Pedal to the metal

AUSTIN — Speed limit signs may be one of the most ignored things on Texas highways, but a new poll shows most Texans do not want the laws changed. A random survey of more than 1,000 Texas adults found 55 percent want the 65 mph speed limits on rural highways to remain in place, according to The Texas Poll. Page 1B.

Two millionaires

Two tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The tickets, bought in Bedford and Baytown, will split a jackpot worth an estimated $21 million. The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 5-13-19-21-44-49 (five, thirteen, nineteen, twenty-one, forty-four, forty-nine). Wednesday night's drawing will be worth an estimated $4 million.

Budget bickering escalates

White House, GOP leaders clash over compromise talks, Medicare

■ Clinton stresses his determination to veto interim bills; Republicans demand he sign them.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With a partial government shutdown approaching, President Clinton and Republican congressional leaders clashed over Medicare on Saturday and bickered over the guest list for compromise budget talks.

Clinton stressed his determination to veto interim bills the GOP-controlled Congress is passing to sustain the government's ability to spend and borrow — and Republicans demanded he sign them.

"No Congress in history has ever demanded an increase in Medicare premiums as a condition of keeping the government open," Clinton said in his weekly radio talk.

"That is wrong, and I will not accept it," he said, and later underscored his position when Speaker Newt Gingrich and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole telephoned in early afternoon to spark efforts at compromise on the subject.

"We want to balance the budget. He wants to shut down the government," said Dole afterwards.

Republicans attacked with vigor as a yearlong struggle over balancing the budget neared the end-game.

House Majority Leader Dick Armey told a roomful of reporters the White House had just transmitted the president's response to a GOP blueprint for welfare reform. "And

The most important holidays in the United States are Veterans Day, Memorial Day, Christmas and the Fourth of July, according to Bill McNeill. Unfortunately the meaning of those holidays are often lost in the celebrations, he said.

On Saturday — Veterans Day — a local gathering recognized the true meaning of the holiday. "Things like this bring it to the forefront," said McNeill, a 49-year-old Vietnam veteran.

More than 100 people attended the Veterans Day Celebration at the Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial near Midland International Airport. The memorial was dedicated one year ago.

Many veterans attended including McNeill's father, Ray McNeill, who was stationed in the China-Burma-India theater during World War II.

"My boy's the main reason" for attending, the 87-year-old McNeill said. "The guys were so mistreated when they came back from Vietnam. They're finally getting some recognition."

Midland City Council representative Jose Cuevas was keynote speaker. He recalled 1967, at the age of 8, when he first became aware of the war in Vietnam: a playmate's brother had been killed in action.

"I salute every one of you who fought for our freedom," Cuevas said.

Recognition of America's veterans also was echoed by John Philbeck, chairman of the Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial committee.

Desegregation panel members voice opinions, stall on agenda

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

The Midland school board-appointed committee to study desegregation may not have made a lot of decisions at its second meeting Thursday, but some committee members said the meeting was productive since "cards were put on the table."

The 7 p.m.-9:15 p.m. meeting opened in an efficient manner with Les Vela serving as chairwoman for the evening. Ms. Vela provided paper desk name plates for all attendees, an agenda and rules of parliamentary procedure "for those of us who are rusty."

After welcoming the group, she said, "We have a very serious matter here before us. Let's avoid personality issues and get on with the agenda."

'We have had two meetings and accomplished nothing but an attendance policy, and we didn't agree on it.'

— John Kennedy, committee member

However, the first item on the agenda, an attendance policy, immediately divided the group. Alma Marshall made a motion that a person should be replaced once they accumulated two unexcused absences and three excused absences. The motion failed to pass, with eight voting in favor and eight opposed. Some committee members thought the number of absences was too lenient. It was expected the committee will meet 15 to 18 times by April 1, the deadline to provide a recommendation to the board concerning a desegregation system for Midland Independent School District.

A motion to not have an attendance policy also failed, with 10 opposed. With no motions passing for the attendance policy, Ms. Vela said, "I guess we are back

New director hopes to broaden outlook of Midland organization

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Carl J. Zapora, the United Way of Midland's new executive director who beholds volunteers as "the heart and soul" of the United Way, is broadening the horizon of the fund-raising organization.

"To some people, United Way is a pledge card — something that arrives" at their desks or workplaces once a year, Zapora, 42, said.

Those contributors "are our customers," Zapora reasoned. "We ought to be asking them what problems there are in the community and are they or their families or their employees suffering problems which the United Way, through its 16 agencies, could help?

Problems and concerns could range from child day care, family violence and elderly care to homeliness, alcohol and drug abuse and disaster relief.

And the thousands of volunteers who keep Midland's United Way alive and vibrant take on tasks to raise funds for those 16 agencies and to determine how best to use them.

"That's a tough job," Zapora said. "There always are more needs than there are funds. You are making decisions on who doesn't get funds that they really need. It's a real, real hard job."

And the tough job taken on by Bob Irelan, campaign chairman, was to get his volunteer forces out into the economic battle zones to drum up pledges of slightly more than $3 million for 1996.

The campaign was launched in September just after the Aug. 28 fire that heavily damaged the United Way headquarters and destroyed its records and equipment, handicapping the campaign.

"It thwarted us mostly in the timing of the campaign," Zapora said.

The United Way headquarters has been relocated to 1700 W. Wall Ave. until the organization's 3,725-square-foot brick building at 1209 W. Wall Ave. is restored and renovated.

Nevertheless, the campaign, which ends Thursday, is at 73 percent of its $3.02 million goal.

The finale of that campaign is set for 6:30 p.m. Friday at Green Tree Country Club. For information on banquet tickets, call the

Rabin's killing raises questions about Israel's immigration laws

JERUSALEM (AP) — Yitzhak Rabin's assassination, which has given rise to deep reflection on the tenets underlying the nation, now has prompted debate over a question many Israelis have resisted facing: Should the Jewish state restrict immigration?

Proponents of limiting Jewish immigration to Israel note that some of those encouraging violence against Rabin and his government came to Israel from abroad, especially the United States.

A high-ranking Israeli security official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Saturday that the two countries plan to cooperate in closer surveillance of Jewish extremists in the wake of the prime minister's murder.

With the seven-day mourning period, or Shiva, nearing an end Saturday, thousands of Israelis converged on Rabin's grave on Mount Herzl, causing a traffic jam in a city whose streets are normally deserted during the Jewish Sabbath.

In another tribute, some 400 boats sailed along the Mediterranean coast toward the northern port of Haifa, with black ribbons fluttering from the masts.

Rabin's confessed assassin, 25-year-old Yigal Amir, is an Israeli who insists he acted alone. He said he was acting on orders from God because Rabin was trading land for peace.

Police believe he was part of a right-wing conspiracy and have linked some of his suspected accomplices to groups that follow the anti-Arab teachings of Rabbi Meir Kahane, the Brooklyn-born founder of the militant Jewish Defense League who was murdered in New York in 1990.

The security official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that Kahane followers and other militants have been operating military training camps in the United States.

They also have bought weapons and other military equipment — including silencers — which would be difficult to purchase on the open market in Israel, the official said.

An American rabbi was caught at Tel Aviv's Ben-Gurion International Airport in November 1993 as he attempted to smuggle gun parts, bomb-making manuals, telescopic sights and silencers into Israel.

Many Israeli politicians say Jewish political extremists also raise funds in the United States. The Israeli consul general in New York, Colette Avital, disclosed Thursday that right-wing Jewish groups in the United States were raising money for Amir.

Environment Minister Yossi Sarid said Saturday that Israel should keep lists of militants and refuse them entry, even if it conflicts with the Law of Return under which all Jews can immigrate and are entitled to immediate citizenship.

"If the Law of Return is meant to force the state of Israel to accept these awful people, then the law must be changed," Sarid was quoted as saying by Israel army radio. "They must never set foot on the soil of Israel."

Uri Gordon, head of the immigration department of the semi-official Jewish Agency, also proposed that Jews with extremist views be barred from the country, Israel radio said.

Gordon said that Kahane's Jewish Defense League was the forerunner of the Israeli extremist groups Kach and Kahane Chai. Several of the six suspects held in Rabin's assassination are members of a Kach offshoot, Eyal.

"We have to examine whether the Law of Return is really suitable for the reality of today," Gordon said.

Some Nigerians would welcome sanctions

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — Cab driver Thomas Kina knows Nigeria's suspension from the Commonwealth of former British colonies means possible economic sanctions that could cause more hardship for his family.

But he is willing to suffer the consequences if the suspension will force the military government to improve its observance of human rights.

"The blacks in South Africa suffered," said the cabbie from Port Harcourt, where playwright Ken Saro-Wiwa and eight other anti-government activists were hanged on Friday.

"I am ready to suffer, too, if this will help to solve our problems," he said Saturday.

The 52-member Commonwealth of Britain and its former colonies suspended Nigeria on Saturday. That could lead to economic sanctions similar to the ones imposed on South Africa, which hurt many poor blacks but helped rid them of apartheid.

The United States and many other West rn nations recalled their ambassadors to Nigeria, and Washington placed travel restrictions on some Nigerians. The Organization of African Unity joined the international condemnation, calling the executions "regrettable and a setback for Africa."

Nigeria reacted angrily to the Commonwealth's action.

"The suspension is the result of the long-drawn campaign from some to remove Nigeria from the Commonwealth for whatever reasons," David Atta, a spokesman for the junta, said in a telephone interview from the federal capital, Abuja.

Saro-Wiwa, 54, was convicted Oct. 31 by a military tribunal in the southern oil port of Port Harcourt for the murders of four political rivals at a 1994 rally. He insisted he was framed because of his opposition to Gen. Sani Abacha's regime and Nigeria's oil industry.

The convicted men, all members of Saro-Wiwa's minority Ogoni ethnic group, were executed Friday morning and buried in the Port Harcourt cemetery, which was still surrounded by soldiers and tanks Saturday. Relatives of the executed men were barred from visiting.

Loud sobbing could be heard at Saro-Wiwa's modest home, where his wife Hauwa received mourners throughout the day. She has not spoken to reporters since Friday night, when she said: "It is all over."

About 3,000 people gathered in Lagos on Saturday to protest the executions. Police fired guns and tear gas into the air and four people were hurt when the crowd panicked. Police said five people were arrested for illegal assembly.

Nigeria's foreign minister, at a Commonwealth summit in Auckland, New Zealand, insisted Saro-Wiwa was not a victim of politics or discrimination against his Movement for the Survival of the Ogoni People.

"He was responsible along with others for the gruesome murders of four of the members of that movement who were the original leaders," Chief Tom Ikimi said Friday.

The Commonwealth said it might expel Nigeria if it does not comply with the organization's principles of democracy and human rights.

"I would naturally want my country to perform better," Nigerian Chief Emeka Anayaoku, the Commonwealth's secretary-general, said Saturday. He is not part of Nigeria's delegation, which was tossed out of the summit after the suspension vote.

The suspension puts Nigeria at risk of losing aid and a wide range of international contacts in the Commonwealth.

Some Nigerians say they would welcome economic sanctions. Oil revenue — which accounts for about 80 percent of Nigeria's foreign income — barely trickles down to them.

"Everything we have has been taken from us by the military," said Ken Anamudu, a geologist from Lagos.

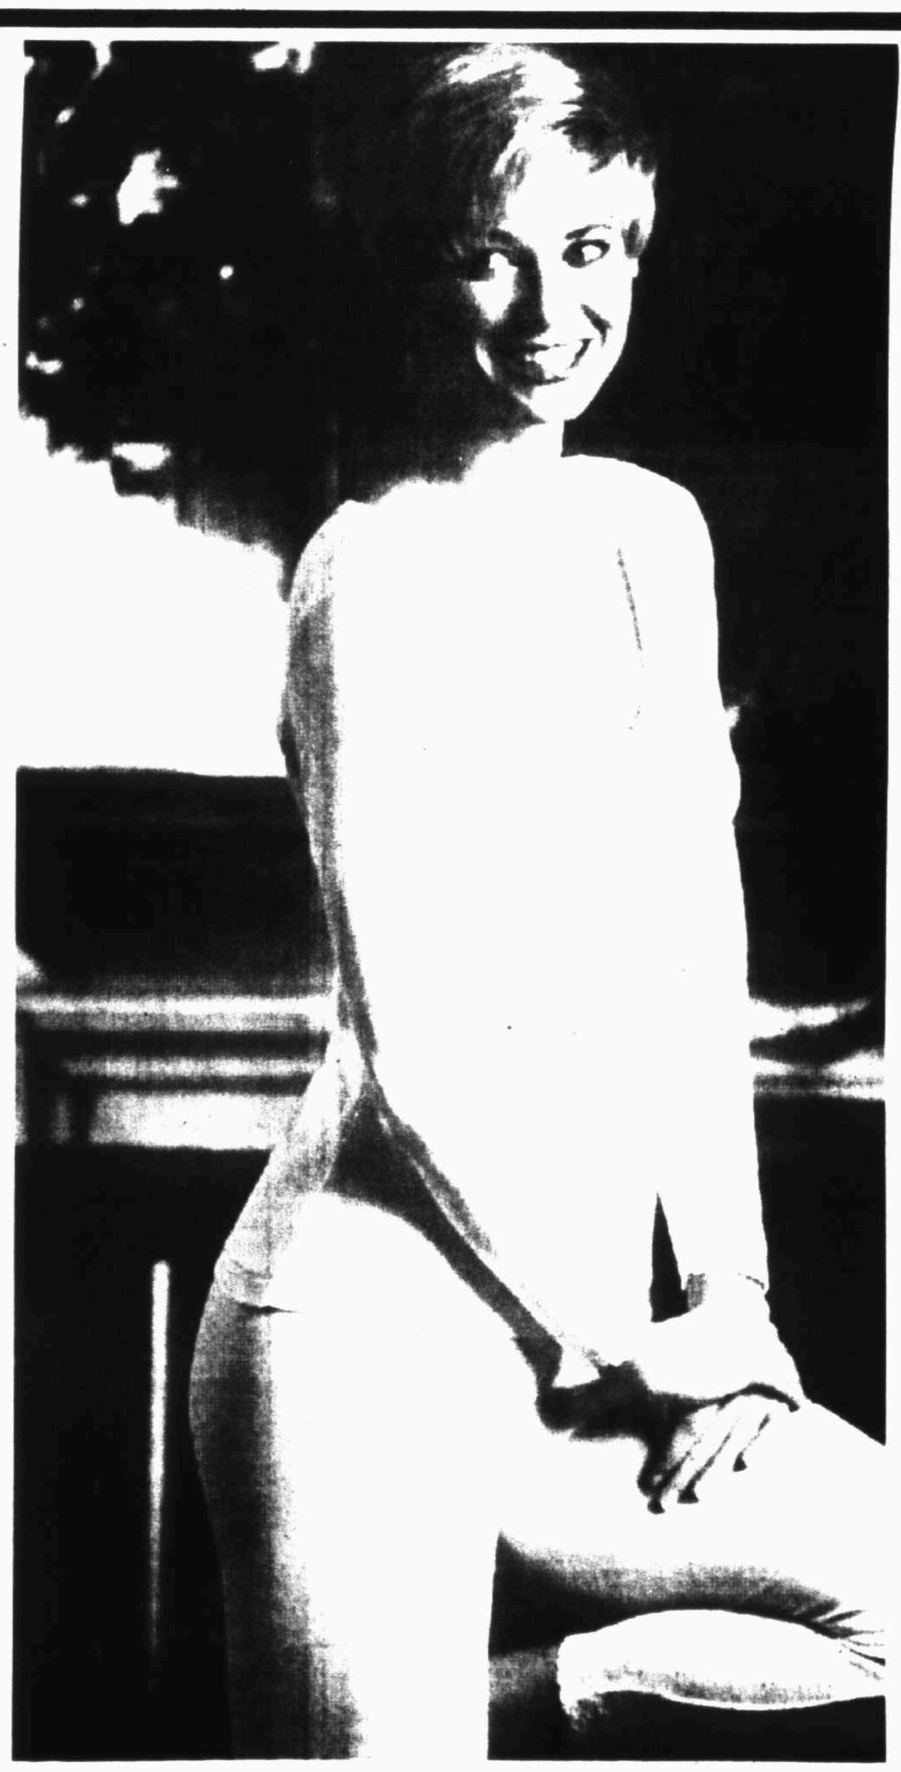

He said that sanctions might hurt, "but over the years it has become clear that only action, not mere talk, will force the hand of the military rulers."

WEATHER WATCH

Sunny skies to bring high 70s

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high in the upper 70s, southwest winds 10 to 20 mph and gusty, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be mostly clear with a low near 40.

Monday is expected to be mostly sunny with a high in the mid-70s.

After an overnight low of 30, Saturday's high was 57 compared with the record high for that date of 83, set in 1964. The record low for today's date was 16, set in 1950.

STATE

Skies across Texas were generally clear Saturday, but cooler weather also prevailed.

In North Texas, temperatures ranged from 58 degrees at Lufkin to 48 degrees at Paris and Wichita Falls. Winds were from the north at 5 to 15 mph in the east and central sections of North Texas and to the south at 5 to 10 mph in western sections.

Today's forecast for North Texas calls for clear skies and warmer weather, from 67 degrees in the east to 78 degrees in the west. Lows will be from 42 in the east to 49 in the west.

In South Texas, skies were clear as a cold front moved through the area. Temperatures were mainly in the 50s and 60s. Winds were quite strong along the coast and far South Texas.

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies and warmer weather, with highs in the 70s and lows in the 30s and 40s.

West Texas skies were clear with temperatures ranging from 52 at Childress to 65 at El Paso.

A south to west wind of 5 to 15 mph returned to most of the area. Winds were stronger across parts of the Panhandle and through the mountain passes of the west.

Today's West Texas forecast calls for a mostly sunny day with highs mainly in the 70s and 80s and lows in the 30s and 40s.

NATION

Snow fell in the Midwest, thunderstorms thrashed the East and a rush of cold air stretched Saturday from the Plains to the East Coast.

In Indiana, snowfall amounts ranged from less than an inch to up to 6 inches near Lake Michigan. The snow kept crowds away from the Veteran's Day parade in downtown Indianapolis and backed up traffic on Interstate 65.

"This usually happens with the first snowfall," state Trooper Shana Kennedy said. "It usually takes two or three snowfalls for people to get used to driving in it again."

Most of southeastern Wisconsin had 3 to 5 inches of snow by Saturday morning, with some areas receiving up to 9 inches.

Record-breaking temperatures were reported from the Rockies to the Plains. Lows plunged to 7 degrees below zero in Glasgow, Mont., breaking the record low of 6 below in 1920.

Heavy rain and wind gusts up to 60 mph developed in the mid-Atlantic and Southeast states. More than 4 inches of rain fell in parts of Maryland. Rain changed to heavy snow over portions of West Virginia and western Maryland, with up to 4 inches possible.

Light to moderate snowfall was expected across parts of New York and Pennsylvania, with accumulations generally less than 3 inches. Heavier amounts of up to 6 inches were possible along the eastern shores of Lake Ontario and Lake Erie.

More rain was expected from the Great Lakes and Northeast along the East Coast to central Florida. Rain fell Saturday over Alabama, Georgia and the Florida Panhandle.

Late Friday, a tornado killed a central Arkansas couple and injured their 18-month-old son. Snow and sleet fell in the northwestern part of the state.

BUDGET: White House, GOP show no signs of agreement

here it is," he said — pulling a waffle from an envelope and holding it up for cameras.

Yet after attacking Clinton all year for being a vacillating president, Republicans expressed irritation that this time he was holding firm.

"He in effect said on the telephone, 'Get Lost,'" said Dole.

The White House said it was proceeding with plans for a partial government shutdown after the current spending authority expires Monday at midnight. Essential services such as national defense, meat inspection and air traffic safety would be maintained, said Budget Director Alice Rivlin, but military recruitment offices, passport offices and government museums would close.

"If you're a government contractor, you will not be paid," she said. "You can go on doing some work, I guess, but you won't be paid for it."

The veto-threatened measure to extend spending authority was expected to clear the Senate and be sent to the White House on Monday, only hours before a midnight deadline. Dole said Republicans had offered to rewrite the measure to make the proposed Medicare Part B premium increase — set at $7 a month — temporary, to provide time for a comprehensive budget solution, but Clinton rebuffed them.

A companion bill, to extend the debt limit, cleared Congress on Friday but has yet to be formally transmitted to the White House. It faces a veto threat over several provisions, including one restricting Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin's ability to manage government finances. While actual default seems unlikely, financial markets could react unpredictably on Monday if the legislation hasn't been signed.

Against this backdrop, efforts to convene a meeting between White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta and GOP lawmakers collapsed when the two sides could not agree who should attend.

Gingrich and Dole opened the possibility of a meeting late Friday when they invited Clinton to the Capitol for a Saturday afternoon meeting. The White House offered to send Panetta instead. But the GOP leaders said if he was coming they weren't, and offered to have the House and Senate chairmen of the budget committees attend in their place. The White House said it wanted senior Democratic lawmakers at the table, and Republicans refused.

"It's a struggle between the Democratic White House and Republican Congress and we ought to be able to resolve it without additional players," said Dole.

Countered White House spokesman Mike McCurry, "The president is disappointed in this. The solution to the crisis that we're in now must be bipartisan, and the president felt it was very appropriate to have bipartisan meetings on the Hill today."

Later Saturday, Armey blamed Clinton for ignoring "overture after overture" by GOP leaders to negotiate a compromise. As long as the impasse sticks, Armey said, Clinton should cancel his trip to Japan later this week for an economic conference.

"I think he should do that. ... We've told the president you need to come to work, get busy, sit at the table and seriously discuss this," Armey told CNN's "Evans and Novak."

Previous government shutdowns have been brief, and usually occurred over a holiday weekend when little disruption was felt.

Both sides seemed to be digging in this time around, though, and each blamed the other for the impending disruption in services.

UNITED: Zapora brings business experience to agency

United Way at 682-4358.

In an earlier campaign rally, Irelan noted that the United Way, its volunteers and 16 agencies "are part of the solution, not part of the problem," in solving the community's personal and social ills.

"Local people have to solve local problems, and the community at large can do that if they group together and solve the problems together," said Irelan, regional manager of Conoco Inc.

"Local people know what their problems are. They know the best and most effective ways to solve them. When your neighbor helps your neighbor, that's the sort of thing we need to be working on."

Raising funds that fuel the United Way is one of Zapora's fortes.

In working for United Way organizations in Illinois, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania since 1978, Zapora has outperformed the United Way national average in campaign-sales increases by a cumulative 234 percent to 126 percent.

Nationwide, there are 2,000 independent United Way organizations. Of Texas' 200 groups, the Midland organization is "the most successful United Way in Texas in per-capita giving contributions by 20 percent," Zapora said.

Zapora, who succeeded former United Way Executive Director Jane Wolf, said the organization's administrative overhead is 13 percent of the budget, "just a tremendously low number," which is a credit to United Way's volunteers, he said.

Zapora — born in Pennsylvania 42 years ago today and raised in New Jersey — got into his United Way career "pretty much by accident."

After he had earned a bachelor's degree in accounting at Albright College and a master's degree in marketing at Temple University, Zapora got a personnel-management job in 1975 with the Interstate Container Corp., in Reading, Pa. He became a "loan executive" to help the United Way campaign in Reading.

His United Way work there resulted in his being recruited as Reading's United Way campaign director in 1978, and his United Way career was catapulted. That year, Reading's United Way campaign was $3 million.

Except for a two-year stint as a restaurant co-owner and general manger in Reading from 1982 to 1984, Zapora was in United Way work continuously until 1993. He then joined AmeriFile Inc. and Taxbyte Inc., of Moline, Ill. Because of Zapora's efforts, sales of the the sister companies, which supplied software and accounting services for the tax industry, increased by 230 percent.

While working for a New Jersey United Way in 1991, Zapora met a volunteer, Cheryl L. Foster, who worked for Ford Motor Co. They married in 1992. Ms. Foster, who does her United Way volunteer work in Dallas, is general manager of Ford Motor Co.'s Dallas Parts Distribution Center in Carrollton.

"Back then," when he started his United Way career, "and I still think it's true, United Ways are more and more functioning like a business and need the business skills, whether computers or marketing skills," he said.

Zapora said that "one of the challenges" confronting United Way of Midland is dealing with an "economy (that) is growing in areas that are not traditionally strong for United Way.

"Our United Way has had a long history of success with oil companies and foundations, locally," he said. "New retail establishments are opening up. United Way has historically not been as strong in retail organizations. (It's) not their fault, but ours, for not stressing the need to do that as much."

However, the "larger retail has been very supportive," Zapora said, and cited stores such as Dillard's, J.C. Penney Co. and Wal-Mart.

United Way organizations "have not had a long history of success with restaurants, working with restaurants, so we will have to focus more on that in future years."

As a result, United Way's challenge is "learning how to be more successful in markets and rearranging United Way after the campaign. By the end of the year, all of our staff and volunteers will be more marketing-focused," Zapora said.

Midland agencies served by those fund-raising efforts are the American Red Cross, Salvation Army, Big Brothers/Big Sisters, Buffalo Trail Council of the Boy Scouts of America, Camp Fire Boys and Girls, Centers for Children and Families, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Casa de Amigos, Community and Senior Services, YMCA, Boys and Girls Club of Midland, Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, Permian Basin Council of the Girl Scouts, Freewill Foster Home, Midland Need to Read and Midland Rape Crisis Center.

In modifying the United Way's approach to contributors, Zapora said that staff and volunteers will "not just (be) coming (to offices) once a year with pledge cards and saying, 'Hi, I'm from United Way. Please give us your money.'

"We are going to be going in and letting them know that we are here to help. 'Your employees may have some problems. Let us know.'"

In a recent instance in using that approach, "we got clothing for a single parent's children," Zapora said. "The children needed clothing. They needed counseling, because they were in a very traumatic family situation and some other problems."

In his role in Midland, Zapora is directing the United Way toward "more customer service."

For example, the United Way can help a single parent get competent day care, so a company can hire the single parent," Zapora said.

And Zapora is eager to get the United Way and its agencies "up to speed" on computers. "They save time. They save administrative costs."

In reflection, Zapora said that "all through college, I was always torn between social work. Yet, I knew my basic instincts were business skills and marketing. I think I took after my father. My father always sold things.

"And as a Little Leaguer, I sold candy and always sold more than anybody else," Zapora said. "I've been lucky enough to find United Way because it is the most perfect place that is halfway between the business world and halfway between the social-service world."

PANEL: Committee members put their 'cards on table'

(From 1A)

to square one."

However, a motion that a member with three absences would be replaced by an alternate passed with 10 in favor and eight opposed.

Pete Ruiz suggested that because the public meetings are being videotaped, members who miss a meeting could catch up by viewing the tape.

"Simply watching the videotape does not get full participation," Randy Turner said. "There is a problem if people aren't committed to coming to 75 percent of the meetings. If you don't attend the meetings, you are not participating in the process."

Jan Reed agreed. "If you are gone, the committee suffers."

A motion was made in favor of replacing someone if they had two excused and two unexcused absences. It failed to pass with 11 opposing it.

Some committee members continued to argue about the attendance policy, and others said they wanted to "get on with the agenda."

John Kennedy said, "We have had two meetings and accomplished nothing but an attendance policy, and we didn't agree on it. But the majority ruled. I want to get on with the agenda. It's obvious we are already set up in 'us and them' categories, and I hate that."

Turner suggested that to break the ice, members tell something about themeselves and why they had committed to work with the group.

LuAnn Morgan said she was interested in working for a plan to benefit all students in Midland. She said she agreed with parents who want more continuity for their children. "I don't care where my child goes on the bus as long as he goes all six years to one school. I don't want him going to a different school every year."

Margie Titus said that because the school board had voted in favor of considering stand-alone schools, that should be the committee's first charge.

Michael Wallace said he was happy with the current cluster system of desegregation but would consider improving it.

"What we have is two diverse groups working at odds with each other," Ms. Marshall said. "Members of the majority community are the ones who say the cluster system is not working." She said if anyone — in the community or on the committee — has a plan of integration "that will integrate this town with the same effectiveness, efficiency and fairness as the cluster system, then put it on the table."

Aside from airing opinions about school desegregation, members presented a list of citizens with attributes to chair the committee. The list, which will be added to at the next meeting, included school board trustees James Fuller and Robin Hightower, MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr., longtime educator Barbara Yarbrough, Ted Kerr, City Council member Jose Cuevas, Midland College President David E. Daniel, Allen Whitman, engineer Larry Goodwin and teacher, coach and Midland Federation of Teachers President Steve Buck.

Committee members said they would bring the names of more nominees to the next meeting and consider interviewing candidates. It was decided that Turner would serve as temporary chairman for Thursday's 7 p.m. meeting. Kennedy chaired the first meeting.

MISD administrator Larry Lusby provided committee members with maps of the elementary school boundary areas and offered information showing the racial breakdown of students living in every block of the city. He explained that schools should be about 54 percent Anglo students. Although the district has favored keeping a balance of 54 percent — ±5 percent — of Anglo students, the committee may consider a balance of ± 10 percent. Lusby said that would prevent having to change patterns of integration so often and would provide for more stability for students.

home," Philbeck said to the several dozen Vietnam veterans present. "This is your place."

Following the ceremony, a barbecue was held; proceeds will assist in the completion of the memorial site.

Laying asphalt, and installing curbs and gutters at the site are scheduled over the next few months, Philbeck said. Landscaping and tree plantings will be done next spring, he said.

Chiapas peace talks prompt calls for Indian autonomy

SAN ANDRES LARRAINZAR, Mexico (AP) — For centuries, Mexico's Indians have been ruled by the laws of their white conquerors. But in fast-changing Mexico, that tradition may be destined to end.

Unable to quell an Indian uprising in Chiapas, the government is under pressure at peace talks resuming Monday to grant the rebels significant new powers to govern themselves and control ancestral lands.

Indians are demanding concessions like those across Mexico, from the southern highlands of Chiapas to the northern expanses of Sonora.

Resolving the demands could affect efforts to surmount a 10-month-old economic crisis. With financial markets still volatile, experts said the brief detention of a reputed rebel leader was partly responsible for a 6 percent drop in the peso on Oct. 26.

Also at stake is President Ernesto Zedillo's promise of electoral and democratic reforms that would give more Mexicans greater political voice and possibly weaken the governing party's 66-year grip on power.

Despite Mexico's celebration of its indigenous heritage and its varied manners of dress and language, Indians claim they are ignored or discriminated against by fellow Mexicans of mixed-race or European descent.

Often living in isolated villages lacking basic services, many Indians remain illiterate and never learn Spanish.

Indian activists say autonomy could solve most of their demands: democracy, justice, basic rights and better services for impoverished peasants.

Autonomy was the battle cry of the Zapatista National Liberation Army, which led the Maya Indian revolt in Chiapas on Jan. 1, 1994. At least 145 people died in the brief fighting.

While those cries emboldened other Indian groups, none has publicly embraced the Zapatistas' use of force. But political overtones have been evident in sporadic killings of Indian peasants in some heavily Indian regions, particularly the western state of Guerrero.

The autonomy issue is a potentially potent one in Mexico. The latest government figures indicate at least 7 million of its 90 million citizens speak an Indian language and 56 native groups are constitutionally recognized.

The government is cautious and has not said how much autonomy it might allow. But experts say some degree of self-rule may have to be granted, even at the cost of rural power historically wielded by the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party.

"It is impossible to construct a democratic nation without considering autonomy for the Indian people," said researcher Hector Diaz Polanco, an expert on the issue.

Representatives of Otomi, Zapotec, Chol and other tribes called for autonomy during a round of the Chiapas peace talks last month.

"Today, brothers, without autonomy we look down at the feet of the white man," said Julio Atenco Vidal, a Nahua from the Gulf of Mexico coast, one of dozens of Indian activists invited to the Chiapas talks. "But with autonomy, we can look them in the eye."

Along with brethrén in parts of Chiapas, Indians in some regions have already declared autonomy.

How many foreigners? Europe can only guess

AIX-EN-PROVENCE, France (AP) - Asked about the number of foreigners in Europe, sociologist Jocelyne Cesari threw up her hands. "I'd sure like to know," she said, laughing ruefully.

In Brussels, Belgium, Sophie Petzell, spokeswoman for the European Union commission that watches immigration, gave the same laugh. "Who knows?" she replied.

For the EU, Austria and Switzerland, foreigners with legal residency likely number between 15 million and 20 million. More than one-third are Muslims from North Africa, Asia and Turkey.

But all figures are misleading.

First, no one can count clandestine immigrants. Depending upon which official study is consulted, the number in Italy is 5 percent more — or 300 percent more — than the 1 million legal ones.

In Spain, according to one intergovernmental report, 3,377 Algerians were registered residents in 1993. That year, the document adds, Spanish police arrested 8,544 Algerians for criminal activities.

Jean-Claude Barreau, who advises the French Interior Ministry, said France alone discovers 50,000 illegal immigrants a year, a fraction of the real total.

Second, "foreigners" are difficult to categorize in the European Union, which is made up of 15 member states with varying nationality laws and colonial histories.

For many Frenchmen, "immigrant" is a code word for North African, including Algerian veterans of the French Vietnam war who have been citizens of France since birth.

France confers citizenship to anyone born within its borders, including its overseas outposts in the Caribbean, the Pacific and the Indian Ocean.

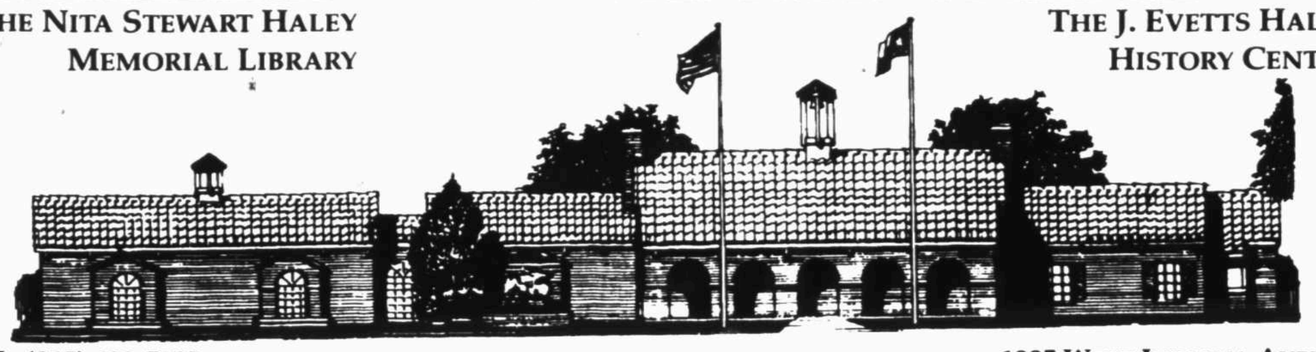

German citizenship, however, requires German blood, or a difficult process of naturalization. Britain's laws are complex, designed to stem a flow of immigrants that followed the end of its empire.

Overall immigration figures include not only people of color but also Caucasians who find it easier to blend into European cultures. Still, immigrants from eastern Europe and the former Yugoslavia often face discrimination in places where local people blame them for economic problems.

According to the Paris-based Organization for Economic Development and Cooperation, Germany has the largest legal non-EU population, at 5,343,000. That includes almost 2 million Turks and nearly 1 million former Yugoslavs.

France is next, with 2,284,600.

PUBLIC NOTICE

On November 10, 1995, Texas Utilities Electric Company ("TU Electric"), in accordance with Substantive Rule 23.23(b) of the Public Utility Commission of Texas ("Commission"), filed a Petition with the Commission seeking authority to refund on its customers' electric service bills an overcollected balance of fuel cost revenues existing as of September 30, 1995, in the amount of $64,302,421.92, inclusive of interest through December 1995 (which assumes the refund to be implemented in TU Electric's January 1996 billing month, with additional interest being applied if the refund is made after January 1996). All of TU Electric's customers and classes of customers whose electric service rates include charges for fuel costs pursuant to TU Electric's tariffed Rider FC, titled "Fuel Cost Factor", and all territories served by TU Electric are affected by the Petition. These changes will be subject to final review by the Commission in TU Electric's next reconciliation proceeding at the Commission. Persons who wish to intervene in the proceeding or comment upon the action sought should contact the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Austin, Texas 78757, or call the Commission's Public Information Office at (512)458-0256 or (512)458-0221 (telecommunications device for the deaf).

Bosnia mission: NATO may be headed into dangerous downward spiral

By Charles Hanley
Associated Press

■ News analysis

Once again, a debate on the Potomac is watched warily on the Seine and the Rhine. This time, as Congress puts roadblocks along the U.S. route to Bosnia, the durability of NATO, the world's most durable alliance, may be on the line.

The GOP-led House this week may vote to give itself a veto over U.S. funding for a Bosnia peace operation. It has already demanded that President Clinton get congressional approval before ordering 20,000 U.S. troops to join French, British and other NATO peacekeepers in the former Yugoslavia.

The Republican complaint: The White House has not shown how the deployment serves U.S. national interests. Some warn of a European quagmire. Most Americans seem to agree, telling pollsters they don't want to see U.S. ground troops in a Bosnia truce force.

The Europeans can only wait — and worry.

"I think the U.S. attitude toward Europe is undergoing a fundamental change," said Franz-Josef Meiers, a German foreign policy analyst in Bonn. "The Americans are moving from burden-sharing to burden-shedding."

The burden is the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. And in this, NATO's 46th year, a question is arising more than ever: Why are those U.S. F-15s, tank brigades and warships still on station in Europe four years after the Soviet Union's collapse?

The trans-Atlantic allies are working hard to find new missions for NATO, the old coalition that once faced down communists, including assignments "out of area" — beyond traditional boundaries.

If it's successful, the Bosnia mission to oversee a peace being negotiated among Yugoslavia's warring Serbs, Muslims and Croats could recast NATO in a new post-Cold War image. But if it fails, it could cast the alliance into a dangerous downward spiral.

Recent history is discouraging. From the onset of Yugoslavia's wars, the Americans and Europeans have quarreled over tactics and strategy in trying to restore Balkan peace, most glaringly when Washington abandoned the international arms blockade on Bosnia.

Now, congressional misgivings could weaken the U.S. hand in the NATO peace enforcement operation. And that, in turn, would diminish U.S. stature in NATO itself.

"If Clinton cannot deliver," said Simon Serfaty, a European specialist at Virginia's Old Dominion University, "the crisis in NATO would be as significant as any in years."

Dissidents in NATO are beginning to speak out.

One, retired French general Jean Cot, a former U.N. peacekeeping commander in ex-Yugoslavia, says U.S. and European interests have diverged too much.

NATO must be dissolved as it exists today, he told a recent symposium in Paris.

More and more, the French are disillusioned with Washington, said Frederic Bozo of the French Institute of International Relations.

"The perception here is that the United States wants to keep political leadership in NATO but not commit troops," he said in a telephone interview from Paris. "That's a serious problem for the future."

And not the only problem. Since the Soviet collapse, the trans-Atlantic partners have clashed increasingly over trade, over espionage activities against each other, over how to treat Iran, Iraq and other states deemed "rogues" by Washington.

Just last week, the Clinton administration infuriated the Europeans by rejecting their nominee for NATO secretary-general, former Dutch Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers.

In the background, meanwhile, the French and Germans are slowly strengthening the Western European Union, the European community's long-dormant military arm — an alliance without Washington.

They have formed a joint, autonomous "Eurocorps" of 35,000 troops, for example, and are moving toward developing a satellite system that would free them from dependence on Pentagon reconnaissance data.

But for all the bombast and backbiting, and despite the lack of a clear mission, powerful forces of inertia and economics should keep the NATO flag flying for many years to come.

For one thing, the Europeans will balk at adding an estimated $100 billion a year to their defense budgets to replace American might in Europe. For another thing, smaller NATO countries, from Portugal to Norway, will continue to prefer taking their lead from a superpower across the sea, rather than from a giant — Germany — uncomfortably next door.

Rain, wind delay shuttle's flight to space station Mir

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Rain in Spain and wind in Morocco kept Atlantis grounded Saturday, delaying the shuttle's flight to the Russian space station Mir by one day.

Only slightly better weather was expected at the overseas emergency landing strips for today's launch attempt. What's more, conditions were likely to worsen at the Kennedy Space Center.

NASA has just seven minutes on any given day to send Atlantis on the most fuel-efficient route to Mir. Today's liftoff time is 7:30 a.m.

The weather at Kennedy was perfect Saturday morning. But rain, low clouds or gale-force wind at all three shuttle runways in Spain and Morocco posed too much of a risk — a rare occurrence — and managers called off the launch.

"We're a little disappointed, but we understand how the rules work," commander Kenneth Cameron said, sighing, before crawling out of the shuttle.

Atlantis contains a Russian-built docking port that Cameron and his crew will attach to the Mir station to facilitate future shuttle dockings.

This will be the first time a space shuttle is used in station construction. It's also the first time a shuttle has been filled with Russian equipment.

The astronauts will use Atlantis' robot arm to erect the 15-foot docking tunnel in the shuttle cargo bay, then latch onto Mir via this port. The tunnel will remain behind when the shuttle leaves.

The Atlantis-Mir hookups — this is the second of seven planned — will allow the two space programs to iron out docking and communication problems before they start hauling up pieces of the international space station in late 1997.

With Powell out, Dole gains support; Clinton holds lead, poll shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole gains Republican support with Colin Powell out of the presidential race, but President Clinton would beat Dole if the 1996 election were held today, a poll indicates.

But many of those questioned in the Time magazine-CNN poll released Saturday are considered "leaners," not strongly behind Dole or Clinton yet, and a Newsweek poll, also released Saturday, puts such a two-way race in a statistical dead heat.

"These numbers don't have a tremendous predictive value yet," said Keating Holland, polling editor at CNN. "All we can say at this point is that given a choice between Dole and Clinton, Clinton would win."

The Time-CNN telephone poll was conducted Oct. 31-Nov. 6 — before Powell, the retired chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said that he wouldn't make a White House bid. But the poll asked the 4,787 registered voters surveyed about their choices with and without Powell in the race.

This "Election Monitor" poll had a margin of error of 1.5 percentage points. Pollsters planned to track these same voters throughout the 1996 campaign to measure trends and changing attitudes.

The Time-CNN poll found that in a Clinton-Dole match-up, 48 percent said they would vote for Clinton and 42 percent would support Dole. (This included so-called leaners.)

Come Monday, government may lapse into coma, but most won't notice

■ If budget stalemate between Congress, president brings about shutdown, America's vital functions will continue.

By Connie Cass
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — At the stroke of midnight Monday, the nation's government may lapse into a coma. Unless they're planning to visit a national park or apply for Social Security, most Americans won't notice.

That's because America's vital functions will continue, even if a budget stalemate between Congress and the president brings about a federal shutdown Tuesday, sending 800,000 workers home and closing offices across the country.

About 1.2 million employees will stay on the job — printing money, chasing criminals, forecasting the weather, tracking the space shuttle if it's launched, feeding the animals at the National Zoo, guarding the Monets at the National Gallery of Art.

