eustice.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A star-studded special version of the "Midnight Jamboree" radio show will be broadcast live Saturday night to commemorate the birthday of the show's founder, country music legend Ernest Tubbs.

Tubbs, who died of emphysema last September at the age of 70, will be celebrated by Roy Acuff and Bill Monroe. Joining them will be Hank Snow, Porter Wagoner, Stonewall Jackson, Connie Smith, Bill Anderson and Jean Shepard.

The event is being held to raise money for the Ernest Tubbs Memorial Fund, set up to help research emphysema treatment.

Known as the Texas Troubadour, Tubbs pioneered the "honky-tonk" sound of country music. His most famous hits include "I'm Walking the Floor Over You" and "Waltz Across Texas."

Tubbs' son, Justin, is to be the host of the show, aired live on AM radio station WSM from one of the late singer's record shops.

Tubbs started the "Midnight Jamboree" radio show in 1947 to follow the Grand Ole Opry broadcast.

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Mormon bishops have pulled the plug on MTV for students living in church-approved housing, after condemning the popular cable music channel for containing "sex, drugs, witchcraft and the bizarre."

Leo Weidner, a bishop and part-owner of an apartment complex housing students at church-owned Brigham Young University, said Thursday he believes some rock videos shown on the MTV channel are pornographic — although he admits he has never seen it.

"There's oral sex, there are lesbians making love, there is witchcraft, there is sadomasochism," Weidner said.

He and other bishops pulled the cable station from students at Raintree Apartments, and Carnegie Cove, the complex he manages.

But students began circulating a petition to restore MTV. By Thursday it had 225 signatures, said one of the organizers, Rolf Wallengren.

Wind generators fail to catch on

By MONTY FOWLER

CLUTE, Texas (AP) — The wind blows so much in some places in California people have built "wind farms" filled with dozens of windmills to generate electricity. But the idea has not caught on here to that extent, even though there is usually a breeze coming in from the Gulf of Mexico.

There are just 16 wind generators in the entire 5,600 square-mile area Houston Lighting & Power Co. serves, officials said.

Wind generation of electricity came into vogue in the late 1970s after the Arab oil embargo and got a big boost in 1978 when the federal government passed the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act.

Part of the act required utilities to buy any excess electricity generated by their customers from things like wind generators at a reasonable rate.

In short, people who could make enough electricity to meet their own needs could sell any excess to the local electric company.

"You need a pretty high average wind speed to make this work," said Roland Hussey, administrator of HL&P's cogeneration and small power production department.

"The Panhandle and Gulf Coast are prime areas, with sustained winds," Hussey said, noting the average wind speed along the Texas Gulf Coast is about 14.5 mph.

Power output depends on wind velocity, not the size of the generator's blades, he said, which is a common misconception.

Of the 16 wind generators in HL&P's service area, Hussey said only nine sell excess power back to the utility.

The 16 generators are capable of producing a total of about 175 kilowatts of electricity, he said, with the largest commercial one here having a capacity of about 65 kilowatts on a given day.

The average family of four in HL&P's service area uses about 12,000 kilowatt-hours per year, said Ron Richards, HL&P power consultant, an indication wind generation is a long way from providing a significant contribution to the area power picture.

But Ralph Levee, owner of Wind Power Inc. of Freeport, said "Wind is the way to go. We have the wind."

He said people want to save money on their electric bills but most would rather do without appliances instead of making the commitment to buy a wind generator.

"People don't want to turn loose of $15,000 to $20,000," Levee said. "People need to have foresight."

Fossil fuels like coal and natural gas will not last forever, Levee said and non-renewable resources need to be preserved by using wind and solar power. Hussey, however, said economics plays a role in wind generation.

"We don't feel like at the present levels it's competitive with our power," Hussey said. "The incentive to sell to us is just not there. The economic climate is unfavorable."

Currently HL&P is paying about 3 cents per kilowatt-hour for electricity from wind generators and other small power producers, Hussey said. This is the "avoided cost," or what HL&P would have had to pay if it was getting electricity from one of its own plants.

Two years ago, though, HL&P was paying 5 cents per kwh for the same type of electricity, he pointed out, since the avoided cost was higher.

