Commissioner deflects questions

AUSTIN (AP) — Public utility commissioner Marta Greytok urged Texans to join a "taxpayers revolt" on Monday, and deflected questions about her own political future.

"I'm not here as a public utility commissioner. I'm here as Marta Greytok, average tax payer, former mayor, former head of the appraisal district in Harris County," Ms. Greytok told a Wednesday news conference.

She was asked about a legislative proposal to merge the Public Utility Commission with the state Railroad Commission as a possible budget-savings.

"I'm not sure that has anything to do with savings — as you know we are a very small agency," Ms. Greytok said.

"However, I will say that there is one portion of that idea that I could never accept, and that's the idea of moving the electric and telephone utilities into a commission where the commissioners take money from those they regulate for their campaign funds," she said.

"I don't think it's a good idea. Essentially, it's sort of regulation to the highest bidder," she added.

Railroad commissioners are elected, utility commissioners appointed.

Told that some had suggested she was becoming involved in Monday's anti-tax rally as a step in running statewide for the Railroad Commission, Ms. Greytok said, "That is not my intention."

Officially, little enthusiasm to cut nukes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The newest U.S.-Soviet arms treaty is the first to reduce the most deadly nuclear arms, yet it still leaves each side with enough thermonuclear firepower to wipe out the other many times over.

And while the Bush administration is looking at how many strategic nuclear weapons it really needs now that the Cold War is over, it seems lukewarm to the idea of radically cutting back.

In fact, it's spending billions of dollars to build new nuclear arms.

Nine years after Moscow and Washington began negotiating cuts in their arsenals of strategic, or long-range, nuclear weapons, the two sides have agreed to a complex formula that will reduce those warheads by about 30 percent.

The Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty is to be signed at a July 30-31 summit in Moscow.

It leaves the superpowers a long way from Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's stated goal of eliminating all nuclear weapons by the end of the century, and analysts say it's unclear whether there will even be a START II negotiation.

Talking to reporters Wednesday in London, President Bush appeared to indicate his dim view of reductions beyond the limits set by the new treaty.

Asked if he would consider additional cuts, Bush replied dryly, "I haven't started thinking that way."

Raymond Garthoff, a defense analyst at the Brookings Institution and a former U.S. arms negotiator, said any push for further progress is likely to come from the Soviets, who are eager to reduce the U.S. advantage in naval nuclear arms.

"It's clear that they're ready to go further than we are" in additional reductions in strategic nuclear arms, Garthoff said Thursday.

Garthoff said it would "make good sense" to cut U.S. and Soviet strategic nuclear arsenals by another 50 percent beyond the levels set by START. The treaty leaves about 9,000 warheads on the U.S. side and about 7,000 for the Soviets — more than the two countries had when the START negotiations began in 1982. Both sides also have thousands of nuclear warheads not covered by the treaty.

Although START leaves the United States with a numerical edge in warheads, the fine print of the agreement gives the Soviets some important advantages, such as numbers of ground-based intercontinental ballistic missiles.

Taken together, the treaty's many provisions leave the two sides roughly equal.

An area of nuclear disarmament that may get U.S. and Soviet attention in the next few years is weapons of the shortest range, those that travel less than 300 miles and are deployed mainly in Europe and the western Soviet Union.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney told a congressional hearing on Tuesday that he saw a good chance that NATO would agree this fall to open negotiations on short-range nuclear forces, an area in which the Soviets hold a large numerical

Chamber backs sale of alcohol in city park

By DEBBIE LINCEUM Staff Writer

Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce officials announced Tuesday they support the sale of alcohol in areas of Comanche Trail Park.

The chamber board of directors voted 14-1 to support an alternative to an alcohol ban at all city park facilities pending with the Big Spring City Council. Board president Steve Fraser said the chamber took a stand because of the wishes of its membership.

"We've had an average of 35 calls a day for the last seven days," Fraser said. "Ninety-five percent of them favor a change (and are) against the ban."

He said retailers, restaurant owners and motel operators represented by the Chamber are concerned that a ban would negatively impact their businesses.

"A total ban on alcohol does not support economic development," Fraser said. "Our concern was what it was going to do to our membership. Our retailers said those events (park concerts and lake events) had a big effect on sales." The council approved on first reading an ordinance July 9 banning alcohol in all city parks. If it is approved on second reading Tuesday, an alcohol ban would begin Aug. 1.

A new ordinance, drafted at the request of Mayor Max Green, would allow for the sale of beer at the Comanche Trail Golf Course and amphitheater, the Cotton Mize Baseball Field and Moss Creek Lake. It is expected to appear on the agenda for Tuesday's council meeting.

Green said he plans to support the ordinance and hopes it will receive council's majority vote. It would require two readings (Tuesday and Aug. 13) for final approval.

"I'm just hoping the ordinance will have enough strength to pass, but I don't know," Green said. "I'm thrilled to death over the support the Chamber has shown. Even if it does lose, it is still showing the Chamber is working real hard with everybody on trying to improve our community."

Chamber executive vice president Linda Roger said the board

Council looking for more revenue

By DEBBIE LINCEUM Staff Writer

Big Spring City Council members scoured the proposed 1991-92 budget Wednesday, looking for additional revenue sources to make up an expected deficit budget.

With an eroding tax base and property values lowered by more than $32 million, the general fund is projected to fall short more than $50,000 with ad valorem taxes at the effective rate. The current tax rate, 57 cents per $100 of valuation, would be raised to 64 cents in order to generate the same amount of revenue.

A majority of the council agreed to examine revenue sources before considering new programs requested by each department, all of which are unfunded in the proposed budget. Sources they considered included excess fund balances from other funds and increases in utility costs and other fees.

The city budget package includes a five-year capital outlay plan that is unfunded, a fact that concerned some council members.

"I think we need a plan," said council member John Coffee. "But I think we ought to plan our income widely also."

"We tried to develop the needs by the departments," said City Manager Hal Boyd of the five-year plan. "People say we never plan ahead. The dollars are tremendous, but the state of our equipment is in that condition."

Senate OKs abortion advice

"It's pretty well confused now... This is just round one."

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kansas

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration and Democratic leaders are cooperating to dodge recorded votes on abortion as Congress and the president inch toward a veto showdown that each fears it could lose.

By voice vote, the Senate on Wednesday passed a bill to reverse administration regulations that would forbid 3,800 federally subsidized family planning clinics from advising women on abortions.

Democratic leaders in the House pushed through a similar measure but in different form three weeks ago without a direct vote, attaching it to an appropriations bill that the White House told Republicans not to challenge.

With two successful abortion vetoes under his belt, Bush vowed June 4 to veto any measure that would weaken existing regulations on abortion-related activities. However, he said last week that he might be willing to compromise.

Nonetheless, the Office of Management and Budget said in a letter to Senate leaders this week that Bush's "intention... to ensure that no federal funds are used to support abortion" has not changed.

"It's pretty well confused now," said Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas. "This is just round one."

Dole said White House officials agreed with him it was a "good idea" to avoid a vote that would indicate whether abortion-rights advocates could override a veto proposed by Bush.

"The final vote is the override vote; that's the vote that counts," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., coauthor of the bill with Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I.

Kennedy acknowledged his side is not sure it has the 67 votes in the 100-member Senate needed to overcome a Bush veto.

But citing a 64-35 vote a day earlier on a weakening amendment offered by conservatives, he said, "The tide is moving in our direction."

As further indication that Bush also is not ready for a showdown, the White House told officials of the Department of Health and Human Services last week that it wanted to review the issue again, effectively delaying a cutoff of funds to any clinics.

Federally subsidized clinics served about 4 million women last year, 1.7 million of them teenagers. The regulation would deny a share of the $144 million that the government now provides for family planning to any clinics that continue to discuss abortion with clients.

The issue could come up again in the Senate as early as next week in the Senate version of the appropriations bill covering the departments of HHS, Labor and Education.

"We're going to keep the pressure on," said Sally Patterson, a spokeswoman for Planned Parenthood, which operates many of the federally supported clinics.

The measure would reverse a rule issued by HHS in 1988 forbidding federally funded family planning clinics from telling the mostly poor women who seek their services that abortion is an option.

Supporters of abortion rights called the regulation a "gag rule" and immediately challenged it in court, delaying its implementation for three years now.

But after the Supreme Court upheld the regulation in May and the administration said it planned to implement the ban by September, abortion rights supporters turned to an legislative assault on several fronts.

The American Medical Association and other medical groups condemned the regulation as government intervention into the doctor-patient privilege and claimed it would force them to violate their Hippocratic oath.

Stenholm, a candidate for chief deputy whip

By PATRICK DRISCOLL Staff Writer

Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford, is among six Southern congressmen, including another from Texas, who are touted by conservatives and moderates as candidates for House chief deputy whip.

Also, in an effort to reflect a broad constituency of the Democratic Party, House Speaker Tom Foley of Washington said Wednesday he wants the chief deputy position expanded to include three representatives, who he may appoint next week.

When asked about pressure from different factions of the party to have a Southerner, a woman or a minority appointed, Foley answered, "I certainly would think that would be appropriate for the appointments to be made here, if authorized, to reflect a broad constituency of the party."

The Organization Study and Review Committee of the Democratic Caucus must approve the expanded position.

Stenholm said from Washington Wednesday that either he or Rep. Charles Chapman, D-Sulphur Springs, the other Texan touted as a candidate, would be a good choice not only for Texas but also for conservatives.

"It's always important to have a member of a coalition in a leadership role," said Stenholm, coordinator of the 10-year-old Conservative Democratic Forum, of which about 60 congressmen are members.

Other conservative Democratic representatives proposed as candidates include Butler Derrick of South Carolina, Dave McCurdy of Oklahoma, Beryl Anthony of Arkansas and Elizabeth Patterson of South Carolina.