And the nation's defenses will remain intact: The 1.5 million active-duty military personnel will stay at their posts. Mail will be delivered; Amtrak trains will run.

"Clearly, air traffic controllers have to stay on the job, or the planes won't fly," White House budget chief Alice Rivlin said in a recent interview. "Meat has to be inspected or people won't buy it. Federal prison guards have to stay there or otherwise you would put prisoners in the street."

So all workers deemed "essential" to the nation will stay on the job, even though the government will have no authority to pay them. They will get back pay when the stalemate ends.

Usually that happens quickly. Only one of the four shutdowns since 1981 lasted more than one day, and it was over a holiday weekend so few workers were affected. Several times the threat of a shutdown has been averted with a last-minute compromise.

But this is a bitter standoff. Clinton has promised to veto a bill needed to give most federal agencies the authority to keep spending money after the midnight deadline. He doesn't like other provisions the Republicans have attached to the bill. Both sides say they won't budge.

"This dispute is different," said John Sturdivant, president of the American Federation of Government Employees. The workers who would be furloughed "are planning for the worst."

Some may wonder, in these days of budget squeezing, why America needs "non-essential" employees. It's a broad category, covering about 40 percent of the non-uniformed work force.

"We reject that," Sturdivant said. "We think that all federal employees are essential."

In the case of a shutdown, who will miss these missing workers?

—Tourists will. National monuments and parks will be closed, from Alcatraz Island to the Statue of Liberty. In Washington, the Smithsonian museums will be shut. So will the National Zoo. White House tours will be canceled.

Parks and battlefields too sprawling to be locked up, such as Yosemite and Yellowstone, will have only a skeleton crew on hand. That may be a plus for visitors who can breeze past entrance gates without paying fees and pitch camp for free.

—People applying for government benefits or services will be out of luck. Workers won't be around to process claims for Social Security benefits or issue passports. Generally, people already eligible for retirement benefits, welfare checks or other government payments shouldn't be affected.

—Economists and number-junkies will miss out. All of the Bureau of Labor Statistics' 1,500 employees are considered non-essential. The reams of statistics they normally churn out will be stopped.

—Reporters will be in the dark. A government shutdown makes headlines, but it also makes news harder to cover. Some spokespersons will be laid off, including those who would normally give updates on the flight of Space Shuttle Atlantis, whose launch was planned for Sunday morning.

Of course, if a shutdown drags on for long, the number of people who notice it would steadily increase. That's what pressures politicians to compromise quickly.

Past shutdowns didn't save money because the workers who stayed home were given back pay for the missed days. That's a decision Congress makes, and House and Senate leaders said Saturday that workers would get any wages lost during a shutdown.

Even if they do get paid, budget impasses are uncertain times for federal workers with mouths to feed and mortgages to meet. And they wreck events planned in advance, from training seminars to art exhibits.

At the Smithsonian's Arthur M. Sackler Gallery, workers spent the last four months painting scenery, adjusting the lighting and erecting a giant indoor tent for a display of ancient Chinese art.

Their deadline is Tuesday, the day planned for a VIP preview. But that's also the morning the government may shut down. "It had to be Tuesday," sighed spokeswoman Susan Bliss. "What can we tell people?"

Dear Diary: Most prolific diarist ever is man of 20 million words

By Leslie Dreyfous
Associated Press

AP Laserphoto

Eddie Ellis, 84, the world's most prolific diarist, according the the Guinness Book of World Records, works at his home in New York.

NEW YORK — Since you're the reporter, you want to ask all the questions. But Eddie Ellis won't stick to this plan. He's got questions of his own. In no time, he'll have half-crawled inside your skin.

It's part of his charm, if a little unexpected.

Unexpected because, well, this guy is the most prolific diarist ever, according to the Guinness Book of Records. He's filled 40,000 pages with more than 20 million words about his life. You can't help imagining that he's got to be, well, (how to put this nicely?) seriously self-absorbed.

But that's the thing — the most wonderful thing — about Edward Robb Ellis. His long life has been about so much more than himself. By trade he was a newspaperman but, more than that, he's been a kind of Everyman quester, questioner, quick-to-laugh seeker of truth.

"Ellis," he occasionally says to himself, "it's been quite a ride."

Take a look in his eyes. A merry twinkle glints through the thick dark rims of his glasses. When he tips his head back to laugh, which he does often, a whole faceful of hair ripples along with the smile.

Focus for a moment on his wild silver mane. You can almost glimpse the razor-sharp part that once was, the kind of part made by raking a rat's-tail comb through his slicked-back 1940s hair.

He's 84 years old now and bothered by emphysema, but nonetheless it's all right there: the after-hours drinks and swinging foxtrots at grand old hotels; the love affairs with great books and leggy women; the full-course Depression-era meals for 30 cents followed by vaudeville for a quarter.

In her smoky voice, the actress Talullah Bankhead once showered him with "Dah-lings." The great poet e.e. cummings sat by politely as Eddie read aloud. Irving Berlin listened to him croon a Berlin ballad, and Harry S. Truman let the young reporter tag along on his morning walks.

His late wife Ruthie, the woman he can't forget, predicted decades ago that Eddie would someday be noted as a "someone," that his life and diaries would matter. The other day, he came across a book she gave him on his 50th birthday. In it was inscribed: "For Mr. Potential of the 20th Century." It damned near made him cry.

Now, in the twilight of his life, comes publication of "A Diary of the Century: Tales from America's Greatest Diarist." Maybe all his scribblings, most of which are now among New York University's archives, were worthwhile. Maybe Ruthie was right.

As his friend, the veteran columnist Pete Hamill, writes in an introduction to the book, "There are human beings who will be helped in understanding our times through the diaries of Edward Robb Ellis.

"That is his accomplishment. That is his triumph."

It started out as a lark, a bet with a few childhood pals. Who could keep a journal going the longest? While his challengers soon lapsed, Eddie kept on, chronicling everything from his first talkie movie (Al Jolson's "The Singing Fool") to TV reporter Diane Sawyer's 1994 paycheck ($19,000 per day, twice as much as he'd earned per year as a reporter).

Ellis closed his first diary entry, misspellings and all, on December 27, 1927, at the age of 16.

He wrote about everything: the railroad coal car he shared with sooty-faced men ("jobless and hopeless, not college kids on a lark"); incoming enemy fire somewhere on Okinawa ("for years I had wondered what fear feels like"); even his first sexual adventures ("Well, today Mamma dusted under my bed and found my diary ...").

On March 15, 1934, back when young Ellis only had time enough to write on the fly, he observed: "Lately I've realized that in this diary I confess things I otherwise might not even admit doing. Every day I have to face myself and my sins .... If I were to take the time necessary to rewrite my diary, it would be like a snake swallowing its own tail."

Each morning, the ritual psychic strip-search begins again.

At first Eddie lingers in bed, his thoughts drifting a while. Eventually, he rises to nurse a few newspapers and some instant brew before sitting back in his favorite rocker to face the day he lived the day before. He refers to a datebook full of maniacal detail: every quotable quote, notes on even the briefest of meetings, ticket stubs, business cards, press clippings, stray flowers, postcards, bits of doodled art, all carefully saved.

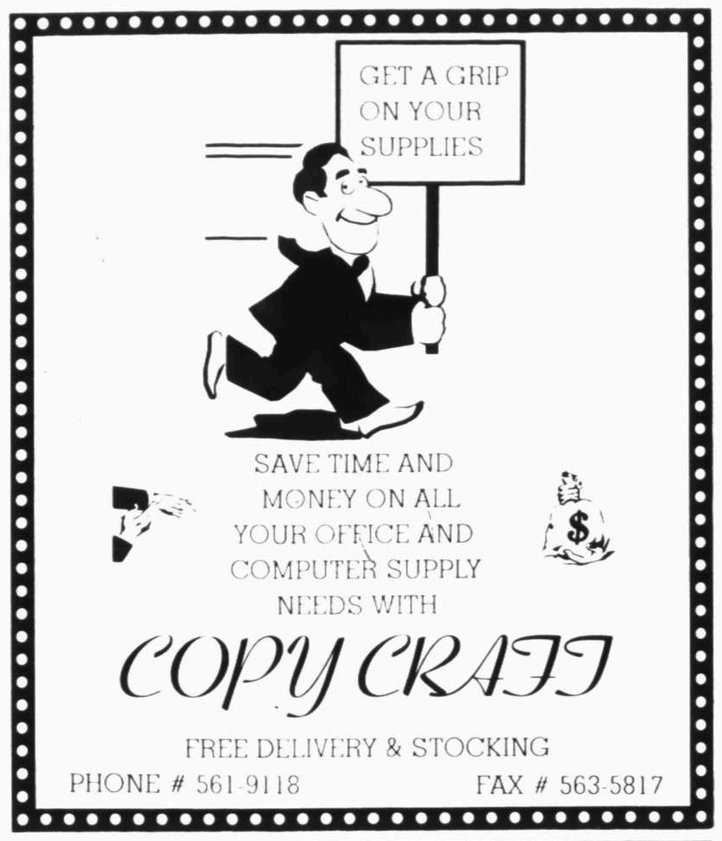

Then slowly, deliberately, carefully, Eddie begins to peck away at his manual typewriter, struggles to bring alive a small slice of life. At odd hours, at length or in a few brief lines, he has done this every day for nearly 70 years.

"I've just tried to observe what the hell happened," he says, leaning back in his chair. "I guess I'm just a sort of two-bit, rinky-dink mystic ... compulsive and compulsively interested in life."

From deadline daily journalism to his previous books, hefty accounts of New York City's evolution and histories of American life during World War I and the Great Depression eras, words have been Eddie's life.

They have failed him only once. When Ruthie died.

She was the only woman who had ever fully reached this restless man. When her heart stopped, Eddie's snapped in two. For weeks, he could not write.

'Catman' predicted his own violent death

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — The prophecy made by the "Catman of Leavenworth" on a sunny spring afternoon was realized on a gray autumn morning seven months later.

William Post, a convicted bank robber dubbed the "Catman" because he cared for stray cats at the federal prison at Leavenworth, had envisioned what life might be like after prison — bank robberies and death in a shootout with police.

The 50-year-old career criminal, who was paroled earlier this year, stayed straight for eight months before a bank in a suburban Kansas City strip mall lured him back to crime.

Post robbed the Western National Bank in Lenexa on Thursday, the beginning of a two-day spree that included two carjackings and abductions and ended with his suicide on the muddy banks of the Kansas River on Friday as police closed in.

In a brief shootout with two officers, Post shot and wounded one before turning the gun on himself.

Post, who found a home and work as a volunteer at an animal shelter in northwest Missouri, had been shocked by the normalcy in his life since getting out of prison.

What had he envisioned?

"Maybe death row, or in some violent shootout with police. Because I was planning for that. After I got out, I expected a six- or eight-month party, then go on to the next stage of existence. I thought I'd do some bank robberies and just party," he told The Associated Press in April for a profile on the shelter where he worked, M'Shoogy's Animal Rescue in Savannah.

Gary and Lisa Silverglat, who run M'Shoogy's, were saddened but not that surprised by Post's death.

"We had talked about it, and it was like he knew. He said if anything ever happened to him, he wanted to come back here," Mrs. Silverglat said Friday evening.

In "The Hot House," a book about the Leavenworth prison, Pete Earley wrote at length about Post, the son of a Navy officer. Post's criminal history began at age 8 when he stole a car, and he spent all but one year of his adult life behind bars.

Earley wrote that Post committed a series of robberies, twice getting into shootouts during robbery attempts.

"If I could keep only one memory or moment in my life and that was it I think the one memory that I would keep is the shootout with the police in Glendale,'" Earley quoted Post as saying. "The experience of shooting it out with that cop was absolutely, totally, the most beautiful experience in my life."

Kevorkian's lawyer defends machine as fastest, safest way to end suffering

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (NYT) — When Dr. Jack Kevorkian attended the death of a 58-year-old California woman Tuesday, for the first time in more than four years he used his homemade suicide machine, which prompted a national debate when he first used it in 1990.

The medical examiner in Oakland County, Mich., had ruled that the Nov. 7 death of the woman, Patricia Cashman, who was suffering from breast cancer that had spread to her bones, had been caused by carbon monoxide poisoning.

But while Mrs. Cashman did inhale carbon monoxide gas, she also was connected to the same machine Kevorkian built from parts scavenged at garage sales and flea-markets and used on his first patient, Janet Adkins, on June 4, 1990, people who attended the suicide said.

In an interview Saturday, Kevorkian's lawyer, Geoffrey Fieger, defended the machine. "This was the safest and fastest way of ending her intolerable suffering," he said. "What everyone forgets is that Jack's highest priority is always the patient."

The lawyer said that early Tuesday morning, Mrs. Cashman pulled a clip that started a flow of gas and then flipped a switch that sent first a solution of sleep-inducing Seconal and then one of potassium chloride, intended to stop her heart, into her veins. "She most likely died from a combination of the drugs and the gas," said Fieger, a medical malpractice lawyer.

None of Kevorkian's 25 previous patients used both drugs and gas to end their lives. Two of the first three, Mrs. Adkins and Marjorie Wantz, used suicide machines; a third, Sherry Miller, who died in a cabin with Mrs. Wantz on Oct. 23, 1991, inhaled carbon monoxide because Kevorkian found her veins too wasted to easily permit insertion of the intravenous needle through which the machine sends the drugs.

But after Kevorkian's medical license was suspended in December 1991, he no longer was legally able to buy some of the drugs needed for the machine, and his next 22 patients used carbon monoxide, which anyone can legally buy.

The lawyer would not let the doctor discuss in the interview the manner of Mrs. Cashman's death. The doctor is facing trial on charges of assisting four suicides, including those of Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Wantz.

But in an interview earlier this year, Kevorkian mentioned the possibility of someday using both drugs and gas. "Every case is different, but that might well be the best way because it would be a fail-safe method," he said.

The doctor's lawyer said the suicide machine was possible in this case because Mrs. Cashman had hoarded a considerable supply of the pain-killer Seconal.

The suicide machine, which resembles a small metal rack, originally was made to hold three bottles; one of a harmless saline solution; one of thiopental, a drug that induces unconsciousness, and a third that was a combination of potassium chloride and succinylcholine, which is intended to stop the heart.

Nation's Parade on Veterans Day marks end of World War II

By Michael Blood
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Thousands of veterans, many in vintage uniform, marched up Fifth Avenue on Saturday in The Nation's Parade, marking the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II.

For World War II veteran Malcolm Smith, 73, of Tranquility, N.J., it was "the culmination of everything I stand for as an American."

Other Veterans Day observances across the nation ranged from the solemnity of a presidential wreath-laying at Arlington, Va., to the noisy rush of biplanes over San Francisco, where the Palace of the Legion of Honor reopened after a three-year renovation.

In New York, at least 33,000 veterans and troops took part in the parade on an overcast but mild day. Some shed tears, others tossed red, white and blue-wrapped candies into the crowd. Military vehicles ranging from a World War II-era Sherman tank to Army Jeeps went up the route.

Marchers included crewmembers from the USS Kearsarge, who are credited with rescuing Air Force Capt. Scott O'Grady after he was shot down behind enemy lines in Bosnia. The World War II veterans groups included U.S. Army Rangers and survivors of the Bataan Death March.

"I really feel and appreciate the crowd enthusiasm for our unit. It made you feel a little more important," said Dante Mercurio of Marlboro, N.J., an Army veteran and Pearl Harbor survivor.

The parade got under way a very unmilitary 10 minutes late. A group of dignitaries marched near the head, including Mayor Rudolph Giuliani, Gov. George Pataki and developer Donald Trump, the grand marshal who donated $200,000 toward the march.

Trump said he was pleased by the turnout. "I want them to see people care about the veterans," he said.

Even with the outpouring of public support and a $2.4 million budget, march Executive Director Tom Fox said the event was about $200,000 in debt.

As the parade began, bells rang at St. Patrick's Cathedral and across the nation, followed by a moment of silence.

Spectators stood five-and-six deep along the parade route. The Glenn Miller Alumni Orchestra was on one float. Artist Peter Max painted a five-panel mural for the reviewing stand, which featured depictions of the Statue of Liberty.

Flag-waver Jacqueline Catton said she came to recognize "everyone who served in the war, and for my dad. This is a great country, the United States. I'm so proud to be an American."

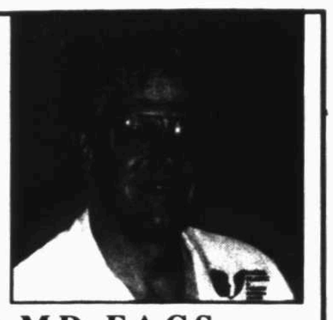

In other Veterans Day observances throughout the country:

■ President Clinton placed a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns in Arlington National Cemetery. "Today, this day, our grateful nation is united to honor America's veterans" who served in the war against Nazi Germany and Japan "from the windswept beaches of Normandy to the craggy shores of Corregidor," he said.

■ More than 2,500 veterans, their families and visitors braved strong winds and rain in Charleston, W. Va., at the dedication of a state veterans memorial. Red, white and blue balloons, representing each of the 10,197 fallen West Virginia veterans, drifted in the gray sky as bagpipers played "Amazing Grace."

■ Spectators gathered in subfreezing weather at Liberty Memorial to World War I veterans in Kansas City, Mo. Rear Adm. Thomas C. Lynch, former director of Navy staff, told the gathering that the military had concentrated on the Soviet Union during most of his 35-year career, and the United States won that conflict. "Now it's time for us to concentrate on those things that make us strong as a country," he said.

Baseball is antidote in man's battle for life

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff writer

Rough estimates by those knowledgeable of such matters suggest that at least 20,000 West Texans have met Scott Seator. Many of those are school children who have listened as he and everyone's favorite moose, Juice, describe the benefits of staying in school and off drugs. Some know Scott through the guided tours he willingly provides — often on the spur of the moment — at Christensen Stadium.

But of the 20,000 people who have met Seator, maybe 100 know his story.

His specialties are baseball and children. As director of communications for the Midland Angels, Seator handles all community and public relations for the team. As part of that job, he expertly and routinely joins together children and baseball, and the result is better educating children while they are at school, and helping to entertain them when they visit the ballpark.

Seator performs these tasks as his body is being tormented by something called adult Wilm's tumor, a condition that, according to his doctors, may afflict only nine other adults in the country.

Wilm's is a malignancy that normally preys on children. But it has the rare ability to try and ruin an adult's life as well. Seator is testimony to that, yet he refuses to yield to the tumor or its ruinous effects. Since he first contracted the illness 14 months ago, Seator's courage and determination in beating the disease have won out over the tumor's devastating intentions.

While the state minimum salary schedule ends at 20 years, area school districts generally develop schedules for 30 or more years. School districts also have separate schedules for teachers with graduate degrees — which the state does not — and offer supplements for additional training or skills.

Local teachers with little or no experience are paid a higher percentage above state-mandated minimum salaries than their more experienced colleagues. As a result, critics say, the pay scale attracts new teachers but provides no incentive for experienced teachers to stay in Midland.

But Midland may not be unique in its pay scale. The decline in pay over the state minimum is somewhat standard among school districts, according to Art Martin, executive director of business services for the Midland Independent School District.

Nevertheless, more than 40 percent of Midland public school teachers had five years or less experience last year. Being top heavy on inexperienced teachers was compounded last year by some employees taking advantage of retirement packages offered, according to MISD board trustee Dianne Anderson.

MISD currently pays teachers just out of college — with a bachelor's degree — a base salary of $23,500. That's $5,000 more than the required state minimum, and $500 to $3,500 more than the Ector County, San Angelo, Abilene and Lubbock school districts offer.

"There are teaching jobs all over the place. If you recruit in Austin, if you recruit in Dallas, if you recruit in Colorado or New England, what do you think you're going to have to do?" Ms. Anderson said.

The answer: offer competitive salaries. But some salaries appear more competitive than others.

The amount above minimum wages set by the state isn't consistent for Midland teachers. Locally, the percentage above the state-set salaries

Sale to benefit community, senior services

By Ed Todd

The nickels, dimes, quarters, and dollars that are spent at Community and Senior Services of Midland's sixth annual Texas-Size Garage Sale Friday and Saturday will go toward funding programs to help needy older citizens.

"We are only doing necessary things for our clients," said Fran Billingsley, CSS' community awareness coordinator and garage-sale director.

"We don't go beyond basic needs. (CSS) is providing things that are essential," such as balanced, nutritional meals, socialization, grocery-delivery services and necessary repairs and additions to a house or apartment.

The Texas-Size Garage Sale, which provides substantial funding for the nonprofit United Way agency, is scheduled for 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Friday and 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Saturday at a 25,000-square-foot warehouse at Scharbauer Drive and Lamesa Road.

Admission is a $3 donation a person.

"We will convert all of the merchandise that is in this 25,000-square-foot warehouse into cash that we can use for our programs of work at Community and Senior Services," Mrs. Billingsley said.

The thousands of items, from whatnots and hardware to clothing and furniture, are "donated by people who are concerned about the low-income elderly (citizens) in Midland," Mrs. Billingsley said.

Speed limit shouldn't change, poll shows

■ Survey reveals most drivers travel 65 mph or faster on rural interstates.

AUSTIN (AP) — Speed limit signs may be one of the most ignored things on Texas highways, but a new poll shows most Texans do not want the laws changed.

A random survey of more than 1,000 Texas adults found 55 percent want the 65 mph speed limits on rural highways to remain in place, according to The Texas Poll.

The copyright poll, released Saturday, shows another 35 percent urge higher speed limits, while 8 percent want the limits returned to 55 mph and 2 percent do not know what the limits should be.

The telephone poll, conducted Oct. 12-23 by the University of Texas' Office of Survey Research for Harte-Hanks Communications, had a margin of 3 percent either way.

Nine out of 10 adults questioned said they had valid driver's licenses. And even though most opposed raising the speed limits, 65 percent of the drivers polled said they typically drive at least 65 mph. In that group, 55 percent said they drive between 65 mph and 74 mph. Another 9 percent said they usually drive between 75 and 85, and 1 percent said they drive faster than 85 mph on a regular basis.

"I think that's just the way life is in Texas," said George King, head of traffic

Early retirement suggestion triggers visions of fishing village

Ott

Funny how just listening to others discuss their plans for the future can be so enticing that you immediately think, "I'm gonna do the same thing."

You won't, of course, but it does give you something to fantasize about for a few days, or until someone else comes along and reveals an even better plan.

(NOTE: The thing about being a copy cat is that you must secure a variety of friends who have a knack for devising — and articulating — interesting plans for the future.)

In this case, it was taking early retirement and moving to a small fishing village in southern Mexico. Why, I don't know, but those six words — "small fishing village in southern Mexico" — lit a raging fire under me.

The mind began to race.

"You could do that," I lectured the bathroom mirror. "Just don't do something stupid like get married and have a truckload of children. Then be content to live the life of a monk for 10 more years. Invest heavily, but wisely. And save, save, save."

Yes, it could be done.

With several thousand dollars at his disposal, I decided, a man could live quite comfortably down there for a good many years.

And that realization caused the fantasies to flow extra fast. Visions of "The Old Man and the Sea" danced across my brain.

Suddenly, I'm Ernest Hemingway drifting alone in the Pacific Ocean, an ice chest at my feet and a fishing rod in my hand. I'm not really interested in catching anything, but rather just soaking in the blazing sun, which, at this very moment, is turning my skin the color of burnt peanut brittle. As far as the eye can see there is nothing but rippling waves. And dreams. And thoughts.

There is no war. No violence. No racism. No trying to figure out what in the heck is going on in Bosnia.

I'm at peace.

But man cannot spend the rest of his life in a fishing boat, especially if he knows nothing, nor cares anything about, the sport of fishing.

So the fantasies move inland.

Now I'm strolling the streets of the tiny Mexican village, my adopted home, nodding to friends and strangers alike. The small children, all barefooted and wearing brightly colored T-shirts, skip circles around me as though I were a modern-day Pied generally declines with experience.

PAY: Experience level is lowest ever, federation president says

The state uses an incremental scale so that the minimum increases with experience. For example, a teacher with no experience must be paid at least $18,500 annually, compared with $24,980 for a teacher with seven years experience and $30,950 for a teacher with 16 years experience.

Midland teachers with no experience currently are paid about 27 percent above the state minimum, while teachers with seven years experience are only paid about 9 percent above the state-set base.

Midland teachers with 10 to 15 years experience are rewarded with about 3 percent above the lowest amount permitted in Texas. The percentage picks up after 15 years but doesn't compare to newcomers until someone has 30 years experience.

As a result, according to Steve Buck, Lee High School teacher/coach and president of the Midland Federation of Teachers, "When they become good teachers they leave us."

Buck said he believes there needs to be more monetary incentive to keep experienced teachers or even attract some to Midland.

"I think we need to go out and recruit some darn good teachers like we did for darn good coaches," Buck said.

"Experience in the classroom is vital ... This is probably the lowest level of experience we've had," he said.

Board trustee Michael Dobey acknowledged the discrepancy in pay in relation to state minimums. "We want to reverse that. We want to keep the more experienced teachers," he said.

In August — when the MISD board of trustees approved a 4 percent average raise for teachers — more pressing salary concerns were addressed, Dobey said. Raise percentages from step to step (year to year of experience) were a "mess," he said.

All teachers may have been awarded raises previously but the percentage increases year to year were inconsistent, he said. The cause: past school boards doling out across-the-board raises — such as $500 for everyone — which threw percentages off between steps, he said.

"At the beginning we were great, at the end we were great, in the middle we stunk," Dobey said. For example, according to the 1994-95 salary schedule, a teacher going from one to two years experience went from $24,050 to $24,545 — about a 2 percent raise — compared with the step between 10 to 11 years where pay only went from $29,003 to $29,089, which equates to less than a 0.3 percent increase.

The board subsequently budgeted more balance in the schedule.

"We wanted to do two things: even out the steps while at the same time remain competitive with other districts," said Martin, MISD's executive director of business services.

Now that there's more uniformity in the step-to-step raises, the board may — or may not — review pay levels in respect to the minimum state standard.

Dobey said the situation will be taken up by the board in coming years.

Ms. Anderson acknowledged a need to address that aspect of the schedule. But "it means some tough decisions about some teachers getting raises and some not," she said.

Martin took a more business-minded position. "I think the big issue is what funding is available," he said.

Meanwhile, Buck, the teacher representative, expressed concern about funding for salaries just to meet higher state minimums next year.

School board talk about a possible bond election — which Buck generally supports — may have a drawback, he said. A $30 million-plus bond package — for school renovations — may jeopardize teacher salaries, he said.

The only options to keep up with teacher salaries are raising taxes, receiving more money from the state or reducing expenses elsewhere, Buck said.

"The third option is what scares us — cuts. What are we going to cut?" he said. "You can't cut our salary by state law but they could cut our benefits."

Taxpayers likely won't allow taxes to be raised for salaries next August if a tax increase was approved several months before for the bond issue, Buck argued. And there's no guarantee that funds for salary increases will be available otherwise, he said.

Board trustee Dobey had a different perspective on the bond issue in relation to maintaining teacher salaries.

"The bond issue would actually free up operating money to give teachers raises," he said. Operating dollars currently targeted for limited renovations could be used in other areas if a bond issue is approved, he explained.

Furthermore, passage of a bond issue would entitle MISD to extra state funds — $1.25 million for a $25 million bond package for facility improvements and $2.5 million for a $50 million bond package, Dobey said.

OTT: Early retirement fantasies include friendly, foreign folk hero

(From 1B)

Piper. I return their adulation by playfully tossing out handfuls of saltwater taffy. They squeal with delight while fighting over the pieces that fall harmlessly to the ground.

I laugh and continue my walk, dapperly attired in an off-white linen suit, multi-colored Hawaiian shirt and Panama hat, pulled snugly over the left eye. I'm casually twirling a walking cane as a Leon Redbone song plays in my head.

Entering the small, slightly rundown tavern, located at the end of a dirt road near the outskirts of town, large grins and affectionate chants of "hola, senor Gary" greet me. I wave and respond with a chant of my own: "tequila shots for everyone."

More grins and chants result.

I have obviously become a folk hero of sorts, a friendly foreigner who has somehow managed to work his way into the community's inner circle.

Old men with tobacco-stained teeth insist I join them at their table, and we spend the next 45 minutes swapping stories, communicating through an odd mix of broken English and broken Spanish.

But everyone is using the international language ... laughter.

Then, out of the clear blue, I snapped back to reality. Shaking my head slightly, I realized I was still staring into the bathroom mirror. But the more I thought about the early retirement deal the better it sounded. Indeed, I was on the verge of calling a local bank to help me establish an aggressive investment program when another friend called and said, "I'm going to quit my job next week and become a forest ranger."

"Oh, wow," I exclaimed. "That sounds great! I'm going to do the same thing."

And on and on the fantasies went.

DEATHS

Kathleen McGaha

COOPER — Graveside services for Kathleen McGaha are to be 2 p.m. today at Rattan Cemetery with Shanie Carrington officiating. Arrangements are under the direction of Delta Funeral Home.

Ms. McGaha died Friday morning in Midland.

She was born April 2, 1925, in Delta County.

She served in the U.S. Navy during World War II.

Ms. McGaha was a teacher in the Dallas Independent School District for 35 years and lived in Midland the past two years.

Survivors include a brother, Don McGaha of Midland, and several nieces and nephews.

Roy Jones

Services for Roy Jones have been set for 11 a.m. Monday at Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Tommy Potter of First Christian Church officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Jones

Jones died Friday at a local hospital following a sudden illness.

He was born July 7, 1914, in Batesville, Ark.

He moved to Midland with his family in the late 1920s.

Jones was a graduate of Midland High School. He attended North Texas Agricultural College in Arlington.

He married Louise Bryan in Midland on June 9,1940.

Jones worked for his father's construction company, J. Roy Jones Construction.

He enlisted in the U.S. Navy in 1942 and served in the Navy Seebee's in the South Pacific for 27 months. He served in the 73rd Naval Construction Battalion. He was discharged in 1945 and returned to Midland.

Jones then became partners with his father in the construction company. After his father's death in 1952, he took over the family business and changed the name to Roy F. Jones Construction. He operated the company until retirement in 1985.

Jones was a member of the Midland Masonic Lodge 623 AF&AM. He was past worshipful master of that lodge, and past deputy grand master for the Grand Lodge of Texas. He was the past patron for Midland Chapter No. 253 Order of Eastern Star.

Jones was also a member of the Sandhills Rambler R.V. Club, the LaVida Buena Residence Club in Ruidoso, N.M., and a 50-year member of the First Christian Church in Midland.

Survivors include his wife, Louise Bryan Jones of Midland; a son, Robert L. Jones of Dallas; a brother, J.W. Jones of Phoenix, Ariz.; a sister, Opal Rankin of Odessa; a grandson, a great-grandson, six nieces and a nephew.

Mrs. Prather died Saturday at her home.

She was born March 2, 1909, in Ben Hur.

She married Lewis Taylor Prather on Dec. 22, 1928, in Lamesa.

Mrs. Prather moved to Lamesa in 1921 from Limestone County. She was a homemaker and a longtime active member of the Lamesa Church of Christ.

She was preceded in death by her husband on Oct. 29.

Survivors include three sons, Jack Prather of Lamesa, Orville Prather of Odessa, and Ewell Prather of Abilene; three daughters, Verla Strickland of Midland, Estelle Strother of San Angelo, and Lavelle Bronniman of Friona; a sister, Faye Wellborn of Lubbock; 16 grandchildren and 20 great-grandchildren.

Austin Thomas

Services for Austin Scott Thomas are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

The infant died Saturday at his residence.

GARAGE: Fund-raiser to benefit many CSS programs

(From 1B)

The donors are "people who realize that our programs of Meals on Wheels and homebound services are going to serve that low-income elderly group."

Of Midland County's 14,110 citizens over 60, there are approximately 1,750 whose incomes are below the poverty level, according to CSS research.

"Their main needs are food and, then, socialization," Mrs. Billingsley said.

By the end of the year, CSS will have served 160,000 meals in its Meals-on-Wheels program and at the senior-citizen centers and adult day-care centers.

Homebound services for the elderly citizens include "friendly visitors" — volunteers who spend time each week with lonely, aged citizens and who daily reassure them with telephone conversations.

CSS volunteers and hired handymen make vital repairs to senior citizens' houses to make them livable, Mrs. Billingsley said.

"It is only necessity things," such as wheelchair ramps or shower bars for safety measures.

CSS volunteers operate a "grocery express" to bring necessities to homes of the elderly citizens.

Connie Glover, executive director, is cognizant of the "great funding challenges" now confronting CSS and most elderly-nutrition programs across the nation.

"When we consider welfare reform, we must remember that the elderly are not the stereotypical welfare recipient," Mrs. Glover said. "They are often frail, homebound, and unable to work."

Meals-on-Wheels volunteers serve about 500 hot, nutritional meals every day to homebound elderly citizens.

CSS research shows that the average Meals-on-Wheels recipient is a 78-year-old female who has three or more chronic health problems, takes eight or more medications and subsists on an income of $6,000 a year.

During 1995, more than 1,200 volunteers contributed 18,000 hours in the CSS nutrition programs.

Many of those volunteers collected donated items and are categorizing and setting them up for CSS's annual garage sale.

"You feel pretty good about delivering Meals on Wheels," said CSS volunteer Ken Terrell, a retired oil-company district manager. "You worry about them. Some of them are in pretty bad shape. If they don't show up (at home), I've got to go find out, make sure they are not real sick. They are real appreciative (of CSS services)," Terrell said.

Retired geologist William Adam said that his CSS volunteer work allows him to "be doing something useful. This (garage-sale work) is very useful. It benefits Meals on Wheels."

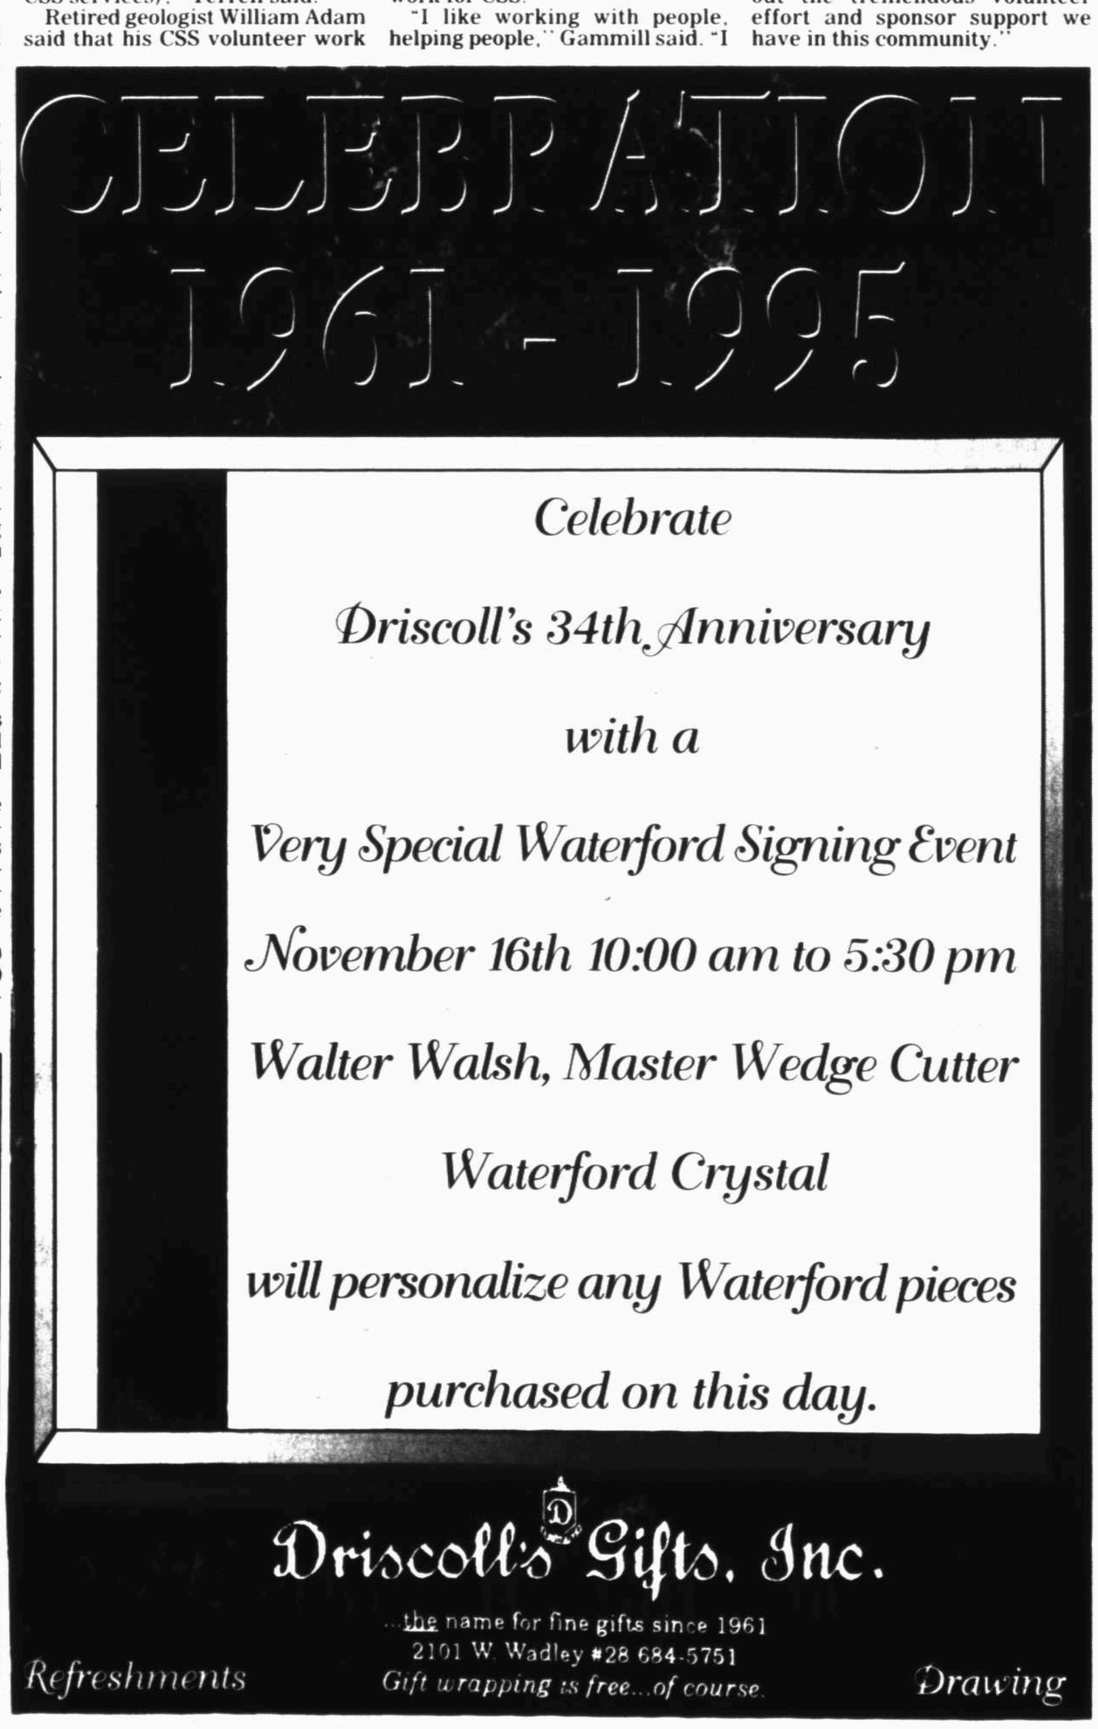

Volunteer Midge Erskine said the garage sale serves a "worthy cause, and they (CSS headquarters) are my neighbors, and they are wonderful neighbors."

Keith Gammill, a 31-year-old resident of the Midland Court Residential Treatment Center, is among fellow residents who are performing community-service work for CSS.

"I like working with people, helping people," Gammill said. "I like the people (CSS volunteers and staff) who I work with here."

CSS Executive Assistant Arleen Armstrong said the agency's staff and volunteers are "looking forward to a very successful sale. There has been a lot of work done by a lot of wonderful people."

"As with any fund-raiser, it doesn't happen overnight," Mrs. Glover said. "It is a year-long process with no down time. Thousands of volunteer hours are spent on the sale. We could not do it without the tremendous volunteer effort and sponsor support we have in this community."

BATTLE: Angels' staff supports Seator in fight for life

(From 1B)

Bob Hards, voice of the Angels for five years, interviewed for his position with the ball club the same day Seator interviewed for his. The two have become close friends since that day.

"For someone his age to be stricken with what he is stricken with ... it just shows you that life isn't always fair," Hards said. "His courage to go through what he has gone through amazes me. His recuperative powers are unbelievable. When he had his second operation in late July it was on a Saturday, and he was back at the ballpark on Tuesday or Wednesday night."

Seator, who said he wouldn't have been able to put up the fight he has if it weren't for the support of the people in West Texas, first realized something was wrong in September 1994. After returning from a trip, he thought he had contracted food poisoning. But the symptoms wouldn't go away and tests were ordered. A football-sized tumor was found lodged adjacent to his left kidney. His first round of chemotherapy began shortly after the surgery and his cancer then went into remission.

In July of this year, Seator fell ill again and a second tumor was discovered on his liver. Following the discovery of the second tumor, the news from his doctors was not laced with the type of optimism Seator preferred to hear. In fact, Hards said, Seator didn't take the news well at all.

"Toward the end of the baseball season he was basically told they were not at all optimistic after they discovered the latest cancer," Hards recalled. "I remember sitting in the Angels' broadcast booth one night after he had heard the news ... it made him angry that he was told his odds weren't really good. Combine that with his natural energy level — he has a wonderfully optimistic energy level — and it really angered him not to hear any optimism, and it honked him off. This gets back to his refusal to let it beat him."

Seator recalled the two options he was given coming off the July surgery: "I could try experimental treatments, or I could make myself as comfortable as possible for the time I had left to fight something I couldn't beat.

"Being 26 years old with basically my entire life ahead of me, it was basically a no-brainer to take the route I took."

That no-brainer was more extensive chemotherapy — a month's worth of chemotherapy at Houston's M.D. Anderson Hospital, one of the most renowned cancer treatment facilities in the world. Seator, so determined to beat the disease and to lead a normal life, agreed to the extensive chemo — on one condition.

"He told the folks at M.D. Anderson that he'd be glad to come in for the last round of chemo, but that they'd have to bend their schedule this time so he could be back in time to announce the Midland Lee-Odessa Permian game," said Hards, who works with Seator in the radio broadcast booth during the high school football season. "He told the world's largest cancer treatment center they had to bend their schedule. And sure enough he wrapped up chemo the night before and his flight left Houston at six o'clock the Friday morning of the Lee-Permian game."

'Being 26 years old with basically my entire life ahead of me, it was basically a no-brainer to take the route I took.'

— Scott Seator

With the exception of J.D. Ramirez, the team's second baseman last year, not a lot of the players were aware of Seator's condition. Ramirez, though, had become a friend of Seator's and once even went straight to the hospital to visit Seator on the same day the team returned to town following one of its lengthy road trips.