"The changing of the energy pricing picture has had an effect," Hussey said, since prices for oil and natural gas have dropped from record levels of several years ago.

This, coupled with the fact that extensive tax benefits and incentives will end this year, means any commercial plans for wind farms in Brazoria County may be shelved for a while, Hussey said.

The tax breaks include a 15 percent federal business energy tax credit; the 1982 federal tax act that exempts wind power systems from some of the "at risk" rules requiring at least a 25 percent cash down payment and 9 percent non-recourse note with level payments; and PURPA, which requires public utilities to buy electricity from other sources.

It is unlikely the federal tax breaks will be extended for another year, Hussey said, which will make large-scale wind farms less attractive for investors.

That appears to be the conclusion reached by Nasa Cogeneration Inc., the Houston-based company that erected the large commercial wind generator near Surfside on County Road 257.

John Haygood of Nasa Cogeneration declined to comment on the 65 kilowatt generator or how effective it has been here, saying not enough data had been gathered to make any decisions.

Levee said a wind farm is still an attractive investment and one that is economically feasible here since it is a good tax shelter. He is working on plans for one, he said.

"The problem is you have to prove this idea," Levee said. "With the technology coming about, a wind generator with a battery backup would be possible, so that when the wind dies down you can go to battery power."

He has been working on the problems of combining wind generation and battery power for about two years, Levee said.

Police certain teen is one who shot woman

BOSTON (AP) — Police said Friday they are certain that a 14-year-old boy they arrested is the youth who shot a young woman and then bragged about it on a subway, even though the victim has not identified him.

The boy was arrested after the victim's mother allegedly overheard him boast of the crime. The youth, who has not been identified because of his age, was charged with juvenile delinquency. He is accused of shooting 21-year-old Mary Frances James in the back Jan. 31 while trying to steal her handbag. The 22-caliber bullet grazed the woman's skin.

"He fit the basic description and clothing description to a T," said Detective Robert O'Toole. "We had probable cause to arrest him and we stand on our arrest."

We will attempt to prosecute."

O'Toole said Miss James, who was hospitalized until Wednesday, never identified the youth, who was released on bail Monday.

After she was shot in the back, Miss James told police that her assailant was about 21 years old, but O'Toole dismissed the age discrepancy.

Experimental drug blocks replication of AIDS virus

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

NEW YORK — An experimental drug that blocks reproduction of the virus believed to cause AIDS has caused the infectious agent to nearly disappear in the blood of a young male hemophiliac, researchers said Friday.

The patient's treatment with the drug HPA 23 was discontinued a year ago, and he is alive and well enough to return to school, said Jean Claude Chermann of the Pasteur Institute in Paris, who led the research.

"We stopped here, because we did not know how to evaluate the treatment," Chermann said.

The drug is now being given to 34 people with acquired immune deficiency syndrome to help researchers evaluate it, he said.

Chermann's remarks came at a daylong AIDS symposium in New York sponsored by the Scientists Institute for Public Information and the AIDS Medical Foundation.

At the symposium, Luc Montagnier, another Pasteur Institute researcher, said there are now at least two known classes of AIDS viruses.

The viruses are different enough that it might be difficult to make a single vaccine to protect against both of them, Montagnier said.

He said studies of the genetic material have finally shown that the AIDS virus isolated at the Pasteur Institute and the AIDS virus isolated about the same time at the U.S. National Cancer Institute are indeed the same virus.

However, Montagnier said an AIDS virus identified in San Francisco differs substantially from the previously identified Pasteur and National Cancer Institute viruses.

In the genes that govern construction of the virus' outer coat, there is a 20 percent difference between the previously discovered viruses and the San Francisco virus, Montagnier said.

Dr. Robin Weiss of the Institute for Cancer Research in England said that viruses obtained from Haitian patients with AIDS might be yet another strain.

Those reports are troubling because vaccines often are designed to target substances on the outer coat of an infectious particle. If the outer coat varies, vaccination could be more difficult, Montagnier said.

Dr. Robert Gallo, the head of the cancer institute research team, abruptly canceled plans to attend Friday's meeting, saying he had another meeting to attend in Washington.

Dr. Mathilde Krim, chairwoman of the AIDS medical foundation, lamented the absence of such a central figure, and attributed it to rivalries between Gallo and other scientists.