Stenholm, one of about a dozen deputy whips now, said the chief deputy whip position is considered a gateway to power positions in the House. "It is a step," he said.

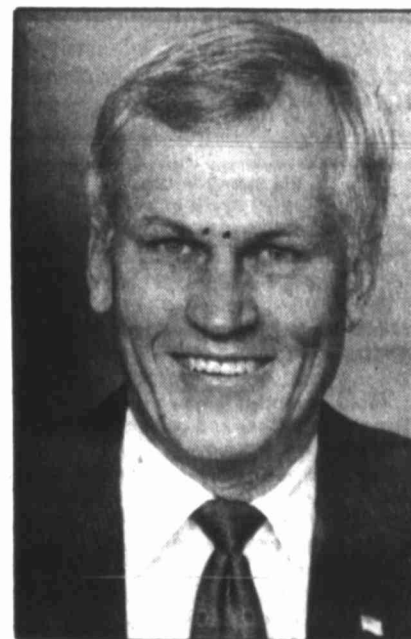

"This is not a ceremonial position at all," Foley said. "They will be full members of the (House Democratic) leadership." If the chief deputy position is expanded to three slots, the Democratic Party leadership positions in the House would grow from six to eight.

The opening for chief deputy whip occurred when Rep. David Bonior of Michigan was elected majority whip by his Democratic colleagues last week. Bonior, appointed chief deputy whip by former House Speaker Jim Wright of Fort Worth, replaced William Gray of Pennsylvania, who resigned to direct the United Negro College Fund.

Stenholm, asked what he thought his chances are to get an appointment as chief deputy whip, replied, "He (Foley) has got a lot of com-

Mosbacher cancels speech to Hispanics

HOUSTON (AP) — Hispanics who planned to confront U.S. Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher about his decision not to adjust census figures booed and walked out of a national convention luncheon when he failed to appear.

Mosbacher, who said Monday he would not adjust the 1990 census that missed an estimated 5 million residents, canceled his luncheon speech before the National Council of La Raza's annual convention on Wednesday about two hours before he was scheduled to appear.

"We don't understand why a public official cannot defend his policy before the public," NCLR President Raul Yzaguirre told about 1,000 people attending the lunch. About a third of the crowd later booed and stormed out, shouting "Walk out! Walk out!" when Commerce Undersecretary Roger Wallace was introduced.

Yzaguirre tried unsuccessfully to quiet the raucous crowd so those who remained could listen to Wallace, but the doors to the banquet hall finally had to be closed. Sporadic yells still could be heard during Wallace's short speech.

Castro is focus of summit

GUADALAJARA, Mexico (AP) — Cuban President Fidel Castro, the black sheep of the Latin American family, is the focal point of a 21-nation summit opening today.

The first-ever Ibero-American summit brings the leaders of Spain, Portugal and 19 Latin American nations to Mexico's second-largest city to talk about forging closer economic and cultural ties in a changing world.

Castro, the leader who most fiercely resists change, is the center of attention.

A number of key leaders are expected to tell the grizzled revolutionary that the price of admission to the regional family requires some move toward democracy and a Western-style economy.

Cuba currently does not have diplomatic relations with eight of the 21 summit nations and was suspended from the Organization of American States in 1962.

But Colombia and Chile announced Wednesday night they were establishing consular and commercial relations, the first steps towards restoring full diplomatic ties with Cuba.

Colombian President Cesar Gaviria made the announcement shortly before he went to have dinner with Castro.

"We want to do everything we can to reincorporate Cuba into the life of Latin America," Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez, one of the region's most influential leaders, said as he and Castro prepared to meet privately.

Castro has made it clear he wants to rejoin the Latin American community — but on his terms. Cuba, he has said over and over, will remain a one-party socialist state.

In the weeks leading up to the summit, the Cuban government has adopted a defensive posture. Any political attacks during the summit, Vice President Carlos Rafael Rodriguez warned, will be returned "blow for blow."

Mexico, the host nation and a longtime friend of Cuba, has said it would try to shield Castro, the only non-elected leader at the summit, from embarrassing public pressure.

"It's a big step forward that he's even here," said a top Mexican official.

A gentleman's agreement to go easy in public on Castro, whose pride and stubbornness are legendary, was evident.

"Castro is a man of great experience and it would be pretentious for us to try and give him advice," Perez said.

Despite the diplomatic tone Mexico has tried to set, there could still be fireworks.

"There are two sides to Castro. He is brilliant, charismatic and persuasive. But he is also incredibly hardheaded," said Gillian Gunn, a Cuba expert at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace in Washington, D.C.

"He can say some horribly anti-democratic things."

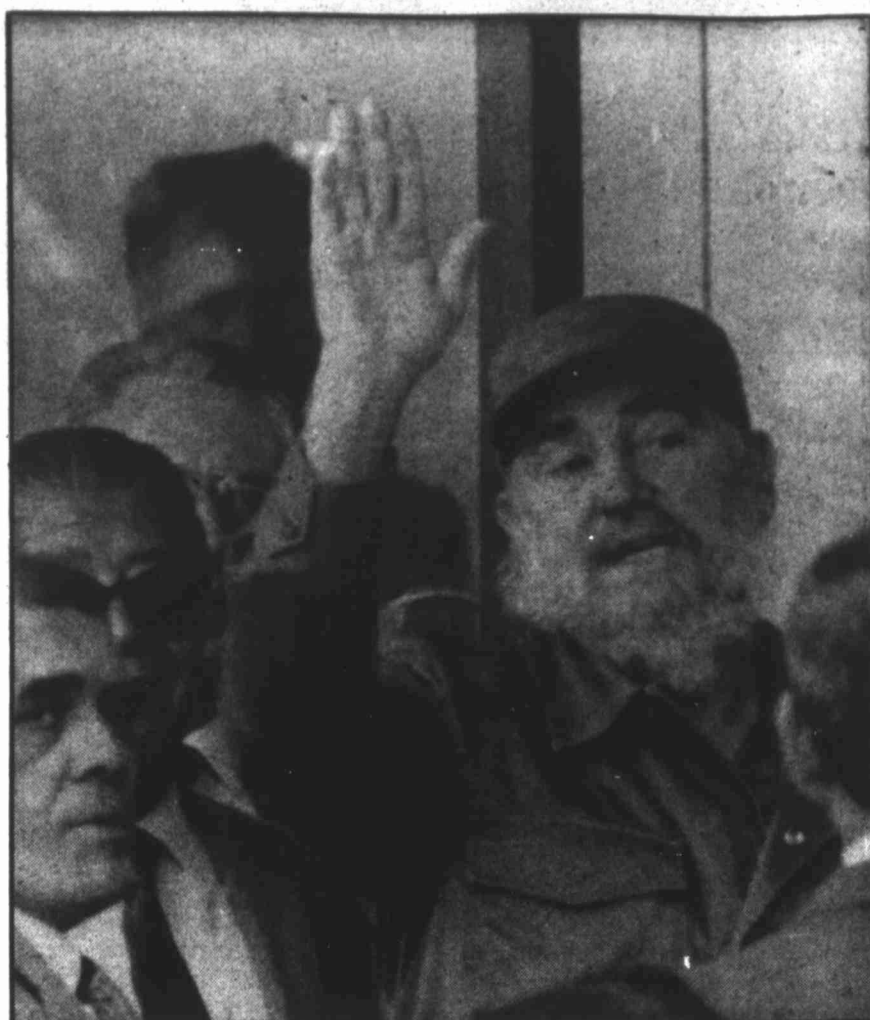

Castro, famous for giving long-winded speeches, was uncharacteristically subdued when he arrived in Guadalajara on Wednesday. He dodged reporters at the airport and headed straight for his first round of private meetings.

The Cuban leader has a full agenda.

His nation desperately needs new partners to replace the now-defunct Soviet bloc, which has accounted for 70 percent of its foreign trade. Only about 3 percent of its trade is with Latin nations.

Cuba has been courting foreign investment in tourism and biotechnology and Castro reportedly plans to meet with Mexican industrialists while in Guadalajara.

Many observers also expect there will be discussion of Cuba's regional debt, which has stalled progress on trade and investment.

Bungee jumping comes to Texas

NEW BRAUNFELS (AP) — On a small, 120-foot-high platform, you're strapped into harnesses and attached to long, thick cords.

You're scared, even quivering. An enthusiastic outdoorsman reassures you, then starts a countdown. Before you know it, you're taking the horrifying plunge.

Heading downward, it feels like you're never going to stop. Adrenalin rushes through your body. It seems like one of those dreams when you're falling. Only this is no dream.

This is the sensation of a bungee jump.

Or so say those brave enough to try the daredevil sport, which involves jumping off a fixed object while connected to elastic bungee cords that pull the jumper back before impact and provide several swinging rebounds.

"It feels like you're going to lose your life for a second, but you come back up and you're happy again," said jumper Rico Gonzales. "I'm hooked. I think this is going to be my life — to be a bungee jumper."

Like others around the country, curious people in New Braunfels are conquering fears and becoming bungee enthusiasts at a newly constructed bungee tower.

Susie Simpson, manager of Bungee Over Texas, which opened July 4 on the Guadalupe River near New Braunfels, said her business is supervising about 100 jumps per day and turning away another 150 to 175 jumpers daily.

Parent company JFF Enterprises Inc. scouted around the state before choosing New

Murder rate rising

FORT WORTH (AP) — The murder rate is running 30 percent to 60 percent above last year's in the Dallas-Fort Worth area, and so much blood has been shed that a call has gone out for emergency donors.

The surge of violence in what is the nation's ninth-largest metropolitan area, with 2.96 million people, has touched seemingly all segments of society.