All of the Angels' staff members have been touched by Seator's illness and his courageous battle. General manager Monty Hoppel continues to be almost awed by Seator's attitude.

"What amazes me is his dedication to his job," Hoppel said. "As a friend and a boss, he'll say to me, 'I've got to run and do some chemo,' and he's back when it's over. It's never, 'I've got to take this day off because of chemo.' He'll work up until the minute he leaves and he's working the minute he gets back. He'll come in when he's not feeling good. He has a job to do but he knows his No. 1 goal is to beat the cancer."

So much of that work deals directly with children, which may be one of the reasons he refuses to let the cancer keep him from his work.

"One of the things I enjoy about baseball, is when it comes to sports, you can have an amazing impact on kids," Seator said. "And it's not fair if you don't take advantage of having a positive impact on children."

Seator, Juice the Moose and the Angels' front office staff in January will introduce Juice's Book Buddies, a program that provides an added incentive for school children to read books over and above what is required of them at school. If a child completes 10 books in addition to school reading, he or she will receive four passes to an Angels game in 1996.

Until the unveiling of that program, Seator will continue to do the three things he does best: battle cancer, go to work and enjoy life.

"He's a very good friend, but I've gained a whole new respect for him as a person," Hards said. "Maybe one of the highest compliments I can pay to him is, if he wasn't wearing that baseball cap to cover up his loss of hair because of the chemo, I'd forget he's even sick. It's almost hard to remember he has this. He accepts what has happened to him but he doesn't accept that there's no way out."

Continuing his life as if he isn't sick, Seator said, is really the only way to handle the situation.

"By giving up and allowing it to control your life, you're giving in to what it is you're fighting, and that would be the same as stopping the fight."

SURVEY: Speed limit shouldn't rise, Texas poll shows

safety enforcement for the Texas Department of Public Safety. He was quoted in an Austin American-Statesman story published Saturday.

"Motorists know the speed limit, but there is always a fudge factor there," he said.

Questions about raising the speed limit have been spurred by Congressional consideration of a plan to dump the 21-year-old federal speed limits: 55 mph on urban interstate highways and 65 mph on rural interstates. The plan is pending in a Senate-House conference committee and would turn over the responsibility for setting interstate speed limits to individual states.

In Texas, cities would be allowed to set the limits in their jurisdictions. Those limits would be subject to review by the Texas Transportation Commission.

Studies from the Texas Department of Transportation have recommended 70 mph limits on rural stretches of interstates near Austin, San Antonio and Houston.

"I think there definitely is a concern about the disrespect for the speed limit as well as many differing opinions on how to get that respect back," said Randall Dillard, a spokesman for the Transportation Department. "Setting a speed limit at a more reasonable level may be one way of doing that."

But Rob Harrison, associate director of the UT Center for Transportation Research, said there will be more severe accidents if speed limits are raised.

"You certainly would want enforcement to be much stricter," he said.

But Phil Ward, president of USA Training Co. Inc., the state's largest drivers' training company, said safe drivers keep up with the flow of traffic, even if that means speeding.

"I would tell my students that if it ever comes down to a choice of following the law versus maintaining your safety, choose safety all the time," he said.

Walking tour set

BIG SPRING — Free walking tours through downtown Big Spring are being offered through the end of the year. The tours begin at the Heritage Museum, 510 Scurry St., at 2 p.m.

Tour guides will recount the town's history and legends including stories of the arrival of British nobility, cattle barons, cowboys, saloons, mercantile stores and the early railroad.

The tour will include some of downtown's restored buildings.

For more information or weather cancellations call the museum, 1-915-267-8255.

Paintings displayed

The oil paintings of Jerry Romine are on display in the lobby of Midland American Bank, 401 W. Texas Ave., this month.

Romine is an active member of the Midland Palette Club and the Midland Art Association. He specializes in realistic paintings of wildlife, seascapes, landscapes, florals and in portraits.

One of his teachers, Jerry Fugere of Ruidoso, N.M., will be doing a demonstration and workshop at 9 a.m. Tuesday at the Midland Palette Club, 907 W. Wadley Ave.

Works for sale

The works of Ann Elise McCoy are on display and for sale in the gallery of Cole Theatre, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., through the run of "It Runs in the Family," which closes Nov. 25.

Ms. McCoy, a Midland artist, paints in oil and watercolor. The showing and sale are sponsored by ACT IX, the women's auxiliary organization for Midland Community Theatre.

Musical planned

ODESSA — The musical revue "Beehive!" is the final production in Center Stage Theatre's first season.

The show begins with music by such popular groups as the Shirelles and the Chiffons and continues through the 1960s with Connie Francis, Leslie Gore, Tina Turner, The Supremes, Janis Joplin and others. Audience involvement is encouraged.

Cast members include Patsy Allen, Dana Ritter, Jo Richards, Kimberly Price, Laura Englert, Candice Voake and Cindy Stewart.

Opening night is Nov. 24. The show will run Nov. 25, 30, Dec. 1-2, 7-9, 14-16. For more information call 1-915-335-8881. The theater is located at 1617 E. 8th St.

ODESSSA — Grammy Award-winning entertainer Julio Iglesias performs Nov. 28 at Ector County Coliseum

Tickets are on sale at Ector County Coliseum. His West Texas performance is sponsored by K-LITE 100.3, KWES 9 TV, The Odessa American and KMRK.

Car art displayed

"Painted Wheels: Cars and Art" will be on view through Nov. 30 at Gallery 1114.

The show features the work of Midlander Travis Beckham and Polly Jackson and Jane Shea, both of Santa Fe, N.M.

Ms. Shea paints small, pristine car portraits; Ms. Jackson, who grew up in Midland, captures the character of post-war classics; and Beckham uses cars in paintings of atmosphere and expression.

Show to close

A showing of works by the "Southwest Impressionists" closes Friday at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library.

Artists whose works are being shown and are for sale include Mary Rasmussen, Charles N. Pruitt, Doris Spires and Don L. Parks. The four formed the Southwest Impressionists nine years ago. Each specializes in plein air painting — painting outdoors on location.

For more information call 682-5785.

RELIGION IN BRIEF

Events scheduled

Cuthbert Avenue Baptist Church has several special events in the upcoming weeks.

Bible Sunday will be Nov. 26 and an offering will be taken for the American Bible Society, which is in the process of buying Bibles for China.

Then, Dec. 2 will be the Lottie Moon Auction to support Baptist missionary work around the world. Crafts in wood, glass and ceramics as well as other handmade items and baked goods will be auctioned at 7 p.m. Dec. 2 at the church, 3308 W. Cuthbert Ave.

On Dec. 10, the church will hold its annual Holiday Dinner.

To arrange transportation to service or events at the church call 694-1645 on Saturday afternoons.

Pilot program lets residents be judge, jury to offenders

AUSTIN (AP) — A new pilot program here will allow some residents to decide the punishment for young people who commit minor criminal offenses.

Residents near Bedichek Middle School in south Austin will start in the program in December. They will interview accused youths and their parents to determine what — if any — punishments are needed.

"'Our goal is to make the neighborhood accountable for the offender and the offender accountable to the neighborhood," Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle told the Austin American-Statesman in Saturday's editions.

Under the idea, young first-time offenders accused of such offenses as alcohol possession, fist fights or vandalism will be asked to appear before a panel of parents to talk about the offense and possible punishments.

Students who do not participate would continue to be considered for criminal prosecution if the offense warranted, Earle said.

Earle said offenses involving weapons or serious injuries would not go before the residents' panel.

City and county officials are backing the idea, and training sessions for interested parents have been scheduled. Students at the middle school also back the program, but some see potential drawbacks.

Leticia Mendoza, 13, said some parents of students brought before the panel could become angry with adults on the board. She said that could cause tensions in neighborhood.

And eighth-grader April Childress said some students will face threats of criminal prosecution because their parents will not get involved or carry heavy workloads.

Midland educators to honor schools' support personnel

From Staff Reports

Education support personnel, including teacher assistants, school bus drivers, custodians, cafeteria workers, and secretaries, will be honored Wednesday by the Midland Educators Association.

"We are honoring people who work to supply support to the teachers and students of the Midland Independent School District," said Sue Saunders, MEA president. "These are the people who work to make school a pleasant place."

Mayor Bobby Burns will read a proclamation honoring education support personnel.

Nationwide study targets child abductors

By Jean Pagel
Associated Press

VERNON — Serenity seems to take root at the elms and cottonwoods at a quiet fishing hole that feeds the Pease River north of town.

But it is here — at a bridge over the creek — where vile memories return to haunt Wilbarger County Sheriff David Quisenberry.

"Every time I cross it. Every time," Quisenberry said. "I even look down to the spot where we drug him up."

The body of Bradley Eugene Gilbert surfaced in these waters in March 1985, a few months after the Chillicothe 6-year-old disappeared while playing outside. His throat had been cut.

Police found a few leads but never solved the case.

Their best witness? Bradley's 4-year-old brother. Quisenberry said authorities who hypnotized the youngster gleaned just one coherent clue: "Man got Bubba."

Such facts about the Nov. 10, 1984, abduction of Bradley Gilbert are being assimilated into a federally funded study targeting similar crimes.

The attorney general's office in Washington state is collecting data nationwide from more than 600 homicides of abducted children. About 45 of those cases stem from Texas.

Bob Keppel, the AG's chief criminal investigator in Seattle, said the project aims to identify which investigative procedures work best. Directors of the project hope to turn their analysis into a training manual for law enforcement agencies, he said.

Keppel called murder investigation "one of the most unresearched areas in the criminal field" and said child slayings are especially difficult.

"Every time a child murder happens ... police have got a big mess on their hands because it's a higher profile," Keppel said. "There is a lot more pressure on the police to solve that murder because the specter of a child killer running around isn't what the public likes."

The U.S. Justice Department gave $450,000 for the three-year study, now in its final year.

Keppel said the Washington AG's office has sent out its own personnel and retired police officers to scout out data on each case in the study.

The investigator who went to Vernon in April saw a case file on Bradley Gilbert that contains newspaper clippings, an autopsy report and a flier promoting a $1,000 reward for his return.

"They (the family) thought he would turn up alive. They were waiting for maybe a ransom note or a telephone call," said Quisenberry, who was a sheriff's deputy back when Bradley vanished.

The boy had been playing between his aunt's house and a car wash near U.S. 287 in Chillicothe.

Quisenberry speculates that sexual assault was the motive.

Officials review reports of hazing ban violations

FORT WORTH (AP) — A sorority has violated Texas Christian University's hazing ban, according to school administrators who are also reviewing activities at two fraternities.

At least one fraternity hazing accusation has resulted in a complaint to law officers, according to TCU.

Chi Omega, the sorority, has appealed the finding against it.

Don Mills, TCU vice chancellor for student affairs, declined to say what sanction had been imposed because it is being appealed.

But he called the Chi Omega episode "really minor." The university has not released details of any accusations, according to the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

University officials said both fraternities under review, Phi Kappa Sigma and Sigma Alpha Epsilon, have been suspended from TCU within the past 11 years for hazing.

Representatives of the organizations and university officials said no injuries have been reported this semester. But the Phi Kappa Sigma allegation resulted in a complaint to TCU police on Oct. 27.

"We believe hazing can range from nothing more than public embarrassment all the way to serious kinds of things (such as) a chapter doing physical harm to their pledges," said Mills, adding that the university regards any such accusation as serious.

But Kristen Brazzel, Chi Omega president, said that active members and pledges involved in the events criticized by TCU "reflected on it as fun" rather than as hazing.

She added that the sorority does not condone hazing.

Mills said the Chi Omega and Sigma Alpha Epsilon cases are a month or more old, but the Phi Kappa Sigma accusation was made more recently.

The university has not reached a decision in the Sigma Alpha Epsilon case and the Phi Kappa Sigma investigation is in the early stages, Mills said.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon has suspended several members from activities for a semester or more because of rule violations, chapter President K.C. Alvano said.

He said TCU suspended Sigma Alpha Epsilon in 1984 for hazing but reinstated in 1986.

"We are getting conflicting information" about the Phi Kappa Sigma case, said Mills.

Christopher Collier, director of chapter services with Phi Kappa Sigma International, said the fraternity "in no way condones hazing."

TCU kicked the Phi Kappa Sigma chapter off campus in 1989 after the group's national headquarters lifted its charter because of a hazing incident. The fraternity rechartered the chapter in 1992.

Texas travel map sparks wanderlust, desire to see new places

By Rick Smith
San Angelo Standard-Times

SAN ANGELO — I unfold my crisp, cracking, brand-new "Texas Official Travel Map."

It smells exotic and eager. Ready to roam.

Last year's map rests in a crumbled wad, buried beneath junk in my camera bag. It smells like old film and stale M&Ms. Used up. Tired.

But the new map smells like adventure. Fresh and exciting.

And it practically springs open, not like the old map, which is dog eared and dead tired.

The old map's smudged with everything from barbecue sauce (from the time it served as an impromptu table cloth on a roadside picnic table) to coffee spills.

That's the power maps have. A minute ago, I'd never heard of Roaring Springs. Now, I want to hop in my car, steer north way past Big Spring and visit the little Panhandle town on the black line between Whiteflat and Dickens.

The eye wanders over to Old Glory. I've never been there, either, but can picture a flag waving on a pole at the city (town?) limits.

I have traveled some of the map's squiggles, and I trace the roads on the map like words from a favorite poem: Highway 217, an arrow-straight strip near Amarillo that suddenly drops into Palo Duro Canyon; Highway 5, a scenic little series of small town Main streets that connects Sherman and Dallas; Highway 385, the lonely, lovely homestretch down into Big Bend National Park.

A town called Telephone. Way up in Northeast Texas, almost on the Red River. I've been there. Seeing the small dot on the map reminds me of fall along the river, leaves changing on the big pecans. The peanut harvest.

Egypt. I've never been to the tiny blink on the map, located just east and south of Houston. My mind conjures up a miniature pyramid on the town square.

I throw the map (as flat and unfoldable as a sheet of plywood) onto the front seat and drive east. Down the double red line of Highway 67, through Rowena, Miles and Ballinger. Fork onto 83, through Hatchel and Winters. East again on 1770. North on 382.

Maps only tell so much.

On the map, 382 runs dull and straight, except for a little dogleg between Crews and Lawn.

The map doesn't show how 382 dips and curves and climbs.

Doesn't show how it swings up and over Ranger Peak. I pause to read the historical markers (Texas Rangers built an Indian lookout camp on the peak) and to enjoy the view. A homemade whirly-gig (tin can lid for a tailpiece, handcarved wooden propeller) whirls in the wind, wired to the top of a fence post.

The map doesn't show the Dewey Cemetery on the other side of the peak. Doesn't show the funeral home awning fluttering in the breeze or a lone pickup parked by a freshly filled grave. Or a man standing there at solemn attention.

Doesn't show clothes flapping on a line behind a farmhouse down the road.

Doesn't show the yellow school buses on the road or the green tractors in the field or round bales of hay scattered across the fields.

My time — and road — run out at Lawn. Time to turn around. Head for home.

But the road on the map goes on. To Oplin and Cottonwood. Rising Star and Sipe Springs. Indian Gap and Ireland.

On to Egypt.

On to Roaring Springs.

On and on and on.

Birdwatching hobby enjoys increasing popularity, experts say

By Pauline Arrillaga
Associated Press

LAGUNA ATASCOSA NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE (AP) — Binoculars dangling from his neck and a spotting scope propped heavily on his shoulder, Tom Bormann takes a water break before embarking on another forest-lined trail.

Red-faced and sweaty, Bormann guzzles mineral water as he flips open a worn field guide and pulls out an index card, proudly displaying the eight new species of birds he's spotted while in the Rio Grande Valley.

"You can get more birds in the state of Texas than almost any other state. It's a top 10 spot on anybody's list," says Bormann, a St. Louis, Mo., insurance salesman on his second bird-watching trip to South Texas.

Bormann is proof: Birding is booming.

"It's an addiction. It is considered the fastest-growing hobby in North America," said Tom Pincelli, one of the creators of the Rio Grande Valley Birding Festival, which began Wednesday and runs through today.

A 1992 report by the Department of the Interior found that 63 million Americans have expressed an interest in birds, and 30 million people travel expressly for wildlife viewing.

The American Birding Association in Colorado Springs, Colo., estimates birdwatchers spend $18 billion annually on travel and equipment.

"It's a really good way for people to commune with the out-of-doors," said Greg Butcher, executive director of the organization, which has grown from 6,000 members to 16,000 in five years.

"A lot of people get stuck inside with office jobs and indoor tasks, and they're looking for a good excuse to get outside," Butcher said.

About 2,000 birders from 41 states and Canada have flocked to the Rio Grande Valley festival, which doubled in attendance and length in just its second year.

> 'It's a really good way for people to commune with the out-of-doors.'
> — Greg Butcher, executive director of the American Birding Association

Birders of all levels of experience can learn everything from how to identify a bird by its sound to how to landscape to attract feathered friends.

But the biggest draw are the field trips to some of the best bird-watching spots in the country, where birders can add to their list of species.

"A lot of these birds that are rare in other parts of the United States you can see just walking around neighborhoods here," said Nancy Millar, a Harlingen Chamber of Commerce official who started the festival last year.

Texas is the No. 1 North American destination for birders, according to the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department. More than 100,000 people travel annually to the Valley's three primary nature preserves.

The region's popularity is due to the 465 different species of birds found here, at least 34 of which are rare.

"A lot of these species down here you can't get anywhere else in the United States," said Joe Hammond of Oxford, Ohio, who is attending the festival with his wife, Cathy.

South Texans have begun to take note of their valuable commodity. Ranchers are starting to open their properties to birdwatchers as well as hunters, and tour companies have added bird-watching excursions.

"It's not that birding hasn't been popular, it's that more and more people are realizing the popularity of it," Ms. Millar said. "A lot of people haven't realized until very recently that there are more ways to affect the economic climate of the area than just building buildings."

Last year, the festival brought $266,000 to the Valley. The total economic impact from this year's event is an estimated $1.5 million, Ms. Millar said.

The Harlingen Chamber of Commerce estimates that $22.5 million is spent annually on bird-watching in the region. The total economic impact is about $79 million.

Sanborn's Viva Tours in McAllen began giving birding tours three years ago, and bookings have doubled every year, said tour guide Hugh Crane.

"People come from all over the world to the Valley. It's good for we who are in the tour business and the businesses where they stay and the businesses where they eat," Crane said. "It all adds up."

State prisons chairman kills hiring contract proposal

HOUSTON (AP) — The state prisons chairman has squelched a plan that would have allowed hiring the system's top construction manager as a consultant after he retires.

Allan B. Polunsky, chairman of the Texas Board of Criminal Justice, also is looking into complaints that J.B. Cole, the construction manager, awarded contracts to a company he may work for when he retires later this year.

On Friday, Polunsky halted the awarding of any new prison construction management contracts.

An official with 3D/International, the Houston-based company Cole supposedly would work for, said he knew of no plans to hire Cole.

Cole could not be reached for comment Saturday by The Associated Press. Prison system spokesman Glen Castlebury said the accusations of impropriety in the awarding of contracts are "malicious."

"J.B. Cole has just completed what no other person in construction or the prison business has ever accomplished," Castlebury said. "And that is completing the largest prison construction program in history at one-half the national cost."

Castlebury said the Texas Department of Criminal Justice is not concerned about what Cole does he retires.

"When that man walks out the door Dec. 31, he's a free man ... whose integrity has never been questioned."

Polunsky said he pulled the proposed contract with Cole off the board's agenda for its meeting next week after board member Rufus H. Duncan of Lufkin and the board's attorney raised questions about the legality of the contract.

Polunsky also said he did not like the fact that TDCJ had not sought proposals from other experts who might be interested in becoming construction consultants.

The proposed contract would have paid Cole, who was hired in 1993 at $150,000 a year to supervise TDCJ's massive prison construction program, a minimum of $75,000 a year as an engineering consultant.

"I just didn't feel comfortable entering into this contract," Polunsky said.

The board's lawyer, Carl Reynolds, said the proposal also runs afoul of a rider in the appropriations bill that prohibits TDCJ from spending any funds on contracts with former employees within a year of leaving the department.

Polunsky said he also directed Wayne Scott, who last month was named executive director of TDCJ, to hold up awarding any more construction management contracts while Cole is on the payroll.

The temporary halt, said Polunsky, came after a construction management company complained that Cole had given a large share of the department's construction contracts to 3D/I and would go to work for the company after he retires.

"I just want to make sure the whole process was pristine," Polunsky said.

Dallas rabbi to become leader of college-institute, center of Reform Judaism

DALLAS (AP) — Rabbi Sheldon Zimmerman, a descendant of a rabbinical dynasty and prominent national leader of the Reform movement, isn't easily overwhelmed.

But his pending installment as president of Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, his alma mater, is proving quite humbling.

Zimmerman, 53, replaces Dr. Alfred Gottschalk, who will become chancellor after heading HUC-JIR for 25 years. The college-institute, with campuses in Cincinnati, Los Angeles, New York and Jerusalem, is the academic and professional leadership development center of Reform Judaism.

The board of governors ratified his selection on Oct. 23. Zimmerman will fulfill his obligations at Temple Emanu-El in Dallas through May and take over at the college beginning the next academic year.

"These are my mentors. These are my teachers. These are the men and women who helped create me," Zimmerman said recently. "And now to think even that I would be guiding its destiny into the next century and millennium is mind-blowing."

Although modestly calling himself a non-academician, Zimmerman has a long resume as a lecturer in liturgy, rabbinics and theology. He currently is adjunct professor at Southern Methodist University's Perkins Theological Seminary.

But 23 years in the congregational rabbinate have molded his career. He served at Central Synagogue in New York City for 13 years before coming to Temple Emanu-El, where he is senior rabbi at one of the country's five largest Reform congregations.

'These are my mentors. These are my teachers. These are the men and women who helped create me. And now to think even that I would be guiding its destiny into the next century and millenium is mind-blowing.'

— Rabbi Sheldon Zimmerman

Zimmerman said he has found that synagogues have lost touch with American Jews. In that regard, he hopes to guide the institute in training rabbis to make the temple a place that provides more than just religious services and Jewish education for children.

Synagogues must offer programs for seniors and young people, premarital counseling, grief support, outreach to new Jewish community members and life cycle celebrations, among other services, he said.

Additionally, Zimmerman says he intends to alter the mold of the common perception of a rabbi. Rabbis may serve entire careers at college campuses, community centers, charitable organizations or as hospital chaplains, said Zimmerman, who recently completed a two-year term as president of the 1,700-member Central Conference of American Rabbis.

"Your rabbinate is not narrowly defined anymore. Rabbinate no longer means, 'I've got to go out of this place and I've got to serve a congregation and then maybe go to a bigger congregation,'" he said.

He also envisions a new type of rabbinical education, breaking from strict emphasis on preaching and teaching classes. For example, a Jewish leader could focus on running the "caring side of the congregation," counseling the elderly or people in grief.

That person might want to spend more of rabbinical training at work in a hospital or with health professionals, Zimmerman said.

"All kinds of possibilities emerge," he said. "And one is not more authentic than the other. It's just a way of helping people use their personal gifts in creating the new synagogue and the new Jewish community."

Born in Toronto, Zimmerman is an 11th generation rabbi. The family can trace its lineage to Rabbi Pinchas of Koretz, a colleague of the founder of the Chassidic movement in the early 1700s. Zimmerman's son, Brian, is a rabbi at Temple Beth Ami in Rockville, Md.

Still, before he died, Zimmerman's grandfather advised him against becoming a rabbi. And he grappled with whether it was his calling.

"It was part of my life, I mean, it was part of the fabric of who I was," he said of his heritage. "But it was not a sure thing."

He ultimately made the choice while pursuing a master's degree in philosophy. But had God given him a richer voice, he might have become a cantor.

"That, I guess, (or) a good quarterback," he joked.

Rabbi Brian Zimmerman acknowledges that he and his father share "a connectedness to a tradition" by virtue of the family's history. But Sheldon Zimmerman also will bring to HUC-JIR an accomplished career in the pulpit rabbinate, a profound respect for the institution and "a real sense of study and spirituality," his son said.

What he loses by leaving Dallas, the elder Zimmerman said, is what has become the most fulfilling aspect of his vocation.

"Being a part of people's lives. Being with them in their moments of greatest need as well as their moments of greatest joy. That human encounter is godlike," he said.

Zimmerman will be departing a temple where he is beloved and a city where he is a respected and influential religious leader. He likens his situation to "Moses' reality."

After Moses guided Israel out of Egypt and through the desert, he was too old to enter the Promised Land. But God let him glimpse it.

Cargo transports to increase with city's new airport, consultant says

AUSTIN (AP) — Air cargo transports will double over the next decade after the service is moved to the city's new Austin-Bergstrom Airport, according to a consultant.

Ray Keiser, the California consultant, says cargo transports in Austin will grow 8.5 percent a year through the end of the decade. That would be higher than the national average cargo increase of 6.7 percent, the Austin American-Statesman reported in Saturday's editions.

Keiser was paid $50,000 by the Austin CargoPort development group, one of two developers pushing for cargo terminal buildings at the north end of the new airport.

Alan Graham, a CargoPort partner, said the study will help the group to raise $20 million for a 200,000 square-foot terminal complex.

Keiser said Austin's expanding high-tech industrial base will fuel the cargo shipment increases. He also said the new airport's long runways and its capacity for heavy loads also will attract more cargo traffic.

Cargo traffic will be moved from the Robert Mueller Municipal Airport to the new airport by next September, city officials have said. That would be about two years before passenger traffic is expected to begin at Austin-Bergstrom.

Christian Coalition leader invites Catholics, Hispanics to join group

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The head of the Christian Coalition is courting Hispanic and Catholic voters to the conservative movement.

Executive Director Ralph Reed, attending the coalition's state convention in San Antonio on Saturday, said he wants to urge followers to "build bridges" with all Christians, not just those who are Anglos.

"What we in the pro-family movement have felt is that, for too long, we've had our feet planted firmly in the Republican Party," Reed told the San Antonio Express-News for its Saturday editions.

Reed said the coalition hopes to appeal to other ethnic minorities to embrace its political agenda.

The Christian Coalition, founded in 1989 by television evangelist Pat Robertson after his failed attempt to win the 1988 Republican nomination for president, has about 1.7 million members across the nation.

Although the coalition does not endorse political candidates or parties, its focus is on restoring prayer in schools and opposing abortion.

The coalition's financial support and backing have been credited with helping deliver Republican majorities last November in the U.S. House and Senate.

For that momentum to continue, and because he feels it is the morally correct thing to do, he said, Reed now is "casting a wider net."

It took centuries for different religious denominations and races to become estranged, Reed said, acknowledging that it will take time to heal those wounds.

"Bridging that chasm is not going to happen overnight," he said.

Lydia Camarillo, executive director of Southwest Voter Registration Education Project, an organization that teaches Hispanic Americans about politics, said she was aware of the coalition's quest for diversity.

"The Latino community is absolutely a market they are interested in," she said.

But Ms. Camarillo said Hispanics as a whole have diverse political and religious views.

"We may be supportive of the pro-choice or pro-life (movements). You can't pigeonhole us in one box, and if they think that's what they're going to find, it is a mistake," she said.

National, state organizations train women for political candidacies

AUSTIN (AP) — More women's voices are needed in the political arena, but not enough know how to run for office or how to run a successful campaign, a national political trainer says.

Molly Pratts, a volunteer for the National Women's Political Caucus, joined organizers from the Texas and Austin Women's Political Caucuses Saturday at a training session for potential candidates from the state.

She said women have a lot to offer at all levels of politics, but must first know how to get elected.

"I think its really important for women to enter the political process," Ms. Pratt said. "But I think its even more important that when they enter, they run viable campaigns.

"Win or lose, if you can run a viable campaign you not only move yourself forward in terms of your chances if you want to seek office again, but you also establish a level of credibility for all women and that's real important," she said.

The political seminar on the University of Texas campus focused on organizing and running campaigns, forming clear political messages and getting those ideas to voters.

Louri O'Leary Whiting, an Austin resident, said she is considering a run for office and gained some good ideas.

"It has helped me learn exactly what it takes to run a political campaign," she said, adding that she has not decided what office to seek.

Ms. Pratt said a key question for women and men to ask themselves before taking on a campaign is what the job is and how they qualify for it.

"Do your homework, do your research, understand what it is going to take from you — being committed and willing to raise money, being willing and committed to going out and talking to people about the issues and putting yourself forward," she said. "A political campaign is something you need to approach in a very professional and organized manner."

Ms. Pratt said the political system remains dominated by men, and the election process remains less critical of men than of women. She said that intensifies the reason for women candidates to be organized and professional.

"There's not that good old boy network out there for women," she said.

First-term Bexar County Judge Karen Crouch said women have to work twice as hard to accomplish as much as men. And she said part of the reason is there are fewer experienced political women to help them.

"Women are breaking ground and breaking into the glass ceiling, but they are not there in the same numbers as men," she said.

In Texas, women hold four of 31 Senate seats and 29 of 150 House seats. Three women represent Texas in Congress, including Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison of Dallas.

Judge orders official to wear electric monitor

McALLEN (AP) — A federal magistrate placed one of six defendants in the Hidalgo County corruption case under house arrest after evidence surfaced of a conspiracy to tamper with a prosecution witness, The Monitor reported Saturday.

Suspended county Drainage District No. 1 Manager Joaquin Cerda was ordered to wear an electronic monitoring device, often described as an ankle bracelet, after a series of closed-door meetings between federal prosecutors and defense attorneys, the newspaper reported in a copyright article in Saturday's editions.

Cerda will be allowed out of his house only to attend his trial, the newspaper reported. Meanwhile, another arrest has been made in connection with the ongoing bid-rigging trial.

Johnny Hidalgo of Edinburg, a 36-year-old former Cerda employee, was arrested by FBI agents for obstruction of justice, according to Hidalgo County Jail records. He was being held without bond on Saturday.

The Monitor quoted an unidentified source as saying tape recordings exist that show a conspiracy to compromise a prosecution witness who testified against Cerda.

Federal prosecutors and defense attorneys declined comment, citing a gag order by U.S. District Judge Ricardo Hinojosa.

Asked if the court actions had to do with the reports of witness tampering, Cerda's attorney Ciro Nava said: "I don't think so. We have no comment at this time."

Meanwhile, Hinojosa postponed the beginning of defense testimony and called off scheduled court proceedings for Saturday.

This is not the first time Hidalgo's name has come up in relation to the trial.

Ramiro Gonzalez, the county's former purchasing agent and star witness for the government, told jurors he once gave Hidalgo a $100 bill "for no particular reason."

A Federal Express mail form shows that controversial fuel systems the drainage district bought in 1993 were sent addressed to Hidalgo at the maintenance shop. Gonzalez testified the tanks netted a $50,000 profit from which he paid out bribes.

Hidalgo, who worked closely with Cerda, was fired from the drainage district in August of this year. Hidalgo claimed he was fired for political reasons.

Snail expert hopes to slide into import escargot market with fresh produce

By Susan Hightower
Associated Press

ADDISON (AP) — Richard Fullington wants his succulent snails to spread to dinner plates around the United States. Trouble is, he may have to negotiate his way across an industry slime trail to do it.

Fullington, one of only a handful of malacologists — snail experts — in this country, started Escargot International Inc. in February after retiring from 25 years with the Dallas Museum of Natural History.

The Chisholm Trail it ain't. But he has visions of cutting into an estimated $70-85 million wholesale annual import escargot market by pioneering large-scale snail ranching.

"Over the years, snails have really been good to me and for me," said Fullington, wearing a red tie decorated with yellow snails and green lettuce.

"Here's an absolutely brand-new deal, nobody's doing it, nobody. The challenge of that really appealed to me, and of course hopefully we're going to make some money along the way," he said.

Chefs at the white-tablecloth restaurants now serving his fresh escargot agree that the taste and tender, less rubbery texture are a great improvement over the canned snails generally offered.

Chef Bruce McMillian at Anthony's in Houston said he has gotten a good reception topping pasta and fish with Fullington's escargot, while Jason's in New Orleans sells "a ton" of escargot appetizers pan-seared in garlic butter, owner Jason McDonald said.

"It's exceptional," McDonald said. "This is the first time that I've ever seen them fresh."

Gene Watkins, owner of Escargormet in Exeter, Calif., may be the only other person in the country tackling a similar enterprise.

Watkins, who has been in the business for eight years, said he shipped 143,000 snails, for roughly $40,000 in sales, to U.S. restaurants in 1993 and has grown since. Watkins also has developed three flavors of marinated snail meat called Campfire Escargot that people can heat and eat at home in 15 minutes.

But Fullington, 53, has bigger dreams for "the noble escargot," as a company brochure calls the little Helix aspersa, which can be found in many backyards across Texas.

The company won't disclose current numbers, but Escargot International said it ultimately expects to be able to produce at least 1 million pounds of fresh escargot a year.

For now, the company is struggling to keep up with the interest created at a Dallas food show in June, Fullington said.

"The demand was instantaneous. And the truth of the matter, we've been running trying to play catchup given the resources, particularly financial, that we've had," he said.

Escargot International, principally owned by Fullington and his wife, is considering a private equity offering or debt financing, and doesn't expect to be profitable for awhile.

Headquarters are a small, almost completely unfurnished office in this north Dallas suburb. At an industrial kitchen in the back, snails are kept in containers before they are blanched in a big kettle for four minutes, which kills them and loosens the muscle holding them in the shell.

Workers use toothpicks to poke, twist and shuck the whole meat from its shell, dropping it into colanders. The fresh meat is processed, cold vacuum-packed, boxed and shipped to restaurants, $30 per one-pound bag of about 100 snails.

Reaching this stage hasn't been easy. Although the company is secretive about details, Fullington said he has developed a new dry feed and container for raising snails that is soil-free and organic. The actual "ranch," now inside a Denton County building, is filled with the snail containers for which Fullington is seeking a patent.

"He does have the expertise and knows about snails probably more than anybody else. If there's a way to make it a viable operation, at least from the scientific side, he's probably the person who can figure out a way to do it," said Henry Schulson, director of the Dallas Museum of Natural History.

Area pairings

Stanton (8-2) gets back into the state football playoffs for the first time since 1989 Friday. The Buffaloes face undefeated District 5-2A champion Iraan (10-0) Friday at 7:30 p.m. at Lake View Stadium in San Angelo in a bi-district game. Greenwood (7-2) will play Alpine in Crane Friday at 7:30 in a Class 3A bi-district game. Alpine is ranked ninth in the state and beat Greenwood 30-23 Sept. 29. Iraan beat Stanton 28-0 Oct. 6.

In other area playoff games Andrews (4-6) plays El Paso High (7-3) at 2 p.m. Saturday in Andrews in a Class 4A bi-district playoff. El Paso High won District 3-4A. District 8-1A champ Rankin (8-2) takes a seven-game winning streak to its bi-district playoff against 7-1A runnerup Tornillo (6-4) Friday at 7:30 in Alpine at Sul Ross State University. Midland Christian (9-1) will begin defense of its TAPPS Six-Man state title against Granbury Happy Hill Farm (9-0) at a time and site to be determined.

Shanahan out

HARTFORD — Hartford Whalers captain Brendan Shanahan was expected to miss up to two weeks with a torn ligament in his left wrist that had bothered him for more than a month.

Shanahan, the high-scoring forward acquired from St. Louis during the off-season, injured his wrist on opening night (Oct. 7) against the New York Rangers.

He played the Whalers' first 13 games and led the club in scoring with 12 points (3-9-12).

"It just wasn't improving. We tried days off, taping and playing with a cast," Shanahan said. "It got to the point where I wasn't helping the team."

Shanahan, who was examined before Saturday night's game with the Rangers by wrist specialist Kirk Watson, will be re-examined before Tuesday's game with New Jersey.

Grissom signs

ATLANTA — Center fielder Marquis Grissom, who caught the final out as Atlanta won its first World Series title, agreed Saturday to a four-year contract with the Braves.

Grissom, 28, was acquired in a trade with Montreal on April 6 and had a one-year contract with the Braves worth $4.9 million. Terms of the new deal weren't immediately available.

With the Braves during the regular season, Grissom had a .258 average with 12 home runs, 42 RBIs and 29 stolen bases.

San Francisco faces Big D-Day

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — The mighty San Francisco 49ers have fallen. And the Dallas Cowboys are quite willing to kick them while they're down.

The injury-depleted defending Super Bowl champions limp into Texas Stadium on Sunday for their much-anticipated NFC championship rematch with the Cowboys just trying to stay alive for a playoff spot, any playoff spot.

Four losses have turned the 49ers into mere mortals just struggling for an NFC playoff berth, let alone contending for home-field advantage in the conference.

The 49ers can't expect any mercy from the high-rolling revenge-seeking Cowboys, who are tied with the Kansas City Chiefs at 8-1 with the best NFL records.

San Francisco beat Dallas 38-28 in the NFC title game after having taken the Cowboys 21-14 during the regular season last year. The Cowboys have lived with the defeats during the offseason. They are in an ugly mood.

"We not only want to win, we want to win big," said safety Darren Woodson. "They are the champs and we want to destroy their playoff chances. If we beat 'em bad, so be it."

Woodson said it didn't matter that the 49ers wouldn't have fullback William Floyd and other key players because of injury.

"If they were 1-6 it wouldn't matter," Woodson said. "This is their name against a team with the star on the helmet."

"We don't feel sorry for them," said Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman. "Nobody felt sorry for us last year. Injuries are part of the game."

Wide receiver Michael Irvin said he's glad the 49ers are beat up.

"I don't wish they were healthy," Irvin said. "I do hope Steve Young is 100 per cent like next week. I enjoy seeing 'em struggle."

Running back Emmitt Smith said the Cowboys owe the 49ers for all the trash talking they did last January.

"They have every right to talk," Smith said. "But some of our players felt they were disrespectful. This is in the back of their mind."

San Francisco coach George Seifert was apologetic that the fall of the 49ers had taken the luster off one of the most anticipated regular-season meetings.

"It's unfortunate," he said. "It's really too bad. It would have been something. I know Dallas still wants to win the game very much. As for us, we're just trying to win a game so we can have the opportunity to get into the playoffs."

"There's no way you can say this is a meaningless game," Aikman said. "This is still a big game for them."

NASCASR Winston Cup points leader Jeff Gordon should wrap up his first points title in today's NAPA 500 event.

Gordon ready to take first NASCAR title

AP Motorsports Writer

HAMPTON, Ga. — Both Jeff Gordon, on the brink of his first Winston Cup championship, and Dale Earnhardt, with a record-tying seven of them, know what is required in Sunday's season-ending NAPA 500 at Atlanta Motor Speedway.

The 24-year-old Gordon must make take the green flag and finish anywhere but last in the 42-car field. Earnhardt, 44, needs to lead laps and win to have even the slightest chance for a third straight season title.

Neither is feeling a lot of pressure to accomplish those feats.

"We're starting up front, so it'll be real hard to play it conservative because we'll want to stay up front," said Gordon, whose Chevrolet Monte Carlo will start three positions ahead of Earnhardt's Chevy in eighth.

"You've got to race hard just to stay up there," the youngster said. "I'd really like to get up there and lead a lap, but I'm not going to overdo it. We came a long way this year. We've worked hard and there's no reason to get crazy and blow it now.

"The championship is the main thing on our minds right now," he added. "When we get past those first few laps and we see some cars fall out, you'll see a different race. It would be an awesome way to end it, by winning the race. And that's what we're going to try to do."

Earnhardt would also love to finish the season with a win, to send a message to the rest of the Winston Cup circuit that he remains the man to beat and will be back just as hungry in 1996.

"I've raced too many championships, won and lost too many championships to let that (thinking about Gordon's finish)

LEE HIGH SCHOOL REBELS BASKETBALL 1995-96

Rebels courting a little history

■ After three trips to the playoffs, the Lee Rebels will try and make school history with a fourth-straight appearance.

By Sean Wallace
Sports Writer

The 1995-96 season for the Lee boys varsity basketball team might not be just another run of the mill year.

If everything falls right, it could be one for the record books.

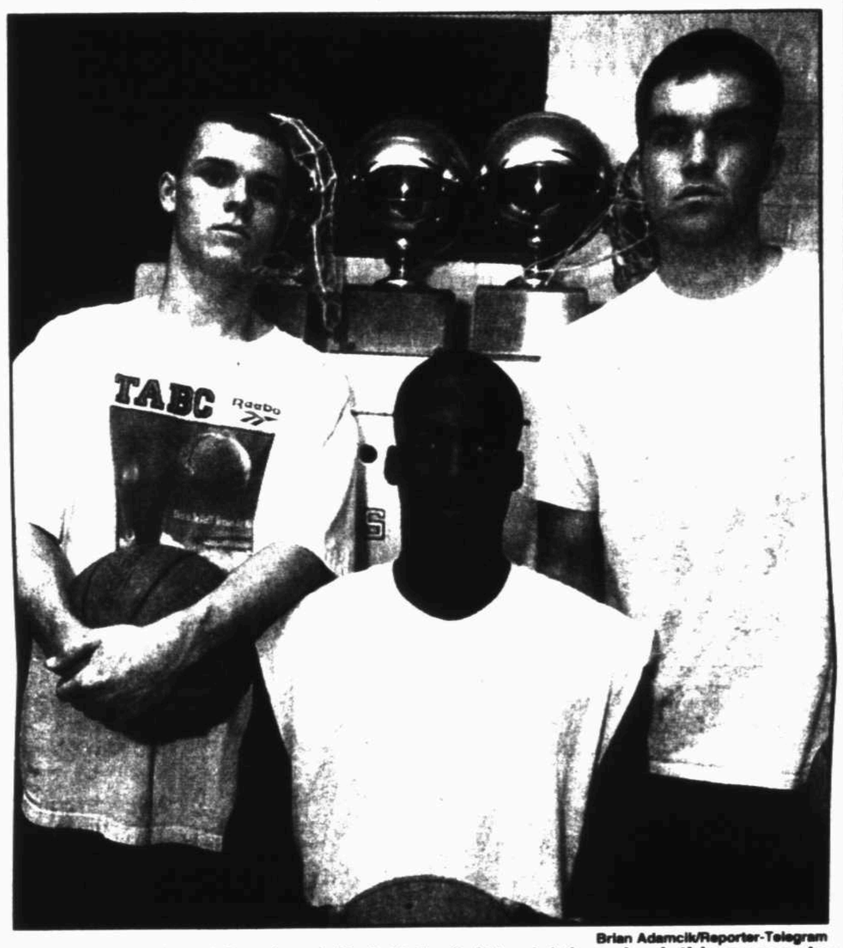

No other teams in Lee history has made the playoffs four straight seasons, but if coach Jon House can get them into post season play, this group will have done it.

"No other Lee teams have made it to the playoffs four years in a row, and that would be a special accomplishment for this team," said coach Jon House, who has guided the Rebels to post-season play the last three years. "I'm really looking forward to the season. We've got a great bunch of kids here."

Not only has Lee been in the playoffs and but they have enjoyed a modicum of success. The Rebels won District 4-5A in 1992 and made trips to the regional quarterfinals in 1992 and 1993 as well as bi-district in 1994, but the Rebels want to make that next step up and reach the state tournament.