She said, "I am very deeply embarrassed and regret that Dr. Robert Gallo couldn't be here today and felt he could change his plans at the last minute."

Margaret Heckler, U.S. Secretary of Health and Human Services, also canceled her scheduled participation.

Dr. Harold Jaffe of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta predicted that the current number of AIDS cases in the United States — about 8,000 — will double in the next year.

He emphasized, however, that careful investigations still reveal no evidence of transmission of AIDS among people who merely share a workplace, a school or even the same household, providing they are not sexual partners.

The incidence of AIDS in hemophiliacs, who have a defect in blood clotting, will soon grow to the point that AIDS will surpass bleeding as the leading cause of death in hemophiliacs, Jaffe said.

Studies with the experimental French drug described by Chermann follow reports of at least two potential anti-AIDS agents identified in the United States.

A drug called suramin has shown some ability to fight AIDS in initial tests, and is now being given to AIDS patients at various hospitals in an expanded experimental trial, according to officials at the National Institutes of Health.

Another anti-viral drug called ribavirin, which appears promising in laboratory tests, may soon be tried with humans, according to the CDC.

Chermann's drug is the latest in a series of 55 drugs that have been made to try to find an anti-viral agent.

Administration of the drug to the young hemophiliac reduced the virus to the point where it could no longer be identified, Chermann said, but the patient's system apparently still contained some virus, because his cells were able to pass the infection to other cells in the laboratory.

"We were not killing the infected cells, but we stopped replication," Chermann said.

San Diego Zoo to loan out koalas

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The San Diego Zoo, once the only U.S. institution to have the cuddly looking Australian koalas, now has such a large colony of them that it plans to send some of the animals on a two-year tour to zoos around the nation.

Koalas are far from prolific, but two or three times a year, a baby completes gestation, climbs from its mother's womb into her pouch to grow for six months before greeting the outside world for good. Twenty-one koalas are currently at the zoo and the San Diego Wild Animal Park.

"This colony is really thriving," zoo spokesman Jeff Jouett said. "It shows they aren't the precious commodity they once were."

Zoo officials loaned a koala to the Denver Zoo for a month two years ago, and sent one each to the Cincinnati and San Antonio zoos for a month last year.

Rising attendance at all three institutions to see the marsupials, featured in ads for the Australian airline Qantas, brought more requests for loans, so zoo officials decided to begin an official program.

The first stop for the koalas will be at the Memphis Zoological Garden & Aquarium, expected in May. I. St. Louis, Salt Lake City, Philadelphia, Milwaukee and New Orleans also will have the furry visitors this year.

In 1986, Miami, New York City, Topeka, Kan., Indianapolis, Grand Rapids, Mich., and Seattle will each get a visiting koala.

Charles Bieler, executive director of the San Diego Zoo, decided the koalas — which are not an endangered species — could help some other animals who are threatened.

Bieler, the immediate past president of the American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums, decided the koala loans could bring in not-so-voluntary contributions for the association's 37 Species Survival Plans. The programs use the money raised to manage captive reproduction of endangered animals on a national basis, he said.

"It's like this," Bieler explained, "New York, you want a koala from San Diego. OK, you can have it. But it's going to cost you $7,500."

That price varies depending on the size of the zoo. But San Diego ships freshly grown eucalyptus leaves — the koala's dietary staple — each two days. A month's food is $1,000. And the host zoo must pay the salary, food and lodging of the attending keeper.

"Even if they get only 25,000 extra people (because of the koalas) it will pay for itself," Bieler said. "We just hope no one comes up with a substitute for eucalyptus before we get the funds."

Donations from member zoos provided an initial $150,000 for the Species Survival Plans, but Bieler said for the program to be successful, it will need a permanent endowment of about $1 million.

"We will generate $25,000 to $40,000 from the koala exchange alone," Bieler said. "I hope it creates an incentive for other zoos to be creative and try this."

The Los Angeles Zoo started its own colony of koalas in 1983 with animals from Australia, and Bieler said that in the next few years, he hopes to see other zoos start koala colonies of their own. But because of the feeding requirements, those new homes probably will be only in climates that can grow eucalyptus.