Recent victims of shootings have included two boys killed outside a church when a drug deal went sour, a man in town for a church convention who was slain when he refused to hand over his wallet to a thief, and a major league baseball umpire wounded when he came to the aid of two robbery victims.

Police have no ready explanation for the wave of violence.

"I just see it as part of an increasing number of violent crimes that occur during the hot summer months," Dallas Sgt. Jim Chandler said. "We expect to see it even more later."

Officials of Dallas' Parkland Memorial Hospital have blamed the violence for a critical shortage of blood. The hospital has halted most forms of elective surgery and called for donations.

In Fort Worth, the rate of killings is up 60 percent over last year, with 88 homicides through June this year compared with 55 in the same period of 1990.

In Dallas, killings are up 31 percent over the same time last year, to 248 through the end of last month. That compares with 189 in the first half of 1990.

"Summer is convention season, and more people are out on the street, many in the nighttime hours," the sergeant said.

Prison overload considered

AUSTIN (AP) — Dozens of crimes that are now punishable by prison terms would draw community service sentences instead under a proposal endorsed by House budget-writers, who are considering a massive prison buildup.

Perhaps as many as 10,000 of the state's current 50,000 inmates are incarcerated for crimes that would no longer call for prison time under the proposal, said Rep. Ric Williamson, vice chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

"They'd be made to work, and the 10,000 beds would be freed up for longer sentences for people who we know are murdering everybody, and raping people, and molesting (children)," Williamson, D-Weatherford, said Wednesday.

The proposal would be part of a bill to build more prisons.

In the Senate, lawmakers may act Thursday on a $1.1 billion prison construction plan to make room for 30,000 more inmates.

Smoke reduction recommended

NEW YORK (AP) — Cigarette smoke should be "reduced to the lowest feasible concentration" in the workplace because it causes cancer and possibly heart disease in nonsmokers, a federal agency has concluded.

The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health recommended in a report released Wednesday that smoking be banned wherever possible or restricted to enclosed, separately ventilated areas.

The agency's report is the first official government statement on the dangers of workplace cigarette smoke, said Bryan Hardin, who supervised the report's preparation.

"All available preventive measures should be used to minimize occupational exposure," the report said.

The National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health, in Cincinnati, is part of the federal Centers for Disease Control.

The report is likely to persuade employers to further restrict smoking, Hardin said. It also will help the Occupational Safety and Health Administration establish regulations for smoking in the workplace, he said.

The agency recommended that employers and unions cooperate to eliminate smoking.

Senate votes to fund space station

WASHINGTON (AP) — The proposed space station, the most disputed of NASA's big-money projects, survived another crisis as the Senate voted to finance development for another year.

Advocates beat back an attempt to withhold the money and voted 64-35 Wednesday to go along with President Bush's $2.03 billion request for the station in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1. That's $100 million more than the House appropriated; the differences will be ironed out in negotiations.

Officer wounds two, kills himself

BALTIMORE (AP) — A policeman who wounded two supervisors before killing himself during a suspension hearing was a well-liked 27-year veteran who once received a bronze star for bravery, a police spokesman said.

Officer Calloway Hatcher, 56, was meeting with superiors Wednesday to determine whether he should be suspended with pay after his arrest on child molestation charges, Hill said.

When told to hand over his gun, Hatcher hung his .38-caliber service revolver on the end of one finger and swung it into his hand as if to surrender it, Hill said.

Instead, he began shooting, firing four shots.

Senate approves pay raise in dark of night

WASHINGTON (AP) — Voting in the dark of night, the Senate gave itself a $23,200 pay raise in exchange for banning the thousands of dollars in outside speaking fees that most members pocket each year.

The Senate approved the increase in a surprise 53-45 vote Thursday night as an amendment to an appropriations bill well after evening television news programs and early newspaper headlines and after most reporters had left the Capitol.

Almost certain to become law, the raise would close the gap between the $101,900 that senators now pay themselves and the $125,100 paid to the 435 members of the House.

"It is demeaning to the United States Senate to be a second-class body," said Appropriations Committee Chairman Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., who offered the amendment without advance notice.

"Yet this... is the most important board of directors of any business in the world," he said. "How does it enhance good government to make service in the Senate a luxury which only the wealthy can afford?"

But opponents led by Sen.

Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, said salaries should not be raised until lawmakers show that can do a better job of running that business and balance the federal budget.

"If equity means that we have to further raise salaries, then I guess I'm not for equity," Grassley said. "Just because the House has done something that may not be right... and gets paid more... that doesn't mean we should do it."

Supporters acknowledged that most Americans make less than half what a senator is now paid and oppose any increase. And they prepared themselves for barbs from radio and late-night TV talk show hosts.

"Maybe we're all overpaid," said Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas. "But we can't cut House salaries and I believe most people in my state will understand... there ought to be parity."

The criticism was swift, particularly from consumer advocate Ralph Nader.

"The Senate has sunk to new levels of hypocrisy, greed and arrogance... in the face of massive deficits, cutbacks, bailouts, scandals and rising unemployment," Nader said after the vote.

Some police fired needlessly in riot

JERUSALEM (AP) — A judge determined today that some policemen needlessly fired live ammunition during the Temple Mount riot, in which 17 Palestinians were fatally shot, but ruled against charging any officers.

Magistrate Ezra Kama also said evidence indicates the October riot was touched off by a stray tear gas canister that landed near some Muslim women, and he blamed both sides for overreacting.

Although some policemen faced "real danger," others used live ammunition without "reasonable need," Kama wrote after an eight-month investigation.

The judge said the evidence was not clear-cut enough to warrant pressing charges against the policemen. He said he could not pinpoint causes of death because the bodies were quickly removed by families for burial.

"With all the tragedy of the deaths of 17 people and wounding of dozens, it is not possible to pinpoint which policeman... caused death by negligence," he said.

Policemen jumped out of their seats for joy. Daniel Zion embraced his brother, Temple Mount Police Commander Ezra Zion. "He should get a medal for preventing Jews from being killed," Daniel Zion told a reporter.

Bush praises Greece's war support

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — President Bush today hailed Greece's support during the Persian Gulf War and branded totalitarianism as "disdained and discredited" as he arrived to promote peace and stability in the Eastern Mediterranean.

"Greece stood for what is right in the Persian Gulf, by insisting that aggression must not stand," the president said in a brief airport arrival ceremony.

It was hot and the skies were clear as Bush and his wife Barbara stepped off Air Force One for the first visit by an American president since 1959.

The trip to Greece — to be followed by a similar two-day stop in Turkey — came on the heels of a three-day economic summit in London capped by Bush's agreement with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev on a historic treaty to slash long-range nuclear weapons by 30 percent.

"I look forward in my discussions with President Caramanlis and Prime Minister Mitsotakis to confirming our common interest in a new world order, stability in the Balkans, peace on Cyprus and reconciliation between Greece and Turkey," Bush said in the remarks, prepared for delivery on his arrival at Athina Airport.

Flood relief falls short of request

BEIJING (AP) — China has received just a fraction of the aid it requested for victims of its worst flood in a century, despite a rare public plea for international assistance, U.N. officials said today.

Total outside aid, most of it from Hong Kong, has reached just under $22 million, considerably less than the $200 million China appealed for last week for relief supplies and rebuilding.

"We think we have to rely mainly on ourselves," Foreign Ministry spokesman Wu Jianmin told a news conference today when asked if he was disappointed about the West's response.

Boy shot at theater dies

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A 17-year-old boy who was shot at the debut of the inner-city drama "Boyz n the Hood" has died, becoming the second person in the nation to be killed in violence at theaters showing the film.

Jitu Jones of Minneapolis died Wednesday evening at Hennepin County Medical Center of injuries he suffered when he was shot in the neck, a nursing supervisor said.

Jones had been in critical condition after the shooting early Saturday. He never regained consciousness.

One man was killed at a showing of "Boyz" in the Chicago area last weekend, and five people were shot in and around a theater in the Los Angeles area.

Judge damages credibility

The position of judge inherits a certain amount of respect simply by virtue of the role the judiciary plays in an orderly, civilized society. The person who fills that position, however, must earn the respect of those who stand before him.

U.S. District Judge Sam Hall, with his intemperate, bigoted remarks about a certain group of people, has committed an egregious error in judgment that now casts doubt on his fairness and objectivity — two traits necessary for a judge to fulfill his commitment to public service.

The plaintiff (in a lawsuit against Jefferson County officials) contends that the jail is dirty, its plumbing doesn't work properly and that jailers have placed him in a cell where some inmates have engaged in homosexual activities.

That prompted Judge Hall to ask whether inmates would be incarcerated in the same cells with "all that other bunch of queers in that tank?"

Judge Hall then acknowledged that he had "strong feelings about this." That is where Judge Hall has made his error in judgment — in expressing those feelings from the bench, during a federal trial, in front of a jury.

The judge, through his thoughtlessness, has seemed to pre-judge every future case involving homosexuals that may come before him. That is wrong.

Judge Sam Hall also was seriously wrong in expressing his open intolerance of people whose sexual preference he finds objectionable. The courtroom is a place where a judge is supposed to keep his biases to himself. By letting his bias pour out, Judge Hall, sadly, has inflicted serious — if not irreparable — damage to his personal credibility in all cases involving homosexuals.

U.S. may have to finish job

The Mideast "war," or rather its aftermath, isn't over by any means.

If that hasn't been apparent the past several weeks in what has happened to the Kurdish and Shiite refugees, it became abundantly so in a new report the past few days on the ecological disaster in Kuwait and the dispute over Iraq's nuclear capability.

The most ominous note last weekend was the joint warning by President Bush and French President Francois Mitterrand that force was still an option in dealing with Saddam Hussein and his nuclear potential.