Lee has eight seniors on its roster but doesn't have a lot of returning players with experience. Led by returning players Mark Holly, Israel Boyd and John Purves, the Rebels will could go through some growing pains early in the

Midland College splits pair

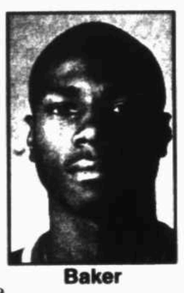

■ Lady Chaps blow out Paris JC 107-58 while Chaps lose to Mesa CC by 10,

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Sports Writer

While the Midland College Lady Chaparrals got double their money, coach Pat Rafferty's men's team got more than it bargained for Saturday night in the final night of the Chap Classic junior college basketball event.

The Lady Chaps boosted their record to 6-0 with a 107-58 blowout of Paris Junior College at Chaparral Center.

But the Chaparrals fell to 1-3 for the season with an 83-73 loss to Mesa (Ariz.) Community College in a game which had more than its share of controversy — an incident that took away from the hard-fought contest between two of the best junior college programs in the country.

Baker

Ndaiye

It was a correction the officials had the official score keeper make in the second half on a play that happened in the first half and Rafferty said it had an impact on the game.

"I'm not blaming the officials for our loss but it's just like I told the guys, you can't rely on an official's decision to win the game," said Rafferty. "But it (the correction) was unprecedented. It was not a correctable error and it should not have been changed when it was."

The discrepency came after halftime when Mesa coach Tom Bennett questioned the official book after he realized his leading scorer Jason Richey had three fouls in the first half.

There was some question when the foul had been reported and the bookkeeper had to ask the official three times for the correct number. It was reported as a foul on Richey, his third.

But Bennett claimed that No. 11 Richey wasn't even in the game when the foul was called and it should have been on No. 21.

When the officials were alerted of a possible mistake, they checked the unofficial stat book of the local radio station's broadcasters and determined they had made a mistake and changed the book.

The rules, however, state that a mistake in the official books can only be corrected at the first stop of play after the incident happened. The change was made, however, and it resulted in Richey's being able to stay in the game when he was whistled for his fourth official foul or what would have been his fifth wtih 11:40 to play in the second half.

Richey went on to lead his team with 28 points, six of those points coming at the free throw line with less than

Tech bounces back with final win over TCU, 27-6

By Terry Williamson

LUBBOCK — As historic moments go, Texas Tech's 27-6 victory over Texas Christian here Saturday lacked real drama, but that was no frown on Spike Dykes face after the game.

Historic? Oh yes, this was Tech's last home game in Jones Stadium as a member of the Southwest Conference. And the game was with the Horned Frogs, a team that is headed to the Western Athletic Conference next year while Tech goes to the new Big 12. It was a splitting of the ways, so to speak.

Tech had a couple of concerns entering the game. Last week, the Red Raiders got bombed 48-7 by Texas to lose hopes of winning the conference championship again. And also, TCU had beaten Tech last year in Fort Worth to take away an undisputed title for the Cotton Bowl bound Raiders.

"I don't know how many of you have been in a fight and gotten your fanny whipped, but it's hard to fight the next time." Dykes said. "This was not a pretty win. Shoot, we dropped a hundred interceptions and a hundred passes. But we played hard. We got up and got back in the fight. That's tough to do."

Tech held a 13-6 edge at the half with the first 30 minutes play consumed by dropped passes, dropped interceptions chances and just plain inept offenses. The result was 10 punts and four field goals, leading one press box wag to comment, "It looks like we came to season before the district season gets into full swing.

REBELS: Lee depth a key for success

"Everyone is really trying to find their roles righ now. We're kind of in a rebuilding stage right now," House said. "We've got Holly back with a lot of experience and Purves and Boyd but other than that, basically its a new team."

Holly, a 6-foot-2 senior who averaged 13.6 points a game last season despite playing less than a full schedule for the Rebels, is the team's top returning scorer and leads a Lee team which could put up some impressive offensive numbers with its style of play.

"Mark missed the first eight games because of an injury and when he came back he was just hitting his stride about halfway through district play," House said.

Holly believes the team has become closer this season which could translate into more wins on the court.

"We've got a lot more team unity this year," Holly said. "We know each other a lot better, where people are going to be on the court and what they're going to do. It's going to be harder to play against us this year."

The Rebels will be deeper off the bench than it has been in recent years, which fits nicely into House's offensive and defensive plans.

"Our strength this year is going to be our depth," House said. "We'll have three or four kids that will play a couple of positions for us. In that sense we're prettty versatile. All of our perimeter players can play a couple of positions and we've got an experienced post man."

The fire ants are coming!

Its just the Fire Ant Squad.

"We've got a group of kids that we call the "fire ant squad" that we're going to use when we need a defensive spark or need to get something going," Lee coach Jon House said. "They play an aggressive style of defense and just swarm around you like ants."

The Ants — Amron Washington, Antwan Alexander, John Norman, Alex Strambler and John Thurman — are some of the fastest players on the team and everyone in the group runs at least 4.6 40.

"We're going to use them when we need to turn up the heat on someone defensively and when they bite, you'll know it," House said. "These guys are so quick and can pressure you defensively. hopefully we can cause a few turnovers and keep our opponent on the ropes if we have a lead."

And with the kind of up-tempo running style that House plansto use this season, a healthy bench is just as important as high-scoring forward.

"We're going to play an up-tempo game, get a lot of kids in there to play and try and wear you out," he said. "Defensively, we're going to press about 99 percent of the time. The kids like to play that way and the crowd likes to see them play that way. We're going to have 10 guys coming off the bench for us, and that's the first time we've been able to do that since I've been here."

But the Rebels won't be just about pressure defense and a run-and-gun pace. Lee has plenty of players who can pull up and hit the jumper if left unguarded.

"I think we'll be a better shooting team this year," House said. "We got a number of kids who have improved greatly in their shooting last year and we will be able to hit the jumpers when we need to."

The Rebels will also be counting on its returning big man Purves to give the Rebels an inside game and control the boards. Purves, a 6-6 junior who played brilliantly as a sophomore a year ago in averaging eight points and eight rebounds a game, could be one of the district's best at the end of the season.

"I really thought he should have been the Sophomore of the Year last year," House said. "Now that we have someone to back him up (6-7 Doug Crawford), he can be that more effective with some rest during the game."

But for all of the preparations and plans that House makes, there is still one variable which he has no control over: the Lee football team.

While players such as 6-2 Antwan Alexander, 6-2 Alex Strambler and 6-1 John Thurman getting ready for a bi-district football game next week, House has to wait until football is over to get these guys into the basketball gym full-time.

"There's good and bad things about that," House said. "I'd like to have them, but I'm glad their having success on the football field. Hopefully some of it will rub off on us."

In the meantime, House intends to use the time to get some extra looks at some players which might be able to help the Rebels this season.

"I pretty know what the guys from the football team can do, plus, it will give me a chance to give some of the other guys some playing time and evaluate them," House explained. "If we can get seven or eight guys averaging nine or 10 points a game, I'd be tickled. We're going to have to play fundementally-sound basketball at a high rate of speed to be successful."

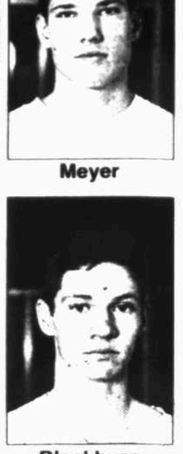

If the Rebels can do that, they might just pull off another 4-5A title that has a number of teams which could challenge for a playoff spot or the championship.

"Midland High is supposed to be the class of the district and Abilene Cooper has had a lot of success lately, so it will be tough," House said. "Odessa Permian has four starters back and San Angelo Central and Odessa High should be tough too."

Lee player capsules

Keith Sawyer, 5-11, Sr., guard -- Good shooter with a competitive streak. "He could be a great point guard for us," coach House said.

Amron Washington, 5-7, Jr., guard -- Has excellent speed which will help the Rebels on the transition game. "Amron's one of the quickest guards in the district. He can see the whole floor and can be dangerous."

Antwan Alexander, 6-2, Jr., forward -- Great athlete. will give Lee depth at the three spot. "He's a real sparkplug for us. He always makes something happen."

Alex Strambler, 6-2, Sr., forward -- Role player for Rebels who adds depth at two forward positions. "Alex is definitely one of our leaders on the court. He can play the five or four and brings everything he has to the table."

Bobby Blackburn, 6-1, Jr., forward -- A left-handed role player who might make some contributions this year. "He's a strong player and he's improving every day."

Israel Boyd, 6-2, Sr., guard -- An improved ballhandler who should make an impact for the Rebels in 1995. "We're looking for some big things from Israel this year."

Sergio Machuca, 5-11, Jr., guard -- A player with a good shooting touch who can hit the big basket when called upon. "He's got a great shot, and if you let him spot up, he'll hit it on you."

Matt Meyer, 6-3, Jr., forward -- Has good leaping ability and should be a force in the middle for the Rebels. "He can go get that offensive rebound and has an uncanny knack of getting the ball and sending it upcourt."

Mike Lattibeaudiere, 6-0, Sr., guard -- An improved shooter from lasy year who knows how toplay the court. "Mike's a real smart player out on the court."

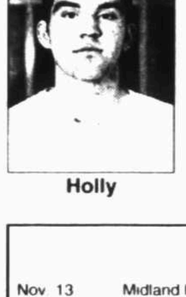

John Norman, 6-2, Jr., forward -- A streak shooter who can hit the lights out when he gets on a roll. "He's a good shooter but he also gives us a defensive spark when we need it."

Doug Crawford, 6-7, Sr., post -- Has showed great improvement from a year ago and should get some quality minutes behind John Purves the year. "Doug will be able to come in and give John a rest now and then and that will help us tremendously."

Mark Holly, 6-2, Sr., guard -- Smart competitor who has a great shooting touch. "Mark plays the game as hard as anyone I've seen."

John Thurman, 6-1, Sr., guard -- The team's leader on the court and has the respect of his teammates. "All of his teammates respect him as the leader. He's the glue that keeps everything together."

John Purves, 6-6, Jr., post -- Should follow up great sophomore season with career numbers for the Rebels. "He's got great leaping ability and is gettign better all the time."

Koch wins third straght 5A cross country title

GEORGETOWN — Round Rock High School senior Jessica Koch won her third Class 5A individual title Saturday in the University Interscholastic League State Cross Country Meet.

Humble Kingwood repeated as boys' and girls' 5A team champions in the UIL meet.

Kingwood's girls placed five runners in the top 20, giving the team 62 points to edge Flower Mound Marcus' 79. Round Rock finished third with 90.

In the boys competition, Kingwood placed four in the top 11 including individual champion Lewis Jones. Jones finished the 3.1 mile course at Southwestern University's Kurth-Landrum golf course in 15:43, followed by Houston MacArthur's Jorge Alanis (15:56).

Kingwood won 5A with 53 points, followed by Houston MacArthur (77) and El Paso Austin (96).

Koch, who also won in 1992 and 1994, finished the two-mile course in 10:53. Flower Mound Marcus' Amani Terrell placed second in 11:04.

In Class 4A, New Braunfels girls repeated as team champions with 61.New Braunfels Lisa Weltzer, who finished second last year, won in 11:47, four seconds in front of Willis' Ashley Broussard.

Dallas Highland Park placed second with 84 points followed by Canyon's 96. The Canyon boys also repeated at team champions with McKinney second and Round Rock McNeil third.

McKinney's Adrian Martinez won in 15:57, while Justin-Northwest's Chris Wells was second in 16:24. Class A Rocksprings girls, who had the first through third individuals, won Class A with 23 points.

Nazareth was second with 62, followed by Ackerly Sands. Rocksprings' Sabrina Hernandez placed first in 12:28 followed by teammates Anita Gonzales (12:31) and Christina Franco (12:37).

Canucks' Bure out for season

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — The Vancouver Canucks realized their worst fears Saturday.

They will be without scoring star Pavel Bure for the rest of the NHL season due to a knee injury that requires surgery.

"Obviously devastating news to the organization," coach Rick Ley told radio station CKNW. "It's the type of injury you'd like to see no athlete sustain.

Bure will be operated on soon to repair a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee.

Davidson said the team had an option to try to rehabilitate the knee and put a brace on it, or to correct the problem.

Nebraska sloppy, but Kansas sloppier

The Associated Press

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Nebraska played its sloppiest game of the year Saturday. Fortunately for the Cornhuskers, Kansas was even sloppier.

Tommie Frazier ran for two touchdowns and passed for one as top-ranked Nebraska routed No. 10 Kansas 41-3 and clinched a tie for its fifth straight Big Eight title.

The Huskers (10-0, 6-0 Big Eight), who hadn't committed a turnover in their previous four games, lost two fumbles and had a pass intercepted by Kansas. But the Jayhawks (8-2, 4-2) self-destructed with five turnovers, including a botched punt return that turned into a Nebraska touchdown, several costly penalties and poor time management that prevented them from trying a field goal at the end of the first half.

No. 2 Ohio St. 41, Illinois 3

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Eddie George took a large stride toward the Heisman Trophy, rushing for a school-record 314 yards on 36 carries and scoring three times as Ohio State beat Illinois.

George, sixth in the country with an average of 142 rushing yards a game coming in, picked up 180 yards in the first half. He broke Keith Byars' Ohio State record of 274 yards on a 13-yard touchdown run midway through the third quarter. Byars's big day also came against Illinois, that in 1984, the last season in which Ohio State qualified for the Rose Bowl.

No. 3 Florida 63, South Carolina 7

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Danny Wuerffel returned to his starting spot with five touchdowns passes and got Florida back to the Southeastern Conference title game night in a victory over South Carolina.

Wuerffel, rested last week by coach Steve Spurrier, had 304 yards passing in the first half as Florida quickly wrapped up its fourth straight SEC Eastern Division title. The Gators went 9-0 for the first time ever and likely scored enough points to hold their poll postion another week.

■ Top 25 Roundup

No. 5 Northwestern 31, Iowa 20

EVANSTON, Ill. — Northwestern beat the cold and withstood a strong effort by Iowa to subdue the Hawkeyes, giving the fifth-ranked Wildcats the school's first nine-win season since 1903.

Northwestern (9-1, 7-0 Big Ten) kept in the running for the Rose Bowl by pitching a second-half shutout at the determined Hawkeyes and getting another punishing performance from sophomore tailback Darnell Autry, who hit 100 yards for the 11th straight game.

No. 6 Florida St. 28, North Carolina 12

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Florida State inched a step closer to at least a share of a record fourth straight Atlantic Coast Conference title, getting two first-half scores from Warrick Dunn in a victory over North Carolina.

No. 7 Kansas St. 49, Iowa St. 7

AMES, Iowa — Matt Miller threw three touchdown passes to become the Big Eight's season leader and Kansas State scored on seven of its first eight possessions in overwhelming Iowa State.

Kansas State (9-1 overall, 5-1 Big Eight) hit on big plays to set up its first four touchdowns and captialized on turnovers for two more scores to stay on track for its best season ever. With a victory over Colorado next Saturday, Kansas State would win 10 games for the first time.

No. 9 Colorado 21, Missouri 0

BOULDER, Colo. — John Hessler passed for two touchdowns, extending his school record, and ran for another score as Colorado overcame a listless start and gusty winds to blank Missouri.

The Buffaloes (8-2 overall, 4-2 in Big Eight) managed to withstand three turnovers and two missed field goals to stay in contention for a second-place finish in the conference.

No. 13 Michigan 5, Purdue 0

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — A muddy field, freezing temperatures and wind gusting to 50 mph made Michigan's offense ineffective. So the Wolverines rode Remy Hamilton's field goal and Clarence Thompson's safety to a victory over Purdue.

It was the lowest-scoring game at Michigan Stadium since the Wolverines (8-2, 4-2 Big Ten) defeated Northwestern 7-0 in 1972. Michigan held Purdue (3-5-1, 1-4-1) to just four first downs, one in the first half.

No. 14 Virginia 21, Maryland 18

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Tiki Barber ran for 116 yards and backup Kevin Brooks had 103 as Virginia overcame a poor start and clinched a share of the Atlantic Coast Conference title by beating Maryland.

The Cavaliers, coming off an emotional upset of Florida State, fell behind 11-0 in the first quarter before reeling off 21 straight points en route to their fourth straight victory over Maryland.

No. 15 Arkansas 24, SW Louisiana 13

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Del Delco returned an interception 62 yards for a touchdown, his defensive mates set up two other scores and Madre Hill established a school rushing record as Arkansas beat Southwestern Louisiana.

Delco's touchdown made it 17-0 late in the second quarter. Vincent Bradford's interception led to a first-quarter field goal and Steven Conley's fumble recovery left the Razorbacks with 47 yards to negotiate for their first touchdown. Conley was in on 11 tackles, including four for 45 yards in losses.

No. 16 Alabama 14, Mississippi St. 9

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Dennis Riddle rushed for 181 yards and two touchdowns as No. 16 Alabama dominated a quirky game to beat Mississippi State 14-9 Saturday.

Riddle carried 38 times, four short of a school record, as the Crimson Tide hammered away mercilessly on the ground. The Tide (8-2, 5-2 Southeastern Conference) had the ball for more than two thirds of the game.

Some trends continued as Alabama prepares for the all-important season finale against Auburn next week. The predominant defense and running game that have been the team's trademarks showed up in full force for the second straight week. But so did problems in the kicking game.

No. 17 Oregon 17, Arizona 13

TUCSON, Ariz. — Tony Graziani threw the winning touchdown pass and Ricky Whittle ran for 107 yards against Arizona's once-feared defense as Oregon beat the Wildcats.

The Ducks, last year's Rose Bowl representative from the Pac-10, fought their way into contention for another major bowl bid with their seventh straight road win (five this season) in a stadium where they hadn't won since 1983.

Graziani had an off day, finishing 10-of-26 for 147 yards, but his 5-yard pass to Aaron Jelks with 6:06 left in the third quarter turned out to be the game-winner. It capped an 83-yard drive and gave Oregon (8-2, 5-2) a 17-13 lead.

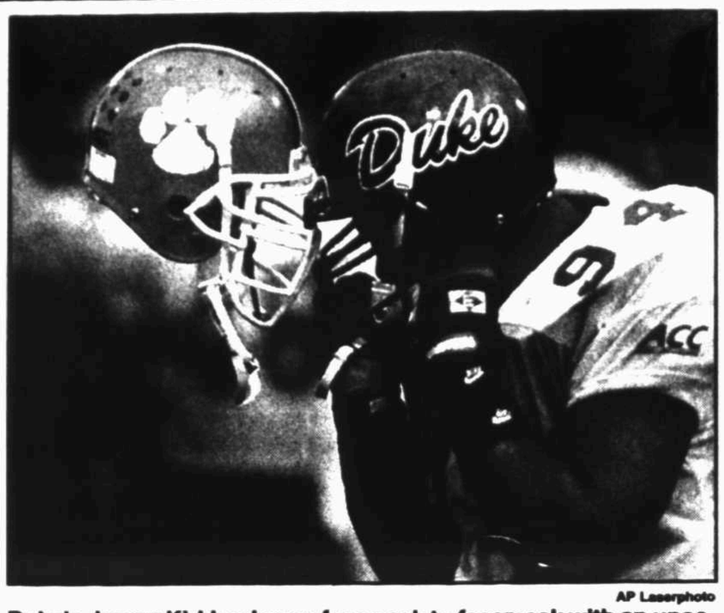

No. 20 Auburn 37, Georgia 31

ATHENS, Ga. — Stephen Davis ran for 153 yards and two touchdowns and No. 20 Auburn converted a fourth down in its territory with just over two minutes remaining to down Georgia 37-31 Saturday night.

It was the last game played at Sanford Stadium before the famed hedges ringing the field are removed to make room for the Olympic soccer venue.

No. 21 Virginia Tech 38, Temple 16

WASHINGTON — For the first time in 32 years, Virginia Tech can call itself a conference champion. The defense can call itself awesome.

AP Laserphoto

Duke's James Kirkland goes facemask to facemask with an unoccupied Clemson helmet Saturday. The Blue Devil lineman got the helmet caught in his headgear in his team's 34-17 loss in Clemson, S.C.

Virginia Tech's defense, which came into the game ranked No. 1 in the nation against the run, scored two second-quarter touchdowns within 48 seconds as the 21st-ranked Hokies won their eighth straight with a rout of Temple at RFK Stadium.

No. 22 Washington 38, UCLA 14

PASADENA, Calif. — Karim Abdul-Jabbar was knocked out early, and UCLA never recovered.

Rashaan Shehee ran for three touchdowns and Washington scored four times following turnovers for a victory that qualified the Huskies for a bowl bid.

No. 23 Syracuse 42, Pittsburgh 10

PITTSBURGH — Donovan McNabb confused injury-depleted Pitt with his scrambling and accurate passing as Syracuse scored on four of its first five possessions in a romp over one of its oldest rivals.

McNabb, a redshirt freshman who won't turn 19 until later this month, was 12-of-15 for 157 yards and two touchdowns as the Orangemen (7-2, 4-1 Big East) rebounded from a 24-point loss at Virginia Tech.

No. 24 Clemson 34, Duke 17

CLEMSON, S.C. — Raymond Priester set a Clemson record by rushing for 263 yards and also scored a touchdown as the Tigers beat Duke.

Priester, a sophomore, broke the record of 260 by Cliff Austin against Duke in 1982. He became the first 1,000-yard rusher of the decade for Clemson (7-3, 6-2 Atlantic Coast Conference).

The last Clemson rusher to reach 1,000 yards was Terry Allen, who gained 1,192 in 1988.

Wyoming 34, No. 25 San Diego St. 31

SAN DIEGO — Cory Wedel kicked a 33-yard field with 29 seconds left to give Wyoming an upset of San Diego State, ending the Aztecs' six-game winning streak.

The Cowboys, who had lost three straight, moved 64 yards in 14 plays for the winning kick.

Alfred makes smashing debut as Baylor roughs up Ponies 48-7

DALLAS — Freshman quarterback Jermaine Alfred couldn't have made a more dynamic debut.

He hit Dustin Dennard with a 56-yard touchdown pass on Baylor's first play Saturday in a 48-7 victory over Southern Methodist in the last Southwest Conference game between the schools.

"We had planned on opening with that play all week," Baylor coach Chuck Reedy said.

"It was a great throw and a great catch. It was a confidence booster for Jermaine right off the bat. We hadn't gone deep all year with Dustin. I think it kind of surprised them."

Baylor, alternating quarterbacks Alfred and Jeff Watson, jumped to a 31-0 halftime lead over the Mustangs on homecoming in the chilled Cotton Bowl where 45-degree weather helped hold the crowd down to 15,941 in the cavernous stadium.

"That was not a good way to start. It gave them momentum early. We got beat by a good team," SMU coach Tom Rossley said.

Dennard said the decision on who was to start game just before the kickoff.

"We learned just before game time. Both quarterbacks did a great job," Dennard said.

"I was a little nervous, but that first pass helped settle me down," Alfred said.

Baylor, which will join the Big 12 Conference next season and not play SMU again, is now 6-3 overall and 4-1 in league play. The Western Athletic Conference-bound Mustangs dropped a nation-leading ninth consecutive game. SMU is 1-9 and 0-6 with its only victory coming over Arkansas 17-14 in the first game of the season.

Baylor defeated SMU for the seventh consecutive time. SMU leads the series 36-33-7 and there are no future games scheduled.

Alfred started in place of Watson who has had trouble getting the Baylor offense into gear. Alfred had no problem on the first play as he faded back and found Dennard all alone behind cornerback Cornell Parker for the touchdown.

A 37-yard run by Kalief Muhammad set up Baylor's second score on a 6-yard run by Anthony Hodge.

The point avalanche was only starting. Jerod Douglas ran 16 yards and caught a 14-yard shovel pass from Watson to set up Clifton Rubin's 1-yard scoring run.

Jarvis Van Dyke kicked a 26-yard field goal then a 37-yard interception return by Dean Jackson positioned the Bears for a 2-yard touchdown run by Douglas.

TECH: Raiders win final game with TCU

see and adult version punt, pass and kick."

Tech and TCU exchanged Tony Rogers and Michael Reeder field goals to open the game, but Tech took the lead later in the first period when quarterback Zebbie Lethridge hit tiny 5-foot-5 Stacy Mitchell with a 7-yard TD pass.

Tech also missed a scoring opportunity when Marcus Coleman had a chance at a Max Knake interception that would have easily been six points, but Coleman dropped the ball.

"Marcus never drops the ball," Dykes said. "That really made me nervous because I thought that was the way the day was going to be. I just hoped it wasn't an omen."

But both teams looked like they had never seen a ball. One writer said during the game, "There have been more dropped interceptions than pass completions."

The Horned Frogs had a chance to jump back in the hunt in the second period when John Washington intercepted a Lethridge pass and returned it 42 yards to the Tech 8-yard line. But with running back Andre Davis serving his last of a four-game NCAA suspension for contacting an agent, TCU was punchless and had to settle for another Reeder field goal.

If there was a major turning point, that was probably it because Tech settled the matter early in the second half, scoring on two of its first three possessions. One a Lethridge pass to Bo Adams for five yards and the other on a 48-yard TD romp by Byron Hanspard, who had 126 yards rushing. Hanspard had one more yard rushing than TCU did total offense. The Frogs need Davis.

Now these two can bid each other adios. A new football era is starting. It was just sad to see an old era end at Jones Stadium on such a lackluster note.

But Dykes isn't looking back. "Next year is a new adventure."

Brown leads Texas by Houston

By Michael Graczyk
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — James Brown threw four touchdown passes to set a Texas season record and ran for another score as the 11th-ranked Longhorns rallied for 35 unanswered second-half points to beat Houston 52-20 Saturday night.

The Longhorns, (7-1-1, 4-0 Southwest Conference) trailed 20-10 as Houston's Chuck Clements connected with freshman wide receiver Robbie Wheeler for two TD passes in the first half.

But the Texas defense woke up in the third quarter to blunt the upset-minded Cougars (1-8, 1-3), allowing just two first downs in the half while recovering two fumbles and intercepting a pass.

The Texas offense, meanwhile, came alive in the third quarter behind Brown, who ran four yards for a score, then threw TD passes of 14 yards to Matt Davis, 66 yards to Justin McLemore and 13 yards to Pat Fitzgerald.

Brown finished 21-of-35 passes for 338 yards as Texas won its sixth straight conference game over two seasons. The win also was the 100th for John Mackovic as a head coach, including 30 in the NFL.

The performance gave Brown, who also threw a 2-yard TD pass in the second quarter, 19 touchdown passes for the year, breaking the mark of 16 set in 1992 by Peter Gardere. The scoring tosses also extended Brown's school record of 11 straight games with a TD pass.

Wane McGarity and Darrell Wilson each scored on 1-yard runs for Texas, wich amassed 625 yards.

The Longhorns scored on their first series as Phil Dawson kicked a 52-yard field goal.

But Houston went ahead 7-3 as Clements found Wheeler splitting Texas defenders Bryant Westbrook and Chris Carter for a 33-yard TD play. Texas regained the lead 10-7 with Brown's first touchdown pass to McLemore, who was alone in the right corner of the end zone for a 2-yard score.

Houston retook the lead on a 65-yard, 10-play drive, capped by Clements floating a 16-yard pass to Wheeler. After Texas fumbled the ensuing kickoff, Antowain Smith put Houston up 20-10 with a 3-yard TD run. It was all downhill after that for Houston as the Longhorns covered 65 yards in seven plays, 60 yards coming through the air, capped by McGarity running it in from the 1 to trim Houston's lead to 20-17 at halftime.

'Showdown' says medicine is needed

The political "showdown" being staged over the budget by President Clinton and Republican congressional leaders was completely predictable. They are far apart over proposed changes in federal programs and the debt ceiling, and the fact that Clinton is a Democrat while the Republicans control Congress assures that both sides will attempt to wield the upcoming deadlines on the debt ceiling and the administration's temporary authority to spend money on discretionary programs to their respective advantage.

Some observers are attempting to blame either Clinton or the Republicans in Congress for this showdown, but in reality this deadline has been approached and passed numerous times before — and every time there has been more than ample grandstanding and special-interest propagandizing. The reason is simple: Politics.

What is starkly different this time around is that the Republicans are in the cat bird's seat for the first time in years. They have ample opportunity to bring about some changes that, potentially, will give the GOP major legislative victories that for decades they could not achieve because of their minority status in Congress.

There is no question that Republicans are using the threat of default as leverage to force Clinton to accept legislation he opposes. In fact, a House-approved bill to lift the debt ceiling passed Thursday, but if Clinton accepts it the bill also incorporates amendments that would curtail appeals by death-row inmates and strip the administration of its ability to exploit money in trust funds in future years as a means of avoiding default. In effect, the bill is a means of getting what Republicans have long wanted legislatively but been unable to put together on the floor of Congress due to their minority numbers.

Is this "legislative blackmail?" Perhaps so, but it's certainly no worse than the blackmail they endured for 40 years when the Democrats held a vise grip on Congress and also had a Democrat in the White House.

There's no question that it's tough medicine, but the Republicans have a point when they note that from the standpoint of congressional spending and the national debt, tough medicine is just what is needed.

Congressional probe due on airport woes

Congress needs to investigate why our nation's air traffic control system is in such poor shape. The public has a right to know why the modernization program proposed in 1981 is behind schedule and how it got into the shape it's in.

Power losses, computer outages and flight delays are all too common and they are avoidable.

What's needed is a new computer system. While new equipment hits the consumer market weekly and what was new last February is outdated today, the Federal Aviation Administration runs 30-year-old computers. ...

A system maintenance specialist says a personal laptop computer has 10 times the power as the old '60s-era system. With maintenance, FAA managers say, they can keep it together until temporary replacements are installed in 1997. ...

For a country that leads the world in developing computers and software to increase efficiency and solve many problems, our air traffic control system is a disgrace. Power outages, flight delays, equipment breakdowns and procurement problems are outrageous. The American people need to know the whole truth. They demand a better job from the government.

Arafat's death would kill peace process

WASHINGTON — The assassination of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin has made Yasser Arafat a marked man more than ever before.

The chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization is no stranger to danger. He has already survived more than 50 assassination attempts. But PLO sources fear that the Rabin killing has given Israeli and Palestinian radicals the impetus to finally put Arafat away for good.

Anderson

"He is extraordinarily vulnerable right now," one PLO source told us.

The risk has multiplied because radicals on both sides realize that while the Rabin assassination has wounded the peace process, an Arafat assassination would kill the conciliation altogether. While Rabin has been succeeded by his partner in the peace effort, Shimon Peres, there is no clear successor to Arafat within the PLO.

"The Israelis would not negotiate with any Palestinian but Arafat," one PLO source told us. "The only way that Rabin made progress was by working with Arafat. Losing Arafat could lose the whole process."

PLO insiders have predicted to us for years that if Arafat was ever assassinated the deed would be done by a fellow Palestinian — just as Rabin was killed by an Israeli. One source close to Arafat sees it as a game of one-upmanship between radicals on both sides. "The Israeli radicals are now saying to the Palestinian radicals, 'We did our part — you do yours,'" said this source.

While radical Jews and Arabs see eye-to-eye on virtually nothing, this source noted, their aims come together on one point: "They both would love to kill the whole peace process. Now all they have to do is kill one person."

The PLO has severely tightened security around Arafat in the last week, according to PLO spokesman Marwan Kanafani. "There is a security alert in the Gaza Strip," he said. "It is contagious. We saw this guy, supposed to be one of the best guarded men in the world, and he was killed."

Arafat aides have taken the unprecedented step of conducting no less than three body searches of all visitors — including journalists — before they enter Arafat's office, which sits between a beach and a crowded street. The number of security guards outside PLO headquarters has also multiplied, and access to many of the roads leading to the building has been completely cut-off.

Arafat intimates say he was deeply anguished by the fact that security concerns forced him to stay away from Rabin's funeral. But Arafat has been able to offer his heartfelt tributes by television, at one point referring to Rabin's widow as his "sister."

Palestinian terrorist Ahmed Jibril has previously told us in blunt terms that Arafat would be gunned down by an assassin's bullets. Although they once were comrades, Jibril and Arafat had a public split in 1966. And in the last few years, Jibril's hatred of Arafat has increased as the PLO leader has renounced terrorism, recognized Israel and courted the United States.

During a 1989 interview in Syria, Jibril told us that assassination by angry Palestinian fundamentalists is a "natural end" for Arafat. "We can figure that the end of Arafat is inevitable," Jibril said. "It will be a natural end. It is coming shortly. As similar as the end of Sadat."

In the wake of Rabin's assassination, there have been many comparisons to the death of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. He was gunned down in 1981 by Muslim fundamentalists who were angry that he had signed a peace treaty with Israel.

GEORGE WILL

Federal government is most powerful lobbyist

WASHINGTON — Ernest Istook's first name could be an apt adjective. The second-term Republican congressman from Oklahoma is notably intense, particularly about a measure bearing his name. It is designed to dramatize, and somewhat alter, the fact that the most powerful interest group lobbying the federal government is the federal government.

Will

Every year thousands of nonprofit groups, and many businesses and individuals, get billions of dollars of federal grants and contracts. Many recipients spend money on lobbying or other political activities. The fact that money is fungible makes a mockery of the longstanding legal prohibition on using federal funds for lobbying. Istook's measure would restrict the amount of their own money that such recipients of federal funds could spend on political advocacy, however that might be construed, if they receive "any federal funds ... or other thing of value," however that might be construed.

You begin to see the problems.

Granted, Republicans are rightly infuriated when Planned Parenthood, which does nicely at the federal trough, intervenes in elections with mailings targeting right-to-life candidates. And it is disgusting that the National Council of Senior Citizens, which gets 96 percent of its funding from the federal government, boasts about its multifaceted political assault (half a million letters and postcards flooding Washington, a toll-free telephone number connecting callers with congressional offices, a $2 million media campaign) on Republican plans for restraining the growth of Medicare and Medicaid spending.

But Istook's measure would do something conservatives should not countenance: It would make lawyers happy. It would do so by creating the sort of thing conservatives are supposed to be rectifying: It would erect a litigation-breeding regulatory regime of baroque complexity regarding political expression. By doing so it would lend legitimacy to the liberals' itch to spin more webs of restrictions on political speech in the name of "campaign reform."

Which is to say, Istook's cure might be as bad as the disease. But merely by proposing his measure he has served the public good by calling attention to the disease of faction in its modern form.

The Constitution's framers, especially the most important framer, James Madison, worried about "factions," meaning groups pursuing, through government, interests adverse to the interests of other groups or to the public good. Madison's solution reversed the hitherto prevailing belief that free government could flourish only in a small setting. An "extensive republic" with a churning multiplicity of factions — the more the merrier — would, Madison argued, avoid the abuses of a stable and oppressive majority.

But no framer anticipated today's society in which much the largest faction is government itself. Istook's amendment is a response to that fact, which has been illustrated by facts gathered by John Payne, an independent scholar who has taught at several universities.

Payne studied 14 House and Senate committee hearings, involving 1,060 witnesses, and concluded that "the persuasion process in Washington is highly inbred." Six percent of the witnesses were senators or representatives, 47 percent were other federal officials and 10 percent were state and local officials. So 63 percent were government petitioning itself for redress of its grievances. Government's grievances are never that it possesses too much money or power.

Another 33 percent of the witnesses represented what purport to be private sector institutions but which are partly extensions of the government. Such groups — the National Education Association, the Sierra Club, the League of Women Voters, among others — are partially funded by government contracts and grants.

No wonder Washington has had a self-reinforcing "culture of spending." The wonder is that citizens have not demanded adoption of the Heritage Foundation's proposal that witnesses testifying before Congress should be required to divulge the amount of federal funds their groups receive. Citizens have not demanded that because the problem was largely invisible until Istook's amendment highlighted one facet of it, which he calls "welfare for lobbyists."

Although Istook's measure is neutral regarding the content of the political activity it would prohibit, it is a facet of conservatism's legitimate self-defense, often referred to as "defunding the left." Lobbyists fueled by federal funds are rarely on the right.

Defunding the left should involve not only removing liberal lobbies like Planned Parenthood and the National Council of Senior Citizens from the public payroll, but also ending the Legal Services Corporation, public television and the arts and humanities endowments. But the way to defund the left is by defunding it, not by emulating it, which is what Republicans in Congress will be doing if they allow their justifiable indignation about federally funded lobbying to propel them waist-deep into a swamp of regulation.

RUSSELL BAKER

Drug influence lends new perspective to criticism

Reading the Sunday Times under the influence of drugs, my mind stopped still in its wobbly tracks when confronted by the statement that "Daniel Barenboim does not suffer fools gladly."

Normally the mind glides over cruel judgments such as this without bothering to think how cruel they are, but the drugs were turning me into a new person. I had become intensely aware of matters that had never before seemed worth being aware of.

Baker

The assertion about Barenboim's haughty attitude toward fools was extremely irritating, since for one thing Barenboim is one of my favorite pianists. I play his recordings often and have even now and then asked other persons present to shut up about football and admire his skill at handling a tricky allegro ma non troppo.

Now in my chemically renovated persona, I realized that (1) being utterly illiterate in music and (2) having only one ear fit for listening with, I have been foolish to fancy myself capable of enjoying Barenboim's work and doubly foolish for imposing my tin-eared judgment on friends eager to discuss football.

I was, in short, one of those very fools Barenboim did not suffer gladly. The thought produced a brooding so profound that, instead of proceeding straight to The Washington Post and Doonesbury, I stared out the window watching the last leaves fall for several hours until it was time to take some more pills.

As these spread through the body's essential juices and sank chemical tentacles into the folds of the brain, I began to feel like one of those Edgar Allan Poe characters seeing the world in incredibly minute detail.

Thus empowered with Poe-like vision, I saw it was entirely possible the reporter had thoughtlessly but cruelly misrepresented Barenboim. The truth might be that Mr. Barenboim not only suffered fools gladly, but positively adored fools, as every great man surely ought to.

What a depressing place the world would be without fools. Everything working precisely on time, everyone obeying orders, everybody appreciating what deserves to be appreciated and deploring what deserves to be deplored, everybody saluting and wading around hip-deep in seriousness, and not a single soul impious enough to call it "seriosity."

Quite possibly the reporter tossed off his judgment without even consulting Barenboim. As a newsperson once myself, I know how tempting it is to pass such judgments on famous people.

At first thought it seems flattering, the way words like "hard-nosed" and "tough-minded" seem flattering when applied to certain Washington titans who might just as sensibly be called "bestial" and "bloodthirsty," but for the reporter's need to have them return his phone calls.

I once myself wrote the same judgment — "does not suffer fools gladly" — about Dean Acheson, a famous American statesman of the mid-20th century. It seemed a flattering thing to say. It is hard to say why. There is surely something missing in a person who isn't glad when they send in the clowns.

Later I thought Acheson, a man of deeply subtle humor, must have taken a perverse joy in them because of the rich variety of clownishness with which the Congressional Republicans constantly denounced him as a parlor-pinko softie at the same time he was erecting the framework for the 50-year cold war that was to put Karl Marx out of business in Russia.

It was time for more pills. How long had I been staring out the window counting falling leaves? Being an Edgar Allan Poe character was not uninteresting as long as you could not hear the old man's heart beating under the floorboards.

A woman enters the kitchen and does something with a can of tuna fish. How strange that this huge species of sea beast should be shrunk down and confined into a can scarcely bigger than the cans from which Uncle Harry used to dip snuff with his penknife, and made to serve the needs of humanity — the giant tuna, that is; not Uncle Harry's snuff.

"Do you hear the old man's heart beating under the floorboards?" I ask the woman of the fish can. "Maybe we should let him up if he promises to start suffering fools gladly."

She advises lying down, getting some sleep. But I am afraid. I shall doubtless wake up well. But who will I be?

Commissioners' Court makes wrong decision

Our county Commissioners' Court has not been without some controversy in recent times. In my humble opinion they did it again by being overzealous with the budget and upholding the deletion of funding for the Veterans Service Office at their Oct. 20 meeting. The funding for this, which totals approximately $23,000 annually out of a budget of about $19,500,000, is a minuscule .00117 percent.

The hearing was attended by several dozen veterans and veterans' widows, some of whom rely greatly on VA assistance obtained through the efforts of the Veterans Service Office. It was apparent to me that the commissioners had their minds made up to reject it once again before hearing any arguments favoring the reinstatement of the Veterans Service Office. Their rationale was based upon budget restraints and a duplication of effort with these services available through other agencies and organizations. Commissioner Guy McCrary speculated that the Midland County VA assistance rolls would not decrease one bit by deleting the office. The importance and uniqueness of the Veterans Service Office was explained very well in the newspaper articles and letters to the editor in the Reporter-Telegram just before the hearing.

Therefore, I will not articulate further upon the very important and specialized functions of this office. My point in all of this is that by their actions, the county commissioners have taken the responsibility on their own shoulders for the void left by not funding this office in the future and will be personally liable to the veterans who would otherwise be served by the office. I am not fabricating this. The commissioners themselves agreed at the meeting that they would take this responsibility. It would be ironic if they were required to slave over VA forms.

Regardless, they should be ashamed of themselves for not upholding the veterans of this country to a greater priority and importance in the budget process.

United Way needs help to meet its goal

Since 1947 the people of Midland have been taking care of their own — first through the Community Chest, and since 1972, through the United Way of Midland. Over the years we have seen our booms and busts and many other changes, but the fundamentals that make Midland really special always have been the same. The people here have a rich tradition of taking care of their own and doing it in the most beneficial and constructive way.

The United Way of Midland is an independent organization, governed by a board that makes the local decisions and actively involves 1,000 working volunteers from the community. Out of every dollar raised, 99 cents stays in Midland and helps 36,000 people learn to help themselves and others. The United Way faces a special challenge in the 1995 campaign, and without your participation and support, many of the 16-member agencies will be forced to greatly reduce programs and services.

We have come up short only twice in 48 years — let this not happen again. Send your check before Nov. 16 to the United Way of Midland, P.O. Box 10070-79702, or call United Way headquarters at 682-4358 for additional information.

Readers' views on: City utilities

City needs to clean up its utilities act

Finally — finally — other people (the Muhlinghauses and others) are standing up to the city of Midland about its careless and arrogant deeds.

In May 1993 the city pumped raw sewage into both of my bathrooms. It was like geysers shooting two to three feet out of the commodes. They refused to clean up the mess or to pay for my carpets to be cleaned. They told me they were not responsible for this incident.

Three months later, I was stricken with a very rare, and potentially deadly, lung infection called Nocardia. I almost died from this infection.

After recovering from the illness, I sued the city of Midland in an effort to regain the expenses for the cleanup and some assurance that it would not happen again. Several city employees testified, under oath, to a multiplicity of untruths. They and their lawyers made me and my daughter look like fools. They were crude and ugly to us and about us, as if we had committed a crime.

The jury panel of six Midland residents then decided that the city was not guilty. (Unbelievable!) Some of the same people who testified had told me, at the outset, that I could not win against them.

Did I contract the lung disease from the filth pumped into my house? We don't know. (Scary isn't it?). Very little is known about the disease, Nocardia, because of its rarity. But we do know that it thrives in waste products and decomposing material.

Don't you think it is time the city utilities and government body did something about these horrendous and recurring problems?

Customer Service offers only rudeness

Back during July and August, my husband and I were leasing an apartment that required us to pay for our own water. During this time, we had problems with how outrageous our water bills were. Only my husband and I were living there, we did not have any overnight guests who would need a shower and no children. Our water bills were in the $60 and $70 range. We thought this was ridiculous considering how many people were living there.

When I called Customer Service at the water department to ask why our bill was so high, a rude Customer Service associate let me know right away that if the bill was that high, we must have used that much water. Well, with some research, we found that our parents' bill had been that high only when they'd watered the yard (which we did not have), and they each have three people living in their home. When I called the city back, they sent someone out to check our meter and it, of course, was right. And, supposedly the apartment maintenance people checked our toilets and our pipes, which were, of course, alright. Nothing was wrong with them.

OK, explain to me how two people in an apartment could use so much water? At this point, after fighting with the water department for two months, I was not so much concerned with how much the water bill was and if it was right or wrong, I wanted to know how we were using so much water. I thought the only way I could find out was by asking someone who, I thought, should know: the Customer Service associate at the water department. I soon found out I was wrong. These people were so rude to me that they hung up on me once, I hung up on them once, we yelled at each other on the phone, and they told me how wrong I was.

Well, yesterday, Nov. 1, I received a check from them for overpayment. There must have been something wrong. It looks like the customer was right, after all.

Readers' views on: Hospice troubles

Residents shouldn't confuse 2 hospices

It is unfortunate that on Sunday, Oct. 22, a great deal of negative publicity was reported in the Odessa American concerning Hospice of the Southwest, a local charity that serves the terminally ill in Ector County and numerous other West Texas counties. It seems that when the organization fell on hard financial times, certain creditors were prompted to investigate the situation and discovered fiscal practices that were considered extravagant by some.

The purpose of this letter is to explain that Hospice of Midland, Inc. is not associated with Hospice of the Southwest or any other hospice entity in any way and there should be no confusion on this matter. Generally, every not-for-profit hospice organization operates as a separate entity with its own board of directors, which is solely responsible for the operation of the hospice.

It is merely coincidence that Hospice of the Southwest and Hospice of Midland, Inc. have each chosen to use the name "Friends of Hospice" for a fund-raising arm of their organization, and even these two functions are completely unrelated.

Hospice of Midland, Inc. is very proud of the fact that approximately 87 percent of every dollar spent goes for patient care. We feel that our board has always practiced excellent stewardship over the funds entrusted to us. While we wish no ill-will to Hospice of the Southwest, we want to make sure that there is no confusion about the manner in which the hospice services are organized and to make sure that Hospice of Midland's name is kept clear of the publicity reported in Odessa.

Nan Holmquest
Treasurer-elect
Hospice of Midland, Inc.

Odessa American reports half-truths

West Texans should not believe everything they read about Hospice of the Southwest (HoSW). The Odessa American has charged HoSW with "lavish" and "extravagant" expenditures for food and entertainment and country-club dues, implying misappropriation of funds and mismanagement, but the independent audit completed two weeks ago showed no evidence of wrongdoing. The OA was given the results of the audit before publication. They chose to ignore its findings.

Of the approximately $1,000 per month in "lavish" and "extravagant" expenditures was $500 for a monthly staff breakfast/meeting/planning session. With 96 employees that represents $5.21 for each employee, once a month. $250 a month was country club dues (dropped earlier this year) so that management and staff could meet with local physicians, their principle source of referrals. The remainder represented normal business lunches and other "entertainment." My wife, who works for HoSW, recognized one of the "lavish" meals as her expense for take-out food when she and a nursing-home's staff worked through lunch to complete a new contract. This is neither "lavish" nor "extravagant."

The $1,000 a month represents only two-tenths of 1 percent (.2 percent) of HoSW's $6,000,000 budget. That's equivalent to one "lavish" Happy-Meal a month on a $2,000 a month salary. This is neither lavish nor extravagant.

HoSW's deficit of $300,000 is only 5 percent of revenues. The $1,000 a month represents less than 4 percent of the deficit. The actual source of the deficit is the almost half-million-dollars of care provided at no charge to people who could not pay through private insurance or Medicare.

Last year 88 percent of HoSW's funds went to direct patient care, similar to Hospice of Midland's 87 percent.

Finding no wrongdoing in their investigation, the OA editors chose innuendo, half-truths, omissions and misrepresentations to create a cloud of fear, uncertainty and doubt. They stirred up enough smoke to give the appearance of fire where no fire exists.

Who benefits from this irresponsible reporting? For whom is the OA working? The damage the OA has done to this fine agency, its dedicated, hard-working staff and their hundreds of clients is unforgivable. The question everyone must ask the Odessa American is "Why?"

Fences tell children we don't trust them

I'm writing in regard to the letter of Oct. 29 by Damion Sanders.

Have you lost your mind? Have you ever been in jail? Do you have kids, and if so, have they ever been jailed?

First let me say that I have not and neither has any of my kids, but I felt like I was taking them to jail every time I took them to school when we lived in California for three years.

Every school was surrounded by an eight-foot chain link fence with barbed wire on top.

The front doors were locked and bolted after the last bell. There were hardly any windows except for the ones in the cafeteria. There were security guards scanning every child that walked through those front doors — with a metal detector.

Sure we could build fences and spend extra money for security guards, but what kind of message are we sending to these kids?

We would be telling them that we don't trust them and we sure don't trust them on their own out in society.

Midland has its own hero in reverend

One of my favorite sections in the Readers Digest has been "Heroes for Today" because it highlights examples of individuals who have courage, kindness and decency. Well, I've added another person to my list of heroes right here in Midland — the Reverend Roy Smith.

As our nation is besieged by drugs, crime and acts of violence and people are wringing their hands trying to figure out what to do, Smith has been systematically reaching out to people in his sphere of influence and literally transforming lives. It takes great effort, persistence and unconditional love — all of which Smith and those who help him possess.

If you're tired of drug dealers, gang activity and crime in your neighborhood, give Smith a call at 570-1402. He'll give you a plan you can follow — if you've got the courage and a real desire to do it.

Production provides evening full of fun

Last night (Nov. 7) I went to the theater to see "It Runs in the Family"... a comedy. That is putting it mildly. It is hilarious.

Each and every person was perfect for their part and their delivery was superb. I am confident that no professional group anywhere could improve or compare with this cast. One had to listen closely, for the lines were fast with almost every one being funny.

I am sure everyone who saw the play would honestly say it was a laugh-a-line throughout the entire play with action matching as well as the expressions. As the play ended the last one off the stage gives one line that was a complete surprise and brought down the house. Folks were laughing all the way to the parking lot.

The intermission was a surprise and a delight. We had hot tea from beautiful silver urns and delicious finger cakes served on silver platters. It was beautiful. I am sure every person there would thank one and all for a wonderful fun-filled evening.

Residents can give a hand to Camp Fire

Knock, knock. When you hear this sound at your door, a Camp Fire boy or girl may be behind it. This month, Petro-Plains Council members will be selling chocolates throughout our community as part of a service project to keep alive important programs that foster self-esteem, develop decision-making skills and provide a positive support system for our youth. In addition, Camp Fire youth learn to plan, set goals, handle money, sell, work on public relations, keep records, provide service to the community and work together.

Camp Fire prides itself in recognizing the importance of learning and developing in a coeducation environment. Please support your local Camp Fire council by purchasing one or more boxes of chocolates.

We read so many disturbing stories about violent crime, drug use and domestic abuse and their impact on our youth. Camp Fire Boys and Girls is working hard to make a positive difference with programs such as Camp Fire on Wheels, Phone A Friend, Kids Care, Teens in Action and Club.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.
- We do not publish 'open' letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Nov. 12, the 316th day of 1995. There are 49 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 12, 1942, the World War II naval Battle of Guadalcanal began. Although both sides suffered heavy losses, the Americans won a major victory over the Japanese.

On this date:

In 1815, American suffragist Elizabeth Cady Stanton was born in Johnstown, N.Y.

In 1920, Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis was elected baseball's first commissioner of the American and National Leagues.

In 1921, representatives of nine nations gathered in the nation's capital for the start of the Washington Conference for Limitation of Armaments.

Rockets beat up Wolves as Olajuwon tops 20,000

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Another career milestone for Hakeem Olajuwon, another victory for the Houston Rockets. The two seem to go hand-in-hand.

Olajuwon scored 21 points Saturday night, becoming the 21st NBA player to compile 20,000 career points as the Rockets beat the Minnesota Timberwolves 119-97.

Sam Cassell and Robert Horry also had 21 points apiece for the Rockets. Sam Mitchell led Minnesota with 13 points in a game that Houston controlled from late in the second quarter.

Hawks 113, Mavericks 100

DALLAS — Dallas may be one of the fastest-mproving young teams in the NBA, but Atlanta still own them.

Andrew Lang scored six of his 21 points during an 18-0 fourth-quarter run to send the Mavericks to their first defeat of the season, 113-100 Saturday night.

Dallas was off to a 4-0 start, the best in team history, before Atlanta beat the Mavericks for the sixth straight time.

■ NBA Roundup

Hornets 123, Raptors 117

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Larry Johnson scored 12 of Charlotte's 18 points in overtime to help it to a victory over Toronto.

Johnson finished with 34 points as the Hornets turned back the expansion Raptors' bid to get their first road victory. Glen Rice added 31 points and 10 rebounds for the Hornets, who are off to their first 3-0 start at home in the franchise's eight years.

Magic 94, Heat 93

ORLANDO, Fla. — Anfernee Hardaway's driving layup with 1.2 seconds remaining gave Orlando its only lead of the game as the Magic handed Miami its first loss of the season. Billy Owens scored 18 points for Miami.

Nets 86, Kings 84

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The New Jersey Nets held the Kings scoreless for the final 3:49, rallying over short-handed Sacramento, which lost for the first time this season.

Kevin Edwards led the Nets with 24 points.

Mitch Richmond had 17 for the Kings, and Sarunas Marciulionis and Olden Polynice each added 16.

Bulls 110, Trail Blazers 106

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan scored 15 of his 36 points in the fourth quarter as the Chicago Bulls came back to beat Portland.

Rod Strickland had 29 points and 11 assists for the Trail Blazers, who finished a 1-3 road trip.

Scottie Pippen added 21 points for the Bulls.

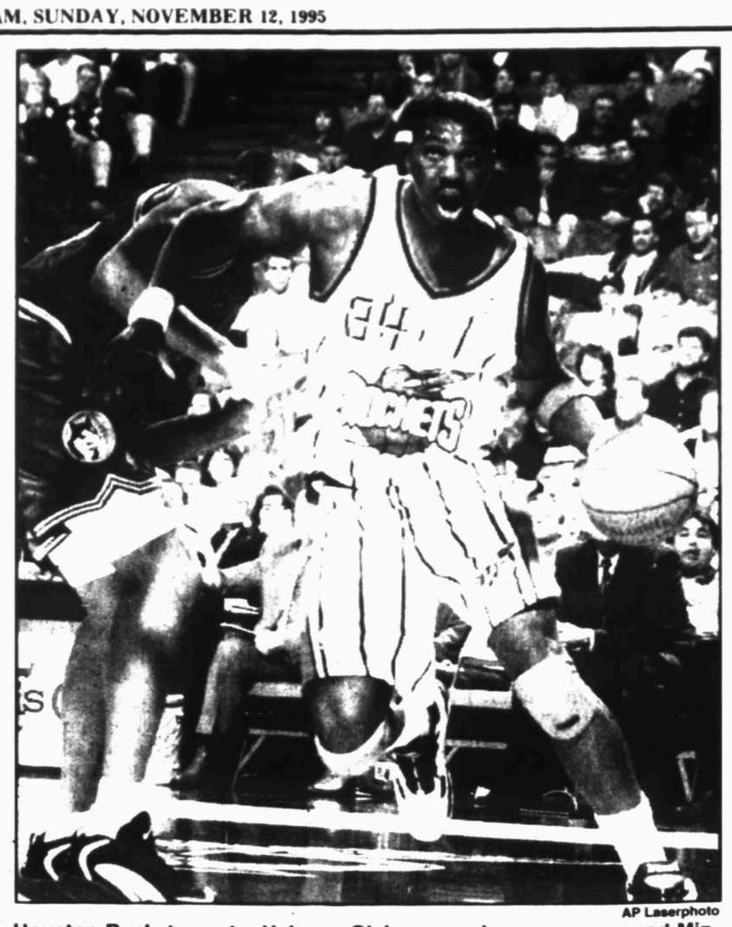

SuperSonics 117, Grizzlies 81

SEATTLE — Shawn Kemp scored 24 points and Hersey Hawkins added 22 as the Seattle SuperSonics routed Vancouver in their first regular-season meeting.

Benoit Benjamin led Vancouver with 14 points.

Warriors 123, Lakers 105

OAKLAND, Calif. — Chris Mullin had 23 points and top draft pick Joe Smith had his first NBA double-double as Golden State beat Los Angeles.

NASCAR: Points title in reach of Gordon be a focus on my mind going into this race.

"He is virtually going to have to not start the first lap (for me to have a chance)," added Earnhardt, who trails Gordon by 142 points. "As soon as he comes back around for that first lap, it'll be a shoo-in.

"We've got to go out there and do the best job we can and try to win. A lot of other teams here want to win, too."

Gordon really didn't want to talk about the championship Saturday as rain delayed the day's on-track activities, washing out second-round qualifying.

"Tomorrow, after the race, I'll have plenty to say," Gordon said with a smile. "I mean, you just can't talk about anything being a done deal. Even if it's only one position, finishing 42nd can happen. We're not going out there to finish 41st, but there is still a small percentage of chance it (finishing last) could happen."

Being on the 1.522-mile Atlanta oval is a plus for Gordon, who has had previous success here. In fact, he won the Atlanta race in March.

"A lot has changed since the last time we were here," Gordon said, referring to aerodynamic changes to the dominating Chevys mandated by NASCAR during the season. "Some rules have changed with the Monte Carlo, but when we get past those first few laps, we'll be just fine."

Darrell Waltrip will start from the pole in a Chevrolet, with Ricky Rudd's Ford Thunderbird alongside in the front row.

General Tire Hoosier 500

HAMPTON, Ga. — Tim Steele survived a race of attrition Saturday to win the General Tire Hoosier 500 (kilometer) ARCA stock car race at Atlanta Motor Speedway.

Mike Skinner, champion in the inaugural season of NASCAR's SuperTruck series, was Steel's main competition throughout much of the 312-mile event on Atlanta's 1.522-mile oval as he led six times for 109 laps and Steele four times for 64, including the final 32.

But, eight laps from the end of the 204-lap race, Skinner was involved in a melee that saw him run into the side of Bob Hill as the two battled for second place. As Hill spun, fourth-place Joe Bessey hit the car a glancing blow, then ricocheted into Skinner. Both Skinner and Bessey were able to keep their cars under control and continue, but Skinner was black-flagged to the pits for rough driving.

Colbert leading at Senior Championship

The Associated Press

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. — For Jim Colbert, the proof is in the putting. At least that was what he credited for his amassing a six-stroke lead heading into the final round of the $1.5 million Senior Tour Championship.

On Saturday, Colbert shot a 1-under-par 71 to set himself up with a chance to become the first wire-to-wire winner of this select tournament.

"I made some good pars. I putted wonderfully," said Colbert, who said he moved closer to the ball at the 11th hole and instantly started hitting crisper shots. "I wasn't hitting it good until I got to 11."

Last year, he tied for last in the field of the tour's top 31 money-winners.

"I feel good," Colbert said as gale-force winds whipped in off the Atlantic Ocean and on to The Dunes Golf & Beach Club. "I don't know the outcome of tomorrow. I have every confidence to show up, to play my heart out and live with the results. If you can't lay it all out there for everyone to see, you ought to do something else."

Colbert's closest challengers for the $262,000 first-place check are Dave Stockton, Rocky Thompson and Ray Floyd, all at 214. Thompson had a third-round 68, while Stockton and Floyd had 69s.

Isao Aoki, who started the round two shots behind Colbert, ballooned with a 75 and is among six golfers at 215.

Colbert's still a bit nervous about a repeat of last year's scenario when Jim Albus — who also led after each of the first three rounds — lost a six-stroke lead on the final 18 holes to Floyd, the eventual winner in a five-hole playoff.

"I hope that doesn't happen again," Colbert said.

Floyd is in a similar position with no players to catch except Colbert.

"It's going to be a challenge," he said. "Raymond is a terrific wind player and he is very good at figuring out the wind.

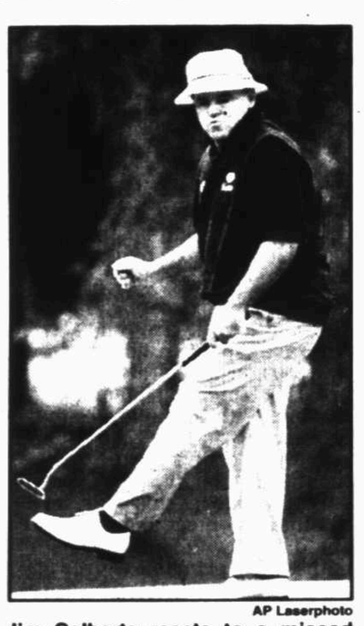

"There's no reason to look over your shoulder. Unless it's an unusual week, somebody is going to play well. There will be good numbers. I know I have to have a good number, whatever that is."

Thompson said Colbert could be caught — if he shoots a 78.

"He seems to not think you can shoot over par on this golf course," Thompson said. "Jim is a very bright man, unfortunately. If he was a little dense between the ears, we'd have more of a chance."

On Saturday, Tom Wargo was Colbert's closest challenger, pulling within two shots with a birdie on the par-3 12th. But on 18, Wargo hit his second shot just over the pond at the green and the ball rolled back into the water.

He chipped on and two-putted for a triple-bogey 7 and a 73, joining the crowd at 215.

"Tom Wargo played a lot better than me and he almost putted as well," Colbert said. "He really played terrific, but he didn't get any mercy."

The tournament is sponsored by Energizer.

World Cup of Golf

SHENZHEN, China (AP) — Fred Couples and Davis Love III headed toward a record fourth straight title after extending their lead to 10 strokes Saturday after three rounds of the World Cup of Golf.

In the first major golf tournament in China, Love shot six birdies on the 7,039-yard, par-72 Mission Hills Golf Club course for a 4-under 68. Couples added a 70 to give the United States a three-day, 25-under par 407.

Japan moved from fourth to second place, one stroke ahead of Scotland, after Hisayuki Sasaki carded a 67 and teammate Hiroshi Goda had a 70.

Sasaki, who shot a World Cup record 10-under par 62 in the first round, maintained his lead for the individual honor with a three-day score of 198, two strokes ahead of Love.

"We didn't play that great today, but no one who was close made a run at us," Love said. "The key tomorrow is to be patient."

Couples said the 10-stroke lead gives his team the "opportunity to be more aggressive than we would if we only led by a couple."

Sasaki was happy with his round.

"For three days, I hit solid shots," he said.

Scotland's Sam Torrance and Andrew Coltart, who won the Dunhill Cup last month, finished at 418. Torrance shot a 64 for a three-day 202 and Coltart carded a 72 for 216.

The Swedish pair of Jesper Parnevik and Jarmo Sandelin, who were four strokes behind the United States coming in, fell to a fourth-place tie with Australia at 419.

Parnevik, who had a hole-in-one Friday, had a 73 in the third round for a 206 total. His partner, Jarmo Sandelin, also had a 73 for 213.

Last year, the Americans won by 14 strokes over Zimbabwe, equaling a record set by Ben Hogan and Sam Snead in 1956.

Also last year, Couples won the International Trophy for the best individual score of 23-under par 265, and Love finished third with 271. Their 72-hole combined score of 40-under 536 was the lowest in World Cup history.

Thirty-two nations are participating in the $1.5 million tournament at the Jack Nicklaus-designed ITPC course.

Organizers said next year's tournament will be played in South Africa.

CLASSIC: Baker has career-high 39 points in defeat

(From 1C)

15 seconds to play to put away the Chaparrals, who had fought back within four points, 77-73.

Rafferty conceeded there may have been a mistake, but according to the rules, that it should have never been corrected so long after the fact.

"It was their (Mesa) bench's responsibility to keep up with that and point it out to the officials when it happened," said Rafferty. "Because the official book is the only book that matters. Not the radio book, not my stat keeper's book, not the media's book."

The Chaparrals, behind a career-high 39 points from sophomore D'Juan Baker, rallied from a 10-point deficit in the first half but could never quite take control of the game against the talented Thunderbirds. Midland only led once in the game when Ceedric Goodwyn, who has been out of the lineup with a sprained ankle since the first game, hit his third three-point goal of the night to give the Chaps a 68-66 lead with 5:04 remaining.

But Mesa quickly took the lead back 72-68 on two driving layups by Jim Christensen and the Thunderbirds never let up. They padded their lead with six free throws in the final 15 seconds, four off fouls and two more off a technical foul issued to Rafferty.

"I loved how our kids hung in there," said Rafferty. "I was mad as hell after the game but I was not mad at them."

In the Lady Chaps' victory, freshman post Ndaisse Ndaiye led in scoring for the second-straight night with 24 points. Freshman point guard Kellina Bradshaw, who is only 5-foot-3, also sparked the Lady Chaps with a team-high tying nine rebounds. Three others — Erica Knight, Malyssa Thorngren and Ndiaye — also pulled down nine rebounds as Midland simply outclassed Paris.

The Lady Chaps took the early lead 17-7 at one point in the first half, but outscored the Lady Dragons 15-0 in a span of about five minutes to take a 31-7 lead that was never threatened.

"I was pleased because I thought we played with a lot more energy than we did last night," said MC coach Ron Jones. "I didn't think we played bad the night before but we just had no energy.

"We weren't moving our feet and our offense never had a chance to get going," said Jones. "But tonight we moved our feet a lot better and that got us into a running game like we wanted."

Besides Ndaiye, four other Lady Chaps scored in double figures. Freshmen Fatou Cisse' and Mandi White each had 10 points while sophomores Brandy Wright had 10 and Malyssa Thorngren added 11.

Trinity drops final game

Abilene Christian warmed up for the TAPPS playoffs with a 56-6 win over Trinity in Midland Saturday. The Panthers scored in the third period to end the Six-Man District 1 game with the 45-point rule. Trinity's Chargers finish 4-6 overall and 1-3 in district. The Panthers are 9-1, 3-1.

Brad Glasscock scored Trinity's only touchdown on an 8-yard run. Senior Chris Timko had 45 yards receiving on three catches. Daniel Scott played well at fullback, Trinity coach Bill Young said. Sophomore Will Crump led the team in tackles at defensive end and freshman L. T. Burns had two interceptions.

Oilers take on Bengals in Central division matchup

HOUSTON (AP) — Out of reams of statistics on the Cincinnati Bengals, Houston Oilers coach Jeff Fisher was focused on one particular line while preparing for Sunday's AFC Central matchup.

Twenty-four pass completions in 46 attempts, 356 yards, three touchdowns, no interceptions, one sack. Those numbers were racked up by Cincinnati quarterback Jeff Blake when the Oilers and Bengals tangled the first time this season.

"That's the biggest stat I'm concerned with right now, and that's where this football team is now," Fisher said.

Houston won that first meeting 38-28, but it took a near-flawless performance by quarterback Chris Chandler, who completed 23 of 26 passes for 352 yards and four touchdowns.

The Oilers can't count on another career performance from Chandler.

Last year, Blake completed 23 of 33 passes for 354 yards.

EMPLOYERS ARE TALKING ABOUT US.

Here is what just one business leader had to say about civilian career opportunities for Army alumni:

"Military experience provides many benefits for...graduates that ultimately makes them worthwhile candidates for industry. I encourage employers to seriously consider and to employ these young people as we do at Honeywell."

NOTICE TO PUBLIC OF FINDINGS OF NO SIGNIFICANT IMPACT ON THE ENVIRONMENT and NOTICE TO PUBLIC OF REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF FUNDS
November 12, 1995

On or about December 4, 1995, the City of Midland (City), Midland County, Texas will request the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to release Federal funds under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (P.L. 93-383) for the following:

Street paving on California Street 700-800 blocks; Jefferson Street 800 block ($100,000).

Washington Park Swimming Pool Reconstruction ($295,000).

FINDING OF NO SIGNIFICANT IMPACT

It has been determined that such a request of release of funds will not constitute an action significantly affecting the quality of the human environment and accordingly the City has decided not to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (P.L. 91-190). The reason for such decision not to prepare such a Statement is based upon the fact that all environmental concerns could either be minimized or mitigated.

The City has prepared an Environmental Review Record (ERR) on the above projects which documents the environmental review of the projects and set forth the reasons why an EIS is not required. The ERR is on file in the Community Development Office, Room 520, City Hall, at the address below and is available during regular business hours for public examination and copying upon request.

No further environmental review of the projects is proposed to be conducted prior to the request for release of Federal funds.

PUBLIC COMMENTS ON FINDINGS

All interested agencies, groups and persons disagreeing with this decision are invited to submit written comments for consideration to the City at the address set forth below. Written comments should be received at the addressed specified on or before November 27, 1995. All comments received will be considered and the City will not request the release of funds or take administrative action on the project prior to the date specified above.

RELEASE OF FUNDS

The City will undertake the projects described above with Community Development Block Grant funds under Title I from its fiscal 1995 and 1993 programs under grants numbered B-93-MC-48-0023 and B-95-MC-48-0023, respectively, from the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974. The City is certifying to HUD that the City and Mr. Robt. E. Burns, in his official capacity as Mayor, consent to accept the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts if an action is brought to enforce responsibilities in relation to environmental reviews, decision-making and action; and that these responsibilities have been satisfied. The legal effect of the certifications is that upon its approval the City may use the Block Grant funds and HUD will have satisfied its responsibilities under the National Environmental Policy Act. HUD will accept an objection to its approval only on one of the following bases: (a) that the certifications were not in fact executed by the certifying officer or other officer of the City approved by HUD; or (b) that the ERR for this project indicates omission of a required decision, finding or step applicable to the projects in the environmental review process. Objections must be prepared and submitted in accordance with the required procedure (24 CFR Part 58) and should be addressed to HUD, P.O. Box 2905, Fort Worth, Texas 76113-2905. Objections to the release of funds on bases other than those stated above will not be considered by HUD. No objections received after December 18, 1995, will be considered by HUD.

KIA

It's about time everyone had a well-made car.

A funny thing happened on the way to the showroom.

Actually, to be perfectly honest, the Kia engineers didn't seem to think it was all that funny.

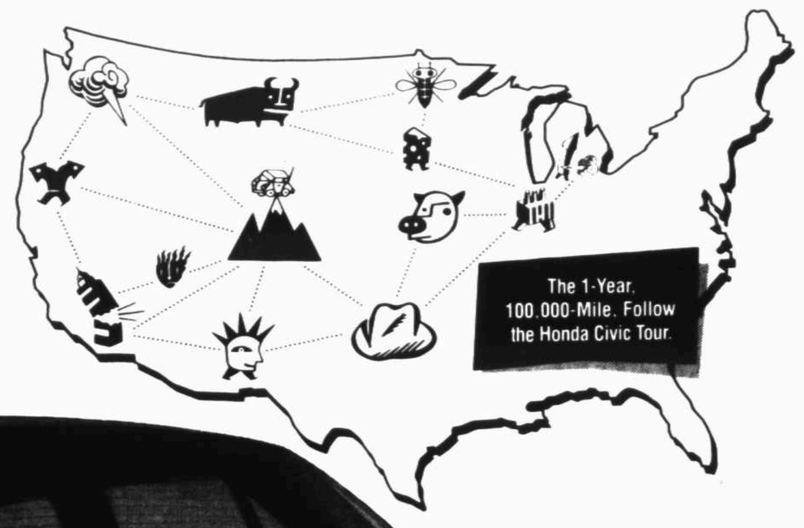

We had them take two of our Sephia sedans on a 100,000-mile spin around the country. From the suffocating heat of Death Valley to the spit-freezing cold of a Minnesota winter. With a 14,000-foot grind to the top of Pikes Peak thrown in for good measure.

A full year and countless greasy truck-stop burgers later, we were convinced the Sephia was tough enough to survive life in Everytown, USA. And having driven the full 100,000 miles right alongside a Honda Civic, we know we're in pretty good company durability-wise.

We even learned a thing or two along the way that helped us to make our car even better.

The Sephia sedan can now be found parked in the showroom of the dealer listed below, starting at under $9,300. Stop in and take one on a test drive of your own. A considerably shorter one, please.

As for the Kia engineers, we're sure that some day they'll have a good laugh over this.

Original chic

Photographs by Curt Wilcott

Terra cotta flagstones, flower beds and ornamental fountains make the atrium a unique place to be - or in this case work. Light levels are controlled by electric solar screens.

By Kes Gilhome

There are plenty of large houses in Midland and there are many imposing properties, but few can hold a candle to this superlative family home. Nestling behind an unprepossessing wall, this is a very private, quiet house with a number of startling features.

Vaguely reminiscent of a Frank Lloyd Wright design with its muted tones and horizontal lines, the house offers homeowners an opportunity to live in a house that is truly unique.

One of the most interesting features of the overall design is the way the house and grounds blend together. Because the sides and rear of the house are enclosed by high walls the designers have been able to open the house up with masses of windows and glass sliding doors to allow charming views from every room.

What is different about this approach is that the builders have used many of the same features which are found in the terraces inside the house. For example: the same glazed terra cotta tiles are used inside and out which imparts a feeling of continuity. Ornamental fountains and flower beds are also to be found inside the property - particularly in the formal areas.

The end result is the illusion that there is no boundary between the pool area, terraces and the house proper.

Perhaps the most startling aspect of the formal rooms is the large, sun-drenched atrium which opens onto the formal living and the formal dining rooms. Its high, cathedral ceilings are glassed in with electric solar-screens for controllable light levels. A fountain, flower beds and muted tiles complete the picture.

The kitchen, is as one would expect, stunning. Fully equipped with stainless steel appliances, including a range and warming ovens built-into the 'Z' shaped island. Masses of storage space and an unusual roof design with inset windows of varying sizes help to make this a very pleasant room to be in. With copious amounts of work space, a built-in desk with shelves this is a room that can cope with everyday living as easily as it can large parties.

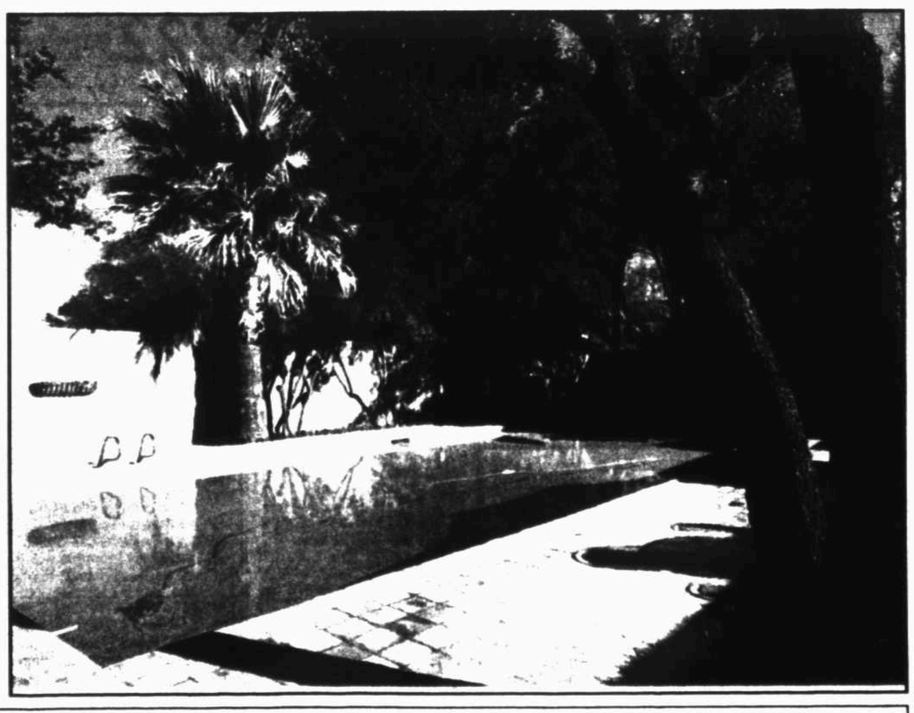

Exciting features are found in just about very single room in this four bedroom home. The sequestered family room for example offers a separate hot-tub room, fireplace and built-in bookshelves.

For more information about this unique property at 1205 W. Golf Course (which is listed at $244,000) either stop by the open house this afternoon between 2 and 4p.m. or call the listing broker, Joanne Langston of Langston Realtors at 685-0400

The kitchen (left) blends form with function and features all of the conveniences one would expect from a home of this caliber. Immaculately designed, it is a large comfortable room with masses of work and storage space.

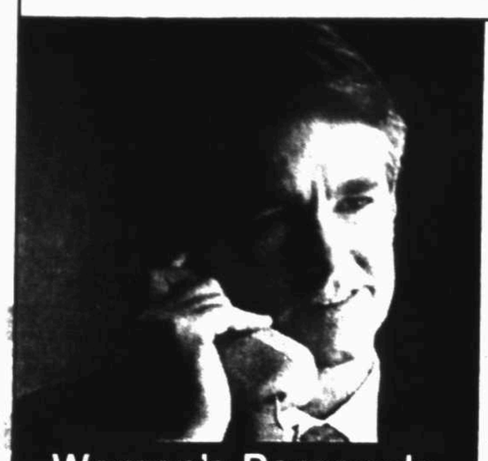

The pool area (right) offers a tropical flavor and is perfectly designed for outdoor parties and relaxing. The pool itself is huge and - unusually - is very 'swimmable', making it perfect for proper exercising as well as parties. An outdoor bar and kitchen area helps with the soirees.

NOW HIRING FOR OUR NEW KENT KWIK ON WADLEY & LOOP 250

KENT KWIK
CONVENIENCE STORES

How Does Your Job Stack Up Against Team Kent?

SALARY
Our minimum starting salary is $5/hour, Manager trainees can start at $300 a week or more (depending on experience.) We also give you a SIGNING BONUS of $200 ($100 for part-timers) at the completion of your first week!

SECURITY and FLEXIBILITY
Kent Kwik offers stable employment year-round. If you aren't getting enough hours (at least 40) at your current job, WE CAN GIVE THEM TO YOU! If you want to work part-time, we can work with you to tailor-make a schedule that meets your needs! Our stores are open 7 days a week, with many open 24 hours a day. We have some hours available for all shifts. Full-timers work a five day week!

BENEFITS
We offer medical, dental and life insurance to our full-time Team Members. We also have paid vacations, a sick pay plan, college tuition reimbursement ($300 a semester), several bonus plans, and a profit sharing plan. In addition, all Team Members are covered by a $150,000 accidental death life insurance policy!

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES
95% of our Managers started at the entry-level and received the training necessary to become successful at running a small business. We offer continual classroom education in customer service and personal leadership skills. You can tell the difference high-quality training makes when you come into one of our Kent Kwiks.

SO HOW DO WE MEASURE UP?
Where will you be one year from now if you stay with your present company? With Kent, the chances are very high that you could be running one of our locations, making $20,000 or more, plus bonuses! If all of this interests you, the first step is to pick up an application at any one of our Kent Kwiks, complete it, and bring it to our Midland area office (3314 No. Loop 250) between 8 A.M. and 3 P.M. Monday - Friday. If you live in Odessa, we take applications at 809 So. Crane Hwy. On Tuesdays at 1 P.M. and Saturdays at 10 A.M. You will then take a battery of tests and questionnaires which give us the information we need to determine if you have the customer service attitude, math skills and work ethics required to be successful in our business. We also do criminal and credit background checks, and a drug test is required. Relocation within our operating areas may be available.

Setting the Standards for "Home" Value

We understand that value is a personal combination of:

- The right neighborhood
- Superior quality construction
- Exceptional customer service
- A design that fits your lifestyle
- All at a reasonable price

If a house is built with just the right combination of these features it becomes a "Home" which you will value for years to come. Visit us today and let us help you build that "Home" of your dreams.

Driving Miss Daisy

ODESSA - Relationships take center stage at Permian Playhouse, 310 W. 42nd, during the run of Alfred Uhry's Pulitzer Prize winning play "Driving Miss Daisy."

"The play mainly centers on relationships," said director Christopher J. Olsen. "Relationships on a different level. Because of the time period prior to the civil rights movement, we see different relationships between black and white, and then also between Jewish as opposed to Christian. Then relations between men and women, mother and son, and, most importantly, friend to friend."

Remaining performances for "Driving Miss Daisy" are at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday and at 2:30 p.m. Nov. 19. The production is underwritten by ICA Properties and New Pillow cases, dish towels, quilts, sweaters, tablecloths, bedspreads and ball gowns form part of the Museum of the Southwest's "Needleworks: Blending Art & Craft" exhibition on display through Nov. 26.

"The exhibit is set up as if you were visiting someone's home," said Melanie Leigh Mathewes, curator of education. "We set up vignettes. We have a bedroom, a dining room, and a living room, and the objects are seen as they might be seen in your home.

"Often times we take needlework for granted. They are items that decorate our home, and we often overlook these works of art." The exhibition is an attempt, Ms. Mathewes said, to make viewers pause and reevaluate the items they have in their homes.

"Items in the exhibit range from embroidered pillow cases and dish towels made from salt or flour sacks to delicately smocked and embroidered christening items; from quilts lined with

The Creation

'Haydn, himself, told his biographer he was never as 'devout' in his whole life as he was when he was writing 'Creation.' The arias are very warm and beautiful; the choruses are splendid and majestic and represent some of the most gratifying writing for the choral musician in the literature.'

—Rob Hunt, MOSC director, conductor

The five soloists to perform "Creation" with the Midland-Odessa Symphony Orchestra are Mike Jordan, Janet Menzie, Arun Sharma, Julie Sharma and Joe Duerksen.

The inspiration for the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's performance Saturday of Haydn's "The Creation" struck years ago when conductor Rob Hunt moved to Midland.

"When I first came here, I asked a lot of people what they would like to hear and what they thought that the chorale members would enjoy singing," said Hunt, who had been hired as director of the Chorale. He is now music director and conductor of the MOSC.

Then Hunt was looking for ways to build the size of the ensemble. "At the time, the Chorale was very small, and I wanted to see it grow."

He spoke with Brad Kisner, the former minister of music at First United Methodist Church. "I remember sitting in his office looking across his desk and hearing him say, 'You need to do 'The Creation.' All the good singers will want to come and be a part of this.'

"That's one of the little moments that stuck in my mind all these years," Hunt said. "And we now have a group that is certainly capable of performing a work like this successfully and in an inspired fashion."

The 8 p.m. performance, sponsored by Texaco, Flexbar Inc., Mr. and Mrs. Don Williams and Dr. James M. Humphreys, will be held at First Presbyterian Church, 800 W. Texas Ave. Admission is $10 for adults, $9 for senior citizens, $5 for students and free to music students. For more information call 563-0921.

"The place we're going to be performing in is uniquely suited to a performance of this type," Hunt said. "The acoustics of the First Presbyterian Church are always gratifying to the performers and utterly perfect for 18th century music, which requires the warmth of a lively acoustic environment, but also requires some clarity. The church sanctuary provides this kind of balance."

"The Creation" was first performed at a private concert in Vienna in 1798. It was an

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Midlander performs

LUBBOCK — Amy Kendrick, a junior at Greenwood High School, is principal horn for the Lubbock Youth Symphony Orchestra, which opens its season 3 p.m. concert today in Hemmle Recital Hall on the Texas Tech University campus.

The LYSO includes 94 student musicians ranging in age from 12 to 18. Membership in the orchestra is by audition only. Students in the LYSO represent the immediate Lubbock area as well as Levelland, Plains, Plainview, Post, Slaton, Lamessa, Amarillo and Midland.

Also performing today will be the Lubbock Youth Symphony Apprentice Program Orchestra, a string training program for students ages 9 to 15.

Soloist will be Laura Jensen, who will be performing the first movement, Moderato, of the Cello Concerto in C Major by Haydn.

Required minimum donations, which will be accepted at the door, are $4 for adults and $2 for seniors and students.

Ballet planned

Ballet Magnificat, the first full-time professional ballet company formed with the purpose of sharing the Gospel, will perform 7 p.m. Tuesday at Mid-Cities Community Church, 8700 W. Highway 191.

Ballet Magnificat was founded in 1986 by Kathy Thibodeaux, who was the Silver Medalist at the II USA International Ballet Competition. The troupe has been featured on "700 Club" and has been a guest at the Christian Music Artists' Seminar in Estes Park, Colo.

The troupe is featured in Twila Paris' recently released video, "God is in Control." The repertoire includes ballets set to music by Sandi Patti, Steve Fry, John Michael Talbot and Steve Green.

The company performs over 100 times annually across the United States and Canada.

Ballet Magnificat has a school in Jackson, Miss.

Exhibit hosted

ODESSA — The Art Institute for the Permian Basin will host the exhibit "Design a Dream: Architecture Through the Ages" from Friday through Jan. 26.

This children's hands-on exhibit uses special architectural blocks and other building components for learning about historical structures. Computer design programs, an architect's drawing board and other design components also will be presented.

This exhibition will be a catalyst for class discussion of various periods of history and art, a study of dwellings from different countries and periods of history, as well as basic elements of design. This exhibit integrates various educational disciplines — art, math, science, history and writing.

The exhibit was co-designed by Johnson Seefeldt Architects of Odessa, MWM Architects and Art Institute staff and volunteers and is made possible by grants from Permian Basin Child's Play Inc., the Connoisseurs, Odessa Cultural Council and Partners for Excellence at Carver Center.

Docented tours are available for groups of five or more. For more information or to reserve a docented tour, call 1-915-368-7222.

Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged.

Car show set

ODESSA — The "1995 Super Tejano Car Show" is set for noon to 8 p.m. Nov. 19 at the Ector County Coliseum.

The show is being sponsored by Texas Tours with partial proceeds benefiting the DARE Program and MDA. Last year, more than 8,000 people attended the show.

This year's show will feature more than 200 cars from throughout the United States.

Festival scheduled

The sixth annual Tall City Arts and Crafts Festival is set for Saturday and Nov. 19 at Midland Center.

Original art and handcrafted items will be exhibited. Hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. Nov. 19.

No admission will be charged.

Crafts show set

The Telephone Pioneers of America will host its seventh annual Arts and Crafts Show Dec. 2-3 at the Midland County Exhibit Building, 2445 E. I-20 Business Loop service road.

Reservations for booth space are now being accepted. Spaces are 8 feet by 10 feet; rent is $30 for the weekend.

Profits from the show will benefit community projects such as Hug-a-Bears for needy children, birthday parties and Christmas gifts at nursing homes, Red Ribbon campaign expenses, food baskets for needy families at Thanksgiving and Christmas and room mothers for low income elementary schools.