Baghdad's nuclear program is a "cause of alarm all over the world," the President said only a short time after Mr. Mitterrand said military action would be "just" if Baghdad continued development of nuclear weapons or threatened Kurds or other minorities.

Would a continued nuclear inspection standoff, further harassment of the Kurds and mounting anger over the Kuwaiti oil sabotage be grounds for a new military strike against Iraq?

There are those, no doubt, who want no part of a new shooting situation in the Mideast. The truth of the matter is we did not finish the war and may have to go in and do what should have been done in the first place.

Cabinet concept good idea

Way back in 1876, with Reconstruction having just ended, the writers of the current Texas constitution determined that the state would have a weak legislature — and a weaker governor. That concept still operates today.

The upshot is an executive branch at war with its leader, or at least without the slightest interest in the current governor's success. The only way a new governor can deal with the situation is to drive previous appointees off the boards through harassment and public clashes.

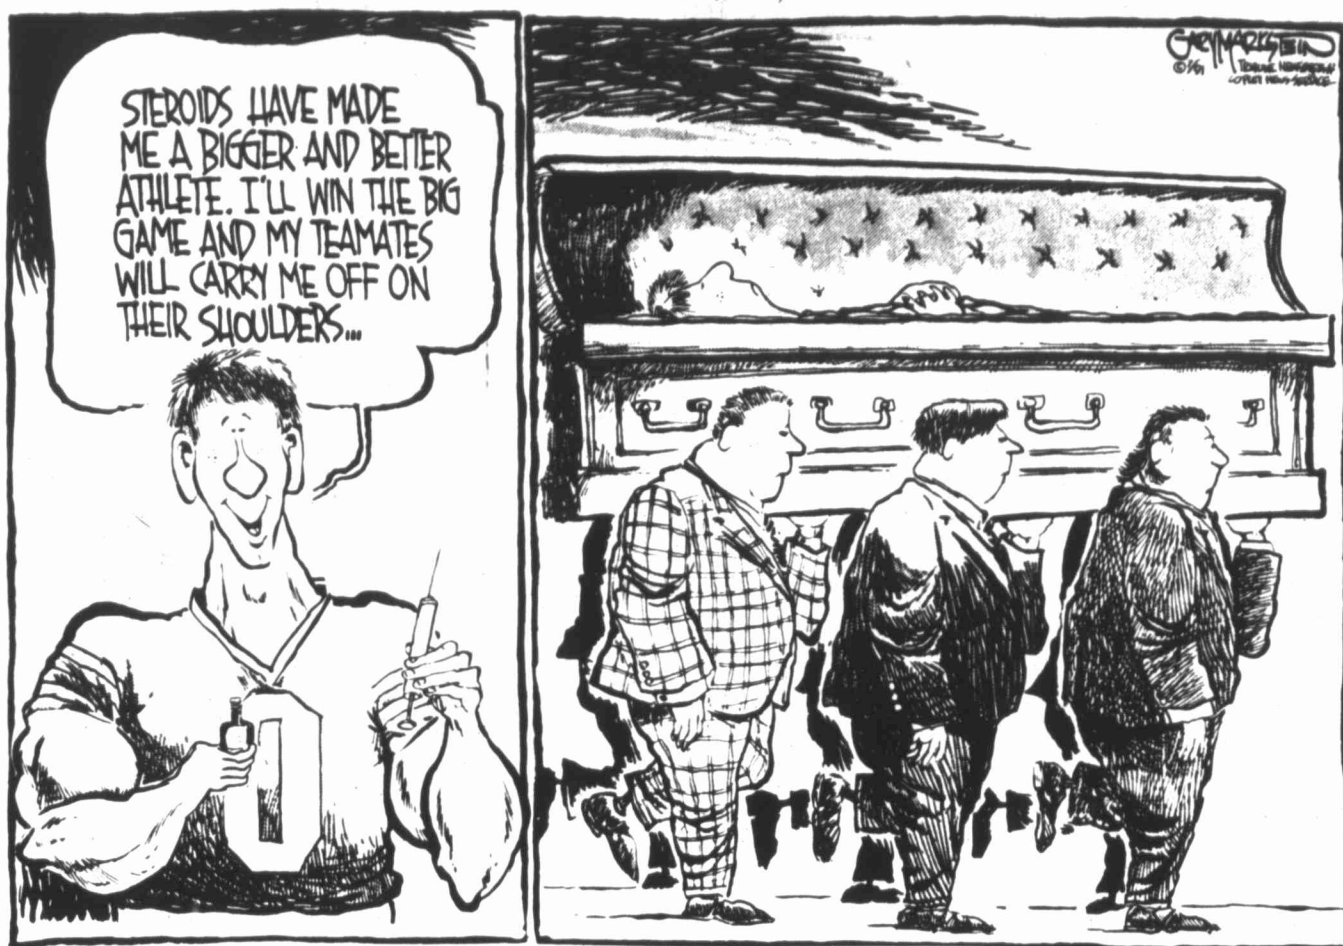

This is bad for the governor and bad for Texas.

Governors should be able to implement their programs as soon as they take office, and the people of Texas should be able to hold the governor accountable for the overall performance of the executive branch. That is the way the federal system works, and it works fine. In other words, Texas needs a form of "cabinet government."

At long last, a Texas governor has stepped up to the plate and taken a swing at that ball. Gov. Ann Richards has said, yes, I want to be able to appoint the folks who will call the shots in state agencies.

A simplified, cabinet system of state government makes sense. Gov. Richards is to be commended for trying to bring about this needed reform.

Scores have never been lower

The scandal of children's math test scores has shocked the nation. They have never been lower. What hasn't been mentioned is that as low as the scores are, they are still higher than the test scores of government officials involved with the savings and loan disaster.

Roger Stumble, who teaches remedial S&L accounting for culturally deprived officials, told me, "The adults have lost it. Every time they add 2 billion and 2 billion it comes out 40 billion. Whenever they are asked to explain to the public how much it's going to cost to bail out the banks, the officials start adding decimal points."

"Who is responsible for our officials falling down so badly in S&L math?"

"Most of the blame lies with the home. The family doesn't take an interest in how the official is multiplying the debt, so they let him play golf with his friends," Bumble said. "I have had people enroll in my course who wouldn't know a bad real estate loan from a bar of Ivory soap."

"Is it because of a lack in mathematical skills that the oficials don't make any sense, or is it because they would rather produce numbers that will make the government agencies look good?"

"I don't think that anyone is trying to diddle the books. Most of what you see now is the inability of an administration to predict what the cleanup of S&L sludge will cost. Even the secretary of the Treasury announces a different figure for the S&L bailouts every time he gives a speech."

"Does that mean the secretary is having trouble with S&L math as well?"

"Of course — but how do you tell the highest fiscal official of the land that his figures make less sense than a high school dropout's in Topeka, Kan.?"

"What question did the adults screw up on the most?"

"The one almost everyone failed was, 'If 100 savings and loans went belly up, and 500,000 depositors were guaranteed their money up to $100,000, and there were only $4 in the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, how many times would you have to dig into the taxpayers' pockets to save the American banking system as we know it?'"

"What did they do?"

"They were so frustrated that they started to throw spitballs at each other."

"If the men and women in charge of keeping the country's house in order can't do math, how can we expect our children to?"

"That's what we're trying to figure out. It's our fault because we failed to give our officials the tools. When they should have been studying budget deficit and loan defaults we let them watch reruns of 'Cheers' on television."

I then asked the most important question. "Will people in the government ever be able to improve their math scores so that they can tell the real story of the savings and loans?"

"Not during the election year."

No one should set standards for others

To the editor:

We are writing in response to Bill and Lisa Turner's letter which appeared in the July 5th edition of the Herald.

First of all, Mr. Larson Lloyd had little to do with the decision to pull MTV.

Second, MTV contains no more nudity than the normal soap opera. We think it's funny that many people complain about nudity and sex when regular programming contains so much violence and killing. Sex is a normal part of life — violence should not be.

The Turners wrote about the lack of moral responsibility of MTV, but what the Turners don't realize is that MTV has public service announcements concerning AIDS, drug abuse, environmental protection, constitutional rights, world hunger, alcoholism, drinking and driving, and many other issues. MTV immoral? Have the Turners even watched MTV? If they haven't how can they have an informed opinion of the subject at all? If we were to get rid of all the shows that people believed to be "immoral" or "unfit" for viewing then we'd have to get rid of everything from CNN to TBN. . . . everyone's sense of morals and art are different. . . . One group of people should not be allowed to set the standards for other's lifestyles.

Imagine what it would be like if we lived in a country where the only television programs were those which the government controlled. At least we'd have a set rule on morals. Maybe people would prefer being told what their beliefs should be. Hey — at least we wouldn't have to think, right?

Freedom has a price. Many Americans today seem to think that this price is too high. We don't. We recognize that others have the right to decide what they see, but we do not appreciate the way people try to infringe on our rights.

In closing, we salute the Turners, they are exercising their freedom — we just hope they understand that we want to continue to exercise ours as well.

Going too far in bug liquidation

STEVE REAGAN
Staff Writer

Random thoughts while contemplating the meaning of life, the existence of a higher being and why those #&*$% soft-drink pop tops always break off in my hand:

While scanning the Associated Press wire, I saw this report that should be filed in the "So you think you had a bad day?" department:

COWETA, Okla. (AP) — A woman gathered up two children, a pet bird and a puppy before setting off 18 cans of bug fogger in her mobile home. She stepped outside — and the fumes exploded.

Talk about overkill.

The Coweta fire chief said the 18 cans of fogger were enough to treat 90,000 cubic feet, while the mobile home was only 6,000 cubic feet big.

"She could have got by with two or three," the chief said.

In a way, I can certainly sympathize with the woman. I hate creepy, crawly bugs with a passion usually reserved for tax collectors, and I will go to great extremes to rid my house of them.

No method is too harsh, I reason. Step on them? You bet. Smash them with a broom? By all means. Drown them? All right. Spray them to oblivion? Now you're talking.

I might draw the line at blowing up my house, though.

Faithful readers know that I have a fondness for finding unusual words in the dictionary, but sometimes this hobby makes me feel as if I'm in some sort of maze.

For example, I was scanning the dictionary the other day when I came upon synarthrosis. Ah-ha! I thought, there's a candidate for a future column.

There was a small problem, however. When I looked at the word's definition — of, relating to, or being a synarthrosis — I felt like the poor guy who misses the punch line to a joke.

Oooooooh-kaaaaay, I thought, let's see what synarthrosis means.

It wasn't much better. Synarthrosis, by definition, is "an immovable articulation in which the bones are united by intervening fibrous connective tissues."

I don't know of too many people, with the possible exception of William Buckley, who would read the preceding definition and say, "Oh, of course!"

It was about this time that I began to wonder about my choice of hobbies. I felt like I was trapped in one of the Chinese puzzle boxes — you know, the ones where you open a box and there's another box inside that one, and so on and so on.

I decided — don't ask me why — to check on the definition of articulation, which in medical terms means a joint between bones in a skeleton. Which was fine, except the word also means a movable joint between rigid parts of any animal.

OK, so synarthrosis is either: A) an immovable joint, or B) an immovable movable joint.

Don't worry, I was confused, too.

I'm still not 100 percent sure what synarthrosis means — and to tell you the truth, I'm not sure it's worth the bother. But if there's some kindly Harvard grad or someone else conversant in medical terms out there who can supply a definition, come on down to the office.

I'll be easy to find — I'll be the one burning the dictionary.

Recycling plastic is easy

"How do I know what kinds of plastic can be recycled?" is a question often asked by environmentally-conscious people who are concerned about the status of our state's landfills. The Texas Department of Health (TDH) is helping people answer that question, through its Bureau of Solid Waste Management.

On July 1, 1991, a coding system for plastic containers will become mandatory in Texas. The coding system was created by the plastics industry and enacted into Texas law by the 71st Legislature in 1989 to identify the resin used in plastic containers, which in turn will facilitate recycling. Coding of plastic containers and bottles will make it easier to identify types of plastic for separation, reprocessing and reuse. The coding will help Texans turn plastics into new products — thereby saving natural resources, energy and landfill space.

"You can find recycled plastic in flower pots, garden hoses, carpets and pillows, just to name a few," said T.A. Outlaw, Jr., P.E., Chief of the Bureau of Solid Waste Management. "To find the market for used plastic nearest you, call the Texas Solid Waste/Recycling Information Clearinghouse Hotline at 1-800-458-9796."

The Texas legislation applies to all rigid plastic containers, eight fluid ounces to five gallons, and to all plastic bottles, 16 fluid ounces to five gallons, manufactured or distributed in Texas on or after July 1, 1991. After that date, companies that manufacture or distribute affected bottles or containers in Texas can be fined up to $500 for each violation if the items do not display the required code.

"Most plastic bottles and containers in Texas already have one of the seven identifying symbols molded into or imprinted on the bottom, or near the bottom, of the bottle or container. The triangular symbol, made with three arrows, indicates the type of plastic resin used to produce the container.

Symbols:
1 = PETE (polyethylene terephthalate) (Example: soft drink bottles)

2 = HDPE (high density polyethylene) (Example: milk jugs)
3 = V (vinyl) (Examples: raincoats, phonograph records)
4 = LDPE (low density polyethylene) (Example: glue bottles)
5 = PP (polypropylene) (Examples: rope, electrical insulation)
6 = PS (polystyrene) (Examples: egg cartons, coffee cups)
7 = OTHER (all other resins, including layered plastics of a combination of materials)

While plastics account for only about seven percent by weight of the municipal solid waste stream, they comprise approximately 18 percent by volume. Unfortunately, only about one percent of all plastic is presently recycled. However, requiring that plastic containers be coded will help assure that more plastic is converted into a wide variety of products.

About 75 percent of plastic bottles are PETE or HDPE. PETE is the material used for many carbonated beverage bottles. HDPE is used in containers for milk, juice and other liquids. Plastic bottles have been recycled for years.

"The problem with plastic isn't simply finding ways to reprocess and reuse it — the problem is also collection and separation," Outlaw explained. "Most people think of plastic as a single thing, but most plastic items are manufactured from a particular type of plastic resin, designed to have special characteristics. If these resins are mixed when the plastic products are recycled and made into new things, the resins may be incompatible or lose their original characteristics, making them unsuitable for many purposes."

A free brochure and poster describing the coding symbols are available from the Bureau of Solid Waste Management, 1100 West 49th Street, Austin, Texas 78756, or by calling the Solid Waste/Recycling Information Hotline at 1-800-458-9796. (In Austin, call 458-7271.)

All veterans deserve our thanks

DEAR ABBY: I served in the U.S. Navy from February '87 until February '91. I served the better part of that time overseas in the Philippines working as a postal clerk at the Fleet Mail Center, Subic Bay.

I still wear my dog tags all the time, and sometimes people will see them and ask, "Were you over there?" (meaning Saudi Arabia), and I say, "No, I was in the Philippines most of the time." Then they say, "Oh," like "No big deal."

I can speak for most of the people I worked with that it was no picnic. Several coup attempts took place while I was there. (A Marine sergeant was killed about three blocks from my house.)

Abby, I would like people to know that even though we weren't "over there," we did our part during the Gulf crisis. — SAILOR TAYLOR

DEAR SAILOR: You make an excellent point. Every man and woman who served in any branch of the armed forces — whether or not they were in a shooting war — did their part.

Time away from one's family is no picnic, whether one is serving in "the Gulf" or Gulfport, Miss.

DEAR ABBY: This concerns

Dear Abby

"Illinois Victim," who was being beaten by a man in her yard, and the neighbor who didn't even call the police. His comment ("I didn't want to get involved") interested me.

Some time ago, I saw a driver who appeared to be drunk cause a serious accident. I immediately called the police to tell them I had seen an accident; no one even wanted to take my name or telephone number. After 10 calls, one hour later, someone grudgingly took my name and phone number, saying, "Someone will call you."

Nobody called until six months later, when I got a subpoena through the mail demanding that I appear in court. In large letters was this threat: "If you fail to appear in court a warrant will be issued for your arrest."

Abby, in the school where I teach, if a teacher takes a day off, the teacher must pay the substitute. I got a substitute for the day of the trial, only to be called that morning at 8:30 a.m. and told that the case had been postponed! It was too late to cancel the substitute, so I lost that day's pay.

Yesterday, I got a notice for the next court date, which means I will have to hire another substitute. Now do you wonder why no one wants to "get involved"? I am being treated more like a criminal than a witness! After six months, I hardly remember what happened, and because I wanted to be a good citizen, I am now being penalized. Please comment. — SUN CITY, ARIZ.

DEAR SUN CITY: As an eyewitness, your testimony could be crucial in this case, so please don't abandon your responsibility as a good citizen.

And by the way, whatever happened to one's constitutional right to a speedy trial? "Justice delayed is justice denied," said William Gladstone, who was prime minister of England in the late 1800s.

But, of course, our courts were not as clogged in the late 1800s as they are today.

Free care for brain-injured Texans

$100,000 in rehabilitation is available for a Texas resident who has suffered a severe brain injury and cannot afford rehabilitation. The free care is being offered as part of a nationwide scholarship program sponsored by the New Medico Head Injury System.

Effects from a severe brain injury — everything from memory loss to personality change to physical impairment — can be devastating to both an individual and the individual's family. The financial burden of rehabilitation can be nearly as traumatic.

The scholarship recipient will take part in a rehabilitation program at the New Medico Rehabilitation Center of Texas, located in Lindale, TX, which specializes in the care and treatment of brain-injured individuals.

Interested candidates must submit an application by August 15, 1991. To receive an application, call the New Medico Head Injury System toll-free at 1-800-743-6847. Applicants for the scholarship must be 5 years of age or older, medically stable, without severe behavioral problems, and willing to participate in an active rehabilitation program.

The New Medico Head Injury System is the nation's largest network of brain injury treatment programs, with more than 35 facilities across the country.

Indian artists snared by law

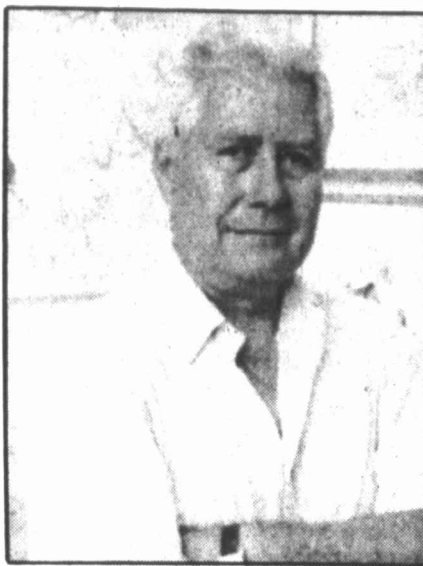

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Bert Seabourn was an Indian first and then an artist. But because of a new federal law, he no longer can claim to be an Indian artist.

Throughout the United States, but primarily in the Southwest, dozens of Indian artists such as Seabourn are snared by a law that was designed to protect them from look-alike imitations, much of it from the Orient. Instead, they say, the law is hampering their efforts to earn a livelihood and is dividing Indian from Indian.

"It has caused a lot of confusion, a lot of bad will," said Shirley Wells, owner of an Indian art gallery at Sapulpa in northeast Oklahoma. "Some innocent people are being hurt and the law doesn't really help anyone."