For more information or to rent space call 682-3124.

Art Break planned

The Museum of the Southwest's Third Thursday Art Break lunch program, set for 12:15 Thursday, features artist Thomas Hart Benton.

Art Break is a discussion of art and artists conducted by Melanie Leigh Mathewes, curator of education. Participants are invited to bring lunches; the museum furnishes coffee and tea.

The Missouri-born Benton's work celebrated life in the Midwest.

Art Break is free to museum members and $20 for non-members. Thursday's Art Break will be held in the Stables Gallery and meeting room.

Artist to visit

EL PASO — Studio W Gallery, 5024 Doniphan Drive, is hosting Southwest artist Frank Howell in his first visit to El Paso Saturday and Nov. 19.

Howell, who lives in Santa Fe, N.M., will be present at receptions held in his honor from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. For more information call 1-915-584-9982.

As a poet and writer, Howell has written many books including "Gifts of the Crow Messengers," "Frank Howell Monotypes," and illustrated Frank Howell Lithographs," "Many Winters," "Past Winds," "Who Speaks for Wolf," "Stories of the Dreamwalkers" and "Spirit Walker."

Midlanders perform

ABILENE — Midlanders Julie Nance and Kristin McPeak will perform with Simmons Classic at the annual Baptist General Convention of Texas, Monday.

The performances will be at 12:30, 1:25 and 6:30 p.m. Simmons Classic, a select group of music students chosen from the Concert Choir at Hardin-Simmons, also will be performing at First Baptist Church in San Antonio today.

Miss McPeak is a junior music education major at Hardin-Simmons University.

Miss Nance, a junior psychology major and music minor at Hardin-Simmons, is the daughter of Debbie and James Nance. She was a member of Hardin-Simmons University's 1995 Homecoming Court. She is chaplain and senior representative on the Student Congress. In the past, she has served as freshman and senior representative.

In addition, Miss Nance has been the chairperson of Sigma Alpha SING for two years and also has served as freshman orientation leader. She is a member of Pioneer Drive Baptist Church where she works with children's choir.

Role performed

LUBBOCK — Actor Michael Moriarty of NBC-TV's "Law & Order" brings his newest role, that of defender of First Amendment rights, to Texas Tech University's Allen Theatre for a show 8 p.m. Tuesday.

His newest role began last year when Attorney General Janet Reno, Sen. Paul Simon and others claimed that dramatic violence on television was the cause of violence in the streets and threatened to censor the content of television shows.

Moriarty has since become an outspoken and highly visible defender of freedom of expression and a fiery critic of government attempts at censorship.

Admission is $6 for Tech students and $12 for the general public. For more information call Tech's ticket office at 742-3600.

Performance set

John Pizzarelli is to perform 8 p.m. Thursday at the Yucca Theatre.

Pizzarelli is being brought to Midland by the West Texas Jazz Society. Admission is free to WTJS members, $15 for non-members and $5 for students who are non-members. Reserved seating is $25 for non-members and $10 for members.

For more information call 563-1701.

Quartet performs

ODESSA — The Everest Quartet, resident string quartet of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale Inc., performs at 2 p.m. today at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 W. University.

The performance is sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. Smith Ray and Bill Schammel.

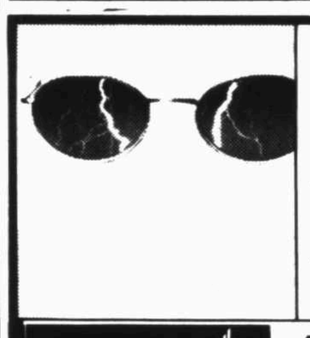

Admission is $10 for adults, $9 for senior citizens and $5 for students. No admission is charged to music students. Tickets are available at

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: The employment picture shows steady improvement. An unexpected windfall will make this Christmas all the merrier! The business barometer forecasts better times in 1996. Travel is part of your plan. Share your philosophy with others but do not try to force it on people. A loved one wants the two of you to start afresh. Forget old grievances and disappointments. True domestic bliss is still possible. Give it a try.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: songwriter Neil Young, sportscaster Al Michaels, figure skater Tonya Harding, gymnast Nadia Comaneci.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your search for a partner who shares your longing for adventure and change, will meet with success eventually. Attend small large social gatherings where eligibles will abound.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A project you thought finished, needs revision. Do it cheerfully. Invite good friends over for dinner instead of going out. The food will be better and you can save money.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Travel is both fun and educational. Take along a friend to share expenses. A writing assignment will produce extra income. Take steps to protect your ideas.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Diplomacy helps you get a new relationship off on the right foot. A change of lifestyle gives you greater energy. Your allies gather when a dispute breaks out.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Attending a ball game or social event together could trigger new feelings for a member of the opposite sex. Your popularity rises as you become less reclusive.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Look forward to a day of adventure and growth. A change of scenery will prove inspiring. You and your mate draw closer together. Expect to play a more influential role in this loved one's life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A family situation involving a teenager could be a real headache. A change of surroundings proves conducive to finding a solution. Your finances take a turn for the better.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Hobbies and creative work offer hours of diversion plus a possible source of income. An attractive member of the opposite sex may have romantic intentions. Enjoy a platonic relationship instead.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Complete household chores early so that you can get away. Visits to friends or family are fun if you avoid bringing up controversial subjects. Romance is moving ahead very quickly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A good day to relax in comfort with good friends or close relatives. A visitor could add sparkle to a ho-hum affair. A blind date turns out better than expected. Extend an invitation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Curb a tendency to make snap judgments. You need time to mull over possible solutions to a recurring problem. Avoid being aggressive with your loved ones. Treat them tenderly. Curtail spending while building savings.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Continue to view life with your customary optimism. An unexpected development may direct your attention to a professional arrangement. Clear up a financial question. Your romantic partner responds to your overtures. Get together with friends tonight.

Opening lead: Nine of ♠ Against popular opinion, the club captain selected Tommy to play on the team in the local inter-club championship. As you know, for some peculiar reason Tommy starred only when trumps broke badly. However, the captain's choice was soon vindicated. This was the second hand of the match.

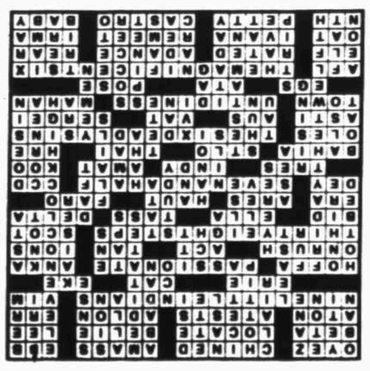

Once Tommy opened the bidding, it was simply a matter of how high the moon. North took matters slowly until discovering that Tommy had club length and no stopper in either spades or diamonds. Roman key-card Blackwood elicited the response that Tommy held two aces and the queen of clubs, followed by one king. North could stand it no longer.

West led a top-of-nothing spade and kibitzers were beginning to wonder where Tommy would go wrong, until East showed out on the ace of clubs at trick two. Before their very eyes Tommy transformed into a bridge superman.

Tommy returned the two of clubs, taking the marked finesse of the ten. The remaining spade honor was cleared, declarer came to hand with the king of hearts and ruffed a spade. After cashing the king of clubs, all that was left to do was for Tommy to enter the closed hand with the ace of diamonds and draw the last trump with the queen. The king of diamonds, remaining trump and ace-queen of hearts took the last four tricks.

At the other table the contract was six clubs, just making. Tommy and the club were off to a flying start.

newspapers or wool batting to wall hangings pieced and quilted with abstract designs; from modern hand-knitted sweaters with embroidery or other embellishment to tatted and crocheted doilies, collars, tablecloths and bedspreads plus antique samplers," Enid Davis, publicist for the museum, said in describing the locally created show.

Ms. Mathewes said the exhibit includes a comment book where visitors are invited to express their feelings. "One visitor, in particular, said that she was going to have to look at her own treasures a little more carefully."

The exhibit is sponsored by Norwest Bank, Mary de Compiegne, Suzy Boldrick, Mrs. Charles Dean, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Tighe, Mr. and Mrs. David N. Grimes, Joseph de Compiegne with assistance from the Quilters Guild, Tumbleweed Chapter of Smocking Arts Guild, Embroider's Guild, Tall City Stitchers, American Needlepoint Guild, Stitching Post and Needle Nook.

In addition, the exhibit features gowns from the Fiesta Ball in San Antonio, made possible through the International Museum of Folk Art, Santa Fe, N.M.

"They are very fantastic ball gowns," Ms. Mathewes said. "The trains are about 7 feet long.

SING: Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale to perform 'The Creation' immediate success. Performances in Vienna, Paris — where the musicians had a large gold medal made for the composer — London and the United States soon followed.

"Haydn was inspired when he visited London in the 1790s to direct his attention to large, sacred works involving chorus," Hunt said. "When he left London for the second time in 1795, he had written 104 symphonies. He never wrote another symphony and, for the next few years of his life, created some of the greatest masterpieces of the choral orchestral repertoire."

The works were influenced by the music of Handel, which Haydn heard in London, and by Haydn's innovative symphonic work. "So you have works that have a tremendous expressive power and range and were in their own time grand entertainments," Hunt said.

The oratorios are really "musical theater without costumes and sets," Hunt said. "When the Puritans outlawed the theater in England, composers simply adapted by writing oratorios usually based on an Old Testament subject but they had the same dramatic elements as opera."

"The Creation" paraphrases Scripture, particularly Genesis and Psalms. It also draws from John Milton's "Paradise Lost."

"Haydn got this libretto (which is organized around the seven days of creation) from an anonymous source while he was in England, and we really don't know the evolution of this libretto," Hunt said. "Because it's very Miltonic in tone, and many of the lines are straight from Milton, it's been adapted a lot. In fact, the original version published in 1800 has a lot of very awkward English in it. I prefer to do a modern translation."

The symphony is performing a translation by Robert Shaw, the conductor of the Atlanta Symphony. "I think it's a very effective translation," Hunt said. "And it is certainly working well for our performing forces."

Those forces include the symphony, chorale and the guest soloists — Joe Duerksen as the archangel Uriel, Michael Jordan as the archangel Raphael, Janet Menzie as the archangel Gabriel and Arun Sharma and Julie Sharma, as Adam and Eve respectively.

"Perhaps a charming feature of our performance is that Adam and Eve are played by a husband and wife — Arun and Julie Sharma. They are superb singers who are well known to our community."

The solos in "The Creation" Hunt described as "some of the most rapturous and beautiful in the whole oratorio repertoire. "The solos often celebrate in great detail the workings of the world as if Haydn were a little bit under the spell of the Enlightenment. This is not to downplay the religious impulse behind the work.

"Haydn, himself, told his biographer he was never as 'devout' in his whole life as he was when he was writing 'Creation.' The arias are very warm and beautiful; the choruses are splendid and majestic and represent some of the most gratifying writing for the choral musician in the literature."

The work also includes, Hunt said, "Endless little musical plays on specific words in the text. The alert listener will be very entertained."

The opening part of "The Creation," Haydn referred to as a representation of chaos. "Strange little musical figures appear as flotsam in an interstellar void, and they gradually come together, grow and take on an intelligible form as melodies," Hunt said.

"It's one of the most stunning moments in all of music accomplished by harmonic language that is at least 75 years ahead of its time.

There's even an eight bar phrase that bears a striking resemblance to Wagner's 'Tristan and Isolde (first performed in Munich in 1865)' prelude."

Hunt, who became the musical director of the MOSC this season, called "The Creation" "a fascinating work.

"It strikes me that science and faith meet in this work in a uniquely 18th Century way. You feel the excitement that the 18th Century educated person was feeling as more was learned about our universe everyday much as the educated person of today might be feeling a certain excitement over the prospects of communication technology."

Hunt ranked "The Creation" as the second most popular oratorio written. He placed Handel's "Messiah" first. "I don't think it's been performed in Midland-Odessa in a long time," Hunt said of Haydn's work. Those attending the performance "have the chance to experience a major artistic work that perhaps they won't have another chance to hear for a long time again."

PLAY: Permian Playhouse to present 'Driving Miss Daisy' man Outdoor Advertising.

(From 1E)

Tickets are $8 for adults and $6 for senior citizens and students with Midland College students admitted free with a valid ID. For reservations call 1-915-362-2329.

The story, set in the South, covers 25 years from 1948 to 1973. "It's actually 25 different scenes so it's a look at their lives across these 25 years through these little vignettes," Olsen said. "We have such great material to work with. That's a great joy. Between the three of them, they all develop such wonderfully strong moments, and those moments really carry the play."

One member of the cast is new to the stage. Thomas Sneed, a mass communications major and cheerleader at Odessa College, plays Hoke Coleburn, Miss Daisy's chauffeur. Auditioning was suggested to him, he said, by one of the principals at Odessa High School. Now that he's landed the role, being on stage is fun and, Sneed said, "Kind of scary."

With a three-member cast, each character has a good number of lines to memorize. "I was a little amazed at how many lines it was," Sneed said. "The first day we read all the way through it, I thought, 'Man, this is a lot of speaking parts.'"

Olsen called Sneed "a natural talent. He's very at ease with the role and the relationship that develops between Hoke and Miss Daisy is very moving."

Also in the three-member cast is Midlander Gloria Stephenson as Daisy Werthan. Ms. Stephenson played this role in Midland Community Theatre's production.

"Gloria is definitely a veteran actress, extremely talented, who has been an absolute joy to work with," said Olsen. Rounding out the cast is Midlander Harrel Sharrick, as Daisy's son, Boolie. Although this is Sharrick's first performance at the Playhouse, he has been in productions of "Rainmaker," "Streetcar Named Desire" and "No Time for Sergeants."

"It's a very small cast, but it's been rather challenging,' Olsen said. "The emotional stake of the characters is very high, and it's been a wonderful experience pulling those emotions out of each and every character involved in the script."

During the course of the play, the audience grows to like and appreciate each character. "You really find a place in your heart to like them and to love them," Olsen said. "You have sympathy for Boolie dealing with his sharp-witted mother. And you also have a soft place in your heart for Daisy as she grows older and how she copes with getting old. And finally, you have an admiration for Hoke who was never afraid to work."

Olsen finds the play has a "very strong message. I think, all in all, that it doesn't matter who you are, it's nice to know that someone will be there for you. I think that's really what it's about."

Stage manager for the production is Midlander Edward Shaw and set and lighting design is by Judd Vermillion.

"We've been really fortunate we have an extremely gifted technical director, Judd Vermillion, and he's created a multi-faceted-unit set that strongly isolates the action in the play," Olsen said. "We've contrasted the ideas and values of the traditional South with modern images of today. Through the juxtaposition of the two, we wanted to show that some of the issues being brought up in the play happened both then and now."

"Driving Miss Daisy" was selected by the Playhouse to produce not only because it is a prize-winning play, but also because it offers the theater an opportunity to, Olsen said, "appeal to and reach a culturally diverse audience. Part of our mission is to provide culturally diverse material."

Those who enjoyed the movie, starring Morgan Freeman and Jessica Tandy, won't find the play disappointing, Olsen said. "It's a wonderful play.

"So often the movie and the screenplay are totally out of the playwright's hands. Alfred Uhry was also responsible for the screen play. It's one of the few plays that translated extremely well to the big screen. If they liked the movie, they'll love the play."

ART: Museum shows needlework

(From 3E)

They're covered in jewels and rhinestones. They really are magnificent pieces. A lot of people have come just to see those gowns. They are pretty impressive."

In conjunction with the exhibit, the museum is offering Saturday classes for children. Also, acclaimed needlework artist, designer, lecturer and teacher Wilanna Bristow of San Antonio will teach two adult classes — "Weeds, Seeds and Beads" and "Silk Ribbon Embroidery" — and a children's class for ages 9 to 15 this month.

She will speak at the museum, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., at 7 p.m. Nov. 16 on "Poets of the Needle of South Texas."

"We offered the classes hoping to encourage people to carry on the tradition of needlework," Ms. Mathewes said. "The needlepoint class that was conducted by Laura Bradford was particularly popular with children."

For information on the classes call the museum, 683-2882 or 570-7770. Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. There is no admission charged to view the exhibit.

'A lot of people enjoy exhibitions like this because, often times, they express themselves through needlework so they can directly relate to what they are seeing.'
— Melanie Mathewes curator of education

"Each year we do a community-based exhibition," Ms. Mathewes said, noting that previous exhibits featured such subjects as animation, toys and dolls. "This year we focused on needlework so the majority of items that are on display are on loan from individuals in this area. Of course, this exhibition would have never come together without all of the guild support."

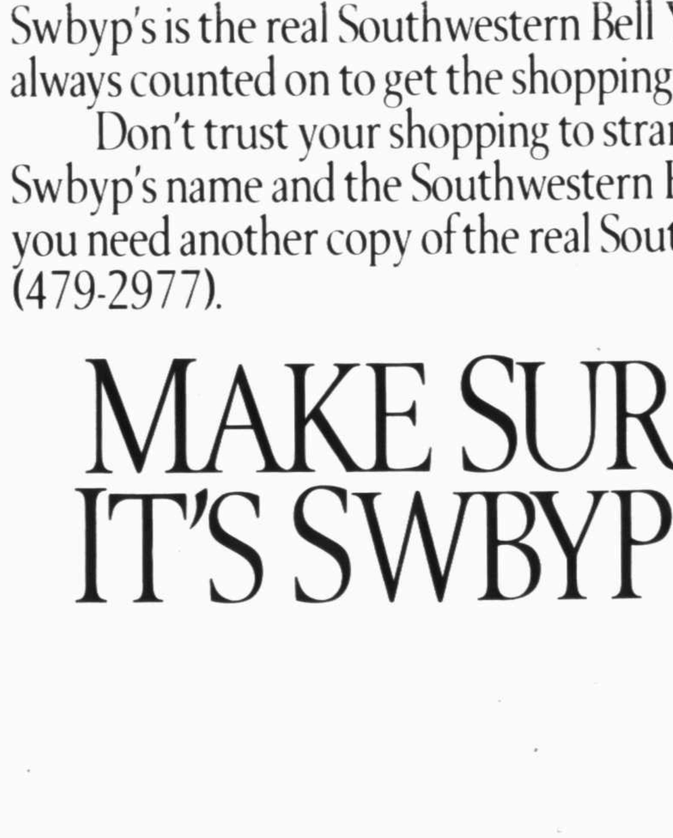

From the comments received by those viewing the exhibit, Ms. Mathewes said, "It seems to be very well received. We're quite happy the public is so pleased with it."

For many, this type of exhibit evokes fond memories.

"A lot of people enjoy exhibitions like this because, often times, they express themselves through needlework so they can directly relate to what they are seeing," Ms. Mathewes said. "And, for a lot of people, it's a walk down memory lane. With the labels that we have in the exhibit, we talk about so and so's grandmother made this, or this was made using my father's old denim jeans.

"So the items are more personal when you see them. And when you start to read the labels, you start to think back and say, 'Oh, yeah. I have a quilt that my mother made' or 'I have a quilt that my aunt worked on.' So it's more than just an exhibition. It's an experience for a lot of people."

Citizens face tough task, scrutiny

Revamping school integration system challenges committee

"To say the eyes of Midland are upon you would be an understatement," was the greeting, in part, of MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. to the newly appointed citizen committee that will be charged with revamping the school's system of desegregation.

Baressi wasn't exaggerating the interest that the committee garnered. The eyes of Midland have been upon the committee even before it was selected. School board trustees culled 10 citizens from a list of 90 nominations. And a few citizens complained loudly that they didn't meet the guidelines to be nominated.

Even school board trustee James Fuller stated, at a school board meeting, that serving on the committee was "highly sought after."

"Usually we just take volunteers from school committees. But because of the importance of the issue, the district advertised for citizens in the newspaper," Baressi said.

The 20-member committee is charged with "considering changes in the elementary student assignment system," or the district's cluster system of desegregation. MISD is currently desegregated through a federal court-ordered system of busing that groups schools into "clusters." Children attend schools in their neighborhoods in kindergarten through thi d grade, then begin busing to the three schools in their cluster in fourth, fifth and sixth grades. This means that students return to their neighborhood school one of those three years of busing.

THE ADVISORY committee can opt to remove naturally integrated elementary schools from the cluster system of busing, allowing those schools to "stand alone" from the system. The committee can also consider other systems of desegregation such as magnet schools.

Although the committee will only make a recommendation to the board, and any board decision must be ultimately approved by the U.S. Department of Justice. Baressi said the committee's recommendation could have heavy influence on decisions made to change the current system.

Baressi said the committee is "obviously going to need a lot of time (to study desegregation options), and they are going to get a lot of public exposure."

"I'm going to look very carefully and closely at what it means to be a stand-alone school, and whether schools (identified as naturally integrated) are racially mixed," said committee member Robynne Hocker-Fuller. "Numbers sometimes say one thing then head counts are different. We need to look at the benefits of removing schools from the system and how it impacts the schools that are left in the system. We will also need to look at what it will cost and whether or not money could more effectively be used somewhere else."

THE COMMITTEE consists of 10 members selected by the school board, and 10 selected by the intervenors who joined the original 1976 lawsuit filed by the U.S. Justice Department to force integration in MISD.

A few of the persons appointed by the intervenors have publicly voiced strong support for the current cluster system of desegregation, and doubt that there are better systems. They have also voiced mistrust of the intentions of those who want to change the system. On the other hand, one member selected by the board has publicly campaigned against the cluster system in favor of returning to neighborhood schools — which would result in some segregated schools — and another has been a strong advocate of the Controlled Choice magnet school system that was dropped from consideration following controversy in the community.

Despite whatever systems individuals favor, several committee members said they hoped committee members could be open-minded in considering all systems of desegregation "brought to the table."

Tensions were high when the committee met for the first time Nov. 2. Just in deciding how to select a chairman, when to meet or if the meetings should be videotaped, committee members tended to vote 10-9. The committee adjourned without resolving when to meet and how often. It was decided however, that members could bring lists of chairman candidates to the next meeting, and that chairman nominees should be qualified to conduct meetings and be objective about desegregation systems since the chairman will be permitted to vote.

WITH VOTES so evenly split between the members selected by school board trustees and those selected by the intervenors, committee member Michael Wallace joked, "I think we need to sit in a different order next time — board member (appointee), intervenor (appointee), board, intervenor."

Caroline Ganem said, when contacted last week. "I don't think we got much done. I am willing to look at different school systems. But people are going to have to be more open-minded."

"We have an awesome task and we are going to need a lot of resources," said committee member Jan Reed. Ms. Reed, director of student activities for Midland College, has been involved in Midland public schools since 1970. "One year I once served on four PTAs at once," she said. Ms. Reed said the first few committee meetings will involve "a lot of housekeeping" — selecting a chairman, deciding when and how often to meet, setting up an attendance policy, and deciding when the alternates will step in and take over for

Committee Options

The MISD Cluster Advisory committee can:

- Use a $15,000 budget to bring in consultants, experts or to visit other school districts.
- Conduct public forums to seek opinions from the community.
- Consider removing naturally integrated schools from the current system of busing.
- Appoint a chairman from within or outside their committee.
- Set up their own attendance policy.
- Consider changing bus patterns.

Committee Guidelines

The committee shall:

1. Be free to consider any system that will integrate elementary students as well or better than the current system, i.e., magnet schools, kindergarten through sixth grade, kindergarten through fifth grade, middle schools, Carver Cultural Center, full-day kindergarten, etc.
2. Be free to consider removing elementary schools which are naturally integrated from the cluster system.
3. Be free to consider change in the current elementary school attendance boundaries.
4. Be free to consider the assignment of bus students currently assigned to any elementary campus.
5. Be free to consider change in the current elementary school attendance boundaries.
6. Be mindful of the needs and current placements of students in special programs and of the state and federal requirements relating to these programs., i.e., bilingual education, special education, and gifted and talented education.
7. Be free to consider options that allow parental choice while maintaining an acceptable level of integration, i.e., magnet schools, Controlled Choice, etc.
8. Assume the board of trustees will support a bond issue to renovate existing elementary schools to ensure all schools will have comparable facilities.
9. Consider reducing busing to the extent possible while maintaining an acceptable level of integration and not increasing the transportation burden borne by a particular racial or ethnic group.
10. Be mindful of budgetary constraints, but be free to make reasonable recommendations for increased funding.
11. Have a recommendation to the board of trustees on or before April 1, 1996. In addition, a reasonable implementation time line should be set which allows adequate preparation for major changes, i.e., staff development, curriculum planning, etc.
12. Use a desegregation standard of plus or minus of 10 percent from the district average percent of Anglo and minority students.
13. The chairperson shall record the written vote of each of the 21 members of the final recommendations.
14. The committee shall determine its own attendance policy.

The committee shall be given an initial operation budget of $15,000.

MISD officials eye new developments

■ School administrators consider zoning new developments to San Jacinto Junior High School to balance integration.

San Jacinto Junior High School could use a few more students, and Midland public school administrators have set their sights on new development in north Midland to feed the school. It's highly likely that junior high school students moving into the planned Desert Shores development will be San Jacinto-bound.

Not only is San Jacinto the least populated of MISD's four junior high schools, the school's racial balance is off kilter for the district average.

"While we like to keep a balance of about 54 percent white students, we only have 47 percent at San Jacinto," said Larry Lusby, MISD executive director of computer and pupil services. He said that the other junior high schools — Abell, Alamo and Goddard — have white populations of 57, 55, and almost 57 percent, respectively.

"San Jacinto is landlocked," Lusby said.

School officials cannot count on any new development in that area to fill the school, he said.

"Given the location, there is not a lot of undeveloped land around San Jacinto," agreed MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr.

San Jacinto Junior High also has the smallest total enrollment — 877 students — of all four Midland junior high schools. Abell Junior High School has 993 students, Alamo Junior High School has 983 students and Goddard has 995, as of October.

While the public has speculated that the newly planned Desert Shores development — which will include a 55-acre man-made lake, a 10,000-seat amphitheater and upscale boutiques and restaurants — might solely attract retirees, school officials aren't betting on it.

"We were once told the same thing about Green Tree — that it would be a country club resort with retirement patio homes

Please see DEVELOPMENT/3F

MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. (left) discusses junior high schools at a recent public meeting.

MISD Anglo population decreases

Minority populations in Midland public schools are on the rise; the district's white population is slightly declining. This school year the district showed a loss of 230 white students from last year. The total district enrollment of white students was 12,460, compared to 12,230 this year.

"That is the biggest drop in a subpopulation that we have seen in awhile," said Larry Lusby, executive director of computer and pupil services for Midland Independent School District.

Lusby said the drop in that student population could be directly related to the increased capacity of Midland private schools.

"Enrollment has leveled off this year," MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. said at a recent board meeting. "We aren't sure if this is a one-year anomaly or a trend. It remains to be seen."

Midland Independent School District's total white population has declined from 57 to 54 percent in the past four years, while the Hispanic population has increased from 32 to 35 percent and the African American population has remained steady at about 10 percent.

"Also we have seen our smallest total enrollment increase in awhile (just 55 additional students over last year at this time)," Lusby said.

However, even with fewer students in the schools than expected this year, MISD has hit its projected districtwide enrollment — and is a fraction of 1 percent over that projection.

The district's Hispanic population has increased slightly from 31 to almost 35 percent since 1992.

Although the total district enrollment only increased slightly this year, Lusby said the district still has 60-70 portable buildings serving as temporary non-attending members.

"Everyone on this committee is going to be giving up a lot of time. It's the perfect sacrifice for me. I studied a lot about this before I committed," Ms. Reed said.

"I'm willing to look at whatever ideas come forth as long as they follow the standards set up by the U.S. Justice Department," said fellow committee member, Margie Titus.

Pete Ruiz, however, said the guidelines, however, are "just that, guidelines."

"They just give us direction. We can look outside of the guidelines."

Ruiz said that there was a lot of tension at the first meeting. "There are obviously two sides," he said. "But we are trying to get everybody organized, and everybody in that room is trying to work toward one goal, to provide children with the best system we can."

RUIZ SAID he only knows a few people on the committee. "But I feel like we can all work together."

"There are a lot of dynamic people on the committee," said member Les Vela. "But I am very open-minded, and I am looking for whatever is best for the children. Whatever we will decide will effect my child in a couple of years. But I am trying to be very global in my thinking, knowing that the decision will effect all children."

Ms. Vela said committee members are under a lot of pressure since the issue of how Midland public schools will be desegregated has been such a concern in the community. "We (as a committee) have quite a heavy cross to bear. We are under the microscope. But once we get a chairperson and some focus, I hope we can move forward." Ms. Vela also said part of the pressure the committee is under is that it can make a decision that can influence change in the community "that will effect people for a long time to come. I hope our decision will be so wonderful that it will be long-lasting and not a patch."

'We have quite a heavy cross to bear. We are under the microscope. But once we get a chairperson and some focus, I hope we can move forward.'
— Les Vela, committee member.

Whatever the decision, committee member Mrs. Fuller said, "No one is going to make a hurried decision. We are in this for the children, so there won't be any hasty decisions in time for a bond election or board elections. We need to make a lasting decision."

Some committee members did not return calls to the Reporter-Telegram. Committee member John Kennedy declined to comment.

Justice Department has plan

Midland Independent School District is operating under a plan known as the Agreed Judgment. The plan was drawn up Aug. 17 as a result of MISD settling out of court with the U.S Justice Department after the district had requested the court dismiss a former court-ordered plan of desegregation.

The Agreed Judgment offers guidelines for the district to follow in its quest to seek unitary status, or freedom to operate a desegregation plan free of court supervision.The steps in the plan are intended to eliminate remaining vestiges of a dual segregated school system. In three years (Aug. 17, 1998), MISD may again petition the court to dismiss the 1976 Consent Decree which established the current cluster system of desegregation.

COST: Taxpayer dollars spent to date on litigation seeking unitary status is $220, 139.01

DEVELOPMENT: Zoning considered

along the golf course," Lusby said. "However, when the economy declined in the '80s, Green Tree became more affordable to families."

Now Midland Independent School District draws about 400 students from the Green Tree area.

The Desert Shores development, owned by the Montana Cree Indians, is located just east of Green Tree in northwest Midland. Although Desert Shores will boast lakefront property, it will also feature houses beginning at $125,000 and is certain to attract families to its recreational facilities, according to Margaret White, representative of the Montana Cree Tribal Council. Lakefront lots will sell for about $75,000 each. Of the planned 1,500 housing units, 980 will be on lakefront lots. The development will also include condominiums.

"The average house will be in $300,000 range," Ms White said. "But houses will start at $125,000, which is affordable to some families in Midland.

Ms. White said the 1,500-home Desert Shores project is modeled after a similar development in Las Vegas. "That project is located next to a retirement development, but it has attracted quite a lot of families. Seniors and families co-habit well next to each other," she said.

Ms. White said the Midland project is "definitely not designed just for seniors. There will be paddle boats on the lake, a lot of recreation areas (including horse stables) for kids and a lifeguard at the pool," she said Developers are anticipating a "wide range of residents," she said.

Construction in Desert Shores is on target for spring. In fact, Ms. White said she will be moving to Midland in January.

Lusby said the district is also considering zoning other undeveloped sections north of Mockingbird Lane and north of Santa Rita Elementary School for San Jacinto.

MISD: Racial balance changing classrooms to alleviate overcrowding.

Despite all the retail development along Loop 250 that may bring new people to the area for jobs, "we haven't seen a big migration to the area," Lusby said.

"It may be that many of the retail jobs are filled by people outside of the area, but the salaries are such that people can't afford to relocate to Midland," Lusby said.

He said the high school and freshman high school enrollments, both in totals and in ethnic breakdowns, "are the most balanced than they have been in 15 years."

But as for deciding what system to use to keep Midland schools desegregated, Lusby said the recently formed Cluster Advisory Committee will be charged with that task.

Honors Program gives recognition to talented students

A new program designed to provide an enhanced learning environment as well as giving special recognition for talented undergraduate students will be in place for the spring semester.

The program brings together faculty and highly motivated students, according to Dr. Will Morris, division chair of Social and Behavorial Sceinces and coordinator of the program.

"The benefit of the program to a student is that it broadens and deepens understanding of topics beyond the material a student would receive in a regular class," Morris said.

The program was developed after many students requested a more challenging curriculum, Morris said.

"We really believed it was time to do something for the better student," he said.

Morris stressed that the main criteria for eligibility in the program is to have a 3.2 grade point average. After that, the process is fairly simple:

1) Students apply to Morris to enter the program. 2) The application is submitted to a committee to determine if that student may enter the program. 3) Upon acceptance to the program, the student enrolls in one of the honors classes listed in the spring schedule and signs a contract with the instructor.

Using a loose set of guidelines, the student and instructor work out an individual course of study for the student that highlights the student's strengths and area of interest.

Courses offering honors credit for the spring semester are: General Biology I taught by Paul Mangum; General Biology II taught by Tomas Hernandez; Principles of Economics I taught by Chloice Shofner; Two sections of the Latin American Novel in Translation taught by Russel Goodyear; Humanities II taught by Jerry Franks.

"This is just the beginning," Morris said about plans to continue adding classes to the honors curriculum.

For more information or to apply for the Honors program, contact Dr. Will Morris, at ext. 4641.

Forum gives students quick look at more than 80 colleges

In one evening, parents and students can get general information about college curriculum, costs and campus life from more than 80 colleges and universities across the United States.

Midland's College Forum, which in the past has alternated between Midland and Lee High School, will be at Midland College 7-9 p.m. Wednesday, Nov 15 in Midland College's Scharbauer Student Center.

The Forum is sponsored by Midland College and the Midland High/Lee High Parent Teacher Student Association.

"The Forum is important because parents and students can visit a variety of schools and get general information to help you decide what school is best for you," Lyndolyn Pervier, College Forum chairman, said.

Midland and Lee High Schools graduate more than 1,000 students each year and more than 80 percent of those students will attend college, she said.

For students who want more information about Midland College, Student Services personnel will have information about enrolling at Midland College as well as information about specific programs.

Financial Aid Director Bob Haines will have information about Abell-Hanger scholarships, other scholarships available to Midland College students and general information about how to apply for financial aid.

More than 80 schools including the University of Texas at Austin, Texas Tech University, Texas Christian University, Southern Methodist University, University of North Texas and Southwestern will participate.

Schools that will send representatives include Yale, Harvard and Notre Dame.

Most Texas colleges and universities will be represented, Pervier said. Response from schools invited to attend has been excellent since the Forum has been moved to MC's neutral, college setting, she said.

The College Forum is an excellent way to get a quick look at a particular school as well as getting the flavor of a school.

"All students, especially younger ones, will find this event helpful since this may be their first exposure to the colleges they might want to attend, Pervier said.

The event is free and open to the public. For more information call the Midland College Public Relations Office, 685-4553.

Elise Coombes is public relations director for Midland College.

Remembering a Veteran

Woman remembers past, but moves on

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

"I'll walk alone," popular sentimental singer Jane Froman sang in the 1940s when America was a war, "because, to tell you the truth, ... I don't mind being lonely. When my heart tells me you are lonely, too. I'll always be near you, wherever you are, each night in every prayer..."

And so Sue Mullins, the young bride of a naval aviator and an ace, Frank Mullins, braved the war alone on the home front while her "hero" was in combat in the Pacific Theater of Operations during World War II.

Now, more than 50 years after she wed the aviator, Mrs. Mullins is, once again, alone but graced with gratitude and the fullness of a mutually-strengthening marriage, a union of forces.

"We complemented each other." And now, following her husband's death at mid-year, "I'm going on," vowed Mrs. Mullins, a Midland architectural designer who, for most of the decades since 1949, had worked in concert with her builder-husband.

"Our relationship was wonderful, and we were so totally absorbed in what we were doing and with each other," Mrs. Mullins recently reminisced, and what they did, separately or together, "we did it well or as best we could."

In their vibrant life and as he lay dying, "I did everything I could do for him. And now, it's just 'get on with life.'

"I enjoyed all the yesterdays very much," she said. "There might be some more wonderful life out there. I am going to look for it."

MEANWHILE, Mrs. Mullins is absorbed in her work in designing upscale houses in the Green Tree Country Club addition in which she and her late husband were among the original developers at onset of the 1980s.

They had just returned to Midland from Colorado, where they had spent the previous 18 years developing property and where Mrs. Mullins, at the University of Colorado, had studied architecture. Her "mentors," architects whom she respects and takes guidance from their designs, include the "environmentally-sensitive" Frank Lloyd Wright and E. Fay Jones.

It was in Midland, in 1949, when the young couple, who had matured with a patriotic and freedom-fighting America during World War II, launched their joint careers: She designed houses, beginning with a modest home off Jax Street on Midland's east side, and he built them, well into the hundreds, both economy class and upscale.

Later, she designed, and he built, a house on Princeton Avenue and then developed much of the post-war housing in the neighborhood of the former site of Midland Country Club, at A Street and Cuthbert Avenue, including Wadley-Barron Park or the "Duck Pond."

The Mullins designed-and-built houses line the avenues known as Princeton, Harvard, Bedford and Country Club.

THE OIL BOOM of the late 1970s and early 1980s in West Texas and the associated housing developments in Midland summoned the couple back to their old hometown. They were one of the 11 original partners in the Green Tree development.

"We stuck it out through its ups and downs," Mrs. Mullins recalled. Her husband and partners built the Green Tree golf course and club house, and put in the streets and utilities. Mullins built some of the houses.

Mullins, who had studied geology prior to the war, "liked building and development, and he liked golf," Mrs. Mullins said. "This is not the first golf-course development we have been involved in." They were involved in building the Boulder Country Club in Colorado and had "been involved in planning several others that did not get off the ground.

"One was in La Paz, Mexico, and the Good Lord was looking after us," Mrs. Mullins reasoned, "because they devalued the pesos."

Mullins did golf-course "consulting work all over the country."

While her designs are influenced by Frank Lloyd Wright's natural-form architectural style and his penchant to use building materials that are indigenous to the home-site's area, Mrs. Mullins acknowledged that "when you are doing custom work for a client, your client's wishes always come first. You please your client. You have to sometimes sacrifice your tastes or your theories, but they are paying the bill."

Still, in their developments, the Mullins couple had "hoped for some variety, and the reason for variety was to keep it from becoming a tract - tract housing. Modest or upscale, you like it to be individualized and to fulfill a

Distinguished Service

EDITOR'S NOTE: Midland geologist Jack Edwards served in World War II as a United States Navy aviator who was a contemporary of the late Frank Mullins. He is a highly-decorated ace who served aboard the USS Fanshaw Bay, escort aircraft carrier, in the Pacific Theater of Operations.

By Jack Edwards

Frank Mullins, a Midlander and a United States naval aviator, gave his country distinguished service as a fighter pilot flying from the USS Fanshaw Bay (CVE-70) during the Battle of Okinawa in World War II. There, he earned many awards for bravery in combat.

It is especially poignant that Frank made his "last flight," figuratively, on June 15, 1995, a few weeks before the 50th anniversary of the victory he helped so much to achieve. His patriotism was outstanding.

Recently, a reunion of U.S. Navy veterans who served aboard the Fanshaw Bay during World War II was in Midland. The event was concurrent with the Confederate Air Force AirSho'95.

The naval veterans were a "boat load of heroes," although they were unaware of it at the time. They only knew that they were young men doing their duty and serving their country. It was where and when they did that service that gave them their distinction.

The official designation of their ship was "escort carrier," more popularly known as "a Jeep" or "baby flattop." As compared to the large, fast battle carriers of the fleet, the CVEs were thin-skinned, small, lightly armed and slow. Their aircraft complement was a squadron usually of 20 Grumman-designed FM-2 "Wildcat" fighters or, less commonly, Grumman F6F "Hellcats," and 10 TBM "Avenger" torpedo bombers.

In the Pacific Theater, their major mission was to provide close air support for amphibious invasions and the subsequent ground operations. In the north Atlantic, the mission was to protect ship convoys by waging anti-submarine warfare against the German undersea fleet. Both missions were effectively accomplished in each theater of action.

The "Fighting Fanny Bee," as she was affectionately called, participated in six major campaigns of the war in the Pacific. The ship was awarded two Presidential Unit Citations, the highest award given to military units. Only six such multiple awards were granted to Navy ships in the WWII era. The Fanshaw Bay was the only carrier so honored.

The first such award was bestowed for "extraordinary heroism in the Battle off Samar, Philippines, October 1944. In this engagement, the "Fanny Bee," five of her sisters "Jeeps" and seven small escorting vessels were caught up in a combat action for which the carriers were neither designed or equipped for. The engagement was one of the most unequal sea battles of any war.

HAVE YOU HEARD?

20th Century setting is theme for woman's 90th birthday party

By Marilyn McKnight-Harrison

Belated congratulations to Thelma Kelly, who celebrated her 90th birthday recently.

McKnight-Harrison

Mrs. Kelly was honored on the milestone occasion by her six children with a party in the parlor of St. Ann's Catholic Church. Hosting were Donna (Mrs. Frank) Repman, Dr. Donald Kelly and Janis (Mrs. Henry) Hermann, all of Midland; Mrs. Sharon Montgomery and Gerald Kelly, both of Santa Fe, N.M., and Mrs. Ann Barr of Philadelphia, Pa.

The honoree also has 12 grandchildren and 22 great-grandchildren, all of whom were present for the celebration.

The parlor was transformed into an early-20th century setting by Victoria (Mrs. James) Weatherred, a close friend of the honoree. Her decorations, including antique furniture and rugs, along with old-fashioned dolls and doll buggies, tea sets, radios, lamps, and other collector's items, were a real conversation piece. We are told one could have spent hours looking at the striking and most unusual decor.

An array of finger foods and four beautiful cakes were catered by Joan (Mrs. Ted) Noel, another longtime friend and former neighbor of the honoree.

Approximately 200 guests shared in the festivities.

Mrs. Kelly was born on Oct. 19, 1905, in Denver, Colo. She and her husband, the late Joseph J. Kelly, moved to Midland in 1930, where she has resided since. She is one of the oldest members of St. Ann's Parish and St. Ann's Altar Society and a former member of the church choir. She remains an avid bridge player.

BACK IN TOWN for a recent visit was Janice Strickland, a former English teacher and cheerleader sponsor at Midland High School.

The houseguest of Peggy and Ronnie Vaughn, Janice came down from Anchorage, Alaska, where she and her husband, Jerry, now reside. Janice continues to teach there.

A childhood friend, Kay (Mrs. Tom) Brahaney, entertained for Janice with a Saturday morning brunch at her home. Guests included Janice's former colleagues at MHS and parents of cheerleaders, whom she sponsored.

Two of the guests, Sarah (Mrs. Bob) Machina and Martha (Mrs. Dan) Kallus, both taught with Janice at Midland High, but their relationship goes back much further than that. She was a student of theirs when she was in junior high school.

MEMBERS OF THE WEST TEXAS Geological Society and their wives enjoyed a recent dinner meeting.

Held in the Museum of the Southwest's Stables Gallery, the event featured a wine tasting preceding dinner and a talk by Midlander Charles McKinney on "The Growth of the Wine Industry in Texas."

The delicious meal featured brandied chicken breasts with apples poached in cider and cream and for dessert, a white frosted chocolate cake.