The Indian Arts and Crafts Act of 1990 specifies that nothing can be claimed to be Indian-made unless the artist can prove Indian heritage. Both the artist and gallery can be fined for violations — up to $10,000 in some instances.

Seabourn and the others do not have that documentation, the so-called "Indian card" that fits in a billfold and lists the degree of Indian blood. That card is the passport to the free benefits available under federal law.

Their ancestors, because of distrust of the white government, pressure or a lack of knowledge, never signed the government rolls. That signing was what started the documentation process that led, generation by generation, to holders of today's Indian cards.

"I don't know if my ancestors even knew about it," said Seabourn, whose work hangs in the Vatican's permanent collection. He said his Cherokee ancestors were farmers down in Texas, many days' ride from where the rolls were being signed in northeast Oklahoma.

The law does make provision for established artists that do not have their documentation. It allows federal- or state-recognized tribes to decide whether someone can be called an artist from that tribe.

A special committee set up by the Cherokee Nation studied Seabourn's case and recommended unanimously that he be granted such recognition.

But some tribal members protested the ruling. They contended that the committee was deciding who could be a Cherokee and that certification decisions should be voted on by tribal members.

Seabourn said he had taken the additional step of writing each gallery that handles his work, offering to remove it. In each case, he said, the galleries said they wanted to keep representing him.

4-H workshop teaches valuable lessons

By CHARLENE WALKER
For the Herald

Today, teen-agers are faced with many decisions that will affect them in the future.

To gain the skills needed to become leaders of tomorrow, 45 4-H members from across West Texas attended the Texas Utilities Electric Co./4-H Leadership Workshop at Western Texas College in Snyder last month.

The 4-H members were in charge of running the workshop, with adults supervising. Senior-level 4-H members from districts 6, 7 and 2 were divided into five groups and assigned to head different sessions.

During the workshop, 4-H members were involved in many activities that taught them valuable lessons for the future. 4-H members also enjoyed recreational activities, where they made new friends.

The workshop consisted of decision-making, public-speaking and social-skills sessions, speakers, a tour, college preparation sessions and giving speeches.

The decision-making session, given by Dean Wilman of Montley County, taught 4-H members how to tell right from wrong and make their own choices through refusal skills.

Jerome Davis, TU Electric communication specialist, and Shawn Irvine, TU Electric youth and educational services specialist, taught 4-H members how to make speeches properly. After the session, 4-H members had to prepare a five-minute speech and deliver it at closing ceremonies.

Through a social-skill session, Irvine taught 4-H members how to act in a social manner while in the public's eye.

A panel of professionals attended the workshop to speak on the decisions they had made to get to the job position they hold and why they made the decisions they did.

"The speakers taught us that a college degree does not mean you are guaranteed a good and high-paying job," said Chris Schraeder, a Glasscock County 4-H member.

4-H members got to taste a bit of college life while at the workshop. Western Texas College personnel taught a session on how to obtain financial aid and scholarships. The college also held a mock registration. Each 4-H member went through the whole process of registering for a semester of college.

Schraeder said he learned what classes would be good for the major he wants a degree in, and what problems can occur when registering for classes.

A college panel of student representatives of colleges in Texas was set up to discuss questions 4-H members had about different colleges.

Kristi Jones, Texas A&M University representative, said the session was especially good for 4-H members who were juniors or seniors in high school. "It showed them the variety of colleges in Texas, which ones were close to home and what the colleges had to offer," she said.

Members of 4-H also had a chance to taste a little bit of what Western Texas College had to offer when the college acted as host for a tour of the college's farm. The tour was conducted by Bobby Doty, head of the agriculture department. The members toured up-to-date swine facilities and saw some new technological equipment used. Schraeder said the most interesting thing seen was how electrodes were used to stun a steer while it was being branded.

At the closing banquet, Trent Ashby, Texas 4-H Council president, spoke to the group on how youth, using their acquired leadership skills, could make a difference in the future.

TU Electric and the District 6 Extension Service and 4-H Council sponsored the workshop. 4-H members paid a $15 fee to help pay for supplies, and TU Electric made up the difference.

Laura Hutchens, Glasscock County home economics extension agent, said TU Electric's involvement made it possible for 4-H members to attend the workshop, when normally they would not financially be able to.

"The workshop has made a partnership between TU and (the) Extension," Stan Garrison, TU Electric regional manager, said. "I am confident that we will have another workshop next year."

Schraeder said, "I think 4-H members should attend next year so they will learn how to be a strong leader when one is needed and how to better their community."

Tune in to the media

Imagine you are a visitor from outer space whose mission is to report about life on Earth. If the only thing you get to see before leaving this planet is television, what would you know about working mothers? Handicapped people? Police officers? Poor people? The elderly?

Sometimes TV doesn't give us the whole picture about a person or group of people. Television can present stereotypes or distorted views of people that are often untrue and could lead you to judge people before you know them.

Pretend you are a "stereotype detective." Find the following characters on TV:

- A disrespectful teenager.
- A dumb blond-haired person.
- A smart person with eyeglasses.
- A "he-man" who's strong and never fails.

Read a book or magazine article about someone who is not like the TV character in his or her group. Your local librarian should be able to offer some suggestions.

"Tune in to the media" was developed with expert contributions from Kathleen R. Tyner of the Center for Media Strategies in San Francisco and Dr. Jerome Singer and Dr. Dorothy Singer, co-directors of Yale University's Family Television Research and Consultant Center.

advantage.

"Short-range systems and nuclear artillery don't have much meaning" in Europe now that Germany is reunited, the former Warsaw Pact alliance is gone and Soviet troops are leaving Eastern Europe, Cheney told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Even if no major new arms agreements are reached this decade, the three that have been concluded in the past four years — two to cut nuclear arms and one to cut conventional weapons — will by themselves alter the military balance.

Taken together, the three agreements have reduced Moscow's ability to apply military muscle beyond Soviet borders while allowing the United States to retain the defense ties that bind it to Europe and allies around the world.

The Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces treaty signed in December 1987 required the Soviets to destroy twice as many medium-range missiles as the United States.

Pentagon can't say photo is authentic

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon is unimpressed with a photograph it has spent months analyzing and cannot verify whether the three men in it are American fliers missing in Southeast Asia or the picture is a fake.

Retired Gen. John W. Vessey Jr., the presidential emissary to Hanoi for POW-MIA issues, told a House panel on Wednesday that the photo might be authentic, or might not be. He was not "very excited" about it.

Also testifying before the Foreign Affairs subcommittee, Carl W. Ford Jr., deputy assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs, said one of the problems was the quality of the photo, which is three or four times removed from the original. "It's difficult to work with," he said.

But in California, families who say the men are their lost relatives are positive the picture is real.

"There's no doubt in anyone's mind that they are who they are," said Albro L. Lundy III, who says his father is one of the men in the photograph.

Lundy, who appeared at a news conference with relatives of the other men believed to be in the picture, said he had the photograph analyzed and that early results indicated it was genuine. However, he did not say what that analysis showed and upon further questioning acknowledged that the analyzed photograph was a copy.

But Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., whose Foreign Relations subcommittee plans hearings on the issue of Americans missing from the Vietnam War, pointedly kept his distance from this picture, which was released by the American Defense Institute, a private organization in Alexandria, Va.

"I can't vouch one iota for the authenticity of a picture," Kerry said.

In Bangkok, Thailand, meanwhile, U.S. Embassy spokeswoman Gloria Berben said an itinerary is being worked out for Assistant Secretary of State Kenneth Quinn to visit Hanoi and other Southeast Asian capitals to investigate the photograph.

Ted Samplly, a POW-MIA activist from Kinston, N.C., told The Charlotte Observer that a woman who had been a relief worker in Southeast Asia told him that she obtained the picture after being contacted by a Cambodian refugee last December while on vacation in Thailand.

Samplly said he helped the woman, whom he wouldn't identify, get in contact with the families of the three fliers but he couldn't vouch for the photo's authenticity.

However, the Pentagon has had the grainy photo showing three men in strange clothing, holding a sign with a cryptic message and odd lettering, since September 1990, said a Pentagon source.

Business consultant: New creations needed

By DEBBIE LINCECUM
Staff Writer

Big Spring's business climate has a high degree of stability but needs to support new business creation, a consultant told a group of local professionals Wednesday.

"You have a tremendous core of solid businesses in this community. That's a real asset," said Jerry Lee Jones, chairman of the business studies department at Midland College.

Jones met with business owners and employees to discuss a June 1990 business survey conducted by the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce and local companies.

With responses from 151 businesses that are members of the Chamber, the study was formulated with a series of questions about specific issues in the local climate. It was funded by Southwestern Bell Telephone and the Permian Basin Private Industry Council.

Jones said the study should be very helpful in the city's plans to improve the local economy.

The majority of companies responding to the survey had been in business more than 11 years, a factor Jones said is both positive and negative. Only five respondents had been in business less than one year.

"If there's one message in the study, it's that you're having trouble financing small businesses," Jones said. He suggested creation of an organization to oversee loans of private money available in the community. He described such a group in Midland, known as Midland Economic Development Company and made up of bankers and citizens.

The first step in the process is to identify what type of business the area needs through an "undersupply study," Jones said. Other options to consider include creation of a new business "incubator," an organization that supports new businesses with financial backing and office space in their first years.

Business owners should work through the Chamber to improve the local climate, Jones said.

"Often times on economic development we look to someone coming from the outside," he said. "In this area, economic development has been most successful developing home-grown businesses."

Finance Director Tom Ferguson said the council will continue to consider additional revenue sources when it meets today at 6 p.m. in the municipal court room, second floor of City Hall.

peting interests in this."

Stenholm said he always worked well with Foley, who was chairman of the House Agriculture Committee when Stenholm was first elected in 1978. Stenholm was appointed to the Agriculture Committee after taking office and has since become chairman of the House Livestock, Dairy and Poultry Subcommittee. Foley became House speaker two years ago.

"I have a good working relationship with the speaker," Stenholm said.

Stenholm, who last met with Foley about two weeks ago, said he is not actively lobbying for the position. "In fact, the speaker made it very clear that is a sure way to lose," Stenholm said. "I will be very honored if I'm selected. I will be very understanding if I'm not."

Stenholm said Chapman, whom he described as a conservative-moderate politician, would also be an excellent choice.

Chapman, who is in his fourth term as representative, is not a deputy whip.

LOS ANGELES — Relatives of three American servicemen, purported to be prisoners in Southeast Asia and seen in a photograph released Tuesday, hold photos of the men in Los Angeles

"Analysis of the photo continues," said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "At no time were we able to conclude" that the men in the photograph were missing American servicemen.

A 1987 letter from the Defense Intelligence Agency to Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., said the American Defense Institute had made false claims in the past in raising money. The letter from Army Brig. Gen. James W. Shufelt criticized several groups that raised money that was supposed to help free Americans held prisoner.

Shufelt listed the institute, headed by a former Vietnam prisoner of war, Eugene McDaniel, as among those he said "concocted" sightings of Americans as "proof" of their claims.

According to Shufelt, whose letter was obtained by The Associated Press, the group wrote in 1986:

"The CIA just sent a team to Laos in 1982 to determine if intelligence reports were true as to the location of a POW camp. According to the team leader, they found the camp and, from a hiding place, took pictures and made sound recordings of the American POWs."

Leon school trustees refuse to join

JEWETT (AP) — Leon school trustees say a new school finance plan is unconstitutional and they don't want to belong to the county education district mandated in the measure.

Despite warnings from their lawyer and superintendent, the school's trustees voted unanimously Tuesday to forego the plan.

The action directly defies a Texas Education Agency letter trustees received Monday giving the board 10 days to join the 12-member Anderson-Leon County Education District, composed of all school districts in the two counties.

In response to the TEA order, Leon trustees fired off a letter of their own, stating their reasons for refusing to participate and noting that the Leon board believes the measure to be unconstitutional. Only board member Mike Speer, who was out of state, did not attend the emergency meeting.

The new law is designed to shift hundreds of millions of dollars in property tax revenue from wealthier to poorer school districts within education taxing regions, drawn largely along county lines.

It was passed in response to a Texas Supreme Court order make the funding of school districts more equitable.

Property-rich school districts are challenging Texas' new school finance law, contending it sets up an unconstitutional statewide property tax. If the county levy is a local tax, they say, a local election should have been provided.

The law is estimated to cost an additional $1.67 billion in state aid, and prompt school districts to raise property taxes by $1 billion to $2 billion.

The Leon board's refusal to comply with the law could bring individual or district-wide retribution, members were told.

A number of districts across the state have not yet appointed representatives to their CEDs, but Leon has been the only one to openly defy the law.

Leon Superintendent Edwin

McAdams said his conversations with various TEA officials led him to believe the state's attorney general may ask for a court order to implement the law.

"Folks, they're going to make an example out of the Leon ISD," McAdams said. "We won't have a second chance. I just can't believe this is happening."

"I think that the best way right now that you can help the students of this district is by electing someone to the CED under protest."

Board members were unmoved at the urging of McAdams and the school's attorney, Chris Elzalde of Austin, who made the same suggestion.

Some members were quite emotional as they talked about families in the district who cannot afford to pay property taxes that may increase as much as 33 percent in the coming year. Under the measure, Leon will lose $1 million in local property taxes to the Anderson-Leon CED.

Nominee said to be no mere 'witness'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iran-Contra prosecutors notified Robert Gates long ago that the nominee for CIA director is no mere "witness" in their long-running criminal investigation, government sources say.

Gates, said the sources, got the word months before President Bush tapped him for the CIA job that he is a subject in the investigation; that is, a person whose own conduct is subject to scrutiny by a grand jury.

Gates is one of many CIA officials questioned at length by Iran-Contra prosecutors this spring before a federal grand jury, the sources added Wednesday night.

The questioning took place before retired CIA officer Alan Fiers implicated three top officials at the agency in knowledge of the diversion of Iran arms sale money to the Contras. Fiers' allegations last week raise a whole new set of questions about Gates' role in the Iran-Contra scandal. If Fiers' accusations are true, people above and below Gates at the CIA knew about the diversion. Gates, deputy CIA director at the time, says he didn't know.

Mary Belcher, a spokeswoman for independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, refused to confirm Gates' status or even to say whether he had testified to the grand jury.

The White House, said the sources, was fully aware of Gates' "subject" status in the criminal probe — yet cleared him for the CIA job anyway.

White House counsel C. Boyden Gray had some assurance from Walsh that the prosecutor "was not after (Gates)" and that "Walsh's interests were elsewhere." The Washington Post reported today, quoting an administration official. The assurance was conveyed from Walsh to Gray through an intermediary, said the newspaper.

Walsh, through his spokeswoman, disputed that characterization.

The Iran-Contra prosecutor "gave no such assurances" to anyone, the Post quoted Belcher as saying.

The distinction between a witness and a subject in a grand jury investigation is significant.

Being classified a subject is a signal that a person could face legal problems, depending on what other information prosecutors turn up.

Gates so far hasn't been placed in the most serious category, that of grand jury target. The Justice Department defines a target as someone on whom there is "substantial evidence" linking him to the commission of a crime.

Government sources who confirmed Gates' status have closely followed the 4 1/2 year investigation of Walsh and spoke only on condition of anonymity.

Last inning shot sinks Yankees

By STEVE BELVIN
Sports Editor

MIDLAND — For Lamesa's Mike Lucio, the ending was much better than the beginning.

Lucio's two-run homer in the bottom of the seventh inning propelled the Lamesa Big League All-Stars to a 9-8 victory over the Big Spring International League Yankees in District III tournament play here Wednesday night. Lucio's shot over the right field fence put Lamesa in the driver's seat at the tournament.

Lamesa qualified for Friday's championship game, while the Yankees play the El Paso All-Stars tonight at 8 to see who will play Lamesa. In Wednesday's first game, El Paso eliminated tournament favorite Midland 3-1 as Bryan Tambone outduelled Midland's James Madrid. Tambone pitched a four-hitter and Madrid a three-hitter, but Midland committed three errors that led to two unearned runs.

The nightcap was anything but a pitcher's duel, however. Lamesa out-hit Big Spring 10-7, but almost killed its chances by committing six errors, compared to three for Big Spring.

It was a game mixed with bad luck and hard knocks for Big Spring. When it was over, the Yankees were the walking wounded. Perhaps the most costly injury came to Big Spring starting pitcher Freddy Rodriguez, who's headed to Frank Phillips on a baseball scholarship.

Rodriguez was cruising along in the third inning with a 6-1 lead, two outs and Lamesa's Michael Lozano on second base. Wesley Diaz singled to left field scoring Lozano. Rodriguez was backing up third base on the overthrow from left field when he twisted his knee and had to leave the game. He left with a 6-2 lead, a four-hitter and six strikeouts. The severity of the injury was not known.

Frankie Martinez came in walked Jamie Seago. On the first pitch to the next batter Diaz stole third. On the next pitch Seago stole second. Big Spring catcher Mike Olivas faked a throw to second and gunned down Diaz, who went for the fake, at third base to get out of the inning.

Lucio started on the mound for Lamesa and the rangy lefty never could find the strike zone. He never made it past the second inning. Officially he went one-and-two-thirds innings, allowed five runs on one hit while walking seven.

But that was just the start of things. Before it was over Big Spring had a third baseman playing with an injured hip and a catcher with a throbbing headache. The plot got better as the game progressed.

Martinez didn't last very long on the mound for Big Spring; curveballing specialist Jeremy Edens battled to the bitter end; Lamesa left-handed reliever Eric Rios came in and did an outstanding job; Lucio made up for his poor performance on the mound with his bat.

Big Spring coach Lupe Lara said

Rodriguez's injury was the difference in the game. "If Freddy hadn't gotten hurt, we would've won easily," he said. "We just had too many injuries. Freddy twisted his knee, the third baseman (Sammy Gonzales) sprained his hip; he didn't tell me until later because he wanted to keep playing, and our catcher (Olivas) has a helluva headache."

"He got all of it (Lucio's homer). I'm surprised we held them off as long as we did with all those injuries."

But starting from the beginning...

Big Spring took a 2-0 lead in the top of the first thanks to three Lamesa errors. Mike Ross struck

Payne in the bunker

ROYAL BIRKDALE, England — American Payne Stewart, winner of this year's U.S. Open, chips out of a greenside bunker at the fifth

The 'Rocket' will make his debut tonight

TORONTO (AP) — The Rocket is on the launching pad, ready for takeoff in a debut that will have all the trappings of a Hollywood premiere.

Raghib "Rocket" Ismail, the Notre Dame speedster who signed an $18 million contract with the CFL's Toronto Argonauts, will play in his first game as a pro tonight against the Hamilton Tiger-Cats at the SkyDome.

Ismail, who missed Toronto's exhibition season and last week's regular-season opener at Ottawa with a strained left quadricep, is anxious to get on with the show.

"It'll feel good to get the opportunity to play instead of sitting on the sidelines," Ismail said Wednesday. "Last week, I had all the butterflies you normally get before a game but I couldn't get rid of them because I couldn't get out there and get that first hit."

"This week, I can."

Ismail won't be the only star in the SkyDome tonight.