Among those attending were Kathy and Ron Johnson, Sharon and David Farmer, Bonnie and Lee Sanders, Sally and Dean Hamilton, Susan and Dexter Harmon, and Robert Campbell.

MORE THAN 10,000 persons converged on Rancho CASI, a campground equidistant between Terlingua and Lajitas in Big Bend for the Chili Appreciation Society International's Championship Chili Cookoff last weekend.

In addition to watching the show teams and chili teams compete, various members of the Midland contingent enjoyed sightseeing in the scenic area, hiking, jeep rides, the nightly dances and a day trip to the border town of Presidio. Our reporter on the scene says the weather was nippy but pleasant.

Among the Midlanders present were Clay Garlitz, Carl Beal, Kathy and Roger Hill, Joe Hathaway, Nancy Calhoun, Beau Poteet and Harry Harrison. Clay and Carl created a sensation both on the highway and upon arrival in a Kenworth 18-wheeler pulling their transportation for the weekend, a four-seated dune buggy. Others seen from our area were Susie and Bruce Day of Gardendale and Richard Erwin and Chris Cyther of Monahans.

Former Midlanders spotted at the event were Wade Sale and Jesse Renz, both of Alpine, and Mack Harrison of Lubbock.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCHWOMEN of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity recently hosted their annual "A Bit of Britain" fundraiser to support their outreach projects.

Co-chairmen Lyn (Mrs. Richard) Dulaney and Cindy (Mrs. Mike) Ford orchestrated two seatings of tea in the English manner.

Guests enjoyed assorted breads and tea scones, a variety of finger sandwiches, and a vast array of desserts and candies to accompany the Earl Gray tea. The servers were elegantly attired in formal wear from Mark Wheeler of Swartz.

Silent auction co-chairmen Cynthia (Mrs. Brian) McLaughlin and Courtney (Mrs. Chris) Renaud, offered a variety of items from generous supporters, everything from a three-month membership at the YMCA to a stay at Marathon's historic Gage Hotel.

Twenty-four tables decorated in a variety of themes for holidays, children's parties, teas and other occasions were decorated by women of the church and used for guest seating. Barbara (Mrs. Jim) Leeton chaired the decorations committee.

Darryl Knapp provided chamber music for the event. A fashion show was provided courtesy of Johnna Curle of The Canopy and Libby Swartz of Swartz for Kids.

Among the mother-daughter attendees were Georgia (Mrs. James) Corwin and Katherine and Emily; Nancy Hull with daughter Susan Webb and granddaughter Katie; Leslie (Mrs. Frank) McCabe and Molly; Carol (Mrs. Jim) Brown and Karen (Mrs. Marshell) Mason, and Marcy (Mrs. Doug) Tull with Allison, Michelle, Carly and Sara Lynn. Past ECW presidents present included Babs (Mrs. Richard) Sevier, Grace Jordan, Fannie Bess Sivalls, Harriet (Mrs. Harvey) Herd and Valerie (Mrs. Perry) Pickett.

MULLINS: Woman still chases dreams

For example, the Mediterranean-style, 14,000-square-foot house which she is completing in Green Tree Midland is the "dream" of its new owners.

"And you have to interpret their dream, get it on paper, and get it to the workmen, so that they can follow the instructions to put their dreams into reality."

To Mrs. Mullins, "a new piece of paper on the drafting board is (going to become) somebody's dream.

"It's kind of like the old stories about the fire-horse when the bell rings at the fire station," Mrs. Mullins allowed. "If I spread a clean sheet of paper on the board, and I have a client telling me what they want, I get so excited I forget" her otherwise daily routines, including household chores.

Architecture fascinates Mrs. Mullins, who observed that "design has rhythm just like poetry."

Today, Mrs. Mullins is absorbed in her work - her career.

More than 50 years ago, she and her aviator-husband were consumed with a dedication to win and to end the war.

AT HOME, "people gave up whatever they had to, like sugar, and shortening, silk stockings and whatever," Mrs. Mullins said, "in order to do what you had to do" to win the war. "Everybody was so behind the war effort," and American women, while prohibited from serving in combat roles, were piloting aircraft, including fighters and bombers, in ferrying them across the nation and overseas.

"I just wanted to fly," and she did by the late 1950s.

The Allied forces were battling the Axis powers in Europe, Africa, the Pacific, and elsewhere in Asia. On the home front, Americans were foregoing material comforts and were working and praying in support of the nation's fighting forces.

BY LATE 1943, the then-22-year-old Frank Mullins, who was born in Arkansas and reared in Oklahoma, was in the United States Navy and had earned his aviator's "wings." He had been flying since 1935, when he first soloed as a teen-ager and flew aircraft from the OX5 Curtiss Jenny open-cockpit biplane to jet fighters.

In January 1944, he was married to his Oklahoma sweetheart, Sue Capps.

"I followed him around from base to base" and from coast to coast, as war brides did back in those days, Mrs. Mullins said.

She fondly recalled the times when he, in flying the Chance Vought F4U Corsair fighter in Oklahoma, "would fly over and drop these love letters out of the airplane for me."

In 1944, while he was flying the Grumman F6F Hellcat for the Navy's air-demonstration team, which later became known as the Blue Angels, Mullins "had a choice of staying with them or going on into combat."

He went off to war.

"The war effort was so intense that everybody wanted to do what they could to get the war over," Mrs. Mullins said, "and Frank chose to go into combat. And I couldn't quite understand that. I wanted him to stay Stateside, because going into combat meant going overseas. At that time, they didn't know whether they were going into the European Theater or into the Pacific."

By January 1945, Mullins and his squadron had set sail from San Francisco on the USS Randolph, while Mrs. Mullins and other wives of sailors and aviators stood on top of the 19-story Mark Hopkins (Intercontinental) Hotel "watching that carrier go under the Golden Gate Bridge, taking our husbands off to war.

"It was pretty traumatic," she remembered. "We didn't know if they would come back or not. Of that squadron, there were a lot that didn't come back."

Mullins piloted the Grumman-engineered FM-2 Wildcat fighter as part of his squadron. The squadron joined the decorated USS Fanshaw Bay, an escort aircraft carrier or "jeep" carrier, for combat duty. He had qualified for carrier duty on the USS Ranger and the USS Enterprise.

As a fighter pilot with the Fighting Observation Squadron, he flew 61 strike missions and was credited with shooting down seven Japanese aircrafts during the terrible Okinawa campaign, which was one of the war's bloodiest campaigns lasting from April to June of 1945.

Mullins earned the Distinguished Flying Cross (DFC), gold star in lieu of a second DFC, Air Medal and additional gold stars in lieu of 10 Air Medals and citations. He served combat roles at Iwo Jima, Okinawa, Ulithi and the Marshall Islands in the Western Pacific Ocean.

MULLINS WAS shot down once by so-called "friendly fire" while he and his fellow aviators were flying Wildcats in spotting Japanese field artillery and other enemy targets on Okinawa for the Navy's battleships to shell.

The U.S. Marines were flying air cover in Corsairs for the Wildcat spotters.

"And one of them mistakenly thought Frank was a Jap plane and shot him down," Mrs. Mullins said. "However, he was able to land on Okinawa, since the Seabees had just cleared off a runway or landing area."

After his combat tour, Mullins returned Stateside and was a jet aircraft test pilot. Following the war, he continued to fly, in part as a crop-duster to help support the family in the 1950s, and later flew for business and pleasure.

MULLINS' WAR service "took him from an Oklahoma cotton patch and slid him into the seat of a fighter plane," Mrs. Mullins said. "He loved it, and it changed his life tremendously, as it did many of us in that period of time. Otherwise, we would not have traveled. We would not have lived in all four corners of the United States. He enlisted in Seattle. He got his wings in Texas. We were married in Florida. We were stationed Maine, and he was discharged in Seattle."

Mullins "enjoyed cutting stones and doing silver (work) and lapidary," she said. "What is it they say about a crystal? The more facets it has, the more sparkle. And he had many facets. Flying was the primary facet."

Mrs. Mullins, who had longed to fly from her youth, soloed in Midland in 1957. While her aviator-husband was her hero, so, too, were aviation pioneers Charles Lindbergh and Amelia Earhart, who inspired generations of aviators.

"There has been a lot of dreams I've chased for awhile," Mrs. Mullins reflected, "or that you mentally chase that you don't really ever get to do. We've gotten to do a lot of them. I'm still chasing some of the dreams."

Among her realized dreams was marrying "that fighter pilot. I think it (the relationship) has been very mutual and very equal."

ONE: Mullins was one of many aiding war effort

(From 1G)

The task unit of U.S. ships faced a formidable Japanese naval force of four heavily gunned battleships, six cruisers, also heavily gunned, and 10 destroyers. It was a force that was bearing down to Leyte Gulf with the intent of destroying the vulnerable U.S. invasion fleet of unarmed transports and landing craft lying off the island of Leyte. The only opposition was the Fanshaw Bay's task force unit with its aircraft and its relatively small 3-inch and 5-inch armament. They were certainly no match for the enemy's massive firepower.

THE JAPANESE warships bore down full-speed, pumping salvo after salvo of gunfire into the U.S. ships. The small task unit fought back furiously with its aircraft and inadequate guns. The airplanes, often incompletely armed, pressed vigorous counterattacks. The escorting vessels also attacked the enemy, firing torpedoes and their small guns. Eventually, other aircraft from a similar U.S. task unit joined in the battle.

Even when their ammunition was expended, the fighters continued making "dummy" runs on the enemy gun batteries from the attacking Avengers and escort craft. The combined efforts of the two U.S. task groups sank one enemy cruiser, severely damaged two others, and inflicted much injury to the remaining Japanese craft.

During the Japanese assault, the "Fanny Bee" took six shellfire hits, two other carriers were hit by shellfire and suicide airplane attacks, one carrier was damaged by gunfire near-misses, one carrier was sunk was shellfire, and another carrier was sunk by a Kamikaze aircraft attack. The escorts lost two destroyers and one destroyer escort. The other U.S. task unit suffered severe damage from suicide airplane and submarine attacks. The U.S. Navy's casualties were 1,100 killed and 1,000 wounded.

INEXPLICABLY, in view of their massive superiority, the Japanese force abruptly broke off its attack and retired from the area. The enemy's reasons for the retirement are lost to history, but the fight put up by the small task unit was a contributing deterrent. Whatever the reasons, the U.S. invasion fleet was saved, and the subsequent landings were successfully accomplished.

THOSE LANDINGS made it possible for U.S. Army Gen. Douglas MacArthur to grandly declare, "I have returned." That pronouncement fulfilled his pledge, "I shall return." made when he left for Australia in early 1942. A bit of doggerel composed by the troops at that time went thusly: "With the help of God and a few Marines, MacArthur returned to the Philippines," and unsaid, with a whole lot of help from a certain U.S. Navy "Jeep" carrier task unit.

For the ship's performance in the Battle of Okinawa in 1945, a second Presidential Unit Citation to the Fanshaw Bay was made "for extraordinary heroism in action against enemy Japanese forces in the air, ashore, and afloat. Operating continuously in the most advanced areas, the USS Fanshaw Bay and her air squadrons destroyed or damaged hostile warships, aircraft, merchant shipping, and shore installations despite frequent and sustained air attacks."

She sent out her planes repeatedly in spotting and strike missions to annihilate the enemy's ground installations, troops, tanks, trucks and parked aircraft and to destroy his airborne planes. Operating as a highly disciplined and superbly coordinated team through 124 days of action, the Fanshaw Bay and her air groups achieved an illustrious record of performance in combat, which reflects the highest credit upon her gallant officers and men upon return to the U.S. Navy Service.

THE CAMPAIGN for Okinawa was the longest, most grueling combat operation in the history of the U.S. Navy. The number of personnel casualties and damage or lost ships was the greatest the Navy ever suffered in a battle.

Plant trees in fall

By Deborah Benge-Frost

Benge-Frost

This is the time to plant trees. Trees are an extremely important part of landscapes, and fall is the best time for planting them, especially October and November. Choosing the right kind of tree is critically important. Carefully consider your choices by looking at some of the well-adapted, attractive trees in the city and see which ones would do best in your landscape.

Everybody wants a tree that will grow fast, big and beautiful, but fast-growing trees are problem-ridden trees. They generally have weak wood that is prone to breakage, borers and cicadas; have many pests, shallow roots, high water and nutrient requirements, and short lives. They usually are more trouble than they are worth.

Here are some worthy trees for your landscaping projects:

LARGE TREES

The average home and lot size will appear dwarfed with large-size trees planted in the front yard, but these same trees can be planted in the back yard for an effective backdrop. Enframement trees should be planted in the front landscape of a home, but for the average-size home and lot, medium or small trees work best.

Chinkapin oak, Quercus muehlenbergii, is a native of Texas that is found naturally in areas with climate, soils and growing conditions similar to the Permian Basin. This large tree can attain a height of 60 feet, has large attractive leaves and acorns second in size only to the bur oak. It will tolerate a wide range of soils and shows some resistance to oak wilt fungus.

Bur oak, Quercus macrocarpa, another Texas native, is a wide spread tree with large, lobed, dark green leaves, a thick corky bark and large acorns that are sometimes 2x2-inches in size. The acorns have a rugged fuzzy cap that has become very popular with handicrafters. The seeds sprout easily if harvested fresh and planted immediately or stratified then planted. A rugged, attractive tree, it also, depending on its seed source, has excellent drought tolerance and shows oak wilt resistance.

Bald cypress, Taxodium distichum, can reach 100 feet, has a pyramidal shape and has a very attractive, finely textured appearance. It is deciduous and will turn a golden brown in the fall. It is well adapted to water-soaked soils but will do well with supplemental irrigation. Seed sources for this tree need to come from an alkaline soil to avoid having to fight yellowing leaves all the time.

MEDIUM TREES

Lacey oak, Quercus glaucoides, is a very attractive oak growing 35 feet tall with dusky blue or blue-grey deciduous leaves that can turn to gold in fall. This drought-tolerant oak should be used more in our landscapes. The only problem is availability — the search may be very involved. The tree also shows oak wilt resistance.

Panicled goldenrain tree, Koelreuteria paniculata, grows to about 25 feet, has dark green compound leaves and attractive small lacy yellow flowers in early summer. These flowers tend to drop all at one time, giving the appearance of golden rain. After flowering the tree will set attractive papery seed pods. A tough tree needing very little care, it does, however, have a nuisance insect that looks like a box elder bug that gets on everything because it is attracted to the seed pods. The pest doesn't hurt the tree or you, but it is a bother. Plant this tree away from doors, windows, drives and patios.

Lacebark elm, Ulmus parvifolia, can grow to a 50 feet with a slender, finely textured appearance. One of the outstanding features of this attractive tree is the exfoliating (shedding) bark. Puzzle-shaped pieces shed off, leaving behind orange and light patches. The tree doesn't have the elm leaf beetle problem like the common Siberian elm.

Chinese pistache, Pistacia chinensis, is an excellent landscape tree perfect for many landscape uses. It has a fine texture with small dark green compound leaves. Female trees have clusters of small green to purple berries. It grows to a height of 40 feet, has excellent drought and pest tolerance, and needs a well-drained soil, but has few other requirements. It has excellent fall foliage color, regardless of the fall conditions (although an early freeze can ruin the colors if it comes along too soon). The only real problem this tree has is it can be awkward and gangly looking when you go shopping for it. If you can see beyond that stage, the tree develops into an excellent landscape shade tree.

Texas red oak, Quercus buckleyi, formerly Q. texana, grows to a height of 30 feet. It is more drought and high soil pH tolerant, which results in less iron deficient leaf yellowing. It also is smaller than the Shumard oak, making it a better size for most home landscapes.

SMALL TREES

Texas redbud, Cercis canadensis var. texensis, is a small tree that grows to about 20 feet. It fits into most landscapes and makes an excellent shade tree. Unlike the common Eastern redbud, this redbud is much better suited to our lower rainfall, drier climate and alkaline soils, and is longer lived. It has a thicker, glossy, dark green leaf and resists harsh weather and insect damage. A superior cultivar is "Oklahoma," which has beautiful magenta colored blooms in the spring.

Deciduous holly, Ilex decidua, is sometimes called possumhaw holly and is a gorgeous small tree. that grows to about 12 feet and looks just like a yaupon holly except it drops its leaves in the fall. The female selections — and that's what you want — have their fall and winter branches covered in brilliant red, orange or yellow berries that shine against the smooth, white bark. It will tolerate some shade and should be situated where you can see it from a window during the winter. Buy a variety that guarantees you are getting a female selection.

American smoketree, Cotinus obovatus, is a small, decorative native sumac that is gorgeous when in bloom. The trouble with this tree is, it will be hard to find, but worth it if you want a small, rounded tree that gets about 15 feet tall and has a show bloom in midspring that looks like pink smoke. It also has good fall colors. Once it is established it has good drought tolerance, but it doesn't like a poorly drained soil.

Rusty blackhaw viburnum, Viburnum rufidulum, is a small, 12-foot-tall, single-trunked tree with a broad crown. It grows slowly, so use it where it will look good regardless of size. Plant it in full sun or dappled shade. It blooms with clusters of white flowers in late spring, which turn into dark purple fruit in fall. The leaves are very glossy with good fall colors. It is well adapted and has excellent cold tolerance. Availability on this one will be difficult too.

Drilling improves

Drilling activity increased for the first week of November, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the rig count rose four rigs to 122 for the week and is above the year-ago level of 110.

Lea County, N.M. remains the most active in the Basin with 22 rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. with 18 rigs and Crockett County with 10 rigs.

Nationally, the rig count rose three to 764 for the week, well below the 824 reportd last year.

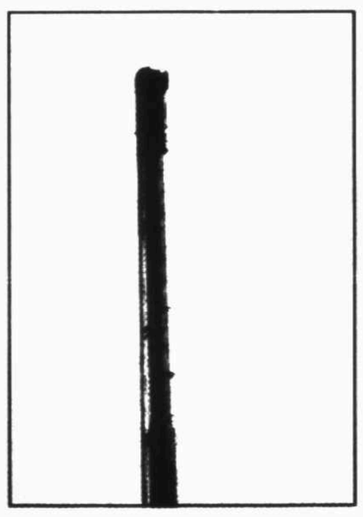

Among major producing states, Oklahoma posted the largest gain, five rigs. Texas and Louisiana reported the sharpest drop, four rigs each.

Pipeline finished

SAN ANTONIO -- Diamond Shamrock completed its 10-inch, 409-mile pipeline and is pumping product through the line.

The terminal will be open for commercial business next week. The pipeline has the capacity to bring 27,000 barrels per day of refined products from the Diamond Shamrock McKee Refinery, 60 miles north of Amarillo, to El Paso, Texas. The pipeline is expandable to 50,000 barrels per day.

Diamond Shamrock Chairman, CEO, and President Roger Hemminghaus said, "This is the fourth major line and terminal we have built in the last four years, and we anticipate it will meet the company's needs in supplying product to our growing New Mexico and Arizona markets." The facility will supply the region with all grades of gasoline, diesel, jet fuels, and propane.

Woman engineer takes over reigns of Exxon's Basin assets

■ Exxon first major to appoint woman to head division.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

For the first time, a major oil company has selected a woman to manage its assets in the Permian Basin. Time was when that would have been a big deal, but not in today's market in which women are increasingly found in the engineering and geological professions.

Pepper

Exxon will be concentrating on present assets and trying to minimize cost while maximizing production, says Kathy Pepper, new Exxon Production Manager for the Midland Production Organization and new mother to a three-month old baby boy.

Pepper has only been on the ground for two months in Midland, and is still trying to familarize herself with the operations in the Permian Basin.

While there may be some ongoing sales of smaller non-core propeties, Pepper says Exxon is now basically down to its core operations and will continue to focus on them. She said CO2 is and would definitely be a part of Exxon's future in the Permian Basin.

"We don't have any great, new innovations or plans in the works," says Pepper. "We will just continue to plug away at what we have been doing."

Asked if more Exxon layoffs were planned for the Permian Basin, Pepper says it is impossible to make guarantees in that area, because of the continued downsizing of the industry, but noted no immediate layoff plans.

A registered professional engineer, who first joined Exxon in 1980, Pepper says it will take her some time to get acquainted with the Permian Basin operations. Her husband Fred Pepper is in exploration and the only Exxon geologist involved in exploration in the Permian Basin.

A product of the Midwest and a military family that moved from base to base, Pepper chose Mississippi State University for her education, and petroleum engineering because it sounded more interesting than building bridges. "It was a good career choice," said Pepper, who brings a long list of supervisory experience to the position in Midland.

Joining Exxon in 1980, she began work as a Reservoir Engineer and Supervisor at the Layfaette and New Orleans offices, before becoming Operations Analysis Supervisor in Houston. At Houston, she was also a Reservoir/Subsurface Supervisor and a Senior Staff Engineer in Upstream Planning and Analysis.

In 1991, she went back to New Orleans as Operations Superintendent of the New Orleans Production Organization, and in 1993 became Operations Technical Manager. In 1994 she became Resource Development Manager in New Orleans.

Study: Opportunities abound but investment capital limited

■ Study says producers will need new capital sources to take advantage of opportunities.

Staff Reports

LONDON — The international petroleum industry is rapidly redefining itself as it navigates through today's changing environment in its search for the capital to finance its future.

A major new study, "Competition for Capital in the International Oil & Gas Industry," released by the Price Waterhouse World Petroleum Industry Group and the Petroleum Finance Company provides a comprehensive analysis of data from 75 international companies.

Key Conclusions and Observations

"Competition has increased within firms for access to increasingly scarce free cash — capital that is not required for existing operations or projects — and both within and among firms for external capital," said James G. Crump, Chairman, Price Waterhouse World Petroleum Industry Group.

The broad scope of the "Competition for Capital" study includes several important themes concerning the changing face of the industry and the challenges companies face in the competition for scarce financial resources. Following are brief summaries of some of these themes.

Redefining the Industry

There are an unprecedented number of investment opportunities and demands facing the petroleum industry, but traditional sources of capital to finance such projects have been depressed, leading to an increased role for external capital. The stated goals of most international oil companies are rationalizing asset portfolios, cutting corporate overhead and focusing on core areas.

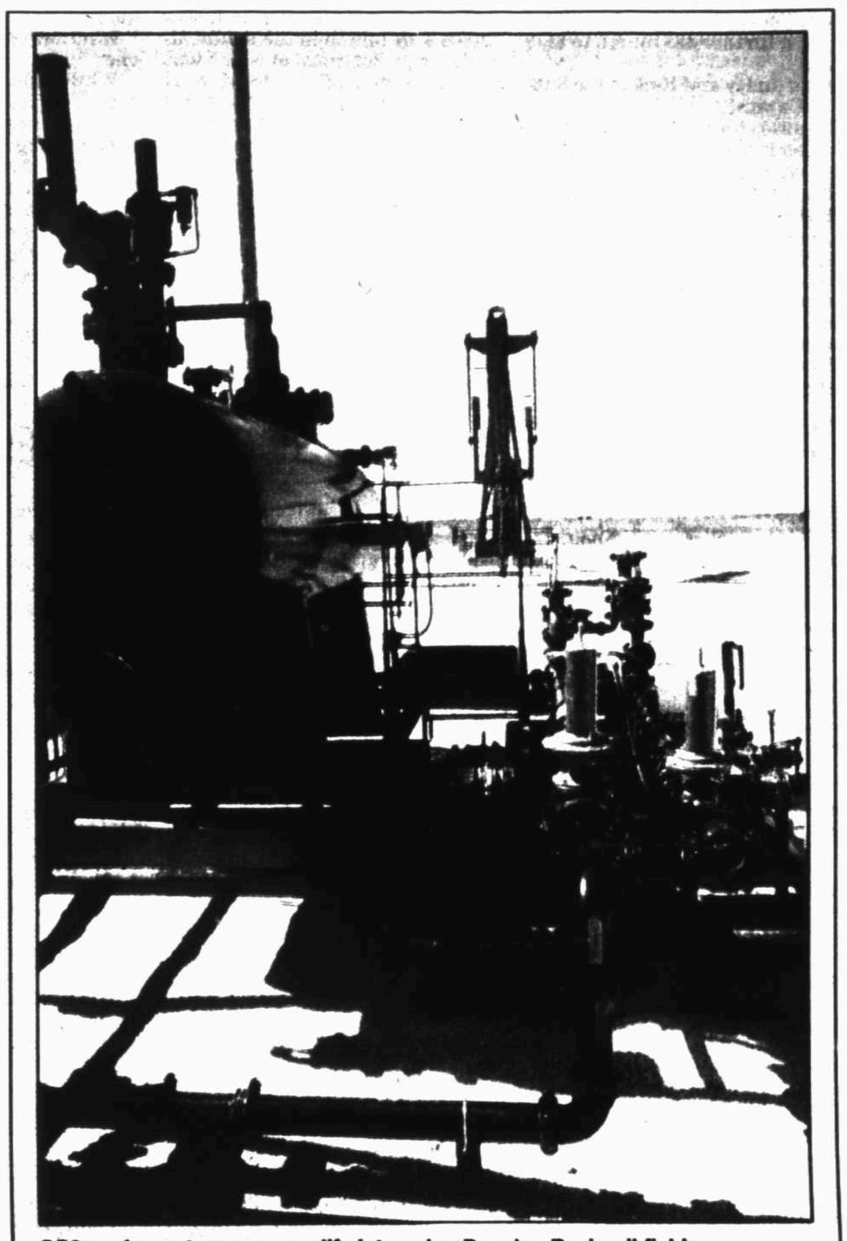

The result is a divergence between companies unable to compete effectively because of high debt levels and operational inefficiencies, and those that are building significant financial flexibility. The likely net result of the process will be a period of continued industry restructuring and asset rationalization followed by more intense merger and acquisition activity.

Changing Capital Demands

Several factors have contributed to a major change in capital demands of the international petroleum industry in recent years: 1) Funding needs of the former Soviet Union and newly emerging countries such as China; 2) New environmental regulations in the U.S. and Europe; 3) Rapid growth of capital intensive projects such as gas-fired power plants; and 4) Re-emergence of national oil companies as borrowers. International oil and gas companies are becoming more focused and financially prudent, and many national oil companies and host governments have instituted operational and fiscal reforms to attract investment capital.

The capital requirements of the international oil and gas industry are significant, ranging from $800 billion to at least $1.4 trillion in the next decade. Of these amounts, the upstream business will need between $572 billion and $1 trillion depending on the pace of change in the CO2 equipment pumps new life into aging Permian Basin oil fields.

Basin faces CO2 boom

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

The advent of a new round of CO2 recovery has the Permian Basin poised for explosive growth, says Stephen Marino, New Business Opportunities Manager for Mobil.

Marino says opportunities offered by expanding CO2 projects, for oil and gas producers, service companies and communities in the Permian Basin is greater than anyone has imagined. "CO2 recovery in the 90s, will do for the Permian Basin, what waterflooding did for the Basin in the 1960s."

Marino, part of a Mobil team for marketing CO2 in the Basin, says 400 fields have been studied so far for their CO2 potential. At current economics 60 of those fields are candidates and 30 of them are candidates right now.

"Those 60 fields represent 500 additional incremental barrels of production over the next 25 years," said Marino, who said the additional recovery also represented 20,000 working interest owners and 250 plus operators. Sal Guiterrez, a member of Mobil's CO2 team, compared the addition of 500 million incremental barrels as equivalent to the discovery of a major world

Forum to address cost concerns

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

One of the main concerns of operators in initiating a CO2 project is the cost of installation and operations. The Forum and Short Course sections of the Permian Basin CO2 Conference is designed to address those concerns.

"The Forum is designed to focus on the installation and operation phases of a CO2 flood, including all surface and downhole equipment, from rod pumps to processing plants," said Tim Schneider, a Conoco production engineer and Forum coordinator for the Permian Basin Chapter of Society of Petroleum Engineers.

Annual Reed Tool rig survey finds fleet at historic low

■ Drilles can take heart in signs that industry's woes have bottomed out.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

There is bad news and good news for drilling contractors in the recently released 43rd annual Reed Tool Co. Rotary Rig Census.

The bad news is that the census count fell to a historic low, dropping 112 rigs to 1,729 rigs, the lowest since the previous record of 1,767 set in 1973. Further, Reed is forecasting a loss of an additional 50 rigs in 1996 to set another historic low.

"The good news is, as the number of rigs declines, the chances of rig rates going up in the next few years increases," said Roy Caldwell, president of Camco Drilling Group in Houston, which is comprised of Reed Tool Co. and Hycalog, which were purchased by Camco in 1987.

In addition, Caldwell said, as the number of rigs decline, utilization increases. In 1994 utilization averaged 66 percent; in 1995 that rose to 71 percent and is expected to inch up 73 percent in 1996 if trends continue.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Reed Tool President Roy Caldwell spoke to local API and IADC groups recently.

"Reed Tool's view is a sustained utilization rate of 80 percent is the level that will put rig rates at a level where the drilling industry is healthy and the contractor can make money, buy new rigs and pay his crews good wages."

The Irish-born Caldwell, a native of Belfast, attributed the decline in the census in large part to contractors cannibalizing rigs for components as working rigs wear out. By cannibalizing rigs, he noted, contractors are living off their assets

For the moment, Reed's census paints a sharp picture of an industry that suffering terribly, as Caldwell put it. While one component - offshore drillers - are seeing utilization rates well over 80 percent due largely to the search for natural gas in the Gulf of Mexico - the other component, onshore drillers, is seeing falling rates and continued contraction.

Caldwell noted that onshore rig rates fell 1 percent this year as drilling was hampered by low oil and gas prices. Drilling rates today, he said, are lower than they were in 1981.

In addition, he said, drilling contractors are leaving the industry. Last year, 45 contractors left the industry, of which 36 owned single rigs.

"Since 1987," Caldwell observed, "the number of rig owners has fallen by more than half, to 316 today."

He contrasted this to the oil boom days of the late 1970s and early 1980s. For the decade beginning in 1973, according to Caldwell, contractors added 3,800 rigs to the census, which peaked in 1982 at 5,644 with a utilization rate of 98 percent. In 1987, he said, utilization dropped to 26 percent.

"That's what a boom does to you," he said, noting that over 70 percent of the market had disappeared by 1987.

He is convinced the industry has reached bottom and should begin seeing a slow, steady increase over the next two to three years as prices begin to firm and drilling increases, especially for natural gas.

Caldwell, who joined Camco in 1969, says he is personally very optimistic about the industry's future. He believes demand for and use of natural gas will continue to increase, driving the search for more reserves. Demand can only continue to grow low prices encourage use and as economies grow, particularly in developing nations in the Far East and eastern Europe, which aren't as energy-efficient as the United States.

And satisfying America's thirst for oil and natural gas will begin to reach its limits, he said, noting that the U.S. imports 55 percent of its needs today.

"Since we're importing oil, there's a limitation on the number of tankers we

STUDY: Industry faces problems getting enough capital

emerging markets and the future level of oil and gas prices. Downstream spending will be equally robust, given the continued impact of environmental regulations and product demand growth in the Far East, ranging from $173 billion to $230 billion. In addition, major new demands will come from greenfield liquefied natural gas (LNG) projects and the continued pace of energy asset privatization, adding a further $55 billion to $175 billion.

Opportunity and Risk in the Supply of Capital

The 1990s have seen a variety of changes in capital supply. Traditional debt providers have had to adjust their terms and costs in order to compete in a low interest rate environment. Values in equity markets have become increasingly volatile, and there has been increased competition for equity capital from the privatization of state assets. The supply of capital is diverse, ranging from equity-related capital and conventional debt to financial and commodity derivative products. External capital is more available than it has been at any time since the late 1970s, but there are a new set of political, economic and commercial risks that will have a major impact on the pace of project development and the future performance and growth of many industry players.

The oil and gas industry is a prolific user of external capital. In 1995, for example, the industry raised $101 billion in the syndicated debt market, most of which was the refinancing of existing debt at a lower cost. In the public debt markets, $38 billion was raised to finance energy-related projects. Capital also has been obtained from equity markets. During 1994, international and domestic oil and gas companies raised $7.8 billion in the New York market, a figure that includes several privatization issues.

Competing Demands for Finite Budgets

Many industry players face problems finding outlets for capital with acceptable levels of political or commercial risk that will provide long-term profitability in today's economic environment. The main task facing most international oil and gas companies is achieving a balance between competing long-term and short-term capital demands. For the integrated companies, this is even more difficult due to the poor performance and high costs associated with most downstream markets.

International is Not for Everyone

While the industry trend in recent years has been to pursue opportunities outside the mature areas of the U.S. and North Sea, the bulk of spending remains in these two areas. In 1989, an average of 70 percent of capital expenditures was made in North America and the North Sea. In 1994, the average had fallen slightly to 68 percent. In fact, there has been a renewal of interest (and spending) during 1995 in the long-term prospects of the U.S., especially in the Gulf of Mexico and Alaska. Difficulties with international exploration efforts and with commercially viable projects in the former Soviet Union have led to at least a short-term reappraisal of opportunities and outlets for capital by industry players.

International Gas: A Future Trend

The international gas business is beginning to take a large portion of the asset portfolios of many international oil and gas companies. However, excluding the U.S. gas industry, significant shifts in capital toward gas projects remains a trend for the future.

Industry Spending Remains Robust

Despite the underlying volatility of crude oil prices, industry spending habits have remained relatively robust during the past 10 years. The industry's growing efficiency in capital allocation will have a major impact on overall spending levels.

Risk, Vision and Innovation in Financial Strategy

In the international oil and gas industry, the success or failure of a company often is determined as much by its financial strategy as by its performance with the drill bit. Financial strategy has become even more important in today's environment of volatile oil and product prices, uncertainty regarding future demand levels for oil and gas, and the risks of financing investments in many emerging markets. One of the outstanding ironies of the international oil and gas industry is that it is built on geological, technical and market risk, yet most companies rigidly follow risk-averse financial strategies.

About Price Waterhouse World Petroleum Group and The Petroleum Finance Company

Price Waterhouse World Petroleum Industry Group is the leading provider of accounting and audit, tax planning and compliance and petroleum industry-specific accounting, tax and operational management information technology systems to the international oil and gas industry.

The Petroleum Finance Company is an advisory firm recognized for its expertise in the financial, commercial and political aspects of the international oil and gas business. The Petroleum Finance Company is a Petroleum Intelligence Company, a group which includes Petroleum Intelligence Weekly.

TransTexas buys stake in South Texas

HOUSTON — TransTexas Gas Corp. reported that it had acquired 75 percent working interest in approximately 42,000 acres in a new gas production area south of Victoria, Texas. The company has already commenced production from six wells in the area and believes it can drill as many as 150 wells in the acreage with a success rate of 80 percent. The play is exclusively a shallow 3-D seismic prospect in the Miocene formation, between 2,500 and 4,000 feet in depth. All six productive wells drilled to-date were located by the use of this technology and three additional wells are expected to be completed within 10 days.

The company noted that the play offers the potential of very low natural gas finding costs. This results from the accuracy in locating productive reserves in channel sands using 3-D seismic technology and since wells can be drilled and logged in less than four days.

can accommodate. There are few ports we can bring oil into. And to unload those tankers requires equipment and terminals, and those too are limited."

At present the drilling industry has contracted so sharply, he said, that any upswing in activity will severely strain resources because of the low wages and poor shape of the rig fleet.

Each July, Reed surveys all contractors in the United States, including Canada, and counts those rigs at work during the 15 day period the census is taken or the 30 days prior to the count.

"The rules haven't changed," said Caldwell. "The information for the count taken 1995 is the same as for the count taken in the 1950s."

Caldwell, who graduated from Queens University in 1961, spent much of his career with Camco in Russia, moving to Houston in 1980, becoming vice president of research in 1982. In 1987, when Camco acquired Reed, "I was asked to look it over for a couple of weeks, and I've been there ever since," he said with a laugh.

class oil basin.

Using factors that will be presented to operators at the Permian Basin CO2 Conference in December, the Mobil CO2 team estimates it will cost about $1.50 per barrel to develop the 500 million barrels, creating a cash cow of $750 million for service companies serving the Permian Basin.

"Drilling contractors, construction companies, service companies, supply and electronic companies all stand to benefit heavily from CO2 expansion," said Marino.

He said the CO2 era would create thousands of new, mostly high tech, jobs. "There will be thousands of well-paying jobs created for those who can help operators understand what is going on in a CO2 flood. The most demand will be in the electronic automation and monitoring field, and for individuals who can interpret reservoir data. There will be some brawn jobs, but most will be very high tech jobs."

He said as many as 12,000 new jobs — enough to populate a whole new town in the Permian Basin. While the jobs would be spread throughout the Permian Basin, Marino predicts Midland will become the capital of the new CO2 empire.

As economic parameters change, and many more fields become candidates Marino says the number of incremental barrels produced in the Basin could be revised upward significantly.

He said the 30 fields selected as prime candidates, were chosed because of their superior reservoir quality, size and location and the fact that success had already been demonstrated by current CO2 projects in the same type reservoirs. "But around these prime fields you will find dozens, maybe hundreds, of smaller fields." Larry Coppedge, a supervisor for land/joint interest/ CO2 sales said the size of potential CO2 fields could go as low as 10 wells or smaller.

Marino says the main keys to the commercial success of a field was reservoir quality and infrastructure. "We have to have conductivity between the injector and producer, and the further the field is away from a CO2 pipeline the higher the cost. Back in the days of $40 oil everything was judged commercial. Today, we have to live with the reality of $16 oil."

But even with $16 oil, Marino says that CO2 recovery is still cheaper than drilling or acquisitions for putting incremental barrels into the tank. With operating expenses added, Mobil estimates that adding primary barrels with drilling costs about $7 per barrel. With an acquisition the cost per barrels goes up to $8.50 per barrel, but with CO2 recovery the cost drops to about $6.50 per barrel.

"We think we have now got the operating cost of a CO2 project, lower than that of a waterflood," he added.

Guiterrez said that two items that have help increase efficiency and lower cost are horizontal drilling and elimination of gas processing. "In the era of CO2 development, horizontal drilling will be the norm, because it allows us to get more gas into the reservoir faster and thus get a return quicker with less cost. Also, we have learned that it is the stagnant CO2 and water in a flood that causes the damage. As long as you keep it moving, the damage to equipment and facilities is not as great." Guiterrez said instead of processing CO2 in a field, with expensive plants, it is now simply stripped of water and re-injected into the formation.

He said Mobil was willing to throw in its technological expertise including horizontal drilling know-how, and make production payment arrangements for CO2 with independent oil companies to recover the additional barrels of incremental oil that would never be recovered otherwise.

Marino acknowledges that the biggest resistence to making the new CO2 era happen could be inertia characterized by the industry's a "wait-and-see" attitude.

This time, however, Marino says there may be little margin for wait-and-see. "If operators wait until the water cut becomes too high, some of these reservoirs may not make it to tertiary."

Mobil, Shell, Amoco and other CO2 suppliers, who will be present at the Permian Basin CO2 Conference, December 4-5, have worked out formulas to help Basin operators to determine how long the CO2 window of opportunity will remain open for properties they own.

"It only takes a simple one page information survey, and we can provide an operator with all the information he needs to make a determination about his properties." Information about the Conference can be obtained by calling Renee at 682-5311.

COSTS: Safety also addressed

(From 1H)

Schenider said some of the topic to be discussed include: surface equipment, compression, dehydration, chemical inhibitors, WAG frequency, logging, measurement and safety and regulatory aspects of CO2 floods.

"Safety is an important topic, because operators used to working with dead oil in the Permian Basin, are suddenly working with oil under pressure, and that poses new concerns."

He said measurement was critical to the decision-making process in a CO2 flood, because getting the right amount of gas in the right place was critical to the success of a unit. He also noted that, given the high cost of CO2, logging was critical to getting it in the right formation.

"This Forum is designed specifically for engineers, operators and service companies considering CO2 projects, and will be based on a lot of shared information from actual experience," said Schneider.

Tucker Drilling reports lower net income

SAN ANGELO - Tucker Drilling Co. Inc. reported net income of $257,000 on revenues of $4,362,000 for the third quarter ended September 30, 1995. For the same quarter a year earlier, the company reported net income of $515,000 on revenues of $5,952,000.

For the six month period ending September 30, Tucker reported net income of $691,000 on revenues of $9,929,000. For the comparable period a year ago, the company posted net income of $1,255,000 on revenues of $11,032,000, which included a gain on the sale of producing oil and gas wells of $295,000.

Larry J. Tucker, chief executive officer, noted that contract drilling revenues fell 12 percent to $9,344,00 due primarily to a decrease in average rig utilization to 55 percent from 61 percent for the six month period. Oil and gas sales increased 39 percent to $585,000 due primarily to additional production from the continued development of the South Lake Trammel field.

The company recently purchased a 2 percent working interest in 8,800 acres and seven producing oil and gas wells, a 3.3 percent working interest in another 8,800 acres and a 25 percent working interest i 18,100 acres, all in Maverick County for $273,000 in cash. Three-D seismic data has been developed on most of the acreage which is prospective for the Georgetown, Edwards, Rodessa and Smackover formations.

Plains Resources begins odd lot stock sale

HOUSTON - Plains Resources announced the commencement of an odd lot sales program for holders of less than 100 shares of its common stock. This voluntary program is intended to accommodate those odd lot holders who desire an economic and convenient means of liquidating their odd lot positions and to accomplish the company's goal of reducing administrative costs.

Under the program all shares tendered will be aggregated into round lots of 100 or more shares and sold in the open market by a brokerage firm selected by the company. The company will pay the brokerage fees for all such sales. Participants in the program will receive the weighted average price per share based upon the actual open market sales of all shares that are submitted through December 15, 1995.

Materials for this program are being forwarded to all lot holders of record October 23 by Firs interstate Bank of Texas N.A., the company's transfer agent. All odd lot holders who desire to participate in the program must tender their shares by December 15.

Hadson Gas sees record gas sales volume

DALLAS - An accelerated growth plan, strengthened by new ownership, is paying off with record setting natural gas sales volumes at Hadson Gas Services Inc. of Dallas

Hadson has boosted its average daily volumes to 1.8 billion cubic feet as of October, doubling 1994's average daily volume of 900 Mmcfd. Since its acquisition by LG&E Energy Corp. in May, Hadson has continued to exceed each of its previous monthly volume records.

Officials credit the new ownership as well as a preliminary partnership agreement with Peoples Gas Light and Coke Co. and the opening of a Canadian office for the increase.

Hadson signed a preliminary marketing agreement with Peoples in August that will enhance market opportunities for both companies and expand energy management and purchasing options for large customers in the upper Midwest and Chicago areas. Hadson also opened an office Calgary, Alberta, in August to expand its supply options and establish a presence in North American markets.

Mobil begins production from North Sea field

FAIRFAX, Va. — Mobil North Sea Ltd., an affiliate of Mobil Corp., has announced first gas production from its Galahad field on blocks 48/12a and 48/13b, located 64 miles off the coast of Norfolk in the U.K. North Sea.

Production started up less than a year since project development was approved. Mobil is the operator and holds a 72.23 percent interest in the Galahad field, which is estimated to have recoverable reserves of 153 billion cubic feet of gas.

Production flows 10 miles through a 12-inch pipeline to a tie-in point on the existing export line for the Lancelot field. From there it travels to Bacton for processing. The average production rate is estimated at 70 million cubic feet a day (100% basis).

Other participants in Galahad are Chieftain Exploration (U.K.) Limited, with 14.895 percent; Premier Pict Petroleum Limited with 10 percent; and Chieftain International North Sea Limited, with 2.875 percent.

Apache tests offshore gas discovery well

HOUSTON — Apache Corp. reported the completion of its Galveston 300 1 discovery well, which tested at a rate of 11.4 million cubic feet of gas and 330 barrels of condensate per day.

The producer was tested on a 28/64-inch choke with 6,990 pounds per square inch of flowing tubing pressure. Perforations were between 13,813 feet and 13,851 feet in the RM-5 sand. The well is in federal waters approximately 18 miles off Galveston Island.

Drilling of an offset well to the discovery is under way.

Apache, the operator, owns a 50 percent working interest in the well. Amerada Hess holds the remaining 50 percent.

Swift Energy reports Louisiana discovery

HOUSTON — Swift Energy Co.announced that the Christman No. 1 exploratory well discovered oil and natural gas in the Mount Olive Field, Union Parish, in Northern Louisiana. Swift drilled the well to a total depth of 11,500 feet. The well tested at a rate of 597 barrels of oil per day and 725 thousand cubic feet of gas with a flowing tubing pressure of 2,060 psi on a 12/64 inch choke through perforations from 10,464 to 10,528 feet. Swift has five other exploratory prospects in the immediate vicinity. The company currently plans to drill at least two development wells as a result of this successful discovery. An additional six exploratory prospects will be drilled in the Ark-La-Tex region through 1996.

Swift Energy Owns directly a 25.0 percent working interest in the well, with Swift Energy Drilling Ventures 1995-1 owning 25.0 percent and other private industry partners owning the remaining 50.0 percent working interest in the well.

Seagull Energy files shelf registration

HOUSTON — Seagull Energy Corp. announced that it has filed a shelf registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission to issue up to $300 million in one or more forms of securities.

The shelf registration statement provides for the issuance of debt securities, depositary shares, preferred stock, common stock or securities warrants from time to time in the future. A Supplement to the Prospectus with more specific details will be filed at the time of any future issuance. Any offering will be made only by means of the Prospectus Supplement. The registration statement provides that, except as otherwise provided in a Prospectus Supplement, net proceeds from any offering will be added to the company's general funds and used for general corporate purposes.

The shelf registration statement has not yet become effective. The securities may not be sold nor may offers to buy be accepted prior to the time the registration statement becomes effective. This press release shall not constitute an offer to sell or the solicitation of an offer to buy nor shall there be any sale of the securities in any state in which such offer, solicitation or sale would be unlawful prior to registration or qualification of the securities under the securities laws of any such state.

Snyder suspends Mongolian well for winter

FORT WORTH — Snyder Oil Corp. announced that it had suspended the SOTAMO 19-2 well in the Tamtsag Basin of northeastern Mongolia for the winter.

The well was drilled to a total depth of 9,875 feet and pipe was set. A total of 55 feet of what appear to be productive oil sands were logged beginning at 8,879 feet and an additional 144 feet of possible oil and gas sands were identified. In the course of drilling, approximately 800 barrels of drilling fluid were lost to the most prospective zone in the well and a minor volume of oil having an estimated API gravity of 40-45 degrees was recovered. Attempts to test this zone were unsuccessful due to the lack of proper equipment.

Operations will resume in the spring when the weather improves and equipment can be mobilized. Through SOCO Tamtsag Mongolia, Inc., SOCO is the operator of the project and owns approximately a 40% interest in Blocks XIX and XXII which cover roughly five million acres in the Tamtsag Basin. In addition, SOCO Tamtsag is a co-applicant for two adjacent blocks which include an additional five million acres. The final award of these additional blocks is being vigorously pursued.

Lomak Petroleum reports record third quarter results

FORT WORTH — Lomak Petroleum Inc. announced its results for the third quarter ended September 30, 1995.

Revenues totaled $12.1 million, a 34 percent increase over the prior year period while cash flow rose 43 percent to $4.9 million. Income before taxes rose 43 percent to $1.1 million, while net income increased 24 percent to $897,000. Total assets at September 30 reached $203 million, a 43 percent jump since year end.

Despite a 20 percent decline in the average price received for natural gas and a 31 percent rise in common shares outstanding, per share cash flow rose 11 percent to $.41. Net income per share totaled $.07, equal to the prior year's results.

The results were driven by a 63 percent increase in production volumes. During the quarter, production rose to 8,110 barrels of oil equivalents per day. Gas production increased 74 percent to 33.2 MMcf per day while oil production rose 44 percent to 2,569 barrels per day.

In the first nine months of 1995, $52.8 million of acquisitions were concluded and 38 gross (27.1 net) wells were drilled or recompleted. As more than $40 million of the acquisitions were closed late in the third quarter, their impact will not be fully reflected until the fourth quarter.

John H. Pinkerton, President and Chief Executive Officer, said, "Despite the decrease in natural gas prices, our third quarter results were encouraging. Not only did production volumes increase dramatically, but our focus on costs is paying dividends. Both operating and overhead costs per barrel of oil equivalent produced dropped significantly versus the prior year."

Atmos Energy sees net income increase 29 percent

DALLAS — Atmos Energy Corp. reported net income of $18.9 million, or $1.22 per share, on operating revenues of $435.8 million for the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1995. Net income increased about 29 percent in 1995 in spite of a warm winter. In fiscal year 1994, net income was $14.7 million, or $.97 per share, on operating revenues of $499.8 million.

The company also announced an increase of $.01 per quarter, a 4.3 percent increase, in its regular quarterly common stock dividend. This is the company's eighth consecutive annual dividend increase. The quarterly dividend of $.24 per share will be paid Dec. 11, 1995, to shareholders of record on Nov. 27, 1995. The indicated annual dividend is now $.96 per share.

"Our ability to increase the dividend at a greater rate than the industry average sets us apart, and indicates the confidence management has in the future," said Robert F. Stephens, Atmos president and chief operating officer.

The company showed an increase in earnings even though the weather was 10.1 percent warmer than normal in 1995 and 9 percent warmer than 1994, affecting heating sales. Revenues decreased due to lower gas cost which is reflected in sales prices, and due to reduced gas sales because of the warmer winter. Sales of natural gas for fueling irrigation pumps during the spring and summer months helped to offset the warm winter. The company also benefited from operation and maintenance expense reductions of $10.3 million, or 10.5 percent in 1995, due to expense management and the absence of acquisition and early retirement expenses incurred in 1994. In addition, benefits were realized from rate increases and continued customer growth. The company served a record 656,259 average number of customers during 1995.

The volume of natural gas sold and transported by the company in 1995 totaled 139.8 billion cubic feet (Bcf) of gas, compared with 151.4 Bcf in 1994.

For the fourth quarter ended Sept. 30, 1995, the company reported a loss of $1.6 million, or $(.11) per share, on operating revenues of $76.0 million. This compares with a loss of $4.4 million, or $(.29) per share, on operating revenues of $77.4 million for last year's fourth quarter.

In the fourth quarter of 1994, an early retirement program in Greeley Gas Company affected the company's results by about $.06 per share. The fourth quarter is typically unprofitable for natural gas utilities because of the seasonal nature of heating sales. The volume of gas sold and transported in the fourth quarter was 25.8 Bcf in 1995, compared with 29.2 Bcf in 1994.

CO_2 PERMIAN BASIN CONFERENCE & EXPOSITION

THE FUTURE IS HERE

For decades the Permian Basin has spoken of the day when independents would have to share the responsibility of putting ailing fields on CO_2 - - that day is here

Through a chain of events the day when independents must assume responsibility of putting many of the Permian Basin's declining fields on CO2 has come sooner than expected.

The majors are selling out of non-core properties, meaning more and more properties that are potential C02 candidates have fallen into the hands of independents. At the same time many of the fields that are on waterflood have almost reached their economic limits. They must either be placed on CO2 in the very near future or abandoned.

A number of positive factors have evolved that make CO2 a real opportunity for independents and majors.

First, the cost of CO2 has come down and the majors with CO2 supplies are willing to negotiate its sale, through production payments or other financing means.

Second, the cost of installing and operating CO2 projects has come down dramatically, since the first pilot projects were initiated in the 1970's, as major oil companies learned that the "Cadillac" approach is not always the best approach. In many cases off-the-shelf equipment is used. In other cases custom designed components can reduce both installation and operating costs.

Third, major oil companies are now willing to pass on all the lessons they have learned, giving independents an opportunity to capitalize upon two decades of experience..

Fourth, over the past two decades, a CO2 infrastructure has been solidly placed, with pipelines connecting nearly all corners of the Permian Basin. Pipeline operators are ready to negotiate the construction of delivery lines to those leases that are viable economic CO2 prospects.

Now is the time to think about CO_2 and plan for its eventuality.

THE WINDOW OF OPPORTUNITY IS WIDE OPEN.

If you plan to be a part of the Permian Basin CO_2 future as an operator, supplier, service company or in any other capacity you will want to attend the largest and most comprehensive CO_2 conference ever.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

The rigs on the map above show counties in which significant drilling activity has taken place, as reported in the Activity Highlights below.

Eddy yields 41,814 Mcfd Morrow gas strike

Staff Reports

Eddy County, N.M. has gained a very strong Morrow gas discovery, 11 miles northwest of Carlsbad.

MARALO INC. tested the No. 1 S D "26" Federal for a calculated absolute open flow of 41,814 Mcfd. The well flowed from perforations 10,268 to 10,290 ft. No treatment was reported.

Permitted as a 10,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,588 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

Location is 1,783 ft. from north and 1,259 ft. from east lines of Section 26, T20s, R26e.

Sedona Oil tests Harkey gas discovery

A Harkey Sand gas discovery has been reported in Concho County, northwest of the Terry Norman field and a mile northwest of the discovery well of the Sedona Carol (Cross Cut) field, 10 miles southwest of Eden.

SEDONA OIL & GAS CORP. potentialed the No. 1 Kay Moore for a calculated absolute open flow of 776 Mcfd from perforations 3,232 to 3,239 ft. The interval was acidized with 500 gallons of 15 percent acid and fractured with 70 sacks of 20/40 sand.

Scheduled as a 3,900 ft. test, the well was drilled to 3,884 ft. and plugged back to 3,298 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 3,300 ft.

The well topped the Upper Harkey Sandstone at 3,230 ft., Fry Sandstone at 3,498 and Goen A Limestone at 3,804 ft. on ground elevation of 2,313 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from north and 776 ft. from west lines of Section 76, Block 8, H&TC survey, Abst. 1804.

The Sedona Carol (Cross Cut) field was opened in February with completion of Sedona's No. 1 Lynch for a calculated absolute open flow of 2,113 Mcfd from perforations 3,431 to 3,435 ft.

King Sand discovery tests for 257 Mcfd

GEOSURVEYS INC. has completed a King Sand gas discovery in Concho County, four miles west of the Needle Creek (Strawn) field of McCulloch County, eight miles southwest of Pasche.

The No. 1 Jacobson was potentialed for a calculated absolute open flow of 257 Mcfd. Production was natural from perforations 893 to 898 ft.

Drilled as a 3,900 ft. test, Geosurveys drilled the well to total depth of 3,253 ft. and plugged it back to 3,248 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the King at 890 ft., Winchell at 1,212 and Strawn at 1,544 ft. on ground elevation of 1,899 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from south and east lines of Section 21, Block 70, H&TC survey, Abst. 463.

Pecos reentry opens Wichita Albany pool

A Wichita Albany pool has been discovered in the Saddle Butte North field of Pecos County, 16 miles southwest of Girvin.

MARATHON OIL CO. reentered the No. 1 Reed "D" and tested it for a calculated absolute open flow of 75 Mcfd from Wichita Albany perforations 4,195 to 4,342 ft. The interval was acidized with 4,100 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid.

Originally drilled to 4,720 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 4,360 ft.

Formation tops, on kelly bushing elevation of 2,566 ft., include the Yates at 778 ft., Queen at 1,122, San Andres at 1,462, Wichita Albany at 3,242, Wolfcamp at 4,406 and Wolfcamp Granite Wash at 4,446 ft.

Location is 2,310 ft. from south and 990 ft. from west lines of Section 15, Block 145, T&STL survey, Abst. 3517.

The well was originally drilled by Texas Oil & Gas Corp. and completed in the Saddle Butte North (Granite Wash) field, tested for a CAOF of 1,075 Mcfd from perforations 4,448 to 4,542 ft.

Lea field gains Bone Spring pool

A new Bone Spring pool has been discovered in the E K field of Lea County, N.M., 29.2 miles west of Hobbs.

MANZANO OIL CORP. tested the No. 1 Bobwhite "SV" Federal to pump 128 barrels of crude, 128 Mcfd and 20 barrels of water from perforations 9,697 to 9,801 ft.

Permitted as a 14,700 ft. test, the well was drilled to 14,547 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 11,735 ft.

Crane recompletion brings dual producer

A recompletion in Crane County has resulted in a dual gas producer, 15 miles northwest of Crane.

LARIO OIL & GAS CO. recompleted the No. 4L J.B. Tubb in the Sand Hills (Clearfork 4070) field for a calculated absolute open flow of 4,081 to 4,088 ft. The interval was acidized with 2,500 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 3,600 lbs. 20/40 sand and 350 barrels of water.

It will be dually produced with production from the Sand Hills (McKnight) field, tested for a CAOF of 690 Mcfd from McKnight perforations 2,916 to 3,222 ft. The interval was acidized with 7,500 gallons of 28 percent NeFe acid.

Total depth is 4,548 ft. and the well was plugged back to 4,130 ft.

The well topped the McKnight at 2,910 ft. and Clearfork at 3,900 ft. on ground elevation of 2,610 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from south and 1,980 ft. from east lines of Section 5, Block 32, PSL survey, Abst. 1145.

Mobil Chemical plans olefin plant expansion

FAIRFAX, Va. — Mobil Chemical Co. has begun engineering for an expansion of its olefins plant in Beaumont, Texas. The project would improve operating efficiencies, enhance feedstock flexibility, and increase the plant's manufacturing capacity for ethylene, one of the primary olefins, by 40% to 1.8 billion pounds per year. Production is expected to come on stream in 1998.

Ethylene is one of the fundamental chemical building blocks used to manufacture a wide range of household, commercial and industrial products. When converted to polyethylene, it is used to make plastic bags and bottles, packaging films, housewares and children's toys. Ethylene also can be used to manufacture antifreeze, synthetic fibers and polystyrene products. The Beaumont complex also produces olefins such as propylene and other by-products.

"Domestic ethylene and derivatives production is a core business for Mobil that has historically provided attractive returns to the company," said Raymond J. McGowan, MCC vice president. "This proposed investment will make our Beaumont olefins complex competitive with the best in the industry, and it will allow us to better meet growing ethylene demand at a lower cost."

The expanded facility would use the Mobil/Stone & Webster Advanced Recovery System (ARS) proprietary technology, which provides up to 10% savings in capital and energy costs compared to conventional technologies. Process engineering by a joint Mobil/Stone & Webster team is now underway.

MCC's Petrochemicals Division is a major producer of ethylene, propylene and polyethylene with U.S. manufacturing operations in Beaumont and Houston.

Chevron signs contract to explore Peruvian tract

SAN FRANCISCO — Chevron Overseas Petroleum (Peru) Limited signed a license contract with Perupetro S.A. to explore more than 1.77 million acres on Block 52 in the Peruvian highlands.

Chevron's exploration program will include a seismic program and other geologic studies, and is anticipated to start immediately. Following acquisition and interpretation of the geologic and seismic data, determinations regarding drilling will be made.

Block 52 is located 250 miles east off the capital city of Lima an is adjacent to the giant Camisea gas/condensate discoveries. It comprises 718,928 hectares (more than 1.77 million acres), and has had no previous exploration activity.

"We are delighted to be returning to Peru," said Richard Matzke, president of Chevron Overseas Petroleum, "and we are eager to begin exploration in such an exciting area. We feel Block 52 offers excellent potential due to its geologic similarities with and geographic proximity to the prolific Camisea fields," he added.

Chevron's history in Peru dates back to the 1930s when the company conducted geological exploration in the foothills of the Andes. In addition, Chevron operated a refinery in Conchan, Peru, until 1972.

Matzke lauded the Peruvian government's newly revised hydrocarbon laws and noted that they have enhanced the appeal of operating in Peru by offering favorable terms and encouraging foreign investment in the country.

Comstock tests offshore well

DALLAS — Comstock Resources Inc. announced the results from a successful development well drilled in state waters in Ship Shoal Block 66 field, offshore of Terrebonne Parish, Louisiana. The S/L 10830 No. 3 well was dually completed in both the 9,300 foot and 9,700 foot sands. The well is currently producing 1,200 barrels of oil per day ("bopd") and 965 thousand cubic feet per day ("mcfd") from both intervals.

The No. 3 well was drilled as an updip completion to the two other producing wells on the lease (S/L 10830 No. 1 & S/L 10830 No. 2-S/T). The No. 3 well encountered the 9,300 foot sand approximately 22 feet high to the present completion in the No. 2-S/T well, which currently produces approximately 750 bopd and 1,100 mcfd and has cumulative production of over 400,000 barrels of oil and 235,000 mcf of gas. The No. 3 also encountered the 9,700 foot sand 46 feet updip to the current completion in the No. 1 well which is producing 470 bopd and 1,100 mcfd and has cumulative production of over 165,000 barrels of oil and 550,000 mcf of gas. The completion of the No. 3 well now brings the total daily lease production to over 2,227 bopd and 2,390 mcfd.

Comstock acquired its 16 percent working interest in this property in May 1995. The property is operated by Bois d' Arc Resources.

Comstock Resources, Inc. is a rapidly growing independent energy company engaged in oil and gas property acquisitions and oil and gas exploration, development, and production in the United States.

Penny Pincher gets the most out of marginal wells

It's not news to say that pumped off wells are expensive to operate or that most marginal wells stay pumped off a lot of the time.

The good news is that D-Jax's Penny Pincher is a cost-effective way to reduce the two major expenses caused by pumped-off wells: wasted electricity and damage caused by fluid pound.

Once a well pumps off, the pump spends a lot of its stroke pumping nothing, and only a little of the stroke pumping fluid. That uses electricity unproductively.

The Penny Pincher detects the faster rate of speed created when the pump is traveling through air, and shuts off the pump until the oil in the formation can "catch up" with the pump. So electricity is not wasted pumping nothing.

In fact, according to D-Jax founder and President Dee Mills, the Penny Pincher usually pays for itself in energy savings alone in about one year, on a three to four barrel per day well. That means every year after the first the savings are pure profit.

Plus, if it eliminates even one rod part, the system has paid for itself immediately.

Shutting off the pump also eliminates the shock to the system of fluid pound, which is caused when the pump smacks the fluid surface after speeding through the air on its way down. That means Penny Pincher greatly reduces rod parts, tubing leaks and pump failures.

With the dictated run time feature, the Penny Pincher can be set to shut off before fluid pound starts for up to nine cycles, further reducing fluid pound. Most other pump off controllers let the pump pound fluid at least once before they shut off.

Many companies still try to make do with simple timers, that turn the pump on and off at predetermined intervals, regardless of whether the well has pumped off or not. These times are usually based on an estimate of a well's production rate, not on how long it actually takes to pump off.

"This means wells are either over pumped or under pumped. Usually, they are over pumped because pumpers are afraid too little pumping will reduce production," said Mills.

Timers are inexpensive to put in, but they can't do what the Penny Pincher does, which is to actively monitor the well and adjust itself to the changing conditions in the field.

The Penny Pincher's LCD display also provides pump cycle times and speeds, information no timer could possibly give.

This information can alert the pumper to potential problems before they end up in production down time.

Mills recommends testing the Penny Pincher on one well first to see its benefit. Collect the utility records from a well for three to six months. Then install the Penny Pincher, continuing to monitor the costs for the same period afterward. The savings will be apparent.

In fact, the Penny Pincher can be the difference in a marginal well's profitability. It can be what allows a well to continue producing rather than being shut down.

That's good news in any situation.

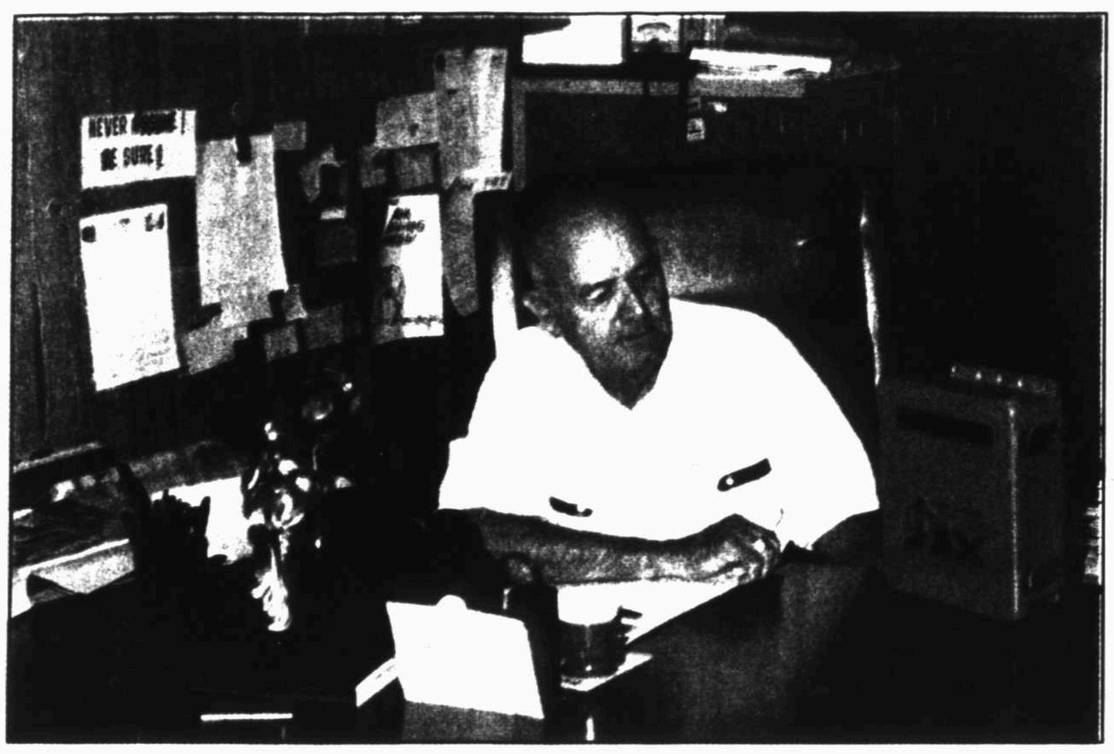

Founded in 1973 by Dee Mills, D-Jax Corporation builds and markets dynamometers and pump off controllers, including the Penny Pincher, worldwide. They can be reached at 683-5710 or 1-800-446-3529.

IT MAKES CENTS

D-Jax Penny Pincher Advantage

- ¢ Maximizes production while minimizing cost.
- ¢ Takes full advantage of changing fluid entry rates.
- ¢ Saves lost production due to frequent workovers.
- ¢ Saves costs due to wear on rod string, tubing, pump and gear box (fewer pump strokes per day).
- ¢ Protects from fluid pound damage that causes rod parts.
- ¢ Saves energy costs by not operating a partially filled pump.
- ¢ Protects from gas locking.
- ¢ Increases the economic life of stripper wells.

The Penny Pincher pump off controller is designed for marginal wells. D-Jax Corporation's founder and president Dee Mills says that by refining the design, D-Jax has made this unit less expensive than others. This means the Penny Pincher is cost effective on many marginal wells where more expensive controllers can not be justified.

Holloman's new name encompasses expanded services

Realizing that the name "Holloman Construction" had become too confining for a company expanding into new services, the firm has announced a name change. They are now known as Holloman Corporation.

"We have not abandoned our longtime work of plant and pipeline construction," said the company's Marketing Manager, Dudley Haynie. "We've simply expanded beyond plant and pipeline construction to stay abreast of changes in the oil field."

Those changes became apparent as Holloman Corporation received more and more requests for "turnkey" projects, wherein Holloman Corporation did the engineering and planning as well as the construction.

This led Holloman Corporation to expand their engineering capabilities into an entire division several months ago. Holloman Corporation president and founder Sam Holloman said downsizing among majors and rapid growth of independents created this opportunity. "As the majors downsize, they're outsourcing more and more work. I think this will be a growth area for Holloman Corporation, from both major oil companies and independent oil companies."

Many majors no longer have the luxury of an engineering staff large enough to plan major construction or expansion in addition to their day to day activities. Independents have generally not had large engineering staffs at all.

The new engineering division allows the company to be, in Mr. Holloman's word a "superstore" of construction, better able to execute construction projects in a way that saves clients time and resources.

Previously, said Mr. Holloman, majors would do the planning and put the construction phase out for bids. It could take a long time for bids to be evaluated and construction to begin. With Holloman Corporation's in-house engineering capabilities, this long wait is eliminated.

"We have not abandoned our longtime work of plant and pipeline construction. We've simply expanded beyond plant and pipeline construction to stay abreast of changes in the oil field."

Dudley Haynie
Marketing Manager
Holloman Corporation

When planning a project, Holloman's engineers work closely with both the client and their own construction managers to ascertain the most effective way to build what is needed. This is where the cost savings occur.

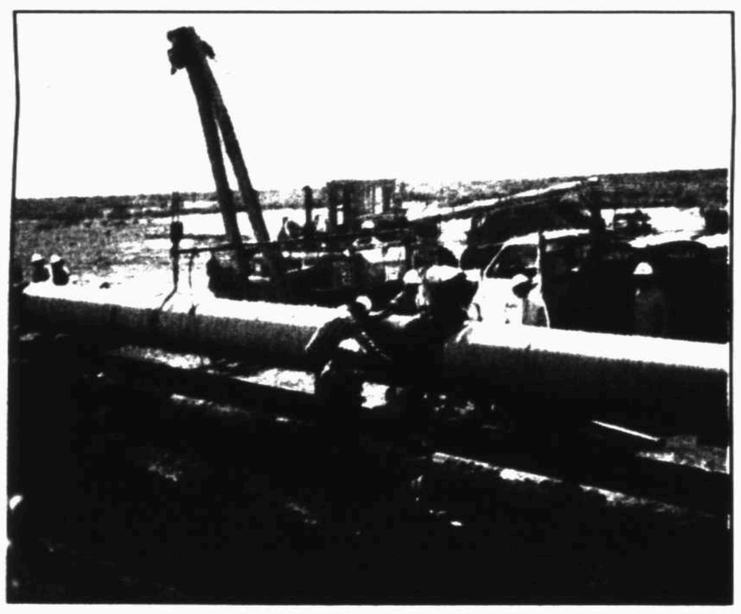

Frank Eaton, who is vice-president in charge of the new division, said, "By dealing with a single company from design through completion, our clients save ten to fifteen percent or more than if they did their own engineering."

The recent development of long term alliances also saves clients money. Mr. Eaton said, "I don't have to spend time reviewing specifications for a project. We can be more cost effective because our time is spent solving problems, not looking up procedures."

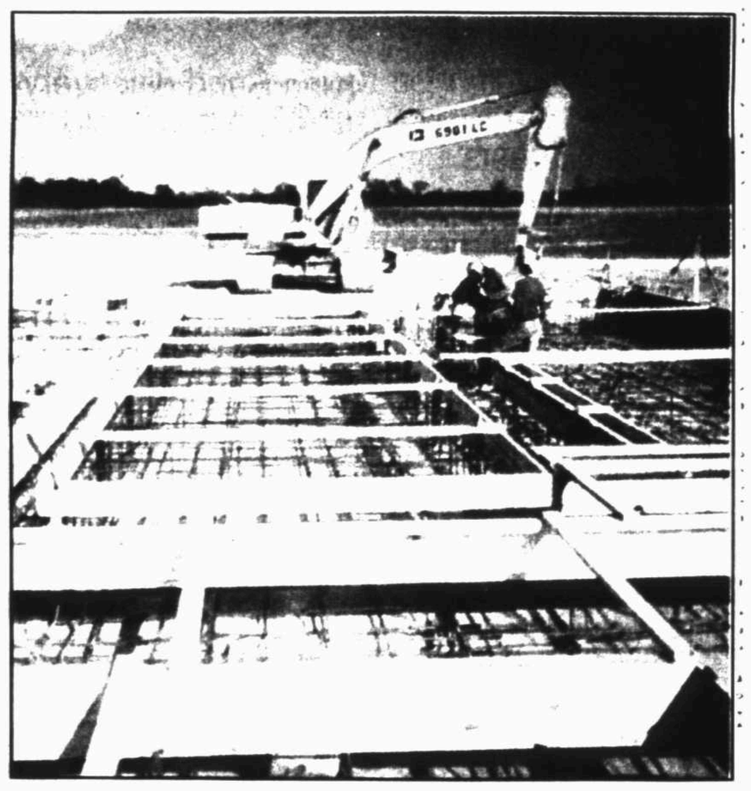

Holloman Corporation also keeps abreast of OSHA regulations, which must be incorporated into plant and pipeline designs. This is another area most downsized oil companies can no longer afford.

Mr. Haynie concluded by saying, "The new name, Holloman Corporation, will allow us to continue to add services as the market demands. We currently do a lot of things besides construction. This will give us the opportunity to continue to expand in the future."

The Holloman Corporation was founded in 1967 by Sam Holloman. The firm now employs approximately 300 people on projects from Florida to Arizona and Wyoming. The phone number is (915) 381-2000 or (800) 521-2461.

Plant and pipeline construction, long a mainstay of Holloman's business, is still an important link in helping companies save time and money on their projects.

MEETINGS

SPE section to host national SPE president

Roy H. Koerner will be the guest speaker at Friday's luncheon meeting of the Permian Basin section, Society of Petroleum Engineers. The meeting will be at the Petroleum Club beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Koerner

Koerner's talk will be entitled "World Amidst Change: Technology and Work in the 21st Century" and center on three interrelated energy issues. First, four key drivers of world change related to energy. Then he will review the development of technologies to the industry. Third, he will reflect on the change in skills which professionals have begun to embrace to keep pace with the changing technologies. Koerner will then conclude with a discussion of his four-step requirement to facilitate change.

Koerner, 1995 SPE president, is manager of production technology with Texaco Exploration and Production Inc. in Denver. He lived in Midland from 1984 to 1985, serving as division operations manager of two operating districts and the petroleum engineering and information services departments.

Legal obligations topic for landmen's meeting

The Permian Basin Landmen's Association will meet Tuesday at the Petroleum Club beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Guest speakers will be Mike Curry and Renee Douglas of the law firm Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe & Dawson P.C. The topics will be the legal obligations to clients and employers and the landman's duty of disclosure during negotiations. Those attending will receive one CPL/ethics credit.

WTGS will host Wichita State professor

The West Texas Geological Society will meet Tuesday at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Guest speaker will be S.J. Mazzullo, professor of geology at Wichita State University. He will speak on "Regional Aspects of Diagenesis and Porosity Evolution Along a Lower Permian Platform-to-Basin Transect, Midland Basin."

Mazzullo, who received his doctorate in 1974 from the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, had worked at Texaco, Union Texas and as geological consultant before joining Wichita State in 1987.

Cost is $7 and reservations can be made by calling 683-1573.

Computer users to discuss neural networks

The Computer Users Group of the Society of Petroleum Engineers will meet Tuesday beginning at 11:30 a.m. The meeting has been moved for this month only to the American Legion Hall.

Shahab Mohaghegh will speak on "Application of Artificial Neural Networks in Petroleum Engineering." Artificial neural networks are one of many paradigms that form the new technology of computational intelligence, a new tool that can help petroleum engineers in many areas such as reservoir engineering, formation evaluation, production engineering and drilling engineering. His summary will include application of neural networks in reservoir characterization, well stimulation and multi-phase flow in pipes.

Mohaghegh is an assistant professor in the petroleum and natural gas engineering department at West Virginia University.

Cost is$12 and reservations can be made by calling 686-7329.

Neural net software will be given to those attending and a door prize drawing will be held.

Well loggers to hear about micro-image logs

The Permian Basin Well Logging Society will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Maged Fam, senior log analyst with the interpretation development department of the Halliburton Technology Center in Houston will speak on "Applying Electrical Micro-Imaging Logs to Reservoir Characterization."

Electrical micro-image logs provide a powerful link between core measurements, traditional logging information and other methods of reservoir characterization. Through examples, Fam will demonstrate the full utility of two- and three-dimensional electrically-based image logs in geologic and reservoir characterization.

Cost is $12 for members, $14 for non-members. Reservations can be made by calling 684-0700.

Arco Permian to host CLP test review

Arco Permian will host the Comprehensive Land Practices Review November 28-30 in the Arco building, 600 N. Marienfeld. The CPL examination will be held December 1.

Further information is available by calling 817/847-7700 or 915/688-5831.

NAMEDROPPING

Compressor Systems Inc. announces two additions to its management staff.

CLAY CALHOUN has joined CSI as production manager, based at CSI's Midland corporate and fabrication facility. He has over 12 years experience in the energy industry and was most recently employed as fabrication manager for a Houston skid and pressure vessel manufacturer.

W.W. "WALT" SYNAVE has joined CSI as manager of project engineering, based at the company's Midland corporate and fabricationf acility. He has 25 years experience in applications and project engineering in the gas compression packaging industry, most recently as maanger of application engineering for a comipressor packager based in Denver.

Baker Oil Tools announces four promotions.

MICHAEL F. HOLTEN has been promoted as region salesman in the New Orleans region sales office due to the upturn in deep water activity in the Gulf of Mexico.

RICK COE has been promoted to Holten's replacement in the Midland region sales office. Coe previously served as sales and service manager for the Odessa service center.

RICKY HARPER has been promoted to sales and service manager for the Odessa service center.

JIM BURTNER has been named vice president, engineering, for the company. He joined Baker Hughes in 1975 and most recently served as director, marketing services, for Baker. He replaces FRANK RICHARDSON, who is retiring after 37 years service with Baker Hughes.

FEDERICO MARTIN has joined Grant Geophysical Inc. in Houston as area geophysicist. He will provide expert geophysical problem solving including 3-D seismic survey designs, quality assurance and data processing assistance for Grant's clients and field crews.

C.J. "PETE" SILAS, retired chairman and chief executive officer of Phillips Petroleum Co., will be this year's recipient of the American Petroleum Institute's highest award, the Gold Medal for Distinguished Service.

L. WILSON BERRY JR. has been named President of Texaco Refining and Marketing Inc. effective January 1, 1996.

Berry, who currently serves as Regional Director - U.K. and Ireland, and Managing Director - Manufacturing and Marketing for London-based Texaco Ltd., succeeds THOMAS M. MATTHEWS, who has been appointed President of Texaco Natural Gas Inc. In his new position, Berry will relocate to Los Angeles.

Berry will oversee all of Texaco's refining and marketing operations on the West Coast and in the Mid- Continent regions.

J. CAREY McHUGH has been named Regional Director, Manufacturing and Marketing, -Western Caribbean and Central America for Texaco's Latin America/West Africa (LA/WA) Division based in Coral Gables, Fla.

McHugh, who currently is Vice President - Marketing for Texaco Lubricants Company (TLC), succeeds ROGER L. EBERT, who has been appointed Regional Director - U.K. and Ireland and Managing Director - Manufacturing and Marketing for London-based Texaco Limited.

Kelly realigns management, names president, CEO

HOUSTON — Kelley Oil & Gas Corp. announced that David L. Kelley has been replaced as Chairman, President and CEO of the company.

Ralph P. Davidson, a director since 1993, will serve as Chairman of the Board, and Fair Colvin, Jr., a director since 1990 and Senior Vice President in charge of production and operations, has been appointed President and CEO.

As part of the management changes, W. Matt Ralls, the company's CFO since 1990, has assumed additional responsibilities as Executive Vice President. In addition, Charles L. Winn, Sr., head of the geophysical department since 1991, has been promoted to Senior Vice President.

Mr. Colvin was President of Louisiana Gas Purchasing Corporation, an intrastate pipeline company, from 1971 until 1984, when that company was purchased by Lear Petroleum Corporation. He served as Senior Vice President of Lear's gas marketing subsidiary until joining the company in 1987 as President of its gas marketing subsidiary. Mr. Colvin began his career in various petroleum engineering assignments with a major oil company and a large independent.

Mr. Davidson served from 1980 through 1987 as Chairman of the Board of Time, Inc., where he spent 35 years in various executive capacities, including Publisher of Time Magazine. Mr. Davidson is a director of First Interstate Bancorp and a member of the Board of Trustees of Phoenix House, the nation's largest residential drug abuse center, and the National Council for Adoption.

Kelley Oil & Gas is an independent exploration and production company with oil and gas properties located primarily in Louisiana. The company operates through Kelley Oil & Partners, Ltd. and separate development partnerships in which it owns controlling interests. The company's common and preferred stock are traded on the Nasdaq National Market under the symbols KOGC and KOGCP.

Enron Corp. plans to sell 21 percent of its stake in Enron Oil

By N.Y. Times News Service

Washington — Enron Corp. plans to sell about 21 percent of the 128 million common shares that it holds in Enron Oil & Gas Co.

Enron Oil & Gas filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission to register 27 million common shares owned by Enron Corp. The sale of these shares will cut Enron's stake in the oil and gas company to 63 percent, from 80 percent of shares outstanding.

In addition, Enron Corp. plans to issue three-year notes that, upon maturity, will be mandatorily exchanged for no more than 10 million Enron Oil and Gas common shares.

If the maximum 10 million shares are exchanged for the notes, and underwriters exercise their over-allotment options for both the note and stock sales, Enron's stake would fall to 54 percent of shares outstanding.

Enron Oil & Gas, based in Houston, is one of the largest independent oil and gas companies in the United States in terms of proven domestic reserves. Enron produces natural gas and operates a natural gas transmission system.

Goldman, Sachs & Co. and Smith Barney Inc. will serve as lead underwriters for the stock sale.

Valero launches first intrastate gas electronic bulletin board

SAN ANTONIO — Valero Transmission Co., a wholly owned subsidiary of Valero Energy Corp., announced that it has launched Velocity, the first intrastate electronic bulletin board (EBB) in the Texas natural gas industry.

Through its new EBB, Valero will offer natural gas producers, shippers and end users real-time access to measurement and operational data relating to the company's network of natural gas pipelines and gas processing plants. Velocity receives data on a daily basis from electronic flow measurement (EFM) points, as well as weekly updates of other measurement data, from Valero's 8,000-mile natural gas pipeline system. The system will continue to be expanded over the next 18 months through the installation of additional EFM points.

As of November 1, Velocity is accessible to a test group of Valero's current customers, and will be rolled out to additional natural gas producers, shippers and end users once the test period has been completed. Once connected to Velocity, Valero's customers can access a variety of information, including monthly measurement data for the last 24 months; final measurement delivery statements for the previous month; current month measurement data from existing EFM stations; and general notices relating to Valero's operations, such as scheduled shutdowns of pipelines or plants as well as updates on unplanned outages.

"Velocity is the first phase of a comprehensive gas management, marketing and accounting system which Valero is implementing to provide real-time information to our customers in today's fast-paced, information-intensive natural gas environment," said Joe Becraft, President and Chief Executive Officer of Valero's natural gas and natural gas liquids operations. "This new service will further improve communications between Valero and our customers, and will enable our customers to monitor and control their volumes in a more timely manner. We have made the EBB available to a specific group of customers for the next 30 days so that we can fully control the implementation of the system, and ensure that we provide the same flexible and reliable service that our customers have come to expect from Valero. Once the test period is completed, Velocity will be available to customers and prospective customers all along our physical system."

Valero Energy is a diversified energy company engaged in the production, transportation and marketing of environmentally clean fuels and products. The company's three core businesses are specialized refining, natural gas and natural gas liquids. Valero refines high-sulfur atmospheric residual oil into premium products, primarily reformulated gasoline, at its refinery in Corpus Christi, Texas, and markets those products. In addition, the company has an 8,000-mile network of natural gas transmission and gathering lines throughout Texas; purchases natural gas for resale to distribution companies, electric utilities, other pipelines and industrial customers throughout the United States and Mexico; and provides gas transportation services to third parties.

HALLIBURTON PROVIDES SOLUTIONS

Case History #220

LOCATION OF JOB: Reagan County, Texas, Spraberry Trend of the Permian Basin.

TYPE OF JOB: This job involved running Gamma Ray/Dual Spaced neutron/Long Spaced Sonic combination in a cased hole well.

CUSTOMER CHALLENGE: The productive interval in the well was the Spraberry formation which has been depleted in this well. The customer wanted logs to evaluate the other formations for possible pay zones before plugging. Although the Clearfork formation is productive as a carbonate reservoir throughout the Permian Basin there is very little knowledge, if any, concerning Clearfork production from naturally fractured zones such as we found in this well.

HALLIBURTON'S SOLUTION: The solution to evaluating the upper zones was to run the referenced logging suite. The sonic and neutron log proivide a means of identifying naturally fractured formations and probable pay zones based upon the various logging responses.

DETAILS OF JOB:

Casing Size:	5.5"
Original TD	8,200
Original Logs	Gamma/Neutron
Original Objective:	Spraberry
New Objective:	Clearfork Formation

- The plug back depth was 6,650' at the base of the Clearfork section.
- Run Dual Spaced Neutron Porosity on limestone matrix and Sonic Porosity on sandstone matrix.
- Present both porosity curves on 0 to 30% scale.
- Identify pay zones from logs.
- Perforate and acidize formation.

RESULTS: Current production is 57 BOPD, 45 MCFPD, and 3 BWPD.

CUSTOMER TESTIMONIAL: Without this logging suite and evaluation technique, finding this particular pay zone would have been extremely difficult.

UNIQUENESS OF JOB: Although we run this logging suite quite often in sandstone gas reservoirs for identifying production behind pipe, this is the first time we have used this technique in the Clearfork formation.

FUTURE WORK: This customer plans to use this technique on several more Spraberry wells. Obviously, the magnitude or potential of using this technique in similar situations in the Spraberry Trend exceed the basic story line of finding a 50 barrel well for the customer. There are literally thousands of Spraberry wells that can be evaluated for fractured Clearfork production.

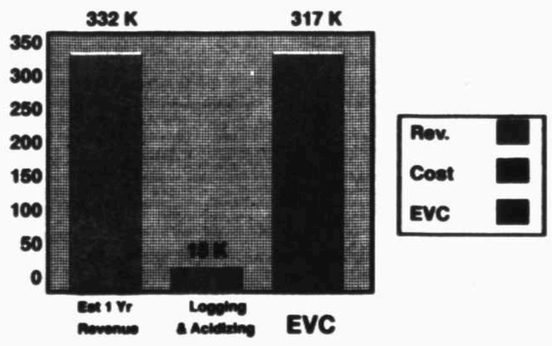

ECONOMIC BENEFIT TO THE CUSTOMER:

Cost Analysis:

• Halliburton Logging charges	$8,900