Actors Dan Ackroyd, Martin Short, Jim Belushi, Ally Sheedy and Mariel Hemingway will be on hand for the game. Another actor, comedian John Candy, is one of Ismail's employers as a part-owner of the team.

Coach Adam Rita said Ismail can expect to get some knocks in his debut. He's ticked to take part in about 50 percent of the team's offensive plays and will return all the kickoffs and punts.

"If he stays in there for the whole time, he limits us in what we can do," Rita said. "The quarterback will know when he's in the game and he'll be able to adjust to the formations (Ismail) knows."

Ismail will join forces with the guy who's been stealing his thunder, Mike "Pinball" Clemons, to form an explosive kick-return duo. Clemons ran back a punt for a touchdown in the exhibition opener when Ismail didn't play and then uncorked a 94-yarder in last week's game.

Hamilton coach David Beckman will try to spoil the fun as often as he can. He said he'd instruct punter Paul Osbaldiston to punt out of bounds as often as possible.

"I'd rather kick the ball 38 yards and out of bounds to get the defense on the field than boom one and take a chance on a return," he said.

Veteran runner has gold in mind

LOS ANGELES (AP) — At 34, distance runner Sydney Maree is the elder statesman among the track and field athletes at the U.S. Olympic Festival.

He recently started working for the Olympic Job Opportunities Program, something he says will serve him well when he retires. But retirement can wait until he takes another shot at an Olympic gold medal.

"If I were to write a book on my career, I feel the final chapter will never be there until I stand on the awards podium," he said Wednesday. "It's a realistic goal."

"I have had many occasions where things have not seemed realistic, but I have moved many mountains. The only obstacles are the ones I create myself."

Maree, a native of South Africa, was scheduled to compete in the 5,000-meter race today as the Olympic Festival entered its sixth day. Diving and gymnastics also began today, the start of a busy closing weekend.

Maree grew up in a city near Pretoria and felt the full ravages of apartheid. There were no training facilities for him until he broke the four-minute mile and was allowed to use the main stadium in Pretoria.

The full meaning of his status came to him in 1979, when he was kept out of a meet in Switzerland because Great Britain's Steve Ovett was entered. When Maree returned to South Africa, he was told to get into another line to receive his luggage because he was black.

"It stung me right there," he said. "I felt the world had ostracized me because I was South African and South Africa was punishing me because I was black. It's a situation that broke me and built me. I learned to accept the disadvantages in life."

Maree won two NCAA championships at Villanova. Because of his desire to compete in the Olympics, he became a U.S. citizen on May 1, 1984.

Maree supports the decision last week by the International Olympic Committee to end the ban on South African participation in the Games. It was a moment he thought might never come.

The national governing bodies of sports in South Africa must meet strict conditions if they are to return to Olympic competition. Maree feels confident those conditions will be met because many of the federations now are controlled by people who once supported the isolation of South Africa from the Olympic community.

"The black majority of South Africa has never felt so positive or so certain of victory," he said, "and the whites of South Africa have never felt so uncertain about their future."

He believes blacks in his homeland will be allowed to vote by the time the Barcelona Games begin next summer. And he has been asked by some of his former countrymen if he will return and compete for South Africa. He won't.

However, if South African athletes do march in the opening ceremonies for the 1992 games, "I think it will be very difficult to find a dry spot on my face," he said.

Wednesday was filled with low-profile sports, including the gold medal competition in softball and tennis.

In tennis, only one of the four medal matches was played. Both men's matches and the women's bronze match were decided by injury default.

In the women's gold medal match, fourth-seeded Beth Bennis of Lodi, Calif., beat Sonya Olejar of Tacoma, Wash., 6-0, 2-6, 6-4.

An injury also knocked the top female modern pentathlete out of the festival. Lori Norwood, the 1989 world champion, pulled out after injuring her knee during a fencing duel.

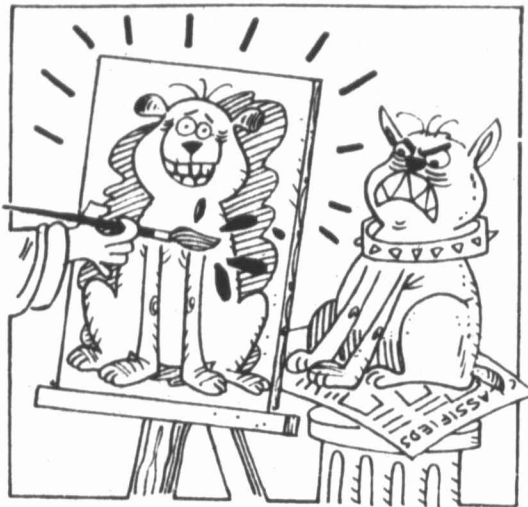

In fast-pitch softball, the East women won their third straight gold medal with a 5-1 victory over the West. Jill Justin of Oaklawn, Ill., had two hits and two RBIs, while Dionna Harris of Wilmington, Del., went 3-for-3.

William and Harry get thumbs up from Barbara

LONDON (AP) — Prince William and Prince Harry were a hit with Barbara Barbara, who declared them "better dressed than the Bush grandchildren, for sure."

The first lady met the royal brothers Wednesday when their mother, Princess Diana, brought them to the U.S. ambassador's residence so they could see President Bush's helicopter parked on the lawn.

The president was busy meeting with other Western leaders at a summit when William, 9, and Harry, 6, arrived. Mrs. Bush showed them the chopper.

PRINCE WILLIAM PRINCE HARRY
ed them the chopper.
"They are just attractive young men ... cute and polite," Mrs. Bush said.

Uecker suffers aneurysm

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Bob Uecker, whose self-deprecating wit

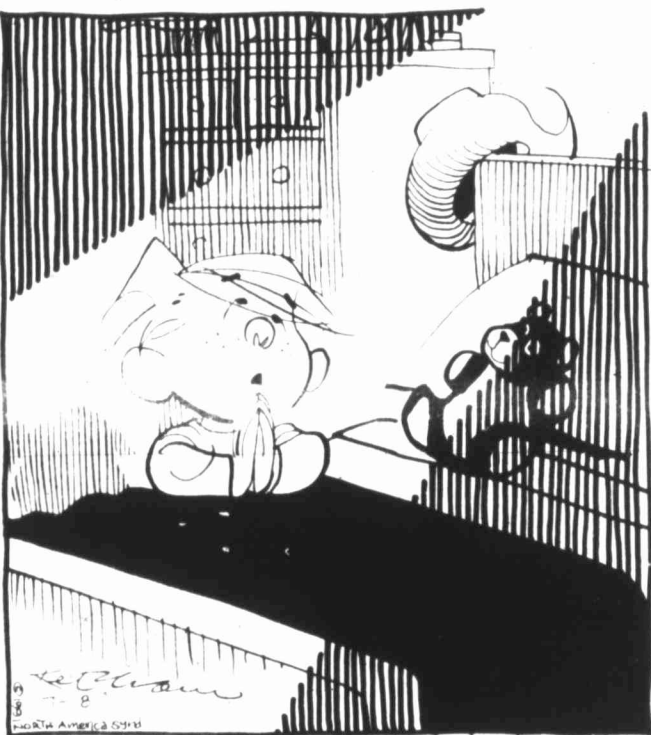

about his mediocre baseball career has made him one of television's most recognizable pitchers, was scheduled for surgery Friday to mend a life-threatening aneurysm.

The aneurysm, a thinning of the artery wall, was discovered in Uecker's abdominal aorta. An aneurysm can cause a vessel to rupture.

The 56-year-old Uecker was to be admitted today to Sinai Samaritan Medical Center.

Uecker, who announces Milwaukee Brewers baseball games, told listeners during a broadcast Tuesday: "It's something that has to be taken care of right away. Hopefully I'll be back in a couple of weeks."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE:

You are finally ready to move forward on several fronts. You can blaze a new career trail beginning in the fall. A raise or promotion will be yours by December. A close relationship should bring great contentment in early 1992. A secret financial dream can be realized next March. Follow your intuition in both business and romance.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE:

singer Vikki Carr, tennis star Ilie Nastase, painter Edgar Degas, politician George McGovern.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Good things begin to happen! Act confident and old worries will evaporate. Be the person that others depend on in times of crisis. Refuse to let down anyone who joins your team.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Business and career matters may move more slowly than you would like. Use any spare time to work on pet projects. Heed a friend's advice on how to save time and money.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The time is right to launch a new work project or self-improvement program. Analyze a romantic situation. Someone special will come into your life very soon. Be prepared to change old habits and patterns.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Introduce changes at home that will make your loved ones and guests feel more comfortable and relaxed. A romance may seem particularly exciting if there appears to be opposition to it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Set a good example. Protect your reputation by keeping both feet on the ground. Good luck plays a role in new financial gains. A recent investment could provide a sudden payoff today.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Travel, legal maneuvers and romance are favored today. You are a great problem-solver but must gain your co-workers' cooperation in order to maximize profits. Romance occupies your thoughts as the day winds down.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your self-confidence grows despite some frustrations at work. Steer clear of office flirtations or your reputation could be permanently damaged. Make a greater effort to save money for a rainy day.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You may find yourself torn at the idea of breaking with the past and starting fresh. Your mate or partner seems very enthusiastic about your plans. Discuss any doubts in a mature way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Even if a tricky work situation goes your way, explore other career opportunities. You could find something not only more appealing but more lucrative. Ask your friends to keep their ears open.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A new sense of commitment will help preserve an important relationship. Your work gives you both financial and emotional stability. Close ties deepen. A nature walk gives you a fresh perspective.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You have a mandate to accomplish something important. Stop waiting for other people to make up their minds. Move forward on your own, relying on those who have proved loyal in the past.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The decisions you make today could set the stage for a relationship that will continue long into the future. A change of lifestyle benefits not only you but your loved ones, too.
